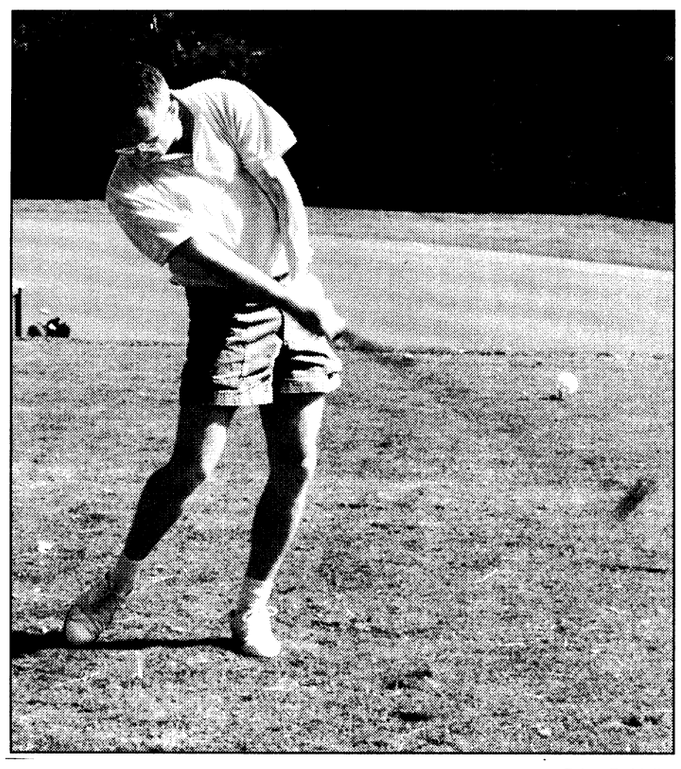
College football would benefit from overtime

By Brian R. Voller
Bayonet staff writer

Let's say, just for the sake of argument, that Florida State is playing Nebraska in a regular season game. More than likely the ratings are going to go through the moon, the tickets are going to be scalped for hundreds of dollars and the professional scouts are going to fill the stands trying to find that next Joe Montana.

Now, let's say that the game goes all the way to the wire, and the final score is 21-21. Wouldn't it be great if that game could go into overtime? Unfortunately, college football has no overtime; as a matter of fact, the only time college football bothers to truly finish tie games is during the bowl games. This to me is a major flaw in college football, and it needs to be changed.



Professional football doesn't leave any games to the imagination. It has a wonderful creation called a sudden-death overtime, and professional baseball has extra innings. Along those same lines, hockey and soccer use overtime; and if the game still can't be decided, they've created this thing called the shootout.

College ball doesn't allow for close games to come to a full close. To me college football players work too hard to go home with a tie. I couldn't imagine having to walk off the football field without anything being decided. Even if one team's statistics are far superior to the other team's statistics, the game will still be remembered as a tie.

A former football coach of mine used to say a tie was much worse than a loss because you basically wasted your time even showing up for the game. The only thing a tie really proves is that two teams were evenly matched that day. The fact that they were so evenly matched only proves to me that the game should be played to a conclusion — one winner, one loser.

A lot of people argue that sudden death isn't good for the game because the first team to get the ball has better odds of winning the game. I argue that if a team wants to win bad enough, it doesn't matter who gets the ball first.

College football has kept with the tradition of not having an overtime during the regular season games. It's time to change the rules and let the players decide who the best team was on the field that day.

USAMU soldiers move towards Olympics

USAMU Public Affairs Office

Four members of the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit at Fort Benning moved a step closer to the Olympic dream, earning a chance to compete in the next U.S. Olympic team selection match in March.

Cpl. Amy Szarenski, Sgt. Daryl Szarenski, Sgt. Ronnie Watts and Capt. Rhonda Bright made the cut-off by finishing in the top eight in their Olympic events at the USA Shooting Fall Selection match, which took place Oct. 20 through 22.

Amy Szarenski will move on to compete for slots on the Olympic team in both Women's port Pistol and Women's Air Pistol while her husband, Daryl, will move on to compete for slots in Men's Free Pistol and Men's Air Pistol.

"My finals felt great," Amy said. "Now I have several months to work on any rough spots and fix anything that went wrong before the next match."

Amy finished fourth in Women's Sport Pistol on Friday with a score of 564, falling to sixth in overall competition. In the same event, Bright tied for seventh in Olympic team selection with a score of 563 and finished ninth overall. Then in Sunday's competition, Amy finished second in Women's Air Pistol with a score of 477.2, holding tight to finish second in overall.

Daryl Szarenski finished Men's Free Pistol Olympic selection in sixth place on Friday with a 547, keeping the chance for an Olympic berth alive. He climbed in final competition, soaring to a second place overall finish with a 642.1. On Sunday, Daryl finished Men's Air Pistol Olympic selection in third place with a 577. In final competition, he held strong to maintain a third place overall finish in Air Pistol with a 677.7.

In competition Saturday, Watts took second place among qualified contenders in the Rapid Fire pistol Olympic Team selection match with a score of 580. He maintained his second place standing through National Team finals with an overall score of 678.9.

John McNally, a former member of the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit, took first place in the preliminary Olympic team selection match with a 583, maintaining the lead with an overall score of 682.3.

"I'm really proud of our shooters," said Ronnie Boles, USAMU pistol coach. "They've worked really hard to get where they are."

The next four to five months will be spent training, working on rough spots and going to several matches to keep focused, according to Boles.

The race has only just begun.

The top eight from each event this weekend advance to the next selection match for pistol in March in Atlanta. From there the top four in each event will advance to the final selection match for the U.S. Pistol Team of the 1996 Olympic Games.

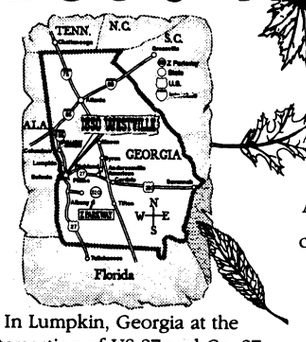
The Fair Of 1850

October 12-November 12

Fun for the whole family.



Just down the road a little village is celebrating the season in a very special way. Historic 1850 Westville is filling the month with demonstrations of harvest time activities from long ago. There will be cane grinding and syrup-making and the village craftsmen and artisans will be stocking their shelves for the winter. Plus, the last remaining antebellum animal powered cotton gin will be in operation at various times. It's authentic Westville's Fair of 1850. Bring the whole family. You'll love all you learn.

Georgia Firefighters offer heating safety tips

Georgia Firefighters Burn Foundation Inc.

Now that we are in fall and winter is approaching rapidly, members of the Georgia Firefighters Burn Foundation want all to be aware of the precautions which should be taken into account when using alternative sources of heat.

"The winter months are the most deadly," said David Goolsby, Captain of the Douglas County Fire Department.

"Approximately 90 percent of all fire fatalities occuring during November and March are due to the misuse of heating equipment," Goolsby said.

"One half of the deaths that occur during this period are those of children under the age of 15," he said.

The following are some general safety tips for common heat sources:

Fireplaces: The build-up of combustible creosote and carbon deposits in the chimney pose a dangerous fire threat. So, the first thing that is needed each year prior to using your fireplace is to have the chimney professionally cleaned and inspected. Make certain not to leave children alone when the fireplace is burning, and always keep your protective screen shut to help block chance sparks from escaping the fireplace and starting a fire in your home.

Wood stoves: If you use a wood stove, be sure it is installed at least 36 inches away from the wall. Keep all combustible materials away from the stove and chimney connector. Place an approved stove board under the unit to protect the floor from heat or hot coals which may drop out.

Space heaters: Place portable heaters at least 36 inches away from any thing that can burn — paper, clothing, curtains or furniture. If your heater runs on liquid fuel such as kerosene, be sure to let the heater cool down before refueling. Refueling while the heater is hot could cause a fire and serious harm to the person who is replacing the fuel.

If you are thinking of purchasing a portable heater, be sure to consult your local fire department, prior to purchase, for advice on what type is the safest.

No matter what type of heating equipment you use, always use the manufacturer's suggested fuel. If your heat runs on electricity, be certain to check cords for frays.

Last but not least, heating equipment is the No. 1 cause of house fires, so use caution when using any type of heating source.

If you need more detailed information, or if the heating equipment you use was not mentioned in this article, please feel free to call the Burn Foundation office at 320-6223 or (800) 273-2876.

Post prepares Olympic Village

By Lisa M. Hibbert
Bayonet staff writer

Post Commanding General Maj. Gen. John W. Hendrix and retired Lt. Gen. Carmen J. Cavezza, executive director of Columbus 96, signed the agreement for Fort Benning to host the Columbus Olympic Village last May.

Well before then, Maj. Chuck Walls, garrison executive officer, has been heading up the effort to make sure everything runs smoothly when the olympians arrive on post during the summer of 1996.

"Whenever I have meetings about the Fort Benning side of the Olympics now, I am meeting with about 20 people," Walls said. "We work on everything from how the dining facility will operate with the Directorate of Logistics to security with the Military Police.

"We're taking many precautions with the village. We're not anticipating anything happening, but you can never let your guard down either," Walls said.

Approximately 165 fast-pitch softball players, their coaches and crew will be staying at Henry Hall, Building 73, from July 6 to Aug. 3, 1996.

"Henry Hall was picked because it has a dining facility, requires few renovations and will have a minor impact on our mission of billeting students," he said.

"What is so good about the accommodations here is that the olympians will be housed one to a room with a private bath, microwave, telephone, coffee makers and even basic cable television service — they will have everything at their disposal," Walls said.

"We looked at Columbus college and Fort Benning," Cavezza said. "Columbus College's dormitories would be full of students at that time, and Fort Benning really was the best choice. We also looked at some hotels but it was between Columbus College and Fort Benning."

Because of the tight schedules of the teams, many facilities will be put inside the village for their convenience. There will be a bank equipped for currency exchange, a post exchange, a phone center, a mail room, a clinic, a dining facility and a parking lot.

The area around the building will be fenced in to provide security, and only those with prearranged security clearances will be allowed to enter.

While here, the athletes will be spending most of their time practicing at Golden Park and playing games at Memorial Stadium.

Work to transform Henry Hall barracks into an Olympic Village will begin sometime in May, Walls said. After the games, the village will once again become barracks.

Soldiers who currently live in Henry Hall will slowly be moved out, and diners at the Follow Me Dining Facility will be given an alternate place to eat during the games as the Follow Me Dining Facility will be a part of the Olympic Village.

Student dies after final jump

By Lisa M. Hibbert
Bayonet staff writer

A 21-year old airborne student in Company A, 1st Battalion (Airborne), 507th Infantry, 11th Infantry Regiment, Class 1-96, died after successfully completing his fifth jump in Airborne School Oct. 25.

According to Army officials, Spc. David D. Roth of Milford, Mich., stationed with the 108th Air Defense Artillery Brigade, Fort Polk, La., successfully completed the jump on Fryar Drop Zone at approximately 10 p.m. without any apparent injury.

While returning by bus to McCarthy Hall, Roth experienced difficulty in breathing. He was immediately given cardiopulmonary resuscitation and transported to Martin Army Community Hospital. He was pronounced dead at approximately 11 p.m.

Survivors are his wife, Janice, and his 9-month-old daughter, Samantha.

DBBL to conduct

Warrior Focus

By April N. Olsen
USAIC Public Affairs Office

The Dismounted Battlespace Battle Lab is conducting Warrior Focus, an Army warfighting experiment, at the Joint Readiness Training Center at Fort Polk, La. through Nov. 23.

Members of the 75th Ranger Regimental Reconnaissance Detachment and units from the 10th Mountain Division, Fort Drum, N.Y.; 2nd Armored Division, Fort Hood, Texas; and 10th Special Forces Group, Fort Carson, Colo., are also participating as part of JRTC rotation 96-02.

The operation will involve 74 initiative testing improvements.

Initiatives range from enhanced dismounted countermine capability for combat engineers using hand-held infrared camera systems to imagery transmission equipment installed in select helicopters.

Combat Service Support initiatives include improvements in diagnosis and treatment efforts through lightweight communications for medics and telecommunications links with medical specialists.

The DBBL at Fort Benning, which concentrates its efforts on the infantry soldier, hopes to use information from Warrior Focus to ensure proper application of "Own The Night" technology.

OTN systems include vision magnification, infrared devices and the ability to pass still images digitally.

The Dismounted Soldier System (soldier computer, radio and helmet mounted display) provides immediate situational awareness, integrated command and control software capability and individual reporting and input capability.

Principal distribution of equipment is to dismounted forces within one light infantry battalion,

ACOE money is in the budget

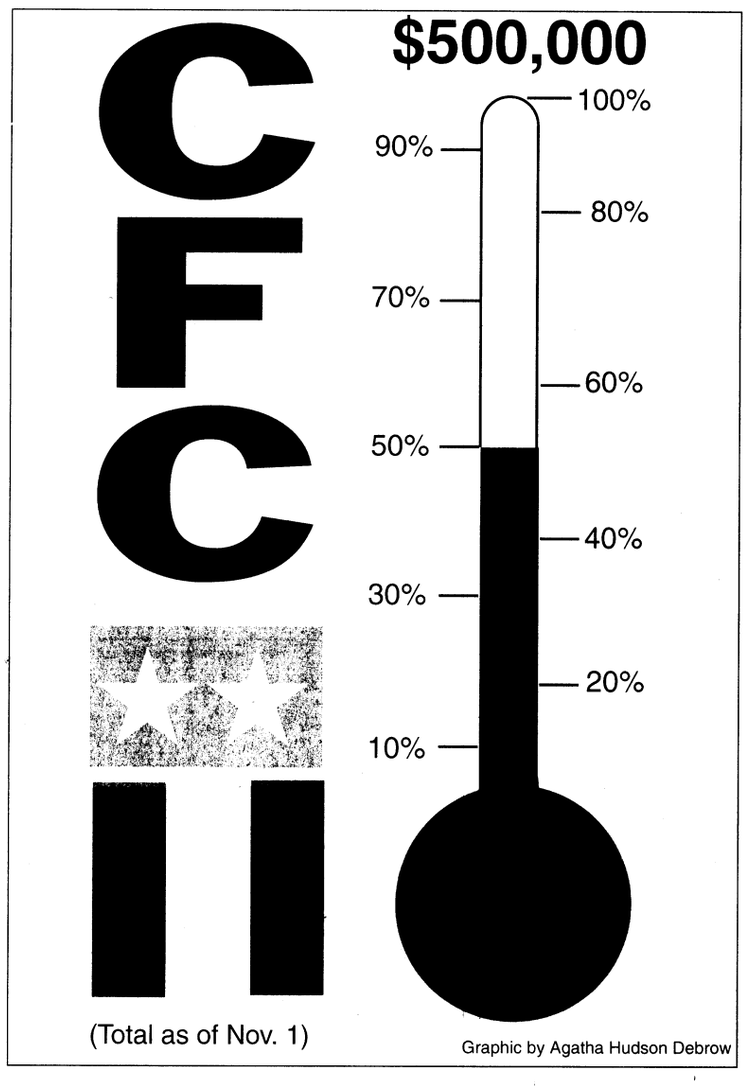
By Lisa M. Hibbert
Bayonet staff writer

Fort Benning was named the best installation in the Army two years in a row and the best large installation three years in a row. The winning money, so far more than $3,500,000, just keeps pouring in.

"We don't realize how lucky we are," said Maj. Chuck Walls, garrison executive officer. "We keep winning (Army Communities of Excellence) — but if we don't win, we won't get any more money."

Last summer, leaders from all of the major commands and activities came together to brainstorm ideas for ways to spend the ACOE money.

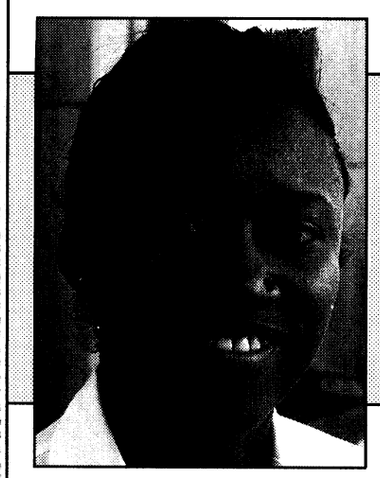
"The commanders and directors provide us with a list of things that they feel that the money should be spent on," Walls said. "They then participate in a board where their suggestions are discussed and voted on. The majority rules so it's handled very fairly. This way we're satisfied that everybody gets served.



"It is always questioned why the money is spent on some things and not on others," Walls said. "The reason why none of the ACOE money is going to housing or barracks is because that money comes from other sources. In short, there is a system in place to take care of housing and barracks renovations and we want to make that system work.

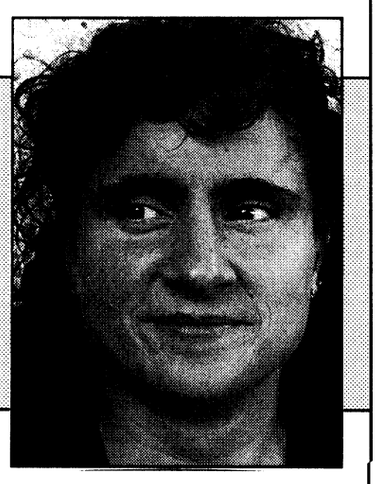
"ACOE money represents everybody's money," Walls said. "Plus, the money we get would not be enough to do all the necessary repairs. It costs between 16 and 20 million dollars to renovate Kelley Hill barracks alone, and we have already contracted to do those renovations."

The board prioritizes projects that exceed the budgeted amount creating a "subject to availability of funds" list, Walls said. "If money does get turned back, it will them be applied to that list."



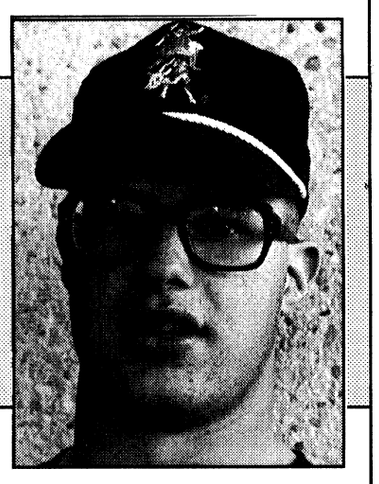
Where the money will go...

- Upgrade automation equipment from 266's to 486's — $38,000
- Relocate airfield crash crews to Building 2452 and renovate — $150,000
- Handicap accessibility features at Building 85 — $25,000
- Main post pharmacy extension and remodeling — $80,000
- Chapel facility renovation — $56,300
- Indianhead youth center repairs — $16,500
- Lightning warning and detection system — $39,000
- Fish ponds and Russ pond improvement — $130,000
- Housing area playgrounds upgrade — $100,000
- BOSS — $28,000
- Appliances for troops — $10,000
- Furniture for Bernheim Dental Clinic — $9,700
- Equipment for self-help program — $10,000
- Equal Opportunity key rings — $2,500
- Free weights and Nautilus equipment — $100,000
- Baseball field repairs — $15,000
- Customer computer systems for Sayers Library — $7,200
- APIC training and materials — $50,000
- Fence for Norton Court — $10,000
- Day room furniture for MEDEVAC air crew — $3,000
- Maintenance Management Division classroom construction — $100,000
- Housing referral office upgrade — $20,000



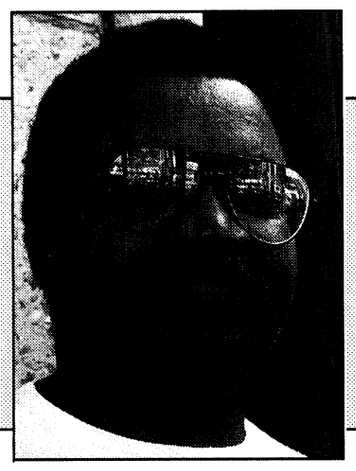
VARIOUS VOICES

How do you feel about soldiers getting their bodies pierced?



Capt. Watrina W. White, U.S. Army Medical Department Activity — "I think it is disgusting."

Christina Taylor, family member — "As long as it can't be seen when in uniform, it's fine with me."



Sgt. 1st Class Oscar Holness, School of the Americas — "I think it is very unprofessional, but a soldier can do what he wants after duty hours."

Pvt. 1 Jeremy D. Rainey, Company D, 1st Battalion (Airborne), 507th Infantry — "I think as long as it is not visible it shouldn't really matter."

Rita Ghent, family member— "I don't see anything wrong with it except piercing the tongue — yuck."

Retired Air Force Capt. Leroy Kelley — "I think it should be left up to the discretion of the soldier as long as it doesn't cause medical problems, because then the taxpayers have to pay for it."

Body piercing a personal choice

By Judith Ginder
School of the Americas

To pierce or not to pierce; that is the question. At least, that seems to be the big question among senior noncommissioned officers these days.

During the annual meeting of the Association of the United States Army, Oct. 16 to 18, Sgt. Maj. of the Army Gene McKinney met with the enlisted soldiers there to get ideas about issues important to them. The senior NCOs confronted McKinney with the matter of body piercing. Apparently, some soldiers are having their various body parts pierced, and their NCOs don't like it.

However, when McKinney met with the junior soldiers, he asked them the same question asked of him. How did they feel about body piercing? Well, for the most part, the women in the group were all for it or, at the very least, didn't really see it as being a major concern. The men in the meeting, however, were pretty much against it. One soldier said that although someone might not be in uniform 24 hours a day, he is still a soldier 24 hours a day and should act accordingly.

I'm sorry guys, but what does having an earring or nose ring, or whatever, have to do with whether or not someone is a good soldier? I personally feel we have much, much greater things to worry about.

Is this now what the sergeant major of the Army is going to think is the biggest concern of all of us? Shouldn't we care more about our benefits, the drawdown, healthcare issues and the improvement of our quality of life?

Now don't get me wrong, those issues and even more were brought up in the meetings — but do we really need to heap the question of body piercing in with these other, very important matters?

So now, according to an article in "Army Times," there is a pending update of AR 670-1 (Wear and Appearance of Army Uniforms and Insignia) stating, "No jewelry, rings or other devices will be worn or attached to the exposed parts of the body (nose, tongue, lips)" except as already allowed in the regulation.

Spc. Judith Ginder believes body piercing shouldn't be a military issue.

I'm not really sure I understand what the big deal is. Is it that people think if a person would do that to themselves they must not have any self-respect? Or maybe they feel that if you pierced yourself in an unconventional place, you're a freak. Or maybe it just shows too much individualism — and everyone knows if you have your own independent thoughts you therefore "fail to adapt to Army culture."

Here's the thing — soldiers of today do have independent thoughts. That's what happens when you want well-educated and well-trained people to enlist in the Army. This does not mean that we do not adapt to the military lifestyle or are disrespectful or cannot follow orders. It just means that while we are on personal time (even though we know we are soldiers 24/7 and choose to be), it should be just that — personal.

I feel that while a soldier is in uniform, of course, a nose ring would be completely inappropriate. But when a soldier is on his or her own time, why shouldn't he or she pierce his nose, tongue or bellybutton? Why should the Army even care if Pvt. Schmudlap wants to put a ring in his nipple?

If he's a squared-away soldier doing his job well, and the piercing doesn't get in the way of his training and performance — what does it matter?

dial 545 boss

Dial 545-BOSS is the commander's action line for soldiers, family members and civilians to call when they have problems or complaints that can't be resolved elsewhere.

While it is not a substitute for the chain of command or for agencies established to provide assistance, the line offers another means of communication between Fort Benning's community and commanders.

The Bayonet features some of the calls that may benefit other members of the Fort Benning community.

Call: The playground behind my housing area is used by cats and dogs all the time. I want to know who is responsible for cleaning up the playground and replacing the sand in the sandbox.

Family Housing Branch response:

The Family Housing Branch chief explained that occupants living in the housing area are responsible for cleaning the playground and that an occupant may call the Service Order Desk, 545-2135, for sand replacement as needed.

It was also explained to the caller that USAIC Regulation 210-50 requires pets, when outside, to be on a leash or under voice control or in sight of a responsible individual. Occupants who are not adhering to this regulation should be reported to the military police.

Call: The Fort Benning cable does not have enough Christian channels for soldiers. It would be good for families and single soldiers to view these types of programs instead of MTV.

Directorate of Community Activities response:

The cable company is planning nine more channels once its upgrade is complete. All indications are that at least one of these channels will be religious. Currently, the Family Channel does carry Christian programs.

Call: I asked why there was no shade on the Main Post Child Development Center playground, and I was told it would conflict with the beautification project. My 7-month-old has to play in direct sunlight. This is not good, and there should be shade on the playgrounds.

Directorate of Community Activities response:

There are several tree-shaded areas in the Main Post child Development Center playground. A request has been made to provide additional shaded areas by installing permanent shelters; however, funding has not been available. Child Development Services has turned in this project to be funded with year-end funds. Until additional permanent shelters are added, staff has been encouraged to use canopies, tarps, etc., to provide shade where needed.

Call: I notice at least seven empty quarters in my area, and at all of them the lawn is overgrown and the grass needs to be cut.

Directorate of Public Works response:

Currently, funds for grass cutting have been exhausted but are expected to become available for the upcoming fiscal year. Residents who reside next to a set of vacant quarters are encouraged to cut the grass until the vacant quarters are occupied. Occupants are encouraged to notify the Community Life noncommissioned officer at the Community Life Office, in charge of their area as a first point of contact for assistance with neighborhood concerns.

Proclamation

In recognition of Native American Indians and our nation's ethnic and national diversity, the period of Nov. 1 through 30 is proclaimed Native American Heritage Month. The theme for this year is "Native American Indians and the United States: A Model for Cultural Change."

All Americans, regardless of their heritage, can gain from studying and embracing the ways of our Native American ancestors. Native Americans have served our country through their roles in the Department of Defense missions as well as artists, scholars, musicians, authors, poets, scientists and sculptors. They have made contributions in many fields including medicine, music and agriculture. The diversity of the Native American Indians throughout history has succeeded as a model for modern America to follow as the world is reshaped into one that is supportive of all our people and our environment. November offers Native Americans serving in the Armed services an opportunity to celebrate, share and stir pride in their heritage.

I encourage all personnel on Fort Benning and the surrounding community to participate in this observance through the planned activities of units, staff, directorates and other agencies.

WWII veteran looks for lost dog tags

I believe sometime during the 101st Airborne reunion at Benning, Aug 3, 4 and 5, while wearing my WWII jump uniform as a member of the Return To Normandy Association, I lost the dog tags I was issued at Toccoa, Ga., August 1942, and that I wore during the Normandy invasion of 1944, and again last year during my repeat on the 50th anniversary. Indeed, I have never jumped without them. I would like to offer $50 reward to anyone returning them to me.

The tags read:
Robert Leslie Williams Aug 42
502 W 12 St Covington, Ky
15117139 O-Neg

Also on the chain was a four leaf clover encased in plastic.

Thanking you for any help you can give me.

Hospital to celebrate X-ray's 100th

Martin Army Community Hospital

Martin Army Community Hospital's radiology personnel will celebrate the 100th anniversary of the discovery of the X-ray during National Radiologic Technology week Sunday through Nov. 11.

Hospital radiology professionals will wear commemorative buttons throughout the week and set up a display in the Radiology Department's waiting room.

Col. Gerald M. Cross, the hospital commander, will issue a proclamation, and a luncheon Wednesday will commemorate the discovery of the X-ray by Wilhelm Konrad Roentgen Nov. 8, 1895.

Radiological science professionals serve Fort Benning and the surrounding communities as radiographers (X-ray technologists), mammographers, computerized tomography technologists, nuclear medical technologists, administrators and educators.

The hospital employs Army-trained and civilian radiological science professionals in all areas except magnetic resonance imaging.

Approximately 72,000 X-rays and related exams are performed annually through the Radiology Department at the hospital and its related clinics on post.

The mammography service at the hospital is certified by the American College of Radiology and is accredited by the Food and Drug Administration.

For more information, call Melanie M. Smizawski, quality improvement coordinator, Radiology Department, Martin Army Community Hospital, at 544-3421.

WARRIOR: Army prepares for future

dismounted forces within the mechanized company and key leaders within the combat brigade. Selected Special Operations Forces and ranger forces also receive this equipment.

The OTN and digital systems will be configured within one light infantry battalion (the experimental battalion), while another light infantry battalion will be equipped with current systems (the baseline battalion).

Within the experimental battalion two companies will be equipped with the OTN and digital equipment while the remaining company (except for the company commander) will be a baseline company.

Warrior Focus is expected to yield data relating to the contribution of digital technologies to meet operational requirements; determination of the accuracy of the information technology; refinement of digital doctrine, tactics, techniques and procedures; and the impact on tactics brought on by the integration of digital technology into the force.

Significant experimentation is ongoing as the Army attempts to refine the equipment, organization, doctrine and tactics, techniques and procedures of the future Army. This is a dynamic process in which the Army continuously identifies areas that can be made to work better while simultaneously experimenting with practical solutions.

Exercises combining Army Battle Labs' virtual simulation with constructive simulations and live fire training build on the gains of a series of AWEs that began at the National Training Center in April 1994.

Results of Warrior Focus will provide key information to members of the Army's leadership as they chart the future course for digitization of the Army.

This opportunity will allow the Army to determine where it stands in terms of providing doctrine, training (for leaders and soldiers), organizations and equipment for future combat units as it relates to light or heavy and SOF units as they fight in a digitized environment with improved night-fighting capabilities.

The Army plans to use insights from Warrior Focus for the planning of the Task Force XXI division-level exercise scheduled for a culminating event at the NTC in 1997.

A brigade task force of the 2nd Armored Division is being organized at Fort Hood for experimentation on the largest scale to date with digitized weapons and support systems for maneuver and division support slice elements.

Olympic torch bearers wanted

USAIC Public Affairs Office

The Public Affairs Office has application forms for anyone wishing to compete to be an Olympic torch bearer or wanting to nominate someone for this honor.

Applicants must be "community heroes." A community hero is someone who: performs outstanding volunteer work, serves as a community leader, role model or mentor, performs acts of generosity or kindness or performs extraordinary feats or accomplishments, locally or nationally.

All applicants or nominees must also be 12 or older on April 27.

Applications and nominations must be filled out and postmarked by Nov. 30 and must be received by Dec. 8.

Applications must be accompanied by an 8 1/2"x 11 1/2" sheet that describes why you or someone you know is a community hero. Descriptions are limited to 100 words and may be either typed or legibly hand written.

The applications will be mailed to 147 community judging locations across the country. Each location will have a judging panel of community leaders who will review and judge the entries.

This process is being facilitated by the local United Way organizations.

All those selected as community hero torchbearers must carry a 3 1/2 pound torch up to one kilometer.

Torch bearers will be assigned to carry the Olympic flame along the Olympic relay route as close to their hometown community as possible.

The relay starts in Los Angeles April 27 and finishes in Atlanta July 19.

Name: Pfc. Jocelyn Valdez

Position: Better Opportunities for Single Soldiers Program representative
Unit: Headquarters and Headquarters Detachment, Henry Caro Noncommissioned Officers Academy
MOS: 71L10
Job Title: Administrative specialist
Years on the job: One year, 10 months
Hometown: Bronx, N.Y.

What were your reasons for joining the Army?
To better my life and enrich it, too. I want to travel to different countries and have money to finish my college degree.

What were your reasons for choosing your MOS?
I like to work; I like computers.

What person has most influenced your military career?
Staff Sgt. Petra Zavitz, a true soldier. She has taught me a lot and is a very friendly person.

If you were the sergeant major of the Army for a day, what improvements would you make?
I would make improvements where they are really needed — in single and married soldiers' living standards.

What are your future career plans?
To finish my four-year enlistment and then go into the Army Reserves and finish my teacher's degree.

What do you think about the BOSS program and why is it important?
This program is great because it allows the single soldier to voice his or her opinion and give ideas to help improve their living standards and others.

What have you accomplished as the BOSS representative for your unit?
I am the BOSS alternate.

In your opinion, how can the individual soldier get involved in the BOSS program?
They are welcome to join in BOSS meetings; they can write down their ideas and voice them.

What specifically has the BOSS program done to help the soldiers in your unit?
Right now, I really have not seen improvement in my units. I would like our barracks to get can recycling bins to help raise money for BOSS events.

Starting early: Key to easy transition

Army Career and Alumni Program

The Army Career and Alumni Program provides career guidance for soldiers transitioning out of the service. Starting early is the key for soldiers to begin thinking about what they want to do after the military.

Based on soldiers' individual needs, ACAP counselors will offer career guidance and counseling on services and programs available to them. Soldiers schedule individual appointments through their personnel services noncommissioned officer three-day expiration of term of service retirement briefing and ACAP transition counselor appointment.

ACAP offers:

A three-day retirement transition class within 180 days of separation that prepares military members for transition.

• A one-day "advanced course" explaining resume preparation and interviewing skills.

• The Defense Outplacement Referral System process that provides a free service to match a person's abilities to civilian employment positions by sending a mini-resume to a data base accessed by employers worldwide.

• Career Day provides an opportunity for employers to meet soldiers, provide information on job leads and interview prospective clients as needed.

Six months before separation

• Schedule through the unit PSNCO your preseparation counseling appointment at ACAP Transition Office, Building 2617, and the three-day preseparation classes conducted in Infantry Hall, Classroom 30.

• Develop an individual transition plan with the ACAP transition counselor in Building 2617 and review the mandatory "preseparation Counseling Checklist" (Department of Defense Form 2648) required for clearing post.

• Begin researching the job market. Develop a career plan, including a list of possible employers in your career field.

• Assess your job skills and interests to determine how they relate to today's job market; take a vocational interest inventory.

• Discuss with your family possible options about your career and where to live next.

Five months before separation

• Seek help if the stresses of your transition to civilian life become too much to handle.

• Contact friends in the private sector who may help you find a job.

• Begin attending job fairs.

• Develop a fall-back plan in case your first career plan falls through.

• Research specific job possibilities, job markets and the economic conditions in the geographic areas where you want to live.

• If you need additional educational or vocational training to compete in the job market, explore your options for adult education.

• Establish a financial plan "to make ends meet" during your transition to civilian life.

• If you are separating before fulfilling eight years of active service, you must satisfy your obligation by becoming a member of the Ready Reserve.

Four months before separation

• Receive your "Verification of Military Experience and Training" (DD Form 2586). For specific information call (800) 258-8638.

• Write resumé

• If you are considering federal employment, fill out an application (Standard Form 171). Explore special federal programs and hiring opportunities for veterans.

• Visit the Relocation Assistance Program Office. If you live in government housing arrange for a preinspection and obtain termination information.

• Learn about the education benefits you can obtain under the Montgomery GI Bill.

Benning attends AUSA meeting

Annual conference focuses on digitized soldiers and Force XXI

By Judith Ginder
School of the Americas

Thirty-three officers, noncommissioned officers and junior enlisted soldiers from Fort Benning attended the 41st Association of the United States Army annual meeting Oct. 16 to 18 in Washington, D.C.

The soldiers, who were chosen by their units to attend because of personal accomplishments, went to seminars and meetings.

At a reception, they were able to meet Army Chief of Staff Dennis Reimer, Secretary of the Army Togo West and Sgt. Maj. of the Army Gene McKinney.

The focus of this year's meeting was Force XXI. Attendees were able to see exactly what the digitized soldier of the future will look like as well as how Force XXI will affect soldiers.

In addition to the AUSA convention, the Fort Benning group took a bus tour of the Washington, D.C., area, visited monuments and other museums, and some of the soldiers even got to visit with people at the Old Soldiers and Airmen's Home while in the area.

Airports impose new security measures

New security measures in all airports require travelers to show a picture identification card at time of check-in. Picture ID cards are required for travelers 18-years and older. Failure to produce a picture ID could result in denial of boarding.

Check-in time at the Columbus Airport should be no less than 45 minutes prior to departure and no less than one hour prior to departure from the Atlanta Airport.

For more information, call the Transportation Division at 545-7706.

FEHB opens season

The 1995 Federal Employee's Health Benefits Program open season will be Nov. 13 through Dec. 11. Enrollment and changes will be effective the first day of the first pay period beginning on or after Jan. 1. Employees who make a change must be in a pay status for some part of the pay period prior to the one in which enrollment takes effect.

For more information call Felicia W. Griffin at 545-5562.

ACAP offers skill development program

The Fort Benning Regional Army Career and Alumni Program office is offering a Skill Development Program to provide short-term training opportunities to soldiers, civilians and family members who transition from the Army. Some courses offered include Hazardous Material Handling, Police Officer Training, Commercial Drivers' Licensing and others.

For more information, call 545-7028.

OCS board set

The next Officer Candidate School selection board has been scheduled for June 17 to 21, 1996. The cutoff date for applications to arrive at Personnel Command is May 17, 1996 — no exceptions.

The Adjutant General Personnel Operations Services Division has set up two local boards to accommodate Fort Benning for the DA June board.

Local board No. 1 will be Feb. 6 to 8. Applications must arrive in POSD no later than Jan. 19. Local board No. 2 will be May 6 to 8. Applications for this board must arrive in POSD no later than April 19.

For more information, call Marie Lee at 545-3341 or 545-4702.

Health Fair set

The Directorate of Civilian Personnel is hosting a health fair Nov. 13 and 14 in the Total Army Quality Training Room, Building 85, A Wing, Classroom 1.

Representatives from health carriers will be available from 8 a.m. to 4 p.m. both days.

For more information, call Felicia W. Griffin at 545-5562.

Students study latest learning tips

The faculty of the Fort Benning School system are always looking for ways to keep their teaching methods and materials on the cutting edge of educational technology.

One program that facilitates this is the schools' Learning Resource Centers.

"The Learning Resource Center is the center of instructional programs in all of the schools," said Judy Archer, curriculum coordinator, Fort Benning Schools.

Each center is staffed by a media specialist who coordinates all instructional materials in the school and plans with the classroom teachers to effectively utilize the school's resources, according to Archer.

The media specialist keeps up to date with teachers' plans so they can provide aids that go along with what the children are studying in the classroom, according to Jerry H. Christy, technology curriculum coordinator, Fort Benning Schools.

"It's really an extension and enrichment program," he said. "We try to make it high-interest learning."

"The Learning Resource Center is more than just books," Archer said. It is the center of technological program implementation, audiovisual aids and traditional print material.

Learning Resource Centers enhance students' classroom experiences by exposing them to the most up-to-date educational technology

"One example is the kindergartners making an ABC book through a multimedia approach," she said. The children use word processing skills to write the text and use a scanner to scan in pictures of things that have meaning to them.

"The skills they learn through this have real-life applications," she said.

There are countless teaching aids the centers provide. There is a National Geographic Kids Network, in which the children can write to classrooms in other countries. The children have access to Internet, complete with software the schools use to protect children against offensive materials. There are laser discs students can use with science and social studies programs.

"We want to take a well-rounded approach to technological education," Archer said. "Technology in education allows us to focus on information processing skills instead of rote memorization."

The media specialist also sorts through all of the new materials on the market and decides which items will make the most effective teaching aids. The media specialist then provides the faculty with training on the new equipment. The teachers can then teach their students to use the equipment.

"With all of the information out there, we have to distinguish between quality and quantity," Archer said. "We want to give (the students) the best, not just lots."

Community life mayors undertake new positions

By Michael Hubanks
Special correspondent

Volunteer community life mayors were installed in a ceremony Oct. 25.

Mayors are military spouses committed to ensuring a better living area for Fort Benning housing residents, and they work in conjunction with post agencies, said Michele Marley, Indianhead Terrace mayor and president of the Community Life Mayors' Council.

Six mayors and two vice mayors were elected by housing area residents during a post-wide election Sept. 20 and 21.

Following the installation was a regular monthly Community Life Mayors' Council meeting. Attendees, including the mayors and representatives from the Directorate of Public Works, Directorate of Public Safety and other agencies, discussed issues to help improve post housing areas.

The mayors expressed their optimism about the future, and each had different goals and projects in mind.

Custer Terrace mayor Mollie Herman said she'd like to see more residents get involved and give ideas to help improve the community.

Shawna O'Neil, the East Main Post mayor, said she would like to see more community cohesiveness.

Jackie Mumpower, West Main Post mayor, said she wants more community involvement and a generalized playground area.

Bouton Heights and Davis Hill mayor Angie Rizzo said she, like O'Neil, wants to see cohesiveness. Rizzo said she would also like to see the communities working together to solve problems.

Corinna Manning, McGraw Manor mayor, said she wants the speeding of vehicles in her housing area to cease for the safety of all of McGraw Manor's residents.

McGraw Manor vice mayor, Becky Murphy, echoed Manning's wishes for stopping the speeding in neighborhood streets. She too said she'd like to see more neighborhood cohesiveness.

If you are interested in volunteering as a mayor or would like more information, call Jennifer Morgan, Community Life officer, at 545-5931 or Marley at 685-1805.

Employee wins post-wide award

For third time in four years, Terri D. Bass named Handicapped Employee of the Year

By Shannon Day
Special to The Bayonet©

Terri D. Bass, data transcriber, Planning, Production and Control Branch, is living proof that being born physically challenged is only an impairment if a person lets it be.

For the third time in four years, she has been named Fort Benning's Handicapped Employee of the Year, which is only part of her long list of achievements.

"Leave it in Terri's hands, and she will do a good job for you."

— Audrey D. Walker
Planning, Production and Control Branch

Bass, a native of Columbus, was born with a hearing loss that severely limited her ability to hear and speak.

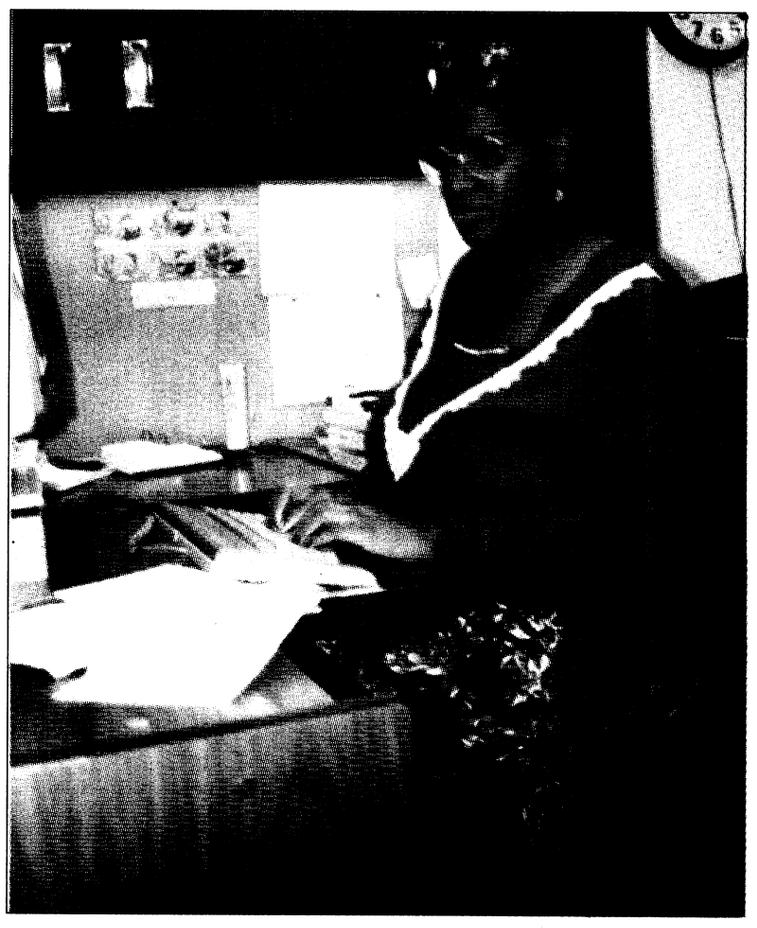
She attended the North Carolina School for the Deaf where she learned sign language. After that, she came back to Columbus and transferred to Key Elementary School, went on to Talbotton Middle School and finally graduated from Jordan High School. She attended regular classes and participated in extra-curricular activities with the help of an interpreter.

Bass graduated from Columbus Area Vocational School in 1984 and has been working for the government for the last 10 years.

"She is very friendly and outgoing," said Audrey D. Walker, data collection supervisor; Planning, Production and Control Branch. "The people in the office have been learning sign language, and she is always bringing training aids, like books and flash cards, in at lunchtime to help out."

Bass said her favorite part of the job is being able to use all of the different computers.

"She's very versatile," Walker said. "You just have to tell her what you want and she will get it done. Leave it in Terri's hands, and she will do a good job for you."



In Bass's spare time, she helps other deaf people look for jobs.

"I tell them they need to go to Columbus Tech or a college and find a major in what they want to do," Bass said. "Then I help them find jobs."

Bass also spends a lot of time with her family. As the mother of three small children, she said she stays busy.

She is also teaching her oldest child, 4-year-old Arthur Jr., sign language. She said although she is very independent in taking care of her personal business, her son can interpret for her if she has any trouble.

Bass is the Fort Benning representative for the Columbus Mayor's Committee for Person's With Disabilities Award, in which

Shannon Day/Special to The Bayonet

Terri D. Bass, data transcriber, Planning, Production and Control Branch, inputs information into her computer. Bass has been named the 1995 Fort Benning's Handicapped Employee of the Year.

Education fair — In recognition of American Education Week, the Staff Education and Training Branch, Directorate of Operations and Training, will host an education fair at Infantry Hall Nov. 16 from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m.

Local educational institutions will be present. All Fort Benning personnel and their family members are invited.

AER college assistance — Soldiers with college-aged children often wonder how they can afford education costs. Many don't realize that part of the answer may be found from Army Emergency Relief.

AER provides financial assistance through scholarships. To qualify for financial assistance through AER, students must be enrolled, accepted or pending acceptance as a full-time student for the entire academic year in post-secondary educational institutions approved by the U.S. Department of Education.

Scholarships are awarded based on financial need, academic achievement and individual accomplishments.

Applications must be received by March 1 for the upcoming academic year.

For more information, visit the AER, Building 2643, Soldiers' Plaza, 8 a.m. to 5 p.m., Monday through Friday.

OWC welfare requests — The Officers' Wives' Club of Fort Benning is a charitable organization that gives back to its community. Over the years, the OWC has given out scholarships and donations to many private, nonprofit organizations. To receive a donation, requests need to be submitted and approved by the OWC board of directors.

This year the majority of welfare funds will be disbursed during the November and April OWC board of directors' meetings. The April deadline is no later than April 1, 1996.

Should your organization wish to submit a request, include the following information:

- The amount of money requested
- The total amount of money needed
- Specific purpose of money requested
- Fund-raising efforts
- Other organizations from which you are requesting funds
- Number of military affected
- The name and telephone number of your point of contact

Submit requests to the Officers' Wives' Club of Fort Benning, P.O. Box 51978, Fort Benning, Ga. 31905-1978.

For more information, call Steffani Dyer at 685-1364.

Center coordinates soldiers' utility services

Utility Coordination Center

The Utility Coordination Center, Building 2633, was established Dec. 1, 1992. In that one building, soldiers arriving at Fort Benning can have their electricity, gas, phone and water turned on if they live in Columbus or on post.

Further, if soldiers have not previously had bad credit with one of the participating utility companies, they can do this without paying a deposit. That is a savings of from $75 to $300 per soldier. Installation and service connection fees will be charged. Being able to have all of these utilities turned on without having to drive all over town saves soldiers time and money.

There are responsibilities that go along with the convenience of using this resource. It is the soldiers' responsibility of to ensure that their utility bills are paid on time. If they find they have fallen behind in the payment of utility bills, there is assistance available at the Army Community Service office, the Consumer Affairs and Financial Assistance Program and Army Emergency Relief.

If soldiers or family members feel their utility bills are too high for the space being heated or cooled or the water being used, they should contact the landlord to have it checked out. They can contact the utility company concerned to see if the company can identify a problem. There could be a water leak, poor insulation or some defect in the house or in the meter.

Soldiers should monitor their usage. Are they cooking more, washing more clothes, washing vehicles, turning the thermostat up or down? Are they watering the grass more because of the heat and dry weather? Have there been houseguests recently? Most people do not realize how much these changes can cost in dollars and cents.

The telephone poses its own special dangers. Those calls to missed family and friends add up quickly. Calls between soldier and family when the soldier is in the field easily "bust" the budget. Directory assistance isn't free, even locally; use the telephone book. When you can't find a quarter, you pay half a dollar for the convenience of calling collect from the unit or the mall. Is it worth it? More importantly, is it in your spending plan?

If soldiers move into government quarters, they should provide the utility companies with their forwarding address. They should be sure to obtain and pay final bills. If they cannot pay the total final bill at one time, they should make a payment arrangement with the utility company. If, for some reason, they find themselves unable to meet this obligation, they should contact an ACS financial counselor and let her help work it out. Counselors have over 10 year's experience each in handling those kinds of situations.

All soldiers leaving Fort Benning must clear through the UCC. At that time, all final bills must be paid. Past-due bills should be paid before it is time to clear. If they do not have enough the money, they should start making payments so there is no "checkbook shock" at clearing time.

The companies advise the UCC whenever soldiers have a delinquent account that the company has been unable to collect. Commanders of those soldiers are notified of this debt. If the debt is not paid after the company commander has been notified, the garrison commander will send a letter through the major subordinate command commander to the battalion commander. This is not a consequence that any soldier or commander needs to deal with.

The UCC is a great resource which provides an excellent service to relocating soldiers. It is also a privilege for Fort Benning to have. It was established under a Memorandum of Understanding between each of the four participating utility companies and the commander of Fort Benning.

Some soldiers have been abusing this privilege. If everyone is not careful, these abusive soldiers will destroy the privilege for all Fort Benning soldiers. In order for this resource to continue to be available for the soldiers of Fort Benning, every soldier assigned to Fort Benning must accept the responsibilities that accompany this privilege every day.

Club hosts auction, holiday game night

Officers' Wives' Club

The Officers' Wives' Club of Fort Benning is sponsoring a Fun Auction and holiday game night Nov. 17 for OWC members and their guests in the Regimental Room of the Fort Benning Officers' Club.

Games will be played with various prizes given away to winners, plus there will be silent auction items and service auction items to bid on during the course of the evening.

The event begins with a social hour at 6 p.m., and a cash bar will be available. At 7 p.m., a spaghetti bar with salad, bread and tea begins for $5.

Viewing and bidding of the silent auction items will be during the social and dinner hour. The games will begin immediately following dinner at 8 p.m. Also, throughout the evening, various service auction items will be bid upon.

Dinner reservations are not required, but OWC is requesting that you call either Brooke Gorski at 682-4913 or Lorie Bohnstedt at 682-8495 by Nov. 15 so the Officers' Club may have an estimated number in attendance. Bohnstedt is also taking reservation in Spanish.

Tot Town will be open the night of Nov. 17 to accommodate baby-sitting needs, but registration and reservations are required for Tot Town.

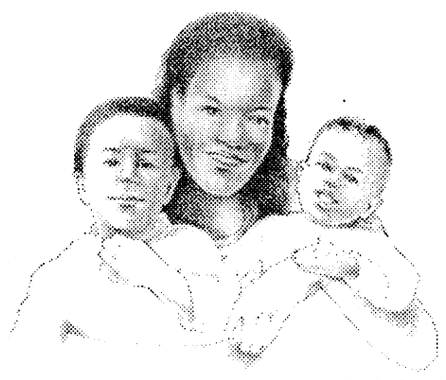
Card contest caters to mothers' creative children

KFC and Family Circle

Children in fourth, fifth and sixth grade are challenged to create an original Mother's Day card for the All-American Salute To Mothers national greeting card contest.



The grand-prize winner's card will be printed by Carlton Cards, a division of American Greetings, and sold in retail stores nationwide for Mother's Day 1996.

The contest, which is sponsored by Kentucky Fried Chicken and Family Circle, was launched with an announcement in the Oct. 10 issue of Family Circle magazine. In addition, elementary school children in more than 65,000 public, private and parochial schools will participate in the contest through an interactive educational lesson plan. The plan reviews the changing role of mothers in our society over the generations and encourages students to communicate their feelings for mothers creatively through art and language. The lesson culminates with students creating a Mother's Day greeting card for the contest.

"This contest provides children with a positive, creative outlet to convey their love for their mothers," said Susan Kelliher Ungaro, editor in chief of Family Circle.

Students who enter could win one of the following prizes:

- First place: $3,500 and a two-night trip with a parent or guardian to New York for the unveiling of an exhibit of the top 51 cards

- Second place: $1,500 cash
- Third place: $750 cash
- Fourth place (seven winners): $500 cash

Additional prizes include a Rand McNally Picture Atlas of the World and a Rand McNally Picture Atlas of Prehistoric Life to the 51 semi-finalists and schools of the top 10 winners, a Texas Instruments Math Explorer Plus calculator to teachers of the top 10 winners and a set of the 1995 edition of World Book Encyclopedia to the school of the grand-prize winner.

To enter, students produce an original Mother's Day card with an illustration and written message. Any two-dimensional medium may be used — crayons, paint or marker, for example. Contestants should avoid using media that is difficult to reproduce, such as chalk, lead pencils or notebook paper and three dimensional objects, such as sparkles, beads, lace, etc. Computer-generated art is ineligible. The card must be constructed of paper folded in half and no larger than 5 3/8-inches wide by 8 1/4-inches high with an illustration on the cover and a message inside.

Each entry should include a separate sheet attached to the back of the card with the creator's name, school, grade, teacher's name, home address, parent's name and daytime telephone number, signed by a parent or legal guardian. Send the card to: KFC/Family Circle All-American Salute To Mothers, 332 S. Michigan Ave., Suite 900, Dept. DR, Chicago, Ill. 60604. Entries must be received by Dec. 8.

Winning cards will be chosen from each state and the District of Columbia. The top three cards, including the national grand-prize winner, will be published in the May 1996 issue of Family Circle magazine.

A complete set of contest rules may be found in the Oct. 10 issue of Family Circle or by sending a #10 self-addressed, stamped envelope to KFC/Family Circle Contest Rules, 200 E. Randolph Drive, Suite 6300, Chicago, Ill. 60601. All entries become the property of KFC and Family Circle and will not be returned.

Talents, services needed for OWC auction night

Officers' Wives' Club

The Fort Benning Officers' Wives' Club is sponsoring a Fun Auction and holiday game night Nov. 17 for OWC members and guests. Money made during this fund-raising event will be given back to the Fort Benning community to various local charitable organizations.

However, to make this a successful event, units or individuals are needed to volunteer any talents or services for silent auction and service auction items.

Examples of silent auction items are prime parking at the Post Exchange, homemade items, picnic basket, holiday decorations, quilts or a framed print.

Examples of service auction items include a car wash, home decorating, sewing lessons, baby-sitting, free makeovers, a chauffeured ride or Commissary shopping. These lists are only examples. The OWC would like to auction special talents or services.

For more information or to donate an item for either of the auctions, call Jackie Place at 689-6496 or Brenda McKean at 689-4590.

MULTIPLE SCLEROSIS

MS society helps those with unpredictable disease

The Multiple Sclerosis Society

The National Multiple Sclerosis Society-Georgia Chapter continues to provide services and programs for people living with multiple sclerosis. In addition to daily solutions to this unknown and unpredictable disease, the National MS Society funds biomedical research to discover the underlying cause of MS in hopes of one day finding the cure. The National MS Society is the largest funder of MS research excluding the federal government.

The Georgia Chapter of the National MS Society organizes a variety of programs for all individuals affected by multiple sclerosis. One of the greatest services provided is the information network. This service concentrates on educating newly diagnosed individuals, their family, friends and employers about MS and the effects it has on one's body and mind. The society sends information about symptom management, coping, exercise, nutrition and more.

Not only do people living with multiple sclerosis need education, but often times they need mobility assistance — such as wheelchairs, scooters or other adaptive aids that make daily living easier. The MS Society-Georgia Chapter provides medical equipment for loan as well as limited financial assistance for those in need.

Support groups and counseling programs provide a healthy outlet for those affected by multiple sclerosis. The MS Society sponsors a variety of counseling programs in Georgia.

These programs and many more support the mission of the National Multiple Sclerosis Society-Georgia Chapter by improving the quality of the life for those affected by multiple sclerosis. If you have any questions about a particular program or the National MS Society-Georgia Chapter, please call (800) 822-3379 statewide or (770) 984-9080.

Donating old cars helps kidney foundation cause

National Kidney Foundation of Georgia

Getting rid of an old car you no longer have use for can be stressful.

The National Kidney Foundation of Georgia's Car Contribution Campaign program can help reduce the stress of selling a vehicle while giving the donor a chance to directly assist more than 6,000 kidney dialysis and hundreds of transplant patients in Georgia.

You can donate your used car, truck motor home or motor cycle to the NKFG and receive a valuable tax deduction.

It's a year-round program, so the opportunity is there when the need arises.

The vehicles are sold at a dealer auction and the donor is mailed a receipt from the sale and a deed of gift. Consult a tax advisor as to how to use this document for tax purposes.

Name: Staff Sgt. John Ray Sego

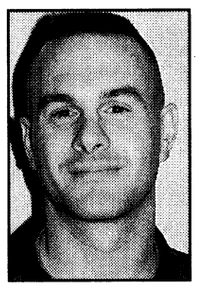
Award or recognition: Fort Benning NCO of the Quarter
MOS: 11C3X
Unit: Company C, 1st Battalion, 38th Infantry Regiment
Job title: Drill sergeant
Years on the job: 8 years

What were your reasons for joining the Army? Service to country, travel, adventure and the Army college fund.

Define your style of leadership.
Participative. Assist soldiers in meeting standards. Insist they maintain standards. Allow soldiers to solve simple problems for development.

What person has most influenced your career?
Sgt. 1st Class Robert Buster. He was my last platoon sergeant. He taught me a great deal about leadership and how to be a professional soldier. My wife, Tami Sego, also greatly influenced me by supporting my decision and pushing me for career enhancement.

If you were sergeant major of the Army for a day, what improvements would you make?
Do away with needless spending. In order to obtain the new fiscal budget, all money from the previous budget must be spent. Let's set aside the same budget every year. If money is left over, throw it into the pot and utilize it where it's needed.



What were your reasons for choosing your MOS?
The infantry provided the most opportunities for excitement in regards to physical training.

Describe a memorable moment in your career.
My entire tour in the Berlin Brigade. I was there during the unification of Germany. I saw the wall when it was torn down and realized I was a part of history in the making.

What are your future career plans?
To attend OCS in the near future. Retire from the military whether I'm an officer or an NCO. Play golf in the Senior PGA.

What others have to say: Drill Sgt. Sego is the epitome of what a drill sergeant should be — tough, but fair and a leader among his peers. — 1st Sgt. Carlos Garriga, Company C first sergeant Drill Sgt. Sego is a total professional and an excellent role model for our soldiers. — Lt. Col. Kevin Connors, commander, 1st Bn., 38th Inf. Regt.

What were your reasons for joining the Army? Discipline and opportunity

Define your style of leadership.
Set high but attainable standards and exceed them myself as an example.

What person has most influenced your career?
1st Sgt Kevin R. Whittaker, my first squad leader.

If you were sergeant major of the Army for a day, what improvements would you make?
Through incentives, I would make the position of instructor within an NCOES school. A highly sought after job within the Army.

What were your reasons for choosing your MOS?
Being in the infantry provided the best opportunity to lead, coach and mentor soldiers.

Describe a memorable moment in your career.
The 68 days of Ranger School

What are your future career plans?
To complete a college degree and some day be selected Command Sergeant Major.

Name: Capt. Eugene A. Yancey III

Award or recognition: Instructor of the year
MOS: 11A
Unit: Company C, 2nd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment
Job title: Senior platoon trainer
Years on the job: 6 years

What were your reasons for joining the Army? I came from a distinguished lineage of American soldiers and I wanted to carry on the patriotic tradition.

Define your style of leadership.
Positive, motivational, leading from the front and setting an example.

What person has most influenced your career?
Lt. Col. Hogland. I learned how to lead and motivate soldiers by observing him.

What were your reasons for choosing your MOS?
When it was time for me to choose a branch, I really didn't consider the other branches. I knew that I wanted to be an infantryman.

Describe a memorable moment in your career.
When our plane landed in Maine after Desert Storm, airport employees elevated a baggage loader beside the runway, climbed to the top, and waved a huge American flag as we taxied by.

What others have to say: Capt. Yancy is a superior example of quality of IOBC trainers currently training our young officers.

3rd Brigade does NTC again, this time as OPFOR

By Ruth J. Spaller
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Soldiers from the 2nd Battalion, 18th Infantry Regiment, departed Kelley Hill Sunday for the shifting sands of the Mojave Desert — territory that has become pretty familiar to the soldiers of the 3rd Brigade, 24th Infantry Division (Mechanized), who travel to Fort Irwin, Ca., about once a year to participate in exercises at the National Training Center.

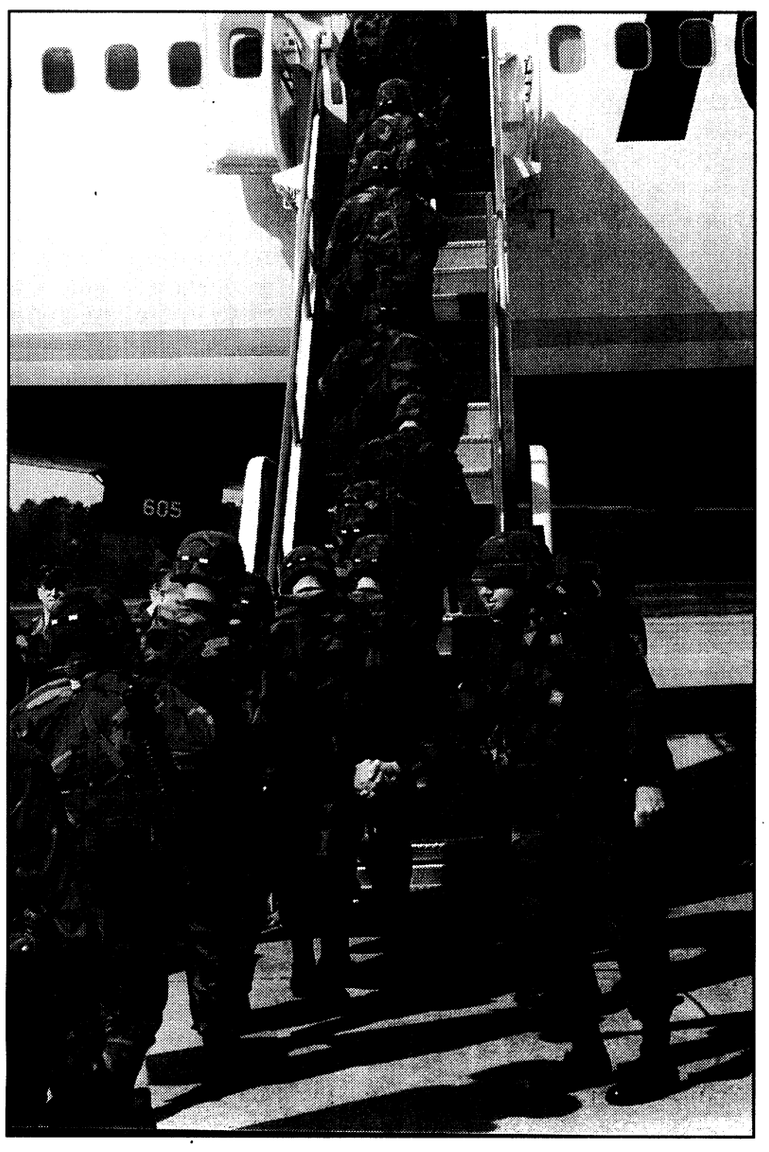
This trip will be a little different than the usual rotation though, because the 350 Fort Benning soldiers will be joining the desert "home team," known as the opposing forces, in battle against a sister unit: the 2nd Brigade, 24th Infantry Division (Mechanized) out of Fort Stewart, Ga.

"This is a great training opportunity for us in that we are attached to the OPFOR and we get to see the training strategy and some of the techniques they use in defeating the Blue (training) force," said Maj. Johnny G. Womack, Operations Officer for the 2nd Bn., 18th Inf. Regt.

"The OPFOR uses different tactics — Soviet tactics," said 1st Sgt. Mark Mello, Company B, 2nd Bn., 18th Inf. Regt., who was stationed at Fort Irwin as part of the opposing forces team from 1991 to 94.

"This way we get to see how they operate and maneuver, so that when we go back in a Blue force rotation, it doesn't come as a surprise as far as their tactics," Mello said.

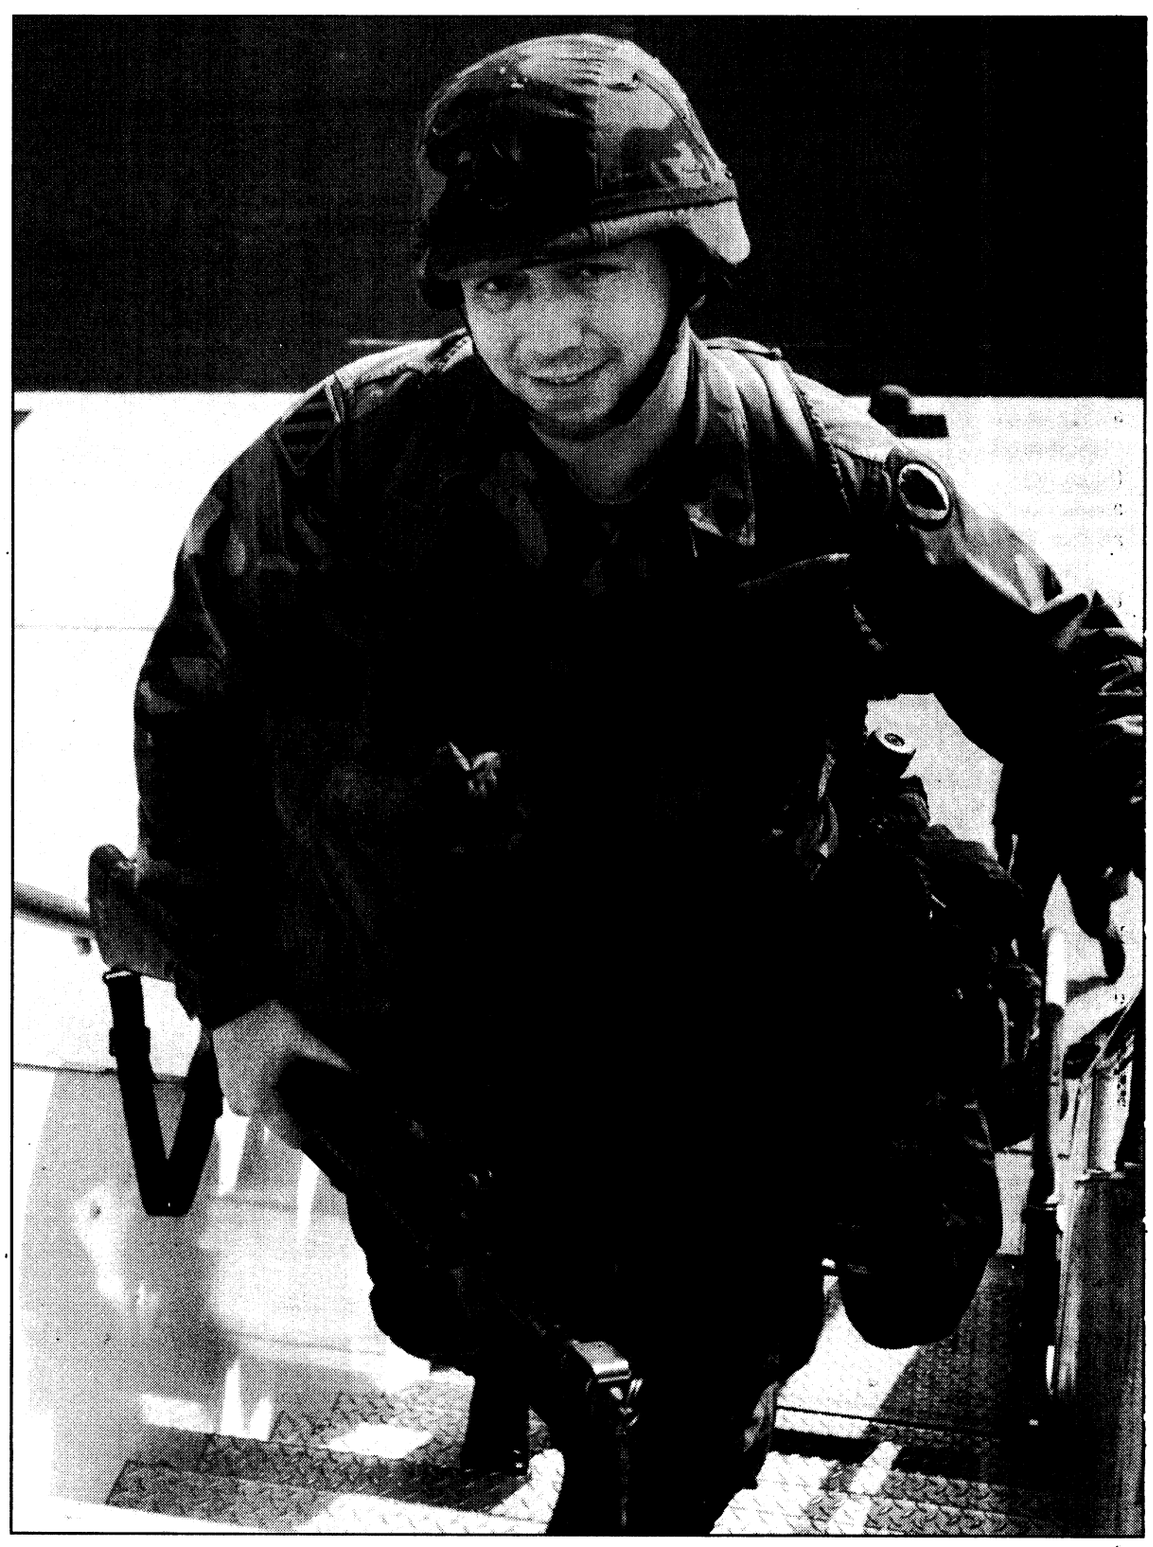
Going through a rotation as part of the opposing forces provides many additional advantages, Womack said.



"It's good for our staff guys because they get to go out with the observer-controllers and see how they evaluate the training force. That makes us better able to adapt when we go out there," he said.

Also, the leaders get actual experience training in the area, becoming familiar with the areas where the opposing forces are likely to set up observation points as well as the terrain in general, Womack said.

Finally, as OPFOR, the soldiers do not have to draw as much equipment as they would as the training force, and so they have a little more down time.



This will be filled with common task training and a Morale, Welfare and Recreation trip to Las Vegas, Womack said.

The battalion is expected to return around Nov. 20.

Georgia Installation performs a terrorism safety check

Fort Stewart analyzes area security system

The Patriot, Fort Stewart, Ga.

There are times when overseas events trigger responses in the United States. Such is the case with some recent events in the Middle East.

Fort Stewart officials analyzed the situation in Coastal Georgia and have stated there is no reason to believe that the installation or surrounding areas are threatened.

"We've checked with the Federal Bureau of Investigation and other local law enforcement agencies to see if any groups pose a threat to us. There is no specific threat to our area," said Lt. Col. Tony Fortune, commander, Law Enforcement Command.

Nevertheless, the installation is well-prepared to respond if a threat is detected.

"We are fully capable of hardening this installation and Hunter (Army Air Field) as needed," said Fortune.

"Acts of terrorism are a crime that we must prevent from occurring. We don't discuss specific details about our strategy, because we are not in the habit of informing criminals about law enforcement measures. However, you can be assured that if the situation warrants, the commanding general will direct appropriate measures to ensure that everyone on Fort Stewart and HAAF enjoy a quality of life that is second to none in a safe, secure environment," the Law Enforcement commander said.

"This plan has worked well during Desert Storm; checkpoints were established at key locations," he said. "However, we don't recommend implementing these very obtrusive checks at this time, because the FBI and the intelligence community inform us that they are unwarranted."

All in-house security measures are coordinated with local, state and federal agencies as a joint effort to thwart criminal acts against soldiers, civilians, family members and visitors.

"This is not something that we do just because we are in the Army. We look to our neighbors to work with us," explained Fortune.

"We're proactive. Not just because of recent activities overseas. We are out there monitoring the situation 24 hours a day," he added.

Soldiers going to areas of the world where terrorist acts occur should keep the following tips in mind when traveling:

• Avoid travel to areas of high threat unless it's to mission-essential airports; review the Department of Defense Code of Conduct Guidance for Personnel Subject to Terrorist Activity.

• At the nearest U.S. Embassy or consulate, ask the regional security officer about current security concerns where you intend to travel.

• Use military aircraft or Military Airlift Command charters to travel. Get briefed on precautionary measures.

• Wear nondescript civilian clothing on commercial flights. Avoid wearing clothes that are clearly of U.S. origin, such as cowboy hats.

• Wear civilian clothing, even on military aircraft, if you are making connections with a commercial flight that will go through a high-risk area.

• Send classified material through approved channels. Carry it only if your mission requires you to.

• Avoid writing military rank, insignia or duty station on travel documents or baggage.

• Avoid public areas of the airport. Proceed quickly through security checkpoints to await your next flight to a secure area.

• Avoid discussing your military affiliation with anyone.

• Be aware that hijackers may not all reveal themselves at the same time; a lone hijacker may draw out security personnel to be neutralized by other hijackers.

• Remember that a tourist passport is only a shallow cover for your DoD affiliation.

DoD urges posts to plan for future threat

By Stephen Barrett
American Forces Information Service

While praising accomplishments of military units to combat today's terrorism threat, Department of Defense officials are urging the services to continue planning for future security challenges.

H. Allen Holmes, assistant secretary of defense for special operations and low-intensity conflict, said he expects innovative and lethal attacks by groups bearing better weapons and less restraint when it comes to U.S. targets.

Despite 25 years' experience in tracking and combating modern terrorism, Holmes said, terrorists are adapting to U.S. preventive tactics.

"In their need to shock, to horrify and to capture headlines, they have grown more lethal," he said. Holmes said technological advances by terrorists make it even more imperative that intelligence, security and law enforcement entities work together in fighting terrorism.

With the fall of the Soviet Union six years ago, Holmes said he was hoping for a time of optimism. "Money, weapons, training, sanctuary and strategic protection — without which no, modern terrorist can operate — all disappeared within the space of a few months," he said. However, Holmes said his optimism was premature.

"Not only are many old conflicts still with us," he said, "but they have been joined by dangerous new hostilities. Civil war has returned to Angola, and the Khmer Rouge has reverted to bloodshed. Bosnia is in the midst of a civil war."

Holmes said the United States, long immune from terrorism, suffered major acts of political terror. "It is clear that low-intensity conflict, in all its forms, will remain with us long after the memory of the Cold War has faded," he said. "The infliction of terror on innocent people is still often the weapon of choice for those who cannot accept the risk, or the cost, of open war."

Holmes said the increased threat will require greater vigilance, along with effective, targeted intelligence collection and analysis. "The operating environment may be complicated, but our mission remains constant — to protect our people and to deter terrorist groups," he said. "It is a challenge to which we are dedicated, and I know you are as well."

The anti-terrorism awards honored innovative efforts by units and individuals to combat terrorism while safeguarding American lives at home and abroad. Named best anti-terrorism program manager was Marine Maj. Charles E. Woens of the U.S. European Command's office of defense cooperation in Greece. Honorable mention went to Army Staff Sgt. David Supinger of the 5th Signal Command in Worms, Germany.

The best anti-terrorism innovation award went to the Northeast Metropolitan Field Office of Navy's Criminal Investigative Service in Earl, N.J. Honorable mentions went to Air Force Special Investigations Regions 2 and 3 at Andrews and the Air Force's 48th Security Police Squadron, stationed at Royal Air Force Base Lakenheath, England.

Are you squared away?

By Lisa M. Hibbert
Bayonet staff writer

Editor's note: The Follow Me section of The Bayonet will periodically feature a squared away column. This column will answer popular questions regarding Army and Fort Benning regulations.

Q What can I do in my physical training uniform?

A According the updated Fort Benning Regulation No. 95-12, physical training uniforms are to be worn for organized Army PT and those activities normally associated with Army physical readiness training.

"PT uniforms are not to be worn while (in-line) skating, playing tennis or any other sport not designed for soldier readiness," said Garrison Sgt. Maj. Steven G. Chittum.

Q Where can I where my battle dress and utility uniforms?

A The utility uniform is not authorized for wear off post... except for (short) stops for gas, convenience stores, (a quick lunch, cleaners) and bona fide emergencies," according to Fort Benning Regulation No. 94-65.

In addition to the above limitations, the BDU will not be worn after duty hours in any off post facility that serves alcohol.

The Class A or B uniform is the only appropriate dress for any business that requires more than 45 minutes.

TRADOC cdr discusses downsizing, training standards

TRADOC News Service

FORT MONROE, Va. — After taking a 30 percent cut in people and budget, along with the rest of the Army, Training and Doctrine Command's training workload will increase over the next year.

"In that same five years that the Army came down by a third, the requirement for training in TRADOC has not come down by a third," said Gen. William W. Hartzog, TRADOC commander. "It's come down by some 20 percent. We're going to train 12,000 more people in IET (initial entry training) this next year than we have in the past."

That was part of the picture painted by Hartzog in a meeting with civilian and military members of the TRADOC headquarters staff Oct. 13.

Hartzog used the meeting to explain his strategic plan for TRADOC. The plan is covered in three books, two of which have been printed and distributed. The third is due out in late November.

"Strategic Plan 95" discusses the current state of TRADOC and what the future holds. The second book is "Organization Guide," which shows the command organization for TRADOC now and into the future. The third book is "Requirements," the process by which the Army will be prepared for the 21st Century.

While TRADOC is being changed and modernized to handle the demands of the future, Hartzog said he wants to minimize turbulence among the civilian workforce.

"Throughout TRADOC, in a lot of places this year, there were RIFs (reductions in force) going on. I can't guarantee you there won't be another one, but I'm dedicated to trying to make sure there won't be another one," he said.

The general said there would be very little written guidance issued to tell people how to achieve the vision spelled out in the three books.

"I don't put out much guidance because I trust people," he said. "I don't think people need an awful lot of guidance to do what they need to do."

In his frequent travels, Hartzog said he has learned how highly the Army values TRADOC.

"It's phenomenal because everybody knows how hard you work and how important what you do is. It has all to do with you, the schools and the centers," he said.

TRADOC will meet future challenges by taking advantage of the "absolute explosion in technology."

He noted advances in technology in the short time between Operation Desert Storm and Operation Uphold Democracy in Haiti.

In 1991 it was extremely difficult to keep track of equipment in the desert.

> "The most important thing that we can possibly do in any of our missions ... is to remember that the soldier ... is at the center of our responsibilities."
> — Gen. William W. Hartzog
> TRADOC commander

"Last fall, when we were entering Haiti, if I wanted to know precisely where Conex 21578 was, we punched a button, a microchip in the Conex glowed and you got a blip on the screen that told you where it was," Hartzog said.

Hartzog was the deputy commander in chief of U.S. Atlantic Command, Norfolk, Va., before coming to TRADOC. He was in charge of USACOM's command post during Operation Uphold Democracy.

Information technology will also change the battlefields, he said. Today commanders can be sure of where 50 percent of their soldiers are, and where only half of the enemy is. According to experiences at the National Training Center, Fort Irwin, Ca., 60 percent of information a commander bases a decision on comes from personal observation or field reports. Maps, battle plans and other printed material provide another 20 percent. The final 20 percent is personal intuition.

In the Army of 2015, a commander will know where all of his troops are and where about 90 percent of the enemy is located. Command decisions will be based on accurate pictures of the battlefield before and during an engagement.

There will still be a human element in future battle command.

"Nobody is going to be told to attack on a digital screen," Hartzog said. "You kind of want to hear that in a frenzied voice with great interest and considerable passion out of the mouth of your senior commander."

Soldiers will not become "cyber warriors," trained only to push buttons, either.

"The most important thing in our business is the United States Army soldier," he said. "I think what is important is a future in which the soldier understands the technology and uses it to do the job we ask him to do.

"The most important thing that we can possibly do in any of our missions ... is to remember that the soldier, the man and woman in uniform, is at the center of our responsibilities."

To be able to carry out its missions, TRADOC must be reorganized, the general said. Hartzog envisions "hubs and spokes' arrangement" by the year 2000.

"That means that where you have a natural conglomeration of skill in certain groupings of branches ... we're going to try to put all of the people to be taught and a lot of functions into a hub and build it up," he said.

Hubs will be linked electronically to branch schools to "try to take some of the living expense out of the other branch schools."

"We'll end up with a TRADOC that probably will have the same number of posts. Some will be substantially smaller; a few will be larger."

It will take at least a year to complete plans for the new organization, with the bottom line being "we'll be able to fiscally run ourselves."

A 21st Century Army will retain its traditions, the general said. One of these is branch affiliation.

"Branches aren't going anywhere while I'm here," he said. "Branches are important here in your heart, not necessarily in your mind or in the rationale or affordability. I've been an infantryman for 33 years. I'm very proud of that."

The actions and innovations made by TRADOC influence extend beyond the Army and its sister services, Hartzog said.

"I average receiving two to three letters a day from my counterparts somewhere in this world," Hartzog said. "The United States Army's Training and Doctrine Command is worldwide."

Hartzog said he enjoys his job as TRADOC commander. When he travels and speaks to various groups, he wants to relay the importance of work done by the command's soldiers and civilians.

"(My concern is) that I know enough about what you are doing that I fully and faithfully represent you, because I am so proud of you and what you do," he said.

Former SMA recalls his rise to the top

By David Abrams
NCO Journal

When he wrote his autobiography, retired Sgt. Maj. of the Army William Bainbridge didn't even realize he was making history in the publishing world; he was too busy having fun penning the memoirs.

But "Top Sergeant" is unique because it is the only account of an enlisted soldier's rise to the most senior position in the U.S. Army, the office of the Sergeant Major of the Army, an office Bainbridge held for four years — longer than any other soldier before or since.

Co-authored with Dan Cragg, "Top Sergeant" traces Bainbridge's life from the Illinois farm where he grew up, to his desk at the Pentagon and beyond to the 12 years when he served as secretary to the board of commissioners for the Armed Forces Retirement Home.

Bainbridge also describes his grueling months as a German prisoner of war after he was captured during the Battle of the Bulge and his later duties as sergeant major for U.S. Army Pacific, the first command sergeant major for the U.S. Army Sergeants Major Academy at Fort Bliss, Texas, and a long list of other tours in military units around the globe.

By his own admission, his story is down-to-earth, peppered with names of friends and co-workers, and is always framed by Bainbridge's sense of ethics — standards, he says, which go all the way to the marrow of his life.

This isn't just the story of Bill Bainbridge as SMA or POW, he said during a recent stop at U.S. Army Sergeant Major's Academy. "The book is really the story of how my values were established," he said, "starting with my boyhood on the farm and on throughout my years in the Army where they provided the basis for everything I did as a soldier."

The autobiography is the result of a longstanding friendship between Bainbridge and Cragg, who worked in the Pentagon during the SMA's tenure there.

"Dan and I used to go out in the courtyard and just shoot the breeze," Bainbridge said. "Then one day out of the blue he said, 'You know, you really ought to write a book about all this that you've been telling me.'"

The idea didn't come to fruition, however, until 1990 — 11 years after Bainbridge's retirement — when Cragg brought an assistant editor from Random House to lunch at Bainbridge's house.

"He asked me a few questions about my life and we talked for a little bit and by the time we'd finished eating, the editor said he wanted to buy the manuscript — even though I hadn't written a single word!" Bainbridge said with a bemused chuckle.

For the next eight months, Bainbridge and Cragg spent their Saturdays together, compiling a lifetime of stories. "We drank coffee and ate muffins and Dan would ask a few questions to get me going," he said. "Then for the rest of the day I'd talk into his tape recorder," Bainbridge said, adding that his military memories are indelible.

Though some of the militarese was edited to make the book more readable for civilians, Bainbridge pulls no punches in his autobiography. From chewing roof tar for sustenance during his POW period to answering critics of the Vietnam War, the narrative is an unapologetic account of a life spent mostly in uniform.

As he signs copies of "Top Sergeant," Bainbridge encourages modern soldiers to benefit from his years of experience, especially when it comes to leading and training others.

"I learned a long time ago you have to listen to effectively solve soldiers' problems," he said. "You never learn anything while you're talking. I'll bet I solved more problems in the Army by listening than I ever did talking."

Now, however, Bainbridge is talking, and soldiers and civilians alike are pricking up their ears at bookstores everywhere to listen to one of America's premier top sergeants.

Quarterly breakfast boosts Re-ups

13th Corps Support Battalion

The 13th Corps Support Battalion hosted its first quarter, fiscal 1996 reenlistment breakfast Oct.18.

The breakfast, a quarterly event for initial and mid-term soldiers eligible for reenlistment, is one of a multi-faceted battalion reenlistment program which consistently produced reenlistment rates of 120% throughout fiscal 1995.

Lt. Col. Michael Ramírez, the battalion commander emphasized to those present to "stay in the Army for the right reason...."

Command Sgt. Maj. Clarence Wood, the battalion command sergeant major, informed soldiers to "choose goals for careers implementing a plan of direction."

Staff Sgt. Angela Bethea, 36th Engineer Group senior career counselor and Sgt. Marcie Murphy, 13th Corps Support Battalion career counselor, reinforced that "reenlistment is not a right but a privilege."

World Day unites community in fellowship

By William Smith
Martin Army Community Hospital

reflections

In the "Beginning, we were one. It was Cain, was it not, who first questioned: "Am I my brother's keeper?"

This question has seemingly spread from one generation to another and from one culture to another until there is no nation, community or family that has not been affected by it. Even in the house of God, worshippers can be influenced by the sinister nature of Cain's query.

Jesus responds to Cain's inquiry by stating that his disciples will be distinguished from the world by their love for one another. This word love in the language of Christ's day meant to look after the other's positive good even to the point of sacrifice. What better example could Christ give of this than his death on the cross for our sins?

In the book of I John, we find that one cannot even be in fellowship with God if he or she is not in fellowship with the community. James stated that one cannot have a pure religion unless he or she looks after the poor and indigent of our society and our world.

These are tough concepts to follow. No wonder Cain stumbled over this issue. However, the consequences of not reaching out to others are great. Not only will society and the world encounter poverty, war and loneliness, but one will not experience God's peace and fellowship.

The problem seems to be that we do not know how to be our brother's keeper. We either ignore him or enslave him. Jesus was correct; the only way mankind can learn to truly, in word and deed, accept others as brothers and sisters is to have a personal encounter with the one who made us all one.

Consequently, as we celebrate World Community Day this year, we should not only evaluate our relationship to others but also our relationship to our Lord.

An effective father is a master gunner

By Tom Killgore
USAIC Chaplain Office

The other day as I was talking with a group of friends, my 3-year-old-son tested his physical strength. He carefully aimed and mightily threw a body punch to my stomach. Naturally he took my breath away! I can truthfully say that this young man packs an awesome punch!

reflections

It is my hope that my children pack a positive punch as citizens in our world. I also want them to know what is worth aiming at and what is not. I want the impact of their contribution to diminish the evil and add to the good of our society. Probably, you agree with all of the above. The question is, how do we as fathers help our children achieve such lofty heights?

During my days with the Second Armored Cavalry Regiment I learned the importance of the master gunner. He was given the responsibility of ensuring that every tank and Bradley Fighting Vehicle qualified as experts at our bi-annual gunnery testing. Our battalion's scores were a direct result of the abilities of the master gunner. In many ways every father is the master gunner for his family. His children are a direct reflection of his aim as the master gunner.

The Old Testament says that children are like arrows in the hand of a father. When placed in the hands of a skilled father, they have a lasting impact on their world and a tremendous reward for their parents (Psalm 127). The father places the target for all to aim. In fact, fathers, we are the target! Our children use us as their model and example of what a husband and father are. Just like a master gunner, we mark the course in life and teach our children the rules of the range. The success or failure of the marksman is directly attributable to the instruction of the master gunner. Fathers, as uncomfortable as it may sound, we are the ones who aim our children and launch them into life. Where they land is largely due to the aim of their father.

I want to be the kind of father that is a worthy model of emulation. I also want to be the kind of father who is a skilled instructor of life.

I propose three things every father can do to become a master gunner. First, aim at something! Sounds silly, but many fathers have no overall goals as parents. Decide what is important and worthy and aim at it. It is surprising what a patient and persistent marksman can accomplish.

Second, go to school. Every master gunner attends a course that teaches him the rules and regulations. I encourage every father to become involved in a place of worship and learn the rules and regulations of being a successful father. We cannot do it all ourselves. We need help and someone to ask for advice. Your local place of worship is just the place.

Finally, get out there and do it! Your children are insightful and exciting people. They are enriching and enlightening. Get to know your children. Do things with them, teach them and lead them. You may be surprised.

Every day you bend the bow of your child's life in preparation for their eventual launching into life. It is my prayer that your aim be true and your eye on the target. I'll see you on the range.

Softball, basketball tourney aids Santa's Castle

By Brian R. Voller
Bayonet staff writer

Charity and sportsmanship came together Oct. 27 when the 36th Engineer Group conducted a softball and basketball tournament to benefit Santa's Castle.

Teams from the 104th Transportation Company and 598th Maintenance Company faced each other in the final matchup of the softball tournament. The 104th took the tournament with a final score of 6-3.

The 104th made its way through the single elimination tournament by besting 11 other teams.

"We played hard, and we played as a team," said Undra L. Lambert of the 104th Trans. Co. team. "We had a good time out there on the field together, and that's what's really important. If you play hard together and you have fun doing it, it makes winning the game that much sweeter in the end."

Sgt. Gerald Riley of the 598th said even though his team took second place in the championship, playing softball is good for the soldiers and the unit.

"It was an excellent tournament for everyone who got out there and played," Riley said. "It's good because a lot of stress and pressure builds up in the work place, and all the noncommissioned officers, officers and junior enlisted can get together and release some of the tension that builds up.

"Plus we're raising money for the community and the children. It's great to get out there and compete and relax, but it feels even better to get out there and raise money for the kids."

The 608th Ordnance Company team three took home the championship trophy in the basketball tournament, beating the 14th Field Hospital 37-31 in two halves of play.

Starting the tournament as one of nine competing teams, the 608th Ord. Co. went on to win all of its games on the way to the championship.

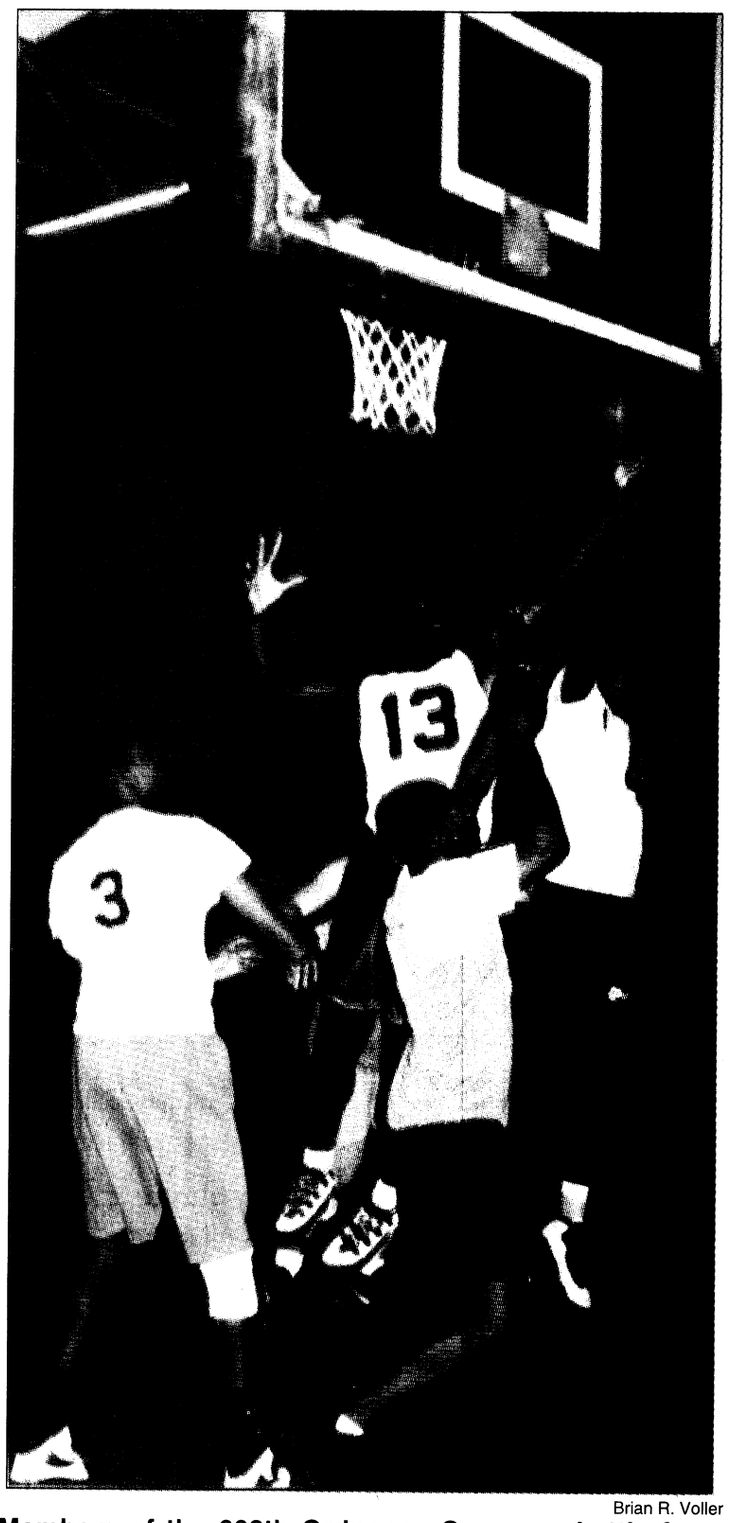
Nelson Calixto, 586th Engineer Company, drives the ball deep for a home run during the 36th Engineer Group Santa's Castle softball tournament.

608th Ord. Co. team captain, Sgt. A. Lorenzo Moore, said his basketball team began the tournament playing below their best form, but when the team decided to turn on their skill they brought home the championship.

"In the first game, we didn't play as hard as we were capable of playing," Moore said. "But we buckled down and started playing the game the way we were supposed to, and we started to win big.

"We would start the game up by a lot of points, and we would start goofing around; but, once we decided to play as a team to our full potential, there was no stopping us."

The tournament raised a total of $705 for Santa's Castle. The check presented to Santa's Castle put the amount at $680, but a last-second donation brought the final amount up to $705.



Capt. Scott Lofreddo, commander of the 598th Maint. Co., said the tournament was well-organized and a worthwhile benefit for the 36th Eng. Grp.

"Warrant Officer 1 Sammuel Patton and Warrant Officer 1 Louis Wilson did an excellent job of organizing this tournament," Lofreddo said. "The tournament was really competitive, and it was a lot of fun to play for a worthy cause like Santa's Castle."

Col. Mike Ramirez, commander of the 13th Corps Support Battalion, said the children were the real winners of the tournament.

"This is a good cause that we're all out here for," Ramirez said. "We've done a lot of hard work to get here and now we have a very substantial contribution to give to the people at Santa's Castle. It's a testament to the kind of soldiers we have in this unit.

"The children and the families are the real winners of this tournament, because we're all helping them have a great holiday season."

Ranger Golf Tournament draws big crowd

By Brian R. Voller
Bayonet staff writer

The 3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment, conducted the third annual John T. Keneally Golf Tournament Oct. 20 at the Follow Me Golf Course.

The winners of the competition were:

Championship flight:

The team from Mike Collins Nissan finished in first place with a final score of 58.

The team of Glancy, Payne, Winters and Doles finished in second place with a score of 62. This team also took the top spot for the highest score by a military team in the tournament.

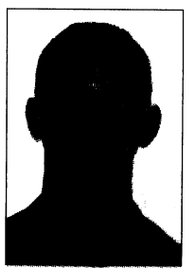
The third-place team was McCage, Quick, Gadshian and Brown, which also finished with a score of 62.

Hooah flight:

In first place, the team of Williams, Schnoll, Salzweedel and Stovall won with a score of 70.

In second place, the team of Toon, Naodes, Genkins and Ambert finished with a score of 71.

In third place, the team of Bertacini, Sutton, Denman and Mumpower finished with a score of 71.



The tournament was conducted in a four-ball best, ball scramble format and saw 36 teams participate.

According to Capt. David Morrison, one of the tournament's organizers, the tournament was one of the largest conducted at Fort Benning.

"We were all out there to have fun," Morrison said. "We got out on the course, played the scramble and had a good time."

One of the rules my parents tried to instill in me was to err is human, to forgive is divine. This is the kind of life rule that I have tried to live up to so I can be a good person. Unfortunately, it's not always easy for me to forgive everything people do or say.

The game of baseball took the case of Pete Rose's gambling on professional games very hard. So hard, in fact, that the decision was made to completely banish the man from the face of baseball and to never allow him into the Hall of Fame.

In the Oct. 30 issue of USA Today, former President Jimmy Carter wrote a commentary stating he felt Rose should be allowed into the Hall of Fame for his accomplishments during his long and superior baseball career.

I read the commentary, and then I sat and I pondered what Pete Rose had accomplished during his career as both a player and a coach. Rose accomplished feats that few players ever have or ever will. These are feats that can't be ignored any longer and should be recognized in their proper place in the Hall of Fame.

Rose finished his career with 4,256 hits in 3,562 games, and he went to bat an incredible 14,053 times and finished his baseball legacy with a lifetime batting average of .303. He also held, at one time or another, 31 Major and National League titles — not to mention he brought excitement and longevity to a game that has been our national pastime for many years.

In 1989, Rose was convicted of illegally gambling on professional sporting events, including placing bets on his own team. Because of this illegal activity, Rose served a jail term in a federal prison and was permanently banished from baseball.

That was six years ago, and Rose has barely been seen or heard from since his public humiliation. Recently, Rose stepped back onto the playing field and threw out the first pitch during a minor league baseball game, and he walked off the field to a standing ovation from fans and players.

Rose has paid his dues for gambling, and he has suffered long enough. For us as sports fans to continue to ignore Rose's accomplishments or to keep pushing his accomplishments aside and pretend they never happened is wrong. Rose needs to have his statue put next to the rest of the great ball players in history.

Father and son fishing pros team up

By Earl Bentz and Steve Price

As if professional bass tournament angler Denny Brauer didn't have enough competition already. Now he must also compete against his son Chad.

"This turns tournament fishing into a family business for us," Brauer said. "I don't view Chad as added competition at all. Instead, I feel extremely proud that he wants to follow in my footsteps, and I'll help him as much as I can.

"What's really great is that we'll be able to travel to the tournaments together and just basically be able to spend more time together as a family."

Brauer isn't sure how well he has prepared his 22-year-old son for the rigors of professional tournament fishing, but he said he feels confident in Chad's ability to compete successfully.

"He was still in diapers when I took him on his first fishing trip," Brauer said. "And over the years he's probably spent as many hours running a boat and fishing as many of the full-time competitors.

"It seems like every spare minute he had while growing up was spent fishing. He has certainly fished in his share of tournaments already, including some with me, so he knows how to compete."

The one thing Brauer did insist upon before allowing Chad to compete full time was getting a college education. To that end, Chad attended the University of Missouri, where he graduated with a degree in fisheries biology.

"Originally, I wanted Chad to study business administration or marketing, with the feeling it would help him better manage the business side of tournament fishing," Brauer said. "But he wasn't really interested in those subjects.

"A degree in fisheries biology will also be a great help to him, and besides, he's already teaching me things about water quality and how fish live under different conditions."

During the practice days before each tournament, the Brauers plan to work as a team, although each will fish from his own boat.

"We'll talk about what we've learned each day and compare notes," Brauer said, "which will help both of us. I don't think there will be a lot of duplication of effort, either, because each of us has his own style of fishing.

"Some of the other tournament regulars, particularly Randy Dearman and Guido Hibdon, have told me how great it feels to be able to fish with their sons. Now I know, and I agree completely."

Light tackle improves strikes when bass fishing

By Earl Benz and Steve Price
Outboard Marine Corporation

Professional bass tournament angler Guido Hibdon has made a career of catching bass with light tackle, using tiny lures, sewing thread lines and willowy rods that most of his competitors shun.

Hibdon's philosophy is simple: Light tackle does not usually produce the largest bass, but it nearly always produces the most bass.

"With such light tackle, I'll miss my share of fish," Hibdon said. "But, I'll also have more chances with fish in the course of a day, and that's really what's important in tournament competition."

One of the real advantages Hibdon said he believes light tackle offers is that the small jigs and plastic worms he uses look more natural in the water than spinnerbaits and crankbaits.

"Small lures not only look more natural in the water, they can also be presented more accurately to targets and kept in the strike zone longer," he said.

Hooking and playing bass with light tackle requires slightly different techniques, according to Hibdon. What's needed is a more gentle, sweeping hook-set rather than a quick, sudden power-set.

"The first thing you try to do is guide the bass out of the cover before you ever set the hook," Hibdon said. "You can often do this by keeping slight tension on your line and slowly moving the lure into open water.

"It's amazing how long bass will hold on to a lure like this. Once they're in the open water, you can set the hook and play them. If you set the hook while the fish is still in the cover, you'll usually break your line on the brush."

Hibdon learned his skills on the clear lakes of the Ozarks, and he feels light tackle fishing will become even more important in the years ahead on lakes everywhere.

"Heavy fishing pressure makes bass spooky and pushes them tighter to cover," he said. "I believe the bass also stop hitting lures simply because they get accustomed to seeing them.

"A 1/8 ounce jig or an even smaller 1/16 ounce lure like I use doesn't spook the bass. It looks and acts like something that belongs in the water, and bass hit it."

Youth basketball registration — Youth Services basketball registration will be conducted through Thursday.

Sign-ups are open to youth family members, ages 6 to 15, of active duty, retired military and Department of Defense civilians.

Registrations will be taken Mondays through Fridays from 8 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. at Youth Services, Building 1056. Youth Services registration cards are required.

For more information, call 545-3070.

Youth coaches — The Youth Sports Program exists only because of volunteers who come forward season after season to be coaches, assistant coaches and team moms.

Youth Services is now recruiting coaches for the upcoming basketball season. Anyone interested should call 545-3070 or stop by the Youth Services Office, Building 1056.

Golf tourney — The Military Benefit Association will host a golf tournament today at the Follow Me Golf Course.

The deadline is 9 a.m.

Entry fee is $15 for all military players and $25 for invited guests. Entry fee includes riding carts, refreshments after play and a cap and golf ball from the sponsor.

All entries must be paid in advance at the Follow Me Golf Course pro shop.

Swim team — The Youth Services Barracuda swim team will conduct tryouts at the Briant Wells indoor pool Monday through Thursday from 4:30 to 6 p.m.

Massage sessions — Swedish and Russian massages will be given by Frank Rodriguez, certified massage therapist, at the Officers' Club.

Cost for half-hour sessions is $22 for members and $27 for nonmembers. For full-hour massages the cost is $40 for members and $45 for nonmembers. To make appointments call 687-0871 or 545-4162.

Georgia Rugby Championship — The Georgia Rugby Football Championship will be conducted Saturday and Sunday at the Columbus College Soccer Field beginning at 1 p.m. Admission is free.

Shooting Championship — The U.S. Army Marksmanship Units Pool International Shooting Complex will be the sight of the Men's International Rifle 300-meter National Championship this weekend.

Competitions, scheduled to begin at 8:30 a.m. today through Sunday, consist of three seperate matches — prone, 3-positions and standard rifle. All matches are scheduled to conclude around 1:30 p.m., time dependent on course of fire.

The event sponsord by USA shooting, Olympic shooting's governing body based in Colorado Springs, Colo., is free to the open public.

For more information, call 545-5436.

Georgia hunter safety course — All persons born on or after Jan. 1, 1961, must attend an approved Hunter Safety Course if they wish to hunt on Fort Benning or in the State of Georgia.

The Georgia Department of National Resources Hunter Safety Course will be conducted Nov. 14 and 15 in Infantry Hall, classroom 2 from 6 to 9 p.m.

Students must attend both nights and are required to bring their Social Security Number.

Veterans benefits serve those who served

Georgia Society of Certified Public Accountants Inc.

As the 50th anniversary year of World War II's conclusion draws to a close, the Georgia Society of Certified Public Accountants Inc. reminds all veterans to take advantage of the many benefits available to them. Veterans who leave military service with honorable or general discharges may be eligible for educational benefits, mortgages, small business loans and also federal and local tax breaks.

Go back to school

Veterans who want to return to school after completing their military service may be entitled to benefits under the Montgomery GI Bill or the Post-Vietnam Era Veterans Educational Assistance Program, depending on when they entered the service. Educational opportunities include college and university courses leading to associate, bachelor or graduate degrees; courses leading to a certificate or diploma from business, technical or vocational schools; apprenticeship programs; and others.

Veterans who entered military service for the first time after June 30, 1985, are eligible for educational benefits under the Montgomery GI Bill. To qualify for these benefits, a veteran must have served on continuous active duty for three years and agreed to have his or her military pay reduced by $100 a month for the first 12 months of active duty. Under certain circumstances, individuals with at least two years of continuous active duty may qualify. In most cases, those who served six years in the Selected Reserve also are eligible for educational benefits.

Veterans who entered service after Dec. 31, 1976, and before July 1, 1985, and who made voluntary monthly contributions for future education and training may receive benefits under the VEAP program. Generally, they must have served for a continuous period of 181 days or served shorter period and been discharged as a result of a service-connected disability.

As long as a veteran made some contribution to VEAP prior to April I, 1987, the U.S. Department of Defense matches the veteran's contribution at the rate of $2 for every $1 the veteran put into the fund. Usually, the number of months of full-time benefits is equivalent to the number of months a veteran contributed to VEAP, up to a maximum of 36 months. The amount of the benefit depends on the type and extent of training.

Business incentives

The U.S. Small Business Administration makes a special effort to help America's veterans finance and run their own businesses. For example:

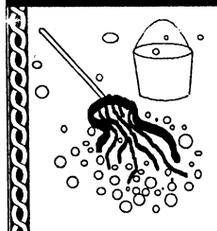
• Investment capital is available through SBA-funded and licensed programs and Small Business Investment Companies. Most SBA loans are made by commercial banks and are guaranteed by the SBA.

• Business opportunity conferences are held for military personnel who are on active duty and are about to be discharged. These conferences are held in communities affected by defense downsizing.

• SBA veterans affairs officers are located around the nation. They provide one-on-one counseling to veterans.

Move up with a mortgage

Eligible veterans can apply for a GI loan guarantee to buy, build, repair or improve a home or to refinance an existing mortgage. Anyone who served in the U.S. Armed Forces for at least 181 days in peacetime, or 90 days in wartime, qualifies for the benefit. So, too, do veterans discharged from service as a result of a service-connected disability.



Veterans Affairs mortgages are essentially the same as conventional mortgages, except they generally require no down payment and carry a below-market interest rate. To encourage lenders to provide these terms to veterans, the VA guarantees a percentage of the loan. The amount of the guarantee depends on the loan amount and whether the veteran previously used some entitlement. Veterans make their own arrangements for loans through the usual lending channels, such as banks and mortgage companies.

CPAs point out that some benefits including educational payments, disability compensation and certain pension payments made to veterans and their families are not included in gross income and are not taxable.

The best way to obtain current information on VA benefits is to call the nearest local VA office, listed under the federal government in most telephone directories.

CHAMPUS deductibles renewed for another year

CHAMPUS SELECT

With fall comes a new CHAMPUS fiscal year. The CHAMPUS fiscal year began again Oct. 1 and ends Sept. 30, 1996.

This means the CHAMPUS outpatient care deductible was renewed Oct. 1. The deductible is payable to the CHAMPUS SELECT provider, along with the patient's cost-share. The CHAMPUS fiscal year deductible is the same for CHAMPUS beneficiaries using standard CHAMPUS or CHAMPUS SELECT.

CHAMPUS beneficiaries are encouraged to bring a copy of their latest explanation of benefits when seeing a standard CHAMPUS or CHAMPUS SELECT provider to determine how much of their deductible remains to be paid.

All CHAMPUS SELECT participating providers agree to accept the CHAMPUS SELECT negotiated rate as payment in full for CHAMPUS-covered services they render to CHAMPUS beneficiaries. Beneficiaries, therefore, may not be charged for any difference that exists between the provider's charge and the CHAMPUS allowable. This is true regardless of whether CHAMPUS is the primary or secondary payer of benefits.

Providers are strongly encouraged not to bill CHAMPUS SELECT beneficiaries until after receipt of the CHAMPUS explanation of benefits. The CEOB will include resulting beneficiary cost-shares. Beneficiaries are only responsible for payment of cost shares, deductibles and any noncovered services.

The deductible for CHAMPUS beneficiaries, including active duty dependents (sponsor rank sergeant and higher), retirees, their dependents and families of service members who have died, is $150 for single coverage and $300 for family coverage. Active duty dependents, specialist and below, pay a yearly deductible of $50 for single coverage and $100 for family coverage.

The catastrophic cap per fiscal year for active duty dependents is $1,000. Retirees, their dependents and families of service members who have died have a catastrophic cap of $7,500.

Be aware of the following when using standard CHAMPUS or CHAMPUS SELECT:

• Health-care services must be covered by CHAMPUS to be payable

• CHAMPUS will not pay more as a secondary payer than it would pay in the absence of other health-care coverage.

• Benefits cannot be paid for services provided prior to the time a beneficiary becomes eligible for CHAMPUS.

CHAMPUS SELECT is a voluntary health care benefits program offered by the Department of Defense as a cost-effective alternative to standard CHAMPUS. It is not a CHAMPUS supplemental insurance plan, so there is no premium to pay or enrollment fee to use the program. CHAMPUS SELECT is only available in the Southeastern region of the United States — Alabama, Florida, Georgia, Mississippi, Tennessee and the Fort Campbell area of Kentucky.

For more information call Joe Thornton or Lynn Mott, the CHAMPUS SELECT coordinator and representative for the Fort Benning area, or call the toll-free beneficiary information line during regular business hours at (800) 824-3570.

Leaders to gather to discuss peace

By Saralynne Snell
School of the Americas

International leaders will gather at the School of the Americas Nov. 15 through 17 to discuss peacekeeping operations during the seventh Latin American Conference.

Civilian and military leaders will join SOA's staff and students to share their peacekeeping knowledge, to learn from the past and to discuss ways to proceed with future peacekeeping operations.

"One of the objectives of the conference is to capture the experience from all the countries participating in peacekeeping operations, find out the differences and problems and find a way to do better next time," said Maj. William Lin, conference operations officer.

"The future is multinational forces," Lin said. "Learning a common doctrine, as the students do here, facilitates involvement in peacekeeping operations."

He explained that, thanks to the education received by thousands of Latin Americans at SOA, officers throughout the hemisphere are familiar with U.S. doctrine. Should a regional crisis arise, the nations will already have a common doctrinal ground.

Specifically, the upcoming conference will benefit two courses at SOA, Lin said. One is the Peace Operations Course, which just appeared in the school's catalog this year. The work-group sessions and their resolutions will be compiled and used to "help modify the curriculum and make it more applicable," said a conference organizer, Maj. Corydon Loomis.

The other prime beneficiary is the year-long Command and General Staff College, whose 38 students are officers from 12 Latin American nations and the United States.

"When they leave CGSC, the majority of these officers will probably take over some duty that requires experience in peacekeeping operations," Lin said. "This is an excellent way to prepare these students for future assignments."

Today, 14 Latin American nations are taking part in U.N. peacekeeping activities. In fact, the first U.N. commander in Bosnia was Argentine Gen. Martin Balza.

"The School of the Americas continues to be on the cutting edge of democratic reform in Latin America," said Col. Roy Trumble, SOA commandant. "We don't make the peace; we make peace possible with programs such as these."

In general, lessons learned from this conference can benefit the entire region, Loomis said.

"We can't do anything (at SOA) for the African, European or Asian nations that are going to be involved in peacekeeping operations," he said. "But we can address the issues that affect Latin American countries and our own presence. This isn't theoretical; this is real-world stuff."

Benning blizzard?

Fort Benning soldiers, donning period dress, recreate a scene from World War II's Battle of the Bulge for a recruiting commercial being filmed on post. A film crew hired by Young and Rubicam advertising agency has been filming four commercials for the past three weeks. The commercials, which will cover various soldiering skills, will be used by the U.S. Army Recruiting Command to reach 18- to 20-year-olds. The first one is scheduled to air in mid-December and the rest in January.

Some Olympics tickets available

By Lisa M. Hibbert
Bayonet staff writer

Tickets to the 1996 Olympic Games are going fast, but there are still some available.

However, only 156 out of the 540 ticketed sessions are still available, said Laurie Olsen of the Atlanta Committee for the Olympic Games.

"Several finals are among the sessions still available, including the event for the first medal of the 1996 Olympic Games — the July 20th session of shooting at Wolf Creek," Olsen said.

Medals will be awarded at each of the shooting sessions still available. Women's basketball quarter and semifinals are still available, as are several finals for the canoe or kayak sprint on Lake Lanier. Men's field hockey finals; and the quarter finals, the semifinals and bronze medals round of the men's soccer competition are all available, as are the women's soccer semifinal and final.

The games are not the only thing that will be happening in Atlanta at that time. There are also tickets available for the Olympic Arts Festival.

Some of the events planned for the Arts Festival are performances by The Atlanta Symphony Orchestra, The Atlanta Symphony Youth Orchestra, The Royal Thai Ballet, an Olympic Jazz Summit with Wynton Marsalis and the Alvin Ailey American Dance Theater.

Updates on the availability of Olympic Games tickets can be found on the Internet at http://www.atlanta.olympic org — The Atlanta Committee for the Olympic Games' Home Page. Audio updates are available by dialing (404) 744-1996 from a touch-tone telephone and pressing "1" then "2" for access to a sport-by-sport list of sessions available, Olsen said.

Tickets can be ordered by mail until Dec. 1. Beginning in February 1996, tickets can be purchased by telephone; and, box office sales will begin in June.

Send ticket inquires along with a check or money order for $5 to:

Fort Benning honors Native Americans

By Lisa M. Hibbert
Bayonet staff writer

November is Native American Month, and the post is conducting several ethnic observances to enhance cross-cultural awareness among soldiers, civilians and family members.

Some of the remaining events for the month are as follows:

The Infantry Training Brigade will sponsor a luncheon at the Sand Hill NCO Club Nov. 17 from 11:30 a.m. to 1 p.m. The guest speaker will be Christopher Hamilton, Fort Benning archeologist, Environmental Management Division, Directorate of Public Works.

Patch Preschool will have a Native American Thanksgiving Day Fest Nov. 20 and 21. Students will study Native American culture with hands-on activities, books and crafts.

Youth Services will sponsor a drawing contest for children ages 6 to 12 in honor of Native American Month. All art must be submitted by Wednesday. Winners will be announced Nov. 22. For more information, call 545-7945.

Static displays will be set up at Uchee Creek, Infantry Hall and various units on post.

Ethnic meals honoring Native Americans, including a Thanksgiving meal, will be served in the post dining facilities throughout the month.

The Ranger Training Brigade dining facility will serve its ethnic meal on Wednesday.

SJA continues to accept Hurricane Opal claims

By Shannon Day
Special to The Bayonet©

Claims may still be filed for damage caused by Hurricane Opal, said Capt. George R. Smawley, chief, Claims Division, Staff Judge Advocate.

