Try these tricks for inactive bass

By Earl Bentz and Steve Price
Outboard Marine Corporation

It's that time of year when bass fishing can easily be boom or bust — when fish are active one day and totally inactive the next — but even when bass are inactive they can still be caught.

"The most common conditions that seem to make bass become inactive are sudden weather changes such as cold fronts, rapidly changing water conditions, and heavy fishing pressure from the anglers," explains former biologist Ken Cook of the Evinrude Outboards Pro Staff.

"When the fish do become inactive, you generally have to change your fishing techniques totally, but you can still catch the fish if you have the patience."

Inactive bass tend to move either into deeper water or into thicker, heavier cover, notes Cook, Winner of the 1991 Bass Masters Classics. When that happens, the two primary changes an angler must make are to use smaller lures and work them much more slowly.

"You have to get your lure closer to the actual location of the fish and then keep it there because the strike zone becomes much smaller," says Cook.

"Because it is generally easier to fish heavier cover than it is to fish deeper water, I change to smaller jigs, plastic worms or spinnerbaits, depending on the type of cover, and I try to put them right into the middle of the thickest cover I can find."

The Evinrude pro also changes his retrieve techniques when he encounters inactive fish, often shaking or rattling the lure in the cover itself to create added commotion.

"I used that technique to win the Classic," remembers Cook, "because I felt those bass were receiving a lot of pressure from other anglers. I was using a spinnerbait, and I'd reel it up to the cover I was working, then let it fall right beside that cover. At the same time, I'd actually shake my rod tip to give the spinnerbait an even more erratic action.

"I believe those fish may have been accustomed to seeing spinnerbaits, but not seeing a spinnerbait that acted the way mine did. Most of the time, a more erratic retrieve, even though it may be slower, draws more strikes than a normal retrieve.

"Inactive bass do not chase lures," continues Cook, "but if you downsize your lure, you're not as likely to spook a bass. I think in some instances that larger, faster lures may actually cause bass to move away from them rather than toward them."

Community Care Corner

by LTC Ken Franklin, MD

The Aviation Family Practice Clinic will reopen in its remodeled facilities at Building 2412 May 23.

According to Dr. (Maj.) Thomas Garigan, chief of the clinic, the interior of the building has been completely replaced to improve patient care.

"It's looking good. I really don't see any problems in opening on schedule," Garigan said.

Improvements include permanent ceilings and walls in all patient areas, replacement of the telephone system and a completely new heating and air conditioning system.

The clinic, previously used as a hangar for aircraft simulators, used modular walls for exam rooms and offices before the remodeling. Remodeling has been under way since January.

During the week leading up to the move, the clinic will be open at the old site, though routine appointments will not be available. The staff will use this week to move furniture, equipment and medications into the remodeled building.

Doctors will be seeing same-day appointments during that week and the clinic phone lines will be available for patients with urgent medical needs.

The Aviation Family Practice staff has been seeing patients in the Outpatient Clinic at Martin Army Community Hospital during the remodeling. The clinic, which serves soldiers, families and retirees, is named for its location, next to Lawson Army Airfield.

The clinic also provides medical support, including flight physicals, to the aviators of the Fort Benning community.

Phone numbers for access to Aviation Family Practice Clinic will not change with the move.

Do you have a question about medical care at Fort Benning? Send it to Community Care Corner, Martin Army Hospital, ATTN; HSXB-F, Fort Benning, Ga. 31905.

Q: I recently heard something about former President Richard Nixon having his life support shut off by his doctors.

I know that if I'm incapacitated, I can no longer make some decisions for myself. How can I ensure that if I'm ever in a coma or a vegetative state that my doctors won't keep me alive on a machine or use my body to create some sort of universal soldier?

A: As for the universal soldier worry, it's not a problem; but, you can ensure that you won't be kept alive on a machine.

The way to convey to others your feelings about being kept on life support is through a living will. In most states, a living will can be used to give instructions about the kind of life-sustaining medical treatment you do and do not want.

A living will is a form used to record those instructions and it becomes effective in the event that you have a terminal condition or an irreversible condition (like a coma) and cannot speak for yourself.

When individuals do not have a living will, and they suffer from a terminal or irreversible medical condition, their doctors are bound to try every single medical procedure to keep them alive, even when the condition is incurable or will eventually produce death. This can potentially succeed in draining the finances of the person's family.

Some states will only allow living wills to take effect in the presence of a terminal illness where death is imminent.

Other states go so far as to allow living wills to take effect when the person is conscious with irreversible brain damage and permanently incapable of making decisions.

Georgia, on the other hand, allows for living wills in cases of a terminal condition, coma or vegetative state. Also, in Georgia, people with living wills are allowed to provide for the withdrawal of tube-feeding or hydration, which is intravenously supplying fluids to the body.

In Georgia, a living will must be given effect so long as the following conditions are met:

- The living will is given to the attending physician;
- You can no longer speak for yourself;
- It has been determined by two physicians that you are in a terminal condition, a persistent vegetative state or a coma, and that there is no reasonable expectation for improvement.

If a situation arises in Georgia where the attending physician refuses to comply with your living will, he or she must advise your next of kin or legal guardian.

Then the doctor must make a good faith attempt to transfer you to another physician who will either honor your living will or permit your next of kin to do the same.

These types of decisions are made when an individual is healthy and of sound mind, and can subsequently be revoked at any time by destroying the document. Thus, the most beneficial aspect of a living will is that it's up to you.

The Office of the Staff Judge Advocate Legal Assistance Division can help you with decisions as well as drafting living wills.

Appointments can be made by calling 545-3281 or 545-3282.

energy watch

Energy Branch

The main purpose of an energy audit is to determine whether your home wastes energy, and to pinpoint where energy is being lost.

Audits also determine the efficiency of your home's heating and cooling systems, and ways to conserve hot water.

Audits can be very detailed, using specific tools and techniques to pinpoint air leaks, or can be as simple as a do-it-yourself audit.

The most frequent type of audit is a walk-through. It involves a room-by-room examination of a residence, as well as a thorough examination of the past heating and cooling bills.

It would also involve checking the amount of insulation in attics, crawl spaces, basements, and other visually accessible parts of the building.

Other considerations would be the construction, types of windows and doors, the occupant's energy-use habits, and any other factors that may affect energy consumption.

The more complex audits often use tools such as blower doors, infrared cameras, digital surface thermometers, and smoke pencils to detect leaks in the building's structure.

A building pressurization test measures the leakiness of the structure, and a thermographic inspection reveals the often hard-to-detect areas of infiltration and areas where insulation is missing.

However, these tasks tend to be expensive, so most home owners do not invest in such detailed audits.

It would be easy to conduct your own do-it-yourself audit, or you can have your local utility company assist you.

If you are a homeowner, an energy audit is important in determining how much energy your home uses each year, and whether this energy is being used effectively.

Implement any audit measures that you can afford and that appear to offer a reasonable payback (such as, less than six years). This will free up money that would otherwise be spent on energy bills. It will also ensure that the time, money, and effort that went into your audit were worthwhile.

Many improvements can be adjusted to your preference or lifestyle, but any improvement will help lower your energy bills.

If you live on post, perform your own walk-through audit and make a list of problem areas. Items such as weatherstripping and caulking may be available at the Self Help Store on Vibbert Avenue.

If you have any questions on this or any energy-related subject, contact the Energy Office at 545-4652 or 545-SWAT.

Flatt

As the award was presented at a ceremony at the Columbus Iron Works Convention and Trade Center, Flatt was commended for her work in leading students as they landscaped the school campus, planted vegetable and flower gardens, conducted campus cleanups, coordinated school recycling, and shared with colleagues ideas gleaned from the "Waste in Place Workshops" that were presented through Keep Columbus Beautiful.

Flatt was also recognized for her work in designing and implementing a winning project proposal for a greenhouse and a fourth- and fifth-grade earth science curriculum that uses the greenhouse.

"Through Flatt's efforts, Dexter has not only become an environmentally conscious school, we've become an environmentally conscious community," said Dexter School Principal Vicki Rogers.

Teachers, students combine talents

By Jerrie Macintire
Special to The Bayonet ©

Fort Benning teachers and Columbus College science majors have combined talents this year in a pilot program to incorporate science throughout the curriculum using hands-on activities in some classes at White School.

Through the Science Integrated Throughout Education program, children work in small groups throughout the day with support from college students majoring in the sciences.

The joint pilot project allows the college students to explore teaching as a career while enriching classroom activities for participating groups at White School, according to Janet Wynn, principal.

"This is a wonderful program. The Columbus College students bring expertise in science to the classroom," Wynn said. "They in turn get to observe teaching techniques while considering education as a career choice."

Under the guidance of college students chosen for their knowledge of science, several classes at White School have developed three science projects through the SITE program this year.

The college students learn teaching techniques and lesson planning while offering expertise in science and access to college resources.

Units on birds, plants and microscopes have supplemented and expanded, but not replaced, the regular science curriculum while offering additional lessons in language arts, math, earth sciences, biology and botany.

For example, while conducting bird studies, students kept various math charts as they graphed such items as number and types of birds, and what seed mixture the birds preferred.

> "By sharing resources, consulting and bringing science undergraduates into classrooms, we have a win-win situation."
> — Dr. Beth Middlemiss
> Director of Staff Development
> Fort Benning Schools

By altering one variable in the seed mixture and speculating that would be most popular, students learned correct techniques for scientific experiments.

In standard scientific procedures, they speculated about the results, observed the facts, then proved or disproved their hypothesis.

Students discovered birds preferred a formula with whole sunflower seeds over a recipe containing opened, cracked sunflower seeds, said Kris Keske, one participating teacher.

As an added bonus to this study, many students in Keske's class have developed an interest in bird watching and can recognize various species around post, she said.

This year, students have also studied a unit on plants and conducted various experiments following standard procedures. Currently, students are working in small groups with microscopes on loan from Columbus College.

In addition to understanding correct use of the microscopes, they are learning how to make their own slides.

"The enthusiasm they show is wonderful," said Hanling Joswick, a junior at the college. "They are always so excited. And they have learned that science can be fun," she added.

The joint SITE project, proposed by Dr. Francis Gardner from the Columbus College School of Science, is supervised by Wynn, White School principal, and Dr. Tom Hanley, professor of geology at the college.

Wynn and Keske also consulted other professors at Columbus College while incorporating other subjects, such as language arts, into the program.

"The SITE program provides a wonderful opportunity for Columbus College and the Fort Benning Schools to combine resources to address one of our national educational goals: strong, challenging involvement in science," according to Dr. Beth Middlemiss, director of staff development.

"By sharing resources, consulting and bringing science undergraduates into elementary classrooms, we have a win-win situation in which Fort Benning students and Columbus College students benefit from their shared experiences," she said.

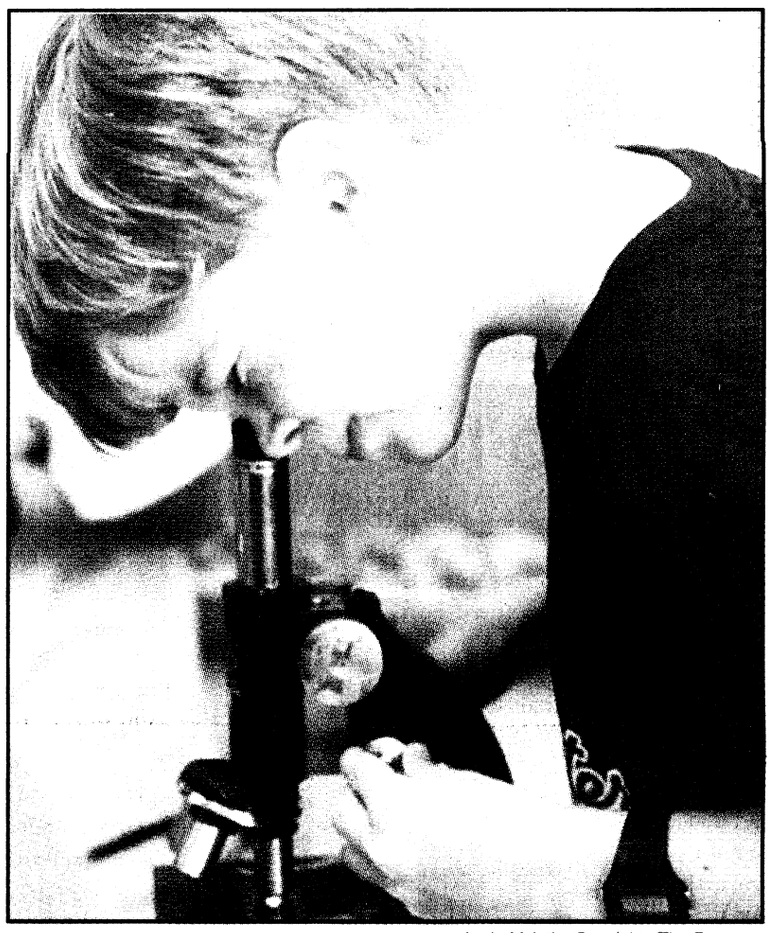
The pilot program's success can be measured by the enrichment provided to students at White School as well as the knowledge and experience gained by the participating college students, one of whom is considering changing her career choice to teaching, Middlemiss said.

The college students work three days per week at White School, usually in small groups of five or fewer.

Teachers at the school continue to offer the regular science class, but youngsters have the bonus of additional hands on experiments managed by the college students, Keske said.

Another benefit of the program is that all students experience success in the noncompetitive, group experiments of hands on activities.

Teachers express enthusiasm for the program and the enrichment their students gain, Keske said.



"We are so pleased with how the program has worked. I like having the college students here and I want other teachers to take advantage of the program," Keske said.

Other teachers may get the opportunity to do just that as officials from both schools evaluate the results and consider future joint agreements for programs in science.

Students learn about legal system

By Jerrie Macintire
Special to The Bayonet ©

Crusted mud on a pair of athletic shoes, a single muddy footprint in a flower bed and the color of a shirt led to a not guilty verdict in a mock trial Monday hosted in honor of Law Day.

Faith Middle schoolers serving as jurors found the defendant not guilty of bike theft after heáring the evidence in "People vs. John Smith," a scripted trial presented in the courtroom by the Staff Judge Advocate's Office.

The interpretation of various features in the case highlighted the way the legal system works in this country and demonstrated the importance of attention to detail and the concepts of reasonable doubt and innocent until proven guilty.

From opening statements to methods of presenting evidence, this trial allows students to see first hand how the legal system works," said attorney Capt. Jill Brown, Law Day coordinator.

Attorneys and staff members from the Staff Judge Advocate's Office played the roles of prosecutor, defense counsel, alleged thief, witnesses and court reporter while Fort Benning's judge served as the arbitrator in the staged trial, just one of several activities on post designed to commemorate Law Day May 1.

Students from Faith Middle school served on a nine-member military jury and as courtroom observers in two separate sessions of the scripted trial, written specifically for students to demonstrate how the judicial process works.

From the official courtroom setting to the debate of whether an 8-year-old was too young to testify, the mock trial was designed to communicate fundamental principals of the judicial system.

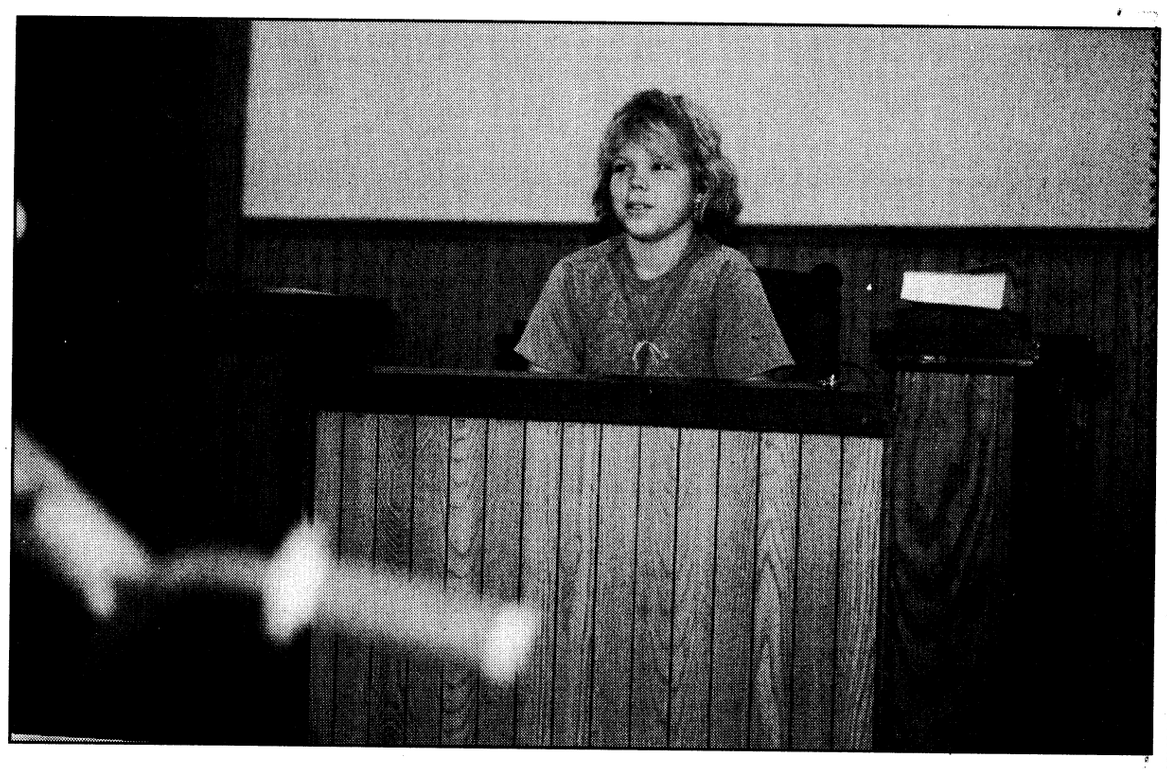
After hearing testimony from 8-year-old Wendy Young, portrayed by Dexter student Courtney Storey, the jury of Faith students deliberated in private 10 minutes before deciding there was not enough evidence for a conviction of bike theft against John Smith, portrayed by attorney Capt. Brad Vanderau.

Attorneys Capt. Rick Storey and Capt. Norm Zamboni portrayed their real life roles of prosecutor and defense counsel in the mock trial, while Fort Benning's judge, Col. Keith Hodges, arbitrated the proceedings.

Hodges, who wrote the scripted trial while stationed at Fort Stewart, said there is generally a 50 percent acquittal rate and 50 percent conviction rate for this particular trial. For example, last year's students participated in the same scripted trial with the same evidence but found the defendant guilty of theft.

After hearing evidence, half of selected juries find enough proof to convict the alleged thief and half do not, he said. Students observing from the courtroom were almost evenly divided, and Hodges discussed their opinions as the jury deliberated privately.

Subtle factors contributed to the not guilty verdict. For example, two soiled shoes were presented as evidence but only one footprint was found in the flower bed near where the stolen bike was parked.



Also, the young witness identified the defendant as wearing a red shirt while Francis Blue, the arresting police officer, identified the color as orange; this planted doubt in the minds of the jurors as well as the courtroom observers, they explained afterward.

This highlights the way in which the legal system operates and focuses on trial components such as leading questions, hearsay, circumstantial evidence, and that the burden of proof is on the prosecutor, Hodges said.

As part of this year's Law Day theme, "Just Solutions," the mock trial was one of several events designed to promote a greater understanding of the legal system.

Also in celebration of Law Day, poster and essay contest winning entries were displayed in Infantry Hall.

Poster contest winners for kindergarten through second grade include Benjamin Chepenik, kindergarten; Kristopher Thorpe, first grade; and Jennifer Brooks, second grade; in descending order all from McBride School.

Winners for third through fifth grade are Caroline de Camp, fifth grade at Stowers; Jennifer Cormier, fourth grade at White; and Jason Gonzales, fifth grade at White, in descending order.

Essay winners from Faith Middle School are seventh-graders Andrea Lintner and Feroza Yasin; and sixth grader Aisha Colley, all in descending order.

These students were recognized at the Law Day luncheon, which was highlighted by speaker James L. Wiggins, U.S. attorney from the Middle District of Georgia.

'Feast of Weeks' celebrates giving of the law

By Thomas E. Preston
USAIC Chaplains' Office

Shavuot, meaning weeks, and also called the "Feast of Weeks," was the second of the three great festivals in Israel.

It was often treated as the conclusion of the cycle beginning at Passover and ending seven weeks or 50 days later. It began basically as a harvest festival. Throughout its biblical history is maintained this original intent.

The term "weeks" actually refers to the period of the grain harvest. This began with the first cuttings of barley and ended with the completion of the wheat harvest — about seven weeks in all.

This entire period was one of special worship when Israel recognized God as the provider of agricultural bounty. It also marked the time to begin bringing the voluntary offerings of agricultural first fruits to the Lord.

For Greek-speaking Jews, the celebration was called "Pentecost," meaning the 50th day. It was during Shavuot that the outpouring of the Holy Spirit was given to the followers of Jesus that we read about in the second chapter of Acts.

In the post-Biblical era, the festival of Shavuot began a gradual transformation into a feast celebrating the giving of the law to Israel.

In the Jewish community today, special services are conducted on this festival day to include special readings remembering God's giving of the law on Mount Sinai (Exodus 19-20). On the eve of Shavuot, some congregations have all-night study sessions to re-enact the scene described in Exodus when, according to tradition, no one slept in anticipation of receiving the law.

The giving of the Ten Commandmentsp , symbolizing the revelation of all God's law (Torah), is a central, pivotal event for the Jewish faith. However, its impact reaches far beyond just the faith of Israel.

These laws form the basis for moral law for civilized society. Societies cease to be civilized and fall into moral and social decay when the basics of the revelation given to Moses are not followed. This happens because the law as expressed in the Ten Commandments deals with how we relate to one another and go our God.

reflections

The first four commandments, as we read them in Exodus 20, constitute a vertical dimension and concern our relationship to God. God and no other is to be worshiped and honored in the right manner.

When we let other people or other things supplant his sovereign position in our personal lives or in our nations, our sense of morality and values become warped and unguided.

The remaining six commandments concern our relations to other people. They emphasize the horizontal dimension of the Sinai covenant: honor your parents, do not murder, do not commit adultery, do not steal, do not give false testimony, do not covet what is your neighbor's.

If these are ignored, we fall into a Machiavellian pattern of living where the end justifies the means. Our philosophy then becomes "no matter who we hurt or how we treat other individuals, we get where or what we want."

Unfortunately, we can all probably recall incidents in history and even in our own personal history when these laws were forgotten and devastating consequences followed.

My prayer for us as individuals and as a nation is that we, too, will remember, celebrate and commit ourselves to the living out of this covenant. Then we might truly live out the implications of being "one nation under God."

Everyone should take time to rest

By Richard D. King
36th Engineer Group

Usually around the month of August, most company commanders will send out a memorandum listing all of the soldiers in their companies who need to take leave before Oct. 1 because they risk losing all leave days in excess of 60.

The memorandum usually lists 30 to 40 senior noncommissioned officers who have accrued a large amount of leave days. The least amount is usually 50 days and the most is around 80 days.

Yes, my name is usually on the memorandum also!

If you have been in the Army for any significant amount of time, you, too, may have accrued a large amount of leave days at some time or another.

Literally thousands of soldiers each year lose leave days because they do not take their leave by the end of the fiscal year.

Sometimes it is difficult to use one's leave in the military. This is because frequent deployments, field exercise, temporary duty and emergency deployment readiness exercise keep us on the go.

Oftentimes, being in a critical leadership position is not conductive to scheduling leave.

reflections

In a few weeks, the summer will be upon us. Sit down with your family and your unit's latest training schedule and set aside some quality time for leave.

In Mark 6:30 to 31, the disciples of the Lord Jesus Christ were so busy in their ministry that they hardly had time to eat or drink. Jesus said (King James Version), "Come ye yourselves apart ... and rest a while." I like to paraphrase that verse with "Come ye yourselves apart... and rest a while or else come ye apart!"

Perhaps it is time for you to come out of that oscillating door of busyness and perpetual activities and improve the quality of your life by giving a resounding "YES" to a few days off. You've earned it.

When was the last time you flew a kite, went for a bike ride or stopped to smell the roses? When was the last time you woke up refreshed, exuberant and excited about the opportunities of the new day?

When was the last time you caught yourself enjoying life so much that you couldn't wipe the smile off your face?

Is your schedule a frantic sprint from one hour to the next? Is your life dominated by "shoulds," "ought tos" and "musts"?

Are your days no longer lived but endured?

If so, you probably need to spend a few days of that hard-earned leave.

I completely agree with one of my company commanders whose memorandum stated, "It is imperative that ... soldiers are given the opportunity to take leave they have earned. I charge the leaders of this company with the responsibility of taking care of your soldiers. No one will lose leave days."

It's time to become reacquainted with DA Form 31. If you cannot remember what DA Form 31 is about, then you need to ask your first sergeant and take leave immediately.

Meredith Baxter battles breast cancer in CBS drama

By Jay Bobbin
Tribune Media Services

Given a title with the boldness of "My Breast," Meredith Baxter intends her newest television showcase to be just as frank.

What: 'My Breast'
When: Sunday on CBS

SPOTLIGHT

The "Family Ties" alumna — who has been a staple of the TV-movie realm for many seasons — doubles as co-executive producer of Sunday's CBS drama, based on the same-named, autobiographical book by journalist Joyce Wadler (who also wrote the teleplay). After being diagnosed with breast cancer, the latter woman relied on her ability to find irony in even the most tragic situations to help herself through the crisis, a dilemma that was compounded by her troubled relationship with her unreliable beau (played by Jamey Sheridan, of "Shannon's Deal" and last week's miniseries "The Stand").

As a result of her documentation of her spirited battle against illness, Wadler has received a number of related honors, including the Canadian Breast Cancer Association's Award of Hope and the Guttman Breast Diagnostic Center's Breast Cancer Awareness Award. Also featuring James Sutorius (who previously worked with Baxter on the aforementioned "Family Ties") and veteran actress Barbara Barrie, the film was directed by ex-actress Betty Thomas ("Hill Street Blues"), an Emmy-winner for her behind-the-camera work on HBO's "Dream On"; breast-cancer specialist and author Dr. Susan Love was the project's technical advisor.

One normally wouldn't expect a film with the subject matter of "My Breast" to have much humor, but Baxter maintains that element is present ... though not to the extent she initially had hoped for.

"A lot of stuff was cut because the script was long (for a two-hour time slot)," she reveals, "but a lot of humor came out of the situations. The way the character of Nick (played by Sheridan) originally was written and filmed, he became so unpleasant, people who saw that footage were hissing. There was a lack of sympathy for Joyce, because they were saying, 'Why is she staying with this guy?' We had to lose that stuff, because the audience has to understand Joyce while looking at this. I never felt this was a comedy, but there's a lighter and irreverent sense to it than with something like 'First, You Cry' (the story of news reporter Betty Rollin's breast-cancer bout, which was dramatized for TV in 1978). What was singular about this was Joyce's voice."

Meredith Baxter

Expectedly, Baxter had considerable contact with Wadler, though the writer only was physically present at the very start of the filming in Toronto earlier this year. "Anytime I'm portraying someone who's a real, living person who is involved in the show," Baxter reflects, "my fear is that she'll walk on the set, see what's going on and say, 'Oh, no, no, no. That's not the way it was.' I was a little hesitant about Joyce being there, then, but that (disapproval from her) never happened. She was wonderfully respectful of the process, and she's a professional herself. I would like to think that her (reaction) came from her faith in what she had put on the page."

Indeed, Baxter reports of Wadler's response to the completed film, "My understanding is that she loves it. She feels that she was very well-represented, and that the film accurately portrayed the sense of what happened. This (story) came from a woman who was really frustrated by what was happening to her, and who tried to get some understanding and support from her boyfriend. It's not that he was a bad guy, but he just couldn't do it."

With that man being such a pivotal part of the story, Baxter enthuses about working with Sheridan: "He's just fabulous, very sexy and attractive. He brings a wonderful sense of style to this, and he really liked and understood (the role of) this fellow."

For all the obvious concern about the authenticity of the medical information conveyed by Sunday's offering, Baxter concedes that she didn't do much additional research beyond the information provided by Wadler and Love. "My feeling was that I wasn't supposed to be an expert on breast cancer," she reasons. "I was supposed to be an expert on being Joyce, and I wanted to know about her, so I found out stuff in the same way that Joyce actually went along and found it out."

Through the many television films she has done, Baxter has tackled such issues as bulimia (in "Kate's Secret"), infidelity ("Burning Bridges"), addiction ("Darkness Before Dawn"), institution-alization ("Winnie") and murderous obsession (the two "Betty Broderick" movies). Nevertheless, she stresses that social concerns don't necessarily have to be at the heart of any venture she undertakes. "I approach it as playing individual women in situations specific to them, and how they get through those situations," she says.

"To me, that's the issue. If anyone simply had said, 'Do you want to do a movie about breast cancer?', my answer would've been, 'Uh-uh, honey.' I'm not interested in being the person to act out the trauma and the struggle, but I love Joyce. Just about anybody can look back upon being in a dysfunctional relationship where they were not getting what they needed, but stayed for any number of reasons. That's the person I think this is about. That she gets breast cancer is not incidental, but it's just another part of her life."

MILITARY APPRECIATION

'LET THE GAMES BEGIN'

Event to culminate with AUSA picnic Saturday

By Marc G. Turchin
Bayonet staff writer

Military Appreciation Week began Sunday with a concert at Riverside and a soccer tournament at French Field and culminates Saturday with the Association of the United States Army Picnic.

An annual celebration, the event is a time when Fort Benning, Columbus and Phenix City come together to celebrate the military units, service members and their families.

This year's concert was at Riverside, home of Maj. Gen. Jerry A. White and his wife, Linda.

The Infantry Chorus and The Infantry Band entertained the crowd with songs like "Georgia on My Mind," "My Girl" and "America the Beautiful."

The soccer tournament featured nine teams from units such as the Infantry Training Brigade, 29th Infantry Regiment and the tournament champion, School of the Americas. School of the Americas beat the Severan's Disciples from ITB 1-0 for the soccer title.

As the sun started to come up Monday, the gun had already sounded to start the Kick-off Relay.

This relay was an eight-mile relay from Infantry Hall to the Harmony Church Field House.

Nine, six-person teams, including an all-woman team, competed. The team from ITB outdistanced the rest of the competitors to win the relay with a time of 45:10.

In second place was the team from the 11th Infantry Regiment. with a time of 45:47. The team from the Medical Department Activity was a close third with a time of 45:56.

After the relay was over, all participants were treated to a breakfast sponsored by AUSA at the Harmony Church Field House.

Retired Gen. Jack Merritt, president of AUSA, spoke to nearly 1,000 soldiers and civilians from both on and off post.

Merritt emphasized the need to maintain a ready Army.

"We can't say it (the future) will be peaceful," he said. "If it isn't and we go to war unprepared, it's the soldier in the United States Army who pays the price."

Later Monday night, the boxing competition took place at Kelley Hill Fitness Center, with ITB and the 3rd Brigade, 24th Infantry Division tying for with top honors.

After Monday, ITB led in the points standings with 23 points. In second was the 11th Infantry Regiment with 16 points while 3rd Brigade, 24th Infantry Division was a close third with 15 points.

Today's activities begin with the AUSA golf tournament at 12:30 p.m. at the Fort Benning Golf Course. Starting at 5 p.m. at Gowdy Field will be three different events: softball, "Fit to Win" push-ups and "Fit to Win" tug-o-war. Saturday starts with the last sporting event of the week, the annual "Burn the General" run, which begins at Olive Field at 9 a.m. The Military Appreciation Week awards ceremony is at Saturday 11 a.m. at Watson Field. The AUSA picnic, featuring De-Vo-Te, the Miss Georgia Superstars and much more, is scheduled for noon Saturday at Olive field.

School Board reps elected

Fort Benning Schools

Several positions on the Fort Benning School Board have been filled as a result of elections Tuesday.

Elected for two-year terms were Col. Gregory Camp, president; Lisa Grover, Loyd School representative; Staff Sgt. John Perdue, McBride School representative; and Staff Sgt. Leroy Coronado, Wilson School representative.

Elected for one year to fill an unexpired term are Lt. Col. Michael Bingham, Faith School representative, and Adrienne Porter, White School representative.

Representatives having one more year remaining in their two-year terms of office are: Pat Grant, Dexter School; Mary Renn, Stowers School, and Col. Roy Plummer, chaplain.

The Fort Benning School Board is a nine-member board elected by parents of children attending the schools; it meets monthly to set school district policy and provide general direction to the system.

School board members are elected for two-year terms, with each of the seven schools having a representative on the board. In addition to the seven representatives, the board includes an elected president and chaplain. Members' terms are staggered so the board will include experience board members each year.

The travelers, including representatives from post organizations, directorates, and the command group, were selected to represent the post at the Army Communities of Excellence award ceremony Thursday and the Commander-in-Chief Award ceremony, slated for 9 a.m. today.

Frank Martin, mayor of Columbus, and Sonny Coulter, mayor of Phenix City, were also scheduled to be included in the party.

Commanding General Maj. Gen. Jerry A. White, who traveled to Washington Monday, accepted the ACOE award Thursday during a ceremony at the Pentagon center courtyard. The 3 p.m. event was preceded by a tour of the Capitol and capped by an awards reception at the Fort Myer officers' club at 7 p.m.

White is also scheduled to accept the CINC Award today.

Fort Benning, which won the CINC Award for best installation in the Army, was joined in the honor by the Marine Base at Cherry Point, N.C.; Wahidby Island (Wash.) Naval Air Station, Elmdorf Air Force Base, Ak.; and, representing the Defense Logistics Agency, the Defense General Supply Center, located in Richmond, Va.

The CINC awards are to be presented by John Deutch, deputy undersecretary of the Department of Defense.

Military Police protect, serve

commander's column

James T. Crockert

I would like to say "thank you" to all the soldiers, family members, retirees and civilians who make our mission of serving the community a rewarding task.

Sometimes our community doesn't see the big picture.

The big picture includes all those people who follow the rules, obey the law and take care of this community — something the Fort Benning community, including the military police, does very well.

As military police officers, our duty is to serve the community, safeguard lives and property, to protect the innocent against deception, the weak against oppression or intimidation, the peaceful against violence or disorders and respect the constitutional rights of all to liberty, equality and justice.

Also, Fort Benning's Military Police goal is to inspire respect, support and admiration for a job well done from the community at large.

The Military Police don't restrict support just to Fort Benning; the officers also assist the local community.

On Thursday, 150 military police officers will run 10 miles from Fort Benning to Columbus in order to raise funds for the Fort Benning and Columbus Special Olympians.

I am filled with admiration for the Fort Benning Military Police. Not only were they selected to receive the Brig. Gen. David Stem award for the "Best Military Police in TRADOC," they have truly been the "gatekeepers" of Fort Benning.

They have demonstrated patience under adversity, courage under duress, modesty in their many accomplishments and an invincible determination to "do what has to be done."

Dr. Albert Schweitzer said, "I don't know what your destiny will be, but one thing I know; the only ones among you who will be really happy are those who have sought and found how to serve."

I think that each member of Fort Benning's Military Police Activity has found the secret to happiness: serving the U.S. Army family — those in uniform, their family members and civilian supporters.

We, the Military Police, always pledge to assist, protect and defend.

Energy awareness: Post to present seminar

The U.S. Army's Energy Awareness Seminar will be presented at Fort Benning Tuesday.

The goal of the one-day seminar is to inform our personnel of the Army's energy conservation programs and to stress the importance of our everyday actions in achieving current and future Army energy goals. The seminar is structured to provide our personnel with a clear understanding of the actions they should personally take to prevent energy waste, and the substantial impact these actions have on the energy and cost savings.

The specific focus of this seminar is to identify and discuss the energy savings opportunities that can be easily implemented here through simple improvements in current energy use and energy management practices.

The Energy Awareness Seminar has been presented at Army installations around the world during the last nine years.

It has been of considerable benefit in helping Army personnel improve their energy awareness, reduce their energy waste and ultimately achieve significant energy cost reductions.

The seminar includes an executive session and two specialized workshops, Building Energy Monitors session and a Facility Engineers Session, which are structured to meet the needs of personnel who are directly involved in the day-to-day management of Fort Benning energy resources.

The executive session describes the Army's current energy policies and programs, discusses current energy costs and availability and provides a top-level view of the alternatives that can be used here to reduce our energy waste. This session will be attended by the commander, directors and personal staff.

Times and locations of the sessions are:

Executive: 9 to 10 a.m., Room 642, Infantry Hall,

Building Energy Monitors: 10:30 a.m. to noon, Marshall Auditorium, Infantry Hall,

Facility engineers: 1:30 to 3:30 p.m., U-Do-It/Self Help, Building 385.

The sessions will be conducted by representatives of Systems Engineering and Management Corporation, the Army's Energy Awareness Contractor.

Systems Corporation is headquartered in Knoxville, Tenn., and specializes in energy engineering and management.

I strongly encourage participation by commanders, directors, personal staff and appropriate staff members.

CG salutes troops' courage, dedication

Armed Forces Day is tomorrow. The day begins with a "Burn the General Run," and features the Association of the United States Army's picnic as well as the Valley Showcase and fun and games for the entire family.

It also caps a week-long series of events as part of Military Appreciation Week — a week that brought our military and civilian communities closer together through joint ventures and athletics.

And that's the essence and spirit of Armed Forces Day.

It's a day to let our soldiers know they are appreciated and what they do day in and day out, the sacrifices they make, do not go unnoticed.

Nowhere is this more evident than here at Fort Benning, in the Chattahoochee Valley.

Soldiers, I salute you for your dedication and courage.

Civilians, I thank you for your enduring support.

Soldiers volunteer: BOSS members help build homes for Habitat for Humanity

By Marc G. Turchin
Bayonet staff writer

Imagine building a house in just seven days. Or even nine days for that matter. Does it seem impossible? Think again.

Through the help of some dedicated soldiers from Fort Benning, a home has been built in just over a week.

The Better Opportunities for Single Soldiers organization have built a house for a needy family through Habitat for Humanity. Habitat for Humanity is an organization that helps families in need purchase homes.

"The purpose of building this house is to help out a family in need," said Spc. James Shoemaker, president of BOSS.

Soldiers from across post have spent their free time volunteering to help get this house built on schedule, Shoemaker said.

"Soldiers from the 11th Infantry Regiment, 3rd Brigade, 24th Infantry Division, 36th Engineer Group, School of the Americas and the 29th Infantry Regiment have all helped out."

Shoemaker said that in the past, BOSS has helped out by doing different things to houses already under construction.

"I remember one day we (volunteers) roofed one house, then painted the inside of another, all in the same day," he said.

Families who move into these houses, he said, also help out with the construction.

"Each family must put in a minimum of 500 hours of 'sweat equity,' " Shoemaker said.

'Sweat equity' is a substitute for the labor costs normally associated with the building of a house, he said.

To be eligible for a Habitat for Humanity house, Shoemaker said, families must not be able to receive a loan from anyone and must have a $500 down payment.

Habitat finances a loan for 20 years and the family must pay for the cost of goods for the house.

The house being built is a four-bedroom, one bath, no frills home, Shoemaker said.

"This house doesn't have air-conditioning. We have installed the lines for air-conditioning, but the family moving in will have to purchase the unit themselves," he said

Shoemaker said that Habitat for Humanity was started a couple years ago in Americas, Ga., and now is building houses in more than 30 countries.

By helping out in the construction of these homes, soldiers get a lot out of it, Shoemaker said.

Some of the people helping are engineers so they are working on getting experience in their field, he said.

Others get to see a house being built and are able to take what they have learned and apply it to their own home.

"They (the volunteers) have done more than one thing during the week," Shoemaker said.

On the average Shoemaker said, the 20 to 25 volunteers who showed up over the week, worked from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m.

"Everyone wants to help someone in need," said Shoemaker.

This is one of the good ways to directly help out in the community, he said.

"You end up feeling good about yourself and helping out a family in need," Shoemaker said.

AUSA seeks civilian award nominees

By Karen S. Morarie
Bayonet staff writer

The Association of the United States Army is seeking nominations for the second annual Heberling Award, which recognizes exemplary service by a civilian in soldier support, family support, Army community support and support of military operations.

Nominations should be submitted to the Public Affairs Office, Room 608, Infantry Hall, Building 4, by June 1.

Nominations should include the nominee's name and organization, as well as reasons why he or she should receive the award. Nominations should also include the nominator's name, address and phone number.

The award will be presented at the AUSA June membership meeting at 6:30p.m. June 28 at the Fort Benning Officers' Club.

"There are very few missions on this post that civilians don't play a vital role in," said Gary Burkhalter, senior personnel staffing specialist for the Recruiting and Placement Division of the Directorate of Civilian Personnel.

"Civilians on this post are very customer-service oriented, particularly in the area of family support," Burkhalter said. "We never lose sight of the fact that our function is to serve the soldiers and their families. AUSA recognizes that fact, which is why they came up with this award. It's truly an honor for them to recognize our efforts."

George Heberling Award for Distinguished Civilian Service

Eligible: Department of the Army Appropriated and Nonappropriated Fund Civilian Employees.

Nominations: Hand-deliver to the Public Affairs Office, Room 608, Infantry Hall, Building 4, before June 1.

The award, called in full the George Heberling Award for Distinguished Civilian Service, was presented last year to Sarah McLaney, post Army Communities of Excellence coordinator.

The award was named for the post's former director of Resource Management, who was also the fist civilian to serve as comptroller of a military post. The vestibule of Meloy Hall is also named for Heberling, who retired from Fort Benning after 34 years of government service. Heberling died in 1987.

"Heberling was truly a distinguished civilian, " Burkhalter said. "This award is truly prestigious. It was very difficult to choose a winner last year, because although Sarah (McLaney) richly deserved it, so did many others. Our civilians are dedicated, and it's not easy to choose just one."

Archaeologists examine post's history, artifacts

By Stephanie Krawczyk
Special to The Bayonet©

Members of the Society for Georgia Archaeology met for their spring meeting at Fort Benning and in Columbus May 13 and 14.

The group initially gathered Friday evening for a banquet at Uchee Creek Lodge.

Featured speaker at the event was Billy Winn, Editorial Page editor for the Columbus Ledger Enquirer and an authority on the history of Native American life in the Chattahoochee River Valley.

The main theme of Winn's lecture centered on plant use by early Native American settlers and essentially "how people got along in the valley in the old days."

He explained a multitude of plant uses by native americans and their importance not only for basic survival but also for their important cultural role.

"The protection of trees was pivotal in the placement of settlements," Winn said.

In addition to the berries, nuts, roots and leaves that were readily eaten by early inhabitants of the valley, many plants were used for medicinal purposes, as weapons and to make household items.

River cane was used to make items like baskets, mats and arrows, according to Winn.

Compounds derived from steeping plants and roots in water was used for purposes as diverse as treating malaria to keeping away ghosts.

Saturday activities for the group included visits to area archaeological sites on Fort Benning and in Stewart County, Ga., and Russell County, Ala.

Learning about Yuchi Town, an important 18th century native american settlement, was the highlight of the Fort Benning portion of the trip.

The tribe lived in the area for more than a century on a tract of land near the present day Uchee Creek Recreation Area.

The settlement was described in writing by a visitor to the town, 18th century botanist William Bartram.

The village was "populous and thriving, full of youth and young children." Bartram also described the Native American homes as "wooden frame houses, plastered with red clay and covered with Cypress bark.

Yuchi Town is thought to have at one time contained 1,600 Native American burial sites.

The area was partially excavated in the late 1950s by the Smithsonian Institution.

In recent years the area has been pillaged by individuals illegally digging for Native American relics, according to Dean Wood, consulting archaeologist for Fort Benning.

"Yuchi Town has unfortunately been the site of substantial looting," said Wood. More than 750 holes at the site have been identified as the work of looters.

Wood complimented Fort Benning officials for protecting archaeological sites and funding evaluations of historically significant areas.

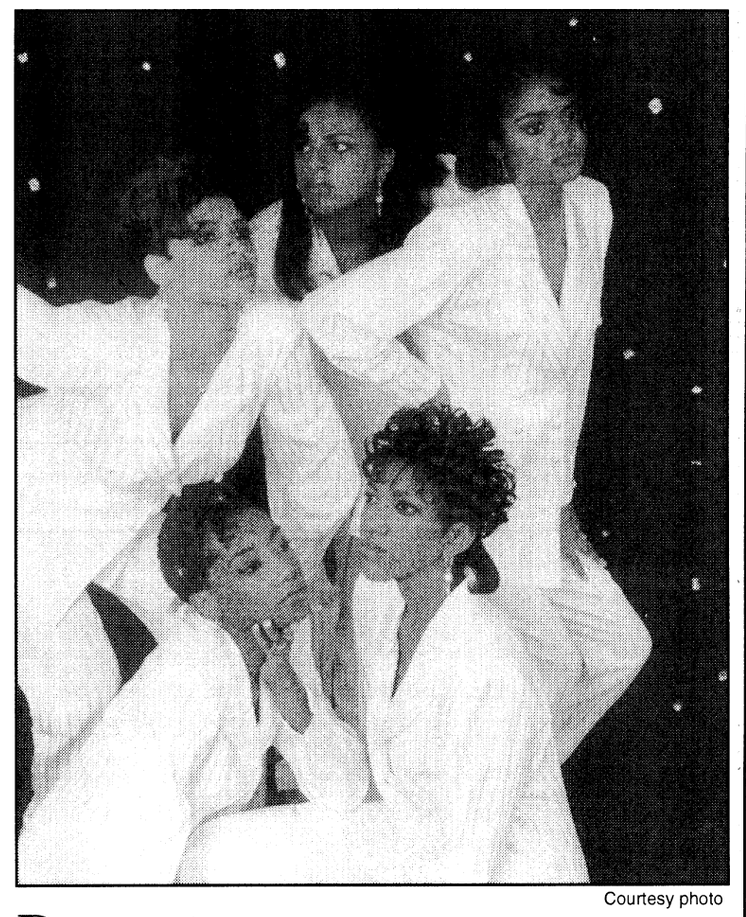
"Fort Benning has been very cooperative," he said. "They are proud of what they have."

The post recently built an outdoor interpretive center at Uchee Creek that includes six large markers explaining the history of early settlers along the Chattahoochee River. The presentation sits on a bank above the river adjoining an area of protected native american land.

Fort Benning has also installed an electronic surveillance system to prevent looters from doing any further damage at the site of Yuchi Town.

The final stop for the group Saturday was Fort Mitchell, Ala. The post was built in 1813 by Gen John Floyd, a leader of a military expedition during the struggle with native americans over the control of land desired by whites for cotton plantations and farming.

Continuous attacks and counter attacks between Native Americans and white settlers eventually led to the enactment of the Indian Removal Bill in 1829 and a new use for Fort Mitchell.



The fort served as a gathering and embarkation point for Native Americans forced from the area to territory in what is now present day Oklahoma.

The tragic journey, during which countless Native Americans died from starvation, sickness and exposure, became known as the Trail of Tears.

Fort Mitchell saw approximately 8,000 Creek Indians move through it's gates as they left Georgia and Alabama for their journey overland and by boat.

Earlier uses of the fort included a Native American trading point and a base for the 4th Infantry and 2nd Artillery. The units were dispatched from Washington to counter Native American attacks in the area, according to David Chase, archaeologist and speaker during the stop at Fort Mitchell.

The Columbus Museum, a co-sponsor for the weekend gathering, currently displays artifacts from Native American settlements of the Chattahoochee Valley and from Fort Mitchell.

More than 1,700 participate in Festival of Running

25-year-old ranger wins 5k, 10k

To win a 5k run is a good feat, but to win a 10k run one hour later is dogged determination.

For Michael Raymond, that was the agenda for the day, at the 1994 Officers' Wives' Club Festival of Running Saturday at Stewart Field.

Raymond started the day by winning the 5k run in 16 minutes and 9 seconds, then topped off the morning with a time of 33:04 to win the 10k run.

"I was hoping to break 16 minutes in the 5k, but I guess I can live with 16:09," said the 25-year-old ranger. "This was basically a warm-up for the 10k."

Valorie Adams was the overall female winner in the 5k with a time of 22:18, while Millie Daniels took the top spot in the 10k at 44:30.

More than 200 runners turned out to participate in the 10k, 5k and one-mile run. Approximately 1,500 runners pounded the pavement in the formation run to start the morning's activities.

Listed below are the top three finishers in the 10k, 5k, and one-mile run in each age group, along with their time. The formation run is separate.

Blue Jays soar past Red Sox

By Richard Rhodes
Youth Activities

On a cloudy, warm, and humid Saturday afternoon at Norton Field, the Fort Benning Blue Jays flew past the Red Sox 7-3.

Several defensive plays by both teams led to a relatively low scoring game.

The Blue Jays batted first and scored one run when Rick Rhodes walked and stole second and third and scored on a base hit by Mike Richert.

The Red Sox countered by scoring a run when Mike Hawrylak got a base hit and scored when Marlin Taylor tripled to center field, Taylor was stranded on third base when Casey Brennan struck out to end the inning with the Blue Jays 1, Red Sox 1.

In the second inning after two outs, the Jays scored as David Peppers took first when he was hit by the pitch, he then stole second and scored when Tommy Henderson singled to right, with Tommy Henderson taking third on the play to the plate.

Tommy Henderson scored on a wild pitch and Rick Rhodes struck out to end the inning. Blue Jays 3, Red Sox 1.

In the third inning, the Red Sox got a run back when Mike Hawrylak got his second hit of the game, a single to left field.

Matt Figley popped out to the pitcher, in a hit and run play Charles Boehm grounded out to the second baseman as Hawrylak took second. Hawrylak scored on Taylor's second hit, an infield single, the inning ended when Brennan grounded out. Blue Jays 3, Red Sox 2.

The two teams traded runs in the fourth. The Blue Jays scored when Steve Wojdakowski walked, stole second and third and scored on a pick off play. The Red Sox scored when James Park hit an inside the park home run to deep right center field.

The Blue Jays' pitching by Steve Wojdakowski, catching by Craig Nurnberg and the infield plays by Rick Rhodes at shortstop, Tommy Henderson at second, Steve Walley at first and Mike Richert at third held the Red Sox scoreless for the rest of the game. Blue Jays 4, Red Sox 3.

In the fifth inning, the Blue Jays scored one run on back to back doubles by Jeremy Walley and Kara Morris. Blue Jays 5, Red Sox 3.

The Blue Jays added two more runs in the sixth. Sherman Henderson walked, stole second and third and scored on a wild pitch as Sarah Rhodes was walked.

Sarah Rhodes was out at second as Tommy Henderson barely beat out a double play attempt by the Red Sox infielders. Tommy Henderson stole second and third and was picked off third base for an out.

Rick Rhodes walked, stole second and third, he was caught in a rundown between home and third and scored when he collided with the Red Sox catcher Mike Hawrylak at the plate who could not hold onto the ball. Blue Jays 7, Red Sox 3.

Giants' edge Orioles 7-5

13- to 15-year-olds take lead in 5th to come from behind to capture win

By Dan Callahan
Fort Benning Youth Activities

The Giants defeated the Orioles 7-5 in the Fort Benning Youth Activities 13- to 15-Year-Old Baseball League Saturday at Fort Benning's Norton Field.

The game was a slow starter as neither team could get much going at bat. The Orioles were the first to score as Tony Dupree walked and stole second and was followed by Jeremy Callahan who hit an in-the-park home run.

Chris Callahan got on with a single and managed to steal second but was picked off by Giants' catcher Scott Bertacina and third baseman Luis Pizarro.

The Orioles added two more runs in the second inning. Ty Mason and Ceylona Chamberlain both got on base with a walk. Mason stole second and third and Chamberlain stole second to place both runners in scoring position.

Caleb Preston brought both runs in with a hard-hit double but was left stranded on base when the Giant's shut down the drive.

The Giants' answered with two runs in the bottom of the second as Oshea Smith got or base with a walk and stole second and third.

Chico Vasquez came to bat and hit a soaring fly ball to center field, but it was caught by the Orioles' center fielder Chris Callahan.

Bertacina got on with a walk and advanced to second with a steal. Aaron Iturralde loaded up the bases when he was walked and things began to look bad for the Orioles.

Joel Driskill drove in two RBI with a double making the score 4 to 2, setting up another two runs on second and third. The Orioles stopped the drive when catcher Matt Kapinos and third baseman Dupree caught a runner off guard and picked him off for the third out.

The Orioles could only add one more in the third as Michael Bills hit his fifth home run for the season. The Giants came back to close the Orioles' lead to one when Thomas Craig hit a home run followed by Derek Craig who walked and scored by stealing second, third and home.

The Giants took the lead for the first time in the game in the bottom of the fifth as Vasquez and Bertacina both walked and stole second, third and home for scores.

Chad Amey walked and stole second and third to set up another run. Iturralde drove in Amey with a single to put the Giants up 7-5.

The Orioles gave up a chance to tie the game in the sixth. Mason hit a hard fly ball between left and center field for a triple, and Chamberlain walked and stole second.

The Orioles failed to score when the Giants' pitcher Thomas Craig got the third out with a strike.

The Giants' defense held the Orioles in the seventh inning to win the game. The Orioles still had a chance for a tie, as Preston walked and stole second and third and Bills walked and stole second. With two runners in scoring position and two outs, the Giants' defense held fast when a fly ball was caught by the Giants' first baseman Chico Vasquez to end the game at 7-5.

Catholic school students enjoy, learn music at school concert

The Infantry Band entertained elementary students at Our Lady of Lourdes Elementary School May 11.

"From Our Family to Yours" was the theme of the concert, said Staff Sgt. Frederick J. Catchings, operations noncommissioned officer for the Infantry Band.

Catchings introduced the students to the woodwind, brass and percussion families of the band, which tied in with the family theme.

Throughout short presentations about each family of instruments, along with the individual demonstrations within the families, the band performed the theme from "The Muppet Show," "Georgia on my Mind," and the themes from "Rocky" and "Ghostbusters.

Select students got a chance to play John Philip Sousa when they were brought to the stage by Catchings to direct the band.

Approximately 20 students were able to file onto the stage, one at a time and hold the conductor's baton and conduct the band.

Lt. Col. Florian K. Rothbrust, battalion commander, 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment, also got his turn at conducting the band.

"This (concert) gives them (the students) the incentive to follow their talent," said Sister Mairead Hourigan, principal at the school.

After conducting the band, Rothbrust said, "This is such a great opportunity for Fort Benning to reach out the community and show our involvement. The Infantry Band is a fantastic vehicle to do this."

Faith School offering summer day camp

By Jerrie Macintire
Special to The Bayonet ©

Faith Middle School in conjunction with the National Science Center is offering a summer day camp featuring high interest, hands on activities in math and science Aug. 8 to 12.

The registration fee of $100 will include materials, lunches and T-shirts for the camp, scheduled to operate from 9 a.m. to 3:30 p.m. Preregistration is open until June 1 and requires a $25 deposit, which will secure a reservation. Registration will be 1 to 3:30 p.m. Friday, Aug 5 or 8 to 9 a.m. Monday, Aug. 8.

The camp, In Touch With Math and Science, is open to 50 rising seventh and eighth grade students; priority will be given to Faith School students with second priority given to other military dependent children, according to Jerry Christy, science curriculum coordinator.

"This is another program we're arranging as part of our affiliation with the National Science Center at Fort Gordon to give students the chance to experience some exciting hands on activities in science and math," Christy said.

Similar camps were jointly sponsored by the NSC last year at various military locations in an effort to foster interest in math and science in accordance with national education goals.

The curriculum was developed by NSC personnel, who will train two Fort Benning teachers in methods of presentation.

"We benefit from The National Science Center's experience, but we also have the luxury of bringing our own people into it," said Christy.

Teachers Kris Keske and Judy Hanley will direct the camp using curriculum objectives derived from National Council of Teachers of Mathematics as well as physical science experiments designed to spark interest and curiosity.

In addition to math and science activities, Keske and Hanley will coordinate group learning adventures designed to enhance team building skills and interactions.

Keske and Hanley, known for their hands on methods of teaching, will integrate these group exercises with the math and science themes identified by the NSC. An added benefit will be that these two educators will bring the renewed methods of teaching math and science back into the Fort Benning classrooms, Christy said.

"This partnership with the National Science Center provides additional means of enhancing science and math activities already in place in the classroom," Christy said.

In addition to the camp, the NSC has supported math and science enrichment in post schools through outreach programs such as the Mobile Discovery Van, Starlab and distance learning stations Christy said.

"In Touch with Math and Science" preregistration form

Parents will be required to complete a camp registration form for each student before the student is allowed to participate in the camp. Registration will be at Faith Middle School Aug. 5 from1 to 3:30 p.m. and Aug. 8 from 8 to 9 a.m.

Faith students meet 'friends'

By Jerrie Macintire
Special to The Bayonet ©

The efficiency of modern technology is obvious, but its role in the development of warm human friendships is not as well documented.

A cross country series of educational teleconferences fostered a bond between students at Faith Middle School and their counterparts in California, who arrived May 9 for a personal visit with their electronic video pals.

A total of 12 students from Blackstock School in Oxnard, Calif., who have been among those regularly teleconferencing with Faith students since October, arrived for a week-long visit with peers they had previously known only from a large video screen, part of the electronic link.

Although recently meeting in person for the first time, the students had already formed the basis for friendships during the regular teleconferences, where they exchanged information about themselves, their communities and their schools.

What began as a recent teleconference on algebra turned into a planning session for a cross country trip, said Glenn Hughes, assistant principal at Faith who coordinated the visit. "We saw such a great connection among the students that we discussed a personal visit," he said.

While living with military families, the Californians attended Faith School classes with young hosts to gain an understanding of military lifestyles as well as similarities and differences in education and culture. Although students cited some diversity, they mutually concluded "We are more alike than different," said Carol Flores, assistant principal of Blackstock School who helped moderate a roundtable discussion.

The students compared notes on many subjects including methods of education. Schools were similar in their emphasis on integrated technology and hands on approaches to teaching, but differed in structure, with Californians attending a "model tech" cluster school of 900 students.

As part of their education, they regularly teleconference with other schools using facilities from nearby Port Hueneme, a Naval station.

Although familiar with the Navy base, students found Fort Benning a change. "I didn't realize the post was this big," said Anaya Simmons, who stayed with Shannon Goldsby. Though surprised and fascinated by the unexpected colloquial southern term, "Y'all," visitors were gratified to see the universal fashion of baggy clothes, called sag, was popular across the continent.

While comparing other similarities, the Californians said they enjoyed the rich cross cultural society of the military, similar to their own multi ethnic agricultural community on the West Coast. However, their community has a stable population, and they expressed curiosity about the mobile lifestyle of military families.

"Joaquin learned about the Army lifestyle," said Staff Sgt. Elvis Colon of the 535th engineer detachment, one of several Faith families to host students. "He has been in his neighborhood school all his life; my son has been in seven schools.

Christine Jacobe agreed, saying "When they left (Monday morning) there were gallons of tears." During the many activities planned by host families,"they blended in very well," said Joanne Goldsby, who opened her home to two students.

Though sightseeing was popular, students from both schools participated in educational exercises as well. Peter Frank, visiting math teacher, joined Kelly Martin of Faith School for some cooperative teaching. Martin demonstrated a building activity with polyhedrons, or multi faceted mathematical structures, while Franks conducted an exercise in "mental arithmetic" to teach skills in adding large numbers mentally. He also conducted introductory lessons for a future teleconference on math.

"I have found a new friend," said Elvis Colon Jr., who, along with other participants, exchanged mailing addresses. In addition to developing mutual friendship, understanding and respect, the students began to realize "the world is a small place," Frank said.

Wilson students ring chimes

By Jerrie Macintire
Special to The Bayonet ©

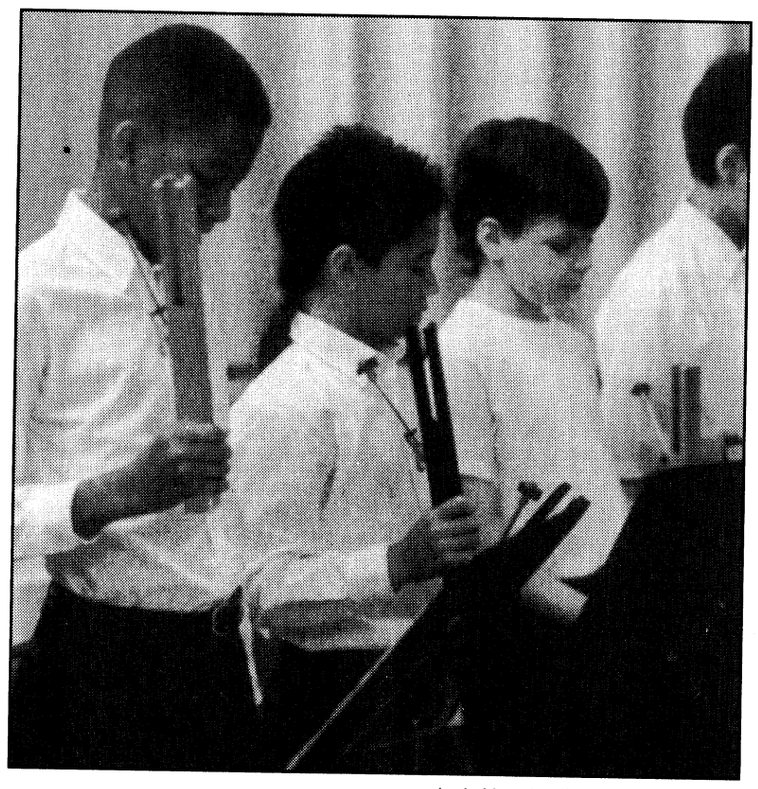
Wilson School students demonstrated proficiency in reading music, exercising different symphony techniques and working cooperatively in groups during a chime concert May 16 at the school.

Designed to showcase the variety of skills acquired over the past year, the concert featured chimes, a set of bell like instruments tuned to various notes of a scale.

The 22-member choir performed a diverse selection of classical, folk and modern pieces.

"The children have worked really hard in chime choir. This is a culminating activity to show parents, teachers and other students what they have learned during the course of the year," said Phyllis Parker, principal.

Participating in the chime choir gives children a good foundation in music, according to Norma Green, music teacher.



"This is a wonderful activity for teaching music reading and ensemble playing," said Green.

By building the groundwork for a successful choir, Green said she hopes to prepare the young musicians for a band or orchestra experience in the future.

"These children expressed a desire to play music," said Green, who noted that chime choir participants had to be recommended by their teachers.

From American favorites such as "Grandfather's Clock" and "Home on the Range" to classics such as the famous "Graduation March," the choir demonstrated a variety of music and various playing techniques including staccato playing, which "is difficult and requires tremendous concentration," said Green.

Following the half hour concert, family and friends of the young musicians attended a reception.

What's more, any active duty officers and Department of the Army civilians eligible for club membership can join the Officers' Club free for 30 days.

Commanding General Maj. Gen. Jerry A. White encourages those eligible to participate in the trial membership because the club provides a unique opportunity for soldiers and civilians to socialize, exchange ideas and participate in an important part of their military heritage, he said.

Among the benefits offered by the Fort Benning Officers' Club:

Yates said the club offers one of the best values around. Membership is $22 for active duty company grade officers and civilians GS-7 through GS-12 and $25 for active duty field grade officers and above and civilians GS-13 and above.

"If you make regular use of the club, the cost of membership almost pays for itself because of the discounts and benefits the club offers," Yates said.

To join, stop by the club and fill out an application, Yates said. If you cancel your membership within 30 days, you will not be charged any dues.

"The Fort Benning Officers' Club is one of the finest country clubs in the area. We offer services comparable to many clubs on the outside but at considerably less cost," he added. "We invite officers and eligible civilian employees to take advantage of the free 30-day trial offer and see for themselves what a value the club is and what a tremendous asset the club is to the Fort Benning community."

Fitness School students, instructors put some MUSCLE in their ATTITUDE

By Karen S. Morarie
Bayonet staff writer

"Attitude: it's a little thing that makes a big difference."

These words appear on a poster prominently displayed at the U.S. Army Physical Fitness School, located in a rather small building on Ingersoll Street.

Maj. Marcus Alexander, operations officer of the school, said attitude and motivation are important for both the students and the intructors who train them.

Of the Master Fitness Trainer students, Alexander said, "They're motivated by the desire to be better, to know more about fitness. They all seem to have a real hunger for knowledge. We get students who've always been interested in fitness, but didn't have the knowledge to back it up."

Alexander said the positive attitude that seems typical of the school's staff is partly the result of the feedback they get from students.

"The students respond tremendously to the program, and the instructors feed off that," he said.

Staff Sgt. Terry McKinzie, a full-time National Guardsman, has been an instructor at the fitness school for 18 months.

"The students are what keeps me motivated," she said. "We throw the material at them hard and fast, and at first many of them aren't sure they can take it in. It's incredible to see their faces at the end of the two weeks, when they realize how much they've learned and what they've accomplished."

Students in recent classes have included members of the regular Army, Army Reserves, National Guard and civilians. students may be male or female, in a wide range of ages.

Dr. Louis F. Tomasi, research physiologist for the school, said the course is extremely demanding.

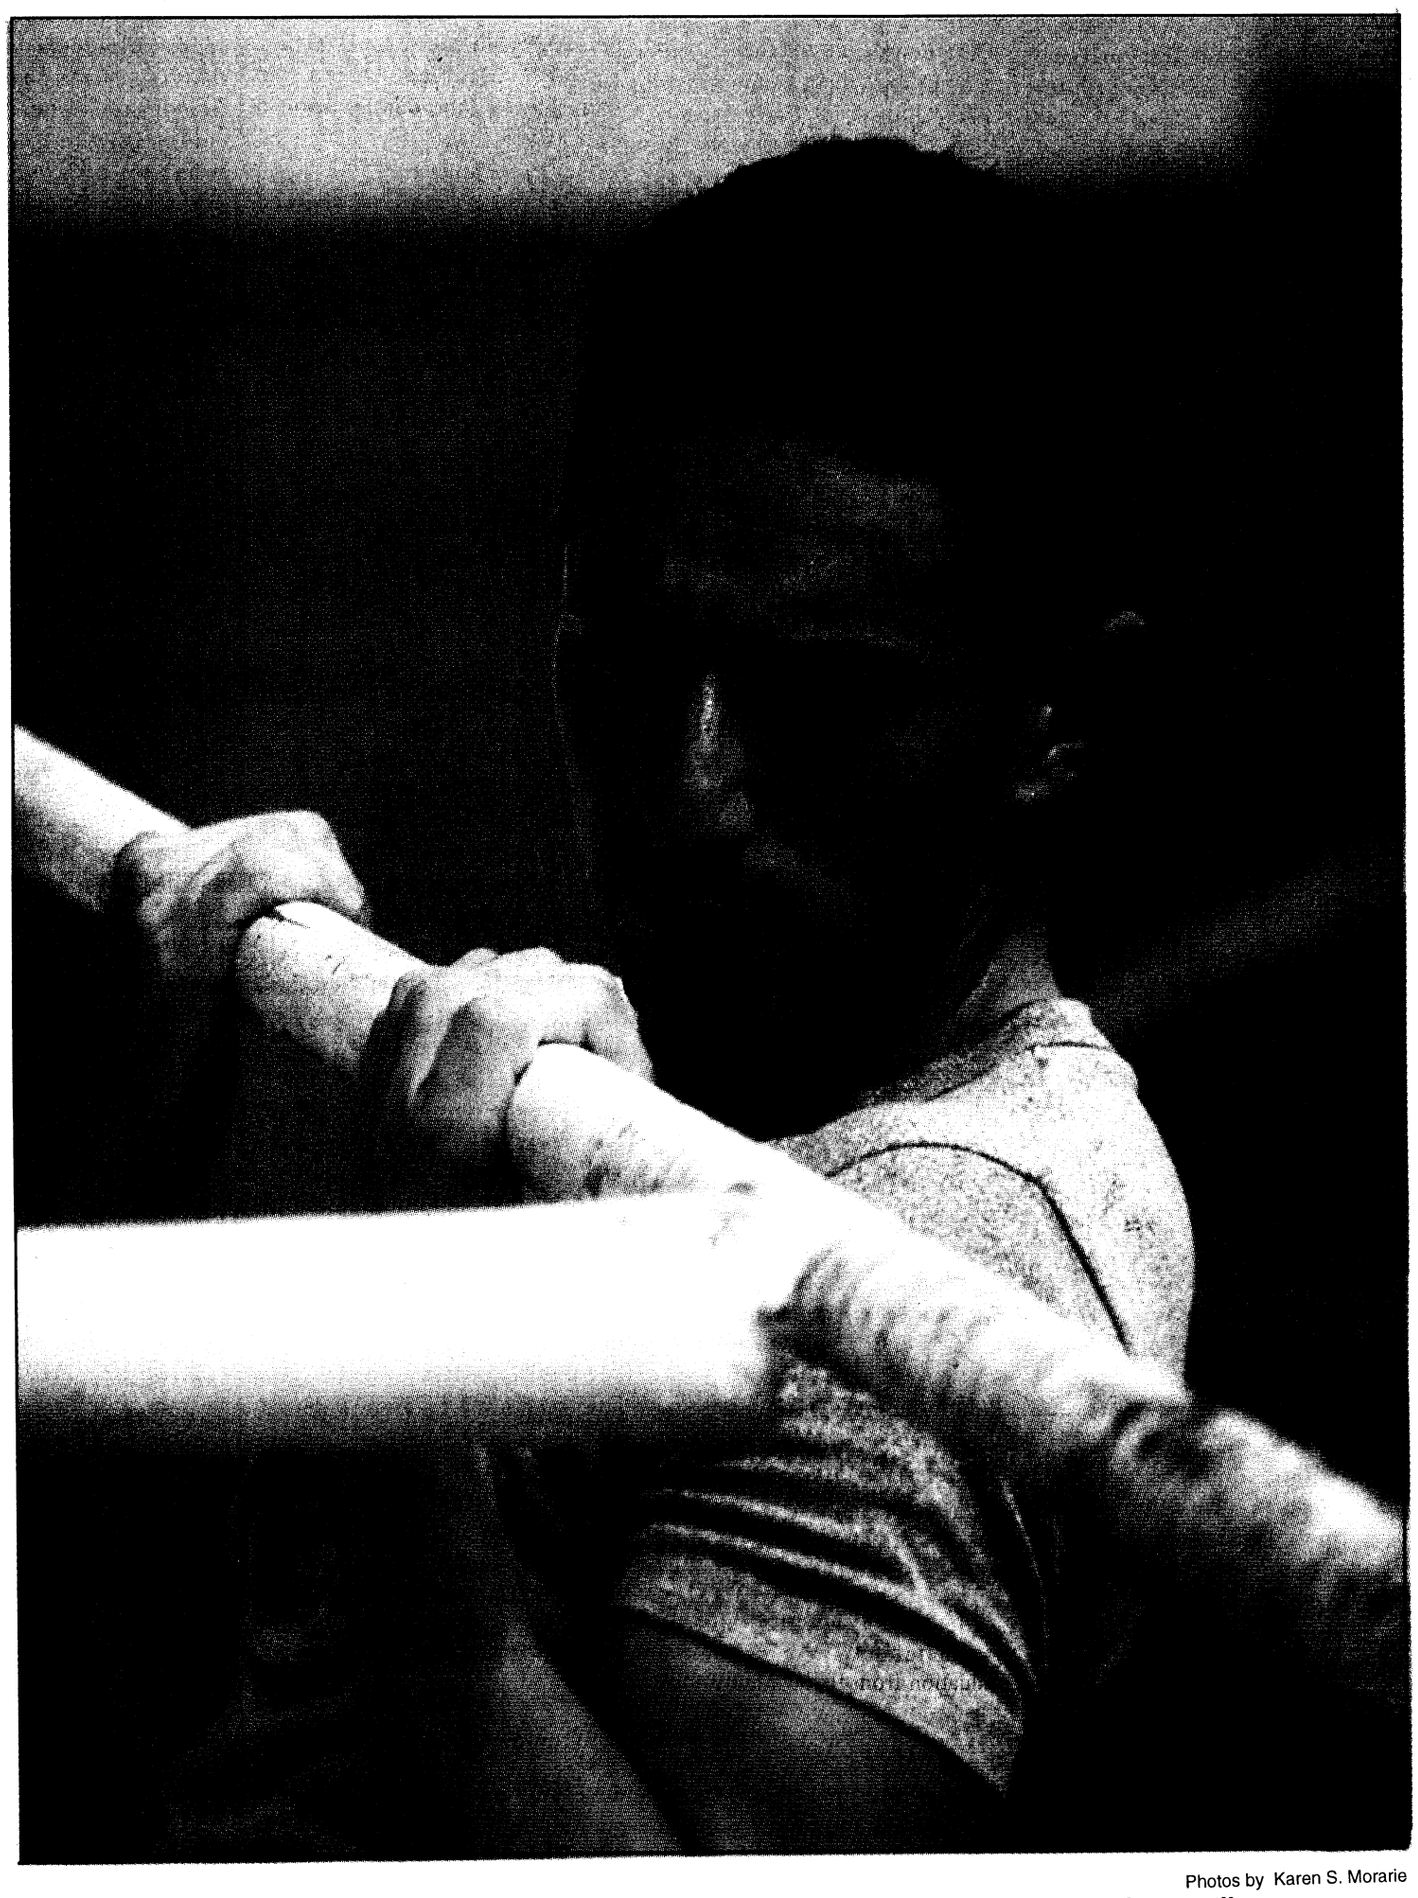
"This used to be a four-week course, which we've adjusted to two weeks because of limited resources," he said. "The students are really pushed to absorb all the information."

