Dorn took issue with a report released by the Department of Veterans Affairs Minneapolis Center, which said virtually all female veterans surveyed had experienced sexual harassment and nearly 25 percent had experienced rape or attempted rape.

He said a small, selective sampling of women being treated for service-related disorders was not representative of all service women.

Figures from a much larger survey of military personnel were much lower, he said. That 1988 survey found 68 percent of service women felt they'd been harassed and 5 percent were victims of sexual assault or attempted rape. DoD will release an updated survey this summer.

"Still," Dorn added, "whether we're talking about 10 percent, 50 percent or 90 percent of women, we take it very seriously, and we're determined to stop it. Sexual harassment is illegal, it's repugnant and it undermines military effectiveness. Secretary Perry has said he will not tolerate it, and we are putting in place a series of mechanisms to prevent it or to deal with it when it occurs."

35 added to base closure, realignment list

By Stephen Barrett,
American Forces Information Service

Six Air Force bases slated for realignment in 1995 now face closure by the Base Realignment and Closure Commission. The six are among 35 installations the commission added to Department of Defense recommendations submitted in February.

Moving from realignment to possible closure are McClellan Air Force Base, Calif.; Robins Air Force Base, Ga.; Grand Forks Air Force Base, N.D.; Tinker Air Force Base, Okla.; Kelly Air Force Base, Texas; and Hill Air Force Base, Utah. Also facing status change is the Army's Letterkenny (Pa.) Army Depot.

Other installations added to the closure list include Oakland (Calif.) Army Base; Tobyhanna (Pa.) Army Depot; Portsmouth Naval Shipyard in Kittery, Maine; and Vance Air Force Base, Okla.

Last winter DoD made its 1995 recommendations — the fourth and final segment of closings authorized by the 1990 Base Closure and Realignment Act. DoD recommended closing or realigning 146 installations, with Defense Secretary William J. Perry saying the $18 billion in savings would improve readiness and force modernization.

The commission chairman, former U.S. Sen. Alan J. Dixon, said the addition of an installation to the list doesn't mean the base will close or realign.

"It means the commission believes a fuller evaluation of the base is a reasonable thing to undertake at this time," he said.

Dixon said the commission does not make additions to the list lightly. However, he added, it's the commission's responsibility to submit the best possible closure and realignment list to President Bill Clinton by July 1.

Commission members will visit bases added to the list through June 11. Commissioners will conduct regional hearings and receive testimony from local officials, leaders and citizens.

Once local testimony concludes, commission members will take testimony from congressional leaders June 12 to 13 in Washington. DoD officials will also testify before the commission.

Following the hearings, the commission will submit its final recommendations to Clinton. The president has the options of accepting the list as is, rejecting it or returning the list for further consideration.

Unless returned to the commission for further action, the list must go to Congress July 15. Congress has 45 legislative days to accept or reject the list in its entirety. To reject the list, both houses of Congress must disapprove by resolution. Acceptance or failure to reject puts the list into effect.

Military medicine prepares for 21st century

By Evelyn D. Harris
American Forces Information Service

Faster, more efficient medical evacuations, more operational training for medical personnel and increased jointness are some changes the military medical system will make to face the challenges of the post-Cold War world.

Air Force Dr. (Maj. Gen.) George Anderson said a new plan, Medical Readiness Strategic Plan 2001, represents a top-to-bottom scrub of the medical system in support of worldwide contingencies.

Anderson, deputy assistant secretary of defense for health services operations and readiness, said the document lays out 42 action plans to enhance medical readiness.

"The world has changed a lot over the last several years, and this plan is designed to deal with that," said Anderson. "When you change your basic military strategy it requires a change in the support concept.

"We have to be ready to provide support wherever there are military operations. Our motto could be: 'Health Care Anywhere, Anytime.' We want to assure that the people providing the care are properly trained and that we identify them for deployment, so we can get the right people at the right time to the right place to take care of anything that goes on."

The military medical departments have traditionally focused on treating combat causalities, said Anderson. These patients required intensive surgery, lengthy hospitalization and rehabilitation.

In today's operations other than war the focus shifts to preventive medicine and treating disease and nonbattle injuries, he said. Providing safe food and drinking water sources for U.S. forces wherever they're deployed is an important concern.

"We need to prevent illnesses in locations where people aren't used to the environment," he said. "They need to know what food is safe, how to avoid insects, and so forth. We need medical intelligence for a variety of environments, because we may not get much warning in advance of deployment."

The Army, Navy and Air Force medical departments will make the medical plan happen. Although the strategic plan is aimed at being ready for the next century, Anderson said some action items could start immediately.

"Subject matter experts working on this plan built on existing programs wherever possible, they didn't want to reinvent the wheel," said Anderson. "Medical personnel will notice the changes this summer. Individual military members probably won't notice the changes unless they get injured or ill in an operational setting.

"In that case, they'll be sent home faster. There's been a basic change in strategy for how we move casualties. Patients will be stabilized and evacuated from the theater sooner than in the past."

Forward-based medical teams will be smaller, but equipped with more advanced technology.

One main theme of the plan is jointness. For example, evacuation personnel and equipment will be joint. Communications, command and control for the evacuation will also be integrated, increasing efficiency and enabling the military to track every patient and accompanying equipment every step of the way.

Logistics support will improve, thanks to a joint medical supply and support system.

Training is another theme. Medics will participate in more war games and simulations. All new active and reserve component personnel will attend required entry-level military training within 12 months of coming into the military.

The strategy asks the services to design a way to call up needed reservists to handle medical evacuations in contingencies, without having to resort to a full call-up. DoD also plans to access the Aeromedical Evacuation Civil Reserve Air Fleet sooner in the mobilization process to complement an overcommitted C-141 fleet.

The plan calls for maintaining a strong, joint Armed Services Blood Program to provide safe blood products wherever needed. It recommends DoD continue supporting research on blood substitutes.

Remains of two soldiers identified, returned to families

By Rudi Williams
American Forces Information Service

Remains of two American service men missing in Southeast Asia since December 1967 have been identified and returned to their families.

The name of one service member is being withheld at the request of his family.

Searchers recovered the remains of Marine Corps Sgt. Frederick J. Burns of Nassau County, N.Y. They were recovered last year from a prisoner of war camp cemetery located between Chu Lai and Tam Ky in Quang Nam Province, Vietnam, said a spokesperson for the Army Central Identification Laboratory, Hawaii.

Burns, born June 11, 1949, was reported missing shortly after his 10-man squad moved out on a night patrol mission on Dec. 25, 1967, lab officials said.

"According to a returning POW, then-Pvt. Burns was captured on Dec. 26, 1967, after being separated from his patrol," a lab spokesperson said. "Documents provided by Vietnamese officials indicate Burns died Jan. 2, 1969, while in captivity."

"We had a complete skeleton, partly eroded by acid soil, and we were able to determine the body stature and age," said scientific director Tom Holland. "The teeth were in good condition because they're not affected by acid soil."

Dental records are one of the best ways to positively identify remains, officials said.

"The remains were found in a single grave, so there wasn't any commingling," Holland said. "I don't know if any other American remains have been recovered from that cemetery. Prisoner of war camps in South Vietnam were moved a lot during the war."

Burns' remains were repatriated as a result of efforts by a joint American-Vietnamese search and recovery team, officials said.

The number of Americans still missing in Southeast Asia increased to 2,205 with the addition of United Press International correspondent Kent B. Potter to the list, lab officials said. Potter and three foreign journalists were aboard a South Vietnamese army helicopter that exploded on impact after being hit by anti-aircraft fire over Laos on Feb. 10, 1971.

Potter wasn't carried as missing in action because he was a civilian and was known to have died in the crash, officials said. The State Department added Potter to make the list consistent with other civilians already on the list.

DPW contractor gets truck to help in recycling

By Marc G. Turchin
Bayonet staff writer

The truck uses a built-in hydraulic compacting system that crushes cans in 25 seconds, presses plastic in 16 seconds and compresses cardboard in 15 seconds

The Directorate of Public Works, Environmental Management Branch, contractor has received a new piece of equipment — a truck to help assist with the recycling on post.

This truck is not average, though.

Behind the driver's cab are four containers — one for each type of recyclable material. The containers can hold and compact any type of plastic, aluminum cans and small boxes of cardboard such as pizza and cereal boxes. A trailer is pulled behind the truck and holds glass and additional recyclable materials.

This truck has been in service since May 9.

"It's doing exactly what it needs to do," said Paul Webb, manager, Fort Benning landfill and project manager for Mark Dunning Industries, the post contractor who runs the landfill. MDI is also the company that designed the truck.

What the truck is doing is holding more material and doing the work faster.

"That's why we bought it," Webb said.

The truck uses a built-in hydraulic compacting system that crushes cans in 25 seconds, presses plastic in 16 seconds and compresses cardboard in 15 seconds.

That makes the unloading of the materials less difficult.

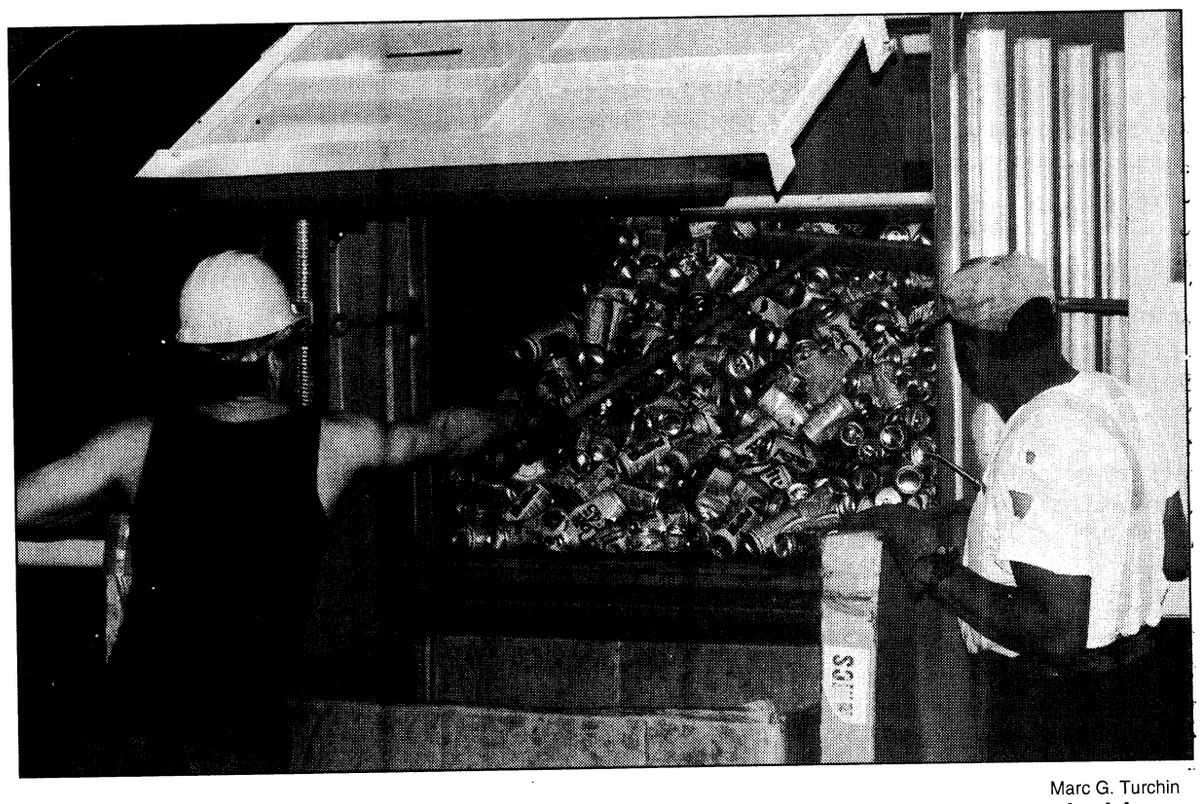
The truck minimizes the amount of hands-on unloading that is done at the facility, said Tom Moore, recycling manager, Materials Recovery Facility.

"It makes it easier to unload, Moore said. "It helps my guys a lot," he said. "I'm real pleased with it."

The truck costs $60,000 and has a projected life expectancy of 10 to 12 years, Webb said.

Besides the amount of recycling it does, Webb said, the truck is easier and safer to work with.

The truck, which is used four times a week, is a single axle vehicle. Even with the trailer attached, the truck is five and half feet shorter than other trucks being used on post.



The cab design of the truck allows for more visibility for the driver.

"This is an important safety feature when driving in the condensed housing areas on post," Webb said.

Webb also said by using this type of vehicle allows the truck to compact more items which in turn increases volume and saves turn around time.

Moore said it takes 30 minutes to unload the truck.

Moore also said this truck will help with an increase in recycling, which has been forecasted for Fort Benning.

Marc G. Turchin

Harry Conde, condensing machine operator, and Moses Brinson, labor truck driver, unload aluminum cans at the Materials Recovery Facility.

More Americans buckle up

Armed Forces Information Service

Seat belt use is at its highest rate in U.S. history, according to Transportation Secretary Federico Pena.

A total of 67 percent of passenger car and light truck drivers buckle up routinely, said Pena.

Department of Transportation statistics indicate safety belts have prevented 55,600 deaths and 1.3 million injuries, and safety belts have saved more than $105 billion in costs.

Motor vehicle injuries cost the United States $137 billion annually — more than the $16 billion in damage done by Midwest floods or the $20 billion done by Hurricane Andrew.

Pena's goal for 1997 is 75 percent of drivers using seat belts.

- Directorate of Public Safety — Harmony Church, 8th Division Road

DPS — McGraw Manor

For more information, call Maj. James Kump at 545-1711.

29th Infantry Regt. to change command

The 29th Infantry Regiment will change command June 23 in a 9 a.m. ceremony on Dickman Field.

Col. Robert J. Fulcher Jr. will succeed Col. Robert L. Jordan as commander of the regiment.

Dickman Field is located on First Division Road in the Harmonby Church area.

Controlled burning set

Controlled burning of woodland and range areas will take place Monday through June 24.

If weather permits, the following compartments may be affected: A-15, A-16, F-4, M-7, O-1, O-4, V-3, W-3, X-1, AA and BB-2.

People using these areas for recreation must leave before 9:30 a.m. daily.

Training units using compartments next to these areas are reminded to exercise caution while traveling in these areas because of the potential for reduced visibility.

For more information, call 544-6206.

Road closed

Effective immediately, the Old Cusseta Highway near Sand Hill will be closed at the reservation boundary until further notice.

Housing sets summer hours

The Directorate of Public Works Housing Division, Furnishing Management Branch, will operate at its summer operating hours through Sept. 29.

The new operating hours are 7 a.m. to 3:30 p.m. Monday through Friday. The office will close for lunch from 11 to 11:30 a.m.

For more information, call 545-6713.

30th AG to change command Wed

The 30th Adjutant General Battalion (Reception) change of command ceremony, honoring Lt. Col. Bobby A. Little, outgoing commander, and Lt. Col. Deborah A. Kissel, incoming commander, will be Wednesday at 9 a.m. at Wetherby Field, Sand Hill.

A reception will follow the ceremony.

Voter slogan contest open through July 14

The Federal Voting Assistance Program is having its 1995 voter slogan contest to increase voter awareness and participation by military members, and their families. Anyone may submit an entry.

All military members and their families and other citizens are encouraged to participate in the contest. Enter as many slogans and as often as you wish.

Slogans should be submitted on letter size, 8 1/2 x 11 paper, and each page must include your full name, service if military, mailing address, fax number or E-mail, if available, and daytime phone number.

Send your slogans to: The Federal Voting Assistance Program, Room 1B457, The Pentagon, Washington, D.C. 20301. All slogans must be received by July 14.

CID requests help finding car thief

Between 12:01 a.m. April 21 and 7 a.m. April 22, someone stole a 1993, teal in color, two-door Pontiac Sunbird, with Tennessee license plate ZCP488, from a carport adjacent to 69-B Dunn Court.

Anyone having information concerning this incident can contact the Military Police at 545-5222 or Special Agent Kelly McCrate, Criminal Investigation Division, at 545-4981 or 545-2414.

The identity of anyone providing information will be kept in the strictest confidence.

CID looking for killer

The U.S. Army Criminal Investigation Command is offering a $1,000 reward concerning the circumstances surrounding the death of Takashi Moore March 2.

Moore was found by a Military Police Patrol at approximately 4:30 a.m. March 2 alongside of Highway 27, adjacent to the 8th Division Road overpass.

Moore had suffered several large abrasions to his upper body and died as a result of massive head injuries.

The reward will be paid to anyone providing information that leads to the apprehension and conviction of the people responsible.

The identity of the person providing information concerning this incident will be held strictly confidential.

MCSS to exchange tight BDU shirts

Army military clothing sales stores will accept exchanges on certain battle dress uniform shirts, following a pattern redesign that causes sleeves to be too tight when rolled.

While the flaw has been corrected for future procurement, soldiers in possession of improperly fitting BDU coats can exchange them, at no cost, until Sept. 30.

Soldiers are encouraged to try on the coat before purchasing, ensuring a comfortable fit when sleeves are rolled, officials said.

Returned coats must be in serviceable condition.

SOA students learn counternarcotics

By Judith Ginder
School of the Americas

Three times a year the School of the Americas admits soldiers from Latin America to SOA's counternarcotics operations course.

The 10-week course is designed to provide selected leaders specialized training in the development of planning, leading and executing counternarcotics operations, according to course director Sgt. 1st Class Luis Ledesma.

During the counternarcotics course, students are taught realistic and strenuous field operations.

One such operation requires the students to helocast into Victory Pond and then move into the McKenna Military Operations on Urbanized Terrain facility, said Ledesma.

After the helocast, students are broken into three squads where they move separately towards the MOUT site.

"The three squads move to just outside of McKenna then set up a perimeter together," said Sgt. Edgar Ramirez, special operations instructor.

"Once the perimeter is set, they have to decide how they will go into the area," Ramirez added.

Prior to the students moving, SOA personnel are inside the MOUT site waiting for the students arrival.

Staff Sgt. Antonio Guadalupe, special operations instructor, shows School of the Americas students how to position their riot shields.

According to Ramirez, about 15 personnel from the School of the Americas are role players during the operation — some act as drug dealers and drug manufacturers and others act as rioters.

It is the training received throughout the course, said Ledesma, which prepares the students for this operation.

"They bring together the different elements of what they've learned so far in the course in order to complete this exercise," said Ledesma.

The students surprised those inside the MOUT site by blowing open the door of a drug manufacturer's laboratory while other students control the rioting people in the streets.

"This group of students did a really good job in carrying out this operation," Ramirez said.

SOA gets 1st female CO

By Judith Ginder
School of the Americas

A change of command ceremony was conducted for the School of the Americas Headquarters and Headquarters Company May 24 at Ridgway Hall.

Capt. Trudy K. Leonard, the first female to take a command position at the School of the Americas, replaced Capt. Robert S. Barker, who was with the School of the Americas for more than two years. Barker and his family will be making a permanent change of station move to Germany this month.

While attending college, Leonard said she saw a career in the Army as a chance to challenge herself and to push herself harder than in the past. Leonard takes the job of leading soldiers very seriously. She said that leading by example is how she would best describe her leadership style.

"If I am unable or unwilling to do something, I'm not going to expect it of any of my soldiers," said Leonard.

She added that her top priority as commander will be to instill a sense of discipline among the soldiers in her company, especially among the junior enlisted ranks.

Reassuringly, Leonard said that although discipline is high on her list she feels that she is a fair person and expects the standards of the Army to be maintained by everyone.

The new commander said she feels being the first female commander at SOA doesn't hold a lot of significance.

"I'm doing the same job that any of my male counterparts would be doing in this position," she said.

"Historically yes, my name will be listed as the first female. However, that will be the only difference. I'm just really looking forward to the next year or so," she said.

Lt. Col. Ahmed Labault, battalion commander, was the presiding officer. A reception followed the ceremony.

Before this assignment, Leonard served as the Battalion S-1 at the School of the Americas. In addition, Leonard's assignments have included executive officer, chief of Personnel Information Branch and chief of Personnel Information Actions Branch at Fort Ord, Calif.

As an Adjutant General officer, Leonard was commissioned through ROTC at the University of Montana in 1989 and entered active duty in September 1990.

In addition to a bachelor's degree in business administration from the University of Montana, Leonard is a graduate of the Adjutant General Officer Basic and Advanced Courses, Airborne School and Air Assault School.

TRADOC vital to Army health

TRADOC News Service

FORT MONROE, Va. — "TRADOC is integral to the health of the United States Army," said Gen. Gordon R. Sullivan, Army chief of staff. "Without a viable, healthy TRADOC, the United States Army could not be as good as it is."

Sullivan spoke to an audience of Training and Doctrine Command headquarters military and civilian personnel June 5. The talk was billed as a farewell message from the retiring chief of staff.

Since he became chief of staff in 1991, Sullivan said, missions for the Army have increased 300 percent. At the same time, the budget declined by 40 percent, and 600,000 people, including civilian employees and reserve component soldiers, were cut from the Army.

"Six hundred thousand people just staggers the imagination ... those are big numbers," he said.

"When you consider what the soldiers have gone through the last four years, I think the truly remarkable achievement is that this organization has held itself together."

He was determined not to repeat the mistakes that were made after the Vietnam War when the Army was downsized haphazardly. But that wasn't the important challenge, he said.

"The real challenge is not (just) to be ready today, it's to be ready today and tomorrow," Sullivan said. "And you can't predict tomorrow.

"I turned to TRADOC since this is where the real strength is found," he continued. "Training is the glue, which has held the organization together .. and doctrine is the engine of change.

"I think the most important thing that TRADOC has always done is lead the intellectual revolution ... maintaining a doctrine which is related to the world as it is, not as we wish it to be. Also, doctrine which is flexible enough to enable the young men and women of this Army to improvise on the battlefield."

Doctrine created "substantive, enduring, lasting change" through the "hard, hard work" of writing it.

"The process of writing doctrine is how we will internalize change," Sullivan said.

"While technology may advance and take us to new plateaus of effectiveness, until that technology is incorporated into our organizations ... into our very being .. then it's just technology.

"That's why TRADOC is so important to me, because you have your young men and women ... wrestling with that challenge."

He pointed out that TRADOC was not exempt from the changes affecting the rest of the Army.

"You were not shielded from this 600,000 people, 40 cents off of every dollar cut," he said.

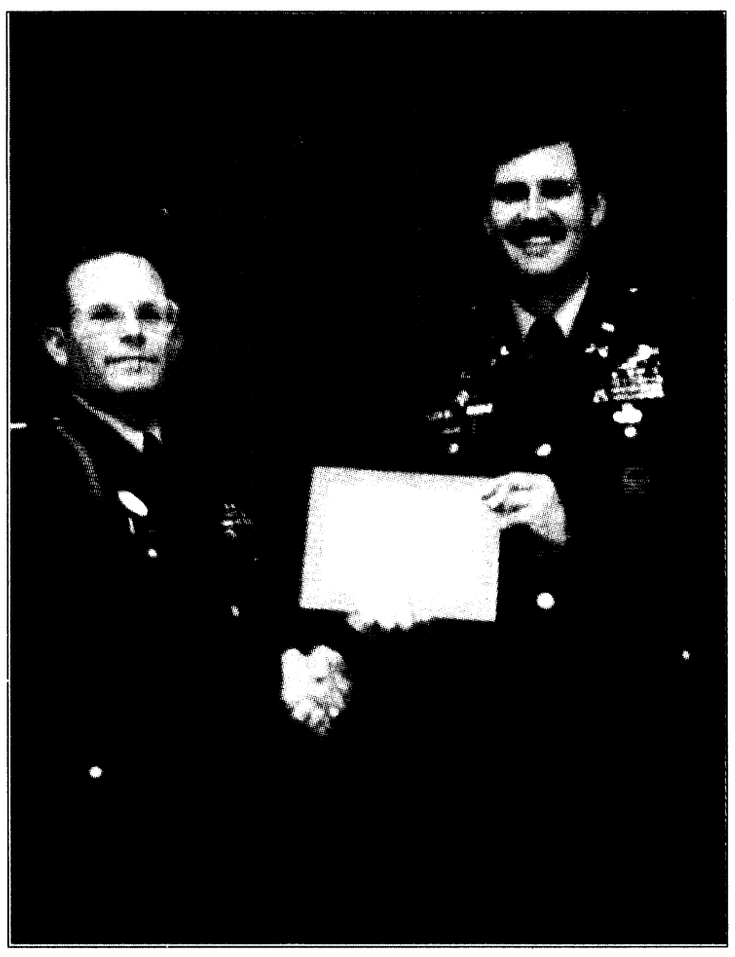
TRADOC headquarters had to face the possibility that Fort Monroe would be closed two years ago.

"I think that would have been a mistake," Sullivan said. "Frankly, what I wanted to do was keep stability, in addition to keeping the post, which I felt was important."

The key to the future Army will still be individuals, the general said.

"Having artillery fused with a GPS (global positioning satellite) in it — fine," he said. "But you're still going to have to have somebody out there on the battlefield to fire that artillery.

"You're still going to have to have someone out there to do the things that infantrymen do, which is close with and destroy the enemy.



"It's still going to take some woman to put a helmet on her head and climb into an Apache and take the fight to the enemy," Sullivan said.

He said that he still sees the spirit of the American soldier in the Army today. He sees the Army being turned over to the capable hands of new soldiers, from a major briefing him at Fort Leavenworth, Kan., to a newly commissioned graduate of West Point.

Two more divisions will soon be inactivated, taking the Army down from a high of 18 to 10 divisions.

"Now most of that is over with." Sullivan said. "But ... every time you say that, something else pops up on the screen, some other challenge.

"You've (TRADOC personnel) done a terrific job, and the Army is truly moving into the 21st century in a very focused, logical way because of your work."

First Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment, will conduct a change of command ceremony June 16 at 9 a.m. on Dickman Field.

Lt. Col. Robert Kissel will assume command of the from Lt. Col. French L. MacLean. Dickman Field is located on First Division Road in Fort Benning's Harmony Church area.

Kissel will take command of the 1st Battalion after serving as chief of the Advanced Warfighter Experiment Task Force in the Force XXI Directorate here.

MacLean is being assigned to the Office of the Deputy Chief of Staff for Operations at the Pentagon in Washington, D.C. The office is involved with fielding of the combat vehicle systems for the total Army.

Kissel, 44, was born in Albany, N.Y., and began his Army career in 1971 as an enlisted soldier at Fort Wolters, Texas. He was commissioned an infantry second lieutenant in 1977 after earning a bachelor of arts degree in psychology and sociology from State University of New York at Albany.

Kissel also holds a master of arts degree in human resource development from Central Texas College.

Kissel served in numerous command and staff assignments during his Army career, including 1st Battalion, 26th Infantry, 1st Infantry Division (Forward) in Germany, where he was a rifle and scout platoon leader and company executive officer.

He also served as commander of Company D, 4th Battalion, 1st Training Brigade, and 4th Battalion executive officer at Fort Jackson, S.C.

Kissel's most recent assignments are operations officer for the 4th Infantry Division's 1st Battalion, 12th Infantry, and 1st "Raider" Brigade at Fort Carson, Colo. He was also deputy personnel officer for the division.

His military schools include the Infantry Officer Basic Course, Armor Officer Advanced Course, Combined Arms Services and Staff School, the U.S. Army Command and General Staff College and the Ranger and Airborne schools.

Among his awards and decorations are four awards of the Meritorious Service Medal, three awards of the Army Commendation Medal, three awards of the Army Achievement Medal, the Expert Infantryman Badge, Parachutist Badge and the Ranger Tab.

Kissel is married to Lt. Col. Deborah Kissel, who will take command of Fort Benning's 30th Adjutant General Battalion (Reception) later this month.

29th Infantry Regiment gets new commander

USAIC Public Affairs Office

The 29th Infantry Regiment will get a new commander June 23 at 9 a.m. on Dickman Field.

Col. Robert J. Fulcher Jr. will succeed Col. Robert L. Jordan Jr. as commander during a change of command ceremony. Dickman Field is located on First Division Road in the Harmony Church area.

Fulcher comes to the post after serving as chief of the Major Regional Contingency Branch for U.S. Central Command, MacDill Air Force Base, Fla.

Jordan, who has commanded the 29th for the past two years, is being assigned to Fort Bliss, Texas, as commandant of the U.S. Army Sergeants Major Academy.

Fulcher was commissioned an infantry second lieutenant upon graduation from Florida A&M in 1972. Since that time, he has held numerous command and staff assignments in the Army, both overseas and stateside.

His previous positions include rifle and heavy mortar platoon leader and company executive officer in the 1st Battalion, 30th Infantry at Schweinfurt, Germany; battalion supply and logistics officer and company commander of Company B, 2nd Battalion, 19th Infantry (Mechanized), Fort Stewart, Ga.; deputy inspector general for the 2nd Infantry Division, Camp Casey, Korea; and commander of the 4th Battalion, 18th Infantry, 3rd Armor Division in Germany and during its participation in operations Desert Storm and Desert Shield.

Fulcher is a graduate of the Infantry Officer Advanced Course, the Command and General Staff College, the U.S. Army War College, Airborne and Ranger schools, Mortar Platoon Leader Course, the Inspector General Course and Phase II of the Armed Forces Staff College.

His awards include the Silver Star, Bronze Star, seven awards of the Meritorious Service Medal, two awards of the Army Commendation Medal, three awards of the Army Achievement Medal, the Southwest Asia Service Medal with three Bronze Stars, the Liberation of Kuwait Medal, Humanitarian Service Medal, National Defense Service Medal with Star and the Combat Infantryman Badge.

Fulcher and his wife, Deborah, have two sons.

Manuals provide theater guidance

TRADOC News Service

FORT MONROE, Va. — They were eight years in production, but two new doctrine manuals are the first to explain to Army commanders how to operate in support of warfighting commanders in chief, and how to provide logistical support for their forces as well as other services.

Field Manual 100-7, "Decisive Force: The Army in Theater Operations," and FM 100-16, "Army Operational Support," have been delivered to the Army.

"Precedent-setting manuals like these represent the toughest work we do in doctrine," said Gen. William W. Hartzog, commander of Training and Doctrine Command. "The doctrinal base for our Army's participation in joint operations defined in FM 100-7 and FM 100-16 has clearly been established."

The operational level is one of three levels of war. The others are strategic and tactical. The commander at the strategic level deals with National Command Authorities, joint chiefs, and U.S. forces, government and civilian agencies, as well as multinational organizations. The operational-level commander interacts with host national leaders, American civilian representatives, allied leaders and other American forces in theater. The tactical level is actual conduct of battle.

The reason it took eight years to develop the manuals is that the world environment and national strategies kept changing.

Work began to update FM 100-7 in 1987 in response to the Goldwater-Nichols Act of 1986, which decreed that the services must operate jointly under warfighting CINCs.

Then came changes on the world scene. First the Berlin Wall came down and the Soviet Union disintegrated. Then there was Operation Just Cause in Panama, followed by Operation Desert Storm.

Even before the manuals were completed, Army leaders were using draft versions in joint exercises. "The Armed Forces Staff College in Norfolk, Va., is already using the draft copies as resource material," said Brig. Gen. Morris Boyd, TRADOC's DCSDOC.

"Together these manuals provide a comprehensive treatment of Army responsibilities to the theater commander ."

Navy women, Army men defend volleyball championship

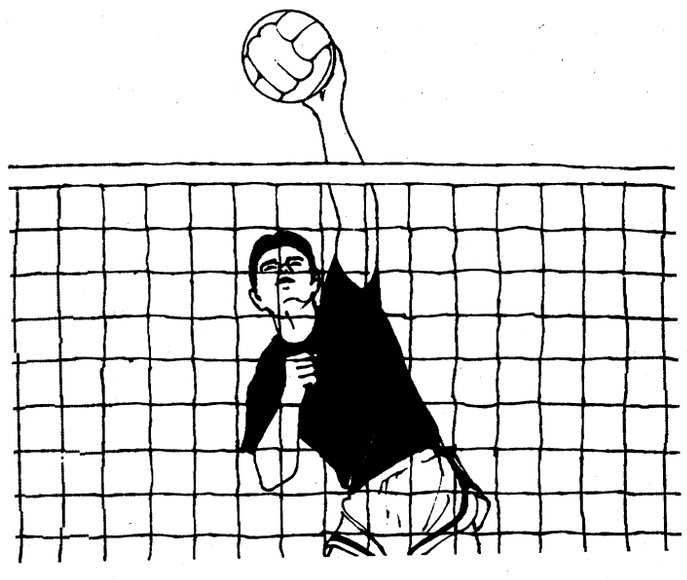
By Stephen Barrett
American Forces Information Service

Navy's women and Army's men retained championships at the 1995 armed forces volleyball tournament May 1 to 5 at Peterson Air Force Base, Colo.

In the women's competition Navy and Army posted identical 5-1 records through the 12-match tournament, forcing a best-of-three-game playoff. After splitting their two tournament games, Navy prevailed in the playoff, taking a 15-8, 14-16, 15-7 decision for its second straight title.

Air Force finished the tournament at 2-4, while Marine Corps ended at 0-6.

Navy placed five women on the 17-member armed forces all-tournament squad. Earning spots were Lt j.g. Karen Griffith (Naval Air Station, Jacksonville, Fla.), Ensign Heidi Fleming (U.S. Naval Academy, Annapolis, Md.), Ensign Lauren Nilsen (Camp Pendleton, Calif.), Chief Warrant Officer Karen Schlessinger (Portsmouth Naval Medical Center, Va.) and Petty Officer 1st Class Heather Brewer (Edell Naval Base, Scotland).



Air Force also placed five players on the armed forces squad. Selected were 2nd Lt. Mary Hartman (Brooks Air Force Base, Texas), 2nd Lt. Lori Jones (Shaw Air Force Base, S.C.), 2nd Lt. Christine Eiler (Hanscom Air Force Base, Mass.), Senior Airman Tricia Murray (Altus Air Force Base, Okla.) and Airman 1st Class Wendy Gruber (Minot Air Force Base, N.D.).

Spc. Romona Sualua (Yongsan, South Korea), the women's 1995 tournament most valuable player, was one of four Army selections to the team. Also named were Sgt. Rhonda Phillips (Fort Richardson, Alaska), Sgt. Ninette Smith (Fort Riley, Kan.) and Spc. Viaga Kelemete (Ansbach, Germany).

The Marine Corps placed three players, sending Sgt. Danielle Dillard (Camp Pendleton), Cpl. Joyce Dillon (Iwakuni Marine Corps Air Station, Japan) and Cpl. Michelle Barnette (Marine Corps Base, Hawaii) to the all-tournament team.

The Army men's volleyball squad (5-1) defended its title with a 15-12, 11-15, 15-12, 15-11 victory over Air Force (4-2) in the final tournament contest. Both teams entered the match tied 4-1, with Air Force winning the earlier meeting.

Navy played the spoiler, upsetting Air Force 14-16, 15-9, 15-6 in Match 7; Army continued winning its matches and forced the tournament showdown. Navy finished third at 3-3, while the Marine Corps went winless in six matches.

Army Spc. Thomas Porr (Fort Campbell, Ky.) claimed the mens' most valuable player honor and was one of four Army players to earn all-tournament spots. Also grabbing all star honors were 1st Lt. Jason Hodell (Schofield Barracks, Hawaii), Sgt. Craig Richmond (Fort Huachuca, Ariz.) and Spc. Justin Rhea (Fort Carson, Colo.).

Air Force and Navy also placed four members each on the 15-member armed forces team, while Marines added three.

Air Force members were 2nd Lt. Tom Klemas (Hanscom Air Force Base), 2nd Lt. Paul Larger (Barksdale Air Force Base, La.), Staff Sgt. Doug McDonald (Ramstein Air Base, Germany) and Senior Airman Malu Sagiao (Wright- Patterson Air Force Base, Ohio).

Earning Navy all-tournament honors were Ensign Thomas Kait (USS Denuer), Petty Officer 1st Class John Blondin (San Diego Naval Base), Petty Officer 3rd Class Timothy Krass (Souda Bay Naval Base, Crete) and Petty Officer 3rd Class Matthew Galvin (North Island Naval Air Station, Calif.).

Completing the men's team were Marine 1st Lt. Kevin Kelliher (New River Marine Corps Air Station, N.C.) and Sgts. Matthew Studer (Camp Lejeune, N.C.) and Lawrence Daley (Naval Air Station, Long Beach, Calif.).

USAMU to sponsor Georgia Games shootout

USAIC Public Affairs Office

The U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit will host the Southwest Georgia Games, open to disabled and able-bodied marksmen, 9 a.m. to 2 p.m. Saturday at the Pool International Shooting Complex in Fort Benning.

Sponsored by the Shepherd Center, the games consist of a variety of air rifle and air pistol categories, including wheelchair, able-bodies, novice, junior and junior novice classes, George W. Olney, games coordinator said.

"Basically," Olney said, "We want everybody to be able to participate."

Of the 30 shooters already registered for the event, several will be competing for spots on the 1996 U.S. Paralympic Team. For others, this is the district qualification match for the Georgia State Games will in Atlanta July 24 through 26, Olney said.

"As you can tell, we'll have a lot going on," Olney said.

Besides offering shooting competition, the games provide the opportunity to meet with internationally known marksmen like Alex Smith and Norm Bissel, both 1992 Paralympians. There will also be four current and former U.S. champions and three record holders on the scene.

The games, which have $15 entry fee, are open to all Georgia marksmen. All participants will receive a 12995 Georgia Games T-shirt.

For more information, call George Olney at (404) 483-2207.

Purple, Gold tourney to be June 24-25

Omega Psi Phi Fraternity

The local chapter of the Omega Psi Phi Fraternity Inc. will host the 46th annual Purple and Gold Golf Tournament June 24 and 25 at the Follow Me Golf Course. The tournament is open to the public.

The format for the tournament is 36-hole medal play with flighting after the first days round.

Prizes will be awarded for first, second, third, fourth and fifth in each flight including trophies. Ladies are invited to play. Flights will be based on entries. Many other prizes will be awarded to include the longest drive, and closest to the hole on all par threes for both days. Last year's champion, Slats Henderson, will be defending his championship.

In addition, the first hole-in-one in Lakeside (Saturday), and the first hole-in one on Pineside (Sunday) wins an automobile courtesy of Bill Heard Chevrolet, Freeway Ford and the Jordan Agency respectively.

The entry fee per person is $70, which includes green fees, riding cart and refreshments for both days, plus a pre-tournament reception June 23 at the Columbus Chamber of Commerce.

For more information, call Robert Anderson at 649-4789 or Vernon Presley at 568-7502.

Military Police Activity

This week's hot topic concerns curfew violations. Summer vacation is upon us once again and some of our young family members will be doing their best to stay busy throughout the summer.

Unfortunately, some will become involved in activities which are illegal or detrimental to themselves or other members of the Fort Benning community. Most of these activities occur during the late evening or early morning hours.

In an attempt to curtail such activity, U.S. Army Infantry Center Regulation 210-5 (Garrison Regulations) requires that all family members under the age of 18 years be in their quarters from 10 p.m. to 5 a.m., unless accompanied by a parent or guardian.

Exceptions are made for certain social functions, emergencies, or other occasions deemed appropriate by the parent or guardian. Family members found in violation of the curfew will be escorted by military police to the military police station. The sponsor will be notified and will be required to escort the family member from the military police station back to quarters.

A repeat in curfew violations is evidence of misconduct and may be cause for the family to be ejected from family housing. The post curfew also applies to non-family member juveniles. The military police will take all necessary action to identify these juveniles and ensure that they are removed from post.

The following entries were taken from the Fort Benning Military Police Blotters. Such entries do not determine the guilt or innocence of anyone.

• A specialist was charged with excessive speed and driving under the influence of alcohol. While on routine patrol, MPs observed a vehicle speeding in the opposite lane. A traffic stop was made and a strong odor of alcohol was detected. The soldier was than administered a field sobriety test, which he failed. He was then transported to the MP station and administered a breathalyzer test with a result of .106. The soldier was further processed, issued suspension of post driving privileges and released to his unit.

• A family member was charged with theft (shoplifting). She was observed removing two articles of clothing and placing them in her handbag. She then moved to the audio section where she removed a camera and also placed it in her hand bag. After she exited the store without proper payment, she was detained. Upon arrival of the MPs she was apprehended and transported to the MP station where she was further processed, issued ID card confiscation orders, suspension of post exchange privileges and released to her sponsor.

Other activities include five cases of driving under the influence of alcohol, six traffic accidents, 15 cases of larceny and two cases of shoplifting.

Remember to help "Make Our Post the Best — Give Crime Arrest. Report any activity that seems wrong or out of place to the Military Police at 545-5223 or 545-5224 or the "Crime In Progress" line at 545-5222.

ask the judge

By Michael H. Lane

Q. Before we married, my husband declared bankruptcy, and his credit is not good. As a result, we have to use my credit to buy things, or pay very high interest rates. My husband read an ad in a magazine about credit repair and sent for information from a "credit helper" who promises to help improve his credit. The cost of the service is $600. I am wondering what this credit helper can do for my husband's credit and whether this is a good idea. Any comments?

A. All of us want to believe what we read. In this case, however, it is my opinion that the "credit helper" will only help your husband part with $600.

The contract you supplied to me obligates the "credit helper" to "work with" the consumer in evaluating the consumer's credit profile, "assist" in removing any adverse or derogatory information pertaining to the consumer that is contained in the file of the consumer reporting agency, and "educate" the consumer with regard to procedures that may be followed in order to establish or reestablish a satisfactory credit rating for the consumer.

The contract goes on to state that it is guaranteed to improve the "credit profile" or your money back at the end of the process.

Essentially, the credit repair service consists of securing credit reports from the credit reporting service, filing of documents to correct any errors found, and filing of records of satisfactory payments with the credit service.

The credit repair service decides whether your credit profile has improved, so the chances of a refund are almost nonexistent. For a person with a bankruptcy on his or her record, the services cannot "repair" this at all, since a bankruptcy cannot be removed by such methods. You can do all these things for yourself at much less cost.

In the United States, three of every four of us has a credit record on file in one of the credit rating bureaus. They provide lenders and merchants with records of our credit worthiness. The credit bureau is entitled to retain correct adverse information for up to seven years, and a bankruptcy for up to ten years. There is no method of removing a valid bankruptcy from a credit report. So, for ten years, the bankruptcy will remain on the report.

There are other questionable services offered to those who are poor credit risks. People who have been bankrupt or have poor credit ratings for other reasons are likely to be attracted by newspaper and magazine ads that promise "guaranteed loans," "credit cards," or offers to "consolidate debt." These are very likely to be misleading or deceptive, and geared to cheat the consumer.

For example, a guaranteed loan usually requires a nonrefundable fee of hundreds of dollars, and the loan may never be made. If it is not, chances of getting your money back are poor. The credit cards often turn out to be valid only to purchase merchandise from a catalog at high prices from the company offering the card.

Loan consolidation advertisements offer a loan to pay off all the consumer's debts, leaving him or her with one "easy" payment.

These advertisements do not usually specify the interest rate to be paid, or explain hidden service charges which may actually reduce monthly payments to creditors. The loan will often cost more than the total of payments now being made. Mail-order business of this type is likely to be deceptive or fraudulent.

For general advice, the Legal Assistance Office, Building 5, is available to assist you in these and other matters by appointment. Office hours are 8 a.m. to 5 p.m., or call 545-3282.

Recognition, awareness and screening is key to preventing prostate cancer

By Alfreta Gibson
Preventive Medicine

An estimated 244,00 new cases of prostate cancer will be reported in 1995. Prostate cancer is the most common cancer in men, afflicting one out of 10 males.

For African-American males with a family history, the rate is even higher. Prostate cancer kills about 35,00 men per year. This and many ther health problems affecting men could be voided if men's awareness of health screening test were increased.

Heightening the awareness of preventable health problems and increasing early detection and treatment of disease would significantly improve our nation's health as well as save limited health care dollars.

Recognizing and preventing men's health problems is not just a man's issue. Because of its impact on wives, mothers, daughters, and sisters, men's health is truly a family issue.

This week was National Men's Health Week with the last day being Father's Day. Give the best gift, a reminder to get a routine check-up to include a check for prostate disease.

Prostate cancer screening

Who's at risk? Middle-aged and older men, and the risk rises with age. At higher risk: black men, men with family history of the disease.

How can I reduce my risk? A study by the Harvard University School of Public Health showed a relationship between high fat diet and prostate cancer.

What are the warning signs? A weak, interrupted, painful or difficult flow of urine; blood in the urine: continuing pain in the lower back, pelvis or upper thighs. Some of these symptoms mimic those of benign prostate enlargement, a noncancerous condition that is treatable and not life-threatening. Men who detect the warning signs should see a urologist or other physician immediately.

The American Cancer Society and National Cancer Institute recommend an annual digital rectal examination for all men over age 40. The American Cancer Society also recommends the prostate specific antigen test, a blood screening for all men over 50.

For more information, call the American Cancer Society at 1-800-227-2345, or the National Cancer Information Service at 1-800-422-6237 or the Health Promotion Center at 545-1987 or 545-3709. If you have not been evaluated in the last year, contact your primary care physician.

Fatherhood is a privilege

By John Messer
USAIC Chaplain Office

reflections

Life is, a poet said, a sum of habits disturbed by a few thoughts. As a nation, we have reached a critical point regarding both the thoughts and the habits of fathers.

Our Nation is on the verge of moral collapse, largely because families are falling apart. We are told (and I am inclined to believe) that the American family is largely void of responsible male leadership. To some degree, those of us in the military community experience a slightly different reality. However, we too are losing ground as we fight the battle to do our duty in that toughest of all theaters — our homes.

This brings me to the issue of the habits of fatherhood. Now is the time to tell ourselves the truth. We are a nation that has tried for at least a generation to "legitimize" the illegitimate. We have practiced destructive father habits while denying it makes any difference. We have danced the dance of irresponsibility and now we must pay the piper. Broken homes and broken children seem a terrible price to pay!

Someone has said the bonds of habit are too light to be felt until they are too strong to be broken. Our nation is in the fetters brought on in large measure by self-centered and irresponsible father habits.

Anyone who has ever raised a child and is even mildly honest can have only the profoundest respect for single parents. To quote Dr. James Dobson, it is "the toughest job in the world." But there is the small matter of telling the whole truth. Most single parents are women. Women seem to be willing to do what most men lack the character or emotional assets to tackle.

Men, on the other hand, have habitually moved out and away from fatherhood — the most challenging and important duty this mortal life will ever afford most of us. Responsible parenthood seems to be in danger of extinction.

Mothers, as wonderful as they are, are not and never can be fathers. Most I have known have little interest in the job. They always seem to have more-to do in life's other arenas than can be done.

So what about it, dad? What about your father habits? Isn't it time for you to act like you are responsible to at least some degree for the future?

Being a father means more than being a traveling sperm bank — getting pleasure where you will. It means going to work regularly. It means being faithful to a wife and family both physically and emotionally. It means doing without some of the "nice to haves" so children can have the necessities. It means losing the privacy of your own bathroom for about eighteen years. It means sacrifice. It means prayer and communicating spiritual values. It means risking tremendous amounts of time, energy and money on the next generation of God's children.

Being a father for those children God has granted you means to be habitually 'there.' They are not appliances — they do not come with guarantees. They require regular maintenance.

A support check is not a father. A body with a pulse is not a father, either.

Fatherhood means regular inconvenience. We are called to trade some of the things we might like to do or have or be for what Bill Cosby calls 'the joys of frantically coping with reproductions of yourselves.'

Are you developing good father-habits? If your house is anything like mine, I am willing to say that nothing you will ever do will surpass the joy, challenge, and holy privilege of being a father.

Vacation Bible School to begin Monday

USAIC Chaplain Office

Vacation Bible School begins Monday at Wilson School from 10 a.m. to 12:30 p.m.

Classes will be for students four years old through those who have completed Junior High. Activities include Bible study, music, recreation, crafts, and refreshments.

Each student is requested to bring either a box of vanilla wafers, graham crackers or pretzels on Monday. These will be collected and used for refreshments for the remainder of the week.

Students who have not registered may register on Monday morning at Wilson School. Registration by phone is closed.

Buses will pick up students in distant housing areas. Those riding the buses must have completed first grade, or be accompanied by an older student who will be responsible for ensuring that the younger student gets on the proper bus for the return trip home.

Society, Fort Benning create avenue to Christ's oneness

By Anibal Cruz-Baez
U.S. Army School of the Americas

reflections

Not long ago I preached on Christ's prayer for unity (John 17). In this prayer, Christ prays for his believers to become one as he and God the Father are one. For many believers, this prayer is the foundation for ecumenism. The gospel of Jesus Christ and therefore the Christian Church is an avenue through which people come closer to God to become one. There are also other avenues God has provided to bring people into communities of faith, of brotherhood and sisterhood, and of friendship.

Unfortunately, our society has many avenues that cause separation, segregation and margination. Fortunately, we also have many avenues that, along with Judeo-Christian teachings, bring people together at home, in the workplace, in the community and without a doubt, in church. Such togetherness sometimes becomes so meaningful and fruitful that it turns into an everlasting relationship.

Fort Benning is one of the avenues bringing people together. Many soldiers arrive at Fort Benning to learn U.S. Army doctrine. They come from many places in the United States and from many countries in the world. Besides their military mission, they experience togetherness in various ways. They meet new friends, exchange gifts, teach and learn cultural aspects from each other. They learn English and teach us words in their native language. While the soldiers are here to train, their spouses and children also learn. They see the neighborliness of Columbus. They do new things and learn about life in the United States. At school, children play with children from other countries. They learn from each other, things that will be treasured forever.

Our soccer fields are the meeting place for many people from around the world. Our children play with children from other countries. Many of the coaches are from neighbor countries. Our bleachers are full of people enjoying a "world cup of nationalities," participating in an international convention on friendship and oneness.

In our Fort Benning chapels, religious education classrooms, and homes oneness in the Spirit of God takes place. Folks from all over the United States and the many other countries, sometimes with language differences, get together to worship, praise God and live in his oneness. This is another example of how Christ's prayer is answered by God as he brings his believers together.

In Christ we have nations becoming one — becoming one to pray, interact, serve and grow spiritually. Spanish Protestant Congregation that meets on Sundays at 9 a.m. on Sightseeing Road Chapel. Believers from Honduras, Mexico, Columbia, Puerto Rico and the United States get together to worship in the oneness of Christ. At 1 p.m. on Sundays a Spanish Catholic Mass is held in the Main Post Catholic Chapel. This is a much larger congregation, from many regions throughout the Americas, that worships God in his oneness.

In every chapel on Fort Benning and in many other churches throughout the world, people from all backgrounds and various lifestyles, come together to worship God. The sacrificial act of Christ on the cross brings us together in worship. It also brings us together in the workplace, in the classroom, on the soccer field, at Fort Benning, in Columbus, in the United States and in all countries of the world.

As Christ's prayer continues, we also continue to walk together in a spirit of oneness. This spirit of oneness contributes toward a healthier community, a united neighborhood and a peaceful life.

to say goodbye to 26-year employee

Directorate of Civilian Personnel

A retirement reception and award ceremony for Gary Burkhalter will be at the Follow Me Golf Course clubhouse June 29 at 2:30 p.m.

Burkhalter retires with more than 26 years of active federal service. He began his career working as a laboreer, wage-grade 2, and has progressed to the position of senior personnel management specialist, general-schedule 12, working for the director of Civilian Personnel.

Burkhalter has established himself as a technical expert in numerous fields throughout human resource management and also in the area of Equal Employment Opportunity.

He has been recognized as the technical expert for the Army in the area of civilian mobilization and has received the Training and Doctrine Command Technical Excellence in Civilian Personnel Administration Award for 1989.

Burkhalter is very active in the Association of the United States Army and was instrumental in the development of the annual George Heberling Award for dedicated civilian service.

His accomplishments also include developing and implementing a Federal Employees Equal Opportunity Recruitment Program for Fort Benning which has been adopted as a model for the entire U.S. Army.

Burkhalter's position as the Directorate of Civilian Personnel Equal Employment Opportunity Liaison has contributed significantly to the favorable EEO climate at the installation, enormous financial savings to the installation based on resolving cases and a warm relationship between these two organizations.

Post hosts Ms Wheelchair Georgia contest

2 winners are crowned

By Marc G. Turchin
Bayonet staff writer

Fort Benning hosted the 1995 Ms. Wheelchair Georgia Pageant Saturday evening at the Main NCO Club.

Teresa D. Reagan is this year's Ms. Wheelchair Georgia, and Tory L. Bujard won the Junior Ms. Wheelchair Georgia title.

"I'm shocked," Reagan said after winning the competition. "I really wasn't expecting (to win)." Reagan said she was so nervous, she didn't know how it would turn out.

"Because I was so nervous, I thought it would hinder me," she said as she wiped her tears from her face. Between the wipes, a full-spread smile streaked across her face.

Reagan, who was born with spina bifida, can now add Ms. Wheelchair Georgia to her list of accomplishments, which is part of the judging criteria for the pageant.

She is a graduate of Mercer University in Macon, Ga., with a bachelor of arts degree in communications and theatre arts. Her ambition is to continue her education in psychology and get a master's degree.

She was named homecoming queen and Miss Congeniality for Dekalb basketball league of the disabled and was elected to the Mercer University homecoming court.

Bujard's accomplishments demonstrate how active she is in her community.

After sustaining a spinal cord injury in a tornado accident in 1993, she continued being a cheerleader at her high school and working in a local grocery store. She graduated in 1994 and is now a freshman at Georgia Southern University.

During her free time, she talks with children at schools about the importance of tornado drills and about being in a wheelchair. She is a volunteer for Statesboro Community Clean-up and for the U.S. Post Office Carriers.

Some of her achievements include Miss West Central Georgia Fair 1993, Cover Model for Sheperd's "Spinal Column" magazine 1993 and first runner-up Junior Ms. Wheelchair Georgia 1994.

Accomplishments counted for 40 percent of the overall judging. There were three categories of judging.

The accomplishments category included

- Personal achievement
- Vocational accomplishments
- Academic accomplishments
- Personal accomplishments
- Adjustment to disability

Another category was communication skills. This included

- Ability to communicate with the media
- Public relations skills
- Public speaking skills
- Advocacy for the disabled person

The final category was self-perception and projection. It included

- Poise
- Demeanor
- Self-confidence
- Appropriate attire
- Personal presentation

There were five judges for the 1995 pageant. They were James Fleming, a personnel management specialist with the Directorate of Civilian Personnel at Fort Benning; Sherry L. Repscher, executive director for the Utah Governor's Committee on Employment of People with Disabilities; Patricia Barnett, former Ms. Wheelchair Georgia

Teresa Diane Reagan is Ms. Wheelchair Georgia 1995.

1992 and now a medical clerk at Martin Army Community Hospital; J. Wyman Poole, executive director of the Governor's Committee on Employment of People with Disabilities in Georgia and Terri L. Johnson placement counselor for the Easter Seal Society's Spinal Cord Support Services.

The pageant was sponsored by the Columbus Mayor's Committee for Persons with Disabilities. Fort Benning's representative on the committee is Mildred Watts, a personnel, staffing and classification specialist with DCP.

"Our main purpose is to assist, in any way, on aiding in the employment of persons with disabilities," Watts said.

Watts said the committee requested to use the Main NCO Club for the pageant.

She also said this type of activity helps with the post's community awareness.

"It promotes the installation," Watts said. "It's part of what it's all about."

"This type of activity can do nothing but boost the self-esteem of those who do have disabilities," she said.

- Bouton Heights, Davis Hill and Indianhead Terrace housing areas need volunteers for Mayor. If interested contact your community life office.
- The Army Family Team Building Program is looking for volunteers to assist in clerical support. The program is dedicated to get all members of the Army Family established and actively involved.
- The American Red Cross is looking for volunteer health and safety instructors and Red Cross board members.

Legislation could revitalize military family housing

By Jim Garamone
American Forces Information Service

Defense Secretary William J. Perry promised service members "a home and not just a bunk" as he proposed the Military Family Housing Revitalization Act of 1995.

"The military family housing we have today is in terrible shape," Perry said during a Pentagon news conference.

In an interview with military reporters afterwards, Perry said he was proposing the legislation because it is the right thing to do and because it promotes readiness. He said family housing will be the first thrust of the program, but he expects the program will also benefit single service members.

DoD has more than 350,000 family housing units; officials estimate more than 200,000 are substandard.

"The military will be spending about $750 million a year on new housing construction and renovation," Perry said. "At that rate, it's going to take somewhere between 30 and 40 years to fix the housing problem. And I consider that inadequate.... The challenge I gave to my staff was to come up with a program that would fix this problem in 10 years or less."

The DoD program will look to private industry and financing to solve the military family housing crisis. The department has often looked to private industry in the past to help with military housing needs.

Perry noted much of the housing built in the 1950s and 1960s was done with private capital— but DoD needs relief from certain requirements. This will give the department the flexibility to address the problem across the country.

"There's not a single silver bullet in what we're proposing here," Perry said. "It is a complex set of legislative authority, which will allow us to use the technique best suited to the area in which the housing is needed."

Josh Gotbaum, assistant secretary of defense for economic security and the chief of the DoD housing team, said DoD proposes a $1 billion five-year test under the legislation.

Gotbaum said 1994 National Association of Home Builders figures show the average new house sold for $169,000 and had 2,100 square feet.

DoD spends roughly the same, but the average size is 1,440 square feet. "It costs us more, it takes us longer, and we build homes smaller than the private sector," Gotbaum said.

Part of the act seeks changes in authorities DoD already possesses. For example, if DoD were authorized to build a 300-unit family housing project in San Diego and a 300-unit building came on the market, the department has the legal authority to buy the building.

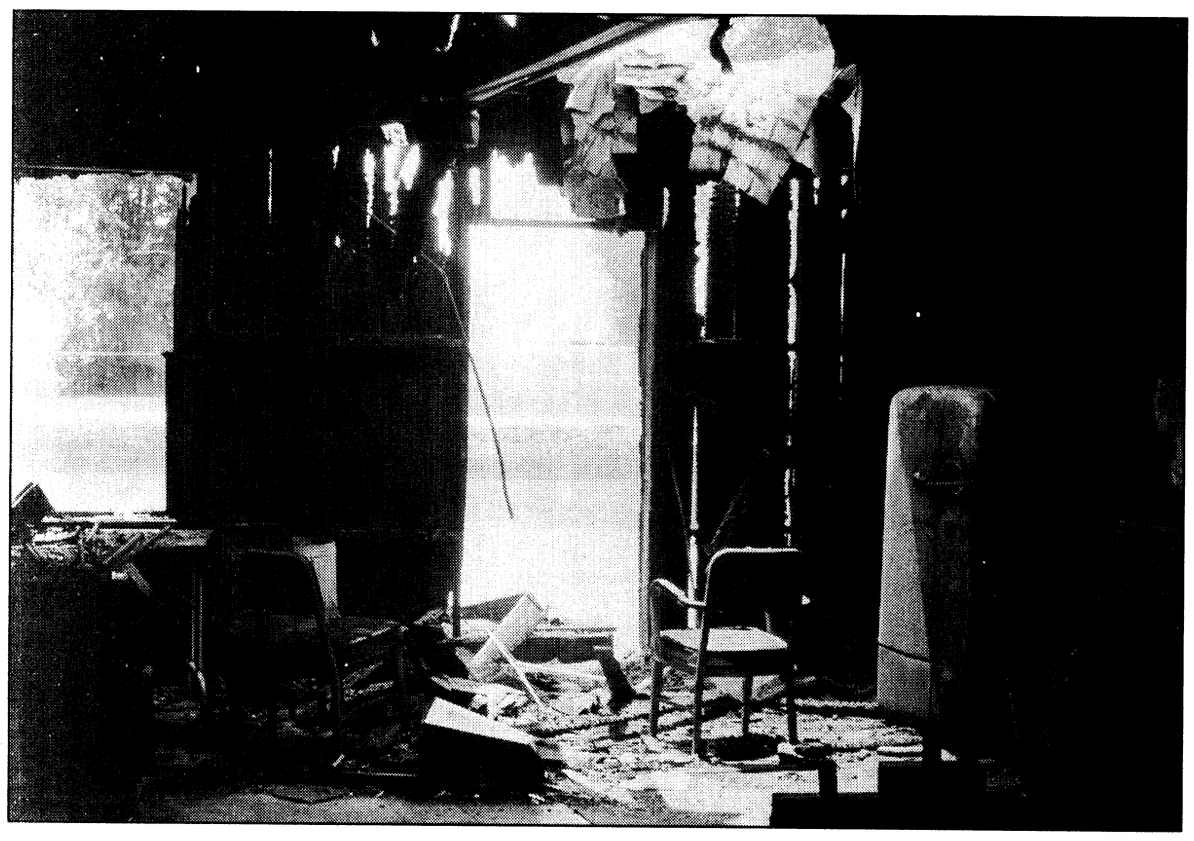
"But if that building has room sizes that are above the statutory limits, we can't do it " Gotbaum said. "We can't use commercial standards."

DoD has the same problems with lease transactions because DoD can't guarantee payments.

The legislation will allow DoD to use commercial standards and will allow the department to guarantee payments — for rent, lease or mortgage.

This is especially a concern to developers as the military downsizes and realigns. With this authority DoD would be able to guarantee developers don't lose their money.

The authority would enable the department to try different procedures in different areas. Gotbaum pointed out it is much different putting up housing in an expensive area such as San Diego than in an area such as Fort Hood, Texas.



At the end of the five-year test, the proposed legislation requires the secretary of defense to report to Congress on what worked, what didn't and what is needed for the long term.

An offshoot of the program is an effort to standardize housing throughout DoD. Currently all services have different standards for housing.

Perry stressed housing is a readiness issue. People are the main resource of the department — training is an important part of readiness, but the investment is lost if people leave, he said.

"To put it in simple terms, if we can't retain, then we have to retrain at great expense and a loss of quality," he said.

Perry and Gotbaum said the program has bipartisan support, and they expect it will pass as part of the Defense Authorization Act.

The Main Post Girl Scout Hut sustained considerable damage in a fire May 28.

Girl Scouts lose hut in fire

Damage estimated around $10,000

By Richard Brill
Special to The Bayonet©

The Main Post Girl Scout Hut, Building 493, was damaged by fire May 28 around 6 a.m.

In response to an emergency 911 call, a post firefighting unit was dispatched and the fire extinguished, said Arthur Simmons, post fire chief.

The cause of the fire is unknown and is currently under investigation by the Criminal Investigation Division, he added.

"The fire started on the porch and began to spread, but the entire building was not destroyed," he said. "The total damage amounts to more than $10,000, including smoke and heat damage to equipment that was stored inside."

Barbara Singleton, Girl Scout service unit director, said the building probably will not be salvaged.

"I'm very disappointed," Singleton said. "If the fire was due to natural causes, it's at least understandable; but, if it was started by someone intentionally, then I just can't believe that someone could do that."

"I just can't believe this has happened to our building," said Cynthia Cole, senior Girl Scout with Troop 69. "The building was our pride and joy, and it was a historic building that was used as the black noncommissioned officers club during the days of segregation."

Ruth Cole, Girl Scout registrar, said she is concerned about the Scouts being able to find support in such a time of need.

"Scouts conduct positive activities that contribute to the quality of life on post," she said. "It's important that we can continue and can find another building to store our equipment and hold our meetings. It's nice to have a meeting place away from home, a place the scouts can call their own and take pride in."

Singleton said perhaps the fire will increase community awareness of the needs of the scouts on post.

"We have been looking for another place to go for a long time and haven't been successful," she said. "Since we now have no place at all, maybe something will come our way."

"The Girl Scouts sustained a major blow to their program," said Staff Sgt. William Viruet, Fort Benning Scouting coordinator. "I am hoping that the community will come together and help with some badly needed donations." To donate items, contact Singleton at 689-7627 or Viruet at 545-3070.

In spite of the tragedy, Singleton said she felt optimistic about the future.

"Scouts always bounce back and keep going," she said. "We're always prepared."

DoDDS students do well on national reading test

By Evelyn D. Harris
American Forces Information Service

Students in the Department of Defense Dependents Schools placed 15th among 41 states and jurisdictions participating in the National Assessment of Educational Progress, a reading test.

The average reading proficiency of fourth grade students in DoDDS on the test's reading scale was 219. The national average was 213.

Black DoDDS students ranked higher on the test than did African-American students in any other jurisdiction. DoDDS Hispanic students ranked third in the nation compared with other Hispanic students.

Overall, girls read better than boys as measured by the test, both in DoDDS and nationwide. Asian and white students outscored students from other ethnic groups, both in DoDDS and nationwide.

Sixty percent of DoDDS fourth-graders read at a basic level of proficiency, compared with 56 percent for the nation. DoDDS students are close to nationwide figures for the better-than basic "proficient" level and the "advanced" level. Some 23 percent of DoDDS and 24 percent of nationwide students are proficient; 3 percent of DoDDS and 4 percent of nationwide readers are advanced.

Lillian Gonzalez, who directs the Department of Defense Education Activity, which includes DoDDS, said she was pleased with DoDDS results.

But U.S. Secretary of Education Richard W. Riley said he was disappointed with the lack of progress shown by most U.S. students in the test. His department refers to the test as the "nation's reading report card." It began in the 1970s, but 1994 was the first year DoDDs fourth-graders took part.

"Too many students are spending too little time reading and too much time watching mind-numbing television," Riley said. "We need to re-emphasize basic reading skills, both in the classroom and at home, while at the same time building on these fundamentals to enhance comprehension and critical analytical skills."

Among participating states, the highest reading proficiency was found in Maine, North Dakota, Wisconsin, New Hampshire, Massachusetts, Iowa, Connecticut and Montana.

Test scores for students in Delaware, Louisiana, Massachusetts, New Hampshire, New Jersey, New Mexico, Pennsylvania, South Carolina, Utah and Virginia declined compared with the previous year.

States or territories with the lowest reading proficiency are Guam, California, Louisiana, Hawaii, Mississippi, South Carolina, New Mexico and Florida.

Riley said he thought U.S. students would read better if schools challenged them to meet higher standards and if more parents participated in their children's education.

Family member selected as state finalist

USAIC Public Affairs Office

The daughter of a specialist in Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 1st Battalion, 18th Infantry Regiment, has been selected to be a state finalist in the Miss Georgia American Preteen Beauty Pageant.

Ten-year-old Kristina Marquardt, daughter of Spc. Roy F. Farver and his wife, Debra Maquardt-Farver, was recently selected as a finalist in the beauty pageant.

Kristina was also named "Panther of the Month" for Shelley Moore's fifth-grade class at Frank R. Loyd School.

She is on the A-B Honor Roll and received the President's Award for Educational Improvement.

Kristina belongs to Concharty Council's Girl Scout Troop No. 47 and the Fort Benning Eagles cheerleading squad. Her hobbies include camping, skating and playing the flute.

Kristina L. Marquardt is a state finalist in the Miss Georgia American Preteen Beauty Pageant.

The pageant will be Sept. 1 and 2 at the Crowne Ravinia Hotel in Atlanta.

Girls from all over the state will be competing for the Miss Georgia Preteen crown and title. The contestants will be judged by their appearance, poise and personality in both evening gown and interview dress competitions. They will also compete in a speech, talent and photogenic contest.

The winner will represent the state of Georgia in the Miss American Preteen Beauty Pageant, at Disney World in November.

Families needed for exchange students — The nonprofit World Heritage Student Exchange Program is seeking military and civilian families to host a high school student form Spain, Mexico, France, Germany, Sweden or the former Soviet Union, coming to the South for the upcoming year.

Each student must be fully insured, bring his or her own personal spending money, and be anxious to become a member of the family pitching in on everything from family discussions to household chores. The host family provides room, board and a measure of guidance.

For information on hosting an exchange student, contact World Heritage at (800) 888-9040.

Reunion — A reunion of the 31st Infantry "Dixie' Division World War II and its attached units will convene in Orlando, Fla., Aug. 24 through 26 to commemorate the 50th anniversary of the end of World War II.

The Clarion Plaza Hotel, International Drive in Orlando has been designated reunion headquarters.

Reservations can be made by calling (800) 627-8258. For more information, call Marion Hess (904) 344-0549.

Columbus and Muscogee County clean up drive — Combined Communities of South Columbus is soliciting organizations, schools, churches, etc., to adopt a spot in your area and have a clean-up drive.

If interested, contact the Public Service Department at 571-4878 and the Police Department at 324-0211, three days prior to drive. If clean-up drive is conducted on a Saturday, place litter bags adjacent to curb before 2 p.m.

For more information call Lonnie Jackson at 687-5357 or Keep Columbus Beautiful at 571-4937.

Volunteer teachers and teacher's aides needed — Combined Communities of South Columbus needs help for its summer school program which will be at Dimon School, 408 Dogwood Drive and Steam Mill Road, Columbus.

Emphasis will be placed on reading and math — grades one through eight.

Teachers are needed in reading, math and other areas. Aides are defined as college graduates, college students, high school graduates, seniors, juniors and parents.

La Leche League meeting — Mothers and expectant mothers who wish to breast feed their babies will find information and support at the Columbus-Fort Benning chapter of La Leche League. The group meets on the second Tuesday of each month from 7 p.m. to 8:30 p.m. at the Aldergate United Methodist Church, 4323 Primrose Road, Columbus. Nursing babies are always welcome.

For more information call 563-0684.

Volunteers needed — Volunteers are needed to work on a number of fish and wildlife program projects maintaining wood duck and bluebird boxes, working the deer check station, conducting deer track counts and placing fishing structures in fish ponds.

Volunteers may be active duty and retired military personnel, Department of Defense civilians, family members and Boy Scout groups. The natural resources volunteer program provides an opportunity for individuals to improve wildlife habitat while gaining knowledge, experience and a general appreciation for wildlife and the environment.

Anyone interested in volunteering can contact Jeff Brooks, Natural Resources Management Branch, at 544-6206.

Foster parents wanted — The Department of Children and Youth Services is in need of foster parents for youth between 8 and 17 who, for various reasons, cannot return to their homes, have no approved relative's home or other approved placement available, and are in need of temporary residential care.

Home providers are paid a daily per diem and are reimbursed for incidental expenses pertaining to the youth in placement, to include weekly allowance, travel, school expenses and telephone calls. Insurance is paid by the Department of Children and Youth Services on behalf of the home providers.

If you are interested, call Dean Wilson at 571-4823.

Olympic brick — Personalized bricks are being sold to show support of Columbus' Olympic softball venue. The bricks, inscribed with buyer's names, will be placed on the walkway of South Commons, site of the 1996 Olympic Softball competition. Bricks are sold for $30 a piece, and order forms are available at Columbus College, area banks and local radio stations.

For more information, call 660-1996.

1st Cavalry — The "Follow Me" Chapter of the 1st Cavalry Division Association will meet the fourth Tuesday of every month at 7 p.m. All former members of the 1st Cavalry Division may attend.

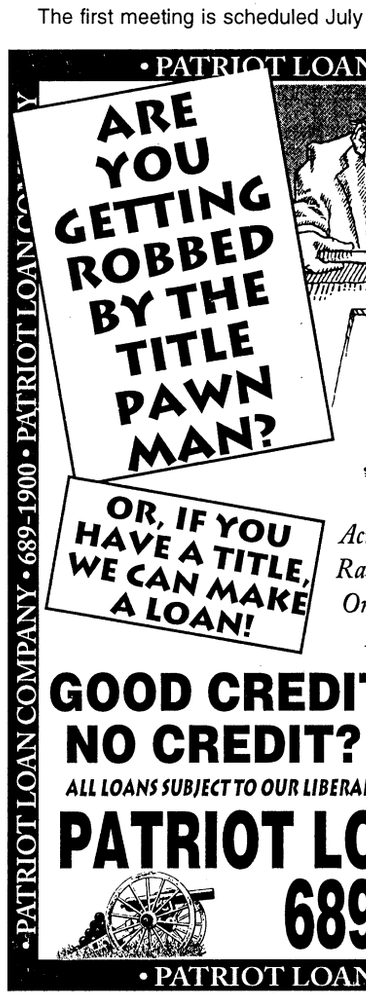
For more information, call Bill Stanfield at 563-2306.

VA adds voice response phone system at insurance center

Department of Veterans Affairs

The Department of Veterans Affairs Philadelphia Insurance Center has launched an interactive voice response telephone service to provide its 3.1 million government life insurance customers greater access to policy information.

"This technology greatly enhances VA's goal of providing veterans with the best customer service possible," said VA Under Secretary for Benefits John Vogel, who ordered installation of the IVR system.



The IVR system permits customers using a touch-tone telephone to ask for and receive specific information from their insurance file without waiting to talk with an insurance specialist. Once the veteran's file is located and retrieved, a prerecorded voice recites the insurance policy number and the information requested. Information available through the system includes dividend status, loan and cash values, and premium payment information.

VA policyholders can use IVR by dialing the Insurance Center's toll-free number, (800) 669-8477. Any caller with a complex question or who wishes to speak to a specialist can transfer any time during the call, even after they have begun using IVR. Callers without touch-tone service are automatically routed to an insurance specialist for assistance. IVR is currently available between 6:30 a.m. and 9 p.m., Monday through Friday.

More than 6,000 callers to the Philadelphia Insurance Center successfully used IVR in its first two weeks of operation. That represents 12 percent of the calls to the center during that period.

A VA project team, assisted by insurance specialists who tracked the most commonly asked questions, researched the areas in which IVR could best serve the insurance operation. Once those areas were identified, the team developed a script that directs callers to answers to their questions. Scripts and other information, including numbers, letters and dates were professionally recorded and digitized.

Fort Benning area host families needed

Pacific Intercultural Exchange

Foreign high school students are scheduled to arrive into the Fort Benning area for academic program homestays, and the sponsoring organization needs a few more local host families.

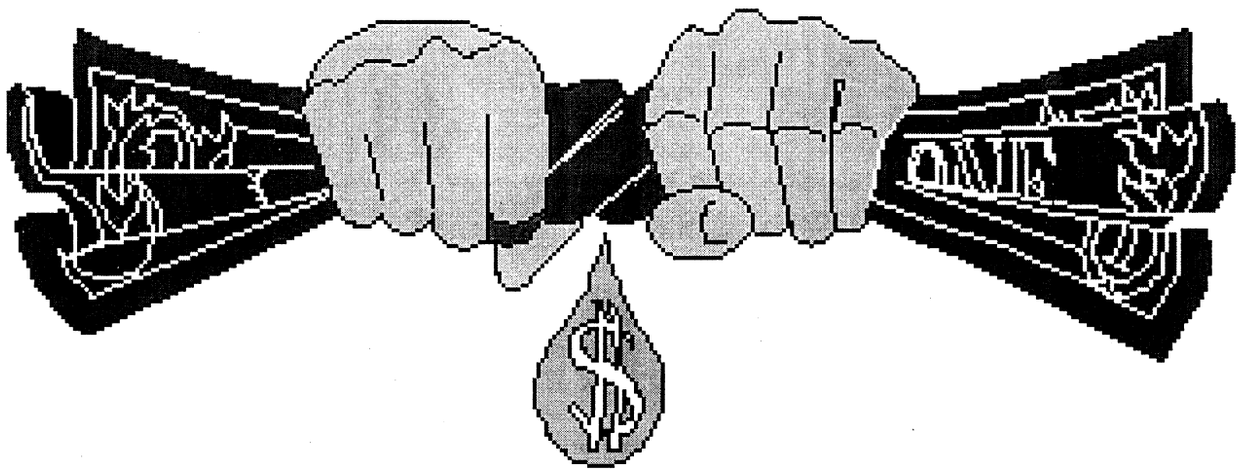
The students are all between the ages of 15 and 18 years, are English-speaking, have their own spending money, carry accident and health insurance, and are anxious to share their cultural experiences with their new American families, according to Pacific Intercultural Exchange Executive Director John Doty.

The exchange currently has programs to match almost every family's needs, ranging in length from a semester to a full academic year, where the students attend local high schools.

Area representatives match students with host families by finding common interests and lifestyles through an informal in-home meeting.

Prospective host families are able to review student applications and select the perfect match. Since there are no typical host families, the exchange can fit a student into just about any situation, whether it be a single parent, a childless couple, a retired couple or a large family.

Families who serve as hosts are also eligible to claim a $50 per month charitable contribution deduction on their itemized tax returns for each month they host a sponsored student.



For the upcoming programs, the exchange has students from Spain, Germany, Poland, Russia, Finland, Argentina, Brazil, Colombia, Paraguay, Australia, New Zealand, Croatia and many other countries.

Fort Benning area families interested in learning more about student exchange or arranging for a meeting with a community representative may call toll free (800) 631-1818.

The agency also has travel and study program opportunities available for American high school students as well as possibilities for community volunteers to assist and work with area host families, students and schools.

DOUGHBOY AWARD

Retired general takes top infantry honor

Awardee best remembered for advances in air mobility

By Lisa M. Hibbert
Bayonet staff writer

The 1995 Doughboy Award was presented to retired Lt. Gen. Harry W. O. Kinnard at the Infantry Ball June 14 .

Recognized for his many contributions to the Army, the former infantryman was humble in his acceptance speech.

"When Gen. (John) Hendrix called me with the happy news that I was to be this year's Doughboy recipient, I was delighted, but amazed," Kinnard said. "At 80, I never expected an award — except perhaps for longevity."

A 1939 West Point graduate, Kinnard's first tour was in Hawaii where he was stationed during the Japanese bombing of Pearl Harbor.

After leaving Hawaii, Kinnard came to Fort Benning for the Infantry Officer Basic Course and decided to enroll in Airborne School.

"I became fascinated with parachute school and decided that was for me," Kinnard said.

"My friends thought I was nuts. They told me that the physical exam for parachutists consisted of two doctors, each looking in one of your ears at the same time; if they saw each other plainly, you were a fit candidate to jump."

Little did Kinnard know that jumping would have a big impact upon his career.

Kinnard was instrumental in seizing a Dutch bridge from the Germans in 1944 during the invasion of Holland. For his valor in this mission, he was awarded the Distinguished Service Cross, knighted by the Dutch queen and the bridge that his unit captured was named after him.

"The bridge crossed over parallel waterways and the original plan was for us to land some yards away from it and capture the bridge before the Germans," Kinnard said.

"I knew we would never have had enough time to do this, so I had my men dropped from a dangerously low 200 feet onto the narrow strip of land in between the waterways and took possession from the center."

During the years between Korea and Vietnam, the Army sought ways to improve mobility over restricted terrain — the key to battlefield victory. Kinnard is best known for his attempts to revolutionize tactics through air mobility.

In 1963, the 11th Air Assault Division (Test) was born and Kinnard, then a major general, was named commander.

"(Post personnel were) very understanding and helpful as this new upstart elbowed its way onto Fort Benning, overloading the training areas, building innumerable heliports and filling the skies with noisy helicopters," Kinnard said.

"Our super busy two-plus years culminated in our becoming the 1st Air Cavalry Division, which was no sooner activated than we moved to combat in Vietnam."

On July 3, 1965, at a ceremony at Doughboy Stadium, the colors of the 11th Air Assault Division were retired. Its personnel, along with members of the 2nd Infantry Division were transferred to the newly designated 1st Air Cav. (Airmobile).

After 33 years of service, Kinnard retired from the Army in 1969. However, his career didn't end there. Kinnard went to work for Sikorski Corporation where he said he was instrumental in the development of the Black Hawk UH-60 helicopter.

"I think all careers are the luck of the dice," Kinnard said. "I was just lucky when I came in the Army. It is only during war that I could have been a colonel at 29."

Kinnard now lives in Arlington, Va., with his wife, Elizabeth.

"Even though we have a tradition of fighting for just causes, I would never put a kind face on war; wars fought for whatever reasons are cruel and painful," Kinnard said.

"I firmly believe that war has at least one noble product — the feelings of deep mutual respect and brotherly love that men in close combat develop for each other as they come to know and trust the men on their right and left. Certainly those were my feelings which gave me an abiding love for the U.S. infantryman.

"That is why I am deeply honored by this Doughboy Award," Kinnard said.

"Like all my military awards, it really belongs to the wonderful men, living and dead, with whom I fought. The problem was never in getting those men to fight; the problem was to provide leadership worthy of their skill, determination, loyalty and courage. I will cherish this award for them as well as for myself," Kinnard said.

"My heartfelt thanks for making me a very happy doughboy."

At the ball, Kinnard was honored as the first inductee in the Order of St. Maurice, the patron saint of the infantry, and was presented with an original print depicting the saint.

'95 campaign contributions total $150K

By Lori A. Egan
Bayonet staff writer

The Army Emergency Relief fund campaign, which concluded May 15, raised $150,179.75 from March 1 to May 15.

This amount was short of the installation's goal of $175,000, said Alfonso J. Deane, AER officer.

The economic climate of the country or maybe the drawdown was the reason for the installation's failure to meet the AER goal for the first time in four years, he said.

"However, we consider the campaign a success," he said. "And we want to thank the project officers and NCOs (noncommissioned officers). Without them we wouldn't have (raised) the $150,000," Deane said .

"The installation campaign coordinator, Capt. Darren Carter, Company B, 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment, did an outstanding job interacting with unit project officers and NCOs and tracking the AER campaign contributions," said Deane.

This year's contributions will be added to other AER funds worldwide and used to continue emergency financial assistance, said Deane.

Last year, the Fort Benning AER assisted 1,381 soldiers, active and retired, and their families with $807,710 in the form of interest-free loans or grants, according to Deane.

Anyone who would like to contribute cash or checks may continue to do so. However, those donations will not be credited to the 1995 campaign fund but will go to the headquarters AER general fund, said Deane.

For more information, call AER at 545-2536, 545-4043 or 545-7517.

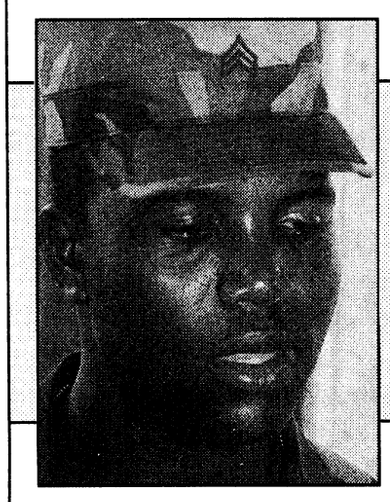
Infantry Band to play concert at

Inf Museum

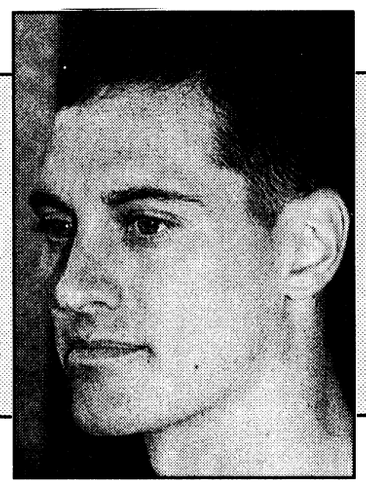
By Marc G. Turchin
Bayonet staff writer

The Infantry Band will perform a concert Sunday on the lawn of the National Infantry Museum beginning at 4 p.m.



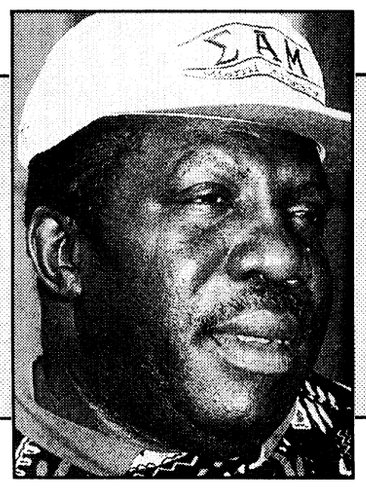
The band is scheduled to perform music from the 1960s as well as patriotic music to include a narrated version of "America the Beautiful."

According to officials at the museum, concert-goers are welcome to bring blankets, coolers and chairs as the band performs for an hour or so.



The museum will be open until 7 p.m. for those who want to visit it after the concert.

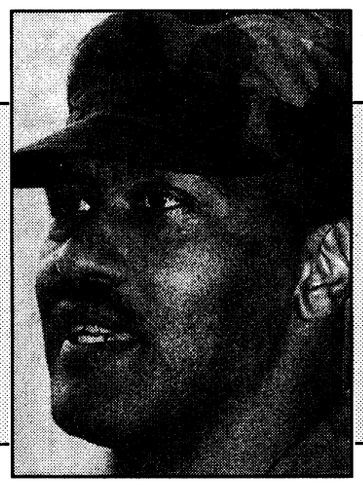
VARIOUS VOICES



How can we conserve energy?

Sgt. Milton A. Hamilton, Battery C, 4th Battalion, 41st Field Artillery Regiment — "I think during the daytime we need to turn off the air conditioning, lights, stuff like that."

Warrant Officer Kevin Jones, 498th Medical Company (Air Ambulance) — "I always try to save energy around the home by turning off lights when I leave a room and turning off appliances when I'm not using them. The more people do that, every little bit's going to help out."



Retired Sgt. 1st Class Eddie L. Jackson — "Cut out the lights after the troops stop moving around at night in buildings like the quads on Main Post, and make sure they're off during the day."

Kathy Kundel, family member — "Make sure lights are off at night, when you're away and when you're not using them."

Spc. Paul Rosemond, 63rd Combat Support Equipment — "I think the way to conserve energy on post is to get better insulation in housing and to spend money on things like that rather than the outward appearance."

Staff Sgt. William Jones, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment — "Put in sensors in office buildings on post so the lights would come on when people come in and turn off when they leave."

Invest in your future today

The Army is conducting its annual savings bond campaign through June 30

"Invest in Your Future Today" is the national theme for the U.S. Savings Bonds Campaign.

Financial security is a goal we all seek. That security can best be achieved through a systematic and automatic savings program. Buying today's Savings Bonds with the Payroll Savings Plan is an excellent risk-free way to secure your financial future.

For the first time and right from the start, Savings Bond investors will get market-based rates that are a good return on their investment. Furthermore, if future market-based rates are not sufficient for a bond to reach face value in 17 years, the Treasury will make a one-time adjustment to guarantee face value.

The Department of the Army is conducting its annual campaign through June 30. During this time, a Savings Bond canvasser will explain the merits of investing in Savings Bonds and answer questions about the program. If not already participating, you will be given the opportunity to join the Payroll Savings Plan. If you are already a member, you will have the opportunity to increase your present allotment.

We completed our 1994 campaign with a 19.3 percent participation rate. Our 1995 goal is to increase current level participation by 10 percent. In addition, we hope that at least 20 percent of current bond buyers will increase their present allotments.

Savings Bonds may be tailored to your savings needs because they can be held for as little as six months or as long as 30 years.

The Payroll Savings Plan is within everyone's reach, since you select the amount you want to save. Savings Bonds are exempt from state and local income taxes, and federal income tax may be deferred until the bonds are redeemed. Under some circumstances, federal income tax may be excluded; for example, if the Savings Bonds are used to pay tuition and fees for post-secondary education.

These advantages can be used to great benefit when saving for such goals as owning your own home, sending your children to college or supplementing your retirement income.

Remember that when we buy Savings Bonds, we help our country, we help our families and we help ourselves.

— Togo D. West Jr.
Secretary of the Army
— Gen. Gordon R. Sullivan

dial 545-BOSS

Dial 545-BOSS is the commander's action line for soldiers, family members and civilians to call when they have problems or complaints that can't be resolved elsewhere.

While it is not a substitute for the chain of command or for agencies established to provide assistance, the line offers another means of communication between Fort Benning's community and commanders.

The Bayonet features some of the calls that may benefit other members of the Fort Benning community.

Call: Every morning I see a civilian out on the Field of Four Chaplains with four dogs. The dogs defecate all over the field and I wonder if this is the field everyone is supposed to take their dogs so they can defecate without anyone policing it up.

Directorate of Public Safety's response: The Animal Control Section has been informed to watch the field in the mornings and catch the individuals walking their dogs there and advise them of the post policy. Should it continue after that, appropriate charges will be filed.

Call: My complaint is that nondependent civilians are on post, especially at the Post Exchange or Commissary at Sand Hill, soliciting soldiers to purchase beer. I would like something to be done to stop this practice.

Directorate of Public Safety's response: DPS will increase the Military Police presence in those areas. It should be noted that they will not always be in marked vehicles should someone be looking for them.

Call: I would like someone to call me in reference to the policy on control of pets and soldiers using foul language in the presence of young children. I am tired of my neighbor's dog running loose around the neighborhood. My husband had spoken with the neighbor and the neighbor had used foul language toward my husband in front of me and some children. I want to know what the policy is regarding the use of foul language.

Directorate of Public Safety response: The caller was advised that it was in violation of post policy to use foul language at any time. The caller said that a Military Police officer had come to the quarters and had heard the soldier use the foul language but did nothing more than slap his wrist. The caller was told that the soldier could have been charged for using foul language and that animal control personnel should be alerted to problems regarding the dog so the problem could be rectified.

Call: I heard that the Custer Terrace Day Care Center is going to close and I would like to see it remain open.

Child Development Services' response: The Custer Terrace Child Development Center closed June 2. Custer Terrace is being closed for several reasons. The facility is old and hard to fill. Most parents prefer the newer centers, which are more easily accessible. Impending budget cuts as well as lack of children contributed to the decision to close the center.

All currently enrolled children at Custer Terrace will be relocated to the new Sante Fe Child Development Center. Nonappropriated fund caregivers currently at Custer Terrace will also be relocated to Sante Fe. Appropriated fund staff will be reassigned to other work sites.

A parent meeting was conducted May 10 to discuss the impending center closure and relocation of children.

Call: I think that children of military personnel who live off post should be able to attend school on post. I believe it is discrimination against them that they cannot.

For Benning Schools' response: The Fort Benning Schools are governed by applicable laws, directives and regulations to include Public Law 874, 81st Congress, as amended, which states: For children to be eligible to attend on post schools, they must be dependent children residing on the Fort Benning reservation.

Call: I think the dining facility does not care for the single soldier. I went there a half hour after it opened and it had no food. The only time they cook good food is when the colonel or VIPs are coming or when it is being inspected. My unit does not authorize separate rations. DFAC should prepare good food and enough food to accommodate the single soldier.

Directorate of Logistics' response: A meeting was conducted with Installation Food Service Branch, the food adviser from the caller's unit, and the caller. The caller's complaints were that the dining facility was running out of entree items on the serving line and complementary items such as french fries and onion rings. Food service officials also explained that they would encourage the unit's Food Advisory Council to be more involved with the dining facility.

Baseball Hall of Famer Mickey Mantle's recent liver transplant brought the issue of organ donation to the public forefront. While cynics are protesting that Mantle received preferential treatment, those involved in organ procurement are busy demonstrating that the current system works fairly and that the real problem lies in a lack of organ and tissue donors.

Before his transplant, Mantle was just one of nearly 40,000 Americans — and 850 Georgians — who are awaiting life-saving organ transplants. In fact, a new name is added to the national waiting list every 20 minutes. Incredibly, there were fewer than 5,000 actual organ donors last year.

To reverse these statistics, Americans must accept organ and tissue donation as a personal responsibility, sign donor cards or their driver's licenses and share their decision to become an organ and tissue donor with family members. For a donor card and more information on organ and tissue donation, call (800) 355-SHARE.

Early last year, I wrote concerning a perceived safety threat on 1st Division Road where the golf course crosses it. Your response indicated a review by the Traffic Safety Council.

There has been, however, some degree of deer safety degradation along this stretch of 1st Division Road.

The traffic sign posting the speed limit and a deer crossing sign, formerly at the intersection of 1st Division and Baltzell, is no longer in place.

It was evidently knocked down last fall, spent the winter under a pine tree close to this intersection, was removed about two months ago and has yet to be replaced.

I still think golf carts need mention.

— Norman L. Williamson
Columbus

Directorate of Public Safety's response:

First, I would like to thank the author of the letter for bringing his concern about deer and golfers crossing 1st Division Road and Baltzell Avenue to our attention.

As a result of this letter, we reviewed the intersection in question and discovered that the deer crossing sign was in fact not in place. Therefore, the Directorate of Public Safety's Traffic Section has been directed to have deer crossing signs put in place at the intersection of Baltzell Avenue and Stonewall Road and at the intersection of 1st Division Road and Baltzell Avenue. There is a deer crossing sign already in place on 1st Division Road just up from the intersection of 1st Division and Dixie roads.

The second concern of the author deals with golfers crossing 1st Division Road. At the location they are to cross, there are signs on both sides of the crosswalk identifying that location as a pedestrian crossing point. This includes those golfers using golf carts.

The resolve of the Directorate of Public Safety is to ensure that Fort Benning is a safe place to live, work and play.

Baggers add customer service to Commissary

Lori A. Egan

Lisa Epps, a parcel pick-up attendant, helps Commissary customer Albert Travieso with his groceries.

By Lori A. Egan
Bayonet staff writer

Focusing on customers and trying to communicate with customers to let them know how the Commissary "parcel pick-up attendants" work is the goal, said Benjamin S. Wainwright, post Commissary officer.

Parcel pick-up attendants, better known as baggers, are the people at the Commissary who pack groceries in bags, carry them to the car and then put them in the trunk. They work only for tips. They are not government employees.

There is no minimum charge or per package charge for the service provided by the parcel pick-up attendants. The amount of the tip is at the customer's discretion, said Wainwright.

In fact, Commissary customers have the option of bagging their own groceries and taking them to their cars themselves, according to Wainwright.

For those who have their groceries bagged and carried out, the average tip is $2 per carry out, said Marcus Reese, 15, who is beginning his second summer working as a parcel pick-up attendant.

> "I usually take home around $30. My best day was $50, once. It is a pretty good job as long as you hustle."
> — Marcus Reese
> Parcel pick-up attendant

"I usually take home around $30," he said. "My best day was $50, once. It is a pretty good job as long as you hustle," Reese said.

"My best day was my first day," said Lisa Epps, who has worked as a parcel pick-up attendant for three months. "I made $76. I usually make $2 a carry out and not less than $30 a day.

"The best days to work are paydays or working the express registers," Epps said. "But you have got to want to work to make the money.

"I always treat my customers with courtesy and hope they have a nice day," Epps said.

"We want to really try and focus in on customer service," Wainwright said, "and (the parcel pick-up attendant) is the last link to that customer saying, 'I want to come back.'

"We need that one person to tell nine or 10 other people how good Fort Benning is, how good the Commissary is and how much better we're trying to make it," Wainwright said.

US troops

may see action in Bosnia if U.N. leaves

By Linda D. Kozaryn
American Forces Information Service

The United States does not want United Nations forces to leave Bosnia, but if they do, the United States is ready to send up to 25,000 troops to help them pull out.

"We are not in favor of evacuating the U.N. forces there," Defense Secretary William J. Perry said. "We think it's a big mistake. We'll do everything we can to keep that from happening. But if the UNPROFOR (U.N. Protection Force) comes out of there, we do stand prepared to go in with NATO to help them do it." A full U.N. withdrawal could take months, he said.

Perry spoke about a possible evacuation with reporters traveling with him during a recent trip to Germany, Ukraine and Italy. The largest, fullest mobilization plan for the most extreme contingency would involve about 25,000 U.S. troops; the bulk of those ground forces would come from Europe, he said. They would be somewhat less than half of a total NATO force of more than 50,000 troops, he said.

Plans calling for a phased pullout are almost complete, Perry said.

NATO planners designed the operation so overwhelming force will be within reach if there is resistance. Planners hope this would have an intimidating effect and readily defeat opposition, Perry said.

The deployment of forces hinge on future decisions, he said, "first of all that UNPROFOR is going to pull out, and second, final commitment and decision by NATO to actually execute on that mission. This is very much still a contingency operation for a contingency which we do not want to do."

Heberling Award to be presented

By Lisa M.Hibbert
Bayonet staff writer

Dale Ellis, director of the Directorate of Logistics, will receive the Heberling Award at the Association of the United States Army general membership dinner meeting, Tuesday at the Fort Benning Officers' Club.

Also at the meeting, Dr. Frank Brown, chapter president will pass the reigns to Steve Butler. Butler is the chief executive officer of the W.C. Bradley Company.

The Cliff Livingston Award will be presented that night to the corporate member who has consistently worked through AUSA to support the soldiers. Distinguished soldiers will also be recognized.

The meeting will kick off at 6:30 with a social hour and dinner will begin at 7:30 p.m.

Those needing tickets should contact their unit AUSA representatives or the Public Affairs Office in Room 602.

Tickets cost $15.

Post implements new energy saving curtailments

'Real time pricing' may mean fewer AC shut offs

By Mark J. Fincher
Chief, Energy Branch

As we go into the midst of another hot Georgia summer, we wait in dreadful anticipation of those summer air-conditioning curtailments.

For those of you who have never experienced this, electrical curtailment is the method in which Fort Benning cuts back on electrical power usage during peak demand hours in exchange for lower year-round energy rates from our primary electrical supplier, Georgia Power Company. The most noticeable effect of curtailment is that air conditioning is temporarily turned off.

This year, however, air conditioning curtailment will be administered in a different manner.

Fort Benning entered an electrical peak shaving contract with Georgia Power in 1986 which saved the post over $1 million dollars per year.

On Oct. 1, Fort Benning went under a new electrical purchasing schedule for a trial period of one year called real time pricing.

"The RTP is supposed to give us the same savings with the flexibility to not shed electrical usage on selected days at no increase in cost," said Glenn Todd, utilities contract officer.

Under the old schedule our electrical supplier (Georgia Power) required Fort Benning to reduce its electrical consumption about four to eight times each summer. This required shutting air conditioning off during the hot summer at the discretion of Georgia Power.

"Under the new schedule, Fort Benning makes the decision on when to curtail electrical consumption based upon the hourly cost of electricity (as opposed to Georgia Power)," Todd said.

Georgia Power publishes and places the following day's hourly rates in an electronic mail box by 5 p.m. daily. This allows ample time for the Energy Management Branch to review the following day's electrical cost and to take the appropriate action.

Since the decision in going from the old rate schedule to RTP was based upon no additional cost to the installation (rate neutrality), the decision to curtail air conditioning is directly related to where we stand in electrical expenditures.

When the cost of electricity reaches 10 cents per kilowatt hour on those very hot summer days, Fort Benning will curtail air conditioning if the amount we payed for electricity exceeds the amount we wold have payed under the old rate schedule. However, if electrical expenditures up to that particular point in time are below the old rate amount then air conditioning will be curtailed.

The obvious advantage with the new RTP rate is if the post is thrifty early in the year with its electrical consumption then we significantly lessen the possibility of an air conditioning curtailment. It becomes more important than ever to turn off unneeded lights and appliances.

As with the old rate, air conditioning is shed first in administrative areas and last in family housing quarters. Also, during times of curtailment, the air conditioning in family housing will continue to be cycled off for two hours and on for one hour, however air conditioning will not be off for more than four hours in one four hour period. Due to the prudent use of electricity earlier this year, we are in a posture to potentially have less.

"Fort Benning would normally expect about seven curtailments during the summer," Todd said.

Under the old rate schedule we would have already curtailed twice in early June when the temperatures reached 97.

Energy saving tips for summer

Looking for a few ways to keep cool, while saving money and energy this summer? Then here are a few tips on how to do it:

✔ Set thermostat no lower than 78 degrees during air conditioning season.

✔ Close drapes and shades to keep out the sun

✔ Do your cooking and use of other heat-generating appliances at night or in the early morning whenever possible.

✔ Consider serving cold dishes, such as salads, rather than hot meals. You'll save energy used by appliances in cooking, as well as extra energy used by the air conditioner to cool the kitchen.

✔ Use cold water rather than hot water whenever you can — hot water generates large amounts of energy (up to 12 percent in a house) and also heats air as it is being used.

✔ While away from home, leave the air conditioner off.

Lights, appliances big energy users

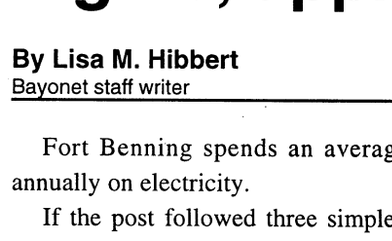
By Lisa M. Hibbert
Bayonet staff writer

Fort Benning spends an average of $10 million annually on electricity.

If the post followed three simple rules, a lot more energy could be saved.

"Change the filters in the air conditioning or heating unit, set the thermostats, and put in work orders whenever there is a problem," said Mark J. Fincher, chief of Energy Branch, Department of Public Works.

People can also do other things like turning off the television and the lights when they are not in use, Fincher said. A small thing like changing from incandescent light bulbs to fluorescent not only saves energy but helps keep the room cooler.



One way the post attempts to save energy is many of the light bulbs in the outdoor stadiums are controlled by computer programmed timers.

"The only problem with using the timers is days grow longer or shorter by about four minutes everyday," Fincher said. "If you don't monitor the computers periodically, then the lights stay on too long."

While many people on post were angered by the decision to delay the start of air conditioning in May because of financial reasons, the air conditioning is only a fraction of the electricity bill.

"The biggest way for the post to save energy is to cut back on the use of electricity (lights, appliances) — that's the majority of the bill," Fincher said.

UN celebrates 50th anniversary

Monday marks day of charter signing

By Linda D. Kozaryn
American Forces Information Service

Fifty years ago, the United Nations was conceived in the ashes of World War II. In the aftermath of the horror and devastation, world leaders knew they needed to band together for peace and security.

"It was not enough after World War II to say that the enemy had been vanquished — that what we were against had failed," said Madeleine Albright, U.S. ambassador to the United Nations, during a recent speech to the U.N. Business Council in New York. "The generation that defeated Hitler was determined to build a foundation of peace, law and dignity that would last and that would never again allow society to descend to such depths.

"They vowed to save future generations from the scourge of war. And they recognized that in the atomic age people would have to learn to live together or they would not live at all."

The victorious allies, vowing "to work together, with other free peoples, both in war and peace," signed the Inter-Allied Declaration on June 12, 1941.

Two months later, President Franklin D. Roosevelt and British Prime Minister Winston Churchill proposed a set of principles for international collaboration that became known as the Atlantic Charter. After American entry into World War II Roosevelt coined the phrase "united nations" during meetings with Churchill in Washington. Twenty-six nations signed the Declaration by United Nations Jan. 1, 1942, proclaiming their support for the Atlantic Charter.

During 1943 and 1944, the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, the United Kingdom, the United States and China agreed on the aims, structure and functioning of a world organization. Roosevelt, Churchill and Soviet Premier Joseph Stalin declared their resolve to establish an organization to maintain peace and security.

Delegates of 50 nations met in San Francisco in April 1945 to formally establish an international organization. They signed The United Nations Charter June 26, 1945.

President Bill Clinton is scheduled to participate in ceremonies in San Francisco on Monday, commemorating the 50th anniversary of the charter's signing. Albright, U.N. colleagues from 185 member nations and dignitaries present at the original signing will also participate.

The president is also scheduled to speak Oct. 22, during a special commemorative meeting of the U.N. General Assembly at its headquarters in New York. The U.N. charter came into force on Oct. 24, 1945.

"The power of the charter can be found not only in its eloquence, but in its origins," Albright said at a ceremony in New York kicking off the year-long anniversary. The charter will be on public display throughout the year at U.N. headquarters.

"The authors of those lofty ideals understood well the lethal nature of isolationism's siren call," Albright said. "They had seen arise in Europe and Asia after World War I great evil; they had seen the world react passively to savage crimes; they had seen leaders back away repeatedly from the possibility of war, and thereby assure the reality of war."

Since its inception the United Nations has served as a peacekeeper, mediator, inspector, adviser, standard setter and source of lifesaving relief, Albright said. "It is a living institution, which has meant the difference between life and death for millions of children saved from disease, refugees from starvation, and civilians from the ravages of war."

U.N. agencies and officials have been awarded the Nobel Peace Prize 11 times. "The United Nations has served our nation well over the last 50 years," said Ambassador David Birenbaum, U.S. representative for management and reform, at a New York anniversary ceremony.

"Since 1945 the U.N. has negotiated over 170 peaceful settlements. From Korea to Iraq the United Nations has been called upon — under U.S. leadership — to turn back brutal aggression," Birenbaum said. "It has led the world in bringing about the independence of 80 countries which are now members of the United Nations, literally transforming the map of the world."

United Nations does more than keep just the peace

By Evelyn D. Harris
American Forces Information Service

Blue-helmeted peacekeepers represent only one aspect of the U.N.'s activities. Whether it's promoting human rights, aiding refugees, protecting the environment or promoting agricultural development projects, U.N. agencies are involved throughout the world.

The United Nations has helped promote democracy, for example, by enabling people in more than 45 countries to participate in free elections, including those in Cambodia, Namibia, El Salvador, Eritrea, Mozambique, Nicaragua and South Africa.

The United Nations disburses more than $10 billion annually in loans and grants to develop human skills and potentials. The U.N. Development Program, working with over 170 member states and other U.N. agencies, designs and implements projects for agriculture, industry, education and the environment. A budget of $1.3 billion supports more than 5,000 projects.

The U.N. Children's Fund spends more than $800 million a year, primarily on immunizations, health care, nutrition and basic education in 138 countries. In 1974, only 5 percent of the children in developing countries were immunized against diseases like polio, tetanus, diphtheria and tuberculosis. The 80 percent rate today is a result of UNICEF and World Health Organization efforts, which save the lives of more than 3 million children each year, according to U.N. estimates.

Oral rehydration therapy, water and sanitation and other health and nutrition measures undertaken by U.N. agencies have cut child mortality rates in half since 1960, U.N. officials said. The result increased the average life expectancy from 37 to 67.

More than 30 million refugees fleeing war, famine or persecution have received aid from the U.N. High Commissioner for Refugees since 1951, according to U.N. officials. More than 19 million refugees, primarily women and children, currently receive food, shelter, medical aid, education and repatriation assistance, officials said.

OCS selection board — A recent message from Personnel Command announced the next OCS selection board has been scheduled for Sept. 26 to 29. Cutoff date for applications must arrive at PERSCOM is Sept. 15. There will be no exceptions. Applications must arrive in AG, Personnel Operations Division, Building 2619, not later than Aug. 4 to allow time for each applicant to appear before a local board.

For administrative support and application forms, contact Marie Lee, Adjutant General Office, Personnel Operations and Services Division at 545-3341 or 545-4702.

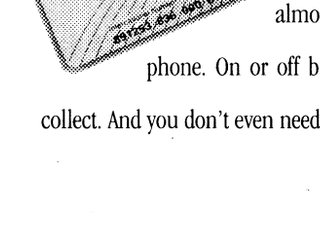
July Fourth trash collection schedule — There will be no trash and recycle collection picked up on the federal holiday, July Fourth. Family housing trash and recycle collection normally scheduled for Tuesday will be picked up July 3. All other family housing areas scheduled to be picked up on Wednesday through Friday will be picked up as normally scheduled. There will be no yard waste collection July 3. Yard waste will be picked up the following Monday, as scheduled.

For more information, call the Construction Inspection Branch at 545-4749.

Mayors' council meeting — Mayors' Council meetings with the installation staff will take place the third Wednesday of each month at 9:30 a.m. at Infantry Hall, Room 550. If your designated representative is unable to attend, an alternate must be provided. You will be notified in advance of any changes or cancellations. Meeting dates are July 19, Aug. 16, Sept. 20, Oct. 18 and Nov. 15.

Controlled burning set — Controlled burning of woodland areas will take place Monday through July 1.

If weather permits, the following compartments may be affected: A-15, A-16, D-2, F-4, M-7, O-1, O-4, V-3, W-3, X-1, AA and BB-2.



Burning will occur in pine stands within these compartments to enhance endangered species habitat and training areas. People using these areas for recreation must leave before 9:30 a.m. daily.

Training units using compartments next to these areas are reminded to exercise caution while traveling in these areas because of the potential for reduced visibility. Units using the ranges and training areas are reminded to remove flammable debris from around structures in accordance with USAIC Regulation 210-4, Paragraph 5-22, Organizational Maintenance.

Documents can help separating soldiers

By Elsie Jackson
Army Career and Alumni Program

Your military experience and training may be invaluable assets in a civilian career, but only if you can communicate your abilities to a prospective employer.

If you are planning to use a resume to get your message across, your DD Form 2586 (Verification of Military Experience and Training) can be a very useful tool. VMET statements list military job experiences and training histories, recommended civilian college credit information and any civilian equivalent job titles. They are provided to separating and retiring soldiers who have served a minimum of 180 days on active duty.

If you are separating (or separated after Sept. 15, 1992) you should receive your VMET statement automatically, at your unit mailing address, about 150 days from your separation date. If you are within 30 days of your separation date and have not received this document or separated between Oct. 1, 1990, and Sept. 14, 1992, you will need to call or write to: PRC, Inc., ATTN: VMET, Suite 401, 2900 Eisenhower Ave., Alexandria, Va. 22314, (800) 258-8638.

VMET documents have proven themselves to be useful for enlisted soldiers and warrant officers. It has been less useful for commissioned officers because officers lack accurate duty descriptions and VMET is an automated document. Because of this, the Army has temporarily suspended automatic VMET distribution for commissioned officers.

In the near future, modified versions of the VMET will be issued to commissioned officers. The modified VMET will show military training histories, combining Officer Record Briefs and Officer Evaluation Reports to provide a picture of an officer's training, skills and experience.