Even though a congressional resolution authorizing funds to reimburse victims for damage expires Monday, Smawley said claims will be paid. He just cannot guarantee when, he said.

"Our ability to pay is based on the government's ability to pay," Smawley said. If Congress does not pass another resolution, he explained, the Claims Division will not have the funds to cover any claims turned in after Sunday.

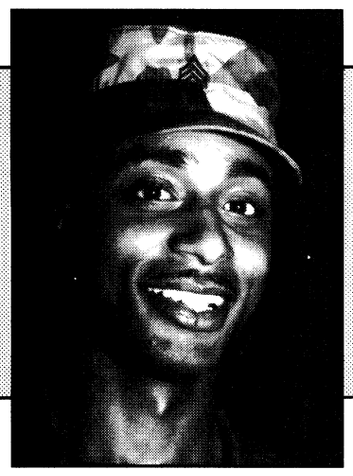
"People can file for two years following the date of the hurricane," he said. "But I can't predict when claims will be paid after Monday."

As of Nov. 3, a total of 362 claims had been paid, and the Claims Division had covered $57,276 worth of claims.

Originally expecting close to 1,000 claims, Smawley said the claims office is now expecting 750 or so.

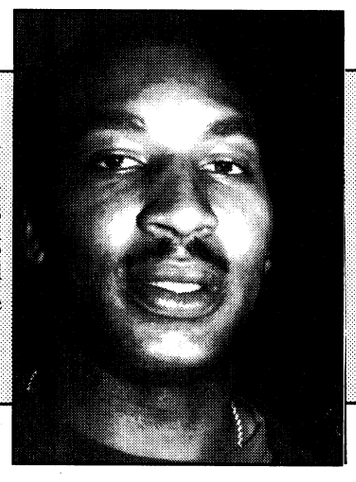
More than half of the claims turned in so far have been due to food spoilage, according to Smawley.

"The electricity was off for several days, and most people had no way to properly prepare their food, so it went bad," he said. "We understand that and will reimburse reasonable claims."



Smawley said the Claims Division is eager to help any soldiers with valid claims.

Claims can be turned in to the Staff Judge Advocate Claims Office, Building 5, on Vibbert Avenue.



The office will accept Opal claims weekdays from 8:30 a.m. to 5 p.m. Call 545-2285 for more information.

Smoking affects entire family

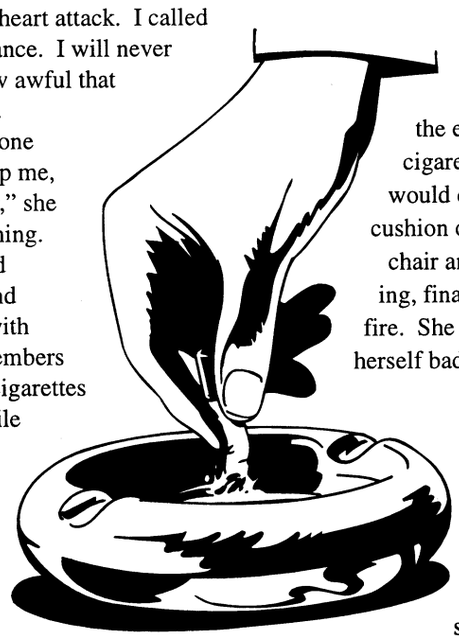
By Shannon Day
Special to The Bayonet©

Having someone sit down next to me and light up a cigarette is almost as appealing (or is that appalling) as someone sitting next to me and passing gas. Either way, it stinks and I feel as if I can't breathe. At least the gas can't give me cancer.

There is only one thing worse than an inconsiderate smoker (one who lights up in an area with a lot of people and not much fresh air), and that is a pregnant smoker. If I were dictator of the world, that would constitute child abuse. Most of us mess up our kids after they are born. At least let them live peacefully in the womb.

I'm not even going to start on chewing tobacco, except to say that I would rather kiss a dead fish than someone who has been chewin'.

At this point I am sure you are either applauding me or wanting to know what kind of car I drive so you can throw rotten eggs at it. While I have your undivided attention, I want to tell you about my grandmother — a woman who smoked cigarettes for more than 60 years.



My grandma was born in 1913 and grew up during an era that glamorized smoking. She was in her early teens when she picked up the habit.

When I think back to my childhood, I can never remember a time when she didn't have a cigarette dangling out of her mouth. No matter how busy she was, she could always manage to free a hand to smoke. She still seemed to be in fairly good health.

When I was 12, I was staying overnight at her house once when she had a heart attack. I called an ambulance. I will never forget how awful that night was.

"Someone please help me, I'm dying," she kept moaning.

She did survive and pleaded with family members to sneak cigarettes to her while she was still in the hospital recovering.

Over the next several years, her health steadily declined. By 1991, among other health problems, her blood pressure was dangerously high. She had a significant amount of hearing loss. She couldn't stand up on her own or walk to the bathroom. She had emphysema badly. Each time she coughed, she choked up things I can't describe without becoming nauseous. She passed out on almost a daily basis, often having seizures. She had to be revived with oxygen. The ambulance crew were her most frequent visitors.

I spent a lot of time taking care of her that year. Each day I wondered if it would be her last.

Her vision was so bad, she couldn't see how long the ashes on the end of her cigarettes were. They would drop onto the cushion of her favorite red chair and begin smoldering, finally catching on fire. She also burned herself badly several times.

She spent a lot of time talking about dying and how it would be a relief.

The only things in life that seemed to make her happy were cigarettes and chocolate.

Finally, we had a family meeting and decided to take her cigarettes away. Her habit had become dangerous. She had set fire to the house and herself too many times.

It was hard for her at first. A 65-year-old addiction doesn't just go away. For two months she sat in her chair with her empty hand fixed in cigarette-holding position.

Shannon Day believes nicotine addiction can be overcome. The Great American Smokeout is Thursday.

She begged for cigarettes but was too weak to get up and get any. She pulled through it though.

That was four years ago. Although she is in her eighties now, she is in much better health than she has been in years, according to her doctor. Her blood pressure has dropped. She rarely coughs and doesn't pass out anymore. She can get to the bathroom on her own. She doesn't talk about dying with reverence.

With the support of her family, she beat an almost lifelong habit. In return, she got a new lease on life. I really don't believe she would be alive today if she had not quit smoking. She enjoys spending time with her great-grandchildren, and they get to know her as more than just a face in a photo album.

If my grandma could quit smoking, so can you. If you don't have enough willpower to do it yourself, enlist the aid of your family and friends. Anyone who really cares about you should be more than happy to help. It's never to late to quit.

President proposes to reduce teen smoking

By Evelyn D. Harris
American Forces Information Service

The Clinton administration is proposing a comprehensive and coordinated set of measures to significantly reduce the number of children and teens who become addicted to cigarettes and chewing tobacco.

President Bill Clinton announced his executive actions to make tobacco less accessible to minors in a White House press conference recently.

"Adults are capable of making their own decisions about whether to smoke," Clinton said. "But we all know that children are especially susceptible to the deadly temptation of tobacco and its skillful marketing. Today and every day this year, 3,000 young people will begin to smoke. One thousand of them will ultimately die of cancer, emphysema, heart disease and other diseases caused by smoking. That's more than 1 million vulnerable young people a year being hooked on nicotine that ultimately could kill them."

Clinton said one-third more eighth-graders and one-quarter more 10th graders are smoking today than four years ago. At least one-fifth of all high schoolers smoke. "We need to act, and we must act now," he said.

"When Joe Camel tells young children that smoking is cool, when billboards tell teens that smoking will lead to true romance, when Virginia Slims tells adolescents that cigarettes may make them thin and glamorous, then our children need our wisdom, our guidance and our experience," said the president. "We're their parents, and it's up to us to protect them."

Clinton said he would authorize the Food and Drug Administration to take these steps:

- Require young people to show an identification card to buy cigarettes and eliminate sales of single cigarettes and packages of fewer than 20 cigarettes, known as "kiddie packs."
- Prohibit cigarette vending machines, a primary source for youngsters.
- Ban mail-order sales, because there is no way of verifying age.
- Ban self-service display sales to give the message "tobacco is different from potato chips and chewing gum."
- Prohibit sale or giveaway of products like caps or gym bags carrying cigarette or smokeless tobacco product brand names or logos.
- Prohibit exchange of nontobacco products such as denim jackets and personal stereo systems for proof of purchase of tobacco products.
- Ban outdoor cigarette advertising within 1,000 feet of schools and playgrounds.
- Permit black and white text-only advertising in publications geared to youth.
- Prohibit brand name sponsorship of sporting or entertainment events, but permit it in the corporate name. For example, Philip Morris would be permitted, but not Virginia Slims.

The administration would also require the tobacco industry to fund a $150-million campaign aimed at stopping teens from smoking.

Clinton said he is somewhat concerned about legal challenges to his anti-tobacco moves. He urged Congress to put the proposals into law to avoid a lengthy court battle. He asked the tobacco industry to work with legislators.

VETERANS DAY PROCLAMATION

Today, we at Fort Benning join the nation in honoring the men and women who served in the armed forces of our nation. It is an occasion to honor all American veterans, living and dead, who served our country in war and in peace.

In this final year of the 50th anniversary commemoration of World War II, Veterans Day provides a golden opportunity to recall the sacrifice and selfless service of our veterans who served in that war.

Since World War II, generations of young men and women have joined the ranks of America's armed forces. Heirs to a sacred and noble legacy, they answer the call; they serve the nation with courage and commitment. And they continue to add luster to the shining tradition of the American veteran.

They understood that our destiny is linked to the destinies of other nations. They believed that with our great wealth, great power and great blessings of democratic freedom come great responsibilities to stand for and work for the common good.

Our veterans come from the heart of America itself. Veterans are black ... and they are white; they are of every race and ethnic heritage. They are men, and they are women. They are Christians, they are Muslims, they are Jews. They are fathers, mothers, sisters, brothers, sons and daughters. They are neighbors, down the street or right next door. They are 26 million Americans living today who served in the armed services, and they are the more than one million who died in America's wars.

To every veteran throughout our land and to the soldiers who serve in our ranks today, thank you for your commitment, dedication and sacrifice. We are grateful for your devotion to duty and your love of country. Your nation and your Army are proud of you.

We, the soldiers serving at Fort Benning, resolve to uphold that fine tradition so that your sacrifice will never be in vain.

ACES to host educational fair

Staff Education and Training Branch

The Army Continuing Education System will host an educational fair in Infantry Hall, Building 4, Thursday from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. to celebrate American Education Week, which will be Monday through Nov. 17.

ACES, which is part of the Staff Education and Training Branch, Training Division, Directorate of Operations and Training, offers a broad spectrum of educational opportunities and services to the Fort Benning community.

The fair will highlight educational services and facilities that are available to active duty soldiers, family members, civilian employees, Reservists and retirees.

Facilities include an education center and a learning center located on Main Post. It offers programs ranging from Job Skills Education Program (general technical preparation and basic skills and remedial lessons pertaining to math, reading and vocabulary) through college programs with a variety of associate, baccalaureate and master degree offerings.

Some services offered by the Education Center include career counseling, financial assistance (tuition assistance, veteran's benefits and federal aid) and testing (military personnel, high school general equivalency diploma, college level examination, Graduate Management Admissions Test, national certification examinations, diagnostic, interest inventories, etc.)

Foreign languages are available on cassette tapes for check out: German, Spanish (Latin America), Spanish (Puerto Rico), Japanese, Arabic (Saudi Arabia), Turkish, Russian, etc.

Logisticians gather at Uchee Creek

By Richard Brill
Special to The Bayonet©

Improving customer service was the order of business at the chapter meeting of the American Logistics Association and the Fort Benning commissary Nov. 8 at the Uchee Creek lodge.

About 150 attendees, including product contractors, logistics and marketing personnel and commissary representatives, gathered for presentations, guest speakers and question-and-answer sessions designed to identify deficiencies and generate improvements at every level of the commissary system.

Benjamin S. Wainwright, post Commissary officer, said he expects the conference to become an annual event.

"This has been an excellent opportunity to examine every aspect of the way we do business," he said.

Wainwright said one of the best aspects of the forum was its ability to improve communications between all parties involved in the process, from those involved in commissary operations to those involved in the manufacture and shipping of products.

"This was not just a one-day get-together to pay lip service to customer improvement," Wainwright said. "This was a chance for real-life discussion of how we can better serve our customers now and in the future."

Wainwright said discussions revolved around such topics as item selection, price structures, automation, improving the time between ordering and receiving an item and promotional activities. The end result, Wainwright said, is that every issue discussed opened the avenue for future improvement and thus better customer service.

The meeting wrapped up Thursday with a golf tournament at the Follow Me Golf Course.

Hospital lab receives accreditation

Martin Army Community Hospital

The Laboratory at Martin Army Community Hospital has been awarded a two-year accreditation by the Commission on Laboratory Accreditation of the College of American Pathologists, based on the results of a recent on-site inspection.

The laboratory at the hospital is one of more than 4,600 CAP-accredited laboratories nationwide.

The CAP Laboratories Accreditation Program, begun in the early 1960s, is recognized by the federal government as being equal to or more stringent than the government's own inspection program, officials said.

Inspectors examine the records and quality control of the laboratory for the preceding two years, as well as the education and qualifications of the total staff, the adequacy of the facilities, the equipment, laboratory safety and laboratory management to determine how well the laboratory is serving the patient.

The College of American Pathologists is a medical society serving more than 14,500 physician members and the laboratory community throughout the world.

Deadline nears for amended returns

Federal, military retirees can file '85-'88 Georgia returns by Dec. 15

Georgia Department of Revenue

ATLANTA — Eligible federal and military retirees have a last-chance, 45-day "window of opportunity" through Dec. 15 to file amended income tax returns for the 1985 to 1988 tax years and claim any refund due under the terms of House Bill 3, the Georgia Department of Revenue has announced.

The retiree refunds are based upon Georgia income taxes paid by federal and military retirees on pension income during tax years 1985 through 1988, inclusive. House Bill 3 was passed by the Georgia General Assembly earlier this year and signed into law by Governor Zell Miller.

"This is literally the last chance for eligible federal retirees to file for refund for all years that they qualify for, including any years they have not claimed previously," said Revenue Commissioner Marcus E. Collins Sr.

"I cannot emphasize strongly enough that, by law, once Dec. 15 has passed, this 'window' will have closed — forever," he said. "I therefore urge retirees to file their returns ... to ensure that we have all of their information on file in our House Bill 3 data base."

Retirees filing amended returns under the terms and conditions of House Bill 3 must submit a Form 500 X for each year they are filing for refund along with a Federal Retiree Refund Request cover sheet form.

Amended returns must be signed by the taxpayer and can be mailed to the address listed on the Federal Retiree Refund Request form or delivered to any of the department's 11 regional offices. Copies of both the forms can be picked up from any regional office or requested via phone.

To assist retirees who have questions about House Bill 3, need to register a change of address, notify the Department about a deceased claimant or require other information, the Department of Revenue has a special federal retiree "hot line" available 24 hours a day.

The hot line phone numbers are 657-6881 (within metro Atlanta); (800) 817-1858 outside metro Atlanta but within Georgia only; and (404) 657-6881 outside the State of Georgia.

All forms and associated documents can be filed with the Department of Revenue through Dec. 15 only. By law, no amended returns can be filed after Dec. 15.

All House Bill 3 filers who qualify for refunds will receive the first of four, equal yearly refund checks based upon 85 percent of the total amount, as stipulated in House Bill 3.

Refunds will include seven percent simple interest, with the first check to be mailed Oct. 15, 1996, and concluding in October 1999. Interest will continue to accrue on the unpaid balance until the final payment.

Before receiving their first refund check, retirees will receive a written statement detailing the payment schedule of their account with all interest paid not subject to Georgia income tax, though it is subject to federal income tax.

Once the "window of opportunity" closes Dec. 15 for all House Bill 3 filers, the Department of Revenue's next step will be to validate all refund claims and then enter that information into a data base to prepare to issue the first of four refund checks Oct. 15, 1996.

va q&a

Department of Veterans Affairs

Q: I'm on active duty in the Marines and have a certificate of eligibility for a Veterans Affairs-guaranteed loan. Will the certificate expire when I leave the Marines and become a veteran?

A: Home loan entitlement is generally good until it is used. However, the eligibility of service personnel is only available when they are on active duty.

If they are discharged or released from active duty before using their entitlement, a new determination of eligibility must be made, based on length of service and the type of discharge received.

Q: I did not serve in the U.S. military. Can I buy a home that the VA has acquired as a result of foreclosure of a VA-guaranteed loan?

A: Yes. These homes are available to both veterans and nonveterans.

Q: What is the law that provides for compensation of U.S. veterans who have unexplained illnesses related to their service in the Persian Gulf?

A: It is Public Law 103-446, the Veterans Benefits Improvement Act of 1994, which President Clinton signed into law Nov. 2, 1994.

The law authorized the Department of Veterans Affairs to pay compensation to any Persian Gulf veteran suffering from a chronic disability from an undiagnosed illness or a combination of undiagnosed illnesses that became manifest during Persian Gulf service, or, to a degree of 10 percent or more, within a specific time frame following Gulf service.

VA began compensating Persian Gulf veterans after publication of a regulation Feb. 3 in the Federal Register. The regulation lists 13 categories of undiagnosed illness or illnesses that must manifest within two years of leaving the Persian Gulf theater of operations.

The 13 categories are not exclusive, and other signs and symptoms could qualify for compensation purposes.

The 13 categories are: fatigue, signs or symptoms involving skin; headache; muscle pain, joint pain, neurologicical signs or symptoms; neuropsychological signs or symptoms; signs or symptoms involving the respiratory system (upper or lower); sleep disturbances; gastrointestinal signs or symptoms; cardiovascular signs or symptoms; abnormal weight loss; and menstrual disorders.

Q: What period of time is recognized for service in the Persian Gulf War?

A: The Persian Gulf War period began Aug. 2, 1990. Its end has not yet been determined. That will be established by law or presidential proclamation.

Q: What is considered chronic?

A: The illness must have persisted for a period of at least six months.

Q: Does a Department of Veterans Affairs home loan entitlement provide cash to the veteran?

A: No. The amount of entitlement relates only to the amount VA will guarantee the lender against loss.

The one exception is that Native American veterans are entitled to a direct loan for up to $80,000 to purchase, construct or improve dwellings located on trust lands.

Q: What happens if I fail to make the payments on my home loan guaranteed by VA?

A: Failure to make payments on the loan may lead to foreclosure, the loss of your home and, in some cases, a debt to the government for which you could be held responsible.

If you find yourself in financial difficulty, contact your loan holder to discuss the problem and make arrangements to bring your loan current.

Editor's note: If you have a question regarding your VA benefits, call the VA regional office at (800) 827-1000.

Retreat ceremony set for Nov. 30

The commanding general's monthly retreat ceremony will be Nov. 30 at 4 p.m. on York Field in front of Infantry Hall, Building 4.

For more information, call Capt. Vince Ball at 545-3816.

WO recruiting team to visit Fort Benning

A recruiting team from the U.S. Army Recruiting Command will visit Fort Benning Nov. 27 through Dec. 1.

The team will conduct briefings to solicit soldiers to apply for the Warrant Officer Program. Each briefing will inform soldiers about the career fields available, including the Warrant Officer Flight Program.

All soldiers interested in the flight program, regardless of military occupational specialty and rank, can attend one of the scheduled briefings.

Vacancies exist in the following warrant officer specialities: Special Forces, career management field 18; criminal investigation, MOS 95D; technical aupply, MOS 92A; and food service, MOS 94B/92G.

The briefings will be Nov. 28 to Nov. 30 at 9:30 a.m. and at 1:30 p.m., in Infantry Hall, Classroom 7.

Soldiers unable to attend these briefings can receive information on the Warrant Officer Program from the Military Personnel Center.

Controlled burning of woodland areas set

Controlled burning of woodland areas will take place Monday through Dec. 2. If the weather permits, the following compartments will be be affected: E-6, I-1, I-5 and Z-2.

Burning will occur in pine stands within these compartments to enhance endangered species habitat and training areas. Personnel planning to use these areas for recreational purposes must vacate these areas prior to 9:30 a.m. daily through Dec. 2.

Training units using compartments adjacent to those listed above may experience drift smoke and are reminded to exercise caution while traveling in these areas because of the potential for reduced visibility.

Units utilizing ranges and training areas should remove flammable debris, such as pinestraw, leaves, grass and trash from around structures in accordance with U.S. Army Infantry Center regulation 210-4, paragraph 5-22, organizational maintenance.

For more information, call Jack Greenlee of the Natural Resources Management Branch at 544-6202.

Airports impose new security measures

New security measures in all airports require travelers to show a picture identification card at the time of check-in. Picture ID cards are required for travelers 18-years and older. Failure to produce a picture ID could result in denial of boarding.

Check-in time at the Columbus Airport should be no less than 45 minutes prior to departure and no less than one hour prior to departure from the Atlanta Airport.

For more information, call 545-7706.

FEHB opens season

The 1995 Federal Employee's Health Benefits Program open season will be Monday through Dec. 11. Enrollment and changes will be effective the first day of the first pay period beginning on or after Jan. 1. Employees who make a change must be in a pay status for some part of the pay period prior to the one in which enrollment takes effect.

For more information call Felicia W. Griffin at 545-5562.

OCS board set

The next Officer Candidate School selection board has been scheduled for June 17 to 21, 1996. The cutoff date for applications to arrive at Personnel Command is May 17, 1996 — no exceptions.

The Adjutant General Personnel Operations Services Division has set up two local boards to accommodate Fort Benning for the DA June board.

Local board No. 1 will be February 6 to 8. Applications must arrive at the division no later than Jan. 19. Local board No. 2 will be May 6 to 8. Applications for this board must arrive no later than April 19.

For more information, call Marie Lee at 545-3341 or 545-4702.

Savings plan opens

The Thrift Savings Plan open season begins Wednesday and runs through Jan. 31. Any employee wishing to start a TSP account, change TSP contributions or change how TSP contributions are invested may do so during the open season.

Elections or changes to the TSP may be made by visiting the Directorate of Civilian Personnel. Personnel Services Center, Building 85, Center Wing, during regular duty hours.

Health fair Monday

The Directorate of Civilian Personnel is hosting a health fair Nov. 13 and 14 in the Total Army Quality Training Room, Building 85, Wing A, Classroom 1.

Representatives from health carriers will be available from 8 a.m. to 4 p.m. both days.

For more information, call Felicia W. Griffin at 545-5562.

Coordinate travel with Carlson Wagonlit

All official travel within the continental United States should be coordinated directly with Carlson Wagonlit Travel.

The traveler is responsible for providing three copies of travel orders directly to Carlson Wagonlit Travel.

For convenience, orders may be dropped off at the drive-thru ticket booth.

Airline tickets will no longer be available for pick-up at the booth. Tickets can be picked up at Building 2628 two days prior to date of travel.

For more information, call Carlson Travel at 682-0622.

Recycle used oil

Used oil can be taken to the following places:

Recycling Center, Building 4000, Villegas Street, Harmony Church. Hours are 9 a.m. to 5 p.m., Monday through Friday.

Kelley Hill Auto Crafts Shop, Building 9064, Marne Road. Hours are 1:30 to 9 p.m. Monday through Friday, 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. Saturday and Sunday.

The auto crafts shops charge a fee to collect the used oil. Used oil may also be turned in to the Energy Management Branch of the Directorate of Public Works or the Defense Reutilization Marketing Office for use.

For more information, call 545-4218 or 545-4766.

EFMP program provides assistance

The Exceptional Family Member Program is a Department of the Army program designed to assist, through selective assignment and reassignment, the soldier who has a special needs family member.

The EFMP addresses the needs of those family members, adults or children, who have a physical, intellectual or emotional disorder that limits that person's capability to take part in activities and which requires special treatment, therapy, education, training or counseling.

The program's purpose is to let the U.S. Total Army Personnel Command at DA know of any family members with special needs, so this can be a consideration during the assignment selection process.

For additional information regarding the EFMP, contact Frances Howard, coordinator, Exceptional Family Member Program, Army Community Service, at 545-6969 or 545-5516.

ACAP expands eligibility period

Army personnel are eligible to use Army Career and Alumni Program services up to 90 days after transition.

All individuals should begin ACAP services 180 days before separation. To set an appointment or if you have any questions, call the Transition Assistance Office, Building 2617, at 545-4892 or 545-4913. Preseparation counseling is required no later than 90 days prior to separation.

Furniture issue ends

The Furnishings Management Branch, Housing Division, of the Directorate of Public Works, will no longer provide family housing type furniture to military personnel and their families.

The only exception to this policy is general officers, foreign and liaison officers, post command sergeant major and School of the Americas foreign instructor personnel.

This policy is in accordance with Army Regulation 210-50, Chapter 10. The office is open from 8 a.m. to 4:30 p.m., weekdays. The office is closed for lunch from noon to 12:30 p.m.

For more information, call Bob Wilson at 545-6713.

Battle Park changes admittance policy

Effective immediately, housing at Battle Park is now open to all Department of Defense civilians, nonappropriated fund employees, retired DoD civilians and military personnel.

To apply, take verification of employment or copy of identification card to Building 2621 in Soldiers' Plaza, or contact Anna Wilson at 545-3921 or Battle Park homes at 689-1282.

Loud music can get you fines on post

The post regulations regarding loud music can be found in USAIC Policy Memorandum 94-64 and Georgia Code 40-6-14.

USAIC Policy memorandum 94-64 states music should not be able to be heard more than 15 feet from a vehicle. Military personnel who violate this policy can be cited for violating Article 92, UCMJ.

All others who violate the 15-foot rule will be asked to turn their music down. Noncompliance can result in post ejection or a breach of peace violation.

According to Georgia Code 40-6-14, music that can be heard more than 100 feet from a vehicle is punishable with a $25 fine.

For more information, call 545-5915 or 4376.

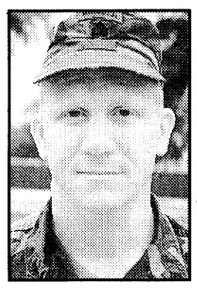
profile in excellence

Name: Sgt. Nicholas W. Struzik

Award: 75th Ranger Regiment's Non-commissioned Officer of the Month

MOS: 11B2V

Unit: Company B, 3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment



Job title: Squad Leader

Years on the job: 4 1/2 years

What were your reasons for joining the Army?
The excitement, adventure, challenge and the college money. I joined the rangers because of their unique mission and opportunity to deploy worldwide to complete hard missions.

Define your style of leadership.
I try to set the example and have fun.

What person has most influenced your career?
Sgt. 1st Class Ray Hornung, my brother-in-law and Sgt. Jeffrey Palmer, my first team leader.

Sgt. Nicholas Struzik is the 3rd Bn., 75th Ranger Regt., NCO of the month

If you were sergeant major of the Army for a day, what improvements would you make?
I would get the Army pay scale more on line with our civilian counterparts. Although we receive benefits, the compensation does not outweigh our low pay.

What were your reasons for choosing your MOS?
I wanted to be where the action is.

Describe a memorable moment in your career.
On Oct. 3, 1993, in Mogadishu, Somalia, I was part of Task Force Ranger. I was amazed how in combat, rangers performed professionally and remained focused to accomplish their mission and bring everyone back.

What are your career plans?
Finish my enlistment with the rangers and move into federal law enforcement.

What others have to say:
"Sgt. Struzik is a great man, and I would do anything for him." — Pfc. George Johnson, squad member

"Sgt. Struzik will accomplish any task given to him. A fine ranger leader." — 1st Lt. Chris Donahue, platoon leader

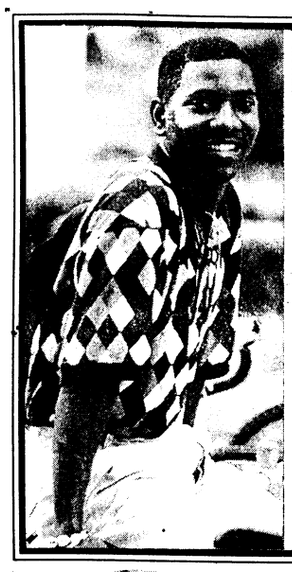
Silver Wings receive award

Parachute team honored for its volunteer endeavors

By Lisa M. Hibbert
Bayonet staff writer

The Silver Wings Parachute Team of Fort Benning received a plaque from the Muscogee Rotary Club of Columbus Nov. 2 during a breakfast at the Columbus Hilton.

The team was honored for its contributions to the Rotary Club's Aug. 30 night out for 27 residents of the Hamilton Home, a retirement home in Columbus. The Silver Wings put on a pregame show for the residents.



"This was the first time that many of the residents had been out for a long time," said Ann Henderson, president of the Muscogee Rotary Club of Columbus.

"We provided them with transportation to and from the park, and we got them baseball caps and food but I think they really enjoyed the show that the Silver Wings put on."

Lt. Col. Thomas E. Sittnick, commander, 1st Battalion (Airborne), 507th Infantry, 11th Infantry Regiment, accepted the award on behalf of the team since the team members were out of town.

Money available for tuition

Retired Officers Association

Alexandria, Va. — During the 1996-97 school year, 800 students will receive $2,500 interest-free loans from The Retired Officers Association Educational Assistance Program. These loans, $500 more than last year and now totaling $2 million, will be awarded annually for up to five years of undergraduate study to unmarried undergraduate students, under the age of 24, who are dependent children of active, reserve and retired service personnel and their surviving spouses.

Since students can obtain up to $12,500 of interest-free support for five years of undergraduate study, and loan repayment is after graduation, the competition for these loans will be keen. For the 1995-96 school year, some 1,000 students competed for 225 openings. The students were selected on their scholastic ability, participation in extracurricular and community activities, as well as financial need.

The TROA Educational Assistance Program, established in 1948 for the sons and daughters of retired officers and their widows, has expanded to include the children of active duty, reserve, National Guard and retired officers, warrant officers and enlisted members of the Army, Navy, Air Force, Marine Corps, Coast Guard, U. S. Public Health Service and National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration.

TROA Educational Assistance applications for the 1996-97 school year are now available. Applications should be requested by Feb. 15, and the completed application must be postmarked on or before March 1.

For applications and more information, write to TROA Educational Assistance Program Administrator (09D), 201 N. Washington St., Alexandria, Va. 22314-2539 or call (800) 245-TROA (8762) Ext. 169 or e-mail school@troa.org.

profile in excellence

Name: Pfc. Michael J. O'Toole
Position: Better Opportunities for Single Soldiers Program representative
Unit: School of the Americas
MOS: 25M
Job Title: Multi-media specialist
Years on the job: Two years
Hometown: Virginia Beach, Va.

What were your reasons for joining the Army?
Specialized experience and money for college.

What were your reasons for choosing your MOS?
Excellent skill to have on the outside world, and it coincides with my college major.

What person has most influenced your military career?
1st Sgt. Moore of the 344th MI Bn., Goodfellow Air Force Base, Texas.

If you were the sergeant major of the Army for a day, what improvements would you make?
I would make it known that BOSS needs to be supported at the highest level. More benefits that are offered to married soldiers should be offered to single soldiers.

What are your future career plans?
I plan to work as an advertising designer.

What do you think about the BOSS program and why is it important?
BOSS is a great program. It is important because it is quickly becoming a strong voice for the single soldier community.

What have you accomplished as the BOSS representative for your unit?
We have created a base program in our unit and have created a good relationship between BOSS and our chain of command.

In your opinion, how can the individual soldier get involved in the BOSS program?
A lot of soldiers don't make themselves aware of what BOSS is trying to do for them. If they made themselves aware, I think a lot more soldiers would get involved.

What specifically has the BOSS program done to help the soldiers in your unit?
Our quality of life is slowly but surely progressing. More soldiers are becoming aware of things they can do on their own to help improve their quality of life.

280 turn out in support of BOSS program

By Ruth J. Spaller
USAIC Public Affairs Office

More than 280 people turned out for a breakfast Nov. 1 at the Main NCO Club to show support for Fort Benning's Better Opportunities for Single Soldiers program.

The breakfast, hosted quarterly by the commanding general and the BOSS program representatives, brings unit commanders, sergeants major and key leaders from all over post together with the soldiers who make the program work, giving them the opportunity to recognize outstanding contributors, said Spc. Michael James, BOSS president.

Since he took office in June, James said, he's seen the BOSS program moving toward the goal he set then — to make Fort Benning's BOSS program the model for the entire Army.

Contributing to that advancement are the Columbus Rotary Club, the Service Corps of Retired Executives, Habitat for Humanity, the Columbus City Council, the Muscular Dystrophy Association and the Special Olympics, James said, as well as the soldiers and leaders who support the program.

The only way to continue to positively influence single soldiers' quality of life is to continue that work, James said.

"We have to work hard now because the Army has less money to dole out," said Fort Benning's Commanding General, Maj. Gen. John W. Hendrix.

"In good times, it's easy; but, in bad times, when there's not a lot of money, we still have the obligation to support our single soldiers in the best possible way that we can," Hendrix said.

"What's going to make this effective in the coming year is the leadership of the post, the leadership of the MSC (major subordinate command) commanders, sergeants major and the chain of command on down," he said.

The keys to keeping the program strong, Hendrix said, are command backing and empowerment of single soldiers.

"Most places where there's a BOSS program, they don't have the command backing (we have here)," Hendrix said. "There's a name, but no substance. So if you want it, go get it. I encourage you, commanders and soldiers, to stand behind this program and continue to make it work."

At the breakfast, the 36th Engineer Group received an award for having the best single soldier quality of life program, and the Ranger Training Brigade was recognized as the first runner-up.

Also, certificates of achievement were presented to the following individuals for their contributions to the BOSS program:

- Sgt. Lamont Briggs, Infantry Training Brigade
- 1st Sgt. Randy Dyson, 36th Engineer Group
- Pfc. Judith G. Ginder, School of the Americas
- Spc. Heidi A. Marlatt, 608th Ordnance Company
- Staff Sgt. Angel E. Martinez, School of the Americas
- Spc. Stacey E. Morecraft, Single Soldier Program
- Pfc. Michael J. O'Toole, School of the Americas
- Ed Ruffner, SCORE
- Maj. James W. Stegall, Infantry Training Brigade
- Spc. Amy Stoll, U.S. Army Medical Department Activity
- Spc. Michael E. Will, Infantry Training Brigade
- Spc. Christa Yates, Infantry Training Brigade

Vets may be eligible for refunds

Department of Veterans Service

Veterans who contributed into the Veterans Educational Assistance Program from the late 1970s to the mid-1980s may be eligible for a refund if they did not use the educational benefits.

"Veterans have 10 years from their date of discharge to use the benefit," Commissioner of Veterans Affairs Pete Wheeler said. "Unlike other GI educational programs, money contributed but not used by the veteran is refundable."

VA reports that it has more than a quarter billion dollars in unused VEAP funds that will be turned over to the government's general fund if not claimed.

Under the VEAP program, an individual could contribute a maximum of $2,700. The government then matched the participant's contribution at the rate of $2 for every $1 the individual put into the fund.

Veterans will only be refunded the unused amount they put into the fund. The government's contribution will not be refunded.

If not used during the 10-year period, there is an additional one year period to request a refund. Contributions not refunded after 11 years from time of discharge will be transferred to the general government fund.

Individuals were eligible to enroll in VEAP if they entered active duty for the first time after Dec. 31, 1976, and before July 1, 1985. A contribution to VEAP had to have been made prior to April 1, 1987.

"I encourage those who think they might be eligible for a refund to contact their local Department of Veterans Service office," Wheeler said.

Airlift Command saves travel dollars for official business

By Ned Christensen
Operational Support Airlift Command

WASHINGTON — If you travel on official business for the Army or the Department of Defense, the total Army Operational Support Airlift Command can give you a lift.

Army and DoD personnel traveling on business can request air transportation on OSACOM's fleet of C-12, C-26 and U-21 turbo airplanes when commercial carriers can't satisfy the mission or when military air is more cost effective.

All Army and DoD personnel are eligible for military air as long as the mission meets DoD directives governing the use of military aircraft.

Flying military air can save money during a time of shrinking travel budgets because OSACOM has the lowest passenger fares in the travel business — they're free.

And OSACOM flights often take you closer to where you're going, which can save time and rental car expense commuting to and from airports.

Operational support airlift, or OSA, aircraft are based at 64 locations nationwide and scheduled centrally from OSACOM headquarters at Fort Belvoir, Va.

Designated mission validators at installations access the scheduling system electronically, which makes reserving a seat on an OSA airplane similar to booking a commercial flight.

OSACOM travel differs from commercial travel, though, in the sense that your mission has to meet certain criteria in order to qualify for military air transport.

To request a flight, submit your request at least four days ahead of time to the person in your unit or activity who normally authorizes business travel.

Your request can be submitted in any form, but it must provide information including your departure and arrival dates and times with a two-hour window, requested airports for departure and arrival, a complete passenger manifest and points of contact at both ends of your flight.

Operational Support Airlift Command travel differs from commercial travel in that your mission has to meet certain criteria in order to qualify for military air transport

Your unit authorizing official will submit your request to the OSACOM scheduling office through your installation validator, who processes your request and forwards it electronically to OSACOM schedulers. All installations have a trained OSA validator, and the person in charge of travel should know who it is.

The following mission requests are likely to be supported:

• Missions with scheduling or delivery constraints that cannot be satisfied by a commercial carrier

• Missions requiring the movement or discussion of classified material

• Missions requiring team travel for the purpose of conducting business en route

• Missions that can be satisfied through commercial travel, but military air is more cost effective.

A prime time to think about traveling Army air is when you have several people traveling to the same or similar destinations. OSACOM airplanes can carry as many as 18 passengers.

Naturally, the more seats that can be filled on a military aircraft, the fewer airline tickets the government has to buy. This tips the cost-effectiveness scale in favor of military air.

If you are traveling alone and a commercial carrier can get you to your destination when you need to be there, that might be your best bet. However, OSACOM schedulers have the means to combine missions going to similar destinations, so request a flight. Yours might be the request that enables OSACOM to support you and someone else.

You can also ship cargo on OSA aircraft, and the same criteria apply for eligibility. It must be an official business shipment.

If you're not sure your travel needs qualify, request the flight and let the schedulers decide.

The scheduling system is completely automated, and it can handle a huge volume of requests. You'll be notified in a day or so.

You may find that a commercial carrier is still your best way to travel in many cases, but if you think your mission could qualify, turn in a request. It might save you time and money.

Besides, OSACOM will never lose your luggage — you carry it on and off.

Library to receive donation

By Spc. Judith Ginder
School of the Americas

Local philanthropist Elena Amos will donate a collection of writings to the Amos Library at the School of the Americas Monday.

"The Fifth Horseman of the Apocalypse" and the collected newspaper works of Amos' father, Salvador Diaz-Verson, will join the thousands of books already in the library.

"Mrs. Amos' gift reinforces the fact that the School of the Americas is now more of an academic institution that serves many kinds of democratic forces in Latin America," said Dr. Russell Ramsey, professor of Latin American affairs at SOA.

Diaz, who was raised in Cuba, spoke out strongly against Fidel Castro and the Communist Party. He also wrote many articles against communism between 1964 and 1981.

Many of these have been compiled into a three-volume work, said Ana Lopez, of the Amos Foundation .

Born in Cuba, Amos studied journalism at the University of Miami before marrying the late John B. Amos, for whom SOA's Amos Library is named. She now is an active member of the Columbus community.

Red Cross remembers military connection

Since World War II, blood donations and volunteers have contributed to quality of life

Since the beginning of World War II, the American Red Cross and the U.S. military have shared a common bond of working together, protecting and caring for U.S. citizens.

The American Red Cross is asking you to donate blood and celebrate Veterans Day by remembering our soldiers, nurses and volunteers who gave their lives for our freedom 50 years ago in World War II.

During that war, most families had relatives serving in the military or were helping the war effort on the home front. Many Americans became actively involved in the American Red Cross, and more than 7.5 million volunteered their time to ship food and medical parcels to Allied prisoners of war, provide relief for civilians overseas, help in short-staffed U.S. hospitals or make monetary gifts to the Red Cross war effort.

The American Red Cross also helped on the home front by collecting 13.4 million pints of blood for American service members in combat and enrolling 70,000 nurses to serve with the military.

The Red Cross began its blood program Feb. 4, 1941, at the request of the U.S. Army and Navy. Because of the modern advances in blood collection, servicemen were dramatically more likely to survive the main cause of field casualties: shock due to blood loss.

The American Red Cross continues to serve the military in many ways, including providing blood to the military and to Veterans Administration hospitals worldwide. Most recently, more than 10,000 pints of blood were collected for the Gulf War. Between 900 and 1,000 pints of blood need to be collected in the 85-county southern region each weekday to help ensure a safe and adequate blood supply for military and civilian use.

For more information on donating or for blood drive locations, call (800) GIVE-LIFE.

Positive parenting can avert abuse

By Shannon Day
Special to The Bayonet©

Parenting in the '90s is becoming increasingly more challenging. In the military, deployments are a fact of life. Families are uprooted and moved every few years. Single-parent homes are common, with the parent acting as both mother, father and the bread-winner. This leaves less time to spend with children and little or no personal time.

In the society we live in, there is often little time to unwind from a daily routine before parents have to deal with their children, making dinner and various other household duties.

Under such high-stress situations, adults are often left feeling frustrated, impatient and angry. This is sometimes taken out on children in the form of emotional abuse.

"Causing emotional trauma by use of words, failure to provide a nurturing environment or emotional growth are forms of emotional abuse," said Debra F. Howell, supervisor, Family Advocacy Program. "This is considered to be a form of child abuse."

Other types of emotional abuse include exposing a child to family violence or physically or sexually abusing a child.

"This is because you are subjecting a child to trauma," she said.

Some indicators of emotional abuse include low self-esteem or consistently feeling inferior, according to Howell.

Children who grow up abused often exhibit a certain emptiness and bitterness toward life, added Chap. Robert W. Thompson, director, Family Life Ministries Center.

Thompson said our role as parents is to mold the child's will without breaking the spirit.

"When we break our child's heart or spirit, we mistakenly do it in the name of molding the will," he said.

Adults need to ask themselves what they are trying to do as parents and keep the parent-child relationship above abusive discipline, Thompson said.

"We catch ourselves thinking of our children as housepets, getting them to do exactly what we want, when we want," he said. "We can't even get our computers to do that.

"Children just want to feel loved and cared for, no matter what they do," Thompson said. "That parental love isn't just a feeling but a decision to care for someone.

"That decision to care for our children keeps us going when the natural feeling dissipates sometimes," he added.

Howell said emotional abuse is often overlooked or misdiagnosed because there can be many other more obvious causes for a child to be upset. Parents faced with financial strain or not spending enough time with their children are two examples.

"Unless a child voices it, it is very hard to know," Howell said. "If you have a child with poor self-esteem, it's very hard for them to tell someone, such as a teacher at school."

Even so, professionals are starting to pay more attention to emotional abuse, especially in children who have been exposed to domestic violence, Howell added.

The military offers many different types of preventive help, but often times families don't seek assistance until the abuse has occurred or their commanders force them to, she said.

"We want people to know it's okay to ask for help," Thompson said. "It's what we are here for."

For more tips and suggestions on dealing with family-related frustration, or for referral to a particular family service, contact Howell at 545-1695 or Thompson at 545-5301.

Stress release tips from single parents

- Share child care with friends. Let them take your children for a few hours one evening and watch theirs the next day.
- Listen to some relaxing music on the way home from work to help ease the transition from bread-winner to bread-maker.
- Take a long bubble bath after the children are asleep.
- Look at a favorite magazine or read a novel during a lunch break.
- Exercise regularly, even if it is just a 15-minute walk.

Teachers hop to a century of service

By Libby Burtner
Special correspondent

At least four women volunteering on post can give the Energizer Bunny a run for his battery.

These four women, together, have taught at the Fort Benning Sunday school for more than 111 years!

What keeps them going and going? Every last one of them said the children are the reason they return year after year.

What got them started? That's where the stories differ.

Shirley Sines, a teacher of 29 years, said she started to teach because she was having a down time in her life. She had just lost a 5-day-old son at Martin Army Community Hospital, and her husband was going to Vietnam.

She said it's easy to turn to God under those circumstances. Her volunteer work definitely kept her going during that difficult time. Now, she stays because, she said, she loves the vivacious children.

"They keep you young," she said, "and you keep learning when you prepare lessons."

These Sunday school teachers know a thing or two about longevity, having tallied more than 100 years of service among them

While Sines is staying young, her students are growing older. She recently had a 25-year-old man hand her a credit card in the store where she works. She looked at the name and recognized him as a child she had taught when he was 7 years old. She told him she had been his Sunday school teacher, and she remembered him being as sharp as a tack.

Sines isn't the only teacher who turned tragedy into helping at the church. Hungshia Tullia's husband died shortly after retirement, leaving her with six children, three still at home. She said people were so kind to them and helped them so much she wanted to give something back.

When the director of the Sunday school asked her to teach, Tullia said yes, and she kept saying yes for 25 years. She said she's enjoyed the children and the feeling of helping others.

Another 25-year veteran is Helen Smith. She started teaching when her youngest son started going to Sunday school. He wanted Mom to stay so she did, for 25 years, long after he was up and out of the program.

When asked what keeps her going, Smith laughed and said she wasn't sure. But she did say she loves children and is quick to mention she has two wonderful grandchildren. She said she enjoys working with the pre-kindergarten children because they don't know more than she does.

She also said she loves the job and that she'll keep teaching until someone says she's too old (she'll be 75 in December).

Edwina Redfoot also followed her son to Sunday school, and while he has graduated, 32 years later she still goes every Sunday to teach.

She said she recalls when she first started teaching there were more than 2,400 children in the program. Twenty-one buses were needed to bring in the children. Now, Redfoot said, they are lucky to fill two buses:

While she said she loves the children and the opportunity to teach them about God's love for

The trees will be available at the lot in front of the Post Exchange at the Main Mall seven days a week from 9 a.m. to 9 p.m. Prices range from $8 to $40.

Cookbook sales — The 2nd Battalion, 18th Infantry Regiment, 3rd Brigade, 24th Infantry Division (Mechanized), Family Support Group is raising funds to help families and soldiers of the battalion by selling "The Vanguard Cooking" book.

It contains more than 150 recipes and $3.60 in coupons. Cost is $7.50, and all funds go to the battalion FSG.

For more information, call Connie Zahn at 687-6841 or Stephanie Mello at 689-5284.

Engineers meeting — The Society of American Military Engineers will meet Thursday and visit the Uchee Town archeological site. Bus transportation will be provided from the south parking lot of Building 6 at 11:30 a.m. Approximate return time is 1 p.m.

The tour will be conducted by Dr. Chris Hamilton, Directorate of Public Works archeologist. For more information, call Sue O'Dell at 545-2086.

Tot Town special hours — Tot Town Child Development Center will open every morning at 6:30 beginning Nov. 20.

Also, to help with Christmas shopping, Tot Town will offer extended hours on Tuesday evenings beginning Dec. 5.

Beginning Dec. 1 and continuing through Dec. 22, Tot Town will remain open every Friday night. If there are enough requests, the center will open for New Year's Eve.

Reservations are strongly encouraged so the center can be properly staffed and patrons not turned away.

For other group requests or for more information, call 689-8772 or 689-8698.

FBMA meeting — Col. Gregory C. Camp, chief of staff, will speak at the Fort Benning Management Association meeting Thursday at the Officers' Club.

The topic of Camp's presentation will be the Fort Benning performance improvement program.

Lunch begins at 11:30 a.m. in the Corrigador Room, with Camp's presentation beginning at noon.

A $1 donation is being requested to defray costs. For more information, call Emily Patterson at 545-5173 or Lisa Kelly 545-3246.

Food locker — The Army Community Service is soliciting for organizations and activities to conduct food drives for the emergency food locker. ACS provides food to needy families in the community. As the Thanksgiving and Christmas seasons approach, holiday food baskets and non-perishable items are provided to needy soldiers and families in post units. The Food Locker must be replenished to meet continuing daily and holiday requirements.

For more information call 545-2536, 545-4043 or 545-7517.

Wives' luncheon — The Fort Benning Officers' Wives' Club presents "Entertaining with Ease" Wednesday in the Regimental Room at the Fort Benning Officers' Club.

Guest speaker will be Glenda Merrill, professional caterer. She will discuss formal entertaining, how to prepare a table and preparing food with ease.

Starting at 10 a.m., local crafters will display and sell their handmade wares.

Social hour will begin at 11 a.m. followed by an appetizer lunch at 11:30. Cost for the luncheon is $7, and reservations need to be made by noon today. When making your reservation, please let OWC know if you will be attending for the first time or if you will be bringing a guest.

To make reservations, call Brooke Gorski at 682-4913 if your last name begins with A to L or Lorie Bohnstedt at 682-8495 if your last name begins with M to Z. Bohnstedt also takes reservations in Spanish.

Education fair — In recognition of American Education Week, the Staff Education and Training Branch, Directorate of Operations and Training, will host an education fair at Infantry Hall Thursday from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m.

Local educational institutions will be present. All Fort Benning personnel and their family members are invited.

Warrant officer auxiliary — The Fort Benning "Forever Forward" Warrant Officer Spouse Auxiliary will meet Thursday at 7 p.m. Membership is open to all spouses of active duty and retired warrant officers.

The meeting place will be announced; for more information, call Pamelia Wade at 689-8343.

Warrant Officer Association — The Fort Benning Chapter "Forever Forward" will meet Wednesday at the Fort Benning Officers' Club at noon to discuss the upcoming Christmas party.

For more information, call Chief Warrant Officer 3 Ted Walker at 689-4949 or Warrant Officer 1 Lewis Wilson at 214-0793or 545-5637.

OWC Fun Auction — The Fort Benning Officers' Wives' Club will sponsor a Fun Auction and holiday game night Nov. 17 for OWC members and guests in the Regimental Room of the Fort Benning Officers' Club.

The event begins with a social hour at 6 p.m. followed by a $5 dinner buffet at 7. Viewing and bidding of the silent auction items will take place during the social and dinner hours. Games begin at 8.

Units and individuals are needed to volunteer any talents or services for silent and service auction items. For more information or to donate an item for either of the auctions, call Jackie Place at 689-6496 or Brenda McKean at 689-4590.

Dinner reservations are not required, but OWC requests that you call either Brooke Gorski at 682-4913 or Lorie Bohnstedt at 682-8495 by Wednesday so the Officers' Club may have an estimated number in attendance.

Wives' club — The International Wives' Club invites interested persons to come and visit every first Tuesday of the month at Building 2462, Soldiers' Plaza, for coffee, cake and information.

For more information, call Olga Kelly at 687-6471 or Andrea Pitts at 687-6937.

AER college assistance — Soldiers with college-aged children often wonder how they can afford education costs. Part of the answer may be found from Army Emergency Relief.

AER provides financial assistance through scholarships. To qualify for financial assistance through AER, students must be enrolled, accepted or pending acceptance as a full-time student for the entire academic year in post-secondary educational institutions approved by the U.S. Department of Education.

Scholarships are awarded based on financial need, academic achievement and individual accomplishments.

Applications must be received by March 1 for the upcoming academic year.

For more information, visit the AER, Building 2643, Soldiers' Plaza, 8 a.m. to 5 p.m., Monday through Friday.

Membership cards — Youth Services annual membership cards are available. Membership and registration are required for all children who participate in any YS program or activity or utilize the facilities. The cost per membership will be $20 per year, per family.

For more information, call Lamar Caldwell at 545-3070 or 545-3913.

IOAC runs up donations for Santa's Castle

By Donna S. Budjenska
Special to The Bayonet©

Students in the Infantry Officer Advanced Course Class 5-95 put on their running shoes Nov. 4 and raised $400 for Santa's Castle.

The 5K fun run and walk and bake sale drew about 65 IOAC students and family members, said Jeanne Connor, who oversaw the event. She said 38 participated in the run, with Capt. Michael Fadden finishing in first place with a time of 18:05.

"It's great to come out here as a group to raise money for the children," Fadden said. "It was a real team effort today."

The youngest participant was 11-month-old Andrew Dilullo, who rode in a stroller as his parents, Capt. Jeff and Linda Dilullo, ran the route, which started and ended at the edge of the East Main Post housing area and wound through the Follow Me Fitness Trail.

Connor thanked the Military Police and the Follow Me Golf Course club house staff for their support during the event.

IOAC Class 5-95 began in August. The IOAC wives' group has targeted Santa's Castle as its group project during the course, with members volunteering at Santa's Castle, organizing the 5K fun run and planning future events whose funds will go to Santa's Castle for both this year and next.

Haunted house brings treat for Santa's Castle

1st Battalion (Airborne), 507th Infantry, 11th Infantry Regt.

1st Battalion (Airborne), 507th Infantry, 11th Infantry Regt., soldiers and families donated 244 new toys and money valued at $2,160 to Santa's Castle. The toys and cash contributions were raised from the unit's haunted house, which was open to Fort Benning the last three weekends in October.

Lt. Col. Tom Sittnick, the battalion commander, said, "It was a combined effort by the unit's soldiers and their families which made the battalion's Santa's Castle drive such a success."

Olympic committee seeks volunteers

Atlanta Committee for the Olympic Games

The Atlanta Committee for the Olympic Games is continuing to recruit volunteers to help stage the centennial celebration of the Olympic Games.

Organizers estimate that approximately 40,000 to 45,000 volunteers will be needed to staff the 1996 event.

"We are looking for people who want to be a part of the 1996 Olympic Games and are willing to share their time, energy and 'Olympic' spirit — these are the primary requirements, plain and simple," said Charles London, ACOG director of volunteer services.

Other requirements include availability for at least 14 days between July 5 and Aug. 6, 1996, and the ability to work an eight-hour shift each day. Also, volunteers must be 18 years of age by July 1.

Volunteer applicants have an opportunity to indicate the venues to which they want to be assigned.

Volunteers will receive an official uniform designed especially for the 1996 Olympic Games. During their assigned shifts, volunteers will receive meals and have access to special break areas for snacks and beverages.

The volunteer training plan includes general orientation, a look at the venues and job-specific instruction.

Special registration events are taking place at the Elizabeth Bradley Turner Continuing Education Building, Columbus College, today, Saturday and Sunday. At each event, prospective volunteers can speak with officials and submit applications.

- Today, noon to 7 p.m.
- Saturday, 10 a.m. to 5 p.m.
- Sunday, 1 to 5 p.m.

People interested in participating as volunteers in the 1996 Olympic Games can call 660-1996 to request an application; or they can visit the 1996 Olympic Games Columbus office, 701 Front Ave., Monday through Friday from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m.

After submitting an application, potential volunteers will be photographed for accreditation and can complete forms for uniform sizing and other information. ACOG representatives will be present to answer questions and help people complete the process.

them, she would like to see more people involved.

"I know there are more people out there who have worked in Sunday school," she said. "I wish they would volunteer."

Still, even with the changes in attendance, Redfoot said she loves to see September come. Like her dynamic counterparts, she said she loves the children and teaching them a very special message.

These four women started for different reasons but keep going and going and going for the same one — the children.

Eagle Scout Food Locker Project

Troop 51 Boy Scout Armin Schevey is leading a Cub and Boy Scout on-post food drive to benefit the Army Community Services Food Locker. Collection of canned and other nonperishable food items will take place tomorrow. Residents are asked to place donated items outside their front doors by 9:30 a.m. This is an Eagle project Schevey is conducting in cooperation with ACS.

Auxiliary inducts new officers

Warrant Officer Spouse Auxiliary

The newly elected officers of the Forever Forward Chapter of the Warrant Officer Auxiliary were sworn in during a ceremony Oct. 12 at the Fort Benning Officers' Club.

Chief Warrant Officer 4 Gabriel Deas was the guest of honor and conducted the swearing in of Pamelia Wade, president; Jody Wilson, vice president; Deborah Donald, treasurer; and Nancy Parker, secretary.

Wade thanked attendees for their support and presented them with a cross, heart and anchor pin, which, she said, represented faith, hope and charity — the theme she said she would like to continue throughout the year.

"It's important to me to ensure that the warrant officer auxiliary continues to grow and gain strength," Ward said.

The auxiliary was founded last year, the first time in Fort Benning's history there has been such an organization. Ward thanked those whose hard work resulted in the successful beginning of an auxiliary. Founding president, Carole Pfander, and founding vice president, Yvonne Hanchett, were unable to attend, but Ward singled them out for special thanks in getting the auxiliary started.

Founding treasurer, Belinda Berra, was in attendance and received a gift of appreciation from the chapter.

Last year, auxiliary members supported the Ronald McDonald House and the Veterans Administration Hospital in Tuskegee. "The auxiliary will continue to support these agencies this year," Wade said. "It is the intent of the warrant officer spouse auxiliary to support not only the warrant officers at Fort Benning, but also to support the Fort Benning and Columbus communities."

The Fort Benning Forever Forward Warrant Officer Spouse Auxiliary meets the third Thursday of each month at 7 p.m. Membership is open to active duty and retired warrant officer spouses. Membership dues are $12 annually.

For more information, call Wade at 689-8343.

Veterans Day: Armistice celebration should be remembrance of fallen

By David C. Moran
USAIC Chaplain Office

reflections

Veterans Day signifies many different things to those who note its passing on the calendar.

For some, this marks a holiday and with that freedom, a chance to celebrate a break from hectic schedules at work or at school. For those who share in the title of veteran, there is pride in personal service to our nation during conflict — a pride coupled with feelings of mourning for comrades who paid a much higher price for their service.

Still others stop to remember the fallen service members in all U.S. wars. The diversity of these responses to this holiday are rooted in the history of Veterans Day.

Veterans Day was originally called Armistice Day, commemorating the signing of the armistice that ended World War I Nov. 11, 1918. There were ticker tape parades and many occasions of dancing in the street when the armistice was signed ending the "war to end all wars." Throughout Europe and in America, the original intent was to designate a day of celebration.

In 1919, Woodrow Wilson proclaimed an annual day of mourning on the 11th of November, still called Armistice Day though the purpose of the day clearly shifted from celebration to mourning the very real and tragic loss of life during the Great War.

In 1954, after yet another World War and a United Nations engagement in Korea, the day was called Veterans Day, a day to honor the fallen in all U.S. wars. To this day, we recognize veterans of all wars and pause to honor all who gave their lives while serving their country. American history is probably reason enough to stop, celebrate, mourn and remember. Biblical history provides still more examples supporting a Veterans Day observance.

The Hebrews stacked rocks on many occasions. In times of victory, remembrance, grief, celebration and renewal, the people of God stopped, gathered stones and stacked them into a pillar, a pile, a column or an altar and left it there as a reminder of the great event precipitating the construction.

Jacob piled up rocks and named the place Bethel, or "God's House," after God revealed himself to Jacob in a dream (Genesis 28:10). The rock upon which he rested his head became both a pillar and altar. The place had been called Luz before, but for Jacob and his descendants who passed that upended rock, it was thereafter known as Bethel. With each passing, the dream was retold of angels ascending and descending and the Lord's promise to Jacob.

Samuel set up a stone near a place called Mizpah and named it Ebenezer, which means "stone of help," because the Lord had helped them (1 Samuel 7:12). To those passing who were ignorant of the significance, it looked like just another balanced slab of rock. To Samuel and any Israelites passing the stone, it was an opportunity to retell the story of the ark's return from the Philistines, Israel's repentance, confession and rededication to God at Mizpah and God's intervening help that led to victory on the battlefield.

As you celebrate, mourn and remember this Veterans Day, make sure the day is not just a pile of rocks. Retell the story. Raise up an Ebenezer and really celebrate, mourn and remember. Above all, don't forget to thank God for his help.

reflections

What is it that worshiping believers want to see happening in the lives of people as a result of the ministries of the church?

Each church needs to think about nurturing the believers as well as reaching out to be the "salt of the Earth," making others thirsty to know Jesus Christ.

Our Lord said, "If anyone is thirsty, let him come to me and drink. Whoever believes in me, as the Scripture has said, streams of living water will flow from within him." (John 7:37, 38 NIV).

In one word, purpose is the key to the ministry outreach of every church. In the Gospel of Luke, Chapter 4, Jesus quotes the prophet Isaiah with his mission statement.

Does your church have a purpose statement?

Stewardship of our time, spiritual gifts (each person who believes in Christ has a spiritual gift) and resources are vitally linked to the purpose of every congregation.

Most churches during the months of October and November are working on their 1996 budgets for ministry. If you have ever served on a church budget committee, the wrangling and tug of wars within the church have been up close and real.

Jesus talked more about money than he did about prayer. Our checkbooks can reveal individual spirituality more than tears and shouts of praise.

In joyful commitment to God, believers have important opportunities for generosity. "A generous man will himself be blessed, for he shares his food with the poor." (Proverbs 22:9). This is a promise from the scriptures.

Does this promise from the word of God place a tacit moral obligation on him to bless us because we give money to the church? That's a question for each of us to answer in our own hearts.

The generous individual of Proverbs would seem to have become generous as he matures in his walk with the living God. The sharing of our resources means more than just our checkbooks. It's a discipline of responding to the grace of God in Jesus Christ.

Every Christian chooses how to respond to the stewardship plans and challenge of the worshiping community. Do not think of this as the church begging for money, again. Rather see this as a challenge for you and your family to grow in Christ.

There's a beggar at our door, and his name is opportunity.

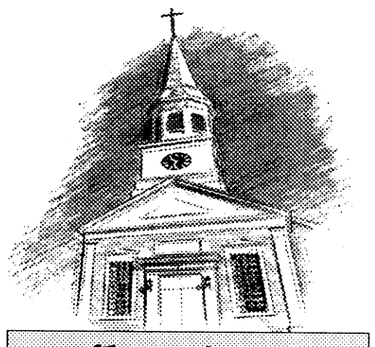
Faith helps us endure during stressful times

By Rodie Lamb
The Monitor, Fort Bliss, Texas

Stress — we all experience it. Mounting bills, National Training Center, family problems, pressure at work. Even on your best days, you feel the pressure all around you. Is it any wonder doctors say about 50 percent of their patients' complaints are stress-related?

Would it surprise you that stress management has become a huge industry in the United States today? Stressed-out Americans are spending millions of dollars just to handle the pressures of everyday living. If all the remedies in the world can't help us to deal with the pressures of life, where is the answer? Here is how one man found the answer.



Many years ago, a man named Larry (name changed) worked a high-pressure job as a short order cook and dishwasher; but he insisted that, while he worked, he experienced a deeper peace and joy, right in the middle of all the hot stoves and pile of grimy pots and pans.

What was his secret? "I never forget that the God who loves me more than anyone on Earth is always with me," he said, "even when I'm scrubbing the dirtiest pots. He is constantly encouraging me, and I feel his love for me no matter what happens!"

It is amazing how people will turn to quick-fix remedies for coping with stress. This man looked to God for help during his stressful situation. The Scriptures say, "If anyone of you lacks wisdom, he should ask God."

In the last days of his earthly ministry, Jesus endured stress that no other person on earth has ever suffered. Just before his trial, he pleaded with his father three times for him to remove the cup of suffering. This agonizing stress caused him to sweat droplets of blood.

According to medical science, sweating blood is a rare medical condition observed in some people suffering extreme anxiety. Jesus looked to his heavenly father for strength and encouragement. Before his death, he said to his disciples, "In the world, you will have tribulation, but take courage; I have overcome the world." (John 16:33)

reflections

You can overcome the world and its stress by putting his peace in your heart. It does not matter what you have gone through or experienced. He is always there, waiting to share his peace with you.

The key to overcoming stress is practicing the presence of God on a daily basis.

Remember, when you are going through a stressful situation or event, ask God to help you. The way you handle stress will affect your health, happiness and perspective on life. Stress can influence you in a positive or negative way. God can help you to cope with stress in a positive way. He is waiting to help you. Don't hesitate to ask him for his help.

Absent actions reality in marriage

By Michael W. Dugal
USAIC Chaplain Office

reflections

"Do you take this woman to be your lawful wedded wife, to have and to hold, to protect and honor her, for richer or poorer in sickness and in health until death do you part, so help you God?"

These words are familiar to many couples as the start of a marital relationship. Whether they were cited by a minister or a judge, these words hold the participants accountable to a commitment. However, it is normal in many marriages for absent actions to be reality.

All of us have heard the phrase, "Your actions speak louder than your words." I constantly ask myself, "If I could not speak to my wife or children, would they be able to know I love, honor, respect and cherish them by my actions?"

I confess that my answer is less approving than what I desire. So what do I do? Do I give up? Do I say it is too hard? Do I release myself from being responsible for showing my significant others they are loved and honored? How do I achieve this display of affection and respect to those I do love?

There are several actions and attitudes I can implement in my life. First, I need to realize that my actions are the real proof of my commitments. If I am committed to the Army, then I will act in a professional manner at all times. If I am committed to my marriage, then adultery is not going to be an option. If I tell someone I will provide a service for him, then my actions will verify that my words are true and can be trusted. Yes, my actions prove my words to be trustworthy or full of deceit.

The second action has to do with my attitude. My attitude must be "other-centered." I cannot wait for others to wait on me and be my personal slave or maid; I must place myself in a position of serving others. Their welfare becomes priority over mine. History informs us of parents dying in place of their children. History records the fact, "That God so loved the world that he gave his one and only son...."

Indeed, my actions do speak louder than my words, and my actions require an adjustment in my attitude.

The final action deals with recognition of the fact there is a divine purpose for my life. I am not here by accident. I did not happen to crawl out from under a rock and realize I could stand erect.

No, there is a divine creator and controller who has revealed his purpose for my life through Jesus Christ and the Holy Scripture. It is through the written revelation of God that I understand I am blessed in order that I may bless others.

Only as I understand that I am responsible to show others through my actions by being other-centered and through sharing God's blessings can I sufficiently say, "I love you." I challenge you this week to say less and do more toward those you come into contact with. Then, step back and watch the results.

RECEPTION BATTALION

Receive, process, ship out!

By Lisa M. Hibbert
Bayonet staff writer

Life as a soldier can be tough. But when you're fresh off the block at the 30th Adjutant General Battalion (Reception) and about to enter basic training, life may seem almost unbearable.

"It is the mission of the 30th AG to receive, process and ship trainees," said Maj Mark A. Onesi, executive officer. Onesi said that coming (to the reception battalion) first rather than sending trainees directly to an infantry training unit helps the soldier.

"It is necessary to prepare the records; get medical and dental screenings; get identification cards, glasses and uniforms so that the soldier is fully prepared to focus on the training ahead of him," Onesi said.

On the first day, the soldiers are given roster numbers, issued gray physical training uniforms, given a medical screening, issued a pay advance and are taken to the post exchange.

An X-ray of the entire mouth and a deoxyribonucleic acid sample are taken, and they also receive shots.

They also receive their first Army Regulation haircuts; and, just like the biblical character Samson who lost his strength when his head was shaved, the civilian is slowly taken out of them.

The second day is filled with personal affairs and fittings for the phase one issue of the battle dress uniforms.

During this time, soldiers usually experience a wide range of emotions — from the get-me-out-of-here mode to the too-afraid-to-talk mode.

"The company commanders try to help soldiers with their problems while they're still here at reception," Onesi said. "We counsel them and talk to them. For some of them, this is the first time they have ever been away from home."

On the third day, the initial-entry soldier begins the day with a fitness training assessment. In order to progress from the 30th AG into a basic training unit, soldiers must be able to do 13 push-ups, 25 sit-ups and run one mile in nine minutes. The assessment is different from a diagnostic physical training test in that the push-ups and sit-ups are not timed.

If the basic requirements are not met, recruits are put in the Fitness Training Unit where they get the opportunity to improve their scores.

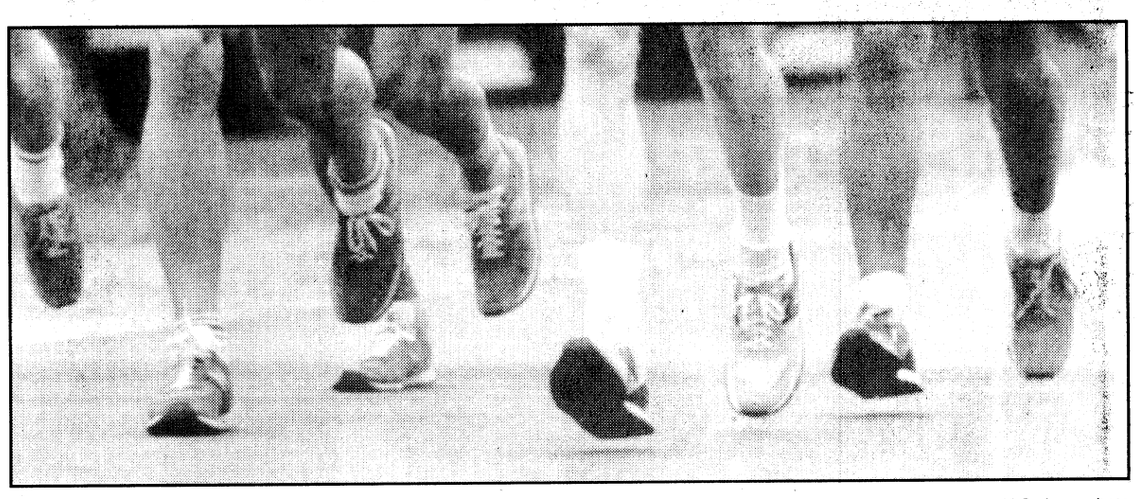
"We try to get some of the civilian out of them before they go (to an infantry training unit)," said Drill Sgt. Woodrow W. Pemberton, 30th AG.

Recruits will also receive their uniforms. Trainees will also receive more shots and visit the eye doctor and the dentist.

Soldiers do more than inprocess at the 30th AG. During the downtime, the drill sergeants conduct some basic soldier training, Onesi said.

"While we have the soldiers here, we give them their first PT session, and we teach them some drill and ceremony, barracks maintenance, how to make up a bunk, how to recognize an officer and we even take them on a road march if the (soldiers) are here over a Saturday," Pemberton said.

Some soldiers learn more than others, depending on how long they stay at the reception battalion, Pemberton said.



Most of the trainees leave after about four days, but some are there up to two weeks if they have medical or dental problems, Onesi said.

"Soldiers here know a lot more than I thought they did when I was a drill sergeant down range," Pemberton said. "I thought that they didn't know everything so I started at the very beginning with them."

The culmination for the 30th AG is shipping the soldiers off to their infantry training units. When the drill sergeants arrive along with the silver sides (formerly known as cattle cars) to pick up their charges, it's time to focus on a new group of soldiers.

Just as the soldiers get accustomed to their lives at reception, everything changes.

As the cadre at the reception station watch the trainees cower with fear as they meet their new drill sergeants, they know their mission is complete.

498th flies into action at JRTC

By Robert Howe
498th Medical Company

Soldiers from the 498th Medical Company (Air Ambulance) recently deployed to the Joint Readiness Training Center at Fort Polk, La.

They served in support of Fort Drum, N.Y.'s, 1st Brigade, 10th Mountain Division. The 498th sent three aircrews and a company evacuation liaison Team in support of Rotation 96-1. The force consisted of three UH-60 Blackhawks and 21 highly motivated personnel, said Maj. Tracy Wyatt, commander, 498th Medical Co.

The aircrews flew more than 130 hours in a simulated combat environment in all modes of terrain flight. The majority of the flight time was flown utilizing night vision devices. The three crews flew more than 175 sorties and successfully evacuated over 475 casualties to higher-level medical facilities.

The aircrews successfully evaded all enemy air defense threats as well as actual engagements with Soviet-built aircrafts MI-8 Hip and MI-24 Hind.

The evacuation liaison team served as a medical evacuation liaison to the 10th Mtn. Div. The team, attached to the aviation task force, successfully coordinated the evacuation of more than 100 casualties using nonstandard evacuation assets provided by the 3rd Battalion, 25th Aviation Battalion, 1st Bde., 10th Mtn. Div.

Are you squared away?

Bayonet staff writer

Q. Where can soldiers go when they need help?

A. Army Community Services provides assistance to military personnel and their families — mostly new personnel on post.

The Army Emergency Relief provides assistance to:

- Active Army and their family members
- National Guard and Reserve on active duty in excess of 30 days and their family members
- Spouses and orphans of eligible Army personnel who died while on active duty.

The Red Cross is open to all.

Q. How can they help me?

A. ACS provides military families with a lending closet, food, clothes, day care, finance and marriage counseling, English classes for foreign spouse and programs for handicapped children.

AER provides financial assistance by either a loan without interest or a grant.

The Red Cross helps when a family member dies or is terminally ill; the Red Cross verifies the emergency situation and notifies your unit commander so that arrangements can be made for emergency leave.

Q. What Army regulations cover these programs?

A. ACS is under AR 608-1; AER is under AR 930-4 and the Red Cross is under AR 930-5.

All-day physical training rules at AG Fitness Training Unit

Helping soldiers pass Fitness Assessment test is goal of FTU

By Lisa M. Hibbert
Bayonet staff writer

When soldiers are sent to the Fitness Training Unit, 30th Adjutant General Battalion (Reception), they focus on physical training and more physical training.

Soldiers must be able to do 13 push-ups, 25 sit-ups and run one mile in nine minutes in order to go to an infantry training unit.

But when soldiers are sent to the FTU, the numbers change — and not for the better.

"In order to leave the FTU soldiers must be able to do 20 push-ups, 40 sit-ups and run one mile in eight minutes," said FTU commandant, Master Sgt. Timothy Runkle.

"It's actually in their best interest to pass the fitness assessment test the first time," Runkle said.

The workouts vary, said Sgt. 1st Class Brett Shafer, FTU drill sergeant.

"In the morning we may focus on the cardiovascular (running), so that evening we would do muscular skeletal (sit-ups and push-ups)," he said.

Each PT session may last up to two hours, except for the evening session.

Soldiers are also taught some basic diet and nutrition.

"We can't tell soldiers what not to eat, but we can present it to them in such a way that they can make up their own minds," Shafer said.

"We let them know that eating cheeseburgers will not help them get out of FTU but eating chicken will. And everybody wants to get out of FTU."

The average length of stay in FTU is eight and a half days, Runkle said, but this can range from one day to two weeks, depending on the person.

Often when soldiers arrive they have low morale, Runkle said. "They see everybody else but them get on the bus to go down range so we also do some self-esteem building," he said.

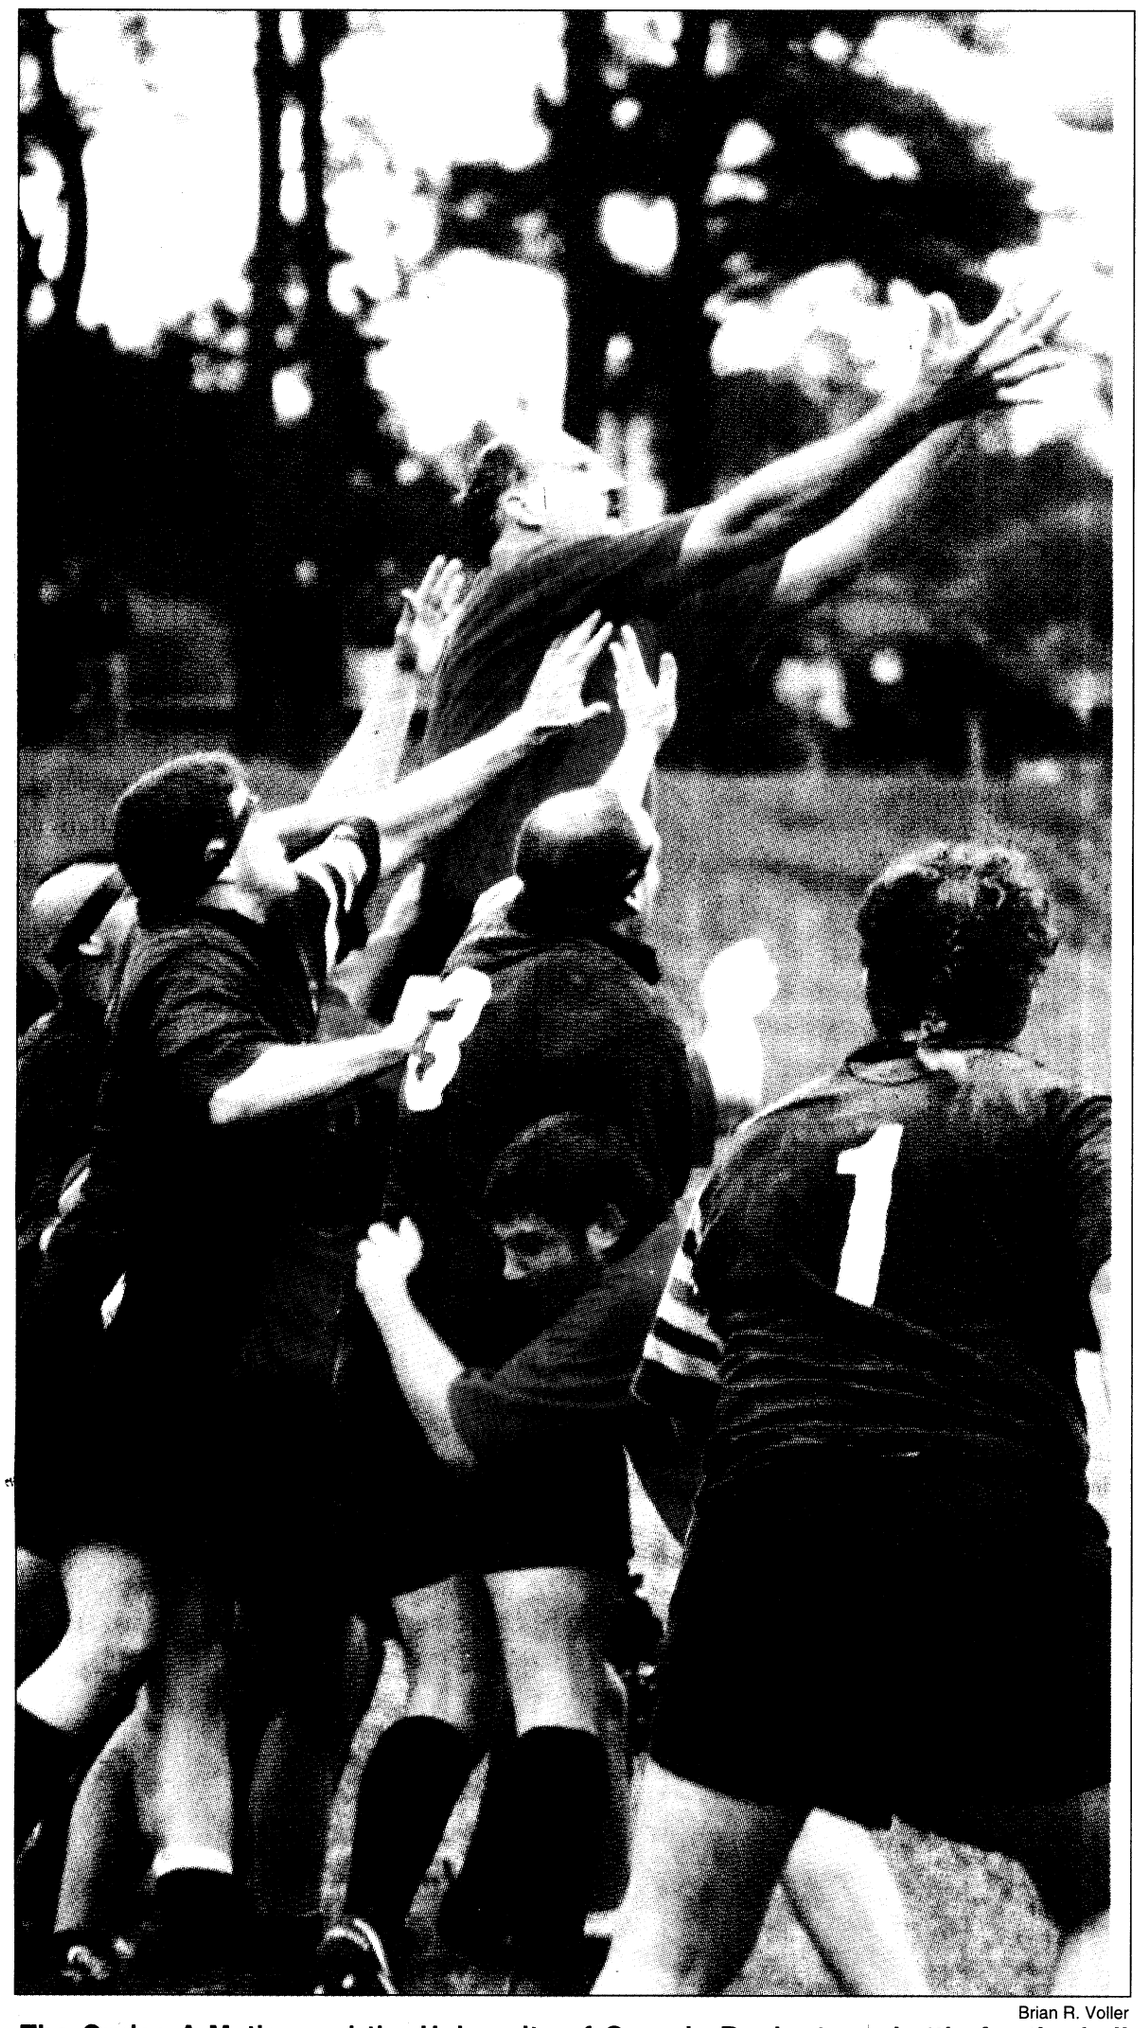
The FTU boasts a 92 percent success rate. Once these soldiers are able to pass the fitness assessment, they are then sent to a training unit.

The FTU does more than help soldiers get down range to a unit; their secondary mission is as a rehabilitation and training unit.

If a company commander recommends it, a soldier will be sent to the FTU.

The FTU has six drill sergeants, all of whom are Master Fitness qualified.

"I enjoy being here," Shafer said. "It's a more concentrated plan. You do PT, and I love doing PT."



"The best thing is that a lot of the privates who came through the FTU come back after they graduate from basic to tell the soldiers that it's not that bad, and they tell how they made it through the FTU," Runkle said.

"Everybody doesn't come back; but when they do, it's always on a volunteer basis — we never ask anybody to do it. And it always helps," Runkle said.

Cruise-A-Matics lose heartbreaker to UGA

Brian R. Voller

The Cruise-A-Matics and the University of Georgia Rugby team battle for the ball during the Georgia State Rugby Championship Sunday.

By Brian R. Voller
Bayonet staff writer

The players from the Cruise-A-Matics and the University of Georgia Rugby teams looked like bloodied warriors as UGA beat the Cruise-A-Matics 17-11 at the Georgia State Rugby Championship conducted at the Columbus College soccer field Sunday.

UGA delivered a heartbreaking loss to the Cruise-A-Matics with a closing-minutes, come-from-behind victory.

The tournament began with UGA squaring off against Florida State University in the first round of the tournament, which began Saturday. UGA made quick work of FSU, dominating them throughout the whole game and eventually defeating them 49-0.

The second game of the tournament put the Cruise-A-Matics on the field against the Golden Isle Rugby team. The Cruise-A-Matics completely annihilated Golden Isle 68-0.

On Sunday, Saturday's two victors stepped onto the field for what Cruise-A-Matics team captain Kevin Hyneman called "a little revenge."

"We've lost a couple of close games to these guys," Hyneman said. "The more we play, the more they start to become our arch-rivals. They beat us a while back, and we're here to get a little revenge."

The game began with both teams playing highly aggressive rugby both offensively and defensively. The first scoring of the game came when the Cruise-A-Matics' John Murphy converted on a penalty kick and put his team ahead 3-0.

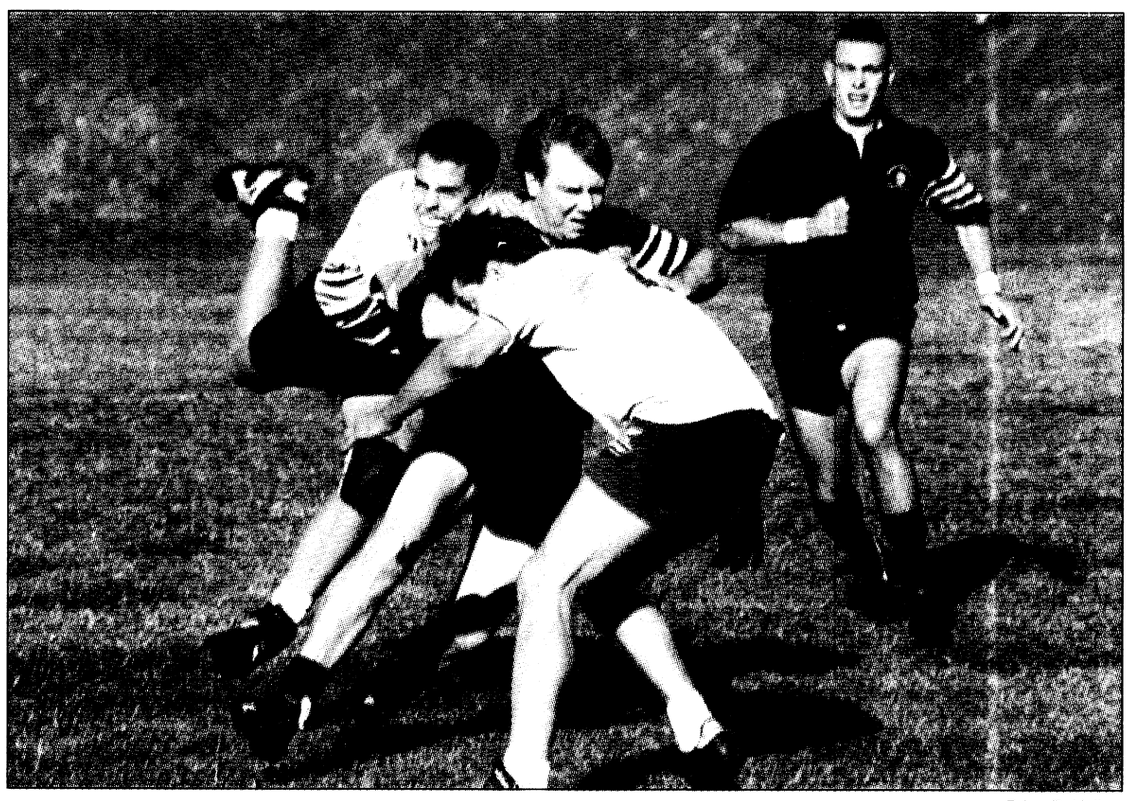
From there, the two teams pounded on each other, forcing the ball up one side of the field and back down the other, with neither team able to put the ball across the goal line. It wasn't until Bill Willis of the Cruise-A-Matics reached his arm into the far right corner of UGA's goal that either team scored a try.

In the second half of the game, UGA came to life offensively and started scoring some points of their own.

Andy Rothschild broke several tackles on his way to the first try scored by UGA. UGA converted on the extra point and closed the gap on the Cruise-A-Matics 8-7.

After some more rough play and several penalties against the Cruise-A-Matics, UGA scored on a penalty kick that put them on top 10-8.

But the Cruise-A-Matics weren't about to bow down to defeat, and they regained the lead on another Murphy penalty kick that put them on top 11-10.



With seven minutes left to play, Dorian Roach of UGA broke through the Cruise-A-Matics' defense and ran between the uprights of the goal post for the final score of the game and the win, 17-11. The try by Roach stripped the Cruise-A-Matics of their title of Georgia State Rugby Champions and put the trophy in the hands of the UGA.

"I think we just got outplayed today," Hyneman said. "We made a few too many mistakes, and we committed too many penalties toward the end of the game. Both teams played hard, and this tournament could have easily gone either way. We were two very evenly matched teams."

Rothschild said he felt the two teams were well-matched, as evidence by the final score.

"I'd like to congratulate the Cruise-A-Matics on a hard-fought game," Rothschild said. "We scored the winning points in the closing minutes of the game, and that proves how closely matched we were. They showed a lot of heart out there today, and I'd like to thank them for conducting such a great tournament."

The Cruise-A-Matics will get another chance to beat UGA when they face each other again Nov. 18 at the Columbus College soccer fields.

Boat purchases should be considered carefully

By Earl Bentz and Steve Price
Outboard Marine Corporation

With the fall and winter "boat show season" fast approaching, many anglers will be shopping for a new boat; but, warns former world champion bass angler Ken Cook, the decision of which boat model to buy should be considered carefully.

"I believe the single most important consideration, aside from finances, is answering the question of how you intend to use the boat," Cook said.

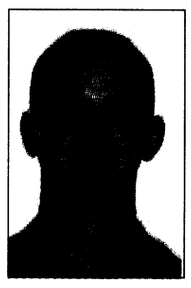
"There are a lot of different models available today, and it's important to make sure what you purchase suits your type of fishing."

For example, said Cook, if you fish local, regional or even national tournaments that are held on large impoundments, you'll be much safer as well as more comfortable in a longer 18- to 20-foot boat.

A larger boat also requires a more powerful engine to run it efficiently. If this is your first boat and you are not an experienced boat driver, it might be a better option to start with a smaller.

"If you don't fish competitively but instead spend your time on smaller lakes and streams," Cook said, "then a shorter boat, perhaps even an aluminum one instead of fiberglass, might be a better choice.

Cook said that it is also important to study the boat's interior design to make certain it suits your needs as an angler.



"Storage space is always critical," Cook said, "especially for rods and tackle boxes. Not only do you need enough room to take all your equipment with you on the water, you also need to have that same equipment readily available."

Other thoughts to consider are additional uses for the boat, such as skiing or pleasure boating with family members and friends. If this is the case, one of the combination fish and ski models might be a better choice than a pure fishing boat.

"I suggest anyone wanting to purchase a new boat this winter shop carefully and look at what's available in as many boat and outdoor shows as possible before making an actual purchase," Cook said.

Browns move could change face of NFL

By Brian R. Voller
Bayonet staff writer

The Cleveland Browns is a team whose name is synonymous with the National Football League. The Browns have been around since the birth of the NFL, and they've been in Cleveland the entire time.

Recently a tragedy has occurred in Cleveland, which could be disastrous for the city and the NFL. The Browns were courted by the city of Baltimore, which offered them a $200 million dollar stadium to come out and become the Baltimore Browns.

I have long been against teams changing cities to make an extra dollar. I was young when it happened, but I can still remember 12 years ago when the Baltimore Colts packed their bags and moved off to Indianapolis. I can remember when the Oakland Raiders became the Los Angeles Raiders and then went back to Oakland again.

The biggest problem I have with the Browns running off to Baltimore is the abandonment of the loyal fans who sit in the freezing cold to support their team. There is not a game played in Cleveland at which the Dog Pound isn't out in force to cheer on their team. So the Brown's can't make the big money that the Cowboys or the 49ers make, but they still draw loyal supporters that stick with their team through thick or thin.

As it stands right now, the Browns are just one of many teams that have already moved or are trying to move this year. The Raiders and the Rams both bid farewell to the Los Angeles scene. With the Raiders jetting back to their founding city of Oakland, and the Rams going to football-starved St. Louis which, since the Cardinals left to lose in Phoenix, has been drooling over every team that even thought about moving. The other team that has yet to move out of town but is seriously considering it is the Houston Oilers. The Oilers are negotiating to become the Nashville Oilers.

Unfortunately, it doesn't look good for Cleveland because the owner of the Browns, Art Modell, has as good as made up his mind. He basically wants a big, pretty stadium, with big, pretty seats and a big, pretty pay check that comes with the huge attendance a team move generates.

The only thing that might save Cleveland is the NFL rule that 20 of the 30 owners in the NFL must approve a team's move to a new city. But, this, too, seems unlikely since most owners care about one thing — money!

Massage sessions — Swedish and Russian massages will be given by Frank Rodriguez, certified massage therapist, at the Officers' Club.

Cost for half-hour sessions is $22 for members and $27 for nonmembers. For full-hour massages, the cost is $40 for members and $45 for nonmembers. To make appointments, call 687-0871 or 545-4162.

Georgia hunter safety course — All persons born on or after Jan. 1, 1961, must attend an approved Hunter Safety Course if they wish to hunt on Fort Benning or in the State of Georgia.

The Georgia Department of National Resources Hunter Safety Course will be conducted Tuesday and Wednesday in Infantry Hall, Classroom 2, from 6 to 9 p.m.

Students must attend both nights and are required to bring their Social Security number.

AUSA golf tourney — The Association of the United States Army fall annual golf tournament has been postponed until Dec. 1 at noon on the Follow Me Golf Course.

The tournament will be conducted in a four-ball scramble for 18 holes. If participants form their own teams they will not be eligible for team prizes, but they may compete for special prizes.

Registration fee for golf course members is $20; for non-members the fee will be $25.

For more information contact the Follow Me Pro Shop at 687-1940.

Roller hockey — The Columbus-Fort Benning Roller Hockey Club plays weekly.

All skill levels are welcome. For more information, call Jeff Monte at 563-6707 from 6 to 9 p.m.

CVCC basketball classic — The Chattahoochee Valley Community College's first home basketball game will kick off with the CVCC Classic tournament starting today at 6 p.m.

The first two teams to compete in the tournament will be Southern Union Community College and Chipola Community College.

The CVCC men's basketball team will play LaGrange College junior varsity at 8 p.m.

Admission charge is $3 per person, students are free with valid student identification card. For more information, call Doug Key at 291-4908.

Open fitness center — Fort Benning's Officers' Club Fitness Center has been designated as a community activity center, and associate membership is now open to the Fort Benning community regardless of rank, civilian and military.

The Fitness Center offers a wide variety of fitness classes for everyone, including step and low impact aerobics, martial arts and a personal trainer.

For more information contact the Fitness Center at 687-0871 or 545-4162.

Tennis tournament — There will be an Officers' Club tennis tournament Thursday to Nov. 19.

The tournament is open to all military, family members, corporate members and authorized Morale, Welfare and Recreation patrons.

The entry fee is $12 per player for singles or $16 per team for doubles, featuring men's singles and doubles, women's singles and doubles and mixed doubles.

For more information, call 687-0871 or 687-1840.

Youth coaches — The Youth Sports Program exists only because of volunteers who come forward season after season to be coaches, assistant coaches and team moms.

Youth Services is now recruiting coaches for the upcoming basketball season. Anyone interested should call 545-3070 or stop by the Youth Services Office, Building 1056.

Browns burn Raiders 34-0

By Brian R. Voller
Bayonet staff writer

The Youth Football League Browns took on the Raiders in the wet and cold football weather Saturday on Blue Field.

> "The guys went out there and played football the way we told them they should play football."
> — Tony Coffee
> Browns' head coach

The Browns' delivered a stiff defeat to the Raiders 34-0.

The first quarter started the Browns' domination with some strong play on both sides of the ball.

Late in the first quarter, Christopher Bell put the ball in the end zone, but the Browns failed to convert on the two-point conversion. The Browns took the early lead 6-0.

The second quarter contained a lot more action, but most of it came on the defensive side. The Browns' powerful defense caused a fumble near the end zone, and then a crunching behind-the-goal-line tackle resulted in a Browns safety. The safety put the Browns ahead 8-0 early in the second quarter.

In the third quarter, Browns quarterback Sven Coffee connected with Jarvis Scott to add to the Browns' lead over the Raiders 14-0.

Early in the fourth quarter, the Browns added to their score when Bell ran the ball into the end zone to put his team ahead of the Raiders 20-0 after the missed two-point conversion.

But the Raiders defense came back and tried to stay in the game by intercepting a pass. Unfortunately, it was too little too late as Shawn Nelson went wild on the offensive side of the ball scoring two more touchdowns to finish off the Raiders 34-0.

"We played a strong, well disciplined game," said Tony Coffee, head coach of the Browns. "The guys went out there and played football the way we told them they should play football.

"When I coach my first high school team, I hope I can have this kind of talent on my team."

Jigs can be effective in bass fishing

By Earl Bentz and Steve Price
Outboard Marine Corporation

Champion bass fisherman Larry Nixon doesn't know how many fish he's caught with a jig during his career, but he does know the lure has played a major role in his tournament success.

Jigs are so important to him, in fact, that they're among the first lures he packs when he leaves for competition.

"This time of year, jigs are especially effective because you can fish them either shallow or deep, depending on where you find the bass," Nixon said. "In some parts of the country, the bass may be shallow in the backs of the creeks, while in other areas the bass may be in the deeper channels.

"A jig will work just fine in either place."

Nixon said he believes presenting the lure properly is one of the keys to catching bass with a jig. In clear water, or when bass are fairly active in warmer water, he makes the lure rise and fall quickly by moving his rod tip.

"This is really important, especially is you're fishing a lake that receives heavy pressure," he said. "You want the jig to look like it's fleeing from a bass. You don't want the fish to get a good look at it so you keep it moving."

Just the opposite is true when bass are sluggish in colder water, Nixon said. Because bass won't chase a lure very far then, the presentation must be slower so it remains close to the bass longer.

"I like to use a pork trailer with long, swimming legs that add a lot of action to the lure," Nixon said. "By itself, a jig doesn't have any real action. Even when you hop it or swim it, a jig is just an object moving through the water.

"By adding a good pork trailer, you immediately turn a jig into something that looks more alive. Not only have you added action, you have also added bulk so the lure is larger. That's one reason jigs are such good big bass lures."

In the autumn and early winter months, Nixon will often concentrate his jig fishing around vegetation if he can find it. Bass frequently remain near thick weeds and grasses throughout much of the winter if it is available.

"If the vegetation is really thick, like hydrilla or milfoil," he said, "then I'll use a heavier three-fourths or one-ounce jig so it can fall through the grass into the open water below. I'll also use a good pork trailer, not only to provide action but also to help slow the jig's fall.

"In colder water, a slow falling lure generally works best, and one way to slow a heavy jig is by using a bulky pork trailer. I'll also use heavy line in the vegetation, and this will aid in slowing the lure's fall."

By Frank A. Vila
Legal Assistance Division

The Legal Assistance Division sees a number of clients each week who have questions or problems concerning information reported by credit bureaus.

A credit bureau, or credit reporting agency, is a business which regularly engages in the practice of assembling or evaluating credit information on persons for the purpose of furnishing such information to third parties. Although some small credit bureaus get and give information only on a local basis, for the most part, credit bureaus rely on information assembled by one of three major national credit databases. They are Equifax, TransUnion and TRW.

The credit bureau in Columbus gets its information from Equifax; as a result, a report obtained from the credit bureau here may not contain the same information that would appear in a report from TRW or TransUnion. If you wanted to see what information might be reported on you to potentially anyone in the world, you would need to obtain copies of reports from all three databases.

It is a good idea to obtain a copy of your credit bureau report every few years. Occasionally, you will find that information being reported is inaccurate or outdated. Sometimes the inaccurate or outdated information may be of a nature that would prevent you from obtaining credit. Given that it takes a while to get these errors corrected, it's best to try to start correction measures early.

Under federal law, if you believe that your credit bureau report contains inaccurate information, you have the right to do the following:

• You may, in writing, advise the credit bureau of the dispute. If you do so, it is best to quote the entire entry off the report which contains disputed information, and then identify the specific information in the entry which you dispute. The credit bureau must then, within a reasonable time, investigate the disputed information. This means the bureau must contact the creditor reporting the information. If the creditor cannot verify the information or informs the bureau that the information is incorrect, the bureau must delete the inaccurate information. If the creditor stands by its information, the bureau has no choice but to continue to report the information you dispute. The dispute is then between you and the creditor.

• You may also request the bureau put a statement of dispute in your report regarding what you believe to be inaccurate information. The statement may be up to 100 words in length. Once in place, anyone who requests a copy of your credit report will also receive a copy of the dispute statement.

Certain information, because of its age, is considered under federal law to be obsolete and should therefore not be a part of your credit bureau report. For the most part, adverse or bad information is considered obsolete after seven years; however, records of bankruptcy filings may be carried for up to 10 years. The seven- and 10-year limits do not apply where a credit report is to be used in connection with a credit transaction involving $50,000 or more (most mortgage applications), an application for life insurance for $50,000 or more or an employment application where the annual salary is expected to involve $20,000 or more.

Credit information is likely to be involved in many aspects of life other than just applications for car loans or credit cards. It is important that these reports be accurate and up-to-date, and, ultimately, you must ensure your credit reputation is being reported correctly.

You can obtain the addresses of the major credit databases, as well as advice and assistance regarding these problems, at the Legal Assistance Division. Call to make an appointment to meet with an attorney. The telephone number is 545-3281.

HIGH BLOOD PRESSURE

Understanding helps people cope with hypertension

By Victor Anderson
Martin Army Community Hospital

If someone were to ask you, "What is blood pressure?" what would be your response? If you could not answer this question correctly, you would not be alone.

When you stand on your head, how does blood get to your feet? Answer: blood pressure. When you stand on your feet, why isn't your brain deprived of its blood supply? Same answer, blood pressure. Water can't flow up hill, and neither can blood. It takes pressure to force water upward, and a pump is required. Similarly, it takes pressure to force blood to all parts of the body — blood pressure — and this pressure is created by a blood pump, your heart.

Your heart's job is to pump blood through a network of blood vessels that make up your circulation. It expands as it fills up with blood, and then it contracts and forces the blood out through blood vessels that are called arteries.

The purpose of blood pressure is to ensure that all parts of your body receive an adequate supply of blood at all times, whatever your posture or body motion.

Even when your heart is at rest while it fills with blood, pressure is maintained in the circulatory system by the arteries. The elastic tension in the walls of the arteries causes them to press on the blood. This pressure of the walls of the arteries pushing on the blood is the other component of blood pressure. So, the top number of a blood pressure reading is the blood being forced through the arteries; and the bottom number is the pressure of the elastic tension in the arteries pressing on the blood. They are referred to as the systolic and the diastolic readings.

The best blood pressure is a low blood pressure, the lowest possible pressure to force blood to all parts of your body. Approximately 50 million people in the United States either have elevated blood pressure or take antihypertensive medication. Many other persons have risk factors predisposing them to hypertension. Some factors include: heredity, obesity, lack of exercise and poor diet habits, to include excessive fat and cholesterol intake.

People who fall into the following categories should be treated:

• Any person 40 years or younger who has a systolic blood pressure of 140 or greater or a diastolic blood pressure of 90 or greater has high blood pressure and should be treated.

• Any person older than 40 who has a systolic blood pressure of 160 or higher or a diastolic of 95 or higher has high blood pressure and should be treated.

• Any person older than 40 who has a systolic between 140-159 or diastolic between 90-94 is in a borderline area. In these individuals other risk factors should be considered before being treated with medication.

Lifestyle and diet are strongly implicated as the leading causes of high blood pressure. In countries where high blood pressure is prevalent, blood cholesterol and blood fats are high, while in countries where high blood pressure is rare, blood cholesterol and blood fat levels are low.

If you need to be treated for high blood pressure, it is important you follow the treatment regime prescribed by your physician. Many different types of medication on the market work in a variety of ways. Your doctor will want to choose a medicine that will attack the basic cause of your high blood pressure.

Prevention is perhaps the best treatment for high blood pressure. However, many individuals who have high blood pressure are reluctant to take any blood pressure medicine, because they fear they will have to take it for the rest of their lives.

They fear becoming addicted to the medication and forfeit the possibility of trying to control blood pressure by salt restriction and weight loss alone at some future time. This is both false and dangerous thinking. Blood pressure medicines are not habit-forming.

The community health nurse is offering blood pressure screening at the Post Exchange at the Main Mall the last Friday of each month from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m.

For more information, call Community Health Nursing at 545-4041 or 545-4603.

MILLIONS OF BUYERS

"While a former rental car obviously lacks the cachet of a factory-fresh automobile, millions of buyers are concluding that program cars are good buys none-the-less. They typically come loaded with desirable options like air conditioning, cruise control and stereo radios. Far from being abused in rental service, most are washed every few days an scrupulously maintained."

MONEY MAGAZINE

"Rental companies don't mark up prices as much as do used car dealers. Rental car companies charge from $400 to $1,500 less than you pay for the same auto-mobile on a dealer lot; savings can amount to up to 20%."

GOOD HOUSEKEEPING

"Detroit is trying to put the brakes on sales of low-mileage, nearly new cars from rental fleets. Consumers have been snapping up the cars as bargain-priced alternatives to expensive new models."

LIGHTS! CAMERA! ACTION!

Post serves as site for ads

Commercials to feature tanks, airborne, more

By Lori Egan
Bayonet staff writer

"Lights! Camera! Action!" was heard at Fort Benning recently when the U.S. Army Recruiting Command came here to film three recruiting commercials.

Fort Benning was chosen to be the site of the commercials because of all the assets here, said Capt. Guy Saults, project officer, U.S. Army Recruiting Command.

"When we looked at what we needed for the commercials, parachutes, armor, mechanized infantry and rangers doing reconnaissance, we realized there was only one place to film the commercials — Fort Benning," Saults said.

"The entire post has been involved in a three-and-a-half-week shoot; we've used assets from all over the installation, including a National Guard Blackhawk helicopter, and the Air Force has been providing support for filming the commercials," Saults said.

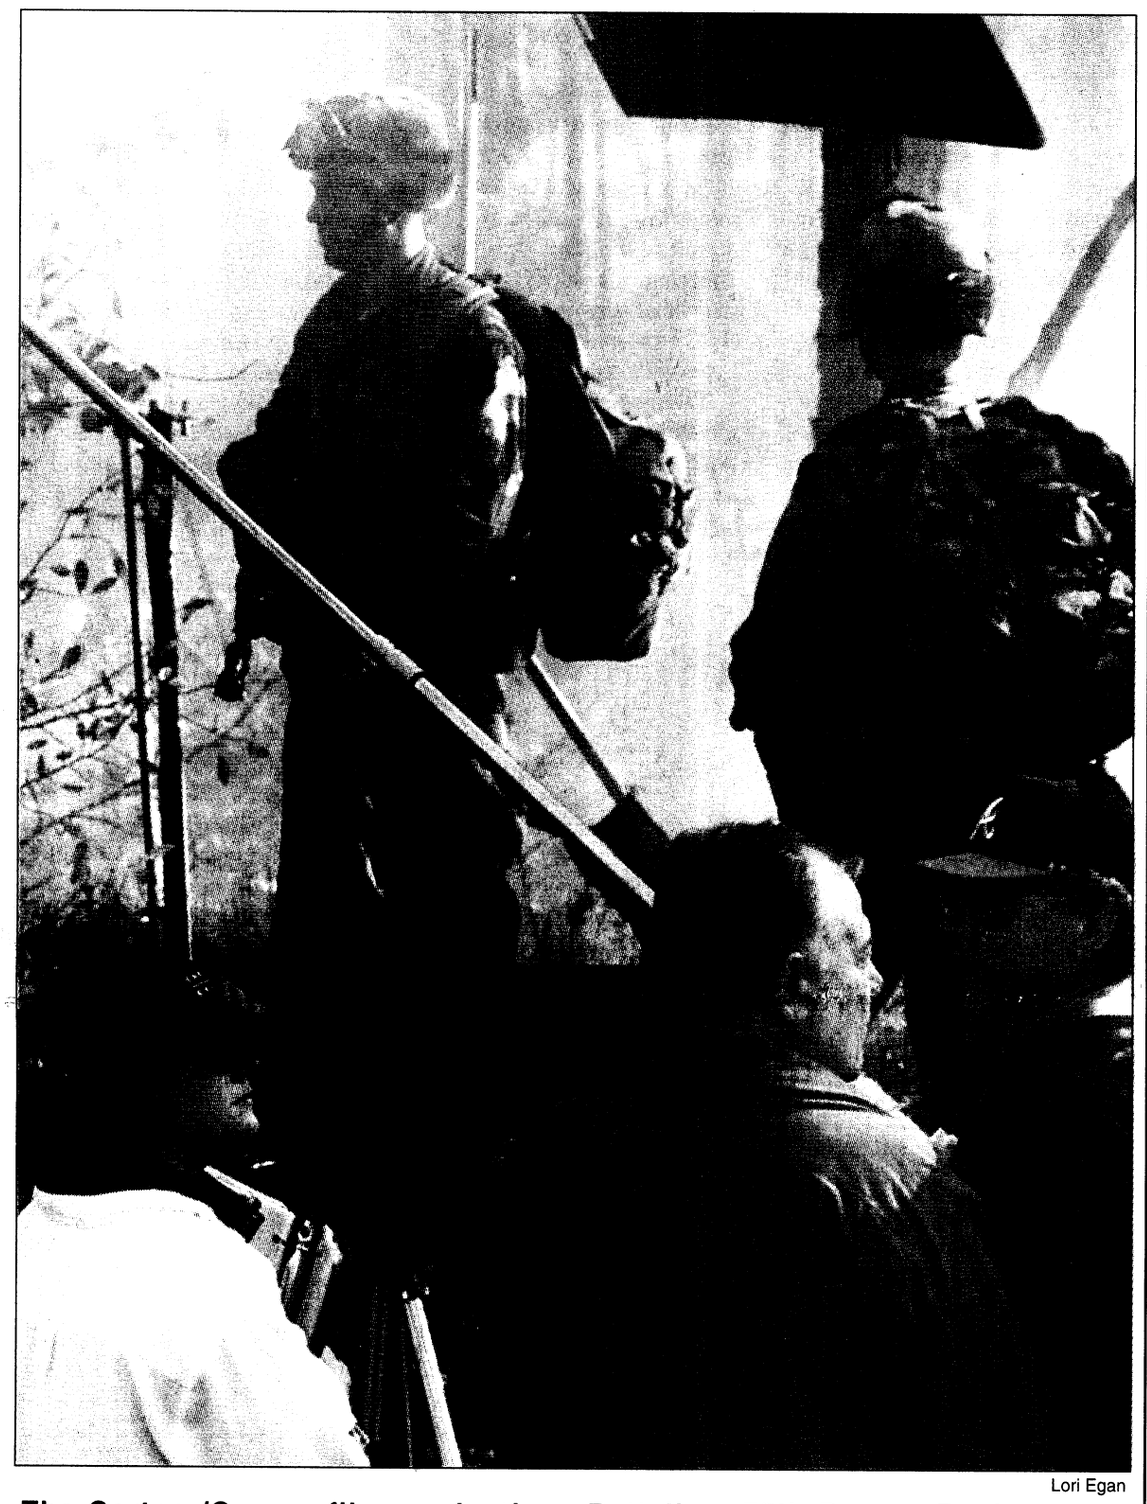
The ad campaign is called "Reasons" and features three separate story lines and a compilation of the three commercials called "Anthem," said Capt. Max Muramoto, project officer, U.S. Army Recruiting Command.

"Tanker" is about a tank driver. The commercial will show the tank driver driving across rough terrain and then flashbacks of key events in his past, reasons why he joined the Army.

"Tanker," features Sgt. Leonard Peterson, from Company C, 2 Battalion, 69th Armor Regiment, 3rd Brigade, 24th Infantry Division (Mechanized).

The "Paratrooper" storyline is about a young woman who joined the Army to become airborne. The commercial will show Cpl. Patricia Burdette, Co. E, 1st Bn. (Airborne), 507th Infantry, 11th Infantry Regt., jumping from a C-130. Flashbacks of reasons why she joined the Army will be featured.

"Recon" features Spc. Frank Sharp, Co. C, 3rd Bn., 75th Ranger Regt. The storyline is about rangers on a reconnaissance mission. During the mission, flashbacks of the ranger's life will illustrate why he joined the Army.



The last of the four commercials is "Anthem." This is a "tug-at-the heart-strings" piece that will use parts from previously shot footage and footage shot while filming here and in Columbus, Muramoto said.

Three of the four spots focus on the individual soldier, said Jennifer McCullen, associate producer for Young & Rubicam.

"We want to show what brought them to the Army and the reasons they are successful soldiers," McCullen said.

"What we want to do with these commercials is represent the Army to the people who we want to become the next privates and

Furlough sends thousands home

USAIC Public Affairs Office

About two-thirds of Fort Benning's 4,000 member civilian work force were still on furlough at press time. Civilians who were needed to support training, the tactical units and whose positions involved health and safety were deemed "essential" and not furloughed.

No soldiers were furloughed.

Civilian workers were furloughed when Congress and the President could not reach an agreement for passing the federal budget or a Continuing Resolution Authority.

At Fort Benning, the Commissary will be open, and Martin Army Community Hospital will continue to conduct business.

"All patients who become ill or injured should come to the hospital or call for an appointment as normal," said Col. Gerald M. Cross, acting hospital commander.

"All appointments for active duty soldiers will continue as scheduled. We will make every effort to continue meeting the health care needs of our patients," he said.

Federal workers have been sent home four times since 1981 when Congress and the President couldn't agree on funding.

Only one shutdown lasted more than a day, and it fell on a holiday weekend. That was the most recent shutdown, occurring in October 1990, when the Federal government was shut down during the three-day Columbus Day weekend.

Traditionally Congress has awarded furloughed workers back pay for time missed through no fault of their own.

Georgia Department of Labor representatives will be at the national guard armory, Victory Drive, today from 8 a.m. to 4:40 p.m to assist furloughed employees with filing unemployment claims.

Employees desiring to file for unemployment compensation should provide as much proof as possible to verify wages earned during the period of July 1, 1994, to June 30, 1995. Earning and leave statements will suffice as proof of wages.

Georgia Department of Labor representatives will be at the National Guard Armory, Victory Drive, Columbus, from 8 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. today to assist furloughed employees with filing unemployment claims.

Forms for filing were included with furlough notices.

School of Americas named 'national asset'

By Judith Ginder
School of the Americas

A recently completed independent study, requested by the U.S. Army Training and Doctrine Command on the School of the Americas, has found that the school is "a national asset" for its work supporting democracy in Latin America.

"This study reaffirms that the School of the Americas is strategically important to the United States and is doing everything possible to promote human rights and democratic values in Latin America," said Rep. Sanford Bishop in a statement given after the study was released earlier this month.

"Critics who accuse the school of promoting human rights abuses and dictatorial government have been proved dead wrong," Bishop said. "Their attacks are actually hurting the cause of democracy they claim to represent."

The study concludes that "there is no link between SOA instruction or training and decisions made by individual Latin American military personnel to commit human rights atrocities."

Spc. Michael Williams, 598th Maintenance Company, performs a traditional pow-wow dance at the Native American luncheon Nov. 9.

EO hosts Native American luncheon

By Lisa M. Hibbert
Bayonet staff writer

The Fort Benning Equal Opportunity Office hosted a Native American luncheon at the Main NCO Club Nov. 9.

The diners were welcomed by Sgt. 1st Class Beverly Riley, noncommissioned officer in charge, EO office, and then treated to a performance by Spc. Michael Williams, 598th Maintenance Company.

Williams, of the Paiute ethnic group, demonstrated a traditional pow-wow style dance.

Col. Gregory C. Camp, U.S. Army Infantry Center chief of staff, also gave welcoming remarks. He spoke on behalf of Maj. Gen. John W. Hendrix, post commanding general, and recognized the many achievements of Native Americans in this country, particularly those of Cpl. Mitchell Red Cloud Jr., (whom Red Cloud Range is named after), a medal of honor recipient of the Korean War.

Camp introduced the guest speaker, Russell Begaye, director of Languages and Church Division of the Home Mission Board in Atlanta and formerly a research assistant and an Indian law and history instructor at the University of California at Los Angeles.

Begaye, a Navajo Native American, spoke about the changing years and culture and the various epochs in the history of Native Americans.

"You can't discover anything when someone else proceeds you there," Begaye said. "By saying that the Spanish discovered America, that makes the Indian non-human."

In fact, Native Americas were considered non-human for a while, Begaye said.

"Ben Franklin said that Indians were one-fourth human," Begaye said. "We then progressed to being one-half and then three-fourths. It was not until 1778 that Native Americans were considered to be fully human."