Tomasi explained the course combines science-based academic theory with hands-on fitness exercises in a series of five components.

"The components are muscle strength, muscle endurance, cardiorespiratory or aerobic fitness, flexibility and body composition," he said.

The first week, he said, is largely academic and includes anatomy, physiology and cardiovascular disease risks.

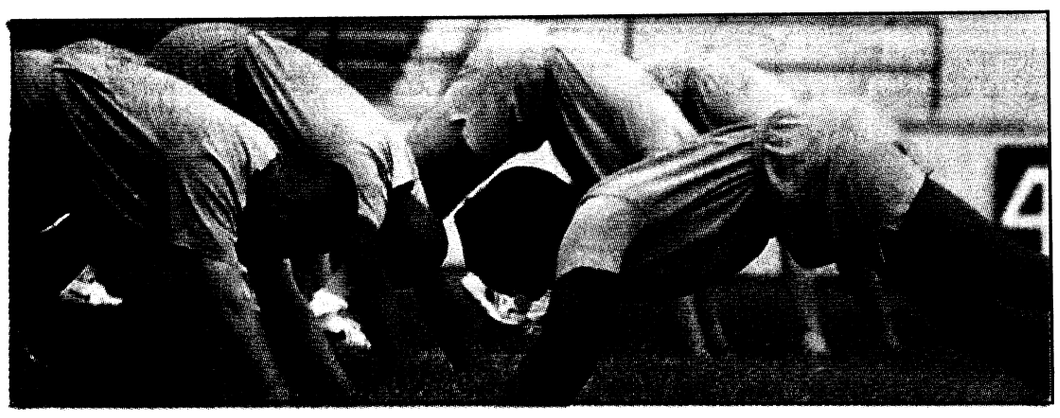
"When we combine academic training with an exercise element," Tomasi said, "we give the students the theory behind the activity, so for the first time, they know not only what they're doing, but why and how."



Tomasi said well over half of the classes the school conducts are on the road.

"We have mobile teaching teams that go to different installations to teach the Master Fitness Trainer course," he said. "Probably 70 percent of the people we train are taught by these teams."

A continuing challenge for the school, Tomasi said, is to keep a steady supply of instructors.



"We try to recruit staff sergeants," he said, "and often we have sergeants first class as well. What happens is they get promoted soon after they come here, and then they have to go do other things."

Top TRADOC NCO shares insights

TRADOC News Service

Editor's note: Command Sgt. Maj. Walton C. Woodall, command sergeant major for Training and Doctrine Command, was interviewed by Alice F. Edwards, editor, Army Trainer.

Q: In the 1991 Army Trainer interview, one of your major concerns was the quality of individual soldier training. What is your current opinion of that training and have your views changed during the last three years as TRADOC Command Sergeant Major?

A: The quality of training is just as good as, or maybe better than, it was three years ago. The quality of young people entering the military is very high. I think, though, that some joining the Army today may not be joining for the same reasons I did. I came in not only because I got a draft notice, but to serve the nation and protect the country. Many young people now are coming in mostly for the education benefits.

I hope for the two or three years they enlist we can persuade them to make a career out of the Army instead of coming in for one hitch. That will be a challenge to our retention folks.

We're fortunate, even with all the budget and personnel cuts, that we still can do the same training we did three years ago. We haven't taken anything out of basic training or one station unit training. Gen. (Frederick M.) Franks (Jr., TRADOC commander) is dedicated to maintaining quality training. Doctrine is TRADOC's other mission, but training is its main mission. So far we maintain a high standard. I am happy with the quality of the soldier.

Past training scenarios in our FTXs (field training exercises) and in the NCO education system (NCOES) centered around the Fulda Gap war. We have changed them. You may still find old scenarios in some places, but we gear everything now to deploying quickly to a variety of situations. We used to deploy a division. Now we deploy a task force or whatever we need to meet the needs of the power projection Army.

Q: What is the major challenge facing the individual soldier regarding training?

A: If I were coming into the Army today, I doubt if I could survive. I mean that in terms of the technical aptitude that is required of our young soldiers. The new computerized systems they are learning are very sophisticated; for example, the new Paladin in artillery.

I don't know if I'd have the intelligence it takes to operate it. These young soldiers do it and do it well. They've been playing video and computer games all their lives, so they can pick it up fast. It's quite a challenge for them but they grasp it quickly; they want to because it is a challenge.

Q: How has the NCO changed during the past three years?

A: I have seen some changes, but they didn't start just three years ago. Little by little, the Army has forced NCOs to change. Some are more self-centered than they used to be.

For example, watch any squad with a good staff sergeant leader perform its mission or task. The squad members do extremely well because they have been trained well; they love doing it and doing it right. But if you sit down and talk with the squad leader, team leader or section leader and ask, 'If I could do something for you today, what would it be?' he would probably say that he wants something for himself. He may say he wants to go to ANCOC, where he can make sergeant first class.

I feel sometimes that NCOs are more concerned about their own welfare than their soldiers'. And we've forced that on them. We tell them that in order to get promoted they need X number of points; in order to get those points they've got to do this, this and this.

To achieve these points they get concerned about their careers, which they should be anyway. But it's such a challenge to get promoted. They start going to college — and there's nothing wrong with that — and doing anything else they can to get promotion points.

That may not be a big problem across the Army. But it bothers me when I see sergeants who can't tell you how many people in their platoon are married, how many are not, where they live, the basic stuff.

If NCOs realize that their job as squad leaders is to train, take care of and maintain the soldiers they're responsible for, they'll get promoted. But because of the structure of the system it's difficult for them unless they have the points to get promoted.

Q: With the self development test the ball is now in the NCOs' court. How will they face up to this sink-or-swim situation? What feedback have you received from NCOS in the field since SDT's implementation? Have career maps helped NCOs prepare for SDT?

A: We've had quite a battle with some to implement SDT. There have been a lot of challenges to it. First of all, if we are going to test our enlisted soldiers, then every enlisted soldier from the grade of sergeant should be tested. A fellow MACOM command sergeant major recently suggested that we test first sergeants through sergeants major. I support that.

If we are going to test sergeants through sergeants first class, why stop there? The challenge would be to develop more tests. And that's a great challenge because training developers are getting thin in the Army. To develop two more tests would be difficult.

I honestly believe that the SDT is the best test we've ever developed. We now test soldiers' technical skills, leadership and training. Our young soldiers are meeting the challenge — that's pretty evident from the statistics that show how well they're doing, if they study. We're putting a load on them.

When we designed the SDT, we did not allocate time on training schedules for soldiers to study. It is the individual soldier's responsibility. I like that. If that's all a soldier had to do in addition to normal duties, it wouldn't be bad. But when we throw in going to school, distributed training, completing subcourses, going to college at night, we're putting a tremendous load on a squad leader.

Many are meeting the challenge and we need to retain some type of testing for our soldiers. The SDT fits that bill. The only thing I would do differently with the SDT is test first sergeants and sergeants major. I'll probably have sergeants major wanting to shoot me when they read this, but I think they need to show a certain amount of proficiency.

I can expand that into the area of physical training. We test PT in some of our NCOES courses and stop at a certain level. I would like to see the Army test first sergeants on PT in the first sergeants course as a prerequisite for entering the course. Not only that, I think sergeants major who are appointed to command sergeant major and go to the Sergeants Major Academy should be tested in PT during that week's course.

> "I honestly believe that the SDT is the best test we've ever developed. We now test soldiers' technical skills, leadership and training."
> — Command Sgt. Maj. Walton C. Woodall
> TRADOC command sergeant major

In fact, if you're going to be a leader — and a command sergeant major is the senior enlisted guy in a battalion — you should be able to do everything that battalion does. We rely on our integrity to do that, but I would like to see it tested in the courses to let them know they need to prepare themselves to lead better. I think it would be interesting to see that.

If you can't lead from the front, then you don't need to be out there. I've always felt that way. If you are an enlisted soldier and a leader and you can't do what is required of you from the front, then you need to go home. You're in the wrong business. We need to be able to do anything we expect our soldiers to do. That's why I advocate the SDT and the PT test for first sergeants and sergeants major — for everyone!

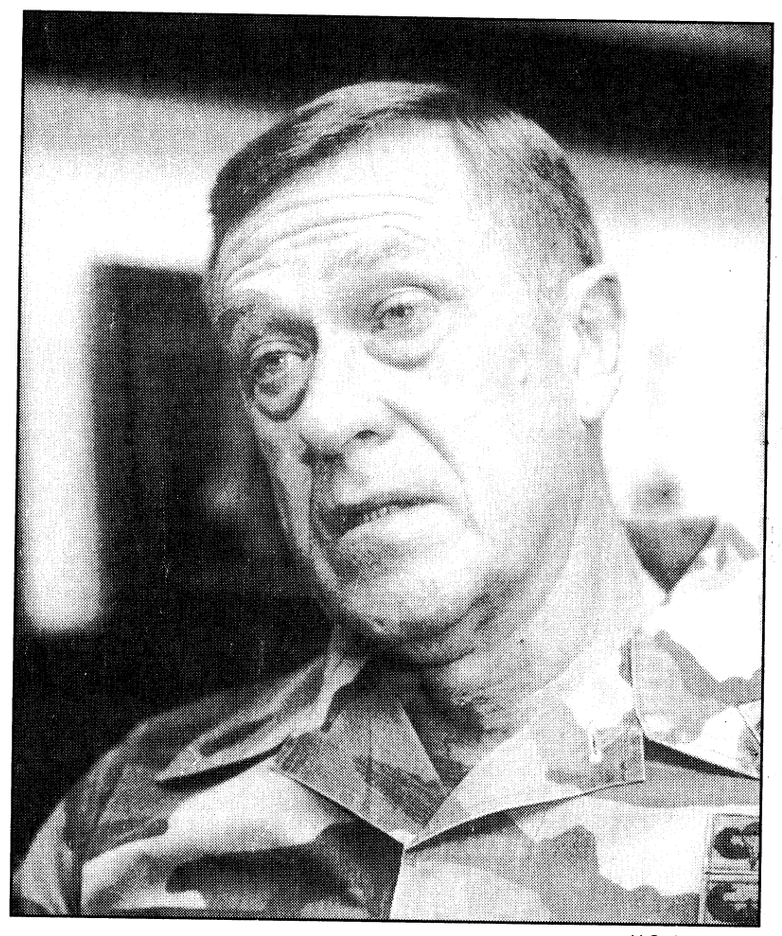
The only negative thing I've heard people say about the SDT was that some questions were repeated from last year's test. I believe only 25 percent of the questions are required to be changed each year, so that may very well be the case. The challenge is for our training developers to write appropriate questions for the time and current equipment.

I get good comments about SDT. When we were in Korea, all they could tell us was how great it was. The FORSCOM (command) sergeant major supports SDT. He says it's a lot better program than he ever thought it would be when it first started. The Army is doing great with the SDT, considering how long we've had it. It's been hard work, though.

If Woodall were in power today, I'd eliminate the career maps. That's a drastic statement and I say that because of the individual soldier or squad leader we talked about before. He looks at that career map and says 'Man, by the time I become a sergeant first class, I've got to have two years of college.' But if you read the top of the career map, it says that it's recommended they do that. But because of the current point system, in order to get promoted these soldiers are going to college — because they think they have to.

A soldier does not need a college education to be a good soldier. If he has a college education, he may be a better soldier. If the opportunity arises for a soldier to attend school, he should get all the education he can — if it supports his job in the Army. We are not in the business to educate people for the civilian market. We are in the business to be soldiers, to fight and win wars. If getting an education helps us do that, I support it.

But just to give a soldier an education, I don't support that at all. The career map tends to make a soldier think he's got to have a college education, which is not true.



There is no Army regulation that requires an enlisted soldier to go to college or have a degree at any level. It is required for officers, but not for enlisted soldiers.

I think some of our young soldiers look at the career map and get discouraged. We put career maps out to help soldiers get promoted and design their careers, but I think we need to modify them.

Q: Although simulation is the wave of the future, it will never replace field training. What's the balance between the two and do you believe a standard needs to be initiated to ensure the right mix?

A: The Army as a whole is wrestling with that right now. We have some simulators that are so realistic that you actually think you're doing that job — flying a helicopter, driving a tank. I think the wave of the future is a lot of simulation. I won't even guess at what the mix should be; I don't think we know yet. Training young soldiers through simulation before putting them in the equipment works better than having no simulation at all.

Those things are so real. You can go from shooting an M-16 rifle all the way to flying a helicopter. It even makes you flinch when you crash that helicopter!

Nation to recognize military on

Armed Forces Day

By Alex Brown
2nd Battalion, 58th Infantry Regiment

On July 2, 1947, Congress passed the National Security Act which united the Army, Navy, and Air Force into a combined organization.

This organization was identified as the National Military Establishment. Today we call it the Department of Defense — headed by the secretary of Defense.

The intent of Congress was to increase the efficiency and cooperation of the military.

Two years later in 1949, Armed Forces Day was established and designated as the third Saturday in May to keep focus on the common purpose of each branch of the U.S. military.

The first Armed Forces Day was celebrated May 20, 1950, with the theme "Teamed for Defense."

The celebrations and displays of the day demonstrated the progress that had been made in unifying the Army, Navy and Air Force.

The following year, 1951, the theme for Armed Forces Day was "Defenders of Freedom." The emphasis shifted from "unification" to its ultimate purpose — the effective defense of freedom.

Saturday, this nation will again celebrate the unity of its military forces that defend our shores at home and our interests abroad.

reflections

As in past years, we will have parades and military displays. But we celebrate more than the weapons of war.

We celebrate more than successful military campaigns and heroic warriors rightly honored.

Armed Forces Day, while easily camouflaged by military armament, is about unity and focus.

Gen. Omar N. Bradley, Army chief of staff in 1949, suggested doing away with separate days of celebration within each of the service because of his concern about competition.

He favored a single National Security Day. The reality of his dream was demonstrated by our forces during Operation Desert Storm where our efforts focused on liberating the tiny country of Kuwait from the grip of Iraq.

Military planners of the Air Force, Army, and Navy focused on a common goal and united their skills and training to form a plan to achieve this goal.

Armed Forces Day is about gratitude and thanks. It is a day when all of our citizens can express their gratitude to those who have worn their nation's uniforms.

Across the country while visiting military installations and bases, the American public will have the opportunity to get a closer look at the men and women who serve this nation.

Hopefully the displays of military machinery and technology will allow the people who serve and those who are served to meet face to face and express their gratitude to one another.

Maybe the waving hand of a small child sitting along a parade route will remind the young soldier, sailor, airman, Marine or Coast Guardsman who marches by that the rigors of boot camp and the fear of future conflict is worth the effort.

Armed Forces Day is ultimately about people and families united and focused on a common goal.

It is about people who are teamed for the defense of freedom so that we can experience "Peace through Readiness."

Holy Spirit brings power

reflections

The account of the day of Pentecost is found in Acts 2:1-47. Pentecost is the day when God gave the Holy Spirit to the Christian church in a very special way. However, before this experience, Pentecost was not associated with the spirit. Pentecost was one of the three great Jewish festivals to which every male Jew living within twenty miles of Jerusalem was bound to come.

The other two festivals were Passover and the Feast of Tabernacles. Pentecost occurred fifty days after Passover. In fact, Pentecost means "The 50th," because it fell on the 50th day after Passover. Another name for Pentecost was "The Feast of Weeks."

The Feast of Pentecost was significant for two reasons. First, historically, it commemorated the giving of the law to Moses on Mount Sinai.

Second, it was an agricultural event. This was the celebration of the gathered harvest. Two loaves of bread were offered in gratitude for the harvest.

The Pentecost event Luke writes about in Acts changed the Christian church forever. The event recorded in Acts is the fulfillment of prophecy.

Joel 2:28 (NIV) says, "And afterward, I will pour out my spirit on all people. Your sons and daughters will prophecy, your old men will dream dreams, your young men will see visions."

Jesus also spoke of the coming of the spirit in Acts 1:8 (NIV). "But you will receive power when the Holy Spirit comes on you; and you will be my witnesses on Jerusalem and all Judea and Samaria and to the ends of the earth."

There has been much debate and discussion about what happened when God granted the Holy Spirit to the church. Most of the debate is over what Luke meant by speaking in tongues. Another point of debate is over how the different races and tribes of people understood each other.

Whichever way you answer these questions, two things stand out about the coming of the spirit. First, the coming of the spirit meant power. The believers were empowered by the spirit. This power enabled them to face the challenges of being a Christian.

An example of this power is found in Acts 4:31. Peter's courage and eloquence before the Sanhedrin was the result of this power. Secondly, the spirit enabled believers to be more than passive participants in the church. The spirit empowered them to be witnesses.

This is evident in Acts 2:41. Through the preaching of Peter, 3,000 were added to the Christian church in one day.

As Christians, we are confident because of the spirit that dwells in us. We also serve Christ as his witnesses because of the power of the Holy Spirit that dwells in us.

crime watch

Military Police Activity

TAKE A BITE OUT OF CRIME

The following entries are from the Fort Benning Military Police blotters April 26 to May 2.

Such entries may be incomplete and do not determine the guilt or innocence of any person.

• Six juveniles were charged with curfew violation after being observed without adult supervision after curfew.

• A civilian was found dead in his vehicle, which was parked in a wooded area. There was an apparent gunshot wound to the left side of his chest.

• A private, after having completed an Army physical fitness test assessment, collapsed and later died from cardiac arrest.

• A major reported that an unknown person forged his signature on several documents and stole $1,200 from his personal checking account.

• A private was charged with larceny of private property and forgery after he stole a checkbook and cashed several of the checks.

• A private first class was charged with drunk on duty after he was transported to the hospital complaining of chest pains. While being treated, an odor of alcohol was detected, and he was administered a breathalyzer test with a result of .14 percent .

• A specialist was charged with contributing to unruliness or deprivation of a minor after she told her son to fight with another juvenile.

This week's booby prize goes to the taxi driver who drove three soldiers to an unknown location on post, provided them with alcohol, then drove them back to their company area. All three soldiers were under the legal drinking age.

The taxi driver was charged with furnishing alcoholic beverages to persons under the age of 21 and issued post ejection orders.

The three privates were charged with underage drinking, drunk on duty, order.

Other activities included 15 traffic accidents and five cases of driving under the influence of alcohol.

There were two shoplifting cases reported at exchange facilities and 12 cases of larceny of private property.

ask the judge

By Jill Brown
Office of the Staff Judge Advocate

Q: I was recently promoted to private first class. In spite of the promotion, I am still having troubles paying all of my bills.

Before I came into the Army, I was making a lot more money and did not have this problem. Now the 20.5 percent annual percentage rate on my credit cards and the 18.5 percent annual percentage rate on my car financing is bankrupting me.

Can anything be done to help my situation?

A: Your situation is not as hopeless as it may seem. The Soldiers and Sailors Civil Relief Act is a federal law that provides financial relief by limiting the amount of interest that can be charged to a rate no higher than 6 percent per annum.

To take advantage of the Soldiers and Sailors Civil Relief Act, the service member must meet certain criteria.

First, the obligation must have been entered into prior to active duty service. Second, the military service must materially affect the ability of the service member to pay. Finally, the service member must currently be on active duty.

If the service member meets the criteria, the creditor must lower the interest rate to 6 percent. The creditor should then deduct from the current balance of the loan any interest in excess of the 6 percent that has accrued since the service member came on active duty and recalculate the monthly payments due to reflect the 6 percent rate of interest.

The protection of the SSCRA takes effect at the time the service member enters active military service and not when the protection is invoked.

However, the protection stops when the service member goes off active duty.

To invoke the protection, the service member needs to notify the lender and provide a copy of orders showing that he or she is on active duty. The Legal Assistance Office can help draft your letters to the creditors.

Once it receives notification, the burden is on the creditor to seek relief in court by proving that the military service does not materially affect the service member's ability to pay.

This is determined by the court, which is required to compare the service member's financial condition prior to entry on active duty with the financial condition while on active duty.

Once the protections have been invoked, the creditor is prohibited from exercising any right or option under the contract to rescind or terminate the contract.

Furthermore, the creditor is prohibited from repossessing the property for nonpayment of any installment due or to breach the terms of the contract.

For more information or assistance in notifying creditors, call the Legal Assistance Office at 545-3281.

dr. fit

U.S. Army Physical Fitness School

Q: Recently I noticed a parking lot here on post that is reserved Saturdays for in-line skaters. I am interested in starting the sport. Is it good for you?

A: In a word, the answer is yes. However I recommend that you start slowly and progress gradually.

You must learn to use the brakes as soon as possible. Start on the level and skate uphill.

This will increase confidence. Then look for a gradual, downhill slope to challenge stopping ability.

When skating for an extended period of time, the body will burn about 570 calories per hour.

That is similar to the caloric expenditure for bicycling for the same period. Running will burn about 20 percent more calories for the same period.

It is used as a cross-training activity with less vertical impact on the joints. Therefore, the joints get a break form the pounding of running.

In-line skating is an excellent sport to develop independent leg movement and will prepare the skater for other sports, such as skiing, ice skating and soccer.

Q. What is THR, and how is it used?

A. THR is an abbreviation for training (or target) heart rate. It is used to measure the level of intensity.

Intensity is the single most important factor for improving physical performance. The most often used is the percent MHR (from Field Manual 21-20). With this method, the THR is calculated using the estimated maximal heart rate (MHR), (MHR = 220 - age). To choose a THR, select the intensity that is appropriate to your level of fitness.

For example, 220 - age + MHR, MHR x intensity (60, 70 or 80 percent) = THR. Let's use a 45-year-old man.

MHR = 220 - 45 = 175 beats per minute.

THR = 175 x 80 percent (or 0.8) = 140 bpm.

Q. What does "aerobic" mean?

A. To provide enough energy to the muscle, the body must be trained to use oxygen. This oxygen combines with food within the body to provide energy to the working muscle.

When the muscle is working with restricted oxygen, as in the beginning of an exercise session, it is not efficient.

When in good aerobic condition, the following occurs: more air moves through the lungs, more oxygen is in the blood stream, the working muscle uses more oxygen, the strength of the heart is increased, there is less lactic acid and the body more rapidly removes the carbon dioxide from the body and lungs.

Pets need vaccinations, examinations

Veterinary Treatment Facility

Regular vaccinations and health exams are necessary for pets to live long, healthy lives.

Like humans, pets need immunizations (vaccinations when they are young and then need yearly checkups (with vaccinations) for the rest of their lives.

Both military and civilian veterinary clinics can provide these services for military pet owners.

Dogs should receive their first set of shots, be tested for intestinal worms and be started on heartworm preventative at 6 weeks of age.

They should then receive boosters at 9 and 12 weeks. Every year after that, dogs need to be vaccinated and should have a heartworm test and a test for intestinal worms.

Cats, like dogs, should receive their first set of shots and be tested for intestinal worms at 6 week of age.

Cats do not need to be tested for heartworms or put on heartworm preventative because heartworms are rarely ever found in cats. Booster shots need to follow at nine and 12 weeks and then once yearly.

Yearly tests for intestinal worms are recommended for cats which spend time outdoors.

The Fort Benning Veterinary Treatment Facility is located in Building 265 on 10th Mountain Division Road.

The hours are 8 to 1:30 a.m. and 12:45 to p.m. Monday through Friday (closed the last working day of the month for inventory) and the phone numbers are 545-4444 and 545-1127.

Your Guide to Prime-Time TV: Cable and Broadcast Schedules

Carol Burnett: Dramatically different on NBC

By Jay Bobbin
Tribune Media Services

Within two days of being seen in her most familiar TV persona, Carol Burnett is providing new evidence of the range of her talents.

SPOTLIGHT

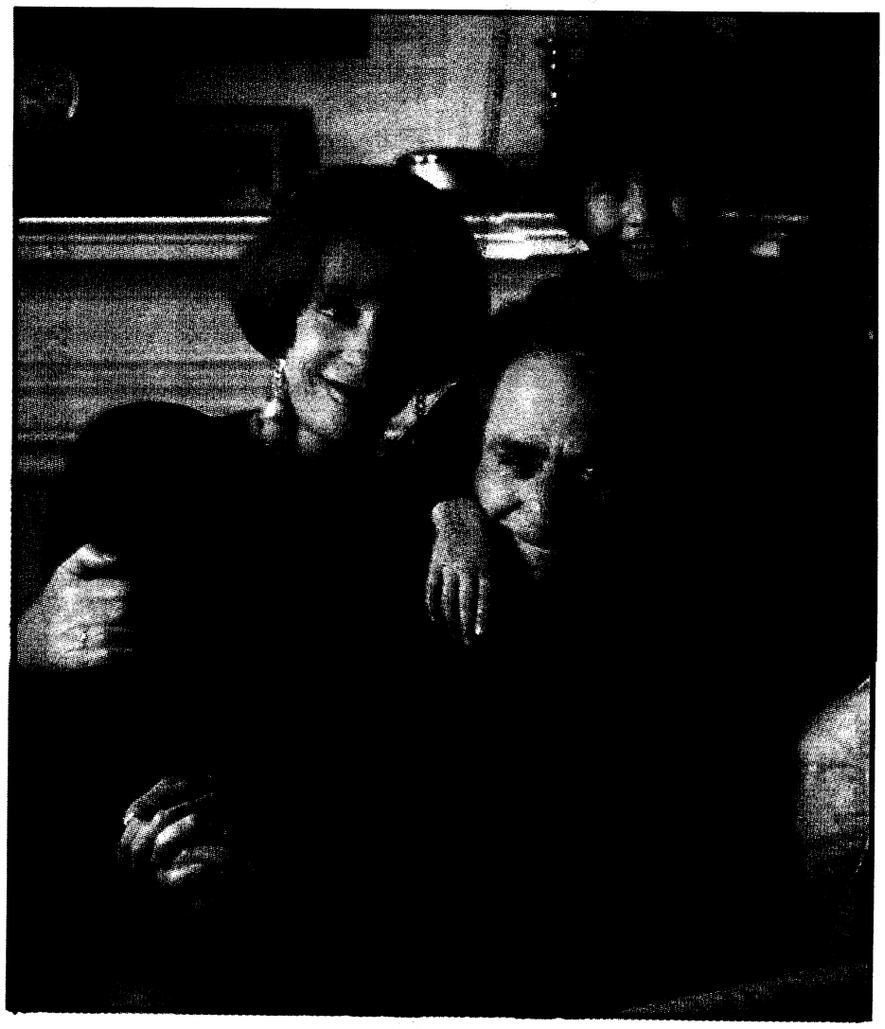
On the heels of a CBS special that recapped many of her memorable comedy-variety outings, the longtime home-screen favorite tackles a complex role in Sunday's NBC drama "Seasons of the Heart," directed by actress-filmmaker Lee Grant.



Burnett plays Vivian Levinson, an esteemed publisher newly wed to an equally sophisticated man (George Segal) for whom her love was sustained throughout her previous marriage, during which she also had an up-and-down relationship with a hard-drinking journalist (Malcolm McDowell).

As she attempts to adjust to her present connections to both men, an additional challenge is posed by her grandson (Eric Lloyd), abandoned to her care by his substance-abusing mother (Jill Teed).

All of the converging changes uproot Vivian's once-orderly life almost completely, with her unexpected new link to the youngster providing arguably the most resonant and satisfying shift. Developed by novice screenwriter Robbyn Burger and produced by Grant's husband and frequent collaborator, Joseph Feury, the tale features a music score composed by Marvin Hamlisch.

Though television drama is nothing new to the ever-friendly Burnett — whose past credits in that vein have included "Friendly Fire," "The Tenth Month" and "Life of the Party: The Story of Beatrice" — it's still relatively rare for her.

The five-time Emmy-winner admits that the made-for-television movie isn't her favorite format in which to work, "because it's like loading 'em up and shooting 'em out of a cannon in 20 days (the average filming schedule on such projects).

"There's no question that I like to work fast, because when I'm making a feature film, I get so bored waiting for the lighting and all; they call you in at 5 in the morning, then don't get around to you until noon, and you sit around with your makeup caking," she said. "On the other side of that are the 16-hour or 18-hour days that you put in on a 20-day shoot like this, and that's a very wearing situation, because you might not get around to doing a big scene until 1 a.m.

"That's tough, so sometimes, I'll listen to the plot of a TV-movie (offer) and quickly say, 'I don't think so.'

"Because this was (a venture by) Lee Grant, who I adore, I read the script," Burnett continues, "and I was amazed at how intelligent it was, though I hope that doesn't scare people off.

"It's not 'disease-of-the-week' or 'woman-in-jeopardy,' but a story of people of a certain age who have to deal with more than one crisis. Any one of the stories in this movie could be a separate film.

"There's the element of the grandchild and the daughter; then, there's the new husband, as well as the other man. What's also nice is that this shows sexuality in people who are over 35 ... over 50, in fact, which I think is encouraging. That age doesn't mean that someone isn't still sexy to someone else, and that's important to show."

What: 'Seasons of the Heart'
When: Sunday on NBC

In addition to Grant's participation, the two male stars of "Seasons of the Heart" were enormous lures to Burnett. "I was so thrilled when George was cast," she reflects.

"I've known him for years, and we've always wanted to work together, so that chemistry was wonderful for me. Malcolm also is just a delight, so when all three of us were together in a party scene that's near the beginning of the movie, we were as silly as the Three Stooges.

Lee finally had to say, 'All right, kids, stop it!,' but she'd then get just as silly as we were."

Burnett marvels that "Seasons" writer Burger "is only 26 years old. "You can be smart and observational, but there's still such a thing as experience, and that usually means having been on this planet a little bit longer," she said. "Shirley MacLaine might have something, because I think Robbyn Burger's been here before."

Having scored great ratings success with last year's retrospective of "The Carol Burnett Show," the title star was happy to revisit her past with last week's special, but she keeps it in perspective.

"It's great to look back on it, to learn from it and to rejoice in it, but you don't dwell on it," she reasons.

"You keep on trucking. When I taped the special, somebody in the audience asked me, 'Is there anything else you want to do?' I said, 'Well, just more of what I'm doing.

"When I grow up, I want to be a cross between Ruth Gordon, Jessica Tandy and George Burns.' I think (staying active) keeps you healthy and young, and the synapses don't get slack. It's important to do that, for your body and for your soul."

Columbus Symphony to perform masterpiece concert Saturday

Columbus Symphony Orchestra

The Columbus Symphony Orchestra will perform the final concert of the Masterpiece season under the direction of Maestro George Del Gobbo Saturday at 8 p.m. at the Three Arts Theatre.

This concert will feature the music of fairy tales including Two Preludes from Wagner's "Lohengrin," the Suite from "Cinderella" by Prokofev and Rimsky-Korsakov's "Scheherazade."

A preconcert discussion will be given by Del Gobbo at 7 p.m. at the Three Arts Theatre.

The concert will begin with the Wagner's Preludes to Act I and III of "Lohengrin."

The first Prelude is based on the theme of the Holy Grail, of which the opera's hero is a custodian knight. The piece opens with four solo violins and swells to a majestic climax depicting the return of the Holy Grail to the mountain of the pious knights.

The Prelude to Act III portrays the preparation for the wedding of Lohengrin and Elsa. This work is festive and joyous — ending on a triumphant note.

The Preludes are followed by the Suite from "Cinderella" by Prokofiev. The music describes the action through the hour of midnight.

The evening will conclude with Rimsky-Korsakov's "Scheherazade." This work is based on the story of Sultan Schahriar, who had sworn to execute his wives and Scheherazade who saved her life by charming her husband for 1,001 nights with tales that interested him. The titles of the movements serve as merely thematic cues to each tale, leaving much to the imagination of the listener.

Tickets range from $11.50 to $17.50 for adults and $5 to $9 for students, and are available at the CSO office located in the lower level of the Barnett Bank on First Avenue or at the Three Arts Theatre the day of the performance. Special discounts are available for advanced purchases for groups of 10 or more. Tickets can also be purchased by telephone by calling 323-5059.

Stone Mountain to feature 'Taste of South' May 28-30

Carolina Crowe Crumbley & Associates

Let the senses soar Memorial Day weekend with the flavor of Southern food, music, crafts and adventure.

The second annual Taste of the South, a regional "Taste" mega-event, showcases the finest foods and traditions from this diverse Southeast region.

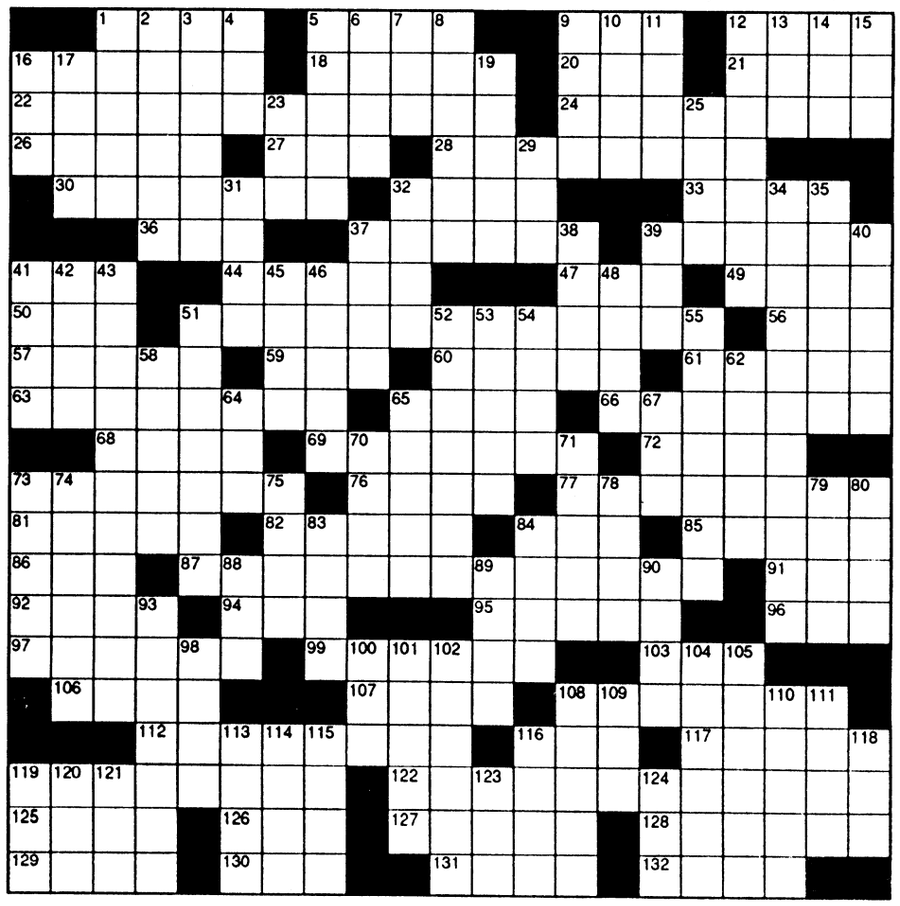
The festival takes place at Georgia's Stone Mountain Park's Fireside Meadow May 28 through 30 from 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. daily.

A representative from the Space and Rocket Center in Huntsville, Ala., will display an actual space suit and an anti-gravity machine, celebrating the 25th anniversary of man walking on the moon. Visitors can simulate space travel in space cars provided by the center.

North Carolina golf games, shag contests and strolling state-themed entertainers round out the activities at Taste of the South.

A variety of music, including Carolina beach music, Tennessee bluegrass, Memphis blues, country, Southern rock, reggae, Louisiana jazz and zydeco (blues influenced cajun dance music) is sure to keep festival-goers moving. Music headliners include the Atlanta Rhythm Section, the historic Preservation Hall Jazz Band and Impressions.

Craft makers and artisans demonstrate their skills. Guests may purchase crafts directly from the artisans. Craft demonstrations include Louisiana mud painting, chain saw carving and lace crafting. Arts and crafts available for purchase include Appalachian crafts and quilts, Florida coconut creations, Vidalia onion dolls and handcarved bowls.



The festival is free to the public with a $5 daily or $20 annual Stone Mountain Park parking permit. Food ticket prices range from 50 cents to $5 per item. Tickets are available in single 50-cent denominations and in books of 10 for $5 for use at all state food booths.

Beach party set at Jekyll Island

The Jekyll Island Authority

Popular country music performer Aaron Tippin will headline one of the biggest beach parties in the Southeast at Jekyll Island, Ga., June 4 at the fourth annual Country by the Sea Music Festival.

Toby Keith and Faith Hill will also perform for an expected 20,000 fans on Jekyll's beach at 11 a.m.

Blending old and new, Tippin's music reflects the crossover appeal of today's country music. This singer's debut single "You've Got to Stand for Something" became the national anthem for the Gulf War.

After working for a rodeo company, Oklahoma's Keith began his country music career with his single debut, "Should've Been a Cowboy."

A former semiprofessional football player, Keith and his Easy Money Band now play on the Mercury Label. Their fame continued with the popular releases "A Little Less Talk" and "He Ain't Worth Missin."

Mississippi's Hill began singing in church at the age of 3 and was discovered several years later while singing harmony at Nashville's Bluebird Cafe. Her debut album, "Take Me as I Am" features the popular single "Wild One."

Country by the Sea Music Festival tickets are $7 per person in advance and $10 the day of the show. Accommodations are available at Jekyll Island hotels, rental cottages, campground and marinas.

For more information, call the Jekyll Island Convention and Visitors Bureau at (800) 841-6586 or (912) 635-3636.

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Fort Benning officially became the best installation in the Army when Commanding General Maj. Gen. Jerry A. White received the top Army Community of Excellence Award in a Pentagon ceremony last week.

"It's a very special honor for me to represent the great soldiers of Fort Benning, Ga., — the 'Home of the Infantry' — and to receive this award along with the Army Secretary (Togo) West on behalf of those great soldiers," White told a crowd of several hundred people at the Commander-in-Chief's Award for Installation Excellence Ceremony at 9 a.m., May 20 in the Pentagon Center Court.

Along with Fort Benning, Marine Corps Air Station, Cherry Point, N.C.; Naval Air Station, Whidbey Island, Oak Harbor, Wash.; Elmendorf Air Force Base, Alaska; and the Defense General Supply Center, Richmond, Va.; were honored at the ceremony hosted by Deputy Secretary of Defense John Deutch.

"The award recognizes the deep teamwork that must be present at each one of these installations between military and civilian individuals, not only of the Department of Defense, but of the communities in which these installations find themselves," Deutch said.

"You who are the winners today are the model to which all our installations aspire," Deputy Undersecretary of Defense for Environmental Security Sherry Goodman said. "You have shown that it is possible to maintain good facilities, take care of our families and our people, and protect the environment, all in service of providing the most ready force. You have my deepest respect."

Appreciation week comes to close

By Marc G. Turchin
Bayonet staff writer

Military Appreciation Week 1994 has come and gone — a week filled with activity all across Fort Benning.

From an essay contest in the local elementary schools, to the competition of the combat cross country relay, it was a week with a multitude of activities.

A soccer tournament won by School of the Americas and a concert by the Infantry Band and Infantry Chorus at Riverside kicked things off May 15.

In the early morning of May 16, the annual kick-off relay, an eight-mile, six-member team relay race from Infantry Hall to Harmony Church took place.

While the runners were making their way to Harmony Church, the kick-off breakfast was getting under way just around the corner from where the relay race would end, the Harmony Church Field House.

Retired Gen. Jack Merritt, president of Association of the United States Army, spoke to nearly 1,000 soldiers and civilians from both on and off post at the field house.

Later in the day, both the billiards and the beach volleyball preliminaries took place at Kelley Hill Recreational Center. The last event of the day was the boxing competition at Kelley Hill Fitness Center.

The tennis, softball, chess, wrestling and bowling competitions were May 17 at various sites. The bowling competition started May 15 and continued throughout the week.

May 18 was highlighted by military night at the Red Stixx baseball game.

Golden Park Stadium was packed with Fort Benning soldiers and family members who turned out to witness the ballgame and enjoy military appreciation night.

The 75th Ranger Regiment offered the crowd a demonstration of tactics and Fort Benning's Command Exhibition Parachute Team, the Silver Wings, dropped in on the infield, bringing with them the game ball to be used that night.

Col. Gregory Camp, deputy assistant commandant of the Infantry School, threw out the first pitch of the game.

Culbertson

Before the baseball game, other events including the cycling time trials, table tennis and the first of two days of track and field events took place at Fort Benning.

At 9 a.m. May 19, the AUSA job fair at the Main NCO Club gave businesses, soldiers and family members a chance to get together and talk about employment opportunities. More than 50 businesses gathered to take part in the activities.

The card game "spades" had its own competition at the Kelley Hill Recreational Center. That afternoon a swim meet was held at Briant Wells Field House for children. The participating children swam for their parents' units.

The AUSA Golf Tournament kicked off at 1:00 p.m. May 20.

The combat cross-country race, involving seven-person teams navigating a five- to eight-kilometer course wearing battle dress uniforms, load bearing equipment, boots and soft caps and carrying M-16s, took place at Essebagger Field later that day.

The softball tournament finals were at Gowdy Field. Across the street at Doughboy Stadium, competitors strained and struggled for the "Fit to Win" push-ups and tug-of-war events.

The final day of Military Appreciation Week brought runners anxious to burn the general in the "burn the general" three-mile run beginning and ending at Infantry Hall.

Soon after the run was the awards ceremony at Watson Field.

Awards for all events from the past week were handed out at the ceremony. Before the ceremony started, the audience was entertained by the Miss Georgia Superstars.

The Silver Wings dropped in on the awards ceremony as the Superstars concluded their last number.

The announcement of this year's Ms. AUSA large and small sub-chapters was also made at the awards ceremony.

Lt. Col. Andrew J. Stanley Jr. assumed command of the unit from Lt. Col. Kevin M. Rice during a 9 a.m. ceremony Thursday at Wetherby Field.

Rice's new assignment will be as deputy commander of the Infantry Training Brigade.

Stanley comes to Fort Benning from Fort Campbell, Ky., where he served as executive officer of the 3rd Brigade, 101st Airborne Division (Air Assault) at Fort Campbell, Ky.

Stanley was born in Savannah, Tenn., and was commissioned a second lieutenant of Infantry upon graduation from the U.S. Military Academy in 1975. He has since served in a number of command and staff positions both stateside and overseas.

MacArthur Leadership Award

Local officers honored

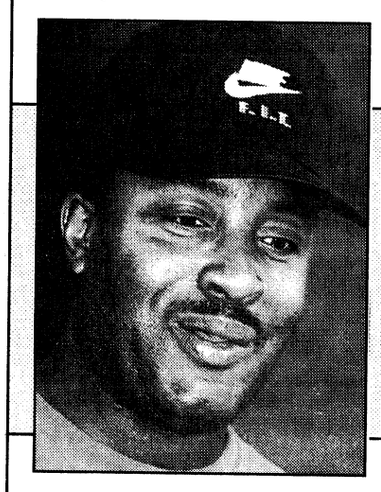
USAIC Public Affairs Office

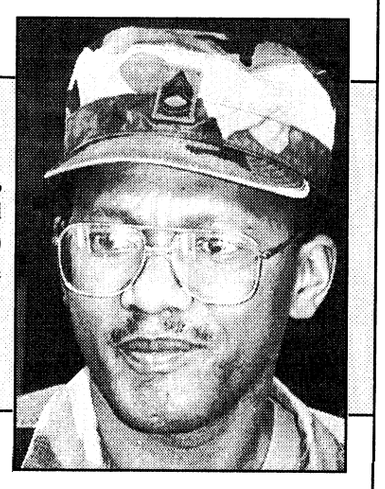
Two officers from Fort Benning were among 28 of the Army's most outstanding leaders honored at a Pentagon ceremony Thursday.

Capt. Bernadine I. Thomson, commander of Company A, 43rd Engineer Battalion, and 1st Lt. Larry D. Perino, a platoon leader with Company B, 3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment, received the MacArthur Leadership Award at the ceremony.



Gen. Gordon R. Sullivan, Army Chief of Staff; and retired Gen. Alexander M. Haig Jr., member of the MacArthur Foundation Board of Directors; recognized Thomson, Perino and 26 other company-grade officers from each of the major Army commands and the Department of the Army staff.

The award recognizes officers who demonstrate the ideals for which MacArthur stood and who epitomize the MacArthur credo: "Duty, Honor, Country."



Each award recipient will receive a bronze bust of Gen. MacArthur as a memento of the Army's recognition of his or her leadership performance.

Georgia drivers 'high speed'

By Clyde Snively
Bayonet columnist

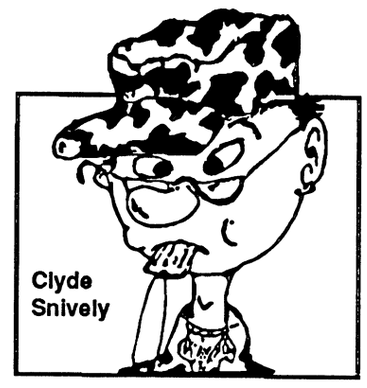
Beware speeders. Word is out that local and state police are out to get you.

It's nothing personal, but the federal government somehow determined the average speed on Georgia Highways is 82 mph.

They say that's too fast and if Georgia doesn't do something about it, they will lose millions of dollars in highway funds.

Georgians don't want to lose the money, so they'll be after speeders.

What I want to know is where the federal government measured this average speed? The Atlanta Speedway?



I'll admit, I exceed the speed limit. But I don't go anywhere close to 82 mph and I rarely get passed — unless I'm driving on I-285 in Atlanta. But rarely do I see anyone who looks to be doing much over 75 mph.

By the same token, I do a lot of passing. So seems to me, if the average speed on highways is 82, then there's got to be a lot of folks out there hitting in triple digits. But where are they?

If I were the feds and was concerned about safety on the highways, I'd be more interested in the zoomies and the chuggers.

The zoomies are the guys and gals who can't stand to stay in the passing lane when it's not going fast enough to suit them.

So, spying an opening on the right, they pull over, dash up to the tail end of an even slower vehicle in that lane, realize their mistake and swerve back into the passing lane, cutting some poor driver off.

commentary

This puts them about two cars ahead of where they just were.

The others are the chuggers. These law-abiding citizens want to ensure that everyone else abides by the speed limit, so they chug along in the passing lane at 55 mph.

And this is what drives the zoomies batty and gets them to bouncing from one lane to the next.

I'd personally like to be able to vaporize these drivers. You'd think that if we can digitize the Army, we should be able to come up with a system that keeps slow pokes on the right and lets the speeders do their thing on the left, even if it is 82 mph.

But whatever, keep your speed down, or at least smile pretty, you just might be on someone's candid radar.

Barracks residents lack compassion for others

By Marc G. Turchin
Bayonet staff writer

Everyone in the Army has lived in barracks housing at one time or another. We all know the complaints — loud music, cold showers or even roaches.

For right now, I would like to address a couple of problems that seem to never go away at the company where I live at.

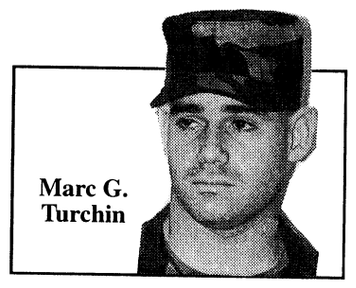
The ongoing war of music between rooms and quads makes it quite difficult to listen to your own music without using a pair of headphones.

Sometimes it is not even the rooms that are fighting the music wars.

The new thing is the second floor room vs. the Ford Ranger low-rider that is parked clear across the parking lot, stocked with concert-sized amplifiers that can pierce through the thickest of walls.

When this type of warfare is waged, everyone living in the barracks is a casualty.

Yes, loud music stimulates us all at one time or another. But, the problem here is the music being shoved down our throats (or in our ears) may not be liked by everyone.



Some of us don't like Cypress Hill. Some don't like Pearl Jam. Everyone has his or her own tastes.

If the music is not the problem, then it's when the music is being played. Sorry, I don't like to be awakened to the sounds of Dr. Dre bouncing off my walls like a grenade explosion.

On the other hand, 1:30 a.m. is not the time to host Soundgarden, in concert, in your barracks room

Soldiers can enjoy music, but they should show some feelings toward their neighbors. Think about them before blaring your music for all the world to hear.

Loud music can be associated with parties, and the outdoor parties have come under scrutiny

commentary

from a number of barracks residents.

This time of the year is known for outdoor cookouts and socializing. No problem.

But, there is a fine line between an outdoor get-together and a blow-out party.

When a handful of people decide to cookout and invite some people over, that is a get-together.

But, when 60 people converge on a 10 by 15 foot area, consuming alcohol at a rate second only to a space shuttle's velocity, and blocking the only entrance to soldiers' rooms, that is a blow out.

If you want to throw a mob-sized cookout, find an area suitable for that many people. You shouldn't need a traffic light in front of the quad doorway just to get to your room.

Living at the barracks can be a lot easier if people would just use some common courtesy. People who only think of themselves are usually the ones causing problems.

Before turning the volume up on your stereo so that those stationed in Korea can hear it, and before you invite your unit over for a Sunday cookout, think about the other people who live with and around you.

The barracks are a place where more than one person lives. Think about the consequences before acting for yourself; it could make life more enjoyable for everyone.

Equal Opportunity Program seems to be working just fine

I offer a comment on the post's Equal Opportunity program.

The command's EO adviser (Sgt. 1st Class Richard Franks) expressed his "disappointment" at the low turnout for cross-cultural awareness programs and stated the "need to change something" (April 22, page A-3).

These are very worthy sentiments. And while I would also like to see more turnout at these events, I do not think that one should imply that something is not working well. On the contrary, I think the EO program may be doing quite well. While I do not have the exact numbers, I would ask the community to consider the veracity of these casual observations:

• Full integration. There is a complete mix of peoples in all areas of post activities, including preschools, hospital services and Morale, Welfare and Recreation activities, such as the golf course. There are no barriers to entry based on race or sex in any activity.

• High number of multicultural marriages. There is a significant number of multicultural marriages from across the world represented on post. The families are accepted well in all community areas.

• Low incidence of bias reports. Given the population size, there are a small number of EO complaints and incidents of physical conflict that are racially or gender based. This area includes a low number of age discrimination incidents.

None of the above should be taken to imply that Fort Benning is a utopia of multicultural harmony or that unprofessional conduct by a few ignorant people does not occur. But these observations are in stark contrast to what existed on this post only 50 years ago.

This may mean that Fort Benning has developed into a socially mature community whose members look at others first as just plain people before reflecting on their ethnic or sexual status.

Fort Benning may not be socially perfect but it is a pretty darn good model of what this nation can achieve with proper leadership and community support, all of which is to say that we have only one more reason why Fort Benning is best in the Army.

So to the equal opportunity adviser, I say, keep encouraging support of the EO program but "Cheer up!" — the EO program may be working just fine.

Money for transplant fund sorely needed

I am writing you on behalf of the Sandy Anderson Transplant Fund.

Our church is involved in raising the $200,000 needed to finance the procedure.

I am hoping our neighbors at Fort Benning would be willing to help by staging some kind of fund-raising project for Sandy. A few suggestions are a car wash, 5k run, golf tournament, tennis tournament, collection of donations in helmets at intersections. Of course, you may come up with some ideas of your own.

Please contact us at 561-0538 for any additional information or let us know how we may work together as a community by involving Fort Benning in this lifesaving cause.

Senator sends congratulations

Dear General White, congratulations to you and to everyone at Fort Benning for having earned the Commander-in-Chief's Award as the best U.S. Army installation in the world!

This award acknowledges what Georgians have always thought and I know that the people of Georgia are very proud. I commend you for your leadership and for the spirit that you have done so much to build in the Fort Benning community. That spirit also reflects the strong support of Columbus and the surrounding counties.

During a period of dramatic change in the military, with major disruptions and adjustments, it is a special tribute to everyone on the post to be the best Army instaliation in the world on the basis of quality of life, services to soldiers, their family members and civilian employees and interaction with the community.

Please convey my congratulations and best wishes to the men and women who have made Fort Benning the best place to become "the best you can be."

Special Operations soldiers receive posthumous Medals of Honor

USASOC Public Affairs Office

The Medal of Honor was presented by President Bill Clinton to the wives of two U.S. Army Special Operations Command soldiers Monday.

The Nation's highest honor went to Master Sgt. Gary I. Gordon, 33, and Sgt. 1st Class Randall D. Shugart, 35, for their actions during a rescue of a downed helicopter crew in Mogadishu, Somalia. Carmen R. Gordon and Stephanie A. Shugart accepted their husbands' posthumous awards.

These are the first Medals of Honor to be awarded since the Vietnam conflict. During the Oct. 3 firefight in Mogadishu, Gordon and Shugart volunteered to put down near a crippled Blackhawk to ward off oncoming enemy and provide medical care. Both soldiers died, while pilot, Chief Warrant Officer 4 Michael Durant, survived and was ultimately taken prisoner by a swarm of Somali fighters.

"They (Gordon and Shugart) performed one of the bravest acts I have ever witnessed," Durant said after his eventual release. "Without a doubt, I owe my life to these two brave men."

During the beginning of their seventh mission in Somalia, Gordon and Shugart provided cover fire to the Task Force Ranger soldiers below from a Blackhawk helicopter. They kept more than 300 Somali fighters at bay while the main attack force captured 26 of warlord Gen. Mohammed Farrah Aideed's lieutenants, USASOC officials said.

The two expert riflemen provided pin-point firepower for a combat search and rescue team who fast-roped in to secure a downed helicopter as part of the contingency plan. Somali fighters damaged three other helicopters with rocket-propelled grenades, or RPGs. Another helicopter crashed, while the other two limped back to friendly lines.

Somali ambushes prevented another rescue team from getting to the second crash site. Upon approval from the ground commander, Gordon and Shugart volunteered to go in themselves at crash site two.

"The two sergeants unhesitatingly volunteered to go to the aid of four critically wounded comrades at the second crash site despite being well aware of the growing number of enemy closing in on the site," officials said in a White House release.

Gordon and Shugart pulled the seriously wounded helicopter crew from the downed Blackhawk, and then provided defensive fire against the rush of enemy forces. They fired until their ammunition ran low.

One of the rescuers checked the helicopter for more weapons and ammunition, while the other kept up the barrage of defensive fire. Soon one was struck by an enemy round and fell, mortally wounded.

The remaining rescuer gave a rifle to Durant, who had injured his back and broke his leg during the crash. The rescuer continued to fight and safeguard the site with a pistol. The sergeant soon received a fatal wound, officials said.

Durant soon ran out of ammunition and Somalis captured the wounded warrant officer. The rest of Durant's crew, Chief Warrant Officer 4 Raymond Frank, Staff Sgt. Bill Cleveland and Sgt. Thomas Field, died.

Both Gordon and Shugart served more than 14 years in the Army and were graduates of the Ranger School and Special Forces Qualification Course. Gordon, a native of Lincoln, Maine, and Shugart, a Lincoln, Neb., native who grew up in Newville, Pa., both earned the Combat Infantryman Badge and Master Parachutist Badge, among an array of other campaign decorations and awards.

Gordon is also survived by son, Ian, 6, and daughter, Brittany, 3.

ACOE: Trophies come to Fort Benning

Columbus and Phenix City attended the ceremony, including Columbus Mayor Frank Martin and Phenix City Mayor Sonny Coulter. U.S. Sen. Sam Nunn and U.S. Reps. Mac Collins and Sanford Bishop also attended.

The previous day, White accepted the ACOE Award for Best Large Installation at another Pentagon ceremony hosted by Army Chief of Staff Gen. Gordon R. Sullivan and Sgt. Maj. of the Army Richard Kidd.

"One word that I might use to describe how all of us feel about this ACOE competition and award ceremony is —Hooah!" White said.

"Taking care of soldiers and taking care of soldiers' families is a true readiness issue, and that's what this ACOE program is really all about," White said. "It's about quality; it's about excellence.

"As we continue to downsize our great Army, many, many things are important — of course training, readiness, modernization and having an adequate budget leads the list. But we can never lose sight of the fact that quality soldiers are absolutely essential to a quality force.

"Our installations must be committed to excellence and treat with dignity and respect our great soldiers, their families and the civilian work force," White continued. "Installation excellence and quality are directly linked to the warfighting readiness of the best Army this world has ever known."

More than 40 people from the tri-community area attended this ceremony; U.S. Sen. Paul Coverdell also attended.

"I want you to know, speaking for the Army, Secretary West and myself, the leadership of your Army is proud of each and every one of you in America's Army and what you have done to make the Army a better place to live and work," Sullivan said.

"With these awards today, we recognize the hard work by thousands of people on our installations," said Maj. Gen. John H. Little, assistant chief of staff for installation management.

WEEK: Communities celebrate

Staff Sgt. Jennifer Pierson, from Ranger Training Brigade, is the 1994 Ms. AUSA from the small sub-chapters. Pierson was the reigning Ms. AUSA from last year.

This year's Ms. AUSA from the large sub-chapters is Spc. Michelle Culbertson, from Infantry Training Brigade.

The ceremony was capped by the unveiling of Fort Benning's newest awards, the Commander-In-Chief's Award for Large Installation Excellence award and the Army Community of Excellence, Best Large Installation Award, both awarded to Maj. Gen. Jerry A. White, Fort Benning's commanding general, during a recent trip to Washington, D.C.

The AUSA picnic immediately followed the ceremony on Watson and Olive Fields.

Businesses from the tri-community area set up stands and spoke to people passing by. The picnic featured hot-air balloon rides and horse rides while children got a chance to feel the thrill of being "airborne" as they put on vests and slid down a wire.

The Miss Georgia Superstars and De-Vo-Te, a Fort Benning-based singing group, entertained people periodically on stage.

The week's events, activities and prizes were sponsored by AUSA and its corporate members.

CID needs assistance

The Fort Benning Criminal Investigation Department needs assistance in identifying the person who entered Building 96 April 24 between 6 a.m. and 6 p.m., spread paint and spackling material on the painted walls, knocked holes in several walls and broke the sheetrock out of the ceiling.

Used oil may be turned in to the Energy Management Branch of the Directorate of Public Works or the Defense Reutilization Marketing Office for use.

Numerous activities at Fort Benning routinely generate used motor oil. If used oil is not properly managed, it has the potential to become a hazardous waste.

For questions, problems or additional information concerning used oil, contact Dr. Christine Hull, environmental specialist, Environmental Management Division, DPW, at 545-4218 or 545-4766.

AFAP symposium set

Anyone may submit issues or concerns for consideration. Issue cards may be obtained from the Family Unit Network Center, Building 359, Ingersoll Street from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m.

Issues should contribute to readiness and retention, be installation specific vs. Armywide, be attainable within available resources, and have measurable objectives with an end product.

For more information, call Michelle Aldridge at 545-5246 or 545-5931.

Property book office to close until June 2

The automated installation property book will be closed for business through Thursday because of conversion of the new automated property book system, Standard Property System-Redesigned-Installation/Table of Distribution of Allowances.

Emergency and priority requests will be accepted by Pat Ellis at Building 6, Room 127 or call 545-1719 or 545-7691.

On Jan. 26, someone forcibly entered 17 privately owned vehicles on Kelley Hill.

On Jan. 27, someone forcibly entered eight privately owned vehicles on Sand Hill.

On each occasion, the perpetrator stole several car stereo systems, compact disc players, radar detectors, cellular telephones and other items of personal property.

Ed Center can help you plan life after military

By Elsie Jackson
Army Career and Alumni Program

Is there a career change in your future? If you're getting out of the Army soon, start planning now; don't wait until it's too late!

A little planning on your part will make your transition to civilian life a lot smoother.

This is especially true if you are planning to start your civilian career as a student. A visit to the Education Center may be in order as much as a year before you get out of the Army.

College catalogs are available on microfiche to help you narrow your choices of schools, and determine application deadlines. Remember, you may need to work terminal leaves or "early outs" around the school calendar.

Depending on the school you are planning to attend, you may need to apply as much as six to nine months in advance.

You should take any required entrance exams earlier than that. You may take one exam (the Scholastic Aptitude Test, for example) at no cost to you through the Education Center. If you need some help preparing for the SAT, free SAT preparation classes are available Mondays and Fridays, from 2:30 to 4:30 p.m., Columbus Technical Institute (Room 151-C).

For more information, call the Educational Opportunity Center at 571-4708.

You should also obtain certified copies of transcripts for any college courses you may have already completed.

Believe it or not, some military courses you have under your belt may count for college-level credit. Ask your education counselor about requesting a copy of your Army/American Council on Education Registry Transcript System record. AARTS transcripts can not only help you get credit for Army experiences, they can also supplement a job resume, providing employers with a description of the scope of your Army responsibilities and the skills you acquired while on active duty.

If you aren't sure "what you want to be when you grow up," you may benefit from an "interest inventory." Similar to "aptitude tests," they are available through the Education Center. Results are usually back in two to three weeks.

Also available is the user-friendly "Discover" computer program available at the Education Center. "Discover" can help you identify career possibilities and provide a brief description of each identified career.

You might also find playing "The Career Game" with David Sutcliffe, community service specialist from the Educational Opportunity Center, or doing a more in-depth interest inventory, helpful. Results for either are available almost immediately.

Once you have determined your interests, Sutcliffe can provide you with state-by-state information about schools (both academic and technical) with curriculums compatible with your interests.

Sutcliffe can be visited from 9:30 a.m. to 2:30 p.m., Wednesdays, in Building 2634.

Also available are projections for the 30 fastest growing occupations from 1990 through 2005, and financial aid guidance.

A visit with your Reserve Components Transition Office may find you pleasantly surprised. Many states have generous tuition assistance plans available to their National Guardsmen; state college tuition and fee waivers of up to 100 percent are available.

In some states, these benefits may be used in conjunction with GI Bill and Army College Fund dollars. Some states also offer tuition assistance to veterans, regardless of additional reserve service.

Take some time now and make your transition from soldier to student smoother. If you are a year or less away from getting out of the Army and are planning to go back to school, it's not too early to start planning.

For more information, contact an education center or call the Army Career and Alumni Program Office at 545-4892 or 545-4913.

ACAP helps soldiers train for local jobs

By Donna B. Cockrum
TRADOC News Service

Military personnel being separated because of downsizing may be able to train for jobs with the states of Georgia and Alabama through a unique Army Career and Alumni Program Southern Region initiative.

"Job training is available for medical fields, truck driver, electronics, police, morticians — you name it," said Ted Craig, director of Fort Benning's ACAP Office and the Southern Region.

The program is funded under the Job Training Partnership Act overseen by the U.S. Department of Labor in cooperation with the state of Georgia. Craig secured the funding to expand ACAP assistance to soldiers.

"ACAP trains people to look for work, but it does not find jobs for them," he said. "This program takes the ACAP philosophy one step further."

Training is provided by colleges and universities, trade schools and commercial training schools.

"When the state of Georgia contracts with a school, they have to agree to provide job placement, not just job search assistance," Craig said. "The goal is to have a job for a soldier no later than 90 days after his separation. If an institution cannot consistently meet that goal, we do not contract with them."

Craig's staff and the Georgia Labor Department try to arrange training so it can be completed by the time soldiers are separated.

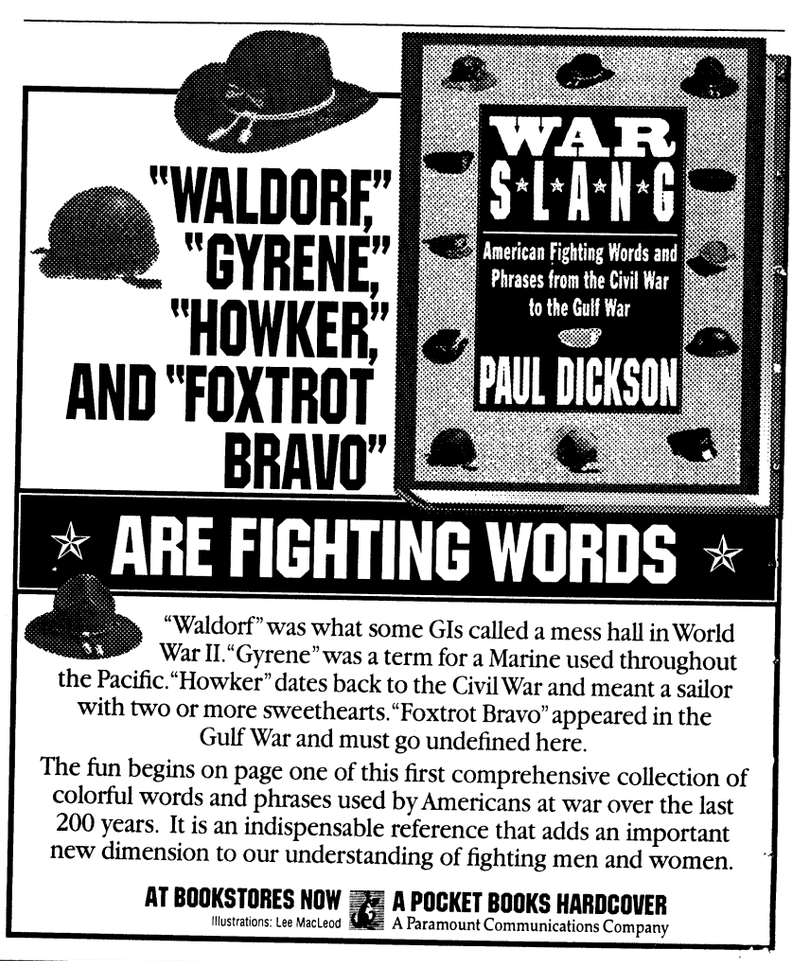
In the initial phase of the program, 155 soldiers enrolled, 151 completed the training and 130 were placed in jobs.

As long as such results are achieved, the program will continue to be funded, Craig says.

The target audience is soldiers at Fort Benning and other military installations in Georgia and Alabama. However, other military personnel around the country may apply. Those who apply must be planning to reside in Georgia or Alabama after completing the training.

Tuition, books and supplies are paid for.

Georgia Department of Labor officials select individuals for the program, but Rochelle Bautista, the ACAP Job Retraining project officer, conducts pre-eligibility screening. Personnel have to show evidence they are leaving military service because of downsizing. Craig says the best proof is the No. 4 copy of DD Form 214.



Personnel who retired because of their retention control point are also eligible for the program.

Those who separate with payments from Voluntary Separation Incentive or Special Separation Benefit may also apply.

Personnel interested in the program may call Craig or Bautista at 545-4892 or 545-4902. Materials may be faxed to 545-7642.

Craig says ACAP organizations at installations in other states should be able to make similar arrangements with the federal and state labor departments. ACAP officials who want details may also call him or Bautista.

Magazine wants photos

Soldiers Magazine

Help Soldiers magazine celebrate the Army's 219th birthday by photographing what's happening on your Army installation June 14. Amateur and professional, civilian and military photographers are asked to record that day of Army life to support "This is Our Army," a 32-page photo feature to appear in the Soldiers magazine December 1994 issue.

We need photos that tell a story and capture the faces of soldiers, families and Department of the Army civilians. We're looking for imagination and creativity - obviously posed shots will be screened out. Shoot what is unique to your installation, something you may see everyday but others may never get the opportunity to see. We're looking for the best photos from the field, for a worldwide representation of what makes the Army what it is.

Here are some basic rules to keep in mind: Photos must be shot in the 24-hour period of June 14. Submit processed color slides or 5 x 7 or 8 x 10 black and white prints. Photos should be printed for magazine quality. Newspaper photojournalists often print photos lighter and with less contrast.

Submissions will not be used without complete photo credits and cutlines. Include the full name, rank and service as applicable, of the photographer; names of identifiable people in the photo; details on what's happening in the photo; and the location of the photo. Cutlines must be attached individually to the photo or slide and the photos must be processed and received by Soldiers by Aug. 31. Photos and accompanying information will not be returned.

The address is: Soldiers, 9325 Gunston Road, Suite S108, Fort Belvoir, Va. 22060-5581. For more information, call Staff Sgt. Larry Lane or Staff Sgt. Doug Ide at DSN 656-4504 or (703) 806-4504.

The 1994 Military Appreciation Week drew to a close Saturday at York Field with the Burn The General Run.

The run was won by Patrick West with a time of 15 minutes and 56 seconds on the men's side. Sarah Fulcher claimed the female spot at 17 minutes and 9 seconds. Maj. Gen. Jerry A. White finished the three-mile course in 25:30.

The awards ceremony for the commander's trophy and the "Follow Me" cup took place after the race.

The commander's trophy was awarded to the unit with the most points from the military-oriented events.

The events — boxing, wrestling, combat cross country, the kickoff relay and four "fit to win" events push-ups, tug-of-war, 100-meter dash and the one-mile run gave each unit a chance to win points ranging from 12 points to zero.

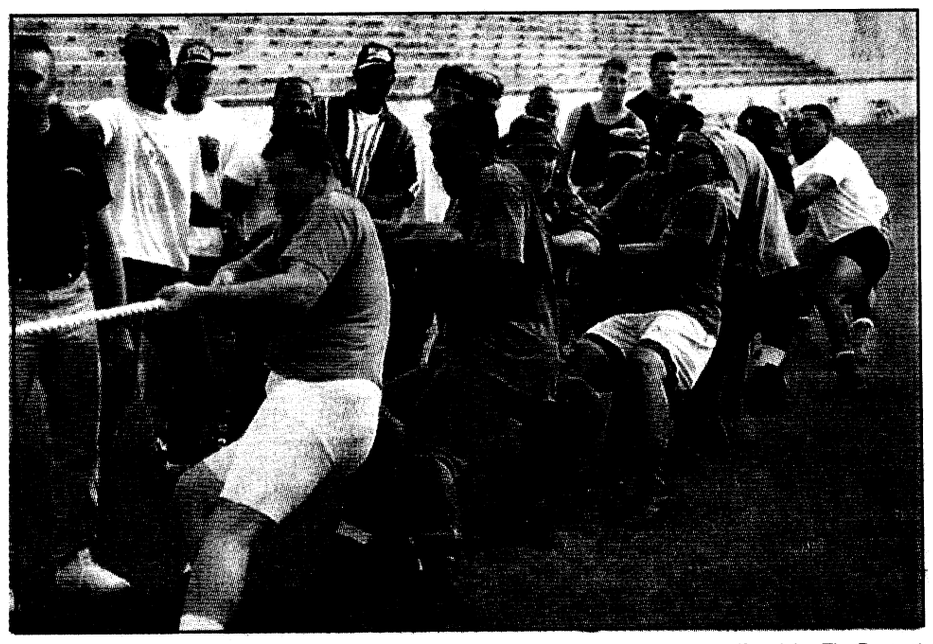
The Infantry Training Brigade won the trophy with a grand total of 79 points, easily outpointing the 36th Engineer Battalion's 61 points. The 11th Infantry Regiment finished in third place with 55.5 points.

The "Follow Me" cup went to the unit who garnered the most points in the team sports of sand volleyball, soccer and softball along with individual events such as tennis, cycling, swimming and track and field.

The 11th Infantry Regiment, rang up 64 points to win this year's cup beating out the School of the Americas who finished second with 50 points. The 3rd Brigade, 24th Infantry Division, took the third spot with a total of 47.5 points.

There were also games and tournaments that were strictly for fun and prizes, such as pool, cards, chess, table tennis, bowling, golf and fishing. There was also the women's softball tournament that saw the Fort Benning Ladyhawks drop an exciting game to the Cougars of Columbus College 9-7.

In the celebrity softball game, the Sergeants Major team avenged last year's humiliating defeat with a 26-9 thrashing of the tri-community media team. The only loss the Sergeants Major team suffered was the loss of Master Sgt. John Craddock of the U.S. Army Infantry Center Military Police Company, who was forced to leave the game after breaking his wrist sliding into third base after hitting a two-run triple late in the game.



At the golf tournament at Follow Me Golf Course, not one but two holes in one were hit, one gave Patrick McKenzie a new Mazda pickup from Charles Levy Mazda. Robert Anderson came away with a brand new set of clubs for his hole in one on the seventh hole. The team of McKenzie, Ken Skinner, Rich McDowell and Danny Wilson took first place with a low score of 61.

The team of Phillip Henderson and James Wallace won the spades tournament, while Winter Miller won the billiards tournament. In the chess tournament Gus Sanchez was crowned champion and Lynwood Johnson pounded the tabletops for first place in table tennis. All the small games were held at the Kelley Hill Recreation Center.

The nine pin no tap bowling tournament held at both the Main Mall Bowling Center and the Main Post Bowling Center watched Fred Primm and Kenneth Owens take the top prize of $500 with a score 1,430 for three games. Owens teamed up with Thomas Neal to win $250 for second place.

The fishing tournament at Uchee Creek drew 85 boats to the shores of the Chattahoochee River, with Durwin Register and Michael Jones reeling in the $500 top prize. Register also won $515 for the largest fish at 6.5 pounds. Gregory King took second for $290 and third place went to Troy Elliott and Bradley McMeeken with a $174 purse.

