With temperatures reaching 90 degrees and above, (people) need at least two quarts of water an hour to prevent dehydration and heat injuries

"If you know you're going to be out competing in the heat, start drinking water early and keep replenishing yourself," said Harris. "Listen to your body and help cool it."

Harris also emphasized knowing heat injury symptoms.

"You have to keep an eye on your people, and that means knowing what to look for and taking the steps to prevent or treat injuries," he said.

There are three types of heat injuries — heat cramps, heat exhaustion and heat stroke. Treatment for heat cramps, usually accompanied with excessive sweating, is easy. Cramps usually go away by simply moving into a shaded area, loosening clothes and slowly drinking water.

Heat exhaustion is more serious. Besides the cramps, sweating is more profuse and leaves cool, moist skin. Victims often suffer headaches, nausea, chills and a loss of appetite.

Heat stroke victims usually have hot, dry skin, have stopped sweating, and suffer from headaches, dizziness, stomach pains and nausea. In severe cases, victims may have seizures, lose consciousness and experience breathing problems.

In both heat exhaustion and heat stroke cases, immediately call medical authorities. While waiting for help, provide the victim water and shade, elevate feet to prevent shock and cool the body by pouring water over the patient and by fanning.

Other suggestions for preventing heat injuries:

- Don't take salt tablets. The body may lose salt in sweating, but eating normal meals replenishes that supply.
- Drink cool water, preferably 50 to 55 degrees Fahrenheit.
- Drink one quart of water in the morning, at each meal and before strenuous work. Water requirements vary with climactic conditions and workloads. In hot climates, hourly water requirements increase to over two quarts.
- Take frequent drinks; they are more effective than drinking the same amount all at once.
- When possible, limit work and physical fitness activities during the first few days of exposure to heat, then increase gradually to acclimate.
- Modify activities if conditions are present that increase heat injury risks. These conditions include fatigue or loss of sleep, previous heat exhaustion and taking medications.

Pointers help picnickers prevent problems

Egleston Children's Hospital

Everybody loves a picnic, a chance to get away from it all for a day and still be able to sleep in your own bed at night.

Maryann Johnston, registered nurse, safety promotions coordinator for Egleston Children's Hospital at Emory University, offers these picnic pointers to help keep your children safe the next time you pack up a picnic basket for an outing with family or friends:

- Teach children to recognize and avoid poison ivy.
- Keep children in sight at all times.
- Check weather conditions before your trip. If conditions are right for lightning to develop, take shelter in a building or enclosed car (avoid touching any metal in the car) or thick woods. Stay away from isolated trees. Teach children to stay away from water and metal objects during storms.
- Teach your child what to do if there is no shelter in a lightning storm: crouch in a low-lying area and minimize contact with the ground. Open fields and parking lots should be avoided.
- Never leave your children unsupervised near water. They could drown in even a small amount of water from a trickling stream. Make sure everyone in the group wears personal flotation devices while boating or rafting. And if your picnic site is near water, require young nonswimmers to wear PFDs continuously throughout the day.

- Take a first-aid kit with basic supplies for treating minor injuries and providing basic first aid for more serious injuries until medical help arrives.
- If going to a remote area, leave word of your location.
- To reduce the chances of stings and bites, picnickers should wear shoes and socks and avoid areas that attract bees and other stinging insects, such as garbage cans and areas where food has been left out. Bright-colored clothing and sweet-smelling colognes and other toiletries should be avoided. Flick a bee stinger off of the skin with a driver's license or credit card instead of pinching the area and trying to pull the stinger out, which pushes more venom into the skin.
- Picnickers should be checked at the end of the day for ticks. To remove a tick grasp it by the head, as close to the skin as possible, with tweezers and pull it loose. Do not use bare fingers; ticks can transmit disease by mere skin contact. See a doctor if the tick cannot be removed or if the head remains in the skin.

Food poisoning can cause illness or, in extreme cases, death. Symptoms, including diarrhea, abdominal pain and vomiting, can begin within an hour or take up to 36 hours to develop.

Make sure meat, poultry and frozen foods are kept cold; don't thaw frozen foods at room temperature. Wash your hands, knives and cutting boards used after working with meat, poultry or fish and before handling other foods.

Make sure meat, poultry and fish are completely cooked. And don't allow food to sit out for more than a brief time in warm weather.

If you suspect food poisoning, contact the Georgia Poison Center at (800) 282-5846.

Fabares: Still woman behind 'Coach'

By Jay Bobbin,
Tribune Media Services

Admittedly, she might not be as recognized for being an enduring TV-comedy star as women whose names are in their show's titles.

SPOTLIGHT

Nevertheless, as her current Emmy nomination attests, Shelley Fabares continues to do something very right.

One of those performers who literally has grown up in front of the viewing audience, dating back to her start as teen-ager Mary Stone on "The Donna Reed Show," the actress is about to begin her seventh season on ABC's popular "Coach."

The series is off the network very temporarily, readying for its new Monday-night time slot (which was established to a degree last week, with back-to-back repeat episodes), but earlier stories are being shown widely in weekday syndication. The move from its familiar Tuesday-night berth is one of the relatively few things that won't seem familiar to "Coach" fans, with Fabares continuing her role as Christine Armstrong Fox, the television personality who finally became the wife of Minnesota State football coach Hayden Fox (Craig T. Nelson, also the show's co-executive producer) after a long courtship. Additional cast regulars include Jerry Van Dyke and Bill Fagerbakke.

Shelley Fabares

The previous six seasons of "Coach" were commemorated in a Mary Hart-hosted retrospective special that ABC aired last May (it's also available on the MCA/Universal Home Video label), and that offering documented the false starts that Hayden and Christine made on their way to the altar. "They've had a very full life together, in television terms," muses the pleasant Fabares, who currently is celebrating her inclusion among the Emmy nominees for Outstanding Supporting Actress in a Comedy Series.

What: "Coach"
When: Monday on ABC

"They've had their ups and downs, and they're certainly in a good place now, but they've been through quite a bit. It seems that people enjoy the fact that (the characters) have gotten married, and they like the way it happened. I think it's always a very tricky thing to have a couple on a show get married, after a successful storyline has been written around their having a lot of difficulties (in tying the knot). So much of the time in television, after they're married, much of that falls by the wayside ... but our writers have done a wonderful job in keeping up the differences and difficulties for Hayden and Christine, yet they've also been allowed to grow together as a couple.

"I think it's sort of the optimum of what happens in real life," Fabares continues, "that you don't lose your individual traits while you are hopefully building a life together, with your love only deepening as your marriage goes on. I think they've done that with Hayden and Christine, and I think she truly feels closer to him after the last year."

POW museum to offer journey of experience

American Ex-Prisoners of War

The National Prisoner of War Museum, to be built in Andersonville, Ga., aims to communicate the prisoner of war experience regardless of when, where, why or how the individual was captured or imprisoned.

For the first time, hundreds of POW artifacts and documents will be used to help visitors understand the horrors, stress and suffering of those denied freedom during periods of war. The museum will provide a tribute to American POWs from the American Revolution to the recent Somalian peacekeeping effort.

The American Ex-Prisoners of War and the National Park Service have joined together to make the museum a reality. Funds raised since 1984 have enabled groundbreaking and will pay for the installation of utilities this summer, while the state is funding access roads and signs.

The museum's location will be the grounds of the largest prisoner of war camp operated during the Civil War, where nearly 13,000 of the 40,000 imprisoned soldiers died during its 14 months of operation.

The exhibits have been designed to take visitors on a journey through the life of the POW, from the trauma of capture to the time of liberation or repatriation.

The different aspects of the POW's existence to be highlighted are capture, physical environment, living conditions, communications, privation, morale, friendships and freedom. A special section titled "Those Who Wait" will convey the devotion and suffering of family members and friends.

Fresh water, a highly valued commodity for all POWs, runs through the courtyard, which will feature a bronze statue symbolic of all POWs attempting to drink from the stream.

Proceeds from the Prisoner of War Commemorative Silver Dollar will contribute significantly to the millions needed for the National POW Museum.

The first $3 million raised is designated for the museum's construction. The next million will create an endowment fund for maintenance and the final million will go to maintaining national Veterans Administration cemeteries.

For more information on the American Ex-Prisoners of War, contact Mary Rolen at the National Capital Office at (202) 208-1800 or (202) 208-1492.

Sec Def visits 'Support Hope' relief operations

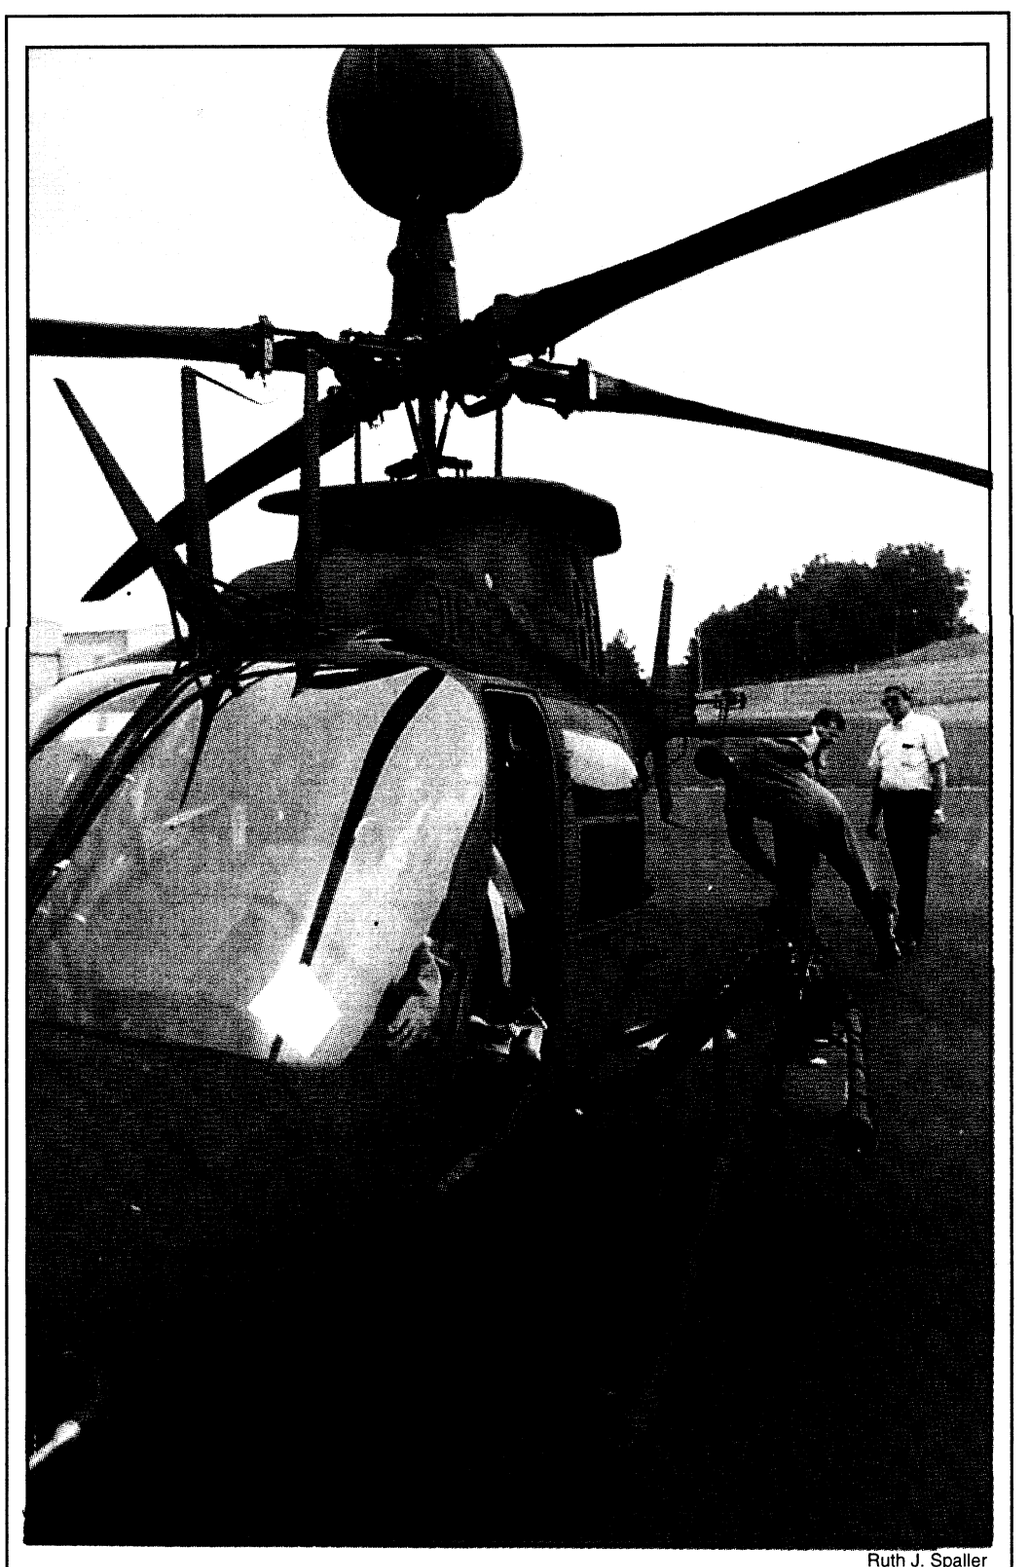
Army News Service

STUTTGART, Germany — Operation Support Hope got personal attention recently when Secretary of Defense William Perry and European Commander Gen. George A. Joulwan visited the crisis area. They made stops at Entebbe, Kigali and Goma in Zaire, and returned home July 28.

The visitors saw newly-begun operations at the Kigali airport, which officials expect to greatly improve airlift of equipment and supplies into the area.

Perry said the opening of Kigali will allow relief supplies and equipment to be delivered overland to Goma, and remedy some of the delays seen in the first weeks there.

The Kigali airport can handle up to 30 aircraft a day, once the personnel strength grows from its present 108 to about 200. A logistics support center will conduct airfield operations and cargo handling. Its staff will also coordinate with other nations' forces, the government of Rwanda and international relief agencies, officials said.



Two C-5 Galaxy aircraft flew into Kigali July 28, with the logistics team, 25,000-pound and 40,000-pound freight loaders and two vehicles. One of these aircraft arrived from Moron Air Base, Spain.

Airlift traffic remained heavy at Goma July 28, bringing more water purification units, engineering equipment and people. A recently arrived Army bulldozer went right to work, clearing sites for the water purification units and digging burial trenches.

Among the troops assigned to Support Hope are Special Operations forces from the United States and Europe. Joulwan said the employment of such forces isn't unusual. They are ideally suited for humanitarian assistance missions, he said, as they are trained in a broad range of skills, and have valuable knowledge of the area's languages and culture.

These troops include 18 soldiers from the Special Operations Command, Europe, and 37 from the Joint Special Operations Task Force Three.

As of Aug. 1, there were about 1,545 U.S. military members in Operation Support Hope, including Europe-based troops assigned to the mission. About 1,200 are in the refugee crisis area.

accepts top infantry award in ceremony at York Field

By Marc G. Turchin
Bayonet staff writer

One of America's most renowned generals received the infantry's highest award, the Doughboy Award, in a ceremony Monday on York Field in front of Infantry Hall.

This year's recipient of the award is retired Gen Colin L. Powell, former chairman of the Joints Chiefs of Staff.

Powell was given the award on behalf of all infantrymen by Maj. Gen. Jerry A. White, Fort Benning's commanding general.

"This year's honoree is a great soldier, a fellow infantryman, a statesman whose achievements have brought him national respect and admiration," White said.

After White finished his speech, Powell stepped to the podium, thanked the crowd for the applause, raised his hands toward the sky and said, "August at (Fort) Benning, I'll tell you," referring to the heat of the afternoon.

"Perhaps the best advice I ever got," Powell said, "was (from) a sergeant (here) who one day screamed at me and said 'Lieutenant, don't stand around with your finger in your ear and your mind in Alabama. Do something!' "

The Doughboy Award is the highest honor the infantry bestows, and goes to individuals who have made substantial contributions to the infantry.

The term "doughboy" was used for American recruits rushed to Europe in World War I. The name originated in Texas, where soldiers training along the Rio Grande River became covered in white dust from the adobe soil. Mounted troops called them "adobes." This degenerated to "dobies," which became "doughboys."

> "The most powerful memories that come to me late at night, when I reflect on all this, are of comrades that didn't make it — comrades who gave their lives. It is in their memory that I accept this award."

> — Retired Gen. Colin Powell
> 1994 Doughboy Award recipient

Past recipients of the award include: Bob Hope, Ross Perot, Sen. Robert Dole, retired Gen. Matthew Ridgway and retired Lt. Gen. David Grange Jr.

Powell said while writing his memoirs and thinking back over his 35 years of military service, "The most powerful memories that come to me late at night, when I reflect on all this, are of comrades that didn't make it — comrades who gave their lives. It is in their memory that I accept this award."

Commander addresses issues

In a videoteleconference Franks speaks about future of Army, training issues, shrinking budget

By Ruth J. Spaller
Bayonet staff writer

In a videoteleconference Aug. 5, Gen. Frederick R. Franks, commander of Training and Doctrine Command, addressed some of the challenges the Army faces today and in the future.

Franks, who has been at TRADOC since August 1991, will relinquish command to Lt. Gen. William W. Hartzog Aug. 31 and is scheduled to retire soon after that, although no firm date has been set.

These are some of the things he said:

Women's role

Franks believes the Army will continue to see advancements such as the recent opening of more than 30,000 new positions for women in the military.

"We have had favorable results in those units where we have both genders," he said, and TRADOC is looking at basic training being done the same way "so the skills, knowledge and attitudes are developed right from the beginning."

"I really am encouraged by the openness (and) the sense of participation that we've had in TRADOC and indeed in the Army on this whole issue."

Environment

"We need to ensure training is not incompatible with caring for the environment," he said.

TRADOC can do that by training, increased sensitivity, planning ahead and raising the awareness of our leaders through their schooling, Franks said.

Budgeting

"These are times of tough choices," he said. "There is a tension that exists between available resources and training, growth and modernization. "

TRADOC has seen reductions in training support and development, he said, and the key lies in keeping focused on the essence of what we do.

Our mission is to "fight and win our nation's wars as part of a joint team, and to do that, we need to be trained and we need to develop our leaders," Franks said.

VARIOUS VOICES

What long-standing tradition should the Army change?

Staff Sgt. Alex A. Figueroa, Company B, School of the Americas — "I think charge of quarters should be changed. It's not necessary. There's too much manpower involved. We should just have an alert roster."

Master Sgt. James A. Bridges, U.S. Army Medical Department Activity — "One of the hardest things for me to understand is how and why they decide who goes where. We're coming to a time when a soldier is going to have to stay (at a duty station) longer. (Soldiers) should have a choice of where they go."

Maj. Roger P. Stai, U.S. Army Medical Department Activity — "With all the smoking policies being changed, I think we should get away from selling cigarettes in the commissary at a subsidized price."

Sgt. 1st Class Patrick V. Davis, Bradley Instructor Company, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment — "To be honest with you, I think everything's appropriate, as far as retreat, reveille and funeral detail. If anything, have the funeral detail be in (dress) blues instead of Class As."

Staff Sgt. John R. Flora, Company D, 2nd Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment — "Department of Army selection for promotion for E-7 and E-8. I think it needs to be based on the whole soldier concept."

Spc. Douglas B. Graham, 63rd Combat Support Equipment — "I think the hurry-up and wait needs to go."

'When I went to Ranger School ...'

By Clyde Snively
Bayonet columnist

commentary

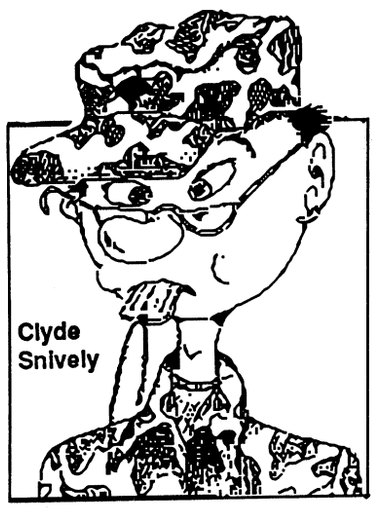
Covering ranger organization day in the mountains was a major event in the life of Marc Pivot.

He came back to the office all charged up with what he'd seen. To him, an RI (ranger instructor) was a demigod.

To hear Pivot tell it, no other soldier can move as fast and far as a ranger instructor.

"Mountain ranges flatten beneath their feet. Mountain laurels dare not trip them up and ranger students fear them," he gushed.



That was all fine and good, but as he was describing the newly opened museum, old-timer stopped by the office.

"Been up to mountain ranger camp, hey boy," he said, as he slipped a strew of tobacco juice into his cola can.

"Can't believe how we coddle those students nowadays. Put them in those fancy-dancy barracks.

"Shoot-fire, when I was there, we still had them green hootches. I remember walking across that gravel in them flimsy shower shoes to use the latrine or take a shower.

"Darn near ripped our feet up.

They wuz so sore from humpin' da mountains. Seemed like it rained ever' day we wuz on patrol. Our feets wuz a mess."

"Must have been tough, old timer," Pivot unwittingly said, evoking another stream of tobacco juice into the cola can, followed by an epithet and a, "Tuff!?"

Then he launched full bore into his sermon.

"Why boy, you ain't heard of tuff. Betcha you cain't even spell tuff.

"Back in those days, the cold wuz colder, the heat hotter and the mountains steeper.

"I remember a time on the side of Hawk Mountain. Patrol leader got us in a mess of mountain laurel. Kept walking around in circles down there.

"We'd been doin' that for three hours. It was pitch black and all you cud see wuz them tabs on the back of your buddy's patrol cap.

"We wuz movin' along, kind of in a duck walk, cuz if you got down low enough you cud duck under most of them branches. I wuz the radio telephone operator and walkin' right behind the RI.

"He'd been pretty cool about it all, figured he'd failed himself another patrol leader, so nuthin' to git 'cited 'bout.

"Then all a sudden I heard a `womp,' then I heard that RI cussin' under his breath sumpin' terrible.

"What I learned later is he'd bumped his head on some mountain laurel, had backed off, got down lower, whacked his head again, backed off, got down even lower and again whacked his head.

"He finally put his hand out, discovered he'd run into a vertical trunk instead of a horizontal branch. He wuz so mad he hauled off and hit that mountain laurel with his fist. Lucky he had on them black gloves."

"Wow," Pivot said, "I guess even RIs can get tired on patrol."

"You betcha, sonny," and with a spit of tobacco juice, he was off again.

"Mind plays tricks on you up there, you bein' in the dark all the time. You start hearin' and seein' things that ain't there. You fall asleep on your feet if you stop long enuf. And guess what. When you wake up, ain't nobody around expect the guys behind you.

"You talk about fear. Hah. You know you'd better git your'n butt in gear and find the rest of those students before the guys behind you get wise, or the R.I. with the patrol leader begins to wonder where you are and comes back lookin' for ya.

"Don't know which would be worse, an angry RI or angry ranger students wantin' you hide."

Unfortunately I had an assignment to go on, so missed the rest of the story. One of these days I'll get Pivot to fill me in.

Obviously those were the good old days.

Swimming: It's fun but it can be dangerous

By Ann Brown
U.S Product and Safety Commission

commentary

Nothing is as satisfying during these scorching summer months as a tall glass of iced tea, a crisp summer breeze or a refreshing dip in the pool.

For the fortunate, making a "splash" is as easy as passing through a sliding glass door into a backyard basin of blue. However, for children, a seemingly harmless summer afternoon can become a summer tragedy.

Marcia and Bill Kerr were already in the pool safety business, selling power safety covers, when catastrophe struck. In April 1988, a Fort Lauderdale, Fla., couple lost their 2-year-old son, Cody, when the boy, left unsupervised by the baby sitter, found his way to their pool and drowned.

For the Kerrs, who have launched a personal crusade for pool safety, similar accounts of drowning across the country make their own misfortune even more devastating.

Each year, more than 300 children younger than 5 drown in residential pools. Drowning has been the leading cause of accidental death to young children in and around the home in a number of states, including several outside the Sunbelt. Most frightening is the short time it takes for a drowning to occur.

The majority of young children drown when they are left unattended for brief periods even in the time it takes to answer a phone call. Any momentary lapse of supervision can provide a child with a chance to escape from the house and reach the pool.

More than two-thirds of the pool drownings of young children studied by the U.S. Consumer Product Safety Commission were of victims not expected to be near the pool.

Drownings can occur wherever there is water — a beach, a bathtub or even a five-gallon bucket.

Nevertheless, the most frequent submersion death of children under 5 occurs in residential pools. More than half of the drownings take place at the child's own residence; however, a large number also occur at other sites, such as a friend's or a grandparent's home.

Common misconceptions about children and pool drowning include the myth that children are incapable of escaping from the house and making it to the pool.

Once again wrong. At a young age, children's ability to learn new skills change daily. Thus, a child unable to unlock the back door today may be able to do so tomorrow.

The CPSC's mission is to protect the public from unreasonable risks of injury and death associated with 15,000 types of products generally found in and around homes, schools and recreational areas.

The CPSC strongly encourages anyone who owns a pool frequented by children to adhere to the following guidelines.

• Careful supervision is the best way to avoid accidents. Never leave your children alone when they are around the pool. If you leave, even for a few seconds, take them with you. Remember: children are not "drown-proof," even if they can swim.

• To help avoid confusion, always assign one competent adult to watch young children in the pool. Make sure baby sitters and guardians are fully aware of pool hazards.

• Install a fence and other safety devices around your pool. Power safety covers, door alarms that signal when a child has left the house, and fences between the house and pool with self-closing, self-latching gate mechanisms that are out of a child's reach are the best layers of protection against child drownings. They can obstruct a youngster's attempt to make it to the pool while you buy yourself time to find your child if he or she is missing.

• Never rely on inflatable vests or toys to keep children afloat. Keep toys, which can lure a child into the water, away from the pool area when no one is swimming.

• Keep a telephone with listed rescue numbers at poolside for use in emergencies. Parents and supervisors should be trained in cardiopulmonary resuscitation so that it can be administered immediately if the child falls in the pool.

Finally, never abuse alcohol or drugs around the pool, as they will inhibit your ability to supervise and, if necessary, save a child.

For additional information regarding pool safety or other consumer product issues, contact the U.S. Consumer Product Safety Commission hot line at (800) 638-2772.

Military Police get new commander

Top MP comes back to his roots for new assignment

By Marc G. Turchin
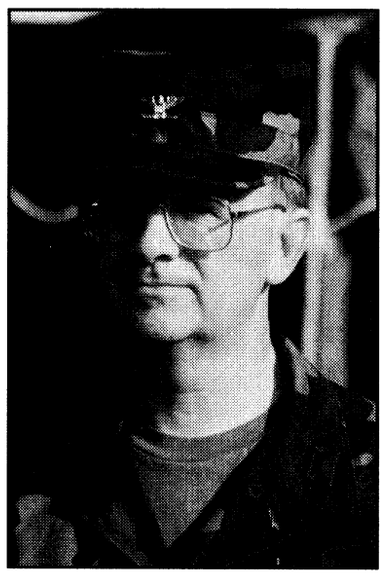
Bayonet staff writer

The Military Police Activity received a new commander Thursday in a ceremony on the Field of Four Chaplains.

Col. Ronnie D. Alton, the former provost marshal for the Army Materiel Command, Alexandria, Va., assumed command from Maj. Gen. Jerry A. White, Fort Benning's commanding general.

While looking at the formation of his troops in front of him, Alton said, "This is like a dream come true for me. To be with troops again, serving as a military police officer in my home state, with my family supporting me is the most I could ask for as I approach the twighlight of my career."



Alton is not a stranger to Fort Benning or to the state of Georgia.

Born in Tifton in 1944, he was commissioned as a Reserve Officer through Officer Candidate School in July 1967 and later commissioned as a Military Police Officer in the Regular Army in September 1972.

The newly renovated snack bar in the Main Post Bowling Center will open Monday with an 11 a.m. ribbon-cutting ceremony.

The bowling center is located in Building 2785 at the intersection of Eckel Street and Sightseeing Road, across from the Milton E. Long Arts and Crafts Center.

Maj. Gen. Jerry A. White, commanding general of Fort Benning; Charlotte Jackson, chief of the Nonappropriated Services Division; and Jim Cantrell, post bowling manager, will cut the ribbon to officially open the facility.

The $200,000 cost of the renovation came from Fort Benning's morale, welfare and recreation funds, which are generated by various clubs and activities on post.

The snack bar project was initiated to accommodate the increased bowling center customer demand.

The renovated facility's food service counter layout allows customers to move through the food line based on their selections.

Customers can either wait for items cooked to order or if in a hurry, they can bypass the line and pick up prepared lunches.

The Main Post Bowling Center was originally constructed in 1963.

Franks: VTC hits hot topics

As resource challenges come up, we have to keep the focus on that mission and the fact that training and leader development in schools is as vital to readiness as training in units, he said.

Battlelabs

"I believe the future of Battlelab's experimental message is very bright indeed," Franks said.

Experimenting by combinations of virtual reality simulators, simulation networks, live experiments at training centers and computer assisted analysis "is absolutely the right thing to be doing at this time," he said.

The ability to train joint task forces, commanders and staffs without the expense of having a lot of servicemembers in the field allows us, even in a resource constrained environment, to contribute innovative ideas, be creative and make the right choices, he said.

Future

Franks' advice for the future is "Look bevond the challenges — take a look at who we are, what we stand for and what we are doing for our nation."

Because of the quality men and women and the skill of today's leaders in continuing to stay focused on what is important, Franks said, "we are operating at standards of excellence that were unheard of five years after the ends of previous conflicts."

Finally, he urged soldiers and leaders not to back away from the challenges and hard choices, but to roll up our sleeves, continue to talk and help ourselves with suggestions and ideas.

AAFES works to improve service

Field exchanges to increase stocks, toll-free special orders available

Army & Air Force Exchange Service

The Army and Air Force Exchange Service is working on initiatives to improve service to military members and their families, according to AAFES officials.

Customers can call toll free for special orders

Customers at Fort Benning can now place "special orders" using a toll-free number. The 90-day test is part of AAFES efforts to improve customer service. Vendors will ship merchandise directly to the customer's home.

Selected vendors will offer footwear, giftware, and dinnerware as part of the new centralized processing of special orders. Catalogs featuring the merchandise will be available at the exchange for customers to look through.

Customers can get current prices, check on merchandise availability, and place their orders by calling 1 (800) 775-1096. The exchange Mail Order Catalog Special Order Unit will respond to the call. Operators will be available from 8 a.m. to 8 p.m. Monday through Friday, and 9:30 a.m. to 6 p.m. Saturday and Sunday.

Special orders enable customers to buy merchandise their Army and Air force Exchange Service store doesn't normally carry. This includes an expanded range of sizes, patterns, and models of various merchandise.

Customers may use a credit card or the Deferred Payment Plan to pay for their order.

The other eight locations participating in the test are: Fort Bragg, N.C.; Fort Hood, Texas; Fort Sam Houston, Texas; Fort Lewis, Wash.; Scott Air Force Base, Ill.; Langley Air Force Base, Va.; Wright Patterson Air Force Base, Ohio; and Beale Air Force Base, Calif.

AAFES goes tactical

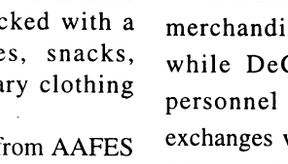
AAFES and the Defense Commissary Agency are working together once again to provide tactical field exchange support to deployed service members.

Plans call for the tactical field exchanges to be stocked with a variety of toiletries, snacks, stationery and military clothing items.

Support will come from AAFES Europe, with supplies shipped from Rhein Main Air Base, Germany.



AAFES will furnish merchandise for the exchanges, while DeCA will provide the personnel to operate them. The exchanges will open 30 to 45 days following full deployment, AAFES officials said.

Helo hovers on cutting edge

By Ruth J. Spaller
Bayonet staff writer

The helicopter has jumped into the world of ultra high-tech with a prototype of the Kiowa Warrior that Bell Helicopter Textron representatives showed off on Fort Benning Aug. 5.

The prototype OH-58D upgrades the capabilities of the production model Kiowa Warrior with an extended nose housing much of the electronics that used to be in the back seat, clearing room to carry troops, according to Russell E Rumney, Bell's manager of Army Helicopter Requirements.

The prototype, like the production model, is a fully digitized aircraft, equipped with the latest in computer and avionics technology.

Flying the prototype can be like playing a video game, said Chief Warrant Officer 4 Vance L. Barton, the project pilot for development.

"The ability to control the sight seems to be directly proportionate to the number of quarters dropped into those games," he said with a grin.

The prototype, like the production model, is a fully digitized aircraft, equipped with the latest in computer and avionics technology

The prototype features a forward looking infrared, or FLIR, system found to be more effective for night pilotage during the Gulf War than the night vision goggles it replaces, Rumney said.

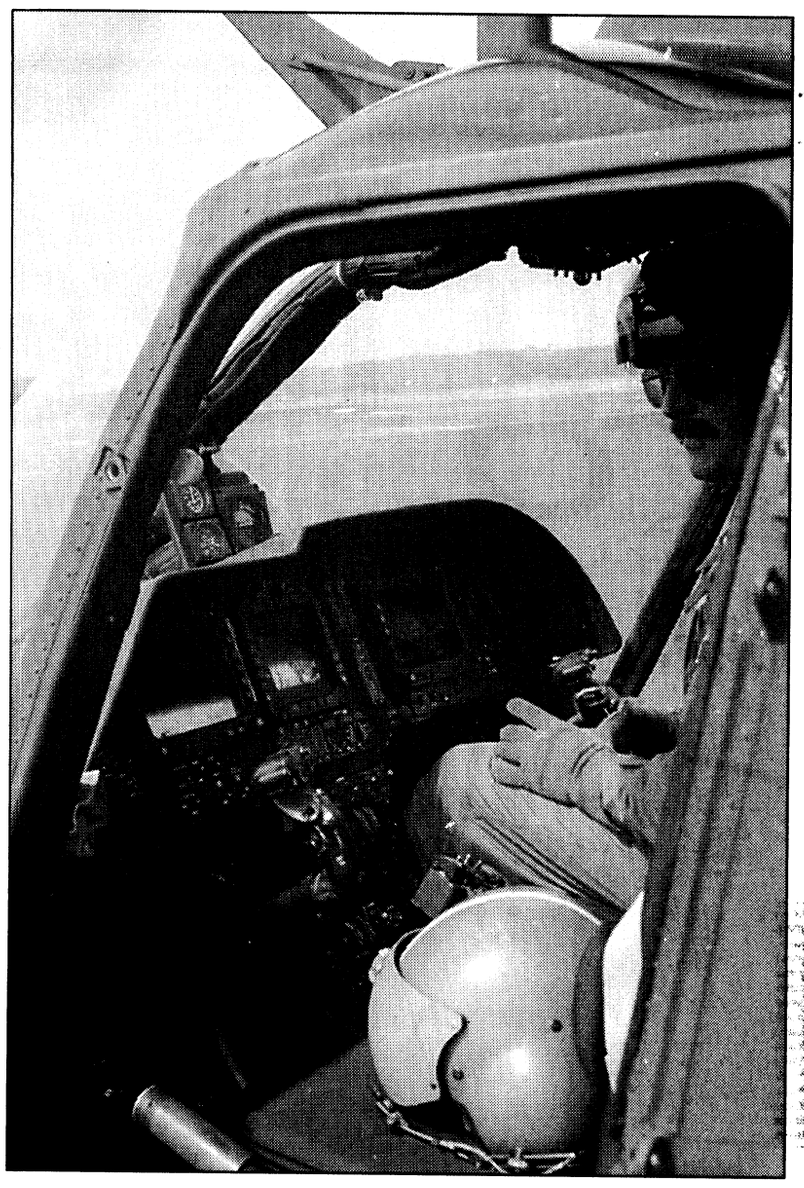
The headset display is mounted to the helmet and moves as the pilot's head turns.

Instead of basic navigational systems the prototype has a global positioning inertial navigation system "which continually updates itself to show you where you are located in relation to a satellite," said Alan Ezzell, an engineering specialist with the Bell Helicopter Avionics Design Group.

It also has a digital color map on a 5-inch screen that can be programmed for the operating area, Ezzell said.

With these advancements, he said, "you can program a full flight plan into the mission computers and the TV screen will actually give you a stick map of where you are and what direction to fly in."

The feature that most easily identifies the Kiowa Warrior is the mast-mounted sight, an electronic ball on the top of the helicopter rotor, which contains a high-resolution television camera for long-range, low-light target detection, an infrared thermal imaging sensor for night target aquisition, and a laser imaging system for precise target location and designation.



With the mast-mounted sight the helicopter can hide behind trees, rocks or mountains and still see the target area, Ezzell said, allowing the pilot to hide until ready to fire, then pop up, fire a missile, and drop back down.

Overall, these systems add more capabilities to the aircraft to do a better job in the field, Ezzell said.

The prototype has an increased fuel capacity of 120 gallons, can carry six troops or four casualties externally and is capable of carrying a 2,000-pound sling load.

The prototype has been shown at Battle Labs at Fort Monroe, Va., Fort Campbell, Ky. and Fort Knox, Ky. as an example of the types of advancements that can be added to the basic Kiowa Warrior.

"The reception has been outstanding," Rumney said. "I believe there's a strong possibility that the Army will use this as a 'shopping list' ... we may never see an aircraft that has all the stuff that this aircraft has. On the other hand, we may see an aircraft that has a lot more."

Fort Benning's celebration of Federal Employees' Week, Aug. 22 to 26, will include a full slate of workshops designed to aid the professional as well as the personal development of federal personnel, according to Winnie Torain, Federal Women's Program manager. The workshops will be conducted in Infantry Hall, Building 4.

Highlighting the theme of "Employees' Excellence," activities this year will offer motivational training designed to enhance career development for supervisory and nonsupervisory civilian or military personnel.

"Training is one of the most important tools an agency has to offer its employees," Torain said.

Sponsored by the Federal Women's Program Committee, the week of activities will include 10 workshops on such topics as health and fitness, effective job interviewing techniques, interpersonal skills and strategic planning for career growth.

"I strongly support the goals and objectives of the Federal Women's Program Committee and its efforts in sponsoring Federal Employees' Week activities for 1994," Commanding General Maj. Gen. Jerry A. White said.

The workshops are also open to family members and volunteer workers on a space-available basis.

Civilian employees attending the scheduled events will be excused without charge of leave.

Also as part of Federal Employees' Week, a luncheon commemorating Women's Equality Day is scheduled for Aug. 26 at the Main NCO Club from 11:30 a.m to 1 p.m.

New agency to promote soldier wellness

Army News Service

WASHINGTON — A new Army agency that promotes soldiers' health and wellness was activated Aug. 2 at the Maryland National Guard Armory at Aberdeen Proving Ground.

The new U.S. Army Center for Health Promotion and Preventive Medicine will assume the responsibilities of the U.S. Army Environmental Hygiene Agency, and during a provisional period of one year, take on additional programs that relate to health promotion and wellness, soldier fitness and disease surveillance, officials said.

CHPPM is a major subordinate command of the U.S. Army Medical Command. Brig. Gen. Nancy R. Adams — who currently serves as chief of the Army Nurse Corps, assistant surgeon general and director of personnel for the Office of the Surgeon General — will be CHPPM's first commander.

AEHA will remain an active organization throughout the provisional period, with both organizations existing simultaneously to "preserve as much stability as possible and allow for a well-executed transition," according to officials. Col. James R. Wiles will continue to serve as AEHA commander and as CHPPM deputy commander during the period.

The center will encompass AEHA and direct support activities at Fort Meade, Md.; Fort McPherson, Ga.; Fitzsimmons Army Medical Center, Colo.; and the Preventive Medicine Division of the Walter Reed Army Institute of Research in Washington.

Also slated to come under the CHPPM preventive medicine umbrella is the 10th Medical Laboratory in Landstuhl, Germany and the U.S. Army Pacific Environmental Health Engineering Agency in Sagimi, Japan.

507th opens day room, volleyball court

By Richard Brill
Special to The Bayonet©

Soldiers of Company E, 1st Battalion (Airborne), 507th Infantry, 11th Infantry Regiment are enjoying a day room and volleyball court that fellow soldiers built using self-help.

The ribbon-cutting ceremony for the do-it-yourself recreation facilities was Aug. 3 at Building 2756.

Following comments by Col. Walter Wojdakowski, regimental commander, Sgt. Edgar Stanaland cut the ribbon for the volleyball court, while Spc. Justin White cut the ribbon for the day room .

Stanaland and White were each in charge of their respective projects during the construction.

White, a parachute rigger with former experience as a carpenter, said he and five other soldiers worked on the day room beginning in December until its completion in April.

"I want to extend my feelings of pride to the soldiers who took nothing and produced something of value for the Army."

— Glen Kallgren
Commander, Company E

"The idea was to improve the living conditions of the soldiers who stay in the barracks," White said. "We wanted them to have something nice to come home to."

The day room was formed from two existing sets of living quarters by knocking down the central wall to make one large room. New walls, paneling, trim, carpet and wallpaper were then added. In addition to furniture, the room contains a television set and an air hockey game. There are plans to add an entertainment center soon.

Spc. Jeremy Miller, who assisted White, said the work was enjoyable.

"We had a good time putting the room together and sometimes we got a break from our normal duties as riggers," he said. "It was challenging to build."

Stanalan said the volleyball court has already proved itself to be a popular weekend party spot.

"The soldiers are really enjoying it," he said.

The court was constructed at almost no cost using soldier labor, scrap lumber and sand from Upatoi Creek.

Cpt. Glen Kallgren, company commander, said the day room and volleyball court will stand as a tribute to the soldiers who made them.

"I want to extend my feelings of pride to the soldiers who took nothing and produced something of value for the Army," he said.

"They are not only great parachute riggers, but multi-faceted as well. They displayed a wealth of skills and were willing to use their personal off-duty time to construct something of lasting value for themselves and their fellow soldiers."

Transition aid facilities open to DoD civilians

By Stephen Barrett
American Forces Information Service

Information offered through the outplacement referral service, bulletin board and job bank can help Department of Defense civilians in making employment decisions

Defense Department civilians working at Base Closure and Realignment installations may now use military transition assistance offices to plan their futures.

A memorandum signed by Edwin Dorn, undersecretary of defense for personnel and readiness, encourages commanders to coordinate their transition services so both military members and civilian employees can benefit from each program.

Robert L. Stein II, DoD's transition support and services director, said the memorandum clarifies how commanders can use transition facilities to support DoD's drawdown.

"Some commanders may have thought that there were restrictions on their ability to serve their customers," said Stein. He said the commanders often thought they didn't have permission to create or consolidate programs.

"This memorandum gives the military departments the authority and flexibility to look at what they're doing in their military and civilian transition programs and determine the best ways to support all transitions."

The memorandum also directs BRAC installation commanders to serve both service members and civilians on an equal basis. This means military transition assistance and local civilian personnel offices may pool their resources to find jobs for all.

Stein said examples include consolidating classes on interviewing and resume writing and combining military and community transition services on a full-time or part-time basis.

He said Defense Outplacement Referral System resumes for private sector employment, the Transition Bulletin Board and America's Job Bank could be available at both the military and civilian transition centers.

"It's to everybody's advantage to give all DoD personnel the transition assistance, information and tools they need to prepare themselves for new employment," said Paula Davis, Stein's deputy. Davis said the transition program is not a job placement program. However, she said, the information offered through the outplacement referral service, bulletin board and job bank can help in making employment decisions.

Commanders at installations remaining open, but not undergoing closure or drawdown, must provide space-available transition support to civilians. Stein said many bases offer this service routinely. "There has already been a cooperative effort to consolidate transition assistance," he said. "The Army, for one, has viewed the whole (transition) issue as one total force — military and civilians."

"Of course, there are some areas that may not be conducive to consolidation," Stein said. He refers to routine personnel functions such as civilian personnel's role in conducting priority placement programs and reductions in force and military personnel's role in providing separation and benefits information.

Yet both Stein and Davis hope the memorandum will give drawdown commanders the freedom they need to consolidate transition efforts.

"Some installations are just beginning (to draw down), and they're not going to close for several years," said Davis. "We'd like to enable those employees to start early in looking for the next job."

Post playoffs hit the field

By Terry K. Ray
Special to The Bayonet©

The 1994 U.S. Army Infantry Center men's softball tournament got under way Monday night at Engineer Fields one and two.

Thirty-two teams have converged on main post for the eight-day single elimination tournament. First-, second- and third-round action will be at Engineer fields with the semifinals and championship to be played at Gowdy Field Aug. 17.

In Monday night action on field one, six teams went at it tooth and nail. Here's a wrapup.

Game one; Headquarters and Headquarters Battery, 4th Battalion, 41st Field Artillery Regiment, 3rd Brigade, 24th Infantry Division, Guns vs. U.S. Army Marksmenship Unit

In a defensive battle, the Guns outdueled AMU 4-3 in seven innings.

Right fielder David Sams of AMU drove in two runs with a second inning double to give AMU an early lead at 2-0.

The Guns cut the lead in half 2-1 with a single run on second baseman Al Rumphries' solo blast to right centerfield in the bottom of the second inning.

Great defense on both sides kept the score at 2-1 until the Guns pounded out three runs on four hits in the bottom of the sixth inning to take a 4-2 advantange.

AMU had a shot to tie or take the lead in the top half of the seventh inning, but could only come up with one run before the inning ended. AMU had the potential tying run on third and the go ahead run at second when third baseman Jarvis Hicks grounded out to Rumphries at second to end the game and send AMU home.

Game two; 533rd Transportation Company, Rolling Thunder vs. Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 1st Battalion, 18th Infantry Regiment, 3rd Brigade, 24th Infantry Division

Rolling Thunder rolled out the big wheels scoring runs in every inning to take an 18-8 lead into the bottom of the sixth inning.

The headhunters cut the lead to 18-16 on a barrage of hits through the Rolling Thunder defense, only to have the game end on a tag play at second after time had expired.

Rolling Thunder was led by Jimmy McGrew, Daniel Fisher, Ricky Green and John Rea, all of whom had two RBIs. Green and Rea also had home runs for Rolling Thunder.

The Headhunters got two-run homers from Brenton Nobles and Charles Eberhardt and a solo shot from Tim Metheny to power the Headhunters.

Game three; 598th Maintenance Company, vs. 519th Personnel Services Company, 324th Forward Support Battalion, 3rd Brigade, 24th Infantry Division, Dragons

The final game of the evening went down to the wire with 598th pulling out a 15-14 win over the Dragons.

The 519th got solo homers from Kelvin Broadnax and Pablo Rodriguez. Arthur Mohead drove in two RBI with a double in the sixth inning, and Justin Bailey had a three-run dinger in the third inning.

The 598th was led by catcher Dobbey Johnson who had two doubles for three RBI. Marshall Johnson had two RBI on a single in the sixth and a solo homer in the fifth inning. Hector Navarro went three for three with an RBI.

The Dragons protested the game after the sixth inning claiming time had expired at the end of the inning, which would have given the Dragons the win at 12-10. Crew chief and first base umpire Robert Trimble made the call to continue the game because there was one minute of game time left after the third out in the bottom of the sixth inning.

Rookie, veteran wrestle all-out for All-Army

By Terry K. Ray
Special to The Bayonet©

For the All-Army wrestling team, the veterans are always looking over their shoulder at the upcoming rookies and the rookies are striving for acceptance. Meet four-year veteran Keith Sieracki and rookie Miguel Spencer.

All-Army rookie no beginner

For Miquel Spencer, life in the Army is a new experience, but wrestling is wrestling. Spencer, 20, a newcomer to the All-Army wrestling team, came straight to the team and the 29th Infantry Regiment from advanced individual training at Fort Gordon, Ga.

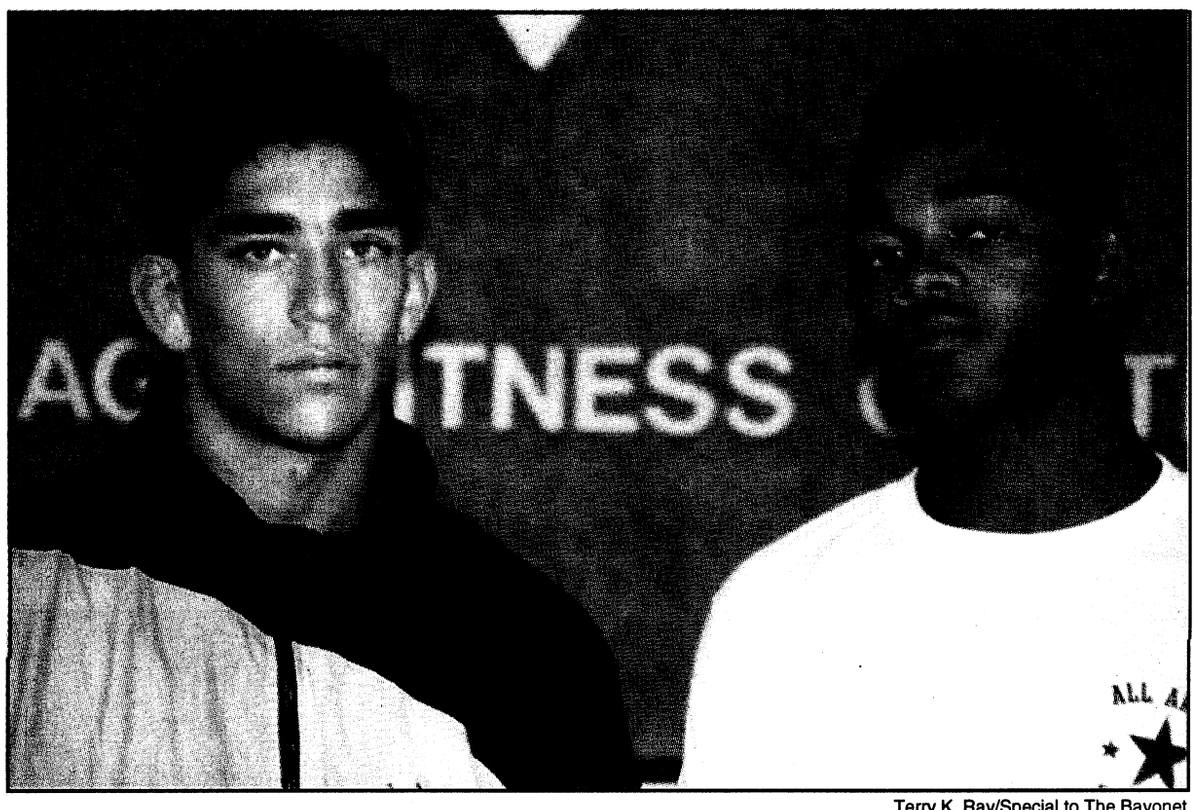
Spencer, junior national champion in Greco-Roman wrestling in 1992, has spent the last 13 years of his life pounding the mat in junior high, high school, college and now the Army.

The native Oklahoman hopes to start a new career with the Army and the wrestling team.

"I'm looking forward to getting back on the mat and getting my technique down," Spencer said. "Since I'm coming in between seasons, I don't really know what to expect. But with a trip scheduled for Germany in September, I hope to learn more as we go."

Spencer wants to wrestle at his current weight of 149 pounds and is looking forward to wrestling some of the best the Army has to offer.

"I feel privileged to be able to wrestle people such as Rodney Smith, the 1992 bronze medal winner at the Barcelona Olympic Games," Spencer said. "I hope to learn a lot from these people. Back in Oklahoma, we didn't have too much Greco. I really like Greco-Roman; I just don't have much technique. Everyone says this is the best place around to learn about Greco. I'm looking forward to it."



Spencer attended the Georgia State games in July and came home with a silver medal, getting him started in the right direction for the upcoming season, which All-Army wrestling coach Tony Thomas thinks will be the best the Army has ever had.

Besides being a new member of the All-Army team, Spencer is also a proud father. His new daughter, Alexis, was born July 5.

Wrestler is hot prospect

For specialist Keith Sieracki, the last four years of his life have been a growing-up experience. In 1990, with only six months in the Army, Sieracki jumped from Dugway Proving Grounds, Utah, where he was stationed as a military policeman, to Fort Benning, Ga., and the All-Army wrestling team.

"When I joined the Army, a guy I knew in high school told me there was an All-Army team," said Sieracki. "When I got to Utah I saw one of the All-Army posters. I called coach (All-Army wrestling coach Tony Thomas) and begged him on the phone about five or six times. With the Gulf War going on, I got the opportunity because they needed wrestlers."

Terry K. Ray/Special to The Bayonet

Veteran All Army wrestler Spc. Keith Sieracki (left) and rookie Spc. Miguel Spencer

Sieracki made the most of the chance by placing second in freestyle and third in Greco-Roman at the 1991 interservice championships. After placing seventh at nationals that year, Sieracki was sent back to his unit until November when Thomas called him back to the team.

Sieracki, 23, a former state champion and four-year letterman from Richland Center, Wis., has steadily climbed the ladder of success in the wrestling world from that initial season, but not without falling a few rungs here and there.

His second year with the team, Sieracki placed fourth at interservice and was beat out at university nationals and nationals wrestling at 149 pounds rather than his customary 163 pounds. In 1993 Sieracki won interservice at 149 pounds, then he was tossed off the team because of personal problems. "A friend of mine died and I had problems dealing with it, so it cost me the rest of the year," Sieracki said.

Sieracki battled back in 1993 by placing second at the Olympic festival at 163 pounds to show Thomas and his teammates that he was once again ready to wrestle .

"I beat a couple of highly ranked guys in freestyle, then I lost to four-time National Collegiate Athletic Association champion Pat Smith in the finals," Sieracki said. "Coach gave me the opportunity to wrestle at 163, and I tried to make the best of it."

Make the best of it he did.

Sieracki won interservice at 163 pounds in freestyle, then he won university nationals in Greco-Roman and placed fifth in freestyle. At nationals, he placed fifth in Greco-Roman and fourth at the world team trials overall.

At 163 pounds, Sieracki is ranked fourth in the nation in Greco-Roman and fifth at the university level. Thomas feels that Sieracki has the potential to move into the top three this year, with a shot at winning a national title.

"One of his biggest challengers will be his teammate Kenneth Owens, who is ranked fifth in Greco-Roman," Thomas said. "Each has beaten the other, so they know what it takes to win."

Sieracki is also being recruited by at least three major universities. The University of Oklahoma, Oregon State University and Cornell are all interested in having Sieracki on their wrestling teams.

"Now that I'm in the world class athlete program through 1996, I would love to stay with the Army team and shoot for the Olympics," Sieracki said. "The offer would have to be exceptional for me to leave because I've been with these guys for the last four years, and I think a lot of us will make the Olympic team in 1996. I hope I'm one of those guys."

Sieracki isn't the only one from his family to have proved himself on the mat. Younger brother Aaron, a two-time state champion in his own right, is now wrestling at the University of Missouri.

Sieracki attended the Georgia State Games in Atlanta from July 21 through 25 and came home with a gold medal, wrestling at 163 pounds.

"Since 1991, I've improved myself a little bit at a time. If I can keep from losing my temper during a match, my training and ability will carry me over the top." Sieracki said.

Shooters not 'in the dark' on tactics at night match

By Terry K. Ray
Special to The Bayonet©

Ninety shooters found their way in the dark to English Range at the Rifle and Pistol Club's night tactical pistol match Saturday.

In the competitor class, James Odom finished in first with Charles Rolling second and Mike Severinsen third.

Jack Lally won the standard class, outpointing Trey Carmack and Robert Grubbe by the slimmest margin.

The military class went to Lawrence Cox, with Frank Aponte a close second and David Hart finishing third.

In the law enforcement category, Ricky Phifer took first, Michael Stokes came in second and Randy Banks rounded out the top three in third.

High female went to Darleda Cox.

The next match on tap for the Rifle and Pistol Club will be on Aug. 28 at 10 a.m. This match will be a single action revolver only match. A side match for shooters with any type of handgun is also scheduled.

"This single action match is, patterned after the 'End of the Trail' shoot, which is a yearly event of the Single Action Shooting Society," said match coordinator Jim Graham. "Our match is similar except for the emphasis on pre-1900 authenticity and costumes. This is really a growing event in the shooting field, and we welcome any first time or novice shooters," Graham said.

Entry fee is $12 if paid before Aug. 23 and $15 after that date. For more information, contact Graham or Jim McQuein at 689-3371.

AMU shooters win world titles

By Terry K. Ray
Special to The Bayonet©

Two U.S. Army marksmen have won world titles. Glenn Dubis and Webster Wright propelled the U.S. Shooting Team to a Gold medal in 300-meter standard rifle competition, while teammate and Army Marksmanship Unit shooter Tom Tamas captured the Silver Medal in men's three-position rifle and a country quota slot for the 1996 Olympic Games at the World Shooting championships in Milan, Italy July 26.

Wright, of Annapolis, Md., helped stabilize the men's 300-meter standard team of Wright, Dubis and Bob Foth.

"Bob and I fired in the first relay, then we sat back and watched as patiently as possible as Dubis took us home with the gold." Wright said.

Dubis, of Bethel Park, Md., also captured the world title in the 300-meter free rifle three-position event with a score of 1,175 points out of a possible 1,200, for a new world record over Norbert Sturny of Switzerland who tallied 1,169 points for the silver.

"I was more worried about the Czech Republic shooter Petr Kurka going into the kneeling portion of the event," Dubis said. "He was four points ahead of me after the standing phase. After 20 shots in the kneeling position, the U.S. coach Bob Mitchell told me that Kurka at one point fired an eight and things went downhill for him from there."

In men's three-position rifle, the 29-year-old Tamas of Columbus, Ga., trailed Kurka by a whopping four points going into the final round. Tamas closed the gap to finish just 2.2 points out of first place.

"I almost caught the guy in the shootoff," Tamas said. "I was trying real hard to win the gold, he just shot better than I did at the end. Every time I shoot, I shoot to win for myself and the Army."

Tamas earned a country quota slot for the U.S. Shooting Team, its second in men's three-position rifle and ninth overall for the 1996 Olympic Games. To compete in the shooting events, countries must earn quota slots at designated international matches during the three years preceding the Games.

Held once every four years, The World Shooting Championships showcase the best shooters world-wide as the major international shooting competition preceding the Olympic Games.

Military Police Activity

This week's hot topic is traffic cut. Traffic cut reroutes traffic in congested areas to speed vehicles entering and leaving the installation during peak travel hours, eliminating traffic problems.

Traffic cut is conducted weekdays from 6:40 to 7:45 a.m. and 3:40 to 5 p.m. Monday through Friday. During severe inclement weather, traffic cut is not conducted for the safety of the Military police officers who are on duty at those posts.

Additionally, traffic cut will not take place during National Holidays, post training holidays, weekends, and afternoons during payday activities.

The following entries are from the Fort Benning Military Police Blotters from July 25 to 31. Such entries may be incomplete and do not determine the guilt or innocence of anyone.

• U.S. Army Infantry Center Regulation 210-5 prohibits the use of BB guns on Fort Benning. Recently, a retired soldier was struck by a BB while playing golf on the Fort Benning golf course. Two juveniles who were allegedly shooting at birds were charged with reckless conduct as a result of the shooting. Incidents of this nature are extremely dangerous and may be cause for post ejection of soldiers and their family members.

• A staff sergeant was arrested on a civil warrant for 15 counts of first degree forgery. The soldier was released to civil authorities.

• A specialist was charged with a traffic accident, driving under the influence of alcohol, improper passing, excessive speed and having an open container. The specialist was traveling west on Victory Drive at a high rate of speed, 83 mph in a 55 mph zone, and collided with a vehicle while attempting a passing maneuver, causing both vehicles to be completely totaled. The specialist was transported to the Medical Center for treatment and for a breath alcohol test. The specialist was transported back to the Military Police station, processed and released to his unit.

• A staff sergeant was charged with driving under the influence of alcohol, child endangerment, failure to drive right of the roadway, and failure to obey a lawful order. The staff sergeant failed a field sobriety test and was transported to the MP station, where he refused a breath alcohol content test. He was further processed and released to his unit.

• Other activities included 8 cases of driving under the influence of alcohol, 13 traffic accidents, 25 cases of larceny, and 3 cases of shoplifting reported at the exchange facilities.

Remember to help "Make Our Post the Best — Give Crime Arrest." Report any activity that seems wrong or out of place to the Military Police station at 545-5223 or 545-5224 or to the Crime in Progress line, 545-5222.

TAKE A BITE OUT OF CRIME®

ask the judge

By Rick Parker
Staff Judge Advocate's Office

Q: Yesterday, my battalion was on the range running proficiency drills in our M-1As, and we got a round stuck in the main gun tube. As my gunner and loader were clearing the round from the tube, I heard them talking about the Monterey County Public Repair and Improvement Authority tax refund. They were kind of excited about it, and then, the driver chimed in about the San Diego Justice Facility Refund.

I felt sort of stupid not being able to join in their spirited conversation. What can you tell me about this?

A: We have recently received information in the Legal Assistance Division about a refund of certain sales taxes paid in Monterey and San Diego counties in California. Apparently, between April 1, 1990 and September 30, 1992, Monterey County levied an additional sales tax on tangible goods (not food or services) for the Monterey County Public Repair and Improvement Authority.

Between January 1, 1989 and February 13, 1992, San Diego county levied such a tax for their Justice Facility. These taxes have now been declared unconstitutional, and the tax authorities in those counties have been ordered to refund taxes paid during those periods of time.

Again, these taxes were only paid on the purchase of goods, such as cars, furniture, appliances and the like. In order to secure a refund, you must file a claim on or before March 31, 1995 for the Monterey tax, and on or before December 31, 1994 for the San Diego tax.

You cannot file a claim for either unless the purchase price for all goods purchased during the above periods of time totals at least $5,000.00. The refund amount is 0.5% of the total purchase price (0.005 x purchase price).

You need to have the following information in order to file a claim: the date of purchase of each item, the vendor, a description of the item purchased, and the purchase price.

You also need to have a copy of the invoice, bill of sale, purchase contract, or other document showing that you actually paid the sales tax.

If you feel that you may have a claim for a refund, contact the Legal Assistance Office for further information and a copy of the claims form being used. Our telephone number is 545-3281.

Nigerian scam takes toll on victims

Office of the Chief Postal Inspector

WASHINGTON — U.S. postal inspectors warn that American businesses are being targeted by a "Nigerian prince" for an old-fashioned confidence swindle purportedly offering huge sums of money from the Nigerian government. This scheme, through implausible at first glance, has achieved remarkable success among unwitting American entrepreneurs.

This is how the scheme works. American companies are contacted by mail by a mysterious Nigerian businessman with an impressive, and probably fictitious, title such as "prince," "chief" or "doctor." The writer states that he is contacting the American business on a referral and that he is operating with the knowledge of Nigerian government officials.

Offering only the sketchiest of details, the writer explains that a large some of money, usually from $10 million to $30 million, is available from the government of Nigeria, if the American firm will act as the accepting agent. For this service, the American firm can expect to receive a fee of 30 percent or more of the amount transferred. The balance is to be paid to the Nigerian accomplices.

The letter instructs the interested recipient to forward three copies of "stamped and signed letter-headed papers," three copies of "stamped and signed pro forma invoices," and the name of the American company's bank and its account number. These documents will permit the Nigerian officials to proceed with the "remittance approval" and transfer of funds.

Businessmen who have fallen prey to this scheme were invited to visit Nigeria and meet with their fellow conspirators before finalizing the transfer of funds. During the visit they were introduced to the Nigerian government officials who supposedly could approve transfers of funds. The American visitors were also required to put down a small deposit to show good faith and help defray some of the expenses of their ambitious hosts, including bribes to the proper authorities.

Several victims reported that this shakedown took some menacing turns, causing them concern for their personal safety. One unlucky visitor recalled being confronted by two Nigerians in military fatigues carrying automatic weapons before being admitted to his host's compound. This visitor was strip searched by government security agents and was forced to turn over $4,000 in travelers' checks to his accomplice before receiving permission to leave the county.

For the most gullible, additional demands for money will be made by the Nigerian confidant as long as the American will pay. The biggest rip-off is a "tax" that must be paid before the ultimate payoff, which of course, never materializes. One victim admitted paying more than $400,000 before reporting the fraud to authorities.

The arrogant perpetrators of this scheme know that few victims will step forward to complain for fear of implicating themselves in a fraud being committed on the government of Nigeria. Anyone who has been victimized should contact the Postal Inspection Service, Field Operations Support Center, Memphis, Tenn. 38161-0006, or call (800) 372-8347.

Mary reminds us of obedience

By George W. Holston
USAIC Chaplain's Office

Mary's willingness to participate in the incarnation reminds each of us that God always chooses to work with us at our various places in life

On Aug. 15, the church sets aside a day to recall the life of the ever blessed Virgin Mary, the mother of our Lord Jesus the Christ.

We know little about Mary. She appears in the New Testament at strategic points in Christ's life. Mary carries the Christ child in her womb and then raises him to adulthood. She follows his teaching ministry and continues to express her motherly concern for her son.

Mary keeps watch at the foot of the cross and witnesses her son's final moments of life. She goes to the tomb on Easter morning and becomes one of the first witnesses to the resurrection.

Other than these instances, everything else falls within the tradition the Church has built around her life and witness.

Mary's role in the Christian tradition, however, is by no means small or insignificant. She is the "Mother of God." Orthodox Christians address her as "Theotokos," which means, "The God bearer."

Mary's simple act of willingness to be used by God set the course of salvation history on its final journey. Mary's submission to the will of God reminds us that salvation history with its acts of God's redeeming love do not occur in a vacuum.

The stage for this drama is always within the context of human history where people play a predominate role.

Mary's willingness to participate in the incarnation reminds each of us that God always chooses to work with us at our various places in life.

The greatest lesson of the incarnation and Mary's role in that event is that God always comes to us, not the other way around. This is the way of grace.

God comes to us, accepts and loves us as we are, and then begins the process of transformation.

Mary's presence in the church's tradition reminds us of the human side of God's relationship with us. She reminds us that God is always coming to help his children (Luke 1:50, 54-55).

reflections

Finally, Mary reminds us that the meaning and purpose for our lives is found in faithful obedience to God's call to us.

When we pray with Mary, "Behold, the Lord's servant, let it be according to your word," (Luke 1:38), we discover obedience is not a burden, but the source of our joy and wholeness.

Let us remember the ever blessed Virgin Mary, her life, and her gift to us in Jesus the Christ. Let our praises be summed up in the word of that ancient hymn: "...O higher than the cherubim, more glorious than the seraphim; lead our praises, Alleluia. Thou bearer of the eternal word; most gracious magnify the Lord..."

HEAVEN requires more than just good intentions

By Dale Forrester
USAIC Chaplains' Office

reflections

We just finished a fantastic three-week vacation! My family and I saw a good part of the country, visited family and friends, fished, relaxed on a beautiful mountain lake, and just generally has a good time.

When we started planning the trip I had the best of intentions to maintain my physical training program. In fact the very first articles I packed into my suitcase were my running shoes. I wasn't going to let this leave pass like so many others. I would not run for the duration of the leave and then feel like someone has beaten me with a stick after the first PT day back at work.

I said I wasn't going to let this leave be like so many others before it, but . . . "Hey, you know what it's like." You drive all day, then have to find a place to feed the family.

You definitely don't have time to run, then. Then you are with family that you haven't seen since before your last assignment, so you certainly don't take an hour away from your brief time together and go off and run!

Well, the days turned into weeks and the running shoes went undisturbed in the bottom of my suitcase. My good intentions were just and only that: good intentions. I really had planned to run. I was prepared to run. I had all the equipment for running. I just didn't run.

You know what happened. When I got home, put those shoes on my feet and finally hit the road my lungs felt as though they were on fire and my legs felt like rubber. I couldn't hang.

Life itself is a lot like this experience. We set out with the best of intentions. We are going to be good citizens, faithful spouses, wonderful parents, outstanding soldiers. Then along the way we get distracted by other things and before you know it, the journey is over. When we look back, so many of our great plans have come to naught.

Jesus said that not everyone who wants to go to heaven will get there (Matthew 7:21). It takes more than good intentions. He has given us everything we need to get there, but we have to take his gifts. We have to put on the shoes and run the race.

You know, maybe the reason I didn't run during my leave is that I just don't like to run? Nah!

Turtles teach us timeless truth

By Robert Thompson
USAIC Chaplains' Office

reflections

A turtle was in the middle of the road — right on the dividing line. At first glance I thought it was a rock about the size of my fist. But on second glance, I slowed down the car I was driving.

It was a turtle all right. His shell was enough to identify him. I saw no feet and only the wary tip of his head. He's really scared and confused, I thought.

Each passing car must seem like he Mongolian invasion of Rome. He can't tell where the danger's coming from or how to avoid it. He's frozen with fear.

I rolled on past, but then I hit the brakes. I stared into the rearview mirror, checking for traffic and pondering his plight. How could he (or she) survive out here on the razor's edge? The road wasn't busy, but only one car could bring disaster. I'd seen several of those before.

The turtle didn't know about the migratory patterns of cars and farm trucks. It's ready and able but not willing. I didn't blame it. I knew enough about myself to judge it harshly.

I flitted a look at the mirror again, then put the car in reverse. When I opened my car door, the turtle was close enough to touch without leaving my seat. The sturdy feel of its shell belied the frenzied fear inside. Back in the safety of the shoulder of the road, it came to life again and headed for the ditch.

I drove off down the road, resuming my original journey but feeling something like a good samaritan.

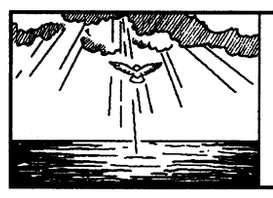
Less than a week later, I passed by another one. I was riding with a friend, and we both saw it. This turtle was as big as a large dinner plate and could have passed for the grandfather of the one I had moved.

"He's been around a long time to get that big," my friend said. But how much longer it would be around was up for grabs because this creature was frozen in the middle of the lane of traffic. He looked as scared and confused as the one a few days ago.

My friend and I agreed to go back to try a quick rescue. By this time, four or five other vehicles had straddled the turtle. As we turned around, I anxiously noticed that seven or eight other cars were heading in its direction. We drove back quickly, but never had 50 yards seemed like such a long distance to travel. I prepared myself for disaster.

With the cars nearing the animal, I had trouble seeing what was happening. I strained my eyes and leaned forward in the seat. After the first car passed, it wasn't in the middle of the lane. Then I saw it, pointed toward the center and wobbling on its feet. It was moving!

A surge of hope leaped inside me. In the center of the road, it was less likely to face a crunchy death. Now the rest of the cars drove by safely. Yet it needed to move to the road's shoulder to find lasting safety.



That's what it did. Each lumbering flop of its shell improved its chances. Only one car passed over it as it edged toward the shoulder.

By the time my friend and I reached the place where we first saw the turtle in trouble, it was already waddling in the grass beyond the shoulder.

It disappeared from our sight, so we drove back over the little bridge and spotted it sliding back into the creek. The drama was over, and the three of us were content.

A couple of nights later, I drove back to the first rescue site. Maybe my help means that the little creature will one day grow to the size of the one my friend and I saw. Maybe the little one learned a little about fear and growth. I know I did.

Fear of failing will stop me cold at times, but I still need to get moving, whether I move with help or on my own. Both ways work fine. Fear is not the failure; freezing is. When I move, I grow.

Those who drink of the water that I will give them will never be thirsty.

-John 4:14

Rappelling tower to help trainees build confidence

Ruth J. Spaller

Two soldiers from the 43rd Engineer Battalion make the first rappel down the tower they built for the 2nd Battalion, 58th Infantry Regiment, to officially open it for training.

By Ruth J. Spaller
Bayonet staff writer

The 2nd Battalion, 58th Infantry Regiment officially opened the Infantry Training Brigade's newest training tool Tuesday — a 79-foot rappelling tower.

The tower, built by soldiers of the 43rd Engineer Battalion, is intended to help boost the confidence of initial entry training soldiers, said Battalion Commander Lt. Col. Bruce D. Grant.

Grant said he saw the "huge" rappelling tower and rope bridge obstacle that basic training soldiers in administration and support fields negotiate every cycle at Fort Jackson, S.C. and decided infantry trainees should have something similar.

"We're building warriors here," Grant said. "What better to build the warrior spirit than that self-confidence that comes from overcoming a natural fear ?"

The tower, he said, will be used by all of the battalions in the Infantry Training Brigade to train in conjunction with the confidence course.

The point of incorporating rappelling into one station unit training is not necessarily to teach mountaineering skills, Grant said.

"We're teaching soldiers not to overcome mountains, although that's part of it, but really to overcome mountains in their minds," Grant said.

"We teach soldiers on this tower to rely on their fellow soldiers and their equipment to get them over a big obstacle," Grant said.

"What we want is the spirit, the teamwork and the dedication that comes with doing something hard ... facing a challenge, hitting it head on and overcoming it."

> "What better to build the warrior spirit than the self-confidence that comes from overcoming a natural fear?"
> — Lt. Col. Bruce D. Grant
> Commander, 2nd Bn, 58th Inf, Regt.

Tucked back into the woodline behind the physical training field, "Patriot Tower," named for the battalion, is made up of two levels.

The first is an inclined wall about half the height of the main face, designed for giving soldiers basic instruction in rappelling techniques.

A ladder leads up the back of the tower to the second level, the top of the structure, where soldiers can rappel down the main face — a solid wall wide enough for two rappellers — or off of a helicopter skid on the side into mid-air to simulate a helicopter rappel.

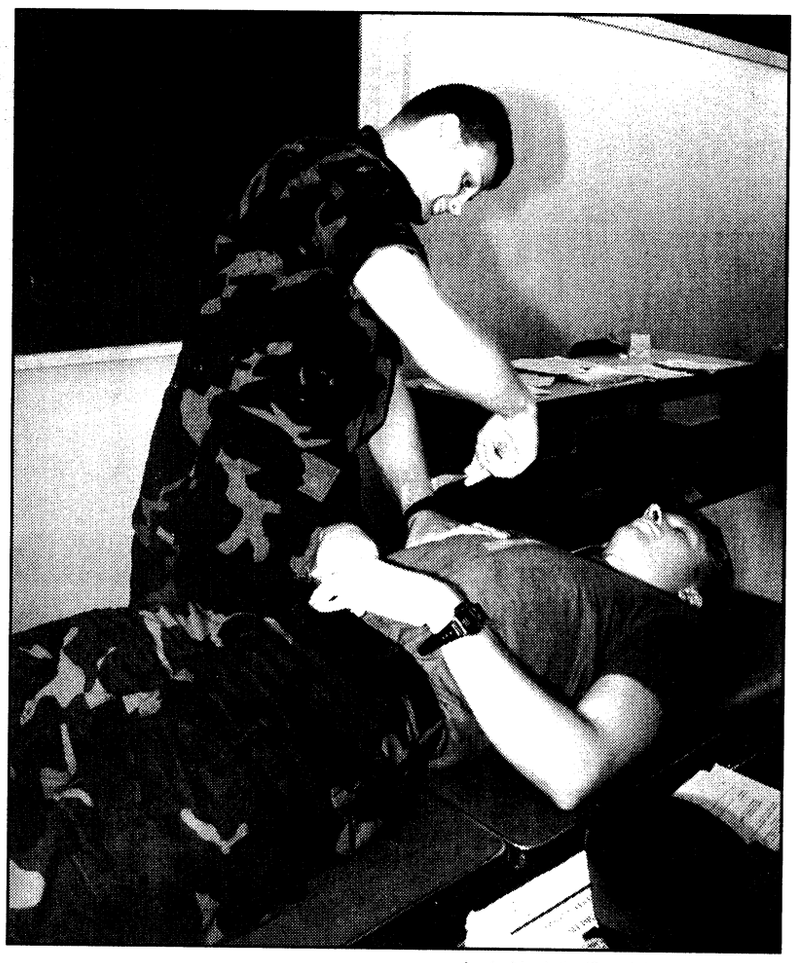
Finishing touches such as the helicopter skid, rope safety devices and stabilization guide wires still need to be added.

"This is a really good tower for initial entry training soldiers because it's got the small sloped wall so those guys who are really, really scared can go down that first," said Pvt. 1 Matthew Weaver, one of the two trainees from Company B to make the first training rappel down the tower.

Weaver, who has a background in rappelling, came down face first, or "Australian" style.

Next to him was Pfc. Benjamin Lampe, also of Company B, who had never rappelled before the company did it in training.

"I don't know exactly how to put it in words, but it does build your self-confidence, because you have to trust the rope, you have to trust yourself," he said.



"That's the point of this — so you can see that you can hit your fears and to see that you can lick them," Weaver said.

The unit started rappelling as part of training about two cycles ago, according to drill sergeants Staff Sgt. Michael Coleman and Sgt. 1st Class Franklin Hall, but they traveled to Todd Field to use the Ranger Training Brigade's tower.

"Having this tower easily accessible will give drill sergeants a lot more time to train up," Coleman said.

It also cuts down on logistics and transportation, Hall said, and now they'll be able to accomplish the same training in about half the time.

Three Air Force service members are among the Combat Lifesaver's Course graduates completing the training Aug. 5, marking the first time individuals other than Army soldiers have taken the course.

The Air Force personnel are members of the 17th Air Support Operations Squadron, stationed at Fort Benning, according to Tech Sgt. Andrew Liermann who coordinated the training with members of the 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor Regiment.

"We work directly with the Army, so completing the course is a natural outgrowth of our training," said Lierman.

Senior Airmen James Vandervelde and Eric Dosser and Sgt. William Collett were three of 19 individuals to complete the training, which teaches first response medical intervention for battlefield situations.

The one-week course teaches soldiers ways to temporarily sustain an injury until a medic can arrive, according to Sgt. Cordell Dunlap, course instructor from Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 2nd Bn., 69th Armor.

The course, which included both practical and written exams, covered such areas as preventing shock, treating chest, head and abdominal injuries, applying splints, initiating intravenous fluids and transporting a wounded soldiers.

The course is offered about four times per year; the next Combat Lifesaver's Course is scheduled for October.

Foot marches

OSUT soldiers learn these are not walks in park

2nd. Battalion., 58th Infantry Regiment

Initial entry soldiers assigned to the Infantry Training Brigade participate in a minimum of seven tactical foot marches during the one station unit training cycle.

Foot marches are the movement of troops and equipment by foot with limited support by vehicles.

"The purpose of this training is to teach the soldier the skills necessary to complete long distance tactical foot marches, arrive at their destination at the prescribed time and be physically able to execute their tactical mission," said Captain Clarence Butler, commander of Company A, 2nd Battalion, 58th Infantry Regiment.

"During the foot marches, several of the soldiers are assessed on Skill Level 1 tasks that they've learned during previous training," Butler said. "For example, they put on their M-17 protective mask, splint a suspected fracture, send a radio message and decontaminate their skin and equipment."

The training is progressive, beginning with Foot March Period 1, where the soldier is allowed one hour to move a four-kilometer distance.

The focus of this period is the teaching and coaching of the proper techniques of a foot march, including the distance between soldiers, how to carry the weapon, performance of security halts, crossing intersections and actions taken at rest stops.

"I think that the foot marches are the toughest part of OSUT training," said Staff Sgt. Darryl Moore, a drill sergeant in Co. A, 2nd Bn., 58th Inf. Regt.

"It's not just the physical walking, but the mental stress for the trainee of knowing once they get where they're going, they still have an entire day of training to go through in some cases.

"For many of the soldiers, this is the first time they are required to walk an extended distance, not to mention having to carry all of their equipment. A few of them don't make it, but the majority of them do."

"The foot marches that I've participated in have prepared me to take my place in my next unit," said Pvt. 1 Graham Moore, a soldier assigned to Co. A, 2nd Bn., 58th Inf. Regt.

"They were demanding on both my body and mind, but taught me the importance of caring for my feet and remaining hydrated throughout the duration of the march, whether it's a four-kilometer movement or a 25 kilometer."

"Many of the young civilians who arrive here for training have little or no self-discipline," said Sgt. 1st Class Timothy Johnson, a drill sergeant in Co. A, 2nd Bn., 58th Inf. Regt.

"The progressive foot marches who we do, from four to 25 kilometers, is a direct reflection of the progressive level of discipline the soldier develops during the training cycle," Johnson said. "Foot marching is just one of those tasks where each soldier has to reach way down inside and motivate himself to keep putting one foot in front of the other.

"The foot marching training plan within the ITB does an outstanding job in preparing the soldier for road marches in their line units and develops the soldier's discipline."

world war II

50 years ago...

- Allied troops invaded southern France between Marseilles and Nice, meeting little concentrated resistance.

Within two days, American troops would push toward Paris on a 70-mile front freeing the cities of Orleans, Dreux, Chartres and Chateaudun.