Begaye spoke of the many treaties that had been signed by the U.S. government and the Native Americans.

"Even though many treaties had been signed, many of them were not signed into law by Congress or ratified by the president, so they were not binding," Begaye said.

Today's living conditions for Native Americans have not improved much, Begaye said. The population has declined, land rations have decreased, and many people are living below the poverty level.

"Native Americans' total land holdings used to be 130 million acres of land," Begaye said. "By 1920, the total had dropped to 47 million acres."

The government has established commissions to improve conditions for Native Americans, he said.

In his closing, Begaye spoke of the many Native American doctors and lawyers who are contributing to society and trying to make their communities better.

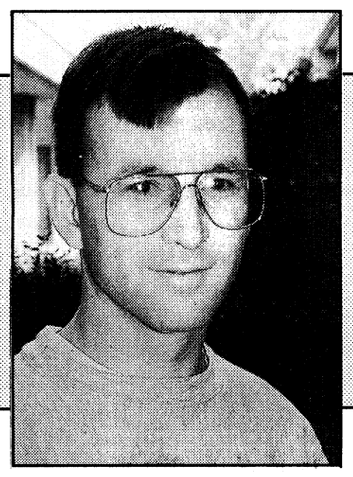
VARIOUS VOICES



What do you think of the programs the Army Career and Alumni Program offers?

Pfc. Jesse Torres, Battery B, 4th Battalion, 41st Field Artillery Regiment — "It's a fiddle-daddle program. I know a sergeant who is getting out right now, he said it is a program that says the Army helps you to say it helps you."

Pfc. Rogelio J. Saenz, Battery B, 4th Battalion, 41st Field Artillery Regiment — "It sounds like a good program if it can help you get situated after you get out of the military."

Maj. Roy Funkhouser, 317th Engineer Company — "It's a good program with the downsizing putting the soldier back into the civilian work force. It really helps the transition."

Patricia Bush, family member— "I'm not sure exactly what ACAP offers, but anything the military can offer to help transition must help."

Sgt. 1st Class Marta Walker, School of the Americas— "I think it's a good program if it's used right; but., a lot of soldiers abuse it. Some soldiers use ACAP for months on end."

Tuesday Mucker, family member — "I think the programs are excellent. Helping soldiers find jobs after the military is a good idea."

ACAP offers valuable assistance

Army Career and Alumni Program

Army Career & Alumni Program
Operation Transition
"SHOWING WE CARE"
Department of Defense
Fort Benning, Ga.

Many soldiers and civilians who visit the Army Career and Alumni Program want to separate from the military as quickly and painlessly as possible. Frequently we are concerned that many people, in haste, may overlook some of the many services available at ACAP. The Fort Benning ACAP offers more forms of assistance than any other ACAP office in the world. After all, we are the "World Class Leader" in customer service — it simply does not get any better.

ACAP has two functions. First, the program serves as the focal point to provide assistance about transitioning from the Army, especially with any technical questions, such as inquiries about veterans benefits. Answers to complex questions are normally available from subject matter experts, usually only a few steps away. The second primary service is to provide up-to-date superior career search training and counseling assistance. Most major Army installations provide similar services.

During the last three years, we have asked more than 13,500 soldiers for their opinion on what additional ACAP services are needed for soldiers leaving the Army. The result of these surveys indicated that 45 percent feel they have marketable skills and should proceed directly with their career search.

Higher education is also vital to everyone's success in today's job search — our surveys indicate that 25 percent (one out of every four soldiers) leaving the Army plan to pursue higher educational training. Thirty one percent of the soldiers stated that they need additional skills or want to change career fields when they leave the Army.

Taking surveys is easy ... doing something about it is the hard part. We have, as a major priority, the task of obtaining opportunities for higher education and technical training. We have identified several scholarship opportunities, including those in education, the environmental sciences and natural resources management.

Our greatest challenge has been to establish a Skill Development Program to meet the needs of the soldiers. Approximately two years ago, with the assistance of our partner, the Georgia Department of Labor, ACAP jointly established a workable career retraining program for soldiers. This program was designed to provide soldiers with opportunities for quick skill certifications (usually within one to three months training) in career fields with above-average job placement opportunities.

Many soldiers, in particular those leaving involuntarily, may be eligible for special grants to pay for new career skills training. For those not eligible for a grant, alternative financing, such as Veterans Affairs educational benefits, other grants and special loans, is often available. During the last two years, more than 1,000 people have benefited from the program. About 600 of these soldiers have received grants or special price discounts for their training. Most importantly, about 96 percent of those trained under the program have been placed in careers.

A recent significant change that involves education and the grants program is that funds may be available to pay for up to three years of college courses or technical school education. This is a major expansion to the program. To take advantage of this benefit, every soldier must start planning his or her transition at the earliest possible date. If you are being, or think you may be, separated involuntarily under honorable conditions, you may need to discuss your eligibility for one of these grants. We encourage you to contact your ACAP counselor for an appointment.

Services and opportunities available at ACAP are constantly being changed and improved. Make sure you do not overlook any opportunity. Stay in touch with The Bayonet and your ACAP counselor for new benefits open to you and your family.

For information about an ACAP appointment, call your unit personnel services non-commissioned officer or call ACAP at 545-4892 or 545-7009.

Depression can spell serious dangers for patients

By Lt. Col. Joaquin F. Oronoz
Occupational and Environmental Medicine Division

Depression is the most common psychiatric disorder and the most important serious mood disorder seen in general medical practice. The prevalence of population is about 5 percent. However, up to 30 percent of people may develop depression at some point during their lifetimes.

commentary

Independent of cultural background, the risk of moderate to severe depression is approximately twice as high in women as in men. The incidence of depression is greater among persons who are young, single, divorced, separated, seriously ill or have a family history of depression.

It is also more common among those suffering the recent deaths of loved ones. About half of those who suffer from major depression will develop recurrent episodes, and about 15 percent of those with recurrent depression commit suicide.

People with mood disorders also have a higher mortality rate than the general population (1 1/2 times as many deaths as would otherwise be expected) because of a higher incidence of accidents and illnesses.

Not all depressed patients are suicidal, but all should be evaluated for their potential to commit suicide. Suicide ranks ninth among all causes of death in the United States, occurring at a yearly rate of 10 to 12 suicides per 100,000 population.

Among the general population, one in 10 persons has thoughts of suicide that could be labeled as serious. For every completed suicide, there are 10 to 40 attempts.

Several studies indicate that many persons who attempt suicide are under the care of a physician. Approximately half of those who commit suicide have seen a primary care physician not long before the suicide, while less than one-third have consulted a psychiatrist.

At least two-thirds of persons who commit suicide have communicated their suicidal intentions directly or indirectly to a physician, friend or family member distinguished from normal sadness and grief by the severity, pervasiveness and duration of the mood disturbance and by the presence of certain abnormalities and symptoms, such as:

- Sleep disturbance (most often insomnia with early-morning awakening).
- Change in appetite (usually anorexia).
- Fatigue or decreased energy.
- Psychomotor agitation or retardation (observable by others, not merely subjective feeling of restlessness or slowing down).
- Daily variation in mood (typically worst in morning).
- Markedly diminished interest or pleasure in all or almost all activities most of the day (almost invariably includes loss of enjoyment for usual activities, such as eating, work, sex, hobbies or time with family and friends).
- Diminished ability to think, difficulty concentrating and poor memory.
- Feeling of worthlessness or excessive and inappropriate guilt (not merely self-reproach or guilt about being sick all the time).
- Recurring thoughts of death (not just fear of dying) or suicidal thoughts.

Occasional mood disorders are common, but people who demonstrate the symptoms above in a persistent or recurrent way should be encouraged to seek professional help.

dial 545 boss

Dial 545-BOSS is the commander's action line for soldiers, family members and civilians to call when they have problems or complaints that can't be resolved elsewhere.

While it is not a substitute for the chain of command or for agencies established to provide assistance, the line offers another means of communication between Fort Benning's community and commanders.

The Bayonet features some of the calls that may benefit other members of the Fort Benning community.

Call: I want to know when new equipment will be placed on the Custer Terrace playground. The playgrounds in other housing areas have already gotten new equipment. The equipment is rusted and needs replacing.

Response: In February 1995, a survey of playground equipment was conducted. Each community playground was rated on the amount and condition of existing playground equipment. The rating was performed by the Installation Community Life Office, Community Life noncommissioned officers in charge and Community Mayors. The overall condition of the Custer Terrace Playground equipment and the amount of existing pieces of equipment did not justify installation of additional equipment.

Retired Col. Robert B. Nett (left), World War I veteran Roland C. Caley and Capt. Steve Russell of Fort Benning participated in Saturday's Veterans Day ceremony.

Vets ceremony continues despite inclement weather

By Richard Brill
Special to The Bayonet©

Wind and rain did not stop Columbus and Fort Benning from honoring the courage and patriotism of U.S. veterans of all wars Saturday at the Columbus Government Center's Plaza West.

Inclement weather moved the ceremony from the Eternal Flame indoors but did not dampen the 10:30 a.m. ceremony, which included the ringing of a bell for peace for one minute beginning at 11 a.m.

The bell ringing signified both the signing of the peace treaty ending World War I on the 11th day of the 11th month on the 11th hour and the end of the 50th anniversary commemoration of World War II.

The ceremony, which was sponsored by the Chattahoochee Valley Veterans Council, included remarks from Columbus Mayor Pro Tem A.J. McClung, Rep. Sanford Bishop and retired Col. Robert B. Nett, Medal of Honor recipient for his bravery in World War II.

McClung attributed the freedoms Americans enjoy today to the sacrifice of U.S. veterans.

"We in this great and loyal city of Columbus, Ga., appreciate our heritage," McClung said. "Witness the naming of Veterans Parkway and the building of the Eternal Flame memorial. This is the day, this is the time to say thank you, to offer up a prayer of gratitude to those who have served, to those who have fought and especially to those who have died."

Nett thanked the Columbus government and police, sheriff and fire departments for their past support of U.S. veterans.

"I also thank the commanding general at Fort Benning, who so courageously supports all of the activities of veterans in the greater Columbus area, and to the past commanders over the years," Nett said.

"Let us remember the brave American veterans who carried the cause of liberty in wars and conflicts all around the world," he said. "Their bravery, sacrifice, courage and selfless patriotism defended not only the American way of life but brought democracy, freedom and liberty to billions of people in nations far and near. We salute all proud American veterans this Veterans Day regardless of the time or place they served. Their profound love of country and immense personal sacrifice enable all of us to continue to enjoy freedom and liberty each day of our lives."

Capt. Steve Russell, on behalf of Fort Benning and Commanding General Maj. Gen. John W. Hendrix, presented a 75th anniversary commemoration medal to World War I veteran Roland C. Caley.

Caley, who will be 99 years old in December, served in the U.S. Army balloon corps from March 1918 to June 1919.

The ceremony concluded with the presentation of the Purple Heart wreath and the playing of taps by a member of the Columbus Police Department.

SOA: Receives validation

the school suits the present and future needs of the Army. The study said that SOA supports "important short-term and long-term U.S. interests in Latin America."

It recommended the school stay at its Fort Benning location, but that a transfer of command take place from TRADOC to the U.S. Southern Command because of SOUTHCOM's interest in Latin America.

"The study proved once and for all that SOA is a critically important national asset," Bishop said.

He also said that, although opposition to the school is likely to continue, the report discredits those who claim the school isn't living up to its commitment to democracy and peace in the region.

"Assisting democracy and peace in Latin American countries through training and instruction is a task that we take very seriously," said Col. Roy R. Trumble, SOA commandant .

"The results of the study come as no surprise to us," Trumble continued. "We know that the school is on the cutting edge of the training and doctrine of sustaining democracy."

Hospital's lab earns accreditation

Martin Army Community Hospital

Martin Army Community Hospital's Department of Pathology has been granted renewal of accreditation by the American Association of Blood Banks.

Accreditation follows an on-site inspection by specially trained representatives of the association and establishes that the level of medical, technical and administrative performance within the facility meets or exceeds the standards set by the association.

"The AABB's inspection and accreditation procedures are voluntary," said Dr. William F. Winecoff III, blood bank director. The hospital's Department of Pathology has sought accreditation because this program assists facilities around the country in achieving excellence by promoting a level of professional and medical expertise that contributes to quality performance."

The minimum requirements for accreditation of blood banks and transfusion services are based primarily on the standards for blood banks and transfusion services.

Nick Hoge Award set

Military personnel and civilian employees of the Department of the Army, including local nationals and nonappropriated fund employees, are encouraged to submit professional essays for consideration for the 1995 Nick Hoge Award for Professional Development.

This essay competition provides the opportunity for Army personnel to present their ideas through thoroughly researched, documented and creative papers. The papers are to consider the existing quality, effectiveness or efficiency of civilian Human Resource Management and related professional disciplines (such as personnel psychology) and should address concepts and methodologies that will enhance the conduct of civilian human resource management business. Co-authors and group authors are permitted. Nominations must be submitted to the Management-Employee Relations Division, Directorate of Civilian Personnel in an original and eight copies with a separate cover page, no later than Jan. 6.

For more information call Mae Horsey at 545-4483.

WO recruiting team to visit post

A recruiting team from the U.S. Army Recruiting Command will visit Fort Benning Nov. 27 through Dec. 1.

The team will conduct briefings to solicit soldiers to apply for the Warrant Officer Program. Each briefing will inform soldiers about the career fields available, including the Warrant Officer Flight Program.

All soldiers interested in the flight program, regardless of military occupational specialty and rank, can attend one of the scheduled briefings.

Vacancies exist in the following warrant officer specialities: Special Forces career management field 18; criminal investigation, MOS 95D; technical supply, MOS 92A; and food service, MOS 94B/92G.

The briefings will be Nov. 28 to Nov. 30 at 9:30 a.m. and 1:30 p.m., in Infantry Hall, Classroom 7.

Soldiers unable to attend these briefings can receive information on the Warrant Officer Program from the Military Personnel Center.

Retreat ceremony Nov. 30

The commanding general's monthly retreat ceremony will be Nov. 30 at 4 p.m. on York Field in front of Infantry Hall, Building 4.

For more information, call Capt. Vince Ball at 545-3816.

VA adds cancers to list of radiation-caused diseases

Department of Veterans Affairs

The Department of Veterans Affairs has amended its regulations adding rectal cancer and lymphomas other than Hodgkin's disease to the list of diseases that may be considered for disability compensation due to ionizing radiation exposure.

Under the regulation, which is used to determine if a disease resulted from in-service radiation exposure, VA must consider the condition the veteran claims, the radiation dose a veteran received and the time elapsed between exposure and the onset of the disease.

Veterans do not have to prove that ionizing radiation may have caused any of the listed diseases.

Diseases already recognized as radiogenic under the regulation include all forms of leukemia, except chronic lymphatic (lymphocytic) leukemia; multiple myeloma; posterior subcapsular cataracts; nonmalignant thyroid nodular disease; parathyroid adenoma; tumors of the brain and central nervous system; and cancer of the thyroid, breast, lung, bone, liver, skin, esophagus, stomach, colon, pancreas, kidney, urinary bladder, salivary gland and ovaries.

The list is not exclusive. In February, VA revised the regulation so that it will consider veterans' claims based on diseases other than those listed in the regulation, provided the claimant presents scientific or medical evidence showing the claimed condition may be caused by radiation exposure.

VA moved to add rectal cancer and lymphomas other than Hodgkin's disease to the list on the advice of the Veterans Advisory Committee on Environmental Hazards, a committee of outside experts established by Congress to evaluate scientific and medical studies and to advise VA on radiation-related compensation issues.

Veterans or their survivors who wish to file claims can contact the nearest VA regional office at (800) 827-1000 for information and assistance.

COMMERCIAL: Features Fort Benning

specialists in today's Army," Saults said.

The cost of the four commercials is $2.4 million.

"We hired an advertising agency, Young & Rubicam, to design the ad campaign; and they, in turn, hired a film production company, Gartner/Grasso, to put our ideas on film," Saults said.

The commercials also feature Columbus residents and Fort Benning soldiers as extras.

Making the commercial has been an interesting experience, said Sgt. James E. Laszczak, Company A, 3rd Bn., 75th Ranger Regt.

"It amazes me how much stuff goes on behind the scenes to make a commercial," Laszczak said.

"A lot of Army commercials aren't true to life," said Spc. Christopher D. Hill, Company A, 3rd Bn., 75th Ranger Regt., "but (for this commercial) they are using soldiers to be soldiers, doing what soldiers actually do. Using soldiers keeps the commercial more realistic."

"They make it look really high speed; they make us look good," Laszczak said. "They go into great detail for the lighting and blowing smoke for the scene. They take a little piece of woods here and make it look like we are on a Hollywood set."

"There is a lot of standing around while the scene is set and until they need you for the shot. It gets very repetitious, take after take of the same action," Hill said.

Another extra for the commercials, Sgt. Phillip T. Sprosky, 988th Military Police Company, said, "If I had to make a career choice, I would stay with what I'm doing.

"You think you've got the shot right but then you have to do it again and again and again because there's not enough light, too much light, not enough smoke or something needs to be moved," Sprosky said.

The military extras received a dollar for their efforts, while the civilians received $200 a day.

"We are eating the other $199 while we are here," Spc. Carrie B. Kinyon, 988th Military Police Company, laughingly said. "The food's great!"

"Working with the Army has been great," said Charlie Capuano, senior vice president and executive producer for Young and Rubicam. "They are the most cooperative group I've worked with. I like the pay scale, there's no overtime, they have their own props, costumes and do their own make-up," Capuano said laughingly.

The first ad to air will be "Anthem," which is scheduled to air in January, said Debbie Gaudet, a Young and Rubicam account executive.

"We are planning the spots to air mostly during sporting events, which our target audience, 18 to 24 year olds, watches. That is the most efficient use of our advertising dollar," Gaudet said.

Heroes needed to carry torch

Specially selected community heroes will carry the glow of the Olympic flame along the route of the 1996 Olympic Torch Relay, from Los Angeles, Calif., to Atlanta

By Richard Brill
Special to The Bayonet©

For 84 days and 15,000 miles across America, Olympic torchbearers will carry the glow of the Olympic flame along the route of the 1996 Olympic Torch Relay, from Los Angeles, Calif., to Atlanta.

The torch will be carried by specially selected community hero torchbearers who can be nominated by anyone completing a form that must be postmarked by Nov. 30.

According to Lisa Keeble, director of Community Resources, United Way of the Chattahoochee Valley, a community hero is someone who performs outstanding volunteer work; serves as a community leader, role model or mentor; performs acts of generosity or kindness; or who performs extraordinary feats or accomplishments, locally or nationally.

Nominees must be at least 12 years of age on April 27, 1996, Keeble said.

"Being a community hero does not mean that you have to have saved someone's life or be famous," she said. "A community hero can be anyone who has given of themselves or who has otherwise performed acts of generosity or kindness, no matter how insignificant they may seem."

Keeble encouraged everyone in the community to fill out an application, including members of the military, whose everyday commitment to duty qualifies many of them as community heroes.

To nominate someone, describe on one side of an 8 1/2- by 11-inch sheet of paper why you or someone you know is a community hero by explaining how they meet one or more of the four criteria listed above. The description is limited to 100 words or less and must be printed legibly in ink or typed.

Next, obtain a nomination form from the U.S. Army Infantry Center Public Affairs Office, Infantry Hall, Room 608. Send both your description and the nomination form to 1996 Olympic Torch Relay, P.O. Box 6621, Maple Plain, Minn. 55593-6621.

The entry must be postmarked by Nov. 30 and received by Dec. 8, 1995. Only one entry or nomination per person is allowed, Keeble said.

Entries will be sent to a central collection point, sorted by zip code and sent to one of 147 community judging locations across the country comprised of a judging panel of respected community leaders who will review and judge the entries, Keeble said. The process is being facilitated by local United Way agencies, she said.

She is expecting from 6,000 to 7,000 nominations locally.

Those selected to be community hero torchbearers will have the honor of carrying a 3 1/2-pound torch up to one kilometer along the Olympic Torch Relay route. Each torchbearer will carry the torch as close to his or her home community as possible.

The relay will begin in Los Angeles, Calif., April 27 and will finish in Atlanta July 19.

"This is a once-in-a-lifetime opportunity," Keeble said. "It is an honor that those selected will remember the rest of their lives. It is also an important way for the community to recognize its outstanding citizens, no matter who they might be or what they have done to become community heroes."

Applications can also be obtained at McDonald's restaurants, United Way agencies, Mike Collins Nissan, IBM, Coca-Cola and Bellsouth.

Department of Veterans Affairs

Q: I was wounded when I bailed out of my plane and subsequently was held as a prisoner of war for 10 months. I was marched from one camp to another in Germany for 86 days. After being liberated, I was so happy to get my discharge that I did not make any claims, but now I need medical treatment for diabetes and arthritis. Can VA help me?

A: Former prisoners of war are eligible for hospital care for any disability within the VA health care system. Whether they have a VA adjudicated service-connected disability or not, former POWs are exempt from VA's income "means testing" which governs access to inpatient care for other nonservice-connected veterans. Outpatient and nursing home care may also be provided at the hospital's discretion depending on its available space and resources.

Q: A friend served on active duty in Germany in the late 1950s. He is destitute and may be losing his sight. He presently has little or no health insurance. Would he qualify for any VA medical services?

A: Veterans whose annual income is below certain levels may have mandatory eligibility for VA inpatient care and outpatient care. The dollar limits change annually and are higher for those with dependents. Veterans should apply for care at their nearest VA hospital for a determination of how their particular circumstances and medical condition would fit with these criteria.

Q: Several members of my National Guard transportation company were deployed to the Persian Gulf War near the end of the ground war for just a brief time. Is there a minimum service requirement for which we had to be federalized in order to participate in the Persian Gulf Registry health examination program?

A: Any individual who served with a National Guard or Reserve unit in the Persian Gulf theater during the Gulf war may receive this special examination if they served the time for which they were called to active duty, no matter how briefly.

Position: Better Opportunities for Single Soldiers Program representative
Unit: U.S. Army Medical Department Activity
MOS: 91G10
Job title: Behavioral science specialist
Years on the job: Four years
Hometown: Port Townsend, Wash.

What were your reasons for joining the Army?
To improve my life, serve my country, meet people and travel.

What were your reasons for choosing your MOS?
I like to help others, and it will help me one day when I get out of the Army.

What person has most influenced your military career?
1st Lt. Dean S. Ratty, Det. 1, Company B, 1st Bn., 803rd Armor, Washington Army National Guard

If you were the sergeant major of the Army for a day, what improvements would you make?
I would allow all soldiers to have the option to receive BAQ and separate rations.

What are your future career plans?
To work for a sheriff's department.

What do you think about the BOSS program, and why is it important?
I think it is good and has a lot of potential. It is important because it is a fundamental program for improving present and future conditions of the single soldier.

What have you accomplished as the BOSS representative for your unit?
With the help of others, I raised money for the program.

In your opinion, how can the individual soldier get involved in the BOSS program?
By speaking with their unit representative and making themselves available to assist with BOSS projects.

What specifically has the BOSS program done to help the soldiers in your unit?
It has provided a volleyball pit and basketball court.

What others have to say about you:
Very personable and professional and a stickler for detail.

aer q&a

Army Emergency Relief

Q. What is Army Emergency Relief ?

A. AER is a private, nonprofit organization, incorporated in 1942 by the secretary of war and the Army chief of staff. AER's mission is to provide emergency financial assistance.

Q. Whom does AER help?

A. AER helps active duty soldiers, retirees and their family members, Army National Guard and Reserve soldiers on active duty for more than 30 days and their family members, and surviving spouses and orphans of soldiers who died on active duty or after they retired.

Q. What can AER do?

A. AER can help with emergency financial needs for food, emergency transportation (due to emergency leave), vehicle repair, funeral expenses, medical and dental expenses, certain expenses when pay has been lost or stolen and undergraduate-level education scholarships based on financial need to children of active and retired soldiers.

Q. What type of assistance does AER offer?

A. AER offers free loans and grants, or part loan and part grant, if repayment of loan will cause undue hardship.

Q. Is there a dollar limit on AER help?

A. There is no limit on AER help. AER will help anyone who is eligible for AER assistance and has a valid emergency need.

Q. Do I have to contribute to AER in order to be eligible for assistance?

A. No.

Q. What can't AER do?

A. AER cannot help pay for nonessentials such as financing ordinary leave or vacation, paying fines or legal expenses, helping liquidate or consolidate debts, assisting with house purchase or home improvements, helping purchase, rent or lease a vehicle, covering bad checks or paying credit card bills.

Q. How do I find AER when I, or my family members, need help?

A. At Fort Benning, visit AER at Building 2643, Soldiers' Plaza, from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. Monday through Friday. During nonduty hours (for emergency leave only), contact the U.S. Army Infantry Center staff duty officer at 545-2218. Away from Fort Benning, contact any AER section, American Red Cross, Air Force Aid Society, Navy-Marine Corps Relief Society or Coast Guard Mutual Assistance Office.

Q. When I visit AER for assistance, what documents should I bring with me?

A. Soldiers should bring their military identification card, most recent leave and earning statement, leave or permanent change of station orders, trustee letter for Chapter 13 if applicable and substantiating documentation such as car repair estimate, apartment or house rental agreement or utility bills.

Q. Does AER get its money from the government?

A. No. AER does not receive any appropriated or nonappropriated government money.

Q. Where does AER get its funds?

A. AER funds are derived from voluntary contributions of active duty and retired soldiers, repayment of AER interest-free loans, income from investments and unsolicited contributions.

The U.S. Army Criminal Investigation Command is seeking information concerning a forgery that occurred at the Post Exchange at the Main Mall.

Between July 19 and 21, someone stole an active duty Navy identification card and personal checks and then cashed the checks at the PX.

Anyone with information concerning this incident can contact Special Agent James Gressley at 545-5272 or the Military Police at 545-5222.

The identity of anyone providing information will be kept in the strictest confidence.

Author to share information about marketing job skills

Retired Officers Association

A Washington lecturer and author on career transition from military to civilian employment will be at Fort Benning Dec. 12 to talk to officers, senior noncommissioned officers and spouses on "Marketing Yourself for a Second Career."

Retired Col. Jerry Crews, deputy director of the Officer Placement Service for The Retired Officers Association, travels nationwide addressing military audiences composed of people who are nearing retirement, being involuntarily separated or opting to leave military service.

In his free, 2 1/2-hour presentation, Crews will introduce the audience to the realities of the competition in the civilian job market; the perceptions civilian employers have of military personnel; how to plan for the job search; tips for strengthening the resume (to include how employers read a resume); networking, preparing for and conducting a successful interview; salary and benefit packages; and rejection.

Crews said he doesn't promise an individual instant job search success but guarantees that each person who attends his lecture will profit from the knowledge gained and will be ready to move in the right direction toward that second career.

The lecture has been continually praised by attendees for its content and delivery. Crews provides information for every attendee and provides insights into the transition which are unique and hard-hitting.

Military members and their spouses, who are cordially invited to attend the lecture, will have an opportunity to ask questions of Crews and will also receive a free copy of the publication.

Crews will be at Infantry Hall, Classroom 30, Dec. 12. His lecture will run from 9 to 11 a.m.

For more information, call Mary Allen at 545-4892 or 545-7009.

Infantry officers get skills enhanced at Pre-Command Course

By Lisa M. Hibbert
Bayonet staff writer

Training officers to assume battalion, brigade or garrison level command positions is the mission of the Infantry Pre-Command Course at Fort Benning.

The two-week course, made up of mostly active duty lieutenant colonels and Reserve or National Guard majors, is offered 10 times throughout the year and produces approximately 150 commanders, said Col. Dorian T. Anderson, director, Combined Arms and Tactics Directorate.

"The course helps us get reacquainted with issues facing the infantry," said Lt. Col. Joseph Dodd, a student in the course.

Representatives from the Battlefield Operation System, the Dismounted Battlespace Battlelab and the Ranger Training Brigade update the commanders on what is going on the Infantry and in the Army.

"We went to OSUT (One Station Unit Training) and did physical training with the soldiers," Dodd said. "We ran with a unit that had been in training for three days, and then we came back another day and ran with soldiers who had been in training for 10 weeks. We really were able to see the improvements."

Students also had the opportunity to visit the Henry Caro Noncommissioned Officer Academy, allowing them to see what kind of NCO's the Army is producing. They also met with representatives from the Infantry Officer Advance Course and the Infantry Officer Basic Course, giving them a chance to see what kind of junior officers they may be working with.

During the course, the students took a staff ride to Chattanooga, Tenn., and visited the site of the Chickamauga Civil War battle (1864).

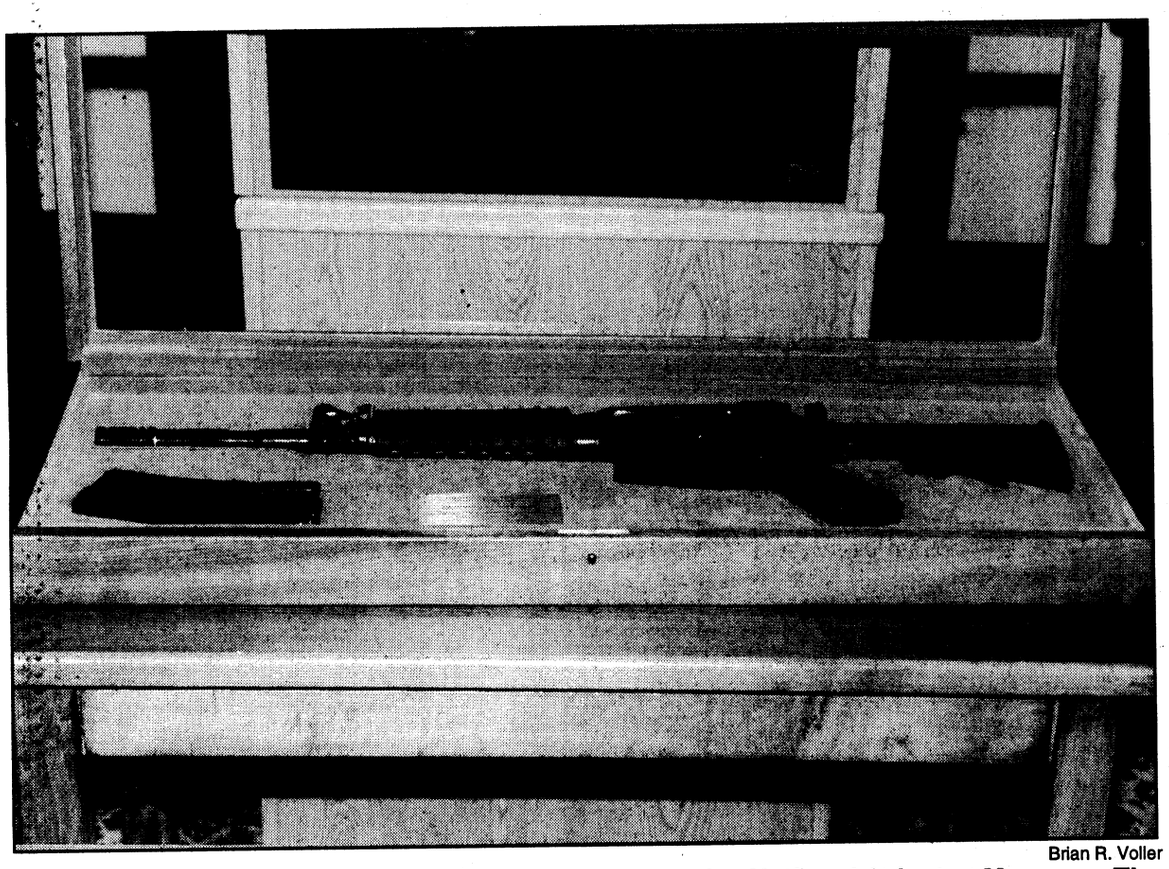
"Even though the technology has changed, the scenarios remain the same," Dodd said. "Today, we're still concerned about food and transmitting messages. By studying the past, we can become better commanders"

One of the main teaching elements used by the instructors is having the students share their experiences.

"A lot of the students come to this course from troop locations, and we encourage them to share what they know with each other," Anderson said.

For the National Guard and Reservist commander, this has a different slant.

"The active components have more experience than I do," said Lt. Col. Joseph Smoak, a National Guard student. "Our missions are different — they're active and we are not, but we have to be just as efficient."



After completing the course here, the officers then go to Fort Leavenworth, Kan. for the second half of the commanders course.

"No matter how much they learn during the pre-command course, if they don't use their leadership skills to ensure their officers take care of the soldiers, the mission will never get accomplished," said Sgt. 1st Class Daniel Cobb, course manager.

Army introduces new carbine weapon

By Brian R. Voller
Bayonet staff writer

The National Infantry Museum received the first M-4 A1 Carbine weapon in a presentation ceremony Nov. 9.

Michael P. Reissig, vice president of administration and quality assurance of Colt Manufacturing Co., presented the weapon to Col. Gregory C. Camp, chief of staff, in a ceremony conducted at the National Infantry Museum.

The new weapon will become a permanent display item for the museum.

"The M-4 Carbine is equivalent to the M-16A2," said Maj. James Baldwin, chief of small arms division. "The difference is that it's smaller and more compact. The weapon makes it easier for the light forces to carry."

The M-4 uses the same 5.56 mm sized round as the M-16A2. It is capable of firing in both semi-automatic and in three-round bursts through the use of a selector switch.

One of the primary differences between the M-4 and the M-16 is the buttstock design of the weapon, according to Baldwin. The M-4 comes equipped with a sliding buttstock, which can be positioned in both the closed position and the fully extended position.

The overall length of the M-4 with the buttstock closed is 29.75 inches. The length of the weapon with the buttstock full extended is 33 inches.

"The M-4 is not changing the Army's use of the M-16," Baldwin said. "The weapon is just adding to the family of weapons and is allowing the Army to have more opportunity to use different weapons."

The 82nd Airborne Division out of Fort Bragg, N.C, will be the first to use the M-4 weapons around January or February. The weapon will also be used by the Special Operations divisions of the military.

Albanian soldiers learn role playing

By Ward Gros
3rd Infantry Division Public Affairs Office

DURRES, Albania — An old man holding a wrench in his hand stands in front of a U.S. Army high mobility, multi-wheeled vehicle, preventing it from crossing the railroad tracks. The same HMMWV with the same driver, Spc. Jesus Palafox, crossed the same railroad tracks more than 50 times in the past three days with no problems.

This time was different. The exercise was over. Every other Albanian and American had left the training area except the role players. This time the roles were reversed. After spending all day directing actors to interfere with peacekeeping activities in a training environment, the chief role player faced reality.

Maj. Ulises Soto was lucky he could speak some Italian, because an Italian-speaking bystander interpreted the old Albanian's words.

"He says the ditch is too deep here," the bystander said, pointing to a three-foot drop on the side of the road.

"No, no, tell him we've passed may times before," Soto said.

"He says that the train is coming in five minutes and that you must wait until it passes," the bystander said.

"It'll only take a minute to cross here," Soto said. "I don't see the train."

The old man was adamant. He would not let the HMMWV pass. Palafox kept the engine running while the major stood eye to eye with the old man.

Finally the old man relented and let Soto and his crew pass before any authorities arrived.

"I don't know what that was about," Soto said. "It just goes to show the affect people have on doing something as simple as crossing a railroad track."

This was an unusual way to end the day. The major who directed role players for the joint training exercise faced off against a real-world delay.

Soto, the 3rd Infantry Division's chief of military relations, commanded Albanian soldiers who acted as role players during Operation Peaceful Eagle '95. Peaceful Eagle was the first combined bilateral peacekeeping training exercise in Albania. Approximately 150 engineers from the 3rd Infantry Division and as many Albanian soldiers from the Shijaku Division trained to conduct peacekeeping operations Sept. 11-21.

Including role players as part of the following training scenario was a new idea for the Albanians.

"This is new for us," said exercise observer 1st Captain Nazmi Cahani. "Role playing makes the training more real. It gives the soldiers realistic situations where they have to decide what actions to take and lets them know what can happen. This was the first time that we trained using role players."

Although some Albanian soldiers and officers previously trained with American counterparts in Cooperative Nugget '95 this August at Fort Polk, La., no Albanians acted out role player parts during that exercise. During Peaceful Eagle most of the role players were Albanians. Most of the role players were conscripts fulfilling their 18 months of mandatory service in the Albanian military.

"This was the first time many of them worked with minimal supervision," Soto said. "Having a role and acting independently as a farmer, sniper or refugee was a first for the conscripts, who are supervised 24 hours a day. The biggest challenge here was emphasizing how important role players are to an exercise."

Dealing with civilians is an everyday occurrence in a peacekeeping environment. Having Albanian role players who don't speak much English had American soldiers relying on their Albanian counterparts.

Before each mission, Soto and his executive officer, 1st Lt. John Ende, reviewed the situation with the Albanians.

"The role players did great," Ende said. "They are very disciplined. When they are told to do something, they do it quickly, smartly and follow explicit instructions. They stick to their roles. We had one of the role players who didn't even tell the observer controller he was smuggling weapons through a checkpoint. That was after he was handcuffed, detained and placed in holding. We told him not to tell anyone, and he didn't," Ende said.

"They made great progress in the short amount of time we had," Soto said. "If I had this platoon for a year and did nothing but role playing, they would be at the same level as the opposing forces at the Combat Maneuver Training Center in Hohenfels, Germany."

Dept of Veterans Affairs probes Persian Gulf War syndrome

Department of Veterans Affairs

SAN DIEGO, Calif. — Department of Veterans Affairs clinicians detailed growing use of the special medical care and examination programs by Persian Gulf War veterans — who continue to exhibit a broad variety of health problems — in remarks at the 123rd annual meeting of the American Public Health Association.

The illnesses of more than 53,000 veterans seen under the special program are so varied they continue to defy any coherent pattern that would provide substantive leads on health effects related to specific environmental hazards in the Gulf, Dr. Frances Murphy, VA Environmental Agents Service director, told the APHA.

Dr. Susan H. Mather, VA assistant chief medical director for environmental medicine and public health, said the program nonetheless serves as a valuable means to expedite examinations for the veterans, who also have special eligibility to receive follow-up VA treatment as long as needed for any conditions that are even possibly related to Gulf service, an access with priority over many other veterans.

"Our registry is not a substitute for the government's aggressive research projects tackling Gulf health questions through controlled studies, but as a health surveillance tool, the exam data may suggest questions for study," Dr. Mather said.

VA doctors have noted an increasing trend in such symptoms as fatigue, rash, headache, muscle and joint pain and memory loss, Dr. Murphy related in her presentation. Among the diagnoses made, there has been a minor decrease in clinical findings of respiratory and skin diseases and an increase in musculoskeletal and connective tissue ailments.

"Pending our ongoing scientific studies, the clinical significance of such ebbs and peaks in collected data are unknown," Dr. Murphy added, "but our veterans should rest assured that we are taking a variety of approaches to get them the best possible answers about the health effects of Gulf service."

Among trends reflected in the registry examination data are scores for the veterans' own rating of their health status. When these data are stratified over a three-year period, a decline in veterans' rating of their health is evident, according to the data presented at the APHA conference.

Murphy said the percentage rating their health as good or very good dropped from 36.2 percent for the seven months ending March 1993 to 29.4 percent by the end of July 1995. At the same time, there was a corresponding increase in those rating their health as poor or very poor at the other end of the spectrum, from 23.8 percent to 26.6 percent.

"These shifts come over a time that the mean age of new patients using the health examination program has been decreasing. We will continue to evaluate this data for trends that could suggest hypotheses for research," Dr. Murphy

VA will be addressing this question in a research project involving 30,000 male and female veterans — half of whom served in the Gulf — to determine illness rates in comparison with those serving elsewhere in that period. Unlike the registry data from self-referred patients, such scientific studies involve representative veteran populations, and the effort will include special analysis of women, with an over-sampling of women developed intentionally in the protocol.

The new research project also will gather information about family health. "Veterans are particularly concerned about media reports of birth defects, and we hope this study will provide definitive answers. Although rates of birth defects have not been shown abnormally high in previous research, VA is committed to search for answers to the health concerns of Persian Gulf veterans," Murphy said.

More than 30 research projects are currently under way.

Veterans remember the cold, forgotten Korean war

By Rudi Williams
American Forces Information Service

It was so cold "your spit rolled when it hit the ground" is what former Army Sgt. 1st Class Perlow Sowell Jr. remembers most about the Korean War.

"Everybody who fought at the Chosin Reservoir (in North Korea in November and December 1950) had cold injuries," said former Marine Pvt. Win K. Scott. "Most of our guys today have problems from wartime cold injuries." Scott is executive director of the 5,200-member "The Chosin Few," a group of survivors of the battle at Chosin Reservoir.

Cold is the first thing most war veterans mention about the "Forgotten War." Then they talk about fierce fighting against overwhelming North Korean and Chinese troops, using frozen enemy bodies as barricades and about their foxhole buddies being killed.

But, 42 years later, when they finally got their day in the sun, they did not have to endure subzero temperatures in Washington during week-long dedication ceremonies for the Korean War Veterans Memorial. Instead, they sweltered in 90-degree heat, with more than 500 people suffering heat exhaustion.

But the scorching heat and muggy weather didn't dampen spirits of thousands of Korean War veterans attending the dedication. The memorial rekindled memories they'd bottled up for years.

"One of my worst memories was when the Chinese were coming at us at Chosin, and we feared we wouldn't make it off the hill. Thought we were going to die," said Scott, a machine gunner with the 7th Marines. "So we ate all our C-rations, threw away the sugar we couldn't use and smoked all our cigarettes. We didn't want the enemy to get them.

"Even though we thought we wouldn't survive that day, we didn't give up," Scott said. "We even used frozen Chinese bodies as barricades. I was wounded coming off the hill, but I was fortunate. I was alive."

The fierce, bloody battle at Chosin resulted in nearly 15,000 allied casualties — about 2,500 men killed and more than 5,000 wounded, with the rest suffering severe frostbite and cold injuries. Enemy forces sustained an estimated 43,500 casualties, including more than 28,000 killed, according to Chosin Few reports.

Pointing to the memorial's centerpiece, 19 statues of poncho-clad foot soldiers trudging up a hill in V formation, Scott noted: "There are three Marines in that formation, two of them are machine gunners — just like I was in Korea." The other statues depict 14 soldiers, a Navy medic and an Air Force forward observer.

"It took 42 years to be recognized, but I love this monument. This is a special day for me," said Sowell, who suffered leg wounds during the war. He said he's happy about the memorial, but it took Sowell a long time to cope with the pains of war.

"When you're in a fighting unit, you're the baddest guy in the world," Sowell said. "But when you're coming home, something about crossing that international date line makes you feel like you've got some kind of plague.

"The way society treated us wasn't right," said Sowell, who spent three years in the Army. "But they didn't do us as bad as they did the Vietnam guys." He runs an upholstery business in Hyattsville, Md.

Bad memories have haunted him since the war, Sowell said, but he's not bitter about being a Korean War veteran. "It's hard to explain that to anyone," he said, "but I'd do it again if my life could save America from some of the stuff that happened over there. I'd give my life gladly."

A Silver Star and a Purple Heart ribbon stood out on Army veteran Raymond Moses' deep red buckskin shirt. His dark blue baseball-style cap was embossed with "Korea Veteran." A Combat Infantryman's Badge was pinned to the peak of the cap.

Reflecting on how lucky and unlucky he was during the war, Moses said, "My brother, Walter Moses Jr., was killed alongside of me. I was in Charlie Company and he was in Baker Company."

Moses was preparing to rotate home, "but they let me stay for a few days to take care of my brother's remains," he said. "In the meantime, the Chinese made a push on the Marines, and our battalion and a Turkish brigade rushed to take those hills back."

Moses fought in the war in 1952 and 1953. Just before the armistice, his whole unit, a company of the 14th Regiment, 25th Division, was nearly wiped out. "Only 16 of us were left out of 230 people," he said.

While on patrol one night, his unit was pinned down by machine gun fire. Moses threw a hand grenade into the machine gun nest, and "ran up to the trench, but I didn't know there were four more guys there. I killed them and eight more coming down the trench," said Moses, a cultural resources specialist with the Tulalip Tribes in Washington state.

"When I started back down the hill, the lieutenant hollered at me: 'Use the very steps you made going up there!' I'd run through a mine field and didn't know it.

"The lieutenant said, 'Something must be on your side.'

"Yes, my Indian spirit,"' I told the lieutenant."

Protecting himself from the blistering sun in the shade of a tree on the Washington Mall, Moses said, "We deserve this memorial! All these guys have waited for recognition all these years. Some Indian people in my tribe couldn't handle memories of the war and ended up drinking themselves into their graves.

"I wish they were all alive to see this," he said sadly. Only four out of about 30 members of his tribe who fought in Korea are still alive.

Purple Heart recipient William R. Foster was sent home after suffering shrapnel wounds in his left leg.

"The monument brings back quite a few memories," said Foster, an Army staff sergeant and 25th Division radioman during the war. "We've been overlooked for quite a while, but they finally got around to us.

"We're senior citizens now, so I'm glad so many guys are still able to be here to see it," said Foster. "I left a lot of them behind in Korea. I'm just one of the lucky few to be standing out here today."

Military action in Korea is referred to as a conflict, but Foster disagrees. "It was war in my book," said the retired U.S. Senate clerk. "Anytime you have to shoot or be shot at, it's war! With the amount of injuries we had, I was very fortunate to come out alive after almost a year."

"It's absolutely beautiful (the memorial)," said George F. Nixon of Woodbridge, N.J. Pointing at a statue of an infantryman, he said, "That's a BARman (Browning automatic rifle) right there, and that's what I was over there."

"Tell him about the Chosin Reservoir," his son Jim said as he handed his father a Purple Heart pin.

Attaching the pin onto his cap, Nixon said, "My son bought this for me. I was wounded twice." Bayonetted in the stomach at Chosin in December 1950, Nixon was shot in the hand in March 1951. The hand wound got him a ticket home.

"Right after I got wounded, my foxhole buddy was killed. That's a bad memory," Nixon said. "It hurts that some people call Korea the forgotten war. Many people did forget it. But this (memorial) ends it all.

"It was windy and cold up there on Chosin Reservoir — 35 below zero — and the fighting was fierce and bloody," Nixon remembers. "But we used to have fun having snowball fights in-between things."

Visitors are already leaving flowers, photographs, newspaper clippings and other items at the recently dedicated memorial, just as they do at the nearby Vietnam Veterans Memorial.

"It's coming out of the hearts — what they feel about those who sacrificed their lives and gave their all for their country," said Ray L. Carson of Holly, Mich. "You just have to do it. I was at the memorial dedication and they had flowers to lay on the wall as mementos to those who died in the Korean War.

"The memorial makes me feel good that our nation finally recognized what Korean War veterans did," said Carson, who served with the Army 69th Field Artillery Battalion from June 1952 to January 1953.

Latin America comes home to Alabama

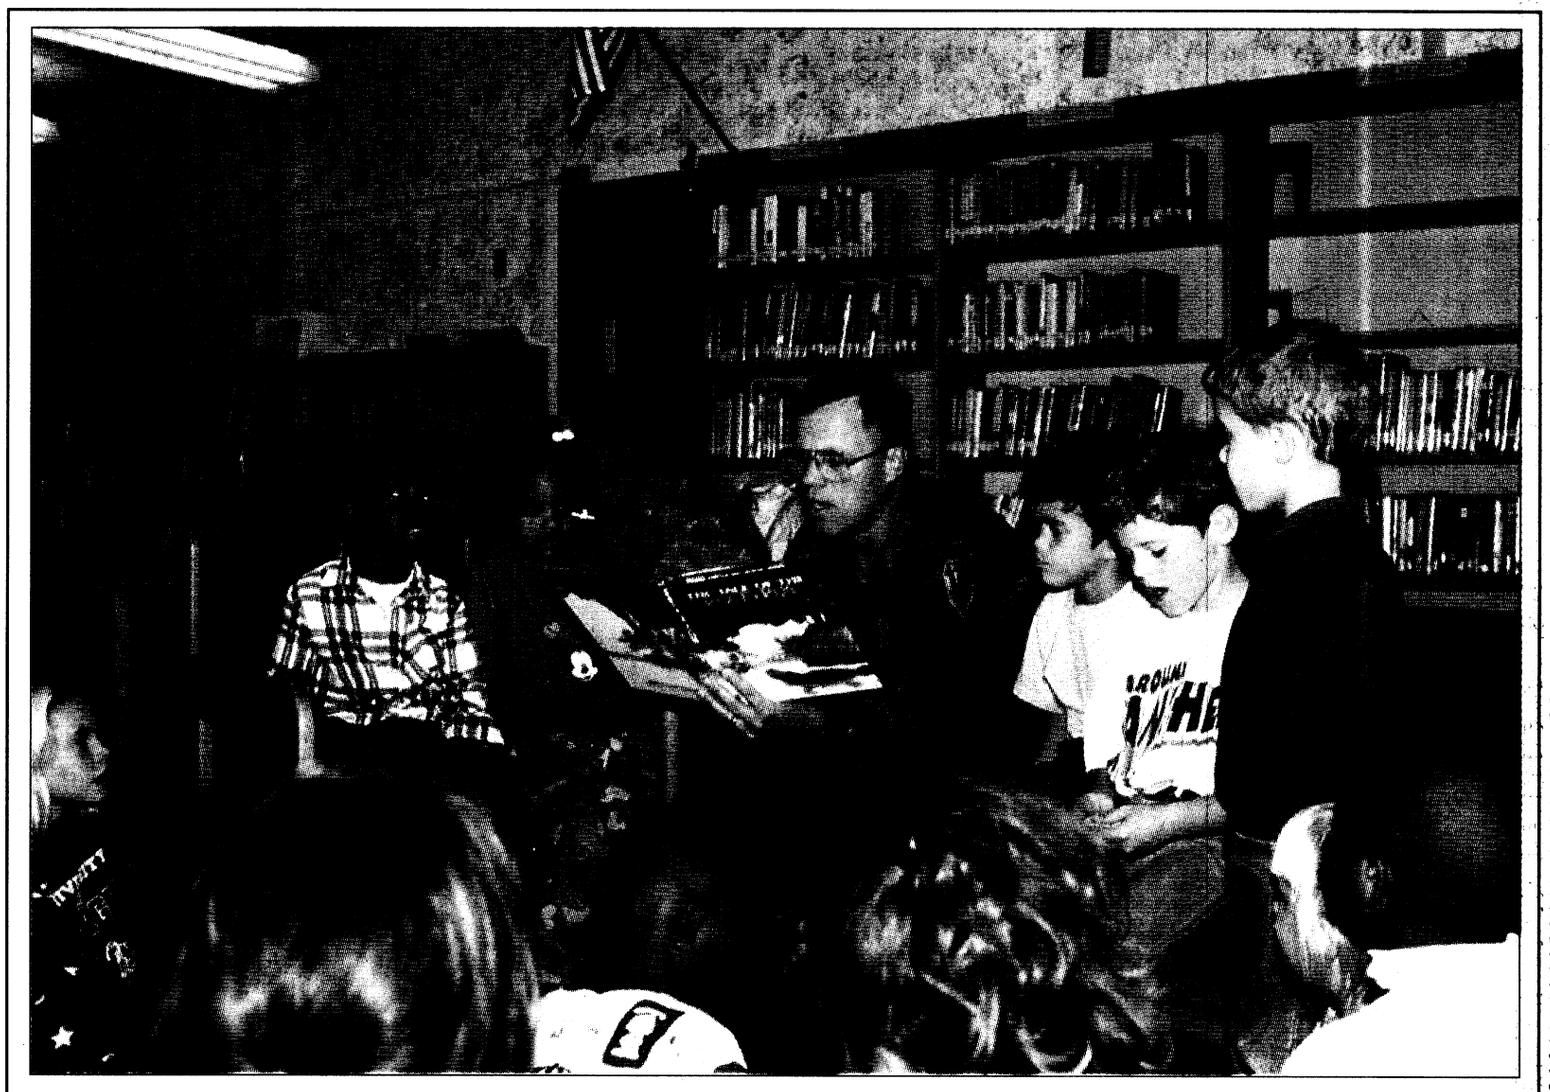
By Danielle Holliday
School of the Americas

Danielle Holliday

Geanmarco Rondan performs a Peruvian courting dance called "conchaperla" during a program at Russell County High School.



A little bit of Latin America came to Alabama Nov. 2 when family members from the School of the Americas presented their Hispanic culture to about 200 Russell County High School students.

"The School of the Americas was invited to our school as a motivational factor for the Spanish classes," said Noel Dudley, Spanish teacher. "I'm hoping this will keep my students going for awhile. It's easy to get bogged down in just trying to memorize words; sometimes you need that extra something to help keep you focused."

That extra "something" was brought by wives and children of SOA students and guest instructors. They told the students about their countries' climates, recreational activities and export products. They let the students know what it is like to live there.

In addition, the SOA group displayed samples of crafts, coins, jewelry and traditional outfits. To

Boy Choir calls for new voices

By Richard Brill
Special to The Bayonet©

Since 1985 the Columbus Boy Choir has been entertaining audiences with its performances of patriotic medleys, folk songs, hymns and spirituals.

Rick Smith, choir coordinator, is extending his personal invitation for area boys ages 8 to 14, including members of military families, to consider trying out for the choir.

Bobby Register, 10, son of retired Sgt. 1st Class Bartolome Vigo, special projects officer with the Directorate of Operations and Training, is a boy who accepted the invitation last year.

"My son just loves it," Vigo said. "When he sings, his face just lights up."

Vigo said the boys have a lot of fun, but they also learn valuable skills in self-discipline and teamwork that carry over into the rest of their lives.

"The discipline is very good, and it comes from having to memorize music and perform in front of a live audience while maintaining a certain posture," Vigo said. "For a group of young boys to stand still and be quiet and to have the mental discipline necessary to perform is quite an accomplishment. They do a very good job."

Smith said the choir places great emphasis on self-discipline and the building of a positive self-image that will give the boys self-confidence as they grow older.

Learning the importance of thinking clearly while under pressure is another important benefit, Smith said.

"We tell them that the brain is the most important organ used in singing," he said.

Register said the best part of being a member of the choir is the music.

"I like singing in the choir a lot," Register said. "I like it when we get to sing in concerts."

The choir regularly performs for more than 3,000 Georgia residents annually through guest appearances at civic organizations, churches and business functions, Smith said.

Every other year, the choir goes on tour. Past performances included participation in the Dublin, Ireland, International Choral Festival in 1988; an East Coast tour in 1989; the Des Moines, Iowa, International Children's Choir Festival in 1991; and the Princeton, N.J., Invitational Children's Choir Festival this year.

Members of next year's choir will be selected by audition in May. The audition is open to anyone regardless of race, ethnic origin, religious affiliation or disability.

"We aren't looking for trained singers," Smith said. "A clear, treble voice and the ability to match the voice to a pitch played on the piano are important, however."

Dexter student wins 'scary-story' contest

By Heidi Anne Fedak
Special to The Bayonet©

A fifth-grade student at Herbert J. Dexter Elementary School outwrote more than 300 other participants to snag top honors in the Scary Stories Contest sponsored recently by The Ledger-Enquirer's Newspaper in Education Program.

Assigned as a class writing project to celebrate Halloween, Emily Gorski's spooky tale of two girls frightened by a prank worked its way onto the pages of the Columbus newspaper.

But that's not unusual for this aspiring author, according to Gorski's teacher, Carroll Thebaud.

"Emily is a real good student," Thebaud said. "She has some really great ideas." And Thebaud isn't the only one who thinks so.

Last year, Gorski won second place in a Virginia writing contest when she responded to the theme, "If I could give the world just one gift," by writing that she would give everyone a friend.

And earlier this year, a limerick on hamsters penned by the 10-year-old Dexter student garnered first place in a poetry contest.

Despite her proven track record, Gorski said she was surprised when Thebaud announced that she'd actually won The Ledger-Enquirer contest.

"I never thought I would win," she said.

But the contest's judge, NIE coordinator Darlene Casciaro, said Gorski's story really caught her eye. "I like the idea of how she put a story within a story. I thought it was really good," Casciaro said. "I was really able to visualize when I read her story."

So where does this creative youngster get such good ideas? Simple, the daughter of Brooke and Lt. Col David Gorski, U.S. Army Medical Department Activity, said.

Heidi Anne Fedak/Special to The Bayonet

Emily Gorski wrote her award-winning story in Carroll Thebaud's fifth-grade class at Dexter Elementary School.

"They just pop into my head."

According to Thebaud, however, writing the scary pieces required more than just a good idea. Writing logically, putting events in sequential order and painting a picture with figurative language were all necessary for both the class's writing process and the newspaper's judging criteria, according to Thebaud and Casciaro.

Gorski's story best demonstrated those qualities, Thebaud said, so it was one of the two entries she submitted to the contest.

"It was hard for me, because I could only send two entries," Thebaud said, "so we were really proud of Emily when she won."

'It was just a story' takes first place in competition

By Emily Gorski
Herbert J. Dexter Elementary School

"EEEEK!!!" I screamed. Someone or something had grabbed me! "Sorry to scare you, Emily," my friend Kim said. "I just had to."

"Don't do that!" I said. My friend Kim and I were in her backyard camping. You see, my parents were away so my brother Alex and I were sleeping inside. "Come on," she said. "My story is about this guy named The Slasher."

"OOOH." I shivered. Kim continued with the story. "The Slasher would hide in people's closets then jump out and whip them to death with a 50-foot-long whip. Then he would throw them into the sea. That's how we got the Red Sea."

I rolled my eyes and smiled. "Kim, that is not scary." Then suddenly we heard the sound of a whip outside the tent. My eyes widened, and my smile turned to a frown. "But that is!" We looked outside the tent.

We couldn't see anything irregular outside, but we could hear heavy breathing. My face turned white. I looked at Kim; her face was white, too.

"Let's sleep in your room for the rest of the night," I said. "Ya, that's a good idea." Kim's voice was tense.

The sky was as dark as soot. The moon must have been behind a cloud or something. Kim and I bumped into each other a lot. By the time we reached Kim's room we were battered and covered in bruises.

I rolled my eyes and smiled. "Kim, that is not scary." Then suddenly we heard the sound of a whip outside the tent. My eyes widened, and my smile turned to a frown. "But that is!"

Just then her Mom walked in. "Oh my!" she said. "What happened to you? You are covered in bruises!"

"Kim and I were playing flashlight tag, and we tripped. So we came inside," I fibbed.

"But we're okay," Kim added. I nodded in agreement. Mrs. Frazier looked doubtful, but she left. A while later Kim and I were watching T.V. Alex and Nick were upstairs playing video games. "I'll be right back," Kim said.

Suddenly, the phone rang. When I answered it no one was there. Then I heard a hideous laugh. A chill ran up my spine as I hung up the phone. I sighed and slowly walked back to the couch. Kim was waiting there and asked me why I looked so frightened. When I told Kim about the phone call she said, "That's it — let's go get Alex and Nick."

"Good idea," I said. We raced up the stairs to Nick's room. "Alex! Nick! Help! There is a guy named The Slasher, and he is out to get us!" Kim's voice was frantic as she clung to Nick for protection. Nick and Alex tried to act surprised but quickly broke out in laughter. "You guys are so gullible!" they said.

"You mean you guys were playing a joke on us?" Kim said as she almost strangled Nick to death. The two boys nodded and explained how they were spying on us when Kim was telling the story. Just then the phone rang. "I'll get it!" Kim said. When she answered it Kim turned white. I knew what had happened. Kim heard the hideous laugh!

But this time it wasn't Alex and Nick!???

community briefs

ON POST

School board meeting — The next meeting of the Fort Benning Schools' School Board will be Nov. 27 at 1 p.m. in the Fort Benning Schools administrative building, 201 Custer Road, Building 2670.

Copies of the agenda will be in the schools after noon Tuesday.

If you wish to attend this meeting, call 545-7276, ext. 7276.

Employment assistance — Army Community Service's Family Member Employment Assistance Program is implementing a new service to those seeking employment.

The first and third Wednesday of each month, local area temporary agencies will be available at the Family Unit Network Center, Building 359, from 1:30 to 3:30 p.m.

The agencies will have application forms, and representatives will be available to answer any questions concerning their services. All agencies' services are free.

For more information, call Mark Mills, acting manager, FMEAP, at 545-6969 or 545-5516.

Refuse and recycling holiday schedule — Refuse and recycling collection will not be picked up Thursday in the family housing areas.

The affected areas will be picked up Nov. 27.

There will be no yard waste collection Thursday. Yard waste will be picked up Dec. 4.

All other schedules remain unchanged. For more information, call the Construction Inspection Branch at the Directorate of Public Works at 545-4749.

Christmas tree sales — From Nov. 28 to Dec. 23, Fort Benning Boy Scouts will be selling a wide variety of Georgia and Wisconsin evergreens.

The trees will be available at the lot in front of the Post Exchange at the Main Mall seven days a week from 9 a.m. to 9 p.m. Prices range from $8 to $40.

Cookbook sales — The 2nd Battalion, 18th Infantry Regiment, 3rd Brigade, 24th Infantry Division (Mechanized), Family Support Group is raising funds to help families and soldiers of the battalion by selling "The Vanguard Cooking" book.

It contains more than 150 recipes and $3.60 in coupons. Cost is $7.50, and all funds go to the battalion FSG.

For more information, call Connie Zahn at 687-6841 or Stephanie Mello at 689-5284.

Tot Town special hours — Tot Town Child Development Center will open every morning at 6:30 beginning Monday.

Also, to help with Christmas shopping, Tot Town will offer extended hours on Tuesday evenings beginning Dec. 5.

Beginning Dec. 1 and continuing through Dec. 22, Tot Town will remain open every Friday night. If there are enough requests, the center will open for New Year's Eve.

Reservations are strongly encouraged so the center can be properly staffed and patrons not turned away.

For other group requests or for more information, call 689-8772 or 689-8698.

Food locker — The Army Community Service is soliciting for organizations and activities to conduct food drives for the emergency food locker. ACS provides food to needy families in the community.

As the Thanksgiving and Christmas seasons approach, holiday food baskets and non-perishable items are provided to needy soldiers and families in post units. The food locker must be replenished to meet continuing daily and holiday requirements.

For more information call 545-2536, 545-4043 or 545-7517.

OWC Fun Auction — The Fort Benning Officers' Wives' Club will sponsor a Fun Auction and holiday game night tonight for OWC members and guests in the Regimental Room of the Fort Benning Officers' Club.

The event begins with a social hour at 6 p.m. followed by a $5 dinner buffet at 7. Viewing and bidding of the silent auction items will take place during the social and dinner hours. Games begin at 8.

Wives' club — The International Wives' Club invites interested persons to come and visit every first Tuesday of the month at Building 2462, Soldiers' Plaza, for coffee, cake and information.

For more information, call Olga Kelly at 687-6471 or Andrea Pitts at 687-6937.

AER college assistance — Soldiers with college-aged children often wonder how they can afford education costs. Part of the answer may be found from Army Emergency Relief.

AER provides financial assistance through scholarships. To qualify for financial assistance through AER, students must be enrolled, accepted or pending acceptance as a full-time student for the entire academic year in post-secondary educational institutions approved by the U.S. Department of Education.

Scholarships are awarded based on financial need, academic achievement and individual accomplishments.

Applications must be received by March 1 for the upcoming academic year.

For more information, visit the AER, Building 2643, Soldiers' Plaza, 8 a.m. to 5 p.m., Monday through Friday.

Membership cards — Youth Services annual membership cards are available. Membership and registration are required for all children who participate in any YS program or activity or utilize the facilities. The cost per membership will be $20 per year, per family.

For more information, call Lamar Caldwell at 545-3070 or 545-3913.

conclude the presentation, they performed traditional dances as the students in the auditorium clapped and cheered to the Latin music.

Back in the classroom, students discussed the Latin American program that they had just seen.

"Finally I learned where their countries are located," said Wade Pettigrew. "It was fun to watch. I really liked the way they danced. I hope they can come back next year. "

"We enjoy sharing our culture with the community," said Cecilia Alexander, SOA's International Military Student Officer. "We try to visit as many of the local schools and organizations around the community that request us."

Maj. Roy Dean, senior Army instructor for the high school's ROTC, said he was really excited about the visit.

Keyonta T. Ligon and Eboni D. McCray, both seniors at Russell County High School, look at crafts at the School of the Americas program.

"I thought it was an outstanding performance. It was great," he said.

"I'd really like to get the students out there sometime next year to tour the School of the Americas. "

SOA officials welcome the opportunity to provide tours of the school. Groups who'd like to visit may call the Public Affairs Office at 545-1923.

Monument dedicated to tank destroyer battalions

By Shannon Day
Special to The Bayonet©

A group of representatives of the 14 Tank Destroyer Battalions activated during World War II, along with their friends and families, gathered in front of the National Infantry Museum Nov. 9 to witness the unveiling of a monument.

The monument was constructed to commemorate the efforts of the soldiers in the Tank Destroyer Battalions during the War, which had been almost forgotten, according to retired Col. Cecil R. French, chairman, Tank Destroyers-World War II-Fort Benning Association.

Tank Destroyer Battalions were attached to each infantry division and armored division fighting in the war. The tank destroyers knocked out close to 2,600 German armored tracked vehicles. Approximately 5,000 soldiers assigned to the battalions were killed in action.

The total cost of the monument was close to $7,500. Most of the contributions were donated by veterans and their families. The raffle of a WWII tanker jacket and five history books outlining the tank destroyer forces during that war also helped raise funds.

After the unveiling at 11 a.m., Col. Gregory C. Camp, chief of staff, U.S. Army Infantry Center, accepted the monument on behalf of the Infantry Center and National Infantry Museum.

"It is a humble honor to accept (this monument)," he said. "It is a great legacy you leave to those of us who serve in the infantry today. Young soldiers work hard to live up to that legacy."

The monument is located in front of the National Infantry Museum, along with monuments to other military forces.

BOY: Choir calls

commit to the choir for a year are also important, Smith said.

Those selected will be required to attend a week-long summer training camp in August where they will be taught essential performance skills and begin the process of working as a unified, well-disciplined choir team, Smith said. There is a fee for for the training camp, but financial assistance and scholarships are available to those who are eligible, he said.

Smith encouraged anyone interested in hearing or joining the choir to come to their concert at St. Thomas Episcopal Church Dec. 8 and 9 at 7:30 p.m. Tickets are $5.

"Belonging to a boys choir is one of the best experiences a boy can have," Smith said. "It builds self-discipline, self-confidence, camaraderie and the ability to function well in a group, and it can be an important part of a child's education."

For additional information about the choir, including information on booking the choir for performances, call 327-4303.

Retiree

council farewells outgoing and hails incoming co-chairs

Retirement Services

The Fort Benning Retiree Council recently said farewell to its enlisted co-chairman and welcomed a new co-chairman.

Retired Sgt. Maj. Nathaniel E. Guydon Jr., who had been the enlisted co-chairman since 1988, handed over the reins to retired Command Sgt. Maj. Eddie Roberts.

Roberts will share the responsibilities of council chairmanship with the officer co-chairman, retired Col. Mayo A. "Biff" Haddon III.

The council consists of retirees from the local area who meet quarterly to keep abreast of changes in benefits locally and nationally and to pass the information on to other retirees in the 82-county area serviced by Fort Benning. The council welcomes new members.

For more information, call the Retirement Services Office at 545-2541.

Month recognizes bereavement

By George Gonzalez
USAIC Chaplain's Office

There is a custom in the Catholic Church to pray and remember deceased family members and friends during the month of November. It's normal for us in the chaplaincy to emphasize the idea of resurrection first, then the bad news about death. It's also normal for us to deal with human bereavement and grief as ministers and chaplains. This task goes along with the professional and spiritual duties of the counselor.

reflections

Let's assume, as a theme of reflection, that a doctor tells you your days are numbered. Individuals who have been on the receiving end of such devastating news have provided the subject matter for hundreds of stories, novels and plays. No matter how many times and in how many ways we have encountered it in the lives and stories of others, none of us is really prepared to hear such terminal news about ourselves or those we love.

Even though we read stories of saints and fictional characters who, through prayer and strength of character, have transcended their feelings of terror and presented a brave face to the world, we have no confidence that we would be able to do the same.

One thinks of Thomas More's brave humor in the face of death — accepting a helping hand to mount the steps to the scaffold and announcing he would need no help coming down them and asking the executioner to spare his beard when he wielded his ax since it had in no way offended King Henry VIII. Or Sidney Carton in Dickens' novel "A Tale of Two Cities" who, having managed to save the life of another by substituting himself on the list of those at the guillotine, proclaims nobly that it is a far, far nobler thing that he is doing by dying than he has ever done before.

But who knows what fear really stalked their hearts. Even Jesus, during his agony in the garden, was human enough to pray that if the Father's will could be accomplished in another way, that he be spared the passion and death he saw before him.

If you would like to have a good meditation about this frightening news and about transformation into another life, read I Corinthians 1.

But these are universal considerations. What of those who learn, as so many of us do today, that cancer or some other fatal affliction has numbered our days?

The evolution of modern medical science has dramatically increased the numbers who get this message with clinical certainty. There are all too many who know with certainty that their hour will come next week, next month, or in any case, before the end of their expected life span.

What they — and all of us — must come to accept is that life is a mystery, a gift freely given. It comes with no factory guarantee of longevity, but God through his son, with whom we claim kingship, offers still another gift of prodigal generosity — a place in his kingdom which is suddenly, actually at hand. (I Cor. 7: 29-31)

church briefs

Thanksgiving service — The Wynnton Unity Thanksgiving Service will be Sunday at 7 p.m. at Temple Israel, 1617 Wildwood Ave.

Rabbi Arthur Rutberg of the Shearith Israel Synagogue will be the speaker. The congregations of Shearith Israel Synagogue, St. Paul United Methodist Church, St. Thomas' Episcopal Church, Temple Israel, Waldrop Memorial Baptist Church and Wynnton United Methodist Church invite the public to join them. Child care will be provided.

Promise Keepers — The Columbus Promise Keepers meet the second and fourth Saturdays of each month at 8 a.m. at the Po' Folks Restaurant on Airport Thruway. Promise Keepers is a men's group dedicated to strengthening families through Christian principles.

Soldiering, Christianity a proud combination

By Harry C. Huey Jr.
2nd Battalion, 58th Infantry Regiment

The young private looked wearily at the chaplain, sweat and dirt encrusting his face. "Sir," he asked, "how can you be a Christian and a soldier at the same time?"

reflections

At times, the demands of soldiering and following Christ can seem antithetical on the surface.

Several passages and episodes in the Bible teach that soldiering and Christianity are not an impossible combination. The story of Jesus and a Roman centurion, an officer in the army of Rome, is one.

One day 2,000 years ago, Jesus Christ was approached by the town elders. They asked him to go to the house of a Roman centurion and heal the centurion's slave. The slave was on his deathbed.

As Jesus approached the centurion's home, another servant stopped Jesus with the following message from the centurion: "Lord, do not trouble yourself further, for I am not worthy for you to come under my roof; for this reason I did not even consider myself worthy to come to you, but say the word and my servant will be healed. For I too am a man under authority, with soldiers under me; and I say to this one, 'Go!' and he goes; and to another, 'Come!' and he comes; and to my slave, Do this! and he does it.'"

The Bible says when Jesus heard this, he was astounded.

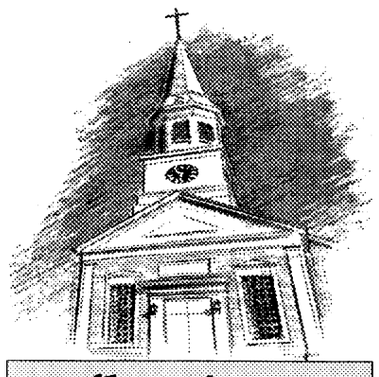
He said that nowhere had he found such great faith. Jesus then healed the centurion's slave while he was still a distance from the officer's house. In three ways, this passage shows us that there is no contradiction between being a soldier and being a Christian.

First, notice the vocation of the centurion. A centurion in the Roman army was an officer who commanded roughly one hundred men and had worked his way up through the ranks of the army. By the time he became a centurion, he was a seasoned soldier and leader of men.

Jesus didn't command the centurion to quit soldiering. He never made a moral pronouncement regarding soldiering anywhere in the Scriptures. Therefore, soldiering isn't immoral. This old soldier is praised by Christ as an outstanding example of faith.

In Romans Chapter 13, civil government, as ordained by God, is given the power to maintain law, order and security. Thus the vocation of the centurion, soldiering, has God's stamp of approval.

Second, look at the faith of the centurion. He recognized his unworthiness before Christ. He submitted himself to Jesus. He trusted Jesus could heal the slave. Submission to and trust in Jesus are the two aspects of Christian faith. Being a soldier didn't prevent the centurion from exercising faith in Jesus.



Third, examine the character of the centurion. He was a man of compassion. He cared about not only his slave but also about other Jewish people his empire had conquered. He was a man of humility. He knew his unworthiness before Christ. He was able to take orders. He was a man of leadership. He gave orders and commanded men. He had soldiered his way through the ranks to earn his position. He was a man of faith. He submitted to and trusted in Jesus.

Faith, compassion, humility and leadership — such character would create no incompatibility between being a Christian and a soldier.

There will often be tension for the Christian soldier as he or she carries out the mission. No soldier should ever violate God's law. Sometimes that tension may be huge. However, that is true in any vocation, not just soldiering.

Brutal desert teaches physical, spiritual lessons

By Alex C. Brown
13th Corps Support Battalion

reflections

The 3rd Brigade deployed to the Mojave desert, home of the National Training Center, at Fort Irwin, Calif., in August. Its primary mission was to conduct combat operations against the opposing forces. The many lessons learned included: The desert is a brutal environment; life is fragile; we are dependent.

A second-hand description of the desert is inadequate. The brutality of the desert must be experienced first hand to be fully appreciated.

Entering the Mojave by bus can be somewhat deceptive. Mountains of rocks and boulders, sparse patches of plant life and scattered dwellings of human occupation break the monotonous acres of sand. Miles and miles of open and clear, cloudless skies are dotted with big black birds (crows or ravens?) with outstretched wings floating like balloons on rising hot air.

The desert paints a beautiful picture on the tinted window of a bus. Standing in the door of the bus adds a totally new dimension to the picture. The brightness of the sun is blinding. Temperatures in excess of 155 degrees make Georgia seem cool in July. Sand-filled winds fill the eyes and mouth. Many questions come to mind, such as, "Why me? What am I doing here? Will I survive? Oh God?"

The brutality of the desert environment at noon is in contrast to its beauty at midnight. The midnight sky echoes with reminders of the presence and power of God. The rising sun paints an artistic masterpiece of colors dancing over the mountain peaks. The Psalmist's words are true, "The heavens are telling of the glory of God; and their expanse is declaring the work of His hands." (Psalm 19:1)

The brutality of the desert environment is a ready reminder of the frailty of human life. In the desert, a $6, two-quart canteen of cold water escalates in value. A meal, ready-to-eat, moves to the front of the menu as the meal of choice.

Desert survival is always the topic of safety briefings. A three-days' supply of food, water and fuel is essential cargo for the desert traveler. A map and clear directions to one's destination are a necessity. The brutal desert has no lions, tigers and bears, but there are scorpions, spiders and snakes. The NTC soldier learns that the desert and its native inhabitants can kill.

The soldier also ought to know that God provided bread from heaven and water from a rock for his people in the desert (Exodus 16-17). God ordered the ravens to bring bread to Elijah the prophet and provided water from a brook (1 Kings 17).

Jesus took a sack lunch of fish and loaves and fed 5,000. He asked a woman at a well for a drink and offered to her living water (John 4). Life is fragile and will quickly whither under the desert sun. Our soul and spirit will quickly wither if separated from God.

The brutal desert environment plus a fragile human life equals a life that is dependent. Thus a person of wisdom recognizes that he or she is dependent on God, the creator of life. The Sledgehammer 3rd Brigade flexed its military might at NTC because it had support from the 13th Corps Support Battalion.

Water, rations and ice were life-sustaining elements. Ammunition, fuel and construction materials were prime ingredients for victory. The 3rd Brigade was dependent on a platoon of truckers; a few greasy, dedicated-to-the-bone mechanics; and some sleep-lacking staff officers and commanders of the 13th CSB.

People that God used greatly, he first caused to wander in the Desert Bible Institute for a course in Dependence 101. Abraham, Moses, the people of Israel, Elijah and, yes, even his son Jesus Christ took the course. Independence is great for a nation, but it destroys an individual's walk with God.

It was never in his design that we live life independent of him. When you forget your dependence on God, expect a warning order for a desert deployment. God's lesson from the desert: "Man does not live on bread alone, but on every word that comes from the mouth of the Lord." (Deuteronomy 8:3)

Bible Sunday an evangelical event

Gideon's International program provides free Bible distribution

By Harry C. Huey Jr.
2nd Battalion, 58th Infantry Regiment

A unique opportunity occurs annually in evangelical churches throughout the U.S.

That opportunity is Bible Sunday, or as it is also known, Gideon Sunday. On that particular Lord's Day, representatives from a ministry named Gideon's International speak in thousands of pulpits across the nation and around the world. Their purpose is to inform Christians of the ministry of the Gideons and to raise support for that ministry.

The Gideons were organized in 1899 by three Christian businessmen in Wisconsin. They named their association after the old testament leader, Gideon. Their primary mission was, and still is today, evangelism. Nearly 100 years later the Gideons have a membership that numbers in the tens of thousands and is worldwide in scope.

The Gideons carry out their evangelistic mission primarily through the distribution of free copies of the Bible. Full Bibles and small New Testaments are given free of charge to hotels, students, military personnel and prisoners all over the world.

Saturday's downpours don't dampen enthusiasm for Youth football

By Lori Egan
Bayonet staff writer

The Youth Football League Bears punished the Raiders 22-0 during torrential downpours Saturday on Blue Field.

The first quarter started with the Raiders attempting two onside kicks into the rain. The game quickly went downhill for the Raiders.

The Bears dominated the field from that point on.

"After our disappointing loss last week to the Jaguars, a team we had previously beaten, we practiced hard all week to get ready for this game," said Bears coach Hulie Reynolds. "We mixed up our plays. We were known for our sweeping offense, which is what I think the Raiders were expecting us to do."

The Bears scored in the first quarter when quarterback Jonasat Hernandez ran the ball into the end zone for six points. Wide receiver Seth Meek added another two points to the score when he ran the ball in for the conversion.

The second quarter was mostly a defensive quarter that didn't see much offensive action, but both teams stuck it to each other with hard hits and powerful tackling. Even the rain came down harder. At the end of the second quarter, the score remained 8-0.

During the third quarter, the Bears offense took advantage of a weaker Raider defense when running back Timothy Monroe carried the ball into the end zone for another six points. Meek made the score 16-0 when he carried the ball over the goal line for his second two-point conversion of the game.

It stopped raining in the fourth quarter;

> "We were known for our sweeping offense, which is what I think the Raiders were expecting us to do."

but the Bears continued their reign of the football field when Julio Pagan intercepted a pass, stopping the Raiders offense cold, setting up the Bears offense for more dominating play.

The fourth quarter saw even more action when the Bears executed a halfback option. Kiki Mister threw a long pass to Meek, who scrambled ahead for a 40-yard gain, putting the Bears in scoring position again. Monroe bulldozed his way into the end zone to make the score 22-0. The two-point conversion attempt by Meek was stopped short by the Raiders' defense.

"The defense was outstanding; without the defense, we wouldn't have had offense," said Bears defensive coach Kenny Duncan.

"We played like a team," Pagan said.

Raiders head coach Walter Lusane attributed his team's loss to the weather. "We had a lot of fumbles, and then we didn't execute," he said. "The weather had a lot to do with the way we played. The rain just didn't help us."

Forgotten art of jigger poling still catches bass

By Earl Bentz and Steve Price
Outboard Marine Corporation

When professional bass fisherman Guy Eaker isn't fishing in competition, he has a chance to fish for fun and may use an old-fashioned jigger pole.

A jigger pole is a 15- to 20-foot pole with a short length of line and a topwater lure tied to its tip. The tip of the pole is used to tap the surface of the water, which in turn makes the lure dance and jump wildly.

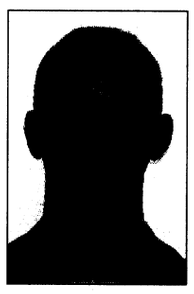
"When bass are in shallow water, it's absolutely one of the most exciting fishing techniques you can use," Eaker said. His first bass fishing experience more then 45 years ago was with a jigger pole.

"You'd swear bass wouldn't be in water so shallow, but suddenly you'd get a strike so violent it nearly pulled the pole out of your hands. You can follow right behind someone using a modern rod and reel with a crankbait or spinnerbait and catch fish that never touch those lures," Eaker said.

Eaker's father taught him the techniques when he was 5 years old. They used bamboo jigger poles, which were carefully hung to cure and dry before being used.

"We'd go down to the Santee-Cooper Lakes in South Carolina and use live bait with the jigger poles to catch striped bass," Eaker said. "The biggest fish I remember was a 32-pound striper that nearly pulled my father out of the boat."

Eaker said he had forgotten about the technique until he received a fiberglass pole in the mail.



"It even has a reel and line so it's ready to fish," Eaker said. "One of the big problems with the old poles is that the tips would break.

"With this fiberglass pole, the line runs all the way down to the reel so breakage is eliminated," Eaker said.

Jigger poling is effective because the lure can be placed precisely beside shallow cover and kept there. The commotion created by both the rod tip and the jumping lure attract bass and draw reaction strikes, Eaker said.

College bowl system needs improvement

By Brian R. Voller
Bayonet staff writer

I am a true believer in the game of college football. As a matter of fact, I like college ball a lot more than I like professional football. The only problem I have with college ball is that they almost never have a true national champion. At the end of the season there is always the stupid controversy of who the real champion is.

Right now Nebraska leads all polls as the No. 1 team in the National Collegiate Athletic Association. Behind them is the Big 10 power Ohio State, which is taking up the No. 2 spot.

A couple of weeks ago Florida State University blew any hopes of a National Championship showdown when it lost to Virginia. The loss plunged Florida State from No. 2 down to No. 6 in the polls. And because of the Rose Bowl, the top two teams will never meet.

The long-standing rule in the NCAA has been that the winner of the Big 10 and the winner of the Pac 10 go head-to-head in the Rose Bowl. It's a tradition, and it's not going to change anytime soon.

The new system in college ball has been set up to put the top two teams in the polling system in the Fiesta Bowl Jan. 2. Here they were supposed to battle it out for No. 1 and No. 2. This year was supposed to be Florida State vs. Nebraska. Not any more.

This is where the big problem comes into play. There is absolutely no way Nebraska and Ohio State will ever play each other for the National Championship. The only way they can ever meet is if they decide to play the game in a sandlot somewhere.

I think it's time the college teams and coaches sit back and think about the Bowl system again. I'll be perfectly honest — I don't have a clue how to solve the problem. The system has been in place for so long, it would take a major miracle to fix everything. It's a snowball effect that keeps getting worse every year.

The new system was supposed to solve everything; that was, unless one of the top two teams was from the Big 10 or the Pac 10. Oops! Well, I guess we can't cry over spilt milk.

Somehow the Bowl system needs to be repaired, and it needs it quick. It may not happen overnight, and it may not be fixed in one season; but if it does get fixed eventually it will make college football much better in the years to come. Wouldn't it be great if we could say there was a real national champion?

Soldiers teach gun safety

U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit

Young wildlife enthusiasts got a taste of the great outdoors — along with a good dose of gun safety tips — during the annual Ducks Unlimited membership drive hosted by the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit Sunday.

Based in Memphis, Tenn., Ducks Unlimited is one of the largest conservation organizations in the world, said Larry Neal, membership drive organizer.

"A major effort the organization is involved in is preserving our nation's wetlands and the wildlife that inhabits those regions," Neal said. It is also an organization that — through distribution of various wildlife-oriented newsletters, pamphlets and brochures — teaches its members a healthy respect for the environment.

So how do gun safety tips figure in?

Well, according to Neal, a good majority of wildlife conservation organizations are funded by hunting groups.

"And a lot of these children who came to participate in this membership drive are hunters in the making," Neal said. "While teaching them how to be safe while hunting, we also teach them various ways they can help maintain the environment."

This is done through a quarterly conservation magazine that is sent to all of Ducks Unlimited's junior members.

As far as safety is concerned, that's where the USAMU comes in, Burl Branham, USAMU Shotgun Team coach, said.

Members of Branham's team provided expert marksmanship instruction to the more than 60 children who ventured out to brave the gusty winds that swept over Hook range. From the children's perspective, the cost of suffering through the cold was well worth the knowledge they gained.

"We learned everything from how to handle a shotgun safely to aiming and firing techniques," said 12-year-old Byron Adams.

And that's the most important thing, Branham said, teaching the children that safety is a number-one priority.

AMU Olympic hopefuls sweep Nationals

U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit

U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit Olympic hopefuls swept all 16 medals awarded at the U.S.A. Shooting 300-meter Rifle National Championships, which took place this weekend.

The marksmen, all preparing for the race to the Olympics, took the gold, silver and bronze medals in all individual and team competitions, breaking one national record in team competition.

"The scores were incredible," said Robert Aylward, USAMU deputy commander and former international rifle shooter. "Anyone would see these results and do a double take. We really dominate in 300-meter competition."

Current World Military Rifle Champion Maj. Stephen Goff took gold in the three-position free rifle event, silver (after a tie-breaker) in the prone event and bronze in the standard rifle event with scores of 2330, 1186 and 1158 respectively. Teammates Capt. Matthew Suggs and Capt. Glenn Dubis took gold medals. Suggs captured his gold in prone competition with a score of 1186, and Dubis took gold in the standard rifle match.

In three-position free rifle competition, Capt. Rob Harbison captured the silver medal with a score of 2314 while Dubis was one point behind to win the bronze.

Another bronze medal went to USAMU shooter Sgt. Tom Tanias after finishing the prone match with a score of 1185 — only one point away from the gold.

Team results were just as impressive, with the USAMU taking all seven medals that were up for grabs — three gold, two silver and two bronze.

ask the judge

Staff Judge Advocate

Q: I got a divorce about five years ago, and in it, my ex-spouse agreed to pay the balance on a credit card we had. I just received a call from a bill collector who said the bill had not been paid in three months, and he wanted me to pay it. I told him about the divorce decree, but he didn't seem to care. Is this legal?

A: In a word, yes. Unfortunately, what you described happens frequently in divorce situations. If a joint debt is made during a marriage, it is made by a contract with the creditor by both spouses. Many times, when a marriage breaks up, the parties will enter into an agreement, or the court will enter an order, determining who is responsible for paying what debts. However, the creditor is never a party to the agreement or the court action in which the order is entered. As a result, neither the agreement nor the court order is binding on the creditor. As far as the creditor is concerned, both parties are still liable for the debt.

There are a couple of ways to provide some protection against this sort of thing occurring:

• The best remedy, if at all possible, is to secure from the creditor a release of liability for the spouse who is not going to be responsible for the debt. Sometimes, this will mean the responsible spouse will have to refinance the debt into his or her own name. However, if the paying spouse doesn't have good credit, this may be impossible. Sometimes, although rarely, a creditor may agree to simply release the nonpaying spouse from the debt. It certainly doesn't hurt to ask, and if the answer is "yes," be sure to get it in writing. An oral release is not legally effective.

• The next best remedy, if you are the nonpaying spouse, is to become the paying spouse. Agree to be responsible for the debts, conditioned on an agreement by the other spouse to pay you an amount equal to what would have been the debt payment. The upside of this arrangement is that you have control over the payment of the debt and know that it gets done. The downside is the question of what happens if the other spouse doesn't make timely payments to you.

• Third, if the other spouse is going to be responsible for making payments on a joint debt, insist on an agreement that you be provided with evidence, on a continuing basis, that payments are being made. Being informed will help you to take appropriate steps to protect yourself from default by the other spouse on these debts.

As to the situation posed in the question, your only remedy is to seek some accommodation from the creditor, if possible, and to take action against your ex-spouse based on his or her court-ordered responsibility to make those debt payments.

If you are in this situation, you may want to seek legal advice. Call the Legal Assistance Division at 545-3281 for an appointment.

Living trusts assist in estate planning

Georgia Society of Certified Public Accountants Inc.

Living trusts can be powerful estate planning tools. The Georgia Society of Certified Public Accountants explains that establishing such trusts can help minimize your taxes, ensure that your estate is managed effectively and distribute your assets according to your wishes. Living trusts also can help you avoid probate — the time-consuming and often costly process of validating a will.

A trust is a legal entity that is established to hold assets for your benefit or for the benefit of others determined by you. A trust is managed by one or more trustees who are legally responsible for ensuring that the trust operates according to your wishes.

One significant advantage of trusts is that beneficiaries are able to receive income from the trust, but you maintain control over how funds are distributed. For example, if you gave your 18-year-old son a $10,000 gift, he could spend the money immediately as he sees fit. However, if you established a trust instead, you could specify in the trust that the funds are to be released to your son over a set period of years or only for a specific purpose, such as college expenses.

A living trust is established between living persons, for instance, between parent and child, as opposed to a trust that is established by your will. Living trusts can be funded with securities, other property or money available for investment.

There are two types of living trusts: a revocable trust and an irrevocable trust. With a revocable living trust, you retain control of your assets while you're alive. "Revocable" means you can change beneficiaries, modify the terms of the trust and even terminate or revoke the trust and get back your property. You have the option of naming yourself as a trustee so that you can continue to manage your assets or appointing someone else as the trust's administrator.

After you die, the property in the trust is distributed directly to the beneficiaries without going through probate. As a result, estate settlement costs are likely to be reduced, and your beneficiaries will have quick access to the trust's funds. Keep in mind, however, that revocable trusts offer no federal estate tax advantage. Because you retain control over the trust, the assets in the trust are included in your estate for federal estate tax purposes and also may be subject to state death taxes.

As the name implies, an irrevocable trust cannot be changed, modified or revoked, regardless of how your personal financial circumstances might change. You also cannot name yourself as trustee. For giving up control, you get a tax benefit: Funds put in this type of trust not only help reduce your current taxable income but also generally are not subject to estate taxes because the trust owns the assets.

Another type of irrevocable trust, an irrevocable life insurance trust, often appeals to those who own substantial life insurance policies. The value of certain life insurance policies, which are normally included in your estate for tax purposes, can be excluded by creating this type of trust. However, there is a trade-off. When you transfer your insurance policies to the trust, you give up all ownership rights, the right to assign the policy to anyone and the right to borrow against the policy's cash value. When you die, the trust is the beneficiary of the policy, and the policy's value may be excluded from your estate for tax purposes.

Before spending the time and money — generally, $1,000 to $3,000 — to set up a living trust, it's wise to discuss with a CPA how the trust fits into your overall estate and financial plans. You'll want to consider whether or not you can afford to set aside funds in a trust permanently without changing your current lifestyle and the extent to which you want to provide for your heirs and beneficiaries.

Keogh plans

Retirement savings for self-employed a viable option

Georgia Society of Certified Public Accountants Inc.

Individuals with self-employment income can boost retirement savings greatly by establishing a Keogh plan. The Georgia Society of Certified Public Accountants explains that Keoghs enable the self-employed to make tax-deductible contributions to a retirement fund, and the interest accumulates, tax-deferred, until the time of withdrawal.

To take a tax deduction this year, you'll need to establish a plan by Dec. 31. However, you have until the due date of your tax return, including extensions, to make deductible contributions.

Establishing the plan

A Keogh plan must be established in writing and meet specific IRS requirements. For example, the plan should define the eligibility conditions for employees' participation and be appropriately communicated to them. Generally, the IRS requires that all employees be allowed to participate in the plan if they are at least age 21 and have a minimum of one year of service with the company.

You can write your own plan or obtain a prototype plan approved by the IRS from a sponsoring organization, including banks, trade or professional organizations, insurance companies and mutual funds. With the help of a CPA, you can tailor the plan to meet your own needs.

Types of plans

There are two types of Keogh plans: defined-contribution and defined-benefit. The best plan for you depends on your retirement-funding goals, business cash-flow needs and the extent to which you need or want to shelter taxable income.

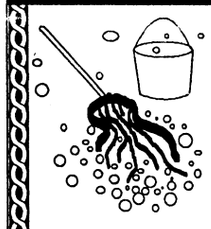
Defined-contribution plans are the most common. Under this arrangement, you can set aside a specific amount of your net earnings tax-free each year. Defined-contribution plans come in two types — profit-sharing and money-purchase. Profit-sharing plans are becoming more widespread as employers shift the retirement burden to employees.

With a profit-sharing plan, you make contributions to a Keogh for yourself and your employees based on your company's profits. Although you are not required to contribute any specific percentage of profits, you must have a written formula for allocating the profits consistently among all the employees who participate in the plan. The benefit of this type of plan is that contributions can vary from year to year based on your company's profitability.

Money-purchase plans, on the other hand, call for specific contributions. When you establish this type of Keogh, you must decide what percentage of an employee's compensation (including your own) will be contributed to the plan each year. Contributions to a money-purchase plan must be made whether the company had a profit or loss for the year.

Defined-benefit plans are based on a computation of what is needed to provide a set, definable benefit amount over the lifetime of the plan participants — including yourself. These plans are subject to minimum-funding requirements. The owner must make quarterly installments on the 15th day after the end of each tax quarter (April 15, July 15, Oct. 15 and Jan. 15).

Limits on contributions and deductions



The limits on contributions to a Keogh depend on the type of plan you establish. Annual employer contributions to a money-purchase plan cannot exceed the lesser of $30,000 or 20 percent of your earned income (not to exceed $150,000). For purposes of computing Keogh limitations, you must subtract half of your self-employment taxes in order to determine your earned income. In the case of a profit-sharing plan, the annual employer contribution cannot exceed the lesser of $30,000 or 13.043 percent of your earned income. If you maintain a combination of the two plans, the maximum combined deductible contributions are limited to $30,000 or 25 percent of earned income per year.

The annual amount you can contribute to a defined-benefit plan depends on the amount needed to provide a yearly retirement benefit limited to the lesser of $118,000 or 100 percent of your earned income, for your highest three consecutive years. Once the defined-benefit dollar limit reaches $120,000, it is adjusted for cost-of-living increases.

Distributions

As with most other retirement plans, you usually can't touch the funds in your Keogh without incurring a penalty until age 59 1/2. Also, CPAs point out that distributions typically are fully taxable, so you'll want to be sure that you're in a lower tax bracket when you finally tap into your account.

crime watch

Military Police Activity

Several instances of house-breaking have occurred on post during the last few months. Many of these crimes occurred during daylight hours, and, in some cases, neighbors either saw or heard something out of the ordinary but did not call the Military Police.

The most effective deterrent to crime in the housing areas is neighbors watching out for each other. Even with the Community Oriented Police Squad continuously patrolling the housing areas 24 hours a day, seven days a week, the possibility of an MP being at the exact location of a break-in when it occurs is highly unlikely. The community needs to assist the Military Police in fighting crime on Fort Benning.

If you observe or hear something out of the ordinary, regardless of what time of day it is, telephone the MP station and report it. It's far better for the MPs to respond and find that people returned early from a vacation than to receive a call a few days later that they had all their possessions stolen by someone who broke into their quarters.

The following entries were extracted from the Fort Benning Military Police Blotters. Such entries may be incomplete and do not determine the guilt or innocence of anyone.

• A second lieutenant was charged with driving under the influence of alcohol. While on routine patrol, the MPs observed a vehicle parked adjacent to the main entrance gate of Fort Benning. A traffic stop was made, and upon contact with the driver a strong odor of an unknown alcoholic beverage was detected. The soldier was then administered a field sobriety test which he failed. He then was transported to the MP station and administered a breathalyzer test with a result of .107. The soldier was further processed, issued suspension of post driving privileges and released to his unit.

• A private first class was charged with shoplifting. He was observed removing a pair of sunglasses from the display shelf and placing the item in his front pocket. He then exited the store without rendering proper payment, at which time he was detained.

Upon the arrival of the MPs he was apprehended and transported to the MP station where he was further processed, issued ID card confiscation orders, suspension of post exchange privileges and released to his unit.

Other activities include three cases of driving under the influence of alcohol, nine traffic accidents, 10 cases of larceny and three cases of shoplifting.

Remember to help "Make Our Post The Best — Give Crime Arrest." Report any activity that seems wrong or out of place to the Military Police at 545-5223 or 545-5224 or the "Crime In Progress" line at 545-5222.

TIPS FOR MAKING YOUR AD MORE EFFECTIVE

- Start Your ad with the item you are selling, service you are offering, or job title you are looking to hire.
- Be descriptive. The more information you provide to the reader, the better the responses will be to your ad.
- Use bold type, white space of decorative characters such as stars, to bring attention to your ad.
- Run your ad for an ample length of time. Remember, as soon as you get results, you can cancel at any time .
- Always include the price of your item.

SOA hosts conference

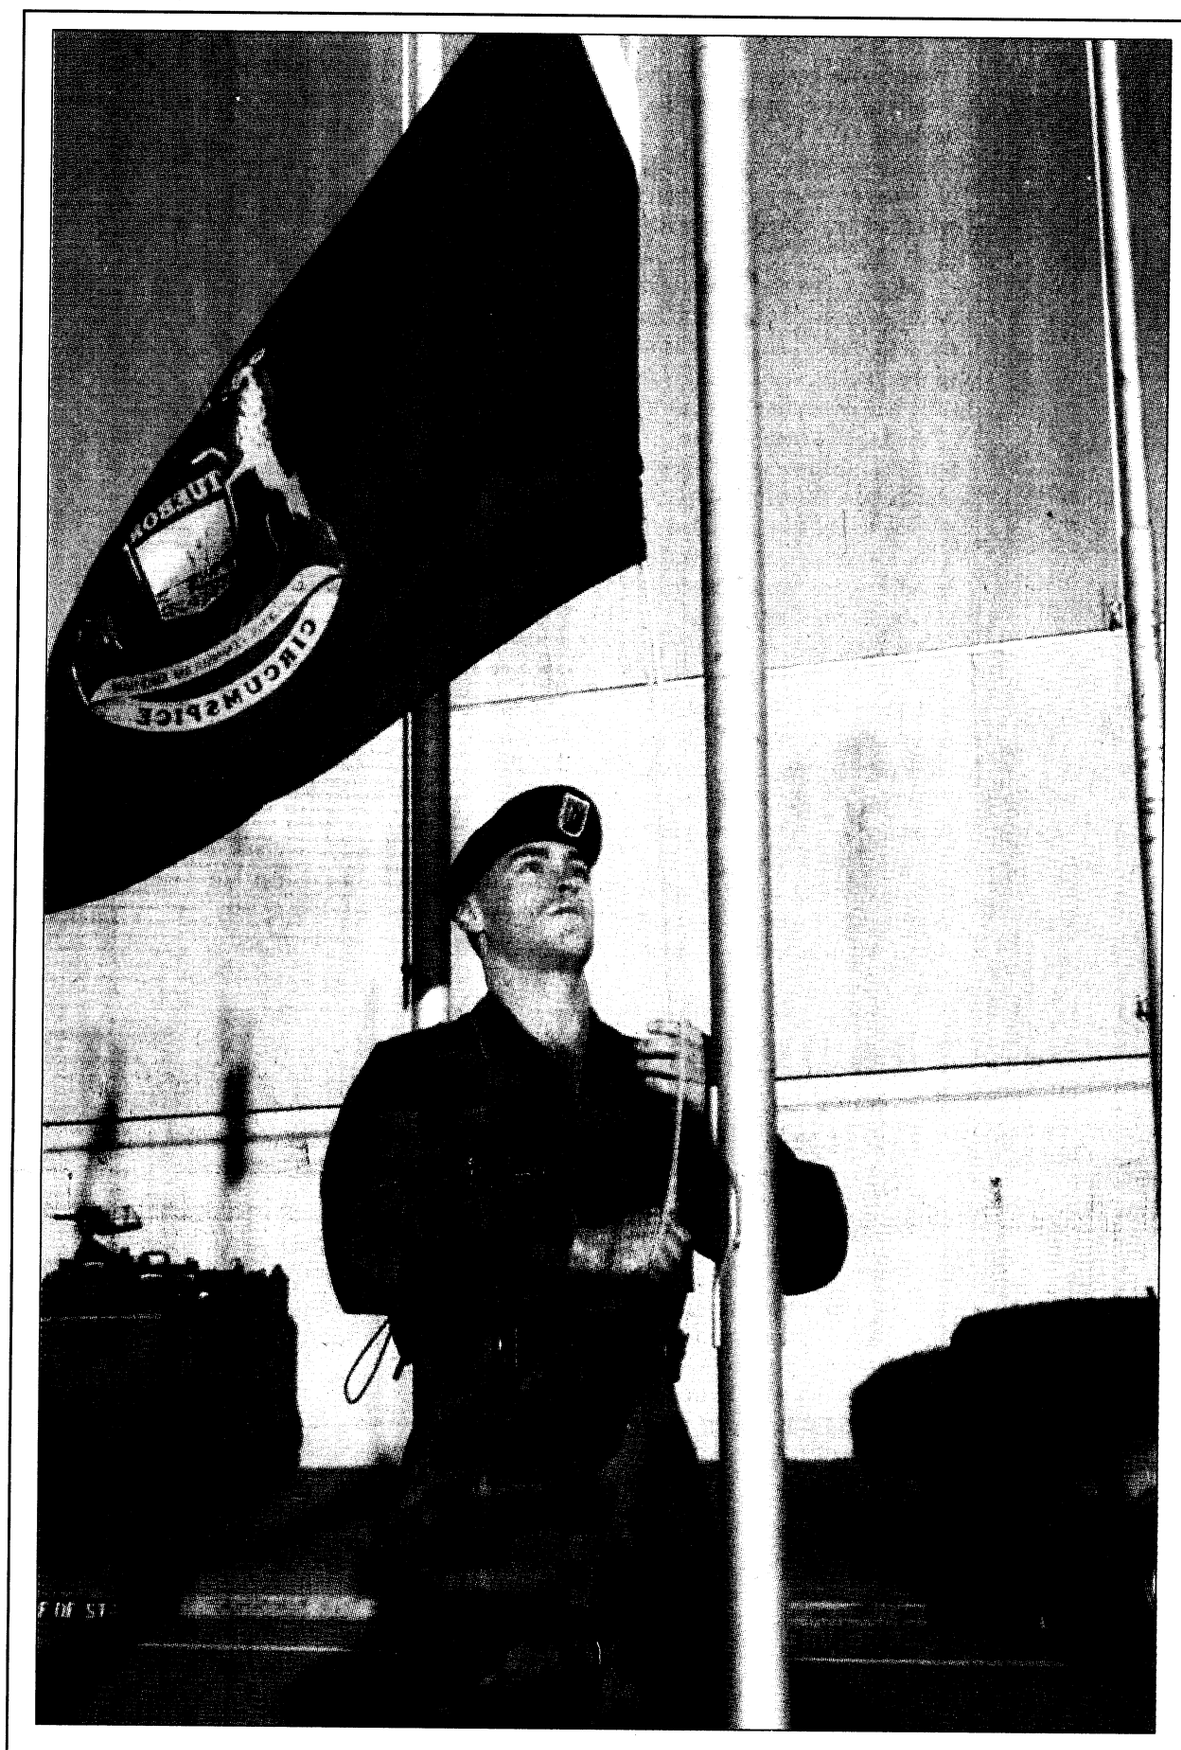
Latin America and US officers attend the seventh Latin American conference Thursday.

By Judith Ginder
School of the Americas

Civilian and military leaders from Latin and North America were at the School of the Americas Thursday and Friday for the Seventh Latin American Conference.

The conference, hosted by the school, focused on peacekeeping operations. SOA staff and students joined the delegates to share information, learn from past experiences and discuss ways to proceed in the future.

"Everyone at this year's Latin American Conference is familiar with struggle," said Col. Roy Trumble, SOA commandant. "Democracy is not free; it is earned through hard work and constant vigilance.



"We are here today ... to strive for a better relationship with all of the nations and peoples of Latin America. The students, countries and organizations here today represent the future," he said.

The face of future U.S. operations is multinational, said Maj. William Lin, conference operations officer. He explained that, thanks to the education received by thousands of Latin Americans at SOA, officers throughout the hemisphere are familiar with U.S. doctrine. Should a regional crisis arise, the nations will already have a common doctrinal ground.

But there are plenty of other challenges facing peacekeeping forces, as Gen. Barry McCaffrey discussed as keynote speaker at a conference dinner Thursday night. McCaffrey is the commander in chief of U.S. Southern Command, with headquarters in Panama.

Today, 14 Latin American countries are taking part in U.N. peacekeeping activities. In fact, the Soldiers train on 'Own the Night' technology

By April N. Olsen
USAIC Public Affairs Office

FORT POLK, La. —"Bravo team this is Alpha team. Move to bike light and set up overwatch."

Bravo team follows the bike light, a pulsating infrared beacon, moves into positlon and sets up a "Y" using tube lighting before moving to the far side of the pickup zone.

The squad leader radios the helicopter pilot for extraction.

By this time, enemy forces have discovered the squad and begin closing in.

"Alpha team this is Bravo team. A squad-size element is moving onto the southwest corner of the PZ. Watch my laser."

The Bravo team leader identifies the enemy to the rest of the squad by pointing a laser beam, seen only by the squad wearing night vision goggles.

"Bravo team this is Alpha team. I see the enemy, I will initiate contact by fire."

A firefight begins and the squad leader radios the pilot: "Zulu one one this is Papa Oscar four. Go around LZ is hot."

The pilot replies, "Roger, understand LZ is hot."

Minutes later, the squad has suppressed the enemy fire.

During the mission infantry soldiers avoided a fatal firefight by using "Own the Night" technology used in Warrior Focus, an Army Warfighting Experiment, conducted by Fort Benning's Dismounted Battlespace Battle Lab at the Joint Readiness Training Center at Fort Polk, La.

Although this was only an exercise, it demonstrated how a soldier can benefit on the battlefield by using some of the almost 30 pieces of "Own the Night" technology.

Charles Thornton, chief of the Dismounted Forces Division of the DBBL said some of the items are issued to units, but many are available form off-the-shelf purchase.

During the exercise, the team placed laser tube lighting and connected it to a sensor connected to a PRC-77 radio. Clicking five times on the radio turns the lighting on. When the soldier is ready to turn the lighting off, he clicks five more items.

The team leader in the exercise used a ground command pointer or GCP-1A, to identify the enemy. The GCP, an eye-safe infrared laser pointer and illuminator, can provide clandestine target destination and illumination for night

Thanksgiving on post

Dining facility food service specialists, kitchens heat up as feast day approaches

By Shannon Day
Special to The Bayonet©

It's that time of year again, when the malls begin to play "Deck the Halls" and the thought of long holiday weekends with lots of relatives and that delicious aroma of turkey and dressing wafting from the kitchen puts a little perk in our step.

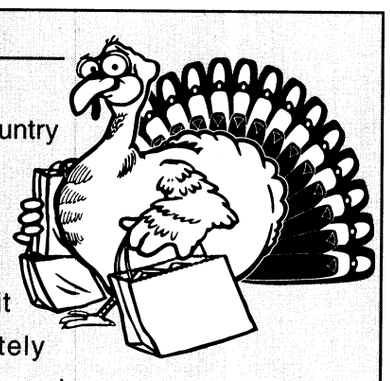
Wait a minute. What if people have no kitchen to cook in or not enough relatives at Fort Benning or Columbus to cook a grandiose meal for? Should they just sit at home and eat chili dogs or Spam sandwiches?

Not if the dining facilities at Fort Benning have any say in the matter! The dining facilities are going all-out to ensure the Thanksgiving and holiday season is a special time for everyone including single soldiers and retired service members, according to Sgt. 1st Class Howard L. Goehring, food service sergeant, 3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment.

"The cooks will be up all night before Thanksgiving preparing for the next day," he said. "We will have the traditional ice-sculpted shrimp boat, a Bible cake, decorated turkeys, cornucopias and decorative centerpieces."

He said the cooks see this time of year as a food specialist Army Training and Evaluation Program.

"It takes a special breed of people to be cooks day in and day out," he said. "They realize this is a hard time, especially for single soldiers. These special efforts help commanders boost morale this time of year."



To give the cooks more incentive, all of the dining facilities on post have a contest for the best decorations. The 3rd Bn., 75th Ranger Regt., Dining Facility has won the competition for the last three years running. They are working hard to win again this year, according to Goerhing.

"Each of the cooks has to make an individual centerpiece," he said. " We will judge them, and the winner will get a three-day pass."

On Thanksgiving Day, all retired service members are invited to eat at the Follow Me Dining Facility, Building 73. It will be open from 11:30 a.m. to 2:30 p.m., and the cost is $11.80 per person. For reservations, contact Ed Hilton at 545-3750 or 545-7970.

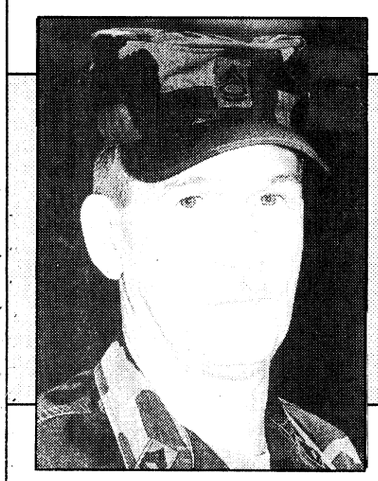
As cooks around the country prepare for Thanksgiving company, Fort Benning's Food Services is doing some multiplication as it prepares for approximately 17,000 soldiers and family members.



As head of post food services, Ed Hilton is accustomed to multiplying recipes.

Here is what it takes to feed a crowd of 17,000...

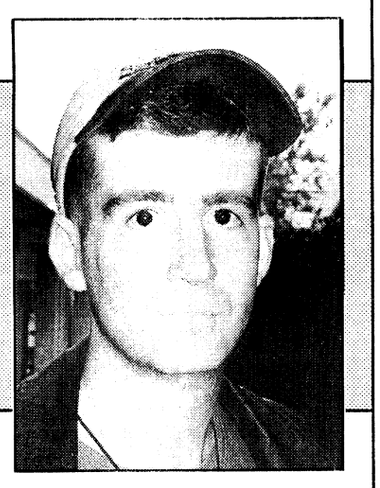
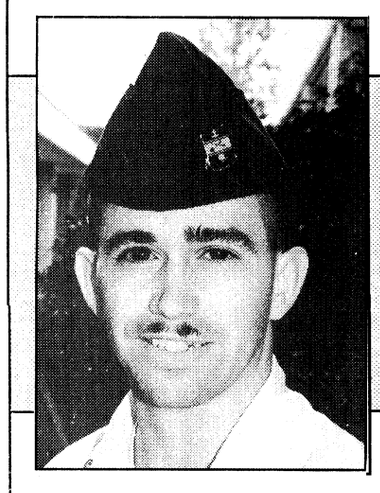
VARIOUS VOICES

What are you most thankful for this Thanksgiving?



Sgt. 1st Class John H. Ohrt, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 1st Battalion 11th Infantry Regiment — "I'm most thankful for my family. I'm thankful that we're close to each other."



Avon Smith, family member — "I'm thankful for living in good health, but mostly I'm thankful that my family is alive and in good health."

Ava Wilkes, family member — "I'm most thankful for my family and good health."

Pfc. Jason M. Hoag, Company C, 1st Battalion, 18th Infantry Regiment — "I'm most thankful that I'm almost done with my two-year enlistment. I did my time, and I did it honest."

Spc. Jeff A. Gatts, 317th Engineer Company — "I'm thankful because I just got married this year, and I have a baby on the way. It's been a good year."

Diane Delp, family member — "We just got back from Germany, so I'm thankful to return to the states and for the closeness of my relatives."

It's a good time to count your blessings

By Agatha Hudson Debrow
Bayonet editor

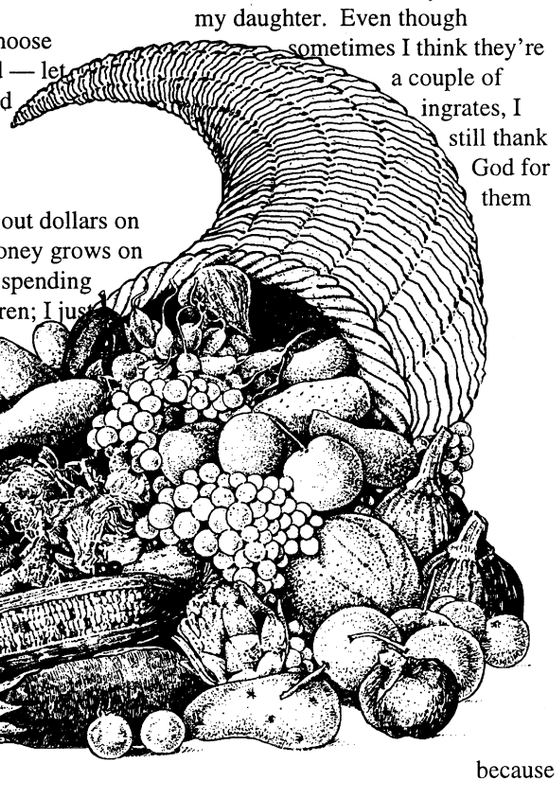
Agatha Hudson Debrow is thankful for what she has.

Whatever happened to gratitude, sincere appreciation, thankfulness, counting your blessings?

I took my 18-year-old daughter shopping in Atlanta last year for her birthday and bought her more than $500 worth of clothes.

commentary

While we were there, she was cranky, unenthusiastic and acted as if she could not care less if she got anything.



I offered to buy more — a pair of shoes, a purse, jeans — but, she was tired and hungry and ready to go.

I don't know about you, but when someone is offering to buy me something, I usually accept (depending on who's making the offer and depending on what it is).

As I tried to analyze her attitude, I thought about my own childhood. Even though both my parents worked — my father drove a bus and my mother worked at a laundry — we were, by today's standards, considered poor.

My three brothers and I had plenty to eat, we lived in a decent house and wore clean clothes (although sometimes they were other people's hand-me-downs). When my parents would take us shopping for clothes in the fall before school began and at Christmas — each one of us would usually get two outfits and a pair of shoes. My parents never spent $500 at any one time on all of us — combined.

I didn't get to choose everything I wanted — let alone a certain brand or color. I was happy to get something, period.

Today, we dole out dollars on our children like money grows on trees. I don't mind spending money on my children; I just want them to realize they're blessed, and I want them to be thankful for what they have.

Despite my children's attitude, I'm thankful for things I have, things I don't have and things I'm going to get:

• I'm thankful for life — God didn't have to allow me to live, but he did and I appreciate that and try to live each day to the fullest and to his glory.

• I'm thankful for my health and strength and peace of mind.

• I'm thankful for having the basic necessities of life — food, clothing, shelter, transportation, a job and more.

• I'm thankful for having loving parents who are in good health and who remain an important part of my life.

• I'm thankful for my son and my daughter. Even though sometimes I think they're a couple of ingrates, I still thank God for them because parenting teaches you a lot about life.

• I'm thankful for my oldest brother Lawrence who, no matter how I mess up, still loves me regardless. I'm also thankful for my baby brother Lamar who offers me the challenge of loving him in spite of everything.