YA Blue Jays take wing over Giants

Youth Activities athletes got into the act for Armed Forces Day at Norton Field, as the Blue Jays slew the Giants 12 to 11 in what turned out to be a close and hard-fought game.

The Blue Jays started scoring in the bottom of the first. With one out, Rick Rhodes walked and stole second and third. Mike Richert walked and stole second. Craig Nurnberg then stroked a single to right, scoring Rhodes and Richert.

Nurnberg stole second and scored when Jeremy Walley doubled to right. Sherman Henderson struck out to end the inning, Blue Jays 4, Giants 0.

The Giants got one run back in the second when Derek Craig reached first base on a dropped third strike, stole second and scored on a Blue Jay error.

The Blue Jays scored three more runs in the second. David Peppers walked and was forced out at second on a ground ball by Tommy Henderson. Henderson then stole second and third. Rick Rhodes walked for the second time and then stole second base.

In the third, the Blue Jays scored when David Veneziani got a base hit to lead off the inning, followed by consecutive walks to Sherman Henderson, David Peppers, Tommy Henderson and Rick Rhodes. Mike Richert struck out and Craig Nurnberg walked in the final run of the inning, bringing the score to Blue Jays 10, Giants 1.

The Giants got two runs back in the fourth when Luis Pizarro was struck by a pitch, stole second and scored on a single by Thomas Craig. Craig stole second and third, and scored on a passed ball.

The Giants erupted for five runs in the fifth. Chad Amey walked and scored on Scott Bertacini's double to right. Joel Driskill popped out to third. Ricardo Vazquez walked. Luis Pizarro laced a three-run inside the park home run to right field.

Thomas Craig followed with a double, stole third and scored on Derek Craig's single. The Blue Jays scratched for one run as Rick Rhodes walked for the fourth time in the game, stole second and third and scored when Craig Nurnberg grounded out.

The Giants evened the score in the sixth, bringing the Blue Jays up for the last time with the game tied at 11. On a two-and-two pitch Tommy Henderson stroked a base hit to right, scoring Sherman Henderson with the game-winning run. Final score was Blue Jays 12, Giants 11.

"I want to congratulate several members of the Blue Jays who were inducted into the National Junior Honor Society Monday," said Master Sgt. Richard Rhodes, coach of the Blue Jays. "Angela Lawson, Craig Nurnberg, Richard Rhodes, Michael Richert and Steve Wojdakowski are the team's newest members. Kara Morris and Sarah Rhodes were inducted in 1993. Military Police Activity

The following entries are from the Fort Benning Military Police blotters from May 3 to 9. Such entries may be incomplete and do not determine the guilt or innocence of anyone.

This week's hot topic concerns drunk driving. During the summer months, driving accidents increase. Annually, 57,000 people die in traffic accidents on our nation's highways. Over half of these accidents involve alcohol.

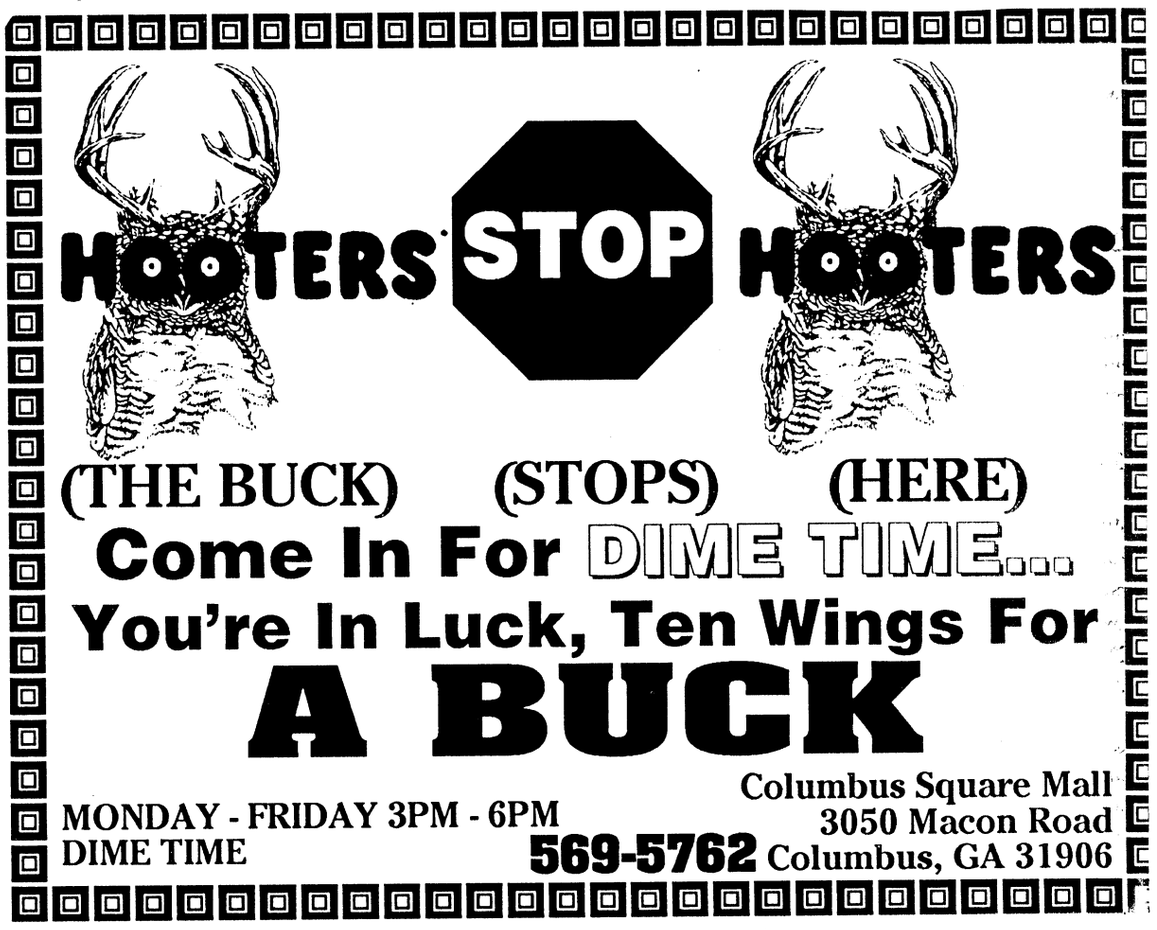
Alcohol related accidents often result in the death of innocent motorists, passengers and pedestrians. Penalties for drunk driving include fines, license suspension and imprisonment. Don't risk losing your family or friends; use a designated driver or take a taxi. Play it safe for all our lives — don't drink and drive.

• A specialist was charged by Columbus Police with disorderly conduct after using loud and profane language in a public area.

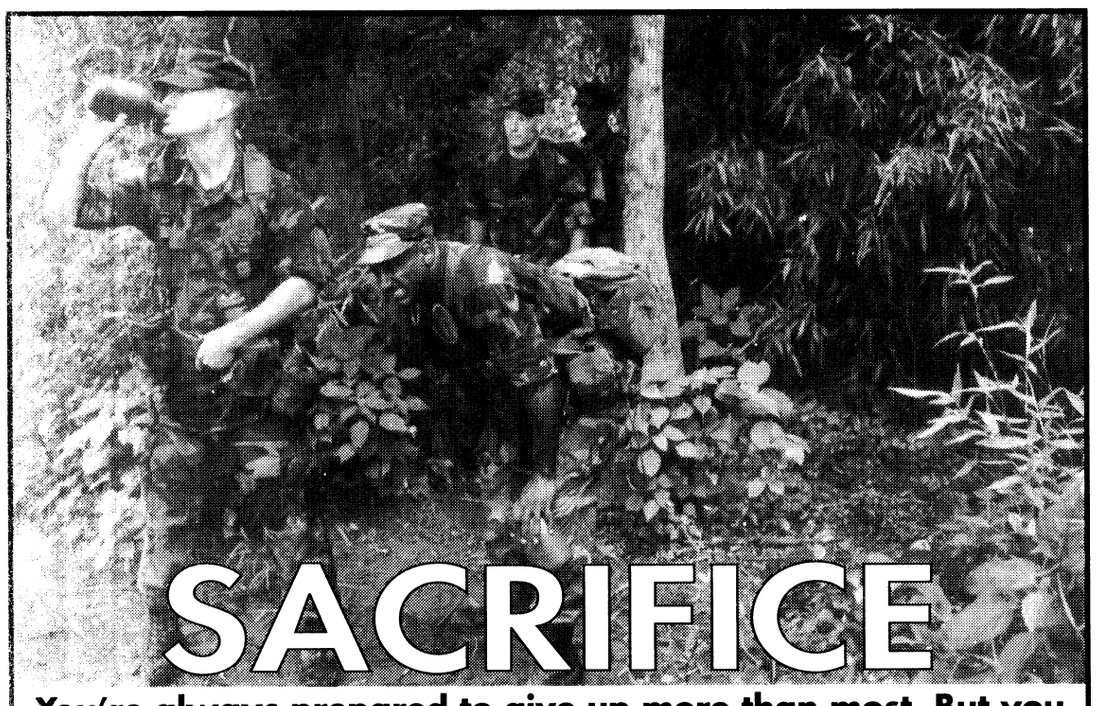
• A specialist was charged with leaving a child unattended after his 6-year-old son dialed 911 and hung up. The child was home alone with the chicken pox.

• A sergeant was charged by Columbus Police with battery, physical injury and obstruction of a police officer after he hit his wife in the face, then resisted arrest.

This week's booby prize goes to the private first class who made a Do-It-Yourself move from Fort Benning. He claimed to be a specialist, which increased his weight limit from 5,000 to 8,000 pounds, and received a cash advance of more than $2,600 to move 7,983 pounds of household goods to California. He then contracted a moving company to move the goods because he heard "you can make money" during a DITY move by hiring a moving company to do the move. Instead of moving his goods to California, he had them moved to Louisiana and spent the full cash advance. He was charged with false official statement and larceny of government property.



Other activities included 16 traffic accidents and seven cases of driving under the influence of alcohol. There were six shoplifting cases reported at exchange facilities and 13 cases of larceny of private property.



Remember to help "Make Our Post the Best — Give Crime Arrest." Report any activity that seems wrong or out of place to the Military Police Station at 545-5222 or 545-5223 or the "Crime in Progress" line at 545-2222.

for the record

In the May 13 issue on the All The Way page, The Bayonet inadvertently left out Sgt. Haime L. Edwards as a graduate of the Basic Noncommissioned Officer Course, Class 3-94. Edwards was the class' Commandant's Inspection Award winner.

Sgt. Cole W. Shepard was the Leadership Award winner.

2/58th OSUT soldiers conduct live-fire training

2nd Battalion, 58th Infantry

The Infantry Training Brigade constantly enhances training for initial entry training soldiers.

The latest training challenge for one station unit training soldiers in the 2nd Battalion, 58th Infantry Regiment, is to participate as members of a squad in a defensive live fire at night.

"By conducting the defensive live fire at night, we clearly demonstrate to the soldier the 'Lazy W' configuration and the concept of mutually supporting fires," said Capt. Clarence Butler, commander of Company A, 2nd Battalion, 58th Infantry Regiment.

The purpose of squad tactical training is to allow soldiers to perform as members of a squad during the execution of the infantry squad dismounted collective task and battle drills.

For five straight days, the OSUT soldiers bivouac at the Malone complex where the training is conducted.

The first period is conducted over three days. Soldiers from Company A, 2nd Battalion, 58th Infantry Regiment, begin their training with a 6.2-mile movement on foot to the training area.

The soldiers are then introduced to squad battle drills at the initial training stage by the instructors of Company D, 2nd Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment.

Training consists of instruction on occupation of an assembly area, preparing for combat, moving tactically and as a member of a fire team, reacting to and breaking contact.

On the second day of training, the soldiers are issued blank ammunition and assessed on how well they execute the previously taught battle drills against an opposing force.

The soldiers also receive additional instruction on how to overwatch or support by fire, assault, consolidate and reorganize on an objective, how to react to an ambush and to indirect fire.

"The soldiers continue the execution of the battle drills using multiple integrated laser engagement system gear during day three of training to enhance the importance of mastering individual movement techniques, taking well aimed shots and using good fire distribution," said Sgt. 1st Class David Hall, a drill sergeant in Company A.

During this day of training the soldier is given the opportunity to cross a water obstacle as a member of a squad and perform the Slide for Life.

"As an infantry soldier, I will be required to shoot, move, and communicate to win the next war. The squad tactical training I've received has prepared me to do just that," said Pvt. 1 Joshua Morisoli, a soldier in Company A, 2nd Battalion, 58th Infantry.

Day four of training prepares soldiers to participate in a squad hasty attack live fire exercise.

On the fifth and final day of squad tactical training, the soldiers spend the first six hours preparing a two-man defensive fighting position.

They spend an additional four hours participating in a defensive live fire exercise during the hours of limited visibility.

Soldiers are required to occupy a mutually supportive prepared fighting position. From this position they must engage targets in their sectors of fire to provide support for an adjacent fighting position.

"I really got the hands-on experience of digging a complete two-man fighting position," said Pvt. 1 Robert Madison, a soldier in Company A.

50 years ago this week ...

• On New Guinea, intense combat raged throughout the area as strong Japanese counterattacks met a new Allied offensive that began with the U.S. assault on Biak Island. Both sides sustained heavy casualties while trying to seize and maintain momentum through a series of fierce tank and infantry battles.

Around Aitape, Japanese attacks continued to force the United States to narrow its beachhead. Even so, Gen. Douglas MacArthur issued a statement announcing that while some difficult fighting remained, the United States had successfully established its strategic position on New Guinea.

By week's end, the U.S. 186th and 162nd Infantry regiments were able to overcome the determined enemy resistance and drive forward toward the island's airfields.

• In Italy, the Allies continued to advance despite a series of German counterattacks as the U.S. II and VI corps breached the Caesar Line and began their drive toward Rome. Meanwhile, the British Eighth Army captured Arce in the bitterly contested Liri Valley and Canadian forces seized San Giovanni, Frosinone and Ceprano. Around Anzio, the U.S. 36th Division took Monte Artesimo and Velletri.

• On the Eastern Front, the Nazis tried to regain their lost momentum by launching several strong attacks near Jassy. Despite the initial success of the German advances, the Soviets were able to quickly reconsolidate their forces and mount a successful counterattack that succeeded in retaking the lost ground.

• In England, the British Broadcasting Corporation transmitted the first general warning of the impending invasion of France to the French Resistance. Though the message was obviously coded, the Germans were able to explicate the vague significance of the poem in which the Allies cloaked the meaning, and as such alerted a small number of units.

• Fort Benning welcomed the 71st Light Infantry Division that established its training base on Sand Hill after arriving from California. Commanded by Maj. Gen. Robert Spragins, the unit specialized in mountain warfare.

Office of the Staff Judge Advocate

Q: I need to borrow some money to meet substantial unexpected expenses. I have heard that "home equity line of credit" loans are at low interest rates, and are tax deductible. Is this a good way to borrow?

A: A home equity line is a revolving credit in which your home serves as collateral for the money. You are approved for a specific amount of credit, your credit "limit," which is the maximum amount you can borrow. This amount is usually based upon the unused equity in your home.

For example, if you have a $60,000 home and owe a $40,000 mortgage, you have $20,000 equity in the home. If as is the usual practice, the lender will lend only up to 80 percent of the value, $48,000 is the maximum amount of debt they allow on the house. In the example, you can borrow $8,000.

The interest rate is variable. For example, the rate might be quoted as "prime plus 2 percent." This indicates that the rate of interest will be the same as the published prime rate index that appears in financial sections of newspapers, plus two percent. The rate changes as the prime rate goes up or down. If prime is 6 percent, your loan rate would be 8 percent.

Comparing the line of credit to a second mortgage, the most significant difference is that the second mortgage offers a fixed rate of interest. Costs are a factor in any mortgage.

You will be assessed certain charges in getting the equity line: a property appraisal fee, an up-front charge for the loan called "points," fees for attorneys, title search, mortgage preparation and filing, title insurance, and perhaps an application fee. These costs will be substantial, sometimes 5 percent or more of the credit limit amount.

As with any mortgage, the interest paid on most home equity credit lines is deductible, but points paid are not, because the equity line is considered a refinancing of the home.

Because the home is likely to be a consumer's largest asset, many homeowners use credit lines only for major items such as education, home improvement, or medical bills, and not for day to day expenses. The prudent borrower repays the loan as he would his house payment, paying down the amount each month.

If you are in the market for credit, a home equity plan may be best for you, but weigh the costs against the benefits carefully before committing yourself. Remember that failure to pay a home equity line may result in foreclosure and loss of your home, just as a first mortgage. Compare plans and select the one with the best combination of initial fees, interest rates, and repayment terms.

If you would like to discuss this with an attorney, call the Legal Assistance Office at 545-3282 for an appointment.

community care

By Ken Franklin
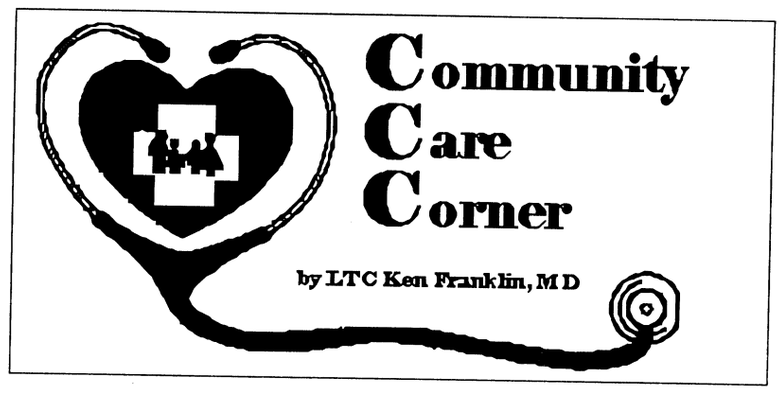
Martin Army Hospital

Most Martin Army Hospital facilities will replace all their telephone equipment over the next four months. This upgrade will replace all rotary phones with advanced touch-tone equipment, as well as many features to improve patient access.

Aviation Medicine and Winder Family Practice Clinic have already received their new equipment. Wiring for the main hospital building has begun; clinics and offices on the first floor will be the first to receive new equipment.

All Troop Medical Clinics and other outlying facilities will receive the same equipment.

All operations will keep their current phone numbers; however, the system has several features that will improve patient access.



• Physician lines to call out will be separate. This means that physicians calling consultants or patients will not use lines patients need to call in.

• Each phone has sophisticated call forwarding. A patient appointment phone can be automatically routed to a nother line if the first phone is busy. This means that one patient phone number can actually access several phone lines.

• All phones have rapid transfer capability. If a caller needs to speak with someone in another room, the call can be transferred to that room's line, instantly freeing the patient line for another call.

During the installation process, phones will have to be briefly disconnected or forwarded at times. If a patient hears a line ring more than eight times, it may mean that phone line is disconnected for upgrade, rather than just being unanswered.

This improvement is designed to further improve Fort Benning's access to total quality health care.

Veterinary Services

Parvovirus (parvo) is a disease that can cause death in young puppies. It is common on Fort Benning and most often seen in the spring and summer. The disease comes on quickly, is very easily spread and stays in the yard and the house for up to a year after the dog with parvo is gone. The majority of the animals that get parvo were not vaccinated against it.

Puppies can get parvo from other puppies or from clothes or furniture that have had another dog's feces or saliva on them. Puppy owners who have been around other young dogs that might have parvo should change clothes and wash their hands well before playing with their own puppy. A sick dog should not be brought into a house with a puppy. It is also best to keep a new puppy separated from other puppies until it has had its shots.

Early signs of parvo include not wanting to eat or drink, lying around alot and being depressed. This will progress to vomiting and then to diarrhea. A test can be run on a puppy's feces to determine if it has parvo. If the dog is showing signs of the disease, it needs to be tested and treated that same day.

It takes five to six days from the time a puppy comes in contact with parvo until it starts showing signs. Whether or not the dog recovers, the parvovirus will remain in that area for up to a year and can affect future puppies coming into that home or yard. A mixture of one part chlorine bleach to 32 parts water (not just straight bleach) will kill parvo in the home and yard, but will kill plants in the yard and discolor things in the house.

Puppies can be vaccinated against the disease starting at 6 weeks of age (with booster at 9 and 12 weeks). The vaccination is 95 percent effective — this means that one in 20 vaccinated dogs can still get parvo but the other 19 out of 20 are completely protected against it. If a puppy six weeks or older has not yet received its first booster shot, it should get one immediately.

The Fort Benning Veterinary Treatment Facility is located in Building 265 on 10th Mountain Division Road.

The hours are 8 to 11:30 a.m. and 12:45 to 3 p.m. Monday through Friday (closed the last working day of the month for inventory) and the phone numbers are 545-4444 and 545-1127.

OUTDOOR EDUCATION

Students participate in living history

Outdoor Education takes post students back to early America

By Jerrie Macintire
Special to The Bayonet ©

Militia soldiers from 1812 stepped through time to talk about early American life to fifth-grade students at the Outdoor Education Program May 20 at Victory Pond sponsored by the Fort Benning Schools.

The time travelers were really authentically dressed volunteers from a group dedicated to investigating and preserving history who were playing the role of men from the West Tennessee Militia on a recruiting mission from what is now Fort Jackson, S.C.

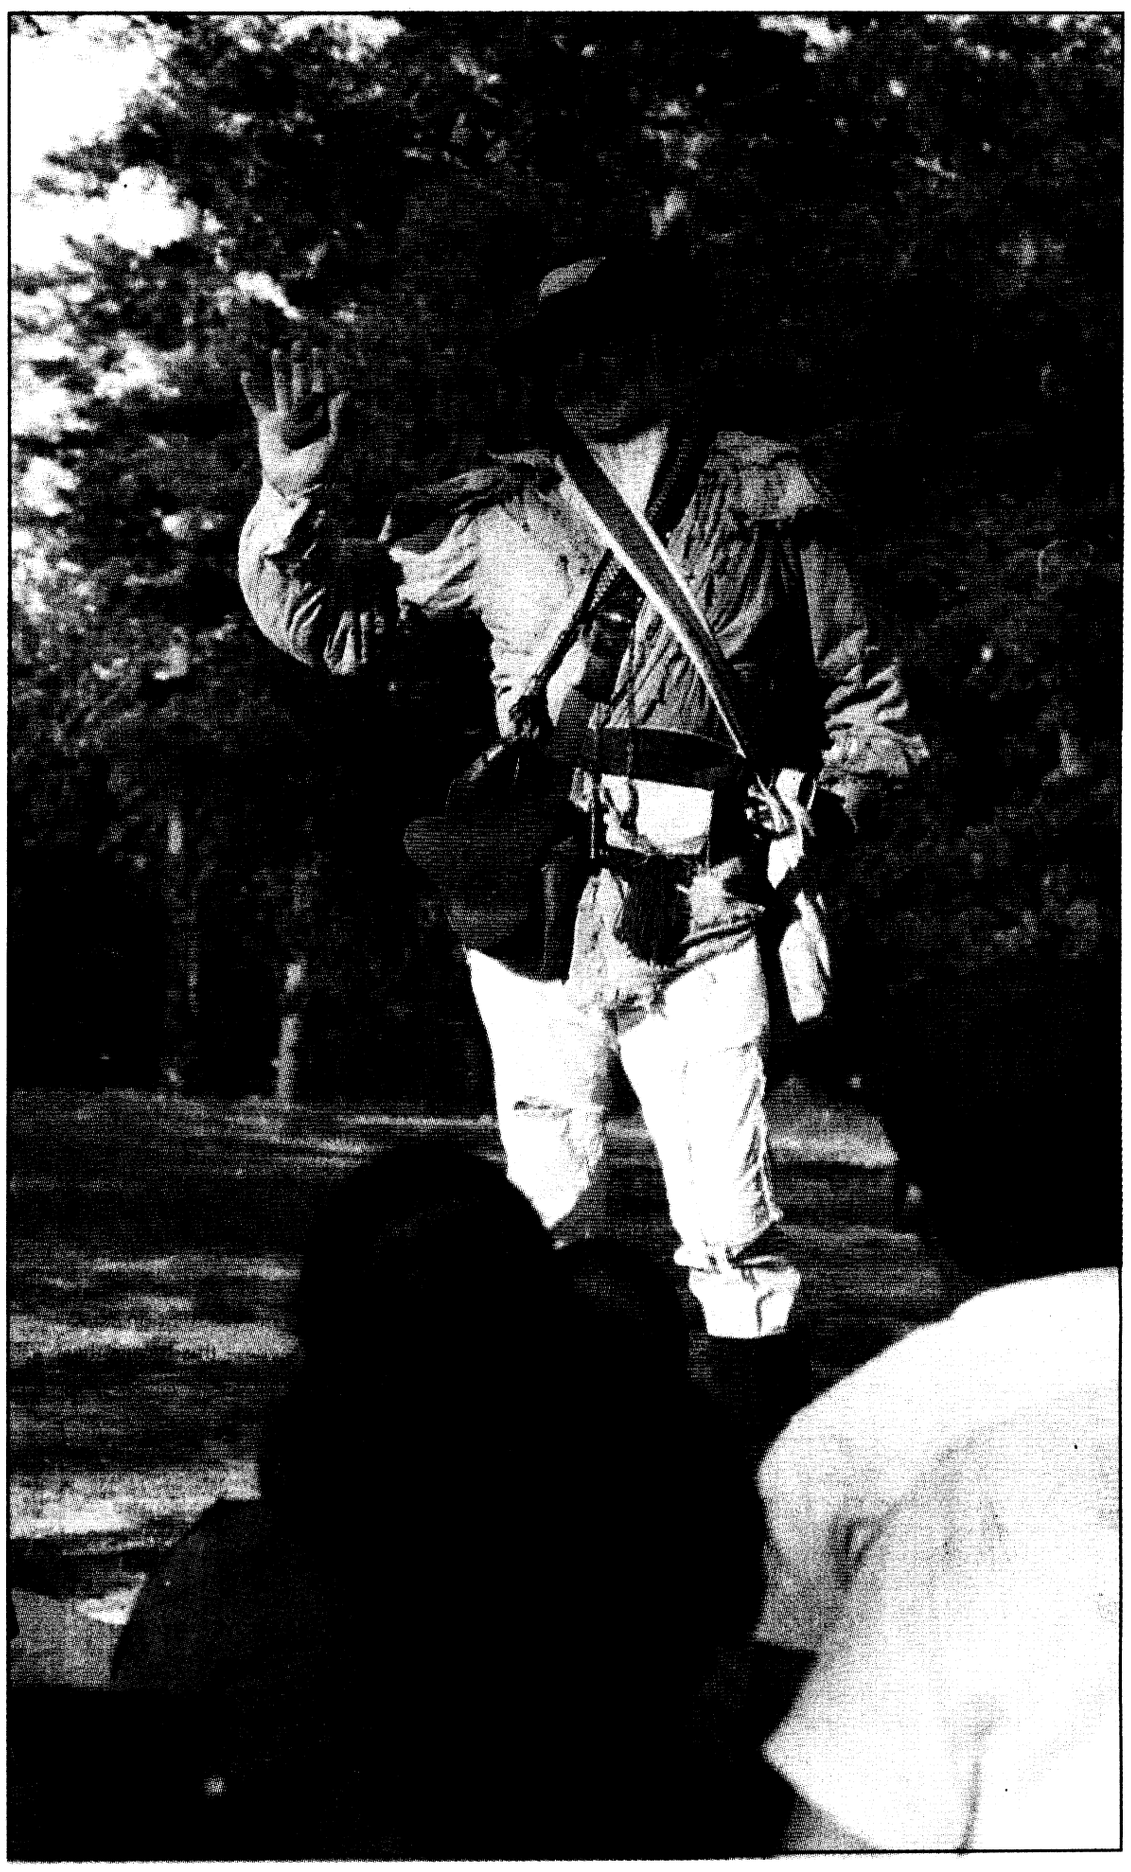
As part of their living history demonstration, the sergeant of the group discussed the necessities of life from the top of his head, where a decorative hat feather also served as quill pen, to his toes, clad in animal skin boots designed to fit either foot so they would last longer.

History buff Leonard Bast, who served as sergeant because "I'm the meanest and the ugliest," explained that peers voted for sergeants and officers who would in turn report to the regular Army under the leadership of Andrew Jackson. Units were designated by a unique symbol, in this case the tail of a deer affixed to the front of the militia hats. Others in the group portraying militia men were real life Sgt. 1st Class Randy Richau of the 4th Ranger Training Battalion and John Lillis.

Ending their living history demonstration, the militia men primed and fired muskets using hand made paper cartridges, the standard for the day. School children about the age of the Fort Benning youngsters could earn 3 cents for each paper cartridge they made, said Bast.

The living history demonstration was just one of a variety of activities scheduled as part of the Outdoor Education Program, an annual event for fifth-graders in Fort Benning Schools. In addition to environmental and nature studies, other classes taught by school personnel and volunteers include crafts, folk medicine, storytelling, line dancing, first aid and archery, said Melange Bast, coordinator for the program and assistant principal at Loyd and White Schools.

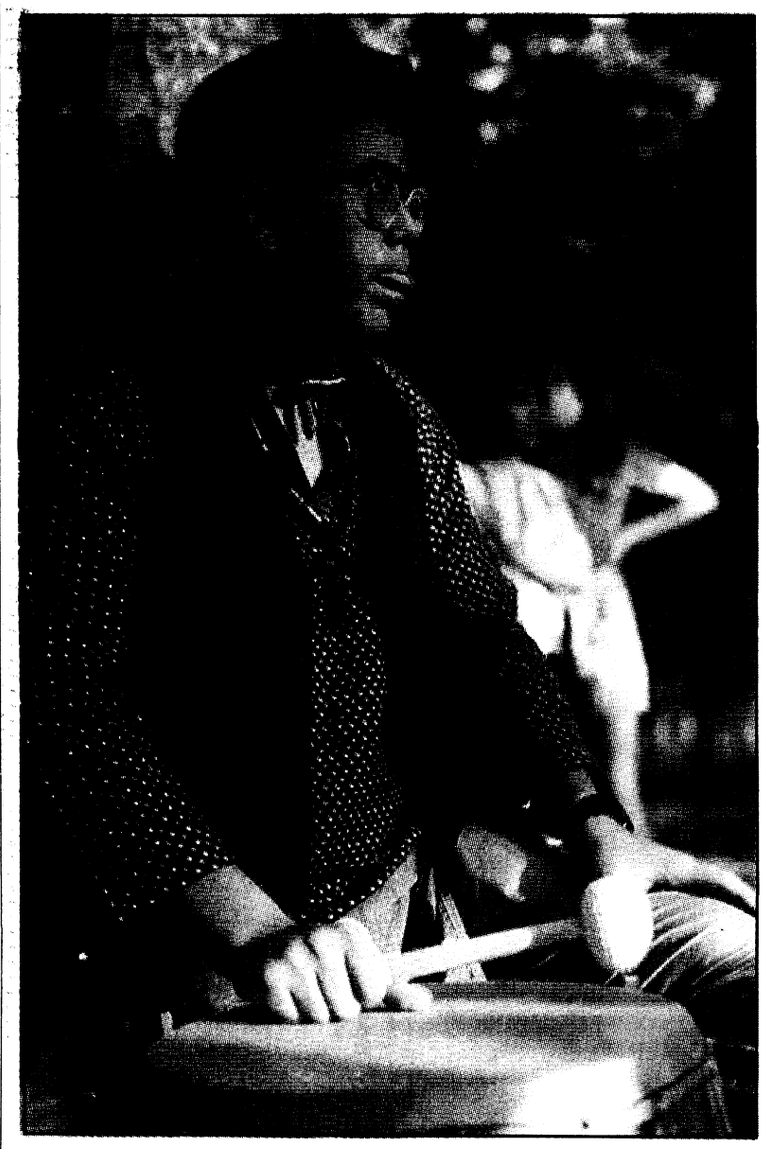
"This kind of education is really interesting to the children today," said Bast.



"We told them they are still having school, but in a different place," she said. In addition to classes in the regular curriculum, some sessions emphasized team building activities, confidence courses and conflict management skills, she added.

Also part of the activities, school personnel hosted a cookout at Victory Pond the evening of May 19. While flipping hamburgers along with the other school personnel, Superintendent Dr. Rolla Baumgartner said, "This is a focal point for fifth-graders for the year."

The students sleep in the Infantry Training Brigade barracks, eat in the mess hall and are placed in platoons by Fort Benning drill sergeants, who usher them through some military routines.



Outdoor Education is being conducted in two sessions. Fifth-graders from Loyd School and Stowers School participated in this session May 19 and 20. Wilson School and Dexter School fifth graders participated Thursday and today. White School fifth-graders participated in their own outdoor education day in April, which they called Georgia Gems Day.

"We get great support from the Army," said Baumgartner.

Students learn about native culture

By Stephanie Krawczyk
Special to The Bayonet©

Students from Stowers Elementary School got a sampling of Native American culture, including lessons on traditional dress, dance and customs, during their overnight learning experience as part of the Outdoor Education Program May 19 and 20.

Under the tutelage of Tom Lytle, a Native American of Cherokee heritage, and John Tuttle, a Fort Benning Life Scout, the students got a chance to try on a feather headdress and dance in a circle to the repetitive beat of of a ceremonial drum.

The session was sponsored by the Order of the Arrow, a scouting educational program designed to teach Native American culture.

Lytle, who was born and raised on an Oklahoma reservation, currently serves as the acting sergeant major for the 13th Corps Support Battalion.

On display for the students were numerous pieces of Native American clothing and ornamentation. Lytle also demonstrated a spiritual dance, used to ward off evil spirits.

At a nearby station, students tried their skill at bow and arrow target shooting.

The targets were set up along the woodline near Victory Pond for students to learn the basics of the sport of archery.

"They learn safety in target shooting and the proper way to use a bow and arrow," said Nancy Gordy, a special education teacher.

"The kids love it, and they're doing something they've never experienced before."

Other projects for the students included leaf rubbings, completing a mini-obstacle course and making environmentally friendly bird feeders.

Schools sponsor final Fine Arts concert of the year

Jerrie Macintire/Special to The Bayonet

Musician Eugenia Watson demonstrates the oboe (left) and the English horn.

By Jerrie Macintire
Special to The Bayonet ©

The final performance of the Fine Arts Concert Series at McBride School May 20 featured selections for the English horn and the oboe, two of the lesser known members of the woodwind family.

Musician Eugenia Watson took children on brief visits to exotic lands like the market places of India and the Olympic ice skating rink in Norway while presenting an array of pieces on the oboe and English horn.

Some selections included piano accompaniment, provided by Rexford Whiddon, chairman of the Schwob Department of Music at Columbus College.

While discussing her program, Watson told children that the oboe produces a clear, solid sound used to tune the other instruments in an orchestra.

Although not as well known as some other woodwind instruments, the oboe and English horn furnish wonderful music for radio and movie soundtracks and are popular among producers, she said.

Watson explained the differences in the oboe and English horn while holding each aloft so the students could see the additional length and bulbous tip of the English horn. While demonstrating the differences in pitch, she played each instrument to show the lower sound produced by the English horn.

Her program included classical pieces as well as the music of the popular Judy Collins hit, "Send in the Clowns." While playing "Pan," a piece reminiscent of the mythological flute player, Watson urged children to close their eyes and imagine a crowded market stall in a far off land with a "man in a turban taming a snake as it slithers out of a basket."

Continuing with the imaginative theme, she also encouraged children to remember the fluid grace of the Olympic ice skaters while playing "The Swan," a smooth melodious piece featured in the skating finals in Norway this winter.

Watson, a faculty member at Columbus College, plays with the Columbus Symphony Orchestra and the Atlanta Ballet Orchestra.

Her program was one of four programs this year in the series of Fine Arts Concerts in the Fort Benning Schools.

In its 10th consecutive year, the Fine Arts Series in designed to provide children with a quality artistic experience while teaching appropriate concert behavior. Guest artists are professional musicians often associated with Columbus College.

This final concert series was sponsored by the Officers' Wives' Club.

The camp, for children ages 7 through 12, will include swimming, boating, hiking and sporting activities. There will also be an emphasis on health, safety, character, music and Bible classes.

Applications can be picked up at the Valley Rescue Mission, 2903 Second Ave., Columbus, or for more information, call 322-8267 between 9 a.m. and 5 p.m., Monday through Friday.

Walk-a-thon — Hughston Sports Medicine Hospital will host a joint parade walk-a-thon June 12 at 2 p.m. at the Hughston Sports Medicine Foundation.

The Fort Benning Infantry Band will be performing at the walk-a-thon as well.

The one-mile walk-a-thon is being conducted to raise public contributions for orthopedic research and education.

Computers help students read

By Jerrie Macintire
Special to The Bayonet ©

Fort Benning teachers have long used innovative methods to increase interest and sharpen skills in reading, but two schools have added a new twist with a computerized program designed to award points toward incentives.

McBride and Loyd Schools are using a program that combines children's literature with technology; after reading a book and passing the computerized test, students earn points based upon the length and difficulty of the volume.

At McBride, students use their points to buy incentives from erasers to T-shirts. At Loyd, students are urgently working together toward a group total of 1,500 points, which will oblige their principal, Dr. Judy Gilliam, to kiss a pig at the end of the year talent show in June.

Although an incentive system rewards the readers with points, the students are beginning to read for sheer pleasure and "give up noon recess to come in here and get the book they want," said Jean Batey, media specialist at McBride.

"The kids get hooked on books. They become so interested in the story, they want to read for pleasure," she said.

Third-grader Aftan Hill agrees, saying she reads "for fun." She usually spends her points on a free library card, which enables her to check out an extra book. Other items she has purchased include a keychain and a pass to the front of the lunch line.

Third-grader Devon Gonzalez also enjoys being first in the lunch line; he keeps a careful mental record of his account and during this interview announced, "I have 48.5 points." His favorite purchase of a front-line pass all week for lunch sets him back 5 points.

Point systems are important to many readers because they provide immediate feedback, said Gilliam. In order to earn points, students must take and pass a computer exam on the book they have read.

Students have have found they can't "fake it" when trying to take exams without reading the books; they end up failing and are unable to try the exam again since the computer locks them out, said Batey.

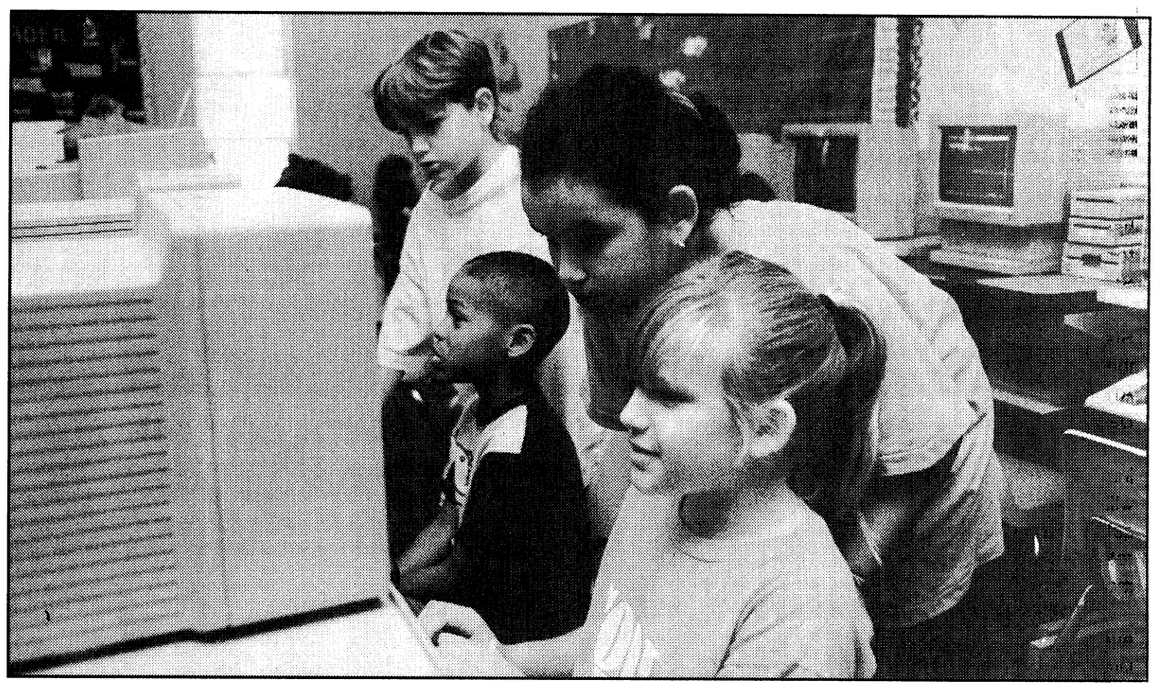
Once a test is passed, the computer adds the point values, beginning at .5, to the student's account.

The beginning books usually earn students about a half point; harder volumes can earn more. When school supplies, caps and paperback books are purchased, the computer deducts those points from the account.

An added bonus to the program is "that it is a good way to introduce decimals and fractions," said Penny Wilson, third-grade teacher at McBride.

Some books at the middle school level can earn as much as three times the point value of those for grade schoolers. Batey obtained a copy of a seventh grade volume, "The Ancient One," for one enthusiastic student, who read the book and successfully passed the computerized test to increase his account by 17 points.

Students have many opportunities during the day to take the tests and earn points.



"Many students are working hard to finish their regular classroom work so they can come in here (the library) and read," said Batey.

While choosing books, which have been marked on the spine if the computer has the appropriate exam, the students may choose any number of childhood favorites such as the popular "Boxcar Children" series, "Wayside School" adventures or "Horrible Harry" books. They aren't confined to fiction; there are numerous nonfiction books to choose from airplanes to zebras and all subjects in between.

The computer also has the capability of adding titles teachers may choose. Information is provided that will enable educators to design appropriate tests and assign point values for volumes they would like to include.

Though the pilot program has been used in a trial basis in just some of the grades at Loyd and McBride, officials agree that reading has improved with the average comprehension score exceeding 80 percent. More students will participate next year and more books will be added to the program, officials said.

Teachers said the biggest reward is the increased reading ability students gain that will enhance their present and future education.

Remember, honor nation's fallen

By R. Michael Coffey
1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment

reflections

This Memorial Day we remember with solemn pride and gratitude America's sons and daughters who have paid the ultimate price for the preservation of freedom.

From "the shot heard 'round the world" that marked our birth as a nation, Americans have time and again taken up arms in liberty's defense. Knowing the ferocity of war and the immensity of the sacrifice it exacts, they have nonetheless followed the spirit of our founders who pledged their lives, their fortunes and their sacred honor in the support of freedom.

The debt we owe to those who have left home and family to serve this cause is beyond measure. Our greatest debt of all is to those who fell in battle. Their ranks are legion, the stories of their heroism countless. Many of them lie beneath the soil of distant lands. Many also lie here at home. Their final bivouac may be a well-kept cemetery or an unknown, unmarked field or lane or shore. Glory guards these heroes well with all the faith and valor that free men and women can muster.

Oliver Wendell Holmes Jr. expressed a fitting thought when he said, "At the grave of a hero we end, not with sorrow at the inevitable loss, but with the contagion of his courage."

On Memorial Day we pay tribute to brave Americans. May we always walk in the light of their memory, the light of liberty that shines from age to age and still illuminates the way forward.

God bless you, and God bless America.

Trinity — like life — example of mystery

By George W. Holston
1st Battalion, 38th Infantry Regiment

reflections

One of my memories of Sunday school centers around listening to my Sunday school teacher attempt to explain the Doctrine of the Holy Trinity to her students. No matter how much she tried to explain the Trinity, it became more confusing. After all, what do you mean "Three in One and One in Three?" In seminary, the situation didn't improve.

My theology professor would struggle in the same way my Sunday School teacher labored to teach this doctrine of the Christian faith. Finally, he threw up his hands in exasperation and said, "It's a mystery, and you need to become comfortable living with mystery."

In the 18 years since that introductory class in Christian theology, I have discovered that life and faith are also a mystery. To think on them requires one to get comfortable with the simple reality of mystery. The mystery to which I am referring is not like the "who-done-its" that one buys at the check-out stand.

The mystery of the Holy Trinity runs deep into our unconscious, into the depths of our souls.

The mystery of the Holy Trinity dwells in the realm of relationships. Within this riddle we see an intimate relationship come together in such a way that it becomes impossible to talk about one member of the Holy Trinity without talking about the other members at the same time. One cannot discuss the creative power of the Father, and not bring in the redemptive work of the Son or the sanctifying presence of the Holy Spirit.

The difficulty is becoming comfortable with the doctrine of the Holy Trinity, is not the doctrine itself but the mystery. Our society demands complete explanations of everything that happens in our lives. Consequently, there is little tolerance for those events that cannot be explained.

In the Gospel reading for Trinity Sunday, Nicodemus comes to Jesus in the night. Jesus invites Nicodemus to look at God's interaction with the human race in terms of an eternal relationship that creates new life in the midst of the old. The creative power in this encounter is the power of love.

In the significant relationships that shape our lives, the critical quality is unconditional love. The unconditional characteristic of love is a mystery. As such, it invites us to move into a place where we become vulnerable in the presence of the beloved. Here, our pretenses are dropped and we allow our true selves to come into the light. This is the heart of intimacy.

Perhaps, if one desires to truly understand the mystery of the Holy Trinity we need to look no further than the intimacy with the beloved strangers with whom we share our lives.

Retreat offers family events

By Jacqueline Feagin
USAIC Chaplain's Office

April 29, 80 people attended the postwide family retreat at Roosevelt State Park. The retreat sponsored by the Fort Benning Unit Ministry was a dream come true for the Parish Council at Fort Benning who planned this event last fall, councilmembers said.

The families participated in events like softball, swimming and an ice cream social through out the weekend. The children participated in youth activities while the parents watched a three-part video on strengthening the marriage and family.

Lt. Col. Bobby Little, coordinator for youth activities at the retreat, said it was "the best family retreat he ever attended." Spc. Brian Kirk and his wife Delphi, said they arrived not knowing anyone, but left with feelings of warm fellowship.

The success of the retreat was attributed to the many planners and volunteers that executed the plans. Col. Mike Tesdahl, his wife, Peggy and Lt. Col. Mike Bingham were instrumental in the planning of this retreat.

Plans were set in motion to continue having family retreats at least twice a year at Fort Benning.

Ossie Davis recalls D-Day in Memorial Day Concert

By Jay Bobbin
Tribune Media Services

A certain television event has become a tradition of this holiday weekend, and this year, it has a very special significance.

SPOTLIGHT

PBS stations televise the National Memorial Day Concert from the West Lawn of the U.S. Capitol in Washington, D.C., and the 1994 edition — to be broadcast Sunday in most areas, with National Public Radio and the Armed Forces Radio and Television Service also carrying it — makes particular acknowledgement of an imminent milestone, the 50th anniversary of D-Day. "Evening Shade" co-star Ossie Davis serves as host, with Erich Kunzel conducting the National Symphony Orchestra, and members of the different branches of the American military participating as singers or instrumentalists.

As usual, a diverse roster of guest artists also will be on hand; included this time are country star Clint Black, opera's Harolyn Blackwell, vocalist Maureen McGovern, actresses Mary McDonnell ("Dances With Wolves") and Jill Clayburgh, fellow "Evening Shade" regular Charles Durning (who earned three Purple Hearts and a Silver Star for his own participation in the Allied invasion of Normandy), and former "Tonight Show" bandleader Doc Severinsen. Retired Gen. Colin Powell is also scheduled to deliver a tribute to those who gave their lives in World War II.

A Memorial Day scenario.

Though E.G. Marshall has usually been the host of public television's Memorial Day and Fourth of July concert specials, veteran actor-producer-director-writer Davis filled in once before, on the 1992 "Capitol Fourth" offering. "I had worked with the producers before," he explains, "and when the offer came along, I said 'Yes' because the project seemed worthwhile and it was something that I could do."

What: Memorial Day Concert
When: Sunday on PBS

Davis recalls that the first time, he was asked to step in for Marshall when the latter had a conflicting commitment, and there wasn't much time for preparation. However, he acknowledges, "Not a great deal of time should be required. You go down (to Washington) the night before, you read the material over and over, and you also have it on the Teleprompter (during the performance). Even at that, it's not a great deal of material." A winner of numerous awards and an inductee into the NAACP Image Award Hall of Fame, Davis will read a portion of Lincoln's Gettysburg Address as part of his contribution to the Memorial Day proceedings.

"I would not have gotten involved in the first place if it was just a matter of saying words," Davis maintains. "When I was first approached, I had very serious concerns — reservations, almost — because I am not interested in promoting the values and virtues of the military, per se. I come closer to being a pacifist, and I didn't want to glorify war in any way."

Celebrate Memorial Day weekend at park

Georgia Department of Natural Resources

Celebrate the Memorial Day weekend Saturday at Georgia Veterans State Park in Cordele.

The celebration will feature military vehicles, band concerts, tours, video presentations and children's activities, including a hayride.

Members of the Fleet Support Division, Marine Corps Logistic Base, Albany, will exhibit vehicles from l0 a.m. to 3 p.m.

The vehicles include two high-mobility, multi-purpose wheeled vehicles, two light armored vehicles, one ambulance and a five-ton truck towing a 105mm howitzer.

Marines will be present to talk about their jobs and the vehicles.

The Cordele Centennial Band will be performing Dixieland music from noon until 12:45 p.m. near the beach area.

The band, led by Melton Culpepper on banjo, was organized in 1989 and recently performed at the catfish fry held for state legislators.

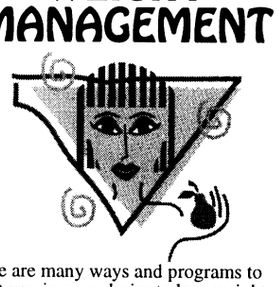
The band is made up of local musicians Dick Bissett — trombone, Jeff Ellis — trumpet, Anthony LaPorte — tuba, Dr. Charles Ruis — bass guitar, Barbara Stripling — keyboard, and Lesli Hughes — vocalist.

Big band, jazz and traditional music will then be provided by the Americus High School Jazz Band, led by Jeff Kluball.

The band will perform from 12:45 to 1:45 p.m.

Activities for children will be from 9 a.m. to 9 p.m.

These activities include games, arts and crafts projects and nature activities.



A hayride and campfire fun will cap the festivities for the day.

In honor of American veterans, the park will be offering tours of American military equipment and historical artifacts, along with video presentations.

Tours and children's activities will also be provided Sunday.

Georgia Veterans State Park is located nine miles west of Cordele on U.S. Highway 280. For more information call the park office at (912) 276-2371.

MEMORIAL DAY

Fort Benning remembers ...

Community, friends gather to honor fallen heroes

By Ruth J. Spaller
Bayonet staff writer

Neat rows of white headstones shone in the morning sun Monday as soldiers, family and friends gathered at the Fort Benning Main Post Cemetery to honor and to remember those soldiers who paid freedom's highest price.

Chaplain (Lt. Col.) Ford F. G'Segner, deputy staff chaplain of the U.S. Army Infantry School, conducted the Memorial Day ceremony and Col. Gregory C. Camp, deputy assistant commandant of the Infantry School, was the guest speaker.

"We live in a democracy filled with countless freedoms ... but we can never forget the price that's been paid for the peace and freedoms we enjoy today," Camp said.

"The rows of white headstones here in this cemetery are a poignant reminder of that very great price," he said.

"These grounds have been dedicated in years past to the memory of great American soldiers who've given their lives for this country," Camp said.

"For Memorial Day 1994, we consecrate them once again and honor those heroes whose memory of service is fresh on our minds," he said.

Two of those heroes Camp mentioned by name: Capt. Patrick McKenna, who was killed in April when his helicopter was shot down by Air Force jets over northern Iraq; and Cpl. James Smith, who was killed in action in Mogadishu, Somalia, in October.

Camp recalled an inscription carved into a stone memorial at the Omaha Beach Cemetery in Normandy, France, which reads: "To these we owe the highest resolve, that the cause for which they died shall live."

It is our charge today, Camp said, to remind future generations, and to remember ourselves, how much we owe to those who died defending our peace and freedom.

But Medal of Honor recipient Gino J. Merli, who came to Fort Benning to attend the 18th Infantry Regiment Reunion May 26 and 27, is not one who has to be reminded.

"The stories have always been with me," he said. "They've never left."

Retired Sgt. 1st Class Phillip A. Liparoto, a member of the local chapter of the Military Order of the Purple Heart, his wife, Jean, and retired Sgt. George Ward, a member of the China and Burma, India Veterans Association of WWII, also came out to remember.

"It's no day of celebration," said Jean Liparato. "When you look out at those white stones, that tells you why you're here," said Ward.

AER says 'thanks'

Army Emergency Relief

The Army Emergency Relief contribution drive, which ended May 15, exceeded the installation goal of $180,000.

Alfonso Deane, AER officer for Fort Benning, said the final tally of $213,932 equalled just more than 118 percent of the targeted amount.

"The AER section would like to thank all contributors for their response," Deane said.

Program celebrates Asian-Pacific Islander Month

By Denise Howell
36th Engineer Group

The 36th Engineer Group hosted a program in honor of Asian-Pacific Islander Month May 24 at Marshall Auditorium, Infantry Hall.

The program featured poetry, music, dance and song. Participants welcomed the audience with colorful leis and greeted them in Hawaiian, Korean, Chinese, Japanese, Arabic and Chimorro, the native language of Guam.

Following the theme 'Pride, partnership and progress," program leader 1st Lt. Carolynn Sciba presented a slide show and brief history of the people and countries included in the Asian-Pacific Islander group.

Post Command Sergeant Major Command Sgt. Maj. William H. Acebes, who is of Philippino descent, was the guest speaker.

"We come from a proud heritage ... We're proud to share with you today those things that make America great. It is me, it is you, it is our culture, it is our heritage."

Acebes told of his meeting with retired Master Sgt. Roy Matsumoto, a Distinguished Service Cross recipient, and native of Japan.

As in the American Civil War, when brother fought against brother, during World War II, Matsumoto fought with the United States, while his brother was drafted into the Japanese army.

He never knew from day to day whether he would be meeting his brother on the battlefield. Each day he would search through the dead Japanese soldiers to see if any were his brother.

But Matsumoto's dedication to the American code of "duty, honor, country" was strong. During a particularly fierce fire fight, he went forward of the lines for reconnaissance.

A native Japanese speaker, he ordered enemy Japanese forces to charge back into the deadly fire zone, whereupon they were decimated by the Americans.

Spc. Dorothy Bess of the 2nd Mobile Army Surgical Hospital sings "God Bless America" at the celebration.

"Many brave soldiers like Matsumoto were called to fight, even though their families in the U.S. were incarcerated for fear of attack from within," said Acebes. "Most Americans never knew that Asians and Pacific Islanders actually fought for and along with the United States for peace."

Acebes described the United States as a land of "opportunity, and all I've had to do was show that I had the wherewithal and the desire to excel.

"I doubt, had I been born in the Philippines, or anywhere else, unless my parents were of royal blood or had a lot of money, that I would have reached a level above that of a peasant. Here in the U.S., the son of an orange picker can rise up to be the senior noncommissioned officer of the United States Army Infantry Center."

Another high point of the celebration was the fashion show. It featured a multi-colored array of Korean, Hawaiian, Chinese, Muslim and Japanese apparel for men, women and children.

If you could change one thing about Fort Benning, what would it be?

Connie Sieg, family member — "I think the hospital and PX are great. I'd like to see the post be more frugal with property disposal — they've redone the hospital many times and they spend a fortune."

Does the man with the most toys really win?

By Clyde Snively
Bayonet columnist

commentary

A bumper sticker on a gigantic recreational vehicle put it simply: "The man with the most toys wins."

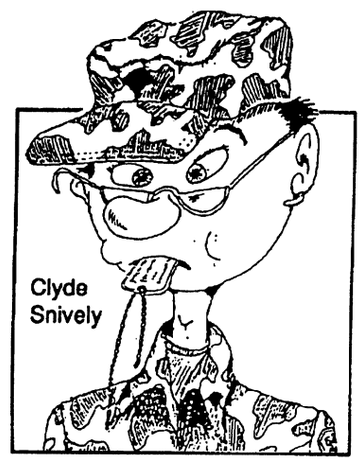
Spc. Richard Todd has to be a front runner.

I visited his quarters on post the other day and came away dumbfounded at all the toys he's got.

He's been in the service three years, been married one year and has already amassed more toys than his parents.

He's got a deluxe gas barbecue grill, a home entertainment system that thinks for you — this includes the receiver, compact disc player, videocassette recorder and some television set that lets you watch several things at once.

Naturally his home is furnished with the usual — sofa, easy chair, dining room suite, water bed, washer and dryer.



Out in the garage we find a gas-powered weed eater, edger, lawn mower and an assortment of tools. He's got two mountain bikes and a brand new Acura, and parked on the street, a jeep.

"How did you afford all this?" I asked tactfully, mouth agape, knowing that he's also helping put his wife through college (she does have a part-time job selling greeting cards).

"Credit," he said with a smile.

"Most of this stuff I got through the Post Exchange. Used the Deferred Payment Plan. Best thing going since sliced bread. The interest is low, it helped me get a credit line and next thing I knew I qualified for an auto loan. So voila, there it is."

"Well," I muttered, "I guess not having house and utility payments and having the Commissary handy, all helps."

"It does," he said, "but I don't shop at the Commissary. I go to that new supermarket up north. Much better selection."

I couldn't see how that could be true, but was more interested in DPP. I've been in the PX before when soldiers went through the checkout line, paying for their chewing tobacco and car magazines with their DPP card instead of cash, wondering what happened when they maxed out.

PX officials note that credit limits are based on ability to pay —meaning that if you start small, make all your payments on time, your credit limit will be increased.

Those of us in the first four pay grades are initially limited to $500, and put on a six-month probation.

Officials note that 1.29 percent of us lower-grade people default.

Miss two payments and your credit line is stopped. Miss three and money starts coming out of your paycheck in huge amounts.

They warn that if you get a delinquent notice, you'd better make arrangements or you might be eating beans from a can since the full amount comes due.

So, while DPP is a great way to begin amassing toys early in life, folks need to remember that bills have to be paid.

I'd hate to get kicked out of the Army because I couldn't pay my bills.

commentary

I recently purchased one of those cardboard sun shades for my windshield, to keep things from getting too hot inside.

I was surprised that written in bold letters on the back of the thing, it said, "Warning: Do not attempt to drive with sun shade in place."

It's a good thing they warned me. If it wasn't for them, I might have tried to go down a busy highway unable to see. I guess they saved my life.

What do they think I am, an idiot?

Don't answer that.

It makes me wonder why they felt it important to put such a warning on these simple devices. Did someone actually try to drive with one on, crash and then try to sue the company?

Probably.

After thinking about it, I also wondered why there weren't similar warnings on hats.

"Warning: Do not attempt to drive with hat pulled down over eyes."

Warning labels on jars of cleaner are also very important. If it wasn't for the "Caution: Do Not Swallow" label, I might just go for a long, cold slug of window cleaner.

Anyone who can read such a label probably won't want to drink what's inside, while children who can't read, and who are very curious, won't benefit from that label very much.

I guess it's on there just to cover the chemical company's assets, you know, in case someone swallows some and tries to sue the company?

I can see some of these cases on Peoples' Court now.

"Your honor, like, I got really sick man, you know. I mean, they should have written it on there some place not to swallow this stuff. Like, I thought it was pineapple juice."

And can't you just see this one? "Judge Wapner, I am not responsible for running over that pedestrian.

"My sun shade was blocking my view and therefore, I feel that the manufacturing company was negligent in the expiation of their duties to warn the public about the hazards that their substandard product presents in the operation of vehicular machinery. I rest my case."

The government also has many rules and regulations that seem to insult the intelligence and the honor of the general public.

My daughter recently had surgery. Before the operation, I was required to find blood donors for her.

I went and had her blood drawn at a hospital lab and the results were sent to the Red Cross.

I called later to find out what type of blood my daughter had so that I could find donors.

The person who answered the phone said that it was against the law for them to give that information out over the telephone.

I asked, "So what am I going to do with someone's blood type, cash a check at the blood bank?" I'm sure there is a good reason for this rule, but I don't know what it could be.

Also, while we're on the subject of hospitals, why is it that they have rules requiring patients to wear slippers, but they don't care if their posteriors hang out of the back of their gowns?

Talk about crazy, mixed-up rules.

And what about those labels warning people not to remove labels from mattresses under penalty of law?

I can see it now, some rebellious teenagers start getting their kicks from ripping labels off of mattresses.

But, a swat team of police are waiting outside the door. They burst through the door and yell, "Freeze! Everybody up against the wall! You're under arrest!" You'll see all of the exciting action on the next "Real Life Stories of the Mattress Police."

Yes, our society runs on rules.

There are many rules that are essential, that even save lives. And then, there are the rules that some legislature made up after some crazy bachelor's party or something.

In honor of them, I now proclaim a new rule, "No writing laws under the influence of intoxicating substances."

But that might mean we'd have no laws at all, huh?

WWII legacy lives on

Monday we will commemorate the allied invasion of Normandy 50 years ago. It was a crucial turning point in the struggle to defeat the forces of global aggression, domination and subjugation. Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower aptly called it, "The Great Crusade."

We will never forget the courage and sacrifice of those who fought and died at Normandy. Their memory lives on for what they achieved that day.

The fascist leaders who provoked World War II deeply misunderstood the democracies of the world. They mistook the hallowed tradition of public debate and dissent for internal strife and inertia. They thought a love of liberty meant a lack of discipline. They confused a love of peace with a lack of will.

In short, the enemies of peace and freedom thought that democracies would not or could not fight to deter or defeat tyranny and aggression. They were wrong 50 years ago. They were wrong during the Cold War. And they are wrong today.

The legacy of those who stormed the beaches at Normandy lives on. It's alive in you, the men and women in uniform who stand ready to protect our security, our interests and our allies.

On this Memorial Day, I join all Americans in paying tribute to all those who gave their lives defending our nation, and also to those who dedicate their lives today. You are upholding the democratic cause of peace and freedom; yours is truly a "Great Crusade."

commentary

Master Sgt. James Bridges and his family remember well the day of June 17 — the day their home burned, the day they lost everything except their lives.

The Bridges have two boys, Joshua and Jacob. One of the children is developmentally delayed. Fortunately, Martin Army Community Hospital stepped in to supply his special medicine.

But things would have been tough without the presence of the Russell Red Cross. The Red Cross led in supplying basic clothing, shoes and personal items that most of us take for granted until they're gone.

"We had been married for 10 years," explained Renee Bridges. "Everything we owned evaporated, including our family pet. This is devastating to a child.

"But through it all, the local Red Cross people were so nice; we really appreciate what they did for us when we really needed a friend."

According to the 1990 census, the population of Asian-Pacific Islanders almost doubled - from 3.7 million in 1980 to 7.2 million in 1990.

They comprise 2.9 percent of the total U.S. population, and those numbers are similarly represented within the Department of Defense, at 2.7 percent.

The term Asian-Pacific Islander includes those people from China, Mongolia, North and South Korea, Japan, Taiwan, Hong Kong, Burma, Laos, Thailand, Vietnam, Cambodia, the Philippines, Malaysia, Indonesia, Turkey, Syria, Lebanon, Israel, Iraq, Iran, Afghanistan, Jordan, Kuwait, Saudi Arabia, along with the Micronesian, Melonesian and Polynesian Islands.

Army to test 'post of the future'

TRADOC News Service

FORT MONROE, Va. — The Army post of the 21st century is being designed and tested at Fort Gordon, Ga.

The project is part of "A Strategy for the 21st century," described in 1993 by Gen. Gordon R. Sullivan, Army chief of staff. The objective is to retain and improve mission support and Army family standards on greatly reduced budgets.

Findings at Fort Gordon will also be used to help re-engineer Training and Doctrine Command. Gen. Frederick M. Franks Jr., Training and Doctrine Command commander, has said reduced resources require the command top change so it can continue its role as architect of the future Army.

"During the servicewide downscaling and military funding reductions we're currently facing, Fort Gordon is becoming the proving ground for a participatory, vision-based community planning process which demonstrates that these resource constraints could be a catalyst for positive changes and adaptation," said Col. Ronald A. Schwachenwald, Fort Gordon's test coordinator.

Army installations will be "power projection platforms" capable of training, mobilizing, deploying, sustaining and supporting forces outside the United States.

"If there's only enough money to train and house the force that we project and there's not enough left over for all the base operations services, what do we do?" Dave Lyon, chief of TRADOC's community planning and design division, phrased the challenge.

"There still will be people living on military installations who provide much of those services themselves. They will serve on planning teams to determine needs of the community. A community planning board will oversee their work.

Soldiers, family members, civilian employees and members of the civilian community near Fort Gordon volunteered to serve on the board and planning teams.

"We looked for volunteers with a wide variety of experience and background," said Lynn Harshman, senior volunteer coordinator. "We wanted to include every section of the post and we also sought out people from the surrounding CSRA (Central Savannah River Area) communities."

There are planning teams for infrastructure and natural environment; mission and professional development; social life; recreation; health and fitness; economic; spiritual; safety and security; civic skills and cultural. A separate committee will ensure that Army values are considered before projects and actions are adopted.

Team members will receive training to help them develop expertise in community planning.

"We've got the greatest Army in the world and the key to that is MOS (military occupational specialty) training," Lyon said. "We're suggesting that COS (community occupational specialty) training be developed for committee members.

"People who complete the training can take those skills to their next installations."

The project will also identify rules and regulations which interfere with the most economical and beneficial use of budgeted funds by installation commanders. Creative methods of obtaining money will also be explored.

Future military installations will depend on surrounding municipalities for many services installations traditionally have provided for themselves. These services include fire protection and residential waste management.

"We're moving away form being an independent enclave and we're moving toward being an interdependent community ... (with) the civilian community that surrounds us," said Maj. Gen. Robert E. Gray, Fort Gordon commander.

Capt. James T. Maggelet (center) and fire officials examine the wreckage of Maggelet's car after it caught fire near the gas station at the Post Exchange at the Main Mall May 21 around 2 p.m. The fire, which withstood two fire extinguishers and was eventually doused by the fire department, was traced to faulty wiring under the car's dash.

for the record

In the story "Appreciation week comes to a close" on page A-1 of the May 27 edition, The Bayonet mistakenly credited a tactics demonstration to the 75th Ranger Regiment.

Actually, it was soldiers from the Ranger Training Brigade who performed the tactics demonstration.

The Military is built on respect.

So is Burlington.

EFMP program provides assistance

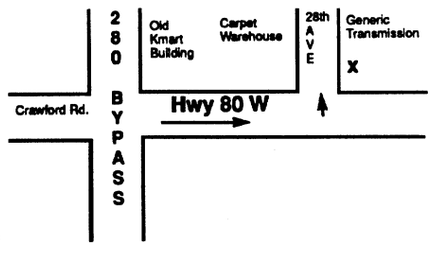
The Exceptional Family Member Program is a Department of the Army program designed to assist, through selective assignment and reassignment, the soldier who has a special needs family member.

The EFMP addresses the needs of those family members, adults or children, who have a physical, intellectual or emotional disorder that limits that person's capability to take part in activities and which requires special treatment, therapy, education, training or counseling.



The program's purpose is to let the U.S. Total Army Personnel Command at DA know of any family members with special needs, so this can be a consideration during the assignment selection process.

For additional information regarding the EFMP, contact Frances Howard, coordinator, Exceptional Family Member Program, Army Community Service, at 545-6969 or 545-5516.

Why do the Army and the nation need ACAP?

ACAP provides transition service to departing personnel. It creates a recruiting multiplier. It establishes strong partnerships with the private sector.

ACAP allows career soldiers to concentrate on the Army mission because they know that when they need services, they will be available.

What benefits do members of the Army family, employers, and the nation at large derive from ACAP?

In addition to those above, the Army family leaves better prepared to make the transition into the civilian sector; employers receive a better trained and motivated employee with skills and abilities not generally available in the civilian sector; the nation receives individuals who will serve as role models and who are willing and able to contribute to the community at large.

If ACAP did not exist, what could fill the void?

There are many private sector companies who can supply these services, but they'll cost the individual between $1,000 and $10,000.

There are also many government agencies that supply some of the services (such as Army Community Services and the Department of Labor). ACAP ensures that these services are coordinated and directed towards those who need them.

There seems to be a large number of govérnment agencies performing the same mission. What makes ACAP unique?

ACAP is designed specifically for members of the Department of Army; it's easily accessible; and it's an integral part of the Army's personnel system. These allow ACAP to give individualized and complete service to its clients.

The downsizing is projected to end in fiscal 1995. What are the plans for ACAP after it completes that mission?

ACAP is an enduring program; it has an important mission that will survive after the downsizing is completed. It adds an important dimension to an individual's productivity life cycle — to the Army, future employers and the nation.

What services are provided?

Every individual who visits ACAP first receives a needs assessment and an individual transition plan. Based on this appraisal, clients are then sent to the appropriate service providers who will assist them in their transition.

If they need job assistance, they will be sent to the Job Assistance Center where they will receive job search workshops and seminars, individual assistance and counseling, assistance with writing resumes and cover letters, and access to various job data base — including the Army Employer and Alumni Network.

Are there any plans to add, subtract or modify those services?

Yes. ACAP is continually evolving. We will alter our services as the needs of our clients change.

How much do those services cost the American taxpayer?

The fiscal 1992 budget for ACAP was $34.5 million, which comes out to about $243 a client.

Why should they be willing to pay that bill?

An individual who is prepared for the job search will more quickly find employment and will reduce the social welfare and unemployment rolls.

The smooth transition back into the civilian workplace will allow former military members to continue to contribute to the nation's economy as a whole.

How much would those services cost individuals if they didn't use ACAP?

Such services can cost between $1,000 and $10,000. In fact, many outplacement services charge individuals about 15 percent of their annual salary in fees.

How is it different from the Defense Outplacement Referral System and the Transition Bulletin Board?

The Army Employer and Alumni Network lists employers that have expressed an interest in hiring Army alumni; the Defense Outplacement Referral System allows individuals to place a mini-resume on an employer-accessible network; and the Transition Bulletin Board provides actual job announcements and employment information from numerous government agencies and private sector employers.

Both DORS and TBB are Department of Defense automated referral programs and are available at all ACAP offices and selected ACS centers.

ETSing? Get yourself ready

By Elsie Jackson
Army Career and Alumni Program

"Going to the house." "Getting out." "ETSing." "Going home." Is this you? Don't add "Unemployed" to the list.

If you have a year or less until your separation, it is time to start laying the groundwork for a smooth transition from your military to civilian career.

Start your job search process by assembling the records and papers that you will need. Organize them into four files: military service, personal, work experience and education and training.

Your military papers should include certified copies of separation papers (Department of Defense Form 214) service record, honors and awards, medical records and benefits information.

As a minimum, your personal papers should include copies of your birth certificate, Social Security card, current passports and proof of citizenship.

Use your work experience file to document your work history (jobs, employers, duties and accomplishments), honors and citations, references, salary history and community activities.

If appropriate, include some samples of your work. Your education and training file should hold transcripts, diplomas, honors and activities lists.

In 1991, the Department of Defense was directed to provide military experience and training transcripts to all separating service members.

These transcripts not only document your military experience, but translates them to civilian terms.

Every soldier separating after Sept. 15, 1992, should automatically receive a Verification of Military Experience and Training statement about 120 days before your expiration term of service date.

Soldiers who separated between Oct. 1, 1990, through 14 Sept. 14, 1992, must request their VMET statements.

If you should have received your VMET statement and have not, call (800) 258-8638. Written requests can be addressed to. PRC Inc., ATTN. VMET G-3.03, 12001 Sunrise Valley Drive, Reston, Va. 22091.

Another document that you may want to add to your career file is your Army and American Council on Education Registry Transcript System record. AARTS transcripts can help you get college-level credit for Army training and experiences.

An AARTS transcript can also supplement your job resume, providing employers with a description of the scope of your Army responsibilities and the skills you acquired while on active duty.

To request a copy of your AARTS record, visit your Education Center. There is no charge for this service.

It's not too early to start drafting your resume, either. Take advantage of the free resume writing classes available.

Ask your ACAP counselor about these and other free job search-skills workshops and classes that are available.

These classes and workshops are offered through the Job Assistance Center and Army Community Service. Family members are also eligible for many of these services.

Put the attention-to-detail you learned on active duty to use for you. Triple check your spelling and grammar. If your skills in this department are lacking, have someone more proficient proof your resume for you.

When you are ready to turn that draft resume into a final version, computers and a laser printer are available for clients' use at the Job Assistance Center in Building 2634.

ITB soldier takes Ms AUSA title

By James Brownlee
Infantry Training Brigade

Recently the 2nd Battalion, 54th Infantry Regiment, boasted this year's winner of the Fort Benning Ms. AUSA competition.

Pfc. Michelle Culbertson took first place in the largest of the two competing divisions.

The large divisions consists of the Infantry Training Brigade, 11th Infantry Regiment, 29th Infantry Regiment and the 36th Engineer Group.