- Pacific Fleet Commander Admiral Chester Nimitz said that a combination of sea blockades and aerial bombardments may force Japan to surrender before an invasion of the home islands takes place.
- Allied forces narrowed the German escape route to 12 miles between Argentan and Falaise using artillery fire, slowing escape for nearly 100,000 Nazi troops.
- Allied forces took control of Florence, Italy. The city was spared destructive fighting.
- Russian troops entered Ossow, seven miles northeast of Warsaw, but retreated in the face of strong German counterattacks.
- About 500 of 1,800 German POWs working at the Army Ordnance Depot in Stockton, California were back to work after one day of protest against the War Department's order increasing their work day to nine hours.
- At Fort Benning two escaped German prisoners of war were captured when a military policeman became suspicious of the unfeminine way a "woman" was walking.

The "woman" was actually Werner Schulze, 19, who had escaped from a POW camp in Florida.

Soldiers join forces with Boy Scouts in camp program

By Jerrie Macintire
Special to The Bayonet ©

Fort Benning soldiers have joined forces with the Boy Scouts of America in a camp program which allows service men and women to practice and teach outdoor skills while helping adolescents earn scouting merit badges.

From archery to riflery to first aid, boys at Thunder Scout Reservation near Molena, Ga., have learned a variety of outdoor and survival skills from a staff of expert counselors which has included several Fort Benning soldiers.

The joint venture benefits both the soldiers and the scouts, according to Staff Sgt. William Viruet, scout coordinator for Fort Benning and the surrounding areas.

The soldiers sharpen skills and reinforce their knowledge because, "When you teach, you learn," Viruet said. In addition, Fort Benning soldiers said they took pride in their role as mentors for the boys, who represent "the future of our country."

The boys benefit by learning leadership and outdoor skills necessary to earn merit badges, which are needed to attain the ultimate rank of Eagle Scout.

Soldiers from various units on post have served as counselors for Camp Thunder, said Viruet.

"Who better than an infantry soldier can teach orienteering and survival skills?" he said. "A combat engineer can provide complete information on bridge building, while an Army cook is trained to provide subsistence in the wilderness," he said.

Soldiers and civilian counselors alike must have knowledge and expertise in their areas of instruction to serve as Boy Scout guides.

This summer, soldiers provided support in several areas including first aid, riflery and archery.

"I love it here," said Sgt. 1st Class Daniel Allen of 2nd Battalion, 18th Infantry Regiment.

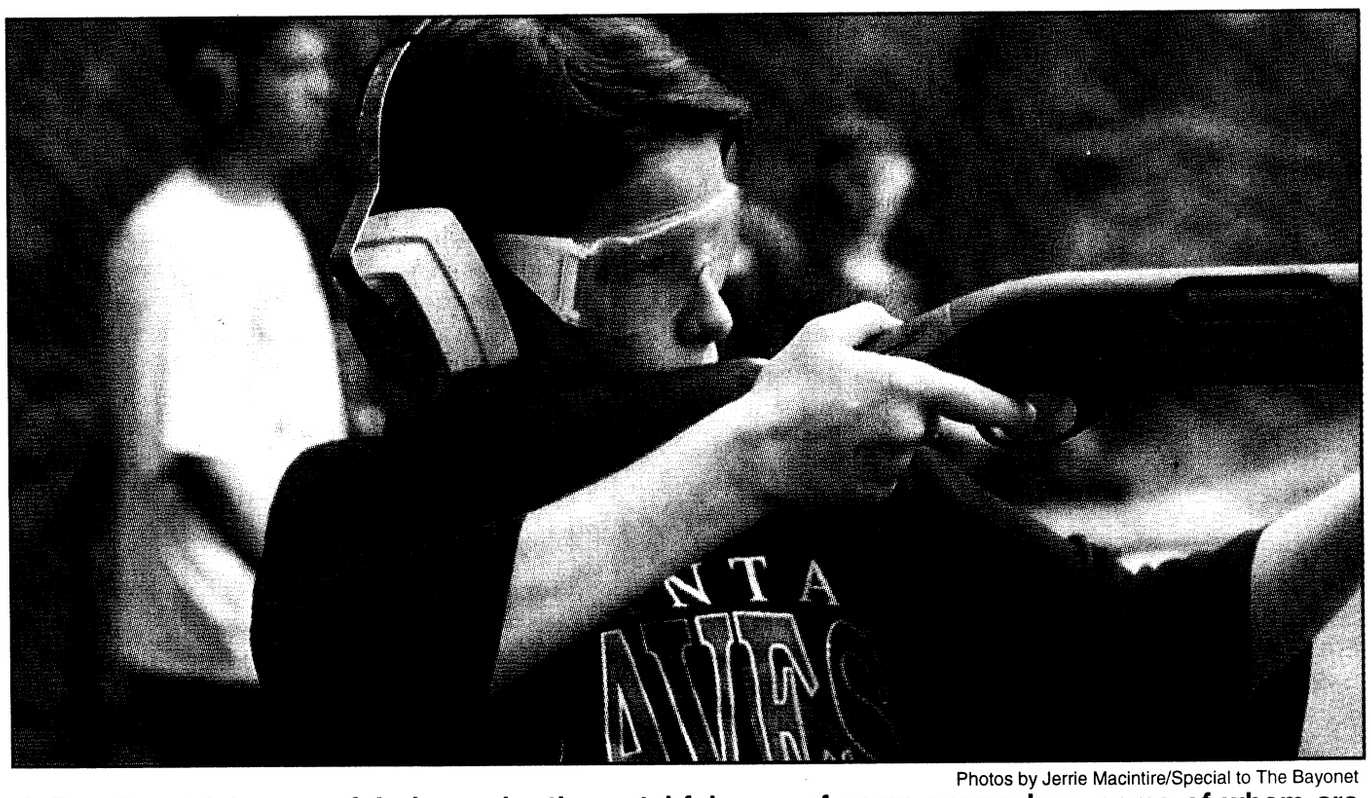
Allen, a world-class archer, said he enjoys inspiring boys to learn survival and safety skills while exercising self-discipline. Allen has shared his knowledge of archery, from the art of tieing bow strings using beeswax and special knots to fashioning arrows that will travel straight and true to a bull's-eye.

"We stayed up late with one kid. He had the determination, and it was my challenge to help him get that badge," said Allen.

Allen said he tries to work with all interested boys, but especially those who are somewhat withdrawn and dubious about their skills.

Helping the Scouts develop skills and self-confidence is rewarding, and "has given me all the sons I could want," Allen said.

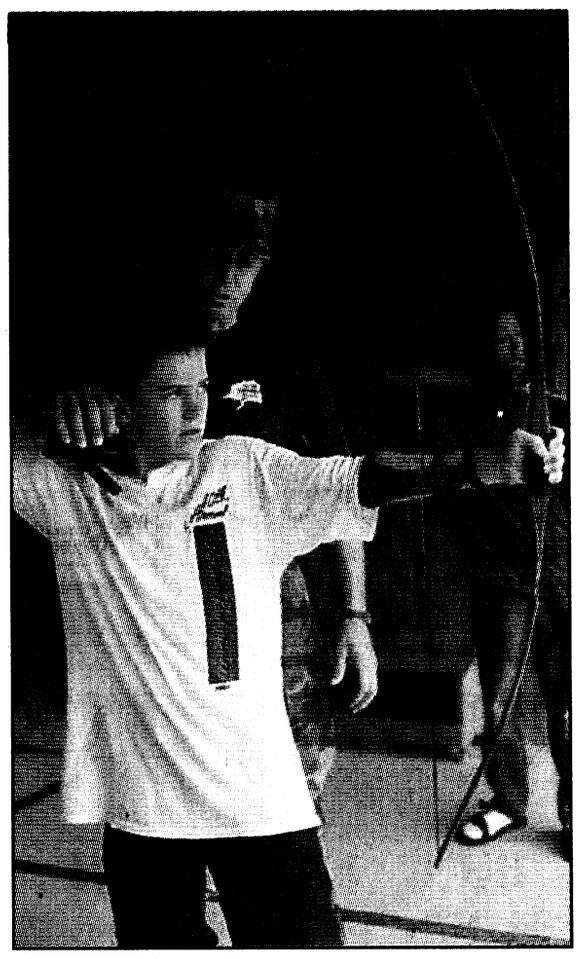
Staff Sgt. John Martin has also been loaning expert advice to the campers this summer, as groups of boys rotate through the one-hour rifle and archery classes each day.



Martin, a soldier from the 2nd Bn., 18th Inf. Regt., was in Boy Scouting for 22 years and holds the rank of Eagle Scout.

He sees the qualities of discipline, self-motivation, and striving for excellence a common thread among Boy Scouts and soldiers, he said.

Discipline is the key to successful scouting and success later in life, and he tries to instill the importance of it upon the boys who attend Camp Thunder, he said.



While working with rifles and arrows, counselors impress the importance of "safety first," which is also an Army standard, said Martin.

Although safety always comes first, two Fort Benning medics have treated a constant stream of minor physical complaints, a natural consequence of an outdoor camp focusing on survival, leadership and confidence skills, according to Pfc. Shelia Guinn, 1st Bn., 11th Inf. Regt.

"We've had injured fingers from wood carvers, a wire cut from a bow, sore feet, and even a case of tonsillitis. We've seen a little of everything," said Pfc. Kurt Swan of the 2nd Bn. 18th Inf. Regt.

As boys learn outdoor skills such as fishing and canoeing, medical problems such as embedded fish hooks , bee stings and cuts have come up, Swan said.

Camp Director Joe Wortham said the diligence of the soldiers has enhanced the camp experience for Boy Scouts.

"The soldiers and the boys have both received personal satisfaction from this arrangement," Wortham said.

Teaching outdoor and survival skills is a focus of Camp Thunder, part of a 2,000-acre wilderness retreat with biking and hiking trails, water sports area complete with canoe base, and rocky terrain for climbing. The camp also teaches rapelling, rope bridge building and orienteering, among other offerings.

Directed by the Flint River Council of the Boy Scouts of America in Griffin, Ga., the camp has been in operation for 50 years and hosts up to 300 boys each week mainly from the southeastern portion of the United States.

The boys attending the camp live in cabins, tents, or three sided adirondacks for the week, and earn merit badges and rank advancement in their fields of interest.

Programs offered include all types of aquatics, field sports, ecology and environmental studies, wilderness survival program, crafts, and first aid studies. For more information on the camp, call 404-227-4556, or write:

Boy Scouts, military share many qualities

By Jerrie Macintire
Bayonet staff writer

The Boy Scouts of America and the military have some common threads such as excellence, duty, and patriotism that can be traced back the history of scouting.

The Boy Scouts was founded by a British general, Sir Robert Baden-Powell, in 1908, after a book he had written on reconnaissance and scouting became popular with young readers.

His second book, "Scouting for Boys," served as a template for the American organization of the Boy Scouts, founded in 1910.

Like the military, Boy Scouts receive rising rank by learning and demonstrating various skills and accomplishments signified by merit badges. Boy Scout and Girl Scout organizations are designed to build leaders.

The Girl Scout organization is similar in that girls receive badges of recognition for various skills and accomplishments.

Founded in the United States in 1912 by Juliet Gordon Low, the Girl Scouts of America followed a British format established by Agnes Baden-Powell, sister of the British general who established the Boy Scouts.

Today, scouting is a worldwide movement focusing on helping boys and girls develop character, citizenship and mental and physical excellence.

555th returns for reunion

Members of Army's first all-black airborne unit gather, reminisce

By Shelby Carr
Bayonet Staff Writer

Members of the Army's first all-black airborne unit returned to Fort Benning Thursday 50 years after they first went through airborne training on post.

Members of the 555th Parachute Infantry Battalion, known as the Triple Nickels, were greeted by Maj. Gen. Jerry White, Fort Benning's commanding general, saw the "I am the Infantry" laser show, watched a demonstration of the airborne school by the 1st Battalion (Airborne), 507th Infantry Regiment, and observed a jump by members of the Silver Wings, Fort Benning's command exhibition parachute team and a jump demonstration at Fryar Drop Zone by various active duty and retired military parachutist.

The 555th Parachute Infantry Battalion was activated in 1944 as the first all-black airborne unit. The 555th conducted missions as smoke jumpers, the only airborne firefighters in the Army. The Triple Nickels fought fires in the Western United States set by Japanese bombs sent across the Pacific by balloons.

After World War II, the 555th Par. Inf. Bn. was designated the 3rd Battalion, 505th Airborne Infantry Regiment. Many members of the Triple Nickels saw combat in the Korean Conflict as soldiers in the 2nd Ranger Company (Airborne) and the 187th Airborne Regimental Combat Team.

"You set a standard for the U.S. Army," White said. "In terms of dedication, in terms of service, in terms of loyalty to your country and the Army. You have provided us a tradition which has been very, very meaningful to what we have accomplished."

After a presentation of "I am the Infantry" which brought gasps from the crowd, the Triple Nickels were treated to a demonstration of modern day airborne training by the cadre of the 1st Battalion (Airborne), 507th Infantry.

The demonstration included examples of mock door training, the 34-foot tower training, a jumpmaster personnel inspection and a description of the different types of parachutes now in use by the Army.

"I can't see too much difference in the training," said Ray H. Royce, a Triple Nickel veteran with more than 100 jumps. "Basically the 34-foot towers are the same, the 250-foot towers are the same and the mock-up was the same."

Many members of the Triple Nickels remembered friends from units in which they served.

Harold Dale, a retired sergeant major, and David Adams, a private first class who served with Dale in the 555th and served in the same squad in the 501st Infantry Regiment, said they looked forward to seeing each other again.

They visited the Airborne Walk to see the plaques commemorating the airborne units they had served with and to reminisce about the times they had together.

Frank J. Barbee (right) visits with Rocky Rochon, both members of the 555th Parachute Infantry Association Inc., during their 50th anniversary reunion at Fort Benning.

"It is nice being on this side of it (the airborne training)," Adams said. "It is nice to see that there are still paratroopers. I want to jump out of an airplane now."

After the airborne training demonstration, three members of the Silver Wings jumped in. One of the members was a female "black hat" or Airborne School instructor, a position not available to women when the Triple Nickels went through airborne training and served in World War II.

Carrot Top will make use of trunkfuls of unique props and stand-up comedy when he performs tonight.

Some of his props include a rubber hand stitched to the side of an Army hat so soldiers do not have to worry about saluting and a Dr. Kevorkian bath toy, a rubber ducky with an electric plug.

Appearances on "The Tonight Show", Fox's "Comic Strip Live", A&E's "Evening at the Improv" and "MTV's Half Hour Comedy Hour" have showcased him and his orange curls to millions.

His comedy career began on a college campus in an amateur comedy contest as a stand-up comedian and has progressed to night clubs and television appearances with many unique props.

With no set comedy routine, many props and the reputation of tailoring his show for the audience, tonight promises to make for an interesting evening.

Tickets are $17.50 cash only, and are available at the Three Arts Theatre ticket office or call 571-5894 for other locations.

29th answers call for help

By Shelby Carr
Bayonet Staff Writer

Fort Benning Red Cross needed help packing approximately 1300 relief packages Aug. 5 at their warehouse at Lawson Army Airfield, so 27 soldiers from 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment met the call.

Sgt. 1st Class Ervin Rodriguez, operations noncommissioned officer in charge, put out a call for volunteers from his unit after receiving a call for help from Fort Benning Red Cross.

"They needed the help," said one volunteer. "We didn't do it for fame and glory.

"You hope you never have the misfortune of being in a disaster, but it is nice to know people will help you out," the volunteer said.

The 1st Bn., 29th Inf. Regt. volunteers gave up their payday activities time to help the Red Cross.

"Sgt. Rodriguez was getting something together so we helped him out," the volunteer said.

In four and one half hours, the soldiers, working in two groups, packed approximately 900 garbage cans full of supplies and 400 packages of kitchen supplies.

Each garbage can contained a gallon bucket, a gallon of bleach, two blankets and other assorted supplies.

The kitchen supplies included sponges, dish soap and other items needed in times of disaster.

"A lot of people wanted to help out," said Cpt. Shawn Phelps, a member of Headquarters and Headquarters Company.

Support Hope enters third week

Army News Service

STUTTGART, Germany — Now in its third week, Operation Support Hope continues efforts to save dying Rwandan refugees in Zaire.

Air-bridge operations have run around the clock since they began July 22, bringing in supplies and equipment to support troops and their relief efforts. More cargo-handling teams and ground transportation are on the way to relieve over-burdened airports in Zaire and Kenya.

U.S. troops have begun purifying water, with equipment capable of producing 167,000 gallons per day. As more equipment arrives, the output should increase to more than a million gallons a day. A pipeline has also been set up to send water into Goma and Zaire. Ten U.S. tank trucks are earmarked for deployment to help distribute water.

European Command continues efforts to provide immediate help, and to build infrastructure — virtually across the African continent — to keep up the flow of personnel and equipment for Operation Support Hope.

for the record

In last week's edition of the Bayonet, an error was made in the 4th Ranger Training Battalion's open house photo feature on page 1-1. The article said 5th RTB was scheduled to make a jump from a helicopter.

Actually, Team One, Regimental Reconnaissance Detachment, 75th Ranger Regiment was scheduled to make the jump .

Fort Benning employee nets 5 gold medals

Works out during lunch to keep in shape

By Richard Brill
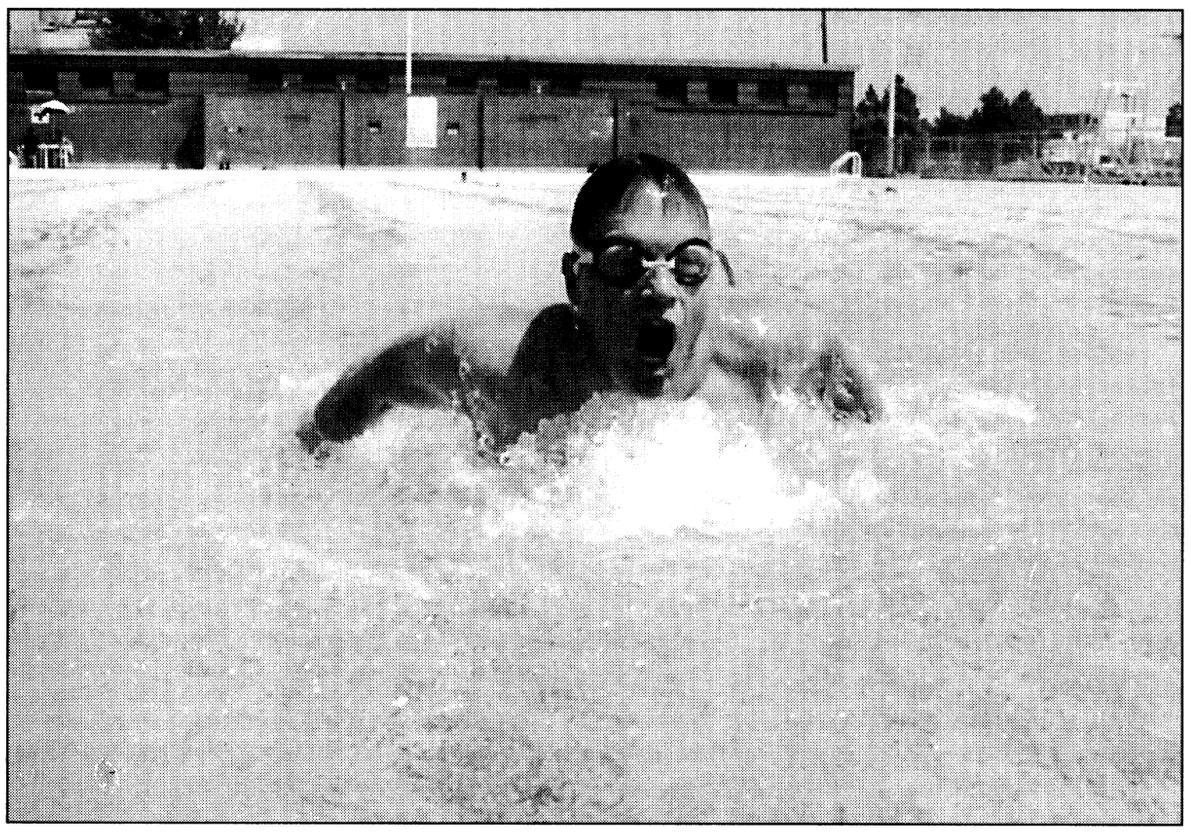
Special to The Bayonet©

An award-winning member of Fort Benning's work force can be found every day at noon at one of the post's swimming facilities.



Chuck Gantner, a military personnel specialist for the Office of Infantry Proponency, skips his lunch daily to keep his mind and body in shape with a vigorous swimming workout.

It's this kind of dedication to the sport that netted him five gold medals at the Georgia Games July 23.

Competing in the 45 to 49 age group, Gantner won gold medals in the 50- and 100-yard backstroke, the 50-yard butterfly, the 50-yard freestyle and the 100-yard individual medley.

Gantner has had a lifelong passion for competitive swimming that began when he was a boy of 11 in Piscataway, New Jersey.

Gantner was excited about his recent victories.

Richard Brill/Special to The Bayonet

Chuck Gantner, who won five gold medals in the Georgia Games, works out in a pool on post.

"It was a very interesting experience and a lot of fun," he said. "I did well and I'm happy with my performance. At least I was able to gauge where I stood at this particular time."

Gantner competed against about 200 other competitors from around the state, many of whom are on the Georgia Masters team, to which Gantner also belongs.

The Georgia Masters is the state version of the World Masters, a swimming organization that sponsors swimming competitions, including a world competition every four years.

At the Masters World Game in Toronto in 1985, he won five gold medals and a silver, and in 1986 at the World Masters Swimming Championship in Tokyo he won three gold medals and set a world record in his age group in the 200-meter backstroke. Two years ago he won all six events that he entered at the Southeastern Swimming Championships at Emory University.

"It's the Tokyo competition that I'm most proud of, because my father was an Olympian and didn't get to go to the 1944 Olympics — which would have been held at the same pool I swam at in Tokyo. My father was a platoon leader in the Marines in World War II."

Even though he enjoys the competitive aspect of his sport, Gantner said that swimming is really just an enjoyable hobby for him, especially now that he is married and has a family. Gantner married Lisa Williams of Columbus in 1986 and has two children, Glenn, 5, and Alyssa, 2. His wife is a local family practice physician.

"Swimming is a lot of fun and it's a great way to stay in shape and beat stress, but my priorities have shifted and I spend more time with my family and swim just for fun and to keep in shape," he said.

Gantner's exploits are not strictly limited to aquatics. A 1968 West Point graduate and airborne ranger, he saw service in Vietnam in 1969 as a recon platoon leader with the American Division and then as aide de camp to the assistant division commander, Gen. John Donaldson.

"I didn't have to do any swimming in Vietnam as part of my duties, thank goodness," he said.

Gantner also holds degrees from North Carolina and Georgia State universities in political science, psychology and education. He has taught psychology and counseling courses at Troy State University, Fort Benning.

A strong advocate of the Greek ideal of keeping both mind and body fit, Gantner demonstrated his mental prowess by qualifying as a member of Mensa in 1975.

Gantner has worked at Fort Benning since 1970, with the exception of two years spent in Saudi Arabia in the early 1980s helping train the Saudi national guard.

"Fort Benning is a great place to work," he said. "I think the facilities and the spirit that the Fort Benning leadership displays in encouraging military and civilian personnel to stay fit are great. It's that kind of spirit that helped the post to be selected the best in the Department of Defense."

Commissaries to sell magazines

Defense Commissary Agency

FORT LEE, Va. — Come October, shoppers in commissaries located on Army and Air Force installations in the United States can expect to find selected magazines stocked for sale, according to officials with the Defense Commissary agency.

In a joint venture, DeCA and the Army and Air Force Exchange Service agreed last month to AAFES' providing the magazines for resale in the commissaries. Last November, the House Morale, Welfare and Recreation Panel, which oversees commissaries and exchanges, decided to allow the sale of magazines and periodicals in commissaries.

"Initially, during the six-month trial period, TV Guide, People, Woman's World, Cosmopolitan, Woman's Day, Family Circle, First, Glamour, Good Housekeeping and Time will be sold on racks near the check-out stands. Adult reading material will not be stocked" said Joe McCarty, chief, Merchandising and Promotion Division, Headquarters, DeCA.

The magazines were selected from industry's list of top sellers.

USO, AT&T searching for talent

Army News Service

WASHINGTON — Searching for musically talented service members, the USO and AT&T Countdown to Stardom '94 is headed to more than 25 U.S. installations, Aug. 13 through Sept. 30.

At these bases, competition will be instrumental and vocal for active-duty U.S. troops.

Local judging panels will select first-, second- and third-place winners, who will receive $500, $250 and $100, respectively. Morale, Welfare and Recreation departments will coordinate each base's event, with h[illegible]om the United Service Orga[illegible]ons, Inc., and AT&T.

A videotape of each first-place performance will be submitted to a panel of judges in the United States. The panel includes Philip Bailey of Earth, Wind and Fire fame; recording star Vanessa Williams; publicist Sheila Eldridge; and Ramon Hervey, president of R&B LIVE. The judges will select an overall winner to receive $5,000 and a trip to New York for a recording session at Sony Music Studios.

The experience made its mark on last year's winner, Air Force Tech. Sgt. Louis Edwards.

"It was a great opportunity to record at Sony Music Studios and to get to work with some of the professional engineers, meet some of the great recording producers, and record in the same studios as some of the world's best recording artists," he said. "I was a star for a day."

Contestants on-base will also be stars for the day, as family and friends cheer them on. And the audience can win door prizes throughout the event.

"There is literally chart-busting musical talent hidden in the ranks of our military," said Dave Mitchell, USO celebrity entertainment director. "The great USO and AT&T Countdown team will find them and make them stars."

The USO is supported by individual and corporate donations, United Way and Combined Federal Campaign, and receives no direct government funding. Today's USO provides services for more than 4.5 million American servicemembers and their families in 170 locations worldwide.

AT&T is the largest supporter of the USO overseas celebrity entertainment shows, and is a primary contributor to USO programs worldwide. AT&T provides U.S. military communities overseas with customized products and services, and supports a variety of programs designed to improve the quality of life for servicemembers and their families.

For complete rules and more information on the competition, contact your local MWR or USO office.

New CHAMPUS program on line Oct. 1

By Evelyn D. Harris
American Forces Information Service

The Continued Health Care Benefit Program will become separating service members' optional temporary health insurance plan starting Oct. 1.

The new plan replaces Mutual of Omaha's U.S. VIP and provides medical care through the standard Civilian Health and Medical Program of the Uniformed Services, using CHAMPUS provider networks.

Enrollees will pay the entire premium, which will be equal to a comparable plan for former federal employees under the Federal Employees Health Benefit Program. Officials expect the 90-day premium to be about $450 for self-only coverage and $900 for a family. There are no adjustments for age or size of family.

The Continued Health Care Benefit Program will be open to an expanded population. Eligible to enroll are members of the armed forces discharged or released from active duty and their dependents, unremarried former spouses and unmarried children under age 21 if not in school or 23 if in school.

Former members can buy coverage for up to 18 months. Unremarried former spouses will be able to buy coverage for 36 months.

The program is open to all unremarried former spouses regardless of the length of the marriage to a service member. Emancipated children can be covered up to 36 months as well.

The new program covers pre-existing conditions for all enrollees.

No U.S. VIP policy will be sold after Sept. 30,1994. Policies sold before then will remain in effect their full length. Beneficiaries enrolled in U.S.VIP have the option of converting their policies; those eligible will have 60 days from the loss of their entitlement to military health care to elect coverage in the new program.

Coverage under the program is in 90-day increments. Initially, interested beneficiaries will submit an application and a check for the first 90-day premium to a third-party administrator.

The administrator will verify eligibility, update the Defense Enrollment and Eligibility Reporting System and notify applicants in writing of their acceptance.

Beneficiaries will seek care and have bills processed in the same way as do standard CHAMPUS beneficiaries. They should bring their acceptance letters when they seek care as proof of enrollment.

Members of the uniformed services who leave the service before the new program begins have a 60-day enrollment period. They must lose transitional health benefits after Aug. 2, 1994, to enroll during this 60-day window.

DoD is in the process of selecting a contractor to collect premiums, verify eligibility and perform other administrative tasks. The selection process is scheduled to be complete by late August.

Q's & A's
WITH GENERAL MANAGER JOE KENNEDY
Q. Overall, we read about car sales being down. Yet your own sales seem to to be on the rise. How do you account for this seeming contradiction?
Mr. Kennedy: There's no real contradiction. It's all a part of the same market dynamic. new car sales are down because people simply don't want to spend unwisely. However, we offer a solution to the new car price problem and therefore the same impulse that causes people to save their money also causes them to save their money at Budget Car Sales.
Q. Your inventory seems to be going through a transformation.
Mr. Kennedy: Yes. Our stock of 1993 Rental cars is almost completely gone and is being replaced with 1994 cars. In fact, I've ordered a total liquidation of all 1993's and I don't care how low the prices have to go. I'm already committed to huge new shipments of 94's and there's no turning back.

Picket Fences' nears year 3 on CBS

By Jay Bobbin,
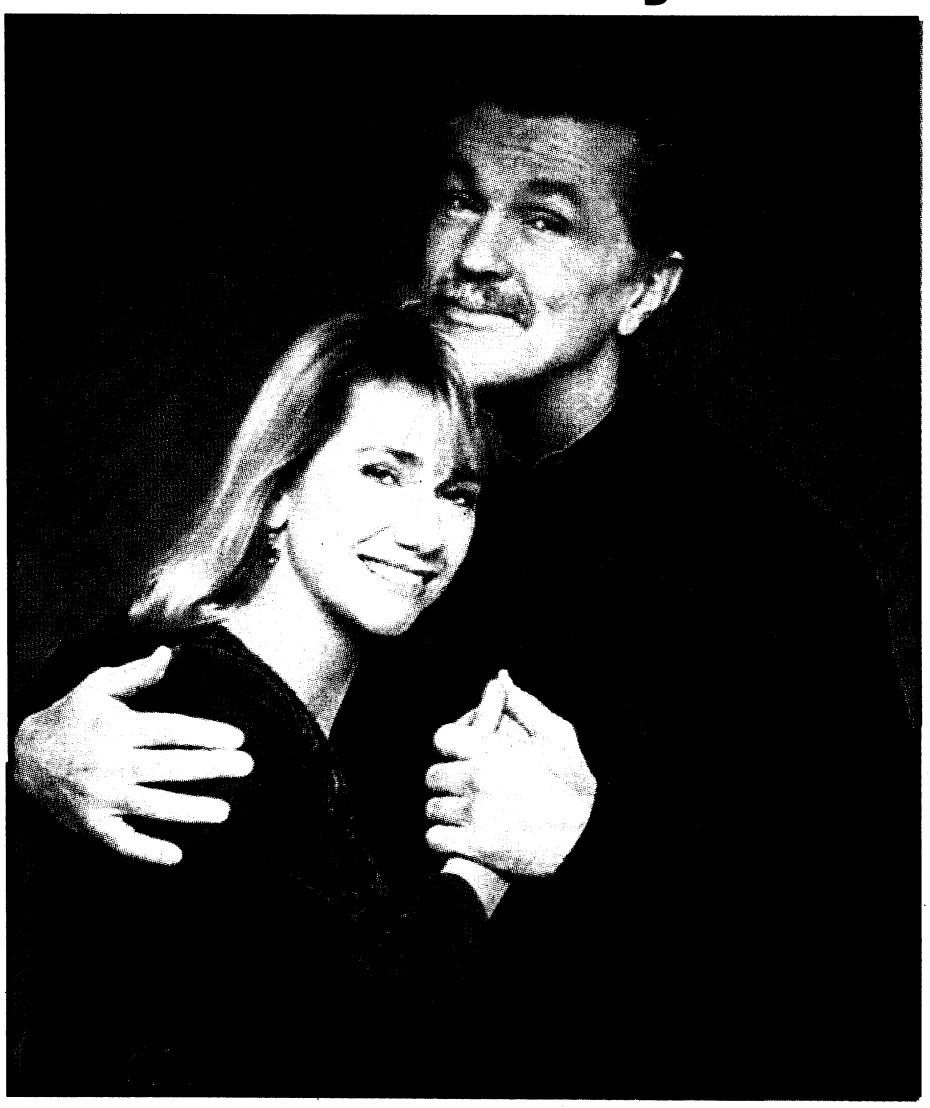
Tribune Media Services



Even if its prime creative force wishes he could go back and change the title, "Picket Fences" has become a weekly habit for many viewers.

What: "Picket Fences"
When: Friday nights on ABC

SPOTLIGHT

The Friday-night CBS series about life — and frequently offbeat life, at that — in the town of Rome, Wis,. is about to begin its third season, which it will start on another wave of Emmy nominations, having captured last year's top three awards for drama (Outstanding Series, Actor and Actress). Tom Skerritt and Kathy Baker will continue their starring roles as Sheriff Jimmy Brock and his doctor wife Jill, who often find themselves enmeshed in situations that pose major social and ethical questions.

Among recent examples: Jill's operation on a woman who insisted that her religious beliefs precluded such treatment; Jimmy's dealings with Deputy Kenny Lacos (Costas Mandylor), who had a romantic involvement with the then-mayor (Leigh Taylor-Young, currently in the running for an Emmy for that part); and the Brocks' agony over the shooting of their son Matthew (Justin Shenkarow) by a classmate, who wanted to get even with Matthew for accidentally injuring his brother while retaliating for a humiliating prank.

Along with encoring nominees Skerritt and Baker, co-stars Fyvush Finkel (alias attorney Douglas Wambaugh) and Ray Walston (the stern but compassionate Judge Bone) also are candidates for next month's Emmys. Again under consideration for Outstanding Drama Series, the show also features Lauren Holly as police officer Maxine Stewart, Holly Marie Combs and Adam Wylie as the other Brock children, and Don Cheadle as prosecutor Jonathan Littleton.

The creator and executive producer of "Picket Fences" is "L.A. Law" alumnus David E. Kelley, who also is about to launch the new CBS medical drama "Chicago Hope." He's written or co-written nearly all of the "Fences" episodes over the past two years, and he plans to continue his heavy involvement in that, though he'll have major participation in penning the initial "Hope" stories as well.

The husband of actress Michelle Pfeiffer, Kelley admits that some things about "Picket Fences" continue to leave him a bit unsettled, despite the massive acclaim he's reaped for it from critics and the TV industry in general. "I still don't believe that Friday is the right (evening) for 'Picket Fences'," he maintains. "I don't think that's a place where it can maximize its potential as a show, but we do have a strong Friday-night audience, and I wouldn't want to alienate those people who habitually show up there now (by trying to get the program moved)."

Baby muntjac deer on display at

Zoo Atlanta

Zoo Atlanta

A baby muntjac deer was recently born at Zoo Atlanta. The deer weighs approximately one pound and lives in a densely vegetated habitat with its extremely protective mother and its father.

"Visitors will have to look carefully to see the baby muntjac deer," said Curator of Mammals Sam Winslow. "However, as the baby gets older it will spend less time napping in the bamboo and more time investigating and grazing."

Often referred to as "barking deer" these animals bark to warn one another of approaching danger. Although the males have antlers, their long canine teeth are a better defense in a fight than their antlers. Muntjac deer are native to southeast Asia and range in woodlands and dense tropical forests. Mature muntjacs weigh 30 to 50 pounds.

Both "Mama" and "Papa" muntjac have been at Zoo Atlanta since 1989. They reside in the Children's Zoo area in an exhibit featuring demoiselle cranes.

The smallest of the crane family, demoiselle cranes are pale gray birds with tufts of white on each side of their heads, giving them a "Professor Ludwig Von Drake" appearance.

Zoo Atlanta is open Monday through Friday from 10 a.m. to 5:30 p.m. and Saturday and Sunday from 10 a.m. to 6:30 p.m. Admission booths close one hour before zoo grounds close.

Admission for adults is $7.50, seniors $6.50, and children $5. Children under 3 and members get in free.

The zoo is located at 800 Cherokee Ave, S.E., Atlanta, in Grant Park. Take I-75/85 to I-20 East and follow the signs.

For more information, call (404) 624-5600.

Post cuts $1.9 mil

By Ruth J. Spaller
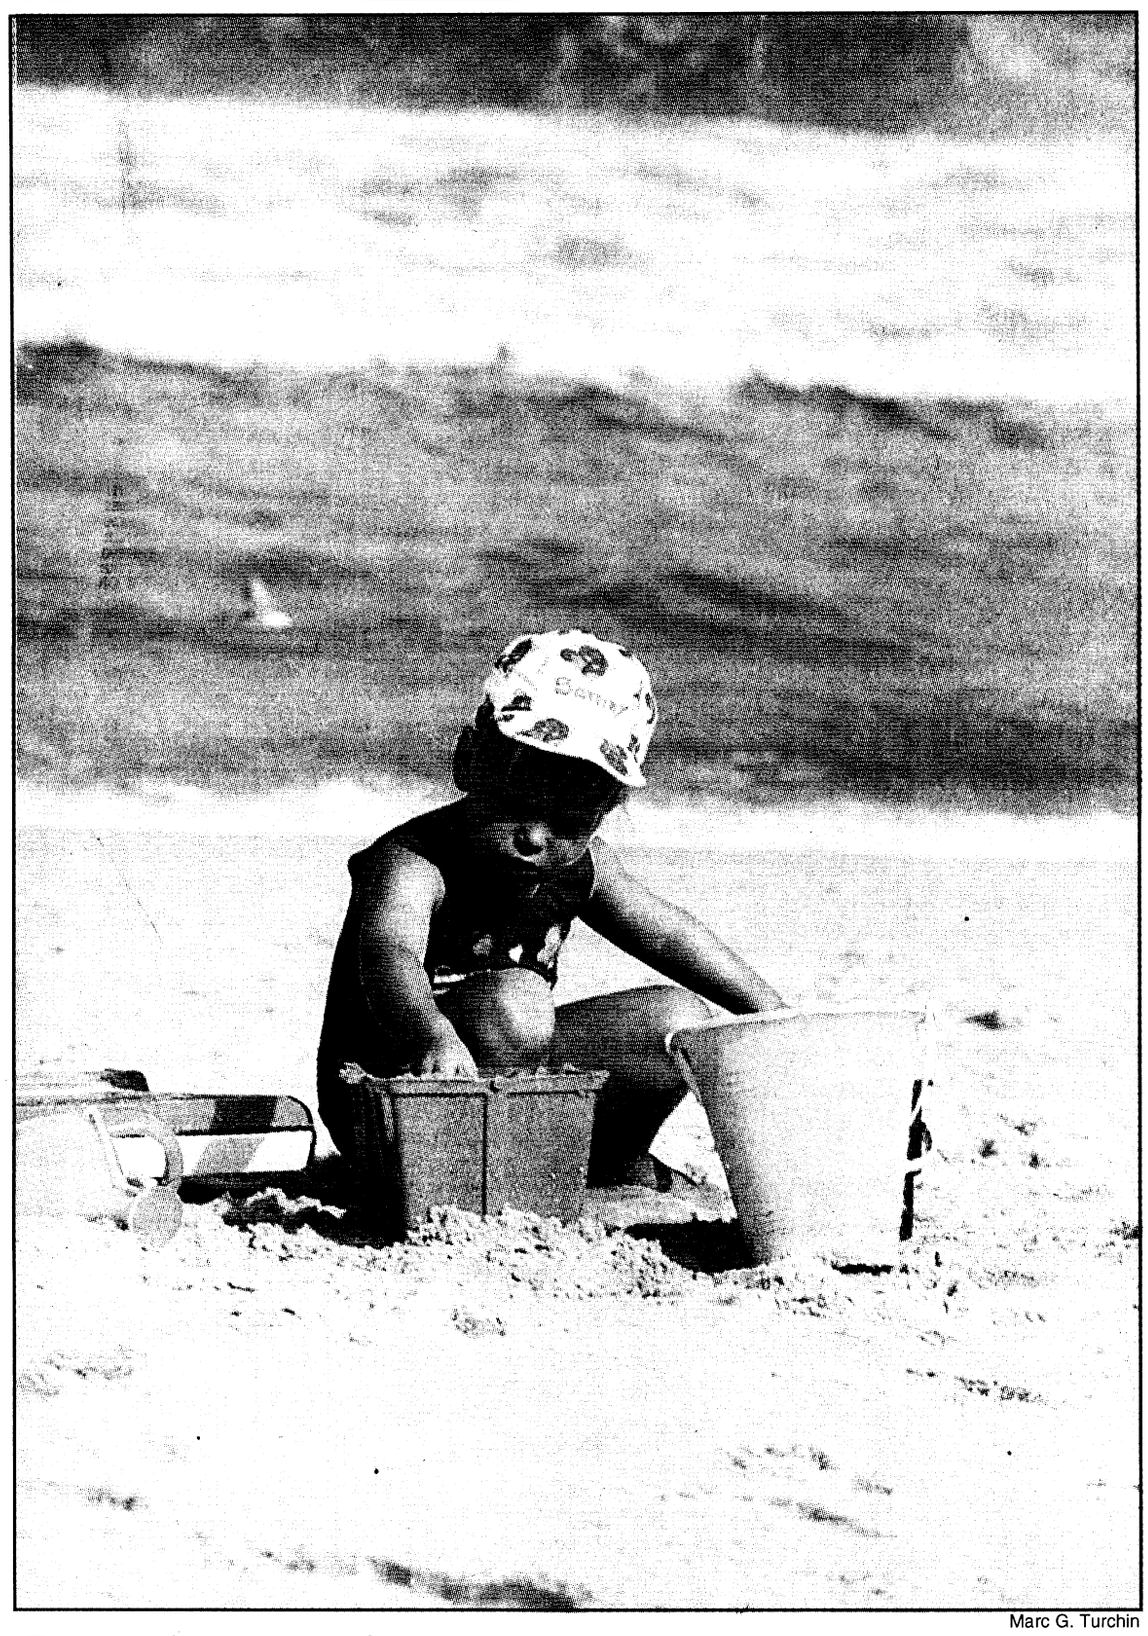
Bayonet staff writer

The Training and Doctrine Command has directed Fort Benning to curtail $1.9 million in current year operations in response to a Department of Defense directive.



The cut, which amounts to $20 million at the TRADOC level, is necessary to offset unprogrammed fiscal 1994 costs incurred from contingency operations such as those in Rwanda and Haiti, said David L. Flo, director of Resource Management.

The following are major items approved by Fort Benning's Commanding General, Maj. Gen. Jerry A. White, which the post began implementing Monday to achieve the curtailment:

- Suspend locally funded civilian training
- Implement a hard-hire freeze for the civilian work-force
- Approve civilian overtime by exception only, using compensatory time instead if at all possible
- Provide funding for temporary duty travel by exception only
- Reduce supplies programmed for purchase in August and September by 50 percent
- Forgo use of 60 Government Service Administration vehicles
- Release of a small number of civilian temporary employees (Less than 10, Flo said).

The cutback will be felt in the TRADOC activities across post, Flo said, with cuts in supplies causing everyone to "live off the shelf" for the next month and a half.

"It's really difficult to take this kind of cut this late in the year," Flo said, "but everybody has rolled up their sleeves ... and been most cooperative in trying to make sure we do the right thing and make sure that we don't affect soldiers and quality of life."

Conference focuses on human rights

By Karen S. Morarie
Bayonet staff writer

McCaffrey

Human rights came to the fore during the sixth annual Latin America Conference at the School of the Americas Aug. 8 through 12.

The focus of this year's conference was the role of the armed forces and police in guaranteeing human rights in the Western Hemisphere.

Attendees at the conference included U. S. and Latin American representatives from military and police organizations, colleges and universities, business and industry, the diplomatic services and the news media.

Col. Jose Alvarez, SOA commander, also issued written invitations to Juan Mendez, president of The Americas Watch, a human rights group based in Washington, D.C., and to representatives from four other human rights activist groups. All five groups declined to send representatives to the conference.

Gen. Barry McCaffrey, commander of the U.S. Southern Command, Panama, and a featured speaker at the conference, said, "(We) would benefit from adding to our deliberations a wider range of viewpoints."

McCaffrey suggested that scholars and human rights activists, particularly those from The Americas Watch, would be valuable additions to such conferences. "Both sides could benefit from listening to each other's ideas," he said.

Human Rights and the Charter of the Organization of American States

The American states reaffirm the following principles:

- Social justice and social security are bases of lasting peace.
- The American states proclaim the fundamental rights of the individual without distinction as to race, nationality, creed or sex.
- Each state has the right to develop its cultural, political and economic life freely and naturally. In this free development, the state shall respect the rights of the individual and the principles of universal morality.

McCaffrey described the members of The Americas Watch with whom he had met as, "Very intelligent, very aware, very experienced — with a totally different perspective, focus and purpose than those of us who are charged with the protection of our democracies."

McCaffrey, who as SOUTHCOM commander oversees U.S. military operations in 19 Latin American countries, said he has formed a human rights steering group, consisting of members of his staff and representing all U.S. branches of service, whose purpose

CG nears retirement

Looks back on career 'dedicated to soldiers'

By Karen S. Morarie
Bayonet staff writer

One of the givens of Army life is that men and women come and go. A few years at a duty station, and we move along to the next place, until it's time to retire. We do our jobs, but we are meant to be replaceable.

Some of us make more of a mark than others, however — accomplish more when we're here, and are more noticeable in our absence. That could be predicted of the retirement of Maj. Gen. Jerry A. White, Fort Benning commanding general.

"There was never a time in my life when I said, 'OK, effective today I'm going to stay in the Army,'" White said.

He came into the Army out of college ROTC with a two-year commitment. "I had a degree in geology, and I wanted to be a geologist," he said. "I did not want to be in the Army. I asked the Army to send me on active duty for six months in the Corps of Engineers, and the Army sent me on active duty for two years in the infantry."

White said from then on, "One thing led to another. My first assignment was Fort Ord, Calif., and I really loved what I was doing. It was fun being a soldier.

"My obligation was up after two years," he said, "and the Army offered to send me to Europe on an airborne assignment. I thought that sounded exciting. Then the Berlin crisis came, and we all were extended. Then Vietnam came. The next thing I knew, we (White and his wife, Linda) had been in the Army for 10 years. I never looked back."

White looks every inch the soldier. Eyes keen, posture erect and waist cinched with a pistol belt that carries a bayonet, symbol of the infantry, the general gives the impression of movement and purpose even when sitting still.

It was in Vietnam, White said, that he discovered what would be the motivating force in his career.

"There are generals who spend their lives focused on training, and we need them," White said. "There are others who spend their military

Bunny-sitting — a 'hare-raising' job

By Clyde Snivley
Bayonet columnist

commentary

While fellow Bayonet staff writers were cooling their ankles in the gulf shore at Destin, surfing at Fort Fisher, N.C., near Myrtle Beach, S.C., or even climbing rocks on Grandfather Mountain in North Carolina, I shared quality time with a rabbit.

Pauline, whom we often wonder about anyway, has a pet rabbit. "My Bunny," she calls it.

She likes to hold her bunny, stroke its fur and rub her cheek on it. "It's so soft," she murmured as she tried to trick me into doing the same the day she dropped it off and bid it a tearful adieu.

All I could see was a potential meal in front of me. To quote another of the female units in the office, "What good's a rabbit? All they do is eat and poop."

She then went into a long discourse on birds and fish and other worthless pets before concluding that only dogs make admirable pets.

I certainly agree with her regarding "My Bunny." All it does is sit there, staring at you with its pink eyes, twitching its nose or one of its ears once in a while.

After hours of this, it'll hobble over to nibble some lettuce or carrots or rabbit pellets. And while so doing, leave behind rabbit pellets of its own. I'm glad I work for a newspaper and have an endless supply of cage liner. Such a disgusting creature.

Bored watching this miserable creature, I tried to teach it a few tricks, like sitting up to beg. I think it would rather starve than exert its corpulent body to pursue a morsel of food.

I did notice that several cookbooks had recipes for rabbit stew, rabbit barbecue and many other dishes.

The office ranger recalled how rabbits were used as part of survival training when he went through ranger school. He said he couldn't tell me how because he didn't want to get us in trouble with the local animal rights group.

Next year, Snively's the one going to the white sand beaches of Destin. He's going to fish from the Follow Me or swim in the warm gulf waters.

Next year, Snively's got dibs for a cool, refreshing trip to the mountains, where you don't break into a sweat as you make your bed in the morning and where hiking is an invigorating escape from reality instead of some military requirement.

Next year, Snively checks out Fort Fisher and explores Myrtle Beach.

Yes, I'll let Pauline dog-sit Ralf for me and see how "My Bunny" and Ralf relate — assuming I don't let "My Bunny" out of its cage beforehand and give Ralf a toy to play with.

Although with my luck I'll be in Korea by then. At least that's one place that I know where people don't have pet rabbits.

Cdr invites all grads to OCS Hall of Fame

On behalf of the cadre, staff and officer candidates of the 3rd Battalion (Officer Candidate School), 11th Infantry Regiment, I would like to invite all OCS graduates to join us in celebrating the annual OCS Hall of Fame induction dinner and induction ceremony Sept. 8 and 9 at Fort Benning.

Induction into the OCS Hall of Fame is the single highest honor that the Officer Candidate School can bestow upon one of its graduates.

The OCS Hall of Fame induction events are tantamount to those surrounding West Point's Founders' Day.

Unlike our counterparts from West Point, OCS graduates have no single event or day where they can celebrate their heritage. Let's start a tradition this year with the 36th anniversary of the OCS Hall of Fame.

The OCS Hall of Fame was established Jan. 16, 1958, to honor OCS graduates who attained the rank of colonel, were awarded the Medal of Honor regardless of rank, or have been elected or appointed to positions of state or national prominence.

To date, 1,639 graduates of the Fort Benning Officer Candidate School and the Ground General School at Fort Riley, Kansas, have been inducted into the OCS Hall of Fame.

To honor this year's inductees, the 3rd Battalion has planned several events. The first is the induction dinner Sept. 8 at 6 p.m. in the Fort Benning Officers' Club.

This will be followed by a no-host breakfast at the Fort Benning Officer's Club and the induction ceremony in Marshall Auditorium Sept. 9 at 11 a.m.

These activities will give inductees and their families an opportunity to renew ties with friends, the Officer Candidate School and Fort Benning.

Eighty-eight OCS graduates are scheduled to be inducted into the Hall of Fame this year. The 3rd Battalion anticipates inducting approximately 50 in person and the remainder in absentia.

If you and your family would like to participate in the OCS Hall of Fame events, contact the Officer Candidate School adjutant at 545-4711 or 545-350, or visit the battalion headquarters located in Building 2757.

I look forward to seeing you there.

Reader asks about highway entrance

I have a question that has been puzzling me, as well as many others, for some time, and no one seems able to answer.

Why has the entrance to U.S. 27 and 280 South been blocked off for so long? I refer to the entrance just around the corner from the Service Station in Harmony Church.

I understood the original reason, when the Department of Transportation was working on the highway, but that was completed at least two years ago.

I also realize that entrance to the highway can be reached a little farther up the road, but why have unnecessary traffic driving through a troop billeting area?

Retired 1st Sgt. John C. Kazmin
Buena Vista, Ga.

Military Police response:

Retired 1st Sgt. Kazmin questioned why the entrance and exit onto Highway 27 at the intersection of Old Cusseta Road has remained closed, when in the past it was open.

Listed below are the reasons as to why it was previously opened and is now closed and will remain closed.

This particular entrance and exit was opened temporarily by the Department of Transportation to allow access for vehicles entering and exiting Old Cusseta Road during the reconstruciton of the bridge at Highway 27 and 8th Division Road.

When construction was completed in Nov. 1992, DOT sealed the entrance to Highway 27, concluding there were sufficient access routes to accommodate traffic to the Harmony Church area.

Additionally, this closed intersection is extremely dangerous if opened for vehicles leaving the highway because of the limited visibility of oncoming vehicles along Old Cusseta Road.

Vehicles attempting access onto Highway 27 from Old Cusseta Road do not have an acceleration lane, creating an even greater safety hazard to any vehicle already on the highway.

Vehicles attempting to gain access to Highway 27 northbound would cross two lanes of fast-moving southbound traffic in order to proceed in the northbound lane, increasing the likelihood of an accident.

commentary

"Road Trip!" With that famous cry, you and your buddies pile in the car and head for Panama City, Pensacola, Clearwater or some other warm-weather locale for a weekend of fun.

Once on the beach, you head straight for the water, ripping off your shirt as you plunge into the surf. After a few minutes of horseplay, it's time to crash on the sand or check out the local "attractions."

Three hours later, you notice your skin turning bright red. There's no discomfort, so you continue to alternate between water and sand, periodically turning over to get an "even tan."

Your first indication something is amiss occurs in the hotel shower. You wince as the water hits your feet. Hey! I must have the temperature up too high. Leaning over to adjust the nozzle you notice your lower legs. "Wow, I'm really red," you think to yourself. The shower is painful as it is washes you free of sand.

Stepping out to dry, you notice your chest and arms. The phrase "boiled lobster" comes to mind. Touching yourself dry, you remember that Monday is the unit road march. The thought of a 75-pound rucksack on your tender shoulders and back does not improve your spirits.

Every year, millions of people enjoy the beaches. Similarly, many people are also burned every year. It is important to note that every sunburn or suntan predisposes you to future skin cancer and premature aging of the skin.

A few simple rules will allow you to enjoy your time at the beach without becoming a sunburn victim.

- Wear sunscreen. SPF stands for sun protection factor. SPF 15 is adequate for most people and should be the minimum SPF used. Higher numbers are for people with problem skin. SPFs above 15 cost more, the extra protection is not much use to most people and may cause contact dermatitis.
- Apply liberal amounts of sunscreen 30 minutes before activity. Time, sea water and perspiration weaken sunscreen. Look for "waterproof" sunscreen. rather than "water resistant."
- Avoid the peak hours. From 10 a.m. until 3 p.m. the sun is at its strongest intensity.
- Wear a hat and sunglasses. The sun can cause damage to your scalp. Hair gives minimal protection against ultraviolet B radiation.

By Jerrie Macintire
Special to The Bayonet ©

A variety of workshops designed to aid professional and personal development are scheduled Monday through Aug. 26 as part of Federal Employees' Week, according to Winnie Torain, federal women's program manager.

Workshops will begin at 9:30 each morning in Classroom 20 of Infantry Hall and will feature experienced federal employees, including several department administrators.

Programs emphasizing the theme of "Employees' Excellence" will focus on personal growth, such as stress reduction techniques, as well as professional development, such as effective interviewing techniques.

"We are seeking to enhance the full person, from a professional as well as a personal standpoint," Torain said.

Torain said she expects maximum participation for the workshops, which are open to both supervisory and nonsupervisory civilian or military personnel. Space is also available for family members and volunteers, she added.

"At this time of downsizing turbulence, this motivational training for career development is especially important for mapping out the future," said Torain.

"I encourage everyone who can to attend since there are few opportunities to receive free training of this nature," she said.

Civilian personnel attending the scheduled events will be excused without charge of leave.

Also as part of Federal Employees' Week, a luncheon commemorating Women's Equality Day will be Aug. 26 at the Main NCO Club from 11:30 to 1 p.m.

For more information, call 545-1872.

is, according to McCaffrey, "To ensure (there is) a mechanism to talk about (human rights) questions."

McCaffrey has drawn up a human rights policy, which was printed on pocket-sized cards and issued to SOUTHCOM soldiers. The policy states:

• The United States supports an international standard of human rights, which strives to protect the integrity and dignity of each individual. Adherence to this policy will tend to promote democratic processes.

• Human rights include fundamental protection for the individual such as freedom from extrajudicial killing, torture, "disappearance" and arbitrary arrest.

• Human rights also include civil rights essential to a democratic society, such as the right to free expression, the right to assembly and the right to a fair trial.

• U.S. military personnel must never participate in any activity which is contrary to this human rights policy, nor encourage others to do so.

• U.S. military personnel must report, through the chain of command, any activity which violates fundamental human rights, regardless of who participated in the violation.

• U.S. military personnel must cooperate in any investigation which strives to identify human rights violations.

• U.S. military personnel are looked upon as representatives of our nation. Our actions will be closely scrutinized to ensure that we live up to the ideals which we advocate.

McCaffrey spoke of the mutual respect that needs to exist between a country and its armed forces.

"The armed forces is, year after year, the most respected institution in American society," McCaffrey said. "The United States is not a militaristic nation — we take more pride in our writers, our farmers (and) our engineers than do in military power. But at the same time, we have earned the respect of the American people. It seems to me that is what each of your people demand of you (Latin American armed forces.)"

Dr. Russ Ramsey, a professor at the School of the Americas who teaches human rights, U.S foreign policy, national security, and resource management to the students at SOA, said he believes the military and police forces in Latin America have, in general, earned the respect of their countrymen.

"Columbia has lost more soldiers and police in the Drug War than America lost in the cold war," he said. "Also, 12 of the 26 international peacekeeping forces operating this year have Latin American members. Columbia is one of the two or three countries most heavily involved in "blue helmet" (peacekeeping) forces."

Ramsey, who organized the SOA conference, said he believes the school's "bad press" is unearned.

"People have a juvenile tendency," he said, "to equate the deeds of past students here with the school itself. Heidelberg University, one of the world's greatest universities, had (Joseph) Goebbels as a student for six years. Does that make the university responsible for his later actions?"

Ramsey pointed out that SOA has been a leader in incorporating human rights instruction into its curriculum, and that another guest speaker, retired Maj. Gen. Manuel Sanmiguel of Columbia, is a SOA distinguished graduate and recipient of the equivalent of his country's Medal of Honor.

Sanmiguel was awarded the decoration, Ramsey said, for his actions after taking three bullets from a sniper.

"He told his men not to return fire, after he was already downed by the bullets, because he could see they came from a solitary sniper and there was a crowd of innocent civilians who could have been killed," Ramsey said.

Ramsey said he thinks Latin America could serve as a model to several other world regions attempting reorganization in the wake of the Cold War.

The stability of the borders of Latin American countries, their relatively low percentage of military spending, and their bold democratization and economic development, Ramsey said, make them a region worth emulating.

DOD cracks down on DITY move fraud

By Ruth J. Spaller
Bayonet staff writer

Soldiers attempting to defraud the government on do-it-yourself moves are not getting rich — they're getting caught.

Because of the rising number of false claims being discovered, Transportation has teamed up with Finance, the Criminal Investigation Division and the Defense Accounting Office to ensure that offenders eventually get caught, said Korin Mason, chief of the Transportation Division for the Directorate of Logistics.

Do-it-yourself, or DITY, moves pay soldiers what it would cost the government to pack, load and move their own personal property. The total amount is based on distance and weight, with different weight allowances based on rank and number of family members.

But soldiers are taking advantage of the program, Mason said, by claiming extra weight or submitting false or numerous claims.

Many of the blatant falsifications in claims are caught during the completion of paperwork by Transportation Division employees who know what to look for because of their experience, said Linda Kelley, supervisor of the shipment unit.

When one soldier living in the barracks claimed 7,000 pounds of personal property, "We immediately knew something was wrong with that," Mason said.

Another soldier claimed three moves from Georgia to California. "We questioned those moves," she said, "and what we found was none of those moves occurred — the soldier actually moved from Fort Benning to Columbus."

Probably the most common incidence of fraud is soldiers who add extra weight to the moving van or reweigh the same furniture on a second trip to get a higher reimbursement amount, Mason said.

To prevent this, transportation has stepped up its inspection of vehicles at the weigh stations, she said.

Movers must now call before going to the scale and inspectors will often actually be there to open and inspect the truck, she said.

Transportation has also enlisted the aid of the weigh masters, who take note if the weight seems too high or too similar from trip to trip.

'We've had occasions where the weigh master has called us after seeing soldiers off-loading sand bags after weighing their vehicle," she said.

Also, Transportation recently put in an automated system that allows employees to refer back to see if soldiers have made previous DITY moves, and Finance and Transportation are now cross-checking documents to verify a move has actually occurred.

But, Mason pointed out, "While we may not catch you here in this office, you're going to get caught when all the documentation gets to DAO."

One case of DITY move fraud now under investigation by the Criminal Investigation Division involves more than 13 soldiers and more than $119,000.

> "The person who started it kept telling the people, 'They never keep documents, they never write down your name — you'll never get caught.' Wrong!"
> — Agent Robert Reid
> Criminal Investigation Division

It began with one soldier who made a legitimate DITY move, but kept a completed copy of the paperwork, said Agent Robert Reid.

The other soldiers then inserted their names and pertinent information and resubmitted the paperwork directly to the Finance Office, collecting the 80 percent advance meant to defray costs such as moving van rental.

"The person who started it kept telling the people, 'They never keep documents, they never write down your name — you'll never get caught.' Wrong!" Reid said.

"Every time the government cuts a check or gets a document, it's logged in," he said.

And original documents are sent to Defense Finance and Accounting at Fort Benjamin Harrison, Ind., where they are available for audits.

"With the green machine, it takes time, but they'll catch you," Reid said.

"It may take some time and you may think that you got away with it for a while, but it will catch up with you no matter where you go, even if you get out (of the military). We work very closely and have a good relationship with the FBI," he said.

Active duty and retired soldiers who have committed fraud are being prosecuted, Mason said.

The charge for larceny is five years per count, Reid said, but the soldiers implicated in his case will be charged not only with larceny, but also with conspiracy and filing a false official statement.

The final punishment, Reid said, is up to the judge and jury; but, had this one case gone unapprehended for a year, it would have cost taxpayers about $850,000.

"I can't speak for (the assistant U.S. attorney), but I believe his interest is in prosecuting these folks," Reid said.

AAFES announces recall of infant carriers

Army News Service

WASHINGTON — Army and Air Force Exchange Service officials have announced that the Gerry Baby Products Co. is recalling a brand of infant carriers sold in AAFES outlets after September 1993.

Customers who purchased "Good Vibes" infant carriers with model numbers 037 and 038 should stop using the carriers immediately, officials said.

The carriers' white plastic handles may break, possibly causing injury to children.

These models were manufactured during the second week of September 1993, indicated by the circled date codes located on the back of the carrier handles. In the left circle is a "93" with an arrow pointing at the "9."

The right circle has an arrow pointing at the number two, indicating production during the second week of the month.

The AAFES sale price for the carriers was $35.95. Customers in the continental United States should call the Gerry Baby Products Co. at (800) 403-6633 for a free replacement carrier.

Overseas customers should return the carriers to the nearest AAFES outlet for a refund.

ETSing? Get ready

Army Career and Alumni Program

"Going to the house." "Getting out." "ETSing." "Going home." Is this you? Don't add "Unemployed" to the list.

If you have a year or less until your separation, it is time to start laying the groundwork for a smooth transition from your military to civilian career.

Start your job search process by assembling the records and papers that you will need. Organize them into four files: military service, personal, work experience and education and training.

Your military papers should include certified copies of separation papers (Department of Defense Form 214) service record, honors and awards, medical records and benefits information.

As a minimum, your personal papers should include copies of your birth certificate, Social Security card, current passports and proof of citizenship.

Use your work experience file to document your work history (jobs, employers, duties and accomplishments), honors and citations, references, salary history and community activities.

If appropriate, include some samples of your work. Your education and training file should hold transcripts, diplomas, honors and activities lists.

In 1991, the Department of Defense was directed to provide military experience and training transcripts to all separating service members.

These transcripts not only document your military experience, but translates them to civilian terms.

Every soldier separating after Sept. 15, 1992, should automatically receive a Verification of Military Experience and Training statement about 120 days before your expiration term of service date.

Soldiers who separated between Oct. 1, 1990, through 14 Sept. 14, 1992, must request their VMET statements.

If you should have received your VMET statement and have not, call (800) 258-8638. Written requests can be addressed to. PRC Inc., ATTN. VMET G-3.03, 12001 Sunrise Valley Drive, Reston, Va. 22091.

Another document that you may want to add to your career file is your Army and American Council on Education Registry Transcript System record. AARTS transcripts can help you get college-level credit for Army training and experiences.

An AARTS transcript can also supplement your job resume, providing employers with a description of the scope of your Army responsibilities and the skills you acquired while on active duty.

To request a copy of your AARTS record, visit your Education Center. There is no charge for this service.

It's not too early to start drafting your resume, either. Take advantage of the free resume writing classes available.

Ask your ACAP counselor about these and other free job search-skills workshops and classes that are available.

These classes and workshops are offered through the Job Assistance Center and Army Community Service. Family members are also eligible for many of these services.

Put the attention to detail you learned on active duty to use for you. Triple-check your spelling and grammar. If your skills in this department are lacking, have someone more proficient proof your resume for you.

When you are ready to turn that draft resume into a final version, computers and a laser printer are available for clients' use at the Job Assistance Center in Building 2634.

For more information, call the ACAP office at 545-4913 or 545-4892.

RETIRE: Commanding general to say goodbye

careers focused on technology, and we need them."

His focus came from a personal experience, he said. As White remembered the events, his face grew momentarily stern and his voice dropped in pitch.

"Some time on a dark night in 1966, in a terrible firefight in Vietnam, I lost a number of soldiers when we were pinned down by fire. It was probably the worst night of my life, but I promised myself if I came out of there alive, I was going to devote my career to soldiers," White said.

"I haven't been 100 percent successful, and there have been highs and lows. But since I've been a general officer, I have made my top priority to do the very best I could for soldiers," he said.

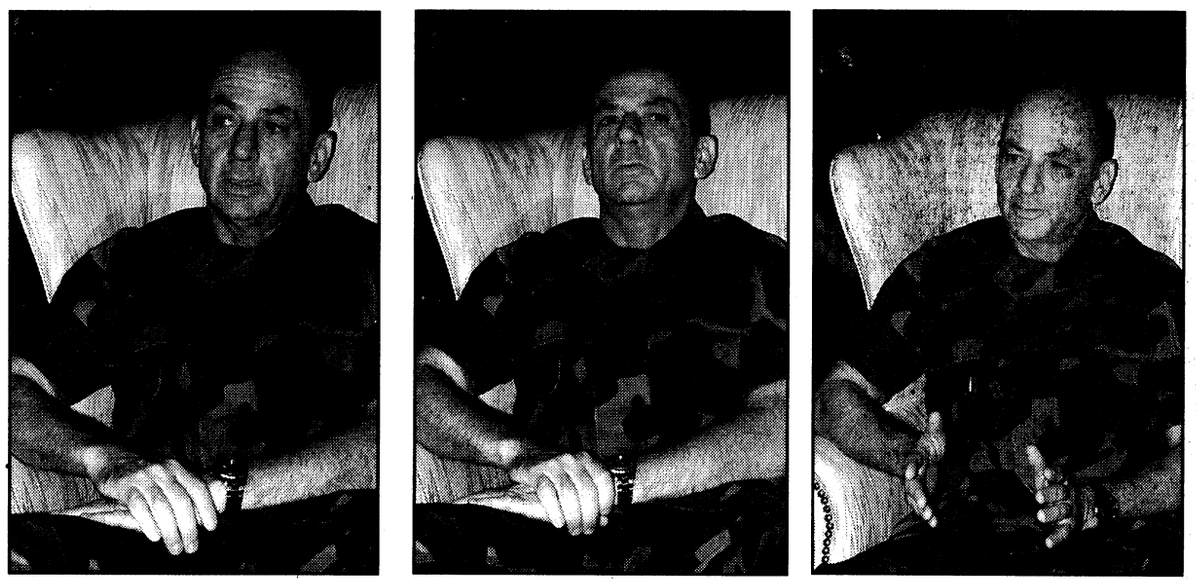
"I am absolutely committed to the point that if we're going to have a strong Army, it's not going to be technology that makes it that way," the commanding general said. "It'll be soldiers who are committed to the military and committed to their country, and who are willing to fight for it and die for it. That happens because they are confident in their leaders.

"I'm much more committed to that philosophy now, as the Army draws down, because I see the Army moving to more of a technical base than a soldier base. I'm not necessarily critical of that; I'm only saying that we need to watch that carefully and keep a proper balance," White said.

"When it's all said and done, regardless of the technology, there's going to be another dark night, and some soldier's going to have to walk through the mud and pull out his bayonet and take an objective. It will happen again.

"So we need to make sure," he said, "that we do everything we possibly can for soldiers and for their families. They deserve the very, very best in terms of quality of life, and in the equipment and technology that we provide them.

"My focus has been there," White said. "To make sure we train them properly, equip them properly, and that, at Fort Benning, we make sure they clearly understand that they are the Army's top priority. There's no one better — not a general, not a sergeant — there's no one better than a young soldier."



White has done just that during his stewardship of the post. The Family Unit Network Center, improvements to barracks and post library, new Guest House, enlisted club, and Kelley Hill Recreation Center, among other projects, will for years to come bear lasting witness to White's dedication to the troops.

White said his wife, Linda, has shared his commitment to soldiers.

"She has been as involved in my career as I have. She has suffered the highs and lows, enjoyed the good times and shared the bad times. I have been fortunate to have a wife who's been 100 percent dedicated to the military. Her concern for soldiers and families has been precisely the same as mine."

White's feelings about military service seem to come down to dedication.

"I think if you're going to be successful in the Army, you must make a major commitment to the Army. It's a life — it requires dedication."

Ruth J. Spaller

Maj. Gen. Jerry A. White reflects on his 34-year military career.

Although White does not come from a military family, he seems to have founded one. "Once I elected to make the military my career, it became my life — and my wife's life. That's the reason I've got a son (Capt. Jerry A. White Jr.) who's in the Army, and a daughter (Jane Ann) who's about to marry an Army captain."

White said he's seen the Army change for the better in his years of service.

"The training was not nearly as good 34 years ago. We were more focused — prior to Vietnam, anyway — on traditions than on training and readiness and taking care of soldiers. It's a much, much better Army today."

Not only has White seen improvement in the Army as a whole, he has been instrumental in helping Fort Benning achieve its best. He has been in command to see the post named best in the country, and finally best in the world.

"There's no place better than Fort Benning," he said. "What needed to be done here was to wake up a sleeping giant and make people believe in themselves, that they were winners. We had to make clear that what was important was quality of life for soldiers and their families and be determined to make that happen.

"I couldn't do that a lot of places," he said. "I've tried, and sometimes it doesn't work because you just don't have the quality of people you need."

White said not only soldiers, but the post's civilian workers as well, made the post what it is today.

"Fort Benning has the best civilian work force I have ever seen, bar none. They are as dedicated as any soldier I have ever seen," White said.

"I'm very satisfied that we're about at the 90 percent point at providing a good quality of life. We're lightyears ahead of anyone else in that regard," he said.

White said there are still some things he'd like to see happen at the "Home of the Infantry."

"(We need to) somehow provide the soldiers better barracks. That's very difficult because of the budget, although we're getting some new barracks. After that, though, it's going to be a long dry spell," he said.

The next thing on the CG's list focuses on training: "The project that needs to be priority now is to bring the infantry into the 21st century," he said. "We really have a lot to do in automating the school, to bring in the very latest in teaching technology. That'll be a major focus in the next few years."

He hopes to continue his work on behalf of the military, in some form or other, after his retirement, he said.

"I'll be a soldier until the day I die — I'll be buried in a uniform one day. I hope to remain a positive influence — it's not my style to retire from the Army and not be involved at all.

"Once you take off the uniform," he said, "you're a little bit less restricted, and I think you can have a positive influence on the community and the way they view the military."

All in all, White seems to have a record of solid success to look back on as he reaches retirement. He referred to a letter he had recently received from the wife of a soldier.

"This letter means more to me," White said, carefully unfolding it, "than any award or decoration. You can hang medals around my neck all day long and it doesn't have the impact this letter does."

The letter read, in part, "I appreciate you going to bat for the infantry soldier. I know your job has not been easy; but, I hope it's been rewarding, and I wish you all the best in your retirement.

"I wanted to stop by to see you, but your schedule's pretty full, so I thought a note would be more appropriate. So, to the Top Gun of the Army, I'd like to say a special 'thank you' from one of the many (people) your career has affected."

White can undoubtedly rest assured, as he heads for retirement, that many people on Fort Benning echo those sentiments.

On the lighter side ...

Commanding General Maj. Gen. Jerry A. White often displays his sense of humor during the performance of his official duties. Here are some of his recent comments:

• On packing to move:
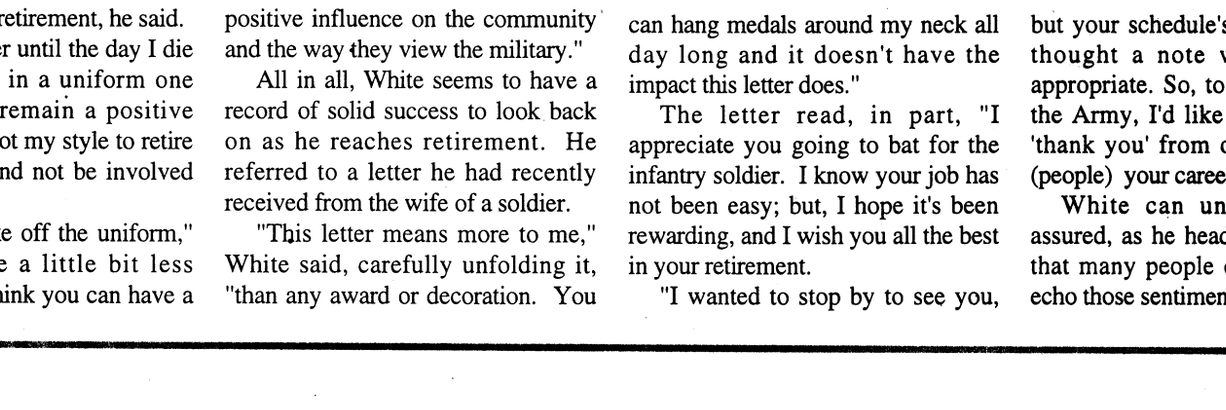
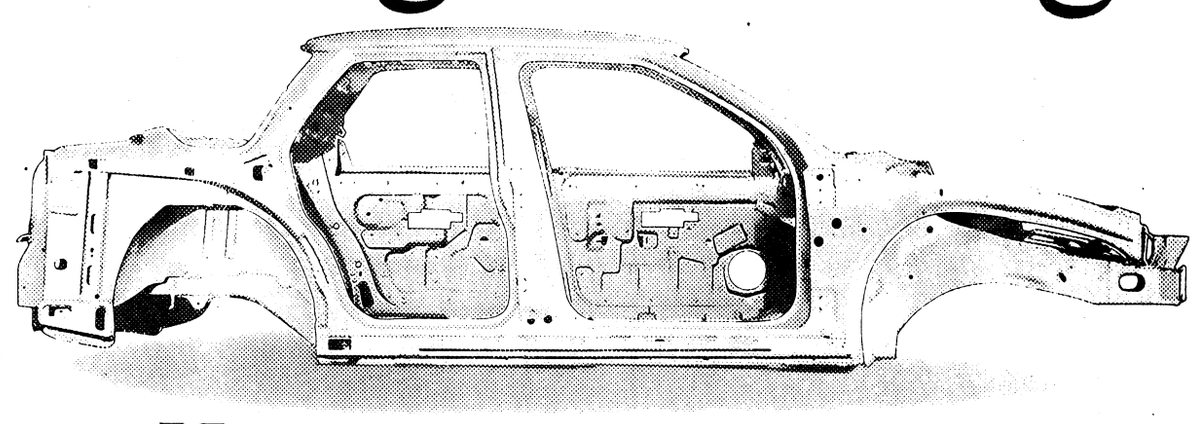
(My wife and I) both hate it. We get worse at it every time.

• (My son) stops by my house every morning after PT to shower and have breakfast ... I don't know where he's going to shower and have breakfast after I leave — maybe General Hendrix will let him come by.



• My favorite saying is, you have to be unreasonable at times. I am, at times, unreasonable, and I establish some pretty difficult deadlines for people. But I know they can make them.

• I don't have any definite plans (in retirement) to run off and go sailing, to take a cruise into the sunset.



Once in a while, I would have liked to take a night off, when I had six social functions in a row and I wanted to sit back and watch TV and eat pizza. But for the most part, for me and my wife, the Army has been our life, and we've gotten our enjoyment from that.

And surely nobody on Fort Benning will ever forget the CG's tag line, as familiar as Walter Cronkite's "And that's the way it is":

• "It's a great day to be a soldier in the United States Army!"

You've known all along your family belonged in a cage.

How about a steel one? At Saturn, we refer to this "cage" as a spaceframe. It's really a reinforced structure made with front and rear "crumple zones" that help dissipate the energy of a crash before it reaches your family. It's a great cage for the family. (And, one size fits all.)

Softball

Teams fight for chance at tourney championship

By Terry K. Ray
Special to The Bayonet©

The 1994 U.S. Army Infantry Center men's softball tournament is on the downhill slide. As of Wednesday evening, two teams were left from the field of 32 that converged on Engineer Fields Aug. 8 for the week-long event.

In game one, the Law Dogs of the Military Police Activity locked up Rolling Thunder of the 533rd Transportation Company 12-10 in a down-to-the-wire finish.

In the top of the first inning, the Law Dogs took a huge bite out of Rolling Thunder, scoring seven runs on eight hits. First baseman Thomas Wilonski drove in two runs with a single to centerfield, and right centerfielder Barry T. Brown hit a grand slam over the rightfielder's head for four runs.

Rolling Thunder got one run back in the bottom of the first on an RBI fielders' choice by second baseman Denver Meyers to trim the lead to 7-1.

In the bottom of the fourth inning, Rolling Thunder climbed back into the ballgame with a five-run inning. A two-run shot to left center off the bat of third baseman Daniel Fisher helped cut the lead to 7-6.

An RBI single from first baseman Jimmy MCGrew tied the ballgame at 7-7 in the bottom of the fifth inning.

The Law Dogs came out in the top of the sixth and regained the lead at 8-7 on a lead-off single by right fielder Wendell Jackson and an RBI double from pitcher Thomas Smith.

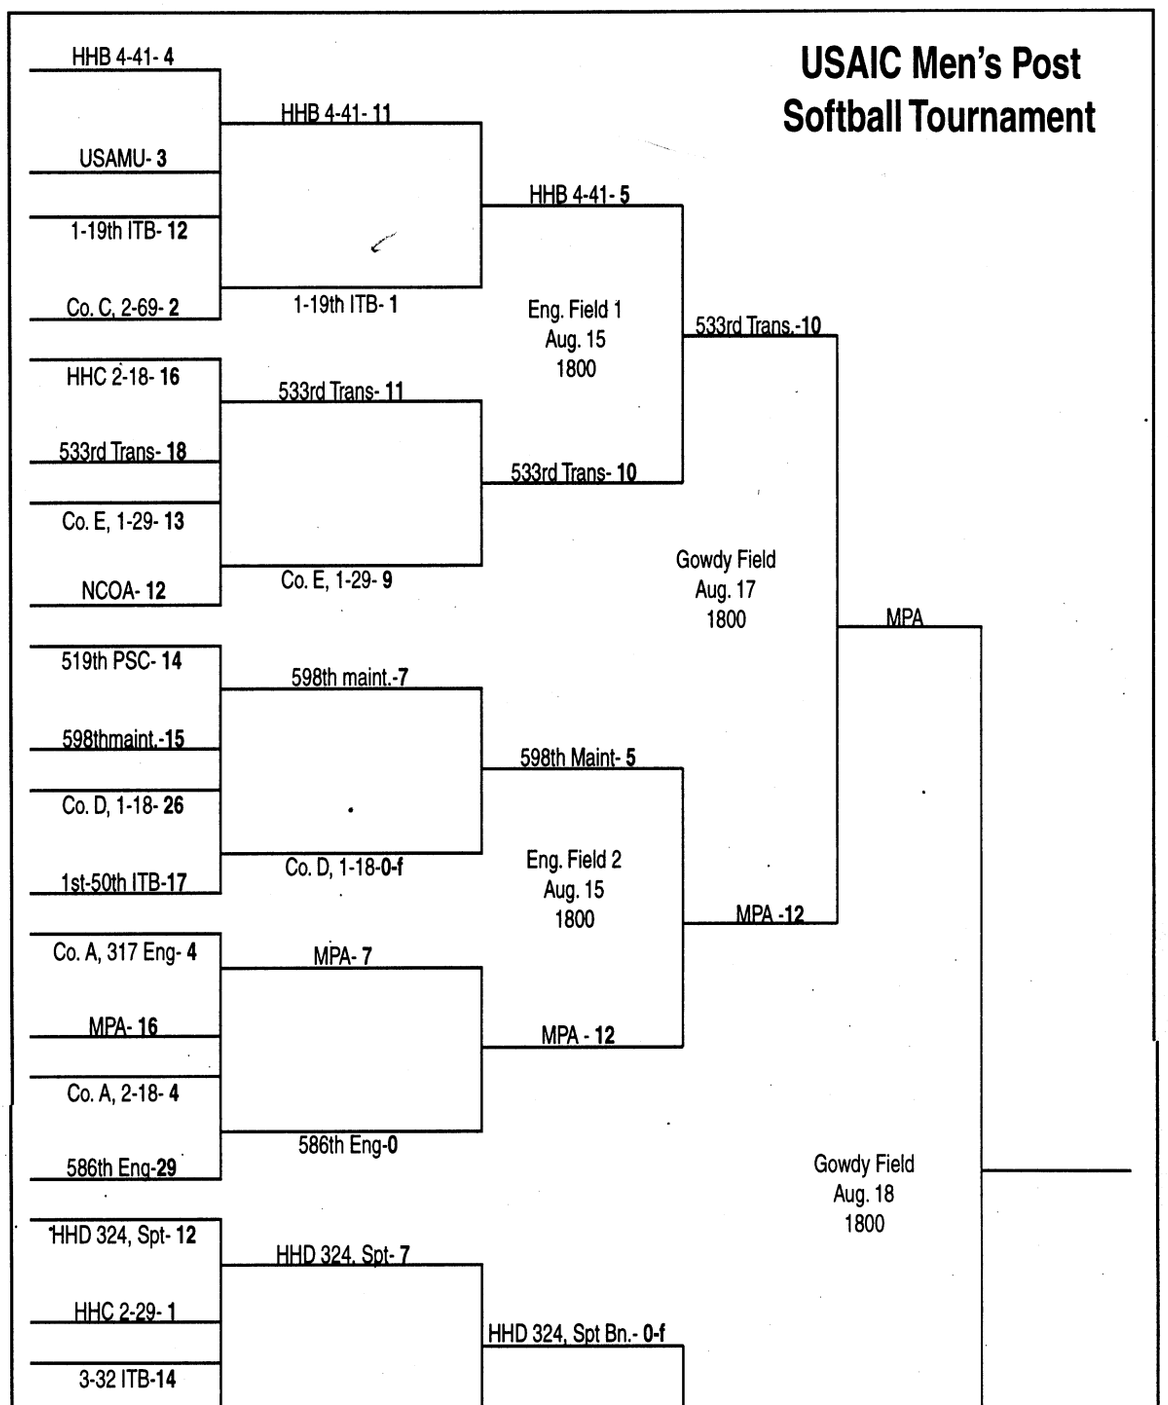
The Law Dogs tried to put the game away in the top of the seventh inning with a four-run outburst. A solo homer by shortstop Willie Gregory, a two-run double by Wilonski and an RBI single from third baseman Joseph LaBranche pushed the lead to 12-7, with Rolling Thunder coming to bat.