Don't confuse your VMET document with an Army or American Council on Education Registry Transcript System AARTS transcript. AARTS transcripts are records of your active duty military education experiences, including training for which you may receive college credits. Of course, acceptance of credit recommendations will depend on the policies and procedures of the school you choose to attend.

If a college or university accepts AARTS credit recommendations, and those credits are awarded on their official college transcript, AARTS credit recommendations may be applied toward Army promotion points.

Besides helping you get college credits, an AARTS transcript can supplement your resume, giving prospective employers a clearer picture of the skills you learned in the Army.

Three kinds of learning are recognized on an AARTS transcript — successful completion of formal service school courses (longer than 45 hours), successfully held military occupational specialties and passing scores in college-level tests such as the Scholastic Aptitude Test, College Level Examination Program and American College Testing Program.

All enlisted soldiers and veterans with a basic active service date on or after Oct. 1, 1981, may receive an AARTS transcript. Requests may be made through the Army Education Center.

For more information on VMET, ask your ACAP counselor, Soldiers' Plaza, Building 2617, or call 545-4892 or 545-7009.

ACAP offers CDL training

By Mary Allen
Army Career and Alumni Program

The Army Career and Alumni Program office sponsors a skill development program that provides training opportunities for soldiers, civilians and family members who are transitioning from the Army.

A new partner in the program, Transportation Technologies South Inc., offers training for persons pursuing a career in heavy equipment operations, commercial drivers licenses or both.

The Trans-Tech South training program was conceived to provide all aspects of heavy equipment operator and class A driver training. The training center is located on Route 1, Box 282C, Opelika, Ala. The training center is 14 miles west of Phenix City on Highway 80.

The company operates full-time and part-time programs of instruction for soldiers. The course includes 200 hours of detailed instruction for students in the operation, maintenance and safety of heavy equipment and another 200 hours of instruction on commercial drivers training.

Financial help may be available for eligible soldiers. The only way to be sure a soldier is eligible for a grant is to register at ACAP for a referral to the Department of Labor for final approval. For those who are not eligible for a grant, Trans-Tech South has alternative financing plans to discuss with soldiers.

To learn more about the Trans-Tech South heavy equipment training programs, call Stanley at (334) 298-9194 or call the ACAP office at 545-4892 or 545-7009.

ACAP sponsors career training in the medical field

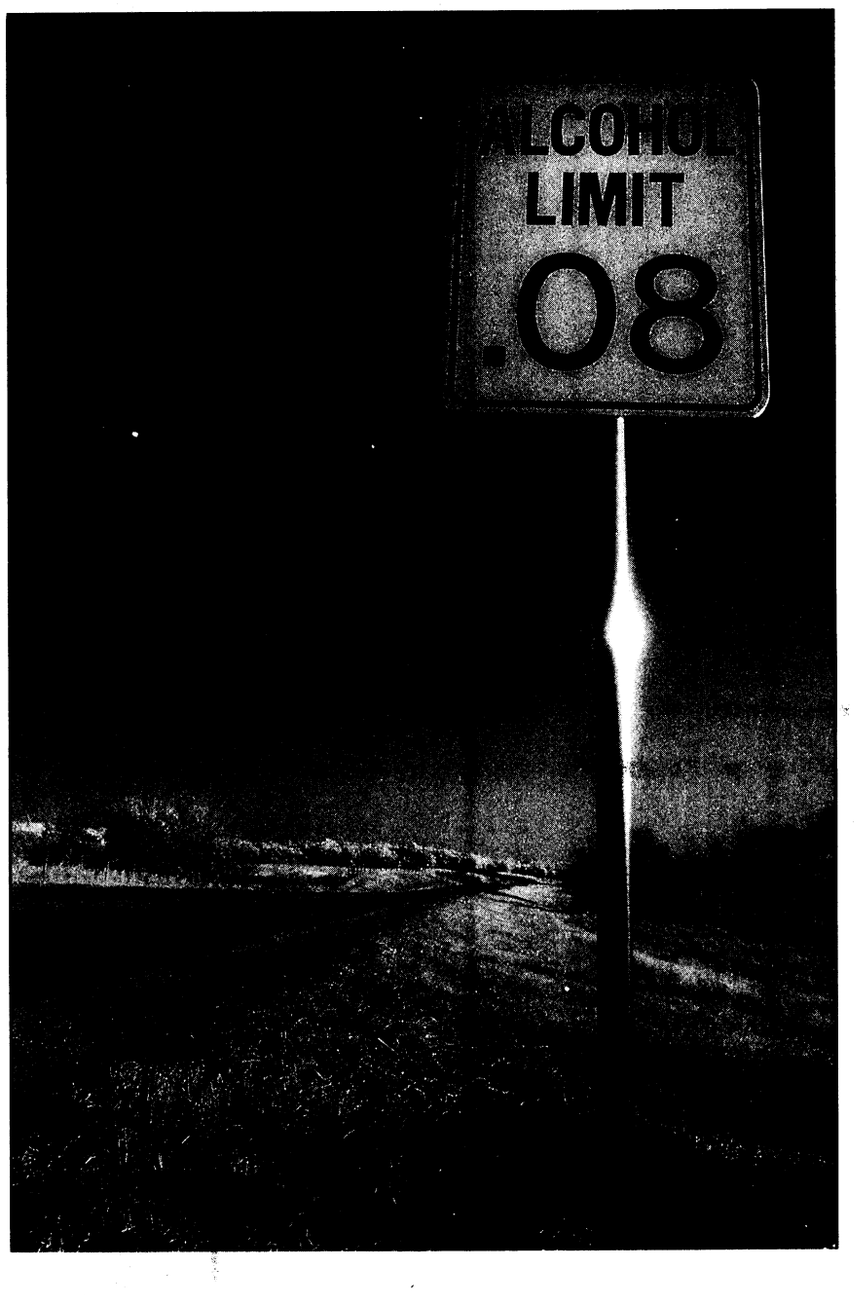
By Mary Allen
Army Career and Alumni Program

The Fort Benning Regional Army Career and Alumni Program sponsors skill development training that provides short-term training opportunities to soldiers, civilians and family members who transition from the Army. A recent partner, Lifesavers Incorporated, provides quality training at a low cost in several areas of the medical profession.

The purpose of Lifesavers in its partnership role is to provide transitioning soldiers and family members with short-term training programs that quickly achieve results. Focusing on quality, productivity and value, Lifesavers training produces a multiskilled, flexible health-care provider with a full range of marketable skills in a variety of settings.

For example, a transitioning soldier may train as a certified nursing assistant and could continue to enhance his or her skills to include phlebotomy, basic assessment and cardiac monitoring.

Linda Hugar, owner of Lifesavers, reports that "historically, the advantages of this type of diversity and mobility assists in retention of this entry level position."



We also asked Hugar if it was necessary that a transitioning soldier have experience in the medical field before he or she could take the Lifesavers Course.

Hugar said "Many courses have been designed for soldiers who desire, but have no experience in the medical field. We would be happy to discuss our course offerings at any time."

During the last two years, Lifesavers personnel have trained numerous soldiers and family members and have provided instruction. For example, a phlebotomy course is offered for eight weeks for $275. Upon completion of the training, graduates are provided with job placement services through resources at the training center.

Many of the courses available through Lifesavers are approved by the Georgia Department of Labor for funding under the ACAP Skill Development program. This means that many transitioning soldiers may be eligible for a special grant to cover the cost of training.

For more information, transitioning soldiers can contact their ACAP counselor at 545-4892 or call Linda Hugar at 322-0159 or (800) 291-5898.

WAR AGAINST DRUGS

SOA students cap off counternarcotics course

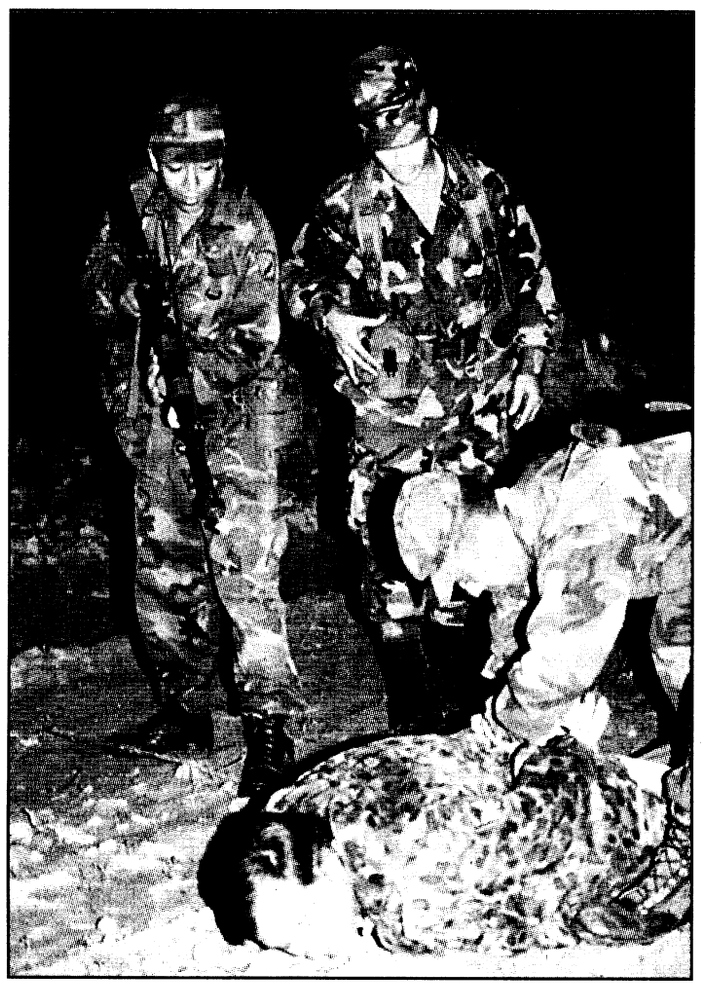
By Judith Ginder
School of the Americas

A road march and stress test brought to an end a five-day field training exercise for counter-narcotics students at the School of the Americas last week.

On the second day of training, the students spent the day preparing for a vehicle ambush, which would be taking place late that evening.

Sgt. 1st Class Luis Ledesma, course director, said the students were broken down into five squads and individually prepared for the ambush.

After dark, the students were taken to an area where the ambush would take place, however, the students did not know exactly where or even when it would happen.



The purpose of this exercise was to teach the students how to successfully execute an offensive attack on a vehicle that is carrying narcotics, monies earned through drug trafficking or weapons without having to use deadly force, said Staff Sgt. Arsenio Delacruz, special operations instructor.

The purpose of the exercise is to teach students how to execute an attack on a vehicle ... without using deadly force

On the last day of training, students took what is known in the class as a stress test. The test was given to see how much the students have learned throughout the course and to push the students to see how well they perform under pressure.

After a long road march, each squad is given directions to different stations that are set up in the area. The students have a certain amount of time to reach each station, perform the given task and then get to the next station, Delacruz said. The stations at the stress test included rappelling, making and using a rope bridge and boat operations.

With completion of the test, all of the students graduated.

School of the Americas teaches varied courses

By Judith Ginder
School of the Americas

Some are in classrooms training for field grade command positions, others practice combat medical skills or jump out of airplanes, while even others practice squad and platoon tactics.

SOA students come from the world over to study in the varied courses at the school.

The Command and General Staff Course has been accredited by the Department of the Army as the equivalent of the Command and General Staff College at Fort Leavenworth, Kan.

This course is open to U.S. Army and U.S. Air Force majors and to Latin American officers preparing for brigade- and division-level commands.

The nearly year-long course allows students to exchange ideas on contemporary issues facing commanders, according to U.S. Marine Maj. Mark Burger, CGSC course director.

The Commando Course, which is similar to Ranger School, is said to be the most physically and mentally demanding course at the School of the Americas.

"You have to be real hard for the Commando Course," said Sgt. 1st Class Gabriel Ugarte, special operations instructor.

The next Commando Course begins in September and runs through the end of November. There are three phases to the course: the Fort Benning phase; the mountain phase in Dahlonega, Ga.; and the Florida phase at Eglin Air Force Base, Fla. During the course, commando students perform airborne and water operations, mountaineering techniques and improvised demolitions techniques.

"To be a Commando, you have to be able to operate in difficult terrain for long periods of time with little sleep," Ugarte said.

As with all of the courses at SOA, the Commando Course incorporates human-rights training into every aspect of instruction.

Because of the worldwide war on drugs, one of the most popular at the school is the counternarcotics operations course. Instructors train students the development of planning and leading counter-narcotics operations.

"This course is working well because we are taking it down to the platoon level," Ugarte said. By doing this, students are able to return to their countries and share the information learned at SOA with their squads and other people they work with daily.

SOA also has a noncommissioned officer leadership course that is similar to the Basic Noncommissioned Officer Course for U.S. Army NCOs. Sgt. 1st Class Luis Huertas, tactics instructor, said training in the NCO Leadership Course focuses on weapons, battle staff planning, training management, counter-narcotics operations, squad and platoon tactics and human-rights training.

"The most important thing, by far, that the School of the Americas does is to teach Latin American military personnel the role of a professional military that serves a civilian government," Martel said.

6th RTB gets new boss

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Lt. Col. Francis J. Wiercinski assumed command of the 6th Ranger Training Battalion, Ranger Training Brigade, U.S. Army Infantry School, at Camp Rudder, Eglin Air Force Base, Fla., June 16.

Wiercinski is a native of Dickson City, Pa., and is a 1979 graduate of the U.S. Military Academy, West Point, N.Y. His initial assignment was with the 25th Infantry Division, Hawaii, where he served as a rifle platoon leader, scout platoon leader, battalion staff officer and rifle company commander in the 1st Battalion, 19th Infantry Regiment.

Following a tour as an infantry assignments officer in Alexandria, Va., Wiercinski was assigned to the 3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment at Fort Benning. During a four-year tour, he was assigned as a battalion personnel officer, rifle company commander and a battalion liaison officer. While commanding Company B, he participated in the night combat parachute assault on Rio Hato Airfield, Republic of Panama, during Operation Just Cause. While assigned to the 101st Airborne Division at Fort Campbell, Ky., Wiercinski served as a battalion, brigade and division operations officer and a brigade executive officer.

Wiercinski is a graduate of the Command and General Staff College, the Infantry Officer Basic and Advance courses, the Mortar Platoon Leaders Course, the Basic Airborne Course, the Jumpmaster School and Ranger School. He is married to the former Jeannine Mussari of Carbondale, Pa.

The 6th Ranger Training Battalion, Ranger Training Brigade, is responsible for conducting the swamp and jungle phase of the Ranger Course. The final phase of ranger training is conducted in platoon-size elements by the 6th Battalion.

The ranger students encounter waterborne training, a night parachute insertion, difficult swamp infiltrations, raids and ambush operations and survival techniques in their 17 days of field training at Eglin Air Force Base.

SF to recruit in July

By Paul D. Nelson
USASOC Public Affairs Office

Special Forces recruiters will be at Fort Benning July 10 to 13 to brief interested officers and enlisted soldiers on the Special Forces career field.

Briefings will be conducted in Infantry Hall, Building 4, Classroom 59, from 10:30 a.m. to 1 p.m.

SF recruiters will be at Fort Benning July 10 to 13.

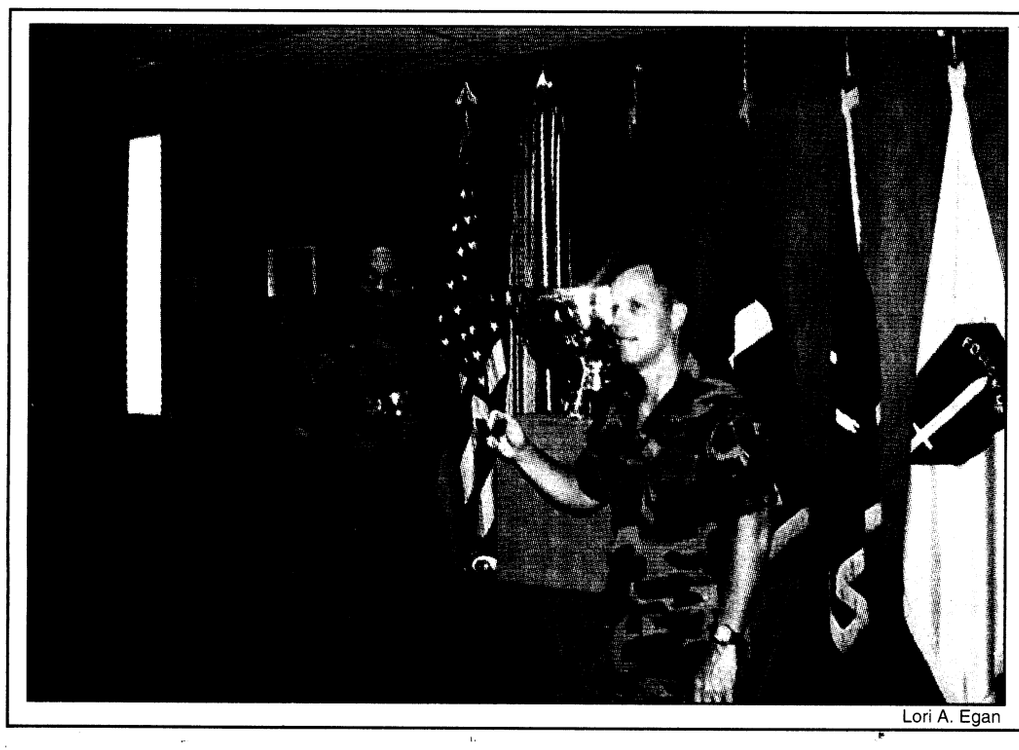
Recruiters are currently looking for soldiers to attend the Special Forces Assessment and Selection Courses scheduled for January and March. SFAS is a 21-day program to evaluate candidates' physical, mental and teamwork potential to make it through the Special Forces Qualification Course.

Specialists and corporals who have not attended the Primary Leadership Development Course may still apply for the career field, according to SF recruiters.

Officers in year-groups 1988 to 1992 are encouraged to attend.

All candidates must pass physical fitness and swim tests given by SF recruiters.

Unit physical training and swim tests are no longer valid. The uniform for the PT test is battledress uniforms and running shoes. The minimum overall score for the PT test is 220. The test consists of push-ups, sit-ups and a two-mile run, graded on the 17-to 21-year-old scale, regardless of age.



Candidates are also required to swim 50 meters in a pool wearing BDUs and boots with no time limit imposed.

Soldiers are encouraged to have a SF physical scheduled before the recruiting team's arrival. Copies of the Department of the Army Forms 2A and 2-1 should be brought to the briefings.

Candidates must be U.S. citizens and have a high school diploma or general equivalency diploma. All applicants must pass the SF physical, be airborne qualified or volunteer for airborne school and possess, or be eligible for a secret security clearance. A minimum score of 110 on the Army general technical test is also required.

Soldiers and their wives are encouraged to attend the briefings.

For information or an application packet, applicants can call SF recruiters at (910) 432-1818 or DSN 239-1818.

The 31st Infantry Regiment charter required the unit to return the bowl to the Infantry School when it inactivated.

Army to nix 201 file

Personnel Services Division

The Army announced the beginning of the elimination of the Military Personnel Records Jacket, better known as the 201 File. This will occur in three phases. Upon completion of all phases, all Military Personnel Records Jackets will be maintained as optical digitized images or electronic data.

Phase I identified 47 forms and documents that are no longer authorized for filing in the DA Form 201 File. These forms and documents are being removed from the 201 file and will be returned to soldiers.

The Personnel Services Branch, along with other sections of the Adjutant General's Office of the 30th Adjutant General Battalion and Detachment D, 3rd Bn., 24th PSB, have begun this process. As soldiers visit the officer or enlisted record sections, evaluation sections, in and out processing, etc., these documents will be returned to them.

AG officials encourage soldiers to maintain these hard copy documents in a safe and easily accessible place should they need to produce them after for verification purposes.

OCS amends alma mater to bridge age gap

Officer Candidate School

The U.S. Army Officer Candidate School at Fort Benning amends its Alma Mater that bridges its past to future of America's Army of the 21st century.

World War II. Korean War. The Vietnam Conflict. Operations Urgent Fury and Just Cause. The Fall of the Berlin Wall and the dissolution of the Soviet Union. Desert Storm, Somalia and Haiti. These are just a few of the numerous incidents and situations that the world and the military have witnessed and participated in since the beginning of OCS.

Since its beginning until present, OCS has evolved from the Plattsburg Idea to a dynamic, progressive institution, maturing as America's military force moves forward into the 21st Century. Producing commissioned officers is a critical task for any army, especially for our Army whose soldiers represent the demographics, attitudes and values of our society.

Most armies throughout history established military academies to produce their commissioned officers generally drawing them from the nobility or higher classes of society. No path seem to exist for citizens who enlisted

The first major breakthrough came in 1901 when a new law was passed that established eligibility criteria for lieutenants provided they could meet the requirements of an examination board. When it became evident that the United States might become actively involved in the war in Europe (soon to become World War I) the concept known as the "Plattsburg Idea" was formulated. It provided for the training of college students, business and professional men, at their own expense, at military summer camps. Although only a relatively small number of officers were indoctrinated into the Army by this program, the endeavor was considered to be successful.

In 1938, Brig. Gen. Asa Singleton, commandant of the United States Army Infantry School, submitted a plan for an Officer Candidate School of Infantry to the chief of infantry. No action was taken until July 1940 when Brig. Gen. Courtney Hodges submitted a revised plan that was implemented in July 1941. At this time, Officer Candidate Schools were started for infantry, field artillery and coast artillery. The first course was conducted here from July 9 to Sept. 27, 1941. Of the 204 who started, 171 were commissioned lieutenants from the 17-week course.

The Vietnam era demanded a rapid growth of officers in the Army. OCS consisted of three battalions of six companies each. At its height in 1967, 10,000 graduates were commissioned in one year.

As a result of the post Vietnam drawdown, the OCS program was reduced to its present size of one battalion consisting of two active component companies, one reserve component company and a battalion headquarters. In 1973, the Branch Immaterial Officer Candidate Course was formed.

This 14-week course commissions lieutenants in all branches (16 branches) of the Army except chaplains, Judge Advocates General and medical officers.

Although the majority of the alma mater text remains the same, key lines were modified in order to reflect current doctrine and thinking about what a professional institution such as OCS should be teaching and enforcing.

These changes were not intended to stifle or remove tradition; rather, the alma mater is in fact a viable and evolving tradition in itself. Thousands of graduates from OCS have and continue to sing its praises with the same pride and commitment that candidates of long ago espoused in the lyrics and music of the alma mater.

The original Officer Candidate School alma mater was composed to a traditional alma mater harmony by Officer Candidate Vernon A Walters (who later rose to the rank of lieutenant general and served as the director of the CIA). Several years later the alma mater was changed to include part of the OCS Hymn and the OCS Prayer. This version became the official OCS Alma Mater in the early 1960s. The text of the original version is as follows:

Far above the Chattahoochee,
By the Upatoi,
Proudly stands our alma mater,
Benning school for boys.
O'er the burning sands of Georgia,
Through its awful rain,
Up the hills and through the gullies,
We have learned with pain.
Though we often seem to hate her,
Curse her name with joy7
We have come to love our college,
Benning school for boys.
As 13 weeks go by,
In this torrid clime,
They have kept us on the run,
With their double time.
As we rise long 'fore the dawn,
Midst clamor and the noise,
Shave tails will be born at Benning,
Benning school for boys.

Later, the second through fifth stanzas were completely obliterated. The second through fourth stanzas read as:

Forward ever, backyard never,
Faithfully we strive.
To the parts of embarkation's,
Follow me with pride!
When it's time
And we are called to Guard our country's might,
We'll be there with heads held high
To lead in freedom's fight.
Yearning ever, failing never,
To keep our country free.
The call is clear,
We must meet the task, for
We are infantry!!

In considering what changes needed to be implemented, the leaders of OCS were careful not to make drastic and unnecessary alterations to the song, and amended only those lines that no longer either apply or have meaning to the current military and school structure.

For example, in the first stanza the line "Benning school for boys," a reflection of when OCS was a male-only, infantry-oriented program was replaced with the line "Benning's pride and joy." The cadre and students of the current branch-immaterial OCS reflect such pride and joy in every endeavor, from training in the classrooms and field environment to participation in such prestigious activities as the OCS Hall of Fame ceremony conducted each year at Fort Benning.

Such feelings are shared by all, regardless of gender, branch or military experience.

Another change that was implemented is noted in the last stanza, where the line "We are infantry" was replaced with "Freedom's never free." In our changing and volatile world, each and every soldier must come to accept a certain reality — that we must be prepared to move forward at a minute's notice and provide support to any nation in the world requesting our help.

This support, whether it be humanitarian, peacekeeping or even offensive intervention acts to strengthen our own democracy and freedom as a nation, and requires the efforts of not only infantry, but all branches and services of the military. Total Army is the concept we as a force will fight under now and in the future, and the last line of the alma mater serves only to remind all of how precious and fragile our freedom is. OCS sends highly trained, dedicated officers to the force who will forever give their all to sustain the freedom of this great nation of ours.

It is with humility and care that the leaders of OCS have taken the lead in ensuring the alma mater remains a symbol of the great heritage and tradition that hundreds of thousands of graduates feel each and every time they hear the alma mater sung. OCS continue to invite all members of the OCS family to, as noted in the alma mater, "guard the memory" of the great institution called OCS, and "meet the task" of sustaining its traditions and lineage as our professional Army moves forward into the future.

For example, the OCS Hall of Fame honors those graduates who have been awarded the Medal of Honor (regardless of commissioned rank attained), been promoted to the rank of colonel while serving on active duty (lieutenant colonels were previously accepted), been appointed or elected to state or national political office or recognized by the commandant of the Infantry School for outstanding service.

The Patterson Award honors the most distinguished infantry-branched graduates of the preceding year. The award consists of a Certificate of Achievement from the secretary of the Army, a monetary sum, an engraved 9mm pistol and a letter of commendation signed by the commandant of the Infantry School.

The mission of OCS is to develop leadership abilities and professional skills to the level requires U.S. Army. OCS can and will stand as a testament to the will and motivation of those great officers who forever recognize that "Freedom's never free!"

301 compete in Glock shootout

By Robin A. Shawlinski
Bayonet assistant editor

Robert Lewis

Bubba Odon fires his Glock during the civilian competition of the Glock Match. More than 300 shooters participated in the competition.

The 1995 Glock Sport Shooting Foundation Old South Regional Classic III was conducted at the Fort Benning Rifle and Pistol Club recently.

More than 300 shooters competed in the classic on English Range.

The top prize for high A, B and C class competitors in each category won a new Glock pistol.

"We are very fortunate to have the GSSF match held here on post," said Jim Graham, the Fort Benning Sports Office. "The prize schedule in all classes, to include the military category, is the best I know of anywhere in the world."

The match was run according to the Lewis system, which breaks down the shooters into thirds or A, B or C.

All competition in separate classes such as military, civilian and law enforcement are ranked by score from top to bottom, Graham said.

"This year, three pistols were awarded to the top shooters in each 'third,' along with numerous cash prizes ranging from $25 to $200.

Gerald Bond was the overall winner with Dennis Warwell and Howard Speights each top in their classes in the military competition

In the civilian competition, David McDonald was the overall winner with John Remakis and Richard Roberts winning in their respective classes.

The Gateway Blue Team took first place in the dealer teams category. The Hot Shots Shooting Range team.

Beth Wingfield took honors for highest female shooter, along with $100 as did Ricky Phifer Jr. who earned high junior male and Candy Trammell who earned high junior female.

AMU sponsors paralympic marksmanship comp

USAMU Public Affairs Office

Winning isn't everything. But, for Norm Bissel, a 62-year-old paraplegic, coming out on top during the Southwest Georgia Games was another chance to prove he could beat the odds. Bissel beat competitors who ventured from locations statewide to participate in the games hosted by the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit June 10.

The marksman, who shoots with the Conyers, Ga., based Shepard Center team also overcame his physical limitations to win the men's air pistol match with a score of 528 out of 600 points.

What's impressive is having qualified for the U.S. National Team in 1988, setting a national pistol record in 1989 and 1990, and participating in the Paralympics in Barcelona, Spain in 1992, Bissel still seemed surprised by his win.

"It's not that I'm surprised, exactly," he said. "It's just that there were some difficulties during the competition that hindered my performance."

Those difficulties were the result of firing on a range not built to accommodate handicapped people. For example, the bench used to support the firing arm while competing in a standing position presented a slight problem for Bissel.

"It was a little too high for me," he said. "I had to lean forward in my (wheel) chair to reach over the bench."

Having to lean forward caused the traiectory of his shots to be a little less accurate than Bissel would have preferred them to be.

Yet, this is more than likely a problem most marksmen participating in the same class as Bissel encounter, said George Olney, captain of the Shepard Center team.

"Most of the shooters on the Shepard Center team are in wheelchairs and compete in the disabled class," Olney said. While it's true there are differences in the mechanics between the way wheelchair-bound and able-bodied marksmen shoot, there are also quite a few similarities.

"The greatest similarity is that all marksmen go into competition hoping to win," Olney said.

And that's what Bissel and the rest of his Shepard Center team members do. Since it's inception in 1988, the Shepard Center team has won more than 178 national medals and more than 75 international medals.

"In fact," Olney said, "the team was winning so much, I stopped counting the number of national medals we were winning in 1991 and just recently stopped counting the international medals."

As for Bissel, he feels proud to be part of such a winning team.

"I've always enjoyed shooting," Bissel, who began hunting as a child in upstate New York, said.

Bissel's interest in shooting continued through the years when he served as a firing range specialist while with the Georgia National Guard and then as a battalion-level marksmanship trainer.

Surprisingly, though, Bissel didn't take up competitive shooting until after an airplane crash left him wheel-chair bound in 1988.

It was then that he joined the Shepard Center team.

"I saw my joining the team as being a way to continue doing something I love," Bissel said.

And his being able to continue living life to its fullest has opened new doors to Bissel. This week, Bissel will be competing with 249 other disabled marksmen in the Veteran's Wheelchair Games in Atlanta.

AMU marksman takes out 200 competitors

By Deana Kussman
USAMU Public Affairs Office

Almost 200 competitors were not enough to keep the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit's service rifle shooter Sgt. 1st Class Kenneth Gill from earning the Virginia State Championship title.

Gill, the current National Service Rifle champion, won the grand aggregate competition at the Virginia State Championships in Quantico, Va., was June 16 to Sunday with a score of 792-37x, beating 191 national-level marksmen.

Cpl. Kevin McMahon and Maj. Richard Hawkins, both of the USAMU service rifle team, placed second and third respectively.

The grand aggregate competition combines the scores of four separate events. In each, competitors fire 20 shots, each under different conditions. The first series is a 20-minute slow fire stage, shot standing at 200 yards.

The following stage is sitting rapid fire, with one minute for each of two strings of 10 shots. Prone rapid fire with 70 seconds for each of two 10 shot strings at 300 yards is next.

The competition is concluded with 20 slow fire shots form a prone position at 600 yards.

USAMU shooters placed in the top three for each of the four events that make up the grand aggregate score. Hawkins won the 200-yard standing event, with USAMU Sgt. Lewis Tippie placing third.

Gill and Spc. Barry Coleman placed second and third, respectively, in the 300-yard rapid fire event. Cpl. Grant Singley won the silver medal in the 600-yard slow fire.

All USAMU shooters use a modified M-16 exclusively in competition and they are the only service team that does so, D.I Boyd, USAMU chief of competition, said. The modified M-16 was designed by USAMU gunsmiths, and has yet to be matched for accuracy in competition.

Gill and the rest of the USAMU service rifle team are training for their next match, the Ohio State Championships in Camp Perry, Ohio.

U.S.A. baseball team to make July stop in Columbus

Columbus RedStixx

MILLINGTON, Tenn.— Forty-three young baseball players in America have reported to the USA Baseball Team training camp in Millington, Tenn., to compete for a spot on the roster that will provide Americans with a preview of the 1996 Olympic games.

USA Baseball Team and Louisiana State University head coach Skip Bertman will evaluate the talent available for 196 Olympic competition. Bertman will be assisted by General Manager and 1988 Olympic Gold Medalist, Mike Fiore as well as his assistant coaches, Ron Polk (Mississippi State), Ray Tanner (North Carolina State) and Jerry Weinstein (Sacramento City College).

Twenty pitchers and 23 position players have reported to Millington from across the country in the hope that they will be selected to participate in the NationsBank USA Baseball Team Tour.

Most of the top young players in the country, including several who have just participated in the 1995 College World Series will be attempting to make the elite squad.

USA Baseball has a long tradition of developing the talents of the nation's finest amateur ballplayers. Many alumni have gone on to play in the big leagues. This season, 138 players could be found on major league rosters. At least two alumni are playing with each of the 28 MLB teams. The Baltimore Orioles have no less than 10 USA Baseball alumni.

The USA Baseball Team will stop in Columbus July 2 for a 7:15 p.m. game vs. Team Canada. It will be the 11th game and fourth city on the 35-game, 13-city tour. Columbus' Golden Park, the Olympic venue for women's fast-pitch softball during the 1996 games, will be hosting its first "Olympic" event after a $4 million renovation.

"We are thrilled to be included on the '95 tour and relish the opportunity to showcase our stadium to the country" stated Columbus RedStixx General Manager John Dittrich.

The RedStixx, a Cleveland Indians' affiliate in the South Atlantic League are the home club for the 45-year old stadium, has been almost completely rebuilt during the recent off-season. Improvements to the stadium include new clubhouses, office, stadium club, press facilities, luxury suites, completely new seating and a modern food court.

Tickets for the game are on sale at the RedStixx' offices. They are priced at $10 for box seats, $8 for reserved seats and $5 general admission. A July Fourth fireworks spectacular will follow the game.

Fans interested in purchasing tickets can call the RedStixx at 571-8866.

Fort Benning to sponsor wrestling competition

USAIC Public Affairs Office

The Fort Benning Community Recreation Division and the All-Army Wrestling Team are hosting the Doughboy Classic Wrestling Competition at Briant Wells Field House Building 933, Saturday at 9 a.m.

The competition consists of international freestyle wrestling and is part of the 1995 Southwest District Sports Festival, Georgia State Games. It is open to all military and civilian members of USA Wrestling, from 7 years old and up.

Entry fee is $10 and all participants will receive a T-shirt.

Registration and weigh-in for the tournament are from 7 to 8:30 a.m., and a wrestling clinic is scheduled from 8:30 to 9 a.m.. The competition starts at 9 a.m. and an awards ceremony will be conducted from noon to 6 p.m., as each weight class finishes.

Instructors for the clinic are 1992 Olympic Bronze Medalist Rodney Smith; 1995 Pan American Silver Medalist Jerry Jackson and 1994 National Champions Shon Lewis and Derrick Waldroup. The clinic will feature freestyle as well as Greco-Roman Wrestling.

For more information, call Jim Brown at 545-4178.

Georgia Games opening ceremony to be July 20 to 24

Georgia Games

Georgians won't have to shell out hundreds of dollars to witness the Olympic-style fanfare of the Georgia Games opening ceremonies.

Tickets to this July 21 event in the Georgia Dome are on sale and cost $5.

Presented by AT&T, the opening ceremonies will honor the more than 12,000 athletes expected to compete in the Georgia Games Championships July 20 to 24.

Highlights of the evening will include an athlete parade, sport demonstrations, Spike (the Georgia Games mascot) and his mascot friends from around the state, Grumpy Fish and a 1,000-voice gospel choir.

Billy Payne, chief executive officer of the Atlanta Committee for the Olympic Games, will make a special keynote address. The evening will end with the lighting of the Georgia Games Torch and a spectacular laser show.

"Moving to this world-class facility (the Georgia Dome) is a testament to the strength this program has generated over the past five years," said Nick Gailey, Georgia Games executive director.

Admission to the event, which starts at 7:30 p.m., is $5 (day of and advance).

Advanced tickets may be purchased through the Georgia Dome, Ticketmaster Ticket Centers or by phone (subject to a convenience charge).

ask the judge

Staff Judge Advocate's Office

Q: What can I do to protect myself from being taken when buying products? What can I do to become more aware as a consumer?

A: In the Legal Assistance Division, we see hundreds of people every year who experience problems when they buy goods or services. Many problems result from a lack of consumer awareness or impulsiveness (jumping into contracts and purchase agreements without thinking). Before you agree to buy anything, you ought to ask yourself at least two questions: Can I afford to pay for this, and do I really need it?

You need to make sure that you understand exactly what it is you're buying, what the cost is and how the cost is to be paid by you. You also need to make sure you understand exactly what the seller has agreed to do and what the seller's responsibilities are.

No doubt the salesman told you a lot of fine things about the product or service. These are representations or warranties, and they need to be a part of the contract. Never rely solely on a verbal promise made by a seller. A good contract will describe the deal so well that a stranger could pick it up, read it, and know exactly what you and the seller agreed upon.

There are some types of cases we see on such a regular basis that they deserve special attention. For example, there are a number of companies that market so-called "combination packages" almost exclusively to military members and their families. These packages involve agreements to provide lifetime or long-term photo processing services, film replacement and photo enlargements for what we consider to be extremely high prices. The usual arrangement costs about $1,800 and is payable monthly by allotment. These companies sweeten the deal by offering "free" cameras, VCRs and stereos as a part of the purchase. Frankly, what is offered is simply not worth the price. Most of the contracts only allow cancellation if done within seven days of signing.

Our advice is to think at least twice before you let the salesperson in the door, and at least three times before you agree to sign one of these contracts.

Car repairs are another source of headaches. While there are without a doubt some repair facilities that have either taken advantage of a bad situation or have engaged in outright fraud, most of the problems we see result from a failure of the client and the mechanic to understand their responsibilities. When you take your car in, you should instruct the mechanic that he or she is not to undertake any work without your express consent. You and the mechanic need to agree in writing about the actions he or she is to take and the cost of these actions. Make sure that you and the mechanic discuss warranties of the work he or she performs and any warranties on the parts, all of which should be in writing.

Make sure you and the mechanic discuss the time frame within which the repairs are to take place and what is to happen if the repairs are not completed within that time frame.

We see many other types of problems too numerous to list here. If you have a question about a consumer problem, or wish to consult with an attorney before you enter into a consumer transaction, contact the Legal Assistance Division for an appointment at 545-3281.

HOME SECURITY

Protect your home while on vacation

AAA Auto Club South and Brink's Home Security

AAA Auto Club South and Brink's Home Security offer these proven home security tips for protecting your home while you are away on summer vacation.

Landscaping and lights

• Install motion sensor lights at vulnerable locations, including entryways, garage doors and accessible windows. Use timers on indoor and outdoor lighting fixtures that automatically turn on at dusk and off at dawn.

• Do not conceal windows and doors from public view with fencing, trees or shrubbery. Security shrubs made of prickly leaves or thorns act as a natural barrier to would-be burglars.

Doors and windows

• Sliding glass doors should have an extra lock. Wedge a wooden rod inside the door track to prevent the door from sliding open if lock is breached.

• Install security glass or break-resistant plastic for windows to deter burglars from breaking or unlocking windows.

• Close and lock garage doors to deter intruders from gaining access to the house without being seen.

Extra Precautions

• Put all valuable possessions inside, such as lawn mowers and barbecue grills. If you can't put them inside, cover them with tarps and secure them to stationary points with padlocks.

• Park a car in the driveway when you are away or ask a neighbor to park in your driveway. This will give the appearance someone is home.

• Permanently mark your valuables with a personal identification number. Call your local police department to inquire about Operation I.D., a national program that involves inscribing a personal number (driver' s license is the best) on your valuable articles

• Install an electronically 24-hour monitored security system. Today's systems are easy to use and can provide you with an added sense of safety.

Plan today to reduce tax burden

American Institute for Cancer Research

If you're retired and got hit hard this past tax season, you're not alone. Taxes can now take a big bite even out of the moderate incomes of many retirees who are receiving Social Security.

As a result, it's important to use strategic planning in order to minimize your tax burden.

If you have a moderate income in addition to your Social Security benefits, current tax laws could reduce that income considerably by taxing as much as 85 percent of your 1995 Social Security benefits. And if those extra taxes mean you need to generate additional income by selling appreciated property, such as stocks or real estate, you could find yourself facing a harsh capital gains tax, and possibly even higher a tax on your Social Security benefits.

How can you minimize taxes and increase your own personal financial security? A free booklet, Tax Strategies to Increase Your Retirement Income, can help you keep more of your retirement income this year and in future years. The booklet covers important areas where you may be able to minimize your taxes, including Social Security benefits, itemized deductions, and IRAs. It also offers tips on keeping gains on your personal residence, and avoiding a capital gains tax.

Tax Strategies also discusses charitable remainder trusts and charitable gift annuities as financial planning techniques that may dramatically increase your spendable income and also reduce your current income tax liability.

To receive a free copy of Tax Strategies to Increase Your Retirement Income, call toll-free (800) 843-8114, Ext. 52, 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. weekdays or write the American Institute for Cancer Research, Dept. TXS, Washington, D.C. 20069.

Summer cookouts

Preparation is key to safe, healthy cookout

By Monica F. Dorsey
Environmental Health

Summertime is nearly synonymous with cookouts. Meals cooked outdoors increase dramatically during the summer months.

However, some of the recipes and grilling methods may not be safe, especially in warm weather when foodborne illness rates increase.

Use these simple guidelines for a safe outdoor meal, whether it is marinate shishkabobs or your favorite barbecued ribs.

Transporting — When transporting food, either from the grocery store or to a picnic site, keep it cold to minimize bacterial growth. Pack meat, poultry, salads and other perishables in an insulated cooler with an ice source. Keep the cooler in the shade and avoid opening the lid too often. In fact, if you are taking a lot of beverages for a large crowd, use a separate cooler.

Marinating — Marinate meats in a glass dish in the refrigerator, not on the counter. Reserve a portion for a dip or basting sauce that has not had raw meat in it. Do not reuse the raw meat marinade unless it has been boiled.

Precooking — When cooking ahead, be certain to cook the food completely in the microwave or oven. This ensures that bacteria in the raw food are destroyed. Reheating later on the grill can provide a barbecued flavor. Partially cooking meat or poultry in the microwave or oven, or parboiling to reduce grilling time, is safe only if the food then goes immediately onto the grill.

Heating the grill — For safety and quality, the coals should be very hot before cooking food. It can take 30 minutes or longer before the coals are ready. They should show a light coating of ash for optimal heat.

Carrying out the food — Wash forks, brushes and plates that come in contact with raw products before using them to handle cooked food. Be sure to take a fresh plate out to the grill to hold the cooked food. Bacteria that may be in juices of raw products could spread to the cooked food if it is placed on the plate that held the raw products. Take outside only the quantity of food that you will cook and eat. Foods should not sit at outside temperatures for more than two hours. When it is more than 85 degrees Fahrenheit, the time limit is one hour or less.

Cooking well — Cook everything thoroughly. Rare or medium rare meat or poultry can harbor harmful bacteria. Fish should always be fully cooked. For optimal safety, meat should reach 160 degrees Fahrenheit on a meat thermometer, and poultry should reach 180 degrees Fahrenheit. Since grilled food often browns very fast outside, make a "sample cut" to visually check for doneness. The juices should run clear and flesh should not be pink. Be careful also not to overcook, and do not consume charred food.

Serving the food — Serve immediately to keep hot foods hot. During the serving, perishable foods should not be out of refrigeration for more than two hours. If the temperature is 85 degrees Fahrenheit or higher, try to keep serving time under one hour.

Cleaning up — Clean the grill. Refrigerate any leftovers promptly, dividing larger quantities into small shallow containers.

Pool safety may prevent summertime tragedy

BioGuard Pool & Spa Products

It' s summertime, and the pool season would not be complete without a refresher course on the important subject of pool safety.

"Anyone who owns a swimming pool should be well versed on the topic already, but it's always a good idea to review the basics each season," said Barry Driks of BioGuard, one of the country's leading suppliers of pool water maintenance products.

BioGuard offers these pool safety reminders.

An ounce of prevention

There are several critical guidelines that you should always follow to help prevent accidents before they happen.

• Never let children under the age of 14 swim unsupervised in a pool. Constant, vigilant supervision of infants and children is paramount at all times.

• Set pool rules and stick by them. Don't allow running around the pool (slips can easily occur), and insist on safe use of diving boards, slides and other water toys.

• When you have guests visiting, always find out whether they can swim or not. Supervise guests who cannot swim the way you would a child.

Basic safety items by pool

• Every pool should have a first aid kit handy. Strongly consider having a family member trained in basic cardiopulmonary resuscitation if one isn't already. Keep written instructions with the first aid kit just in case.

• Be sure your pool includes basic markings indicating water depth and clearly showing steps.

• Keep a shepherd's crook or long-handled hook by the pool at all times, along with a life preserver in case of an emergency.

• Even if it s not required in your area, be sure you have a tall, sturdy fence with a self-latching lock surrounding your pool. This keeps children and unwelcome guests from using your pool unsupervised.

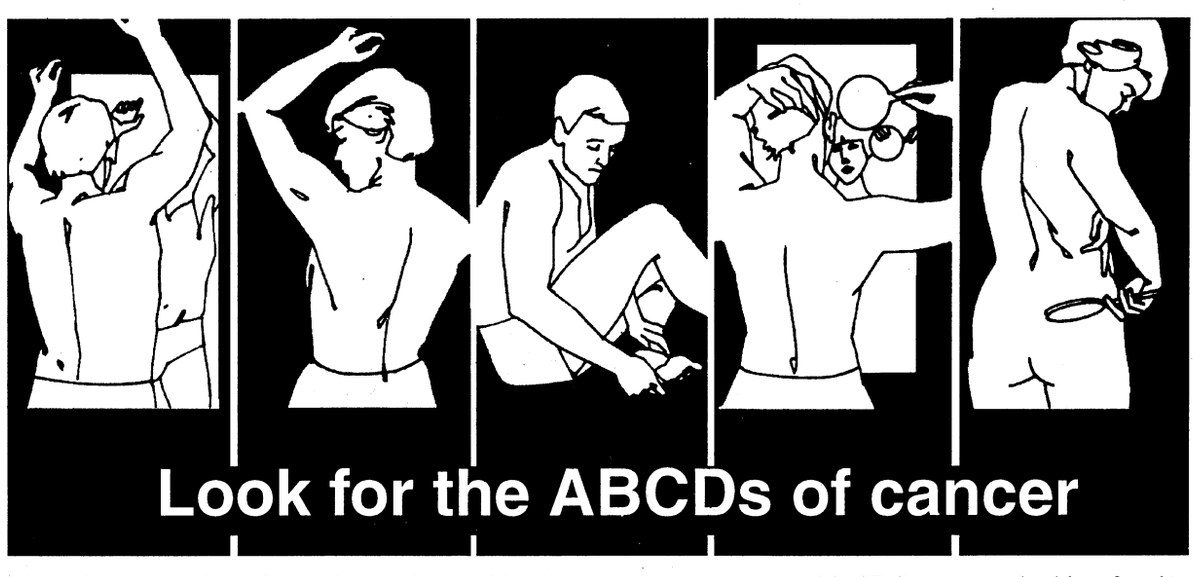
Take chemicals seriously

• Always read directions for the use, storage and handling of pool chemical products.

• Never mix chemicals together; the reaction could cause an explosion or fire.

• Always add chemicals to the pool separately.

• Keep chemicals out of reach of children.



• Never smoke around pool chemicals.

Too much sun can shorten person's life

By Evelyn D. Harris
American Forces Information Service

Sun-drenched days on the beach are the stuff of happy memories, but those bright sun rays can be rays of death.

As few as three severe sunburns in childhood can lead to skin cancer later, according to the Atlanta-based Centers for Disease Control. And melanoma, the most deadly skin cancer, is on the rise. The number of people diagnosed with melanoma increased by 4 percent every year from 1973 and 1991, CDC said. This was faster than any other kind of cancer.

Melanoma affects the cells in the skin that give the skin its color. Melanoma is a quick-spreading form of skin cancer and causes 75 percent of all skin cancer deaths.

About 34,100 people will be diagnosed with melanoma this year and 7,200 will die from it, according to the American Cancer Society.

Melanoma is most common in middle-aged or elderly people with fair skin, freckles and blond or red hair who spent many years in the sun or who had sunburns as children. White people account for the majority of deaths from melanoma. People from darker races are protected somewhat by their heavier pigmentation, said Dr. Stephen I. Katz, chief of the Dermatology Branch at the National Cancer Institute. When African Americans get the disease, it occurs on the palms of their hands or foot soles, he said.

Men are more likely to get melanoma on their trunks (the area between the shoulders and hips), heads or necks, Katz said. Women most often get it on their hands and legs. Perhaps because men often get melanoma on their backs, where it's harder to see and be detected early, more men than women die from the disease. Still, Katz said, melanoma is quickly becoming an "equal-opportunity disease" with respect to gender, with more women dying from it than before.

Untreated melanoma spreads to other parts of the body through the lymph system or bloodstream. Katz said you should see your doctor if you spot any of the following warning signs of melanoma: change in the size, shape or color of a mole; oozing or bleeding from a mole; or a mole that feels itchy, hard, lumpy, swollen or tender to the touch.

The two most common types of skin cancer, basal cell and squamous cell, are diagnosed in about a million Americans every year, according to the CDC. These cancers develop more slowly and are less likely to spread than melanoma. They can often be treated in a doctor's office. If detected and treated early, they have a 95 percent cure rate. If not treated early, they can result in considerable disfigurement.

Of the two, squamous cell cancer is more likely to spread. The squamous cells are flat cells on the skin's surface. Squamous cell cancer appears as a raised, red or pink scaly nodule or wart-like growth, typically appearing on the face, hands or ears. It can grow and spread to other parts of the body.

Basal cell cancer is usually a slow-growing, pearly nodule that may crust, ulcerate or bleed without treatment. It is found mostly on the face, neck, hands and trunk.

Doctors recommend checking for changes in the skin regularly. They suggest using a mirror to check the back. This is particularly important for men with fair skin and a history of sun exposure.

As a memory aid, CDC suggests looking for the ABCDs of cancer — A for asymmetry, B for border irregular, C for color varied from one area to another and D for diameter more than 6 millimeters (a little over half an inch.)

Treatment varies with the severity of the cancer. Some cancers are removed completely when the doctor performs the biopsy. Others can be frozen off or removed with laser therapy. One surgery involves shaving off the cancer one thin layer at a time.

Two kinds of ultraviolet sun rays, WA and WB, can cause skin damage. These range from sunburns to wrinkles and cancer. Artificial rays from sunlamps and tanning booths are equally dangerous. Researchers believe WA may also weaken the immune system.

Katz said Australian research shows excessive ultraviolet radiation (from sun or sunlamps) on young skin is particularly dangerous. According to CDC, sun exposure during childhood up to 18 years old accounts for 80 percent of total lifetime sun exposure. The agency is mounting a public education campaign to encourage adults to set a good example in protecting themselves from the sun and teach their children to do the same.

Skin Cancer Prevention Tips

• Use waterproof or water resistant sunscreens that help protect the skin from ultraviolet rays. Children and fair skinned people should use a product with a sun protection factor of at least 15.

• Apply sunscreen liberally (a large handful) about 30 minutes before going outside. Reapply sunscreen after swimming or perspiring heavily.

• Talk with children's camp counselors and other care providers about reapplying sunscreens. Toweling off after swimming also removes sunscreens.

• Limit exposure between 10 a.m. and 3 p.m., when the sun is strongest.

• Hats with brims and long sleeves and long pants provide extra protection against the sun.

• Sun glasses help protect eyes and may prevent cataracts.

• Teen-agers who work outside in the summer should be extra careful to protect their skin.

• Discourage teen-agers from going to tanning parlors.

• Avoid exposing babies under 6 months old to direct sunlight. Sunscreens irritate their skin, and their developing eyes are more sensitive to sun damage.

NVLSP offers Gulf war illness guide

Natl. Veterans Legal Services Program

The National Veterans Legal Services Program announces the availability of the first Self-Help Guide for Veterans of the Gulf War. The self-help guide is designed to be a working tool for the tens of thousands of Persian Gulf veterans and their families who are suffering from illness as a result of their service in the Persian Gulf.

The guide provides easy-to-use information to veterans, veterans service officers, attorneys and others who are assisting Persian Gulf veterans and their families.

The guide analyzes the new laws governing Persian Gulf Veterans when filing and appealing claims for compensation and medical care before the U.S. Department Veterans Affairs.

The guide also provides strategies for veterans and their advocates on the best methods to obtain compensation and medical care from the VA. It details the unique eligibility. It also describes all of the services available to Persian Gulf veterans through the VA and the VA health care system and Social Security.

In addition, the guide contains special sections on self-help for active duty veterans suffering from the syndrome.

To obtain a copy of the guide, send a $5 check or money order to NVLSP, Attn: PSG-R, Drawer 017, Washington, D.C. 20055.

PEOPLE

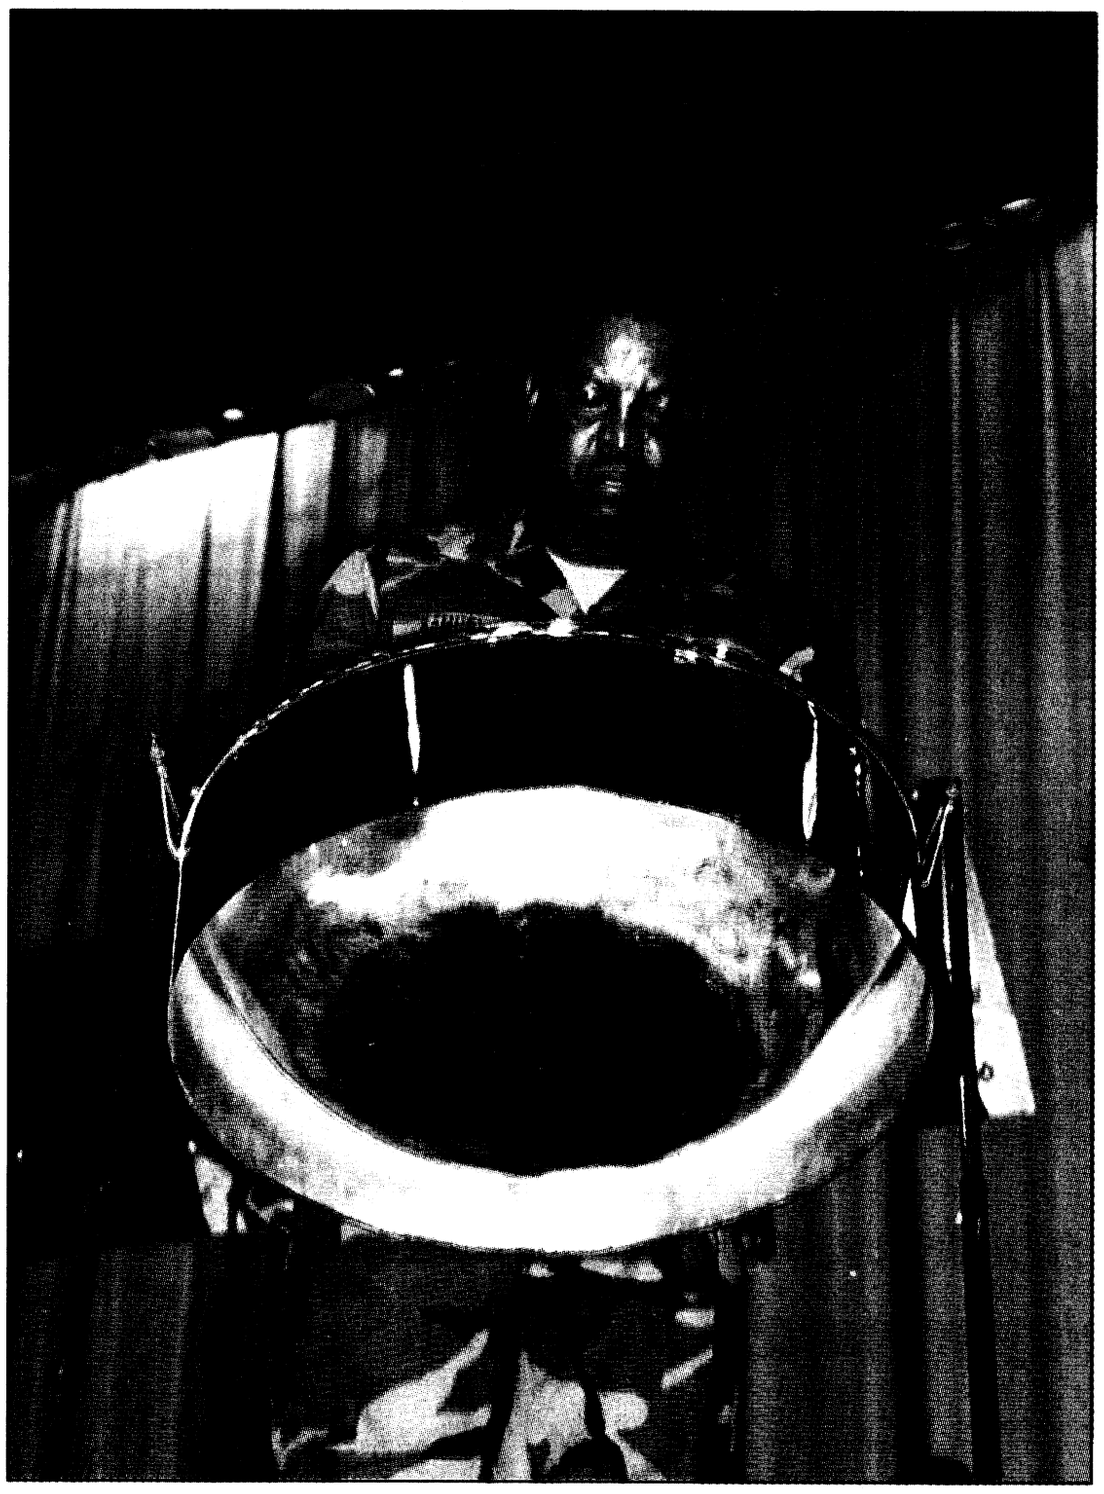
CDS employees recognized

By Bettie S. Harris
Child Development Services

A Child Development Services Recognition Day was May 31. Jennifer Williams, the Child Development Services coordinator and the training and curriculum specialists from each child development center and child care teamed up to host the event.

The recognition day was for all CDS management staff, teachers, education technicians, program assistants, clerks, cooks and FCC providers.

Each staff member received a letter of achievement and a recognition pin for services and being a part of CDS.



The center staff was recognized for hard work and diverse talents. The family child-care providers were recognized for hard work and having a multi-age home.

Each person had the opportunity to take a picture with the CDS coordinator as she presented them with a certificate and pin. Afterward, each person enjoyed light refreshments.

The CDS coordinator was available during a four-hour period, so each person could stop by as their schedule allowed to be recognized for a job well done.

During this time, each person had the opportunity to tour the new Family Child Care Resource Library with Judy Cobb, the FCC director.

The Resource Library is located at Patch, Building 7, Room 7.

Sgt. Dennis Samuels of the 666th Army Band, Virgin Islands National Guard, St. Thomas, Virgin Islands, plays the steel drum at a calypso concert in Marshall Auditorium June 13. The band, here for its annual two-week training exercise, also performed at the Officers' Club June 14.

Dental plan sees changes

TRICARE

CHAMPUS has recently announced two changes to the dental plan for families of active duty service members.

First, the plan has a new name — TRICARE-Active Duty Family Member Dental Plan.

Although the plan name has changed, FMDP will continue to offer the same level of dental coverage to service families.

Second, a premium reduction will soon go into effect. Beginning July 1, premiums for FMDP will be reduced to $6.77 a month for one family member (single premium) or $16.92 a month for two or more family members (family premium).

Sponsors with enrolled family members will see this reduction reflected in their end-of-month leave and earnings statement for June.

Family Member Dental Plan covers crowns, bridges, dentures, braces, root canal treatment, gum surgery and extractions, as well as routine checkups, cleanings and fillings.

There is no deductible to satisfy, and the yearly maximum is $1,000 per patient for all covered services except orthodontics, which has a lifetime maximum of $1,200 per patient.

In addition, family members enrolled in FMDP can make appointments with any licensed dentist they choose.

For more information about FMDP, contact the health benefits adviser at Martin Army Community Hospital or call Delta Customer Service at (800) 337-9991.

EFMP has resource library

Exceptional Family Member Program

The Exceptional Family Member Program Resource Library contains reference materials to assist those enrolled in the EFMP with coping with disabilities.

Included in this library are also recreational and therapeutic devices and equipment designed to help those with special needs adapt to or improve motor and perception skills.

The following is a representative listing of some of the items available for loan for up to 14 days:

• Books — "Educating children with Multiple Disabilities," Orelove and Sobsey; "Guide for Helping the Child with Spina Bifida," Myers; "Retarded Isn't Stupid, Mom!" Kaufman.

• Video — "Vision Exercise" (Easy to use, inexpensive, at-home style vision exercises)

• Equipment — "talking pen" (for training the visually impaired/coordination deficient); "wooden ring toss" (children's equivalent of horse shoes); "dressing board" (helps children learn how to tie laces, open and close snaps, zippers, etc.); velcro gloves, footballs, softee balls, megaball (ball five feet in diameter).

There are more than 50 reference materials and 20 items for recreation or therapeutic use.

Those enrolled in EFMP and units planning picnics, outings, etc., are eligible to use these resources.

For more information, contact Frances Howard, EFMP coordinator, or Mark Mills, EFMP recreation specialist, at Army Community Service, Building 2643, Soldiers' Plaza, or call 545-6969, 545-5516, or 545-3344.

Army regs say don't leave children

HOME ALONE

Army Community Service

"During the summer it seems to be more of a problem. However, it is something we must address. The supervision of children is necessary for their protection, care, and management in our community, and the safety and well-being of children are priorities at Fort Benning," said Rebecca Welch, Family Advocacy Program manager.

The problem is that when school is not in session, parents sometimes leave their children alone at home or in a car while they run errands, and by doing so they are violating post regulations, Welch said.

Army Regulation 608-18 states that "Child neglect is defined as deprivation of necessities — neglecting to provide the child with the following when able to do so: nourishment, clothing, shelter, health care, to include dental care and supervision."

In addition, Fort Benning's U.S. Army Infantry Center Regulation 210-5 states that "No children under the age of 8 years will be left unattended in parked vehicles," and "No children under 12 years of age will be left unattended in government family quarters."

Welch added that children 4 years and younger must be attended at all times; that is, in the presence of and under the protection of a mentally and physically competent individual 12 years and older, who has successfully completed Red Cross baby-sitting training.

Even while school is in session, she said, parents should know that children 5 to 9 years must receive constant supervision before and after school. Children are expected to go directly to the child-care provider's location, rather than become involved with shopping or playing while en route there.

"Supervision is a parental responsibility. They should know where their children are and what they are doing," said Welch.

"Parents are encouraged to continually evaluate their child's level of maturity and determine the degree of supervision that best meets his or her needs.

"Nevertheless, they will be held accountable for their decisions regarding child supervision and any incidents of misconduct by juveniles or adolescents," she said.

Children should always be provided with telephone numbers and contact procedures for obtaining emergency assistance within their neighborhood.

Literature and coloring books on child safety are free and available at Army Community Service, Family Advocacy Program, Building 2643, Soldiers' Plaza.

Failure to comply with these regulations will result in a referral to the Family Advocacy Case Management Team, and if the case is substantiated, the parents will be charged with child neglect.

Labels wanted for playground equipment

Family Child Care

Organizers need soup labels to purchase playground equipment for Russ Pond.

Only 2 percent of the 345,650 Campbell's Soup Company labels needed have been collected.

The drive is part of the Campbell's Labels for Education program and was launched in January by the Family Child Care providers at Fort Benning.

Labels from more than 1,000 Campbell's products can be redeemed for educational equipment and materials. Only 2 percent of the 345,650 Campbell's Soup Company labels needed have been collected.

Campbell's products include anything with the company's label, Marie's, Mrs. Paul's, Swanson, V-8, Early California, Franco-American, Vlasic, Pepperidge Farm and Prego.

The goal is to collect enough labels to trade for the playground equipment. The new playground would be for children from toddler to school age. There are no playgrounds on post for this varied age group.

Only 5,000 of the 345,650 labels needed have been collected. The drive ends March 1.

There are label drop-off points at all community of life buildings and the Commissary. Many child-care providers will accept labels. Their homes can be identified by the yellow rainbows in the windows.

For information, call Debbie Snoke at 687-6823.

Soldier sings way to top USO talent prize

By Rudi Williams
American Forces Information Service

Spc. Benjamin Steagall is a happy man. His wife is happy. So are his mother, father, grandmother and grandfather. His commanding officer is happy. And all of his friends are happy for him.

Steagall is also $5,000 richer. He earned the money doing what he has loved doing since he was 8 years old — singing. That's when he started singing with the family gospel group in Gafney, S.C.

"We always knew he had talent," said his father, Benjamin Sr.

Steagall was this year's grand prize winner of the USO/AT&T Countdown to Stardom musical talent search.

His winning rendition of "Feel the Fire" scored first place. He recently received a giant replica of a $5,000 check from entertainer Ben Vereen during ceremonies at Fort Myer, Va.

"There were some very gifted men and women representing the military in this talent search," Vereen said.

"I'm pleased to have the opportunity to participate in an exciting program that highlights the abilities of aspiring musicians — I didn't know there was so much musical talent in the military!"

Vereen said the competition should also be held stateside instead of just overseas. There is so much talent, the competition should be telecast nationwide, he added.

"And maybe the prize should be $10,000 instead of $5,000," he joked.

Steagall agrees. "They should have a talent search in the states, too, so everybody in the military will have a chance to compete," Steagall said. "I don't have a lot of talent—I just happened to be on that night (Sept. 3, when he won first place in local competition in Germany). A lot of people in the military are better than me, maybe one of them could have a good night. It could be their night to be discovered.

"But," he added, "before you get into something like this, make sure you practice your routine a lot and be mentally and physically ready."

When Steagall competed in the talent competition his goal was to win the $500 local first prize, never thinking he'd win the grand prize. "I mostly wanted to have fun, he added.

Steagall was stationed at Rose Barracks in Vilseck, Germany, when he participated in the countdown to stardom at the 416th Base Support Battalion in Nuernberg. He recently transferred to Fort Bragg, N.C., where he is a quartermaster chemical equipment repair technician.

Steagall also won a trip to New York City for a recording session at Sony Music Studios as part of the grand prize.

He learned cutting a record is grueling work. "It took us from 10 a.m. until 4 a.m. the next morning to cut one song," he said in amazement. "It was a lot of work, but it was a lot of fun. My demonstration recording goes out to all record labels under Sony, and hopefully, somebody will like it and give me a call."

When he returned home toting copies of his recording, "My wife was so excited she wanted everybody to hear it right away," Steagall beamed.

The USO/AT&T Countdown to Stardom '94 was held at 24 overseas military installations from Aug. 13 through Sept. 30. Local winners received $500, $250 and $100 for first, second and third place, respectively.

Videotapes of first-place winners from each base were submitted to a panel of entertainment industry professionals and chief, Armed Forces Professional Entertainment Office, Army Lt. Col. Marianne Hook.

The panel included Vereen; Earth, Wind and Fire singer and bass player Philip Bailey; actress, vocalist and former Miss America Vanessa Williams; country music award-winner Holly Dunn; recording artist Freddy Fender; publicist Sheila Eldridge; president of R&B LIVE, Ramon Hervey; country music newcomer Greg Holland; entertainment journalist David Nathan; and Sony Music official Amy Strauss.

The Army and Navy each had nine first place Countdown to Stardom '94 winners. The Air Force garnered five first-place spots. The Marine Corps had one winner.

First place Army winners were Sgt. 1st Class George L. Lewis Sr., stationed in Corozal, Panama; "Remedy," a group featuring Sgt. John Calloway, Sgt. Dee Leslie, Cpl. Larry Humphrey, Spc. Clem Cunningham and Sgt. Donald McDowell, of the 280th Base Support Battalion, Schweinfurt, Germany; Sgt. 1st Class Malcolm McBride, Torii Station, Okinawa, Japan; Sgt. Larry E. Brown, Camp Humphreys, Korea; Pfc. Danny Alford, Rose Barracks, 410th Base Support Battalion, Bad Kreuznach, Germany; Pvt. Yalonda M. Ratcliff, Camp Nimble, Korea; Sgt. Alton L. Bryant Jr., Camp Red Cloud, Korea; and Sgt. 1st Class Keith A. Jarman, Aviano Air Base, Italy.

Navy winners were Petty Officer Kenneth D. Wilkins Jr., Naval Security Group Activity Edzell, Scotland; "To Be," consisting of Petty Officer Angelo McDuffie and Petty Of ficer Gary L. Bass of Naval Air Facility Atsugi, Japan; Petty Officer Erick M. Murray, Naval Air Station Sigonella, Italy; Seaman Aaron Jason Montgomery, Fleet Activities, Sasebo, Japan; Petty Officer Kenneth Muse, Administrative Support Unit, Bahrain; "New Dimensions," featuring of Seamen Nikki N. Ransom and Scottie Daniels of Naval Air Station, La Maddalena, Italy; Petty Officer Kathy T. Evans, Naval Security Group Activity, Rota, Spain; Petty Officer Claudette Spencer, Naval Air Station, Keflavik, Iceland; and "DeJea," with Petty Officer Lester "D.J. Freez" Cromer and Seaman Kenneth Allen, Naval Support Activity, Naples, Italy.

There were five Air Force winners: Tech Sgt. Marvin L. Broadie II of Royal Air Force Alconbury, United Kingdom; "A Dash of Jazz," with Staff Sgt. Cynthia Y. Smalls, Sgt. Steve T. Morris, Staff Sgt. Elizabeth C. Sanders, Sgt. Kenneth T. Goldsby and Sgt. Kenneth F. Stewart of Kunsan Air Base, Korea; Sgt. Venton D. Horrice, Anderson Air Force Base, Guam; Staff Sgt. Robert Martin, Incirlik Air Base, Turkey; and Staff Sgt. Shawn D. Smith, RheinMain Air Base, Germany.

The Marine Corps first place local winner was "For Real," featuring Staff Sgt. Tony D. Hobbs, Sgt. Serena D. Jackson, Cpl. Susan M. Garrow, Sgt. Thomas J. Cox Jr. and Staff Sgt. Roger Caldwell of Marine Corps Air Station, Iwakuni, Japan.

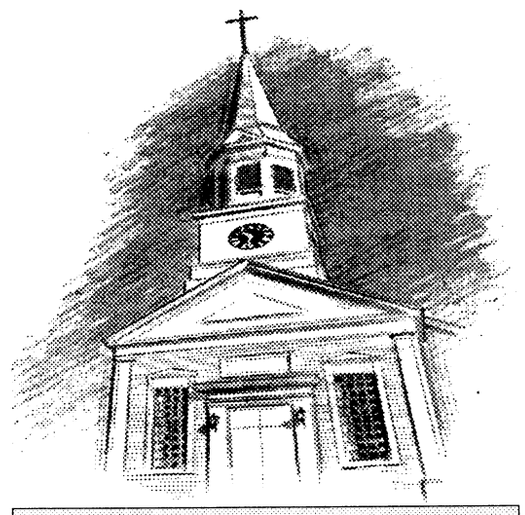
Fishing for God's light

By John R. Houser
Ministry and Pastoral Care, MACH

For almost a month, I had looked forward to the Friday night fishing trip to Lake Harding. Duty and family commitments had kept me from my favorite sport. But finally I had a free night to spend fishing and in spiritual conversation (prayer) with Jesus Christ.



This time of the year, crappie, white bass, hybrids and even an occasional channel catfish can be drawn to a night light. Arriving at the lake, I proceeded to my favorite fishing spot under a bridge that crosses one of the lake's tributaries.

Already, there were many boats fishing with their lanterns lighted and with their floating lights on the water. The boat next to me was catching fish with regularity. I knew this was going to be a night of great fishing.

After fishing for about one hour and having caught about 20 crappie (most of them small), I noticed my floating crappie light was becoming very faint. Then I discovered what will make a night crappie fisherman cry...my battery was dead! My 12-year-old trolling battery could not produce one more ounce of energy.

The two lanterns I had did their best, but they could only draw a few fish. I was outgunned by powerful floating lights from the boats around me.

I finally quit in disgust, took a long ride around the lake and returned home. On the way home, I began to think about how important a car headlight shining in the water is to a night fisherman. Without this light, fishing is poor at best. There is nothing to attract the minnows and small fish; which in turn, attract the large fish.

reflections

Then, I started thinking about what Christ said concerning Christians being the light of the world. In Matthew 5:14-16, He states, "You are the light of the world. A city on a hill cannot be hidden. Neither do people light a lamp and put it under a bowl. Instead they put it on its stand, and it gives light to everyone in the house. In the same way, let your light shine before men, that they may see your good deeds and praise your Father in heaven." (NIV)

If we hide our light, we are worthless. We certainly will not attract others to the Lord Jesus Christ. We might even find ourselves once again aimlessly adrift among a sea of humanity that has totally lost its way in the "dark."

To solve my fishing problem, I bought a replacement battery that should last for many years. All I have to do is keep it charged and maintain its water levels.

If your spiritual light is growing weak or even out, may I make a few suggestions that could strengthen or rekindle your light.

First, recommit your life to Christ, asking him to forgive you of your sins.

Second, establish a program of daily Bible reading and prayer.

Third, attend regularly a military chapel or civilian church of your choice.

Fourth, find a way each day to witness to someone around you.

Fifth, tell Jesus that you love him every morning just as you awaken.

The next time I go night fishing on Lake Harding, I will have a bright shining crappie light that should produce good results. My prayer for you is that after you read this "Field and Stream" spiritual fishing article you will allow your personal spiritual light to shine so that Christ may truly be Lord and Savior of all.

Music in worship

By Bill Putman
USAIC Chaplain Office

This begins a series of articles pertaining to the use of music, instrumental and singing, as it originated in the early church and as its use continues in worship in church today.

From the earliest times, music has played a very vital and important part in man's life. He sings joyful music when he is happy, and he sings somber music when he is sad. In fact, these uses of music are as traditional as eating when he is hungry and apply in most religions and nationalities. While some religions that do not worship the Judeo-Christian God do not use singing, they do use some form of music and musical instruments in worship.

Today we use joyful music in houses of worship when we wish to praise or celebrate, and in seasons such as Lent, when the mood is more subdued, we use somber music. This practice is true not only in American churches, but also in state functions of governments professing God and of those that do not. For example, when a new head of state assumes power, there is joyful music, And when there is a state funeral, the music is somber.

The first reference to musical instruments or instrumentalists is in Genesis, chapter 4. However, in Exodus 15, there is an account of Moses and the Israelites singing a song of praise to God for his triumph over the Egyptians as the sea swallowed them in their pursuit of the Israelites. From that point on, there are numerous accounts of the use of music and singing in praise of God and in worship.

Although the Psalms will be discussed in more detail in a later article, they became the songbook of the Old Testament Church, the New Testament Church, and are still used extensively to this day.

Volumes of instrumental and vocal music have been composed for the specific purpose of worship.

Future articles will deal with the use of music by various faith groups in their particular styles of worship.

Airborne School: Lessons learned during training have ties to all aspects of life

By Kenneth R. Williams
USAIC Chaplain Office

Recently I had the opportunity to attend Airborne School.

Initially, I was only concerned about learning to exit the aircraft and land safely. Not only did I learn about being a "super-duper para-trooper," I also saw some spiritual truths in airborne training.

Sergeant Airborne taught us the five points of performance in parachuting. First, "count and check body position." When you exit the aircraft, assume a tight body position and begin counting to 4,000 by thousands. Your tight body position keeps you from spinning wildly and getting twists in your risers when you exit the aircraft at 150 mph. Similarly, we need to have good, tight spiritual positions as we go through life.

The Bible says, "Set your minds on things above, not on earthly things." (Colossians 3:2 NIV) If we are not focused on the things that really matter, we will be blown about and spun around by whatever distracts us. If we stick to our priorities, we'll avoid the stress of lost opportunities.

The second point of performance is "check canopy and gain canopy control." About the time you count to "4,000," you feel the opening shock of the parachute. You check your canopy for holes, rips, tears, broken suspension lines or broken risers. If there is a major malfunction, use your reserve parachute. Every day, when we jump into life, we need to check our relationship with God and evaluate our standing with him.

The Bible says, "Examine yourselves to see whether you are in the faith; test yourselves. " (2 Corinthians 13:5 NIV) Are there some holes, rips or tears in your relationship with God? Are you far from him, separated from him? He is the one who keeps us afloat and lets us down easy. His spirit enables us to gain control.

reflections

The third point of performance is "keep a sharp lookout on descent." You look out for other jumpers, and hazards. The first step in avoiding these is to slip away by pulling your risers.

The Bible says, "Flee the evil desires of youth and pursue righteousness, faith, love and peace, along with those who call on the Lord out of a pure heart." (2 Timothy 2:22 NIV) Avoid the things that would harm or distract you.

Also, remember the three rules of the air:

1. Look before turning,
2. Slip away to avoid collision, and especially
3. The lower jumper has the right of way.

Sometimes it is easy to criticize others who are less mature, less knowledgeable, or less "whatever" than we are. Harsh criticism is not very helpful to others, or ourselves. We need to look out for others. In our egotism we might end up injuring ourselves as well as others.

The fourth point of performance is "prepare to land." You pull your risers to turn into the wind. Your feet and knees are together with knees slightly bent, to absorb the shock of landing. A saying we sometimes use is, "Just go with the flow." If you go with the flow of the wind you will land, HARD! Don't just go with the flow of the crowd. Be yourself.

The Bible says, "Be on your guard; stand firm in the faith; be men of courage; be strong." (1 Corinthians 16:13 NIV) Be prepared to stand up for your beliefs. Knowing who you are and what you believe in will help you absorb the shocks of life.

The fifth point of performance is "land." Keep your feet and knees together. Your legs are stronger when they are united. Keep your eyes on the horizon. If you look at the ground, you will start reaching for the ground and probably break a leg. In life, there are going to be ups and downs. We will rise and fall! We have to know how to fall.

The Bible says, "Pride goes before destruction, a haughty spirit before a fall." (Proverbs 16:18 NIV) We need to learn humility. When we experience a problem, failure or mistake, we need to focus our attention back on the horizon of our goals and dreams. If we can keep our eyes on our spiritual horizon, the fall is nothing more than an obstacle to overcome. If we focus on our failures, they will injure us and keep us from realizing our goals.

The key to "airborne operations" is mental alertness. The key to "heirborne operations" is spiritual alertness. If you are a child of God, you are his heir and will inherit all the glory of his kingdom. The Bible says, "Now if we are children, then we are heirs — heirs of God and co-heirs with Christ, if indeed we share in his sufferings in order that we may also share in his glory." (Romans 8:17 NIV) Being an heir of God also means that you are caught in spiritual warfare. Be prepared! Be spiritually alert!

Share your faith with others

By Robert Blessing
2nd Battalion, 69th Infantry Regiment

Sharing your beliefs and faith with others is one of the hardest things you may be asked to do as a follower of Jesus. The bravest man or woman can be terror stricken by this simple request.

There are many reasons why this occurs. Some may be that we don't want to push people or be perceived as dumping religion on them; we don't want to face the rejection that they might give us or we don't want to be labeled a fanatic or a weird Christian.

When we read Acts 10:42, we are faced with a dilemma. We are told Jesus commands all of us who believe to share the good news. The dilemma is caused when our fears, concerns and apathy are confronted with Jesus' words to "go and preach the kingdom."

The answer is in Chapter 10 of Acts.

Wait for the Holy Spirit to provide the occasion. Secondly, we are to bring good news to people, not judgment (Acts 10:34-43.)

Demonstrate God's power in the lives of the people to whom you witness.

Be a witness of Jesus and what he has done in your life.

Finally, when they are ready to hear about Jesus, the message to share is simple yet profound.

- God loves them.
- Man sins and hurts God and others.
- Jesus is the way to receive forgiveness for sins.
- We need to receive him as our savior and lord.

AIR FORCE

Airmen proud of support role on post

By Tricia Hovis
Special to The Bayonet

Not everyone stationed at Fort Benning is in the Army. The U.S. Air Force has almost 100 members assigned to Fort Benning to provide the Army with various types of support. Among the Air Force representatives are the 17th Air Support Operations Squadron, instructors at the U.S. Army Infantry Center and the School of the Americas and an Air Mobility Command officer.

The 17th Air Support Operations Squadron consists of two tactical air control parties, which support the 75th Ranger Regiment, 3rd Ranger Battalion, 3rd Brigade, 24th Infantry Division, and a weather flight.

"Our job is to support the Army in any way we can," said Lt. Col. Gerald E. Valentini, Air Force liaison officer, 75th Ranger Regiment.

A tactical air control party consists of Air Force liaison officers and enlisted terminal attack controllers. According to Valentini, the function of a TACP is to advise Army units on capabilities of Air Force fixed wing assets, coordinate with Army fire supporters on how to best use airplanes "to win the fight," and to control fighter bombers and gunships while they are attacking. ETACs maintain radio contact with combat aircraft such as F-16s and AC-130s and provide target information during close air support missions.

"Bottom line, we use airplanes to kill the enemy so more Army guys survive" Valentini said.

Air Force ETAC's assigned to the support the 75th Ranger Regiment are prepared to deploy whenever and wherever the rangers are sent.

"If the rangers jump in and walk 20 miles, we have to jump in and walk 20 miles; we carry our house, our radios on our back," Valentini said.

Maintaining proficiency standards is accomplished by daily rigorous training that might consist of doing an early morning physical training, an afternoon high-altitude low opening jump, followed by three or four days in the woods.

"I have the opportunity to do what very few people in the Air Force do — a chance to work with the best of the best," said Staff Sgt. Roger Hovis, assistant noncommissioned officer in charge of the TACP attached to the 75th Ranger Regiment. "We consider ourselves part of the rangers, yet we maintain our identity as Air Force personnel."

The 3rd Brigade, 24th Infantry Division, TACP's motto is "The war starts today." According to Airman 1st Class Kale Huffman, "We hit what the battalion commander tells us to hit; the targets he declares need to be taken out, which increases chances for the Army to win in any conflict."

Huffman spends time doing PT, practicing jump training and field skills and keeping up his relationship with the Army. He said he especially enjoys being able to go to many of the Army schools as availability permits and looks forward to adding Ranger School to his list of accomplishments.

Air Force Staff Sgt. Jeffrey Wade is stationed at Fort Benning and is responsible for maintaining power generation and communications equipment for the TACPs. He and others assigned to the 17th ASOS maintenance, administrative supply, support the squadron.

The Air Force maintains a 24-hour weather station at Lawson Army Airfield that provides local and flight route weather forecasts. The special operations weather team can give weather information for any country in the world based on years of accumulated data, which helps the Army make the best possible decisions.

Air Force personnel provide academic instruction at the U.S. Army Infantry Center to keep students informed of the latest Air Force techniques and capabilities.

Col. Chick Eagle, AF advisor to the commanding general, is responsible for the academic instruction as well as monitoring any Air Force students attending classes at Fort Benning. Classes taught at U.S. Army Infantry Center are on the officer and advanced NCO level and include such topics as close air support capabilities which is accompanied by a live demonstration.

"This has been a very rewarding, very positive and an excellent opportunity for me" Eagle said. "I wanted to come here because I have a lot of respect for the infantry, airborne and rangers, they really do the lion's share of war fighting."

Col. Rudy Esquivel is the Air Force instructor at the School of the Americas. Esquivel, who is bilingual, teaches in Spanish a similar curriculum regarding Air Force tactics to Latin American officers.

The Air Force also supports the rangers by providing Air Force transportation for various missions through the office of Maj. Marty Potter, the Theatre Airlift Officer stationed at Fort Benning.

The numbers of Air Force personnel at Fort Benning are small, but their mission is essential and their motivation to support he Army is strong.

Air Force Staff Sgt. Robert Arserio and Air Force Staff Sgt. Paul Ford, enlisted terminal attack controllers assigned to the 3rd Ranger Training Battalion, train on a stationary surveillance mission and determine coordinates for an aircraft to destroy targets.

Outprocessing computers make it easier

By Jan Wesner Childs
Special to The Bayonet©

Outprocessing soldiers should face fewer hassles and a shorter wait, thanks to a new computerized system.

Soldiers will no longer have to traipse around to different agencies and offices on post with an outprocessing checklist, according to Sgt. 1st Class Waymon Huling, noncommissioned officer in charge of the program.

Instead, the checklist will be completed via computer at the Welcome Center in Soldiers' Plaza. Also, appointments can now be made for outprocessing.

"The old program was an inconvenience and time consuming for the soldiers," Huling said.

Soldiers must have the following documents to outprocess: company clearing papers, orders and leave authorization form.

It's also recommended that housing and transportation appointments already be made.

Outprocessing must be completed within 10 working days of the soldier's departure date.

If any questions arise about outstanding accounts or other issues during the computer check, the soldier may have to visit another office. But any necessary appointments can be made on the spot via computer.

"We work around their schedule," 1st Lt. Julie Means, officer in charge, said.

Each agency, in turn, has access to the computer files and can check on which soldiers are outprocessing.

A similar system is already in place for inprocessing.

"It kind of goes back to the philosophy of moving data, not soldiers," Sgt. Maj. Allen Thrower said. "It caters to the customer."

The entire process takes about 15 minutes, and appointments can be made by calling 545-7150.

Powell, Walters visit post

By Lisa M. Hibbert
Bayonet staff writer

The home of the infantry provided a scenic backdrop Tuesday for a Barbara Walters and retired Gen. Colin Powell interview scheduled to air on ABC's "20/20" Sept. 15.

Powell, whose book is due out Sept. 16, selected the U.S. Army Infantry Center as the site for his exclusive interview with Walters.

The interview was shot in three different locations on post — the Airborne Memorial, Eubanks Field and the Infantry Museum with a short take at the Infantryman's Statue in front of Infantry Hall.

Before coming to Fort Benning, Powell, Walters and the rest of the crew flew to Jamaica where they conducted interviews on the island. Another interview is planned for Brooklyn, N.Y., at a later date.

Powell served as the 12th chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff from Oct. 1, 1989, to Sept. 30, 1993, under President George Bush and President Bill Clinton.

Powell retired from the Army Sept. 30, 1993.

He last visited the post in 1994 Powell to receive the Doughboy Award.

Independence Day celebration will be Tuesday

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Fort Benning will host an Independence Day celebration Tuesday starting at 2 p.m. on York Field in front of Infantry Hall. The public is invited.

Highlights of the day include a fireworks display at dark, sponsored by AT&T, and a joint performance of the 1812 Overture by the Infantry Band and Battery A, 4th Battalion, 41st Field Artillery Regiment, 3rd Brigade, 24th Infantry Division (Mechanized). Food, drink, rides and games will be available for a nominal fee.

Most military and civilian personnel will observe the holiday and soldiers will have a training holiday Monday. Both days will result in a number of post facilities being closed or operating at reduced hours.

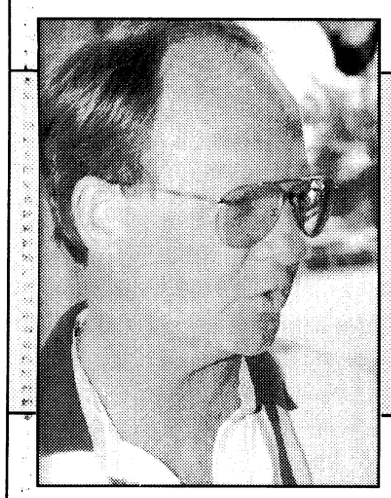
VARIOUS VOICES

What do you think speed limits should be on national highways?

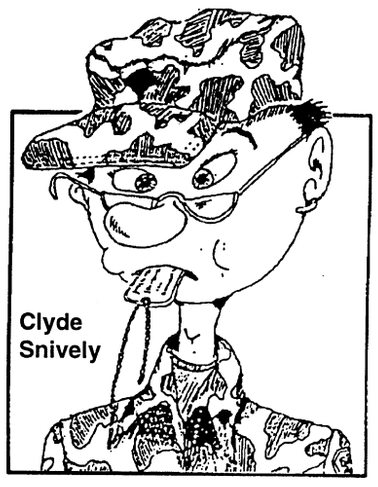
Marine Pvt. Jimmy T. Tekle, Marine Corps Logistics Base, Albany, Ga. — "At least about 60 — most people can't drive that fast."



Sgt. Michael A. Benio, Headquarters and Headquarters Detachment, 324th Forward Support Battalion — "I think it should be 65 mph."

Marine Lance Cpl. Artis L. Beaty, Marine Corps Logistics Base, Albany, Ga. — "I do about 80 mph anyway — maybe raise it to 70 or 75 mph."

Sgt. 1st Class Edward O. DuBose, Company E, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment — "I think it should be 70 to 75 mph. The average person does 70 to 75 anyway and 75 is plenty fast enough."



Perry W. Martin, visitor — "It depends on which highway you are driving — 65 mph is my choice. On two-lane highways — 55."

Speed limits: Take your chances

By Clyde Snively
Bayonet columnist

commentary

Congress is prepared to let the states set their own maximum speed limits. Mighty big of them if you ask me.

I have mixed feelings about this.

I admit, I speed, normally not as much as others — seven to eight mph over the speed limit — and probably will continue to speed if the limit is raised to 75 mph on interstates.

But now, instead of doing 72 in a 65 zone, I'll probably only do 80 in a 75 zone.

I know the people in Atlanta can handle this. They already travel at MACH 2, even in the 55 mph zone in the city, and it's probably why they have so many accidents.

But I'm not sure about Columbus. This is the town where people write letters to the local paper complaining about getting nasty looks for driving the speed limit.

These are the self-anointed keepers of our morals who, to save us from sin, travel a steady 55 mph in the passing lane on the by-pass.

I'd like to emphasize the word, "passing." What it means is that when you come upon vehicles driving slower than you, you pull into the passing lane and pass them.

This lane is not to be used as your private "look at me, I'm upholding the law," zone. And if that is your bent, you deserve nasty looks by those who end up passing in the right lane, probably endangering themselves and others in the process and violating the Snively axiom — "go with the flow."

I do not advocate flashing lights (they're even getting away from this in Germany) or tailgating.

One is particularly annoying and the other dangerous. I'll leave it to you to figure which is which.

Another reason I'm not so sure increasing the speed limit is a good idea is there remains this steadfast reluctance on the majority of drivers to use their turn signals. I notice this applies to law enforcement people too — great role models.

So obviously when a person decides to pull into another lane of traffic without warning someone, he stands a better chance of getting clobbered, which he deserves, but which the clobberer doesn't.

And chances are, given the way the courts work around here, it'll be the clobberer who gets cited, "Hey, he hit me from the rear, man."

Of course not all drivers who fail to signal do so out of meanness, or because they're unaware of what that little stick coming out of the steering column is for.

They often fail to signal because they just don't have enough hands.

After all, how can you be expected to conduct the music on your radio with both hands and use the turn signal too? Or smoke and drink a soda at the same time and still operate the turn signal indicator?

It's just not possible. And there are priorities, signaling being far down the list.

I know traffic enforcers are cringing at the thought of the additional mayhem and carnage they'll have to tend to on the highways.

But then there's the argument used by the German Auto Club when it appeared speed limits would be set for the autobahns. The club said drivers are safer at higher rates of speed because they pay attention and stay alert.

I've seen the wrecks on the autobahns too. They're unsurvivable. And anyone who thinks he doesn't have to stay alert in Georgia to stay alive is dreaming.

Of course a 75 mph speed limit would get us off the most boring piece of interstate ever built quicker (I-185). It'd save us a whole nine minutes.

Does anyone recall the energy crisis?

Intramural sports get support from S.C. Johnson and Son Inc.

The Directorate of Community Activities wishes to thank S.C. Johnson and Son Inc., the makers of Edge Shave Gel, for the generous contribution of $4,000 to sponsor intramural sports programs on Fort Benning for the 1995 to 1996 season.

The sponsorship includes such sports as softball, basketball and flag football.

S. C. Johnson and Son Inc. will provide selected Johnson products to first- and second-place teams.

The sponsor will provide 3,000 samples of skintimate Shave Gel for Women and other products to be given away at the annual July Fourth picnic.

Once again, on behalf of all the soldiers and family members, thank you for your support.

— Alan F. Stewart
Director of Community Activities

DCA thanks Ranger Joe's for sponsorship

The Directorate of Community Activities wishes to thank Ranger Joe's for the generous contribution to sponsor the annual Youth Services Fishing Rodeo.

The event, which took place at Russ Pond June 10 from 9 a.m. to noon, was a great success. More than 250 children and their families attended this event. Prizes were given in five different age categories for the largest fish by weight and the largest string by number.

Thank you again on behalf of all the family members who attended this event.

— Alan F. Stewart
Director of Community Activities

Be safe July Fourth

You are to be commended for your excellent safety record over the Memorial Day weekend. We need to build on this success.

Many families will travel great distances to be with relatives in a traditional renewal of family ties over the holiday. Others may prefer to spend the holiday fishing, boating, swimming or enjoying other outdoor activities, such as those available here.

We must all be alert to the fact that there are many hazards associated with our summertime holiday activities. The accidents that cause the most deaths during this period involve driving and water activities. Ignoring good safety practices costs lives. Fasten seat belts when you are in a vehicle, take frequent rest breaks and always drive sober. Swim only in authorized areas with lifeguards on duty, and, for boaters, wear personal flotation devices while on a boat.

Have fun and enjoy a safe holiday.

— Maj. Gen. John W. Hendrix

dial 545-BOSS

Dial 545-BOSS is the commander's action line for soldiers, family members and civilians to call when they have problems or complaints that can't be resolved elsewhere.

While it is not a substitute for the chain of command or for agencies established to provide assistance, the line offers another means of communication between Fort Benning's community and commanders. The Bayonet features some of the calls that may benefit other members of the Fort Benning community.

Energy Branch's response:
Family Housing residents are authorized to burn their outside lights at night. The purpose of burning these lights are for security and safety.

There are no guidelines in U.S. Army Infantry Center Regulation 11-27 regarding the hours of operation. However, residents should not leave lights on during daylight hours as this is a waste of government funds.

Secretary welcomes new Army chief of staff

I welcome Gen. Dennis J. Reimer as the 33rd chief of staff of the U.S. Army.

Reimer returns to the Pentagon to lead our Army into the next century.

His vision, experience and respect for the soldiers, civilians and family members who contribute to our Army's greatness, make him the right choice for the Army leadership team.

Reimer is eminently qualified for the challenges of leadership. He takes over as the chief of staff following two years as the commanding general of Forces Command, Fort McPherson, Ga.

His earlier assignments included service and command in the United States and overseas, including Vietnam, Germany and Korea.

As a young major he served as aide-de-camp to Gen. Creighton Abrams, then the chief of staff of the Army.

He was a battalion commander in the 4th Infantry Division at the Fort Carson, Colo.; division artillery commander in the 8th Infantry Division in Germany; commanding general, III Corps Artillery at Fort Sill, Okla; commanding general, 4th Infantry Division; chief of staff, Republic of Korea and United States combined field army in Korea; deputy chief of staff for operations and plans, Army staff; and vice chief of staff of the Army.

As Reimer assumes his new post, I know that all the soldiers, active, Guard and Reserve, civilians and family members who work together and compromise our Army, join me in welcoming him as the 33rd chief of staff of the U.S. Army.

Control board can help post residents

Council handles disputes with local establishments

By Marc G. Turchin
Bayonet staff writer

Soldiers and their family members who have had or have problems with local businesses can voice their complaints in an arena that may not be widely known .

The Armed Forces Disciplinary Control Board can act as mediator between residents of the Fort Benning community and local establishments when there is a dispute.

Col. Ronnie D. Alton, post provost marshal and president of the board, called the board a "good tool for soldiers and their family members."

"It is available to the soldiers of Fort Benning (and family members) to record any discrepancies or problems they may be having with a civilian firm in the local community," Alton said.

But, Alton said, coming to the board for help should not necessarily be a person's first choice to reconcile a problem with a local establishment.

He said a person may want to try to solve the problem by his or herself. If this person needs legal help, he or she can seek help through the Staff Judge Advocate's Office. If this person is still not satisfied, then he or she can turn to the board.

To make a complaint with the board, contact the Investigations Department of the Military Police Activity.

According to Alton, this section investigates the complaint and gets both sides of the story.

Investigations is responsible for presenting the complaint before the board.

"Soldiers (and family members) are welcome to be present when the complaint is presented," Alton said. There has been times in the past when the soldier or family member came before the board and presented the case themselves.

Alton said one thing people need to understand is the board may end up siding with the establishment.

"It may be that we understand what the firm is saying," he said.

But if a firm has had numerous complaints against it and has not improved the way it treats post residents, Alton said, the board may decide to put that firm on an off-limits list, which prohibits soldiers and family members from associating with that firm.

"The Armed Forces Disciplinary Control Board would notify that firm that they are in jeopardy of being placed off limits," Alton said.

To place a business off limits, Alton said, five voting members of the board must agree to put a firm on the list. The request then goes to the commanding general for approval.

The five voting members are from the Health Services at Martin Army Community Hospital, Criminal Investigation Division, Robbins Air Force Base, Columbus Naval Reserve Center and Alton.

Although there are many other members of the board, these are the only voting members. The number of board members can change depending on what issues are being discussed. One important member of the board is a representative from the Better Business Bureau. Alton said the representative makes recommendations to the board about issues.

If an establishment is put on the off-limits list, Alton said the firm is not there permanently. If the firm's relationship with the post community improves, it can be taken off the list.

Alton said in most cases businesses are more than willing to work out a solution.

"We try to work with the community to see if there is something we can do prior to going to that drastic step," Alton said.

BDU supplies to increase

Defense Personnel Supply Center

All services are experiencing a shortage of hot weather battle dress uniform trousers. Increased demand for military operations and contractual defaults by a major manufacturer depleted the Defense Personnel Supply Center's inventory.

DPSC, the sole provider for BDUs, began awarding new contracts in December to take up the slack. Now manufacturers are exceeding monthly quotas and expect significant improvements by August.

Training centers are receiving priority and will not have difficulties obtaining HWBDU trousers. DPSC is currently filling back orders and expects the shortage to continue through this summer at Military Clothing Sales Stores and Army, Air Force, Navy and Marine Corps depots.

Of the available 21 sizes, the majority of back orders are in nine sizes, with three sizes most severely affected are medium-regular, small-short and small-regular.

Over the summer, DPSC will transition to a new Enhanced HWBDU uniform approved by the Army in 1992. The new uniform features "longer wearing" 50 percent cotton and 50 percent nylon, vs. the current 100 percent cotton uniform.

MCSSs expect to begin receiving the new enhanced HWBDUs by October or November.

DoD allocates $$$ for Gulf War health problems

By Evelyn D. Harris
American Forces Information Service

The Department of Defense is awarding $5 million to universities, hospitals and research institutions to study ailments affecting Persian Gulf war veterans.

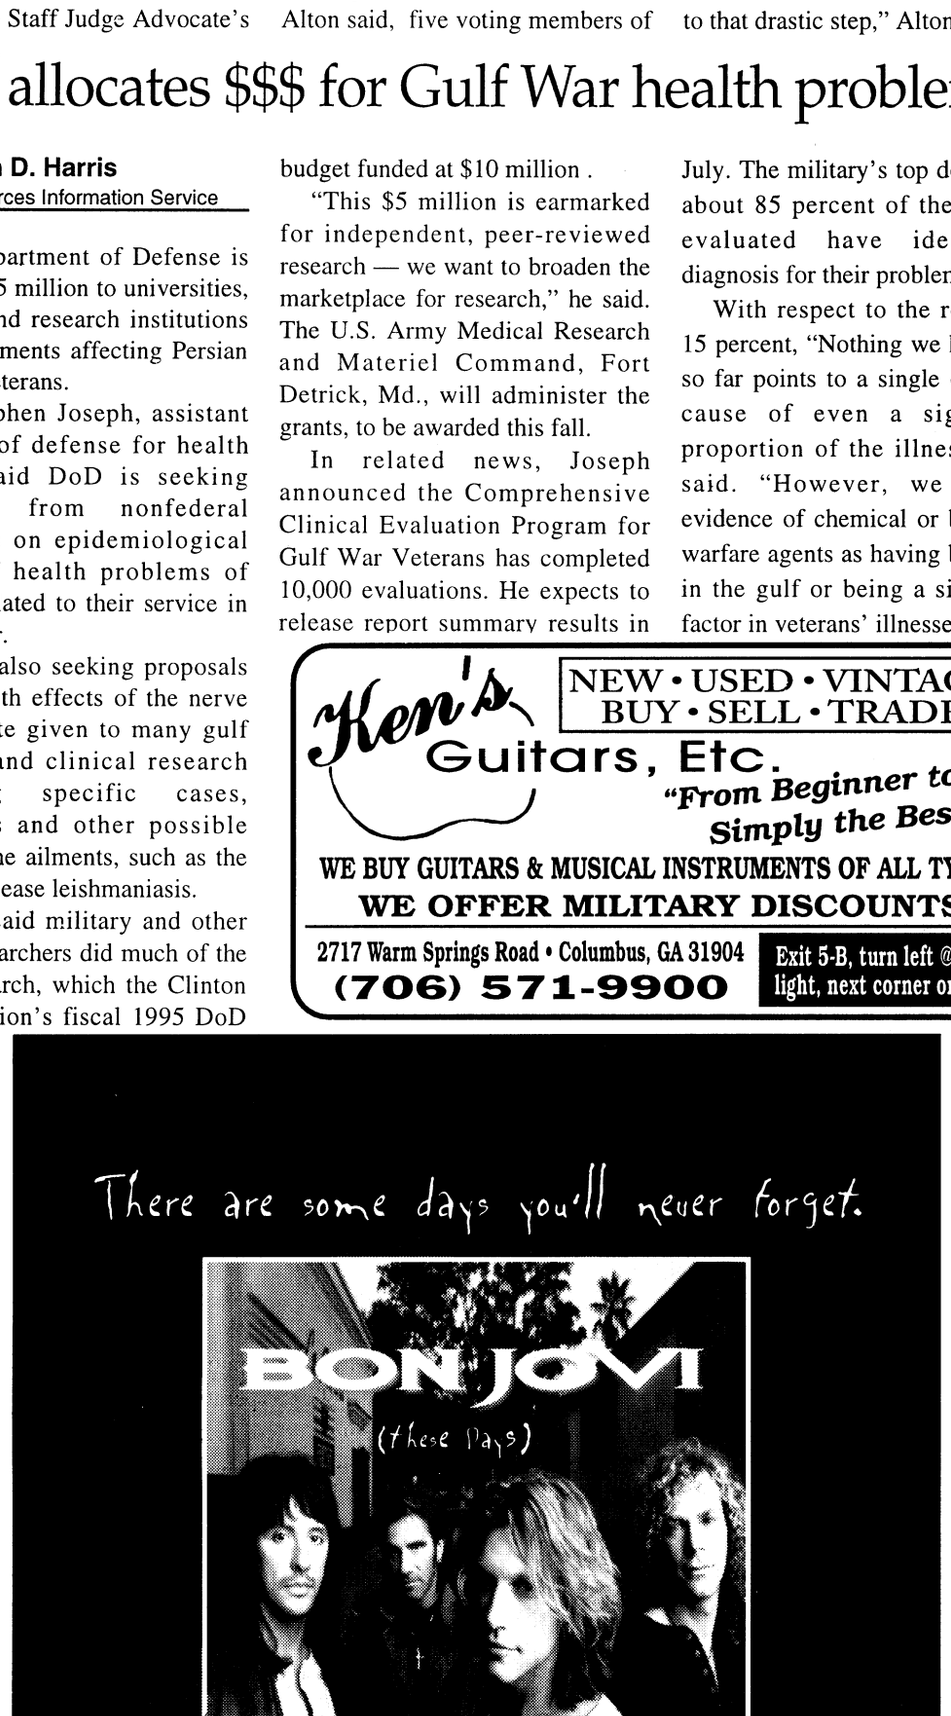
Dr. Stephen Joseph, assistant secretary of defense for health affairs, said DoD is seeking proposals from nonfederal applicants on epidemiological studies of health problems of veterans related to their service in the gulf war.

DoD is also seeking proposals on the health effects of the nerve gas antidote given to many gulf war vets and clinical research examining specific cases, treatments and other possible causes of the ailments, such as the parasitic disease leishmaniasis.

Joseph said military and other federal researchers did much of the initial research, which the Clinton administration's fiscal 1995 DoD budget funded at $10 million .

"This $5 million is earmarked for independent, peer-reviewed research — we want to broaden the marketplace for research," he said. The U.S. Army Medical Research and Materiel Command, Fort Detrick, Md., will administer the grants, to be awarded this fall.

In related news, Joseph announced the Comprehensive Clinical Evaluation Program for Gulf War Veterans has completed 10,000 evaluations. He expects to release report summary results in July. The military's top doctor said about 85 percent of the patients evaluated have identifiable diagnosis for their problems.



With respect to the remaining 15 percent, "Nothing we have seen so far points to a single or unique cause of even a significant proportion of the illnesses," he said. "However, we see no evidence of chemical or biological warfare agents as having been used in the gulf or being a significant factor in veterans' illnesses."

Retirees to get tax refund

Georgia Department of Revenue

The Department of Revenue will issue the first of four yearly refund checks Oct. 15 to one group of eligible federal and military retirees, and administer a 45-day filing window from Nov. 1 to Dec. 15 for a second group of filers before issuing their first refund checks in October 1996, Georgia Department of Revenue Commissioner Marcus E. Collins Sr. said.

The retiree refunds are based on income taxes wrongly paid by Georgia residents on pension income during the tax years 1985 through 1988.

Legislation, House Bill 90 and House Bill 3, was signed by Gov. Zell Miller.

House Bill 90 provides a payment plan for retirees who filed refund claims in a timely manner for the years 1985, 1986, 1987 and 1988.

Claims will be refunded in four yearly installments beginning Oct. 15.

Interest will be calculated at 7 percent simple interest. The unpaid balance will continue to accrue interest. The interest paid will not be subject to Georgia income taxes but it will be subject to federal income tax.

The attorneys who litigated on behalf of the retirees will be paid 15 percent of the total payment, which will be retained for their fees.

Written notice explaining the details of the installment payments will be mailed in October.

There are provisions for appeals.

Any retiree who wants to confirm that he or she is on file with the DOR can call 1-(800)-817-1858 (outside Atlanta but within Georgia) and 404-657-6881 (outside the state of Georgia).

Any filer on record with the DOR under House Bill 90 who has not filed for all years he is eligible for can refile during House Bill 3's 45-day window of opportunity.

This bill affects any eligible federal or military retiree who has not filed an amended return for one or more of the years from 1985 to 1988.

This bill gives retirees from Nov. 1 to Dec. 15, only to file amended returns for the years for which they are eligible.

The claims will be refunded in four yearly installments beginning Oct. 15, 1996.

The total refund amount for House Bill 90 is calculated to be $109 million, including interest.

21st century presents security challenges

By Linda D. Kozaryn
American Forces Information Service

> "The end of communism has opened the door to the spread of weapons of mass destruction and lifted the lid on age-old conflicts rooted in ethnic, racial and religious hatreds."
> — Bill Clinton
> President of the United States

Protecting America will be a more complex undertaking in the 21st century than in the past, President Bill Clinton said during commencement at the Air Force Academy in Colorado Springs.

"In World War II, the objective was simple: Win the war," he said. "In the Cold War, the objective was clear: Contain communism and prevent nuclear war.

In the post-Cold War world, the objectives are often more complex, and it is clear that American security in the 21st century will be determined by forces that are operating both beyond and within our own borders."

Clinton outlined three security priorities. The first is combating terrorism, organized crime and drug trafficking. The second seeks to reduce the threat of nuclear, chemical and biological weapons of mass destruction. The third is to provide the military with the resources, training and strategic direction necessary to do their jobs.

Dramatic reduction of the nuclear threat, former adversaries turning from conflict to cooperation, and emerging democracies and market economies characterize a moment of enormous hope, Clinton said.

But, he said, the "worldwide thirst for freedom and democracy, a growing commitment to market economics, a technological revolution that moves information, ideas, money and people around the globe at record speed ... have a dark underside."

"The end of communism has opened the door to the spread of weapons of mass destruction and lifted the lid on age-old conflicts rooted in ethnic, racial and religious hatreds," he said. "These forces can be all the more destructive today because they have access to modern technology."

The war in Bosnia is an example of destructive forces and disintegration, according to Clinton.

He said the administration's efforts to relieve suffering and end the conflict include conducting the longest humanitarian airlift in history and using U.S. air power to protect U.N. forces and safe areas.

The United States is also continuing diplomatic efforts for a peace settlement and has deployed U.S. troops to Macedonia as part of the U.N. force.

Clinton said recent NATO air attacks the United Nations requested were in response to the "medieval barbarism" of the Bosnian Serbs unleashing 1,400 shells on the civilians of Sarajevo. He said the United States is working with its allies to develop a coordinated response to the Serb hostage taking.

The United States has obligations to its NATO allies, Clinton said, and cannot leave them in the lurch.