Last year, the 11th Regiment won the Ms. AUSA competition by about 100 votes. This year Culbertson received more votes than all of the other competitors combined.

Voting was based on the number of tickets that were sold. Each ticket represented one vote and the price of one vote was $1. Culbertson received 10,654 votes, selling $10,654 worth of tickets, not only meeting but surpassing her goal of $10,000.

This is the first time ever that the ITB has reached the previously set $10,000 goal. Twenty-five percent of the total collected will be sent back to the units.

Throughout the competition there were many unseen forces that helped Culbertson obtain the brigade's goal of $10,000. One of these forces was her AUSA manager, Sgt. Luce Wiley.

Wiley planned and coordinated Culbertson's every appearance with all of the brigade's company first sergeants.

When these appearances were scheduled, brigade Command Sgt. Maj. Sylvan B. Bauer Jr. would give a briefing on how the votes would help Sand Hill and the ITB's one station unit soldiers.

The OSUT soldiers were not just giving money for votes, because with each vote came the chance for a $500 cash first-place prize and various other prizes.

Culbertson said the support she received from the brigade, "Was great. Without the support we wouldn't have won; everyone was very supportive."

Culbertson's military occupational specialty is 92Y, or supply clerk. She is from Fairplay, Mo. and has been working with the 2nd Bn., 54th Inf. Regt. for about a year.

When asked what she thought about the Army and what it has to offer to her, she stated, "The Army is the Army; it's what you make of it.

"I joined the Army to get out from under my parents, and to prove to myself that I can do something on my own.

"Personally, I'm looking forward to the traveling. I can't wait to start traveling and having the opportunity to see other parts of the world. I'm going to start by going to my next assignment, which will be in Korea."

Command Sgt. Maj. Willie G. Wells, battalion command sergeant major, who recommended that Culbertson participate in the Ms. AUSA competition, said, "Pfc. Culbertson is a superb soldier who voluntarily devoted countless hours of personal time in support of this competition.

"She definitely has what it takes to be a tremendous success at everything she does. The (battalion) is very proud of her!"

Be prepared for severe WEATHER

Directorate of Threat and Security

The following severe weather information is provided to promote soldier, family member and civilian safety.

Severe weather warnings on Fort Benning are called Code Green and Code Black.

• Code Black means winds over 60 mph and tornadoes within 20 minutes of Fort Benning.

• Code Green is the same as above except it's more than 20 minutes away from Fort Benning and can include hail or up to two inches of precipitation.

• The Air Force Weather Detachment notifies the Directorate of Threat and Security in Infantry Hall during duty hours and the field officer of the day or staff duty officer after duty hours to sound the Code Black siren.

• The siren will be sounded for five minutes to warn of a Code Black. All clear is a two-minute siren then one minute silence, two minutes of siren then one minute silence, two minutes of siren then silence.

• When a tornado threatens, units, post exchange, military directorates and Range Control will be notified by telephone and by the Automated Weather Distribution System computer.

When a tornado threatens, follow the instructions below for your safety.

• Stay away from windows, doors and outside walls, protect your head.

• In schools, hospitals and public places, move to predesignated shelter areas. Interior hallways on lowest floors are best.

• In mobile homes or vehicles, leave them and go to more substantial shelter.

•If outdoors, with no shelter available, lie flat in a nearby ditch and shield your head with your arms.

Tornado watch means tornadoes and severe thunderstorms are possible.

Tornado warning means a tornado has been detected. Take shelter.

Clinton's health care reform to boost VA care

Department Of Veterans Service

SAVANNAH, Ga. — "President Clinton's health care reform plan is the only plan in Congress that preserves the Veterans Administration as an independent health care system," Mary Lou Keener, general counsel for the U.S. Department of Veterans Affairs told the attendees at the closing session of the Service Officers School sponsored by the Georgia Department of Veterans Service.

"All the other bills either ignore or eliminate the VA health care system," Keener added.

Keener said the administration's health care reform plan would allow all veterans and their dependents to enroll in the VA health care plan.

The administration's VA plan would also provide local care for all enrollees. In areas where no VA medical facility is conveniently located, the VA will contract with local providers or establish clinics to provide care for veterans who select the VA as their health care provider.

"All current eligibility rules will be changed," Keener said. "However, veterans will not lose any current benefits."

Veterans with low incomes, service-connected disabled, and other special categories including former prisoners of war and World War I veterans will continue to receive free health care.

For other veterans, the VA health care plan would be a participating plan similar to Blue Cross/Blue Shield and other commercial health plans, Keener said.

The reform bill would allow the VA to advertise and market its services. Additionally, $3.2 billion would be provided to upgrade VA facilities. These two provisions will allow the VA to better compete with other health care providers Keener said.

During the conference's opening session, Hershel Gober, assistant secretary of the VA, said that a team was evaluating the purchase of land adjacent to the Atlanta VA Medical Center in Decatur. If the VA decides to purchase the land, a new VA regional office would be constructed on the site.

Locating the regional office next to the medical center would provide better and more convenient service to veterans according to Gober.

"We are moving toward customer orientation. Our program of putting veterans first is working," the secretary said.

More than 400 persons from throughout the state who are involved in counseling and providing service to Georgia's more than 689,000 veterans attended the four-day school.

SOA honors military mothers

Devon Kerbow
School of the Americas

A luncheon to honor the School of the America's military mothers was held May 6 at a local Columbus restaurant.

SOA's chaplain, Capt. Anibal Cruz-Baez said the lunch was given in order to express appreciation of the important task held by the school's 18 military mothers.

"It's recognition for being a mother and a soldier," he said. Cruz-Baez added that Army mothers had a tough job in maintaining both a family and what can be a demanding career.

Marva Barriteau, a protocol sergeant, praised the Army's daycare centers and said that they made it easier to be a mother in the Army.

The function, sponsored by the Fort Benning Unit Ministry Team, came as a surprise to the mothers. "We were not expecting such an activity; it's never been done before," Barriteau said.

"We were so impressed and happy, especially when the flowers were presented," Barriteau said of the carnations that were handed to each mother.

Civilian mothers at the school were also awarded carnations. "One mother said I made her day," Cruz-Baez said.

D-Day: A weatherman's perspective

By John Belk
Det. 10, 1st Weather Group

The largest amphibious invasion in the history of warfare occurred on June 6, 1944 — D-Day — and the weather was a major factor. The Allies were trying to regain a foothold in France after being forced out of Dunkirk.

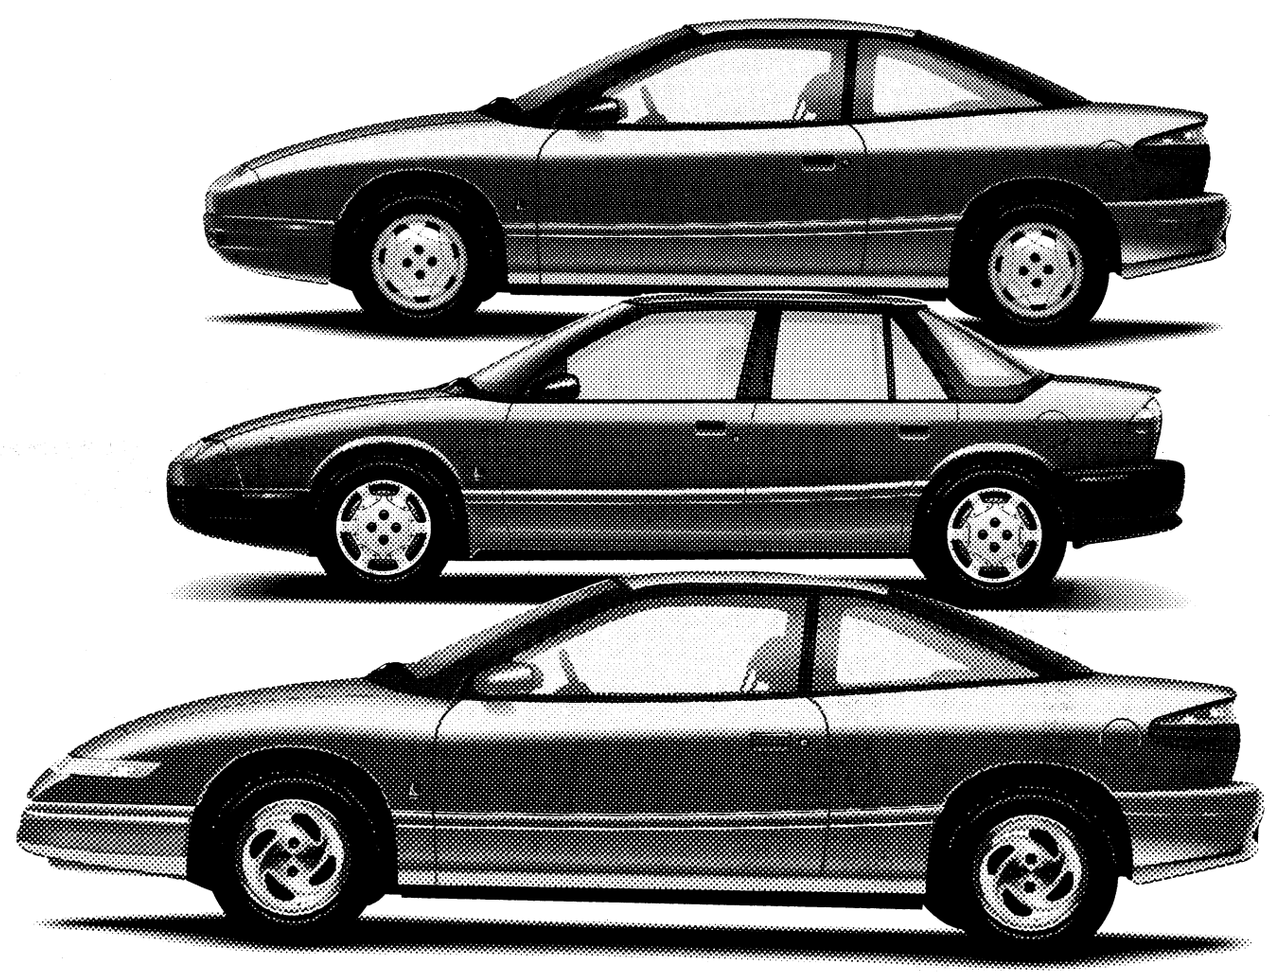
Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower was named supreme allied commander in December 1943. When he took command the plans for Operation Overlord, the invasion of France, called for three divisions to land in Normandy on May 1, 1944.

Eisenhower knew from his experiences in the Mediterranean Campaign that three divisions would not be enough to overcome the Nazi defenses. His insistence on adding two more divisions caused a delay to build more landing craft. He also wanted to wait for low tide to assist in clearing submerged obstacles, and a full moon for bombardment of on shore targets. These conditions would be met June 5, 6 and 7.

June 5 was selected as the new day for the invasion with future corrections to be made if the weather was uncooperative. The weather conditions on the original invasion date (May 1) were outstanding; low winds, calm seas and clear skies dominated the channel area. However, as June 5 approached the weather picture changed. Intense storms formed and their projected tracks brought them directly over the British Isles and the English Channel. The closer the invasion day came, the worse the weather looked for a successful attempt.

Eisenhower's meteorological team: Dr. J.M. Stagg, Col. Donald N. Yates, the Meteorological Office of the Allied Fleet and the Meteorological Office of the Allied Expeditionary Air Force; had their work cut out for them.

On the morning of June 4, the forecast for the invasion caused Eisenhower and his commanders in chief to decide to delay the invasion for 24 hours. The German forecasters across the channel saw the same thing and advised the senior Nazi commanders that an invasion during the period June 4 to 6 was highly unlikely due to such unfavorable conditions.



Actually, the conditions in the channel were the worst recorded for the month of June in 20 years. Due to the forecasts, many Nazi commanders were away from their posts. Field Marshal Erwin Rommel had returned to Germany for his wife's birthday June 6.

General Friedrich Dollman, commander of the 7th Army, was with his corps commanders at a map training exercise. Then on the morning of the 5th the forecast showed a glimmer of hope for the Allies. A new front had formed which was moving up the channel and would provide several hours of clearing weather along the assault areas. It would deteriorate on the evening of the 6th leaving inclement weather for an indefinite period.

After discussing the situation with his commanders in chief, Eisenhower launched the invasion with the simple words: "Ok! Let's go!" The weather did clear. The Nazi defenders were caught totally unaware.

The contribution of weathermen did not end there. There were volunteer observers who jumped in with the 82nd and 101st Airborne Divisions at 1 a.m., five hours before the beach landings. Other volunteers landed with glider units to provide weather support to close air control parties. Then there were forecasters assigned to Divisional and Corps Headquarters to provide follow-on forecasts to ground units.

Allied weathermen and their accurate forecasting abilities played a significant role in the success of Operation Overlord and helped save many lives due to the surprise of the invasion.

At this rate, the military will end up driving more Saturns than tanks.

A lot of military folks are signing up for Saturns. We figure moving as much as they do, they like that at every store they get treated pretty much the same way. And every time your car is serviced at a Saturn facility your car's service record is updated in Saturn's National Vehicle History Database. Plus, at around $13,100 it's a lot cheaper than an Abrams tank.

For the second straight year competitors converged on English Range, drawing more than 200 shooters to Fort Benning for the chance to win their share of more than ten-thousand dollars in cash and prizes.

Top prize for high A, B and C class competitiors in each catagory was a brand new Glock pistol.

The match was shot using the Lewis system, which breaks the shooters into thirds or A, B and C.

In the civilian competition, Bruce Braxton was the overall winner, with Robert Lawrence and Gene Dunn each finishing in the top spot for their class.

High Junior Male went to Ricky Phifer Jr. along with $100, while Jacqueline Flood won High Woman honors and $100.

X-calibere won the top spot for teams with Braxton, Larry Austin and Will Harrison doing the honors.

Second place went to the team of Bobby Tribble, Frank Reeves and Guy Allen from The Firing Line. Third place was won by Dalton Sporting Goods with Chris Day, Randy Starks and Bill Kranz doing the shooting.

In the law enforcement category, Jeff Blankenship won top honors in A class while George King won the B class and Ralph Iorin took the C class.

In the military category, Darryl Powell was high overall winner, with Steven Hartwell taking the B class and William Russell the C class.

Lawrence Cox, Michael Steele and Hartwell, all from the 75th Ranger Regiment, combined to win the top military team plaque with Powell, Michael Clark and William Allensworth from the Ranger Training Brigade taking second.

Gary Lamberth took home $100 by winning the L class, which could include any competitior shooting a stock model 17L or G-24 Glock who was not classified as Unlimited.

The Unlimited group consists of shooters who are professional, master class, part of the armed forces shooting team or in the top 25 per cent of major shooting competitions using a modified non-factory standard pistol. In this group, Derek Lawrence took first, winning $100 with Tony Spake second and $75 richer and William Lawrence finishing third with $50 in his pocket.

"We are extremely pleased with the turnout for this match," said Jim Graham of the Rifle and Pistol Club. "We are looking forward to hosting this match on an annual basis.

Terry K. Ray\Special to The Bayonet

Marsha Pittman fires off a round at station two.

"The Glock people, in particular competition director Chris Edwards, are ecstatic with the results from this match," said Graham.

According to Graham, this match, which is one of a series that Glock conducts around the country, has drawn the most competitors so far this year and was the second largest event last year.

"If we keep getting the response like we have had in the past two years, this could grow into one of the largest shooting competitions in the southeast." Graham said.

Sports: children heed these tips on safety

Egleston Children's Hospital

Sports offer great benefits for children by developing healthy bodies and self-esteem, but sports can also involve injury. Many sports-related injuries are preventable. The following are helpful tips about how you can prevent sports injuries this spring.

• Choose sports carefully. The chance of injury is greater if the degree of contact is greater. For example, football has a greater risk of injury than tennis.

• Watch out for knees. Knee injuries are the most common serious injury in major sports.

• Avoid boxing since it involves high risk of brain injury.

• Avoid the most common sports injuries, sprains and strains, by wearing protective equipment.

• Make sure your child does not play during storms with lightening. An open field can be very hazardous during an electrical storm.

• Make sure your child wears a approved helmet while riding bikes, skateboards, and in-line skates. In-line skaters should also wear elbow pads, knee pads, and wrist guards.

• See that your little league baseball or softball player does not throw curve balls. This can strain a growing bone in the elbow and can cause permanent damage.

• Ask your child's coach to limit the number of pitches thrown and innings pitched.

• The American Academy of Pediatrics recommends waiting until your child is 6 years old before beginning team sports, since children do not understand the concept of teamwork until then.

• Enroll late developing teens in contact sports only after their body size catches up with their peers.

• Be aware of important sports injuries your child may not communicate, such as injuries to self-esteem, self-confidence and attitudes toward physical activity.

Parents can help prevent these "injuries" by:

• Exposing children to a range of sports opportunities. Do not develop a prejudice for one sport.

• Looking for coaches who focus on developing skill and personality, not just on winning a game.

• Choosing situations where the priority is to have fun and where each child gets equal attention.

• Use the acronym RICE to help prevent an injury from getting worse. This stands for rest, ice, compression, and elevation. If an injury is so painful a child is unable to move his arm or leg, the limb may be broken. In this case, the best course of action is to splint the limb and take the child to a physician for an examination and X-ray.

For more information about sports injury prevention or any other area of child safety, call Egleston Children's Hospital at 321-KIDS.

crime watch

Military Police Activity

The following entries were extracted from the Fort Benning Military Police Blotters from May 10 to 16. Such entries may be incomplete and are not the adjudication of the guilt or innocence of any person.

This week's hot topic concerns bicycle safety. Summer is near and schools will soon be closed. It's time to remind ourselves of a few safety tips when we see children playing outside. Posted speed limits, especially in the housing areas, must be observed at all times.

Children are often unpredictable, and it is your responsibility as the driver to expect the unexpected. Parents should be aware that the Georgia Legislature has passed a law requiring children 16 years old and under to wear a bicycle helmet while operating a bicycle, either on the road or in the backyard. The bicycle helmet must be a helmet approved by the Snell Memorial Foundation or another approving authority.

As a parent, it is your responsibility to ensure that your children obey governing traffic laws and regulations. Children should cross the street only at intersections, walk on sidewalks, and always ride their bicycles on the right side of the road with the flow of traffic. Adult bicyclists are also required to wear a helmet when traveling on roadways with a speed limit of 35 mph or more. In addition, Fort Benning policy dictates the use of a reflective vest when the speed limit is 35 mph or more.

By practicing safety and using common sense, we can look forward to a safe summer.

• Two sergeants (husband and wife) were charged with assault upon a child under 16 after their 10-year-old son reported to a school official that his parents hit him frequently with a leather strap and electrical cord.

• A specialist was charged with drunk and disorderly conduct and communicating a threat after he became loud and obnoxious while intoxicated and attempted to leave a party. The specialist attempted to drive home but was forcibly stopped by another soldier. He then threatened to get his gun and shoot everyone at the party.

• A civilian was observed by Military Police traveling north in the southbound lane of Highway 27. After initiating a traffic stop, an odor of an alcoholic beverage was detected on his person. While searching the civilian, military police found a plastic bag containing marijuana. During a further search of his vehicle, a .25 caliber pistol was found along with six rounds in a magazine clip.

Further investigation revealed that the pistol was stolen. The civilian was apprehended and charged with possession of marijuana, theft by receiving stolen property, driving under the influence, and driving the wrong way on a one-way street.

Other activities included nine traffic accidents and 13 cases of driving under the influence of alcohol. There were five shoplifting cases reported at exchange facilities and 11 cases of larceny of private property.

Report any activity that seems wrong to the Military Police Station at 545-5222.

Q: How do I know how many calories I burn during exercise?

A: Exercising can improve your health and how you feel. Not exercising can increase your risk of heart disease. Clearly, it behooves you to be physically active daily.

Burning calories is a measure of how much energy your body uses. As you burn calories you will burn fat. The number burned depends on the intensity and your body weight.

Here are some examples:

If you want an accurate calorie burn, proceed with the example. Let's take badminton with a factor of 2.6 as an example. If you weigh 150 pounds and you play badminton for one hour, you will burn: 1 hour x 150 x 2.6 = 390 calories per hour. When you play for 15 minutes: .25 hours x 150 pounds x 2.6 = 97.5 calories in 15 minutes.

Q: Is it true that female gymnastics are injuring young women at alarming rates:

A: In a word or two, no way! During the last 20 years, women's gymnastics has experienced a dramatic increase in participation, and has also changed from being a sport predominated by women to a sport of children and adolescents. Preventing overuse injuries is important because they frequently occur and are often chronic in nature. Acute injuries may be prevented by practicing proper falling techniques.

External degrees offer opportunities

By Charles R. Sheeks
Army Continuing Education

Are you one of those people with college credit from several different colleges? Perhaps you have a few CLEP or DSST exams and also some credit for your military experience. With all of this college credit, you still do not have a college degree. Well, there is hope for you in the form of external college degrees.

Most external degrees are designed for the student who is unable to attend regular classes. Most offer classes via independent study. Some require a very small part of the degree to be completed by actual residence at the campus.

Usually this residency consists of a one or two week intensive course or practicum. External degrees are offered at the associate, bachelor's, master's and even the doctoral levels. Some external degree programs charge to have credit transferred to their program. Some have a flat fee for credit evaluation and another fee for graduation. One big advantage to an external degree program is the ability to continue the program even when the student moves.

If you are in the military or in a military family, your chances of moving are pretty good. If you are pursuing an external degree, you can simply continue at the next duty station.

Each education center has a directory of external degrees that includes a description of the degrees offered and the requirements and costs. It is also wise to discuss your educational objectives with an education counselor and be sure that the degree plans you have formulated are being delivered by an accredited institution.

One example of the external degree delivery system is the program offered by the Regent's College of New York. Regent's College offers both associate and baccalaureate degrees. The degrees are fully accredited by the Middle States Association of Colleges and Schools. Regent's degrees range from liberal arts to nursing and engineering.

The one factor that makes Regent's unique is that they do not offer any classes. They accept credit from other accredited colleges and universities, CLEP and DSST exams, Graduate Record Exam Subject Exams, military service credit as well as various other accredited forms of college level credit.

The best way to begin the Regent's program is to visit the Education Center and request an unofficial evaluation of your credit toward the Regent's degree you wish to pursue. This unofficial evaluation can be completed without any cost to you, the student.

After completing the evaluation, the education counselor will discuss your credit and how you can proceed to earn the other courses that you may need for the degree.

For more information on Regent's or any of the other external degrees on the market, please contact your Army Continuing Education Center.

Credit blocking creates problems

Better Business Bureau

Have you ever presented your credit or charge card to a store clerk and were surprised to be told you were over your credit limit?

According to the Federal Trade Commission, if this happened soon after you stayed at a hotel or motel or rented a car, the problem may have been caused by credit card "blocking."

When you use a credit or charge card to check into a hotel or motel or to rent a car, the clerk usually contacts your card issuer electronically with the estimated cost. If the card issuer approves the transaction, your available line of credit is reduced by this amount. This is called a "block" or an "authorization."

If you pay your bill with the same credit card you used at the beginning of the transaction, the final actual charge probably will replace the block within a day or two. However, if you use a different credit card, cash or check to pay for these services, the company that issued the credit card you originally presented might keep the block on for as long as 15 days — long after you've checked out of the hotel or returned the car.

To avoid the problems credit card blocking may cause, ask clerks how much is being blocked on your credit line and how that amount was determined. Consider paying for all hotel or rental car expenses with the same credit card you used at the beginning of the transaction. If you must use a different card, ask the clerk to remove the block.

For more information on other credit issues, the Council of Better Business Bureaus has published the following booklets, "Consumer Credit" and "Credit Reporting." For a single copy of either booklet, send $2 and a self-addressed, business-size envelope to CBBB, Dept. 023, Washington, D.C. 20042-0023.

18th reunion

A history of honor

By Karen S. Morarie
Bayonet staff writer

The first time he saw Omaha Beach, he was wading ashore June 6, 1944, as part of the D-Day invasion. Fifty years and a Medal of Honor later, he's ready to go back to Normandy, but first, he came here.

As part of the 18th Infantry Regiment, 3rd Brigade, 24th Infantry Division's annual reunion, two former members of the regiment and recipients of the Medal of Honor came to Fort Benning to celebrate the unit's heritage.

Gino J. Merli, who participated in the D-Day invasion, received his medal as a private first class in Company H, for actions performed near Sars la Bruyere, Belgium, Sept. 4 and 5, 1944.

Walter D. Ehlers was awarded the medal for his actions as a staff sergeant near Gloville, France, June 9 and 10, 1944.

The two men were the regiment's guests of honor for the reunion, which began May 26 with an evening reception at the National Infantry Museum, and continued through Saturday with a live fire exercise at Red Cloud Range, a luncheon at the Follow Me Golf Course, a regimental retreat ceremony at York Field, and a regimental dinner at the Fort Benning Officers' Club.

Merli and Ehlers are two of only 186 living recipients of the Medal of Honor.

Merli, who will attend D-Day memorial services in Normandy along with members of 3rd Bn., said he was glad to be able to participate, even though he expects the occasion to be very sad.

"The important thing is to make sure the victory we won (in World War II) was not in vain," he said. "We are taking time out to remember the real heroes, who gave their lives so that we may remain free."

Merli's citation for the Medal of Honor reads, in part:

"... was serving as a machine gunner ... when his company was attacked by a superior German force."

Despite the death of his squad members, including his assistant gunner, Merli stayed by his weapon, feigning death when enemy soldiers approached, firing on them when they withdrew.

The enemy requested a truce at daybreak, and the American negotiating party found Merli still at his gun, with 19 enemy dead directly in front of his firing position.

Merli's citation concludes: "Private Merli's gallantry and courage, and the losses and confusion he caused the enemy, contributed materially to our victory."

Ehlers' citation relates his movements in leading his squad against a "heavily defended strong point, personally killing four members of an enemy patrol that attacked him enroute. Then, crawling forward through withering machine gun fire, he pounced upon the gun crew and put it out of action."

Ehlers was also cited for disabling another machine gun and two mortar positions, then diverting enemy fire to himself to allow his squad to withdraw when caught in an untenable position.

"At this point, though wounded himself, he carried his wounded rifleman to safety and then returned fearlessly over the shell-swept field to retrieve the automatic rifle which he was unable to carry previously," the citation reads. "After having his wound treated he refused to be evacuated and returned to lead his squad. The intrepid leadership, indomitable courage and fearless aggressiveness displayed by Staff Sergeant Ehlers in the face of overwhelming enemy odds serve as an inspiration to others."

Other guests for the reunion included veterans from conflicts ranging from World War II to Vietnam.

Accidents down as safety takes priority

Army News Service

In the Army, artillery is known as the "King of Battle," but it's not the biggest killer on the battlefield, according to Brig. Gen. Dennis Kerr, director of Army safety and commanding general, U.S. Army Safety Center, Fort Rucker, Ala.

"If you want to know the biggest killer, take out a mirror and look at yourself, because human-error accidents have caused most of the casualties that we've had," Kerr said.

The Army did some searching after the Gulf War and came up with a plan to attack the problem both in garrison and on the battlefield.

"We asked ourselves what we could do as an Army to get our arms around those losses," Kerr said. "The first thing to do was get safety into the METL (mission-essential task list) business. When you have a crisis, deployment or war and you're short on time, the first thing you forget to do is something that's not automatic. Safety is not an add-on," he said. "It needs to be part of everything we do.

"Every individual is accountable for self-discipline and technical and tactical competence, but our sergeants and officers bear an additional responsibility of ensuring that standards are enforced, and that includes safety. Even leaders not within the chain of command have added responsibility."

That emphasis paid off in fiscal 1993 with fewer total accidents, injuries and fatalities, according to Army safety officials.

The total number of ground accidents decreased by 17 percent for that period, which mirrors a reduction rate of 35 percent for the past three years, officials said. Specifically, Kerr said, the improvement is due in large part to risk management and other programs, such as the aviation crew coordination training program and civilian accident prevention program.

Still, most soldiers are killed off the job. "POV (privately owned vehicle) off-duty accidents still kill more of our soldiers than anything," Kerr said. "Last year, we lost 122 soldiers in POV accidents. Though that is a large number, it's still the smallest number we've ever had."

The Army's ratio of alcohol-related fatalities to POV fatalities was 8 percent, compared to the national figure of more than 45 percent. Officials credit the low number to the Army's focus on seatbelt use and education on the dangers of drinking and driving.

The trend shows a sharp reduction in the number of Army POV accidents that involved alcohol — 36 percent less than the previous year and 32 percent less than the average for the past three years.

Other highlights in accident categories for the period include:

- Total accident rate: down 8 percent;
- POV fatalities: down 10 percent; and
- POV accident rate: down 2 percent.

There was one more Class A aviation flight accident than the previous year, but "strong efforts of aviation leaders and the efforts to focus aviation components on protection of the force" resulted in no aviation fatalities in the year's last quarter, officials said.

"There has been a full-court press to integrate safety, risk management, shared responsibility and safety in the METL business, into doctrine, training, acquisition, sustainment and warfighting," Kerr said. "And we're making progress.

"We hope by the year 2001 that safety will be fully integrated into all doctrine and all training going on in the Army in the active, Guard, Reserve and civilian work force," Kerr said.

Military ABCs not what they used to be

Back during the time of World War II, there was no Echo Company. Soldiers who were members of any Company E were part of Easy Company instead.

The phonetic alphabet is not the same as it was, although Charlie is still the word that stands for the letter C, Mike is still the word for M, Victor is still the letter V and X-Ray is still the word for X. What other word could you use for X, Xanadu?

Instead of the Army using the word Foxtrot for the letter F, as it does today, in World War II, F was just plain Fox.

Today's phonetic alphabet is full of words that sound tough and daring, like Bravo and Delta. World War II equivalents to these letters were Baker and Dog. This word for the letter D is where the expression "dog soldier" came from.

The World War II alphabet used a lot of names for letters, such as George for G, Nan for N, Peter for P, Roger for R and William for W. Today's alphabet uses literary names like Juliet for J and Romeo for R. It also uses Oscar for O. World War II equivalents for J and O were musical, Jig and Oboe. Here is today's military phonetic alphabet, compared with that of the World War II era:

Alpha — Able, Bravo — Baker
Charlie — Charlie
Delta — Dog , Echo — Easy
Foxtrot — Fox
Golf — George, Hotel — How India — Item, Juliet — Jig
Kilo — King, Lima — Love
Mike — Mike
November — Nan
Oscar — Oboe, Papa — Peter
Quebec — Queen
Romeo — Roger
Sierra — Sugar, Tango — Tare
Uniform — Uncle
Victor — Victor
Whiskey — William
X-ray — X-ray
Yankee — Yoke
Zulu — Zebra

New U.S. soldier no stranger to the infantry

By James Brownlee
Infantry Training Brigade

A recent graduate of Company C, 2nd Battalion, 54th Infantry Regiment, is no stranger to the life of an infantryman, because in his home country of El Salvador he was just that.

This soldier is Pvt. 2 Fortunato A. (Tony) Guzman, who in April of 1990 came to the United States for the first time in his life.

He came to the states because of the problems he was having in the El Salvadoran Army. Not any kind of discipline problems, but family problems to which the El Salvadorian army was not sensitive.

His reasons for joining the U.S. Army were consistent with the reasons he had joined the El Salvadorian army. When he finished high school he joined the local military academy to become an officer. He succeed in fulfilling this quest by fighting as a platoon leader in the second brigade infantry.

Those opportunities lead him to the United States, where he saved some money and put himself in school to learn basic English. He learned enough in three months to get himself a job at the Washington Free Health Clinic as HIV/AIDS counselor out reach coordinator for HIV programs.

While he was in school learning English he met his wife, Michelle, and they were married in January of 1992. Not long after that, he acquired his green card and enlisted as a private in the U.S. Army.

"I like to be hard, honest and follow the rules my leaders set before me to follow," Guzman said. When asked what kind of leadership style he used while leading his men, he said, "I like the way drill sergeant Staff Sgt. Eddie Waymyers conducted his platoon when I was going through my basic phase of One Station Unit Training. His style of leadership has influenced my career in many ways and will always be a part of my career philosophy."

When asked why he chose his military occupatioal specialty he stated, "There isn't any other MOS that I would have thought of joining. I was an infantry platoon leader in El Salvador and the infantry is home to me."

"I want to get as much military training as I possibly can. From there I want to enroll in as many college courses as possible to become eligible for OCS (Officer Candidate School). Then from there I want to spend some time in a Special Forces unit," Guzman said.

"Pvt. Guzman is one squared-away individual and as soldiers go he is top notch. He has got what it takes to go as far as he possibly wants to in the Army," said Staff Sgt. Richard T. McAfee, a drill sergeant from 2nd Bn., 54th Inf. Regt.

"Guzman was my platoon guide during his whole cycle of OSUT (One Station Unit Training), he kept the platoon squared away," said Staff Sgt. Charles T. Jones Jr., also a drill sergeant from 2nd Bn., 54th Inf. Regt. "He was always willing to train no matter what the conditions. He has more initiative and self-motovation than most. He is a hard-charging individual — the type of soldier every squad leader would love to get."

world war II

50 years ago this week

• On New Guinea, intense combat raged throughout the area as strong Japanese counterattacks met a new Allied offensive that began with the U.S. assault on Biak Island. Both sides sustained heavy casualties while trying to seize and maintain momentum through a series of fierce tank and infantry battles.

Around Aitape, Japanese attacks continued to force the United States to narrow its beachhead. Even so, Gen. Douglas MacArthur issued a statement announcing that while some difficult fighting remained, the United States had successfully established its strategic position on New Guinea.

By week's end, the U.S. 186th and 162nd Infantry regiments were able to overcome the determined enemy resistance and drive forward toward the island's airfields.

• In Italy, the Allies continued to advance despite a series of German counterattacks as the U.S. II and VI corps breached the Caesar Line and began their drive toward Rome. Meanwhile, the British Eighth Army captured Arce in the bitterly contested Liri Valley and Canadian forces seized San Giovanni, Frosinone and Ceprano. Around Anzio, the U.S. 36th Division took Monte Artesimo and Velletri.

• On the Eastern Front, the Nazis tried to regain their lost momentum by launching several strong attacks near Jassy. Despite the initial success of the German advances, the Soviets were able to quickly reconsolidate their forces and mount a successful counterattack that succeeded in retaking the lost ground.

• Fort Benning welcomed the 71st Light Infantry Division that established its training base on Sand Hill after arriving from California. Commanded by Maj. Gen. Robert Spragins, the unit specialized in mountain warfare.

Wilson fifth-graders become 'weather-wise'

By Jerrie Macintire
Special to The Bayonet©

Fifth-grade students at Wilson School have become efficient amateur meteorologists this year and are producing regular weather forecasts while honing other academic skills through a pilot study program called Project Atmosphere.

Under the direction of Natalie Delp, students obtain daily data from a computer link with cable television's The Weather Channel. By factoring such components as temperature, wind speed and direction, humidity, precipitation and cloud cover, the students can forecast the weather for one or several days.

"Through the computer link, children gather data, discuss the information, and come up with a weather report," said Delp, who represents one of just two schools in the Columbus area using this pilot program. Delp communicates with an atmospheric education resource agent, who advises educators with technical information as well as methods of use and presentation.

Jerrie Macintire/Special to The Bayonet

Sarah McClelland presents weather while Brian Saddler (sitting) and Demetris Harris (standing) use a computer connection with the Weather Channel to provide the latest meteorological information.

Current weather information is provided by DataStreme, the computer link, which enables Delp to turn atmospheric studies into cross-curricular lessons.

For example, students learn a bit of geography when predicting the weather for grandparents, who may live anywhere in the world. Various weather charts present challenging but interesting math and science lessons, while weather patterns in other geographic regions can contribute to social studies lessons, said Delp.

As an added bonus, the program sharpens oral expression and communications skills as children learn to present their forecasts in a professional way, Delp added.

Project Atmosphere, a partnership between scientists and teachers sponsored by the American Meteorological Society, is designed to present atmospheric topics in interesting ways for various age levels while promoting interest in math, science and technology.

Delp said this goal is working in her class, where youngsters enthusiastically participate in daily lessons. The weather has become a passion with some, like Sarah McClelland, who announced they want to pursue careers in meteorology.

McClelland said she eagerly looks forward to the evening news when she compares her own weather prediction to that of local forecasters.

The fifth graders consider their forecasts mostly accurate and always fun to develop, according to Kimberly Lee. While working on a recent three-day forecast with her class, Lee said, "I like working with computers. I want to keep doing this," as students functioned cooperatively in groups studying DataStreme information and discussing such variables as dew point, wind direction and precipitation.

School officials said the program has been successful and was even highlighted in a comprehensive article on Project Atmosphere in the February and March edition of "Weatherwise" magazine. The article included the same photo of Delp and three Wilson students which was displayed in poster-sized proportions at a recent California weather symposium.

Delp said she is pleased with results of this year's program and is already planning for expansion. "Next year we would like to establish a telecommunications link with other schools that have the program," she said. An electronic pen pal connection would enrich students at both schools by providing additional lessons in social studies and geography while sharpening language arts skills through regular communications, she said.

Principal Phyllis Parker said she is enthusiastic about the potential for Project Atmosphere and how it would enhance plans currently underway for student enrichment at Wilson School.

"In the future, I would like to see a weekly news show with children from Ms. Delp's class providing the weather forecast," she said.

Young authors write, illustrate own creations

By Jerrie Macintire
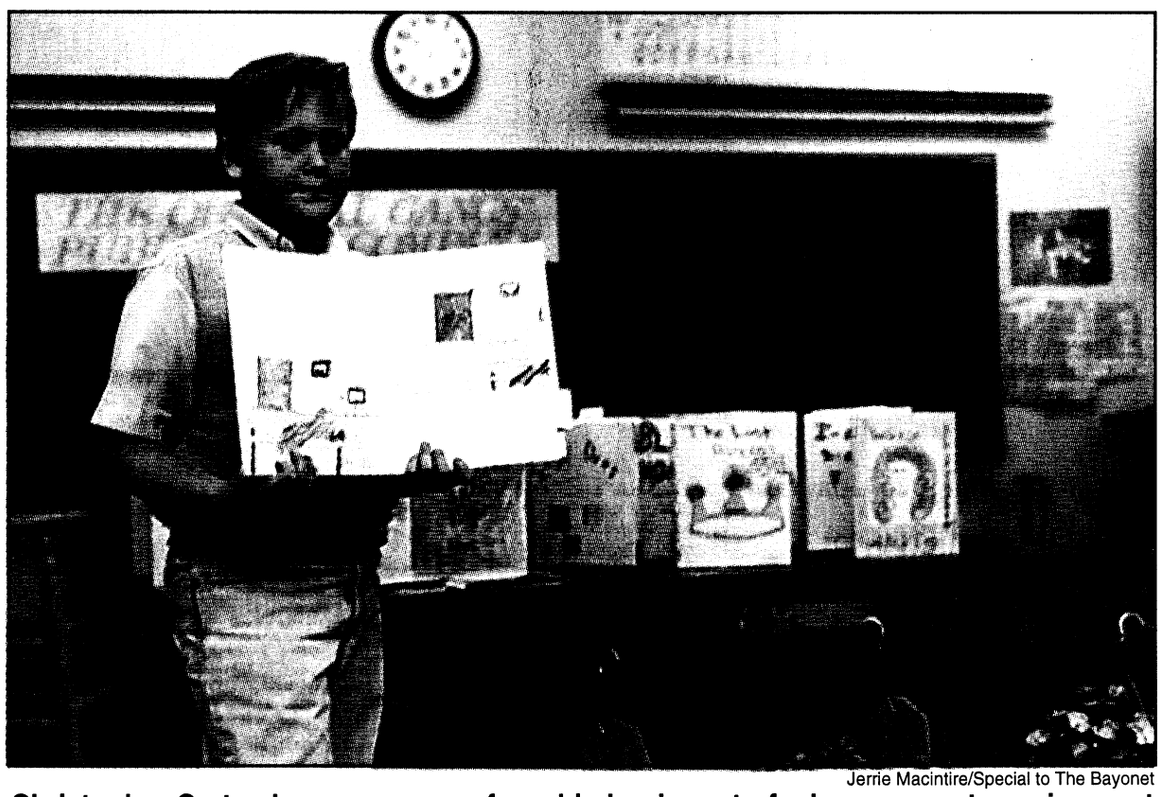
Special to The Bayonet©

Fifth-grade authors at White School have explored the realm of literature through their newly released books featuring historical fiction, fantasy, horror, modern narratives and nonfiction.

The volumes, part of a language arts assignment in Evelyn Braman's fifth grade, were created and illustrated entirely by the students and published through their organization, The Original Gang's Publishing Company.



Parent volunteers contributed numerous hours to typing and proofreading the manuscripts and organizing the authors' reception May 26.

As part of the writing process, students completed the manuscripts, then performed the necessary details of rewriting, editing, layout, summaries and illustrations.

As an added touch, youngsters designed book jackets along with the standard information of a photo and short biography about the author along with glowing but fictional reviews from numerous literary notables such like The New York Times.

For example, Siskel and Ebert were credited with "Expect the Unexpected" in "Spunkerbean," while Stephen King was credited with the review of "The Gargoyle" which stated "A stunning, notable book! Hodges excels at horror."

All these language arts assignments were part of the emphasis on reading and writing at White School, said Janet Wynn, principal.

Jerrie Macintire/Special to The Bayonet

Christopher Carte shares one page from his book, part of a language arts assignment at White School.

"We do a substantial number of reading, writing, listening, speaking and communications lessons anyway. The students have just taken it one step further," she said.

Braman, now in her fourth year of teaching this unit on publishing, covers the entire process, beginning with developing an idea and ending with a neatly finished volume complete in every way.

As self-appointed president of the publishing company, Braman assigned positions within the organization based upon interviews and resume information provided by the students.

The class also experienced numerous other real-life lessons associated with publishing; the importance of deadlines was emphasized when some students had to stay after school to complete work; pupils were versed on the problems with plagiarism, or borrowing too heavily from another writer; and one unexpected lesson on copyright laws occurred when students accidentally chose to name their company after one already in existence.

The students altered the name and then began the creative process of writing.

The unabridged volumes spring from the imaginations of the students, said Braman, who allowed free rein in the choice of subjects and plots.

One youngster choose to write historical fiction, and chronicled the saga of a young girl and her mother attempting to escape slavery by following the North Star, part of the Big Dipper constellation and a common navigational guide.

Another student explored science fiction through a thriller about space, while others wrote about friendships, family life and even fantasies featuring gargoyles and werewolves.

Armageddon was the subject of one book, which told the saga of nuclear war between the United States and China, while another narrative chronicled the frustrations of a boy "who hated school because he could not read. The child eventually overcame his difficulty and grew up to be a college professor.

Other characters in the books had to adjust to the presence of a new sibling, make friends with children from other cultures, and learn the intricacies of proper pet care.

In many cases, the students' writings reflected conflicts or issues in their own lives, said Braman.

While speaking to visiting parents at an author's reception, Braman said "the artwork is exquisite and the language is beautiful."

"I hope these books will have a special place on your bookshelf," she said.

Boating week scheduled

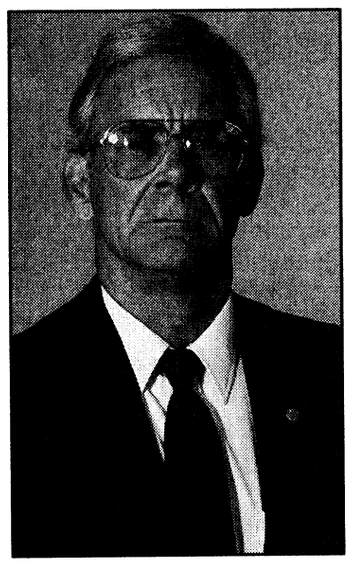
American Forces Information Service

President Bill Clinton has proclaimed Sunday through June 11 National Safe Boating Week.



According to the National Safe Boating Council, more than half of boating fatalities that result in death can be traced to alcohol use. Operating a boat while intoxicated is illegal.

Most people who die in boating accidents fall out of or capsize boats and end up in the water, officials said. Each drink decreases the ability to coordinate arm and leg movements. Once in the water, even able swimmers lose coordination and can drown.

Safety officials said alcohol affects a person's balance. Small boats are unstable in the best of conditions. Entering or leaving them or just moving around is hazardous even for sober, agile persons, officials said. People seldom notice problems with their balancing ability after a drink or two, but small, tippy boats do.

The U.S. Coast Guard's Boating Educaion Branch suggests expanding the designated driver concept to boating — those operating boats should drink only nonalcoholic beverages. However, officials warn, even passengers are at risk on the water if they are intoxicated. Also, everyone on the boat should wear approved life jackets.

USO still home away from home for service members

By F. Peter Wigginton
American Forces Information Service

Despite cutbacks on Guam and consolidations elsewhere in the world, the United Service Organizations is still operating strongly, said Chapman Cox, president of the organization.

"USO will continue to do business as long as there are U.S. armed forces," he said. "Our mission will not change. It hasn't for 53 years. However, the way USO does business must adjust to circumstances. We will provide services where the military wants us, if we can afford it at that location."

Cox said as the military draws down and restructures itself, morale, welfare and recreation activities also are cutting back.

"Where that's happening, we find the military coming to us and asking for help. It's a paradox: The military is getting smaller, and yet we're being asked to do more," said Cox.

"That's a real challenge because in times like this when there is no conflict, the public tends to forget about USO and needed support, when in fact our mission is still very vital and needed."

He said a good example of responding to military request occurred in Fulda, Germany, where USO took over the recreation center in mid-1992. "We ran it quite successfully after the military asked us to take up the slack because of the drawdown."

Cox explained the difference between Guam, where thousands of Americans are stationed and the USO facility is closing, and Berlin, where the drawdown has taken a heavy toll but facilities remain open.

He said USO in Guam is withdrawing because so few people — perhaps one or two a day — use facilities, whereas hundreds of people daily use the Berlin USO.

"People on base in Guam don't need help. But we're keeping Berlin open because it's a place where itinerant service people can find a home away from home. Out in the civilian economy in Berlin, Americans often don't read or speak the language. They may not know how to use the telephones or banks.

"When you get somebody on leave in Berlin with his 18-year-old wife and 1-year-old child and something happens — run out of money or have something stolen — they need a home. We have three of these kinds of USOs that are very heavily used: Paris, Rome and Berlin," he said.

Cox said the USO never discontinues a service without notifying theater and local commanders who have troops served by it.

"In Guam's case, that was the Pacific Command commander in chief, the commanding general of Anderson Air Force Base and the captain of the Navy base. We notified them all, and they said they understood what we had to do," he said.

Elsewhere, he said, USO is very active. There were six tours between Christmas and New Year's in Somalia. Also there was one to Iceland, one in the Caribbean, six to Europe.

Cox said USO is also trying to posture itself for future unpredictable crisis situations, like Somalia. To do that, USO already has four mobile canteens, which can move from various locations around the world to the crisis location.

David Wyckoff, USO senior vice president, said the organization has 34 affiliates in the United States plus 15 operations in the Atlantic and 10 operations in the Pacific. Those are places where we have directors. But in each one of those places we have satellites. If you add up all that, we have about 170 locations to keep our troops connected with home," said Wyckoff.

AFAP symposium to address quality of life issues

By Jerrie Macintire
Special to The Bayonet©

Delegates to the Fort Benning Army Family Action Plan symposium will gather June 7 to discuss quality of life issues.

The Armywide AFAP program is a grass roots process that allows comments and suggestions about a variety of issues from Army personnel.

"The Army Family Action Plan symposium is a forum that allows individuals to address quality of life issues," said Michelle Aldridge, Family Unit Network coordinator.

Suggestions are submitted on issue cards available at the Family Unit Network Center, Building 359, or may be presented by telephone the day of the symposium between 8 a.m. and 1 p.m. at 682-0643.

The theme for the 1994 symposium is "AFAP — The Shape of Things to Come."

The theme, Aldridge said, is indicative of the many changes soldiers and families are experiencing and Fort Benning's unyielding commitment to continue and even improve the quality of life offered to the community.

Suggestions are welcome on all aspects of Army life and may be anonymous, Aldridge said. Issues specific to Fort Benning will be reviewed Tuesday and addressed in a series of local meetings over the next several months.

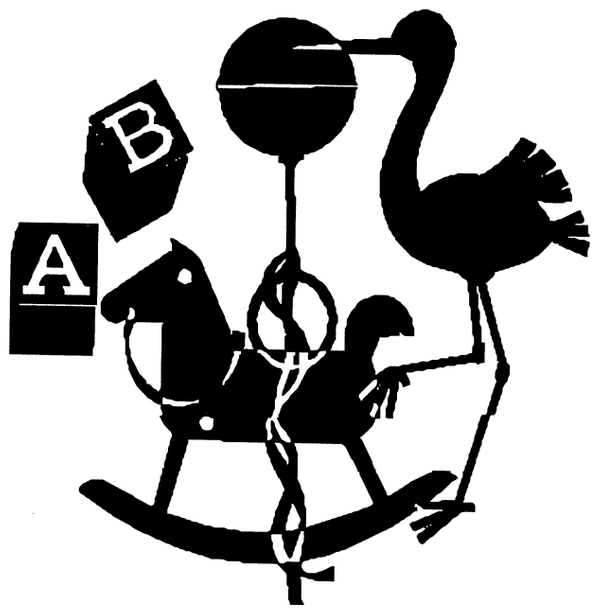
Although officials are seeking issues specific to Fort Benning, Armywide concerns are also welcome. Issues nonspecific to Fort Benning cannot be resolved locally but will be forwarded to Training and Doctrine Command and possibly the Department of the Army, Aldridge said.

The day of the symposium, delegates will break into six work groups to discuss quality of life issues, Aldridge said.

The six work groups will cover issues in consumer services; youth and education; health issues including medical and dental care; housing, which includes military police activities; soldier and family support services; and relocation and quality of life.

The AFAP symposium is designed to keep the channels of communication open between the Army community and the administration while improving quality of life.

Last year at Fort Benning, more than 100 local issues surfaced.



At the national level, the top issues raised were maintaining commissary benefits, preventing erosion of health care benefits as a result of downsizing, establishing a cost of living allowance in the continental United States, ensuring that child care fees are balanced for all income levels, and expanding the GI Bill benefits.

Over the past 10 years, the Armywide AFAP program has resulted in 212 recommended changes; 32 recommendations resulted in new legislation, 92 changes recommended resulted in new or revised Army policies, and 88 changes recommended resulted in new or improved programs.

Some examples include improved barracks dayrooms and living spaces, better group life insurance coverage, and improved consumer services through the Army Air Force Exchange Service.

For more information on the AFAP program, call Aldridge at 545-5602 or 545-5246.

TRADOC commander: American heroes all around

Frederick M. Franks
Training and Doctrine Command

WASHINGTON (Army News Service) — We need not look up "heroes" in history books. They're all around us every day.

American heroes. They are Americans from all across America who look like America. They are soldiers and their families. They are volunteers reaching out to serve when needed with a hand to help and a heart to care.

I recently went to Fort Bragg, N.C., to visit with fellow soldiers injured in the tragic accident March 23 at Pope Air Force Base. President Clinton, Secretary of the Army Togo West and Army Chief of Staff Gen. Gordon Sullivan had all previously visited our soldiers.

I have seen combat, and I have been among heroism on the battlefield in two wars, in Vietnam, and in Iraq. I also have seen brave soldier-heroes in hospitals from Vietnam to Valley Forge and Saudi Arabia to Walter Reed. Now there, listening, I saw it all again — American soldiers rising to a moment not of their choosing.

Later, visiting with injured soldiers in the hospital, I was struck with their courage and selflessness. They asked about their fellow soldiers. They talked about getting back to duty. They talked about those who had died or others hurt worse than they. They talked about everything but themselves. They were hurt and down but already on the way back. They were inspiring to be with. They are your soldiers — America's Army. They are sons and daughters, husbands and wives, brothers and sisters. American soldiers.

That same day, I went to Crested Butte, Colo., for the opening ceremonies of the National Disabled Veterans Winter Sports Clinic. This is a week sponsored by the Department of Veterans Affairs and by the Disabled American Veterans with significant corporate assistance.

It was started eight years ago by Sandy Trombetta, clinic organizer and director, when he reached out to a disabled veteran and began a dream. This year, his dream included more than 240 veterans who were amputees, visually impaired or dealing with spinal-cord injuries. They had assembled at Crested Butte to receive rehabilitation through skiing, snowmobiling, swimming and other vigorous sports. Many of those veterans were from regional VA medical centers, and two soldier-amputees were from actions last fall in Somalia.

But there was more there than athletics. There were Americans reaching out to one another: veterans, volunteers from Crested Butte and from across America, craftsmen configuring prosthetic ski devices on-the-spot out of the back of a truck, physicians, prosthetists, Sandy Trombetta, and Bruce Nitsche and Art Wilson from the national headquarters of the DAV pulling it all together.

Americans from our wars and from other operations were there: World War II, Korea, Vietnam, Desert Storm and Somalia. They are the American veterans who get a reminder every day as they get in their wheelchairs, strap on their prostheses, or reach for their canes — these never go away.

Who are they? They are the same Americans I saw at Fort Bragg and at other places in the past who did what their country asked. And they are supported by other Americans who did not go away and who did not forget, Americans who, long after the battles, remain, remember and then continue their commitment of reaching out to help veterans help themselves. Communication without words. All of it — selfless service.

After speaking by phone to Maj. Gen. Mike Steele, commander of the 82d Airborne Division, who had just finished visiting his soldiers at Brooke Army Hospital in San Antonio, I went to Brooke on my way back from Colorado, and was permitted to visit the wards with most of the very seriously burned soldiers from Bragg. I was escorted by Col. (Dr.) Basil A. Pruitt, commander and director of the U.S. Army Institute of Surgical Research (U.S. Army Burn Center), and Brig. Gen. Mike Canavan, assistant division commander of the 82nd. I was met there by Col. Elizabeth Greenfield, chief nurse.

I also was able to talk with some soldier-families in a splendid family assistance center staffed mostly with volunteers and set up at Fort Sam Houston, Texas. I have seen heroic actions on the battlefield, and I have personally felt the pain of combat as well as the physical and emotional battles on the long road back. But I was not ready for the heroism I saw again in Texas.

Every soldier I visited who could talk said to me either "hooah," "airborne" or "all the way." Now, that is soldier talk for a lot of things, but mainly it is about soldiers fighting through enormous pain and grabbing onto the verbal symbols of the toughness and commitment to one another that bind them together and make them so great in service to America.

I spoke to each soldier, but more communication passed between us than words. They said more to me about courage, selfless service and trust than I could ever describe. They are American soldiers, being cared for by other soldiers and airmen and soldier-doctors — the best caring for the best. Reaching out to one another, they are the strength of America. They trust one another. There is something noble, good and right about such American soldiers. I was honored to be in their presence.

Heroes. All around us. They are not from some other planet or strangers from a history book.

Where do they come from? How do we get such people? They come from America, and they are us. They reach out to one another and reach out to serve a cause greater than themselves. They were hurt badly but were thinking of what they had — not what they did not have — and what to make of that.

I count myself lucky to be among such Americans, to walk in their ranks, to both serve them and be entrusted to lead them.

Look around you and find the best in America. It's all around us every day. We notice it during tough times. It was especially all around me on these three powerful days. Please include a prayer for these heroic Americans still in hospitals or recovering, and for their families and the families of those who died.

Super Stardom awaits winner of NBA Finals

By Jim Gaffney
Tribune Media Services

Most recently, it was Jordan.

Before that, it was Magic, Bird and Isiah.

Who will be basketball's next superstar?

SPOTLIGHT

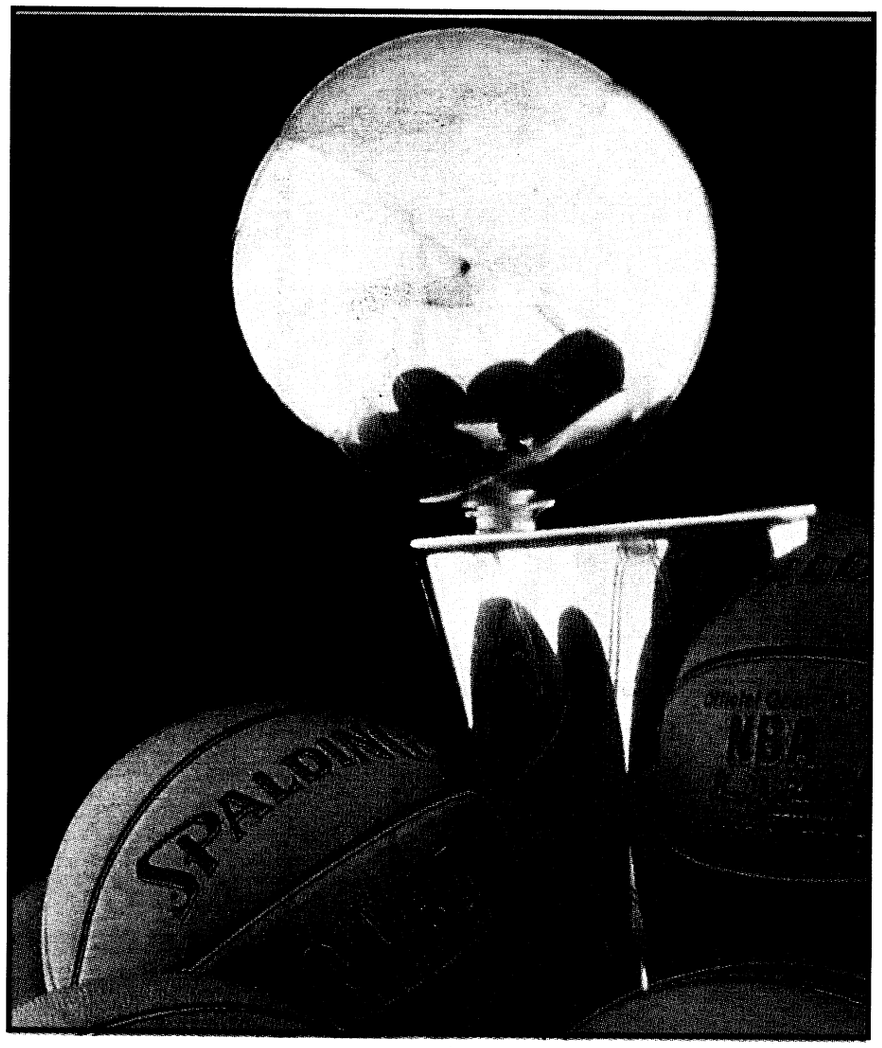
"At this point, we just don't know," says NBC announcer Bill Walton. "The great thing about the NBA playoffs is that a player can go out, grab the title and elevate his status and reputation ... perhaps enough to join the legends of the league. Everyone is waiting for the next chapter in the NBA's history to be written, and it may happen with this series."

Walton, who won NBA titles with the Portland Trail Blazers in 1977 and the Boston Celtics in 1986, brings his knowledge and passion for basketball to the microphone this week as the NBA Finals continue on NBC. He'll join Bob Costas for pregame, halftime and postgame analysis, while Marv Albert, Matt Guokas and Ahmad Rashad report at courtside.

Unlike the regular season, during which the nightly grind of games takes its toll on the players, the playoffs offer basketball at its finest. Walton cites two reasons: "First, there are fewer games — basically two or three a week — and second, there is virtually no travel in the playoffs. You're in one city for almost a week at a time and even when you do travel, especially within your conference, you have short airplane trips. That makes a huge difference.

"The regular-season life of an NBA player is a new flight, a new game, a new opponent every day," Walton adds, "so the time to prepare is minimal. Not so in the playoffs, and it shows."

Unfortunately, playing a series of games against the same opponent, with so much at stake, can bring conflicts -- both personal and professional -- to the surface. It's happened a number of times this postseason, with clips of trash-talking and bench-clearing brawls showing up on nightly sportscasts around the country.



"There's always been rough play in basketball," offers the soft-spoken and personable Walton, "but violence and fighting have absolutely no place in the game. Basketball is a game of beauty, of movement and finesse, and physical contact like that has no place here. The whole concept of resorting to punching is ludicrous.

"I'm all for a much-more-aggressive stance by the officials and the league to try and eliminate the trash-talking," Walton continues. "It's so needless, so mindless, and it has nothing to do with what the game is about. The scoreboard is the ultimate judge. What you say along the way doesn't matter."

Regardless of how tough a road this year's NBA champion will have taken to reach the top, it will pale in comparison to Walton's journey from basketball standout at UCLA to respected NBA analyst. "Who would have believed that I would go into broadcasting?", he says. "I'm almost seven feet tall, with red hair and a big nose, I suffer from a speech impediment, and here I am on the varsity at NBC."

Walton quickly credits his parents and coaches for preparing him for life's struggles. "One of the points my coaches made was to always think like a champion, act like a champion and eventually become a champion, so confidence on the basketball court was never a problem for me. I grew up expecting to be a good player."

And a good player he was. Despite an NBA career that lasted only 468 regular-season games due to ankle and foot problems, Walton is considered one of basketball's all-time-great centers. In addition to his two NBA titles, he won the league's MVP award in 1978. Prior to turning pro, Walton won three college player of the year awards while leading UCLA to NCAA championships in 1972 and 1973.

When: This week on NBC

"I'm a product of my life's teachers," Walton says, "who gave me a sense of pride to feel good about who I am and what I was doing. They showed me how great life can be, and to never settle for anything less."

Walton is proud to say he's earned his network blazer, starting at the bottom four years ago and working hard to learn the business. As proof, he tells this story of his first assignment: "It was Christmas Day, and I had to announce a CBA basketball game on the radio from Bakersfield, Calif. Not only was that a tough sell to my kids, to tell them that I wouldn't be home on Christmas, but then the team went out of business the next day."

Sticking to his strong work ethic, Walton pressed on. His was not a case of an ex-jock stepping into a high-profile job right after retirement, a common practice in network-TV sports these days.

"I've worked hard," he insists, "and at all levels. I've done a lot of writing for newspapers and magazines. I've worked at (cable stations) Prime Ticket and Prime Network, as well as ESPN and on local TV in Los Angeles doing Clippers games ... but my main gig, and the one I'm most proud of, is my work at NBC."

Walton was recently inducted into the GTE Academic Hall of Fame at a ceremony in Washington, D.C. "It was unbelievable," he recalls. "I've gotten a lot of honors in my life, and this one is right up there. Education — and mental preparation — is the ultimate key to success. It's helped me get to where I am today."

It doesn't matter to Walton which two teams make it to this week's NBA Finals. A fan of his stature is happy just being near the action. "I only hope that my four sons find something in their lives that makes them eager to get out of bed each day, like I am," Walton says. "I jump up every morning and say, 'Let's go!' I really have the greatest life in the world."

Zoo Atlanta displays newborn emus

Zoo Atlanta

Atlanta — Four gangly emu chicks are on exhibit at Zoo Atlanta with their very tall parents. Resembling fuzzy brown watermelons with 12-inch legs, the chicks' sizes vary with their hatching order. The smallest chick isn't the "runt" of the clutch, just the last to hatch in April. All will reach the five-foot stature of their parents and weigh up to 110 pounds.

The emu is the world's second largest living bird — second only to the ostrich of Africa. They are native to Australia, where they prefer grasslands and open forests. Emus feed on a wide variety of plant material — green shoots and grasses and occasionally fruit and insects. Emus lay from five to 15 very large dark-green eggs. Taking an average of 56 days to incubate, the chicks peep to each other, signaling that it is time to hatch. Zoo Atlanta's emu eggs were incubated artificially, due to the cold outdoor temperatures last winter.

The chicks develop quickly. They can peck at food on their second day, and run and swim competently at 1 week of age. Unlike most species of birds, the male emu incubates the eggs and rears the young. Adult emus show the chicks what to eat, and the oldest of the zoo brood picked up feeding behavior without hesitation. The others "followed the leader."

Emus are not a threatened animal in their native habitat and they are becoming increasingly common in captivity. The hair-like texture of their feathers, along with their rumbling and booming noises, unique coloration and great size, make them interesting birds to observe.

Zoo Atlanta is open Monday through Friday from 10 a.m. to 5:30 p.m.; and weekends and holidays from 10 a.m. to 6:30 p.m. (Admission booths close one hour before the zoo grounds). Admission: adults, $7.50; children 3 to 11, $5; seniors, $6.50; children under 3 and members, free. For more information, call (404) 24-5630.

Adopt-An-Emu

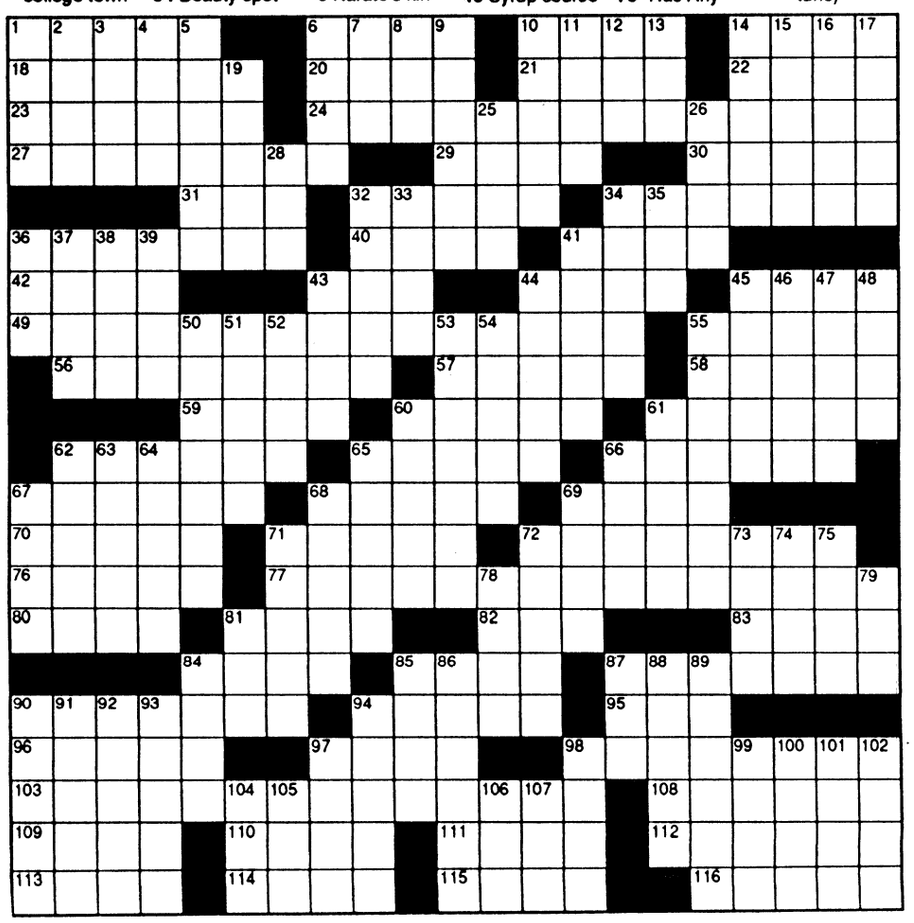
Zoo enthusiasts can help support the adult emus by participating in the Adopt-an-Animal program. Adoptive parents receive a full-color photo of their animal and background information, a certificate of adoption, and an official Adopt-an-Animal window decal. The fee to "adopt" an emu is $100 per animal.



Proceeds from the Adopt-an-Animal program are donated to Zoo Atlanta's veterinary department to help defray medical and food costs for the entire animal collection. Adoption fees are tax deductible to the extent allowed by the law. All adopted animals remain in the care and custody of Zoo Atlanta, and no ownership rights are conferred by adoption. For more information, call (404) 624-WILD.

Country group Alabama to host June Jam

Dekalb County Tourist Association

The group Alabama will host its 13th annual June Jam charity concert in the band's home town of Fort Payne, Ala., June 11.

As many as 60,000 music fans are expected to make the pilgrimage to Fort Payne once again, for a taste of country music history as they experience the longest-running charity concert in the country. Staged in a grassy field behind the local high school, the June Jam has routinely been named by spectators as one of the top concert events in the world.

And this year should be no exception, says Alabama lead singer Randy Owen.

"If you ever thought about coming to the June Jam in Fort Payne, this would be the year," Owen said. "We have a great lineup."

Joining Alabama on stage will be Vince Gill (making his fourth straight appearance), Diamond Rio (its third), Michelle Wright (also her third), Confederate Railroad, Neal McCoy, Patty Loveless, Steve Wariner, Mark Collie, Lee Roy Parnell, Clinton Gregory, John Berry and Dallas County Line.

The artists will donate their time and talents to the concert, which over the years has raised almost $3 million for worthwhile causes in northeast Alabama. The group's first charity concert, back in 1981, was held on a flatbed truck just as Alabama was beginning its meteoric rise to stardom.

In addition to being a showcase for country music's hottest acts, the June Jam is known for its family atmosphere. Children, young adults, and senior citizens alike share the 40-acre field for the concert. Special accommodations are made for handicapped guests and seniors.

The June Jam site is equipped with medical facilities, emergency transportation and communication, security, food and drink, and sanitation needs to handle the tens of thousands of fans.

The show starts at approximately 9 a.m. and lasts until late in the evening. Tickets for the June Jam are $30 in advance and $35 at the gate.

Tickets may be purchased by writing Bill Witcraft, Director, DeKalb County Tourist Association, P.O. Box 1165, Fort Payne, Ala. 35967.

For telephone orders, call (205) 845-3957. Personal check orders will be held two weeks from the date processed.

TRADOC votes DCP 'most outstanding'

By Karen S. Morarie
Bayonet staff writer

Fort Benning's award-winning Directorate of Civilian Personnel is soon to receive more honors from Training and Doctrine Command.

June 21, William R. Ketron, director of Civilian Personnel for TRADOC, will present the entire directorate with the TRADOC Excellence Award for most outstanding DCP.

Three individual awards for technical excellence will also be presented: Theresa Gunther, director of Civilian Personnel, will receive her fifth award for sustained leadership; Patty Pfeiffer, chief of Training Development Division, and Dan Fusco, installation program manager for the Federal Employees' Compensation Act, will also receive awards.

Judy Pennington, chief of Personnel Management and Systems Support Division, said, "We won everything we submitted a packet for. Out of nine possible TRADOC awards, we won four."

Pennington said DCP workers are excited and proud about the honors they will receive.

"The great thing about this is that the whole directorate won," she said. "The 'most outstanding' award reflects on everyone in DCP, and we plan to have all 68 people there when the awards are presented."

The award presentation is set for noon June 21 in Room 642 of Infantry Hall, Building 4.

Benning provost marshal to bid farewell June 17

USAIC Public Affairs Office

A retirement ceremony for Col. James Crockert, Fort Benning provost marshal and commander of the Military Police Activity, will be at 9 a.m. June 17 on the Field of Four Chaplains, adjacent to the Infantry Center Chapel.

Col. Ronnie D. Alton will replace Crockert, but he is not expected to arrive at Fort Benning until sometime in July. Alton is currently provost marshal at the Army Material Command in Alexandria, Va.

Crockert, 49, was born in Teaneck, N.J. He entered the Army in May 1966 and in April 1967 was commissioned an infantry officer through Officer Candidate School. He served in a variety of stateside and overseas command and staff positions during his 28-year Army career, including duty in Vietnam.

Crockert

Crockert has a bachelor of science degree in criminology from the University of Tampa. His military education includes Officer Candidate School, the Special Forces and Infantry Officer Advanced courses, the Army Command and General Staff College and the Armed Forces Staff College.

His decorations and badges include the Bronze Star Medal, Purple Heart and five awards of the Meritorious Service Medal.

Crockert was inducted into the Officer Candidate School Hall of Fame in 1993.

He and his wife, Sheri, have three children and plan to reside in Georgia.

Conference focuses on quality of life

By Stephanie Krawczyk
Special to The Bayonet©

Improving the quality of life for soldiers and their families was the tasking for more than 100 delegates at the 1994 Army Family Action Plan Symposium Tuesday.

Representatives from Fort Benning units and organizations and family members met for the day-long session at the Officers' Club.

AFAP is a forum, conducted at several levels of command from installation to Department of the Army level, to raise issues, propose solutions and ultimately solve problems facing soldiers and family members.

Col. Richard Rutledge, garrison commander, opened the conference by encouraging the participants to "come up with ideas to make things better for you and your families."

Referring to the recent Army Community of Excellence win by the post, Rutledge stressed the importance of continuing to move forward. "We can't just sit here and remain the best installation in the world," he said.

Delegates were divided into six work groups, each tasked with addressing specific areas, including consumer and commercial services, youth and education, health services, housing, family and soldier support services and relocation and quality of life.

Problems identified by each group will be addressed by leaders at Fort Benning, and if not solvable at this level, will be forwarded to the appropriate level of command where action can be taken.

In previous years, 212 suggestions for improving quality of life have been passed to the Department of the Army. All issues received positive results, including the enactment of new legislation, a new or revised Army policy and new or improved programs.