A two-run double by shortstop Larry Wilson and an RBI ground out from Fisher cut the Law Dog lead to 12-10 in the bottom of the seventh inning but couldn't complete the rally when McGrew ended the game with a fly-ball out to right field, moving the Law Dogs into the championship game Thursday night.

Game two was not quite as close as game one. The Barbarians of Company E, 2nd Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment, pounded the Hedgehogs of Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor Regiment, 3rd Brigade, 24th Infantry Division, 14-5.

The Barbarians opened the game with a three-run inning in the top of the first. Second baseman Larry Smith hit a sacrifice fly to left field and two batters later catcher Todd Tongue lined a two-run single past a diving Alex Carrillo at shortstop for the 3-0 lead.

The Hedgehogs claimed the lead at 5-3 for the first time with a five spot in the bottom of the second inning. Two out doubles by Carrillo, left fielder Lou Northern, short fielder Benjamin Pletcher and pitcher Curtis Dart along with a run scoring single off the bat of first baseman Coron Scott brought the Hedgehogs out of the dark and into the light.



The Barbarians wasted no time in getting the lead back. An RBI single by Smith coupled with Tongue's two-run single in the top of the third gave the Barbarians the lead at 6-5.

In the top of the fourth inning, the Barbarians added to their lead with two more runs. With runners on second and third, left fielder Dock Newell laced a pitch to left field for a two-run single.

The Hedgehogs, no matter how hard they tried, couldn't keep the Barbarians from the gate. Five runs in the top of the fifth inning lifted the Barbarians to a 13-5 advantage with two innings to play.

In the top of the seventh inning, the Barbarians scored on an RBI ground-out to third by third baseman Calvin Figley.

In the bottom of the seventh inning, with two out, right fielder Jason Weaver ended the game with a force play to Figley at third, sending the Barbarians into a championship showdown with the Law Dogs of MPA.

RedStixx

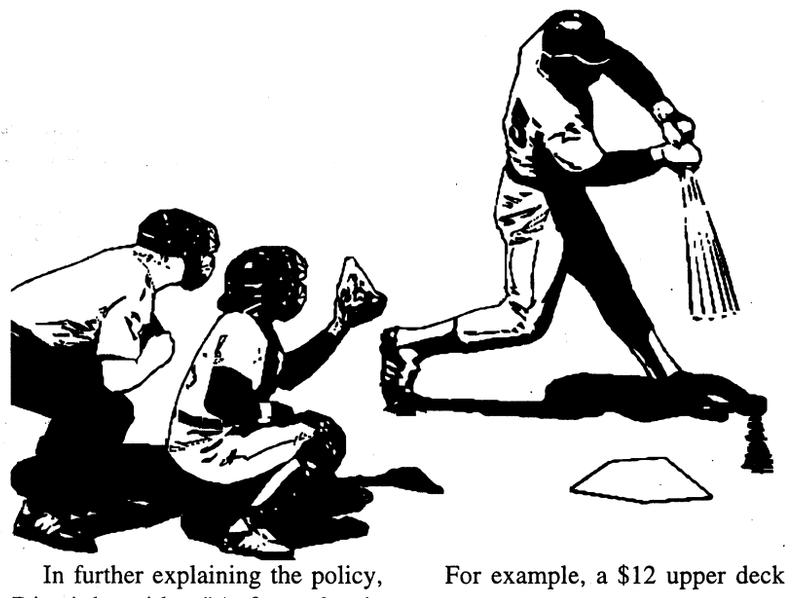
to honor major league tickets for games canceled by players' strike



Columbus RedStixx

The Columbus RedStixx of the South Atlantic League have announced that any fan wishing to exchange a ticket for a 1994 major league game canceled by the major league baseeball players' strike for a 1994 RedStixx ticket may do so and the major league ticket will be honored at face value.

Officials said this is being done to provide professional baseball entertainment for strike-starved major league baseball fans.

"We understand that there may be a large number of fans who will be holding tickets to games canceled by the strike, particularly in our area," said Columbus RedStixx vice president and general manager John Dittrich.

"We are inviting these folks to give minor league baseball a try and, in so doing, realize the full value of their ticket purchase," he said.

In further explaining the policy, Dittrich said, "A fan who is holding a field-level box-seat ticket (can exchange it) for four box seats at Historic Golden Park (box seats are priced at $5 for Columbus RedStixx' games).

"Most major league fans will find that the general admission seating (priced at $4) is closer to the action than the best seats at a major league park and probably more comfortable. If they wish to exchange a $20 ticket for five general admission tickets, we will do that also," he said.

Likewise, any major league ticket for any major league game canceled by the strike will be honored for its face value, Dittrich said.

For example, a $12 upper deck ticket for an Atlanta game would be good for three close-to-the action general admission seats at Golden Park. In another example, a person who has a $12 ticket may exchange it for three $5 box seats with the ticket and just $3.

RedStixx' management cautions that no cash refunds or exchanges will be given.

Any person wishing to take advantage of this offer or to obtain tickets for any remaining 1994 Columbus RedStixx games may do so at the Golden Park offices, by mail or by telephone. Call 571-8866 or write Columbus RedStixx, P.O. Box 1886, Columbus, Ga. 31902.

Carolina rigs work with light tackle

By Earl Bentz and Steve Price
Outboard Marine Corporation

commentary

Of all the techniques anglers use today to catch bass, the Carolina rig ranks as one of the most popular — and most effective.

Now, the tournament pros are making it even better.

"We call it a 'mini-Carolina rig,' or 'light Carolina rig' because we're using it with much lighter tackle," says Johnson Outboards Pro Staff angler Charlie Reed.

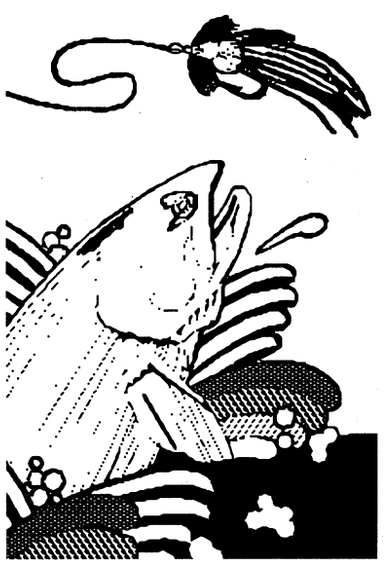
"In the past, heavy tackle with 20-pound test line has been standard with Carolina rigs, but now you're seeing some anglers use the technique with lines as light as eight-pound test."

The basic Carolina rig, so name because it is believed to have been developed originally by bass fishermen in North Carolina, consists of a three-quarter or one-ounce slip sinker, a swivel and a two- to three-foot leader.

Its advantage is that it puts the lure, usually a plastic worm or lizard, far behind the heavy sinker where it appears more natural.

"A mini-Carolina rig consists of eight- or 10-pound test line; a much lighter sinker, such as one-quarter or three-eighths ounce; a swivel; and a 12- to 18-inch leader," Reed said.

"You can use the same six-inch lizard or plastic worm, but personally, I like to use a smaller plastic grub."



The lighter rig offers several advantages, according to the Johnson pro.

It is especially effective in colder water when the fish are less active, and it also works well in clear water where bass tend to be more spooky.

"If you're fishing a lake with a lot of rock or brush on the bottom, the lighter rig also works well because the smaller sinker slides through the obstacles better and does not snag as often," Reed adds.

Other pros like the mini-Carolina rig for shallow water shoreline fishing during the spring.

A normal rig frightens bass when the heavy sinker splashes down, but the lighter sinker does not.

"Still another time to use a mini-Carolina rig is in fishing shoreline vegetation," Reed said.

"You can toss a lizard into the weeds and crawl it out so it looks completely natural.

"In fact, when some pros fish this way, they even eliminate the sinker entirely." he said. "When you're using spinning tackle, the weight of the lizard itself is all you need for casting."

ITB teams make softball playoffs

By Shelby Carr
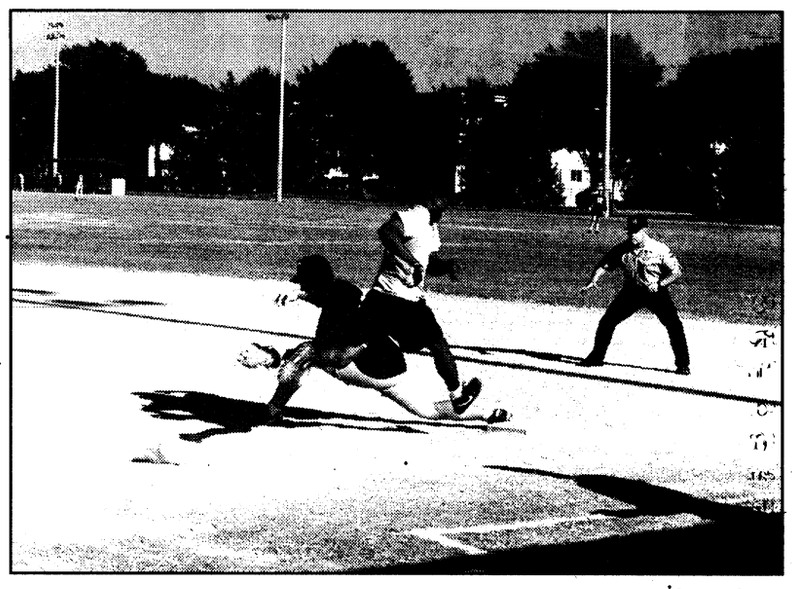
Infantry Training Brigade

For the first time ever, four teams from the Infantry Training Brigade went to Fort Benning's softball playoffs.

Three teams tied for second place, one game behind the winner, 1st Battalion, 19th Infantry Regiment, Rock Steady, for the closest competition on Sand Hill in many years.

1st Bn., 19th Inf. Regt., finished the season with eight wins and four losses as 3rd Bn., 32nd Inf. Regt., Queen's Own; 1st Bn., 50th Inf. Regt., Bayonet; and 2nd Bn., 54th Inf. Regt., Blue Knights, all finished the season with seven wins and five losses.



The top two seeded teams from ITB won their first-round games in the post playoffs to advance to the final 16 teams.

Rock Steady and Queen's Own, seeded second from ITB, both won their first-round playoff games and advanced to the second round. In the second, round neither team was able to win and the season for ITB came to an end.

"(Post playoffs) are a step up," said Warren Cate, coach of the Rock Steady team. "Competition is a lot tougher."

Bayonet was seeded third from the ITB league while the Blue Knights were seeded fourth.

"I enjoyed playing very much," said Walter Flinn, a member of the Blue Knights team. "I was impressed with the high level of athletic skill shown on the field."

Shelby Carr

Both teams advanced to the first round of the post playoffs, where they lost in two high-scoring games.

The Blue Knights forced the game into extra innings, but they were unable to pull out a victory.

With the new post-playoff format of single elimination, all teams are out of the tournament after their first loss.

For five months, beginning with practices in April and ending with the post playoffs, the teams from ITB competed in a double round-robin season, despite many games being delayed by the weather.

"I think we played some really great softball out here," Cate said, "evidenced by the fact 1st Battalion, 19th Infantry Regiment, won."

The season standings came down to the last doubleheader the Bayonet battalion played. The Bayonets could have won the season had they defeated the Blue Knights in the first game and the Rock Steady team the second.

Losing to the Blue Knights but defeating the Rock Steady team, the Bayonets tied for second.

Cavalry edges past Total Systems

By Terry K. Ray
Special to The Bayonet©

The U.S. Cavalry, a combined military team, swept through the losers' bracket in the Columbus Industrial League tournament at Benning Park Aug. 10 to claim the championship with a doubleheader sweep of Total Systems, ending their two-year reign as champions.

U.S. Cavalry used the long ball to squeak past Total Systems 22-21 in the first game to force the second game.

Home runs from Mike Harris, Johnathan Griffin (2), James Rodney (2) and Chad Knudson led the charge.

In game two, Thomas McCall's two-run blast in the first inning set the stage for the nightcap.

Andrew McDonald and Jose Perez combined for six of the Cavalry runs in an eight-run outburst in the third inning.

McDonald cleaned the bases with a grand slam and Perez slammed a two-run blast.

In the fourth inning, McCall led off the inning with his second round-tripper of the game.

Knudson slammed his second homer of the night, a two-run shot in the fifth inning, to help give U.S. Cavalry a lead that Total Systems could not overcome. The final score was 25-20.

"We figured we could play with these guys in this league," said head coach and player Jimmie Armstrong. "We just weren't sure how far we could go. After losing early in the tournament, it became a do-or-die situation. We didn't want to lose after coming so far."

Military Police Activity

This week's hot topic is motor vehicle insurance. According to U.S. Army Infantry Center Regulation 190-5, Motor Vehicle Traffic Supervision, all operators of privately owned vehicles (military and affiliated civilians) are required to maintain vehicle liability and no fault insurance in the following amounts:

• Personal injury liability — $10,000 per individual and $20,000 per accident.

• Property damage liability — $5,000.

• No-fault insurance — $5,000 per injured insured.

Individuals found to be in violation of this regulation are subject to the following penalties:

• The vehicle will be impounded and towed at owners expense and fines will be imposed by federal magistrate ranging from $200 to $1,000 and/or 12 months imprisonment.

Additionally, the commander or supervisor will be notified and points will be assessed to the individual's on-post driving privilege record.

The following entries are from the Fort Benning Military Police blotters from Aug. 1 to 8. Such entries may be incomplete and do not determine the guilt or innocence of anyone.

• A first lieutenant was charged with driving under the influence of alcohol, excessive speed and no post decal. He was traveling down Fort Benning Boulevard at 62 mph in a 35 mph zone.

He was stopped, administered a field sobriety test, which he failed, and was transported to the Military Police station, where he was administered a breathalyzer test with a result of .11 percent of alcohol. He was processed and released to his unit.

• A former soldier that was assigned to a maintenance company on post was charged with false official statement and larceny of government property.

The former soldier was attempting to obtain a check from the Finance and Accounting Office for a do-it-yourself move claim he had filed using his permanent change of station orders he received while stationed in Korea.

The former soldier, on three previous occasions, had filed do-it-yourself move claims for a total of $5,198.80 using the same permanent change of station orders. The former soldier was apprehended, processed and released.

• A sergeant first class was charged with larceny of nonappropriated fund property (shoplifting), at the Post Exchange at the Main Mall. He was observed removing a metal clip ring fastener from a tool box and placing it in his pocket.

He then exited the store without rendering payment for the item. He was apprehended, transported to the MP station, processed and released to his unit.

• Two juvenile family members were charged with larceny of property (shoplifting) at the Post Exchange. The two removed three gold chains from the jewelry counter, placed them in their pockets and proceeded to the men's department.

The two juveniles each removed two wallets from the men's department and exited the store without rendering payments for the items. Two cassette tapes were found on the juveniles while in the security office.

Both juveniles were transported to the MP station, processed and released to their sponsors.

• Other activities on post included eight cases of driving under the influence of alcohol, one traffic accident, 23 cases of larcenies, and seven cases of shoplifting at the exchange facilities.

• Remember to help "Make Our Post the Best — Give Crime Arrest. " Report any activity that seems wrong or out of place to the Military Police station at 545-5223 or 545-5224 or the Crime in Progress" line 545-5222.

Soldier finds spiritual, military roles compatible

By George Doyle
Special to The Bayonet

reflections

It has been my privilege to serve in two great armies. First and foremost I am a soldier of the "Eternal King," and I have also been a soldier in the U.S. Army for 19 years.

Throughout my military career, I have never found any incompatibility or inconsistency between my duty as a soldier and my faith as a Christian. To the contrary, I have found the two complement each other.

Today's military is in great need of men and women of God if it is to operate at maximum effectiveness. I think an understanding of the military profession helps me appreciate the Biblical accounts and metaphors of being a spiritual soldier.

From Genesis 14, with Abram leading the first military operation in rescuing Lot, to Deuteronomy 20, where Moses gives instruction on the laws of warfare, to 2 Samuel 23 and the inspiring account of David's victory, and throughout the New Testament, we are shown story after story about a soldier's life being a picture of a Christian's life.

In all of Paul's writings, he uses military analogies to explain to the young Christians about their walk. A soldier who has been on a lonely guard post in combat is very sensitive to the meaning of "putting on the whole armor of God."

Early in my career, I was confronted by the complex matters of the military profession. Immediately after flight school, I was sent to Vietnam where the nature of war challenged all of my values.

When I returned to the United States, I was seen by some as a warmonger. I was able to understand that in our great system of government. I truly hated war as much as any of the war protesters of that time, but the military was there solely at the direction of the constituted civilian authority.

I was also able to begin to understand the precious intangibles that draw together those who have laid their lives on the line in the defense of freedom.

My unit was the first back into the Khe Sahn area after the withdrawal of the Marines. I remember one of the bunkers had a quote by Theodore Roosevelt written on it — "For the man who has fought for it, life has a flavor the protected will never know."

The same is true of spiritual warfare. When you have "stood in the gap" with a Christian brother in hard times you will always enjoy a spiritual relationship with him.

Paul said, "Endure hardship with us like a good soldier of Christ Jesus," (II Timothy 2:3 NIV). At the end of his life he was able to say, "I have fought a good fight."

Personally, one of the most meaningful stories about the Christian faith in the Bible is recorded in Matthew 8 and Luke 7. We are given the account of a Roman centurion who sent friends to Jesus on behalf of his servant, who was deathly ill.

When Jesus agreed that he would go with the men to minister to the servant, the centurion sent word that Jesus need not come but just say a word and his servant would be healed.

The basis for the centurion's faith was his understanding of authority. He said that he too was a man under authority, who having soldiers under him could say "Go," and they would go, and "Come," and they would come.

About his faith, Jesus simply said that he had found no greater faith in all Israel. This was a Roman centurion, not one of the disciples, or a Pharisee, or a rabbi but a military man.

God desires that we understand his rightful authority over us, yet we, as Adam, have rebelled and gone against his authority. God wants us to know the provision and protection that comes with that authority. He said for us to take on "his yoke," and we would find rest.

I am proud to be an American fighting man. Service to this great country of ours has become a way of life for me. In serving, my life has meaning and purpose. I am proud of the fine men and women with whom I have served. They have been my friends and my counselors. They have also saved my physical life.

I am infinitely more proud to be a soldier for the one who has saved my eternal life, the one who is the consummate friend, the ultimate counselor, king of kings and lord of lords.

I look forward to his return, not as a small baby in a manger, but as described in Revelations — on a great white horse, with eyes of flame and leading the armies of heaven. That is the army I will serve in forever, for I too am a man under authority.

Youths rally at Camp Joy

By Jacqueline Feagin
USAIC Chaplains' Office

One hundred young adults participated in the Youth Rally at Camp Joy August 12 to 14.

"You Are The Light of the World," the theme for the event, encouraged youths to be a positive force in their community.

Through small workshops, the youths engaged in discussion about communication, responsibility, peer pressure, love and prayer.

In most of the workshops, the youths centered their comments on drugs and sex, according to the counselors.

Counselors encouraged them to be "ultimately responsible for themselves" said Paul Dobbs, of the Bradley Center in Columbus.

The rally included activities for grades six through high school. Campfire activities included a wiener and marshmallow roast with devotion and singing.

Youths and staff members learned a new meaning of the word "pray" from Sister Nancy Walsh, a nun from Pensacola, Fla.

She said P.R.A.Y. stands for Places, Reasons, Actions and Your words when you speak to God. That was the acronym most youths remembered, according to evaluations they filled out at the end of the rally.

When asked their overall feelings about the weekend, most put down that they thought it was a good weekend.

The Youth Rally was sponsored by the Fort Benning Unit Ministry Team. Chaplain (Lt. Col.) Ford G'Segner said, "The UMT plans to have more youth rallies in the future." For more information, contact your unit chaplain.

NCOs sought for attache duty

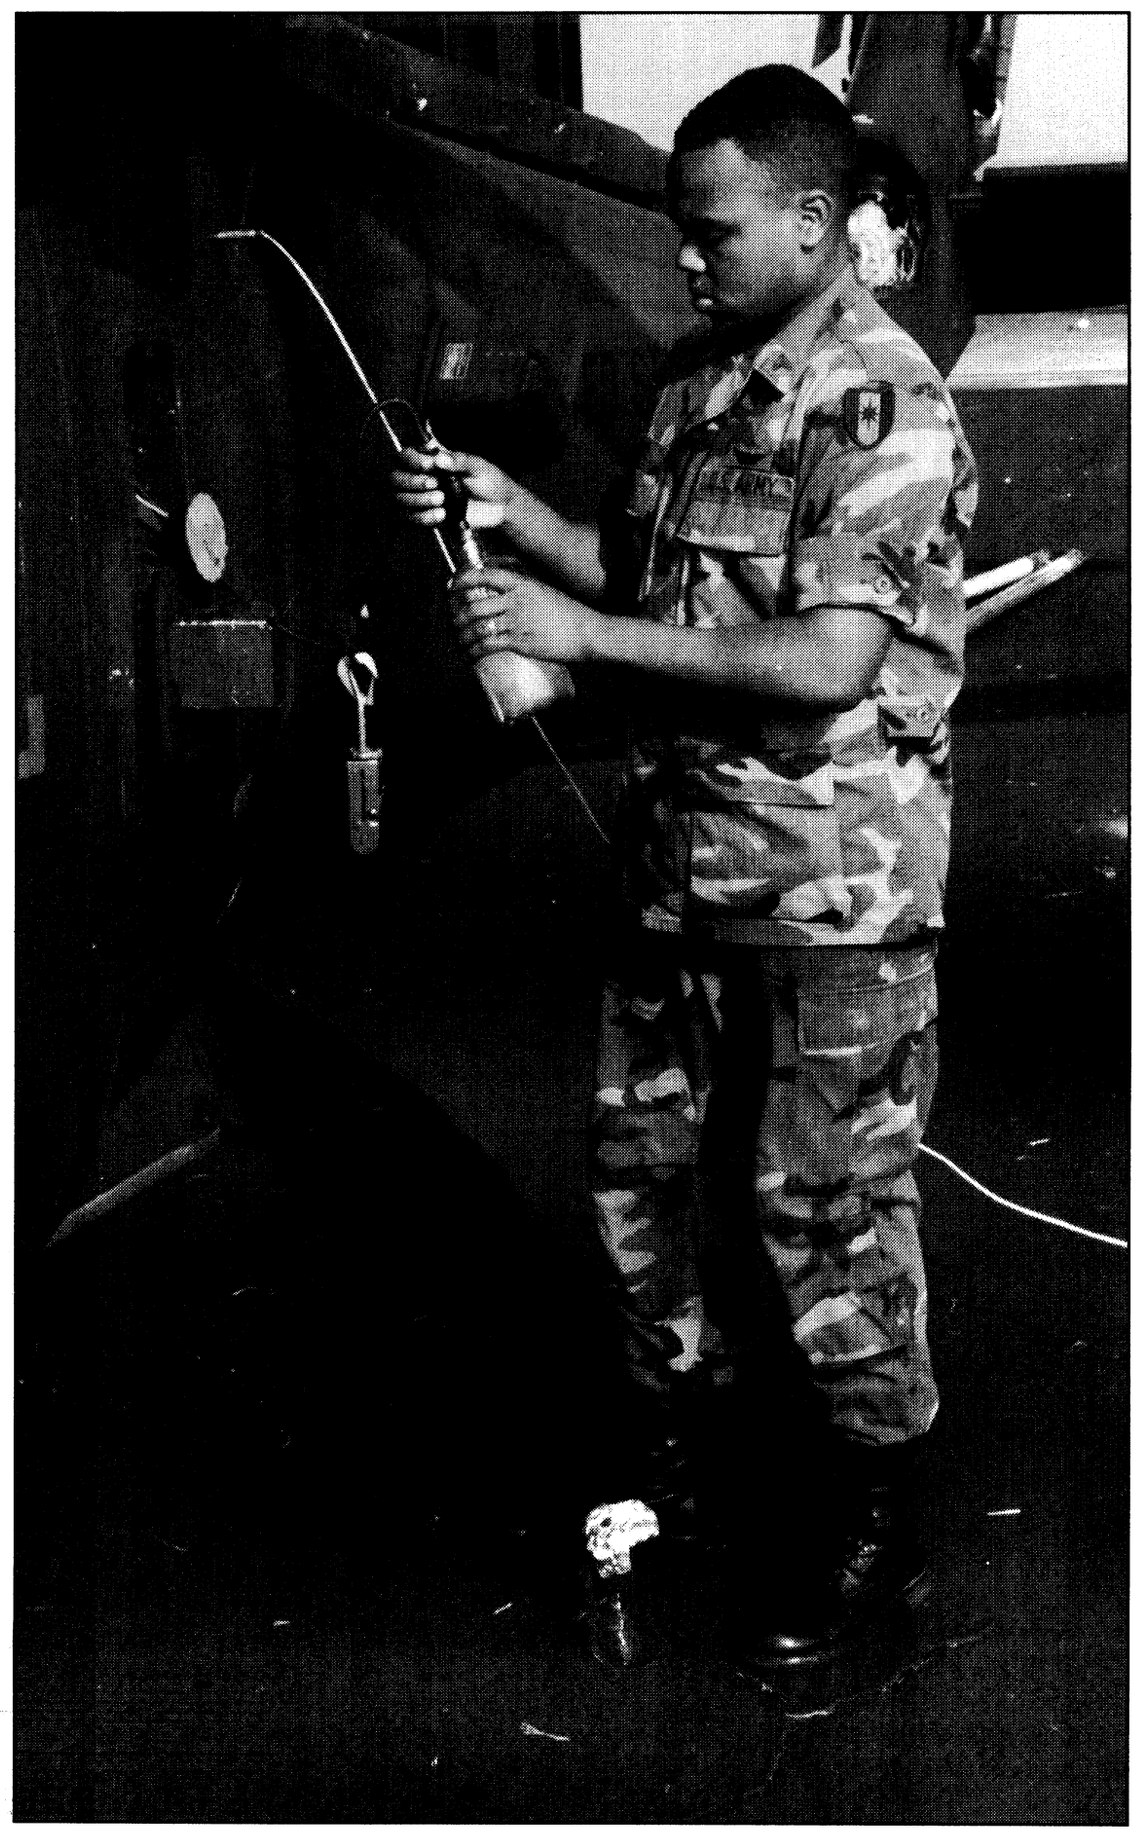
Army News Service

WASHINGTON — The Defense Attache System is looking for some top-notch noncommissioned officers who want an exciting, challenging and rewarding new career field.

The DAS is recruiting soldiers, sergeant through master sergeant, for Joint Service Staff assignments with American Embassies in more than 80 locations around the world.

Selected NCOs represent the U.S. Army and the Defense Intelligence Agency while serving diplomatic assignments in Europe; North, Central and South America; Africa; and the Far and Middle East.



"No other Army program provides soldiers with the opportunity to live and work in so many different countries, as well as experience so many diverse and unique cultures," said Staff Sgt. Linda Peterkin, Army Attache enlisted assignments manager.

"From Austria, Brazil and Canada to Zimbabwe, Finland and Turkey, these worldwide diplomatic assignments offer unmatched opportunities and challenges."

To qualify for attache duty, NCOs must be on active duty, qualify for a top-secret security clearance, have a General Technical score of 115 or higher, a Clerical score of 120 or higher, a typing score of 40 words per minute or higher, and be familiar with the latest word processors.

Soldiers must also test 100 or higher on the Defense Language Aptitude Battery. All family members must be U.S. citizens and meet the medical standards for the country of assignment.

For prerequisites, application procedures and countries available in the program, consult Army Regulation 611-60. For more information, call Peterkin at (410) 712-0137, extension 2633; the DSN prefix is 923.

Army plans1995 enlisted drawdown

Army News Service

WASHINGTON — Soldiers in excess grades and skills are the focus of the 1995 Enlisted Drawdown Plan.

The overall plan follows Department of Defense and congressional guidance by taking advantage of separation incentives to shape the force, by minimizing involuntary separations and by maintaining readiness, said personnel officials.

Early retirement will again be offered to selected soldiers who have 15 to 20 years of service.

However, since early retirement is not an entitlement, not all soldiers with 15 or more years are eligible. It will only be offered to soldiers in excess grades and skills.

In fiscal 1995 early retirement will be offered only to soldiers who meet the following qualifications:

- In selected military occupational specialties and grades
- Promotable sergeants reaching their retention control point of 15 years
- Promotable sergeants currently "grandfathered" toward a 20-year retirement
- Soldiers with more than 18 years of service who have been selected for separation under the Qualitative Management Program or signed a declination of continued service statement.

The Voluntary Separation Incentive and Special Separation Benefit programs will be modified for the rest of the drawdown.

In fiscal 1995, the only enlisted soldiers eligible for VSIand SSB will be specialists, corporals and sergeants who will be reaching their retention control points, but who have an expiration of term of service beyond their RCP.

Other specialists and corporals who have reenlisted under current RCP rules, and whose expiration term of service comes before their RCP will be entitled to separation pay.

Other soldiers eligible for VSI and SSB are those ranked sergeant or above, with nine or more years of service in specific excess military occupational specialties and grades; and to any soldier with six or more years of service at separation, fully qualified for retention, but denied reenlistment by Headquarters, Department of the Army.

Application windows for certain categories of early retirement and VSI and SSB (soldiers in specified excess MOSs) will close on Aug. 31.

These categories will only be reopened later in the fiscal year, if additional losses are required, officials said.

The Voluntary Early Transition program will again be offered during fiscal 1995 to soldiers in specific excess grades and MOSs, who have less than six years of service.

However, the number of soldiers separating under this program will be small, and will be limited to soldiers in severely overstrength MOSs, officials said.

No Sergeant Major selective early retirement board or enlisted reduction-in-force is planned for fiscal 1995.

world war II

50 years ago this week ...

- The launching of a massive Soviet attack against the Third and Fourth Rumanian and German Sixth Armies caused King Michael of Rumania to dismiss Prime Minister Ion Antonescu and accept Russian armistice terms. Many of the Rumanian troops formerly allied with the Germans either deserted or joined the Soviets. Rumania signed a formal armistice with the Allies on September 13th.
- In France the Falaise gap was closed by the junction of the Poles and the Americans at Chambois. Sixty thousand Germans were trapped by the Allies in the Argentan-Falaise pocket. In Paris the French Resistance attempted to liberate the city. The French 4th Armored Division approached the outskirts of the city as the Germans attempted to suppress the uprising.
- In India British and Chindit troops drove the Japanese from Assam, northeastern India. British troops followed the retreating Japanese from Manipur State in India into Burma. By the end of the week Japan had completed its withdrawal from India.

SOA cadets learn engineer skills

By Devon Kerbow
School of the Americas

For the first time in their short careers as engineers, the students in the School of the America's C-33 Cadet Orientation Course were able to experience what their jobs would entail after graduating from the academy in Colombia.

Classes began at Brown Demolition Range with each of the 25 students getting their own stick of dynamite to prime or prepare for explosion.

Before they could do this they had to learn the construction of electrical and nonelectrical firing systems, how to apply them to targets, proper placement of charges, and how to compute time fuses and explosives, said Capt. Luis Calvo, an engineer and guest instructor from Costa Rica.

To prime the dynamite, the students cut a 3 foot section of time fuse and timed it to calculate the burn rate. They had to consider how long it would take to walk back to the bunker and add that to their formula, said Sgt. 1st Class Edwin Rodriguez, a SOA engineering instructor.

In the next demolition, the students added an initiating system consisting of an igniter, time fuse, and blasting cap to the explosive, Rodriguez said.

Following that, the students detonated different types of explosives that they could use after their graduation in December.

"They're going through a basic live-fire demolitions class," Rodriguez said.

Because it was their first time dealing with demolitions, Rodriguez said some of the students were afraid the explosives would go off when they used the pliers. He added that the pliers were designed for that type of work and that to detonate, both force and light were needed.

Explosives aren't the only thing the students learn about in the 4 week course. Calvo said they are also taught about wire obstacles and bridge building.

Calvo said that he liked the fact that the cadets were open minded and ready to learn.

"They'll be recognized as engineers when they get home," he said.

Take the Air Assault Challenge

By Wanda Reynolds
U.S. Army Aviation Center

FORT RUCKER, Ala. — The Army Aviation Center at Fort Rucker, Ala., is gearing up for the Fourth Annual Air Assault Challenge Nov. 16 through 18.

Units worldwide are invited to send their best teams to compete to see who is the most proficient in all areas of air assault operations.

Contestants are invited to enter in teams of two, regardless of rank, service or gender.

Following one day of inprocessing and refresher training (plus an Army Physical Fitness Test), contestants will have two days of tests and exams. This year, up to 60 teams will be able to compete in the challenge.

"Fort Campbell, 101st Airborne Division, were the champions last year, and we are looking forward to seeing who can meet their challenge this year," said Capt. Bill Donatucci, commander of Company D, 1st Battalion, 10th Aviation Regiment, 1st Aviation Brigade (Air Assault).

Teams need to get their registration in to reserve a slot, Donatucci said. He also added that entries from other services, such as Marines and Air Force, would make it more competitive. Females are also asked to enter.

The challenge has eight scored events. The Army Physical Fitness Test consists of push-ups, sit-ups and a two-mile run. Contestants scoring 300 (100 in each event) will receive an additional point for each extra push-up and sit-up repetition and one point for each six seconds decreased in the run time maximum score.

Teams will then be given a base point, landing heading and stakes to mark a helicopter landing point based on standard distances between markings.

The obstacle course includes a confidence climb, low belly over, weaver, a swing, stop and jump and other obstacles.

The slingload inspection event will consist of preparation and rigging of four loads. Teams will be given two minutes to inspect all problem loads and find up to 16 faults.

Participants will then tie a complete Swiss rappel seat and climb the stairs of the 50-foot rappel tower.

The written academic exam will cover all phases of air assault training, including air assault, slingload and rappelling operations. The exam will have 100 multiple-choice questions to be completed in 15 minutes.

Competitors will be required to demonstrate hand and arm signals such as "move aircraft upward," "hover" and "cut slingload."

Teammates must finish the 12-mile foot march within 10 feet of each other. Team time stops when the last team member crosses the finish line. Contestants will be carrying an M-16 rifle mockup and a rucksack with prescribed equipment.

The top three teams in the competition will receive plaques, Donatucci said. Each member of the first place team will receive their choice of handguns. Second place winners will each receive a survival knife, and third place team members will each receive a leatherman's tool.

A prechallenge pamphlet and entry information are available by writing: Commander, Company D, Air Assault School, 1st Battalion, 10th Aviation Regiment, 1st Aviation Brigade (Air Assault), Fort Rucker, Alabama 36362-5000. The Air Assault School can also be contacted at (205) 255-1118 or 9790, or DSN 558-1118 or 9790. Registration deadline is Nov. 2.

Military Personnel Support get 'best' awards

M.T. Craig (left) stands with Maj. Gen. Wallace C. Arnold, assistant deputy chief of staff for Personnel. After accepting the award for the best military personnel support in the world during a ceremony at Infantry Hall Aug. 16.

Fort Benning's Army Career and Alumni Program and military personnel support, both under the post's Adjutant General's office, received the best ACAP and best military personnel support in the world awards Tuesday at 1 p.m. in Infantry Hall's Classroom 6.

Maj. Gen. Wallace C. Arnold, assistant deputy chief of staff for Personnel, U.S. Army, Washington D.C., will present the awards and $50,000 to M. T. Craig, transition services manager for ACAP and $50,000 to James E. Brinson, the post's Adjutant General, on behalf of their offices.

"It boils down to the installation that has the enthusiasm, the proper attitude, the initiative and the willingness to be able to go that extra mile," said Maj. Gen. Jerry A White, commanding general of Fort Benning.

The post's Morale, Welfare and Recreation division also won Best in the Army and $50,000, but their award is handled separately from ACAP and AG.

The money is in addition to the $1.5 million Fort Benning received recently after being named the best Army installation in the world during the 1994 Army Community of Excellence competition.

"The check is in the mail," Arnold said about the $1.5 million ACOE money.

Military services supports soldiers by maintaining their records, issuing identification cards and providing orders for awards, promotions and changes in assignments. It operates a welcome center, as well as an out-processing center, which is the first and last place soldiers visit at Fort Benning. It also supports more than 35,000 retirees through its retiree services division.

"This is the second year consecutively you have won this (best military personnel support) award," Arnold said.

"You are on top. You are winning because of what you do in terms of providing services and career management for soldiers."

ACAP is a program that assists soldiers through counseling and training and finding jobs in the civilian sector once their Army service is over. It has ties with the civilian job sector as well as local, state and federal labor departments.

"The services provided by ACAP ... are superb," Arnold said. "And certainly you have done that well."

ACAP offers automated job referral services and teaches its customers how to prepare resumes and handle job interviews.

"Keep doing those inovative things that you have been doing," Arnold said. "What you will do will help to take of (soldiers)."

The Fort Benning office is responsible for seven southeastern states and the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico.

Fort Fisher: Air Force Base near ocean open to all military members

By Marc G. Turchin
Bayonet staff writer

There is a haven of resorts up and down the U.S. East Coast, each with its own special flair for inviting vacationers.

The Atlantic Ocean, luxurious accommodations and entertainment are a few offerings resorts make available to the public.

The military can provide all of this for military members at a coastal community outside of Wilmington, N.C., called Fort Fisher Air Force Recreation Area.

"Our primary goal is to serve as a place where military people can come to rest, relax and rejuvenate so they can go back (to work) and do a better job," said Joe E. Taylor, site director for Fort Fisher.

The base is equipped to handle any size family or unit.

Fort Fisher offers three-and four-bedroom cottages; an executive room and suites that sleep two, four or six; lodge rooms that sleep two, four or six; three-bedroom mobile homes that sleep eight; sites for recreation vehicles to park and room for camping in a tent.

On-base facilities include a recreation center, featuring pool tables, a pingpong table and a big-screen television; a fitness room; a swimming pool with slide; a sauna; a jacuzzi enclosed by a glass ceiling; a rental center with various boat rentals; and the Beach House Bar and Grill, which serves breakfast, lunch and dinner.

A guest services card is given to all guests when they check in at the Reception Center. This card entitles all guests to use the facilities.

On certain nights of the week during the summer, Fort Fisher provides live musical entertainment and hermit crab races for children.

Camp Fort Fisher, a five-day-long camp for children ages eight to 14, is available five different times during the summer months. Included in the camp are programs by the North Carolina Aquarium and the State Historic Site.

Access to the Atlantic Ocean is across the street from the entrance to the post and is within walking distance.

Kure Beach is a little more than a mile away and offers a pier for fishing, restaurants and souvenir shops.

Jim Dye, a Coast Guard Reservist from Griffton, Fla. said, "We (Dye and his wife) enjoy the location, the solitude and the people."

During the off-season, the North Carolina National Guard conducts training on post, as do other units, said Katie Knight, marketing and group reservation coordinator for the base.

"Training is done on a steady basis during the off-season months," Knight said. This is to allow maximum availability to the families that want to come here during the in-season, she said.

Reservations can be made 90 days in advance for active duty Air Force personnel. All other military members can make reservations 85 days in advance. Retired military can make reservations 75 days before arriving.

All other patrons (Department of Defense civilians, National Guardsmen and Reservists) can make reservations 60 days in advance.

Reservations including Fridays or Saturdays must be made for a minimum of two nights. Holiday weekends will not be reserved for less than three nights. Reservations for a single weekend night can be made on the Thursday before the date of arrival.

Between Memorial Day and Labor Day weekends, reservations for stays of less than one week can only be made 30 days before arrival date.

Standard Weeks are week-long stays that begin and end on Monday or Wednesday. Reservations involving Tuesday or Thursday as arrival dates can only be made 30 days in advance.

Premium Weeks are week-long stays that start and end on Fridays, Saturdays or Sundays.

Reservations are made by room-type only. Specific accommodations or sites are not guaranteed.

For reservations or for more information, call Fort Fisher at (910) 458-6549.

Snack bar opens at bowling center

Renovation adds space, quality for post soldiers

By Marc G. Turchin
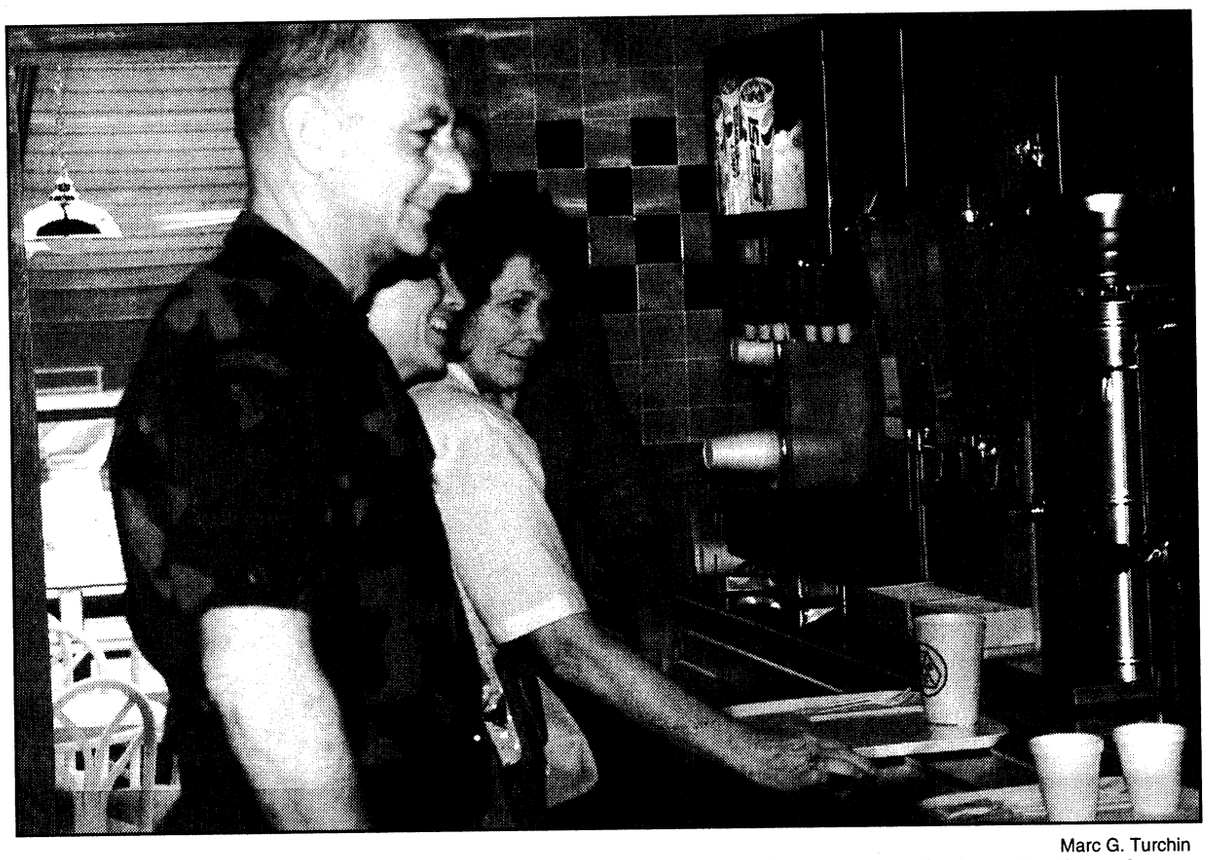
Bayonet staff writer

A new snack bar was unveiled Monday morning at the Main Post Bowling Center.

Maj. Gen. Jerry A. White, Fort Benning's commanding general, was the guest speaker at the opening ceremony.

"Because of so many people here on Fort Benning, I don't even know where to start to give credit," he said "So many have made this a regular event — to be able to stand up in front of a small crowd, and cut a ribbon on another facility for soldiers," White said.



After White concluded his speech, the crowd moved inside the bowling center for the official ribbon cutting.

Renovation of the Main Post Bowling Center Snack Bar was done because of increased customer demand for service at the bowling center. The work was funded by soldiers' dollars from the Morale, Welfare and Recreation Fund, said John Bush, chief, Community Operations Division, Directorate of Community Activities.

"It has been almost 20 years since the snack bar was renovated," Bush said.

The cost to renovate the snack bar was $200,000, Bush said.

"It was pretty expensive, because it was such an extensive renovation," he said.

Marc G. Turchin

Maj. Gen. Jerry A. White, Fort Benning's commanding general (front), Charlotte Jackson, cheif of Services Division, for the Directorate of Community Activites, and Linda, White's wife, are the first customers in the new snack bar's food line.

MWR funds were used to pay for to snack bar's renovation.

"Every dime used was soldiers money earned by the MWR, which is the soldier's corporation here on Fort Benning," he said.

A glass-roofed atrium was added to snack bar give more room for seating.

The atrium was contracted through the Directorate of Contracting and built by Daniels Construction of Lagrange, Ga.

"All together we can accommodate (more than) 100 people in the atrium and along the concourse," Bush said. With the new seating, the bowling center can now accommodate about 300 people during the lunch period.

The layout of the food service counters enables customers to pick up already-cooked meals and meals to be prepared at seperate locations.

A customer in a hurry can pick up a prepared lunch and bypass other customers who are waiting for cooked-to-order items, Bush said.

A new computerized register system has been set up in the snack bar to speed the process of ordering and receiving food, he said.

The computer is equipped with three separate printers, one for each part of the line. The person preparing the food can read the ticket and have an order ready in a minimal amount of time.

Regular operating hours for the snack bar are 9 a.m. to 11 p.m. Monday through Saturday. Noon to 11 p.m on Sunday.

School is just around corner

Registration ends today

Fort Benning Schools

Fort Benning Schools will begin the 1994-95 school year Tuesday. It's almost time for all students kindergarten through eighth grade to register.

Registration is being conducted at all seven Fort Benning Schools through today. Hours for registration will be from 8:30 a.m. 11:30 a.m. and from 1 to 3 p.m. each day.

Rather than have parents come on one or two specific days, parents are asked to choose the date and time that best fits their needs. Past practice indicates that there are large crowds on the first couple of days of the registration process. Parents who wish to avoid a long wait should consider this when choosing a registration time.

All students who attended Benning Schools last year must register for the 1994-95 school year. It is not necessary for parents of students who attended the Fort Benning Schools last year to bring any forms to the school, but there will be registration forms there that they will need to sign.

Children who preregistered during kindergarten roundup last May will also need to complete the registration process.

All new and returning students with learning disabilities, behavior or emotional disorders or speech-language disorders may register in their assigned school. All returning students who are physically or mentally handicapped may register at their home school.

New students who are physically or mentally handicapped or students with severe handicapping conditions should call the Special Education Office at 545-2500. Preschool handicapped students (must be at least 3 years of age) may contact the Special Education Office at 545-25008.

Requirements :

Parents should bring certain items to the school when they register. The items are determined by the student's age, grade and whether the child has previously attended a Fort Benning School.

- A child must attain the age of 5 by Sept. 1.
- Birth certificates or other proof of birth will be required for children to be enrolled in either kindergarten or first grade unless they attended kindergarten at Fort Benning last school year.
- Students registering at Fort Benning for the first time will be required to present a record of immunization at registration. This requirement will be strictly enforced.

Immunization requirements:

- Diphtheria, whooping cough and tetanus completed and booster if indicated.
- Polio series completed or begun with booster if required.
- Measles, mumps and rubella vaccine.
- All students except kindergarten must have a report card or grade placement record.
- Georgia Certificate of Eye, Ear and Dental Screening is required for all students entering the Fort Benning Schools for the first time. An appointment for a Georgia Certificate of Immunization and a Georgia Certificate of Eye, Ear and Dental screening can be obtained by calling 544-350. Children who are transferring into the Fort Benning Schools must show proof of a prior eye, ear and dental screening.

For more information, call 545-2500.

SatoTravel, ITR change offices

By Marc G. Turchin
Bayonet staff writer

A new office housing SatoTravel and the Information, Ticketing and Registration Office opened its doors for business Thursday at the Main Mall.

The old office in Building 247 closed Wednesday afternoon, said Lamar Caldwell, chief of Community Recreation Division, Directorate of Community Activities.

Increased space and customer convenience are the reasons for moving the office, Caldwell said.

"Since it will be located in the mall, it will only take one stop to do a lot of things," he said.

The new office will continue offering a variety of services.

SatoTravel handles all military and Department of Defense civilian leisure travel plans, and ITR offers discounted tickets to local movie theaters; to theme parks such as Six Flags, Walt Disney World and Universal Studios; and local concerts, including Atlanta, he said.

The money for the move was provided by the Morale, Welfare and Recreation funds, Caldwell said.

"There weren't any tax dollars put into the move. It was all self-generated through the MWR fund," he said. The new office's grand opening is scheduled for Sept. 12 at 4:30 p.m.

Operating hours for the new office are Tuesday through Saturday from 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. SatoTravel will be open Mondays from 10 a.m. to 6 p.m., but ITR will be closed. Sunday hours for both are 1 to 5 p.m. For more information, call 544-2970 or 544-2972.

Scouts assist flood victims

Girls, boys travel to Albany, Ga. to provide 'helping hands'

By Jerrie Macintire
Special to The Bayonet ©

Fort Benning Boy Scouts, who have vowed "to help other people" in the scout oath, traveled to Albany, Ga., Saturday to continue cleanup efforts in the aftermath of July's flood.

The cleanup venture in the southern Georgia town marks the third time Boy Scouts from Fort Benning's Troop 51 have donated time and effort to helping the flood victims, said assistant scoutmaster Mary Schevey.

Schevey, who coordinated the scout cleanup efforts Saturday as well as July 24 and August 6, said the community service effort is expanding.

The first group participating included Schevey, her husband, and six teen-agers, who gave a Saturday to "break down" damaged homes in a working middle class neighborhood in Albany, one of several Georgia cities damaged by flooding in July.

"We took out so many (wheelbarrows) of trash, walls, plaster and wiring. We were exhausted, but we felt proud. The houses now had a chance to dry."

— Mary Schevey
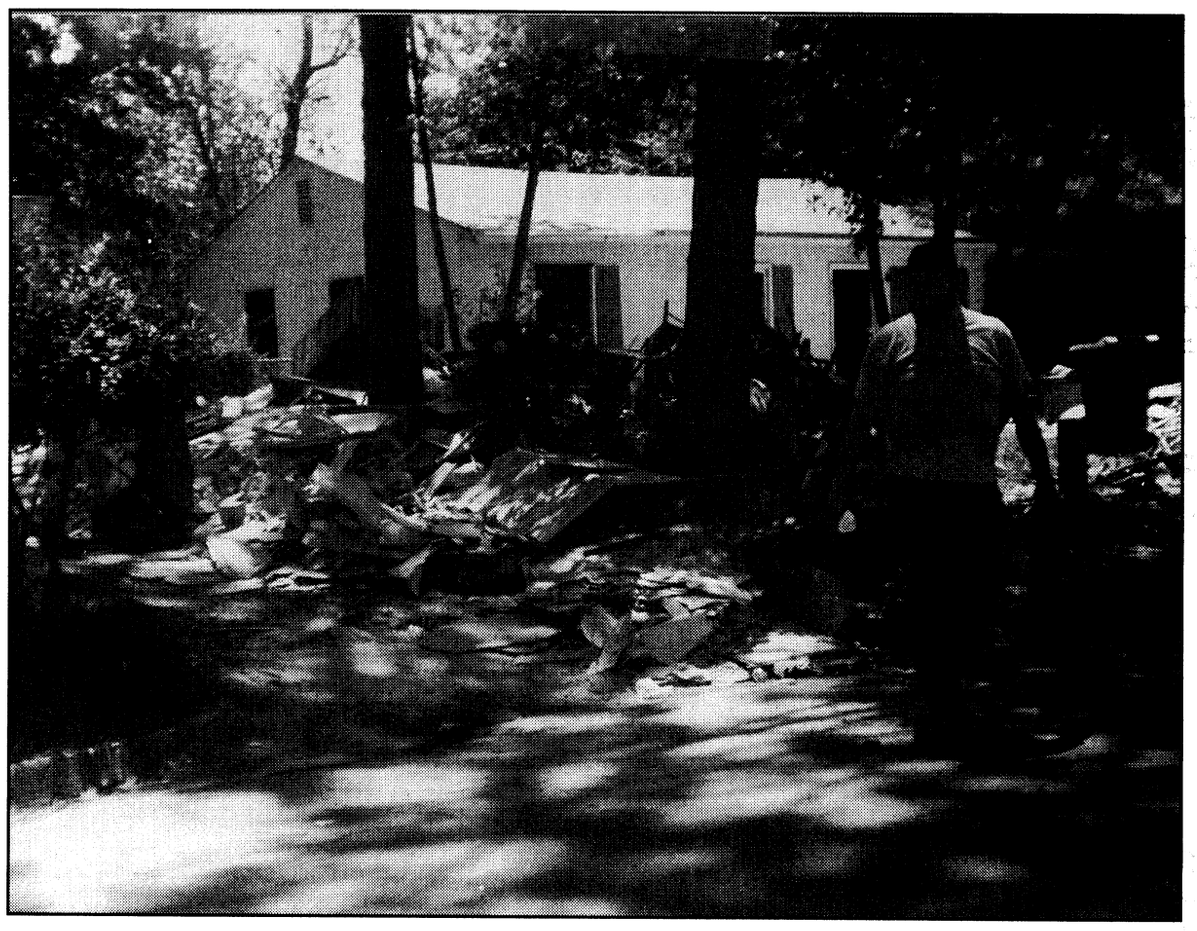
Assistant scoutmaster
Fort Benning's Troop 51

"It was so sad," Schevey said. We saw the people who had lived there. They lost so much."

Saturday more than 30 scouts joined Troop 51 for the 100-mile trip to Albany in passenger vans on loan from the Fourth Street Baptist Church in Columbus.



Participants included both Boy Scouts and Girl Scouts from the Fort Benning and Columbus area, who were invited to take part in the community service activity, Schevey said.

The scouts have been salvaging damaged homes by "breaking down" the structures which enables the building frames to dry.

The break down included removing floors, walls, and bathroom tiles so the frames could thoroughly dry, said Schevey.

Once dry, the structures will be rebuilt with some financial help from disaster relief funds and with some volunteer help from community service organizations.

Schevey estimated about 10 percent of the structures damaged by floods in Albany were a complete loss and could not be rebuilt.

Charles VanHousen, Scoutmaster of Troop 276 and 277, surveys a flood site.

"It's hard work, but the boys had been asking, 'What can we do?'" said Schevey.

"We took out so many (wheelbarrows) of trash, walls, plaster and wiring," she said. Before beginning the breakdown, the scouts helped remove all furnishings, which were ruined by muddy water rising more than 6 feet into the structures.

"They lost everything inside," she said.

"We were exhausted, but we felt proud. The houses now had a chance to dry," she said.

For more information on the scouting program in the Fort Benning area, call Steven Harris at 327-2634 or Staff Sgt. William Viruet at 545-3070.

pet tips

Fort Benning Veterinary Services

In 1993, more than 600 stray animals came to the Veterinary Services Stray Impoundment Facility.

Over population of homeless animals is a problem on post as well as in the surrounding community. More than one third of these animals had to be euthanized.

One way to help cut down on the pet population problem is to have your pet spayed or neutered. Spaying and neutering are not services that can be provided at the post Veterinary Treatment Facility but there are many off post veterinary clinics which offer that surgery.

Pet owners need to be aware of the regulations and policies governing pets running stray as well as general pet ownership.

Stray animals on Fort Benning are apprehended by Animal Control and brought into the Stray Impoundment Facility. Once a stray animal gets to this facility it will be kept three full working days to ensure that the animal does not have an owner. If the animal has not been claimed by it's owner on the fourth working day, the animal can be adopted out or euthanized.

All active duty soldiers, retirees and their dependents are eligible to adopt from this facility. Adopted animals will be vaccinated with the required vaccines, dewormed and proper diagnostic tests will be performed prior to the animal leaving the facility. The cost of vaccines and tests is the only adoption fee. Items such as shampoo and heartworm preventative may be purchased at an additional charge.

Any animal found running loose on post will be picked up by animal control and brought to the Stray Facility. If the animal has a tag the veterinary staff will attempt to contact the registered owner or the soldiers unit.

If after three days the owner can't be reached, the animal can at that time be adopted by a new owner or euthanized. Owners claiming their animals must show proof of current rabies vaccination and will be charged a fee for each day the animal was impounded.

Fort Benning USAIC regulation 40-905, which governs pet and Animal Disease Control on post, states "Pets will be kept indoors or secured outdoors on the owners premises." Animals being walked must be on a leash or under voice command at all times.

The Stray Impoundment Facility, Building 283, is located next door to the Veterinary Treatment Facility, Building 265, on 10th Mountain Division Road, next to Cablevision on main post.

For more information on the services provided call 545-4444 or 545-1127 during normal duty hours.

Benning mortarman in soldier show

By Jerrie Macintire
Special to The Bayonet ©

Fort Benning infantry mortarman Pvt. 2 James Price has temporarily exchanged his camouflaged uniform for a glittering ensemble suitable for touring with the U.S. Army Soldier Show.

Instead of rising before the sun to practice firing 4.2mm mortar rounds in field training exercises, Price has been traveling the country with the Soldier Show, scheduled to perform Sept. 4 in the Sand Hill Theater at 2 and 8 p.m.

In addition to entertaining, Price, a soldier with Headquarters Company, 2nd Batalliom, 18th Infantry Regiment, has helped handle the stage sets, lighting and sound equipment necessary for the operation of the musical variety production.

Price joins 21 other soldiers selected from around the world through audition tapes submitted in December. A past performer at the Beach Opry in Panama City, Price sings and plays guitar and keyboards.

The 22 cast members are temporarily assigned to the Alexandria, Va., Army Community and Family Support Center and are held to Army standards of appearance, physical fitness and discipline.

This year's Soldier Show premiered May 20 at Fort Belvoir, Md. and will log about 25,000 miles to 47 installations in 24 states as well as Panama and Puerto Rico.

The 75-minute performance, which will be seen by about 80,000 individuals over a six-month period, is billed as a highly-choreographed, state-of-the-art musical variety show, according to Nick Credgington, artistic director.

"There's a lot of Broadway-quality choreography; much more movement onstage. And the laser lights are back, along with more high-tech lighting," he said.

From solos to full chorus numbers, the show holds something for everyone, he said.

Solos include country favorites, rock 'n' roll, show tunes, rhythm and blues and jazz hits.

As a special tribute to World War II and the Normandy invasion, the cast will perform music from the 1940s.

Now in its 11th year, the Soldier Show continues the tradition of "entertainment for the soldier, by the soldier" initiated during World War I by Sgt. Irving Berlin.

Admission is free; the 8 p.m. performance Sept. 4 is open to all military members, retirees, DOD civilians and their families; a 2 p.m. performance is scheduled for soldiers and guests in the Infantry Training Brigade.

FORT MONROE, Va. — The first building on Fort Monroe, Va. named in honor of a soldier who fought in the Persian Gulf War was dedicated Aug. 4 in memory of Pfc. Ardon B. "Brad" Cooper, who was killed in Iraq during Desert Storm.

Cooper died after he was struck by shrapnel during Operation Desert Storm in Iraq. He was shielding a wounded soldier. For his selfless sacrifice, he was awarded the Silver Star posthumously.

The ceremony was attended by Cooper's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Ardon B. Cooper of Marietta, Ga., and Susan E. Cooper of Seattle, Wash.; and by his sisters Danelle, 23, and Kristin, 4; and brother Graeme, 7.

The dedication was hosted by Gen. Frederick M. Franks Jr., commander of Training and Doctrine Command; and was also attended by Gen. John H. Tilelli Jr., Army vice chief of staff, who was Cooper's division commander; and Sgt. Maj. Macario Rodriguez, the soldier's first sergeant.

"We are very proud of Brad," his father said. "We take even more pride in his reaction to helping another human, something that is above and beyond what we might do."

Cooper said his son was the type of person who would have even tried to help an injured enemy soldier if he had the opportunity.

Franks said naming the building for Cooper signifies the trust that is necessary between leaders and soldiers.

"Here you have a building where visitors of all grades and ranks certainly will be reminded of the tight bond of trust between leaders and soldiers. We need to constantly remind ourselves trust is the basic bond of leadership," he said.

"Pvt. 1st Class Cooper, in his heroic actions, will reinforce that, especially in the minds of those who stay in the visitors' quarters."

Cooper was born Sept. 19, 1967, in Seattle. He attended elementary school there but graduated from Ponderosa High School in Parker, Colo., in 1986.

He played on a nationally-ranked curling team for four years in Seattle. He attended elementary school there but graduated from Ponderosa High School in Parker, Colo., in 1986.

When people describe him now, an attribute they remember was his athleticism.

His father remembered that after high school, Cooper and a friend worked at the Veterans Administration Hospital in Denver, helping wounded veterans, many of them amputees.

One man, a double amputee Vietnam vet, never received visitors. Cooper and his friend decided, against VA rules, to give the man a day on the town. They were dismissed that evening when they returned to the hospital.

Cooper joined the Army, hoping for the medical field, but elected to remain in after being told there were no vacancies.

"He was the kind of person who didn't really think about the consequences to himself if it was going to help somebody else," said retired Master Sgt. Walter Clarkson, Cooper's platoon sergeant, who now lives in Copperas Cove, Texas.

In the approximately nine months that Clarkson was the platoon sergeant in Company A, 1st Battalion, 5th Cavalry, 1st Cavalry Division, he found that Cooper was a soldier who "worked hard and performed well beyond what he had to do."

"He was a self-achiever. If he'd see something that needed to be done, he'd take care of it," Clarkson said.

The incident in which Cooper was killed occurred Feb. 20, 1991, at a place called Wadi al-Batin in Iraq.

"We had been in Iraq since the day before on a reconnaissance mission," said Capt. Michael Kirkton, Company A commander. "We had patrolled and reconned overnight and pulled back in the morning."

The company was then engaged in a fierce firefight along a three-kilometer front with Iraqi troops in tanks and bunkers. The enemy also used artillery.

A Bradley Fighting Vehicle was hit and soldiers inside were wounded. Cooper left his vehicle to help the injured soldiers.

He was giving first aid to a soldier when an Iraqi artillery round hit his Bradley. According to Kirkton, Cooper seemed to instinctively cover the other soldier with his body an instant before the TOW antitank missiles onboard the Bradley exploded. Several soldiers were hit by shrapnel from the explosion, but Cooper's wounds were fatal.

"It all occurred right in front of me," Kirkton said. The captain, now assigned to Fort Knox, Ky., took command of Company A Aug. 20, 1990, about four weeks before it was deployed to Southwest Asia. In that short time he got to know Cooper well.

"He was a typical athlete, well-liked by his peers and his chain of command," Kirkton said. "He was a good kid, a good soldier."

The building which bears the soldier's name was built in 1910 and was originally the engineer's office. In 1946 it was converted into family quarters. Two years ago, after renovation, it became a distinguished visitors' quarters.

For Cooper's mother, Susan dedication of the building has great meaning.

"I take great comfort in knowing there's a place for Brad here as well as in Seattle," she said. "There's a place for him on each coast."

Sam Waterston seeks 'The Enemy Within'

By Kate O'Hare
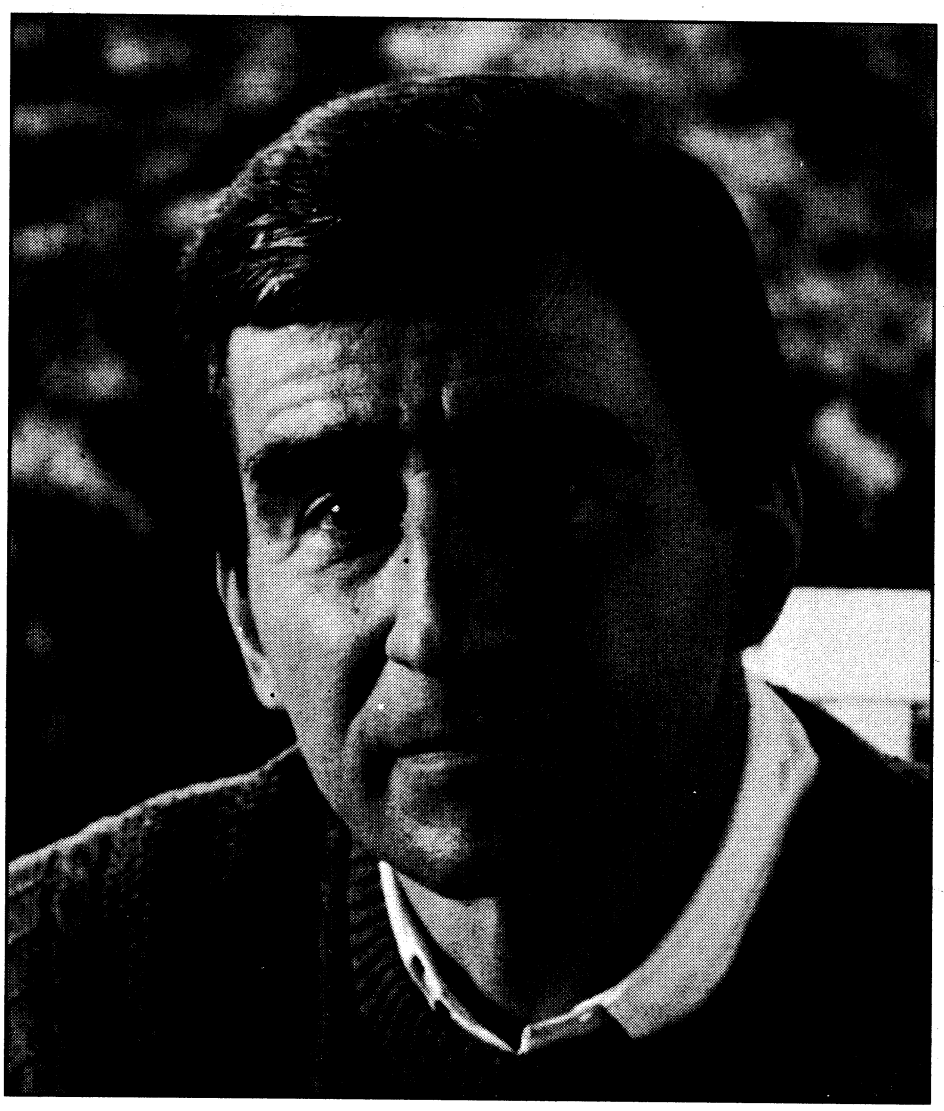
Tribune Media Services



SPOTLIGHT

Truth, justice, the American way.

While not exactly the Man of Steel, actor Sam Waterston does seem to be on a similar mission these days. In "The Killing Fields," he played a newsman searching for a friend lost in Cambodia; in Gore Vidal's "Lincoln," he played the 16th president, a role he revived on the New York stage this year in "Abe Lincoln in Illinois." On television, he starred in "Oppenheimer," the story of the scientist in charge of the development of the atomic bomb, who suffered a crisis of conscience in its aftermath. Most recently, Waterston played a Southern lawyer struggling at the dawn of the civil-rights movement in the acclaimed series "I'll Fly Away."

His two newest assignments are no less challenging: an embattled chief executive in an HBO movie, and the new assistant D.A. on the block in NBC's "Law & Order."

First up is Waterston's role as a fictional president in the HBO Pictures presentation of "The Enemy Within," premiering Saturday at 8 p.m. It's an update of the classic 1964 thriller "Seven Days in May," which was adapted by Rod Serling from the novel by Fletcher Knebel and Charles W. Bailey II. This version is executive-produced by Peter Douglas (whose father, Kirk, starred in the original film); Jonathan Darby directs from a screenplay by Darryl Ponicsan and Ron Bass. Technical adviser is U.S. Air Force Lt. Col. Charles J. Dunlap Jr., who wrote a prize-winning essay at the National War College on the possibilities of a future military coup.

What: "Enemy Within"
When: HBO, Saturday at 8 p.m.

In the near future of "The Enemy Within," politically shaky President William Foster (Waterston) is determined to reallocate budget money originally slated for defense, which earns him the animosity of Gen. Lloyd (Jason Robards). One of the general's subordinates, Col. Mac Casey (Forest Whitaker), an officer with the Joint Chiefs of Staff, uncovers some procedural irregularities concerning something called Operation Slam Dunk. Eventually he comes to suspect that the operation is just a cover for a planned military coup, and he has just 69 hours to expose the plot.

Speaking during breaks on the "Law & Order" set in New York, Waterston says: "If you want to have a paranoid fantasy, the paranoid fantasy of the military taking over the world's greatest democracy is a pretty good one. Let us pray that it is pure paranoia, but it is good paranoid fantasy."

What sort of a man is Foster? "I think he's very smart. He has a good sense of humor, and he thinks he's doing the right thing. He's very purposive; he thinks the country's in a bad situation and something urgent needs to be done. That's how he gets himself out on a limb, because he goes marching off and the troops don't follow."

Red-headed riot rocks residents

By Shelby Carr
Bayonet staff writer

Loud rock and roll, smoke drifting over the stage, lights flashing and an explosion set the tone for the stage entry Aug. 12 of the 1994 winner of the American Comedy Award for Best Male Stand-up, Carrot Top.

The comedian appeared before a crowd at the Three Arts Theatre for his only show in Columbus during his "Junk in the Trunk Tour."

Carrot Top used stand-up comedy and five full trunks of unique props to bring the crowd to its feet in a standing ovation.

Carrot Top, who bears a striking resemblance to the Wendy's girl, displayed a "grunge", style dressed in a T-shirt with his own logo, baggy, plaid flannel pants, red socks, green tennis shoes and his orange, clown-like hair.

From the lewd to the ludicrous, Carrot Top's props made the audience laugh so hard, at times, some people had tears rolling down their cheeks.

Most of his show is displaying and describing the use of his homemade props.

Carrot Top modeled his jacket for the "new" army— reversible, with a pink liner and a pink handkerchief in the front pocket.

"I'll get him, sergeant," Carrot Top said with a feminine accent as he pranced across the stage.

Among his repertoire of props are a number of hats, including a Buffalo Bills' football helmet with tissue on top for when they lose the Superbowl again.

For people who like to drink a lot of alcohol, Carrot Top has a hat that holds two cans of beer with straws to the mouth. Also, the hat includes a level so walking is not a problem.

If the level does not help, Carrot Top designed a pair of cowboy boots with kickstands attached to aid in walking.

For the Los Angeles Police Department, he designed a billy club with a timer so they know how long they have been beating someone.

Redneck and Alabama jokes were interspersed throughout the evening.

"For those of you from Alabama, I'll talk reeeaaal slooow," Carrot Top said.

He pulled a redneck hat out of one trunk. The hat was made of a cowboy hat with a can attached to it under the chin strap, so rednecks do not have to worry about spitting tobacco juice on the floor.

During his show, Carrot Top also gave a seminar on things to do to be funny.

• Walk into an airport to check in your baggage and have two doll-sized suitcases packed with Barbie doll clothes. Later, pick them up from baggage claim and pretend the airline shrunk them.

• Attach a stuffed animal to a frisbee and go to a park. Throw the frisbee around in view of the road so people driving cars will see a dog holding on to a frisbee flying through the air.

Carrot Top pulled out a pen attached to a chain, taken from a bank office and costing less than two dollars, and a canister from a drive through window, which he said costs about $200 and which the bank left lying around, to show the ridiculousness of people.

The finale of his show was a medley of songs for which he dressed up or had props.

Grabbing a pair of silver cones at least two feet in length, Carrot Top danced around to Madonna's songs "Like a Virgin" and "Like a Prayer" and held the cones in suggestion of her famous bra.

For his final parody, Carrot Top stripped down to biker tights and a wig and danced around like Mick Jagger, of the Rolling Stones, and then grabbed a walker with a microphone to show Jagger in 50 years still singing.

Soldier Show coming

By Jerrie Macintire
Special to The Bayonet ©

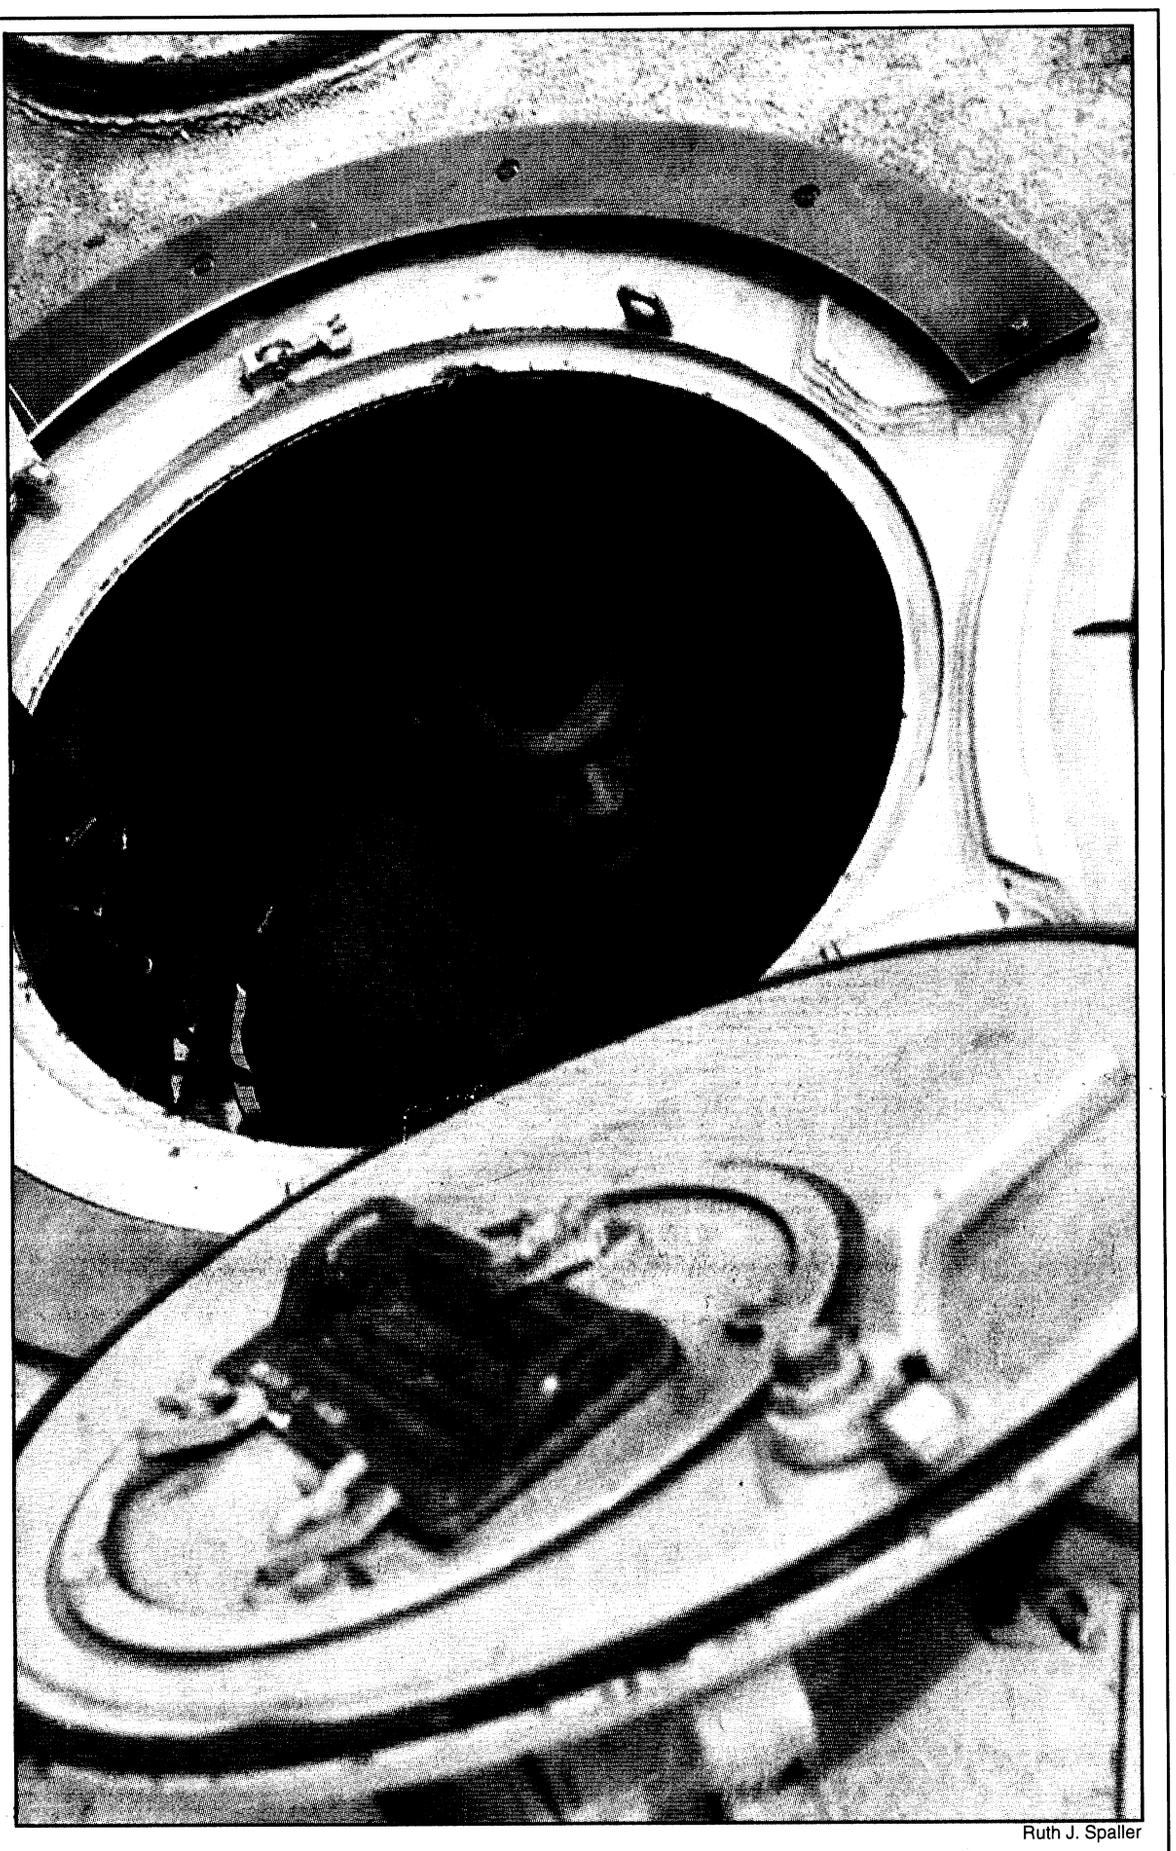
The U.S. Army Soldier Show, a 22-member cast of performers, is scheduled to perform Sept. 4 at the Sand Hill Theater at 2 and 8 p.m.