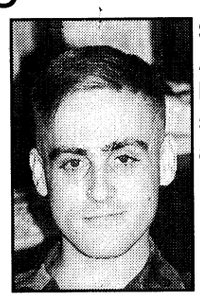
• I'm thankful for great co-workers — Sgt. Robin Shawlinski, Spc. Lisa Hibbert, Spc. Lori Egan, Pfc. Brian Voller and Donna Budjenska. We work well together as a team to get the job done. As Mary Lou Retton, the first American gymnast to win an individual medal in Olympic competition and winner of a gold medal in the 1984 Summer Olympics, put it at a recent seminar I attended, T-E-A-M stands for Together Everyone Achieves More. We have that attitude at The Bayonet, and I'm happy to be a part of it.

• I'm thankful for having friends who care about me. Many people just need and want someone to talk to. I'm thankful to have several people I can call and talk to whenever I have the need.

• I'm thankful to be living in the land of the free. Thank God I don't live in Bosnia-Herzegovina, The Middle East, Somalia or some other place filled with economic or political strife.

• Finally, I'm most thankful for my personal relationship with Jesus Christ as my lord and savior. Because of this relationship, I can enjoy many of life's joys, and I can face adversity with a strength I never knew I had.

This Thanksgiving, count your blessings and focus on what you have instead of what you don't have; and, when someone does something nice for you, let him or her know you appreciate it.



As for my daughter, she eventually expressed her gratitude.

Three days after our shopping trip when she was heading out the door to her college class, she left me a note on the kitchen counter saying, "Thanks for everything."

I'm sure she was talking about the clothes.

It's the little things that matter for single soldiers

By Caejar A. Cox
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Sgt. Caejar A. Cox believes small things are important.

In my opinion Better Opportunities for Single Soldiers issues seem to come and go — not enough laundry facilities, need more recreational equipment in the day rooms and a plethora of others.

commentary

But recently while house-sitting for some married friends, I realized it's the little things that get overlooked.

I'm not the average single soldier. I was 21 when I went through basic training; at the same time I went through a divorce, and I have a 6 year-old daughter. So my biggest problem as a single soldier is being treated like a child, but that's another commentary.

Now I'll start from the outside and work my way in.

While staying at my friends' quarters, I realized they have a carport. I have a car and a motorcycle but no shelter to park them under. Did you know that if you don't park your motorcycle under some kind of shelter, your insurance rates are higher?

On the way to their front door, you sense the smell of fresh cut grass. Sure, as a single soldier I get the chance to cut grass, but after a day on detail mowing the grass around the barracks (about the size of a football field), I'm not thinking about how nice it smells.

The next thing? A mail box. Theirs is located about three feet from the front door. Is that convenient or what? Living in the barracks, I can't have something sent to me next-day mail, because it takes forever to get through the unit post office.

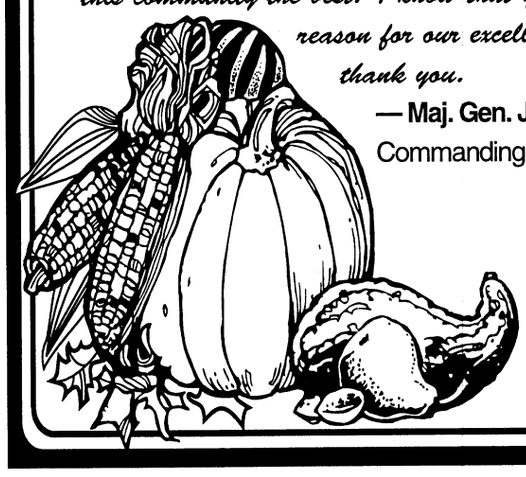
Also, they have a kitchen. Not a hotplate (which I'm not allowed to have in the barracks), but a full blown kitchen —one with an oven with gas burners, two-sinks and a full-size refrigerator.

The thing I miss most — dogs. No pets in the barracks. A very private person like me needs the companionship of someone other than the kind you pay for on Victory Drive.

Sometimes the people in charge think of single soldiers as less than adult, and they're just looking for the next party. I mean after all, one of the biggest things the BOSS program was recognized for was the new enlisted club. I am a noncommissioned officer and can't go there.

The single soldiers I know still go off post to the clubs because the majority of the people at Fort Benning's E-club are airborne students who are only here for three weeks.

Although I started by saying it's the little things, they're not little to me.



Thanksgiving message

It is a pleasure for me to extend to each of you best wishes for a happy, healthy and prosperous Thanksgiving Holiday. This past year has been filled with blessings for the soldiers, civilians and families at Fort Benning. It is certainly appropriate and timely that we pause with all of America and celebrate this important and historic festival. We have so much for which to be thankful.

We are thankful for this free land, preserved for us through the hard work and sacrifice of our forefathers. We have inherited a way of life and personal freedom that is the envy of the entire world. The nations of the world see us as the example of how to build a thriving democracy. The hungry look to us for food and the oppressed look to us for deliverance.

Our abundance brings with it a responsibility to share what we have with those throughout the world who are less fortunate. America's Army stands ready to provide aid and assistance anywhere at any time. I am particularly thankful to have the privilege of serving with Fort Benning's soldiers, civilians and families. Your hard work has made this community the best. I know that you are the reason for our excellence, and I thank you.

Rangers learn about the big Wheels

By John Townsend
3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment

Rangers from 1st Platoon, Company C, 3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment, participated in a completely new type of training recently when they ventured to Phenix City and conducted tractor-trailer familiarization training.

The rangers who participated are part of a jump clearing team.

The equipment and the instruction was provided free by Trans Tech Training Systems, Phenix City. George Mock and Joe Stanley were the instructors. They were both previously in the Army.

The training fulfilled the need to have personnel who were familiar with this type of equipment and could use it if the need arose.

"The instructors provided many different tactical situations and techniques to enhance the rangers' knowledge,'' said Spc. David Rowan.

The team is tasked with the mission of jumping onto an enemy airfield and clearing it of obstacles so that follow-on elements can airland safely.

As part of this mission, they may have to move heavy equipment or vehicles.

"If you look around the world, almost every country has some type of heavy equipment," said Mock, director of recruiting for Trans Tech Training Systems. "It's easy to get and just as easy to place across an airfield."

The training, which took place during a two-day period at Trans Tech's training facility, taught 20 rangers how to drive the tractor trailer, start the vehicle using field expedient methods, inspect the vehicle for tampering and booby-traps, and flip the vehicle over so that it may be used as a roadblock or prevent others from using it.

Heath A. Hubbuch

Joe Stanley, of Trans Tech Training Systems, shows members of 1st Platoon, Company C, 3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment, where to check the oil on a tractor trailer.

This part of the training was an explanation without demonstration or practical application. As a bonus the rangers were also shown how to operate construction equipment.

The unit requested the training as part of its continued efforts to provide for all contingencies. In the past, the rangers have trained with the 36th Engineers and have learned how to operate many different types of heavy equipment such as dozers, graters, scrapers and five-ton trucks.

"This training event introduced the rangers to something new that the military could not provide and to a possible career field if they chose to leave the military in the future," said Sgt. Heath A. Hubbuch, rangers' noncommissioned officer in charge of the team.

"There is a shortage of truck drivers and equipment operators in the United States, and separated Army soldiers make the best drivers because of their experience and maturity," Mock said.

Scholarship applications available

Retired Officers Association

During the 1996-97 school year, 800 students will receive $2,500 interest-free loans from The Retired Officers Association Educational Assistance Program. These loans, now totaling $2 million, will be awarded annually for up to five years of undergraduate study to unmarried undergraduate students, under the age of 24, who are children of active, reserve and retired service personnel and their surviving spouses.

Since students can obtain up to $12,500 of interest-free support for five years of undergraduate study and loan repayment is after graduation, the competition for these loans will be keen.

For the 1995-96 school year, some 1,000 students competed for 225 openings. The students were selected on their scholastic ability, participation in extracurricular and community activities, as well as financial need. From 800 students receiving loans, 164 received special $500 grants in addition to the loans. All who were awarded loans were automatically considered for the grants. A limited number of other grants, ranging from $500 to $2,500, are also available.

The TROA Educational Assistance Program has expanded to include the children of active duty, Reserve, National Guard and retired officers, warrant officers and enlisted members of the Army, Navy, Air Force, Marine Corps, Coast Guard, U. S. Public Health Service and National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration.

Since this program was initiated, some 4,500 students have received interest-free loans totaling more than $16.5 million.

TROA Educational Assistance applications for the 1996-97 school year are now available. Applications should be requested by Feb. 15, and the completed application must be postmarked on or before March 1.

For applications and more information, write to TROA Educational Assistance Program Administrator (09D), 201 N. Washington St., Alexandria, Va. 22314-2539 or call (800) 245-TROA(8762) Ext. 169 or e-mail schol@troa.org.

ITB reups to receive retention award

By Andre Sison
Infantry Training Brigade

The Commanding General's Excellence in Retention Trophy (small category) will be retired to the Infantry Training Brigade for Fiscal 1995, making this the second year in a row ITB has won the award.

ITB Career Counselor Sgt. 1st Class Toni McNair attributes the brigade's success in the retention program to a very good command climate that shows an interest in having quality soldiers reenlist.

"The bottom line is, very few of our qualified soldiers ETS compared to most units," McNair said.

ITB had Fort Benning's highest percentage of initial term and mid-career soldiers re-enlist. The brigade's top retention noncommissioned officer was Staff Sgt. Alain Tyler of the 2nd Battalion, 58th Infantry Regiment, for accomplishing 600 percent of his reenlistment mission.

"With the draw down going on in the Army, it makes it difficult to keep the best," Tyler said.

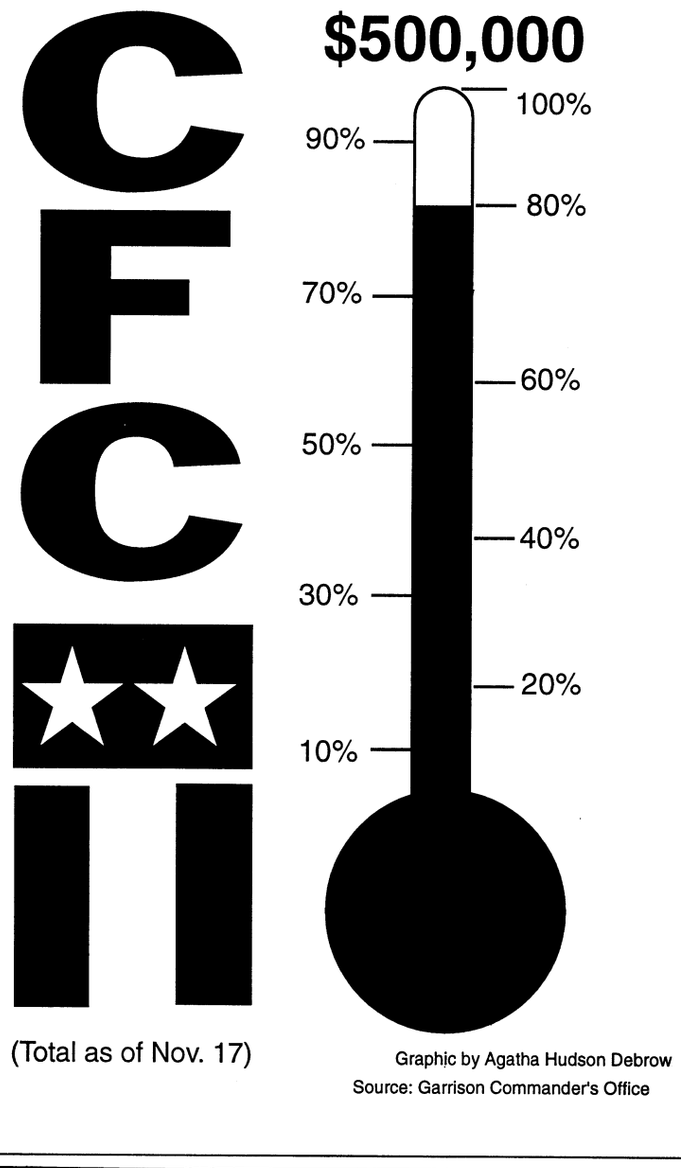
Department of Veterans Affairs

Q: What period of time is recognized for service in the Persian Gulf War?

A: The Persian Gulf War period began Aug. 2, 1990. Its end has not yet been determined. That will be established by law or presidential proclamation.

Q: What is the law that provides for compensation of U.S. veterans who have unexplained illnesses related to their service in the Persian Gulf?



A: It is Public Law 103-446, the Veterans Benefits Improvement Act of 1994, which President Clinton signed into law Nov. 2, 1994. The law authorized the Department of Veterans Affairs to pay compensation to any Persian Gulf veteran suffering from a chronic disability from an undiagnosed illness or a combination of undiagnosed illnesses that became manifest during Persian Gulf service, or, to a degree of 10 percent or more, within a specific time frame following Gulf service.

VA began compensating Persian Gulf veterans after publication of a regulation Feb. 3 in the Federal Register. The regulation lists 13 categories of undiagnosed illness or illnesses that must manifest within two years of leaving the Persian Gulf theater of operations.

The 13 categories are not exclusiye and other signs and symptoms could qualify for compensation purposes. The 13 categories are: fatigue, signs or symptoms involving skin; headache; muscle pain, joint pain, neurologic signs or symptoms; neuropsychological signs or symptoms; signs or symptoms involving the respiratory system (upper or lower); sleep disturbances; gastrointestinal signs or symptoms; cardiovascular signs or symptoms; abnormal weight loss; and menstrual disorders.

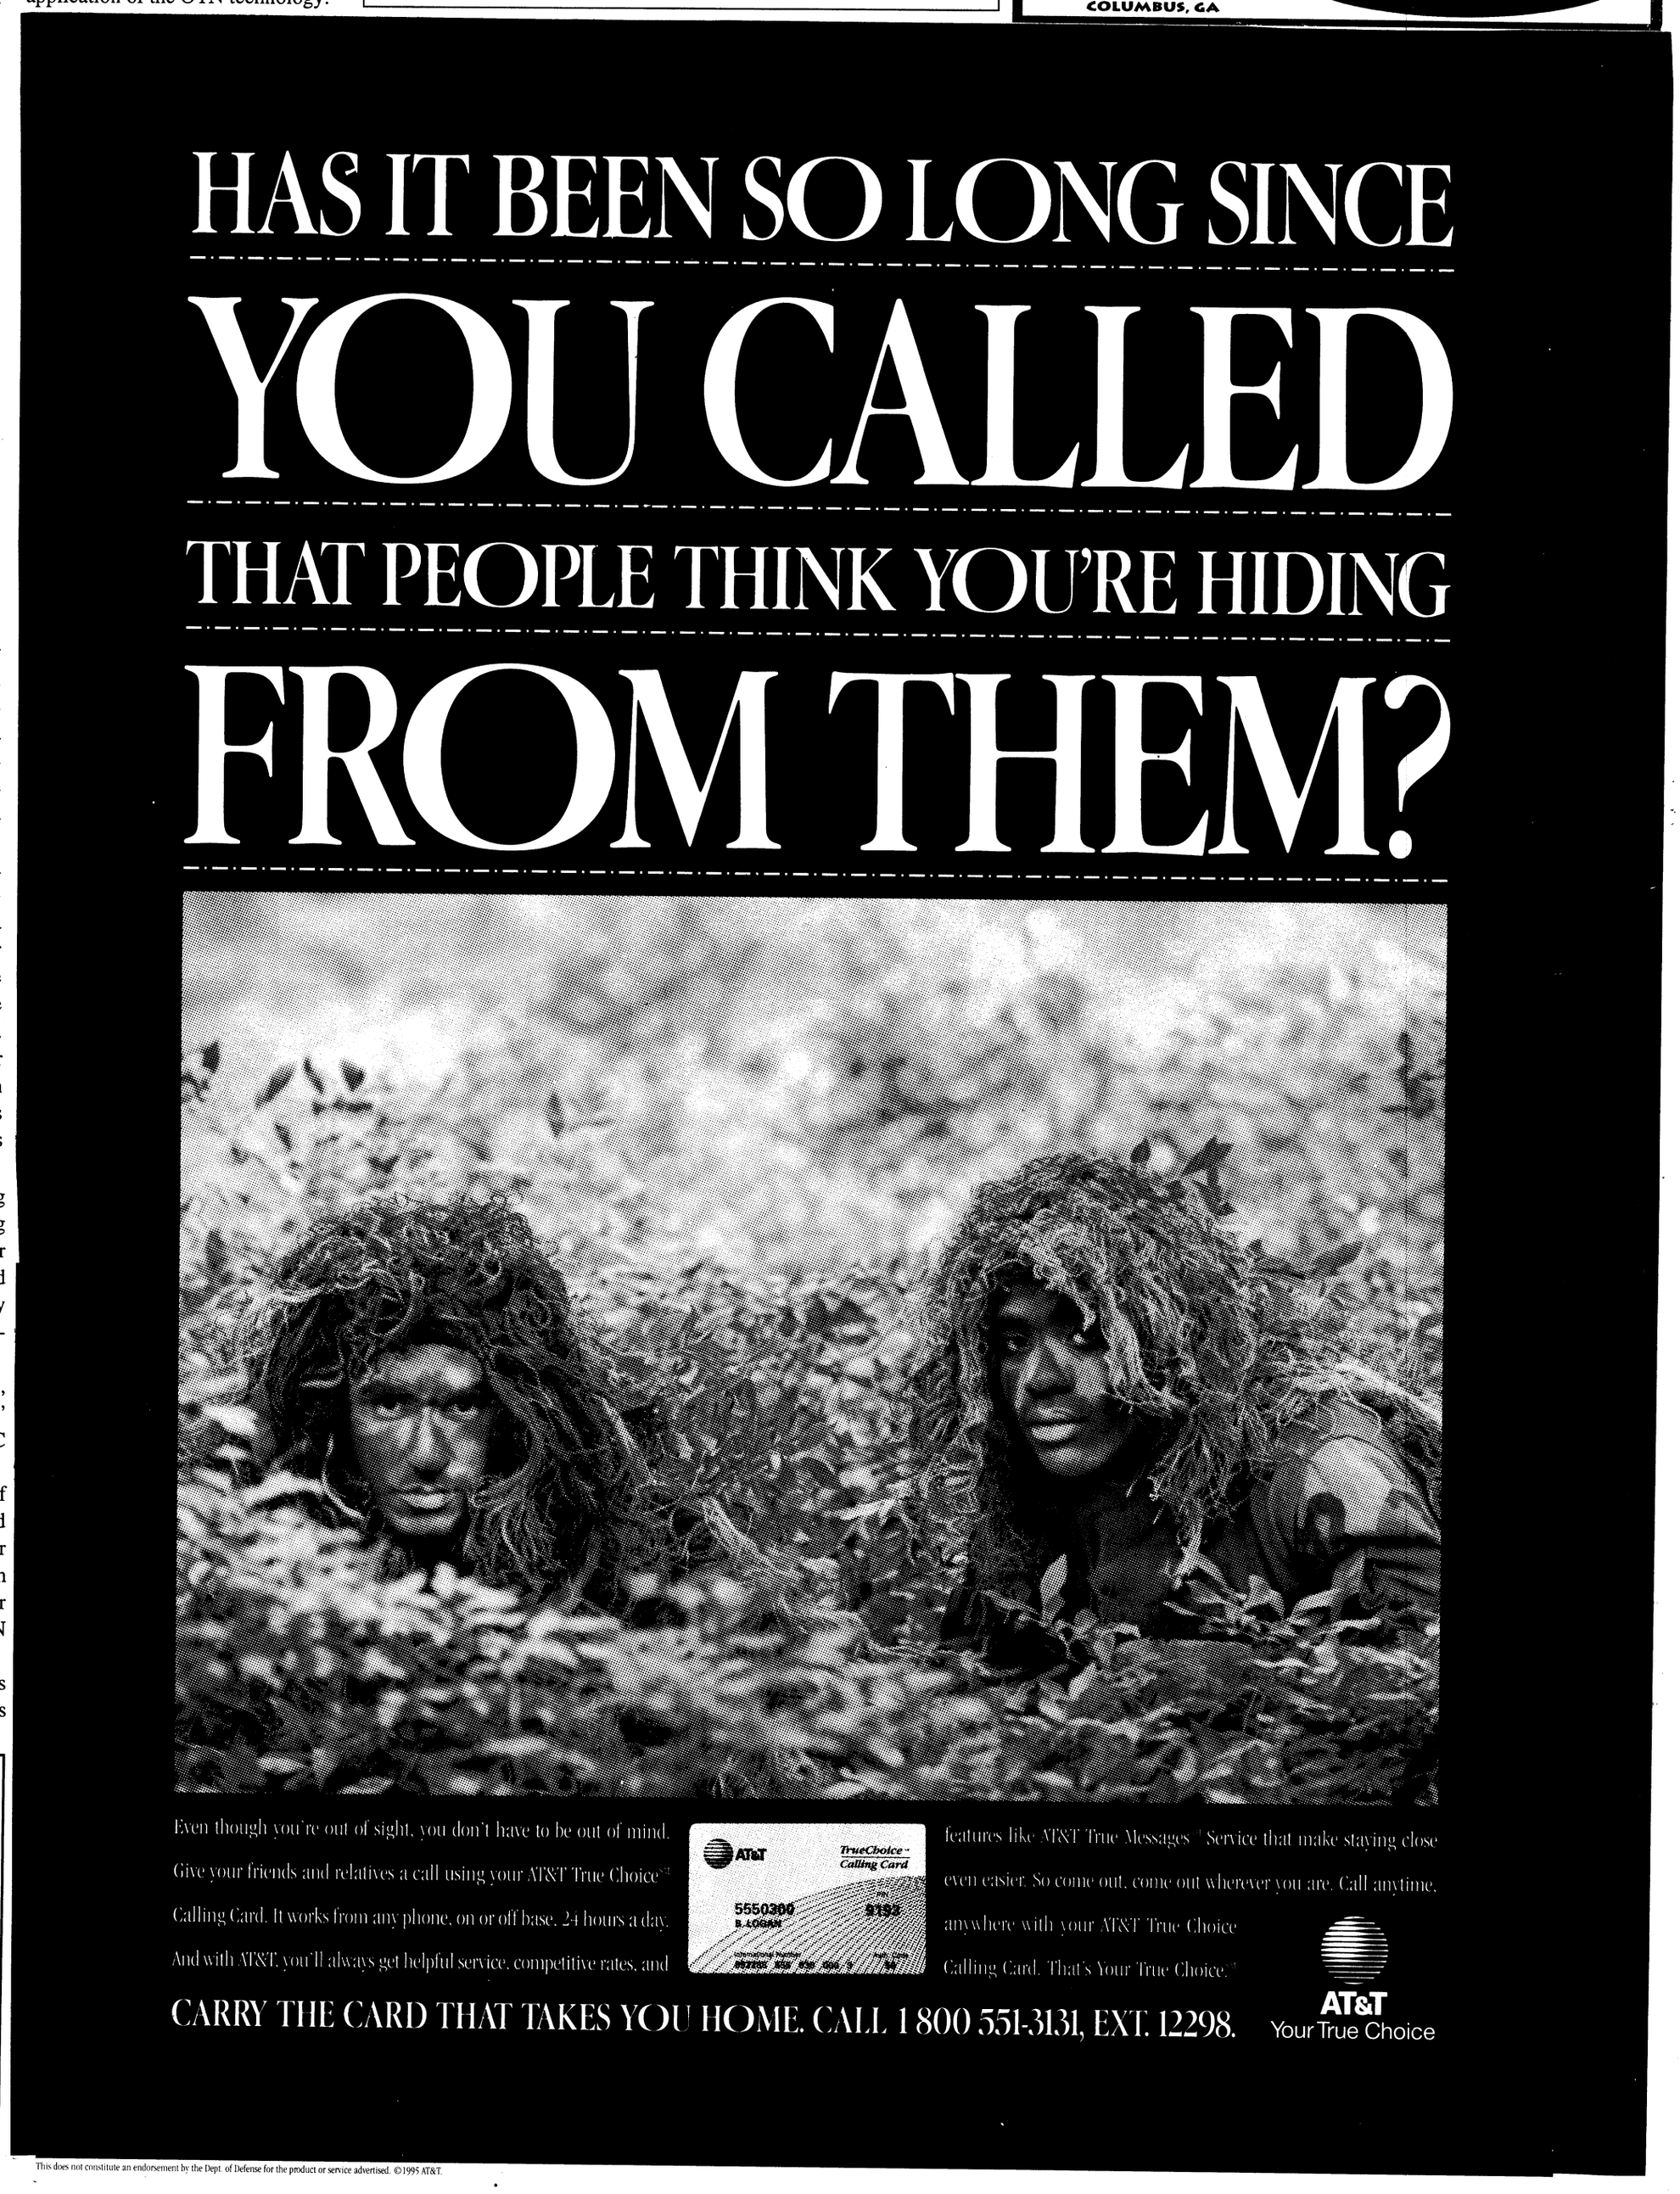
Ken McDonald, a project officer from Fort Benning, said the beam can be adjusted from a thin beam to a wide beam and serve as a laser flashlight. For Warrior Focus, the GCP is being used by platoon leaders and squad leaders to enhance command and control while using NVGs. Other uses include designating targets and redirecting aim of fire. By pointing out the enemy and directing their friendly fire, the squad in the exercise more efficiently and effectively eliminated the enemy force.

The AN/PVS-7B night vision goggles, already in Army issue, are designed to enhance the dismounted soldier's ability to navigate, acquire and engage targets while conducting combat operations at night and during periods of limited visibility.

During Warrior Focus, soldier form Fort Drum's 10th Mountain Division equipped with the AN/PVS-7B are also using a helmet mount to provide more comfort and endurance while wearing the NVGs for extended periods of time.

Also available to units and used in the exercise, is the AN/PAQ-4B/C Laser Aiming Light, a pulsating infrared aiming laser designed for use with NVGs. The Laser Aiming Light mounts on the M-16, M-4, M-203 and M-249. Once bore-sighted, the laser provides a pulsating laser spot on the target to enhance a soldier's ability to effectively engage targets while using NVGs.

The AIM-1 Laser Aiming Light, also being used during Warrior Focus, was designed for use with the M-249, M-60 and MK-19. It is being used by automatic riflemen and crew-served weapons crews.



"From the live fire exercises, the results were excellent," Thornton said of the JRTC exercises during Warrior Focus.

McDonald said these pieces of equipment were previously tested at Fort Benning and other locations. Soldiers equipped with OTN equipment fired much better than soldiers without the OTN equipment.

McDonald said the DBBL plans to use results form Warrior Focus to determine future training strategies to ensure proper application of the OTN technology.

profile in excellence

Name: Spc. Sandra A. Kisters
Position: Better Opportunities for Single Soldiers Program representative
Unit: 926th Medical Detachment
MOS: 91S
Job Title: Preventive medicine specialist
Years on the job: Six years
Hometown: Dover, Del.

What were your reasons for joining the Army? To travel and do something different.

What were your reasons for choosing your MOS? I reclassified to 91S. Health care is important.

What person has most influenced your military career? Staff Sgt. Walter Harriston, my first platoon sergeant.

If you were the sergeant major of the Army for a day, what improvements would you make? I would try to make Congress understand the importance of quality of life for all soldiers and push to get that quality of life improved for everyone.

What are your future career plans? I would like to finish school and become a registered nurse.

What do you think about the BOSS program and why is it important?. The BOSS program is important for the direct communication link between the commanders and the soldiers.

What have you accomplished as the BOSS representative for your unit? I just make sure that the program has a constant flow of communication. The BOSS Council got Col. Thomas Bailey to notice the problems with the barracks, and he contacted the Directorate of Public Works for its help to fix the ongoing problems.

In your opinion, how can the individual soldier get involved in the BOSS program? Be a unit representative or alternate and participate in all BOSS activities. Support for the program is the best way to keep it active and let others know about it.

What specifically has the BOSS program done to help the soldiers in your unit? The support from DPW is being noticed by everyone.

Documents can help separating soldiers

Army Career and Alumni Program

Your military experience and training may be invaluable assets in a civilian career — but only if you can communicate your abilities to a prospective employer

Your military experience and training may be invaluable assets in a civilian career — but only if you can communicate your abilities to a prospective employer.

If you are planning to use a resume to get your message across, your Department of Defense Form 2586 (Verification of Military Experience and Training) can be a useful tool.

VMET statements list military job experiences and training histories, recommended civilian college credit information and any civilian equivalent job titles. They are provided to separating and retiring soldiers who have served a minimum of 180 days on active duty.

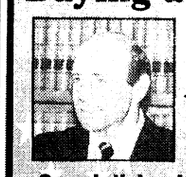
If you are separating, you should receive your VMET statement automatically, at your unit mailing address, about 150 days from your separation date. If you are within 30 days of your separation date and have not received this document or separated between Oct. 1, 1990, and Sept. 14, 1992, you will need to call or write to: PRC, Inc., ATTN: VMET, Suite 401, 2900 Eisenhower Ave., Alexandria, Va. 22314, (800) 258-8638.

VMET documents have proven themselves to be useful for enlisted soldiers and warrant officers. It has been less useful for commissioned officers because officers lack accurate duty descriptions and VMET is an automated document. Because of this, the Army has temporarily suspended automatic VMET distribution for commissioned officers.

In the near future, modified versions of the VMET will be issued to commissioned officers. The modified VMET will show military training histories, combining Officer Record Briefs and officer evaluation reports to provide a picture of an officer's training, skills and experience.

Don't confuse your VMET document with an Army or American Council on Education Registry Transcript System AARTS transcript. AARTS transcripts are records of your active duty military education experiences, including training for which you may receive college credits. Of course, acceptance of credit recommendations will depend on the policies and procedures of the school you choose to attend.

If a college or university accepts AARTS credit recommendations, and those credits are awarded on their official college transcript, AARTS credit recommendations may be applied toward Army promotion points.



Besides helping you get college credits, an AARTS transcript can supplement your resume, giving prospective employers a clearer picture of the skills you learned in the Army.

Three kinds of learning are recognized on an AARTS transcript — successful completion of formal service school courses (longer than 45 hours), successfully held military occupational specialties and passing scores in college-level tests such as the Scholastic Aptitude Test, College Level Examination Program and American College Testing Program.

All enlisted soldiers and veterans with a basic active service date on or after Oct. 1, 1981, may receive an AARTS transcript. Requests may be made through the Army Education Center.

For more information on VMET, ask your Army Career and Alumni Program counselor, Soldiers' Plaza, Building 2617, or call 545-4892 and 545-7009.

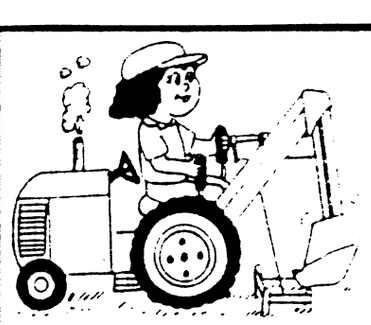
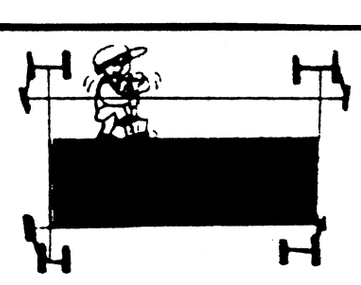
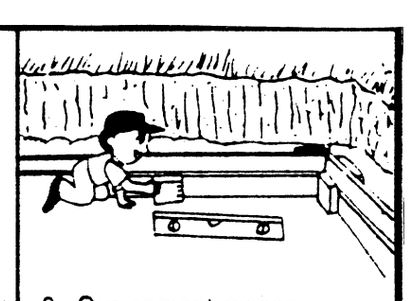
HOW FRED D. PEAK & ASSOCIATES, INC. WILL BUILD YOUR HOUSE



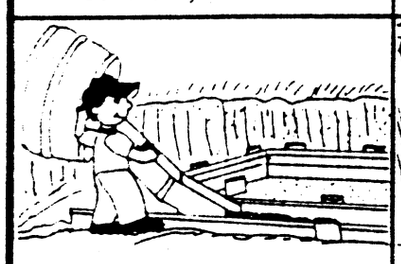
1. Buy a lot from us or we will build on your land.



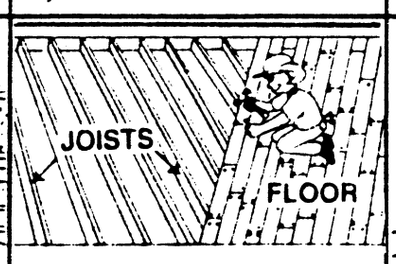
2. Get a plan for your house. You might buy plans already drawn, or we'll design you one on our CAD system.



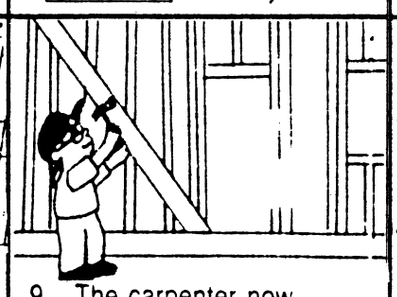
3. Hire Fred D. Peak to build your home. We will use your blueprints as a guide. We buy the materials and see that the workers do their jobs.



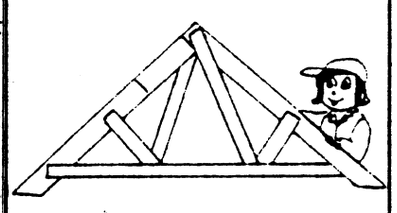
4. We clear your lot. Our bulldozer operator prepares the lot for the foundation.



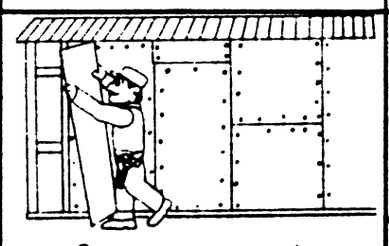
5. This house will have a basement. Other houses do not. Some are built on concrete slabs.



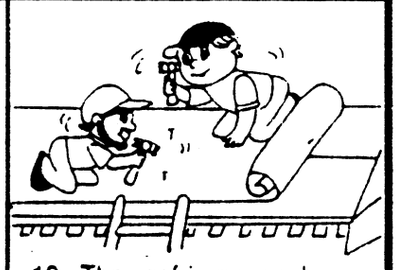
6. Our cement mason builds low, double walls of wood outlining the foundation.



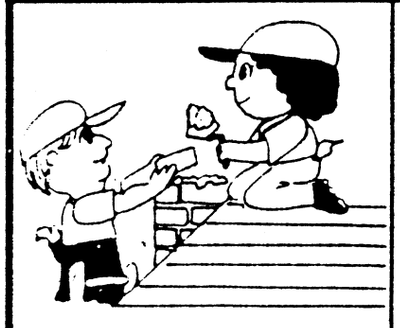
7. Our concrete man pours the foundation. The concrete slides down the chute into the wood outline.



8. Our carpenters either put down floor joists or we may build off a concrete slab.



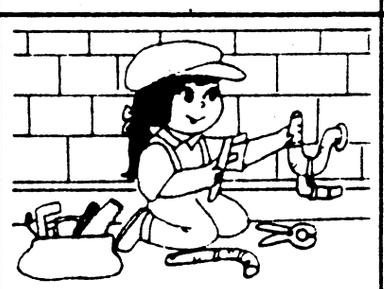
9. The carpenter now builds a frame for the house. he puts up posts called studs.



10. Most builders today use ready-made roof frames called trusses.

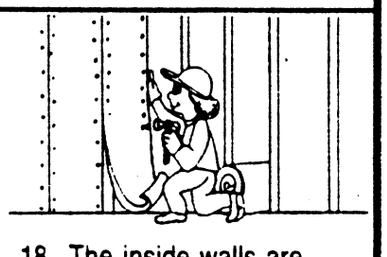
11. Carpenters cover the house frame. They nail up big sheets of material such as plywood or insulated board.

12. The roof is covered with waterproof material. Shingles or tiles are added on top.

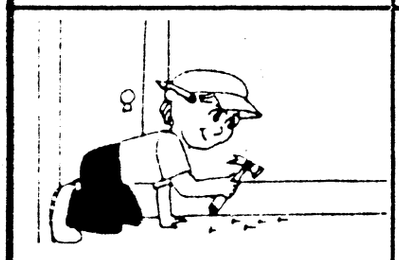


13. Our brick masons build the fireplace and chimney.

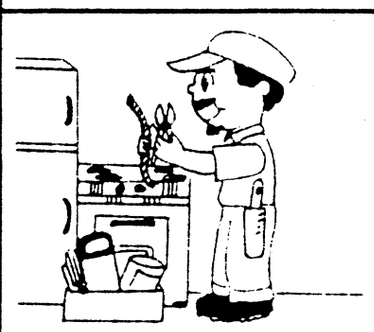
14. Carpenters add doors and windows.



15. Electricians put in wires.

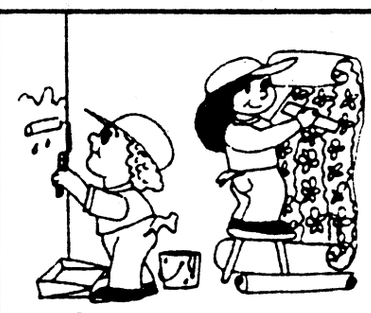


16. Plumbers put in pipes that will bring in water and gas and remove waste.

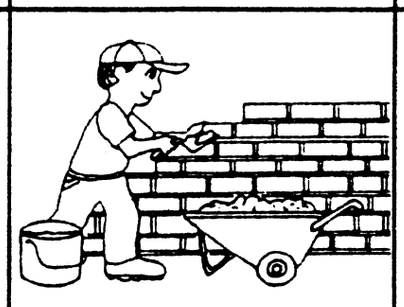


17. Workers put in metal ducts (tubes) that carry warm air from the furnace and cool air from the air conditioner.

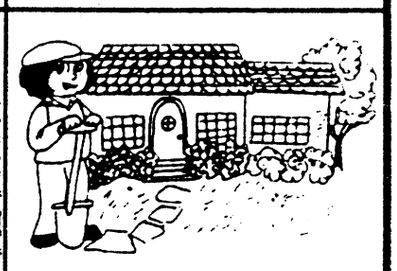
18. The inside walls are finished. First insulation is put in. Then walls usually are covered with big sheets of material.



19. Carpenters nail down wood strips called moldings around the floors and doors.



20. Our electrician hooks up the appliances.



21. The plumber hooks up the water heater, the washer and dryer, the toilets and the tubs.

22. Our painters paint and the paper hanger hangs the wallpaper.

23. The mason comes back and puts in the walks and steps.

24. Fred D. Peak's landscapers plant trees and bushes.

Adopt-a-tree

Dexter Elementary School students Melissa Puentes, Mowalique Williams and Brittany Jennings pack down the dirt after helping plant a tree at a house on Zuckerman Avenue. The school's Parent-Teacher Organization implemented an adopt-a tree program to replace fallen and removed trees. Families adopt the trees, and students, PTO representatives and post officials planted them in Fort Benning neighborhoods.

CHILDREN'S BOOK WEEK

Blind storyteller helps children see at White

By Libby Burtner
Special correspondent

When students at White Elementary School filed into the multipurpose room last week for a special event during Book Week, they were so quiet and well-behaved their professional storyteller, Fiona Page, had to ask if anyone was there.

A teacher for 22 years and now a business woman in Atlanta, Page has been blind since 1987. Though she can't see with her eyes, she sees a picture with her heart and imagination. She paints that picture in her mind's eye for others by creating sounds and movement. The things she said she likes most about storytelling are the creating involved and feeling the response from her audience.

When she sets the stage to tell about the Queen of the Okefenokee Swamp, she describes the trees dripping with Spanish moss, imitates birds calling and tells the children in a whisper, "If you're quiet, you can hear the alligators slipping into the water." Eyes are glued to her as she speaks. She can't see those eyes, but she can tell from the quiet that everyone is paying attention.

Page said the hardest part is "reading" the audience. At first it was very scary, she said. She felt like someone had dropped her down into the bottom of the barrel. But, she learned how to gets the kids talking.

At White Elementary School, she warmed up the students by telling them about her jeweled, red and white cane. She told them that those two colors on the cane means the person using it can't see. She got a big laugh from the children when she explained that without the cane she would be using her hands to find people, and she worried she might end up with her fingers up someone's nose.

Though teaching has been her life, the storytelling came first. When she was a child she didn't have any playmates, so she invented imaginary friends. She would talk to anything and everybody, including cars and trucks driving by or people coming and going from the next-door grocer.

Not surprisingly, this creative and imaginative woman participated in the theater in college. While teaching, however,

Day schoolers get a close-up look at Army life

By Shannon Day
Special to The Bayonet©

More than 40 children from the Chattahoochee Community Day School in Cusseta got a hands-on look at Army life when they visited the 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment motorpool Nov. 15.

The pre-kindergartners had the opportunity to tour the motorpool, ride in a World War II staff car, go inside a Bradley Fighting Vehicle, operate the turret on the vehicle, hold a round for the 25 mm gun on the turret and talk to each other on a single channel, ground airborne radio system.

"This has been really great," said Pearl Armour, a teacher at the day care center.

"They are getting a lot of hands-on activity. They learn a lot more that way."

Armour said they prepared the 4-year-olds for the visit by telling them about soldiers and what their job is.

"They were really excited about this before they even got here," she said. "They couldn't wait."

The visit was coordinated by Sgt. Michael S. Allgeier, Bradley turret mechanic, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 1st Bn., 29th Inf. Regt.

"I have two sons who had gone to the school," he said. "My fiancee is a teacher there, and she suggested the idea to me."

Allgeier said he thought it was a wonderful idea. He received a formal letter from the school requesting the visit, which he sent up his chain of command. It was approved without any problems.

"I think this is great," said Spc. Michael Orentlicher, team leader, Bradley fighting crew, Co. C, 1st Bn., 29th Inf. Regt. "These kids are from a military community, and this gives them a good idea of what their (parent) does."

"I think the visit was excellent," said Allgeier.

Shannon Day/Special to The Bayonet

Staff Sgt. Franklin Jones, squad leader, Co. C, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment, shows a Combat Vehicle Crewman's helmet to William Herlth, a visitor from the Chattahoochee Community Day School.

"The teachers really appreciated it, and the kids had a great time.

"Now that the door is open, I hope it is something we can do every year," he said.

Ceremony honors German POWs

By Donna S. Budjenska
Special to The Bayonet©

Gathering in the Sunday morning fog, a group met at the Main Post Cemetery to honor the memories of 42 German prisoners of war interred there.

Speeches and a wreath-laying commemorated the event, celebrated annually the second Sunday before Advent.

The German Memorial Day is observed worldwide, said Lt. Col. Wolfgang Mettler, German army liaison officer. "At a time when leaves change color and autumn fog in Germany chills everyone to the bone, we realize that everything comes to an end," Mettler said as he addressed the audience.

Heinz Greiling's life came to an end Dec. 15, 1945, as he was held as a prisoner of war at Fort Benning. His sister, Gerda Herrmann, came from East Germany to visit his grave for the first time Sunday.

Having lived in East Germany before the reunification, Herrmann was unable to trace her brother's gravesite until a member of the Columbus "Heimatland" (homeland) club wrote her in 1984.

Herrmann's eyes brimmed with tears as her son, Lutz, translated her reaction to being at the grave.

"It's a deep feeling to be here," he said. "It's hard to think of words."

Also attending the German Memorial Day ceremony were top Fort Benning officials and foreign liaison officers. German Consul Gerd Freund traveled from Atlanta to participate in the ceremony.

"For us, 1995 is a year of remembrance of the end of the second World War 50 years ago.... Many people might have grown tired of the ongoing commemorations," Freund said.

"But we owe it to the victims of all wars and the families that they left behind to jointly remember the suffering and sacrifice that they endured."

STORYTELLER: Helps others see

Libby Burtner

Fiona Page tells Ammie Watson, Andrew Cole and Candace House about her red and white jeweled cane.

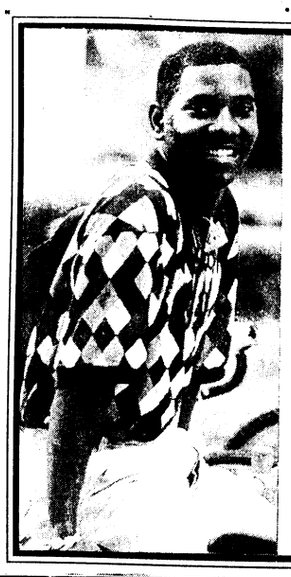
she wanted something created that didn't require rehearsals. A storytelling course seemed appealing, but she wasn't quite sure what it was about or if she could master it.

Page's success in the course and overcoming her anxieties made her realize storytelling would be good for her eighth-grade students to use as a confidence builder. She incorporated storytelling into her curriculum and was so convinced it would enrich teaching and help students, she wrote a program that won her the Christa McAuliffe Award.

Just as she was planned to go on a storytelling tour, tragedy struck.

During a simple surgery that had nothing to do with her eyes, she began to hemorrhage. She was awake and could hear things going on around her. "I knew I was in trouble," Page said. Because of the lack of oxygen, the optic nerves were damaged. Instead of taking off to incorporate her storytelling program, she took off to learn Braille, to learn how to use a cane and to adjust to other aspects of being blind.

During this rehabilitative phase, she felt many of the emotions she had noticed in her adolescent students: fear of not fitting in and of pity. Now blind, feeling even more connection to these young people, she developed a program called "Be Who You Are," described as "facing life's wrinkles with humor and courage."



The course helps teens look at and deal with their lives. Page said she is living her dream of working with teens and helping troubled teens.

While many people would focus on themselves in such adversity, Page was able to overcome that and focus on helping others. She said she had a great role model in her mother, Nana Tucker Graham.

At age 13, because of congenital abnormalities, Graham had both her legs amputated. Despite her prosthetic legs, Graham's father viewed her as a cripple who should stay home. She had other ideas.

Graham walked and hitchhiked to business college. She went to school, married, had two children and has worked her entire life. Graham turned 84 this month. Page and her mother will be featured in the Paralympics this year as a mother-daughter team.

Page has many stories to tell. Her real-life ones compete with the tall tales and funny stories she tells during presentations. She opens not just minds, but also imaginations.

Back up diver William Sloane sits back and waits for his chance to search the river.

Volunteer amphibious firemen splash into

Search and Rescue

By Brian R. Voller
Bayonet staff writer

The diver enters the river at 2 a.m. in the brisk, cold night air. He has to wear a special dry suit to protect him against the cold 32-degree water.

Because of the darkness of the night and the murkiness of the river water, the diver will be searching in complete blindness.

The diver must depend on the surface team to maintain his sense of direction by the use of a safety line attached to the diver's arm to ensure that he doesn't get lost in the current.

For the Fort Benning Fire Department Water Rescue and Recovery Team this is not an uncommon occurrence. The team, which falls under the Department of Public Safety, was formed five years ago and has worked in the worst conditions to assist Fort Benning and the surrounding areas with rescue missions, drownings and search and recovery missions.

"We can respond to missions within a 50-mile radius around Fort Benning," said Capt. John Smith, officer in charge of the water rescue team. "We provide a number of services to local communities; we assist in drownings, river searches, vehicle recoveries and hazardous materials mitigation."

The divers of the water rescue team are not typical recreational scuba divers, said Dive Team Leader William J. White.

"All the divers on our team are trained to the standard of the Georgia Public Safety Training Center," White said. "You can't get this kind of training anywhere else. The training our divers had to go through is some of the toughest training offered anywhere.

"The class I went through started with 30 students, but only ten of those students graduated."

The divers are instructed in different areas which assist them in rescue missions.

"We are taught a type of diving called 'braille searching which is done in zero visibility," White said. We learn techniques for searching for victims by feeling around with our hands. We also learn how to handle obstacles that might entangle a diver during his rescue mission, such as branches, barbed wire or mobile tree limbs that can sweep a diver away."

The rescue team consists of different components to ensure 100 percent safety, said Joseph R. Jones, assistant officer in charge.

The first part of the rescue team is the divers themselves, Jones said. They use different safety measures to ensure the divers are not injured during a rescue. They have a checklist that monitors the diver's time in the water, the pounds per square inch of his self-contained underwater breathing apparatus and the depths at which the diver is searching.

The team also has a surface crew to ensure the safety of the divers. The safety line, which is attached to the diver's arm is the only line of communication between the divers and the surface, Jones said. They use a system of tugs on the safety line to tell the diver what to do.

Along with rescue missions in rivers and in other surrounding areas, the water rescue team has also saved Fort Benning money with different underwater tasks.

"We were called out to the water treatment plant when a pipe began leaking from a million gallon tank," White said. "We had to dive into a small opening into a water tank that was eight feet under ground, they had to swim to a leaking pipe that was about a football field length away from the opening.

"We placed a device called a Pig, which is like a giant balloon, into the pipe and filled it with air. We ended up saving the post $30,000."

White said the job has a lot of stress that goes with it, but it is all worth it in the end.

"When you go on a mission, you might be out there for days," he said. "There is a lot of emotional involvement. We all have families, and when you're on a mission you keep the feelings of that family on your mind. It helps at the end of a rescue to know that you have at least put that families fears to rest."

Jones said the main mission of the water rescue team is to support the Army, and to save the post money. They are not looking to be called heroes.

"Not many people know that we even exist," White said. "We are on call 24 hours a day and we respond to all sorts of calls. We are strictly volunteers, and we are all certified emergency medical technicians, firefighters and first response medical personnel.

"We don't need awards, and we don't need trophies. We know we can rest because we've done all we can do to correct a situation."

"The team does not receive any additional compensation nor have they ever been officially directed to perform these tasks," said Arthur Simmons, fire department chief. "A need was found and the fire department found a way to meet it in order to better serve our customers," Simmons said.

Holy days inspire praise

By Tom Wheatley
Ranger Training Brigade

When I was a child, I always looked forward to the holidays in November and December. I loved getting time off from school, and the food was tremendous since we were either at my grandmother's or my aunt's to celebrate the season. A good number of my relatives lived in the area, so we always spent time with lots of family during these holidays.

reflections

We are approaching the end of the year again, and I am starting to see signs of the upcoming holidays. In fact, it's only the beginning of November, and I have already seen lots of Christmas lights up in stores and on some houses! I find that I am getting excited once again to be close to the holidays.

Is it because of the time off from work? Is it because of the great food that we will enjoy, causing us to do extra physical training? Is it the good time spent with family and friends? Or is it perhaps something more significant, a deeper meaning, even as important as all of these other things are?

According to the dictionary, the word "holiday" comes from the Old English words for "holy" and "day." And the word "holy" means "to be sacred, worthy of worship or high esteem or set apart for a religious purpose." No wonder then that these "holy days" such as Thanksgiving and Christmas have such special meaning to us, apart from all of the usual celebrations of the season.

They were intended to be sacred days, set apart for recognition and worship of God. It seems that unless our holiday celebrations include some acknowledgment and special time for thanking God for his blessings — in private, as a family or with other believers — then we will not be using these days as they were originally named and intended.

This got me wondering if we have the right attitude about any of the days God has given us.

Do we wake in the morning and instantly thank God for the day? Do we promise to glorify him by our actions and thoughts?

Then do we rise and take a moment to study God's word or a devotional before we begin our busy schedules? And then do we let him guide us throughout the day?

I know that is a tough request, and none of us lives up to it every day. But if we begin to understand that every day is God's day, that it is a "holy" day, intended to be sacred and set apart for God's glory, then it starts to change our attitude about each common day.

At that point, every day becomes a holy day or "holiday" for us, as we see that each day is a gift of God for us to enjoy and live in his presence and in the presence of his people, whom he created to be holy.

For God said throughout the book of Leviticus, "Be holy because I, the Lord your God, am holy." And in Psalm 118, which many will recognize as having been used as a wonderful praise and worship song, we are told, "This is the day that the Lord has made; let us rejoice and be glad in it."

What a great way to start every day — to recognize that God has given us the day, that we were made to be a holy people and that every day can be sacred or set apart and special for the recognition and praise of God. And let's try to remember during the holidays themselves what they were originally meant to be and put God squarely in the center of all of our celebrations this year.

Options abound when life hands over lemons

By Bill Putman
USAIC Chaplain's Office

"If life hands you a lemon; make lemonade." This is good advice.

reflections

Some say bad luck is fate. Some say you bring it on yourself. Others say God predestines everything that happens to you and that you cannot affect it. Still others say you have complete control over your destiny.

There are very few people that any of us know who truthfully can say that everything in their lives has been perfect and that they have had no hardships or disappointments. Most everyone has a disappointment at some time in his journey through life, but what separates the losers from the winners is how they deal with these disappointments.

The Bible gives abundant advice for, and examples of, overcoming hardships and disappointments. Job is one chief example of a man who dealt with his problems in a God-fearing manner. Even though Job was afflicted with diseases, lost his family members and friends, and lost his riches and possessions, he did not become bitter and turn against God. Instead, he kept his faith in God, and in the end, he came through his time of trial in better condition than he had been before the whole ordeal began.

I observed two individuals who were leaving the Army with 15-year retirements. Neither of these individuals had planned several years ago that a 15-year retirement was the thing they most wanted in life.

One individual took the attitude that the world was against him and that he was being forced out of the Army. His bitterness became quite apparent. His work virtually came to a halt before his retirement; and it was even less pleasant to be in his company than before.

The second individual took the attitude that he was not glad to be leaving the military but that with his faith in God, he and his family would persevere even though he did not know what was in store and good things would happen. This individual dutifully continued his work, and his disposition did not change noticeably.

I think that not only is the second individual more likely to succeed in his next endeavor, but his family members will be much happier and come to his support much more willingly and favorably.

If you receive a lemon, what will you do with it? You can make lemonade with your lemon and possibly even sell your product. You could save the seeds and grow a lemon grove. Or, you can rub the juice of your lemon in your cut or wound and make yourself more miserable.

Thanksgiving brings thoughts of blessings

By Clarke L. McGriff
3rd Bde. 24th Inf. Div. (Mech.)

One hundred thirty-two years ago, President Abraham Lincoln made official what had been since 1621 a distinctively American tradition.

reflections

In 1863, he declared that the last Thursday in November would be a day of Thanksgiving and praise for our beneficient Father who dwelleth in the heavens. Though it was not established as a religious holiday, the very nature of the occasion causes the most religious and the least religious among us to consider more thoroughly the many benefits that come our way each day.

In America, such an activity is fully appropriate and good. Never has a generation been so blessed with material comforts and possessions as we are today. Our blessings however, go well beyond the simple possessions that we enjoy. The Psalmist said, Blessed is the nation whose God is the Lord, the people he chose for an inheritance. Psalm 33:12. This means that we are not merely lucky or fortunate. Rather it means that we are blessed so that we might become a blessing to others!

This reality is profound! Think about it! God has actually chosen us to be instruments and conduits of his great plan of mercy, peace and grace. This reality should cause us to be profoundly thankful.

We can be thankful because of who God is. God has no equal. He is from everlasting to everlasting. He is all powerful. He is good, and he is good all the time. We ought to be thankful.

We can be thankful for what God does. God chose us. God gives to us and provides for us. God develops us and protects us. God feeds us, clothes us and heals us. God forgives us; and if we will receive it, God will save us. We ought to be thankful.

We can be thankful for what is now available. Because of who God is and what God does, we now have available to us the very inheritance of God! Imagine, "... no eye has seen, nor ear heard, nor the human heart conceived what God has prepared for those who love him." (I Cor. 2:9 RSV) We ought to be thankful.

Don't let another Thanksgiving Day, or any day, pass without recognizing the goodness of God and the responsibility of man. Let's be thankful — the Lord is our God!

Negative thoughts can cause one to have negative life

By Timothy Atkinson
324th Forward Support Battalion

Have you ever been around negative people? You might ask yourself why they're so negative.

I can tell you why: Their thinking is negative; therefore, they say negative things. It seems even when things are going well, some people are still negative about something.

reflections

Maybe they have deep problems in their lives. I'm not judging them, but I will say what the Bible says, "As a man thinks in his heart, so is he." (Prov. 23:7 KJV) Our thought life affects our whole life.

The Apostle Paul said to think on things that are true, right, pure, lovely, things of good report, things that are excellent and praiseworthy (Phil. 4:8). The attributes of God fit these criteria. There are always things we can get negative about and dwell upon.

We live in a negative world, and we need to make corrections. We can't always feel like the nice guy or gal when we have to make those corrections. However, God wants us to have a fantastically blessed thought life in the midst of tough circumstances.

Paul wrote by inspiration of the Holy Spirit, "... and we are taking every thought captive to the obedience of Christ." (II Cor 10:6 NAS) I like the old saying: "A bird may fly over your head, but don't let it build a nest in your hair."

When negative thoughts come your way, I suggest you do the following:

- Don't do what the negative impulse tells you. A thought not acted upon dies unborn. We are in control as we submit to God.
- Resist the thought with Scripture. Jesus used verses of Scripture in his time of temptation.
- Instead of trying not to think upon something and thereby focusing on it more, pray and ask God to help you to replace it with something good, positive and wholesome.
- Do something positive. Act on the good inclinations you have instead of the negative ones.

There are numerous positive influences God has placed in all of our lives. In order to have a great thought life, we must have positive role models.

I am thankful for so many positive role models in my life.

God wants us to be blessed and happy. Our thought lives are not excluded.

Raiders triumph in final game of the season

By Lori Egan
Bayonet staff writer

After being beaten two weeks straight, the Youth Football League Raiders finished off their season with a win against the unsuspecting Jaguars 18-0 Saturday on Blue Field.

"Two critical turnovers in the first half of the game worked against us, knocking the air out of our sails," said James White, Jaguar head coach.

The first quarter was a defensive quarter that didn't see much offensive action.

Near the end of the second quarter, the Raiders scored their first six points when running back Michael Plourde carried the ball into the end zone. Raiders Bryan Miller attempted the conversion but was denied by a tough Jaguar defense.

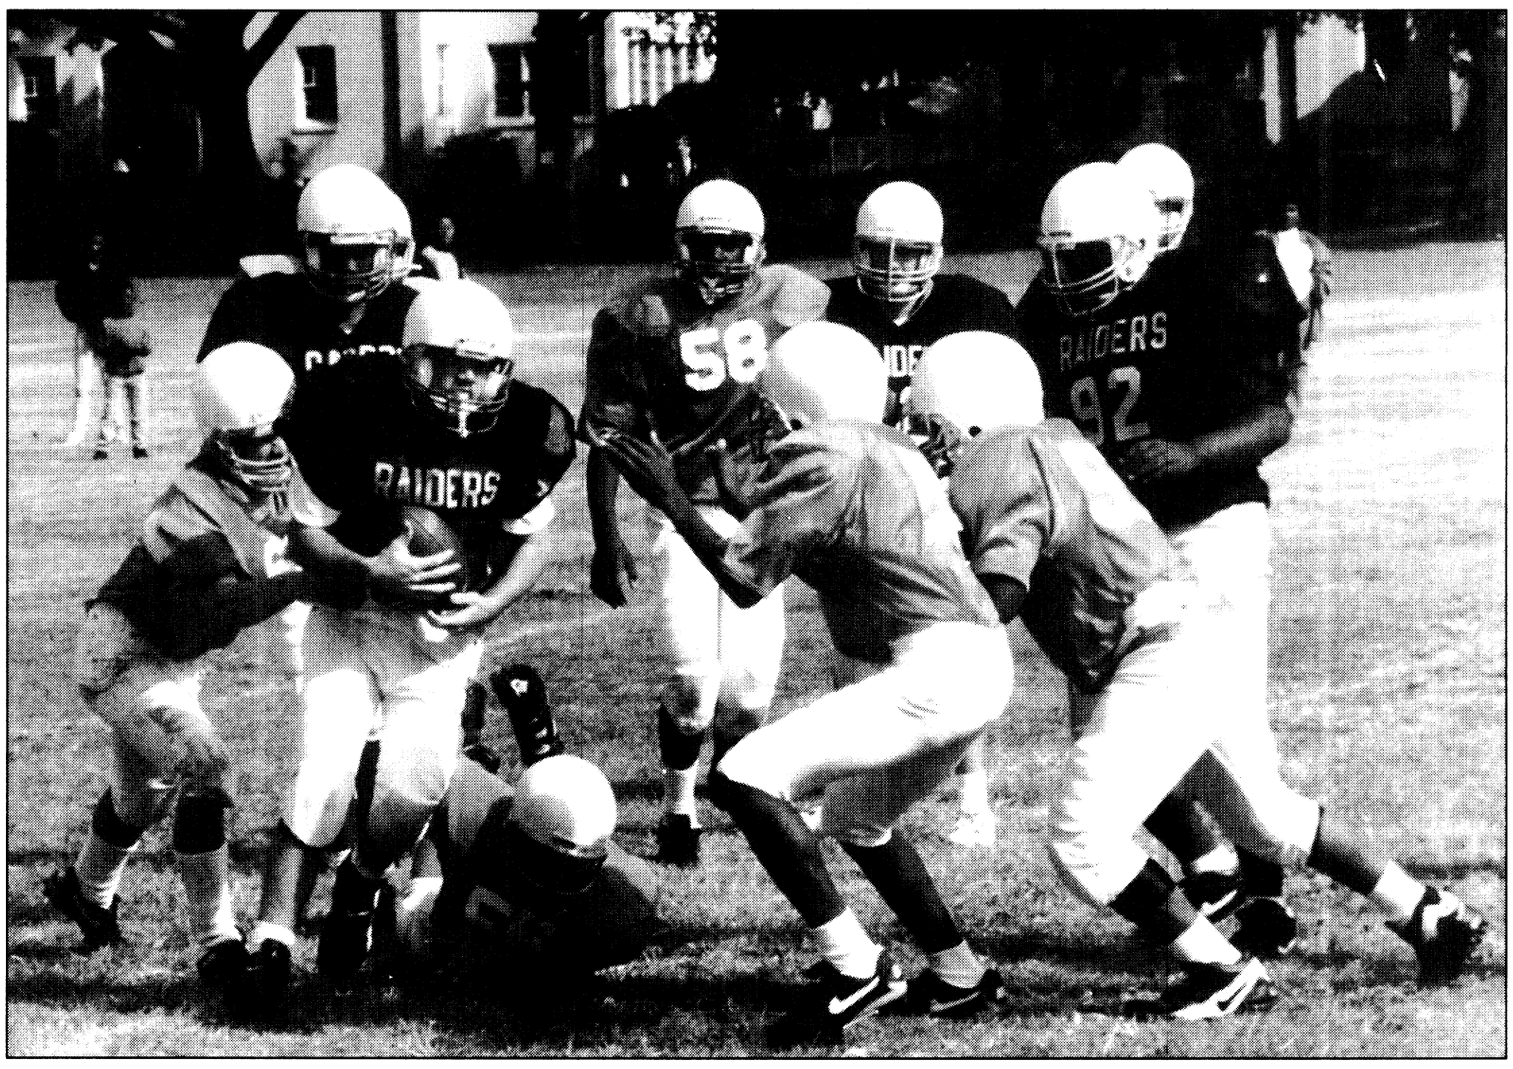
On the ensuing kickoff return, the Jaguars fumbled and the Raiders recovered the football. Two plays later, the Jaguars returned the favor when David Nurnberg intercepted a Raider pass near the end zone and ran it back to the 30-yard line.

At the end of the first half, the Raiders led the Jaguars with a score of 6 to 0.

Interceptions and near interceptions dominated the start of the second half.

The third quarter was a defensive quarter that saw no change in the scores.

But at the end of the third quarter, Raiders wide receiver Efrem Jackson caught a kickoff and ran the ball to the Jaguar's four yard line, putting the Raiders in prime position to put another touchdown in the books.



The Jaguar defense held the Raiders to the four-yard line until the end of the third quarter.

The beginning of the fourth quarter saw the Raiders try for the end zone but only managing a yard. On fourth down with three yards to go, the Raiders executed a quarterback sneak by Roland Lusane and scored. The conversion attempt was stopped short yet again by the Jaguar defense. The score was Raiders 12, Jaguars 0.

During the final minute of the game, the Raiders received the ball and Jackson scored six points ending the final game of the season with a score of 18 to 0.

"The defense had good execution," said Walter Lusane, Jaguars head coach. "We did a lot of (reverse-like plays) and running up the middle and we executed that well."

"The (Jaguars) tried their hardest," said Joseph Williams, offensive coordinator. "The boys learned a lot this season."

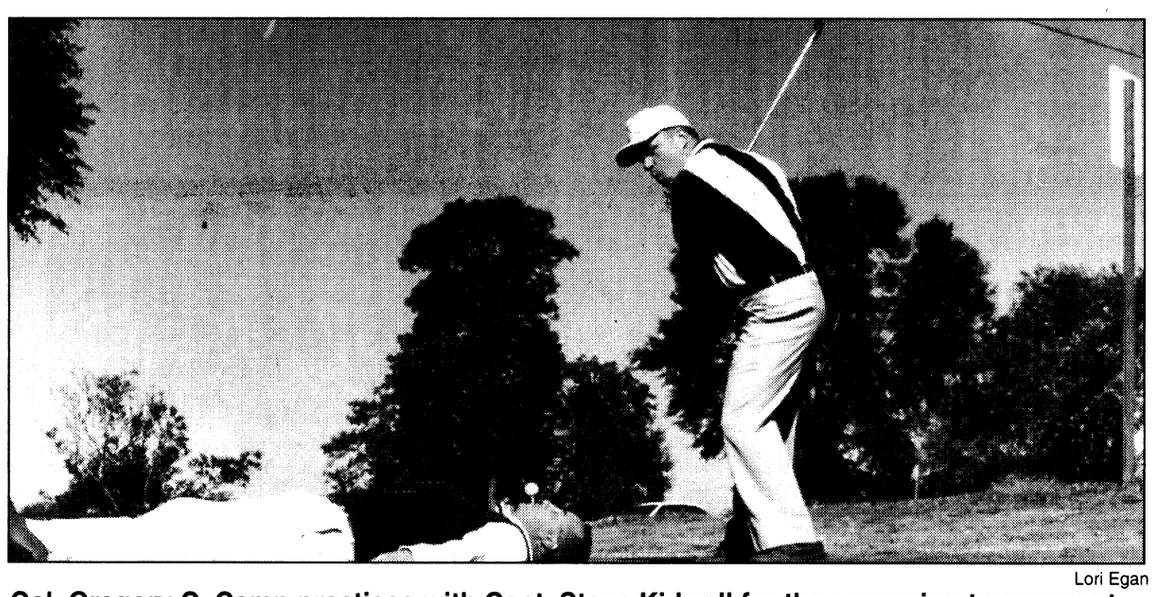
AUSA members invite public to tee off Dec 1

By Lori Egan
Bayonet staff writer

The Association of the U.S. Army annual fall golf tournament has been rescheduled and combined with the Pay Day Golf Tournament scheduled for Dec. 1 at the Follow Me Golf Course (Pineside).



"The golf tournament has a potential of more than $15,000 in prizes, including a Saturn if a player hits a hole-in-one on the 16th hole, which is a very tough 185-yard par-3," said Capt. Steve Kidwell, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 36th Engineer Group.

The golf tournament is a four-person scramble, which means players of all experiences will play on a team.

"This is a good opportunity for the beginner player to start playing because there is absolutely no pressure for him to hit a good shot because the best shot is the ball everyone plays from," Kidwell said.

"Mulligans will be sold, which is a significant advantage for the team whose players all buy three," Kidwell said. "That means that team will have an extra 12 shots for the 18 holes."

"We've tried to contact enough corporate members and local merchants to have a door prize for each player," Kidwell said.

Turkey Bowl adds spice to holiday

By Brian R. Voller
Bayonet staff writer

Some of the best football ever played in the history of the game happens on Thanksgiving day. I've seen some of the hardest hits and some of the best moves when the teams run out onto the playing field.

But these games aren't on the television set in front of 30 million people, and there are no millionaires running around the field. No, these games are played in the back yards of everyday people who participate in an annual tradition called the "Turkey Bowl."

For the past six years, my brother and I have organized our own little "Turkey Bowl" for our friends to play in. It has come so far in the past few years that people we don't regularly keep in contact with just show up Thanksgiving morning assuming there is going to be a game — and there always is.

We set up the teams by having the players pick numbers out of a hat. All the players with a number one go to one team those with number two go to the other. After a little warm up the two teams go for blood.

We don't go out there and just goof around either. I've broken a finger; we've had a guy compress a vertebrae; and, of course, there is always a rash of pulled muscles and big bruises. But it always played in good fun and in good sportsmanship.

So why do we go out there every year and play in the freezing cold (I'm from Chicago and it's usually in the 20s and raining)? The answer is quite simple really; it's a way to see people you don't get to see all the time, it's a way to build a hefty appetite before the big dinner and it's probably one of the most fun things I do all year.

Of course, if someone came out to the field and watched us play the game, they probably wouldn't be too impressed. As a matter of fact, they would probably find us more comical than anything else. After all we only play this game once a year, and most of the people who play aren't on a regular physical training schedule like me.

The most important thing is we don't do it to impress anybody; we do it to have fun. For the most part, every year is the same; we go out there and play hard for the first 20 minutes, then fatigue slows us all down a bit, and then frost bite and hypothermia set in, and then eventually someone gets hurt badly enough that we call the game, shake hands and go home for dinner.

I'm very thankful for the memories I have of past "Turkey Bowls." I'm thankful that I have an annual tradition that I can look forward to every year.

But most of all I'm thankful that I have something I can remember with my brother whom I don't get to see that often anymore. The "Turkey Bowl" is something we both love to play in and we talk about for months after Thanksgiving.

Plus, it's always nice to go home and gorge myself on turkey, stuffing and cranberry sauce and then fall asleep in front of the television watching real football players do what they do best.

BBB offers shopping hints

Better Business Bureau

The holidays are almost upon us, and some of the industrious have already begun their Christmas shopping.

With the increase in retail shopping this time of the year, the Better Business Bureau also sees an increase in customer complaints. Many of these complaints could be avoided if purchasers simply take a few steps prior to purchase.

First, before making any purchase, find out the store's policy on refunds and exchanges. Some retailers have "all sales final" policy while others will issue a credit for the purchase or allow you to exchange the item. Some simply refund your money if the item is returned in its original condition.

A number of complaints involve a store's policy of allowing a credit, but only for the current sale price, regardless of the amount originally paid. Gifts purchased at regular price before the holidays are often reduced right before or after Christmas.

After your purchase, keep track of all receipts; as soon as you get home, remove your receipts from your shopping bags and mark them so you can recognize which receipts go with which items. Keep all receipts in a safe place in the event items must be returned.

Examine all purchased merchandise closely. Don't wait until Christmas Day to see if everything works properly or that sizes and colors are correct.

Remember to:

• Deal with merchants you know are reliable and will be around after Christmas to stand behind any warranty or guarantee.

• Carry your purse of handbag securely so it cannot be grabbed in a crowd. Don't leave your purse on a counter — even for a second.

• Put packages in the trunk of your car, not on the back seat.

• Don't let a 'list" price or a "suggested" price mislead you. Find out how much the item really sells for in our market area.

• Choose toys carefully. Select toys that fit a child's age and development.

Flu season demands care

Columbus Department of Public Health

As winter time approaches, the flu epidemic looms on the horizon. Soon, people everywhere will be coughing, sneezing and suffering from symptoms such as fever, runny nose, sore throat and aches and pains. While most will recover within a week of the onset, thousands may die during a flu outbreak.

The American Lung Association of Georgia and the District Health Department are aware of the dangers of influenza. The two organizations are mounting a major flu prevention drive to educate the public about the dangers of flu season. Local residents are encouraged to get their flu shots, particularly those who are vulnerable to the flu virus.

The target groups for flu vaccinations include senior citizens, people suffering from chronic lung disease such as asthma and emphysema, health care workers and those with heart and kidney ailments.

The Department of Health and Human Services extends Medicare benefits to include the flu vaccine. The pneumonia vaccine is also covered by Medicaid.

According to the American Lung association, only 41 percent of older adults living at home receive their influenza shots, and only 20 percent receive the pneumococcal pneumonia vaccine. Influenza and pneumonia are most likely to require hospitalization to those over 65. This deadly combination is the fifth-leading cause of death for senior citizens nationwide, resulting in more than 77,860 deaths in 1991.

Tips help the wise in holiday Giving

Better Business Bureau

The holiday season always brings in a huge increase in inquiries about charities to the Better Business Bureau. Not only is the year moving into its season of good will, but also end-of-the-year tax deductions are a big issue for you and your business, whether it's large or small.

This time of year is hectic, and we often forget to ask some serious questions of fund-raising solicitors, so the BBB offers these reminders:

Solicitations by mail: The plea should be clear and straightforward. It should indicate whether your donation is tax deductible or not. If you receive unordered items — those Christmas cards or return address labels — you have no obligation to send a donation. Base your decision to donate on the charity's mission and other appropriate factors, not a sense of obligation.

Solicitations by phone: Ask for the name and address of the organization and always ask the purpose of the donation. What will the money be used for? If a trip to an event is to be paid for with your funds, ask when and where the event is and who will go. Don't be afraid to ask for literature about the organization.

Solicitation on the street: If you're not sure about the charity. ask questions. request identification. Get the name and address of the charity and tell the solicitor you'll consider sending a donation. If you have never heard of the organization, call the BBB.

Solicitation in your home: Always ask for identification of the solicitor, as well as the name and address of the organization. Ask whether the solicitor is a volunteer or an employee. Ask if your donation is tax deductible. If your questions aren't answered, exercise caution. The cost of products like candy and cards may not be totally tax deductible, and it may be better to write the charity a check — made out to the charity, not the fund raiser.

Military Police Activity

This week's hot topic concerns privately owned firearms. U.S. Army Infantry Center regulation allows those soldiers and family members residing on Fort Benning to store their privately owned firearms in their family quarters; however, adequate security measures must be taken to prevent theft or unauthorized use of these weapons.

Soldiers residing in the barracks are required to secure their privately owned firearms and ammunition in unit arms rooms. Approval must be obtained from the unit commander to withdraw privately owned firearms from a unit arms room.

All military personnel and family members who own or possess a privately owned firearm and reside on Fort Benning must register it with the Military Police Activity, Registration Section, Building 2637, within 72 hours of arrival on post or within 72 hours of obtaining a firearm and sign a statement concerning security of privately owned firearms.

Contact the Military Police Activity, Vehicle/Firearms Registration Section at 545-3646 for information concerning the registration of privately owned firearms.

The following information was taken from the Fort Benning Military Police blotter. It may be incomplete and does not determine the guilt or innocence of anyone.

• A specialist was charged with excessive speed and driving under the influence of alcohol. While on routine patrol, the MPs observed a vehicle speeding in the opposite lane. A traffic stop was made and a strong odor of alcohol was detected on the driver. The soldier was administered a field sobriety test which he failed. He was transported to the MP station and administered a breathalyzer test with a result of .106. The soldier was issued suspension of post driving privileges and released to his unit.

• A family member was charged with shoplifting at the Post Exchange. She allegedly placed two bottles of perfume and a compact disk in her hand bag and left the store without paying for the items. She was detained, apprehended by the MPs and transported to the MP station. She was issued identification card confiscation orders, suspension of post exchange privileges and released to her sponsor.

Remember to help "Make Our Post the Best — Give Crime Arrest." Report any activity that seems wrong or out of place to the Military Police at 545-5223 or 545-5224 or the "Crime In Progress" line at 545-5222.

Holidays prime time for charitable con artists

American Association of Retired Persons

Consumers need to be especially aware of charitable fraud during the holidays or when natural disasters or other crises occur, according to the American Association of Retired Persons.

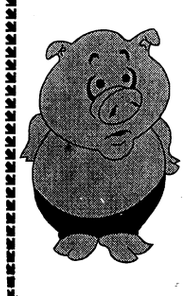
State agencies and law enforcement officials report that the number of misleading or fraudulent pitches by representatives of so-called "charitable" organizations generally increases during the period from Thanksgiving to New Year's Day. Disasters such as the recent hurricanes and the Oklahoma City bombing attract the worst kind of con artists.

"When you read or hear an emotional appeal for a charity during the holidays or when a tragedy strikes, you may be more likely to give without thinking, said Dr. W. Starr Miller of Newnan, AARP State Director for Georgia. "Unfortunately, unless you are vigilant, you may be contributing to a group that is misrepresenting its fundraising activities or soliciting for a phony cause."

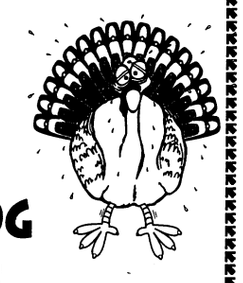
AARP has some suggestions to help you avoid becoming a victim of charitable fraud:

• Never respond to an emotional appeal from a caller who is seeking funds to help victims of illness, abuse or disaster. Always demand that such callers provide you with written information before you consider giving.

• Ask that printed information about the charity; including its name, address and phone number; a statement of how and where donated funds will be used; and the charity's state registration number (where applicable); be mailed to you.



• Ask what percentage of the money you give will be used for a charitable purpose and how much will be kept by the fund-raiser.



• Never send cash to a charity or give out your credit card or bank account number over the phone. Instead, if you wish to contribute, write a check and note on it what the donation is for.

If you have questions about a charitable solicitation you receive over the phone, by mail or in person — or if you suspect that a solicitation is fraudulent — contact: Georgia Secretary of State's Office, Securities and Business Regulation, 2 Martin Luther King Drive, Room 802 West Tower, Atlanta, Ga. 30334, or call (404) 656-3920.

"Through wise giving, we can all be assured of helping those truly in need," said Georgia Secretary of State Max Cleland. "In Georgia, charities must be registered with the Secretary of State's Office," Cleland said. "Call us, and we'll be happy to share information on registered Georgia charities with you."

Did you know?

Merchants can no longer require personal information (such as telephone number or address) as a condition of sale.

Merchants cannot ask you to sign an agreement authorizing charges to your credit card if your checks are returned for insufficient funds.

If a merchant asks you for a credit card as identification when you write a check, they may not record your card number. They can record the card issuer, card type and expiration dates.

Credit card caution

• Never give out information regarding your credit card number, expiration date or balance over the telephone or otherwise.

• When you receive your new or renewed card, sign it immediately.

• Review your monthly statements carefully. Report and dispute any unauthorized charges immediately.

• Destroy old cards when they expire. Be sure to cut them in small pieces.

• Report lost or stolen credit cards immediately.

• Make sure all carbon copies of transactions are destroyed.

• Keep a written record of all credit card account numbers and a phone number to call in case of loss or theft.

Credit reports

• Have you seen your credit report lately?

• Order your credit report from each of the three credit bureaus — information may differ on each. TRW offers one free credit report annually.

TOGETHER FOR TOMORROW

Bus trip III rolls through Benning

By Donna Budjenska
Special to The Bayonet©

Georgia educators, administrators, parents, business executives, state legislators and community volunteers joined forces recently to recognize the best of the best in Georgia's public schools.

The drive to recognize brought them to Fort Benning Nov. 15 for dinner and a tour at Dexter Elementary School, one of 22 selected statewide as a stop on "Bus Trip III: Inventing the Future." The week-long trip was a way for those involved to see first hand what makes each site chosen an example of excellence in education.

"Our purpose is to applaud the success we see," said Dr. Anne Hancock, professor and administrator at DeKalb College and chairwoman of Bus Trip III, "to let those schools know that someone beyond their inner confines does care about what they're doing and to let the people on the bus know what's going on."

The bus rolled into Fort Benning at 7 p.m., and guests were escorted by the school's student ambassadors, local school administrators and teachers as well as Col. Gregory C. Camp, chief of staff, to the cafeteria for a sit-down dinner. Following addresses by Hancock, Camp and Dexter principal Vicki Rogers, Dexter's students provided after-dinner entertainment. Ernestine Ezekiel's kindergarten "e-club" performed an ecology-oriented skit, and students who've learned American sign language with instructor Pam Wright performed two songs in sign language.

Guided tours of six of the school's notable programs followed. Included were the greenhouse; WDEX, Dexter's in-house television studio; the learning media center; the before-school fitness program, conducted by Wright; a third-grade classroom using the Scottish story-line technique for teaching a problem solving unit; and a distance-learning classroom project incorporating telecommunications.

The stop at Dexter was the group's fourth that day, the third day of the tour. But driver Marion "Pee Wee" Fleming, who has driven for each of the three bus trips, said the long hours traveling to and touring the schools have been worthwhile.

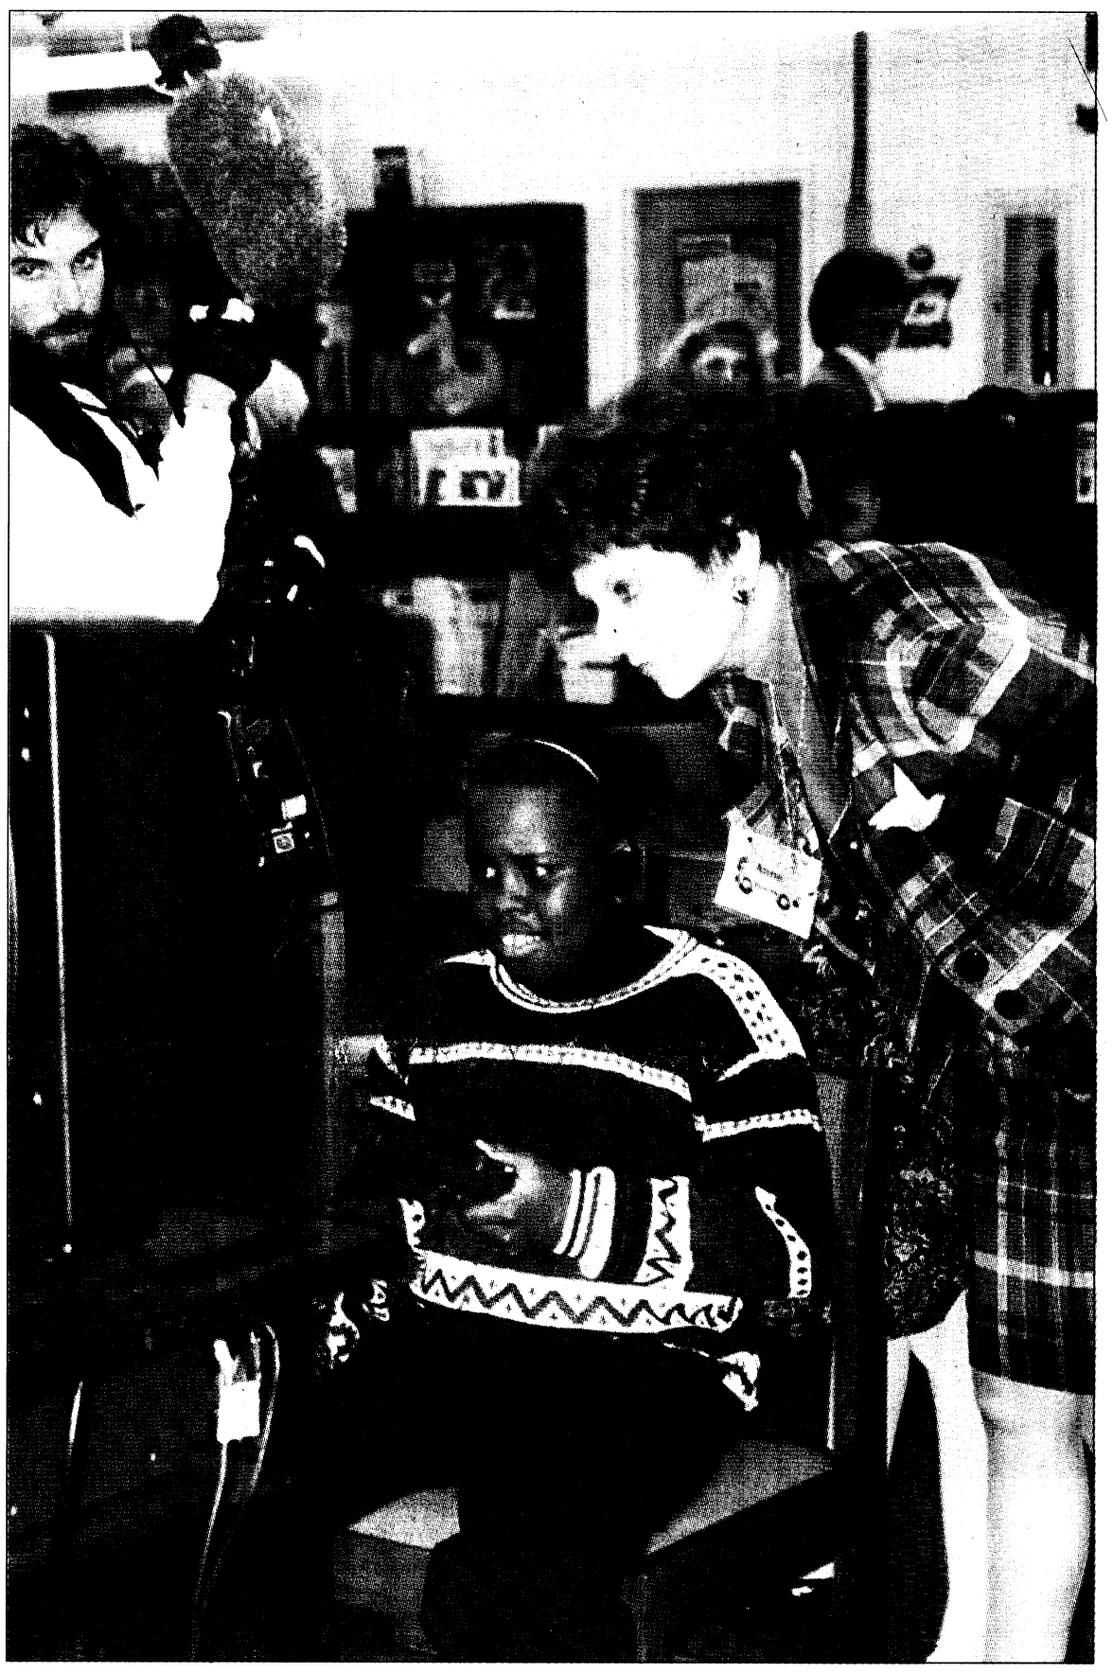
"I've found it to be quite touching," he said, "especially in areas poorer in resources."

Hancock acknowledged the concerns many have regarding the public education system but emphasized that programs such as the Bus Trip were a way to focus on the positive things schools, and the communities they're in, are doing.

"I know that there are problems in public education," she said. "I also know the caring and concern of a community.

"Nothing takes the place of caring," she continued. "It happens one school at a time. They come together, work together, and they stay together."

Dexter was the only Department of Defense school on the itinerary. "We know the military does a fantastic job of training people," Hancock said. "That certainly has carried over in the schools.



"It was good for us to come to a military installation, especially this one," she said, "as it is internationally known."

Private donations covered the cost of the trip. One of the corporate sponsors, TBS, sent a film crew to document the trip for participants.

As the evening drew to a close, Dell Karr, Fort Benning schools superintendent, paused to reflect on its success.

"We love sharing, and this staff did a terrific job putting the program together," she said, crediting the same community involvement Hancock cited in discussing schools' accomplishments. "We also appreciate the parents bringing the children in on a school night.

"Over and over the folks on the bus said how impressed they were."

It's time for ACOE

By Lisa M. Hibbert
Bayonet staff writer

Fort Benning is off and running in the Army Communities of Excellence race to be tops three years in a row.

During the Thanksgiving holiday, Army Communities of Excellence officials received notification from the Training and Doctrine Command that Fort Benning's written application made the first cut and is now being submitted to the Department of the Army, said Pat Porter, management assistant, Total Army Quality and ACOE, Directorate of Resource Management.

"This is the first time that we have had to submit a nomination packet based on the Army's performance improvement criteria," Porter said.

The Army performance improvement criteria, which is a military version of the more corporate geared Malcolm Baldrige Award criteria, dictates seven different criteria, which are being used this year to score the post's performances in the competition, said David Flo, DRM director.

The seven criteria are: leadership, information and analysis, strategic planning, human resource development and management, process management, operational results and customer focus and satisfaction.

"In the past, the ACOE competition was based on quality anecdotal information based on operations only," Flo said.

The post had already begun implementing the new criteria in May when the post's senior leadership gathered for a unit self-assessment seminar for Army leaders at Uchee Creek, Porter said.

With TRADOC down and the DA level to go, Fort Benning is on its way to a "three-peat."

Three other installations made the TRADOC cut — Fort Knox, Ky., Fort Leavenworth, Kan., and Fort Sill, Okla.

Warrior Focus shows Army's need for digital technology

By April N. Olsen
USAIC Public Affairs Office

In the dead of night, Sgt. John Smith lies in a trench waiting to receive his next order.

For the last 30 minutes, he has been observing enemy movement on Objective Sierra. He and three others arrived at their positions using hand-held global positioning systems and infrared night vision devices.

By simultaneously receiving digital and thermal images from the reconnaissance team, the commander, located in the Tactical Operations Center several kilometers away, can assess this information in minutes.

The commander determines that this enemy position could be eliminated with artillery rather than sending in a platoon of his men to take it out.

Smith receives the order and calls in artillery.

The commander was able to avoid possible casualties by using critical information supplied by the recon team using digital and computer technology. Similar equipment was tested during an Advanced Warfighting Experiment at Fort Polk's Joint Readiness Center in November.

Preliminary findings of Warrior Focus show the Army's future digital focus should be prioritized within the areas of common software configuration, a centralized digital architecture and a flexible system of protocols that will allow the warfighter to accomplish the mission.

Fort Benning's Dismounted Battlespace Battle Lab has the mission to analyze the data collected from the exercise.

Col. Arnold Canada, chief of the battle lab, said an interim report will be released in mid-December to highlight those things from Warrior Focus believed to be key to the future force.

The completed report with full documentation, data, analysis and final modeling is due to be published no later than April 1.

This most recent Advanced Warfighting Experiment focused on the Army's warfighting information architecture.

The exercise evaluated those areas that would provide the commander critical battlefield information on a real time basis vs. delayed time. Several digital communications systems and "Own the Night" technology were involved in the exercise.

In an interview at Fort Polk, Maj. Gen. John Hendrix, Fort Benning's commanding general, discussed technologies being tested.

Hendrix said equipment used during Warrior Focus is not necessarily what will be developed

Loaded 45 signals alarm for safety

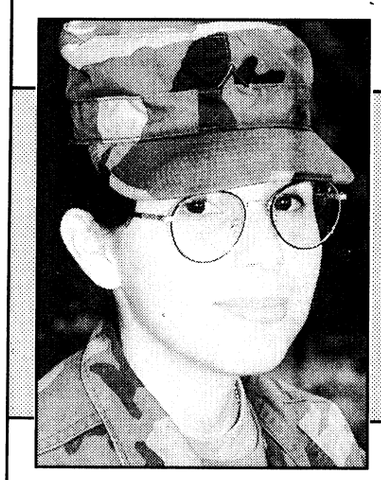
By Brian R. Voller
Bayonet staff writer

For some people the term "loaded 45" might be considered a pistol with a very large bullet sitting in the chamber that would cause a great deal of harm to whomever the weapon was aimed at. But to members of the safety and law enforcement communities the "Loaded 45" is a period of time that is just as dangerous.

"The Loaded 45 is the period of time from the day before Thanksgiving until the day after New Year," said Regis P. Beighley, Infantry Branch safety manager. "It is the period of time during the year when there are the most traffic accidents and fatalities due to careless driving and drunken driving."

In 1982, the Army began supporting National Drunk and Drugged Driving Prevention activities as part of its campaign to fight impaired driving over the holiday season, Beighley said. This year's campaign will be "Take a Stand Against Impaired Driving," and it will focus on the young adult driver.

"The youth drivers that the campaign will focus on are males aged 21 to 34," Beighley said. "Members of this population represent the significant quantity of driving under the influence crash statistics."



Beighley said there has also been a recent push to enforce a zero tolerance law, which coincides with the theme of this years 3D campaign.

"A zero tolerance law would make it illegal for any person under the age of 21 to drive with

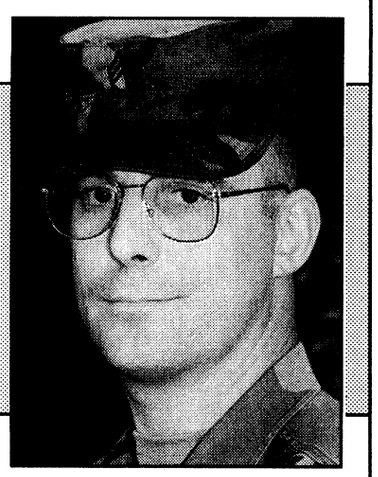
VARIOUS VOICES

What steps do you think should be taken to control violence in the workplace?



Pvt. 2 Susan Camarillo, 63rd Engineer Battalion — "(There should be) some kind of program for them to go to and some kind of activity that they can resort to so they don't get frustrated."

Sgt. Charles Foxx, Headquarters and Headquarters Battery, 4th Battalion, 41st Field Artillery — "Stronger security checks, better background checks and some kind of stress class for all personnel from executives down to the common employees may help."

Staff Sgt. Randy Loyd, Company A, 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment — "Understanding of people and how everyone feels. If you know how others feel, you'll come to work with a more positive attitude and forget the negativity."

Sgt. 1st Class Karl Belletete, 4th Battalion, 41st Field Artillery Regiment— "Education on weapons, tougher screening processes for obtaining weapons and tougher laws for illegal weapons (would help). In the civilian job market, scanning machines like at the airport uses would help."

Pamela Burfield, family member — "If people would try and pull together, things would be better. If we all worked together to achieve a common goal, it would all work out."

2nd Lt. Cerrie Baden, U.S. Army Medical Department Activity — "It doesn't start at the workplace; it starts at home teaching children the value of human life."

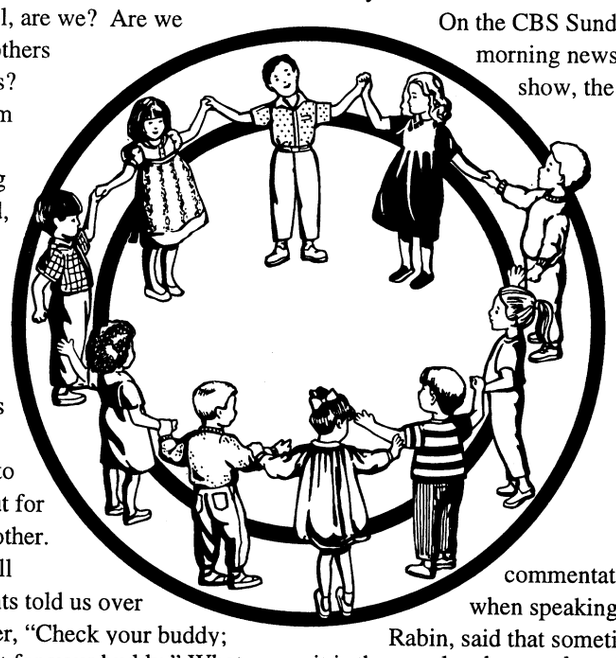
Why can't we all live together?

By Lisa M. Hibbert
Bayonet staff writer

Lisa M. Hibbert believes we all need to live together and stop the violence in the world.

Recently a Fort Bragg soldier was killed by another Fort Bragg soldier. What is this world coming to?



commentary

But, is this really an uncommon occurrence?

Israel's Prime Minister Yitzak Rabin was killed by a Jewish citizen; Malik El Hadj El-Shabazz, better known as Malcolm X was assassinated by a Black Muslim; Hindu nationalist leader Mahatma Gandhi was killed by a Hindu; former president of the United States, Abraham Lincoln was killed by an American citizen, as were John and Robert Kennedy.

In the book of Genesis, Adam and Eve's eldest son Cain slew his brother Abel in the fields. When Cain returned, the Lord asked him where his brother was. Cain responded, "Am I my brother's keeper?"

Well, are we? Are we our brothers keepers?

From basic training onward, soldiers are taught to look out for one another. Our drill sergeants told us over and over, "Check your buddy; look out for your buddy," What went wrong?

People always joke about disgruntled postal workers killing their co-workers. When it spread to corporate America during the downsizing trends of the 1980s, it wasn't as funny. But who would have thought that it would have spread to the U.S. Army? Into our backyard?

On the CBS Sunday morning news show, the commentator, when speaking of Rabin, said that sometimes, it is the people who are closest to us who are hurt the most when we do wrong.

Whatever happened in North Carolina, there is little that can be done about it — after all, it already happened. What we should focus on now is how not let it happen again.

I realize that not everybody is going to get along. Heck, I can get on my soap box and give personal testimony as to why I can't get along with everybody. However, that does not give me the right to kill.

It is kind of paradoxical for me to have these feelings; after all, I am a soldier and it is my job to fight, to protect and defend my nation, its interests and its people.

I know this is not the first time that a soldier has killed another soldier, but can't we just agree to disagree and exist peacefully next to each other?

There is only one God and no one has the right to portray him but him. These random acts of violence have got to stop. After all, we are our brothers keepers!

Member of older generation values importance of time

By Jerry Merideth Stripe
WRAMC Stripe, Washington, D.C.

Johnnie Bollie sat on his front porch watching cars race up and down an asphalt road nearby. "Look at all those millionaires," he said between chuckles, "no place to go and hell-bent on getting there."

commentary

Every once in a while, a car would plow down the gravel road next to his house—stirring up the dust and Johnnie's ire.

"Seems like everyone's in a hurry these days," he said, his laughter fading into a frown. "Time was people would stop to talk to you — see how you were doing. Now they're pretty much all like my nephew, Junior, the big city man."

Johnnie was content with a simpler life. He didn't care much for alarm clocks, cellular phones or all-night convenience markets. His conscience got him out of bed in the morning, though sometimes a rooster helped. There was no time clock in the fields. He simply kept going till the job was done or he gave out.

One thing for sure, the old-timer was in no hurry to run after tomorrow. The weekend he did venture into the big city to visit his nephew left him scratching his head for weeks.

"Junior had no concept of time," Johnnie recounted.

"He'd stay up all night listening to hip-hop music then hit the snooze alarm in the morning. He didn't understand that time doesn't wait. It just keeps tickin' away."

Sometimes the constant drone of the traffic just beyond the cornfield will jog Johnnie's memory of that visit. Other times, scenes of the hustle and bustle of city folk on television does the trick. In a world that lives and dies by the sweeping hands of the clock, Johnnie had found that his brand of slow motion will get you hit by a bus.

"City folk like to talk about time zones — you know in far-off places like Tokyo and such. They also have a happy hour and rush hour. But don't mix the two because that's baaad," Johnnie said. "Who could be happy in a rush anyway?"

While the old-timer found all of city life a little maddening, what really ticked him off was wondering how to adjust his watch to match its fast pace.

Johnnie asked some street-wise fellas who told him that somewhere in England there's something called a "prime meridian" that separates here from there and now from later.

"Those dudes said it dictates time worldwide," he said. "But nobody really follows it. They all live in their own time zones.

"My nephew was always checking and rechecking his watch. You'd have thought that time meant the world to him. But it didn't matter enough to keep him from hitting that snooze alarm in the morning."

Johnnie said he got into a tussle with the youngster when he tried to reset the clocks in accordance with that meridian thing. He never got the hang of the VCR remote but adjusted everything else that had an alarm device.

During the course of his work, he forgot to synchronize his watch with the devices. Everything wound up a little off and the next morning it spelled pure electronic terror.

"After he hit the snooze alarm, Junior just continued. That's when the television went on followed by three clock radios and the coffee maker. "That house was lit," he said.

After a thorough chiding from his nephew, the older Bollie decided it was time to make tracks back to the farm. "I can still hear all those alarms sometimes," Johnnie said while tugging at his ear. "But they weren't near as loud as that boy's yelling."

Recently, Johnnie made a sundial in his backyard from things he found at the junk yard. Tin and copper scraps tell him how close it is to day's end when he takes the time to look. He no longer wears a watch.

About the subject, the old man likes to quote a little Tennyson; one of his favorite wordsmiths. "He wrote 'I am sick of Time, and I desire to rest,"' Johnnie said. "That's how I feel."

Dial 545-BOSS

Dial 545-BOSS is the commander's action line for soldiers, family members and civilians to call when they have problems or complaints that can't be resolved elsewhere.

While it is not a substitute for the chain of command or for agencies established to provide assistance, the line offers another means of communication between Fort Benning's community and commanders.

The Bayonet features some of the calls that may benefit other members of the Fort Benning community.

Call: An anonymous caller said the Thrift Shop's restrooms have been closed to the public for some time now. He said after waiting in line a long time to consign merchandise, some people need a restroom available to them. He also said the building does not have a ramp for handicap access.

Directorate of Community Actitivies response: The Officers' Wives' Club president agreed to provide restroom facilities to Thrift Shop customers. Customers can ask for the key to the restroom then return the key when finished. Handicap ramps are located at the rear of the building and customers are assisted upon request.

Call: The caller said she would like to know why there are no Military Police crossing guards in Bouton Heights' school crossings before and after school. She said there are two MPs at the crossings on Main Post.

Director of Public Safety's response:

The MPA explained to the caller that the Military Police Traffic section had studied all school zones and based on the volume and speed of the traffic on 1st Cavalry Division Road, as well as the unobstructed view of the crossing at Stowers Drive, it was determined that a crossing guard was not needed. However, the volume and speed of traffic in the Main Post school zones is much greater and the visibility and the line sight view distance is less, thus making these school zones potentially more dangerous. It was further explained that because of the caller's concern, the traffic section will reevaluate the Stowers School zone with the caller and address any other concerns in reference to traffic in Bouton Heights.

Call: The caller said after the traffic lights were repaired after the storm, they seem to stay red longer. He said the wait is three minutes at the light by the service station. He said the wait is also very long at the light by the theater and the road behind Building 4.

Utility branch's response:

The high winds from Hurricane Opal caused most of the traffic signals on post to malfunction. Temporary repairs were made to return the traffic signals to pretimed operation. Some of the temporary repairs could have caused longer waits than normal for the lights to operate through the complete cycle. The programming of all traffic signals is being checked and changed as required to ensure a smooth flow of traffic with minimal wait time.

School board discusses possible transfer

By Donna S. Budjenska
Special to The Bayonet ©

The Fort Benning School Board met in a regular session Monday, and its primary focus was discussion of a proposed transfer of Department of Defense stateside schools to local education authorities.

The proposal comes by way of Congress's Fiscal 1995 DoD Authorization Act, Report 103-701; but the idea is one that the schools' Superintendent, Dr. Dell Karr, said emerges every four or five years. "The question is should domestic dependent elementary and secondary schools be turned over to local education agencies," Karr said in addressing board members and guests. "Fort Benning schools would be run by the Muscogee County or Chattahoochee County school districts."

In discussing the possibility, Karr said at this point information gathering is the primary focus. "We will be conducting a mail-out survey to parents of on-post students to determine their attitudes and opinions regarding the quality of education their children are receiving and to ascertain their reactions to the possible transfer," she said.

Also included will be interviews with Fort Benning, Muscogee and Chattahoochee school superintendents, post commanders, school boards and parent and staff groups. A Maryland firm, Westat Inc., will conduct the surveys and interviews, and Westat's selection of survey participants was based on a random sample including all active duty parents living on post. Surveys will be mailed at the end of December.

Results of the study will be provided to Congress by August 1996.

In other business, board members approved the Consolidated Income Statement for the School Lunchroom Fund, presented by Alice Skinner, director of logistics. Current fund equity stands at $52,580, and the year-to-date loss is $11,479. Contributing to the loss were two days of school closure because of Hurricane Opal; nonappropriated fund employees were paid for that time.

Other board members present were: Col. Gregory C. Camp, president; Chap. (Maj.) Robert Thompson, chaplain; Rhoda Zerger, Dexter Elementary School representative; Staff Sgt. John Perdue, McBride representative; Shelia Long, Stowers representative; Adrienne Porter, White representative; Staff Sgt. Ricardo Linton, Wilson representative; Col. Richard Rutledge, schools officer; Lt. Col. Stephanie Willson, attorney; Richard Skinner, assistant superintendent for budget and personnel; and Allan Day, human resources site manager.

Georgia DOR announces undelivered refund checks

Georgia Department of Revenue

ATLANTA — In what is an annual "rite of autumn," the Georgia Department of Revenue is attempting to locate taxpayers whose 1995 State of Georgia income tax refund check — for the 1994 tax year — has been returned by the U.S. Postal Service as undeliverable.

Among the 1,338 checks returned to the Revenue Department, the largest is worth $13,606 and the smallest is worth $1. The aggregate total of all checks is $333,228.

"Georgia law provides that persons entitled to such checks must claim them within 90 days after publication of the list," Commissioner Marcus E. Collins said. "The refunds cannot be made to taxpayers after the 90-day period expires unless formal application is made to the Department of Revenue."

Any eligible taxpayer who has not received a refund check must communicate in writing with the Georgia Department of Revenue, P.O. Box 38027, Atlanta, GA 30334, to obtain the refund.

The letter must include the Social Security number(s) and signature(s) as shown on the tax return.

Taxpayers who have questions or need additional information should call the Taxpayer Accounting Division at (404) 656-4674.

Free seminar available for retiring, ETSing soldiers

Army Career and Alumni Program

A Washington lecturer and author on career transition from military to civilian employment will be at Fort Benning Dec. 12 in Infantry Hall, Classroom 30, from 9 to 11 a.m. to talk to officers, senior noncommissioned officers and spouses on "Marketing Yourself for a Second Career."

Retired Col. Jerry Crews, deputy director of the Officer Placement Service for The Retired Officers Association, travels nationwide addressing military audiences composed of people who are nearing retirement, being involuntarily separated or opting to leave military service.

The lecture is open to all military personnel and their spouses. The first 200 participants will receive a free copy of the publication, "Marketing Yourself for a Second Career."

In his free, 2 1/2-hour presentation, Crews will introduce the audience to the realities of the competition in the civilian job market; the perceptions civilian employers have of military personnel; how to plan for the job search; tips for strengthening the resume (to include how employers read a resume); networking, preparing for and conducting a successful interview; salary and benefit packages; and rejection.

Crews said he doesn't promise an individual instant job search success but guarantees that each person who attends his lecture will profit from the knowledge gained and will be ready to move in the right direction toward that second career.

The lecture has been continually praised by attendees for its content and delivery. Crews provides information for every attendee and provides insights into the transition which are unique and hard-hitting.

Military members and their spouses, who are cordially invited to attend the lecture, will have an opportunity to ask questions of Crews and will also receive a free copy of the publication.

The Retired Officers Association sponsors these lectures, which in 1994 were presented to over 15,000 personnel at 107 military installations throughout the United States and Europe.

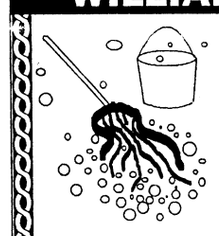
TROA scholarships being offered

The Retired Officers Association

ALEXANDRIA, Va. — During the 1996-97 school year, 800 students will receive $2,500 interest-free loans from The Retired Officers Association Educational Assistance Program. These loans, now totaling $2 million, will be awarded annually for up to five years of undergraduate study to unmarried undergraduate students, under the age of 24, who are dependent children of active, reserve and retired service personnel and their surviving spouses.

Since students can obtain up to $12,500 of interest-free support for five years of undergraduate study and loan repayment is after graduation, the competition for these loans will be keen. For the 1995-96 school year, some 1,000 students competed for 225 openings. The students were selected on their scholastic ability, participation in extracurricular and community activities, as well as financial need. From 800 students receiving loans, 164 received special $500 grants in addition to the loans. All who were awarded loans were automatically considered for the grants. A limited number of other grants, ranging from $500 to $2,500, are also available.



The TROA Educational Assistance Program has expanded to include the children of active duty, Reserve, National Guard and retired officers, warrant officers and enlisted members of the Army, Navy, Air Force, Marine Corps, Coast Guard, U. S. Public Health Service and National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration.

Since this program was initiated, some 4,500 students have received interest-free loans totaling more than $16.5 million.

TROA Educational Assistance applications for the 1996-97 school year are now available. Applications should be requested by Feb. 15, and the completed application must be postmarked on or before March 1.

For applications and more information, write to TROA Educational Assistance Program Administrator (09D), 201 N. Washington St., Alexandria, Va. 22314-2539 or call (800) 245-TROA(8762) Ext. 169.

Airports impose new security measures

New security measures in all airports require travelers to show a picture identification card at time of check-in. Picture ID cards are required for travelers 18 years and older. Failure to produce a picture ID could result in denial of boarding.

Check-in time at the Columbus Airport should be no less than 45 minutes prior to departure and no less than one hour prior to departure from the Atlanta Airport.

For more information, call the Transportation Division at 545-7706.

FEHB opens season

The 1995 Federal Employee's Health Benefits Program open season will be today through Dec. 11. Enrollment and changes will be effective the first day of the first pay period beginning on or after Jan. 1. Employees who make a change must be in a pay status for some part of the pay period prior to the one in which enrollment takes effect.

For more information call Felicia W. Griffin at 545-5562.

Nick Hoge Award set

Military personnel and civilian employees of the Department of the Army, including local nationals and nonappropriated fund employees, are encouraged to submit professional essays for consideration for the 1995 Nick Hoge Award for Professional Development.

This essay competition provides the opportunity for Army personnel to present their ideas through thoroughly researched, documented and creative papers. The papers are to consider the existing quality, effectiveness or efficiency of civilian Human Resource Management and related professional disciplines (such as personnel psychology) and should address concepts and methodologies that will enhance the conduct of civilian human resource management business. Co-authors and group authors are permitted.

Nominations must be submitted to the Management-Employee Relations Division, Directorate of Civilian Personnel in an original and eight copies with a separate cover page, no later than Jan. 6.

For more information call Mae Horsey at 545-4483.

Controlled burning of woodland areas set

Controlled burning of woodland areas will take place today through Saturday. If the weather permits, the following compartment will be be affected: E-6, I-1, I-5 and Z-2.

Burning will occur in pine stands within these compartments to enhance endangered species habitat and training areas. Personnel planning to use these areas for recreational purposes must vacate these areas prior to 9:30 a.m. daily, today through Dec. 2.

Training units using compartments adjacent to those listed above may experience drift smoke and are reminded to exercise caution while traveling in these areas due to the potential for reduced visibility. Units utilizing ranges and training areas are reminded to remove flammable debris, such as pinestraw, leaves, grass and trash from around structures in accordance with U.S. Army Infantry Infantry Center regulation 210-4, paragraph 5-22, organizational maintenance.

ACAP offers skill development program

The Fort Benning Regional Army Career and Alumni Program office is offering a Skill Development Program to provide short-term training opportunities to soldiers, civilians and family members who transition from the Army. Some courses offered include Hazardous Material Handling, Police Officer Training, Commercial Drivers' Licensing and others.

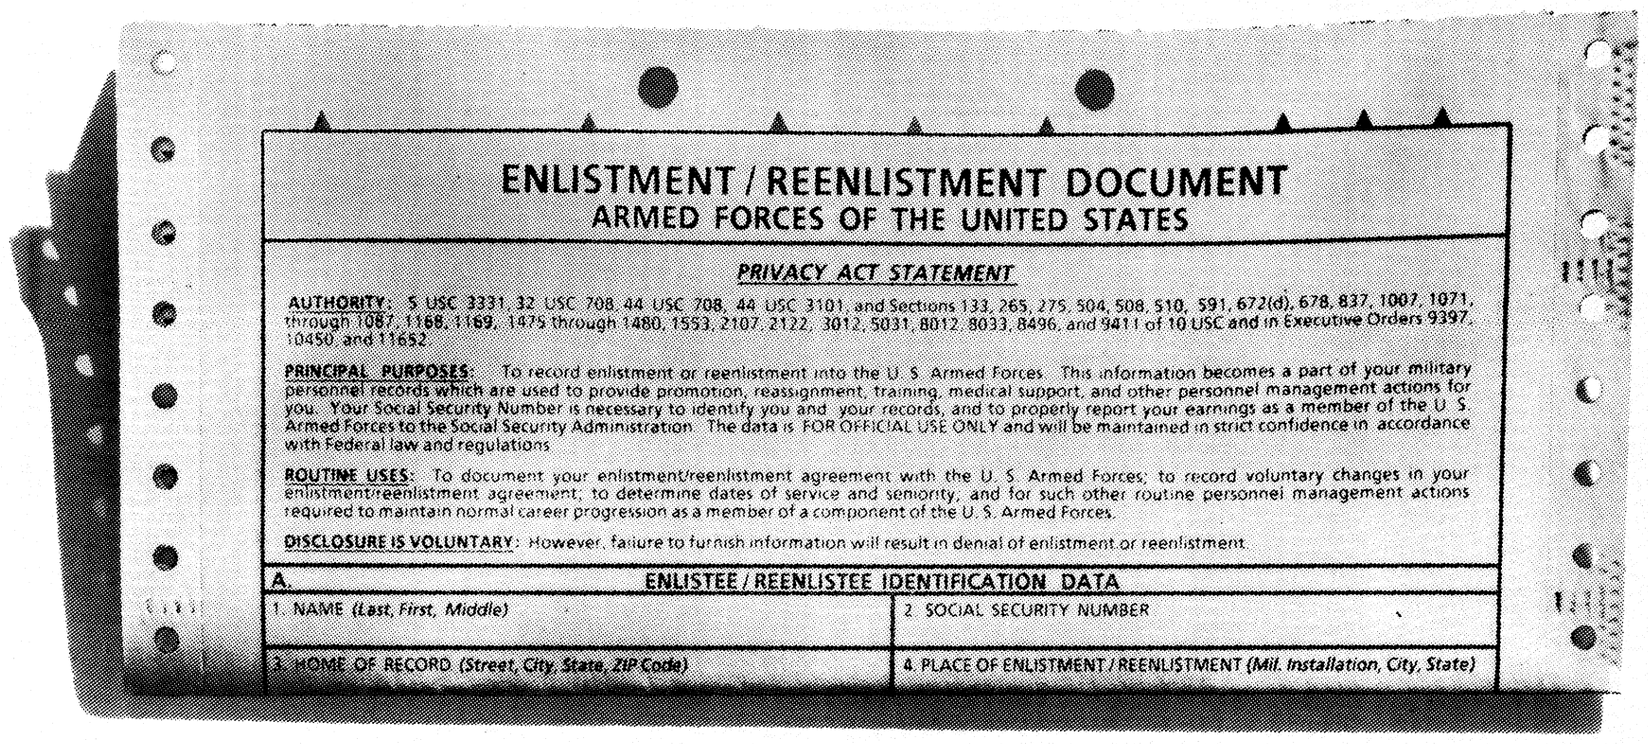
For more information, call 545-7028.

EFMP program provides assistance

The Exceptional Family Member Program is a Department of the Army program designed to assist, through selective assignment and reassignment, the soldier who has a special needs family member.

The EFMP addresses the needs of those family members, adults or children, who have a physical, intellectual or emotional disorder that limits that person's capability to take part in activities and which requires special treatment, therapy, education, training or counseling.

The program's purpose is to let the U.S. Total Army Personnel Command at DA know of any family members with special needs, so this can be a consideration during the assignment selection process.



For additional information regarding the EFMP, contact Frances Howard, coordinator, Exceptional Family Member Program, Army Community Service, at 545-6969 or 545-5516.

School board discusses possible transfer

By Donna S. Budjenska
Special to The Bayonet ©

The Fort Benning School Board met in a regular session Monday, and its primary focus was discussion of a proposed transfer of Department of Defense stateside schools to local education authorities.

The proposal comes by way of Congress's Fiscal 1995 DoD Authorization Act, Report 103-701; but the idea is one that the schools' Superintendent, Dr. Dell Karr, said emerges every four or five years. "The question is should domestic dependent elementary and secondary schools be turned over to local education agencies," Karr said in addressing board members and guests. "Fort Benning schools would be run by the Muscogee County or Chattahoochee County school districts."