If necessary, and after consultation with Congress, U.S. troops should be prepared to support a U.N. withdrawal from Bosnia, he said.

Prior to the air strikes and resultant hostage-taking, Secretary of Defense William J. Perry announced up to 25,000 troops, primarily from units stationed in Europe, would be involved if the United Nations withdraws.

Clinton also stated U.S. troops would help with a "reconfiguration and strengthening" of U.N. forces in Bosnia. This statement caused confusion among the media.

In his weekly radio address June 3, Clinton stressed U.S. ground troops would be used only if there is a genuine peace and the United States is part of policing that peace; if U.N. forces decide to withdraw and they cannot withdraw in safety; and in the highly unlikely event "that Britain, France and other countries — with their considerable military strength and expertise — become stranded and could not get out of a particular place in Bosnia."

"If a U.N. unit needs an emergency extraction, we would assist after consulting with Congress," Clinton said. "This would be a limited, temporary operation. We have not been asked to do this. I think it is highly unlikely that we would be asked to do this. But I do believe that these people who have put themselves at risk are entitled to know that the United States will stand with them if they need help to move to safety."

The foundation of U.S. security, Clinton said, is the men and women of the armed forces.

'You put the steel into our diplomacy," Clinton said. 'You get the job done when all means short of force have been tried and fail. All over the world you have met your responsibilities with skill and professionalism, keeping peace, making peace, saving lives, protecting American interests. In turn your country has a responsibility to make sure you have the resources, the flexibility, the tools you need to do the job."

AFTB opens new building

By Richard Brill
Special to The Bayonet©

A ribbon-cutting ceremony Tuesday marked the grand opening of the Army Family Team Building Program's newly renovated facility in Soldiers' Plaza.

The event heralded the completion of a self-help project that saw the complete renovation of the second story interior of Building 2624, which will serve as the administrative headquarters and master trainer classroom for the AFTB program.

"Today we celebrate the opening of a building, which represents 10 months of planning, coordinating and renovating by soldiers, civilians and volunteers," Claudia Phillips, post AFTB leader, said.

"This self-help renovation project has involved a great number of post offices and personnel in terms of funding, resources and manpower. It has called upon countless soldiers, many brand new to the Army, as well as those with the needed expertise, who have provided the knowledge and the muscle to get the job done. And it has included volunteers who have weeded, watered and spruced up in preparation for today's ceremony."

The AFTB program provides soldiers and family members with training designed to foster self-reliance, which will better prepare families for times when a family member is deployed, whether in peacetime or during war, Col. Richard L. Rutledge, garrison commander, said.

"Sixty percent of our Army is married," Rutledge said. "What this is about is readiness. This is about families taking care of themselves when soldiers go to war. This is about volunteers, symbolized by Claudia and the great master trainers and others who put this building together, and their investment in us to go do our mission."

Fort Benning's facility is only the second in the Army, and the only post with a building completely dedicated to AFTB activities, he said.

Cheri Hendrix, wife of Commanding General Maj. Gen. John W. Hendrix and Col. Gregory C. Camp, Chief of Staff. Cut the ceremonial ribbon as Phillips and AFTB master trainers looked on.

Phillips thanked the Directorate of Community Activities, the 11th Infantry Regiment, the 1st Battalion (Airborne), 507th Infantry; Army Community Service, the Infantry Training Brigade, the 30th Adjutant General Battalion (Reception), the Hendrixes and Rutledge for their support of the self-help project.

WEAR 'EM

Bike helmets mandatory

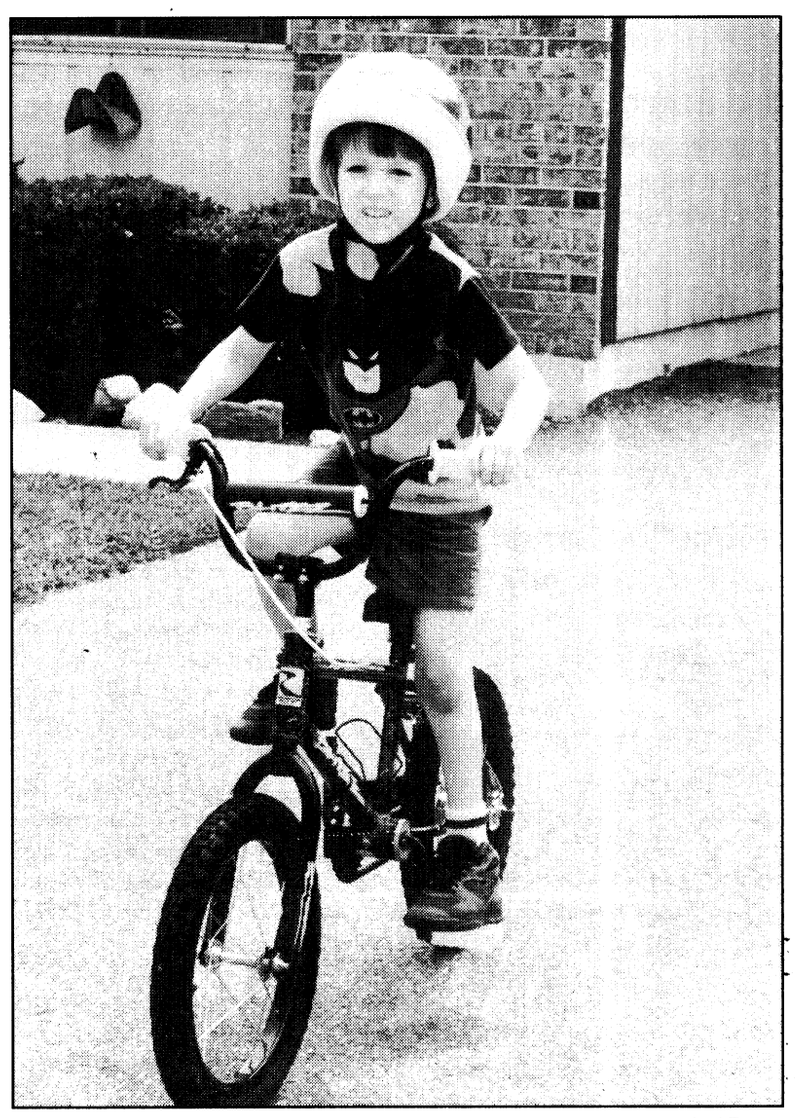
By Lori Egan
Bayonet staff writer

Fort Benning Military Police are now enforcing a new Army regulation requiring the mandatory wear of bicycle helmets.

The U.S. Army Safety Center has just made the mandatory use of bicycle helmets official. Army Regulation 385-55 directs military personnel to wear an approved bicycle helmet when bike riding, both on and off post and everyone who rides their bike on a federally owned installation is required to wear a helmet.

An approved helmet is one that meets or exceeds the American National Standards Institute or the Snell Memorial Foundation Standards for bicycle helmets, according to the regulation.

Sgt. 1st Class Eddie Cosby, Law Enforcement Division non-commissioned officer in charge, doesn't foresee problems with enforcing the regulation.



"Because we're going to have MPs out anyway," he said. "When they observe an infraction, (they) will take the appropriate actions."

The MPs have already started to issue warnings, Cosby said.

Cosby anticipates parental support for the regulation.

"This regulation is coming down for one simple reason — safety. All parents want their kids to be safe," he said.

"The only problem I see is that it is going to take awhile to get the information disseminated, so that everyone knows," Cosby said.

Lori Egan

Jonathan J.C. Allen, 5, son of Master Sgt. Ron and Ann Allen, remembers to wear his helmet while biking.

According to the old regulation, helmets had to be worn by youths, 16 and under; now everyone needs to wear them, Cosby said. Even young children riding in bike seats need to wear a helmet while riding behind their parents.

Self-help store to close for the holiday

The Self-Help store, Loan Equipment Section, Venetian and Shade and administrative office will be closed Monday and Tuesday to observe the July Fourth holiday.

63rd Eng conducting quarry operations

The 63rd Engineers will be conducting quarry operations Saturday to July 30 on Marne Road to 10th Mountain Division Road to haul fill material to complete the culvert repair near the Defense Reutilization and Marketing Office. Caution should be exercised because of heavy truck traffic in this area.

3rd Bde to change commanders July 18

The 3rd Brigade, 24th Infantry Division (Mechanized), will have a change of command ceremony July 18 at 9 a.m. on York Field. Col. Michael Deegan will relinquish command to Col. Steven P. Schook.

July Fourth trash collection schedule

There will be no trash and recycle collection picked up on the federal holiday, July Fourth. Family housing trash and recycle collection normally scheduled for Tuesday will be picked up Monday.

All other family housing areas scheduled to be picked up on Wednesday through Friday will be picked up as normally scheduled. There will be no yard waste collection Monday. Yard waste will be picked up the following Monday, as scheduled.

For more information, call the Construction Inspection Branch at 545-4749.

Mayors' Council to meet third Weds

Mayors' Council meetings with the installation staff will take place the third Wednesday of each month at 9:30 a.m. at Infantry Hall, Room 550. If your designated representative is unable to attend, an alternate must be provided. You will be notified in advance of any changes or cancellations. Meeting dates are July 19, Aug. 16, Sept. 20, Oct. 18 and Nov. 15.

Controlled burning set

Controlled burning of woodland areas will take place through July 8.

If weather permits, the following compartments may be affected: D-2, F-4, O-1, O-4, V-3, W-3, X-1 and T-6.

Burning will occur in pine stands within these compartments to enhance endangered species habitat and training areas. People using these areas for recreation must leave before 9:30 a.m. daily.

Training units using compartments next to these areas are reminded to exercise caution while traveling in these areas because of the potential for reduced visibility. Units using the ranges and training areas are reminded to remove flammable debris, such as, pinestraw, leaves, grass and trash from around structures in accordance with USAIC Regulation 210-4, Paragraph 5-22, Organizational Maintenance.

For more information, call 544-6206.

Siren system to be tested first Saturdays

The installation siren system will be tested at noon the first Saturday of each month. Units and activities listed will monitor siren testing and notify the field officer of the day and their staff duty officer at 545-5135 or 545-5245 within 30 minutes after each test and report the operational status of the sirens. Sirens will not be tested in the event of bad weather.

TIC employee wins television

USAIC Public Affairs Office

A member relations supervisor for the TIC Federal Credit Union located at Fort Benning recently won a 52-inch big screen television.

Sonya Saxton won the prize from the Cellular One "It's So Easy" Drawing, which took place at the end of May.

"It's absolutely wonderful!" Saxton said. "I was surprised because I've never won anything like this before. I was on vacation when Cellular One called my office. Then someone from my office called to tell me I had won something. I forgot what I had signed up for, so the next day I called to find out. I couldn't believe it!"

Saxton, who lives in Cataula, Ga., said the television was delivered to her parents' home last week.

"I don't have cable where I live and we only get five channels," she said. "So why have a 52-inch television for just five channels? My parents live in Columbus, which has cable so we thought they could get more use out of it."

Cellular One collected more than 200,000 entries in two months from stores in Georgia and Alabama.

Rifleman takes World Cup medals

By Deanna Kussman
U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit

Capt. Glenn Dubis's recent trip to Europe was not a vacation, but it was more rewarding than any vacation could be. Dubis, a soldier with the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit, captured a Silver in 3x40 free rifle at the International Shooting Union's Munich World Cup and a Bronze Medal in the men's free rifle prone event at the Milan World Cup.

Dubis shot 1,169 in the 3x40 event in Munich, a score high enough to enter despite trouble in the standing phase of the event.

"Sometimes you get into position, and it doesn't feel good," Dubis said of his trouble.

In the finals, Dubis shot a high 99.0, bringing his total score to 1269.0 and snagging the silver medal.

"When I got into standing for the final, I felt great," Dubis said of his Silver Medal win. "The position felt good. I actually had fun."

In Milan, Dubis shot 595 during the 60-shot prone match to make his way with seven other men to the finals. The 10-shot final raised his score to 699.1 and secured him the Bronze.

"I shot a solid final, with no extremes either way," Dubis said.

Dubis, a two-time Olympic team member, also placed fourth in men's air rifle on Milan with a score of 692.9.

"This spring I've been concentrating on these World Cups," Dubis said. "I'm happy it turned out well."

"He's working really hard toward the '96 Olympic trials," said D.I. Boyd, USAMU chief of competition. "He's making steady progress toward the top, which is evidenced by his performance in Milan. He's aiming to peak at the Olympics."

USAMU international rifle coach, Bill Krilling said, "We were counting on Dubis to win a medal. Glenn was working hard; apparently it worked well for him. He's always really positive in what he does. I'm expecting several of our people to be in the Olympics — he's one of them."

"This was my first big success of the year," Dubis said. "I'm hungry to go on to more competitions."

Dubis's next match is the USA Shooting National Championships in Chino, Calif. Following that, the World Military Champion for three years running will defend his title in the Conseil International Du Sport Militaire in Rome, Italy.

Capt. Glenn Dubis of the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit won two medals, a Silver and a Bronze, in international World Cups.

Army marksmen capture Crystal Cup honors

By Deana Kussman
USAMU Public Affairs Office

Hours of training every day have paid off for international pistol shooters from the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit, who dominated the competition at the Crystal Cup, June 14 to 19 in Lyndon, Washington.

USAMU Capt. Rhonda Bright was the match winner in the women's sport pistol with a 576; Amy L. Szarenski placed second with 571.

Spc. Carl Trompeter fired his way to the Gold in the men's air pistol with a score of 585.

Spc. Chad Harreld placed second in center fire, shooting a 570. Trompeter also placed second in both men's free pistol, shooting a 529 and standard pistol with a 559.

Gold in the men's rapid fire event went to Sgt. Ronald Watts, who shot a 579. Harreld placed second in the rapid fire event.

"This match gave us a chance to look at all the training we've done," Sgt. 1st Class Robert Yates, International Pistol team noncommissioned officer-in-charge, said. "The Crystal Cup is important to maintain our competitive edge. It keeps us in the heat of things, puts us in a pressure situation where we have to perform."

Marlene Tikal

Spc. Carl Trompeter and the rest of the USAMU pistol team dominate the Crystal Cup.

"I'm happy with the results," Bright said. "I'm looking forward to continuing the performance at Nationals."

The Crystal Cup is a tune up for the Nationals, the next match in which the USAMU pistol shooters will compete, Yates said.

"Nationals is a tough competition," he said. "We did well last year, winning both the women's and the men's air pistol championship titles. We're looking to bring them home again."

"It was an excellent training match for the upcoming Olympic selection match," Trompeter said.

Yates says that Bright shows definite promise for a good showing at Nationals.

"We're really looking forward to what she can do," Yates said.

Nationals, which started Thursday, will be through July 8 in Chino, Calif.

Young, old wrestlers compete at Doughboy competition

Competition conducted as part of festival

By Marc G. Turchin
Bayonet staff writer

The 1995 Doughboy Wrestling Competition was conducted Saturday at Briant Wells Field House.

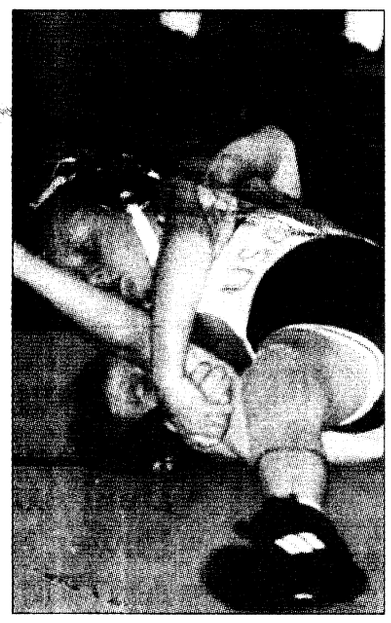
More than 75 children, soldiers and civilians turned out to compete. Others turned out to or just to watch the competition.

The tournament was also part of the 1995 Southwest District Sports Festival, Georgia State Games.

Weigh-ins for the tournament began at 7:30 a.m. By 8:45, all the competitors sat down for a free clinic on freestyle and Greco Roman wrestling.

Sgt. Derrick Waldroup, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 29th Infantry Regiment, who is currently ranked second in the country in international freestyle wrestling, began the clinic. Spc. Rodney Smith, Adjutant General Replacement Detachment, also conducted the clinic. Smith won the Bronze Medal for wrestling at the 1992 Olympic Games in Barcelona, Spain.

Waldroup covered freestyle wrestling and Smith talked about Greco Roman.



After the clinic, the weight classes were finalized and were posted on a wall near the scorer's table for everyone to see.

The classes were:

- Midget
- Cadet junior
- Novice cadet
- Open

"The purpose of this program here today is to bring about an awareness of our sport — freestyle wrestling," Smith said, following the clinic. "A lot of the young kids here may be some of our potential champions of the future."

"I think it's (the tournament) just more of a fun thing and a learning experience to kind of have some foundation to go on for the high school wrestling programs or college wrestling programs," Waldroup said.

Marc G. Turchin

Brian McGahee, 9, (in red) tries to pin Craig Brooks, 10, in first-round action.

Smith spoke about the necessity of tournaments like this one.

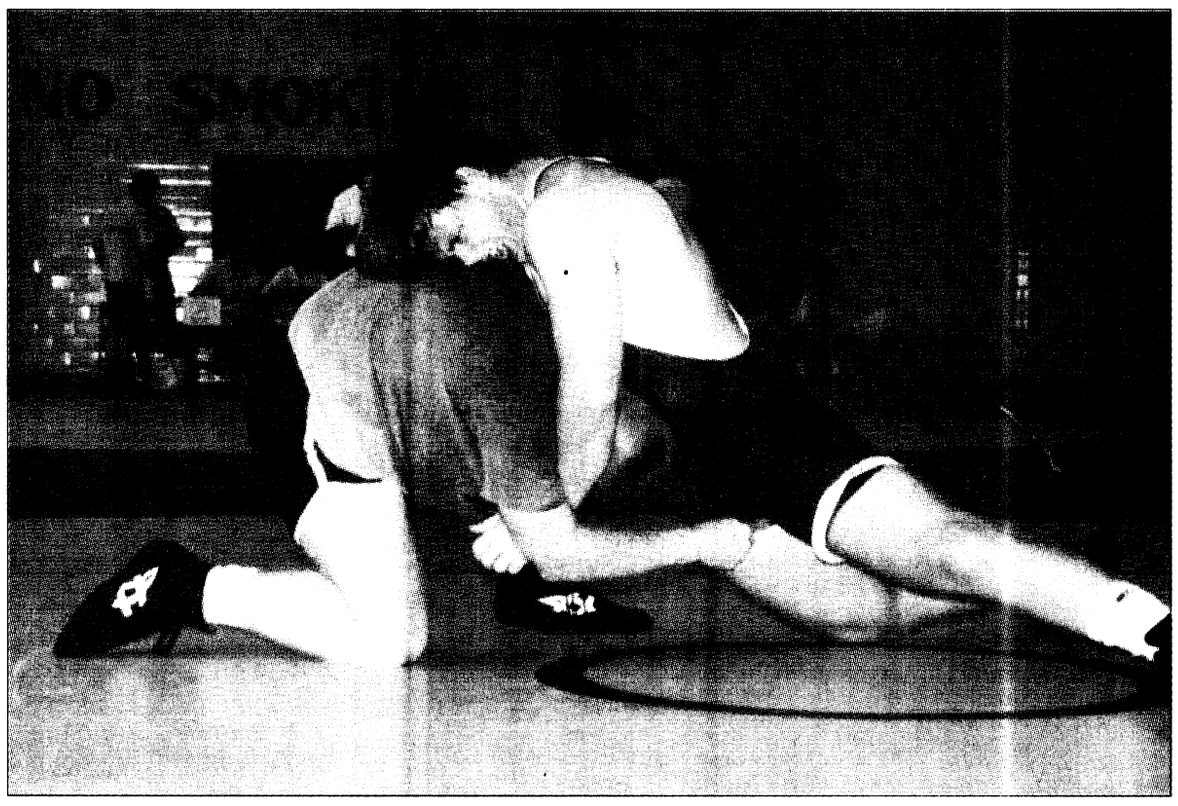
"It is important that we have feeder programs like this to expose these young athletes to wrestling," Smith said.

"Each tournament for each young athlete is a stepping stone," Smith said. "Here may be a start for someone great today."

Todd Kuehnliein, a U.S. Military Academy cadet here for cadet troop training with the 988th Military Police Company, took second in his weight class. This was his first time competing in freestyle wrestling.

"I didn't do so bad for not wrestling for five weeks," he said after winning his first match. He said, "You can stay in shape, but nothing compares to mat time."

Kuehnliein said he is used to having three separate periods in which to wrestle. In this competition, there was only one period.



The winners for each category were:

Military cyclists to compete at world games in Rome

By Stephen Barrett
American Forces Information Service

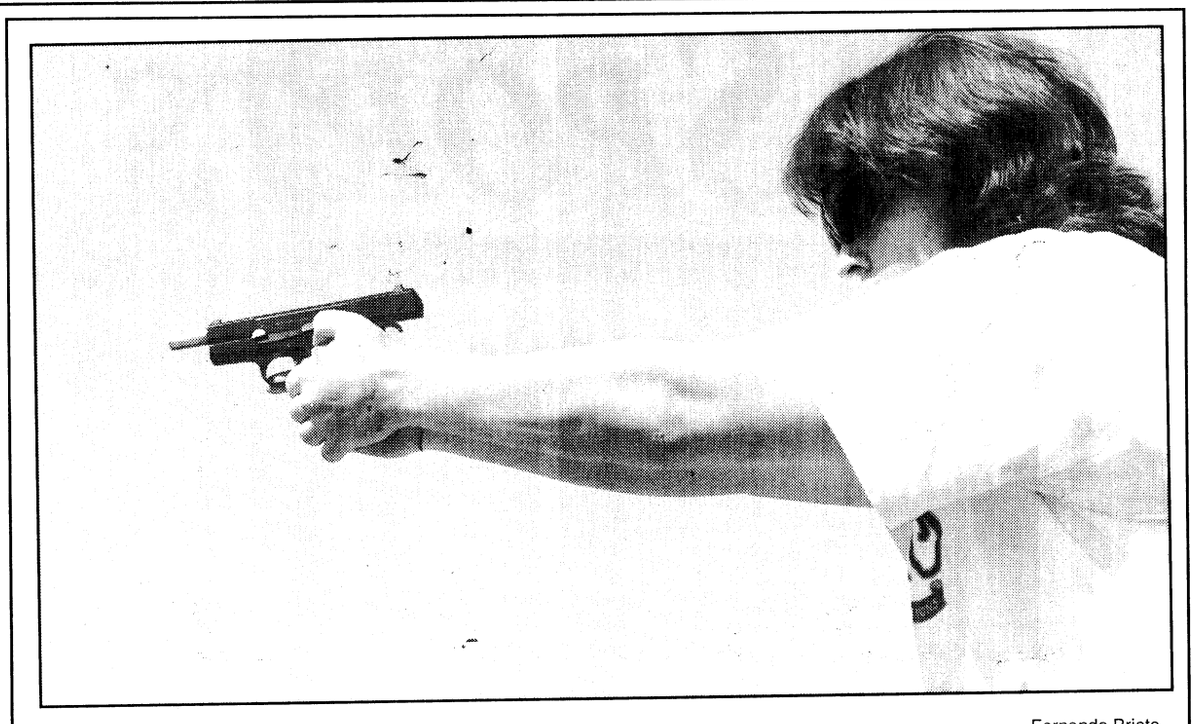
Stateside military cyclists vying for a spot on the U.S. military cycling team qualified Saturday and Sunday at the 1995 Armed Forces National Cycling Championships, Little Rock Air Force Base, Ark.

Held in conjunction with a U.S. Cycling Federation event, military cyclists competed against regional riders.

Events included a 14-mile time trial, a 25-lap sprint and an 80-mile road race.

Top military racers received invitations to train with the armed forces team at the U.S. Air Force Academy in Colorado Springs, Colo.

While in Colorado, stateside qualifiers will train with and compete against winners of the Armed Forces European championships at Sembach Air Base, Germany.



Cyclists awarded team spots will then compete at the first Conseil International du Sport Militaire world games in Rome. Those games begin Sept. 4, with cycling competition lasting six days.

Although all active duty service members competed in Little Rock, the competition was not a DoD-sanctioned sporting event.

However, competitors selected for the armed forces camp receive assistance from their services.

According to Maj. Joe Mazzola of Air Force Sports Office, members earning spots for the CISM games will receive full DoD support.

This includes things like transportation costs for training and competitions and lodging.

Shoot 'em up

Female competitor Alexandra Smith takes her turn firing during the Tactical Pistol shoot recently. James Odom was the overall winner for the competition with a score of 157 and a hit factor of 3.255. The event was split into five categories — standard, military, law enforcement, female and revolver.

crime watch

Military Police Activity

This week's hot topic concerns housebreaking. Several instances of housebreaking have occurred on post during the last few months.

Many of these crimes occurred during daylight hours and, in some cases, neighbors either saw or heard something out of the ordinary but did not call the Military Police. The most effective deterrent to crime in the housing areas are neighbors watching out for each other. Even with the Community-Oriented Police Squad continuously patrolling the housing areas 24 hour a day, seven days a week, the possibility of an MP being at the exact location of a break-in when it occurs is highly unlikely.

The community needs to assist the Military Police in fighting crime on Fort Benning. If you observe or hear something out of the ordinary, regardless of what time of day it is, call the MP station and report it. It's far better for the MPs to respond and find that someone returned early from vacation than to receive a call a few days later that someone has had all their possessions stolen by someone who broke into their quarters.

TAKE A BITE OUT OF CRIME

The following entries were extracted from the Fort Benning Military Police blotters. Such entries may be incomplete and do not determine the guilt or innocence of anyone.

• A staff sergeant was charged with failure to drive on roadway laned for traffic and driving under the influence of alcohol. While on routine patrol, the MPs observed a vehicle leave the roadway, drive on the shoulder and return to the road. A traffic stop was made and a strong odor of a alcohol was detected.

The soldier was then administered a field sobriety test which he failed. He then was transported to the MP station and administered a breathalyzer test with a result of .248. The soldier was issued suspension of post driving privileges and released to his unit.

• A private first class was charged with shoplifting. He was observed removing a pair of sunglasses from the display shelf and placing the item in his front pocket. He then exited the store without rendering proper payment at which time he was detained. Upon arrival of the MPs, he was apprehended and transported to the MP station where he was issued identification card confiscation orders, suspension of Post Exchange privileges and released to his unit.

Other activities include six cases of driving under the influence of alcohol, six traffic accidents, four cases of larceny and four cases of shoplifting.

Remember to help "Make Our Post The Best-Give Crime Arrest." Report any activity that seems wrong or out of place to the Military Police at 545-5223 or 545-5224 or the "Crime In Progress" line at 545-5222.

ask the judge

Staff Judge Advocate's Office

Q: I put some lamps on layaway at a local store in March. I had made several payments when my girlfriend told me that it wasn't such a good idea for me to move in right now. She wants to concentrate on school.

I don't have room in the barracks for the lamps so I decided to stop my layaway purchase.

The store did cancel my layaway, but kept one-half of my money as a "cancellation" charge. They did have some signs at the layaway counter that mentioned they could do this, but it isn't fair. They got $30 of mine and the lamps. Is it legal for the store to keep my money?

A: Layaways can be a problem for consumers. The first thing you must realize is that a layaway is not a purchase. You and the store are agreeing to a plan where you select merchandise to purchase, and the store holds that merchandise for you until you make final payment.

Problems usually arise during the time the merchandise is still being held by the store and you are still paying. During this time, the merchandise is the store's and you must abide by any reasonable rule that the store makes in regard to the layaway.

In this case, the store had a the merchandise and a portion of your payments should you cancel the layaway. This may not seem fair, but it is legal.

There is no federal or Georgia law that specifically regulates layaways. As long as the store does not use unfair or deceptive sales practices, the store is free to make its own rules in regard to layaways.

To protect yourself, you must make sure you know and understand all the store's rules. Make sure you know the refund policy. Keep good records of the description of the merchandise and of all your payments. If you have questions, call the Legal Assistance Division at 545-3281.

Dual income: do you really need it?

Georgia Society of Certified Public Accountants Inc.

The need to care for children or elderly parents, among other reasons, has caused many dual-income households to seriously consider having one member walk away from a good job and a reliable salary. According to the Georgia Society of CPAs, living on one income may not be as difficult as you think. That's because many two-income families overestimate the real value of a second income. Much of the financial advantage of two incomes can be eroded by expenses associated with dual careers.

Here's how to estimate the value of that second income. First, determine the taxes you pay on the two combined incomes. Then, compute the taxes on the one income you would keep. Subtract the difference.

Once you determine the after-tax value of the second income, deduct the costs associated with earning that second salary such as child care, commuting, clothing and lunch expenses. You may also want to subtract costs associated with conveniences that help you cope with being a dual-career family. For example, many two-income families find themselves spending a great deal of money for housecleaning, laundry services, landscaping and restaurant and take-out meals. If a spouse stays at home, these expenses often can be cut by at least half. Once these expenses are deducted from your second income, you may be surprised at what you're left with. The couple who thought they were bringing home an extra $15,000 in earnings, may discover that they end up with $5,000 or $6,000 of disposable income.

Of course, the effect of giving up a second income depends on your family's financial situation. It may mean you need to put your college savings or retirement funding plans on hold for a while. It may even require occasionally dipping into your savings.

CPAs offer the following learn-to-live-on-less strategies:

• Slash insurance costs by raising deductibles on your homeowner's and auto insurance policies. Drop collision coverage on a car that is paid for or more than 5 years old.

• Change your health insurance from a traditional indemnity plan to a plan offered by a health maintenance organization or similar organization.

• Watch your utility bills. Turn off lights and appliances when they're not in use.

• Limit the number of credit cards you use to one or two, and keep consumer debts and credit card charges to a minimum.

• Join a carpool or take public transportation to work.

• Develop new spending habits. Curtail your entertainment costs by opting for less expensive vacations and dining in more frequently. Instead of going to the movies, rent a video. Instead of buying books, take them out of the library.

Before you or your spouse relinquish a job, be certain you have set aside at least six months worth of living expenses in an emergency fund. You'll want to be sure you can easily withdraw money from the fund and keep it separate from your other savings.

29TH INFANTRY REGIMENT

Outgoing commander touts teamwork

By Ruth J. Spaller
Bayonet staff writer

The 29th Infantry Regiment changed command in a ceremony on Dickman Field June 23, welcoming new commander Col. Robert J. Fulcher Jr.

Col. Robert L. Jordan Jr., who has commanded the 29th for two years, is leaving for Fort Bliss, Texas, to command the U.S. Sergeants Major Academy.

"Jordan is the ideal man to have guided the regiment for the last two years by virtue of his experience, his insights, his values and his character," said Commanding General Maj. Gen. John W. Hendrix at the ceremony.

"As he leaves command," Hendrix said, "I would just say that he led from the front. His concern for soldiers was genuine, it was visible and he was always quick to give credit elsewhere in his trademark self-effacing manner.

"What impressed me most about Bob Jordan is he's the consummate team player," Hendrix said.

Jordan's emphasis on teamwork was apparent in his farewell speech.

"This is not my unit; it's our unit," he said to the assembled soldiers of the 29th. "Officers come and go, but soldiers and sergeants are here for the long haul.

"These soldiers on this field have the spirit of the bayonet. They epitomize the 29th Infantry Regiment's pioneer spirit. They do it every day. These soldiers do not know the meaning of the word failure, and they do not have the word quit in their vocabulary.

"Leadership works both ways," Jordan said, "up as well as down the chain of command. Leaders get strength from soldiers," he said.

Jordan asked the formation of soldiers on the field to repeat after him, and the soldiers roared back as he recited "I am proud, I am prepared, I am professional."

His voice cracked as he finished, "We lead the way. God bless all of you. Bayonet six (Jordan's radio call sign), out."

Jordan's wife, Nancy, was also recognized at the ceremony for the work she has done both for the unit and the post.

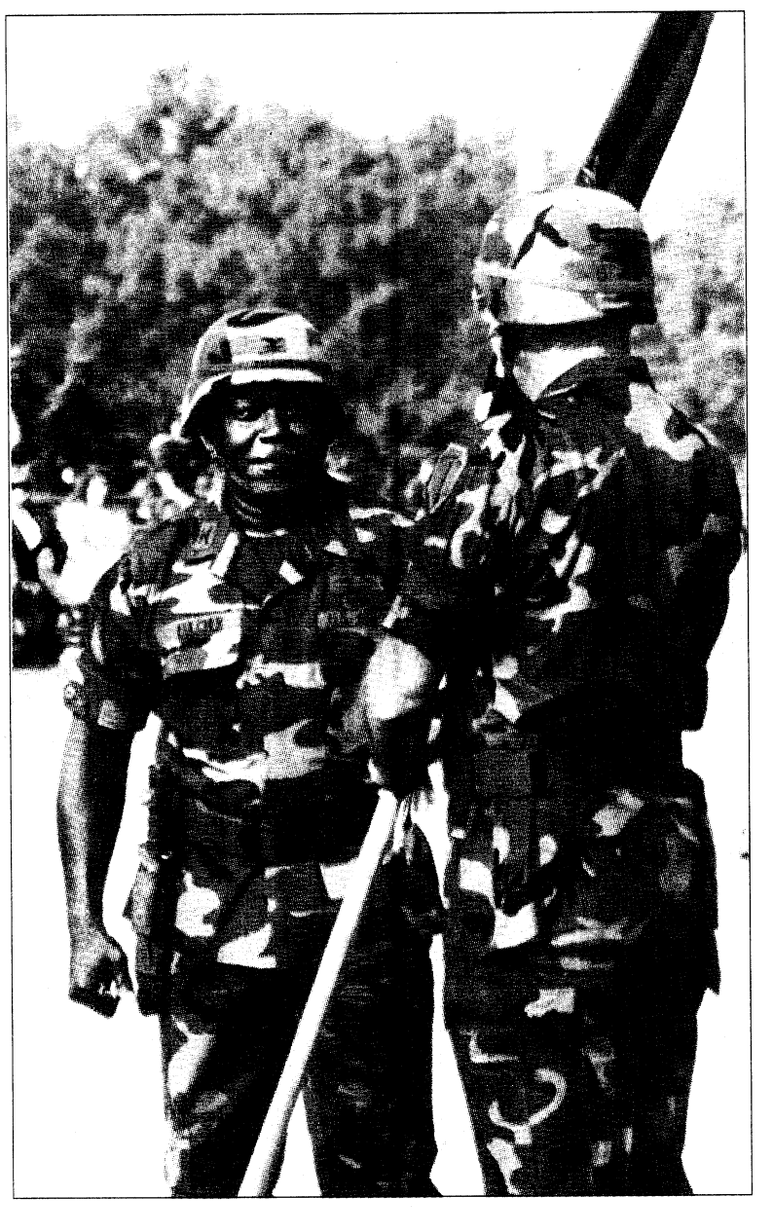
"Her community leadership has been tremendous," Hendrix said, citing her work with the unit family support group, at Faith Middle School, as a Youth Services advisor, with the Officers' Wives' Club and with many local charities.

Jordan said he is honored to relinquish command to Fulcher, an officer he said "I personally respect and admire."

Fulcher comes to Fort Benning from MacDill Air Force Base, Fla., where he was chief of the Major Contingency Branch for U.S. Central Command.

He was commissioned an infantry lieutenant upon graduation from Florida A&M University in 1972.



He is a graduate of the Infantry Officer Advanced Course, the Command and General Staff College, the U.S. Army War College, the Airborne, Ranger and Mortar Platoon Leader courses, the Inspector General Course and Phase II of the Armed Forces Staff College.

His previous assignments include rifle platoon leader, heavy mortar platoon leader and company executive officer in the 1st Battalion, 30th Infantry Regiment, Schweinfurt, Germany; battalion supply officer and company commander for Company B, 2nd Battalion, 19th Infantry Regiment (Mechanized), at Fort Stewart, Ga.; assistant professor of military science at Albany State College; deputy inspector general for the 2nd Infantry Division in Camp Casey, Korea; brigade supply officer for 2nd Brigade, 24th Infantry Division, executive officer for 2nd Battalion, 21st and 2nd Battalion, 7th Infantry regiments, and brigade executive officer for 1st Brigade, 24th Infantry Division, at Fort Stewart.

During Operations Desert Shield and Desert Storm, he commanded the 4th Battalion, 18th Infantry Regiment.

Fulcher's awards include the Silver Star, Bronze Star Medal, Meritorious Service Medal with six oak leaf clusters, Army Commendation Medal with one oak leaf cluster, Army Achievement Medal with two oak leaf clusters, Southwest Asia Service Medal with three bronze star devices, Liberation of Kuwait Medal, Humanitarian Service Medal, National Defense Service Medal with star and the Combat Infantryman Badge.

Fulcher and his wife, Deborah, have two sons, Rashad Jamahl and Tarik Khary.

2nd MASH inactivates

USAIC Public Affairs Office

An inactivation ceremony for Fort Benning's 2nd Mobile Army Surgical Hospital is scheduled for 9 a.m. today on York Field.

The 2nd MASH is being inactivated as part of the Army's downsizing.

Brig. Gen. Harold L. Timboe, commander of the 44th Medical Brigade at Fort Bragg, N.C.; Lt. Col. Edward S. Crosbie, commander of 2nd MASH; and Sgt. Maj. Ricky E. Cross, sergeant major of 2nd MASH, will case the colors of the MASH unit during the ceremony.

Crosbie's new assignment will be at Fort Lewis, Wash., as 62nd Medical Group executive officer. Cross is being assigned to the Sergeant Major Academy at Fort Bliss, Texas.

The 14th Field Hospital will assume some of the duties of 2nd MASH. The field hospital will be here by October 1996, and it will have 81 personnel — five officers, one warrant officer and 75 enlisted, most of whom will come from the MASH unit.

If mobilized the 14th Field Hospital's strength would be about 428 personnel, augmented by additional soldiers from the hospital.

The 2nd MASH has a current strength of 137 soldiers — 24 officers, one warrant officer and 112 enlisted personnel.

The 2nd MASH hospital moved to Fort Benning June 12, 1968, from Degerendoff, West Germany, and while here participated in Desert Shield and Desert Storm from Dec. 10, 1990, to April 17, 1991.

Soldiers from the 2nd MASH also participated in Hurricane Andrew relief efforts in August 1992 and deployed to Somalia in August 1993 for Operation Restore Hope.

The unit was originally organized as Evacuation Hospital No. 2 July 20, 1917, at Fort Benjamin Harrison, Ind. The unit saw action during World War I and received a campaign streamer without inscription.

It inactivated May 17, 1919, at Camp Taylor, Ky., then was reconstituted as the 2nd Evacuation Hospital Dec. 21, 1928.

The unit was activated Jan. 22, 1942, at Fort Devens, Mass., and received campaign streamers for Normandy, Northern France, Rhineland, Ardennes-Alsace and Central Europe for outstanding participation in World War II.

It inactivated in November 1945, at Camp Miles in Standish, Mass., and activated again Sept. 15, 1951, in West Germany.

Infantry Training Brigade

Lt. Col. Deborah A. Kissel recently took over command of the 30th Adjutant General Battalion (Reception) from Lt. Col. Bobby A. Little.

Kissel, who is married to Lt. Col. Robert Kissel, commander of the 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment, "has lots of previous knowledge about what makes infantrymen tick," said Infantry Training Brigade Commander Col. Johnny Brooks during the change of command ceremony June 21.

Kissel said she is very excited about the new position and she looks forward to the next two years.

She said she feels fortunate for the opportunity to command 30th AG, and that it is one of the biggest opportunities of her life.

Kissel was born in Weatherford, Texas. She received her commission as a second lieutenant in the AG Corps in 1977. Her military schooling includes the AG Officer Basic and Advanced courses, Combined Arms and Services Staff School and the U.S. Army Command and General Staff College.

Kissel has served in a variety of command and staff positions. She began her career in the 1st Infantry Division (Forward), where she served as assistant secretary to the general staff; chief, Administrative Services Division and deputy adjutant general.

In 1982, she was assigned to Fort Jackson, S.C., where she commanded Company C, 14th Battalion, 4th Combat Support Training Brigade, and was the 14th Battalion executive officer.

She was then assigned to the 1st Cavalry Division, Fort Hood, Texas, where she had several positions in the office of the assistant chief of staff, Personnel and AG, including chief, Officer Branch; chief, Strength Management Branch; deputy, Personnel and AG; and she commanded the 15th Personnel Services Company.

Following Command and General Staff College, Kissel served two years in the Pentagon in the Enlisted Division, Directorate of Military Personnel Management, Office of the Deputy Chief of Staff for Personnel.

In 1991, she was detailed as an inspector general and assigned to the 4th Infantry Division, Fort Carson, Colo. In addition, she was the chief, Military Personnel Division in the 4th Infantry Division.

Kissel was assigned to Fort Benning in 1994 and and has been serving in the Office of Infantry Proponency as personnel proponency officer.

Her awards and decorations include the Meritorious Service Medal with three oak leaf clusters, the Army Commendation Medal, the Army Achievement Medal and the Army Staff Identification Badge.

Little, the outgoing commander, has been awarded the Legion of Merit, the Bronze Star Medal, the Meritorious Service Medal with three oak leaf clusters, the Army Commendation Medal with one oak leaf cluster, the Southwest Asia Service Medal, the Southwest Asia Service Medal with bronze star device, the Expert Infantryman Badge, the Parachutist Badge, the Air Assault Badge and the Army Staff Identification Badge.

Little assumed command of 30th AG June 17, 1993. He will be attending the Army War College in Carlisle, Pa., in August.

He and his wife, Sheila, have five children; Leah, Lauren, Lindsay, David and Christopher.

"For the last two years, Lt. Col. Bobby Little has been the first officer that new infantry soldiers in our Army met," said Brooks.

"It has been an honor to all infantrymen worldwide to have him represent us," Brooks said.

"He personifies all that is positive in our Army. He is truly an outstanding leader. A plan for everything — a solution to all problems. Those are traits that make Little the professional he is," Brooks said.

Lt. Col. Deborah A. Kissel is the new commander of the 30th Adjutant General Battalion (Reception).

profile in excellence

Name: Sgt. Kevin Gordon Rast

Award or recognition: Fort Benning Noncommissioned Officer of the Quarter

Military Occupational Specialty: 12F20 (combat engineer vehicle crewman)

Unit: Company C, 317th Engineer Battalion, 3rd Brigade, 24th Infantry Division (Mechanized)

Years on the job: Five years

What were your reasons for joining the Army?
I joined the Army to better myself as a person and to serve my country.

Define your style of leadership.
My leadership style is one that allows a soldier to grow and develop responsibility while maintaining unit cohesion and discipline.

What person has most influenced your career?
My father, Lee G. Rast, has most influenced my career in the military.

If you were sergeant major of the Army for a day, what improvements would you make?
I would look to give the NCOs more authority under the Better Opportunities for Single Soldiers Program to inspect barracks rooms due to limited space of the barracks. If one soldier is living below the standard, all soldiers may be affected.

What were your reasons for choosing your MOS?
I chose my MOS because I knew I would enjoy driving tracked vehicles and working with demolitions.

Describe a memorable moment in your career.
My most memorable moment was the day I was promoted to sergeant because of the hard work it took for me to get there.

What are your future career plans?
To one day be a member of the Sgt. Audie Murphy Club and to make first sergeant in 15 years.

What others have to say about you: "A true professional. His desire to improve himself has earned him the respect of his superiors and subordinates alike. Sgt. Rast has set an example we should all try to emulate."

Public enjoys variety of music

The Infantry Band performed an afternoon concert Sunday in front of the National Infantry Museum.

People came to the museum with blankets, lawn chairs and beverages in hand preparing for the concert. Bleachers had been set up prior to the concert but most people used what they brought to sit on.

The band played for about an hour. Its repertoire spanned most types of music — ragtime jazz, rock and military marches.

Some of the selections performed were the "National Emblem March," The Lion King Medley," "Tuba Tiger Rag," "Rootbeer Rag," and "Stars and stripes Forever."

"Tuba Tiger Rag" featured a solo tuba player up in front of the band. Sgt. 1st Class James Rogers displayed his range on the instrument by playing in a variety of octaves.

The saxophone section was featured during "Rootbeer Rag." Two alto saxophones and one tenor saxophone showed their talents by playing fast and furious. The crowd applauded after each and every song.

One of the highlights of the concert was the band's performance of Lee Greenwood's "God Bless the USA." Sgt. Samuel T. Brown, bass guitar player with the band, showed off his voice by singing. His performance really got the crowd involved and let him know that by their applause.

The Infantry Chorus also sang during the concert. Microphones were set up on the ground in front of the stage and the chorus performed a handful of songs.

The concert ended with "Stars and Stripes Forever." The crowd gave the band a standing ovation. Maj. Gen. John W. Hendrix, post commanding general, stepped to a microphone and thanked the band for the concert.

An 'institution' to leave

After 31 years of service, Carter will retire from AAFES

By Lisa M. Hibbert
Bayonet staff writer

Nathan Carter, line cook in the Infantry Hall cafeteria, will retire today after working 31 years for the Army and Air Force Exchange Service.

Employed here since the cafeteria was built in 1964, Carter has been a fixture at Infantry Hall almost as long as the Infantryman's Statue.

"I've seen this place change hands about six times," Carter said. "When I first started working here the booths weren't here; there were tables, chairs and blinds covered the windows. I've seen this cafeteria change a lot."

Initially, Carter worked as a busser, then a counter attendant and now a line cook but he has helped out in various other capacities as well.

"The customers really like Mr. Carter," said Cynthia Suddeth, cafeteria supervisor. "When I first started working here and I would fill in for Mr. Carter if he was out, a couple of customers left because they only wanted him to make their sandwich. It was funny."

Over the years Carter has met a lot of people and developed a strong following.

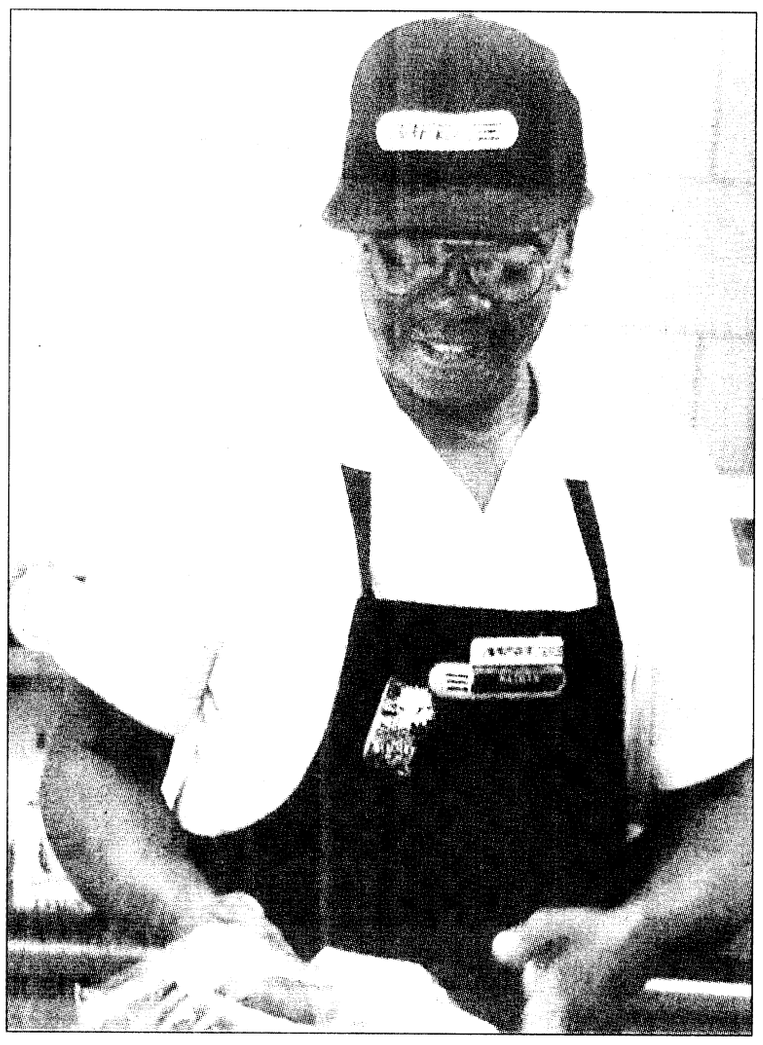
"Mr. Carter is a good listener; he knows how to observe and take in all of the different personalities (he comes in contact with)." Suddeth said. "Mr. Carter can relate to anybody and I think that's a gift — not everybody can do that."

To stay in the same job for 31 years and not get bored with it, one has to like the work he or she does.

"In order to love your job, you have to enjoy what you do," Carter said. "If I did not enjoy cooking I wouldn't be here this long."

Carter said he loves to cook. In fact, Carter said he cooks most holidays and has his family over his house for dinner.

"Cooking is an art with Mr. Carter," said Ron Schifano, cafeteria manager. "He is an icon in his job. AAFES employees used to wear pins that said 'We care' and I think Mr. Carter exemplifies that attitude."



"I've met all kinds of people over the years," Carter said. "A lot of people have left and come back a couple of years later and said, 'You're still here Mr. Carter? When are you going to retire?'"

At Carter's retirement ceremony Wednesday, he talked about some of the rank changes he has seen his customers go through.

"I remember when Col. (Robert) Jordan was a staff sergeant going through Officer Candidacy School and now he's a full bird colonial," Carter said.

Col. Gregory C. Camp, Chief of Staff, spoke on behalf of Post Commanding General, Maj. Gen. John W. Hendrix and thanked Carter for his years of service and dedication to his job and customers. Camp presented Carter with and Infantry Center coin and a certificate.

"Carter always has a smile for you," said Maj. Chuck Wall, Garrison Executive Officer. "If he was ever having a bad day it never showed. He always gave solid customer service."

Lisa Hibbert

Nathan Carter, line cook in the Infantry Hall cafeteria, will reitire today. He plans to return as a part-time employee.

Although Carter is planning to retire, he will continue to work in the cafeteria as a part-time employee in the mornings only.

"The blessings of the good Lord have helped me a lot in this job," Carter said. "When working with the public, you have to have patience. I 've been really fortunate to work with and for such nice people who have made my job enjoyable."

After 31 years of service, Carter is still not ready to completely retire.

"May 19 made 31 years for me and I wish I could do 31 more," Carter said. Carter does not plan to pursue a part time job to fill his afternoons and he said he hopes to be able to travel in the future.

Bill Thedford of the Directorate of Combat Development, said, "I hate to see the guy go. He adds a

Child development center receives its accreditation

Child Development Center

The Main Post Child Development Center is among the growing number of military child development programs in the United States to be accredited by the National Academy of Early Childhood Programs.

The academy recognizes outstanding early childhood programs, that meet national standards of quality. The Main Post Child Development Center, located at Building 1366 serves 98 children from ages 6 weeks to 5 years, according to its director, Lajoie Bradley.

"Accreditation helps answer the question, what is a quality military child development program?" said Dr. Marilyn Smith, executive director of the National Association for the Education of Young Children, the nation's oldest and largest association of early childhood professionals, which sponsors the academy.

"Most parents want to find the highest quality program for their young children; however, few parents know how to assess whether a program meets more than just the minimum standards required by state licensing."

The academy's standards were developed over a three-year period with input from thousands of educators and administrators from across the country. In 1985, the first program was accredited by NYC.

Now in 1995, there are more than 3,600 programs from across the country, including U.S. military installations around the world, that have been accredited by the academy.

"Accreditation is not meant to replace parents' on-site visits to centers as a means of selecting the program that best meets their needs," Smith said, "but accreditation does help parents recognize the varied components that should be present in a quality program.'

To become accredited, the Main Post Child Development Center had to meet a variety of strict criteria related to providing a developmentally appropriate program for 6-week to 5-year-old children. These criteria range from having a well qualified and trained staff to meeting stringent health and safety standards. In addition, the program must provide opportunities for parental involvement.

Accreditation includes an on-site study of the program by professional validates and a final review by a three-member panel of commissioners who are experts in the field of early childhood education. The nationwide accreditation of early childhood programs, such as Main Post Child Development Center, benefits parents, children, program personnel and society.

Nett gets immortalized

By Richard Brill
Special to The Bayonet©

Richard Brill/Special to The Bayonet

Retired Col. Robert B. Nett pins an Officer Candidate School pendant on artist Patty Martirosian.

A recipient of one of the nation's highest honors was memorialized June 20 with the unveiling of a painting in the Officer Candidate School Hall of Fame, Wigle Hall, Building 2769.

The oil painting depicts retired Col. Robert B. Nett, Medal of Honor recipient and Columbus resident, as he appeared in 1965 as commander of the 5th Officer Candidate Battalion and was painted by an officer candidate's wife who considers her artistic endeavors a hobby.

Patty Martirosian, the wife of second lieutenant Samuel Martirosian of OCS class 3-95, completed the painting using a black and white photograph of Nett from 1965. Although she has no formal training as an artist and has only been painting for about a year, OCS cadre and spouses heard of her talent and suggested she do a painting of Nett.

"I'm very proud and honored to be able to do this," Martirosian said. "I wanted to give something back to everyone who has been so kind and supportive during our stay here."

"This painting is unbelievable," Nett said. "It looks just like a color photograph. I'm glad she painted me as ugly as I really am or no one would recognize me," he said.

For her service, Martirosian was presented with an OCS pendant, and a certificate of appreciation.

Col. Donald Chung, OCS commander, said the painting will serve as an inspiration to all who see it.

"A visit to Wigle Hall is part of the uniqueness of the experience of OCS," Chung said. "When candidates come here they are surrounded by the history of OCS, by the memorabilia and the photographs of great leaders. This has an effect on how they view themselves and the kinds of goals they set."

Nett received the Medal of Honor for his actions in 1944 when, as a first lieutenant serving with the 77th Infantry Division, he led his company in an assault on an enemy battalion in the Phillipines. Although severely wounded three times, he dispatched seven of the enemy in hand-to-hand combat and refused to relinquish command until the objective was secured and his men were resupplied.

"Col. Nett is an inspiration who embodies everything we want our future leaders to be — courageous, selfless and dedicated," Chung said.

ACS 30th birthday celebration July 21

Army Community Service

Army Community Service will celebrate its 30th birthday, July 21, at Youth Services, Building 1056, with lots of activities.

One of the activities is a dunking booth. ACS wants to know whom do you think should be in the dunking booth.

You can obtain your ballot from ACS and submit it to Army Community Service, ATZB-PAF-A, Building 2643, Monday through Friday, 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. The deadline for suggestions is July 12.

There will be a prize for the person who makes the best suggestion and gets the person to participate.

Commissary stresses keeping children safe

Defense Commissary Agency

The Defense Commissary Agency warns parents the Commissary can be a dangerous place for children.

The Commissary has had incidents of children falling into the freezers; infants in infant carriers have been placed on checkout stands and fallen off into a fully-loaded shopping cart, which can cause serious injury. Also, children standing in a shopping cart is an accident waiting to happen, officials said.

Practice Made Perfect.

It's easy to understand how a practice can be made perfect in a community like Aiken, South Carolina. America's wealthiest wintered here in the past, giving Aiken a rich and diverse cultural foundation. Even now, Aiken offers everyone the opportunity to enjoy life. Hitchcock Woods, a 1700-acre nature preserve. Numerous polo matches and steeplechase. Twelve golf courses, including Augusta National — all this within two hours of Atlanta, Hilton Head and the Appalachian mountains. And, of course, the finest health care, courtesy of Aiken Regional Medical Centers.

Our staff of over 100 excellent physicians (many with military backgrounds), boasts Board Certification levels which exceed national averages, and 10 percent of our physicians are Board Certified in at least two specialties. All are provided with the most up-to-date technology and equipment. Not to mention the finest medical professionals and support staff. And an emergency department fully staffed by almost a dozen residency-trained emergency medicine specialists.

Life's laidback and easy in Aiken. Of course, we're all working extra hard to provide the outstanding medical care we're known for. And that means adding outstanding physicians to our staff.

We're currently recruiting physicians in the following specialties:

Anesthesiology
Cardiovascular Surgery
Emergency Medicine
Endocrinology
Family Medicine
Internal Medicine/Peds
Invasive Cardiology
Neurosurgery
Otolaryngology
Pediatrics
Psychiatry (Adult & Child)
Radiology

Parents: Be a hero to your children

By Clarke McGriff
3rd Brigade, 24th I.D.

On a recent hot Sunday afternoon my wife, my three children and I had prayer and departed my mother's home in North Carolina for a 475-mile return trip to Fort Benning. Our destination for that night was Fort Gordon, Ga., we were expected there by 7 p.m. Initially, everything went well. Then, along the way, the van's air conditioner went out, a tire blew out and before reaching Columbia, S.C., we came upon the site of a bad traffic accident. We stopped to assist the victims, as did many other passersby. We finally reached Fort Gordon where I bought a new set of tires. We later came on to Fort Benning as planned. The air conditioner is yet to be repaired, which will probably cost me another $300 at least.

Our Sunday afternoon adventure was quite a challenge, but it was an excellent classroom as well. My children witnessed their parents under some pretty stressful conditions. As Josh McDowell states in his popular book, "How To Be A Hero To Your Kids," our children do become just like us. What we do with our children and in front of them shapes them. Of course we are not fully responsible for the choices they make at every point in their lives. But, be sure their decisions are influenced by our input or lack thereof into their lives. Luke 6:40 says, "A pupil is not above his teacher; but everyone after he has been fully trained will be like his teacher."

Recently, we celebrated Mother's Day and Father's Day. As parents, my wife and I may never know fully what impact our behavior that Sunday had on our children. For my sake, I'm glad we prayed before we hit the road, and I'm glad we worshiped together that morning. I really want my children to know how important my personal relationship with God is. When they see that I love God and he loves me, they also can sense that they too are loved by God. Children need many things from their parents. Most parents are heroes when it comes to the tangible things — clothing, housing, and recreational activities. These things are great. I believe, however, there are some intangible are as even more crucial — affection, god-centered direction, and needed correction. These things cannot be bought; they can only be given. They take time and patience.

As a member of the 3rd Brigade, 24th Infantry Division (mechanized), I don't have very much control over my time. The mission is consistently fast-paced. I suspect I am not very different from most soldiers, so I have to make the most of every opportunity to express my affection for my children and my wife. Even with a busy unit, I must prioritize my activities so that my children know they have first place in my life.

This may sound old-fashioned to some readers, but, I also believe that I have a responsibility to lead my family spiritually. To do so, I must be connected to the source. That is why it is important that I not simply drive my family to church, but that I also attend with them. Additionally, my children must see their father actively engaged in a spiritual pursuit and relationship with God.

They know I'm committed to the Army, because I get up daily, put on the uniform, work for 12 hours or more, deploy to far away places, etc. If I were not committed to this organization, why would I give so much of my time? In the same way, I must witness before them my commitment to God.

Finally, children have the opportunity (like adults) to choose right or wrong in their daily lives. When a right choice is made, the child should be affirmed. When a wrong choice is made, the parent should be available to make the correction. God has always been available through his word to point out to us what we should do in every situation. As a parent connected into the source, I should be able to guide my children when correction is needed.

The keys to this, of course, are not finding the time but, taking the time and in a gentle and kind way, being a hero to your children.

My daughter celebrated her seventh birthday a few weeks ago. My wife and I commented how quickly the time has passed. It seems like just yesterday that we brought her home from the hospital. Now she's going to the second grade, taking dance lessons, reading and riding her bike. Pretty soon she will be in college and maybe getting married. She will only be 7 once.

This might be the year that she decides to trust Christ as her Lord and Savior. I have a real chance to affect that decision. If you are a parent, everyday is Mother's Day or Father's Day. Every situation is an opportunity to excel or to let another opportunity slip away. Heroes are not just people who fly supersonic airplanes and escape from behind enemy lines; they happen everyday on the highways of life.

By the way, does anyone know a good air conditioner mechanic?

Independence Day a reminder of peace, love

By Robert J. Pamula
USAIC Chaplain Office

We all prepare for that day. Every family knows its deep meaning. Children and teen-agers fix the fireworks. Adults wait for the night show. The outward signs of Independence Day are not the only or the most important ones. We all realize that. The bottom line is the sense of victory — the sense of freedom.

America has always been a pioneer for all kinds of liberation movements. Here was the most advanced document of contemporary history written and signed, The Declaration of Independence. People who came to this land with a desire to create new values concluded that freedom is the most important principle of every beginning. Thomas Jefferson, and many, many people committed their lives for that idea. Many of them lost their lives to defend and preserve freedom.

Freedom has also a lot of spiritual connotations. The Bible itself could be called a unique Declaration of Independence. In the Bible we find many verses that invite us to be free from all kinds of oppression.

There is a story of a student who was asked what freedom meant. He answered that freedom as such doesn't exist. It is a philosophical idea. However, I can say, I know when I am really free. It is when I feel I am free from sin. It is when I feel someone loves me, be it parents, be it my sister, be it my wife. That gives so much safety to my life. I can be free only when I feel safe.

That's the freedom the Bible is talking about. True independence is when we feel that we struggle to live a good, morally uplifting life. Another part of the story is love. God, when creating us, put in our hearts the desire to give, the desire to appreciate in a very special way, and the desire to love. This gives us a special sense of security or safety using the words of the student I mentioned earlier.

This sense of security or safety in Biblical language is called salvation. This is freedom offered "freely" by God. He gives independence through salvation and independence by grace. The hymn says "'Amazing Grace, how sweet the sound' ... The Lord has promised good to me. His word my hope secure ..."

May the gifts of God's love and peace be richly given to us as we observe Independence Day.

Attending chapel makes us aware of wrongdoings

By Chana Timoner
USAIC Chaplain Office

Some of us go to church, synagogue or mosque only once or twice a year. We often ask "Why go more often?" We can pray just as well at home or out in the garden. Sometimes we don't go because some of the people there are not entirely ethical. Sometimes it is because chaplains use words that we don't understand, such as, revelation, predestination or salvation. Some of us don't go because we really feel deep inside we are honest, decent people. We do not want to hear the chaplain say "you must repent and atone for your sins." After all, "I'm not bad or sinful. What do I have to atone for anyway?"

What do we have to atone for? Are we such bad sinners that we need to go ask God's forgiveness every single week? Indeed, most of us are good people who live relatively decent lives and treat others with respect. We don't cheat or steal, murder or rob. For what do we need to ask forgiveness?

For an answer to this valid question we look to the Hebrew prophets. The Bible concentrates on episodes and on individual personalities that shaped the Israelite nation. The individual prophets concentrate on basic concepts and philosophies of life. While the books of the prophets do tell of stern rebukes by God to sin, their main message is an uplifting one. The prophets always end with a positive message to remind us of God's perpetual willingness to receive our repentance. We read "The Lord is gracious and full of compassion," and " Yea will I have compassion upon him" said the Lord.

How can we repent when we are basically decent, good folks? The answer is simple: good deeds do not balance out bad deeds. When we think of ourselves as decent folk we are deluding ourselves. Somehow we have come to see ourselves with glasses that average everything out that we do. It is as though our actions are mathematical or can be weighed on a balancing scale. Good deeds on the right must equal or outweigh bad deeds on the left and we are good to go. However, there is no such thing as a scale of justice! God does not ask us to walk in his path "on the average." This is like the average family with 2.5 children, it doesn't exist.

Going to chapel regularly and studying helps us to understand how we are responsible for even the smallest things in life that we do wrong. Repentance is not only for the big sins that most of us know better than to commit. Learning that taking home Skillcraft pens or grazing at the Commissary are really forms of stealing. Leaving work early or not cleaning up after ourselves are also forms of stealing.

Our eyes are also opened to hundreds of small kindnesses that we can perform on a daily basis for others. Do some laundry for a pregnant neighbor. Notice someone who looks sad and worried and ask warmly about their welfare. The more time we spend thinking and studying about leading a good, religious life, the more we come to accept that small details in our attitude and behavior make the difference between being "basically good" or walking in the path of righteousness.

The prophet Micah gives us sound words to live by. This is "what the Lord requires of you: Only do justice, to love goodness, and to walk modestly with your God." (Micah 6:8-9).

FOURTH of JULY

Post celebrates America's 219th

By Ruth J. Spaller
Bayonet staff writer

Despite less than perfect weather, Fort Benning and local residents turned out in their red, white and blue Tuesday to celebrate America's 219th birthday.

Clouds and sporadic rainshowers did not dampen the spirits of July Fourth festival-goers, who sought shelter in Infantry Hall, in their cars and under trees during the brief downpours, then returned to York Field again for a variety of food, games and rides.

Weather didn't keep people away — an estimated crowd of 20,000 people came out over the course of the day.

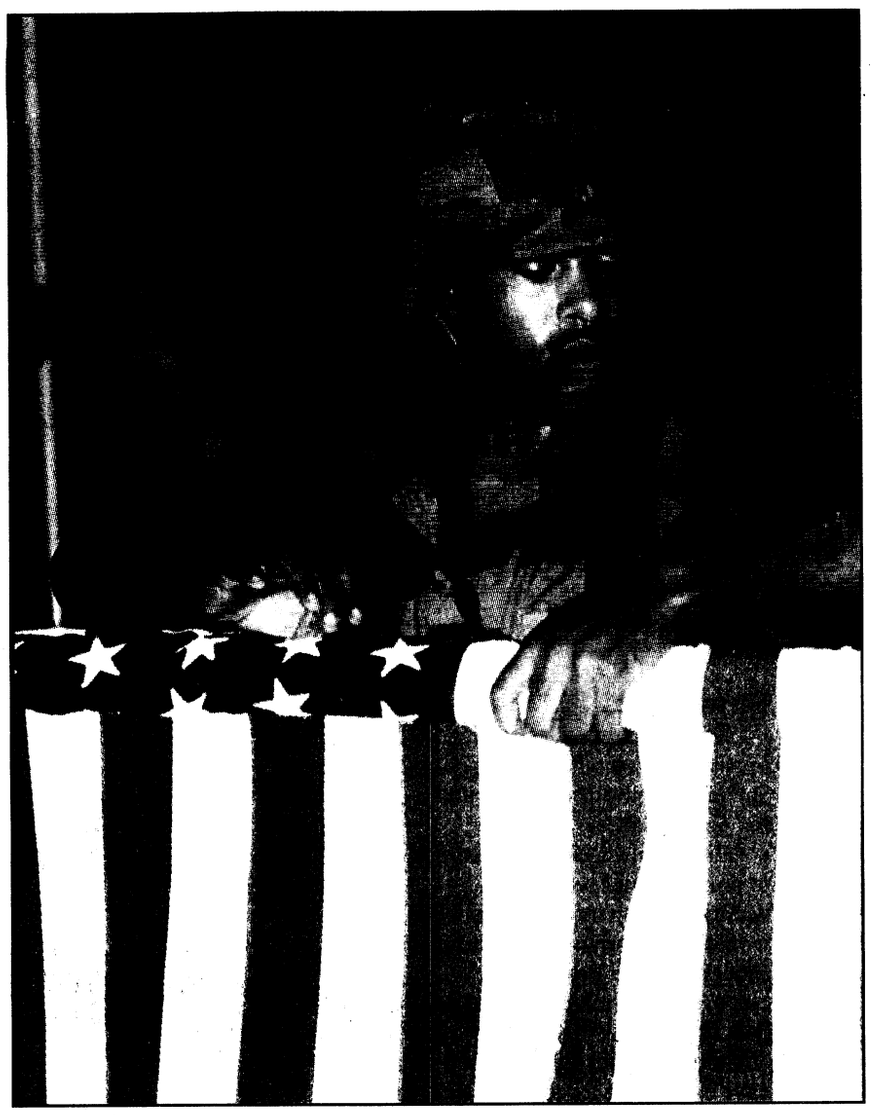
Highlights of the day included performances by the Infantry Band and Infantry Chorus and an artillery-fire salute to the nation by Battery A, 4th Battalion, 41st Field Artillery Regiment, 3rd Brigade, 24th Infantry Division (Mechanized).

Soldiers from the 1st Battalion, 18th Infantry Regiment, 3rd Brigade, 24th Inf. Div. (Mech.), and from the 1st Battalion, 38th Infantry Regiment, Infantry Training Brigade, carried the flags of U.S. states and territories in a national flag pageant.

During the pageant, the artillery fired a 56-shot salute to each of the states and territories in order of admittance to the union.

The pageant included every national flag that has flown over the United States, starting with the 13-star flag to the 48-star flag and the current 50-star flag with 13 red and white stripes.

At dusk, as a prelude to the fireworks display, children played with neon-colored yellow, green, blue and red tubes, twirling them in the air or fastening the ends together to make circles to wear on their heads and arms.



The fireworks display, sponsored by AT&T, concluded the festivities.

Rangers to rendezvous

USAIC Public Affairs Office

More than 2,000 rangers will participate in the Ranger Rendezvous and Exercise Warrior Thunder at Fort Benning July 14 to 19.

Warrior Thunder starts with a mass tactical parachute jump July 14 at 7 p.m. on Fryar Drop Zone with rangers jumping from C-141 Starlifters and C-130 Hercules at 800 feet. The three battalions of the 75th Ranger Regiment will rendezvous in mid-air flying from departure airfields at Fort Lewis, Wash., Fort Stewart, Ga., and Fort Benning.

Following the air assault, the regiment will conduct a short field exercise, which involves seizing military objectives and controlling surrounding terrain.

Beginning Sunday morning, and continuing through noon, a weapons competition will determine the top machine gun teams, mortar crews, sniper teams and anti-tank teams. An endurathon, which includes a series of events including running, swimming and biking will also be conducted.

The five-day celebration is filled with competitions and social activities honoring rangers and ranger units, both past and present, including an open house at the Ranger Training Brigade.

Additionally, the 75th Ranger Regiment will change command July 19 on York Field at 9 a.m. with Col. James T. Jackson turning the regiment over to Col. William J. Leszczynski Jr.

Leszczynski graduated from the Infantry Officer Basic and Advanced courses, the U.S. Marine Corps Command and General Staff College and the U.S. Army War College. He received a master's degree from the University of Massachusetts.

His awards and decorations include the Legion of Merit, the Bronze Star Medal, the Meritorious Service Medal with three oak leaf clusters, the Army Achievement Medal with two oak leaf clusters, the Combat Infantryman Badge, Expert Infantryman Badge, Master Parachutist Badge, Air Assault Badge, Honduran Parachutist Badge, Canadian Parachutist Badge, Portuguese Parachutist Badge and Ranger Tab.

Leszczynski and his wife, Jennifer, have two children.

New deputy comes to town

By Lisa M. Hibbert
Bayonet staff writer

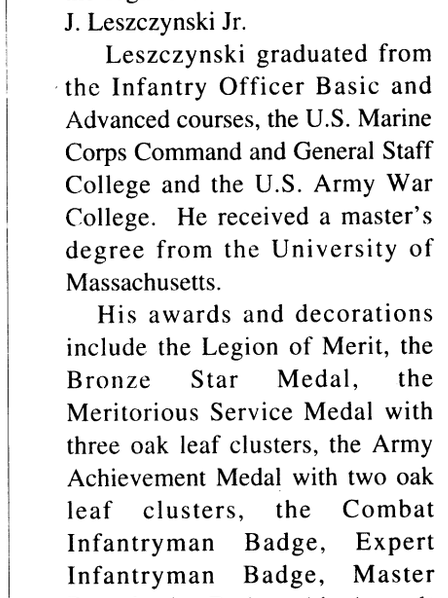
Brig. Gen. Robert T. Clark, assistant commandant of the U.S. Army Infantry School was welcomed to Fort Benning in a ceremony on York Field, June 29.

"The assistant commandant position is not one that I get to select," said Commanding General Maj. Gen. John W. Hendrix.

"The (Army) chief of staff gets to make that selection and I am pleased that he chose one of the finest infantrymen out there to help lead Fort Benning."

During his 25-year career, Clark served as a battalion commander in the 101st Airborne Division during operations Desert Shield and Desert Storm and later became the brigade commander. He served at the Pentagon as a staff officer and as an aide de camp to the chief of staff of the Army, Gen. John Wickham.

Clark was commissioned in 1970 from the Reserve Officer Training Corps at Texas Tech University as the distinguished military graduate. One of his early assignments was as a rifle platoon leader and company executive officer with the 1st Cavalry Division in Vietnam.



Clark bears the Combat Infantryman Badge, the Ranger Tab, the Army Staff Identification Badge and the Parachutist and Air Assault badges.

His decorations and badges include the Legion of Merit with two oak leaf clusters, Bronze Star with the V device and two oak leaf clusters, Purple Heart, Meritorious Service Medal (four awards) and an Air Medal.

Fort Benning is no stranger to Clark, who spent time here as a youth.

"I spent 10 years here growing up when my father (Retired Col. H. A. Clark) was stationed here, and I am very happy to be back," Clark said.

Clark and his wife, Karen Anne, have two children; Anne C. Jordan of Clarksville, Tennessee, and Robert Jr., a senior at Texas A&M University — rival college to Clark's alma mater.

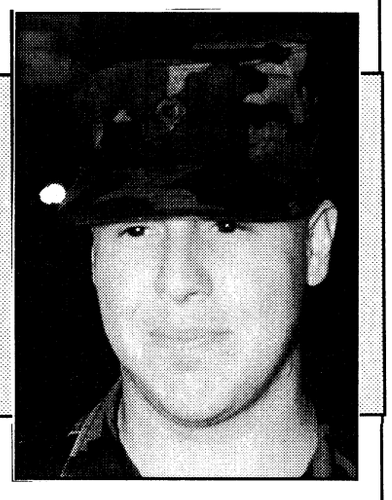
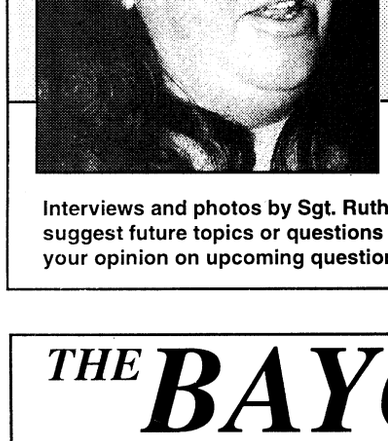
Brig. Gen. Robert T. Clark is Fort Benning's new deputy commanding general.

VARIOUS VOICES

Do you think the United Nations should pull out of Bosnia?



Master Sgt. William T. Howard, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 317th Engineer Battalion — "Yes; it is their (Bosnia's) war. We shouldn't be involved at all."



Capt. Keith M. Johnson, 498th Medical Company (Air Ambulance) — "Yes; I don't believe any military should get involved in any religious wars."

Marjorie L. Harden, family member— "Yes and no; I understand that everyone needs help and we're the country that gives the help. But as a family member, I don't want to see my husband go off to war."

Spc. Edgardo F. Chardon, U.S. Army Medical Department Activity — "No; we should stop the fighting over there. I don't think we should be so nice about their blowing up each other."

Laura A. Lee, family member — "Yes; I believe it is a civil war. The United Nations acts as a police force for the world but shouldn't for a single country."

editorial

A very special birthday is being celebrated July 21. On that day Army Community Services will be 30 years old.

If Chief of Staff of the Army Gen. Harold K. Johnson hadn't founded ACS 30 years ago, someone else would have — ACS is that important to our soldiers and their family members.

Since its inception, ACS volunteers have touched the lives of millions of soldiers, their spouses and their children.

ACS volunteers and paid staff members do much more than maintain the Food Locker and Lending Closet — two of ACS's high visibility services.

ACS provides essential soldier, family and unit support to commanders during mobilization and deployment. As units mobilize, ACS provides predeployment briefings and counseling.

During deployments, staff members help operate family assistance centers, provide crisis counseling and assist family support groups.

And of course, it's the volunteer who is the heart and soul of ACS.

Simply put, there's not enough money to pay for the services rendered by volunteers, and this certainly includes those who help out at ACS.

These men and women volunteer because they want to make a difference in someone's life. The rewards they seek are knowing they helped and that they made a difference.

A smile and a "thank you" is what keeps them coming back.

The Army, which recognizes the value of our volunteers, established a reward system. The highest award a volunteer can get is the Emma Baird Award.

Seven volunteers from throughout the Army will receive this honor. One of them is Fort Benning's Linda Payne.

She's served as an ACS volunteer and supervisor and Volunteer Income Tax Assistance Program coordinator at Fort Benning since 1992.

She also served in the Installation's Volunteer Coordinator program from July 1993 to February 1994.

And Payne is a certified master trainer with the Army Family Team Building Program. In other words, she's a force multiplier when it comes to getting even more volunteers to help our soldiers and their families.

She is most deserving of this award and we extend our congratulations to her and all the ACS volunteers who will be recognized at a luncheon July 19.

There's also plenty of room for more volunteers, so if you're looking to make a difference at Fort Benning, call the installation volunteer coordinator at 545-5602 or 545-6969.

force protection

Traffic accidents are deadly. Two Fort Benning soldiers and one civilian employee have been killed in traffic accidents this fiscal year.

The latest fatality occurred on Interstate 185, when a civilian employee was heading home. She lost control of her car and landed upside down in Upatoi Creek.

Commanders and directors will emphasize the following to all personnel:

Drive defensively. The poor driving of others can cause you great expense and pain.

Drive alertly. Plan your trips so that you always start out well rested. Take frequent breaks while driving.

Stay sober while driving. Use a designated driver whenever alcoholic beverages are involved.

Obey the speed limit. The speed limit is the top speed for ideal conditions. Adverse weather, increased traffic, road construction, and pedestrians require speeds below the limit.

Always wear your seat belt. If you're not wearing your seat belt, what's holding you back?

Inspect your vehicle. Correct any mechanical deficiencies.

Drive like your life depends on it? Follow me, safely.

— Maj. Gen. John W. Hendrix
Commanding general

dial 545-boss

Dial 545-BOSS is the commander's action line for soldiers, family members and civilians to call when they have problems or complaints that can't be resolved elsewhere.

While it is not a substitute for the chain of command or for agencies established to provide assistance, the line offers another means of communication between Fort Benning's community and commanders.

The Bayonet features some of the calls that may benefit other members of the Fort Benning community.

Call: There is too much lighting on post, especially latrine and corridor lighting in Infantry Hall, as well as parking and street lighting throughout post. I would like someone to call me in reference to energy conservation.

Energy Branch's response:
The action officer found the latrine lighting in Infantry Hall meets the standard of the Illumination Engineering Society.

During daylight hours, the Infantry Hall corridor high-bay lighting, adjacent to the windows, which provide daylight, offers almost no contribution to the lighting levels. The lighting levels at 8 a.m. along the corridors ranged from 15 to 130 foot candles. During nighttime hours the low-bay corridor lighting should provide enough light to meet the standard for corridors. Therefore, high-bay lights will be removed.

How to get your news in The Bayonet

Editor's note: Many people call us with questions about how to get their information in the paper or with erroneous information about deadlines, so we have compiled the following for your information.

Coverage of events

The staff of The Bayonet enjoys covering newsworthy events on post that are timely and pertinent to our readers. Some events we cover include brigade-level changes of command, changes in post policies or procedures and other postwide events.

We don't have enough personnel to cover everything on post, so we focus on the events that affect most of the post.

Also due to our limited number of personnel, we prefer that coverage requests be submitted at least two weeks in advance.

Some events we do not send a reporter to cover are parties, dinners, dining events, dances, balls, teas, coffees, club and organization meetings and elections, award presentations, changes of command below the brigade level, check presentations and group photos.

The frequency of such events on post and small number of photojournalists on The Bayonet staff prohibits us from covering these sorts of events.

Also, Army Regulation 360-81, which governs the production and content of Army newspapers, states covering such events is not a function of the post newspaper or the Public Affairs Office.

If you need a photographer to record events for official purposes, call the Training and Audiovisual Support Center's photo lab at 545-4417.

Deadlines

Film, photos, stories, letters to the editor and other news items intended for The Bayonet must arrive in our office no later than noon Friday prior to the next week's publication.

Also, you may leave stories, film, photos for publication in The Bayonet's drop box located in the Information Office, Room 111, Infantry Hall, Building 4. The deadline for items left in the drop box is noon Friday, also.

Copy must be typed and doubled-spaced, except for letters to the editor which may be handwritten. Everything else must be typed. Typed copy is easier for us to edit, easier for our typesetter and results in fewer errors.

Use civilian dates, times, the name of the building as well as the building number. You may include the street or road if desired. Also, be sure to include the first and last names of all individuals mentioned in the story, and spell out all acronyms on first reference.

If you submit an announcement for post briefs or community briefs, check it when it appears in The Bayonet. Then, if you must resubmit it at a later date, submit it as it ran in the paper.

You may fax briefs or announcements only. However, we need the original typewritten copy of stories (anything longer than one page).

Give us your story ideas

If you believe you have a good story idea and want to write the story yourself, call us to see if we're interested. If you don't want to write the story, call us and we'll arrange a time for you to talk with a reporter.

We reserve the right to edit all stories for publication, and we cannot guarantee if or when submitted stories will appear in the paper. Stories that are submitted after the deadline will be published in the next week's paper.

Stringers

Stringers are people belonging to various units who write about and take photos of unit activities for The Bayonet.

Without stringers, our coverage of unit activities would be decreased. Unit commanders who would like to arrange for a stringer should call The Bayonet's command information officer at 545-2201.

Stringers need not be trained or have experience as journalists; The Bayonet will provide training and materials including film and photo processing.

Letters

The Bayonet welcomes letters to the editor and readers' responses to the paper's content. Letters may be typed, or handwritten, and must include name and telephone number.

Our policy is to staff letters to the appropriate directorate or activity and to run their response at the same time we run your letter.

Also, names may be withheld upon request; however, in order for your letter to be considered for publication, you must include your name and daytime telephone number. Letters received without the author's name and telephone number will not be published. We reserve the right to edit all letters.

Photos

We will accept photos that are black and white glossy prints or color prints. We also accept black-and-white and color negatives and color slides. We prefer action shots — people doing their jobs or interacting with other people. Head and shoulder shots of individuals are also acceptable.

Complaints

If you have a complaint, question or comment about The Bayonet, call the editor at 545-2201.

Corrections

We strive for accuracy, so if we make a error, we will correct it in the next edition of The Bayonet. Call us at 545-2201.

ACS to host 30th birthday party

Celebration will include train rides, face painting, races, give aways

Army Community Service

Army Community Service, Fort Benning, will join other Army installations worldwide in celebrating its 30th birthday July 21 at Youth Services, Building 1056, from 10 a.m. until 4 p.m.

The theme for the birthday is "ACS — Three Decades of Success and Partnership."

A day of fun is planned. For a can of food for the food locker or a toy for Santa's Castle, one can get three balls for the dunking booth. A contest is being conducted to see whom people would like to see dunked.

There will be train rides, face painting, a cakewalk and fingerprinting for children, as well as sack races, three-legged races and a tug of war for people of all ages.

There will be a balloon toss and a magic show. McGruff, the Crime Dog, will pay a visit. Two FM radio stations will participate in the festivities, and you could get a chance to say a few words. Blinkie, the Safety Car, will roam the road.

How rotten is your sneaker? Bring it, and see if you can win the contest. Who has the ugliest pet? Come out and see. Get lots of hot dogs, soda, cake and munchies.

At the same time, the new Morale, Welfare and Recreation logo will be unveiled. The logo and the MWR slogan reflect the commitment of both MWR and ACS: "Serving America's Army."

There will be flying disks, visors, barbecue aprons, cups, coasters and many more things given away. There will be military displays and more.

ACS began providing information, referral and relocation services at six centers throughout the Army. Today there are 112 centers and nine ACS programs. The ACS programs include the original services of information, referral, follow-up and relocation assistance.

Over the years, as the Army changed from a primarily single-soldier, drafted force to an all-volunteer force with more married soldiers, more programs were added.

The other seven ACS programs are Exceptional Family Member, Crisis Assistance, Consumer Affairs and Financial Assistance, Family Member Employment Assistance, Outreach, Family Advocacy and Volunteer Coordination.

ACS also provides essential soldier, family, and unit support to commanders during mobilization and deployment.

Information about the ACS services and programs will be available at the celebration. Monday, at the ACS Birthday Luncheon in Washington, D.C., Linda Payne, a Fort Benning family member, is being honored as one of seven recipients of this year's Emma Baird Award. Payne is the first Fort Benning recipient of this award, the highest volunteer award given by the Army. It is named for Lt. Col. Emma Baird, the first ACS director. The award was established in 1990 to recognize volunteers who have contributed outstanding service to ACS. There are seven criteria for the award:

- Volunteer service in ACS for at least five years, and a minimum of 3,750 hours of contribution.
- A minimum of one year of volunteer work in the center submitting the nomination.
- Service or achievement has resulted in tangible or intangible benefits to the agency or community.
- Contribution was displayed at a high degree of initiative or originality.
- Demonstrated leadership in performing assigned duties that resulted in improved productivity or new or improved work methods, programs or services.
- Outstanding leadership in planning, organizing or directing a major program of importance or complexity.
- An established demonstrable pattern of excellence and achievement recognized by awards up to and including a major command award.

Payne has served as ACS volunteer supervisor and Tax Office coordinator at Fort Benning ACS, and she served in the tax office at Fort Lewis, Wash. She also volunteered as the Fort Benning installation volunteer coordinator between July 1993 and February 1994. She is a master trainer with the Army Family Team Building program. She and her family have moved to Fort Leavenworth, Kan.

Whom should get dunked?

Army Community Service

Army Community Service will celebrate its 30th birthday July 21, at Youth Services, Building 1056, with lots of activities.

One of the activities is a dunking booth. ACS wants to know whom you think should be in the dunking booth.

You can submit your ballot to Army Community Service, ATZB-PAF-A, Building 2643, Monday through Friday, 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. The deadline for suggestions is Wednesday.

There will be a prize for the person who makes the best suggestion and gets the person to participate.

Columbus offers summer activities for all ages

By Sanjay Lal
Special to The Bayonet

With summer once again upon us, there are numerous activities for those living in this area to become involved with.

Young people between the ages of 6 to 17, who are most likely free from school work right now, can occupy their free time by taking part in some of the many summer camps Columbus College's continuing education center will be hosting.

Basketball camp

Herb Greene, who is the head basketball coach of the Columbus College Cougars, will be conducting a summer camp on the fundamentals of basketball from July 31 to Aug. 1 in Columbus College's Woodruff Gym. This camp will meet from 9 a.m. to noon each day and will be for people between the ages of 7 and 17. Registration is $55. That fee will increase to $65 for those who register on-site the first day of camp.

In addition, Greene will be conducting a camp on shooting techniques from Aug. 1 to 3, also in the Woodruff Gym, from 6:30 to 9 p.m. Registration for this camp, which is for people between the ages of 13 and 17, is $45, and $55 for those who register on-site the first day of camp.

According to Greene, both camps are designed to accommodate all skill levels.

Cheerleading camp

Columbus College cheerleading coaches Jan Greene, Kay Walraven and Beth Myers are offering a cheerleading camp for girls between the ages of 6 and 15. This camp will last from July 24 to 28, and will feature cheers, chants, pompon routines, jumps, dances and tumbling as it builds to its grand finale July 28, a pep rally for families and friends. This camp will meet from 9 a.m. to noon each day in the Woodruff gym. Registration is $55, and $65 for those who register on-site the first day of camp.

Magic camp

The college will also host a magic camp for people between the ages of 8 and 13. This camp, which will be conducted by magician Mel Chaffee, will deal with sleight of hand and illusion with playing cards, ropes and coins as well as presentation and showmanship. This camp will last from July 17 to 21 for beginners and July 24 to 28 for intermediates. Each meeting will last from 6:30 to 8:30 p.m.

Other camps

In addition, the college is offering young people camps on soccer, cultural learning, art, beauty pageantry, cooking, string orchestra, writing, getting prepared for college, computer literacy, and personal fitness (to name a few) as well as golf, tennis, music, computer, and business training for adults. For a complete listing of what the college is offering, with times and costs, call Wanda Campbell of the Columbus College Continuing Education Center at 568-2134.

Columbus Museum

Adults who are looking for activities to involve themselves in with children can go to the Columbus Museum on Wednesdays this summer. Every Wednesday, until Aug. 9, the museum will be hosting "Wonderful Wednesday" activities from 11 a.m. to noon in its Patrick Theater.

These activities, which are intended for children 4 and up and their adult friends, will include a puppet play, adventure films intended to show the "wonderful world of color," an interactive relaying of Native American stories, performing of Native American dancing and music, a showing of the comedy "Animal Tales," an interactive performance of musical storytelling, a showing of modernized movie versions of classic fairy tales and an interactive presentation of folktales.

In addition, the Columbus Museum has on display, until Aug. 20, an exhibit by American Indian Contemporary Artists titled "Our Land Ourselves." This exhibit can be seen in the museum's Hardaway Gallary.

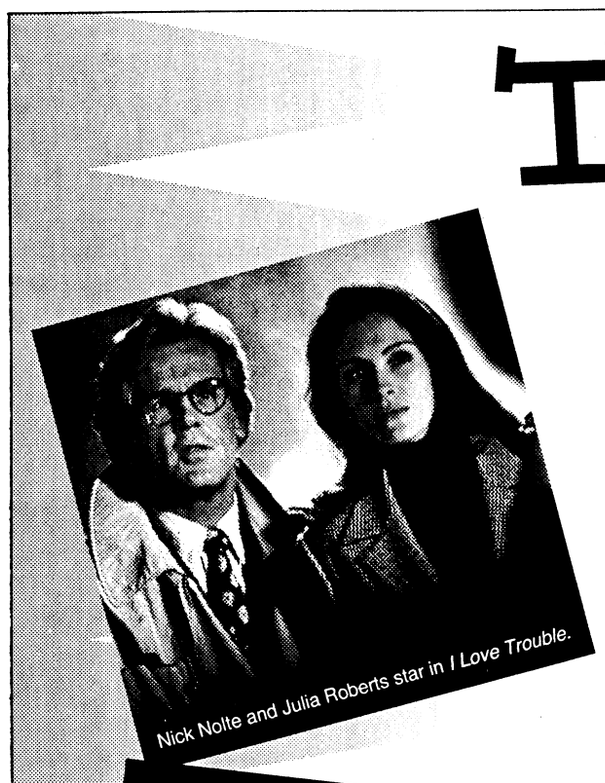
The museum is also displaying, until Sept. 3, "Seen through the Lens," a 20th century photography collection it has in its permanent holdings. This exhibit can be seen in the museum's Katherine Hazouri Gallery.

An exhibit of 70 craft works, organized by the Craft Alliance of St. Louis, can be seen, until Sept. 24, in the museum's Leeburn and Shorter Galleries. This exhibit, which is titled "Tales and Traditions: Storytelling in 20th-Century American Craft," focuses on the varieties of narrative and symbolic imagery that weave throughout the history of craft in the United States.

For more information on what's going on at the Columbus Museum, call 649-0711.

Springer Opera House

The Springer Opera House will continue its run of the "In the Mood" musical during this and next weekend. Tickets for the musical, which is described by the Opera House as being a "swinging cavellier" are $13.78 plus tax.



The Springer is also hosting a drama camp for people between the ages of 5 to 18 from July 10 to 24. The camp, which will deal with theater dancing and design, acting and scenic design, will go on from 9 a.m. to 12:30 p.m. each day.

No experience in the theater is necessary for enrolling in the camp. The camp's enrollment fee is $100.

For more information on the activities at the Springer, call 327-3688.

Author, speaker named women's vet center director

Department of Veterans Affairs

The Department of Veterans Affairs has named Joan A. Furey as director of the Center for Women Veterans, based in Washington.

In announcing the appointment, VA Secretary Jesse Brown said: "When Congress elevated VA's Women Veterans Program Office to the Center for Women Veterans, it was only appropriate that Furey be elevated with it.

"Her high-energy leadership of the program office has earned the respect of women veterans, service organizations and VA staff.

"Her vision and dedication will ensure that VA meets the changing needs of our women veterans now and into the 21st century."

In her new position, Furey will promote the use of existing, as well as develop new programs, benefits and services for women veterans. The center also will provide support services to the VA Advisory Committee on Women Veterans.

A Vietnam veteran, Furey began her VA career as a staff nurse at the VA Medical Center in Bay Pines, Fla.

After a short tour of duty at the VA Medical Center in Togus, Maine, she returned to Bay Pines as associate chief of nursing.

In 1989 she was appointed associate director for education at the National Center for Post-Traumatic Stress Disorder at the VA Medical Center in Palo Alto, Calif.

During her tenure at Palo Alto, the medical center established the first women veterans inpatient PTSD program.

In March 1994, Furey was appointed director of the Women Veterans Program Office at VA Central Office in Washington.

Furey earned a master's degree in nursing from New York University and a bachelor of science in nursing from the State University of New York at Stony Brook.

She is the author of numerous publications, has co-edited an anthology of poetry by women who served in Vietnam titled "Visions of War: Dreams of Peace," and is a frequent presenter before professional organizations.

"I am very excited about working with Secretary Brown to improve and upgrade services for women veterans," Furey said.

"Although women have defended this country since the Revolutionary War, their service is just beginning to be recognized.

"During the last few years, VA has worked hard to assure equal access for women veterans to the services and benefits they have earned.

"I am privileged to have been involved in developing some of the programs designed for this purpose and look forward to continuing this important work."

AAFES works to save Earth's natural resources

By Rudi Williams
American Forces Information Service

Imagine a world with little drinkable water, leafless trees and brown grass, severely polluted rivers and streams, scant wildlife, toxic waste oozing everywhere.

That's the gloomy future some environmentalists paint with the warning: if mankind continues abusing natural resources, Earth will become an unlivable place.

The Army and Air Force Exchange Service is trying to do its part to help the environment. But the service has a dilemma.

"It doesn't do much good to have Earth-friendly products if people don't want to buy them," philosophized Joe Werres, chief of the company's quality assurance division. "The best way to get our customers to buy these products is to let them know the merits of environmentally sound merchandise and inform them of the dangers of unsound products."

"We have an environmental marketing program to motivate our suppliers through our buyers to research and develop Earth-friendly products," said Anita P. Mitchell, an environmental marketing specialist. "We asked manufacturers to use less packaging and more recyclable materials, and generally to have less waste."

About four years ago, AAFES contacted its vendors asking for help in reducing waste. Manufacturers are now replacing ozone-depleting chemicals with Earth-friendly agents in products like spot removers and cleaners. Vendors are making merchandise and packaging from recycled materials.

"They've recognized that reducing waste — putting less in the environment — is good business," Mitchell said.

Industry is now swelling AAFES store shelves with a host of Earth-friendly products, said Air Force Lt. Col. C.D. Worthy, AAFES' staff environmental engineer.

One company is making bicycles from recyclable material. All computers AAFES sells meet the "energy star" standards for energy conservation.

Energy star is an Environmental Protection Agency initiative aimed at encouraging computer users to conserve energy. The agency promotes use of equipment that goes dormant when it is unused for a period, such as when the user is interrupted by a phone call, doorbell, crying child or visit.

"The greatest thing that's happened to the recycling business recently is the price of recyclable materials has gone up — tremendously," Worthy said. "The price for recyclable paper, for instance, has more than quadrupled in the past year. Cardboard used to be about $25 a ton, now it's $190 or more."

To garner its share of the market, AAFES has established year-round recycling and waste reduction programs called the "three R's" — reduce, reuse and recycle, Mitchell said.

Recycling is one of AAFES' big guns in its battle to help preserve the environment. Efforts begin at home — AAFES' headquarters in Dallas, Werres emphasized.

"We're trying to reduce the amount of waste entering the environment by using a worldwide electronic mailing system that cuts down the use of office paper," Mitchell said. "We also recycle office paper and cardboard boxes and use recycled toner cartridges."

"Plastic shopping bag recycling programs are in all main stores stateside," Worthy said. "We provide plastic shopping bags that contain recycled plastic.

"We've discovered that plastic is more environmentally correct than paper," Worthy noted. "One thousand paper bags weigh about 140 pounds, whereas 1,000 plastic bags weigh 18.7 pounds."

Mitchell said plastic shopping bag reuse hasn't caught on in the United States yet. The best environmental alternative is to use AAFES Earth-friendly reusable canvas shopping bags. They're on sale at cost at exchanges.

The company operates 12 recycling centers in four states — Massachusetts, New York, Delaware and Michigan — that recycle plastic, glass and metal containers, Mitchell said.

In other states, AAFES joined the Department of Defense recycling program, Worthy said. "We turn our cardboard and other material over to military installations to support their recycling programs."

AAFES also participates in an automotive oil recycling program and recycles antifreeze and car batteries.

"About 60 percent of Americans change their own oil in their vehicles," Worthy said. "The problem is, more than half of them pour it down the drain, on the ground or in the trash can, and it ends up in groundwater. So we maintain many of our service stations as places shade tree mechanics can pour their oil for recycling rather than polluting groundwater."

That problem would be minimized if customers started taking their used oils to recycling centers, Worthy noted. Their used oil can be recycled.

"Re-refined oil is on the market now, but it's hard to convince people to use it," he said. "People think it's recycled oil, and to them, that's bad. But it's not recycled oil, it's re-refined oil. Used oil goes through a complete refining process — all the water, heavy metals and chemicals are removed. Then it's run through a refining process that produces a pure product.

"It's internationally certified, and American Petroleum Institute licensed re-refined oils are as good as, if not better than, virgin oil," he said. "It's subjected the same stringent refining compounding and performance standards that apply to virgin oil. A major foreign auto maker installs re-refined oil in every new car manufactured in Germany.

"We're going to a new technology for recycling antifreeze," Worthy said. "AAFES uses a double filtration unit that's approved by the EPA and car manufacturers."

Customers are allowed to store turn in batteries for recycling at AAFES service stations. Contractors make weekly pickups. Mechanics capture asbestos fibers when servicing brakes at AAFES service stations. AAFES also recovers silver from its photo labs.

"By protecting our environment and conserving our resources we can preserve the health and safety of all living things for this generation and all future generations," said Werres. "We must work together. Protecting the environment is everyone's responsibility."

317th Engr Bn to change command

The 317th Engineer Battalion (Mechanized) will have a change of command ceremony Monday at 9 a.m. on Dickman Field. Lt. Col. Kenneth S. Kasprisin will relinquish command to Lt. Col. David A. Kingston.

63rd Eng conducting quarry operations

The 63rd Engineers will conduct quarry operations through July 30 on Marne Road to 10th Mountain Division Road to haul fill material to complete the culvert repair near the Defense Reutilization and Marketing Office. Caution should be exercised because of heavy truck traffic in this area.

3rd Bde to change commanders July 18

The 3rd Brigade, 24th Infantry Division (Mechanized), will have a change of command ceremony July 18 at 9 a.m. on York Field. Col. Michael Deegan will relinquish command to Col. Steven P. Schook.

Mayors' Council to meet third Weds

Mayors' Council meetings with the installation staff will take place the third Wednesday of each month at 9:30 a.m. in Infantry Hall, Room 550. If your designated representative is unable to attend, an alternate must be provided. You will be notified in advance of any changes or cancellations. Meeting dates are July 19, Aug. 16, Sept. 20, Oct. 18 and Nov. 15.

Controlled burning set

Controlled burning of woodland areas will take place through July 15.

If weather permits, the following compartments may be affected: F-4, M-7, O-10, V-3, W-3, AA and BB-2.

Burning will occur in pine stands within these compartments to enhance endangered species habitat and training areas. People using these areas for recreation must leave before 9:30 a.m. daily.

Training units using compartments next to these areas are reminded to exercise caution while traveling in these areas because of the potential for reduced visibility. Units using the ranges and training areas are reminded to remove flammable debris, such as pine straw, leaves, grass and trash from around structures in accordance with USAIC Regulation 210-4, Paragraph 5-22, Organizational Maintenance.

For more information, call 544-6206.

Siren system to be tested first Saturdays

The installation siren system will be tested at noon the first Saturday of each month. Units and activities listed will monitor siren testing and notify the field officer of the day and their staff duty officer at 545-5135 or 545-5245 within 30 minutes after each test and report the operational status of the sirens. Sirens will not be tested in the event of bad weather.

The following is a list of units and activities and their siren locations:

- Infantry Training Brigade — Sand Hill, 12th Street and Scott Avenue
- 3rd Brigade, 24th Infantry Division — Kelley Hill
- 36th Engineer Group — Indianhead Road, 1900 Block
- Ranger Training Brigade — Harmony Church, Hourglass Road
- 2nd Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment — Harmony Church, Elcaney Road
- U.S. Army Medical Department Activity — Marne Road, adjacent to Martin Army Community Hospital
- U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit — Rainbow Avenue and Baltzell Avenue
- Directorate of Public Works Fire Department No. 32 — Custer Terrace, Custer Road
- Directorate of Public Safety — Harmony Church, 8th Division Road and McGraw Manor

For more information, call Maj. James Kump at 545-1711.

OCS selection board

A recent message from Personnel Command announced the next OCS selection board has been scheduled for Sept. 26 to 29. Applications must arrive at PERSCOM by Sept. 15. There will be no exceptions. Applications must arrive in AG, Personnel Operations Division, Building 2619, not later than Aug. 4 to allow time for each applicant to appear before a local board.

For administrative support and application forms, contact Marie Lee, Adjutant General's Office, Personnel Operations and Services Division at 545-3341 or 545-4702.

Road closed

Effective immediately, the Old Cusseta Highway near Sand Hill will be closed at the reservation boundary until further notice.

Housing sets summer hours

The Directorate of Public Works Housing Division, Furnishing Management Branch, will operate at its summer operating hours through Sept. 29.

The new operating hours are 7 a.m. to 3:30 p.m. Monday through Friday. The office will close for lunch from 11 to 11:30 a.m.

For information, call 545-6713.

Voter slogan contest open through July 14

The Federal Voting Assistance Program is having its 1995 voter slogan contest to increase voter awareness and participation by military members, and their families. Anyone may submit an entry.

All military members and their families and other citizens are encouraged to participate in the contest. Enter as many slogans and as often as you wish.

Slogans should be submitted on letter size, 8 1/2 x 11 paper, and each page must include your full name, service if military, mailing address, fax number or E-mail, if available, and daytime phone number.

Send your slogans to: The Federal Voting Assistance Program, Room 1B457, The Pentagon, Washington, D.C. 20301. All slogans must be received by July 14.

MP Info Center changes its hours

The Military Police Information Center at the main entrance to Fort Benning has been renovated and now has new hours of operation.

The new hours are Monday through Friday from 8 a.m. to 9 p.m. and Saturday, Sunday and holidays from 9 a.m. to 6 p.m.

For more information, call Sgt. Rachelle Arrington at 545-1146.

The company's phone number is 689-6367.

CID requests help finding car thief

Between 12:01 a.m. April 21 and 7 a.m. April 22, someone stole a 1993, teal in color, two-door Pontiac Sunbird, with Tennessee license plate ZCP488, from a carport adjacent to 69-B Dunn Court.

Anyone having information concerning this incident can contact the Military Police at 545-5222 or Special Agent Kelly McCrate, Criminal Investigation Division, at 545-4981 or 545-2414.

The identity of anyone providing information will be kept in the strictest confidence.

CID looking for killer

The U.S. Army Criminal Investigation Command is offering a $1,000 reward concerning the circumstances surrounding the death of Takashi Moore March 2.

Moore was found by a Military Police Patrol at approximately 4:30 a.m. March 2 alongside of Highway 27, adjacent to the 8th Division Road overpass.

Moore had suffered several large abrasions to his upper body and died as a result of massive head injuries.

The reward will be paid to anyone providing information that leads to the apprehension and conviction of the people responsible.

The identity of the person providing information concerning this incident will be held strictly confidential.

If any information can be provided regarding this incident, contact the Fort Benning MP Station at 545-5222 or 545-5223, or Special agent William W. Tarr, Fort Benning Resident Agency, USACIDC at 545-5272 or 545-3984.

Donovan Library has new hours

The U.S. Army Infantry School Donovan Technical Library located in Infantry Hall, Room 101, is now open Mondays through Thursdays from 7 a.m. to 6 p.m., Fridays from 7 a.m. to 4 p.m., Saturdays from 9 a.m. to 1 p.m. and closed Sundays and holidays.

For more information, call 545-6053 or 545-3390.