This year's show features a mortarman from Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 2nd Battalion, 18th Infantry Regiment.

Pvt. 2 James Price has temporarily exchanged his camouflaged uniform for the U.S. Soldier Show ensemble.

In addition to performing, Price has helped handle the stage sets, lighting and sound equipment necessary for the operation of the musical variety production. A past performer at the Beach Opry in Panama City, Price sings and plays guitar and keyboards.

This year's Soldier Show premiered May 20 at Fort Belvoir, Va., and will log about 25,000 miles to 47 installations in 24 states as well as Panama and Puerto Rico.



The 75-minute performance, which will be seen by about 80,000 individuals over a six-month period, is billed as a highly-choreographed, state-of-the-art musical variety show, according to Nick Credgington, artistic director.

"There's a lot of Broadway-quality choreography; much more movement on stage. And the laser lights are back, along with more high-tech lighting," he said.

From solos to full chorus numbers, the show holds something for everyone, he said.

As a special tribute to World War II and the Normandy invasion, the cast will perform music from the 1940s.

Admission is free; the 8 p.m. performance Sept. 4 is open to all military members, retirees, Department of Defense civilians and their families; a 2 p.m. performance is scheduled for soldiers and guests in the Infantry Training Brigade.

Rangers dedicate 'their' memorial

Ceremony highlights rendevous events

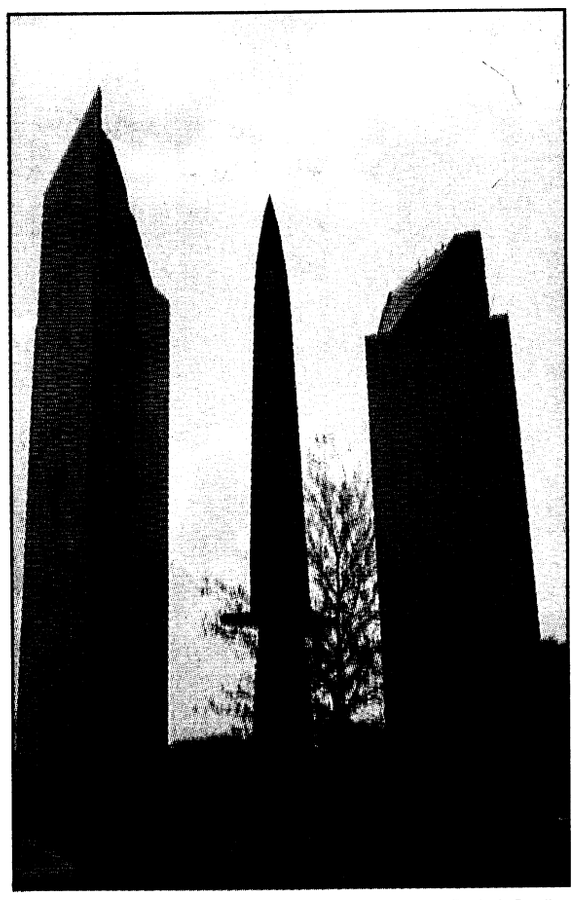
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Rangers "past, present and future" joined together Thursday evening to dedicate a memorial to rangers and ranger units, "past, present and future."

The evening ceremony was one of the highlights of several days of Ranger Rendezvous events that began Monday with a mass tactical jump at Lawson Army Airfield.

The memorial dedication was preceded by a march of ranger veterans — Darby's Rangers, Merrill's Marauders and rangers who fought in Korea and Vietnam and today's rangers.

Gen. Wayne A. Downing, commander in chief of the U.S. Special Operations Command, MacDill Air Force Base, Fla., joined Maj. Gen. Jerry A. White, Fort Benning commanding general, in presiding over the ceremony.



Tribute was paid to the many rangers who donated their time and resources to make the monument a reality. Special thanks was paid to retired Maj. Gen. Kenneth C. Leuer, a former Fort Benning commanding general, who spearheaded the drive.

A ranger commando knife is sited at the tip of the spearhead-shaped walk, paved with bricks bearing the names of rangers, including the six rangers killed in Mogadishu. Lining the walk are black granite monuments that trace the lineage of all ranger units.

Following the ceremony, 16 honorees were inducted into the Ranger Hall of Fame.

The portraits of the newly inducted rangers will be officially hung in the Hall of Fame at the Ranger Training Brigade headquarters today following a special Rangers In Action demonstration that starts at 10 a.m.

A pay-as-you-go barbecue will follow. The public is invited to all events.

Ranger Memorial: Fort Benning and the ranger community dedicated the Ranger Memorial Thursday. The memorial includes a commando knife, which officials say signifies a resolve and a willingness to fight for and defend the Constitution of the United States, a characteristic of the ranger. It commemorates all rangers and ranger units and is located on Ranger Field, adjacent to Infantry Hall and York Field.

4/41, 63rd, soldiers return from Kuwait

Combined exercise includes live-fire missions, climate adaption, CTT

By Marc G. Turchin
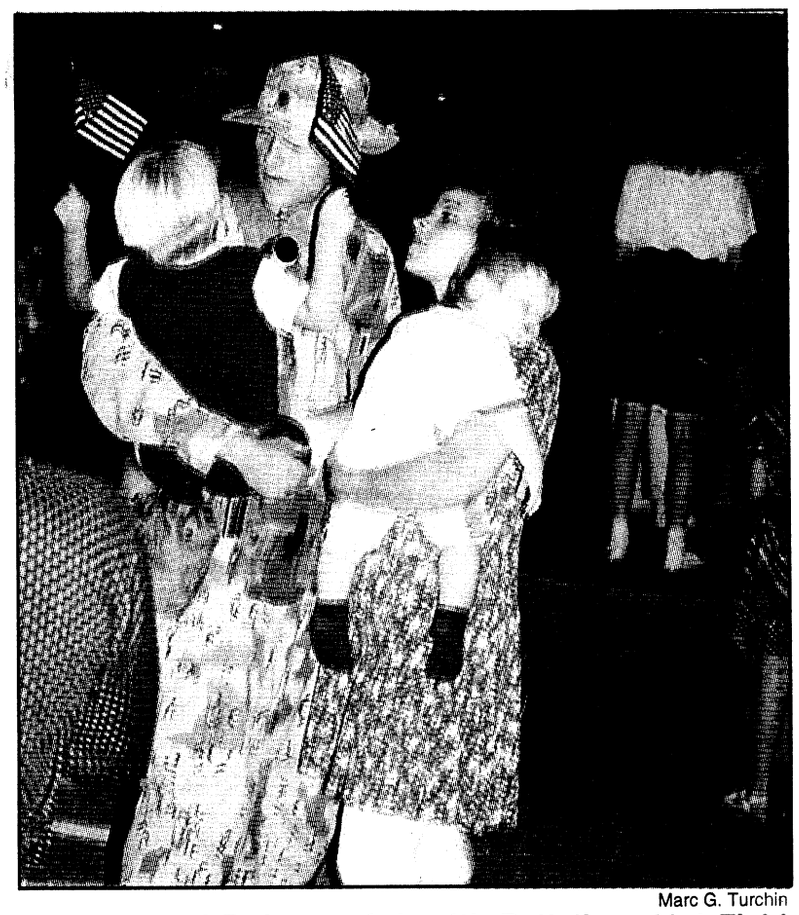
Bayonet staff writer

Soldiers from various units on post returned to Fort Benning from Kuwait Tuesday after completing exercises in the desert. More were scheduled to arrive at 1 p.m. Thursday at Lawson Army Airfield.

The soldiers took part in Exercise Intrinsic Action during July and August.

More than 100 soldiers who returned Tuesday night were from the 4th Battalion, 41st Field Artillery Regiment, 3rd Brigade, 24th Infantry Division (Mechanized). Seven soldiers were from the 63rd Combat Support Equipment Company, 36th Engineer Group; and 14 soldiers from the 89th Explosive Ordnance Detachment also returned.

Fifteen soldiers from the 498th Medical Company (Air Ambulance) were due to arrive Thursday.



"This (exercise) involves deploying a heavy mechanized task force from the United States, drawing equipment ... and engaging live-fire exercises called combined arms live-fire exercises with the Kuwaiti army. Then they fight a force-on-force battle without live fire," said Lt. Col. William M. Bransford, commander of the 4th Bn, 41st FA.

Daily contact by telephone and electronic mail with the units deployed kept those stateside well informed of the exercises, Bransford said.

"One of the high points (of the exercise) was their direct-fire training. They were able to engage left-over Soviet made tanks from Desert Storm," he said.

"Once we got out into the field, we did a lot of common tasks training, gunner testing and dry-fire missions," said Sgt. Michael B.

Basic training: What was it really like?

By Ruth J. Spaller
Bayonet staff writer

commentary

When I first decided to join the Army, a 27-year-old from Berkeley, Calif., (hippy capital of the world) my husband was about the only person who didn't think I'd lost my mind.

As unlikely a candidate as I seemed, though, I had a pretty good idea of what I was getting into. I'd been living Army life as a family member for three years, and I'd worked with soldiers in my government service job.

But basic training loomed large. I knew I was out of shape. I was worried, and I asked everyone what to expect. "It's really not that bad," they'd say, then they'd go on to tell me about something that sounded REALLY bad.

I listened to their stories with a growing knot in my stomach, becoming more and more convinced I'd never live through basic, let alone Army life afterward.

I kept having visions of the obstacles on the "confidence course" that I'd seen here on Fort Benning, and I knew that when the day came to face my fear of heights, I'd turn into a sniveling blob of jelly.

I thought I was going to be the oldest, slowest recruit they'd ever seen. I thought the drill sergeants were going to yell at me all the time, and that, at best, basic would be a degrading experience.

But that's not how it turned out at all. I was neither the oldest, nor the slowest. The drill sergeants, after all, were human, and the trainees, well, we were all in the same boat.

Basic training progressed quickly — after the first day, when I dropped my new belt buckle down the toilet and was terrified one of the drill sergeants would catch me without it.

I soon had a chance to get a new one, though, and from then on, basic was never as bad as I had imagined it would be.

At first, I felt like I was masquerading as my husband in my new uniform. But after endless hours of marching and sweating and rolling in sawdust during hand-to-hand combat, that uniform started to feel like it was mine, and I started to feel like a real soldier.

That feeling came in other ways, too. I actually had fun yelling, "Blood! Blood makes the grass grow green!" during bayonet training.

I found myself enjoying the road marches out to the ranges, despite the kevlar helmet that made me feel like I was wearing an oven on my head, the red dust that would coat my throat and the rucksack straps digging into my shoulders, because I never had a problem keeping up.

We did physical training tests periodically, and while I'd had to walk part of the first two-mile run, I found my time improving by almost a minute every two weeks. When I arrived at basic, I could barely do 50 sit-ups. For the final PT test, I easily did 91.

It seemed like I was tired every second. Just sitting down was a relief. Every morning I woke up wishing I could get right back in bed, and every night I climbed up on my bunk wishing I had more hours of sleep waiting.

But I felt a tremendous sense of satisfaction, too, from learning so much and working so hard every day.

The true test, though, came when we finally faced "Victory Tower." That tall, dark wooden structure loomed ominously against the bright sky next to the barracks where we lived, so I had plenty of time to contemplate my fate.

I'd marched by it a million times, hoping that by some twist of fate, that training day would end up being canceled.

But no such luck. One day I found myself standing in line at the base of the tower while drill sergeants demonstrated how we would cross the one-rope bridge extending off the side.

Thirty feet above the ground, a single strand of rope hung over a safety net. We had to climb from the tower onto the rope, lay on it lengthwise, balance with one foot hooked over the rope behind us and pull ourselves forward hand over hand.

I watched the first soldiers go across. One slid along the rope like a snake, crossing it in a matter of seconds. Another fell off into the net. I felt like I was looking up at the Empire State Building. My mind was repeating over and over, "No way. No way. I can't do it."

When my turn came, I climbed up the tower, telling myself to shut up. I still don't know how I got onto the rope, but I distinctly remember looking down, and one of my buddies, who saw the look of terror on my face, yelled up something that made me laugh.

I inched across, trying to control the involuntary shaking of my body. It wasn't pretty, but I made it, and I felt like I had crossed a huge chasm. It was such a rush!

After that, it all seemed easy. I went around to the other side of the tower and rappelled down like Joe Ranger.

When I finished basic, an acquaintance told my husband I seemed much more self-confident. When I thought about it, I realized it's true, I am.

Every day I did things I never thought I could do — running, shooting, rappelling — things I never would have tried if I hadn't joined the Army.

So, I figure, I wasn't crazy when I joined. It's probably the best move I've ever made — basic training, Victory Tower and all.

Memories ...

"When I was in OSUT, Pvt. Bumpass (his real name) was hurting for money. We had a real bad roach problem, and one day we caught a roach. For $1 a person (there were 28 of us), Bumpass said he would eat the live roach. Out popped $28 and in popped the roach to his mouth. After chewing a while, he opened his mouth to verify he was eating and walked away $28 richer." — Shelby Carr

"My training cycle was interrupted by Christmas exodus. Females who had been running around in wrinkled battle dress uniforms, with chapped hands, were now told to don our Class Bs. We were allowed to use makeup — within reason — until one woman, who had an early flight, reported for inspection with bright blue eyelids and red-circled cheeks. After the drill sergeants got a look at her, the rest of us went home barefaced. " — Karen Morarie

"Throughout basic my company was required to get haircuts on a weekly basis. My platoon managed to talk our drill sergeants into letting us have high-and-tights with two weeks left until graduation.With graduation only 48 hours away, my platoon failed its last inspection and we got our hair cut bald again. Needless to say, I was infuriated." — Marc Turchin

Is basic training still 'basic?'

By Clyde Snively
Bayonet Columnist

commentary

If training was always so much tougher in the "old days," (last week, last year, a decade ago) why is it all the sergeants major and general officers always say today's soldier is the best they've seen in 20 or 30 years of service?

Me and the guys were sitting around talking basic training when old sarge came by. To hear him tell the tales of his basic training at Fort Jackson, S.C., he had to walk six miles through snow drifts six feet high to get to morning formation (in June).

"Runnin' in those days wuz done in combat boots. And not those soft, wuzzie combat boots you wear today. Real men's combat boots, and certainly not in those wimpy gym shoes.

"We also had to run in our uniforms and in those days the uniforms weighed at least eight pounds. That wuz eight pounds dry.

"A couple of gallons of sweat and they really got heavy. But that didn't stop us none. We run up and down tank hill.

"I wuz also always the `back sink man' during KP (kitchen patrol duty). I remember one day it was so hot I drank two gallons of grape Kool-Aid and never had to take a leak.

"I used to hate evening meals. I always got singled out to come back after dinner and sandpaper the stoves. Never figured out how they got me.

"It was so hot at Jackson that year that the old man put the word out we were to walk to the ranges, not run. Didn't bother our drill though.

"That man had an 84-inch split. Each stride covered 10 yards. We had to run to keep up with him. `Quit yo' runnin, you tryin' to git me in trouble wiff the ole man,' he'd scream at us."

We Public Affairs pukes, of course, were awestruck by old sarge's tales of his training days. He must have gone on the longest forced marches, his live-fire infiltration course must have reached into North Carolina and of course not only was it the hottest day on Earth, but it rained so hard that the mud got so deep that he "purty near needed a snorkel just to breathe."

Of course the bullets from the machine guns in those days were snipping at his H-harness, not eight or nine feet up like they are today.

And of course old sarge can't believe that drill sergeants aren't supposed to touch soldiers, curse soldiers and make them do punitive push-ups all day with foot lockers on their backs.

Old sarge, when he tells his tales, looks at us like we'd never make it through his basic training.

His may have been a rigorous nine weeks, but we wonder how he would have fared in today's Army.

Meanwhile, we soldiers of the 90s are saving up our war stories of basic training for our grandkids and soldiers of the 21st Century. We suspect there will be no KP, everything will be automated. All a soldier will need to be able to do is push buttons.

Just wait until we tell him how tough it was at Fort Benning in the 90s. Heck, in the winter of '93 we had to push through six-foot snow drifts in running shorts and sneakers just to get to formation.

And summer, well it was so hot ...

Rendezvous 'jump' starts week

More than 250 rangers drop in

USAIC Public Affairs Office

This year's Ranger Rendezvous, an event honoring "past, present and future" rangers and ranger units, kicked off Monday evening with a "mass tactical jump" at Lawson Army Airfield.

More than 250 rangers dropped in to begin several days of activities.

Other events highlighting the week included the dedication of the Ranger Memorial at Ranger Field, the Somalia Stone dedication and the induction ceremony of the 1994 Ranger Hall of Fame.

Gen. Wayne A. Downing, commander in chief of the U.S. Special Operations Command, MacDill Air Force Base, Fla., was the featured speaker at the Ranger Memorial dedication ceremony. He was joined by Maj. Gen. Jerry A. White, Fort Benning commanding general, in presiding over the ceremony.

One of the most striking and visual aspects of the memorial is a commando knife, which officials say signifies a resolve and a willingness to fight for and defend the Constitution of the United States, a characteristic of the ranger.

The knife is sited at the tip of the spear-head shaped walk, paved with bricks bearing the names of rangers, including the six rangers killed in Mogadishu, Somalia.

Lining the walk are black granite monuments that trace the lineage of all ranger units.

Following the dedication ceremony, 14 new ranger inductees and two honorary inductees were inducted into the Ranger Hall of Fame.

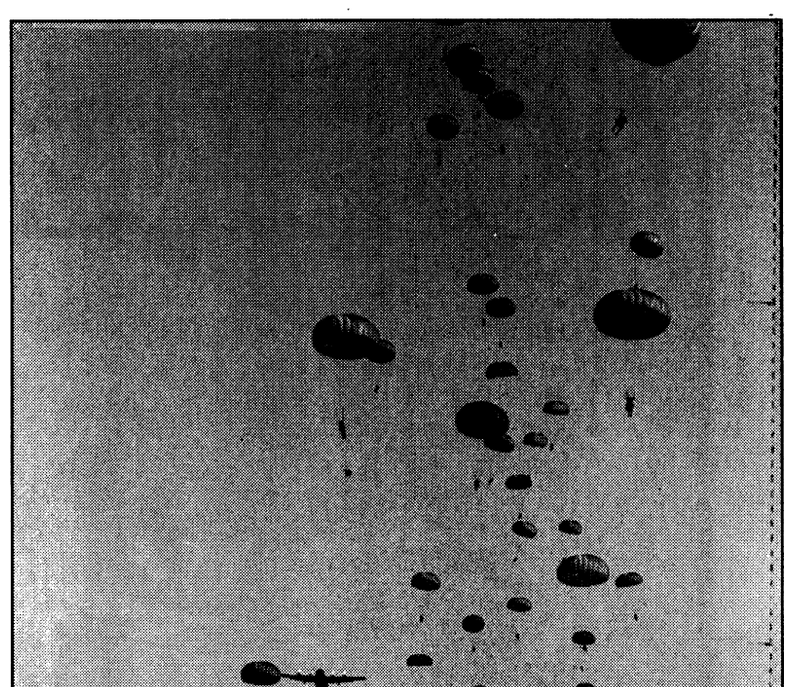
Among this year's inductees recognized for the achievements and sacrifices they have made for their country, units and fellow rangers are: U.S. Sen. Strom Thurmond from South Carolina, former Fort Benning Commander retired Gen. James Lindsay and Sgt. 1st Class Randall Shugart, who was posthumously awarded the Medal of Honor for actions in Mogadishu Oct. 3 and 4.



Inductees were selected inpartially from ranger units and associations representing each era of ranger history.

The inductees portraits will be officially hung in the Hall of Fame at the Ranger Training Brigade Headquarters following a special Rangers in Action demonstration today that starts at 10 a.m. A pay-as-you-go barbecue will follow. The public is invited to all events.

SOLDIERS: Return from Kuwait

Patton, Desert Storm veteran and gunner for 4th Bn, 41st FA.

The CAL-FEX was Aug. 2.

"It's basically a combined exercise (in which) the forces combine their fire into a particular spot," Patton said.

Getting the forces to different spots was the job of the 63rd Combat Company, said Lt. Col. Harold J. Leeman, deputy commander of the 36th Engineer Group.

"The seven people who (were) in Kuwait have been building roads with (bull dozers) and graders, building survivability positions and combat trails for the units over there," Leeman said.

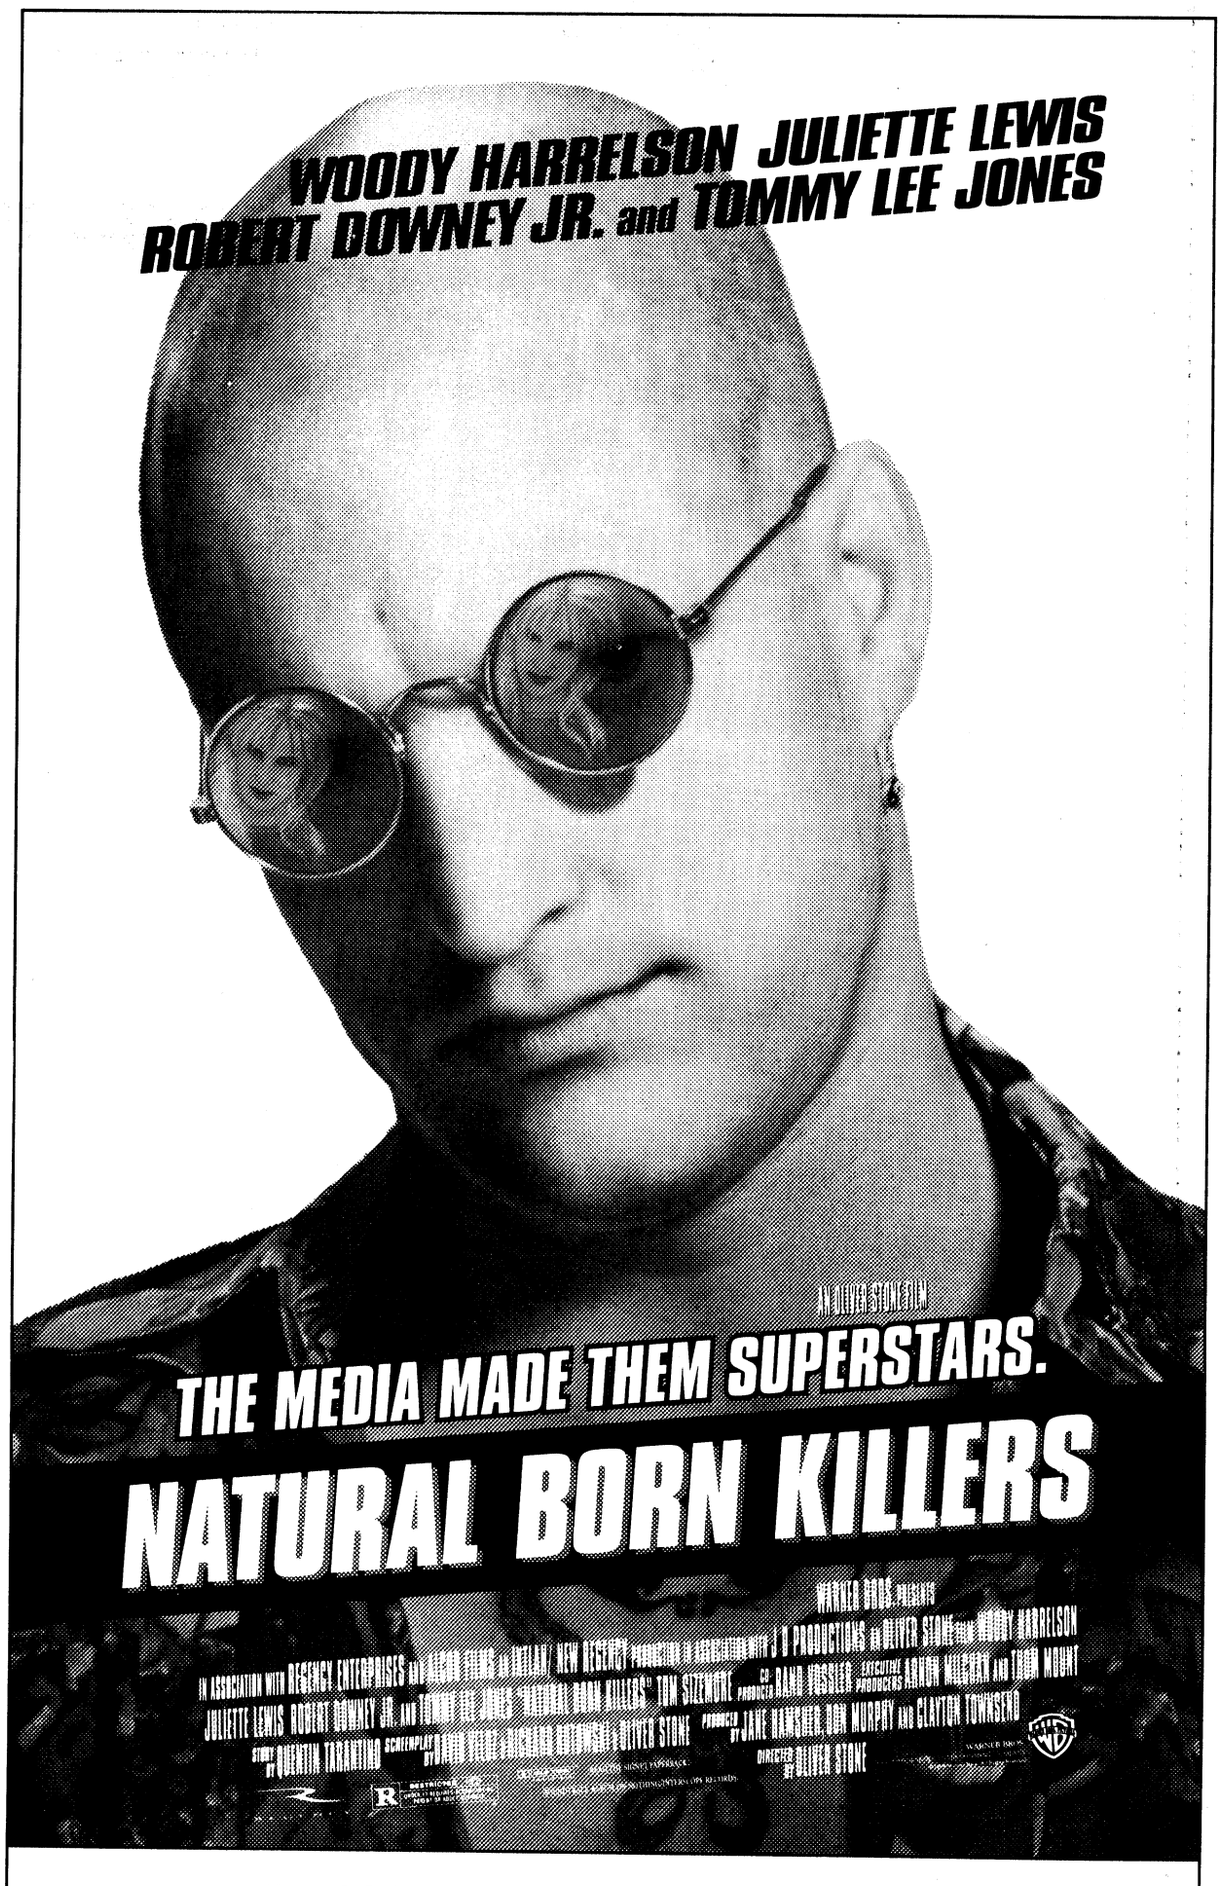
The 498th Medical Company (Air Ambulance) supported the units with two helicopters; three crews, four personnel per crew; two petroleum, oil and lubricant specialists and one aircraft maintenance support specialist, said 1st Lt. Daniel E. McCarthy, acting operations officer, 498th Med. Co.

"Our mission was to support elements of the 24th ID and supporting units," he said.

McCarthy said that the forward support team from the 498th was there to provide medical evacuation and participate in the exercise.

The units simulate casualties, generate a variety of missions that will employ our medics and partake in activities with the local medical facilities, McCarthy said.

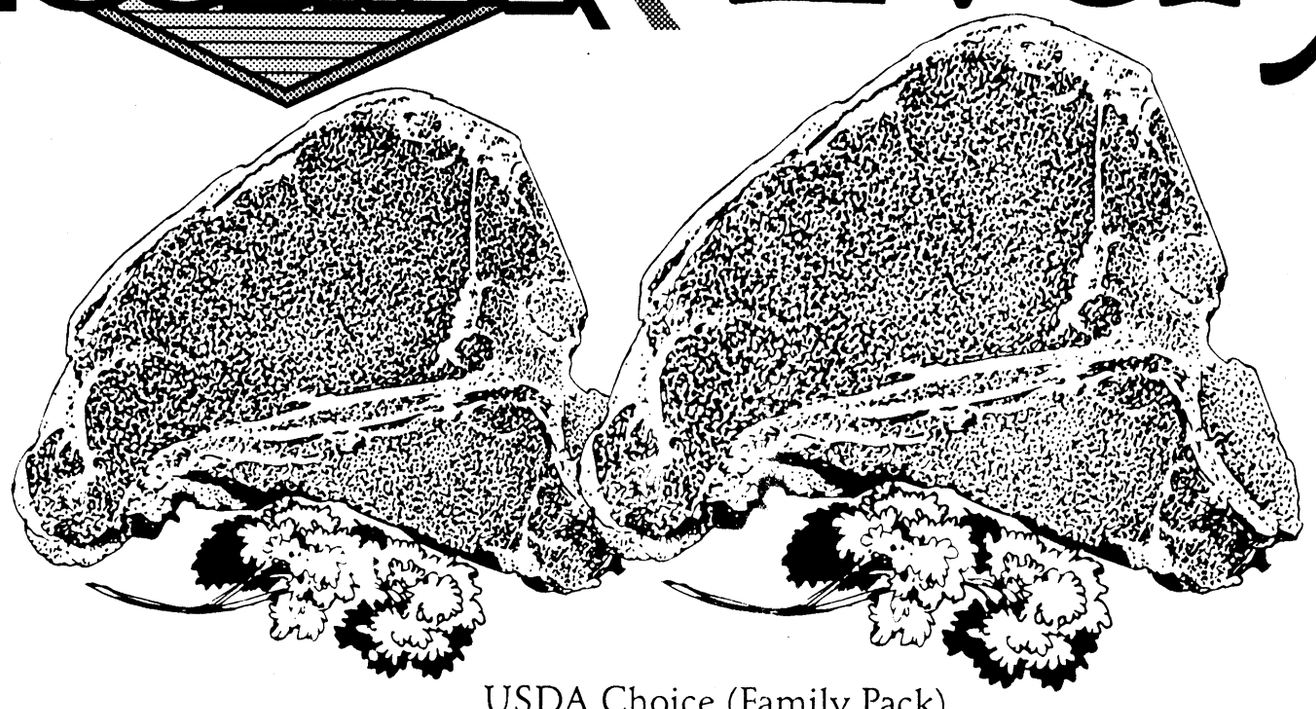
"This is something we established approximately a year and a half ago. The Kuwaitis are very cooperative and have gone as far as building helo pads to accommodate us," McCarthy said.



McCarthy said the mission load of actual medevac missions was very low.

"The heat was the main thing to deal with," said Spc. Darren K. Sandal, communication specialist with 4th Bn.,41st FA. "After the first two weeks though, it didn't seem too bad."

Sandal said they drank a lot of water to stay hydrated.



Temperatures ranged from 120 to 140 degrees during the day and 95 to 100 degrees at night, Patton said.

'Equality Day' celebrates women's right to vote

By Karen S. Morarie
Bayonet staff writer

Some female Americans picketed, agitated and chained themselves to fences to win a right that will be celebrated on post today.

Fort Benning will observe Women's Equality Day with a luncheon at the Main NCO Club from 11:30 a.m. to 1 p.m.

Women's Equality Day is a celebration of the passage of the 19th Amendment, which gave women the right t to vote.

The amendment was ratified Aug. 26, 1920, rewarding the efforts of a series of women. The efforts of American women to win the right to vote began with the birth of the nation.

In 1776, Abigail Adams wrote to her husband, John, who would later become the second president of the United States, "In the new Code of Laws ... I desire you would remember the ladies ... (or) we are determined to foment a rebellion, and will not hold ourselves bound by any laws in which we have no voice or representation."

But when the "new code of laws" was passed, no provision had been made for women.

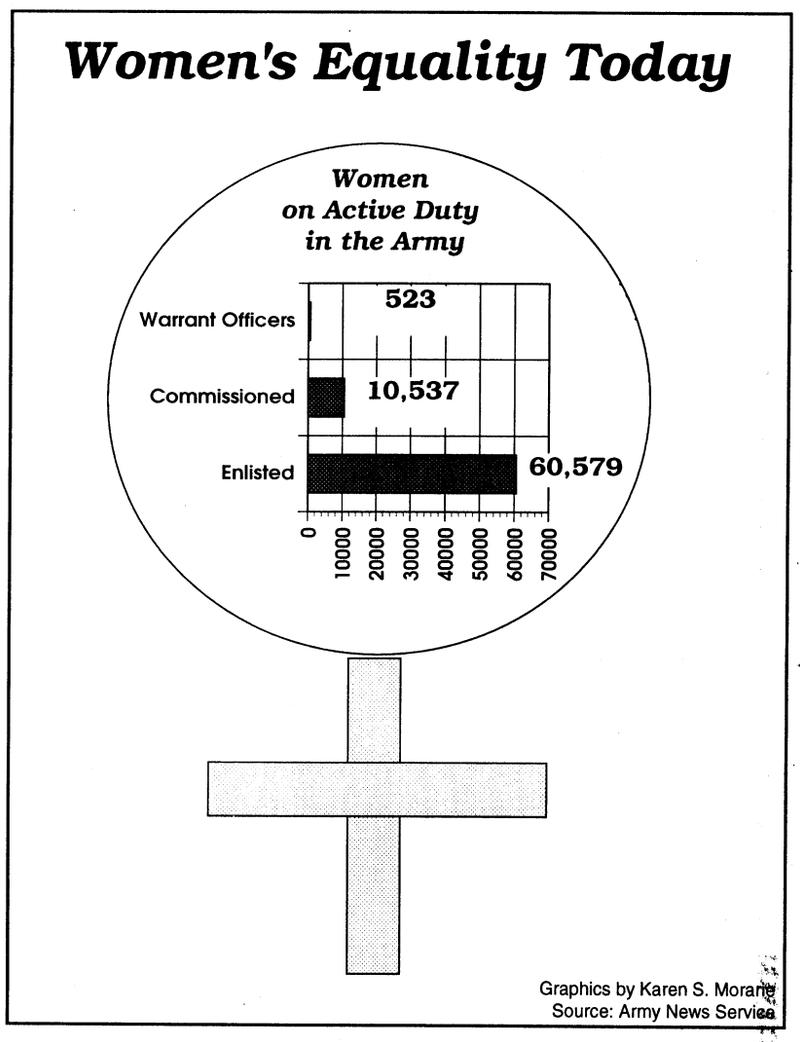
Following the Civil War, the fight for woman suffrage gained prominence along with other civil rights causes.

Many abolitionists, including Sojourner Truth, Lucretia Mott and Elizabeth Cady Stanton, hoped to see women included in the legislation granting former slaves their freedom and the right to vote.

When the 14th Amendment was passed, however, it stated the right to vote could not be denied on the basis of "race, color or previous condition of servitude." The vote continued to be denied those of the "wrong" sex.

The first national progress toward woman suffrage was in 1889, when the Wyoming Territory applied for statehood. Along with some other western territories, Wyoming had given its female citizens a voice in their government. Congress, however, demanded Wyoming rescind the vote for women before the territory could be admitted to statehood.

Wyoming created a landmark precedent by refusing the request of Congress, in a statement that said, in part, "We will remain out of the Union a hundred years rather than come in without woman suffrage."



Wyoming thus became the first state in which women could fully, actively participate in their government.

Women continued to lobby the federal and state governments for the right to vote, but between 1910 and 1913, only six new states were won.

Public protests and demonstrations increased in frequency and visibility even while the United States became involved in World War I. Demonstrators, who were seen by some as unpatriotic, were often arrested and jailed. More than 200 women from 26 states were eventually jailed for the activism.

Finally, in 1918, the house of Representatives passed the Suffrage Amendment. Two years later, it was finally ratified, and 26 million women at last had the right of direct participation in their own government.

Editor's note: Sgt. 1st Class Randy Watson, post Equal Opportunity Office, contributed significantly to this article.

From WAC to combat?

By Karen S. Morarie
Bayonet staff writer

Along with women's struggle for the right to vote and to be accepted as equals on a legal, social and economic basis, there have been corresponding battles in many career fields.

In the armed forces, long a mostly-male arena, women have made their mark from the beginning. From Margaret Corbin, Molly Pitcher and other women who followed their husbands to war during the American Revolution, to the thousands of women serving in all branches of the armed forces today, many females have worked to prove they can be as dedicated in the service of their country as any male soldier.

The following are some highlights in the history of women's integration into the armed forces of the Unites States:

1901 — The Army Nurse Corps is established

1918 — By the end of World War I, 34,000 American women have served in the Army and Navy Nurse Corps, the Navy, Marine Corps and Coast Guard

May 14, 1942 — Congress approves the creation of the Women's Army Auxiliary Corps. As an auxiliary of the Army, however, women who enter the WAAC have no military status.

March 1943 — Three officers and 157 enlisted women of the 84th WAAC Post Headquarters Company, the first WAAC contingent on Fort Benning, arrive and are attached to the Infantry School Service Command, then later to the Student Training Brigade. By May 1944, there are six WAC detachments at Fort Benning.

July 1, 1943 — President Franklin D. Roosevelt signs a law changing the name of the WAAC to the Women's Army Corps, thereby establishing the corps as a part of the Army.

January 1944 — The first WACs arrive in the Pacific.

1946 — The Army chief of staff directs the preparation of legislation to make the WAC a permanent part of the Army.

June 12, 1948 — President Harry S. Truman signs the Women's Armed Services Integration Act (Public Law 80-625), establishing the WAC as a permanent part of the Regular Army and Reserve.

September 1954 — Fort McClellan, Ala., is dedicated as the permanent center and home for the Women's Army Corps.

March 1962 — The first WAC officer is assigned to Vietnam. During the course of the war, between 7,500 and 11,000 women serve in Vietnam, mostly as Army, Air Force and Navy nurses.

Nov. 8, 1967 — With the passing of Public Law 90-130, Congress removes promotion restrictions, thus making it possible for women to to be appointed in the flag or general officer ranks. This legisaltion also removes the 2 percent limit on women in the service.

June 11, 1970 — While serving as the seventh WAC director, Elizabeth P. Hoisington becomes the first WAC to be promoted to brigadier general.

1972 — The Army begins accepting women into ROTC on a test basis.

July 1975 — Defensive weapons training becomes mandatory in WAC basic training.

Oct. 7, 1975 — President Gerald R. Ford signs Public Law 94-106, admitting women into the nation's service academies.

July 7, 1976 — 119 women become the first to enter the U.S. Military Academy at West Point, N.Y., as cadets; 62 graduate in 1980.

Fall 1978 — A congressional act, signed by President Jimmy Carter in September, disestablishes the Women's Army Corps, effective Oct. 20, 1978.

September 1980 — Hazel Winifred Johnson becomes the first black woman to achieve the rank of brigadier general.

1981 — The U.S. Supreme Court rules the government may exclude women from the military draft and registration for the draft

A woman successfully completes the Green Beret course, but is unable to use her training because of the Army's combat exclusion policies.

October 1983 — Women military police from Fort Bragg, N.C., participate in the invasion of Granada. Upon reaching Granada, they are recalled to the states, and then, three days later, returned to duty in Granada. The commander of the 82nd's XVIII Airborne Corps said the initial decision to evacuate the women was incorrect.

"If there's a battle," he said, "the women will stay to complete their mission."

Sept. 28, 1988 — A report on sexual harassment is submitted to the Department of Defense for review. The results of this study include reports of explicit sexual harassment, racial problems, poor medical care for servicewomen, and inadequate day care for children. An edited version of the report is released Feb. 17, 1989.

November 1988 — A new standard, known as the "Risk Rule," is approved by Secretary of Defense Frank C. Carlucci for determining which military jobs women may or may not hold.

The services begin the process of reviewing their combat support positions in light of this revised rule of risk.

August 1989 — 21-year-old Kristin Baker is announced as the first female selected to hold the U.S. Military Academy's highest cadet rank — brigade commander, or "first captain."

December 1989 — During the U. S. invasion of Panama, 29-year-old Capt. Linda Bray, company commander of the 988th Military Police Company, is said to be the first woman to command American troops in battle when she and her troops are engaged in an unexpected firefight.

1994

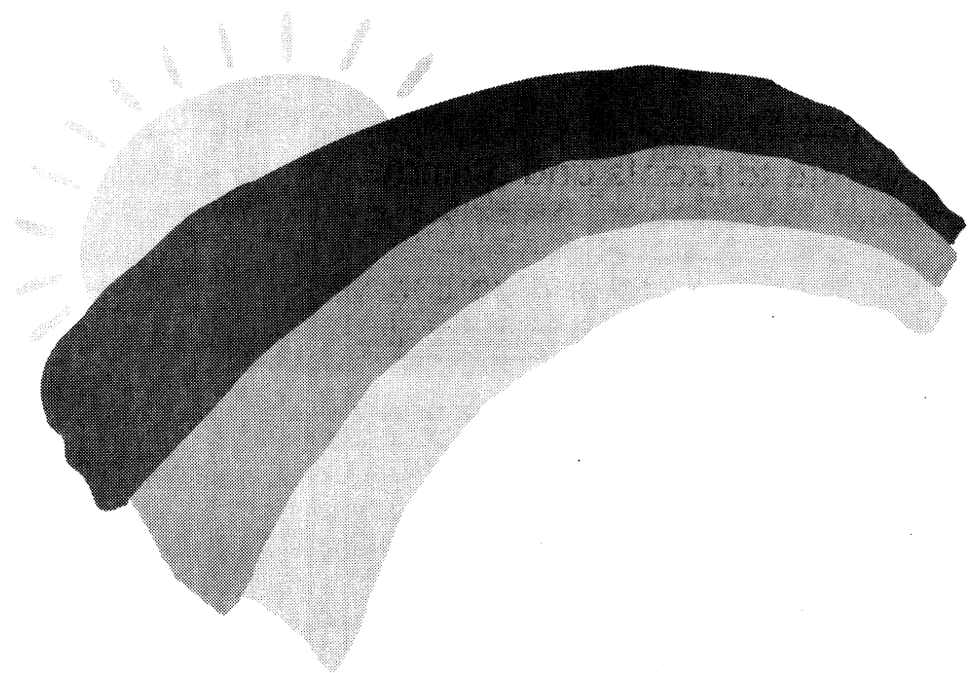
Court action continues on the admission of female students to such miitary educational institutions as The Citadel and Virginia Military Institute.

Jan. 13 — Secretary of Defense Les Aspin announces the rescinding of the so-called "risk rule" and the necessity of redefining ground combat. Service chiefs are asked to consider all occupational specialties to determine which could be opened to women.

July 29 — Department of Defense announces opening of additional 80,000 positions to military women.



The announcement contains a recommendation that 32,000 additional Army jobs be open to women, which would result in a total of 67 percent of Army jobs, officer and enlisted, available to both sexes.

These jobs would include eight types of units for which women were previously ineligible, including:

- Maneuver brigade headquarters
- Division military police headquarters
- Chemical reconnaissance and smoke platoons
- Mechanized smoke platoons
- Engineer bridge companies
- Military intelligence collection and jamming companies
- Forward support teams of forward suppport battalions
- Washington ceremonial unit.

ACAP, Onsite unite to provide training, jobs

Army Career and Alumni Program

Fort Benning's Army Career and Alumni Program has joined forces with one of the world's largest environmental staffing firm, Onsite Environmental (a division of AEROTEK).

Onsite has accepted the task of training and employing exiting soldiers, veterans and family members in the field of environmental remediation.

Onsite currently employs 100 to 150 new workers per week throughout the country, and has 37 offices around the country and one in England. A soldier can be trained at Fort Benning and then work in the area of his or her choice. Onsite's starting wages range from $9 to $15 per hour depending on a soldier's skills.

In many cases, per diem is paid, which includes $25 a day for food, 18 cents per mile for travel and lodging at the job site. A benefit package is also offered, which includes 401K plan and dental and health insurance.

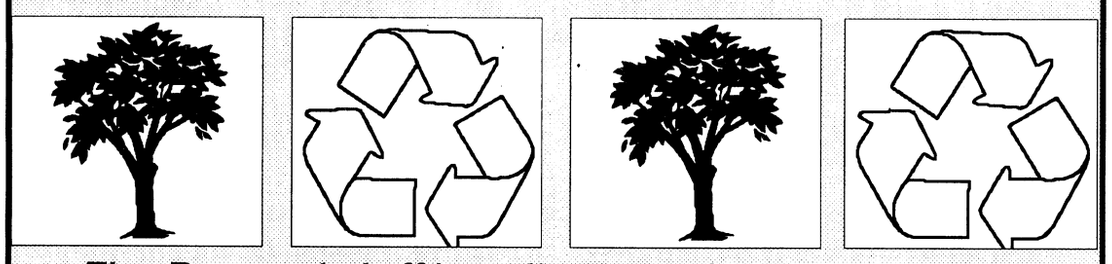
Soldiers can use skills learned in the Army to earn a higher starting wage. Heavy equipment operators are in demand at Onsite. The work in the field sometimes requires employees to work in protective gear similar to Mission Oriented Protective Posture gear.

Onsite offers two levels of training. The first is 40-hour field technicians' training and the second is a 120-hour certified environmental technician. The 40-hour course is $350 and the 120-hour course is $1,450, which according to Onsite personnel is about half the price of other companies.

Currently, Onsite has trained 65 people in the Fort Benning area, and has put 65 to work. There is a 120-hour class currently in session that will graduate today.

"I had earned a master's degree prior to separating and thought that I had prepared very well," said Norman Sammons, who recently retired form the Army and is the military liaison for Onsite.

"I was in shock when I started job hunting and receiving offers. All of the offers would not maintain my current standard of living. I felt that I was worth more than $7 an hour and my family deserved more. Onsite offers a great opportunity for soldiers to earn the money necessary to maintain their standards of living and even increase it. Onsite requires no college degree, just the ability to read and write, distinguish between colors and lift 40 pounds."



"The soldiers that have been trained and placed have a great reputation," said Mike Sheffield, Onsite's national health and safety director. "Their motivation and great work values have caused our clients to request more personnel from Fort Benning. Our clients have reported to us that our soldiers have attacked the work sites and treated their jobs like a military mission, causing them to be more productive."

The 40-hour course will be conducted on a monthly basis and the 120-hour course on a quarterly basis.

For more information, call Onsite at 682-8819, 323-4182 or (800) 323-4183.

Personnel chief says drawdown progressing well

By Stephen Barrett
American Forces Information Service

Since it began to shrink, DoD has cut nearly 600,000 troops through the special incentives, early retirements, early outs and normal attrition. That leaves a remaining 160,000 to draw down between the end of 1995 and 1999

The retiring chief of DoD's military work force credits separation incentive programs as a major reason the department's drawdown is ahead of schedule.

Air Force Lt. Gen. Robert M. Alexander, who steps down Aug. 31 after a 32-year career, said the military will reach its fiscal 1995 reduction goal of 1.6 million by the end of fiscal 1994. He hopes the Special Separation Bonus, Voluntary Separation Incentive and early retirement programs continue to aid DoD's efforts in reducing to 1.45 million members by 1999.

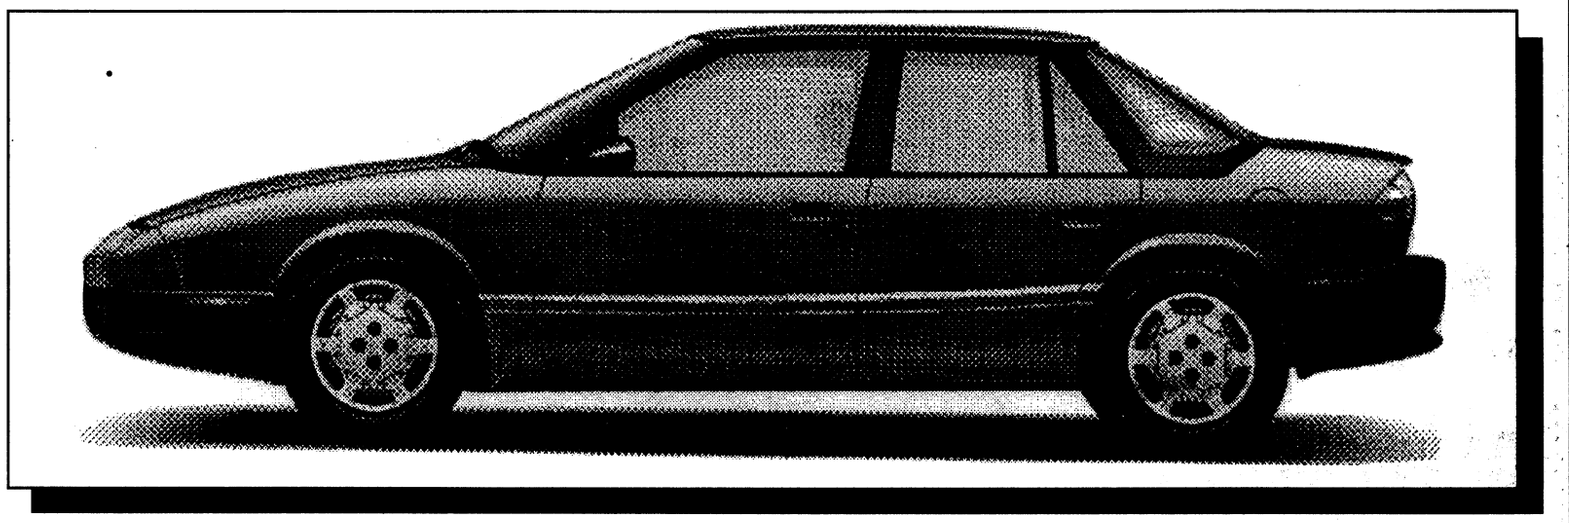
"We consider the (separation) program a big success," said Alexander, citing over 104,000 service members opting for one of three incentive programs. Alexander expects another 36,000 takers by the end of 1995 and hopes to get 25,000 more before 1999.

DoD is about two-thirds through with the drawdown. Since it began to shrink, DoD has cut nearly 600,000 troops through special incentives, early retirements, early outs and normal attrition. That leaves a remaining 160,000 to draw down between the end of 1995 and 1999.

With the Marine Corps drawdown nearly complete, Alexander said the last major cuts will occur in fiscal 1995. DoD plans an 86,000 troop decrease next year, mostly from Army and Air Force ranks. "After that, we'll be about 90 percent through the drawdown," he said. Most of the remaining 74,000 cuts will come from the Navy and occur between 1996 and 1999.

If DoD meets these goals, Alexander said, the department can defer involuntary separations, such as reduction-in-force and selective early retirement boards.

Alexander said DoD measures its separation program success by the number of people forced out involuntarily. "Originally, we expected to ask 800 Army majors to leave in 1992," he said. "As it turned out, only 244 had to leave because of the large number of people who voluntarily left the service taking these incentives."



The Army and Air Force haven't held RIF boards since 1992, thanks to voluntary separations. However, Alexander said, the threat of RIFs still exists, despite the voluntary separation program successes. "We are all holding our breath that we won't have any before 1999," he said. "Hopefully these voluntary incentives will continue to give us the numbers that we need."

Despite these program successes, service members still feel anxious about their military careers. Alexander said troops repeatedly face selective early retirement boards, base closures and unit reorganizations. This adds to the anxiety they feel during the drawdown.

However, Alexander assures today's careerist that there is a future in the military. "We are drawing down in a way that is shaping the force," he said. "(Those) promotion and job opportunities that were there before the drawdown started will still be there when the force is drawn down."

Law Dogs lock up Barbarians 13-11

By Terry K. Ray
Special to The Bayonet©

The 1994 U.S. Army Infantry Center men's softball championship at Gowdy Field Aug. 18, between the Law Dogs of the Military Police Activity and the Barbarians of Company E, 2nd Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment, was a never say die struggle to the very end. The Law Dogs got their day with a 13-11 win for their first post championship in more than 10 years.

"I've been on this team for two years; I knew we could do it," said left center fielder Joe Baker. "All we had to do was work hard and play together. It feels great."

Work hard and play together is exactly what the Law Dogs did for five straight games going undefeated in the first single elimination tournament conducted by the Physical Activities Branch rather than a double elimination tournament.

The Law Dogs went for the throat right from the start with a five-run outburst in the bottom of the first after holding the Barbarians to two walks in the top of the inning.

A lead off single from second baseman Dennis Loftis, a single to centerfield by left fielder Michael Walker put runners at first and second for Baker. Baker ripped a pitch down the right field line for a stand up triple scoring both runners.

First baseman Thomas Wilonski doubled to left center field bringing home Baker from third. One out later and Wilonski on third, right fielder Wendell Jackson sent a fly ball to deep center for an RBI sacrifice. Pitcher Thomas Smith drove home the final run of the inning with a solo homer to left center field.

The Barbarians trimmed the lead to 5-3 in the top of the second inning on three hits, a walk and a sacrifice fly. The big hit was a two-run single from first baseman William Wilson who got some help on the second RBI when Todd Tongue knocked the ball loose from catcher Vincente Andrews at home plate allowing Samuel Murphy to score from first and move Wilson to second.

In the bottom of the third inning the Law Dogs went on a hitting spree. When the dust had settled, the Law Dogs had put six runs on the board, with Smith driving in two runs with a double to left center and right center fielder Barry T. Brown slamming a two-run shot to almost the same spot, just deeper. RBI singles from Wilonski and third baseman Joseph LaBranche tallied the other runs for the inning and an 11-5 advantage.

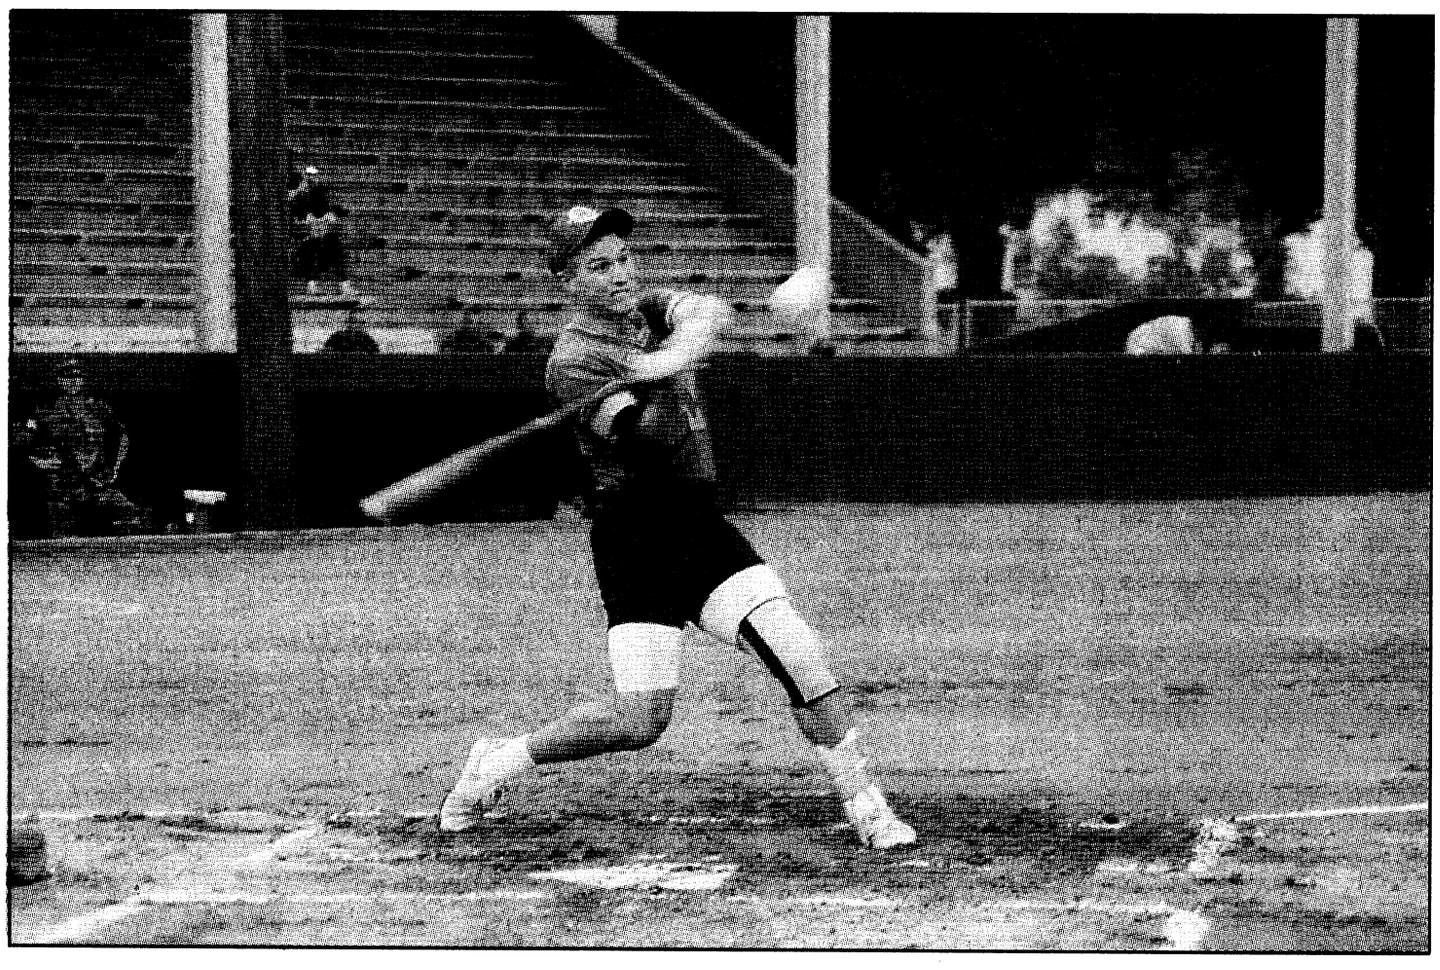
The Law Dogs increased the lead to 13-5 with two runs in the bottom of the fourth inning on an RBI single from Baker. Baker scored on two throwing errors by the Barbarian defense.

In the fifth inning the Barbarians scratched out two-runs to cut the Law Dog lead to 11-5. Short center fielder Raynard Lyles accounted for both runs with a single to center.

The Barbarians slashed the lead to 11-8 with a three-run inning in the top of the sixth. James Williams who replaced Calvin Figley at third in the bottom of the fifth drove in one run with a double to left and scored on Wilson's second two-run single of the game.

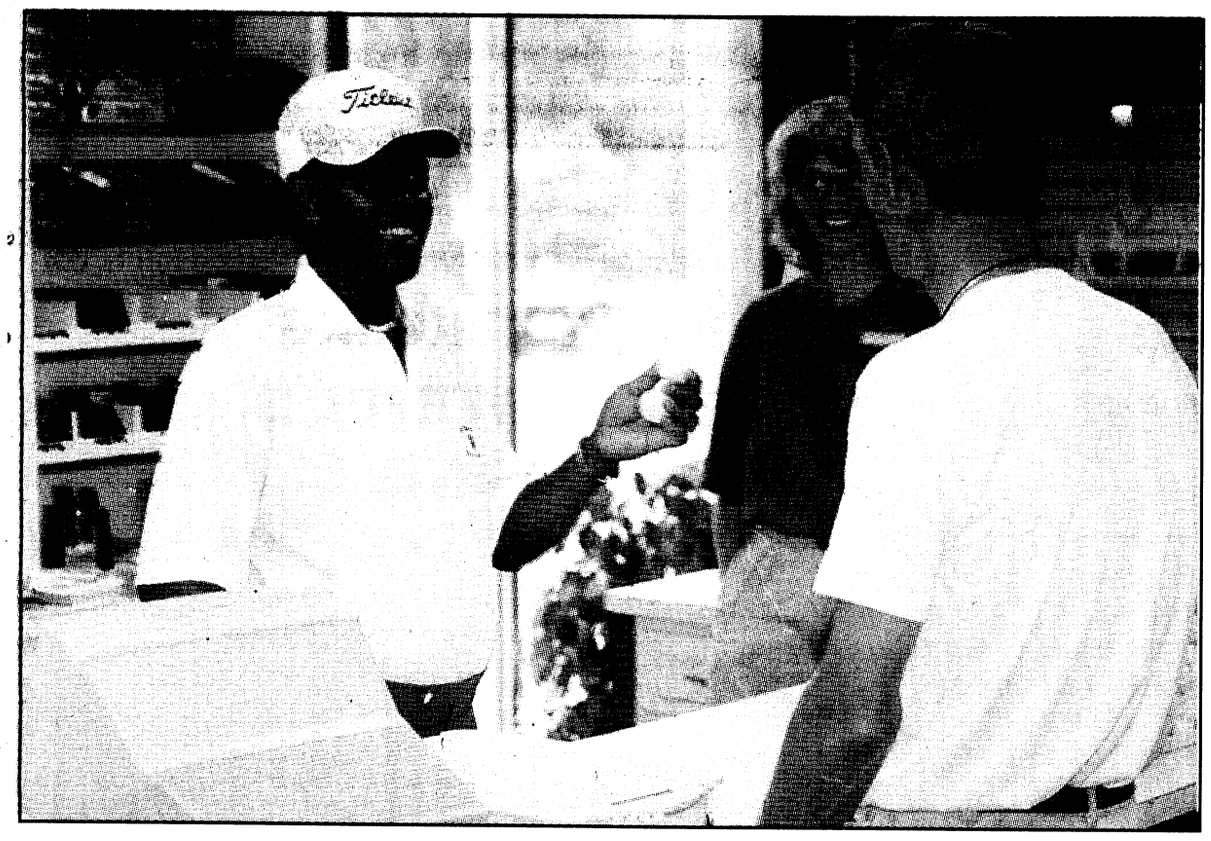
In the top of the seventh inning, the Barbarians made one final rush at the Law Dogs. With runners on first and third and two out, Tongue singled past Willie Gregory at short for an RBI. Williams doubled to right field for his second RBI of the night, putting the tying run in scoring position. The rally and the game came to an end for the Barbarians when Wilson (2 for 4 with 4 RBI) flied to Walker in left for the final out of the game and a 13-11 victory for the Law Dogs.

" If we had just been able to get our bats going a little sooner I think we would have had a chance to pull it out," shortstop Brett Boatright said. "It was the wrong time for the team to go into a hitting slump."



Barbarian coach William Cole coaching his last game as a soldier concurred with Boatright on the teams hitting woes early in the game.

"They (Law Dogs) hit the ball when they needed to and we didn't. They are a good ball team. They capitalized on our mistakes and that's what it takes to win." Cole said.



"It was a close game. It's something we worked for all year. Don't take anything away from the Barbarians; they came to play," Smith said. "We had to fight our way into this tournament and now were standing as champions. The team made a stand against a real good team. It was very stiff competition throughout the tournament."

The weather, which played a factor in the tournament by postponing the semi finals by one day, held off long enough for the game to end, then punctuated the finale with a downpour during the awards ceremony.

"We were hoping the rain would stay away," Sports Director Chris Winterman stated. "Luckily it did, giving everyone a chance to watch one of the best championship games I've seen in the past three years."

Assistant passes test, earns card

By Terry K. Ray
Special to The Bayonet©

For Tyler Williams, an assistant golf professional at the Follow Me Golf Course, the opportunity outweighed the risk when he ventured to Roswell Country Club in Roswell, Ga., this past weekend to take the players ability test in golf to get his Professional Golfers Association card.

The test which requires the applicant to play two 18 hole rounds of golf back-to-back and come in under 80 on both rounds. Williams, 48, shot rounds of 76 and 77 and was one of two people out of 60 to take the test and pass.

The card now allows Williams the opportunity to play in the numerous PGA section tournaments in Georgia; it also puts him one step closer to becoming a Class A professional.

Williams picked up a golf club for the first time in 1987 while working part time at the Golf Course.

"Right before I retired from the Army, a friend of mine Wes Brown brought me out to the club and put a ball on a tee and bet me $5 I couldn't hit it," Williams said. "I took that bet because I could play baseball and tennis. He put the ball on the tee and I missed it three times. I got so angry about missing the ball that I fell in love with the game."

Williams is looking forward to trying to qualify for the Buick Southern Open at Callaway Gardens next month. With a qualifier at Kenninggate Country Club in White Oak, Ga., Williams will have to shoot a round of 68 or 4 under par to make the cut.

"I think I've got a shot at it. I know I can shoot around even par and with a little luck I can have one or two birdies and get under par." Williams said.

George Cliff, the senior golf pro at Follow Me Golf Course, gave Williams his first opportunity to become involved in the world of golf.

"George got me started in golf. When I first started coming here he helped me out tremendously, giving me free lessons and told me he thought I liked the game a lot. He let me hit as many balls as I wanted to and never charged me a thing. George told me when I retired from the Army to come work for him. He helped me out a lot. If it wasn't for him, I wouldn't be in the position I'm in right now. He's a good boss and a great friend," Williams said.

If it hadn't been for another friend, Williams probably wouldn't have made the trip to Roswell, but golf pro and pal Terry Norris encouraged Williams to go ahead and try.

"She basically talked me into going down and taking the test," Williams said. "I never would have done it without her encouragement to go."

With his new card in hand, Williams hopes to one day make the senior tour. In 1996 when he turns 50, he can try to qualify for the senior tour.

Maybe one day in the not to distant future, Williams will be playing with the likes of Lee Trevino, Chi Chi Rodriguez and Lanny Wadkins on the back nine at Pebble Beach Country Club in Sunny California and remember where it all started.

14-year-old earns player of the year honors with championship win

By Terry K. Ray
Special to The Bayonet©

Angela Jerman has a lot to look forward to as her budding golf career starts its upward spiral. Jerman, the 14 year-old daughter of Sgt. 1st Class Jim and Shirley Jerman has been named player of the year by the Atlanta Junior Golf Association after she won the AJGA grand championship tournament 13- to 14-year-old division at Jeykll Island, Ga., Aug. 9 through 12.

Jerman also won the Georgia State Girls championship June 20 through 22, at Horseshoe Bend Country Club at Roswell, Ga. Five other AJGA tournaments fell to the demur youngster who took up the game of golf after breaking her shoulder three years ago.

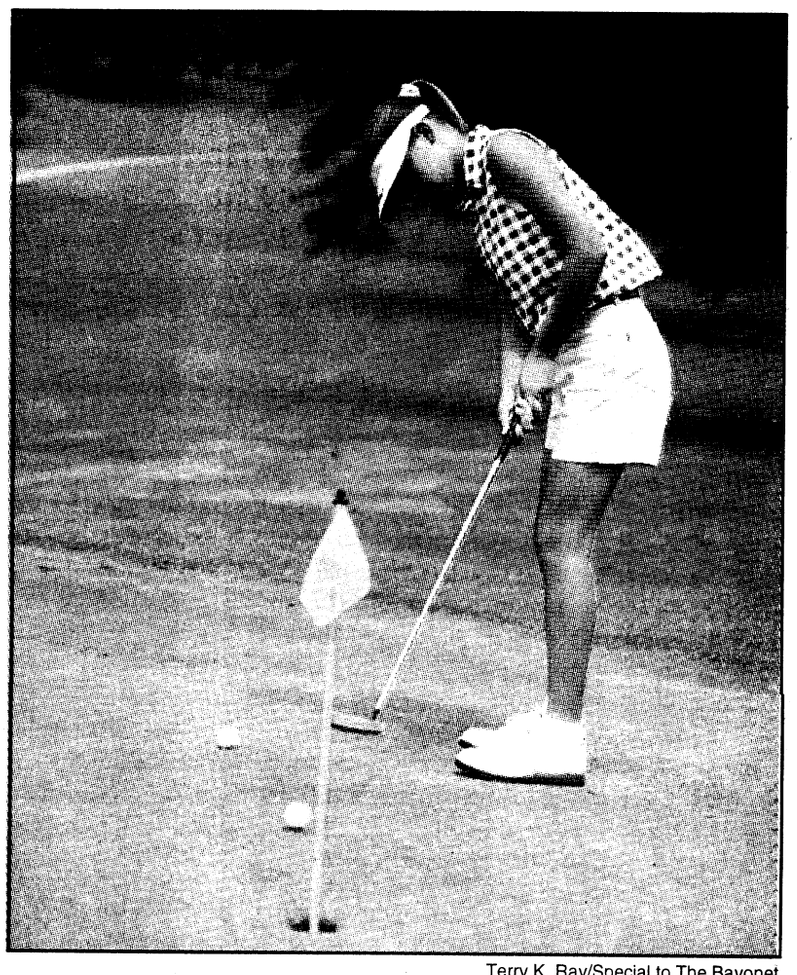
"The doctor said I needed to do something to help rehabilitate my shoulder, and my dad plays golf so I tried it and liked it." Jerman said.

For the past year, Jerman has been competing with the boys due to the lack of female competition in the local area. This past summer Jerman won three out of four Georgia State Golf Associations boy's sectionals and qualified to participate at the GSGA boy's sectionals and finished third in her age group.

"When I first started playing in the boy's tournaments, I was a little intimidated," Jerman said. "I thought 'oh my gosh, they're not going to talk to me' but when I started playing at the par three course in Bibb City I met all these guys, and since then I've gotten to know them and now it's just fun. I would rather play with the girls, but I like playing with guys."

Jerman will start her freshman year at Hardaway High School next week and is looking forward to trying out for the golf team. "I met the golf coach Tuesday and he seemed to be enthused about my coming to Hardaway. With the high school season beginning in February, Jerman will be working hard to stay in shape with her coach John Godwin who has her in a strengthening program at this time.

Jerman's family are behind her in her endeavor to become the best golfer that she possibly can. Her father got her started in the game but won't compete against her because she beats him at every opportunity. With a four handicap, most people would be leery of playing against her.



"She has exceeded our every expectation; this is something you might have expected in her sophomore year in high school," said the elder Jerman. "She has just gone well above our expectations."

Jerman's mother, who hardly ever gets to attend the tournaments, always asks her daughter to make a birdie for her. At the one tournament that her mother was at Jerman went one better than a birdie. She made an eagle in front of her mother. "That made us both very happy." Jerman said.

Jerman hopes to one day make the cut at the women's U.S Open and follow in the footsteps of her idol, the late Heather Farr, who succumbed to breast cancer in November, on the Ladies Professional Golf Association tour.

"Heather was a fighter; that's what I liked about her the most. She battled until the very end, on the golf course and in life," Jerman said. "I want to be like that."

With that kind of resolve and the God-given ability Jerman possesses it can only be a matter of time before the blonde haired phenom stands on the No. 1 green at the U.S Women's Open and tees one up for Heather.

AMU shooters rack up Gold

By Terry K. Ray
Special to The Bayonet©

U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit shooters racked up four Gold Medals, one Silver and three Bronze at the 1994 USA Shooting National Championships in Chino, Calif., Aug. 12 through 22, at Piro-Prado Range.

Capt. Rob Harbison, of Fallston, Md., captured the Gold Medal in free rifle prone and a Bronze Medal in the men's three-position rifle along with a Bronze medal in men's air rifle to claim a spot on the 1994-95 U.S. national team.

Harbison outshot AMU teammate Cpl. Ken Johnson of Marshfield, Mass., who finished just 2.3 points behind for the Silver Medal in free rifle prone.

Johnson also captured the Gold Medal in the men's air rifle by 6 points over Bob Foth.

"I had a substantial lead going into the final. I knew if I just had a consistent performance, I'd wind up OK," Harbison said. "I don't consider myself a premier prone shooter so I did better than I expected."

Bethel Park, Pa., native Capt. Glenn Dubis held off Gary Hardy and Harbison in the men's three-position rifle to win his second championship in as many months.

Dubis also won the world title in men's 300-meter, three-position rifle in Milan, Italy, last month.

"I do well with a little adversity," Dubis said. "Shooting is such a visual thing. The challenge is not to think too much."

1st Lt. Kris Frazer a St. Paul Minn., native rounded out the medal count with a Bronze Medal in women's three-position rifle.

Frazer was tied with Silver Medalist Tammy DeAngelis going into the final. Anne-Marie Pfiffner took the Gold.

The final Gold Medal came in the men's air pistol event. Cpl. Daryl Szarenski of Saginaw, Mich., won his first national title in just over three years in the Army.

Szarenski shot a tough 10-shot final to pull ahead from his second place standing the previous day.

"I just shot one shot at a time," Szarenski said. "I tried to be aggressive, but not let them (the shots) go."

TOMORROW'S LEADERS

JROTC cadets build confidence

100 teens sharpen military skills

By Jerrie Macintire
Special to The Bayonet©

Teen-agers gathered at Fort Benning for a chance to belly crawl through trenches, up and over vertical walls, and down precipices, all in the name of leadership.

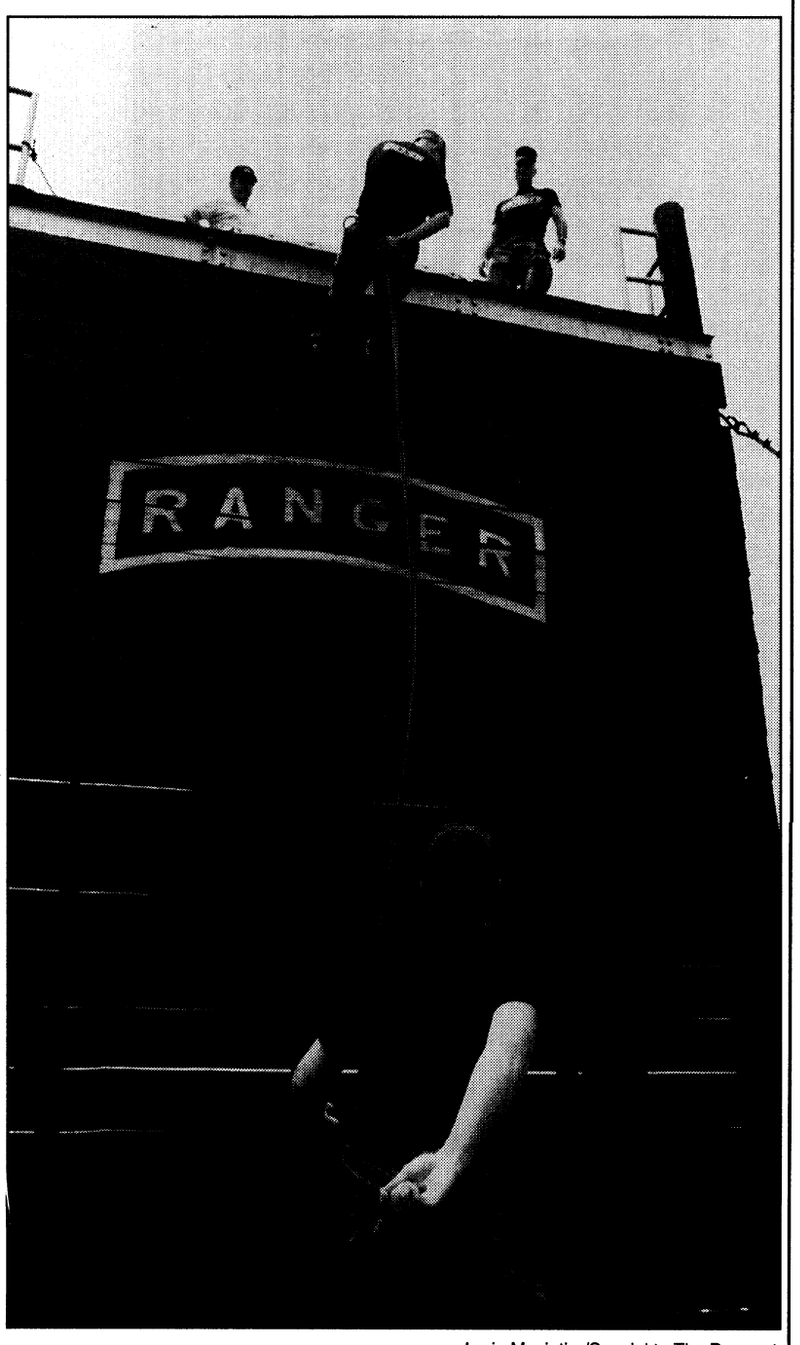
The approximately 100 teen-agers from area high schools were participating in the seventh annual Leaders' Course Aug. 15 to 19 for members of Junior Reserve Officer's Training Program, according to retired Col. Floyd Stephenson, head of the Muscogee County JROTC program.

The course is designed to build confidence and sharpen leadership skills while preparing high school JROTC participants to assume positions in their high school battalions, said Stephenson.

"This type of high-adventure training keeps the interest level up while sharpening leadership skills," said Sgt. 1st Class Eric Thien, Co. E, 4th Ranger Training Battalion, who supervised the rappelling exercise Aug. 18.

As part of the exercise, students transformed a 12-foot, 3/8 inch thick rope into a snug-fitting "Swiss Army seat" through a series of loops, twists and square knots.

The teens then attached a "D ring" threaded through an anchored 3/8 inch rope, and eased backward off platforms 30 feet above the ground.



The rappelling exercise, which is designed to build self-assurance, transformed reluctant observers into enthusiastic participants, said Staff Sgt. Thomas Gravlee, Co E., 4th RTB.

"They really did build their confidence. The difference before and after was obvious," he said.

The rappelling exercise was one activity in a five-day agenda that included land navigation, an obstacle course, military drills, helicopter rides and a tour of Andersonville National Cemetery.

The week of activities helped students develop "personal courage" by completing intimidating exercises, said retired Lt. Col. Bob Rasch of Spencer High School, who had 16 students participating in the Leaders' Course.

All seven high schools in Muscogee County as well as Talbotton Central High participated in the exercise, which is now in its seventh year.

Children learn about recycling

By Shelby Carr
Bayonet staff writer

Thirty-one children from the Main Post Child Development Center on Fort Benning toured the Material Recovery Facility Aug. 19.

The children, ages 3, 4 and 5, saw a demonstration of how plastic and glass are recycled as part of an environmental awareness program.

"The purpose is to show the children to save things they often throw out," said Mollie Floyd, the lead education technician at the center.

Edward Moore, the manager of the facility, told the children about the process of recycling cardboard, paper, plastic, cans and glass.

After a demonstration of the machine that recycles plastic, each child placed one plastic bottle in the machine. Each bottle was then chopped up into tiny granules and placed in bags. Every child was given one bag of recycled plastic, which is colorful and can be used in art projects.

The children brought two bags of aluminum cans to be recycled. Each child threw a can onto the conveyor belt of the recycling machine.

Moore brought out a bundle of cans the recycling facility had processed so the group could see the final product — a bundle of wrinkled metal.

The cans the children brought in to recycle were worth $3.36 and Floyd received the money, which would later be used to buy treats for the children.

Before leaving, the children sang "Let's Recycle," a song to the tune of "Frere Jacques," for the workers of the facility.

Each child was given an activities book on recycling.

Floyd was helped by Carmen Rivera, the education specialist at the CDC who set up the field trip, Betty Watkins, a volunteer, and Aradean Price, also a volunteer.

The staff of the facility enjoys showing the children the process of recycling, Moore said.

"We have a standing invitation to all Fort Benning schools and the Child Development Centers to come out and tour our facility," Moore said.

3rd Bde, 24th ID conducts deployment readiness exercise

By Ruth J. Spaller
Bayonet staff writer

It all starts with a chain of phone calls at 4:30 a.m., passing the message "Victory Thunder."

For soldiers of the 3rd Brigade, 24th Inf. Division, that message means they have two hours to report to work, dressed and equipped to deploy for war.

As a rapid deployment unit, soldiers in the 3rd Brigade are regularly alerted this way, and routinely on call as an "immediate ready company," a rotating duty requiring soldiers to be prepared to deploy on a moment's notice.

Beginning with that phone call Aug. 18, the immediate ready company element went through the 24-hour process of preparing to deploy, stopping just short of actually boarding the airplanes.

During "Exercise Readiness Company," soldiers from the 1st Battalion, 18th Infantry Regiment; 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor Regiment; 4th Battalion, 41st Field Artillery Regiment; and the 324th Forward Support Battalion prepared themselves and four Abrams tanks, four Bradley Fighting Vehicles, several fuel and cargo trucks and a forklift for deployment.