43rd Combat Engineer Battalion to case colors, inactivate June 30

Net loss of 635 military spaces projected as result of this action

USAIC Public Affairs Office

The colors of the 43rd Combat Engineer Battalion (Heavy) will be cased and the unit will be inactivated in a ceremony on York Field June 30 at 9 a.m.

Col. Dean A. Kershaw, 36th Engineer Group commander, and Lt. Col. Larry Davis, commander of the 43rd, will officiate at the casing of the colors.

The unit, with an assigned strength of 631 soldiers, recently returned from its second tour in Somalia, where it provided construction engineer support to reinforce facilities, enhance safety and improve the quality of life for U.S. and U.N. forces.

The battalion had previously served in Somalia from January to March 1993.

The 43rd deployed to Saudi Arabia during Desert Shield and Desert Storm and to south Florida in the aftermath of Hurricane Andrew.

Subordinate units of the battalion have deployed to Costa Rica and New Mexico for extended periods of time during the last several years.

Elements of the 43rd battalion comprised Task Force Siempre Listo (Always Ready), part of Caminos De La Paz '92 (Roads for Peace), a Joint Chiefs of Staff directed exercise, and they were involved with base camp, road and bridge construction and school upgrading in Costa Rico for three months in 1992.

Company B, 43rd Engineer Battalion, returned from Boot Heel, N.M., in July 1992, where 108 soldiers constructed more than 40 miles of roads, two helipads and an observation post along the U.S.-Mexican border to support the U.S. Border Patrol's counter-narcotics efforts.

The 43rd Engineer Battalion has been assigned to Fort Benning for more than 27 years.

The 533rd Transportation Company, with 173 soldiers assigned, will also be inactivated July 15.

Selected personnel and equipment will be transferred to the 104th Transportation Company.

The 104th will be transferred to this installation July 16 and organized as a medium truck company authorized 169 soldiers.

A net loss of 635 military spaces is projected as a result of these actions.

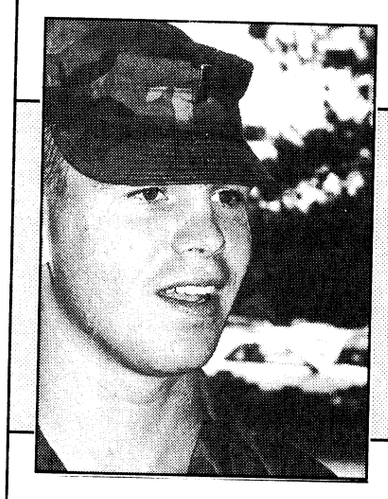
Secretary of Defense to visit Fort Benning

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Secretary of Defense William J. Perry will visit Fort Benning Monday.

Perry will be accompanied by Sgt. Maj. of the Army Richard A. Kidd and the senior enlisted advisers from the Air Force, Navy and Marines.



Perry's visit to Fort Benning is the first in a series of visits he expects to make to posts, ships and bases with the services' senior enlisted representatives.

Besides consulting with the leadership, the secretary's visits will focus on the various training and quality of life issues that affect the enlisted soldiers and, ultimately, the effectiveness of U.S. forces.

During the visit, the secretary and advisers will observe an Airborne in Action demonstration, Basic Noncommissioned Officer Squad Automated Weapon Mechanical Training, and an Infantry Mortar Leader's Course live-fire exercise. They will also talk with service members, retirees and family members.

VARIOUS VOICES

If you could go back in history and visit any event or time, what would it be and why?

Second Lt. Dennis Geyer, Company D, 2nd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment — "Maybe the signing of the Declaration of Independence. Our forefathers fought so hard for something they believed. It represents the spirit of the United States."

Vickie Leard, family member — "To the time of the cowboys and Indians. Because people did everything the old-fashioned way."

First Lt. Edward Hogan, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 3rd Brigade, 24th Infantry Division — "I would like to witness the time of slavery and Harriet Tubman's tactics to help slaves on the Underground Railroad. I also would like to be there for Martin Luther King's 'I Have A Dream' speech."

Yvon Roy, retiree — "Vietnam. Because I had too many friends who died there."

Staff Sgt. Paul Taylor, Company A, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment — "The time of Christ. Because there are many different views of him and I want to know what he was really like."

Sgt. Luis Vasquez, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, School of the Americas — "To the time of the dinosaurs. I want to find out what happened to them."

Soldiers should take pride in barracks

By Clyde Snively
Bayonet columnist

commentary

We're our own worst enemies. We complain because we don't have nice barracks, nice furniture or things to do and places to go.

But when we get nice stuff, the first thing we do is destroy it.

I was visiting Kooty-man in the barracks the other night. His dayroom was a disaster. The television didn't work because someone had ripped the cable out of the wall.

No one was shooting pool because the pool table had foot-long rips in the felt. There were no racks and two serviceable cues and a couple of the balls were missing.

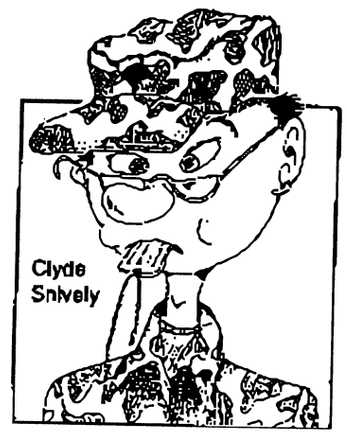
Magazines were ripped out of the plastic binders. There was no toilet paper in the latrines because someone had taken the toilet paper holders. And the wall that someone had fabricated had holes punched in it.

The place was a disaster.

Kooty-man said the place had been like that for months. "Guys start arguing and the next thing you know a fight breaks out or things get busted. Or sometimes a guy comes back all stoked out and just starts destroying stuff.

"The first sergeant stationed courtesy patrols in the dayroom for a while, but then everyone complained about the extra duty, so he dropped it."

"So what do y'all do now?" I asked.



"Mostly hang out," he said.

"Some go to the Hidden Door Club, but that situation can get too tense. You wouldn't believe the people who hang out in the parking lot looking to get invited in."

"Most of us just stay in our rooms, watch TV or listen to the stereo — that is when we can and we aren't being blasted out by the guy in the next room. It can get pretty awful."

I asked him if he went to the gym to shoot hoops or work out.

"I ain't much for that physical stuff," he said. "Plus it seems the equipment is getting run down and it's mostly the same guys who monopolize everything."

I knew Kooty-man was kind of a loner and didn't socialize much, so I kinda took it all with a grain of salt. I also made a mental note to tell someone over at the Better Opportunity for Single Soldiers office about this guy.

I figured BOSS could get him involved in some constructive project.

I was rolling these thoughts over in my mind as I was driving home that night when suddenly it occurred to me that the familiar beacon on 1st Division Road wasn't shining forth its messages.

"Power failure," I thought. "Just can't keep those computers running."

But the next morning the messages still weren't forthcoming, so I slowed a bit and noticed large holes in the board.

Seems some rock-throwing yahoo had to show off to his buds what a macho man he was, so he used the sign as his target.

That's great. A lot of people I know came to rely on that sign to tell them what was going down on post.

Naturally The Bayonet or the USAIC cable TV channel should be the prime sources, but that bulletin board was a great last-minute reminder for those of us who can't recall what day it is.

And now some puerile idiot has disabled it.

Once again, we cut off our noses to spite our faces. We just can't seem to hold on to what we've got.

But what really gripes me is that most of the time there is someone who knows when one of these cretins is pulling these stunts.

But they don't want to get involved so they don't try to stop them, nor do they report them.

Maybe in the case of the sign someone will come forth and point the finger. I'd sure like to see us get the guilty slob.

Army celebrates 219th: CG reflects on history, future of soldiers who serve their country

Fifty years ago this month, our Army, our infantry, was engaged in the greatest battle of all time — D-Day, the invasion of Fortress Europe.

And as they did throughout history, America's finest prevailed and made the world safe for democracy — safe for another 50 years.

Tuesday we commemorate the 219th anniversary of our Army. During those 219 years, our Army was bloodied many times but never beaten.

In 1777 we survived the ice and the cold, of Valley Forge to give birth to this nation. The early 1860s we fought and killed one another to preserve the nation.

At the turn of the 20th century we fought to save the world and 30 years later were called on to do it again.

As always, America's soldiers proved their mettle.

Today, America's Army is better than it has ever been. It can deploy rapidly, put overwhelming combat power on the ground, sustain itself and win quickly with minimum casualties.

We, at the "Home of the Infantry," can be especially proud of our Army, for it is the infantry that is always in the vanguard when fighting breaks out.

We also play a key role in the modernization of the Army.

In tomorrow's Army, information will be almost as important as ammunition. We'll win by integrating today's information technology with tomorrow's weapons. Our Army will have skilled leaders who can respond within minutes after events take place on the battlefield.

The battlefield will be digitized and every commander will know where his troops are and will share tactical knowledge with them.

But our Army is more than advanced technology. It is the men and women who serve in it. It's the mechanic replacing the road wheel on the tank, the cook preparing hot meals, the engineer clearing a mine field and the medic bandaging wounds.

You are our Army and you make it the best in the world, just as you make this post the best in the Army.

Soldiers and civilians of Fort Benning, I salute you as we celebrate another milestone in a long and illustrious history.

U.S. Army to commemorate its 219th birthday

Army Public Affairs

commentary

America's Army today is better now than it ever has been. It has the best equipment, the best training and the best people in the world. It is trained and it is ready. That is the Army's birthday present this year on its 219th birthday.

Change has been essential to achieve our current state of readiness. Still more change is needed to forge our fighting force for the 21st century. Indeed, change has become so pervasive in the Army climate that it seems at times to overshadow the constants.

There are constants, though, and we must not lose sight of the Army's mission — to fight and win our nation's wars. When we are not fighting our nation's wars, we must remain ready to fight them. Readiness keeps the peace. We must continually remind ourselves of that mission, for it is the bedrock upon which we built the Army in 1775. It is also the bedrock upon we now reshape the Army to meet the challenges of the 21st century. Our mission drives virtually everything we do — the training we conduct, the weapons we buy, the soldiers we enlist and the civilians we hire. It places our most important assets — American soldiers — in harm's way.

After the first world war, Gen. John Pershing testified before Congress on behalf of maintaining a trained and ready Army. As a result of Pershing not able to point out the enemy, Congress did not fund the Army to maintain its edge after winning the "War to end all wars."

Even as late at 1940, Gen. George Marshall could not say definitely where America might be forced to fight, though he argued that we must remain ready. These were his words: "A rich nation which lays down its arms as we have done after every war in our history will court disaster. The existence of the complex and fearful instruments of destruction now available makes this a simple truth which is, in my opinion, undebatable."

It is well documented that our national tendency, after victory, is to dismantle the Army. Finally, we have broken that mold. Never before has the Army of the United States of America remained so ready five years after a dramatic decrease in the threat to our national security. After the fall of the Iron Curtain in 1989, we did not simply stack arms; we reshaped to meet the challenges of tomorrow. What better birthday present could we wish? And, best of all, readiness is a present we can share with the nation.

Let's take a closer look at readiness. We all remember how the world watched in awe for 100 hours as high-tech weapons, mostly those of American fighting forces, pounded Iraqi forces during Operation Desert Storm. Each year, what we invest in modernization affects Army readiness, not only for the following year but also for the next 10 to 20 years. In warfare, as in all else, the state of the art is never the end of the art.

In tomorrow's Army, information will be almost as important as ammunition. We'll win by integrating today's information technology with tomorrow's weapons. It will be an Army with skilled leaders who can respond within minutes after events take place on the battlefield. The battlefield will be "digitized."

That term may be unfamiliar to some; in practical terms, it means that by using computers across all of our battlefield systems, our commanders will be able, as never before, to gather and share tactical information. On the digitized battlefield, an armored battalion commander knows the position of every vehicle in his unit, and that same information is instantly available to the artillery, helicopters and to any other units in the sector.

The increased capability of America's Army to share real-time information creates a revolution in command. Not all Army units have this capability yet. They soon will, as we iron out the wrinkles and make it our standard. Leaps in information technology, are basic to the Army's evolution. No longer oriented to defending against the onslaught of a superpower in Europe, our Army today is becoming more and more a home-based force — a force that can deploy rapidly to trouble spots anywhere in the world.

To maintain its standing as the best, America's Army will have to continue growing, not in size but in capability. It must remain ready and able to deploy, ready and able to beat any adversary. We're well on the way.

We must never forget that even in this time of precision munitions and brilliant weapons, the individual combat soldier is the ultimate smart weapon. This past year marked the 20th anniversary of the the all-volunteer force, which has been a resounding success. It has succeeded because we have been able to recruit and retain soldiers of high quality — soldiers with character, commitment and courage. Like our main mission, these qualities are constants. They are — and always will be — hallmarks of the Army.

Yesterday we were ready, from Lexington and Concord to Gettysburg, and from Normandy to the Persian Gulf. Today we are ready to keep the peace or provide humanitarian relief around the globe. Tomorrow, too, we will be ready. Whenever the time, wherever to mission, whatever the challenge, you can always count on America's Army.

Rangers get fitness course preview

University may offer physical education degree

By Ruth J. Spaller
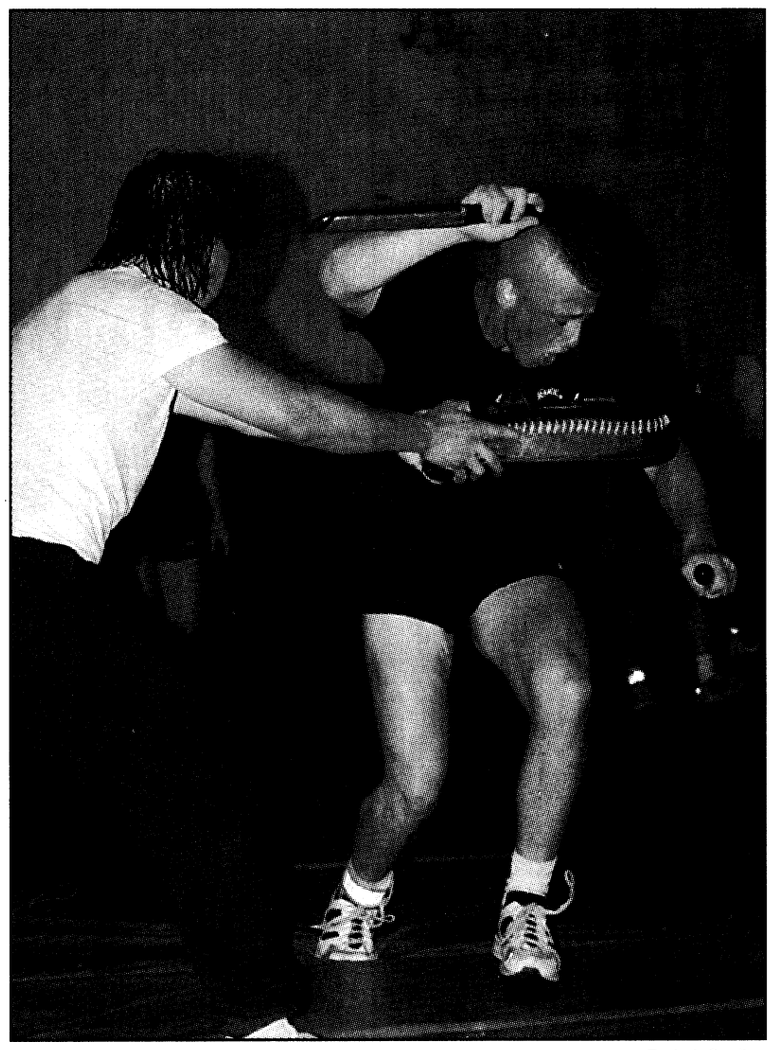
Bayonet staff writer

Rangers from Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 75th Ranger Regiment, previewed Monday the curriculum of a proposed physical education degree now awaiting approval to be offered on post.



The rangers spent the day doing "mega training" — somersaulting across mats with sheathed knives in their hands, learning Philippine stick fighting and practicing Thai boxing, all under the direction of Francis Fong, owner of a martial arts academy in Atlanta.

Fong is just one of many martial arts experts who will be invited to act as guest instructors for the proposed courses, said Dr. Ed Thomas of the U.S. Army Physical Fitness School, who will be the director of the degree program.

Once approved, the program, available through Upper Iowa University, will offer an associate of arts or bachelor of science degree in physical education.

The program's curriculum is transformation-based, Thomas said, meaning that when soldiers and civilians are finished with this training, they will be markedly more fit than when they began."

But the program is not just a theoretical or sports-based one, Thomas said.

Ruth J. Spaller

Pfc. Josh A. Fultz of HHC, 75th Ranger Regiment, prepares to somersault over a bag held out by martial artist Francis Fong.

"It is about knowing the body from the inside as well as the outside ... and using the body as a vehicle to develop the whole person," he said.

The major courses will be divided among three areas: theoretical, restorative and martial arts.

The theoretical portion will cover the foundation on which the restorative and martial arts are built, with class choices in subjects like kinesiology, nutrition, human anatomy and exercise physiology, among others.

The restorative portion will cover systems and techniques that bring the body toward its optimum level of function and performance. Class choices will range from flexibility, posture and relaxation to aquatics and resistance exercises.

The martial arts courses will teach appropriate responses to external aggression based on the distance of the opponent, from close range (grappling) to the use of weapons.

Sgt. 1st Class Howard "Max" Mullen, one of the rangers who participated in this week's training, said he has always had an interest in martial arts.

"This will give me the opportunity to get a college degree doing things I enjoy," he said.

When the program is approved, the first courses offered will be Introduction to Restorative and Martial Arts and Foundations of Conditioning, which will run one evening a week.

The classes Posture and Relaxation and Medium Range Combatives are tentatively scheduled to be offered as day-long classes on Saturdays.

Registration is scheduled to begin June 28 with courses anticipated to start mid-July.

For more information, call Thomas at 685-9555 or 545-6335.

Local Reserve unit to deactivate

By Ruth J. Spaller
Bayonet staff writer

Company B of the 3rd Battalion, 11th Special Forces Group (Airborne), 1st Special Forces, a local U. S. Army Reserve unit, will officially deactivate June 19.

The 11th has been located here more than 30 years, said Capt. George E. Miller, the unit's executive officer.

The 11th is one of two Army Reserve Special Forces units that has been directed to deactivate as a result of U.S Army Reserve and National Guard bureau realignments.

While Company B will close its doors on Macon Road for the last time June 19, the group itself will not shut down until Aug. 28.

The 11th activated July 9, 1942, at Fort William Henry Harrison in Montana as the 5th Company, 2nd Battalion, 1st Regiment, 1st Special Service Force, a joint Canadian and American organization.

It disbanded January 6, 1945, in France and was reconstituted in 1960 and allotted to the Army Reserve.

The unit was awarded Presidential Unit Citations at El Guettar, Salerno, Pointe du Hoc and the Saar River area, and was awarded the French Croix de Guerre with silver-gilt star during World War II.

Many of the soldiers currently with Company B will transition to other National Guard Special Forces units such as the 20th Special Forces Group located primarily in Florida and Alabama, according to a unit spokesman.

Others will transfer to other career specialties within the Reserve or will retire, the spokesman said.

Savings Bond campaign under way

By Stephanie Krawczyk
Special to The Bayonet

"Secure your future today," is the theme for the 1994 Savings Bond campaign, which got under way May 20.

Campaign organizers met with unit representatives who will serve as project officers in a preparatory session before the June 1 kick-off date for the 30-day drive.

Col. Richard Rutledge, garrison commander, addressed members of the group encouraging them to get enthusiastic about the campaign.

"Its very important that you catch the vision we have for this program."

U.S. Savings Bonds are basically a loan to the United States, which it promises to repay with interest when redeemed. They can be purchased through a monthly allotment in numerous denominations of $50 through $10,000.

Frank Barnett, a representative from the Treasury Department, Savings Bond Division in Atlanta, also spoke to the group.

"Savings Bonds are one of the safest investments you can make," Barnett said. "Backed by the full faith and credit of the United States."

Among the other advantages of Savings Bonds outlined during the session were their tax advantages, exempt from local and state taxes and deferred from federal until redeemed or final maturity date.

Individuals interested in obtaining an allotment form or learning more about investing in savings bonds should see their unit or organization project officer.

Engineers of the 36th Engineer Group converge to discuss construction plans.

DPW, 36th engineers join forces

By Denise Howell
36th Engineer Group

Two companies of the 36th Engineer Group joined forces with the Directorate of Public Works, saving Fort Benning $65,000 and more than three months in construction time.

Twenty-five soldiers from two route clearing platoons of the 63rd Engineer Company (Combat Support Equipment) and a construction squad from Company B of the 43rd Engineer Combat Battalion, aided by a DPW advisory team, provided the manpower to repair Second Armored Division Road.

The road, which is the main route to the Malone Range complex on Sand Hill, had suffered major erosion damage. Due to unsafe conditions, the road had been closed in mid-February, causing detours over back roads and adding more than 30 minutes to travel time.

According to William Bunt, Chief of Ranges, Roads and Grounds for the DPW, the road had been slowly deteriorating for the past two years due to periodic heavy rainfall and overflow from nearby Long Branch Creek. Despite patch-up efforts, it finally had to be completely shut down. The Work Coordination Branch at the DPW had estimated a complete renovation would cost about $100,000 and take anywhere from four to six months to complete, Bunt said.

1st Lt. Bryan Reese of the 63rd, project officer in charge, said, "When we started on 5 April , there was just a 40-foot cliff from the road, going straight down to the creek."

The soldiers had to dig down more than 20 feet to enable DPW workers to haul out 100 feet of old culvert piping.

"The old culvert had deteriorated," said Sgt. 1st Class Roger Snell, project noncommissioned officer in charge. "As water collected, (the piping) rusted through. The base washed away, the walls collapsed, and the whole hill beside the road began to slide."

Soldiers from the 63rd constructed a new foundation and installed more than 140 feet of new six foot diameter culvert piping to control erosion and direct water flow. Co. B installed the concrete headwall protecting the new culvert outlets.

As the roadway was brought back up to its previous level or grade, the route-clearers thickly re-seeded the sides with grass, then constructed a ridge.

Lined with straw and large gravel-like rocks called rip-rap, this ridge should further control erosion.

By May 6, the DPW was able to provide compaction and complete the last 12 inches of fine grading to match the new roadway section to the existing sections.

"Those 25 soldiers did a completely outstanding job," said Capt. Keith Callahan, commander of the 63rd.

The project was later turned over to the Couch Construction Company of Foltson, Ga. to do the final paving, including 4-foot shoulders along both sides of the road.

Paving was completed June 1 and the road was reopened June 2, well ahead of schedule, officials said.

OWC donates $3,000

By Stephanie Krawczyk
Special to The Bayonet©

The Leadership Seminar Association is now able to expand its program, thanks to a $3,000 donation from the Fort Benning Officers' Wives' Club.

The leadership program was one of many organizations to receive a contribution from the OWC this year. The group gave out a total of $25,696, which included more than $3,500 to the Fort Benning schools and $6,500 in educational scholarships.

"We try to fill requests that will benefit the most people on post," said Leigh Steele, OWC Welfare Committee co-chairwoman. The group made contributions to numerous national, local, civilian and military organizations.

The leadship seminar program primarily targets wives of students in the Infantry Officer Advanced Course. Now, with the extra funding, wives from the Infantry Officer Basic Course, spouses of noncommissioned officers, and others will be eligible to enroll.

"With the drawdown, we can't expect as much funding from the Army side of the house," said Mary Parker, one of the program's leaders. "A donation this generous takes a big concern off our backs."

According to Parker, Fort Benning is one of only a handful of installations to offer this type of training to spouses. The program teaches leadership skills to be used in group situations like family unit networks.

Students learn things like group dynamics, conflict resolution, communication and dealing with trauma in a unit.

The funding from the OWC will primarily be used for child care for seminar instructors and will provide partial funding for them to attend local civilian leadership training.

The leadership seminar program currently teaches 18 sessions a year, the next one beginning Sept. 19.

AFAP: Symposium

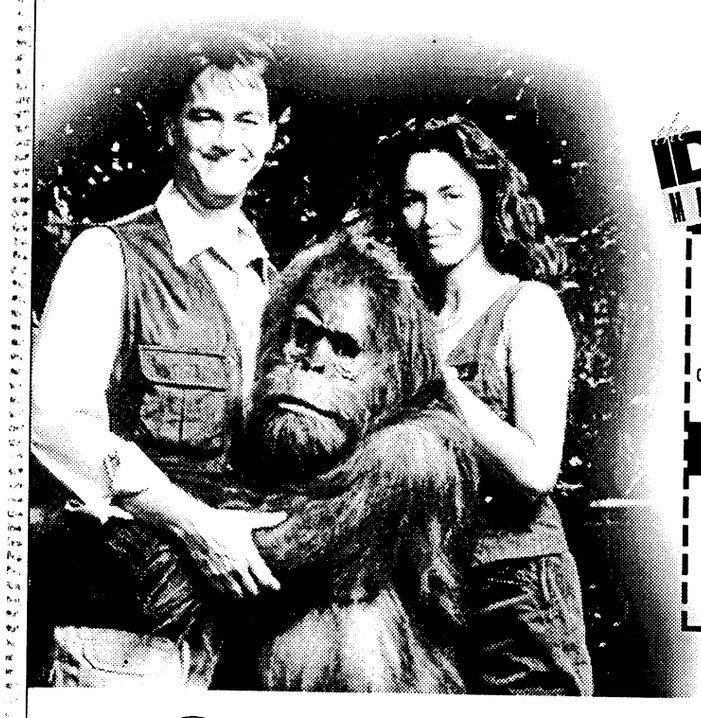
Specifically, some of these changes included an increase in the Serviceman's Group Life Insurance coverage, improved barracks and dayrooms for junior enlisted soldiers and increased availability of child care.

This year's symposium resulted in a myriad of suggestions ranging from improving the children's' section of Sayers Library to preventing a fee for medical care for Army personnel.



An issue raised frequently during the conference was removing the electronic sign from Dixie Road. "It's pretty much suicide trying to read it while you're driving," said Dickey Lawrence, Company D, 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor Regiment, spokesman for the family services group.

The workgroups also compiled lists of most and least valuable programs currently operational at Fort Benning.

Command reaction to issues addressed at the symposium will be released to Fort Benning personnel as soon as results are available.

DPW to measure customer satisfaction

Directorate of Public Works

Family housing customers now have an opportunity to let workers know if repairs made to quarters are satisfactory.

The Directorate of Public Works has implemented a response card that workers will present to quarters occupants after service work has been completed. The housing residents can then rate the job on a scale from excellent to poor.

There is space to rate courtesy, promptness and quality, plus clean-up after the job was completed. There is also room for the respondent to add comments if desired.

Response cards will be postage-paid business reply mail so that customers can mail them back to DPW by simply filling out the card and dropping it in any mailbox.

Returned cards will be carefully evaluated by DPW personnel, who will look for ways to improve service.

They will also be able to identify and reward excellent performers as well as provide assistance and encouragement to those who need to improve.

"The program is a win-win situation," said B.J. Scott, chief of Family Housing.

"It will not only result in better customer service, but will also ensure that the workers are recognized for a job well done,"he said.

Post educates group

By Robert R. Gaddy
Infantry Training Brigade

Recently members of the Leadership Columbus program went on an educational tour of Fort Benning.

Educational events included a luncheon with initial entry training soldiers from Company A, 2nd Battalion, 54th Infantry Regiment, a helicopter tour of Fort Benning and a Rangers in Action demonstration.

Leadership Columbus is a program of the Columbus Chamber of Commerce that provides opportunities for existing and emerging leaders of the Columbus area to develop an understanding of the promises and problems of Columbus.

Participants included members of the Columbus civilian community as well as one representative of the Army.

The program exposes its members to economic, governmental and sociocultural issues that will determine the future of Columbus.

Leadership Columbus participants were able to get some insight into how civilians are transformed into infantry soldiers at the luncheon with the trainees and cadre of 2nd Bn., 54th Inf. Regt.

"The enthusiasm and genuine interest of this group regarding our soldiers and their training attests to the superb bond that has developed between Fort Benning and Columbus," said Lt. Col. Gary G. Dacey, commander of 2nd Bn., 54th Inf. Regt.

Leadership Columbus members said the motivation and determination of the new soldiers would form a lasting impression of their visit.

"The Leadership Columbus group was very interested in understanding those who join the Army, and showed great respect for what we are doing," said Pvt. 2 Brian Beverly, a soldier of Co. A, 2nd Bn., 54th Inf. Regt.

The luncheon and other educational activities reflect the efforts that are being made by the Leadership Columbus group toward a greater understanding of life on Fort Benning, Dacey said.

When we first began making Saturns, everyone was talking about how it was a new American car company. Which is fine by us.

Pistol course focuses on accuracy

By Terry K. Ray
Special to The Bayonet©

"Never sacrifice accuracy for speed." These words, spoken by head instructor Dewey Hardison and crew, were heard over and over again by 24 sets of ears for eight hours Sunday at the Fort Benning Rifle and Pistol Club during the advanced combat pistol course.

The course, which was designed and set up by Hardison, who has more than 20 years of experience in law enforcement and military firearms instruction, put the shooter through varied shooting scenarios with newfound training techniques.

"Advanced shooting is when you put the movement and all the training techniques that you have learned together to increase your speed and accuracy," said Hardison, "but in combat shooting and I always relate to combat shooting, never sacrifice your accuracy for speed. The training today with such a cross section of people and experience was very positive."

The day started with Hardison and his range officers, Ken Suratt and Roger Jacobson, giving a block of instruction on firing positions.

Hardison prefers to teach the isosceles position, which gives the shooter more range of motion from the standing and kneeling positions and allows the shooter more comfort and stability in the prone position.

"The old adage that practice makes perfect is only true if the technique that you are practicing is done correctly," Hardison said. If not, all you are doing is getting better at doing it wrong. "Bad habits are hard to break, but by getting in the proper mental mind set you can refocus old habits into new ones."

> "The old adage that practice makes perfect is only true if the technique that you are practicing is done correctly."
> — Dewey Hardison
> Rifle and Pistol Club

After a short pretest to determine the overall structure of the class, Hardison then prepared the class for its first stage of shooting on the course while continually stressing the safety factor.

"Safety is paramount in any type of training," Hardison said. "Nothing you do warrants getting anyone hurt in a training environment. You have to set the stage early and I do. I'm positive on safety, I will not tolerate any bad range habits and if you're unsafe on the range, I will have you clear your weapon and move off the range. I mean that's just it; I won't tolerate any safety violations."

Anyone wishing to test Hardison on his safety policy might want to note that he stands an even six feet and weighs in the area of 250 pounds. His imposing size is only dwarfed by his presence, which to say the least can be overwhelming while on the range instructing a shooter in the art of combat reloading while the clock is ticking and the enemy is standing in the line of fire.

As the day progressed, so did the class. By the second stage, shooters were becoming more confident in their ability to successfully traverse a scenario and by the end of the day the students wanted more.

"Everyone who participated in this course came away with something new by the end of the day," Hardison said. "A lot of them came away with a newfound confidence in themselves and in their ability to use their firearms. That was the basis for the training and we had a successful training day."

"We are very fortunate to have Hardison and his people in the area," said Jim Graham, coordinator of the course. "We at the Fort Benning Rifle and Pistol Club pretty well know what training of this caliber costs at the national and international level. What we got here today was an international level of expertise by a very pragmatic and practical trainer at a very low cost. In the future, we hope to increase the types of courses that are more enjoyable to the military and the shooting members of the tri-community."

The Blue Jays' final game of the season ended on a high note with a good solid win over the Red Sox 9-4.

With the win, the Blue Jays finished in second place in the final baseball standings with a 6 win 4 loss season.

The Blue Jays started the scoring in the bottom of the first inning; with one out Rick Rhodes walked, stole second and third, and scored on a base hit by Mike Richert. Richert then stole second and scored on a hit by Craig Nurnberg. Nurnberg also stole second and scored on a double to center by Tony Veneziani.

Veneziani was picked off second base for the second out and Jeremy Walley struck out to end the inning, Blue Jays 3, Red Sox 0.

In the third, the Red Sox scored when Casey Brennan doubled to left field, stole third and scored on a passed ball. The Blue Jays scored two more runs when Rhodes walked. Richert then got an infield single. Nurnberg grounded to the shortstop, who threw to second to force out Richert; Rhodes went to third.

Veneziani doubled for the second time in the game and scored Rhodes and Nurnberg, Blue Jays 5, Red Sox 1.

The Red Sox scored two more runs in the fourth. Charles Boehm singled with one out, stole second and third. Jedidiah Forrester walked and stole second. Boehm and Forrester scored on a base hit by Arturo Diaz.

The Blue Jays responded with four runs. After two were out, Tommy Henderson and Rhodes walked and scored on Richert's third hit of the game. Richert scored when Nurnberg doubled for his third hit of the game. Nurnberg scored when Sherman Henderson singled and was thrown out trying to stretch his hit into a double, Blue Jays 9, Red Sox 3.

The Red Sox scored their last run in the fifth when Mike Hawrylak singled, stole second and third and scored on a wild pitch. The final score was Blue Jays 9, Red Sox 4.

Orioles edge past Giants 6-5

Fort Benning Youth Activities

The Orioles came up with the winning run in the bottom of the seventh to break a tie and beat the Giants 6 to 5 at Fort Benning's Norton Field Saturday morning. Both teams are part of the Fort Benning Youth Activities 13- to 15-year-old Baseball League.

The Giants got on the scoreboard first as Thomas Craig singled and stole second, third and home for a score. Oriole pitcher Josh Trotter struck out the next three consecutive batters to hold the Giants to one.

Tony Dupree batted first for the Orioles and hit a hard fly ball to center field that was caught by Giant left fielder Chad Amey. The Orioles managed to score two runs as Chris and Jeremy Callahan both walked and stole second, third, and home. Josh Trotter, Ty Mason and John Trotter all got on base with a walk but were left stranded when the Giants got the third out.

When the Giants came to bat in the second, they were quick to respond and retake the lead. The first Giant was put out with an infield grounder by Ceylona Chamberlain on second with Ty Mason on first with an assist. Scott Bertacina was hit by a pitch and walked to first. Aaron Iturralde walked as Bertacina stole second and third. Iturralde stole second to put both runners in scoring position. Joel Driskill walked to load the bases. Chico Vaeguez boomed a hard fly ball to the Orioles outfield for a triple and two RBI as Iturralde and Driskill scored. Thomas Craig singled and drove Vasquez in for an RBI and to up the lead by 3.

The Orioles got another out as catcher C. Callahan picked off a Giant trying to steal second. Luis Pizarro hit a single and stole his way to third before the Orioles ended the drive with the third out.

Dupree got on base for the Orioles with a single and stole second and third. J. Callahan drove in Dupree with a single and stole second but was left stranded on base at the end of the second inning.

The Giants got runners on base in the third but could not score. Derek Craig got to second with a well-placed hit for a double. Bertacina singled to advance Craig to third, and stole second. Oriole pitcher Trotter and third baseman Michael Bills picked a runner off on third for the second out. Trotter struck out one more for the third out leaving one runner stranded on second.

Both teams defenses held during the third and fourth innings. In the fourth inning, Giants second baseman Driskill hit a fly ball to left that was caught by Kiki Mister. The Orioles' only hit was Caleb Preston's infield fly that was caught by Giant pitcher Craig.

Things began to get tense in the fifth as the Orioles defense prevented the Giants from adding to their score and then tied the game with two runs. Matt Kapinos walked and stole second for the Orioles and then scored when J. Callahan singled. Callahan then stole second, third, and home to tie the game. The Giants stopped the drive short when fly ball was caught by Giant center fielder Wayne Jarralhan and Craig struck out two.

Both teams were held scoreless in the sixth as Oriole Preston was the only runner to get on base. Preston hit a double and stole third but was left there at the end of the inning.

The seventh inning was intense with both teams trying to take the lead. It looked like the Giants were about to clinch the game when Craig hit a triple putting the go-ahead run on third with no outs. A high foul ball was caught by third baseman Bills for one out. Jarralhan was hit by a pitch and stole second. Another fly ball was caught by shortstop Kapinos for out two. Trotter struck out the next batter for the third out, leaving two runners in scoring position.

Jeremy Callahan came up first for the Orioles in the seventh. He got on base with a walk, bringing Bills to the plate. Callahan went to steal second and the pick-off throw got past the Giants shortstop and second baseman. Callahan came around third and got the go-ahead to go home. He managed to beat the throw to home for the winning run and ended the game with the Orioles winning, 6-5.

Commander receives recognition

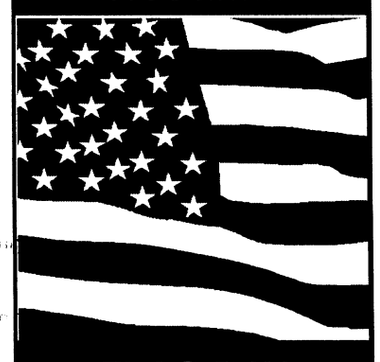
Directorate of Community Activities

An officer at the 2nd Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment, recently received a certificate of appreciation for his contributions to the single soldiers in his unit.

Capt. Robert R. Marcus, Company B, 2nd Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment, received a certificate of appreciation June 2 signed by Maj. Gen. Jerry A. White and presented by Sgt. Maj. Allen D. Thrower, sergeant major of the Directorate of Community Activities, presented

This certificate was requested by soldiers in his unit for the outstanding contributions he made to all of the single soldiers in his unit.

The installation Better Opportunities for Single Soldiers office has worked with Company B, 2nd Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment, on many occasions, because the commander has planned many activities for single soldiers.



One activity planned for single soldiers was paint ball. This is where soldiers had the opportunity to compete in a war game using paint balls in their weapons as ammunition.

The installation BOSS office learned that Marcus, out of his own pocket, paid for all ammunition for his single soldiers so that all could compete. This unit has one of the better programs for single soldiers, according to Spc. James E. Shoemaker, president of the BOSS program.

"I have many awards on my office wall, but this award means more to me than any I have ever received because it is from soldiers," Marcus said during a ceremony at which he was presented the certificate. Many of his soldiers were in attendance at the ceremony.

ITB trains West Point cadets as junior drill sergeants

By James Brownlee
Infantry Training Brigade

The Infantry Training Brigade recently welcomed about 30 cadets from the U.S. Military Academy at West Point, N.Y., for the Drill Cadet Leader Training program.

Fourteen of the 30 cadets have been assigned to the 2nd Battalion, 54th Infantry Regiment.

In this program, cadets are assigned to a junior drill sergeant position.

All of the cadets have had instruction during the past academic year emphasizing leadership skills and responsibilities designed to better prepare them for the leadership challenges they will encounter in their military career.

The primary objective of the program is to provide cadets with a working knowledge of the leadership responsibilities of a noncommissioned officer in the Infantry Training Brigade.

"I went through it when I was in my sophomore year at the academy," said 1st Lt. Christopher Lovejoy of the 2nd Battalion, 54th Infantry Regiment's Company C.

"I realized it then, and I know now, that the DCLT program helped me out in many ways. I was able to work with the drill sergeants and from them I had the chance to mold my own leadership style from the noncommissioned officer's prespective."

Many of the graduating cadets of recent classes consistently report that the most valuable leadership development opportunity of their four-year training program at USMA was provided by the experience gained from DCLT.

"The program is outstanding. Looking back on the DCLT program, it had the biggest impact on my leadership philosophy," said another graduate of the academy, Capt. William R. Mason, now Company C's commanding officer.

"It gave me the respect I needed for the NCO and the hours that he worked. It also helped me realize just how much a drill sergeant does and how not to over task or under task them."

While they are here, the cadets will be counseled on a weekly basis. These counseling sessions build and develop the cadets' strengths, and help correct their weak areas.

This evaluation of performance provides information to assist the tactical officer in providing appropriate counseling and leadership development practice.

Their raters are urged to be frank and discuss deficiencies as well as elaborate on their strengths.

"Right now (the cadets) are new and are just getting the feel of how we run things here," said Sgt. 1st Class Richard A. Kauffman, senior drill sergeant of 1st platoon, Company C. "In a day or so, they will be at ease and will do just fine."

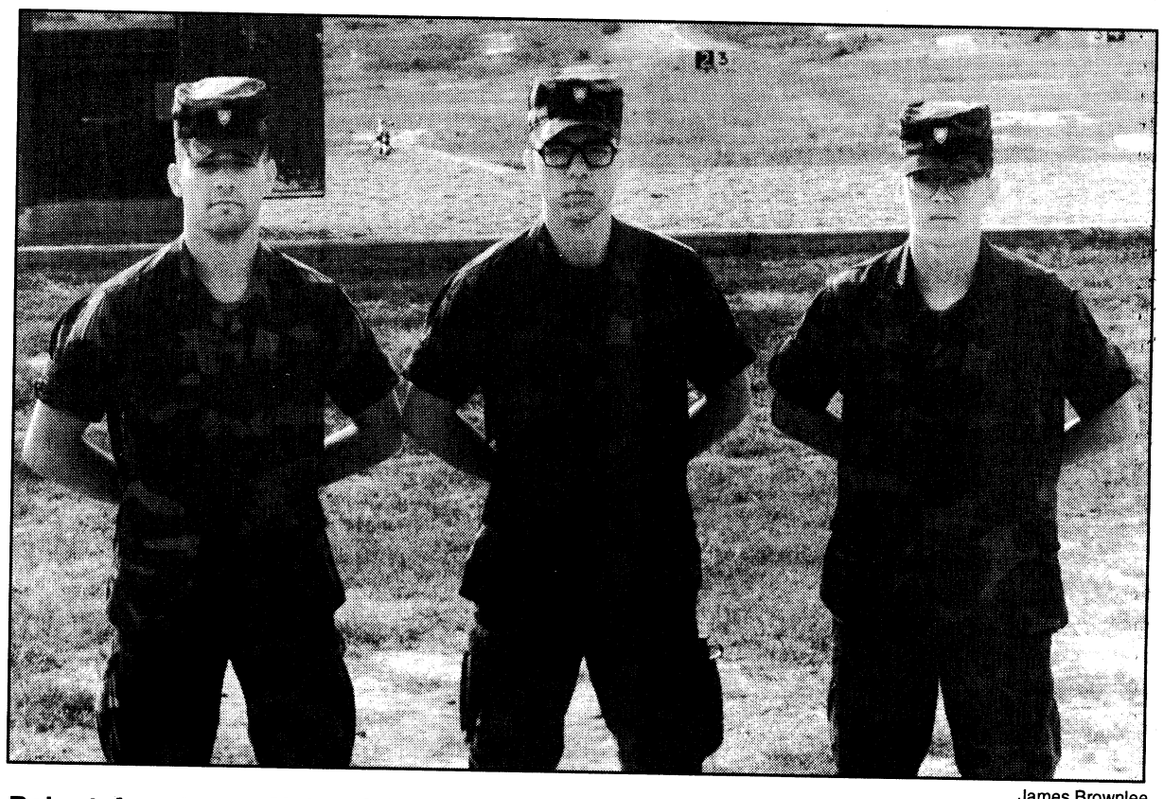
"Right now they are very motivated and willing to help the platoons in any way possible. So far they have really squared the men away on a one-to-one basis," said Staff Sgt. Andrew A. Lee of Company D.

"This is great," said cadet Ioannis Kiriazis, a 19-year-old history major from Chicago.

"I'm used to being a follower, not a leader. Now that I'm here I'll be able to get some experience on what the NCOs do to help the system."

Another cadet, Kenneth Hardesty, a 19-year-old mechanical engineer from Michigan, said, "This is what it is all about. This is a part of the Army that I would have never been able to experience.

"If not for the DCLT program, I would have never known just how hard these drill sergeants really work.



"Now I can see just what goes into the making of a real infantry soldier."

Command Sgt. Maj. Willie G. Wells of 2nd Bn., 54th Inf. Regt., said of the program, "We here at the Infantry Training Brigade, and especially at the 'Mailed Foot Battalion,' support this program in every respect. One must realize the importance of this program, and take it for everything it has to offer.

"These are some fine young men who came here to learn all about the noncommissioned officer and his function, and as long as they remain open-minded and willing to learn they will gain a great deal from this program," Wells said.

"This program is not about a cadet coming here to learn just about NCOs — rather, it's about cadets coming here to learn about the Army and how it operates.

"If these men learn just one thing about being an enlisted soldier and can incorporate it into their leadership philosophy, then this program is well worth it."

1/50th changes hands

By Shelby Carr
Infantry Training Brigade

The 1st Battalion, 50th Infantry Regiment, changed command in a ceremony at 9 a.m. May 26 on Wetherby Field.

Lt. Col. Kevin M. Rice relinquished his command to Lt. Col. Andrew J. Stanley Jr. and began his new assignment as the Infantry Training Brigade deputy commander.

"It was a privilege and an honor for me to command the 1st Bn., 50th Inf., and to work with the drill sergeants and cadre to develop young soldiers from civilians to well-trained infantrymen," Rice said.

Rice, who took command May 26, 1992, has trained more than 8,000 soldiers during his tenure and had eight separate company commanders during that time. The day he took command, the battalion was changed from the 4th Battalion, 30th Infantry Regiment, to 1st Bn., 50th Inf. Regt., and Rice had to bring a new identity to the battalion and instill pride in the past history of the battalion.

During his time in command, Rice established an honorary colonel of the regiment, found many combat veterans from Vietnam and other wars who fought with the 1st Bn., 50th Inf. Regt., and held dining-ins and other esprit-de-corps building activities.

In order to train better infantrymen for the Army, Rice developed individual skills in soldiers in military operations in urban terrain and introduced one day of MOUT during the final field training exercise of one station unit training. Developing expert marksman and physical fitness in new soldiers were emphasized by Rice.

"The 1st of the 50th executed tough and realistic training and accomplished all training safely with zero accidents," Rice said.

"I am proud of the accomplishments of the cadre in training young soldiers and treating them with dignity and respect."

Stanley comes to 1st. Bn., 50th Inf. Regt., from the 101st Airborne Division (Air Assault).

"I look forward to the days to come," Stanley said. "I will continue to produce the world's finest infantrymen."

Infantry training culminates with FTX

By Edward J. Taylor
Infantry Training Brigade

The field training exercises conducted at the end of every cycle of infantry one station unit training are the culmination of everything soldiers learn during their initial entry training.

Company C, 2nd Battalion, 58th Infantry Regiment, recently conducted one such field training exercise.

"The FTX is the last opportunity for the drill sergeant to observe what each soldier has retained of the many tasks he has learned in the previous 11 weeks of training," said Staff Sgt. Michael Elliot, a drill sergeant from Company C.

The FTX consisted of four days in the field, where the soldiers executed a tactical scenario.

First they established a complete platoon defense with bunkers, fortifications, and obstacles, and then they went on the offensive, conducting squad-level movement to contacts, hasty attacks and ambushes against opposing forces.

The trainees ran missions both day and night while improving their defensive positions over the course of the four days.

> — Staff Sgt. Michael Elliot
> Drill sergeant

"I had mentally prepared myself for the FTX to be hard," said Pvt.1 William Dixon, a trainee in Co. C. "I was not disappointed."

After the trainees built their defensive positions to withstand artillery, moved against and fought battles with opposing forces and maintained security, they received after action reviews from their drill sergeants on their strengths and weakness and repeated training until it was done right.

A 15-mile foot march back to the battalion headquarters capped off the four-day exercise.

At the end of the foot march, the soldiers erupted into cheers and cadence calls.

"I'm glad it's over but proud of my accomplishments," said Pvt.1 Nester Delgado, a soldier from Company. C.

At the end of the FTX, the soldiers graduate from Company C and the rest of the 2nd Bn., 58th Inf. Regt., to take their place as American infantrymen.

world war II

50 years ago this week:

• On the Western Front, the Utah and Omaha beachheads were linked up by the advance of the U.S. 2nd Armored Division.

The Allied forces presented a solid line to advance on the Germans. The third wave of divisions were now largely ashore.

At this stage there were 326,000 men, 104,000 tons of supplies and 54,000 vehicles from the Allied armies in France.

• The first German V-1 flying bombs, jet-propelled pilotless bombs launched from France and Belgium, crossed the English Channel; only one hits London killing six civilians.

• U.S. Superfortresses, B-29s based in China, bombed Yawatta, Japan, the first such air raid on a Japanese main island.

• In the Marianas, U.S. forces landed on Saipan; by the time the island fell on July 9, the United States had suffered some 3400 dead, and the Japanese had 27,000 dead.

• At Fort Benning, a new comrade named Daisy, an artistically black spotted spitz "Para-Dog," became a member of a select group when she made her fifth and qualifying jump at the U.S Army Airborne School.

She landed gently in the Alabama area with all the eclat of a schooled airborne trooper.

Fort Benning's Aviation Division labeled one of Army's safest

By Karen S. Morarie
Bayonet staff writer

Fort Benning's Aviation Division recently reached a standard that labels it one of the safest units in the Army.

The division has logged 100,000 hours of flying time without a Class A accident. "Class A" denotes an accident in which a person is killed or an aircraft destroyed. A single aircraft would have to fly continuously for more than 11 years to accrue 100,000 hours.

According to Chief Warrant Officer 4 Jim Vines, installation aviation safety officer, the safety achievement can be attributed to the efforts of hundreds of aviators, mechanics and support personnel who have served in the division since 1970, when the last Class A accident occurred.

Vines said by-the-book procedures are stressed in every phase of aviation operations.

"We have a proactive safety and standardization program," Vines said, "with school-trained warrant officers and noncommissioned officers administrating the program."

"A little luck has also helped build these accident-free hours," Vines said, "because often, a split second or a few inches is the difference between a minor incident and a major accident."

Vines said the safety standard is particularly noteworthy because of the variety of mission the Aviation Division routinely performs.

"Only special operations units can compare with the variety of missions we execute," he said. "We perform missions including fast-rope, rappelling, special patrol insertion and extraction system, sling-loads, helocast and airborne operations. All of these missions involve more risk than the routine air assault and resupply missions most UH-60 Blackhawk units perform. We also transport VIPs — we'll have a mission with the secretary of Defense coming up soon."

Vines said that while the men and women of Aviation Division are proud of their accomplishment, they haven't relaxed their level of alertness.

"They're aware a catastrophe can happen at any time," he said. "For this reason, they remain vigilant and committed to putting safety first in everything they do in pursuit of the 200,000 hour mark."

Two truths about breast cancer: Are you at risk?

By Richard Hollis
The American College of Obstetricians

Are you confused by all the headlines about the causes of breast cancer?

If so, you are not alone. Even medical experts struggle to keep up with the latest questions: Do certain vitamins affect the risk of breast cancer? What about body fat? Or drinking too much red (or is it white?) wine?

These conflicting messages are confusing and make it difficult to understand the true risks for breast cancer. Behind all the headlines, there are two basic truths about breast cancer.

First, all women should consider themselves at some risk for breast cancer. Since 80 percent of breast cancer patients have no family history of the disease, any woman is vulnerable.

All women should protect their health by performing monthly breast self-exams, visiting their doctors for annual breast exams, and having regular mammograms after age 40.

Second, physicians do not know exactly what causes breast cancer. The best we have are general clues to help us predict who has a greater chance of having the disease.

Those clues, or the known risks for breast cancer, include a prior history of breast cancer, a family history of the disease (especially in a mother or sister), advancing age, early onset of menstruation, late menopause, having a first child after age 30 and never having children.

There is no research to support the myths that breast-feeding or a blow to the breast can cause cancer. Most studies find no connection between oral contraceptives and breast cancer.

Reports linking high levels of dietary fat and alcohol consumption with increased breast cancer risks are still inconclusive.

Although most studies suggest no link between estrogen replacement therapy and breast cancer, there have been a few studies that would seem to indicate a slight increase in risk.

Overall, however, most evidence suggests that estrogen replacement does not increase the risk of breast cancer. More research is needed to determine whether the increased risk with long term use that is observed in some studies is real.

Women who take estrogen following menopause have basically no more risk of developing breast cancer than women who don't.

Having a known risk factor does not automatically mean you will develop breast cancer. For example, a recent study suggests that the risk for women with a family history of breast cancer may be slightly smaller than believed previously.

Just remember that having any risk makes it even more important to exam your breasts each month and to have annual checkups.

Single, free copies of "Detecting and Treating Breast Problems" (AP026) are available by sending a stamped, self-addressed, business-size envelope along with the name of the booklet to: The American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists, Resource Center, 409 12th St., S.W., Washington, D.C. 20024.

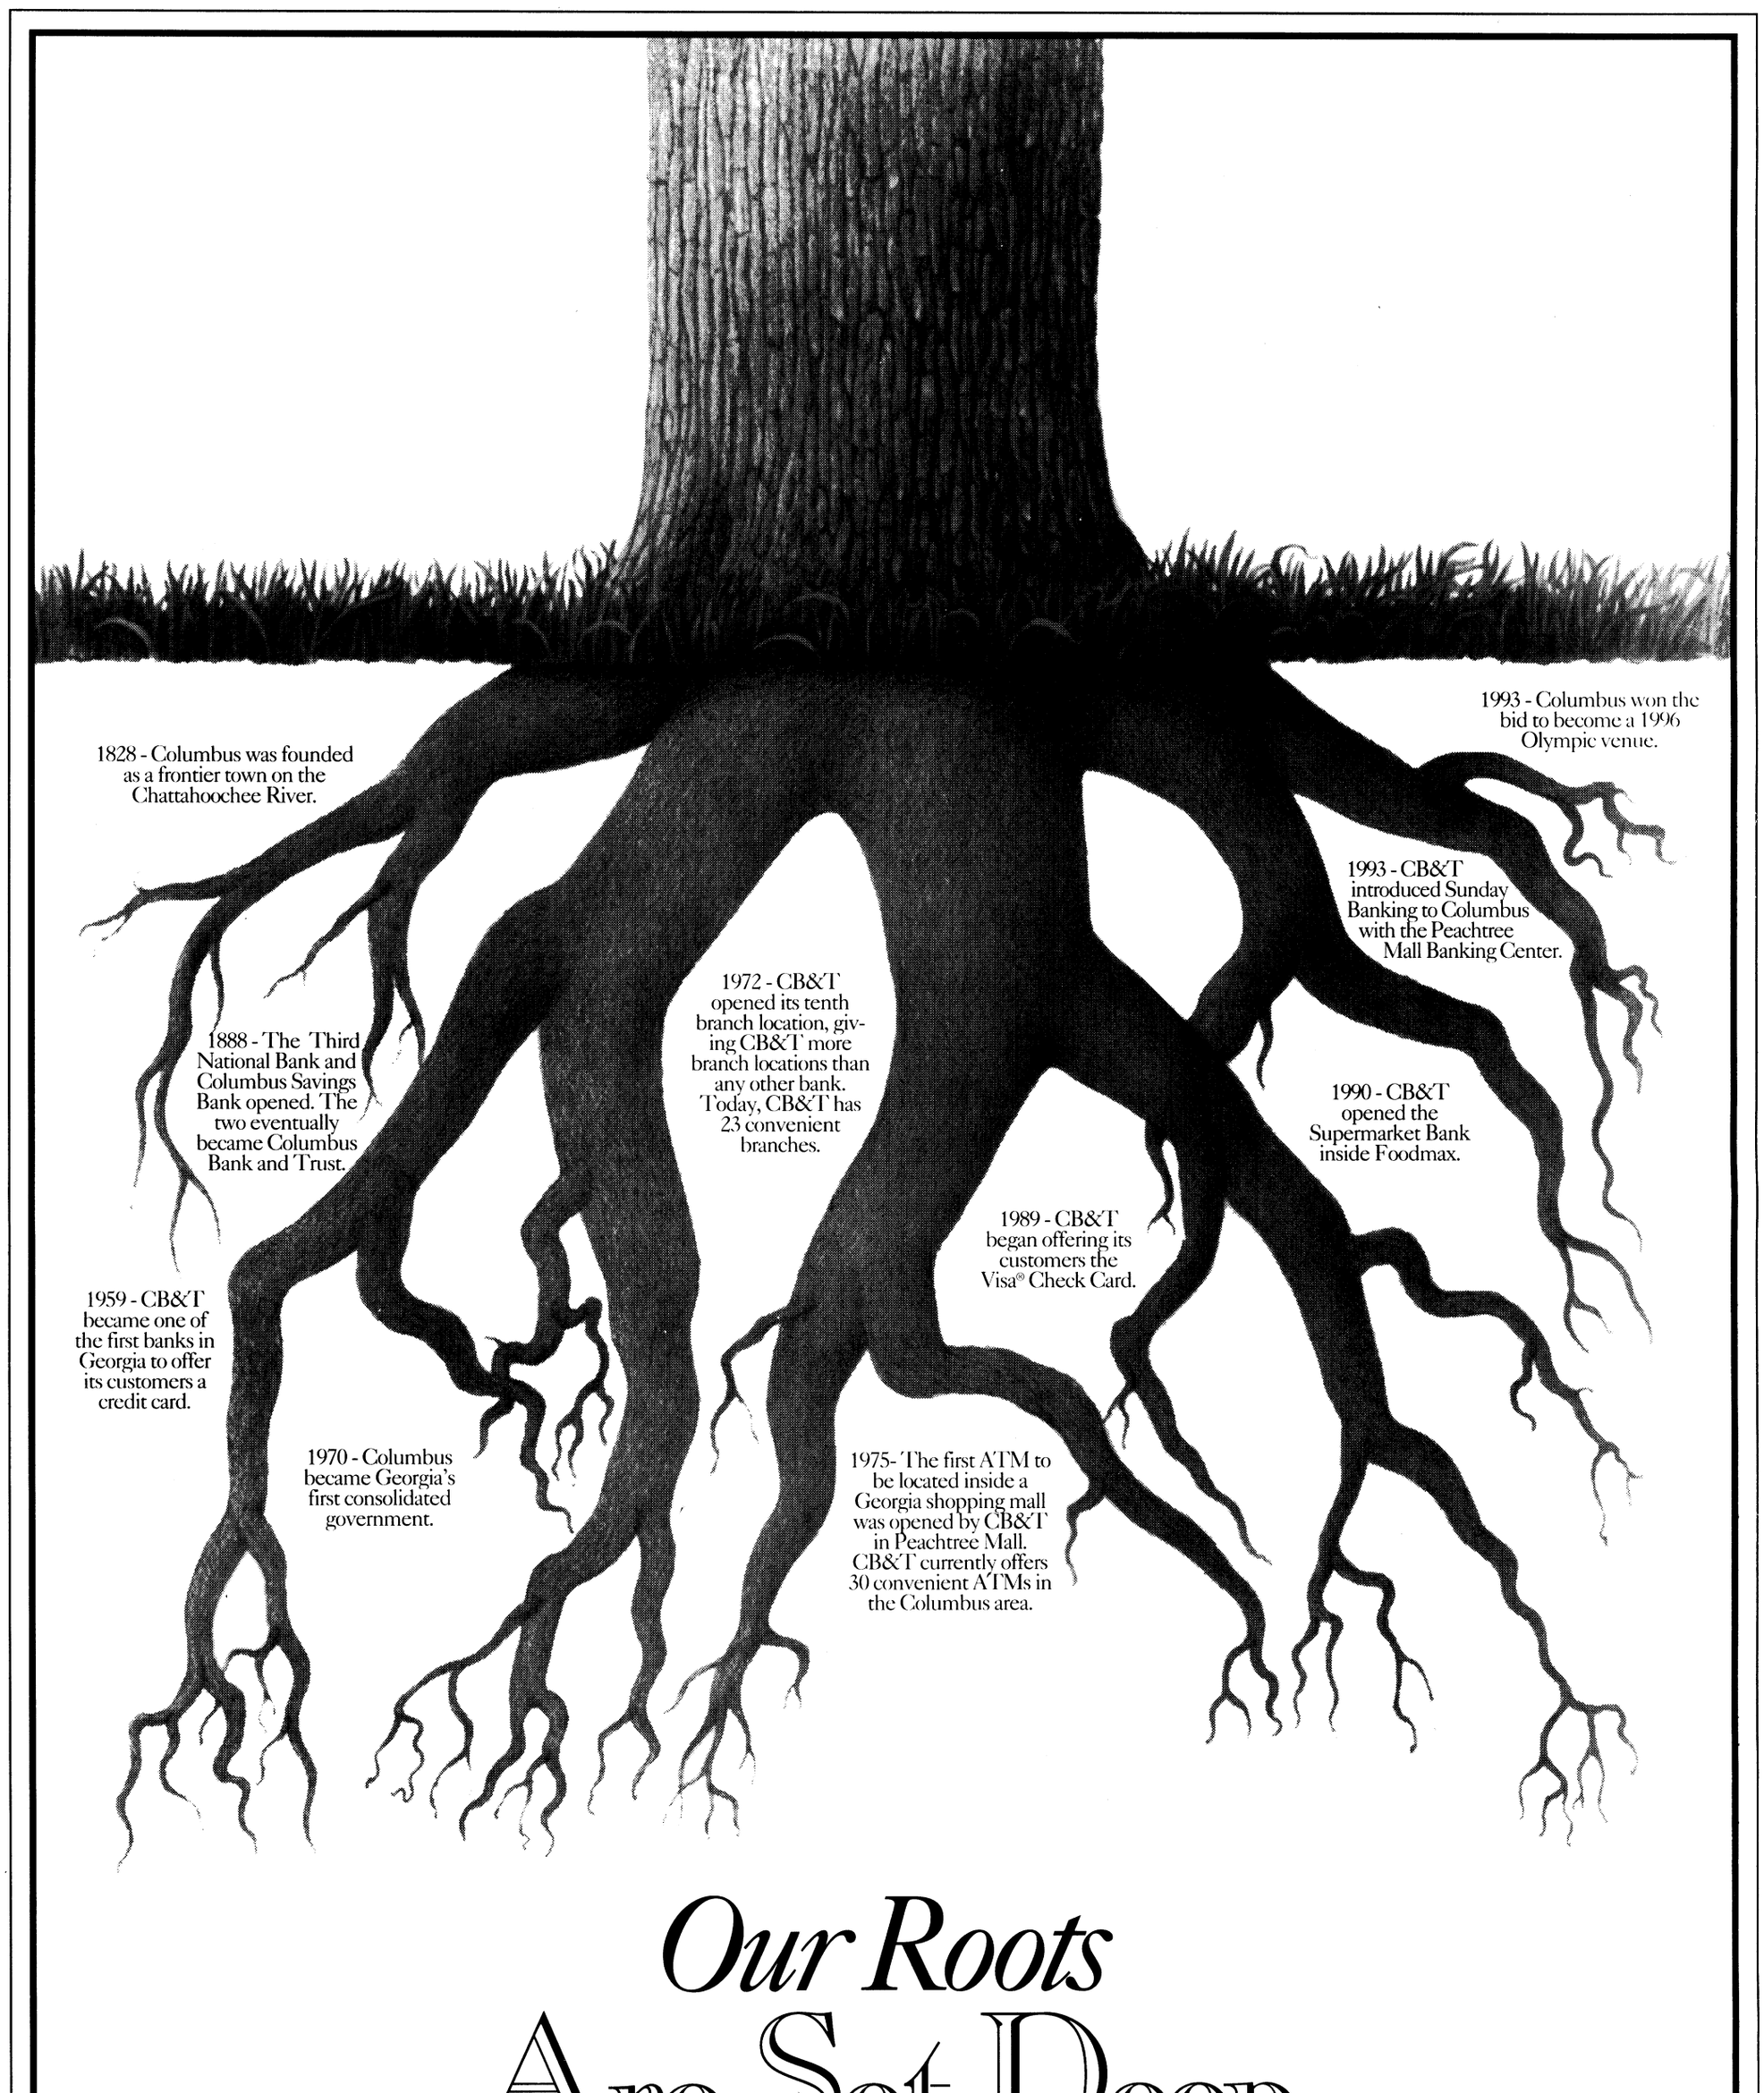
New labels make finding nutritious food easy, convenient

American Institute for Cancer Research

If you've ever wanted to buy more nutritious foods but found food package labels too complicated, you're in for a pleasant surprise. New labels were required by the U.S. Food and Drug Administration on all food packages by May, and they clearly show how well a food measures up to good nutrition standards.

For starters, the "Nutrition Facts" labels show standard serving sizes so you can compare similar products. The standard sizes are also more realistic to prevent manufacturers from making claims for unreasonably small portions.

The new labels list "percent Daily Value," which tells you how much of a nutrient a serving of the product will contribute to your total daily need or limit. For example, the label for a whole-grain bread may list dietary fiber as 3 grams per slice, which is 12 percent of the recommended amount of fiber for the day.



With sodium and fat, the percent daily value tells you how much fits into a limit that is reasonable for good health. Eating too much fat has been linked to a higher risk of cancer and heart disease. But how much fat is too much?

Health authorities like the American Institute for Cancer Research advise getting no more than 30 percent of your daily calories from fat. The new food labels follow this 30 percent limit to tell you how much fat is in a serving of a food product.

The rules for food labels also require honest wording. For example, not long ago, a jar of peanut butter labeled "light" might only have been lighter in color. Now, you can trust terms like "low," "free" and "high." If a product is labeled "high in vitamin A," legally it must provide at least 20 percent of your daily need for that nutrient per serving.

You can also find the daily values for cholesterol, protein, sugar and carbohydrates on the new food labels. However, if the numbers are too tedious, stick to the general guidelines of eating a diet that is low in fat and high in fiber from lots of fruits, vegetables and grain products, as recommended by health authorities like the American Institute for Cancer Research.

For a free brochure explaining the new food labels, send your name and address to AICR, Dept. RL, Washington, D.C. 20069.

community care

By Ken Franklin
Martin Army Community Hospital

"Mom, I'm bored!"

With the school year ending, many teen-agers are in that difficult position of being too young to work and too old to "go out and play." Martin Army Community Hospital offers a solution with its summer volunteer programs.

Through the hospital Red Cross office, responsible teens can volunteer to work once a week or more in records rooms, in clinics, and on wards.

Older teens with summer jobs can also take advantage of the volunteer program. Volunteers can work as little as four hours a week or as much as five days a week.

The Red Cross Office provides all needed training, and coordinates placement in hospital activities. For adults, day-care assistance is available.

Volunteers often assist with taking blood pressure, filing medical records, answering telephones, escorting patients, chaperoning examinations, delivering medical reports and lab samples, and providing patient information.

These jobs are also helpful in giving teens exposure to the health-care field. Many young men and women use this time to decide whether to pursue a career in the health-care profession. Many prospective employers also note volunteer time as evidence of commitment and dedication.

For further information or to volunteer, call 544-3213 or 544-4223.

Do you have a question about community care at Fort Benning? Send it to Community Care Corner, Martin Army Community Hospital, Attn: HSXB-F, Fort Benning, Ga.

Soldiers wants photos

Soldiers Magazine

Help Soldiers magazine celebrate the Army's 219th birthday by photographing what's happening on your Army installation Tuesday. Amateur and professional, civilian and military photographers are asked to record that day of Army life to support "This is Our Army," a 32-page photo feature to appear in Soldiers magazine December issue.

The magazine wants photos that tell a story and capture the faces of soldiers, families and Department of the Army civilians. Imagination and creativity make good photos — obviously posed shots will be screened out. Shoot what is unique to your installation — something you may see everyday but which others may never get the opportunity to see.

Here are some basic rules to keep in mind: Photos must be shot in the 24-hour period of Tuesday. Submit processed color slides or 5 x 7 or 8 x 10 black and white prints. Photos should be printed for magazine quality. Newspaper photojournalists often print photos lighter and with less contrast.

Cutlines must be attached individually to the photo or slide and the photos must be processed and received by Soldiers by Aug. 31. Photos and accompanying information will not be returned.

The address is: Soldiers, 9325 Gunston Road, Suite S108, Fort Belvoir, Va. 22060-5581. If you have questions, you may address them to Staff Sgt. Larry Lane or Staff Sgt. Doug Ide at DSN 656-4504 or (703) 806-4504.

Q: What is renter's insurance and why is it important to have it?

A: Renter's insurance is a special form of property insurance for people who do not own their place of residence. Most people who own their homes have homeowner's insurance to protect against loss or damage to their home or the property in it; in fact, mortgage companies always require it.

For a long time, however, people who rent were without such protection. As a result, if a fire, storm or burglary occurred resulting in damage or loss of a renter's furniture, clothing or other personal property, the renter was faced with the simple choice of spending his or her own money to replace the property or doing without.

A tenant cannot count on relying on the landlord's insurance unless the landlord was at fault in causing the loss (a storm does not meet this criteria, and in many cases, neither does a fire).

The recent fire at Whisperwood Apartments in Columbus is a case in point. Tenants in a number of units were burned out completely, with the loss of most of their furniture, clothing and belongings. Without renter's insurance, these people would have to start from scratch.

Renter's insurance can be procured through most major insurance companies, or you can contact an independent insurance agent who will seek the best coverage from among various insurance companies.

Cost of coverage is based on the total value of the property you wish to protect, and on whether you want insurance for replacement or depreciated value. You should also ask your agent about coverage for special items of property such as high-value pieces of jewelry, computers, art objects and the like. Sometimes these items must be scheduled separately.

Renter's insurance is also desirable for those who live in government quarters.

The government will only cover losses or damage caused by the government's fault (for example, an Abrams tank takes a wrong turn and drives through your front door). In the case of a storm or fire (accidental or caused through your carelessness), as with off-post housing, you are on your own.

For answers to questions about this topic, call the Legal Assistance Office for an appointment at 545-3281.

Heartworms are potentially fatal

pet tips

Veterinary Treatment Facility

Heartworm disease is a serious and potentially fatal disease in dogs that has been diagnosed in all 50 states.

Heartworms are transmitted by mosquitoes. A mosquito will carry the worms from one dog to another. Left untreated, the worms can grow up to 14 inches long and can cause lung and heart damage and death.

Blood can be drawn from a dog and tested for heartworms. The tests take about five minutes and can be done at the Fort Benning Veterinary Treatment Facility or any local veterinary clinic. At the Veterinary Treatment Facility, dogs are tested initially at 6 months and annually thereafter to ensure effectiveness of the preventative medication.

Once a dog has tested negative for heartworms, it can be placed on a preventative to keep the dog from getting heartworms. There are two types of preventative — once a day and once a month. The daily pills are recommended for puppies that are still growing (larger breeds) because the dose can change as the dog's weight changes.

The daily preventative also protects against hookworms, roundworms and whipworms (common intestinal worms). The monthly preventative is based on the weight of the dog and protects against heartworms, hookworms and roundworms.

All preventative pills should be started after a negative test has been diagnosed and can be purchased through any local veterinarian or the Veterinary Treatment Facility.

If a dog tests positive for heartworms, it can be successfully treated for heartworms if the disease is diagnosed early. The treatment is a series of injections to kill off the adult worms and a follow-up to kill the baby worms.

Animals are given a physical and have blood drawn to make sure their bodies can handle the treatment. They often remain at the veterinary clinic overnight. Treatment for heartworms is done at most veterinary clinics.

The Fort Benning Veterinary Treatment Facility is located in Building 265 on 10th Mountain Division Road. The hours are 8 to 11:30 a.m. and 12:45 to 3 p.m. Monday through Friday (closed the last working day of the month for inventory) and the phone numbers are 545-4444 and 545-1127

The Community Life Mayors' Association, in conjunction with the installation Community Life Office and the Infantry Branch Safety Office, sponsored a children's Safety Carnival Saturday on Gardner Field near Infantry Hall.

Various post agencies and activities provided demonstrations and displays promoting safety awareness and providing safety information to soldiers and their families.

One of the big attractions of the day was the bicycle rodeo safety course run by the Military Police Activity.

One participant, 4-year-old Michael Estep, postponed his birthday party until the next day so he could ride in the rodeo.

He was one of about 90 children who went through the course, said Marla Jewell, president of the Community Life Mayors' Association.

The children learned the appropriate hand signals and rode their bikes through a traffic-cone course to earn bicycle "licenses."

"We checked out the bikes to make sure everything was functional, made sure (the children) had helmets and notified parents that bikes must have reflectors and a bell or horn," said Pvt. 2 Adam Duhon of the 988th Military Police Company, one of the MPs running the bike rodeo.

The MPs also had a station set up to fingerprint children for identification. These prints can help the MPs track children in the event they ever come up missing, said Spc. Wade Sterling, an investigator with the U.S. Army Infantry Center Military Police Company.

The 498th Medical Company (Air Ambulance) brought a helicopter for the children to explore, and the Fort Benning Fire Department had a fire truck on display while firefighters gave out helium balloons and information on fire safety and prevention.

Representatives from the Columbus Coast Guard Auxiliary, Flotilla 81, talked to children about boating and water safety while they played with boats in a small wading pool.

Jim and Debbie Snoke performed puppet shows on safety and Al Curry of Alcohol and Drug Abuse Prevention and Control Program took pictures of children standing next to a life-size cutout poster of Shaquille O'Neal.

Donated items such as bike helmets, water bottles, reflective safety vests and life jackets were given away as door prizes, with family members Jackie O'Connor and Stuart Davis winning the grand prizes — bikes donated by Wayne and Julie Cushing and Edward and Linda Kunasek of the United Armed Forces Association.

Jana Jones won the initial drawing for the girl's bike, but declined the prize since she has a new one, allowing O'Connor to win.