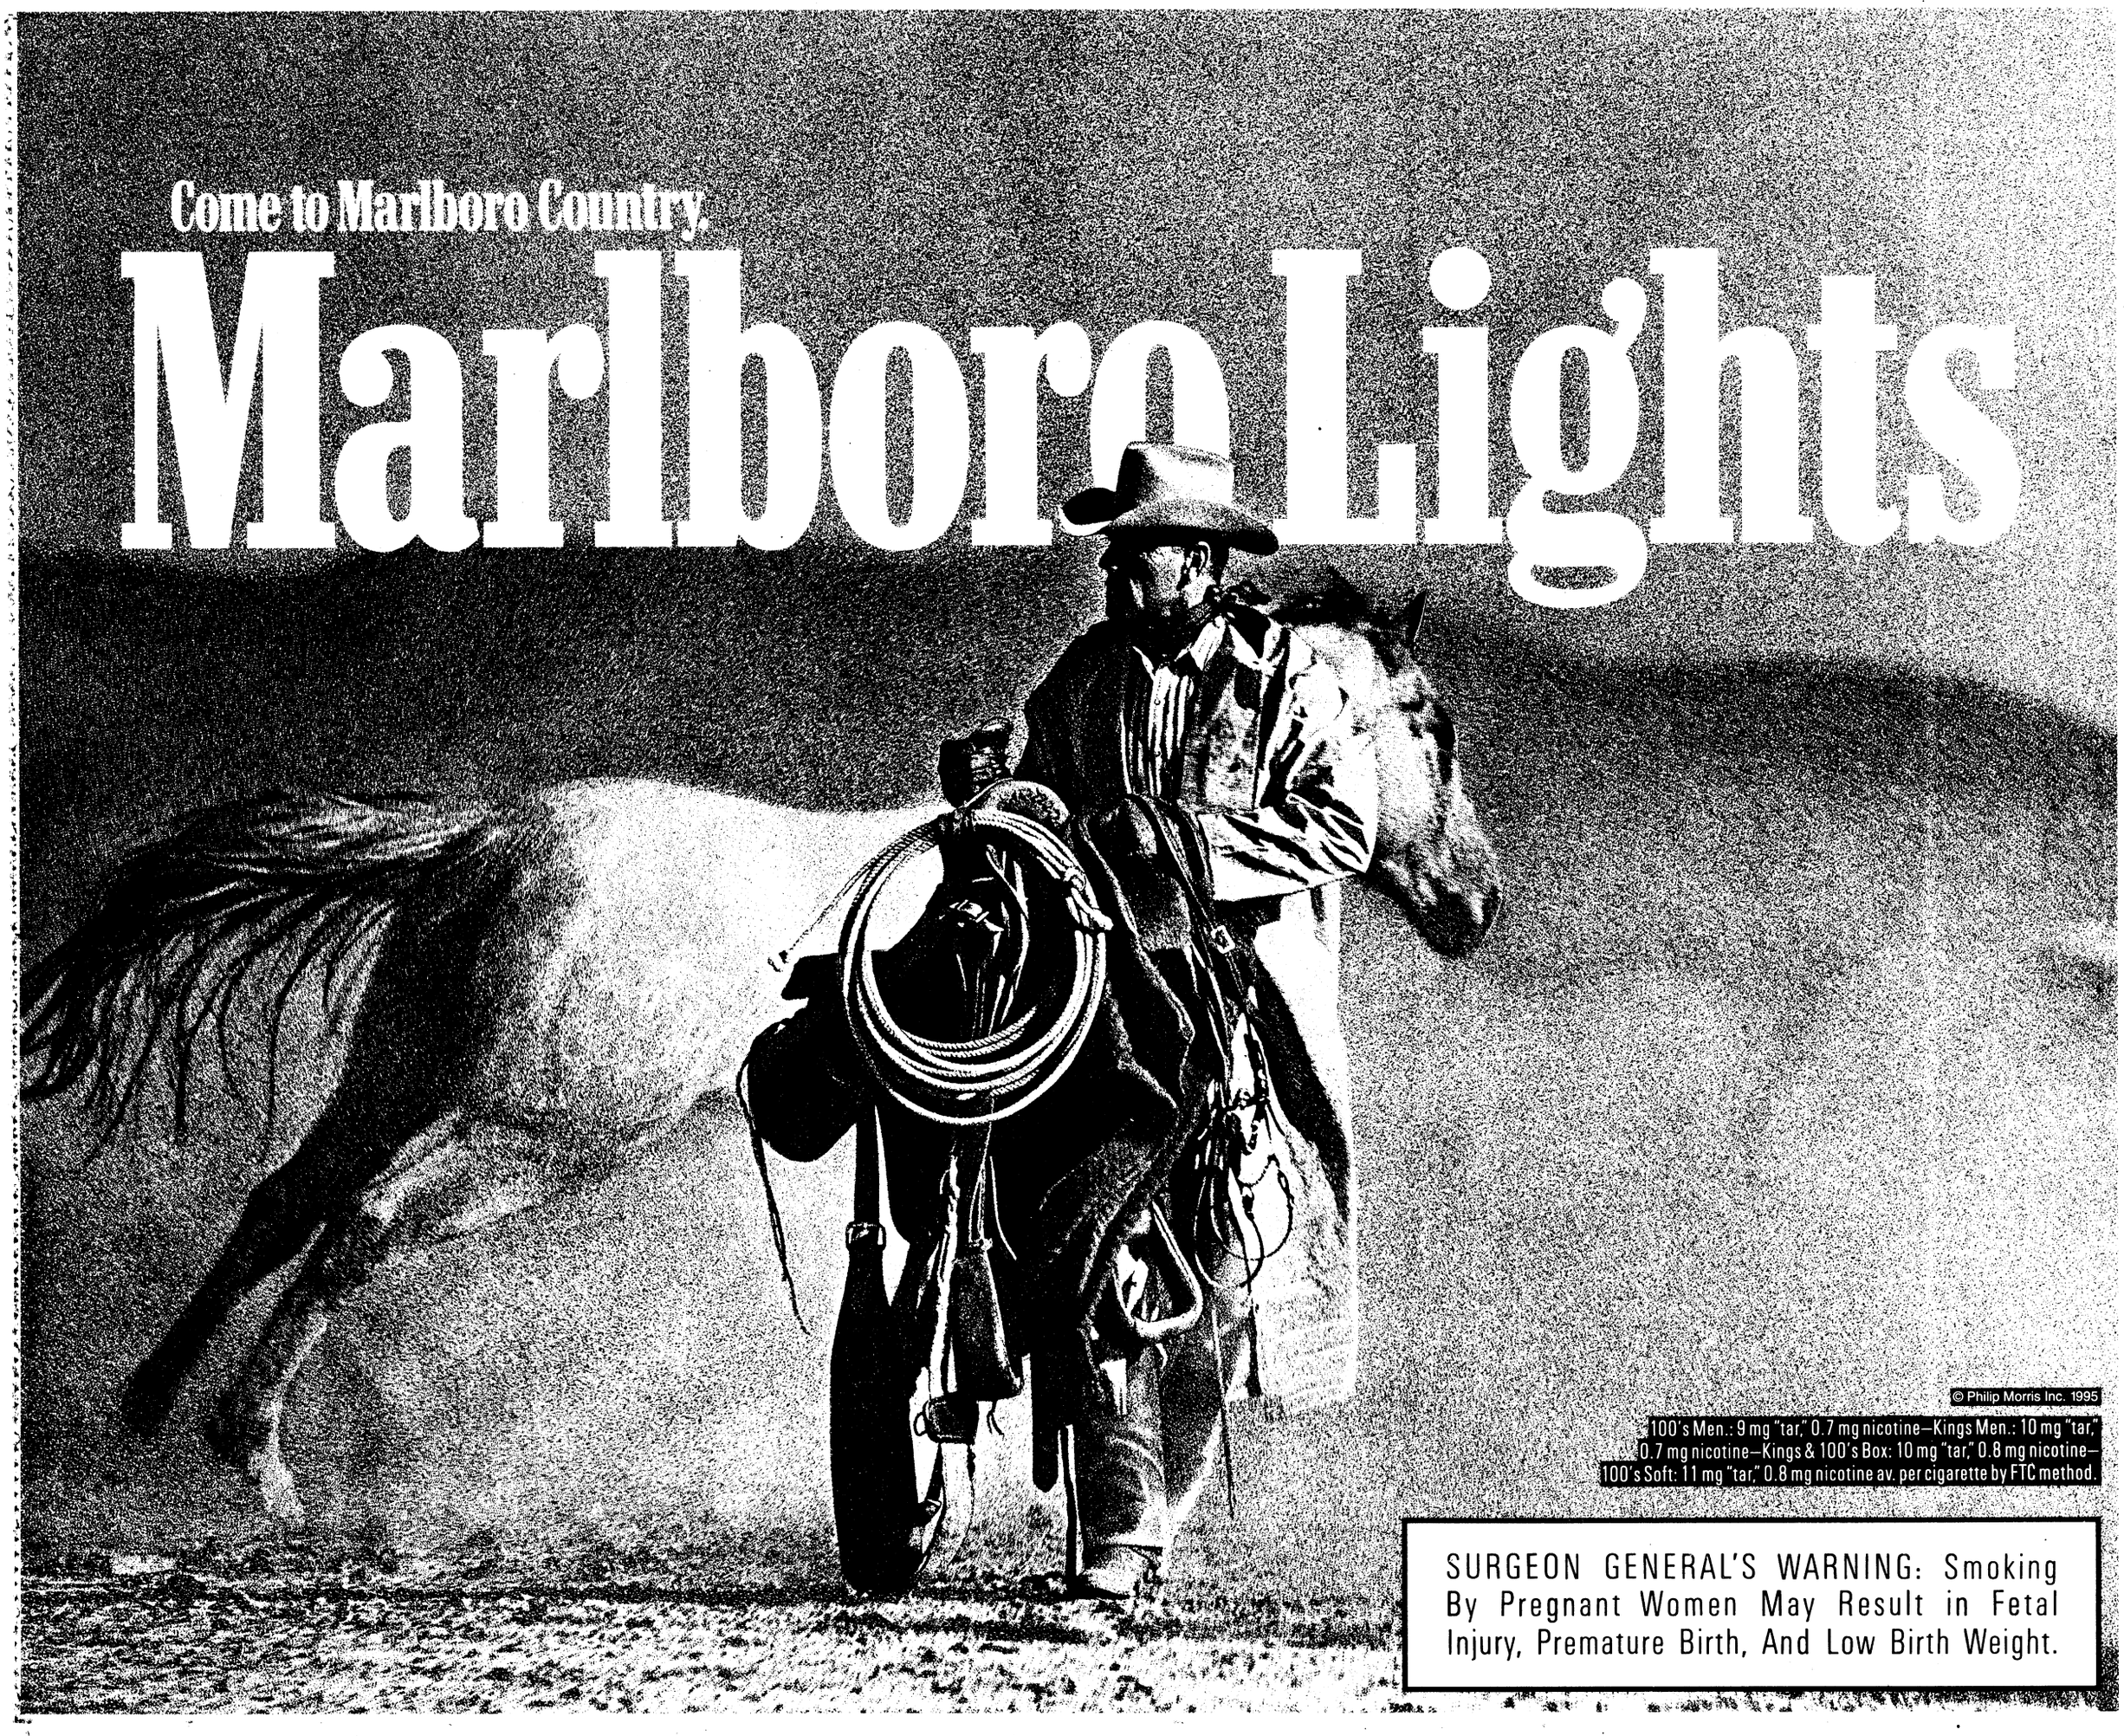
MCSS to exchange tight BDU shirts

Army military clothing sales stores will accept exchanges on certain battle dress uniform shirts, following a pattern redesign that causes sleeves to be too tight when rolled.

While the flaw has been corrected for future procurement, soldiers in possession of improperly fitting BDU coats can exchange them, at no cost, until Sept. 30.

Soldiers are encouraged to try on the coat before purchasing, ensuring a comfortable fit when sleeves are rolled, officials said.

Returned coats must be in serviceable condition.



Infantry Chorus needs volunteers

The Fort Benning chorus is looking for any soldier who wishes to volunteer for six months. Soldiers who are selected will be attached to the 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment.

To audition, soldiers must get approval from their chain of command. Vocalists and pianists are needed.

For more information, call 545-4225, 545-4227 or 545-7078.

TRADOC wins design achievement award

TRADOC News Service

FORT MONROE, Va. — The Training and Doctrine Command's 1991 Communities of Excellence program has been selected as a 1995 Federal Design Achievement Award winner by the National Endowment for the Arts.

The national award is given every four years. A Department of Defense official accepted the award during the ceremony May 24 at Postal Square in Washington, D.C.

Jean Hecimovich, of TRADOC's Deputy Chief of Staff Base Operations, Office of the Engineer, submitted the nomination packet, selecting the 1991 TCOE program to represent the command.

The TCOE program set appearance standards for TRADOC installations, trained those standards, annually scored progress and gave awards in several categories.

There were dramatic improvements, and as every installation improved, pride grew.

The eligibility dates were June 1, 1984, through June 1, 1994, but the project had to be in place long enough for the jury to evaluate performance and user satisfaction.

The jury, or panel of judges, is comprised of 23 design experts from across the country.

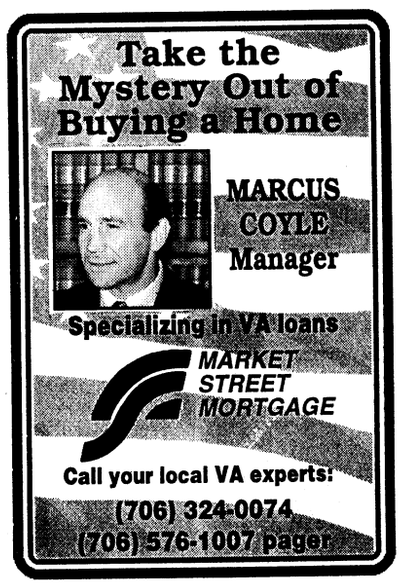
They are experts in architecture and interior design, graphic design and product/industrial design, landscape architecture, urban design and planning, and engineering.

The competition is open to all federal agencies, and the more than 400 entries showed a varied spectrum of projects, from an interstate rest area program to a redesigning of a township to a publication of a customer service guide to a solar energy research facility.

Hecimovich said the 1991 TCOE program was selected because, "we felt that was a banner year for TCOE. Everything came together. We put out excellence manuals, detailing clearly the facility standards for the program; we brought the TCOE installation contacts here to the area to train them; that was one of the first years we evaluated services as part of the program. It was just a good year." The manuals Hecimovich spoke of are still in use today.

Seventy-seven winners were chosen, representing 75 government agencies and departments. There were no Army winners.

In the forward of the book highlighting last year's winners, the largest purchaser of design government is committed to design, thus serving as a model President Bill Clinton wrote, "as services in the world, the federal agencies achieving the highest standards of excellence for the private sector."



The seeds of TRADOC's program gave birth to The Army Communities of Excellence program in the mid-80s and used as the model for the Army program.

Although the engineer office oversaw the program then, TCOE has since been transferred to other activities within TRADOC.

According to the program given out during the awards, the Federal Design Achievement Awards illustrate some of the effective ways that the combination of art and science in design are serving both government and society.

The 77 winners advance to the fall competition for the Presidential Design Award for Excellence, the country's highest design award.

In the past competition, only eight projects were honored with a Presidential Award.

ACAP offers training

By Mary Allen
Army Career and Alumni Program

The Army Career and Alumni Program office sponsors a skill development program that provides training opportunities for soldiers, civilians and family members who are transitioning from the Army.

A new partner in the program, Transportation Technologies South Inc., offers training for persons pursuing a career in heavy equipment operations, commercial drivers licenses or both.

The Trans-Tech South training program was conceived to provide all aspects of heavy equipment operator and class A driver training. The training center is located on Route 1, Box 282C, Opelika, Ala. The training center is 14 miles west of Phenix City on Highway 80.

The company operates full-time and part-time programs of instruction for soldiers. The course includes 200 hours of detailed instruction for students in the operation, maintenance and safety of heavy equipment and another 200 hours of instruction on commercial drivers training.

"Although our program may not be for everyone, almost anyone with a reasonable degree of motor skills and a willing mind can learn to operate heavy equipment or drive a truck,"said Joe Stanley, owner of Trans-Tech South.

Financial help may be available for eligible soldiers. Generally, soldiers who are transitioning as a result of the downsizing of the Army will qualify for the grants.

The only way to be sure a soldier is eligible for a grant is to register at ACAP for a referral to the Department of Labor for final approval. For those who are not eligible for a grant, Trans-Tech South has alternative financing plans to discuss with soldiers.

To learn more about the Trans-Tech South heavy equipment training programs, call Stanley at (334) 298-9194 or call the ACAP office at 545-4892 or 545-7009.

608th performs multipurpose role

Company supports post commitments, deployments

By Shannon Day
Special to The Bayonet©

When a unit has so many missions that it is nearly impossible to get all of the soldiers in the same formation, a person might expect a lot of disorganization, miscommunication and mistakes to occur.

Capt. Don. G. Herko, commander, 608th Ordnance Company, adamantly disputed that notion.

The 608th Ordnance Company is assigned to the 13th Corps Support Battalion, which supports the 36th Engineer Group (Combat) at Fort Benning. It has never lost any ammunition and has an accuracy rate of 97 percent when it comes to keeping track of the ordnance.

If that isn't impressive enough, consider that the company receives, stores and issues ammunition to 76 active units and 156 Reserve and National Guard units — handling $60 million of ordnance annually.

In addition to the mission performed at Fort Benning, Herko can list several places to which the unit has deployed.

"Our wartime mission is to be deployable anywhere," he said. "We have dealt with a lot of adversity such as Saudi Arabia and Somalia."

The unit also deploys to places in the United States for training missions, such as supporting the ranger regiment at Fort Polk, La.

He added the unit is also getting ready to deploy 41 soldiers to the National Training Center in California.

"Due to the drawdown, we are the only active ordnance unit left that is equipped to operate a port," Herko said. "When you are the only one who can do something, it puts you in high demand."

Not only does the unit perform all of these military tasks, but it also supports the community by providing funeral details and truck drivers for very important person details, according to the commander.

"We also do a lot for the Infantry Museum, such as moving vehicles in and out of the building with our 40-ton cranes," said Sgt. Shawn R. Wimbush, crane operator, 608th Ord. Co.

"Once we went to Ruth Range and moved a big rail car so they could use it as a warehouse," said Sgt. Dwight E. Wormer, crane operator, 608th Ord. Co.

In spite of their demanding jobs, the soldiers agree the unit doesn't forget about their professional development.

"It's rough at times; but, since I have been here, I have been able to go to college and through the Basic Noncommissioned Officer Course," Wormer said.

Wimbush said he has also had an opportunity to go to school since he has been in the unit.

As the unit commander, Herko explained he tries to ensure all of the soldiers have equal chances for education.

"I sign a lot of tuition assistance forms," he said.

"We have so many different MOSs (military occupational specialties) here that there isn't a lot of competition between soldiers," Herko said.

Wimbush said he believes having soldiers who can perform so many different jobs makes the unit versatile, a necessity for a company with numerous taskings.

"Being in an ordnance unit, there are people everywhere," Wimbush said. "Sometimes you won't see your platoon for a month because of all the missions. You have to be flexible and you have to deal with change at a moment's notice."

"We have many different MOSs but, within the squad, we always get along," Wormer said. "First you become friends. From those friendships stem values and esprit de corps."

Spc. Christopher R. Adams, crane operator, 608th Ord. Co., attributes the unit cohesion to an outstanding chain of command.

"When I have a problem concerning my family or anything, I feel like I can go to my chain of command and be taken care of," Adams said.

"This is the best unit I have ever been in as far as the soldier getting taken care of and for family support," Wormer said.

2nd MASH inactivates after 88 years of service

New hospital will take over unit's duties

By Ruth J. Spaller
Bayonet staff writer

The 2nd Mobile Army Surgical Hospital furled its colors for the last time June 30 to the tune of the M*A*S*H television show theme song "Suicide is painless."

Though the name of the song may seem inappropriate for a medical unit, said Lt. Col. Edward S. Crosbie, commander of the 2nd MASH, he found it ironically fitting because this is the third unit he has seen inactivate.

It is painful to see the 2nd MASH inactivate, Crosbie said, because "This unit has accomplished a great deal, and I couldn't be more proud of any group of soldiers than those that stand before you today."

The combat health system has been evolving ever since Gen. George Washington first recognized the importance of maintaining soldiers' health at Valley Forge, said Brig. Gen. Harold L. Timboe, commander of the 44th Medical Brigade at Fort Bragg, N.C., who was here for the ceremony.

Brian, PLS paste 2nd MASH art here.

"The action we take today is really born out of victory," Timboe said.

"We won the Cold War, we showed the great capabilities America's military has in the Gulf War, and so today as we reassess what we need for future national security, we recognize that the Army needs to change.

"Part of that change is a doctrinal change where we have fewer MASH hospitals, more forward surgery and less units on active duty," Timboe said.

The 14th Field Hospital, which is scheduled to come to Fort Benning in October 1996, will assume some of the duties of the 2nd MASH.

As for the unit's personnel, Crosbie will become executive officer of the 62nd Medical Group at Fort Lewis, Wash.

Sgt. Maj. Ricky E. Cross, 2nd MASH sergeant major, is being assigned to the Sergeant Major Academy at Fort Bliss, Texas.

The rest of the soldiers assigned to the 2nd MASH will also move on to new assignments.

11th Infantry welcomes new CO

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Col. John P. Lewis succeeded Col. Walter Wojdakowski as commander of the 11th Infantry Regiment Thursday at 9 a.m. during a ceremony on York Field.

Lewis comes to Fort Benning after having served in a variety of command and staff positions during his career. He commanded the 5th Battalion, 20th Infantry Regiment, 2nd Infantry Division, Camp Casey, Korea, and was the director of Plans and Operations, Combined Joint Task Force 190 in Haiti during Operation Restore Democracy. He was most recently assigned as the chief of Task Force Planning, Forces Command, Fort McPherson, Atlanta.

He is a distinguished military graduate of Northern Michigan University and holds a master's degree in training technology from Purdue University. Lewis is a graduate of the Infantry Basic and Advanced courses, the Command and General Staff College, the School of Advanced Military Studies and the Army War College.

Lewis' awards include the Meritorious Service Medal with seven oak leaf clusters, the Army Commendation Medal with three oak leaf clusters, the Expert Infantryman Badge, the Parachutist Badge and the Air Assault Badge.

Lewis is married to the former Nancy Rosentretter of Monticello, Ind., and has three grown children.

Wojdakowski's next assignment is the director of training, 7th Army Training Command, Grafenwoehr, Germany. He previously commanded the 2nd Armor Division's 3rd Battalion, 41st Infantry Regiment (Tiger Brigade), at Fort Hood, Texas, and in operations Desert Shield and Desert Storm.

Among Wojdakowski's awards are the Silver Star and Bronze Star medals, the Legion of Merit, the Meritorious Service Medal, the Combat and Expert Infantryman badges, Ranger Tab, the Master Parachutist Badge and the German and Canadian Parachutist badges.

He and his wife, Candy, have two children.

RI National Guard to sponsor jumpfest

Rhode Island Army National Guard

The 13th annual International Static Line Parachute competition (Leapfest 1995) will be conducted Aug. 19 and 20, hosted by the Rhode Island Army National Guard. This competition is the largest static line competition conducted in the world.

The Leapfest competition consists of teams from all branches of the service as well as allied teams such as the United Kingdom, Germany, Tunisia, Brazil and Canada. Teams consist of six soldiers per team, four primary jumpers, one static jumpmaster and one alternate jumper.

The rules are simple — each jumper exits the aircraft and performs a parachute landing fall. Jumpers are timed from the time they hit the ground to the time they cross the "X" marking the center of the drop zone with all of their equipment. Individual awards and team awards are presented at the awards banquet to take place immediately after the competition.

Transportation, billets and most meals are provided with the entrance fee of $300 per team. A C-130 is scheduled to pick up participants at Pope Air Force Base Aug. 18 with a return scheduled Aug. 20.

For more information and reservations, call DSN 557-3330 or (401) 885-5210 or 885-5211.

36th Engineers get new boss

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Command of the 36th Engineer Group will change hands today during a 9 a.m. ceremony on York Field.

Col. Thomas L. Bailey will accept command from Col. Dean A. Kershaw.

Bailey, from Erie, Pa., was commissioned upon graduation from Auburn University and holds a master of engineering administration degree from George Washington University.

He entered active duty in November 1971 and commanded companies with the 46th Engineer Battalion, Fort Rucker, Ala., and was assigned to the Army Recruiting Command in Asheville, N.C. and Charlotte, N.C., and he served in the Office of the Chief of Engineers, Washington, D.C., and taught at the U.S. Army Engineer School, Fort Belvoir, Va.

He was also the operations officer of the 94th Engineer Battalion, Darmstadt, Germany.

He commanded Joint Task Force 937 in Bolivia, and the 34th Engineer Battalion at Fort Riley, Kan.

TRADOC names best civilian personnel offices, employees

TRADOC News Service

FORT MONROE, Va. — For nine years Training and Doctrine Command has honored civilian personnel employees and offices for their outstanding leadership and customer services through the TRADOC Civilian Personnel Excellence Awards.

This year's winners, nine individuals and four civilian personnel offices, reflect high standards of performance and evidence of excellence in leading, caring and customer service from January 1994 through March. Engraved plaques and headquarters TRADOC certificates will be awarded at the local installations.

The awards also recognize significant individual and group achievements in civilian personnel administration.

The Sustained Leadership in Civilian Personnel Administration Award was awarded to Theresa Gunter, civilian personnel officer, Fort Benning, and Thomas Rogers, chief, Personnel Management Support Office, Fort Lee, Va. They are both three-time winners of the leadership award.

The Leadership in Civilian Personnel Administration was awarded to Bill Farris, civilian personnel officer, Fort Sill, Okla.

The Outstanding TRADOC Civilian Personnel Office is Fort Sill.

Six individuals were awarded the Technical Excellence in Civilian Personnel Administration Award: Walter Dane, Fort Lee; Richard Dooley, Fort Sill; Mildred Watts and Judith Pennington, Fort Benning; Feliciano Chavez, Fort Bliss, Texas; and Margaret Cwens, Fort Eustis, Va.

The Outstanding TRADOC Nonappropriated Fund Personnel Office is Fort Sill. Chief of NAF Personnel Barbara Ritchie and her staff were recognized for outstanding performance and achievements in customer service, labor and management and employment relations, automation and modernization initiatives, and training and development.

The Outstanding Servicing Non-TRADOC Civilian Personnel Office Award went to the Defense Finance and Accounting Service, Human Resources Directorate, Indianapolis, Ind., for exceptional service under the leadership of Larry Schmalfeldt, civilian personnel officer.

The Sustained Outstanding TRADOC Civilian Personnel Office is Fort Benning, whose staff are three-time winners of this award.

The winners were selected by committee from nominees around TRADOC. Except for the Outstanding Servicing Civilian Personnel Office Award, nominees are TRADOC CPOs and TRADOC CPO employees. CPOs of other commands who provide services to TRADOC activities, through cross-servicing agreements, were eligible for the Outstanding Servicing CPO Award.

Teacher, student receive awards

Fort Benning Schools

• Stephanie Fry, an eighth-grader at Faith Middle School, represented the State of Georgia at the National History Day Competition June 11 through 15 at the University of Maryland.

Fry's entry into the individual paper category on the theme of "Conflict and Compromise" was titled "The Nuremberg Trials of Nazi War Criminals."

Fry won a medallion emblematic of the "Georgia State Award" for the highest score on any project, paper or performance of any middle school or high school student in the state.

The paper was read at the National History Day Competition at the University of Maryland and she was interviewed by three historians who served as the judges in that aspect of the competition.

• Dr. Wanda H. Person, a fifth-grade teacher at White Elementary School, has been selected as a state winner in the 1995 Technology and Learning Teacher of the Year program.

Person will receive recognition in the September issue of Technology and Learning Magazine.

A national winner will be chosen later this summer.

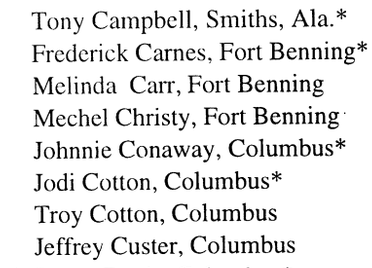
SOA soldiers take advantage of education

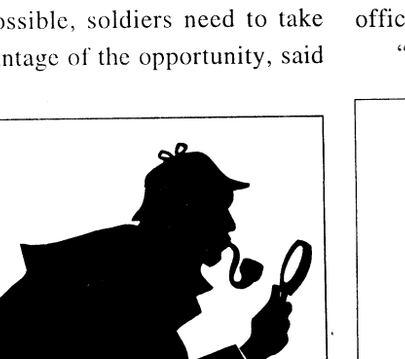
By Judith Ginder
School of the Americas

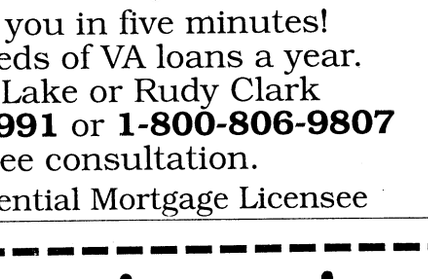
Although many soldiers have good intentions of completing a college degree while on active duty, most spend more time talking about it than actually doing it.



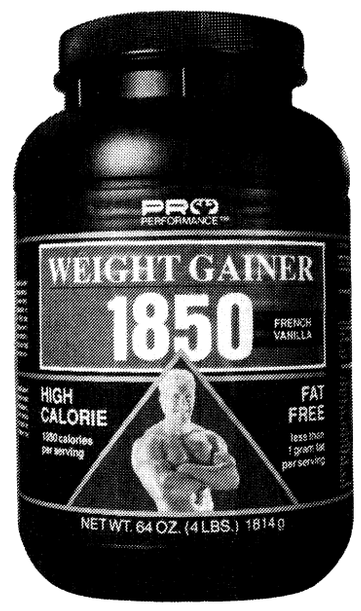
In many units, soldiers can't take college courses at night because of the mission. Where it is possible, soldiers need to take advantage of the opportunity, said Command Sgt. Maj. Vincent Sampson of the School of the Americas.

Sampson and four other soldiers at SOA recently earned degrees from Troy State University.





"I've been going to school at night full-time for the past two years," said Sgt. 1st Class Blanca Adams, SOA security and intelligence noncommissioned officer in charge.



"There were times when it was tough to juggle work, family and school, but it's definitely worth it in the long run."

The following soldiers earned degrees: Sgt. Benjamin Badie, a master's degree in human resources management; Sampson and Adams, a bachelor's degree in criminal justice; Staff Sgt. Ricardo Linton, an associate's degree in computer information systems and Spc. Juanita Scott, an associate's degree in general studies.

Military Police Activity

This week's hot topic is about drunk driving. Summer is upon us once again and with that brings cookouts, parties and trips to lakes and beaches. During these months driving accidents increase due to more people drinking and driving.

Annually, 57,000 people die in traffic accidents on our nation's highways. More than half of these accidents involve alcohol. Alcohol-related accidents often result in the death of innocent motorists, passengers and pedestrians. Penalties for drunk driving include fines, license suspension and imprisonment. Don't risk losing your family or friends — use a designated driver or take a taxi.

The following entries were extracted from the Fort Benning Military Police blotters. Such entries may be incomplete and do not prove the guilt or innocence of any person.

• A private first class was charged with excessive speed, fleeing and eluding, no proof of insurance, no post decal and no motorcycle defensive driver's course card.

While on routine patrol, the Military Police officers observed a motorcycle traveling at an excessive speed.

A traffic stop was attempted, but the operator failed to stop. He then lost control of the vehicle and left the road sliding to a stop.

Upon contact with the operator, a strong odor of alcohol was detected.

The soldier was then transported to the medical center for injuries and administered a blood alcohol test with the results of .21.

He was released from the medical center and transported to the Military Police station, issued a suspension of post driving privileges and released to his unit.

• Two civilians were charged with shoplifting when they were observed removing various items from a display shelf and placing them under their clothes and in a purse.

The two then left the store without paying at which time they were detained. Upon arrival of the Military Police, they were apprehended and transported to the Military Police station where they were issued identification card confiscation orders, had post exchange privileges suspended and were released to family members.

Remember to help "Make our Post the Best — Give Crime Arrest." Report any activity that seems wrong or out of place to the Military Police at 545-5223 or 545-5224 or the "Crime in Progress" line 545-5222.

Q: I recently entered into a contract for a local dating service. Immediately after paying for the service and signing the contract, the company conducted an interview to determine who would be a compatible match. After this interview, but before I was provided with a match, I received orders to go to Germany. The contract states that after an interview has been completed, I am only entitled to half my money back.

I know that if I receive orders to Germany I can get out of my housing lease, but can I do the same thing in this case?

A: It is true that under Georgia law, armed forces members who receive orders for a permanent change of station or temporary duty orders for more than three months may terminate their household lease. If this occurs, you would be liable for 30 days rent after you give the landlord written notice and proof of assignment, along with any other costs to repair damage to the premises. This law does not apply to soldiers who become eligible for on-post housing and break their lease.

The lease law does not apply to ordinary contracts such as the dating service. In this case, you entered into a perfectly valid contract that is governed by its terms. This means that since the dating service did the interview, then you are only entitled to half your money.

To protect yourself from being caught in a contract that cannot be completed due to a change of station, the service member should insist that a clause such as the following be added to the contract: "In the event military orders or military transfers necessitate the termination of this agreement, the servicemember agrees to provide the agents of the dating service with copies of the orders and the agreement will be terminated with all payments made by servicemember to be refunded to the servicemember."

If you have any questions about a contract, contact the Legal Assistance Division, located at Building 5, Main Post, corner of Vibbert and Sigerfoos. The telephone number is 545-3281 or 545-3282.

Protecting aging parents' medical, financial well-being

Georgia Society of Certified Public Accountants Inc.

Discussions with aging parents about their financial affairs can be difficult for children and parents. Nonetheless, the Georgia Society of CPAs says it is important for families to have such discussions in case a sudden event makes it necessary for children to manage their parents' finances. To help you get started, CPAs recommend that you address the following questions.

Can your parents handle day-to-day finances? — If your parents could use some help managing their day-to-day finances, there are several ways you can assist them. First, arrange for direct deposits of Social Security, pension, and dividend checks into their savings or checking accounts. It is also possible to have recurring bills, such as gas, electric, and telephone bills, automatically paid as well. Also, your parents could open an asset management account that combines savings, checking, investments, and credit/debit cards into one monthly statement.

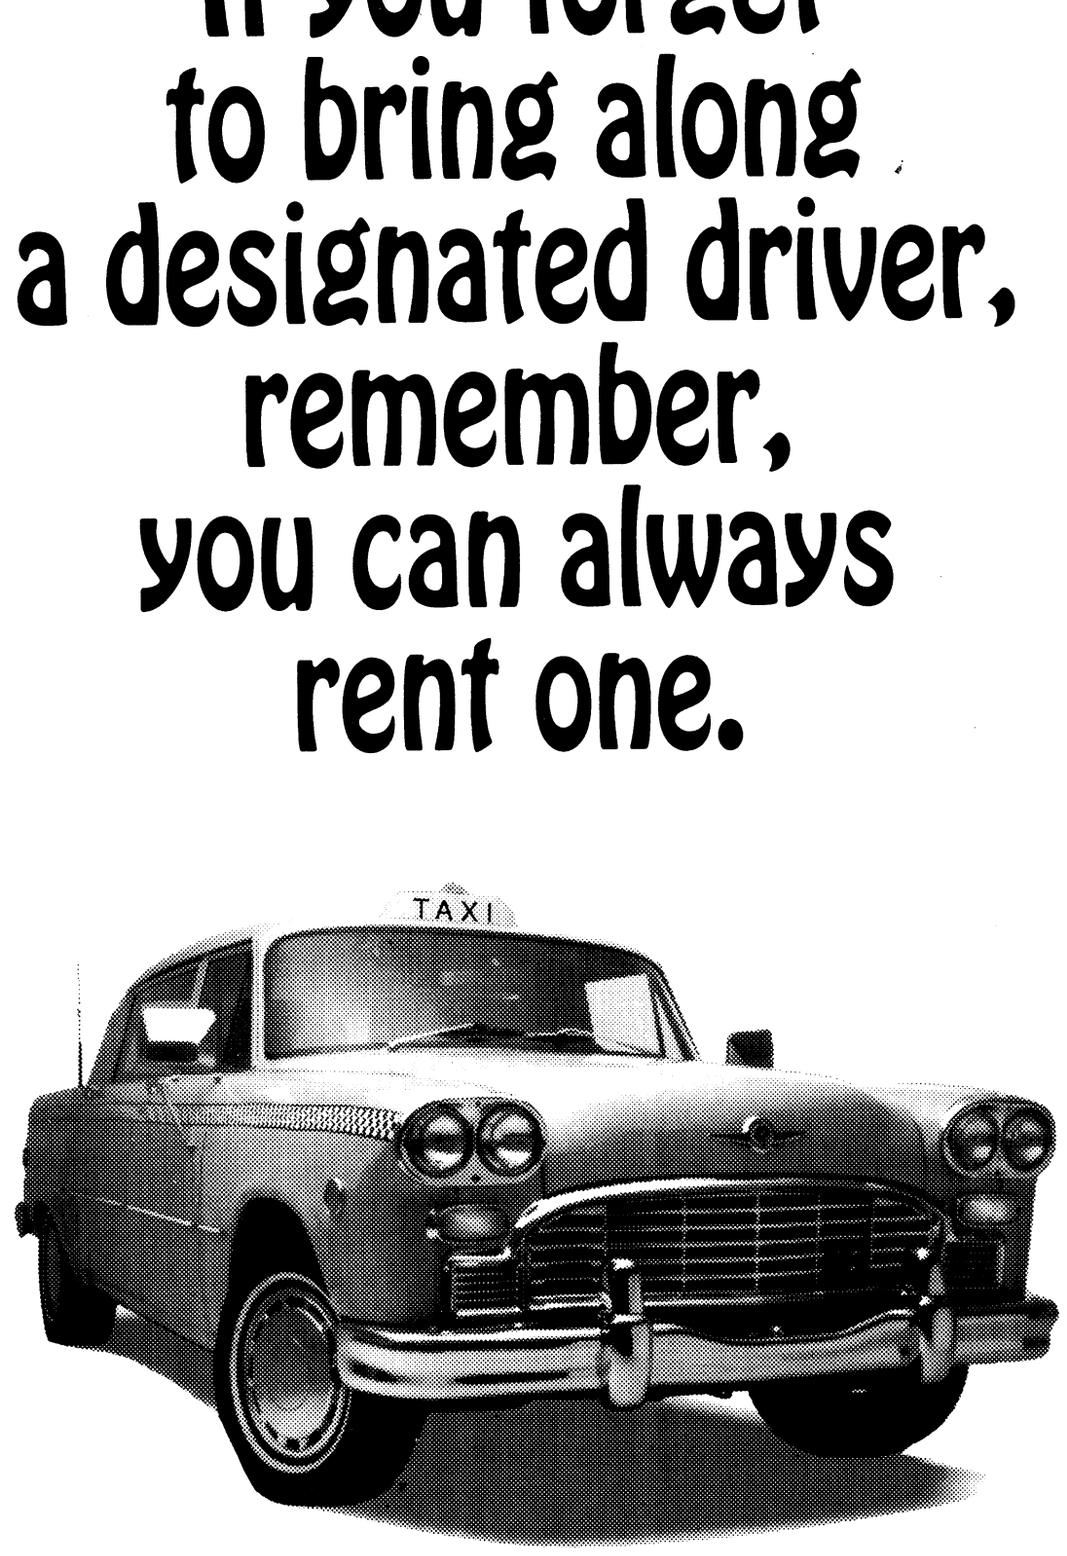
Do you know where important records are? — Even if elderly parents seem perfectly capable of carrying out routine money management tasks, it's important that you have an overall understanding about their financial affairs. Ask your parents to prepare a list of their assets, liabilities, and other pertinent financial information. Make it clear that you don't need to know how much they are worth or who will inherit their assets — you merely need to know where you can locate this important information in the event something happens to them. It's also important that you know where to find your parents' important papers, such as wills, cemetery deeds, real estate deeds, and life insurance policies. If these and other documents are stored in a safe deposit box, find out where the box and key is located.

Is there a durable power of attorney? — What if senility or a serious illness left one or both of your parents unable to manage by themselves? If no legal provisions have been made, the courts may appoint a guardian to handle your parents' finances. To avoid this situation, it's wise for parents to draw up necessary legal documents before they are needed.

A durable power of attorney allows a parent to give another person — usually a spouse or a child — permission to handle their financial affairs. Be sure that the power of attorney is durable; an ordinary power of attorney is not valid once a person becomes incapacitated.

A springing power of attorney, which is available in most states, is an option for parents who don't want to give immediate power to their adult children. With a springing power of attorney, your parent can specify the conditions under which the power of attorney "springs' into effect. For example, if the parent becomes physically or mentally incompetent.

Keep in mind, too, that banks will not always accept outside durable powers of attorney. Some banks require that they be designated as the durable power. Have your parents check with their bank to avoid any problems down the road.



Is there adequate health insurance coverage? — If your parents are age 65 or older, they qualify for Medicare. However, it's wise to have some form of Medigap, or supplementary health insurance, which covers deductibles and portions of medical bills not reimbursed by Medicare. Benefits and premium costs of Medigap plans vary greatly, so help your parents shop for the most cost-effective policy.

Do your parents need financial help? — After speaking with your parents about their finances, you may discover that they need financial help. If you're able to provide such assistance, CPAs say there are tax strategies that may ease your financial burden.

First, if a parent has a gross income under $2,500 in 1995 and you contribute more than half of his or her living expenses, you may be eligible to claim that parent as a dependent. Also, as long as your parent qualifies as a dependent, you can add his or her unreimbursed medical expenses to your own and claim a deduction for amounts that exceed 7.5 percent of your adjusted gross income. For medical deduction purposes, the gross income test mentioned above does not apply for determining the dependency status.

CPAs recommend that you discuss medical and financial issues with your parents periodically. Changes in their health, their financial situation, as well as in the tax laws, could affect how they plan for and protect their future.

If you forget to bring along a designated driver, remember, you can always rent one.

Achieve financial independence by setting goals, establishing credit

Georgia Society of Certified Public Accountants Inc.

Managing debt, paying taxes, and investing for the future are some challenges you will face. To help you meet these obstacles and master some critical money management skills, the Georgia Society of Certified Public Accountants offers the following financial advice.

Set financial goals — If you're working full-time, chances are you're earning more money than ever before. As a result, its generally easy to quickly become a spendthrift. However, spending money without a fiscal strategy can jeopardize your ability to become financially independent. To start on the right foot, you must set monetary goals and establish a monthly budget that provides for sensible savings and spending.

One of your initial goals should be to set up an emergency fund of to three to six months of your take-home pay. This will help you manage unforeseen expenses down the road. Once you have this safety net in place, you can start saving for the future.

Automatic savings plans are ideal for soldiers who haven't yet acquired the savings habit. If your employer offers a 401K or similar plan, sign up as soon as you qualify. Because the money you invest is deducted from your wages before taxes, you can reduce your income tax bill while investing for your future. If your company doesn't offer an automatic savings plan, you can set up your own plan by arranging with a mutual fund company to make regular transfers from your checking account into a fund account.

Become an educated investor — When you are young, it's worthwhile to take a few prudent risks with your money. However, before making any investment decisions, do your homework first. Take the time to read about different investment vehicles and discuss your investment options with a trusted financial planner, such as your CPA. Current market conditions, the amount you have to invest, and your financial goals all play a role in determining your investment strategy.

Consolidated student loans — Most student loans allow a six-month grace period after graduation from college before payments begin. If you haven't found a full-time job by the time payments are due, you may want to look for a bank that will consolidate your student loans into one loan with a longer repayment period and a lower monthly payment. Some banks even may be willing to structure a loan with graduated payments. However, if you opt to go this route, you may pay more in interest fees.

Establish credit — Credit cards are important for establishing a good credit history. Whether you already have a credit card or are looking to obtain your first one, shop around for the best deal. Compare interest rates, annual fees, grace periods, and how interest is computed. Then use the cards wisely. To protect yourself from credit card fraud, carefully record all your credit card numbers and store this information in a safe place with the telephone number you will need to report a lost or stolen card.

Protect your health — You can't afford not to have health insurance. Just one uninsured serious illness or accident can wipe out not only years of savings, but, in the case of a long-term disability or illness, also years of future earnings. If you're not insured through an employer, your best option is to continue your coverage under your parents' health plan. Most insurers will continue a child's coverage until age 23.

Learn about taxes — If you've landed a full-time job, take the time to determine just how much of your salary goes to the IRS. Even if you've had taxes withheld from part-time earnings, you'll soon find out that the bigger your salary, the bigger Uncle Sam's appetite. If you have more than one source of income, it's particularly important to make sure you have sufficient taxes withheld. Otherwise, you may be hit with an unexpected tax bill next year.

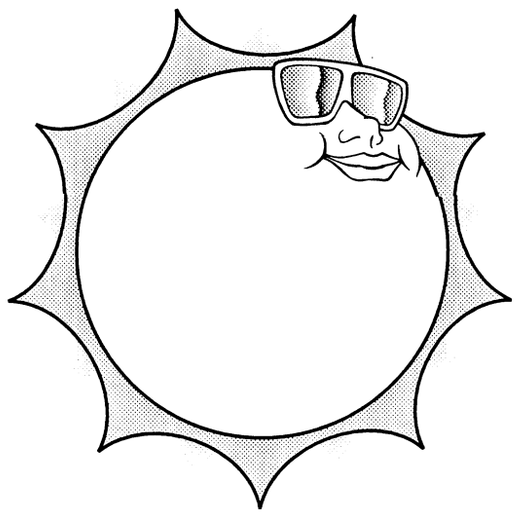
To learn more about managing your money, send a stamped self-addressed envelope to the Georgia Society of CPAs and request a copy of the brochure, Getting Started Financially.

Enjoy summer — avoid heat injuries

By Stephen Barrett
American Forces Information Service

When many Americans think "summer," they think of vacations where they will spend more than they have on things they'll always remember. They will remember the beaches, amusement parks and golf courses. And they will remember to take the precautions they need to have a safe and healthy vacation.

However, service members and Department of Defense civilians should remember those same vacation precautions must apply when they return to duty. Many military units and civilian employees work outside despite the sun, heat and humidity. Service members and their leaders must take steps to prevent heat injuries.



"We're telling commanders and leaders to adjust their training schedules," said Sgt. Henry Harris of the Walter Reed Army Medical Center Preventive Medicine Office. He recommended people work in shifts and get into cool, shaded areas when they are not working. "With temperatures reaching 90 degrees and above, they also need at least two quarts of water an hour to prevent dehydration and heat injuries," he said.

Harris said the advisory pertains especially to service members training in armored tactical vehicles and on hot surfaces such as airfields and motor pools. These service members and employees especially need to drink water.

It also applies to off-duty activities, especially to athletic events like soccer, softball and running. The heat of competition often makes people ignore their bodies' demands. "If you know you're going to be out competing in the heat, start drinking water early and keep replenishing yourself," said Harris. "Listen to your body and help cool it."

Harris also emphasized knowing heat injury symptoms. "You have to keep an eye on your people, and that means knowing what to look for and taking the steps to prevent or treat injuries," he said. There are three types of heat injuries — heat cramps, heat exhaustion and heat stroke.

The symptom of heat cramps is cramps accompanied by excessive sweating. Treatment is easy: Move into a shaded area, loosen clothes and slowly drink water.

Heat exhaustion is more serious. Besides the cramps, sweating is more profuse and leaves cool, moist skin. Victims often suffer headaches, nausea, chills and a loss of appetite.

Heat stroke victims usually have hot, dry skin; have stopped sweating; and suffer from headaches, dizziness, stomach pains and nausea. In severe cases, victims may have seizures, lose consciousness and experience breathing problems.

In both heat exhaustion and heat stroke cases, immediately call medical authorities. While waiting for help, provide the victim water and shade, elevate feet to prevent shock and cool the body by pouring water over the patient and by fanning.

Other suggestions for preventing heat injuries:

• Don't take salt tablets. The body may lose salt in sweating, but eating normal meals replenishes that supply.

• Drink cool water, preferably 50 to 55 degrees Fahrenheit.

• Drink one quart of water in the morning, at each meal and before strenuous work. Water requirements vary with climactic conditions and workloads. In hot climates, hourly water requirements increase to over two quarts.

• Smaller, frequent drinks are more effective than drinking the same amount all at once.

• When possible, limit work and physical fitness activities during the first few days of exposure to heat, then increase gradually to acclimate.

• Modify activities if conditions are present that increase heat injury risks. These conditions include fatigue or loss of sleep, previous heat exhaustion and taking medications.

Beware of investments tied to religious beliefs

Better Business Bureau

While some things may be taken on faith, investments are not among them. Honest people sometimes find it difficult to believe that con artists will stoop to any tactic in order to carry off a swindle, said Lou Marcotte, of the local Better Business Bureau.

Marcotte said members of religious communities can protect themselves from investment swindles by taking the following, common sense precautions:

• Be wary of investments that seem closely tied to a particular religious belief. It's extremely unlikely that a golden investment opportunity would be available only to members of a specific church or faith.

• Be cautious if the promoter of an investment opportunity tries to capitalize on connections or a leadership position within a religious group. Chances are slim that the success or failure of the investment can be linked in any way to the "inside" contacts of the promoter.

• Be on your guard for a new member of your church who springs up out of nowhere with a "sure-fire" investment scheme. some con artists will waste little or no time in easing their way into a religious circle. Find out who you are dealing with and what their background, if any, is with the church.

• As you would with any investment promoted to you by fellow members of the church, exercise the same caution and skepticism that you would when considering any other investment.

• Ignore claims that religiously based investments are unregulated. Virtually all investment opportunities, including church bonds, come under the scope of Federal and state securities or commodities laws. Any claim to the contrary by a promoter is a clear indication that you are dealing with someone who is either grossly uninformed or a con artist.

• Check out the promoter and the investment opportunity before money changes hands. Contact your state securities agency to find out if the promoter and investment are properly registered in your state.

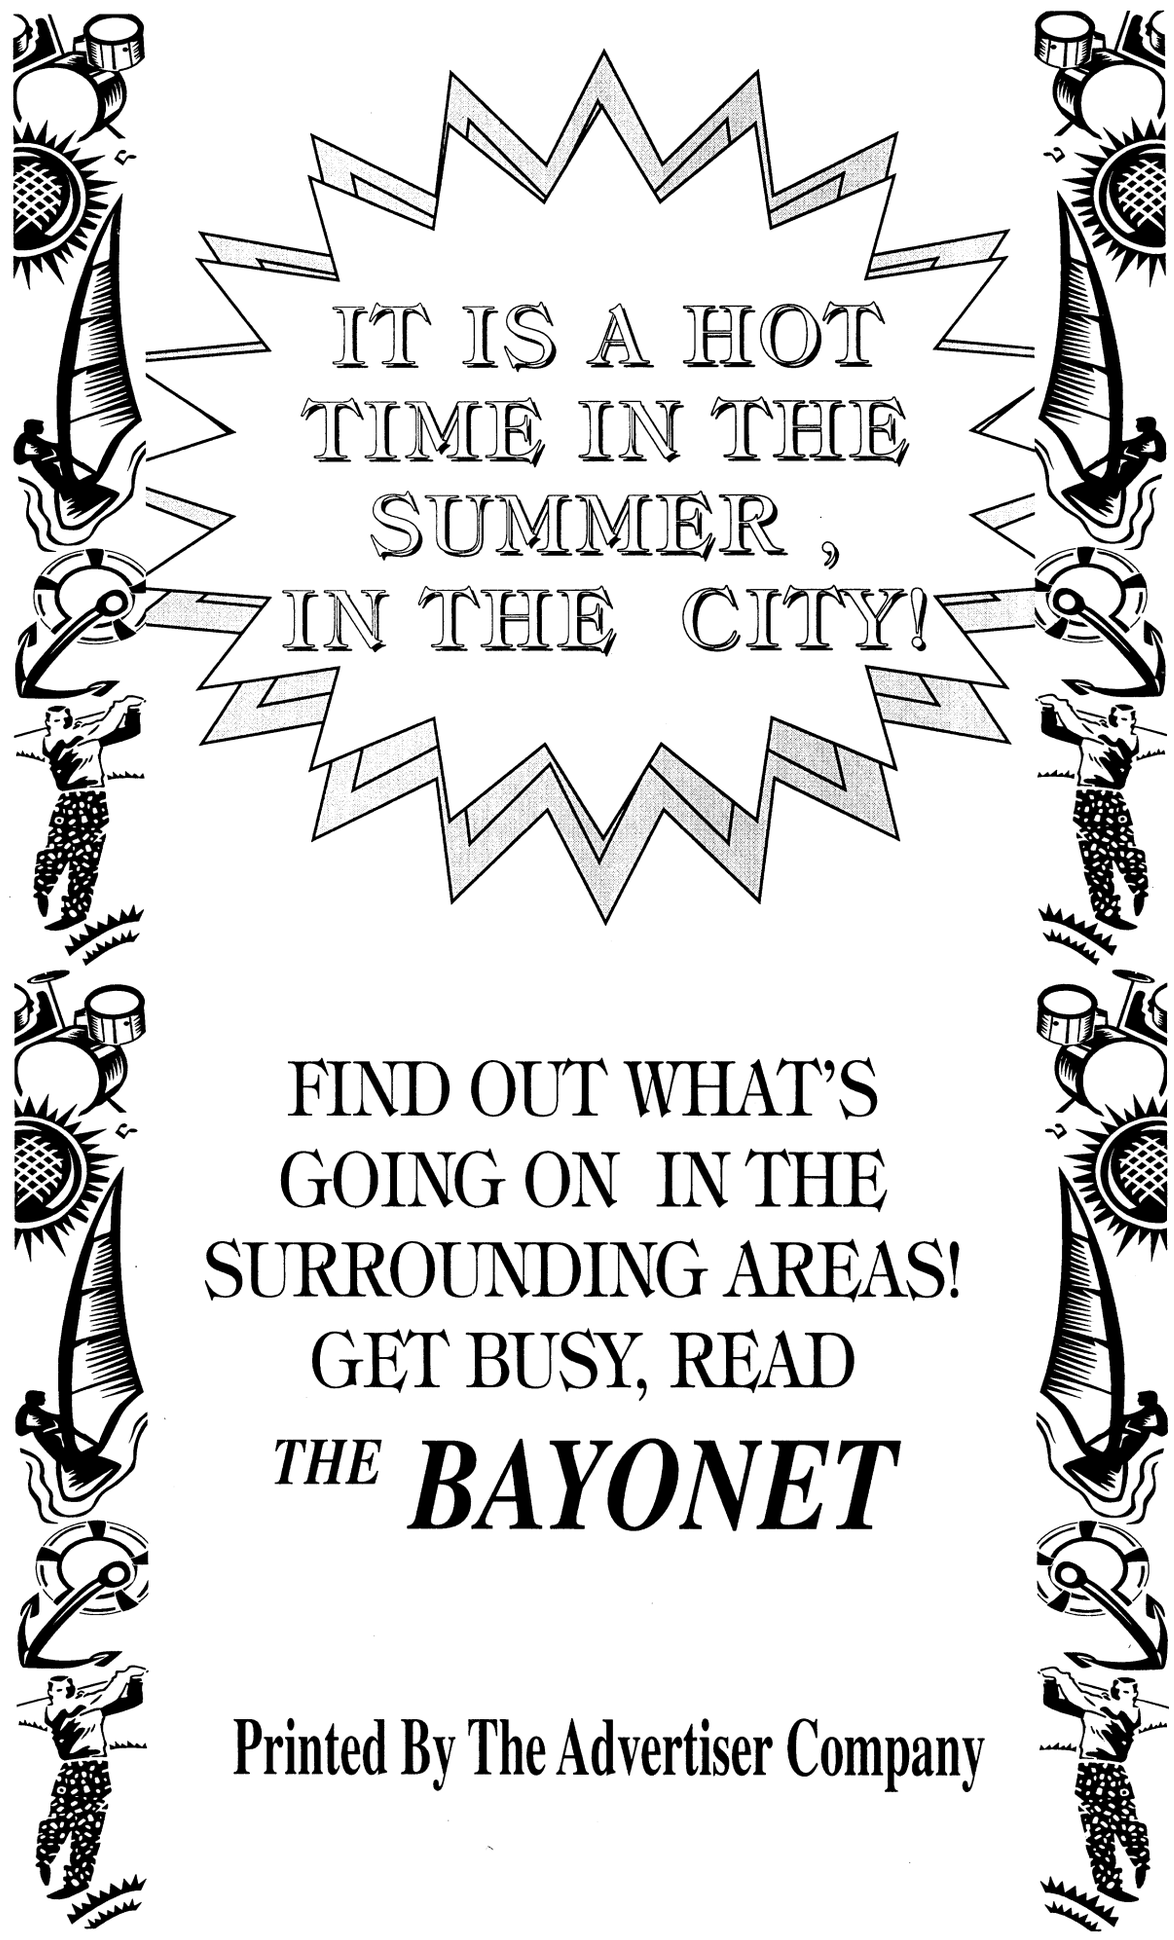
If you suspect that you have been approached or taken by a con artist, contact your Better Business Bureau or report the scam to your state securities agency, Marcotte said.

Charity can pay off for taxpayer

Georgia Society of Certified Public Accountants Inc.

While your financial resources and personal interests should play a large role in your charitable giving, don't overlook the tax deductions you may receive for your generosity. The Georgia Society of CPAs points out that when you donate to a qualified charity, either through lifetime giving or through charitable bequests, estate taxes are avoided and you may qualify for an income tax deduction.

To claim the deduction, you must make the contribution to a tax-exempt charity. Gifts made to federal, state, and local government for public purposes, or to religious, charitable, scientific, literary, cultural and educational organizations are normally deductible. Although the definition seems broad, it does not encompass every nonprofit organization. Check Cumulative Lists of Organizations, IRS Publication 78, for those that qualify.



Donating appreciated property — You may be able to save substantial tax dollars by arranging to bestow property that has increased in value rather than donating cash. When you contribute appreciated stocks, real estate or other investments that you have held for more than a year, you can generally deduct the current market value of the property and avoid paying long-term capital gains taxes. From an estate planning viewpoint, your gift reduces the size of your taxable estate.

Here's how it works. If you write a check for $10,000 to a charity, you get a $10,000 deduction and the charity receives a $10,000 gift. Suppose, instead, you donated some stocks that you bought two years ago at $5,000 which are now worth $15,000. By offering the appreciated stock, you avoid paying the capital gains tax that would be due on the $10,000 if you sold the stock yourself. As a tax-exempt entity, the charity incurs no capital gains tax on the sale of the shares, so it receives the full benefit of your contribution. In addition, you get to deduct the investment's current market value of $15,000.

Keep in mind that there are some limitations on charitable deductions. In general, you are allowed charitable deductions of up to 50 percent of your adjusted gross income for gifts of cash. When contributing appreciated property, your deduction is limited to 20 percent to 30 percent. Also, some types of appreciated property may yield reduced deductions.

Using charitable trusts — A charitable remainder trust enables you to avoid capital gains taxes, increase income for you and your family and at the same time benefit your favorite charity. When you place assets that have substantially appreciated in value in a charitable remainder trust, you qualify for an immediate charitable income tax deduction (based on the present value of the interest in the assets given to charity). Once inside the trust, the assets may be sold without triggering capital gains tax because the charity receives the proceeds at your death. Meanwhile, the trust invests the cash from the sale in income producing assets that earn income for the trust. During your lifetime, you receive the income earned by the trust. When you die, the principal is distributed to the designated charity and is excluded from your assets for tax purposes.

You may also choose to make a temporary gift of income through a charitable lead trust. Through this type of trust, you set aside assets for charitable use for a specific number of years or during your lifetime. At the end of that period, the assets in the trust are then returned to you or your heirs.

Argentinian shares love of sport with youth

By Judith Ginder
School of the Americas

Maj. Adalberto Ferreyra sees himself as a typical Argentinian man. He feels that hard work and family are the backbone of a successful person.

Ferreyra, a guest instructor at the School of the Americas, has been with the Department of Joint and Combined Operations at SOA for about a year and a half. As the director of four courses, he admits that his work keeps him very busy.

However, he is quick to point out that being at SOA has not only been an excellent career opportunity, but also has given him and his family a chance to become better acquainted with the American way of life.

Ferreyra said he and his wife, Susana, try to participate as much as possible in the community. When he heard that the Youth Center at Fort Benning needed volunteers to coach youth soccer, Ferreyra said he jumped at the chance to share with the children his lifelong passion for the game.

The coach of the Red Vipers soccer team, Ferreyra had 14 children, ages 9 to 11, playing on the team. Since Ferreyra doesn't speak much English, he admitted it would have been tough coaching the team without the help of assistant coach Victor Barrera. He also said that most of the coaching came without language.

"The language of soccer is universal," he said.

The combination seems to have worked as the Red Vipers soccer team finished the season by winning the Fort Benning Soccer Tournament.

"All of the kids on the team gave 100 percent," Ferreyra said. "To succeed at anything demands faith in one's own ability and motivation. I'm very proud of these kids."

Ferreyra said a love for soccer runs in the family. He and his wife have two sons who also play the game. Daniel, 16, plays for Spencer High School, as well as for a Columbus city league team. Horacio, 11, played on the Red Viper team.

In addition to work and the soccer team, Ferreyra and his family have wanted to learn as much as possible about the United States and its customs while they are here. One way of doing this is by taking trips across the country. Ferreyra said that when traveling the family tries to visit as many points of interest or historical places as possible.

"My children really love it here," he said. "They like their schools and have made many friends they will probably never forget."

"Visiting another country is an experience in itself. But when you can actually live and work in another country, it is a feeling like no other," Ferreyra said. "Everyone should be so lucky."

In 1977, he hit .320, had 149 RBIs, scored 124 runs and hit 52 home runs. He earned the National League's most valuable player for his performance.

For more information on the autograph signing contact Lilly Burns at 544-3965.

Purple, gold crown new golf champion

By John W. Peeler
Special to The Bayonet

The 16th annual Purple and Gold Golf Classic kicked off its two-day tournament sponsored by the Omega Psi Phi Fraternity at the Follow Me Golf Course June 25, in the Georgia heat.

At the end of the first day's play, Jared Garrity was atop the leader board firing a 2 under par 70 on the par 72 Pineside Course.

Billy Cumbie was one stroke off the pace, shooting a 1 under par 71 with Chip Corley sitting in the third position with a par 72.

Former champions Neil Hatcher (1993 Champion), Donnie "Slats" Henderson (1994 Champion), along with D. Copeland rounded out the top 5 after the first day of play with a 2 over par 74 and a 3 over par 75 respectively.

"I've got a lot of catching up to do," Henderson said at the end of the first day's play, but by the 18th hole on the second day, he remarked, "I think we have a new champion."

Disaster struck the previous day's leader Garrity as he shot a 6 over par 78 slipping into third place overall with a two-day total of 148. Copeland shot a blistering 3 under par 69 giving him a two-day total of 144.

However, this wasn't quite enough to overcome the consistent play of Cumbie who shot a 70 on Sunday for a two-day total of 141 to become the 1995 Purple and Gold Golf Classic Champion.

Hatcher and Henderson finished with two-day totals of 150 and 153 respectively.

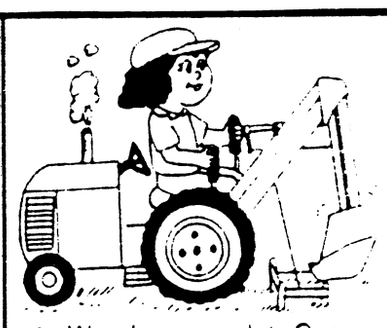
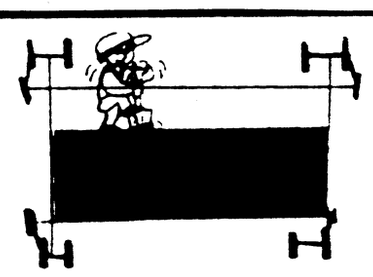
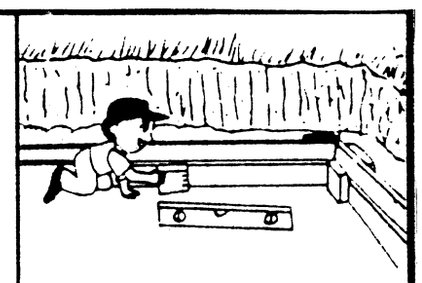
HOW FRED D. PEAK & ASSOCIATES, INC. WILL BUILD YOUR HOUSE



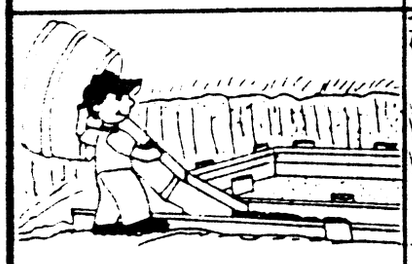
1. Buy a lot from us or we will build on your land.



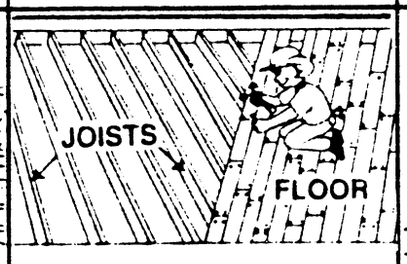
2. Get a plan for your house. You might buy plans already drawn, or we'll design you one on our CAD system.



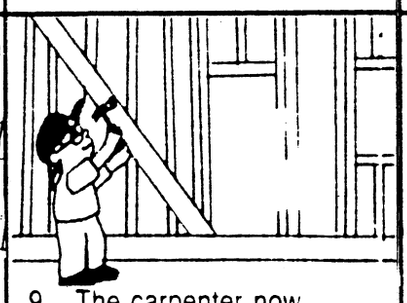
3. Hire Fred D. Peak to build your home. We will use your blueprints as a guide. We buy the materials and see that the workers do their jobs.



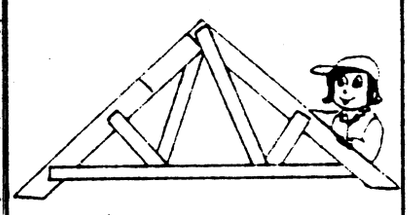
4. We clear your lot. Our bulldozer operator prepares the lot for the foundation.



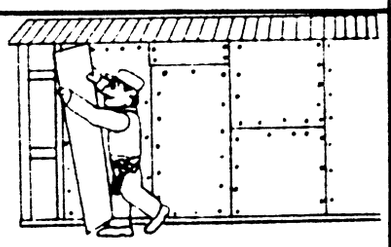
5. This house will have a basement. Other houses do not. Some are built on concrete slabs.



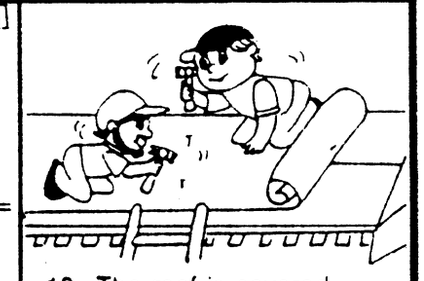
6. Our cement mason builds low, double walls of wood outlining the foundation.



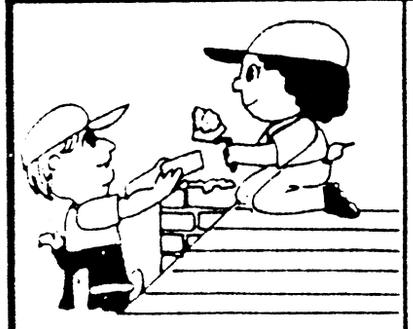
7. Our concrete man pours the foundation. The concrete slides down the chute into the wood outline.



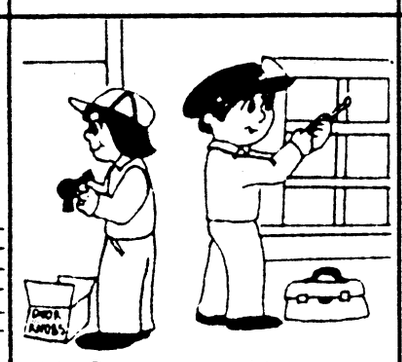
8. Our carpenters either put down floor joists or we may build off a concrete slab.



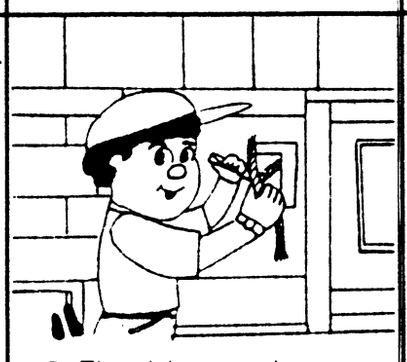
9. The carpenter now builds a frame for the house, he puts up posts called studs.



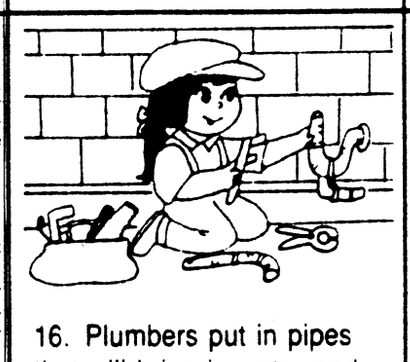
10. Most builders today use ready-made roof frames called trusses.



11. Carpenters cover the house frame. They nail up big sheets of material such as plywood or insulated board.

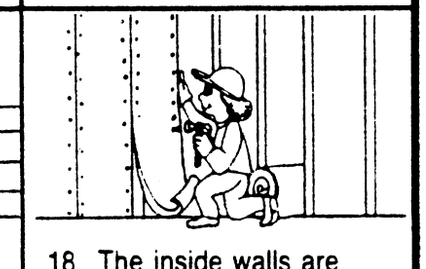


12. The roof is covered with waterproof material. Shingles or tiles are added on top.

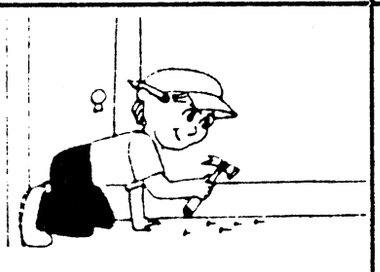


13. Our brick masons build the fireplace and chimney.

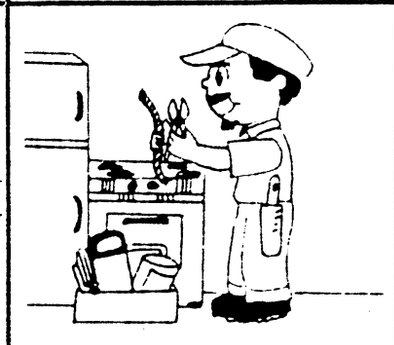
14. Carpenters add doors and windows.



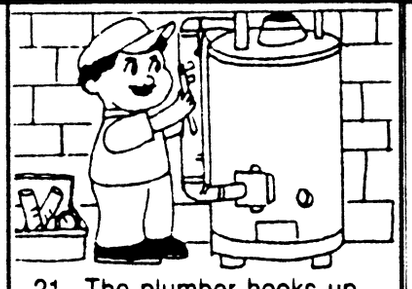
15. Electricians put in wires.



16. Plumbers put in pipes that will bring in water and gas and remove waste.

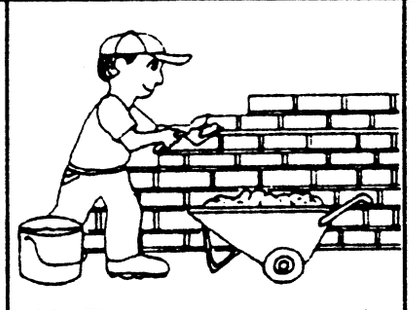


17. Workers put in metal ducts (tubes) that carry warm air from the furnace and cool air from the air conditioner.

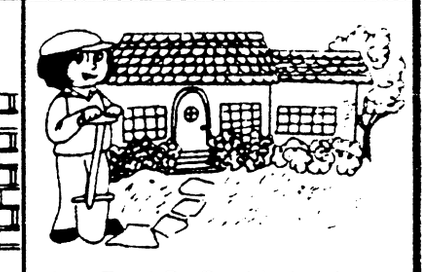


18. The inside walls are finished. First insulation is put in. Then walls usually are covered with big sheets of material.

19. Carpenters nail down wood strips called moldings around the floors and doors.



20. Our electrician hooks up the appliances.



21. The plumber hooks up the water heater, the washer and dryer, the toilets and the tubs.

22. Our painters paint and the paper hanger hangs the wallpaper.

23. The mason comes back and puts in the walks and steps.

24. Fred D. Peak's landscapers plant trees and bushes.

Fort Benning sparkles on 4th

Fort Benning proved once and for all that a little rain was not going to hinder its Fourth of July celebration Tuesday on York Field.

With partly cloudy skies lurking overhead, the festivities kicked off when the vendors opened for business at 2 p.m.

Fourth celebrators dined on such traditional American fare as hot dogs and hamburgers, funnel cakes and watermelon. Some Spanish-American cuisine, like empanadilla (ground beef in a crispy pastry shell) and bacalaito (cod fish fritters), was also available.

By mid-afternoon the clouds could no longer contain their wet burden and the cooling rain came down, interrupting a performance by "The West," a country band from Atlanta and "The Snake Winders," a (country) dance element from the Columbus area.

The day resumed with face painting by Eakmo T. Clown, balloons, games and relaxing on blankets on the not-so-dry grass.

The Infantry Jazz Band played some bluesy tunes that seemed to complement the dreary weather which cleared up in time for the Silver Wings to glide in for a safe parachute landing.

There was a ranger demonstration on Watson Field, and back on York Field, a national flag pageantry and a 56-gun salute.

The Infantry Chorus sang some patriotic songs such as "God Bless America" while the sky grew dark and the crowd thickened as the main event drew near.

Mother Nature started off the fireworks display with thunder and lightning off in the distance. The evening culminated with a nearly 30-minute fireworks show that illuminated the cloudy night sky as the post said a final happy 219th birthday to America.

French officer bids reluctant farewell to American friends

By Richard Brill
Special to The Bayonet©

After three years of duty here, the French liaison officer to the U.S. Army Infantry Center is bidding a reluctant farewell to his American friends and associates.

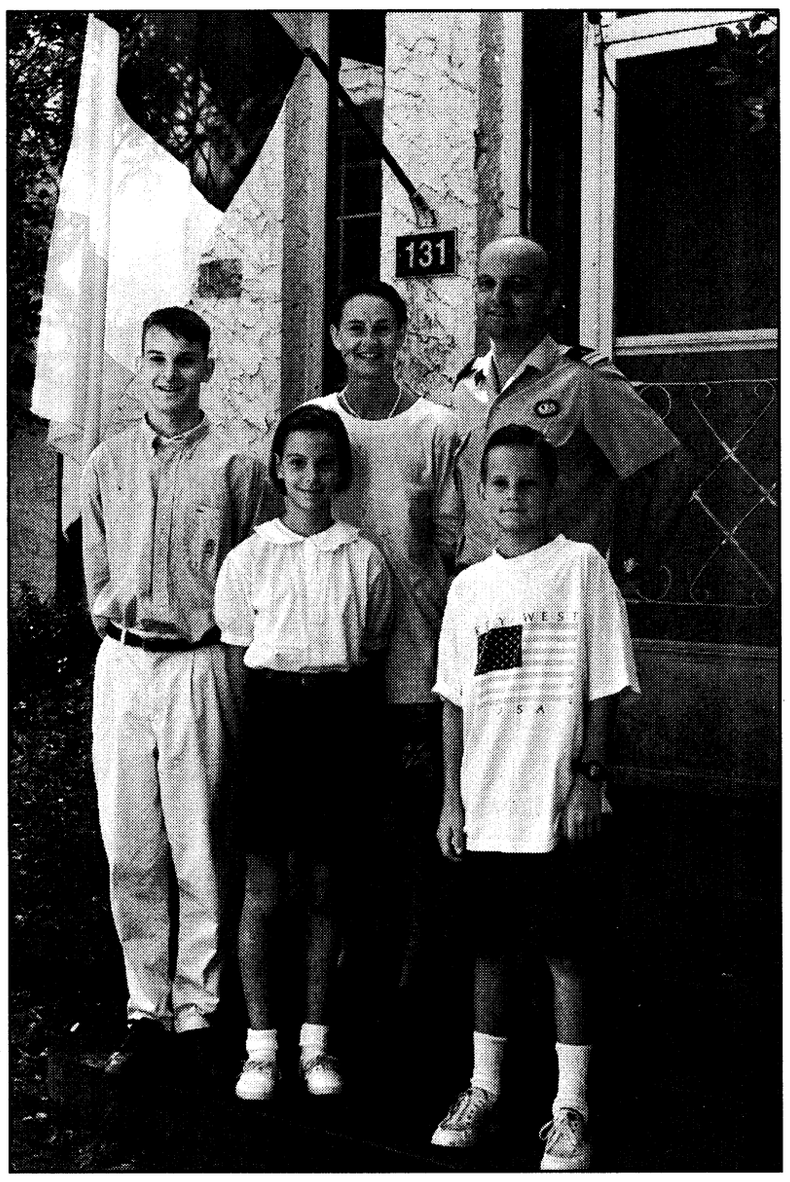
Col. Laurent J. Buffeteau will leave July 16 to assume command of the French Foreign Legion's 4th Regiment at Castelnaudary, France.

In addition to a wealth of memories, Buffeteau said he will take with him some valuable military lessons learned from the American Army.

"The first thing that amazed me was the sense of discipline of the U.S. Army," Buffeteau said. "If you look at 500 American soldiers, the 500 will be dressed and equipped exactly the same way."

In addition to the American Army's high state of readiness and organization, Buffeteau said he was also impressed by its open mindedness and gracious treatment of foreign students.

"Everything was very simple for me while working here because the Americans were so helpful," he said. "People were always very friendly and ready to work with me."



As the French liaison officer to the U.S. Army Infantry Center, Buffeteau served as a link for communications between the French and American armies and closely observed American training techniques. He worked very closely with the Dismounted Battlespace Battle Lab and also served as the liaison to the Joint Readiness Training Center at Fort Polk, La.

"One of the most important aspects of my job here was simply to establish an atmosphere of friendship between our countries," he said. "If you do not have a special brotherhood, a spirit of friendship and a willingness to work together, nothing good can be accomplished."

Not content with military duties alone, Buffeteau also involved himself with the civilian community through the French Consul in Atlanta, the Alliance Francaise de Columbus, the Rotary Club and by giving cultural presentations to area schools.

In addition, he found time to make 115 static line jumps and visited 42 states with his wife, Annie, and three children, Jean-Baptiste, Anne-Fleur and Henri.

"We were very impressed with the size of the United States and how people from various parts of the same country could be so different," he said. "As natives of France, this was fascinating to us."

French Liaison Officer Col. Laurent J. Buffeteau stands with his family outside their Fort Benning quarters with the French flag.

> "Our experience here has changed our lives forever. We will never see the rest of the world the same as we did before."
> — Col. Laurent J. Buffeteau
> French liaison officer

Buffeteau said he and his family already miss the USA and are making plans to return and visit some of the many friends they made here.

"I have been in the military almost 23 years, but these three years will always be strongly engraved in our lives," Buffeteau said. "Our experience here has changed our lives forever. We will never see the rest of the world the same as we did before."

Buffeteau said he looks forward to his new command, which he said is a great honor. According to Buffeteau, the French Foreign Legion's 4th Regiment serves as the training unit for all new legionnaires, a kind of Infantry Training Brigade and Ranger Training Brigade rolled into one.

"However, we are not movie stars, but just soldiers following the same rules as other French soldiers," he said. "If a legionnaire is special, it is not because he is tough, but because he gives all his heart and soul, in peace and in war, to his leader."

For his service, Buffeteau received the Meritorious Service Medal from Commanding General Maj. Gen. John W. Hendrix. Buffeteau will be succeeded by Lt. Col. Jean Phillipe Girou.

Pilot trades choppers for chalkboards

By Lori Egan
Bayonet staff writer

"The helicopters hoverin,' they're hoverin' overhead" is a familiar cadence for most Army personnel.

Helicopters are just another piece of equipment without the skill of the pilot and crew.

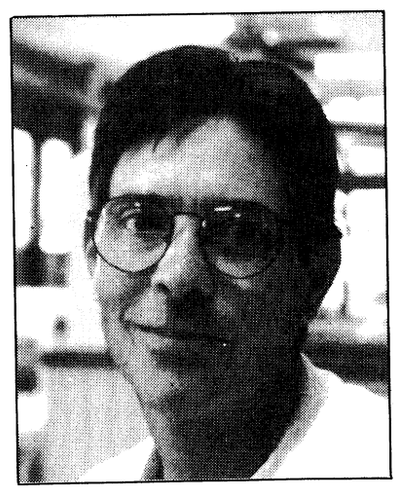
The Army recently recognized the skill of retired helicopter pilot Chief Warrant Officer 4 John W. Reynolds by awarding him the Legion of Merit.

Reynolds retired May 1 after 25 years of service.

After spending his first five years in the U.S. Coast Guard as a radarman helping control airplanes going across the Atlantic, his career goals changed, Reynolds said.

"I decided I would rather fly than be on the ship," he said. "I wanted to be a pilot; that was my goal in life, to become a pilot."

And the Army offered the quickest way to reach that goal with its flight program, Reynolds said.



Reynolds enlisted for three years as an avionics mechanic and applied to flight school.

"Within a year, I was at Fort Rucker, Ala.," he said. "I graduated from flight school as a warrant officer 1 and went to Germany.

"(Germany) was the best tour in my career — excellent flying," Reynolds said. "I worked with some great people."

After spending three years in Germany, Reynolds went to Fort Rucker where he became an instructor pilot.

"I loved that job so much," he said. "That is where I made my decision to make a career out of (the Army). I was still entertaining thoughts of taking the education I had and the flying experience and going into civilian life. But I fell in love with teaching."

Reynolds

Reynolds spent four years as an instructor pilot and then went to Korea.

After Korea, he returned to Fort Rucker to the Department of Evaluation and Standardization, which is the Army aviation worldwide standardization program.

"We traveled around the world, evaluating and assisting aviation units," he said.

Reynolds had considered retiring after that tour, since he had 20 years in. But he was selected for warrant officer 4, which meant another tour to Korea. This time he took his family and spent two years.

"(The family) got to see the DMZ (demilitarized zone)," he said. "They got to see what it is all about. They learned that it is more than just a job we do, that it is real and there are bad people in the world.

"They have seen it from the other side and have an appreciation for the freedoms we have," Reynolds said. "I'm proud of them for that."

Reynolds was next assigned to Fort Benning's Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment.

He worked for the Directorate of Operations and Training as the rotary wing branch chief and then became the Lawson Army Airfield operations officer.

"I did a pretty good job in the military," he said. "I'm not unhappy with it. And I think that there are some other folks who are not unhappy with what I did."

Reynolds joked that his best military memory was retirement, but then said being a flight instructor at Fort Rucker was very satisfying.

"Since I loved teaching flight so much, I thought I would try to go into education," he said.

Reynolds graduated cum laude from Columbus College with a bachelors of science in education two weeks ago.

"My wife was really supportive," he said. "She was willing to stay up late at night with me, to study and help me with exams."

Reynold's wife, Susie, teaches first grade at Dexter Elementary here.

Reynolds hopes to teach one of the middle school grades this fall.

"I would like teach one of the upper ranges, but a job is a job," Reynolds said.

"I really enjoy working with kids; that is a lot of fun," he said.

11TH INFANTRY REGIMENT

Soldiers volunteer as tutors

By Sarah A. Boisclair
Special to the Bayonet

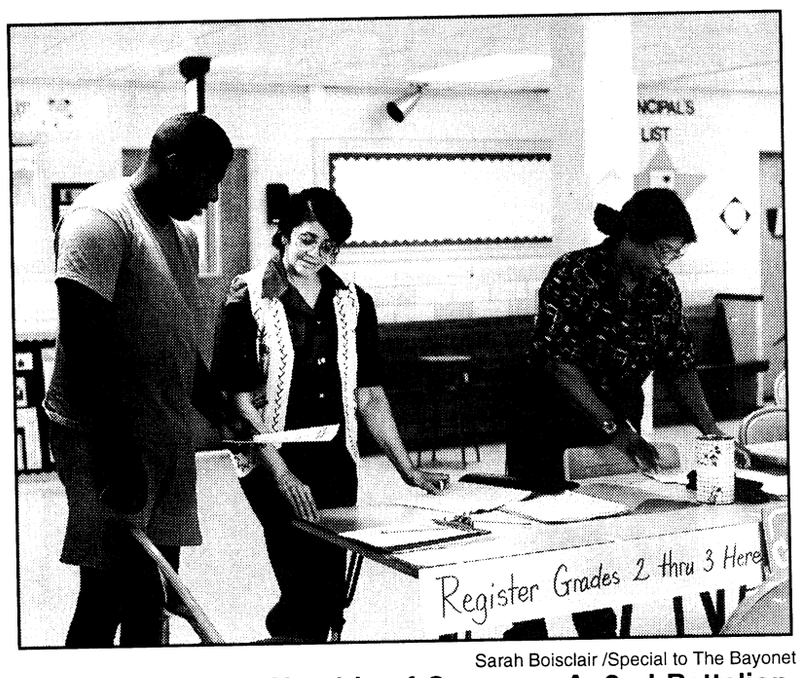
Soldiers from the 2nd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment, volunteered as tutors in the Combined Communities of Southeast Columbus Tutorial Program Saturday mornings throughout the school year.

Students in class 1-95 of the Infantry Officer Basic Course were "charged by the battalion commander to do volunteer service," said Capt. Andrey Tymniak, commander of Headquarters and Headquarters Company.

It was left up to the students to decide where they would like to volunteer and Company A chose to work with the tutorial program. "They volunteered on weekends and on their own time during the cycle to help the kids," Tymniak said.

"It's top priority that they give something back to the community," said Co. A 1st Sgt. Frank Flores, "We usually get a pretty good response." Flores volunteered at Eastway school for a month. "You feel like you've accomplished something worthwhile," he said.

"It was our way of giving back to the community," said 2nd Lt. Matt Gerber, one of the students who volunteered.



The tutoring took place from 10 a.m. to noon at Eastway and Davis schools in Columbus. Approximately 80 children in the first through eighth grades brought their books with them each Saturday for one-on-one help with their homework, said Lonnie Jackson, who runs the program.

The tutorial program has been operating for 13 years and in the past few years Fort Benning has contributed quite a few volunteers, said Jackson. "We're reaching kids while they're young," he said, "We want to have Fort Benning work with us."

The tutoring will continue this summer at Rigdon Road School from 8 to 10 a.m. Monday through Friday. Classes began Monday and will end July 14. Jackson said about 300 students will receive tutoring this summer. Volunteers are still needed. "Getting the word out is the biggest problem," he said, "We're probably the best kept secret in town."

Flores said he expects his unit will continue to provide volunteers for the program. "We're going to emphasize the program and inform the soldiers," he said.

Staff Sgt. Johnny Hendrix, Company A, 2nd Battalion, 58th Infantry Regiment, registered his daughter for the summer tutorial program. She received tutoring at Eastway during the school year. "It helped my daughter out a whole lot," he said.

Mayor names 2/11 Inf Regt Day

By Sarah A. Boisclair
Special to the Bayonet

Columbus Mayor Bobby G. Peters proclaimed June 6 as "2/11 Infantry Regiment Day" in recognition of the unit's volunteer work with the Combined Communities of Southeast Columbus Tutorial Program.

Maj. Anthony Rodriguez, the battalion executive officer, and Lonnie Jackson, who runs the tutorial program, were present when the proclamation was read in a council meeting June 6.

"It was a tremendous act of kindness and dedication to the community," said Peters, "I thought that it was pretty sharp to take that kind of interest when they're busy themselves."

Peters found out about the unit's volunteer work through a letter from Jackson, said Becky Glisson, the mayor's administrative assistant. He decided to issue the proclamation "for their extraordinary service," she said.

"It was an honor for us," said Capt. Andrey Tymniak, commander of Headquarters and Headquarters Company.

FAMILY CHILD CARE NEEDS YOUR SUPPORT

Thanks to Campbell's® Labels for Education Program, our Post can obtain much needed playground equipment FREE OF CHARGE. However, we need your help in achieving this goal which will benefit all Fort Benning children.

The Program, sponsored by Campbell Soup Company, is actually quite simple: From now until March 1, 1996, Fort Benning will be collecting labels from over 1000 Campbell-made products.

Our goals is to collect 345,650 labels during this program. We are looking to obtain the playground set pictured below. We have been collecting since January, 1995 and at this point are only at about 2% of the way to our goal. We need a lot of support to be able to have our playground by next summer. The projected location to build the playground is Russ Pond.

We're asking everyone to help by saving the labels and proofs of purchase on Campbell products. Please join us in this worthwhile effort.

There are label drop-off points at all the Community of Life buildings as well as the Post Commissary. Thank you in advance for your support and cooperation.

Sunday school teacher connected personally with students

By Richard Gary Moore
USAIC Chaplain Office

A missionary in India was on his way to town early one morning traveling a hot and dusty road. On his way he noticed a lady sitting on the side of the road just watching the sun rise above the horizon.

Later that same morning he was returning by the same road. It was much busier with people, carts and vehicles. The woman was still sitting in the same spot, not seeming to notice the world around her. The missionary, concerned that something might be wrong, stopped and volunteered help.

The old woman said simply, "Thank you, but I don't need your help.

"I'm waiting for my soul to catch up to my body."

Now there's a thought to stop us in our tracks!

However, this woman represents the 'gozillion' people who need time for reflection. Lately, I also have done some soul waiting and found myself remembering my junior-senior high school Sunday School teacher, Keith Leslie.

I still find it a little awkward to recall Keith by his first name and not as Mr. Leslie. He was a leader in our church in Miami. He had worked many years for the American Automobile Association. Reflecting, I'm grateful to Leslie for his constancy, his challenges, and his commitment.

Leslie showed up to teach Sunday School and attend morning and evening worship with his family Sunday after Sunday, year after year. I sponged up his example, though I didn't catch the drift at the time. He hung in there for me, Andy, Scott, Mitch and the rest of the mean motor scooters and bad go getters.

This constancy spoke louder

reflections

than the pool parties, days of youth events, and overnight retreats. Leslie was there for us, and we knew it. Modeling good life habits and making himself available to the youth of Riveria Presbyterian Church, he provided all of us with opportunities to test our potential which we couldn't refuse. I now realize what a deep and lasting impression he made.

Leslie's style wasn't just to throw feed into the trough and then look from afar to see if we ate what he was dishing out. He personally connected with us in all of our rush to experience life.

I remember one Sunday morning during eighth grade when he asked me to read Scripture and close the class with prayer. Whoa! Stop right there! My hands were sweating, my mouth was dry and my mind was in a panic.

What a challenge in front of my peers. I stumbled, but through it all, Leslie was kind and gracious. I surprised myself by being able to just stand in front of other people and say something for the Lord. Keith's constancy and challenges for my friends and me reflected a living attitude of commitment to Jesus Christ.

Later, during our first year of college, Andy, Scott, Mitch and I felt Leslie's devotion to Jesus Christ when we read his four-page typed letters to us. He wrote to us about the challenges and surprises of being away from home for the first time. He reminded us of our faith, our church, our friends and our families. The fact that we called ourselves Christians in a world of different faces and events, was a bit overwhelming to me.

However, Leslie was committed to always stretch me to see the vision for my life. He reminded us to keep the faith, but he felt much more — a fatherly love and concern from his heart. Thank you, Keith Leslie.

After time, we lost contact with each other. Twenty years after high school, I finally called him with thanks and to let him know that I was a Presbyterian minister serving my country as an Army chaplain. We both were caught up in the joy of hearing each other's voices and sharing the who, what, when and where of our lives. Later that year I returned home after an overseas deployment to read a letter from Leslie's dear wife, Helen. While I was away, Leslie died suddenly early one morning while jogging.

Writing this "reflection" has given me a little more time as my soul "catches up to my body." I'm grateful for this man of God because of his love for our Lord Jesus Christ. I thank the Lord for every letter from and visit with his wife, Helen. I thank my God for every remembrance of my mentor and friend, Keith Leslie.

May this encourage you to take time and allow your soul to catch up with your body as you reflect about someone who has encouraged you through life. Maybe this will encourage you to take the opportunity to thank him or her for his or her influence upon you.

Congressional delegation to visit SOA

School of the Americas

Three congressmen and the undersecretary of the Army will visit the School of the Americas today.

U.S. Rep. Joseph P. Kennedy and Undersecretary of the Army Joe R. Reeder are visiting the school to learn more about it and to see how it operates.

Kennedy is visiting the School of the Americas for the first time. Commanding General Maj. Gen. John W. Hendrix is hosting the visit, Maj. Gordon Martel, SOA public affairs officer, said. Kennedy will meet with Col. Roy Trumble school commandant, students and school supporters.

For the past two years, Kennedy has unsuccessfully attempted to introduce legislation to close the school.

"The School has invited Congressman Kennedy to visit on numerous occasions and we are delighted that his schedule has allowed him to make the visit," Martel said. "We look forward to the opportunity to show him the school.

"This is an excellent opportunity for our congressional leaders to meet with and interface with our Latin American neighbors," Martel said.

Kennedy and Reeder will be accompanied by Reps. Sanford D. Bishop, Mac Collins and Martin T. Meehan.

Learning to shuffle

Students from Company B, 1st Battalion, 507th Infantry (Airborne), 11th Infantry Regiment, practice shuffling to the door of an aircraft while pretending to hold the static line in their right hand. The training takes place during the first week, or "ground week," of Airborne School. This is only part of the training that goes on throughout the three-week course. See Page B-1 for a story and more photos about the training.

Enlisted to get new leader

Army News Service

Command Sgt. Maj. Gene C. McKinney has been sworn in as the 10th Sergeant Major of the Army. McKinney succeeded Sgt. Maj. of the Army Richard A. Kidd who retires this month. Since February 1992, the sergeant major of the Army designee has been serving as the command sergeant major, Headquarters, U.S. Army Europe.

As Sergeant Major of the Army, McKinney will serve as the Army Chief of Staff's personal adviser on all enlisted-related matters — particularly in areas affecting soldier training and quality of life.

As the Army's senior enlisted representative, he will be an amplification of Army Chief of Staff Gen. Dennis J. Reimer's eyes and ears and will provide him an enlisted perspective on issues.

The sergeant major of the Army devotes the majority of his time traveling throughout the Army observing training, and talking to soldiers and their families. He sits on a wide variety of councils and boards that make decisions affecting enlisted soldiers and their families and is routinely invited to testify before Congress.

McKinney is a 26-year veteran who served one combat infantry tour in Vietnam, from 1969-1970, and has been an armored cavalryman for more than two decades.

He enlisted in the Army on September 29, 1968, in his home state of Florida and, with the exception of a one-year tour at Fort Benning, Ga, spent the majority of his career serving either in Germany or at Fort Bliss, Texas.

He has held every enlisted position from scout leader to command sergeant major and is a 1988 graduate of the U.S. Army Sergeants Major Academy (Class 31), Fort Bliss, Texas.

McKinney and his wife, Wilhemina have a son, Zuberi, who is scheduled to attend Florida A & M University this fall.

Military leaders praise vision of retiring Army chief of staff

By Audrey L. Brunson
Army News Service

WASHINGTON — Army Chief of Staff Gen. Gordon R. Sullivan celebrated his 30th wedding anniversary June 20 during a full-honor retirement ceremony at Fort Myer's Summerall Field.

His wife, Gay, joined him on the reviewing stand, as did Maj. Gen. F.A. Gorden, commander of the Military District of Washington; Secretary of the Army Togo D. West Jr., the ceremony's host; and Secretary of Defense William J. Perry, the honored guest at the review.

Sullivan received the Defense Distinguished Service Medal during the ceremonies. He had previously received Distinguished Service Medals from all branches of the armed forces.

Perry boasted to the audience that it was Sullivan's vision that led to the creation of Force XXI, "the Army's blueprint of how it will organize and fight in the 21st century." He explained that Force XXI combines high technology, military doctrine and the missions of soldiers in a way that will enable the Army to be ready for any foreseeable conflict.

"I believe it will one day be said that Sullivan helped lead the Army from the Industrial Age to the Information Age," Perry added. "His service as a soldier is now at an end. But his service to the nation is never forgotten."

West followed Perry in saying goodbye, giving a summary of Sullivan's assignments — his tours in Vietnam, commands and duties at various units, vice chief of staff and, finally, chief of staff of the Army.

"Who among us can say which of Gordon's contributions to his Army and his country have been the greatest," West said. "His soldiers can, and they will speak of his assignments. They will speak of his concern for each and every one of them, of his championing of their families. Their families will speak as well of his interest and concern for family members and children, and all within the Army family who have needed a champion," West said.

"They will speak of Gay Sullivan, as well. Of her championing of family interests, and they will conclude that Army families were never better represented, never better understood, never better respected than when Gordon and Gay Sullivan stood at the helm of the U.S. Army."

Sullivan responded to the recognition by saying that his successes were the results of finding answers to the challenges that faced him and his staff when he assumed the duties of chief of staff four years ago.

"Our challenge then, as it is today, was to prepare our Army for the totally unpredictable battlefields of the 21st century.

Rangers to rendezvous

USAIC Public Affairs Office

More than 2,000 rangers will participate in the Ranger Rendezvous and Exercise Warrior Thunder at Fort Benning today through Wednesday.

Warrior Thunder starts with a mass tactical parachute jump today at 7 p.m. on Fryar Drop Zone with rangers jumping from C-141 Starlifters and C-130 Hercules at 800 feet. The three battalions of the 75th Ranger Regiment will rendezvous in mid-air flying from departure airfields at Fort Lewis, Wash., Fort Stewart, Ga., and Fort Benning.

Following the air assault, the regiment will conduct a short field exercise, which involves seizing military objectives and controlling surrounding terrain.

Beginning Sunday morning, and continuing through noon, a weapons competition will determine the top machine gun teams, mortar crews, sniper teams and anti-tank teams. An endurathon, which includes a series of events including running, swimming and biking will also be conducted.

The five-day celebration is filled with competitions and social activities honoring rangers and ranger units, both past and present, including an open house at the Ranger Training Brigade.

Additionally, the 75th Ranger Regiment will change command Wednesday on York Field at 9 a.m. with Col. James T. Jackson turning the regiment over to Col. William J. Leszczynski Jr.

Leszczynski graduated from the Infantry Officer Basic and Advanced courses, the U.S. Marine Corps Command and General Staff College and the U.S. Army War College. He received a master's degree from the University of Massachusetts.

His awards and decorations include the Legion of Merit, the Bronze Star Medal, the Meritorious Service Medal with three oak leaf clusters, the Army Achievement Medal with two oak leaf clusters, the Combat Infantryman Badge, Expert Infantryman Badge, Master Parachutist Badge, Air Assault Badge, Honduran Parachutist Badge, Canadian Parachutist Badge, Portuguese Parachutist Badge and Ranger Tab.

Leszczynski and his wife, Jennifer, have two children.

Ranger Rendezvous

Today through Wednesday
Schedule of Events

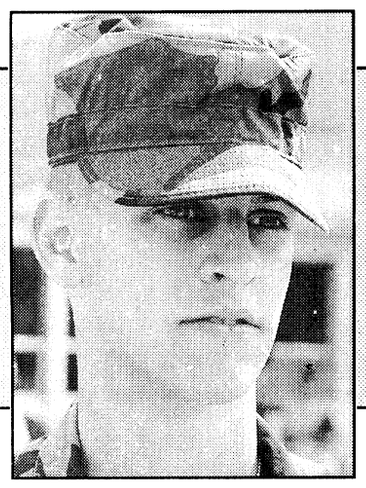
Today

7 p.m. — Regimental airborne assault on Fryar Drop Zone. The assault begins with a high altitude, free-fall parachute jump by the Regimental Reconnaissance Detachment, followed by a demonstration of close air support provided by U.S. Air Force attack aircraft. The airborne assault begins with the first Ranger exiting the first aircraft at 7:30 p.m.

Sunday

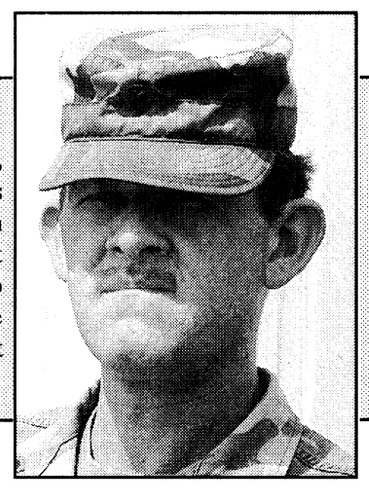
6 a.m. — Sports and weapons competitions on Sergeants Major Field and surrounding areas and ranges. BBQ lunch available, cost $7-$10.

Monday



4:45 p.m. — Ranger Hall of Fame Ceremony and Veteran's March at the Ranger Memorial. Selected rangers will be inducted into the Ranger Hall of Fame.

Wednesday

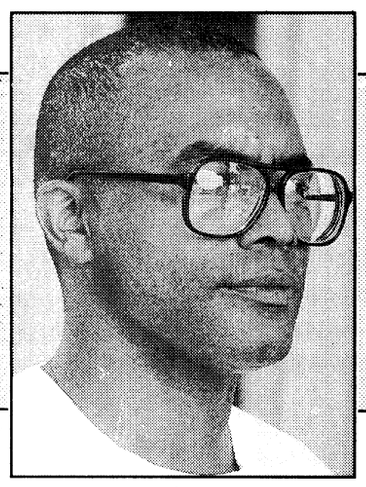


9 a.m. — 75th Ranger Regiment Change of Command, York Field, followed by a reception for the new commander

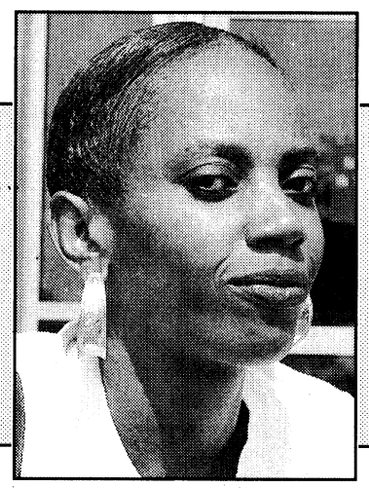
VARIOUS VOICES

How do you feel about normalizing relations with Vietnam?

Pvt. 1 Jason T. Harper, Company C, 2nd Battalion, 58th Infantry Regiment — "I'm not real sure. It's not a bad idea. Maybe it would increase trade."



Spc. Michael S. Glover, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 2nd Battalion, 18th Infantry Regiment — "I don't think we should. I've never been into forgive and forget. Every time the U.S. forgives somebody, we get messed over."



Navy Petty Officer 2nd Class Jenni L. Balis, San Diego, Calif. — "I think we should be open to communication and trade and try to proceed forward. Globally, I think it would be good for us."

Jonathan A. May, family member — "I think Vietnam was a bad experience, but we can't live in the past. We need to move on. Holding a grudge is not the American way."

Staff Sgt. Willie J. Simmons, Advanced Noncommissioned Officer Course — "I think everybody should come together. If the world could become one as it was in the beginning, then the U.S. would not have to play the police role."

Rosalind R. Blakney, visitor — "Wonderful, after all this time, why not? What happened in the past is the past. If we normalize relations, then we won't have to have it happen again."

Evil communication

getting out of hand, corrupting good manners

By Cliff Sees
The Southern Star

You hear it everyday. Walking down the street you hear it. Go to the post exchange and you can hear it. In fact, go just about anywhere nowadays and you can hear it.

You can't get away from it. People who wouldn't have done it 10 or 15 years ago do it now without even thinking about it. Just about the only place you don't hear it is in church.

Cussing, cursing, swearing — whatever you choose to call it, what used to be rare is now common. Or, to quote the Doobie Brothers' album title: "What were once vices are now habits."

Sandra Maurer wrote an article in the March 1995 "Reader's Digest" about an incident she witnessed. She told about buying gas at a convenience store. At the counter was a young man who tried to buy some cigarettes. The store clerk asked for proof of age. The customer got belligerent.

"He burst forth with a string of verbal garbage, using the F word repeatedly ..." wrote Maurer.

The clerk refused to sell the cusser the cigarettes.

"With that rejection, the angry young man spewed forth another stream of obscenities. Suddenly the clerk reached across the counter with both hands, grabbed the fellow by the collar and literally plucked him off the floor."

"With fire in his eyes and passion in his voice, the clerk growled, 'That is enough! You watch what you say in here, understand? There's a lady present.'"

Maurer said she was stunned by the reaction of the clerk because no one had ever tried to protect her from foul language before then.

Recently, "Good Morning America" devoted about 30 minutes — a long time in television — to the loss of civility in society today.

The problem is not new. Before "The Cosby Show," Bill Cosby starred in a situation comedy set in a high school. Members of the basketball team frequently swore during practices and games, which brought protests from fans.

Cosby's solution was to have the players utter such nonsensical and inoffensive phrases as "Oh, marshmallow!"

In the military, cussing used to be quite common — remember the phrase "Swore like a sailor?" Perhaps it was the sudden manhood brought on by war and the urge to appear "grown-up" or that there were few women around to object.

In fact, it used to be that gentlemen did not cuss around women; now the ladies are just as bad as the men. Is this the price we have to pay for equality among the genders? I hope not.

When I was at the Primary Leadership Development Course, the policy was "No Cussing." That is the policy at all Army schools — as it should be.

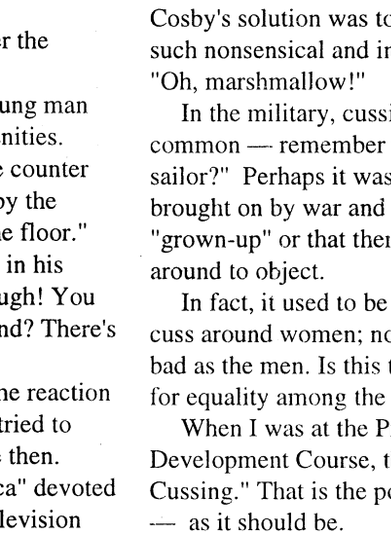
When the class was marching to lunch one time, the student platoon sergeant called out a cadence with the four-letter synonym for dung in it. The cadre sergeant stopped the platoon and made them go to the back of the company, thereby losing their place in the chow line.

I frequently hear soldiers bandying about in public words and phrases that, not so long ago, would have caused them to have a bar of soap for lunch.

On occasion, I've called a cusser on the language. Usually I'm greeted with a confused look; the person did not even think about what he or she was saying.

One time a soldier tried to pick a fight with me over it.

It's time to bring decency back to our language. Think about what you are saying. If you wouldn't want your mother, your grandmother or your daughter to hear it, don't say it.



Before you utter that dirty word, stop for a second and ask yourself if you really need to use that word. Maybe there's a cleaner one available. After a while, you'll notice that you aren't using those words any more.

It will make you a nicer person, and it could save you from being grabbed by the collar and plucked off the floor. (Army News Service)

Whew! Watch out for the heat

Soldiers should drink plenty of water, watch buddies for signs of heat injuries

By Clyde Snively
Bayonet columnist

There's nothing I'd rather do than get up on a steamy summer morning, slip into my gray "jammies" and join the rest of my fellow Public Affair Office staffers for an hour workout before the sun rises.

I lie, of course.

I begrudgingly roll out of bed at 5 a.m., groggily drive to Doughboy Stadium, dazedly stumble over to where my fellow sufferers are lining up, agonizingly push my body through an eternity of pain and suffering, and now it's time for the first calisthenic.

Within minutes, my light gray uniform turns into a dark, soggy gray mass as the sweat oozes from my every pore. Salt water stings my eyes as I try to keep in cadence with the rest of the staffers.

As I do my push-ups, followed by my not-quite sit-ups, all I can think of is the grand finale, the two-mile run.

The run is as bad as imagined as my lungs labor to pull the oxygen out of the muggy air.

Sure, it might only be 70 degrees; but, when the humidity is 100 percent, there ain't no joy in any physical activity — unless your name is Marcus Aurelius.

That boy's a fool. Not only does he do Public Affairs Office physical training, but he and the captain also go out and run 10, 11 or 13 miles on off days.

Hey guys, it stops being fun long before that. Fortunately, they're conditioned for the weather, don't have any previous heat problems and drink gallons of water before and after their workouts.

Otherwise I'd worry about them. Early morning PT can be dangerous for the uninitiated, for those who get up in the morning, take a leak, then head for the track without even so much as a sip of water.

Fort Benning has all sorts of systems and checks to make sure commanders know the temperature, the humidity and the various heat categories.

And they know a heat category zero ain't safe if the humidity is 100 percent, so they watch their charges like a hawk.

But what they don't know is if someone has previous heat injuries, has some abnormal physical condition that makes him or her subject to heat casualties, or if a person was out all night with demon rum and is so dehydrated he or she ain't got no sweat to give to the humidity gods.

The commanders might be responsible for our scrawny bodies as they fall by the wayside, but we've got to help out, too. Drink plenty of water before PT and watch your buddies for any signs of heat injuries.

Soldier gets kudos

An Army family on leave from Germany ended up on our doorstep. Their luggage had been stolen, including the wife's and four kids' passports, which had been issued from Benning.

Even though it was way after duty hours there and not even her area of responsibility, Sgt. 1st Class Janice Samilton (Personnel Automation Division, Adjutant General), scrambled and got me the info the family needed to resolve their problem.

An Air Force wing waggle salute to this can-do soldier!

RANGERS

17 to be inducted into Hall of Fame

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Seventeen individuals will be inducted into the Ranger Hall of Fame during a 4:45 p.m. July 17 ceremony at the Ranger Memorial, Ranger Field on Main Post.

The induction ceremony will officially recognize the achievements and sacrifices made by these individuals for their country, military units and fellow rangers. The Ranger Hall of Fame was formed to honor and preserve the spirit and contributions of America's most extraordinary rangers and ranger supporters.

Col. James T. Jackson, outgoing commander of the 75th Ranger Regiment, and Col. Galen B. Jackman, commander of the Ranger Training Brigade, assisted by their command sergeants major, George Ponder and Jeffrey Greer, will induct each ranger.

Inductees were selected impartially from ranger units and associations representing each era of ranger history. Each nominee was subjected to the scrutiny of the Hall of Fame selection board to ensure that the most extraordinary contributions were acknowledged.

To be eligible for selection to the Hall of Fame as a member or honorary member, a person must be deceased or have been separated or retired from active military service for at least three years at the time of nomination. He must have served in a ranger or ranger-type unit in combat or be a graduate of the U.S. Army Ranger School.

Each inductee will be presented with a specially cast bronze Ranger Hall of Fame medallion, suspended from a red, white and blue ribbon, and his portrait and narrative history will be on permanent display. The medallion signifies selfless sacrifice, professional excellence and remarkable accomplishments in the defense of the nation.

Portraits of those rangers inducted into the Ranger Hall of Fame will be on display in the foyer of the Ranger Training Brigade headquarters.

Vets to honor 30th anniversary 1st Air Cav

Columbus Convention & Visitors Bureau

Veterans of the lst Battalion, 8th Cavalry (nicknamed the Jumping Mustangs) of the 1st Cavalry Division (Airmobile) will return to Columbus, Sunday through July 16, to recognize the 30th Anniversary of the Division's departure from Fort Benning for service in Vietnam.

The August 1965 departure from Fort Benning started a seven year combat in Vietnam. Veterans of the lst Battalion, 8th Cavalry who served in combat during that period will assemble at the Columbus Hilton to participate in various activities.

Fort Benning will support the veterans with troop-training demonstrations and tours of post activities. A golf tournament, visit to Callaway Gardens, Andersonville, and other scenic location will entertain the veterans and their families.

The Follow Me Chapter of the Division Association will support the 8th Cavalrymen in a memorial service to take place at the Veterans Center on Victory Drive July 13 at 10:30 am. Retired Col. Mayo Hadden, vice president of Military Affairs for the Chamber of Commerce, will welcome the group. During the ceremony, a proclamation will be read about July 13 as Jumping Mustangs Day.

A bulletin board and registration deck will be available in the Hilton Hotel lobby for additional information and updates through Sunday.

Post implements new curtailment procedures

By Mark J. Fincher
Chief Energy Branch

As we go into the midst of another hot Georgia summer, we wait in dreadful anticipation of those summer air-conditioning curtailments.

For those of you who have never experienced this, electrical curtailment is the method in which Fort Benning cuts back on electrical power usage during peak demand hours in exchange for lower year-round energy rates from our primary electrical supplier, Georgia Power Company. The most noticeable effect of curtailment is that air conditioning is temporarily turned off.

This year, however, air conditioning curtailment will be administered in a different manner.

Fort Benning entered an electrical peak shaving contract with Georgia Power in 1986 which saved the post over $1 million per year.

On Oct. 1, Fort Benning went under a new electrical purchasing schedule for a trial period of one year called real time pricing.

"The RTP is supposed to give us the same savings with the flexibility to not shed electrical usage on selected days at no increase in cost," said Glenn Todd, utilities contract officer.

Under the old schedule our electrical supplier (Georgia Power) required Fort Benning to reduce its electrical consumption about four to eight times each summer. This required shutting air conditioning off during the hot summer at the discretion of Georgia Power.