If this had been a real deployment, "The 82nd (Airborne Division) would secure a landing sight and this would be the first heavy unit to land," said Sgt. Maj. Keith S. Pruitt, Brigade Operations sergeant major.

The ball started rolling right away. "We had a formation at 6 a.m. and drew weapons and combat gear," said 2nd Lt. John Pirog, 2nd Platoon leader, Company B, 1st Bn., 18th Inf. Regt. "Then we went to the motor pool to load up the tracks."

The tanks and Bradleys were loaded onto heavy equipment transporter trucks, known as "Hetts," and moved down to a staging area near Lawson Army Airfield.

There they lined up in the order they would board the planes, and waited to go through joint inspections by Army civilians and Air Force personnel. The dismounted troops, who ride in the Bradleys, were moved to a hangar to go through precombat inspections.

Preparation for the joint inspection, known as the "J.I.," is thorough.

"We make sure everything is strapped down, there's no oil or battery leaks and no metal to metal contact," said Staff Sgt. James Brueggeman, a Bradley commander with Company B, 1st Bn., 18th Inf. Regt.

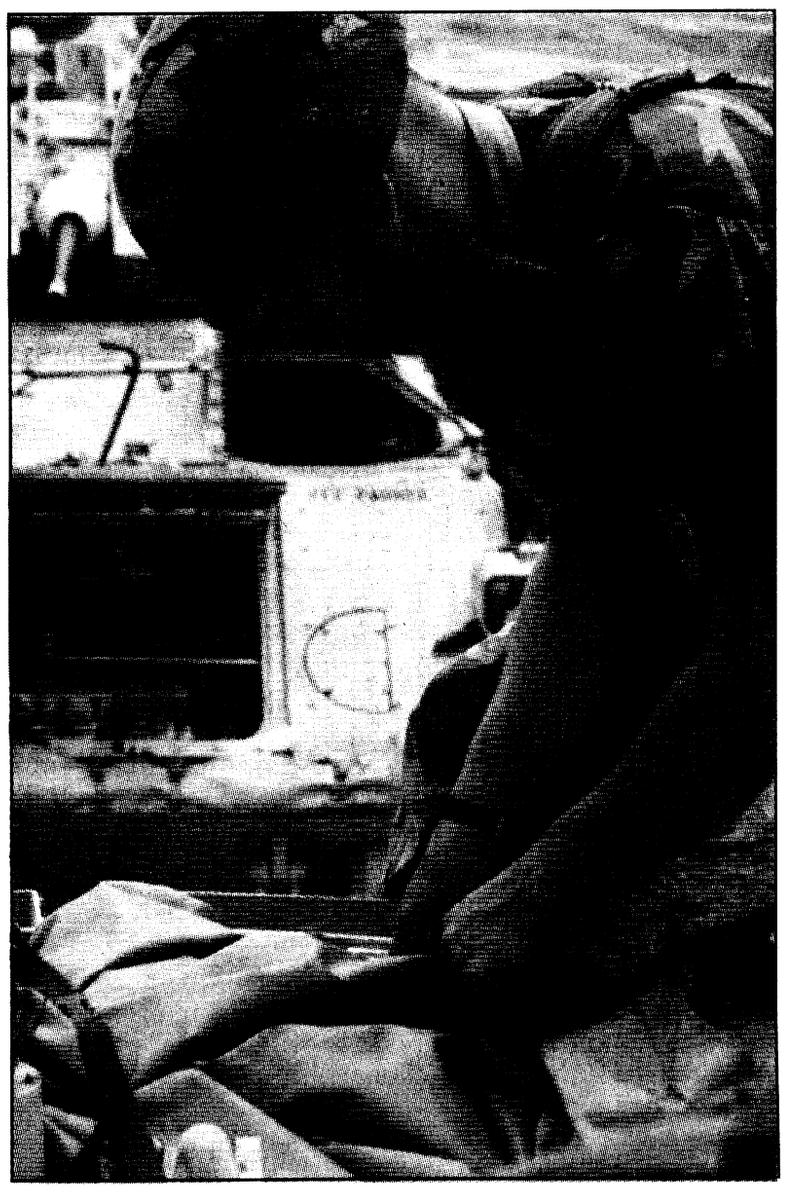
Metal things like tools and ammo cans could spark if left in contact during the flight, he said, which might trigger an explosion around highly flammable airplane fuel.

Bradley driver Pvt. 2 Brian Sarauer, who has been with the 1st Bn., 18th Inf. Regt., only two months, said he believed he'd be ready to deploy if they were really leaving that day.

That feeling, he said, was a result of "working in the motor pool all day ... because you get to know the vehicle and what's expected of you."

Pvt. 2 Jancel Amoedo, an Abrams driver with the 2nd Bn., 69th Armor Regt., said his unit had prepared for the exercise by steam cleaning the tanks three times to get the mud and oil off them.

"These are immaculate for tanks," he said of the four waiting by the airfield to be inspected. "You should see them when we come back from the field — completely covered in mud."

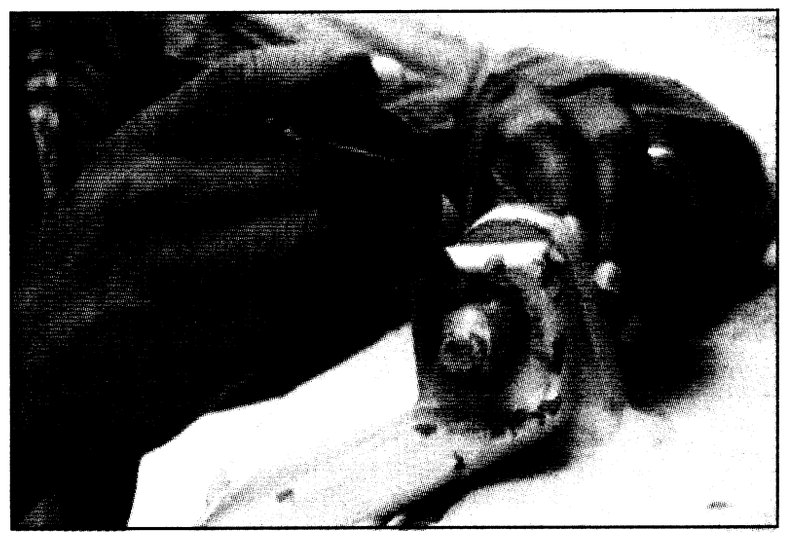


His crew actually spent several weeks preparing their tank for the exercise, he said. They changed all the hubs on the vehicles because the seals get worn out after a while and leak oil, sandbagged loose items and tied down the gun tube, he said.

He was disappointed they weren't flying, Amoedo said. "I've been to gunneries before, but never (by) air."

When the exercise was originally planned, the group was going to deploy to Fort Bragg, N.C., to conduct a force-on-force exercise with the 82nd Airborne Division.

But because of real world missions like those in Rwanda and Haiti, the C-5 airplanes needed to transport the heavy equipment were unavailable for the exercise.



Instead, different units went on to participate in live-fire exercises at different training areas on post.

Battle Lab evaluates day, night sight technology

New night vision systems allow soldiers to 'own the night' by seeing targets, obstacles

By Marc G. Turchin
Bayonet staff writer

Twenty-first century technology is making its way into the Army.

The Dismounted Battlespace Battle Lab conducted evaluations of several day and night driver viewers Thursday on Lae Field and Molar Range.

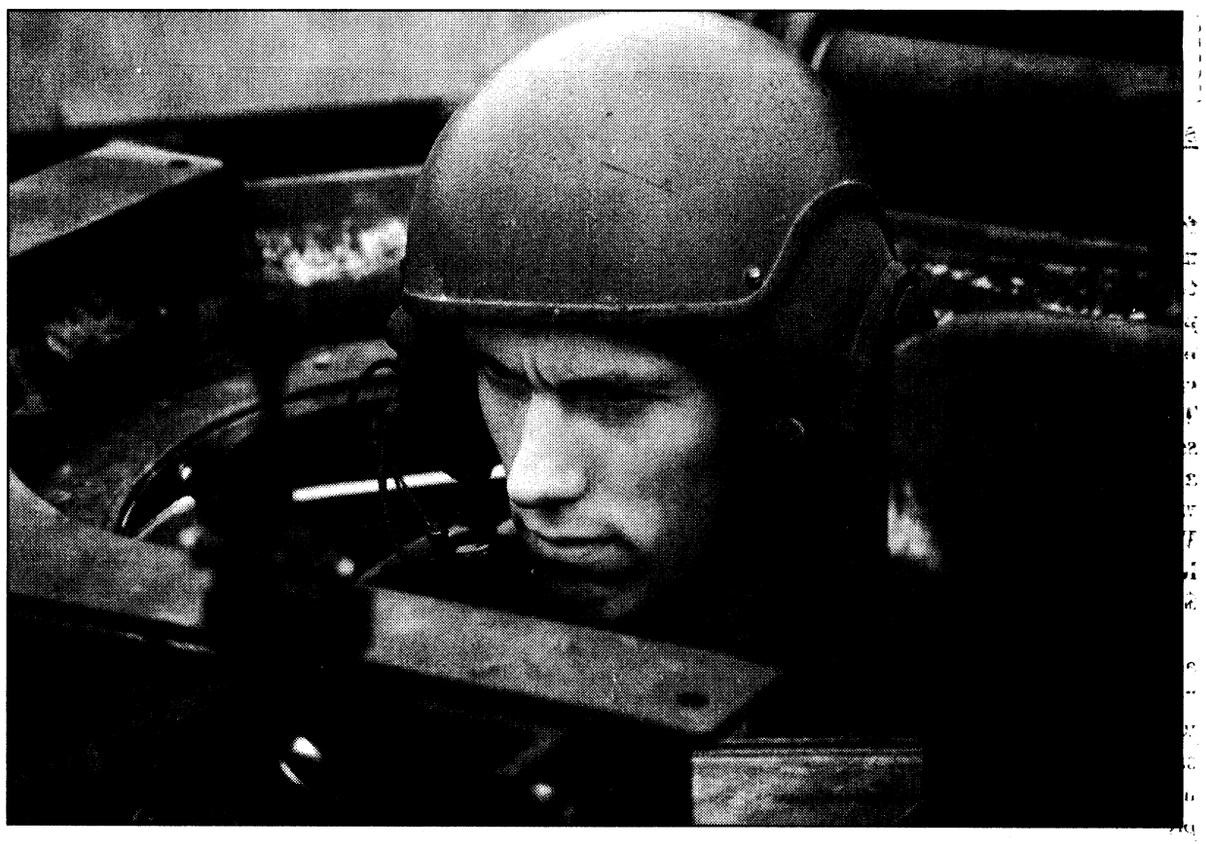
"This is what we call 'owning the night' technology — operations at night and in adverse weather to look at the capabilities our forces need to be more effective on the battlefield," said Col. Arnold Canada, chief of the Dismounted Battlespace Battle Lab.

Company C, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment provided the Bradley Fighting Vehicles and soldiers for the test. The drivers negotiated two night driving courses and evaluated obstacle and target distances using the Army Nightvision Viewer Visual System and the Driver Viewer Enhancement System.

"What we are looking at here is the differentiation between image intensification devices, which measure ambient (existing) light, and thermal imagers, which measure temperature differentials between background and surfaces," Canada said.

The Army Nightvision Viewer Visual System is an intensification device designed to amplify ambient light, such as moonlight or starlight, to allow vehicle drivers to see at night.

The Driver Viewer Enhancement System was the other piece of equipment evaluated. This thermal viewing device is designed to detect the heat given off by objects in the environment. The system uses these readings to displays a thermal "picture" of the surroundings on a screen inside the vehicle, allowing the driver better vision.



Evaluations of the new systems took place during both day and night.

The U.S. Army Training and Doctrine Command organized six Battle Labs to identify, develop and experiment with new warfighting concepts and new capabilities offered by emerging technologies.

Battle Labs are focal points for examining the latest concepts of battlefield organization, tactics, doctrine and technological capabilities.

The Dismounted Battle Space Battle Lab at Fort Benning concentrates on the foot soldiers. Its goal is to improve his capabilities and effectiveness in day or night combat situations.

Canada said a combination of both systems in one sensor is the goal of the 21st century. That would allow drivers to "see" their surroundings, regardless of the outside environment.

Army prepares for '95 officer drawdown

Army News Service

WASHINGTON — The Army is about 85 percent through its officer drawdown, according to personnel officials. Fiscal 1995 will see the service trim down by about 2,300 officers. Ensuring Army readiness, the 1995 Officer Drawdown Program focuses more on quality than quantity.

"The drawdown will be much more skill-based than it has been in the past," said Col. Charles Henning, chief of the Officer Personnel Division, Office of the Deputy Chief of Staff for Personnel. While most reshaping tools will still be around next year, they won't apply to some soldiers.

"Officers with critical or shortage skills will find that very few programs will be available to them, as far as separating before their obligation is complete," Henning said.

Early retirement will still be offered to officers in excess skills and grades, who have between 15 and 20 years of service. It's available to:

- Army Competitive Category captains who've been nonselected for promotion once
- ACC captains in year groups 1986 and 1987, with 15 to 19 years of service
- ACC majors in year group 1979, just before their first promotion consideration for lieutenant colonel
- Majors who've been nonselected twice for promotion, who are not in critical skills
- Special-branch officers who, at least once, have missed promotion to lieutenant colonel or colonel
- Certain special-branch majors and lieutenant colonels with 18 to 20 years of service
- Chief warrant officers in over-strength specialties, who have 17 to 20 years of service
- Warrant officers with 15 to 19 years, regardless of specialty, who are once nonselected for promotion.

The drawdown is cracking down on majors twice nonselected for promotion. Selective continuation will be based upon the mission needs of the Army and the skills of the soldier.

"Therefore, majors who are twice nonselect for promotion from the fiscal 1994 ACC lieutenant colonel promotion board, results released on June 16, will be continued on active duty only to meet critical skill requirements," Henning said.

"An August 1994 selective continuation board will select, for extended continuation, the minimum number of officers to meet critical skill requirements."

Those critical skills are in branches 18, 21, 25, 35, 74 and 88, and in functional area 48. FA 90 is added as a critical skill for year-group 1979 majors. Officers with critical skills aren't eligible for early retirement.

"As with all Army drawdown programs, the revised selective continuation program has both voluntary and involuntary aspects," Henning said.

"Those two-time nonselect majors not in critical skills, who volunteer for early retirement before the selective continuation board, will be selectively continued and allowed to request a retirement date as late as July 31, 1995, or upon achieving 20 years of qualifying service, whichever is earlier, thereby providing these volunteers maximum lead time to plan their transition."

Two-time nonselect majors with critical skills will be selectively continued until they're eligible for a 20-year retirement. Those not in critical skills who don't volunteer for early retirement will only be continued until Feb. 28.

"Bottom line, if not in a critical skill, we encourage all twice-nonselected majors to elect the voluntary option of early retirement," Henning said.

The Voluntary Separation Incentive and Special Separation Benefit will stay the same. In fiscal 1995, the following officers are eligible: captains in the reduction-in-force zone — year group 1986 and 1987; captains once nonselected for promotion; and warrant officers and special branch officers, except the Army Medical Specialist Corps.

The Voluntary Early Release Retirement Program has been reduced. Some lieutenants not in critical skills, with two to three years service, may volunteer to serve their remaining service obligation in a reserve unit. Certain Judge Advocate General Corps, Chaplain, AMEDD and warrant officers are also eligible for VERRP.

There will be no Lieutenant Retention Board in fiscal 1995. Officials said fiscal 1994 was the final year that retention board will be used to size a year-group cohort.

Selective Early Retirement Boards are continuing. Officers recommended by the SERB will be retired by July 1. Fiscal 1994 was the final year for multiple SERB consideration for ACC colonels. The fiscal 1995 colonel SERB will consider ACC colonels promoted from Nov. 2, 1991 through Oct. 17, 1992 — year groups 1969 and 1970 — and not on promotion list, or with an approved retirement in fiscal 1995 or 1996.

Special branch colonels will also be considered, but not necessarily the same zones of consideration as ACC colonels.

Lieutenant colonels previously considered by a SERB will be considered again this year.

These officers must have 19 years of service as of Sept. 29, 1994, mainly year group 1975 or older, and not be on a promotion list, or with an approved retirement in fiscal 1995 or 1996.

A warrant officer Selective Retirement Board is scheduled for Nov. 1 through 11, but it will be cancelled if enough warrants separate voluntarily, Henning said.

The reduction-in-force board for captains in year groups 1986/87 is slated for fiscal 1995.

As in the past, officers will be offered VSI/SSB first; and if enough don't volunteer for VSI/SSB, the board will meet as scheduled. The plan remains to RIF a year group only once, Henning added.

world war II

50 years ago this week ...

• Nazi Gen. Dietrich von Choltitz, disobeying orders to fight fiercely, signed an unconditional surrender of Paris. The United States and Britain agreed that a French provisional government under Gen. Charles de Gaulle would be set up in Paris.

• In Italy, the Eighth Army began its offensive against the Gothic Line. The main attacks were by V Corps units with support from part of the Canadian I Corps. The Polish Corps continued to fight on the coast near Pesaro.

• Rumania declared war on Germany after the Nazis bombed Bucharest, attacked Rumanian troops and strafed civilians.

• Russian forces combined a 65-mile overland drive with an 82-mile amphibious operation to capture the Rumanian Black Sea port of Constanta and the oil center at Ploesti. Most of the Rumanian oil fields were in Russian hands, thus increasing the shortages that had been imposed on the Germans by the American and British air offensive.

• Russian and Polish Communists jointly announced they had discovered evidence that Germans had murdered over 1.5 million people in the former Majdanek concentration camp.

• Harry S. Truman accepted the vice-presidential nomination in a Lamar, Mo., speech, saying that the voters "should trust experienced leaders."

• At Fort Benning, commanding officers issued an order to all troops, stating that they must comply with garrison regulations regarding saluting officers and proper wear of the uniform. Failure to comply would result in a fine of $25 for officers and $10 for enlisted men.

Q. I read an advertisement for a "living trust" packet in the newspaper last week. According to the article, by placing my property in trust instead of making a will, my beneficiaries can avoid the expense of probate. The ad said all I had to do was send $20 for a living trust packet and fill out the forms myself without an attorney's assistance. What is a living trust? Is this legal, or just a scam to get my $20?

A. There has been quite a lot of advertising about the benefits of "living trusts." Typically these ads will assert that such a trust will save you a tremendous amount of money by ensuring that your property goes to your beneficiaries, implying that unless you use a living trust, the courts and greedy lawyers will whittle away at your estate in the probate process.

Because few people understand the probate process, they fear it. These articles play on that fear. No one can competently advise you on whether a living trust or some other estate planning tool is right for you without doing a careful review of your family plan and financial position.

A trust is an arrangement by which one person (a trustee) holds title to an asset and manages it for the benefit of another person (a beneficiary). The person who establishes the trust is generally known as a settlor. A trust in some form can be made to do almost anything a settlor could do for himself. Trusts can be used to carry out the settlor's wishes even after death.

A will is effective only after death, but a trust in some form can be established during life to continue well after the death of the settlor. The trust, whatever its purpose, will have two characteristics: it will be either "revocable" or "irrevocable" and it will be either "testamentary" or "living" (also known as "inter vivos," meaning during life). Revocable simply means that you have retained the power to revoke, or cancel the trust. If the trust is irrevocable, you cannot cancel it.

A common form of a living trust is a trust naming yourself as the trustee to monitor the property during your lifetime and naming the individual you wish to inherit the property as the alternate trustee. Then at the time of your death, the assets listed in the trust will automatically come under the control of the alternate trustee, who can then convey the property to him or herself or other named beneficiaries. This transfer of property is also accomplished in probating a will. There is an additional expense involved in setting up a living trust, because deeds must be prepared transferring all trust property to the trust.

The Legal Assistance Division assists Georgia military retirees and their family members in will preparation and in probate. Division personnel can also advise you on the advisability of placing your property in joint tenancy with the right of survivorship, a simple expedient that avoids probate without resorting to a living trust.

Homes, automobiles, bank accounts and other assets that are held under such an arrangement are not included within a deceased's estate for probate purposes. Further, because the time and expense involved in the probate of an average-sized estate in Georgia is minimal, this should not be an issue for most retirees.

Whether a living trust is appropriate for you is a matter you should decide after a careful review of your estate goals and desires with trust professionals. Legal assistance attorneys can discuss living trusts and other estate planning tools with you. However, they cannot draft a living trust for you.

If you wish to discuss your estate planning concerns, call the Legal Assistance Division at 545-3281 for an appointment.

Poison-proof, protect your home

Egleston Children's Hospital

As children learn to crawl and walk, they explore their surroundings putting anything and everything in their mouths.

To protect your child during this adventurous time, store poisonous substances up high, out of sight, and secured with a childproof lock. The following is a checklist that parents and caregivers can use to ensure a poison-proof home.

Kitchen

• Keep a 1-ounce bottle of syrup of ipecac in a locked cabinet for each child in your home. Use it only if your Poison Control Center tells you to, and only in the prescribed amounts.

• Products containing lye are extremely dangerous. Keep these products out of your home.

• Put safe snacks in cabinets that are easy to reach.

• Keep all detergents, cleaners and soaps up high and secured with child restraint locks. Make sure these substances have child resistant caps and are kept in their original containers, away from food.

• Keep alcoholic beverages out of reach.

Bathroom

• Remove cleaners from under the sink and store them up high and locked up.

• Shampoo and conditioner are often poisonous, so keep them out of your child's reach.

• Keep medicines, vitamins, cosmetics, colognes and mouthwashes out of your child's reach and locked up.

• Make sure medicines have child resistant caps, are kept in their original containers and are flushed down the toilet when the expiration date passes.

Bedroom

• Keep purses and diaper bags away from small children since they may contain medicine or cosmetics.

• Remove medicines from your dresser or bedside table.

• Keep perfumes, colognes, cosmetics and powders out of your child's reach.

Living room

• Watch out for plants; many are poisonous. Know the common and botanical names of your plants so you can identify them to the Georgia Poison Control Center if your child eats one. Keep cigars, lighters, ashtrays and alcoholic beverages out of your child's reach.

Garage and basement

• Keep insect sprays, weed killers, fertilizers, paints, gasoline, antifreeze and other solvents locked up. Store poisonous products in their original containers to avoid confusion. For example, children may think gasoline stored in a soda bottle is OK to drink.

Children may have various reactions to poison. If you think your child may have been poisoned, call the Georgia Poison Control Center at (800) 282-5846.

Under-cooked foods can cause illness, infection

By Rudi Williams
American Forces Information Service

Occasional flare-ups of E.coli 0157, or Escherichia coli, infections in about 20 states have prompted the Department of Agriculture to launch a nationwide Safe Hamburger Campaign.

The campaign aims mainly at parents of young children, particularly those under age 5. Mostly children have been affected by E.coli 0157, but complications from the illness have also struck the elderly and people with weakened immune systems," said Dr. Jill Hollingsworth of Agriculture's Food Safety and Inspection Service.

At least 16 major outbreaks of E.coli 0157 have occurred, causing more than 20 deaths since 1982, when the bacteria was first shown to cause foodborne illness, Hollingsworth noted.

"The Centers for Disease Control estimates as many as 20,000 cases occur every year," she said. "About 18 percent of those affected are hospitalized, and about 2 percent of the cases result in death."

Officials blame undercooked hamburgers as the main cause of the illness. They have also traced cases to raw milk, contaminated water, salad bars and unpasteurized apple cider, Hollingsworth said.

The Agriculture Department and the National Association of School Nurses are conducting a joint program to educate parents of elementary school children about the importance of safe food handling. Agriculture has developed a "parent education card" that features a well-cooked hamburger topped with cheese, tomato, grilled onions and lettuce with the statement: "Recipe for a safe and delicious hamburger. No matter how you top it ... before you take a bite, make sure it's brown in the middle."

Other food handling tips include:

• After shopping, quickly freeze or refrigerate all ground meat and other perishable foods.

• Never thaw food on the counter or let it sit out of the refrigerator for more than two hours.

• Wash hands, utensils and work areas with hot soapy water after contact with raw meat to keep bacteria from spreading. Also wash hands after using the bathroom or diapering a child.

• Most importantly, whether cooking hamburgers at home or eating them out, check them with a fork to make sure they are done all the way through. Make sure no pink shows before you take a bite. Send back any undercooked hamburger or other food made from ground meat. Cook all dishes made with ground meat until brown or gray inside, or to an internal temperature of 160 degrees Fahrenheit.

Concern for pet's health is vital

Fort Benning Veterinary Services

pet tips

Pet grooming, when performed safely, is an important factor in preventive health care. Proper maintenance of pets' coats, skin, nails and ears can preclude many of the most common pet ailments.

Three basic grooming measures that are important in maintaining animal health are: bathing, nail clipping and ear cleaning.

The frequency at which dogs and cats should be bathed depends on the type of shampoo used and the coat condition of the animal. Medicated and flea shampoos should be applied as often as stated on the label.

Shampooing for regular bathing purposes should occur no more than once every two weeks to avoid drying out an animal's coat. Because of the stress involved and their fastidious grooming habits, cats do not need to be bathed unless for medicinal or pest control purposes.

To protect the health and safety of the animal being bathed, measures should be taken to ensure that room and water temperatures are comfortable. Avoid getting water into the animal's eyes, nose, ears or mouth.

Animals should be thoroughly wet before applying shampoo and lather should be worked down from the head and neck. Rinsing should be done several times in clear, fresh water. Any shampoo residue left on the pet's skin can cause itching and irritation.

Hot blow-dryers can cause burns and may dry the skin. Animals should be towel-dried as much as possible and kept in a warm place until the coat and skin are completely dry.

Frequent brushing helps keep coat and skin healthy between baths.

Ear cleaning is best done directly after bathing. Using a commercial veterinary ear cleaner and cotton balls, clean only the outer section of the ear. Tiny hairs inside the ear sweep debris to the outer area where it can safely wiped away. Cotton swabs should never be used, they can cause permanent damage and may result in hearing loss.

Nail trimming should be done monthly on dogs and cats to prevent long nails form tearing and cracking. Nails left untrimmed can also grow under and into the pads of the feet. The dew claw (on the side of the leg) is especially prone to becoming overgrown because it does not wear down. Safe nail trimming should be done using animal nail clippers for dogs and human nail trimmers on cats.

Claws held to the light will display a pinkish blood vessel that may vary depending on the frequency of the nail trimming. Only the whitish nail extending past the edge of the blood vessel may be trimmed. Trimming too close to the edge of the vessel can result in bleeding and soreness.

Dark nails, or those with less opacity, can be coated with mineral oil to make them more transparent. If the nail remains too dark to determine the location of the blood vessel, trimming the nail away in small increments may be necessary. Should the vessel be cut, bleeding can be slowed by applying direct pressure to the tip of the nail.

Some breeds of dogs and cats have special grooming needs. Animals with longer coats may require frequent clipping that can be done at home or at a professional salon.

Other breeds may have special allergies or intolerences for certain product ingredients. Consult a veterinarian about any specific questions or needs.

Pets that are well maintained have better overall health and lead more enjoyable lives.

The Veterinary Treatment Facility is located in Building 265 on 10th Mountain Division Road. The hours are 8 to 11:30 a.m. and 12:45 to 3 p.m. Monday through Friday (closed the last working day of the month for inventory) and the phone numbers are 545-4444 and 545-1127.

Tires need attention to keep car running smooth

Firestone

Each year Americans spend millions of dollars on the purchase of tires. Unfortunately, they don't spend very much time taking care of them.

What most people don't realize is that tires add value to their cars when properly maintained. And proper tire maintenance involves very simple, routine tasks that can save consumers both money and headaches.

"Tires are some of the most important parts of a car, helping a car perform to its maximum capabilities," said Stan Cooper, Firestone's marketing manager for consumer products.

"On the other hand, they're also some of the most overlooked components of a car. By giving them a little attention every month, consumers can enhance the performance of their cars and make their tires last a lot longer."

So what can you do to provide your tires a little tender loving care? The first step in caring for your tires is keeping them properly inflated.

The single greatest cause of tire damage is improper inflation — which results in early and irregular wear and also decreases your car's gas mileage.

Your car's owner's manual will have the correct tire pressure for your tires. Investing in your own air pressure gauge is money well spent. Gauges are easy to use; your tire dealer can show you how.

Firestone recommends that you check the air pressure in your tires at least once a month and perform visual checks regularly to detect possible leaks.

By having your car's alignment checked, you ensure that your wheels are moving in a straight line when you steer straight, therefore cutting down on irregular tread wear.

Misalignment can result in tire damage as well as damage to your car's suspension system, and that can be costly.

Have your alignment checked about every 10,000 miles or at least once a year. You'll probably want to call ahead to make an appointment with your tire dealer for this job, which usually takes less than an hour.

Balancing your tires is also very important. When your tires aren't balanced correctly, your car will behave a lot like the way your washing machine does when the clothes clump in one spot during the spin cycle. The washer rocks wildly from the uneven weight distribution.

Protect your tire investment by checking inflation and tread depth each month and by visiting your tire dealer for rotation, alignment and balancing when necessary.

Safety briefings for children will help keep them safe

Egleston Children's Hospital

Sooner or later your children may have to spend some time at home alone. You may have to go to the store or may be at work and cannot be there when your children come home from school.

The child safety experts at Egleston Children's Hospital recommend using the following to assure your children stay safe when they are home alone.

• Identify a safe neighbor for your children. A safe neighbor lives close by your home and will be able to assist your children if they need help.

• Review with your children the importance of checking the home before entering. Your home should look exactly the way it did when they left. If something is different, they should immediately go to a safe neighbor's home.

• Advise your children to keep their key with them at all times and in a safe place. If your child is wearing the key around his or her neck, it's best to tuck it inside his or her shirt.

• Teach your children not to show their key to anyone and not to give it to anyone to hold.

• Teach your children how to report emergencies to 911. Be sure they knows their name, address and phone number.

• Examine your home and remove or lock up hazards. Maintain working smoke detectors.

• Teach your children to stop, drop and roll if their clothes catch on fire.

• Talk to your children about which appliances are safe to use and review with your children how to operate them.

• Provide healthy snacks for your children. They should not have to be cut or cooked, and should be easy to reach.

• Review with your children what to say to strangers on the telephone. Tell them to say their parents are busy and then offer to take a message.

• Let your children know that if the caller scares them, they should hang up and call you or a safe neighbor right away.

• Help your children respond if a stranger knocks on the door. Your children should never unlock the door. Teach your children to use the peephole and to always talk through the door. If it's a delivery, your children should tell the stranger to come back later.

If the stranger threatens your children, tell them to call 911.

• Provide safe, at-home activities and materials to occupy your children's time in a safe and creative way.

For more information about home alone safety or any other area of child safety, call Egleston Children's Hospital at 321-KIDS.

If telemarketing deal sounds too good to be true — call Better Business Bureau

Better Business Bureau

"Once bitten, twice shy" does not apply to the repeat victims of telemarketing scams.

Better Business Bureaus are reporting that many victims of telephone fraud are not learning their lesson and getting taken a second time by slick scammers who use "sucker lists" to keep the money rolling in.

These lists contain the names, addresses, phone numbers and sometimes other information of people who have responded to bogus telephone solicitations.

The lists, which are created, bought and sold by some telemarketers, are invaluable to unscrupulous promoters because they know that consumers who have been tricked once are vulnerable to additional scams.

The scammers use a variety of approaches to retarget the consumer on the sucker lists. One growing scam is called the "Recovery Room."

Consumers who have lost money to a telemarketer are contacted by an individual claiming to represent a government agency, private company or consumer organization that works, for a fee, to recover lost money, a product or a prize.

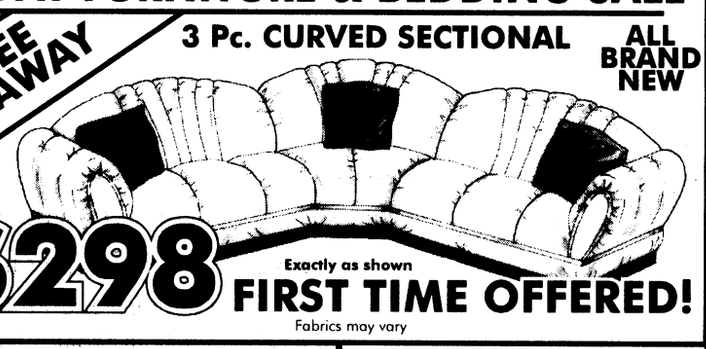
Of course, this caller is likely to be just as bogus as the one that perpetrated the original rip-off, and may, in fact, work for the same firm.

In another approach, an unethical telemarketer may use prize incentives to persuade consumers to purchase additional merchandise, and lead them to believe that making extra purchases could increase their chances of winning a "grand prize."

However, it may be several weeks or more before the products and "prizes" are delivered, and it is likely that the items will be overpriced and inferior in quality. By that time the consumer's credit card account has been charged or checks cashed, and the fraudulent company may be long gone.

Consumers should not be taken in by companies offering to recover funds lost to telemarketers for a fee, warns the Better Business Bureau.

The Better Business Bureau, state and local protection agencies or state's Attorney General offices can assist victims at no charge.



Also, consumers who are skeptical about a telemarketing sales pitch can check the company out with these organizations before agreeing to purchase anything.

Are we too easily pleased?

USAIC Chaplains' Office

A few years ago, I was asked to answer a survey that asked the question, "What is the greatest virtue or quality that a person could strive for?"

The choices were fidelity, purpose, competence, care, wisdom, love, will or hope.

The most chosen answer was fidelity — trustworthiness or dependability. Strangely enough, if the same question had been asked of one of the great Christians of old, he probably would have said "love."

Do you see how attitudes have changed? From love, which desires the greatest happiness and well-being for another, we have stepped over to faithfulness and dependability, which while certainly important, implies only that one "be there" and live in a predictable way.

If you truly love someone, you'll risk much and give more for them. But if you're merely dependable, they just know you'll be home for dinner tonight

Have we lowered our sights too much? Are we too easily pleased? If you truly love someone, you'll risk much and give more for them. But if you're merely dependable, they just know you'll be home for dinner tonight.

Perhaps I'm "straining at gnats to swallow camels," but I think the greatest problem I see in relationships today is that we could have so much.

reflections

I think Paul meant something like this when he said, "I keep striving to win the prize for which Christ Jesus has already won me..." (Philippians 3:12b). He wouldn't be pleased with anything less than the best that God had set aside for him.

Maybe God has set aside something so good, so wonderful for you that you've never even dreamt of the possibility.

Maybe you've been pleased with the crumbs under the table when above your head a banquet has been spread. This is something to think about!

Understanding Catholicism

Class available Sept. 7

By Jacqueline Feagin
USAIC Chaplains' Office

Are you thinking about becoming a Catholic?

Are there some questions about the Catholic Church that you want answered?

Perhaps you are willing to follow like the first followers of Jesus.

The Catholic Parish at Fort Benning extends an invitation to all who are willing to follow its faith.

The rite of Christian initiation of adults will be offered by the Religious Education Center in Building 2522 on Sept. 7 at 7 p.m. All interested adults should sign up in advance.

The rite is a process of gradual conversion into the Catholic faith. One will not only be seeking membership into the church but also into the parish.

Through the process, a person will learn direction, have his or her questions about the church and its teachings answered and learn about the spiritual life and a relationship with God.

You will not become an expert on the Catholic religion or be forced to convert to Catholicism. This is simply a time to begin resolving some of your questions about your faith. As you proceed through the journey you will ask yourself if Catholicism is for you.

For information, contact Phil Reilly at 545-5508.

'Frasier' makes a move to Tuesdays

By Jay Bobbin
Tribune Media Services

The outcome of its first season was about as good as it gets for any new show, but "Frasier" faces a big challenge as its second year looms.

SPOTLIGHT

Now established as one of TV's top-rated weekly programs, and currently in the running for 11 Emmy Awards — including Outstanding Comedy Series — NBC's "Cheers" spinoff has developed its own identity very quickly, by making psychiatrist Frasier Crane (played by Kelsey Grammer) the host of a radio advice show in his native Seattle.

Multiple repeats are slated to air this week, two back-to-back on Monday and another on Thursday...but "Frasier" soon will be put to its toughest test yet, as NBC moves it to Tuesdays, starting with its second-season premiere on Sept. 20. That shift will pit the series directly against another comedy powerhouse, ABC's "Roseanne" (though at press time, the possibility that ABC might move the also-strong "Home Improvement" into that slot still existed). Though that initially might seem like a bold strategy, virtually everyone at NBC is convinced that "Frasier" has become solid enough quickly enough to more than hold its own, if not win the showdown outright. Most of those connected to the show share that view, while also acknowledging that the scheduling is an issue that's basically out of their hands.

Kelsey Grammer

"At first, of course, it seemed like a bit of a surprise," admits Grammer, who's up for a "Frasier" Emmy of his own, after earning several previous nominations for playing the part on "Cheers" and in a "Wings" episode. "Then, in all honesty, it wasn't. We're doing very well, and I think we have a fabulous show. I don't mean to come from a position of being cocky about it, but I'm very pleased with it, and I certainly think it's one of the finest shows on television. I think it'll hold up against anybody. The only thing I kind of regret is that I won't be on Thursday nights anymore, just because I got so used to being there. ('Cheers,' on which Grammer appeared from 1984 to its finale last year, also was telecast on that evening.) It was sort of like, 'Thursday's my night.'"

What: "Frasier"
When: Tuesdays (beginning Sept. 20) on NBC

Also cited recently by the Television Critics Association as the Best Comedy Series of the 1993-94 season, "Frasier" has given ample attention to the members of its supporting cast; included in it are John Mahoney as Frasier's live-in, injured-ex-cop father Martin; "Moose" as the latter's distinctive dog, Eddie; Jane Leeves as Martin's caretaker, Daphne; David Hyde Pierce as Frasier's snooty, rival-psychiatrist brother Niles; and Peri Gilpin as Frasier's broadcast assistant Roz. "You try certain things with each character," explains co-executive producer David Lee. "The thing with Niles' infatuation with Daphne (spotlighted in the first rerun scheduled for this Monday) was something we tried, and it seemed to hit, so we sort of ran with that. "

SOA helps in war against drugs

Devon Kerbow

Cadets in SOA's C-38 course practice loading and unloading under combat conditions.

Infiltration, air-mobile operations equip students to handle fight

By Devon Kerbow
School of the Americas

Battling drugs in Central and South America isn't an easy task, but the School of the Americas is doing what it can to help.

Students from SOA's OE-5 Counternarcotics Operations Course and C-38 Cadet Counterdrug Orientation Course spent four days learning and practicing different helicopter infiltra on techniques that would aid their efforts to fight drugs in their countries.

During the first day students rappelled at Todd Field. After rappelling from the 35-foot tower, they moved on to the 60-foot tower.

SOA's Special Operations Department instructors stressed to the students the importance of proper hand placement and to always stop and look down before reaching the ground to make sure they weren't too far from it before releasing the rope.

After gaining confidence on the two towers, the students tested their new skills by rappelling from a Blackhawk helicopter hovering more than 70 feet from the ground.

The second day was air mobile operations. This was the only exercise in which the helicopter actually landed.

At Amfreville, the students practiced quickly loading and unloading themselves and their equipment in a combat situation.

The third day, again at Todd Field, the students fast-roped from a helicopter.

SOD instructor Sgt. 1st Class Felix Davila said that fast-rope and rappelling differ in that fast-rope uses one thick rope to which the students are not secured, and they slide down it. Rappelling uses two ropes, the students are secured to the ropes, and they have more control of their speed going down.

Fast-rope is done so rapidly, Davila said, that the helicopter can put someone right at his or her targeted objective and still leave the enemy with no time to react to the approach.

Davila said the students' biggest fear was height. But since their alternative was facing the instructors if they refused, they quickly put things into perspective, he said.

OCS to add 91 to Hall of Fame

By Richard Brill
Special to The Bayonet©

The U.S. Army Officer Candidate School will host its annual Hall of Fame Induction events Thursday and Sept 9.

The events will include an induction dinner Thursday at the Officers' Club at 6 p.m. and the induction ceremony itself in Infantry Hall's Marshall Auditorium at 11 a.m. Sept. 9.

This year, 91 Officer Candidate School graduates are expected to join the ranks of the 1,639 graduates who have already been inducted since the honor was initiated in 1958.

"Induction into the OCS Hall of Fame is the single greatest honor that the Officer Candidate School can bestow upon one of its graduates," said Lt. Col. Donald B. Chung, commander of the 3rd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment.

The OCS Hall of Fame was established in 1958. To be eligible for induction, a candidate must be a graduate of OCS at Fort Benning or the Ground General School at Fort Riley, Kan., must have been awarded the Medal of Honor, or attained the rank of colonel, or been elected or appointed to an office of prominence in national or state government or achieved national or state recognition for outstanding service to the nation.

Chung invites all OCS graduates to attend the dinner and induction ceremony.

"The OCS Hall of Fame induction events are tantamount to those surrounding West Point's Founder's Day," he said.

"Unlike our counterparts from West Point, OCS graduates have no single event or day where they can celebrate their heritage. Let's start a tradition this year with the 36th anniversary of the OCS Hall of Fame."

For information on attendance, call the OCS adjutant at 545-4711 or 545-3507 or visit the battalion headquarters, Building 2757.

Moment of silence or prayer?

Georgia recently passed legislation giving school students a moment of silence. Since the U.S. Supreme Court ruled prayer in school unconstitutional, many conservatives have fought to have it reinstated. Some feel the moment of silence is a step in that direction

School students can use moment to start day right, meditate or pray

By Shelby Carr

commentary

One minute of silence— to think about Friday night's football game, the party afterward, the test next period or for prayer. These are a few of the ways students in Georgia public schools can spend their time.

PRO

The Georgia State Legislature just made the decision to allow students the opportunity to do as they please for one minute every day, as long as they do it silently.

This provides the first opportunity for students to pray in school since the U.S. Supreme Court ruled prayer in school unconstitutional.

This law does not require prayer, it does not require anything, except students sit in silence for a minute.

Looking at my watch while 60 seconds tick away, I pray silently that the words to my next article come to me. My right to freedom of religion guarantees this opportunity, just as it also guarantees everyone's right to freedom of religion.

I cannot force those around me to pray, nor can they force me not to pray; that is why it is a moment of silence.

If I were a student and wished to use my moment of silence to dream about my date after the football game, I could do so without infringing upon the rights of others.

A moment of silence provides the students of Georgia with the ability to choose, the esteemed American privilege of choice, how they wish to spend their time.

Freedom of religion is guaranteed by the Constitution and is not limited by this law.

Prayer is not led by the school or state, so the separation of church and state is maintained, as guaranteed by the Constitution.

As to the poor teacher who was suspended, laws are made by those we elect. Citizens have the obligation not to willingly break the law, even when they disagree with it. If I disagree with a law, I don't break it and get arrested; I work within the system to change the law with which I disagree.

The educational problems facing the state of Georgia will not be solved by allowing students to sit in silence and contemplate the schoolwork they will do that day, but who is to say some time to reflect on the day ahead will hinder the education process?

Editor's note: While Georgia schools are now required by state law to offer a "moment of silence," Fort Benning Schools, as Department of Defense Dependent Schools, are not bound by state legislation and do not offer the "moment of silence."

Conservatives are trying to sneak school prayer through the back door

By Karen S. Morarie
Bayonet staff writer

commentary

Georgia has taken a large step sideways this year in instituting a mandatory "moment of silence" in public schools.

CON

I say "sideways" because while prayer in school was ruled unconstitutional by the Supreme Court, the new law recently passed by the state legislature carefully avoids, indeed prohibits the use of, the word "prayer." It does, however, require teachers to offer one minute of silence.

The success of this law may be seen as a small step forward by those who favor prayer in schools, or as a minor hop to the rear by its opponents. Split the difference — it's sideways.

Sideways because, while Georgians love to wrangle over prayer in school — like the sanctity or lack thereof of the state flag, it's a subject guaranteed to stir up an argument almost any day — it's a distraction from more serious issues that seemingly aren't being addressed.

I believe the "moment of silence" is essentially an attempt to placate those who passionately want to see prayer in schools. My feeling is that prayer, in any form, doesn't belong in public schools; state-directed prayer smacks of state-directed religion, and there is no place for that in this country.

By all means, pray — in your home, in your church, anywhere you please. Just don't attempt to coerce those around you into joining you — by law, they aren't required to, and they may be uncomfortable doing so.

If you want your child to pray in school, send him or her to a private school conducted by the church of your choice.

The controversy over this latest legislative attempt to slip through Constitutional loopholes already seems bound to end up in a court battle. Sadly, this can only serve to distract the public from the educational problems our schools and our students are facing.

Georgia students score consistently lower than the national average — which itself is low enough — on standardized achievement and college-entrance tests, while the state has consistently ranked high in dropout and teen pregnancy rates.

Perhaps the moment of reflection is a harmless compromise. But compromising on Constitutional issues is a dangerous precedent — remember "separate but equal?" Remember the principal who tried to stop his school's prom because mixed-race couples might attend?

Leave religion out of the schools, and don't disguise prayer as a "moment of reflection."

I'm all for quiet reflection — at the time and place of the individual's choosing. If we're going to mandate anything in the schools, let's mandate learning. We need to take some steps forward.

498th lauded for assistance provided to flood victims

I wish to bring to your attention the outstanding performance of the 498th Medical Company (Air Ambulance) during the major flood in Albany in July.

The help provided by Maj. James M. Bobbitt, Sgt. Joseph A. Cevasco and their associates can be described as no less than miraculous.

Not only did they provide emergency assistance for those critically ill patients, they also remained on the scene to provide on-going technical and transportation support throughout the crisis.

As the previous director of emergency medical services for Georgia for more than nine years and the original coordinator for the MAST program, I know what it takes to overcome the circumstances that were encountered during our flood.

Bobbitt and the 498th personnel played a major role in our recovery. I have heard nothing but praise for the services that he and his unit provided.

Be safe this Labor Day weekend

Every Labor Day weekend the highways are crowded with people enjoying the last summer holiday of the year.

Unfortunately, traffic accidents reach their peak during this holiday.

To combat this danger, I am asking you to inspect soldiers' privately owned vehicles before the holiday and brief soldiers and employees about water and driving safety. Stress the following positive actions in your briefings:

- Sober swimming in authorized, supervised areas.
- Arranging schedules for alert and sober driving.
- Following all traffic laws, especially the speed limit.
- Encouraging the use of seat belts.
- Testing the condition of vehicles, including brakes, lights, horns, etc.
- Yielding to the less capable driver.

Labor Day weekend is an extremely high risk period. I expect every commander and director to be personally involved in all safety activities.

We must protect our soldiers, civilians, and family members.

19th Amendment anniversary giving women the right to vote

By Richard Brill
Special to The Bayonet©

Women's Equality Day was celebrated Aug. 26 with a luncheon and guest speaker at the NCO Club.

Sponsored by the Fort Benning Equal Opportunity Office, the luncheon commemorated the 74th anniversary of the passage of the 19th Amendment to the U.S. Constitution, which secured the right to vote for all American women.

Linda Rochell Lane, who has a doctorate of arts in the humanities with a concentration in history, chronicled the history of women's struggle for equality from a historical perspective.

Women have always been VIPs, Lane said, but those letters haven't always stood for very important person. Women have always held a very important place in history, but often history books present a very inaccurate picture of women's accomplishments, she said.

"At every level of development and throughout each era of American history, America's women have always been VIP females: very involved people," she said.

Before this century, women had few choices and their roles were clearly defined, Lane said. According to Lane, young, single white women were to be virginal, interesting and pretty, while young black and immigrant women had to be voiceless, industrial and productive.

All women, regardless of race or class, had to vow, iron and procreate, that is, get married, perform household tasks and bear children, she said.

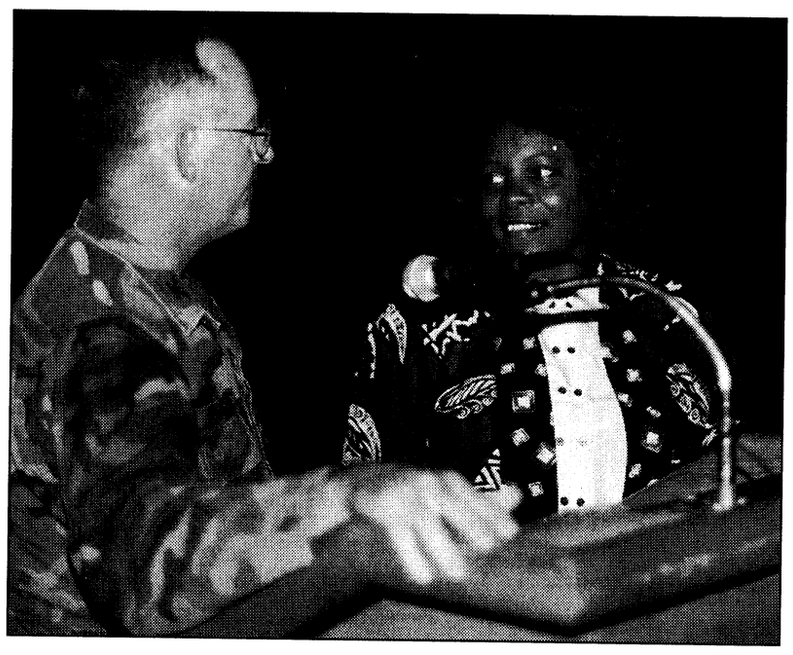
"Here I must pause and comment on what I consider to be one of the most paradoxical mores, or customs, in the western world," Lane said. "That a man should be head of the house when he traditionally has not been responsible for any aspect of the household, nor has he traditionally displayed any interest in the household and in most cases man has appeared to be wholly inadequate in household customs."

Traditional domestic roles, however grueling and menial, were still vitally important performances that contributed to the development and growth of the United States, she added.

"It is in domesticity that women as a group made the greatest contributions to the pre-20th century United States. Indeed, in early America, women as homemakers were actually VIPs: versatile, invaluable producers. Every aspect of domesticity prior to the 20th century was truly a labor-intensive, time-consuming chore and all of this was done by VIPs with VIP compensation: very insulting pay," Lane said.

The early 20th century changed with the advent of mass production and electricity. By the 1950s, household appliances helped to liberate women from their traditional household roles and give them time for other pursuits such as employment, higher education and service in the military, Lane said. By the 1960s, the feminist movement had vastly empowered and changed women's status even more, she added.

"Today's woman is in a VIP position of being a vastly improved personage with the choice to do virtually anything that she chooses to do ... she is a veritable invincible phenomenon," she said.



History has not been kind to women's accomplishments, which are very inadequately presented, she said.

"Still we see a running list of achievers ... of volunteers, inventors and poets, voodooists, Islamics and preachers, visionaries, industrialists and painters, vamps, idols and protesters, voters, instructors and pupils and veterans, inspectors and privates," Lane said.

"In order to correct the inadequate record of women in history, I think it is important that we go to the primary sources, such as the diaries, journals and letters that have been written and left behind, and go to women themselves to get their own stories," she added. "It is also important that we as women, if we want the story to be told correctly, that we go out and tell it: the right way."

Lane is active in a number of professional organizations, including the Association of Black Women Historians, the National Council for Social Studies, the Association For Study of Afro American Life and Culture, the Southern History Association, and the Georgia and Arkansas associations of Historians.

She is married to Lt. Col. Willie Lane, chief of Plans and Readiness Division.

ITB observes Women's Equality Day with luncheon

By Shelby Carr
Bayonet staff writer

Soldiers and civilians from Infantry Training Brigade gathered for lunch to commemorate Women's Equality Day at the Sand Hill Noncommissioned Officer Club Aug. 26 at 11:30 a.m.

Judy Grohman, chief of Automation at ITB, was the guest speaker, Rhonda Raglin, legal clerk for 1st Battalion, 19th Infantry Regiment, read a poem and Sgt. Marcus Carter sang a song.

Women's Equality Day is a celebration of the passage of the 19th Amendment to the Constitution of the United States, giving women the right to vote, and the lunch focused on the achievements of women.

Raglin read the poem "24 Things to Always Remember ... and One Thing to Never Forget," by Collin McCarty.

"Don't put limits on yourself," Raglin quoted. "Realize that it's never too late. And don't ever forget, for even a day, how very special you are."

Carter sang the song, "A Hero," by Mariah Carey, as he played the guitar.

Grohman's speech dealt with the subject of equality and what it means.

"Equality," she said. "What is it? How is it defined? Webster's definition is 'the quality or state of being equal.' Looking again at the word, I found two words, equal and equality.

"If we could spend as much time and energy on perfecting our downfalls as we do trying to fool people into believing we're something we're not, we could make ourselves into very dynamic, high-quality people," Grohman said. "We must work on ourselves before we offer our talents to others."

> "We must work on ourselves before we offer our talents to others."
> — Judy Grohman
> Chief of Automation, Infantry Training Brigade

Grohman spoke about setting goals and mentioned women who set and achieved goals. The list of women included:

- Amelia Earhart — pilot
- Clara Barton — nurse and founder of the American Red Cross
- Janet Reno — attorney general
- Margaret Thatcher — former prime minister of England
- Sandra Day O'Conner — Supreme Court justice

"We have to prepare ourselves," Grohman said. "We must love and respect ourselves.

"It's OK to get tired; that's human. But, we must take that few minutes to regroup and reprioritize our thoughts."

She referred to Julia Ward Howe, who wrote "Battle Hymn of the Republic" after getting discouraged and taking a break.

"You are a quality person now," Grohman said. "You can do anything if you put your mind to it. When a quality person fills any position, equality will come."

DRUG WAR:

The final day the students helocasted into Victory Pond.

Before getting into the helicopter, teams of two combined their rucksacks, weapons and other equipment and wrapped it up, making a poncho raft.

"It takes about 15 minutes to prepare," Davila said. "But it all stays dry and the rucksacks keep it floating."

Three teams at a time with their poncho rafts were loaded onto a helicopter and flown over the pond.

"When they reach a determined point, they get a signal to throw out their equipment then each team of two jumps out," Davila said.

Students normally jump from a height of 10 feet when helocasting, while the helicopter flies at about 10 knots Davila said.

After hitting the water, the teams swam to their equipment, towed it to shore and set up a defensive position.

"They all did fairly well for the first time," Davila said. "The only thing they were weak on was coming out of the helicopter. They're supposed to keep their legs crossed, with one hand holding their life preserver and the other hand protecting their face."

Davila said that helocasting is often used in mountainous areas or those with heavy vegetation, where traveling by land is difficult but a body of water is present.

He added that drug labs will always be set up where there is a convienent source of water, and that alone makes this a valuable method of infiltration.

Davila commended the students' efforts at learning the techniques taught during the four days. The cadets work well as a team once they get over their fears, he said, while the OE-5 are more experienced and able to conquer their fears more easily.

"It was a good experience for everybody," Davila said.

FEDERAL EMPLOYEES' WEEK

Free seminars provide info about personal, professional development

By Richard Brill
Special to The Bayonet©

Three hundred Fort Benning workers attended free training seminars last week as part of the installation's 19th annual Federal Employees' Week.

Sponsored by the Fort Benning Federal Women's Program Committee, the seminars provided information for the personal and professional development for civilian and military personnel.

"We were delighted with the number and variety of participants," said Winnie Torain, Federal Women's Program manager. "Participation was not limited to federal employees only, but included nonappropriated and appropriated fund employees and military personnel as well. That kind of participation helps keep our workforce interactive."

Ellis Dandy, director of the Equal Employment Opportunity Office, said the training was uniquely valuable because the participants received information they might not normally get that will help them become better individuals and employees.

"We're concerned that many employees don't ever get any training that is not directly job-related but that can still help them perform their jobs better," he said. "Subjects dealing with personal development, such as how to handle stress and the importance of exercise, are very important in creating a dynamic workforce."

Torain said the three most popular workshops included, "So You Want to be Selected: Effective Interviewing Techniques," "Dealing With Grouches, Grumps and Grudges" and "Relax or Collapse: the Quiet Side of Fitness."

Other workshops explored the effects of downsizing, physically challenged employees, the Army Career and Alumni Program, career development planning, women's health issues, changes in the federal equal opportunity program and developing the power to accomplish personal and professional goals.

Torain said this kind of training is a great personnel motivator.

"We would like to offer training like this not just annually, but more frequently, perhaps every quarter if we can," she added.

Dandy urged post employees to take advantage of such opportunities for training whenever they come up.

"Money is getting tight and with the downsizing, the opportunities for training will probably decrease in the future," he said. "While training that is directly job-related will continue, it may become harder for individuals to receive training about other subjects that can make them more efficient, informed and healthy and thus better employees."

"We were delighted with the turnout and are ready to go on planning other programs and workshops," Torain said. "We hope to see everyone there."

'People have the right to live how they want to'

By Richard Brill
Special to The Bayonet©

Fort Benning employees found out how to deal with the grumps, grouches and grudges in their lives in a seminar Aug. 26 in Infantry Hall.

The seminar was one of 10 presented by the Fort Benning Federal Women's Program Committee for the 19th annual Federal Employees' Week.

Seminar facilitator Yvonne Wilbanks, civilian program coordinator with the Alcohol Drug Abuse Prevention and Control Program, said the best way to deal with people with negative attitudes, whether in the workplace or anywhere else, is to deal with yourself first.

"It is easier to change yourself than it is to change others," Wilbanks said. "We must recognize the power we have is over ourselves. We have no real power over others."

According to Wilbanks, there are a minimum of two options when dealing with difficult people or situations. "You can go crazy or you can go peacefully," she said.

Accept that life is difficult and will always be a series of challenges, she said. Don't pay attention to negative people and simply avoid confrontation by dealing with them politely.

> "It is easier to change yourself than it is to change others."
> — Yvonne Wilbanks
> Civilian program coordinator, ADAPCP

Wilbanks told the story of a woman who was called by her mother on the telephone and vigorously cussed out.

"Thank you for calling, mother," the woman said, "It's always so nice to hear your voice."

Wilbanks also said a good attitude is contagious.

"Are you permeating the office with happiness?" she asked. "Your attitude can affect others in the office."

Finally, accept that people have the right to live how they want to, she said. It is very difficult to get others to change.

"They might not even think they have a problem," she said. "Concentrate on your own life first."

ACAP, Onsite join forces to provide training, jobs

Army Career and Alumni Program

Onsite Environmental Staffing continues to provide employment opportunities for soldiers getting out of the military through Fort Benning's Army Career and Alumni Program.

Onsite employs exiting soldiers, veterans and family members in the field of environmental remediation.

Onsite currently employs more than 100 new workers per week nationwide.

A soldier can train at Fort Benning and then work in the area of his or her choice. Starting wages at Onsite range from $9 to $15 per hour depending on a soldier's skills. A benefit package is also offered, which includes a 401K plan and dental and health and insurance.

Soldiers can use skills learned in the Army to earn a higher starting wage. Heavy equipment operators are in demand at Onsite, as are field technicians, soil and water samplers and people with commercial driver's licenses.

Onsite offers two levels of training. The first is a 40-hour course, which is required by the Occupational, Safety and Health Administration for people who work around hazardous waste. The second is the 120-hour course, which is more extensive training and education.

The 40-hour course is $295 and the 120-hour course is $1,450.

"Onsite came to Fort Benning to find hard-working, reliable people who want to work," said Todd Sims, Onsite representative for Fort Benning. "I have been placing people in jobs as fast as we can train them. Our entire company wants to use the people trained here."

For more information about employment and training, call Onsite direct at 323-4182 or (800) 323-4183.

Vets meet at 'Big Red One' reunion

By Alberto Rendon
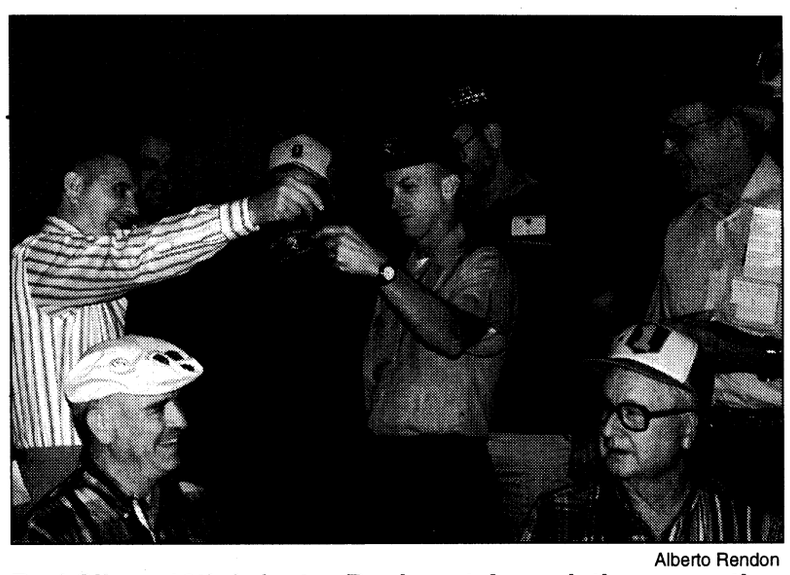
1st Battalion, 18th Infantry Regiment

Members of 18th Infantry Regiment recently attended the 76th annual reunion of the 1st Infantry Division at Fort Riley, Kan.

Some of the other regiments participating were the 2nd, 16th, 18th, 26th, 28th and the 5th Field Artillery.

The 1st Inf. Div. Association conducts the reunion at a different location every year. The regiments that attended are now assigned to units throughout the United States, although at one time they were all part of the "Big Red One" during both world wars and in Vietnam.

Veterans from World War II, Vietnam and Desert Storm were among those who attended the reunion.



Activities included a tour of Kansas City, live-fire demonstrations by Fort Riley soldiers, a "Big Red One" retreat ceremony, equipment display and horse cavalry demonstration.

The festivities concluded with a tour of Fort Leavenworth, Kan., and a banquet and dance.

The executive director of the 18th Inf. Regt. Association, Bud Sikes, and Command Sgt Maj. Kenneth R. Sponsler, 1st Battalion, 18th Infantry Regiment, along with other soldiers from the same unit, attended the reunion.

"Overall, the reunion was very successful in comparison to the reunions I've participated in before," Sikes said.

The 18th Inf. Regt. also hosted a reunion May 26 through 28.

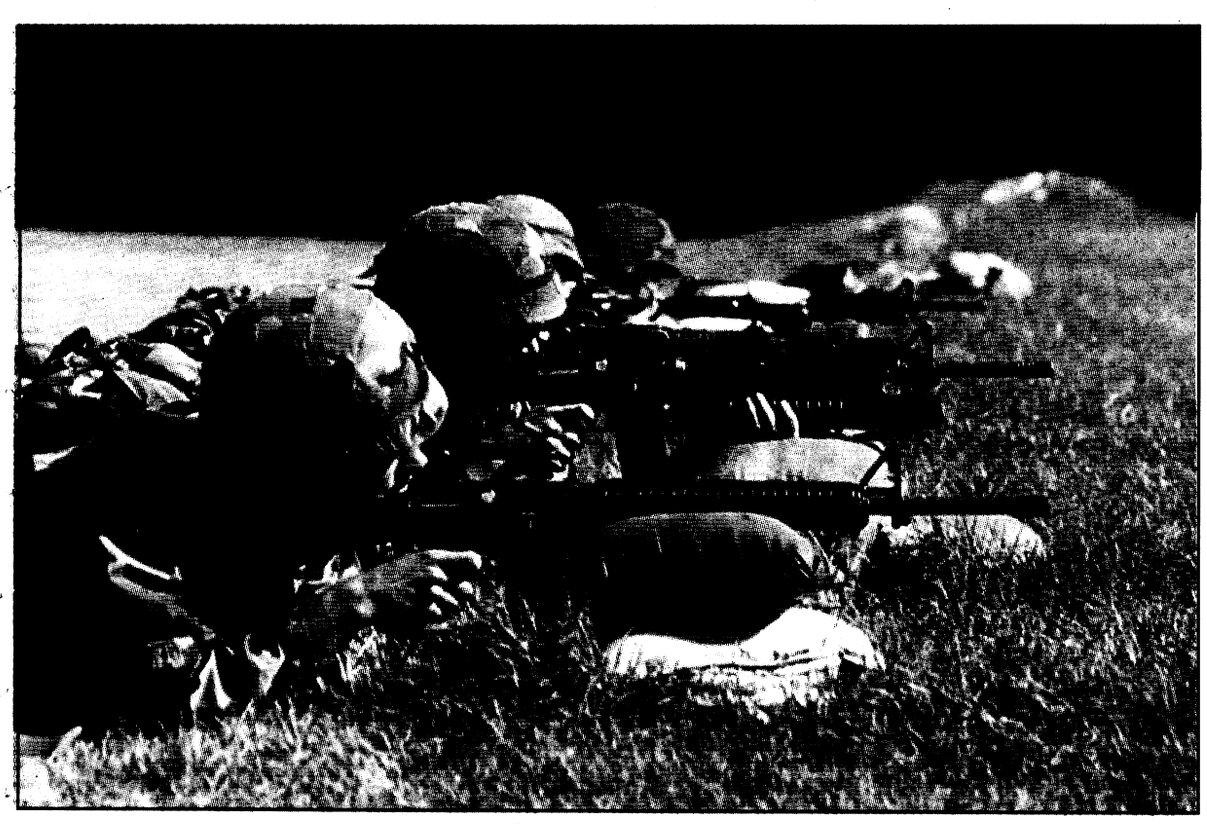
Ranger Rendezvous '94 is over. With the completion of the sporting and weapons competitions Aug. 26, the rangers of 3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment, capped the week-long event with "Banner Day" at Peden Field.

The day was set aside for the rangers to enjoy the company of friends and family while engaging in some rigorous physical and mental competition, ranging from a 10k run to the tug of war finale.



"It was an excellent day for the soldiers to participate in some competition with everyone being on the same level," said Battalion Sgt. Maj. Kenneth L. Holmes. "We normally have Banner Day during our organization day in October but commitments would not allow it, so we settled on ranger rendezvous. We had a great time from the commander on down."

The rendezvous usually consist of all three battalions, but this year only the 3rd Battalion was in attendance.

The Banner Day plaque went to Company A, who amassed the most points from all the competitions combined, Company B finished in second, Company C in third and Headquarters and Headquarters Company completed the standings in fourth.

Evans and his combined team of Gallivan, Abram and Dietrick Cassaway finished in second with a time of 47.72. In all, Evans finished in the top spot in six of seven events in which he participated.

In other men's running events, Gomez outkicked Raymond at the finish line to win the 800-meter final in 2:05.59; Raymond finished with a time of 2:06.4. Raymond flipped positions with Gomez in the 3,000-meter run, taking first with a time of 9:20.2 while Gomez came in with a time of 11:07.2.

Dentists graduate from program

By Shelby Carr
Bayonet Staff Writer

Eight dental internists graduated from the Advanced Education Program in General Dentistry in a ceremony at the National Infantry Museum Aug. 26 at 10 a.m.

The graduates are:

- Capt. Grace Aileru
- Capt. Greg Cook
- Capt. David Fallah
- Capt. Michelle Icasiano
- Capt. Rodney Jones
- Capt. Todd Nielsen
- Capt. Nikki Smith
- Capt. Donna Garrett Wells.

During the last year of dental school, the graduates applied for and were accepted into the program. Not all new dentists in the Army enter the optional program.

The internists work six days a week, usually 12 to 14 hours a day, for the year of the program.

The residency program, based at Love Dental Clinic, is the initial training program the dentists attend in the Army, and includes training in several different dental specialties.

Every graduate showed proficiency to their mentor in general dentistry and each specialty. The specialties included:

- Endodontics — root canal therapy
- Orthodontics — correcting irregularities of the teeth, usually with braces
- Periodontics — bone disease and gum disease therapy
- Pediatric dentistry — children's' dentistry
- Oral surgery
- Prosthodontics — replacing teeth with bridges or dentures.

Retired Col. Terry D. Rees spoke at the ceremony about his experiences as an Army doctor. He served as the commander of the U.S. Army Dental Activities at Fort Huachuca, Ariz.; Fort Bliss, Texas and Fort Hood, Texas.

Rees worked at the dental clinic at Harmony Church from 1957 to 1959.

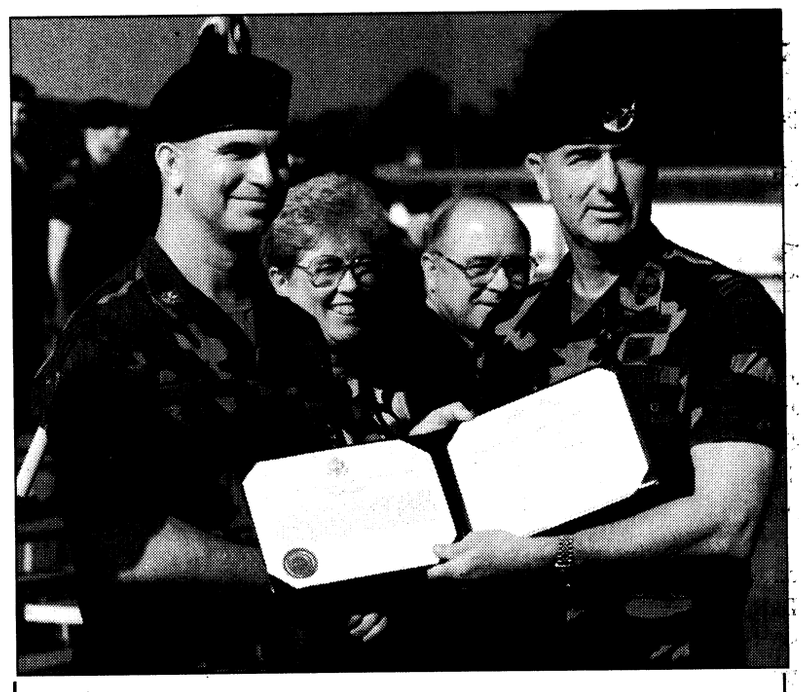
"We had a 12-chair room," Rees said. "It was a lot like a barbershop atmosphere."

He said dentists at that time worked without stopping, except lunch and two 15-minute breaks.

"We (the dentists) bonded together as a group. The better you work together, the more you can accomplish," he said.

Rees told the internists that the changes and evolutions in dentistry are constant.

"Internal curiosity is a good thing," Rees said. You "must always seek to expand your knowledge."



Rees recounted the good times and the bad times he had as a young dentist in the Army.

"It ain't over, and the fat lady can't sing until the paperwork is done," Rees said. "(Once in charge) I allowed patients to request visits with the same dentist, and the results began improving. Taking care of patients is the most important thing we do."

Tankers storm Hastings Range

By Ruth J. Spaller
Bayonet staff writer

Resounding cracks ripped through the air, but the sky was blue and clear. The only clouds in sight came belching from the long, thin barrels of the big guns of sand-colored tanks; and the rumbling wasn't thunder, but the grinding of the big tracks churning along the dirt roads.

"The (firepower of a) tank is probably the closest thing to a bolt of lightning that's manmade," said Cpl. Jeffery G. Kosten, the gunner of an M-1A1 Abrams tank crew with Company A, 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor Regiment, as he and fellow tankers from Companies A and B created their own storm on Hastings Range Aug. 24.

For Kosten, the real joy of being a tanker comes from "shooting the big bullets," he said, and he got to do plenty of that during the live-fire exercise known as "Table Eight."

Table Eight is the highest crew-level exercise in a sequence of training events called gunnery tables, which are tactical scenarios designed to develop and evaluate the skill of the individual members, the crew as a unit and the platoon.

During Table Eight, the tank crews face 10 multiple-target engagements, both day and night, offensive and defensive. They can score up to 100 points per engagement, with a total 1,000 points possible.

The key to doing well is teamwork, said 2nd Lt. Thomas A. Rippert, Kosten's tank commander. They scored 987, the highest in the battalion, and Rippert credited his crew with their success.

"Everyone in the tank is an essential member," he said. "Everyone has a different responsibility. The driver has to go the right speed so the reticle (cross hair) won't move, the loader has to quickly load new rounds and be able to fix malfunctions and the gunner has to know how to manipulate the weapons system."

And he, as the tank commander, has to give the proper fire commands, indicating the enemy (tanks or troops, for example), and type of ammunition to use.

For the driver, Pfc. Jose A. Maldonado, the main focus of his job is providing the smoothest ride possible.

"Driving a tank is not like a regular car where you can go in and drive it," Maldonado said. "You have to know what the tank can and cannot do, what the track will take," he said.

When the crew is getting ready to engage a target, Maldonado said, the main thing he's thinking about is providing a "steady platform" for the gunner or commander to shoot from.

"I try to give smooth braking, not slam on the brakes and have him jerk the trigger when he fires the main cannon," he said.

For the loader, Pfc. Alfredo A. Torres, the main focus is "making sure the main gun is loaded and there's a round there for the gunner to shoot," he said.

Though training rounds weigh 60 to 70 pounds (live ones about 100 pounds), and there is barely enough space in the turrent to take a round from the "honeycomb" storage area and turn with it to load it into the firing tube of the main gun, Torres said the hardest part of his job is the timing.

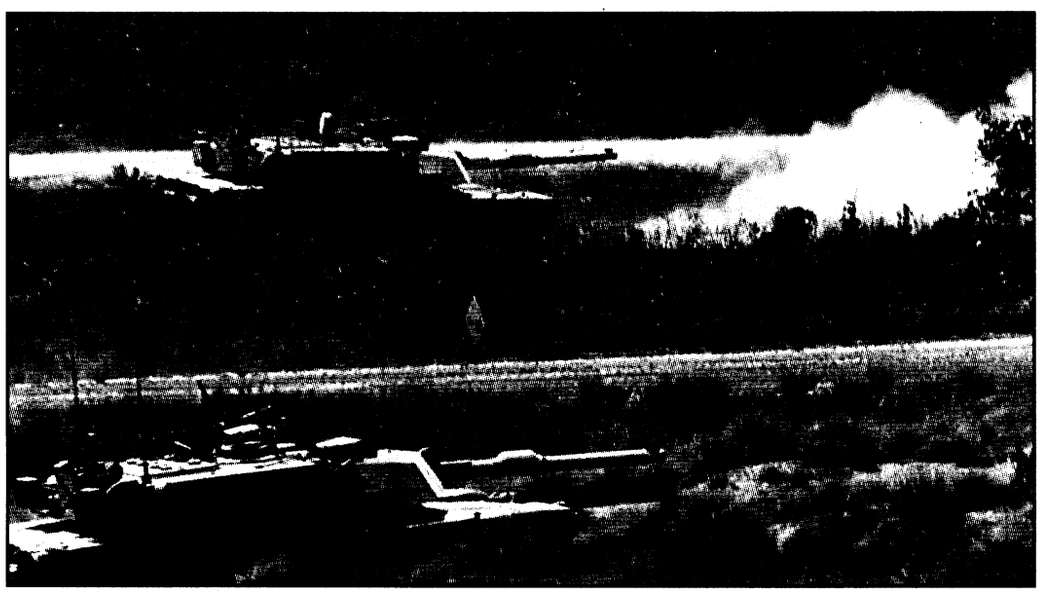
But, he said, "Once you're downrange, everything's pumping; you just do it all real fast like you're Superman or something."

When it comes to the gunner, if the other crew members do their job right, then his is easy, Kosten said.

"It's all part of a system," he said. "If the loader's always got the round there and the driver stays on the road or on a good platform ... the gunner's got it made."

For everything to come together right, "everyone's got to be on the same sheet of music," Kosten said. "It's like a motor, almost."

And when the motor runs right, the targets go down — a constant reminder to the crew of the power they hold at their fingertips.



All of the crew members seem to have a healthy respect for their "manmade lightning bolt."

"I always remember one thing," Maldonado said. "These beasts right here, they have no heart for nobody. If you're not careful, it will kill you,"

"This is the best tank in the world," said Kosten, who has seen the Abrams "in action" as a driver in Saudi Arabia during the Gulf War. "It's unreal what this tank will do."

Tank commander Sgt. Bryan E. Young monitors the radio.

Abrams tanks were known as "creeping death" during Desert Storm because they sit so low and are hard to see against the sand, one tanker said.

First two female drills 'lead the way' at ITB

By Shelby Carr
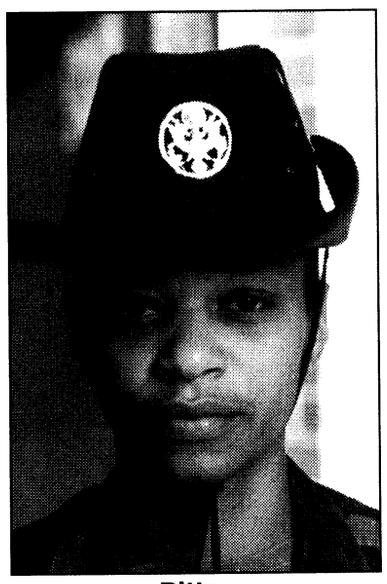
Bayonet staff writer

In 1968, the first woman earned the right to wear the drill sergeant hat, but it was not until 1994 that the first two female drill sergeants were assigned to Fort Benning.

Sgt. 1st Class Angela M. Pitts and Staff Sgt. Regina Santiago are the first women assigned to Infantry Training Brigade wearing the drill sergeant hat.

"A job should not be limited by their (females') gender if they have been trained to do their job," Santiago said.



Assigned to the Drill Sergeant School as drill sergeant leaders, the two women instruct the drill sergeant candidates. They are responsible for presenting modules of instruction, teaching classes and making on-the-spot corrections to the drill sergeant candidates.

"The main mission is to train soldiers," Pitts said. "Treat them like human beings and be fair. Lead by example and set the example."

Pitts initially earned her drill sergeant badge as a specialist at the Fort Jackson Drill Sergeant School.

Both Pitts and Santiago decided to become drill sergeants for the same reason.

"My drill sergeant in basic training (inspired me)," Santiago said. "I was so impressed with my drill sergeant. I have not been so, impressed since then. It's something I wanted to do."

Pitts

"My platoon sergeant in basic, who was female, had a lot of impact on me," Pitts said. "I said, 'one day I will become one.' I wanted to train soldiers and I care about soldiers."

Pitts taught both male and female cycles and for 1 1/2 years was the only drill sergeant in her platoon.

"I've trained a lot of good soldiers who have been recognized by the units they went to," Pitts said.

With only 15 years in the Army, Pitts has been selected for promotion to master sergeant.

Her professionalism seems evident in her crisp, decisive actions and sharp, spit-polished bearing, while her organizational skills are apparent as she searchs through her files, all regulations and details at her fingertips.

Pitts said she volunteered because she likes being a drill sergeant and it will enhance her career, but she faces a few problems.

"I am challenged by running," Pitts said. "I have no problem instructing soldiers. I've always been around 11 series soldiers. I treat them as soldiers."

Santiago was a drill sergeant at Fort Jackson from 1987 to 1989 and a Primary Leadership Development Course instructor for two years at the Henry Caro Noncommissioned Officer Academy before returning to drill sergeant status at the school.

The fact that she seeks out instructor positions indicates the job satisfaction and enjoyment she gets from teaching.

"I enjoy teaching and giving demonstrations," Santiago said. "The candidates are very inquisitive about females and the differences in training. I try to give them the dos and don'ts and how to not get in trouble with female soldiers."

After her time as a drill sergeant, Santiago said she wants to return to her primary military occupational specialty of ammunition specialist and retire from the Army after 20 years of service.

"I want to get my kids out of high school before I retire," she said.

Pitts said she wants to finish college, take over a first sergeant's job and prepare for the Sergeants Major Academy.

Shelby Carr

Staff Sgt. Regina Santiago, one of the first two female drill sergeants assigned to the Infantry Training Brigade, instructs drill sergeant candidates.

"I see myself as a sergeant major," Pitts said.

As the first female drill sergeant instructing infantrymen drill sergeants, she said she would not want to be one.

"With all the strenuous and rigorous things they (infantrymen) do, I would not want to be one," Pitts said.

Santiago agrees women should not be in the combat arms, but pointed out women have been in combat, especially in forward support roles.

Santiago joined the Army in 1981 in the Reserves. In 1983 she joined the active dutv forces in an ammunition military occupational specialty.

"It's something I always wanted to do," Santiago said. "I wanted to see if I could handle it."

She has served in Germany, at Fort Stewart, Ga., and at Fort Benning. She was a section sergeant with the 608th Ordnance Company before teaching at NCOA.

Pitts enlisted in the Army in 1979 as a nuclear, biological and chemical warfare specialist.

"I joined the Army for the education benefits," Pitts said. "Also, for the challenge. I knew it would be different than the civilian world. And (I also wanted) to travel and meet different people."

50 years ago this week ...

• Russia notified Bulgaria that a state of war existed between the two countries because of Bulgaria's failure to sever relations with Germany. The crossing of the Bulgarian border by Soviet troops triggered a general uprising by the pro-Soviet People's Liberation Army. Assassins killed more than 100 pro-Nazi officials, and the prime minister resigned.