In discussing the possibility, Karr said at this point information gathering is the primary focus. "We will be conducting a mail-out survey to parents of on-post students to determine their attitudes and opinions regarding the quality of education their children are receiving and to ascertain their reactions to the possible transfer," she said.

Also included will be interviews with Fort Benning, Muscogee and Chattahoochee school superintendents, post commanders, school boards and parent and staff groups. A Maryland firm, Westat Inc., will conduct the surveys and interviews, and Westat's selection of survey participants was based on a random sample including all active duty parents living on post. Surveys will be mailed at the end of December.

Results of the study will be provided to Congress by August 1996.

In other business, board members approved the Consolidated Income Statement for the School Lunchroom Fund, presented by Alice Skinner, director of logistics. Current fund equity stands at $52,580, and the year-to-date loss is $11,479. Contributing to the loss were two days of school closure because of Hurricane Opal; nonappropriated fund employees were paid for that time.

Other board members present were: Col. Gregory C. Camp, president; Chap. (Maj.) Robert Thompson, chaplain; Rhoda Zerger, Dexter Elementary School representative; Staff Sgt. John Perdue, McBride representative; Shelia Long, Stowers representative; Adrienne Porter, White representative; Staff Sgt. Ricardo Linton, Wilson representative; Col. Richard Rutledge, schools officer; Lt. Col. Stephanie Willson, attorney; Richard Skinner, assistant superintendent for budget and personnel; and Allan Day, human resources site manager.

Georgia DOR announces undelivered refund checks

Georgia Department of Revenue

ATLANTA — In what is an annual "rite of autumn," the Georgia Department of Revenue is attempting to locate taxpayers whose 1995 State of Georgia income tax refund check — for the 1994 tax year — has been returned by the U.S. Postal Service as undeliverable.

Among the 1,338 checks returned to the Revenue Department, the largest is worth $13,606 and the smallest is worth $1. The aggregate total of all checks is $333,228.

"Georgia law provides that persons entitled to such checks must claim them within 90 days after publication of the list," Commissioner Marcus E. Collins said. "The refunds cannot be made to taxpayers after the 90-day period expires unless formal application is made to the Department of Revenue."

Any eligible taxpayer who has not received a refund check must communicate in writing with the Georgia Department of Revenue, P.O. Box 38027, Atlanta, GA 30334, to obtain the refund.

The letter must include the Social Security number(s) and signature(s) as shown on the tax return.

Taxpayers who have questions or need additional information should call the Taxpayer Accounting Division at (404) 656-4674.

Free seminar available for retiring, ETSing soldiers

Army Career and Alumni Program

A Washington lecturer and author on career transition from military to civilian employment will be at Fort Benning Dec. 12 in Infantry Hall, Classroom 30, from 9 to 11 a.m. to talk to officers, senior noncommissioned officers and spouses on "Marketing Yourself for a Second Career."

Retired Col. Jerry Crews, deputy director of the Officer Placement Service for The Retired Officers Association, travels nationwide addressing military audiences composed of people who are nearing retirement, being involuntarily separated or opting to leave military service.

The lecture is open to all military personnel and their spouses. The first 200 participants will receive a free copy of the publication, "Marketing Yourself for a Second Career."

In his free, 2 1/2-hour presentation, Crews will introduce the audience to the realities of the competition in the civilian job market; the perceptions civilian employers have of military personnel; how to plan for the job search; tips for strengthening the resume (to include how employers read a resume); networking, preparing for and conducting a successful interview; salary and benefit packages; and rejection.

Crews said he doesn't promise an individual instant job search success but guarantees that each person who attends his lecture will profit from the knowledge gained and will be ready to move in the right direction toward that second career.

The lecture has been continually praised by attendees for its content and delivery. Crews provides information for every attendee and provides insights into the transition which are unique and hard-hitting.

Military members and their spouses, who are cordially invited to attend the lecture, will have an opportunity to ask questions of Crews and will also receive a free copy of the publication.

The Retired Officers Association sponsors these lectures, which in 1994 were presented to over 15,000 personnel at 107 military installations throughout the United States and Europe.

TROA scholarships being offered

The Retired Officers Association

ALEXANDRIA, Va. — During the 1996-97 school year, 800 students will receive $2,500 interest-free loans from The Retired Officers Association Educational Assistance Program. These loans, now totaling $2 million, will be awarded annually for up to five years of undergraduate study to unmarried undergraduate students, under the age of 24, who are dependent children of active, reserve and retired service personnel and their surviving spouses.

Since students can obtain up to $12,500 of interest-free support for five years of undergraduate study and loan repayment is after graduation, the competition for these loans will be keen. For the 1995-96 school year, some 1,000 students competed for 225 openings. The students were selected on their scholastic ability, participation in extracurricular and community activities, as well as financial need. From 800 students receiving loans, 164 received special $500 grants in addition to the loans. All who were awarded loans were automatically considered for the grants. A limited number of other grants, ranging from $500 to $2,500, are also available.

The TROA Educational Assistance Program has expanded to include the children of active duty, Reserve, National Guard and retired officers, warrant officers and enlisted members of the Army, Navy, Air Force, Marine Corps, Coast Guard, U. S. Public Health Service and National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration.

Since this program was initiated, some 4,500 students have received interest-free loans totaling more than $16.5 million.

TROA Educational Assistance applications for the 1996-97 school year are now available. Applications should be requested by Feb. 15, and the completed application must be postmarked on or before March 1.

For applications and more information, write to TROA Educational Assistance Program Administrator (09D), 201 N. Washington St., Alexandria, Va. 22314-2539 or call (800) 245-TROA(8762) Ext. 169.

Airports impose new security measures

New security measures in all airports require travelers to show a picture identification card at time of check-in. Picture ID cards are required for travelers 18 years and older. Failure to produce a picture ID could result in denial of boarding.

Check-in time at the Columbus Airport should be no less than 45 minutes prior to departure and no less than one hour prior to departure from the Atlanta Airport.

For more information, call the Transportation Division at 545-7706.

FEHB opens season

The 1995 Federal Employee's Health Benefits Program open season will be today through Dec. 11. Enrollment and changes will be effective the first day of the first pay period beginning on or after Jan. 1. Employees who make a change must be in a pay status for some part of the pay period prior to the one in which enrollment takes effect.

For more information call Felicia W. Griffin at 545-5562.

Nick Hoge Award set

Military personnel and civilian employees of the Department of the Army, including local nationals and nonappropriated fund employees, are encouraged to submit professional essays for consideration for the 1995 Nick Hoge Award for Professional Development.

This essay competition provides the opportunity for Army personnel to present their ideas through thoroughly researched, documented and creative papers. The papers are to consider the existing quality, effectiveness or efficiency of civilian Human Resource Management and related professional disciplines (such as personnel psychology) and should address concepts and methodologies that will enhance the conduct of civilian human resource management business. Co-authors and group authors are permitted.

Nominations must be submitted to the Management-Employee Relations Division, Directorate of Civilian Personnel in an original and eight copies with a separate cover page, no later than Jan. 6.

For more information call Mae Horsey at 545-4483.

Controlled burning of woodland areas set

Controlled burning of woodland areas will take place today through Saturday. If the weather permits, the following compartment will be be affected: E-6, I-1, I-5 and Z-2.

Burning will occur in pine stands within these compartments to enhance endangered species habitat and training areas. Personnel planning to use these areas for recreational purposes must vacate these areas prior to 9:30 a.m. daily, today through Dec. 2.

Training units using compartments adjacent to those listed above may experience drift smoke and are reminded to exercise caution while traveling in these areas due to the potential for reduced visibility. Units utilizing ranges and training areas are reminded to remove flammable debris, such as pinestraw, leaves, grass and trash from around structures in accordance with U.S. Army Infantry Infantry Center regulation 210-4, paragraph 5-22, organizational maintenance.

For more information, call Jack Greenlee, Natural Resources Management Branch, 544-6202.

and fielded. Off-the-shelf systems were used to determine what the Army wants to continue to develop based on which systems give clear benefits on the battlefield.

Lessons learned from Warrior Focus will affect almost everything the infantry will do in the future, Hendrix said.

"The United States Army Infantry School will develop new equipment, new technology and new fighting doctrine based on Warrior Focus and exercises that will follow," he said.

DBBL is focusing its concern on the development of computer software that will enable commanders on the battlefield to make the best use of technology available.

The implementation of technology will require the Army to train soldiers differently and may bring a change in skills and tactics, Hendrix said.

There will be additional and certainly different jobs for infantry soldiers in the future and may require new Military Occupational Skills, Hendrix said.

Hendrix also sees new challenges for leaders. "Leadership of the future is going to have to master the technology and live much faster on the battlefield," Hendrix said. "The issue is technical competence."

Commanders will be expected to be competent in the operation of the computer and digital equipment just as they are expected to be competent in the operation of a machine gun, a Bradley Fighting Vehicle or any other piece of weaponry assigned to their unit.

A greater issue in the coming years, he said, is that everyone will have to be trained and grow accustomed to operating on a different battlefield.

Victory will depend on who has the most information and who can take pertinent data and make critical decisions, Hendrix said.

With the new equipment it will be possible to link the soldier on the ground not only to the platoon leader and company commander but also to Bradley Fighting Vehicles, Apaches and artillery and mortar assets on the battlefield.

The soldier will also be able to send thermal and video pictures to the commander, give target locations and "bring pinpoint fire on it immediately," Hendrix said.

Commanders will be able to receive and gather information and transmit the processed information simultaneously to multiple points on the battlefield.

"The faster periods will be much faster and more violent," Hendrix said. He also said we will be able to choose when we want a slower pace or an operational pause. Being able to set the pace on the battlefield will give our forces an advantage.

"You can drive the train and thats what were trying to do - drive the train," Canada said.

The first unit to be equipped with the digital and computerized equipment in 1999 is yet to be determined, Hendrix said.

The decision will be based on unit operational requirements.

LOADED 45: dangerous season

any amount of alcohol in their blood," Beighley said.

Beighley said one of the primary reasons for the emphasis on youthful drivers is the alarmingly high rate of impaired driving fatalities involving younger drivers.

"According to data I've read young adult drivers compromise more than half of all the impaired drivers involved in alcohol related fatal crashes," Beighley said. "Also, they are the most resistant to changing drinking behavior once they begin to develop a problem."

Beighley said results from the 3D national campaign and the education of the United States in general has helped to reduce alcohol and drug related fatalities.

"Participants in the 3D program set out to reduce the total number of alcohol-related fatalities by 43 percent by 1997," Beighley said. "As a nation we have achieved that goal two years ahead of schedule."

According to the Infantry branch safety office, Fort Benning has improved significantly in the number of privately owned vehicle deaths since 1960. In the decade of 1960, Fort Benning recorded a total of 244 fatalities, in the 90s there have been only 20 fatalities.

Military Police Activity has also increased their precautionary measures to help decrease alcohol-related fatalities, said Sgt. 1st Class Dan Downs, chief of traffic investigations.

"Besides normal patrols, we will be adding additional patrols to be out in the evenings looking for intoxicated drivers," Downs said. "The Military Police on this installation are all trained to identify drunken drivers, and to administer a field sobriety test."

In addition to the extra patrols for drunk drivers, Downs said, they will also be stopping drivers exceeding the speed limits using a number of different techniques.

"Fort Benning has one of the most proactive traffic investigation setions in the Army," Downs said. "All of the vehicles have front and rear radar detectors that allow them to clock speeders in both directions. They also have advanced survailence cameras that allow them to video tape traffic stops."

Another technique the Military Police will be using is the placement of dummies inside of extra vehicles positioned around post.

As a reminder of the loaded 45 and in addition to the 3D month activities, motorists will be asked to keep their headlights on for the entire day of Dec.15 in the "Lights on for Life" campaign.

Another program will be conducting is the Safetycab program which is being sponsored by local businesses. Anyone out during Dec. 15 through Jan. 1 from 7 p.m. to 3 a.m. with out a designated driver can call 323-0110 for a free, safe ride home.

VA launches new health study on Gulf

Department of Veterans Affairs

Washington, D.C. — The Department of Veterans Affairs has begun new research on the health of Persian Gulf War veterans and their families, the latest step in a search for answers about the health consequences of that conflict.

Unlike many of the earlier investigations that are looking at specific groups of veterans for unusual health problems, the National Health Survey of Persian Gulf Veterans and Their Family Members is a broad epidemiological study that will compare a representative sampling of 15,000 Persian Gulf veterans with a "control group" of 15,000 veterans who served stateside or in other locations away from Southwest Asia during the Persian Gulf War. The study will also evaluate the reproductive health and birth outcomes of Persian Gulf veterans and their families.

Secretary of Veterans Affairs Jesse Brown said, "While the health problems of any Persian Gulf veteran are important and deserve immediate attention. these veterans and their families also want long-term answers. For that, we need a controlled scientific basis to find prevalence of illnesses, how they may differ from a control group 'norm,' and whether early clues to high-risk associations can shed light on causes.

The study initially will gather data through a mail questionnaire and follow-up telephone interviews, as required. Medical records will be examined for subsets of the cohorts to validate survey findings, and about 1,000 households in each group will be offered medical examinations. Counting family members who are invited to participate in the physical exams, the cohorts' size may triple.

Both study populations include representative subgroups of men and women in all services ranging from the air national guard to active-duty marines who were in the Gulf War.

VA and other federal agencies already have dozens of studies in progress examining a broad range of hypotheses about Gulf veterans. VA health officials already have been examining potential risk factors of concern to veterans, from a special neurological evaluation program aimed at detecting the kind of long-term damage that would be expected from chemical exposures to the medical surveillance of service members who have retained fragments of depleted uranium shrapnel. In addition, three specialized VA Persian Gulf Environmental Hazard Research Centers are coordinating more than a dozen protocols with a variety of approaches, from small case-control studies to cellular-level studies of possible biochemical markers.

The National Health Survey, administered by VA's Environmental Epidemiology Service, expects initial survey data in June 1996 and final physical examination results in June 1998.

While Gulf veterans cannot volunteer for the new study due to the scientific quality controls of random selection for a representative sampling, VA continues to provide a medical exam and battery of tests through its registry program. All Gulf veterans are invited to participate, free of charge.

Information is available through the Persian Gulf Information Center at (800) PGW-VETS.

Environmental field open to displaced DoD personnel

Army Career and Alumni Program

Among the most important environmental issues facing the United States is the management of hazardous substances — from manufacture to treatment and disposal.

Five regional Hazardous Substance Research Centers have been established by the Environmental Protection Agency to provide research on the management of hazardous substances, disseminate research information and findings and to train and support organizations and individuals involved with hazardous substances.

Qualified Department of Defense military and civilian personnel interested in this career field, who have been displaced because of base closings and realignments, can now participate in the Research and Re-education for Displaced DoD program.

Offered through the EPA's HSRC in cooperation with DoD, participants can earn bachelor's or advanced degrees while working on research and technology transfer projects that address hazardous substance problems shared by DoD and other federal facilities. Students earn degrees related to the management, science or engineering of hazardous substances.

Candidate students include persons who have been displaced from civilian or uniformed service within the DoD. A priority will be given to those who have been displaced involuntarily. Other candidates may include students who want careers that will equip them for employment in the management of hazardous substances of concern to DoD installations.

Those accepted into the research and re-education program will receive tuition reimbursement and a stipend based on the current rate for an assistantship at the HSRC university. Students are expected to provide research or teaching assistance as part of their participation in this program.

In general, undergraduate students may be supported for up to two years, master's-level students for two years, doctoral students for four years and post-doctorate degree for up to two years.

Other benefits include support from the research and re-education ombudsman, special training opportunities; and an opportunity to participate in a practicum or internship with a regulatory agency or industry or participate in an HSRC-sponsored research project.

Research and re-education candidates must first gain admission to one of the HSRC universities and the academic programs of their choice, based upon their own credentials and university admission requirements. Once admitted to the university, they must contact the research and re-education coordinator at the appropriate HSRC and ask to participate.

For more information about the HSRC and the research and re-education program, come by the Army Career and Alumni Program offices in Soldiers' Plaza, Building 2617, or call Elsie Jackson at 545-7009 or 545-4892.

Transition Assistance Classes

Army Career and Alumni Program

If you're getting out the military, the Army Career and Alumni Program is available to help you make the transition.

All service members getting out of or retiring from the military must process through the Army Career and Alumni Program's Transition Assistance Office, Building 2617, Soldiers' Plaza, before attending a Transition Assistance Program class in Infantry Hall.

The National Defense Authorization Act Fiscal 1991, Public Law 101-510 states that soldiers within 180 days of expiration term of service are required to attend a Transition Assistance Program class.

Classes are given in three-day blocks and are scheduled throughout the year.

Classes are in Classroom 30, Infantry Hall, from 7:45 a.m. to 4:30 p.m.

For more information, call 545-7020 or 545-7009.

Date	Type of Class
Monday to Wednesday	ETS
Dec. 11 to 13	Retirement
Jan. 8 to 10	Retirement
Jan. 22 to 24	ETS
Jan. 29 to 31	ETS
Feb. 6 to 8	ETS
Feb. 12 to 14	Retirement
Feb. 26 to 28	ETS
March 4 to 6	ETS
March 11 to 13	Retirement

Classes are conducted in Classroom 30, Infantry Hall, from 7:45 a.m. to 4:30 p.m.

aer q&a

Army Emergency Relief

Q. What is Army Emergency Relief ?

A. AER is a private, nonprofit organization, incorporated in 1942 by the secretary of War and the Army chief of staff. AER's mission is to provide emergency financial assistance.

Q. Whom does AER help?

A. AER helps active duty soldiers, retirees and their family members, Army National Guard and Reserve soldiers on active duty for more than 30 days and their family members, and surviving spouses and orphans of soldiers who died on active duty or after they retired.

Q. What can AER do?

A. AER can help with emergency financial needs for food, emergency transportation (due to emergency leave), vehicle repair, funeral expenses, medical and dental expenses, certain expenses when pay has been lost or stolen and undergraduate level education scholarships based on financial need to children of active and retired soldiers.

Q. What type of assistance does AER offer?

A. AER offers free loans and grants, or part loan and part grant, if repayment of loan will cause undue hardship.

Q. Is there a dollar limit on AER help:

A. There is no limit on AER help. AER will help anyone who is eligible for AER assistance and has a valid emergency need.

Q. What can't AER do?

A. AER cannot help pay for nonessentials such as financing ordinary leave or vacation, paying fines or legal expenses, helping liquidate or consolidate debts, assisting with house purchase or home improvements, helping purchase, rent or lease a vehicle, covering bad checks or paying credit card bills.

Q. How do I find AER when I, or my family members, need help?

A. At Fort Benning, visit AER at Building 2643, Soldiers' Plaza, from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. Monday through Friday. During nonduty hours (for emergency leave only), contact the U.S. Army Infantry Center staff duty officer at 545-2218. Away from Fort Benning, contact any AER section, American Red Cross, Air Force Aid Society, Navy-Marine Corps Relief Society or Coast Guard Mutual Assistance Office.

Q. When I visit AER for assistance, what documents should I bring with me?

A. Soldiers should bring their military identification card, most recent leave and earning statement, leave or permanent change of station orders, trustee letter for Chapter 13 if applicable and substantiating documentation such as car repair estimate, apartment or house rental agreement or utility bills.

HOW TO RECYCLE

Post housing residents may place recyclable materials in brown plastic bins for weekly curbside pickup.

Here is a list of the items that can and cannot be placed in the bin for recycling.

• Glass: Only the following can be recycled: soft drink, beer, juice, ketchup, wine, liquor and food containers. All caps and lids are to be removed and containers are to be rinsed out. Special care should be taken to avoid breaking glass when placing it in the recycling bin. Glass will be separated by color at the curb for processing at the Materials Recovery facility.

• Cans: Only aluminum and steel cans are accepted at this time. Cans must be rinsed out. Labels may remain on the cans.

• Plastic: All plastic materials containing the Recycling Triangle (Three Chasing Arrows) may be recycled. This includes soft drink bottles and milk jugs. Caps must be removed and may be placed in the recycling bin. All containers must be rinsed out.

•Paper: All paper products except used personal type materials may be recycled. These items should be placed in brown paper bags or bundled together and tied then placed beside the recycling bin.

NOTE: incidents whereby used personal items are placed for recycling is cause for rejection.

Cardboard: Pick-up of cardboard from moving will be coordinated directly with the Materials Recovery Facility, at 544-6142. Ask for the manager or leave a message containing your address, housing area, name and phone number.

Inert Waste: Tree limbs, grass clippings and leaves will be picked up on Mondays only. Clippings and leaves should be placed in a garbage can and tied or in a trash can with a lid.

Trash and recycle pickup schedule

Household trash and recycling will be collected once a week on the same day. If there is recyclable material mixed in with the trash can it will not be picked up until the following week, or until recyclables are separated.

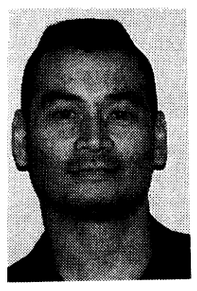
ITB takes tops in retention

By Andre Sison
Infantry Training Brigade

The Commanding General's Excellence in Retention Trophy (small category) will be returned to the Infantry Training Brigade for fiscal 1995, making this the second year in a row ITB has won the award.

"The bottom line is, very few of our qualified soldiers get out of the service compared to most units," said ITB Career Counselor Sgt. 1st Class Toni McNair, who attributes the brigade's success to a good command climate that is geared toward having quality soldiers reenlist.



ITB had Fort Benning's highest percentage of initial term and midcareer soldiers reenlist. The brigade's top Retention Noncommissioned Officer was Staff Sgt. Alain Tyler of the 2nd Battalion, 58th Infantry Regiment for accomplishing 600 percent of his re-enlistment mission.

"With the drawdown going on in the Army, it makes it difficult to keep the best," Tyler said.

profile in excellence

Name: Sgt. David P. Roman

Award or recognition: Fort Benning Noncommissioned Officer of the Quarter
MOS: 11B
Unit: Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 75th Ranger Regiment
Job title: Personnel administrative sergeant
Years on the job: Three years

What were your reasons for joining the Army?
Ever since I was a little kid, I always wanted to be a soldier. I guess it was time.

Define your style of leadership.
Circumstances usually dictate what style of leadership to use. Mostly what I do is analyze the situation, choose a plan and go on from there. Hopefully everything works out for the best.

What person has most influenced your career?
Master Sgt. Philip R. Holguin of Headquarters, 75th Ranger Regiment. He has always shown me confidence and respect, given me challenging opportunities and the motivation to make things happen.

If you were sergeant major of the Army for a day, what improvements would you make?
Provide better living conditions for the single soldiers and fight for better pay and benefits, especially for the enlisted soldiers.

What were your reasons for choosing your MOS?
I wanted something that would be challenging to me.

Describe a memorable moment in your career.
Being selected to represent the Ranger Regiment in this competition and winning. It gives me a chance to make a contribution to the ranger community.

What are your future career plans?
Maybe re-enlist or start my own business. I'm still examining my options.

What others have to say about you:
Sgt. Roman is the best. He is an extremely hard working soldier who always bends over backwards to help everyone else. He goes to the extreme to do his job and he never says no to anything.

1st Lt. T. J. Atkins —
Executive officer, Headquarters, 75th Ranger Regiment

Contracting director receives recognition

National Contract Management Association

The director of Contracting has been recognized by a national professional association of contracts personnel for his outstanding contributions to the field of contract management.

John Machovec, who heads Fort Benning's Contracting Directorate, received the recognition.

Machovec was designated a fellow July 22 by Paul B. Lindahl, national president of the National Contract Management Association and the award was presented during a ceremony recently hosted by the local Follow-Me Chapter at Fort Benning.

The fellow designation is among NCMA's most prestigious awards, granted only to those members who have used their talent and experience to benefit both the Association and the contract management profession.

Nominees for the award are evaluated according to their level of academic training and experience in contract management, teaching and publishing efforts, participation in workshops and conferences and services to NCMA.

The National Contract Management Association has a membership of more than 20,000 individuals engaged in the field of public and commercial contracting through companies, government agencies, or related field of endeavor who are dedicated to excellence and high standards of professionalism.

11th names Ragin Court block of the month

11th Infantry Regiment

On Nov. 9, 1995, the 23 families of Ragin Court, located on West Main Post received the 11th Infantry Regiments Block of the Month Award.

The 11th Regimental Infantry Commander, Col. John P. Lewis, presented the award. Ragin Court is the first award which recognizes "excellence" in the appearance of the community, hard work, team effort and remarkable community spirit.

Although all housing areas under the sponsorship of the 11th Infantry Regiment are eligible for the award, Ragin Court looks to hold on to it, according to community members.

The community mayor, Jackie Mumpower said that the community was very excited and very proud to have been selected. "Everyone pitched in to help," she said.

The Area Coordinator Sgt. 1st Class Kent A. Grosshaus, said that "a lot of work went into the winning of this award." The community certainly reflected that effort.

Also, 11th Infantry Certificates of Achievement were given to each family in recognition of their contribution to their community. These were also presented by Lewis.

Book Week encourages enjoyable reading habits

Fort Benning Schools

It was quite a different sight at Edward A. White Elementary School Nov. 13 to 17 as the faculty and students dressed as story book characters, celebrating National Children's Book Week and American Education Week.

With a week full of activities, Nov. 16's Character Day was certainly a favorite among students.

Students and staff portrayed Pippi Longstocking, Amelia Bedelia, Viola Swamp and a host of other storybook characters as they encouraged children to read these stories.

"Reading has always been a major emphasis at White School," commented Owen Ditchfield, the school's media specialist and sponsor of the week's activities. "The students love to come to the media center and check out books frequently," he said. "In fact, this year we've averaged 129 books checked out per day."

From overnight slumber parties, to book fairs, character day, special guest readers and even a reading challenge for parents, the school went all out to encourage children to read "for the fun of it."

Ditchfield recalled previous years when children culminated the week's events by attending an overnight slumber party or evening book party featuring a professional storyteller.

"This year, we wanted to try something different," Ditchfield said. "We brought the storyteller in during regular hours to perform for all the children, and she stayed after school to train the teachers on storytelling techniques."

Fiona Page, a blind storyteller and former educator from the Atlanta area, entertained students in an assembly with her stories of swamp monsters and folk tales from Australia. After school, Page conducted an in-service for all teachers, relaying stories from her classroom experiences and information about teaching in story format.

The day prior to Page's visit, a school-wide Drop Everything and Read time took place. During DEAR, students, teachers and staff stopped whatever they were doing to read for 30 minutes. Even the physical education, art and music classes took time out to read a favorite book. Students had a chance to report on that book Nov. 15, a day designated for creative book reports. They were challenged to come up with a creative way to present their book and pique the interest of other students. Colorful kites, props, posters and pictures were a part of their reports.

"The participation and excitement of students and staff has been outstanding," commented Janet Wynn, school principal. "Everyone especially enjoyed dressing up as their favorite character," Wynn added. "I'm Suzu from Japan in the book 'The Bride Doll,'" Wynn said, showing her authentic Japanese kimono and

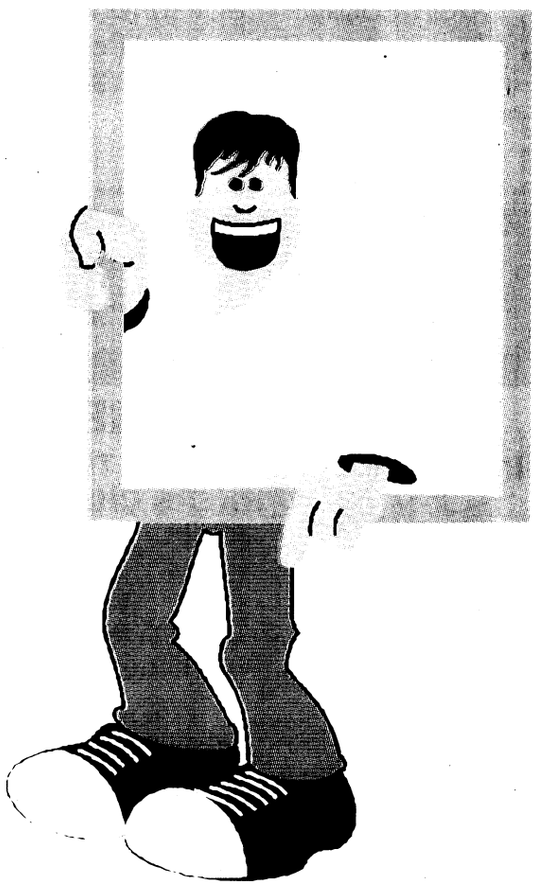
Preventive measures can make difference

By Joanie Camp
Martin Army Community Hospital

As a soldier, you join the Army to be all that you can be. But to accomplish that, you must safeguard your health.

There are times when the challenge to lose weight, exercise more or to quit smoking is just too great, even for soldiers who should always be physically fit and ready to serve. Changing life-long behaviors is an extremely difficult task.



Lt. Col. Daniel Davidson, chief of Preventive Medicine at Martin Army Community Hospital, said the Army is doing many things to keep soldiers healthy. The Army evaluates its population by identifying behaviors and habits that contribute to unhealthy lifestyles. These unhealthy lifestyles can negatively affect soldiers and the Army's mission. He said that in today's world, it is important for the U.S. military to remain strong and healthy.

To ensure all soldiers are combat-ready and deployable, the hospital provides a Health Risk Appraisal questionnaire, a blood pressure screening and a cholesterol check that evaluate health status by identifying certain lifestyle behaviors. The appraisal covers three major areas: past and present health, lifestyle behaviors and other personal data.

From this information, participants receive a personalized, confidential health-status report that suggests specific changes that will help prevent illness and increase lifespan. The appraisal is routinely performed for soldiers during in-processing. Counseling is provided in areas that are identified as health risks, and participants are referred to appropriate health care professionals or resources.

Maj. Joanne Hollandsworth, chief of Community Health Nursing at MACH, said the appraisal supports and encourages unit readiness, because it is a vital link for the commander that can provide a snapshot view of the health profile of the organization.

For example, if a unit screening shows that 80 percent of the unit exceeds the Army's average for tobacco use, a tobacco-cessation program would be recommended. Tobacco is known to lengthen healing time after an injury, reduce night vision, make one susceptible to respiratory illness and reduce hand-eye coordination. Hollandsworth said commanders view healthcare providers as their partners in keeping their troops healthy and fit.

Unfortunately, very few people are willing to make major lifestyle changes to reduce risks for chronic or debilitating diseases that might occur 10, 20 or even 30 years in the future. Alfreta Gibson, supervisor of the Health Promotion Center, said that to effect behavioral changes, people need to be aware of the daily habits that influence their health. Recent health care studies indicate more than half of the U.S. deaths in 1990 were attributed to lifestyle behaviors such as tobacco use, poor dietary intake, lack of physical activity and heavy alcohol use.

Gibson said the appraisal is just the first step in the effort to stay healthy and fit, but the real objective is for people to be as physically fit and healthy as they can be.

For more information about the Health Risk Appraisal, call the Health Promotion Center at 545-1987 or 545-3998 or stop by Soldiers' Plaza, Building 2636.

Fall festival

Stowers' students get down on the farm

By Shannon Day
Special to The Bayonet©

Stowers Elementary School took learning about fall to a whole new hands-on level with its Harvest Festival, Nov. 17.

The festival was planned to show students how important farming was in early American history, according to David F. Murray, a fifth grade teacher at the school, who coordinated most of the events.

He said the festival was preceded by supporting curriculum such as studying the science of corn and early America.

The events included goat-roping, squash rolling, corn husking, pig calling, apple bobbing and scarecrow making.

The events were unique because instead of the teachers, the fifth-grade students were in charge of helping the first-grade buddy class students, he said.

"I think this is fun," Ashley Durham, a fifth grade student in charge of scarecrow making, said. "It's a chance to help the first graders. They especially like the hay."

Although the older children were able to handle most of the events, they did have to have adult assistance with the animals.

The animals came from Murray's own farm.

He added that it was the first time many of the students had been so close to live farm animals, which added to the excitement.

They also got a demonstration of how fast a goat can run. The goat, who managed to escape during the goat-roping contest, managed to elude students, teachers and parents in a high-speed foot chase, finally disappearing into the woods. The goat was recaptured.

The games were followed by a feast, which focused on many traditional fall foods, according to Murray. Parents were invited, and many brought supplemental dishes.

According to the children, the festival was a success.

"This has been a great day," Durham said.

Buying a used car? Here's advice

Derus Media Service Inc.

Greater selection and availability, constantly improving technology and a return to such values as frugality have all helped make used cars and trucks popular in the '90s.

If you are one of the millions of motorists contemplating the purchase of a used vehicle, here's some advice from the experts at the nonprofit National Institute for Automotive Service Excellence.

• Determine your needs and the features you want. Narrow your choices, but remain open to attractive alternatives.

• Get an idea of prices by glancing at classified ads, walking around dealer lots and talking to friends. The price range will be influenced up or down by the vehicle's condition, its relative popularity, the seller's motivation, your motivation and even your geographic area.

• Visit a library or go to a bookstore to check the suggested price, reliability and customer rankings of your potential vehicle in magazines and used car guides.

•The next step is your initial inspection and test drive. Never inspect a car at night or in dim lighting. If you're still interested in the vehicle after your initial examination, arrange for a professional auto technician to do a thorough, independent inspection. You should expect to pay a fee for the inspection.

Here's what you can do yourself:

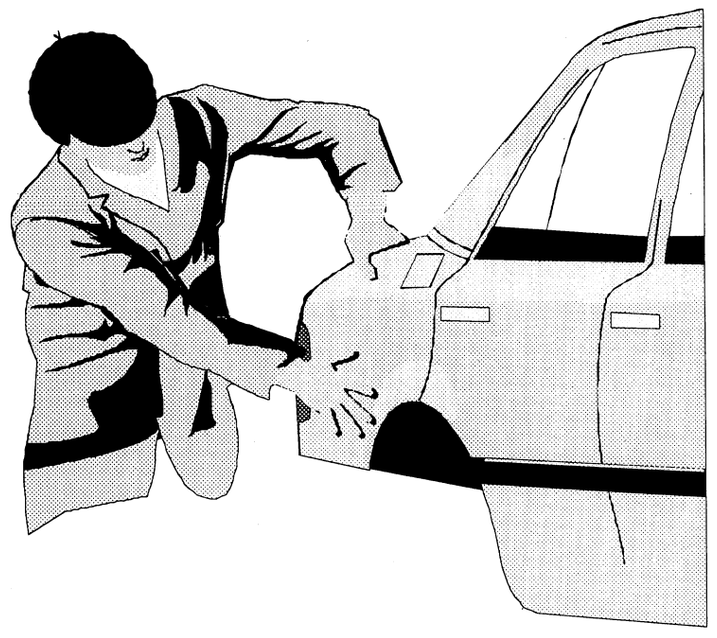
• Check the exterior carefully for signs of rust or body repair. Check the operation, alignment and fit of doors, the trunk and hood.

• Check the condition of the tires. Unevenly worn tires could indicate misalignment.

• Push down on each corner of the vehicle several times, then stop. If the vehicle bounces back more than once, it might need shocks. Check for other suspension or frame problems by squatting about six yards in front of the vehicle. The front and rear tires should line up, and the vehicle should not sag or lean. Repeat this from the rear.

• Check the interior for rust. Look for signs of water damage due to leaks and flooding, such as silt deposits under the seats. A musty smell could also indicate water damage. Check the trunk.

• Check the odometer for signs of tampering. Misaligned numbers on an analog mileage gauge and scratches or missing screws in the dash board could be signs of tampering. Another tell-tale sign is a worn brake pedal in an otherwise "low-mileage" vehicle. Also, examine the vehicle's title for signs of tampering.



• Ask the seller if the maintenance records are available. Original owners often keep their service records.

• Check the condition and operation of everything controlled from the dash — lights, wipers, heater, air conditioning and radio, to name a few.

• Under-the-hood elements to check include the tightness and condition of hoses and belts and the level and appearance of all fluids. For example, engine coolant that has oil droplets floating on it could indicate a leaky head gasket or cracked block. Transmission fluid that smells burned or has metal flecks could spell trouble. Engine oil that is milky-colored, smells like gasoline or feels gritty could indicate engine damage. A qualified technician can do a more thorough analysis.

• Start the vehicle and listen for a smooth, steady pulse. Check for leaks and drips under the car after it has idled a while. Dark smoke from exhaust pipe means the vehicle is burning oil.

• The test drive. Listen for unusual noises. Be aware of any misfiring or other performance problems. The transmission should shift smoothly with no loud noises. The brakes should not "pull" or "grab." Check for poor alignment by letting go of the steering wheel while driving on a smooth, flat road. It should not "pull" excessively to either side. A vibrating steering wheel could indicate out-of-balance tires or more serious front-end problems.

If your own inspection goes OK, set up an appointment with an ASE certified automotive technician for a full inspection. Do not purchase the vehicle if the seller will not let you take if for an independent inspection.

In addition to helping you decide whether to make an offer and at what price, a professional inspection conducted by a certified auto technician begins what should become regularly scheduled maintenance — the best way to protect your automotive investment.

Diabetes seminar Dec. 9

American Diabetes Association

The American Diabetes Association, area hospitals and Columbus College will host a seminar about diabetes Dec. 9 from 8 a.m. to 4 p.m. at the Elizabeth Bradley Turner Center for Continuing Education in Columbus.

Persons with Type I and Type II diabetes along with family members can attend.

The seminar, "Columbus Diabetes University," will provide valuable information on how to manage and control diabetes through a series of four workshops.

Topics will include feet, eyes, nutrition and diabetes management. Presenters include physicians, nurses, and diabetes educators.

The fee for the program is $10 per individual and $15 per family, which includes lunch and workshops. Preregistration is required on a first-come, first-served basis. Registrations can also be made with Visa or MasterCard by calling 568-2023. The deadline for registration is Wednesday.

For more information, call the American Diabetes Association at 327-0432.

Choose firewood carefully

Better Business Bureau

If you plan to use your fireplace or wood stove this winter, now is the time to pile up on firewood. And, if you know what to look for when buying firewood, you won't be left out in the cold.

The Better Business Bureau of West Georgia-East Alabama offers the following tips to help you get the most for your money.

Firewood is often sold by the cord, which measures eight feet long, four feet wide and four feet high. Some sellers may promise a full cord, yet only deliver one-third or one-half of a cord.

This is more likely to happen if the wood is just dumped instead of stacked. If you're not familiar with the seller, it may be a good idea to pay to have the wood stacked. That way you can check on the size.

If you do buy a cord, keep in mind that the four-foot-wide pieces may be too big for your fireplace or stove. Decide if you want to cut the wood yourself or pay to have someone else do it for you. Or, consider buying a face cord, one-third of a cord, which has smaller pieces of wood.

Look for dry, seasoned wood. It will have cracks and splits in the wood and should have been cut at least six months earlier, preferably a year earlier. Remember, fresh-cut, green wood will not burn efficiently.

If you're buying the wood for heating purposes, consider hardwood instead of softwood. Hardwoods include oak, most fruit trees (such as apple and cherry), ash, maple and birch. These generally cost more but may be well worth it, since they have a greater density and weight and generally give off more heat. Also, consider fruitwoods for a pleasant aroma.

Softwoods, such as pines, generally leave more ash. They also have a higher moisture content, which causes a popping sound when burning.

Burning kiln-dried and construction wood is not recommended for use in a fireplace or stove. These types of wood have a very low moisture level and burn quickly. They also leave greater deposits of creosote, which can cause a buildup of vapors, tar and soot in your chimney or stovepipe.

Before purchasing firewood, agree with the seller on the amount, quality and type of wood being purchased. Pay for the wood in full only after it has been delivered and measures up to the agreed quantity.

Soldiers gather to Give thanks

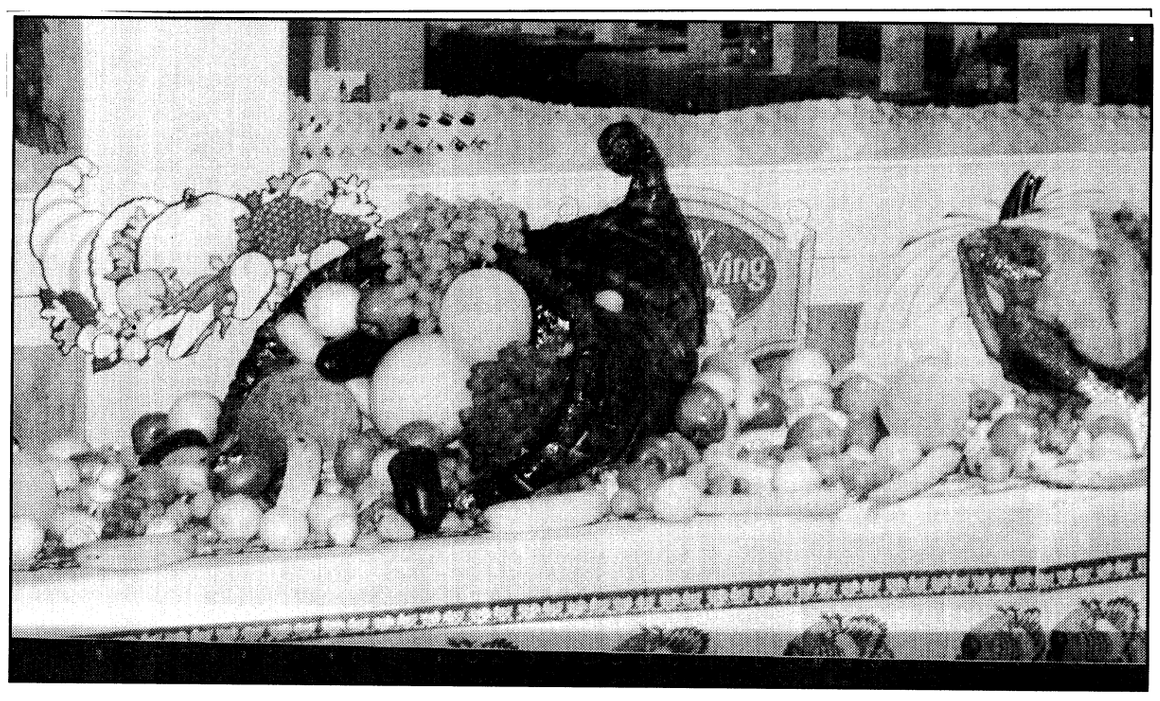
317th Engineer Battalion



Soldiers from the 317th Engineer Battalion celebrated their Thanksgiving together during a Thanksgiving dinner at the dining facility on Kelley Hill Nov. 23.

"It is that time of year when we all take the time out in our hectic lives and give thanks," said 1st Lt. George Hegedus, executive officer. "We give thanks for our successes and blessings, family and friends and most importantly for those basic necessities we have that many around the world do not."

The traditional Thanksgiving feast at the 317th Eng. Bn. was a special day, he said. The feast included turkey, steamship round, lobster, shrimp cocktail, sweet potatoes and corn.

"If that didn't whet one's appetite, a large assortment of dessert pies, ice cream and fruit salad was there to finish the feast," Hegedus said.

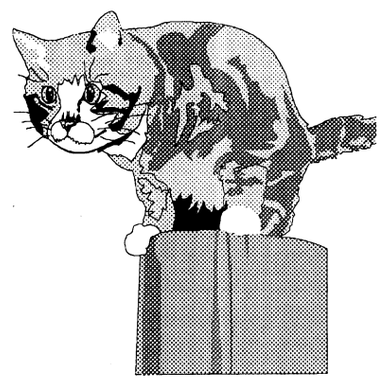
The cooks spent a great deal of time and effort decorating the dining facility. Spcs. Jeffrey Gatts and Matthew Burany, cooks, carved four ice sculptures, which included an eagle, dolphin, swan and boat.

Roosevelt Samuel

A cornucopia and holiday decorations highlighted 317th Engineer Battalion's Thanksgiving dinner.

The cooks, led by Sgt. 1st Class Jeffrey Miller, noncommissioned officer in charge of the dining facility, spent several days preparing the meal. The decorating and final food preparations lasted well into the eleventh hour.

"The hard work paid off with an exceptional and memorable feast that honored all we have to be thankful for," Hegedus said.



The soldiers, noncommissioned officers, officers and family and friends said they greatly appreciated the cooks' efforts. After a hard week's work, the cooks were given a break as the officers served the meal to everyone, he said.

"The meal and atmosphere were excellent, and a good time was had by all," said 2nd Lt. Tom Carona, Company C.

As everyone pondered what would happen to the leftovers, everyone took one more silent moment to give thanks to how fortunate we are in this great country, surrounded by family and friends, Hegedus said.

Cat care tips keep kitty sitting pretty

Veterinary Services

Cats are graceful, affectionate and clean. While cats appear to be aloof and independent, they are not self-sufficient. Cats, like all other pets, require regular care and attention.

Cats need food, fresh drinking water and a clean place to eat. A cat's food and water dishes should also be kept clean. Dried-out "leftovers" from previous meals are sometimes enough to keep cats from eating.

Even though cats groom themselves, they still need regular grooming by their owners. Combing will not only keep the cats' fur free of tangles and knots, it will give the owner an opportunity to examine the skin, ear, mouth and feet. Veterinarians frequently see cats and dogs with skin, ear, mouth and foot problems that could have been avoided if the owners had regularly groomed their pets. With regular grooming, a cat will get used to being held and examined. This will make examinations by the veterinarian easier and less stressful for your pet.

Cats can be protected, by vaccination, against many diseases. They should be seen regularly by a veterinarian for vaccinations and routine checkups. Owners should know and be alert for signs of ill health in their pets. Following are some of the signs owners should watch for:

- Abnormal behavior, sudden viciousness or lethargy
- Abnormal discharges from the nose, eyes or other body openings
- Loss of appetite, marked weight losses or gains, excessive water consumption, difficult or uncontrolled waste elimination
- Excessive head shaking, scratching or licking of the body
- Dandruff, hair loss, open sores, foul breath and excessive tarter on teeth

Contact a veterinarian if your pet shows any of these signs.

What to do when your child steals

Radford University

Being suspicious of your child can feel like a betrayal, but you need to be realistic and recognize that it's possible for any child to steal — it doesn't necessarily mean your child will be a criminal or that you're a failure as a parent

RADFORD, Va.— • A child comes home with pockets stuffed full of toys or candy.

• Money disappears even more mysteriously than usual.

• A child's piggy bank or money box suddenly accrues profits faster than a 1980s junk bond trader.

Under such circumstances, the observant parent might put two and two together and begin to wonder. Does my child have a serious problem with stealing or is this a temporary, childhood case of sticky fingers?

The answer to that depends on many things, said Radford University psychology professor and clinical child psychologist Lois Kugler, including the child's age, the amount of remorse, whether there's other delinquent-type behavior and the overall frequency, duration and severity of the problem. "Whether the stealing develops into a more serious problem may depend upon parental response," she said.

Most children go through periods when they'll experiment with lying or stealing, said Kugler, but by the age of five, children should have some awareness that such behavior is wrong.

If you suspect your child may be stealing the worst thing to do is ignore it. "The best response is a swift and definite one," said Kugler, "with clearly specified consequences for stealing or lying about it."

Parents may fail to suspect their child could be stealing because they assume their child would never do something they know is wrong even though the parents have never taken the time to directly address the issue. "Values need to be explicitly taught," said Kugler. "If your child could be stealing, now is the time to deal with it."

Being suspicious of your child can feel like a betrayal but you need to be realistic and recognize that it's possible for any child to steal — it doesn't necessarily mean your child will be a criminal or that you're a failure as a parent, said Kugler. On the contrary, the failure is in refusing to face the issue.

Don't ambush your child with accusations but ask direct questions and insist upon direct, detailed answers, said Kugler. Non-threatening confrontation will sometimes prompt a confession. If not, some parental surveillance and detective work may be in order. Does your child claim to have won a prize or received a gift? Such claims are usually fairly easy to check out.

It also helps to give the suspected thief a choice, said Kugler: Either a moderately unpleasant consequence for telling the truth about stealing or a harsher consequence if he or she is caught lying. Either way, "assure your child that you love them and that the reason you don't want them to steal is because you want them to grow up feeling respectful of others, respectful of themselves, able to control their impulses and confident in their own ability to differentiate right from wrong," she said, adding that you can show from your attitude and attention to the issue that such traits are valuable.

Also, be sure to practice what you preach. What do you do when a clerk accidentally gives you too much change or you find something that doesn't belong to you? Or what do you do when your 9-year-old can get a half-price ticket by claiming to be eight? Your child won't respect your instruction if you're cheating and lying yourself. "Expecting your child to be honest in big matters when you allow them to cheat in small matters isn't morally or logically consistent," she said.

Recompense is important when a child has stolen something, said Kugler. Have the child take the stolen money or property to the offended person or store manager and confess and apologize.

Depending on the severity of the thievery or whether it's a repeat offense, it might also be necessary for the child re-pay what was stolen with interest or by working. If returning stolen items or money isn't possible, the child could be required to work and then donate the money to charity, said Kugler, explaining that giving to charity forces the child to adopt a giving mindset — and they might even discover that giving makes them feel better than taking.

It's also important to try and figure out if there's an underlying emotional reason why the child may be stealing, said Kugler. " wooden thongs. Teachers and children alike were dressed as everything from Little Red Riding Hood and Raggedy Ann, to the winning costume, a Christmas tree from book "The Year of the Perfect Christmas Tree" worn by teacher Jane Pride. Students wore many creative costumes such as the Cat in the Hat and Flower, the skunk in the story "Bambi." The student with the best costume in each class presented his or her character at an assembly that afternoon. Student winners were Drew Thomas, Thomas Ringler-Lantzy, Ryan Barham, Shelby Carter, Jeffrey Kelly, Courtney Fuller, Susan Wells, Ashley Denne, Shunacey LeSure, Christine Dickey, Janie Lee, Gabina Perez and Darnell Frison.

BOOK: Reading for fun targeted

Friday's theme was "reading is important to important people." Teachers invited a number of special guests to come in to read to their students. Some of the guest included Katherine Bristow, author of "The Golden Horse, An American Fairy Tale," Col. Gregory Camp, chief of staff; Dee Armstrong, Channel 9 News; Dr. Janie Nesmith, a professor at Columbus College; Ken Lancaster, a professional storyteller; and the school principal, secretary and former teachers.

Throughout the week, the school sponsored a book fair where children could purchase books at low prices for recreational reading. The school also issued a reading challenge, which asked parents to turn off the television for 30 to 40 minutes each night to read with their children. Wynn reported that research on television and achievement indicates that more than 10 hours of television per week negatively affects academic achievement. Sharing those finding with parents, families were challenged to spend time nightly reading to their children or having their children read to them. The challenge runs through May 10. Wynn said, "Turning off the TV for 30 minutes each night is not a sacrifice, it's an investment."

Follow simple rules to teach children

Discipline

Radford University

RADFORD, VA — Parents hear all kinds of discipline advice, not only from experts, but from friends, relatives and sometimes even strangers. One book stresses positive reinforcement, while another stresses "tough love." Aunt Sadie thinks you should spank, while Dr. Smith advises time out. But the particular type of discipline isn't as important as reasonableness and consistency, said Radford University psychology professor and clinical child psychologist Jeffrey Chase.

"Discipline takes time and effort," said Chase. "It often takes more work to do the right thing than the wrong thing. People tend to ignore problems for as long as possible until they become angry. Anger can be useful if it gives us the energy to change what we need to change. But it's best to take action early, while you're still calm and rational."

Praise and guidance should be given when things are going smoothly as well as when things get rough, Chase said, even if that means interrupting your own relaxation to reward good behavior. "After a hard day, when things are peaceful and quiet, that may be when you need to get up off the couch and go reinforce what's going right," he said. "Catch them being good."

When trying to improve behavior, Chase recommended focusing on one or two behaviors at a time. "You can't change the course of a river all at once, but you can move it a few degrees at a time."

Some general advice from Chase:

• If you say there will be a particular consequence, be sure and follow through.

• Lighter, consistent punishment is more effective than ignoring negative behavior and then instituting a sweeping punishment. For example, repeatedly losing one hour of television privileges is more effective than losing one month's worth at a time. Lighter punishments also allow you to "up the ante" in order to further modify behavior.

• Instead of just telling children what you don't want them to do, give them instruction in what to do instead. That may mean working alongside a child to model the desired behavior.

• Give specific instructions. "Don't hit your sister," is easier to enforce and evaluate than a vague "Be nice to your sister."

• If there's no significant danger to the child, you may not need to actively intervene. "Sometimes, we need to let children learn from life, which can be difficult to do," Chase said. "Just as falling down is a natural consequence of learning to ride a bicycle, sometimes it's best to allow natural consequences to take their course. One of the best ways to learn is by receiving feedback from the environment, even when that feedback is unpleasant."

• Two-parent families should work as a team. "Short of your spouse doing something horrendous, you should support each other in front of the children said Chase. "If you have disagreements, work them out away from the children. That way the children can't divide and conquer."

• Praise children for being thoughtful, kind and caring. "Praise creates a pro-social self image and increases the likelihood that the child will behave in accordance with that positive self-image," Chase said.

• Rewards such as money or fun outings can be effective motivators and some parents find that reward charts are helpful, said Chase, "but the rewards should be clearly defined and agreed upon. If you have such a written agreement with your child, view it as a contract. Take it seriously, and let them know they can trust you to follow through.

"Discipline is like exercise," he said. "The short-term effects aren't always pleasant. You have sore muscles, and it takes effort. But there's a definite payoff down the road."

DoD implementing test of youth programs

By Linda D. Kozaryn
American Forces Information Service

New pressures in society, added stress of continual moving contribute to growing problems of delinquency, child abuse and family separations. Studies will focus on ways to alleviate stressors and involve military children in solutions

Religious cults, gang violence, Internet pornography. As the Wicked Witch of the West once said, "What a world! What a world!"

But unlike Dorothy in the land of Oz, today's children have no Good Witch to help them avoid the perils of growing up. Lions and tigers and bears are mild-mannered bogeymen compared to today's demons of drugs, alcohol and AIDS.

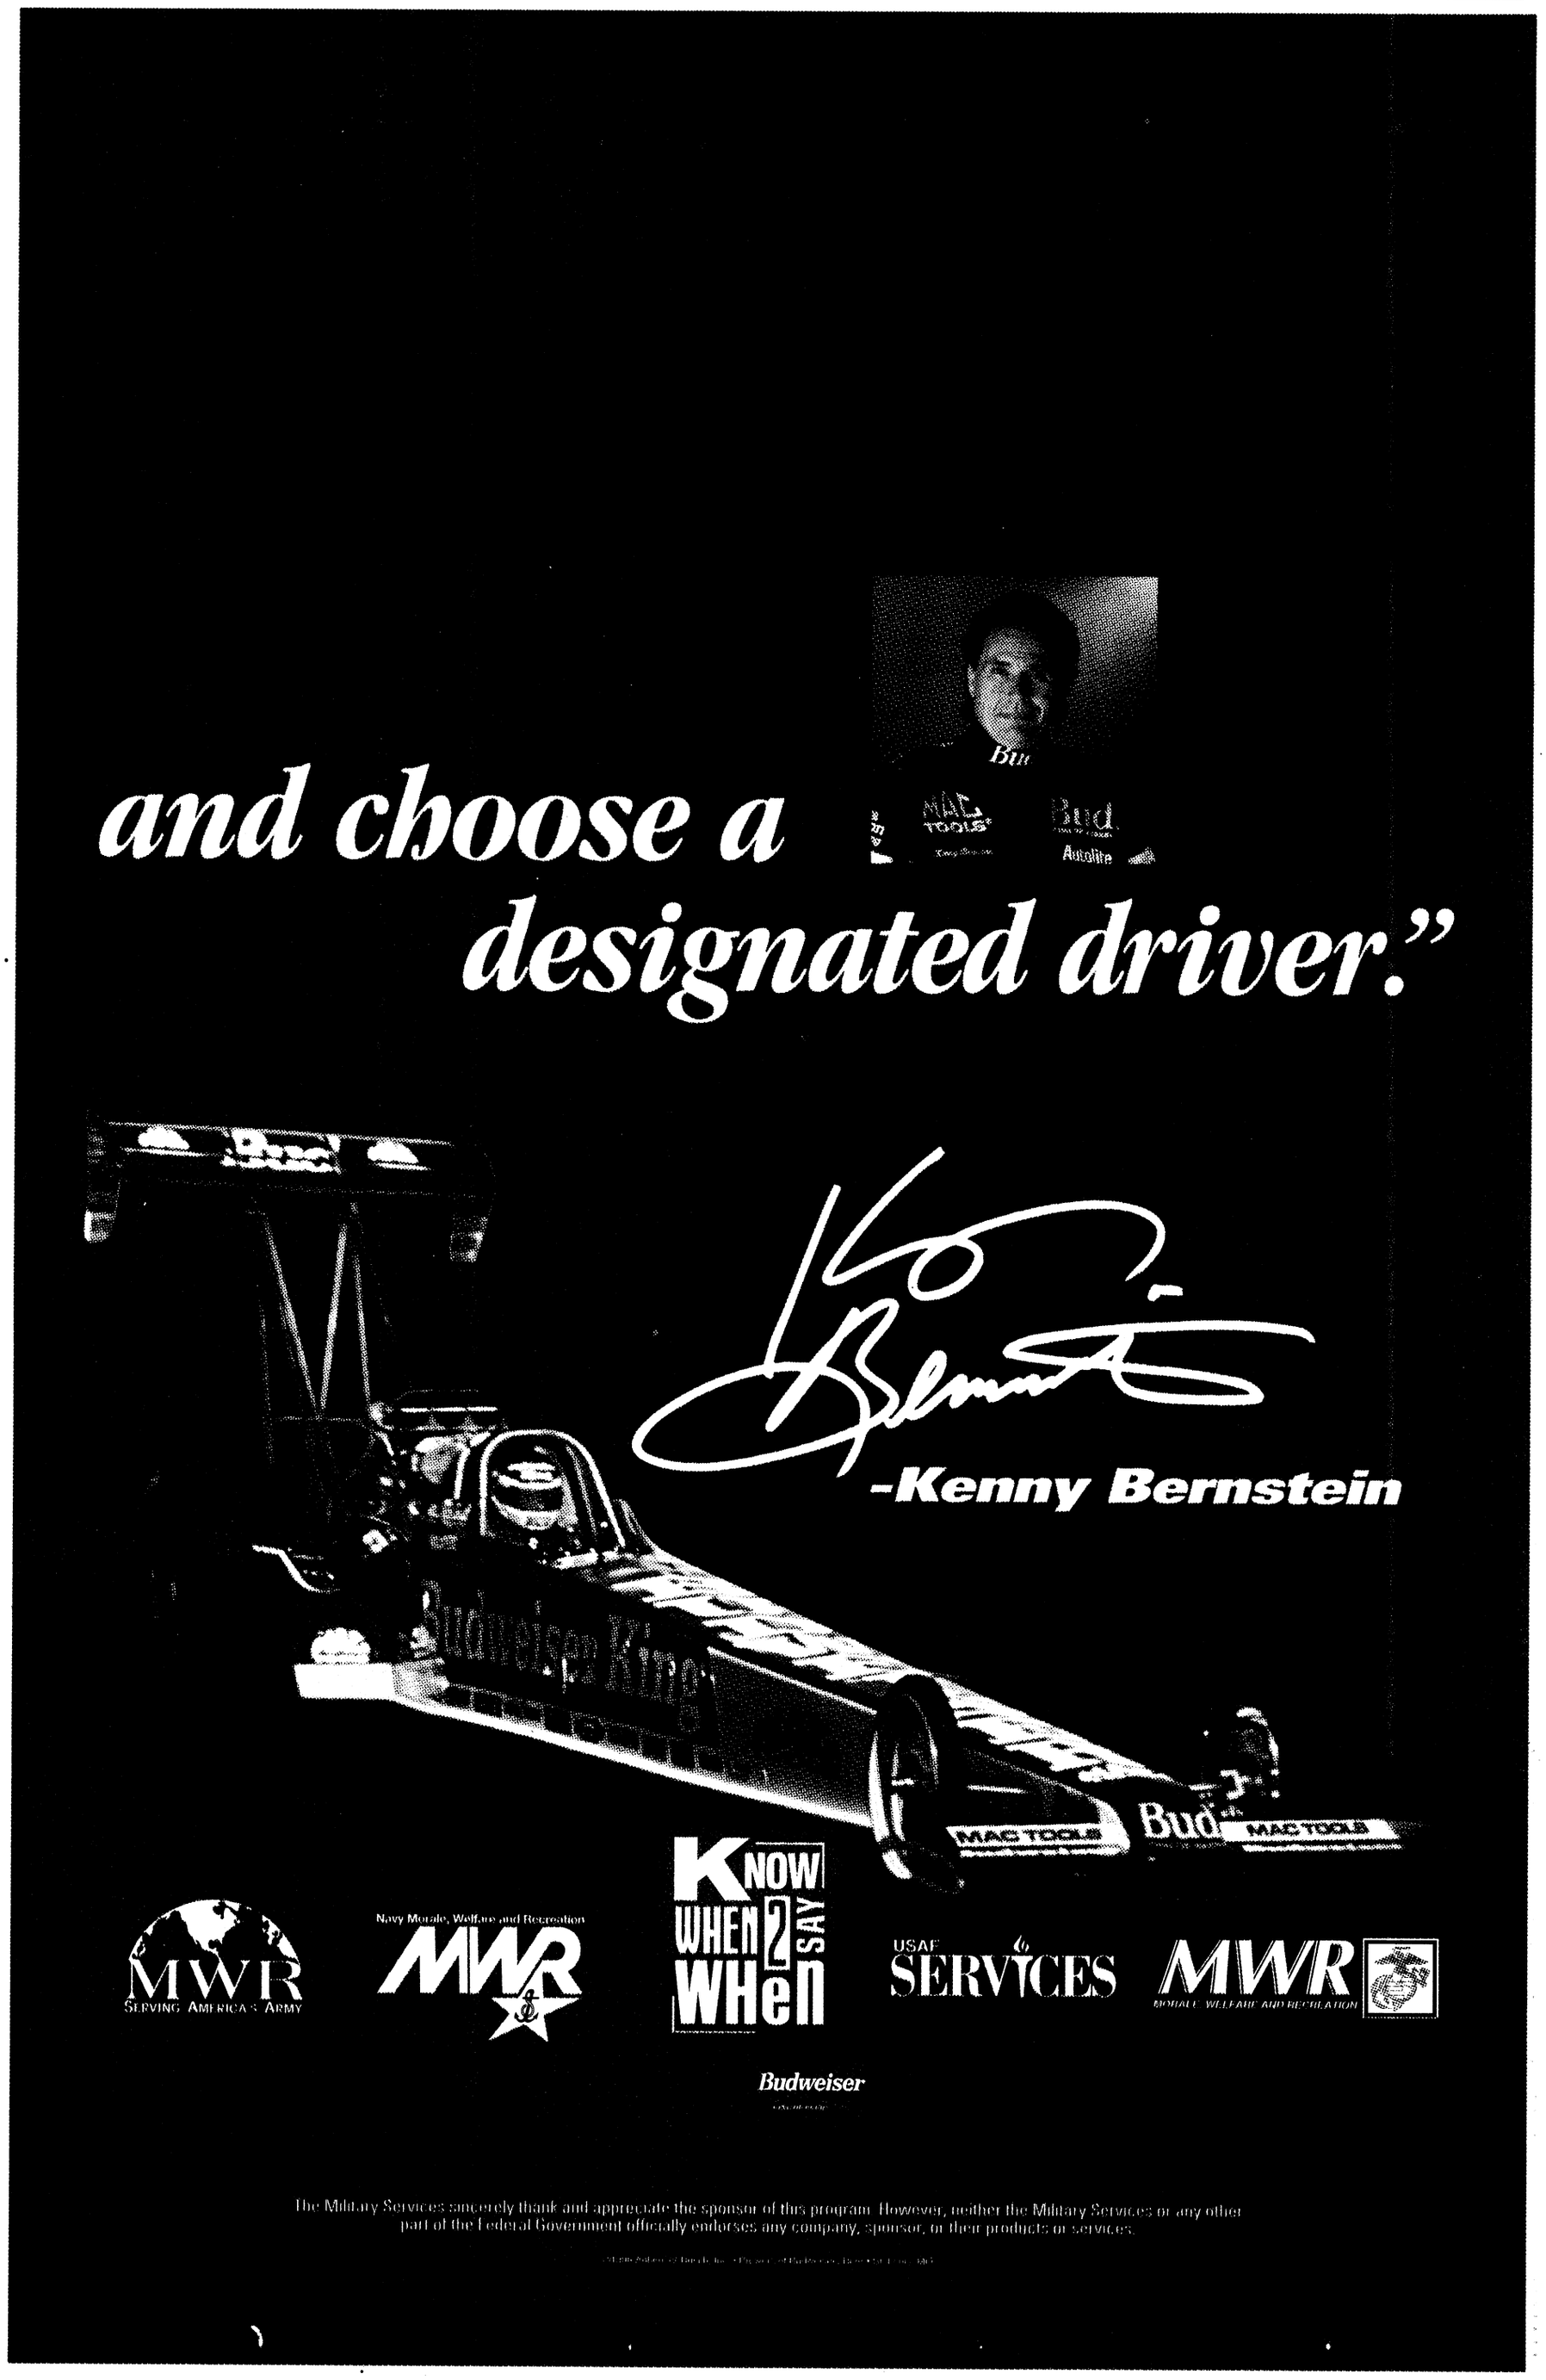
Department of Defense officials are aware of this and want to help parents guide their children, according to DoD's family support chief.

DoD is setting aside $1.5 million a year for the next three years to test youth programs throughout the services, said Linda Smith, director of family policy, support and services. The money will go to communities that have developed programs to help with such problems as delinquency, increased child abuse and increased family separations, she said.

The military community includes about 482,000 children ages 6 to 11 and 372,000 ages 12 to 18. About 430 youth centers at 340 locations worldwide offer youth programs. In the past, these programs focused on sports, recreation, classes and social activities like dances, Smith said. The emphasis has shifted to include programs focused on social issues and prevention.

Community commanders expressed their concerns regarding youth issues at the 1994 DoD Installation Commanders' Conference, Smith said. They also said established youth programs weren't meeting youth needs. They reported an increase in youth violence and gang recruitment and activity and a lack of jobs for teen-agers. Child abuse cases involving youth ages 12 to 17 have increased throughout DoD during the past five years, Smith said.

One facet of military life specifically affects service members, Smith said. Military families move twice as often as civilian families.



Changing stations affects spouses' careers, family finances and family members' sense of security and belonging. Relocating is particularly difficult for adolescents, who have to reestablish peer support systems and make new friends at a very difficult stage in their development, she said. "When you take teenagers and pull them away from their friends, it's a traumatic experience.

"The services are all increasing their efforts to provide more relocation services," Smith said. "They're conducting outreach programs where they're going out and finding kids who are new to an installation and bringing them in so that they don't get involved with negative activities. DoD is developing a relocation Internet bulletin board and outreach project to link kids with resources both on and off the installation."

Military children are taking an active role in their communities. Teens on Top is a violence prevention program at Howard Air Force Base, Panama; Youth Hotline is a crisis prevention hotline staffed by young people at Fort Hood, Texas; Community Youth Enhancement Program is a partnership with local Boys and Girls Clubs of America to provide developmental services at Marine Corps Air Station Tustin, Calif.; and Project Connect, an outreach program designed to combat boredom, isolation and the ready availability of alcohol at Naval Air Station Sigonella, Italy.

Unlock prison doors of sin

By Geoffrey and Melinda Alleyne
1st Bn., 18th Inf. Regt.(Mechanized)

A number of years ago, we heard an ex-con turned preacher tell the crowd, "Folks, I can tell you, there is great joy found in sin for a season, but I am here to testify that sin leads to destruction!'' He went on to say how his greed for more material goods cost him his family, friends, self-respect, home and finally his freedom.

reflections

Although most of society is not literally locked up in a prison cell, for all practical purposes, they are trapped in a corner by their sins, and there seems to be no escape. The cycle of sin locks them into constantly falling away from God's ways and being entangled deeper into a life of sin.

The writer of Psalm 119:9 proposes a question that is still applicable today. "How can a young man keep his ways pure?" In a time when sin is openly glorified by society, the question remains deeply important to those who earnestly want to do what is right but are constantly bombarded by the temptation to sin.

The Psalmist continues by outlining eight guiding principles for overcoming sin. The first principle is simple. If you want to live a pure life, live according to God's word. In other words, do as you are told! But, that is easier said than done.

The next seven principles teach us how to want to do what God tells us to do.

We are to "seek God with all our hearts." Simply stated, we need to follow after God's ways just as hard as we previously sought after sin. Seeking God means to be where God can be found; in the house of worship, in fellowship with Christian friends, in prayer, etc.

"Hide the word of God in our hearts." We need to memorize scripture to strengthen us in our fight against the temptation of sin. Christ quoted scriptures to Satan in his times of temptation. We can do the same thing, if we know scripture.

Ask God to teach us his laws. Simple enough, but have you asked God recently to help you know what his law is? Or, do you just wander through life without a plan?

Practice saying his laws with our mouths. Just as a school child memorizes facts and rules by verbally practicing, we can memorize God's words. How can we do what is right unless we know it in our hearts?

Rejoice in being able to follow God's laws. The Psalmist says we should be as happy in following God's ways, as someone rejoicing in having great wealth.

Meditate on and consider God's laws. We should think about what God wants us to do and remember what we gain by following God's ways and what we lose if we do not.

Finally, delight in God's laws and don't neglect them. Here we return to the original theme. If you want a pure life, live according to God's words. And, .additionally, be happy and be thankful for the laws.

We have all heard the old adage, "practice makes perfect," but once we heard it a new way. "Lord, I know that practice makes perfect, so I'll be careful what I practice!" The word of God tells us, "the wages of sin is death, but the gift of God is eternal life." (Romans 6:23 NIV)

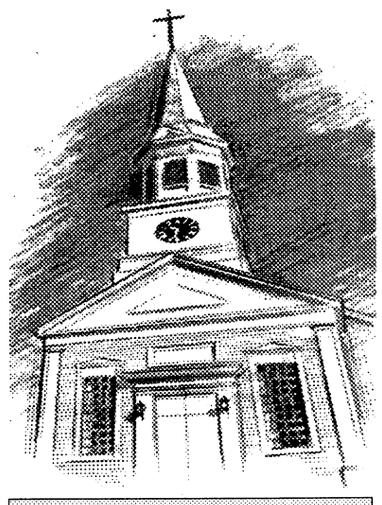
If you are caught in the cycle of wanting to follow God's waysbut are constantly falling prey to sin, ask yourself, "What am I practicing?"

We plan to practice a pure life by following the principles in Psalm 119:9-16. What do you plan to practice today? What end result do you want for your life — death or eternal life? Unlocking the prison doors of sin is possible.

Faith, retirement a good combo

By Gene Ritchie
30th Adjutant General Battalion
(Reception)

Faith is the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things unseen. (Heb. 11:1 KJV)



I retire in 36 days. Like most of those who are retiring, getting out of the service and becoming drawdown losses, I am uncertain as to the concreteness of an established amount of income to support and care for my family, a wife and two teenage sons. Although I have plans, they are not etched in stone like the 10 Commandments. Therefore, my journey as I depart the Army is much like Abraham's of Genesis. God told Abraham, "Leave your country, your relatives and your father's home, and go to a land that I am going to show you ... I will bless you and make your name famous, so that you will be a blessing." Gen. 12:1-2 RSV

Later, God promised Abraham he would have a son from his own seed, even though Abraham and his wife, Sarah, were beyond child-bearing age. Genesis 15:6 tells us, "And he believed in the Lord; and he counted it to him for righteousness." (KJV) In other words, Abraham believed what God had told him, (although reason should discount it), and God counted Abraham's faith as being in the right relationship with him.

So, like Abraham, each of us, no matter what our circumstances in life, neesd to believe in God. The end story of Abraham is that God did fulfill his promise to Abraham, and the promise is still being fulfilled today.

Therefore, as I retire, or as you leave the Army or a job and are in an uncertain situation in your life, what has God promised us that we can have faith in and believe?

Jesus promised, I will never forsake you or leave you. Matt. 28:20 KJV Isn't that a wonderful promise we can claim in faith?

reflections

Knowing a God who loves us and is always with us to encourage, support and forgive us is awesome. Therefore, because God loves me and walks with me every step I take, I will fear no evil ... (Psalm 23:4 KJV).

In the Sermon on the Mount, Jesus tells us not to worry about food, drink or clothes to wear. He feeds the birds of the air, and we are so much more important than they are. Instead, Christ tells us to seek first the Kingdom of God and his righteousness and all the things we need to eat, drink and wear will be provided. I have faith that God will supply all our needs as long as we are seeking first the Kingdom of God. Isn't that great! As we seek the kingdom of God, he will provide the needs of us all. That brings assurance, peace and comfort, because God does what he says!

It is my hope and prayer as you encounter great transitions in your life, that you can have ... the peace of God that passes all understanding ... (Phil. 4:7 RSV), that I have as I journey the path of faith.

In closing, I leave you with my favorite scriptures: Prov. 3:5-7, "Trust in the Lord with all thine heart and lean not unto thy own understanding. In all thy ways, acknowledge him, and he shall direct thy paths." (KJV). Psalm 119:105, "Thy word is a lamp unto my feet and a light unto my path." (KJV) Phil. 4:13, "I can do all things through him who strengthens me." (RSV)

I pray that you will believe God. Ask Jesus Christ to come into your heart and life, and receive the abundant life now, and eternally.

Forgiveness is a liberating power

Eighty-five percent of all sanitariums could be emptied ... if they could experience forgiveness

By Marshall Peterson
USAIC Chaplain Office

During the Revolutionary War, there was a Pennsylvania pastor known for his love by everyone in the community. His name was Peter Miller.

There was, however, one man who hated him with a passion. His enemy spared no opportunities to malign and mistreat Miller. As the war progressed, this man was tried, convicted of treason and condemned to die on the gallows in Philadelphia.

When Miller heard the news, he immediately set out on foot to see Gen. George Washington. After journeying many miles, he was given an audience with the general. "I'm sorry," Washington said. "I cannot grant you your request for your friend."

"Friend!" Miller cried. "Why, the man is the worst in all the world!"

"What?" Washington said. "Have you walked 60 miles for an enemy? That, in my judgement, puts the manner in a different light. I will grant him a pardon for your sake."

Washington signed the pardon and handed it to Miller, who immediately set out on foot to walk another 15 miles to the execution site. He arrived just as the condemned man was being led to the scaffold.

When the man saw Miller he said, "There's old Peter Miller who's walked all the way from Ephrata to have his revenge gratified today by seeing me hung." Scarcely had he uttered the words when Miller made his way through the crowd and handed him his pardon!

To forgive means to let go of any offense we have suffered. It means to refuse to remember the offense any longer. It is to forsake any right we feel we have to avenge the wrong.

Experts say that 85 percent of all sanitariums could be emptied of their inhabitants if they could experience forgiveness. Unresolved guilt over wrongs suffered and committed exacts a high price. How many parent-child relationships would be healed and marriages restored if we knew the liberating power of giving and receiving forgiveness?

Saint Paul said there is no room in the Christian life for an unforgiving spirit. "Let all bitterness and wrath and anger and clamor be put away from you, along with all malice. And be kind to one another, tender-hearted, forgiving each other, just as God in Christ also has forgiven you." (Ephesians 4:32 RSV) An unforgiving Christian is a contradiction of terms. Our great example said, as he was nailed to a Roman cross, "Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do."

One of the most powerful lives of the 20th century was that of a humble Hollander named Corrie Ten Boom. Her simple life of faith touched thousands. Imprisoned in a Nazi death camp for hiding Jews, she endured unimaginable suffering; 96,000 died at Ravensbruck.

reflections

Let me share with you an incident from her life after the war.

The year was 1947, the place, Munich. Ten Boom had just finished speaking to a church audience on God's forgiveness. Suddenly, a balding, heavyset man approached her. She last remembered him wearing a cap with a skull and crossbones. He had been a very cruel person. "I was a guard at Ravensbruck ...," he said, "but since that time, I have become a Christian ... God has forgiven me for the cruel things I did there. Fraulein, will you forgive me?"

That moment seemed like an eternity for ten Boom as she battled raging emotions within. Overcoming her turmoil within, she thrust her hand into his, saying, "I forgive you, brother!" Former captor and captive grasped each others' hands as the liberating power of God's love embraced them both.

Corrie ten Boom said, "Forgiveness is an act of the will ... regardless of the temperature of the heart." The freedom to ask for or to grant forgiveness is ours. We must choose to do so, with God's help, no matter what the temperature of the heart.

Through forgiveness we are freed from the prison cell of emotions which binds us to the past, cripples our present and ruins our future.

God expects those who are truly his children to know the joy and the liberating power released through giving and asking for forgiveness.

WEIGHT TRAINING

Briant Wells gets equipment

By Lori Egan
Bayonet staff writer

Briant Wells field house recently received new weight room equipment, which replaced the gym's old Nautilus and other hodgepodge of equipment.

Cybex weight lifting machines, which use cables instead of chains, is the new edition.

"Cybex is very easy to use," said Sgt. 1st Class Jose De La Torre, noncommissioned officer in charge. "It's not complicated and there are diagrams on each machine to show how to use it."

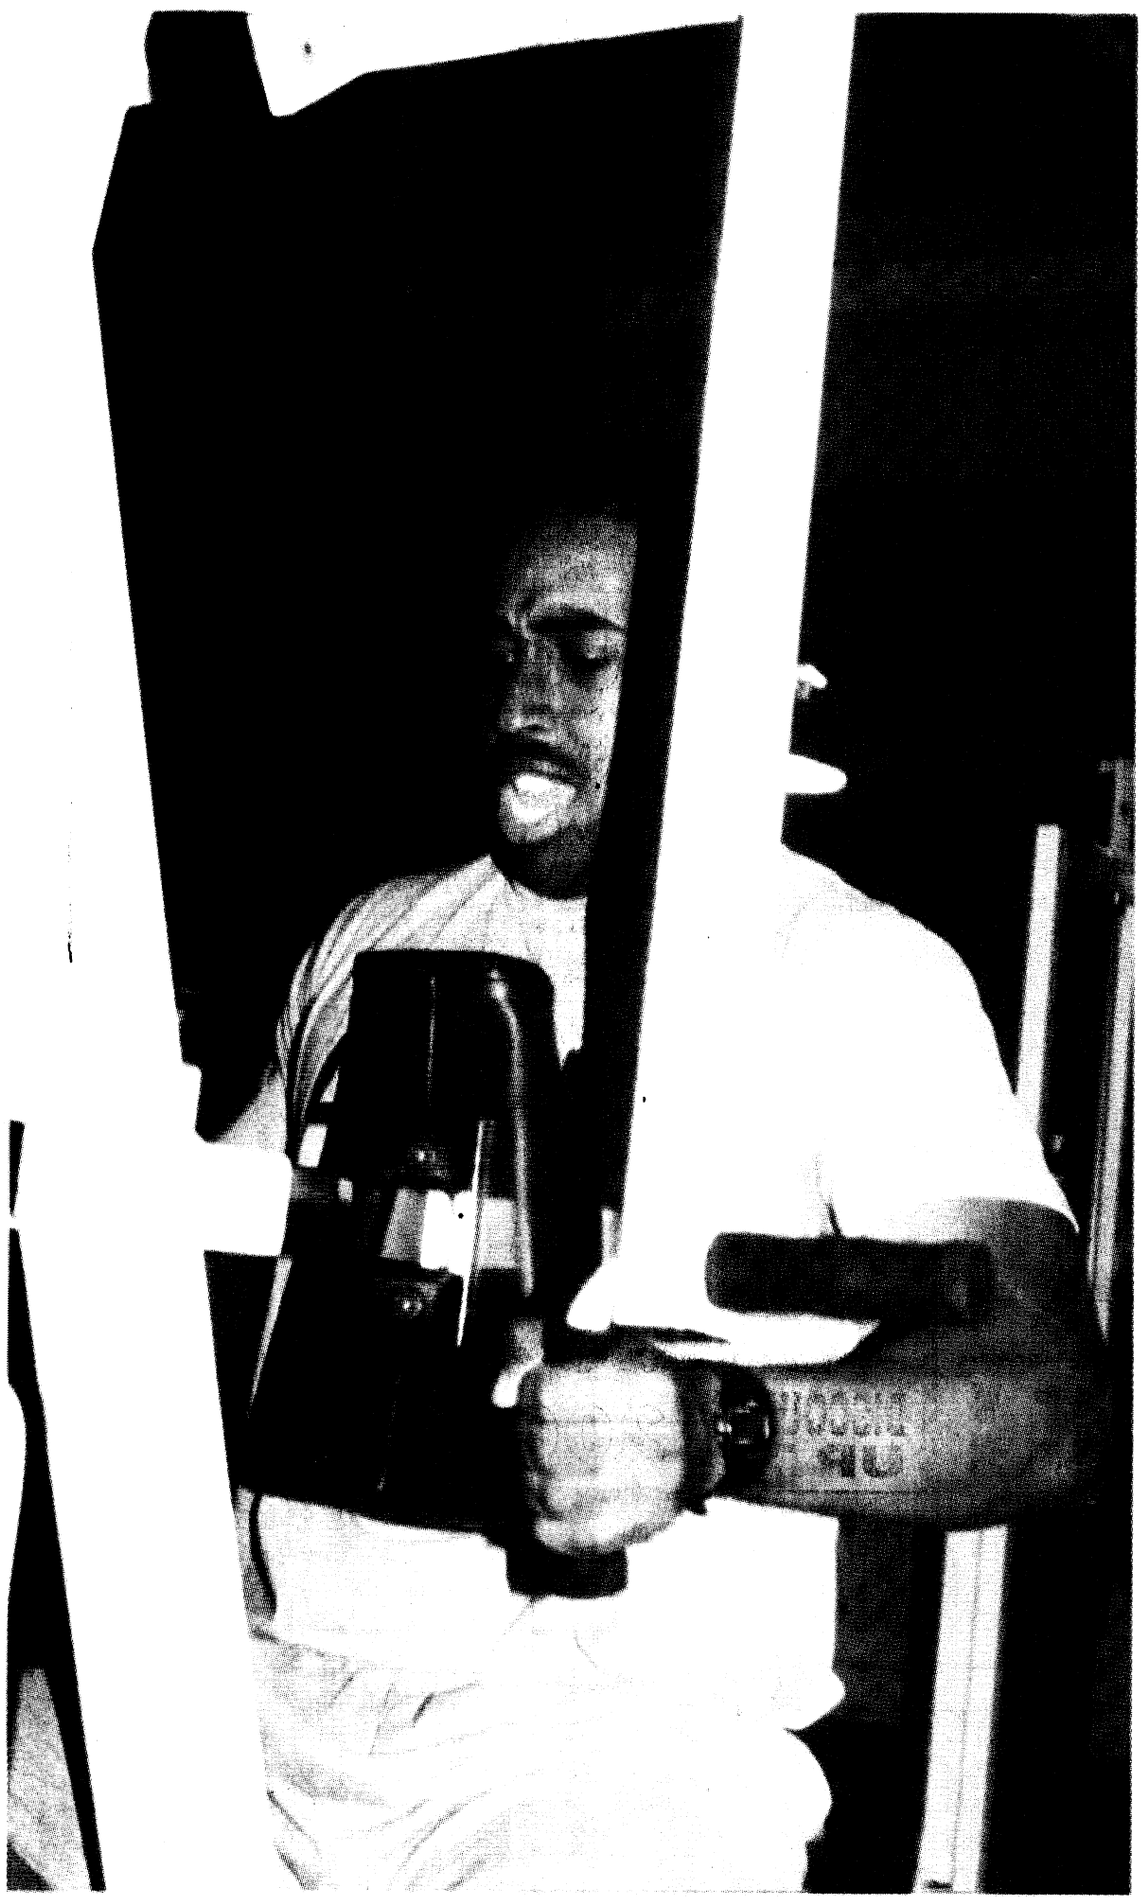
Because of the new equipment, the gym's population has increased from around 300 patrons a day to more than 400, De La Torre said.

"One reason the equipment is so popular is because they isolate each muscle group," De La Torre said. "You can get a good workout in 30 minutes."

The gym has needed new weight lifting equipment for more than two years, De La Torre said.

"It's the best thing that has happened to the Main Post," De La Torre said.

The blue, white and black equipment is clean, modern and sleek looking. The equipment's pulleys and gears are enclosed in metal; but, the weight plates can still be easily accessed, and the cushioning is thicker than some weight lifting equipment.



"Cybex is easy to learn to use and adjusts for all body sizes," said Monica Manganaro, a civilian employee who works out often.

"Not just body builders are using Cybex," De La Torre said. "More women are coming in to use this equipment when they didn't use the old equipment.

Cybex is easier to maintain and keep clean (than other equipment), De La Torre said, because there isn't a lot of plastic on the machines.

"We've listened to our customers, too," De La Torre said. "They've given us suggestions for the placement of the Cybex and with their help, we've moved it so you work the large muscle groups first and then the smaller ones. If you do the entire circuit, you'll have a complete workout.

"Customers don't need to be afraid to ask for help either," he said. "Our staff is very helpful and diplomatic."

Lori Egan

Spc. Tremel A. Dawson, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 2nd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment, uses the new Cybex equipment at the Briant Wells field house. The upright vertical row machine works the upper body.

Golf tourney today at noon

By Lori Egan
Bayonet staff writer

The Association of the U.S. Army Fall Annual Golf Tournament has been combined with the Pay Day Golf Tournament scheduled for today at the Follow Me Golf Course (Pineside).

"The golf tournament has a potential of more than $15,000 in prizes, including a Saturn if a player hits a hole-in-one on the 16th hole, which is a very tough 185-yard par-3," said Capt. Steve Kidwell, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 36th Engineer Group.

The golf tournament is a four-man scramble, which means players of all experiences will play on a team.

"This is a good opportunity for the beginner player to start playing because there is absolutely no pressure for him to hit a good shot because the best shot is the ball everyone plays from," Kidwell said.

"Mulligans will be sold too, which is a significant advantage for the team whose players all buy three," Kidwell said. "That means that team will have an extra 12 shots for the 18 holes."

"We've tried to contact enough corporate members and local merchants to have a door prize for each player," Kidwell said.

There will be prizes for the top five teams and the team closest to the pin on every par-3.

"On the seventh hole, each group's player who is closest to the pin will receive a sleeve of balls," Kidwell.

The Military Benefits Association is giving each player a golf towel and hat, Kidwell said.

The tournament is limited to the first 120 players, the cost is $20 for members and $25 for nonmembers and there will be a buffet at the end of the tournament at the clubhouse.

"If you haven't played before, come out and play — it's a good way to learn the game (and you get to eat afterwards,)" said Kidwell.

Faith Race set for Saturday

Fort Benning Schools

Students, parents, teachers and members of Fort Benning and surrounding communities can participate in this year's Faith Holiday Race Saturday at Fort Benning's Faith Middle School, 1375 Ingersoll St.

Three different races begin and end at Faith — a one-miler for boys and girls ages 8 and under, and a one-miler for boys and girls ages 9 through 14 is at 8:30 a.m. and two- and five-milers for all ages at 9:15 and 10 a.m., respectively.

The preregistration fee is $4 for ages 14 and under, $6 for those 15 and older. Race-day registration begins at 7:30 a.m. with a $5 fee for those 14 and under, $7 for runners 15 and older.

Award and T-shirt presentations to race finishers will be in the school's gym.

For more information, call 545-5524 or 545-7793.

Eagles remain undefeated

By John W. Peeler
Special correspondent

The Eagles remained undefeated and became the Youth Services Football League 9- to 12-year-old champions when they squared off against the Panthers on Blue Field Nov. 18.

The game was a hard fought battle; and, when the final whistle blew, the Eagles had completed a perfect season by beating the Panthers 14-12.

The Panthers won the opening coin toss and took possession of the ball deep in their own territory at the 15-yard line. The Panthers put together a grueling ground game culminating in a 4-yard pass for a touchdown from Panther quarterback Roderick Williams eating up the entire first quarter in the process. A key run of 20 yards by Williams set up the score. The two-point conversion was denied by the Eagle defense. The Panthers led 6-0.

After the kickoff, Eagles running back Keneke Burkes charged up the middle for a 25-yard gain, setting the Eagles up with good field position at the 50-yard line.

Three plays later, Burkes swept right on his way to a 20-yard touchdown run. The game was tied 6-6.

Key runs of 10 yards by Burkes and 20 yards by running back Edwin Jackson set up the touchdown.

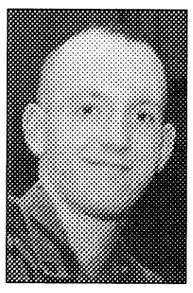
On the Panthers ensuing possession, the Eagle defense tightened up on the run, forcing the Panthers to pass.

The Panthers responded with a 30-yard halfback pass resulting in a touchdown and after an unsuccessful two-point conversion the Panthers lead the Eagles 12-6.

The Panthers shut down the Eagle offense forcing a turnover and taking possession of the ball.

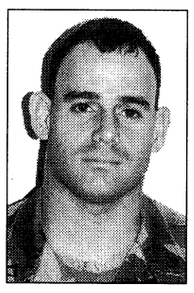
However, the Panthers were unable to take advantage of the turnover and the first half ended with the score remaining unchanged.

The Eagles received the ball to start off the third quarter and went right to work on the Panthers defense with an intense running game and capped the drive with a 35-yard touchdown strike from quarterback Matt McCall.



The extra point was successful and the Eagles took a 14 -12 lead.

That lead would hold for the rest of the game as neither team was able to score.



The Eagles finished the season with a perfect 7-0 record and the 9- to 12-year-old Championship with the Panthers coming in second at 6-1.

ITB teams receive awards

Infantry Training Brigade

Top Infantry Training Brigade teams in intramural sports received awards Nov. 3 from Col. Johnny Brooks, commander.

Headquarters Service Company, ITB, received the Commander's Cup for the best overall record in basketball, volleyball, softball and flag football.

"We had a very positive and aggressive sports program under the direction of Company Commander Capt. Dennis Wisher," said Company 1st Sgt. Cesar Rodriguez.

The title for flag football went to 2nd Battalion, 58th Infantry Regiment. With an undefeated record, 2nd Bn., 58th Inf. Regt. will be representing ITB in the post tournament.

Team Manager, Capt. Valdon Daniel said he credits the team's success to the finesse of quarterback Spec. Myron Brantly, a solid defense, and the team's sacrifice and dedication towards being the best.

Javelin system receives plaque

By Lori Egan
Bayonet staff writer

The Javelin antitank missile system team received an Order of Daedalian Weapon System plaque during the Commanding General's Retreat Ceremony Oct. 10.

The Javelin is a fire and forget antitank weapons system developed for the infantry soldier.

Sanford E. Parr, deputy and senior technical adviser for the Training and Doctrine Command System Manager-Antitank Missiles, accepted the award on behalf of members of the Javelin team.

The members of the team include Fort Benning's Training and Doctrine Command system manager antitank missiles, the program executive officer for Tactical Missiles and Javelin program manager, Redstone Arsenal, Ala.; and the joint venture of Texas Instruments, Lewisville Texas; and Lockheed Martin, Orlando Fla; and the manager for Javelin and Texas Instruments, the contractor for the project.

The Javelin antitank missile system also received the Order of the 1994 Daedalians Weapons System Award, which was presented in June to Team Javelin in Tucson, Ariz. Col. Gregory C. Camp, Fort Benning chief of staff accepted the award for the team.

The Daedalians award is presented annually to individuals, groups or organizations that have contributed to the most outstanding weapons system development operating in the aerospace technology environment.

"The Javelin is designed to kill any threat armor on the battlefield," said Lt. Col. Dave M. Dorman, assistant Training and Doctrine Command system manager antitank missiles.

"We received the award because the Order of the Daedalians wanted to recognize our efforts to develop a state-of-the-art world-class weapon system," Dorman said.

The Javelin is a portable, one-man, shoulder-launched antitank weapon system, Dorman said. The launch unit weighs 14 pounds and the missile weighs about 35 pounds. This is about 30 pounds lighter than the comparable Dragon system with a day and night sight.

"Soldiers would much rather carry a system they know will work than one that is heavier and one, in which they don't have much confidence in," Dorman said.

It is a fire-and-forget weapon, which means after the gunner locks on the target and fires, he can move or reload, Dorman said. The missile goes to the target by itself unlike the Dragon where the gunner has to track the missile for at least 14 seconds, leaving himself open for return fire.

The Javelin doesn't have as large a launch signature as the Dragon either, Dorman said. If the gunner is detected after he fires, he can evade enemy fire.

"The 29th Infantry Regiment will teach units all over the world how to use the Javelin," Dorman said.

A soldier aims the Javelin antitank missile system as he hides in the woods.

"There is a classroom trainer with a computer-generated battlefield, which is similar to an arcade game," Dorman said. "Another trainer called a Field Tactical Trainer will be used for field exercises and will work with the existing (multiple integrated laser engagement system equipment) trainers."

Each of the directorates at Fort Benning has played an integral role in the development and training needed to take this weapon system from its conception to being almost ready for fielding, Dorman said.

"The Directorates of Combat Developments and Operations and Training; and Combined Arms and Tactics Directorate have been involved since the very beginning of the Javelin project," Parr said.

"Special credit should be given to the civilians who provided the needed continuity during the development process," Dorman said.

"The Javelin is in the production phase now and will be ready to be fielded in the third quarter of 1996," Parr said.

The 75th Ranger Regiment is scheduled to be the first unit equipped with the Javelin, Parr said.

Next summer, they are planning to take the Javelin to the field, Dorman said.

Alabama ROTC conducts weekend training at Fort Benning

By Fatem A. Al-masri
Marion Military Institute

Marion Military Institute's ROTC Bold Tiger Battalion conducted its second field training exercise Nov. 10.

The cadets practiced at the bivouac site, which was set up on Fuhrman Road, and the cadets operated in a non-tactical environment as the training objectives were skills oriented as opposed to later training which will be tactically oriented.

The training prepared the cadets for Camp Adventure 1996 at Fort Lewis, Wash. Cadets trained on the obstacle course, confidence course, day and night land navigation, and rappelling.

The training began on Saturday at Todd Field. The first challenge of the day was the day time land navigation course. The cadets practiced the compass-to-cheek method as well as many other land navigation skills. Then the cadets moved on to there next challenge — rappelling.

As day began turned into night, it was time to prepare for the night land navigation course. That took approximately three hours, while cadets learned to navigate and not get lost. That wrapped up the first day of training.

The cadets then retired to their tents and relaxed after a hard day of work. But, there was still more to come.

Next, they moved on to Sunday's training at Sand Hill, where they began the first event of the day — the confidence course. Cadets trained to overcome whatever fears they might have had.

The cadets operated in a non-tactical environment, as the training objectives were skills oriented

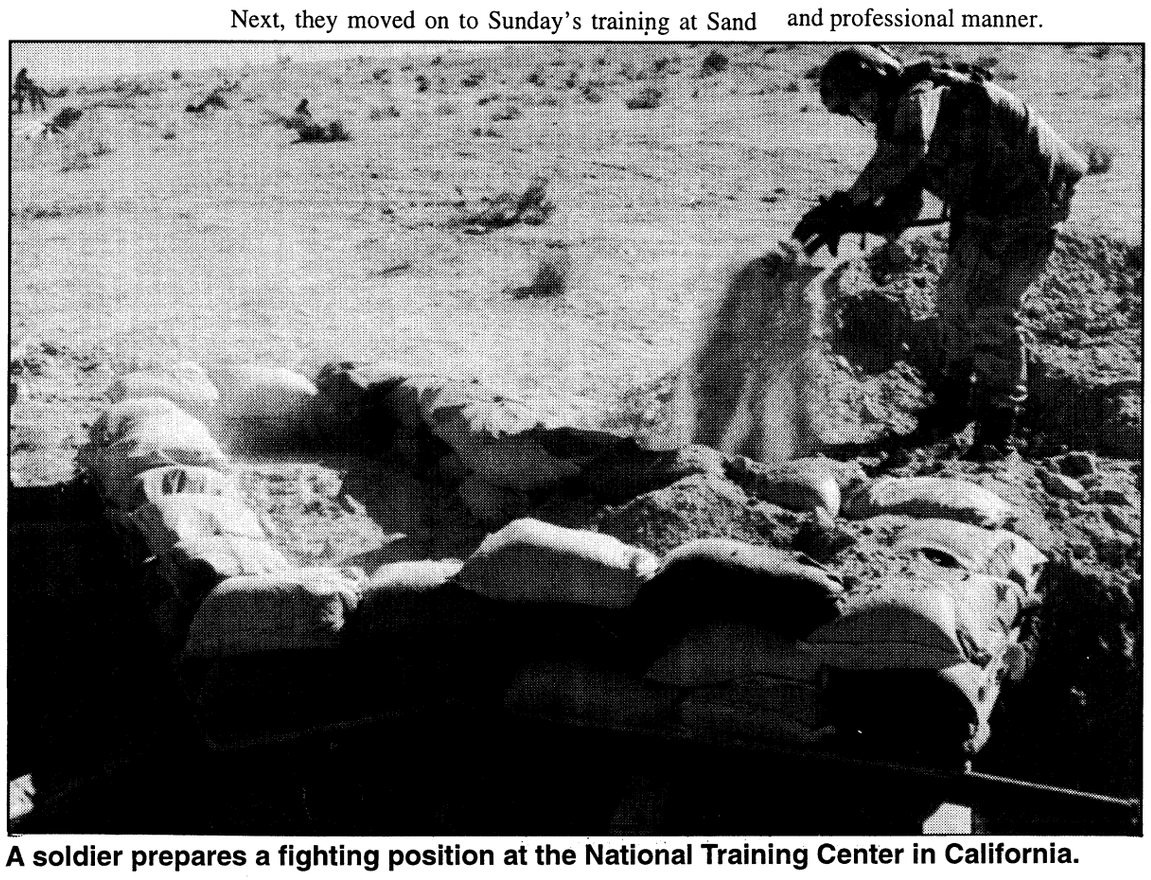
Then, they moved to the obstacle course, where cadets learned how to overcome obstacles in a tactical and professional manner.

Finally, at noon, they returned to their bivouac site, packed up, policed the area, and hopped on the buses heading back home to Marion and another week of school prior to Thanksgiving break.

Marion Institute was founded in 1842 as Howard English and Classical School by the Alabama Baptist Convention. It later became Howard College. Lovelace Hall (Old South Barracks), built in 1854, and the Chapel, built in 1857, served the Confederacy as Breckenridge Military Hospital 1863 to 1865. With the move of Howard (now Samford University) to Birmingham in 1887, the remaining faculty and students under President J. T. Murfee reorganized as Marion Military Institute, a military preparatory school, junior college, and secondary school.

3rd brig. plays OPFOR at NTC

By Charles Lewis
Co. D, 2nd Battalion, 18th Infantry Regt.



Soldiers from 2nd Battalion, 18th Infantry Battalion of 3rd Brigade, 24th Infantry Division, deployed in late October for opposing forces rotation at the National Training Center, Fort Irwin, Calif.

Throughout the three-week rotation, the 3rd Bde. soldiers supported the 11th Armored Cavalry Regiment from Fort Irwin in playing the enemy against Blue Force, 3rd Brigade's sister unit from Fort Stewart, Ga.

Though a mechanized unit, the soldiers had the opportunity to get out and walk across the Mojave Desert as light infantry soldiers and practice using their dismounted squads.

Company A, 2nd Battalion, 18th Infantry Regiment, soldiers executed the "angel" mission, where they air assaulted into the desert and attempted to destroy blue force vehicles.

"Without the extremely high levels of motivation and professional soldiering that came to play, our mission could have never been successfully completed," said 1st Lt. John Brennan, Company A, platoon leader. "The soldiers deserve all of the credit because they did all of the damage."

A soldier prepares a fighting position at the National Training Center in California.

Company B soldiers were assigned to the destroyer mission. They walked in as a light infantry company and seized key terrain to destroy the Blue Force.

Company D had the rampage mission which simulated dismounted elements from Russian tracked vehicles.

"Delta company did a great job pulling together as a team to accomplish the mission in unfamiliar surroundings," said 1st Lt. Lawrence Baker, Company D platoon leader.

Acting as the opposing force accomplishes many things at a battalion level, said 1st Lt. Michael McGurk, 2nd Bn., 18th Inf. Regt. battle captain.

"Coming out on an OPFOR rotation does a couple things – it helps key leaders learn the terrain and helps all the soldiers see the tactics," he said.

"This deployment helped us prepare for a real-world situation with things like soldier readiness processing, storing privately owned vehicles and physical security type activities as well as learning about the Kraznovian enemy and how he fights," said Capt. Glenn Bergeron, battalion intelligence officer.

The deployment meant more than that to Sgt. Donnie Le Garren, Company D.

"All of the companies with new soldiers that have never been in the desert have now somewhat learned about the 24th ID's mission, which is desert warfare," he said.

The units returned from NTC Nov. 20.

ask the judge

By Clay C. Schuett
Staff Judge Advocate's Office

Q: I recently discovered that my vehicle had been vandalized in front of my quarters and that the stereo had been stolen. What should I do?

A: The first thing you must do is file a report with the Military Police when you discover the theft or vandalism. This is necessary to establish that your vehicle was at your assigned quarters at the time of the theft of vandalism, and that the damage was in fact due to the misconduct of others.

The Military Police will look for broken glass and other evidence of the vandalism, so avoid moving the vehicle from your quarters.

If your vehicle was not located at your assigned government quarters at the time of the incident, a claim for loss or damages may not be payable by the government.

After filing a report with the Military Police, you must first file a claim with your insurance carrier or locate documentation that shows either liability coverage only, or that your deductible is greater than the loss. Failure to file with your private insurance carrier will bar any recovery from the Government.

After settling with your insurance company, you should proceed to the Claims Office at the Office of the Staff Judge Advocate, Building 5, Vibbert Avenue, to file a claim for the loss under the provisions of the Personnel Claims Act as implemented by AR 27-20.

You will be required to provide the following documentation:

- Proof of ownership and state registration
- Insurance documentation, including any settlement received
- MP Report
- Two estimates of repair or replacement
- Proof the vehicle was registered in the installation
- Proof of quality of items stolen, i.e. brand of stereo.

Once you complete the necessary claims paperwork, a claims examiner will inspect the damage. Although you have two years from the date of the incident in which to file a claim, it is to your advantage to have the vehicle inspected prior to having it repaired. If you do decide to have it repaired before filing your claim, be sure to take photographs that clearly show the damage claimed.

You should be aware that some losses are not compensable under the regulation. These include items that are not factory installed or otherwise permanently affixed to the vehicle.

High value items stored in a vehicle, such as watches, stereo cassette players, or cellular phones in their vehicles, are normally not compensable under the regulation.

Finally, you may also file a claim for theft or vandalism to your vehicle while your are on temporary duty. The only prerequisite, aside from what has already been discussed, is that your TDY orders state that travel by POV is authorized for the convenience of the government.

For more information, contact the Claim Office, Office of the Staff Judge Advocate, at 545-2285.

Patients create holiday cards

Egleston Children's Hospital

Giving back to the children's hospital that gave them the hope of a healthy, happy childhood was the motivation behind the art work created by seven patients of Egleston Children's Hospital at Emory University. Their youthful artistic talents will be showcased on the hospital's 1995 "Promise Them Hope" Holiday Cards.

"Promise Them Hope" is an Egleston Children's Hospital annual fund-raising project, now in its ninth year. Spearheaded by Twigs, a 1,500-member branch of the Egleston Children's Auxiliary, "Promise Them Hope" has contributed more than $80,000 to Egleston for the treatment and care of children. One hundred percent of proceeds from 1995 Holiday Card sales will benefit the AFLAC Cancer Center at Egleston Children's Hospital. AFLAC is the corporate sponsor of this year's "Promise Them Hope" campaign.

The 1995 "Promise Them Hope artists are: Nancy Jean Howe, 4, of Sandy Springs; Bryan Jordan, 5, of Dunwoody; Ansley Riedel, 7, of Atlanta; Allison Ramsay, 8, of Atlanta; Preston Davis, 9, of Atlanta; Susan Reece, 11, of Carrollton; and Amanda Wigington, 16, of Jasper.

More than 200 adorable holiday scenes, all carefully crafted by young Egleston patients, were considered for the 1995 Holiday Cards — the largest number of submissions since the project began in 1987.

"The children did a marvelous job with their art work. They were creative; they used a number of different mediums," said Nancy Francis Twigs Holiday Card chairperson.

The youngest Egleston Holiday Card artist this year is Howe, born with a diaphragmatic hernia.

"I do not believe that Nancy Jean would have survived if she had been treated at another hospital," said her mother, Jean Hetzel Howe.

Wigington is the most seasoned Holiday Cards artist — and the only one with driving privileges. In just 30 minutes, the 16-year-old Pickens County High 11th-grader masterfully painted an award-winning Christmas tree scene using oil pastels.Not only is Wigington an artist, but she is also a fighter. In August 1993, she was diagnosed with osteogenic sarcoma, a type of bone cancer. After completing chemotherapy treatments and undergoing surgery to remove the cancerous area from her leg, Wigington now only visits Egleston once every four months for checkups.

Howe's hand print wreath, Wigington's Christmas Eve scene, and five additional yuletide designs are available in boxes of 20 cards and 21 envelopes for $10. The cards were produced by Atlanta Advertising Agency BBDO South, which has donated its time and creative energy to the project for the five years.

Because of the generosity of AFLAC, "Promise Them Hope's" corporate sponsor, the entire $10 per box will go back to the children of Egleston as profit. The cards can be purchased at the following retail stores: Kroger, Publix, Rich's, Hospitality House, M.L. Jaris, Harris Teeter, Social Expressions at Lenox Square Mall, Liz's Hallmark in Buckhead, Egleston's Gift Shop "Rainbows" and Emory Bookstore. For a mail order brochure, call the Egleston Holiday Cards office, (404) 315-2009.

ARMY FAMILY ACTION PLAN

Temp jobs solution for downsizing limitation

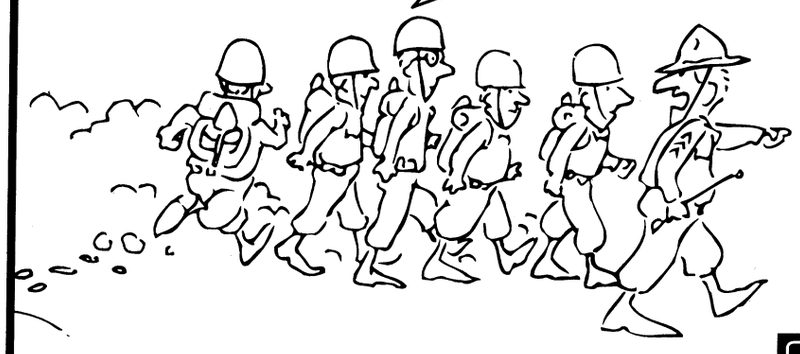
Army Family Action Plan

In June, delegates and subject matter experts from around the world met in Alexandria, Va., to discuss spouse employment and suggest recommendations for improvement for the Department of Defense to consider. Delegates assessed issues related to spouse employment assistance, private sector employment, self-employment, child care, and training and education. Defense Department officials plan to review all the ideas gathered from the delegates during the three-day conference and determine which can be implemented. DoD's action on the recommendations will be reported in future issues.

At the present time, job opportunities at Army installations are very limited because of the overall downsizing of the Department of Defense. When a vacancy occurs, competition is keen among applicants.

Many positions are being filled directly through the DoD Priority Placement Program, an automated system of referral for candidates based on priorities. Priority 1 and 2 registrants are generally employees who are scheduled for separation or demotion because of a reduction in force. When an employee in either of these top two categories matches a job vacancy and is determined fully qualified, he or she must be placed in the job.

If there are no candidates from Priority 1 or 2 to match the position, then Priority 3 registrants are considered. Spouses and other family members are included in the Priority 3 category. This category stops management from selecting outside current Army employees. Military spouse preference eligibles within this category also block internal promotions, if they are among the best qualified for the position.



The downsizing environment in DoD has dramatically increased the number of Priority 1s and 2s in the PPP system. Consequently, the job possibilities for Priority 3 spouses have been limited. Budgetary constraints more likely support the hiring of temporary job seekers as DoD continues to downsize the civilian workforce along with the military.

By registering for both permanent and temporary jobs at different grade levels, a spouse may increase his/her opportunities for placement. Military spouses must be aware, however, that making yourself available for and accepting a temporary position that is expected to last for one year or longer terminates their military spouse preference eligibility for that location.

To learn more about this and other details regarding spouse preference, see the newly revised brochure titled Military Spouse Preference in the Department of Defense. It's available from any civilian personnel office or family service center. Single copies are also available from the Army Family Liaison Office, DAIM-ZAF, Room 2D665, Asst Chief of Staff Installation Mgmt, 600 Army Pentagon, Washington, DC 20310.

ESTATE PLANNING

Joint ownership determines property disposal

Georgia Society of Certified Public Accountant Inc.

Deciding how to hold your property is an important estate planning step.

Joint ownership not only determines what happens to your property upon your death and its vulnerability to creditors but also how you can use it during your lifetime.

The Georgia Society of CPAs explains the various types of joint ownership and the pros and cons of each.

Rights of survivorship

The most common form of joint ownership is known as joint tenancy with rights of survivorship. This form of ownership is most often used between spouses, but it is available to others as well. With joint tenancy, two or more people own equal shares of the property. It doesn't matter who owned the property originally, or how much each co-owner contributed to the acquisition of it.

For estate planning purposes, when you own property as joint tenants with rights of survivorship, the property automatically bypasses probate and passes to the surviving owner(s) at your death. This is so, regardless of what your will says.

This can have unintended ramifications. Suppose, for example, that an elderly widow opens a joint account with her son so he can help the widow manage her finances. If the widow dies and the joint account has rights of survivorship, the son will automatically inherit all jointly held assets, even if her will specified that the property be equally divided among her children.

When a husband and wife own assets as joint tenants with rights of survivorship, only one-half of the value of the jointly held assets is included in the estate of the first to die. As long as both spouses are U.S. citizens, the entire property passes to the surviving spouse free of estate tax. Upon the survivor's death, however, the entire estate will be subject to tax, which may result in a large tax bill for the estate's heirs.

For this reason, when large estates are involved, it can be beneficial for each spouse to own some property separately.

When property is owned jointly with anyone other than a spouse, different rules apply. In such cases, the entire value of the property is assumed to belong to the first to die, and is included in his or her gross estate for estate tax purposes, unless the survivor contributed part of the property.

Tenants by the entirety

Some states recognize tenancy by the entirety, a form of ownership available only to married couples which is similar to joint tenancy, except that each partner must have the permission of the other spouse to sell his or her share of the property.

Property owned this way provides protection against creditors because one spouse generally cannot be forced to sell tenancy by the entirety property to satisfy a debt that is the sole responsibility of the other.

Tenants in common

Tenancy in common refers to the ownership arrangement among several unrelated parties and is typically applicable to business partners, siblings, and people in a second marriage who want to retain control of a stake in the property. Tenants in common may involve any number of tenants, including a spouse, and any kind of property. Additionally, these tenants can own equal or unequal shares of the property and sell their interest without consulting the others — unless they have a previous agreement in writing that specifies otherwise.

There are no survivorship rights. When one of the tenants in common dies, his or her interest goes to that person's heir rather than passing automatically to the co-owners. For estate tax purposes, the deceased person's share is based upon the fair market value of his or her proportional interest at death.

Community property

In the nine community property states — Arizona, California, Idaho, Louisiana, Nevada, New Mexico, Texas, Washington and Wisconsin — everything a couple acquires during a marriage (with the exception of gifts and inheritances) becomes community property and is considered to be equally owned by both spouses.

Problems with your contact lens? Call (800) 884-4CLC

Contact Lens Council

The Contact Lens Council has announced a new toll-free "800" consumer information line and Internet address. Current lens wearers and those considering contacts can now call (800) 884-4-CLC to receive up-to-date information on today's contact lenses, including health and safety guidelines and tips on proper contact lens wear and care.

"More than half of all Americans require some type of vision correction," said Orlando Rodrigues, chairman of the CLC. "Of those, almost 26 million people have chosen to wear contact lenses."

Today, there are a variety of contact lens options for consumers to choose from to meet their vision and lifestyle needs. CLC's new information line is designed to give consumers access to the latest information on advances in contact lenses and eye care.

"With so many improvements in contact lenses and lens care products, there has never been a better time to consider the benefits of contact lenses," said Rodrigues.

Callers to the CLC information line can receive information about contact lenses, as well as specialized materials designed to answer frequently asked questions about presbyopia, a natural aging of the eye, orthokeratology, a treatment process that uses contact lenses to reduce or correct some refractive errors; and refractive surgery, a relatively new procedure involving surgery on the eye to correct refractive errors.

For instance, people forty years and over who think that they have no alternatives to bifocal glasses will be pleasantly surprised to find that contact lenses may provide several correction options — safely and comfortably.

The (800) 884-4-CLC number is a consumer service of the Contact Lens Council, a non-profit organization which serves as an educational resource on vision correction.

CLC's information line operates weekdays between the hours of 9 a.m. and 5 p.m.

The materials may also be accessed via the CLC Home Page on the Internet WorldWide Web at: http://www.tiac.net/usersfigc/clc.html.

For more information, call (800) 884-4CLC.

Estates of all sizes require planning

Georgia Society of Certified Public Accountants Inc.

People fall into one of two clearly defined categories for estate tax planning purposes: those with estates valued up to $600,000, which are free of federal estate tax, and those with estates over $600,000, which are subject to taxes. For estates over $600,000, the applicable tax rates begin at 37 percent and may go as high as 55 percent.

Taxpayers should not automatically assume that their estate is too small to need estate planning. To avoid making this potentially costly mistake, the Georgia Society of Certified Public Accountants recommends that you calculate the market value of your estate.

Understanding "market value"

In determining the value of your property for estate tax purposes, you must consider the current fair market value of your assets. This means that whether it's your home, stocks or an antique brooch, you must estimate the amount a willing buyer would pay for the item today — not what you paid.

Keep in mind that although using the fair market value may inflate the size of your estate, in most cases, neither your estate nor your heirs will pay capital gains tax on any appreciation that occurred between the time you acquired the property and your death.

Estimating the value of your estate

Here's what to consider when assessing your estate's net worth:

• Your home — Start by determining the market value of your home and other real estate. If you're not sure how much your house is worth, consult a real estate broker or check the selling prices of similar homes in your neighborhood. If you own a vacation home, include its value in your estate as well. In either case, however, your estate is reduced by the amount of any mortgages.

• Retirement account benefits — Next, consider the value of your retirement benefits, including pensions, and IRA and Keogh plans. For many families, retirement benefits are their second greatest asset after their home.

• Insurance policies — Add the value or death benefit of all life insurance policies you own (some of which may include a double-indemnity payment in the case of accidental death). Also, include those group insurance policies that you acquire as a fringe benefit through your employer.

• Investments — Next, add amounts in savings and checking accounts and money market funds.

Then include the current market values of any stocks, bonds, or mutual funds you own. You also may need to include the amounts of any assets held in trust or custodial accounts for which you are the trustee or custodian.

• Business interests — If you own a business, or are a partner in one, the value of your share of the business must be included in your personal estate.

• Personal property — The market value of any art, jewelry, antiques, cars and other collectibles you own also are tallied and included in your estate. If you are unsure of their value, contact an appraiser.