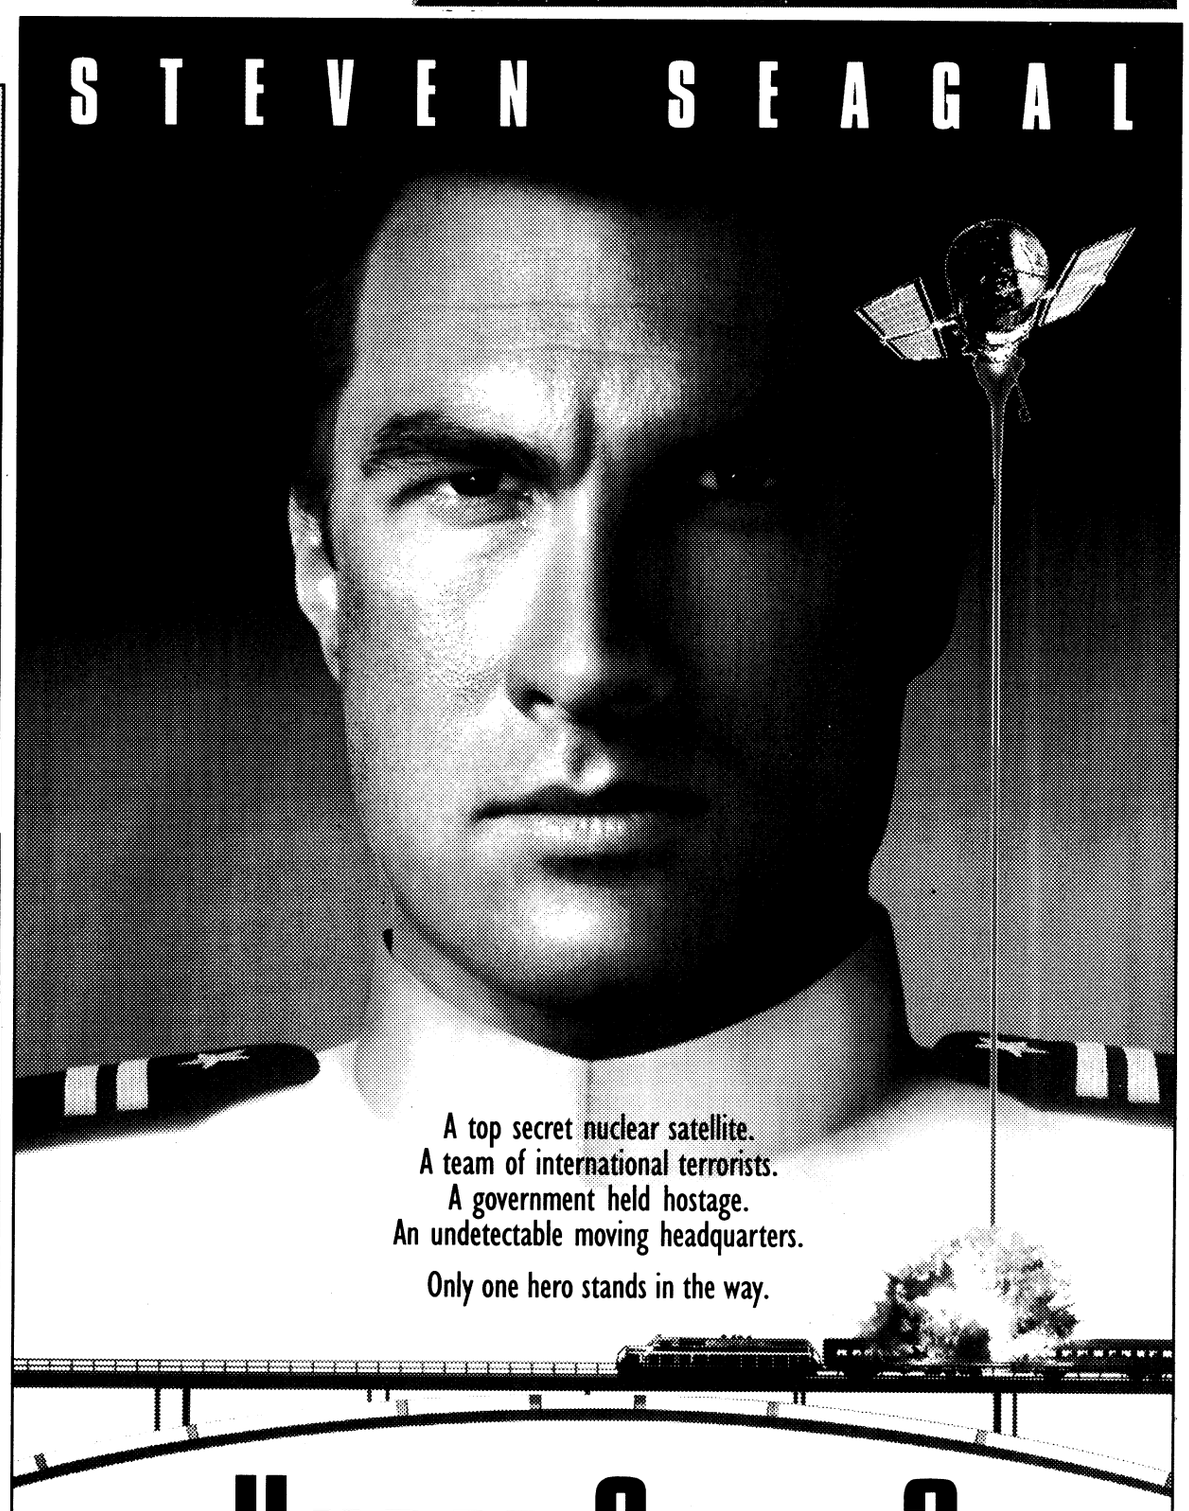
"Under the new schedule, Fort Benning makes the decision on when to curtail electrical consumption based upon the hourly cost of electricity (as opposed to Georgia Power)," Todd said.

Georgia Power publishes and places the following day's hourly rates in an electronic mail box by 5 p.m. daily. This allows ample time for the Energy Management Branch to review the following day's electrical cost and to take the appropriate action.

Since the decision in going from the old rate schedule to RTP was based upon no additional cost to the installation (rate neutrality), the decision to curtail air conditioning is directly related to where we stand in electrical expenditures.

When the cost of electricity reaches 10 cents per kilowatt hour on those very hot summer days, usually in the mid to late afternoon. Fort Benning will curtail air conditioning if the amount we paid for electricity exceeds the amount we would have paid under the old rate schedule. However, if electrical expenditures up to that particular point in time are below the old rate amount then air conditioning will not be curtailed.

The obvious advantage with the new RTP rate is if the post is thrifty early in the year with its electrical consumption then we significantly lessen the possibility of an air conditioning curtailment. It becomes more important than ever to turn off unneeded lights and appliances.



As with the old rate, air conditioning is shed first in administrative areas and last in family housing quarters. Also, during our long curtailment, the air conditioning in family housing will continue to be cycled off for two hours and on for one hour, however air conditioning will not be off for more than four hours in one 24-hour period. Due to the prudent use of electricity earlier this year, and cooler than normal temperatures in June, we are in a posture to potentially have less curtailments.

"Fort Benning would normally expect about seven curtailments during the summer," Todd said.

Under the old rate schedule we would have already curtailed four times for a total of 19 hours.

BOSS election and breakfast July 21, 28

The Fort Benning Better Opportunities for Single Soldiers program will elect a new president July 21. Voting will be at the Afterhours Club from 1:30 to 3:30 p.m. All single soldiers are welcome to come meet the candidates and put in their vote.

The new president will be announced at a BOSS breakfast at 7 a.m. July 28 at the Follow Me Dining Facility. All soldiers are welcome to attend. The cost is $1.90 for soldiers on separate rations, free to meal card holders.

The BOSS Office is now located in Infantry Hall, Room 550, next to the garrison commander's office. The phone number, 545-7420, is still good.

Speakers wanted

The Public Affairs Office is recruiting volunteers to join its Speakers Bureau to speak before local and surrounding area civic organizations.

If you are military or civilian and have a unique subject you are an expert on, be it military history or horticulture, call Brad Castleberry at 545-2238.

Excellence breakfast set for August 3

The quarterly Excellence Appreciation Day Breakfast and Quality Awards Ceremony will be Aug. 3 from 8 to 9 a.m. at the Supper Club at the Fort Benning Officers' Club.

The ceremony is conducted to recognize civilian and military personnel and volunteers, who have contributed significantly to achieving excellence within the workplace and the community.

The menu for the breakfast is bacon or sausage, scrambled eggs, grits, biscuits, coffee and juice, and the cost is $4.50 per person.

Tickets will be available at the Parrish Building, Building 66, bottom floor, after July 24.

For more information, call Pat Porter at 545-1713.

CID offering reward

The U.S. Army Criminal Investigation Command is offering a $250 reward for information concerning the theft of a hand-held General Electric radio, model No. MPA SCAN, serial No. 1399472. The radio was taken from a high mobility, multipurpose wheeled vehicle, which was parked adjacent to Building 9000, Kelley Hill.

Anyone with information should contact the Fort Benning Military Police station at 545-5222 or 545-5223, or Special Agent Reginald Ray, Fort Benning resident agency USACIDC, at 545-5239 or 545-3259.

This reward offer will expire June 14, 1996.

Weapons firing to create loud noises

Residents bordering the northeast corner of Fort Benning may experience loud weapons firing throughout the night through July 20.

The 2nd Battalion, 18th Infantry Regiment (Mechanized), will participate in an advanced gunnery exercise on those dates, and will fire large caliber weapons at Ruth, Carmouche, Ware and Hastings ranges. The gunnery exercise is an essential part of the battalion's training preparation for its rapid deployment mission.

The 2nd Bn., 18th Inf. Regt., which is part of the 3rd Brigade, 24th Inf. Div. (Mech.), was originally scheduled to fire at Fort Stewart, Ga., but had to reschedule training to Fort Benning so Fort Stewart could support a training requirement for the Georgia National Guard's 48th Brigade.

Runners have priority during PT hours

Formations and individual runners have priority of movement on Fort Benning during the established physical training hours of 6 to 7:30 a.m. Monday through Friday.

Formation running is not authorized on sidewalks throughout the installation. Units must use roadways and proper safety equipment must be worn and operational.

Individual runners and walkers may use the sidewalks and also are required to wear proper reflective clothing or road guard vests.

Speed limit during PT hours is 15 mph and 10 mph when passing individuals and troop formations.

Retail sale Saturday

The Defense Reutilization and Marketing Office will conduct a cash-and-carry retail sale Saturday from 7:30 to 11 a.m. Military and civilians are invited.

Items to be offered at the sale will include furniture, clothing, individual equipment, foot lockers, computer components, cots and more. Same day removal is required.

The sale will be at the DRMO complex, Building 470, on 10th Mountain Division Road.

63rd Eng conducting quarry operations

The 63rd Engineers will conduct quarry operations through July 30 on Marne Road to 10th Mountain Division Road to haul fill material to complete the culvert repair near the Defense Reutilization and Marketing Office. Caution should be exercised because of heavy truck traffic in this area.

3rd Bde to change commanders Tues

The 3rd Brigade, 24th Infantry Division (Mechanized), will have a change of command ceremony Tuesday at 9 a.m. on York Field. Col. Michael Deegan will relinquish command to Col. Steven P. Schook.

Mayors' Council to meet third Weds

Mayors' Council meetings with the installation staff will take place the third Wednesday of each month at 9:30 a.m. in Infantry Hall, Room 550. If your designated representative is unable to attend, an alternate must be provided. You will be notified in advance of any changes or cancellations. Meeting dates are Wednesday, Aug. 16, Sept. 20, Oct. 18 and Nov. 15.

Controlled burning set

Controlled burning of woodland areas will take place through Saturday.

If weather permits, the following compartments may be affected: F-4, M-7, O-10, V-3, W-3, AA and BB-2.

Burning will occur in pine stands within these compartments to enhance endangered species habitat and training areas. People using these areas for recreation must leave before 9:30 a.m. daily.

Training units using compartments next to these areas are reminded to exercise caution while traveling in these areas because of the potential for reduced visibility. Units using the ranges and training areas are reminded to remove flammable debris, such as pine straw, leaves, grass and trash from around structures in accordance with USAIC Regulation 210-4, Paragraph 5-22, Organizational Maintenance.

For more information, call 544-6206.

Bayonet drop box available to customers

For the convenience of Bayonet customers, anyone who needs to turn in stories, film, letters, etc., to The Bayonet may now use a new drop box located in the Information Office, Room 111, Infantry Hall, Building 4.

Material being dropped off should be placed in an envelope with a point of contact and a phone number annotated on the envelope.

Customers can still fax material to The Bayonet at 682-0095, send information through PROFS (ID is Bayonet), mail material to: The Bayonet, Infantry Hall, Room 601, send material through distribution or hand carry it to The Bayonet's office, Room 601, whichever is most convenient.

The deadline is noon Friday for the following week's issue.

CHIEF: Retiring Army leader is praised

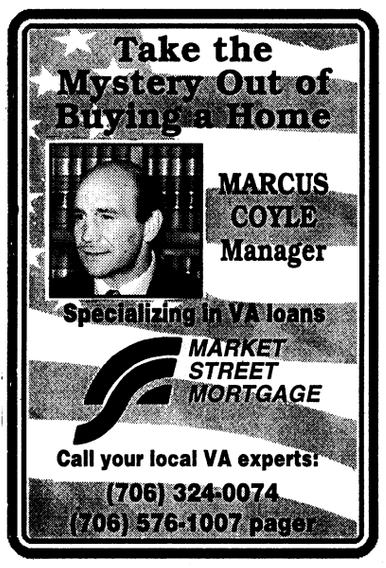
"We had no other choice. As America is strong, so too must her Army be strong."

However, Tuesday's review did not conform to emotionless standards. Not only did Sullivan attest to his love for his bride of 30 years, but he also choked back tears as his bid farewell to America's Army.

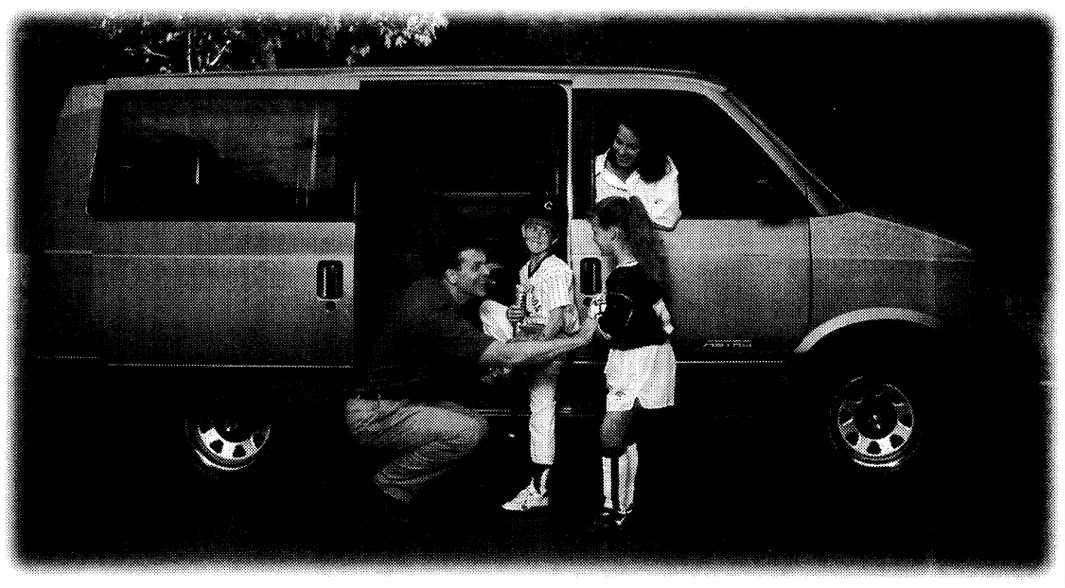
"The indomitable spirit of the American soldier and our family members are what I will remember," Sullivan said. I amproud to have been an American soldier for 36 years. I am proud to have soldiered with each and every one of you around us ... God bless ya. My thoughts are with you. Now show America what a great Army is all about. Hooah!"

The soldiers of the 3rd U.S. Infantry (The Old Guard) and the U.S. Army Band (Pershing's Own), the participating units, responded with a resounding "hooah!" when commanded to pass in review.

A Boston native, Sullivan began his 36 years of Army service in 1959, after receiving his commission as an armor second lieutenant and a bachelor of arts degree in history from Norwich University.



Since then, Sullivan has served America in various assignments. He collected eight years of service in joint and allied assignments, and left America's shores for four tours in Europe, two in Vietnam and one in Korea. Before his assignment to the nation's capital, he commanded the 1st Infantry Division.



Before becoming Army chief of staff, Sullivan was the vice chief of staff of the Army. Before then, he was the Army's deputychief of staff for operations and plans.

Sullivan's awards include the Distinguished Service Medal, the Defense Superior Service Medal, the Legion of Merit, the Purple Heart, the Combat Infantryman's Badge and a number of awards from other services and foreign governments.

DENTAC, Red Cross train volunteer dental assistants

By Lori Egan
Bayonet staff writer

The Fort Benning Dental Activity and the American Red Cross have joined together to offer dental assistants training to Red Cross volunteers.

The DENTAC and American Red Cross Volunteer Dental Assistants Training Program is designed to benefit the Fort Benning and Columbus area and to give the volunteers the basic training needed for this job skill, said Lt. Col. Dennis P. Akiyama, program chairman.

"I think (the program) will be a win-win situation, and a great benefit to the Columbus-Fort Benning community," Akiyama said.

Fort Benning is not looking for dental employees, Akiyama said, but because of the demand for this service in the area, patients will benefit from the program.

The program was initiated as a service for the Fort Benning and Columbus community because of the shortage of dental assistants in the area, Akiyama said.

The program was initiated as a service for the Fort Benning and Columbus community because of the shortage of dental assistants in the area

The program is being taught at Fort Benning's Love Dental Clinic, Bernheim Dental Clinic and Salomon Dental Clinic.

The program's first class of volunteers finished the initial part of their training June 28. The first part of the training consists of three weeks of classroom lectures with classes in preventative dentistry, infection control, basic life support and oral anatomy.

Other classes include labs in operative dentistry and use of the rubber dam. A health lab is given, and how to handle medical emergencies is taught.

The last part of phase one is learning about dental office management and then having a specialty rotation assigned.

The second phase, the clinical portion, began Monday. It consists of 160 hours of clinical practice. During the clinical phase of training, the trainees are actually at the patient's side and involved with the dental treatment, Akiyama said.

Once the trainees complete the clinical phase, they will graduate, receive a certificate of training and a letter of recommendation, Akiyama said.

"The program has turned out great," he said. "The students are enthusiastic, they are doing well academically."

"It is an excellent program," said Bonnie G. Hogue, one of the program's 13 volunteers.

"When I read about the program being offered, I was very excited about it," Hogue said. "After the training is over I will look for a job. But this is my first time volunteering and I plan to continue to volunteer even after this training is completed."

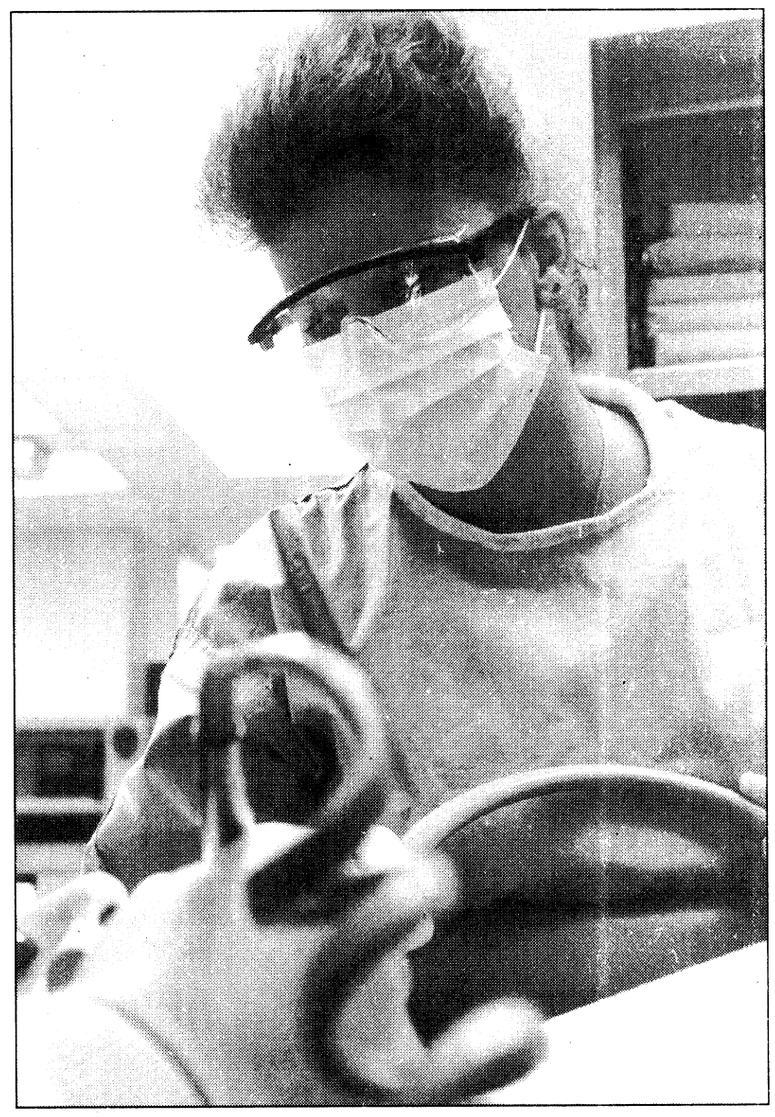
"It's been great, very exciting," said Angela D. Poynter, another of the program's participants. Poynter decided to volunteer for this program because of her continued interest in dentistry.

"Everybody that we have worked with has been really supportive," she said. "They are interested in making sure we are learning as much as possible.

"Everybody (in the class) is pulling for each other, very supportive," she said. "It has been a great experience."

"Dr. Akiyama took the fear out of dentistry," Poynter said. "He has the patience to work with us, tc make sure we are learning what we need to learn."

Once training is completed, Poynter hopes to find a job with a civilian dentist but plans to continue volunteering here at the clinics.



To become involved with the program, register with the American Red Cross on post as a volunteer. The Red Cross gives us the names of those interested, Akiyama said.

Graduates

The following people graduated from the first phase of the dental assistants training program:

• Honor graduates: Tere Bagwell, Angie Poynter

• Graduates: Ellen Anderson, Carolyn Gordon, Reliecia Harris, Bonnie Hogue, Earlyn Johnson, Tracie Kane, Angie Nelson, Annette Patterson, Clara Singletary, Cassandra Powers, and Uli Williams.

Volunteer Bonnie G. Hogue assists Lt. Col. Joe S. Tooley as he does an operative dentistry procedure (a filling) on a Fort Benning basic trainee at Salomon Dental Clinic.

Starting early is key to easy transition counselors say

Army Career and Alumni Program

The Army Career and Alumni Program provides career guidance for soldiers transitioning out of the service. Starting early is the key for soldiers to begin thinking about what they want to do after the military.

Based on soldiers' individual needs, ACAP counselors will offer career guidance and counseling on services and programs available to them. Soldiers schedule individual appointments through their personnel services noncommissioned officer three-day expiration of term of service retirement briefing and ACAP transition counselor appointment.

ACAP offers:

• A three-day retirement Transition Class within 180 days of separation that prepares military members for transition.

• A one-day "advanced course" explaining resume preparation and interviewing skills.

• The Defense Outplacement Referral System process that provides a free service to match a person's abilities to civilian employment positions by sending a mini-resume to a data base accessed by employers worldwide.

• Career Day provides an opportunity for employers to meet soldiers, provide information on job leads and interview prospective clients as needed.

• The Educational Opportunity Program provides an awareness of tuition assistance, enrollment procedures, or current data on any college or university.

• The Skill Development Program is intended to provide training opportunities to soldiers, civilians and family members who transition from the Army.

• Referrals for separation benefits to include Special Separation Benefits, Voluntary Separation Incentive and retirement.

• Employer, Career Day (12 trucking companies) — July 21, 9 a.m. to noon

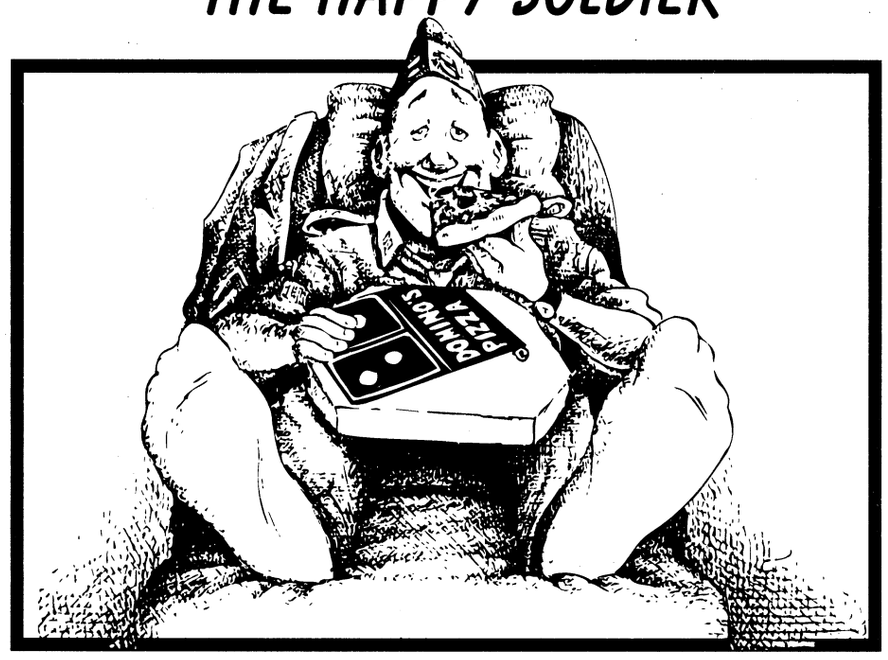
For more information, call 545-2308 or 545-2309.

Job opportunities available in transportation

Job Assistance Center

Representatives from several trucking companies will be available July 21 from 9 a.m. to noon to recruit service members who are getting out of the service. The Army Employer Network has more than 20 trucking firms that actively recruit service members.

This career day will give trucking companies and job seekers the chance to meet face-to-face to discuss employment opportunities.



Attendees will have the chance to sit down with top trucking company recruiters and find out exactly what they have to offer.

Some trucking companies pay salaries while an individual completes a comprehensive training program. First-year wages for inexperienced drivers are normally well above other entry level jobs.

Additionally, hot leads through the Transition Bulletin Board lists many driving positions on a daily basis. Accompanying this demand for drivers are requirements for mechanics, maintenance supervisors, dispatchers and terminal managers.

For information on qualifications and training, come to the Employer Day at Building 2634 or call 545-2308 or 545-2309.

Jump School

Photos by Marc G. Turchin

Pvt. 1 Andy L. Spooner, 19th AG Replacement Detachment, Fort Bragg, N.C., gets ready for his first jump.

A jumper with Company B, 1st Battalion, 507th Infantry (Airborne), 11th Infantry Regiment, exits a C-141 aircraft for the first time. The jumpmaster's hand has just released him to exit. The ground is 1,250 feet below.

By Marc G. Turchin
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Someone once said "if man was meant to fly, he'd have been born with wings." That is not necessarily true at Fort Benning, where more than 25,000 members of the U.S. military a year, earn their "wings" by attending the U.S. Army Airborne School.

This school is required for anyone who is or will be stationed in an airborne unit in any branch of the military.

The three-week long school is divided into three areas of instruction, ground week, tower week and jump week.

The first week covers the essentials of exiting the aircraft, said Staff Sgt. William T. Sigmon, an instructor, "blackhat," with Company B, 1st Battalion, 507th Infantry (Airborne), 11th Infantry Regiment.

During this week, Sigmon said, students learn the first three out of five points of performance, which are: check body position and count, check canopy and gain canopy control and look out for other jumpers. The most important thing, according to Sigmon is how to not get hurt when coming in contact with the ground by performing a parachute landing fall.

"We do extensive parachute landing fall training during ground week," Sigmon said. "Basically our whole school revolves around that."

One of the hardest things about ground week is exiting the mock door of an aircraft and exiting the 34-foot tower, said Sgt. 1st Class Arthur W. Vigil, platoon sergeant for Company B.

"It's not natural to throw your body out in the air," Sigmon said.

Next up for the airborne students is tower week.

"Tower week is more of a refinement process," Sigmon said.

The students learn what to do once they have exited the aircraft, how to make emergency landings such as water, tree and high-tension wire landings; how to follow commands inside the aircraft and how to do a mass exit, which is when both sides of the aircraft are used to exit at one time.

The toughest and most important part of tower week, according to Vigil, is swing landing training. This covers the last two points of performance — prepare to land and land.

Students are attached to harnesses. They then leave a platform and swing back and forth in a "prepare to land attitude," which means their body is contorted in a manner that will best absorb the impact of the ground. As they swing, they are lowered to the ground by the blackhat in charge of the station; and, when the blackhat feels the person is ready, the student is dropped. The student must then perform whatever PLF is being practiced.

"It all boils down to the landing," Vigil said. The SLT gives the students the opportunity to do all PLFs — front, rear, left and right.

All the training for the first two weeks leads up to the third week — jump week.

The week begins with the company running to Lawson Army Airfield early in the morning. After that, the students go through "pre-jump" instructions.

This includes going through the mock door and exiting the aircraft, performing the all four PLFs and rehearsing all five points of performance. Each jump day during that week begins the same way.

Once the students have been issued a reserve and a parachute, most of the day will be spent inside the harness shed next to McCarthy Hall.

The students, led by a harness shed noncommissioned officer and other blackhats, will put on their parachutes in a very detailed manner. Each step is checked and rechecked by NCOs and the companies officers.

"All we have to do is, once again step by step, pop the jumper into the parachute," said Sigmon.

Once everyone is ready, the students are loaded onto either a C-130 or C-141 aircraft.

Pvt. 1 Andy L. Spooner, 19th Adjutant General Replacement Detachment, Fort Bragg, N.C. , who was inside the aircraft preparing for his first jump said, "I have this happy feeling, but I'm scared."

As the engines of the aircraft began to roar, the students roared also with a scream of their own. Spooner did also.

"I have this adrenaline rush coming right now," Spooner said. "They (the blackhats) showed me everything I need to know. All I have to do is execute."

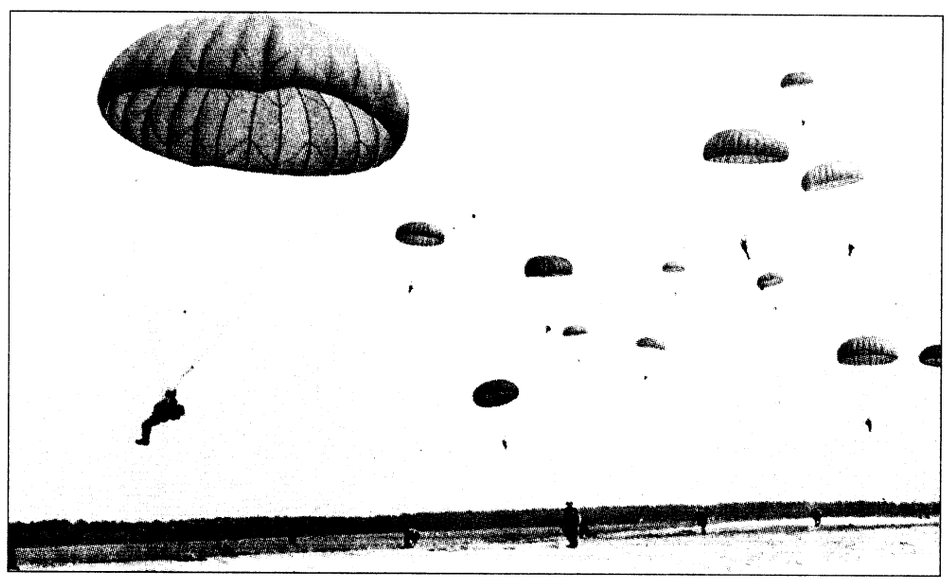
Once airborne, the students get all their commands from two of at least four jumpmasters on board.

With each command, the students know it is a little closer to exiting the aircraft.

By the time the command of "one minute" is given, the adrenaline running through their bodies can be seen on their faces. Some are in deep concentration, others turn red, while still others have an expression of the unknown.

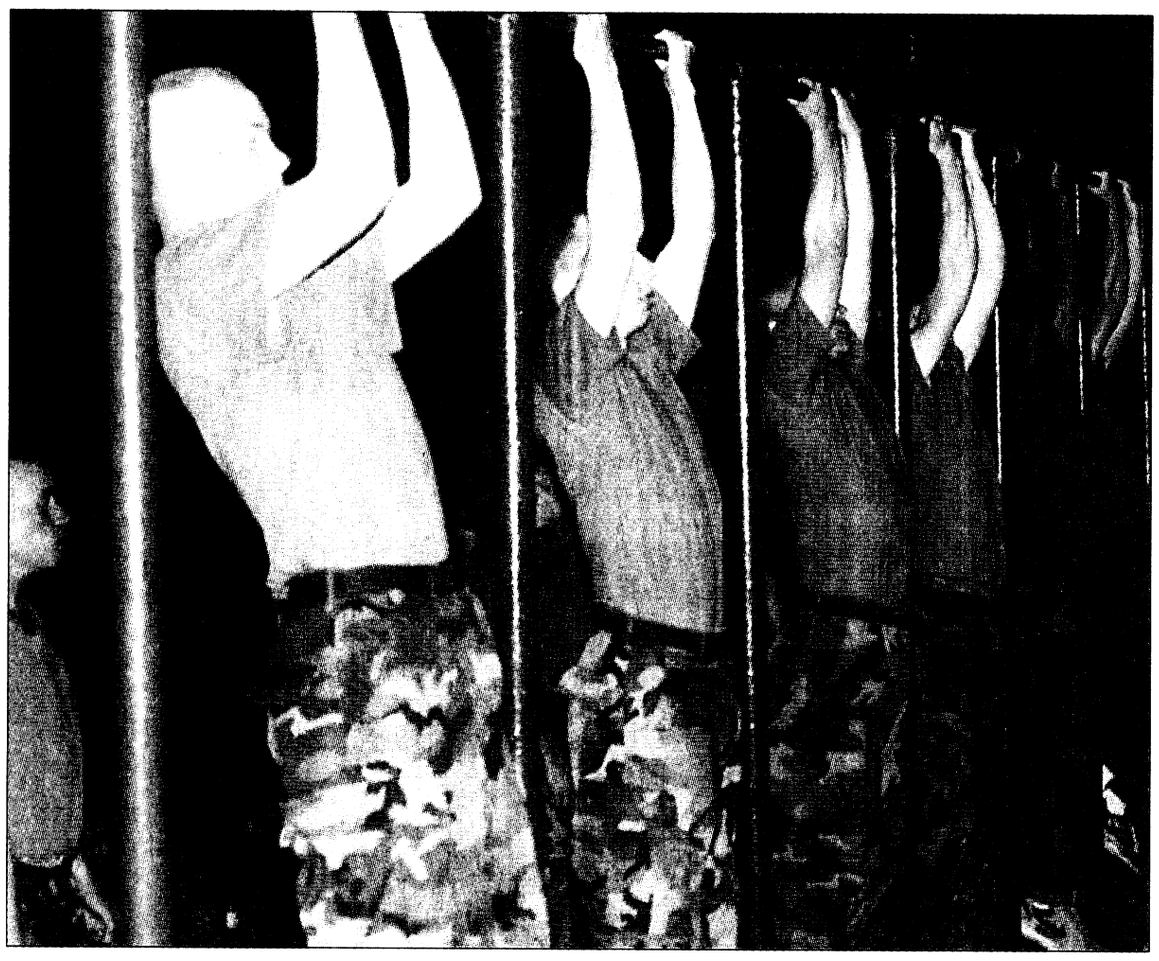
The next command is "30 seconds." The jumpmasters key in on the drop zone coming up by putting their heads out the door. The first jumper then gets the command of "drop zone coming up, stand by." This jumper moves into position and faces directly out the door, awaiting the final command — go.

On the side of the exit door are two light bulbs — one is red and one is green. The red bulb stays illuminated the entire flight except for a brief time when flying over the drop zone. When the light turns from red to green, the command of "go" is given and the first jumper walks out the door. This jumper is followed by seven to 15 jumpers at a time.



Each class will do two jumps with combat equipment, which includes a rucksack and a weapon carrying case. One jump is during the day and one is at night. The other three jumps will be "hollywoods," which are jumps without combat equipment.

With five jumps under their belt, the final step is graduation.



"I went through basic training, but this is the best experience I've had in the Army. I loved it," said Glenn A. Fuller, a ROTC cadet from Central Mississippi University.

First Lt. Michael D. Hastings, executive officer for Company B, said the students should leave the school with pride.

"I want people who wear the wings to feel the pride I do," Hastings said. He said he thinks wearing the wings on someone's chest should mean something.

Airborne students fall from the sky during jump week of Airborne School. This is the final test for the students and they must complete five safe jumps to graduate from the course.

Students must do pull-ups as part of physical training during Airborne School. The pull-up is practiced to build up arm and back muscles so that jumpers can perform certain tactics of landing after exiting the aircraft.

Whenever a jumper wears a reserve parachute, he or she must always have a hand over the rip cord, which deploys the parachute. This is to protect the reserve from deploying without intention.

11th takes on new cdr

By Marc G. Turchin
Bayonet staff writer

One of Fort Benning's largest resident units got a new commander during a July 6 morning ceremony on York Field.

Col. John P. Lewis took command of the 11th Infantry Regiment from outgoing commander Col. Walter Wojdakowski Jr.

Wojdakowski, who commanded the 11th for two years and is now headed to Grafenwoehr, Germany, will be the director of training for the 7th Army Training Command.

After relinquishing command to Lewis, Wojdakowski said he was speaking on behalf of all the soldiers and family members of the regiment.

"I need to tell ya that the regiment hasn't had a bad day in a long time," he said. "Today is not going to be a bad day. We're going to celebrate two years of great accomplishments of the leaders and the soldiers of the regiment."

During his remarks, Wojdakowski made comments about each of the four battalions inside the regiment.

Wojdakowski highlighted the 1st Battalion, 507th Infantry (Airborne), 11th Infantry Regiment.

The battalion will soon be awarded the Army Superior Unit Award, which is the highest award a unit can receive during peacetime.

"It's a credit to the great training standards of (the) noncommissioned officers and leaders in that outfit, the leaders' supervision (and) most importantly the soldier care that they give our paratroopers while they're here to train," he said.

Maj. Gen. John W. Hendrix, post commanding general, was the guest speaker at the ceremony. He spoke about when Wojdakowski's first arrived at Fort Benning.

"When I was serving as the assistant commandant, the deputy commanding general here ... a very tall colonel with a difficult last name reported to Fort Benning to take command of the 11th Infantry Regiment. He took over a great 11th Infantry Regiment and he made it better today than it was then," Hendrix said as he looked face-to-face with the crowd.

Hendrix also talked about Wojdakowski's leadership style.

"Walt Wojdakowski has epitomized leadership during his tenure as commander of the 11th Infantry Regiment."

Some of Wojdakowski's past leadership positions are commander 3rd Battalion, 41st Infantry Regiment, Tiger Brigade, 2nd Armored Division at Fort Hood, Texas and during Desert Shield and Storm; he was a platoon leader, executive officer, ranger instructor and commander at Fort Lewis, Wash., and at the Army Mountain Ranger Camp at Dahlonega, Ga.

His military education includes the Infantry Officer Basic and Advanced courses, the Command and General Staff College, the School of Advanced Military Studies and the Army War College. He is also a graduate of the U.S. Military Academy at West Point, N.Y.

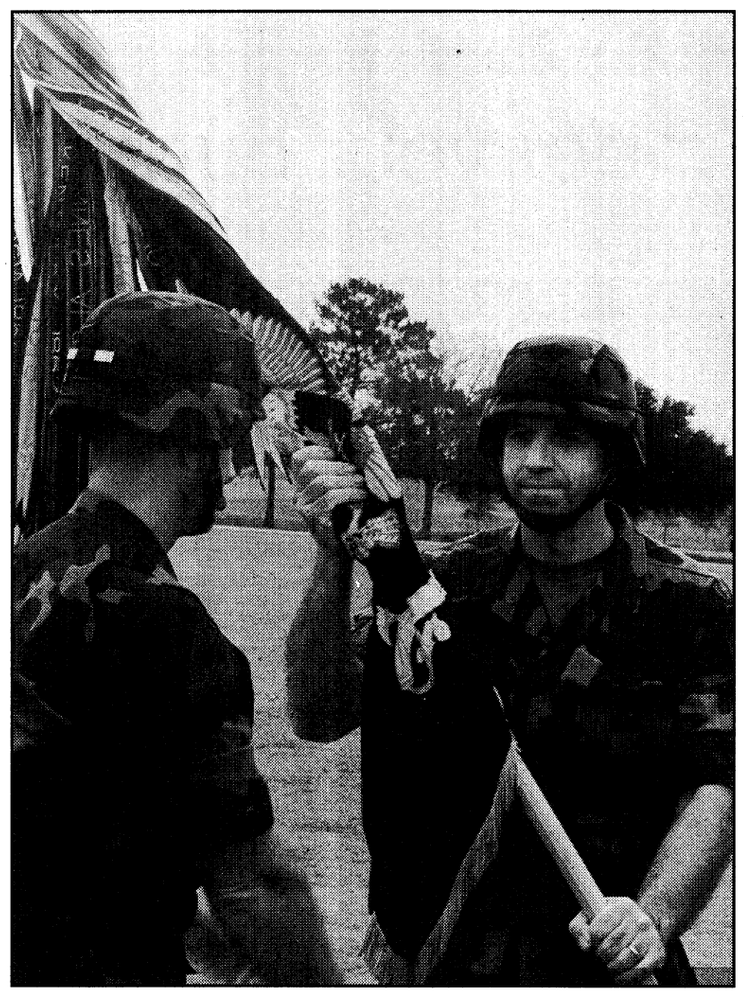
Some of his awards include the Silver Star, the Legion of Merit, the Bronze Star, the Army and Navy Commendation Medals, the Army Achievement Medal, the Combat and Expert Infantryman badges, the Ranger Tab and the Master Parachutist Badge.

Wojdakowski and his wife, Candy, have two children — Steven, 15 and Ami, 13.

Wojdakowski's replacement, Lewis, comes from Fort McPherson, in Atlanta where he was the chief of Task Force Planning, Forces Command.

His other assignments include commander, 5th Battalion, 20th Infantry Regiment, 2nd Infantry Division, Camp Casey, Korea; commander, Presidential Honor Guard, Fort McNair, Washington, D.C., and he served as an assistant professor of Military Science at Purdue University, Lafayette, Ind.

Lewis' military education include the Infantry Officer Basic and Advanced courses, the Command and General Staff College, the School of Advanced Military Studies and the Army War College.



Some of his awards are the Meritorious Service Medal with seven oak leaf clusters, the Army Commendation Medal with three oak leaf clusters, the Army Expeditionary Medal, the Expert Infantryman Badge and the Parachutist and Air Assault Badge.

Lewis said he was both honored and humbled to be the new commander of the regiment.

"(I'm) honored by your presence on the field, honored to be given the opportunity to command one more time," Lewis said to the formation of soldiers on the field.

"I am simply honored to say I am part of the 11th Infantry Regiment (and) humbled by seeing the regiment for the first time and recognizing the great trust and confidence that the American people have placed in this unit. We will in fact do the right thing each and every day in training, preparing and embedding the warrior spirit into the infantry leaders and soldiers to ensure they are ready to lead our Army into the 21st century."

Lewis and his wife, Nancy have three children.

75th Rangers to get new boss

USAIC Public Affairs Office

The 75th Ranger Regiment will change command with Col. James T. Jackson turning the regiment over to Col. William J. Leszczynski Jr. Wednesday on York Field at 9 a.m.

Leszczynski graduated from the U.S. Military Academy at West Point, N.Y., in 1972. His early assignments were with the 82nd Airborne Division, Fort Bragg, N.C., and the 9th Infantry Division and 2nd Ranger Battalion at Fort Lewis, Wash. He has served as an instructor at the U.S. Military Academy, deputy commander of the 4th Battalion, 325th Infantry Battalion Combat Team, Vicenza, Italy, followed by an assignment with the 82nd Airborne Division. Returning to Fort Lewis, he served as the executive officer of the 2nd Ranger Battalion. He commanded the 3rd Battalion, 9th Infantry Regiment at Ford Ord, Calif., and Joint Task Force Bravo in Honduras.

Leszczynski graduated from the Infantry Officer Basic and Advanced courses, the U.S. Marine Corps Command and General Staff College and the U.S. Army War College. He received a master's degree in exercise science from the University of Massachusetts.

His awards and decorations include the Legion of Merit, Bronze Star Medal, Meritorious Service Medal with three oak leaf clusters, Army Achievement Medal with two oak leaf clusters, Combat Infantryman Badge, Expert Infantryman Badge, Master Parachutist Badge, Air Assault Badge, Honduran Parachutist Badge, Canadian Parachutist Badge, Portuguese Parachutist Badge and Ranger Tab.

Leszczynski and his wife, Jennifer, have two children.

Jackson's next assignment is the assistant operations officer at the U.S. special Operations Command, MacDill Air Force Base, Fla. He has previously commanded the 1st Battalion, 505th Infantry Regiment, 82nd Airborne Division, and the 3rd Ranger Battalion at Fort Benning.

During Jackson's tenure of command, escalating violence in Mogadishu, Somalia, resulted in the decision to deploy some 400 rangers from the 3rd Battalion to reinforce the Quick Reaction Force in Somalia from the 10th Mountain Division.

Jackson and his wife, Nancy, have three daughters.

Former sailor takes command of SOA helicopter Bn

By Judith Ginder
School of the Americas

The former enlisted National Guardsman never dreamed he would become a company commander. But, after going from soldier to sailor to soldier again, that is exactly where he is.

Maj. Jacob L. Swezey took command of Company A, School of the Americas Helicopter School Battalion, from Maj. Jose R. Arroyo July 6 at Cairnes Army Airfield at Fort Rucker, Ala.

Swezey graduated from the Navy Aviation Officer Candidate School in 1978 and shortly thereafter was designated a naval aviator. He flew the A-6 Intruder Attack Aircraft for the Navy. After leaving the Navy, the civilian Swezey was also a captain in the National Guard. He was recalled to active duty during the Gulf War in 1991 and has been on active duty ever since.

Having been at HSB since its inception in 1991, Swezey helped develop the helicopter battalion and has been both deputy commander and executive officer.

Swezey said that Alpha Company is responsible for 12 separate programs of instruction. HSB was initially formed at the request of the U.S. State Department to provide vital aviation training to cadets from El Salvador. Eventually, the school was expanded to include training to other countries in Latin America.

The new company commander also added that Alpha Company alone has trained more than 800 aviators from Latin America. Instructors at HSB not only teach pilots, but helicopter mechanics as well.

Swezey said he has been lucky during his military career to have been with a unique command such as SOA's Helicopter School Battalion. He also said that support from his wife, Laura, and their four children is a vital ingredient to his mission.

317th Eng receives new battalion commander

USAIC Public Affairs Office

The 317th Engineer Battalion has a new commander. Lt. Col. David A. Kingston succeeded Lt. Col. Kenneth S. Kasprisin as commander of the battalion July 10 at 9 a.m. during a change of command ceremony on Fort Benning's Dickman Field.

Kasprisin has commanded the 317th, which is part of the 3rd Brigade, 24th Infantry Division (Mechanized) for two years. His new assignment is at Elmendorf Air Force Base, Alaska, as chief exercise director in the Joint Operations Office.

Kingston comes to Fort Benning after serving as an instructor at the Armed Forces Staff College in Norfolk, Va.

Kingston was born in Meadville, Penn, and commissioned a second lieutenant in the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers upon his graduation from the U.S. Military Academy in 1976.

His Army service includes a number of command and staff assignments, including platoon leader, company executive officer and assistant battalion training officer with the 39th Engineer Battalion at Fort Devens, Mass.; battalion maintenance officer and company commander with the 299th Engineer Battalion at Fort Sill, Okla.; deputy resident engineer and deputy district engineer for the New Orleans District, U.S. Corps of Engineers; brigade engineer, training officer for the 10th Engineer Battalion and Division Secretary of the General Staff, 3rd Infantry Division (Mechanized), Wuerzburg, Germany.

Kingston has a master's degree in civil engineering from Pennsylvania State University. His military education includes the Engineer Officer Basic and Advance courses, Airborne and Ranger schools and the Command and General Staff College at Fort Leavenworth, Kan. He is a registered professional engineer in Virginia.

Kingston and his wife, Dorothy, have three children.

RI National Guard sponsor Leapfest

Rhode Island Army National Guard

The 13th Annual International Static Line Parachute competition (Leapfest 1995) will be conducted Aug. 19 and 20, hosted by the Rhode Island Army National Guard. This competition is the largest static line competition conducted in the world.

The Leapfest competition consists of teams from all branches of the service as well as allied teams such as the Untied Kingdom, Germany, Tunisia, Brazil and Canada. Teams consist of six soldiers per team, four primary jumpers, one static jumpmaster and one alternate jumper.

The rules are simple — each jumper exits the aircraft and performs a parachute landing fall. Jumpers are timed from the time they hit the ground to the time they cross the "X" marking the center of the drop zone with all of their equipment. Individual awards and team awards are presented at the awards banquet to take place immediately after the competition.

Transportation, billets and most meals are provided with the entrance fee of $300 per team. A C-130 is scheduled to pick up participants at Pope Air Force Base Aug. 18 with a return scheduled Aug. 20.

For more information and reservations, call DSN 557-3330 or (401) 885-5210 or 885-5211.

A disability policy to meet your budget

Georgia Society of Certified Public Accountants Inc.

Disability insurance protects you and your family by providing a monthly benefit check in the event you are unable to work because of an accident or prolonged illness. While disability protection can be expensive, there are a number of strategies you can employ to help make disability coverage more affordable.

Scale back the monthly benefit — To decide if this is really an option, determine how much of a benefit you need to cover your monthly expenses. In calculating this figure, be sure to consider any employer-sponsored group disability insurance you may have, as well as personal savings you have earmarked for emergencies.

Most insurers will offer to sell you a policy that brings your total income from all sources to 60 to 70 percent of your gross salary — a limitation that creates an incentive for you to return to work. However, if you determine that you could live comfortably on less income, agreeing to a lower monthly benefit will save you money on premiums. Bear in mind that when you pay for your own disability insurance, benefits are tax-free — a factor that increases your spending power. In certain instances, amounts received under employer-sponsored disability plans may also be tax-free.

Reduce the benefit period — This is the time during which benefits would be paid to you. Generally, you may choose to receive your benefits over a period of five years, until you reach age 65, or for your lifetime. Lifetime benefits are the most costly option. Limiting the benefit period to a few years can cut costs, but won't provide the income you'll need if you are disabled indefinitely. To make coverage affordable, many people forego lifetime coverage and choose to collect benefits until age 65, when they become eligible for Social Security, Medicare and possibly company pension benefits.

Lengthen the waiting period — The period of time from the onset of a disability to the date you receive your first benefit check is called the waiting or elimination period. This is the disability policy equivalent of a "deductible." It may be as short as 30 days or as long as a year. You can save on premiums by increasing the waiting period. Workers who can wait 90 days, instead of the standard 30 days, may be able to trim nearly 50 percent off the basic premium. However, before lengthening any waiting period, be sure you have sufficient savings to cover your living expenses before benefits kick in.

Agree to tougher standards of disability — A key section of any policy is the definition a company uses to determine whether you qualify for benefits. Most policies offer two primary options for defining disability. Some policies consider you disabled and eligible for benefits only if you are unable to perform your own job, or "any other occupation for which you are reasonably qualified by training, education, or experience. This option is usually suitable to less specialized occupations such as sales.

"Own occupation," a more expensive type of coverage often favored by professionals, allows policyholders who can't work in their specific professions to receive full benefits, even if they are able to do some other kind of work. Take, for example, the case of a surgeon who suffers a hand injury and may no longer be able to operate but decides to teach surgery. With "own occupation" coverage, the surgeon would receive 100 percent of his or her disability income benefits in addition to the income he or she earns in a new occupation.

Weigh the options — A noncancelable policy means the company guarantees renewal and maintains your premium at its original level for as long as you keep the policy. A less costly option is a guaranteed renewal policy. This policy cannot be canceled as long as you pay your premium, but the company may increase your rates as long as it raises the rates for an entire class of policyholders. Many disability policies offer riders that provide additional options. It's important to evaluate them carefully. Some simply aren't worth the cost.

CPAs recommend that you reassess your disability insurance needs as your career progresses and your assets grow. You may find that you can scale back on one or more of your disability insurance options and rely more on your savings.

Staff Judge Advocate's Office

Q: I have been to several dealerships in the area trying to purchase an automobile. However, I keep getting turned down when it comes to financing.

The last dealership I visited informed me that it would not finance the car because of an outstanding debt owed to GMAC on my credit report.

I have never financed anything from GMAC. How do I go about correcting my credit history?

A: If you find an erroneous entry in your credit report, the credit bureau must check it and correct it for you.

Your first step is to obtain a copy of your credit report if you do not already have one. Because you have been denied credit, the credit bureau will give you a copy of your credit report free of charge.

Once you have confirmed that there is a mistake in your report, send a letter to the credit bureau requesting it to investigate the entry.

The credit bureau will then contact the company reporting the derogatory information and have it verify the information. If the company cannot verify the entry, the credit bureau must remove it.

However, correct information about late payments can stay on your record for seven years. More severe credit problems, for example, bankruptcy, can stay on your record for up to 10 years.

If a company verifies the debt but you still dispute the amount or its validity, you can send to the credit bureau a 100 word statement of explanation for the credit problem. This will ensure that future creditors can read your side of the story when they request your credit history.

Based on your statement they may decide to extend you credit despite the derogatory information.

Remember, when you make a correction on your credit file, make sure the correction is made at all three major credit bureaus — TRW, Equifax, and Trans Union. Expect the verification process to take up to 30 days. As a preventive measure, you should get a copy of your credit report about once a year or before major credit purchases, and check it for inaccuracies. If you need more information or assistance, call Legal Assistance at 545-3281.

Watch out for not-so-big savings sales

Better Business Bureau

Every year thousands of businesses close down, move or sell out and hold special sales to clear out their remaining stock of merchandise. To many consumers, going-out-of-business sales indicate big savings and limited time offers. The Better Business Bureau warns, however, that in some cases such sales may not offer the best buys in town, said Lou Marcotte.

There are times, when a store must close its doors and liquidate any remaining stock quickly. According to the BBB, and state and local laws, these sales should take place only if their stated or implied reason is a fact. Sales should be limited to a stated period of time and offer only merchandise that is affected by the emergency. Liquidation, bankruptcy, and going-out-of-business sales usually provide consumers with opportunities for big savings. However, unscrupulous businesses may run "final closing" sales regularly, ringing up big sales because the stores imply a sense of urgency and consumers believe they are purchasing merchandise at greatly reduced prices.

Some stores try to convince consumers they are going out of business over several month, yet they continue to bring in new merchandise at greatly reduced prices.

Some stores try to convince consumers they are going out of business over several months, yet they continue to bring in new merchandise, or a store may post artificially high prices, just so it can claim big savings. For instance, the $500 item marked "half-off" may normally sell for less than $250.

Instead of closing down, a store may reopen under a new name in the same or a new location, said Marcotte. Once it reopens for business, it may run another going-out-of-business sale, a play on words used to lure customers with the implied promise of savings.

While big savings may be found at a legitimate "everything must go" sale, such savings shouldn't automatically be assumed. Consumers should compare price and quality and read warranties carefully to find out if the item can be taken to a service center or other facility, since the store is closing and won't be able to offer service on its merchandise.

Marcotte said, by comparing prices and understanding the real meaning of advertising promotions, consumers can avoid misleading sales pitches and take advantage of stores offering truly good deals.

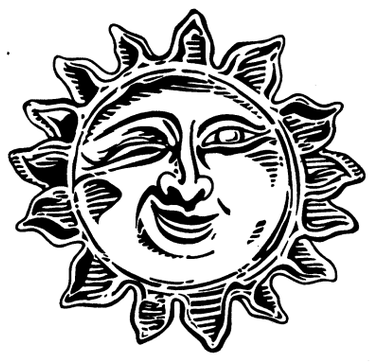
Beware of hot weather casualties

The University of Georgia Cooperative Extension Service

Caution in the sun is the key to surviving in the heat wave that we are experiencing.

Prolonged exposure to the sun and heat leads to dehydration. Drink plenty of water or refreshing fruit juices to replace body fluids. Frozen fruit juice popsicles make cooling treats for young and old alike and help to keep the body temperature normal.

Work in your garden or yard early in the morning or late in the evening. Stay in the shade as much as possible. If you must be out of doors, wear a hat to keep the sun from beating down on your head.



Remember to be safe and have good sun sense.

Older Georgians: take the summer sizzle seriously

Spring temperatures in Georgia mean mild days and cool nights, but summer weather brings very hot days and nights.

For older Georgians this extreme temperature has important implications. As the body ages it becomes less able to respond to physical stress such as long exposure to heat. Older Georgians with heart and circulatory disease, strokes and diabetes need to be especially cautious of over-exposure to heat.

Heat related illness can be avoided through a four-pronged approach: prevention, preparation, knowledge of danger signals, and appropriate action when necessary.

Eating cool

A great way to beat the heat is to plan "cool-food" menus. Salads of fresh garden lettuce, tomatoes, squash, cucumbers, or carrots, with toppers of chopped ham, chicken or beef leftovers and grated cheese, will provide a well balanced meal, when accompanied by fresh bread or rolls. A tall cooling glass of tea or fruit juice will help replace body fluids.

You will stay doubly cool by not using your range to cook and by eating "cool-foods".

Hot weather danger signals

Knowing the symptoms of the various heat-related illnesses can aid personal action as well as action toward a victim. Heat Cramps are painful spasms often experienced in the leg or abdomen due to loss of salts and water. Other symptoms include pale, wet and cool skin. The body temperature is about normal.

Heat Exhaustion also results from loss of body water and salts. It takes longer to develop this than other heat-related illnesses. Symptoms include weakness, heavy sweating, nausea, and giddiness. The body temperature is about normal with pale, wet and cool skin.

Heat Stroke requires immediate attention and medical treatment. Among the symptoms are faintness, dizziness, headache, rapid pulse and hot, flushed but dry skin. The body temperature may vary from 104 to 110 degrees.

Action, if necessary

For heat cramps, apply warm, wet towels and firm pressure to the affected muscle. Drink small amounts of liquids.

For heat exhaustion, remove the victim to a cool room and allow the person to lie down. Give cool liquids to drink.

Heat stroke requires immediate medical help, but until help arrives the victim should be cooled off rapidly. Clothing may be removed or loosened, and cool towels or wet ice packs may be applied. A wet sheet may be used to wrap up the victim in a cool room.

Above all, take the heat seriously and heed any danger signal! Summer survival depends on it.

AMU volleys for spots

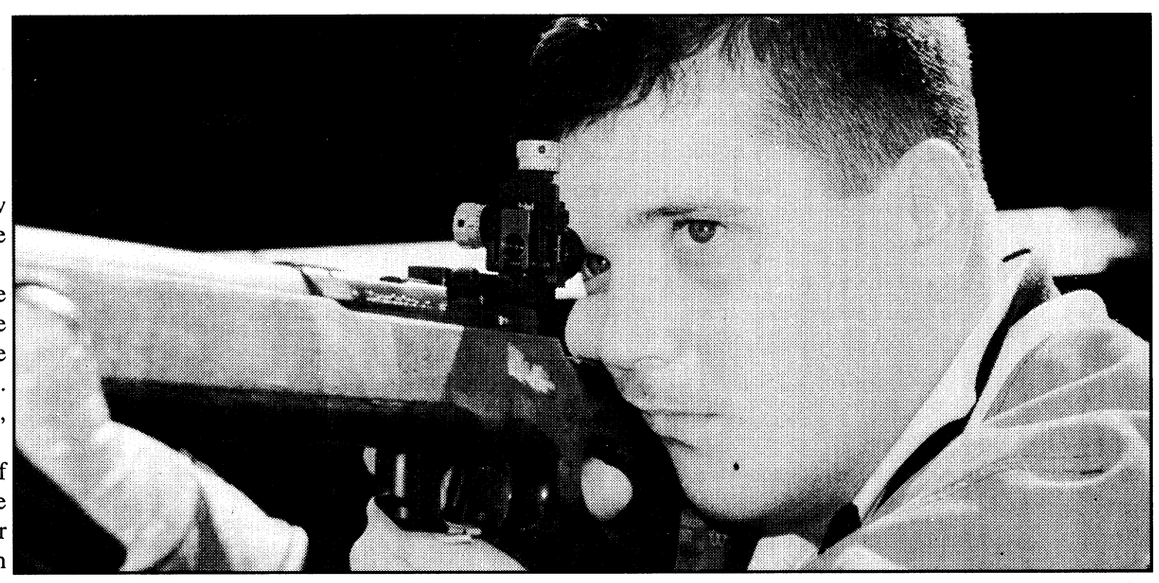
By Deana Kussman
U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit

The U.S. Shooting National Shooting Championship in Chino, Calif. have seen the full strength of the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit's shooters.

USAMU pistol shooter Cpl. Daryl Szarenski placed first in the free pistol competition with a score of 657.0 out of a possible 709.

Szarenski, a marksman on the USAMU's International Pistol team, won the gold, leading the second place finisher by almost five points. His win at nationals, which is the first of a series of selection matches for slots on the U.S. Olympic team, earns him a place on the U.S. national pistol team. He will continue on to the next Olympic team elimination round.

Sgt. Thomas Tamas set a new national record in the free rifle prone event of the championships.



Tamas, a marksman on the USAMU's international rifle team, shot a score of 1295.4 in the competition. Teammate Cpl. Kenneth Johnson placed second, shooting 1293.9.

Capt. Glenn Dubis, also of USAMU's international rifle team, fell to fourth place after losing a two-shot shoot-off with another shooter.

In addition to Tamas' national record, the USAMU's Gold team shot its way to a new national record in the free rifle prone team competition. The team, composed of Dubis, Capt. Matthew Suggs and Maj. Boyd Goldsby, placed first with 1788 points. The score crushed the former national record by a huge six points.

USAMU Blue Team placed second with a score of 1778. Sgt. Kendall Goben, Johnson and Tamas' scores were combined to make the team score.

In the men's air rifle event, Johnson placed first with a score of 1289.4 out of 1309, followed by Dubis in second with 1286.1.

Benning youths selected for all-girl soccer team

Two Fort Benning girls were selected to play with the Georgia Athena Youth Soccer League of the Columbus Youth Soccer Program.

Katrina Petterson, 13, and Stephanie Fry, 14, tried out at the Athena Soccer Team tryouts in June and were selected.

Patrick Chauvey, the coach of the Fort Benning soccer team recommended the girls to Mike Childs, the coach for the Athena All-Girls Soccer Team.

The Athena Youth Soccer Team competes at statewide level and is frequently used for college recruitment. A training camp and two tournaments are already scheduled before the end of the summer.

Benning boxers warm up for Olympics

By Brian R. Voller
Bayonet staff writer

Born and raised on the streets of Puerto Rico Pfc. Yammar Resto, Company B, 4th Battalion, 41st Field Artillery Regiment, learned how to fight out of necessity. Now he has turned his forced fighting skills into an advantage that could lead him to the Olympic Games in Atlanta.

"I had to sneak out of my house to go to the gym and train," Resto said. "My father didn't want me to fight, but I'm glad I did because I'm good at what I do."

Resto has been fighting competitively since he was 13, he is now 20. He is the first soldier from Fort Benning to place at the All-Army Tournament where he took a bronze medal.

Along with Resto four other fighters currently train with retired Sgt. 1st Class, Charles Kirkland at the Kelley Hill physical fitness facility.

One of the fighters, Pvt. 2 Julio C. Llamas, Company C, 4th Bn, 41st FA , is also preparing like Resto to take part in the Olympic Games.

Llamas has already competed with the Mexico boxing team where he took the Championship in the Blue and Gold Regionals.

"We train hard everyday preparing for our competitions," Llamas said. "We get up early and run three to four miles, then we come back at noon and make sure we keep our weights down, and finally we come back back at 5 p.m. and work hard usually until 7:30 p.m."

The other three fighters that currently train with Kirkland are headed for their first fights in amateur competition.

Pvt. 2 Julio C. Garcia, Company D, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment, Pfc. Tremain T. Maynard, Headquarters and Headquarters Detachment, 4th Bn., 41st FA and Pfc. Jose E. Mercado, Company A, 4th Bn., 41st FA, all competed in their first fights on July 11 when they fought at Fort Gordon, Ga., in the Army vs. the Marine Corps competition.

"I used to do martial arts before I came here," Maynard said. "I like the discipline that coach (Kirkland) gives to us when we fight.

"I just like the sport and I like that I'm getting good at it."

As far as his boxers are concerned, Kirkland said he feels there are no boxers that can beat his.

"I train my boxers to believe that every punch they throw is their best punch," Kirkland said. "My fighters do what they have to do to win. We don't set game plans for the fights, we make our opponents adjust to us."

Both Resto and Llamas plan to be part of the Olympic team next summer, and after they compete there they said they would like to move into the professional ranks of boxing.

The future of Fort Benning boxing is bright, according to Kirkland.

"I've been retired from the army for two years, and I've been coaching boxing for 10 years," Kirkland said. "I'd like to see the All-Army boxing team come back to Fort Benning again.

AMU takes tops at interservice

U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit

U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit shotgun team members secured top finishes during the Interservice Championships held in June.

It was a momentous victory for the USAMU marksmen who took the top four places in the doubles trap and trap events - shutting out nearly 30 competitors from locations nationwide.

"The significance of placing in the top four during this championship cannot be understated," said Burl Branham, USAMU shotgun team coach.

"The reason being is those USAMU soldiers who fired well in the Interservice Championships are the first of three selection matches for the 1996 Olympic Games," Branham said.

While the USAMU marksmen did well, Branham is careful not to let his shooters grow complacent with their performances.

"The fact of the matter is they shot extremely well during this last championship," Branham said. "Still, we'll need to tighten the screws a little on our training to maintain the edge we'll need to do well in Colorado Springs."

The Interservice Championships Doubles Trap Event winners are:

Spec. David Alcoriza, first place, 185; Sgt. James Graves, second, 182; Sgt. Bret Erickson, third place, 175; Pfc. Joseph Winnicki, fourth place, 172.

All scores are out of 200 points.

The top four finishers in the trap event were Graves in first with 193, Alcoriza in second with 186, Marine Corps Master Sgt. Ray Ycong in third with 185 and Winnicki in fourth with 184.

50 turn out for night tactical pistol match

Ruth Spaller

Dennis Cavender of LaGrange, Ga., takes aim at the car door station during the night tactical pistol match on English Range Saturday.

By Ruth J. Spaller
USAIC Public Affairs Office

About 50 competitors came out to English Range Saturday night to shoot by the light of the moon in a tactical pistol match sponsored by the Fort Benning Rifle and Pistol Club.

The shooters tested both their night vision and their skill at stations set up to simulate real-life scenarios they might encounter at night, such as shooting from the passenger side of a car, and shooting while holding a flashlight as well as a weapon.

The next tactical match, the first in a fall tactical match series, will be at English Range Aug. 5 at 10 a.m. The match will have a separate side match and a stressfire pistol side match.

"Stressfire is something new that we are very excited about," said Jim Graham, assistant manager, Fort Benning Rifle and Pistol Club.

"It requires the competitor to engage discretionary targets in an environment of high physical and mental stress. The competitor will also have to avoid being hit by a safe, nonlethal training munition."

The rest of the series will include matches at Fort Benning Sept. 7 at 7 p.m., Oct 7 at 10 a.m., Nov. 4 at 7 p.m., as well as matches at Cool Springs, Ga., Aug. 20 at 10 a.m., Sept. 17 at 10 a.m., Oct. 15 at 10 a.m. and Nov. 19 at 10 a.m.

There will also be an invitational match at Fort Benning Dec. 2 for competitors who shoot six out of the eight above matches.

For more information about the series, call Graham at 689-3371.

Results of Saturday's match are as follows:

Competitor class

First place — Steve Bowen
Second place — James Odom
Third place — Charles W Rolling Jr.

Standard class

First place — John Mann
Second place — Russell Reid
Third place — Chad S. Dallas

Military class

Second place — David Gregoire
Third place — Jessie Parks

Female class

First place — Alexandra Smith
Second place — Cherry T. Kersey
Third place — Kristy M. Gallagher

Sports program has something for all

Directorate of Community Activities

Fort Benning's Sports Program gives everyone the opportunity to play the sports they love including softball, basketball, volleyball, flag football, or one of 15 other sports.

Team members do not have to be experts to participate in the Intramural Sports Program. They only need some spare time and a desire for competition.

At Fort Benning, four intramural sports are conducted throughout the year with unit teams competing against each other for the honor of winning the Commander's Cup.

Before each championship trophy is awarded, more than 90 intramural teams compete within 14 leagues to identify the best unit on Fort Benning in each sport and for the right to call themselves champions.

The sports program gives both men and women the opportunity to participate in all sports. Because of popularity, the intramurals are open to active duty personnel only; the individual sports, with the exception of boxing and wrestling, are open to civilian employees and retirees.

The program has a variety of sports to keep everyone active throughout the year. Basketball, volleyball, softball and flag football are always favorites, but interested athletes can become active in soccer, track and field, triathlon, duathlon, boxing, racquetball, tennis, weightlifting, bodybuilding, swimming, wrestling, cycling, beach volleyball and summer biathlon.

Participation in the sports program is often only the beginning of athletic recognition. Athletes who believe they are at the top of their game can apply to become an All-Army candidate and possibly represent the Army while competing against teams in all branches of the service.

Fort Benning conducts screening tests for some sports in order to determine who will be able to try out for the All-Army team. Anyone interested can attend the screenings.

Competitions are open to anyone no matter how well they know the game or how well they play.

FORT BENNING HISTORY BOOK

published to commemorate

FORT BENNING'S 75th ANNIVERSARY

Fort Benning recently celebrated its 75th Anniversary, and The Bayonet published a special edition to coincide with the celebration. Soon after the special edition of the paper was published, we began looking at the information about Fort Benning that we had collected and decided that it was simply too good to leave it just in newspaper form.

We knew the book would be interesting and informative. The next step was to make it as attractive as possible. An experienced layout and design firm was hired, and they have done an absolutely superb job. You will enjoy thumbing through its pages for years to come. You will also be proud to put it in a prominent place at home for friends to enjoy, or at work for your customers to see. And , if you're looking for a gift for a retiree, or a friend who may have served at Fort Benning and is no longer here, there's no better way to remind them of your lasting friendship.

Published by the contract printer of Fort Benning's authorized newspaper, The Bayonet, the hardcover book, protected by a beautiful full-color dust cover, has 168-pages and is filled with more than 200 photos. The book includes detailed timelines of significant events that have shaped Fort Benning, and overview of the post's involvement in World War II, Korea, Viet Nam, and a variety of stories that round out the post's interesting history.

It is the perfect "coffee table" and is a 'must have' for anyone who has been stationed at Fort Benning. It's a book that will be a lasting memento of the winner of the 1994 Commander In Chief's Award signifying it as...

"The Best Army Installation in the World!"

Grand Central Station bum teaches lesson of giving

By Chana Timoner
USAIC Chaplain Office

reflections

This was a dissonant, minor chord — sounding sweet and sad simultaneously.

As I walked into the station through the 43rd Street entrance, puffing from my hasty stroll, I passed the newly boarded-up area where bums used to sit on dark wooden benches. Bums! That's what my mother called them when we passed by almost 30 years ago and she held my hand. I remember it as it was back then. No different from what it was a few short weeks ago, although there was an ever increasing numbers of homeless who occupied those seats.

They smelled pretty bad. The women often wore old, funny hats. At least I thought they were funny. They were often holding small, clear glass bottles of cheap wine, guzzling it with aplomb from the flask. And they took up too much room. Some were asleep sitting up, and others slept with their legs dangling from the benches. It was their abode, but the rest of us were uncomfortable. Those of us with tired feet, perfumed bodies and nice clothes — we felt as if it were our station, our place to meander through when we weren't rushing for the 4-0-7.

It was quite sad to see that side room boarded up. It is another Berlin Wall. Seeing this, I walked just a little slower as if to fashion a cerebral memorial to those who wouldn't be able to sleep there tonight, and to those who couldn't wash themselves at the sink basins in the long tiled bathrooms.

I passed through the open glass door that gave entrance to the great palace of those who scurry in and out of the city like well organized ants. Ants! They all have their specialized jobs. Ants remind me of these men, all in the same suits and ties. The women scurrying quickly in their white sneakers hauling clumsy totes swollen with the day's necessities.

As usual, the doors were propped open, no doubt to speed the flow of these worker ants. But, just before I entered the great hall, I heard something that transformed me. I was suddenly in a sweeter frame of mind.

Off to the right where the immense Kodak photo used to hang, contrasting with all this unremarkable drabness, was a particularly fine singer. I couldn't tell what she looked like until I got a bit closer.

Then I saw her through the crowd of business people, vagrants, and an odd student or two, laden with crammed backpacks.

What a VOICE! Strong and clear as any voice I've ever heard. I don't know whether it was a coloratura or a bell canto. But it made such a difference in my mood. Suddenly I forgot about how my feet ached and how I longed to get home and into a hot shower.

This person was exceptional. Beautiful people are often just that — skin deep and no more. Here was someone who was blessed to the greatest degree with a voice many times her size. I say that because she was a petite girl no more than 17 or 18 years old, wearing a plain golden yellow blouse with silky mahogany slacks that draped around her leg like those on a harem girl. I thought to myself, "Come let us sing unto the Lord!" Psalm 95.

I stood there listening to this would-be "Kathaleen Battle" when I noticed someone else in the crowd. She had unbrushed, knotted hair that was partially covered with an old baseball cap turned backwards. Even though it was the first week in June, she wore a long mauve coat in fairly decent shape, a filthy tank top, socks and old sneakers which looked as though they had been trampled on rather than worn. In her left arm she cradled a small glass bottle of Irish Rose.

I noticed her because of what she was doing. In her drunken stupor, she was smiling brightly and almost dancing to the voice of the angelic young girl. This poor, sad woman sauntered and swirled over to the open violin case where the aspiring soprano collected offerings, and dropped in a coin.

I was so stricken, almost upset that this woman should give of her minuscule monies to share with this young diva. Never before had I been so blessed to witness the ultimate act of giving. Here in the midst of this massive edifice, was expressed the most exquisite gesture of God's grace that I had ever known.

What possessed her to give the singer her coin? I had to know.

Was I the only one who had noticed? I saw the face of the jejune singer. She didn't miss a beat as the coin dropped in front of her, but smiled and nodded her thanks to the donor — the same as for all her other patrons. She was so young. Did she realize and understand the significance of this extraordinary donation?

After a few moments of hesitation, I walked over to the dancer — still swaying to the music. As I got closer, I could see how drunk she was. I said, "Sister, are you hungry? Have you had dinner?" She nodded no. I said, "Come, I'll buy you something to eat." (I would miss my train, but it wouldn't matter.)

We started walking slowly toward Zaro's with my arm around her shoulder. I hoped she liked hot dogs, since I was out of work, and was desperately low on cash. (How ironic that I had been so worried about finding employment and paying my mortgage, when this woman gave away what must have been her last coin!) "Sister, what is your name?" I asked. "Grklsj," she replied, too drunk to speak clearly. I asked again. "Geraldine," she said. We were walking very slowly and she paused to put down her empty bottle which she had just finished.

After standing in line, I bought Geraldine the hot dog, mustard and ketchup. $2.50. Nothing cheap anymore, I grimaced, then immediately felt embarrassed. Geraldine took the small bag and cradled it in her arms the same way she had the Irish Rose. We walked away.

I then got up the courage to ask the question. "Geraldine, why did you give money to that singer when you have so little for yourself?" Her eyes lit up as she laughed, "Queens have people dropping money at their feet." I asked, "Are you a queen, Geraldine?' "No," she replied.

"Geraldine," I said, looking straight into her smiling eyes, "That's the most beautiful, loving thing I've seen in a long time. Are you a Christian?" "No, I'm not, but queens dance and go to balls ..." I couldn't understand much more that she said, but I knew that Geraldine had a secret longing to be like that singer — young, pretty and talented.

I was reminded of the New Testament — "Whatever you did for one of the least of these brothers of mine, you did for me." (Mt. 25:40 NIV)

USAMU commander retires after 28 years

By Marlene Tikal
U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit

"What I've discovered ... at the Marksmanship Unit is that you all are the most dedicated, focused, professional group of civilians and soldiers in any Army."

— Col. Lory M. Johnson
U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit

Twenty-eight years and decades of lifetime experiences after being commissioned into the Army, Col. Lory M. Johnson, Jr., commander of the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit, stood on the hilltop overlooking Pool International Shooting Complex for the last time.

From the battlefield to the field of competition, Johnson had seen it all. And during his retirement ceremony June 27, he said his final goodbye to the Army and the USAMU.

Since being commissioned into the Army in 1967, Johnson has held many esteemed positions. Some of the positions include serving as an adviser to an Army of the Republic of Vietnam reconnaissance company, a tactics instructor at the Infantry School and author of "How to Fight" manuals, as well as an Infantry One Station Unit Training Battalion commander.

Johnson finally served as the director of the Office of the Deputy Chief of Staff for Training. Training and Doctrine Command, Fort Monroe, Va., before being assigned as the commander of the USAMU in 1992.

"What I've discovered during my time here at the Marksmanship Unit," Johnson said, "is that you all are the most dedicated, focused, professional group of civilians and soldiers in any Army."

And Johnson expected a lot from the soldiers and civilians of the USAMU, said Brig. Gen. Jon G. Meyer, commander of the Community and Family Support Center — the USAMU's higher headquarters based in Washington, D.C.

Meyer pointed to recent modifications to the M-16 rifle used by USAMU Service Rifle marksmen during competition as one of Johnson's contributions.

"Everybody said the M-16 as it was couldn't hit the broad side of a barn," Meyer said. "Colonel Johnson accepted the challenge of making the M-16 a better competition rifle."

Thanks to Johnson's perseverance in improving the M-16, the rifle has been used by USAMU marksmen to break three national records," Meyer said.

This being the case, Bob Aylward, USAMU deputy commander, said it's easy to see how Johnson has had a significant impact on returning soldiers to the winning platform.

"The scored fired by USAMU soldiers this year are the result of Col. Johnson's drive and leadership," Aylward said. "Johnson will be looked at in the future as one of the select few in the shooting game that really made a difference."

He and his wife, Mary have two sons, Capt. Bryan Johnson and 1st Lt. Christopher Johnson.

profile in excellence

Name: Marta L. Walker

Award or recognition: Promotion to sergeant first class
MOS: 71L3, administrative specialist
Unit: School of the Americas
Job title: Command Group, noncommissioned officer in charge
Years in service: 10 years

What were your reasons for joining the Army?
A new adventure.
Define your style of leadership.
My style would be participative. As an NCO, you have to take care of your soldiers and in return they will take care of you.
What person has most influenced your military career?
Sgt. 1st Class Johnnie Hughes, who was my first supervisor.
If you were the sergeant major of the Army for a day, what improvements would you make?
The promotion system needs to be re-vamped. Also, I would set higher standards for NCOs.
Describe a memorable moment in your military career.
When I made the Sergeant Morales Club in Germany.
What are your future career plans?
To be an instructor at the Advanced Noncommissioned Officer Course and after that period is over, I would like to become a drill sergeant.
What others have to say: She is a true professional who strives for excellence, has the best attitude around and is in extremely excellent physical condition.

Maj. Pedro Rivera,
SOA Assistant Chief of Staff

Army's Sgt Maj retires

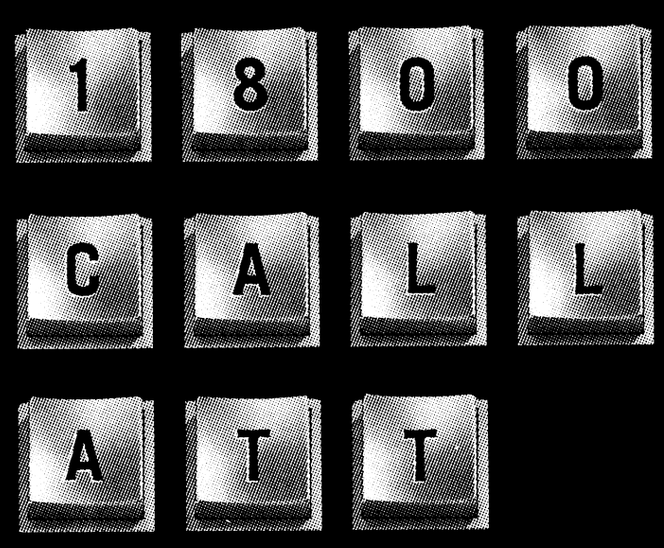
By S.H. Kelly
Army News Service

WASHINGTON — Noncommissioned officer and enlisted soldiers of the 3rd U.S. Infantry (The Old Guard) and The U.S. Army Band "Pershing's Own" gave Sgt. Maj. of the Army Richard A. Kidd a send-off June 16 in an all-enlisted retirement review at Fort Myer's Sumerall Field.

Army Chief of Staff Gen. Gordon R. Sullivan, host of the ceremony, was the only officer to take part of the ceremonies.

Sullivan presented the Morehead, Ky.-native the Distinguished Service Medal (first oak-leaf cluster), and Kidd was read a letter from President Bill Clinton, which said: "Dear Sgt. Maj. Kidd. I am pleased to join with your family and friends in congratulating you on your retirement from the United States Army. You have served our country with distinction and honor. You can be proud of your contribution to our national security and peace around the world.

"Hillary and I are delighted to send best wishes as you celebrate this milestone in your years of military service. Sincerely, Bill Clinton."



Sullivan presented Kidd's wife, Sylvia, a certificate of appreciation and the decoration for distinguished civilian service for her support of various military and public-service programs, which included more than 8,500 volunteer hours to Army Community Service over her 28 years as a military spouse. He told her that she represents everything good about an Army wife.

Among those gathered for the ceremonies were Secretary of the Army Togo D. West Jr., Under Secretary Joseph Reeder, Joint Chiefs of Staff Chairman Gen. John Shalikashvili, the senior enlisted members of the other armed services and three former sergeants major of the Army.

Sullivan told the gathering that it was an honor to "host this ceremony as America's Army retires this outstanding soldier and warrior after 33 years of selfless service to our nation."

COMMUNITY

Army Community Svc to celebrate

30th birthday

Army Community Service

When Army Community Service celebrates its birthday July 21, it will symbolize 30 years of service. The celebration will be at Youth Services, Building 1056, from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m.

Activities will include rides, a moon walk, a train, a magician, softball and tug-of-war competitions and food.

The highlight will be the dunking booth; if you haven't voted for who you want to be dunked, do it now, because today is the last day. Ballots can be obtained and dropped off at Army Community Service, Building 2643 in Soldiers Plaza.

At the dunking booth, players can get three balls for a can of food for the emergency food locker or a toy for Santa's Castle.

The softball competition will include a grudge match between players on post.

ACS will be closed July 21. For emergency AER assistance, contact the staff duty office in Building 4.

Army Community Service has nine programs to support readiness mission.

Information, Referral and Follow-up is a part of everything Fort Benning ACS does. ACS has information on services and activities both on the installation and off post. Information, Referral and Follow-up was one of the original ACS programs. If you have a question, people at this program have the answer.

Relocation Assistance is another one of the original ACS programs. It focuses on ensuring that support and assistance are available for soldiers and family members moving to or arriving from another military duty station. Program objectives focus on providing current information, guidance and counseling. There are newcomer and spouse orientations, welcome packets, sponsorship training, English as a second language classes, and the Standard Installation Topic Exchange Service. This program provides up-to-date information on Army, Air Force, Navy, and Marine installations.

The Lending Locker has dishes, pots, pans, irons, etc. available for use by soldiers awaiting the arrival or shipment of their household goods during permanent change of station moves.

The Exceptional Family Member Program is designed to assist the active duty soldier who has a family member with special needs. Soldiers may request consideration for entry into the EFMP if they have family member who has a physical, emotional, or intellectual disorder that limits the family member's ability to take part in activities with peers, and that requires special treatment, therapy, education, training or counseling.

Enrollment is provided at the Military Personnel Center at Department of the Army information that is considered during the assignment selection process.

The EFMP manager provides information and referral, crisis intervention and acts as an advocate for the soldier and family.

Crisis assistance is provided through EFMP, Army Emergency Relief, the Emergency Food Locker, Financial Counseling, Family Advocacy, and the Information, Referral, and Follow-up Program.

The Consumer Affairs and Financial Assistance Program offers information, counseling, education and assistance in consumer issues, financial planning, family budgeting and debt management matters.

. Classes and briefings are available to all units, family support groups and organizations, and include: sure-pay; checking account management; budgeting; debt liquidation; planning for deployment, transition, retirement or PCS; home buying; car buying; and consumer rights and obligations.

Program personnel also handle the utility deposit waiver program. Soldiers can obtain utility service (gas, electricity, water, telephone) in a single location.

Deposits may be waived for soldiers who do not have unfavorable credit histories with a utility company. Disconnection orders may be given and an estimated final bill obtained in the Utility Coordination Center. The estimated final bill may be paid on the installation.

Soldiers assigned to the 5th Ranger Training Battalion in Dahlonega, Ga., may have deposits waived by applying at their personnel administration center during in-processing.

The Family Member Employment Assistance Program provides a link between job openings in the local community and military family member clients. A current listing of employment opportunities is updated weekly.

After a client's needs and interests are determined, job strategy workshops and counseling, and job referrals are made. Workshops are presented on various topics including: resume writing, interviewing techniques, self-assessment, and understanding the Civil Service System.

The FMEAP offers professional computer training courses as often as funds are available. The computer classes are free to family members attending them.

The Family Advocacy Program is a specialized program that focuses on the prevention of child and spouse maltreatment and the problems that accompany it.

The program provides classes dealing with stress management, anger control, conflict resolution, communication skills, parenting, and child and spouse abuse. Educational material for military families is always available and is free.

Volunteer coordination is an important part of Army Community Service. Army Community Service has a long history of volunteers providing leadership and service in its programs.

Volunteers have operated lending closets, stuffed welcome packets, provided financial counseling, provided information, referral and follow-up, assisted in emergencies, provided care and comfort to the ill and bereaved, and contributed significantly to the development and stability of Army Community Service.

This week Linda Payne, Fort Benning ACS volunteer supervisor from 1992 to 1994, received the Army's highest volunteer award during the Department of the Army celebration in Washington, D.C.

Army Emergency Relief provides emergency funds to soldiers (active and retired) and their families in time of distress. There are twelve categories of authorized emergency assistance to help soldiers with bona fide emergencies.

AER also provides a scholarship program for dependent children of active duty, retired, or soldiers who died while on active duty.

Applications are available after Nov. 1 for the following school year.

The completed application must be mailed to Headquarters, AER, and postmarked not later than March 1.

ACS staff members also provide essential soldier, family, and unit support to commanders during mobilization and deployment. As units mobilize, ACS provides pre-deployment briefings and counseling.

During deployments, staff members help operate family assistance centers, provide crisis counseling, and assist family support groups.

In 1993, the "unit service coordinator" concept was implemented. It links ACS staff with units as advisers and consultants to unit leaders. Each unit on Fort Benning has a unit service coordinator who is that unit's "partner in readiness."

Join ACS at Youth Services on July 21 to celebrate "three decades of success and partnership."

Happy Birthday, ACS!

Swim to benefit Heart Association

American Heart Association

Swimmers at Double Churches pool, Wesley Heights pool and Key pool will participate in Swim For Heart Saturday from 10 a.m. to 11 a.m.

The hour-long event is sponsored by local coordinator, Brian Giffin, of the Muscogee County Recreational Department and will benefit the American Heart Association.

Swimmers will ask family, friends, and neighbors to sponsor them for every length they swim in the event.

Each swimmer can win great prizes based on the amount of money collected and qualify for a variety of grand prizes including a T-shirt, cordless phone, AM/FM cassette boom box with a CD player and much more.

The money from the event will fund the American Heart Association's cardiovascular research, public education and community programs. Most of all, the swimmers will be involved actively in learning about their hearts and heart-healthy life styles.

"When you realize that heart attacks and stroke are America's leading cause of death, you realize how important it is to support this effort," said Giffin. "Swim For Heart not only supports the American Heart Association, it also teaches the benefits of regular exercise to help keep your heart healthy. You can never learn too soon about the kinds of things you can do to reduce your risk of heart disease."

Because of American Heart Association research, scientists have pioneered such medical advances as open heart surgery, balloon angioplasty, laser angioplasty, pace makers and life saving drugs.

Last year, the American Heart Association contributed more than $1.7 million in cardiovascular research to researchers at the Medical College of Georgia, Emory University, University of Georgia and Georgia Tech.

Labels wanted for playground equipment

Family Child Care

Organizers need soup labels to purchase playground equipment for Russ Pond.

Only 2 percent of the 345,650 Campbell's Soup Company labels needed have been collected.

The drive is part of the Campbell's Labels for Education program and was launched in January by the Family Child Care providers at Fort Benning.

Labels from more than 1,000 Campbell's products can be redeemed for educational equipment and materials.

Campbell's products include: anything with the company's label, Marie's, Mrs. Paul's, Swanson, V-8, Early California, Franco-American, Vlasic, Pepperidge Farm and Prego.

The goal is to collect enough labels to trade for the playground equipment.

Only 5,000 of the 345,650 labels needed have been collected. The drive ends March 1.

There are label drop-off points at all community of life buildings and the Commissary.

Many of the child-care providers will accept labels. Their homes can be identified by the yellow rainbows in the windows.

The Family Child Care providers are also looking for volunteers to help distribute fliers about the program, trim and remove labels from cans, and count and sort labels.

Call Debbie Snoke at 687-6823 for more information.

Contract management assn to award college scholarships

National Contract Management Association

The Follow-Me Chapter of the National Contract Management Association will award scholarships to Troy State University at Fort Benning.

One undergraduate (three courses) and one graduate (two courses) scholarships will be awarded for the academic year 1995-96.

These scholarships are designed to assist deserving college students in pursuit of a degree in the field of contract management, which includes acquisition, contracting, logistics, procurement, economics, finance, marketing, accounting, law, industrial management, quantitative methods and organization and management.

Guidelines and applications may be obtained by contacting the chapter at the following address:

NCMA, ATTN: Scholarship Committee, P.O. Box 53560, Fort Benning, Ga. 31905.

Applications are due by Aug. 1. Scholarship recipients will be notified in writing or by telephone on or before Aug. 15.

AUSA offering scholarships

Association of the United States Army

The Association of the United States Army is offering graduate and undergraduate scholarships to Troy State University at Fort Benning.

One full-time undergraduate and one full-time graduate scholarship will be awarded for the academic year 1995-96.

The scholarships are designed to assist students in pursuit of a four-year degree or a graduate level degree.

Applicants must be active members of the local AUSA chapter or a spouse, son or daughter of an active member of the local chapter.

The following must be sent with the application form:

• A personal letter from the applicant listing reasons for the request, future plans, summary of school interests and activities, financial situation and other pertinent points

• High school transcripts through the first semester of the senior year, including class rank and the most recent Scholastic Aptitude Test or American College Test scores or a copy of transcripts for college studies completed to date

• Two letters of recommendation from recognizable community citizens — one from the high school principal of the graduating school or the authority which certifies high school equivalency or from individuals in the soldier's chain of command.

• A letter of acceptance from Troy State University

Applicants will be evaluated during July by the association's Scholarship Committee, which will make its recommendations to the AUSA chapter executive board. The board will make a decision and notify the winners in early August.

Other guidelines and applications may be obtained by contacting Sgt. 1st Class Clarence Murphy at 689-3272.

Applications and supporting documents are due by Aug. 1 and must be submitted to The Association of the United States Army, P.O Box 52036, Fort Benning, Ga. 31905.

RENDEZVOUS

Rangers gather for annual event

Competitions, air assault, highlight activities

By Lisa M. Hibbert
Bayonet staff writer

Rangers, both active and retired, led the way July 14 through Wednesday at the Ranger Rendezvous and Exercise Warrior Thunder that took place at Fort Benning.

Exercise Warrior Thunder began the five-day program with a regimental airborne air assault on Fryar Drop Zone.

RANGER RENDEZVOUS

Free-fall maneuvers out of C-141 Starlifters and C-130 Hercules aircraft, from altitudes so high that more than 20 of the first jumpers wore oxygen masks, were performed by the regimental reconnaissance detachment.

Saturday, the Ranger Social took place at the Officers' Club and a sports and weapons competition, the Ranger Stakes, went off Sunday.

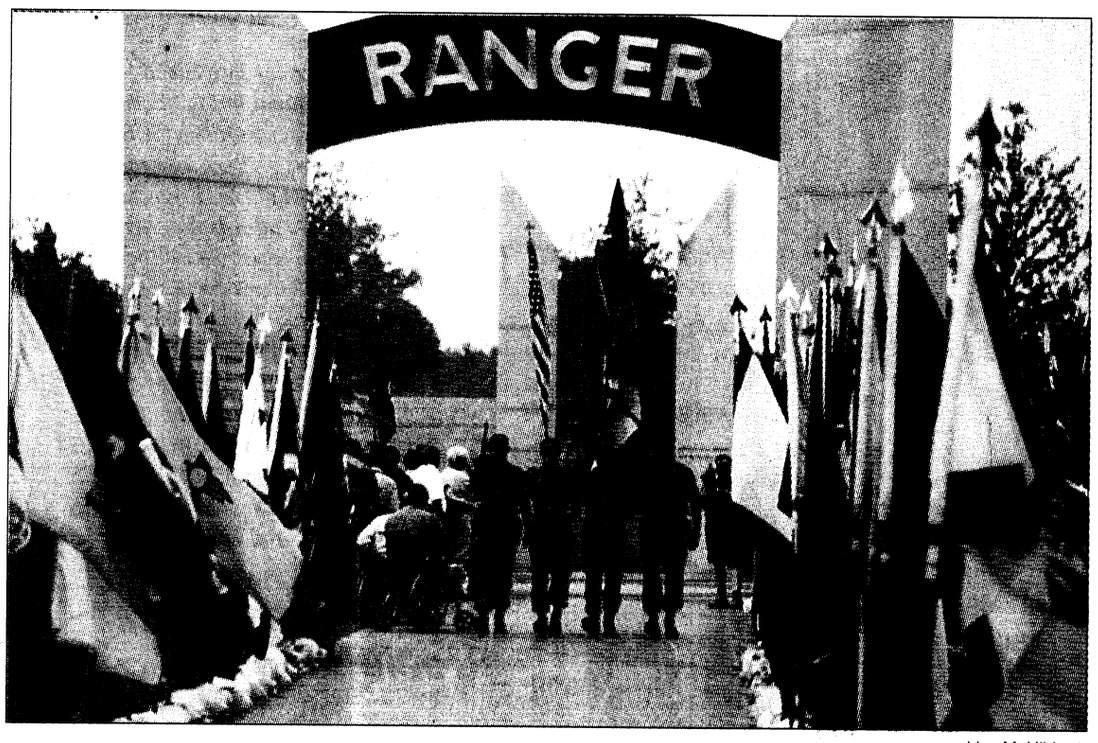
Ranger Stakes, designed to determine the top machine gun teams, mortar crews, sniper teams and anti-tank teams took place at Sergeants Major Field across from the 75th Ranger Regiment.

There was also a physical fitness challenge, a platoon leader and platoon sergeant competition, an endurathon and a triathlon.

Monday 18 rangers were inducted into the Ranger Hall of Fame at the Ranger Memorial. A Veterans' March, a parade of ranger veterans marching to the Ranger Memorial, kicked off the day's program.

The induction ceremony recognized the achievements and sacrifices made by the inductees to their country, military units and fellow rangers.

To be eligible for selection to the Hall of Fame, a person must be deceased or separated from the military for at least three years at the time of nomination.



The nominee must have served in a ranger or ranger-type combat unit or be a graduate of the U.S. Army Ranger School.

Wednesday on York Field, Col. James T. Jackson, outgoing commander of the 75th Ranger Regiment, handed over the reigns to Col. William J. Leszczynski in a change of command ceremony.

Jackson's next assignment will be as the assistant operations officer at the U.S. Special Operations Command at MacDill Air Force Base in Florida.

During Jackson's tenure here, escalating violence in Mogadishu, Somalia, resulted in more than 400 rangers being deployed to provide reinforcements to the 10th Mountain Division.

Leszczynski previously commanded the 3rd Battalion, 9th Infantry Regiment, at Fort Ord, Calif., and the Joint Task Force in Honduras.

MACH gets OK'd

By Lisa M. Hibbert
Bayonet staff writer

Martin Army Community Hospital recently received an accreditation with commendation from the Joint Commission on Accreditation of Healthcare Organizations for the second time in a row.

"We are very fortunate to have outstanding people who all worked together to make this happen," said Col. Michael J. Kussman, commander of Martin Army Community Hospital. "It was truly a team effort. (The staff) really took ownership and did well because they wanted to do well.

"Some of the things I stress is that everybody is an owner and that everybody represents Martin Army Community Hospital at all times," Kussman said.

The joint commission is a private, nonprofit organization that evaluates and accredits more than 11,000 hospitals and health-care organizations triannually. Its mission is to improve the quality of health care provided to the public.

Martin Army Community Hospital is the only hospital in Columbus to receive accreditation with commendation. It is the only hospital in the Army to receive this type of honor two times in a row, and its score of 98 percent is an all-time Army high.

"When I became commander here, I had hoped to get a score of 95 — the necessary score to get an accreditation with commendation," Kussman said. "I never expected a 98, and I'm very happy with it."

The hospital is evaluated by a five-person board for one week on everything from patient rights to organizational ethics. The evaluation covers everything from thoroughly researching the background of its physicians and making sure they possess the credentials they say they do, to the prevention and control of infection.

The national average score for all hospitals is a 88.1 percent.

"The committee (sought) proof of everything," said Kussman. "They want to know what you have done to get where you are. They want to be shown all of the findings.

"It is important for the Army and Fort Benning to know what kind of quality there is and that it was judged by an unbiased group," Kussman said.

BOSS to vote for new boss today

By Ruth J. Spaller
USAIC Public Affairs Office

The Fort Benning Better Opportunities for Single Soldiers program will elect a new president today.

Voting will take place at the Afterhours Club from 1:30 to 3:30 p.m., where the candidates will have a chance to introduce themselves with a short speech. All single soldiers are welcome to vote.

Those in the running are:

- Spc. Jason Crutcher, 11th Infantry Regiment
- Spc. Michael James, 36th Engineer Group
- Spc. Heidi Marlatt, 36th Engineer Group
- Spc. Kermit Smith, USAIC Military Police Company

All are volunteers or former company or unit-level BOSS representatives.

The BOSS president holds a full-time position for one year and is assigned to the Garrison Commander's Office.

at a glance

What: Better Opportunities for Single Soldiers election

When: Today from 1:30 to 3:30 p.m.

Where: Afterhours Club

Who can vote: All single soldiers

Information: Call 545-7204

Duties include conducting in-processing briefings, coordinating events and activities, chairing meetings at the installation command level and going to annual BOSS training conferences.

"You give a lot of yourself to this job," said outgoing president Spc. Christina Rapé, "because you're working not just for yourself, but for everyone."

The job can be very rewarding, she said, because the BOSS president has the support of the chain of command to fix problems soldiers identify and to change things for the better.

"When you get a phone call and a single soldier has a question or a problem and you work hard to get an answer to them and they call and say thank you — that's the best part of the job," Rapé said.

Serving as BOSS president, you learn a lot about leadership, management and good organizational skills, she said.

The best BOSS president will be someone who has been involved with the program on some level, who has a good attitude and is not afraid to speak in front of people, she said.

The new president will be announced at the Commanding General's BOSS Breakfast July 28.

For more information, contact the BOSS office at 545-7204.

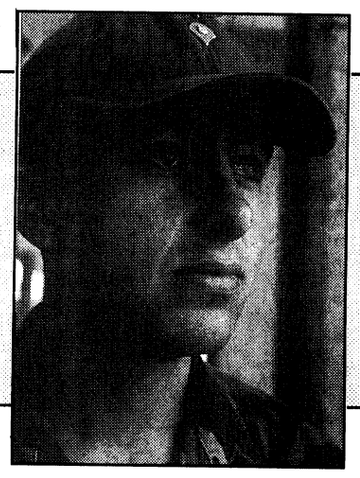
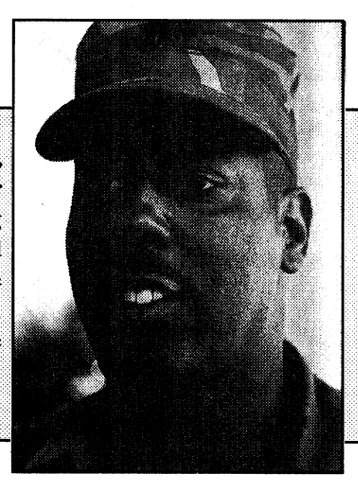
VARIOUS VOICES



Do you think the entertainment media affects your morals? Why or why not?

Joyce A. Thomas, civilian employee — "Yes because when children see the violence on TV, they think it is OK."

Pvt. 2 Ambra A. Crim, U.S. Army Medical Department Activity — "No because on TV and in the music, artists sing (and act) about things that happen in everyday life. You see guns every day in Chicago."



Spc. John K. Vasquez, Company E, 1st Battalion (Airborne), 507th Infantry — "I do. I think people are generally empty vessels; and, whatever you put into them, good or bad, is what they will learn. I think TV has something to do with the deterioration of family."

Sgt. Michael D. Ross, Company A, 317th Engineer Battalion, 3rd Brigade, 24th Infantry Division (Mechanized) — "Yes and no. If you're not a violently minded person, then the violence on TV won't affect you. But, if you are, then the violence on TV might give you some ideas."

Pvt. 2 Vanessa J. Anderson, U.S. Army Medical Department Activity — "Yes. When little kids watch TV, they don't know that violence is wrong. But, the violence on TV shouldn't affect the older people though."

Sgt. Broyce R. Mattox, Company B, 317th Engineer Battalion — "Yes and no. Young kids see killing in the movies and they see them get away with it in the movies and they might try it. But, you need to know the difference between right and wrong."

dial 545-BOSS

Dial 545-BOSS is the commander's action line for soldiers, family members and civilians to call when they have problems or complaints that can't be resolved elsewhere.

While it is not a substitute for the chain of command or for agencies established to provide assistance, the line offers another means of communication between Fort Benning's community and commanders.

The Bayonet features some of the calls that may benefit other members of the Fort Benning community.

Call: There are a lot of break-ins of cars in the north side parking lot of Building 2807. I would like to know if lights can be installed on that side as a deterrent to the break-ins.

Utilities Branch's response: Installation of new street lights requires a project request on a Department of the Army Form 4283 for estimation of costs and funding.

Fort Benning has a traffic committee formed to consider projects for approval or disapproval that are traffic related. The traffic committee is composed of members of Directorate of Public Safety and the Directorate of Public Works.

The caller has been given a point of contact at the DPW's Buildings and Grounds Division at 545-3725 to initiate his request for new lights in the north parking lot of Building 2807.

Call: I need information on how to get a claim disposed of that has been ongoing for a year now in reference to my piano that was dropped by the movers.

Staff Judge Advocate's Office, Claims Division's response:

The caller purchased supplemental full replacement protection insurance for her property pursuant to a government sponsored move. Because this insurance affords the carrier the option to repair or replace damaged items (in this case a grand piano), the claimant must first submit a claim against the carrier. The caller had difficulty in getting full satisfaction from the carrier. The caller was informed that in accordance with claims directives, she has the option of filing a claim with the government if the carrier fails to settle the matter in a timely fashion.

Call: I am being forced to move from my third floor barracks room to the second floor in the same building. I have done a lot of improvements in my present room and do not want to move. The chain of command said I have no choice.

Caller's commander's response:

The inactivation of echo companies in mechanized infantry battalions resulted in a number of soldiers departing the battalion and vacating the rooms in the barracks. The result was the requirement to realign the barracks in an attempt to consolidate soldiers with regard to unit integrity and to spread out the soldiers within a designated company area to provide them with adequate living space.

There currently is a disproportionate number of rooms assigned to the three companies residing in the building. This includes the number of rooms and the type of rooms (such as rooms with personal bathroom facilities).

The unit is attempting, where possible, to transfer soldiers, who have telephone connections in their rooms, to a new room with the same convenience. Additionally, the chain of command has gained the support of the cable company to move the hook-ups at no expense to the soldiers. The unit is pursuing the same support from the telephone company.

A number of soldiers, under the Better Opportunities for Single Soldiers program, have made improvements to their rooms in the form of painting. The materials needed to make the same improvements to their future rooms will be provided.

Call: I think $4.25 for a double cheeseburger in the Martin Army Community Hospital Dining Facility is too much.

Nutrition Care Division's response: The Nutrition Care Division at MACH does not set the surcharge price for items served. The surcharge prices are based on food costs times a percentage (surcharge) set by Department of Defense on an annual basis. The current percentage is 380 percent, which did make certain items very expensive. With careful selections, a meal can be purchased for less than $3.

Proclamation

Army Community Service at Fort Benning will join other ACS organizations worldwide in celebrating its 30th birthday today. On July 25, 1965 the chief of staff of the Army authorized the creation of Army Community Service agencies at Army installations, to provide assistance to soldiers and their family members experiencing hardship because of their military service.

In the intervening 30 years, ACS has never faltered in fulfilling its primary goal and remains focused on assisting soldiers and family members. Through the years, ACS has grown tremendously in the number of services offered and in the number of volunteers willingly offering their valuable talents and skills in support of the ACS mission.

The theme of this year's celebration is "ACS — Three Decades of Success and Partnership." Accordingly, this is an appropriate recognition that ACS has become one of the commander's primary tools for fostering improved morale and readiness through committed concern and assistance to soldiers and their families.

Thus, the following programs have ensured support for soldiers and their families: Relocation Assistance, Information, Referral and Follow-up, Family Advocacy, Consumer Affairs and Financial Assistance, Exceptional Family Member, Family Member Employment Assistance, Outreach, Army Emergency Relief and Volunteer Coordination.

I salute and congratulate Fort Benning's ACS on the celebration of its 30th birthday. Also, I urge all members of this command to foster the "Partners in Readiness" concept.

I also encourage you to attend the ACS birthday festivities today at Youth Services, Building 1056, and to extend the personal thanks of this community for the tremendous support ACS has offered us over the past 30 years.

Col. Galen B. Jackman, Ranger Training Brigade commander, unveils the plaques for the 1995 inductees to the Ranger Hall of Fame.

Rangers induct newest hall of famers

By Lisa M. Hibbert
Bayonet staff writer

More than 400 rangers and spectators gathered in the rain Monday at the Ranger Memorial to see this year's 18 honorary members get inducted into the Ranger Hall of Fame.

Hall of fame medallions on red, white and blue ribbons were placed around the neck of the inductees and portraits of the inductees were hung in the lobby of the Ranger Training Brigade.

The ceremony was kicked off by a Veteran's March — retired and former rangers marched to the Ranger Memorial representing the campaigns they had fought in.

Retired Col. Roy Murray, 86, the oldest ranger present at the Rendezvous, was the honored guest and the guest speaker for the induction ceremony.

"Most of you (rangers) have endured dangerous and hard training," Murray said. "When you earn a Ranger Tab, you know you will be able to do anything — even if you know nothing about it."

D-day veteran William C. Clark Jr., another honoree, was a medical activity ranger who had just landed at Omaha Dog Green Beach in Normandy, France. Part of the company he was with moved into an enemy mine field at night with three enemy strong points directly ahead. In the dark, then Sgt. Clark moved into the mine field and stayed with the seriously wounded all night tending to them and guarding them.

Clark died in 1992 and his wife, Grace, accepted the award on his behalf.

"It is the greatest honor in the world to accept this award on my husband's behalf," Clark said. "My husband would have been humbled. He only thought he was doing his job, what he was trained to do."

Clark's children came to support their mother and remember their father.

"He would have been so proud but he would have tried to pretend he wasn't," Linda Lenore Markward, Clark's daughter, said. "He would have been very happy."

Vietnam veteran Gerard M. Devlin was yet another inductee.

When his battalion commander was killed and himself seriously wounded, Devlin took charge of his ranger troops who only spoke Vietnamese. Unable to walk, working in the dark, he used his radio and crawled from position to position directing fire, adjusting fighting positions, directing aviation fire support and securing helicopters for the wounded. After receiving his medallion, Devlin said a few words to the crowd.

"During Desert Storm when the military was calling up a lot of former soldiers, I got orders to come to Fort Benning," Devlin said. "I was worried that I would be sent back here and have to go through Ranger School again. Once in a lifetime is enough for me."

When hall of famer retired Lt. Philip B. Piazza was a ranger in World War II, he and his men lived from 125 to 750 miles behind enemy lines for seven months without any relief. It was because of the mortar and machine gun support he provided that the Japanese 18th Imperial Division was blocked from retaking the nearly 35 miles of Hukong Valley that had been liberated. Piazza was wounded during this operation. He was hit twice in the head by small arms fire and once in the leg by a mortar shell burst.

"I consider this to be a great honor to be included among such (illustrious men)," Piazza said. "They are the real heroes."