• U.S. bombers made their heaviest raid on the Philippines, hitting the Davao airfields and the principal port of Mindanao Island. Allied planes sank or severely damaged nearly 40 Japanese barges and cargo ships in the attacks.

• Dieppe, Brussels, Sedan and Antwerp were liberated by Allied forces as they raced toward Germany.

• In Poland, Russian troops closed in on the fortress city of Lomzha just south of the East Prussian Border. Elsewhere on the Eastern Front, the Finnish-Soviet ceasefire became effective along a 500-mile front Sept. 4.

• In New York, Frank Parker and Pauline Betz won the men's and women's national tennis titles, and the film "Arsenic and Old Lace" opened, starring Cary Grant.

• At Fort Benning, a children's club called the Big Four held a fundraiser for the Red Cross. The children, ranging in age from 8 to 10 years old, operated a lemonade stand, raising $2.20.

Rangers lead the way!

By Marc G. Turchin
Bayonet staff writer

The annual Ranger Rendezvous, a week set aside for former rangers and present rangers to come together, came to a close Aug. 26 with the hanging of the new Ranger Hall of Fame inductees' portraits at Ranger Training Brigade Headquarters.

The highlight of the week was the dedication of the new Ranger Memorial on Ranger Field.

The memorial dedication was preceded by a march of ranger veterans — Darby's Rangers, Merrill's Marauders, rangers who fought in Korea and Vietnam and today's rangers.

Gen. Wayne A. Downing, commander in chief of the U.S. Special Operations Command, MacDill Air Force Base, Fla., joined Maj. Gen. Jerry A. White, Fort Benning's commanding general, in presiding over the ceremony.

"This memorial is (a) lasting tribute to everything (a) ranger stands for," Downing said to the more than 1,000 people gathered for the ceremony.

Immediately following the dedication, 14 rangers, former rangers and two honorary inductees, were inducted into the Ranger Hall of Fame. The new inductees are: Sgt. Maj. Fred E. Davis, Staff Sgt. Gary L. Lemonds, Capt. Gregory E. Gardner, Gen. James J. Lindsay, Lt. Col. William E. Gore, 1st Sgt. Leonard G. Lomell, Lt. Col. William C. Grissom, Brig. Gen. Francis Marion, 1st Lt. Mayo S. Heath, Staff Sgt. Andrew B. Pung, Staff Sgt. Jack E. Kuhn, Maj. James C. Queen, Sgt. Peter C. Lemon, Sgt. 1st Class Randall D. Shughart, Gen. Lucian K. Truscott Jr. and U.S. Sen. Strom Thurmond.

"I see them (the inductees) as bridgers — spanning the past, present and future of the American ranger," said Col. Galen B. Jackman, commander of RTB.

"(To be inducted into the hall of fame is a) great praise and honor for the men I served with and for those who lost their lives in Korea," said Queen, new ranger hall of famer.

Earlier in the week, the 75th Ranger Regiment demonstrated a mass tactical air jump at Lawson Army Airfield.

More than 250 rangers dropped from Air Force C-130s during the demonstration.

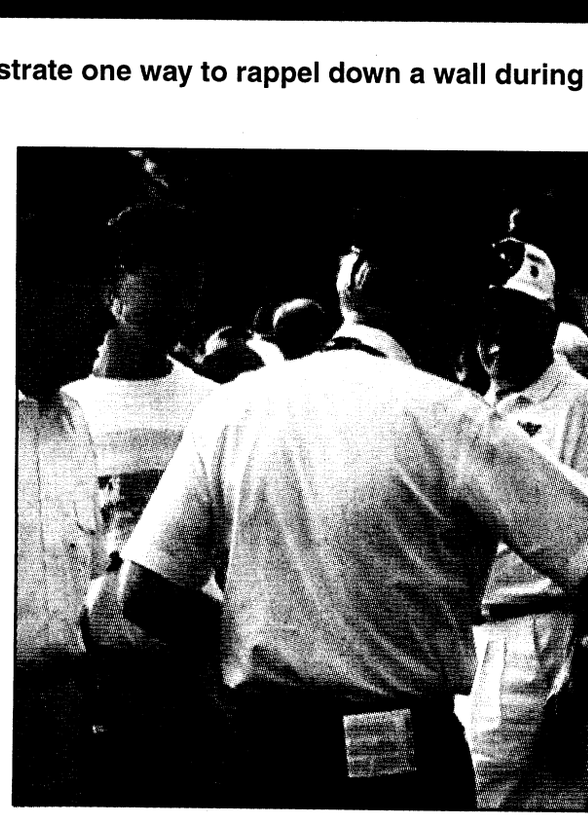
In another ceremony, a ranger officer received the Silver Star Medal for gallantry in action.

Maj. James C. Nixon, operations officer for Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 75th Ranger Regiment, was awarded the medal for his efforts in Somalia.

Other activities included rangers demonstrating what they learn in Ranger School during a Rangers-In-Action demonstration at Hurley Hill.

From hand-to-hand combat to handling explosives, rangers had the crowd "ooohhing" and "aaahhhing" after every demonstration.

Ranger Banner Day, during which rangers compete in different events against each other, took place Aug. 26 on Peden Field.



Some of the events were American Ball, a competition combining soccer, football and rugby; a 10k run; push-ups; sit-ups; chin-ups and tug of war. On Farnsworth Range, a shooting competition took place involving M-16s, 240-6s and CAR-15s.

Gen. Frederick M. Franks Jr., commander of Training and Doctrine Command, was on post for the last ceremony of the week. All 16 portraits were hung next to each other. Inductees took turns reading their biographies and getting their pictures taken.

New inductee Queen said he missed the comradeship of being in the Army. "You seldom form those kind of ties in civilian life," he said.

1/11th visits Chickamauga Civil War battlefield

By Charles Howard
1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment

The 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment, recently conducted a staff ride to the Chickamauga Civil War battlefield in Georgia.

The two-day battlefield visit was preceded by individual and classroom preparation and was hosted by 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment's International Student Training Detachment.

Participants included Col. Walter Wojdakowski, 11th Infantry Regiment commander, the officers of the battalion, and selected members of Wojdakowski's staff.

Army officers have been conducting formal staff rides since 1906 to further professional education and unit esprit de corps.

Col. Florian K. Rothbrust, commander of 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment, incorporated staff rides into his battalion's Officer Professional Development Program shortly after assuming command in September 1993.

The battalion's staff ride to Andersonville National Historic Site and Prisoner of War Museum added a "hands-on" component to the unit's existing program of classroom studies of historical and professional issues. The recent staff ride to Chickamauga continued the battalion's officer development.

Preliminary study for the Chickamauga trip began in June, with officers' individual study of selected readings on the events leading up to the battle, the combat at Chickamauga, and the battle's aftermath.

In July, Paul Roberts of the U.S. Army Infantry School's Military History Division conduced classes on Civil War technology and tactics, leadership styles of the major commanders in the battle, and the events on the battlefield.

The staff ride started with a multimedia show at the Chickamauga Battlefield Visitor's Center, followed by presentations by Roberts at a series of key locations on the battlefield. The presentations and succeeding discussions included not only the battlefield action, but also the positive and negative effects of leaders' conduct during the battle.

In addition to providing instruction in history and leadership, the staff ride afforded the officers an opportunity to get better acquainted with the commander and staff of the 11th Infantry Regiment.

"These personal contacts served to strengthen ties and cohesion between the two staffs, enhance the goal of team building, and reinforce unit esprit," according to Rothbrust.

The staff ride culminated with a study of Maj. Gen. George H. Thomas' stand with the surviving elements of the shattered Union Army of Tennessee on Snodgrass Hill. Thomas' resistance to numerous Confederate assaults on the hill earned him and Fort Benning's 19th Infantry Regiment the nickname the "Rock of Chickamauga."

At the site where Thomas directed the battle, Rothbrust presented Roberts with a Certificate of Appreciation for his "thorough, informative presentations."

"It is crucial for all officers to understand the human element of command," Rothbrust said. "The staff ride helps us to see not only the particular circumstances of this battle, but the unchanging effects of good and bad leadership on all battles."

Rothbrust said the 1st Battalion plans to conduct future staff rides to other battlefields as a part of its continuing Officer Professional Development Program.

Read the label — and set a better table

Food and Drug Administration

"A rose by any other name would still smell as sweet" — but would a food package label with any changes be easier to read and interpret?

The U.S. has supported food safety and food labeling since the turn of the century. Nutritional labeling, however, was strictly voluntary until the late 1970s. At that time nutritional labeling was required for products containing added vitamins or minerals, or products making a health or nutrition claim. During the 1980s, focus shifted to new areas of health and nutrition with respect to certain chronic health problems, such as obesity and heart disease. Guidelines for food labeling have since been hotly debated, as consumers became more proactive in demanding more easily read and understood food package labels.

All food labels for packaged products sold in the U.S. must be in compliance with the Nutrition Labeling and Education Act of 1993. Meat and poultry products must be in compliance by July 6. For the manufacturer, this means approximately 670,000 new labels will be redesigned. For the consumer, this means more specific nutritional information to facilitate more health-conscious food purchasing.

The new title "Nutrition Facts" indicates to consumers that the new government guidelines have been met. Serving sizes are listed at the top of the label. The new regulations require similar serving sizes for similar products to facilitate comparison and ensure "truth in advertising."

The Percent Daily Value column is a yardstick, used to measure how far a food goes in meeting certain nutrient needs. The percentages calculated in the Daily Value column are based on a 2,000 calorie a day diet. If the consumer is eating less than 2,000 calories per day, his or her total nutrient need will not equal 100 percent; if the consumer eats more than 2,000 calories per day, his or her total nutrient need will exceed 100 percent. The calorie amounts were selected as easy benchmarks for consumers to use when interpreting their own nutrition needs. Some sedentary women may need to consume 1,600 to 1,800 calories a day to maintain or gradually lose weight. Active men or teenagers may need 2,500 or more calories a day just to maintain their body weight.

With the new nutrition labels, the government has chosen to focus on the vitamins and minerals of greatest health concern: vitamins A and C, calcium and iron. Manufacturers have the option to list more nutrients if those nutrients are present in the food. Nutrient content claims, such as "high in vitamin A" or "sugar-free" can only be made if the food meets strict definitions set by the government. Nutrition content claims are not usually included in the nutrition label, but are typically found in a prominent place on the main display panel of the package. These attention-catching claims have historically often been misleading and sometimes even false and were the main reason for new specific regulatory language. For example, to be labeled "calorie-free" the product can contain no more than 5 calories per serving; "low-calorie," less than 40 calories per serving; "Lite," 1/3 fewer calories or 50 percent less fat; "low fat," 3 grams or less per serving.

Health claims often appear on a food label to describe the relationship between a nutrient or food component and a disease or health-related condition. Health claims cannot state that the product (or any ingredients) will prevent a disease or health-related condition. Government guidelines state that foods using health claims must not contain any nutrient or food substance in an amount that increases the risk of disease or health condition.

So what's new about that label? With it, you can buy with health confidence. Claims like "low cholesterol" or "low calorie" can be used only if a food meets new legal standards set by the government. Read the label to help choose foods that make up a healthful diet. Thanks to the new nutrition label, it has never been easier to choose wisely — to read the label and set a better table.

Speed, fatigue will kill

Army News Service

WASHINGTON — Fatigue and excessive speed are the predominant killers of soldiers on the nation's highways, replacing alcohol use and not wearing seat belts as the leading causes of injury and death in privately owned vehicles, according to Army safety officials.

Officials are quick to point out, though, that drinking and driving still causes about one in five fatalities. The good news is that privately owned vehicle accidents have seen a downward trend over the past five years, attributable to less driving under the influence and increased seat belt use.

For the past eight years, a greater emphasis has been placed on using seat belts while driving POVs and wearing protective equipment while riding motorcycles.

Safety officials profile the "average casualty" as a male, 18 to 23 years old, holding the rank of either private first class or specialist. Most fatalities happen sometime between 10 p.m. on Fridays and 7:30 a.m. on Mondays — and most likely on a city road or interstate highway.

Bearing that in mind, the Army will continue to push implementation of a program to reduce all motor vehicle accidents, focusing on the use of individual and command risk assessment.

Officials offer the following tips for reducing accidents:

- Further increase command involvement
- Apply the risk assessment process by supervisors
- Accept personal responsibility by using seat belts at all times, by not drinking and driving and by being well-rested before taking trips.

The Army is currently developing a consolidated motor vehicle safety program, which addresses the individual, the supervisor, training and training standards, officials said.

Beware:

Credit cards can be 'blocked'

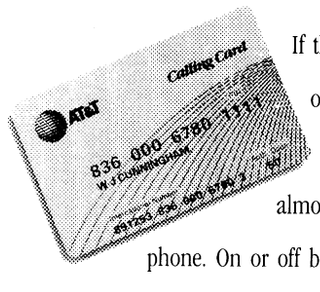
Better Business Bureau

Have you ever presented your credit or charge card to a store clerk and been surprised to be told you were over your credit limit?

According to the Federal Trade Commission, if this happened soon after you stayed at a hotel or motel or rented a car, the problem may have been caused by credit card "blocking."

When you use a credit or charge card to check into a hotel or motel or to rent a car, the clerk usually contacts your card issuer electronically with the estimated cost. If the card issuer approves the transaction, your available line of credit is reduced by this amount. This is called a "block" or an "authorization."



For instance, if you check into a $100-a-night hotel for five nights, at least $500 would likely be blocked on that card. In addition, hotel and car rental companies sometimes add anticipated "incidental" costs for such things as food, beverages or gasoline.

If you pay your bill with the same credit card you used at the beginning of the transaction, the final actual charge probably will replace the block within a day or two. However, if you use a different credit card, cash or check to pay for these services, the company that issued the credit card you originally presented might keep the block on for as long as 15 days — long after you've checked out of the hotel or returned the car.

To avoid the problems credit card blocking may cause, ask clerks how much is being blocked on your credit line and how that amount was determined. Consider paying for all hotel or rental car expenses with the same credit card you used at the beginning of the transaction. If you must use a different card, ask the clerk to remove the block.

For more information on other credit issues, the Council of Better Business Bureaus has published the following booklets: "Consumer Credit" and "Credit Reporting." For a single copy of either booklet, send $2 and a self-addressed, business-size envelope to CBBB, Dept. 023, Washington, D.C. 20042-0023.

You can use it from any phone, it gets you home in seconds, and best of all, it weighs almost nothing.

TAKE A BITE OUT OF CRIME®

Military Police Activity

The following entries were extracted from the Fort Benning Military Police blotter Aug. 17 to 23. Such entries may be incomplete and are not a judgement of the guilt or innocence of any person.

This week's hot topic is bicycle security. School is open once again and many children will be riding bicycles to and from school.

Teach your children to ride safely and with the proper safety equipment. Keep in mind that bicycles are popular and if left unsecured are likely to be stolen. Provide your children with bicycle locks and impress upon them the importance of properly securing their bicycles when leaving them unattended, especially at school.

The second hot topic for this week is the 15 mph school speed zones. There will be an increased number of children walking along the roadways in the morning and afternoons, and in efforts to protect these children, a 15 mph speed zone is in effect in the immediate areas surrounding the schools.

The school zones are enforced Monday through Friday mornings from 7:30 to 9 a.m. and in the afternoons Monday and Wednesday through Friday from 2 to 3:45 p.m., and Tuesday afternoons from 12:50 to 2:30 p.m. At selected intersections, crossing guards are placed to assist children to and from school.

Blotter incidents included:

• A staff sergeant was charged with assault after striking a family member with a telephone three times to the back of the head without causing any injuries. He was apprehended and transported to the Military Police station, processed and released to his unit.

Other activities included eight cases of driving under the influence of alcohol, 27 traffic accidents, 23 cases of larceny and three cases of shoplifting reported at the exchange facilities.

Remember to help "Make Our Post the Best — Give Crime Arrest." Report any activity that seems wrong or out of place to the Military Police Station at 545-5223 or 545-5224 or the Crime in Progress line 545-5222.

Researchers work to reduce crashes

Army News Service

DETROIT — The same Army technology that conceals military vehicles from the enemy may one day be used to help drivers of passenger cars and trucks see each other better.

Researchers from General Motors' Crash Avoidance Department have begun a cooperative effort with the Army Material Command's Tank-Automotive Research Development and Engineering Center to do just that. The multi-year GM-TARDEC project is part of a broader cooperative research and development agreement between the two organizations.

About 14 percent of vehicle crashes occur simply because drivers "don't see" the other vehicle, officials said.

About 14 percent of vehicle crashes occur simply because drivers "don't see" the other vehicle

"The major benefit of the project could be a significant reduction in the $2 billion annual cost of vehicle crashes ... and in the associated pain and suffering," said Richard Deering, a manager from the GM Crash Avoidance Department.

Deering said "there is potential for helping the driver become more skillful ... by using the Army's knowledge of camouflage 'in reverse' to help GM design vehicles that are easier to recognize."

According to Grant Gerhart, TARDEC research group chief, "The same design factors that make military vehicles less likely to be recognized ... may provide us with ways to enhance (the ability to be seen) and help drivers see each other earlier and over greater distances."

One of the primary tools researches will use is the TARDEC visual model of the human vision system, which isolates and identifies those aspects of a vehicle's design that make it visible and those that tend to make it difficult to recognize.

Don't believe myths — get 'straight' facts on Drinking

Infantry Branch Safety Office

The following are some myths and facts about alcohol.

Myth: Coffee, fresh air or a cold shower will help a person become sober.

Fact: None of these remedies will decrease the effect of alcohol. The body must be allowed time (one hour per average drink) to eliminate the alcohol.

Myth: Like other food and drink, alcohol must be digested.

Fact: Alcohol is absorbed directly into the bloodstream, where it is carried to all parts of the body. Twenty percent of the alcohol consumed goes immediately into the bloodstream. Since the brain has a higher water content and a rich blood supply, it is quickly affected by alcohol.

Myth: You cannot tell a driver is drunk unless he or she is weaving or swerving.

Fact: These clues can help you spot the driver who is under the influence of alcohol: unusually wide turns, drifting, inconsistent signals, straddling the center line and excessive or very slow speed. Watch out for drivers who are following too closely, responding slowly to traffic signals or accelerating or slowing down rapidly.

Four sobering facts about alcohol

1. An alcohol-related fatality occurs every 22 minutes.

2. Between 7 p.m. and 3 a.m. on weekends in some parts of the country, 10 percent of all drivers are drunk.

3. Between midnight and 4 a.m. on any night of the week, about 80 percent of fatally injured drivers are drunk.

4. Drinking drivers involved in fatal crashes used safety belts at a substantially lower rate than sober drivers.

ask the judge

Staff Judge Advocate's Office

Q: I've heard of off-post businesses being placed off limits to soldiers due to unfair and illegal practices.

How can I go about filing a complaint and having a business placed off limits? Where can I find out the names of the businesses that have already been placed off limits?

A: The Army Regulation that governs placing businesses off-limits is Army Regulation 190-24, "Armed Forces Disciplinary Control Boards and Off-Installation Liaison and Operations." The regulation describes the composition and duties of the Armed Forces Disciplinary Control Board and sets up a method for designating off-limits areas to soldiers.

According to the regulation, the AFDCB will meet to receive reports and take appropriate action on any of the following: disorders and lack of discipline; prostitution; sexually transmitted diseases; liquor violations; racial or other discriminatory practices; alcohol and drug abuse; drug use paraphernalia; criminal or illegal activities; illicit gambling; areas susceptible to terrorist activities; unfair commercial or consumer practices; and other undesirable conditions that may adversely affect members of the military or their families.

When there is a situation in which a soldier has been cheated or treated in a discriminatory fashion by an off-post business, the soldier should report the wrongdoing by filing a complaint with the Provost Marshal's Office. The Provost Marshal is the chairman of the AFDCB, and can initiate an investigation of a business. The soldier may also call the Legal Assistance Division of the Office of the Staff Judge Advocate and request the assistance of an attorney. The Legal Assistance Office, when in receipt of three or more complaints about a business, will forward such complaints to the Provost Marshal for action.

If a business does not respond to an investigation, or is found to be conducting business that is detrimental to the good discipline, health or welfare of soldiers or their families, that organization can be placed off limits.

Once placed off limits, businesses are put on a list that should be present in every company area and should be described to every soldier during inprocessing. All soldiers need to make themselves aware of such businesses, because entering them can subject the soldier to potential action under the Uniform Code of MIlitary Justice.

Any problems that you may have with local businesses that you consider unfair or unreasonable can also be discussed with an attorney at the Legal Assistance Division of the Office of the Staff Judge Advocate. Appointments can be made by calling 545-3281.

Labor Day

What role does hard work play in our lives?

By William D. Smith
USAIC Chaplains' Office

Labor Day is a day set aside to recognize our work.

I suppose labor could be defined as the things we do to achieve the things we want or need.

Hard work can enable us to feel good about ourselves and thus enjoy a sense of accomplishment and significance.

Perhaps for this reason, some become "workaholics," seeking to gain some sense of purpose and personal worth.

For the workaholics, labor becomes the sole means of validating their own significance. Maybe this is a result of a lack of forgiveness in their lives.

Always aware of personal flaws, they fail to accept themselves as they are and fear others will not accept them either.

By failing to forgive themselves for their mistakes, their guilt destroys their sense of personal value or worth.

Hard work can enable us to feel good about ourselves and thus enjoy a sense of accomplishment and significance

— But —

Guilt and forgiveness cannot be effectively dealt with by working harder

Consequently, accomplishments through work become an anesthesia, deadening the pain of low self-esteem.

The question in this dilemma is: "How can people deal with forgiveness and guilt and avoid the resultant self-esteem issues?" This question is relevant not only for the workaholic, but for all of us.

reflections

A noted pastor once said that failing to receive forgiveness and failing to give forgiveness are the two main reasons people have emotional problems.

Think of it. Often we carry around guilt about something we should or shouldn't have done.

Rather than dealing with this guilt, we feel bad about ourselves and may even find it hard to love ourselves.

This in turn can make it hard to love others or to be forgiving of others.

I am reminded of an old drunken derelict I met in Ohio a number of years ago. He had lost his job, his home and his family.

He looked at his failure and believed that people were right in despising him, for he despised himself.

On a cold December evening, he wandered into a little mission in a southern Ohio town.

He was looking for warmth, food and some much-needed rest. He was told in that little mission that God loved him.

In fact, God loved him so much that he sent his son to die for him.

That hungry, tired, guilt-laden man said, "Do you mean Jesus died for me?" It was a concept he could not understand.

We, at times, are like that old derelict. We are so conscious of our faults we think that not even God could love us.

Let's give him a chance and give ourselves a break. Guilt and forgiveness cannot be effectively dealt with by working harder.

We must recognize the ultimate forgiveness comes only from God and that he is willing to exercise that forgiveness when we turn to him and trust in his provision.

Hebrew new year begins Sept. 6

By Geoffrey and Melinda Alleyne
USAIC Chaplains' Office

reflections

If someone were to ask what next year will be, how would you respond? You would probably say, "It is going to be 1995." However, a Jewish person about to celebrate Rosh Hashanah, the Hebrew New Year, would most likely respond, "5755."

The Hebrew calendar dates back to the Biblical account of creation. Rosh Hashanah is the holiday set aside to celebrate the new year of the Hebrew calendar. This year the Hebrew new year falls on Sept. 6. Service will begin Monday evening at Regimental Chapel.

Although Rosh Hashanah is a two-day festival celebrating the new year, it is also the beginning of a time to strive for the atonement of the misdeeds of the past year. Rosh Hashanah begins in the Synagogue with the blowing of the Shofar. The Shofar alerts the people of the need to "awaken their slumbering souls."

There are 10 days between Rosh Hashanah (The Day of Remembering) and Yom Kippur (The Day of Atonement). The days between these two festivals are used to prepare for Yom Kippur.

During this time, individuals are to carefully examine their lives in an attempt to see where they have failed: failed others, failed themselves and failed God. This examination is meant to lead them to remorse and to forgiveness from others. Jews then set aside a day for prayer to ask God for his forgiveness and renewal for their lives in the next year.

Aside from the traditions of the festival conducted in the synagogue, there are customs unique to this time. Before each meal on Rosh Hashanah, apples are dipped into honey as a symbol of the desire for a sweet year. The phrase, "May it be your will to renew us for a year that is good and sweet," is recited.

It is also a time to make resolutions for the new year, to eat a fruit not eaten in a while, to drink wine and perhaps receive a new article of clothing. The main goal of these 10 days, known as the high holy days, is to bring about a permanent turning away from the sins of their lives.

We can all learn from these Jewish holidays. It is certainly good to turn away from our sin and to ask others, as well as God, for forgiveness during a regularly scheduled time each year. We will also improve our lives with time well spent in reflection.

Directors to renew religious education programs

By Jacqueline Feagin
USAIC Chaplains' Office

This month, Fort Benning celebrates religious education. Throughout the month, the religious education directors plan to renew most of the religious education programs offered on post.

Although the Protestant community on post offers a Sunday School program year round, "September is a time to renew and revitalize the program," said Bill Putman, the Protestant Religious Education director.

The theme for Sunday School this year is "Courage through Hope." Classes will meet every Sunday at 9:30 a.m. in Buildings 2522 and 2517.

"This courage through hope will help us during the turbulence of our daily lives," Putman said .

Protestant Women of the Chapel began a new year and a new Bible study will begin on Thursday. The youth programs will also revitalize this month.

The Catholics will begin Rite of Christian Initiation Doctrine Wednesday at 7 p.m. in Building 2522 and Confraternity of Christian Doctrine Sept. 11 at 9:10 in Dexter School.

Everyone is welcome to attend or volunteer in these chapel-sponsored programs. For more information, call Putman at 545-4715 or Phil Reilly, the Catholic Religious Education Director, at 545-5508.

'NFL Sunday' is same game, new attitude

By Jim Gaffney
Tribune Media Services

Dec. 17, 1993, Fox Broadcasting outbid CBS for the right to televise NFL football for the next four years.

Cost: $1.58 billion.

SPOTLIGHT

OK, guys ... time to justify the expense.

As the tradition-laden NFL begins its 75th season, Fox — that nonconformist, often-ridiculed upstart of a company — takes its first step into the world of big-time TV sports. Having assembled a talented crew on both sides of the camera, Fox is confident that viewers who live for Sunday afternoons in the fall won't be disappointed with what they are about to see, starting this weekend.

In many ways, things won't change. The top announcing teams at Fox are Pat Summerall/John Madden and Dick Stockton/Matt Millen. Nothing new there. Running the show are guys like Executive Producer Ed Goren (from CBS) and technical experts hired away from ABC, CBS, ESPN and NBC. They know the NFL. Coverage may even improve, with more cameras and tape machines assigned to games than ever before. Fox's motto for the season is "Same Game, New Attitude," and after all is said and done, the game will look pretty much the same, indeed.

For something really new, you'll have to tune in early. Debuting this week and set to run prior to games (noon Eastern Standard Time) throughout the season is "Fox NFL Sunday." Co-hosts Terry Bradshaw and James Brown are joined by Howie Long, Jimmy Johnson and Lonnie Lardner for a 60-minute program that joins NBC's "NFL Live," ESPN's "NFL GameDay" and CNN's "NFL Preview" in the ranks of pro-football pregame shows.

Terry Bradshaw

What: "Fox NFL Sunday"
When: Sundays on FOX

With so many choices, why try Fox? Those involved offer two reasons: stars and studio.

First, the stars. With the ever-boisterous Bradshaw at the center of the show, viewers can be sure that things will never get dull. "Sometimes, there's a misconception that because we talk about sports, we can't have fun," says the four-time Super Bowl-winning quarterback. "As long as you cover the issues and present the game as best you can, there's no reason not to have some fun.

"People ask me why I smile all the time," he adds. "How can you get up and go to a football game, or go into a studio where you have the opportunity to watch and cover pro football, and not be happy? When you love the game as much as I do, it's easy to smile."

"Terry is Terry 24 hours a day," says Long, the former L.A. Raiders defensive end. "He is just what you see. It's not an act for the cameras."

Countering Bradshaw and making sure "Fox NFL Sunday" doesn't turn into a weekly laugh-a-thon is the steady and serious Brown, another former CBS employee whose main job will be to bring a "newsy" feel to the show.

TRADOC COE

team to arrive on post Sunday, explore facilities, services

By Richard Brill
Special to The Bayonet©

Fort Benning personnel will have the chance to celebrate excellence when the Training and Doctrine Command Communities of Excellence team arrives Sunday to validate services and facilities.

The four-day visit will allow the four-member team the chance to take an in-depth look at how Fort Benning, the winner of the 1994 Commander in Chief's Award for best Army installation in the world, takes care of its soldiers, their family members and civilians.

Team members include Team Chief Col. Rich Pomager, the provost marshal for TRADOC, Fort Monroe, Va., Barbara Harmon, TRADOC's chief of Program and Budget Operations, John Blake, logistic management specialist for the Directorate of Logistics, TRADOC and Charlie French, the senior staffing specialist for TRADOC.

"This is not an inspection," said Sarah McLaney, post COE coordinator. "This is a celebration of excellence — a chance for the world champs to show the team how we did it. It's a chance for our great employees to show off the quality of their work and the quality of Fort Benning's programs."

Each team member will validate specific functional areas described in the nomination packet sent to TRADOC headquarters in June. Pomager will validate strategic planning and public safety, a new category this year. French will validate the post's performance in public affairs, military personnel services, the Army Career and Alumni Program and civilian personnel services, while Harmon will cover chaplain, staff judge advocate, morale welfare and recreation, resource management and housing services. Blake will validate logistics, engineering, medical and dental and Army and Air Force Exchange Service.

"There are six areas in particular that Fort Benning excels in and we want to especially emphasize these to the team," McLaney said. "These are customer service, Total Army Quality, facilities improvement, single soldier initiatives, self-help projects and installation master action plan accomplishments."

In addition to validating the 15 functional areas listed in the packet, team members will present employees 200 hats of excellence.

Fort Benning is one of nine TRADOC posts named as finalists in the Communities of Excellence competition in July. The selection was based on a nomination packet sent to TRADOC in June. The team is visiting the finalists to determine how each post places.

Competing in the extra large category are Fort Benning and Fort Sill, Okla. In the large category are Fort Leonard Wood, Mo., and Fort Jackson, S.C. Fort McClellan, Ala., Fort Leavenworth, Kan., and Fort Lee, Va., are competing in the medium category, while Fort Monroe, Va., and Carlisle Barracks, Pa., are competing in the small category.

"Any way you look at it we are already winners," she said. "We have already been selected as a finalist and our standing in this phase of the competition in no way affects our eligibility to enter the Department of the Army phase, which we already qualify for.

"We believe we are in first place in TRADOC and are well on our way to winning the CINC award for the second time in a row," McLaney continued. "No other post has won the CINC award twice, but that's our goal and we believe that if any installation can do it, it's Fort Benning. Hooah!"

Post tests water supply

By Karen S. Morarie
Bayonet staff writer

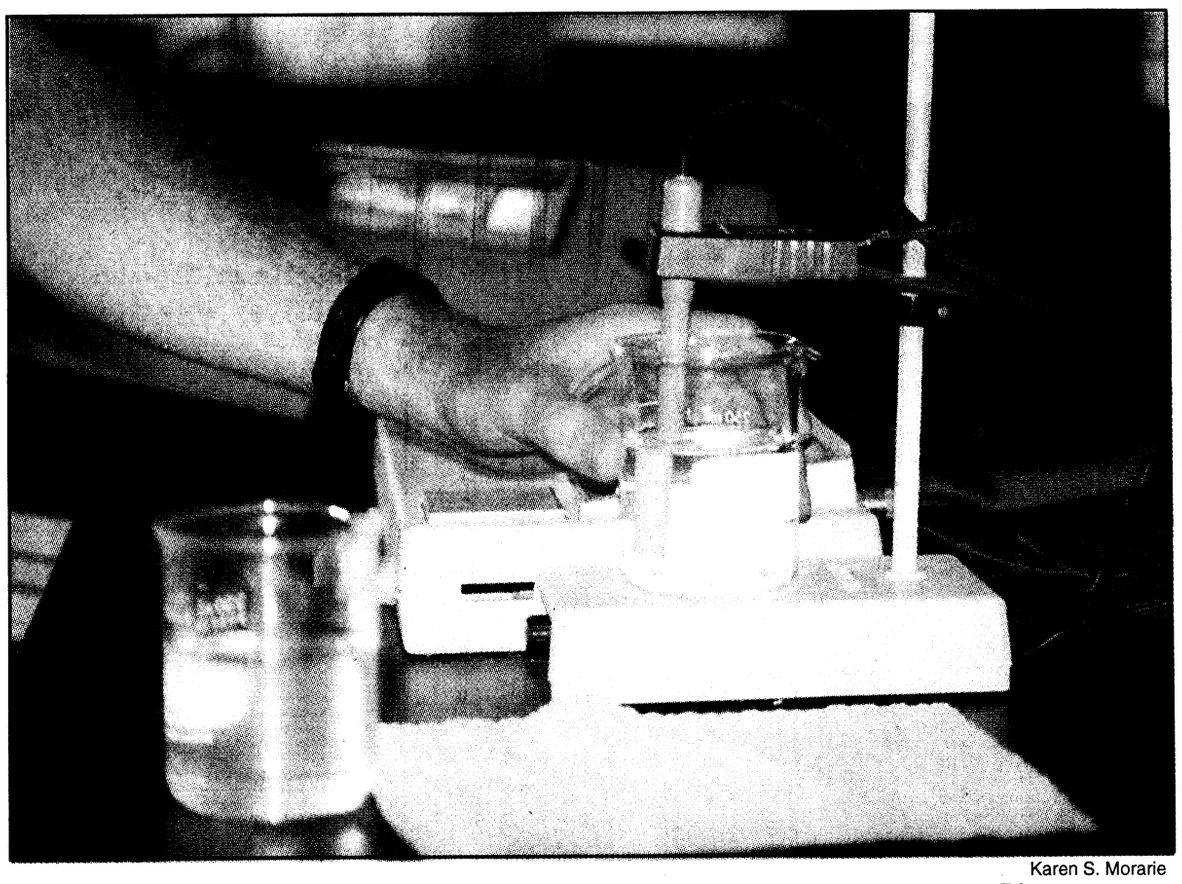
Despite complaints from three Fort Benning residents that the water in their homes smelled "like kerosene," routine testing has found no problems with the water either at the sites or at the water treatment plant.

According to Lt. Col. Daniel Davidson, chief of Preventive Medicine at Martin Army Community Hospital, complaints received over the holiday weekend and through Tuesday were investigated.

"We are doing the most comprehensive evaluation of the water possible," he said. Routine testing for bacteria, chemicals and other impurities have so far all been negative, he said.

Environmental science officers from the Center for Health Promotion and Preventive Medicine at Fort McPherson, Ga., are conducting further tests on the water, with results expected today, Davidson said.



"They have the capabilities to do specialized testing that we are not able to do," he said, including testing for hydrocarbons, which could account for the odor.

Davidson said there is no reason for residents to take special precautions before using the water, which is subjected to continual testing regardless of unusual odors.

"We are concerned because the public is concerned," he said, "but we have no indications that suggest any problems with the water."

Roy Bethel of the Directorate of Public Works said water is tested from random locations on post daily, and it is monitored by the state and the Environmental Protection Agency as well.

Also, workers at the water treatment plant take routine tests of the water there several times daily, according to Jack Hodges, plant foreman.

James Shields performs routine tests at Fort Benning's Water Treatment Plant.

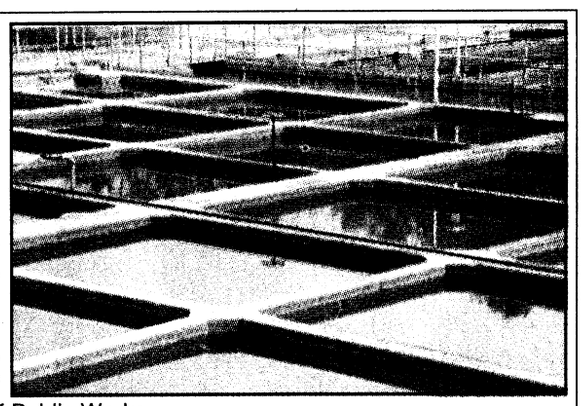
Some tests are done on an hourly basis, some every two hours, he said.

Hodges said all customer complaints are checked out immediately.

"We had only four complaints through the month of August," he said, "and all tests were negative. Everything was tested, and everything was clear."



Hodges said one cause of unusual odors in home tap water may be the use of chlorine dioxide in the pretreatment process.

An extensive study funded by the American Water Works Association found that "chlorine-like or kerosene-like odors" had been reported at various sites throughout the country, although no unusual levels of chemicals or hydrocarbons could be found in the water.

The study, reported in the AWWA Journal, concluded that the odors were the result of reactions between the chlorine dioxide in the water and organic substances in household air, notably those released from fabric treatments used in new carpeting or furniture. The odors posed no hazards, although they did sometimes recur.

The water at Fort Benning, Hodges said, consistently tests at better quality than that of the surrounding communities, according to results from the Department of Natural Resources,

What To Do

Water in housing may display unusual characteristics, depending on the age of the pipes, time quarters have been dormant, or other factors, according to Roy Bethel of the Directorate of Public Works.

- Water that has been sitting in pipes, particularly older pipes, for any length of time may be brownish in color.
- Water in quarters that have been unused may also smell strongly of chlorine.
- Running the water for several minutes should clear the pipes.

Concerns may be reported to the Work Order Section, 545-2135.

USAIC to change commanders

Former deputy to become chief of infantry

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Command of Fort Benning and the U.S. Army Infantry Center will change hands with a full review and ceremony on York Field in front of Infantry Hall at 10 a.m. Thursday.

Commanding General Maj. Gen. Jerry A. White, who announced his retirement in August, will be replaced by Maj. Gen. John W. Hendrix.

Hendrix, a Georgia Tech graduate, served at Fort Benning most recently under White as the assistant commandant of the U.S. Army Infantry School and deputy commanding general.

Hendrix has commanded both a battalion and brigade of the 8th Infantry Division and served as an operations officer of the Central Army Group, Allied Command Europe in Brussels, Belgium.

Hendrix and his wife, Cheri, have two sons, Mark and Michael.

As commanding general of Fort Benning, White led the post to be recognized as the best post in the Training and Doctrine Command for two consecutive years and the best in the Army in 1994.

His retirement becomes effective Oct. 30. White said his future plans "are not complete at this time."

Asst. superintendent joins education team

Latest member of Fort Benning's school family here to assist with curriculum

By Jerrie Macintire
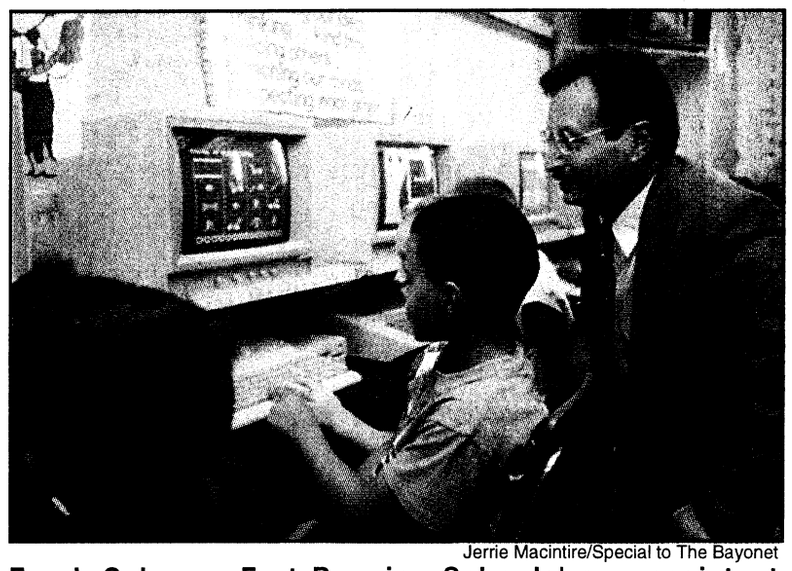
Special to The Bayonet©

September traditionally signals new beginnings for the school community. From the shy kindergartner peeking around the classroom door to the confident senior ready to enter the world of adults, the beginning of school offers a fresh start.

Frank Calvano says he knows the feeling well. Like the eager student primed to contribute in class, he said he looks forward to joining the team of Fort Benning educators as assistant superintendent for curriculum.



Calvano brings with him a wealth of experiences in education as teacher to principal in Department of Defense schools from the white sands of Guantanamo Bay, Cuba, to the picturesque villages of Italy.

Throughout the years in Europe Calvano and his wife, Maria, and daughter, Natalie, embraced the changes and challenges offered by each region as they sampled the different aspects of the cultures such as language, food, architecture and living style.

The family has lived both on and off post and speaks Spanish, French, Italian and some German, Calvano said.

The Calvanos stepped off an airplane late one evening in July to a welcome reception of Fort Benning educators led by Superintendent Dell Karr. "Our transition has been smooth and enjoyable thanks to these people," he said.

Calvano, who brings with him an educational philosophy tempered by 23 years in DoD schools, called the quality of the programs at Fort Benning "superior."

Jerrie Macintire/Special to The Bayonet

Frank Calvano, Fort Benning Schools' new assistant superintendent of curriculum, observes a child participating in the accelerated reading program at McBride School.

The programs in place mirror Calvano's own philosophy on the importance of reading.

"If one can read well, one can learn other subject areas," he said. "Language development and reading are keys to a productive life. (Also,) the use of technology certainly enhances the learning quality for the students."

Calvano has toured a variety of other programs in the schools, including an events driven curriculum, which integrates technology, language arts, science and math.

Calvano said he believes these kinds of hands-on learning experiences, which have long been part of the Fort Benning system, "enhance the learning curve."

As he continues touring the programs in the schools this fall, Calvano plans to know them all well so he can begin contributing as the newest member of Fort Benning's school family, he said.

DENTAC provides quality care

commanders' column

Col. Richard A. Nurnberg: Commander of the U.S. Army Dental Activity at Fort Benning.

The U.S. Army Dental Activity is dedicated to providing the highest quality of dental support for the Fort Benning community while maintaining the best quality of life for all assigned personnel.

As a major command on the best installation in the Army, the DENTAC exemplifies the principles of train the force, home to the force and power projection platform.

The headquarters is located in the W. D. Love Dental Clinic, which also houses our advanced educational program in general dentistry.

This one-year residency program provides eight of the best new Dental Corps accessions with postgraduate specialty training that prepares them for assignments requiring independence of judgment, such as single dentist clinics in Korea, and assignments with divisions.

Love Dental Clinic also provides care for our retired population within allowable constraints.

At Salomon Dental Clinic on Sand Hill, the DENTAC is running a test program for the Training and Doctrine Command and Dental Command to try to show that if we can get all one station unit training trainees into class one or two condition before they graduate, they will not need to be lost to their gaining units for dental reasons during their first year of permanent assignment.

This is requiring a major devotion of resources, but we think it will be worthwhile.

Salomon Dental Clinic also runs the Dental Section at the Reception Station and supports the Infantry Training Brigade, the 29th Infantry Regiment and the Ranger Training Brigade.

We send a dental team to Dahlonega, Ga., every month to provide dental care for 5th Ranger Training Battalion, and we monitor care for 6th Ranger Training Battalion at Eglin Air Force Base, Fla.

Bernheim Dental Clinic on Main Post is responsible for the Infantry Center staff assigned to the 11th Infantry Regiment and the School of the Americas. It is also responsible for the dental readiness of the 36th Engineer Group and the 75th Ranger Regiment and the operation of the Dental Inprocessing Section at Soldiers' Plaza.

Dental Clinic No. 3 on Kelley Hill is devoted mainly to the 3rd Brigade, 24th Infantry Division, but it also supports the 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment.

Our hospital Dental Clinic consists of the oral and maxillofacial surgery service and is also involved in the Residency Training Program.

Family members of active-duty soldiers are strongly encouraged to be enrolled in the Delta Dental Program because we are very limited in the amount of care we can provide to them. They are assigned to the same clinic as the sponsor for emergency and space-available care.

However, because the DENTAC is staffed based only on active-duty population, any care we provide to others that exceeds 10 percent of our workload may result in staff reduction based upon Department of Defense policy.

Our community health dental hygienist is actively involved in the new spouse orientations, Children's Dental Health Month programs, preschool dental screening and the Retirees' Open House.

Everyone at the DENTAC is involved in bettering their environment. Each clinic has an active U-Do-It program ranging from wallpapering and painting projects to landscaping and window treatments.

Because we have recently assumed operational control of the dental clinic commands at Fort Rucker, Ala., and Fort McClellan, Ala., and because of our three-pronged mission, we have adopted the sobriquet and logo of "TRIDENT."

In summary, the DENTAC derives its strengths from our caring, concerned staff, our community programs, our training programs, and our adherence to the principles of Total Army Quality and Communities of Excellence.

A day in the life of a drill sergeant

By Timothy Monroe
Infantry Training Brigade

commentary

Drring! Drring!" My day, as a drill sergeant, begins with this sound at 4 o'clock every morning.

I try to stop the startling noise before it wakes my sleeping wife. It never fails though, her eyes open hoping to catch a fleeting glimpse of me before I disappear until nightfall.

Life always feels heavy to me at this time of the morning while I ponder the importance of transforming civilians into soldiers.

I kiss my wife before leaving and peek in on my children, always asleep when I leave, and usually back asleep when I return at night.

As I drive to work, I look around and wonder why I am the only person on the road.

I arrive at work just in time for first call. After awakening the trainees, I must determine which ones will be training that day, who needs to pull kitchen duty, and who must go on sick call.

Fifteen minutes later at the physical training formation, I give my report to the first sergeant and then march my platoon to the PT field.

While conducting physical training or doing anything, I constantly give 100 percent to push both myself and the trainees.

During physical training, a thing omnipresent to the Army, change is already happening. It always seems to find me when I believe the day's schedule is on track, and have prepared my soldiers for the day's training.

Change leaps out though, saying, "Do this drill sergeant! Do that! I'm hurt, drill sergeant! I forgot to tell you, but Private Jones needs to be here and there, before this and that!"

While handling these new challenges, the normal, everyday soldier problems, and training the required 200 skills needed by infantrymen, time has been moving fast and the day is almost over.

Drill sergeant duty is a career gut check for testing a noncommissioned officer's commitment to the Army. All daily tasks and a myriad of problems must be met and solved with sound, common-sense decisions

If I am not at a training area or range, I may manage a few minutes to call my family to speak with them during daylight hours.

Drill Sergeant School was hard, but nothing can prepare an experienced noncommissioned officer for the hours and challenges in a drill sergeant's day.

If I had no children before becoming a drill sergeant, I now have between 30 to 55 young boys. Many of them bring some type of personal problem to basic training. Their problems may come from being a child abuse victim, from sick relatives or from pregnant girlfriends.

Besides these problems, the soldiers experience difficulties meeting the physical requirements and mastering the required skills.

The drill sergeant must be the first person to identify all problems and the first to take actions to solve the problems. Doing so requires infinite patience and long hours or counseling and coaching trainees.

Although Drill Sergeant School prepared me for many things that happen during a day's work, it did not prepare me for the stresses on family life. At the end of the day, I must still find time for my family.

A good drill sergeant will never take the problems of work home with him; home is not the place to be a drill sergeant. I will often stop, call home, and remove my super drill sergeant suit before arriving home.

By doing so, when I hear the sound of "Honey, do this! Daddy, do that!" it will not sound like "Drill sergeant, do this! Do that!"

Being a drill sergeant is like living the life of two people in one body at the same time every day for two years.

I learn more new things in a single day about people and how to work with them to solve problems than other soldiers will learn during several years.

Drill sergeant duty is a career gut check for testing a noncommissioned officer's commitment to the Army. All daily tasks and a myriad of problems must be met and solved with sound, common-sense decisions.

While meeting such challenges, the overwhelming responsibility for ensuring 50 civilians learn the skills to survive in combat hangs over my and other drill sergeants' heads from sunrise to sunset.

CG says thanks, goodbye

As Linda and I prepare to leave Fort Benning and the Army, we are overcome by a flood of emotion and memories of the great soldiers and civilians we have known during 34 years of service.

All were special, but none were more special than the ones we met here at Fort Benning, the "Home of the Infantry."

Fort Benning is truly the best Army installation in the world. It is so because of the people who live and work here.

Our work force is truly dedicated to taking care of our soldiers and their families, to ensure they are trained to standard and that their quality of life is unequaled on any other military installation.

Again, thank you for three wonderful years and for being such special people.

Hooah!

Commanding general

ACOE prize money being spent across Fort Benning

Funds used to help community

USAIC Public Affairs Office

This year's commander in chief's $1.5 million Army Community of Excellence prize money has been allocated and soldiers and family members are the big winners.

About 65 percent of the money will go toward constructing, purchasing or renovating recreational and fitness items.

Phase II of the Riverwalk project will be paid from this year's winnings.

This means that once this project is completed, soldiers and family members will be able to walk, jog or bike from the National Infantry Museum all the way to the 14th Street Bridge in uptown Columbus, a distance of eight miles.

By the same token, this will open up the post to visits by people in Columbus and Phenix City.

The walk will also make the river more accessible to boaters and fishers.

The Harmony Church swimming pool will be repaired, new gym equipment will be purchased for Briant Wells Field House, rubberized flooring for the gyms will be installed and the racquetball courts at Sand Hill will be renovated.

Barbecue grills and picnic tables will be installed in the 29th Infantry Regiment's area and the Infantry Training Brigade's area on Sand Hill.

Another major purchase of playground equipment for the family housing areas will be made. This, combined with last year's purchases, will mean more playgrounds will be equipped with the most modern and safest equipment.

Residents living along Custer Road will also get an improvement when a privacy fence is constructed along the back of their homes.

Patrons of both the Main Post Library, Sayers Library and the Infantry Hall library, Donovan Technical Library, will benefit with funds allocated for books and equipment.

Self-help equipment for family members to use to maintain their yards is being purchased. This equipment includes weedeaters and leaf vacuums.

The Better Opportunity for Single Soldiers programs will get another boost with funds being allocated for more recycling containers, computer equipment and office supplies.

Life for patients at Martin Army Community Hospital will become more pleasant when individual television sets and telephones are purchased with funds allocated for that purpose.

The dental clinics will also get an upgraded phone system.

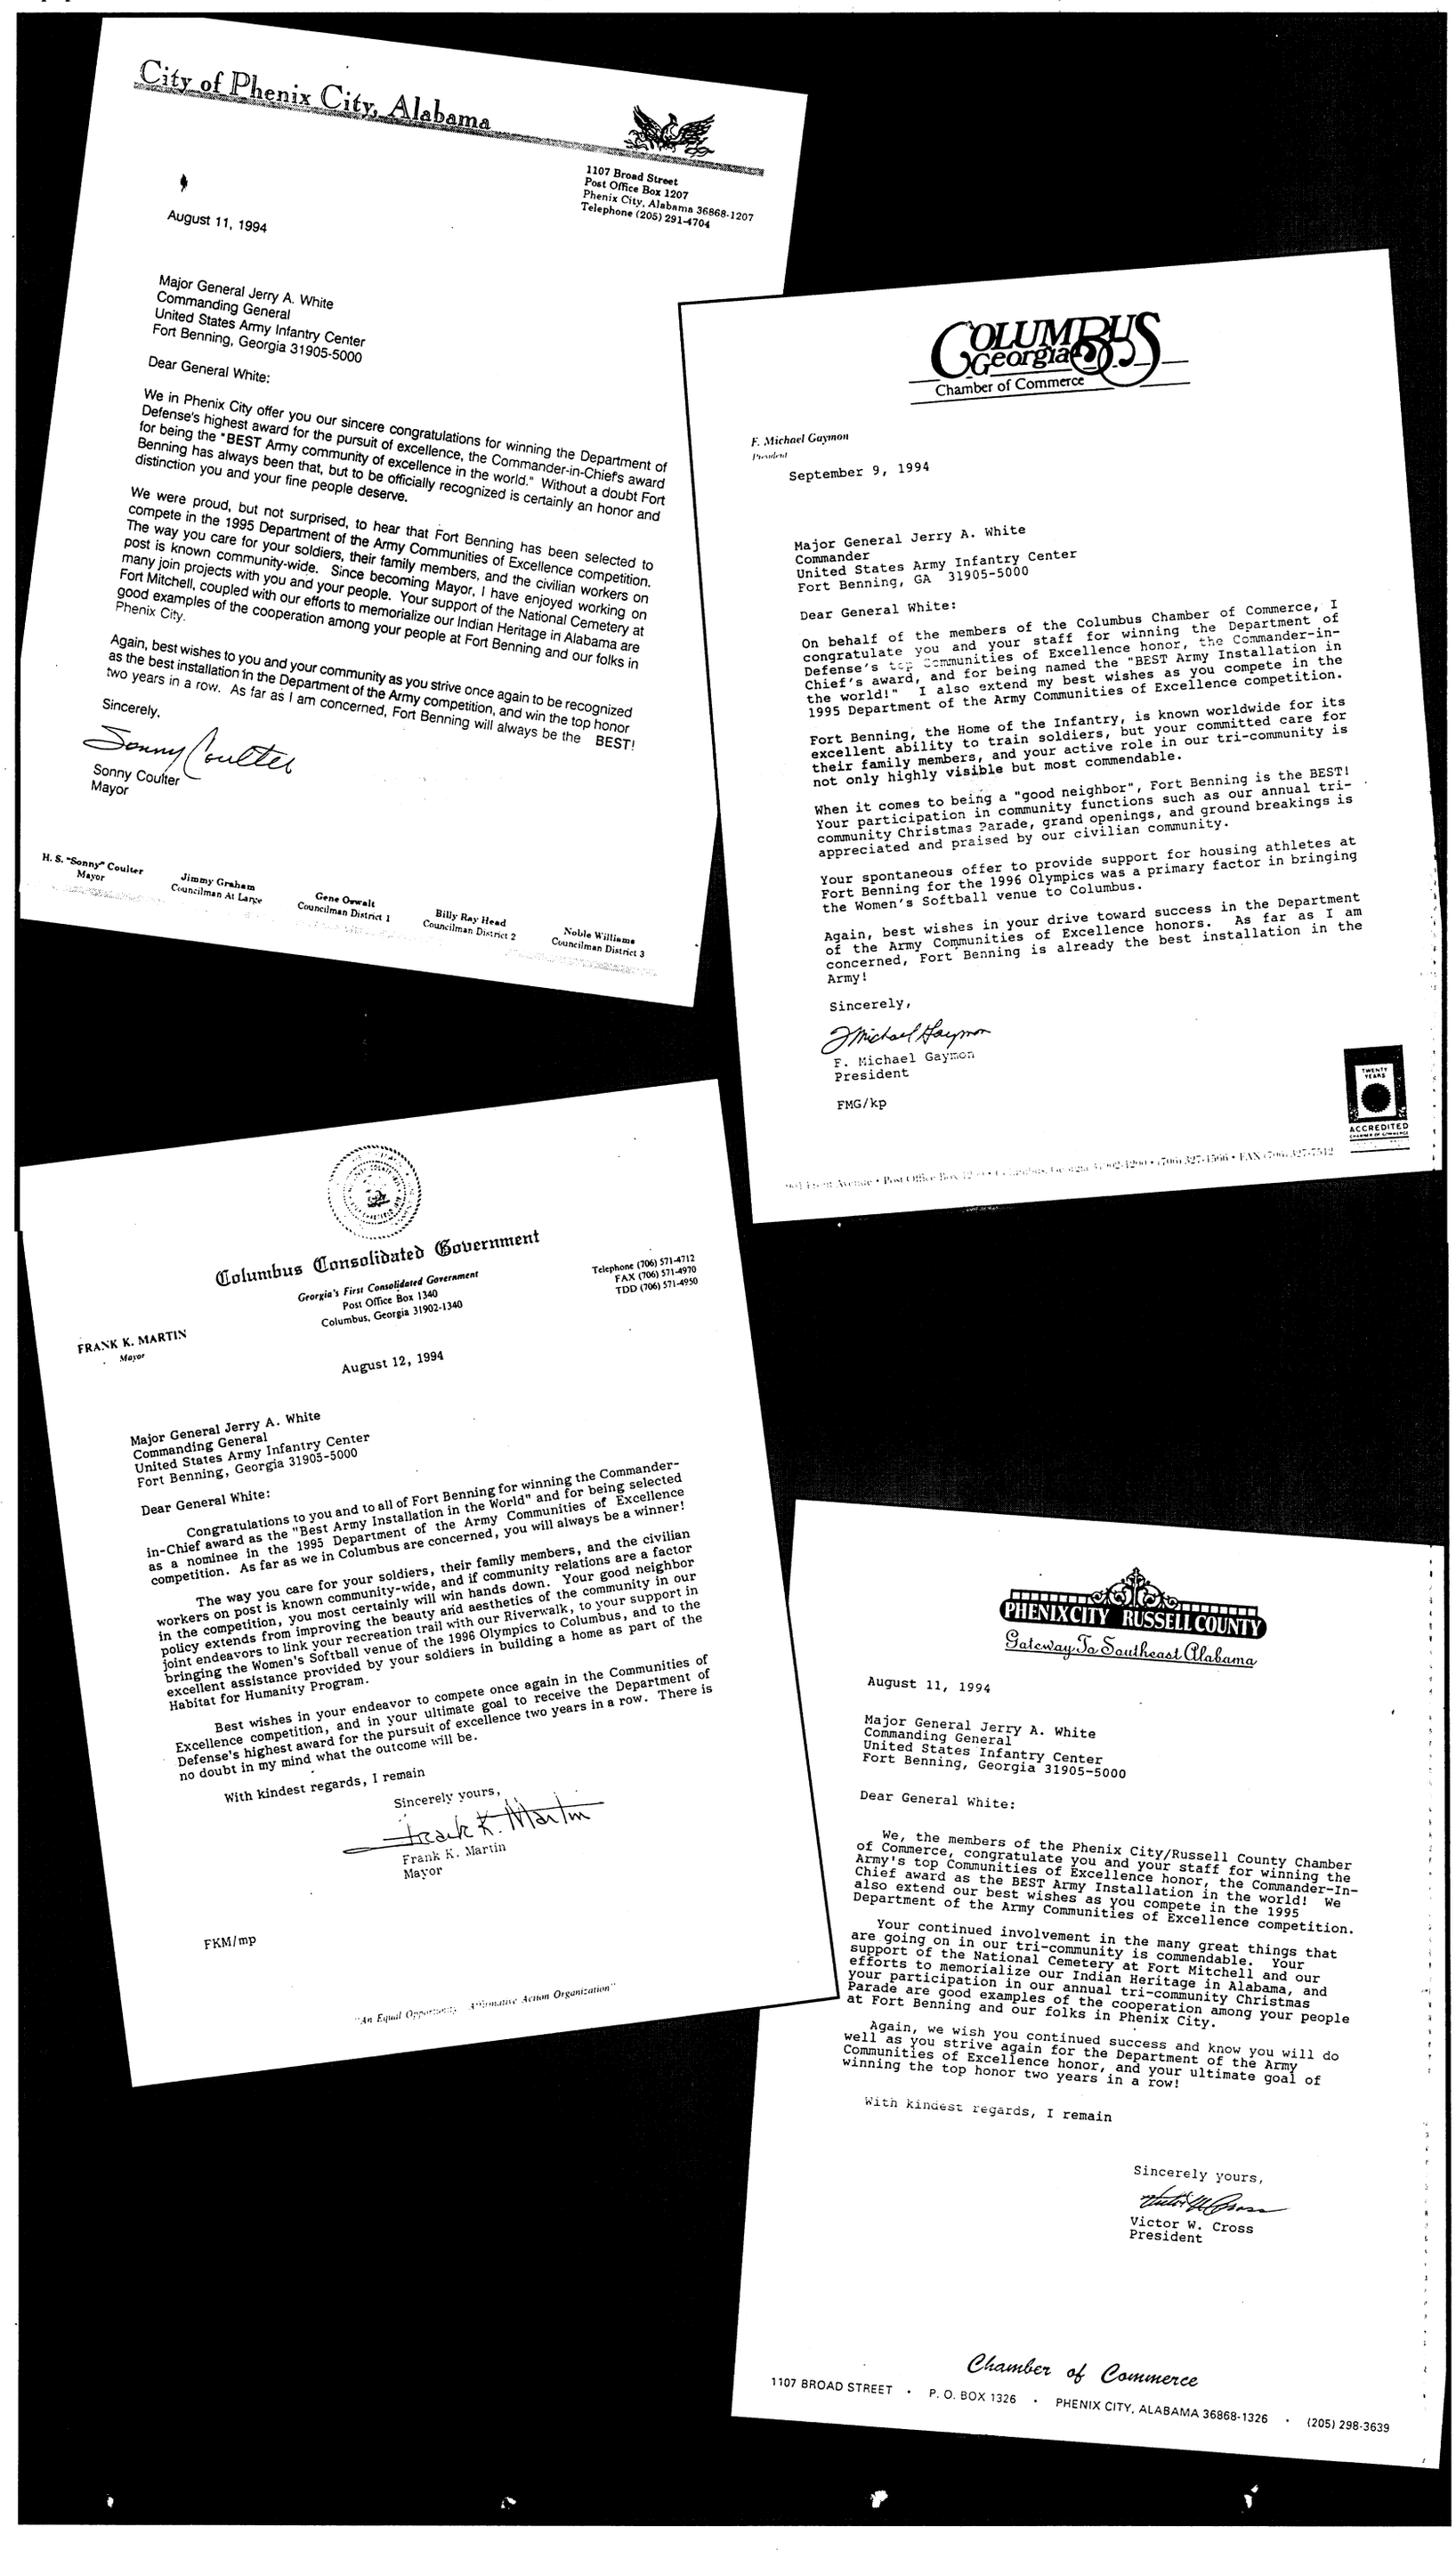
Soldiers' Plaza will get an additional face-lift with its money, and the Infantry Center Chapel is scheduled to receive funds for long overdue repairs.

Airborne troops coming off the drop zone won't have to "hold it," until they get back to Lawson Army Airfield. Dollars are being provided to construct a latrine on Fryar Drop Zone.

The Staff Judge Advocate's Office will be receiving funding to make the office more accessible to handicapped patrons and to be more responsive to customers' calls by installing a voice mail system.

To improve the quality of its television programming, the Public Affairs Office will use money to purchase a new video camera and editing equipment.

Funding is also being used to upgrade audio/visual equipment in Infantry Hall classrooms.



The Directorate of Civilian Personnel will install a touch screen computer that will provide up-to-date information about what positions are available to those seeking jobs.

Maj. Chuck Walls, garrison executive officer, noted his committee received more than 400 recommendations for projects from soldiers, family members and retirees from throughout the community.

"If we hadn't been named the best Army post in the world, none of these projects would have been made possible. Our soldiers and civilians worked hard to win the competition, and it's only fitting they benefit from the results."

Walls noted that even without the money, ACOE would still be worth doing.

"It's a great program because it stresses taking care of soldiers, stresses customer service," he said. "As a result, even without the monetary award, Fort Benning becomes a much better place to live and work."

Key to post's success goes beyond the obvious

There's much more to the Army Communities of Excellence program than just area beautification, said Sarah McLaney, post COE coordinator.

While appearance is important, she said, the real impetus behind ACOE is providing the best possible quality services and facilities to soldiers and their families.

"Soldiers and family members often have a misperception as to what ACOE really is, especially on a post like Fort Benning where a third of the population is transient," McLaney said. "The bottom line is that we show the ACOE team that we continue to improve the quality of life at Fort Benning by constantly evaluating and improving the facilities and services that our soldiers and their families enjoy. ACOE is about how we take care of soldiers."

"Services is the key word when it comes to ACOE," said Dave Flo, director of Resource Management. "ACOE is not about the prettiest flower beds. The real criterion is the kind of services that post personnel are receiving. They should get service with a smile and have their needs met in an efficient and timely manner. That's what the ACOE team will be looking at."

McLaney felt confident about Fort Benning's ability to take top honors in Training and Doctrine Command after the TRADOC COE team visits Sunday through Wednesday.

"The attitude of the post's soldiers and civilians is super," she said. "You can really feel the excitement around post as the team's visit approaches. One of Fort Benning's greatest assets is that post personnel are willing to work together as a team When things need to be accomplished we put our heads together and get it done."

To capitalize on the enthusiasm of post employees, an ACOE pep rally will be held today at 2:30 p.m. in Infantry Hall's Marshall Auditorium to kick off the upcoming celebration of excellence. The rally will feature comments by Commanding General Maj. Gen. Jerry A. White and performances by the Infantry Band and Chorus.

"The rally will be a great way to get the post in the spirit for the team's visit and to emphasize what ACOE is all about — a celebration of excellence," McLaney said.

The spirit of excellence will also be present at the quarterly Excellence Appreciation Breakfast Tuesday at the Supper Club at 8 a.m., where outstanding post employees will be recognized.

"You can't have excellent customer service without excellent employees," McLaney said. "The breakfast will give the team the chance to see where excellence begins."

Program aims to keep pregnant soldiers physically fit

By Gabriele Chapman
Special to The Bayonet

The U.S. Army Physical Fitness School at Fort Benning is leading a new physical fitness program for active duty pregnant women.

The program is designed to sustain fitness levels in pregnant women and to maintain a soldier's combat effectiveness in her unit.

Soldiers in the 36th Engineer Group are the first to participate in the program, which is being headed by Louis Tomasi, a research physiologist, and Spc. Paula LeBov, a master fitness trainer instructor, doctrine analyst and bachelor's degree graduate in biology.

According to LeBov, there is a misconception that pregnant women in the military are stable, married women who want to start families. This is not typically the case, she said. In a study conducted at Fort Lewis, Wash., out of 170 pregnant women, 161 were enlisted and 65 were single mothers.

"Here and at Fort Lewis, the bulk of the pregnant women are (privates first class) or (specialists)," LeBov said. "More than 50 percent of these are single mothers. I have a list of 39 women, and 100 percent are enlisted. The highest rank is (sergeant). There is a real impact on combat readiness. Because of the age and marital status of the women, not only will this (physical training program) benefit them physically, but this can be their emotional support group as well."

The same program was started at Fort Lewis in March 1993. Its studies have shown that out of the women who participated, babies weighed more, the group could endure labor better and there were no preterm deliveries; in the group of nonexercisers, 29 percent had preterm labors, babies weighed less, and more C-sections were performed, according to LeBov.

During its trial period, the fitness program will be run by the U.S. Army Physical Fitness School, and it will only include the 40 pregnant women from the 36th Engineer Group.

"We're going to work with the 36th Engineer Group through the month of February, and then the program will be reassessed to see if post personnel will adopt the program," Tomasi said.

The program will consist of educational classes every Monday, which will focus on pregnancy related issues. Topics will include breastfeeding, nutrition, infant safety, domestic violence, stress management, substance abuse and birth control.

There is a misconception that pregnant women in the military are stable, married women who want to start families. This is not typically the case. In a study conducted at Fort Lewis, Wash., out of 170 pregnant women, 161 were enlisted and 65 were single mothers

Actual physical training will be Tuesdays, Thursdays and Fridays. The one-hour session will consist of a warm-up, stretching exercises, muscular strength and endurance exercises, a cardiorespiratory workout, a cool down and stretching. The muscular strength and endurance portion will include free weights, single station weight training machines, floor work and many other exercises, with everything modified for pregnancy, according to LeBov.

The cardiorespiratory workout will last for 20 to 25 minutes, and will include step aerobics, low-impact aerobics and a walking group. There also will be aqua-aerobics once a month. There will not be any high- impact exercises.

While the program is designed to maintain prepregnancy fitness levels, safety of the mother and her fetus is priority.

Since each pregnancy is different, all women will be carefully screened to determine their level of fitness. The screening began Aug. 30 with an orientation and a fitness question-naire. No one will be allowed to exercise without her physician's approval.

Women with high-risk pregnancies will be prohibited from participating in the exercise program. Pregnant women with the following conditions are considered to be at high risk:

- Heart disease
- History of three or more miscarriages
- History of premature labor
- Bleeding
- Multiple gestations (twins, triplets, etc.)
- Incompetent cervix
- Ruptured membranes.

The fitness program will follow the exercise guidelines established by the American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists, which include:

- Core body temperature should not exceed 101.5 Fahrenheit
- Women should not exercise lying on their backs after the fourth month of pregnancy
- Vigorous activity in hot, humid weather should be avoided
- Jerky, bouncy motions or quick changes in direction should be avoided
- Caloric intake must meet the energy demands of both pregnancy and exercise
- Liquids should be taken liberally before, during and after exercise.

While the program has benefits for all pregnant women, the exercise portion will not be mandatory.

"We cannot force them to exercise," LeBov said. "However, formations and classes will be mandatory, and soldiers will not be allowed to leave after formation. So, hopefully peer pressure will force them to participate."

For the units not yet included in this program, women must continue to maintain their physical fitness on their own.

"A woman should not start a PT program when she gets pregnant; she should continue a PT program when she gets pregnant," Tomasi said. "If a woman was a dedicated runner prior to pregnancy, she could conceivably continue cardiovascular training at a lower intensity while she is pregnant."

How does a pregnant woman know whether or not she is training too hard? According to Tomasi, ACOG guidelines must be followed, and "if you are at an uncomfortable level, you are exercising too hard."

Heart rate is another good indicator, according to LeBov.

"When your heart rate exceeds 140 beats per minute, chances are, your core body temperature is too high," she said.

Lebov and Tomasi are looking for volunteers to help with the program, preferably master fitness trainers and aerobics instructors. For more information, contact LeBov at 545-6336.

EXERCISE guidelines

There are several exercises which are designed to help strengthen certain muscles and body structures for delivery. Before starting any exercise program, however, check with your doctor.

• Exercises below and at right are designed to benefit the pregnant woman throughout pregnancy and after birth.

• Shoulder circle/roll — Let arms hang at sides, lift shoulders, rotate to back and front. Repeat five or six times.

• Probably the best exercise for a pregnant woman is walking — it helps a woman tone her muscles, get fresh air, stay regular and sleep soundly at night.

Source: Guide for Expectant Parents

Pelvic rock — On hands and knees, tighten abdominal wall by pulling muscles in and up. Tuck in buttocks. (back should straighten). Slowly relax so that curve in back returns. Repeat slowly and rhythmically 5 or 6 times.

Stretch — Legs should be extended, bent at the knees and spread. Reach slowly forward toward toes; count to three; relax. Build up to 10 times, twice a day.

Squatting — Place feet 10 to 12 inches apart, balance by holding onto heavy piece of furniture. Squat as low as you can, maintain position as long as it's comfortable. Return to original position; build up to 10 to 12 times a day.

to kick off new season

Army Career and Alumni Program

The Fort Benning Army Career and Alumni Program and Job Assistance Center kicks off a new career day season Sept. 16.

Career day at the JAC has been highly successful over the past 1 1/2 years with many participants landing good jobs, according to Harold Ericksen, JAC manager.

"The concept of weekly career days was adopted because of the dynamics of the job market, Ericksen said. "Jobs that are here today are quickly filled. Jobs that are not here today may very well exist tomorrow. "

During the upcoming season, a new approach for Career Day will be tested. Beginning Sept. 16, Career Day will be scheduled according to themes. Employers with common needs and clients with common job search objectives will have the sole use of the JAC on that day.

The first round of career days scheduled by themes are as follows:

Sept. 16 — Transportation Day/Environmental Training
Sept. 22 — Small Business, Entrepreneur Day
Sept. 30 — Professional Recruiter Day
Oct. 14 — Management Day
TBA — Corrections, Law Enforcement Day
TBA — Environmental Day
TBA — Food Service Day
TBA — Military Contractors

Army Career & Alumni Program
Operation Transition
Department of Defense
"SHOWING WE CARE"
Fort Benning, Ga.

The themes were selected as a result of past experience in dealing with employers and understanding of their requirements, Ericksen said. Employers scheduled for Career Day are in immediate need of employees, and they have jobs that need to be filled now.

Participants have an opportunity to practice marketing their skills, qualifications and experience. Before attending any job fair, participants should be prepared, Ericksen said. JAC counselors provide assistance in resume writing, researching companies and practice interviewing.

A monthly schedule will appear in Infantry Hall's Classroom 30, ACAP Building 2617 and at the Job Assistance Center, Building 2634. For more information, call 545-2308 or 545-2309.

ACAP to feature trucking firms at job fair Sept 16

Job Assistance Center

Several trucking companies will converge at the Job Assistance Center Sept. 16 at 9 a.m. to noon for a job fair.

Attendees will have the chance to sit down with top trucking company recruiters and find out exactly what they have to offer.

The JAC Army Employer Network has more than 20 trucking firms that actively recruit transitioning service members.

Additionally, leads through the transition bulletin board lists many driving positions on a daily basis. also there are demand requirements for mechanics, maintenance supervisors, dispatchers and terminal managers.

Some trucking companies pay salaries while an individual completes a comprehensive training program. First-year wages for inexperienced drivers are normally well above other entry level jobs.

For information on qualifications and training, come to the Job Fair Sept. 16 in Building 1634. Interested persons may sign up for this Career Day by coming by the Job Assistance Center or calling 545-2308 or 545-2309.

Task force finds DoD ready

By Rudi Williams
American Forces Information Service

The readiness of today's armed forces is "acceptable" in most measurable areas, but there are "pockets" of unreadiness.

Unless the Department of Defense and Congress focus on readiness, the armed forces could backslide into the "hollow status of the late 1970s and early 1980s, according to findings by the Defense Science Board Task Force on Readiness.

To prevent backsliding, the task force provided Defense Secretary William J. Perry with recommendations the group believes "will pay significant dividends in future readiness, and particularly in future joint and combined readiness.

These include supporting resources to access, train, educate and retain high-quality personnel, board members said.

"Maintaining the quality of our people should continue to be the department's top priority," task force officials said. They also suggested DoD create systems to adequately fund contingency operations, better equate readiness to resources, and increase emphasis on joint and combined readiness and requirements.

Also, the task force recommended more use of modeling and simulation technology for joint and combined training and doctrine.

Comprised of eight three- and four-star retired generals and admirals, the board concluded that most of the pockets result from changes taking place in the armed forces and the turbulence created by the changes.

The report focuses on 13 broad readiness issues and contains more than 70 specific recommendations.

"The Readiness Task Force has provided immeasurable assistance in giving us the crucial independent assessment to sustain our current high state of readiness," Perry said. "Taken in aggregate, the report's findings will help DoD in its continuing effort to oversee and manage readiness.

"We have already implemented many of the task force's recommendations, and I intend to continue to take the necessary steps to protect the medium and long-term readiness of our armed forces," Perry added.

"There are many downward pressures on readiness today: force reductions, frequent mission deployments and reduced budgets, just to name as few," said Army Gen. John M. Shalikashvili, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff.

"Quite correctly, the readiness task force has warned that these downward forces are having an effect and there are places where our readiness is adequate, but shallower. It is a fair reminder, and we are acting on it."

Task force members visited numerous sites to gather information. Meetings were conducted with the secretary of Defense, deputy secretary of Defense, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, the service chiefs and combatant commanders in chief.

As a result, many recommendations have been or are in the process of being implemented, officials said. These include:

- Making readiness DoD's top priority, including specific readiness reporting requirements in the DoD Planning Guidance. This document shapes the future of the armed forces until the year 2001 and requires sufficient funding for forces to comply with the Bottom-up Review.
- Developing and using advanced simulation technology to enhance training in multiservice and joint operations — a key facet of readiness.
- Determining the readiness impact of future Defense Science Board recommendations. Subsequent science board task forces will have to determine the impact of any recommendations and readiness.
- Carrying out a number of specific directives and initiatives at the Joint Staff organization to monitor and improve readiness, particularly in joint operations.

The readiness task force recommended the board meet quarterly to review the status of the recommendations and to discuss other readiness issues.

Excellence thrives at AG

By Richard Brill
Special to The Bayonet©

> "TAQ will only work when everyone, from top to bottom, is personally committed."
> — Jim Brinson
> Adjutant general

Walk into the Office of the Adjutant General conference room and emblazoned on the walls are philosophies that have contributed to the organization being named the best military personnel operation in the Army for two consecutive years:

"Excellence: Some succeed because they are destined to — most succeed because they are determined to."

"Pride: Pride is a personal commitment. It's an attitude which separates excellence from mediocrity."

Adjutant General Jim Brinson said that simple philosophies like these and a total commitment to the principles of Total Army Quality have have had dramatic affects on improving the quality and efficiency of the services offered by AG during a time when resources where decreasing.

"Our management philosophy is really quite simple," Brinson said. "Provide exceptional customer service the first time every time, always try to improve the way you do business and make sure that you work well in teams and with other post organizations.

With about one-third military personnel and two-thirds civilian, our mission at AG is a real team effort and one in which each member understands the importance of his or her own individual job."

In order to meet the goal of constant improvement, the AG created a Quality Management Board in August of 1991.

The team is made up of AG employees, including division chiefs, first-line supervisors, clerks and junior enlisted soldiers.

The QMB tracks AG's efficiency and develops initiatives that will contribute to further improvement.

"TAQ will only work when everyone, from top to bottom, is personally committed," Brinson said. "We involve every employee in the TAQ process."

Training is an essential element in making TAQ a success, he added.

To learn the ins and outs of TAQ, AG employees attend a 20-hour Quality Elements Seminar course within the first six-months of their assignment to AG, he said.

Employee training also includes monthly TAQ professional development seminars on such topics as customer service, stress and time management, problem solving and effective communication.

According to Brinson, rewarding employees for a job well done is another important aspect to creating a real team effort. Award ceremonies and individual and group recognition are an important part to developing esprit de corps at AG, he said.

AG, which provides services ranging from issue of identification cards to in and outprocessing to maintaining deployment status on every post soldier, stays on track by following a work process model and by using a comprehensive system of measurement tools to gauge how successful the organization is in fulfilling its missions.

"The work process model provides the guidelines by which our organization operates," Brinson said. "It was developed by asking ourselves simple questions like, 'who are our customers,' 'what are their needs' and 'what is our definition of quality.'"

A monthly performance report and a quarterly review to review and plan AG's goals and objectives also contribute to efficiency, Brinson said.

"That kind of intense focus has really made the difference," Brinson said. "There is more communication between the directors of our nine divisions and they each understand how they affect the whole organization."

Richard Brill/Special to The Bayonet

Col. Gregory C. Camp, chief of staff, presents one-team pins to outstanding Retirement Services employees Pat Harris, Martha Holloway and Marte Brechtelsbauer during an ACOE walk-through of the Office of the Adjutant General Aug. 24.

Much of the key to success is simply attitude, Brinson said.

If you believe there is a better way to do things and honestly apply yourself, you can come up with a solution," he said. "You can look to the future and say 'woe is me,' or you can say 'how can we do this better?'"

There were some initial attitudinal barriers to overcome, Brinson said, but once employees and managers caught the TAQ spirit, there was a real feeling of pride and enthusiasm.

"Many employees think that managers are just out to fix the blame. At AG we don't blame problems on individuals. We focus on the system by finding out why the problem occurred and by working to fix it," Brinson said.

"As employees began to see that the AG leadership was truly dedicated to excellence, they began to get excited about the TAQ program."

Brinson said that AG employees are justly proud of their accomplishments.

"Our employees are extremely proud of what they have accomplished in the past three years," he said. "The AG leadership is proud as well. We have some great leaders in the organization, from first-line supervisors to division chiefs, who are very talented and cooperative and who always seek improvement."

Brinson said that the benefits from a TAQ-oriented management philosophy have been enormous, but did not all come at once.

"There is no short-term fix. A good TAQ program takes a long time to establish and requires a commitment, but the results are definitely worth it," Brinson said.

"We have not only ensured that the efficiency of the AG has improved for the present, we have also laid the groundwork for continuing a tradition of excellence into the future."

Adjutant General : Directorate seeks continual progress to make Fort Benning better for future

By Richard Brill
Special to The Bayonet©

An unceasing commitment to improvement has made Fort Benning's Adjutant General Directorate the best in the Army in 1992 and 1993.

Adjutant General Jim Brinson said he wants to show the Training and Doctrine Command Communities of Excellence team that AG doesn't intend to rest on its past honors.

"When you believe in Total Army Quality, you focus on constant improvement," Brinson said. "At AG our goal is to never tread water. We seek continual progress."

The following are among the recent accomplishments of AG:

• The development of personnel automation systems such as the Enhanced Inprocessing System and the AG Management Support System. EIP has reduced the inprocessing of soldiers to an average of two days with an average reduction of waiting times from three hours to 15 minutes. Both systems are scheduled for adoption TRADOC-wide in 1995.