• Future holdings — If you are certain you will be receiving a large inheritance or other assets in the near future, you may want to consider these when valuing your estate. However, it's wise not to include purchases you plan to make in the distant future, such as a new sports car or vacation home.

• Liabilities — Once you've calculated the asset side of your estate, the next step is to subtract your liabilities. These include your mortgage, other personal or business debts you owe, any charitable bequests made in your will, money allocated for funeral and burial expenses and the estimated costs of administering your estate. The resulting amount is the net value of your taxable estate.

Once you know the estate's net worth, consult a CPA with experience in estate planning to determine an appropriate estate planning strategy. Keep in mind that your estate can face taxes of up to 55 percent on amounts in excess of $600,000. To avoid such taxes, take action today to reduce your federal estate taxes and transfer more of your assets to your heirs.

To learn more about estate planning, send a stamped, self-addressed envelope to the Georgia Society of CPAs and request a copy of the brochure, Estate Planning: Protecting Your Family.

OPERATION JOINT ENDEAVOR

586th prepares to deploy to Bosnia

Lisa M. Hibbert

Soldiers from the 586th Engineer Company (Assault Float Bridge) receive ammunition from the Ammunition Point at Malone Range No. 16 Monday. The soldiers are currently preparing to deploy to Bosnia in support of Operation Joint Endeavor.

Engineers prepare, train for possible involvement in peacekeeping operation

By Lisa M. Hibbert
Bayonet staff writer

The 586th Engineer Company (Assault Float Bridge), 36th Engineer Group, has been identified to deploy to Bosnia in support of the NATO Implementation Force.

More than 180 soldiers are preparing to assist in the peacekeeping mission.

"We are receiving training on weapons that are new to the company," said Capt. Gregory A. Gondeck, commander, 586th Eng. Company Monday at Malone Range No. 16.

The company practiced firing at pop-up targets with the M-16 rifle and received nuclear, biological and chemical training at the range.

"I'm ready to go to Bosnia," said Spc. Cetreivia Whitmore, petroleum supply specialist, 586th Eng. Co. Although Whitmore is the mother of three and is going to miss her children, she said she is prepared to go to Bosnia. "This is my job and I have to go," she said.

Cold weather gear was issued to the company on Wednesday.

"The biggest challenge that we are expecting is the weather," Gondeck said.

At this time the company is still unsure of when it will be departing, or of the length of stay in Bosnia.

The company does know that prior to going into Bosnia it will first fly into Germany for three to 10 days of training, Gondeck said.

Fort Benning has been designated as a central processing center for the troops heading to Bosnia. The center will train both active duty and reservist soldiers who are on their way to augment the troops in Bosnia, said a post official.

> "I'm ready to go to Bosnia ... this is my job and I have to go."

Soldiers will be given time off to spend with their families next week, Gondeck said.

POST cleans up

By Lisa M. Hibbert
Bayonet staff writer

Fort Benning got a sparkling glow during the biannual post clean-up efforts that began Nov. 24 and will end today.

This year's fall cleanup was late because of Hurricane Opal, said Sgt. 1st Class John Peeler, garrison operations sergeant.

"We wanted to make sure that the damage from Hurricane Opal was fixed before we set a date for the cleanup," Peeler said.

"A cleanup is conducted in the spring and in the fall," Peeler said. "However, there should be an ongoing effort to keep the post clean."

It is the responsibility of the garrison sergeant major to survey the post every day, Peeler said. If anything is found that is not up to standard, it is reported.

"Whenever Sgt. Maj. (Steven) Chittum (garrison sergeant major) sees an area that is in need of repair, he directs the garrison staff notify the sergeant major responsible for that area." Peeler said.

During the first week of the cleanup, the focus was on the housing areas. This week the focus is cleaning office and common areas.

The biannual effort is made to keep the area beautiful and to insure that the installation remains up to the Communities of Excellence standards, Peeler said.

Training is a tool used by the armed forces, the emergency medical professions and by law enforcement agencies to maintain an optimum state of readiness.

But what happens when training ends and reality begins?

For Special Agent William W. Tarr Jr. of the U.S. Army Criminal Investigation Command, reality came crashing down on Nov. 29.

"I was following up on a death investigation we've had open since March of '95," Tarr said. "I was interviewing a source on the subject of the investigation.

"I had already planned to work on this other investigation and to interview some people. Unfortunately, the investigation involved Victory Drive and some of the establishments down there, so I had to go to some of the businesses around there and I just happened to be in the Lucky Seven."

Tarr said he arrived at the Lucky Seven Lounge around 11:15 p.m. and had been conducting interviews when he heard what he mistook as firecrackers.

"I had been conducting my interview for about 20 or 30 minutes when I heard what initially sounded like firecrackers," Tarr said. "I saw people hitting the floor and thought they were just reacting to the fire crackers, then someone started yelling that someone had shot these people."

> "It's weird because when I first walked into the club ... I noticed him right away. I thought he looked like a rough-looking character."
> — Special Agent William W. Tarr, Jr.
> Criminal Investigations Division

Tarr said a woman standing no more than three feet away from him was shot and fell to the floor, and two other men were lying on their backs about 10 feet away.

"My first response, I guess you can say was shock a little bit," Tarr said. "The first thing I did was I ran over to one of the men lying on his back and I asked him, 'What happened, what happened?," Tarr said. "He said he had been shot but I didn't see any blood or anything so I moved over to the woman and it was obvious she had been shot."

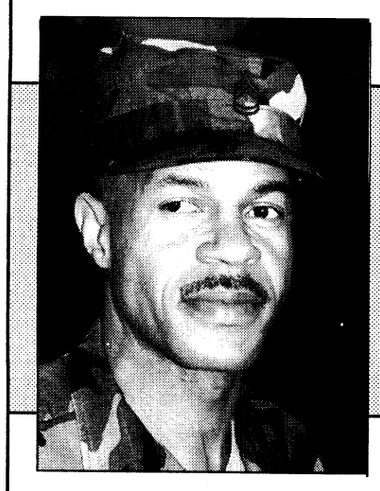
From there Tarr said he made his way to the door because he was planning to go after the shooter, but he had left and Tarr's gun was in his car during the incident.

"I decided to go back inside and help the people," Tarr said. "As I went back inside, I heard the door behind me start to open and I went down thinking it was the gunman coming back in again.

"I looked and saw it was a different guy coming in who was screaming about some guy who tried to shoot him and was getting away, and I got a description of the car from him."

Tarr said at this point he knew the perpetrator was not outside so he got into his car. He used the description of the car he received, and some additional information about a red pick-up truck that was following the perpetrator to begin his pursuit of the shooter.

"I got into my sedan and pulled out of the parking lot..," Tarr said. "I caught up to the red pick up truck around the Dolly Madison bakery. I had my blue light on, and the guy in the pick up truck rolled down the window and told me the perpetrator was just up ahead."



Tarr said he continued his pursuit of the perpetrator and eventually caught up with him at the S-curve on Victory Drive by the Olympic softball fields.

"I kept following him...and then he drove up on the side walk in response to my blue light," Tarr said. "The entire time I was in pursuit, I maintained contact with the Military Police station through the use of a hand - held radio . The MP station was then

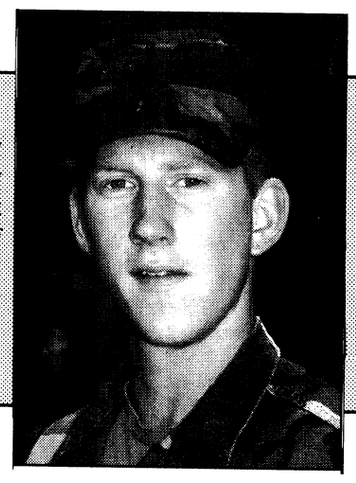
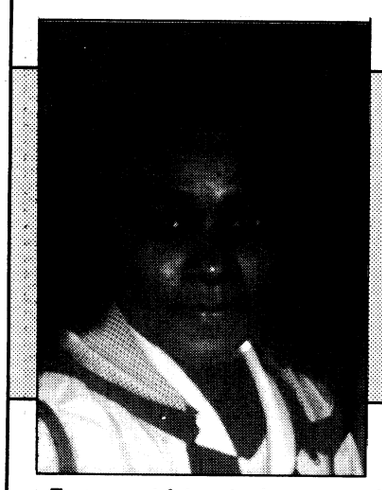
VARIOUS VOICES

What measures would you like to see taken to improve quality of life in the military?



Sgt 1st Class Gene Shaw, Company B, 2nd Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment— "I think quality of life is pretty good for the single soldiers, especially with the BOSS program. The BOSS program is a good program and it's working well."



2nd Lt. Mathew Burge, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 2nd Battalion, 11 Infantry Regiment — "I'd like to see better housing for the enlisted soldiers."

Maureen Fields, family member — "I have to say I'm pretty happy with the quality of life"

Pfc. Douglas Flickner, Company A, 2nd Bn. , 18th Infantry Regiment — "I'd like to see it accepted more by the chain of command, but I think it's a pretty good set up and I'm not complaining any."

Nancy Ayres, family member — "I'm pretty happy with the way things are right now. I mean it's not perfect, but I'm happy with it."

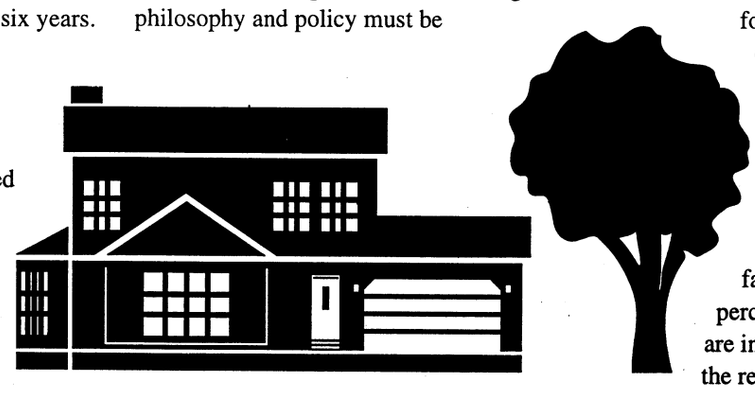
Changes in living conditions planned by

Task Force on Quality of Life Panel

By Linda D. Kozaryn
American Forces Information Service



Housing allowances for all military members, better barracks and family housing, expanded use of training simulation, and better access to community services are some of the changes the Task Force on Quality of Life recommended.

The task force, chaired by former Army Secretary John O. Marsh Jr., recently reported its findings and recommendations to Defense Secretary William J. Perry.

Perry formed the panel in November 1994, after President Clinton approved $2.7 billion for quality of life initiatives over the next six years. Panel members traveled to military installations around the world to determine how to improve quality of life.

The panel's recommendations aimed at maintaining the armed forces' readiness and fighting capability into the next century, Perry said.

"I don't think we can count on morale staying high forever in the face of these problems," he said.

According to the report, 64 percent of military owned or leased family housing and 15 percent of the privately owned family housing is inadequate. About 62 percent of military owned bachelor quarters is deemed unsuitable.

Instead of improving current methods of providing military housing, the panel recommended setting up a new system based on private investment. The Defense Department has proposed initiatives to Congress to encourage private investors and developers to build new housing and revitalize existing housing. The panel recommended creating a nonprofit Military Housing Authority to manage housing contracts.

The panel also called for giving a housing allowance to all military members who live in military housing, with or without dependents.

Another recommendation was to increase housing allowances to reduce out-of-pocket expenses of military members living in private housing. Congress intended to limit these expenses to 15 percent of a member's housing allowance when it created the Variable Housing Allowance system in the mid 1980s. Currently, however, service members pay about 22 percent above their housing allowance. This situation leads to what one panel member called "housing cost induced poverty."

Bachelor housing is in worse condition than family housing, according to the task force.

"Single members have consistently voiced their dissatisfaction with their living conditions, especially the lack of space, privacy and basic amenities," the report states. "Housing philosophy and policy must be rewritten to ensure it's equitable and promotes high morale, readiness, esprit de corps and a sense of personal responsibility and community support."

The panel also addressed personnel tempo. Although the services share no common definition for personnel tempo, they said service members consider it the amount of time they must spend away from home.

The panel reported frequent family separations disrupt family life, assignment plans, training, civilian education and promotion opportunities.

Efforts to relieve high personnel tempo included expanding the use of reserve forces.

Community and family services is the third area the panel studied. Today, 60 percent of the force is married; 65 percent of spouses are employed. Single parents are more common than in the past.

Specific recommendations included providing financial management counseling during basic training or at service members' first permanent duty stations and providing optional programs for spouses.

At present, the services meet only 52 percent of the need for child care, according to the report. The report recommended eliminating civilian manpower ceilings that prohibit commanders from hiring additional child care staff, ensuring appropriated funds for child care are not diverted, and making sure communities are aware of the services being provided.

The Women, Infants and Children program, which gives low income families vouchers for infant formula and food, should be extended to eligible military personnel assigned overseas, according to the panel. Currently, only military families stationed in the United States are eligible.

Educational activities aimed at preventing, identifying and treating family violence would help end the perception that family advocacy programs are intended to be punitive, according to the report. Officials at DoD substantiated more than 28,000 cases of family violence in 1994.

Training and education are the most common reasons recruits give for joining the military, according to the report.

The panel recommended standardizing (throughout the services) tuition assistance reimbursement rates and the number of courses a student is allowed to take in a year.

During their travels, panel members saw understaffed, underequipped and inconveniently located fitness centers. The task force recommended additional funding to upgrade these centers and build more centers.

The panel also looked at transportation issues. The current military program for shipping household goods has a damage claim rate of 23.4 percent, compared to 14 percent in the private sector. The task force recommended adopting a commercial standard.

Reservists deserve respect for their service

What motivates an individual to choose to participate in the Reserve Components? Is it from a sense of patriotism, duty or honor? Is it for the educational or travel opportunities? Is it for the economic aspects? Or, could it be for the nebulous thing called pride? Could it be pride in your accomplishments, your contributions, your impacts? Speaking for myself, it's all of the above. But, most importantly, it's that sense of satisfaction derived from believing that I have made a difference that I have had an impact — however slight — on the overall defensive posture of the American way of life.

Who is a reservist? It's someone who is willing to commute two, four or more hours one way, to attend training every month. It's someone who pays, out of their own pocket, for their lodging, meals, transportation and uniforms to maintain that affiliation. It's some one who is required to maintain, on their own time, the same standards of physical fitness, weight and military education as their active duty partners. It's someone who believes that, yes, they do make a difference.

However, what is frustrating and disheartening for a reservist is a common attitude encountered from the public, both civilian and active duty members alike. They say things like, "You're a reservist? Why, you're just a weekend warrior. You're just playing Army. What do you do for a real job. You better choose between working or playing."

It's being told that all of one's training, education, professionalism and experience has absolutely no bearing or impact on a job application. It's being told that a year's experience is not a year because you only do it two days a month. How do you explain that?

Were the reservists who were killed by a missile attack in Saudi Arabia just Weekend Warriors? Are the reservist in Haiti and the Sinai only playing Army? How about the reservists who will be going to Bosnia? Do they need to choose between working or playing?

Take a look at military uniforms. Do reservists wear a sign that says, " I'm just a part timer?" Hardly. Look at evaluation reports, do they list only the days that one pulled duty? Guess again.

The next time someone tells you that he or she is a reservist, keep in mind it may be only part-time pay and part-time duty, but it is every bit a full-time responsibility.

War Eagle coach thanks players, coaches and parents

The War Eagles 26-0 win over the Seminoles on Nov. 18 ended in a dynamic season with a 6-2 record.

The season was very eventful for the coaches and players.

Leadership was a focal point and players in most cases readily accepted the leadership role, performing admirably with tasked as team leaders for the weekly. Team leadership allowed all team members the opportunity to lead and to learn from the mistakes and triumphs of their peers. The coaches' leadership challenge was to allow the team members to lead, while maintaining focus on the game and retaining the integrity of the teamwork concept.

Teamwork and leadership are not always mutually constructive in an aggressive sport such as football, especially with the ever demanding requirements of military life. The coaches tried to balance the needs of their respective Army units and the need of the players to be successful in the week's upcoming game. The players learned to balance academic requirements and the needs of the team.

Our War Eagles grew in many ways as a team over the short but productive season. The basic responsibility of the coaches is to establish discipline and teach the fundamentals of football. The was achieved. The players continuously exhibited self-control, which took little coaching, and they had a good fundamental knowledge of football. The players accepted the coaches' tutelage improved their paying skills, learned the plays and adapted to change.

The War Eagle spirit was provided by the ever-ready defense that always provided a challenge to all opponents and assisted the offense on occasion with scored. The War Eagle offense improved the most and showed the spirit required and their accomplished backfield played hard even in adversity. The linemen were the strength of the offense, always giving the backs the running lanes and providing exemplary pass protection for the quarterbacks.

It was a privilege and an honor to be afforded the opportunity to mentor these fine young men. Should the opportunity arise again, it would be gladly accepted. The opportunity to have an impact on our youth, outside our own family members are few. As active military members, this was an excellent experience. The impact the youth had on the coaching staff was unexpected. the young men proved that they were able to set goals and achieve these goals as a team. I take this opportunity to thank the parents, players and the coaches for allowing me the experience of working with the War Eagle team.

Allotment program successful if checked

By Della Brito
Army News Service

The discretionary allotment program helps military members organize personal finances. The program allows members to designate up to six allotments for purposes such as dependent support, savings, insurance and home mortgage. And while the discretionary allotment program makes it easy to start an allotment, service members need to remember that starting the allotment isn't the end of their responsibility.

Military members are responsible for payments arriving on time and should follow up with the finance office to make sure the allotment was started and to verify addresses or account numbers. It's also the member's responsibility to ensure the money is deposited correctly before writing checks on the account. DFAS centers receive many undeliverable military allotment checks and requests for reimbursement for allotment checks that were never received.

Problems happen for several reasons: the recipient moved; the allotment was sent to the wrong account; the account number is missing or wrong; the person initiating the allotment was confused about when the allotment would start or stop, or the finance office made an error in posting the allotment transaction.

Problems can be prevented by trying the following suggestions:

• Members should notify their finance office of any address changes when allotments are sent to a person rather than a financial institution. Centers often don't receive the address change until after the allotment check has been returned as undeliverable.

• Sending allotments directly to checking or savings accounts by electronic funds transfer. Allotments sent to a financial institution for automatic payment to another account can't be sent electronically from a center. Service members must arrange with their financial institution to transfer funds from a checking or savings account to the loan account.

Another common misunderstanding is the effective date of allotments. Allotment starts or changes are effective the beginning of the current processing month. Allotments may be stopped at the end of the prior processing month for the end of the current processing month. For example, if a member wants an allotment to be paid Feb. 1, the deduction for the allotment must begin Jan. 1. On the other hand, an allotment must be stopped effective Jan. 1 to avoid a Feb. 1 payment.

Customer service will improve and costs to the government will be less by following these simple steps when starting an allotment:

1. Provide the finance office a copy of a voided personal check, which can be used to verify the electronic address of the financial institution

2. Ensure the account number is correct, if it is wrong, the financial institution will not accept the funds.

3. For allotments such as mortgage or insurance payments that are not going to a person, have a valid account/loan/policy/case number. Credit will not be given without a valid account number.

4. A copy of the payment coupon or loan paperwork with an account number is required by the finance office. A name can't be used as an account number

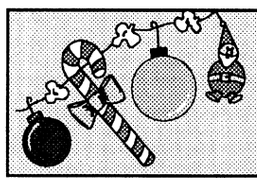
5. If a child support allotment is sent directly to the parent or guardian, a "credit to the account of" line is not needed since the member's Social Security number is printed on the check. Allotments may not be sent to children under 16; they must be sent to a parent or guardian.

DPW to conduct officer environmental training

By Shannon Day
Special to The Bayonet©

An Environmental Officer Professional Development Training Day has been set for Dec. 13, according to Erin D. Knighton, environmental specialist, Directorate of Public Works.

The goal for this training will be to provide current information about environmental management at Fort Benning.



"This training is mandatory for all brigade and battalion commanders, all command sergeant majors and all directors and division chiefs within their directorates," she said.

Topics to be discussed are storage, transport and turn-in of hazardous waste and spill response, Knighton said. They will also talk about environmental inspections and laws.

"We talk about the environmental laws because (people) can be fined if they break them," she said. "You can be fined up to $25,000 per day if hazardous wastes are not stored properly. You can also be fined if you cut down a tree with a red-cockaded woodpecker nest in it, because they are considered endangered."

The training will begin at 1:30 p.m. at the 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment Motorpool, located on Kelly Hill. Participants should be at the motorpool no later than 1:15 p.m., according to Knighton.

CID to crack down on illegal drugs

By Richard Brill
Special to The Bayonet©

Fort Benning has initiated a drug suppression hot line to solicit tips that can be used to combat illicit drug use involving military personnel.

Criminal Investigation Division Agent Paul Bond, drug suppression team chief, said the local line will offer anonymity and cash bonuses for information leading to the arrest of drug dealers or the seizure of illicit drugs.

"This is largely a preventive measure," Bond said. "The information we receive can help us prevent future incidents before they happen."

The 24-hour hot line can be reached at 545-2143.

Callers will be asked if they wish to remain anonymous, Bond said. However, callers must give their names if they wish to be eligible for the cash bonus.

"Any information supplied, including a caller's name will be held in the strictest confidentiality," Bond said.

Sometimes callers might reach an answering machine. Either leave a message or call back later, he said.

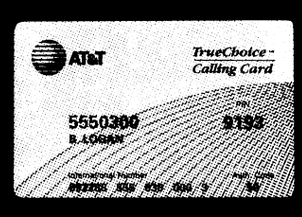
The most important thing when supplying information is to be as detailed and as accurate as possible, Bond said.

"It doesn't do us any good if someone calls and says someone is selling drugs at school and then hangs up," Bond said. "Be as accurate as possible. We need names, dates, physical descriptions, license plate numbers or a dealer's method of operation. The quality of the information will determine whether or not we can launch a successful investigation."

Bond said the team is primarily interested in cases involving military personnel or illicit drugs on post. Interest in off-post cases largely revolves around the involvement of military personnel, he said.

"We are especially concerned with civilian dealers who might come on post and sell illicit drugs to soldiers or school children," he said.

According to Bond, crack cocaine, marijuana and LSD have proved popular with some soldiers.



Signs of illicit drug activity, which Bond said are too varied to generalize, include people living well beyond their means because of earnings as a dealer and homes that receive frequent visitors for short periods of time at all hours of the night.

Bond said the anonymity the line offers does away with concerns people might have of involving themselves or of being found out.

CID offering reward

The U.S. Criminal Investigation Command is offering a $500 reward for information leading to the arrest and conviction of persons responsible for an attempted robbery and aggravated assault that occurred at a public telephone booth on the corner of Way Street and Sightseeing Road at about 1 a.m. Nov. 20. A soldier using the telephone was approached by three, 16- to 20-year-old black males. The assailants held a knife to the soldiers throat while they demanded his wallet.

The assistance of the local community is being requested in an effort to identify and apprehend the perpetrators. It is requested that anyone with information concerning this incident contact Chief Warrant Officer 2 James Newsome at 545-4989 or the Military Police at 545-5222.

The identity of anyone providing information will be kept in strictest confidence.

Nick Hoge Award set

Military personnel and civilian employees of the Department of the Army, including local nationals and nonappropriated fund employees, are encouraged to submit professional essays for consideration for the 1995 Nick Hoge Award for Professional Development.

This essay competition provides the opportunity for Army personnel to present their ideas through thoroughly researched, documented and creative papers. The papers are to consider the existing quality, effectiveness or efficiency of civilian human resource management and related professional disciplines (such as personnel psychology) and should address concepts and methodologies that will enhance the conduct of civilian human resource management business.

Co-authors and group authors are permitted. Nominations must be submitted to the Management-Employee Relations Division, Directorate of Civilian Personnel in an original and eight copies with a separate cover page, no later than Jan. 6.

For more information call Mae Horsey at 545-4483.

FEHB opens season

The 1995 Federal Employees' Health Benefits Program open season will be today through Dec. 11. Enrollment and changes will be effective the first day of the first pay period beginning on or after Jan. 1.

Employees who make a change must be in a pay status for some part of the pay period prior to the one in which enrollment takes effect.

For more information, call Felicia W. Griffin at 545-5562.

OCS board set

The next Officer Candidate School selection board has been scheduled for June 17 to 21, 1996. The cutoff date for applications to arrive at Personnel Command is May 17, 1996 — no exceptions.

The Adjutant General Personnel Operations Services Division has set up two local boards to accommodate Fort Benning for the DA June board.

Local board No. 1 is will be Feb. 6 to 8. Applications must arrive no later than Jan. 19. Local board No. 2 will be May 6 to 8. Applications for this board must arrive in POSD no later than April 19.

For more information, call Marie Lee at 545-3341 or 545-4702.

Thrift Savings Plan opens

The Thrift Saving Plan open season runs through Jan. 31. Any employee wishing to start a TSP account, change TSP contributions or change how TSP contributions are invested may do so during the open season.

Elections or changes to the TSP may be made by visiting the Directorate of Civilian Personnel. Personnel Services Center, Building 85, Center Wing, during regular duty hours.

Coordinate travel with Carlson Wagonlit

All official travel within the continental United States should be coordinated directly with Carlson Wagonlit Travel.

The traveler is responsible for providing three copies of travel orders directly to Carlson Wagonlit Travel.

For convenience, orders may be dropped off at the drive-thru ticket booth.

Airline tickets will no longer be available for pick up at the booth. Tickets can be picked up at Building 2628 two days prior to date of travel.

For more information, call Carlson Travel at 682-0622.

EFMP program provides assistance

The Exceptional Family Member Program is a Department of the Army program designed to assist, through selective assignment and reassignment, the soldier who has a special needs family member.

The EFMP addresses the needs of those family members, adults or children, who have a physical, intellectual or emotional disorder that limits that person's capability to take part in activities and which requires special treatment, therapy, education, training or counseling.

The program's purpose is to let the U.S. Total Army Personnel Command at DA know of any family members with special needs, so this can be a consideration during the assignment selection process.

For additional information regarding the EFMP, contact Frances Howard, coordinator, Exceptional Family Member Program, Army Community Service, at 545-6969 or 545-5516.

Recycle used oil

Used oil can be taken to the following places:

Recycling Center, Building 4000, Villegas Street, Harmony Church. Hours are 9 a.m. to 5 p.m., Monday through Friday.

Main Post Auto Crafts Shop, Building 9064, Marne Road. Hours are 1:30 to 9 p.m. Monday through Friday, 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. Saturday and Sunday.

The auto crafts shops charge a fee to collect the used oil.

Used oil may also be turned in to the Energy Management Branch of the Directorate of Public Works or the Defense Reutilization Marketing Office for use.

For more information, call 545-4218 or 545-4766.

Airports impose new security measures

New security measures in all airports require travelers to show a picture identification card at time of check-in. Picture ID cards are required for travelers 18 years and older. Failure to produce a picture ID could result in denial of boarding.

Check-in time at the Columbus Airport should be no less than 45 minutes prior to departure and no less than one hour prior to departure from the Atlanta Airport.

For more information, call the Transportation Division at 545-7706.

Advance elements begin arriving in Bosnia

Army News Service

WASHINGTON — U.S. troops began arriving in Bosnia and Croatia this week for peace enforcement operations in the Balkans.

Defense Secretary William J. Perry outlined the plans during a Dec. 4 news briefing at the Pentagon. Approximately 1,465 advance U.S. service members have begun arriving in the theater of operations as part of the NATO enabling force for Operation Joint Endeavor. The enabling force will help pave the way for the main Implementation Force to enter soon after the Dayton peace agreement is signed in Paris Dec. 14.

"This enabling force is going to provide the expeditious, the efficient, and the safe deployment of the IFOR," Perry said. "So this is an advance force to the main force which would go in only after a peace agreement is signed."

The enabling force will establish the essential infrastructure — communications, command and control, intelligence — to prepare for movements, Perry said. "The IFOR force is going in, and some of the United Nations force is going out, and it will arrange for military and civil relations."

> "The enabling force will establish the essential infrastructure – communications, command and control, intelligence – to prepare for movements."
> — William J. Perry
> Secretary of Defense

The advance troops of the enabling force travelled to Croatia and Bosnia by air, taking with them communications gear and other equipment necessary to perform their missions. By Saturday in Croatia, the NATO total will be about 1,200, including 730 American troops. In Bosnia, the enabling forces under NATO will total about 1,400, of which 735 are American, Perry said.

Some U.S. troops going to Bosnia will go to Sarajevo to help set up the IFOR headquarters there. But most of the U.S. participants will go to Tuzla where the 1st Armored Division Headquarters will be established under the command of Maj. Gen. William Nash.

Perry also signed orders Monday to deploy 3,000 support troops from Germany to Hungary. Of those, 2,000 will set up a logistics system, and 1,000 will be an engineering brigade.

The U.S. already had a total support force of 7,000 going to Hungary and to Italy. When this deployment is complete, "The new forces in the theater will be these 7,000 ... in Hungary and Italy; the 20,000 which will be in Bosnia; and an additional 5,000 in Croatia."

This whole force, Perry said, will be in place in Bosnia within eight weeks of the peace accord's signing.

The Department of Defense has identified 22 Army units and five Air Force units based in the U.S. for potential deployment in support of the NATO Implementation Force.

In addition, Perry said the Pentagon is preparing to call up reservists. "Today we are beginning the identification and training of reserve force units and individuals who are scheduled for deployment as part of the IFOR later this month."

The DoD list specifies 37 reserve component units.

U.S. troop to enforce peace, not fight war, Perry says

By David Gillespie
Army News Service

WASHINGTON — U.S. troops are going to Bosnia to enforce a peace, not to fight a war, said Defense Secretary William Perry at a Dec. 4 Pentagon news conference.

"For two and a half years we've said we would not send ground troops to Bosnia until a peace agreement is reached. That peace agreement is now in hand, and that's why we are preparing the forces — not to fight a war. And we will have a limited — and a clear — peacekeeping mission," Perry said.

There is only one real alternative to U.S. participation in IFOR, he said: "a restart of the war and a resumption of the killings and the atrocities.

"There are risks ... but the risks to the United States of the war restarting are even greater; because if the war restarts, there is a very real prospect of this war spreading north into Croatia, threatening Slovenia and Hungary, spreading south into Macedonia, Kosovo, Albania and threatening Greece."

The United States has two key roles in the enabling force. "One of them is building the communications network ... The other is, we will use our special operations forces to establish liaison between the NATO and non-NATO nations," Perry said.

As for protection of the enabling force, Perry emphasized that the cease-fire has been in place since Oct. 11 and is still holding. He said the enabling force has its own "rules of engagement, which allows them protection, and they will have arms with them to provide for their own protection."

In case of an attack on the advance troops, Perry said, "We do have, if necessary, a Marine Expeditionary Unit off the coast, and we also have close air support."

22 units targeted for Bosnia duty

Army News Service

Twenty-two U.S. Army units based in the United States have been identified for potential deployment in support of the NATO Implementation Force (IFOR) in Bosnia. In some cases, only elements of the unit may deploy.

In addition, individual soldiers with unique qualifications or specialties may be identified on a case-by-case basis to augment units deploying to Bosnia.

The following is the list of units currently identified for potential deployment:

Just Cause commander passes away

Army News Service

Gen. Maxwell R. Thurman, a soldier whose career spanned more than 37 years, died December 1, 1995, at Walter Reed Army Medical Center, Washington, D.C.

Thurman was a principal architect of the all-volunteer Army and served as the commander-in-chief of the U.S. Southern Command during the successful military operations in Panama in late 1989.

He learned that he had an aggressive form of leukemia in July 1990. He retired from the Army seven months later in February 1991.

Thurman was born in High Point, N.C., February 18, 1931. He attended North Carolina State University, graduating with a degree in chemical engineering in 1953.

While there he enrolled in ROTC and was commissioned an officer. His training included preparations in ordnance and artillery. He continued his training at the Army Command and General Staff College and the Army War College.

Thurman held a variety of staff and command positions, both in Europe he commanded light artillery and rocket units with the 11th Airborne Division, and saw service during the 1958 Lebanon crisis. He served in Vietnam, first as a corps intelligence advisor and later as the commander of 2nd Battalion, 35th Field Artillery, during the Tet Offensive.

Returning to the United States, he commanded the 82nd Airborne Division Artillery and from 1979 until 1981, the U.S. Army Recruiting Command. Other assignments included duty as an instructor at the United States Military Academy and with the Army Field Artillery School and Army Training and Doctrine Command.

Promoted to the rank of lieutenant general in 1981, Thurman became the deputy chief of staff for personnel for the U.S. Army. In 1983, the was promoted to general and appointed vice chief of staff for the Army.

He assumed command of the U.S. Army Training and Doctrine Command at Fort Monroe, Va., in 1987. During these years it was largely through Thurman's inspiration and leadership that the Army's new recruiting and training programs were implemented and the modern volunteer professional Army came into existence.

In September 1989, Gen. Thurman was named commander-in-chief of the United States Southern Command, responsible for all American military activities in Latin America and implementing national security policy and strategy in the region. United States prepared and launched Operation "Just Cause" in Panama, which successfully removed dictator Manuel Noriega and helped restore democracy to that strategic nation.

Thurman's awards include the Defense Distinguished Service Medal (with Oak Leaf Cluster), Army Distinguished Service Medal (with Oak Leaf Cluster), the Legion of Merit (with Oak Leaf Cluster), Bronze Star Medal with V Device (with Oak Leaf Cluster), Meritorious Service Medals, four Air Medals, Army Commendation Medals, and the Joint Service Achievement Medal. He was decorated by the governments of France, Germany and Venezuela. Thurman was a Master Parachutist and held the Army General Staff and Joint Chiefs of Staff Identification Badges.

Thurman served on the President's Commission on Women in the Armed Forces and the President's Commission on Panama. He received the 1992 North Carolina Award in Public Service for a native North Carolinian living outside the state. In September, 1995, the U.S. Army Recruiting Command named its headquarters the Maxwell R. Thurman Center for Recruiting Excellence at Fort Knox, Ky.

Thurman is survived by his brother, retired Army Lt. Gen. John R. Thurman III of Alexandria, Va.

Memorial Chapel, Fort Myer, Va., on Thursday with interment immediately following at the Arlington National Cemetery. In lieu of flowers, donations may be made to the Gen. Maxwell R. Thurman Memorial Fund, in care of the Association of the United States Army, 2425 Wilson Blvd., Arlington, Va. 22201.

ACAP offers free transition seminar

Washington lecturer, retired colonel to speak on marketing yourself for a second career

Army Career and Alumni Program

A Washington lecturer and author on career transition from military to civilian employment will be at Fort Benning Tuesday in Infantry Hall, Classroom 30, from 9 to 11 a.m. to talk to officers, senior noncommissioned officers and spouses on "Marketing Yourself for a Second Career."

Retired Col. Jerry Crews, deputy director of the Officer Placement Service for The Retired Officers Association, travels nationwide addressing military audiences composed of people who are nearing retirement, being involuntarily separated or opting to leave military service.

The lecture is open to all military personnel and their spouses. The first 200 participants will receive a free copy of the publication, "Marketing Yourself for a Second Career."

In his free, 2 1/2-hour presentation, Crews will introduce the audience to the realities of the competition in the civilian job market; the perceptions civilian employers have of military personnel; how to plan for the job search; tips for strengthening the resume (to include how employers read a resume); networking, preparing for and conducting a successful interview; salary and benefit packages; and rejection.

Crews said he doesn't promise an individual instant job search success but guarantees that each person who attends his lecture will profit from the knowledge gained and will be ready to move in the right direction toward that second career.

The lecture has been continually praised by attendees for its content and delivery. Crews provides information for every attendee and provides insights into the transition which are unique and hard-hitting.

Military members and their spouses, who are cordially invited to attend the lecture, will have an opportunity to ask questions of Crews and will also receive a free copy of the publication.

The Retired Officers Association sponsors these lectures, which in 1994 were presented to over 15,000 personnel at 107 military installations throughout the United States and Europe.

CID: Agent gets gunman

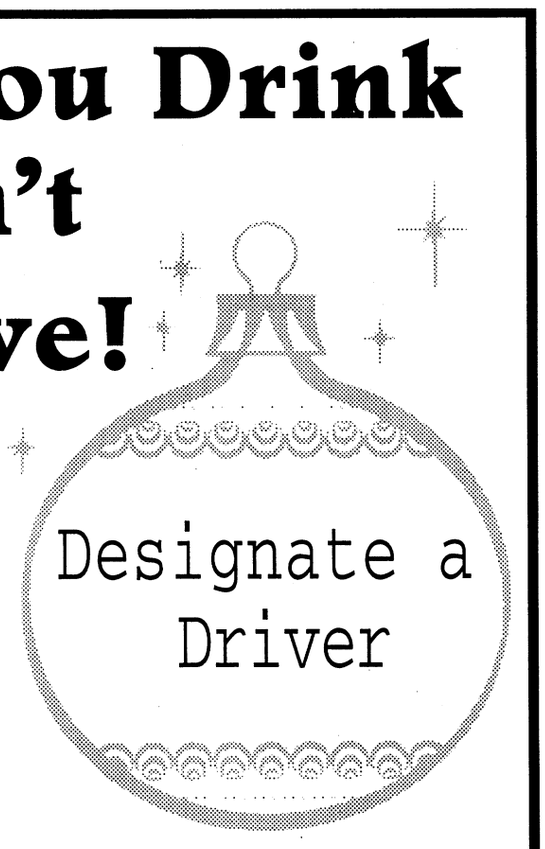
relaying my information to 911 and the Columbus Police Department.

From there Tarr said he made a citizen's arrest without incident and waited until the CPD arrived.

"It's weird because when I first walked into the club, because of habit..., I tend to notice things when I walk in," Tarr said. "When I walked up to the bar I walked up right next to him about an arm's reach away. I noticed him right away I thought he looked like a rough-looking character."



Tarr said the perpetrator had entered the club with the intension of robbing the club. He had entered one of the dressing rooms where the dancers were at and attempted to rob one of the girls. He was confronted by the three people he later shot.

Tarr said he doesn't consider anything he's done to be out of the ordinary.

"I know it sounds redundant or whatever, but I really wasn't thinking about being a hero," Tarr said. " I just acted on instincts and my training. I didn't hesitate on anything — everything just clicked."

Because of his actions, Tarr was presented a Meritorious Service Medal Dec. 1.

ARMY CAREER AND ALUMNI PROGRAM

Starting early is key to easy, smooth transition

Army Career and Alumni Program

The Army Career and Alumni Program provides career guidance for soldiers transitioning out of the service. Starting early is the key for soldiers to begin thinking about what they want to do after the military.

Based on soldiers' individual needs, ACAP counselors will offer career guidance and counseling on services and programs available to them. Soldiers schedule individual appointments through their personnel services noncommissioned officer three-day expiration-of-term of-service retirement briefing and ACAP transition counselor appointment.

ACAP offers:

A three-day retirement Transition Class within 180 days of separation that prepares military members for transition.

• A one-day "advanced course" explaining resume preparation and interviewing skills.

• The Defense Outplacement Referral System process that provides a free service to match a person's abilities to civilian employment positions by sending a mini-resume to a data base accessed by employers worldwide.

• Career Day provides an opportunity for employers to meet soldiers, provide information on job leads and interview prospective clients as needed.

• The Educational Opportunity Program provides an awareness of tuition assistance, enrollment procedures, or current data on any college or university.

• The Skill Development Program is intended to provide training opportunities to soldiers, civilians and family members who transition from the Army.

• Referrals for separation benefits to include Special Separation Benefits, Voluntary Separation Incentive and retirement. Below is a timetable for job hunting while still in the service.

Six months out

• Schedule through the unit PSNCO your preseparation counseling appointment at ACAP Transition Office, Building 2617, and the three day preseparation classes conducted in Infantry Hall, Classroom 30.

• Develop an individual transition plan with the ACAP transition counselor in Building 2617 and review the mandatory "preseparation Counseling Checklist" (Department of Defense Form 2648) required for clearing post.

• Begin researching the job market. Develop a career plan, including a list of possible employers in your career field.

• Assess your job skills and interests to determine how they relate to today's job market, take a vocational interest inventory.

• Discuss with your family possible options about your career and where to live next.

Five months out

• Seek help if the stresses of your transition to civilian life become too much to handle.

• Contact friends in the private sector who may help you find a job.

• Begin attending job fairs.

• Develop a fall-back plan in case your first career plan falls through.

• Research specific job possibilities, job markets, and the economic conditions in the geographic areas where you want to live.

• If you need additional educational or vocational training to compete in the job market, explore your options for adult education.

• Establish a financial plan "to make ends meet" during your transition to civilian life.

• If you are separating before fulfilling eight years of active service, you must satisfy your obligation by becoming a member of the Ready Reserve.

Four months out

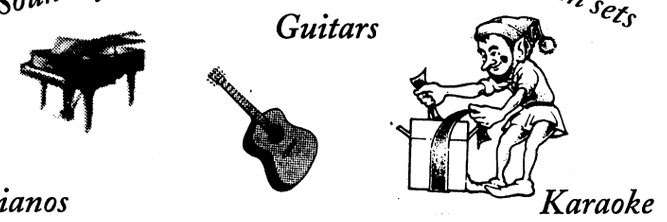
• Receive your "Verification of Military Experience and Training" (DD Form 2586). For specific information call (800) 258-8638.

• Write resumé.

• If you are considering federal employment, fill out an application (Standard Form 171). Explore special federal programs and hiring opportunities for veterans.

• Visit the Relocation Assistance Program Office. If you live in government housing arrange for a preinspection and obtain termination information.

• Learn about the education benefits you can obtain under the Montgomery GI Bill.



Transition Assistance Classes

All service members getting out of or retiring from the military must process through the Army Career and Alumni Program's Transition Assistance Office, Building 2617, Soldiers' Plaza, before attending a Transition Assistance Program class in Infantry Hall.

Classes are given in three-day blocks and are scheduled throughout the year. Classes are in Classroom 30, Infantry Hall, from 7:45 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. For more information, call 545-7020 or 545-7009.

Date	Type of Class

Santa's Castle makes difference

By Amy Durham
Special to The Bayonet

Remember your most precious childhood Christmas gift?

Whether it was a bright red bike with sleek racing stripes, an electric train set or a huge teddy bear, you opened your eyes on Christmas morn to see toys and packages under the tree.

For more than a 1,000, Fort Benning children, this Christmas might have been limited, but 48 volunteers helped parents check off their children's wish lists Nov. 6 to 17 when Santa's Castle opened its doors to Fort Benning's families in need.

Created in 1986 as a non-profit charity organization to collect new and used toys to repair and distribute to those in need of assistance, the all-volunteer program continues to thrive on community support.

According to Gabriella Rothbrust, chairwoman, the workshop's success is a reflection of the post's giving spirit.

"It's soldiers and family members helping soldiers and family members," she said.

Santa's Castle receives support from individuals and units at all levels. That support, be it through toy, money or time donations, has allowed the program to provide toys to more children each year.

In 1990, almost 800 children received toys given by other soldiers and their families, individually or through their units.

Four years later, more than 1,100 children received 7,730 toys, and Rothbrust said she expects the workshop will help put cheer on more than a thousand children's faces by the end of the 1995 shopping year.

Throughout the regular campaign in November, the workshop averaged helping six families per half hour. Trying to help parents find the right items for each child's age and personality was a challenge Jeanne Conner, family member volunteer, said she enjoyed meeting. One family came in shopping for seven individual personalities, and Conner said she remembered how happy they were to take home three bicycles.

"It was neat to see their excitement, "she said.

Conner, who has been volunteering since September, said she also enjoyed working with parents whose children had special needs. A couple of soldiers were shopping for blind children, so they threw out the age categories and started hunting shelves for toys that made sounds.

"We were able to tailor their shopping so parents could get what they needed," she said.

Parents with children from birth to age 14 were able to choose a stuffed animal, book and puzzle, as well as a toy from each of three different price ranges for each child.

Those with teen-agers, 15 to 18, could choose one item. Shoppers were also allowed to choose one game for their family as well as one 50-foot roll of wrapping paper.

While most shoppers are wrapped up in this season's holiday shopping, workshop volunteers will be on hand Dec. 15 and 22 to provide emergency shopping for families with extenuating circumstances.

However, Rothbrust stressed individuals must apply through their unit commands to receive assistance.

"The unit first sergeant can better assess the individual's needs," she said. Once the appointment is set, Santa's Castle elves will do everything they can to make the Christmas season special.

Program volunteers continue to work on donation projects with various community agencies and post units throughout December.

Once Christmas has passed, volunteers will spend the next 12 months reorganizing shelves, collecting and repairing used toys, as well as using money donations to purchase new ones.

These elves know planning takes time, and they say they hope to plan a bright Christmas for hundreds of children for years to come.

If you are interested in donating to Santa's Castle or volunteering your time, contact the workshop at 545-1233.

'TIS THE SEASON

CG lights Christmas tree, menorah

Adults, children gather to mark beginning of post's holiday season

By Lisa M. Hibbbert
Bayonet staff writer

As the sky grew dusky, Fort Benning residents gathered Tuesday at the Field of Four Chaplains to watch the lighting of the post Christmas tree and menorah.

The Infantry Band was on the scene playing some traditional and jazzy tunes that set the tone for the evening.

The band was not the only musical ensemble that performed for the more than 100 children of all ages that gathered for the ceremony. The White and Wilson Elementary School Chorus sang Natalie Sleeth's "Deo Gracias" and "Our Gift for You" by Jerry Estes.

Fort Benning Commanding General Maj. Gen. John W. Hendrix welcomed the crowd and even exchanged a few words with members of the audience.

"What is the season all about?" Hendrix asked.

"Presents," said the younger members of the audience in response, and "Santa Claus."

Chaplain (Capt.) Chana Timoner explained to the audience the meaning of the menorah and Hanukkah.

"The Egyptians had desecrated the Temple in Jerusalem," Timoner said. "They destroyed it, and removed all of the oil from it. A one-day supply of oil escaped the desecration and burned for eight days straight.

During Hanukkah, a candle is lighted every day for eight days to commemorate the miracle of the oil burning for that long.

Chaplain (Capt.) Alex Brown explained the meaning of Christmas as he read from Luke 2:1 to 20.

This chapter tells of how Joseph and Mary were in Bethlehem when she brought forth her firstborn son, Jesus, and wrapped him in swaddling clothes and laid him in a manger, he said.

An angel appeared to shepherds as they were tending their flocks at night and made them afraid.

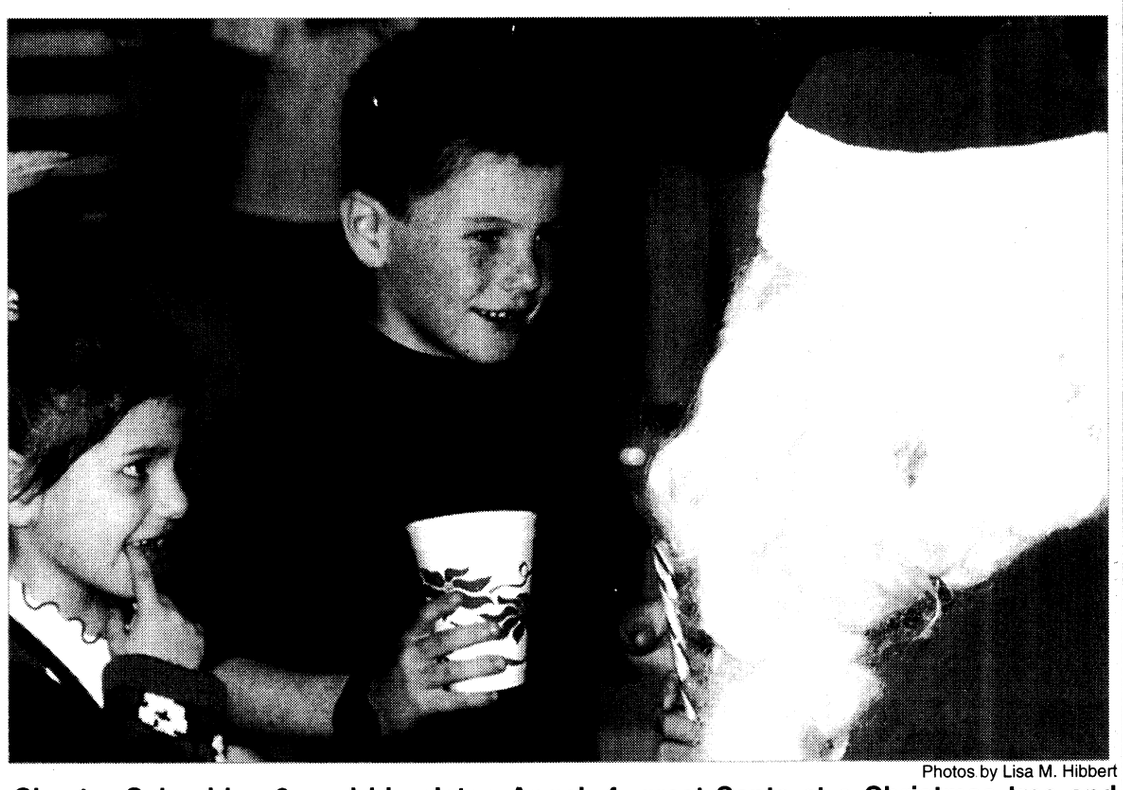
"And the Angel said unto them, Fear not: for behold, I bring you good tidings of great joy, which shall be to all people.

"For unto you is born this day in the city of David a Saviour, which is Christ the Lord." (Luke 1)

After the chaplains had finished, Hendrix again took the microphone because the moment the crowd had been waiting for had finally arrived.

"I'll need about a dozen kids to help me turn on the Christmas tree lights," Hendrix said.

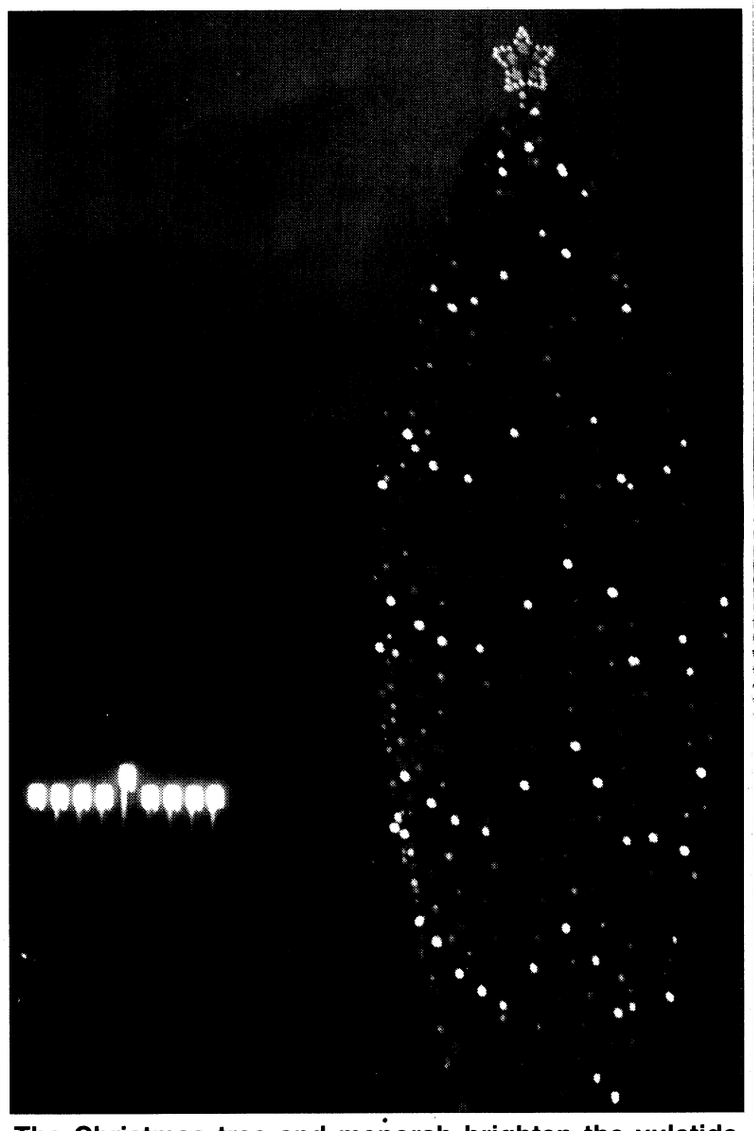
More than 40 laughing and yelling children ran to the podium to be his assistants.



After the lighting ceremony, the audience moved into the reception hall of the Infantry Chapel where refreshments and a white-bearded older gentleman dressed in a red suit and black boots sat waiting to hand out candy canes and wish the children a Merry Christmas.

The long line of children and parents waiting to see Santa wrapped inside the lobby and competed with crowds around the refreshment table.

While the children happily waited in line to greet Santa, they constantly asked their parents why they had to stand in line.



"I liked talking to Santa, but that was a long line," said one little girl.

As the families departed for the evening, the children talked excitedly about meeting Santa Claus and about all of the wonderful presents he is going to bring them.

Annual Bi-City Christmas Parade set Saturday

By Agatha Hudson Debrow
Bayonet editor

More than 128 floats, cars, bands and other entries will make their way through downtown Phenix City and Columbus Saturday in the annual Bi-City Christmas Parade.

"The parade will consist of professional floats and (noncommercial) floats from churches and civic groups and bands," said Lucy Burkett, administrative assistant for the Phenix City Department of Parks and Recreation.

Fort Benning Commanding General Maj. Gen. John W. Hendrix and his wife, Cheri, will represent the post in the parade. The Infantry Band and a color guard from the 317th Engineer Battalion, 3rd Brigade, 24th Infantry Division, are also participating.

The event is sponsored by the Phenix City and Columbus Parks and Recreation departments.

"The parade is for the citizens of Phenix City, Columbus, Fort Benning and the surrounding areas," parade co-coordinator and Columbus Parks employee Joe Slade said.

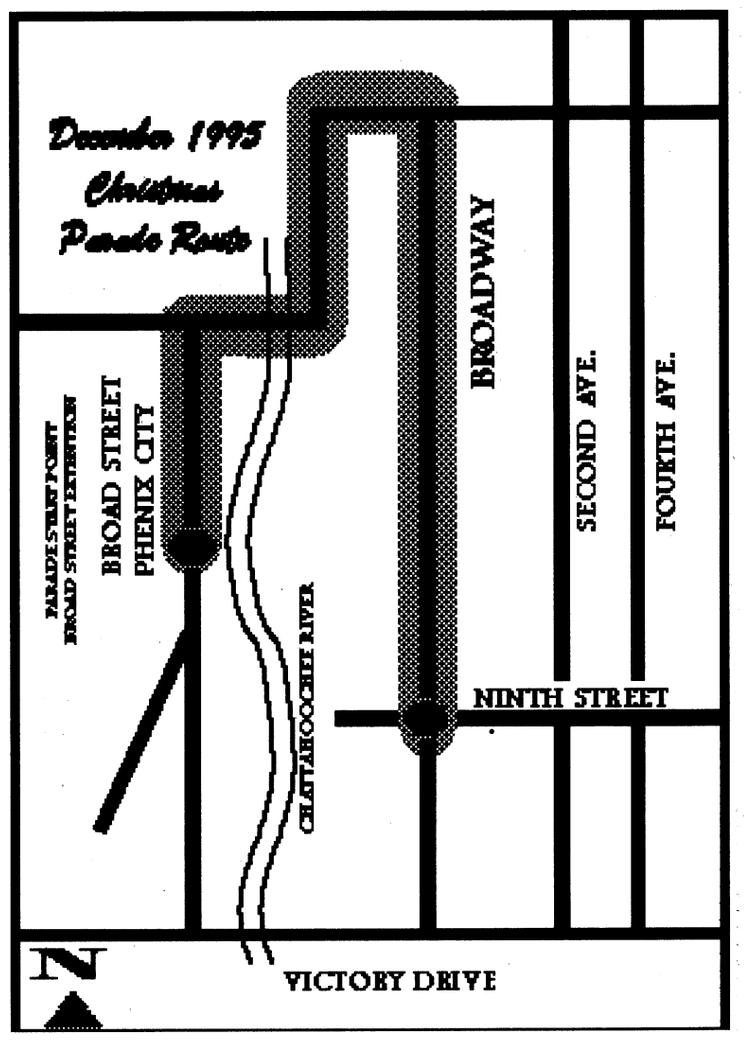
The parade starts at the Board Street Extension in Phenix City and makes it way across the 14th Street Bridge to the west side of Broadway in Columbus. It will end at Ninth Street.

Roads affected by the parade will be closed starting at 8:30 a.m., Slade said. He said spectators can park along side streets off the main parade route or in public parking lots.

"There was a good crowd last year because of the weather," Slade said. "But, the parade will go on whether there's rain, shine, snow or sleet.

Thirteen marching bands and various local dignitaries, including Columbus Mayor Pro Tem A. J. McClung, will also participate.

The Association of the United States Army will have a float. Spc. Christa Yates, AUSA's large chapter queen, of Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 1st Battalion, 50th Infantry Regiment, Infantry Training Brigade, and Spc. Judith Ginder, AUSA's small chapter queen, of the School of the Americas, will participate.



Other beauty queens will include Miss Georgia, Miss National Peanut Queen, Miss Columbus and Miss Phenix City.

Of course, Slade said, the highlight of the parade will be Santa Claus himself, who will make his official arrival on the last float of the parade.

The noncommercial floats, about 50, will be judged for first, second and third place.

"They will be judged on how well the theme is carried out and how well they are decorated," Slade said. The committee of judges consist of retired or past Parks and Recreation employees, he said, and they work basically in the areas of arts and crafts.

The bi-cities have cosponsored the parade for 17 years.

Children from Phenix City Middle School and local Junior Reserve Officers' Training Corps programs and their parents display their excitement at a Rangers in Action demonstration.

ROLE MODELS

Students adopt rangers

By Richard Brill
Special to The Bayonet

Fort Benning's Ranger Training Brigade has been "adopted" by Phenix City Middle School.

The adoption was formalized Monday at a Rangers in Action demonstration at Victory Pond, which included an audience of nearly all students.

Students from Phenix City Middle School and local Junior Reserve Officers' Training Corps programs attended the demonstration.

To signify the adoption, Mike Redmond, Phenix Middle School principal, and Adam Steverson, student council president, presented Lt. Col. Paul Malone, Ranger Training Brigade executive officer, a plaque.

According to Redmond, the idea for the adoption came from a desire to provide outstanding role models for school-aged children. The rangers, he said, were a perfect choice because of their interesting and exciting mission and their commitment in accomplishing it.

"Our students need good role models," Redmond said. "They need motivation and good examples. The rangers will be excellent for these."

As part of the adoption, individual rangers will make scheduled visits to the Phenix City Middle School to give presentations.

"We have been very interested in getting out to Phenix City because that's one area the regiment is responsible for," Malone said. "We think its important for children to understand what the mission of the military is and to know that soldiers are worthy role models. This is a great way to increase good community relations between Fort Benning and Phenix City."

Redmond said the rangers will teach a variety of subjects, including presentations to history and geography classes about their individual service overseas. He also hopes to involve the rangers in working on the school's nature trail.

"Our students really enjoy this kind of thing," Redmond said. "This can really make a difference, especially to students who haven't had much exposure to the outside world. This helps them see things that they might otherwise never be aware of."

He said the emphasis will be on hands-on kinds of activities that will capture the attention of the students while building their confidence.

Redmond said he hopes the rangers will be able to conduct activities at the school at least once a month.

"We are really excited about this," Redmond said. "We haven't even thought about all of the things we would like to do with the rangers. This is an excellent opportunity for us."

Minimizing effects can help children to cope with divorce

Radford University

Divorce is a fact of life for more than 1 million children per year in the United States, said Radford University psychology professor and clinical child psychologist Jeffrey Chase.

"About 40 percent of white children and 75 percent of black children born to married parents will experience their parents' divorce prior to the age of 16," he said.

As devastating as divorce can be for a child, there are certain things you can do to minimize the after effects, said Chase.

• Don't overburden your children by "dumping" on them or expecting them to be an emotional support. They're having a hard enough time coping.

• Don't share more than is appropriate, and don't put down or denigrate your former mate. "Asking them to reject the other parent is like asking them to reject a part of themselves," said Chase. "If possible, try to talk positively about your ex."

Truth is important, but it doesn't have to be explicit. Saying "Your father and I have different views on the importance of trust," is better than saying "Your father is a bad person who sleeps around with cheap women." Venting anger in front of the children is not helpful.

• Don't burden younger children by giving them a lot of choice in the details of the divorce. "A surgeon shouldn't need to ask the patient for instruction in surgical procedure," said Chase. "Instead of giving you peace of mind, that would make you think the surgeon was inept. It's our job to make the best decisions.

About 40 percent of white children and 75 percent of black children born to married parents will experience their parents' divorce

"Younger children especially tend to feel like the divorce is their fault," he said, "and giving them too much say could reinforce the idea that the divorce is their responsibility."

• Try to minimize changes. If possible, it's best to keep the children in the same house and school so they can keep the same friends, the same routines, and have some sense of stability.

• Accept that the children will be upset and be willing to take some of that anger.

• Unless the safety of the children is at stake, don't ask them to spy or tattle on the other parent.

• If there's no possibility of a reconciliation, make that clear.

"Children need to know that divorce is forever and you're not getting back together," said Chase. "Otherwise, they'll hold out false hope that will lead to greater disappointment.

• Except in cases where it would clearly be injurious to the child, try your best to maintain contact between the children and the other parent.

"Sadly, an idyllic childhood is the exception rather than the rule," Chase said. Research into the effects of divorce varies and has changed over time, he said, with recent research indicating more of a negative impact than previously thought.

"Two parents are clearly better than one, but the question is 'Which two?'" said Chase. "It depends on many things, including the intensity of the conflict and whether there's physical or verbal abuse. It's safe to say that if the conflict is extreme, single parenthood is probably better.

However, communication problems that aren't worked on are likely to resurface in later relationships; and most children have a strong, innate desire for their natural parents to stay together," he said. "So if the conflict is minor, it's better to work on the marriage and remain an intact family."

Class Six operating hours — The Class Six store on Main Post will be open from 11 a.m. to 6 p.m. each Sunday throughout December.

Teen dance — Youth Services will have a Christmas teen dance Saturday at Indianhead Center Gym from 8 to 11 p.m. Teens 13 to 18 years who are registered members of Youth Services may bring a guest.

Cover charge is $2 for members and $3 for nonmembers. For more information, call 545-7945.

Leaders needed — The Fort Benning Girl Scouts are seeking leaders and co-leaders to be role models and help out the team.

For more information, call Barbara Singleton at 689-7627.

Fund-raiser — Wilson Elementary School Parent-Teacher Organization will be collecting box tops from General Mills Cereal boxes through February.

The PTO will use the money to purchase special projects for the school. General Mills will pay the school 25 cents for every box top turned in by Feb. 29. The entire flap that says "best if used by" should be turned in, according to coordinators.

If you do not have children at Wilson Elementary School but would like to participate in this project, contact Dorothy White at 682-6902 or Marla Jewell at 689-5354. Arrangements will be made for someone to pick up your box tops.

Engineers to meet — The Society of American Military Engineers will meet Thursday at 11:30 a.m. at the Fort Benning Officers' Club.

Holiday Gift Shop — The Wilson Elementary School Parent-Teacher Organization announces the opening of the Holiday Gift Shop, which is a fund-raising project that allows children to shop for gifts for their parents, grandparents and siblings.

Parents, neighbors and friends may also shop. Prices range from 10 cents to $7 and gifts can be stocking stuffers.

The gift shop will be open from 8:30 a.m. until 3:30 p.m. today, Monday, Wednesday and Thursday. It will be open from 8:30 a.m. until 2:30 p.m. Tuesday. The shop will open Saturday from 9 a.m. to 2 p.m. (Hours are subject to change, and the shop will be open before and after the Christmas Concert Thursday.)

Wilson Elementary School is located in Indianhead Terrace at 112 Lavoie Ave.

For more information, contact Dorothy White (682-6902) or Marla Jewell (689-5354).

Tour of homes —The Fort Benning Officers' Wives' Club has arranged a "tour of homes" for Wednesday from 5 to 9 p.m. The tour will begin with refreshments at Riverside, home to Maj. Gen. John W. Hendrix and his wife, Cheri. The tour will continue on to the historical Mahaffrey House and several other homes in the main post housing area.

Admission is $5, and the tour is open to the Fort Benning community and their guests. Tickets may be purchased at Riverside, beginning at 5 p.m. Wednesday.

Blood drive — The American Red Cross is sponsoring a blood drive at Fort Benning Dec. 15 from 9:30 a.m. to 3 p.m. at Building 4 in Classroom 3.

Town hall meeting — A town hall meeting for residents of McGraw Manor Community will be Wednesday at 7 p.m. at McBride Elementary school, located in Custer Road. Attendance is mandatory for all McGraw Manor area coordinators, assistant area coordinators and building coordinators.

Residents are encouraged to attend. Refreshments will be served.

For more information, call the McGraw Manor Community Life Office at 544-1168.

Carlson Wagonlit Travel — Carlson Wagonlit Travel is offering local bus trips starting in December, scheduling trips to Biloxi, Miss., and to New Orleans.

Interested persons can sign up in advance.

The travel service is also accepting suggestions for other trips in the tri-state area. For more information, call 687-2679.

Puppies for adoption — A litter of seven puppies were born Nov. 8 at the Adopt-A-Pet facility. They will be adoptable Dec. 20 when they are six weeks of age.

At that time, they will be due for their first, in a series of three, vaccinations and a general deworming at the expense of the adopting family, about $10.60.

There are six males (two black, three brown, one white with black spots) and one female (black). The puppies and their mother will be adopted on a first-come, first-served basis only.

The Veterinary Treatment Facility hours on Dec. 20 will be 8 to 11:30 a.m.

Employment assistance — Army Community Service's Family Member Employment Assistance Program is implementing a new service to those seeking employment.

The first and third Wednesday of each month, local area temporary agencies will be available at the Family Unit Network Center, Building 359, from 1:30 to 3:30 p.m.

The agencies will have application forms, and representatives will be available to answer any questions concerning their services. All agencies' services are free.

For more information, call Mark Mills, acting manager, FMEAP, at 545-6969 or 545-5516.

Christmas tree sales — Boy Scouts will be selling a wide variety of Georgia and Wisconsin evergreens through Dec. 23.

The trees will be available at the lot in front of the Post Exchange at the Main Mall seven days a week from 9 a.m. to 9 p.m. Prices range from $8 to $40.

Cookbook sales — The 2nd Battalion, 18th Infantry Regiment, 3rd Brigade, 24th Infantry Division (Mechanized), Family Support Group is raising funds to help families and soldiers of the battalion by selling "The Vanguard Cooking" book.

It contains more than 150 recipes and $3.60 in coupons. Cost is $7.50, and all funds go to the battalion FSG.

For more information, call Connie Zahn at 687-6841 or Stephanie Mello at 689-5284.

Tot Town special hours — Tot Town Child Development Center is open every morning at 6:30.

Also, to help with Christmas shopping, Tot Town offers extended hours Tuesday evenings beginning.

Through Dec. 22, Tot Town will remain open every Friday night. If there are enough requests, the center will open for New Year's Eve.

Reservations are strongly encouraged so the center can be properly staffed and patrons not turned away.

For other group requests or for more information, call 689-8772 or 689-8698.

Food locker — The Army Community Service is soliciting for organizations and activities to conduct food drives for the emergency food locker. ACS provides food to needy families in the community.

The food locker must be replenished to meet continuing daily and holiday requirements.

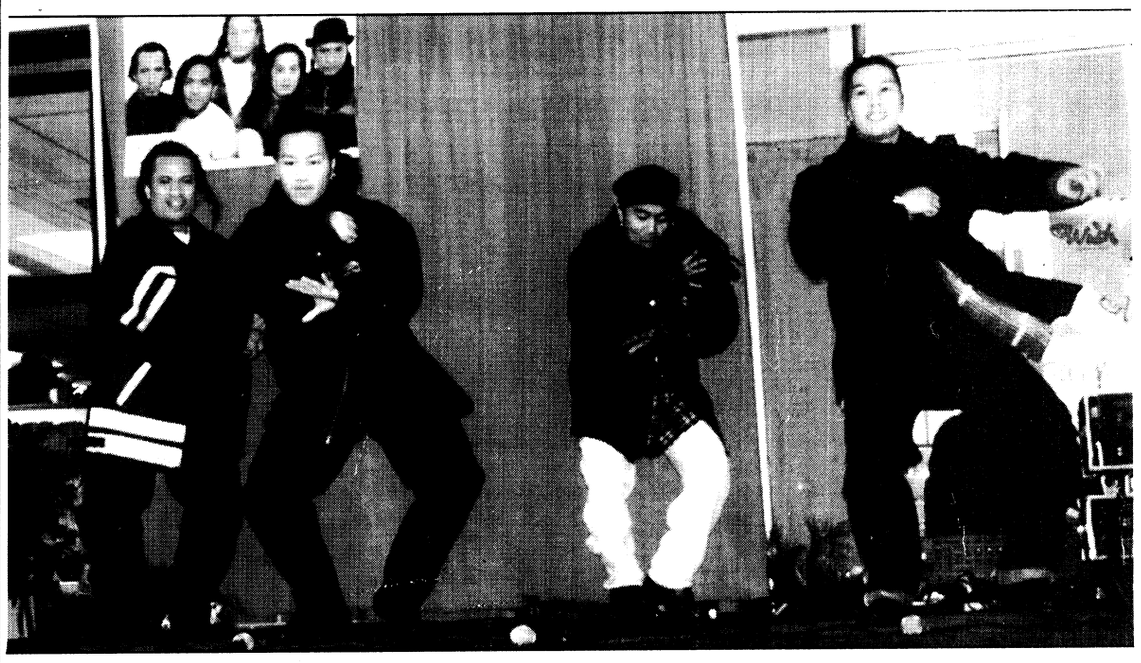
For more information call 545-2536, 545-4043 or 545-7517.

Wives' club — The International Wives' Club invites interested persons to come and visit every first Tuesday of the month at Building 2462, Soldiers' Plaza, for coffee, cake and information.

For more information, call Olga Kelly at 687-6471 or Andrea Pitts at 687-6937.

AER college assistance — Soldiers with college-aged children often wonder how they can afford education costs. Part of the answer may be found from Army Emergency Relief.

AER provides financial assistance through scholarships. To qualify for financial assistance through AER, students must be enrolled, accepted or pending acceptance as a full-time student for the entire academic year in post-secondary educational institutions approved by the U.S. Department of Education.



Scholarships are awarded based on financial need, academic achievement and individual accomplishments.

Applications must be received by March 1 for the upcoming academic year.

For more information, visit the AER, Building 2643, Soldiers' Plaza, 8 a.m. to 5 p.m., Monday through Friday.

Membership cards — Youth Services annual membership cards are available. Membership and registration are required for all children who participate in any YS program or activity or utilize the facilities. The cost per membership will be $20 per year, per family.

For more information, call Lamar Caldwell at 545-3070 or 545-3913.

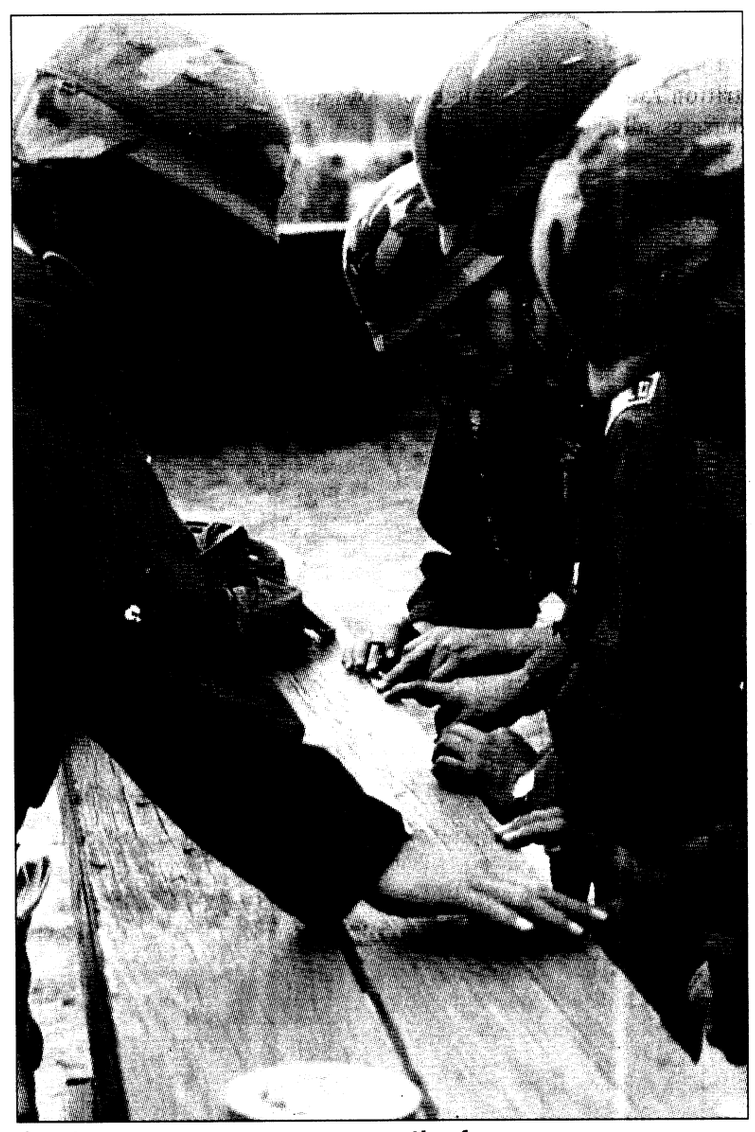
SOA students

learn art of detonation

By Danielle Holliday
School of the Americas

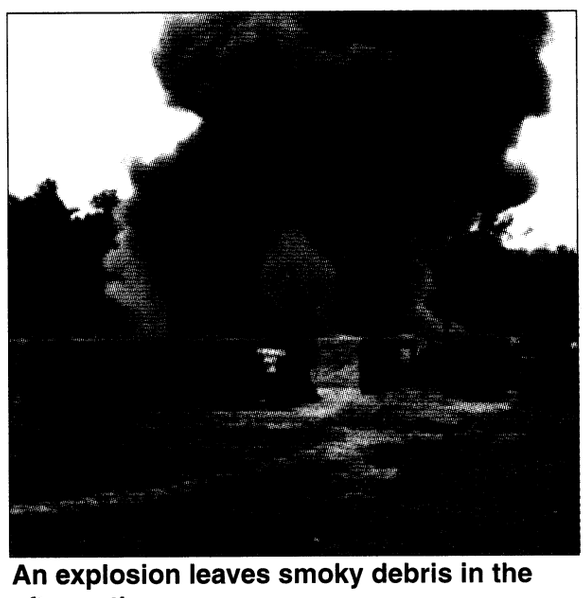


Much too frequently, unsuspecting children and civilians have been severely injured or have lost their lives because of mines remaining from past conflicts in Latin America. To prevent such tragedies, Latin American soldiers attend the annual Countermine Operations Course at the School of the Americans.

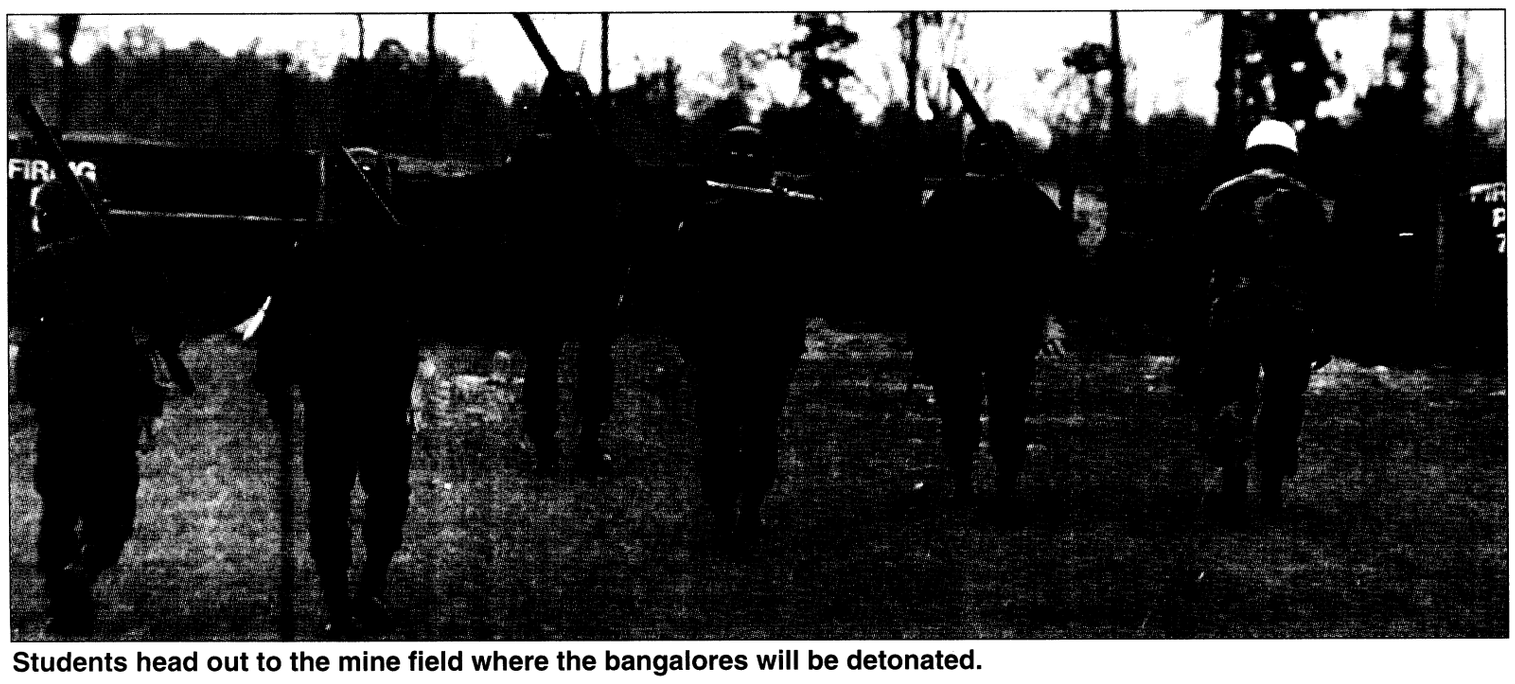
"One of the biggest problems in Latin American countries is leftover mines from previous conflicts," said Staff Sgt. Carlos Montalvo, SOA instructor. "A lot of innocent people die because of these mines. When the students return to their countries, they can help prevent this kind of accident from happening."

During the four-week course, the students learn to identify U.S., Russian and other foreign mines, fuses and booby traps, as well as the various methods of detonation. They are taught to locate these mines by sight, probing and using mine detectors. Students also learn to neutralize mines with marking and clearing techniques, which include the use of explosive charges.

To ensure their countries can clear out the hidden hazards, the students must be able to teach their new skills to their fellow soldiers when they return home. Therefore, countermine operations employ the "train the trainer" concept by including two-week Instructor Training Course — the same class the SOA staff takes to become qualified instructors.



"It's good to teach the students something that you know they're going to take advantage of in their countries," Montalvo said. "I feel proud to know that somehow I play a part in saving lives."



Students use tape to measure the fuses.

SOA instructors Sgt. 1st Class Edwin Rodriguez and Sgt. 1st Class Hernan DeBaron observe as students prepare the bangalores.

An explosion leaves smoky debris in the aftermath.

Students head out to the mine field where the bangalores will be detonated.

SOA cadets navigate at Commando Course

By Judith Ginder
School of the Americas

For nine grueling weeks, they train in stressful conditions with minimal sleep and food, in terrain that varies from mountains to swamps.

Soldiers going through Ranger School? Almost.

The School of the Americas Commando Course is based on the U.S. Army Ranger School and teaches U.S. doctrine, but it is presented entirely in Spanish to soldiers from various Latin American countries.

Held at Ranger training sites here; at Dahlonega, Ga.; and at Eglin Air Force Base, Fla., instruction can be tough on the students, said Sgt. 1st Class Luis Ledesma, SOA special operations instructor.

"This course is very physically demanding," he said. "It's also tough because of the weather conditions this time of year and the lack of sleep for the students."

It's so tough, in fact, that the attrition rate of the Commando Course usually hovers right around 10 percent, said Sgt. 1st Class David Schroer, SOA special operations instructor.

The commando hopefuls spend the first three weeks at Fort Benning before heading up to the mountains of north Georgia. While here, they go on a road march, take a swimming test and prepare for the upcoming adventure practicing knot tying, improving their land navigation skills and by going to the confidence course.

The cold weather doesn't exactly make for a warm welcome to Dahlonega, especially when faced with long, exhausting days and nights filled with training. The mountain phase of the Commando Course takes those skills taught at Fort Benning and puts them to practical use.

Students spend the first few days in a basin at Camp Merrill, using towers and rock formations that are around 90 feet high. They climb, rappel, buddy-rappel and build rope bridges during this time.

Then it's on to Mount Yonah, which is about 45 minutes from Camp Merrill. They hike up the mountain in the early-morning cold, stopping just short of the monstrous sheets of rock that rise to the peak. Here is where the real work begins, where what they've learned really matters.

One by one, they climb the face of the mountain. Teamwork is the key to reaching the top, and the students put their lives in the hands of those securing the ropes.

There are two important aspects to the mountain phase, said Capt. Jeffrey Voigt, special operations officer. Mountaineering gives the soldiers confidence while patrolling the Appalachian Mountains for eight days tests their endurance and stamina.

The next stop is Florida — time for a little rest and relaxation on the sandy beaches of the Sunshine State? Hardly. It's time for the troops to get knee deep into the swamp phase of training.

In the most recent class, they didn't actually get 'knee deep' into the training. The lightning and heavy rains around the Ranger camp at Eglin Air Force Base kept the students from experiencing the swamp and river to their full extent. To protect the students from cold injuries, the training that normally takes place in the river was actually taught on land, with the exception of small boat operations, said Staff Sgt. Jose Quinones, SOA special operations instructor.

"The day that we did small boat operations, the water was a little high and the weather still cold, so we had to do a dry landing that day," Quinones said. Basically that means that instead of getting off the boat in the swamps, they must exit onto higher, dry land.

The commandos-to-be also got some hands-on experience with reptiles. Camp Rudder's 6th Ranger Training Battalion has three or four Florida-certified reptile handlers who give classes for the Ranger School and the Commando Course, said Sgt. 1st Class Moises Olivieri, SOA special operations instructor.

Sgt. 1st Class Rafael Renderos and Sgt. Edgar Ramirez buddy-rappel down a sheet of rock.

The instructors had about 15 types of snakes with them. The students got to see first hand the differences among these poisonous and nonpoisonous snakes, Olivieri said.

The instructors also had four caged alligators and discussed with the commando students the differences between alligators and crocodiles.

Nine weeks and many sore muscles, blisters and lost pounds after arriving at SOA, the troops see their determination pay off.

As of Nov. 22, they wear the tab of commandos.

Fort Huachuca soldiers surf the net

By Jim Caldwell
Huachuca Scout

FORT HUACHUCA, Ariz.— Electronic maintenance trainers at Fort Huachuca are expanding their classrooms to include students' dorms and the World Wide Web.

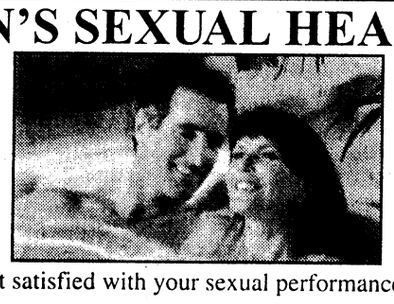
The innovations were first visualized in a "think tank" called the Alexander Project.

"The group meets regularly, or on an as-needed basis and pursues the feasibility of new training ideas," said Larry Scott, a 305th supervisory training instructor. "We brainstorm the procedure or initiative, apply resources available and try to develop applicable training methods and techniques to improve learning procedures for our soldiers."

Named for Alexander Graham Bell, the project is currently working to institute "classroom without walls," modernized "Classroom 2000" and a company barracks renovation program.

According to Capt. Jim Justice, Company B commander, 305th Military Intelligence Battalion, the classroom without walls initiative led to putting classes on the World Wide Web.

"It follows Gen. (William W.) Hartzog's (commander of Training and Doctrine Command) directives on new distributive training, technology and equipment initiatives," Justice said. "It also falls into line with what the Intelligence Center is trying to accomplish in future training."



Justice said soldiers in the field can enter the web and access lessons for sustainment training, maintenance training updates and professional development updates.

A help desk is also on the World Wide Web. Within the help desk is an electronic warfare maintainer's resource page for soldiers maintaining aviation, tactical and strategic systems. They can use this page for troubleshooting assistance.

A soldier can go online, describing his problems on a form on the help desk page. School instructors will promptly give advice to the soldier.

"Eventually we hope to have computers in individual rooms," Justice said. "Although training development is resource-intensive, it has the potential to pay tremendous dividends in the information age and is needed to stay competitive.

Prepare for Christ during Advent

By Robert Blessing
2nd Battalion, 69th Armor

This is the beginning of the church year, the time to light the wreath with four candles, bring out the purple colored linens and fast.

Advent is sometimes misinterpreted as being only traditions, trees, colors and hunger. These are all parts of Advent but not the core.

The readings for the first Sunday in Advent call us to a time of preparation — to wait with expectation for celebrating the birth of Jesus. God comes in the living flesh as well as in the spirit.

God, who wants to know us and for us to know him so much, comes in the flesh to meet us. This is called incarnation. Advent is the time of the year when we prepare to have a party for Jesus, to rejoice in God who is becoming real for all of us. When we prepare in Advent, we reflect upon his love for us and prepare our lives to meet with him. As he spoke through John the Baptist, he speaks to us now.

"This is he who was spoken of through the prophet Isaiah: 'A voice of one calling in the desert. Prepare the way for the Lord, make straight paths for him." (Isaiah 40)

We get our lives right, in preparation to meet him. We straighten up our act, and get things in line for we are soon to meet with him.

So this celebration is not just for the past. It is also for self-examination in the expectation of his coming in glory to judge the living and the dead.

Advent looks to the past but draws us to the future as we look for Jesus' second coming. You see, we are not just a people of the past but those who look forward to what Jesus is doing now and in the future. And this influences us in the present as to how we live and follow our Lord.

reflections

The prayer for the first Sunday in Advent reads, "Almighty God, give us grace that we may cast away the work of darkness, and put upon us the armour of light, now in the time of this mortal life, in which thy Son Jesus Christ came to visit us in great humility; that in the last days, when he shall come again in his glorious majesty to judge both the quick and the dead, we may rise to the life immortal, through him who liveth and reigneth with thee and the Holy Ghost, now and forever. Amen." ("The Book of Common Prayer")

Celebrate Immaculate Conception Sunday

By Robert Pamula
29th Infantry Regiment

On Sunday, the solemnity of the Immaculate Conception is celebrated by those of the Orthodox and Catholic faiths.

The feast is dedicated to Mary of Nazareth, mother of Jesus, mother of God. It is one of the most important feasts in the Orthodox and Catholic traditions, and has been celebrated since the seventh century.

As with many concepts in our Christian theology, this teaching cannot be found explicitly in the Scripture, but the doctrine is there.

For example, millions of faithful around the world believe in the doctrine of the Holy Trinity. There is no word trinity in the Bible, but the doctrine is there. It is the same with the teaching of incarnation, that God became man. Millions of believers would agree to that teaching, but there is no word incarnation in the Bible.

We use a similar means of theological interpretation when referring to the doctrine of Immaculate Conception. What is the spiritual meaning of that teaching?

Immaculate Conception means that Mary, Mother of Jesus, was free from original sin, that is, the sin that our first parents committed in the Garden of Eden and thus is inherited by all humankind.

In this doctrine, Mary was the only human who ever lived who was exempted from that sin. God did that because she became the mother of his son, Jesus Christ. God prepared a place for himself in the womb of a most pure virgin.

Immaculate Conception is then a mystery of an exemptlon from original sin in the life of Mary, the mother of God. That's why, according to the official church teachings, Mary didn't die, and her body was never a subject of corruption. She is our loving mother.

Dec. 8, 1854, the doctrine of Immaculate Conception was solemnly defined by Pope Pius IX.

In 1858, Mary appeared to a poor little girl named Bernardette Subirou, in the village of Lourdes in Southern France, where she declared, "I am the Immaculate Conception."

reflections

Subsequently, Saint Bernardette saw Mary on several occasions. Many miracles have occurred in Lourdes every year since then, and the apparitions greatly contributed to the progress of the doctrine of Immaculate Conception. The village is visited annually now by some 5,000,000 believers.

At the beginning of this century, the Virgin Mary appeared to a great mystic, Sister Lucia of Fatima, and allegedly stated, "God will grant every request if the person attends Holy Mass at noon on the Feast of Immaculate Conception. There is only one condition," Mary went on to say, "Every prayer will be granted on that day if it is God's will."

Sunday, Catholics will again thank God for the gift of Mary to his church. Everyone is invited to attend Masses for this celebration at noon or at 7 p.m. at the Main Post Catholic Chapel.

chapel notes

Reconciliation service — Catholics who would like to go to confession before Christmas are invited to a Reconciliation Service Monday at 7 p.m. at Regimental Chapel on Sand Hill.

FAITH HOLIDAY RACE

More than 1,100 runners set the pace

Photos by Lori Egan

Mickey Barnes hugs daughter Samantha, 7, who finished the one-mile race in less than 9 minutes. Samantha finished 12th overall in the 1- to 8-year-old category.

James Chapman starts the five-mile course, which he finished in 25:46. Adam Taylor, 11, participated in the one-mile wheelchair race and finished it in 11 minutes.

More than 90 runners take off for the five-mile run that began at Faith Middle School. Members of the 1st Battalion (Airborne), 507th Infantry Regiment, ran the five-mile course earlier in the morning.

Superintendent of Fort Benning Schools Dell Karr congratulates Adam Tyler, 11, for setting a course record.

Runners set records at Faith Holiday Race

The 17th annual Faith Holiday Race saw three course records set in the two-mile and five-mile runs and in the one-mile wheelchair race Saturday.

Anthony Lane improved his last year's course record by 24 seconds, setting a new record by running the two-mile course in 9-minutes, 29 seconds.

Sam Bobbitt ran the five-mile course in 25:28, beating the old record set in 1990 by seven seconds.

Adam Tyler, 11, set a new record for the one-mile wheelchair race. He cut 2:15 seconds off the old record set in 1990. He crossed the finish line in 11 flat.

More than 1,100 runners participated in the runs, with 230 children completing the one-mile run, 92 runners completing the two-mile course and about 800 completing the five-mile run.

"Members of the 1st Battalion (Airborne), 507th Infantry Regiment, ran the course earlier in the morning," said Susan Emerson, race director. "They have supported the race for several years. I think they have sort of adopted us as their cause, and we really appreciate their support."

"It was fun and the whole battalion was running the five-mile run," said Jadey Dunn, Company C, 1st Bn. (Abn.), 507th Inf. Regt.

"We try to involve the community, schools and troops," Emerson said. We have families running together. I love to see parents running with their young children in the one-mile race."

Ryan Barham, 6, ran the one-mile with his father, Jeff Barham, in 10:33.

"He's the reason we're running," said Barham. "It was Ryan's idea."

The overall winner of the one-mile (1- to 8-year-old category) was Courtney Kostich, who crossed the finish line in 7:35.

After she finished the one-mile, she ran the two-miler with her father, Ted. Her whole family participated in the race. Younger brother, Teddy, 4, finished second in his age category.

"The Faith Race is usually a really good race because it sums up the cross country season," said Katie Mahoney, a member of St. Anne's cross country team.

The Fort Benning schools that had 10 percent of their student population participate in the runs were recognized during the award ceremony.

"We had great participation while promoting physical fitness and family participation with our students," Emerson said. "It was a super day."

Army names Athlete of the Year

TRADOC News Service

ALEXANDRIA, Va. — A gold medalist at this year's Pan American Games, Buenos Aires, Argentina has been selected as the Army Female Athlete of the Year.

Staff Sgt. Tonia Y. Stubbs is a defensive specialist on the U.S. National Handball Team.

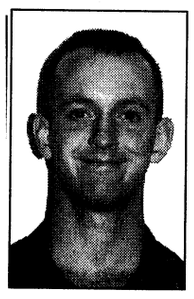
The military policewoman, assigned to Fort McPherson, Ga., Law Enforcement Activity, is a member of the Army's World Class Athlete Program.

Stubbs, 32, from Warren, Ohio, made a rocket transition from basketball to handball. Before being assigned to the national team training in Atlanta, she led the All-Army basketball team to five of six Armed Forces championships from 1989 to 1994. In 1991 and 1993, the 5-foot, 11-inch Army forward was selected to the first team All-American AAU squad.

Following the 1994 basketball season, the Army sports staff talked to her about trying to make the U.S. National Women's Handball Team. She tried out and transitioned quickly onto the team.

U.S. Olympic coach, Class Hellgren said Tonia Stubbs came to us with no experience and in one year, selected her as one of the team captains.

"This is phenomenal. If the Olympics were held today, she would definitely be a member of the U.S. Olympic Team," hellgren said.



"The Army has given me many opportunities to excel as an athlete. I feel this is my last opportunity to make the Olympics," Stubbs said.

Stubbs has done tours of duty in Fort Meade, Md., Mainz, Germany, and Fort Monmouth, N.J. She has a master's degree from the University of Miami, Ohio, in physical education.

Understand your auto insurance, save $$$

National Association of Independent Insurers

Most people know what they get when they pay their mortgage, utility and grocery bills. But few consumers understand exactly what their auto insurance premium pays for.

More importantly, many policyholders don't know if their coverage limits are adequate to pay their medical bills and repair costs in the event of an accident.

"Basically, auto insurance pays for two things — repairing people and repairing cars," said Lowell R. Beck, president of the National Association of Independent Insurers. "Investing a little time to better understand your auto insurance policy can pay off in terms of increased coverage and lower insurance premiums."

Below are descriptions of the components that generally make up an auto insurance policy.

Bodily injury liability

Bodily injury liability pays the medical bills of those injured in an auto accident in which you are at fault.

For example, if you hit another vehicle and the driver suffered a broken leg, the bodily injury coverage of your insurance policy would cover the other driver's medical and rehabilitation expenses.

Likewise, if you were injured in an accident that was not your fault, you would collect from the other driver's bodily injury coverage.

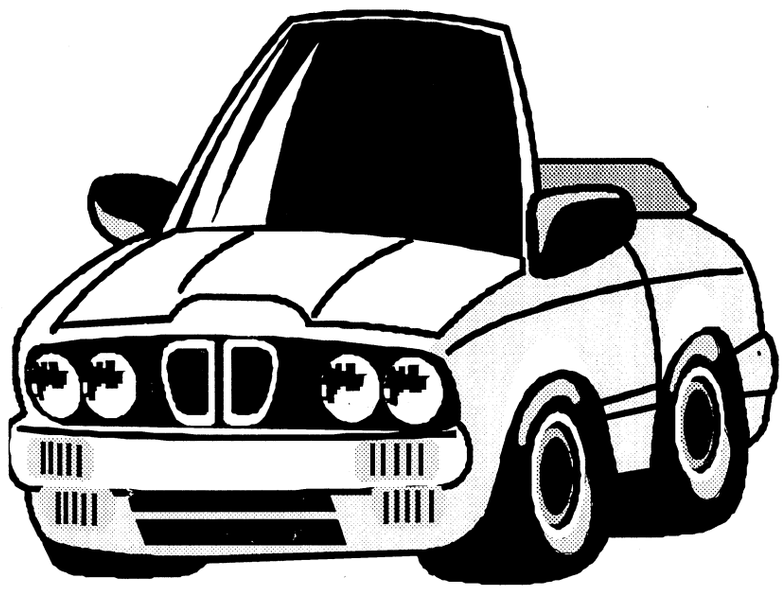
In states with no-fault insurance laws, policyholders' claims are paid by their own insurance company, no matter who is at fault in an accident.

No-fault coverage typically pays for your medical expenses, lost wages and incidental replacement costs. By limiting lawsuits to only those accidents in which there are serious injuries, no-fault laws speed delivery of claims payments to policyholders and reduce the number of frivolous lawsuits.

Most states have set minimum "financial responsibility limits" or minimum amounts of liability coverage that each person must carry in case of a car accident.

Typical amounts of financial responsibility for bodily injury liability range from $10,000 to $100,000 and will cover one or more people depending on the situation.

Uninsured,underinsured motorist coverage



Even though auto insurance is mandatory in most states, chances are one in seven that if you are in an accident it will be with a driver who is uninsured or underinsured.

Uninsured motorist coverage will protect you in the event that the other guy can't pay your medical bills. Underinsured motorist coverage fills the gap when someone doesn't have enough insurance to pay all your medical bills.

For example, if a person who is responsible for your injuries has bodily injury liability insurance of only $20,000, but your medical losses total $50,000, underinsured motorist coverage can help pay the difference between your injury costs and the other person's insurance coverage.

Collision, comprehensive

Collision coverage pays for damage to your car as a result of a collision with another vehicle or object. Comprehensive coverage pays for other types of non-collision damage such as vandalism, theft, hail and fire.

Towing, rental car

If you have an older car, buying towing insurance is important. Many people like the security it provides.

If you have a newer car, and want to save money, towing coverage may not be needed.

Auto clubs often provide towing services to their members. Even some car manufacturers provide this service to new car buyers.

Check to see if you have it before you buy duplicate coverage. Rental car coverage, which is fairly inexpensive, provides a rental car, up to a certain dollar amount, while your car is in the shop.

Money saving tips

There are many ways to control the cost of auto insurance. First, shop around. Investigate the coverage options and premiums from several companies.

Second, see if any of the many discounts available are applicable to you, such as the good student discount; the good driving record discount; multiple policies discount; anti-theft devices discount; senior citizen discount; anti-lock brake discount and air bag discount.

You can also save money by increasing your deductible. The higher the deductible, the lower your premium will be.

A note of caution — it's important to calculate the amount you can afford to pay when faced with an unexpected claim.

A lower premium may look good when it's time to pay the premium, but if there is a claim, make sure you're able to afford the deductible.

Breast cancer is killer

By Susan Allen
DeWitt U.S. Army Community Hospital

Look at the facts, and it is difficult to imagine women not taking advantage of the established tests and procedures developed to help detect breast cancer.

The bottom line to women is this: Breast cancer is a killer.

Although experts say there is a 92 percent, five-year survival rate if the cancer has not spread after treatment, there is only a 70 percent, five-year survival rate if the cancer has spread to nearby organs.

And, just a 19-percent survival rate if the cancer has spread throughout the body.

There is no magic immunization against breast cancer. Lifestyle and family history do play a part in determining individual risk factors, but there is no single factor that promises protection. The only option women have in successfully fighting breast cancer is early detection.

The number of women diagnosed with breast cancer is increasing. One in eight American women will develop breast cancer in her lifetime.

The death rate, however, has remained fairly stable over the past 50 years because of early detection and treatment of breast cancer.

The American Cancer Society and many of the nation's leading health organizations recommend women employ a three-step, early detection program against breast cancer. This program includes regular mammograms, clinical breast exams and monthly self-breast exams.

Women are encouraged to obtain a baseline mammograph at age 35 and should begin regular mammogram screening by their 40th year. Until age 49, women should have a mammogram every one or two years. Since more than 75 percent of all breast cancers occur in women older than 50, annual mammograms are recommended for that age group.

Researchers have not yet been able to stop the onset of breast cancer. They don't even fully understand what role heredity, environment, lifestyle and diet play in the cancer scenario. But, they do know that women do not need to become a fatal statistic.

586th joins Operation Joint Endeavor

Troops deploy to Bosnia in support of peacekeeping mission

By Lisa M. Hibbert
Bayonet staff writer

Members of the 586th Engineer Company (Assault Float Bridge), 36th Engineer Group took to the air Wednesday as they journeyed to Germany en route to Bosnia.

The 586th, commanded by Capt. Gregory A. Gondeck, is equipped to haul heavy equipment and conduct bridging operations.

After a Tuesday night deployment ceremony in Audie Murphy gym, the C-5A aircrafts took off in three shifts, 2, 5 and 11 a.m., transporting the soldiers and their equipment.

Brig. Gen. Robert T. Clark, post deputy commanding general, delivered remarks to the soldiers of the 586th Eng. Co. on behalf of Maj. Gen. John W. Hendrix, post commanding general.

Clark told the troops that they should feel honored to participate in Operation Joint Endeavor because they are uniquely qualified for the mission.

"Peace like war succeeds only where there is a will to enforce it," Clark said.

After the ceremony, the troops rushed out of the gym, trying to have a few private moments alone with their families before reporting to the company.

Pamela Wade, wife of Warrant Officer Willie Wade did not have anyone but came anyway.

"My husband left Dec. 3 for Bosnia," Wade said. "I feel as a part of me is missing. We're very close — we have always spent a lot of time together. Today (Tuesday) is his birthday.

"I feel really uncertain about the mission because I don't know how long my husband is going to be gone," Wade said.

The 586th Eng. Co. began training for the mission more than a week ago by firing M-16 rifles, nuclear, biological and chemical training and practicing loading equipment.

Saturday, while the unit was practice firing at Simpson Range, Representative Sanford Bishop came to the range to speak to the troops and give them words of encouragement.

"The troops are being asked to carry out a mission that is very serious," Bishop said. "I came here because I felt it was important to let them know that the people who represent them care about and support them.

"I wanted to come because I represent Fort Benning and their families." Bishop said.

Staff Sgt. Raymond Roberts, said that he was glad Bishop came to talk to the unit.

"He came out here to tell us that he appreciates us," Roberts said. "It made me feel good that he took the time to do that."

Col. Gregory C. Camp, post chief of staff, said that he was glad Bishop spoke to the 586th.

"He's a very busy man, but he felt that it was important to take time out of his schedule to talk to the solders," Camp said.

At this time the length of Operation Joint Endeavor is unknown. During CBS's 60 minutes show Sunday evening, President Bill Clinton talked about the mission.

"We are not going to Bosnia to become an occupying force," Clinton said "And we will leave even if peace has not occurred.

"Our goals are to supervise the separation of the armies, maintain a cease fire and provide a safe environment," Clinton said.

Going to Bosnia will not be the first deployment mission for the company. Over the years, the unit has contributed to operations around the world.

As a show of support, Columbus officials scheduled a Community Prayer Service on behalf of U.S. troops who will be assigned to the peacekeeping mission in Bosnia. The service will be Monday at 12:30 p.m. at the Plaza Level of the Government Center.

"United States military personnel, including a significant number from Fort Benning, soon will be serving in a peacekeeping mission in Bosnia," Columbus Mayor Bobby Peters said. "While we may have differing perspectives on the advisability of the mission, I feel sure we all agreed that the troops assigned to this troubled part of the world deserve our support and prayers."

The mayor and members of the clergy representing various religious communities in Columbus, will lead this service.

The service will be open to the public.

Sonia Martinez sheds a tear while Cathie Leeman, and a soldier try to comfort her as soldiers from the 586th Engineer Company (Assault Float Bridge) deploy. .As the plane left Lawson Army Airfield Wednesday at 11 a.m., soldiers and family members watched as their loved ones were carried away by the Air Force C-5A aircraft.

Post begins mobilization operations

USAIC Public Affairs Office

In support of Operation Determined Effort, Fort Benning recently initiated deployment processing of individuals who are going to Joint or NATO assignments or who will backfill units in Europe and Bosnia.

Soldier readiness processing covers many areas such as documenting family care plans and wills, DNA and HIV testing, and issuing identification cards.

Fort Benning was recently designated as an individual deployment site and a mobilization station by Department of the Army. As an IDS, the installation is responsible for processing and deploying all non-unit related personnel in all branches of the service. Those are military service personnel, who are not deploying as a unit, but will fill vacancies in units in Germany or Bosnia or be assigned to a Joint or NATO station. The IDS will also process Department of Defense civilians, civilian contractors, Red Cross workers, and AAFES workers for deployment.

The IDS is currently operated by active duty soldiers who coordinate every aspect of deploying an individual from housing to training to issuing theater specific equipment to certifying the soldier readiness processing in support of this operation. The 347th Personnel Replacement Battalion, an Illinois-based U.S. Reserve unit, is scheduled to assume this mission.

Army sets new standard for ACOE

Directorate of Resource Management

Fort Benning now has a new criteria to follow in order to attempt a "three-peat" of the Commander in Chief's Army Community of Excellence Award.

The criteria, known as the Army's Performance Improvement Criteria, has expanded the ACOE process to include the missions and functions of the entire installation.

Beginning in April 1995, the Department of the Army adopted the Malcolm Baldridge Award Criteria as the Army's Performance Improvement Criteria.

The Baldridge Criteria is the standard for world-class quality. It is a comprehensive and integrated management framework to manage change. It allows an organization to assess the processes used to achieve quality products and services, to see how well the processes are being used at every level of the organization, and to capture the results of its effort to change.

APIC, which is based on the Baldridge Criteria, focuses on self assessment — to identify strengths and weaknesses in planning and execution with emphasis on customer satisfaction. APIC is used, to evaluate and assess communities as a tool for installation management, and to provide for continuous process improvement.

The APIC provides for measurement and comparison of seven major categories throughout Fort Benning: leadership, information and analysis, strategic planning, human resource development and management, process management, operational results, and customer focus and satisfaction. APIC

VALUES

Maj. Gen. John W. Hendrix wants Fort Benning to be a mission-oriented, value-based, customer-focused organization. He believes that such an organization is characterized by the following values:

Pride
Values-based Customer-focused
People performing to standard
All treated with respect, fairness and dignity
Committed to continuous improvement
Encourages and rewards innovation
Teamwork
People know expectations
ALL are empowered and act
Information flow — communication
Everyone abides by the rules
Persuasive positive attitude
Build safety into all operations

CFC campaign ends

By Richard Brill
Special to The Bayonet©

The Combined Federal Campaign, the yearly pledge drive that allows federal employees a chance to donate to selected charities, officially ended Nov. 30.

Capt. Doug Kelly, assistant to the garrison commander, said legitimately late pledge forms may still be turned in.

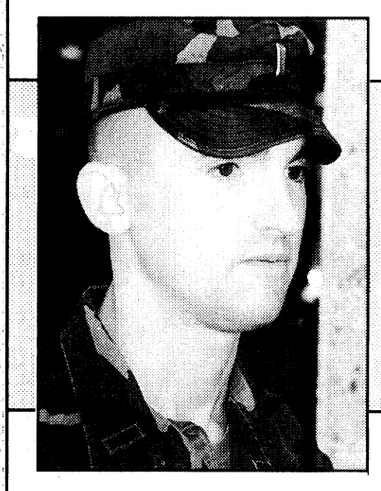
"The hurricane and the furlough put a lot of people behind so we are still accepting late pledges," he said.

According to Kelly, the post gave approximately $425,000, with approximately 10,000 out of the post's 25,300 population contributing. The campaign goal was $500,000.

"As a post, we gave more this year than last, even with a smaller population this year" Kelly said. "Last year's end total was about $383,000. We also had about a thousand more participants this year."

Kelly credited the success of the campaign to excellent command support.

Leadership and teamwork were evident from the beginning at the Commanding General's kickoff ceremony.



"Thanks goes to all of those whose time and hard work made the campaign a success, including volunteers, unit project officers and key persons," Kelly said. "These are the people who did the hard work of soliciting and collecting pledges and keeping everything going."

"The command extends its deep thanks to all who participated, Kelly said.

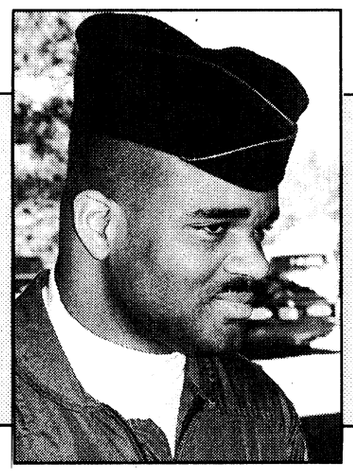
"The commanding general is also very pleased that the 5001 Fund, the CFC fund in which all donations go to improve Fort Benning programs, services and quality of life, received more money this year than last."

VARIOUS VOICES

How important is the job of a child-care professional?

1st Lt. Pete Fedak, Company B, 1st Battalion 19th Infantry Regiment — "It's a really important job, and it's a lot harder than people think."

Alice L. Hatfield, family member (deceased) — "I worked at Tot Town for 10 years, and I think it's highly important to give the kids the love they deserve."



Reginald Cardwell, retired Spec. 6— "It's important because kids need to be taken care of while the parents are gone."

Mildred Blackwell, family member— "It's important because they are the ones who are molding our children."

Mavie Vaughn, Department of Civilian Personell — "It's an important job because they are dealing with our children's future. I think children should be taught more about the Lord."

Capt. Marc C. Branche, 41st Aero Sqadron, Fort Pope, N.C. — "The people you trust your kids to should be the people you trust most."

Respect and admiration should be given to Child-Care professionals

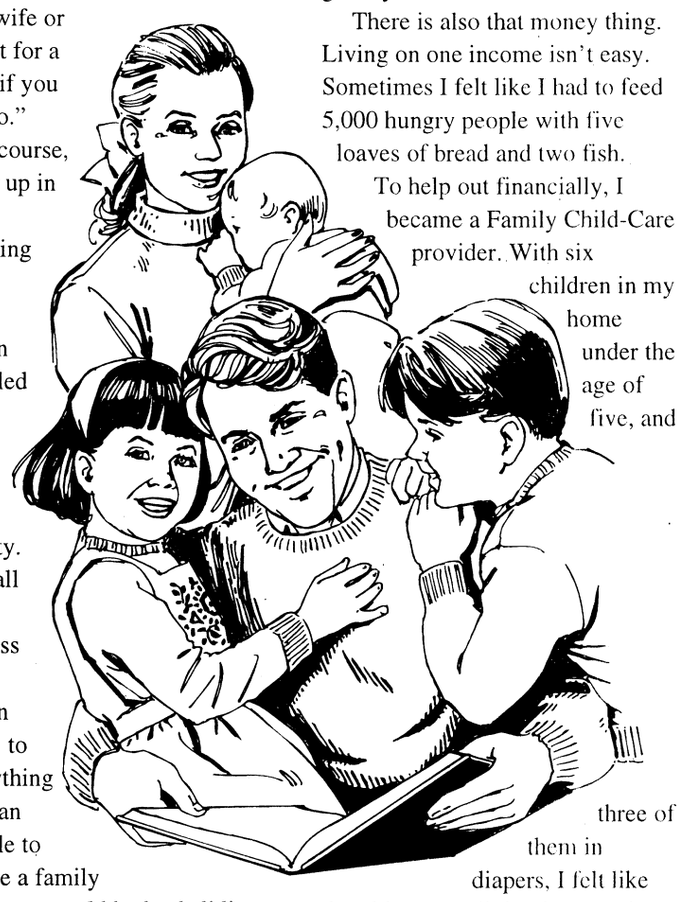
By Shannon Day
Special to The Bayonet©

Shannon Day Believes that child care professionals deserve more respect.



I am continually amazed by the lack of respect we, as a society, show those people to whom we entrust our nation's most valuable resource — our children. This group of heroes includes stay-at-home moms and dads, day-care workers, family child-care providers and teachers.

commentary

Before I had a child and was still in the Army, I remember feeling a little rush of superiority whenever anyone mentioned the term 'dependent.' As soon as I heard that word, into my mind leaped a picture of a fat housewife in a bathrobe, sitting in her living room, which is littered with toys and dirty dishes, munchin' on potato chips while watching soaps and talk shows. I could almost hear children with snotty noses quarreling in the background. The scene was only occasionally interrupted by a loud threat made by the mother to the children.

I think this idea was reinforced by the fact that most little girls growing up today are told they can be anything they want to be — doctors, lawyers or even soldiers. I can never remember anyone saying to me "you can even be a housewife or babysit for a living if you want to."

Of course, I grew up in an era following one in which women struggled for equality. After all of the progress these women made, to do anything less than struggle to balance a family and career would be backsliding.

This is one reason I never planned to be a stay-at-home mom. According to society, I wouldn't be living up to my full potential as a woman and mother in the '90s.

Then my son, Christian was born. Surprise! Baby reality! Spit-up on my shirt and occasionally urinated on my leg. Taking care of a baby is hard work, and as the child gets older, parenting doesn't get any easier.

There is also that money thing. Living on one income isn't easy. Sometimes I felt like I had to feed 5,000 hungry people with five loaves of bread and two fish.

To help out financially, I became a Family Child-Care provider. With six children in my home under the age of five, and three of them in diapers, I felt like the old woman living in a combat boot with so many children, I wanted to pull all my hair out and chop my diaper-changing table into bits. Amidst this war-torn battle zone I was supposed to be doing constructive activities with the kids while serving U.S. Department of Agriculture-approved snacks and meals. That means I had to cook, also.

It didn't take me long to come to the conclusion that being a child-care worker has to be one of the hardest jobs in the world. You have to have the patience of a saint, nerves of steel, eyes in the back of your head and be quick as lightning. It makes soldiering look like a stroll through the park in May, and you get paid less.

After four months of my home being turned into a daily battle zone, I decided to go back to being a stay-at-home mom.

I love spending time with my son. I enjoy having time to read books to him, playing in his sand-box with him and preparing healthy meals.

I know that even if the world says I should be doing more with my life, I look at how happy and secure my son is, and know I have one of the most important jobs on earth. I am contributing to the development of a healthy well-adjusted human being and to the next generation.

So, for all of the people out there who take time to teach children to tie shoes, play with their dolls and dump trucks and dry their tears, give yourself a big pat on the back. You deserve it.

545-boss

Dial 545-BOSS is the commander's action line for soldiers, family members and civilians to call when they have problems or complaints that can't be resolved elsewhere.

While it is not a substitute for the chain of command or for agencies established to provide assistance, the line offers another means of communication between Fort Benning's community and commanders.

The Bayonet features some of the calls that may benefit other members of the Fort Benning community.

Call: The caller said the computer that has the federal jobs listings has been out of service for about three months now. This is very inconvenient for soldiers getting out of the Army because they can't get access to the listing for jobs, therefore cannot apply Directorate of Military Personnel Adjutant General response: The Federal jobs listing is a product of the Transition Bulletin Board that is maintained by the Job Assistance Center as a courtesy to personnel.getting out of the military Sept. 27, under Work Order 1319 DOIM reset the parameters on the software, which we assumed fixed the problem. Nov. 13, we again contacted DOIM with a new work order. Until our technical experts can resolve why the computer is down again, we must refer soldiers to the federal jobs listing maintained at the Directorate of Civilian Personnel. We regret this inconvenience, but it is our only solution until DOIM has a chance to look at the computer. Federal jobs on the DCP listing are identical to those on the TBB. There should be no reason for a soldier to be delayed in applying for a position identified on either listing.

Call: The caller said the area around 850 C and 856 A Arrowhead Road looks like a ghetto with trash, boxes and packing material cluttering up the landscape and broken down cars with flat tires in the parking lot. She said this is not up to the standard of the U.S. Army.

Director of Public Works response: The post recycle center was alerted to pick up the trash. The Military Police were informed of possible abandoned vehicles. A re-inspection on Nov. 15, verified that the boxes were removed and no vehicles that appeared abandoned could be seen. The area was policed by the residents. The items were verified as completed by the Family Housing inspector.