Other sponsors included Ranger Joe's, the Community Life Mayor's Association, R.C. Cola, Coca Cola, the Fort Benning Commissary, the Army and Air Force Exchange Service, the Post Exchange, Anthony's Pizza, the American Red Cross, the Fort Benning Fire Department, Gofer Fun Park, the Milgen Road and Phenix City K-Marts, Plaza Pharmacy in Smiths, Ala., Jordan Bicycle Shop, the Buena Vista, Airport Thruway and Phenix City Wal-Marts, U.S. Cavalry, Mike's Bikes, Sgt. 1st Class Gary and Lynette Blakeney, Cablevision, the RedStixx, Lowe's Home Centers and the Columbus Coast Guard Auxiliary.

"We had a great turnout this year with an overall attendance of approximately 1,000 people," said Jennifer Morgan, acting installation Community Life officer.

"Soldiers and family members really enjoyed themselves and learned a lot about safety," Morgan said. "Our mission is to enhance and improve the quality of life at Fort Benning, and I feel we accomplished that here today."

Students build 'unbreakable' bridge

By Jerrie Macintire
Special to The Bayonet ©

Using about four dozen toothpicks and an ounce of glue, budding fourth-grade engineers from Unbreakable Bridges Inc. proved the aptness of the company name when their creation just wouldn't break.

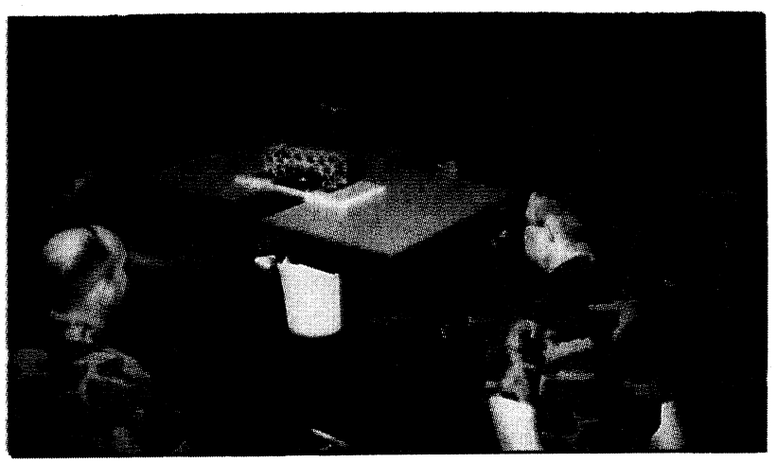
The youngsters from Dexter School were participating in a model bridge-building exercise June 2 designed to apply math skills and teach industrial technology. Over the past few weeks, fourth- and fifth- graders in the gifted program have been working in groups to design and construct the sturdiest toothpick bridge.

The winning bridge, which edged out other entries by withstanding the most weight, literally could not be broken at Dexter School by the standard means of a 25-pound bucket of sand suspended from the center of the structure. It was later taken to Faith School, where it withstood 67 pounds before breaking.

The bridge-building exercise is one way to make math more meaningful while teaching the principals of geometry and architecture as well as the basics of industrial technology, according to Marge Brasfield, gifted program teacher and sponsor for this fourth- and fifth-grade exercise. Students also sharpened their language arts skills by maintaining a written journal, which chronicled each day's progress.

"This is a cross-curricular exercise," said Brasfield. The students work cooperatively in business groups to construct the strongest bridge."

There are specific positions within the company, she explained. The architect designs the bridges using a blueprint, the project director overseas the entire venture and keeps a log, the accountant works within a budget to purchase supplies like blueprints, toothpicks and glue without overspending, and the carpenter constructs the model bridge, Brasfield said. During the project, students received expert advice from Anne Shaw, industrial arts teacher at Faith Middle School, who discussed principals of design.



By using geometry and the principals of industrial technology, students attempted to create the strongest bridge.

Representatives from the 43rd Engineer Battalion tested the weight-bearing capabilities of each structure and helped judged the creations for design, quality of building plans and strength. Winning bridges were constructed by Unbreakable Bridges Inc., first place; Everlasting Bridges, second place; and B-Ridges Building Company, third place.

Individual fifth-grade winners were: outstanding architect, Julie Hilgers; outstanding project director, Monica Junious; outstanding accountant, Gina Bastone; and outstanding carpenter, Christina Valdez.

Fourth-grade winners were: outstanding architect, Paddy Ferriter, outstanding project director, Kevin Nix; outstanding accountant, Jake McCoy, and outstanding carpenter, Stephen Yackley.

Companies placing in the annual "Brasfield Bridge Off" included Unbreakable Bridges Inc., first place; Everlasting Bridges, second place; and B-Ridges Building Company, third place.

'Exceptional' program provides for special needs

By Jerrie Macintire
Special to The Bayonet ©

Young Lisa Ealey loves being carried in the strong arms of her father, the special hero in her life. However, when her father deployed for training as soldiers do, Lisa, who is unable to walk, depended upon her mother to negotiate the winding staircase in the two-story family home in Bouton Heights.

Lisa, a bright-eyed 9-year-old who has cerebral palsy, depends upon her parents to provide mobility. This they have gladly done over the years, and negotiating steps, narrow sidewalks, and curbs without ramps has been a fact of life for the Ealeys.

However, things got a little harder than usual when Vanessa Ealey was fitted with an ankle cast just as her husband, Staff Sgt. Robert Ealey, deployed to California for training with Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 2nd Battalion, 18th Infantry Regiment.

Carrying Lisa up and down the stairs while also tending her ailing mother in an upstairs bedroom was difficult for Ealey, who is not a complainer by nature but admitted "things were rough for a while."

Thanks to the Exceptional Family Member Program, the Ealey family will be moving soon to more appropriate quarters where Lisa will have access to all the rooms in the family home without the barrier of stairs, according to Frances Howard, EFMP coordinator, Army Community Service.

Providing appropriate housing for EFMP participants is one way the program addresses special needs of soldiers with family members who have physical, intellectual or emotional limitations.

As a multidisciplinary program, the focus of the EFMP is to ensure the special needs of individuals are met and that they have the opportunity to reach full potential through medical and educational interventions. Special consideration for housing, areas of assignment, and information on community support programs is also given.

Jerrie Macintire/Special to The Bayonet
Staff Sgt. Robert Ealey and his daughter, Lisa, benefit from the Exceptional Family Member Program.

Enrollment

The program is mandatory for soldiers and Army civilians with family members who require ongoing counseling, training, education, therapy or treatment for a variety of conditions. "If you see a special doctor for any conditions considered out of the ordinary, you may be eligible for EFMP," said Howard.

Once a family member is enrolled, members of the EFMP coordinating committee work to identify relevant issues and help with resolutions, said Howard, who has worked with the program in various locations since its inception in 1986.

Medical

To discuss enrollment in the program, contact Howard at 545-3344 or 545-5516. Enrollment in the EFMP is initiated at Martin Army Community Hospital's EFMP section, located in Building 392. Military personnel are responsible for completing the EFMP questionnaires and returning the forms to the EFMP enrollment office. Enrollment in the EFMP ensures that the special needs of family members are considered in the reassignment selection process. To arrange for a medical appointment for evaluation for the EFMP, call 545-5803.

Average process time for enrollment in the EFMP is usually two months.

Assignments

In addition to medical intervention, another way the EFMP seeks to help families is by "assisting soldiers and civilians in getting appropriate assignments to facilitate the special needs of the exceptional individual," Howard said.

Assignment managers consider the medical and educational needs of exceptional individuals when processing new orders. If a soldier is assigned to an area where special medical services are unavailable, a deletion, deferment or compassionate reassignment may be requested; however, participation in the EFMP does not guarantee reassignment.

ACS

Through Army Community Service, families enrolled in the EFMP may receive information about appropriate recreational and cultural programs, respite care including home nursing information, materials on community resources and advocacy counseling.

YA and child care

Youth services makes every effort to include exceptional children in various recreational activities.

"Child Development Services also plays a key role in servicing families of special needs children," said Howard. To ensure that families receive the most appropriate child care placement, a special needs resource team works with the centers and with home-based child care to "focus on what is best for the child," said Howard.

Early intervention

Families in the EFMP are also eligible for enrollment in the Early Intervention Program, which helps physically or mentally challenged youngsters from birth to age three. Fort Benning is one of nine installations to offer this program, designed to minimize problems associated with slow development through therapy, training, and other methods of intervention.

Legal services

Members of the EFMP may receive legal counsel though the Staff Judge Advocate's Office on matters relating to public law and educational rights.

Special education

EFMP serves as a referral source for special education and as a liaison between military and civilian school systems.

Children deemed exceptional under federal special education guidelines are served under a program designed around an Individual Education Plan, a cooperative endeavor between educators and parents.

A child's individual educational goals are targeted and proper school placement is determined by the special education division of the schools.

In Lisa's case, special education has been an ongoing part of the EFMP. When the Ealeys arrived at Fort Benning, Tommye Woods, director of special education, arranged for Lisa to attend special education classes.

When the Stowers School special education classrooms were completed, Lisa began classes where she said she thoroughly enjoys the daily lessons by her teacher.

A sunny child by nature, Lisa loves her class and has all the necessary equipment and supplies needed for success in school, Ealey said. "The special education program at Stowers is one of the best," she added.

Housing

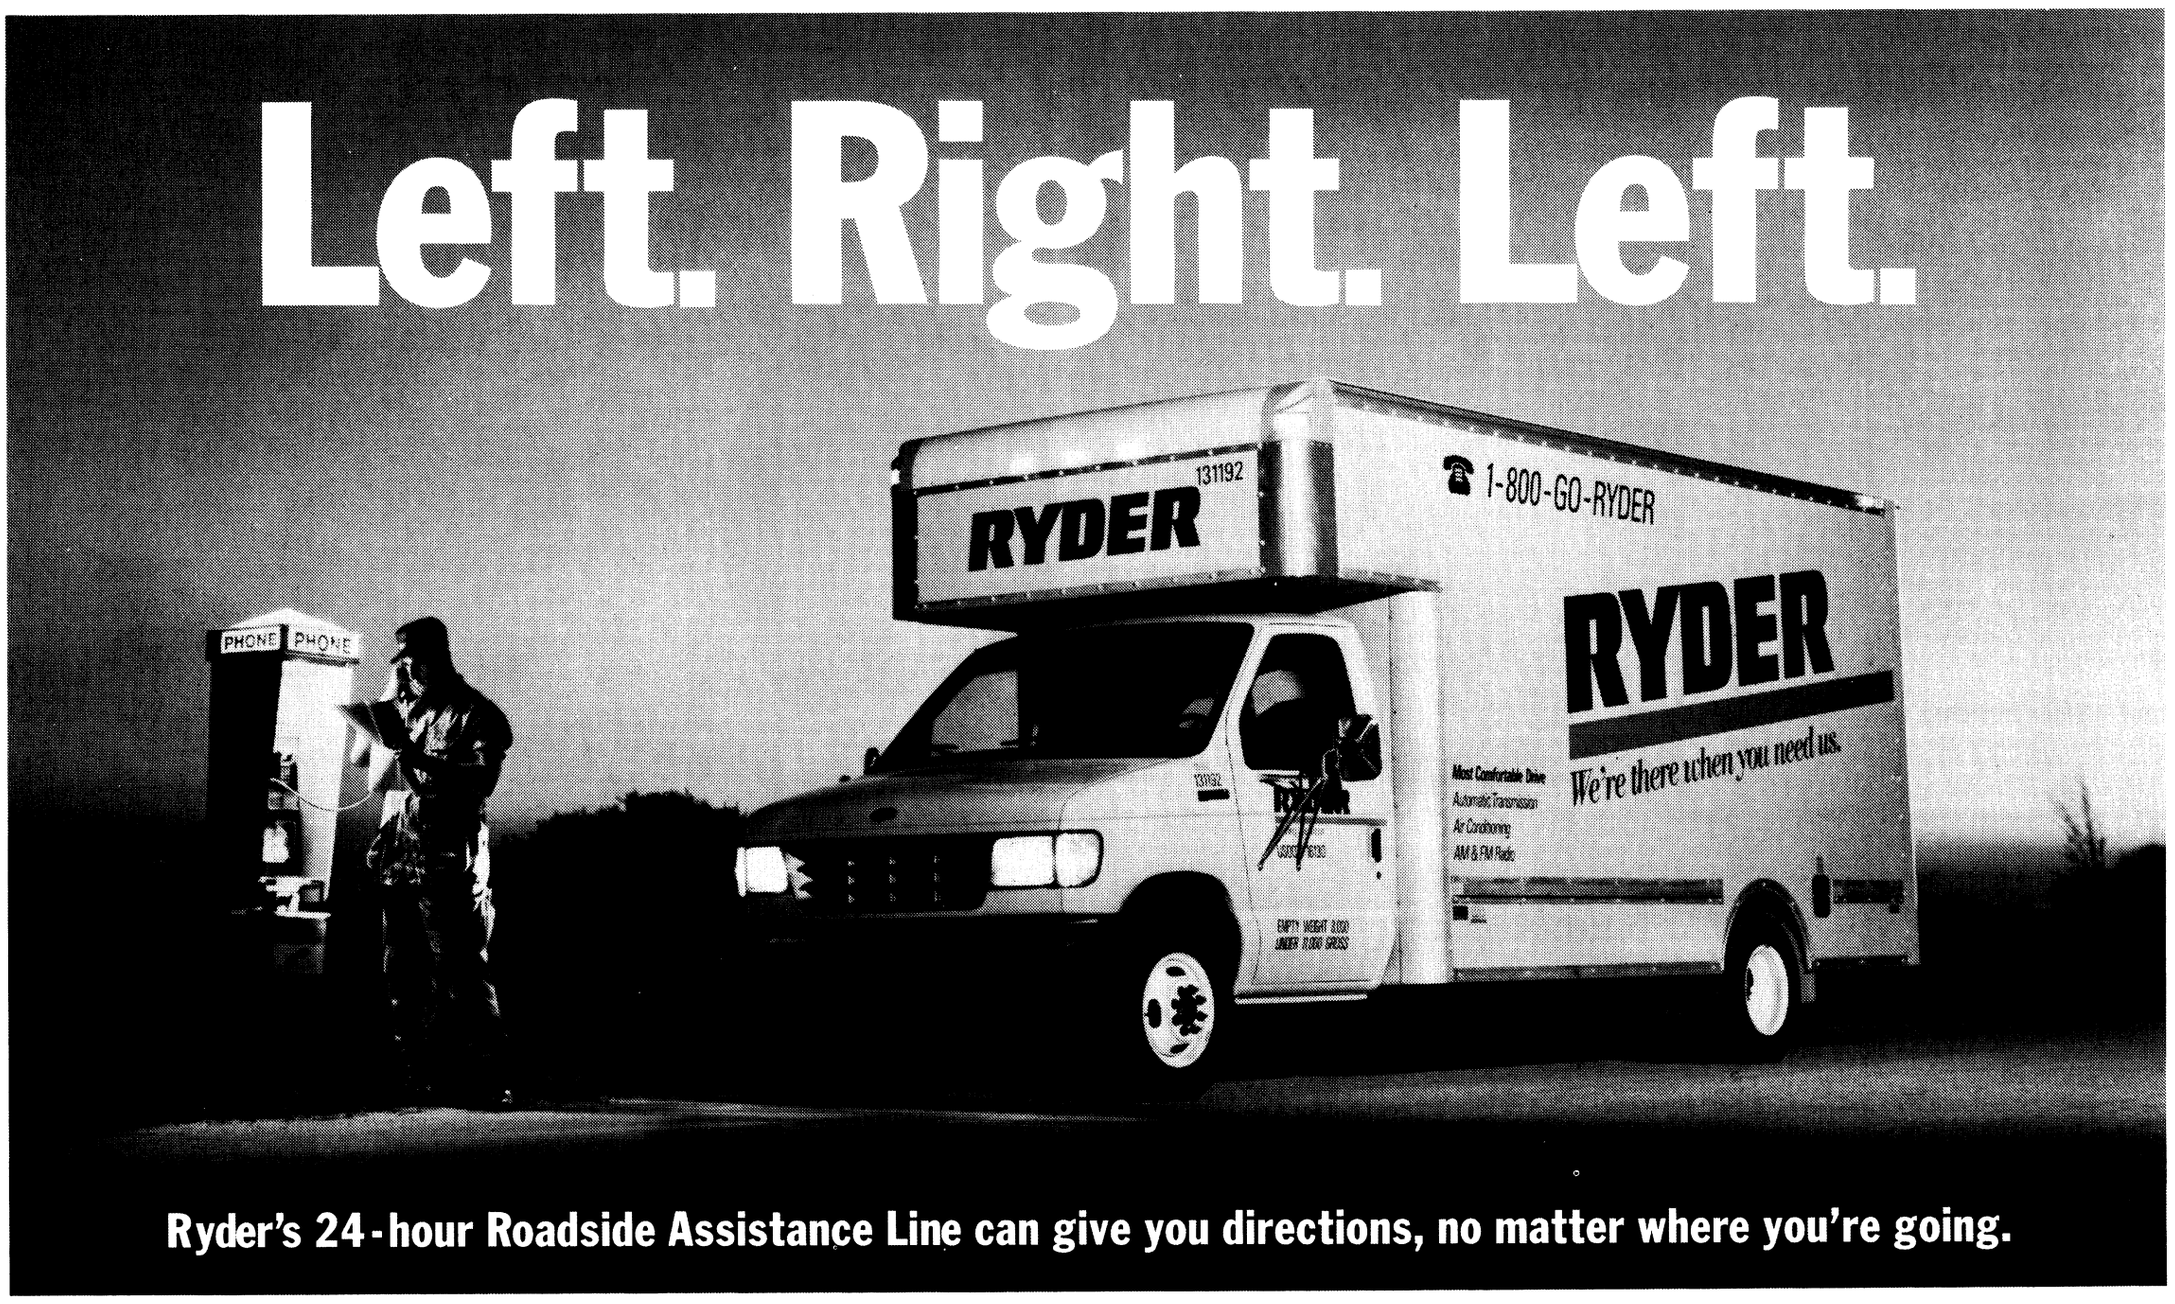
Another area helpful to EFMP families is housing, said Howard. As key members of the EFMP, Doris Peters, acting chief of quarters assignments, and Howard took immediate steps to remedy the Ealey's housing difficulties after learning of the problems.

Peters placed the Ealeys at the top of the housing list and began looking for appropriate quarters that would be large enough to accommodate the family's five children while also serving Lisa's need for a one-story floor plan.

"We're here to back the program. My goal is to make sure soldiers and their families are taken care of," said Peters.

The new quarters will be modified to fit Lisa's needs with a ramp for front door access, guard rails in the bathtub, and other modifications deemed necessary to accommodate Lisa, said Peters.



When going to school, or just outside for a stroll, Lisa will find mobility a little easier through the help provided by the EFMP, said Ealey.

After all,"the program is all about helping individuals with special needs," Howard said .

'March for Jesus' set for June 25

USAIC Chaplains' Office

reflections

"If my people, who are called by my name, will humble themselves and pray and seek my face and turn from their wicked ways, then will I hear from heaven and will forgive their sin and will heal their land." 2 Chronicles 7:14 (NIV)

Certain serious and disturbing conditions are becoming more and more prevalent in he Columbus, Phenix City and Fort Benning communities and in the wider communities of our nation and world. Fear, distrust, misunderstanding and outright hostility between ethnic and political groups, between races, even between religious denominations, are ripping the fabric of our society apart.

Scripture offers possible healing. Especially when we humble ourselves and seek the Lord in prayer. This is one of the purposes of the "March For Jesus" June 25 at 9 a.m. The tri-cities will cooperate with some 350 other cities in the United States and 72 countries around the world from Albania to Zambia.

This will probably be the most massive worldwide prayer and praise offering to God in the history of Christianity. Christians of every nationality, every age, color, denomination, political affiliation, economic and social condition and physical ability will set aside their differences for a time and join hands with one another in a public declaration of praise for our one Lord, Jesus Christ.

Millions of prayers will ask God to show us how to be his servants in solving the tremendous problems facing us and healing the wounds we have inflicted upon ourselves and others.

During these coordinated marches, Christians will simply take the love, joy and life that we experience within the church and display it openly, proclaiming our faith boldly and inviting others to join in the celebration. Truly, this could be "a day to change the world!"

The Columbus-Phenix City-Fort Benning March for Jesus will begin behind the Russell County, Ala., Courthouse at 9 a.m. June 25. It will proceed down Broad Street, cross the Dillingham Street Bridge and finish at the Government Center in Columbus. The activity will end with a closing prayer and praise service.

Chaplain Anibal Cruz-Baez, chaplain at the U.S. Army School of the Americas, is the point of contact for Fort Benning chapels and congregations. Planning meetings will take place at the Infantry Center Chapel Annex (Building 101) Wednesday and June 22 from 3 to 4 p.m. Representatives from each Catholic and Protestant chapel congregation on Fort Benning will represent their groups at each meeting and keep them informed.

For more information, call Cruz-Baez at 545-1832 during duty hours, or at 682-6882 after duty hours.

Hopkins to co-host Tony Awards

By Jay Bobbin
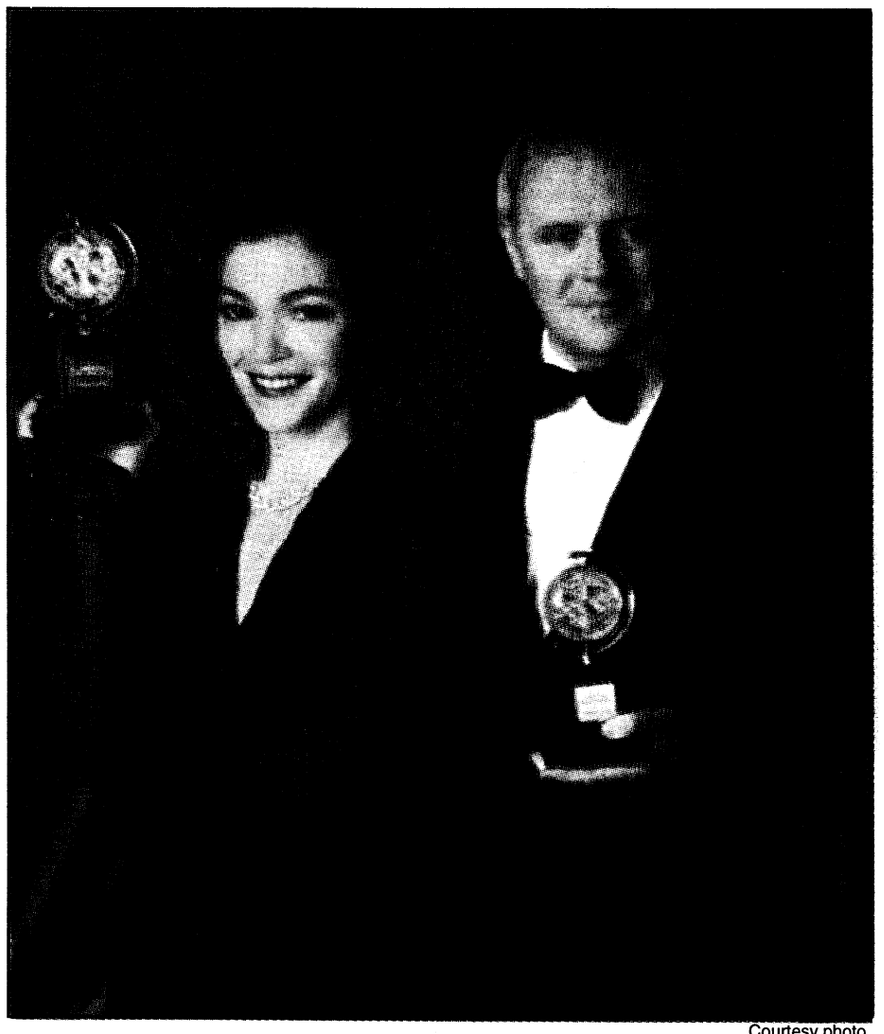
Tribune Media Services



Since it's his self-professed nickname of choice, it's not inaccurate to say that a "Tony" is about to help hand out the Tonys.

SPOTLIGHT

Though he is an Oscar-winner — for his vivid portrayal of Chianti-and-fava-bean fancier Dr. Hannibal Lecter in 1991's "The Silence of the Lambs" — and the esteemed bearer of a title of the British Royal Order, Sir Anthony Hopkins is approachable, casual and more than a little modest. Those traits are sure to surface Sunday on CBS, as he holds court with Amy Irving in presiding over the 48th annual Tony Awards ceremony, the celebration of Broadway's best of the past season on the New York stage.

Originating from that city's Gershwin Theatre, the program will feature a wealth of tuneful segments, since the four shows nominated for Best Musical ("A Grand Night for Singing," "Beauty and the Beast," "Cyrano" and "Passion") and the four contenders for Best Revival of a Musical ("Carousel," "Damn Yankees," "Grease" and "She Loves Me") all will be represented by production numbers.

Additionally, a satellite-transmitted segment from Toronto will highlight the Broadway-bound staging of "Show Boat," and legendary performing couple Jessica Tandy and Hume Cronyn will be given the first-ever Tony for Lifetime Achievement.

Tony Award hosts Amy Irving and Sir Anthony Hopkins.

Among the many scheduled presenters are Alan Alda, Jane Alexander (now the chairwoman of the National Endowment for the Arts), Carol Burnett, Glenn Close, Faye Dunaway, Melanie Griffith, Jack Klugman, Steve Martin, Bernadette Peters, Tony Randall, Martin Short and Gwen Verdon.

What: Tony Awards
When: Sunday on CBS

While actress Irving currently is in the New York footlights, starring in the Arthur Miller play "Broken Glass," her Tony co-host Hopkins hasn't been in that situation for a decade (since the 1984 production of "Old Times"). Admittedly, he's stayed very busy in the film world with such widely praised ventures as "Howard's End" and "The Remains of the Day" ... but he has worked before live audiences in London on several fairly recent occasions, including runs in "King Lear" (1986-87) and "M. Butterfly" (1989).

"I don't know exactly how this came about," the pleasant, Welsh-born Hopkins says of his participation in this year's Tony Awards show. "I thought I was going to be a presenter; then my American publicist called me and asked me about this. I think it's great. You just take a look at the script and talk to the writers or whoever; then you take a gulp of fresh air and on you go."

As a presenter at the People's Choice Awards last March, Hopkins was visibly startled and bemused when he was greeted with a cry of "I love you!" from the crowd. "You have to keep a sense of humor," he reasons. "Enjoy it while it lasts, but don't take yourself seriously."

Officials discuss latest findings on Gulf War illness

Music theater to come to Jekyll for season

Festival performances to include 'Nunsense,' 'Mame,' 'Oklahoma!'

Jekyll Island Convention,Visitors Bureau

The Jekyll Island Musical Theatre Festival '94 will provide toe-tapping entertainment for thousands of visitors again this summer.

Designated as the State Musical Theatre of Georgia and produced by Valdosta State University, festival performances will include "Oklahoma!," "Mame" and "Nunsense" from June 24 to Aug. 20 at the Jekyll Island Outdoor Amphitheater.

Rogers and Hammerstein's 1943 classic "Oklahoma!" was the longest-running Broadway musical in the history of theater before it closed in 1948. The story revolves around a handsome cowboy and a headstrong farm girl and their bumpy road to romance in Oklahoma. The production features all-time favorites "Oh What A Beautiful Morning," and "Surrey With A Fringe On Top."

"Nunsense," by Don Goggin, depicts a hilarious fund-raising talent show by the Little Sisters of Hoboken. This lively musical features "Growing Up Catholic" and "Nunsense is Habit Forming".

"Mame," written by Patrick Dennis with music and lyrics by Jerry Herman, chronicles a flamboyant free spirit in the roaring 20s whose life gets interesting when an orphaned 10-year-old is placed into her guardianship.

Curtain time for all performances is 8:30 p.m.

Advance tickets are $8 for adults, $5 for senior citizens, students 6 to 18 and college students, and free for children under age 6. Add $1 for tickets purchased at the door. Season tickets are also available.

Rain performances will be in the ballroom of the Jekyll Island Club Hotel.

For information on the Jekyll Island Musical Theatre Festival '94, call (800) 841-6586 or (912) 635-3636.

Power cuts mean big $aving$

By Karen S. Morarie
Bayonet staff writer

If you are one of those people who melt when the temperature gets above 80, you may want to plan a backup to your air conditioning. Stock up on ice and buy that wading pool now, because electrical curtailment time is here again.

Curtailment is the system by which Fort Benning agrees to cut back power usage during peak demand hours in exchange for lower energy rates year-round from Georgia Power.

According to Mark Fincher, chief of the Energy Branch, the post has 30 minutes to decrease power usage to a preset limit.

This is done by "shedding," or cutting power allocated to nonessential uses. The most noticeable effect of shedding is that air conditioning is temporarily turned off.

According to Glenn Todd, installation utilities sales and service officer, the additional power made available when the post cuts back represents the equivalent of a small hydroelectric plant.

"That's why we're able to get the rates we do from Georgia Power," Todd said. "As one of the largest electrical users in the state, we represent a considerable source of power during peak-demand times."

Todd said the post saved about $1.4 million in 1993 as a result of the curtailment program.

"Last year was what some called the 'summer of the century'," Todd said. "We had a record number of days with temperatures above 90. As a result, the curtailment was necessary more often than usual."

Todd said that while Georgia Power requested curtailment more

SECRETARY OF DEFENSE

Perry visits Fort Benning

By Karen S. Morarie
Bayonet staff writer

William J. Perry, Secretary of Defense, observed training and talked with soldiers at Fort Benning Monday in the first of a series of get-acquainted visits he plans to make to military installations worldwide.

Perry was accompanied on his trip by the senior noncommissioned officers of the services: Sgt. Maj. of the Army Richard A. Kidd, Sgt. Maj. of the Marine Corps Harold G. Overstreet, Chief Master Sgt. of the Air Force Gary R. Pfingston and Master Chief Petty Officer of the Navy John Hagan.

The purpose of the visits, Perry said, is to "place emphasis on what we can do to improve the warfighting capabilities of our forces."

Perry said he felt the military must place emphasis on three areas: attracting and retaining quality soldiers and officers; providing well-trained and effective leadership in the officer and noncommissioned officer ranks; and emphasizing training.

Perry said he was impressed with the soldiers and training he observed here, including a mortar leaders' course at Red Cloud Range and Airborne School training.

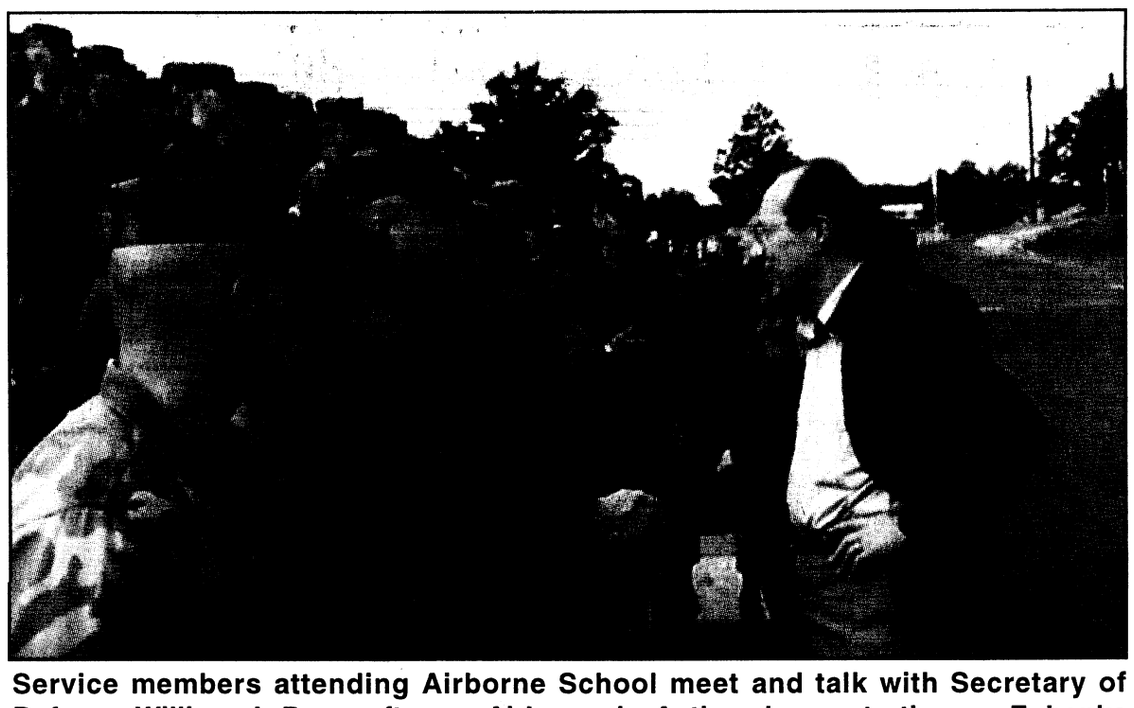
"My impression of Fort Benning is very good," he said. "There's obviously a high level of readiness here, and a 'can do' attitude. It's apparent that Fort Benning is, in many ways, not only the Infantry Center of the United States Army, but of the world."

The training he observed, Perry said, convinced him that noncommissioned officers are "clearly the backbone of the armed forces."

Perry took advantage of his stop at Red Cloud to address some foreign policy issues.

"I am ready to announce to the world," he said, "that (the United states is) committed to defend South Korea."

The United States has been improving its "readiness enhancement" in the last six months, he said, sending Patriot missiles and Apache helicopters, as well as more supplies, to the area.



"We are in the highest state of readiness," Perry said, since Korean hostilities officially ceased.

Of the situation in Haiti, Perry said only diplomatic actions were presently being considered. He is personally confident, he said, that the present sanctions would be effective in returning a democratic government to that country.

Post to welcome new AC

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Fort Benning will bid farewell to the deputy commanding general and assistant commandant of the U.S. Army Infantry School and welcome his replacement in a 9 a.m. ceremony Tuesday on York Field.

Brig. Gen. Jack P. Nix Jr., who has served as the deputy commanding general since July, was reassigned to Italy this month.

He assumed command of the U.S. Army Southern European Task Force and 5th Theater Army Area Command June 15th and is returning for the ceremony.

Replacing Nix will be Brig. Gen. John J. Maher III, a former commander of the Ranger Training Brigade.

Maher is currently serving as the assistant division commander of the 24th Infantry Division (Mechanized), Fort Stewart, Ga.

Provost marshal to retire

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Col. James Crockert, Military Police Activity commander and Fort Benning provost marshal, retires today on the Field of Four Chaplains, the same field on which he was commissioned 27 years ago.

Crockert, who enlisted in the Army 28 years ago, spent his first 17 years in the infantry after graduating from Officer Candidate School.

Crockert considers the modernization of the Military Police Activity his greatest legacy.

"We're in the 21st century already," Crockert said. "We have state-of-the-art patrol cars, radar systems, mobile data terminals and eye-witness cameras."

Driving under the influence incidents on the rise

Holidays, hot weather blamed for increase

By Marc G. Turchin
Bayonet staff writer

Imagine yourself on a Saturday night. You and your friends have been off post drinking and now its time to drive back to Fort Benning.

As you swerve into the opposite lane in front of the commanding general's house, the military police officer on duty sees you and turns on his emergency lights to pull you over.

While waiting for the officer to walk to your vehicle, questions like, "Why did I drive when I knew I was too drunk to drive?" " How did this happen to me?" and "What is going to happen to my military career?" run through your head like a runaway steam engine.

People are getting caught driving under the influence of alcohol more often than usual on Fort Benning, said Staff Sgt. Joseph M. Labranche, chief of Traffic Investigations.

"We (the Military Police) have had 44 cases of DUI in the month of May," said Labranche. "That is more than the months of January through April combined."

Labranche sees the increase in DUIs on post due to the warm weather and holidays that are in the month of May.

With the warm weather here, outside activity increases, as does the drinking, said Labranche.

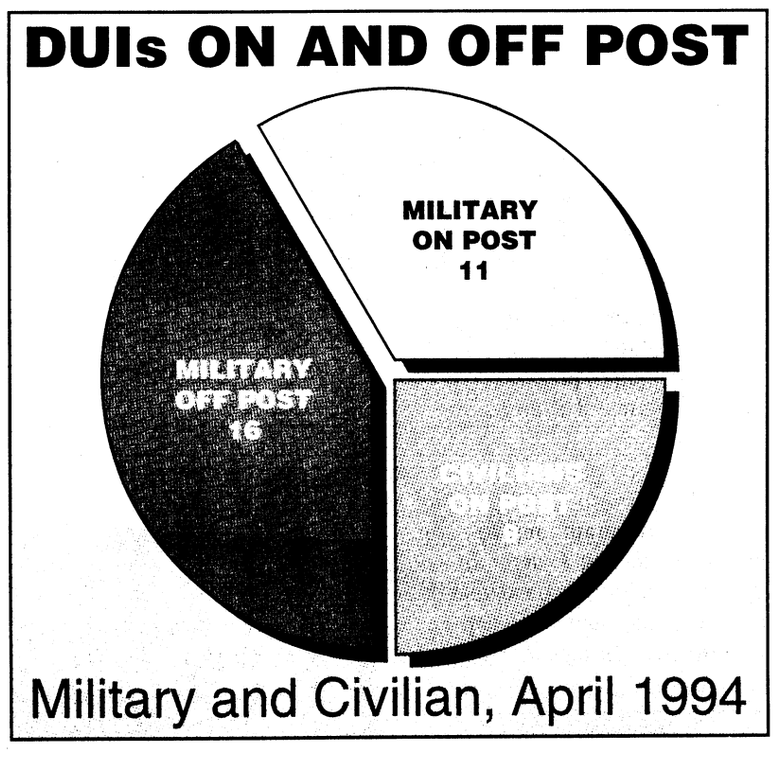
Safe drinking on post has been made easier, according to John C. Bush, chief of the Community Operation Division.

"We offer a number of ways to get the individual home safely," said Bush.

One way, Bush said, is that the on post taxi drivers are under contract through the Morale, Welfare and Recreation Fund to take intoxicated individuals home from on post clubs.

At one time taxi drivers on post could refuse to take someone home who had too much to drink, according to Bush.

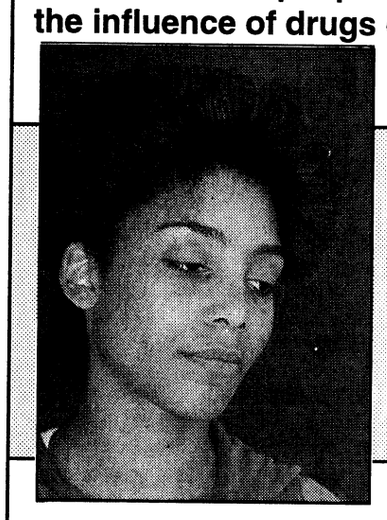
Another way to keep from driving while intoxicated is being able to see that you have had too much to drink, said Bush.



There are breathalizers installed in every club on post.

"From the Officers' Club to the post bowling centers, you can have your alcohol level checked before you leave," said Bush.

The breathalizers that are located in the clubs are not always the most accurate, said Sgt. Wendy A. Kiessling, assistant chief of Traffic Investigations. "They are there to give an idea of the individual's blood alcohol level."



One opportunity, Bush said, that is offered only on post is a

VARIOUS VOICES

What do you think can be done to reduce the number of people who drive while under the influence of drugs or alcohol?

Spc. Kimberly Dennis, U.S. Army Infantry Center Military Police Company— "Pay more attention to soldiers who are getting into clubs; many are underage."

Capt. Anthony B. Phillips, 1st Army ROTC Region— "We should make bar owners more responsible and the penalties should be stiffer. Also, parents of minors who drive under the influence should be held accountable."

Spc. Sean W. Bolding, 1st Battalion, 38th Infantry Regiment— "More DUI spot checks. It scares people enough not to drink and drive just hearing about them."

Sgt. Daniel A. Harris, 3rd Army Cavalry Regiment — "More roadblocks."

Capt. Jeff A. Romero, Company B, 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment — "You have to be strong with laws and take away privileges. The punishment needs to fit the crime."

Staff Sgt. Willie Hogan, Company D, 2nd Battalion 10th Infantry Regiment, Fort Leonard Wood, Mo.— "I guess educating people with safety classes."

No cure for the designated driver

By Clyde Snively
Bayonet columnist

commentary

Sober people never drive drunk. Did I just make up a slogan? Does it make sense?

Not sure if it makes sense, but it's certainly true. Sober people certainly don't drive drunk.

Sober people also vow never to drive drunk. Sober people know the consequences of driving drunk.

Sober people know they can lose their licenses, get put in jail, the hospital or both, and they know if they kill or injure someone while driving drunk they'll have that burden to carry with them the rest of their lives.

But a few drinks can turn a sober, rational, cautious human being into a wild, irrational daredevil.

People who've had too much to drink don't drive sober and they don't think sober.

First they usually don't recognize the fact that they're drunk, that their faculties are impaired. And they certainly don't consider the consequences of driving a 1-ton vehicle down the highway in a reckless and temerarious manner, scaring other drivers off the road and attracting the attention of the local constabulary.

So the question that has perplexed mankind since cars were invented, is, "How do you prevent drunks from driving?"

Friends can do it if they're sober. But how many of us head for the local watering hole with a friend who's going to stay sober and drive the rest of us sots home when we get snockered?

Not many of us. I mean, who wants to sit around sipping ginger ale while everyone else is testing Long Island tea or quaffing the local brew?

I know I sure don't. And until someone comes up with a duty roster for my drinking group, I don't think I'll ever volunteer to be the designated sober person, even if the soda's free.

I know there are some cars th. have devices installed that sense alcohol on a person's breath and if he or she fails the sobriety test, the car won't start.

Not sure how many of those are on the road, or how effective they are, but again, I doubt something like that would deter my crowd.

Some courts are finding bartenders guilty of being accessories to accidents caused by drunks who did their drinking in that person's bar.

I'm sure that's made some bartenders more cautious about how many drinks they serve a person, but it ain't gonna stop people from getting drunk in the corner pub.

I hate to be negative about it, but I can tell you I sure don't know what the answer is. And obviously, from the number of drunk driving arrests we see on and off post, no one else does.

On the positive note, if anyone ever does figure out a way to keep drunks off the road, they stand to make a killing, er, fortune.

letter

Decision to drive drunk was a bad call, mistake of a lifetime

One night, one bad decision, that's all it took. Seven years of hard work, seven years of dedication down the drain, because of my own poor judgment. Now, all I can do is try to pick up the pieces, reassemble the shattered fragments of a once promising career.

On a hot night last summer, I was picked up for driving under the influence. How much I had to drink and why I drank and drove doesn't matter. What is important is that I did it and now I am paying the price for it.

God, and what a price I have had to pay for my own stupidity. It's not just the dollars lost, although that amount has been staggering; it's also the lost respect, the respect of my superiors, my peers, my subordinates. It's looking at my wife and children, knowing how I had let them down. It's that huge black splotch blotting out an otherwise spotless career.

The Army and I fit together like hand in glove. I was fast-tracking, made sergeant in 30 months, staff sergeant in less than six years.

My first assignment was with the 82nd Airborne and I deployed to Panama for Operation Just Cause and to Saudi Arabia for Desert Shield and Desert Storm with them.

From there I went to Korea. I was the youngest squad leader in my unit and I was loving the challenge of leading and training soldiers in a demanding environment.

Then, I came to Fort Benning, filled with aspirations to attend Ranger School, become a drill sergeant, do all that I could to be as professional, a noncommissioned officer as possible. Now, I just want to salvage my career as best I can.

What drives the point home the most is the upcoming sergeant first class selection board. While my peers will be anxiously awaiting the results to see if they have been selected, I will be dreading the first list that the board will release — the quality management program list. The worst of it is that it was all of my own doing.

I have been affected in other ways as well. Things that most of us take for granted, such as post driving privileges. Everywhere I need to go on post, I have to catch a ride with somebody. That simple little freedom is gone and it literally tears me apart, because I am not considered adult enough to drive responsibly or post.

The only upside to this entire episode is that it could have been worse. I could have killed or severely injured someone, maybe even myself. My children could have become fatherless, or some other family could have lost loved ones. A very sobering thought.

I made my mistake and I have learned much from that mistake. I ask you to also learn from mine.

Don't wait until you make the same critical error as I did before you realize how destructive a DUI can be. Please, never drink and drive. Even if it is only one beer, don't do it.

It is your choice; be smart enough to make the right one.

dial 545-boss

Dial 545-BOSS is the commander's action line for soldiers, family members and civilians to call when they have problems or complaints that can't be resolved elsewhere. While it is not a substitute for the chain of command or for agencies established to provide assistance, the line offers another means of communication between Fort Benning's community and commanders.

The Bayonet features some of the calls that may benefit other members of the Fort Benning community.

☎ Call: I am upset because my street, Rainbow Avenue, is being used as a cut through for post. The street is a residential and guest only (15 mph) area, but people go through it exceeding the speed limit.

I have called the Military Police several times, but I don't seem to be getting anywhere.

I would like to see what can be done about this; maybe speed bumps could be installed.

Something needs to be done before one of the children gets hurt.

Military Police Activity response:

The caller was contacted and was informed of the Department of the Army prohibition on the use of speed bumps.

The Military Police will become more visible in the Rainbow Housing Area.

☎ Caller: I believe that as a member of the military, I should not have to pay to shoot on a range.

Several other installations have a recreational range that anyone can use without paying anything.

I also do not understand why the Rifle and Pistol Club does not permit normal pistol firing when the club is having a competitive match.

I went to English Range on the day the club was conducting a match and was not permitted to shoot because of the match. Why can't the club set aside three to four lanes for routine shooting?

Rifle and Pistol Club response:

Dues are required so the club can purchase required insurance and co-produce the targets needed for the club. Without the dues, the club would be forced to close.

Fort Benning does not have a recreational firing range. However, shooters can schedule any range on the installation as long as they comply with the requirements listed in USAIC Regulation 210-4.

It would be extremely difficult to control up and downrange movement while conducting a match and also permitting routine shooting at the same time. To ensure the safety of all on the range during competitive matches, routine shooting is not permitted.

New Scout regains confidence

By Bob Roberson

commentary

At the age of 13, things began to fall apart for Ladon Enfinger. He contracted a viral illness that destroyed his strength and generated almost unbearable pain.

His sickness caused him to miss two years of school. He couldn't walk without help. He lost confidence in himself.

But then things began to change for the better, with the help of his family and the Boy Scouts of America.

Joining Troop 85 of the Chattahoochee Council of Boy Scouts was a smart move for this struggling youngster. His Scoutmaster and his buddies in the troop helped him develop goals, a sense of other people, practical skills and — maybe most of all —confidence in himself!

Enfinger's story makes you want to stand up and applaud. He has come all the way from being a two-year dropout to being a recent high school graduate, to being included in the "Who's Who" list and to earning the prestigious Eagle Scout award.

Enfinger did it all himself, of course, but he is grateful for the support of some very valuable friends.

His is a story often told in the Fort Benning, Columbus and Phenix City area.

Crockert

But of all his initiatives, Crockert said he is most pleased with the enhanced emergency telephone system.

While most post residents take E-911 for granted, Crockert said getting it on line took up a great deal of time and energy.

"I had help from nearly all the directorates on post," he said. "A lot of MPs worked nights and weekends..."

Today the post's system services 4,000 homes and more than 10,000 soldiers living in barracks. The system is praised as one of the best in the state and was showcased to the Army Community of Excellence team.

Crockert also credits much of his success to the cooperation the local law enforcement community provides Fort Benning.

"From the time I arrived here, Sheriff (Gene) Hodge (Muscogee County) and Chief (of Police) Jim Wetherington (Columbus) made me feel welcome."

This relationship, Crockert said, has always been there, but he made it one of his top priorities when he arrived in 1991.

"It's a cooperative effort that we need to keep going, because it helps the Army community and it helps the civilian community to both work together and that's what we need to do."

Crockert

One of the by-products of this close community relationship is Crockert's emphasis of such worthwhile activities as Special Olympics.

Each year, the MPA has increased its level of participation. "Last year we set a record by raising over $10,000," Crockert said. "This year we'll beat that by going over the $11,000 mark."

Crockert is quick to recognize the source of his success. He says it's the dedicated, professional soldiers, noncommissioned officers and civilians at MPA.

Crockert, who was married in Columbus and frequently returned to Fort Benning throughout his career, today calls this area home.

He said it is his desire to stay in Georgia and he is interested in a job with Georgia State Corrections or a position coordinating security for the 1996 Olympics.

Soldiers reach out to help local teens

By Ruth J. Spaller
Bayonet staff writer

A group of soldiers from the 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment, has put together a program reaching out to help local teens make it through school.

The program, called "Soldiers Against Dropping Out," is the brainchild of Pfc. Terrence E. Page, president of the group, who is a high-school dropout himself.

Page earned his general equivalency diploma during basic training at Fort Jackson, S.C., and decided to volunteer some time to make sure today's youths don't make the same mistakes he did, he said.

"Ever since I had somebody help me get back on track, I've had a passion to work with others who have the same problems," he said.

Through Agnes Evans, the district supervisor of the Muscogee schools Mentor Program, Page was introduced to a class of "at-risk" students at Baker Middle School.

The class is part of a program called "Children Being Educated," and is made up of students who have failed at least two classes and have not been successful in traditional classrooms, said Ada Bell, the program director.

Page and several other soldiers, accompanied by Command Sgt. Maj. Eddie Roberts, the command sergeant major of the 11th Infantry Regiment, went to talk to the class about the importance of staying in school, and "it just kept growing from there," Roberts said.

Roberts, now chairman of SADO, put his seal of approval on the program because, he said, "this is an age group we need to try to reach. One of the biggest enemies of the kids in this age category today is peer pressure. So if we can reach them now and show them that someone other than their parents cares about them, that will motivate them and build their self-esteem."

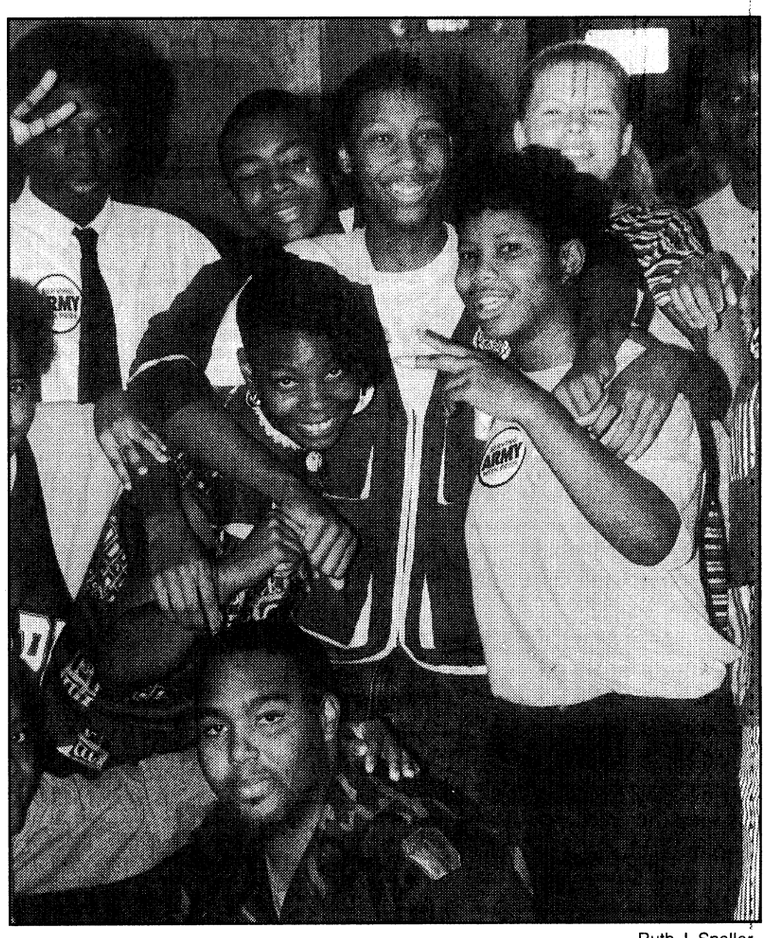
The soldiers of SADO have unofficially adopted the class, visiting during lunch hours, sponsoring a recent visit to Fort Benning and pairing up with the students one-on-one as an extension of the mentor program.

Page has been working with 16-year-old Ericka Brown, tutoring her, helping her with her homework and "just spending time."

"She's had some problems, skipped school ... these are kids who are thinking about the next basketball game or talent show ... they don't realize how much skipping school or getting kicked out can hurt them," Page said.

"But Ericka understands the problems I had when I was young, and since I've been working with her, she's become a better student. But more importantly right now, her self-esteem has grown tremendously," he said.

He attributes this to the simple fact that someone has taken an interest in her, somebody has encouraged her and made her feel good about herself, he said.



Brown said Page is "like a father," only they like the same kinds of music.

"He's fun to be around, and I can tell him things," she said.

This, Roberts feels, is one of the strong points of the program. "We let them talk to people who just stepped out of that arena ... they can get out there and relate to those kids at an age level that they're going to listen to.

"What we're telling them is that whatever they want to be ... it all begins at school. The bottom line is before you can be anything, you've got to first be a high-school graduate," Roberts said.

The group is organizing more events for the summer, and anyone interested is invited to join SADO. For more information, call Page at 685-2703 or 545-5523 or Roberts at 545-3121.

MPs seek info about accident

Military Police Activity

The Military Police Traffic Investigations is seeking information on a traffic accident that occurred at 10:30 p.m., Monday at the intersection of 1st Division and Dixie roads.

While an investigator was picking up traffic cones that were placed in the roadway to block a downed tree, a vehicle, which was not able to negotiate the curve, struck the cones that in turn struck the MP and the MP vehicle.

The vehicle then continued down 1st Division Road without rendering any information.

Anyone with any information that could assist in this investigation can contact Sgt. Wendy A. Kiessling, Traffic Investigations, at 545-7241 or 545-2338.

BOSS soldiers help build home

By Marc G. Turchin
Bayonet staff writer

"I feel real good about the house. It's a real good house," said Kenneth M. Watts, new owner of a four-bedroom, one bathroom house built by soldiers of Fort Benning.

Soldiers volunteered their time through Better Opportunities for Single Soldiers and built an entire home for Habitat for Humanity, a family-oriented organization that grants home loans to families that otherwise can't get a loan, said Spc. James Shoemaker, president of BOSS.

"I knew if soldiers were going to build the house, everything would be in place," Watts said.

Soldiers from the 11th Infantry Regiment, 36th Engineer Group, School of the Americas, 29th Infantry Regiment and the 3rd Brigade, 24th Infantry Division, all worked on the house, Shoemaker said.

Watts said he had a good relationship with the soldiers who helped out.

"They are a bunch of funny and hard-working people."

Watts worked alongside the soldiers to work off his 500 "sweat equity" hours.

Shoemaker said "sweat equity" is a substitute for labor costs normally associated with the building of a house. The 500 hours are required from every new habitat homeowner.

"I've almost reached my 500 hours. I have about 460 or so," said Watts.

Watts said he liked working on his own home.

"If anything should go wrong with your house, for some reason, you built it so you should know how to handle it," he said.

Shoemaker said Habitat finances a loan for 20 years and the Watts family pays for the goods for the house.

"The final cost of the house was between $20,000 and $25,000," said Watts.

"Because I have been coming out for so long and showing Habitat I am a hard worker, I don't have to make my down payment until after I get my 500 "sweat equity" hours," said Watts.

Watts' friend, Michael Griffin, also had a house built through Habitat for Humanity and that is how he found out about the program, Watts said.

Applicants must qualify for a house to be built for them, said Shoemaker.

To be eligible for a Habitat for Humanity home, families must be unable to receive a loan from anyone, must be employed at a job making a minimum of $9,000 and no more than $16,000 a year and must have the credit to be able to make the monthly payment, said Watts.

Watts said his family didn't have much trouble getting approved.

The Watts family is making plans to move into their new house in the next couple of weeks, Watts said.

"We can't thank Habitat for Humanity enough for all they have done," said Watts' wife, Elvira.

The Watts family, including children Lakendrick, who is 14, Lawanda, 11, Duriel, 8, Kenneth Jr., 3, and Justin, who is a newborn, will be residing in their new home in a couple of weeks.

"I am real happy about our new home," said Watts, and "I am thankful to the soldiers who helped make my dream a reality."

DUI

program that lets designated drivers drink sodas free all night.

Bush said these individuals must be in a group of at least two people. This person must tell the bartender that he or she is a designated driver and then will be able to drink free fountain drinks all night in any club on post.

Labranche said the increase of DUIs on post has caused the MPs to increase the amount of random DUI checkpoints across post.

"Over the summer months we will be conducting various driving under the influence checkpoints on the installation during the day and (at) night," he said.

Random checkpoints on post are only one way of trying to prevent DUIs. Labranche said that he believes educating soldiers, through briefings on the "dos and don'ts" of drinking and driving, will also prove worthwhile.

The MPs gave 12 safety briefings before the Memorial Day weekend.

During these briefings, soldiers are shown pictures of scenes from alcohol and drug-related accidents, given statistics of people killed by DUI drivers and told of the consequences involved with being caught driving under the influence, which includes a letter of reprimand from the commanding general, said Sgt. Wendy A. Kiessling, assistant chief of traffic investigations.

Other consequences include fines, possible probation and loss of post driving privileges for a year.

Officers who stop people for suspected DUI have certain guidelines or things they look for before pulling someone over for driving under the influence, said Labranche.

Some examples of detecting drunk drivers are: turning with a wide radius; speed more than 10 mph below speed limit; drifting and accelerating or decelerating rapidly.

Labranche said if one or a combination of these symptoms are seen, officers have just cause to pull the driver over.

After being pulled over, the officer has other ways of knowing if the driver is under the influence of drugs or alcohol.

"The first thing the officer looks for (when walking up to the vehicle) is the perception of the individual driving," said Labranche. "The officer will use his or her senses as a first step."

For example, an officer can detect the smell of drugs and alcohol from the interior of the car or the driver. The officer can see if the driver is acting hostile in any way.

"Certain signs will add up (and the officer) will be able to decide whether or not this individual is driving under the influence," said Labranche.

If the individual is suspected of DUI, the officer will ask the driver to step out of his vehicle and perform a field sobriety test.

More than 90 percent of the MPs on duty are state certified in field sobriety testing, Labranche said.

One of the tests drivers are asked to perform is the walk-and-turn test.

This test, Labranche said, consists of the individual taking nine steps, heel-to-toe, then performing a three-point turn and then repeating the steps back to where he or she started.

Other tests involved are the Horizontal Gaze Nystagmus Test and the One-Leg-Stand Test.

Labranche said the best way not to have to perform the tests is not to drive drunk.

"Drinking and driving will end up hurting you in the end," said Labranche.

For more information on getting a safety briefing for your unit, call Labranche or Kiessling at the traffic office at 545-2338 or 545-7241.

Educational services help soldiers

By Elsie Jackson
Transition Services Specialist

Soldiers at Fort Benning, can take advantage of some special educational services thanks to a joint effort between the Army Career and Alumni Program and the Educational Opportunity Center based in Columbus.

One day a week, Dave Sutcliffe, an EOC community service specialist, provides service members and their families with information about advanced education opportunities at both colleges and technical schools, career assessments, and financial aid.

A familiar sight on Wednesdays at ACAP's Job Assistance Center (Soldiers' Plaza, Building 2634), Sutcliffe and his laptop computer can translate responses to a brief questionnaire into a list of career possibilities complete with brief descriptions and the projected rates of growth for those fields.

If you already have an area of study you are interested in pursuing, and know what region of the country or state you will be moving to, Sutcliffe has more than 3,300 schools in his database, and can give you a printout of schools in that area offering the curriculum you are interested in studying.

If you have already chosen the school you want to attend, Sutcliffe can provide you with a school profile describing everything from tuition costs to what intramural sports are available.

Besides career, academic and financial aid counseling, tutorial services are also available through the EOC.

If you would like some tutoring before taking the GED or SAT, ask Sutcliffe. For example, the EOC sponsors preparatory SAT classes at Columbus Technical Institute, Room 151-C, Mondays and Fridays from 2:30 to 4:30 p.m. These services are all free, and available through a program funded by the Department of Education and administered through Fort Valley State College. The EOC itself is located at 922 2nd Ave. in Columbus. The telephone number is 571-4708.

Sutcliffe is available for consultation at Soldiers' Plaza, Building 2634, Wednesdays, on a walk-in schedule only, from 9:30 a.m. to 2:30 p.m. For more information, call the EOC at 571-4708, or the ACAP office at 545-4892 or 545-4913.

ACAP certifies teachers

By Elsie Jackson
Army Career and Alumni Program

"I touch the future," said Christa McAuliffe, "I teach."

The Challenger astronaut was rightfully proud of her profession. All of us can look back and point at teachers who have made a profound difference in our lives. Now, more than ever, there is a need for strong role models in our schools.

Do you have what it takes to face a real challenge — the classroom of today?

If you have a bachelor's degree, especially in math, science, or a foreign language, but do not have a teaching certificate, it is still possible for you to transition almost directly from battles to blackboards.

A growing number of states have or are developing alternative teacher certification programs that may help you start a teaching career. It may be possible for you to teach with a provisional certificate while earning the college credits required for certification in your state.

Just what is alternative certification? Alternative Certification refers to a program or procedure designed to put a college graduate who has appropriate subject matter expertise and experience into teaching. Typically, these programs combine a streamlined curriculum of education course work with some form of student teaching.

Generally, alternative certification candidates are required to hold at least a bachelor's degree with concentrated major in the subject to be taught, pass a comprehensive subject-matter test, have a grade-point average of at least 2.5, complete any prescribed courses, and complete an internship program at a local school.

Currently, 30 states have alternative teacher certification programs. They are Alabama, Arizona, Arkansas, California. Colorado, Connecticut, Delaware, Florida, Georgia, Idaho, Kentucky, Louisiana, Maryland, Massachusetts, Mississippi, Missouri, Nebraska, New Jersey, New Mexico, North Carolina, Ohio, Oklahoma, Pennsylvania, South Carolina, South Dakota, Tennessee, Texas, Utah, Virginia and West Virginia.

For soldiers who want to pursue a career in teaching, a new "Troops to Teachers" program is in the works.

For service members remaining in Georgia, a "Transition to Education" Program has been developed that will tie in to "Troops to Teachers."

For more information, call your Education Center or the ACAP office at 545-4892 c · 545-4913.

Your Army Career and Alumni Program Office will be using this survey to provide you with more education and job opportunities.

Survey helps pinpoint career interests

Army Career and Alumni Program

Not everyone leaving the Army wants to go to college. Job training programs may be the answer for the soldier who wants to learn a marketable skill or trade.

In a effort to help these servicemembers, the Army Career and Alumni Program is conducting a survey to pinpoint what career fields soldiers are interested in.

Soldiers who are within 18 months of separation, either getting out of the service or retirement, can fill out the survey form below.

They may be returned, either in person or through distribution, to the ACAP office in Soldiers' Plaza, Building 2617, or in the drop box outside Classroom 30 in Infantry Hall (Monday through Wednesday).

times during the summer of 1993, for a total of 75 hours, projections for the coming season indicate only a fraction of that number may be necessary.

Current projections are that curtailment will occur for a a total of about 21 hours, for a savings of more than $1.5 million.

Fincher said curtailments in a particular family housing unit would be no longer than two hours at any one time and no more than four hours in one day. This is the same policy that was in effect during the latter part of the air conditioning season last year, he said.

In addition, according to Todd, there is a supplementary source of power available to Fort Benning on demand — the Center for Public Works, Fort Belvoir, Va., is presently supporting the installation with one of their Prime Power Units, which provides 3,000 kilowatts of power during curtailments.

The Energy Branch, Fincher and Todd said, is continually working on ways to improve customer service while saving money.

"Curtailment actually represents a cost-saving device for us," Fincher said. "Because we are able to provide, on short notice, the power the utility company needs, we receive significant savings."

Fincher said that in the future, Fort Benning and Georgia Power will continue to work on a more flexible arrangement for curtailments.

"Whatever we do," he said, "we will do with our customers' best interests, and economic efficiency, in mind."

All-Army Runner looks for 'World Class'

By Terry K. Ray
Special to The Bayonet©

What's 21, single, in the Army and very fast? Give up? Well, the answer works as an administrative specialist with the 1st Battalion (Airborne), 507th Infantry, 11th Infantry Regiment, and has been on the All-Army Track and Field Team for the past two years.

Meet Pfc. Sherri Reese, formerly of Korea, now of Fort Benning, and two-time champion in the 100- and 200-meter dash along with first place wins in the 4x100 and 4x400 meter relays at the Armed Forces Championships at Fort Sill, Okla., this year.

Reese, an Alabama native, who grew up in Opelika, Ala., a stone's throw from Fort Benning, began her running career while attending Opelika Junior High School and patterned herself after one female athlete who impressed her with her ability to perform in all events — Jackie Joyner-Kersee.

"When I was growing up, Jackie was the only female athlete in track and field who really just stood out," said Reese. "As I got older, I think it was 1988 when Florence Griffith Joyner came along, but she didn't really impress me like Jackie did because Jackie did it all — hurdles, 100, whatever, she did it all."

With less than three years of active duty service, Reese has propelled herself to the top in her athletic field in a very short period of time, which she attributes to hard work and God-given talent.

"When I was in high school, there were days when I could step on the track and win, sometimes without even warming up," said Reese. "It came so natural to me; the speed was just there."

After graduating from high school in 1991, Reese attended Wallace State Community College in Harrisville, Ala., because she thought she wasn't good enough for a Division I school. After one year at Wallace, Reese was supposed to transfer to Odessa Junior College in Texas, but turned toward the Army in October of 1992.

After basic training at Fort Jackson, S.C., Reese went to Korea for her first duty assignment, with running still on her mind.

"Before I came in, I asked the recruiter if there was a track and field team, because if there wasn't, I wasn't coming. He said there was, but he couldn't tell me how to get involved," said Reese. "After I got to Korea, I didn't know whom to get in touch with.

"One day I was at the bowling alley and I saw a poster for All-Army sports," she continued. "It was January when I got to Korea and applications were due in March, so I had to hustle to get my stuff ready to send to the Department of the Army."

Two days before the trial camp was to start, Reese got a phone call telling her she had been selected to attend the camp, which was going to be conducted at Fort Benning for 1993.

"I figured, hey at the least it's a free trip home to see my family," said Reese. "I didn't expect to do well because I was the new kid on the block. If I was afraid to go to a Division I school, what did I expect to do against the best the Army had to offer? After I got in and settled, things weren't so bad, and I thought maybe I could be in the top three in the armed forces but not first. But when I hit the track, it just came out; I couldn't believe it."

At this year's Armed Forces Championships, Reese felt like she had to prove to herself and the rest of the armed forces that the year before was not a fluke. She also knew that all eyes would be on her.

"I knew that if I didn't win, I would feel so bad, because I had done it once before,' said Reese. "I knew I could do it, but I just had to reach down deep and find it."

And find it she did. Reese not only won both the 100- and 200- meter dashes, but she also helped win the 4x100 and 4x400 women's relays giving the Army women's team its third straight title.

Reese is now looking to become another Fort Benning athlete to be selected to the World Class Athlete Program, which will allow her to train full time at the University of Auburn under the expert tutelage of Harvey Glance, a former world- class sprinter.

"I know that if I can train full time, I can run the times needed to perform at a higher level," said Reese "Hopefully I can stick around long enough to see the inside of an Olympic stadium in 1996 or maybe 2000, even if it's as a spectator."

Executioners, Headhunters go for kill

By Terry K. Ray

The boys of summer have taken up residence on the softball diamonds around Fort Benning. With summer still a few days away, softball started in earnest back in May. Teams are now hitting midseason stride.

Two games were played Monday evening at Harmony Church Field between the Bradley Instructor Company, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment, (Bandits) and the Executioners of Company E, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment, in game one and Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment, (Headhunters) vs. the Cougars of Company C, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment.

Executioners 9, Bandits 7

The Executioners jumped out to a 6-0 lead after two innings, scoring one run in the first and five in the second. Third baseman Tashomba Taylor knocked in the first run of the game with a double to right field.

In the bottom of the second, catcher Robert Hernandez plated two runs with a double to right field followed by a run scoring single off the bat of pitcher Antonio Hawthorne. Left centerfielder Sammie Clark also had a run batted in with his single to right.

The Bandits came back in their half of the second with a four spot to get back in the game.

A lead off home run of the bat of right centerfielder Kevin Dews got the ball rolling for the Bandits. Three straight doubles and a single produced the next three runs for the Bandits. James Bransum, James Ossinger, David Bissett and Jeff Botford all had run scoring hits in the inning.

In the bottom of the third inning, the Bandits gained their only lead of the night on an RBI triple from Dew and an RBI single from Ossinger. An error by Executioner third baseman Taylor allowed another run to score giving the Bandits a 7-6 lead.

The Executioners got the lead back in the top of the fourth on a two-run homer from second baseman James Davis to left centerfield.

In the top of the fifth, the Executioners added the final run of the game on a lead off double by left fielder Kito Wilkins and an RBI double from Taylor. Defense came to the forefront in the latter half of the game with both teams playing hard-nosed defense.

Headhunters 19, Cougars 12

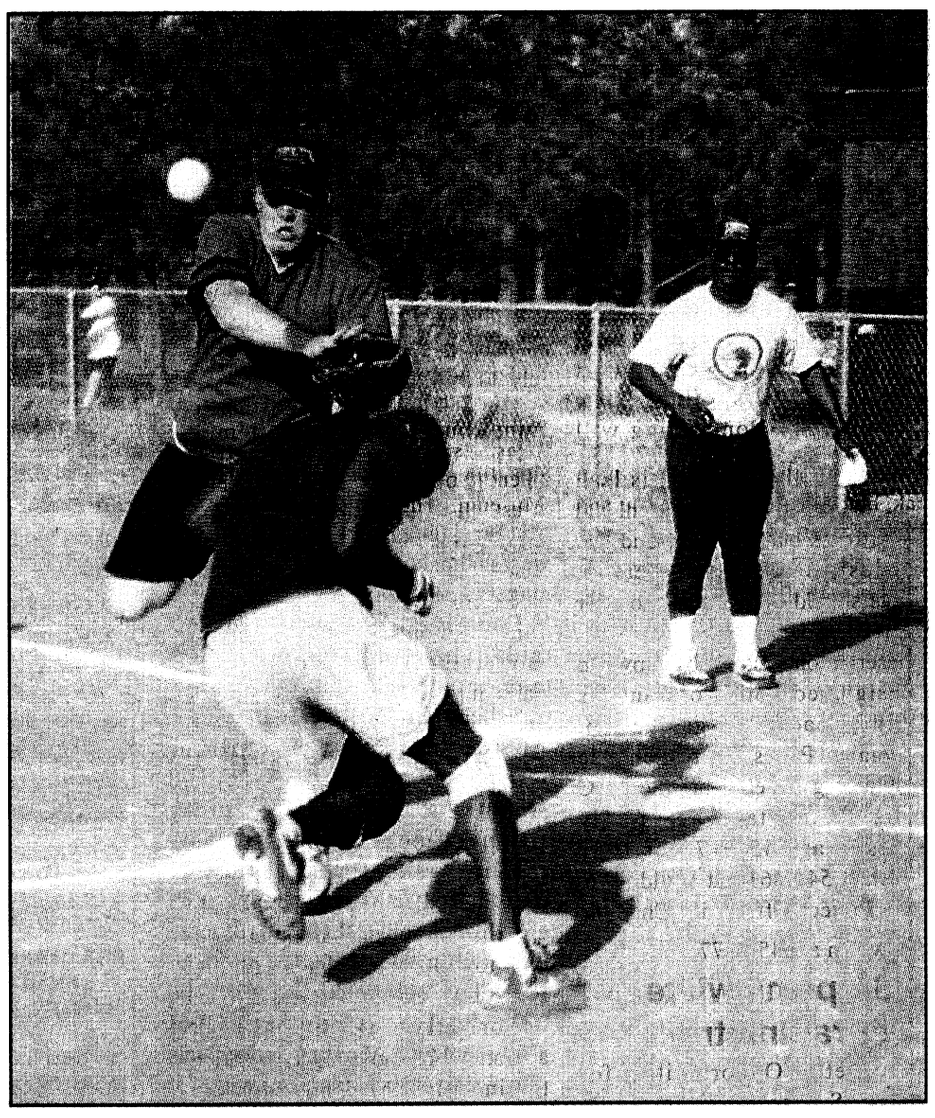
The Headhunters opened the game with a five-run outburst in the top of the first inning with first baseman Tracy Davis doing the major damage with a two-run double.

The Cougars clawed right back with a five spot of their own to tie the game 5-5, in the bottom half of the first with a three-run triple off the bat of catcher Thomas Yates keying the inning.



In the top half of the second inning, the Headhunters wiped away the Cougar lead with one swing of the bat by Davis, who cleared the left field fence with room to spare with a three-run blast giving the lead back to the Headhunters 8-5.