• The creation of an installation orientation tour that acquaints new soldiers and their families with post Morale Welfare and Recreation facilities, unit locations and housing areas. In addition, a liaison officer is stationed at the Columbus Airport 24 hours a day to greet newly arriving soldiers and answer their questions and the commanding general personally conducts a welcoming briefing to all newly assigned soldiers,

"We sincerely believe that the first impression a soldier gets of his or her new duty station sets the tone for the entire tour of duty," Brinson said. "We do everything we can to welcome soldiers and meet their needs in a timely, professional manner."

• The introduction of more soldier readiness elements into the inprocessing procedure so that soldiers can be identified as deployable or nondeployable before they even get to their units and the unit commander notified.

• The planning of a joint project with the Physical Fitness School to create a retiree physical fitness program that will be the first in the Department of Defense. A pilot program with nearly 40 participants has already been conducted.

"Our services to retirees are greatly appreciated," Brinson said. "Our Retirement Services Office features one-stop service that has eliminated waiting time and greatly simplified the retirement process. Last year's retiree open house, which was a cooperative effort with Martin Army Community Hospital, devoted two days to health care and physical exams and was attended by more than 800 retirees, our best attendance ever."

• Expansion of the Army Career and Alumni Program to include many services that are the first in the Department of Defense. Through ACAP, soldiers can learn job-seeking skills, get information on thousands of college programs nationwide and even receive free job retraining, if qualified.

Brinson said that AG's success in all its endeavors is because of a real commitment to Total Army Quality.

"Taking care of customers in the best way possible and making the best better are principles AG personnel live by every day," he said.

Brinson said AG personnel truly look forward to the visit by the COE team.

"ACOE is great because it gives us a chance to tell people about the things we do well. It's a chance to celebrate excellence and we look forward to it."

WELCOME TO FORT BENNING!

We extend a warm welcome to the validation team members from the TRADOC Communities of Excellence who will be at Fort Benning Sept. 11-14. We are happy that they will be here and are proud to share with them all the great things we do here at "The Best Installation in the Army!"

CG receives medical honor

By Karen S. Morarie
Bayonet staff writer

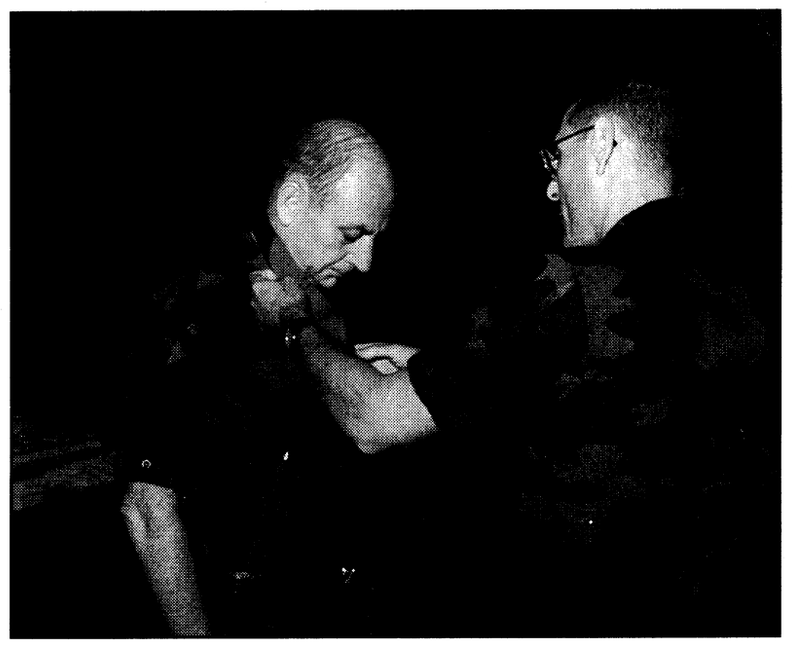
Commanding General Maj. Gen. Jerry A. White received an award seldom given to those outside the U.S. Army Medical Department at a ceremony at Martin Army Community Hospital Thursday.

White received an honorary membership in the Order of Military Merit, an organization "designed to recognize those who have made significant contributions to AMEDD over a sustained period of time," according to the order's president, retired Col. James G. Van Stratten.



Nominations for membership or honorary membership in the Order must be approved by the member's advisory council. Membership is numbered, with White being the 3,734th member inducted since the order's inception in 1982.

Col. Michael J. Kussman, MACH commander, presented White with a medallion and certificate of membership.

Kussman said that having served with White twice, he had learned a lot from the departing general, who will step down as Fort Benning Comm. General Sept. 15.

"He taught me that, after all is said and done, no matter what we're doing ... the only thing that's important is taking care of soldiers and their families," Kussman said.

"In the context of taking care of soldiers and their families, one of the most important things we do is health care, all the way from the foxhole to Walter Reed to Martin Army" he said. "Over the years, General White has been totally supportive of the Army Medical Department's initiatives."

"All of us need to understand," White said, "that what you do here contributes directly to how well the United States Army is going to fight, when they're called upon to do so, and whether they're going to win."

White spoke to the assembled medical staff about their role in maintaining the esprit de corps and attitude of the soldiers they cared for.

"If I could speak for all the soldiers," White said, "I would say, 'Thank you."

The $10,355 role model.

We're the first to admit that we're not the only $10,355 car out there. We just have an advantage no one else does. We had the chance to rethink nearly everything ever thought about cars. And find ways to improve upon how to build them, and even how to sell them. In short, we got to start from scratch. And design well-thought-out cars that a lot of people could actually afford. Like our SL, for example. For $10,355, you get the kind of technology usually found on more expensive cars, including an exhaust system made of stainless steel, doors that resist dents, and over thirty safety features. All of which has led to some scrutiny. (Why don't you just come on by and scrutinize us for yourself?) See? Sometimes we even invite it.

Lure color important when out for bass

By Earl Bentz and Steve Price
Outboard Marine Corporation

Sooner or later every bass angler struggles with the age-old dilemma of choosing a particular lure color for certain water conditions, then wondering if his color choice actually makes any difference after all.

"Color is important to me, if for no other reason than to give me confidence in the type of water I'm fishing," says former biologist Ken Cook. "Really, I know bass can see and distinguish different colors under various conditions, and over the years I have developed my own system for choosing colors."

Cook, a veteran tournament pro and a member of the Evinrude Outboards Pro Staff, uses two primary factors when selecting a particular color, "naturalness" and "visibility."

"I base the naturalness of a lure on three dominant bass foods in the water at a particular time of year," says Cook. "These three are crayfish, which are dominant in the early spring; bluegills, which are dominant in the late spring and early summer; and shad, which are most common in the summer and fall.

"For example, the primary crayfish color is a type of brownish black, so that is my main color in early spring. With bluegill, it's a type of chartreuse/blue combination, and with shad the color is more silver, pearl or chrome."

The second factor the Evinrude pro uses to make his color choice is water visibility. For this, he uses the Color-C-Lector, an instrument designed to measure color and visibility underwater.

"Although I may be fishing in late summer when my shad colors dominate in the food chain," says Cook, "the water conditions may not be conducive to using that color. It may be too muddy, for instance.

"That's when I combine colors. In muddy water, chartreuse, orange, and blue tend to show up very well, so I would try to combine a silver or gray with some chartreuse or blue. For example, I might try a silver crankbait with a blue back."

In clear water, Cook prefers more natural, subtle colors, but even in clear water there are times where visibility may be very low, such as around grassbeds.

"In a situation like that, I may try a smoke or gray colored lure but with some red or chartreuse on it," he explains. "Gold blades on a spinnerbait could be better than silver ones."

Cook remembers a tournament on Truman Lake where changing colors really make a difference in his catch rate. He'd fished a long bluff bank without a strike with a chrome jerkbait.

He checked the water with his Color-C-Lector, which told him gold might be a better choice. He switched and began catching bass. The conditions remained the same throughout the tournament and he came home with a high-place finish.

An extension handle is available from OMC SysteMatched Parts and Accessories that fits all late model Johnson and Evinrude tiller control electric position:

It's made of aluminum with a nylon sleeve that locks over the tiller handle of the motor, staying secure without screws or bolts and adding 18 inches of reach to the handle.

Stiffer rods overpower fish

By Earl Bentz and Steve Price
Outboard Marine Corporation

Lost any big bass lately?

If so, the reason could be that you're actually overpowering the fish, and changing to a slightly more limber action rod may help.

"There are a lot of reasons for losing bass," explains Evinrude Outboards Pro Staff angler Denny Brauer, "but certainly, overpowering the fish with your rod is one of them.

"It can happen with virtually any bass fishing technique, too, from flipping to crankbaiting. The rod action is too stiff.

"With small hook lures like crankbaits or topwaters, you pull the lure free, and with larger hook lures like jigs you can tear the tissue around the fish's mouth so the lure falls out."

Brauer knows firsthand the agony of over-powering bass this way. During a recent tournament he changed to a heavier action flipping/pitching rod just before the event started; on the first competition day he lost two bass of about eight pounds each and another over five.

"The stiffer rod was not flexing enough," says Brauer. "My jig was actually opening when I set the hook. I'd used the rod earlier and had no problem with smaller bass, but I did notice when I caught them I was literally launching them out of the water when I would set the hook.

"With the heavier bass, I couldn't move them that easily. Something had to give, and it was the hook."

If you think you're overpowering fish, Brauer suggests changing your rod first, then perhaps studying lure design and the type of hooks on that lure.

"Consider trying a rod with more flex," advises the Evinrude pro. "I don't mean changing from a heavy action to a light action, but perhaps a medium heavy, or even a heavy action with a lighter tip.

"This is why crankbait rods have very flexible tips. The bass usually hooks itself if the rod flexes properly, but if you use a stiff rod for crankbaits, you'll simply pull the lure away from the fish. The same is true with some topwater lures."

Brauer also advises studying your lures and their hooks. Most tournament pros put larger hooks on both their crankbaits and topwaters before they ever use them.

"Another problem could be the type of points you put on the hooks," Brauer adds. "If you make the point too long and thin, it will probably be too weak to penetrate properly, no matter how sharp it is. Instead, it will bend and won't penetrate at all.

"With other lures such as jigs, you may decide to change to a different manufacturer that uses a stronger hook, especially if you go after big bass regularly."

DOT employee earns Sec of Army award

By Jennifer Chapman
Special to The Bayonet©

A Fort Benning employee will receive a Secretary of the Army award at the Pentagon Nov. 17.

Only six of these awards are presented a year. Hundreds of people are recommended, but only the best are chosen.

Lee G. Capraro, chief of the Publications Branch under the Training and Analysis Division, Directorate of Operations and Training, is this year's recipient of the Secretary of the Army Award for Improving Publications.

Capraro is in charge of putting together all of the Army's publications and field manuals that have anything to do with the infantry.

During recent cutbacks, Capraro has been responsible for not only acting in accordance with those cutbacks, but also for working within limitations and still maintaining current standards.

She was instrumental in the development and set up of the computer systems needed to meet the demands of putting together comprehensive, easy-to-use field manuals for the infantry.

With responsibility for publications ranging from the basic FM 7-8 "Infantry Rifle and Platoon Squad" to a manual entitled "Counterguerilla Operations," Capraro seems to have her hands full.

Jennifer Chapman/Special to The Bayonet

Her staff consists of a crew of five editor-writers whose task is to make the content of these publications both easily understood and remembered.

Capraro also oversees four visual information specialists who make certain that the illustrations are clear and offer specific instructions on the how-tos of infantry life.

These publications are designed to teach infantry soldiers how to stay alive and healthy during their service to this country.

It takes anywhere from 18 to 21 months to produce a finished publication, and Capraro's department puts out 12 publications a year.

Capraro and her team put more publications in the field a year than any other publications office in the Army, said Col. Gregory C. Camp, Fort Benning Chief of Staff.

"I can't think of anyone more deserving than Lee Capraro," Camp said.

AUSA members selected for board of directors

Association of the United States Army

Two members of the Chattahoochee - Fort Benning Chapter of AUSA were selected to serve on the association's national advisory board of directors.

Retired Lt. Gen. Ben Register and retired Col. Jack Harron, former chapter presidents, will serve on the chapter development committee, which will hold its first meeting in Washington, D.C., Oct. 17.

Executive Vice President Jim Gallagher said these appointments serve to point out the importance the national committee places on what is happening locally.

As chapter president two years ago, Register conceived the idea for Military Appreciation Week, which immediately precedes Armed Forces Day.

He was also instrumental in furnishing small gifts from area merchants to soldiers as they deployed or returned from deployment.

He was honored at the chapter's summer meeting by being presented the Cliff Livingston Sr. award, given annually to the member who does the most to provide "service to the soldier," the chapter's motto.

Harron was last year's president. During his tenure the number of downtown events associated with Military Appreciation Week expanded. He also looked at new ways to support soldiers and family members during Operation Holiday.

Post to celebrate Hispanic heritage

'Cena Tipica,' displays, dancing to highlight 30 days of activities

By Marc G. Turchin
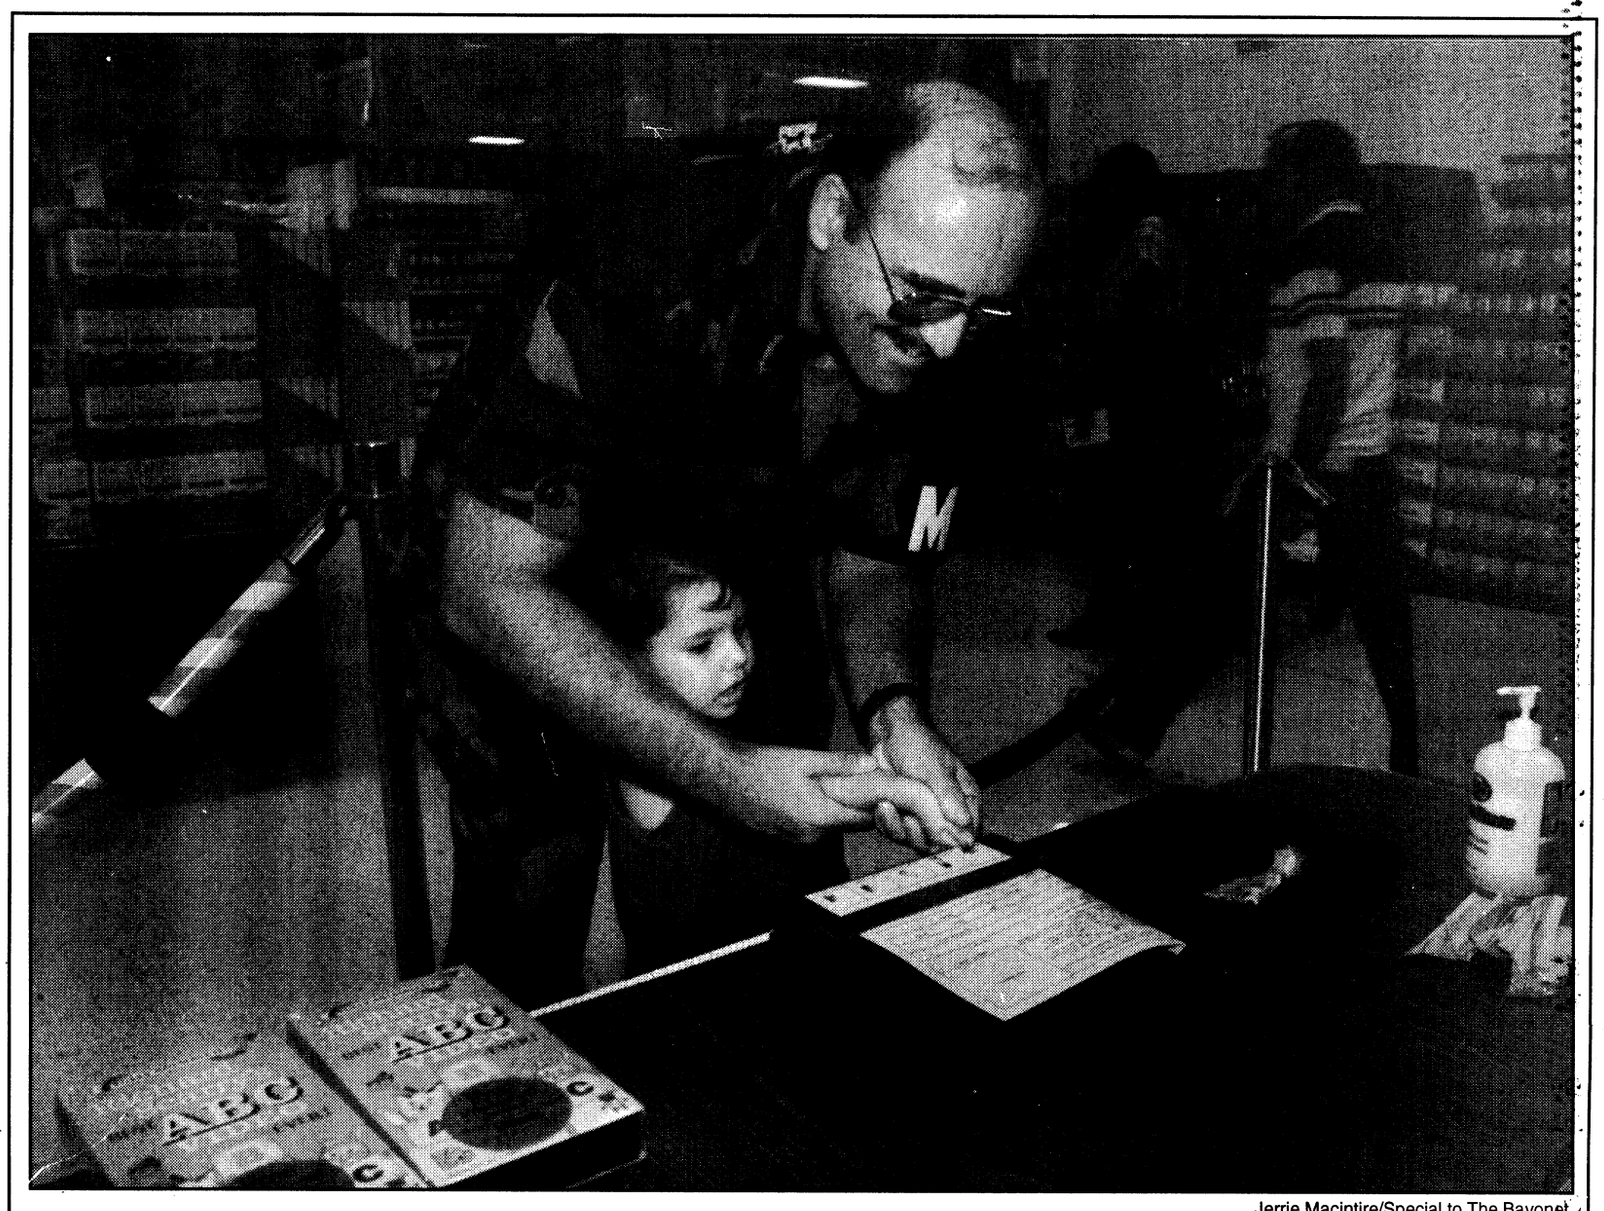
Bayonet staff writer

A month of festivities is scheduled to celebrate Hispanic Heritage Month on post Sept. 15 to Oct 15.

One of the first activities in the month-long celebration is scheduled to be "Exploring our Culture," an event filled with Hispanic dancing, food and displays on Stilwell Field. Guest speaker for this event is scheduled to be Chaplain (Lt. Col.) James Coindreau.

The post Equal Opportunity Office is presenting the festival.

Annual equal opportunity special ethnic observances are designed to enhance cross-cultural awareness and promote harmony among all soldiers, said Sgt. 1st Class Julius Young, of the EO office.



The activities are extensions of the Army's equal opportunity education and training objectives, he said. They are set aside annually to recognize the achievements and contributions made by members of specific ethnic groups in society, Young said.

This year's theme for the Hispanic Heritage Month celebration is "Partners for Progress."

The events are free and open to the public. For information, contact Young at 545-3200.

Resources available for EFMP

Army Community Service

The Exceptional Family Member Program now offers a resource library designed to help those who work with individuals challenged by physical, mental or emotional disabilities, according to Mark Mills, recreation specialist for EFMP.

Families enrolled in EFMP and units planning picnics or social outings that will include handicapped children are eligible to use these resources, Mills said.

The library includes books and materials as well as play equipment designed to enhance experiences with exceptional individuals.

The play equipment includes an "Aqua Jogger," a five foot diameter megaball, special equipment for playing football, baseball and catch, and a modified horseshoe set.

The resource library also offers specially designed devices to help children learn living skills such as tying shoes, opening and closing snaps and operating zippers.

In addition to the resource library, the EFMP plans an expanded recreational program, Mills said.

"We want to include EFMP children in more arts, crafts and sports activities," Mills said.

"Our program will be volunteer driven. All our volunteers will receive training on how to work with these exceptional individuals," he added.

The EFMP is a multi-disciplinary program of medical, educational and social service professionals working closely to ensure exceptional family members have the opportunity to reach maximum potential.

Families with special needs often have questions and concerns related to services available to them, said Frances Howard, EFMP coordinator.

Soldier Show plays on Sand Hill

By Jerrie Macintire
Special to The Bayonet©

Performers in the Army Soldier Show presented a musical medley of Americana to an overflowing audience in the Sand Hill Theater Sunday.

Members of the Fort Benning community crowded into the theater with some uniformed soldiers standing to hear a presentation featuring country, rock, soul, jazz, reggae, gospel and rap music.

The fast paced 75-minute show featured complex choreography on a multi-tiered stage along with high-tech lighting as well as surrealistic effects with shadows, backlighting and smoke. Laser lights were especially popular this year, according to Sgt. 1st Class Jacob Deal of the Community and Family Support Center in Alexandria, Va.

"We've had a lot of comments," said Deal. "Some people say this is the best Soldier Show they've seen in years." The audience seemed to agree as soldiers and civilians alike sang along, tapped toes and enthusiastically encouraged the performers, all active duty military members continuing the tradition of "entertainment for the soldier by the soldier" established in World War I.

The cast began and ended the show in dress uniforms, musically introducing themselves and their assigned posts.

The audience applauded each cast member, but in addition Fort Benning's Pvt. 2 James Price got a theater shaking "Hooah" from camouflage-clad soldiers as he addressed the audience. Price is with Headquarters and Headquarters Co., 2nd Bn., 18th Infantry Regiment.

The high-energy show offered a sampler of American favorites; young members of the audience seemed excited by the choreographed musical skit, "Be our Guest," featured in the recent family movie "Beauty and the Beast," while many retirees appeared enthused over a special tribute to D-Day featuring oldies from the Doughboy era including "Oh How I Hate to Get up in the Morning."

Soldiers both past and present seemed to agree with the lyrics answering the query, "What do you do in the infantry?"

The answer, "You march and march and march," invited a chorus of agreement from the audience.

One number featured the classic "Downtown" with a Motown twist, transitioning into a blended medley of time-honored selections from that distinctive record label.

A fast-paced blend of country favorites was accompanied by hand clapping and sing alongs, while one rap number with a gospel theme introduced more typical inspirational selections.

The catchy "heatwave" ignited a people wave as members of the audience rose to their feet in a synchronized swell spanning the theater.

"America the Beautiful" inspired a different reaction; the audience stood at attention for the patriotic number.

From five-pocket jeans to sequined gowns, the apparel varied with the music; the performers were a study in quick change artistry as they donned different outfits for every number.

The Soldier Show, which began touring May 21 at Fort Belvoir, Va. will conclude with a performance Oct. 11 at Fort Jackson, S.C.

Couple weds at Gavin Hall

By Tracee McNeil
Fort Benning Billeting

The post's newly built guest house, Gavin Hall, Building 96, opened its doors for operation Aug. 15. Four days later, the building was put to use for a whirlwind wedding.

Shelly Richards and Jason Horn, a couple who met while attending Airborne School, hoped to get married before the prospective groom graduated the following week.

Richards' parents, Fred and Linda Richards of Ashland, Ky., checked in Aug. 19 for the graduation and to witness their daughter's nuptials, but a slight hitch developed in the plans.

A military chaplain was not available to perform the wedding ceremony.

However, a guest house employee offered assistance in finding a member of the clergy to officiate at the ceremony.

Henry Traylor, pastor of Grace Temple Church of God in Columbus, agreed to perform the service, and the couple were married Aug. 19.

The guest house was built with Morale, Welfare and Recreation funds. The facility, under the management of Terry Walls, contains single and double suites and offers accommodations for people with disabilities.

Education Center teaches students English

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Many instructors and students from the School of Americas who want to learn English turn to the Tillinghurst Adult Education Center.

But Tillinghurst doesn't just help Spanish speakers, they're prepared to help all nonEnglish speakers who wish to learn English achieve their goal.

"It's for anyone who wants to learn," said Willene Cistrunk, a worker at Tillinghurst.

Sgt. 1st Class Marco Reyes, an instructor from Guatemala in SOA's special operations department, said that when he began at Tillinghurst, he knew no English.

Now, after eight months at the center, he can easily hold a conversation.

Cistrunk said the students' speaking ability will be evaluated when they come in and they'll be placed in a class appropriate to their level. Classes range from beginning to advanced.

Students are re-evaluated after three months, and they are given a dinner and certificate of achievement after completing a level.

Classes are Monday, Wednesday and Friday from 9 a.m. to noon, and Tuesday and Thursday classes are 6 to 9 p.m.

The courses are free, and those who want to participate are advised to just show up.

The center is located at 514 Morris Road in Columbus.

Police positions available to military

By Jerrie Macintire
Special to The Bayonet ©

Members of the Law Enforcement Academy, which trains soldiers leaving the military for positions as police officers sponsored a workshop Sept. 6.

The Law Enforcement Academy, which kicked off Aug. 1 and is sponsored by the Georgia Peace Officer Standards and Training Council, offers the 360 curricular hours necessary to satisfy state requirements for positions in law enforcement, said Wendy Awtrey, academy coordinator.

"We train military men and women to get jobs within the state of Georgia," said Awtrey. After the training, these soldiers are eligible for employment as either a peace officer or jailer, Awtrey said.

"Our program is a little different since we train outgoing soldiers in a program, which is certified by the state before they get a job," said Awtrey.

Jerrie Macintire/Special to The Bayonet

Law Enforcement Academy Director Bob Awtrey counsels prospective officer Spc. Donna Harris on the nine-week program. Harris is with Company A, 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment.

Ideally, program participants should plan to take the course within one year of separation from the military, said Awtrey.

The nine-week program has been popular with soldiers, and the class scheduled to begin in October is already full, she said.

There are about six classes scheduled each year with a maximum enrollment of 32 students. Classes run from noon until 9 p.m. and cover all areas of practical and academic training. The academy does not conduct physical training.

To enroll in the course, prospective students need a copy of their birth certificate, high school diploma or GED, a DD 214 or statement of service, and a physician's affidavit provided by the academy.

Financial aid is available for eligible students. The course is approved by the Veterans' Administration and there are other funds available for some soldiers.

For more information on the academy, call 545-7028.

Officers donate time escorting contestants

2nd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment

Some officers from the 2nd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment, recently escorted contestants in the Ms. Wheelchair America pageant.

The pageant was a week-long event in Columbus with the crowning of Ms. Wheelchair America Aug. 13 at the Columbus Iron Works Trade and Convention Center.

The lieutenants who were selected as escorts were all volunteers, and they escorted the contestants for five days.

Wendy Petzold, of Milwaukee, Wis., was crowned 1995 Ms. Wheelchair America.

The annual competition determines the woman who will represent handicapped women throughout the country.

Petzold, a University of Wisconsin-Milwaukee student, will travel nationwide during her reign as Ms. Wheelchair America to better educate people about the challenges faced by handicapped people.

Representing Georgia, was Betty Payne of Calhoun who received the Ms. Congeniality Award.

This year's director of Ms. Wheelchair America, Gall McKoon, expressed repeatedly how pleased she was with the conduct of the lieutenants. She praised them for being "a fine group of gentlemen."

MEDEVAC CREWS PROVIDE SUPPORT

By Shelby Carr
Bayonet staff writer

A siren blares over the flight line. Seconds later, feet pound down the stairs. The pilot makes a quick stop at operations to pick up the details of the mission, and makes a 75-yard sprint to the helicopter. Within minutes of the first call to operations, the Blackhawk is in the air and on its way.

En route to pick up a patient with chest pains, the pilot in charge of the helicopter draws upon the knowledge of all of his crew to determine the best approach and possible hazards. The medic prepares his equipment for possible contingencies, such as the patient's needing oxygen or being in shock.

The 498th Medical Company (Air Ambulance) provides Fort Benning and the surrounding communities with medical evacuation flights (known as dust offs), safety and traffic flights and patient transfer flights, such as flying babies from outlying communities to the Columbus Medical Center.

Thirty-two pilots, 15 aircraft and a ground staff of 144 make up the 498th.

The 498th's primary mission, outside of its daily medical evacuation flights, is training and wartime support of the 24th Infantry Division (Mechanized).

It also supports the Ranger Training Brigade mission at Dahlonega, Ga., and Eglin Air Force Base, Fla., and recently had 15 soldiers and two helicopters finish a tour in Kuwait.

Each flight crew consists of four soldiers — two pilots, a crew chief and a medic.

Every day of the year, the 498th provides two crews and aircraft ready to fly medical evacuation missions.

One flight crew is the "first-up" crew. They work 24 hours straight and are ready to be in the air within minutes of the first call for a mission. The other crew is the "second-up" crew. They are on 30-minute standby to be in the air for a mission. The "second-up" crew will spend 24 hours on this duty and then assume "first-up" duties.

During a mission, crew members focus on their duties and what they can do during the flight to ensure maximum safety of the aircraft.

"Pilots focus on aircraft mission parameters that pertain to them," said Capt. James Schwartz, the flight platoon leader of the 498th. "We have strict guidelines, but sometimes the criteria is not always as clear-cut as it should be."

Pilots should not make decisions that will place the aircraft and crew in danger, Schwartz said.

"On the way to the site, I think about what I need to know," said Sgt. Wendy Tureaud, a flight medic. "You're going over what you have been taught and what steps to take. Always remember 'Murphy's Law' — one patient can turn into three or five."

During a mission, the medic updates the pilot on the condition of the patient and performs first aid on the patient. The medic also keeps the patient informed of his or her status and tries to reassure the patient.

The crew chief performs many duties as required, including:

- Helping the medic
- Acting as in-flight mechanic
- Operating the hoist to lift a patient from an area where the helicopter cannot land
- Securing a patient in the aircraft.

When not flying, the crew chief will often be in the hangar working on aircraft.

"The support people work a lot of hours to ensure the unit can respond to a mission," Schwartz said.

The 498th ground crews and maintenance soldiers ensure the 498th has at least two helicopters ready, and usually more because of the outside missions the unit is tasked with.

"Sir, patient is in stable condition; we'll take him to the (Columbus) Medical Center," said Staff Sgt. James R. Hernandez, the medic on the flight. On every flight, the medic recommends to the pilot where the patient should be taken.

Thirty minutes after the siren went off, the Blackhawk helicopter was setting down on the helipad at the Columbus Medical Center, accomplishing the mission. The first comment from crew chief Sgt. Randy J. Bellinger after touchdown signified the mission of the 498th was completed successfully.

"Hey sir, can't you set it down any softer than that?" Bellinger asked jokingly, as the crew's tension lessened.

"You get a real good feeling once the mission is accomplished and (you) got them (the patient) to a higher lever of care," said Sgt. Johnny Gotcher, a crew chief with the 498th.

Once the helicopter is back at the airfield, the crew chief has to prepare the aircraft for its next flight before he can walk away and wait for the siren to go off again.

1/18 takes on job to protect the Earth

By Joseph H. Gammon
1st Battalion, 18th Infantry Regiment

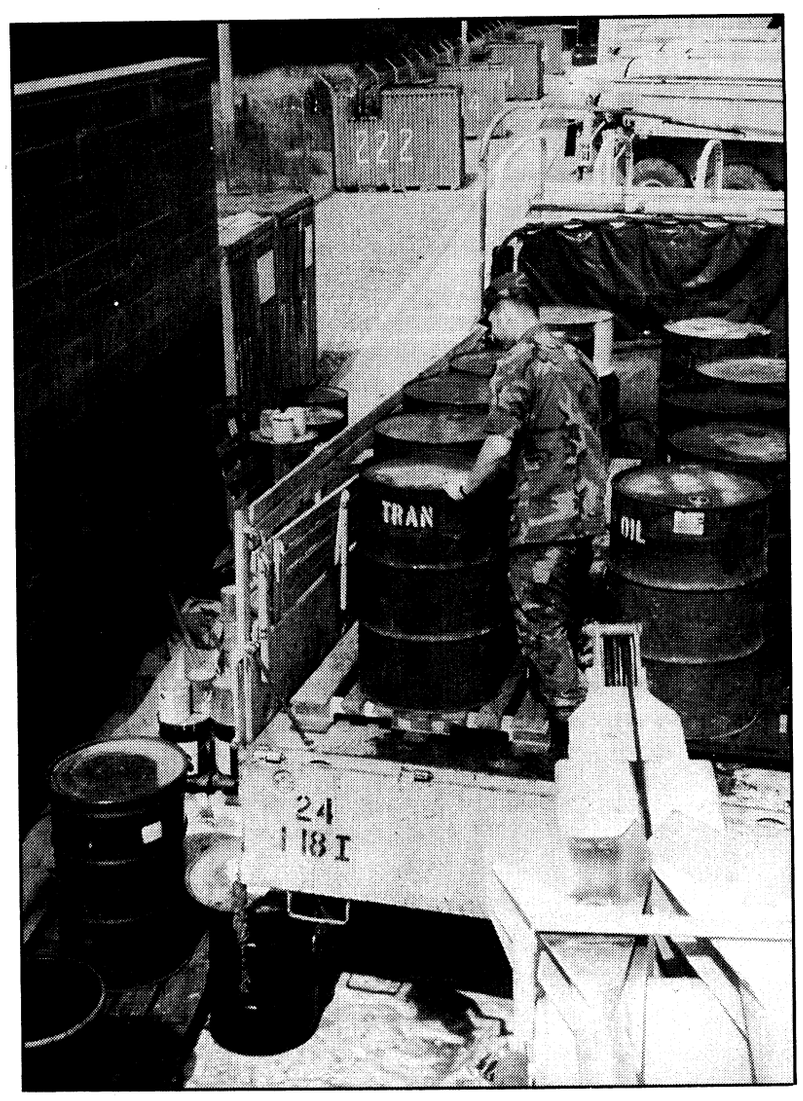
Anyone who works in a mechanized infantry battalion will tell you maintaining it in a combat-ready condition is a tremendous task. Throw in the Environmental Protection Agency as a regulating force with the authority to levy fines and restrict operations, and the task of sustaining becomes even more strenuous.

The focus of the 1st Battalion, 18th Infantry Regiment, according to Sgt. 1st Class James O'Brien, battalion maintenance sergeant, is to sustain the force while preserving the environment.

For the past four months, the battalion environmental non-commissioned officer in charge, Staff Sgt. Michael McDowell, has been working on the motor pool EPA shortcomings.

McDowell has coordinated for the removal of more than 160 tons of contaminated rocks and soil. Most of the necessary digging was done by soldiers, sometimes more than 100 at a time, heaving shovelfuls of contaminated soil into large removable containers.

The soldiers who participated didn't seem to mind the work; some said it was the "best PT" (physical training) they had ever had.



Besides removing contaminated soil, the battalion is working toward cleaning up below-surface contaminants, as well. With the help of the Directorate of Public Works and the Environmental Management Division, the 1st Bn., 18th Inf. Regt., is scheduled to have its underground oil storage tanks removed and replaced with environmentally safe hazardous material tanks before the end of the year.

Other ongoing projects designed to bring the motor pool in line with EPA standards include enhancement of the hazardous materials holding area and the oil and water separation unit. According to Maj. Jerardo Reyes, battalion operations officer, these measures will "bring the battalion to the forefront of environmental compliance."

Petroleums are the hardest items to control in the 1st Bn., 18th Inf. Regt., motor pool, O'Brien said. Following a suggestion by the support platoon leader, lst Lt. Gus Miskowski, the unit has established a daily usage storage building, where soldiers can draw products — including grease, motor oil and antifreeze — off the shelf instead of storing them on vehicles or in multiple buildings.

Miskowski said he estimates the battalion will save hundreds of dollars by simply controlling the products and eliminating waste. Also, McDowell can now go to a central location to collect empty cans for processing for turn-in as scrap metal at the Directorate of Logistics.

Contaminated products, such as containers of mogas (a fuel used in many of the motor pool vehicles) and antifreeze become not only eyesores in the motor pool, but logistical nightmares to remove. The 1st Bn., 18th Inf. Regt., has now formed an environmental section that is employed for the sole purpose of controlling these waste products, O'Brien said.

Joseph H. Gammon

A 1st Battalion, 18th Infantry Regiment, soldier loads hazardous material onto a vehicle.

The job is complicated, he said, because EPA regulations, Fort Benning policies, and materiel handling procedures must all be met before even one 55-gallon drum of a contaminated product can be removed.

O'Brien said people "can forget the dumping of waste products into the river, or out in the field as a method of disposal. Those days are gone forever."

Reyes said the entire 3rd Brigade "stands committed to protecting the environment, and the proper handling of all environmentally damaging products.

"With hard work, patience and dedicated people at the right places," he said, "we will sustain the combat power of the mechanized infantry and protect our delicate ecosystem. The 1st Battalion, 18th Infantry Regiment, would like to thank the good people at DPW for their efforts and guidance in helping tackle this difficult task."

TOW training pays off

By Robert Owens
2nd Battalion, 58th Infantry Regiment

"Death by wire!" was the motto for the tank-killers of Company E, 2nd Battalion, 58th Infantry Regiment, during two weeks of basic tube-launched, optically tracked, wire-guided missile training at Lee Field.

These tank-killers, so called because the TOW is a missile designed to defeat armored vehicles, are National Guardsmen undergoing their second summer of split-option training at Fort Benning.

The soldiers from Co. E received their TOW training from noncommissioned officers and soldiers of Company B, 2nd Bn., 29th Inf. Regt., commanded by Capt. Matt Anderson.

During the rest of the training cycle, drill sergeants Staff Sgts. Kevin Blanton of Hazzard, Ky., and Steven Nelson of Crescent City, Calif., have transformed these citizen-soldiers into trained warriors.

All the soldiers seemed to benefit from the training. Pfc. Thomas Hall from Eubank, Ky., described the training as "enjoyable, since it is almost all hands-on. It has been some good learning."

Pfc. Jackey Walker of Ponca City, Okla., shared those sentiments.

"They taught us a lot of stuff, he said. Vehicle identification, range cards, and tracking are just some of the different (things) we learned."

Pfc. Travis Sawyer of Lanesboro, Mass., said the soldiers were "taught all the ways to properly track, and to mount and dismount the system. They taught us the proper procedures for loading and for handling misfires. The instructors were very intelligent and precise. They taught us everything we'll need to go to combat."

The two weeks of training culminated not only with the Guardsmen achieving military occupational specialty qualification, but also with the firing of two real TOW missiles at Coolidge Range. The instructors selected the two top gunners, determined by numerous tests, to fire the missiles.

Pfc. Thomas Vinton of Pearsall, Texas, fired the first missile from the "Improved TOW Vehicle." His missile, however, malfunctioned and crashed to the ground shortly after leaving the launcher.

After firing, he said, "I was real nervous. I did everything they taught us, but the missile just didn't do what it was supposed to do."

The other top gunner, Pfc. Philip Rosas from Chicago, Ill., fired a TOW from the high-mobility, multi-purpose wheeled vehicle. After identifying a target at 1,800 meters, he fired, tracked and destroyed the target, receiving cheers from the other soldiers.

Rosas described the experience as "just like the simulator.

"The smoke cloud came and I had to pick up the target again," he said. "I just kept the crosshairs on the target like we were taught and the missile impacted right where I aimed. It felt great!"

Urban land nav students learn to find their way

By Albert Abbadessa
2nd Battalion, 58th Infantry Regiment

The urban land navigation course used at the Infantry Training Brigade consists of several points found in the garrison area of Sand Hill. Examples of locations include flagpoles, latrines, an automated teller machine and a gas station.

"The course is designed to provide the initial entry training soldier with the opportunity to further develop the map-reading skills taught in the program of instruction with minimal additional instructor involvement," said Capt. Clarence Butler, commander of Company A, 2nd Battalion, 58th Infantry Regiment.

"In essence, it is a bridge between classroom instruction and the practical application of land navigation skills performed in the woods of a training area," he said.

The training is progressive in nature as the courses are broken down into three levels. In level one, soldiers are given the grid coordinates as well as the direction and distance to the point they are looking for.

We attempt to familiarize the soldier with certain essentials of land navigation, such as the use of terrain association and having an accurate pace count. It benefits everyone that they are first exposed to these skills on the streets of Sand Hill

In level two, the soldiers receive the grid and either the direction or the distance to the next point. In level three, the soldiers receive only the grid coordinates, and must plan their own routes from the listed sequence of points to avoid walking longer distances.

The three levels are further divided into short, medium and long courses, depending on the distance between points.

"Level three most closely simulates the actual land navigation courses they will later negotiate in the woods," said Staff Sgt. Johnny Hendrix, a drill sergeant in Company A. "With urban land navigation, we attempt to familiarize the soldier with certain essentials of land navigation, such as the use of terrain association and having an accurate pace count. It benefits everyone that they are first exposed to these skills on the streets of Sand Hill. By the time we get him to the actual Yankee Road course, the soldier is more comfortable with these skills; he hits the ground running."

"Being able to identify terrain features, shoot a correct magnetic azimuth, and having a correct pace count are all very important procedures taught during map reading and at the land navigation course," said Pvt. 2 Edward Sellers, a soldier assigned to Company A. "The urban land navigation gave me a good clue as to what to expect out on Yankee Road and it made the training we did in the classroom more realistic."

"The majority of these young civilians who arrive here for training have never set foot in a woodline, let alone navigated it with only a compass, a map and their wits," said Staff Sgt. Luke Lichtenwalner, a drill sergeant in Company A. "However, they have walked the streets of a town or city. Put them in the woods, and they tend to lose their bearing. Put them in a built-up area, and they have more confidence to accomplish the task."

Benning hosts Czech Rupublic delegation

By Marcus Nerone
1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment

The 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment, hosted an orientation tour for seven visitors from the Czech Republic Aug. 18 and 19.

The delegation included First Minister of Defense Jiri Popisil and several ranking members in the Czech Army.

The purpose of the visit was to convey to the delegation the methods by which international military students are trained and sponsored at Fort Benning, according to Battalion Commander Lt. Col. Florian K. Rothbrust.

The delegation received a briefing from Maj. Andrew S. Burris, commander of the International Student Training Detachment, highlighting the course curriculum, training and facilities available to international students at Fort Benning.

The delegation was shown in detail how international military students are integrated into the social and academic environment at the Infantry School.

The briefing concluded with a walk-through of the ISTD area, highlighting the religious, academic, administrative and social support provided to all international military students. The delegation was shown how international students live and interact with their American counterparts.

On the evening of the 18th, the delegation was at the Infantry Officers Advanced Course 3-94 farewell ceremony for international military students, which took place at the Fort Benning Officers' Club Supper Club.

The ceremony offered the delegation a chance to witness the recognition of 15 graduating international officers who were presented Association of the United States Army and honorary Doughboy certificates, giving the delegation a firsthand look at the military and civilian honors bestowed upon graduating international military students at Fort Benning.

At the farewell luncheon Aug. 19, Popisil expressed "the utmost respect for the professional training and personalized support received by all international students."

Under the leadership of Rothbrust and Burris, the International Student Training Detachment continues to train international military students in the highest standards and traditions of the U. S. Army.

"The Czech delegation departed knowing that their soldiers coming to Fort Benning would receive the best training and support in the world," Burris said.

ask the judge

Q: I recently arrived at Fort Benning, and I will have to rent an apartment off post because Housing said it would be nine months before we would come up for quarters. I've found a place I like, and the landlord is offering anywhere from three-month to 12-month leases. The 12-month lease is the cheapest, but I'm afraid that I'll get quarters before the 12 months is up. Can you give me any guidance on this?

A: This is a recurring problem we see in the Legal Assistance Division, because as a rule, landlords off post will not let you break your lease just because you get quarters.

There are only two ways to terminate a lease early without penalty. First, if you receive permanent change of station orders or temporary duty orders in excess of 90 days, Georgia law requires that the landlord allow termination with 30 days' written notice from you along with a copy of the orders, and no penalty can be charged. This only applies to PCS and TDY; it does not apply to getting quarters or expiration term of service.

Second, you can terminate early if your lease contract specifically gives you the right to do so, that is, early termination must be in the lease in writing.

Many leases have provision for early termination, but most impose a penalty of some sort for doing so (forfeiture of security deposit, and/or payment of one month's rent over and above the rental you pay for the time you are actually there).

These types of penalties are fully enforceable even though the landlord rents the apartment to another person the day after you move out.

If you are going to be in the situation you have described, you should discuss this fully with the landlord before you sign the lease and reach an agreement about it. If the landlord says that he or she will let you out early without penalty, insist that it be in writing as a part of the lease. Oral promises or agreements do not work.

If the landlord is unwilling to agree to early termination without penalty, you have only three choices: take a shorter term lease at the higher rental rate; take the long-term lease and gamble that you won't get called for quarters; or, don't rent from that landlord.

The Legal Assistance Division has attorneys available to advise you concerning these issues. If possible, before signing a lease, see about making an appointment to see one of our attorneys to review the proposed lease with you. Our telephone number is 545-3281.

Most women lack required calcium

Department of Agriculture

The average American woman over age 44 consumes about half the daily allowance of calcium that experts recommend for good health.

For many older women, this lifelong calcium shortage can contribute to bone loss and the risk of osteoporosis, warns Karen Wilder, a registered dietitian.

Osteoporosis, a condition that results in porous, fragile bones, can cause bone fractures, vertebrae damage and crippled joints. While bone mass cannot be replaced after it has been lost, many health experts believe that estrogen replacement coupled with exercise and a diet rich in calcium may slow the process that weakens bones of postmenopausal women.

Because of the clear connection between osteoporosis and calcium, the National Institutes of Health Consensus Conference (1982) and the National Osteoporosis Foundation recommend that postmenopausal women consume 1,500 milligrams of calcium a day.

Vitamin D, which helps the body absorb calcium, also is an important defense against bone loss. Some health experts suggest that adults over age 50 consume 400 international units daily.

To make sure you get enough calcium and vitamin D each day, Wilder offers these tips:

• Drink two to three servings of skim milk. It is one of the best sources of vitamin D and calcium.

• Eat other dairy products, such as yogurt and cheese. Eight ounces of plain, low-fat yogurt provide 415 milligrams of calcium.

• Include other calcium-rich foods in your daily diet. Foods rich in calcium include:

Fortified skim milk, 8 ounces — 302 milligrams calcium

Lowfat, fruit-flavored yogurt, 8 ounces — 345 milligrams calcium

Cheddar cheese, 1 ounce — 204 milligrams calcium

Sardines with bones, 3 ounces — 324 milligrams calcium

Salmon with bones, canned, 3 ounces — 212 milligrams calcium

Broccoli, cooked and drained, 1 cup — 94 milligrams calcium

Many health experts recommend that adults over age 50 consume at least 1,500 milligrams of calcium daily.

Program can help some homesellers

By Evelyn D. Harris
American Forces Information Service

Homesellers socked in the pocketbook by downsizing may be able to spell relief "H-A-P," for Homeowners Assistance Program.

Through the program, which began in 1966, Uncle Sam gives some relief to homeowners who lose money selling their homes due to real estate market drops triggered by a base closure or downsizing. Both military and civilian employees, including nonappropriated fund employees, are eligible for the program.

According to director John Downey of the Army Corps of Engineers, the program paid $34 million in benefits in fiscal 1993. And 1994 is shaping up to be a record year, with benefits exceeding $65 million paid already.

The program reimburses qualifying homeowners for some losses if certain conditions are met, Downey said. First, a base closure or a reduction in scope of operations must be publicly announced. Second, the closure or reduction must cause a substantial drop in the real estate market in the area of the installation and must make a property sale impossible on "reasonable terms and conditions."

Finally, a Corps of Engineers market impact study must confirm the base closure caused at least a 5 percent drop in local home prices. Downey said the impact can be hard to prove if an installation is in an area already suffering from an economic downturn. Currently, 17 communities in the United States and abroad are on the approved list.

Eligible employees must own and abroad are on the approved list.

Eligible employees must own and live in a property near the affected base and be employed on or near the base at the time the closure or downsizing is publicly announced. They must also be required to move or have their employment terminated as a result of the closure action.

Homeowners can get benefits in one of three ways:

• They can be reimbursed for the difference between the sale price of the home and 95 percent of the home's appraised value before the closure announcement was made.

• They can sell their houses to the government if it has been on the market unsold.

• They can receive financial assistance if forced to default on their mortgages.

Downey warned the Internal Revenue Service treats Homeowners Assistance Program money as ordinary income. Homeowners cannot defer taxes on the money by buying a new home.

Here is how the program works: A home is worth $100,000 before closure. Thus, 95 percent of that is $95,000. The homeowners sell it for $85,000. The assistance program reimburses the homeowners $10,000, so they net 95 percent of their home's preclosure value. IRS taxes the $10,000 as income and will not allow the $5,000 loss as a deduction.

However, said Downey, at least homeowners who make a private sale get a cash benefit they can use to pay taxes. Individuals most upset are those unable to sell their homes. If a homeowner can't sell a home worth $100,000 preclosure, the government will pay $75,000 or the amount left on the mortgage, whichever is greater.

In a sample case, the homeowner owed $80,000 on the mortgage, so Uncle Sam paid the bank $80,000. Fair market value after closure is $60,000, as determined by an appraisal of similar homes in the neighborhood. The homeowner, who received no cash, still must pay taxes on the $20,000 difference between the mortgage and fair market value.

If homeowners are forced to default on their mortgages, the government will pay any enforceable liabilities. This money is also taxable.

Officials are not optimistic about a change in the IRS rules, since various groups have unsuccessfully lobbied for relief for years.

On the Corps of Engineers list of eligible installations are Loring Air Force Base, Maine; Pease Air Force Base and Portsmouth Naval Shipyard, N.H.; Myrtle Beach Air Force Base and Charleston Naval Activities, S.C.; England Air Force Base, La.; Castle Air Force Base and Fort Ord, Calif.; Homestead Air Force Base, Fla.; Naval Undersea Warfare Center, Conn.; Wurtsmith and K.I. Sawyer Air Force Bases, Mich.; Eaker Air Force Base, Ark.; Carswell Air Force Base and Chase Field Naval Air Station, Texas; and Royal Air Force Bentwaters and Royal Air Force Upper Heyford, both in England.

Fort Ord is the most recent addition to the list. To be eligible, homeowners must have owned their homes in the Monterey Bay area on April 12,1991, when the base closure was publicly announced.

For more information, contact your housing assistance office.

New rules for shopping by mail, phone

Better Business Bureau

Last year, Better Business Bureaus across the country received thousands of inquiries and complaints from consumers regarding products they ordered over the telephone or through the mail.

To help protect consumers, the Federal Trade Commission has amended its regulations on mail order to include goods ordered by phone, computer and fax, as well as by mail. Under the new mail or telephone order rule, a company must ship an order within the time stated in the advertisement. If no time is promised, the company must ship the order within 30 days after receiving it.

There is one exception to the 30-day rule. If a company does not promise a shipping time, and the consumer is applying for credit to pay for the purchase, the company has 50 days after receiving the order to ship the merchandise.

If the company is unable to ship within the promised time, the company must give an "option notice." This notice gives consumers the choice of agreeing to the delay or canceling their order and receiving a prompt refund.

According to the BBB, consumers should take certain precautions before placing an order. They should carefully read the product's description, and not rely solely on a picture for information.

Consumers also should understand the company's refund and return policy, the product's availability, and the total cost of the merchandise before placing an order.

To check out an unfamiliar company, consumers can contact the BBB or the state or local consumer protection offices where the company is located.

If there is a problem after the order is received, or if it was never received, it will be easier to resolve with good records.

It is wise to keep a record of the name and address of the company, the date the order was placed, the number of the money order, bank check or credit card used.

By taking a few precautions, shopping by telephone or mail can be a convenient, time-saving alternative to shopping at a store.

Family Ministry program comes to Fort Benning

By Jacqueline Feagin
USAIC Chaplains' Office

A new Family Ministry Program will begin at Fort Benning Monday.

This program is designed to provide training for five chaplains selected by the Department of Army to enroll in a master's degree at Columbus College in counseling.

The program is a result of many months of coordination by the chief of chaplains, the Training and Doctrine chaplain, and chaplain (Col.) Roy G. Plummer, the USAIC staff chaplain.

Families can sign up with the program by calling 545-1760 or they may be referred by their unit chaplain or social worker.

The contract between counselor and client is a training program for chaplains and clients will be videotaped for evaluation in the program. Confidentiality and privileged comments will be maintained by law and Army regulation.

The Family Ministry Training program has a capacity for 10 to 12 cases per week. The purpose is to provide quality ministry to soldiers and families, said Chaplain (Maj.) Robert Davidson, chief of the Family Ministry Training Program.

The program is designed to train chaplains to be family life chaplains and integrates academics with on the job training.

While attending Columbus College to obtain a master of science in counseling, chaplains will provide soldiers and their families with continuous counseling and education, said Davidson.

Upon graduation, the chaplains will be assigned to family life centers installations where they will continue to provide support to unit ministry teams.

The five chaplains enrolled in this 18 month training program are chaplains Ted Nichols, Richard King, Johnny Messer, Wilbert Harrison and Randall Holmes.

Each of them will be assigned by the installation chaplain to do their practicum in battalions and brigades to ensure long-term counseling for soldiers and their families.

According to Plummer, this program will save thousands of dollars for soldiers and families on post and enhance the unit chaplain program.

"Soldiers will no longer have to seek counseling off post. We will bring the counseling to them," he said.

The chaplains in the program have renovated on their own, office space and therapy rooms in Building 2606 in Soldiers' Plaza. To register for the program or to get more information, call Chaplain (Maj.) Robert Davidson at 545-1760.

Learn about Catholicism

By Jacqueline Feagin
USAIC Chaplains' Office

Are you thinking about becoming a Catholic?

Are there some questions about the Catholic Church that you want answered?

The Catholic Parish at Fort Benning extends an invitation to all who are willing to follow in their faith. The Rite of Christian Initiation of Adults will be offered by the Religious Education Center in Building 2522 Wednesdays at 7 p.m. All interested Adults should sign up in advance.

The RCIA is a process of gradual conversion into the Catholic faith. One will not only be seeking membership into the church but also within the whole parish.

Through the RCIA participants will learn direction, have their questions about the church and its teachings answered and learn about their spiritual life and their relationship with God.

You will not become an expert of the Catholic religion or be forced to convert to Catholicism. This is simply a time to begin resolving some of your questions about your faith. As you proceed through the journey you will ask yourself if Catholicism is for you.

For more information on the RCIA or any other Catholic programs, contact Phil Reily at 545-5508.

TV honors its best in Emmy Awards

By Jay Bobbin
Tribune Media Services

He's not in the running — since someone, somehow, forgot to submit his name for a nomination — but he's expected to be there anyway.

SPOTLIGHT

Tim Allen certainly won't be the only familiar face at the Pasadena Civic Auditorium on Sunday, since that site again will be the location of the television industry's yearly celebration of excellence. ABC will broadcast the 46th annual Primetime Emmy Awards ceremony, with Ellen DeGeneres and Allen's "Home Improvement" co-star Patricia Richardson serving as hosts.

One ABC show clearly dominates the proceedings this year, since "NYPD Blue" has made Emmy history by scoring the most nominations ever for any series in its freshman season (26), including one for soon-to-exit regular David Caruso. (That record formerly was held by "Hill Street Blues," also developed by "NYPD" mentor Steven Bochco.)

In addition to Allen, those scheduled to appear as performers and presenters include Jason Alexander, Kathy Baker, Candice Bergen, Brett Butler, Peter Falk, Dennis Franz, Kelsey Grammer, Helen Hunt, recent "Piano" Oscar-winner Holly Hunter, Angela Lansbury, John Larroquette, Jay Leno, Heather Locklear, Bette Midler, Paul Reiser, Jerry Seinfeld, Jane Seymour, Garry Shandling, Tom Skerritt and the quartet of actresses who play NBC's "Sisters."

This year's Emmy show is marked by a renewed spirit of industry camaraderie, something that was missing to a degree in 1993, since ABC's purchase of exclusive rights to the ceremony over four years left rival networks disgruntled, making them hesitant to provide personnel for the event. Since then, ABC and the Academy of Television Arts and Sciences have renegotiated that deal, with the program available again to all of the commercial networks on a rotating basis.

What: Primetime Emmy Awards
When: Sunday on ABC

Don Mischer, who produced last year's telecast and is reprising that role this weekend, has noticed the difference.

"I must say that last year, despite the so-called 'boycott' by the other networks, we had the full cooperation of the creative community," he said, "but it didn't feel complete. Now, I've been getting calls from representatives of all the networks, suggesting bookings and so forth. I just think it's better for the industry and the image of the Emmy Award, so I'm very happy about that move."

Though he allows that overseeing award presentations like the Emmys are "hard shows to do, and so much more can go wrong than can ever go right," Mischer claims he's pleased to be back for his second consecutive stint.

"I felt great about last year, and I thought generally the show had integrity and was very respectful. We will maintain the same approach and attitude, but I think we're going to have a little more fun this year, with more humor and more comedy."

New facilities improving Fort Benning community

By Greg Smith
USAIC Public Affairs Office

"Soldiers from the 36th Engineer Group are witnessing firsthand the new construction behind Engineer Field and Dixie Road.

Once the bulldozers and dump trucks complete their work in two years, the 36th Engineer Group will have a new home.

"Fort Benning Today" will highlight the construction.

Batting cages, a miniature golf course, an arcade and a snack bar will soon open on Fort Benning. Located behind the Main Post Laundromat, these facilities will offer much family entertainment at reasonable prices.

"Fort Benning Today" will show the new facilities.

Fort Benning wins best again

Post is first in Training and Doctrine Command for 3rd consecutive year

By Richard Brill
Special to The Bayonet®

Fort Benning was named the best extra-large installation in Training and Doctrine Command for the third consecutive year.

The announcement was made Tuesday during the Quarterly Excellence Appreciation Breakfast at the Officers' Club Supper Club by Col. Richard A. Pomager, chief of the TRADOC Communities of Excellence Team and provost marshal for TRADOC, Fort Monroe, Va.

"There are some really neat things at Fort Benning that the team has picked up on," Pomager said. "When we talk about excellence itself, it's about the entire community coming together and working hard to reach beyond the stars.

"We have seen that here, reflected in the customer service throughout the community and with the tremendous enthusiasm and cooperation between each of you and your fellow employees and with the communities of Phenix City and Columbus," he continued. "It's just absolutely outstanding.

"The enthusiasm, the innovative ideas you come up with, the self-help programs and the empowerment are really notable," he said. "We see this in only a few places, and this happens to be one of the best we've been to."

In addition, several Fort Benning services were named the best in TRADOC in the extra-large category, including engineering services, civilian personnel services, morale recreation and family support services, chaplain services, logistics services, medical and dental services and best Army and Air Force Exchange System.

The team's four-day visit, Sunday through Wednesday, gave its four members the chance to validate how Fort Benning, the winner of the 1994 Commander in Chief's Award for best Army installation in the world, takes care of its soldiers, their family members and civilian employees.

"The team was here to see if we walked our talk," said Sarah McLaney, post COE coordinator. "They wanted to see if the things we said in the nomination packet sent to TRADOC Headquarters were true, and they found out they were."

McLaney said Fort Benning personnel showed outstanding enthusiasm and cooperation during the team's visit.

"One of Fort Benning's strongest assets is the ability of its personnel to really work as a team and put their heads together and come up with a solution to a problem," she said. "The enthusiasm and motivation shown at the excellence pep rally in Infantry Hall Sept. 9 was also truly outstanding."

Besides Pomager, team members included: Barbara Harmon, TRADOC's chief of Program and Budget Operations: John Blake, logistic management specialist for the Directorate of Logistics, TRADOC: and Charlie French, the senior staffing specialist for TRADOC.

Each team member validated specific functional areas described in the nomination packet sent to TRADOC Headquarters in June.

Pomager validated strategic planning and public safety, a new category this year.

French validated the post's performance in public affairs, military personnel services, the Army Career and Alumni Program and civilian personnel services.

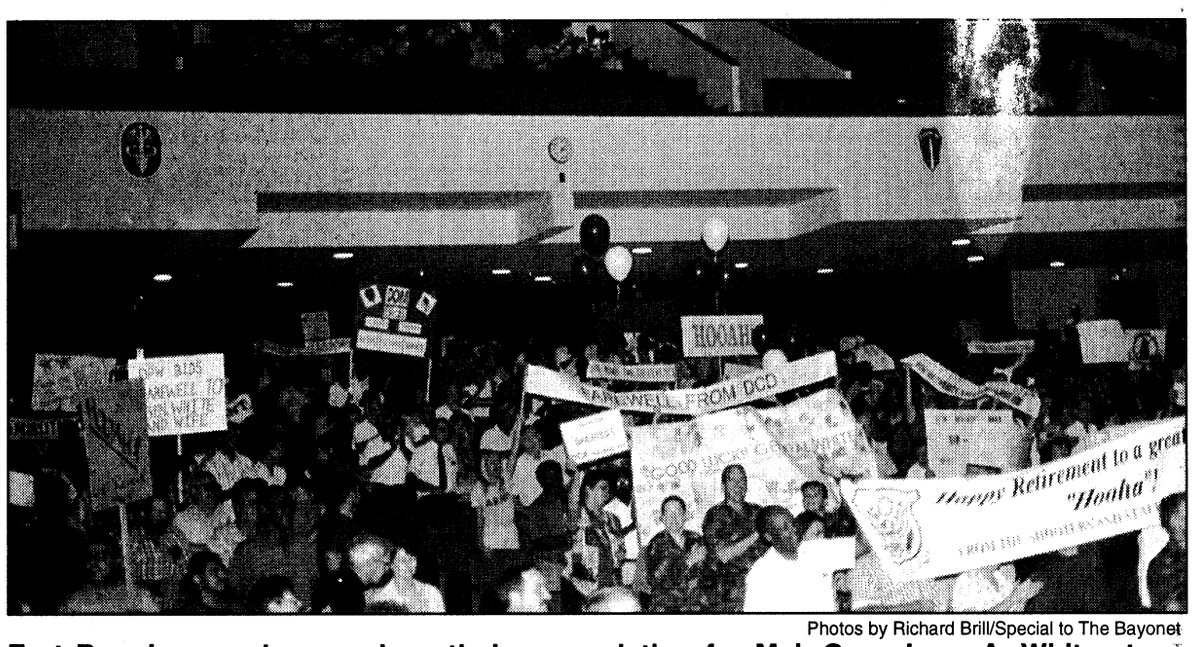
Harmon validated chaplain; Staff Judge Advocate; Morale, Welfare and Recreation; resource management; and housing services.

Blake validated logistics; engineering; medical and dental; and Army and Air Force Exchange Service.

Six areas in particular were emphasized to the team, McLaney said. These were customer service, Total Army Quality, facilities improvement, single soldier initiatives, self-help projects and installation management action planning accomplishments.

Also, to validate the 15 functional areas listed in the packet, team members presented 200 hats of excellence to employees.

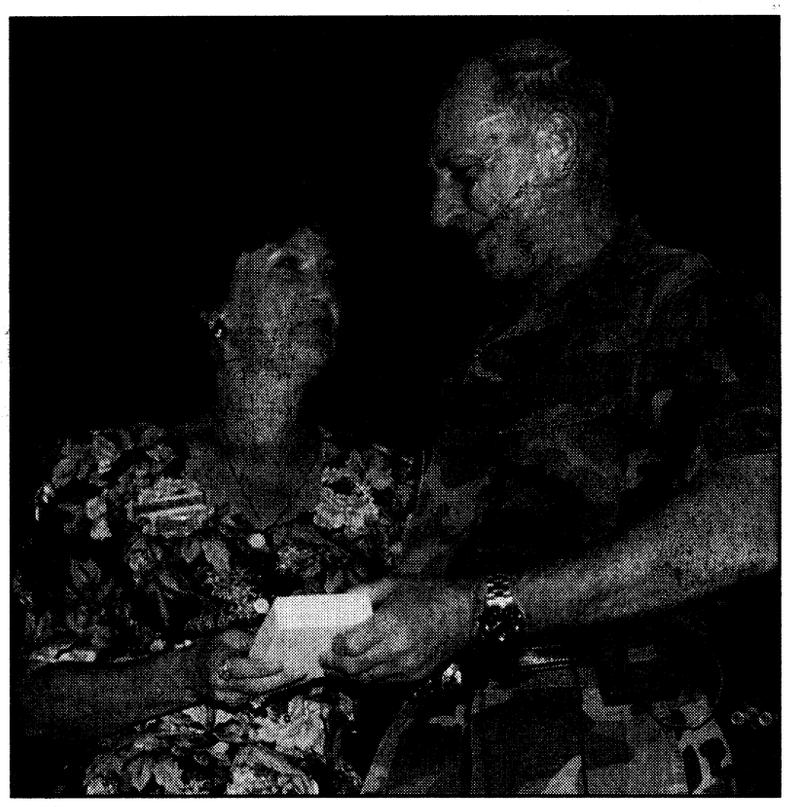
Fort Benning was one of nine TRADOC posts named a finalist in the Communities of Excellence competition in July. The selection was based on the nomination packet sent to TRADOC Headquarters.



Competing in the extra-large category were Fort Benning and Fort. Sill, Okla. Other winners are: Fort Leonard Wood, Mo., for best large installation, Fort McClellan, Ala.., for best medium installation and Fort Monroe, Va., for best small installation. Fort Bliss, Texas, and Fort Eustis, Va., were tied for most improved installation.

The COE competition will continue at the Department of the Army level.

Fort Benning will submit a nomination packet to DA and if selected as a finalist will be visited by the Army-level COE team.



"We believe we are well on our way to winning the CINC award for the second time in a row," McLaney said. "No other post has won the CINC award twice, but that's our goal and we believe that if any installation can do it, it's Fort Benning. Fort Benning is the best. Hooah!"

Hendrix glad to be back at Home of the Infantry

By Ruth J. Spaller
Bayonet staff writer

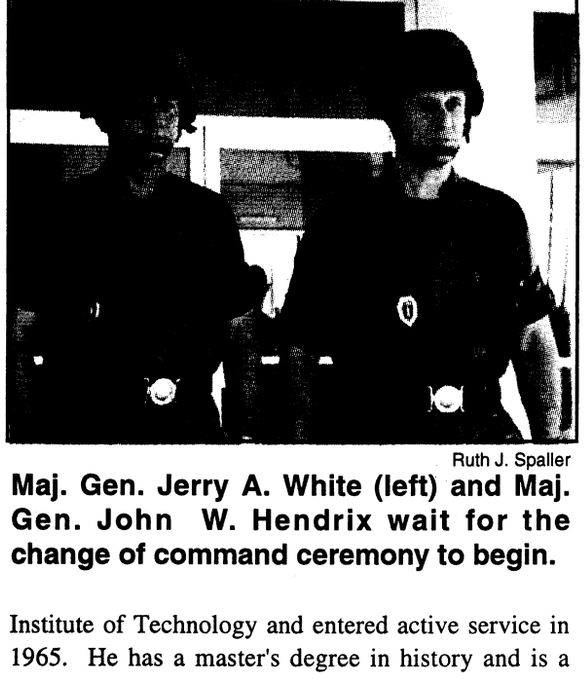
Command of Fort Benning and the U.S. Army Infantry Center changed hands Thursday with a full review and retirement ceremony on York Field in front of Infantry Hall.

Outgoing commander Maj. Gen. Jerry A. White, who is retiring from the Army Oct. 30 after 35 years of service, is succeeded by Maj. Gen. John W. Hendrix, who served under White as the assistant commandant of the U.S. Army Infantry School from August 1992 to July 1993.

"It's the end of one chapter and the beginning of another," said Gen. Frederick M. Franks Jr., the Training and Doctrine commander.

Franks described White as "a soldier of vision, a soldier of passion and a soldier of toughness," who "led his soldiers, his team, with a 'Follow Me' spirit."

White said it was "very difficult" to leave the Army, comparing his career to a wonderful book that you don't want to end. For his family, White said, the story ends where it began, at Fort Benning. "The book has been written and only memories remain," he said. He then welcomed Hendrix, saying he knew the soldiers and the community were in great hands.



"I accept command with a great sense of enthusiasm, challenge and humility," Henrix said. He and his wife, Cheri, are "delighted," he said, to be back at Fort Benning, his "professional home."

Hendrix returns to Fort Benning from Germany, where he served as deputy chief of staff for operations, U.S. Army Europe and Seventh Army.

Hendrix was commissioned from the Georgia Institute of Technology and entered active service in 1965. He has a master's degree in history and is a graduate of the Army War College, Fixed Wing Aviator Course and the U.S. Army Command and General Staff College.

Hendrix served two combat assignments as a rifle company commander in the Republic of Vietnam. He has also served as an instructor for the U.S Army Ranger School, commander of the 2nd Battalion, 13th Infantry Division (Mechanized), commander of the 2nd Brigade, 8th Infantry Division (Mechanized), and as the assistant division commander of the 1st Armored Division during Operation Desert Storm.

His awards include the Defense Distinguished Service Medal, the Legion of Merit with two oak leaf clusters, the Silver Star with oak leaf cluster and the Bronze Star with "V" device and three oak leaf clusters. He also holds the Combat Infantryman Badge.

New CG to keep focus on quality

commander's column

Maj. Gen John W. Hendrix is Fort Benning's new commanding general.

It's great to be back at Fort Benning, the best post in the world!

After my change of command yesterday, I met with all the major unit commanders, directors and staff officers. I reaffirmed the direction you are taking — be the best post in the Army, take care of soldiers and their families, train to standard and continue the excellent relations with our civilian neighbors in the tri-community.

First and foremost we must continue our focus on quality — quality of training, quality of service and quality of life.

Quality is a readiness issue. Quality training will keep our soldiers alive in combat. Quality service ensures we can get that quality training because we know our soldiers and equipment will be where needed, when needed.

By providing our soldiers with the best possible quality of life, we keep our good soldiers in the Army. They stay because they know the Army cares and their family members will be cared for when they deploy. Quality of life is certainly a readiness issue.

I look forward to working with the best work force in the Army. There are challenges ahead, but opportunities as well.

By pulling together, we can continue to excel and make Fort Benning a place where soldiers, civilians and family members want to serve and live.

And we will continue to be the best post in the Army.

Reader asks MPs about traffic flow

What is the matter with traffic flow? I called the Military Police operations section and after talking with two different soldiers was given this answer — somebody could not get off post one morning and complained, so we were ordered to change it.

First, traffic flow has been working just fine for many, many years. It is ridiculous to change a good system for one person.

Next, we had a good system that allowed time for those who begin their duty day at 8 a.m., but now we are late because traffic flow is taken down by 7:45 a.m.

Then the traffic flow in the afternoon is down when many soldiers and civilians are getting off work at 5 p.m. Could someone please write a response as to exactly why this was changed?

Dorothy Long

Military Police Activity response:

There is nothing wrong with the Fort Benning traffic flow, and the changes made to traffic cut hours were not made to accommodate any one individual; they were made to accommodate all personnel assigned to and working on Fort Benning.

Whenever there is change, it takes people time to adjust, and that is where we are now.

There has been minor inconvenience to some people attempting to get to work by 8 a.m. However, with adjustments to individual departure times, the majority of these delays will be eliminated.

Currently, traffic cut hours of operation are:

Set-up: 6:40 to 7 a.m.; 3:40 to 4 p.m.

Operational: 7 to 7:45 a.m.; 4 to 4:45 p.m.

Take down time: 7:45 to 8 a.m.; 4:45 to 5 p.m.

There are no plans to change the times back to the way they were.

This information was sent out over PROFS and in The Bayonet prior to actual execution.

For more information, call Maj. Drury, chief, Law Enforcement Operations, at 545-4412.

Spouse says 911 dispatcher rude

I am writing this letter in regard to a recent telephone call I had to make to Fort Benning's 911 and information numbers.

It was a Sunday at approximately 10:30 p.m. and my daughter and I had just gone to bed. (My husband was in Kentucky for the weekend assigned to color guard duty.)

About 10:45, I heard some noises in the rear of my quarters, which is fenced off and partially surrounded by bushes. I thought it was probably just a cat or something, so I continued to listen.

A few seconds later I heard someone trying to open the screen door to the rear entrance of the house. (All doors were securely locked, even the screen doors, and all entrance lights were on.)

I picked up the telephone and dialed 911. A dispatcher answered the telephone and said "Fort Benning 911 emergency, is this an emergency?"

I immediately advised the dispatcher, "I'm hearing noises in my backyard and ..." He cut me off and sarcastically remarked, "Ma'am, that's not an emergency," so, I sarcastically remarked back to him that I not only heard noises, but someone was trying to get into the rear of my quarters and that my daughter and I were home alone since my husband was gone for a few days, and could he please send a Military Police officer over. He nonchalantly advised me that he would have a unit sent over.

An MP came to my house. I told him what I had heard, and he told me he would go look. About five minutes later, the MP told me he did find someone in the bushes and that he tried to chase him. However, he ran into the woods.

He said he had called for backup and for a K-9 unit to report. He said he would be back to let me know what happened.

To make a long story short, the MPs never caught the individual. The MP came in to get my information, and I told him about the rudeness I had experienced with the dispatcher. He told me that the dispatchers tell them that another spouse, home alone, is calling; she's hearing noises so just go over the quarters and kind of look around — make them happy.

The MP told me he was startled to find someone actually in the bushes; he wasn't expecting someone to be in them.

Amelia G. Mendez
Fort Benning

Military Police Activity response:

The Military Police Activity regrets any inconvenience or hardships during Amelia Mendez's request for assistance July 31.

However, the procedures that the call taker followed were correct and in accordance with MPA policy for receiving calls on the E-911 System.

Because of the number of nonemergency calls coming into 911, it is imperative that the calls be screened to determine if they meet the criteria to be handled on the E-911 or transferred to a nonemergency line.

All 911 dispatchers have been reminded to be courteous and professional while receiving calls on the system and all areas pertaining to their duties.

Ranger says thanks for 'memories'

The Ranger Reunion in Columbus was again a moving experience for me. We were treated so well by everyone involved. The things that we did and people we met will remain in my memories. It reminded me that we're all part of the same family.

This prompted me to put down some thoughts for you to share with your readers if you wish. Just to tell the young that we care and the old that they should care.

Rangers lead the way!

OCS Hall of Fame recognizes leaders

2 Fort Benning colonels among inductees

By Richard Brill
Special to The Bayonet©

Ninety-one officers joined the honored ranks of the Officer Candidate School Hall of Fame during the annual induction ceremony Sept. 9 in Infantry Hall's Marshall Auditorium.

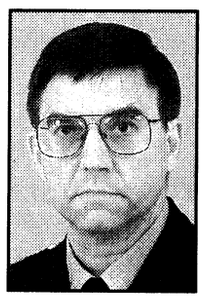
Among those newly honored were two Fort Benning colonels who work in Infantry Hall.

Col. Arnold J. Canada, chief of the Dismounted Battlespace Battle Lab, and Col. James S. Gribschaw Jr., chief of Training and Doctrine Command System Manager, Anti-Tank Missiles, were both selected to join the OCS Hall of Fame.

Established in 1958, the OCS Hall of Fame honors OCS graduates who have attained the rank of colonel, were awarded the Medal of Honor, or who have been elected or appointed to positions of state or national prominence. Including this year's 90 inductees, 1,730 graduates of OCS and the Ground General School at Fort Riley, Kan., have been inducted since the Hall of Fame was started.

"Induction into the OCS Hall of Fame is the single highest honor that the Officer Candidate School can bestow upon one of its graduates," said Lt. Col. Donald B. Chung, commander of the 3rd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment.

"The inductees represent the gallantry, achievement, sacrifice and perseverance that are hallmarks of this institution," he added.



The induction ceremony included remarks from guest speaker Maj. Gen. William F. Garrison, commander of the John F. Kennedy Warfare Center.

"The inductees today represent service in World War II, Korea, Vietnam, Desert Storm, Just Cause and Somalia," Garrison said. "You men, when it came time to go, you were ready to go. You sacrificed all and were prepared to sacrifice your life if need be. You have added worth to the OCS graduates of all ages."

"Personally, it's a great honor to be selected, especially when one considers the number of candidates who are submitted for selection," Canada said. "This is certainly one of the highlights of my career and an outstanding honor to be included among the ranks of some of my most prestigious colleagues."

Col. Arnold J. Canada is chief of the Dismounted Battlespace Battle Lab at Fort Benning.

Col. James S. Gribschaw is chief of the Training and Doctrine Command Systems Manager, Antit-tank Missiles.

Canada received his commission in 1970. His many assignments include chief of concepts development for the chief of staff's AirLand Battle Future Special Study Group at Fort Leavenworth, Kan. He commanded the 2nd Battalion, 7th Infantry, 24th Infantry Division, at Fort Stewart, Ga., and deployed with that battalion to Operation Desert Shield.

Gribschaw enlisted in the Army in 1966 and received his commission through OCS in 1967. His assignments include two tours of duty in Vietnam and chief of the Logistics Posture Branch during Operations Desert Shield and Desert Storm.

Special Forces to visit Fort Benning

U.S. Army Special Operations Command

FORT BRAGG, N.C. — Special Forces recruiters will be at Fort Benning in mid-September to brief interested soldiers on the Special Forces career field.

Briefings will be held in Room 54 in Infantry Hall Sept. 19 to 22 at 10 a.m. and 1 p.m. each day.

Recruiters are currently looking for soldiers to attend the Special Forces Assessment and Selection Courses scheduled for November and January. SFAS is a demanding 21-day program which evaluates soldiers' physical, mental and teamwork potential to make it through the Special Forces Qualification Course.

Specialists and corporals who have not attended the Primary Leadership Development Course may still apply for the career field, according to Special Forces recruiters.

All candidates must pass physical fitness and swim tests given by SF recruiters. Unit physical training and swim tests are no longer valid. Uniform for physical training test is battledress uniform and running shoes. The minimum overall score for the PT test is 220. The PT test consists of push-ups, sit-ups and a two-mile run, graded on the 17-to-21-year-old scale, regardless of age.

Candidates are also required to swim 50 meters in a pool wearing their uniform and boots with no time limit imposed.

Soldiers are encouraged to have a Special Forces physical before the recruiting team's arrival. Copies of DA Forms 2A and 2-1 should be brought to the briefings.

Each candidate must be a U.S. citizen and have a high-school diploma or GED. All applicants must pass the Special Forces physical; be airborne qualified or volunteer for Airborne school; and possess, or be able to qualify for a secret security clearance.

A minimum general technical score of 110 on the Armed Services Vocational Aptitude Battery is required.

To learn more about Special Forces, soldiers and their wives are encouraged to attend the briefings.

For further information or an application packet, applicants may call the Special Forces recruiters at (910) 432-1818 or DSN 239-1818.

Job fair will feature transportation work

Job Assistance Center

Representatives from several trucking companies will converge at the Job Assistance Center today from 9 a.m. to noon for a job fair.

This career day will offer trucking companies and job seekers the chance to meet face-to-face to discuss employment opportunities.

Attendees will have the chance to sit down with top trucking company recruiters and find out exactly what they have to offer.

The JAC Army Employer Network has more than 20 trucking firms that actively recruit transitioning service members.

Additionally, leads through the transition bulletin board lists many driving positions on a daily basis. Also, there are demand requirements for mechanics, maintenance supervisors, dispatchers and terminal managers.

Some trucking companies pay salaries while an individual completes a comprehensive training program. First-year wages for inexperienced drivers are normally well above other entry level jobs.

For information on qualifications and training, come to the Job Fair today in Building 1634. Interested persons may sign up for this Career Day by coming by the Job Assistance Center or calling 545-2308 or 545-2309.

SatoTravel, ITR open new offices

Now located at post's Main Mall

By Marc G. Turchin
Bayonet staff writer

SatoTravel and the Information, Ticketing and Registration office officially opened their doors for business Monday afternoon at a new location in the Main Mall.

The new location is inside the Main Mall where the day-care center used to be. The office has been there since Aug. 18.

The old location, Building 247, closed its doors Aug. 17.

Monday's festivities included the Infantry Band performing, the official ribbon-cutting ceremony and remarks from Maj. Gen. Jerry A. White.

"We (have) placed a great deal of emphasis on providing the soldiers the very best we can provide them in terms of services and facilities," White said.