World War II veteran Robert T. Edlin was one of the honored 18. During the Brest Campaign in Germany, Edlin, then a first lieutenant, sneaked up on a small patrol in the Brest Peninsula, forced the captured officer at gun point to lead him to the German Camp commander, and upon meeting him, held a grenade to the commander's chest and threatened to blow them both up if the area was not surrendered.

"I didn't expect (this honor)," Edlin said. "I try not to go to many military functions — they force me to relive some thing that I would rather forget — but I'm glad I'm here."

The other inductees were retired 1st Sgt. Anders K. Arnbal, retired Master Sgt. Aubrey M. Batts, retired Col. Charles E. Beach II (deceased), retired Col. Robert W. Black, retired Gen. John W. Foss, Master Sgt. Gary I. Gordon (deceased), retired 1st Sgt. Randall Harris, Vietnam veteran Sen. J. Robert Kerry, retired Gen. Fred K. Mahaffey — former assistant commandant at the U.S. Army Infantry School, retired Command Sgt. Maj. Michael N. Martin, retired Brig. Gen. John Hugh McGee, retired Sgt. Maj. Fred M. Shepherd who retired from the 3rd Ranger Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment, retired Brig. Gen. Joseph S. Stringham and retired Command Sgt. Maj. Patrick Tadina.

The induction ceremony was a part of the five-day Ranger Rendezvous and Exercise Warrior Thunder that took place here July 14 through Wednesday.

Rangers unveil plaques of this year's honorees

RANGER
RENDEZVOUS

Four years ago, the Ranger Hall of Fame was established to preserve the valor and contributions to the ranger community, according to Col. Galen B. Jackman, Ranger Training Brigade commander.

The 1995 inductees into the hall, along with their families, friends and fellow rangers gathered Tuesday for an unveiling ceremony.

"Each inductee has made extraordinary contributions to the rangers and has demonstrated service above and beyond common duty," said Jackman.

For some of the rangers, that contribution was their life, such as Master Sgt. Gary I. Gordon, who was fatally wounded in Mogadishu, Somalia, while attached to Task Ranger Force.

Each year, individuals are nominated for the Hall of Fame by the major Army commands and six Ranger associations.

The nominees are then chosen by a selection committee composed of Col. James T. Jackson, 75th Ranger Regiment commander; Command Sgt. Maj. Jeffrey Greer, 75th Ranger Regiment command sergeant major; Command Sgt. Maj. George Ponder, Ranger Training Brigade command sergeant major; and Jackman.

"We are limited to 18 slots each year; however, we don't have to fill them all," Jackman said.

He added the hall is in a transition period now and the number of slots will eventually be cut down to 12 per year.

"Most of the inductees attend if they are living, and even the families of many attend if they are deceased," he said. "Being inducted is quite an honor."

In 1992, retired Maj. Gen. Kenneth C. Leuer and retired Col. Ralph Puckett, both residents of Columbus, received that honor.

Another member is Brig. Gen. William O. Darby, for which Camp Darby here at Fort Benning is named.

Each inductee has a plaque hung in the Hall of Fame which has a photo of him and a synopsis of his service and heroism.

Although the hall is only four years old, there are many faces and stories on the walls — and those walls are getting crowded.

"We are running out of space, but what we eventually hope to do is develop a ranger museum in conjunction with the Infantry Museum," he said.

After Jackson unveiled the new members' plaques, the brigade held a barbecue in their honor.

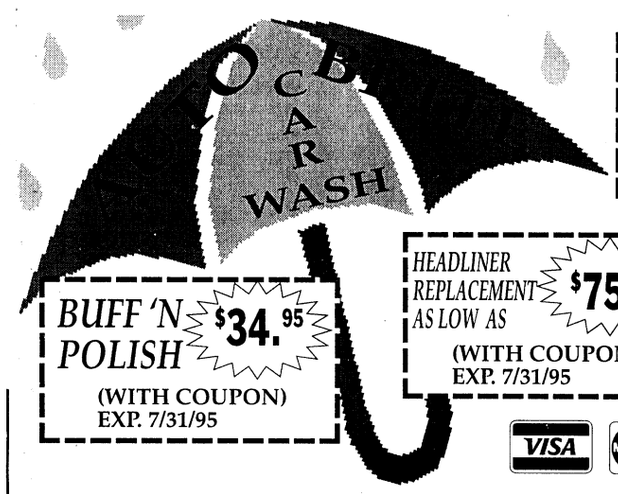
FAMILY CHILD CARE NEEDS YOUR SUPPORT

Thanks to Campbell's® Labels for Education Program, our Post can obtain much needed playground equipment FREE OF CHARGE. However, we need your help in achieving this goal which will benefit all Fort Benning children.

The Program, sponsored by Campbell Soup Company, is actually quite simple: From now until March 1, 1996, Fort Benning will be collecting labels from over 1000 Campbell-made products.

Our goals is to collect 345,650 labels during this program. We are looking to obtain the playground set pictured below. We have been collecting since January, 1995 and at this point are only at about 2% of the way to our goal. We need a lot of support to be able to have our playground by next summer. The projected location to build the playground is Russ Pond.

We're asking everyone to help by saving the labels and proofs of purchase on Campbell products. Please join us in this worthwhile effort.



There are label drop-off points at all the Community of Life buildings as well as the Post Commissary. Thank you in advance for your support and cooperation.

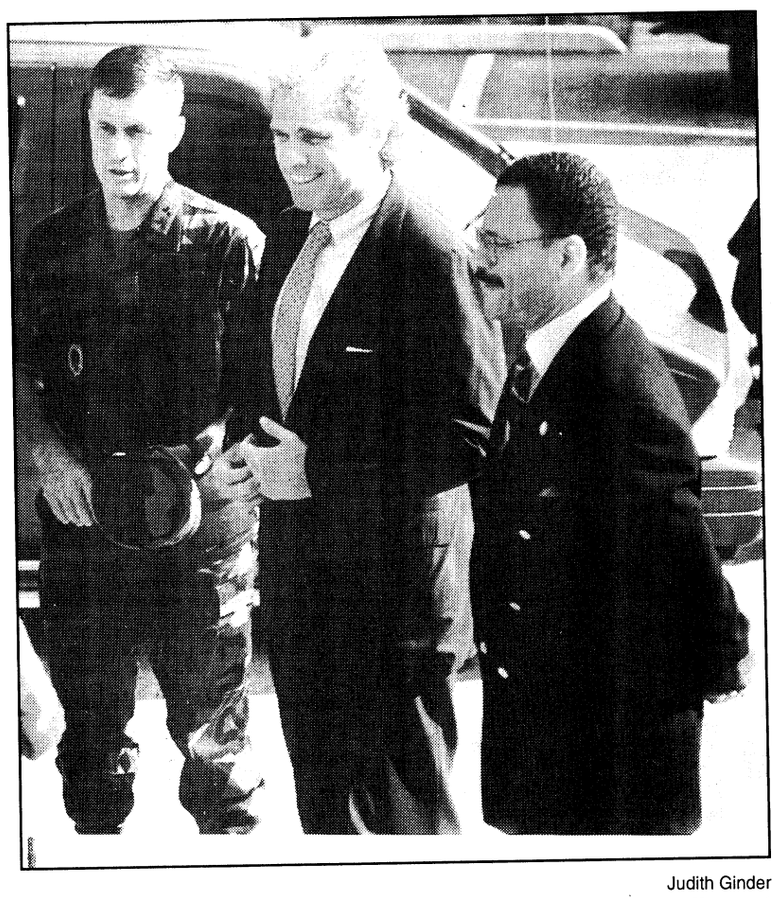
School of the Americas hosts congressional visit

SOA Public Affairs Office



Latin American soldiers saw democracy at work July 14 when Fort Benning and the School of the Americas hosted a congressional visit.

Reps. Sanford Bishop, Mac Collins, Joseph Kennedy II and Marty Meehan, as well as Undersecretary of the Army Joe R. Reeder, visited the school to learn about its curriculum and focus.

The visit featured discussions with the school's students and faculty, briefings and a tour of the facility. The congressmen also attended a luncheon in Columbus with Mayor Bobby Peters, members of the city council and other community leaders.

"We're very pleased the congressmen took time out of their demanding schedules to make this visit," Reeder said. "It's important to maintain congressional support for the school and enhance understanding of its important mission and contributions to our partnership with other democratic nations in our hemisphere."

Upon visiting SOA's Command and General Staff College classroom, the congressmen sat down for a discussion with the CGSC students. As senior officers from 10 nations were present, the group represented views from various angles. However, they all agreed on the value of SOA to their personal and professional lives, to their armies and to the international community.

Judith Ginder

Maj. Gen. John W. Hendrix, Rep. Joseph Kennedy II, and Rep. Sanford Bishop arrive at the School of the Americas.

"Attending the School of the Americas is a great opportunity for us to know each other and to share cultures. It's very important to keep," said one Columbian officer in CGSC.

One point raised by the representatives was the fact that in recent years, Venezuela has experienced three attempted coups. CGSC students pointed out that it was three SOA alumni who were instrumental in halting the coup attempts, which threatened democracy in Venezuela.

"I think the congressmen experienced a very candid, comprehensive look at the curriculum, instruction, faculty and students," Reeder said. "It's clear that SOA remains a relevant and effective national strategic asset."

Since its founding in 1946 in Panama, the school has trained more than 59,000 soldiers, police and civilian leaders from Latin America and the Caribbean.

"The vast majority of our graduates go on to serve their countries with distinction and honor," said Commandant Col. Roy R. Trumble. "The leadership, management and human rights skills students learn here greatly enhance military support for civilian rule in this hemisphere."

"The School of the Americas is an open book," said Maj. Gordon Martel, public affairs officer. "We welcome the opportunity to highlight what we train here and strongly encourage additional visits to the school."

As a long-time vocal opponent of SOA, Kennedy said that although he isn't against the school, he wanted to get more information about the courses taught.

"I'm not against training activities among the nations," he told CGSC. But he said he wasn't sure SOA was the proper vehicle for maintaining relations between the United States and Latin America.

"You do make a difference and have an important role," Kennedy said to CGSC students. "Thanks for the service you give to the United States and to your countries."

As the representative for the Georgia district in which Fort Benning lies, Bishop has visited SOA on many occasions.

"I want to continue to be an advocate for the good things you do here," Bishop said to CGSC. "Take home the knowledge of the democratic process you've learned here because you and your comrades have learned about democracy and you are examples of a professional army, dedicated to human rights and democracy."

Runners have priority during PT hours

Formations and individual runners have priority of movement on Fort Benning during the established physical training hours of 6 to 7:30 a.m. Monday through Friday. Formation running is not authorized on sidewalks throughout the installation. Units must use roadways, and proper safety equipment must be worn and operational.

Individual runners and walkers may use the sidewalks and also are required to wear proper reflective clothing or road guard vests.

Speed limit during PT hours is 15 mph and 10 mph when passing individuals and troop formations.

Controlled burning set

Controlled burning of woodland areas will take place Monday through July 29..

If weather permits, the following compartments may be affected: F-4, O-1, O-4, V-3, W-3, AA and BB-2.

Burning will occur in pine stands within these compartments to enhance endangered species habitat and training areas. People using these areas for recreation must leave before 9:30 a.m. daily.

Training units using compartments next to these areas are reminded to exercise caution while traveling in these areas because of the potential for reduced visibility. Units using the ranges and training areas are reminded to remove flammable debris, such as pine straw, leaves, grass and trash from around structures in accordance with USAIC Regulation 210-4, Paragraph 5-22, Organizational Maintenance.

For more information, call 544-6206.

Army and Air Force Exchange Service employees sing a rendition of "America the Beautiful."

AAFES turns 100

By Shannon Day
Special to The Bayonet©

The Army and Air Force Exchange Service is celebrating 100 years of service to the military and their families during July.

In 1895, AAFES was created from 'General Order No. 46.'

The exchanges began as small trading posts that provided bare necessities such as blankets and knives to soldiers assigned to frontier posts.

Although blankets and knives are still carried by the exchange today, the service has undergone many changes during the last century to keep up with service members' needs, according to Mary Babbitt, AAFES general manager at Fort Benning.

"These trading posts developed in proportion with major U.S. retailers to become main stores, shoppettes, troop stores, military clothing sales stores, sports stores, specialty stores and Class Six stores," she said.

In addition to expanding the types of services it provides, the exchange has spread from the American frontier to 25 foreign countries.

"The unique thing about AAFES is that we travel with the service members in war or in peace," Babbitt said. She added that at present the exchange is providing services to soldiers in Saudi Arabia, Somalia and Haiti.

Sgt. Jerry A. Brown, generator mechanic, 598th Maintenance Company, said the exchange made his three-year-tour in Germany much easier.

"Besides the language barrier, it wasn't economical to shop on the economy in Germany because a lot of things were more expensive," Brown said. "It was nice to have AAFES to fall back on."

Having access to foods and brands they were used to also helped ease his family's transition into the new culture, he said.

"It's hard (to shop when you're) halfway around the world," he said. "My wife, Tina, really appreciated being able to buy groceries with labels in English. Those types of services really added to our quality of life."

Babbitt pointed out that not only does the exchange provide services to the military community, but any profits it makes are also filtered back into the local area.

"Some of the money is used for improvements to existing buildings, such as the 26,000 square feet we are adding to the mall," Babbitt said. "You can also see your money at work in the sports store, the mall service station we are building and the Kelley Hill troop store we are going to add."

From a small frontier trading post to now having the capabilities to send flowers by mail, the exchange has done its best to keep up with the ever-changing role of the military and does not plan to stop, officials said.

"When a need is expressed, AAFES tries its best to fill it," Babbitt said.

Onsite offers opportunities

Fort Benning, Ga.

Onsite Environmental Staffing continues to provide employment opportunities for soldiers getting out of the military through Fort Benning's Army Career and Alumni Program.

Onsite employs exiting soldiers, veterans and family members in the field of environmental remediation.

Onsite currently employs more than 100 new workers per week nationwide.

A soldier can train at Fort Benning and then work in the area of his or her choice. Starting wages at Onsite range are $9 to $15 per hour depending on a soldier's skills. A benefit package is also offered to include a 401K plan and dental/health insurance.

Soldiers can use skills learned in the Army to earn a higher starting wage. Heavy equipment operators are in demand at Onsite, as are field technicians, soil and water samplers and people with commercial driver's licenses.

Onsite offers a 40-hour training course at a cost of $250 per person. A training course will be conducted from July 31 through Aug. 3 at the Main NCO Club.

For more information about employment and training, contact Vince Catanzaro at (800) 807-0454. Persons interested in meeting with an Onsite representative July 28 and to sign up for a training course at Fort Benning can contact the ACAP Job Assistance Center at 545-2308 or 545-2309.

Environmental scholarships available

By Elsie Jackson
Army Career and Alumni Program

Scholarships in environmental management are available to service members, veterans and Department of Defense civilians.

The Southern Environmental Education Partnership is looking for grant applicants to attend classes at Jacksonville State University in Jacksonville, Ala., and at Talladega College nearby.

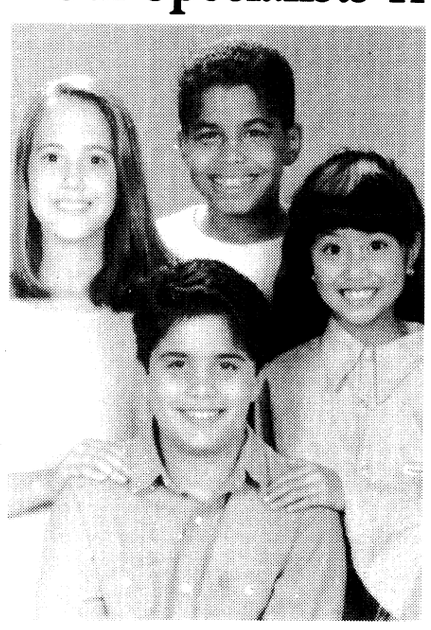
All individuals are eligible to apply for these programs, however, current and former members of the armed forces and individuals who are or have been employed by the Department of Defense (or its contractors or subcontractors) will be given preference.

Along with the standard forms and letters required for scholarship applications, individuals should be prepared to submit a Standard Form 171 (Application for Federal Employment) or Optional Form 612 (Optional Application for Federal Employment) with an OF 306 Form (Declaration for Federal Employment), and a copy of their separation papers.

Information is available at the Fort Benning Army Career and Alumni Program office.

Scholarships leading to a bachelor of science degree are based on a three-year track, and include tuition for six regular semesters (academic) and for three (mandatory) summer terms, books, supplies and insurance.

Scholarship recipients may pursue either a bachelor of science degree with a major in chemistry and minor in environmental management, or a bachelor of science degree with a major in biology and a minor in cultural and natural resource management.



After completing the program, individuals must agree to serve as full-time civilian employees in an environmental position with the Department of Defense (if such employment is available and offered) for 12 months for each school year the scholarship provides.

Individuals pursuing a master's in public administration degree with a concentration in environmental science management may apply for a fellowship that will provide tuition, up to $300 per semester for textbooks and fees, and up to $162 per year for insurance.

For more information, contact the Fort Benning Army Career and Alumni Program office at 545-7009 or 545-4913. The ACAP offices are located in Building 2617, Soldiers' Plaza.

Rangers lead the way in mass tactical jump

By Lori Egan
Bayonet staff writer

The evening sky was filled with parachutes, as more than 1,700 rangers jumped from C-130s onto the Fryar Drop Zone July 14.

The jump was the beginning of the Ranger Rendezvous and Exercise Warrior Thunder, a five-day ranger celebration, which included social events and competitions.

The event concluded Wednesday with the 75th Ranger Regiment's change of command.

Three battalions of the 75th Ranger Regiment participated in the mass jump. The rangers came from Fort Lewis, Wash., and Fort Stewart, Ga., to meet with Fort Benning's rangers in the sky.

The first 20 or so rangers to arrive at the drop zone were those who jumped from an altitude above 10,000 feet, wearing oxygen masks.

"The high-altitude low-opening drop is serious business," said Air Force Master Sgt. Martin S. Klukas, Headquarters and Headquarters Company , 3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment. "It is a means of infiltration. It's a blast. We're doing a job that parallels a civilian form of recreation."

The dust had barely settled after the first wave of rangers landed on the drop zone when the skies were filled again with more jumping rangers.

After the rangers landed, they gathered at an objective rally point to conduct a field exercise. The training involved seizing military objectives and controlling the surrounding area.

Once they accomplished their mission, the training for the evening concluded, ending the first part of the Ranger Rendezvous.

New leader takes the helm

Shannon Day

Col. James T. Jackson (left), retired Col. "Bull" Dawson, Lt. Gen. James T. Scott and Col. William J. Leszczynski at the 75th's change of command.

His next assignment will be as the deputy operations officer, U.S. Special Operations Command at MacDill Air Force Base in Florida.

"I can leave with secure knowledge the regiment is in great hands," he said after he turned over command to Col. William J. Leszczynski Jr.

"I am both privileged and humbled to be chosen to command this regiment," Leszczynski said.

He said the 75th Ranger Regiment holds a standard that all units look to measure themselves.

He promised he and his wife, Jennifer, would continue the leadership and caring as had been provided by the Jacksons.

"He is no stranger to hard work or personal sacrifice," said Lt. Gen. James T. Scott, commander of the U.S. Army Special Operations Command and the reviewing officer.

Leszczynski is a graduate of the Infantry Officer Advanced Course, The U.S. Marine Corps Command and General Staff College and the U.S. Army War College. He has a master's degree in exercise science from the University of Massachusetts.

Outgoing commander praises leadership team

By Shannon Day
Special to the Bayonet

The 75th Ranger Regiment conducted a regimental change of command ceremony Wednesday at 9 a.m. on York Field in front of Infantry Hall.

Col. James T. Jackson bid farewell to the regiment he had commanded for two years.

"Having command of this regiment has been both a privilege and an honor," he said. "These soldiers represent the greatest values and traditions of our country."

He said he was blessed with a great leadership team the last two years and the regiment could not have functioned without them.

He said commanding the regiment will be the highlight of his military career.

Competition brings out the 'best' of the best

By Brian R. Voller
Bayonet staff writer

The 1995 Ranger Stakes competition brought rangers from the 75th Regiment's Headquarters and Headquarters Company and three battalions to Fort Benning's Sergeants Major Field Sunday to test their skills and their physical and mental strength.

Ranger Stakes, a day-long series of events, was designed to determine the top machine gun teams, mortar crews, sniper teams and anti-tank teams. The day began early with the Iron Ranger competition and several different types of weapons competition, including the use of the M-9 pistol and 60 mm mortar.

There was also a physical fitness challenge, a platoon leader and platoon sergeant competition, an endurathon and a triathlon.

When the sun began to rise, the competition moved to several fields throughout the post where the rangers squared off in head-to-head competitions designed to test their minds and bodies.

The endurathon and the triathlon were conducted on Engineer Landing, and the Army Physical Fitness Test challenge was on Peden field.

During the endurathon, the rangers were broken into teams. Each team had to negotiate five events. The events included swimming, biking, running, a rucksack march and a lifting event.

RANGER RENDEZVOUS

From there, the competition moved to Sergeants Major Field.

The first competition there was the signal competition where rangers had to set up communication centers as quickly as possible and then take a written test.

From there the rangers carried a 50-pound rucksack on a mile-and-a-half run and then handed it off to the next ranger on their team during the 20-kilometer rucksack relay.

Next was the litter relay in which five rangers ran with 200 pounds on a litter for 10 kilometers over rugged terrain.

The rangers squared off in the mid-day heat with a boxing smoker, which was followed by the regimental barbecue.

The competition came to a close with a tug of war and the final matches of the boxing smoker.

New skeet range offers shooting, fun

Brian R. Voller

Michael Detoy fires at a clay targets as Justin Hensel scores and releases the clay targets at the new skeet range on post.

By Brian R. Voller
Bayonet staff writer

The Fort Benning skeet shooting range, at Hook Range opened its gates Saturday by having Maj. Gen John W. Hendrix, commanding general, fire the first rounds.

Hendrix is supporting the range because he said he wants a place for the soldiers to be able to shoot and have fun.

"Most ranges offer competitions and other type tournaments," Hendrix said. "All I'm concerned with is having a place I can come and shoot at on the weekends and have a little fun.

"Also, I want place for the soldiers to go so they can relax and enjoy themselves."

There are three different types of firing done with clay targets. They are skeet shooting, trap shooting and sporting clays.

Skeet shooting involves firing from a fixed position and shooting at the clay discs as they are released. Generally, the discs are released from the same point every time.

Trap shooting involves firing from behind a line at different clay discs. The further the line moves back, the more difficult it becomes with the point totals increasing as you move.

Sporting clays are designed to simulate different kinds of hunting situations. The firing position you fire at and the way the clay targets are released are designed to simulate animals that are commonly hunted such as ducks and rabbits.

The range is strictly firing skeet right now; but, if demand is good enough, expanding to other kinds of sport shooting will be considered, said Timothy P. Brown, manager of outdoor recreation.

Brown also said if the popularity of the range increases with time, outdoor recreation will consider having firing competitions for the military and surrounding competitors.

Spc. Michael J. Detoy, Headquarters, and Headquarters Company, 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment, who fired skeet for the first time on the range, said he liked the way the range was run.

"I usually hunt or shoot sporting clays, when I do go out and fire," Detoy said. "This range is nice; it looks good and it's a good time."

The range is open to all military personnel and their families, Department of the Army civilians and bonafide house guests, said Thomas W. Mull, chief of the Community Recreation Division.

"We require some form of ID in order to fire," Mull said. "Our basic plan is for the soldiers and their families, but guest are welcome. We don't want just anybody to come here and want to shoot. We're dealing with dangerous equipment, and we have to be careful."

Brown said he believes the first day's attendance is a very positive sign for a good future.

"With this being the first day, I'm really happy," Brown said. "The attendance is good, especially with it being so hot. Hopefully as the word spreads, we can get more people to participate."

The range is open Saturdays and Sundays from 1 to 6 p.m. The cost is $3 per round for 25 clays if you bring your own weapon and ammunition, or $9 per round with the range providing weapon and ammunition.

ask the judge

Staff Judge Advocate's Office

Q: I was recently promoted to private first class. In spite of the promotion, I am still having trouble paying all of my bills.

Before I came into the Army, I was making a lot more money and did not have this problem. Now the 20.5 percent annual percentage rate on my credit cards and the 18.5 percent annual percentage rate on my car financing is bankrupting me.

Can anything be done to help my situation?

A: Your situation is not as hopeless as it may seem. The Soldiers and Sailors Civil Relief Act is a federal law that provides financial relief by limiting the amount of interest that can be charged to a rate no higher than 6 percent per annum.

To take advantage of the Soldiers and Sailors Civil Relief Act, the service member must meet certain criteria.

First, the obligation must have been entered into prior to active duty service. Second, the military service must materially affect the ability of the service member to pay. Finally, the service member must be currently on active duty.

If the service member meets the criteria, the creditor must lower the interest rate to 6 percent. The creditor should then deduct from the current balance of the loan any interest in excess of the 6 percent that has accrued since the service member came on active duty and recalculate the monthly payments to reflect the 6 percent rate of interest.

The protection of the SSCRA takes effect at the time the service member enters active military service and not when the protection is invoked.

However, the protection stops when the service member goes off active duty.

To invoke the protection, the service member needs to notify the lender and provide a copy of orders showing that he or she is on active duty. The Legal Assistance Office can help you draft the letters to your creditors.

Once it receives notification, the burden is on the creditor to seek relief in court by proving that the military service does not materially affect the service member's ability to pay.

This is determined by the court, which is required to compare the service members financial condition prior to entry on active duty with the financial condition while on active duty.

Once the protections have been invoked, the creditor is prohibited from exercising any right or option under the contract to rescind or terminate the contract.

Furthermore, the creditor is prohibited from repossessing the property for nonpayment of any installment due or due to a breach of the terms of the contract.

For more information or assistance in notifying creditors, call the Legal Assistance Office at 545-3281 or 545-3282

Summer art gives kids jump on school

By Dolores Varnon and Mona Peloquin
Very Special Arts

During the summer, young children with and without disabilities can lose a great deal of the academic knowledge and skills gained during the school year, according to research studies. Math, spelling and other language skills are areas particularly affected.

But by participating in some simple summertime arts education activities with children, parents can add fun to their children's summer while helping them retain knowledge and giving them a head start on the next school year.

"Parents' role as teachers becomes even more important during the summer," says Eileen Cuskaden, acting CEO of Very Special Arts, an international organization that creates learning opportunities through the arts for people with disabilities, especially children and youth. "The arts help kids to learn and grow academically in areas such as math and spelling. What better way to keep children active in the learning process during the summer than with fun arts education activities?"

Very Special Arts recommends the following simple, fun, and educational arts activities for early elementary-school-aged students.

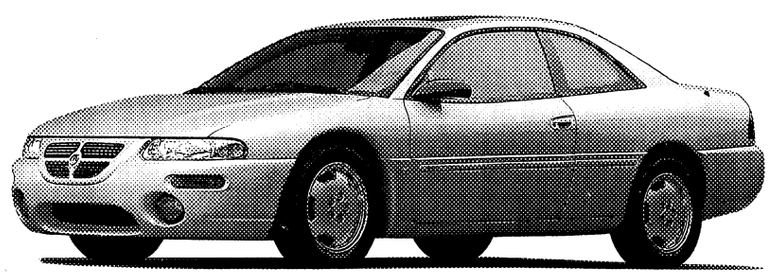
Describing Favorite Summer Family Vacations through Drawing — Drawing can help children to learn math, language, and spelling skills and to express thoughts and ideas. Encourage your child to draw pictures of favorite summer vacation places and activities and then count different shapes, identify items, and describe scenes in the drawing.

Making a Collage of Summer Activities — This activity assists children with classifying and organizational skills. Create the collage by cutting pictures from colored paper, magazines, photos, and newspapers and pasting them onto paper. Older children can cut alphabet letters from magazines and spell out the names of games, toys, or summer foods. Have your child cut and paste pictures of animals, people, cars, or other items, then count, add and subtract the images to practice math skills. For example, paste all the blue cars in one column and all the red cars in another, and add the two together. Remember to praise all your child's efforts.

Experiencing Summertime Adventures Through Reading and Improvisation — Reading aloud helps enhance vocabulary, spelling, and language skills.

Select books with timely themes, such as summertime adventures, the ocean, or the outdoors, and read and discuss them with your child. Join your child in re-enacting the story, playing characters in the book. This activity builds language, vocabulary, and reading comprehension skills, and helps children learn how to order events. Using learn-to count books when re-enacting a story also reinforces math concepts.

Creating a Story About Your Child's Favorite Outdoor Experiences — Creating an original story can develop children's creative thinking and sequencing skills. Develop a story with a beginning, middle, and end. Use props to assist in the creation process, such as a basket of twigs, bird seed, and a feather or other fun props from your backyard or house. Older children can also write their story.



Singing Favorite Summertime Songs — Singing helps develop memory and listening skills. Join your child in singing his or her favorite song, especially those with summertime themes. Verse songs are ideal for memorization, and songs such as "This Old Man" further your child's understanding of numbers and math concepts. Children can also create their own songs that use numbers.

Very Special Arts, which sponsors programs in all 50 states and 85 countries worldwide, has produced an educational program called "Start with the Arts" for children with and without disabilities, ages 4 to 6. This field-tested instructional program is available to school systems throughout the country.

For a suggested list of children's books or for more information about "Start with the Arts" and other Very Special Arts programs in your area, call (800) 933-8721.

Choose reliable service station for AC repair

Better Business Bureau

The summer months are here, and many of you are wondering if the air conditioner in your car will last the season. The Better Business Bureau urges consumers to choose reliable service stations for repairs to air conditioner systems. Also, be aware that using an inexpensive poor quality refrigerant can prove to be a costly mistake.

The cost of keeping cool has gone up. Freon and other refrigerants containing "choro-fluorocarbons or CFCS, are being phased out internationally to slow down the destruction of the ozone layer. The U.S. government has ordered CFC production to end by Jan. 1.

Because of lower supply and federal excise taxes, CFC prices have skyrocketed. Some black marketers have been importing refrigerant without paying the tax and skirting government agency requirements. The results are low-cost, poor quality refrigerants that could ruin car air conditioning systems.

Because of the new environmental regulations, motor vehicle air conditioner repairs are more complicated than ever. If your system does need repairs, get several estimates from service shops with a reputation for good work. Contact your local BBB for a reliability report.

The Better Business Bureau also suggests that the best way to avoid trouble is to ask the service station to use only name-brand refrigerants installed by a mechanic. Shop owners and technicians should use only reputable suppliers to ensure that the refrigerant they provide is legal and not contaminated.

Owners of older cars have an additional factor to take into account — their cars must be retrofitted with special adapters and hoses in order to accept the new refrigerant, at a cost of up to $800.

Relatively inexpensive retrofit kits are now on the market, and may be appropriate for many cars. Before using such a kit, car owners should get advice from a trusted technician or expert on its suitability and safety.

Protect your long distance service

Better Business Bureau

Better Business Bureaus are reporting that scams used to steal long distance telephone services appear to be on the increase. Business owners, managers and employees need to alert themselves to the different types of schemes currently being used by con artists to steal long distance services from places of business.

Beware of bogus service technicians claiming to be from your telephone company. These con artists are telephoning companies and asking for assistance in testing the telephone line.

The unsuspecting employee is asked to test the line by pressing certain numbers on the telephone keypad and then hanging up. Doing so allows the con artist access to one of your outside lines. The thief then uses your telephone line to make international or long distance telephone calls.

Be suspicious of scam artists posing as federal communications commission agents. These scammers are asking people to assist in an investigation of long distance frauds.

The "(FCC) agents are providing bogus badge numbers and the names of supposed supervisor to add numbers and authorization codes for long distance calls.

The BBB advises you not to give out your calling card number as you may be held accountable for any stolen telephone service, " said Marcotte.

Also, beware of individuals who are lurking around pay telephones at airports and other busy areas hoping to steal your calling card number.

Those scam artists may eavesdrop on your conversation with a telephone operator or watch you dial your calling card number. Once they have your calling card number, access is quickly sold to other people. Thousands of dollars could be charged before the fraud is detected.

For information about these and other scams targeting the business community, contact your local Better Business Bureau.

Vacation: Safeguard home from crime

AAA Auto Club South

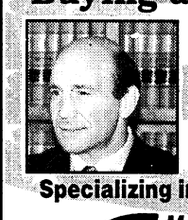
When preparing for your summer vacation, don't forget one very important detail — safeguarding your home against crime, advises AAA Auto Club South.

Homes are especially vulnerable to break-ins when their owners are away on vacation. The U.S. Justice Department reports that 25 percent of burglaries occur when owners are engaged in leisure activity away from home.

However, there are ways to protect your property while your are away. Here are a few easy tips from AAA Auto Club South and Brink's Home Security:

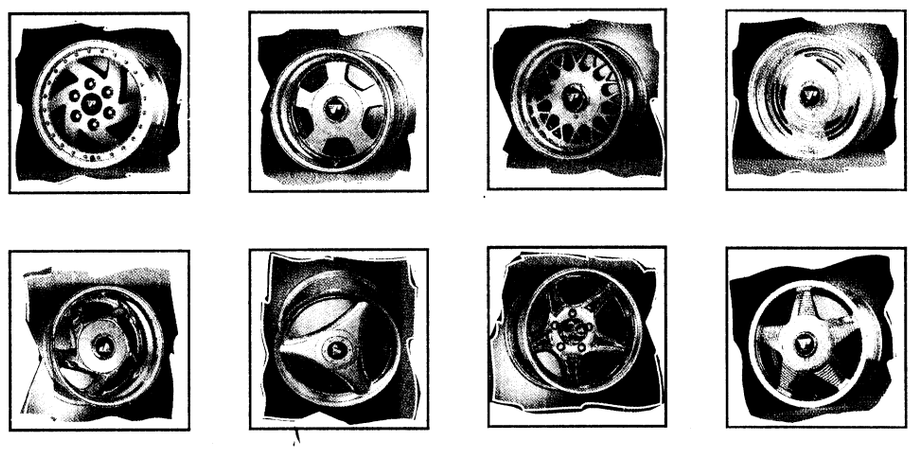
• Use timers on indoor and outdoor lighting fixtures when you're away.

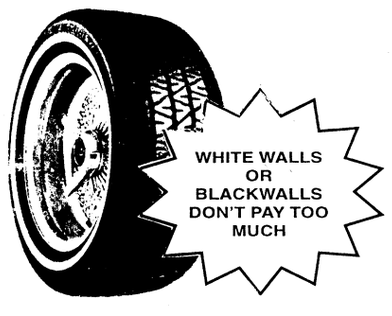
• Use natural barriers, such as shrubs with prickly thorns or leaves, to deter break-ins.



• Park in the driveway. When you are away from home, park another car or ask a neighbor to park in your driveway. This will give the appearance someone is home.

• Temporarily cancel your mail and newspaper delivery, or have a friend or neighbor pick these items up.





• Sliding glass doors should have an extra lock. Wedge a wooden rod inside the door track to prevent the door from sliding open if lock is breached.

• Install a 24-hour electronically-monitored security system. Today's systems are easy to use and can provide you with an added sense of safety.

Combat medics

By Danielle L. Holliday
School of the Americas

Sweating under a hot Georgia sun, medics struggled under the load of a litter-borne buddy July 12 as they completed the Medical Assistance Course for the School of the Americas.

The SOA Medical Assistance Course students spent their final week of training on a three-day field training exercise last week.

"The FTX is the grand finale of the course," said Staff Sgt. Robert Saenz, course instructor. "This is where everything they have learned comes together."

Instructors of the course provide Latin American students with the knowledge required to perform medical skills in a combat zone or in a civilian community.

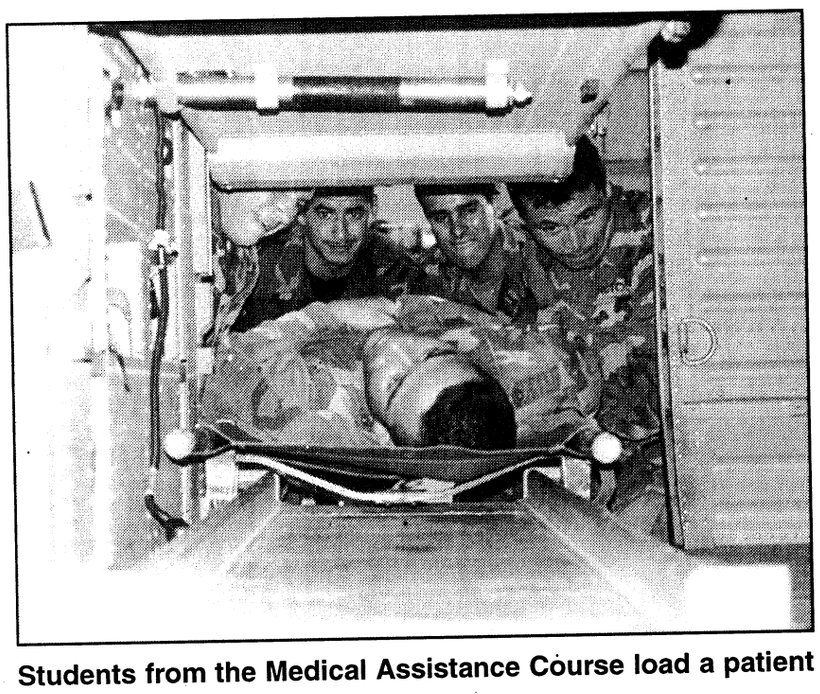
In this six-week course, the students learn about human anatomy, treating complicated injuries, replacing fluid, splinting and suturing. The course also provides units with civic action missions training in emergency child birth, preventive medicine, cardiopulmonary resuscitation, establishing immunization programs and minor surgical procedures.

The students who graduated Tuesday were from Colombia, Bolivia and Venezuela. Each is leaving with a service to provide to his country.

During the FTX, the students were able to use all that they had been taught during the course. They went through exercises such as emergency medical treatment, manual carries for evacuation, loading patients on an improvised ambulance and on a helicopter. They also completed a 12-mile road march.

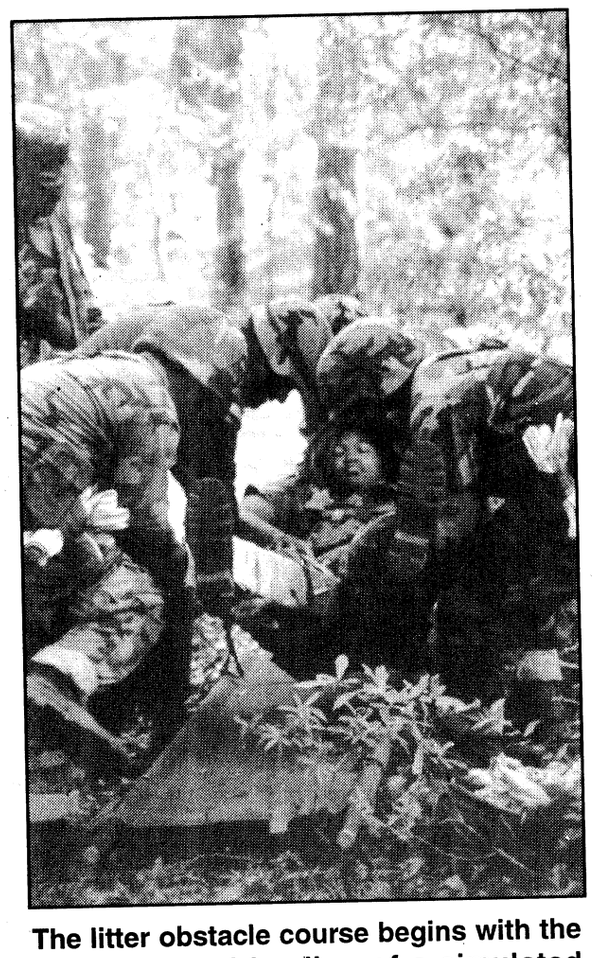
One of the most challenging exercises was the one-kilometer Litter Obstacle Course. The goal was to evacuate the patient without causing further injury.

This task was performed under a simulated battle scenario.



"The Litter Obstacle Course is very physically demanding," said Staff Sgt. Alex Figueroa, course instructor. "I am confident that the students will be able to put to task what they've learned in the classroom."

While reacting under combat conditions, the students had to negotiate eight obstacles — low- and high-wall, narrow passage, up- and down-hill carry, trench, rough terrain and low crawl under barbed wire.



While carrying the patient and maneuvering over, under and through the tough obstacles, the students had to use the different types of litter carries in which they had been trained.

Throughout the obstacle course, the students would rotate themselves to the medic position, which is on the side of the patient's right shoulder. The medic would then take charge of the litter squad, giving all commands to negotiate the obstacles.

After completing the obstacle course, the students said that although the course was tough physically, they were confident and were able to use all the skills they'd learned throughout the six-week course.

The litter obstacle course begins with the treatment and loading of a simulated casualty onto a stretcher.

Command of 3rd Bde 24th changes hands

By Ruth J. Spaller
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Command of the 3rd Brigade, 24th Infantry Division (Mechanized), changed hands in a ceremony on York Field Tuesday.

Col. Michael Deegan, outgoing commander, will be leaving Fort Benning for Washington D.C., where he will serve as the chief of training and operations, Deputy Chief of Staff, Operations.

Stepping in as commander of the "Sledgehammer Brigade" is Col. Steven P. Schook, who comes to Fort Benning from the Naval War College at Newport, R.I.

During Deegan's two-year command, elements of the brigade deployed to Somalia as part of Operation Restore Hope, to Southwest Asia for Operation Vigilant Warrior, to Turkey for Exercise Dynamic Guard and to Kuwait during Exercise Intrinsic Action.

In August, the brigade also participated in a scheduled rotation to the National Training Center at Fort Irwin, Calif., where the unit was part of an advanced warfighting experiment using digital technology to enhance the combat capability of the combined arms team in a desert warfare environment.

As part of the 24th Infantry Division, the majority of which is stationed at Fort Stewart, Ga., the unit also handles the rotating responsibilities of division ready force and immediate ready company, when soldiers must be ready to deploy anywhere in the world on a moment's notice.

Maj. Gen. Joseph E. DeFrancisco, division commander, came from Fort Stewart to attend the change of command ceremony.

Referring to the Sledgehammer brigade's motto, "Not fancy, just tough," DeFrancisco said, "I have come to find out that I can't call these soldiers fancy, but they're a lot more than just tough.

"You have to be a lot more than just tough to execute the Army's first advanced warfighting experiment," he said.

"You've got to be more than just tough to handle the division ready force and immediate ready company responsibilities of the 24th division when you live and work more than 300 miles from the division headquarters.

"You have to be more than just tough to routinely execute mechanized infantry and armor gunnery densities at Fort Stewart.

"You certainly have to be more than just tough to execute what this brigade did on Operation Vigilant Warrior. With the help of the great Fort Benning installation, this brigade responded on very short notice and actually wrote the book on how the Army is going to deploy with prepositioned equipment afloat."

Through all of this, DeFrancisco said, Deegan's "progressive, proactive, innovative leadership led the way."

Deegan charted his own course, kept the morale up in his unit and saved the Army up to five years in developing the Army's prepositioned afloat concept, DeFrancisco said.

"He never waited for instructions — he did what had to be done," he said.

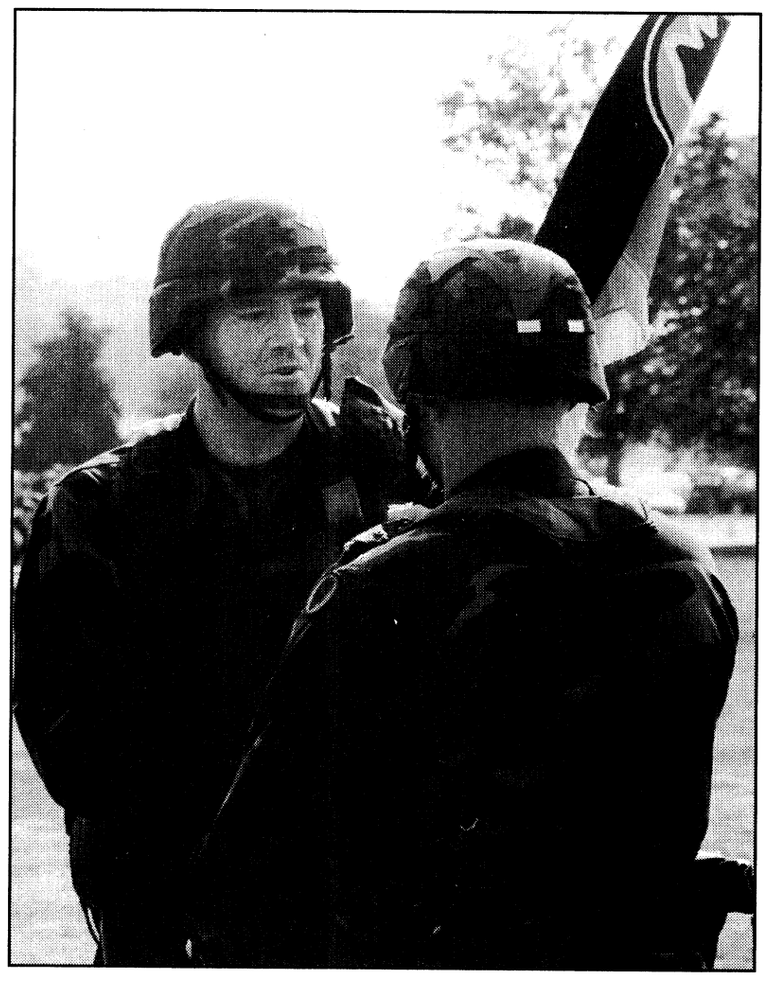
But Deegan credits much of his success to the soldiers who make up the unit.

"I've been blessed with an opportunity to command a great unit," Deegan said at the ceremony.

"It's got great equipment and it's got great soldiers, but what it's really got is great heart. It's a unit with soul and with fighting spirit, and it's made me proud every day I've been in command," he said.

The soldiers of the brigade have earned his respect, "regardless of rank," Deegan said.

To them, he said, "As a professional soldier, I'm proud to have served with you — as an American, I've been overwhelmed and impressed with your dedication and ability to sacrifice; and, as a person, I've been humbled by your generosity, your warm-heartedness and your patience."



Both Deegan and DeFrancisco welcomed Schook, who was specifically selected by the Department of the Army for this command because of his great record, his demonstrated potential in handling combat troops, and by his tremendous reputation throughout the Army, DeFrancisco said.

"There's no time to take a deep breath," he told the new commander, "because major portions of this brigade are going to deploy within two weeks and they will stay on a very fast track for the entire time that (you are) in command."

Schook called himself the brigade's new steward and promised to lead the unit well.

"I promise high standards with empathy," he said.

To the soldiers assembled on the field he said, "Fellow soldiers, let's get ready to go to the National Training Center. Let's prepare for our readiness mission. I will meet you on the high ground."

New 3/24th commander brings wealth of experience

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Col. Steven P. Schook assumed command of the 3rd Brigade, 24th Infantry Division, Tuesday.

Schook, who was commissioned an infantry officer upon graduation from the U.S. Military Academy at West Point, N.Y., in June 1975, has served extensively with infantry units in the Army.

He has commanded at the platoon and company level with the 2nd Infantry Division in Korea and the 2nd Armored Division in Germany. He commanded the 4th Battalion, 6th Infantry Regiment, at Fort Polk, La., and moved the battalion to Fort Hood, Texas, where it was redesignated the 2nd Battalion, 7th Cavalry Regiment.

During his 25 months of battalion command, Schook and his soldiers successively wore the patches of the 5th Mechanized, 2nd Armored and 1st Cavalry divisions.

Schook has attended the Infantry Officer Basic and Advanced courses, the U.S. Army Command and General Staff College and the Naval War College.

He has also served on the staff of the U.S. Army Combined Arms Center, Fort Leavenworth, Kan., and as the majors' assignments officer, Infantry Branch, U.S. Army Personnel Command.

He holds a master of arts degree in national security and strategic studies from the Naval War College. He is a graduate of the Airborne, Ranger and Pathfinder courses.

Schook and his wife, Kathleen, have two children, John and Katie.

Green to Gold program hits record enrollment

TRADOC News Service

FORT MONROE, Va. — A record number of enlisted soldiers entered the U.S. Army Cadet Command's "Green to Gold" scholarship program for school year 1995-96.

Green to Gold and Nursing Green to Gold scholarships were awarded to 310 soldiers, according to Cadet Command officials. That's 60 more scholarships than were granted for the 1994-95 school year.

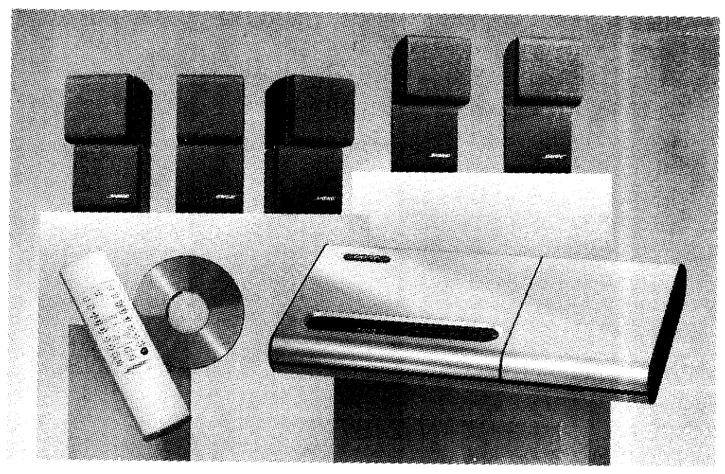
"The program offers top quality soldiers the chance to earn both their college degrees and an officer's commission at reduced costs," said Maj. Harold Lawson, Cadet Command's chief of recruiting.

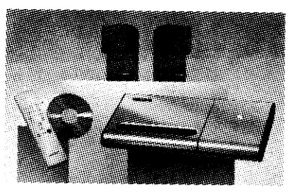
Of the 310 scholarships, 98 are for four years, 146 for three years and 66 are for two years. The four-year scholarships must be used at Historically Black Colleges and Universities. However, scholarships and acceptance at HBCUs are available to everyone. The three- and two-year scholarships may be used at any college or university that has access to Army Reserve Officer Training Corps programs.

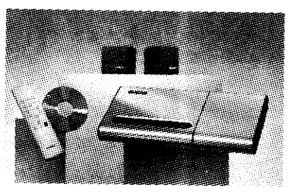
Soldiers who win scholarships are discharged from the active duty Army and receive no Army pay or benefits while in school. They are, however, entitled to any Montgomery GI Bill or Army College Fund benefits they have earned.

Soldiers who qualify for the program must have at least two years of active duty at the time they are discharged. Those with two-years of duty must receive their degrees and commissions before they turn 25.

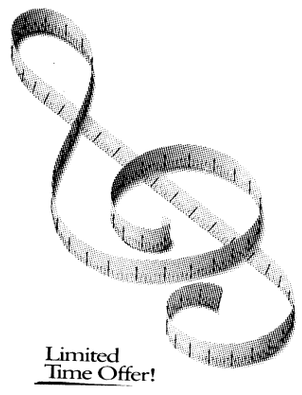
Soldiers with four or more years of active duty may have the age limit extended for up to four years.

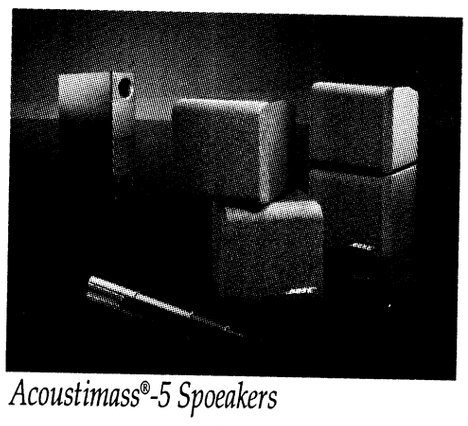


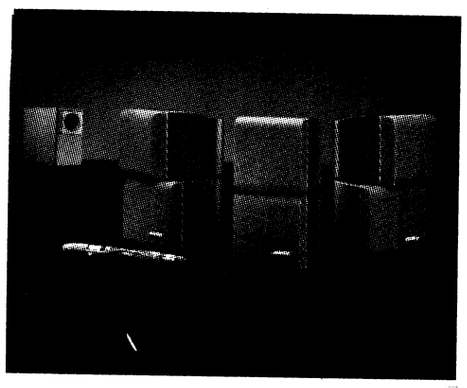




An Army ROTC scholarship pays up to $12,000 toward tuition and offers set rates for fees and books.







The student is paid $150 a month while the scholarship is in effect, a maximum of $1,500 per year.

Applications for the next cycle of Green to Gold scholarships will be available Dec. 1 at Army education centers or ROTC counterpart battalions. Scholarship applications must be received by March 15 at Headquarters, Cadet Command, Fort Monroe, Va. 23651.

Interested soldiers can find more information from career counselors, Army education centers or a counterpart battalion. They may also call (800) USA-ROTC, Ext. 484. Lawson or Capt. George Guthridge can be called at (804) 727-3770 or 727-4611 or DSN 680-3770 or 680-4611.

Digging in

The Directorate of Public Works and the 36th Engineer Group's 63rd Engineer Company, Combat Support Equipment, have joined forces to repair 10th Mountain Division Road near the Defense Reutilization and Marketing Office, where erosion caused part of the road to collapse. DPW and the 63rd repaired the culvert to eliminate the erosion problem, and are now working to fill in the depression by carrying soil from a quarry area on Marne Road. Earth-moving operations are scheduled to be complete by Thursday. Caution should be exercised because of heavy truck traffic in this area.

'Jumping Mustangs' celebrate anniversary of Vietnam deployment

By Ruth J. Spaller
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Veteran paratroopers who were members of the 1st Battalion, 8th Cavalry, gathered in Columbus July 9 through Sunday to mark the unit's departure from Fort Benning for Vietnam 30 years ago.

Part of the 1st Cavalry Division (Airmobile), the 1st Bn., 8th Cav., served in places in Vietnam like An Khe, Bong San, Phong Dien and Cu Chi from 1965 until 1971.

Known as the "Jumping Mustangs," the soldiers who served in the unit saw heavy combat and often found themselves in situations where "extraordinary heroism was commonplace," according to "The 1st Air Cavalry Division," a book by the 1st Cavalry Division (Airmobile) Public Affairs Office.

Because of the hardships they endured, members of the 1st Bn., 8th Cav., have a special closeness, veterans at the reunion said.

"It's like a family reunion," said Jim Butts, who served two tours in Vietnam with the unit. "There's a lot of people you don't know, but you get to know them.

"I come back to get together with comrades and to talk about it with people who understand," he said.

"There's still a bond left between all of us," said retired Sgt. 1st Class Michael Goff, who came from Kansas City, Kan., for the reunion.

Goff, who was medically evacuated out of Vietnam in March 1969, said he has seven Purple Hearts (an award given for wounds received in combat). Though otherwise remarkable, this seems par for the course among the 1st Bn., 8th Cav., veterans.

The veterans mostly gather to reminisce and remember, swapping war stories, Butts said, and remembering and honoring the unit's soldiers killed and missing in action.

> "I come back to get together with comrades and to talk about it with people who understand."
> — Jim Butts
> 1st Cavalry veteran

Many of the Jumping Mustangs, true to their heritage, even jogged their memory with a plunge from the 34-foot jump towers on Eubanks Field — the same towers they trained on are still being used to train Airborne School students.

Lt. Col. Thomas E. Sittnick, commander of the 1st Battalion (Airborne), 507th Infantry, 11th Infantry Regiment, officially welcomed the group to Fort Benning.

"You are, in fact, legend," he said to the veterans. "The spirit of the airborne was designed and built in places like ... Vietnam, by units like the 1st Cav.

"Every soldier, sailor, airman or Marine who comes through here understands, before they pin on their silver wings, that the spirit of the airborne comes from the blood, sweat and tears of people like you."

Summer months bring fun

By Semone Doughton
Fort Benning Youth Services

Summer is here, and children are out of school and parents are seeking activities their children can become involved in.

Fort Benning and surrounding communities are offering an array of activities to keep children very busy this summer.

"Activities include day camp, swimming lessons, craft classes, weekly field trips and much more," said Quintella Thorn, recreation specialist of the Youth Activities Center.

The summer day camp is open to youth family members ranging in age from 5 to 12 years, with six sessions throughout the summer that range in price from $50 to $65.

The center also offers dance and piano lessons along with tae kwon do lessons, and a variety of sport activities.

"It's good for kids to have activities to become involved in; however, its also good to help children find out their natural talents," said Ann Walker, executive director of the Phenix-Russell Boys and Girls Club Inc., a United Way Agency that offers all kinds of recreational, instructional and social activities to young people ages 6 to 18 years.

ACS to have a party!

By Lori Egan
Bayonet staff writer

Army Community Service is celebrating its 30th birthday today at Youth Services, Building 1056, from 10 a.m. until the end of the awards ceremony, which is scheduled to begin at 3:30 p.m.

The festivities will include unveiling the new Morale, Welfare and Recreation logo and banner, a dunking booth, a magic show and a rematch of a hotly contested softball game between the officer and enlisted teams, said Ann P. Pratcher, manager of Consumer Affairs and Financial Assistance.

At the dunking booth, players can dunk their favorite disc jockey from Kissin 99.3 FM or FOXIE 105 FM. Players will receive three balls for just one can of food brought for the emergency food locker or a toy for Santa's castle.

Fort Benning's command exhibition parachute team, the Silver Wings, is scheduled to drop from the sky at 10:20 a.m.

There will be an ugly pet contest at noon with prizes awarded to the top three contenders. Entrants need to register at Youth Services by 11 a.m. The judges will be members of Sheila's Ugly Sister band .

Sheila's Ugly Sister will be performing in the ballroom from 12:30 to 2:30 p.m.

The rotten sneaker contest is also in the ballroom but at 12:30 p.m. The sneakers must be worn. Top sneakers will earn the owner a new pair of Nike athletic shoes.

There will be free giveaways all day long. The gifts include visors, cups, flying disks and lots more.

Army Community Service will be closed today because of the birthday celebration. For emergency assistance, call the staff duty officer at 545-2218.

Bands to battle it out

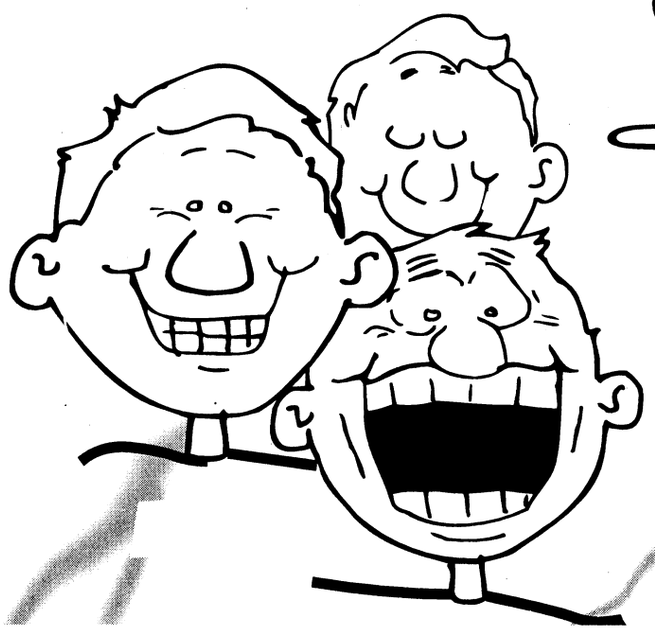
Directorate of Community Activities

A "Battle of the Bands" contest will be at the Afterhours Club July 30 from 6:30 to 10 p.m.

Bands consisting of active duty military members are eligible to enter the contest. Exceptions will be made if a family member, spouse or Department of Defense civilian is critical to the band.

The bands can be country music, rock 'n' roll, rhythm and blues or any other type.

"We're hoping for large turnout of bands so we can have a good competition," said Anny Honeycutt, branch manager of the Sand Hill and Kelley Hill recreation centers. "Last year's winner, Quick Fix, will be competing again. As last year's winner, they competed at Fort Hood, Texas.



The winner of the contest will be nominated to represent Fort Benning in the 1995 Battle of the Bands contest at Fort Belvoir, Va., in September.

Entry forms are available at the Sand Hill Recreation Center, the Kelley Hill Recreation Center or the Afterhours Enlisted Club.

The deadline for entry is July 28. The competition is hosted by the Fort Benning recreation centers and the Afterhours Club.

For more information, call Honeycutt at 544-9161 or 545-8031 or 689-0887.

FORT BENNING HISTORY BOOK
published to commemorate the DIAMOND JUBILEE 1918 - 1993

20 years from now, you'll wish you had one!

Fort Benning recently celebrated its 75th Anniversary, and The Bayonet published a special edition to coincide with the celebration. Soon after the special edition of the paper was published, we decided that the information about Fort Benning that we had collected was simply too good to leave it just in newspaper form.

The hardcover book has 168-pages and is filled with more than 200 photos. The book includes detailed timelines of significant events that have shaped Fort Benning, an overview of the post's involvement in World War II, Korea, Viet Nam, and Desert Shield/Storm, detailed information on the current major units, and a variety of stories and information that round out the post's colorful history.

Hen shows spirit of God's adopting love

By Jeffrey Voyles
4th Battalion, 41st Field Artillery Regiment

What image comes to mind when you think of love? A heart? Cupid? Marriage? Would you be surprised to know that the image I think of is a chicken. More specifically a hen.

While living on a farm in northwest Alabama, I observed the care, protection and guidance mother hens provided for their chicks. In fact, one day I was chased out of a barnyard by an angry bantam hen. I had tried to catch one of her newly hatched chicks.

My most vivid memory of how a hen cares for her chicks is the time I tricked a red hen into believing her eggs had hatched early. I had ordered 40 chicks from a hatchery in Missouri. I ordered minorcas.

Minorcas are black chickens known for laying very large eggs. At this time, I also had a red hen sitting on a nest of seven eggs. When my minorcas arrived, I worried that they would not survive all alone in the pen I had built for them.

I decided to convince the red hen her eggs had hatched. I placed three minorcas under her and presto, instant mother. I then placed her in the pen with all 40 chicks. What a sight! A small red hen desperately trying to spread her wings to cover and keep warm 40 black chicks. These chicks were not hers.

However, she adopted them as her own. She kept them warm. She guided them in the pen and later throughout the barnyard. She was a good mother.

Jesus must have had a similar image in mind when he said, "O Jerusalem, who kills the prophets and stones those who are sent to her! How often I wanted to gather your children together, the way a hen gathers her chicks under her wings...." (Matthew 23:37).

Much like the love of the hen for her chicks, Jesus' love longs to adopt us as his own, to care for us and to guide us.

He wants to gather us as his own to protect and lead us into his presence. His love will shield, protect and guide you.

Welcome

Benning residents invited to attend, volunteer

By Bill Putman
USAIC Chaplain Office

reflections

Welcome to all new personnel at Fort Benning.

Where are you moving? When is your replacement coming in? When are you leaving? Who's moving into the house next to you?

All these are questions that are asked too frequently during the late spring and summer season at military posts. Normally, summer is the time when military families move.

Too often those of us left behind are so engrossed with telling our friends farewell in taking up the slack for those who are departing and taking leave ourselves, that the new personnel who are arriving, and upon whom we are expecting to depend to get the job done for the next few years get neglected. Of course, this neglect is unintentional.

Much of chapel and chaplain work depends on people who either volunteer to do a job or who voluntarily attend chapel activities. Volunteers are always needed to fill the many positions in chapels, Sunday School and Confraternity of Catholic Doctrine.

Chapels need choir members, ushers, lay readers, crucifers, flag bearers and numerous other volunteers. If your strength lies in teaching, there are opportunities in Sunday School and CCD.

As a new person or family on Fort Benning, don't wait to be asked to attend a chapel service or activity. A schedule of worship services is included on this page. Read the list and select activities you are interested in and attend.

Consider this your invitation to become a part of chapel activities.

Becoming involved is a great way to get to know others, to make friends or to make yourself at home.

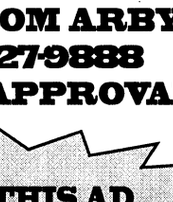
WE'RE MOVING SO FAST, WE'RE TWO YEARS AHEAD OF OURSELVES.



And everyone else. That's one of the reasons why information technology professionals find dynamic and innovative ways to use their skills and abilities at GTE Data Services — the third largest data processing company in the country.

The Commercial Services Division of GTE Data Services seeks health care and telecommunication professionals to play a significant role in reshaping the way information is handled. This Division has a variety of openings requiring experience in different skill areas. All positions require a bachelor's degree, at least 1-2 years' field experience, demonstrated oral and written communication skills, teamwork skills, problem-solving skills, motivation, attention to detail, and planning and organization skills.

HEALTH CARE TECHNICAL PROFESSIONALS (HCTP)

Candidates must have significant practical experience in the health care industry and in claims processing. It is desirable for candidates to possess experience in the design and development of Medical Information Systems, including one or more of the following: inpatient/outpatient billing; Medicare Part A, B, or CWF systems or Managed Care systems; electronic claims; electronic funds transfer, and government contracts. Demonstrated knowledge of Windows, Windows NT or PACBASE is a plus. Locations: Baltimore, MD; Jacksonville, FL; Jefferson City, MO; Phoenix, AZ; Tampa, FL; Topeka, KS.

TELECOMMUNICATIONS TECHNICAL PROFESSIONALS (TTP)

Candidates must have experience in the telecommunications industry or environment. Desired experience includes two or more of the following: Microsoft products (Excel, Word, Powerpoint, Access, Project); object-oriented methodologies and design; configuration management; SQL; BVT; fileaid systems; and financial analysis. Location: Tampa, FL.

It is desirable for candidates applying for either health care or telecommunications positions to have experience in a combination of the following skill areas: systems (analysis, design, development, integration, and testing); coding in C, C++, COBOL, or COBOL II language; and coding in a UNIX/client-server OR Tandem-based platform or in a mainframe environment (MS/DOS or MVS). Knowledge of networking (LANS, WANS, TCP/IP, and host connectivity), CICS, Endeavor and Rexx, ISPF, DBA, and various software utilities is also necessary for some opportunities.

Please send your resume and cover letter to: GTE Data Services, Attention: L. White, mail code S5C, P.O. Box 290152, Temple Terrace, FL 33687. Indicate the job code (HCTP or TTP) of the position for which you are applying and Defense Industry Ad on the outside of the envelope. We are an equal opportunity employer and support workforce diversity, M/F/D/V. Only qualified individuals will be contacted.

Federal Employees Week Aug 21-24

Week's activities emphasize skills for high-tech work

By Lisa M. Hibbert
Bayonet staff writer

The Federal Women's Program Committee will host the 20th Federal Employees Week Aug. 21 through 25.

The theme for this year's week is "Vision Year 2000: Strategies for Survival in the Work Place."

The week's activities will emphasize the skills needed to accomplish the various tasks expected in a high-tech work environment during the 21st century.

Some of the seminar topics include nutrition, physical fitness, mastering communication skills and achieving career satisfaction.

Seminar facilitators Charles W. Collins Jr., senior financial consultant with Merrill Lynch, will talk about financial planning, and Mildred Watts of the Directorate of Civilian Personnel, will speak about enhancing your career during downsizing.

All of the programs will be open to all civilian and military personnel.

The sessions will be at 9:30 to 11:30 a.m. and again from 1:30 to 4 p.m. Aug. 21 through 24. There will only be one session Aug. 25 from 9 to 11 a.m.

All of the activities will take place in Classroom 21, Infantry Hall, Building 4.

For more information, call Barbara Collins at 545-6423.

Beach play

A double-elimination sand volleyball tournament was conducted at the Kelley Hill sand court Saturday.

Four, four-man teams participated in the tournament.

Headquarters and Headquarters Battery, 4th Battalion, 41st Field Artillery, took first place, with Company B, 3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment taking second.

The first- and second-place teams received plaques.

For more information on future tournaments, call Fred Woods at the Kelley Hill Recreation Center at 545-4300.

Commission recommends strengthening DoD capabilities

By Jim Garamone
American Forces Information Service

Strengthening Department of Defense's joint warfighting capabilities is at the core of recommendations made by the Commission on Roles and Missions of the Armed Forces.

"The central message for DoD from the commission ... is in the 21st century, every DoD element must focus on supporting the operations of the unified commanders in chief," the report says. "Everything else DoD does—from furnishing health care to developing new weapons—should support that effort."

The commission, chaired by John P. White, now President Bill Clinton's nominee as deputy defense secretary, also advocates strengthening the role of the chairman and vice chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, expanding the role of the Joint Staff and establishing a new unified command responsible for joint training and integration of all forces within the continental United States. The commission also boosts the roles of the unified commanders in chief.

The commission started by naming the six attributes DoD should have for a successful military well into the 21st century:

• Responsiveness to needs that will change, sometimes quickly;

• Reliability to perform in a predictable and consistent manner;

• Cooperation and trust that underpin unified operations;

• Innovation in new weapons, organizations and operational concepts;

• Competition to find constructive solutions to complex problems; and

• Efficiency in delivering effective military operations at the least cost.

Key to any changes in DoD, the commission said, is for the chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff to propose a future joint warfighting vision to help the services guide force development efforts. Each service has a vision statement of how it believes it should contribute to national defense. There is no unifying vision statement to harmonize the service's efforts.

"This vision should drive joint requirements and serve as a basis for elevating the importance of joint operations as an essential 'core competency' of all joint commands and agencies," the report states.

From this vision, the commission calls for development of joint doctrine through a process lead by a DoD-created joint agency. DoD currently develops joint doctrine with each service acting as a lead element. For example, the Army served as lead in Joint Pub 3-0, Joint Operations.

The commission recommends increasing the responsibility of the Joint Warfighting Center at Fort Monroe, Va. The center assists the chairman, unified commanders in chief and service chiefs in forming and assessing joint doctrine. The commission urges the defense secretary to expand the mission of the center and provide the people and money to make it work.

The role of the commanders in chief is critical to effective military operations, the report stated. The unified commanders are responsible for fighting America's wars and using military forces in pursuit of U.S. national security objectives. The commission wants the status of these commanders upgraded, giving them more influence over DoD processes and priorities and greater authority over DoD assets within theater in peacetime. This means the Defense Information Systems Agency's command, communications and control assets would come under the regional commanders in chief.

The commission also recommends studying the geographic responsibilities of the commanders in chief to ensure the "seams" between commands make sense. They point to Pakistan (in Central Command's area of responsibility) and India (Pacific Command) as examples to look at.

The commission also urges DoD to prepare for changing missions. Peace operations and counterproliferation missions are just two missions the commission wants DoD to study and upgrade.

The commission recommended extending joint training to unit level and to increase joint training opportunities. DoD established the U.S. Atlantic Command, in part, to handle joint training and integration of forces in the United States. The commission believes Atlantic Command's area responsibilities mean joint training does not receive the attention it should. The commission wants DoD to separate the geographic and functional joint-force/integrator missions currently assigned to Atlantic Command and assign all U.S.-based general purpose forces and reserve component forces to a functional training command.

The commission made no major change in the way the forces are configured.

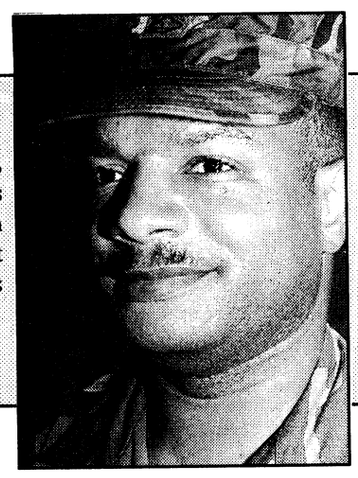
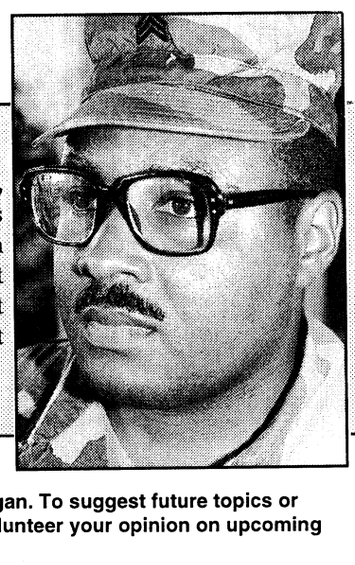
VARIOUS VOICES

Do you think the Miss America contest should eliminate the swimsuit competition?



1st Sgt. Charles A. Higgins, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment — "I think if the standards are the same for all competitors, then there is no problem with that part of the competition."

Malzie L. Robinson, family member — "No, I don't think they should. It has always been part of the pageant; a lot of young girls look forward to showing off what they have, along with their talent."



Chief Warrant Officer 2 Sharon R. Morgan, Company A, 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment — "Yes, because (the contestants) should be judged on the talents they have, not their bodies."

Sgt. 1st Class Paul Kearney, Headquarters and Headquarters Detachment, 3rd Brigade, 24th Infantry Division — "No, I don't think it should be eliminated. It is part of the history of the show."

Mellisa G. Whiston, family member — "No, it wouldn't be the Miss America Pageant without it. It's tradition. The women are judged on poise, beauty and talent."

Sgt. Derrick L. Rayner, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 1st Battalion, 18th Infantry Regiment — "It doesn't matter to me because I don't watch it all of the time. If the woman doesn't feel degraded, then why not."

Litigious society needs direction

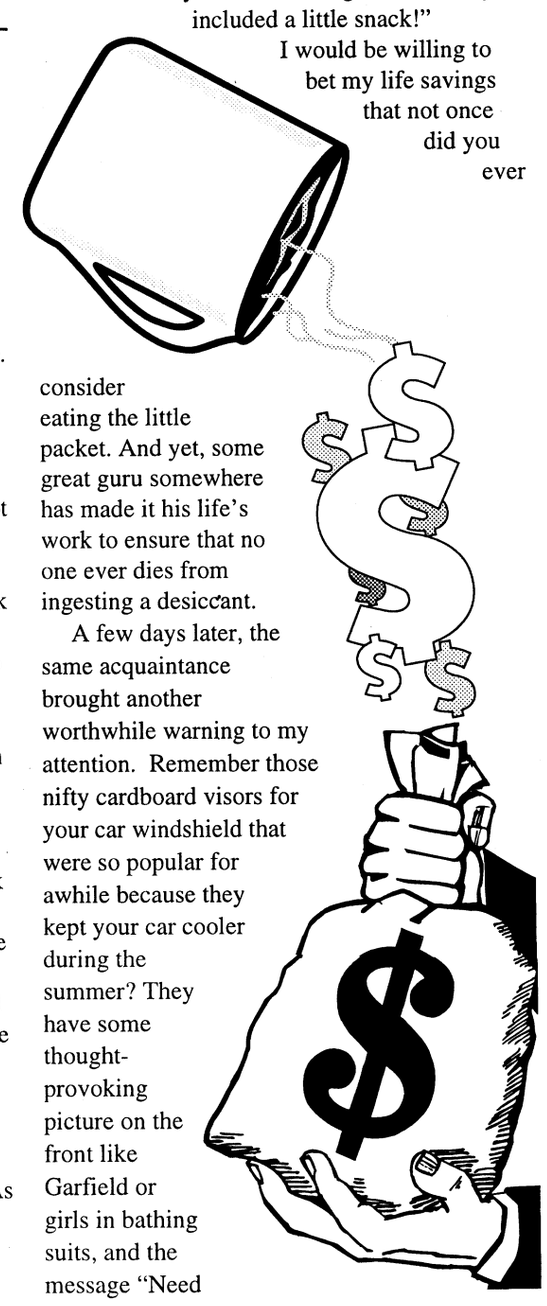
By Shannon Rasmussen
The Paraglide, Fort Bragg, N.C.

We've had it coming for awhile. We've led the powers-that-be to believe that we are totally incapable of thinking for ourselves.

It started with a woman who sued a fast-food chain because she spilled hot coffee in her lap. She won millions of dollars in the lawsuit because, after all, how was she to know that coffee would burn her?

Since then, the trend has spread like wildfire. I recently read about a lawsuit in which a train company was found negligent for running over a drunk vagrant who was sleeping on the train tracks. It's a good thing, too, because how else would we get the word out that it's probably not a good idea to sleep where locomotives travel?

In an era of coffee-burn lawsuits, we've painted ourselves to be a society that can't think for itself.



But now, the phenomenon has gone way too far.

This was brought to my attention by an astute acquaintance who noticed that very often when you buy something new, you get a little something called a desiccant as part of the bargain.

It may not mean much to you now, but think back to the last time you opened a box containing a new power tool or a new appliance of some sort. In the midst of your excitement over your new circular saw, you hardly noticed the little packet that fell into your lap. The little packet included to protect your saw from moisture. You know, the one with "Desiccant — Do not eat," neatly printed on the outside.

Aha!

Now think back to that same circular saw. As you opened the box with your shiny new saw and saw the little packet fall into your lap, did food ever cross your mind? Did you ever once find yourself thinking "Wow! They included a little snack!"

I would be willing to bet my life savings that not once did you ever consider eating the little packet. And yet, some great guru somewhere has made it his life's work to ensure that no one ever dies from ingesting a desiccant.

A few days later, the same acquaintance brought another worthwhile warning to my attention. Remember those nifty cardboard visors for your car windshield that were so popular for awhile because they kept your car cooler during the summer? They have some thought-provoking picture on the front like Garfield or girls in bathing suits, and the message "Need help — call police" on the back.

Not a bad deal, I'd say. It's actually very realistic to think you might someday be stranded on the side of the road and need help from the police.

The fantasy comes in when you read the small print on the end of the visor. In very small type, there's a warning for those who use the visor: "Do not drive with visor in place."

Holy cow! Who'd have thought that could be dangerous?

Who knows what would have happened had I not seen that gentle admonition to make sure I can see before I operate my vehicle.

In all fairness, I can understand why industries now feel it is necessary to baby-sit the consumers. In most cases, they probably never would have thought to include the warning except that some clown somewhere tried it.

I remember receiving a safety briefing at an Army photography course and being told that I should never lick the power source for my camera flash, nor should I ever shower with it. We all laughed, and we laughed even harder when we were told that they had to say that because someone had in fact tried it.

And now, the fast food chain is probably imprinting its coffee lids with the warning: "Caution! Coffee may be hot." And all railroad crossings will feature a sign saying that it may be hazardous to your health to sleep on train tracks.

And the sad part is we've brought it on ourselves. We've created a society that doesn't know that golfing during an electrical storm may be harmful and that skydiving without a parachute may endanger your life.

Good thing we have the industry heads around to keep us in check.

DCA thanks sponsors

On behalf of the Directorate of Community Activities, we would like to thank all the sponsors who contributed so generously to the Army Community Service's 30th birthday celebration and the Morale, Welfare and Recreation logo unveiling July 21.

We would like to thank the Association of the United States Army, CB&T and the Military Benefit association, which provided the funds necessary for the event, as well as the Commissary and its vendors — Lykes Pascoe/Russell West, Colonial Baking Company, Flowers Baking Co., Heinz Co., Kraft General Foods and Buffalo Rock Pepsi that provided the hot dogs, buns, ketchup, mustard and Pepsi for the event.

We would also like to thank Kissin 99.3 and Foxie 105 FM for their invaluable support in promoting and participating in this event.

Finally, we would like to thank the Fort Benning Post Exchange for its contribution of two basketballs, an athletic bag and a T-shirt to supplement the more than 50 prizes given away at this event.

Once again, on behalf of all the soldiers and family members, thank you for your support.

— Alan F. Stewart
Community Activities director

ACS thanks 30th b-day contributors

Recently Army Community Service celebrated its 30th birthday. Accordingly, there were many activities planned. As the ACS staff prepared for the celebration, we incorporated numerous internal and external personnel and agencies. By doing so, this was undoubtedly one of the most enjoyable and successful events hosted by ACS.

The camaraderie, the display of team efforts and professionalism certainly ensured a fun-filled day of activities for soldiers and their family members.

A sincere and special thanks to the following organizations and personnel who contributed untiring efforts and energy to make our celebration such as success:

29th Infantry Regiment, 36th Engineer Group, Infantry Training Brigade (30th AG),11th Infantry Regiment, 4th Battalion, 41st Field Artillery Regiment, 317th Engineer Bn., 324th Support Bn., Directorate of Public Works, Public Affairs Office, The Bayonet, Noncommissioned Officer Academy, Youth Services and volunteer staff, ACS volunteers, CB&T, Association of the United States Army, Military Benefits Association, Foxie 105, Kissin 99.3, Post Exchange, Commissary, Community Life Office and area coordinators in East and West Main Post and Indianhead, Pacelli children, Brenda McKean, Chris Hurley, Enlisted and Officers' Wives' Club, Child Development Services, Bring on the Clown, Directorate of Public Safety, Directorate of Logistics, Sheila's Ugly Sister, V-280 Train, Fire Department, Buffalo Rock Pepsi and Community Recreation Division.

Support FEW Aug. 21-24

The installation's 20th annual Federal Employees' Week, sponsored by the Fort Benning's Federal Women's Program Committee, will be Aug. 21 to 25.

The purpose of the annual training event is to provide information for personal and professional development. This type of training activity promotes full utilization of all personnel and enhances the Department of the Army's policy for equal opportunity in employment.

Vision Year 2000: Strategies for Survival in the Work Place is the theme chosen for the 1995 Federal Employees' Week training program. Training will emphasize skills needed to accomplish the various tasks expected in a high-tech, fast-paced work environment during the 21st century.

All training will be conducted in Infantry Hall, Classroom 21. Every effort has been made to offer training that will benefit supervisory, nonsupervisory, civilian and military personnel.

I strongly support the goals and objectives of the Federal Women's Program Committee and its efforts in sponsoring Federal Employees' Week activities for 1995. Since there is no cost to the government for the training being offered, I encourage all managers and supervisors to participate and encourage participation of the civilian and military work force.

Family members and volunteer workers at this installation are also invited to take advantage of the training opportunities. Civilian personnel (appropriated and nonappropriated fund), who wish to attend the scheduled events will be excused, without charge of leave, pending mission requirements.

VA aids TRICARE

Department of Veterans Affairs

Department of Veterans Affairs medical center, for the first time, may now be eligible to provide health care to Department of Defense beneficiaries under an innovative agreement recently signed by VA Undersecretary for Health Dr. Kenneth W. Kizer and DoD Assistant Secretary of Defense for Health Affairs Dr. Stephen C. Joseph.

The memorandum of understanding enables VA medical center to become eligible for reimbursement for health care provided to Civilian Health and Medical Program of the Uniformed Service beneficiaries under DoD TRICARE program. TRICARE is DoD's managed care program, which will be fully implemented nationwide by May 1997.

"This agreement gives CHAMPUS beneficiaries another option for their health-care needs and is also symbolic of an evolving and enriching relationship between VA and DoD," Kizer said. "We will continue to strengthen existing sharing agreements and explore expand resource-sharing, research, joint planning and other programs to improve care to both department beneficiaries."

The agreement makes VA medical centers eligible to apply through DoD's managed care support contractors to become TRICARE providers. Beneficiaries can continue to use military treatment facilities and private sector providers or those who prefer care from a VA medical center can choose a TRICARE-approved VA provider. The cost to beneficiaries will be the same as for a private-sector provider.

This new health-care initiative will be phased in over the next two years.

Veterans eligible for compensation

Department of Veterans Affairs

WASHINGTON — The Department of Veterans Affairs published in the June 14 Federal Register a rule implementing legislation enacted in November that extends presumptive service-connection and compensation to U.S. veterans who suffer from certain diseases that may be a result of radiation exposure they received while participating in atmospheric nuclear weapons tests conducted by countries other than the United States.

"Since 1988, veterans who were similarly involved in weapons tests performed by the U.S. government have been eligible on a presumptive basis for disability compensation as a result of their service," said VA Secretary Jesse Brown. "The same eligibility rules now apply to U.S. veterans who were exposed to radiation during tests conducted by other countries."

Previously, veterans previously qualified for disability compensation only if they participated in atmospheric nuclear tests as part of the U.S. nuclear weapons testing program or in the American occupation of Hiroshima or Nagasaki, Japan, and suffer from certain diseases that may be attributable to ionizing radiation exposure.

VA will ask the Department of Defense to assist in obtaining dates and sites of tests conducted by other countries and in identifying U.S. military personnel who participated in the tests.

Veterans or their survivors who may want to file claims as a result of participation in foreign atmospheric nuclear tests are urged to contact the nearest VA regional office by calling (800) 827-1000 for information and assistance.

Lottery funds to help Georgia's expanded prekindergarten program

State of Georgia

ATLANTA — Georgia Gov. Zell Miller recently unveiled Georgia's expanded prekindergarten program, calling it "one of the most important educational initiatives in our history."

Miller announced that beginning in September, income from the Georgia lottery will fund voluntary prekindergarten for 1,622 4-year-olds at eight sites in Muscogee County. Statewide, 43,773 children at more than 500 sites across Georgia will have the benefits of prekindergarten.

"No longer will the program just serve at-risk students," Miller said. "The benefits of prekindergarten now belong to every Muscogee County parent with a 4-year-old."

Miller said every dollar Georgia spends on prekindergarten saves $7 by reducing crime, teen pregnancy, substance abuse, welfare payments and reliance on government social services.

More importantly, "prekindergarten produces students who are more likely to remain in school, achieve higher test scores and graduate better prepared for further education or the work force," Miller said.

This year, at-risk prekindergarten students scored significantly higher in academic, self-help, social and communication skills than those who did not participate in the program, according to preliminary data compiled by the Georgia Department of Education.

"What an incredible investment in our children and our future," Miller said. "With prekindergarten available for all 4-year-olds, everybody wins — the children, their parents, our communities, our schools and private care providers.

"But best of all, Georgia wins," Miller said.

Miller announced 19,543 4-year-olds will be served at 357 private centers during the nine-month 1995-96 school year. Another 24,230 will attend prekindergarten classes at 145 public school systems across Georgia. Openings are anticipated for another 4,227 children shortly.

The program's $157 million cost is funded by the Georgia lottery. The lottery also funds the HOPE Scholarship Program and technology grants to public schools.

Miller said demand for prekindergarten may exceed the number of openings in certain areas of the state.

"We are working hard to secure additional qualified providers as quickly as we can," Miller said.

The prekindergarten sites in Muscogee County are:

- Childcare Network
- Children's Friend (three sites)
- Early Childhood Learning Center
- Growing Room Child Development Center
- La Petite Academy
- Muscogee County Schools

The Governor's Communication Office has information on sites for all counties in Georgia.

The commanding general's monthly retreat ceremony is scheduled for 4 p.m. Wednesday at York Field. Everybody is welcome to attend.

Ranger open house

There will be an open house at the U.S. Army Ranger Camp, Camp James E. Rudder, on Eglin Air Force Base, Fla., for the general public Aug. 12 from 8:25 a.m. to noon.

Demonstrations will include parachuting, rappelling, hand-to-hand combat and a snake exhibition.

For more information, call Sgt 1st Class Debra Turner at (904) 882-1163.

Women's Equality Day luncheon set

The Fort Benning Equal Opportunity Office is sponsoring a Women's Equality Day luncheon at 11:30 a.m. Aug. 25 at the Main NCO Club.

The guest speaker will be Col. Roslyn D. Booker, chief of the Department of Nursing, Martin Army Community Hospital.

The cost of the luncheon is $5.50. The menu will consist of a choice of baked chicken or roast beef, rice, green beans, rolls and iced tea.

For ticket information, call Sgt. 1st Class Beverly Riley at 545-3196 or 545-6665.

Mayors' Council to meet third Weds

Mayors' Council meetings with the installation staff will take place the third Wednesday of each month at 9:30 a.m. in Infantry Hall, Room 550. If your designated representative is unable to attend, an alternate must be provided. You will be notified in advance of any changes or cancellations. Meeting dates are Aug. 16, Sept. 20, Oct. 18 and Nov. 15.

Speakers wanted

The Public Affairs Office is recruiting volunteers to join its Speakers Bureau to speak before local and surrounding area civic organizations.

If you are military or civilian and have a unique subject you are an expert on, be it military history or horticulture, call Brad Castleberry at 545-2238.

Army Learning Ctr offers free courses

The Army Learning Center located in Building 2611, Soldiers' Plaza, offers a variety of free courses through computer based instructional system.

Subjects covered include mathematics, professional development, technical, science, military related, personal computer tutorials, computers and data processing, management, preparation for college level exams and preparation for college entrance exams. A complete listing of topics is available at the learning center.

Users can access the system via modem from the work or home 24 hours a day, seven days a week.

All active duty service members, family members, retired military, Army and Air Force Exchange Service, nonappropriated fund personnel, Department of the Army civilians, Reserve and National Guard are authorized use of the Army Learning Center.

The Learning Center hours are 7 a.m. to noon and 1 to 4 p.m. Monday through Friday. The telephone number is 545-1436.

Controlled burning set

Controlled burning of woodland areas will take place Monday through Aug. 13. If weather permits, the following compartments may be affected: D-6, D-10, E-3, E-4, E-5, E-6, I-3, I-4, J-1, K-7, M-7, O-4, W-3, X-1, V-3 and BB-2.

Burning will occur in pine stands within these compartments to enhance endangered species habitat and training areas. People using these areas for recreation must leave before 9:30 a.m. daily.

Training units using compartments next to these areas are reminded to exercise caution while traveling in these areas because of the potential for reduced visibility.

Units using the ranges and training areas are reminded to remove flammable debris, such as pine straw, leaves, grass and trash from around structures in accordance with USAIC Regulation 210-4, Paragraph 5-22, Organizational Maintenance.

For more information, call 544-6206.

Runners have priority during PT hours

Formations and individual runners have priority of movement on Fort Benning during the established physical training hours of 6 to 7:30 a.m. Monday through Friday. Formation running is not authorized on sidewalks throughout the installation. Units must use roadways, and proper safety equipment must be worn and operational.

Individual runners and walkers may use the sidewalks and also are required to wear proper reflective clothing or road guard vests.

Speed limit during PT hours is 15 mph and 10 mph when passing individuals and troop formations.

Bayonet drop box available to customers

For the convenience of Bayonet customers, anyone who needs to turn in stories, film, letters, etc., to The Bayonet may now use a new drop box located in the Information Office, Room 111, Infantry Hall, Building 4.

Material being dropped off should be placed in an envelope with a point of contact and a phone number annotated on the envelope.

Customers can still fax material to The Bayonet at 682-0095, send information through PROFS (ID is Bayonet), mail material to: The Bayonet, Infantry Hall, Room 601, send material through distribution or hand carry it to The Bayonet's office, Room 601, whichever is most convenient.

The deadline is noon Friday for the following week's issue.

Hispanic Heritage Month begins Sept 15

There will be a meeting Tuesday at 10 a.m. in Building 2515. All interested personnel can attend this meeting and bring their ideas or suggestions.

For more information, call Sgt. 1st Class Paul Horton at 544-9656 or 545-6665.

Siren system to be tested first Saturdays

The installation siren system will be tested at noon the first Saturday of each month. Units and activities listed will monitor siren testing and notify the field officer of the day and their staff duty officer at 545-5135 or 545-5245 within 30 minutes after each test and report the operational status of the sirens. Sirens will not be tested in the event of bad weather.

The following is a list of units and activities and their siren locations:

- Infantry Training Brigade — Sand Hill, 12th Street and Scott Avenue
- 3rd Brigade, 24th Infantry Division — Kelley Hill
- 36th Engineer Group — Indianhead Road, 1900 Block
- Ranger Training Brigade — Harmony Church, Hourglass Road

Road closed

Effective immediately, the Old Cusseta Road Highway near Sand Hill will be closed at the reservation boundary until further notice.

Housing sets summer hours

The Directorate of Public Works Housing Division, Furnishing Management Branch, will operate at its summer operating hours through Sept. 29.

The new operating hours are 7 a.m. to 3:30 p.m. Monday through Friday. The office will close for lunch from noon to 12:30 p.m.

For information, call 545-6713.

MP Info Center changes its hours

The Military Police Information Center at the main entrance to Fort Benning has been renovated and now has new hours of operation.

The new hours are Monday through Friday from 8 a.m. to 9 p.m. and Saturday, Sunday and holidays from 9 a.m. to 6 p.m.

For more information, call Sgt. Rachelle Arrington at 545-1146.

Taxi contractor is American Cab Co

The only authorized taxi company to pick up passengers on Fort Benning is American Cab Company.

The company's phone number is 689-6367.

CID requests help finding car thief

Between 12:01 a.m. April 21 and 7 a.m. April 22, someone stole a 1993, teal in color, two-door Pontiac Sunbird, with Tennessee license plate ZCP488, from a carport adjacent to 69-B Dunn Court.

Anyone having information concerning this incident can contact the Military Police at 545-5222 or Special Agent Kelly McCrate, Criminal Investigation Division, at 545-4981 or 545-2414.

The identity of anyone providing information will be kept in the strictest confidence.

CID looking for killer

The U.S. Army Criminal Investigation Command is offering a $1,000 reward concerning the circumstances surrounding the death of Takashi Moore March 2.

Moore was found by a Military Police Patrol at approximately 4:30 a.m. March 2 alongside of Highway 27, adjacent to the 8th Division Road overpass.

Moore had suffered several large abrasions to his upper body and died as a result of massive head injuries.

The reward will be paid to anyone providing information that leads to the apprehension and conviction of the people responsible.

The identity of the person providing information concerning this incident will be held strictly confidential.

If any information can be provided regarding this incident, contact the Fort Benning MP Station at 545-5222 or 545-5223, or Special Agent William W. Tarr, Fort Benning Resident Agency, USACIDC at 545-5272 or 545-3984.

Donovan Library has new hours

The U.S. Army Infantry School Donovan Technical Library located in Infantry Hall, Room 101, is now open Mondays through Thursdays from 7 a.m. to 6 p.m., Fridays from 7 a.m. to 4 p.m., Saturdays from 9 a.m. to 1 p.m. and closed Sundays and holidays.

For more information, call 545-6053 or 545-3390.

MCSS to exchange tight BDU shirts

Army military clothing sales stores will accept exchanges on certain battle dress uniform shirts, following a pattern redesign that causes sleeves to be too tight when rolled.

While the flaw has been corrected for future procurement, soldiers in possession of improperly fitting BDU coats can exchange them, at no cost, until Sept. 30.

Soldiers are encouraged to try on the coat before purchasing, ensuring a comfortable fit when sleeves are rolled, officials said.

Returned coats must be in serviceable condition.

Infantry Chorus needs volunteers

The Fort Benning chorus is looking for any soldier who wishes to volunteer for six months. Soldiers who are selected will be attached to the 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment.

To audition, soldiers must get approval from their chain of command. Vocalists and pianists are needed.

For more information, call 545-4225, 545-4227 or 545-7078.

Survey says veterans hospitals provide majority of care to vets

Department of Veterans Affairs

The Department of Veterans Affairs is announcing the results of its most recent national survey of veterans, which found that VA provides the majority of inpatient and outpatient medical care to veterans who are receiving VA pensions and disability compensation.

Conducted for the department by Klemm Analysis Group Inc. and Westat Inc. under a $2.3 million contract, the National Survey of Veterans is used to gather information on characteristics of veterans who use or do not use VA programs that is unavailable from VA data sources.

The fourth in a series, the survey involved telephone interviews conducted from July 1993 through December 1993 with a sample of 11,645 veterans who were randomly selected from the general population or from VA records.

Additional highlights include:

• Almost 72 percent of veterans who served outside the United States and nearly half of those with overseas service reported that they were exposed to combat.

• Service-Connected Veterans with Disability Ratings of 50 Percent or More: Sixty-four percent who used any inpatient medical facilities in 1992 were treated by VA. Sixty-five percent who used any outpatient facilities in 1992 were treated by VA.

• VA Pension Recipient: Seventy-eight percent of these veterans who used any inpatient medical facilities and 92 percent who used only outpatient medical facilities in 1992 were treated by VA.

• Uninsured Veterans: Forty-six percent of veterans with no health insurance who used any inpatient medical facilities in 1992 were treated by VA.

• Low-Income Veterans: Forty-four percent of veterans with incomes less than $10,000 and 21 percent of veterans with incomes between $10,000 and $20,000 who used any inpatient medical facilities in 1992 were treated by VA.

• Minority Veterans: 41 percent of black, 31 percent of Hispanic and 20 percent of other minority veterans who used any inpatient medical facilities in 1992 were treated by VA.

• Reasons for Choosing VA Health Care: Veterans who chose VA inpatient care in 1992 cited costs (19 percent) and unique services not available elsewhere (18 percent) as the major reason for their choice. Thirty-eight percent of female veterans who chose VA inpatient care cited unique services not available elsewhere as the primary reason for their choice.

• Service-connected Disability Compensation: Veterans who suffered injuries while in the military but who did not apply for disability compensation cited red tape and lack of information (30 percent) and disability not severe enough (21 percent) a reason for not applying.

• Education: Forty-four percent of all veterans said they used one of the GI Bills for education benefits. A higher percentage of Vietnam Era veterans (55 percent) said they used VA education benefit.

• Home Loan Guaranty Program: 86 percent of veterans either presently owned their own home or had previously owned one. More than 40 percent of veterans who had ever owned homes used the VA home loan guaranty program to purchase their homes.

• Awareness of Benefits: Veterans were most aware of education (95 percent), home loan guaranty (90 percent) and life insurance (79 percent) programs. Veterans were less aware of pension benefit (42 percent), adapted automobile and home (46 percent) and vocational rehabilitation (49 percent) programs. Veterans said they received most of their information about VA programs from other veterans (64 percent).

Shalikashvili speaks on media

By Stephen Barrett
American Forces Information Service

The chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff said the military, humanitarian organizations and the press can become a perfect combination in peacekeeping and humanitarian disasters.

However, Gen. John M. Shalikashvili said success would happen only if the three draw on the others' unique strength — not on fears or prejudiced views they sometimes have of each other.

Speaking before the Robert R. McCormick Tribune Foundation at George Washington University in Washington, Shalikashvili explained how the press and world humanitarian groups can work with military resources.

"The media, in a responsible and balanced way, must alert and educate the public and the decision-makers," he said, "then keep all informed of the progress. The humanitarian organizations must provide the real expertise of how to deal with the tough, heart rendering challenges of a Somalia or Rwanda."

Yet, Shalikashvili said, only the U.S. military possesses the resources and the long range communications ability to quickly deal with large-scale tragedies that overwhelm traditional humanitarian organizations. By using resources from all, he said, "these three strange bedfellows can be a very good combination."

Because the press provides immediate coverage of world events, Shalikashvili said, the media is forcing the military to alter its approaches to some peacekeeping missions.

"The press should be free to do its job, facing restrictions only where safety and operational security are truly of concern," he said. "In some operations an all-intrusive press tends to aggravate the natural tensions between these (the press and the military)."

Shalikashvili cited Somalia, where media camera lights affected the Marine Corps night landing at Mogadishu, and Haiti, where the press focused cameras for an airborne assault. The chairman said he feared the thousands of white lights in Port-au-Prince would turn soldiers into "floating ducks."

Yet the chairman also cited cooperation with the media on these deployments. He spoke of agreement between the military and U.S. networks to use night vision devices and delay broadcasting until troops were safely on the ground. "Perhaps we are more tolerant of each other's needs than is generally believed," said Shalikashvili. "But we must continue to work this issue."

Shalikashvili said there is further progress in less-dangerous operations, where there is less tension between the media and the military. "From my experience in the Kurdish operation following the Gulf War, the tensions were practically nonexistent," he said. "We not only were able to give the press total freedom to roam the operations area, we gave them maximum support to get around and be better informed."

Shalikashvili said the result was more factual stories, a better informed public and a better informed Washington. That meant better support for those in the field.

"We used the same model in Rwanda, and once we got on the ground in Haiti," he said. "With very few exceptions, (we received) excellent press, and the operation — and the country — benefited."

The chairman addressed the "Cable News Network effect"— how global journalism influences political leaders into action. "Surely it exists, and we went to Somalia and Rwanda partly because of its magnetic pull," said Shalikashvili. "The world's actions — or inaction — and political leaders' pronouncements are greatly influenced by this effect."

Yet he asked group members to ponder how governments will make choices if those choices are different from those reporters suggest. Shalikashvili admitted not having an answer but hinted decisions won't be as difficult as many imagine. "Governments and publics will become more sophisticated as they become more used to this phenomenon," he said.

Picnic pointers keep summertime safe

Egleston Children's Hospital

Everybody loves a summertime picnic — a chance to get away from it all for a day and still be able to sleep in your own bed at night.

Maryann Johnston, registered nurse, safety promotions coordinator for Egleston Children's Hospital at Emory University, offers these picnic pointers to help keep your children safe the next time you pack up a picnic basket for an outing with family or friends:

Food poisoning

Food poisoning can cause illness or, in extreme cases, death. Symptoms, including diarrhea, abdominal pain, fever, headache and vomiting, can begin within an hour or take up to several hours to develop.

Make sure meat, poultry and frozen foods are kept cold; don't thaw frozen foods at room temperature. Wash your hands — and knives and cutting boards used — after working with meat, poultry or fish and before handling other foods. Make sure meat, poultry and fish are completely cooked. And don't allow food to sit out for more than a brief time in warm weather. Discard foods with an unusual smell.

If you suspect food poisoning, contact the Georgia Poison Center at (404) 616-9000.

Poisonous plants

Some of the most common and colorful outdoor plants are poisonous, such as azaleas, oleander, crocus, narcissus (daffodil), hyacinth, iris and lily. All wild mushrooms should be considered dangerous. Children should learn to identify and avoid poison ivy, poison oak and poison sumac.

Teach your children never to put any part of a plant, flower berry or mushroom into their mouths. If a plant or mushroom poisoning occurs, remove as much as possible from the mouth and contact the Georgia Poison Center for immediate advice.

Location, weather conditions

If going to a remote area, leave word of your location. Listen to weather reports and if conditions right for lightning develop, take shelter in a building, enclosed car (avoid touching any metal in the car) or thick woods. Stay away from isolated trees. Teach children to stay away from water and metal objects during storms.

Teach your child what to do if there is no shelter in a lightning storm: crouch in a low-lying area and minimize contact with the ground. Open fields and parking lots should be avoided.

On hot, humid summer days make sure children drink plenty of water. Children can quickly become dehydrated. Periodically, bring children into a shady area for rest and a drink of water. To avoid painful sunburns, have children wear a hat and T-shirt and limit direct exposure to the sun, especially from 11 a.m. to 3 p.m. Apply a sunscreen with a sun protection factor of at least 15 frequently during the day.

Injuries, insect bites, stings

Take a first aid kit with basic supplies for treating minor injuries and providing basic first aid for more serious injuries until medical help arrives.

To reduce the chances of stings and bites, picnickers should wear shoes and socks and avoid areas that attract bees and other stinging insects, such as garbage cans and areas where food has been left out.

Bright-colored clothing and sweet-smelling colognes and other toiletries should be avoided. Picnickers should be checked at the end of the day for ticks.

To remove a tick, grasp it by the head, as close to the skin as possible, with tweezers and pull it loose. Do not use bare fingers; ticks can transmit disease by mere skin contact. See a doctor if the tick cannot be removed or if the head remains in the skin. Flick a bee stinger off of the skin with a driver's license or credit card instead of pinching the area and trying to pull the stinger out, which pushes more venom into the skin.

Water safety

Never leave your child unsupervised near water. A child can drown in even a small amount of water from a trickling stream. Make sure everyone in the group wears Coast-Guard-approved personal floatation devices while boating or rafting. And if your picnic site is near water, require young nonswimmers to wear PFDs continuously throughout the day.

Battle of the Bands

Dan Porter of the band Quick Fix rocks the crowd with "Born to be Wild" during the Battle of the Bands Sunday at the Afterhours club. Quick Fix won the competition and will go on to represent Fort Benning at the All-Army Battle of the Bands at Fort Belvoir, Va., in September.

Screaming Eagles rendezvous at Benning

By Ruth J. Spaller
USAIC Public Affairs Office

About 250 members of the 101st Airborne Division Association will visit Fort Benning today as part of the association's 50th reunion.

More than 800 members of the association are expected to attend the reunion, which is being hosted by the Georgia chapter of the association at the Columbus Iron Works Convention and Trade Center.

Events started Wednesday and will conclude Saturday with a golden anniversary dinner, where Commanding General Maj. Gen. John W. Hendrix will be the guest speaker.

Maj. Gen. John M. Keane, current commander of the 101st Airborne Division (Air Assault), will also attend the dinner.

This morning, veterans of the "Screaming Eagle" division will attend an "Airborne in Action" demonstration at Eubanks Field highlighting basic parachuting skills, and the graduation of Airborne School Class 34-95.

Brig. Gen. Robert T. Clark, who has served in the division six of the last eight years — as both a battalion and brigade level commander and most recently as division chief of staff — will welcome the group.

Many association members are veterans of World War II and led the air assault — by parachute and glider — into Normandy the night before D-Day.

The division dropped into Holland in one of the largest airborne invasions ever attempted and held fast at Bastogne to stop the German breakthrough — the Battle of the Bulge.

A large contingent are veterans of the Vietnam War, where they served in the 101st Airborne Division at Hamburger Hill, Dak To and during the Tet Offensive without ever being defeated in battle.

Today, the 101st Airborne Division has more than 6,500 active duty members in all 50 states and seven foreign countries. More than 1,000 members are active duty 101st Airborne Division (Air Assault) soldiers stationed at Fort Campbell, Ky.

Many active duty members are veterans of Operations Desert Shield and Storm in Saudi Arabia, United Nations Operations in Somalia II, Operation Uphold Democracy in Haiti and Operation Safe Passage.

When the 101st was first activated in August 1942, Maj. Gen. William C. Lee, the unit's first commander, said "The 101st ... has no history, but it has a rendezvous with destiny."

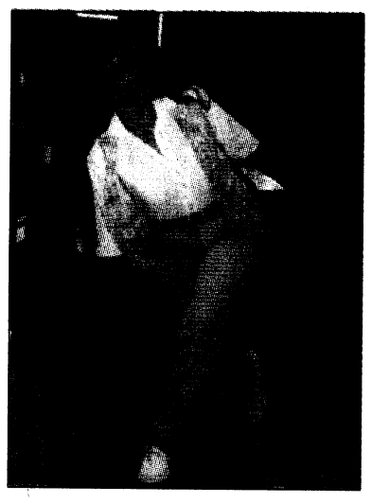
"Time and time again," reads the combat history of the unit, "101st Airborne Division" by Robert Jones, "the 101st has kept that rendezvous and, in so doing, has acquired a proud history."

Bowler strikes her way to top

By Lisa M. Hibbert
Bayonet staff writer

Debbie L. Kearns, a Department of Defense employee in the special projects section, was the top-singles bowler in the recent Training and Doctrine Command telegraphic bowling competition.

Participants in the tournament first went to the Main Post Bowling Center and sent their scores to TRADOC. They were then selected to compete in the tournament.



"The competition took place April 25 through the 27," Kearns said. "Eighteen games were played during the three days: three singles, six doubles and nine team. I won in the singles (female) competition with an overall score of 664."

Winners were selected from each category and the overall high game scorer.

"It took the participants so long (three months) to find out if they had won because they had to wait for TRADOC to calculate the scores," said Daisy Arrington, operations assistant for the Main Post Bowling Center. "On July 21, Woodrena Curtis (TRADOC sports director) came from Virginia to present the awards."

Out of the 12 players, six male and six female, only two won awards. Spc. Jana Carter, 2nd Mobile Army Surgical Hospital, came in second in the singles female category.

Kearns, who competed in her first bowling tournament seven years ago, has been bowling for nearly 20 years, with 10 of them in Columbus. She plans to compete in the Women's' National (bowling) tournament in Buffalo, N.Y., next year.

Phillip Liberado, the oldest Defense Commissary Agency employee in the world, checks Adeline Davis' identification card at the Fort Benning Commissary. The 80-year-old has been working at the Commissary since 1973.

Oldest employee boasts 6 decades

By Brian R. Voller
Bayonet staff writer

He's seen World War II, Korea, Vietnam and so many military identification cards you probably couldn't count all of them.

His name is Phillip Liberado. The 80-year-old Commissary ID card checker is the oldest Defense Commissary Agency employee in the world.

."I joined the Army National Guard in 1938," Liberado said. "I stayed there until 1941 when the war broke out and I went active duty.

"I got out for a short time after my tour in the war, and then I re-enlisted in 1943."

Liberado went on to serve during the Korean war, the Cuban Missile Crisis and the Vietnam War. His 28-year military career has included several different jobs.

He initially came into the Army as a member of the infantry. From there he went on to be a mess steward and an anti-aircraft supply clerk. He's also worked with headquarters, was a status board writer (where he had to learn to write backwards behind a transparent board so the people in front of the board could read it) and had a brief tour with military intelligence.

It was during the Vietnam War that Liberado's military career came to an end on Labor Day 1969.

As a sergeant first class at the age of 54, Liberado was hit by shrapnel that permanently damaged his hearing.