In the home half of the second, the Cougars regained the lead with a six-run rally. A two-run single by first baseman Robert Pettit, an RBI double from pitcher Elliot Reed and a bases clearing double off the bat of Yates plated three runs before Yates was gunned down at second base.

The Headhunters trimmed the lead to 11-9 in the top of the third with a single run.

The Headhunters went for the throat in the top of the fifth inning scoring 10 runs on six hits. The big blast was a three-run triple from right fielder Larry Winston that cleared the bases with one out.

The Cougars scratched out a run in the bottom of the fifth to cut the lead to 19-12, only to have time run out when the inning ended.

Derrick S. Moore won the 8- and 9-year-old category with 11 fish on the stringer.

In the 10- to 11-year-old age group, Cynthia Bullard took first with 13 fish caught.

Stage set for sports history in New York

By Scott Krawczyk
HHC, 75th Ranger Regiment

commentary

Thirty-five pounds of the oldest professional sports trophy awarded in North America is hoisted high in the air and skated around the ice in New York's Madison Square Garden. In less than 24 hours, the arena will be transformed, like the set of an elaborate Broadway show, into the hardwood court that is home to the New York Knicks.

Act I is over. The New York Rangers have won the Stanley Cup for the first time since 1940. "I don't know what to say," were the words repeated by team captain Mark Messier after the Rangers defeated the Vancouver Canucks 3-2 Tuesday night in game seven of the Stanley Cup finals.

It's hard to imagine Messier — now a six-time Stanley Cup winner — at a loss for words. "We will win," was Messier's bold prediction before game five of the Eastern Conference final series with the New Jersey Devils, the team the Rangers defeated in overtime in game seven.

For Ranger fans, the ghosts of 54 years have finally been laid to rest. A banner displayed by one New Yorker may have captured the sentiment best: "Now I can die in peace."

Act II: The Next Prediction

"We will win it all," were the prophetic words spoken by New York Knick Patrick Ewing during the NBA Eastern Conference championship series against the Indiana Pacers. Now in the finals, fans are wondering if the Knicks can do to the Houston Rockets what the Rangers have done to the Canucks. Unlikely? Perhaps. No city in history has ever brought home both the NBA and NHL championships in the same year. Such is the stuff of sports legend. For us, we need only sit back, tune in and enjoy. Maybe we'll get to see a little piece of sports history unfold before us, before the stage is cleared and the footlights are darkened. Game five of the series will be played tonight in New York. If necessary, the last two games will be played in Houston.

Why isn't hockey more popular in the U.S.?

Only 14 percent of NHL players are American. The vast majority are Canadian, with about 7 percent coming from eastern Europe. Some would argue that this statistic limits the interest of the U.S. audience. Others argue that the puck moves too fast, or that the players are less attractive than their professional counterparts in baseball and basketball. This yuppyish theory was quickly debunked by my better half, who was only too willing to give me the bronze, behind New York's Mark Messier and Brian Leetch.

Regardless of the explanation, hockey's image is destined for a face-lift in the United States, in light of the history made in Madison Square Garden Tuesday night. Not to mention the fact that the Conn Smythe Trophy, awarded to the most valuable player of the Stanley Cup series, was presented for the first time ever to an American — Leetch.

DAHLONEGA, GA — The Officers' Association of the 5th Ranger Training Battalion at Camp Frank D. Merrill hosted the sixth annual Mountain Ranger Run through the streets of Dahlonega, Ga., May 21.

This year's run was extended to 10 kilometers, or 6.2 miles, and a 5k fun walk was added for those participants who preferred walking to running. Additionally, the run this year was nationally certified by the Road Running Technical Council and the USA Track and Field Association.

The top overall finisher of the 10k course and the new course record holder was John Kirksey of Norcross, Ga., with a time of 35:29. Kirksey took the lead around the 1-mile mark and held on throughout the rest of the course to take the win.

North Georgia College's Deana Mayfield was the top female finisher, with a time of 46:29. In the team competition, the rangers from the 5th Ranger Training Battalion maintained their undefeated record, with a time of 41:73.

Lt. Col. Ralph F. D'Elosua, battalion commander, said, "The objective of this run is to raise money for the American Red Cross. This year we cleared $1,500, and next year we will do even better."

ask the judge

By Christopher R. Graham
Staff Judge Advocate's Office

It's an all too familiar sight. Late at night, an individual sneaks up to your house slowly, deliberately with his mind set on one thing.

This person has his mind set on your pride, your passion, your one favorite possession —your new car.

When the lights in your house go out for the night, this person moves in on your car. Slowly he oozes into your front seat, starts your car and drives away.

You think, "I've been robbed," but suddenly realize the "Repo Man" has struck again.

Many individuals come to the Staff Judge Advocate's Office office asking, "What can I do to prevent the Repo Man from taking my car while I sleep? What rights do I have?"

The most sure fire way to avoid this situation is to purchase a car you can afford and remain current on the payments. However, when you purchase a car, be aware that your creditor retains an interest in the vehicle. Creditor's rights are established by the purchase agreement and by state law.

Typically, a failure to make payments in a timely fashion can result in your creditor repossessing your car without going to court. Failing to make timely payments on your loan places you in default. Often, the creditor does not even have to warn you in advance. However, there are some limitations on what the creditor can do.

If your creditor agrees to accept late payments or to change the payment date, the original terms of your contract may no longer apply. These changes may be made orally, but it is safer to make them in writing.

Once in default, the laws of most states permit the creditor to repossess the vehicle. Such a repossession can occur at any hour of the day or night without prior notice. The creditor may even come onto your private property without permission.

Creditors are not allowed to "breach the peace" when repossessing the vehicle. Creditors can not use force or the threat of force to take the vehicle. Such a breach of the peace would be for a creditor to take a car over your protest by crushing your skull with a cinder block. A creditor who breaches the peace may be forced to pay damages, and may lose important legal rights.

Once your car has been repossessed, the creditor may decide to keep the car as compensation, or try to resell it at a public or private sale or auction. In either case, the creditor must give notice as to his or her intentions. If the creditor intends to keep the car to satisfy the debt, you may force him or her to sell it instead.

If your creditor decides to sell the car at a public auction, he or she is obligated to tell you when and where the auction is and allow you to bid on the vehicle. If the creditor decides to sell the vehicle at a private sale, he or she must give you notice of the time and place of the sale.

In either situation, you are entitled to buy back the vehicle by paying the full amount owed on it plus the reasonable costs of the repossession. Any resale of a vehicle must be done in a "commercially reasonable" manner. This does not mean that the creditor must sell your car at the best price or even a good price. However, resales done at prices far below the actual value may be considered unreasonable.

The difference between what you owe on the car and what the creditor receives in the sale is known as the deficiency. In most states, the creditor can sue you for the "deficiency judgment" to collect the loan balance. In your answer to the lawsuit, you can raise any affirmative defenses such as breach of the peace or a commercially unreasonable sale.

It's hard to imagine anything more embarrassing than having your car repossessed or paying for a car that someone else is driving. It also appears on your credit rating for a period of years afterward. The one important word of advice is to make your payments on time, so that you will never have to meet the Repo Man.

If you have further questions on repossessions, you can make an appointment with the Legal Assistance Division of the Staff Judge Advocate's Office by calling 545-3281.

Military Police Activity

The following entries are from the Military Police blotters from May 24 to 30. Such entries may be incomplete and are not the adjudication of the guilt or innocence of any person.

The hot topic this week concerns larceny of private property. There has recently been an increase of larceny of private property on Fort Benning.

Radar detectors, car telephones and stereo equipment are common targets for thieves. When property of this nature is stolen, it is necessary to provide police with basic information about the property that will aid in an investigation.

Record serial numbers, make, model numbers and brand names of each item of value in your home or car. Keep this record in a secure location. Save receipts when purchasing valuable items; receipts help show proof of ownership, date of purchase and the value of the item.

And finally, record all items on a high-dollar value list. This will assist with insurance purposes and claims. Taking these simple steps and having the right information available will aid police in an investigation, and could lead to the recovery of missing items and the apprehension of suspects.

• A staff sergeant knowingly and intentionally submitted travel documents making a claim for dependent travel for his ex-wife and her three children. The staff sergeant has been divorced from his wife since 1992.

He also obtained an unauthorized military identification card for his ex-wife, which she used to obtain medical and dental services for herself and her children. The staff sergeant and his ex-wife were charged with conspiracy, false official statement, fraud and larceny of government property.

• A family member was observed driving erratically with her two children in the vehicle. After being approached by military police, an odor of an alcoholic beverage was detected on her person. She refused a field sobriety test, then became combative and hit the military police officer in the face.

She was transported to the MP station and administered a breathalyzer test with a result of .26. She was charged with several violations including driving under the influence, simple assault, hindering arrest and contributing to the deprivation of a minor.

• A private was charged with larceny of government munitions when, during a unit inspection, he was found to be in possession of a block of C-4 plastic explosive and a firing device.

• A sergeant first class was charged with drunk on duty after he entered a dining facility and used loud, vulgar and offensive language. He was administered a breathalyzer test with a result of .16.

Other activities included 10 traffic accidents and nine cases of driving under the influence of alcohol. There were three shoplifting cases reported at exchange facilities and eight cases of larceny of private property.

Remember to help "Make Our Post the Best — Give Crime Arrest." Report any activity that seems wrong or out of place to the Military Police Station at 545-5222 or 545-5223 or the "Crime in Progress" line at 545-2222.

Keep sharp lookout for eye injuries

Egleston Children's Hospital

Medical advances in recent years have made treatment for many serious eye injuries more successful than ever before, according to Egleston's chief pediatric ophthalmologist Dr. Scott R. Lambert.

Lens implants, for example, often enable children to see well even after eye injuries have caused cataracts that clouded vision. New techniques even enable specialists to restore vision by re-attaching detached retinas.

Lambert said many of the injuries he treats occur when children use sharp knives to open packages, shoot BBs at each other, fight with and try to aggravate their siblings by poking and jabbing at them with sharp objects or use make-believe guns or Ninja Turtle swords fashioned from anything from sticks to curtain rods.

"Parents need to teach their children not to play with or use sharp, pointed objects and never to aim anything toward a person's upper body or face," said Lambert. "Even more important, parents need to do everything they can to limit children's access to sharp objects, such as knives. And they should supervise their children closely, guiding them to safer activities."

If your child does suffer a cut, scratch or puncture to the eye, take him to an emergency medical facility immediately, Lambert advises. Also:

• Do not attempt to rinse or clean the eye.

• Do not attempt to remove an object imbedded in the eye yourself.

• Do not apply pressure to the eye.

• Even a blow to the eye, with its resulting "black eye," can be serious. Don't delay getting emergency treatment.

community care

By Ken Franklin
Martin Army Community Hospital

Q: If smoking is such a big health problem, how about offering an inpatient program at Martin Army Community Hospital to help people quit?

A: First, the evidence is clear that smoking is a big problem. The U.S. surgeon general and the Environmental Protection Agency have hundreds of scientific studies that show that tobacco kills more than 400,000 people per year, including more than 2,000 children of smokers per year from passive smoke effects. That's the equivalent of three 747 jet crashes per day.

Tobacco use kills in many ways. Published research has demonstrated tobacco as a major contributor to emphysema, heart disease, stroke, breast cancer, ulcers and colon cancer. This month in the Journal of the American Medical Association, researchers showed that nonsmoking wives of smokers increase their risk of lung cancer by 30 percent.

Many methods of smoking cessation have been tried in civilian and military medicine. Martin Army Hospital offers an outpatient program through its Internal Medicine Clinic.

Inpatient programs, like those for alcohol and cocaine dependency, are not available because they are not effective. The withdrawal symptoms of tobacco last for two to three weeks. Most smokers who restart do so one to six months later. Inpatient programs tried at other hospitals did not affect these problems.

Inpatient programs are also expensive. A two-week stay could cost more than $5,500, in addition to medication that would still be prescribed as an outpatient.

Tobacco withdrawal is not lethal. Alcoholics and cocaine addicts can easily die during withdrawal if not medically monitored. While smoking withdrawal symptoms are unpleasant, they virtually never require admission to a hospital.

Cigarette and tobacco addiction is the number one cause of preventable death in the United States. Martin Army Hospital's doctors have several options to help end that powerful addiction without an unnecessary and expensive stay in the hospital.

Consults are not required to sign up for tobacco cessation classes. Call 544-1254 or 544-1255 for details.

Keep pet cool during 'dog days'

American Kennel Club

Along with lots of sunshine, the hot weather can make anyone feel uncomfortable, especially your dog.

The following are some safety concerns for responsible dog owners.

• Never leave your dog unattended in direct sunlight or in a closed vehicle. Heatstroke can occur and lead to brain damage or death. Signs of heatstroke are pantfishing, drooling, rapid pulse and fever.

Immediately immerse the dog in cool water and seek emergency veterinary assistance. Although the American Kennel Club advises against it, if you absolutely must leave your dog in the car, make sure your car windows are slightly ajar so your dog can get fresh air, park in the shade and leave some fresh water. Always make sure your dog has access to fresh water.

• All dogs should have proper identification at all times. The AKC suggests a collar with an identification tag, a tattoo or microchip.

• Keep your dog on a leash when it is outdoors to prevent accidents and injuries.

• Try to avoid strenuous exercise with your dog on extremely hot days and refrain from physical activity when the sun's heat is most intense.

Health tips

We may know our canine companions better than anyone else, but it is important to remember most people are not medical professionals.

If you are uncertain how to treat your dog's medical needs or if you have any questions, you should contact your veterinarian immediately.

The following is some important information to keep in mind with the arrival of summer.

• Have your dog's vaccinations updated if necessary. Diseases such as rabies, distemper and parvo are ever-present dangers and necessary precautions should be taken.

• Beware of insect bites. If your dog is bitten or stung, remove the stinger and watch the site for an allergic reaction. If this occurs or if there have been multiple wasp, bee or mosquito bites, take the animal to the vet.

• Check your dog daily for fleas and ticks.

• Heartworm is a common problem for dogs. Bring your dog to a vet for a heartworm check every spring and follow your vet's advice for heartworm precautions.

• Most lawn and garden products may be hazardous. Make sure that plants and fertilizers within the dog's reach are not toxic.

• Being outdoors means being exposed to elements. Dogs may need extra brushing and bathing to stay clean and healthy.

• No matter how careful and responsible you may be, accidents can happen. Make sure your vet's phone number is close at hand and available to all family members.

Beach trips

Taking your dog to the beach can be a great way to spend a beautiful summer day. However, as a responsible dog owner there are certain precautions you should take.

• Provide plenty of fresh water and shade for your dog.

• Dogs can get sunburn, especially short haired dogs and dogs with pink skin and white hair. Limit your dog's exposure when the sun is unusually strong and apply sunblock to his ears and nose 30 minutes before going outside.

• Check with a lifeguard for daily water conditions — dogs are easy targets for jellyfish and sea lice.

• If your dog is out of shape, don't encourage him to run on the sand. Running on a beach is strenuous exercise and a dog that is out of shape can easily pull a tendon or ligament.

• Cool ocean water is tempting to your dog. Do not allow him to drink too much sea water. Salt in the water will make him sick.

• Salt and other minerals found in the ocean can damage your dog's coat. So, when you are ready to leave for the day, rinse off your dog.

• Not all beaches permit dogs. Make sure you are informed before you begin your excursion to the beach.

Safety tips can make your child a WATER WIZ

Egleston Children's Hospital

To a child, water is a wonderful and fun thing. Unfortunately, water can be dangerous.

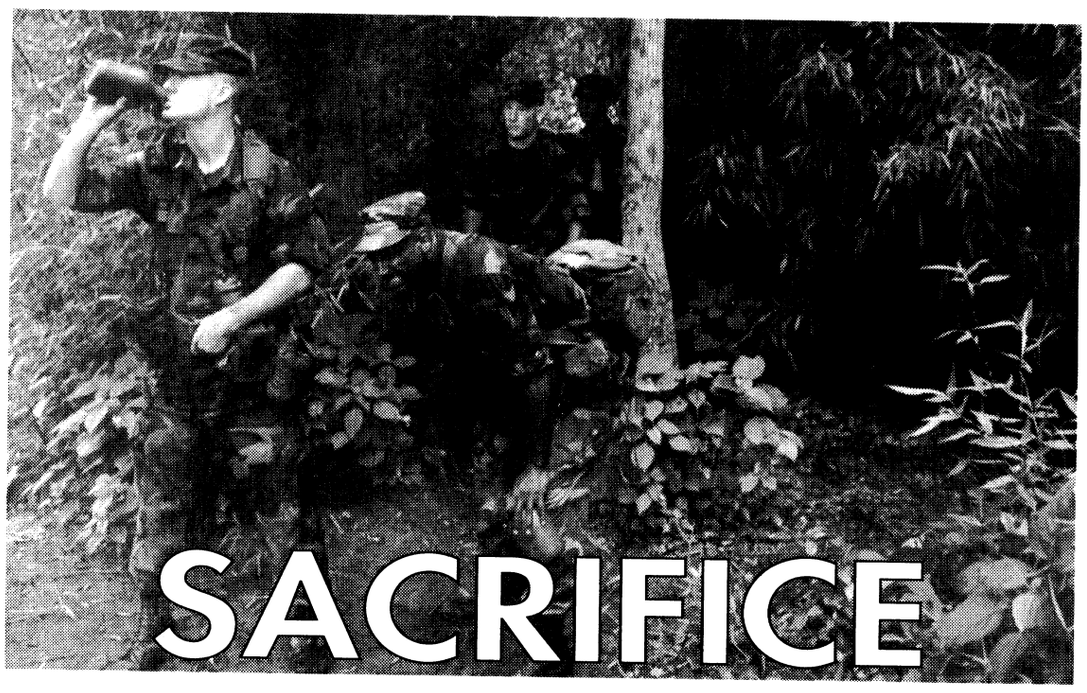
A child can drown in seconds and without any warning, so it helps to be alert and prepared for water activities.

The following tips can help parents and caregivers in preventing water-related injuries.

• Never leave a child unsupervised near water. A child can drown anywhere there is water, such as a pool, pond, tub, spa, toilet, three- to five-gallon bucket, or even an ice chest. Infants and toddlers are most at risk because they are curious and do not have the motor skills to keep their heads out of water.

• Make sure your family and any baby sitters know what to do in case of an emergency. Have rescue equipment nearby, such as a pole and buoy and know how to use them. Be sure a phone and emergency numbers are posted near the pool, and your address is listed so a baby sitter can easily read it.

• Have a certified instructor teach your child to swim. Make sure to provide lessons often enough to keep your child current.



• Always use Coast Guard approved personal flotation devices vs. inflatable devices.

• Make sure you and anyone who supervises your child are trained in basic water safety and cardiopulmonary resuscitation.

SOA students build airstrip

By Devon Kerbow
School of the Americas

In the School of the Americas' OE-12 Sapper Course, students bring the airfield to the passengers.

When you're in the field, being able to improvise airstrips is important for receiving supplies, extracting material, and evacuating emergencies, said Capt. Luis Calvo, a guest instructor from Costa Rica.

Before the 14 Colombian police officers began this task, they had classes in calculations for demolitions, patrolling, reacting in dangerous areas, organizing working teams, map reading, and did reconnaissance of several areas to determine the spot that would best convert into an airstrip, Calvo said.

Once the students selected a site, they measured and marked the proposed airstrip.

Even though the area they'd chosen was flat with no elevation, they still were required to figure out how to remove trees and other obstacles using the five-step formula they'd been taught, Calvo said.

Following that, they set up the firing system by stringing inert detonation cord and TNT blocks around each tree.

Calvo said that in a real situation this area would take no more than two or three days to turn into a viable airstrip, but it could take up to two weeks if there were many barriers that needed to be removed.

Learning to construct airstrips is only a small part of the course. The students also learn other uses for demolitions, lifesaving techniques, detecting and neutralizing minefields, breaching obstacles, land navigation, obstacle construction, and how to perform engineer assault missions.

"This course is helpful to them because they're going to have to perform these tasks when they get back," Calvo said.

Sgt. Iroldo Porras, a student who's here as a reward for the work he's done in Colombia, said that the knowledge he'd gained here was valuable so he'd be able to neutralize mines in his country.

Porras added that now he had the satisfaction of being able to save the lives of his fellow soldiers.

"These guys really like to be here," Calvo said. "They know when they go home they're going to be recognized as better-trained police officers."

Team competes in EFMB Challenge

Fort McClellan, Ala., PAO

FORT McCLELLAN, Ala. — Two first lieutenants with the 2nd Mobile Army Surgical Hospital at Fort Benning recently competed in the Expert Field Medical Badge Challenge.

First Lt. Tony Tidwell and 1st Lt. Robert Rather made up one of 25 teams from Germany, Hawaii, Alaska and Army installations around the continental United States that participated in the event.

Soldiers participating in the challenge must have earned the Expert Field Medical Badge or have been awarded the Combat Medic Badge.

Members of the top team from Fort Bragg, N.C., will have their names placed on a permanent plaque at the Army Medical Department Center and School at Fort Sam Houston, Texas. First-, second- and third-place teams will receive championship rings and engraved plaques with their names for their unit. At the awards ceremony, every competitor received engraved knives, a certificate of completion and challenge T-shirts.

Competitors earned points in several events which included a physical fitness test, marksmanship, combat medic operations and cross-country orienteering. They were also given a 150-question written test, which covered medical and soldier skills.

The EFMB challenge Fitness Test required the soldiers to wear the battle dress uniform for all four events. The events were push-ups, sit-ups, pull-ups for males and the flexed-arm hang for females and a two-mile run. The time limit in the strength events was extended from two minutes to three minutes.

There were two phases to the marksmanship portion of the competition. First, the soldiers traveled to Range 19 to compete with the 9mm pistol. The distance of targets varied from seven meters to 50 meters.

At Range 22, they were given 12 rounds and one hour to zero their weapons. After the time limit, the teams traveled to a computerized M-16 competition range at Pelham Range. The challenge teams shot during the remaining daylight hours and after dark. Part of the test included firing an M-16 while wearing a protective mask.

For the next 24 hours, wearing rucksacks, aid bags, radios, and weapons, the teams were tested on their leadership, navigational, survival, medical and communication skills during five different combat medic operations.

To earn the EFMB, all of these skills are tested separately. For the challenge, the tasks were combined into a realistic combat situation.

The sixth and final phase of the three-day challenge proved to be the most rigorous. Cross-country orienteering combined land navigation and road marching. Each team was given a set of grid coordinates in random order.

The distance of the event was determined by the route the soldiers took.

For some, the challenge not only tested their physical fitness, but also their will to survive. Twenty of 25 teams finished the challenge.

Weeks of training helped prepare the soldiers for each grueling event. However, nothing could prepare them for the merciless temperatures peaking in the mid-90s and the high humidity. The combination proved to be too great for some. Four soldiers were treated and later released from Noble Army Community Hospital for heat-related problems.

Besides awards for first, second and third, some of the challengers were also recognized for achievement on the various events. During the awards ceremony, Commanding General of Dwight D. Eisenhower Army Medical Center, Fort Gordon, Ga., Brig. Gen. Vernon C. Spaulding, former commander of Martin Army Community Hospital at Fort Benning, commended all of the soldiers who participated in the challenge.

"Each and every one of you deserves to be congratulated. I saw pride and excitement out there this weekend," Spaulding said.

Spaulding also said he will emphasize to all the Medical Activity commanders the need for the EFMB challenge to become an annual event.

world war II

50 years ago this week...

• In one of the more decisive air-naval battles of the war, the Battle of the Philippine Sea, the Japanese were soundly defeated, losing at least 400 planes and three aircraft carriers.

• On the Western front, the final battle for Cherbourg, France, began with a two-hour air raid, in which more than 1,000 tons of bombs were dropped.

• Erwin Rommel, Karl Rudolf Gerd von Rundstedt and Adolf Hitler met at Soissons. Both generals want to order withdrawals to better positions in France. Hitler overruled them and went into a rage. He accused the German army in France of cowardice and said that the V1's would force Britain out of the war.

• On the Eastern front, the Soviet attacks broke through the main Finnish positions on the Mannerheim Line and advanced westward.

• President Franklin D. Roosevelt signed the Servicemen's Readjustment Act, which provided financial aid to veterans for education, housing and other needs. This act became widely known as the G.I. Bill of Rights.

• At Fort Benning, Maj. Gen. Charles H. Bonesteel, commandant of the Infantry School and former commander of U.N. forces in Iceland, succeeded Lt. Gen. Delos Emmons as Western Defense commander.

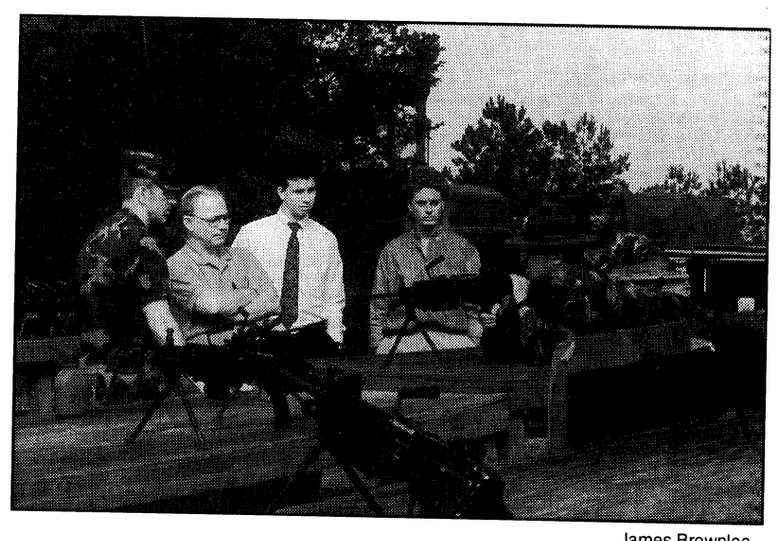
Infantry Training Brigade



Local corporate members of the Association of the United States Army visited the 2nd Battalion, 54th Infantry Regiment, for a day of training sponsored by the battalion.

They spent the morning with Lt. Col. Gary G. Dacey, commander of the 2nd Bn., 54th Inf. Regt., Command Sgt. Maj. Willie G. Wells and the soldiers of the battalion.

After an 8 a.m. breakfast in the battalion dining facility, members of the group visited Wagner Range. There they received a class on the M-249 squad automatic weapon from Staff Sgt. Nelson Santos, a drill sergeant in Company A, 2nd Bn., 54th Inf. Regt., and had the opportunity to fire the weapon. The corporate visitors then went to observe training on the precision gunnery training system used to train tow gunners.

After teaching the SAW class and assisting in firing the weapon, Santos explained how it is used in the infantry squad.

"I am impressed with the interest of the corporate visitors in understanding the workings of the infantry squad and how the different weapons are used within it," Santos said. "I am also impressed with their marksmanship. They did quite well even though it was their first time out."

For Rhonda Prata of U.S. Cavalry, this corporate visit was her second one.

"The soldiers of Fort Benning are very positive about relations between U.S. Cavalry and Fort Benning and that witnessing operations and taking part in training during the corporate visit will certainly help strengthen the relationship between the business I represent and Fort Benning," she said.

Counternarcotics Operations Course covers demolitions training

By Devon Kerbow
School of the Americas

What's one way to help Central and South America combat drug trafficking?

"Cut down on the number of airfields used to ship and deliver the product," said Staff Sgt. Sergio Rodegen, a special operations division instructor at the School of the Americas.

How to destroy airstrips was the focus of the first of two days of demolitions training for the OE-5 Counternarcotics Operations Course.

The course's 36 students, who range in rank from corporal to captain, come from Bolivia, Colombia, the Dominican Republic Ecuador, Peru and Venezuela to take part in the 11-week course.

The curriculum is designed to provide training in many areas that will be of value to the students for fighting drugs in their countries.

"The general purpose in demolitions training," Rodegen said, "is to show students how to use cratering charges to effectively destroy the airfields."

Following a morning spent in classes, the group went to Brown Range where they learned to wire and blow up shape charges.

A shape charge is a funnel-shaped standing explosive that detonates down. It's used to create holes, said Sgt. 1st Class Edwin Rodriguez, a SOA instructor and engineer.

After making craters, the students placed the explosives they had constructed an hour earlier. These consisted of sandbags filled with ammonia nitrate and oil. Detonation cord was wrapped around the charges, and time fuses protruded from the top of the bags.

The bags were set deep in the craters and the students packed dirt around and over the bags, trying to compact the charge as much as possible so as to make a greater explosion, Rodriguez said.

Even though these explosives took the afternoon to demonstrate, Rodriguez said that under combat conditions they could be wired in 30 to 90 seconds.

"It's not important to just be fast; you have to be accurate too," he said.

The second day, Rodriguez and Sgt. 1st Class Hernan DeBaron, a SOA engineering instructor, demonstrated types of charges that could be used for explosive entry on doors and windows. Each type they showed was something the students could easily construct and use in their own countries, Rodriguez said.

One of these was a C-shaped charge that would fit over a doorknob, providing just enough force to gain entry.

While preparing each explosive device, the instructors would direct question to the students. Right answers were rewarded by not having to do pushups.

An effective method for entry used was the silhouette charge. It's constructed out of cardboard and detonation cord, and either blasting caps or igniters are taped to it, Rodriguez said.

Using ballistic shields and Kevlar vests, each team of five students attached the silhouette to the mock building's door, stood close to the wall to avoid flying debris, and waited for the charge to blow.

Intravenous bags were used in an explosive called a "water impulse charge." It included two IV bags taped to a stick that's then wedged in a door frame, Rodriguez said.

It's designed for metal doors. It either blows a hole in the door or knocks it off it's hinges, DeBaron said.

"It's important that they familiarize themselves with different types of charges that they'll need for different buildings. They need a working knowledge of demolitions," Rodegen said.

That's true of 2nd Lt. Humberto Nunez, an infantryman from the Dominican Republic, who said he hasn't done demolitions before. But because there's a rule in his country that every officer who comes to SOA will have to teach what he's learned, he said he will be instructing demolitions training after he leaves here.

For some it's the first and last time they'll see demolitions, Rodegen said. Others, he pointed out, like Colombia, use them a lot.

"In their climate of operations it's a realistic mission for them and something they will need to know," Rodegen finished.

Students explore animal habitats

Third-graders study different regions of world

By Jerrie Macintire
Special to The Bayonet ©

Stowers School students were able to visit various environmental regions of the world last week by simply stepping across the hall.

As part of a third-grade environmental fair, students transformed their classrooms into various animal habitats while studying wildlife and natural resources native to their region.

"The third-grade classes have taken different regions of the world to study. As part of the study, students are exploring our impact on their assigned environment," said Deborah Dionne, teacher.

Dionne's classroom reflected the incredibly diverse life found in the world's oceans. A variety of three dimensional paper fish and whales hung suspended from the ceiling of her classroom while students explained the importance of stopping pollution and caring for the oceans of the world.

All the displays focused on the importance of caring for the environment "since the Earth is all we have, " said Dionne.

Newly hatched chicks, which peeped and preened in Laura Silver's classroom as visitors filed by, were representative of the penguin chicks of the Arctic.

As part of their study of the environment, the students also constructed a huge igloo and a variety of displays focusing on animals and natural resources of the arctic.

Laura McDonough, teacher, and student teacher Veronica Hall helped students transform their classroom into a tropical rain forest complete with a leafy canopy and vine filled understory. The children studied the impact of of the moisture cycles and the importance of the rain forest in conservation efforts.

The unit of study was designed to explore "what will happen if we don't correct the destruction of the rain forest," said Hall.

Across the hall, Anna Smith's students were busy with hands on displays representing the woodlands. From wild turkey feathers to antlers, children were able to view the variety and diversity of wildlife found in the world's forests.

Smith's husband, an avid outdoorsman, provided several displays .

In another classroom, Kitty Rice's students explained to visitors that there are really two kinds of deserts: hot, sandy stretches of land, and the polar deserts found in frozen regions of the world where little moisture falls.

Though apparently empty at first glance, deserts harbor a variety of life suited to harsh conditions of existence.

Rice's students joined other third-graders in discussing what makes each environment important and how changes in those environments are affecting animals in their natural habitats.

Principal to retire

Faith's new leader is former director of staff development

USAIC Public Affairs Office

The principal of Fort Benning's Don C. Faith Middle School is retiring after 26 years of service.

Harp

Olin Harp, who taught at Faith School for five years and served as assistant principal for five years, served as principal for the last 16 years.

Harp is credited with bringing the middle school concept to Faith School 15 years ago by securing a faculty compatible with the middle school philosophy and implementing the middle school model.

During his administration, the school has seen the advent of the PRIDE program, Camp Challenge, the after-school tutorial program, World Championship in the Odyssey of the Mind competition and top ranking in the world finals of Odyssey of the Mind for several years, a Head to Head championship, first place in the National History Day competition, and a multi-faceted physical education program based upon the needs of middle school children .

Harp has also served as a mentor for numerous Fort Benning administrators who served as his assistant principal at Faith School.

Beth Middlemiss has been appointed to the principalship at Faith Middle School for 1994-95. Middlemiss has served as director of staff development for the Fort Benning School System for the last nine years.

Before coming to Fort Benning, Middlemiss served as elementary principal, high school assistant principal, high school counselor, and teacher at both junior high and elementary levels.

In addition to her work in the Fort Benning Schools, Middlemiss also serves on the Board of Directors of the Columbus Regional Chartered Council on Child Abuse, the scholarship committee of Network for Professionals and Executives and the Teacher Curriculum Advisory Council at Columbus College. She is a member of the 1994 Class of Leadership Columbus.

Middlemiss

"I am thrilled to be joining the Faith School staff," Middlemiss said. "I follow in the steps of a wonderful leader at an exemplary school.

As staff development director here in the Fort Benning Schools, I have been a part of the training and development of many of Faith School's projects and programs.

I'm looking forward to serving as principal and to working on a day-to-day basis with Faith students, parents and staff."

Spencer students use logic, creativity

By Stephanie Krawczyk
Special to The Bayonet©

A group of Spencer High School students recently completed their first of two years in an innovative new learning program.

Uniquely combining the subjects of English and mathematics, the Honors Plus program is now an option for freshman and sophomore students.

As part of the program, students meet for a three-hour block of advanced study and will complete a normal three-year course of study of math and English in two years time.

English teacher Janet Petrasek and math teacher Paul Hampton conceptualized the idea for the program while carpooling together to work at Spencer.

Hampton had heard of a similar program while attending a seminar.

Together they worked on a proposal for the Muscogee County School Board and gained final approval for the program in the late spring of 1993.

Honors Plus is designed to teach logic skills and creative writing techniques together, according to Hampton.

"We traditionally keep math and English so separate," he said. "But students are expected to know both."

Students are seated in teams of four during class, allowing them to cooperate on solving problems. "They each have their strengths and help each other," Hampton said.

The two teachers develop lesson plans together, combining English and math into the same plan when possible.

At the end of their sophomore year, the students will have completed algebra I and II and geometry and four literature classes.

In addition to being better prepared for college and the SAT, completion of Honors Plus also frees up time during their junior and senior years for more electives.

Hampton and Petrasek will move along with their students to the sophomore level and two other teachers will pick up the incoming freshman honors students.

The motivation to begin a honors program at Spencer was to become competitive with other Muscogee County schools that currently offer advanced study programs in subjects like science or math.

In previous years, some advanced students slated for study at Spencer opted to attend other schools with specialized curriculum.

"It was not fair that our kids had to go elsewhere," said Hampton. "We just wanted a viable option for Fort Benning and other neighborhood kids."

Now, with the first year completed, Hampton and Petrasek are optimistic about the success of Honors Plus.

"We believed in the program last fall," Petrasek said. "We firmly believe in it this spring.

Parents, students and teachers have endorsed the program with a great show of enthusiasm.

"It's been a big challenge, but it's been a whole lot of fun," Petrasek said. "It's energized us as teachers."

Ball players donate toys to Santa's Castle

Youth Services

The Youth Services tee ball team, the Power Rangers, donated $261 worth of new toys to Santa's Castle June 8.

The Power Rangers, consisting of 5-and 6-year-olds, collected the money to buy the toys by selling candy bars throughout Fort Benning and Columbus area.

The primary purpose for the sales was to help with the end-of-the-year banquet and individual trophies for the players.

The community was so responsive to the children that there were funds left over after the banquet and trophies had been paid for.

After consideration on what to do with the excess funds, the team decided to purchase the toys for Santa's Castle.

" The kids had the final decision on how to best use the money and it was their decision," head coach Deena Branson said.

"I think it is (the decision) indicative of the type of children we have here at Fort Benning. We also need to give a special thanks to the Wal-Mart team on the Airport Thruway, which gave the team a $25 donation on the toys purchased and to the parents who helped the children with the sales."

Kathy Dykes

" It is important that the kids not only learn the game, but it is even more important that they learn good sportsmanship and teamwork," said assistant coach John Peeler.

"I feel that with this donation, the children have made a statement that all the children at Fort Benning are on the same team off the field."

Santa's Castle will have the new toys available in plenty of time for Christmas.

Individual and organization donations may be made to Santa's Castle, Building 2639, on Wednesdays from 9 a.m. to 2 p.m.

Spencer High seniors graduate

By Denise Rogers
Special to The Bayonet

On the night of June 9, Spencer High School graduated 194 seniors.

Their motto was "If you can imagine it, you can achieve it. If you can dream it, you can become it".

Kermit Cornelius Walker, president of his class, received several awards, one for perfect attendance, never having missed a day of school since kindergarten. He is the son of retired Air Force Master Sgt. James Walker and Corrine Walker, a nurse at Martin Army Community Hospital Department of Nursing and president of the Spencer Booster Organization.

Seventeen students were awarded academic and service scholarships totaling approximately $424,932. Seven students were awarded athletic scholarships estimated at $197,804, and five students were awarded military scholarships bringing the estimated total to $629,000.

The total estimated value of scholarships offers for Spencer High School Class of 1993-1994 was $3,357,858, according to Dr. Jean Thomas, assistant principal.

"We are all proud of the accomplishments we have achieved at this point," graduate Latisha Littleton said. "We all could have been many other places getting into trouble, but with prayer and determination, we have made it to this glorious moment in time."

Tomeka Danielle Swails, daughter of retired Sgt. Cedrick Quintin Thomas and Staff Sgt. Venessa Gail Thomas of the 95th Combat Support Hospital in Heidelberg, Germany (who flew in just for the ceremony), was the valedictorian and first in the class.

Gregor Altvater, son of Judit Duncan and Staff Sgt. Larry Duncan of the 4th Battalion, 41st Field Artillery Regiment, was the salutatorian and second in class. Walker ranked fourth in the class.

Fatherhood : What kind of job are you doing?

By Roger D. Criner
USAIC Chaplains' Office

reflections

Some people say any man can be a father; it is a job that takes little talent.

However, the rate for failure in fatherhood is actually higher than any other occupation. Fathers have a colossal full-time job that most people underestimate. It is the most important task a man can tackle.

Despite vast changes in America's social fabric in recent years, one thread of tradition shows no sign of unraveling — sons and daughters who follow in their father's footsteps.

In every field, individuals reap fame, power and money in the same professions in which their fathers toiled. Indeed, many combine talent and drive to surpass their fathers' achievements.

Still, many of those individuals agree that they did not reach the top by themselves. Vital to their success were the advice, financial sacrifices and well timed pats on the back from their biggest fan — Dad.

Possibly the No. 1 problem among fathers today is simply not being there, not spending time with children before they have grown up.

We hear about children's fathers always off on business, workaholics who rise early and leave before the children are up and come home after they have gone to bed, and fathers who spend afternoons and evenings having "a beer with the guys." These examples only tell part of the story.

How many fathers, while not exactly committing the error (not being around) come home after a hard day, invade the refrigerator, then use the television set as a barrier between themselves and their offspring? All the while they tell themselves they are at home with the family.

How many fathers bring home a brief case full of papers and disappear "not to be disturbed," hardly seeing their children during the week? And the weekend? Well, its for relaxation on the golf course with the adult boys.

A nationwide survey was taken recently to determine how much time fathers spent with their children. The results were astonishing. Fathers with children between the ages of 2 and 12 were spending 12 minutes a day with their children. Twelve-minute Dads contribute greatly to 12-year-old delinquents.

But not all fathers are 12-minute dads. I have seen many fathers leave for a long weekend for a family camping trip that is never forgotten in the minds and lives of their children. You cannot substitute a Popsicle for Pop himself, though both may have their places. Whether it be a car or a candy bar, a fishing rod or a hot rod, you cannot substitute these presents for the presence of Dad.

America is standing at the crossroads of history. Our very survival as a nation may depend on the presence or absence of masculine leadership in millions of homes — leadership in the form of loving authority, leadership in the form of financial management and leadership in the form of spiritual training and leadership in maintaining good marital relationships.

Sometimes there are effects of our influence that we may never know. Brook Adams kept a diary from his boyhood. One special day when he was 8 years old, he wrote in his diary, "Went fishing with my father; the most glorious day of my life."

Throughout the next 40 years of his life, he never forgot that day he went fishing with his father; he made repeated references to it in his diary, commenting on the influences of that day in his life.

Brook's father was an important man; he was Charles Francis Adams, the U.S. ambassador to Great Britain in President Abraham Lincoln's administration. Interestingly, he too made a note in his diary about the fishing trip. He wrote simply, "Went fishing with my son; a day wasted."

Of course the day was not wasted; its value may well have proved to make it one of the most well-spent days in his life. No one can measure the influence of a man on his children, and that is all the more reason to take the job and its responsibilities seriously.

Someone has written, "Last night my little boy confessed to me some childish wrong, and kneeling at my knee, he prayed with tears, "O Lord, make me a man like Daddy — wise and strong. I know you can." Then while he slept, I knelt beside his bed, confessed my sins and prayed with low-bowed head, "O God, make me a child like my child here — pure, guileless, trusting thee with faith sincere."

SOA hosts prayer breakfast

By Devon Kerbow
School of the Americas

The chaplain at the School of the Americas hosted a prayer breakfast May 26 at a local Columbus restaurant.

Capt. Anibal Cruz-Baez began by welcoming those assembled and invited them to help themselves to breakfast.

After all had been served, an invocation was given by Maj. Gustavo Mendoza, a Honduran student in SOA's Command and General Staff Course.

SOA's Command Sgt. Maj. Vincent Sampson said that he hoped everyone would leave having gained something from this prayer breakfast.

Next, Operations Staff Sgt. Jose Ramos read from Luke 7:1, 10 and Psalms 91:1, 8.

Santos Malave, a transportation assistant, offered a prayer of hope and faith.

Cpl. Alicia Leach led the hymns and was accompanied by Camille Munoz playing the keyboard.

Cruz-Baez prefaced his introduction of the guest speaker by saying, "It's important for us to participate in prayer breakfast because it helps us remember who God is."

Retired Lt. Col. John Bastone, SOA's former chief of staff, was introduced and related a story of how God had been a force in his life.

Bastone continued by saying that whether you looked in the New or Old Testament, every example that described a soldier showed someone of honor who followed orders.

"There is no conflict between role as a soldier and role as a Christian," Bastone said.

A prayer of thanks was then given by protocol Sgt. Marva Barriteau.

Capt. Andres Aguirre, a guest instructor from Mexico, delivered the closing prayer.

The entire prayer meeting was given in both English and Spanish.

"It's an experience in which guest instructors, students, officers and enlisted can fellowship together," Cruz-Baez said.

The chaplain said he intends to make the prayer breakfast a quarterly event.

Wealthy nation shows signs of spiritual sickness

By Marshall Peterson
USAIC Chaplains' Office

reflections

The incredible sustained wealth and productivity of America, compared with all the nations of the world, is truly a remarkable testimony that "God shed his grace on thee."

A close examination of the people of America reveals no qualitative explanation for this remarkable and unsurpassed prosperity. Other nations have demonstrated the same initiative, inventiveness, creativity and genius.

But just who is it that marked out the boundaries of this great land? Who filled its coffers with such rich treasures and resources beyond compare? Who gave its inhabitants the wisdom to tap its depths?

What other land is there whose founders sought a place of freedom to honor and worship God according to the dictates of conscience? America's foundation was laid by a company of pilgrims and puritans with a deep, abiding faith in the God of the Bible.

In spite of our wealth and rich heritage, America is not well. Our people reflect a deep unhappiness and dissatisfaction with life.

This is symptomatic of a country whose citizens suffer from a spiritual sickness. This wealthiest of nations reflects enormous soul trouble.

Economically, witness the national debt. We as a nation refuse to control our appetites for big spending, enslaving generations to come.

Socially, witness the explosion of violent, irrational crime and the seeming inability of the judicial system to mete out justice.

Politically, witness the poverty of our nation to produce leaders in whom we can repose our trust and confidence for the future.

Religiously, witness the spread of religious charlatans across the land. We are a nation searching for answers in all the wrong places.

Our nation's problems do not stem from lack of money, prisons or political and religious leadership. The troubles we face reflect a crisis of national character.

America is sick spiritually. The Bible identifies the marks of such a people.

Romans, Chapter 1, lists these evidences as a people who refuse to give glory or thanks to God: worship things rather than the creator; engage in sexual impurity — fornication, adultery and homosexuality; are greedy, envious, murderous, strife-filled, deceitful, malicious; and the list goes on Sounds like this morning's newspaper!

But is there hope for us as a people? Our symptoms appear terminal, our future dark. As long as we as a people seek solutions apart from heart-rending repentance and faith in God, America and its families will continue on the relentless path to self-destruction.

Should we seek the infinite wisdom of the one whose hand forged the path of our forefathers, then the world will say of America, "Surely this great nation is a wise and understanding people" Deuteronomy 4:6 (NIV).

When former President George Bush took the oath of office, he placed his hand on his mother's Bible and swore, "to support and defend the Constitution of the United States, so help me God."

The passage of Scripture upon which he placed his hand was underlined. It read, "If my people, who are called by my name, will humble themselves and pray, and seek my face, and turn from their wicked ways, then will I hear from heaven, forgive their sin, and heal their land" (2 Chronicles 7:14).

The promises of God are true. When we repent and return to God, we will find the spiritual prosperity and healing for the spiritual sickness which plagues our land. The fruit of repentance will be peace with God, peace with ourselves, peace within our families, and peace with our fellow Americans.

No amount of material prosperity can substitute for spiritual health. Our individual, loving, obedient response to the living God will turn our lives, our families and our nation around.

BAYONET TV

Serving Fort Benning and the Chattahoochee Valley

Shandling continues as HBO's Larry Sanders

By Jay Bobbin
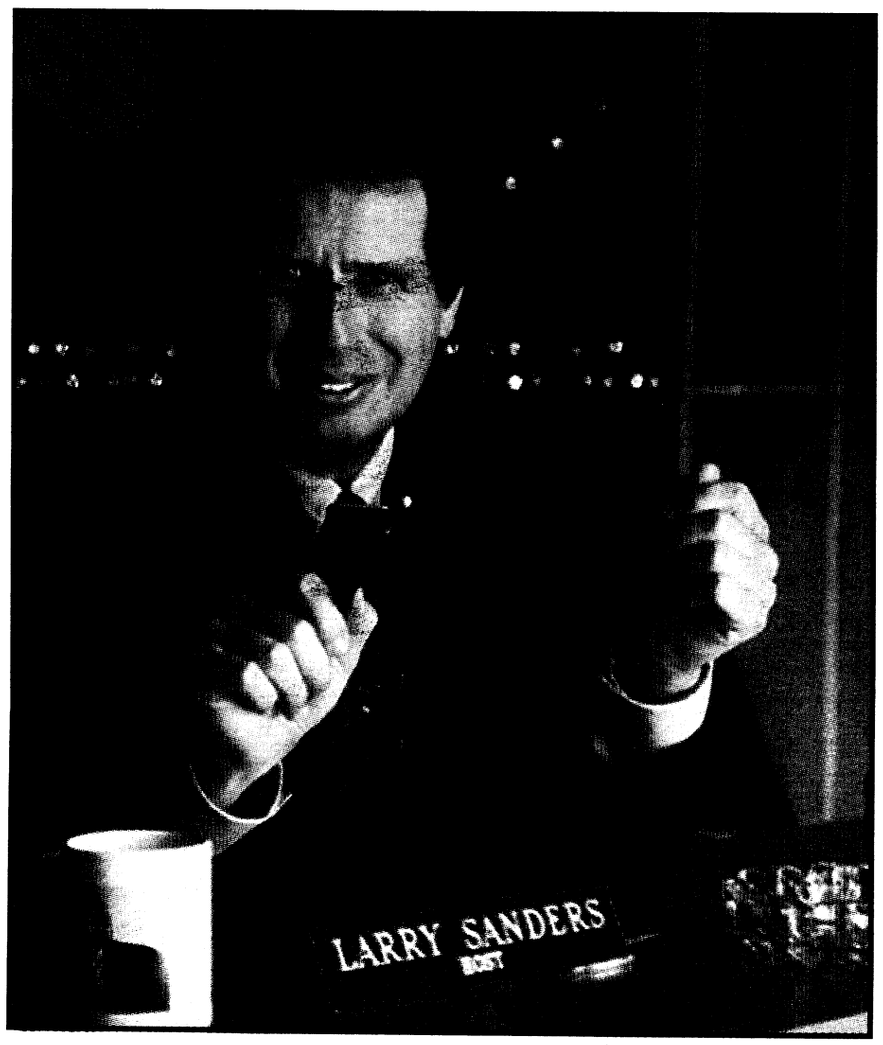
Tribune Media Services



"HEY-Y-Y-Y, now!"

That well might be how fictional talk-show sidekick Hank Kingsley would call attention to the season premiere of "The Larry Sanders Show," the critically acclaimed, CableACE Award-winning satire of late-night TV chat-fests that begins its third year Wednesday on HBO.

SPOTLIGHT

Co-creator, co-producer Garry Shandling naturally continues to play the perpetually insecure host, who begins the new round of episodes by making leaving his program behind and heading for Montana in search of a more-tranquil life. His quest may be short-lived, though, since his network wants him back ... and slaps him with a breach-of-contract lawsuit to ensure that will be the outcome. Pivotal co-stars in the ensemble cast include Jeffrey Tambor as the aforementioned Hank and Rip Torn as Artie, Larry's veteran producer, who's been in the business long enough to have seen just about everything. Also present again is Linda Doucett (Shandling's real-life fiancee) as Darlene, Hank's admiring and ever-accommodating assistant.

Wednesday's opener marks the start of the biggest commitment Shandling has gotten yet from HBO, which has renewed "Larry Sanders" for at least two more years. Though he's pleased by that display of confidence, the comedian-actor also makes no pretense that it's a tall order to fill. "I've been in this circumstance before, because when I was doing the Showtime series ('It's Garry Shandling's Show'), we were picked up for 55 (episodes). In a strange way, that can hurt; if you're not careful, you no longer feel threatened about keeping up the quality of the show. On the old series, I felt some people felt that way and lost a certain drive, because it (a lengthy run) was a given. However, I think that knowing we have two more seasons on this has given everyone an ease and taken away the tension of worrying about ratings, so we really have focused on the creative quality. Mind you, this comes from somebody who wishes he could take even a personal relationship one season at a time."

What: "The Larry Sanders Show"
When: Wednesday on HBO

A number of last season's "Sanders" plots clearly were based on David Letterman's true adventures in the so-called "talk-show wars," as Larry debated switching networks, and also had to decide which of the two coasts his program should originate from. Shandling says, "The truth is that in the episode in which David actually appeared, I wrote for him what I thought was a joke, in which he said he was considering Tom Snyder (to follow his own show) ... not knowing that it was actually the case. I'm a Snyder fan, so it's just something that came up. However, it isn't so surprising that we would be so close to the bone, because we keep our finger on the late-night pulse. Some of the other writers are from that background, as I am, so it's sort of in the air. We try to predict what's likely to happen, and to write stories that could have happened."

1994/95 season coming to Atlanta's Fox Theatre

Atlanta Broadway Series

The American Express Atlanta Broadway Series has announced its 1994-95 season, coming to Atlanta's Fox Theatre.

The season includes Marie Osmond in The Sound of Music, Maurice Hines in Jelly's Last Jam, Petula Clark in Blood Brothers plus a fifth production to be announced soon.

Available as additional options to subscribers of the series are the triumphant return of Andrew Lloyd Webber's The Phantom of the Opera and Jesus Christ Superstar starring Ted Neeley and Carl Anderson.

The stage of the Fox Theatre will be filled with the sound of music when Osmond opens in Rodgers and Hammerstein's classic romantic musical, The Sound of Music, Nov. 15 through 20.

This all-new national tour includes some of Richard Rodgers' and Oscar Hammerstein's most memorable tunes: "My Favorite Things," "Do Re Mi," "Edelweiss," the joyous title song and the awe-inspiring "Climb Every Mountain."

Winner of seven Tony Awards, The Sound of Music also garnered a Grammy for Best Original Cast Album and a Gold Record. The film was also the winner of five Academy Awards.

Webber has created a spectacular brand-new production of his merriest musical. This blockbuster is coming to Atlanta March 14 through 19. With music by Webber and lyrics by Tim Rice (Oscar-winner for "Aladdin"), Joseph and the Amazing Technicolor Dreamboat features a singing, dancing company of 70, plus a rock 'n' roll pharaoh, two children's choirs and a 40-foot sphinx.

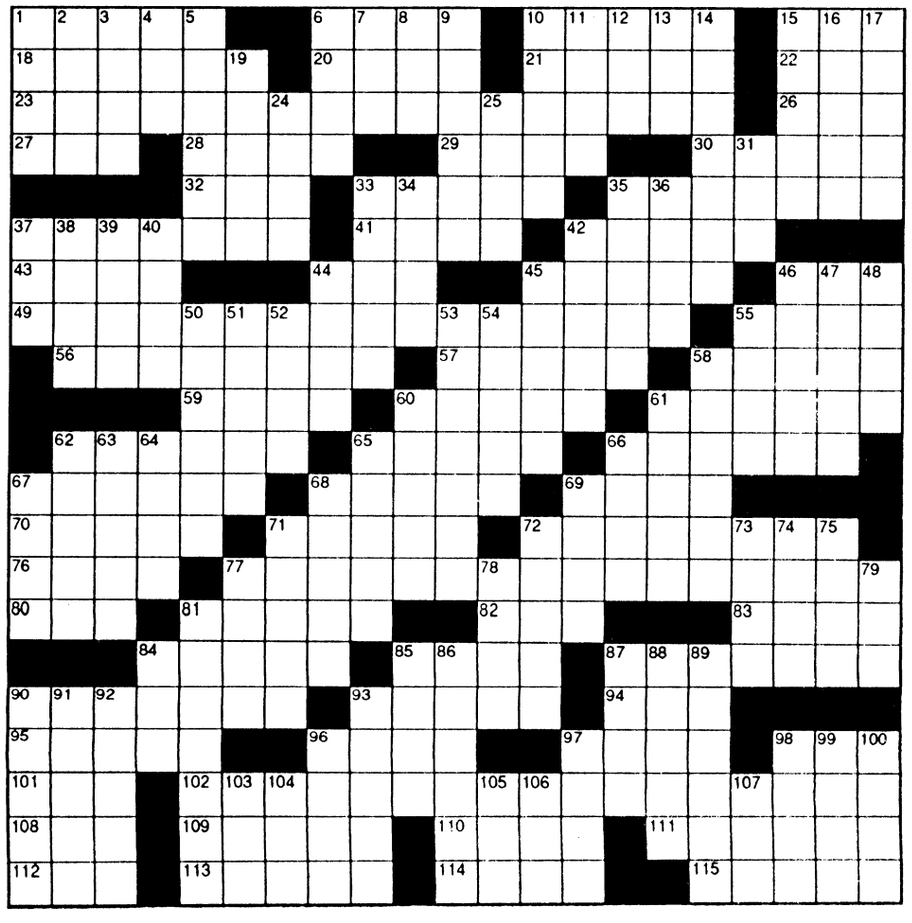
Maurice Hines steps into the legendary shoes of Jelly Roll Morton for one last jam in Jelly's Last Jam, April 25 through 30. In the tradition of P.T. Barnum and Howard Hughes, Morton was a larger-than-life visionary, the self-proclaimed inventor of jazz and lover of women, who conquered the American music terrain with his infectious compositions and diamond-toothed smile. This musical has dynamic choreography, show-stopping dancing and riveting drama.

The season will include a fifth production to be announced and also offers subscribers two optional musicals, The Phantom of the Opera, Oct. 4 through 9, 1994 and Jesus Christ Superstar, Feb. 7 through 12.

Webber's hugely popular musical The Phantom of the Opera, directed by Harold Prince, won seven 1988 Tony Awards, seven Drama Desk Awards and three Outer Critics Circle Awards.

The production of Webber and Rice's Jesus Christ Superstar is returning by popular demand, again starring Neeley as Jesus and Anderson as Judas.

The American Express Atlanta Broadway Series has joined with a new state-of-the-art computerized season ticket fulfillment office, Central Subscriptions.



Ticket prices for the five-show season package range from $57 to $175.40. To order series tickets call (800) 278-4447. Telephone order operators are available Monday through Friday, 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. Substantial discounts are available for most of these productions for groups of 20 or more by calling (404) 873-4300.

The Theatre League of Atlanta's address is: 659 Peachtree St., Suite 900, Atlanta, Ga. 30308.

New Community Police Patrol to supervise housing areas by

Pedal power

By Karen S. Morarie
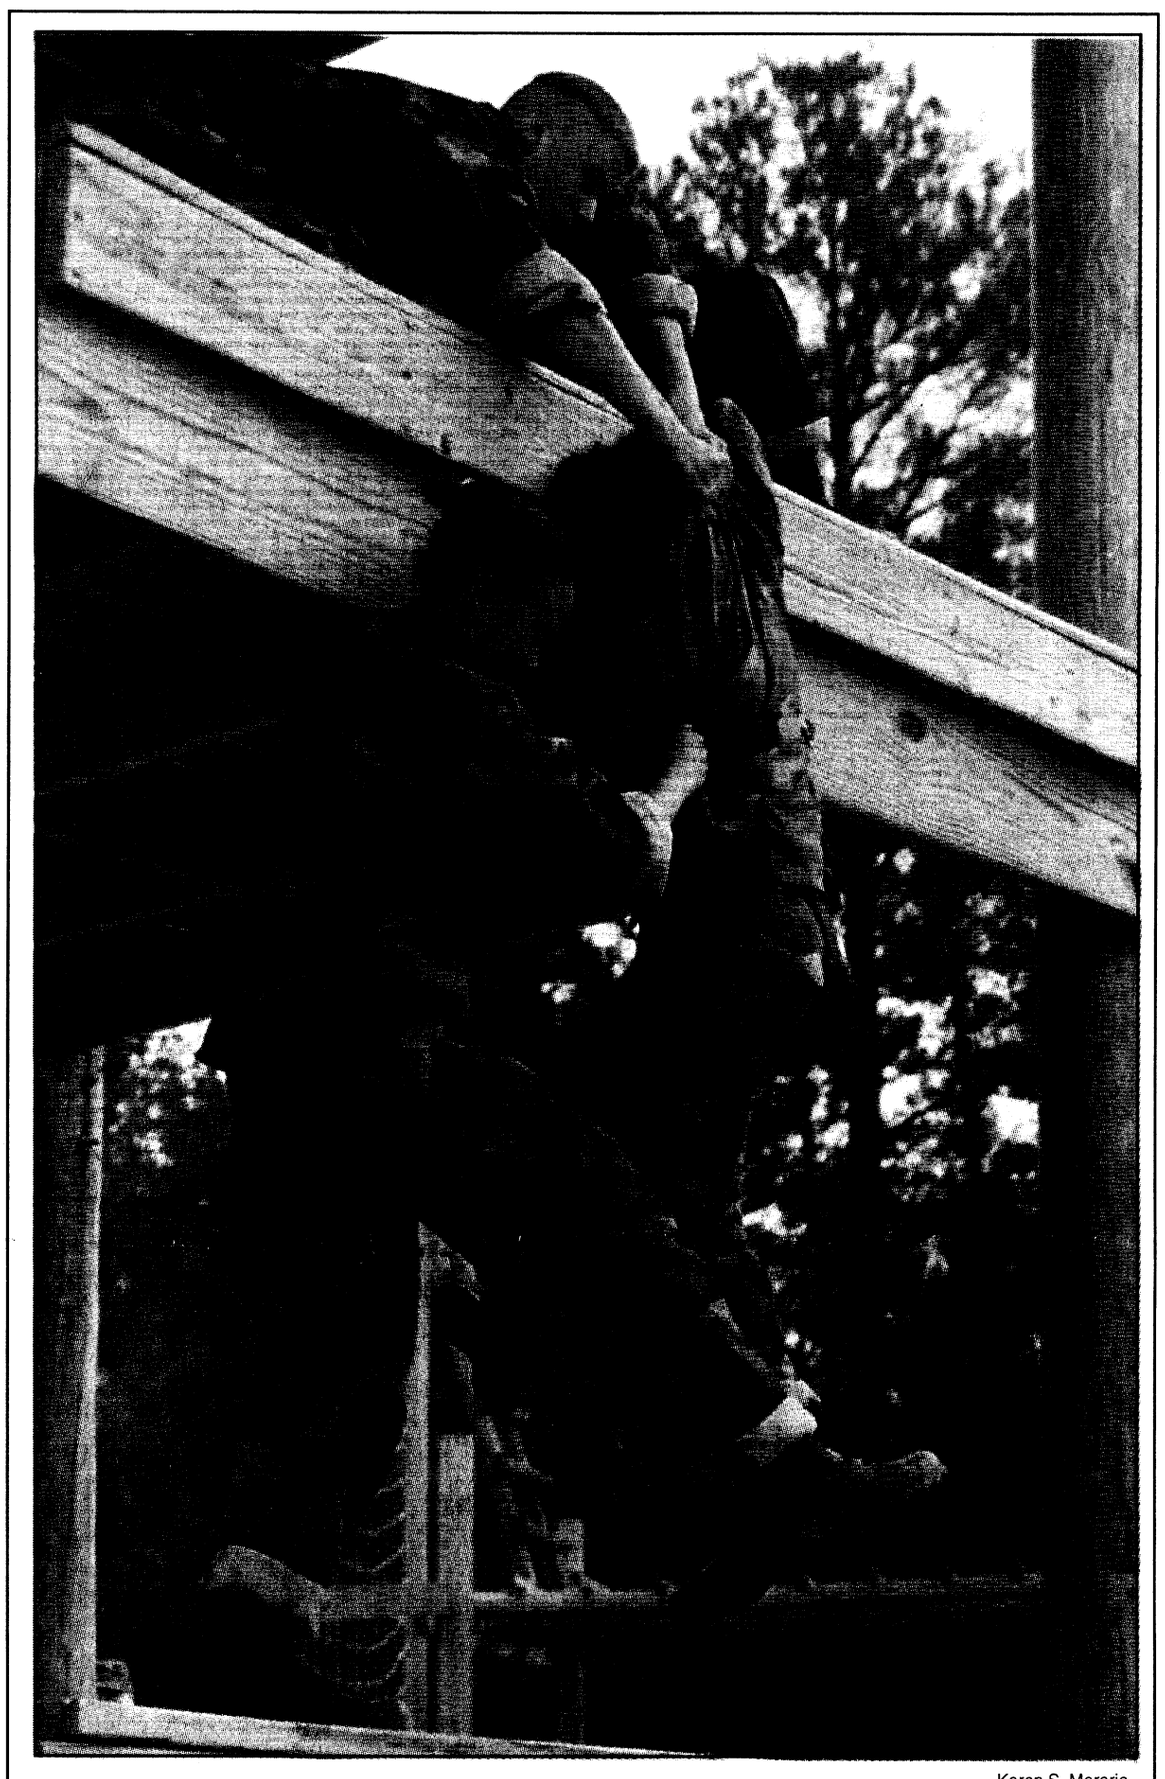
Bayonet staff writer

Residents of post housing areas will soon be noticing some unusual bikers in distinctive outfits roaming their neighborhoods. They won't be the Hell's Angels type of biker, though — these men and women will be members of the Community Police Patrol.

According to Lt. Col. Jack Heacock, outgoing chief of the Military Police Activity's Law Enforcement Operations, the pedaling police persons are intended to strengthen the lines of communication between MPs and the community.



"We've assigned five soldiers to each major housing area, and they'll work in shifts within that area," Heacock said.

"This program is unique in that until now, we've rotated MPs through all the major housing areas. With these bike patrols, residents will learn to recognize the faces of the soldiers patrolling their neighborhoods."

Heacock said beginning in late June or early July, the Community Police Patrol will hit the streets.

"They've already met, in most cases, with the mayors and Community Life noncommissioned officers in their areas," he said. "We think that having this sense of continuity will help us provide better law enforcement in housing. The MPs will know what to look for, what cars don't belong, and so forth. As they get to know the residents, we feel the communication will help a great deal in solving crimes that take place in the housing areas."

Post bids farewell to deputy CG

Former RTB commander and 'old friend' will fill DCG post

By Ruth J. Spaller
Bayonet staff writer

Fort Benning bade farewell to the outgoing deputy commanding general and assistant commandant of the U.S. Army Infantry School and welcomed his replacement in a ceremony on York Field Tuesday.

Brig. Gen. Jack P. Nix Jr. is leaving Fort Benning to command the U.S. Army Southern European Task Force and 5th Theater Army Area Command in Italy.

Nix is one of 29 brigadier generals the president approved this week and forwarded to the senate for confirmation for promotion to major general.

"Today is one of the most difficult for me, because I am losing my right-hand man," said Commanding General Maj. Gen. Jerry A. White at the ceremony.

In the year he has been here, Nix has made "significant contributions to the Infantry School, Fort Benning and the infantry force worldwide," White said.

"Nix," White said, "has personally directed a holistic review of the infantry that promises to significantly alter how the infantry is organized and equipped, and how we will fight future wars."

White presented Nix with the Legion of Merit and presented Nix's wife, Sharon, with the Commander's Award for Public Service.

White then welcomed the new deputy commanding general, Brig. Gen. John J. Maher III, who he described as "an old friend ... (who) brings to Fort Benning a vast wealth of experience across the entire spectrum of the infantry."

Maher is no stranger to Fort Benning, having commanded the Ranger Training Brigade from September 1990 to August 1992.

He and his family are happy to be returning to an area they know and love, he said.

"I approach this assignment with outright excitement and enthusiasm at the prospect of working with the many professionals, military and civilian, that are here at Fort Benning.

"I sincerely pledge to all of you my best efforts," Maher said.

Maher comes to Fort Benning from Fort Stewart, Ga., where he # Litter bugs respect no one

By Clyde Snively
Bayonet columnist

American fighter pilots can drop smart bombs down a chimney, the field artillery can carpet a grid square with a barrage of shells and our own doughboys can put an anti-tank missile through the peep site of an enemy tank from more than a mile away.

We can wipe out any enemy force that opposes us. But what we can't do is put an end to one of the most obscene, most virulent pests known to mankind — the litter bug.

Since these unthinking, uncaring, half-wits insist on cluttering our landscapes with their fast-food containers, beer bottles and baby diapers, I think war should be declared on them.

I, for one, don't like to spend my weekends patrolling the post's highways and byways because some lout thinks it's cool to strew his rubbish along our roadsides for all the world to see.

I'm in favor of enlisting the HQ bomber to come to our aid. You know the one with the green bombs the guy drops on rude sales clerks, or sales clerks who try to overcharge.

Well I think the HQ plane needs to fly along our roads. As the pilot spots a window rolling down, an arm extending, and a flurry of trash exiting the vehicle, the bombardier needs to push the anti-litter button on the aircraft controls and bomb the stuffing out of this wretch who obviously has no respect for others and very little self-esteem.

I also favor giving students in our Sniper School a chance to take on moving targets. Station them along the bypass and let them shoot the tires out of offenders' cars.

Unmanned drones could fly over post with their television cameras, recording the license numbers of anyone who uses our roads as their trash bin.

This would be especially useful out on the ranges where local citizens think the post is a repository for old refrigerators, truck tires, sofas and anything else they've got that doesn't work anymore.

What I can't understand is why, if they make the effort to come all the way to post, they can't go to the town dump. I bet in some instances, it might even save them some distance.

Plus, they won't have to worry about getting arrested and fined.

Obviously we'll never get the message across to these people that it's uncool to litter. Their brains could never process that information.

So we need to do the next best thing. And that's turn them in. In this era of cellular telephones, an eye-witness call to the local police should be pretty easy.

But I'm sure we don't want to have to spend a day in court testifying. We don't want to get "involved."

In other words we'd rather pick up the trash for these nincompoops, these mooncalves, than get them fined and get them to pull community service by walking the roads themselves.

I'll bet people who litter in Singapore are caned.

DoD to examine health of Persian Gulf War Veterans

As you may know, there have been reports that some Persian Gulf War veterans are experiencing health problems that may be related to their service in the gulf. We want to assure each of you that your health and well being are top priorities for the Department of Defense.

There are many hazards of war, ranging from intense combat to environmental exposures. Anyone who has health problems resulting from those hazards is entitled to health care. If you are experiencing problems, please come in for a medical evaluation.

Active duty personnel and their eligible family members should report to any military hospital and ask to be included in the Department's Persian Gulf War Veterans Health Surveillance System. You will receive a full medical evaluation and any medical care that you need.

Reserve personnel may contact either a military hospital or their nearest veterans affairs medical center and ask to be included in the DoD Surveillance System or the VA's Persian Gulf War Health Registry. You will receive a full medical examination. Depending on the results of the evaluation and eligibility status, Reserve personnel will receive medical care either from military facilities or from VA facilities.

There have been reports in the press of the possibility that some of you were exposed to chemical or biological weapons agents. There is no information, classified or unclassified, that indicates that chemical or biological weapons were used in the Persian Gulf. There have also been reports that some veterans believe there are restrictions on what they can say about potential exposures. Be assured that you should not feel constrained in any way from discussing these issues.

We are indebted to each one of you for your service to your country during the Persian Gulf War and throughout your military careers. We also want to be sure that you receive any medical care you need.

Other schools have great children also

I have been living at Fort Benning for 10 years. I have two children who have attended five different schools here on post.

I also have read The Bayonet nearly every week during this time. For some time now, I have noticed that The Bayonet has published many articles about projects and programs happening at Dexter Elementary. While that is great that they are doing all that, are they the only school on post doing anything newsworthy?

Do the other schools on post have all the same opportunities that the children at Dexter have? If they do, then why do we very rarely read about it?

Could it be that the children who attend Dexter are predominantly officer's children?

I would like to read about projects and awards from other schools for a change.

Name withheld by request

Editor's note: We appreciate your calling our attention to the disparity in newspaper coverage among the Fort Benning Schools. As with the units we cover on post, those who turn in stories or story ideas are the ones who will get the most coverage.

The school administration assures us that all seven Fort Benning schools provide strong curricular programs and have special programs of which they are proud.

In the case of Dexter School, it received quite a bit of publicity when it applied for and was named one of 11 elementary schools of excellence in the state.

Again we thank you for being a faithful reader over the years and bringing the matter to our attention. We will certainly make an effort to cull more stories from other schools.

And as our school system notes, the only rank the school system officials recognize is the rank of "parent."

Yesterday's rifle battalion has new weapons, same mission

Infantry's legacy of winning battles is no different in today's Army

USAIC Public Affairs Office

When Congress, on June 14, 1775, authorized 10 companies of riflemen to be raised in Pennsylvania, Maryland and Virginia, it created the Continental Army and established the infantry.

Before leaving the home state, the six companies from Pennsylvania were combined to form William Thompson's Rifle Battalion. This battalion and the other new rifle units organized rapidly and marched quickly to Boston.

Since those days 219 years ago, the infantry has continued to march to war, to serve our nation. The litany of these wars and battles are familiar to all infantrymen who've listened to the epic tale, "I am the Infantry."

The infantry has come a long way from the band of ragtag soldiers who took on the mightiest nation on earth, but the "can-do" spirit of the infantry has not changed.

Today, the infantry soldier is armed with the latest in weaponry, but who wins or loses on the field of battle still boils down to the indomitable spirit and training of the infantryman.

As long as the spirit holds, this nation will remain free.

Happy birthday infantry

On the occasion of your 219th anniversary, the men and the women of the U. S. Army join me in sending congratulations to all infantrymen.

From Bunker Hill to the Gulf War, your history is replete with examples of courage, tenacity, endurance and devotion to duty. These qualities are an inspiration to your comrades-in-arms.

The nation will continue to look to you as a source of strength. I am confident that you will meet successfully the challenges of the future with the gallantry, dedication and unselfishness that are the Army's hallmarks. I am grateful for your magnificent achievements and proud to be sharing this service with you.

Soldiers' assistance needed to keep post clean

commentary

As garrison sergeant major, I would like to take time out to thank all the units and directorates for policing the installation.

Fort Benning has hosted a number of visitors over the past few months and many have made positive comments on the appearance of the installation.

To receive positive comments on the policing of an installation the size of Fort Benning is a major accomplishment and it's not as easy as it seems.

Soldiers are constantly on the road picking up trash and paper that someone deliberately or accidentally threw on the ground.

In order to keep Fort Benning looking good, we solicit your help. I ask that you think about the amount of time and effort involved in policing the installation before you throw another piece of paper on the ground.