Call: The caller said for the second week in a row, there were not any movies suitable for children shown at the post theater. She said there should be at least a matinee or some movie for small children shown on the weekend.

Army Air Force Exchange Service response:

AAFES had to drop the children's matinee program several years ago because of lack of suitable G rated films. Typically, less than 5 percent of all movies released to the theatrical market are G rated. Only two new G rated movies were available for scheduling to AAFES theaters so far this year.

AAFES schedules all suitable family-oriented movies available for showing on regular film circuits worldwide.

The motion picture industry recognized a need for more family oriented movies and increased production of that type of movie in 1994. While the number of G rated movies will remain low, more family-oriented PG movies are being made. These will be scheduled whenever possible.

CG requests safety during 3D month

We will soon gear up for the holiday season. Soldiers, civilian employees and families will travel many miles to be with friends and family.

National Drunk and Drugged Driving Prevention month puts national focus on the hazards of driving. All motor vehicle drivers are asked to turn their "Lights on for Life" today to call attention to the tragedies caused by drunk and drugged driving.

The risks associated with driving under the influence not only includes fines and imprisonment, but can also result in serious injury.

During the holiday season, follow these rules if you or your friends drink alcoholic beverages.:

•Use a sober, reliable designated driver

•If you drink, return home in a taxi (Safety Cab, 323-0110)

• The only belt for the road is the seat belt!

Alcohol and Drug Abuse Prevention and Control, 545-4993, will provide instructor support during this high risk period.

Also, Traffic Section, Law Enforcement Division, 545-7241 will help in providing traffic safety classes.

I wish everyone a safe and joyous holiday season.

Operation Holiday to kick off activities

By Richard Brill
Special to The Bayonet©

Operation Holiday, that annual Christmastime event designed to put spring in the step of soldiers who find themselves left on Fort Benning for the season, is ready to begin spreading its brand of holiday cheer.

The celebration kicks off Dec. 22 with the mayors of Columbus and Phenix City and Fort Benning officials and soldiers at the Columbus Government Center Plaza at 9 a.m.

Operation Holiday is sponsored by the Association of the United States Army with donations from local individuals and organizations.

For 16 years, Operation Holiday has offered soldiers a variety of free activities, including musical entertainment, tickets and transportation to college and professional sporting events and post activities such as a bowling tournament that begins Dec. 20.

"We are preparing for this year's activities," said Jim Gallagher, executive vice president, Association of the United States Army, Chattahoochee Valley-Fort Benning Chapter.

"There is the possibility of soldiers being deployed to Fort Benning over the holidays prior to being sent to Bosnia so we are working to come up with extra tickets in case they are needed," he said.

According to Gallagher, transportation to and from various events will be provided as well as the cost of admission.

However, any additional items, such as refreshments at sporting events, must be paid for by the soldier, he said.

The recently finalized list of activities will be available from unit representatives, Gallagher said. Soldiers can sign up for the events through their unit representatives.

He encouraged soldiers to sign up early since space is limited for some events. Gallagher also reminded soldiers that Operation Holiday is intended primarily for those who cannot go home for the holidays, who are separated from their families or who have no transportation.

"The largest group of participants will probably come from the Infantry Training Brigade,"he said.

Gallagher expects the Atlanta Hawks basketball games and the Peach Bowl to be among this year's favorites.

Soldiers should also respond well to the talent show at the Kelley Hill Recreation Center featuring 1994 Miss Georgia Pageant winner Andrea Krahn and other past local pageant winners, he said.

According to Gallagher, Operation Holiday is not supported out of AUSA's general budget, but it is supported entirely from donations and fund-raisers.

"As in years past, the communities of Columbus and Phenix City have continued to be a tremendous help to the soldiers on Fort Benning," he said.

"Since 1980, Operation Holiday has continued to promote meaningful activities for soldiers who can't be home with their families during the holidays," Gallagher said. "This year is no exception."

ACOE: Post readies for yearly competition is a dynamic, living process with the objective to ensure continuous improvement throughout Fort Benning.

"With the advent of APIC, the first question that one may ask is, 'What is happening to ACOE and Total Army Quality?' or, 'Has APIC replaced TAQ?' The answer is, 'No, TAQ is alive and well,'" said Pat Porter, management assistant, Total Army Quality and ACOE, Directorate of Resource Management.

In the past, ACOE primarily addressed quality within base operations.

APIC is the measure used to show you how good you are at what you do and to help identify opportunities for improvement in your continuous journey to quality. APIC involves everyone, Porter said.

The implementation of APIC required Fort Benning leadership to identify key processes throughout the installation. This was accomplished from May 31 to June 1 at the Senior Leadership Workshop and seminar. The five key processes identified and their proponents were: infantry training (Directorate of Training), infantry doctrine, infantry future, force projection, and base operations.

From June 1 to Oct. 16, units and activities prepared their input for Fort Benning's 1996 ACOE award application using Department of the Army guidance and the APIC. The Fort Benning ACOE Office consolidated and prepared the application packet and the award application was forwarded to Headquarters TRADOC on Oct. 30.

TRADOC notified Fort Benning Nov. 22 that our award application had been selected as one of five to be forwarded to Headquarters DA for further evaluation, she said. The applications of Forts Knox, Sill, Leavenworth, and Leonardwood were also selected.

"We are in the 'fight' to achieve the distinct honor of winning the ACOE CINC award for the third consecutive year," Porter said. "This is great news, but we are still a long way from winning. There is much to be done and very little time to do it."

There are 55 Army installations competing worldwide for an on-site visit by the DA evaluation team. Only 32 will be selected for this honor.

"We fully expect Fort Benning to be selected for an on-site visit by this team during February 1996 to validate our award application," she said.

In order to prepare for the competition Fort Benning created the Fort Benning Performance Improvement Plan. The FBPIP is a long-range, strategic planning document — it is a roadmap to the future. It will encompass the current Installation Management Action Plan. The application of APIC will provide, a tool for diagnosing existing key processes, a means for determining areas for improvement, a framework for comprehensive strategic planning, and a vehicle to carry any organization along the road to continuous improvement.

"The ACOE Office needs your help," Porter said. "Maj. Gen. John W. Hendrix wants Fort Benning to be a mission-oriented, value-based, customer-focused organization."

Editor's note: This is the first in a series of articles to explain the expanded role of ACOE and the implementation of the Army's performance improvement criteria.

Create an acronym; win a prize

Directorate of Resource Management

The Directorate of Resources Management is sponsoring a contest to find an acronym that best identifies or reflects the values of Army performance improvement criteria. Some examples are:

P -Performance Improvement
R -Recognition
I -Innovation
D -Dedication
E -Empowerment

A -Attitude
P -Pride
I -Improvement
C -Customer-Focus

The contest is open from Monday through Jan 12. All personnel working or living on Fort Benning are eligible to participate with the exception of those employees of the installation ACOE Office.

The individual submitting the winning acronym will receive his or her choice of a free weekend at the Fort Benning Recreation Area in Destin, Fla., or a cabin at Uchee Creek.

Entries may be submitted by using the contest coupon, or by PROFS to PROFS user identification: MCLANEYS. You can submit more than one entry.

PHYSICS LESSON

Students race modified cars

By Shannon Day
Special to The Bayonet©

Kris Keske, a fourth-grade teacher at White Elementary School remembers sitting through hours of theoretical physics in high school and counting the minutes until class was over.

As a teacher, she decided to help prepare her students for college-preparatory science classes now by laying a solid foundation of basic physics principals.

Four years ago, Keske took a special class on physics at the National Science Center at Fort Gordon. The class taught her how to come up with innovative experiments that demonstrate the laws of physics to fourth-graders in terms they can understand.

Through various experiments, she developed a unit to teach the children about inertia, air pressure, water pressure and friction.

"We started about a few weeks ago by learning that air is matter and continued on from there," she said. "Through these experiments, we want to teach them not to be afraid of physics."

She said they experimented with marbles. The children learned that two marbles dropped at the same time, no matter what their sizes, will fall at the same speed. After this gravity demonstration, they rolled the marbles and found that the marble with the most mass will roll faster and farther than the others.

After learning these principals, the children brought in several race cars, which they had modified, to compete against each other.

Keske explained that the students had to add weight to the cars to make them faster, but too much would slow them down. They also had to make sure the cars weren't too wide, because if the sides of the cars touched the sides of the track, it would cause friction and slow the car down.

Courtney L. Johnson, winner of the second race, had gone through an entire bucket full of cars to find just the right one.

"First I went through the bucket to find the heaviest cars and then I checked the wheels to make sure they weren't too wide," Johnson said. "After that I taped pennies to the top of the car so it would make it heavier, but not so many that it would slow (the car) down."

Johnson said she has had a lot of fun with the experiments and they have helped her learn more and understand science better.

Keske said making science interesting and fun is the end result she is looking for.

"I hope it lays a foundation so they have a good attitude about science when they get to high school," she said.

The culmination of the science unit was Dec. 12 when the children put together all of the principals they learned and launched bottle rockets.

Olympic bricks for sale

By Lisa M. Hibbert

Columbus '96 is selling commemorative bricks as a part of its Olympic fund-raising campaign, now through Dec. 31.

The bricks will be placed in the walkways of the South Commons section, site of the 1996 Olympic Softball Competition.

"Columbus '96 is a nonprofit organization and selling bricks is a fund-raiser for us," said an Olympic official. "All of the proceeds will go back into the fund."

The commemorative bricks will be engraved with personalized inscriptions that will be immortalized, said Daphne Peirce, Columbus '96 Media Communications.

"Together, we can all create the legacy that will propel the Chattahoochee valley into the 21st century," said retired Lt. Gen. Carmen Cavezza, executive director, Columbus '96. "(This is a) legacy that will pass from one generation to the next, as the Olympic torch is passed from one athlete to another."

Department of Veterans Affairs

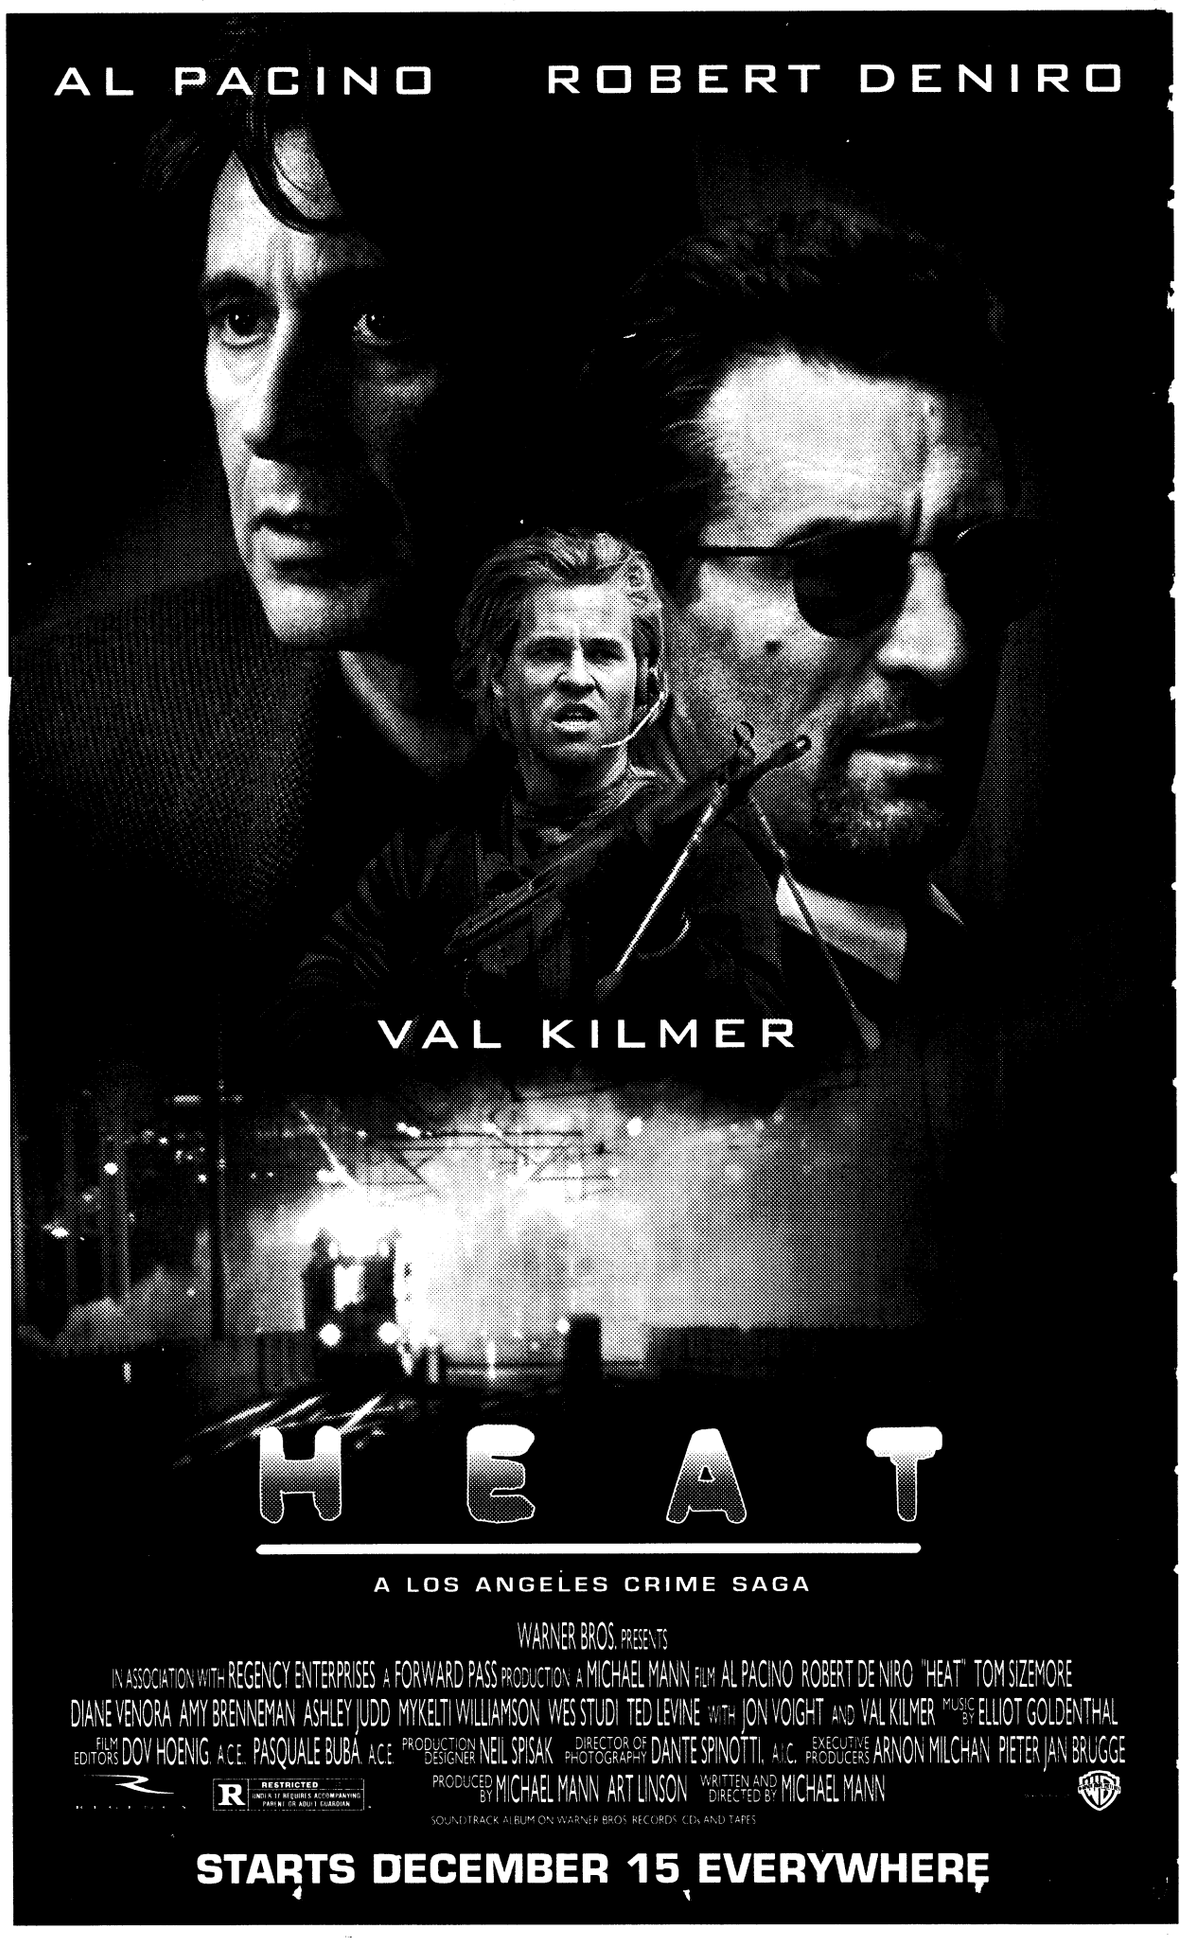
Q: Under what circumstances can a spouse, surviving spouse, or child receive educational benefits?

A: A spouse, surviving spouse, or child is eligible for Dependents Educational Assistance if the veteran died or is permanently and totally disabled as the result of a disability arising from active service in the Armed Forces.

Also eligible are the surviving spouse and children of a veteran who died from any cause while rated permanently and totally disabled from a service-connected disability or the spouse and children of a service member currently missing in action, captured in the line of duty by a hostile force, or presently detained in the line of duty by a foreign power.

Q: What is the payment level under the Dependents Educational Assistance program?

A: The rate is $404 per month for full-time school attendance with lesser amounts for part-time training. Payments are made monthly.



Q: How many months of training can be received by dependents?

A: The beneficiary may receive up to 45 months of full-time training or the equivalent in part-time training.

Editor's note: Veterans who have questions regarding their benefits can call the VA regional office at (800) 827-1000.

VA reduces inventory of defaulted properties

Department of Veterans Affairs

The Department of Veterans Affairs has reduced its inventory of defaulted residential properties to the lowest point in 14 years, generating more than $1.6 billion in proceeds and reflecting aggressive VA resale efforts.

During fiscal 1995, VA regional offices sold 24,686 properties and ended the year with only 9,321 properties on hand. This marked the first time since February 1981 that VA's inventory of acquired properties had been reduced to below 10,000, marking a dramatic reduction from the 25,000 properties on hand in 1988.

VA works with veterans holding VA-guaranteed loans who are unable to meet mortgage payments to help them identify various financial alternatives.

In cases where the veteran or an owner who assumed a VA-guaranteed loan cannot bring the payments current and foreclosure results, VA will buy the property if it is not financially advantageous to simply pay the lender the guaranteed part of the loan.

When these properties subsequently are "turned over" by prompt sales, minimizing the inventory VA is carrying, the federal revolving fund that sustains VA's loan guaranty program is replenished, carrying costs are reduced and the cost to taxpayers is kept as low as possible.

Streamlined processing that minimizes the time a broker is waiting to hear about the status of his or her buyers brings about more support for the program.

VA sells homes through real estate agents and uses various media from classified ads to computerized bulletin boards to advertise available properties, which may be purchased by nonveterans as well as veterans.

For more information on how properties are advertised in your area, call VA at (800) 827-1000.

VA disability COLA benefits on rise

Department of Veterans Affairs

The Department of Veterans Affairs has announced that disabled veterans will receive a 2.6 percent cost-of-living increase in their compensation payments scheduled to be mailed later this month.

The cost-of-living allowance, based on the COLA for social security recipients, was included in legislation signed by President Clinton and affects 2.2 million veterans.

Monthly payments will now range from $91 for a single veteran with a 10-percent disability rating to $1,870 for a single veteran with a 100-percent disability rating.

The increase also applies to approximately 302,000 survivors of certain veterans — the spouses and children who receive benefits under VA's dependency and indemnity compensation program.

Veterans whose service-connected disabilities are rated 30 percent or higher may receive additional allowances for dependents, based on the number of dependents and extent of disability.

An open letter to the troops on Ft. Benning. On a recent visit to Ft. Benning to witness a Ranger School graduation, I became acutely aware I was among the best and brightest the U.S. has to offer. I was very impressed by the dedication, attitudes and abilities of the soldiers I met.

Let me say as an American Citizen, I appreciate your sacrifice, your effort, your dedication to purpose and your desire to serve as members of the Army of the United States. You indeed serve in my place, and I thank you.

Too often, the appreciation is never stated, but rest assured, your service is much appreciated and admired by the vast majority of the American people. I'm so proud of you. I wish I could be one of you.

Thank you, may God bless you and keep you safe, and Merry Christmas to you all.

Col. Everett W. Newcomb waits to receive the organizational colors from Brig. Gen. Vernon C. Spaulding and Command Sgt. Major H. Holt during the assumption of command ceremony Monday in front of Martin Community Army Hospital.

New commander takes over at MACH

By Brian R. Voller
Bayonet staff writer

The cold air of the early December morning chilled the soldiers from Martin Army Community Hospital as they stood ready for inspection.

With the hospital building to his right, Col. Everett W. Newcomb III, incoming commander, received the organizational colors from Brig. Gen. Vernon C. Spaulding, commanding general of the Southeast Health Service Support Area. Newcomb took command of the U.S. Army Medical Department Activity in an assumption of command ceremony Dec. 11.

Newcomb assumes command from Col. Gerald M. Cross, the acting commander, who will be staying at the hospital, and from Col. Michael J. Kussman, who departed Aug. 10.

During his remarks, Spaulding thanked Cross and his wife for doing an excellent job of commanding the hospital over the last four months.

Kussman is currently preparing to take over deputy command for clinical services at Walter Reed Army Medical Center, Washington D.C.

"I duly thank you for the job you have done here," Spaulding said. "It just reinforces the strong team we have here at the AMEDD and at Martin Army Hospital."

Newcomb also thanked the former commanders and said he was honored to have control of the hospital.

"It is an unbelievable honor for me to assume command of what is undoubtedly the finest hospital in the United States Army," Newcomb said. "And it is one of the premiere medical institutions, military or civilian, in the United States today."

Newcomb also expressed optimism about the future.

"We are today in the midst of very big changes in the way health care is delivered in both the civilian and military fields," Newcomb said. "Downsizing, budget cuts, managed care, utilization management and Tri-Care — all of these are forcing us to change the way we look at the delivery of health care, and the way we interact with our patients.

"All of those changes go hand in hand with opportunity — opportunity for improvement, opportunity for advancement and opportunity to do things just a little bit better than before."

Newcomb was born in Elizabeth, N.J. in 1951. He graduated cum laude in 1973 from the Washington and Lee University, Lexington, Va., with a bachelor of science degree.

He received a medical degree in 1978 from Kirksville College of Osteopathic Medicine, Kirksville Mo., where he was also salutatorian.

Newcomb is a graduate of the industrial College of the Armed Forces, the Command and General Staff College and the Army Medical Department's Officer Basic and Advanced courses.

Newcomb's military awards include the Defense Meritorious Service Medal, Meritorious Service medal with three oak leaf clusters, Army Commendation Medal, Army Achievement Medal and the Joint Meritorious Unit Award.

He wears the Expert Field Medical Badge and the Flight Surgeon Badge. He was named the 1987 Outstanding Attending Physician at Madigan Army Medical Center, and is a fellow of the American College of Cardiology and the American College of Physicians.

He and his wife, Shirley, who is an active duty lieutenant colonel in the Army nurse corps, have one daughter, Laura, who is obtaining her master's degree in international business from Pepperdine University.

Negativism? Deal with yourself first

By Richard Brill
Special to The Bayonet©

The best way to deal with people with negative attitudes, whether in the workplace or anywhere else, is to deal with yourself first.

That is the advice of Yvonne Wilbanks, civilian program coordinator with the Alcohol Drug Abuse Prevention and Control Program.

"It is easier to change yourself than it is to change others," Wilbanks said. "We must recognize the power we have is over ourselves. We have no real power over others."

According to Wilbanks, there are a minimum of two options when dealing with difficult people or situations. "You can go crazy or you can go peacefully," she said, quoting Adele Greenfield, a noted author.

Accept that life is difficult and will always be a series of challenges, she said. Don't pay attention to negative people and simply avoid confrontation by dealing with them politely.

Wilbanks told the story of a woman who was called by her mother on the telephone and vigorously cussed out.

"Thank you for calling, mother," the woman said, "It's always so nice to hear your voice."

Wilbanks also said a good attitude is contagious.

"Are you permeating the office with happiness?" she said. "Your attitude can affect others in the office."

Finally, accept that people have the right to live how they want to, she said. It is very difficult to get others to change.

"They might not even think they have a problem," she said. "Concentrate on your own life first."

Dealing with difficult people

- Take responsibility for your own life. Our power is over ourselves.
- Understand anger. It usually occurs when an expectation is not being met. When angry, ask yourself how important will this be in a few years? Remember to let go of blaming and complaining, which victimize us and switch to problem solving, choices and assertiveness.
  - — Identify the emotion
  - — Talk it out with someone you trust
  - — Write a letter you don't send
  - — Forgive or you will be l ike the one you hate
- Change your thinking — optimism can help you succeed
  - — Self-fulfilling prophecies
  - — Positive self-talk
- Keys to problem solving:
  - — Describe the problem in detail
  - — What I want to see happen
  - — My options
  - — Action plan, specific goals with milestones
  - — Evaluate and change goals as needed
  - —You cannot get a person to solve a problem they do not have
- Be a winner
  - —Exercise daily
  - — Eat fruits and vegetables daily
  - — Relax, participate in hobbies
  - — Improve self-esteem

Problems and pain
- Life is difficult
- Life is a series of problems
- Reasons for wanting to change others
- Let go of fear
- Find the "Walking Cure"

Recovering from dealing with grouches, grumps and grudges
- Recognizing our power is over ourselves
- Slay the dragon or love the dragon
- Observe rather than judge
- Give up our misery story
- Turn problem finding into problem solving

Reminder: You cannot get a person to solve a problem they do not have!

Hospital introduces patient access hot line

Patients can call Martin Army Community Hospital's new patient access hot line if they desire to tell the hospital commander about any positive experiences or less than positive concerns about the hospital or its clinic.

Just dial 544-MACH (544-6224) and leave your name, daytime telephone number and a brief description of your observation or concern. The hospital staff will normally return the call within one duty day.

Welcome Center changes hours

The new hours of operation for the Welcome Center will be Monday through Friday 7 a.m. to 10 p.m., and Saturday and Sunday 2 to 10 p.m. Inprocessing will be from opening hours until 20 minutes prior to closing hours. Outprocessing soldiers may report to the welcome center or call to make and appointment ten days before departure from the installation. For more information, call 545-5404.

Thrift Savings Plan opens season

The Thrift Saving Plan open season runs through Jan. 31. Any employee wishing to start a TSP account, change TSP contributions or change how TSP contributions are invested may do so during the open season.

Elections or changes to the TSP may be made by visiting the Directorate of Civilian Personnel. Personnel Services Center, Building 85, Center Wing, during regular duty hours.

Quarterly appreciation breakfast Jan. 11

The Quarterly Excellence Appreciation Day Breakfast and Quality Awards Ceremony will be Jan. 11 from 8 to 9 a.m. at the Supper Club of the Fort Benning Officers' Club.

Breakfast will consist of bacon and sausage, scrambled eggs, grits, biscuits, coffee and juice.

Tickets are $4.50 and can be picked up at the Parrish Building (Building 66) Jan. 2 through 8.

Commanders and supervisors should contact Pat Porter at 545-1713 or 545-4332 with the names of honorees and the number of persons in their organization who will be attending the breakfast or if they have questions.

CID offering reward

The U.S. Criminal Investigation Command is offering a $500 reward for information leading to the arrest and conviction of persons responsible for an attempted robbery and aggravated assault that occurred at a public telephone booth on the corner of Way Street and Sightseeing Road at about 1 a.m. Nov. 20. A soldier using the telephone was approached by three, 16- to 20-year-old black males. The assailants held a knife to the soldier's throat while they demanded his wallet.

The assistance of the local community is being requested in an effort to identify and apprehend the perpetrators. If you have information concerning this incident, contact Chief Warrant Officer 2 James Newsome at 545-4989 or the Military Police at 545-5222. The identity of anyone providing information will be kept in strictest confidence.

Airports impose new security measures

New security measures in all airports require travelers to show a picture identification card at time of check-in. Picture ID cards are required for travelers 18 years and older. Failure to produce a picture ID could result in denial of boarding.

Check-in time at the Columbus Airport should be no less than 45 minutes prior to departure and no less than one hour prior to departure from the Atlanta Airport. For more information, call the Transportation Division at 545-7706.

Coordinate travel with Carlson Wagonlit

All official travel within the continental United States should be coordinated directly with Carlson Wagonlit Travel.

The traveler is responsible for providing three copies of travel orders directly to Carlson Wagonlit Travel. For convenience, orders may be dropped off at the drive-thru ticket booth.

Airline tickets will no longer be available for pick up at the booth. Tickets can be picked up at Building 2628 two days prior to date of travel. For more information, call Carlson Travel at 682-0622.

Nick Hoge Award set

Military personnel and civilian employees of the Department of the Army, including local nationals and nonappropriated fund employees, are encouraged to submit professional essays for consideration for the 1995 Nick Hoge Award for Professional Development.

This essay competition provides the opportunity for Army personnel to present their ideas through thoroughly researched, documented and creative papers. The papers are to consider the existing quality, effectiveness or efficiency of civilian human resource management and related professional disciplines (such as personnel psychology) and should address concepts and methodologies that will enhance the conduct of civilian human resource management business.

Co-authors and group authors are permitted. Nominations must be submitted to the Management-Employee Relations Division, Directorate of Civilian Personnel in an original and eight copies with a separate cover page, no later than Jan. 6. For more information call Mae Horsey at 545-4483.

OCS board set

The next Officer Candidate School selection board has been scheduled for June 17 to 21, 1996. The cutoff date for applications to arrive at Personnel Command is May 17, 1996 — no exceptions.

The Adjutant General Personnel Operations Services Division has set up two local boards to accommodate Fort Benning for the DA June board. Local board No. 1 is Feb. 6 to 8. Applications must arrive no later than Jan. 19. Local board No. 2 will be May 6 to 8. Applications for this board must arrive in POSD no later than April 19.

For more information, call Marie Lee at 545-3341 or 545-4702.

EFMP program provides assistance

The Exceptional Family Member Program is a Department of the Army program designed to assist, through selective assignment and reassignment, the soldier who has a special needs family member.

The EFMP addresses the needs of those family members, adults or children, who have a physical, intellectual or emotional disorder that limits that person's capability to take part in activities and which requires special treatment, therapy, education, training or counseling.

The program's purpose is to let the U.S. Total Army Personnel Command at DA know of any family members with special needs, so this can be a consideration during the assignment selection process.

For additional information regarding the EFMP, contact Frances Howard, coordinator, Exceptional Family Member Program, Army Community Service, at 545-6969 or 545-5516.

Infantry school names top instructors of year

By Shannon Day
Special to The Bayonet©

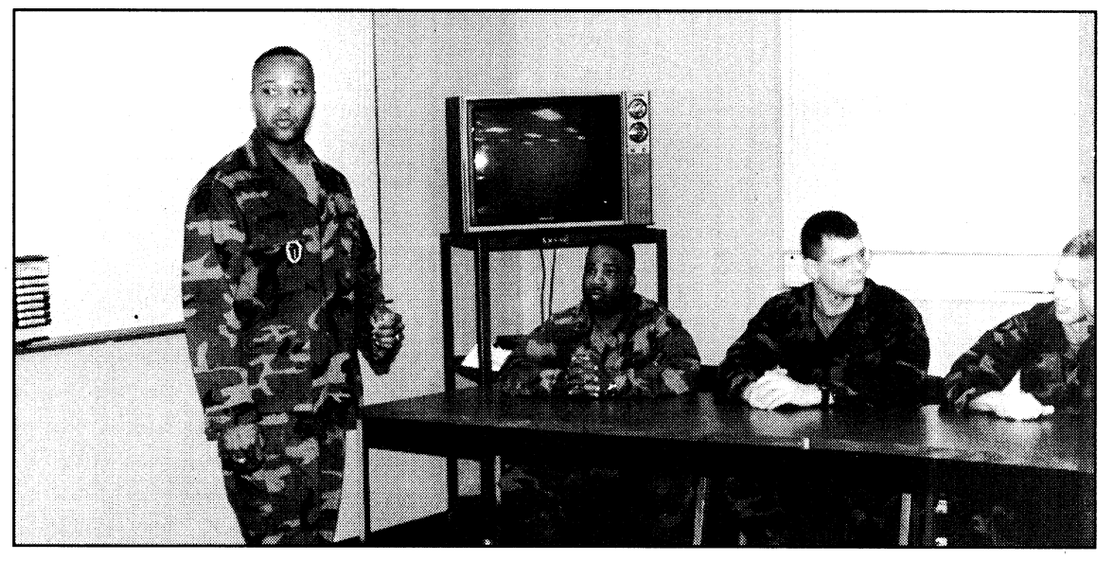
Out of the many instructors at the U.S. Army Infantry School, three have been chosen as the creme de la creme.

Each year, an officer and both a senior and junior enlisted soldier are chosen.

The officer is Capt. Eugene A. Yancey IIİ, senior platoon trainer, Company C., 2nd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment.

He attended the Infantry Officer Advanced Course in 1993 and graduated on the commandant's list.

He was then selected as an instructor for the Infantry Officer Basic Course, where he has been training lieutenants. He instructs them in combat essential skills and tactics from fire team to company-level operations.



He describes his teaching style as very positive and attributes his success to the fact that he really enjoys teaching.

"I am extremely honored," Yancey said. "But I realize this award is meant to honor all of the great instructors at Fort Benning."

Another exceptional instructor is Sgt. 1st Class Keithly A. Warner, small group leader, Headquarters and Headquarters Detachment, Noncommissioned Officers Academy. He was named the senior enlisted instructor of the year.

In February 1994, he was appointed to the Henry Caro NCOA as an Advanced Noncommissioned Officer Course instructor.

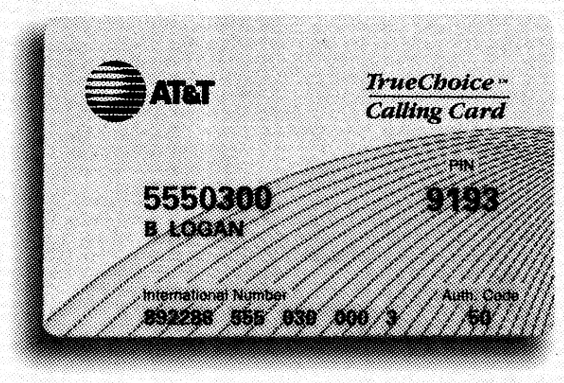
The courses at the academy are broken down into cycles of ten weeks of intensive training.

Shannon Day/Special to The Bayonet

Fort Benning Instructor of the Year Sgt. 1st Class Keithly A. Warner, Headquarters and Headquarters Detachment, Noncommissioned Officers Academy, instructs a group of Advanced Noncommissioned Officer Course students on air assault operations.

"It's hard to tell someone you know what they are going through if you don't," he said. "I try to put myself in their position to see how the information would be best received by them."

Staff Sgt. Scott E. Holden, brigade tactics trainer, Headquarters and Headquarters Detachment, Ranger Training Brigade, is the junior instructor of the year.



Holden, who teaches ranger students, uses a small group approach when teaching because he feels many of the soldiers also have a lot of knowledge to share with the class.

"I've learned a lot by hearing them and teaching them also," Holden said. "Teaching is a two-way street."

A ceremony honoring the instructors was Dec. 13 at 10 a.m. in Classroom 6 at Infantry Hall.

CG presents awards at retreat ceremony

By Lori Egan
Bayonet staff writer

The monthly retreat ceremony, which honors soldiers and civilians was hosted by Maj. Gen. John W. Hendrix, post commander, Nov. 30 on York Field.

Those honored were:

• Staff Sgt. George Gurrola, 4th Ranger Training Battalion, received the Army Commendation Medal for preventing the possible death of a ranger student during an airborne operation. He stopped the jumper at the door and unwrapped the static line from around his neck and then allowed the jumper to jump.

• Sgt. Scott R. Lewis, U.S. Army Infantry Center Military Police Company, received the Army Commendation Medal for initiating cardiopulmonary resuscitation on a baby who had stopped breathing.

• Fire Lt. Hubert D. McNeer and Firefighter Pascal D. Cureton, Directorate of Public Safety, both received Achievement Medals for Civil Service for continuing CPR on the baby.

• Sgt. 1st Class Robert J. Daugherty and Sgt. Juanita Jackson, Community Mental Health Service, Martin Army Community Hospital, both received Army Achievement Medals for talking a basic trainee who was threatening to jump off the roof of a reception barracks out of committing suicide.

• Spc. Timothy Vandevander and Spc. Sidney Leach accepted the Organization of Excellence Award for the 36th Engineer Group. The group was recognized for its support in the cleanup efforts of Hurricane Opal.

• Retired Lt. Col. John and Shirley Vollentine received the Commander's Award for Public Service as outstanding civilian volunteers for sponsoring international military students and their families for 25 years.

• Tammy Davis received a USAIC Certificate of Achievement for being November's Volunteer of the Month. She has served as the family support group leader for Company A, 324th Forward Support Battalion, 3rd Brigade, 24th Infantry Division (Mechanized).

• Harry Brooks, library technician for the Directorate of Community Activities, was August's Civilian Employee of the Month and received a Department of the Army Certificate of Commendation.

• Joseph L. Jordan, visual information specialist for the Directorate of Operations and Training, received a USAIC Certificate of Achievement for being the Quality Employee of the Month.

• Julie Goldner was presented a USAIC Certificate of Appreciation for performing the Heimlich Maneuver on a child who swallowed a quarter.

• Mary Ann Clark, who is retiring after 13 years with CB&T, received a USAIC Certificate of Appreciation. She ran the monthly paysite at the Infantry Training Brigade.

• Retired Sgt. Maj. Nathaniel E. Guydon Jr. received a Certificate of Achievement for serving as enlisted co-chairman of the Fort Benning Retiree Council.

• Sam Wellborn, Mayo "Biff" Hayden and Bob Berry received Fort Benning mementos for their continued support of Fort Benning.

After passing out the awards, Hendrix thanked the honorees for their contributions.

Hendrix thanked the Silver Wings for their demonstration of precision parachute jumping and landing.

SOA names top soldiers for the year

By Saralynne Snell
School of the Americas

It wasn't just brains that counted this time, but brawn and skill as well, as the top soldiers of the School of the Americas vied for the titles of NCO and Soldier of the Year. The board provided the majority of points in this competition, but the honors also rested upon physical fitness, marksmanship and drill and ceremonies.

SOA's NCO of the Year is Staff Sgt. Jose Quinones, an instructor in the Special Operations Division; and the Soldier of the Year is Spc. Judith Ginder, photojournalist for the school.

Quinones wears the double tabs of an airborne ranger and hopes to add a third tab after applying to the Special Forces. At SOA, he teaches Latin American students about small-boat operations and fast-roping. While preparing for the board, he was also a "tactic" – one who sponsors an entire class at a time. Tactics meet the foreign students — many of whom speak little or no English

Staff Sgt. Jose Quinones is the SOA noncommissio ned officer of the year — at the airport, get them settled and generally act "like their mother and father" during their stay, he said.

Ginder is a photojournalist in SOA's Public Affairs Office. Though she's been in the Army less than two years, she has already shown leadership. She is the SOA representative to Better Opportunities for Single Soldiers, and she won the title of queen for the Association of the United States Army, Fort Benning Chapter in June. Now in her junior year of studying art, Ginder is working toward a bachelor's degree as time permits.

Both soldiers thought the total-soldier concept of this competition was good.

"It got you thinking on your feet and getting back to basics, especially in drill and ceremony," Quinones said.

"When you do it that way, you get a much more well-rounded soldier and NCO because anyone can memorize information," Ginder said. Leading drill and ceremony made her nervous, she said, because she hasn't been to the Primary Leadership Development Course yet. But she didn't let that stop her.

"I don't let things bother me," she explained. "I don't get stressed out over things, and I think that shows in the way I present myself."

Competing in military boards is good for any soldier, Quinones said, whether you're new in the Army or advanced in your career.

"(Boards) encourage soldiers — they let the NCO chain of command get to know you, and they help you gain self-confidence," he said. NCOs "should get put on the spot" now and then. "It keeps you on the edge; you should always know your stuff," he said.

Ginder, who was a private first class while competing, saw the competition as a way to advance her career.

"I knew that if I wanted to get promoted faster, I had to do things to make me stand out from my peers," she said. Along with winning AUSA queen and leading in BOSS, taking Soldier of the Year helped accomplish that. Ginder was promoted to specialist months earlier than the norm.

She also looked to the future during the board.

"It's great experience for the promotion board," she said. "And any time you get to speak in public or make any kind of presentation of yourself, it helps your confidence level and anything else you might have to do in the future, especially in my (military occupational specialty), which is public affairs."

Foundation gives holiday safety tips

Georgia Firefighters Burn Foundation Inc.

In an effort to keep you and your loved ones safe, the Georgia Firefighters Burn Foundation would like to remind you of the following guidelines to insure that you have a safe and joyous holiday season:

When purchasing a Christmas tree :

• Check needles to insure freshness, if the needles fall easily from the tree, the tree is dry and should not be purchased

• Always keep a fresh tree watered daily

• If purchasing an artificial tree be certain that you only purchase trees which are fire retardant, but remember fire retardant does not mean fire proof.

While decorating the house:

• Make certain to use lights that are certified by an Underwriters Laboratory

• Always unplug any electrical decorations before leaving your house or retiring for the night.

• Do not over load outlets or extension cords

• Never run extension cords under carpet, rugs or mats

• If using candles, be certain that they are at least 36 inches from any combustible material

• Never leave a burning candle unattended

• Do not let children play with candles, electrical decorations or matches.

While cooking the holiday feast:

• Keep children out of the kitchen (scald burns are a major cause of death to children under the age of two)

• Wear tight fitting sleeves to prevent them from dangling into a flame or onto a hot burner

• Never add water to a dish containing hot oil

• Keep paper towels, pot holders, dish towels, etc. away from stove top

• If you have a stove fire, calmly turn the burner off and cover the pan with a lid.

Also, remember to check your smoke detectors to be certain they are functioning correctly.

For more detailed holiday safety information, contact the Burn Foundation office at (800) 273-2876.

Mirror adjustments can eliminate blind spots

By Jim Mateja
National Safety Council

George Platzer. He calls himself an engineering consultant. Although when we first heard about his novel way to increase driving safety, we considered "crackpot" or "loony tune" a more apt description.

Platzer specializes in rearview mirrors. He holds several patents on them. He recently presented his latest idea to the prestigious society of Automotive Engineers at its annual meeting on what's new and what's coming in automotive engineering innovation and technology.

What Platzer now has come up with is a simple way for motorists to eliminate the blind spot in their rearview mirrors by merely changing the method in which they adjust the setting of their mirrors. No radar, no computer sensors, no need for satellites circling overhead.

So we set off on the roadway to give Platzer's idea the acid test — real life experience.

And what did we find after about five minutes of travel along the tollway? If Nobel gave out prizes for mirror adjustments, Platzer would have one on his mantle. If Pulitzer rewarded the doing away of blind spots, Platzer would walk away with the plaque.

Here's what Platzer suggests: Forget how we learned to adjust our outside mirrors by plopping behind the steering wheel and turning the mirrors so that we just saw the side of our car looking back at us in the mirrors.

Instead, he advises, adjust the driver-side mirror by resting your head against the driver's-side window and then turning the mirror so that you can just see the side of your own car. Once set, then scoot over to the center of the front seat and turn the passenger-side mirror so that you can just see the side of your own car. Then slip behind the wheel and drive.

You won't see your own car in either mirror, yet what you do see is far better. Cars behind you show up, as always, in the inside rearview mirror above the dash. But the instant the car leaves your field of vision on the inside mirror, the outside mirrors pick up the car.

No blind spot, no delays, no wondering where that car about to pass you has disappeared to, no waiting a few seconds for the car that you just saw in your inside mirror to finally show up in your outside mirrors.

You suddenly find yourself enjoying panoramic vision. Vehicles behind or to the side no longer lay in hiding in that wicked, old "blind spot" because there is no blind spot. All three mirrors now work in harmony with one another. Give it a try.

Credit checkup

can keep your finances in order

Georgia Society of Certified Public Accountants Inc.

You've reached the maximum on all your credit cards. You borrow new money to pay off older, overdue debts. You withdraw from savings to pay regular bills. You have no idea how much you owe.

If any of these situations apply to you, the Georgia Society of CPAs recommends that you give yourself a credit checkup.

How much is too much?

When you allow debt to climb too high, you risk not meeting monthly payments. Missed or late payments seriously damage your credit rating — and your mental well-being.

Most credit advisers say that you should not spend more than 10 to 15 percent of your total monthly net income on consumer debt — that includes payments on credit cards and on personal, student and car loans.

It does not include your mortgage payment, which generally should not exceed 28 percent of your monthly net income.

If you're near or above the 15-percent danger point, it's time to put some debt-reduction strategies into play. Most important, stop using your credit cards, and cancel your lines of credit. Then develop a workable plan for paying off your debt as soon as possible.

Check your credit report

While you're checking your debt level, you should review your credit report to make sure the information is accurate. Three national credit bureaus, along with more than a thousand local and regional bureaus keep track of credit history information.

For a copy of your credit report, contact a local credit bureau (check your telephone directory), or call one of the three national credit bureaus: Equifax (800) 685-1111), TRW (800) 682-7654 or Trans Union (800) 851-2674.

If you've been turned down for credit, you are entitled to a free report as long as you request it within 60 days. Otherwise, most agencies charge a small fee. Costs for the report, although typically from $10 to $20, may vary. TRW will send you a free copy once a year.

Should you find an error in your credit report, challenge the information. The credit bureau must investigate the disputed information, correct inaccuracies, and delete information it cannot verify.

If you're not satisfied with the investigation, you can write a statement explaining the situation and have the statement entered into your file so it is included with future credit reports.

Get help before ruining credit

What if you find that you are over your head in debt? If you believe the situation is temporary, try to talk to your creditors about arranging an extended payment plan. Many creditors are willing to work with customers in resolving debt problems.

Be wary of consolidation loans in which a bank or finance company takes command of your debts and you make payments to that one institution. Interest rates on such loans may be higher- so you could be replacing moderate debts with one big one.

If you you can't manage your debt on your own, a better option may be to seek the guidance of a non profit credit counseling agency.

Two of the largest are the National Foundation for Consumer Credit, (800) 388-2227, and Family Service Agencies, (800) 221-2681. Any national agency can usually put you in touch with a local office that provides consumer credit counseling.

For modest fees, most credit counselors will review your debts, analyze your income, and help you work out ways to handle your debt. The counselor may even intercede and work directly with your creditors on your behalf to reduce and stretch out monthly debt payments.

Credit counselors also are trained to help you deal with a spending problem. CPAs say it's in your best interest to manage your credit and keep your credit report clean.

Editor's note: Soldiers may also contact the Army Community Service for credit counseling at 545-7517 or 545-4043.

PHYSICAL FITNESS SCHOOL

Firefighters sweat through seminar

One-day seminar focuses on nutrition, physical fitness

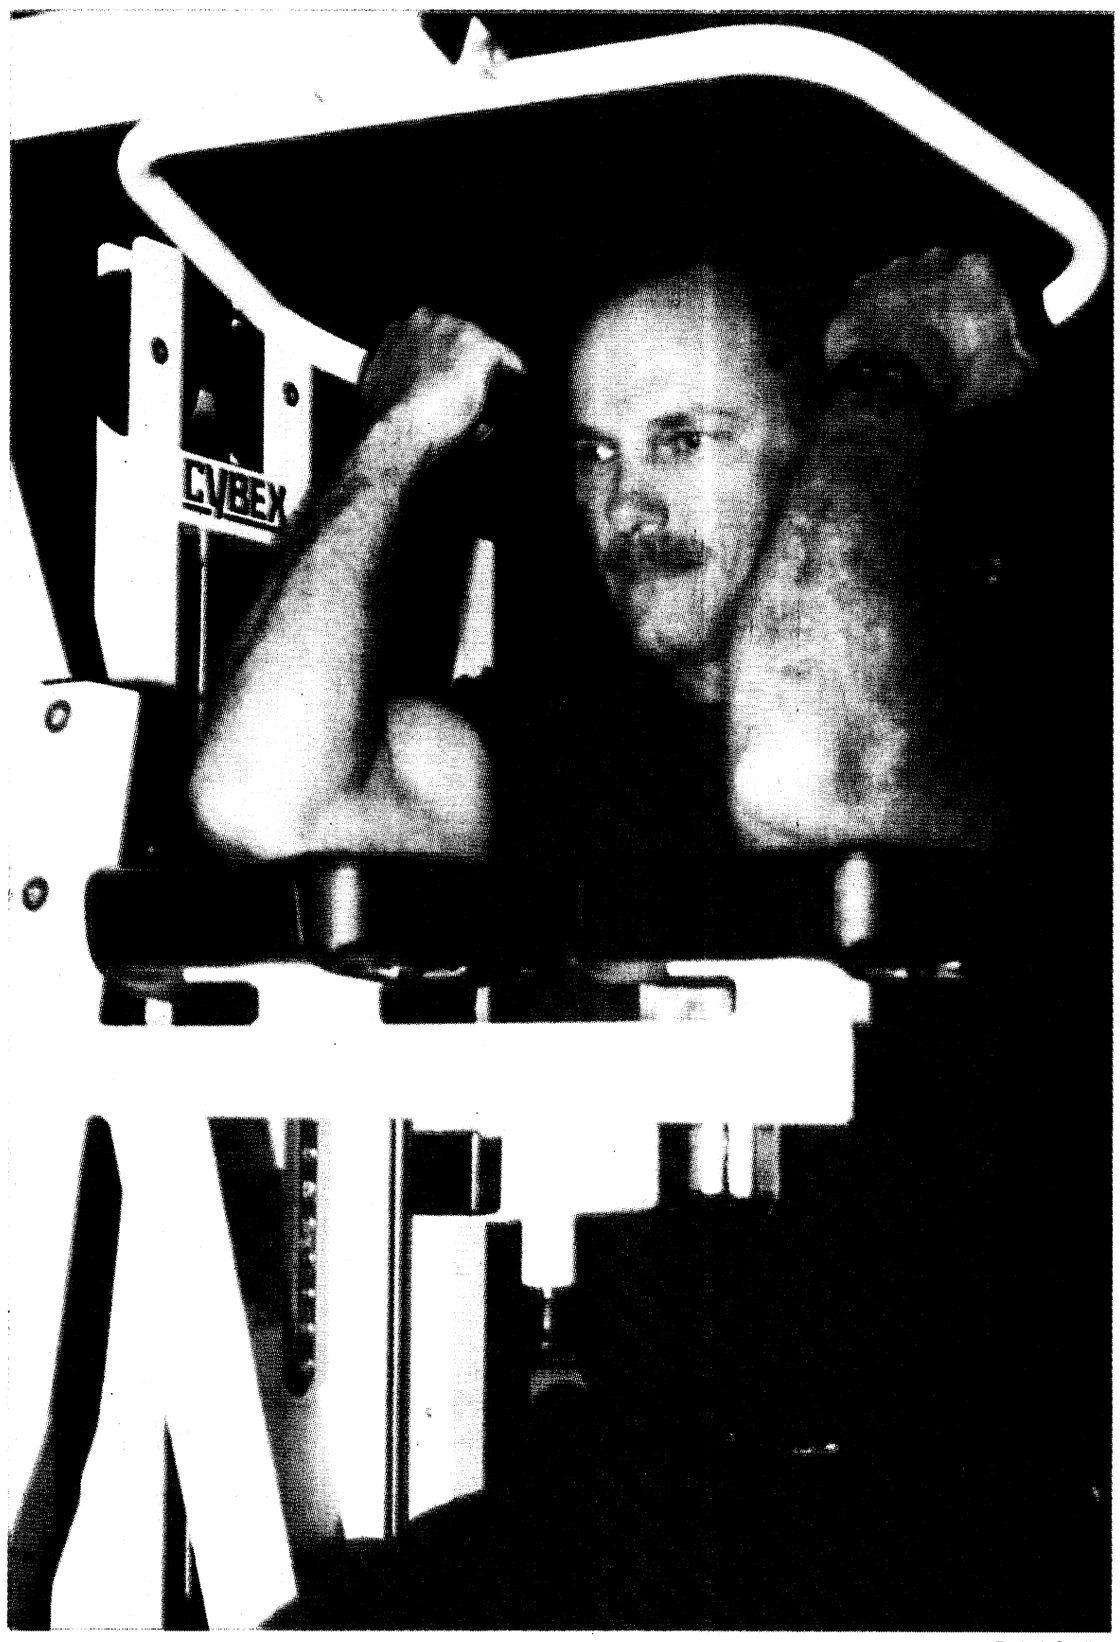
By Ruth J. Spaller
USAIC Public Affairs Office

They are known for putting out fires, but Fort Benning firefighters showed they could generate a little heat of their own as they sweated through the hands-on portion of a health and fitness seminar the U.S. Army Physical Fitness School conducted for post fire fighters and gym attendants.

The one-day seminar was one of a series of four conducted Dec. 5, 7, 12 and 14 so all shifts of firefighters had a chance to attend.

The seminar focused on nutrition and physical fitness, "key areas for firefighters, who need to maintain high levels of strength and endurance in order to do their job," said course instructor Sgt. 1st Class Miguel E. Sanchez.

"Fire fighting is an occupation where fitness is a No. 1 priority," said Fire Lt. Tommy Hill, who said the course gave the firefighters a lot of good information.



"We've been trying to get a physical fitness program to fit our different age groups and ability levels," Hill said. "In the past, people went on their own agenda; they did weights, jogging, stairmaster — whatever they liked.

"This will standardize things more," Hill said. "Each firefighter can develop a program to improve overall strength, endurance and flexibility."

Firefighter Mike Darlington said he picked up a lot of specific tips as well as reinforcing the basics of health and nutrition in the course.

"I learned a lot about stretching and about nutritional values," he said, "and I learned a lot I can add to my (weight lifting) program to get better definition."

Darlington also said he thought the course would lead to an overall improvement by the department on the yearly physical fitness test firefighters are required to take.

Ruth J. Spaller

Firefighter Mike Darlington pumps out bicep curls during the hands-on portion of a health and fitness seminar conducted by the U.S. Army Physical Fitness School.

The program was initiated by the commandant of the fitness school, Col. Jeanne M. Picariello, Sanchez said.

"We have a tendency to forget about these guys (firefighters) until we need them," Sanchez said. "They do so much for our community, our colonel felt it was time to do something for them in return."

Each day's seminar included an introduction to fitness course, a nutrition course, a course on cardiorespiratory training and some hands-on instruction on the proper use of gym equipment.

Also, post gym personnel learned about injury prevention and athletic shoe selection.

"People working in the gyms get asked a lot of questions about these things," Sanchez said, "but the soldiers get put into this job with no real training to base their answers on.

"This seminar is designed to make gym attendants more knowledgeable," he said.

FBMA plans training for nonmanagers

Fort Benning Management Association

The Fort Benning Management Association is planning to host a series of seminars to be presented by Troy State University.

The seminars will be presented as part of the organization's regular monthly meetings beginning Jan. 18.

The seminars are aimed at nonmanagers who want to sharpen their leadership skills. The topics will be related to ethics, team building, motivation, Malcolm Baldrige criteria, automation and its impact, taking charge of your future, psychological aspects of minority managers, leadership and productivity and stress management just to name a few.

These presentations will be given by Troy State University staff faculty. The seminars will be supplemented with case studies and panel discussions.

The charge will be $1 per session to help defray expenses. Certificates will be given for attendance at four, six and eight sessions.

Members and nonmembers may attend. Members that attend will be given extra incentives by the association.

The meetings will start at 11:30 a.m. for lunch and the seminars will run from noon to 1 p.m.

A schedule listing topics, times and locations will be provided at the January seminar, which will be conducted at the Officers' Club.

For more information, contact John Machovec at 545-5173, Bruce Piper at 545-5174, Nilsa Summey at 545-2200 or Steve Magner at 545-2420.

Make your reservations for the Jan. 18 session by Jan. 10 by calling Virginia Wright at 545-7411, Anne Wright at 545-7411 or Myrtle Chalkley at 545-4413.

volunteers needed

Volunteer Resource Center

Many volunteer opportunities are available on post. If you are interested in learning new skills, increasing your proficiency, meeting new people and learning more about your community, volunteering is a one way to do so.

Currently, volunteers are needed for the following service positions:

• Relocation assistant — Army Community Service needs a relocation assistant to perform data entry, typing, filing, compiling and collating welcome packets and providing packets for mailing to other installations.

• Receptionist — Army Emergency Relief needs a receptionist to ensure client confidentiality, assist with clerical duties, ensure clients properly complete necessary forms, type, answer calls and take messages.

• Instructor — The Army Family Team Building Program needs instructors and clerical support. Instructor training will be provided.

• Receptionist — The Chaplain Family Life Center needs a receptionist to answer the telephone, take messages, provide basic information on services provided by the Center.

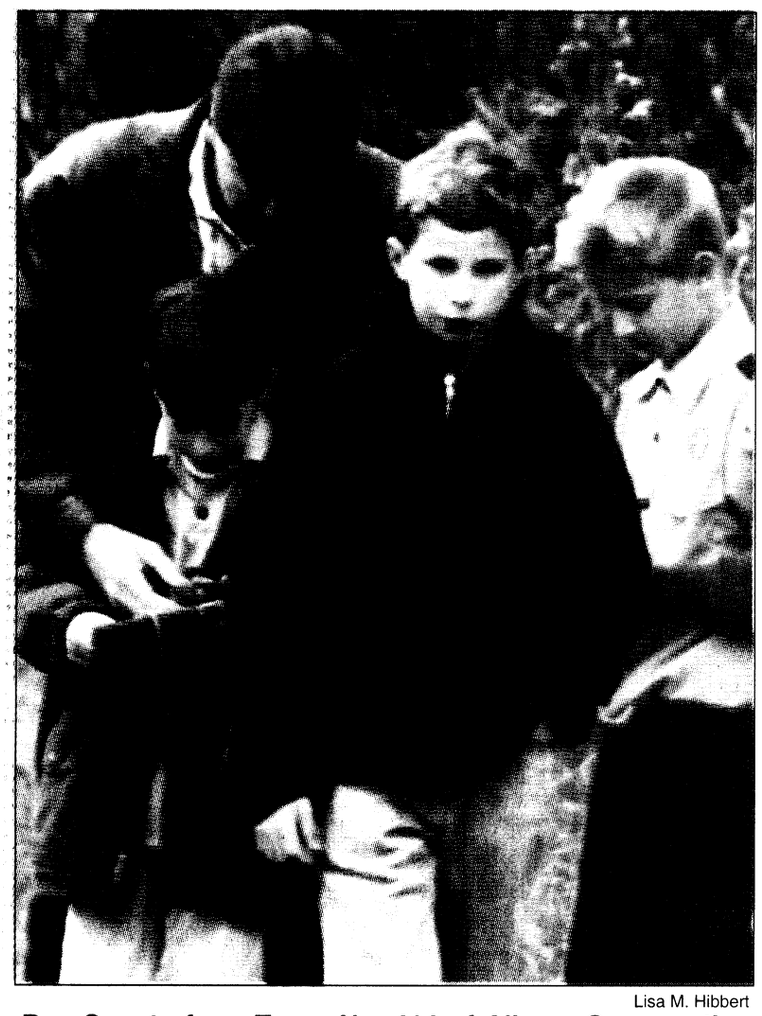
• Program assistant — Child Development Services needs a program assistant to assist care givers with daily activities and minor clerical duties.

• Receptionist — The Legal Assistance Division needs a receptionist to make appointments and provide information to clients.

• Volunteer Income Tax Assistance Office — needs electronic filing clerks, income tax preparers and receptionists to complete tax returns and assist individuals with tax returns and other clerical duties. Training by IRS and on-the-job training will be provided.

National Infantry Museum — needs volunteers to catalog and shelf books, file reference cards and catalog and file reference and artifacts and type historical data cards into the computer.

Public Affairs Office — needs an editorial assistant to assist the Command Information Office in publishing The Bayonet and producing "Fort Benning Today" and the Fort Benning radio news.



Religious Education Centers — need volunteers to teach various classes in a classroom setting.

Retirement Services Office — needs a receptionist to provide information to retirees, retiring soldiers and family members. Maintain library log, assist office staff and assemble handouts and retirement packets as needed.

Thrift Shop — needs taggers and writers

Many agencies pay for child care for their volunteers. If you are interested in volunteering, contact the Volunteer Resource Center at 545-5931 or 545-5602.

29th Inf teaches Boy Scouts land nav

Lisa M. Hibbert

Boy Scouts from Troop No. 414 of Albany Ga., practice land navigation skills on Sand Hill's U-1 Dec. 9.

By Lisa M. Hibbert
Bayonet staff writer

At Sand Hill's remote U-1 land navigation site, basic trainees are everywhere. Upon entering one of the low-flat buildings and hearing land navigational skills being taught, one would expect to see a room full of the camouflaged recruits.

Not in this classroom. Nineteen Boy Scouts from Troop No. 414 of the Southwest Georgia Council, Albany came to Fort Benning to work on earning their orienteering merit badges and to conduct a five-mile road march, said Scout Master Dale Wilson.

"I originally came to Company A, 2nd Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment, to ask if we could borrow some equipment so that we could teach the class (on navigating from point to point) ourselves," Wilson said. "But when I told them what I was trying to do, they volunteered to teach the class for us. I thought that was really nice of them."

Staff Sgt. Donald Pitts, Co. A., 2nd Bn, 29th Inf. Regt., was the instructor for the day.

"We conduct land navigation training for all of the Junior ROTC programs in the county," Sgt. 1st Class Joseph Young, range noncommissioned officer in charge, Co. A., 2nd Bn, 29th Inf. Regt. "We do this as a way of helping the community."

"It's good to work with motivated people," Pitts said. "We can't be as hard on them as we can be on 'Joe,' but we try to have fun with them."

The Boy Scouts learned how to read six- and eight-digit grid coordinates and how to read and hold a compass.

The second part of the day was spent outdoors by getting pace counts and learning how to actually find markers in the field.

Scout Duncan Singletary said that he was excited about trying to find the points but also said that he really wished one of the trainees could help him out.

"I know they won't have any trouble finding their points," Singletary said. "They're in the Army; they have to know how to do this stuff."

After the Scouts completed their land navigation class, they journeyed over to Main Post for their five-mile hike.

Before leaving, the troop presented Pitts with a plaque of appreciation.

ON POST

Girl Scouts cookie sales — Girl Scouts will begin selling cookies Jan. 5. Cookie orders help fund Girl Scouts activities.

For more information, call Barbara Singleton at 689-7627.

Trash collection holiday schedule — The trash collection schedule in Fort Benning's family housing areas for the federal holidays, Dec. 25, Jan. 1 and 15 is as follows:

Trash and recycling will be picked up as normally scheduled in family housing areas Tuesday through Friday. However, there will be no yard waste collection Dec. 25, Jan. 1 and 15. Yard waste will be picked up Jan. 8 and 22.

For more information, call the Construction Inspection Branch of the Directorate of Public Works at 545-4749.

Class Six operating hours — The Class Six store on Main Post will be open from 11 a.m. to 6 p.m. each Sunday throughout December.

Leaders needed — The Fort Benning Girl Scouts are seeking leaders and co-leaders to be role models and help out the team.

For more information, call Barbara Singleton at 689-7627.

Fund-raiser — Wilson Elementary School Parent-Teacher Organization will be collecting box tops from General Mills Cereal boxes through February.

The PTO will use the money to purchase special projects for the school. General Mills will pay the school 25 cents for every box top turned in by Feb. 29. The entire flap that says "best if used by" should be turned in, according to coordinators.

If you do not have children at Wilson Elementary School but would like to participate in this project, call Dorothy White at 682-6902 or Marla Jewell at 689-5354. Arrangements will be made for someone to pick up your box tops.

Holiday Gift Shop — The Wilson Elementary School Parent-Teacher Organization announces the opening of the Holiday Gift Shop, which is a fund-raising project that allows children to shop for gifts for their parents, grandparents and siblings.

Parents, neighbors and friends may also shop. Prices range from 10 cents to $7 and gifts can be stocking stuffers.

The gift shop will be open from 8:30 a.m. until 3:30 p.m. today, Monday, Wednesday and Thursday. It will be open from 8:30 a.m. until 2:30 p.m. Tuesday. The shop will open Saturday from 9 a.m. to 2 p.m. (Hours are subject to change, and the shop will be open before and after the Christmas Concert Thursday.)

Wilson Elementary School is located in Indianhead Terrace at 112 Lavoie Ave.

For more information, contact Dorothy White (682-6902) or Marla Jewell (689-5354).

Tour of homes —The Fort Benning Officers' Wives' Club has arranged a "tour of homes" for Wednesday from 5 to 9 p.m. The tour will begin with refreshments at Riverside, home to Maj. Gen. John W. Hendrix and his wife, Cheri. The tour will continue on to the historical Mahaffrey House and several other homes in the main post housing area.

Admission is $5, and the tour is open to the Fort Benning community and their guests. Tickets may be purchased at Riverside, beginning at 5 p.m. Wednesday.

Blood drive — The American Red Cross is sponsoring a blood drive at Fort Benning today from 9:30 a.m. to 3 p.m. at Building 4 in Classroom 3.

Carlson Wagonlit Travel — Carlson Wagonlit Travel is offering local bus trips starting in December, scheduling trips to Biloxi, Miss., and to New Orleans.

Interested persons can sign up in advance.

The travel service is also accepting suggestions for other trips in the tri-state area. For more information, call 687-2679.

Puppies for adoption — A litter of seven puppies were born Nov. 8 at the Adopt-A-Pet facility. They will be adoptable Dec. 20 when they are six weeks of age.

At that time, they will be due for their first, in a series of three, vaccinations and a general deworming at the expense of the adopting family, about $10.60.

There are six males (two black, three brown, one white with black spots) and one female (black). The puppies and their mother will be adopted on a first-come, first-served basis only.

The Veterinary Treatment Facility hours on Dec. 20 will be 8 to 11:30 a.m.

Employment assistance — Army Community Service's Family Member Employment Assistance Program is implementing a new service to those seeking employment.

The first and third Wednesday of each month, local area temporary agencies will be available at the Family Unit Network Center, Building 359, from 1:30 to 3:30 p.m.

The agencies will have application forms, and representatives will be available to answer any questions concerning their services. All agencies' services are free.

For more information, call Mark Mills, acting manager, FMEAP, at 545-6969 or 545-5516.

Christmas tree sales — Boy Scouts will be selling a wide variety of Georgia and Wisconsin evergreens through Dec. 23.

The trees will be available at the lot in front of the Post Exchange at the Main Mall seven days a week from 9 a.m. to 9 p.m. Prices range from $8 to $40.

Cookbook sales — The 2nd Battalion, 18th Infantry Regiment, 3rd Brigade, 24th Infantry Division (Mechanized), Family Support Group is raising funds to help families and soldiers of the battalion by selling "The Vanguard Cooking" book.

It contains more than 150 recipes and $3.60 in coupons. Cost is $7.50, and all funds go to the battalion family support group.

For more information, call Connie Zahn at 687-6841 or Stephanie Mello at 689-5284.

Tot Town special hours — Tot Town Child Development Center is open every morning at 6:30.

Also, to help with Christmas shopping, Tot Town offers extended hours Tuesday evenings beginning.

Through Dec. 22, Tot Town will remain open every Friday night. If there are enough requests, the center will open for New Year's Eve.

Reservations are strongly encouraged so the center can be properly staffed and patrons not turned away.

For other group requests or for more information, call 689-8772 or 689-8698.

Food locker — The Army Community Service is soliciting for organizations and activities to conduct food drives for the emergency food locker. ACS provides food to needy families in the community.

The food locker must be replenished to meet continuing daily and holiday requirements.

For more information call 545-2536, 545-4043 or 545-7517.

Tower of light

About 500 airborne soldiers and their family members were on hand Dec. 9 for the lighting of the airborne tower. The ceremony came as a grand finale of the battalion's Christmas party. Lt. Col. Thomas E. Sittnick, 1st Battalion (Airborne), 507th Infantry, commander, was in charge of the ceremony. Children participated in a drawing to determine who would have the opportunity to flip the power switch. The towers will stay lighted throughout the holiday season.

Frank Vega, 9, son of Staff Sgt. Frank and Rita Vega of the 1st Battalion (Airborne), 507th Infantry, flips the switch to turn on the airborne tower, while Desiree Luna, 4, daughter of 1st Sgt. Angel and Nagai Luna, watches.

The 250-foot airborne tower brightens the holiday season.

Christmas can be a lonely time

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Christmas — that season of seasons, when cheer and goodwill toward men run freely and "the blues" seem to disappear.

Sounds of carols fill the air as people rush from store to store and make the party rounds.

Friends and family come together in a way like at no other time of the year.

Yet, for many, the Christmas season is the loneliest and most depressing time of the year, experts say.

For many people, feelings of depression seem to magnify during this season when a major emphasis is placed on togetherness and mingling with others.

Feelings of being lonely and cut off from family and friends can trigger emotional distress and bring about feelings of hopelessness and helplessness, according to Yvonne Wilbanks, coordinator of Fort Benning's Civilian Counseling Services, Alcohol and Drug Abuse Prevention and Control Program.

These in turn may lead to thoughts that the problems of life are too much to handle and that death might be a quick and easy solution, she said.

Some signs that a person may be emotionally distressed are: changes in eating and sleeping habits, withdrawal form family and friends, an unwillingness to participate in holiday functions, unusual neglect in appearance, giving of extravagant Christmas gifts or personal possessions for no apparent reason, unexplained, extreme personality change or thinking or talking about suicide.

If a person mentions suicide, take all threats seriously and trust your suspicions, Wilbanks said. Answer all "cries for help" whether they are verbal or shown through actions.

Confront the person directly and encourage that person to seek professional help, she said, and enlist the aid of someone who is in charge of the individual to take positive action.

The holidays are a happy time, but not for all. Being a true friend to those having problems could be the best present they receive this season.

Choose safety this year

For the best in sports pick up a Bayonet

Egleston Children's Health Care Center

Choosing gifts for our children and watching the excitement as they open the packages, are among the best parts of the holidays.

To help make sure the gifts you give your child are safe, Maryann Johnston, emergency center nurse, at Egleston Children's Hospital at Emory University in Atlanta, offers these tips:

• Make sure infant toys are large enough that they can't get lodged in an infant's throat. Avoid toys with small, removable parts until children are at least four years old.

• Choose toys without long strings or cords, which could cause strangulation in infants and very young children.

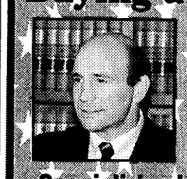
• Toys with sharp points, glass or metal edges should not be given to children under eight.

• Look for safety labels, including "flame retardant and flame resistant" on any fabric products and on stuffed toys and dolls.

• Follow age recommendations. Some toys are recommended for older children because they may be hazardous for younger children.

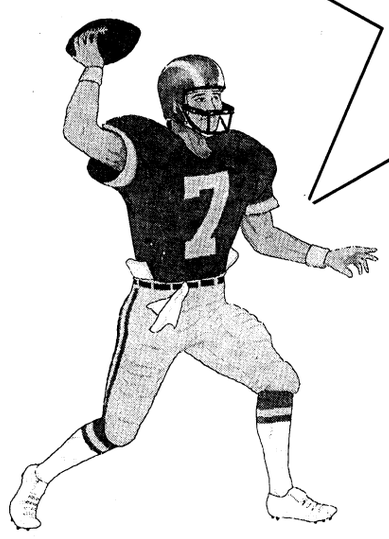
• Avoid dart guns or other toys that might be capable of firing articles not intended for use in the toy, such as pencils or nails.

Any arrow or dart for children should have soft cork tips, rubber suction cups or other protective tips.



• Keep in mind that stocking stuffers, by nature small and inexpensive, can be dangerous for young children.

Stocking stuffers should be chosen with the same caution as other gifts.



• Remember, if your child will be receiving any riding toy with wheels this year, such as a bicycle, skates or a skateboard, make sure she also receives a helmet.

For roller skates, in-line skates and skateboards, knee and elbow pads and wrist guards are also recommended.

• When opening gifts, tie any large plastic wrappings from toy packaging in a knot and dispose of it immediately so the child doesn't play with it and accidentally become smothered.

Hanukkah

Jewish 'Festival of Lights' celebrates liberation

By Marshall H. Peterson
USAIC Chaplain Office

Hanukkah is the Celebration of Lights, and although it is numbered among the insignificant Jewish religious festivals, it is second only to Passover in historical importance.

reflections

Both festivals celebrate historic events of liberation.

Thirteen hundred years after the first Passover and the deliverance of the Jews from Egypt, Antiochus IV, also called Epiphanes, "The Risen God," ruthlessly sought to suppress the Jewish people during the period 168 to 165 B.C.

He tried to end Jewish religious and cultural distinctiveness in order to create a monolithic Hellenic empire. He planned to forcibly convert the Jewish people to Greek polytheism.

His three-point plan called for the following:

• Jews to publicly profane the Sabbath and feasts and pollute the Jewish sanctuary (the holy of holies)

• Building pagan altars and temples

• Forbidding circumcision.

Antiochus desecrated the temple by raising a gigantic statue of Zeus Olympus on the pedestal behind the altar of sacrifice, Dec. 15 (15 Kislev) 168 B.C., and sacrificing a pig on the temple altar.

Lewd revelry filled the temple court. Jews refusing to participate were slain by the thousands. Countless others hid in caves, starved and were hunted.

Fiery affliction fanned the members of Jewish faith into a flame that consumed the nation. Martyrdom was idealized, and dying to sanctify the name was greatly honored.

Deeds of heroism and self-immolation resulted. Guerrilla bands bravely fought trained professional Seleucid troops. By following a Hamonean priest, Matthias, and his sons, they routed the armies and won decisively in 165 B. C.

The face of divine providence had smiled upon the Jewish nation, but the temple lay profaned; its gates burned. Judah Maccabee (The Hammerer) ordered it cleansed, and new holy vessels were made.

The statue of Zeus was smashed; the temple court was cleared. The sanctuary was purified, three years to the day after Antiochus had set up the statue of Zeus in the temple and offered a sacrifice to his god.

Judah the Maccabee rededicated the temple and ordered every Jew to celebrate Hanukkah for eight days "to the end of time." Nightly, Jews lighted candles, beginning with one and lighting a new candle each evening, adding it to the others. Hence it is called the "Festival of Lights." The nine-branched menorah is its familiar symbol.

Hanukkah is not merely a commemorative event, but a festival of rejoicing in the triumph of freedom. Traditionally, Jewish families sing songs of praise and thanksgiving solemnizing the menorah's lighting, exalting God as Israel's deliverer.

The family participates in lighting the menorah at home, and family members recite the appropriate benediction, "Blessed be the Lord our God, King of the Universe, who hast sanctified us by they commandments and enjoined us to rekindle the Hanukkah lamp, and blessed is he who has done wondrous things for our fathers in days gone by, at this time of the season."

Difficult times, situations test one's faith in God

reflections

By Mark A. Zerger
2nd Battalion, 54th Infantry Regiment

"I can do everything through Him who gives me strength." (Philippians. 4:13, NIV)

The apostle Paul wrote these words during a tough time in his life. Paul wrote these words while he was in a Roman prison for his faith around 63 A.D.

In those tough days, the world did not adhere to religious freedom. Paul, in spite of his tough situation, was inspired to write the words in Philippians 4:13, which have inspired millions of people throughout the last two millennia.

All of us can remember some particularly tough time in our life. I can remember one of the toughest situations I ever experienced.

It all began when I was 19 years old. I had been out of high school all summer. I had no plans for college. I had thought long and hard about joining the Marines and had just about talked myself into it.

I grew up on a small wheat and dairy farm near Hennessey, Okla. One day while I was at home by myself I decided it was time. I drove my car to Enid where the nearest Marine recruiter was located.

I took a deep breath and went up to the door. The sign said, "gone to lunch."

I started to leave when a friendly Army staff sergeant said, "Hey, young man, where you going?" I explained to him that I had come to see the Marine recruiter, but he was not in.

"Well, this is your lucky day! Come on in and talk to me," the Army staff sergeant said.

When times are tough, the Lord is by our side to hook us up to his power and strength and help us through difficult situations

I sat and listened to him talk about the Army airborne infantry. He assured me that it was a lot better than the Marines. His sales pitch worked, and I drove back to Hennessey and told my folks that I had joined the Army paratroopers. My mom and dad tried to look happy. A couple of weeks later, I was off to basic training and advanced individual training.

Finally, after 16 weeks, I arrived at Fort Benning. We were greeted by an airborne instructor who looked like a powerlifter.

"Welcome to jump school, gentlemen," he said. "This is where we separate the men from the boys." (Keep in mind this was June 1972.) We all began to speak with deeper voices.

Ground week and tower week went by under the hot Georgia sun. After a few thousand pushups and knee bends, I thought the worst was over. I was pretty confident about jump week.

The weekend passed, and the following Monday we went down to the airstrip, put on our parachutes and prepared to board a C-130.

When I approached the airplane with those engines roaring in my ears, I began to lose my confidence. I realized I had never even been on an airplane. Suddenly it occurred to me how scared I was!

Adrenaline and sheer will carried me up the ramp and into the plane. As the C-130 left the ground, my heart pounded. Finally, the jump master gave the command to stand up and hook up. My wobbly legs lifted me, but my hands were numb with fear. Anxiously I fidgeted with my static line, but my fingers were useless and I could not unhook it from my reserve.

Suddenly a black baseball cap appeared by my side. I was sure that I would be in trouble, but instead the instructor reached down, unhooked my static line and hooked me up. Then he patted me on the shoulder and said, "You'll be OK, soldier."

I was able to shuffle to the door and basically fall out that first jump.

I've often thought back over the years and realized how much God is like that noncommissioned officer who helped me on that first tough jump.

When times are tough, the Lord is by our side to hook us up to his power and strength and help us through difficult situations. "God is our refuge and strength, a very present help in trouble." (Psalms 46:1 NASV)

Blessed are the peacemakers

reflections

By Anibal Cruz-Baez
School of the Americas

The School of the Americas conducted its Seventh Latin American Conference Nov. 15 through 17. The theme of the conference was "Peace Operations."

Senior military officers from Canada, the United States and Latin America; and university professors, college students and dignitaries from various countries attended and participated in the conference.

They interacted with each other and with the faculty and the students of the Command and General Staff Course of the SOA.

During the conference, some of the teachings of Jesus Christ in the Beatitudes were discussed, particularly: "Blessed are the peacemakers: for they shall be called children of God." (Matt. 5:9 KJV)

Throughout the conference, participants learned how represented nations had been peacemakers and peacekeepers in Haiti, Bosnia, Somalia, El Salvador, and many other countries. Although faced with trouble in peacemaking, they made peace. They brought hope, and people began to live in and enjoy freedom.

The scripture referenced above is a part of the sermon on the mount, which Jesus preached to the multitude. It is a training tool for his disciples in preparing them for work.

"The process of obtaining peace must begin with educating our people, our leaders, and our governments," said Dr. Francisco B. Riera, dean and professor at the University for Peace in Costa Rica. "Peace is not an object that is brought in and deposited in any given environment or situation. Peace is a process that must be cultivated within a person's heart, mind and conscience. It is a process that transmits to others as time passes."

In a different.way and time, Riera echoes Jesus Christ's message that peace must be taught first.

Peace must be taught to loved ones, friends and fellow human. Peace must be taken to places where turmoil reigns and become a part of the peacemaking and peacekeeping operations.

"Blessed are the peacemakers".... is an important statement. Peacemaking is bringing people, families, communities, and countries together.

It is establishing harmony among all humankind and their creator. It is solving differences and changing feelings toward one another; eliminating hate and strife; silencing tongues; and building strong and friendly relationships. It is sharing who we are, what we have, and what we know with those in need.

True peacemakers love peace, and they actively confront trouble. There are those who claim to love peace but remove themselves from all trouble.

They ignore and flee from threatening situations and often evade issues. Usually, they make no attempt to bring peace between others but criticize those who do.

The peacemakers to whom Christ is referring face trouble no matter how dangerous and work to bring a true peace no matter how difficult the struggle might be.

Nonetheless, peace must spread without forceful means. Some of the ways to spread peace are through negotiations, talks, and treaties.

These activities provide the parties involved with the opportunity of accepting that peace is the only rational answer to their problems. Sometimes, however, a show of force and deployment of combat troops is needed to reach a goal of peace.

Although this is not the best way, occasionally, it is the only way for troublemakers to understand that their actions are wrong and dehumanizing.

When our military deploys to countries where there is chaos, they deploy with the mission of making peace and ending hate, division and death.

Peacemaking is not getting ourselves in someone else's business, but caring, sharing and respecting humankind and responding to the cry for life and freedom.

"Blessed are the peacemakers ..."

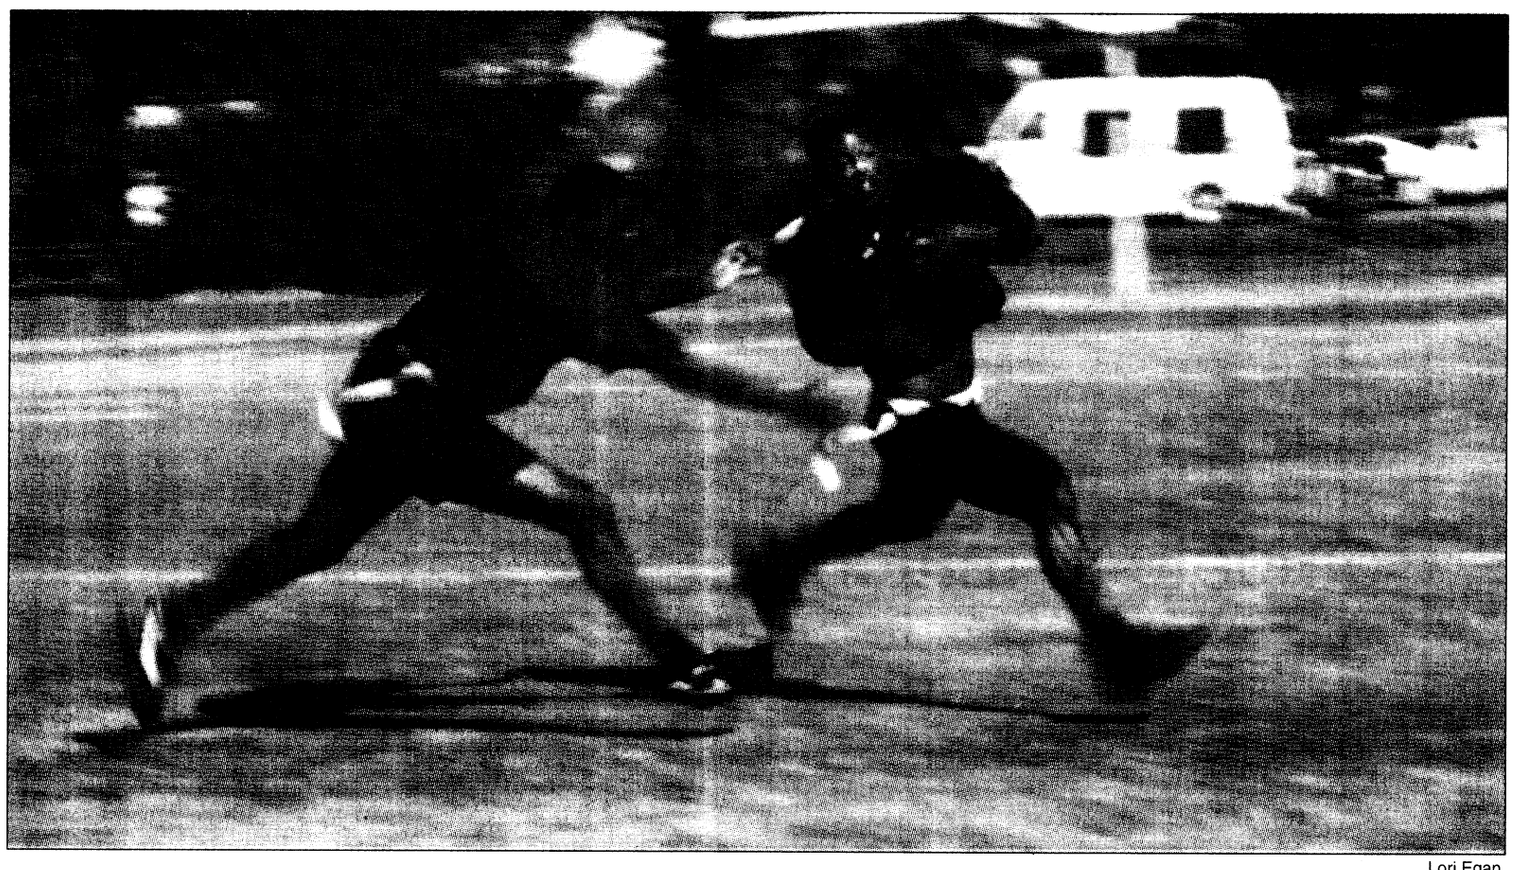
USAIC FLAG FOOTBALL CHAMPIONSHIP

Head Hunters win championship game Dec 2

By Lori Egan
Bayonet staff writer

The top two teams in the U.S. Army Infantry Center flag football championship met in Doughboy Stadium Dec. 2, and, when the dust settled the final score was Head Hunters 18, Red Dawgs 6.

The Head Hunters, Headquarters and Headquarters Battery, 4th Battalion, 41st Field Artillery Regiment, 3rd Brigade, 24th Infantry Division (Mechanized) flag football team, cannibalized the Red Dawgs from Service Battery, 4th Bn., 41st FA.



This game was the third confrontation between the two. In the regular season, the Head Hunters won once and then the Red Dawgs returned the favor in the brigade tournament at Kelley Hill.

"Because of the history between the two teams, this game means a lot," said Chris Mason, coach of the Red Dawgs. "It's personal today — we're the brigade champs, and we want to be the post champs."

But the Head Hunters felt the same way, which set the tone for the game.

The first half of the game began with the Head Hunters receiving the football and moving the ball into scoring position in a couple plays.

The Head Hunters first six points came early in the game when the quarterback Anthony Waste ran the ball into the end zone.

Lori Egan

Red Dawgs' Kevin Sidbury looks for yardage while trying to evade a Head Hunter defensive player who is reaching for the flag during the USAIC Flag Football Championship Dec. 2 at Doughboy Stadium.

The Head Hunter defense stopped the Red Dawgs offense cold by not allowing a first down.

The Head Hunters added another six points to their score when Stevie Pringle caught a pass in the end zone. The score was now 12-0.

The Head Hunter defense once again stopped the Red Dawgs when Sterling Thomas intercepted the quarterback's pass.

Several penalties and a strong defense stopped the Head Hunters momentum and the ball changed possession when Waste kicked the ball downfield and the Red Dawgs took possession near their 20-yard line.

Quarterback Lamonous Bonner passed to Kevin Sidbury, but a strong Head Hunter defense prevented Sidbury from getting the first down and the Head Hunters took possession of the pigskin.

The first half of the championship game ended with the Head Hunters leading the Red Dawgs 12-0.

The Red Dawgs received the kickoff from the Head Hunters to begin the second half of play, but the Head Hunter defense stopped the offense and the ball changed hands again.

The Red Dawgs defense held the Head Hunters until Ansel Fambrough broke free and caught, bobbled and then recaught the ball in the end zone. The score was Head Hunters 18, Red Dawgs 0.

The Red Dawgs quickly turned the kickoff into six points when Sidbury made their first and only touchdown of the game.

The Head Hunters stopped the conversion attempt when Sterling Thomas intercepted the ball in the end zone.

When the dust settled, Head Hunters were crowned the post champions.

"Our whole game plan was to stop their running game," said Kalvin L. Cain, coach of the Head Hunters. "They have a good running game, and we knew we needed to make them throw the ball if we were to win. They're a good team with good players, and we knew we needed to stop the running game to be post champions."

Shooters engage targets at pistol match

Salaries cause concern

By Brian R. Voller
Bayonet staff writer

Brian R. Voller thinks professional athletes make too much money.

In a recent issue of USA Today sports section in a box surrounded by lots of statistics hidden among lots and lots of grey copy was a listing of the richest players in sports.

SIMPLY SPORTS

The title of the box was "Richest of the Rich," and it listed the 40 athletes who earned the most money in 1995, as estimated by Forbes in its Dec. 18 issue. Basically, Forbes calculated the total amount of money earned by professional athletes, legally that is, to include endorsements, personal appearances and signing incentive bonuses.

After I finished reading the entire box, I realized how truly out of whack the priorities of the general population are. We pay athletes an absolutely stupid amount of money, and I can't comprehend why anyone deserves so much money to play a sport.

Allow me to run down some of the salaries of these athletes.

Michael Jordan of the Chicago Bulls, the highest paid athlete, only earns $3.9 million as a base salary, as if $3.9 million is causing him to live at the poverty level. But Jordan earns a whopping $40 million in endorsements, which causes him to rise to the top of the earnings category.

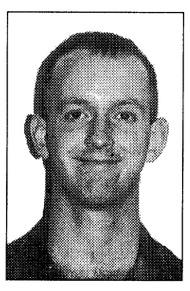
Ex-con Mike Tyson took in the second spot earning a whopping $40 million for beating the snot out of that no-named loser in that stupid Pizza Hut commercial. Tyson could single-handedly wipe out the world hunger problem if he would beat up more people and donate more money to charity. But, call me crazy; I don't think that's going to happen any time soon.

In third place was Deion Sanders. According to Forbes, he earned $16.5 million in salary and $6 million in endorsement money. I have a hard time believing these numbers. I could have sworn I heard Sanders was earning enough money to buy Mexico. The report said these numbers included both football and baseball salaries, which makes it even harder for me to believe.

The rest of the list reads like a who's who of professional sports. All the big names are here, including Andre Agassi, who earned $16 million; Jack Nicklaus, who earned $15.1 million putting a ball in a hole; and a whole slew of other people whose salaries basically made me sick to my stomach.

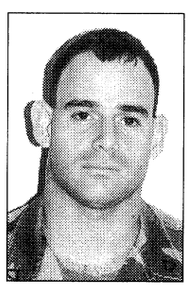
The combined salaries of the top 40 richest athletes in professional sports was $502.5 million.

It seems to me this money could be spent in more beneficial ways.



For example, most of the people in the teaching profession don't make in a lifetime what Tyson made in one night. Someone please justify how a man can get paid $40 million to beat up another man, but the people who teach tomorrow's leaders and educate the world get paid less than a mediocre minor league baseball player.

Or lets talk National Defense, considering I'm in the Army and all. We work in a strictly volunteer Army. We have volunteered to give our lives in defense of this country, yet we get paid about the same as those guys who mop up the sweat on a basketball court when Jordan falls down. How does that work?



Some people out there might say I'm just jealous of their financial success. You're darn right I am! Somewhere along the way some really foolish people got the idea that professional athletes deserve this much money. I say we need to rethink that idea and start putting the money where it belongs and where it would benefit the most people.

SHOOTERS: Compete in match

The top three finishers in the men's military division were; Parker Shipley in first place with a score of 158, a time of 57.49 and a hit factor of 2.748. John Bristow finished in second place with a score of 165, a time of 64.94 and a hit factor of 2.541. Richard Bass finished in the third place spot with a score of 150, a time of 65.41 and a hit factor of 2.293.

The top three finishers in the female division were; Valerie Long finished in first place with a score of 155, a time of 111.17 and a hit factor of 1.394. Kim Tuthill finished in second place with a score of 100, a time of 139.24 and a hit factor of .718. Marilyn Stull finished out the category in third place with a score of 98, a time of 145.96 and a hit factor of .671.

The December pistol match brought out 64 competitors who competed in three different shooting scenarios.

The first firing position consisted of a scenario of the shooters firing their pistols through a mock car door.

"At this station, you are going to be limited on how you can engage targets," said Jim Graham, manager of the pistol club. "It doesn't matter if you stand sit or kneel, your arms have to be through the window, which forces you to adjust to engage the targets."

The second firing position challenged the shooters with a strong hand, weak hand firing scenario.

"This position is everybody's favorite," said Graham. "It really test how good you're firing skills are. Anyone can fire with their strong hand, and almost no one practices with their weak hand. So, this portion of the competition really brings everyone down to a level playing field."

Th final firing position was the movement to engagement firing position.

"After firing six rounds into stationary targets, the shooter must run about 20 feet to engage targets," Graham said. "Now, a normal human's heart rate will go up pretty substantially in that little run from one point to the other, so it is in the best interest of the shooter to use a prone firing position to engage the last targets."

The next Tactical Pistol Match will be conducted Jan. 6 at 10 a.m. There will be a new category added to the competition called the team trophy. This competition will consist of a two-person team, one male and one female.

AMU shooters win match

By Paula J. Randall
USAMU Public Affairs Office

The U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit's Service Rifle team won the 1995 Mini-Interservice Match in Okeechobee, Fla., Sunday, while individual shooters walked away with their own titles over the weekend.

In the team championships Sunday, the USAMU team, coached by Staff Sgt. Carl O. Dooley, took first place with a score of 1,936 out of possible 2,000.

Team members were Sgt. 1st Class Kenneth V. Gill with a score of 489, Sgt. Steven K. Armstrong with a score of 487, Spc. Norman L. Anderson with a score of 484 and Cpl. Grant L. Singley with a score of 476; all individual scores were out of a possible 500.

The U.S. Marine Corps team took second place with a score of 1,919 and the U.S. Army Reserve came in third with 1,910.

The team competition combines the scores of four separate events. In each, competitors fire 10 or 20 shots with the modified M-16A2, each under different conditions.

First, shooters fire 10 shots each at 200 yards standing, then 10 rapid-fire shots at 200 yards sitting, followed by 10 shots at 300 yards prone and 20 shots at 600 yards prone.

In the individual championships Saturday, USAMU shooter Sgt. Lewis A. Tippie took second place with a score of 1,468 out of 1,500.

Marine Corps shooters took first and third place.

In the individual competition, shooters fire 20 shots at 200 yards standing, then 20 rapid-fire shots at 200 yards sitting, followed by 20 rapid-fire shots at 300 yards prone and two sets of 20 shots each at 600 yards prone.

USAMU shooters swept the 600-yard any rifle, any sight individual competition Dec. 8. Using 300 Winchester Magnums with scopes, Gill not only took first place with a perfect score of 200 with 17 bull's eyes out of a possible 20, but also tied the range record.

Spc. Barry L. Coleman came in second with a score of 199 with 12 bull's eyes and tied for third place were Sgt. 1st Class John O. Chubb and Sgt. Bruce A. McCauley with scores of 199 with 8 bull's eyes. Also, Spc. Tobie L. Tomlinson won the 600-yard standing jackpot match.

USAMU shooters use a modified M-16A2 exclusively in competition and they are the only service team that does so, said David I. Boyd, USAMU chief of competition.

The modified M-16A2 was designed by USAMU gunsmiths, and has yet to be matched for accuracy in competition, Boyd said.

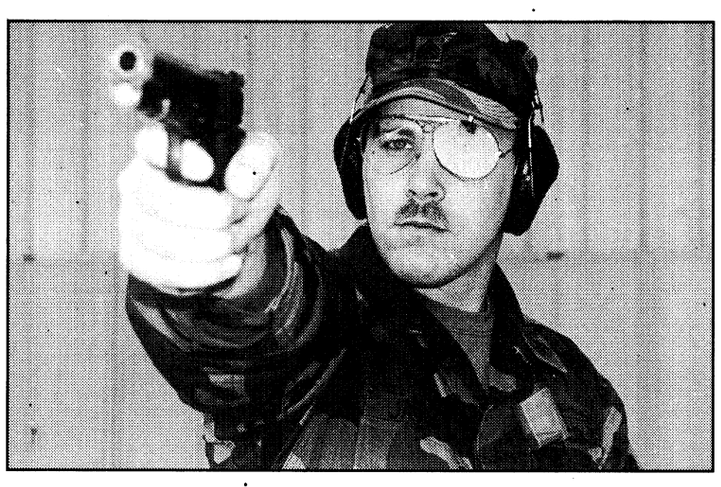
Shooter hits the bull's eye



By Paula J. Randall
U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit

The U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit service pistol team took top honors at the West Coast Nationals in San Diego, Calif., Dec. 1 to 3.

USAMU service pistol shooter Sgt. Roger C. Jacobson was the overall winner with a score of 2,646 our of a possible 2,700. Out of 270 shots, Jacobson hit 143 bull's eyes.

The USAMU team, coached by Ray Arredondo, placed first with a score of 3,495 out of 3,600. The four-man team was made up of Jacobson, Capt. Steven King, Staff Sgt. Benjamin V. Blackmore and Pfc. Fritz A. Ficke.

"What made this a really good match was all the best shooters in the country were present so the competition was really good," Jacobson said. Jacobson, who began shooting in 1990, has numerous shooting accomplishments. He is the U.S. Army Combat Arms Match Rifle champion, the NRA Indoor Championships champion, the Pensacola Regionals champion and a four-time Panama champion.

Sgt. Roger J. Jacobson fires a .45-caliber pistol.

He enlisted in the Army in 1986 and completed basic and advanced infantry training at Fort Benning. He was stationed in Illeshiem, Germany, where he served as both a dragon gunner and track commander and was later assigned to the 1st Battalion, 18th Infantry Regiment, where he was a squad leader and track commander. He was stationed at Fort Clayton, Panama, where he was a team leader with the 534th Military Police Company, before he was assigned to the USAMU in 1993.

His awards and decorations include five Army commendation medals, two Army Achievement Medals, the Parachutist Badge, the Expert Infantryman Badge, the Distinguished Pistol Shot Badge, the Silver Rifle Excellence in Competition Badge and the President's Hundred Tab.

Erratic acting lures catch fish

By Earl Bentz and Steve Price
Outboard Marine Corporation

Professional bass tournament angler Ken Cook has won a fishing world championship as well as a lot of money just by doing something different after he makes a cast.

It's the way he retrieves his lures that sets the angler apart. He tries to make each retrieve different so his lures act more erratic than normal.

"Most fishermen will stop and start their retrieves for a few minutes, then revert back to a straight retrieve," Cook said, a former fisheries biologist. "I try to do something different every time, and I do it with all my lures."

Erratic retrieves with spinner baits are perhaps the most widely practiced, and, in fact, that's how Cook won the Bass Masters Classic world championship in 1991. He ran his spinner bait into clumps of vegetation, then let the lure flitter down into the greenery rather than skim over the top of it.

Cook also practices his erratic retrieves with crankbaits, and it involves more than the simple stop-and-go most fishermen use.

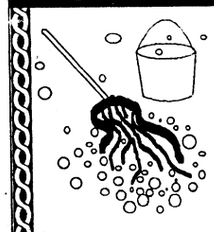
"One of the retrieves I like, especially when I'm using a crankbait in deep water," Cook said, "is to reel the lure down so it hits the bottom, then stop my retrieve and start shaking my rod.

"The lure stops but instead of rising straight up, it acts crazy and jumps around in different directions. Then, after a couple of seconds, I start reeling again and that's when the strikes most often happen."

According to Cook, in most deep cranking, every key piece of structure usually has some type of cover on it, such as stumps, rocks, or even vegetation. This is what he's trying to hit with his crankbait when he reels down and then starts his rod shaking.

"Bass feed on baitfish that are injured or that get separated from the school," Cook said, "and anything a fisherman can do to make his lure act differently from other lures will be to his advantage.

"I honestly believe with all the fishermen on the water these days that bass are becoming familiar with certain lures, or at least with the sound waves those lures present.



"Whenever you change your retrieve to make your lure do something different, you're altering that sound wave pattern and it helps get the attention of the fish."

Cook said erratic retrieves can be made with any lure, and that the angler's imagination is the only limit as to what can be done on a retrieve.

"At times, a really fast retrieve works with a topwater lure," Cook said. 'I've seen times when simply letting a spoon sit in the water and an unwinding line drew strikes.

"We never know exactly what triggers a bass to strike, but I am convinced that fish definitely like something erratic," Cook said.

Tides influence fishing

By Earl Bentz and Steve Price
Outboard marine Corporation

Of all the challenges professional bass tournament anglers face in a year of fishing, competing on rivers influenced by tidal flow ranks as one of the toughest.

"Tides change the water depth, which in turn changes the location of the fish, so you have to plan your strategy according to the tides more than the bass themselves," said veteran fisherman Guy Eaker.

Eaker said he normally prefers to fish falling or outgoing tides, since these tend to draw baitfish out of protective cover and cause bass to become more active. Slack tide can also provide good fishing before the incoming tide starts.

"Several weeks ago, I fished a national tournament on the Potomac River near Waldorf, Maryland," Eaker said. "The difference between high and low tide water levels was more than two feet. That is a huge volume of water to deal with, and if you don't catch fish at just the right time, you're lost for the day.

"It's not that the bass necessarily move very far when the tide changes, but rather, they just stop biting. During that tournament on the Potomac, two competitors were fishing a spot that looked like it should have bass everywhere, but they never had a hit.

"Then the tide changed and they caught three bass over five pounds in less than 15 minutes without ever moving their boat "

Eaker said that outgoing tides present another problem, which is that it can strand a fisherman in a shallow creek or bay.

"That has happened to a lot of bass fisherman," Eaker said. "We get so engrossed in the area we're fishing, especially if the bass are biting, that we stay too long. When that happens, you either have to get out and push your boat back to deeper water, or simply wait six hours until the tide changes again."

One of the techniques Eaker and his fellow competitors often use is to run with a tide. They may work their way downstream with an outgoing tide, or fish upstream by staying just ahead of an incoming tide.

"Either way, you have to do some careful planning," he said. "The prime time for a particular area seldom lasts very long, so you have to be there when it does occur."

Bosnian conflict: from beginning to present

U.S. Department of State

• Strains within Yugoslavia's federated system emerged after Tito's death in 1980. Yugoslavia, an ethnically and religiously diverse federation of six republics and two autonomous provinces, operated under a collective government after his death.

• Spring of 1990, democratic elections following the collapse of the communist system brought nationalist and independence-minded governments to power in the in western-most republics of Slovenia and Croatia as well as in Serbia.

• June 1991, Croatia and Slovenia declared their independence. This set off a brief conflict between Slovenes and the Yugoslav. Army and a protracted crisis in Croatia between the newly independent government in Croatia and the Serbian minority in Croatia ("Krajina Serbs"), supported by the Yugoslav military. By the end of 1991, the Krajina Serbs had gained control of nearly one-third of the country.

• September 1991, in order to stem the fighting, the UN Security Council imposed an arms embargo against all of the former Yugoslavia. The Secretary General also launched a mediation effort under former U.S. Secretary of State Cyrus Vance, which led to a cease-fire agreement in Croatia in early 1992 and the deployment of the first UN peacekeepers during the winter of 1992.

• January 1992, while the mediation efforts were ongoing, the European Community (now the European Union), after considerable internal debate, decided to recognize Croatia and Slovenia's independence.

• March 1992, voters in Bosma overwhelmingly approved independence in a vote boycotted by Bosnian Serbs. Almost immediately, the Bosnian Serbs, backed by the Serbian-controlled Yugoslav army, began forcible resistance to Bosnia's independence. By the end of spring 1992, Bosnian Serbs, who had significant military superiority, especially in heavy weapons, achieved control over more than 60 percent of Bosnia's territory.

• April 1992, the EU recognized Bosnia. The United States, which had declined to recognize Croatia and Slovenia earlier, recognized Bosnia and the other two republics at the same time. All three were admitted to the UN in May. In response to continued Serb aggression, the UN Security Council imposed economic sanctions against Serbia at the end of May.

1990 Democratic elections brought nationalist and independence-minded governments to power

• Summer of 1992, as the human rights and humanitarian crisis escalated, the Security Council voted to send UN peacekeepers to Bosnia to facilitate delivery of humanitarian relief. To help assure the safety of humanitarian operations, the UN imposed a "no-fly zone" over Bosnia in October 1992.

• December 1992, the United States warned Serbia that the United States would respond in the event of Serb-inspired violence in Kosovo.

• Early 1993, UN peacekeepers deployed to the Former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia (FYROM). The United States decided to participate in order to prevent a widening of the conflict. Five hundred fifty U.S. troops, as well as five hundred fifty troops from other nations, remain in the FYROM.

• May 1993, the UN declared Sarajevo and five other Muslim enclaves "safe areas" under UN protection. NATO agreed in June to use air power to protect UN forces if attacked.

• August 1993, NATO declared its readiness to respond with air strikes, in coordination with the UN, in the event that UN safe areas, including Sarajevo, came under siege. This decision temporarily ended the strangulation of Sarajevo.

• February 1994, in response to a Bosnian Serb attack killing 68 civilians in a Sarajevo marketplace, NATO issued an ultimatum that if Bosnian Serb heavy weapons were not withdrawn from UN-monitored exclusion zones around the capital, Bosnian Serb forces would be subject to air strikes.

• Early 1994, with UN-EU diplomatic efforts stalled over territorial issues, the United States began more active efforts to encourage a settlement.

• March 1994, U.S. mediation produced an agreement between the Bosnian Government, Bosnian Croats, and the Government of Croatia to establish a Federation between Muslims and Croats in Bosnia. Fighting between the two sides ceased and has not resumed.

• April 1994, NATO employed its first air strikes against Bosnian Serb forces to halt a Serb attack on the eastern

Where is Bosnia and what is the country like?

Department of the Army

Geography

• Location: On the Balkan Peninsula in the southeast corner of Europe. Bosnia-Herzegovina shares borders to the west and north with Croatia, with Serbia to the east and Montenegro to the southeast. It has a short western coastline — 12 miles — on the Adriatic Sea.

• Size: It covers about 19,741 square miles (51,129 square kilometers), which makes it slightly larger than Tennessee.

• Terrain: The northern part is mountainous and covered with thick forests. The southern part is composed largely of rocky hills and flat farmland.

• Highest Point: Mount Plocna, 7,310 ft. (2,228m).

• Capital: The capital of Bosnia-Herzegovina is Sarajevo, with an estimated 1993 population of 383,000. It was the site of the 1984 Winter Olympics.

• Climate: Hot summers and cold winters, with a steady rainfall throughout the year. Areas of high elevation have short, cool summers and longer severe winters; mild winters along the coast.

People and government

• Population: 4,364, 000 (March 1991) - that's a little less than the population of the state of Georgia. The population density is 85.6 per square kilometer. The citizens refer to themselves as Bosnians, Croatians or Serbians. Many Muslims refer to themselves as Bosnians.

• Languages: Bosnian, Croatian and Serbian are the different names for the same spoken language used by most of the population (commonly referred to as Serbo-Croatian); there are some differences between pronunciation and usage. Two different alphabets are used — the Serbs use the Cyrillic script like Russian; the Croats and Bosnians use a Roman script.

• Ethnic Groups: Bosnian Muslims make up 44 percent, Serbs 33 percent and Croats 17 percent of the population.

• Religion: 40 percent are Slavic Muslim, 31 percent are Orthodox, 15 percent are Catholic and 4 percent are Protestant.

• Governments:

The Republic of Bosnia Herzegovina — Alija Izetbegovic, president of the presidency; Miro Lazovic, president of the parliament; Mariofil Ljubic, vice president of the parliament.

The Federation of Bosnia and Herzegovina: Kresimir Zubak, president; Mariofil Ljubic, chairman of the constituent assembly.

Government of the Federation and Republic of Bosnia Herzegovina: Haris Silajdzic, prime minister; Jadranko Prlic, deputy prime minister.

Time, money, economy

• Time: Bosnia-Herzegovina is in the same time zone as the rest of Western Europe, including Germany and Italy. So if it's 1 p.m. in Sarajevo, it's 1 p.m. in Bad Kreuznach or Vicenza, 7 a.m on the East Coast of the United States and 4 a.mon the U.S. West Coast.

• Money: In territory controlled by the Bosnia-Herzegovina army, the local currency is called BH Dinars. It does not have a smaller unit. On the territory of Herceg Bosnia, the local currency is called Croat Kuna. German Deutsche marks are the most widely accepted foreign currency and may be exchanged in BH banks for local currency. For a better exchange rate, U.S. dollars should be changed into German marks before you arrive in BH.

• Economy: Ranked next to the Former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia as the poorest republic in the old Yugoslav federation. Interethnic warfare in the last three years has caused production to plummet, unemployment and inflation to soar. The country receives humanitarian aid from the international community.

TRADOC CSM

Commands' top enlisted visits School of America

By Saralynne Snell
School of the Americas

Training and Doctrine Command's top noncommissioned officer toured Fort Benning Nov. 28, including in his schedule tours of the Infantry Training Brigade, the Ranger Training Brigade and the School of the Americas.

Command Sgt. Maj. Gilbert F. Paez is in charge of enlisted professional development, recognition of excellence, quality of life and safety in the Training and Doctrine Command organizations. He spoke about changes coming up for TRADOC.

"We are going through a re-engineering project, looking at the size of TRADOC," he said. "Modernization has taken place, through Force XXI. We have really gone extensively into training development.

"Here at Fort Benning, we're dealing with Project Warrior — the soldier of the 21st century — and that technology is expanding day by day. We're owning the night," he said. "We're developing the technology and the equipment to use, and we're also training the noncommissioned officers here at Fort Benning along with that technology .

> "The way you affect people all over the world is very critical and important, and I appreciate what you're doing."
> — Command Sgt. Maj. Gilbert F. Paez
> TRADOC command sergeant major

"I see that as boots on the ground, doing the work, doing the testing, and ensuring the NCOs stay proficient in the jobs they're doing."

While at SOA, Paez talked about what he expects from his NCOs.

"You should be able to do the business of a noncommissioned officer. You have to stay proficient, not only in what you have to do (here as instructors), but also in the job you would normally have," he said.

He pointed out that all soldiers serve as ambassadors when they go overseas, but it is also true at home for the SOA folk, as officers and enlisted troops from all over Latin America come here to learn U.S. doctrine.

"The way you affect people all over the world is very critical and important, and I appreciate what you're doing," he said. "The training here is being conducted very professionally, and it's being run the way it should be, according to military standards. I am amazed at the quality of the NCOs that are training the nations here. It's just super."

Editor's note: Spc. Judith Ginder, journalist, School of the Americas, conducted the interview with Command Sgt. Maj. Gilbert F. Paez, TRADOC command sergeant major.

HISTORY: the beginning, present of crisis situation

enclave and UN safe area of Gorazde.

• Spring of 1994, the United States, Russia, Britain, France, and Germany established a five-nation contact group, with the goal of brokering a settlement between the Federation and Bosnian Serbs.

• Late 1994, new fighting erupted between the Bosnian government, anti-government Muslims in Bihac (support by Krajina Serbs), and Bosnian Serbs. NATO responded by expanding the range for air strikes into Serb-controlled Croatia.

• December 1994, with the help of former President Jimmy Carter, the sides agreed to a four-month cessation of hostilities. When the period expired, fighting resumed, and in May, the Bosnian Serb forces began renewed attacks on Sarajevo and began threatening Srebrenica

• Spring of 1995, Bosnian Serb forces responded to NATO air strikes by taking more than 350 U.N. peacekeepers hostage. Serbia intervened to help negotiate the release of hostages.

On June 8, U. S. and Allied forces rescued a U.S. pilot, Capt. Scott O'Grady, who had been shot down over Bosnia on June 2.

• July 1995, In response to the fall of the safe areas of Srebrenica and Zepa, President Bill Clinton insisted that NATO and the U.N. make good on their commitment to protect the remaining safe areas. The Allies agreed to U.S. insistence on NATO decisiveness at the London Conference on July adviser, Anthony Lake, to present a U.S. peace initiative to our NATO Allies and the Russians.

• Today, U.S. led mediation produced an agreement by the parties to basic principles of a settlement as well as a cease-fire which went into effect in October. Proximity peace talks toward settlement began in Dayton, Ohio Nov. 1.

Dear Parents and Campers:
We would like to welcome you to the Blue Devil Baseball Camp. Many coaches and parents requested specialized instruction that we have developed this Hitting School. We at Columbus High take a lot of pride in our baseball program.
In past years, many former players have gone on to play college and professional baseball. Their success and accomplishments, we think, are related to the consistency and instruction from our staff.
We feel our staff is competent, diverse, and has expertise in all phases of the game. They will be experienced teachers as well as outstanding players. this camp will focus on hitting fundamentals. Athletes will be worked within the framework of "serious baseball" with a lot of fun.

SATURN CERTIFIED LIMITED WARRANTY

X X X X X X X X — 4/50 Warranty or ☐ 12/12 Warranty

Saturn Certified Used Car Limited Warranty begins on the date the vehicle was first delivered or put into service as a new car and at zero (0) miles and ends at the expiration of the coverage period – 4 years or 50,000 miles, whichever comes first.

Saturn Certified Used Car Limited Warranty for 12 months (from date of original certified used car purchase) or 12,000 miles (from the mileage at the time of original certified used Saturn purchase), whichever comes first.

SO JUST WHAT DOES IT MEAN TO BE A CERTIFIED USED SATURN?
Your Saturn Retailer inspects and qualifies used Saturn cars using a certification process developed by Saturn Corporation. So when you see this label on a certified used Saturn, you can be confident that it's roadworthy, reliable – and endowed with a clean bill of health.

MAKING THE GRADE
Before your Retailer even thinks of "certifying" a used Saturn, the following things must be true about the car:
- It's been driven less than 60,000 miles
- The car is less than five model-years old
- The car can be reconditioned by your Saturn Retailer to pass the certification inspection

OVER 150 POINTS INSPECTION
This certified used Saturn has completed a thorough certification inspection by your Saturn Retailer. The inspection, covering more than 150 points, follows a procedure developed by Saturn Corporation. Please ask your Saturn Sales Consultant for details.

SATURN CERTIFIED COVERAGE
Used Saturns with less than 3 in service years and 36,000 miles include the 4 year/50,000 mile Saturn Certified Used Car Limited Warranty.
Used Saturns with more than 3 in service years or 36,000 miles include the 12 month/12,000 mile Saturn Certified Used Car Limited Warranty.
Saturn Service Plans are available to extend the Saturn Certified Coverage on this vehicle.
Both coverages include:
- 3-day money-back guarantee
- 30-day/1,500 mile (whichever comes first) trade-in policy
- $0 deductible on all covered repairs
- 24-hour Roadside Assistance

ADDITIONAL BENEFIT
- Full fuel tank

Fort Benning opens deployment centers

Lisa Hibbert

Bosnia-bound Sgt. Chris Sheely, broadcast journalist, 209th Broadcast Public Affairs Office Detachment, brushes up on his interviewing skills as he talks with Brian Shaw of WTVD Channel 3 at the individual deployment site, Harmony Church, Tuesday. The soldiers stay five days at the site inprocessing before they deploy to Bosnia in support of Operation Joint Endeavor.

By Lisa M. Hibbert
Bayonet staff writer

Fort Benning opened an individual deployment site Dec. 11 and processed and shipped out more than 250 soldiers and civilians to Rhein-Main Air Base, Germany en route to Bosnia, Sunday.

The post was designated as an IDS by the U.S. Army Training and Doctrine Command to handle all operations for the European theater. Fort Bliss, Texas was designated to handle all operations for the Pacific theater.