"I was basically forced out of the military because of my injury," Liberado said. "In 1972, it was almost unheard of — no, it was totally unheard of — to fit military people with hearing aids. Because my hearing was no longer at a suitable level for the Army, I had to retire."

Liberado said he has no regrets about his time in the military.

"I feel pretty good about the time I served," Liberado said. "I'd go back in right now if I could. I would have liked to finish 30 years of service, but, unfortunately, I couldn't."

ON POST

Six Flags trip — The Better Opportunities for Single soldiers organizations from Fort McClellan, Fort Rucker, Ala. and Fort Benning are sponsoring a trip to Six Flags Saturday.

The trip is open to all soldiers and civilians and will be considered the park's "guests of honor."

The cost is $24.50 and includes parking, admission, an all-you-can-eat dinner and disc jockey party. For tickets or more information, contact your B.O.S.S. unit representative.

Wives' club — The International Wives Club invites interested persons to come and visit every first Tuesday of the month at Building 2462, Collins Loop, Soldiers' Plaza, for coffee, cake and info. For more information, call Olga Kelly at 687-6471 or Andrea Pitts at 687-6937.

Explorer Scout Program — Law Enforcement Post 988 sponsored by the Military Police Activity is looking for more members. If you know of a youth (boys or girls) interested in a law enforcement career, or just want to learn more about law enforcement, call Staff Sgt. Donnie Lucas at 545-1146. This program is open to anyone on or off post. Adult assistant leaders are welcome.

Register for English class at Troy State — A special English 102 composition course will be offered at Troy State University on Fort Benning next quarter. The minimum number of students needed is 12. All students interested in taking this course must take a pretest and register by Monday.

For more information, call the college's undergraduate office at 689-4709.

Watch found — A watch was found recently in the east parking lot of Infantry Hall, Building 4.

For more information, call Spc. Carl Box at 545-2218 or come by Room 111 in Infantry Hall.

Boy Scouts need volunteers — The Fort Benning/Pataula District Boy Scouts of America experienced a loss of youth membership and adult volunteer leaders. Numerous positions are available. Some of these positions are assistant cubmasters and scoutmasters, district committee members in training, programs, activities, publicity, camping and "at large" members who serve to coordinate specific events such as Christmas Tree sales, Fishing Rodeo or Fall Campree.

If interested in volunteering, call Lt. Col. Mark S. Cloth at 544-3901 or 682-4440. For detailed information about scouting activities, contact the district executive, Frank Eveans, at 327-2634.

Columbian cadets jump into counternarcotics training

By Judith Ginder
School of the Americas

Just as this country's young ROTC cadets spend the summer months sweating it out at camp to gain leadership skills, cadets of the Colombian police academies are spending their summer doing the same at the School of the Americas.

Students of the Cadet Counternarcotics Orientation Course arrived at SOA July 17. The school's organizational day was the same day, so the students were able to enjoy the barbecue and meet new people in this, their introduction to the United States.

Then, it was to work. During the first week of the course, students were assigned to quarters, began a rigorous physical training schedule and were issued field gear for their four-week stay. They learned the basics in land navigation and terrain association and began human rights classes.

There are almost half a dozen women in the class of about 40 students.

"The female students in the course are doing quite well," said Staff Sgt. Jose Quinones, special operations instructor.

The cadets are third- and fourth-year students at the national police academy in Colombia and will be commissioned as second lieutenants upon their graduation from their academy in Colombia.

One cadet in the course had a hopeful look in her eye as she enthusiastically spoke of the war on drugs in her country.

"I feel that if we work with the poorer communities in our cities, we can educate them so that they and their children will be better informed," said Alma Irayda Vega, a 22-year-old cadet.

"By coming to the School of the Americas, we are able to participate in programs that are not available in our country. We can learn the skills that we need to help these people," she said.

Upcoming training in the course includes rappelling, boat operations, urban terrain operations and fast-roping.

HOLA welcomes new families

By Judith Ginder
School of the Americas

HOLA means hello in Spanish, and this group's volunteers help School of the Americas students, guest instructors and families feel at home.

Adjusting to a new environment isn't easy. You've got to find a new home, have the utilities turned on, get the children into school, not to mention try to find your way around in a new city. Imagine, for a moment, how tough that would be if this new place were in another country. Not only do you not speak the language, but you also don't know anyone to help you find your way.

At the School of the Americas, some courses last an entire year, and the students usually bring their families. And Latin American guest instructors come here with their families for two years.

But these visitors aren't alone. There's a group that helps ease their way — Hosts of Latin America.

HOLA, which means hello in Spanish, is a group of volunteers whose main purpose is to welcome guest instructors, students and their families to SOA and to the United States.

"Volunteer sponsors are matched with either a student or an instructor," said Cecilia Alexander, HOLA coordinator. "HOLA hosts a getting-acquainted type of open house for the initial meeting of the two groups."

Alexander said one of the biggest benefits of HOLA is that sponsors show the Latin Americans what normal, everyday life is like in the United States.

"We encourage our sponsors not to put on a big show with parties and lavish meals just to impress their guests," Alexander said. "The whole point of the program is to welcome the families."

Not only is the sponsor program a learning experience for the Latin American families assigned at SOA, but also for the sponsoring American families as well, she said. You don't have to speak Spanish to become an HOLA sponsor since some of the students and guest instructors do speak English, Alexander said. However, she did say being able to speak some Spanish is helpful.

HOLA is looking for more volunteer hosts. For more information, contact Alexander at 545-1285.

EMPLOYEE: ID card checker continues decades of service

After his tour in Vietnam, Liberado made his way back to Columbus and the Commissary where he has been ever since.

He now wears hearing aids as a reminder of the purple heart pin he wears on his hat as he checks ID cards every day.

"I went to work for the Commissary March 19, 1973," Liberado said. "I had prior service in commissaries when they used to be run by the military. I've done everything from the vegetables to stocking to working in the warehouse."

Liberado made the move to ID card checker last year, and he said he takes this job as seriously as any other job he's ever had.

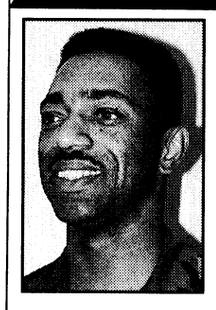
"It's my job to check every ID of every person who comes in here," Liberado said. "I get to know quite a few of the people but I still have to check their IDs. If I make an exception for one person then the next person is going to expect me to make an exception for them too."

Ann Peterman, customer service assistant supervisor, said she's never had an employee as reliable as Liberado.

"I think it's wonderful that he's 80 years old and he still wants to work," Peterman said. "He shows up for work a half hour early everyday, and I never have any problems with the way he does his job."

Robert Carter, assistant grocery manager, said he's not only worked with Liberado, but he also lived across the street from him for 12 years.

"He's a good person to work with and to live by," Carter said. "He does his job, and he never complains. I know he's a good person, because I lived by him and never had any problems."



Liberado said he's not the only person in his family who's worked long past the normal age of retirement.

His wife, Mildred, who is 76 years old, works part time as a cashier in the book store at Columbus College.

Liberado said he still plans to keep working at the Commissary for a number of years.

"I didn't plan on working at the Commissary when I retired from the Army," Liberado said. "Now I tell people I plan to keep working until I get old."

A PERSONAL LOOK

Name: Phillip Liberado

Title: Post Commissary ID card Checker

Education: Completed eighth grade. Received General Equivalency Diploma through the Army.

Family: Wife: Mildred, Son: Phillip, Daughters: Karen, Virginia and Kathy.

Previous position: Retired sergeant first class

Professional vision: To keep on working as long as I stay healthy and active.

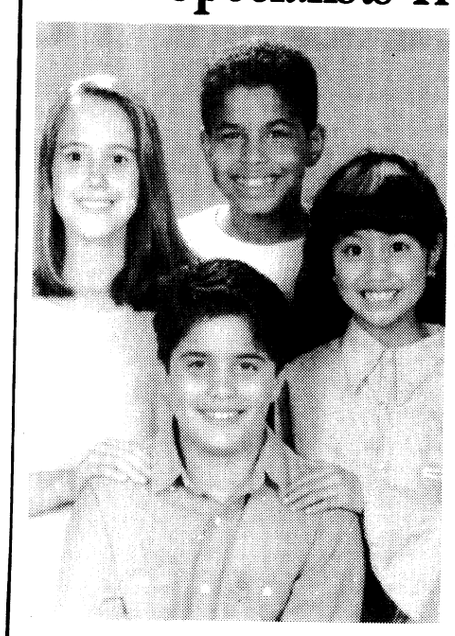
Uncollected financial aid available

National Academic Funding Administration



With confusion over federal student grant approvals, direct government student loans and changes in college financial aid guidelines, many students are finding it difficult to identify and understand their financial aid options.

Yet unknown to most people, there are more than 375,000 scholarship and grant sources available that do not have to be paid back. Eighty percent of these scholarships do not depend on family need or exceptional grades but are awarded based on factors such as the student's interests, hobbies, academic focus, age, heritage or parent's work or military service.

Now, through the assistance of the National Academic Funding Administration, an expanded publication for 1995-96 is available that spells out the changes and guidelines for financial aid.

For information on how to receive academic funding and scholarships, send a No. 10 self-addressed, double-stamped business envelope plus $2 to cover handling to NAFA, 815 Middle St., Suite 1100, Portsmouth, N.H. 03801.

Estate planning saves trouble, taxes

Georgia Society of Certified Public Accountants Inc.

Concerned about the well-being of your family? The Georgia Society of CPAs explains that effective estate planning can ensure your children are properly cared for, that legal costs of administering your wishes are minimized and your estate — the property you have accumulated over your lifetime — is not subject to unnecessary or exorbitant taxes.

The cornerstone of any estate plan

A will is the cornerstone of any estate plan. It outlines who will receive your property at your death and also names an executor to administer your estate. Should you die without a will, there is no guarantee that your wishes will be carried out. The laws of your state will determine how your estate is to be divided among your surviving relatives. If you have no close relatives, your assets automatically will go to the state.

Naming a guardian

If you have minor children, your will should name a guardian to care for them in the event you and your spouse both die. If you have not named a guardian in your will, the courts will appoint someone to care for your children.

In the eyes of the law, there are two kinds of guardianships: a guardian who handles the children's day-to-day upbringing and one who manages whatever money or property you've left to them. While it may seem easiest to have one guardian handle both responsibilities, this may not always be wise. For example, if a person is well-suited to raising your children, but not particularly adept at managing finances, you should consider naming a person with more financial know-how to oversee the children's assets in cooperation with the other guardian.

The role of living trusts

In general terms, a trust is a separate legal entity into which a person transfers property for his or her benefit or for the benefit of others (beneficiaries). In recent years, many people have started to utilize living trusts. These trusts, which can be established and executed during your lifetime, provide a means for you to distribute property to your heirs. Living trusts enable you to avoid probate (the process and costs associated with carrying out the terms of your will), but do not protect your assets from estate taxes.

Minimizing estate taxes

Generally, you may leave up to $600,000 in assets to your heirs free of federal estate taxes. The $600,000 is called the credit equivalent amount. The federal government collects estate taxes ranging from 37 cents to 55 cents on every dollar over this amount. In addition, many states levy death taxes. To minimize the tax bite on your estate, CPAs recommend that you estimate the fair market value of your property. If you think your estate will top $600,000 at the time of your death, it may be wise to begin transferring property out of your estate. An easy way to diminish the size of your estate is to give away some assets. Uncle Sam allows each person to make a gift of up to $10,000 per year (or $20,000 a year for couples) to as many people as desired without incurring taxes.

Another way to transfer assets out of your estate is through an irrevocable trust. However, since you lose all control over the trust's assets, only those individuals who are certain they have sufficient funds to maintain a comfortable lifestyle should consider this type of trust. A gift tax return must be filed by the grantor for the fair market value of the assets transferred to the trust.

Be aware that the estate tax marital deduction allows husbands and wives to leave all their assets to each other without triggering estate taxes. However, failing to use the full credit equivalent amount of $600,000 means more taxes may be owed on the second estate. It's important to review how assets are owned to make sure each spouse makes maximum use of the $600,000 credit equivalent.

Living wills provide piece of mind

As part of the estate planning process, it also may be wise to prepare a living will. A living will indicates whether or not you want to receive life-sustaining treatment in the event you become terminally ill. In the absence of a living will, the presumption is that you want treatment to continue indefinitely.

Keep in mind that wills and estate plans are not once-in-a-lifetime documents. CPAs emphasize that changing circumstances and new laws make it essential to review your estate plan every few years.

Hot days — don't leave kids in car

Georgia Department of Human Resources

Before you leave your children in the car to dash into the post office or grocery store this summer, consider this:

In a matter of minutes, the temperature in your car could top 160 degrees on a hot and humid day — even with the windows partially open. That's why public health officials are cautioning parents against leaving children in automobiles for any amount of time.

Heat stroke, life-threatening emergency, can occur in temperatures as low as 80 degrees, depending on the humidity. When temperatures rise, people can lose their ability to cool themselves.

Body temperatures higher than 105 degrees can cause permanent damage or even death.

"Children are at a greater risk for heat stroke because they don't have the reserves that we adults do," says Jim Drinnon, chief of the Division of Public Health's Environmental Health Section. "They don't have as much fluids, and younger children don't know how to protect themselves, especially if they're locked in the car."

Do not leave children unattended in the car for any length of time, says Drinnon. Temperatures in cars can reach life-threatening levels in the time it takes to buy a loaf of bread. If you must take your children shopping with you, bring them into the store with you.

Cars: Test them out before you buy

AAA Auto Club South

Be selective — with so many makes and models available, you shouldn't have any problem finding a car that's right for you

With the average cost of a car hovering at around $18,000, it's hard to believe anyone would buy a car without driving it. Yet statistics show only one in four people test-drive a car before buying it. This can lead to some big surprises once the car is at home.

"Buying a new car is not something you should do quickly. It takes patience and planning, " said Craig Yates, manager of AAA Auto Club South's Car Buying Service. "Many people mistakenly believe that if you test-drive a car, you are obligated to buy it. That's not true. "

Here are some tips from AAA that may help you focus your search and make the car buying process easier:

• Shopping. Know what you want before you shop. Determine your price range and make a list of features you want. Be selective — with so many makes and models available, you shouldn't have any problem finding a car that's right for you.

• Interior. The only way to determine a car's comfort is for you to sit in it. The seat should adjust so you feel comfortable in the driving position while giving you enough support. You should also be able to read gauges from the seat and reach controls and instruments without any trouble. Since blind spots are a major cause of accidents, be sure you can see clearly out of the vehicle. If you can't see your surroundings, you won't feel comfortable driving the car.

• Powertrain. Check the idle quality. A new car should idle smoothly and quietly, not shaky. To test this, drop the car into gear. The engine should remain calm and quiet. Once on the road, accelerate briskly. Notice the engine's power and how it acts in conjunction with the transmission. There should be harmony between the two, and power should flow smoothly from one gear to the next. If there is not enough power for your driving habits, you might want to check out an optional engine or another car.

• Road Manners. Do you like how the car rides and handles? If not, look into different suspension packages offered on the same model.

• Brakes. If you can't accelerate past trouble or steer around it, you'll need to stop short of it. Test the brakes. Do you like the feel and power? To test the anti-lock feature, find an abandoned stretch of road, bring the car up to speed and hit the brake pedal. You should feel the brake pedal pulse, and the car should stop quickly.

"You'll be driving the car you choose for a long time," Yates said. "Any surprises it has to offer should be apparent on the test drive — before you sign on the dotted line. "

Catholics view saints as models for living

By Phil Reilly
USAIC Chaplain Office

One of the myths about Catholics is that they worship saints. The Catholic Church teaches the first commandment — to worship God and no false gods.

Saints are viewed as models to be imitated in living our lives similar to the way some ball players are viewed as models.

Many saints have a "feast day" that are celebrated during the liturgical year. The feast day is usually their day of birth or death.

During the month of August, Catholics celebrate the feasts of several saints. For example, today is the feast day of St. John Marie Vianney, who was born in Dandilly, France. At age 18 he entered the seminary where he struggled academically. He was ordained to the priesthood in 1815 and was assigned as the parish priest of Ars, a remote town of 230 people.

When he had personally visited every household under his care and provided a regular catechism class for the children, he set to work in earnest to make a real conversion of Ars by the confessional and by laboriously and carefully prepared sermons, which he delivered naturally but not quietly. He waged relentless wars on blasphemy, profanity and obscenity and was not afraid to utter from the pulpit the words and expressions that offended God, so there should be no mistake what he was talking about.

In 1824, he opened a free school for girls from which sprang the famous institution of La Providence, a shelter for orphans and other homeless or deserted children. One of the astonishing circumstances of his incumbency at Ars was its becoming a place of pilgrimage to himself. People from afar began to consult him and from 1830 to 1845 daily visitors averaged over 300. For him, this meant not less than 11 or 12 hours in the confessional every day in the winter and up to 16 hours in the summer.

From 1858 to 1859 more than 100,000 pilgrims visited Ars. Vianney was growing old, and the strain was too much for him. He died Aug. 4, 1859. He was canonized by Pope Pius XI in 1925, who also made him principal patron saint of the parish clergy throughout the world in 1929.

Some other feast days during the month of August are:

Tuesday — St. Dominic
Thursday — St. Laurence
Aug. 11 — St. Clare (of Assisi)
Aug. 15 — Assumption of Mary
Aug. 18 — St. Helen
Aug. 20 — St. Bernard of Clairvaux
Aug. 23 — St. Rose of Lima
Aug. 28 — St. Augustine

Day of mourning begins sundown Sat

By Mark A. Zerger
2nd Battalion, 54th Infantry, Infantry Training Brigade

The official holy obligation day of mourning for the Jewish faith is Tisha B'av or the ninth day of the Hebrew month of Av, which begins at sundown Saturday and concludes at sundown Sunday.

Jewish soldiers and family members will observe this day through fasting and attending regularly scheduled synagogue services. The Talmud tells us that a series of disasters occurred on this date.

On the ninth of Av it was decreed that the children of Israel, after the Exodus from Egypt, should not enter the promised land; the first and the second temples were destroyed; Betar, the last stronghold of the leaders of the Bar Kokhba war, was captured; and one year later the Roman emperor Hadrian declared this area off limits to Jewish people. In addition, the expulsion of the Jews from Spain in 1492 is said to have occurred on the ninth of Av.

The ninth of Av has become a symbol for all the persecutions and calamities that have befallen the Jewish people and for the loss of national independence and all their sufferings that occurred during their exile.

reflections

Mourning is an extremely important part of life. The great God of heaven created us with this important need so that we can receive relief and healing during times of loss and grief.

I'm reminded of Psalm 23:4, which could describe a period of mourning: "Even though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I fear no evil; for thou art with me; thy rod and thy staff, they comfort me." (NASB).

Two important aspects are mentioned here that can help us through a period of mourning. The pronoun "I" speaks to our own vulnerability. No one can mourn for us. We must experience it for ourselves. No one can escape it. Everyone from King David all the way down to someone like me is vulnerable to it.

All it takes is the loss of a loved one, the break-up of a close relationship or the loss of support systems. This is why we need each other. We need friends and community to walk with us and support us, fellow human beings who have felt the same kind of pain.

Secondly, God's presence is pictured here. King David said, "For thou art with me." David knew the importance of God's strength to undergird him. I'm reminded of the poem, "Footprints," where the author envisions two sets of footprints along the pathway of life. One set represents hers and the other set represents those of the Lord.

The author recognized that during particularly hard times in her life there was only one set of footprints. She thus questioned the Lord and said, "Why did you not walk with me during those terrible times?" The Lord responded, "My dear child, that one set of footprints was mine. For you see, I carried you in my strong loving arms when you were too weak to go on."

As our Fort Benning Jewish community pauses to remember its own history of mourning through observing Tisha B'av, let people of all faiths everywhere be reminded of their own vulnerability to loss and grief and of their need for each other, community and most importantly, God.

Maybe you are experiencing a period of mourning in your life. Remember that you are not alone. Your chaplain and Fort Benning chapel community are here to help you and pray for you, not only in days of mourning but also in days of joy.

1. After Joshua had destroyed Ai, and the news of the destruction spread, who came to the Israelites desiring to make peace?
2. What impression did they hope to make on the Israelites upon their arrival?
3. How did they do this?
4. What did these Gibeonites want from Joshua?
5. What did the Israelites do regarding the Gibeonites?
6. After the Israelites learned that the Gibeonites were not from a far country, and that the Gibeonites had deceived them, what action did they take?
7. Why did the Israelites not destroy the Gibeonites after they learned the truth about who the Gibeonites were?
8. What action did the king of Jerusalem take when he learned about this treaty?
9. What was the outcome of this war?
10. What obvious assistance did God provide during this battle?

Answers:

1. The inhabitants of Gibeon
2. That they were from a far country
3. They wore worn clothes and brought only possessions that were old, worn and patched.
4. A treaty
5. Without consulting God, they made a treaty with them.
6. The Israelites made the Gibeonites slaves — hewers of wood and drawers of water.
7. Because they had already made the treaty with them
8. He invited four other kings to join him in a war against the Gibeonites.
9. The Israelites with God's support joined the Gibeonites, and they were victorious.
10. He made the sun to stand still and sent hail stones upon the enemy. More of the enemy were killed by hail than by the Israelites.

Post skeet range changes hours of operation

Brian R. Voller

Michael Detoy fires at a clay target as Justin Hensel scores and releases the clay target at the new skeet range.

By Brian R. Voller
Bayonet staff writer

The Fort Benning Skeet Shooting Range, located at Hook Range, will begin its new operating hours 9 a.m. to 2 p.m. Saturdays and Sundays.

The Commanding General, Maj. Gen. John W. Hendrix, is supporting the range because he said he wants a place for the soldiers to be able to shoot and have fun.

"Most ranges offer competitions and other type tournaments," Hendrix said. "All I'm concerned with is having a place I can come and shoot at on the weekends and have a little fun.

"Also, I want a place for the soldiers to go so they can relax and enjoy themselves."

There are three different types of firing done with clay targets. They are skeet shooting, trap shooting and sporting clays.

Skeet shooting involves firing from a fixed position and shooting at the clay discs as they are released. Generally, the discs are released from the same point every time.

Trap shooting involves firing from behind a line at different clay discs. The further the line moves back the more difficult it becomes with the point totals increasing as you move.

Sporting clays are designed to simulate different kinds of hunting situations. The position you fire at and the way the clay targets are released are designed to simulate animals that are commonly hunted such as ducks and rabbits.

The range is strictly firing skeet right now; but, if demand is good enough, expanding to other kinds of sport shooting will be considered, said Timothy P. Brown, manager of outdoor recreation.

Brown also said if the popularity of the range increases with time, outdoor recreation will consider holding sponsored firing competitions for the military and surrounding competitors.

Spc. Michael J. Detoy, Headquarters, and Headquarters Company 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment, who fired skeet for the first time on the range, said he liked the way the range was run.

"I usually hunt or shoot sporting clays when I do go out and fire," Detoy said. "This range is nice, it looks good and it's a good time."

The range is open to all military personnel and their families, Department of the Army civilians and bonafide house guests, said Thomas W. Mull, chief of the Community Recreation Division.

"We require some form of ID in order to fire," Mull said. "Our basic plan is for the soldiers and their families, but guests are welcome. We don't want just anybody to come here and want to shoot; we're dealing with dangerous equipment, and we have to be careful."

Brown said he believes the first day's attendance is a very positive sign for a good future.

"With this being the first day I'm really happy," said Brown. "The attendance is good, especially with it being so hot. Hopefully as the word spreads we can get more people to participate."

The cost is $3 per round for 25 clays if you bring your own weapon and ammo; the cost is $8 per round for the range to provide you the weapon and ammunition.

MEDDAC steals volleyball tournament

By Brian R. Voller
Bayonet staff writer

The team from U.S. Army Medical Department Activity showed a never-say-die attitude when it came from out of the loser bracket to beat Headquarters and Headquarters Battery, 4th Battalion, 41st Field Artillery, and take the U.S. Army Infantry Center Volleyball Tournament July 25 at Santiago Fitness Center.

MEDDAC lost early in the double elimination tournament to the team from 1st Battalion, 19th Infantry Division,. but they did not give up and battled back from the early set back.

"The team wouldn't give up," Kris Johnson, team coach and captain said. "They played tough, they played together and they really got the job done."

MEDDAC continued through the loser bracket where they faced the only team that beat them once again in the playoff finals.

This time they beat 1/19th and secured themselves a slot in the championship game.

Their opponents in the championship, HHB 4/41st, had made a clean sweep of the teams they'd played up to the championship.

The first three games of the match were tight with HHB winning the first 15-11, but MEDDAC battled back, winning the next two games 15-13 and 15-9.

Because MEDDAC came from the loser bracket and beat HHB in the first round of the championship, another game was necessary.

The next three games began on a less competitive note with MEDDAC slamming HHB 4/41 15-5. But, not willing to give up, HHB returned to play in the fifth game winning a long-fought battle 15-12.

The final game of the second match started with HHB playing like a team possessed and driving home two early kills, but again MEDDAC came back by capitalizing on simple mistakes made by HHB.

MEDDAC racked up points winning long-winded volleys and eventually took home the championship 15-10 in the final game.

HHB team captain Jeff St. John said his team played well but the silly mistakes eventually brought them under.

"We did well considering we threw a team together just two weeks before the tournament," St. John said. "We started out good, but we couldn't stop the simple mistakes."

The team from MEDDAC took the runner up in last year's tournament, losing to the School of the Americas. Johnson said this team won the championship thanks to individual play of Leighann Haines, co-captain.

"The serving and the setting by Leighann is what won us the game," Johnson said. "She went out there and gave 100 percent every game we played."

11th Inf defeats 104th, walks away with softball championship

By Brian R. Voller
Bayonet staff writer

The 11th Infantry Regiment topped off its one-loss season by defeating the 104th Transportation Company 9-7 in seven innings July 26 at Gowdy Field.

The game began with the 11th trailing the 104th through the first two innings of the ball game. Two quick points in the first inning and an in-the-park home run by Lenardo Givens in the second put the 104th in the drivers seat.

The crowd was also treated to a defensive show put on by the 104th with strong infield play at all three bases. The 11th was shut down with no runs coming home until the third inning.

In the bottom of the third inning the rain began to fall and the 11th turned on the offense. Keith Lynch, Hugh Hardin, Jimmy Armstrong and Scott Johnson all trotted across home plate to put the 11th on top 4-3.

Not willing to fall to defeat that easily, the 104th answered the challenges of the 11th by putting themselves up 6-4 in the top of the fourth.

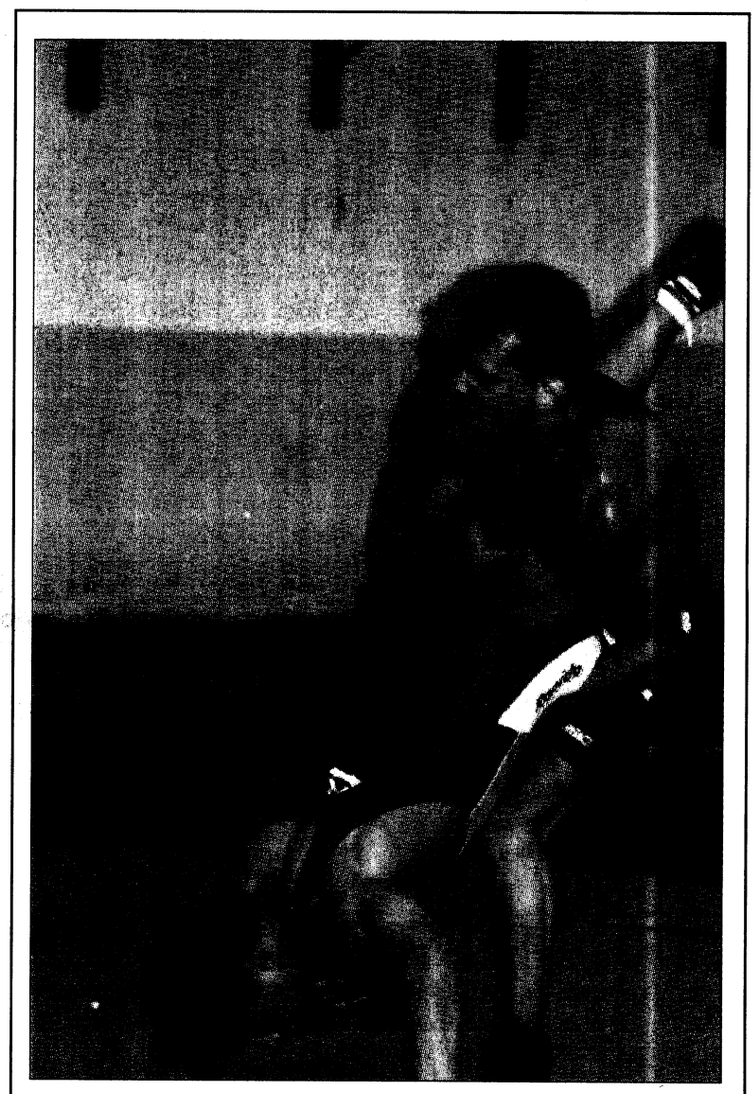
But the rest of the game belonged to the 11th. They scored five runs in the fifth inning, and it was all they needed to become the USAIC Softball Tournament Champions.

"Our team played consistent ball the whole season," said Paul Warren, coach of the 11th. "We played smart and we played with power. No one on the team was ever out of position."

Armstrong, whom Warren considered the team leader, said the team had a good season and there were some key individuals who added to the team's success.

"Johnson, who played second base, is an excellent ball player," Armstrong said. "Also, Warren put in a lot of long hours to help us win, but the team as a whole did an excellent job and they deserve the championship."

Christopher Hallenbeck, 104th team captain, said his team had really good season and that sometimes good things come from losing.



"This team had no real stars on it because we all played as a team and worked hard to get were we are," Hallenbeck said. "During the tournament we really came together as a team and I think it's made us all closer.

"Sometimes it takes something like a loss to make a team stronger."

Jared Strickland, first base and the 104th's extra player (the team's extra fielder) said he believes the trophy they received is something more than just winning.

"When you play, it's not always about winning the championship," Strickland said.

The 104th said it would like to dedicate its second place trophy to Command Sgt. Maj. Clarence Wood, 13th Corps Support Battalion command sergeant major, and his family.

AMU soldier blows away shooters in NY

By Deana Kussman
USAMU Public Affairs Office

A U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit soldier won the U.S. Practical Shooters Association Area 7 Action Shooting Championships last week in Long Island, N.Y., leading the second-place finisher by 45 points.

Capt. Gregory Way, in his first season as a shooter on the USAMU's Action Shooting Team, beat more than 175 competitors in the match that drew the East Coast's best marksmen.

"It's a big match," Way said. "I'm definitely feeling pretty good."

In action shooting matches, each competitor shoots a variety of events, more predominantly timed field courses involving many different movements, hitting designated targets while avoiding those labeled "no shoots." The competitor must shoot at paper targets at least twice and steel targets at least once until the target is hit. Each round must be fired while standing within a box or station drawn on the ground.

Each stage at the Area 7 Championships had from 18 to 30 rounds, each with a different scenario or obstacles, Way said. In a 20-shot field course, Way began shooting targets to both his left and right and then shot through various wall portals at steel and paper targets around the outdoor course. The last obstacle in the course was a ladder against a wall, which Way had to climb in order to shoot four targets on the far side.

"Any time you take more than the recommended number of shots per course it obviously takes more time and lowers your score," Way said. Way shot the course with the minimum of 20 rounds.

This championship, one of eight area championships, follows Way's title as champion at the recent Kentucky State Invitational and a fifth place at the North American Championships.

"I think I'm progressing really fast," Way said. "I feel like I haven't even peaked yet. I've still got a lot of room for improvement."

Way, who has been with the USAMU for a year, began shooting as a hobby in 1985. Before his assignment to the USAMU, he was stationed with the 75th Ranger Regiment at Fort Lewis, Wash.

Way credits his wife as being the most influential on his career.

"Lani has continually supported me during the past 12 years," Way said.

After a few weeks of training, Way will join his Action Shooting teammates at the Georgia State Championships, followed immediately by the European Championships in Sweden.

Benning youth compete in Georgia Games

By John W. Peeler
Special to The Bayonet

The Fort Benning Sudden Double Impact Tae Kwon Do, headed by chief instructor Felix Devilla, sent nine students to this year's Georgia Games to compete with about 220 competitors from Georgia

The team brought home five Gold and six Silver Medals in sparring and forms competition.

The Georgia Games conducted its opening ceremony with the "Lighting the Torch for Tomorrow" July 21 in Atlanta's Georgia Dome with events in 33 sports.

This year's games were a prelude to the Olympics to be conducted in Atlanta next year.

Tae-Kwon-Do is scheduled to become an official part of the Olympics in the year 2000.

Competition in tae-kwon-do was conducted July 23 in the Callaway Student Athletic Complex at Georgia Tech in Atlanta.

Fort Benning students winning medals at the games were:

Women's Black Belt Lightweight Division: Arlene Baldwin (Gold in sparring);

Men's Red Belt Lightweight Division: Charles Lewis (Gold in sparring)

Boys' Blue Belt (6- to 8-year-old) Matthew Monroe (Silver in Sparring)

Girls' Yellow Belt (11- to 12 - year-old): Dorothea Dorsey (Gold in Sparring and Silver in forms)

Boys' Yellow Belt (9- to 10-year-old): Tremon Thornton (Gold in sparring and Silver in forms)

Boys' Yellow Belt (11- to 12-year-old): Michael Sanderson (Gold in sparring);

Boys' Yellow Belt (9- to 10-year-old): Luis Rodriguez (Silver in Sparring)

Boys' Yellow Belt (6- to 8-year-old): John Peeler (Silver in sparring and Silver in forms).

When asked about the success of the school at this and previous tournaments, instructor Charles Lewis said, "the school's success is attributable to the students' hard work, dedication to the sport, and application of the five basic principles or tenets (courtesy, integrity, perseverance, self control and indom-itable spirit) of Tae-Kwon-Do."

Luis Rodriguez (boys) and Julia Young (girls) are Georgia State Sparring champions in the yellow belt division and Julia Young is the Georgia state forms champion, Yellow Belt Division (girls).

Arlene Baldwin also placed second in the State Championships Women's Black Belt Lightweight Division in sparring and John Peeler Jr. placed third in the State Championships in forms.

Wildlife refuge sets 95-96 hunting seasons

U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service

Eufaula National Wildlife Refuge recently announced the 1995-96 refuge hunting seasons. The 11,100-acre refuge, located eight miles north of Eufaula on the Alabama and Georgia sides of the Chattahoochee River, provides hunting for dove, deer, waterfowl and rabbit. All hunters must have licenses and hunter education as required by law and a refuge permit. Waterfowl hunters and participants in the special youth deer hunts are limited by drawings. Other hunters must obtain a free permit at refuge.

A nonquota dove hunt will be a one-day hunt on the first Wednesday afternoon of the Alabama southern zone dove season. Hunting will be allowed on selected field, on the Alabama portion of the refuge. Notice to hunters — ammunition will be limited to nontoxic shot only.

The refuge archery deer season will be Oct. 16 to Jan. 31. (No Sunday hunting). Only the Alabama portion of the refuge is open to archery deer hunting .

A special quota deer hunt for youth (ages 12 to 15) will be conducted in the Bradley Unit (Georgia) Oct. 14, 21, 22, 28, Nov. 4 and 5. Applications will be received in August and selected hunters notified by mail. Each youth must pay a hunt fee of $12.50 and must be accompanied by a licensed adult, 21 years old or older. In addition, they must have passed a hunter safety course.

The quota waterfowl hunt will also be in the Bradley Unit (Georgia) on preselected Wednesdays and Saturdays during the waterfowl season adopted by the State of Georgia. Applications will be received during October and applicants notified of their selection by mail. Each permittee may bring two guests and each must pay a $12.50 hunt fee.

The refuge rabbit hunt will be open Feb. 1 to 29 except Sundays; no dogs allowed. Hunters must use non-toxic shot during the rabbit season.

Non-toxic shot is now required for all waterfowl and small game hunts due to the possible accumulation of lead shot in areas where ingestion of lead by feeding waterfowl may occur. Waterfowl and other wildlife are susceptible to lead poisoning when they eat lead shot; the grinding action of gizzards on lead shot cause chronic poisoning.

The Refuge hunt fee system changed slightly since the 1994-95 season. There will not be an application fee charged this season, but the hunt fee paid by selected applicants increased from $10 to $12.50. Thirty percent of the money collected is used by the refuge to administer the hunt program, and the remaining 70 percent goes into the Land and Water Conservation Fund to purchase wildlife habitat.

This information is a summary of the regulations and seasons. A required permit/brochure is available at the refuge headquarters. For more information, please call the Refuge at 334-687-4065 or write Eufaula Refuge, Rt. 2 Box 97-B, Eufaula, AL 36027-9294.

Benning to send teams to 10-miler

By Brian R. Voller
Bayonet staff writer

The Physical Activities Branch is preparing to send two teams, one male and one female, to the Army 10-miler Oct. 15 in Washington, D.C. to represent Fort Benning.

Each team will consist of five members who will be selected during a qualification period. One Alternate will be selected for each team in case of emergency dropouts.

More than 300 military units and installations and 6400 runners are expected to compete. Fort Benning teams have won this event twice in the last four years.

The Army 10-Miler is sponsored by the Army Recreation Services and the Association of the United States Army.

Practices have already begun. The final qualifying competition is at 8 a.m. Sept. 16 at Santiago Fitness Center.

For more information, call Capt. Millie Daniels at 545-3050; Sgt. 1st Class Lloyd McDonald at 545-2960 or Spc. Samuel Bobbitt at 545-6380.

Army takes the lead in small arms accountability

By Stephen Barrett
American Forces Information Service

Accounting for the military's small arms inventory and its repair parts stockpiles is receiving additional attention following the Oklahoma City federal building bombing in April.

Federal and local law enforcement officials are worried that military weapons — automatic weapons, M-16s, hand-held missile launchers — may fall into the hands of militia groups and other terrorist organizations.

In 1993, the Army's vice chief of staff formed the Small Arms Task Force to assess weapons accountability programs. The task force found military security standards could improve.

"The theft of weapons is not a widespread problem," said Army Maj. Heather Ierardi, a logistics officer with the task force. "But we want to reinforce just how serious it (weapons security and accountability) is."

Few problems

Ierardi said the study found few problems with the weapons accountability maintained at the unit level.

"For as many weapons as we have, our percentage of loss is just a small fraction of the weapons that are out there," she said. But the services will not be satisfied until there is no loss of weapons and parts, she said.

She added small arms inventories — .50-caliber machine guns, M-16s, pistols, etc. — are under constant surveillance.

"There are weapon counts done when arms rooms are opened, when weapons are issued and cleaned and before the arms rooms are secured each evening," said Ierardi. "If a weapon were taken, it would be noticed immediately."

She said hand-held missiles, stored in ammunition supply points, are also strictly controlled. Ierardi said armorers issue those weapons only for range firings or contingency operations.

"There's a strict accounting for the number of weapons issued and returned, just like the number of rounds issued, fired and returned during rifle qualification," she said.

Task Force concerns

Ierardi said the task force focused on a couple of concerns.

"One was to look at the processes in detail of accountability and visibility," she said. "(We had) to identify things we could do that would improve the accountability of weapons and weapon parts."

She added the military has taken those findings and immediately incorporated the improvements into the accountability policy.

Part of those improvements includes the Department of Defense Small Arms Serialization Program, a computerized visibility system that tracks the location of small arms.

Although a defense initiative, DoD tasked Army as its executive agent in running the small arms program.

Part of the Army's responsibilities include eliminating excess small arms stockpiles caused by modernization.

"There are weapons in the DoD inventory no longer needed," said Ierardi. She said various programs reduce the stockpiles while also ensuring fully operational weapons don't get into the wrong hands.

These programs include foreign military sales to allied nations and donations of demilitarized weapons to museums.

"Weapons that don't have a market for foreign military sales or don't have a commercial application are demilitarized by smelting, cutting or placing them through a crunching machine," she said.

Ierardi added weapons in museum programs are demilled by removing bolts and altering bolt chambers to prevent use. "Although the weapon looks serviceable from the outside, it's unable to fire," she said.

Command awareness

A second concern was to heighten command awareness in weapons security — a concern Ierardi said, key in any accountability program.

"You have to have commanders' support to make these things happen," said Ierardi. "We've mounted some programs to heighten command awareness and publicize the importance of securing our weapons and weapon parts."

Those programs include a command information campaign of posters, fliers and television spots emphasizing weapons and parts accountability.

Ierardi said a recent Army inspector general report found most arms rooms using the posters, reminding service members of their weapons responsibilities.

Replacement parts

As weapons accountability programs improve, there were concerns dealing with replacement parts, she said.

"We found there were things we could do to improve our internal controls and make things more difficult for someone to steal (parts)."

Armorers cannot maintain crucial repair parts inventory and make major repairs on weapons.

"Small, consumable parts like (buffer) springs are kept in supply, but not bolts, triggers and receiver groups," said Ierardi. "Unit armorers are not allowed access to the automated systems to order replacement parts. Major repairs are sent to direct support or general support units."

Once at repair, Ierardi said, guidelines prevent repairers from ordering and stockpiling parts. Weapons repair units keep their parts stock in separate storage facilities. There is a strict separation of personnel who make repairs and those who order parts.

Also, personnel repairing weapons cannot order repair parts, Ierardi said.

A repairer who needs a replacement part must turn in the unserviceable one to get the new part.

Commercial sources

Although the military places strict controls on military parts in DoD channels, parts are still available through commercial sources.

As a marketing scheme, legitimate contractors will sell overruns, packing them to look like military hardware.

"The Beretta is a military weapon, but it is also a commercially available weapon," she said. "So there are repair parts legitimately purchased that look like military parts."

Although she knows of no current weapons theft cases, Ierardi said the task force continuously tells the field to keep the pressure on toward maintaining weapons accountability.

"We have to be good stewards of our resources," she said. "Weapons and ammunition are resources that have a military application but are also venerable to theft from outside agencies. We have to be extra careful that we take care of the resources we've been entrusted with."

Dedication earns soldier 75th Ranger Regiment soldier of the year honors

By Shannon Day
Special to The Bayonet

Spc. Michael A. Batchelor, rifleman, Company B, 3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment, has been named the 1995 75th Ranger Regiment soldier of the year.

Working up to such an honor takes dedication, according to Batchelor.

"I started out with soldier of the month and soldier of the quarter boards — anything I could compete in, until they finally selected me to represent the battalion," he said.

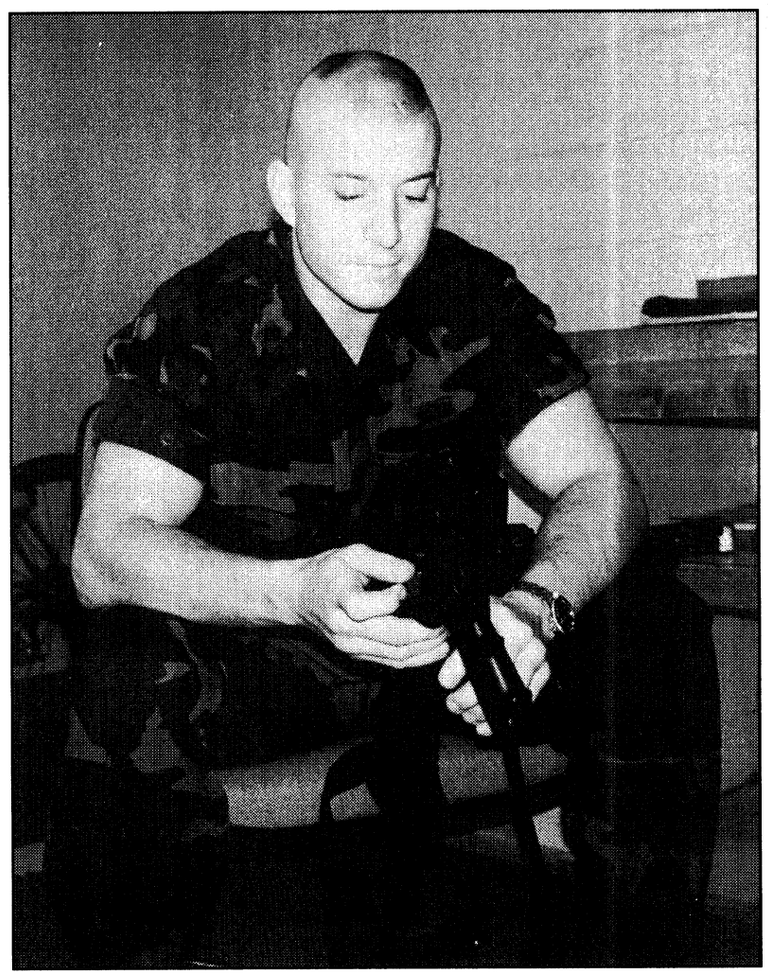
The candidates for the soldier of the year were tested in several areas including weapons qualifications, physical training, appearing before the 75th Ranger Regiment soldier of the year board and the Ranger Stakes.

The Ranger Stakes, which tested the soldier's practical knowledge, was a challenge, Batchelor said.

"The hardest part was when we were given a foot locker with five disassembled weapons inside," the Salinas, Calif., native said. "All of the pieces were mixed together and we had five minutes to put them back together. I got four completed."

Batchelor said he owes much of his success to his chain of command, his family and God.

"My first sergeant has always been there, especially when I have felt weak in certain study areas," he said of First Sgt. Mark Nielsen. "He has always given me 100 percent moral support."



His platoon sergeant, Staff Sgt. Dennis P. Bergmann, and his squad leader, Sgt. Mark D. Belda, have always made sure he has had plenty of study materials.

He added that the rest of his company has also been supportive.

"My family has also been great," he said. "When I went home to California on leave before the competition, my parents and my sister would quiz me while we sat in the hot tub."

His relatives are even going to fly to Fort Bragg, N.C., in August for the United States Army Special Operations Command soldier of the year, which is the next level of competition.

"Right now I am just trying to prepare for the USASOC contest," he said. "Sometimes it seems like a lot of work, but I remind myself that 'surrender' is not a ranger word. When you think something is beyond your grasp, it can already be in your hand."

DoD releases Middle East security strategy

By Linda D. Kozaryn
American Forces Information Service

Money may make the world go round, but oil keeps the wheels turning; and the United States is committed to keeping the world's oil supplies flowing.

"The world is now a petroleum-dependent, global economy, and the largest oil reserves are in the Middle East," said Joseph Nye, Assistant Secretary of Defense for international security affairs, during a recent Pentagon press briefing.

Nye announced the publication of U.S. Security Strategy for the Middle East, the second in a series of regional reports defining U.S. strategy for promoting stability and peaceful change. DoD released an Asia-Pacific security strategy earlier this year.

The Middle East is a hotbed of concern for the United States, according to the report. The region has more than 70 percent of the world's oil. Air and sea lanes connecting Europe with Africa, Asia and the Indian Ocean snake through the region.

The area is home to extremist groups spawning international terrorism. Weapons of mass destruction are proliferating more in the Middle East than anywhere else in the world, the report states.

"Iraq's record of aggression is well known to the world, but we are equally concerned with the recent behavior of Iran," Defense Secretary William Perry recently told the Council on Foreign Relations in New York. "It's been constructing a military buildup on several, small (Persian Gulf) islands close to the Strait of Hormuz through which 90 percent of the gulf oil exports travel."

Perry said the buildup includes several thousand additional troops, artillery, anti-ship missiles and possibly even chemical weapons. Iran has bought submarines with mine-laying capability and patrol boats with anti-ship missiles, he said.

"All in all," he said, "Iran's attempt to acquire nuclear technology, its support of terrorism against Israel and other states, its opposition to the Middle East peace process and its threatening position in the gulf make it an inherently destabilizing force in the region."

U.S. troops have seen combat more often in the Middle East during the last 20 years than anywhere else in the world — over Libya, in Lebanon, in the Persian Gulf during the Iran-Iraq tanker war and in Desert Shield/Storm. U.S. presence in the region and its ability to deploy troops rapidly to the region have increased dramatically, according to DoD officials.

> "U.S. capabilities to defend its vital interests in the Middle East are at an all-time high, in stark contrast to the situation less than two decades ago."
> — William Perry
> Secretary of Defense

"In 1980, it would have taken three months to get a heavy division to the gulf," Nye said. "In 1990, when Iraq invaded Kuwait, we were able to field seven combat-ready brigades, three carrier battle groups and 14 tactical fighter squadrons in less than three weeks. Last October, we were able to get a brigade from Fort Stewart, Ga., to Camp Doha in Kuwait in three days."

Before the Iranian revolution in 1979, the only U.S. forces normally in the gulf were a Navy command ship and two or three destroyers. Today, up to 20 ships and scores of land-based aircraft are in the area at any one time, Nye said.

Equipment for an Army brigade of tanks and mechanized equipment is pre-positioned in Kuwait. In March, Qatar agreed to pre-positioning equipment for a second armored brigade. More aircraft support supplies are pre-positioned in several locations throughout the gulf.

"U.S. capabilities to defend its vital interests in the Middle East are at an all-time high, in stark contrast to the situation less than two decades ago," states Perry in a foreword to the security report. "Yet daunting problems remain: ethnic, ideological and national conflicts; burgeoning populations with stagnant economies; unresolved pressures for political development; and a poverty of every resource except the one that has prompted three major U.S. force deployments in less than 10 years — oil."

U.S. security strategy for the region is based on peacetime engagement, forward presence and rapid response.

Engagement involves maintaining security partnerships with key states in the region to strengthen local self-defense capabilities, promote inter-Arab defense cooperation and enhance the ability of Western forces to fight alongside local forces.

As many as 20,000 service members deployed in the region demonstrate U.S. commitment to deter regional aggression. Rapid response is based on the ability to deploy additional forces rapidly and effectively.

"As this report demonstrates, the United States has to remain militarily engaged in this crucial area of the world," Perry stated in the foreword. "Our interests and those of our friends and allies demand it. Only the United States has the power and prestige to help shape a brighter future for the people of the Middle East.

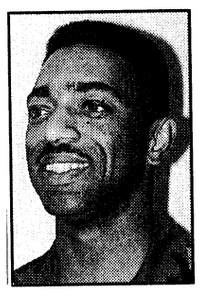
"And only U.S. forces have the capability to meet and defeat the very real military threats to the stability and security of the region."

Enhancement program provides better equipment

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Do you have an idea that could improve a soldier's effectiveness or efficiency on the battlefield by reducing his load or enhancing lethality, mobility, survivability, command and control or sustainment? Perhaps you know of an item that soldiers buy with their own money that contributes to their safety, training or quality of life. The Army Training and Doctrine Command System Manager-Soldier Office at Fort Benning would like to hear from you.

The soldier enhancement program was initiated in 1990 to search for lighter, more lethal weapons and to provide improved items of equipment for the soldier. The TRADOC System Manager-Soldier Office reviews concept proposals and recommends funding for testing the concepts. The Army allocates funds each year to purchase, test and type-classify off-the-shelf equipment recommended by soldiers and to purchase and field items that meet Army requirements.



The SEP has resulted in approval of 139 proposals and action on 49 since 1990. Items of equipment fielded as a result of the SEP include the flameless ration heater, M249 assault pack, desert battle dress uniforms and boots, intermediate cold/wet gloves and boots and the individual tactical load bearing vest.

When an item proposal is received, the SEP staff reviews it to be sure it meets the minimum criteria. The item must be equipment that is worn, carried or consumed by the soldier in a tactical environment; be commercially available off-the-shelf; and satisfy an operational need or battlefield deficiency. SEP candidates are forwarded to the Army Materiel Command, Alexandria, Va., for a technical risk assessment. TRADOC proponent schools evaluate item proposals to determine if requirements exist for them. The items are then placed in priority order for startup funding the next fiscal year.

The SEP is not an incentive award program. No monetary or other awards are given for adopted proposals.

Proposals for FY 97 must be received by Nov. 1. Proposal forms can be requested by calling DSN 835-1189 or commercial 545-6047, faxing a message to DSN 835-1377, or writing to TSM-Soldier, ATTN: ATZB-TS, Fort Benning, Ga. 31905-5000.

BOSS welcomes new pres, recognizes contributors

USAIC Public Affairs Office

The Better Opportunities for Single Soldiers program welcomed a new president and recognized outstanding contributors at an awards breakfast July 28.

Fort Benning's Commanding General, Maj. Gen. John W. Hendrix, administered the oath of office to incoming BOSS president Spc. Michael T. James.

"You need to know that you have my support; you need to know that you have the support of the chain of command," Hendrix told James.

"There are great possibilities and many challenges ahead. We're proud to have you as the president of the BOSS council," Hendrix said.

"I want to see this program become the model for the entire U.S. Army," James said. "That's not an impossible goal with the support that we have in this room."

Outgoing president Spc. Christina Rapé, who will soon be making a permanent change of station move to Germany, was presented an Impact Army Commendation Medal for her "exceptionally meritorious performance" as BOSS president.

"It's hard to let go of anything that's not finished," Rapé said. "There have always been single soldiers and there always will be."

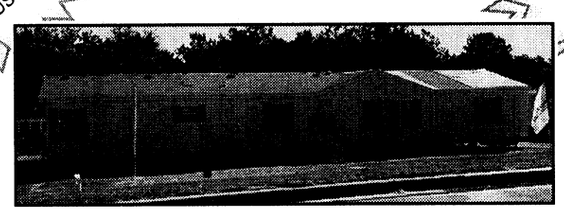
WILKES
REGIONAL MEDICAL CENTER
Our Team...Dedicated to Excellence

Greensboro, North Carolina

Hospital-Based: OB/GYN Generalist
Internal & Family Medicine: Private Practice

The Women's Hospital of Greensboro is recruiting 2 OB/GYN Generalists for a busy inpatient practice. The primary responsibility is teaching residents, medical students and physician assistants. Call is seven nights per month.



Also in Greensboro, we have several private practice opportunities for both Family and Internal Medicine. The positions range from joining large, multi-specialty groups, to medium-sized single specialty, to joining a solo doctor.

Greensboro, with a population of 190,000, is large enough to offer recreational activities to suit just about everyone's tastes -- parks within a mile of every resident's home, minor league hockey and baseball, the symphony, museums, five colleges/ universities, and much more! If you are interested in learning more, please call Pamela Lietz at 800-476-6737 or forward your CV to her at:

Practice Made Perfect.

It's easy to understand how a practice can be made perfect in a community like Aiken, South Carolina. America's wealthiest wintered here in the past, giving Aiken a rich and diverse cultural foundation. Even now, Aiken offers everyone the opportunity to enjoy life. Hitchcock Woods, a 1700-acre nature preserve. Numerous polo matches and steeplechase. Twelve golf courses, including Augusta National — all this within two hours of Atlanta, Hilton Head and the Appalachian mountains. And, of course, the finest health care, courtesy of Aiken Regional Medical Centers.

Our staff of over 100 excellent physicians (many with military backgrounds), boasts Board Certification levels which exceed national averages, and 10 percent of our physicians are Board Certified in at least two specialties. All are provided with the most up-to-date technology and equipment. Not to mention the finest medical professionals and support staff. And an emergency department fully staffed by almost a dozen residency-trained emergency medicine specialists.

Life's laidback and easy in Aiken. Of course, we're all working extra hard to provide the outstanding medical care we're known for. And that means adding outstanding physicians to our staff.

We're currently recruiting physicians in the following specialties:

Anesthesiology	Family Medicine	Neurosurgery
Cardiovascular Surgery	Internal Medicine/ Peds	Otolaryngology
Emergency Medicine	Invasive Cardiology	Pediatrics
Endocrinology		Psychiatry (Adult & Child)
		Radiology

For more information, call 1-800-245-3679, ext. 5197.
C.V.'s can be faxed to Sharon Poth, Director Physician Services, at 803-641-5690 or mailed to P.O. Drawer 1117, Aiken, SC 29802.

Dear Customer,

We, here at Gilland-Wyant, would like to once again thank you for your business. We consider our customers to be our greatest asset and we will strive to continue to please you long after the sale.

We have a very simple business philosophy. "Earning your business for life" is our motto and we fully intend to live up to it. Unlike the traditional image of a car dealer, Gilland-Wyant doesn't try to make a bundle of cash on your initial sale. While everyone knows that a profit is what it takes to stay in business, we feel that by making a great deal now, the next time you decide to purchase a vehicle, we will be your first choice and we will make another great deal. Also, anyone else you tell about us can buy a car or truck and also get a great deal, and all in all, we get to (1) Make you happy, (2) Stay in business, and (3) Feel good about ourselves. (How many car dealers can say that?).

From the Management to the Service Department to the Sales Team, everyone here is dedicated to solving any problem you may have or answer any questions you may wish to ask. While we feel that you should expect almost no problems from your new car, if for any reason something should decide to act improper, our repair technicians pride themselves on returning even the smallest item on your vehicle to perfect condition.

Again, Thank You for your business, and enjoy your new vehicle.

NATIONAL TRAINING CENTER

3rd Bde soldiers deploy to California

Troops to train in field maneuvers

By Richard Brill
Special to The Bayonet©

Almost the entire 3rd Brigade, 24th Infantry Division began leaving Lawson Army Airfield last week bound for the National Training Center, Fort Irwin, Calif., for field maneuvers.

As they boarded the planes, Col. Steve Schook admonished many of his soldiers to watch out for high temperatures in the searing California desert.

"It's hot out there, man," he said to one. "Make sure you drink a full canteen of water as soon as you hit the ground."

Schook and nearly the entire brigade, plus elements of the 24th Infantry Division from Fort Stewart, including the division cavalry squadron, deployed last week for an NTC rotation, which he described as far from routine.

"We are taking nearly the entire brigade combat team, with the exception of the 2nd Battalion, 18th Infantry Regiment," he said. "When we hit the ground and join up with the Fort Stewart elements, we will have a total of about 4,500 soldiers. That's a sizeable rotation."

The 3,200 soldiers from Fort Benning's 3rd Brigade began deploying from Lawson Army Airfield July 31 and finished Monday. With the exception of miscellaneous items sent by rail car, including howitzers belonging to the 4th Battalion, 41st Field Artillery Regiment, and command group vehicles, soldiers carried only their individual equipment; and the brigade was issued armored and other vehicles during the first week on the ground at the NTC.

Schook said it's not only the size of the deployment which is unique but also changes in the way training will be conducted at the NTC. According to Schook, past rotations initially focused on operations that were smaller than brigade size and eventually culminated with operations involving an entire brigade.

"NTC has really changed focus," he said. "Operations will involve the whole brigade from day one. Obviously force protection and safety issues will be more important now than ever before." What's more, Schook said, the brigade will be subject to harassment by the opposition forces even during the first week, which has traditionally been an administrative week used to draw equipment and prepare for the following week of field maneuvers.

"It's now a very intense power projection scenario that goes to the heart of why the 24th Infantry Division exists," Schook said. "It's treated as if the brigade had fallen into a site with prepositioned equipment somewhere else in the world with trouble brewing and we had to very quickly get our equipment ready. They've even added a role-playing 'ambassador' whom I must brief every night about the unit's capabilities based on requirements that the in-country ambassador may have, whether it be a show of force or some other mission."

Schook said the opposition forces, which he described as world class, have also changed their tactics.

Past scenarios involved purely Soviet block tactics, which were predictable and pre-arranged, he said. The OPFOR's approach is now much more flexible, Schook said.

"It's now much more of a chess match," he said. "That's what makes it exciting. Our unit must now be very flexible. You have to look at what is going on and figure out how to beat it. I even look at the personalities of the OPFOR commanders and ask myself how they operate.

"I've had several rotations out there, but I'm looking forward to this one the most," he said.

Schook said the brigade will begin deployment back to Fort Benning the first week in September and expects to complete the redeployment by Sept. 5.

At a glance

Post to review policy on In-line skating

By Shannon Day
Special to The Bayonet©

There is good news in store for all in-line skating, rollerblading and rollerskating enthusiasts at Fort Benning.

Currently, the post regulation for these sports states, the only area where these activities are allowed is in the parking lot in front of Building 6, Meloy Hall.

However, the regulation is being rewritten, according to Master Sgt. Eddie C. Cosby, noncommissioned officer in charge, Law Enforcement Division of the Public Safety Directorate.

The new regulation will allow people to in-line skate, rollerblade and rollerskate anywhere on post on streets with a speed limit of 25 miles per hour or lower, providing they wear a helmet and elbow and knee pads, according to Cosby.

They also must wear something reflective if it is not fully light outside.

"It's important to remember that skaters must still obey the rules of the road," Cosby said. "In most all cases, vehicle traffic will have the right of way. We want people to use common sense."

By common sense, Cosby said he means young children should be accompanied by an adult or an older child who understands traffic rules.

Skaters must also skate with the flow of traffic and obey all road signs.

Cosby said one of the main reasons for the regulation change is that it is inconvenient for people to go to Building 6 to skate, especially parents with children.

"Not only kids, but people of all ages like to skate because it's fun and it's exercise," he said. "We are just trying to keep up with people's wants. Fort Benning has always tried to be flexible on things that are in good taste and can be done safely."

The new regulation has not been finished yet, but it should be ready by the middle of August, according to Cosby. For more information on the regulation, call the Community Life Office or the Military Police station.

Leaders gather to discuss ACOE strategies

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Fort Benning is out to "three-peat" as the best installation in the Army.

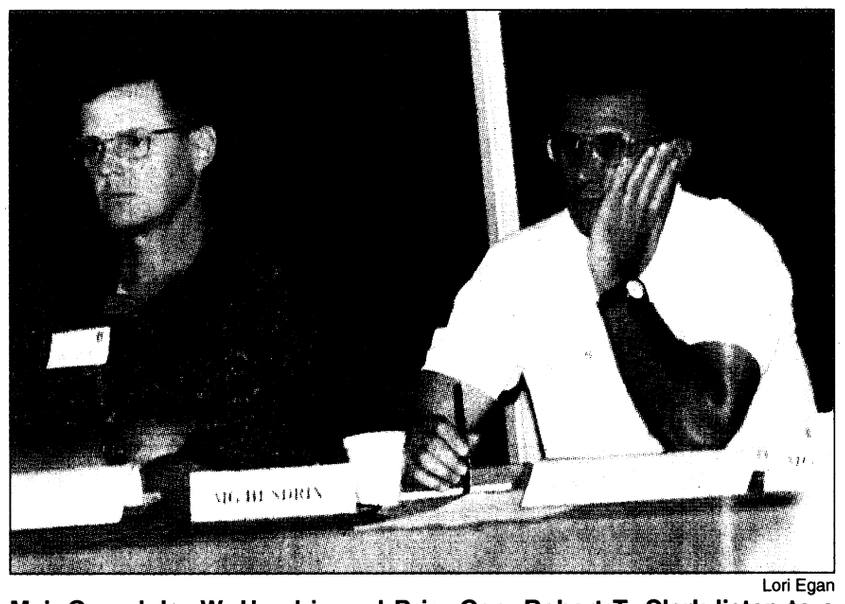
The post's leadership met Monday and Tuesday at Uchee Creek to discuss this year's approach to once again proving it is the best in the Army Communities of Excellence competition.

Maj. Gen. Bruce McDonald, commanding general of the 70th Division, U.S. Army Reserve, and vice president for corporate communications for the Cadillac Division of General Motors, was the keynote speaker.

He discussed how Cadillac's leadership pulled the auto maker out a situation that saw it being beaten by foreign competitors to regain customer loyalty and win the Malcolm Baldridge Award for excellence in the process.

Following McDonald's presentation, Maj. Gen. John W. Hendrix, Fort Benning's commanding general, shared his vision for the post.

Hendrix said his vision was a work force in which everyone worked together in the same direction, committed to excellence and seeking continuous improvement.



He said he wanted a mission-oriented organization that took pride in itself and its work, produced a quality product and looked good in the process.

He said it should be a values-based organization, one of fairness and integrity. Hendrix said the work force should be focused on customer satisfaction and responsiveness.

He said he expects people to perform to standards and that they should be rewarded for their performance. He also said he wanted all treated with dignity and fairness, emphasizing the word "all."

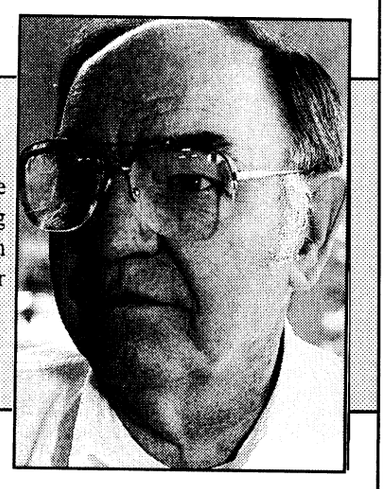
He said he wanted the highest possible quality of life for those who lived and worked on Fort Benning and that his goal was to be recognized again as the best installation in the Army.

On the mission side, Hendrix said Fort Benning should produce the world's best trained leaders and soldiers who are noted for their competence, physical fitness, motivation, self-discipline and core values.

Lori Egan

Maj. Gen. John W. Hendrix and Brig. Gen. Robert T. Clark listen to a briefing.

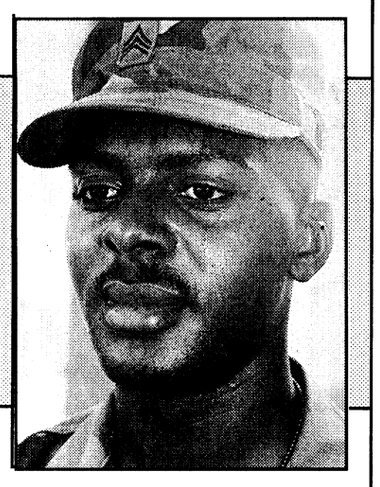
Along those lines, Hendrix said the post must be the best at deploying go-to-war units and that those units must be equipped, organized and trained to fight to overwhelmingly win on any battlefield against any enemy.



Process action teams are now gathering data in five key areas; training the force, doctrine, infantry of the future, force projection and quality of life that will prove Fort Benning is once again the best post in the Army.

VARIOUS VOICES

What do you think about physician-assisted suicide?



Capt. Bruce Jenkins, Service Battery, 4th Battalion, 41st Field Artillery Regiment — "I'm all for it. If (the person) has a living will and there's no hope, then the doctor should have the right to ease their suffering."

Jim R. Money, retired Air Force — "I'm against it. It is killing somebody. I don't believe in keeping them here artificially or carrying them out artificially."

Lt. Col. Pat D. Nutz, Maxwell Air Force Base, Montgomery, Ala. — "I'm absolutely against it. Physicians are trained to help people live, not die. God created life not to be destroyed any earlier than he decided."

Sgt. David E. McKenney, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment — "I don't agree with it. No one should encourage another to take their own life. It's wrong — totally wrong."

West Point Cadet Brian T. Conroy, 1st Battalion (Airborne), 507th Infantry — "I'm definitely against it. I don't think anyone has the right to take another's life for selfish reasons."

Hollie L. Austin, family member — "If the person is terminally ill, it should be the person's choice."

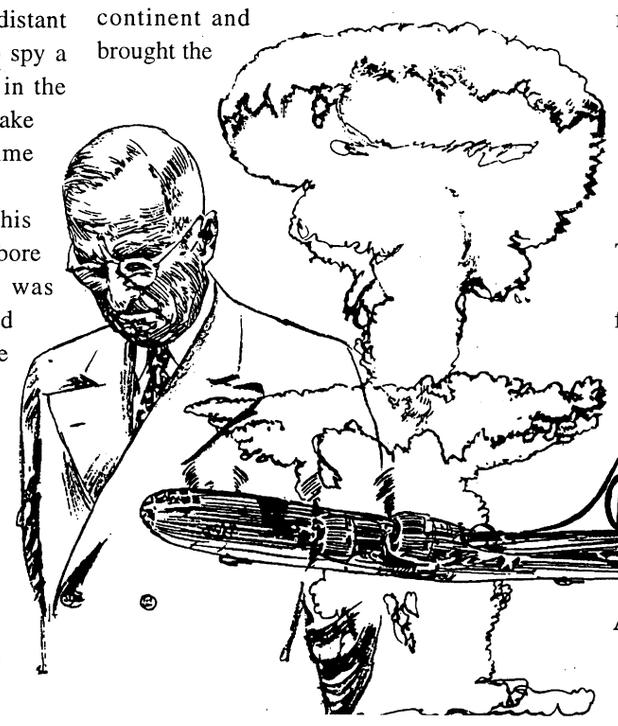
Service members' sacrifices built better tomorrow for All Americans

By Jim Ward
Army News Service



WASHINGTON -- As the boy of 10 stood on the eastern shore of the Pacific, near Long Beach, Calif., he could see, off in the distant horizon, a pleasure yacht. He could also spy a few sea gulls flapping wings furiously in the midday sun. Still further on, he could make out a few surfers, although the noon-time tide was quite unremarkable.

Standing beside him was a man in his 70s. The man, whose chiseled features bore silent testimony to a life well spent, was slightly bent, but his intense stare revealed a sharp mind. As he scanned the same horizon, he saw (or imagined) a quite different sight.

He saw a flotilla of ships steaming out to some distant Pacific atoll. He saw uncommon bravery, as men from all walks of life sacrificed all they had to give freedom a chance. And he saw men, women and children standing at the water's edge, waiting for loved ones to come home.

How appropriate that this generational sea change would happen. For as these two stood on the sandy beach, each had his own reward.

America in 1945 was ready to come home. She was ready to put her own house in order after 12 years of depression and almost four years of war. She had fought off Germans and Italians on one continent and brought the Pacific war to a close. She had seen thousands of dead come home (or remain in graves marked and unmarked around the world.) She had worked feverishly on the home front as Americans steadfastly went about their days.

For the man's youthful companion, the view was different, but in it, both found redemption and satisfaction. For unlike those dark days that followed immediately after Pearl Harbor, the boy could scan the horizon and not be frightened. And his partner could look upon the glassy water and truly say he played a part in creating the American Century.

So much has happened since 1945. The Germany and Japan of 1945 have been rebuilt. Their economies are alive and healthy.

More importantly, they are now America's friends.

Now, it is time for Americans, who have been so much a part of what the world has become, to try a new tack. We must learn to be our own friend. We must work to build the kind of America that will bring comfort to those who have done so much and given such hope to the young who inherit the American miracle.

We owe it to the brave service members who fought in for America in World War II to rise to the occasion, and demonstrate to ourselves that the America that was saved some 50 years ago can and will continue to be the America worthy of the children of their sacrifice.

dial 545-boss

Dial 545-BOSS is the commander's action line for soldiers, family members and civilians to call when they have problems or complaints that can't be resolved elsewhere.

While it is not a substitute for the chain of command or for agencies established to provide assistance, the line offers another means of communication between Fort Benning's community and commanders.

The Bayonet features some of the calls that may benefit other members of the Fort Benning community.

Call: When riding on post, I counted 42 empty quarters and I would like to know why quarters are sitting empty when there are people on the list. I am 336th on the list.

Family Housing Branch's response:
The majority of the empty quarters are part of a major contractor renovation project in the Custer Terrace area.

The other quarters are vacant due to maintenance or repairs that have been curtailed because of budget constraints.

Call: I know that some gains have been made in transportation for the disabled on Fort Benning, but there are still problems that exist. Can more be done, and what can I do to help improve the accessibility of transportation for the disabled?

Transportation Division's response:
The shuttle bus service is provided for military personnel requiring transportation to and from billets to the work site. Department of Defense civilians and family members may ride the shuttle bus only if seats are available. There is no requirement for a wheel chair lift for the shuttle bus because its primary purpose is to support soldiers.

Military taxi service is provided for military and civilian personnel when conducting official business. This service will be discontinued within the next nine months due to resource constraints.

In order to obtain a van with a wheel chair lift, the General Service Administration requires one year lead time to purchase a special purpose van; thus, the service will be discontinued before GSA can procure the van. TMP shuttle bus and taxi service will provide assistance to any disabled rider upon request.

Call: I would like to know why Infantry Officer Advanced Course students aren't allowed to move into the "white elephants" quarters when their wives are pregnant and others are not assigned those quarters.

Family Housing Branch's response:
Infantry Officer Advanced Course students are not permitted to move into lead base painted white elephant quarters with children 6 years of age and under or with a spouse that is pregnant.

Family Housing's assignment clerks are required to ask applicants to identify the ages and gender of their children and if the spouse is expecting.

Housing counselors have been instructed to question service members more thoroughly.

A lead abatement project has begun that will alleviate the age and pregnancy restrictions.

Reader questions Commissary policy

I frequently shop at the Commissary and have the opportunity to talk with the nice people who bag my groceries. Hopefully by now, it is well known that these hard-working folks have to hustle all day to make decent money since they only receive tips for their labor.

Recently one of these people told me that they are being required to purchase new uniforms at $100 per set because of the color change from black and white to blue and white. I'd like to know how true this is and is this price fair and affordable to these people who don't receive a regular salary but are expected to pay such a price for uniforms or risk losing their jobs?

— Yvette R. Lattimore
Fort Benning

Commissary's response:

Since the objective of the Fort Benning Commissary is to take care of our customers, I was pleased to hear from a shopper who appreciates the service our baggers provide.

It is our goal to always provide professional, first-rate service. We try to do this by offering quality products at the lowest possible cost and by providing a clean and attractive facility in which to shop.

Dress standards for our employees, to include our baggers, is part of that service. It is our opinion that if our employees dress sharply, they will feel and act better about themselves and as a result will provide better service to our customers.

Therefore, we do not think it unreasonable to make uniforms a condition of employment.

Yes, the cost for two pairs of pants, two shirts, a smock and a hat does run as high as $73, but a good bagger will recoup that amount in one to two day's work, to include the part-time baggers.

Setting high standards for our employees is just one more way your Commissary is taking care of its customers.

— Benjamin S. Wainwright
Commissary officer

Seminars to focus on skills for federal Employees

Week-long series set to emphasize high-tech work

By Lisa M. Hibbert
Bayonet staff writer

The Federal Women's Program Committee will host the 20th Federal Employees' Week Aug. 21 through 25.

The theme for this year's week is "Vision Year 2000: Strategies for Survival in the Work Place."

The week's activities will emphasize the skills needed to accomplish the various tasks expected in a high-tech work environment during the 21st century.

Some of the seminar topics include nutrition, physical fitness, mastering communication skills and achieving career satisfaction.

Seminar facilitators Charles W. Collins Jr., senior financial consultant with Merrill Lynch, will talk about financial planning, and Mildred Watts of the Directorate of Civilian Personnel, will speak about enhancing your career during downsizing.

All of the programs will be open to all civilian and military personnel.

The sessions will be at 9:30 to 11:30 a.m. and again from 1:30 to 4 p.m. Aug. 21 through 24. There will only be one session Aug. 25 from 9 to 11 a.m.

All of the activities will take place in Classroom 21, Infantry Hall, Building 4.

For more information, call Barbara Collins at 545-6423.

va q&a

Department of Veterans Affairs

Q: Can I borrow money on my government life insurance policy? If so, how much can I borrow and how do I go about it?

A: You can borrow on your government life insurance policy if it has been in force for a year or more and you have a whole life or endowment type policy, or you have paid-up insurance that you purchased with your dividends. You can borrow up to 94 percent of the cash value.

To find out the cash value of your policy, you can call the Department of Veterans Affairs Insurance Center toll-free at (800) 669-8477.

To apply for a loan, send a signed written request to the VA Insurance Center, P.O. Box 7208, Philadelphia, Pa. 19101, or fax it to (215) 951-5274.

Q: Do I have to pay interest on a loan on my life insurance policy? If so, at what rate?

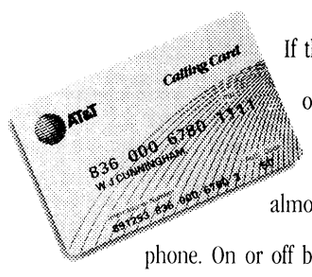
A: Yes, you have to pay interest on these loans. The interest rate on policy loans can change from year to year. It currently is at 5 percent, where it will remain until at least Sept. 30.

Q: What if I don't pay interest or principal payments on my policy loan?

A: Unpaid interest will be added to the outstanding loan, causing the amount of your loan to increase. Once the policy loan exceeds the cash value, the policy could be canceled. Any unpaid loan on the policy at the time of the policyholder's death will be subtracted from the payment the beneficiary will receive.

Q: What type of burial benefits are available to veterans?

A: Most veterans are eligible for a flag, grave marker or headstone, and interment in a national cemetery. A counselor at the Department of Veterans Affairs can furnish eligibility information for each specific benefit. You can call one toll-free at the VA regional office nearest you by dialing (800) 827-1000.



Q: When my husband died, VA furnished a headstone for his grave. We purchased two plots in the cemetery and I plan to be buried next to my husband. Will VA furnish me a headstone to match his?

A: No. VA headstones and markers are provided for the unmarked graves of veterans. VA cannot issue a headstone or marker for a spouse or dependent buried in a private cemetery.

Editor's note: For more information about veterans benefits, call the regional Veterans Affairs Office at (800) 827-1000.

Building 35 was named Ridgway Hall in April 1994 in honor of Gen. Matthew B. Ridgway, a former Army chief of staff.

Ridgway Hall has important past

By Judith Ginder
School of the Americas

Ridgway Hall housed the post headquarters and the U.S. Army Infantry School for almost 30 years

In the center of the "Home of the Infantry" sits a big, pink building that's seen a lot of history.

Ridgway Hall, whose construction began in 1934, housed the post headquarters and the U.S. Army Infantry School for almost 30 years. Now home to the School of the Americas, the building is a very important part of the main post historic district, said John Brent, of the Directorate of Public Works.

Infantrymen trained here for battle during World War II, the Korean War and the Vietnam War. Nineteen commandants served the Infantry School while it was located at Ridgway Hall.

During this pivotal time, innovations introduced into the Army included the birth of the Officer Candidate School, the development of airborne and ranger training, and the realization of mechanized infantry.

In 1964, the post headquarters and Infantry School moved out of Ridgway and into the newly erected Building 4. The main post historic district, of which Building 35 is a part, was recommended for consideration as a National Historic Registered Landmark in the early 1980s.

In 1984, the School of the Americas moved from Panama to Fort Benning and eight years later adopted the building as its home. The building wasn't known as Ridgway Hall until April 1994, when it was dedicated in honor of Gen. Matthew B. Ridgway, a former Army chief of staff.

In the late 1980s, the former Infantry School, along with many other buildings in the area, were in great need of a facelift. When work began in this historic district, architects renovated surrounding structures to complement the spanish style of Ridgway Hall, said Ken Holloway, chief of Real Property Master Planning.

Holloway also stated that special care was taken to keep original doorways and molding to maintain the historic fabric of the buildings.

The work between 1989 and 1992 included building Meloy Hall and renovating Building 35, as well as refurbishing the Military Clothing and Sales store, the Officers' Club and the unaccompanied officer and enlisted quarters.

Minor renovations continue with the Army Field Printing Plant, located next to Military Clothing and Sales. Planners expect work to be finished soon, completing the effort to restore Fort Benning's historic district to its former splendor.

CID investigating larceny, thefts

U.S. Army Criminal Investigation Command

The U.S. Army Criminal Investigation Command is currently investigating a larceny of private property that occurred in on-post quarters and two thefts.

July 9, between the hours of 9 and 10:15 p.m., person(s), by unknown means, entered the quarters of 143-B Magrath Street. The intruder(s) pried open a window and stole various parachuting and camera equipment valued at $3,914.

Investigation continues by the Fort Benning Criminal Investigation Division.

Anyone with information concerning this crime can contact the Fort Benning Military Police at 545-5222 or 545-5223 or Special Agent Kelly S. McCrate at 545-4981 or 545-2414.

One theft involves a Suzuki GSXR 750 WP motorcycle. The motorcycle had Georgia license plate No. MS-6020. The motorcycle was last seen parked adjacent to Building 4711-B Harmony Church June 7.

CID is offering a $25 reward for information leading to the arrest and conviction of the perpetrator of this crime. This reward will expire Oct. 13.

Anyone having information concerning this investigation can contact Special Agent John M. Pavia at 545-3257 or the Military Police at 545-5222.

The other theft involves a 1988 blue Pontiac Firebird. The vehicle was stolen between 10:30 a.m. June 26 and 9:30 a.m. June 30 from a parking lot adjacent to Building 9013 on Kelley Hill.

The vehicle was subsequently recovered when it was located just south of the Eddy Bridge on Fort Benning where it had been left abandoned. No suspects have been identified.

Anyone having information concerning this investigation can contact Special Agent Kelly S. McCrate at 545-4981 or the Military Police at 545-5222.

CID is also offering a $250 reward for information concerning the theft of a hand-held General Electric radio, model No. MPA SCAN, serial No. 1399472. The radio was taken from a high mobility, multipurpose wheeled vehicle, which was parked adjacent to Building 9000, Kelley Hill.

Anyone with information should contact the Fort Benning Military Police station at 545-5222 or 545-5223, or Special Agent Reginald Ray, Fort Benning resident agency USACIDC, at 545-5239 or 545-3259.

This reward offer will expire June 14, 1996.

The identity of anyone providing information on any of these cases will be kept in the strictest confidence.

Post celebrates excellence

By Richard Brill
Special to The Bayonet©

Fort Benning employees celebrated excellence at the quarterly Excellence Appreciation Breakfast Aug. 3 at the Officers' Club Supper Club.

Commanding General Maj. Gen. John W. Hendrix shared his ideas about the post's commitment to quality service.

"Quality comes from the heart more than any other place," Hendrix said. "I'm proud of you because I think that the thing that distinguishes us from any of the other places I've ever been is the heart. I've never been anywhere else in 30 years in the Army where we have had the quality work force that we have at Fort Benning."

Hendrix said that the Army Communities of Excellence standards have been so successful in bringing about improvements that the Army is making them even more demanding.

"We are going to go now to the Malcolm Baldridge criteria, which are a more stringent criteria than we have used with ACOE in the past," he said. "It's a commercial approach that is referred to as the Army's Performance Improvement Criteria."

Hendrix encouraged Fort Benning employees to continue their dedication to excellence.

"In large part we do not need to change what we've been doing," he said. "We need to continue exactly what we have been doing. We are just going to have to change a little bit of the methodology, but the fundamental remains the same, and that is your commitment to quality."

The breakfast concluded with the presentation of quality paperweights and special excellence awards, earned by various organizations and individuals during the year.

The 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment, received the Army Award for Maintenance Excellence in the heavy density category. The award recognizes exceptional accomplishments in unit maintenance. Warrant Officer 3 Theodore Walker, Master Sgt. Michael Haugen and Samuel Harvel accepted the award.

The 2nd Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment, were winners of the Army Award for Maintenance Excellence in the intermediate density category. Lt. Col. Michael Phillips and Staff Sgt. Wayne Huffman accepted the award.

Sandra Babb of the Directorate of Resource Management's Manpower, Equipment and Documentation Division received the Customer Service Excellence Award for the quarter.

Lt. Col. Robert Radcliff of the Infantry Training Brigade received the quarter's best Self-Help, U-Do-It Project Award for the unit's barracks renovation project.

Army Learning Ctr offers free courses

The Army Learning Center located in Building 2611, Soldiers' Plaza, offers a variety of free courses through computer-based instructional system.

Subjects covered include mathematics, professional development, technical, science, military related, personal computer tutorials, computers and data processing, management, preparation for college level exams and preparation for college entrance exams. A complete listing of topics is available at the learning center.

Users can access the system via modem from work or home 24 hours a day, seven days a week.

All active duty service members, family members, retired military, Army and Air Force Exchange Service personnel, nonappropriated fund personnel, Department of the Army civilians, Reserves and National Guard are authorized use of the Army Learning Center.

The Learning Center hours are 7 a.m. to noon and 1 to 4 p.m. Monday through Friday. The telephone number is 545-1436.

Controlled burning set

Controlled burning of woodland areas will take place through Sunday. If weather permits, the following compartments may be affected: D-6, D-10, E-5, E-6, I-3, I-4, J-1, K-7, M-7, O-4, W-3, X-1, V-3 and BB-2.

Burning will occur in pine stands within these compartments to enhance endangered species habitat and training areas. People using these areas for recreation must leave before 9:30 a.m. daily.

Training units using compartments next to these areas are reminded to exercise caution while traveling in these areas because of the potential for reduced visibility.

Units using the ranges and training areas are reminded to remove flammable debris, such as pine straw, leaves, grass and trash from around structures in accordance with USAIC Regulation 210-4, Paragraph 5-22, Organizational Maintenance.

For more information, call 544-6206.

Runners have priority during PT hours

Formations and individual runners have priority of movement on Fort Benning during the established physical training hours of 6 to 7:30 a.m. Monday through Friday. Formation running is not authorized on sidewalks throughout the installation. Units must use roadways, and proper safety equipment must be worn and operational.

Individual runners and walkers may use the sidewalks and also are required to wear proper reflective clothing or road guard vests.

Speed limit during PT hours is 15 mph and 10 mph when passing individuals and troop formations.

Hispanic Heritage Month begins Sept 15

There will be a meeting Tuesday at 10 a.m. in Building 2515. All interested personnel can attend this meeting and bring their ideas or suggestions.

For more information, call Sgt. 1st Class Paul Horton at 544-9656 or 545-6665.

The Public Affairs Office is recruiting volunteers to join its Speakers Bureau to speak before local and surrounding area civic organizations.

If you are military or civilian and have a unique subject you are an expert on, be it military history or horticulture, call Brad Castleberry at 545-2238.

Mayors' Council to meet third Weds

Mayors' Council meetings with the installation staff will take place the third Wednesday of each month at 9:30 a.m. in Infantry Hall, Room 550. If your designated representative is unable to attend, an alternate must be provided. You will be notified in advance of any changes or cancellations. Meeting dates are Wednesday, Sept. 20, Oct. 18 and Nov. 15.

Bayonet drop box available to customers

For the convenience of Bayonet customers, anyone who needs to turn in stories, film, letters, etc., to The Bayonet may now use a new drop box located in the Information Office, Room 111, Infantry Hall, Building 4.

Material being dropped off should be placed in an envelope with a point of contact and a phone number annotated on the envelope.

Customers can still fax material to The Bayonet at 682-0095, send information through PROFS (ID is Bayonet), mail material to: The Bayonet, Infantry Hall, Room 601, send material through distribution or hand carry it to The Bayonet's office, Room 601, whichever is most convenient.

The deadline is noon Friday for the following week's issue.

OCS selection board

A recent message from Personnel Command announced the next OCS selection board has been scheduled for Sept. 26 to 29. Applications must arrive at PERSCOM by Sept. 15. There will be no exceptions. Applications must arrive in AG, Personnel Operations Division, Building 2619, not later than today to allow time for each applicant to appear before a local board.

For administrative support and application forms, contact Marie Lee, Adjutant General's Office, Personnel Operations and Services Division at 545-3341 or 545-4702.

Siren system to be tested first Saturdays

The installation siren system will be tested at noon the first Saturday of each month. Units and activities listed will monitor siren testing and notify the field officer of the day and their staff duty officer at 545-5135 or 545-5245 within 30 minutes after each test and report the operational status of the sirens. Sirens will not be tested in the event of bad weather.

The following is a list of units and activities and their siren locations:

- Infantry Training Brigade — Sand Hill, 12th Street and Scott Avenue
- 3rd Brigade, 24th Infantry Division — Kelley Hill
- 36th Engineer Group — Indianhead Road, 1900 Block

Osie L. Burton (left), Richard L. Brinkley and Tony A. Bourisaw remember jumping from an airplane similar to the one behind them in the Normandy invasion in 1944.

Rendezvous reunion draws a crowd

By Ruth J. Spaller
USAIC Public Affairs Office

June 6, 1944 — D-Day. Over Normandy, dark outlines of planes packed with eager young paratroopers are silhouetted against the deep blue of the night sky.

The brave young men sit quietly, shoulder-to-shoulder, on benches lining the inside of the aircraft, listening only to the steady drone of the airplane engines.

They have trained for this moment; but, when the time comes, they will jump out into the unknown, none of them able to guess what awaits them at Utah Beach.

"I guess we were scared, but we were too green to remember," said Tony A. Bourisaw, who had a one-way ticket to Normandy on one of those planes as a private, 51 years ago.

"When the flak started, we knew we were getting close," said Richard L. Brinkley, then a staff sergeant. "It was still dark, but we were anxious to get out of the plane."

"When the light came on to stand up and hook up, we did that," Bourisaw said. "We left the plane about 1:15 a.m. If there was a thought in my mind, I can't remember what it was,"

"You could see tracers — hundreds and thousands of them. The sky was lit up ... it was like a three-ring circus," said Osie L. Burton, who was also a staff sergeant.

So began the "Rendezvous with Destiny" of the 101st Airborne Division (Air Assault) — a destiny that brought the "Screaming Eagles" through World War II, Vietnam, and most recently, actions in Saudi Arabia, Somalia and Haiti.

The fierce pride and close ties with comrades that develop in a unit that saw so much action brought more than 800 members of the 101st Airborne Division Association to Columbus and Fort Benning Aug. 2 through 5 for the division's 50th reunion.

The reunion brought together veterans of actions ranging from the Battle of the Bulge in Belgium to Hamburger Hill in Vietnam.

It brought together old comrades like Bourisaw, Brinkley and Burton, who served together from the unit's beginnings, and it gave them the opportunity to swap old stories and remember the good times and the bad.

Decked out in World War II jump gear, Vietnam-era fatigues and T-shirts and hats emblazoned with the eagles'-head patch that gave the unit its nickname, veterans of the 101st came from all over the United States to attend the reunion.

Brinkley even wore a camouflage scarf fashioned from a piece of the parachute he jumped with that night in Normandy.

He didn't think he'd be wearing it around his neck 50 years later, he said, but he was pinned down in the field where he landed for three hours, so he had plenty of time to cut it.

But destiny had a lot in store for the members of the 101st, no matter when they served.

For retired Command Sgt. Maj. A.B. Cannon, it meant service in three wars, five combat jumps and three combat infantryman badges.

For Chuck J. Luitgaren, who said he met his rendezvous with destiny in the A Shau Valley, it meant a long night alone on Hamburger Hill while his unit presumed him dead.

For retired Warrant Officer 2 Frederic A. Behrens, who flew helicopters in "Eagle dustoff" in Vietnam, it meant a medical evacuation mission gone wrong when he was shot down, wounded and eventually rescued.

"We had an extremely large amount of pride in our unit, and we wanted to carry on the tradition of the division," Behrens said.

"We were given a large burden to shoulder, and we did the best we could with it."

Over the years, 19 members of the division have been awarded the Medal of Honor — the military's highest award for valor. Eleven of those were awarded posthumously.

Remembering all the heroes of the 101st — decorated or otherwise — is what reunions like this one are all about, attendees said.

"We get together to commemorate the things the unit accomplished and to remember the people that didn't make it," Burton said.

"We left many good friends on that battlefield — all of us," Bourisaw said.

SCHOOL BELLS' RINGING

Senior highs require registration

By Donna S. Budjenska
Special to The Bayonet©

Fort Benning high school students and their parents should be gearing up now for the fall semester. Depending on where they live, whether it be on Fort Benning, in Columbus, Phenix City or Russell County, school starts between Aug. 23 and Sept. 5. In all cases, students cannot register themselves.

Fort Benning

Fort Benning has no high school, so on-post students eligible for grades 9 through 12 attend Spencer High School, 4340 Victory Drive.

And now's the time to register, school officials say.

"The sooner, the better," said Leon Phillips, director of student services for the Muscogee County School District. "They need to get in to get their classes lined up."

The registration process for Columbus schools requires two documents. Parents should bring proof of their address and the student's social security card to the Columbus-Robert Center, 539 Brown Ave., between 8 a.m. and 5 p.m. Monday through Friday now through the beginning of school, Sept. 5.

Proof of address could be a copy of a housing assignment, a utility bill bearing the parent's name or another document of that kind, Phillips explained.

Another important date to note is Aug. 29, when parents and students can verify the school assignment. At that time, students can sign up for classes.

Students who completed eighth grade at Faith Middle School on post in the spring and who still reside on post don't need preregistration prior to Aug. 29, according to June Langford, administrative secretary for the Muscogee County School District.

"Normally, Faith Middle School sends us a listing of students who will be attending Spencer," she said. Parents and students should still attend the Aug. 29 verification, however.

Students new to the area who have no records with the Muscogee County School District need to provide additional information: a birth certificate; the previous year's report card; proof of immunization on a Georgia state form; and proof of a physical exam. The immunization and physical may be obtained through Martin Army Community Hospital, according to Langford.

Columbus

Children of Fort Benning personnel who live off post in Columbus follow the same registration procedures as those who live on post. Off-post students in Columbus will be assigned to one of the seven area high schools based upon their location.

The Aug. 29 verification date is for all Muscogee County School District students.

Phenix City

Registration requirements for students new to the Phenix City Public Schools are similar to those for Muscogee County, according to Marie Long, school secretary. There is one high school, Central, 2400 Dobbs Drive, and students not already registered should do so between now and the first day of school, Aug. 28.

Parents and students must bring proof of residency; the student's original Social Security card; Alabama certificate of immunity (IMM-50); and a transcript, report card or withdrawal paperwork from the last school year.

Russell County

As with the other school districts, Russell County schools require proof of address, student's Social Security card, records from the last school attended, certified copy of birth certificate and updated shot records. Russell County also requires identification for the parents.

Registration has already taken place, but those not yet processed may call the school at (334) 855-4378.

The first day of classes at Russell County High School, 4699 U.S. Highway 431, Seale, Ala., is Aug. 23.

Immunizations and physicals

Martin Army Community Hospital does immunizations for both Georgia and Alabama schools on a walk-in basis Mondays through Fridays from 7:30 to 11:30 a.m. and 1 to 3:30 p.m. Those presenting themselves for shots must have a valid ID card and their medical records.

Physicals are done year-round for students in Georgia schools by appointment only and are only necessary for students enrolling in Georgia schools for the first time.

Appointments are scheduled for Wednesdays and can be made by calling the Eyes, Ears, Nose and Throat Clinic appointment line at 544-3041.

Fort Benning Schools

Fort Benning Schools will begin the 1995-96 school year Aug. 22. It's almost time for all students — kindergarten through eighth grade to register.

Registration will be conducted at all seven Fort Benning Schools through Aug. 18.

Hours for registration will be from 8:30 to 11:30 a.m. and from 1 to 3 p.m. each day. Parents are encouraged to register early.

All students who attended Fort Benning Schools last year must register for the 1995-96 school year. It is not necessary for parents of students who attended the Fort Benning Schools last year to bring any forms to the school, but there will be registration forms they will need to sign.

Children who preregistered during kindergarten roundup last May will also need to complete the registration process.

All returning students with special education services can register at their assigned school. New students who need special education services can call the Special Education Office (545-5520) before registration. Returning preschool special education students will be contacted late this month for registration.

Requirements for registration

• A child must attain the age of 5 years on or before Sept. 1 to enter the Fort Benning Schools.

• Birth certificates or other proof of birth will be required for children to be enrolled in kindergarten or first grade unless they attended kindergarten at Fort Benning last school year.

• Students registering at Fort Benning for the first time will be required to present a record of immunization at registration. This requirement will be strictly enforced.

For further information regarding registration in the Fort Benning Schools, call 545-2500.

community briefs

ON POST

FBMA program — The Fort Benning Management Association Dress for Success and Interview Techniques Program will be Thursday from 11:30 a.m. to 1 p.m at the Officers' Club.

The program coordinators are Shirley Sellers and Myrtle Chalkley and the assistant coordinator is Marilyn Williams. Mable Bailey, owner of School of Modeling and Cosmetology, will be the mistress of ceremonies.

The fall fashion models are Bruce Piper, Steve Magner, John Machovec, Sabrina A. Scott, Karine Cornett, Dacia White, Jessie Pettingel, Judy Hodder, Mary Burt, Pat Stutson and Carmen Zunica.

Escorting the models will be Dr. William C. Shirley and William Thomas. Delaphaine White, owner of Personal Touch Beauty Salon, will assist models with beauty supplies and accessories and hair styling. These fashions, which accent management and business attire, will be furnished by J.C. Penney.

For more information or purchase of tickets, call Bridget Horn-Brophy, Lisa Kelly or Mary Burt at 545-5656 or Myrtle Chalkley at 545-4539.

Blood drive — The American Red Cross is sponsoring a blood drive Aug. 18 from 9:30 a.m. to 3 p.m. in Classroom 5, Building 4.

Blood drawn each day only has a life span of about 42 days, so the Red Cross cannot stock supplies. The increased testing of the blood and the increased screening of donors to ensure the safety of the blood supply has added to the blood shortage. The need for blood is ever present.

Commissary closing — The Fort Benning Commissary will be closed Aug. 23 for Employee Appreciation Day.

Girl Scouts — The Fort Benning Girl Scouts are in need of volunteers to help fill the following position: Assistant service unit director, leaders, co-leaders, publicity, area coordinator, cookie manager, special events and other troop positions.

For more information, call Barbara Singleton at 689-7627.

Warrant officers meeting — The Fort Benning Chapter "Forever Forward" will have its monthly meeting Sept. 6 at the Fort Benning Officers' Club from noon to 1 p.m.

All members are requested to attend, and nonmembers are invited. The agenda will include installation of new officers.

For more information, call Chief Warrant Officer 4 Jerry Hanchett at 544-7123 or 544-6005 or Chief Warrant Officer 4 Oscar Pinkston at 544-1104 or 544-2242.

Wives' club — The International Wives' Club invites interested persons to come and visit every first Tuesday of the month at Building 2462, Collins Loop, Soldiers' Plaza, for coffee, cake and information.

For more information, call Olga Kelly at 687-6471 or Andrea Pitts at 687-6937.

Explorer Scout Program— Law Enforcement Post 988 sponsored by the Military Police Activity is looking for more members. If you know of a boy or girl interested in a law enforcement career or who just want to learn more about law enforcement, call Staff Sgt. Donnie Lucas at 545-1146. This program is open to anyone on or off post. Adult assistant leaders are welcome.

Watch found — A watch was found recently in the east parking lot of Infantry Hall, Building 4.

For more information, call Spc. Carl Box at 545-2218 or come by Room 111 in Infantry Hall.

Boy Scouts need volunteers — The Fort Benning-Pataula District Boy Scouts of America experienced a loss of youth membership and adult volunteer leaders. Numerous positions are available, such as assistant cubmasters and scoutmasters, district committee members in training, programs, activities, publicity, camping and "at large" members who serve to coordinate specific events such as Christmas tree sales, fishing rodeo or Fall Campree.

If interested in volunteering, call Lt. Col. Mark S. Cloth at 544-3901 or 682-4440. For detailed information about scouting activities, contact the district executive, Frank Eveans, at 327-2634.

Tot Town still open — Tot Town is still open. Need a break from the children? Do they need one from you? Do you have an appointment?

Bring the children to Tot Town. The hourly care program is available for you.

For more information, call 689-8772 or 689-6898. Reservations are encouraged.

OWC needs teachers — The Officers' Wives' Club is looking for teachers or instructors for the OWC fall activity registration.

If you have a special craft or skill you wish to teach, contact Louise Kelly at 685-0788 or Cambria Blain at 687-5626 by today.

Red Cross needs volunteers — The American Red Cross needs volunteers to fill the following positions: volunteer chairperson, co-hospital chairperson, fund-raising chairperson, publicity chairperson, youth chairperson and Dental Activity chairperson.

For more information, call Henry Edgars, American Red Cross station manager, at 545-5194.

Tot Town rates increase — Tot Town Child Development Center has new rates. The fee for children 6 weeks to 18 months is $2.75 per hour for the first child and $2.50 for additional children. Post volunteers pay $2.50 for this age group.

Fees for children 18 months to 12 years are $2.50 for the first child and $2.25 for additional children. Post volunteers will pay $2.25 per hour. Fees include meals and snacks.

Reservations may be made by contacting Tot Town. Reservations can be made two weeks to 24 hours in advance. Call 689-8698 or 689-8772 for reservations or information.

Waiting spouses' support group — A waiting spouses' support group has been formed. The group is open to all spouses whose sponsors have departed for unaccompanied tours. The group meets at the Family Unit Network Center, Building 359.

Call the FUN Center, 545-5602, to sign up for one of the two group sessions.

Summer camp — Troop 27 has a program that continues throughout the summer with meetings every Monday night. There is at least one outing every month and projects and activities for boys ages 11 to 17.

For more information, call Bo Terry at 682-0377 or Bill Paterson at 682-2298.

OWC piano lessons — The Officers' Wives' Club School of Performing Arts offers piano lessons for ages 4 through adult. Lessons are available Monday though Friday for 30 to 45 minutes. For information, call 687-3537.

Yard sales — A permit is required to conduct a yard sale on post. To get a permit, call your housing area Community Life Office, Monday through Friday, from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. or call the installation Community Life Office at 545-2830 or 545-5931.

AA — The Fort Benning Alcoholics Anonymous group meets every Monday, Thursday and Saturday at 7 p.m. in the basement of the Directorate of Community Activities, Building 241.

OFF POST

Toastmasters meeting — The Sundowners Toastmasters August meetings are scheduled for Monday and Aug. 28 at 6:30 p.m. in the Trophy Room of the Davidson Center at Columbus College

Can you stand up, speak up and shut up at the right time? Do you find it difficult to prepare and give a talk? Do you envy people who are able to express themselves effectively? You now have the opportunity to do something about it.

The Toastmasters Communication and Leadership program is presented in the friendly "learn by doing" atmosphere of a Toastmasters Club.

For more information, call 596-7648.

Scholarships available — The Better Business Bureau and Troy State University-Fort Benning are making available one undergraduate and one graduate scholarship (value $2,500 to $3,000) to qualified students for the 1995-96 school year.

Application deadline is Sept. 1, and applications are available in Room 208, Building 4. For more information, call 324-0712.

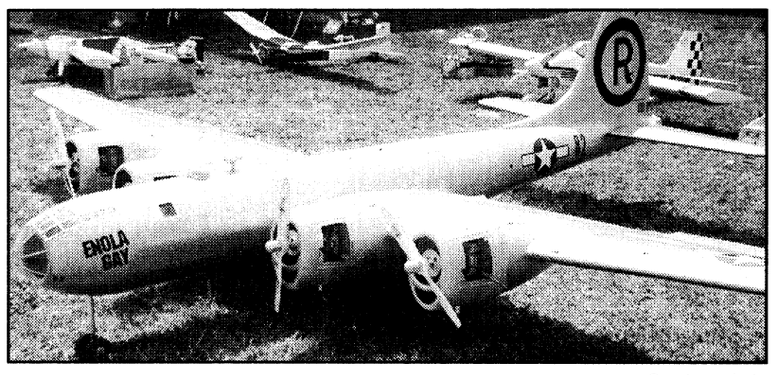
Fly-in features full-scale aircraft

Radio Control Flyers Association

The Columbus-Fort Benning Radio Control Flyers Association Inc. will host a "Sizzlin' Summer Giant Scale Fly-in" Aug. 19 from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. at the club's flying field.



The event is free, and the public is invited. The club expects to have about 60 pilots from Georgia, Alabama, Tennessee and Florida registered to fly more than 80 giant-scale, radio-controlled model airplanes throughout the day.

The "fly-in" will be restricted to replicas of full-scale aircraft having a wingspan of at least 80 inches for monoplanes and 60 inches for biplanes. Many airplanes will have wingspans of more than 12 feet and will be powered by a variety of engines capable of putting the aircraft through aerobatic maneuvers.

The highlight of the airshow will be a demonstration flight of a four-engine, scaled replica of a World War II B-29 heavy bomber. The model, weighing 100 pounds with a 16-foot wingspan, is expected to demonstrate four- and eight-point slow rolls and even inverted flight.

A concession stand will be open all day at the airfield, located south of the Fort Mitchell National Cemetery. Take U.S. Highway 431 south from Phenix City, turn left on Alabama Highway 165 and continue south to Russell County Highway 18. Turn left and go eight-tenths of a mile to the field entrance. Signs will be posted at the Highway 165/18 intersection.

The Columbus-Fort Benning Radio Control Flyers club was organized at Fort Benning in 1973 as a charter member of the Academy of Model Aeronautics. It is a nonprofit organization with more than 80 members from throughout the Chattahoochee Valley area to include Fort Benning. Membership is open to anyone with an interest in radio-controlled model flying. Club flight instructors are available to help new members learn to fly.

Learning center offers career program

Army Learning Center

The Army Learning Center located in Building 2611, Soldiers' Plaza, has a computer-based career planning program that can help individuals learn more about occupations and professions, the kind of training needed and appropriate schools available that offer the required training and education.

The program, called Discover, requires no previous computer knowledge. The system includes:

- An inventory to help you know where you are now in your career planning
- Inventories to measure your interests, abilities, experiences and values
- Ways to develop a list of occupations you should explore
- Ways to identify majors related to these occupations
- Extensive information about nearly 500 occupations
- Searches to identify schools, from a file of more than 7,000
- Financial aid information

For additional information, call 545-1436, or visit the Army Learning Center. Hours of operation are 7 a.m. to 4 p.m. Monday through Friday.

Donor drive

Seeks match for leukemia patient

Columbus Naval Reserve Center

The Department of Defense Marrow Donor Center and the Columbus Naval Reserve Center are having a donor drive Saturday from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. at the Columbus Naval Reserve Center, 414 4th St. in Columbus.

The purpose of the drive is to find a suitable donor for Sonny Crim, a 27-year-old member of the Alabama Naval Reserve who has been diagnosed with leukemia. A blood test determines suitability.

All active duty military, family members, Department of Defense civil service employees, national and drilling reserve personnel ages 18 to 55 are eligible.

For more information, call Sgt. David Dunner at 322-4670.

ask the judge

By George R. Smawley
Staff Judge Advocate's Office

Q: I have been told that there are going to be some changes to Army claims procedures for household goods and theft and vandalism. What are they, and when will they go into effect?

A: The U.S. Army Claims Service has recently published a revision to Army Regulation 27-20 (Claims) that will become effective Sept. 1. This revised regulation contains a number of changes that will affect claims procedures.

The first significant change concerns reconsideration rights after a household goods claim. Reconsideration actions are requests by an individual to have a claim reviewed for a second time to correct an error made in the initial adjudication. They are submitted to the local claims office and may ultimately result in the claim being reviewed by the U.S. Army Claims Service at Fort Meade, Md.

In the past, when an individual was dissatisfied with the settlement of a household goods claim following a government-sponsored move, he or she had up to one year in which to file a reconsideration request. Under the new regulation, reconsideration requests must be submitted to the local claims office within 60 days of settlement of the claim.

The second major change concerns claims for losses incident to service. In the future, claims for losses because of theft, vandalism, and other unusual occurrences will be limited to losses that occur at government quarters. For example, a claim for damage and theft from a vehicle parked in the parking lot at the Post Exchange at the Main Mall would no longer be payable. If, on the other hand, the individual is able to prove that the theft occurred at quarters, the claim would then be considered for payment.

Finally, the regulation adds the requirement that individuals must first file and settle claims for loss or damage to property with their insurance companies prior to receiving a settlement from the government. This applies to all personnel claims including vandalism, theft and damage to household goods during a governmen-sponsored move.

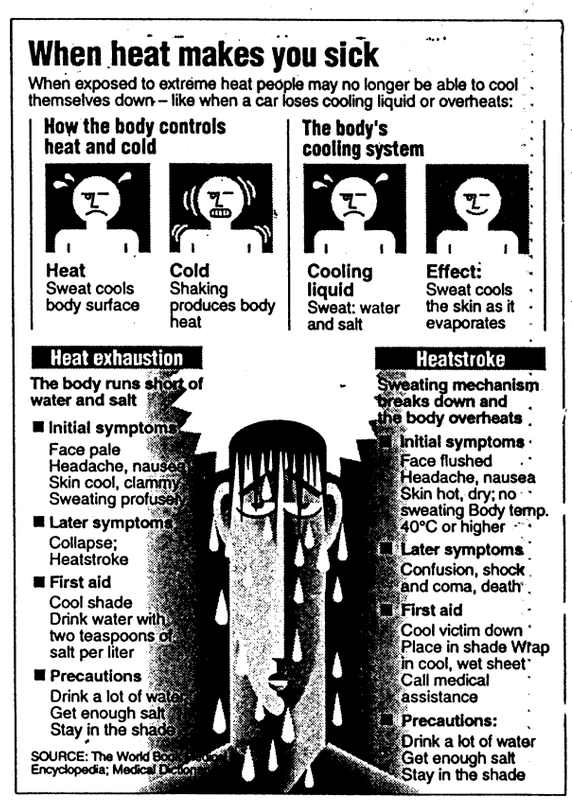
For more information, call the Fort Benning Claims Office, Office of the Staff Judge Advocate, at 545-2285.

Beat the heat with facts

By 1st Lt. Monica Dorsey
Occupational Health

Deaths from all causes increase during heat waves, and excessive heat is an important contributing factor, particularly among the elderly. During 1979-1991, excessive heat was responsible for a total of 5,224 deaths in the United States. During 1987-1988, 1,092 death certificates listed excessive heat as either the primary or a contributing cause of death.

These statistics emphasize the need to recognize risk factors such as obesity, tight or restrictive clothing, heavy meals and hot foods and alcohol and drugs and take preventive measures against them.