1st paratroopers reunite on post

Original members make yearly trip back to jump site

By Ruth J. Spaller
Bayonet staff writer

Members of the first group of soldiers ever to become U.S. Army paratroopers gathered at Fort Benning June 15 to 17 for its annual reunion.

Known as the "Parachute Test Platoon," this group of 48 enlisted soldiers and two officers from the 29th Infantry Regiment volunteered to undergo the Army's first parachute training and completed its first jump here in June 1940.

The 50 men, only 16 of whom are still living, were chosen from among 250 volunteers who all came forward hoping to make history.

Some of them, like then-Pfc. Louie D. Davis, had never even been in an airplane before. He and his buddy, Pfc. Johnnie A. Ellis, didn't really know what they were getting into, Davis said.

"When they asked for volunteers, (Ellis) said, 'I'll go if you will.'

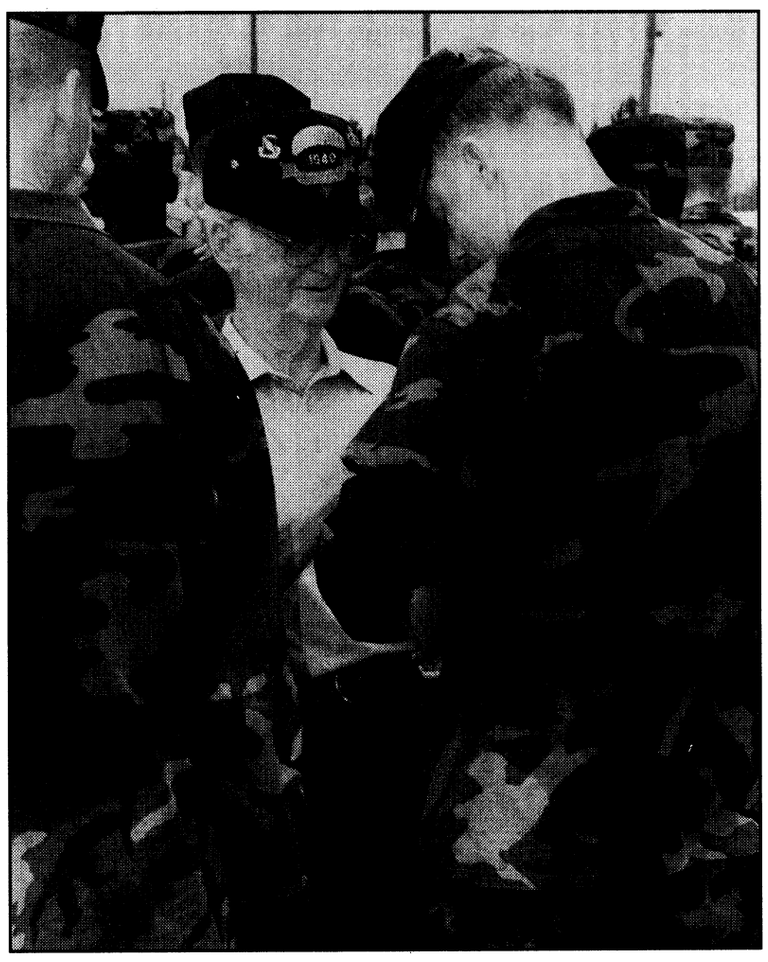
"I wouldn't back down and he wouldn't back down," Davis said, and so they both ended up as members of the original test platoon.

Charles M. "Swifty" Wilson, another private first class in the platoon at the time, remembers the excitement that led up to that first jump.

"Everybody wanted to be America's first enlisted paratrooper," Wilson said, "so we drew numbers out of a hat to see who would jump first, second, third and so on."

But the man who drew number one froze in the door, he said.

"I think he sincerely wanted to jump, because all of us offered him at least $50 to take his place," Wilson said. "And $50 then was like $1,000 now ... that was back when you paid a nickel for a loaf of bread," he said.



The oldest paratrooper, John A. Ward, now 84 years old, even offered him two months pay, Wilson said.

The day before the first jump, the platoon was set to watch a demonstration.

"They hooked up a parachute to a dummy and they flew right over the field so we could get a good picture of what it looked like coming out of the door and how beautifully it'd float to the ground," Wilson said.

At that time, Wilson said, the parachutes had a quick-release mechanism, and the jumpmaster in the plane that day unknowingly turned it as he pushed the dummy out the door.

"So we're all standing there with the plane flying 200 feet above us, and the parachute opens beautifully," Wilson said. "Then the dummy lands about 40 feet out in front of us.

Charlie Butler

Parachute Test Platoon member John A. Ward pins on a student's airborne wings at a graduation ceremony June 16.

"You could hear a pin drop," he said. "I imagine that's what was running through this young man's mind when he stood in the door that first time," Wilson said.

Wilson said he was not worried, himself.

"They told me there was not too much to worry about, because if the chute doesn't open you only have eight seconds and you're gone. So I only had to worry for eight seconds," Wilson said.

Wilson made 230 static-line jumps during his career, "and," he said, "I busted my fanny exactly 230 times."

"But just as long as I was a paratrooper, I wanted to jump," Wilson said.

That the paratrooper spirit still burns strong in this group is evidenced by the fact that Ward, the oldest of the paratroopers, made a jump at Fort Bragg, N.C., on his 75th birthday, and has vowed to make one more when he turns 100.

More than 50 years later, it seems, there are members of the Parachute Test Platoon who are still jumping.

Proposal will allow civilians to use sick leave for family

By Evelyn D. Harris
American Forces Information Service

Federal employees facing the dilemma of caring for a sick family member should soon have a more "family friendly" policy to meet their needs. The Office of Personnel Management proposes allowing employees to use sick leave to care for certain family members who are ill or to attend their funerals.

The proposed regulation will allow employees to use up to five days of sick leave each year to care for a sick child, spouse or parent. Or employees may use sick leave to arrange for and attend the funeral of one of those family members.

Federal employees earn 13 days of sick leave annually. On average, they use eight. The amount of sick leave an employee may use in any one year under this regulation is limited to ensure employees have adequate sick leave to meet their own needs as well as their families' needs.

The same proposal will allow an employee's sick leave to be recredited after a break in service of any length. Currently, sick leave cannot be recredited after a break of more than three years.

The regulations are in the May 11 Federal Register. An OPM spokesperson said barring opposition, the agency will issue final regulations soon after the 60-day comment period. Until then, current policy remains in effect.

IRS clarifies moving tax

Army News Service

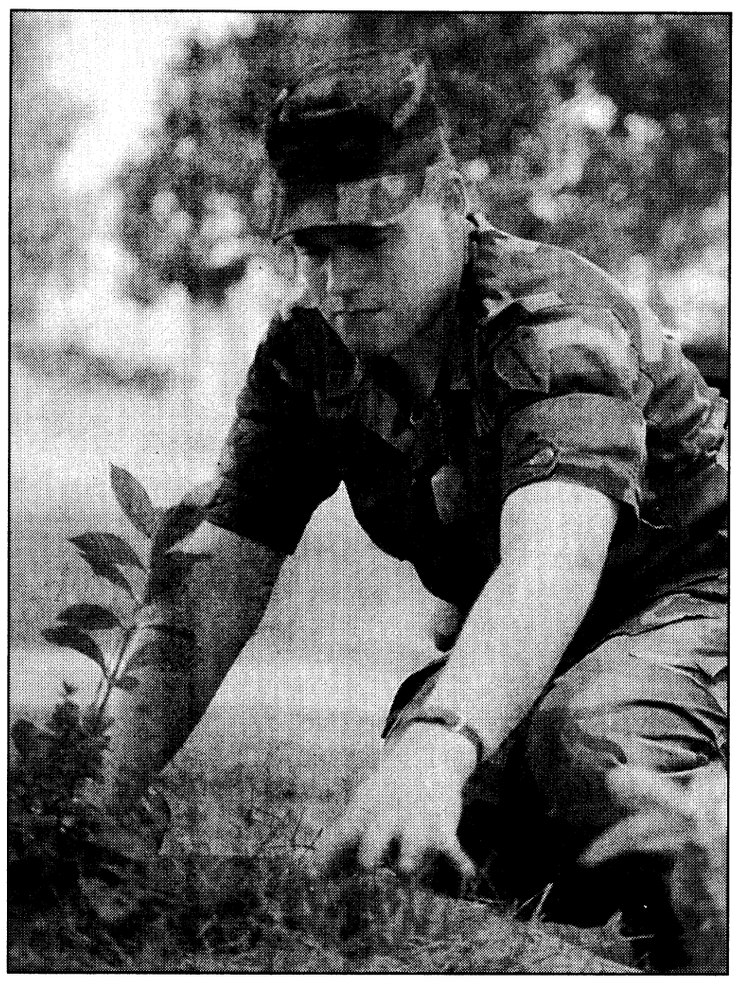
WASHINGTON — The Internal Revenue Service is clarifying policy on the latest tax law on reimbursements for service members' moving expenses.

Under the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1993, relocation allowances became taxable. At first, the IRS applied the law to everyone — military and civilian. The result would tax the temporary lodging expense and temporary lodging allowance, which hadn't been targeted before. Then the IRS announced that the tax change wasn't intended for the military after all.

The reasoning refers to the basic allowances for quarters and subsistence, said Lt. Col. Patricia Clark, chief of the compensation and entitlements branch, Office of the Deputy Chief of Staff for Personnel.

"BAQ and BAS are currently not taxable," Clark said. "And since TLE and TLA are paid to reimburse the soldier for lodging and subsistence" during a move, "these two are just extensions of already-nontaxable entitlement.

"So they're not overruling the legislation," she explained. "They're just using another paragraph within the tax law that already said that BAQ and BAS were nontaxable, then making a leap to the TLE and TLA."



Army officials expect the IRS to follow up with more details on moving allowances, after further study.

Meanwhile, military officials are pleased with the change in interpretation.

"This is a good-news story, in that we believe the IRS is attempting to help the military," Clark said.

"The act had the potential of creating serious problems for up to 800,000 military personnel," said Defense Secretary William Perry. This announcement "resolves the dilemma we confronted concerning these allowances. The financial cloud over the head of our military personnel has been removed."

For more information on IRS rules as they develop, contact an attorney with the Legal Assistance Division at the Office of the Staff Judge Advocate at 545-3281 or an Army Community Service financial counselor.

Selection board to be conducted Aug. 2

Adjutant General's Office

A Department of the Army selective continuation board for Army majors on the active duty list will be conducted on or about Aug. 2.

• Will be retirement eligible as determined by the secretary of the Army (have 15 or more years active federal service as of the date of discharge or release from active duty).

• Have at least eight years active federal commissioned service.

• Do not have an approved voluntary or mandatory retirement date prior to Sept. 1, 1995.

Officers who are fully qualified in one of the following branch or functional area specialties will be selectively continued until eligible for retirement at 20 years of qualifying service: 18, 21, 35, 48B, 48C, 48D, 48E, 48G, 48H, 48I, 48J, 74 and 88.

If you are being considered by this board, taking this option will allow a retirement date as late as Aug. 1, 1995, (or upon achieving 20 years of qualifying service, whichever is earlier). If you do not opt for early retirement, continuation, and are not selected for continuation, you will be involuntarily retired or separated on March 1, 1995.

For more information on early retirement, contact the Retirement Services Office at 545-2715 or the Strength Management Division at 545-1415.

Automated housing info may end PCS woes

Army News Service

WASHINGTON — Finding a new place to live may be high on a soldier's anxiety list when duty calls to a change of station. But now an expanded housing service is available to help put some of those permanent change of station move worries to rest.

The Housing Relocation Assistance Program is on line at 120 installations worldwide to provide answers to families seeking to buy or rent a home at a new location.

Soldiers can find those answers at the local Community Homefinding, Relocation and Referral Services office under the two components of the HRAP: PCSHOUSE Express and the Home Purchase Estimate Program.

PCSHOUSE Express contains on- and off-post housing information, such as median prices for homes and rents, housing allowance information and government quarters availability.

Handy, useful facts about the installations and their surrounding communities is also accessible with the touch of a button.

The Home Purchase Estimate Program enables soldiers, working with relocation counselors, to determine whether home ownership is an option.

Based on a soldier's personal financial information, the program can estimate the loan amount for which a soldier can qualify. Counselors can also help educate first-time home buyers on home-purchase procedures and explain types of loans that are available.

For more information on the HRAP, property management or other relocation services, contact your local Community Homefinding, Relocation and Referral Services office.

New buyout legislation changes how program works

By Evelyn D. Harris
American Forces Information Service

New legislation extending buyouts to nonDoD employees also changes the rules for Department of Defense employees. DoD civilian personnel officials said they'll offer recent buyout takers a chance to reconsider.

The legislation President Bill Clinton signed March 30 requires employees who have taken a buyout to wait five years before taking another federal job. Under original DoD rules, employees had to wait only a year before taking a job with DoD and could take a job with a nonDefense agency immediately.

Employees who wish to return to federal employment within five years must repay the entire incentive or get waivers from the Office of Personnel Management. Agencies may ask for such waivers if an applicant is the only suitable candidate for the job. In a tight job market, few people should count on getting such a waiver, say officials.

DoD's civilian personnel service is asking local personnel officials to track down employees who took buyouts after March 30 to notify them of the new prohibitions and ask if they want to reconsider. DoD employees who took buyouts before March 30 are not affected.

Buyouts are worth the amount of the employee's severance pay or $25,000, whichever is less. But after taxes and deductions, a typical employee gets about $17,000. However, employees who change their minds must pay back the entire buyout and apply to the Internal Revenue Service for refunds.

The new rule will also make buyouts more expensive for DoD agencies. For each Civil Service Retirement System employee who takes a buyout or a voluntary early retirement, agencies must reimburse the pension fund 9 percent of the employee's final basic pay. In addition, beginning Oct. 1 through Sept. 30, 1998, agencies must also pay $80 yearly into the federal pension fund for every employee on the agency rolls.

DoD officials said these new requirements will add $300 million to the cost of DoD buyouts over the next five years. Many agencies may decide the new costs make buyouts too expensive, said officials. Therefore, more agencies may have to resort to reductions in force to downsize.

DoD officials said about 32,000 civilians took buyouts in fiscal 1993. They expect some 18,000 to take them in fiscal 1994.

But defense agencies are already issuing reduction in force notices. More than 1,500 Navy shipyard employees have received notices.

About 5,000 Defense Logistics Agency employees have taken buyouts since January 1993, limiting RIFs. Still, the agency has issued 444 RIF notices this year.

Georgia to computerize filing of birth certificates

Ga. Department of Human Resources

Computers are revolutionizing the way Georgia welcomes its newborn citizens.

The Vital Records Unit of the Georgia Department of Human Resources has begun installing new electronic birth certificate software in hospitals throughout the state.

"EBC not only shortens the process of preparing a birth certificate, it's also simpler and more accurate than using a typewriter," according to Mike Lavoie, vital records director.

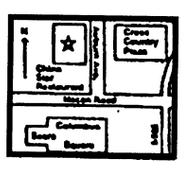
Without EBC, the hospital staff has to type each birth certificate, and vital records staff keypunch data from the certificate into their computer, which checks for errors.

Lavoie says that with EBC it takes only a few days to prepare a birth certificate, instead of several weeks.

The public uses birth certificates mainly to establish identity, but the form the hospital fills out includes a section of medical information for government epidemiologists who are studying why some babies are born healthier than others. The results are used to guide public health programs aimed at reducing infant mortality and disability.

The medical data includes complications of the pregnancy and birth; the mother's risk factors, if any, such as drinking, smoking or diabetes; the method of delivery; and whether the mother had prenatal care. Vital records sends this information to Georgia's Center for Health Statistics and to the National Center For Health Statistics, which contracts with vital records for the data collection.

Installation and maintenance of the EBC system at hospitals is paid for by vital records through this contract; no new funding was required.



Copies of birth certificates can also be obtained from the vital records custodian in each county, either at the probate court or health department, depending on the county.

43rd soldiers improve living areas

Beautification, renovations taking shape

By Denise Howell
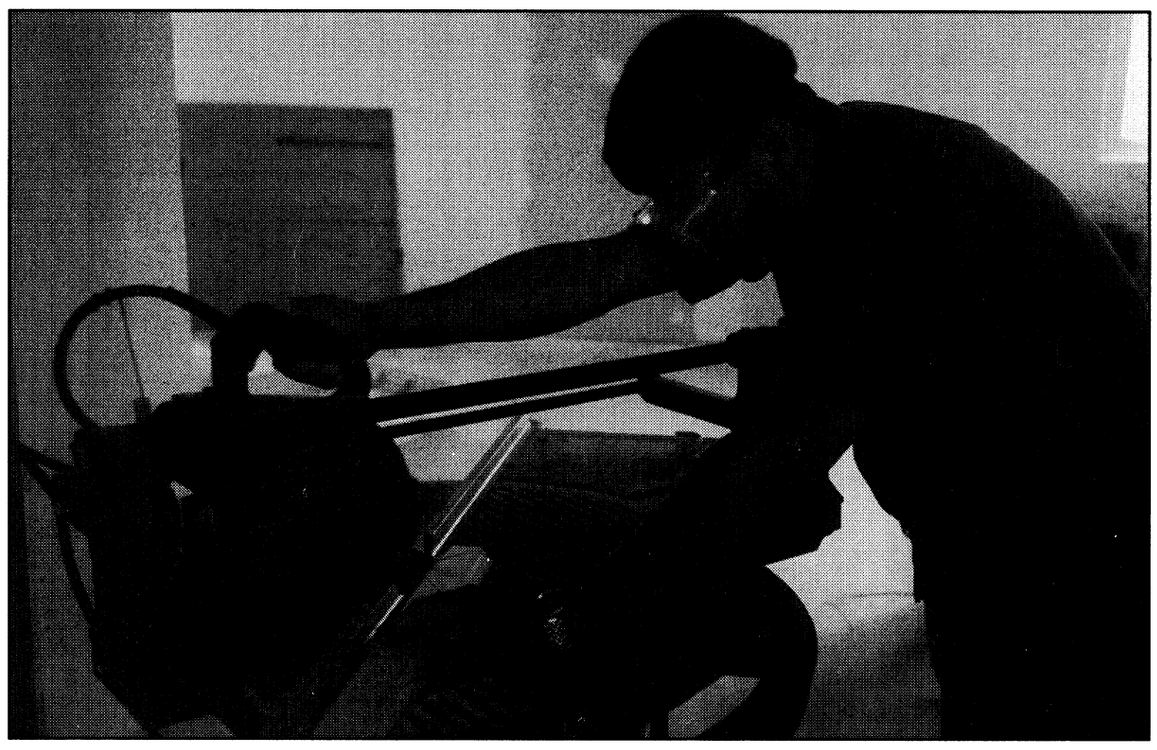
36th Engineer Group



As the 43rd Engineer Combat Battalion (Heavy) prepares to inactivate, its soldiers continue to leave their mark through participation in single soldier living community projects on South Main Post.

According to 36th Engineer Group Command Sgt. Maj. James Gardner, the Community Action Plans include a U-Do-It ceiling and floor covering and dayroom beautification project which is just beginning to take shape.

As part of this U-Do-It project, soldiers from the 43rd are renovating the dayrooms of Buildings 2807, 2808, 2809 and 2810 in the 36th Engineer Group billeting area on South Main Post, according to Sgt. Alvin Hubbard, project manager for the dayroom in Building 2810.

Renovations include construction of game rooms and television lounges.

"We installed new electrical systems, moved lights and electric sockets. We moved switches, added walls ... you name it, we did it," Hubbard said.

Individual booths for public pay telephones have been installed, as well as ceiling fans to cool the areas. Floors are being retiled and the walls repapered.

The projected completion date for the dayrooms' beautification is Thursday, Hubbard said.

Other community action plans in the works include implementation of longer gymnasium hours at the Audie Murphy Gym, increased parking areas, to include bicycles and motorcycles and lower prices and longer hours at the Sightseeing Road Shoppette.

Upon completion of these plans, the group will have a new look and will provide single soldiers with a more comfortable living area.

Supervision of children is essential

By Karen S. Morarie
Bayonet staff writer

Summer vacation has arrived for Fort Benning schoolchildren, and some parents may be searching for solutions to the child-care dilemma. If you are considering leaving your children home alone, post regulations say one thing — don't.

U.S. Army Infantry Center Regulation 210-5, paragraph 53g, mandates that children less than 12 years of age "will not be left unattended in government quarters." If they are, parents will be charged with child neglect.

Becky Welch, Family Advocacy Program manager, said parents often run into difficulties because they don't understand the regulations governing child supervision.

"Our (FAP's) regulations state that a finding of neglect is appropriate in any situation where a children is unattended, or attended by a child under the age of 12," Welch said. This regulation covers not just government quarters, she said, but all circumstances.

"It's inappropriate to send young children out of view, for instance to a play area not within the parents' eyesight," she said. "Parents need to maintain eye-contact supervision, such as from a window, or they need to check on the children periodically."

Welch said that even if a child is visiting another child's house, the parent shouldn't assume supervision will be provided.

"They need to make sure an adult is at home and will be supervising the children," she said.

Welch said another common problem in child supervision is children left unattended in cars, especially while a parent runs a "quick errand."

"USAIC Regulation 210-5, paragraph 53f, states that children under age 8 will not be left unattended in vehicles under any circumstances," she said. "Even if it's only for a few minutes, and even if the air conditioner is running."

The danger in leaving a child unsupervised for even a brief period of time, Welch said, is that parents fail to realize a child can be abducted in "a matter of minutes."

"I strongly believe in the 'secret code' or 'password' ," Welch said. "This is a system in which the family has a secret word, so if there's an emergency and someone outside the family has to pick up a child, they can identify themselves with that word."

Welch said the important thing for parents to remember is that they are responsible for their children's supervision at all times.

CID on lookout for compensation fraud

Army News Service

WASHINGTON — Thinking about filing a fraudulent disability claim? If so, U.S. Army Criminal Investigation Command officials advise you to think again.

The CID is working hard to investigate and incarcerate federal workers who make false claims under the Federal Employees Compensation Act.

This is not a new area for CID, which recently recovered more than $50,000 in two investigations.

The Federal Employees Compensation Act is a Labor Department program that provides disability benefits to civilian employees who suffer injuries on the job. The program pays employees until they are able to return to work; however, fraudulent claims have surfaced.

For example, one former employee claimed neck and back injuries over a four-year period. During this time, he received more than $100,000 in benefits while, at the same time, concealed income he earned as a truck driver.

Normally, problems begin when claimants perform work they should not, or could not, do if their injury was valid. Other claimants continue receiving benefits long after their injuries have healed. That's when CID steps in.

"The FECA program manager for the Army directly requested the assistance of CID in identifying and investigating suspected cases of fraud," said Col. James Reisenweber, CID's deputy chief of staff for operations.

"What we do is a great benefit in ensuring that FECA funds are protected for those who deserve them."

As the Army budget continues to shrink, fraudulent worker's compensation claims will continue to receive more scrutiny by CID, officials said. Local CID offices expect to become even more involved with the program.

In October 1992, administration and payment of the FECA program became the responsibility of the post commander. Now, the funds for FECA come directly out of a post's operating budget.

The threat to their funds will have post commanders closely monitoring the claims made under the FECA program.

Survey shows singles want more privacy

Study recommends low-cost improvements

By Steve Barrett
American Forces Information Service

Single service members want more privacy and improved accommodations, according to a recent Department of Defense study on military first-termers.

The housing survey, included in DoD's Family Status and Initial Term of Service study, recommends each service consider a low-cost means of improving living conditions for its single members.

One option is merging family housing and troop billeting funds into the same appropriation. "This would guarantee money allocated to troop billets would get there," said Coast Guard Commander Stan Walz, special housing coordinator for the study. "Troop billets would not have to compete with other installation projects."

Currently, dormitory construction and upkeep funds are part of an installation's operations and maintenance budget. Commanders have to decide where each dollar is spent and must allocate funds to support not only billeting but office operations and training facilities as well.

The family housing budget is limited to housing issues. Money allocated to housing construction and repair can't be spent on any other project. Placing troop billets in the same category as family housing, Walz said, puts the importance of single service member housing on the same level as family housing.

Service requirements differ, but most require single first-termers live either in on-post, government dormitories or aboard ship. Some members find themselves housed in quite unattractive dorms, according to the study, especially service members in multioccupant rooms and open bays.

The study group recommends steps to enhance morale and provide privacy for first-termers. These include one- and two-member rooms, improved furniture and appliances and reduced billet inspections.

Morale boosters include reducing barracks duty and creating a dormitory exit policy, which would permit single service members to live off post if they choose.

These ideas are not new. At least one program already incorporates them. During the past three years, unmarried soldiers in U.S. Army, Europe, have benefited from the Single Soldier Initiative program.

Dormitories run by housing managers have replaced company-level barracks. No first sergeants or dorm managers run the barracks halls looking for detail troops, nor are there rigid room requirements or daily inspections.

However, not all services can respond this quickly to first-termer's housing needs. Navy, Coast Guard and Marine Corps personnel on board ship have limited space to live in, and Walz said single personnel in pay grade E-6 and below assigned to sea duty are not entitled to basic allowance for quarters or variable housing allowance. Therefore, these members must live aboard ship, even when their ship is in port. The sea services are, however, looking at options to improve shipboard living.

Last August, Defense Secretary Les Aspin ordered the study to learn initially how first-term family problems affect readiness. The study showed no relationship between readiness and members in their first terms, but did recommend changes that would provide better support services to first-term families.

While most of the study concentrated on family issues, study panel members also listened to concerns voiced by single members.

"We've got to look at both sides of the housing issue — both single members and married," said Walz. "We've got to find ways to provide better privacy and benefits for our single members as well."

House rejects bill to end Selective Service registration

Selective Service System

WASHINGTON — Responding to a recent decision by the president, the U.S. House of Representatives voted May 23 to continue the requirement for all men to register with Selective Service upon reaching age 18.

The members considered a proposed amendment to the Defense Authorization Bill, H.R. 4301, that would have ended registration. The amendment was rejected 125 to 273.

Five days before the vote, President Bill Clinton notified Congress that continuing draft registration and providing funding to operate the Selective Service System is "essential to our national security."

In letters to the leadership of the House and Senate May 18, the president based his decision on a recently completed review of the program by a National Security Council working group. He concluded that the Selective Service System and peacetime registration must be retained as a prudent military preparedness measure in an uncertain world, as a link between American society and the volunteer military, and as a symbol of national resolve.

Although there has been no need to draft men for military service during the past 21 years, the nation has maintained the capability to reinstate a draft in a major crisis. Since July 1980, draft registration has been an obligation of virtually every man, ages 18 through 25.

Federal law requires that every man must register within 30 days of his 18th birthday. Each man completes a short form to provide Selective Service with his name, date of birth, address, phone number and Social Security number.

Registration forms are available at any post office. Most men also receive a registration reminder in the mail a few months before reaching age 18, and they may use it to register by return mail.

Men who don't register are in violation of federal law. Nonregistrants can be prosecuted, and they are ineligible for federal student financial aid, most federal jobs and job training. The law applies to male immigrant aliens, 18 through 25 years old, as well as male citizens.

For more information, call the Selective Service System at (708) 688-6888.

Muscles rip during 'best body' competition

By Terry K. Ray
Special to The Bayonet©

Biceps, triceps, abdominals and pectorals. Ripped or shredded. Put them all together and what do you get? The 11th annual Mr. and Ms. Fort Benning Bodybuilding competition Saturday night at the Main Post NCO Club.

Before a packed house, 28 bodybuilders, 19 men and nine women, hit the stage for the right to become Mr. and Ms. Fort Benning, and that's exactly what happened. This year's winners happen to be husband and wife.

Jeff and Becky McCarrell teamed up to win not only the crowns of Mr. and Ms. Fort Benning, but they also won their individual weight classes along with the overall award in the open division.

In only their second competition since they began training, the McCarrells said they have accomplished more than they ever expected. This time last year, the McCarrells decided to start training for this year's competition.

McCarrell, a sergeant with Headquarters Services Company, Infantry Training Brigade, and his wife began training and dieting in earnest six months ago, right after the holidays, with the Fort Benning competition set as their goal.

"We had planned only to participate in the Fort Benning competition, but we had progressed so far so fast, we entered into the Eastern Seaboard competition in Atlanta," said McCarrell. "We finished second as a couple, I finished third in the light heavyweight and Becky finished fourth in a national competition, which was far better than we expected.

"My company commander and first sergeant deserve a lot of the credit for this win," he continued. "If they had not given me the time to train every morning, I don't think I would have won. It really meant a lot."

Ms. Fort Benning said she hopes to defend her crown next year, even though her husband will be in Korea.

"This was probably the best competition that Fort Benning has put on in the last few years," she said. "I hope to be in attendance next year."

The judges seemed to be in agreement when it came to making a decision. By sweeping all their categories, the McCarrells became the first husband-and-wife team to win the crown hands down.

"When judging a competition, judges look for the total package," said Nate Williams, who has been a bodybuilder for 13 years and a judge for the past four. "A competitor must have overall symmetry — his arms have to match his legs, his legs should match his upper body.

"The next thing a judge looks for is stripped body fat or what bodybuilders call a ripped effect," said Williams. "The final grouping we look for is muscularity. If you don't have the total package, you will have a hard time winning."

Williams added that posing also comes into play.

"If a competitor doesn't have confidence in his posing ability, it will show," he said. "A good judge can tell when a poser gets mixed up with his poses or holds a pose too long."

Following are the top three finishers in each weight class.

Softball teams take game

DOWNTOWN

By Terry K. Ray
Special to The Bayonet©

Fort Benning softball has moved into Columbus. A few post teams have taken the game downtown to Benning Park two nights a week.

The Max Camouflage and U.S. Cavalry are two teams comprised of military personnel who have taken their game to the parks downtown.

Monday night, Camouflage took on St. Francis Hospital and U.S. Cavalry went up against Columbus Tire Company in the nightcap.

Camouflage vs. St Francis

Camouflage overcame an early 2-0 deficit in the first inning with three runs in the bottom half of the inning. The big hit, a two-run triple, came off the bat of designated hitter Donald Payton to tie the game at 2. One out later, first baseman Arturo Haywood doubled to centerfield, driving home Payton from third for the third run of the inning.

A bases-loaded error on Camouflage shortstop Terrill Wallace in the top of the second allowed St. Francis to tie the game at 3. The Camouflage defense held tough the rest of the inning, giving up just the one run.

In the bottom of the second, Camouflage broke out the lumber, scoring six times to go up 9-3. With two out, the Camouflage offense put together four hits along with two walks and an error on the defense to claim the lead for good. A two-run double by Haywood to right field capped the rally.

St. Francis chipped away for its final two runs in the third inning with two hits and an error on the Camouflage defense, cutting the lead to 9-5.

In the bottom of the fourth inning, Camouflage erupted with six more runs. A two-run inside-the-park home run off the bat of left centerfielder Noah McClinton and a two-run double by catcher Hans Smith put Camouflage up 15-5.

Camouflage added three more runs in the bottom of the fifth inning, with McClinton doing the damage with a two-run double to right field for the 18-5 cushion, which was the final score.

U.S. Cavalry vs. Columbus Tire

The U.S. Cavalry ran roughshod over the hapless boys from Columbus Tire Co., scoring runs in every inning by every means imaginable.

In the bottom of the first inning, U.S. Cavalry jumped to a 4-0 lead on three base hits and two fly ball outs.

In the bottom half of the second, U.S. Cavalry nudged the lead to 8-0 on a three-run double from right centerfielder Chad Lauderdale. Two errors on the Columbus Tire defense allowed Lauderdale to score.

A two-run homer off the bat of second baseman Marshall Johnson pushed the lead to 10-0 for U.S. Cavalry in the bottom of the third inning.

Columbus tire dented the scoreboard with its only run of the night in the top of the fourth inning, when centerfielder Anthony Young scored on second baseman Dan Snavely's single to left.

In the bottom half of the fourth inning, U.S. Cavalry rode once more into the breach coming up with five runs for a 15-1 advantage. An RBI single from pitcher Jimmie Armstrong, and RBI doubles from rightfielder Johnny Huddleston and left centerfielder John Frazier, along with a two-run fly ball out by D.H. Thomas McCall gave the Cavalry an insurmountable lead.

In the bottom of the fifth, the Cavalry added insult to injury with seven more runs.

Two two-run homers, one by Huddleston that cleared the right centerfield fence and another off the bat of first baseman John Rodney that sailed over the left field wall, made the final scores of the night and a 22-1 win.

U.S. Cavalry won its final game of the season from Durco Industrial Supply Company, 11-7 Wednesday night to finish the season 18-0.

Bass fishing: Adding beads can improve the Carolina rig

By Earl Bentz and Steve Price
Outboard Marine Corporation

commentary

The famous Carolina rig, with its heavy weight, swivel and leader, has a well-deserved reputation as one of the most efficient fish-finding and fish-catching systems used today by bass anglers.

Some, however, may soon start calling it the "bead rig."

"Adding beads to a Carolina rig can actually improve its overall effectiveness several ways," explains Mickey Bruce of the Evinrude Outboards Pro Staff.

The most common place to put a bead on a Carolina rig is between the heavy slip sinker and the swivel. Each time the sinker slides down the line to hit the bead, it produces a click that may help attract bass.

"Sometimes we even put two beads on the line right below the sinker," says Bruce, "because it adds even more noise. Each time you work the lure, the beads and sinker slide up and down the line and click into each other.

"Noise like this is just another factor we use to try to get bass to look at the lure a little longer, and I think most of the bass tournament pros agree it works."

When he's fishing the Carolina rig in heavy grass or other vegetation, the pro frequently adds another bead in front of the sinker, and still another down on his leader in front of his plastic lizard.

"The reason for those beads is that they help the rig come through the vegetation without snagging."

Try these tricks for inactive bass

By Earl Bentz and Steve Price
Outboard Marine Corporation

commentary

It's that time of year when bass fishing can easily be boom or bust — when fish are active one day and totally inactive the next — but even when bass are inactive they can still be caught.

"The most common conditions that seem to make bass become inactive are sudden weather changes such as cold fronts, rapidly changing water conditions, and heavy fishing pressure from the anglers," explains former biologist Ken Cook of the Evinrude Outboards Pro Staff.

"When the fish do become inactive, you generally have to change your fishing techniques totally, but you can still catch the fish if you have the patience."

Inactive bass tend to move either into deeper water or into thicker, heavier cover, notes Cook, winner of the 1991 Bass Masters Classics.

When that happens, the two primary changes an angler must make are to use smaller lures and work them much more slowly.

"You have to get your lure closer to the actual location of the fish and then keep it there because the strike zone becomes much smaller," says Cook.

"Because it is generally easier to fish heavier cover than it is to fish deeper water, I change to smaller jigs, plastic worms or spinnerbaits, depending on the type of cover, and I try to put them right into the middle of the thickest cover I can find."

The Evinrude pro also changes his retrieve techniques when he encounters inactive fish, often shaking or rattling the lure in the cover itself to create added commotion.

"I used that technique to win the Classic," remembers Cook, "because I felt those bass were receiving a lot of pressure from other anglers. I was using a spinnerbait, and I'd reel it up to the cover I was working, then let it fall right beside that cover. At the same time, I'd actually shake my rod tip to give the spinnerbait an even more erratic action.

"I believe those fish may have been accustomed to seeing spinnerbaits, but not seeing a spinnerbait that acted the way mine did."

Most of the time, a more erratic retrieve, even though it may be slower, draws more strikes than a normal retrieve.

"Inactive bass do not chase lures," continues Cook, "but if you down-size your lure, you're not as likely to spook a bass. I think in some instances that larger, faster lures may actually cause bass to move away from them rather than toward them."

CREATIVE ARTS

Students sharpen skills at storytelling, improvisation

Local artist helps students develop abilities

By Jerrie Macintire

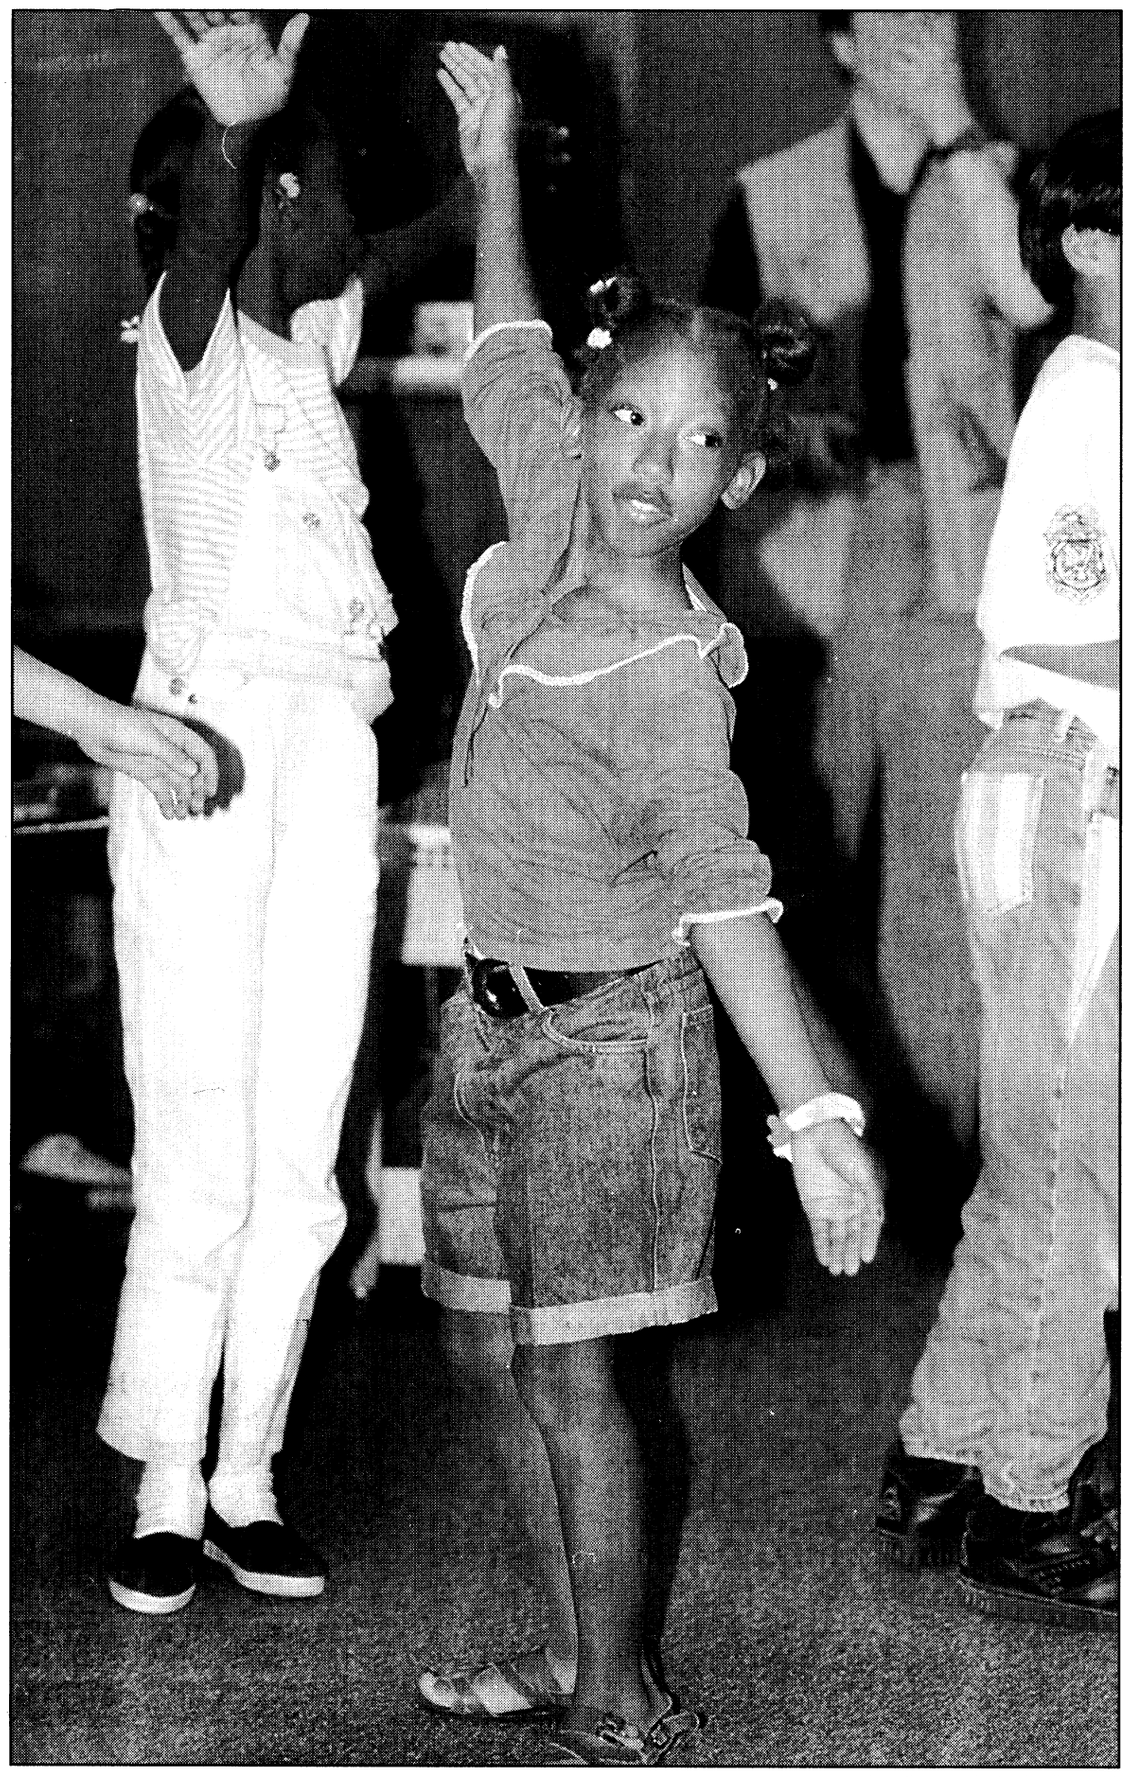
As part of Stowers School's ongoing artist-in-residence program, local writer and performer Phillip Rodgers has been helping students develop the creative arts of storytelling and basic improvisation.

Rodgers, a performing artist known for his skills as a mimic, has worked with each class the final two weeks of school in establishing basic skills in improvisation, a theatrical art of performing without preparation.

An award-winning copywriter and voice-over artist, Rodgers taught basic improvisation techniques such as establishing a subject, a setting and an event.

"When you are improvising, you want to make things vivid for people. One of the keys is attention to detail," he said.



By using body language, facial expression and a few chosen words, Rodgers helped the students learn to establish the environment without telling an audience the exact setting.

"You have to make things up from the air around you," he encouraged as he demonstrated the creative art of pretending. While seated in thin air, Rodgers pretended to admire a lovely table setting, felt the linen table cloth, then opened a heavily bound menu.

The students quickly guessed the setting — an elegant restaurant.

His workshops featured complete participation from students eager to try a little pretending themselves.

Since there were no right or wrong ways of improvising, all students could contribute to this creative art form without fear of making a mistake, said Gail Wilson, principal.

Former Loyd principal to be new superintendent

Fort Benning Schools

The former principal of Fort Benning's Loyd School is the new superintendent of schools.

Karr

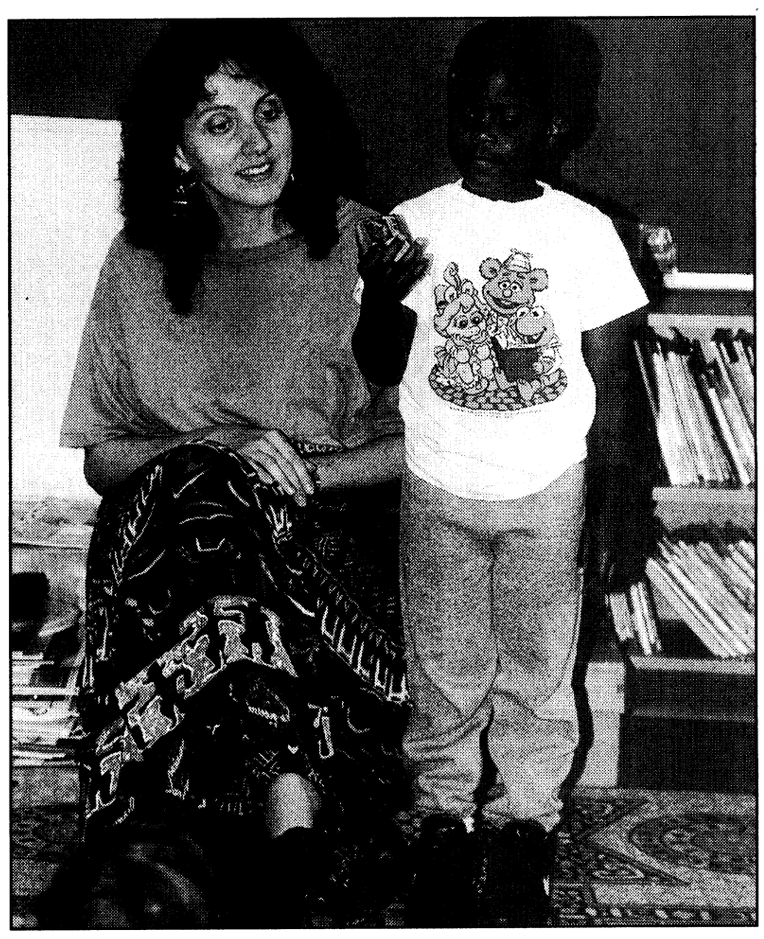
Dr. Dell Karr will assume the superintendency Aug. 1, upon retirement of Dr. Rolla Baumgartner, who has served as Fort Benning Schools' superintendent for the last 11 years.

Karr, who currently serves as Fort Benning's assistant superintendent for curriculum, brings 20 years of experience in education to her new assignment.



She has previously served as principal of Fort Benning's Loyd School, assistant principal at Muscogee County's Blanchard School, coordinator of the Health Improvement Program for the Muscogee County Schools and as an elementary teacher of mathematics, science and physical education in the Muscogee County Schools.

Karr serves on the Board of Directors of the Concharty Council of Girl Scouts and the Muscogee County Heart Association. She was a member of the 1993 Leadership Columbus class and was recognized as Girl Scout's Woman of Achievement in 1993. During the 1993-1994 school year she served as chairwoman of activities for Youth Leadership Columbus.

Baumgartner's retirement marks the end of 27 years of service to military children and their families.

Baumgartner came to Fort Benning after serving eight years as superintendent of schools at the U.S. Military Academy at West Point, N.Y. Before that, he was an administrator with the Department of Defense Schools overseas.

Baumgartner and his wife, Liliane, will be relocating this summer to his home town of Niles, Mich.

Dental health

Post's top dentist visits Stowers

By Jerrie Macintire
Special to The Bayonet ©

As part of an ongoing program to bring dental-health information to Fort Benning students, Col. Richard Nurnberg, commander of the Fort Benning Dental Activity, visited Stowers School June 9 and encouraged regular dental exams, brushing and flossing.

"If you learn at (an early) age how to care for teeth, it will save you a lot of trips to the dentist," Nurnberg said as he visited classrooms.

Nurnberg emphasized the need for regular fluoride treatments and checkups.

Nurnberg also fielded questions from students on subjects from braces to fluoridated water.

While visiting students, Nurnberg presented awards to youngsters placing in a Georgia Dental Association poster contest sponsored by the Fort Benning Dental Activity.

Third-grader Valene Casares placed first in the postwide competition and took second place in the state competition for her creation.

Casares received a ribbon, a T-shirt, a certificate and a cash prize, as well as a packet of stationery featuring artwork from her winning entry.

Other winners included Leana Bagwell, second place in the post competition, and April Branscum, third place in the postwide competition.

The poster contest was aimed at heightening awareness of the need for good dental health.

Stowers students entertain some VIPs

By Denise Rogers
Special to The Bayonet

Stowers Elementary School celebrated its final Very Involved Parents program June 8 from 1:15 to 2 p.m.

This program was developed to allow parents the opportunity to share a day in the life of their child, hands-on during school time, so that the child could express and explain to the parent what classes entailed for them.

The program involved all grades, kindergarten through grade five.

"I really looked forward to my Mom or Dad coming to see me at school," said Keith Rogers, a kindergartner in Barbara Culwell's class. "I get to show them how I work on the computer."

"The students look forward to every VIP Wednesday," Culwell said.

At the celebration, there was a video played as the parents all gathered and socialized before things actually began. The guest speaker was Col. Gregory Camp, president of the Fort Benning School Board and Fort Benning chief of staff.

"Thank you very much, parents, for caring about our children and making VIP days a priority despite your busy lives, and making a difference in our children's lives," Camp said. "As we look forward to the summer, please keep the kids interested by a bit more reading and less television."

Camp then encouraged the parents of children and students everywhere to "stay involved."

The video was composed by Pam Palmer, the school media specialist. Acting as hostesses were third-grade teachers Amma Smith and Laura McDonough. Phyllis MacMurphy was in charge of the newly formed Stowers Singers, a group of third-, fourth- and fifth-graders who performed at the program and who have performed throughout post.

Gail Wilson, principal of Stowers Elementary, acted as mistress of ceremonies.

The last 15 minutes of the agenda was share time, a moment set aside for the children to show the other children some of their favorite possessions.

Keith Rogers showed the class his favorite comic card and Adam Elder pulled the string on his Steve Erckle doll as the class laughed to "Did I do that?," a common line from the character of the hit television show "Family Matters."

World of science moves beyond classroom

By Jerrie Macintire
Special to The Bayonet ©

The world of science moved beyond the classroom for Loyd School students and into a number of unconventional settings from dusty dinosaur digs to the craters of the moon.

As part of the school's sixth annual Discovery Day June 10, students explored science in a new way by examining natural wonders of the world while engaging in both physical and mental workouts.

"We want these children to see that science goes on all around them," said Cathy Joyner, kindergarten teacher and coordinator for the event.

The all-day event, featuring practical hands-on activities reflecting the way people use science in their daily lives, included a presentation on space, a birds of prey live exhibit, natural history programs, health lessons, a Native American session and military equipment displays.

All the sessions were designed to show "learning doesn't stop with school. Learning goes on all around us," Joyner said.

Dent Williams, local paleontologist, used science to help bring the past alive. Williams presented a natural history program focusing on a dinosaur dig site in Seale, Ala., and displayed the cast replica of a huge dinosaur bone found there.

The Boy Scouts of America also presented a program on Native American heritage and traditions, which demonstrated how the past is still relevant today, according to Judy Gilliam, principal of the school.

Demonstrating that science has ties with future as well as the past, Ernest and Dutchie Riggsby of Columbus College discussed the space program and displayed rare moon rocks. As a momento of the day, the Riggsbys distributed samples of local rocks.

The imaginations of students also took flight on the wings of eagles and bats. New to Discovery Day this year, the bat presentation from Season Platt, Callaway Gardens naturalist, was timely for students, who have observed natural science in action this year as local bats made their homes in special boxes around Loyd School, said Gilliam.

Steve Hoddy presented a different program on creatures of flight in his live Birds of Prey Show. Hoddy discussed the habitat, anatomy and lifestyles of birds such as owls, falcons, eagles and hawks.

Meanwhile, the military science portion of Discovery Day featured the Army's version of a hawk -- the Blackhawk helicopter. In addition to the helicopter, various military vehicles and equipment were available for children to explore.

Horticulturist Ron Litz presented a session on the science of plants, and even the unlikely medium of soap bubbles had a place in Discovery Day as mathematicians showed children how to blow bubbles the scientific way -- in geometric shapes.

"We hit as many scientific disciplines as we can," said Gilliam.

Those disciplines included sessions on health and fitness, with students receiving information on physical health from the American Lung Association while participating in fitness exercises.

The Bradley Library's Bookmobile was available to help interested student further explore the science of daily life as well as other subjects of interest.

Students concluded the day with the annual science bowl competition and the display of school posters created for the event.

DARE: Teens learn coping skills

By Jerrie Macintire
Special to The Bayonet ©

The second-semester Drug Abuse Resistance Education graduation at Faith Middle School June 9 focused on effective methods of handling the pressures that teen-agers face when making important life choices.

When faced with a difficult decision, such as whether to bow to peer pressure and try drugs, speakers encouraged the 121 sixth-grade DARE graduates to remember the DARE training that emphasized coping skills and positive ways to resist coercion.

"If you use the skills that you have learned, DARE may be the most important thing you learned in the sixth grade," said featured speaker Rolla Baumgartner, outgoing superintendent of Fort Benning Schools.

Illegal drugs represent the "greatest enemy our country faces," Baumgartner said.

Not only does drug abuse hurt society as a whole, but each individual must pay a price as the cost of battling this massive problem continues, Baumgartner added.

In addition to posing a financial burden, drug abuse also carries a heavy personal cost.

"Drugs don't hurt just us; what harms us harms those who love us," Baumgartner said.

DARE provides students with the necessary skills to resist peer pressure and maintain a healthy body and mind, according to Capt. Walter Jackson, DARE project coordinator.

The DARE training is effective at all age levels, and workbooks help students organize thoughts while contemplating effective methods of resisting drugs and alcohol, Jackson added.

Student winners in the DARE essay contest also discussed the effectiveness of prearranged strategy when faced with difficult life decisions such as an offer of drugs.

"DARE is one of the most important subjects I have learned," said Rachel Strait.

Echoing this sentiment, Raynard Charfauros declared the DARE training had taught students how to respond when faced with a hard choice.

"Always look out for yourself," he told the assembled students.

Tierra Ward spoke on the high emotional cost of drug abuse. "My enemies are destroying my peers and my elders. I declare war against my enemy — drugs," she said.

Julia Young spoke on the need to set a good example for her younger brother, while Melissa Reyes discussed eight different ways to say "no."

Co-sponsored by the Military Police Activity and Faith Middle School, the DARE training program focuses on teaching coping skills needed to manage the pressures that can lead to alcohol, tobacco and drug experimentation.

The DARE program features a positive approach to drug abuse education by providing accurate information, training in resistance techniques, and providing ideas for alternatives to drug abuse.

AAFES popcorn low in fat

Army News Service

DALLAS — Military popcorn lovers everywhere can relax.

Despite recent reports of movie popcorn rivaling a "Big Mac" in fat content, Army and Air Force Exchange Service popcorn is actually low in saturated fat. The difference is in the popping oil.

Many off-base establishments pop with coconut oil, which is high in saturated fat. But AAFES doesn't.

Officials said AAFES uses a popping recipe that calls for a 4-1 ratio of corn to oil. This is less than the 3-1 ration the industry recommends. Three cups of AAFES popcorn has 130 calories. While 45 percent of the calories come from fat, only one gram comes from saturated fat.

Dogs threaten mail carriers

By Stephanie Krawczyk
Special to The Bayonet©

Fort Benning postal carriers have been encountering an increasing danger while making their rounds on post in recent months.

Since January, there have been four incidents of carriers being attacked by dogs while attempting to make mail deliveries.

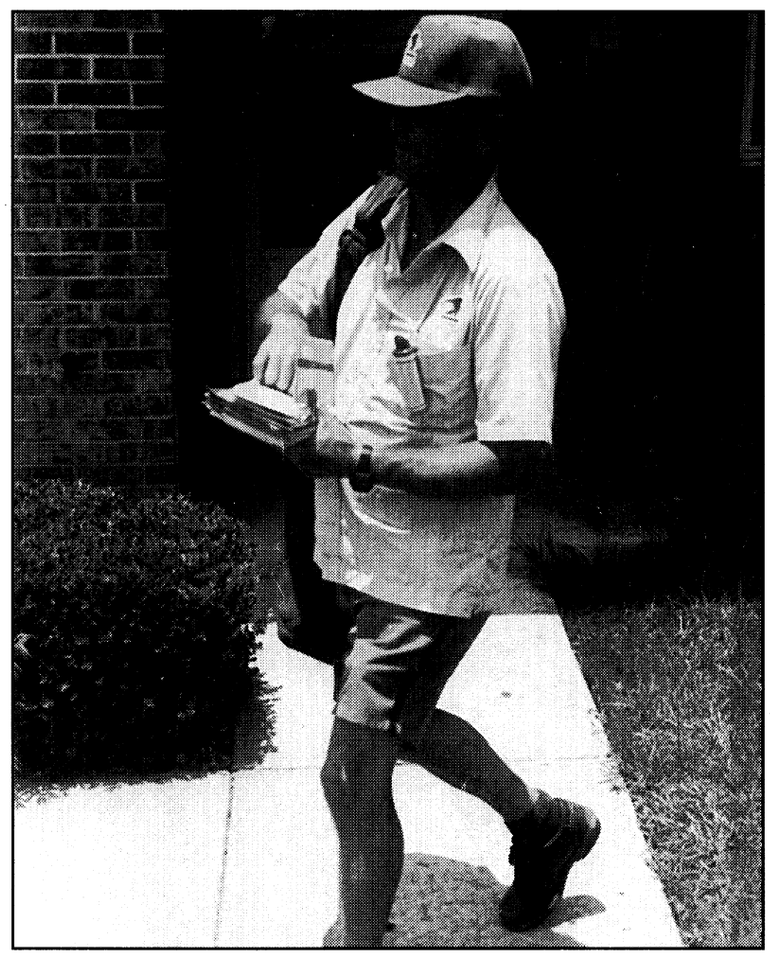
According to postal regulations, carriers are not required to deliver mail to a house where dogs or other animals interfere.

"Right now we've got carriers in the defense mode when they go through certain areas on post," said Denise Holguin, the supervisor of customer service for the Fort Benning area.

With more than 4,000 deliveries made daily on Fort Benning, postal workers can't make individual judgments as to the friendliness of each dog they encounter, according to Holguin.

"The 10 carriers serving the Fort Benning area can't keep track of the location and disposition of each animal," she said. "The bottom line is we want to be able to provide the best possible service to the residents of Fort Benning, but we want to keep our carriers safe."

Mail carriers who feel threatened by a situation are required by postal regulations not to attempt to make a delivery. This includes trying to judge whether a leash is long enough to reach a mailbox or whether a dog can push through a screen door.



Also, if there is a loose dog near a group of quarters, not only the owner, but the entire area could have their mail delayed.

Post regulations require pet owners to keep their animals secured outside their quarters or indoors when unsupervised.

Staff Sgt. Cris Cox of the U.S. Army Infantry Center Military Police Company counts animal control as one of his many responsibilities.

"With any animal bite that occurs on post, it is mandatory that the person go to the emergency room and the animal be impounded to Vet Services," he said. He added that the animal will be examined, checked for rabies and quarantined.

Pet owners who do not control their pets responsibly will be required to remove the animal from post and may be prohibited from future ownership of pets on the installation, officials said.

Entertainer Steve Wariner is one of three artists scheduled to perform at the country music jamboree July 16 at 3:30 p.m. at Doughboy Stadium.

Performers Deborah Allen and Daron Norwood will join Wariner for the Fort Benning concert, which is expected to draw numerous fans, according to Brian Smith of the Directorate of Community Activities.

Admission with a Fort Benning military or civilian identification card is $4; $2 for Infantry Training Brigade soldiers; $6 for the general public, and children 6 years and under will be admitted free with a paid adult ticket. Advance tickets are available at any post club, either post bowling center, or at the Information, Ticketing and Reservation Office, Building 247. Off post, advance tickets are available at all BP Quick Cash locations.

A disc jockey from local country music radio station, Kissin 99.3, will emcee the concert and introduce the featured musicians.

With more than 10 No. 1 country hits to his credit, Wariner is considered a celebrated country musician.

Also featured will be Southern musicians Allen and Norwood.

Allen, a songwriter from Nashville, enjoyed success with her first major release, "Delta Dream Land." A Tennessean by heritage, Allen is noted for her style, which combines elements of soul and country music.

Her single, "Baby, I Lied," was one of the top five country hits in 1984 and was nominated for a Grammy award.

Atlanta musician Daron Norwood will round out the concert with his blend of charismatic entertainment, Smith said.

The son of a Baptist evangelist, Norwood has performed his entire life and has long held the major goal of performing as a country music artist.

A noted pianist and vocalist, he has just released "If It Wasn't for Her."

The Fort Benning Officers' Club will be selling food and drink; no cans, bottles or picnic items may be brought into the stadium.

JROTC COMES TO A DIFFERENT KIND OF # SUMMER CAMP

By Karen S. Morarie
Bayonet staff writer

The look was military, but the feel was something very different. Despite uniform and boots, canteens and (sort of ) drill and ceremony, the Army Junior ROTC summer camp that took place at Fort Benning June 12 through Saturday had the feel of ... well, a summer camp.

About 300 teen-agers, in the familiar brown, black and green Army camouflage, climbed over obstacles, rappelled from towers, practiced problem solving and participated in hands-on science and math courses.

According to Maj. Henry Montgomery, operations officer for the camp, the Fort Benning program was one of 11 camps the JROTC will sponsor this summer for high school students involved in the organization.

"We'll have about 6,000 cadets involved in summer camps in this region, out of about 60,000 total cadets in the region, which covers several southeastern states," Montgomery said. "Nationwide, there are 156,000 students involved in the JROTC."

The students here, who came from the 12 high school JROTC units in Atlanta, as well as some from Alabama, Florida and other parts of Georgia, are not viewed as potential recruits for the military, according to the region's commanding general.

"Convincing these young people to join the military is not part of our mission," said Brig. Gen. Thomas J. Konitzer, commanding general, 1st ROTC Region.

"JROTC is about teaching self-discipline and motivation," Konitzer said, "especially for some of these youngsters who come from the inner city or from disadvantaged backgrounds. We provide focus, help them get to know themselves, and turn back better young people as a result. The cadets at these camps do things they've never known they could do."

And apparently, never even dreamed of doing. At the Leadership Reaction Course June 14 and the confidence course June 15, cadets seemed somewhat taken aback as they looked at the towering, swinging or water-filled obstacles they were expected to negotiate. Most seemed to attack the challenges eagerly, however, and greeted mishaps like sudden drenchings or the announcement, "You're dead!" with laughter and good-natured teasing.

"For the students," Montgomery said, "completing these tasks calls for teamwork, trial and error and enthusiasm. Everyone gets an opportunity to serve in a leadership position, and everyone gets a chance to try out their ideas."

Cadre comments covered a range from friendly to old-Army. One briefing might offer helpful hints, while another was punctuated by, "Beautiful! I've seen better heads on nickel beers!" But judging by their smiles and avid participation in the activiities, most of the cadets seemed to enjoy themselves.

"We keep the safety and well-being of the cadets as first priority," Montgomery said. "We push them, but not beyond their capabilities."

The cadre at the camp, Konitzer said, are mostly retired officers and senior nonocommissioned officers who work with JROTC programs in the school systems involved.

Assignments

Vision for enlisted soldiers promotes readiness

Army News Service

WASHINGTON — If you're in a nontactical assignment, don't get too comfortable.

The Army chief of staff has approved the concept of moving soldiers after serving three years in table of distribution and allowances assignments in the continental United States.

The concept is meant to satisfy personnel readiness, ensure "greening" of soldiers in the TDA force and enhance noncommissioned officer professional development. There will be no time limit on TDA assignments.

Personnel managers call this plan the Enlisted Assignment Pattern Vision of the Future. It stems from the Army's power projection stance, and is intended to keep soldiers sharp.

"We had to have a vision that will allow us to train the force, keep it current and allow it to grow and prosper," said Brig. Gen. Arthur Dean, director of Enlisted Personnel Management in the U.S. Total Army Personnel Command.

In the past, enlisted soldiers were moved mainly to support the overseas Army. When troops returned to the continental United States, others from CONUS went overseas to take their places. This constant rotation had a side benefit of keeping soldiers fresh and expanding their knowledge about the Army, Dean said.

That worked fine before the drawdown, when 45 percent of enlisted authorizations were outside CONUS. But today, only about 35 percent of the Army is outside CONUS, and that number may continue to drop.

Without overseas rotations forcing soldiers out of their positions, CONUS tours could stretch to more than five years. And too long in a nontactical environment can make NCOs stagnate and lose their edge, Dean said.

"So we have proposed to limit the assignment on soldiers in the CONUS TDA environment to what we believe to be the maximum length of time to benefit the soldier, the organization and the Army — about three years," he said.

"Then that soldier, as if he were serving outside CONUS, would be reassigned."

The three-year TDA tour concept will not apply to all military occupational specialties; some MOSs with a high TDA population will be exempt, officials said. They stressed that the Enlisted Assignment Pattern Vision of the Future is still just a concept.

"We felt that moving soldiers for professional development reasons, after about three years, would be enhancing for them, as well as for the Army," Dean said.

"It's not just simply moving soldiers for the sake of moving soldiers. It's to benefit the organization being served, to benefit the individual and to benefit the Army, and to keep this highly trained, skilled NCO Corps that we have today.

"We just cannot afford to let it get stale."

36th welcomes new faces

By Denise Howell
36th Engineer Group

It is said that April showers bring May flowers. For most of the companies of the 36th Engineer Group (Combat), May, as well as June and July, brought not only flowers, but new faces.

April 29, the 586th Engineer Company (Assault Float Bridge) bade adieu to Capt. Kellie Simon and welcomed Capt. Carol Anderson. Anderson is the former 43rd Engineer Combat Battalion (Heavy) plans officer. Simon is off to the U.S. Military Academy at West Point, N.Y., to be an instructor.

May 8 saw Capt. Debra Daniels, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 36th Engineer Group, off to her next assignment as a company commander in the St. Louis Recruiting Command. Incoming commander Capt. Christopher Denson had been assistant brigade engineer for the 317th Engineer Battalion (Combat), 3rd Brigade, 24th Infantry Division (Mechanized).

The 598th Maintenance Company of the 13th Corps Support Battalion said farewell to Capt. Marybeth Eason May 10. Taking command was the battalion's former operations officer, Capt. Scott Lofreddo.

May 12, Capt. Steven Bolton relinquished command of the Headquarters and Headquarters Detachment of the 13th. Incoming commander Capt. Mace Oswald was the previous supply services officer for the battalion.

May 18 saw Lt. Col. Murray Rupert relinquish command to Lt. Col. Michael Ramirez. Ramirez is the former assistant director of the Army Staff, Office of the Chief of Staff, U.S. Army. Rupert, will attend the Army's Senior Service College. June 30 marks the inactivation of the 43rd and of the 533rd Transportation Company of the 13th. The 533rd will be reflagged as the 104th Transportation Company and will still come under the 13th.

July 21, Lt. Col. James Brooks, commander of the 2nd Mobile Army Surgical Hospital, will be off to Fort Sam Houston, Texas. Incoming Commander Lt. Col. Edward Crosby is former commander of the 46th Combat Support Hospital in Fort Devens, Mass.

Center works for less waste, cleaner, safer environment

Army News Service

WASHINGTON — As federal, state and local governments tighten environmental controls on the military, the Army's Tank Automotive Command Mobility Technology Center Belvoir is working to stop pollution before it starts.

Improper handling of various Army fuels and oils can be an environmental hazard; for example, one gallon of oil can pollute 12 million gallons of water. One mission of MTCB is to produce more efficient fuels so there is less waste to contend with.

MTCB has succeeded in combining the many different grades and types of fuel into just a few products. One example is JP-8 fuel, used in Army ground vehicles and aircraft.

JP-8 has replaced several types of gasoline-based fuels, and because the Army uses it so widely, it is less likely to end up as environmentally dangers waste because of an expired shelf life.

Also, MTCB plans to cut the Army's five grades of motor oil to just three. Because the Army has so many types of oils, the oil in Army vehicles must be changed every time a vehicle is shipped to another location or climate. New motor oils will last longer and — unlike the current oils — function in different areas and climates.

Recycling of petroleum products is another strategy. MTCB created a mobile fuel filtration/additive unit that recovers and restores unusable fuels. The degraded fuel is pumped from the vehicle or storage tank, filtered of contaminants, mixed with additives, and returned to storage.

Along with the FAU, MTCB is taking petroleum testing out of the laboratory and onto the battlefield. The Petroleum Quality Analysis — a transportable, two-person system — gives commanders an instant analysis of the condition of fuel in their inventory.

Antifreeze recycling is one of the Army's most successful recycling programs. As engines use antifreeze, contaminants such as dirt and metal alter the antifreeze's chemical balance. Once contaminants are removed, the antifreeze can be used again.

Looking to the future, researchers at MTCB think the term "environmentally friendly" will become more important. Although their primary mission continues to be ensuring military preparedness, helping to preserve the environment will become a bigger part of their job.

world war II

• On the Eastern Front, the Red Army began a major offensive against German Army Group Center. There were four fronts: First, Second and Third Belorussian and First Baltic, under the overall command of Marshal Georgi Konsstantinovich Zhukov. Mogilev was seized and the Dnieper river crossed, Orsha taken, and five German divisions trapped in Vitebsk. Adolf Hitler fired his German army group center commander.

• In France the Allies captured the vital port city of Cherbourg after intense fighting. The port was not made operational for some time due to German booby traps and demolitions.

• In Finland the Soviet offensive continued, reaching Petrozavodsk and crossing the Murmansk rail line farther north.

• On Biak Island, the U.S. forces finally cleared the caves in the west of the island. On Saipan intense combat raged on Mount Tapotchau, in the Hagman Peninsula and near the southwest tip of the Island.

• In Italy the British and French made successful attacks against the German "Albert" line west of Lake Trasimeno, while the U.S. 36th Infantry Division captured Piombino.

Venezuelan exchange officer bids farewell

Presents memento to Tactics Team chief

By Judith Sasser
Combined Arms and Tactics Directorate

A Venezuelan exchange officer, who served as deputy of Tactics Team 3, bade farewell to the Combined Arms and Tactics Directorate June 13 and presented its chief with a Venezuelan memento.

Maj. Alfonso Colmenares, a Venezuelan exchange officer, has completed his tour at the Infantry School.

Colmenares had been the deputy of Tactics Team 3 since June 1992.

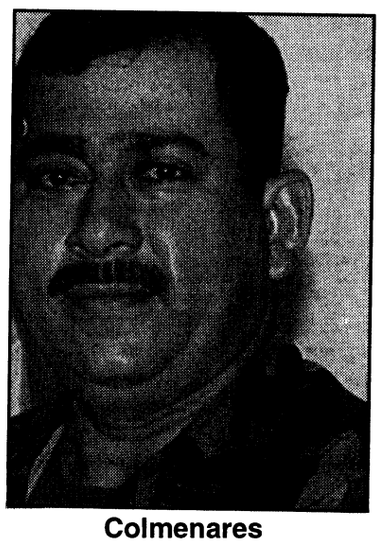
"The biggest challenge an exchange officer faces is the skepticism of American officers," Colmenares said. "Friction soon disappears and they come to terms with working with me."

Besides developing a good rapport with small group instructors, he was a strong link between other international officers in the academic setting of Infantry Hall.

Among the greatest experiences he gained while he was here was capturing the lessons learned from Desert Storm and Somalia.

Colmenares also earned a master's degree in personnel management from Troy State University. While he was increasing his military knowledge, his wife, Dilsa, who is a doctor, participated as an observer at St. Francis Hospital. His daughter attended Patch School and is now proficient in both Spanish and English.

Colmenares, 33, is from Bachaquero, Zulia State, Venezuela, and spent 12 years in the Venezuelan army after graduating from the Venezuela Military Academy at the age of 17. He graduated with a bachelor's degree in science and military arts and a concentration in administration.



He was commissioned as an infantry second lieutenant in 1982. During his military career he completed the following military courses:

- Airborne basic course
- Counter Guerrilla Operations (Hunters)
- Jungle Expert
- Infantry Officer Basic Course (Venezuela)
- Forward observer for mortar and artillery units
- Infantry Officers Advanced Course (Venezuela — Honor Graduate)
- Tactics Certification Course
- Psychological Operations (School of the Americas)
- Instructor Training Course (U.S. Army Infantry Center)

Colmenares has held the following positions:

- Light infantry platoon leader
- 81mm mortar platoon leader
- Jungle operations platoon leader
- Counter guerrilla operations platoon leader

Colmenares has participated in several counter guerrilla and counterdrug operations along the border with Colombia. He also participated in several joint training operations with the 3rd Battalion, 7th Special Forces Group, during which he qualified for U.S. Army airborne wings.

Colmenares

Colmenares and his wife have two children, Maria Victoria and Alfonso Jose Jr., who was born July 4.

He will depart Saturday for duty as an executive officer in a light infantry battalion in Venezuela.

Faith student participates in all-state chorus

Danerys Encarnacion, 13, daughter of Staff Sgt. Jose D. and Nereida Encarnacion, was selected to the chorus after achieving a perfect score at the final tryouts conducted at Warner Robbins Air Force Base in March.

"I believe that this is a superb program," said Encarnacion. "You get to sing and spend time with people from all over the state. I hope that I can go back soon."

Encarnacion

Encarnacion and 13 other students from Faith Middle School were selected to attend the initial tryouts at Warner Robbins in November. She was the only student selected from Faith to return for the second tryout in March after achieving a cutoff score of 10.5.