After the ribbon-cutting, guests were invited inside to tour the new office and to register to win trips to different cities around the world.

The 3,212 square-foot facility cost $178,900 to renovate. The renovation is a result of the combined efforts of the directorates of Community Activities, Public Works and Contracting and Phenix Mechanical Contractors.

Marc G. Turchin

Guests visiting the new SatoTravel and ITR office register to win trips.

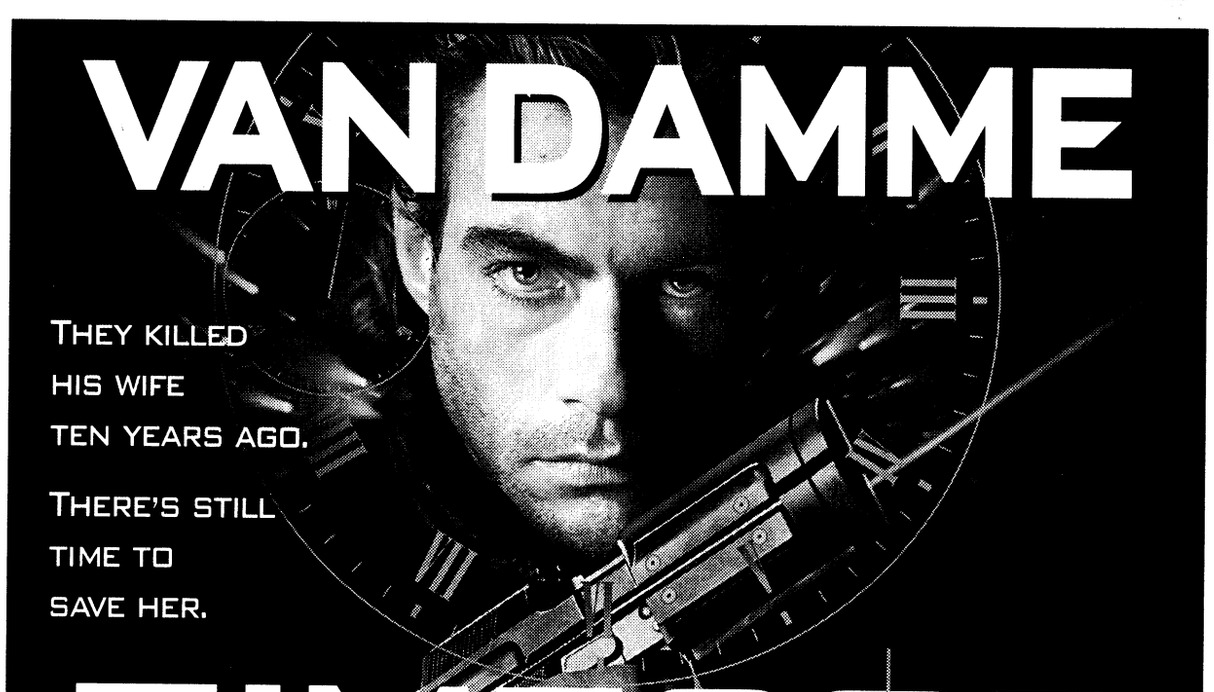
Financing for the move was provided by the Morale, Welfare and Recreation fund, according to Lamar Caldwell, chief of Community Recreation Division, Directorate of Community Activities.

Increased space and customer convenience are the reasons for moving the office, Caldwell said.



"Since it (is) located in the mall, it only takes one stop to do a lot of things," he said.

SatoTravel can handle all military and Department of Defense civilian leisure plans, and ITR offers discounted tickets to local movie theaters; to theme parks such as Six Flags, Walt Disney World and Universal Studios; and to local concerts, including Atlanta.

Operating hours for the office are Tuesday through Saturday from 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. SatoTravel will be open Mondays from 10 a.m. to 6 p.m., but ITR will be closed. Sunday hours for both are 1 to 5 p.m. For more information, call 544-2970 or 544-2972.

Infantryman

Maj. Gen. Jerry A. White signs up as a member of the National Infantry Association last week as he speaks to Executive Director Biff Hadden. White, the first to register as a member, noted that other branches of the Army have associations, and that it was imperative the infantry have one. The purpose of the organization, he said, is to tell the infantry story and bring all segments of the infantry under one umbrella and to instill its soldiers with a special pride in the infantry.

Commissary sales to help Red Cross

In October, the American Red Cross will benefit from United States commissary sales from major grocery manufacturers.

The promotion, "Helping Military Families Today," will benefit the Red Cross Services to the Armed Forces program, which assists military families.

Beginning Oct. 1, products of participating manufacturers will be discounted to commissary shoppers, and a contribution will be made to the Red Cross by the manufacturers based on sales of these products through Oct. 31.

Additional product discounts will be offered through coupons by some manufacturers in Military Lifestyle magazine's Couponer.

Military families wishing to support American Red Cross Services to the Armed Forces may do so by purchasing specially marked products in their commisary during October.

The American Red Cross Services to Armed Forces program serves members of the military and their families through 262 Red Cross stations located at 569 military installations in the United States and abroad.

Some 700 paid staff members and more than 49,000 volunteers delivering services to military families are supported throughout the country by approximately 2,000 active Red Cross chapters.

System allows weather detachment to detect lightning

Shelby Carr

Senior Airman Derek A. Eisentrout, an airman with the 17th Air Support Operations Squadron, Weather, C Flight, watches the lightning detection system and prepares to plot the location on the weather radar.

By Shelby Carr
Bayonet staff writer

The weather detachment at Lawson Army Airfield, the 17th Air Support Operations Squadron, Weather, C Flight, began using a new lightning detection system recently.

The system detects electrostatic discharges in the atmosphere up to 115 miles away and will allow the weather detachment to warn soldiers all over Fort Benning of lightning strikes, said Capt. Jeffrey Peters, commander of the flight.

"The ultimate goal here is troop safety," Peters said.

Before the detachment received the detection system, its airmen had to see lightning or hear thunder before issuing a warning, Peters said.

The old advisories covered only five miles around the airfield, while the new system allows lightning detection and warnings all over Fort Benning.

"I feel the main user will be Range Control," Peters said. When lightning is sighted, the weather detachment sends an advisory to Range Control and they get it out to the troops in the field, he said.

The detection system registers the first lightning strike. The strike location is then compared with the weather radar to determine the exact location of the thunderstorm, and an advisory is issued.

"The system will let us know when lightning is in the field," Peters said. "It is up to the people in the field to take the necessary safety precautions."

One problem with the system is its inability to predict the first lightning strike. When the detection system goes off, lightning has already occurred.

Peters said the system would still be useful, however; especially in the winter when the tops of thunderstorms are much lower and harder to detect on radar.

Safety Office: Take precautions in lightning

By Shelby Carr
Bayonet staff writer

According to the Infantry Branch Safety Office, the following precautions should be taken before a storm:

• Get off high ground and seek low ground and depressed areas.

• If possible, seek shelter in a building. Automobiles with metal roofs, tanks, armored personnel carriers and cranes are considered safe.

• Do not take cover under or near an isolated tree.

• Do not huddle together in a group with other people.

• If good cover is not available during a lightning storm, go to low ground and kneel.

• People with weapons and load bearing equipment should place them on the ground and take immediate cover.

• Avoid athletic fields, exposed sheds, railroad tracks, overhead wires, clotheslines, wire fences and any electrically conductive elevated objects.

ACAP to kick off new season of career days

Army Career and Alumni Program

The Fort Benning Army Career and Alumni Program and Job Assistance Center kicks off a new career day season Saturday.

Career day at the JAC has been highly successful over the past 1 1/2 years with many participants landing good jobs, according to Harold Ericksen, JAC manager.

"The concept of weekly career days was adopted because of the dynamics of the job market, Ericksen said. "Jobs that are here today are quickly filled. Jobs that are not here today may very well exist tomorrow.

"Conducting job fairs on a semi-annual basis may not meet the needs of employers or job seekers," he continued. "Therefore, we conduct frequent Career Days at the Fort Benning Job Assistance Center.

"As you enter the 'Hall of Champions' at the center, you will see the wall full of stars representing examples of clients who have achieved success in the job search. Many of these success stories are a result of Career Day," he said.

During the upcoming season, a new approach for Career Day will be tested. Beginning Saturday, Career Day will be scheduled according to themes. Employers with common needs and clients with common job search objectives will have the sole use of the JAC on that day.

The first round of career days scheduled by themes are as follows:

Saturday — Transportation Day and Environmental Training

Thursday — Small Business, Entrepreneur Day

Sept. 30 — Professional Recruiter Day

Oct. 14 — Management Day

TBA — Corrections, Law Enforcement Day

TBA — Environmental Day

TBA — Food Service Day

TBA — Military Contractors

A monthly schedule will appear in Infantry Hall's Classroom 30, ACAP Building 2617 and at the Job Assistance Center, Building 2634. For more information, call 545-2308 or 545-2309.

Martin Army Community Hospital, which averages about 1,200 births annually, has had no SIDS occurrence in more than two years.

Sudden infant death syndrome

Researchers identify high-risk groups

By Karen S. Morarie
Bayonet staff writer

SIDS strikes some 7,000 to 8,000 babies annually in the United States

Almost every parent has heard rumors of it, and most have felt some fear — have tiptoed, at least once, to their baby's crib and listened for the infant's breathing.

These parents have heard that, sometimes, babies' breathing and even their lives can be stopped without warning by a condition nobody understands. They've heard of "crib death," though not necessarily of sudden infant death syndrome, and they often don't know that researchers have made some progress in their understanding of SIDS.

SIDS strikes some 7,000 to 8,000 babies annually in the United States and accounts for one-third of all infant deaths after the newborn period, according to the American SIDS Institute. The condition, formally identified in the 1960s, is defined as "the sudden and unexplained death of an apparently healthy infant or young child whose death remained unexplained following a thorough post-mortem investigation."

The institute reported in the most recent edition of its newsletter, The Promise, that "The incidence of sudden infant death syndrome has steadily decreased over the past decade. Between 1980 and 1991, the SIDS rate dropped by approximately 15 percent."

According to Dr. (Capt.) Robert Underhill, staff pediatrician at Martin Army Community Hospital, research has identified a number of factors that can indicate when an infant is at high risk for SIDS.

Identification and monitoring, he said, are responsible for some of the decrease in SIDS deaths, but some authorities now believe the decreased rate reflects that a number of cases formerly labeled as SIDS were actually the result of other causes.

Underhill said research suggests a number of deaths formerly attributed to SIDS actually resulted from congenital heart disease, pneumonia, infection, accidental suffocation or child abuse.

According to The Promise, "SIDS is not a disease. It is a classification used when a post-mortem evaluation fails to reveal a lethal process or identify a known cause of death."

"That's why autopsies are necessary," Underhill said. "If an autopsy indicates another cause of death, SIDS is ruled out."

Underhill said in his two years at MACH, there have not, to his knowledge, been any cases of SIDS. Natalie Kaminski, patient administration division at MACH, said current records, which reflect the last two years, show no deaths from SIDS.

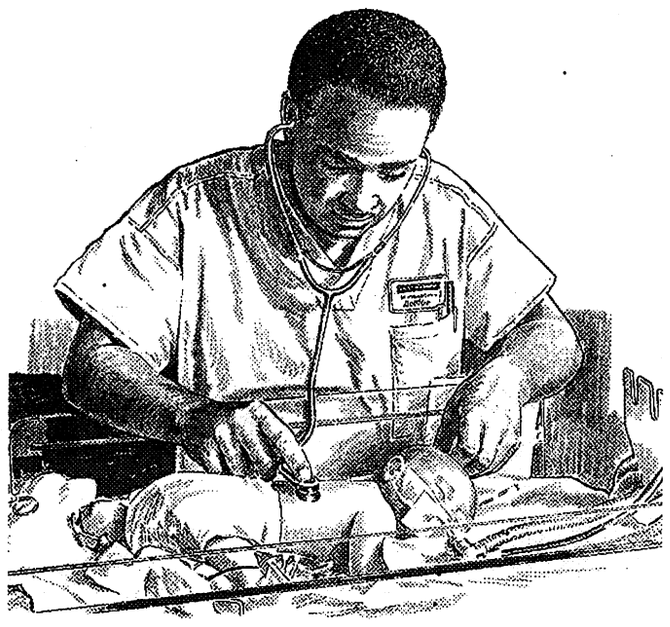
Some risk factors that have been associated with SIDS are:

- Poor prenatal care
- Smoking during pregnancy
- The mother's use of cocaine, heroin or methadone during pregnancy
- Age of mother — rate is highest for babies born to teenage mothers, decreases for babies born to older mothers.
- Most commonly occurs during winter months. Ninety percent of SIDs cases occur before the baby reaches six months of age and peaks between two and four months.
- The shorter the interval between pregnancies, the higher the SIDS rate. The institute recommends parents wait at least a year between the birth of a child and the next pregnancy.
- SIDS often occurs in association with mild colds, vomiting and diarrhea.
- Breast-fed babies have a lower rate than formula-fed babies.
- The use of Phenothiazines (drugs used in some cough and cold medicines) for babies 2 years old or younger appears to be associated with the occurrence of SIDS.

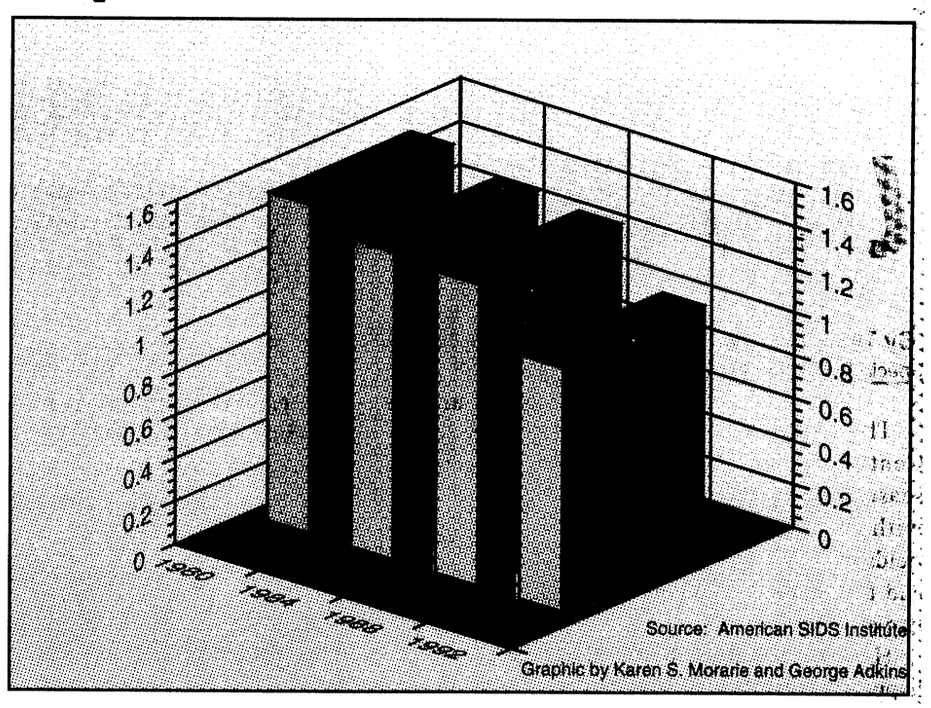
Infants at increased risk for SIDS include:

- Infants weighing less than 3 1/2 pounds at birth
- Infants whose sibling dies of SIDS
- The second or succeeding child born to a teen-age mother

The American SIDS Institute recommends that parents of high-risk infants consider using home monitoring systems.



These systems indicate when a baby has an episode of interrupted breathing, or when the heart stops.



Underhill warns while monitors can provide parents a warning, they will not prevent the occurrence of SIDS.

"The idea is that when a monitor goes off, you can stimulate the baby to restart (his or her) breathing, or you can seek medical attention. This may be helpful, but because we don't know what causes SIDS, there is no treatment for it."

For more information about SIDS, contact the American SIDS Institute at (800) 847-SIDS, in Georgia, or (800) 232-SIDS in other locations.

U.S. SIDS rate per 1,000 births

Research has demonstrated a lowered SIDS rate in high-risk infants if they receive appropriate medical care and participate in a home-monitoring program

USAIC flag football season kicks off

By Terry K. Ray
Special to The Bayonet©

The 1994 U.S. Army Infantry Center intramural flag football season kicked off Monday night with five games at Essebagger fields one and two on Kelley Hill and two games on Engineer Field two on Main Post.

Here is a rundown of what happened with three of the games at Essebagger Field No. 2.

The Headhunters of Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor Regiment, 3rd Brigade, 24th Infantry Division, pinned the Cobras of Company C, 2nd Bn., 69th Ar. Regt., 3rd Bde., 24th Inf. Div., in the opening game of the season 12-6.

The Headhunters drew first blood on a 38-yard touchdown pass from quarterback Floyd Gardner to wide out Ray Leak midway through the first half. The extra point attempt failed, giving the Headhunters a 6-0 advantage.

An interception by Headhunter safety Carter Evans killed a Cobra scoring attempt late in the half. The Headhunters ended the first half up 6-0.

On the Cobras' first possession of the second half, quarterback Michael Prather missed his receiver on a fourth-down play. Defensive lineman Stanley Smith came up with the interception, setting up the Headhunters with good field position for their first drive of the half.

Four plays later, Gardner hooked up with tailback Kelton Hatchett on a 45-yard touchdown pass for a 12-0 lead.

Cobras backup quarterback Greg Armwood connected with wide receiver Leonard Peterson on a 40-yard touchdown strike on their next possession, cutting the lead to 12-6 with less than two minutes to play. Time ran out on the Cobras, giving the Headhunters the first win of the new season 12-6.

The Red Dawgs of Service Battery, 4th Battalion, 41st Field Artillery Regiment, 3rd Brigade, 24th Infantry Division, collared the Dogs of Battery C, 4th Bn., 41st FA Regt., 3rd Bde., 24th Inf. Div., 6-0 in game two.

The only score of the game came on a 35-yard bomb from quarterback Lamonous Bonner to Chris Boatwright with less than a minute to play in the game.

Defense and penalties were the name of the game. Interceptions by Red Dawgs' safety Marvin McPhatter and cornerback Ronald Dawson effectively killed two drives by the Dogs.

The final play of the game for the Dogs would have tied the game, but an illegal forward pass penalty wiped out the score and cost the Dogs the play, ending the game at 6-0.

In the final game of the night, the Headhunters of Headquarters and Headquarters Battery, 4th Bn., 41st FA Regt., 3rd Bde., 24th Inf. Div., corralled the Bulls of Battery B, 4th Bn., 41st FA Regt., 3rd Bde., 24th Inf. Div., 18-12 in overtime.

A two-yard touchdown pass from Headhunter quarterback Joseph Collins to split end David Vaught put the Headhunters up 6-0 early in the first half.

The Bulls tied the game at 6-6 two possessions later on a 40-yard strike from quarterback Charles Benning to wide out Leslie Davis.

An interception by Benning stopped a Headhunter drive at the Bulls goalline. Three plays later Headhunter safety Ronnie Byron returned the favor by picking off Benning and returning the ball to the Bulls' 10-yard line. Tailback William Davis slipped past the Bulls line for a 1-yard touchdown run, giving the lead to the Headhunters 12-6.

A time-consuming drive by the Bulls late in the second half tied the game at 12-12 when Benning hit Travis Sprowl with an 18-yard touchdown pass. An interception by Bulls cornerback Davis gave the Bulls one last shot to win in regulation time, but time ran out on the second play from scrimmage.

The Headhunters defense held the Bulls on four downs from the 10-yard line, setting up the Headhunters with a chance to win the game. Three plays later, Collins ended the game with a short pass to Vaught for the touchdown and an 18-12 win.

In other action Monday night at Essebagger Field No. 2.

HHC, 317th Engineer Battalion, 3rd Bde., 24th Inf. Div., won by forfeit 1-0 when Co. C, 317th Eng. Bn., 3rd Bde., 24th Inf. Div., could only field five players at game time.

Co. B, 324th Forward Support Battalion, 3rd Bde., 24th Inf. Div., downed Co. A, 324th Fwd. Spt. Bn., 3rd Bde., 24th Inf. Div., 14-6.

In the Combined League at Engineer Field No. 2 Monday night.

Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment, pounded the 4th Ranger Training Battalion, 12-0.

Co. E, 1st Bn. (Abn.), 507th Infantry, 11th Inf. Regt., slipped by Co. D, 1st Bn. (Abn) , 507th Inf., 11th Inf. Regt., 13-6.

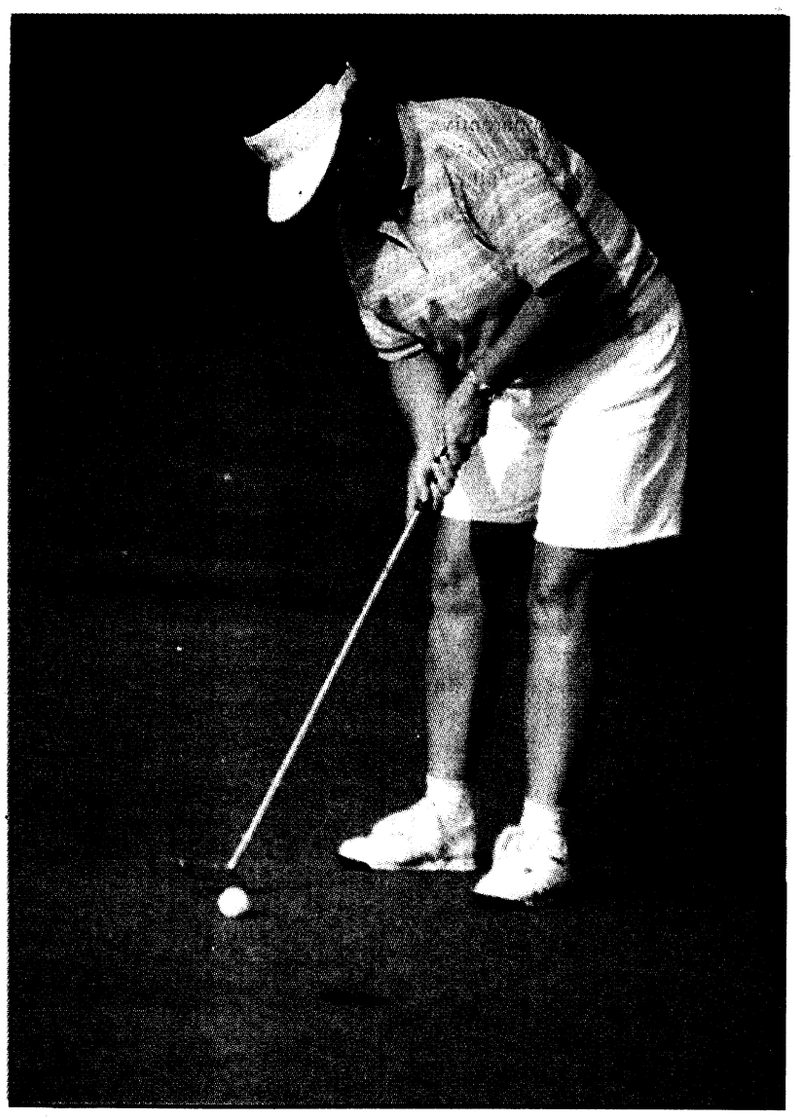
Women's golf champ takes second straight

By Terry K. Ray
Special to The Bayonet©

The 1994 Fort Benning Women's Golf Club championship, which was Monday and Tuesday at the Follow Me Golf Course, provided the backdrop for Diane Benton to win her second straight championship with a final round of 86.

Benton's first-day score of 87 gave her a two-day total of 173, two strokes better than runner-up Mavis Hill at 175.



"I don't know what it is about this tournament that gives me the jitters," Benton said. "I lost a ball on the front nine and Mavis double-bogeyed 16 and 17 to leave the door open. It was definitely a close one."

Benton has won the championship four out of the last five years.

"If I didn't double-bogey on the back nine twice, Diane and I probably would have ended up playing a sudden-death playoff," Hill said. "That's the way this tournament goes, it's usually down to the wire. It was a very exciting tournament."

Listed below are the club champion, runner-up and first-, second- and third-place finishers for each flight.

National Multiple Sclerosis Society

ATLANTA — The National Multiple Sclerosis Society will host its first annual MS 150 Bike Tour Oct. 29 and 30, with riders from all parts of Georgia expected to take the 150-mile cycling challenge from Augusta to Savannah.

The course travels along rolling terrain, passing through towns including: Hephzibah, Millen, Rock Ford, Oliver, Springfield, Guyton and Savannah. The MS 150 Bike Tour will travel a scenic route on rural country roads.

The group will travel from Augusta to Millen, then spend the night at Magnolia Springs State Park.

There, riders have the option to pitch a tent or sleep in the group camp facility (for a small fee).

In the morning, the group will head toward Savannah. Upon arrival in Savannah, riders will be greeted at the YMCA, where they can take warm showers before they board buses back to Augusta.

Follow this bass pro's advice when nothing seems to work

By Earl Bentz and Steve Price
Outboard Marine Corporation

When bass tournament pro Denny Brauer has trouble catching bass, he goes "junk fishing," and he recommends it to others who experience the same problem.

"Basically, 'junk fishing' is when I simply go running and gunning, fishing any visible cover that might hold a bass," Brauer said. "This can include grassbeds, fallen timber along the shore, a pier, isolated stumps, or whatever I happen to see.

"It's basically shallow water fishing, and I don't make more than three or four casts to each target," he said. "Often, I don't even turn off the outboard. When I'm fishing this way, I may cast to 50 or more targets during the day."

According to Brauer, junk fishing is a last-ditch attempt to catch bass when tournament time is drawing to a close and his livewell is still empty.

"It means I have not been able to establish a reliable pattern and I'm about to panic," said Brauer, who last season won more than $200,000 in bass tournament competition. "Some fishermen have actually made a career of it, but I only do it when nothing else seems to work."

When he is junk fishing, Brauer said, he normally uses lures he can work quickly because he's trying to generate reaction strikes from fish. Spinnerbaits and crankbaits are often used, although jigs and plastic worms may also be tried.

"Most of the time I'm looking for one bass on each target," the Evinrude pro said. "I'll make two or three casts to that target, then leave and hit the next one, make a few casts, then move to still another spot.

"It's not really a fun way to fish, but sometimes it does work. Basically, it's a game of percentages. If you cast to enough different targets during a day, the law of averages says you'll catch a few fish."

According to Brauer, junk fishing is most often necessary on lakes that do not have well-established fisheries, on small lakes, and on lakes receiving a lot of fishing pressure that causes bass to become extremely wary.

"Sometimes weather or changing water conditions force me into junk fishing, too," he said. "For example, several years ago we were fishing a tournament on a big lake but heavy rains muddied the water. There were only a few really productive fishing spots, but other anglers were on them.

"All I could do was run and gun, fishing all the leftovers. I didn't win, but I did take home a check."

The national convention is scheduled for Oct. 17 to 19 in Washington, D.C. Local people attending will include Fort Benning commanders and soldiers, chamber and civic officials and corporate members.

The award will be presented to the local chapter for an unprecedented fourth time.

The chapter will also be recognized for the greatest percentage increase in civilian membership and will be designated as a Merit Chapter and a Chapter of Excellence.

Other awards to be presented are: third best overall chapter, third largest chapter, fifth most corporate members and second best in increase in corporate membership.

The chapter will also be recognized for support of the Institute of Land Warfare and for Commemoration of the 50th Anniversary of World War II.

"These awards reflect the combined efforts of chapter officers, soldiers and corporate members," said Jim Gallagher, executive vice president. The top three teams will receive plaques and prizes. The registration deadline is Nov. 2.

1/19th changes hands

By Shelby Carr
Infantry Training Brigade

The change of command ceremony for 1st Battalion, 19th Infantry Regiment, took place 9:30 a.m. Monday on Wetherby Field.

Lt. Col. Warren D. Cate handed over command to Lt. Col. Charles A. Peddy.

"When I think of (Lt. Col.) Warren Cate, I think of discipline and a high sense of honor," said Col. Theodore R. Severn, commander of the Infantry Training Brigade.

During Cate's two years in command, the unit trained more than 5,500 initial entry training soldiers and raised the graduation rate of soldiers.

Also, Cate supervised Reserve drill sergeants and battalion staffs during the Pro-Train mission, their annual training.

The 1st Bn., 19th Inf. Regt.'s sports program won many brigade-level sports and the Infantry Training Brigade Commander's Cup for overall success in sports during Cate's time in command.

Cate and his wife, Vicki, instituted a Family Unit Network in the battalion, Severn said.

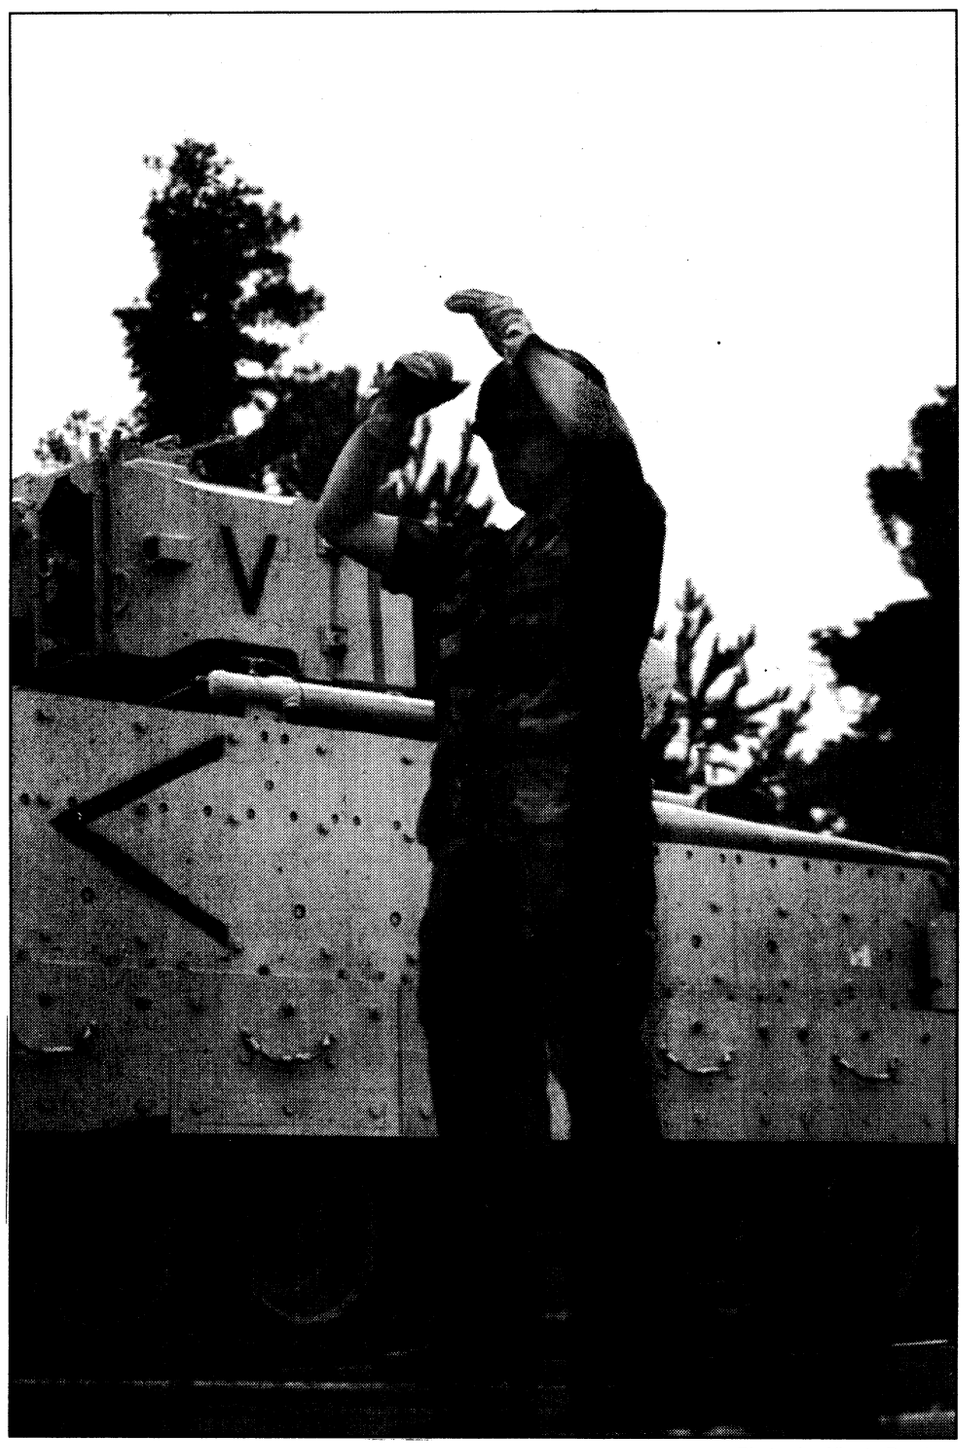
"He went about this business with a Texas-sized sense of humor," Severn said. "Warren, you have done a superb job and we thank you."

Cate thanked the command sergeants major he served with during his time in command, for, as he said, teaching him how to be a battalion commander.

"This is the finest collection of noncommissioned officers I've ever had the privilege of knowing," Cate said.

"The only difference between us and them (other armies) is the enforcement of higher standards," he said.

Cate will move to the Directorate of Operations and Training, while Peddy moves from DOT.



Peddy said taking command of the 1st Bn., 19th Inf. Regt., is special to him because he served next to the 1st Bn., 19th Inf. Regt., in Hawaii, and even then it had the reputation of excellence.

Cate served with the 8th Infantry Division and the 3rd Infantry

1st Battalion, 18th Infantry Regiment

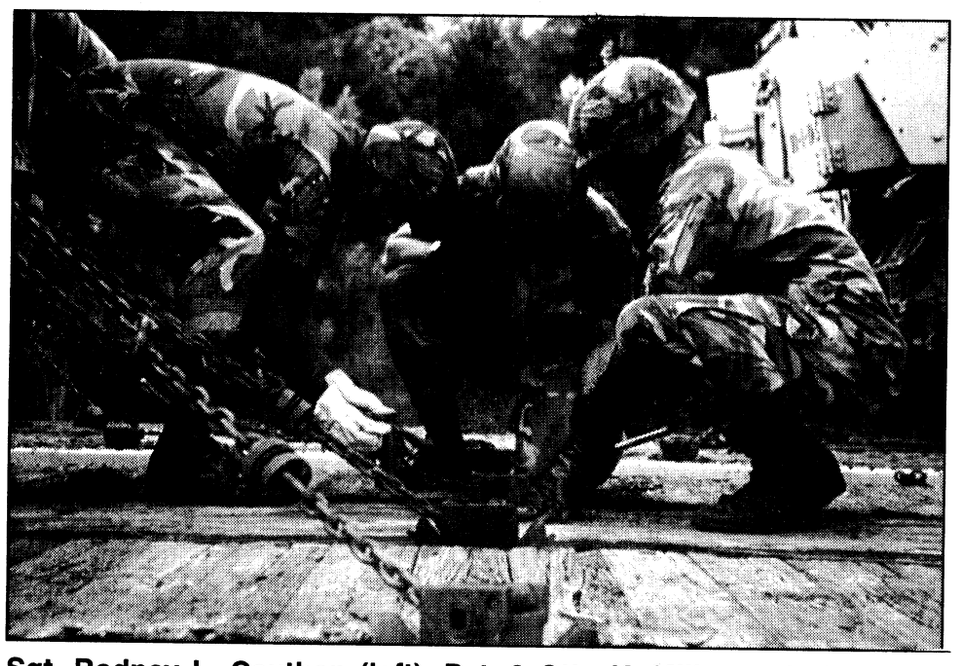
The 1st Battalion, 18th Infantry Regiment, 3rd Brigade, 24th Infantry Division (Mechanized), deployed more than 650 soldiers and their vehicles to Fort Stewart, Ga. this week.

The soldiers will participate in a two-week Bradley gunnery exercise, being conducted through Oct. 1 on the firing ranges at Fort Stewart, home of the 24th Infantry Division.

All the vehicles will-have arrived at Fort Stewart by today, and once the force is assembled, the unit will qualify 58 Bradley Fighting Vehicle primary crews and 12 platoons.

The Bradley crews qualify by engaging stationary, moving and multiple targets.

Also, joining the "Striker" battalion for the BFV gunnery are some of the soldiers from 324th Foward Support Battalion, who will assist with the maintenance of the vehicles.



"The battalion loaded 80 track vehicles onto the rail cars in less than two hours and had all vehicles secured to the cars within four hours," said Maj. Jerardo Reyes, the battalion executive officer.

The battalion convoyed more than 90 wheeled vehicles to Fort Stewart this week, making the trip of about 250 miles in approximately six hours.

The deployment to Fort Stewart might seem complicated, but it's really routine for the Striker battalion as part of a rapid-deployment division

According to 1st Lt. Ronnie L. Jones, the battalion movement officer, "The deployment to Fort Stewart might seem complicated, but it's really routine for the Striker battalion as part of a rapid-deployment division."

Sgt. Dale A. Doering, evacuation NCO recently assigned to the medical platoon, said, "Although no injuries were involved with the uploading of the vehicles onto the rail cars, leaders at all levels should reiterate safety at all times."

Students learn to detect booby traps

By Devon Kerbow
School of the Americas

A cereal box or a book looks innocent enough, doesn't it?

Not if you're in the School of the America's OE-5 Counternarcotics Operations Course.

In one segment of the course, the 40 students from Central and South America are taught to detect and neutralize booby traps.

"If they don't detect it, they can become the victim of it," said Capt. Luis Calvo, an engineer and guest instructor from Costa Rica.

The students were shown a variety of booby traps made from everyday objects that could be bought in a store or even found in the street, Calvo said.

A Colombian student told of a very effective grenade he had seen that used TNT, a time fuse, shrapnel and a can.

An ordinary item becomes suspicious when it's found in an place where it shouldn't be, Calvo said.

After being shown examples of booby traps, the students were given 30 minutes to build and camouflage a trap of their own using inert blasting caps, explosives and batteries. The differences in each trap were dependent on the students' own creativity.

"Any material can be used in a booby trap," Calvo said. "The only limitation they (students) have is their imagination."

Next, the class was shown jungle-type booby traps made from natural objects.

Many of these used sharpened poles that could easily cause injury as soon as the victim made contact with them.

Some were suspended overhead, others were at chest level, and many were placed in holes dug in the ground.

Calvo said these traps are as effective and dangerous as the explosive ones, and harder to spot. He said the only supplies needed on-site to make these are string and a machete.

One difference between the wooden traps and the explosive traps was the wooden traps were not intended to kill, Calvo said.

The wooden traps, he said, remove more soldiers from their original tasks because the wounded require others to care for them.

The students will see some of these booby traps when they return to their countries, he said.

"The main thing is to protect lives and avoid injury to civilians," Calvo said.

Patrolling skills aid OE-5 students

By Devon Kerbow
School of the Americas

Although patrolling is just one of the subjects taught in the School of the America's OE-5 Counternarcotics Operation Course, it's an important one for the students, who come from Central and South America.

Patrols are missions by a small group that can be for reconnaissance, combat or both. Skill at patrolling is stressed because most of the students are police officers and have to go on patrols to the jungle, said Special Operations Department instructor Staff Sgt. Arsenio Delacruz.

"If the drug lab is in the woods, they need to be able to get there without compromising their position. They need to know how to patrol," Delacruz said.

But they don't just start patrolling, Delacruz said. They are skills the students need to learn before the patrolling phase begins.

These exercises are called "battle drills," and teach the students to react to different situations that can occur while patrolling. They train the students to react naturally and without thinking about the situation, said Sgt. 1st Class David Reyes, a SOD instructor.

"One of the mechanics of this type of training," Reyes said, "is that the more they (students) practice the better they get at it"

Patrolling skills should be as ingrained as cleaning their rifle, Reyes said.

Some of the situations the students are trained to react to include ambushes, direct fire and enemy contact.

Before beginning the exercises the students are taught the theory behind them, Reyes said.

He added that both in theory and practice, human rights are stressed.

"Any time they are given an objective the enemy is captured, not terminated, and Geneva Convention rules are applied," Reyes said.

One of the drills calls for an opposing force to fire on the patrol. The person conducting the drill signals and immediately the patrol group returns fire after getting into position. Backup is called for if the group is outnumbered, Reyes said.

Delacruz said the students weren't yet strong at battle drills because they didn't have much experience.

"Everything we teach them they're going to use when they get home," Delacruz said.

Early-outs: Personnel officials OK for enlisted soldiers

Army News Service

WASHINGTON — Army personnel officials have given the go-ahead for the enlisted Voluntary Early Release Program, designed to reduce the impact of budget constraints and lessen man-year obligations for fiscal 1995.

The program allows select Regular Army enlisted soldiers to terminate their service contracts and enlistment extensions up to 89 days earlier than scheduled. Those contracts and extensions must currently expire before April 1.

Eligible soldiers must also have less than six years' active federal service on the scheduled expiration of term of service.

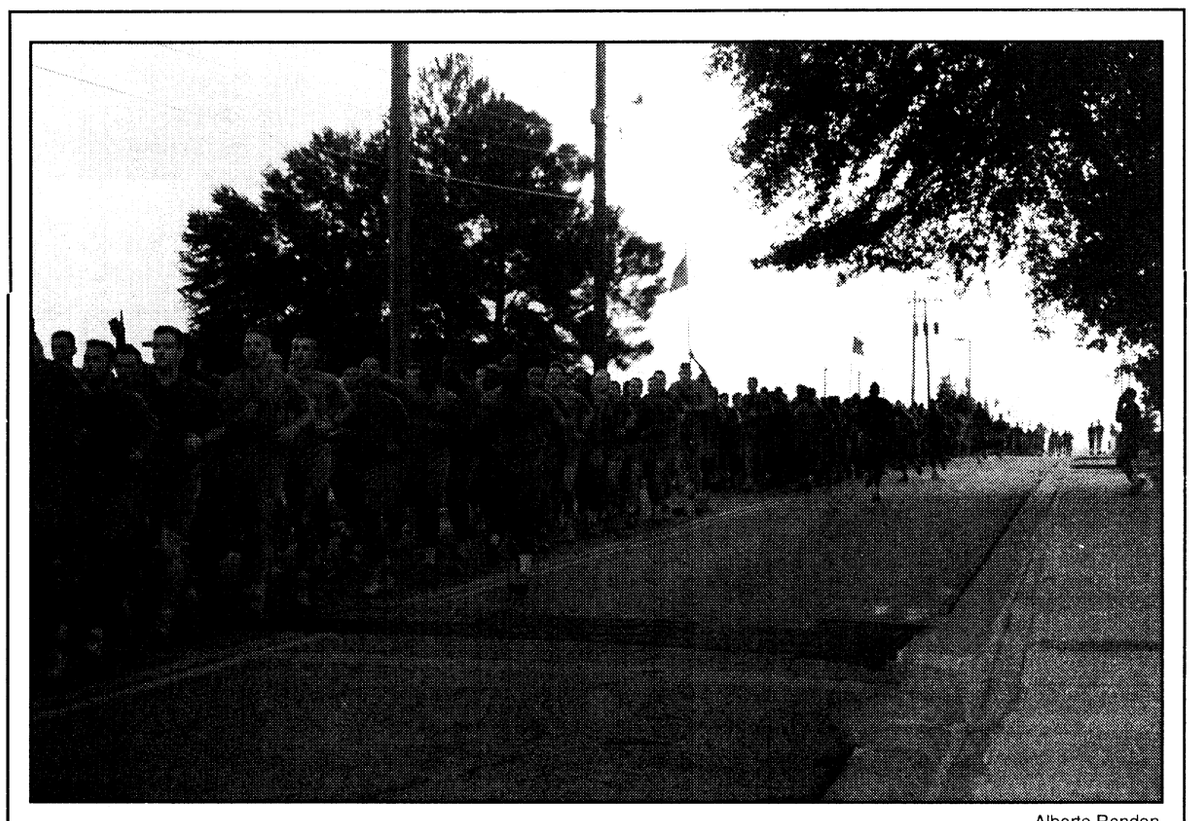
Soldiers who meet the above criteria are not eligible if they:

• hold a primary military occupational specialty in 13B (cannon crewmember), 16T (Patriot missile crewmember, 19K (M1 armor crewman), 24T (Patriot operator and system mechanic), or 27X (Patriot system repairer);

• are assigned to units in Korea;

• are not medically cleared for separation by the anticipated early release date;

• are denied early release in the interest of operational readiness;



• are approved for voluntary separation under the fiscal 1994 or 1995 enlisted Voluntary Early Transition Program or other voluntary early separation program; or

• are pending involuntary separation under any provision of AR 635-200, pending trial by courts-martial or are under investigation for offenses of the Uniform Code of Military Justice.

To apply, soldiers should request early release on DA Form 4187. Requests must include the desired release date, which must be between 60 and 89 days before ETS. As an exception, soldiers scheduled to ETS in October or November may request a release date not less than 30 days before ETS.

Approval of release dates will depend on the time required to complete transition processing, including movement to the United States for soldiers stationed overseas. Approval authority is the first colonel in the soldier's chain of command; disapproval authority is the first lieutenant colonel in the soldier's chain of command.

To be eligible for Montgomery GI Bill benefits, soldiers must serve at least 20 months of a 24-month enlistment or 30 months of a 36-month enlistment. Army College Fund-eligible soldiers who meet the "20/30-month rule" will receive the prorated portion of their benefit. For more information on the Voluntary Early Release Program, soldiers should contact their local personnel service center.

world war II

• Operation Market Garden, the largest airborne invasion in history, was launched in Holland Sept. 17, 1944. The invasion was designed to rapidly deploy allied troops and tanks through Holland, across the Rhine and into Germany in an attempt to end the war quickly. The invasion consisted of 4,700 aircraft and 2,500 gliders carrying Lt. Gen. Lewis H. Brereton's 1st Allied Airborne Army, which included the U.S.'s 82nd Airborne Division, 101st Airborne Division and the British 1st Airborne Division.

• On the homefront the St. Louis Cardinals clinched their eighth National League pennant and third in a row by winning a double header from Boston, 5-4 and 6-5.

• At Fort Benning, 600 heroic U.S. Army carrier pigeons that carried out dangerous missions with soldiers around the world were sent to Camp Crowder, Missouri where they were "honorably discharged." The birds were volunteered by their owners following Pearl Harbor so that more birds could be bred for vital work in the Armed Forces.

The specialist obtained $7 worth of gas from a gas station in Columbus and left without paying. He was stopped 10 minutes later by a Columbus Police officer for not paying for the gas.

Also, the patrolman found two rolled marijuana cigarettes under the mat on the passenger side during a search of the vehicle.

• A private was charged with shoplifting. The private removed two cans of snuff from a display shelf, placed them in his pocket and exited the store without paying. He was apprehended and transported to the MP station, processed and released to his unit.

• A staff sergeant was charged with driving under the influence of alcohol, expired plates and excessive speed.

The staff sergeant was speeding down Edwards Street. A Military Police officer stopped him and detected a strong odor of alcohol on him.

He was administered a field sobriety test, which he failed. The staff sergeant was transported to the MP station where he was administered a breathalyzer test on the intoximeter with a result of .09 percent alcohol. He was processed and released to his unit.

• A specialist was charged with domestic disturbance, and his wife was charged with aggravated assault. He was involved in a verbal altercation with his wife, which escalated into a physical altercation when she cut him on the upper right arm and the chest area with a knife.

The wife was apprehended and transported to the MP station, processed and released. The specialist was taken to Martin Army Community Hospital Emergency Room for treatment of minor lacerations and released.

• A civilian was charged with shoplifting and possession of marijuana. The civilian removed four lipstick liners, placed them in her purse and exited the store without paying. She was detained, and escorted to the security office. A plastic bag containing marijuana was found on her during a search in the security office. She was transported to the MP station, processed and released.

Other activities included 10 cases of driving under the influence of alcohol, 39 traffic accidents, 35 cases of larcenies and six cases of shoplifting reported at the exchange facilities.

Q. I have been offered the opportunity to participate in a sales organization that offers exciting possibilities of extra income for our family.

The plan involves selling household and cosmetic products to friends and neighbors and bringing in other friends to join the sales group as well.

The business sounds good. What do you say?

A. The plan you describe sounds very much like what is known as a "pyramid scheme."

There are legal and illegal pyramid schemes, but they all work something like this: A person such as yourself is solicited to sign up as a sales agent for a company that sells a product.

That person is expected to sign up new recruits to sell and recruit others, and each person shares commissions from his or her sales with each higher level of the sales group.

It is called a pyramid because the person at the top collects from the second level, and each level below. The second level persons collect from the third level and below, and so forth.

Anecdotes about the big money made by those at the top of the group or pyramid help recruit others.

Meetings feature tales of big money and enthusiastic speakers who have made it.

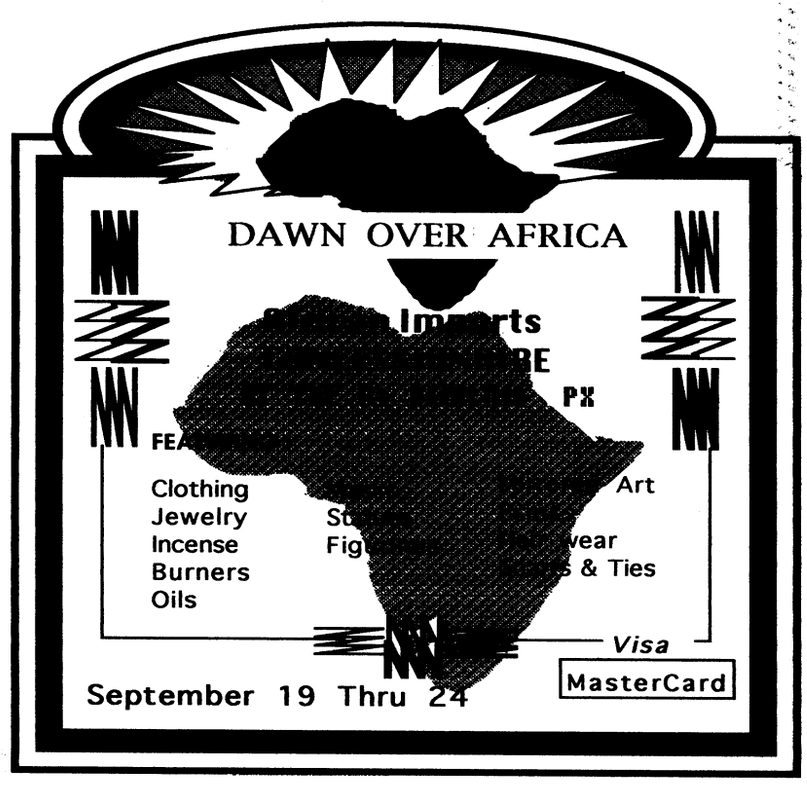
The recruit is invited to the meeting, usually paid for by all the members of the organization who have brought someone.

The truth is the bigger the pyramid, the greater the disappointment those persons at the bottom usually experience.

Instead of big money, they lose fees paid for kits, sales materials or products and end up with products they cannot sell.

As earlier noted, when a plan involves the actual selling of a bona fide product or service, it is not an illegal pyramid scheme.

Amway and Mary Kay Cosmetics are two legal operations built on the pyramid principle. The major financial reward in both cases are not based upon actual sales of product in most cases, but it is based upon the huge commissions they can make on sales of all the agents they can recruit. And all recruited agents are offered the same promise.



Clearly, all will not be rewarded equally, so these operations are not for everyone.

Some illegal pyramid operations have been the source of large numbers of complaints to state regulators, charging that the sales pitch misrepresented the product, that products ordered were delivered late or unsalable and could not be returned, or that the parent company went bankrupt immediately after unloading a large supply of the product on its agents.

Before deciding to invest in a pyramid-type operation, think about the amount of the investment, the amount you can afford to lose, and try to talk with others who may have tried the plan.

You can make an appointment to discuss the matter with a legal assistance attorney.

The Legal Assistance Office number is 545-3282.

The military has different types of recreation resorts around the world. Some offer special events, others offer discount prices and some use their location to an advantage — attracting military members to spend vacations at their facility.

Military members can have all that at Walt Disney World in Orlando, Fla.

Shades of Green, a hotel that was maintained by Walt Disney World for more than 20 years, is now being operated by the U.S. Army and is available to all military members.

"It's a great place to come and relax," said Bonnie Wishard, front office supervisor for Shades of Green.

The hotel, which is located about a mile from the Magic Kingdom, has been open since February and is now making its own money, Wishard said.

The hotel has 287 rooms. The rates are determined by grade and apply to active, reserve and retired military members and DoD civilians. Each room contains two queen-size beds, one day-bed, two lamps, a television, a table, dresser and two wooden chairs. All rooms have a balcony or porch with a view of the pool or golf course.

Each room has 450 square feet of living space and is accessible to disabled guests.

Shades of Green has activities to keep guests occupied in and around the hotel when they are not at the theme parks.

Some of the amenities include a health club; a game room; a playground for children; two heated pools, one in the shape of Mickey Mouse's head; two hard-court tennis courts. Also available are two championship golf courses operated by Disney, the Palm and the Magnolia. The Oak Trail, a nine-hole executive course, is also situated around Shades of Green.

The Palm and Magnolia courses will be used in the Walt Disney World Oldsmobile Golf Classic Oct. 6 through 9.

In addition to the amenities at the hotel, Shades of Green offers a variety of services for its guests.

These include an Army and Air Force Exchange Service gift shop in the lobby; two restaurants; two food outlets; room service; bus service to theme parks; valet parking and a child-care service, available through guest services, performed either in the guest's room or at a learning center in nearby Lake Buena Vista.

Two-hundred and seventy people make up the staff at Shades of Green performing the services for the guests.

All employees are nonappropriated funds employees, said James McCrindle, general manager of the hotel.

"Employees are paid from funds made at the hotel," McCrindle said.

Wishard said new Shades of Green employees go through two customer service training classes.

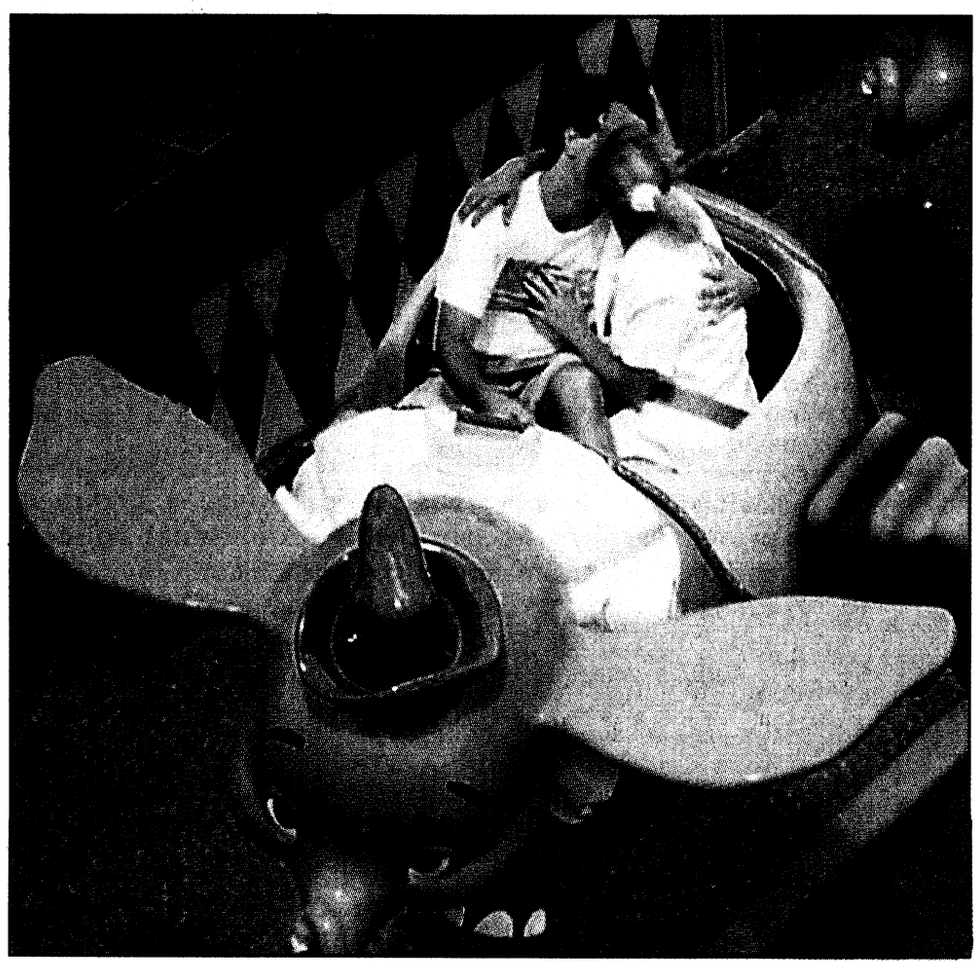
More than a year of negotiations between the Walt Disney Company and the federal government took place before the Disney Inn (the name of the hotel before the U. S. Army takeover) was leased to the government, McCrindle said.

"The lease is for 100 years," he said.

McCrindle said a survey was done to find out where most military members wanted to go on vacation.

"Orlando was voted the number one place in the country," he said.

Shades of Green's location is close to other Orlando attractions.



Along with being on Walt Disney World property, Shades of Green's conveniences include package plans to the Disney theme parks and discounted tickets to other Orlando attractions.

If you are a military member or Department of Defense civilian, you are eligible to purchase these discount plans even if you are not staying at Shades of Green, and the plans range from $75 to $211 for a two to eight-day adult pass to all Disney attractions. The special two to eight-day passes are reserved for guests staying on Walt Disney World property.

The passes are good for the Magic Kingdom; EPCOT Center; Disney MGM Studios; Typhoon Lagoon and River Country, Disney's water theme parks; Pleasure Island, an island of nighttime entertainment including seven nightclubs and shops; and Discovery Island, an island filled with rare plants and animals.

Reservations for Shades of Green can be made up to a year in advance, Wishard said.

For more information on reservations, call (407) 824-3600. Reservations can also be made through Information, Ticketing and Registration. Ticket prices for individual attractions may differ from Shades of Green prices. For more information call ITR at 545-2970 or 545-2972.

Program develops children's communication, social, physical skills

By Jerrie Macintire
Special to The Bayonet©

Four months ago, a young Fort Benning couple began to worry about their daughter's speech development.

Although Ashley Mattison explored her environment with the natural energy and curiosity of a typical 3 year old, few adults outside the family could understand her sociable chatter about her day, according to her father, Pfc. Joseph Mattison of 2nd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment.

Concerned about Ashley's articulation, the Mattisons enrolled her in Fort Benning's Early Intervention Program, designed to provide evaluation and treatment for children up to 3 years old whose development is lagging in one or more of five categories: communication, social, adaptive, physical and cognitive.

As part of the program, Ashley receives regular therapy sessions with a speech pathologist to help bring her up to appropriate developmental milestones in language. In a large, well-lighted room housing a variety of toys, Ashley is learning to better communicate through play, said Mindy Butler, EIP coordinator.

Although the sessions cover expressive as well as receptive language while exercising motor skills, Ashley looks forward to the therapy as a fun time for art, games or physical play, her father said.

Ashley is just one of 60 children in the program who see medical and educational professionals on a regular basis. The purpose of the program is to correct developmental delays or, in some cases, teach living skills appropriate for individuals who may always be challenged by physical, emotional or cognitive barriers.

The Fort Benning EIP program serves youngsters on post and provides some therapy services for children off post, although they are usually served by the Columbus EIP.

Serving the individual needs of each child is the main focus of early intervention, and, "Our goal is to improve their functioning," said Butler.

The EIP, established in accordance with the federal Individuals with Disabilities Education Act, includes physicians, speech pathologists, physical therapists, a family therapist and early childhood educators.

Administered by the pediatric department at Martin Army Community Hospital, the program emphasizes an individual approach to meetinq the needs of exceptional children. Through a multidisciplinary team, parents and professionals work together to identify specific goals.

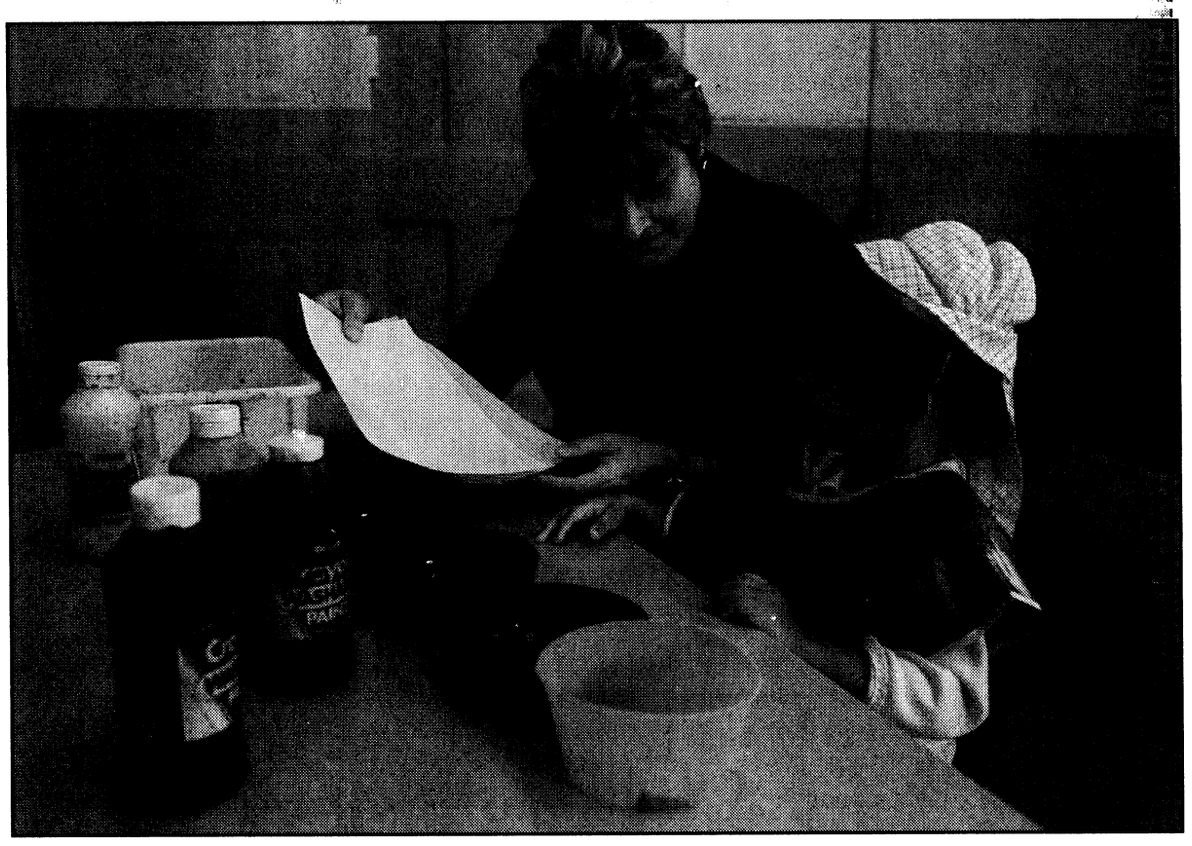
"We are partners with the parents. They let us know what their concerns are and we work on those areas," said Butler

Each child is assigned a service coordinator, who maintains a record of progress while monitoring the therapy each child receives.

Because developmental delays may be mild to severe, therapy may involve a variety of interventions. EIP staff provide therapy on post in homes, day care centers, or in the EIP therapy rooms.

The program also provides equipment available on loan to families who participate.

This equipment includes feeding chairs, mobile walkers, ready racers, developmental toys, occupational therapy equipment and corner chairs designed to help children sit up.



Children who continue to need intervention past age three are referred to special education programs in the appropriate school district. Also, many youngsters who participate in the EIP are eligible for the Fort Benning Exceptional Family Member Program, which helps parents with a variety of services.

Although some children continue to need help with developmental delays, others catch up to their peers and meet appropriate developmental milestones after undergoing intervention, Butler said.

"If we can get them early enough, we can often remediate the delay and help them catch up with their peers," she added.

As for Ashley, she is the same energetic toddler of four months ago, but she can more clearly communicate with others thanks to the EIP, said Mattison.

"The program has definitely improved her skills. Her articulation is much better and her vocabulary and comprehension have improved," he said.

Three-year-old Ashley Mattison chooses from a selection of art paper at a recent speech therapy session with early childhood educator Sheryl Kissinger. Ashley is improving communication skills through the Early Intervention Program, said her father, Pfc. Joseph Mattison of 2nd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment.

"I would recommend this to any family who feels they are having any type of educational or behavioral problem with a child," he said.

Ashley's future looks bright, and the Mattisons hope a preschool experience will further increase her language arts skills and give her a greater forum to practice her enhanced vocabulary and comprehension, said her father.

For more information on the EIP, contact Butler at 545-3835.

Artist uses child's play to educate professionals

By Jerrie Macintire
Special to The Bayonet©

Jim Gill admits his work is child's play.

That is to say, Gill either spends his time directing play activities for children or teaching other adults different ways to do it.

Gill, a performing artist with a master's degree in early childhood education, shared his techniques in a workshop at Fort Benning for professionals who regularly work with children challenged by physical, emotional or cognitive barriers.

Designed to highlight and explore ways of including exceptional children into play activities, the workshop was open to educators, day-care providers, therapists, teachers, and other interested individuals, said Mindy Butler, coordinator of Martin Army Community Hospital's Early Intervention Program, which sponsored the event.

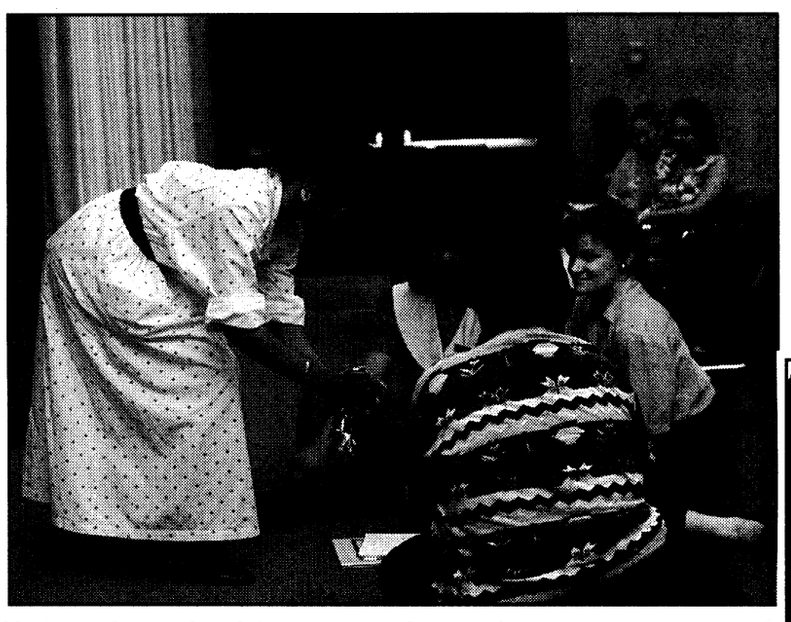
"I think it was very nice that the hospital has allowed us to share this program with the community," said Butler, who estimated the workshop's attendance at 50.

Gill, who travels throughout the country conducting music and drama workshops, said, "My goal is to promote participation at any level."

The drama and music games are appropriate for all youngsters, but are especially important for exceptional children since group participation increases chances for success and enhances self-esteem for these special individuals, he said.

Gill believes his techniques encouraging universal group participation are especially beneficial as educational mandates encourage inclusion of special needs children into the regular classroom, he said.

After all, play is universal among children, even if it varies with the individual, he said.



Creativity is the key, said Gill, and he demonstrated how a poem, song, dance, sneeze or even an empty box offers a chance to include exceptional children.

The box, for example, is marked "Warning: Crazy Shoes Inside."

Just by reaching into the empty box and donning the imaginary shoes, Gill's feet go crazy; he then invites others to see what silly things their own feet do when encased in "crazy shoes."

Anyone can wear crazy shoes; perfect legs are not a requirement.

Crazy shoes show one example of weaving dramatic play into movement and language while offering participation at different levels.

Using found objects such as keys, a group of professionals who work with exceptional children demonstrate an imaginary pot that children may use to exchange negative behaviors for positive ones.

Another example is Gill's "Sneezing Song," originally designed for use with children having communication disorders.

The song enables children to participate and respond with communication loops at many levels. At the basic level, children simply respond when Gill sneezes; the spectacle is impossible to miss, he said. At the next level, children may join in the "sneeze along." Finally, children may anticipate the rhyming word, try to guess a new word, or make up their own lyrics.

As part of the recent workshop, participants got a chance to use their own ingenuity and come up with fun activities which could include children of varying abilities. From bubbles to ice cream to glue, participants came up with new ideas on how to weave fun and learning into a common activity using the assigned literature as the theme.

As Gill conducts the high energy workshops, singing, pretending and improvising, participants seem to agree that he works hard at playing. Gill simply said he feels lucky he can play at work.

Batting cages open on post

By Terry K. Ray
Special to The Bayonet©

As one of his last official acts as commanding general of Fort Benning, Maj. Gen. Jerry A. White officially opened the Main Post batting cages on Gordon Field Tuesday afternoon and then took a few cuts.

"This is a dream come true. Of all the ribbon cuttings, we were the most uncertain about this one," White said. "But I firmly believe that it will be a great success because this is the home of the Infantry. Our soldiers are very physical and I'm sure they are going to have a lot of excitement here."

The facility, which is located between the Main Post laundromat and CB&T bank, was built at a cost of $108,000 through the Directorate of Community Activities and the Morale, Welfare and Recreation fund and is one in a line of projects envisioned for the future.

Al Stewart, director of DCA said, "This project was given to us approximatley 65 days ago by the general.

"According to a contractor in Atlanta, this couldn't be done in under six months, but here it is and it works," he said.

There are six cages, all coin-operated. Three are for softball and three are for baseball. The baseball cages are set at slow, medium and fast speed.

Lights have been installed so the cages can be used into the evening hours, but for now operating hours will be Wednesday, Thursday and Friday from 4 to 8 p.m., Saturday, Sunday and holidays from noon to 8 p.m. The cages will be closed Mondays and Tuesdays.

A concession stand has also been provided, and it will be operated along with the cages by the Outdoor Recreation Division. According to Jim Brown, director of the Physical Activities Branch, all profits from the cages will be funneled back into the One Fund.

TRADOC chaplains work to prevent suicides

TRADOC News Service

FORT MONROE, Va. — There have been 44 soldiers who committed suicide during 1994, but 30 of them occurred during a month long period from June to July. Five of the suicides were in the Training and Doctrine Command.

"There's no way we can pinpoint the reasons for the suicides," said Chaplain (Col.) Gaylord Gunhus, TRADOC chaplain. "None of them seems to be connected or related in any identifiable way."

Through Aug. 15, nine TRADOC soldiers committed suicide during 1994, compared to 15 last year. Most of the soldiers were enlisted, with the highest rank being a sergeant first class. However, a lieutenant and a captain were among the suicides.

While overall Army suicide statistics show most are junior enlisted soldiers they do include a sergeant major and officers through lieutenant colonels.

In searching for reasons for suicides, leaders have considered the current Army drawdown and personnel reductions as a source of personal distress. However, that does not seem to be a contributor, according to Gunhus.

'' I don't see the drawdown as a factor," he said. "So far it appears that none of the suicides in TRADOC were affected by the drawdown."

"A psychological profile is done within 90 days of an incident," said John Siemann, TRADOC alcohol and drug abuse prevention office. "We talk to family, friends and co-workers to try to learn what caused the person to commit suicide."

Investigations show that most suicides occur after people have been rejected, or sense rejection, by spouses, girl or boyfriends, close friends, fellow soldiers or co-workers.

Other traumatic events can trigger suicide, such as a death of a loved one.

Depression and a feeling of aloneness sets in. Most people exhibit warning signs before they kill themselves.

"We must be aware of these signals," said Chaplain (Maj.) Richard Jackson, training and professional development officer for the TRADOC chaplain's office.

"People can be crying for help, and these signs can be flashing. But if others are not aware of these signs, they can see them," Jackson said.

The most significant sign that something is wrong is a change in the person's behavior. This may be when a soldier suddenly starts abusing drugs and alcohol, showing up late for work, getting into financial trouble or not being able to concentrate on work.

"Suicide prevention means that immediate supervisors must get involved with their people in a personal way," Gunhus said. "They must get to know their people well enough to know when there is a change in someone's behavior."

TRADOC chaplains and some senior enlisted chaplains' assistants are trained to recognize these warning signs at the Menninger Clinic in Topeka, Kan. Classes are twice a year, and in 1994 about 30 chaplains and assistants will complete the training.

"Suicide prevention is not the chaplain's job," Gunhus said. "It is the commander's responsibility. Our job is to train leaders and supervisors to recognize the warning signs. Then we will help individuals get assistance they need."

Jackson said that most TRADOC unit chaplains conduct suicide prevention training every three months for their commanders. "Some commanders schedule the training more often," he said.

"There's no way you can measure how effective the training has been," Gunhus said. "There were five suicides in a short span of time recently, but we don't know how many suicides were precluded because of work done by chaplains."

What would you do if a man fell in a hole?

By James E. Schnorrenberg
Army Flier

reflections

A man fell into a hole.

A sympathetic person said, "You must feel awful in that hole."

An objective person said, "I can see how a person could fall into that hole."

An optimist said, "It could be worse."

A pessimist said, "It's going to get worse."

A mathematician asked, "How deep is that hole?"

A geologist asked, "What is the rock and strata like in that hole?"

A lawyer said, "I'll help you sue the person who dug that hole."

A pharisee said, "You deserve to be in that hole because you sinned."

A legalist said, "You've got to do something to earn your way out of that hole."

An existentialist said, "You only think you've fallen into a hole."

A humanist said, "You have the power within yourself to get out of that hole."

An atheist said, "There is no hole."

A counselor pulled up a chair and said, "Tell me how you feel about being in that hole."

A parent said, "I told you to watch out for that hole."

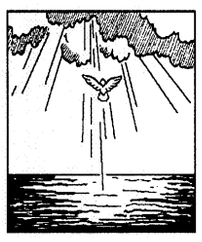
A movie producer said, "I'll give you $10,000 for the rights to make a movie about how you fell into that hole."

A television news reporter set up a satellite link to interview the man in the hole.

A wealthy man threw some money at the man in the hole.

A busy man didn't say anything; he just walked hurriedly away.

A politician said, "Vote for me and I'll make sure holes like this are filled in."



A traveling faith healer said, "Just pray and confess your sins (and send me a large envelope stuffed with money), and you'll get out of that hole."

A perfectionist said, "I would never have fallen into that hole."

Jesus didn't say anything. He just got down into the hole and carried the man out.

In reality, Jesus hung on a cross and carried our sins. We ignore, blame, accuse, use, manipulate, advise, lecture and counsel. How often do we rescue?

'Baseball' at bat as PBS documentary

By Jay Bobbin
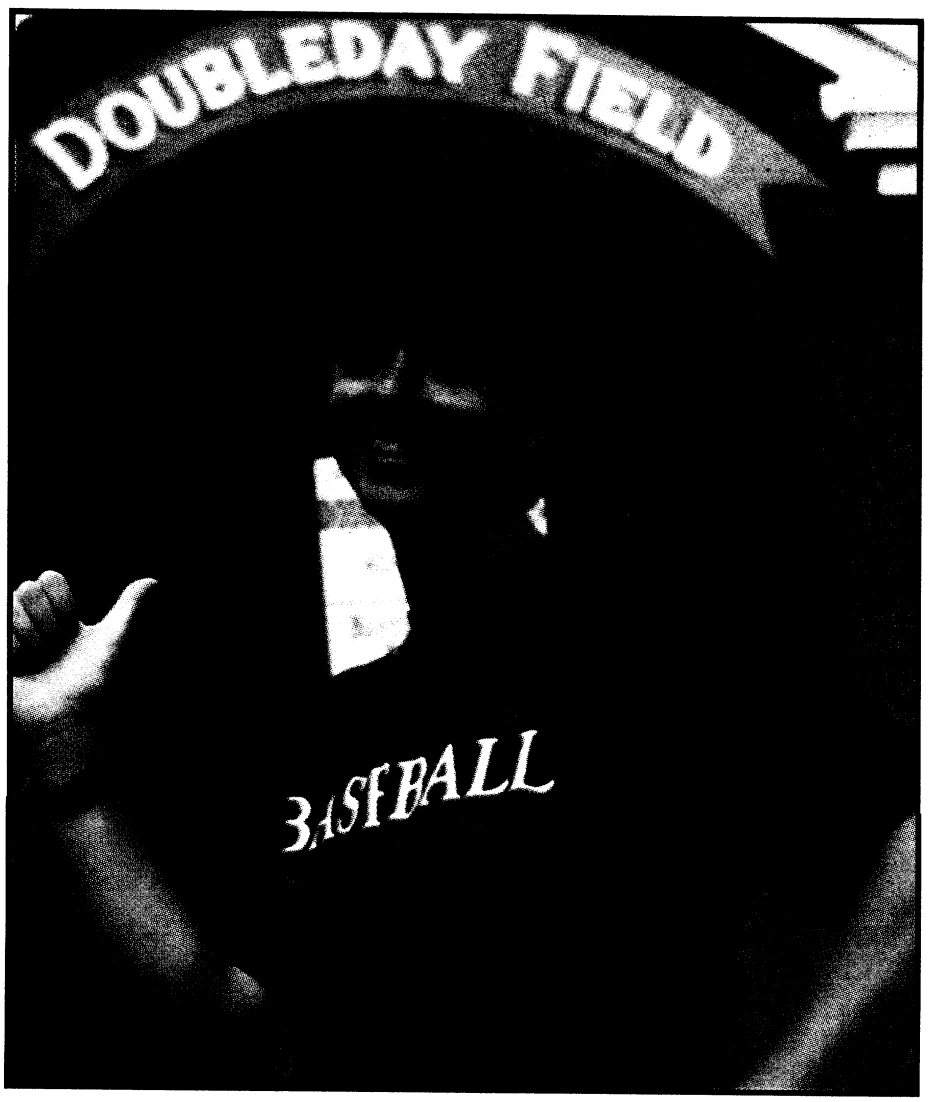
Tribune Media Services

Batter up!



One of the most eagerly awaited television events of the year finally has arrived ... and for fans of the sport it covers, it's undoubtedly not a moment too soon.

SPOTLIGHT

Marking documentary-maker Ken Burns' first major project since his unanimously praised, widely viewed venture "The Civil War," the new miniseries that bears the self-explanatory title "Baseball" starts with the two-hour telecast of the first of its nine parts — or nine "innings," per Burns — Sunday on PBS.

Opening with a recollection of the game's 19th-century roots, and concluding in modern times (though prior to the players' strike that has affected Major League Baseball drastically in recent weeks), the program will be presented nightly through Thursday; then, after what Burns calls two "travel days," it will resume next Sunday through Wednesday. Veteran newscaster John Chancellor serves as the principal narrator, but in Burns' traditional style, the voices of many other personalities are featured during the course of the saga.

Included are actors with previous connections to baseball stories, such as Paul Newman and Michael Moriarty, who starred respectively in TV and movie productions of "Bang the Drum Slowly." Also providing commentary: Amy Madigan, who played Kevin Costner's wife in "Field of Dreams"; John Cusack, who starred in "Eight Men Out," about the 1919 "Black Sox" scandal (which is covered in the third installment of "Baseball"); and Keith Carradine, who portrayed one-armed outfielder Pete Gray in a TV-movie.

Ken Burns

What: "Baseball"
When: Sundays on PBS

Among the many other celebrities heard in "Baseball" are David Caruso ("NYPD Blue"), Ossie Davis, Ed Harris, Julie Harris, Gregory Hines, Anthony Hopkins, Garrison Keillor, Alan King, playwright Arthur Miller, the late politician Thomas P. "Tip" O'Neill, Gregory Peck, George Plimpton, Aidan Quinn, Jason Robards, Jerry Stiller, Studs Terkel, Eli Wallach, columnist Tom Wicker and Paul Winfield. Designed to evoke specific time periods, the accompanying music score offers original performances by Natalie Cole, Bruce Hornsby, Branford Marsalis and Carly Simon.

Many elements of "Baseball" that receive the closest attention probably can be guessed by anyone with even the most cursory knowledge of the sport ... Ty Cobb, Babe Ruth, the Depression-era Negro Leagues, Joe DiMaggio, Ted Williams, Jackie Robinson, New York City's baseball dynasty of the 1950s, Hank Aaron, the classic sixth game of the 1975 World Series, the labor-management disputes that have led to so much controversy, etc. However, in the ever-enthusiastic Burns' view, even non-baseball fans can glean much from his newest program.