"It is the mission of the IDS to coordinate the housing feeding, certification of soldier readiness processing, theater specific equipment issue and training," said Earl Brown, project officer, IDS and mobilization unit.

Fort Benning was selected because of its power projection platform, airfield, central issue facility, and because the post has acted as a continental U.S. replacement center in the past.

"We have been given the mission to prepare soldiers for onward movement in five days, and we had to decide how to do this," said Maj. David Dunn, IDS executive officer. A plan was established that packed the essential requirements into four days, with the fifth day open for travel.

"(However) some soldiers are here for longer than five days," Brown said. "The number of days they are here depends on what the soldier needs. If the soldier needs additional training, then the soldier will be here longer."

On the first day soldiers arrive at the IDS, they are assigned to a company and begin processing immediately. "A certain amount of paperwork has to be completed on day one, no matter what time a soldier comes in," Dunn said.

Soldiers go through readiness processing on day two, including power of attorney, wills, active duty identification cards and tags checked, deoxyribonucleic acid registering, human immunodeficiency virus testing (if necessary), pregnancy testing, immunizations, hearing tests and earplug fitting, eye tests, glasses and gas mask inserts, seeing a doctor and a dentist as well as receive chemical training.

In the afternoon, a visit to the central issue facility ensures the soldiers deploy with organizational clothing and equipment, cold weather clothing and weapons. Civilians are also issued the same clothing and equipment, but not weapons, as the military.

Day three is filled with classroom training as the soldiers go through training such as legal, cold weather and dealing with the media classes.

On the fourth day, military members must qualify with their weapon, either the M-16 rifle or the 9 mm pistol, before being permitted to leave. Medical and chemical certification tests are done in the afternoon.

Day five, soldiers will receive additional training, if needed, while the other soldiers are transported to either Lawson Army Airfield or the Columbus airport for a flight to Germany.

The IDS is equipped to process reserve and active soldiers from all branches of service, Red Cross workers, Army and Air Force Exchange employees and Department of Defense civilians.

Editor's note: Sgt. 1st Class Connie Dickey, public affairs specialist, U.S. Army Training and Doctrine Command, also contributed to this story.

Activated reservists come to post before deploying

By Lisa M. Hibbert
Bayonet staff writer

Fort Benning has been designated to operate the Army's only mobilization unit, which began operation Monday.

The mobilization unit, headed by Lt. Col. Grandvial Quick, has the mission of handling deploying reserve units, which differs from the individual deployment site's mission of deploying individuals, said Quick.

Twenty-seven Army Reserve and National Guard units are scheduled to come to Fort Benning for processing, said Earl Brown, project officer, IDS and mobilization unit.

Unlike the IDS, the mobilization unit will only process Army troops and it is the only one in the Army at this time, Quick said.

"It is our responsibility to ensure the soldiers are deployable as established by the commander (Operation Joint Endeavor)," Brown said.

The mobilization unit ensures that all the soldier's papers, such as wills and power of attorneys, are up to date as well as weapons qualifications before shipping the soldiers off to either Bosnia or to Germany, Quick said.

Adopt a soldier for the holidays

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Sponsors are needed to host soldiers during Christmas.

More than 300 Reserve soldiers called to active duty for service in Bosnia, face spending Christmas at Fort Benning, away from family and friends.

While AUSA and the Directorate of Community Activities have many planned events both on and off post, officials are asking those in the community to invite one or more soldiers into their homes for a traditional Christmas, be it a family dinner or sitting around watching football games on television.

Soldiers at Fort Benning have come as far away as Tacoma, Wash., and San Juan, Puerto Rico, to as near as Rome, Ga.

Anyone wishing to be a host family can call the battalion at 44-6793 between now and Sunday evening. Callers will be put in touch with their respective soldiers.

Also anyone wishing ti donate an inexpensive gift that a soldier can take to Bosnia, such as a book, can drop it off at the Welcome Office in Infantry Hall.

OFFICER PROFESSIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Commanders learn about environmental issues, laws

1st Bn., 29th Inf. teaches officers environmental compliance on post

By Shannon Day
Special to The Bayonet©

A command environmental officer professional development session was conducted Dec. 13 at the 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment.

The goal of the training session was to provide updated information on environmental compliance at Fort Benning.

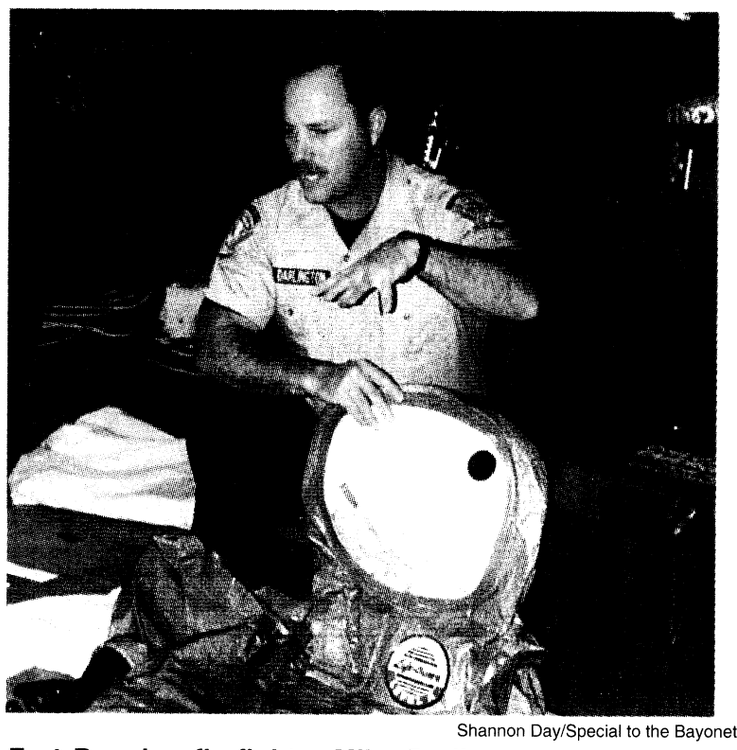
The participants were broken down into five groups and rotated through five training stations.

The stations included providing information about the red cockaded woodpecker, which is a threatened and endangered species that also calls the Fort Benning area home.

Several of the stations and the emphasis of the session pertained to hazardous materials.

The participants were updated on the proper procedures to turn in, transport, store and manage hazardous wastes.

They were also trained on command responsibilities in relation to pollution prevention and abatement laws.



The Fort Benning Fire Department was also on hand with a display of its hazardous material emergency containment equipment, a display of its confined space equipment and training aids.

The 598th Maintenance Company displayed its company-type hazardous spill contingency plan and first and second hazardous material containment and clean-up equipment.

Arthur Simmons, fire chief, Fort Benning Fire Department, said the 598th Maint. Co. was chosen because the company is really on top of things when it comes to environmental management.

"We want people to see where their units ought to be," he said.

After completing the five stations, the participants met at the Fort Benning Officers' Club for a final presentation on environmental laws.

Post again in running for ACOE

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Fort Benning is once again in the running for the Army Community of Excellence Award. Benning, already a two-time winner, is looking for a three-peat.

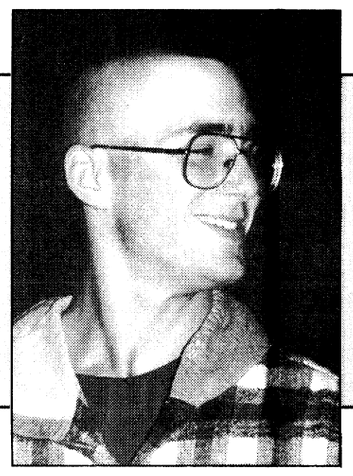
This year the criteria has changed. The Army is using the civilian world's Malcolm Baldridge criteria and calling the competition the Army's Performance Improvement Criteria.

Regardless of the new criteria, Commanding General Maj. Gen. John W. Hendrix is determined to win.
Hendrix said, to be selected as a finalist is a "great achievement."

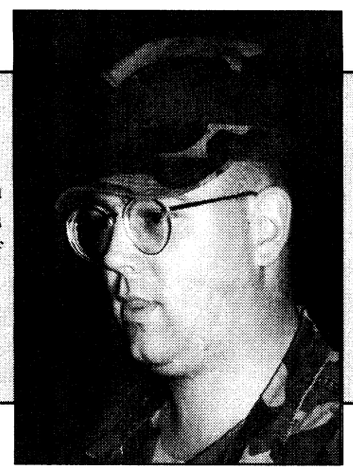
"It's about winning," he said. " It's about pride. It's about getting better, that's why the competition is important."

The post will be vying for the top award against 31 other installations and will be visited by judges in February or March.

VARIOUS VOICES

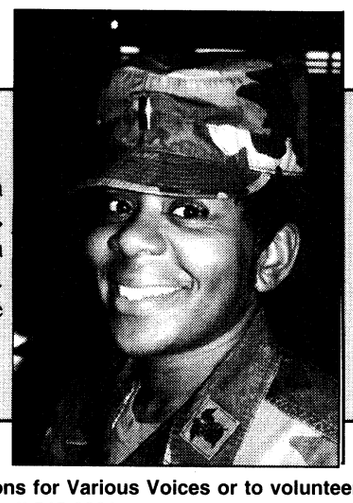


What do the holidays mean to you?



Gladys Peterson, family member— "The holidays are about giving to others less fortunate. Such as giving to the Salvation Army, the House of Mercy and giving to the homeless."

Kimberly Horn, civilian employee— "The holidays are about being with your family."



Pvt. 2 Robert Hombree, 75th Ranger Regiment — "This holiday season for me is about going home and getting married."

Pvt. 1 Joshua Yongsma, 36th Engineer Group— "The holidays are about celebrating the birth of Christ."

Maj. Jerome Ziglier, Headquarters, Headquarters Battery, 4th Battalion, 41st Field Artillery. — "The holidays are strictly a time to be with family and to take time out from the hectic work schedule."

2nd Lt. Carol Edwards, 598th Maintenance Co., 36th Eng. Grp. — "The holidays are about being with family and friends and people you love. It's also about taking care of single soldiers."

The real story of Christmas

By Agatha Hudson Debrow

The real story of Christmas — what really happened almost 2,000 years ago and what it really means — may actually surprise you.

Christmas is not about three wise men giving gifts of gold, frankincense and myrrh to a baby. (Actually the story about three wise men and a baby is a misconception because the Scriptures describe Jesus as a "young child" when the three wise men made their visit. It was actually the shepherds abiding in the field who found the babe wrapped in swaddling clothes, lying in a manger.)

Because of commercialization, misinterpretations and a general lack of knowledge, Christmas has different meanings to different people. Here is a list of what Christmas is not about along with what the holiday really signifies.

• Christmas is not about getting presents; it's about giving presents.

• Christmas is not about Santa Claus or jolly old St. Nick who comes once a year bearing gifts; it's about Jehovah God who provides gifts for us year-round.

commentary

Agatha Hudson Debrow is celebrating the real meaning of Christmas.

• Christmas is not about getting all dressed up, going to parties or wearing our holiday finery; it's about donning the love of God in our hearts at all times.

• Christmas is not about a "Miracle on 34th Street"; it's about the miracle of the virgin birth.

• Christmas is not about fruitcake and nuts; it's about the fruit of the spirit, which is love, joy, peace, longsuffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness and temperance.

• Christmas is not about parades with marching bands, floats, and beauty queens; it's about a multitude of the heavenly hosts parading and praising God, saying, "Glory to God in the highest and on earth peace, good will toward men." (Luke 2:13 and 14)

The real story of Christmas is about God's Son leaving his heavenly home when the "fullness of time was come" to be born of a woman. (Galatians 4:4)

The real story of Christmas has much more meaning than commercialization, materialism or economic hardship; Christmas means more than spending a lot of money. In fact, once you take the time to search for the real meaning, you'll discover Christmas wasn't meant to cost you anything; it was meant to give you something.

Once you take the time to find out what really happened in that little town of Bethlehem, you will discover why Christmas is a joyous time.

Christmas has nothing to do with a man dressed up in a red and white Santa Claus outfit; it has nothing to do with reindeer, Christmas trees or ornaments. Christmas is about the greatest gift of all times — God's gift to us in the form of Jesus Christ, his only begotten son.

Deployment eased by local community and organizations

By Richard J. McDowell
Public Affairs officer

commentary

Just like clock work, the Christmas season is on us. Although for some, it would seem the clock was wound a little too tightly and Christmas got here a month early.

But we know it's Christmas because once again Fort Benning soldiers are overseas carrying out U.S. policy and the rest of us are supporting deployments of other soldiers.

Fortunately, the Fort Benning and downtown communities know how to pitch in and help out.

First, AUSA and the Directorate of Community Activities are sponsoring the annual Operation Holiday.

This year's started off with a bang when 40 of our reserve soldiers were invited to the Jeep-American Eagle basketball classic in Atlanta.

There they were given the red carpet treatment. First there were the floor-level seats under one of the goals. Next, the soldiers were invited onto the floor during the singing of the National Anthem.

They were introduced as Bosnia-bound soldiers and given a rousing welcome by the fans. Prior to the start of the second game, broadcaster Dick Vitale came over and talked to the soldiers (and civilians).

As one Air Force officer told AUSA Executive Vice President Jim Gallagher, who made it all happen, "I never expected to get a floor-level seat at this basketball tournament."

Thanks to AUSA, soldiers remaining at Fort Benning will also see Atlanta Hawk basketball games, the Falcons, the Blue-Grey game and the Peach Bowl.

They will also have the opportunity to participate in many DCA activities.

Monday, Mayor Bobby Peters hosted an interdenominational prayer service, summing up the feelings of all those present when he said, "we want you to know we support you."

Now the post is seeking sponsors for reservists who will still be here over Christmas.

Anyone who would like to host a soldier or soldiers for a traditional Christmas celebration should contact Lt. Col. Rich Kaiura at 544-6712.

Finally, we can all pray that we will soon be reunited with our soldiers and that they all return safely.

CG sends holiday season message to Fort Benning

I am pleased to have this opportunity to extend my best wishes to the entire U. S. Army Infantry Center and Fort Benning during the 1995 holiday season. This time of year is charged with meaning as we pause to celebrate Christmas, Hanukkah and the New Year with family and friends. Our family traditions and religious roots affirm our unique identity and are an important part of who we are as individuals, as a community and as a nation.

As you celebrate these festive occasions, remmeber those around you who are unable to fully share in the joys of this season because of hardship or family separation. Our world is not at peace. There are so many troubled areas where our soldiers stand watch in harm's way. As a continental U.S. replacement center, Fort Benning plays an important role in deploying soldiers in support of critical missions in both war and peace.

The coming new year affords a great opportunity to highlight the success of 1995. I am extremely proud of our soldiers, our families and our civilian employees who have worked so hard to make Fort Benning the best of the best. The new year will present more challenges and opportunities to demonstrate our excellence. I look forward to serving with you. May God bless you in the year to come.

— Maj. Gen. John W. Hendrix,
Commanding general

Holidays celebrate life

By Michael Hubanks
Bayonet special corespondent

It is that time of year again — the time of year where everyone gets in a hustle and goes out and buys gifts for family, friends and co-workers. However, is that what this holiday season is meant for?

commentary

Whether you celebrate Christmas, Hanukkah, or Kwanzaa, it is the season for people to do things that will help their fellow human beings. We sometimes get so caught up in the propaganda of the holiday season that we forget what it's for.

The holiday season is all about celebrating life and giving from the heart.

In other words, why not give gifts that cost nothing such as consideration, help and kindness.

We should not overlook things such as our homeless. It costs nothing of anyone to give a few hours during this season to go help at the local soup kitchens.

It costs close to nothing if you know soldiers who cannot go home because of either having to work or who cannot afford it, to invite them for Christmas dinner.

It costs pennies to give to the bell ringers who stand and give their time to help raise money for the Salvation Army.

People, it is the giving of the self that makes each holiday special.

Let us all learn our lesson from Scrooge and become altruistic. You might be surprised how cheap the gift you give, but how magnificent it can be. Always remember it costs nothing to be kind to your fellow Americans!

Librarian John Cook and Chaplain Robert Thompson, project coordinator, look over the new selection of books, called the "Faith and Family Library" at Sayers Library.

Sayers Library receives early holiday gift

USAIC Chaplain Office

Sayers Memorial Library has received an early holiday gift in the form of a specialty collection of more than 600 books and videos called the "Faith and Family Library" Dec. 19. The collection offers materials that strengthen families and religious faith.

The collection was donated by the chaplains of Fort Benning and has taken more than a year to move from the concept stage to putting materials on the shelves.

"It's very exciting to follow the progress of a vision like this," said Chaplain Robert Thompson, project coordinator. "Our post chaplain, Chaplain Herbert Kitchens, is fond of saying that the only limitation is our own imagination. In this case, we imagined a 'faith and family library,' books and videos addressing issues in spiritual life and family life, two topics important to many soldier families."

The chaplains then also envisioned wide access to these books and videos, which made Sayers Library the obvious host for the collection. Patrons can check them out as they would check out other Sayers' holdings.

Sayers library already contains some books and videos on faith and family, but they are shelved all over the library according to the Dewey Decimal System, the standard classification system most libraries use. The 'Faith and Family Library" is also classified using Dewey Decimal, but the collection will remain together for ease of access.

"It's a little like one-stop shopping," Thompson said. "Library patrons who are interested in these two topics-faith and family—can browse right here to find what they want." The collection is housed in the Media Center.

Most of the funds for this project came from a $5,000 grant from the Chief of Chaplains in Washington, D.C.

"The chief awards grants to local installations that submit ideas for new programs," Thompson said. "We submitted this idea 16 months ago for fiscal 95. We didn't know until six months later, however, that we received the grant. When we found out, it felt like the holidays all over again. Buying all these items felt like opening Christmas presents."

NATURAL RESOURCES

Seasonal burning begins

Natural Resources Management Branch

The Natural Resources Management Branch will begin burning operations again in January and will continue until September.

Prescribed burning is used by the Natural Resources Management Branch within pine and pine-hardwood stands to improve wildlife habitat, reduce fuel loads, and maintain the pine ecosystem.

"Burns are conducted between January and September each year although burns during the late spring and summer months (growing season) provide the best control of small hardwoods, particularly sweetgum," said Jeff Brooks, wildlife biologist. "A decrease in small hardwoods will increase the amount of sunlight on the forest floor which stimulates herbaceous plant growth and insect production resulting in improved habitat for gamebirds."

The importance of prescribed burning for gamebird management has been recognized for almost 70 years, Brooks said Since that time, forest managers have realized that prescribed burning, particularly during the spring, is necessary to maintain the habitat for a variety of species. Prior to European settlement, pine stands were burned by Indians or ignited by lightning strikes. As a result, many animals became dependent on fire to maintain the habitat.

While control of the small hardwoods is desirable to improve habitat for both red-cockaded woodpeckers and game species, most people are reluctant to burn during the spring and summer for fear of destroying quail or turkey nests, he said. However, research has demonstrated that forest stands managed for red-cockaded woodpeckers through the proper application and timing of prescribed burning (including late spring burns) have a greater abundance of quail than unmanaged stands. It is likely that areas with a high density of small hardwoods will have increasing gamebird populations in subsequent years following spring or summer burns as a result of hardwood control.

Both the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service and the U.S. Forest Service utilize spring and summer burning to maintain the pine ecosystem. Tall Timbers Research Station located in Tallahassee, Fla,. has conducted bobwhite quail research for almost 70 years. They advocate the use of prescribed burning during the spring and summer in areas with a high density of small hardwoods to improve quail habitat, he said.

"At Fort Benning, our goal is to burn all pine and pine hardwood stands (75,000 acres) once every three years (25,000 acres annually). However, due to scheduling conflicts and poor weather conditions this goal has not been achieved," Brooks said.

Realistically, about 22,000 acres are burned each year although only about 9,000 acres are burned during the gamebird "nesting season" of March 15 to June 1, he said.

Controlled burning during the gamebird nesting season may result in some immediate loss of nests, but these burns will provide greater habitat improvements and thus greater gamebird populations in the long run than can be achieved through winter burning alone.

Currently, the Natural Resource Management Branch is conducting a census of quail and turkey populations to monitor any changes in the abundance of birds.

post briefs

Bayonet publishes last edition for 1995

Today's issue is the last edition of The Bayonet for 1995.

The first edition for 1996 will be published Jan. 5. The deadline for copy and photos for that issue is noon Dec. 29.

All Christmas-related stories or photos must be submitted for publication no later than Dec. 29 since the last publication date for those type stories is Jan. 5. Christmas-related stories submitted after that date will not be published.

Fort Benning to get visit from ACOE

The Army selected Fort Benning as one of the 31 finalists in the 1996 Department of the Army, Army Community of Excellence competition. As a result, Fort benning was selected for an on-site visit during February or March.

Fort Bragg, N.C. and Fort Sill, Okla. were also selected in the large post category.

Retired baseballer to speak at MLK service

In honor of Martin Luther King Jr.'s birthday, retired baseball player Willie Horton will be the guest speaker at the Regimental Chapel, Sand Hill, Jan. 11 at 11:30 a.m. There will be an autograph session to follow. For information, call Sgt. 1st Class Alice Jones at 544-9336 or 544-9554.

Controlled burning set

Controlled burning of woodland areas will take place Dec. 26 through Jan. 5. If weather permits, the following compartments will be affected: D-7, E-3, E-7 and I-2.

Burning will occur in pine stands within these compartments to enhance endangered species habitat and training areas. Personnel proposing to use these areas for recreational purposes must vacate these areas prior to 9:30 a.m. daily.

Training units using compartments adjacent to those listed above may experience drift smoke and are reminded to exercise caution while travelling in these areas due to the potential for reduced visibility. Units using ranges and training areas are reminded to remove flammable debris, such as pinestraw, leaves, grass and trash form around structures in accordance with US Army Infantry Center Regulation 210-4, Paragraph 5-22, Organizational Maintenance.

For more information call Jack Greenlee, Natural Resources Management Branch, at 544-6206.

Welcome Center shifts operating hours

The new hours of operation for the Welcome Center will be Monday through Friday 7 a.m. to 10 p.m., and Saturday and Sunday 2 to 10 p.m. Inprocessing will be from opening hours until 20 minutes prior to closing hours.

Outprocessing soldiers may report to the welcome center or call to make an appointment 10 days before departure from the installation. For more information, call 545-5404.

Thrift Savings Plan opens season

The Thrift Saving Plan open season runs through Jan. 31. Any employee wishing to start a TSP account, change TSP contributions or change how TSP contributions are invested may do so during the open season.

Elections or changes to the TSP may be made by visiting the Directorate of Civilian Personnel. Personnel Services Center, Building 85, Center Wing, during regular duty hours.

Quarterly appreciation breakfast Jan. 11

The Quarterly Excellence Appreciation Day Breakfast and Quality Awards Ceremony will be Jan. 11 from 8 to 9 a.m. at the Supper Club of the Fort Benning Officers' Club.

Breakfast will consist of bacon and sausage, scrambled eggs, grits, biscuits, coffee and juice.

Tickets are $4.50 and can be picked up at the Parrish Building (Building 66) Jan. 2 through 8.

Commanders and supervisors should contact Pat Porter at 545-1713 or 545-4332 with the names of honorees and the number of persons in their organization who will be attending the breakfast or if they have questions.

CID offering reward

The U.S. Criminal Investigation Command is offering a $500 reward for information leading to the arrest and conviction of persons responsible for an attempted robbery and aggravated assault that occurred at a public telephone booth on the corner of Way Street and Sightseeing Road at about 1 a.m. Nov. 20. A soldier using the telephone was approached by three, 16- to 20-year-old black males. The assailants held a knife to the soldier's throat while they demanded his wallet.

The assistance of the local community is being requested in an effort to identify and apprehend the perpetrators.

If you have information concerning this incident, contact Chief Warrant Officer 2 James Newsome at 545-4989 or the Military Police at 545-5222. The identity of anyone providing information will be kept in strictest confidence.

Airports impose new security measures

New security measures in all airports require travelers to show a picture identification card at time of check-in. Picture ID cards are required for travelers 18 years and older. Failure to produce a picture ID could result in denial of boarding.

Check-in time at the Columbus Airport should be no less than 45 minutes prior to departure and no less than one hour prior to departure from the Atlanta Airport. For more information, call the Transportation Division at 545-7706.

Coordinate travel with Carlson Wagonlit

All official travel within the continental United States should be coordinated directly with Carlson Wagonlit Travel.

The traveler is responsible for providing three copies of travel orders directly to Carlson Wagonlit Travel. For convenience, orders may be dropped off at the drive-thru ticket booth.

Airline tickets will no longer be available for pick up at the booth. Tickets can be picked up at Building 2628 two days prior to date of travel. For more information, call Carlson Travel at 682-0622.

Nick Hoge Award set

Military personnel and civilian employees of the Department of the Army, including local nationals and nonappropriated fund employees, are encouraged to submit professional essays for consideration for the 1995 Nick Hoge Award for Professional Development.

This essay competition provides the opportunity for Army personnel to present their ideas through thoroughly researched, documented and creative papers.

The papers are to consider the existing quality, effectiveness or efficiency of civilian human resource management and related professional disciplines (such as personnel psychology) and should address concepts and methodologies that will enhance the conduct of civilian human resource management business.

Co-authors and group authors are permitted. Nominations must be submitted to the Management-Employee Relations Division, Directorate of Civilian Personnel in an original and eight copies with a separate cover page, no later than Jan. 6. For more information call Mae Horsey at 545-4483.

OCS board set

The next Officer Candidate School selection board has been scheduled for June 17 to 21, 1996. The cutoff date for applications to arrive at Personnel Command is May 17, 1996 — no exceptions.

The Adjutant General Personnel Operations Services Division has set up two local boards to accommodate Fort Benning for the DA June board. Local board No. 1 is Feb. 6 to 8. Applications must arrive no later than Jan. 19. Local board No. 2 will be May 6 to 8. Applications for this board must arrive in POSD no later than April 19.

For more information, call Marie Lee at 545-3341 or 545-4702.

EFMP program provides assistance

The Exceptional Family Member Program is a Department of the Army program designed to assist, through selective assignment and reassignment, the soldier who has a special needs family member.

The EFMP addresses the needs of those family members, adults or children, who have a physical, intellectual or emotional disorder that limits that person's capability to take part in activities and which requires special treatment, therapy, education, training or counseling.

The program's purpose is to let the U.S. Total Army Personnel Command at DA know of any family members with special needs, so this can be a consideration during the assignment selection process.

For additional information regarding the EFMP, contact Frances Howard, coordinator, Exceptional Family Member Program, Army Community Service, at 545-6969 or 545-5516.

Recycle used oil

Used oil can be taken to the following places:

For more information, call 545-4218 or 545-4766.

201 file to be phased out

Army News Service

Personnel Command has announced the phased elimination of the Military Personnel Record Jacket, DA Form 201.

According to PERSCOM, the majority of personnel-related functions are now, or soon will be, accomplished via automated systems. Therefore, the management of paper forms and documents is being shifted to optical digitized images and electronic data.

To this end, a threefold elimination strategy has been adopted. Phase I is intended to reduce, to the maximum extent possible, the number of forms and documents filed in the MPRJ.

Of the 124 items authorized for filing in the MPRJ, 47 have been identified for removal during Phase I. Of these, 39 will be given to the soldier and the remainder will be forwarded to the work center which has a need for the document; this represents a 38% reduction in documents filed.

Phase II, elimination of the active Army officer MPRJ, was scheduled for completion in the fourth quarter of FY 1995.

Phase III, which should be concluded by FY 1997, is the final elimination of the enlisted MPRJ. PERSCOM stresses that accurate recording of information is critical to the success of this initiative. Retrieval of documents may be accomplished during in/out-processing and scheduled record reviews.

Skills, management key to promotion

Army News Service

The Adjutant General Branch professional development noncommissioned officers are asked a variety of questions, but promotion questions top the list.

"How can I get promoted?" is the number one question my professional development NCOs answer," said Master Sgt. Richard Harris, senior PDNCO for the administrative specialist series military occupational specialty. "We spend a lot of time and effort researching and advising soldiers about their career progression and promotions."

The interest in promotions, according to Harris, is because promotions are more competitive than ever.

"We have nearly 30 different MOSs in the AG Branch requiring numerous skills. But one common trait for all of them is that our soldiers have to work harder to get promoted," said Master Sgt. Virginia Shelton, senior PDNCO for the personnel series MOSs.

"They have to have more skills and do a better job of managing their own careers," Shelton said.

So how can you take charge of your career?

"First, you need to map out your career and decide where you want to go," Sgt. 1st Class Diane Dobson, the 71M, chaplain assistants, series professional development NCO, said. "Determine in writing what you need to accomplish and develop a time line.

"You should try to get a good variety of assignments, working closely with your PDNCO," Dobson said.

One way to help ensure a variety of assignments is to talk to your assignment manager about available assignments.

"We want our soldiers to be involved in the assignment process," Harris said. "We are making decisions that impact on our soldiers' lives and careers. They need to be involved with us."

To help ensure soldier involvement, the Total Army Personnel Command has set up a variety of programs designed to help the soldier contact the branch.

The command is giving out 500,000 wallet-sized cards to NCOs containing phone numbers, fax numbers and user-identification numbers for all the enlisted branches. The Adjutant General's Branch phone number is DSN 221-5837 or commercial (703) 325-5837.

Toe Total Army Personnel Command has also set up an interactive voice response system.

The number for the automated system is (800) FYI-EPMD or DSN 221-3763. The AG E-mail address for the Branch is EPAG @Hoffman-emhl.army.mil.

There are also some opportunities outside your MOS that are career enhancing, recruiter, drill sergeant, equal opportunity, instructor and PDNCO are a few examples soldiers should consider, Dobson said.

"Soldiers who successfully complete those tours and have a variety of TO&E and TDA assignments within their MOS do well on promotions," Dobson said.

"Second, soldiers need to improve themselves through military and civilian education. Not just correspondence courses and NCOES courses, but also airborne, air assault and combat lifesaver's course to name a few," Dobson said.

Improving yourself through civilian education is important, Dobson said. Promotion boards want to see what you've done while in the military, not just what you did before you came in, she said.

The next step is checking the NCOER. Make sure it is an accurate reflection of your accomplishments and is written in terms every soldier can understand.

"One of the main documents we use to make assignments is a soldier's NCOER," Harris said. "It's important soldiers review them for accuracy for the promotion board and for input in the assignment process."

Finally, Dobson recommends looking at our phot.

"Compare your photo with several other soldiers and get to know what a good photo looks like," she said. "If necessary, take your photo again and again."

USARC identifies units to train for possible deployment to Bosnia

Army News Service

ATLANTA — Thirteen U.S. Army Reserve Command units have been identified to conduct training in preparation for possible deployment to support operations in Bosnia.

More than 300 soldiers from the reserve units listed below will train in preparation for providing support to U.S. forces participating in the NATO implementation force operations. The units have not been directed to mobilize or deploy nor have they been formally placed on alert. The goal of the training is to ensure mission readiness and optimal preparation of Army Reserve soldiers in the event of mobilization.

The following reserve units have been identified as candidates to support the IFOR mission and will begin preparation for possible deployment:

UNIT LOCATION

203rd Mobile Public Affairs Detachment, Wichita, Kan.
209th Broadcast Public Affairs Detachment, Rome, Ga.
358th Mobile Public Affairs Detachment, Fort Douglas, Utah
361st Press Camp Headquarter,s Fort Totten, N.Y.
49th Military History Detachment, Forrest Park, Ill.
326th Military History Detachment, Columbus, Ohio
90th Military History Detachment, San Antonio, Texas
19th Material Management Center, Fort Snelling, Minn.
21st Theater Army Area Command Augmentation, Indianapolis, Ind.

In addition to the reserve units listed above, the following units have been identified as possible backfill support to the Commander-in-Chief, U.S. Army Europe:

UNIT LOCATION

329th Adjutant General Postal Company, St. Paul, Minn.
755th Adjutant General Postal Company, Texarkana, Texas
23rd Adjutant General Postal Company, Pittsburgh, Pa.
3rd Corps Support Command, Des Moines, Iowa

The units will conduct training during their next scheduled drill weekend. Areas the units will focus on include: security; safety; cold-weather injuries; basic first aid; aircraft, equipment and force recognition; convoy operation procedures; the Geneva Convention and the code of conduct. Such training is a prudent step should any subsequent decision be made by the national command authority to deploy these units, and enhances unit readiness to conduct overseas deployments of any nature.

The Army Reserve provides essential combat support and combat service support capabilities to America's Army. Examples of this support include transportation, medical, quartermaster, supply, logistics, engineer, military police, and public affairs.

Headquartered in Atlanta, the reserve commands, controls and supports all Army Reserve troop units in the continental United States with the exception of Psychological Operations, Civil Affairs and Special Forces Units. The reserve's primary mission is to provide trained and ready units to support America's Army and America. Approximately 200,000 soldiers are assigned to some 1,700 reserve units throughout the United States.

In addition to the reserve units, ten overseas-based Army Reserve units have been identified to begin training in support of U.S. forces.

The following Army Reserve Civil Affairs and Psychological Operations units will also begin training in support of the mission:

UNIT LOCATION

353rd Civil Affairs Command, Bronx, N.Y.
308th Civil Affairs Brigade, Homewood, Ill.
304th Civil Affairs Brigade Philadelphia, Pa.
432nd Civil Affairs Battalion, Green Bay, Wisc.
443rd Civil Affairs Battalion, Warwick, R.I.
415th Civil Affairs Battalion, Kalamazoo, Mi.
7th Psychological Operations Group Moffett, Federal Field, Calif.
10th Psychological Operations Battalion, St. Louis, Mo.
353rd Psychological Operations Battalion, Moffett Federal Field, Calif.
17th Psychological Operations Battalion, Arlington Heights, Ill.

If a final decision is made to deploy the reserve units, alert and mobilization orders will be issued.

63rd Co. gets high tech experience

By Jason Cornett
63rd Engineer Company

Soldiers from the 63rd Engineer Company had the opportunity to experience the cutting edge of construction technology.

They participated in an introduction to spectra-physics construction laser equipment Nov. 13. The laser devices are used in conjunction with heavy, horizontal construction equipment. It simplifies the formerly tedious process of creating a finished grade.

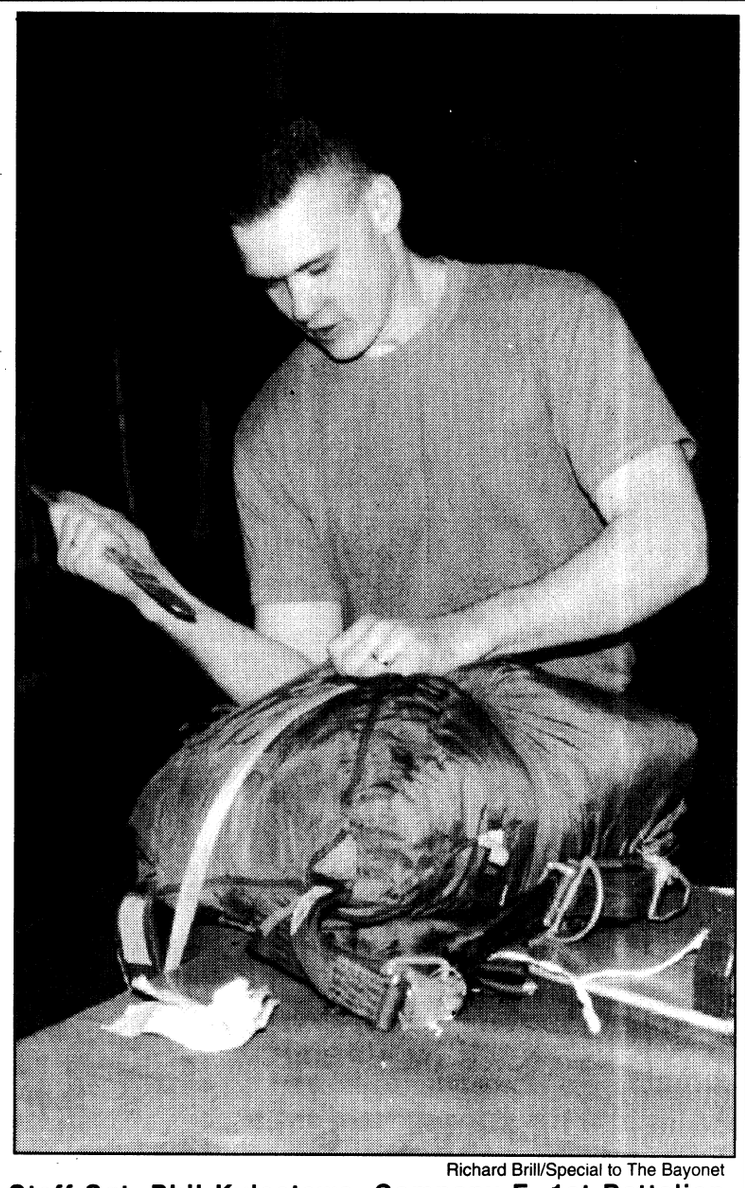
After desired specifications are programmed into the transmitter, the system relays a laser signal to the operator who adjusts the angle and elevation of the blade until it meets the designated requirement.

The system is comprised of a "grade eye" receiver, a "laser plane" receiver and a "gradio" display system. The devices can be used in conjunction with horizontal construction equipment.

Generally, the system allows for increased productivity with fewer manpower and material requirements. Specifically, the laser devices control the elevation and cross-slope of the construction equipment's cutting edge through an operator display system.

Sensors attached to the equipment receive information from a transmitter mounted on a tripod over a known elevation or benchmark.

The sensors decipher the transmitter's message and relay this information to the operator's controls for accurate blade adjustments. So accurate, in fact, that the system can reach within one-quarter inch of the specified slope.



According to Pfc. Joseph Janosh, the Spectra-Physics tools can "make an average operator good and a good operator even better."

The benefits of this technology seem endless. The laser's accuracy eliminates the old trail and error method of fine grading which minimizes time and labor. It boasts reduction in production costs up to 50 percent. "We can increase quality with a decreased in time and money," said Capt. Jeffrey Bachonok, the 63rd company commander.

The 63rd is one of the first units to field this equipment. Eventually, it will become standard throughout the Army, but the system's simplicity, versatility, and efficiency made its acquisition a top priority within the company. After a little more training and experimentation, the laser apparatus will be integrated into routine use, keeping the 63rd Engineer Company at the forefront of construction technology.

The life of a parachute rigger

By Richard Brill
Special to The Bayonet©

Richard Brill/Special to The Bayonet

Staff Sgt. Phil Kylestewa, Company E, 1st Battalion (Airborne), 507th Infantry, 11th Infantry Regiment, packs a parachute.

Though they are few in number, their influence is great.

And their simple pledge begins, "I will keep constantly in mind that until men grow wings their parachutes must be dependable."

Thousands of Fort Benning personnel rely on dependable parachutes every year. The chutes are dutifully packed by members of Company E, 1st Battalion (Airborne), 507th Infantry, 11th Infantry Regiment.

Staff Sgt. Phil Kylestewa, assistant platoon sergeant at the main riggers shed (Building 2408) near Lawson Army airfield, said Fort Benning riggers pack more parachutes than any other post Army-wide — more than 100,000 annually.

The foundation of sound parachute rigging begins with training that is rigorous and repetitive. Students must master the intricacies of parachute packing so thoroughly that the ability becomes completely automatic, he said.

According to Kylestewa, the training gives you the confidence to do the job.

"At Fort Benning they receive additional training when they first arrive here," Kylestewa said. "We want highly trained, alert and motivated personnel."

After completing basic training, the prospective riggers are required to complete airborne training at Fort Benning, Ga., before reporting to Fort Lee, Va., to the Parachute Riggers School for 12 weeks of Advanced Individual Training.

A rigger, is required to be on constant jump status throughout his or her rigging career, a facet Kylestewa says is one of the best benefits of the job.

"If you are a parachute rigger, you are always airborne," he said.

During the three phases of advanced individual training, rigging students learn the theory of parachute operation and the packing procedures for all the parachutes used in the Army. They learn how to load and drop supplies and heavy equipment, including tanks, bulldozers, artillery and personnel carriers. Finally, they learn parachute repair and maintenance.

Successful graduation earns one the right to wear the rigger's badge, which can be seen proudly displayed on the red baseball caps which distinguish Fort Benning riggers.

Riggers on Fort Benning generally find themselves working at one of four places: the main shed, the maintenance shop, the central issuing facility on Lawson Army Airfield or in support of ranger training.

Pfc Brett Morrill has been packing chutes at the main shed since April. His hands display the callouses which are the trademark of a parachute packer.

"I love this job," Morrill said. "I enlisted for it."

Kylestewa said a rigger can pack one parachute in about 10 minutes and about 25 parachutes per day. If the number seems small, it is because the mounting fatigue of continuous packing corresponds to diminishing returns in the quality of successively packed chutes.

"The work is repetitive and involves continuous physical work," he said. "It requires good coordination and dexterity."

To begin the rigging procedures for the T10C parachute, Morrill inspects the chute for damage and then lays it out on one of several rows of long, rectangular tables in the rigging shed to begin the seven main procedures for packing a chute.

First, he inspects the 30 suspension line for twists, turns or tangles and properly aligns them. Before he can continue with the next main procedure, Morrill must freeze and shout "rigger" to signal one of the inspectors to examine his work and give him clearance to continue.

Morrill continues in such fashion, inspecting and folding flat the 30 gores, or segments, which make up the canopy, folding and storing the canopy, closing the deployment bag which holds the canopy, stowing the suspension lines, closing the pack tray and stowing the static line, until the 30-pound chute is completely packed.

The parachute is not ready, however, until both Morrill and the inspector sign the tiny log book attached to it. For the rigger's pledge steadfastly maintains, "I will never let the idea that a piece of work is 'good enough' make me a potential murderer through a careless mistake or oversight, for I know there can be no compromise with perfection." If a mishap ever occurs, investigators can find out when, where and by whom the chute was packed.

According to Kylestewa, a parachute has an average life of about 16 1/2 years with a shelf life of only .4 1/2 years. The parachutes are routinely replaced according to a strict schedule, he said, whether they need to be or not.

With only around 1,200 riggers world-wide and only about 110 of those at Fort Benning, Kylestewa said the small numbers do not detract from the large need of expertly packed parachutes.

"It can be a monotonous job, but it's a very important job that cannot be taken lightly," he said. "It's not too often you must take someone's life into your hands.

SOA's Command and General Staff Course graduates after year-long studies

By Judith Ginder
School of the Americas

Wanted: officers for one year of foreign study — in the United States.

That's almost what the Command and General Staff Course at the School of the Americas is. It's a 47-week school at Fort Benning that provides the cultural exchange normally reserved for studies abroad.

The course is designed for U.S. majors and Latin American officers of their armed forces and national police agencies.

It is equivalent to the U.S. Command and General Staff College at Fort Leavenworth, Kan. However, SOA is unique in its education, said U.S. Marine Maj. Mark Burger, course director.

"Not only is the core curriculum of the Fort Leavenworth program taught, but we also tailor additional courses to the U.S. Southern Command regional themes," Burger said. "We emphasize more of what is important to Latin American countries such as civil affairs, democracy, counternarcotics, anti-terrorism and counter insurgency . "

Students studied civic action programs during the course. These are ways for militaries to use their personnel and resources to build roads, bridges and buildings to improve the country. Burger said that armed forces can use their medical units to provide preventive medical and dental care, helping out in remote areas of the countries.

"They learn how to take the training that already has to be done in the unit, and make it effectively help the community in the process," Burger said.

From the course, Latin American officers learn to operate by U.S. doctrine, which includes a focus on human rights. Key to the students fully understanding these concepts is the fact that classes are conducted in Spanish, Burger said. Also, students said that since they are all studying U.S. doctrine, the various armies will have a common ground for working together in future operations.

"This is a multi-cultural experience that combines military learning with a community environment," Burger said.

"This course provided me the opportunity to definitely enhance my language capabilities and give me a better perspective of the Latin culture," said Maj. Michael Czaja, a student in the course. "Plus, I've had a year to interact with contemporaries from Latin America, and that is an experience I wouldn't trade."

Several students said that interacting with other students and their families was one of the high points of coming to SOA. Burger said that the students learn a lot from each other, both professionally and personally.

The visiting families attend church here, and the student's children go to local schools and play sports with their American counterparts. The wives become active in the community, in part by giving cultural presentations at schools and special events. These families go home with a better understanding of the world after a year in the United States, Burger said.

"Not only did I learn a lot on the professional side, but my family has been able grow as well," said Peruvian Lt. Col. Marco Rondan, student president. "My wife has improved her English speaking skills."

English when we got here 12 months ago. Now they speak English very well. Sometimes I think my youngest daughter actually speaks better English now than Spanish," he said.

After graduation, many of these Latin American officers will be assigned either to a joint staff position or to their country's course as instructors, Burger said.

"When I return to Peru, I will probably be assigned to the Joint Staff Office with other National Police officials and armed forces officials," said Rondan, who has worked a lot with counternarcotics operations back home.

"In my country, if you are selected to attend a class at the School of the Americas, especially the command course, then you are considered to be one of the top people in your job specialty," he said. "When SOA graduates return to Peru, they are usually selected for key assignments because of the good reputation SOA has in my country."

Highlights of this year's course included a peacekeeping conference and a congressional visit.

In July, SOA was visited by Reps. Joseph Kennedy, Sanford Bishop, Michael Collins and Martin Meehan, accompanied by Army Undersecretary Joe Reeder. The students told them how relationships developed at SOA help break down political walls.

In November, the school hosted the seventh Latin American Conference. Professors and military leaders from Latin and North America gathered to discuss peacekeeping. They shared their experiences and proposed improvements for future operations. Students took full part in the conference discussions and work groups .

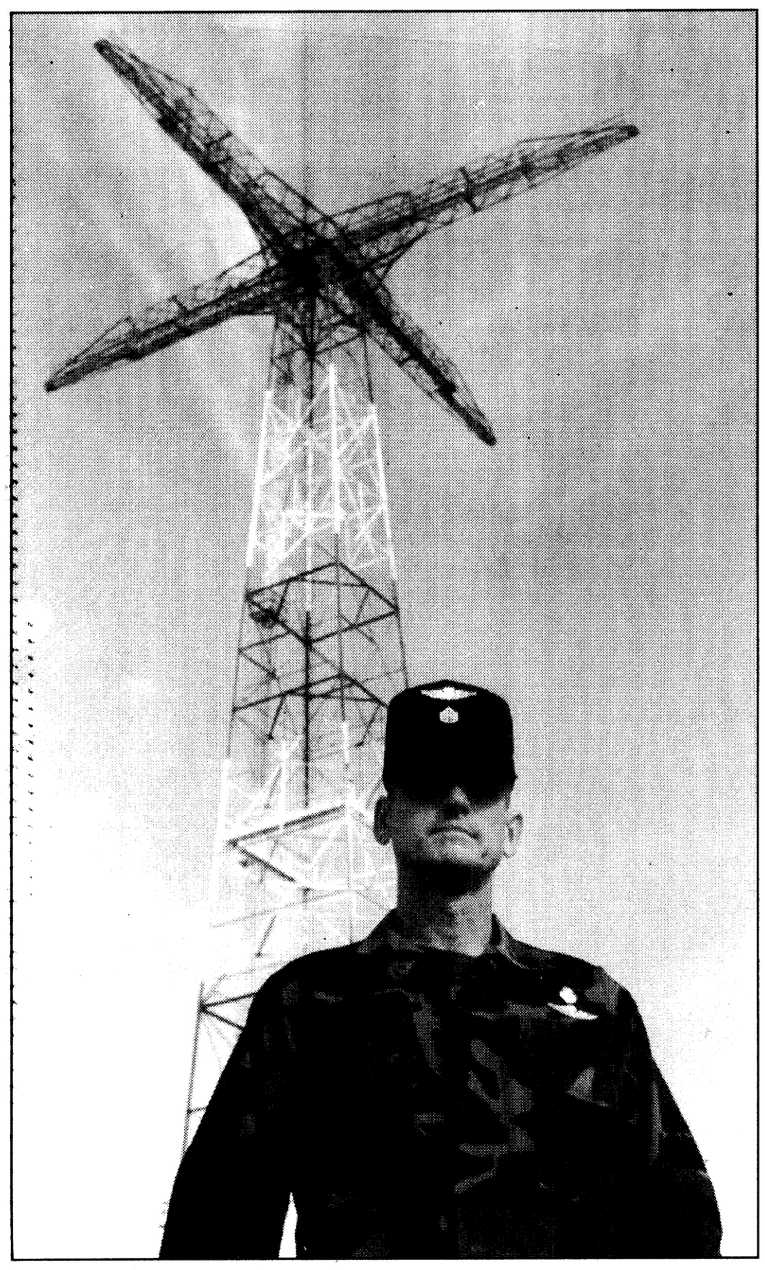
Thursday, 37 officers from 10 different countries graduated from SOA's course. Of them, 19 are U.S. officers. Gen. Wayne A. Downing, commander-in-chief of U.S. Special Operations Command, spoke at the ceremony.

1/63rd Engineer Company returns from NTC

By Adrian A. Marsh
63rd Engineer Company

Less than one month after removing debris from hurricane-ravaged Fort Benning, the soldiers of the 1st Platoon, 63rd Engineer Company and attachments from the 608th Ordnance and 586th Engineer companies, found themselves digging into the hard desert sands of Tierra del Diablo. That's the scenario name for the National Training Center, Fort Irwin, Calif., for all of those who have not had the opportunity to experience the Army's training installation.

The 1st Platoon deployed to Fort Irwin, Calif.., from Fort Stewart, Ga., where they were attached to the 3rd Engineer Battalion in support of the 2nd Brigade, 24th Infantry Division (Mechanized). Upon arrival at Fort Irwin, the soldiers drew pre-positioned equipment, which included four bulldozers and a SEE tractor (the Mercedes-Benz version of the John Deer backhoe). The filled platoon proved to be a vital asset to the 2nd Brigade's war on the Krasnovians, also known as the opposing force.



The platoon conducted a wide variety of missions in support of the 2nd Brigade ranging from constructing forward area refueling points to survivability berms for command posts and fuel tankers. The platoon's greatest challenge lay in digging in 2nd Brigade for the force–on–force and live-fire defenses. On two separate occasions, the platoon worked continuously for over 24 hours constructing fighting positions for the M-1 Abrams tanks and the M-2 Bradley fighting vehicles. In all, the platoon constructed and cleared 70 vehicle Fighting positions, bermed 23 fuel tankers and four command posts with the dozers while the SEE dug in over 50 individual and crew-served positions.

The platoon's efforts were rewarded by 3rd Engineer Battalion . Also, the Army Achievement Medal was awarded to Spc. Micheal J. Fox, Spc. Clinton Dewey, Spc. Patrick Geyer and Spc. Shawn Langford for their skills as operators while seven others received battalion and division coins.

"Despite the awards and recognition the members of the first platoon agree the best reward is the experience they bring back to Fort Benning from their 30 days in the desert," said Jeffrey Bochonok, company commander.

Marine takes to air

By Richard Brill
Special to The Bayonet©

Only a few weeks ago, he wore the camouflaged cap of a Marine sergeant.

Now he sports the black baseball hat that designates an instructor at the U.S. Army Airborne School at Fort Benning, Ga.

Staff Sgt. James Holt recently became the first marine in the school's history to become an airborne instructor, or "blackhat," when he completed the certification process in late October.

The Elkin, N.C., native said Fort Benning was already a familiar place to him, having been here in previous years to attend the airborne, pathfinder and ranger schools.

His 15-year stint in the Marine Corps has included such parachute–oriented assignments as freefall instructor and parachute project officer.

Holt said he found the 16-week certification course, which basically consists in perfectly memorizing the lengthy blocks of instruction that blackhats must deliver to airborne students, mentally challenging.

"There is a very large amount of material which must be perfectly memorized," Holt said. "The challenge is memorizing all of it in such a way that the delivery seems natural and it doesn't sound like you are just reading off a card."

Holt said the course is essentially self-paced. The final test is the delivery of the lessons to the unit command sergeant major.

The Airborne School is authorized a number of instructors from other branches of the service, Holt said. After first working with the post Marine Corps liaison office, he received orders to report to the 507th in July. Three months later, he became the first marine to don the black hat.

Although each blackhat must be able to deliver any of the airborne blocks of instruction, each is assigned a specific block of instruction to teach at the school, Holt said. Currently he teaches the mock door class.

Holt said his teaching style is embodied in the philosophy, "lead by example."

"I don't believe in using force to teach," Holt said. "I like to take a less aggressive approach that involves leading by example. I can't ask them to do what I can't do myself."

He may not be the stereotypical marine tough guy, but he definitely doesn't shy away from insisting his students are motivated and ready to learn, he said.

"I really enjoy teaching, and I like working with the students" he said. "It's great to be able to pass the knowledge on to new troops."

It's probably no coincidence that his favorite past time is parachuting. With already more than 2,000 jumps in his military career, Holt wants to increase the total and has already become the first Marine member of the Silver Wings command exhibition parachute team.

Holt said he also enjoys spending time with his family, which includes his wife Marjorie, son Matt, age 15, and daughter Cindy, age 19.

Soldiers back from Egypt

By Marla Ferguson
690th Medical Company

Twenty-three individuals from the 690th Medical Company have returned from Bright Star '95. Soldiers returned on Dec. 8 at 2 a.m. The soldiers began deploying to Egypt Sept. 24 to provide ground medical evacuation coverage for the entire theater of operations.

After the initial shock of sand, sand, and more sand, the 690th Medical Company completed the mission.

The exercise was completed in three different locations. Several individuals provided medical coverage at the Port of Dukhaylah, Egypt. During the deployment and redeployment phases, injuries and sick call were on the rise. However, during off time, beach volleyball and swimming in the Mediterranean were mission-essential tasks.

Other soldiers participated in joint training with Air Force personnel and enjoyed Air Force Base Camp in Cairo West. Flight-line emergencies and Egyptian kitchen police with the flu were the largest customers for emergency response. Although 24-hour shifts were long, air-conditioned tents and a recreation area improved morale immensely.

The ground battle was fought in the maneuver area.

Soldiers in the 690th were attached to the 47th Field Hospital while in the maneuver box and were billeted in Mubarak Military City.

During the battle, one ambulance crew deployed forward with Company C, 24th Forward Support Battalion.

Many soldiers made the trip to Giza to see the pyramids and the Sphinx. Others had the opportunity to go shopping at the Khan. T-shirts, perfume bottles, and 690th Khartooshes were the top souvenir gifts to bring home.

profile in excellence

Name: Sgt. Nestor L. Nieves-Moran

Award or recognition: 2nd Battalion, 18th Infantry Regiment Noncommissioned Officer of the Year 1995
MOS: 11M20
Unit: Company A, 2nd Battalion, 18th Infantry Regiment
Job title: Infantry Squad Leader
Years on the job: Eight months

What were your reasons for joining the Army? Since an early age, I always had dreams of becoming a soldier. I joined the infantry because of the demanding challenge that is brought upon the infantry soldiers, "the backbone of the Army."

Define your style of leadership.
By analyzing the situation, I then select the best style whether it be directive, delegative, or participative.

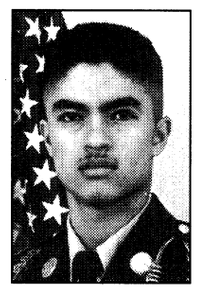
What person has most influenced your career?
The people that influence my career are my family for the support and my NCO support channel.

If you were sergeant major of the Army for a day, what improvements would you make?
If I were Sergeant Major of the Army, I would recommend that corporal and below compete for promotion by appearing before a board.

Describe a memorable moment in your career.
The most memorable moments in my career were being selected as Distinguished Leadership Graduate at Primary Leadership Development Course, earning the Expert Infantryman Badge, and, recently, being selected as Noncommissioned Officer of the Year.

What are your career plans?
My plans are to work toward a bachelor's degree in criminal justice and retire as a command sergeant major.

What others have to say: Sgt. Nieves is an outstanding NCO and is always there when you need help.



— Pfc. Rafael Perez,
Squad member

Sgt. Nieves is an excellent NCO; knowledgeable as a soldier and proficient at his job. I am proud to have him as my infantry squad leader.

— 2nd Lt. Rahhshahun Colley, Platoon leader

profile in excellence

Pfc. Ricardo Munoz

Award or recognition: 2nd Battalion, 18th Infantry Regiment, Soldier of the Year 1995
MOS: 11M10
Unit: Company A, 2nd Battalion, 18th Infantry Regiment
Job title: Company commander's driver
Years on the job: Eight months

What were your reasons for joining the Army?
At that time, I could not join the police department so I looked to the next best thing, the Army and the Infantry.

Define your style of leadership.
No matter what the task, always do your best.

What person has most influenced your career?
My father was most influesntial because he has shown me what a little hard work can do.

If you were sergeant major of the Army for a day, what improvements would you make?
I would make it mandatory for all specialists and below to be more professional about their careers.

What were your reasons for choosing your MOS?
Bradleys are a great asset to the Army.

Describe a memorable moment in your career.
Attending Airborne school was a most memorable moment in my career. Jumping out of airplanes has always been a dream for me.

What are your career plans?
I plan to continue my military career until I see fit to leave, at which time I want to go into law enforcement.

What others have to say: Pfc. Munoz is an outstanding soldier who has won several of soldier boards. He does an excellent job as the company commander's driver and is trying to improve himself by taking college courses on their own time.

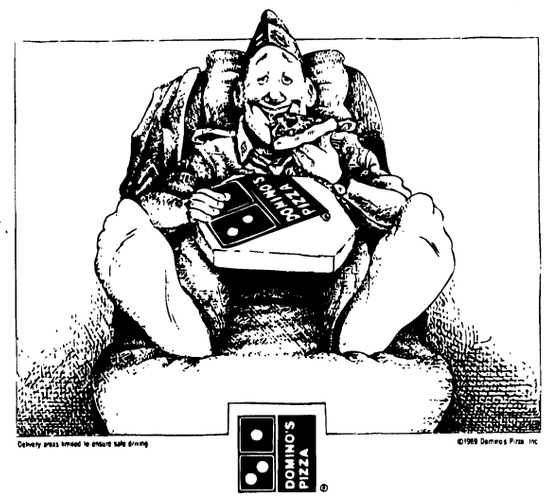
Dining at 29th takes top spot

2nd Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment

The 2nd Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment, dining facility was awarded the "Best Contract Dining Facility award" for first quarter fiscal year 1996. Col. Richard Rutledge, garrison commander, made the presentation to Robert M. Trombley, the dining facility manager, Nov. 17 at the dining facility.



This is the 10th first-place award the dining facility has won, according to Trombley. The 2nd Bn., 29th Inf. Regt. dining facility, which serves an average of 402 meals a day, was chosen out of seven civilian contract dining facilities on post, Trombley said.

Spiritual team wins nationally

USAIC Chaplain Office

The Religious Education Center's team, which participated in Wordfest 2, has won again.

Wordfest is a national contest among church groups of teenagers competing on general Bible knowledge.

The quiz is composed of ten categories of questions.

Fort Benning's team scored highest in seven categories, with perfect scores in four of the seven.

The contest was conducted in November, and the Fort Benning team also won in the Wordfest competition that was conducted in April of this year.

Fort Benning's team consisted of Alicia Kadesch, Nicole Moran, Kimberly Morris, and David Richardson. These four team members will be awarded certificates in January for their accomplishments.

Donation brightens holidays for preschoolers

By Judith Ginder
School of the Americas

Students from a School of the Americas course will make the holidays warmer and brighter for some of the area's preschoolers.

SOA's Command and General Staff Course donated $130 to the Head Start program of Columbus, Dec. 13

The couse is 47 weeks long and it prepares U.S.Army and Air Force majors, as well as Latin American officers, for field grade command positions.

The students used money for the donation from their class fund. The fund is made totally from student contributions and is used throughout the year by the students for trips, parties and gifts.

As graduation neared, this year's class had money left over. The students decided that giving to help the Head Start children in the Columbus area was how they wanted to use the rest of their money, said Maj. Luis Roldan, SOA's Command and General Staff Course student treasurer.

The students were at graduation practice when they presented Jovani Alexis of the Head Start family services component a check and clothing for the children.

Head Start is a federally funded program that provides a preschool for low-income and environmentally deprived children. The program focuses on three- and four-year olds.

The Head Start staff decided to help the children's families this Christmas by giving them warm clothing, new shoes and food, Alexis said.

"Without this donation from the School of the Americas, we wouldn't have been able to help the families out this year," Alexis said. "We just want to be able to help let the children have a merry Christmas."

LANGUAGE ARTS

7th-graders create holiday book

By Shannon Day
Special to The Bayonet

The seventh-grade students at Faith Middle School combined language arts skills, word processing skills and a lot of creativity in a project that helped put the kindergartners and second grade students at Dexter Elementary School in holiday

The seventh graders interviewed the younger students and then created a holiday book for each child, with that child as the main character.

"This has been an incredible experience for the seventh graders, because it is one of the first times that punctuation has really mattered," said Anne Trawick, a teacher at Faith who oversaw the project. "We stressed to them that the little kids are learning to read from (the books)."

The seventh graders began by dividing into small groups of one to four.

Their next task was to interview individual Dexter students.

According to Jarmaine Thomas, interviewing the younger child was the most challenging part of the three-week project.

"The interview and making the story up were the hardest because everything had to be perfect," he said.

After the interviews were done, the story had to be written and the pictures had to be drawn.

Trawick said the students used coloring books and slide projectors to trace some illustrations, but the pictures had to be altered to fit the stories they had written.

The seventh graders were given no restrictions on creativity, but had to keep in mind that they were supposed to entertain the audience, which was a five-year-old child, according to Trawick.

Once the books were completed, Trawick graded the final product.

"On (the books) anything less than an A is a bad grade," she said. She also added that the kids had three weeks to perfect the books, and none of the previous mistakes were counted.

The Faith students hosted a book party in their cafeteria Dec. 12 and 13. The Dexter students came over, enjoyed cookies and punch, and were presented their books.

Peggy Gindville, a kindergarten teacher at Dexter, said the children were very excited about receiving the books.

"They asked every day when they could go get their books," she said. "They really like to see something with their name on it."

"It's also good for the little ones to have some time with the big ones," Gindville added. "We're using it as a learning experience."

The students at Faith have been doing the project for about seven years, and Gindville said she hopes her class is invited to participate next year also.

volunteers needed

Volunteer Resource Center

Many volunteer opportunities are available on post. If you are interested in learning new skills, increasing your proficiency, meeting new people and learning more about your community, volunteering is one way to do so.

Currently, volunteers are needed for the following service positions:

• Relocation assistant — Army Community Service needs a relocation assistant to perform data entry, typing, filing, compiling and collating welcome packets and providing packets for mailing to other installations.

• Receptionist — Army Emergency Relief needs a receptionist to ensure client confidentiality, assist with clerical duties, ensure clients properly complete necessary forms, type, answer calls and take messages.

• Instructor — The Army Family Team Building Program needs instructors and clerical support. Instructor training will be provided.

• Receptionist — The Chaplain Family Life Center needs a receptionist to answer the telephone, take messages, provide basic information on services provided by the Center.

• Program assistant — Child Development Services needs a program assistant to assist care givers with daily activities and minor clerical duties.

• Receptionist — The Legal Assistance Division needs a receptionist to make appointments and provide information to clients.

• Volunteer Income Tax Assistance Office — needs electronic filing clerks, income tax preparers and receptionists to complete tax returns and assist individuals with tax returns and other clerical duties. Training by IRS and on-the-job training will be provided.

• Public Affairs Office — needs an editorial assistant to assist the Command Information Office in publishing The Bayonet and producing "Fort Benning Today" and the Fort Benning radio news.

Many agencies pay for child care for their volunteers. If you are interested in volunteering, contact the Volunteer Resource Center at 545-5931 or 545-5602.

Share holiday cheer with troops in Bosnia

By Robert Thompson
USAIC Chaplain Office

Soldiers and civilians of the Fort Benning community can share holiday cheer with our troops in Bosnia by signing a giant greeting card in Infantry Hall before New Year's Day.

The cad is located on a sign-up stand by the display room across from the Staff Duty office.

The idea for the card surfaced while a group of soldiers were planning what to do with Infantry Hall's display room for the hilday season.

"We knew we wanted to recognize our soldiers who have deployed from Fort Benning to Bosnia," said Chaplain Garry Moore, Infantry School ethics instructor and project officer for the holiday display. "As we brainstormed on how to do that, Spc. Kara Fulinara mentioned the idea of a giant card for everyone to sign and send to our soldiers."

Fulinara is a chaplain assistant working at the Family Life Center in Soldiers' Plaza. "I know our soldiers in Bosnia are going to feel lonely during the holidays and afterward, too," she said. "If I was deployed there, I would love to get a card like this. It would tell me that people back home haven't forgotten about us."

The cover of the card is blue, and in gold letters it reads, "Fort Benning Soldiers, we remember you!"

Inside, the card is white so that people can sign their names and write a short greeting.

Taped on the glass of the display case is a poem, "The Night Before Christmas," a story of a soldier overseas during the holidays.

The display room was designed and set up by Moors, Fulinara and Judy Sasser, a communication skills instructor at the Infantry School.

The room features a living room scene complete with decorated Christmas tree and lounging chair.

A coffee table displays letters, cookies and milk for Santa. Stockings and children's decorations hang nearby. The whole scene centers around a world map ringed with paper cut-out people. Above the maps are the words, "And peace on earth for all people."

The Fort Benning community is invited to visit the display room before Jan. 3 to sign the card.

"You should see (the card) easily, Moore said. "It measures 20 inches wide and 30 inches high. It's set on a black metal stand right next to the doors of the display room. Stop by to let our soldiers know we remember them."

Tricare Extra to replace CHAMPUS Select

By Joe Thornton
CHAMPUS Office

Tricare Extra, like CHAMPUS Select, is a preferred provider organization offering discounted health care services and cost shares to CHAMPUS beneficiaries who choose a network provider.

Tricare, the new Department of Defense managed–care program, is scheduled to be implemented in the Southeastern Region in May 1996.

Tricare will offer Civilian Health and Medical Program of the Uniformed Services beneficiaries three health care options. One of the options, Tricare Extra, will replace the CHAMPUS Select program that CHAMPUS beneficiaries currently use to save money on their health care. When the care a beneficiary needs is unavailable at a local military treatment facility, CHAMPUS Select is a cost saving alternative to standard CHAMPUS.

CHAMPUS Select, is a preferred provider organization offering discounted health care services and cost shares to CHAMPUS beneficiaries who choose a network provider from a comprehensive list of qualified providers in the Region.

Claims are filed by providers, and beneficiaries who do not enroll or pay an annual fee, just like the current CHAMPUS Select program.

CHAMPUS beneficiaries do not have to wait until Tricare Extra is operational in the Southeastern Region to save money on their health care. Beneficiaries can receive quality health care at reduced costs by using the CHAMPUS Select program currently operating in the Southeastern Region.

By seeking care from a CHAMPUS Select provider, when care is unavailable at the Medical Treatment Facility, Champus beneficiaries can take advantage of the following:

- Toll-Free Beneficiary Information Line — Call (800) 824-3570 for the most current listing of health-care providers and answers to questions about the program.
- Reduced Cost Shares- CHAMPUS Select healthcare providers agree to charge less for their services, lowering the portion of the health-care claim beneficiaries are responsible for paying.
- Less Paperwork — CHAMPUS Select providers complete and submit claims for beneficiaries.
- Easy Access To Health Care Services — A comprehensive network of qualified hospitals, specialists and mental health professionals is available.

CHAMPUS Select is a voluntary health care benefits program offered by the Department of Defense as a cost-effective alternative to standard CHAMPUS. It is not a CHAMPUS supplemental insurance plan, so there is no premium to pay or enrollment to use the program. CHAMPUS Select is only available in the Southeastern Region of the United States, namely: Alabama, Florida, Georgia, Mississippi, Tennessee and the Fort Campbell area of Kentucky.

For more information about the CHAMPUS Select program or to obtain a comprehensive directory of CHAMPUS Select providers, call Joe Thornton or Lynn Mott, the CHAMPUS Select coordinator and representative for the Fort Benning area at (706) 628-5949 or the beneficiary information line at (800) 824-3570.

Old CHAMPUS form not accepted after year's end

Office of Civilian Health and Medical Program of the Uniformed Services

The old yellow Civilian Health and Medical Program of the Uniformed Services claim form — the Department of Defense Form 2520 — submitted by patients for civilian care received under CHAMPUS/Tricare Standard, will not be accepted for services rendered in the U.S. and Puerto Rico after Dec. 31.

Beginning Jan. 1, CHAMPUS Tricare contractors will only accept the new white CHAMPUS claim form (DD Form 2642, "Patient's Request for Medical Payment") from program beneficiaries in the U.S. and Puerto Rico.

After the first of the year, claims that are filed on the old form will be returned to the sender, to be filed on a DD Form 2642.

Providers of care in the U.S. and Puerto Rico may not use the DD Form 2642 when submitting claims to CHAMPUS Tricare contractors.

Individual professional providers must use the Health Care Financing Administration 1500 form. Institutional providers will use the UB-92 form.

However, the DD Form 2520 may still be used, by both patients and providers of care, to file Champus claims for services received outside the U.S. and Puerto Rico.

Association plans management training for nonmanagers

Fort Benning Management Association

The Fort Benning Management Association is planning to host a series of seminars to be presented by Troy State University.

The seminars will be presented as part of the organization's regular monthly meetings beginning Jan. 18.

The seminars are aimed at nonmanagers who want to sharpen their leadership skills. The topics will be related to ethics, team building, motivation, Malcolm Baldridge criteria, automation and its impact, taking charge of your future, psychological aspects of minority managers, leadership and productivity and stress management just to name a few.

These presentations will be given by Troy State University staff faculty. The seminars will be supplemented with case studies and panel discussions.

The charge will be $1 per session to help defray expenses. Certificates will be given for attendance at four, six and eight sessions. These certificates may be used to get professional development credits, depending on current personnel regulations.

Members and nonmembers may attend. Members that attend will be given extra incentives by the association.

The meetings will start at 11:30 a.m. for lunch and the seminars will run from noon to 1 p.m.

A schedule listing topics, times and locations will be provided at the January seminar, which will be conducted at the Officers' Club.

For more information, contact John Machovec at 545-5173, Bruce Piper at 545-5174, Nilsa Summey at 545-2200 or Steve Magner at 545-2420.

Make your reservations for the Jan. 18 session by Jan. 10 by calling Virginia Wright at 545-7411, Anne Wright at 545-7411 or Myrtle Chalkley at 545-4413.

Hands-on approach brings history to life

By Shannon Day
Special to The Bayonet©

To help her students better relate to historical events and people in the past, Evelyn Braman, fifth grade social studies teacher, White Elementary School, has adopted a hands-on approach to teaching.

The classes are currently studying the civil war, so Braman divided each class into the North and South. She divided them according to the area populations at that time, so two-thirds of the students are fighting for the North and one-third for the South. Each team also came up with their own motto, flag and made bandannas to wear.

During the seven-week course of study, the students role-played different historical figures. Braman said one example is the southern soldiers having to speak with a southern accent.

Besides soldiers, the children studied women who dressed as men to fight in battle, and also spies, she said.

Each team accumulates or looses points, according to their performance. Braman said they also have little fates that happen to them, such as a guard for the North falling asleep and a Southern soldier stealing all of their food.

One day, Braman brought in hard tack, the main ration of Civil War soldiers, for the students to try. It is a flour and water mixture, baked into a cracker.

"They loved it," she said. "I even had to write the recipe on the board for them."

Braman added that the hard tack is so hard, she has to cut it into pieces with a pizza cutter before she bakes it, or else she can't break it after it has been cooked.

> "This type of study is really good for those we call 'at-risk' learners."

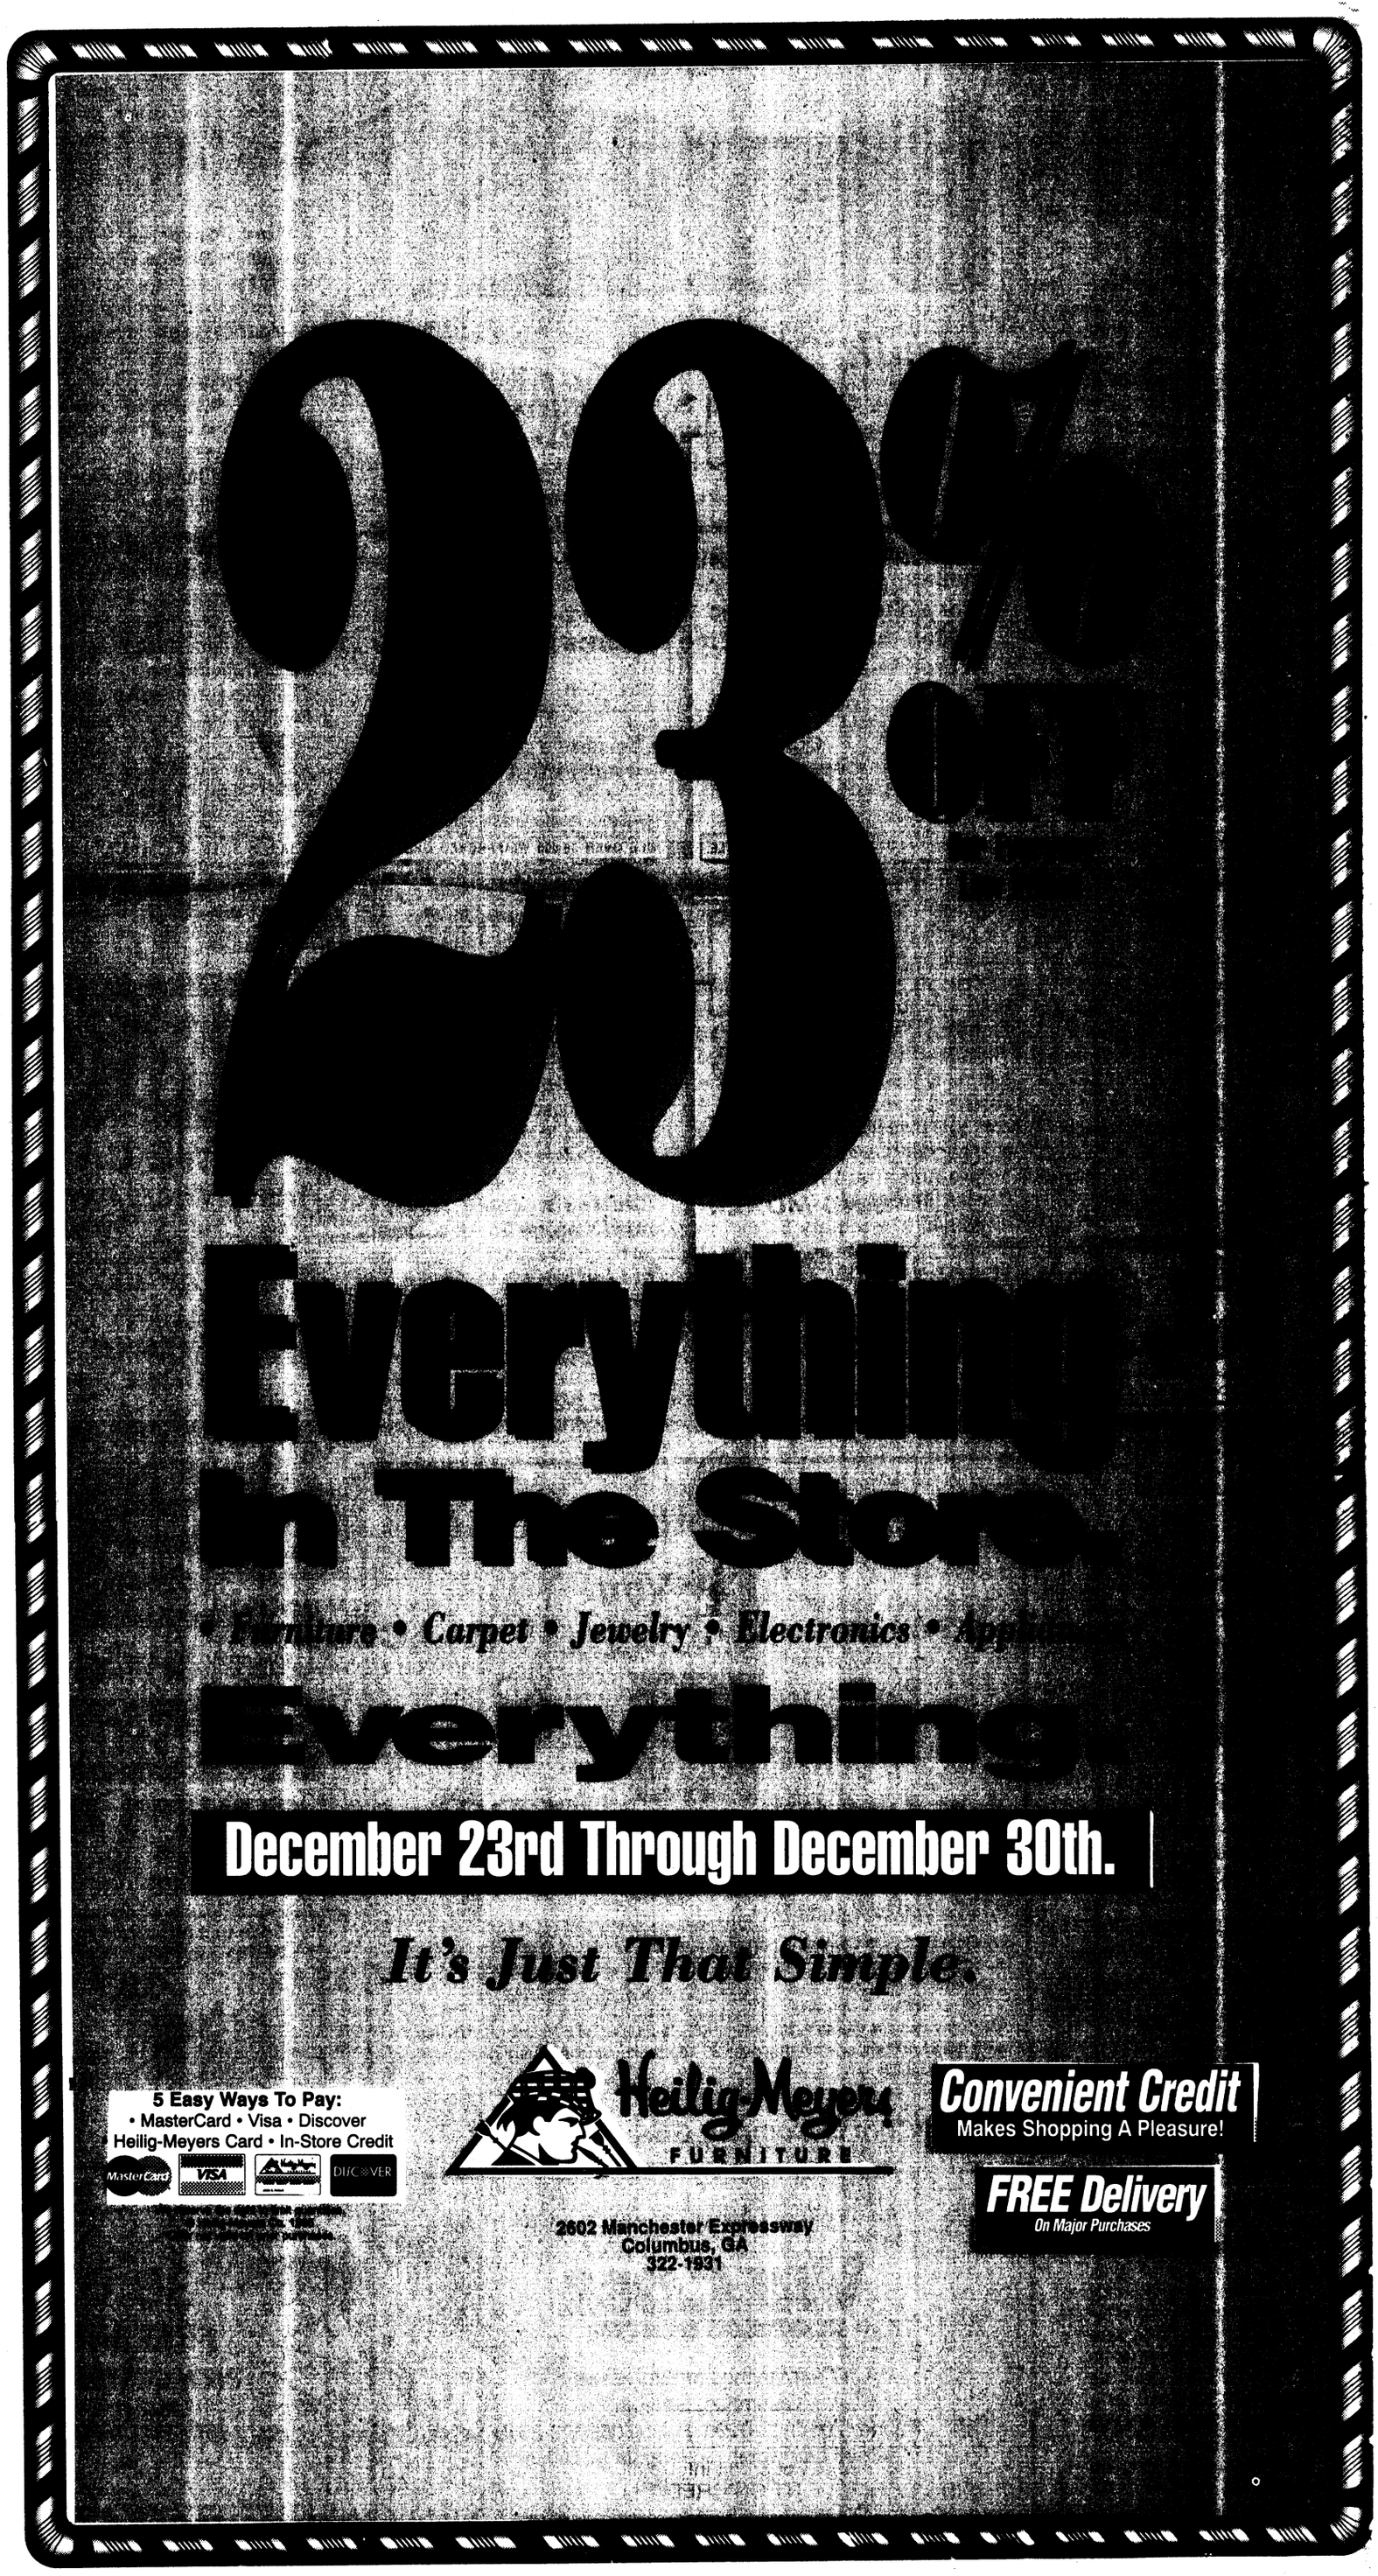
Representatives of the Columbus Guard, a Confederate unit, also visits the class, dressed in Civil War uniforms.



Braman also decided to utilize the Fort Benning resources and asked parents for volunteers to come in and teach the children how to march.

"This type of study is really good for those we call 'at-risk' learners," she said. "Those are children who have attention-span problems or reading problems."

She said she knows the children are really excited about an activity when they learn about it on their own.

"That's when I know they are excited, when they go beyond and do the extra," Braman said.

The finale of the unit will be the re-enactment of the third day of Gettysburg battle, followed by a field hospital scene.

Jigging spoons improve strikes

By Earl Bentz and Steve Price
Outboard Marine Corporation

If it's winter, it's time for jigging spoons, said David Wharton, who is a former guide on Lake Sam Rayburn,

Wharton said he uses spoons throughout the year, but he prefers them now when the water begins to turn colder.

"The advantage of a jigging spoon is that you can put it right in front of bass in deep water and keep it there," Wharton said. "You locate the bass on your electronic depth finder, and then you can actually watch your spoon on the depth finder."

When bass move to deep water during the winter months, Wharton said, they tend to suspend in large schools which makes them show up well on depth finders.

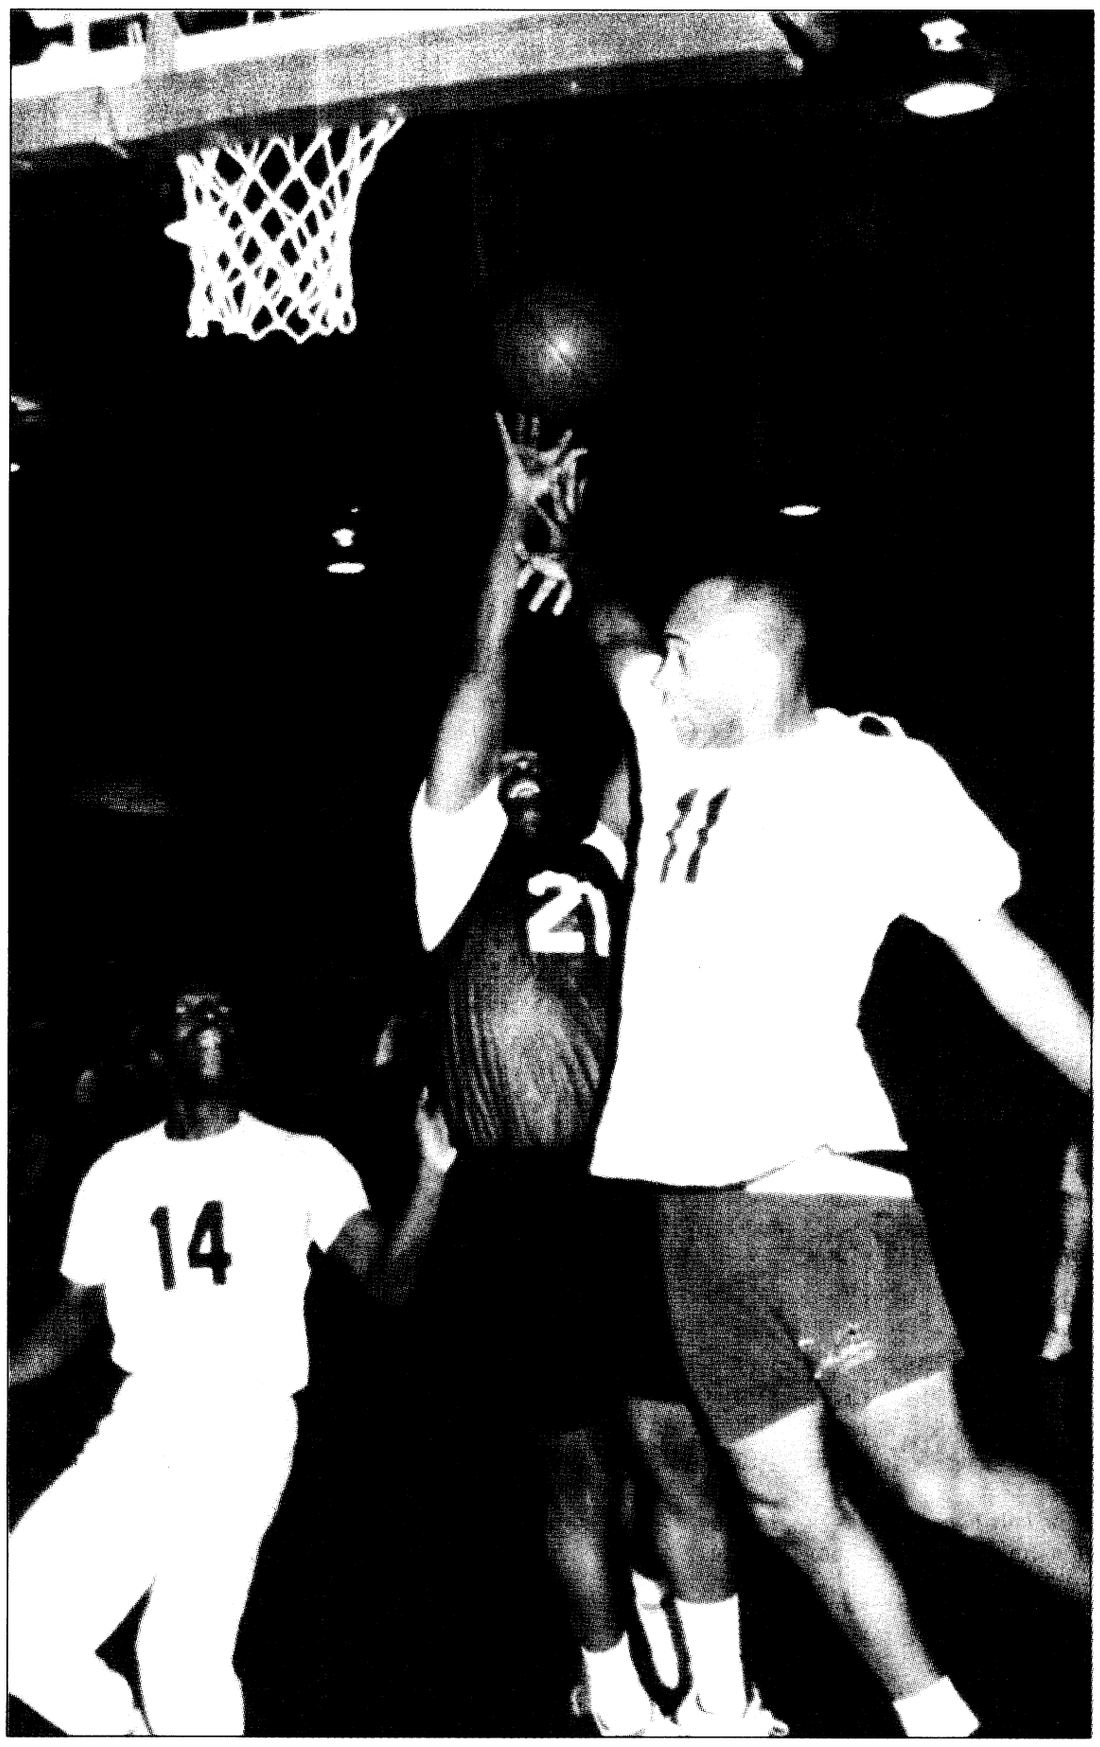
"I believe the best way to fish a jigging spoon is vertically," Wharton said. "Once I have the lure at the depth I want it, I start jigging it vertically.

"I like to work a spoon with a quick snap of my wrists so the spoon does not jump upward very far," Wharton said.

After snapping his wrists to make the spoon jump up, the pro lowers his rod quickly so the spoon falls back naturally, Wharton said.

"One of the most common mistakes I see anglers make when fishing spoons is letting them fall on tight lines," Wharton said. "I think a jigging spoon imitates an injured or dying minnow, and for it to do that properly, you have to let it fall naturally."

Depending on the depth of water he's fishing, Wharton said he will use a one-half or a three-fourth ounce spoons, and he doesn't hesitate to drop them into underwater brush and cover.



"If you stop your upward jigging and give the lure slack line the moment you feel it hit brush, the weight of the spoon will often free it again," he said.

"You don't often mistake a bass strike for brush either, because when bass hit a spoon, they usually hit it hard."

Another reason Wharton likes to use jigging spoons this time of year is because where he catches one bass, he often catches several more without ever having to move the boat.

MEDDAC shoots hoops for charity

By Brian R. Voller
Bayonet staff writer

Brian R. Voller

Senior enlisted team players take on the civilian employee team during the MEDDAC Charity Basketball Tournament.

For a person to walk into Briant Wells Fitness Center on Dec. 8, one of the first questions he or she might ask is, "Why is that man running around in a diaper carrying a stuffed raccoon?"

This was just one part of the U.S. Army Medical Department Activity's charity basketball tournament that raised more than 800 canned goods for the Army Community Service food locker.

The winners of the tournament were decided not only by the total number of points they scored during the competition, but their scores were also added to the total number of canned goods they collected for the tournament.

The tournament consisted of four teams. There was a junior enlisted soldiers team, an officer team, a senior enlisted team and a team made up of civilian employees.

The tournament championship went to the senior enlisted team which scored a total of 42 points and collected a total of 252 canned goods. The officers came in second place with a total of 30 points, and 245 canned goods donated. The civilian employees brought home the third place prize with 31 points and 177 canned goods; and despite their dominance in total points, the junior enlisted team took fourth place with 47 total points and 90 canned goods.

The MEDDAC basketball tournament also saw some changes to the rules of basketball.

"There were some different punishments used for a player if he or she was called for a foul," said Wayne Williams of the senior enlisted team. "We had three judges set up at a table by the sidelines to rule on fouls. When players committed fouls, the referee brought them over to the table for their punishment.

"Some of the punishments that were given out were: The player who committed the foul had to wear a diaper and carry a stuffed raccoon for a minute or until the next foul was committed. We also had them carry a bag with an egg inside of it."

Williams said any player who committed a foul also had a chance to bribe the judges for a judges' pardon, if the judges felt the canned goods being donated as a bribe were enough, the player could skip his or her penalty. But, if the judges didn't accept the bribe, then the player had to suffer the consequences.

Williams said the tournament itself was fun and good competition, but it was also for a good cause.

"Everybody was a winner," Williams said. " The object wasn't to just go out there and play basketball. It was to contribute to the community. With all the canned goods we collected through this game, we've more than accomplished that goal. We are trying to make this an annual tradition for MEDDAC. It helps a good cause, and it's great for the soldier's and the civilians' morale."

Top shooter returns to AMU

By Deana Kussman
US Army Marksmanship Unit

The annals of the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit are filled with a myriad of world-class shooters. Periodically, one such name returns to the USAMU to help prepare the next generation of shooters for the pressures of international competition.

Lanny Bassham, who left the Army after nine years after reaching the rank of major, was stationed at the USAMU three times during his military career. Twice while training under the unit's coaches, he reached the Olympics, winning a silver in 1972 and gold in 1976.

His world success in rifle competition has been followed by a career in mental management training. Bassham holds workshops for the USAMU's international pistol and international rifle teams. In each workshop Bassham discusses match preparation and strategy, such as advice on which shooter should hold a steady performance or risk pushing for record-breaking scores.

"He provides our team with a great opportunity to compare ideas and experiences in a structured environment," Capt. Matthew Suggs said.

Bassham, who has been teaching mental management training for 20 years, began to study mental techniques after the 1972 Olympics.

Once a shooter learns the basics, winning is found more in the way a shooter thinks, Bassham said. His mental management system is meant to provide a basis on which the individual athletes can build their own system.

Returning to the USAMU to teach is exciting for Bassham.

"I owe everything to this unit," he said.

Maj. Steve Goff appreciates learning from a former USAMU shooter.

"Because of his shared experience of being in the Marksmanship unit, he's someone who has a better understanding of what we do," Goff said. Goff said. "He's someone who relates well. We learn more from him than from somebody who doesn't know shooting."

Old lures beat new lures for bass fishing

By Earl Bentz and Steve Price
Outboard Marine Corporation

As a veteran professional bass tournament competitor as well as fishing guide, Randy Dearman certainly has his share of fishing lures. But he never stops looking for more.

Specifically, however, he looks for old lures that may have been made 50 or 60 years ago.

"I've been a lure collector for just about as long as I can remember," Dearman said, guide for more than 25 years on Lake Livingston in Texas.

"I probably started looking for old lures when I began guiding, because occasionally I'd have older clients who would bring along their old lures because that's all they had. I really enjoyed looking through their tackle boxes."

Even today, Dearman can't resist looking through tackle boxes, but he's widened his range to include occasional visits to antique shops and yard sales.

"Antique lures are like anything else," Dearman said. "They turn up in some really unusual places. I don't spend a lot of time specifically looking for lures, but I always keep an eye open for them."

Some of the Johnson pro's favorites are old Bombers, unusual in that each lure, regardless of size, always came packaged in the same size box. Dearman also treasures some of the original Creek Chub and Heddon lures in his collection.

"Those are among the companies that really started the fishing lure business long before I was born," Dearman said, "and the lures have a lot of history in them. I really think that's why most people collect old lures anyway, because we certainly never fish with them."

Dearman has been surprised at the popularity of old lure collecting, which has progressed to the point that now several reference books have been published detailing lures and putting a value on them.

"I know serious collectors who travel the country just looking for old lures, occasionally buying entire collections," he said. "I'm not that serious and probably never will be."

"One of the things I like to do is compare old lures with what we use today. What is surprising is that in many instances the lures have not changed that much. What has changed is how the lures are made.

"The colors have improved dramatically, as have the materials used in making the lures, but the overall concept of what certain lures are designed to do has never changed.

"I'm sure we could use the old lures and catch bass. In fact, we might even have better success with them, since the fish haven't seen them in such a long time."

MGA military open golf tournament

Military Golf Association

The first Military Golf Association Open at MacDill Air Force Base, Tampa, Fla., was Oct. 13 through 15. Golfers from all over the country competed in six different divisions. In the end, the Air Force dominated the active duty flights and local golfers championed three different divisions. Prizes for the winners were provided by MGA sponsor, the Arnold Palmer Golf Management Company, Orlando, Fla.

Maj. Brett Williams, U.S. Air Force captured the first open title, as well as winning the active duty challenge. Stationed at MacDill Air Force Base, Williams used his familiarity with the course for a preemptive strike on the first day when he fired a one under par 71 to take the lead. Although play proved more difficult during the next two days, this opening round permitted Williams to establish an early four-stroke lead and he only widened this lead over the remainder of the weekend. Williams shot a pair of 78's on Saturday and Sunday to finish with a 227, eight–strokes ahead of the runner-up.

A stiff competition occurred for the remaining prize slots in the open division. After two days, only eight-strokes separated the second through seventh positions on the leader board. Barry Fontenot, from Keesler Air Force Base and Michael Batten, from Barksdale Air Force base both shot 80's on the final day to sustain their positions and finish second and third respectively, with totals of 235 and 237. Paul Sleasman from Biloxi shot a 78 on the final day to jump two positions and finished fourth. Dale Davis, a retired Air Force player and another local MGA member who acted as Tournament Coordinator, completed the Open with a 239 to finish in the top five.

Competition in the active duty divisions, sponsored by the U.S. Military Sports Association, proved equally intense. Navy Master Chief Dennis Espinoza, from Kings Bay Submarine base in St. Mary, Georgia, who played baseball in the New York Yankee farm system, took the first flight active duty competition with a total of 239. John Moffett from Keesler AFB, won the silver with a 255. The tournament chaplain, Father James Casalara from Fort Leonard Wood, Mo., finished in third place with a 286.

The second flight active duty division, might best be characterized as the Battle for Biloxi. Eight active duty participants traveled by caravan from Keesler Air Force Base to compete in the open. Along with Fontenot, Sleasman and Moffett, members of the Biloxi troop held the top five slots in the second flight. Ken Houwers managed to expand his three-stroke lead after two days to take the second flight by six-strokes finishing with a 269 total. Rick Zeismer spent Sunday playing tough and won second place followed by Don Sibble and Anthony Byrch who tied for third place.

One of three couples competing in the open, Walter and Thresea Yielding from Sun City Center, Florida managed to capture their respective divisions. Walter wired the field in the Senior's Division with a total of 239. Thresea also used her familiarity with the course to take the ladies' title, finishing ahead of LaVera Meaders from Englewood, Colo.

The Stableford Division went to the golfer who also journeyed the longest distance to participate, D. Bryant Spahn, from the Presidio Military Golf Club in San Francisco, Calif. Trailing by six points after Saturday, Bryant tallied seven points on the final day to win with a plus seven.

Lou Harris, general manager of the Bay Palms Golf Complex at MacDill Air Force Base and his staff, made an extraordinary effort to get the courses in shape for the three–day tournament. Mother Nature added several complications to the playing conditions on both courses. Indeed, both courses were closed for a week earlier in the month to allow for the drainage of water that had accumulated during the passage of Hurricane Opal. The effects of extensive rain throughout late September and early October created unusually slow green conditions, overgrown rough areas, and soft fairways that dictated a lift, clean and place ruling by the Tournament Committee. Further, the prolonged rain and pools of stagnant water provided a home base for squadrons of mosquitoes that aggressively attacked golfers throughout the weekend.

The overwhelming majority of participants considered the weekend a resounding success and enjoyed the social activities that included a reception Friday evening and a putting contest on Saturday followed by a Prime Rib dinner.

Military Golf Association founder, Al Stetz, commended each participant for his and her enthusiasm and caliber of play. Stetz noted that the Military Golf Association has an outstanding, supportive charter membership and is well situated to meet its goal of 5,000 members in 1996. The Military Golf Association plans to hold the next Military Open in San Antonio, Texas, and expects to finalize the dates and course locations within the next month.

About Spirit Bells
West Pointer Hunter Vinn , a warrior-adept whose World War II experience was with OSS and a ranger unit, left the army disillusioned following the war. He reenters in the late 1940s and finds himself a training officer with an infantry company. Cast with him in this novel are some interesting military minds, all faced with a new kind of war and green teenager for troops--General Smith, Captain Bronca, Sgt. Lopes, General MacArthur and finally the Chinese Communist Colonel Chung, a warrior-master in his own right.
It was a heartbreaking war and those teen-agers rose to it, offering all they had in the most difficult war in modern military history.
But Vinn sees war as the ideal mystical crucible for spiritual development. On a frozen mountain in North Korea in the winter of 1950 as the American Army faces disaster, Chung teaches Vinn a shattering lesson of soldierhood.

About Lewis W. Green's first novel, And Scatter The Proud
The late Dr. Carlos Baker, professor of literature at Princeton University, author of Ernest Hemingway: A Life Story.
"A monumental first novel. Green is a gifted story-teller who know his country and his people and makes the most of both..."
Ralph McGill (Late editor of the Atlanta Constitution):
"His characters live and move as human beings whom readers will remember."
The Seattle Times
"Green's six-part novel is one of the finest written in the past decade...filled with observation on the human condition.

'TIS THE SEASON

God began the gift-giving process

By V. Burns
Infantry Training Brigade

Sure, it's about gifts and presents. Don't let them tell you that it's not. Christmas is all about giving and receiving gifts. But it might help to put it in the perspective of the Christian tradition to understand what that really means.

It began at that point in time when God chose to give the people of this world a gift that they had never received before and that they needed more than they could ever realize.

God gave us the gift of his Son, and it is his birth that we celebrate each year at Christmas. God began the gift-giving process, and we have been continuing it ever since then.

It was only moments after the gift of Christ arrived that the human race responded. The shepherds were told of the news of this awesome gift, and they immediately wanted to do something to show at least some appreciation, as inadequate as it might be.

They looked in their herds for newborn lambs and in their meager possessions for some gift to bring to this infant whom the angels had identified as the Savior.

With deep humility and reverence they brought these gifts to the Christ child. The process was underway. The gift was returned with more gifts. Some time later, wise men came from the east following an unusually bright star to Bethlehem, the town where Christ was born. They, too, brought gifts. These were much more elaborate than the initial gifts of the shepherds, and these, too, were brought in a spirit of humility and reverence. The gift-giving process was continuing.

To be sure, the wonderful and beautiful customs of exchanging gifts on Christmas day has been to some extent spoiled by a consumeristic society. Anyone who struggles to maintain the true meaning and spirit of the birth of a savior born to poor parents in an atmosphere of simplicity cannot help but be discouraged at the appearance of Christmas decorations in stores in early November.

If Christmas is about the giving of gifts, then what is to be given and what is to be received? It goes back to the original giver — the God of love who gave us the gift of his Son. Our first step is to acknowledge both the giver and the gift. If we don't do that, then the rest will never make any sense at all.

Acknowledging Jesus as the ultimate gift from God necessarily prompts a human response. It cannot be otherwise. And the response, as human nature tells us, is to give something back to God. But God will never be outdone in generosity. So the more we give of ourselves to God, the more God gives of himself to us.

The process continues. The more we receive from God, the more we want to share with one another. And the more we share with one another, the more grateful we are to God. It's a wonderful process, and it has been at work among God's people at least since that first Christmas.

If we have made any mistake at all, it has been to emphasize the material gifts that we give instead of the message that began the whole process in the first place.

reflections

God gave out of his eternal love, and he asks us to give out of our human love.

Christmas has meaning only for those who have understood the on-going process of giving and receiving that the Creator began when he made us in his image and likeness and then gave us the most precious gift of his Son. When we give ourselves back to God and when we give ourselves in service and love to one another, then the message of Christmas has been received.

You bet Christmas is about the giving and receiving of gifts. It's just a matter of understanding what the gift is.

Why aren't we happy with what we have?

By Chana Timoner
1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment

Take one mythological figure who has been blown out of proportion by the American commercial establishment out of our lives and what is left? The real blessings of Christmas

One of the most popular late night TV shows has a section called "stupid pet tricks." Another show has bloopers done by humans that were never before shown. Yet most of us don't think twice about laughing at another person's failings. Maybe there should be a show called "stupid human failings."

Lawrence Hoffman recently suggested the two laws of stupid human nature:

Stupid law No. 1 in economics — If people pay you what you charge, then you are not charging enough.

Stupid law No. 2 (psychological)— The easier it is to get people to pay you what they owe, the more unhappy you should be at what you get. That is, disappointment increases as success rises.

Why do we always insist that we are worth more? Why are we never happy with what we have? What happens to the lucky winner of a $2 million lottery when she finds out the next week that someone in her neighborhood has won $10 million ? She wishes that she continued to buy tickets instead of stopping.

These two stupid laws are illustrated rather keenly in Genesis with the meeting of Jacob and his brother Esau. Both brothers have prospered to an extraordinary extent. They are both clearly very rich men. Jacob offers more riches to Esau who declines at first, and then accepts (Gen.33:9).

One famous commentator put it this way, "People are never satisfied with money that falls into their lap, for it is human nature to want more. But when money comes from God, God also provides the virtue of contentment. That is why Esau notes only, "I have great abundance" (Gen. 33:1), whereas Jacob goes farther, saying "God has favored me with everything" (Genesis 33:11).

Jacob's real gift is a blessing — the blessing of being satisfied with what you have.

Remember this when you turn on the television. Remember and notice that the most prevalent picture we are presented about Christmas is the image of Santa Claus — an image having almost nothing to do with the original Christmas.

Think about it. Take this one mythological figure who has been blown well out of proportion by the American commercial establishment out of our lives and what is left? The real blessings of Christmas — the blessing of deep, sincere appreciation for what we have. Praise God's holy name.

If Jesus came today, what would he learn about our world?

By Alex C. Brown
13th Corps Support Battalion

What if Jesus had not been born 2,000 years ago? Suppose he were to make his entrance into the world Dec. 25, 1995. What would he learn about our world if he sat in your living room in front of your television?

With 20/20 vision, Jesus would see in only 60 minutes that people remain separated on issues of race and gender. From the world news any night, Jesus would learn wars and rumors of them are raging, and troops are deploying because of differences in religious heritage and disagreement over political agenda.

The afternoon talk shows would inform Jesus that personal relationships are common war zones, that families are disintegrating and that widows and orphans are frequently abandoned by fathers and the church.

I believe that Jesus would not be surprised by what he learned from our cable network tuned to CNN. However, he might be disappointed that the same problems exist 2,000 years since his birth.

The painful problems we face today have lingered from the first century like the aroma of a skunk. Jesus, while watching Ted Koppel mediate a Nightline townhall meeting, would remember the day in the first century when he stopped at a well near the city of Sychar, in a region of Samaria (John 4).

There he met a woman who had come to draw water. He asked her for a drink. She was surprised that he, being a Jewish man, would ask her, a Samaritan woman, for a drink of water, and have the audacity to expect to use her cup.

By her response, we see that she focused on the racial and gender differences more than the need of a thirsty man.

She did not know that God is not particular about skin color and ethnic differences. As the creator, God made all colors and cultures as equal ("...all have sinned and fall short of his glory..." Romans 3:23). God loves all the creatures of creation equally, as parents ought to love all their children equally.

The afternoon talk shows would inform Jesus that personal relationships are common war zones, that families are disintegrating and that widows and orphans are frequently abandoned by fathers and the church

Maybe it was from a bad "fall" into darkness (Gen. 3) that this woman did not know about God's purpose for the relationship between man and woman. God created male and female as equal beings with different functions.

What we have termed as incompatibility was by the producer's script intended to be a picture of mutual dependence and support. Athletes on a team are all equal as human beings, yet each player is dependent on his or her teammates.

Jesus would remember how he offered this woman "living water." She observed that he had nothing with which to draw water from the well. Wondering where she could possibly get this living water, she challenged him to a duel over religious heritage.

"Are you greater than our (the Samaritan's) father Jacob who gave us this well?," she said. "He drank from it himself and his sons and cattle." She said in essence, "This well has been in our family a long time."

She did not know that Jacob was accepted and considered righteous by God, not because he was a good well digger, but because he believed the revelation of God, just like his father Isaac and grandfather Abraham.

Jesus would remember how he played the expert in human relationships when he asked the woman about her husband. She claimed to have no husband. Jesus applauded the accuracy of her answer.

He demonstrated his deity as the Son of God when he told her that she had had five husbands and was shacking up with a man that was not her husband.

We can only wonder who these six men were and how she met them. Were they abusive? Did they drink in excess? Did they love her and leave her? Maybe they simply were no longer compatible.

Whoever they were, they were now gone. A string of broken relationships, unfulfilled dreams, and little hope for a secure future, loving friendship and lifelong companionship.

If this Christmas could be the first Christmas, if Jesus could be born Dec. 25, 1995, he would see a world that is bursting at its geological plates with racial tension and gender discord.

He would see the headlines of a world exploding because of the dynamite of religious heritage. He would see the social devastation and suffering of children from broken family relationships.

After Jesus saw our modern high-tech world, what would he do differently? Nothing. He would again grow up through the discomforts of manger straw, diaper rash and teething.

He would experience again the bashfulness of adolescence and peer pressures of teens. He would grow in wisdom and stature before God and man.

He would learn obedience to God and be willing to die for the salvation of people who can see their lives reflected in that woman at the well.

The 'Twelve Days of Christmas' revisited

By John R. Houser
Martin Army Community Hospital

While recently preparing a holiday program, I came across a copy of the "Twelve Days of Christmas" that had been modified to medical terminology for a hospital holiday function.

The thought quickly came to my mind that this could also be done with symbols of the Christian faith.

Then I remembered an article written by Hugh D. McKellar in which he allegorized the "Twelve Days of Christmas" to Christian symbolism.

A combination of this writer's symbolism and my own thoughts would be as follows:

A partridge in a pear tree: A baby by the name of Jesus.

Two turtle doves: peace and salvation.

Three French hens: three gifts from the wise men.

Four calling birds: four gospel writers.

Five golden rings: five thousand fed.

Six geese-a-laying: six days of creation.

Seven swans-a-swimming: Seven types of churches.

Eight maids-a-milking: eight beatitudes of Matthew.

Nine ladies dancing: nine fruits of the Spirit.

Ten lords-a-leaping: ten commandments of Moses.

Eleven pipers piping: eleven disciples preaching.

Twelve drummers drumming: twelve minor prophets.

"The Twelve Days of Christmas" would be best left alone in its present form as a famous secular Christmas carol.

But one thing is true. The greatest gift that has ever been given in this universe is Jesus Christ. God sent his son to earth to purchase our redemption through his sinless death.

As the Apostle Paul writes in Ephesians 4:18: 'For through Him (Jesus) we both have access by one spirit to the Father."

This Christmas season, why not ask Jesus to be your Lord and Savior, to forgive you for your sins and to write your name in His book of life. Why not start enjoying the fullness of life as a member of the Christian faith.

Q. My wife and I have been married for two years, and I am interested in adopting her child from a previous marriage. What is involved in adopting my wife's child, and is any help available from the Army?

A. Army programs that strengthen families and morale are close to the hearts of commanders at all levels, since a contented soldier is a better soldier. One of those programs is the Expanded Legal Assistance Program, which provides for legal representation of eligible personnel in various legal matters.

The program as implemented at Fort Benning allows representation by Georgia attorneys in step-parent adoptions for corporals and below, although other personnel may qualify by proving financial hardship.

Before an adoption may be filed, the soldier must have resided in Georgia for at least six months. The adoption is filed where the soldier resides. On post, filing may be in Chattahoochee County or Muscogee County, depending upon the on-post address.

Once the action is filed, there is a mandatory 60-day delay by law between the date of filing and the date of final hearing and order of adoption.

This means that as a practical matter, a couple must have enough time remaining on a local tour to allow for delays of several months or more, depending upon the legal requirements in each particular adoption case.

A step-parent may adopt his spouse's child under three general grounds: consent; a finding that the noncustodial parent is unfit in some way; or a finding that the parent has failed to perform parental duties without justifiable cause.

These grounds are in addition to another important requirement: the judge must in each case decide whether the adoption is in the best interests of the child. His decision has great weight in the process.

Consent of your spouse and the noncustodial parent to the adoption is the preferred method of adoption, and the least complicated. Your attorney supplies consent forms that meet the requirements of Georgia law and they are then signed and notarized by the legal parents.

At the end of the required waiting period, a hearing in court is held and the prerequisites to adoption are shown. The judge then grants the adoption. If consent is not possible, the other grounds are available, but they are not as certain to succeed as the consent grounds.

If unfitness or failure to perform parental duties is used as the ground for adoption, there is a requirement that the noncustodial parent be notified of the proceedings and given the opportunity to appear and object to the adoption.

This notice must be in the form of personal service, certified or registered mail, or advertisement in the newspapers of the county where the adoption takes place and noncustodial parent where the noncustodial parent lives.

If they cannot be found, the judge will look at the attempts to find that parent and decide whether the adoption may be completed.

This discussion has been general in nature and has not dealt with other factors that are important in deciding whether to adopt, including psychological and relational issues.

The information will not apply in every case. The first step in a step-parent adoption is an appointment with a legal assistance attorney who will analyze your individual situation and advise you. An attorney is available to assist you in these and other matters by appointment. Office hours are 8 a.m. to 5 p.m.; the telephone number is 545-3282.

Holiday rituals enrich children's lives

Egleston Children's Health Care Center

Holiday rituals, both religious and nonreligious — can enrich children's lives in many ways. They give children a sense of belonging, a sense of security and positive feelings about family life. Rituals bring families together in common bonds of love and acceptance.

They can be used to teach family values. And, best of all, they can create warm, loving memories that will last throughout the years. Susan Bryant of the Child Advocacy Center at Egleston Children's Health Care System offers these ideas for creating holiday rituals for your family:

• Personalize formal religious rituals by worshiping together at the same service each year or having a special activity before or after worship, such as visiting family members or gathering for hot chocolate.

• If gift-giving is part of your holiday celebration, build rituals around what types of gifts are given (such as each family member giving at least one homemade gift), when and where gifts are opened and how gifts are handed out.

• Start a tradition of caroling in your neighborhood or have less formal sing-a-longs at home. Let children choose some of the songs.

• Have your family choose or make some decorations together each year, decorate the house on the same day each year or combine decorating with another special activity, such as sharing a favorite meal or listening to holiday music.

• Use decorations that have been in the family for years as springboards for discussions of past holidays. Use religious items brought out during the holidays, such as manger scenes and menorahs, to invite the telling of stories that unite families in common faith.

• Serve some foods your family can expect to see on the table year after year. Bake holiday treats together as a family.

• If divorce means you won't have your children for the holidays, create new rituals. Begin the festivities early so your child will have memories of holiday at both parents' home.

Combine past family rituals with new ones that show the family can move forward despite the break-up.

• If stepchildren are part of your life, talk as a family about what's important to each person for the holidays, and incorporate ideas from each person. Include some old rituals from each family, but work to create new ones, too, that will help create a separate history for the new family unit.

• Remember, what makes certain holiday activities rituals is the fact that family members can expect them year after year. Still, it's best to allow rituals to change over time as the family grows and changes.