Persons at increased risk for heat-related illness include the very young (particularly infants), the elderly (such as persons aged 65 years or older), persons who are physically active in hot environments and fail to rest frequently or to drink enough fluids, and those unable to obtain adequate fluids or avoid hot environments. However, any person is at risk for severe or fatal heat-related illness if sufficiently exposed.

Heat can contribute to or increase underlying illness as well as be the primary cause of illness or death. The use of certain drugs may also increase the risk for heat-related illness. If you are currently on medication you should consult your physician about any side effects it might have. In addition, excessive alcohol consumption may cause dehydration and result in heat-related illness.

The risk for heat-induced illness is greatest before persons become acclimatized to warm environments. Acclimatization usually requires 10 to 14 days of exposure to heat.

The use of air conditioning reduces the risk for heatstroke and heat-related illness. Persons without home air conditioners should be encouraged and assisted in taking advantage of air-conditioned environments in private or public places (e.g., shopping malls, public libraries, and heat-wave shelters.) Persons should drink plenty of fluids and exercise only during the cooler parts of the day to reduce their risk for heat-related illness.

Other preventive measures include drinking water even when you are not thirsty, avoiding excessive salt intake and maintaining good physical condition.

Safeguard your children with video

Derus Media Service

Leeza Gibbons, host of Entertainment Tonight, and the National Center for Missing and Exploited Children urge parents to Kidprint their child. This August, Blockbuster Video stores nationwide will offer to parents the most important video they will ever own — Kidprint — a free videocassette recording of their child for emergency identification purposes.

Kidprint is simple and only takes a few minutes to complete. Parents bring their child to a participating Blockbuster Video store during the month of August, and a store employee will videotape the child on a special, complimentary VHS videocassette. Parents keep the videocassette, and, in the unfortunate event that their child is reported missing, they will have a vital record of their child to provide to the police. Unlike a still photograph, Kidprint captures the likeness, mannerisms and voice characteristics unique to each child.

For more information of the Kidprint program, contact your local Blockbuster Video store.

Clinic announces program changes

Fort Benning WIC Clinic

Height and weight measurements for the Women, Infants and Children program will no longer be done at Winder Clinic after Thursday.

If you were planning to go to the Winder Health Clinic for WIC referral completion (height and weight), go instead to the Fort Benning WIC Clinic, Building 2613.

Hours of operation are Tuesdays from 12:45 to 4 p.m. and the second and fourth Fridays of each month from 8:30 a.m. to 3:30 p.m.

If you have any questions concerning these changes, call the WIC office at 682-8369.

Fur-care tips: Grooming maintains pets' health, beauty

Veterinary Services

Pet grooming, when performed safely, is an important factor in preventive healthcare. Proper maintenance of pets' coats, skin, nails and ears can preclude many of the most common pet ailments. Three basic grooming measures that are important in maintaining animal health are: bathing, nail clipping and ear cleaning.

Bath time

The frequency at which dogs and cats should be bathed depends on the type of shampoo used and the coat condition of the animal. Medicated and flea shampoos should be applied as often as stated on the label. Shampooing for regular bathing purposes should occur not more than once every two weeks to avoid drying out an animal's coat. Because of the stress involved and their fastidious grooming habits, cats do not need to be bathed unless for medicinal or pest control purposes.

To protect the health and safety of the animal being bathed, measures should be taken to ensure that room and water temperatures are comfortable. Avoid getting water into the animal's eyes, nose, ears or mouth. Animals should be thoroughly wet before applying shampoo and lather should be worked down from the head and neck. Rinsing should be done several times in clear, fresh water. Any shampoo residue left on the pet's skin can cause itching and irritation. Do not blow dry. Animals should be towel-dried as much as possible and kept in a warm place until the coat and skin are completely dry. Frequent brushing helps keep coats and skin healthy between baths.

Clean ears

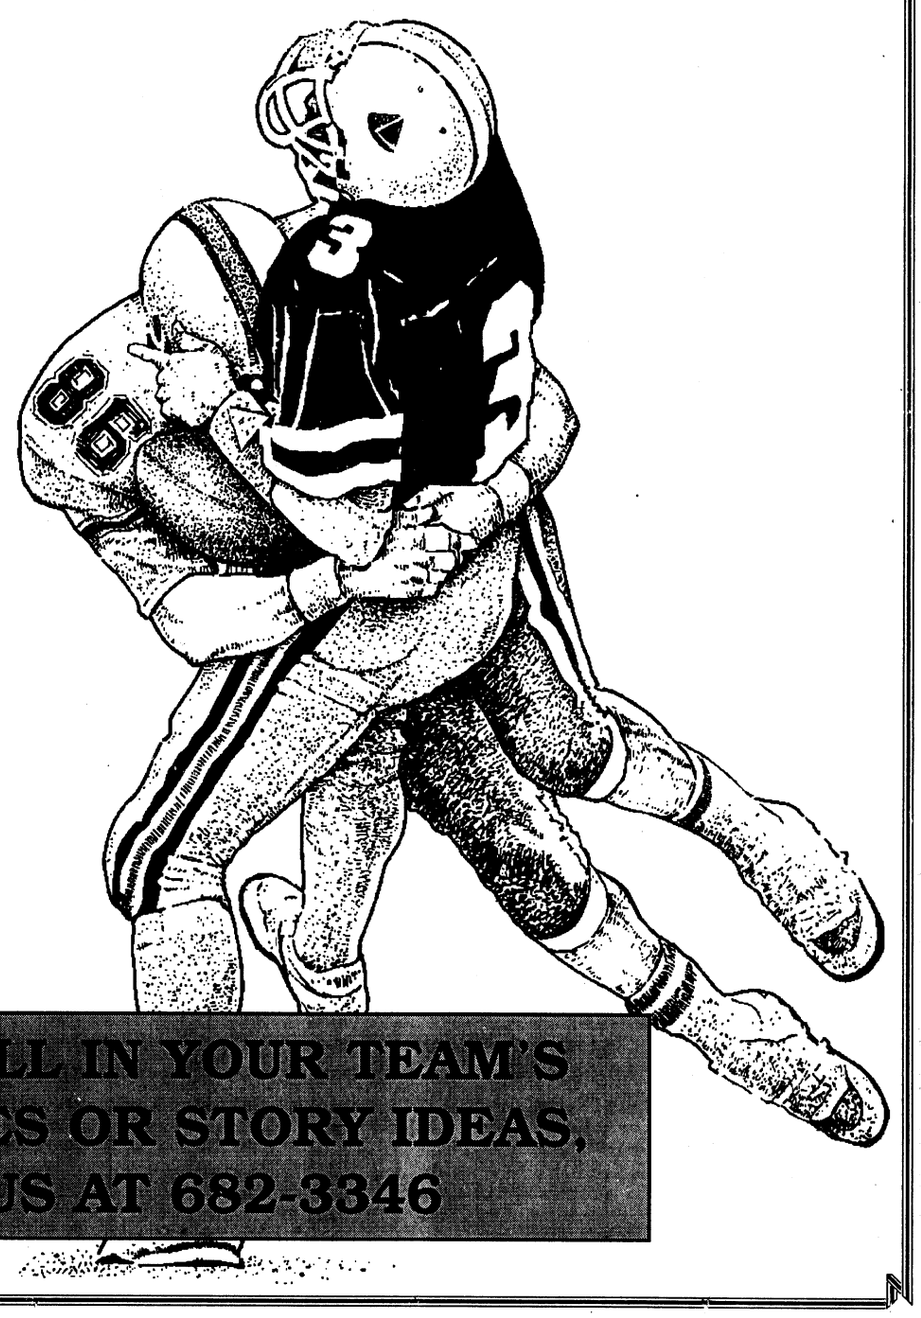
Ear cleaning is best done directly after bathing. Using a commercial veterinary ear cleaner and cotton balls, clean only the outer section of the ear. Tiny hairs inside the ear sweep debris to the outer area where it can be safely wiped away. Cotton swabs should never be used; they can cause permanent damage and may result in hearing loss.

Nail trimming

Nail trimming should be done monthly on dogs and cats to prevent long nails form tearing and cracking. The dew claw (on the side of the leg) is especially prone to becoming overgrown because it does not wear down. Safe nail trimming should be done using animal nail clippers for dogs and human nail trimmers on cats.

White claws held to the light will display a pinkish blood vessel running from the edge of the paw to the middle of the nail curve. Only the whitish nail extending past the edge of the blood vessel may be trimmed. Trimming too close to the edge of the vessel can result in bleeding and soreness. Dark nails, or those with less opacity, can be coated with mineral oil to make them more transparent. If the nail remains too dark to determine the location of the blood vessel, trimming the nail away in small increments may be necessary. Should the vessel be cut, bleeding can be slowed by applying direct pressure to the tip of the nail.

Special needs



Some breeds of dogs and cats have special grooming needs. Animals with longer coats may require frequent clipping that can be done at home or at a professional salon. Other breeds may have special allergies or intolerances for certain product ingredients. Consult a veterinarian about any specific questions or needs.

The Veterinary Treatment Facility is located in Building 265 on 10th Mountain Division Road. The hours are 8 to 11:30 a.m. and noon to 3 p.m. Monday through Friday (closed the last working day of the month for inventory and closed Wednesday afternoon for training). The telephone number is 545-4444.

H&R BLOCK INCOME TAX COURSE
STARTS SEPTEMBER 9, 1995
Thousands of people learn how to prepare income tax returns from H&R Block and then earn money as income tax preparers. H&R Block, the world's largest income tax preparation service, offers its Income Tax Course, starting September 9, 1995. Morning, evening and Saturday classes are available.
Experienced instructors teach tax law, theory and application. Classroom discussion and practice problems provide students with a thorough understanding of each tax topic included in the course. Students learn how to handle increasingly complex income tax situations as the course progresses.
Ideal for people who want to increase their tax knowledge, the course teaches students how to save money on their taxes and also prepares them for a rewarding career.
The affordable fee includes textbooks and supplies. Graduates receive Certificates of Achievement and continuing education units (CEU's). Qualified graduates of the course may be offered job interviews with H&R Block, but are under no obligation to accept employment.
Those interested in more information about the H&R Block Income Tax Course may contact the H&R Block office at Simons Plaza Shopping Center, 2511 Airport Thruway, Columbus, Georgia.

Priest in training

transitions from military to seminary

By Lori Egan
Bayonet staff writer

Some people may find it unusual to get out of the Army to become a Roman Catholic priest and then come back in to become a chaplain.

That is exactly what Sgt. Matthew D. Betters, a chaplain's assistant with the U.S. Army Infantry Center Chaplain Office, is doing.

Betters, whose last day at Fort Benning was Thursday, has been accepted into the Chaplain Candidate Program, which is a program that allows active duty personnel to enroll in seminary with the intention of becoming an Army chaplain after graduation.

To be accepted into the program, individuals have to have a bachelor's degree and be accepted by a seminary.

"People leave the Army every day, but not everyone leaves the Army to go into seminary," Betters said. "And not just seminary — I'm going to become a priest, a Roman Catholic priest."

In the Army, there are 1,115 chaplains, and there are only 125 priests.

"The Catholics are way understaffed right now at 11 percent," he said.

The Army's Catholic population is about 25 percent, and the Army bases its numbers for chaplain strength on its population figures, according to Chaplain (Lt. Col.) Ford G'Segner, deputy U. S. Army Infantry Center chaplain.

Betters, who begins seminary Aug. 20 at Seton Hall University in Newark, N.J., said you have to receive ecclesiastical endorsement, too.

"That means the church has to recognize you as a potential priest," he said.

After Betters graduates, he said he plans to spend three years as a priest in the civilian world, which is a requirement of his denomination; then he plans to come back on active duty. While in seminary, Betters will also be in the reserves.

"I will be wet behind the ears when I get out of the seminary," Betters said. "The church wants to make sure I have a little experience before releasing me to the Army because there aren't a lot of priests in the Army. I won't have a lot of mentors. They want to make sure I have a feel for what it is like to be a priest before coming back in.

"To come into the Army as a chaplain, you need to have permission from the bishop in charge of the diocese," he said.

The help received in finding a diocese and the support from the Army has been great, Betters said.

The atmosphere in the chaplain corps is very ecumenical, he said.

"The Army has an amazing corps, both interfaith and ecumenically," he said. "We work together as a real team, the unit ministry team.

"The chaplains, my supervisors here, have really jumped on the bandwagon to help facilitate this," Betters continued. "They were instrumental in pushing though the paperwork, and I'm going to owe my priesthood in part to my Protestant brothers."

When serving as a chaplain's assistant at Fort Leonard Wood, Mo., before coming to Fort Benning, Betters went to the field as a Eucharistic minister because of the shortage of priests.

"Going to the field as a representative of the Catholic Church enhanced my awareness of the vocation," he said.

"It was very rewarding to have soldiers come up to you and ask different faith questions and church-oriented questions, but I couldn't fulfill all of the qualifications of a priest because I'm not a priest. I'm not ordained, and I can't do other things and I wished I really could because I could see the need in the soldiers," he said.

"Through that ministry and also teaching religious education to seventh-graders, I realized I wanted to become a priest.

"I felt the military was the best place for me to serve. I really liked the idea of different faith groups working together — that we could all come together with the bottom line of serving the soldiers spiritually."

Swift change can bring stress, confusion

By Phillip F. Wright
3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment

Organizational changes are a way of life in the military. Those changes are happening now at Fort Benning, with more to come.

When change comes, thoughts occur such as "what will the new person in charge be like?" Along with factual information, serious and humorous stories emerge and grow during these phases in the process of change.

reflections

As I witness the preparation for and the actual changes of command, I realize how stressful the events are for those involved. Everything seems to happen at light speed; and, of course, everyone is too busy sometimes to understand orders correctly.

There is a story about an order and its transmission down through the ranks. I know nothing like this ever happens at Fort Benning, so just for fun, I'll share it with you.

The battalion commander issued an order to his executive officer: "Tomorrow evening at approximately 7, Haley's Comet will be visible in this area — an event that occurs only once every 75 years. Have the soldiers fall out in the battalion area in battle dress uniforms, and I wlll explain this rare phenomenon to them. In case of rain, we wlll not be able to see anything, so assemble the soldiers in the theater, and we will show them a film release of it."

The executive officer directed the adjutant to prepare the order. The wording changed — somehow altered by the word processor: "By order of the battalion commander, tomorrow at 7 p.m., Haley's Comet will appear above the battalion area. If it rains, fall the men out in BDUs and march them to the theater where this rare phenomenon will take place, something that occurs only once every 75 years."

The company commanders, upon receiving the order, were confused. Still, they passed it on to their lieutenants: "By order of the battalion commander in BDUs at 7 p.m., the phenomenal Haley's Comet will appear. The colonel will then give another order, something that occurs only every 75 years."

The lieutenants passed the order to their platoon sergeants: "Tomorrow at 7 p.m., the colonel will appear in BDUs in the theater with Haley's Comet, something that happens every 75 years. If it rains, the colonel will order the comet into the battalion area."

The squads received this order from their platoon sergeants. "Tomorrow, when it rains at 7 p.m., the phenomenal 75-year-old General Haley, accompanied by the colonel, will drive this comet through the battalion area theater in BDUs."

As we hurdle toward the next few months with training events, deployments and getting ready for the start of school, may we take some time to slow down and enjoy what is happening around us. Here is my spin on how one unknown author put it:

"Slow me down, Lord. Ease the pounding of my heart by the quieting of my mind. Steady my hurried pace with a vision of the eternal reach of time. Give me, amid the confusion of the day, the calmness of the everlasting hills. Break the tension of my nerves and muscles with the soothing music of the singing streams that live in my memory. Help me to know the magical, restoring power of sleep. Teach me the art of taking mini vacations — slowing down to look at a flower, to chat with a friend, to pat a dog, to read a few lines from a good book. Slow me down, Lord, and inspire me to sink my roots deep into the soil of Your enduring values, that I may grow toward You and thereby live in peace."

profile in excellence

Name: Capt. James M. Loffert

Award or recognition: Instructor of the Quarter
Unit or activity: Company A, 2nd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment
Job title: Senior platoon trainer
Years on the job: 1 1/2 years

What person has most influenced your career?
My first platoon sergeant, Sgt. 1st Class Robert Knight. He mentored and guided me through my first rifle platoon, reducing my cherry stem to a tolerable level.

Describe a memorable moment in your career.
April 17, 1993 — I was married to the former Jennifer Faight. Without her love and support I could not enjoy this current success.

What are your future career plans?
Transfer over to 3rd Brigade, 24th Infantry Division (Mechanized), in September, take command of a company and then see where the Lord leads me from there.

What others have to say : He is the best instructor and best captain in the battalion. He is an excellent role model, mentor and trainer. He is admired and respected by his superiors, peers and students. He is probably the finest junior officer with whom I have served.

Contracting director receives 'fellow' award

Directorate of Contracting

The National Contract Management Association's national board of directors voted July 22 to bestow its "Fellow" award to John Machovec, director of Contracting. The organization is the national organization for contract management professionals.

This status is given to those who have made significant contribution to the field of contract management and to the association.

With this election, Machovec becomes a member of the NCMA Council of Fellows.

Machovec is also the national director for the local chapter and has been a certified professional contract manager since 1991. He has been the director of Contracting at Fort Benning since March 1992.

As part of the association portion of the stress-fire match, the competitor must match the symbols on the card with the symbols on the targets.

Shooters participate in stress-fire match

By Brian R. Voller
Bayonet staff writer

Going to a firing range and qualifying within the standards is a stressful thing. Going to the range and becoming part of a competition adds another level of stress. Now, just imagine adding the competition aspect, the element of time and a man with a paintball gun who gets to shoot at you, but you can't shoot back.

These are all elements of the Fort Benning Rifle and Pistol Club's newest competition, the stress fire match.

"This competition is different from most tactical matches because it is a more action-orientated type of competition," Jim Graham, assistant manager of the pistol club, said. "This type of thing is for the studs because it's very physically tough, and you have to concentrate on what you're doing."

The competition starts with a 100-yard run to a fence where a medical bag, weighing 50 pounds, is on the ground.

The competitor must grab the bag and carry it back to the starting line and place on the ground. Once the bag is put down the competitor hides behind a large wooden disk because Lenny Jones, of Paintball Action Games, can now engage the competitor.

After donning the safety mask, the competitor makes his way between five more of the wooden disks. Tactical maneuvers, such as the high crawl and low crawl, must be used because the competitor will lose points every time he is shot.

After completing the disk obstacle, the competitor immediately jumps into a foxhole where he must engage two steel targets with a 9mm pistol.

From there he must get out of the foxhole and move to the next foxhole for the association portion of the competition. Here, four targets are placed in front of the competitor, each with a different symbol on it. The competitor must pick up an index card in front of him and look at the two symbols on it. He must then match the symbols on his card with the symbols on the targets, and fire two rounds into each target.

After the association section, the competitor has to engage seven steel targets. For every one of those steel targets the competitor misses, Jones has that many chances to shoot the competitor.

If the competitor misses any of those targets he then has to low crawl behind wooden obstacles that prevent Jones from getting a direct view of the competitor.

After the competitor has completed the low crawl portion, he must then climb into the final foxhole where a cigar box is waiting for him. .

Six rounds are placed inside the cigar box, four of which do not fit the modified AK-47 the competitor must fire. The competitor must figure out which rounds fit inside the rifle, and then he must fire the two rounds into the targets in front of him. When this is complete the timer is stopped and the competition is over.

Lt. Col. Richard Bass, Dental Activity, said the range is different because it adds another dimension to the usual firing range training.

"It's nice do something different," Bass said. "It's a lot of fun and hard work, and it forces you to adapt to the situation as you go through the course."

Alexandra Smith, a civilian who competed on the course, said she believes this course is good for women who have guns in the house.

"I was the only woman out there today," Smith said. "I think more women should participate in this kind of competition because it teaches you how to fire under the pressure.

"I found out that I can't shoot very well under stress."

The next Pistol Club competition will be conducted Sept. 9 beginning at 7 p.m. on English Range.

This will be a night fire competition, and new or beginner competitors are encouraged to come.

CG honors Fort Benning boxers

By Brian R. Voller
Bayonet staff writer

The Fort Benning boxing team was honored by Maj. Gen. John W. Hendrix, commanding general, Aug. 1 for its performance in the Georgia Games July 23.

The team sent six boxers to the Georgia Games and came back with four gold medals and one silver.

Hendrix said he appreciated the performance of the team and he wanted them to "keep chugging" and doing the best they could because they never know how they might end up. Hendrix presented each boxer with a Fort Benning coin.

Charles Kirkland, head coach of the boxing team, said he was happy with Hendrix's recognition of the team and hoped it would improve support for the boxing team.

"I've been coaching this team for four years, and we're just starting to get noticed," Kirkland said. "The public support aspect of the sport is something I have to get good at. I was a boxer for a lot of years. Now I have to get used to a different aspect of the sport."

Jose Mercado, Battery A, 4th Battalion, 41st Field Artillery Regiment, took a Gold Medal when he finished off his opponent in the second round with a right hand knockout.

Both Eric Verzola, Battery B, 4th Battalion, 41st Field Artillery Regiment and Boyd Murphy, Headquarters and Headquarters Battery, 4th Battalion, 41st Field Artillery Regiment, took golds in their weight classes with Verzola winning a decision and Murphy winning on points.

Tremain Maynard, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 4th Battalion, 41st Field Artillery Regiment also scored a knockout when he stopped his opponent in the third round.

The only Silver Medal the boxers brought home came because two Fort Benning boxers had to fight each other. Verzola beat Rene' Gomez, headquarters and Headquarters Company, 553rd Transportation, by decision in three rounds.

Kirkland said he feels confident that his boxers' future performances will help improve the Fort Benning boxing program.

"We've got a good program here at Fort Benning, and I really appreciate the general recognizing us," Kirkland said. "I've got fighters coming from other posts who want to fight with my team.

"We've got a couple of guys trying out for the Olympic team and we have a female boxer (Tara Sweda of Headquarters and Headquarters Detachment, 3rd Brigade, 24th Infantry Division). Hopefully, we can establish the premier boxing team here at Benning."

Company C, 1/29th takes basketball tourney

By Brian R. Voller
Bayonet staff writer

Company C, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment, defeated the 988th Military Police Company 55-34 to take the championship in the 29th Infantry Regiment Summer Basketball Tournament at the Harmony Church Fitness Center Aug. 3.

Speed and fitness took a quick and heavy toll on the 988th MPs as they were run up and down the court by the much smaller and much quicker 1st battalion.

The 1st Battalion moved the ball around the floor and relied on its speed to force the 988th into mistakes.

Elliot Reid dropped in two, three-pointers and a deuce while James Davis threw in two field goals and a three-pointer in the first period. The period ended with 1st Battalion ahead comfortably, 27-14.

The second period showed a slower pace by the 1st Battalion, but more shooting by both teams.

The 988th seemed to respond to the slower pace by scoring 21 more points by the end of the game, but it was not enough to defeat the 1st battalion who put 28 more points of their own points on the board.

Reid, who finished the game with 12 points, including the two three-pointers, was named the most valuable player of the championship game.

Isaiah Freeman, head coach of the 1st Battalion, said he was pleased with the team's performance.

"We are a small team at every position," Freeman said. "We had to play smart, and we had to use our speed to beat some of the power teams. The team came through and did everything right."

Thomas Smith, head coach of the 988th, said his team didn't get to play the type of game it wanted to play but that 1st Battalion still did well.

"We wanted to play a different kind of game than what happened out there today," Smith said. "It was just one of those days. They were a good team, and they proved they were the best team."

Both coaches emphasized the fact there were no individual standouts on their teams. They considered their first and second-place finishes a complete team effort.

Results from the rest of the tournament put Bradley Instructor Company, 1st Bn., 29th Inf. Regt. in third place, and Co. B, 317th Eng. Bn. in fourth. The 324th Forward Support Battalion took home the fifth-place spot and Co. A, 1st Bn. 29th Inf. Regt., rounded out the tournament with sixths-place.

The tournament concluded with the presentation of awards, conducted by Col. Robert Fulcher Jr., commander of the 29th Inf. Regt., who said he enjoyed the competition of the tournament because it helps prepare the soldiers for battle.

The trophies for the team's performance were presented along with two honorary plaques that were presented to Chris Winterman, assistant sports director at Fort Benning.

The 1994 Commander's Cup was also given to Headquarters, and Headquarters Company, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment which received the cup for earning the most points in 1994's Commander's Cup competition.

The point totals are the total points received during basketball, volleyball, softball and football.

Benning graduates first two female Drill Sgts

By Shannon Day
Special to The Bayonet©

The first two females to attend drill sergeant school at Fort Benning graduated Aug. 1 at the Recreation Center on Sand Hill.

One of them, Staff Sgt. Cynthia F. Jackson, from Martin Army Community Hospital, won the Army Physical Fitness Test award for scoring 288 points.

Sgt. Denise A. Dillon, personnel administrator, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 3rd Battalion, 24th Infantry Brigade also completed the course.

"I thought if I could jump out of an airplane, I could do anything," Jackson said. "Now I know that by completing this course, I really can. The school has instilled confidence in me."

"It was tough, but it also instilled pride in me," Dillon said.

There is no other school in the Army where a soldier has so many written and performance tests, usually two or three each week, according to Master Sgt. Jackie McGriff, commandant, Fort Benning Drill Sergeant School.

"Not only was the course stressful, but being the only two females was rough sometimes," said Jackson.

Dillon and Jackson agreed there weren't any problems between the males and females, and they were expected to attain the same high standards the men were expected to meet.

"We want the school to be competitive so it's a challenge for both," McGriff said.

"For a female to succeed here, she must come highly motivated and physically fit," he said. "She shouldn't expect to be treated any differently than the males."

> "For a female to succeed here, she must come highly motivated and physically fit."
> — Master Sgt. Jackie McGriff
> commandant, Fort Benning Drill Sergeant School

McGriff said the reason there hadn't been any females attending the school here was simply because no one had changed the regulation to allow females into the school.

The changes to the regulation had just been finalized, allowing Dillon and Jackson to attend the school.

Before the Army started downsizing, there were many drill sergeant schools; but, now there are only three left. The other two at Fort Jackson, S.C.; and Fort Leonard Wood, Mo. Both train females.

"With the drawdown, we have to utilize our full resources," McGriff said, "by changing the regulation so females can attend the school here."

Citizen-soldiers train to become officers

By Thomas W. Mehl
Officer Candidate School

While a cadet at West Point, Robert A. Craft said he used to look down on the National Guard.

As fate would have it, though, a family emergency caused the 23-year-old Blackmore, Va., native's discharge from "The Long Gray Line" in 1992 after three grueling years.

Today, Craft is one of 40 officer candidates completing the Army Reserve course of the U.S. Army Office Candidate School.

"I don't look down upon the National Guard anymore," said Craft, who enlisted in the Virginia Army National Guard three months after his release from West Point. "The role of the citizen-soldier cannot be ignored. I'm here at OCS to finish the job I started in 1989 at West Point."

National Guard and Reserve soldiers have the option of completing federal OCS instead of a state-run OCS program or ROTC. Once a year, in the summertime, a 10-week condensed OCS course is offered to soldiers of the reserve component.

Sgt. 1st Class Dennis Keck, tactical noncommissioned officer in Company A, 3rd Battalion, (OCS), 11th Infantry Regiment, said it is important for prospective officers of the reserve components to train with the active force "in order to maintain one set of standards."

Keck, 46, a decorated Vietnam veteran, is one of a handful of cadre members at OCS who are actually members of the National Guard serving on active duty at Fort Benning. Keck, a member of the Arkansas Army National Guard, has served 19 years in the active and reserve component. He said the officer candidates who come to Fort Benning have a distinct advantage over their peers who train at state-run academies.

"The exposure to the active component is definitely an advantage," Keck said. "The first two weeks of the program are very difficult for reserve component candidates due to the amount of physical training and emotional stress placed on them"

As a testament to the difficulty of the training, of the 64 candidates in Company A who started OCS June 5, 40 will receive the gold bar of a second lieutenant's commission Aug. 16.

The 40 candidates came to Fort Benning form all across the nation — from New Hampshire to Hawaii. One of them is 24-year-old David Kulniszewski, Buffalo, N.Y., and a member of Co. B, 2nd Bn., 108th Inf. Regt. He is a veteran of nearly three years in the New York Guard and is looking forward to becoming an officer in his old unit where he will be in command of his younger brother, Joseph.

"OCS is good training for life and great leadership training overall," Kulniszewski said. "This was the best route to a commission for me. I could have gone through ROTC, but I prefer OCS — it is enlisted who have proved themselves in the ranks (and now are) getting an opportunity to lead their peers."

Craft, Kulniszewski and the other 38 candidates who comprise RC Class 1-95 must now accept the responsibility of being leaders.

"It is important to instill in these future officers a sense of urgency and mindset oriented 100 percent toward the military," Keck said.

The commander of Company A, Capt. Steve Goodroad, praised the candidates.

"This has been a good class," he said. "The 40 officer candidates who are graduating are as committed and competent as any we've graduated in the 18 months I've been here."

Early retirement to fall under new system

Soldiers who take early retirement to see less money

By Joe Burlas
Army News Service

Soldiers who take 15-year early retirements in 1996 will likely see a little less money in their retirement checks than those who opted to do the same in recent years.

While the 15-year early retirement offer has been a popular tool to help downsize the military, next year will be the first time that soldiers who enlisted under the high-three retirement system will be eligible to retire.

"Retirement considerations can be confusing because there are three different retirement systems out there -- traditional, high-three and Military Retirement Reform Act of 1986," said Lt. Col. Jim Reeves, chief of the Compensation and Entitlements Branch, Deputy Chief of Staff for Personnel.

"Soldiers who retire under the high-three system will see about $30 less a month than those who have retired under the traditional system with the same amount of active service," he said.

The three retirement systems are based upon when the soldier first entered active service.

Soldiers who entered the Army before Sept. 8, 1980, fall under the traditional retirement system. Under this system, retirement pay is calculated by multiplying 2.5 percent by the number of years of service times final basic pay.

Those who entered the Army between Sept. 8, 1980, and July 31, 1986, fall under the high-three retirement system and as a group are becoming eligible for the offered 15-year retirements.

High-three retirement compensation is determined the same way as the traditional system but uses the average base pay of the last three years of active service. This means that time-in-grade increases and other pay raises during the the last three years of active service are averaged out — resulting in a slightly smaller base pay figure than compared to the final base pay figure used in the traditional system.

Soldiers who entered the service on or after Aug. 1, 1986, are under the MRRA retirement system.

Retirement pay under MRRA is computed the same as the high-three system but subtracts one percent for each year of service less than 30.

Both the traditional and high-three retirement systems give full cost of living allowance adjustments annually. Under MRRA, COLAs are one point less than the consumer price index each year until the age of 62. At 62, a one-time, catch-up COLA is given and then the CPI-minus-one method continues for each following year.

Current DCSPER statistics show that 18 percent of the Army falls under the traditional retirement system, 19 percent under the high-three and 63 percent under MRRA.

For those who are not sure which retirement system they fall under, Reeves advises them to contact their local military personnel office.

"Retirement compensation is an important retention tool," said Reeves. "Commanders need to know about the three retirement systems so that when they're counseling, mentoring and re-enlisting soldiers, they're putting out the right information."

Fiscal 1996 Early Retirement

Early retirement is being offered under the following categories:

- Any sergeants promotable with a basic active service date before Sept. 30, 1978
- Any NCO with 18 or more years of service who has signed a DCSS or been selected for a bar to reenlistment under QMP (Soldiers selected for QMP with less than 18 years are not eligible.)
- Early retirement will also be offered to soldiers who meet each of the following criteria: sergeants promotable; has greater than 15, but less than 18 years of service in FY 96; ETS is in FY 96, 97 or 98; has more than 15 years, 29 days at ETS; not selected for QMP; reenlisted before Oct. 1, 1993
- Voluntary separation incentive and special separation benefit are not scheduled to be offered in FY 96
- No enlisted Selective Early Retirement Benefit or reduction in force is planned in FY 96.

The 3rd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment will have a change of command today at 9 a.m. on York Field. Lt. Col. Scott L. Armbrister will succeed Lt. Col. Donald B. Chung as commander.

Chung is transferring to Headquarters, Training and Doctrine Command at Fort Monroe, Va.

Armbrister comes to 3rd Battalion after serving in Washington, D. C., with the Office of the Deputy Chief of Staff for Operations, Training Directorate.

Armbrister enlisted in the Army in 1974 as an infantryman, attended Officer Candidate School in 1978 and was named honor leadership graduate on receiving his infantry officer commission.

He has served in command and staff assignments both stateside and overseas during his Army career including platoon leader, company commander and assistant battalion operations officer with the 1st Battalion, 23rd Infantry, on the demilitarized zone in Korea.

Armbrister is a graduate of the Infantry Office Basic and Advanced courses and the U.S. Army Command and General Staff College. He has a bachelor's degree from Columbus College and a master's degree from Central Michigan University.

His awards include the Defense Meritorious Service Medal, Meritorious Service Medal, Joint Service Commendation Medal, Joint Service Achievement Medal, Good Conduct Medal, Army Achievement Medal, Overseas Ribbon and the Expert Infantryman and Parachutist badges.

Armbrister and his wife, Mikyong, have two children.

CTC to share lessons learned

TRADOC News Service

FORT LEAVENWORTH, Kan. — Virtually every day of the year, U.S. Army units "go to war." The Army's Combat Training Centers, in the U.S. and Germany, serve as daily battlefields where Army units hone their warfighting skills.

The Army uses the Center for Army Lessons Learned to capture combat-relevant lessons resulting from the training at the CTCs as well as "real world" Army operations around the world.

CALL's CTC Division serves as the focal point for lessons coming from the training centers, with the objective of quickly turning successful techniques and procedures around to the rest of the Army. This allows units to incorporate the lessons into their training before they deploy for a training center or a real world operation.

CALL uses several mediums to make the lessons available to the Total Army.

The "CTC Quarterly Bulletin" and "CTC Trends" publications and specific subject newsletters such as "Tactical Operations Center," go out to CALL's normal Total Army distribution.

CALL also puts these publications "on line." CTC Division also distributes, upon request, the CTC produced "How To" videos covering subjects as diverse as building "Individual and Vehicle Fighting Positions" or dealing with "Media on the Battlefield."

Units wanting copies of CTC and other CALL products can call DSN 552-9581 or (913) 684-9581.

PERSCOM temporarily freezes overseas moves

By Joe Burlas
Army News Service

A recent U.S. Total Army Personnel Command message announced that soldiers on orders for September moves going to or returning from overseas assignments may not report to their new duty stations until Oct. 9.

The permanent change of station delay affects approximately 1,400 soldiers.

The PCS-delay program is intended to make up $8 million in the fiscal 1995 PCS budget. Early indications from the field show that the savings target will be met.

Department of the Army statistics show the average overseas PCS move to cost $12,000 for officers and $7,000 for enlisted soldiers.

Not all soldiers on orders for moves in September will have to push back their move dates. Exceptions include: assignments to and from Korea; assignments to and from nominative assignments and special management commands; assignments to and from drill sergeant school; permanent change of station schools (20 weeks or longer); temporary duty schools en route; base closure and realignment, unit and inactivation moves; approved compassionate reassignments; assignments to and from command for colonels and lieutenant colonels and command sergeant major positions; assignments for soldiers completing initial entry training; soldiers moving from one overseas assignment to another; and officers assigned to judge advocate general and chaplain corps positions.

The PCS delay will require affected soldiers to either take a long leave en route to their new duty station or remain at their current duty station for up to 40 days more than originally scheduled.

The program does not prohibit families of affected soldiers from moving in advance of the service member. Local military personnel offices have instructions to amend affected orders to the new October report date.

WILKES
REGIONAL MEDICAL CENTER
Our Team...Dedicated to Excellence

Greensboro, North Carolina

Hospital-Based: OB/GYN Generalist
Internal & Family Medicine: Private Practice

The Women's Hospital of Greensboro is recruiting 2 OB/GYN Generalists for a busy inpatient practice. The primary responsibility is teaching residents, medical students and physician assistants. Call is seven nights per month.

Also in Greensboro, we have several private practice opportunities for both Family and Internal Medicine. The positions range from joining large, multi-specialty groups, to medium-sized single specialty, to joining a solo doctor.

Greensboro, with a population of 190,000, is large enough to offer recreational activities to suit just about everyone's tastes -- parks within a mile of every resident's home, minor league hockey and baseball, the symphony, museums, five colleges/ universities, and much more! If you are interested in learning more, please call Pamela Lietz at 800-476-6737 or forward your CV to her at:

ANIMAL NUISANCES

Learning to live with wild animals

By Richard Brill
Special to The Bayonet©

While you probably won't find any lions, tigers and bears prowling about Fort Benning, you just might bump into a variety of other critters, though very few of them pose any harm to humans.

Whether deer are munching on your prize petunias or squirrels have decided to share your home, knowing whom to call or what to do if animals become a nuisance will help give you, and the animals, peace of mind.

The Natural Resources Branch deals with wild animals that have become a nuisance or that need assistance, according to Robert King, wildlife biologist.

Past nuisance cases on post have involved armadillos, deer, snakes, bats, pigeons, chimney swifts, racoons, squirrels, skunks, foxes and other mammals, King said.

"Often the degree that animals are perceived as a nuisance depends on the knowledge and sensitivities of the person making the complaint," King said. "Some people are terribly frightened of wild animals while others are delighted to see them in their yards."

King said the bottom line is that most animals are just passing through and will leave humans alone, provided the animals themselves are left alone and not teased, provoked, handled or fed. In cases where animals are foraging for food and causing damage to residents' yards and gardens, Natural Resources personnel can use spray deterrents and other non-lethal methods, he said.

King said the Natural Resources Branch receives numerous complaints concerning snakes.

"Many people call in and swear a poisonous snake is in their yard," he said. "More often than not, the snake is just a harmless rat snake." People calling in about snakes need to be able to provide as accurate a description as possible of the snake's size and coloration patterns to assist Natural Resources personnel in deciding how to respond to the case, he said.

While squirrels and bats are themselves harmless, they can become a destructive nuisance if they decide to inhabit people's homes, he said. Natural Resources employs effective methods of dealing with both of these animals.

King said to never kill a bat if one is found inside your home.

"The bats in this area are insect-eating bats and they will not attack people or bite unless they are caught by hand and held," he said. Capture the bat by placing a container over it and slipping a piece of cardboard under the container to keep the bat inside. Then release the bat outside, he said.

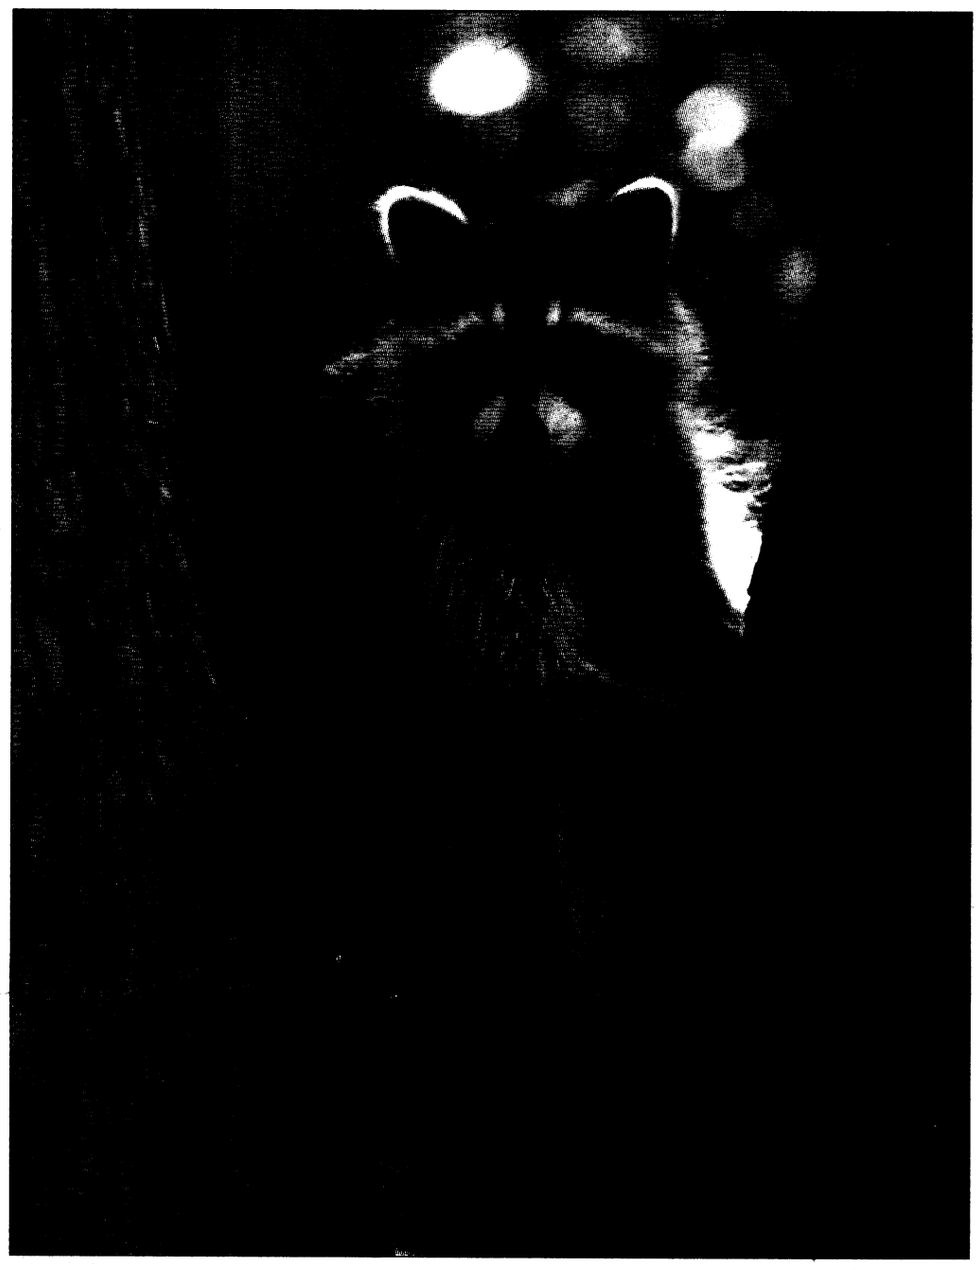
Other cases involve baby birds that are found outside of their nests or fawns that are found who seem to be separated from their mothers.

Birds that have fallen from a nest can be picked up and placed back in the nest, King said. If a bird is hopping around it may have just completed its maiden flight and will eventually leave on its own, he said.

"Fawns are sometimes separated from their mothers and people think they should try to help the fawn," King said. "I guarantee that if the mother is still alive, she will be back to get her fawn. They have an instinct like you would not believe. We will only pick up fawns if we know for a fact that the mother has been killed."

King also warned residents not to feed any of the alligators that dwell in various post ponds.

"Georgia Law 27-3-10 expressly forbids the feeding of alligators, and violators are subject to a $200 fine and 30 days confinement," King said. "It's a serious matter because if the alligators become used to people feeding them they can become more brazen and inflict injury or even death on unwary humans intent on giving them handouts."



King said it's impossible to give advice that will cover every possible situation, given the large variety of animals on post. He encouraged people to call Natural Resources if they have questions or problems with wild animals.

"We have a staff of highly trained wildlife biologists who are happy to lend their expertise," King said. "Personally, I enjoy working with the public and helping to educate them about animals."

King said a little patience and understanding will go a long way when dealing with animal problems.

"Often the animals have just inadvertently strayed into inhabited areas," he said. "They are frightened and just want to get out. They aren't out to hurt people."

Post residents experiencing problems with wild animals should call the Natural Resources Branch at 544-6206 or 545-7319 weekdays from 7:45 a.m. to 4:15 p.m. Cases that occur after these hours or that involve domestic animals, such as cats and dogs, are handled by the Animal Control Division of the Military Police.

Federal Employees' Week begins Monday

By Lisa M. Hibbert
Bayonet staff writer

The Federal Women's Program Committee will host the 20th Federal Employees' Week Monday through Aug. 25.

The theme for this year's week is "Vision Year 2000: Strategies for Survival in the Work Place."

The week's activities will emphasize the skills needed to accomplish the various tasks expected in a high-tech work environment during the 21st century.

Some of the seminar topics include nutrition, physical fitness, mastering communication skills and achieving career satisfaction.

Seminar facilitators Charles W. Collins Jr., senior financial consultant with Merrill Lynch, will talk about financial planning, and Mildred Watts of the Directorate of Civilian Personnel will speak about enhancing your career during downsizing.

Monday's classes are "Health, Nutrition and Weight Control" from 9:30 to 11:30 a.m. and "Restorative Arts — Physical Fitness" from 1:30 to 4 p.m..

Classes for Tuesday are "How You Can Achieve Career Satisfaction" from 9:30 to 11:30 a.m. and "Mastering Communication Skills," 1:30 to 3:30 p.m.

Wednesday's classes include "Empty Nest Syndrome" from 9:30 to 11:30 a.m. and "Developing a Positive Self-Esteem" from 1:30 to 3:30 p.m.

Classes for Thursday are "Things You Wanted to Know But Didn't Know Whom to Ask About Federal Income Tax" from 9:30 to 11:30 a.m. and "Financial Planning and Money Management" from 1:30 to 3:30 p.m.

The week will come to an end Aug. 25 with "Enhancing Your Career During Downsizing" from 9 to 11 a.m..

All of the programs will be open to all civilian and military personnel.

All of the activities will take place in Classroom 21, Infantry Hall, Building 4.

For more information, call Barbara Collins at 545-6423.

6th RTB to resume waterborne training

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Fort Benning officials have announced that waterborne training at the Florida Ranger Camp, Eglin Air Force Base, would resume with Ranger Class 10-95 next week.

Waterborne training at 6th Ranger Training Battalion was suspended Feb. 15, 1995, after four students died during training in the Florida swamps.

While waterborne training accounts for only four days of the Florida phase of training, Fort Benning officials reassessed its entire program of instruction for safety.

Following a thorough investigation into the February 1995 accident, numerous corrective actions were reviewed and approved by Fort Benning's Commanding General Maj. Gen. John W. Hendrix. These corrective actions include:

• Installation of a 2,000-gallon emergency refuelling capability for medical evacuation helicopters at Camp Rudder and establishing a fuel handler agreement with Eglin Air Force Base.

• Installation of permanent water markers to measure water depth. Additionally, in the near future, the Corps of Engineers will install remote weather sensors, which report water temperatures, levels and currents, and air temperatures at relevant locations along the river, drop-off points and swamp routes. This is expected to be completed by October and will enhance safe training.

• Identified and narrowed the boundaries of standard training lanes for movement of students through the swamp. Each lane has only one boat drop site, with an alternate site located on dry land. When training, Ranger instructors will further mark training lanes with color-coded poles which can be easily identified by aircraft under limited visibility conditions. Ranger instructors will conduct a reconnaissance of the lanes by walking the lanes on each day of training before students are allowed on the lanes.

• 6th Ranger Training Battalion has purchased whisper microphones for its nontactical radios to eliminate confusion resulting from radio traffic.

• 6th Ranger Training Battalion acquired 12 precision lightweight global-position receivers carried by Ranger Instructors to confirm locations to aid in battle-tracking and facilitating air MEDEVAC rescue.

• Development of a standard operating procedure to obtain and use river level forecast information. Camp officials also arranged for up-to-date weather forecasts and water conditions with Okaloosa County, Florida, Department of Emergency Services.

• Upgraded battalion standard training procedures and command and control processes, which includes gathering detailed advanced information on weather, river, swamp and student conditions to better facilitate decision making and safe training.

• The standard operating procedure

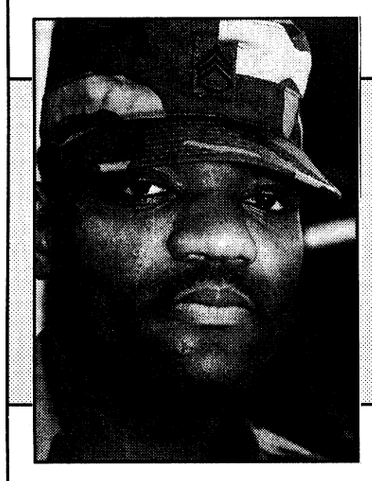
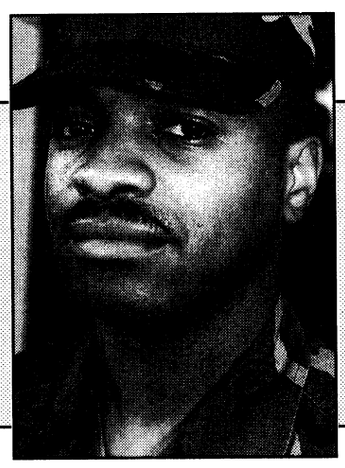
VARIOUS VOICES



As a parent, how do you talk to your child about preventing sexual abuse?

Lt. Col. Brian R. Zahn, 2nd Battalion, 18th Infantry Regiment — "We talk to our kids about what is appropriate and not appropriate when it comes to their interaction with adults, and to come to us if they ever feel as if they have been violated."

Monica Orentlicher, family member — "I've told them that 'if someone touches you somewhere and you don't like it — come and tell me.' "



Staff Sgt. James G. Davis, Headquarters and Headquarters Detachment, Noncommissioned Officers Academy — "I (try) to teach him what is right and wrong and then when wrong comes, he'll know what is wrong, to distinguish between right and wrong. I think it goes back to Christian values."

Uli Williams, family member — "We've talked about sexual abuse and AIDS. I've told her that if anything should ever happen to talk to somebody right away. I've tried to make her aware of the problem."

Dawn Smallcanyon, family member — "I have an 8-year-old daughter. I talk to her about (the differences between) good touches and bad touches."

Sgt. Larry E. Poole, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 1st Battalion, 18th Infantry Regiment — "To stay away from strangers and don't talk to those you don't know. I talk about how people will approach a child and tell (the child) what to look for."

Taking human life — not an American ideal

By Sgt. N. Maxfield
Fort Bragg,, N.C., Paraglide

Recent events in America leave me to wonder about some people in this country. I can remember exactly where and what I was doing the day the space Shuttle Challenger exploded, the day the Branch Davidians compound in Waco, Texas, burned down and when the federal building in Oklahoma City was rocked by a terrorist bomb.

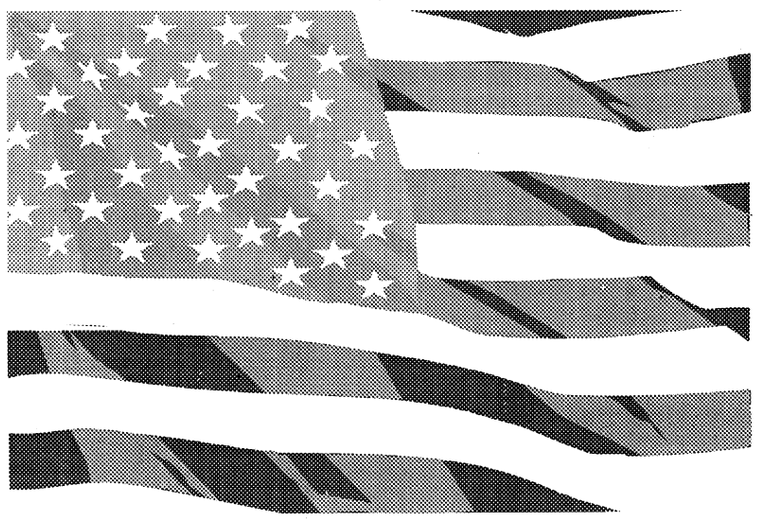
While all three were horrible tragedies, only one of them was an accident. The other two were planned and carried out by people I have to believe are seriously disillusioned about the United States government and mentally ill.

The Waco and Oklahoma City disasters are linked by more than a common day on a calendar.

Both seem to be symptoms of some sort of breakdown in American society I can't seem to understand.

In both cases, Americans made a conscious decision to take, rather than preserve, human life.

In Waco, parents allowed their children to burn to death rather than surrender to federal agents.



Whoever bombed the federal building in Oklahoma City placed a device of incredible destructive power in a public place to kill indiscriminately.

The people responsible for both disasters chose to waste human life in order to make a twisted, if not effective, statement against the government.

In the bloody aftermath of the Oklahoma bombing the media revealed organized groups of anti-government radicals that train for an armed conflict with federal agents or the military. These group members seem to have an Orwellian view of the American future.

They think the government is plotting to take away their rights and their freedom. I don't understand how these people can be so disillusioned. The purpose of government is to protect the rights of human beings.

The United States was founded by people who were tired of having their rights and freedoms trampled by an oppressive government. The Constitution, the blueprint for our government, guaranteed people the right to life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness.

The government doesn't usually make laws that limit someone's freedoms unless those freedoms are harming someone else. While Americans might not agree with every law that's passed, these laws are designed to protect everyone.

The next time Americans think about killing another American in protest against the government, I wish they would think about everything the government does for them.

Many of the soldiers here deployed to Haiti to help restore democracy there.

I think anyone who saw downtown Port-au-Prince will agree, without some form of positive government, life can become miserable beyond belief.

When we arrived, there wasn't reliable electricity, potable water or schools. With no strong, centralized government to enforce the laws, the strong preyed on the weak at will.

Because of government, we have streets to drive on, schools to educate our children, water to drink, police to protect us and so much more.

Many of the radicals in these groups say they can survive without all these things.

Guess what? The rest of us can't. That's why we band together in towns, cities, counties, states and countries and elect governments at every level.

My suggestion to all those who say they can do without government is to get together and buy an island where you can live without government.

Government is needed, period.

How much and what type of government are needed in this country can be decided by the voters.

If something is wrong with the U.S. government, Americans can and do vote to change it. That's the way to do it here — not by killing other Americans.

dial 545-boss

Dial 545-BOSS is the commander's action line for soldiers, family members and civilians to call when they have problems or complaints that can't be resolved elsewhere.

While it is not a substitute for the chain of command or for agencies established to provide assistance, the line offers another means of communication between Fort Benning's community and commanders.

The Bayonet features some of the calls that may benefit other members of the Fort Benning community.

Call: I would like to know why the Staff Judge Advocate office lawyers don't do title searches for military personnel?

Staff Judge Advocate's response: The legal assistance division does not have enough people to conduct title searches at the Muscogee and Chattahoochee County court houses.

Furthermore, the court personnel in both counties are more than willing to assist someone in researching the public records.

In the event that the title search was needed for title insurance purposes, the title company would insist on doing its own title search.

Call: I walk during lunch hour and noticed that one of the bridges over Ranger Creek between Stewart and Watson Fieldsand the Simulation center is in very bad shape and could be a potential danger to someone. The railing is falling away, the bridge is unstable with only one person on it, and the wood is rotting.

Department of Public Work's response: DPW Range Maintenance Section completed repairs to the bridge between Stewart and Watson Field and the SIMNET facilities on July 10.

These repairs will provide a safe structure for the interim until a project can be worked up to replace the wood handrails with metal handrails in the near future.

Also, the other bridge directly behind the Bowling Alley (approximately 500 feet away) has been closed off because of the condition of the understructure until it is decided whether it is economically feasible to repair.

Call: My backyard is flooded constantly and the children can't play in it. A drain was put in my neighbor's yard, but DPW won't put one in mine — why?

Family Housing Branch's response: The backyards of these units were regraded so that the water flows to the end of the building.

When an occupant erects a fence, which collects debris, it creates a dam, causing the water to stand on the next door neighbor's patio.

It is the responsibility of the resident who erects the fence to make sure that there is no buildup along the fence, which would block the flow of water.

Reader questions Commissary policy

I would like to respond to Mr. Benjamin Wainwright, Commissary officer.

My son is a bagger at the post Commissary and he has the expense of getting new uniforms.

Both my wife and I work and cannot take him to work. He has to take a cab from our home to Sand Hill from where he takes the shuttle bus. Most of the time, it takes more than hour for the cab to arrive and take him to Sand Hill. Once he gets there, he has to wait for the shuttle bus. More often than not, the bus never arrives and he winds up walking home.

When he does make it to work, he is in the present uniform of white shirt, black pants and black hat. All of this he had to buy to work at the Commissary. Some days he makes as little as six dollars in a day and yes, he hustles and is a good bagger.

My question is how did Wainwright arrive at the conclusion that a good bagger can recoup the $73 that they have to spend for a new uniform in a day or two?

As far as having all the baggers in uniform and having a dress standard for employees, all he has to do is look out from his Ivory Tower and see that the baggers are already in uniform.

As far as a good bagger recouping his $73 in a day or two, well maybe he is getting his salary confused with the tips that the baggers get.

These are good kids and adults who work there, and I see the change of uniforms as an unneeded expense that they cannot afford.

Maybe he could put himself in their place for a day and see what they go through and how little these people earn.

Just because Fort Benning won the Army Community of Excellence award, it doesn't mean baggers make up to $70 a day.

Post military taxi service cut

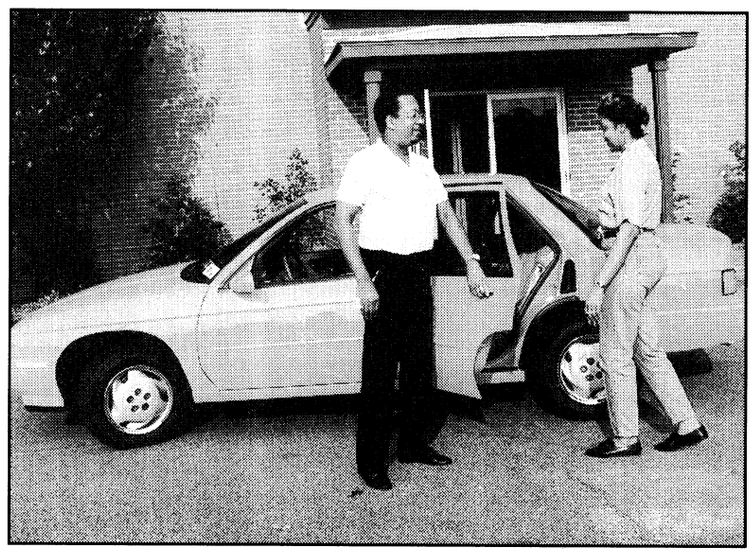
By Shannon Day
Special to The Bayonet©

Because of budget constraints, the military taxi service used for official business by the military and the Department of Defense employees will be shut down in October, according to Korin J. Mason, chief, Transportation Division.

"It was a difficult decision," Mason said. "I really have to focus on dollars to support training. Unfortunately the taxi service is not part of that (mission)."

Currently the 20,000 people the taxis service yearly will have three other options for transportation. They may use their Privately Owned Vehicles with no reimbursement, the shuttle bus, or a motor pool vehicle, if available.

"We are looking at some other alternatives, but nothing is definite yet," Mason said.



She said the Directorate of Logistics and the Directorate of Community Activities are working together to possibly do a contract with a local taxi company for military traffic.

Mason said they are considering using some type of voucher system which the official business users would sign. The taxi company could later cash them in and it would be up to the individual department or unit to pay the bill.

The military taxis used for official business and the contract cab company on post are not to be confused, Mason stressed.

"We will still have the civilian taxi company for personal use," she said.

She added the federal employees who drive the taxis will not lose their job, they will just be reassigned to different positions.

Shannon Day/Special to The Bayonet

Mary L. Carter, who works in Building 280, orders a military taxi to go the the main transportation office to deliver some paperwork. The taxi is operated by Walter J. Harris.

WATER: Swamp phase resumes

includes a detailed briefing for the incoming ranger instructors for that day's training, including deliberate decision points and criteria as to when to abort or modify training.

• Prepared risk management worksheets and established review processes to update daily risk assessment. Tailored worksheets account for unique conditions concerning training, students, and environment.

• Developed and implemented a certification program for principal and assistant principal instructors to ensure that only the most experienced and qualified instructors are given these important duties, and they are fully trained to supervise and assure the safety of operations.

• All patrols will be equipped, trained and prepared to conduct stream crossing operations during all swamp moves. Students are issued weapons slings to free their hands to control the rope during a stream crossing.

• 6th Ranger Training Battalion will schedule periodic refresher training on the use and applicability of the water immersion guide. This is incorporated in the certification training, cold weather training and the daily in-walker briefings.

• To minimize turbulence, Ranger Training Brigade will synchronize key leader assignments and be resourced with additional soldiers of sufficient skills and training. The 6th Ranger Training Battalion received three additional officers.

• Assigned 54 full-time medics to Ranger Training Brigade to provide in-house medical support. Medic training includes the proper rigging of a jungle penetrator, an evacuation litter, and a special patrol infiltration/exfiltration system. Also, this is included in ranger instructor certification and medical evacuation class.

• Reconnoitered and rehearsed an evacuation system to ensure safe medical evacuation of students in all areas of training, rehearsing a minimum of one ground and one air MEDEVAC per training cycle. Established casualty control points along evacuation routes. Also, acquired one-man rafts, hypothermia bags and other safety equipment.

• Reviewed, updated and continue to monitor immersion tables, nutrition, and sleep deprivation requirements. Increased rations during the field training exercise to two Meals, Ready-to-Eat and one pouch bread daily.

• Completed checklists for MEDEVAC helicopters and ambulances, and inspect for compliance before committing a unit to support ranger students.

• Reviewed the winter rucksack packing list to minimize the essential load carried by Ranger students, and improved waterproofing techniques.

• Lessons learned will be preserved and studied in the ranger instructor and instructor certification process to enhance the awareness of the hazards inherent in ranger training and the risk management process, and enhance safety procedures needed to preclude future accidents.

DoD opposes proposed retirement pay cuts

By Stephen Barrett
Army News Service

Defense officials are battling a congressional proposal that would change retirement for service members who entered service before Sept. 8, 1980.

If passed, the proposal would reduce retirement checks for nearly 335,000 active duty and 318,000 reserve service members.

The plan centers on computing retired pay. Under current guidelines, service members who entered before Sept. 8, 1980, receive retirement checks based on their final month's base pay. Officials compute retirement by multiplying the basic pay by years in service, then by 2.5 percent.

The House National Security Committee proposes changing this to a "High-1" plan, as part of the fiscal 1996 defense authorization and appropriation bills. Retirement would be computed by averaging the final 12 months' pay — the High-1 year — then multiplying by the years of service, then by 2.5 percent. A Congressional Budget Office report shows the plan would save $649 million over the next seven years.

An E-8 retiring at 26 years under the current system would receive $1,914 monthly. Under the House proposal, that same service member would receive a monthly retirement check of $1,753 — an 8.4 percent reduction, according to DoD statistics.

To senior defense officials, the proposal means Congress is changing the rules so it can cut the budget deficit. "To change the system for people who are serving strikes us as unfair, and we're opposed to it," said Deputy Defense Secretary John White. "(Defense Secretary William J. Perry) has been very clear that we shouldn't break faith with our service people. Therefore we think this ought to be changed."

White said DoD is willing to look at other options to cut expenses. "Reduction is important, but not at the expense of people who are serving," he said.

"The Congress is proposing to break a retirement promise made to members of the career force at the time of enlistment," Perry said in letters to the Senate and House Budget committees. "We are concerned that such action will cause any potential or current service member to doubt any promise made about long-term benefits."

Army Gen. John M. Shalikashvili, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, and the other members of the joint chiefs sent a letter to the House National Security Committee Chairman Rep. Floyd D. Spence saying service members will delay retirement to recover retirement pay losses.

Shalikashvili said these extensions will hamper the military drawdown's final stages. "The services have not finished personnel drawdowns, and absolutely do not need anything in place [that] would encourage people to delay retirement," his letter said. "Doing this requires that we increase involuntary retirements to meet strength controls. This is a prospect we find abhorrent."

The Joint Chiefs chairman also addressed the concerns of those who have already submitted retirement requests. "Almost all of the people who desire to retire in fiscal 1996 have already submitted their retirement date requests, based on the law as it exists today," he said. "To change the rules at this stage of the process is blatantly unfair and unwarranted. We cannot continue breaking faith with the men and women who are serving our country. Commitments must be kept."

White said it was too early to say when the bill, if passed, would go into effect. He emphasized DoD wants to see the bill thrown out. "We're going to work hard to educate the Congress and make them understand how serious this matter is for some 650,000 people."

In the past, Congress grandfathered changes to military retirement plans. Service members who joined after Sept. 8, 1980, and before July 31, 1986, receive a retirement based on an average of the three highest earning years. A similar plan exists for those who entered after July 1986.

CHAMPUS focuses on fraud

By Evelyn D. Harris
American Forces Information Service

The Federal Bureau of Investigations has been working with the Department of Defense to catch companies and individuals involved in fraud

Officials believe fraud costs the Civilian Health and Medical Program of the Uniformed Services over $300 million a year, and they plan to stop it.

Gary Whitaker, CHAMPUS spokesman, said the department of Justice is making health care fraud a top priority. "This makes it even more likely CHAMPUS cheaters will be caught," he said.

The FBI has been working with DoD to catch companies and individuals involved in fraud. At the CHAMPUS office in Aurora, Colo., the Program Integrity Branch is the administrative hub for fraud investigations.

Whitaker said a recent fraud case represents the largest settlement for health care fraud to date— %379 million. Investigators uncovered this fraud by National Medical Enterprises Inc. after finding a pattern of fraud in Texas and then investigating to see if the same company was involved in similar activities elsewhere.

National Medical Enterprises Inc. allegedly kidnapped children who were CHAMPUS beneficiaries from their homes and forcibly detained them in mental hospitals.

The company had to pay $379 million as result of a civil suit. CHAMPUS received $54 million of the settlement, with the rest going to the other parties. The San Antonio district attorney obtained criminal convictions and jail sentences for some of the hospital administrators in a separate, criminal trial, said Whitaker.

"A false claim doesn't just affect the CHAMPUS budget," Sab Said. "If a patient is unnecessarily in a psychiatric hospital, his or her whole life may be adversely affected. It could make it difficult to get future health care coverage or to be selected for a high-pressure job. Worst of all the person's self-esteem could be affected."

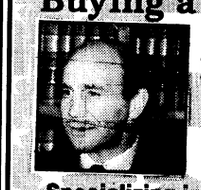
Sabo said her branches efforts continue after convictions.

After the defendant is sentenced, the branch follows up with a provider sanction notice to ensure the individual can't become an authorized provider by moving to another state or being included in a managed care network.

CHAMPUS has a national claims data base and national provider files. By individual tax number and corporate tax number, the data base can identify providers who may be involved in a dishonest billing scheme nationally. CHAMPUS shares its information with other investigative efforts among Medicare/Medicaid, Workers Compensations and other programs. The database has a significant impact on fraud cases, Sabo said.

Sabo said she appreciates the help her branch gets form conscientious CHAMPUS beneficiaries. "They are our most frequent source of leads." she said.

Investigators found patients had been solicited by telephone and asked to come in for a diagnostic screening. they were told it would be free to them, that the insurance company would be billed. The scheme involved submitting claims under different provider numbers — 400 in all.



In addition to the cost for the government, such scams may lead beneficiaries with illnesses to delay or fail to seek genuine medical care because they feel confident they have no health problems, she added.

The government has successfully prosecuted several other cases in fiscal 1995 involving amount ranging from $200,000 to $33 million.

To prevent fraud, CHAMPUS educates providers regarding proper billing practices through seminars and writing. It also requires contractors to purchase software programmed to help detect fraud.

CHAMPUS beneficiaries and others who suspect fraud can report it by calling the DoD hot line at (800) 424-9098.

Starting early: key to transition

Army Career and Alumni Program

The Army Career and Alumni Program provides career guidance for soldiers transitioning out of the service. Starting early is the key for soldiers to begin thinking about what they want to do after the military.

Based on soldiers' individual needs, ACAP counselors will offer career guidance and counseling on services and programs available to them. Soldiers schedule individual appointments through their personnel services noncommissioned officer three-day expiration of term of service retirement briefing and ACAP transition counselor appointment.

ACAP offers:

A three-day retirement transition class within 180 days of separation that prepares military members for transition.

• A one-day "advanced course" explaining resume preparation and interviewing skills.

• The Defense Outplacement Referral System process that provides a free service to match a person's abilities to civilian employment positions by sending a mini-resume to a data base accessed by employers worldwide.

• Career Day provides an opportunity for employers to meet soldiers, provide information on job leads and interview prospective clients as needed.

• The Educational Opportunity Program provides an awareness of tuition assistance, enrollment procedures, or current data on any college or university.

• The Skill Development Program is intended to provide training opportunities to soldiers, civilians and family members who transition from the Army.

• Referrals for separation benefits to include Special Separation Benefits, Voluntary Separation Incentive and retirement. Below is a timetable for job hunting while still in the service.

Six months before separation

• Schedule through the unit PSNCO your preseparation counseling appointment at ACAP Transition Office, Building 2617, and the three-day preseparation classes conducted in Infantry Hall, Classroom 30.

• Develop an individual transition plan with the ACAP transition counselor in Building 2617 and review the mandatory "preseparation Counseling Checklist" (Department of Defense Form 2648) required for clearing post.

• Begin researching the job market. Develop a career plan.

• Assess your job skills and interests to determine how they relate to today's job market, take a vocational interest inventory.

• Discuss with your family possible options about your career and where to live next.

Five months before separation

• Seek help if the stresses of your transition to civilian life become too much to handle.

• Contact friends in the private sector who may help you find a job.

• Begin attending job fairs.

• Develop a fall-back plan in case your first career plan falls through.

• Research specific job possibilities, job markets, and the economic conditions in the geographic areas where you want to live.

• If you need additional educational or vocational training to compete in the job market, explore your options for adult education.

• Establish a financial plan "to make ends meet" during your transition to civilian life.

• If you are separating before fulfilling eight years of active service, you must satisfy your obligation by becoming a member of the Ready Reserve.

Four months before separation

• Receive your "Verification of Military Experience and Training" (DD Form 2586). For information call (800) 258-8638.

• Write your resumé

• If you are considering federal employment, fill out an application (Standard Form 171). Explore special federal programs and hiring opportunities for veterans.

• Visit the Relocation Assistance Program Office. If you live in government housing arrange for a preinspection and obtain termination information.

• Learn about the education benefits you can obtain under the Montgomery GI Bill.

Three months before separation

• Start a subscription to a major newspaper in the area in which you plan to live.

• Send out resumés and make telephone calls to check if they arrived. Submit your DORS resume (DD Form 25Q) for processing.

• You and your spouse may begin your automated job search by using TBB America's Job Bank and the Federal Job Opportunities Listing.

• Once you have chosen where you will live next, arrange your transportation counseling. Learn about your options for shipment and storage of household goods.

• If you decide to go back to school, take an academic entry exam, college admission test, or challenge exam.

• Schedule a final dental examination.

• If you want to prepare a will or if you have legal questions or problems, obtain free legal advice.

Two months before separation

• Begin planning a visit to the area where you plan to move. Get your resumé printed and mail it out to selected employers. Include in your cover letter the date you plan to be in the area. Start assembling a wardrobe for job interviews.

• Choose your transitional health care option: Use military medical facilities or sign up for Civilian Health and Medical Program of the Uniformed Services.

• Schedule your separation physical examination.

• Determine whether you are eligible for separation pay.

• For detailed information about disability compensation, benefits, and programs, call the VA, one month before separation

• Visit a private employment agency or executive recruiter.

• Decide whether to sign up for (CHCBP) medical coverage. Optional.

• Consider converting your Serviceman's Group Life Insurance to Veteran's Group Life Insurance. Optional.

• Several government agencies offer special loans and programs for veterans. Check with your local VA office.

• If you are employed, you may qualify for unemployment compensation.

For information, contact the ACAP office at 545-4913 or 545-7009, Building 2617. Soldiers' Plaza.

Law enforcement opportunities open to transitioning soldiers

Army Career and Alumni Program

Transitioning from the military? Interested in a career in law enforcement? The time is right.

Six law enforcement offices are actively recruiting law enforcement and correctional officers through the ACAP Job Assistance Center at Fort Benning.

These include the U.S. Border Patrol, Federal Bureau of Prisons, U.S. Secret Service, Atlanta Police Department, Georgia Department of Corrections and Florida Department of Corrections. To assist these agencies, the Job Assistance Center hosts employer days, helps with job applications and maintains up-to-date job listings.

The Atlanta Police Department is recruiting 200 additional law enforcement officers. Aug. 25 there will be briefings at 9 a.m., 11 a.m. and 1:30 p.m. at the Job Assistance Center. Following the briefings, representatives will distribute applications and be available to answer questions. Seating for the briefings is limited. Contact the JAC at 545-2309 or 545-2308 to be scheduled.

U.S. Secret Service, Special Agent, Alex Parker, maintains close contact with the Job Assistance Center as he recruits special agents. These special agents are responsible for the protection of the president, vice president and visiting heads of state. Parker said he considers military personnel ideal for this position.

Georgia Department of Corrections has hired many transitioning service members during the last three years and has many additional positions available. Bob Coleman, Department of Corrections recruiter said if qualified candidates take the test, pass and are willing to relocate, they will be hired.

Florida Department of Corrections is competing with Georgia's recruiting effort. Each Thursday, a Florida recruiter is at Fort Benning to discuss career opportunities with the Florida Department of Corrections. During these visits, recruits accept job applications and schedule qualified candidates for certification training.

The Federal Bureau of Prisons is recruiting correctional officers for new federal facilities. There are a variety of opportunities available within federal law enforcement at over 70 correctional institutions throughout the United States.

The U.S. Border Patrol recently participated in employer day at the Job Assistance Center. They were searching for 300 agents to be hired in 1995. Sufficient qualified candidates have been identified for the 1995 positions; however, 2,000 additional positions will be available in 1996.

Charles Watson from the office of Immigration and Naturalization, indicated in his briefings that military training and experience have proved to be excellent background for border patrol agents.

These six agencies are only examples of law enforcement agencies that actively seeking qualified employees. The Job Assistance Center coordinates with other agencies on a regular basis.

Anyone transitioning from the Army interested in positions with law enforcement are invited to contact the ACAP Job Assistance Center located in Soldiers' Plaza, Building 2634.

Documents can help separating soldiers

By Elsie Jackson
Army Career and Alumni Program

Your military experience and training may be invaluable assets in a civilian career, but only if you can communicate your abilities to a prospective employer

Your military experience and training may be invaluable assets in a civilian career, but only if you can communicate your abilities to a prospective employer.

If you are planning to use a resume to get your message across, your DD Form 2586 (Verification of Military Experience and Training) can be a very useful tool. VMET statements list military job experiences and training histories, recommended civilian college credit information and any civilian equivalent job titles. They are provided to separating and retiring soldiers who have served a minimum of 180 days on active duty.

If you are separating (or separated after Sept. 15, 1992) you should receive your VMET statement automatically, at your unit mailing address, about 150 days from your separation date. If you are within 30 days of your separation date and have not received this document or separated between Oct. 1, 1990, and Sept. 14, 1992, you will need to call or write to: PRC, Inc., ATTN: VMET, Suite 401, 2900 Eisenhower Ave., Alexandria, Va. 22314, (800) 258-8638.

VMET documents have proven themselves to be useful for enlisted soldiers and warrant officers. It has been less useful for commissioned officers because officers lack accurate duty descriptions and VMET is an automated document. Because of this, the Army has temporarily suspended automatic VMET distribution for commissioned officers.

In the near future, modified versions of the VMET will be issued to commissioned officers. The modified VMET will show military training histories, combining Officer Record Briefs and Officer Evaluation Reports to provide a picture of an officer's training, skills and experience.

Don't confuse your VMET document with an Army or American Council on Education Registry Transcript System AARTS transcript. AARTS transcripts are records of your active duty military education experiences, including training for which you may receive college credits. Of course, acceptance of credit recommendations will depend on the policies and procedures of the school you choose to attend.

If a college or university accepts AARTS credit recommendations, and those credits are awarded on their official college transcript, AARTS credit recommendations may be applied toward Army promotion points. Besides helping you get college credits, an AARTS transcript can supplement your resume, giving prospective employers a clearer picture of the skills you learned in the Army.

Three kinds of learning are recognized on an AARTS transcript — successful completion of formal service school courses (longer than 45 hours), successfully held military occupational specialties and passing scores in college-level tests such as the Scholastic Aptitude Test, College Level Examination Program and American College Testing Program.

All enlisted soldiers and veterans with a basic active service date on or after Oct. 1, 1981, may receive an AARTS transcript. Requests may be made through the Army Education Center.

For more information on VMET, ask your Army Career and Alumni Program counselor, Soldiers' Plaza, Building 2617, or call 545-4892 and 545-7009.

VA opens new hospital in Florida

Department of Veterans Affairs

Using a patient-focused approach, hospital staff will concentrate on what matters most to patients while ensuring they receive high quality health care.

WASHINGTON — Secretary of Veterans Affairs Jesse Brown recently dedicated a new VA medical center in West Palm Beach, Fla., bringing to 172 the number of VA hospitals nationwide.

While the department has built a number of replacement hospitals, the West Palm Beach facility is the first new VA medical center to be constructed in more than 20 years. It is expected to serve the more than 267,000 veterans in Palm Beach, Martin, St. Lucie, Indian River, Okeechobee, Glades, Hendry and half of Broward counties.

"This beautiful, state-of-the art hospital and the caring staff within its walls symbolize VA's commitment of Putting veterans first," Brown said.

With a staff of 1,600, the medical center will operate 185 medical, 95 surgical, 60 psychiatric and 60 intermediate-care beds, as well a a 120-bed nursing home. Diagnostic services, a full range of ambulatory care, including surgery and medical, surgical and psychiatric inpatient treatment will be provided.

Under a managed primary care model of health-care delivery, each veteran will receive inpatient and outpatient treatment form the same staff — the same physician, social worker, dietitian or any other health-care provider each time he or she needs care.

Alternative care programs, including adult day care, residential care, hospital-based home care and hospice services, also will be offered.

Using a patient-focused approach, hospital staff will concentrate on what matters most to patients while ensuring they receive high-quality health care.

Defense chief of staff discusses philosophy, future

Army News Service

WASHINGTON — Defense chief of staff Gen. Dennis Reimer discussed his leadership philosophy, the future of the force, the necessity of the reserve component and other issues:

Q: What's first on your agenda?

A: First and foremost, I think anybody in this seat has always had the goal of making sure the Army stays trained and ready.

One of the things that happened when I was announced to become, or nominated to be the chief of staff, I asked the military history people to go back and give me some data on previous chiefs and the challenges that they faced, just to kind of give me an experience based upon history. What I found is that each of them emphasized being trained and ready. They all faced different circumstances, but that was the thread of continuity that I saw through all the other 32 chiefs of staff, and I think that's the same thing that I would want.

I also want to make sure that we get the balance of combat readiness and quality of life right. I want to make sure that as we continue to live in this changing world, a world of constrained resources, that we apply them as effectively as we possibly can.

Q: At the end of next year we will have reached the end of the drawdown — 495,000 soldiers in the active Army. We still have a tremendous mission, and yet we're hearing that there's still some pressure to cut even more troops, some 20,000 troops. Can we take those kinds of cuts and still be the vital force that we were in the past or that we are now?

A: ... One of the challenges that we have right now is the challenge between near-term and long-term readiness. My evaluation of the Army right now is that we're in pretty good shape in terms of near-term readiness. We continue to train hard. I think we continue to train well, and I'm very comfortable with our ability to do the missions that we have facing us today. There's a wide variety of missions. We can only do that because we have had quality people and continue to have quality people in the Army.

The challenge is to get some money to invest into the equipment for the 21st Century and to improve our quality of life. If you look at the Army, you find there are not many ways to pay for those bills other than end strength. So there are some people that ought to take additional end strength out in order to make that equation balance a little bit better, provide more modernization. There are others that feel we should not.

What I know is that we have a bill out there that we've got to pay. If we're not able to get the efficiencies in our business operation and save that money and reinvest it into the modernization program, then I think there's going to be a great deal of pressure on us to reduce the end strength...

Now can we reduce the end strength and still remain a vital force? I don't know. What I hope to be able to do is to get enough efficiency so that we don't have to reduce the end strength. That way, I would feel much more comfortable.

Q: Do you see the Reserve and National Guard mission growing as we take on more humanitarian and peacekeeping missions?

A: I think they are growing. We're looking for ways to use them more. Part of the problem there is without a national emergency facing us, as such, it's difficult sometimes to be able to use those units. So we're trying to find a way in which they can volunteer to help, and many of them have done that. Going into Haiti, for example, we used a large number of reserve component units to do that, and I think we're going to see more of that in the future...we've got to find a good way to figure out how to use them and make it easier on them and easier on the Army and easier on the nation.

We have some employers out there who are using these people as their employees for a period of time. When we pull them away, they're hurting a little bit, too. So we're trying to work our way through some of those issues, but certainly I see their mission growing.

Q: In line with the philosophy that the Army is people, the Army is also family. What about the Army family? What can they expect from you as chief of staff?

A: I think they can expect my total commitment. I've always given my commitment to Army families. They've been terribly important to me all my career. I've been a part of the Army family, both from a personal standpoint, my own family, and in a larger sense, part of the Army family itself.

I've always considered the Army a very special part of the family, because as you travel from place to place, the thing you know is you're going to a familiar setting. You're going to find an Army Community Service there, you'll find a post exchange, you'll probably find a commissary in most places. You'll find the things that were at your old post. You'll find many of the people that you've known before — there are always friends there. You'll certainly be welcomed by the Army family when you come in there in the same way that we do it at every other place. So the Army family is terribly important to me. What I owe them is the best shot I have at providing them the resources necessary to take care of themselves, and to do the job that we ask them to do.

Q: A big issue with Army families and single soldiers alike is quality of life. How high is that on your agenda?

A: There is a real challenge here for us in terms of balancing combat readiness and quality of life. And it's really hard to separate the two, because the two are really intertwined.

What you have is a challenge to spread the resources, to make sure that you provide the adequate quality of life that you need for the people out there. At the same time, you give the soldiers the tough, realistic training that they need. Both of those programs are taking care of soldiers.

I think the highest form of caring is making sure our soldiers are trained and ready to do whatever they have to do if they were ever put in harm's way.

At the same time, we've got to be able to provide the quality of life. So when they have to leave an installation to go someplace for a mission, they'll feel comfortable that their family is taken care of. That when they come back from the field and they're living in the barracks, they come back to a decent room, where you have some type of privacy, some quality of life. I think that's really important, and we're going to continue to stress that across the Army.

Q: Is there anything else you'd like to add?

A: I'd just like to say thank you to all the soldiers... Thank you for the great job that they're doing and for the service that they present to the country. I know there are a lot of sacrifices out there, but they do it so very well, and they make us all so very proud.

Santa's Castle

Seeking volunteers to help spread holiday cheer

By Shannon Day
Special to The Bayonet©

Christmas is still more than four months away, but Santa's Castle is already working hard to ensure that needy children at Fort Benning will have goodies under the tree when they wake up Christmas morning.

The organization takes in used toys, refurbishes them, puts them into sets and then packs them up. Parents who have been referred to Santa's Castle by the Red Cross, Army Community Services, a Chaplain or the unit commander or first sergeant may come and choose toys for their children with the assistance of elves.

Each child will receive one toy or set from the red, yellow and blue categories, each category having a different dollar value. They will get a stuffed animal, two books and a puzzle. Each family also gets to choose a family game.

The organization also provides gift wrap and decorations to the families, as long as the supplies last.

"Last year we serviced more than 501 families," Searless Hathaway, chairperson, Santa's Castle said. "This year we expect a 25 percent increase."

To provide that amount of service takes a lot of time and work, Hathaway said.

The organization is run entirely by volunteers and uses donated supplies and money to fix the toys.

Santa's Castle needs volunteers.

"You don't have to have any special skills to work here, just a desire to help," Hathaway said.

There are dolls to be washed and brushed, puzzles and games that need to be put together and checked for missing pieces, bicycles and electronics that need to be fixed and sewing and mending that needs to be done.

"If you need a break from the kids and they are registered at Tot Town, we will pay up to 10 hours per week of child care fees while you volunteer here," she said.

Santa's Castle is open Mondays, Wednesdays and the second and fourth Saturday of each month from 9 a.m. to 2 p.m.

If you can't donate any time, the organization needs wrapping paper, decorations, cleaning supplies and just about anything else that pertains to the holiday season, according to Hathaway.

She said two of their biggest needs now are finding volunteers who know how to fix electronic toys and finding elves who can assist families in finding age-appropriate toys for their children.

"We are going to need a minimum of 60 elves this year, if each one can provide two hours of work," Hathaway said.

Family members aren't the only ones who can help.

"We have a lot of first sergeants who send us soldiers to help out, and Columbus High School has been sending us students who have community service requirements to meet," she said.

First Sgt. Michael Reidy, Company A, 218th Infantry Battalion, sends his Charge of Quarters runners and other soldiers whenever he can spare them.

"Santa's Castle is a good cause for all Army families," he said. "The soldier who is here fixing toys today may be the one who is back here in December asking for help."

Mary K. Sorbel, a volunteer, has involved her children, Christina and Landry, in the project.

"The first time we came here, the kids wanted to help," Sorbel said. "We like to come here once a week. I think the kids like the idea of helping other kids."

Hathaway said she would like to see more retirees involved with the project because it would add some permanent faces.

"Everyone here rotates every two or three years, because that's the way the Army is," she said. "This way we could be sure there are people here to keep things going."

"I also think there is a lot of untapped expertise out there with the retirees," Hathaway said.

"The bottom line is that we want to do whatever it takes to make the child happy at Christmas time," she said.

Teachers attend back-to-school pep rally

By Donna S. Budjenska
Special to The Bayonet©

Not even Mr. Kotter was welcomed back this well.

Nearly 300 Fort Benning teachers, administrators and support staff attended a back-to-school pep rally Monday at Stowers Elementary School. The theme was "A Celebration of Teaching," and educational consultant Frank Winstead's presentation highlighted the program.

"A school is four walls with the future inside," Winstead said as he motivated teachers to incorporate joy and laughter into their classroom curriculum.

"My mission is to inspire and recharge the teachers," Winstead said. "I want to get them to realize teaching is the most important job in the world."

"I loved (the program)," said Miriam Aiken, a first-grade teacher at Stowers who has taught at Fort Benning schools for 20 years.

"It was very motivational. We need more laughter in the classroom; the children enjoy it more."

Winstead related stories of his elementary teachers and the impact they had on his life, bringing the teachers to peals of laughter themselves. It was his fifth-grade teacher who made the difference in his life inspiring him to excel in school and strive to become a teacher himself, he said.

Winstead has 31 years of service in education in Georgia, including time as a teacher in elementary, junior high and high school and as a middle school principal.

Even though the field of teaching has grown more demanding through the years, he continued, teachers still have an influence on students that has a ripple effect.

Fort Benning parents should consider themselves lucky, according to Winstead.

"To have the leadership they have at the district level, to have the quality of teachers here; the kids are in good hands, and you can't say that everywhere you go in this country," Winstead said.

"The buildings are clean; you have order and discipline and competent, qualified teachers," he continued. "Parents really are lucky to have the resources and teachers to provide an education."

Mable Wilson feels an ice sculpture carved for Monday's "A Celebration of Teaching" welcome seminar and luncheon for Fort Benning educators. She is a special education teacher at Stowers Elementary School.

Winstead's presentation and the ensuing motivational video were part of an annual back-to-school program meant to renew teachers' spirits after their summer vacations.

"Every time I come back I like to be inspired," said Libbie Kurinec, a 10-year veteran of Fort Benning schools. "We usually have a motivational speaker to give everyone a surge.

"(Winstead) seems to have a grass roots perspective," the gifted-and-talented teacher for grades 6 to 8 at Faith Middle School said. "We always respect someone who's been in our shoes."

Explorer post sounds the call for members

By Donna S. Budjenska

The newly chartered Youth Law Enforcement Explorer Post 988 is looking for more than a few good young men and women to join its ranks.

Overseen by the Boy Scouts of America and hosted by the Fort Benning Directorate of Public Safety under the direction of Col. Ronnie D. Alton, the Explorers is a group for youth ages 14 to 20 who want to pursue their interest in law enforcement and other public safety-related fields. Adults are also invited to become a part of the group as assistant leaders.

The group is open to everybody in the Chattahoochee Valley area.

"It gives young people an idea of different career fields," said Staff Sgt. Donnie Lucas, who is one of the founders of Post 988. "We want to give (members) as much exposure to law enforcement as possible."

To that end, Lucas said, Explorer members will participate in ride-along programs in patrol cars, work on the police desk, develop an understanding of the 911 emergency telephone system, work with traffic investigation teams and more.

Those interested in other aspects of public safety won't be left out, though, Lucas said.

"Once we get this off the ground, ... we'll be able to get (members) to the fire department and to EMS (Emergency Medical Services)," he explained. "We'll look at every aspect of what it's like to work in the public safety field."

Some members have already joined, having heard about Exploring during the summer.

One such member is Robin Foster. A Carver High School senior, she's wanted to be a police officer for a long, long time, and Explorers Post 988 was a way for her to try the role on for size, she said.

"Because I'm interested in being a police officer, ... I wanted experience in what it'll be like before I go into the field," she said.

That perspective is exactly what Exploring caters to. With Explorer posts in careers and hobbies ranging from accounting to zoology, young people interested in a variety of fields can gain first-hand experience in those fields. Some schools even offer credit for Exploring activities.

Being active in Exploring could even lead to scholarship opportunities, Lucas said.

But there are benefits to being an adult assistant leader too, Lucas stressed. Adult leaders can "ensure the kids are guided in such a way that they won't think of police officers in a bad way," he said.

Adults can also "be actively involved in the community, with kids in adolescence who are in an in-between age and often overlooked," Lucas said.

A variety of agencies are supporting Lucas' efforts to make Post

Soldiers trade BDUs for greasepaint and costumes

USAIC Public Affairs Office

After months of auditions, rehearsals and prior performances to polish its act, the 1995 Army Soldier Show arrives at Fort Benning Sept. 2 for a 2 p.m. performance exclusively for Infantry Training Brigade soldiers; a 7 p.m. performance will be open to all military members, retirees, Department of Defense civilians and their families.

"Every year the show is different, reflecting the tastes and enthusiasm of the new cast," said Nick Credgington, the show's artistic director. This year's show includes 65 numbers, from solos to duets and trios, to full song and dance production numbers, complete with sound, lighting and special effects.

"We've included surprise numbers revolving around 'The Mask" and songs like 'Cowboys Are My Weakness,' a Holly Dunn country hit," Credgington said. "Our tribute to World War II is a dance number, 'It Don't Mean a Thing if It Ain't Got That Swing!'"

"It's great entertainment; it's free; and they do a really professional job."

— Sally C. Ghent
Community Recreation Division

This year's performances will be held at Sand Hill Theater No. 3 and are free.

Administrative Officer Sally C. Ghent of the Community Recreation Division said even though the performance is during a holiday weekend, the show should still draw a full house.

"Everyone who came last year said it was great," Ghent said. "They were amazed with what they put on for soldiers."

Performers in the Army Soldier Show come from all military occupation specialties from posts all over the world.

Those selected for the show as performers and support staff are assigned to the U.S. Army and Family Support Center at Fort Belvoir, Va., where they prepare for their six-month world

ON POST

Blood drive — The American Red Cross is sponsoring a blood drive today from 9:30 a.m. to 3 p.m. in Classroom 5, Building 4.

Blood drawn each day only has a life span of about 42 days, so the Red Cross cannot stock supplies. The increased testing of the blood and the increased screening of donors to ensure the safety of the blood supply has added to the blood shortage. The need for blood is ever present.

Commissary closing — The Fort Benning Commissary will be closed Wednesday for Employee Appreciation Day.

Girl Scouts — Girl Scout reigstration will take place Aug. 31 from 6 to 8 p.m. at Faith Middle School. Cost of registration is $6 per preson.

The Fort Benning Girl Scouts are also in need of volunteers to help fill the following position: assistant service unit director, leaders, co-leaders, publicity, area coordinator, cookie manager, special events and other troop positions.

For more information, call Barbara Singleton at 689-7627.

Warrant officers meeting — The Fort Benning Chapter "Forever Forward" will have its monthly meeting Sept. 6 at the Fort Benning Officers' Club from noon to 1 p.m.

All members are requested to attend, and nonmembers are invited. The agenda will include installation of new officers.

For more information, call Chief Warrant Officer 4 Jerry Hanchett at 544-7123 or 544-6005 or Chief Warrant Officer 4 Oscar Pinkston at 544-1104 or 544-2242.

Wives' club — The International Wives' Club invites interested persons to come and visit every first Tuesday of the month at Building 2462, Collins Loop, Soldiers' Plaza, for coffee, cake and information.

For more information, call Olga Kelly at 687-6471 or Andrea Pitts at 687-6937.

Explorer Scout Program— Law Enforcement Post 988 sponsored by the Military Police Activity is looking for more members. If you know of a boy or girl interested in a law enforcement career or who just want to learn more about law enforcement, call Staff Sgt. Donnie Lucas at 545-1146. This program is open to anyone on or off post. Adult assistant leaders are welcome.

Watch found — A watch was found recently in the east parking lot of Infantry Hall, Building 4.

For more information, call Spc. Carl Box at 545-2218 or come by Room 111 in Infantry Hall.

Boy Scouts need volunteers — The Fort Benning-Pataula District Boy Scouts of America experienced a loss of youth membership and adult volunteer leaders. Numerous positions are available, such as assistant cubmasters and scoutmasters, district committee members in training, programs, activities, publicity, camping and "at large" members who serve to coordinate specific events such as Christmas tree sales, fishing rodeo or Fall Campree.

If interested in volunteering, call Lt. Col. Mark S. Cloth at 544-3901 or 682-4440. For detailed information about scouting activities, contact the district executive, Frank Eveans, at 327-2634.

Tot Town still open — Tot Town is still open. Need a break from the children? Do they need one from you? Do you have an appointment?

Bring the children to Tot Town. The hourly care program is available for you.

For more information, call 689-8772 or 689-6898. Reservations are encouraged.

Red Cross needs volunteers — The American Red Cross needs volunteers to fill the following positions: volunteer chairperson, co-hospital chairperson, fund-raising chairperson, publicity chairperson, youth chairperson and Dental Activity chairperson.

For more information, call Henry Edgars, American Red Cross station manager, at 545-5194.

Tot Town rates increase — Tot Town Child Development Center has new rates. The fee for children 6 weeks to 18 months is $2.75 per hour for the first child and $2.50 for additional children. Post volunteers pay $2.50 for this age group.

Fees for children 18 months to 12 years are $2.50 for the first child and $2.25 for additional children. Post volunteers will pay $2.25 per hour. Fees include meals and snacks.

Reservations may be made by contacting Tot Town. Reservations can be made two weeks to 24 hours in advance. Call 689-8698 or 689-8772 for reservations or information.

Waiting spouses' support group — A waiting spouses' support group has been formed. The group is open to all spouses whose sponsors have departed for unaccompanied tours. The group meets at the Family Unit Network Center, Building 359.

Call the FUN Center, 545-5602, to sign up for one of the two group sessions.

Summer camp — Troop 27 has a program that continues throughout the summer with meetings every Monday night. There is at least one outing every month and projects and activities for boys ages 11 to 17.

For more information, call Bo Terry at 682-0377 or Bill Paterson at 682-2298.

OWC piano lessons — The Officers' Wives' Club School of Performing Arts offers piano lessons for ages 4 through adult. Lessons are available Monday though Friday for 30 to 45 minutes. For information, call 687-3537.

Yard sales — A permit is required to conduct a yard sale on post. To get a permit, call your housing area Community Life Office, Monday through Friday, from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. or call the installation Community Life Office at 545-2830 or 545-5931.

AA — The Fort Benning Alcoholics Anonymous group meets every Monday, Thursday and Saturday at 7 p.m. in the basement of the DCA, Building 241.

Ticket sales — Carlson Wagonlit Travel is the only authorized on-post vendor of tickets to such attractions as Six Flags and White Water. Tickets and information are available at the Carlson Wqgonlit Travel office at the PX Main Mall; the telephone number is 682-0433.

Toastmasters meeting — The Sundowners Toastmasters will meet Aug. 28 at 6:30 p.m. in the Trophy Room of the Davidson Center at Columbus College

Can you stand up, speak up and shut up at the right time? Do you find it difficult to prepare and give a talk? Do you envy people who are able to express themselves effectively? You now have the opportunity to do something about it.

The Toastmasters Communication and Leadership program is presented in the friendly "learn by doing" atmosphere of a Toastmasters Club.

For more information, call 596-7648.

Explorer: New post offers public safety experience

988 a success, including the Boy Scouts of America, the Military Police Activity and the Fort Benning Law Enforcement Academy.

Fort Benning Boy Scout District Executive Frank Evans said the Law Enforcement Explorers is a good way for youth to directly experience what law enforcement is all about and that it's also good PR for the police department.

"It's a chance for police to get out word of what they do," Evans said.

"We're trying to give something back to Fort Benning for the support they've given us," said Bob Awtrey, the Law Enforcement Academy's director, of the Academy's sponsorship of the Explorer Post.

Staff Sgt. Donnie Lucas is getting the new Explorer Post 988 off the ground.

He said he anticipates having Explorer members eventually participate in weekend activities and general interest programs to get them involved in law enforcement training.

If you'd like to know more about Exploring, call Lucas at 545-1146 or Evans at 327-2634.

BOSS's new boss sets goal to set standard

By Michael Hubanks
Special to The Bayonet©

James

The Better Opportunities for Single Soldiers president, Spc. Michael James, is hard at work in trying to set new standards for Fort Benning's BOSS program.

"I want to better the opportunities for single soldiers," James said. He said he believes for such to occur it will take a combination of publicity, recognition and teamwork.

"I want our BOSS program to be the model for other programs of this nature. I want us to set the standard," James said.

One of his goals for the program is to bridge the communication gap between the single soldier and his command. "Single soldiers need to get more involved," he said. "However, it is important that ideas and communication exist between them and their command."

James also wants to see more community involvement occur. "We need to tie ourselves to our community. It is important we do so," James said. "There are many single soldiers who would like to volunteer to do community activities. We want to give something back to this community. We want to bond ourselves to the community."

James also stresses education as another goal. "I would like for more single soldiers to visit their learning centers regularly to get a better idea of what education opportunities are available to them. It is important to do so should the single soldier, upon completion of his duties, decide for a different career outside the military," James said.

Because he is currently attending Troy State University-Fort Benning as a social science major, James said he feels he understands the need for higher education. James not only wants to stress education, but he also wants to serve as a role model for single soldiers, he said.

His ultimate goal is to vastly improve the quality of life for single soldiers. He wants to establish barracks councils as well as conduct regular major subordinate command BOSS meetings. "I want the single soldier to be heard. This is what my position is for; it is a voice for the single soldier," said James.

Brush up on back-to-school

Egleston Children's Hospital

While spring and summer are typically peak months for increases in injury rates, many injuries also happen during the back-to-school season. As children adjust to the routine of a daily school schedule, they need to be taught safe ways to travel to and from school.

"Parents need to be aware that over the summer their children may have forgotten the safety lessons they learned from the previous years," said Beth Strickland, executive director of SAFE KIDS of Georgia at Egleston Children's Hospital at Emory University. "Parents need to take an active role by teaching children back-to-school safety and reviewing their own safety measures each season."According to the National Center for Health Statistics, pedestrian injuries have become the second leading cause of unintentional death among children ages 5 to 14. The Center reports that each year approximately 1,000 children ages 14 and under die in pedestrian incidents.

The child safety experts at Egleston and SAFE KIDS of Georgia offer these guidelines to help parents and children this fall:

• Choose the safest route and walk it with your children. Look for the most direct route with the fewest street crossings. Walk the route with your children until they demonstrate traffic safety awareness. Children under age 8 should walk with an adult or older child everyday. They should take the same route and avoid shortcuts.

• Teach children to obey all traffic signals and markings. Children should be taught the meaning of all traffic markers. A flashing "walk" sign is not an automatic "go" signal. It means a pedestrian has permission to cross, but must first stop and check for cars.

• Make sure children look in all directions before crossing the street. They should look left, right and left again before attempting to cross. If safe, they can cross but they should keep looking and be alert.

• Teach children not to enter the street from between parked cars or from behind buses or shrubs. Darting into the street accounts for 50 to 70 percent of pedestrian injuries among children ages 9 and under.

• Teach children to cross the street at a corner or crosswalk. Make sure children allow plenty of time to cross. Teach them to walk, not run, across intersections. Tell your children to listen to adult crossing guards or safety patrols at monitored intersections.

• Warn children to be extra alert in bad weather. Visibility may be poor and motorists may not be able to stop quickly. Children should be reminded to be extra careful during poor weather since it is harder for drivers to see them.

• Demonstrate proper pedestrian safety by being a good role model. Children imitate their parents and model their behavior.

ask the judge

Staff Judge Advocate's Office

Q: We are planning to PCS in the near future and would like to know if there is any way to increase the coverage on our household goods to protect against loss or damage in shipment.

A: The first thing to understand about a government-sponsored move is the nature of the government's obligation to compensate you for any losses.

When you opt to let the government contract a carrier to move your goods (as opposed to doing a do-it-yourself-move), you are bound by the guidelines detailed in Army claims regulations. These limitations include the time in which you must give notice of any losses, the right of the carrier to reclaim certain damaged items and the maximum allowances that can be paid for individual items. For most individuals this provides adequate protection against loss or damage.

For individuals who are interested in acquiring additional coverage, there are two insurance protection plans available for moves that begin and end within CONUS. Both plans are purchased from the carrier through the transportation office and are similar to many private insurance policies. Individuals leaving Fort Benning for overseas assignments should contact private insurance firms for policy information.

The first plan available through the transportation office is known as the Increased Basic Valuation (IBV) plan. This is an economical plan that is calculated by multiplying the weight of your property by a certain dollar value. IBV provides addition protection if the amount of your loss exceeds the amount otherwise allowed by the Claims Office.

For example, if you were to ship $10,000 worth of jewelry and the property came up missing, the maximum the Claims Office could pay you would be $1,000 per item and a total of $4,000 for the entire claim. Knowing that, you decide to purchase additional coverage equal to the amount of the difference between the what the Claims Office would pay and the value of the property, or $6,000. If the jewelry is discovered missing when you receive your goods at the new duty station, you would file and substantiate the loss with the local Claims Office, which would make an immediate payment of $4,000. The U.S. Army Claims Service would then assert the claim against the carrier for the full $10,000 and pay you the additional $6,000 when the money is finally received from the carrier.

The second plan is known as the Full Replacement Protection plan. It is considerably more expensive that the IBV plan because it provides the full replacement value of all lost or damaged property. While the IBV plan has a predetermined amount of coverage, FRP has no pre-set limit and should compensate you for any and all losses incurred during shipment. This plan is recommended for individuals with high value items such as pianos and art collections.

One of the conditions of the FRP plan is that the service member must first file a claim with the carrier, who has the option of repairing or replacing lost or damaged property. If the carrier were to deny or delay your claim for more than 30 days, you would then be able to file a claim with the local Claims Office.

The decision of whether or not to purchase additional insurance should be based upon the actual value of your property and the amount you are willing to pay to protect that property. A failure to purchase the right plan, or any plan, could cost you several thousand dollars.

For more information, call either your transportation counselor or the Claims Office, Office of the Staff Judge Advocate, at 545-2285.

Return to school brings unique stresses

Egleston Children's Hospital

Whether your child is starting school for the first time or hitting the books again after summer vacation, the start of the school year brings new demands and new expectations.

These tips, provided by Hallie Bloom, director of the child life department and school program at Egleston Children's Hospital at Emory University in Atlanta, may help children with the transition:

First-time students

• Any worries your children have about starting school — or day care — probably stem from not knowing what to expect. Give them as much information as possible. A few weeks before school starts, check out and read together a book about a child's first day of school. Visit the school, letting them play on the playground, see their classroom and meet the teacher.

• Have trial runs a few times during the summer to show them what school mornings will be like. For example, have them get up on time and dress as they would for school, and help them pack their lunch. Then go on a special outing together.

• Make sure your children are not intimidated by the bathroom at school and know how to ask for permission to use it

• Ask them how they feel about going to school — both the good and the bad feelings. Listen and be understanding, but don't coddle or be overly concerned yourself. If you seem confident they'll do fine, they'll feel more confident.

• Don't worry if they remain anxious for a few weeks. They may be doing fine at school but re-focusing on their anxiety at home. Be patient and supportive. If their discomfort continues, though, consider talking to their teachers for ideas about improving their school experience.

Back-to-school

Get the family into school routines a few weeks before school starts. Begin new bed and bath times, set up a quiet homework space and discuss how homework will be handled.

• Encourage your children to be responsible for getting themselves ready in the mornings. It's good for them and keeps you from having to nag every morning.

• School-age children benefit from having their own alarm clocks and calendars. These help them understand the concept of time and keep track of important days, deadlines for school projects and other scheduled activities.

• Involve your children in selecting school clothes. It's okay to set limits, such as on costs and types of clothing, but leave some choices to them. Fitting in with classmates is important. If they're unsure what the other children will be wearing, put off shopping until they decide what they want.

• Try to send your children off to school after a calm, enjoyable morning. Organization helps. For example, teach them to lay out their clothes the night before. Plan breakfasts and school lunches the night before, too.

• Show them you value their work. Don't talk down about their school or teacher or belittle their assignments. Show your interest by displaying their projects and asking about their day.

Military Police Activity

TAKE A BITE OUT OF CRIME

This week's hot topic concerns the use of obscene, vulgar or profane language in any public area on Fort Benning.

Two soldiers are taking a break in front of their barracks. They are having a friendly; but heated, argument about last night's basketball game. You can imagine some of the four-letter words that might be used. Similar discussions like this occur daily on every installation in the world. The language used by the two soldiers doesn't offend either of them, but what about the other soldier who passes by and overhears their conversation.

If the language used, or the manner in which it is used, would offend a reasonable person's sense of decency, it should not be used. Take pride in the jobs you perform, the uniform you wear and your contribution to the safety of our nation. Take pride in your use of language. We can all make our point without the use of obscene, vulgar or profane language.

The following entries were extracted from the Fort Benning Military Police Blotters. Such entries may be incomplete and do not determine the guilt or innocence of any person.

• A private was charged with larceny of nonappropriated fund property when he was observed removing a car stereo from the display shelf. The soldier then placed the car stereo in the box of a cheaper car stereo and proceeded to the check out. The soldier was detained by store security. Upon arrival of the Military Police, he was apprehended and transported to the MP station where he was issued identification card confiscation orders, suspension of post exchange privileges and released to his unit.

• A private 1st class was charged with driving under the influence, failure to drive on roadway laned for traffic, illegal transfer of plates, expired plates and no proof of insurance. While traveling on U.S. Highway 27, the soldier lost control of the vehicle, went off the roadway and struck a telephone pole. Upon arrival of the MPs, the soldier was transported to Martin Army Community Hospital for minor injuries and a blood alcohol test. The soldier was processed and released to his unit.

Other activities included eight traffic accidents, six cases of driving under the influence of alcohol, six shoplifting cases reported at exchange facilities and eight cases of larceny of private property.

H&R BLOCK INCOME TAX COURSE
STARTS SEPTEMBER 9, 1995
Thousands of people learn how to prepare income tax returns from H&R Block and then earn money as income tax preparers. H&R Block, the world's largest income tax preparation service, offers its Income Tax Course, starting September 9, 1995. Morning, evening and Saturday classes are available.
Experienced instructors teach tax law, theory and application. Classroom discussion and practice problems provide students with a thorough understanding of each tax topic included in the course. Students learn how to handle increasingly complex income tax situations as the course progresses.
Ideal for people who want to increase their tax knowledge, the course teaches students how to save money on their taxes and also prepares them for a rewarding career.
The affordable fee includes textbooks and supplies. Graduates receive Certificates of Achievement and continuing education units (CEU's). Qualified graduates of the course may be offered job interviews with H&R Block, but are under no obligation to accept employment.
Those interested in more information about the H&R Block Income Tax Course may contact the H&R Block office at Simons Plaza Shopping Center, 2511 Airport Thruway, Columbus, Georgia.

Faith compels us to integrity

By Carl H. Young
36th Engineer Group chaplain

reflections

Integrity is a compelling word that tends to invoke a great deal of emotion when we hear phrases like, "He has integrity," or, "It is a question of his integrity." While we wrestle with our emotions, integrity remains a word that we know, but one which often we do not take time to define.

I would like to define integrity in a twofold manner. The Old Testament gives the definition in a practical manner. It describes a person's walk with God in terms of uprightness and honor toward mankind. The second definition characterizes integrity in terms of a steadfast adherence to a strict moral or ethical code.

One of my favorite passages is where Solomon is told to walk with integrity of heart and uprightness. (I Kings 9:4). Another is when Paul writes to Titus and tells him, "In all respects, show yourself a model of good works; in your teaching show integrity, gravity and sound speech that cannot be censored (Titus 2:7-8) (NRSV)

For me, having integrity is essential for a Christian. We can talk about our love for God, or our ability to memorize scriptures, or even our faithful attendance at church. Yet, that comes across as vain words. James said that a person is justified by what he does and not by faith alone.

As Christians we are required to conduct ourselves in a manner worthy of the gospel of Christ. I like what Jesus said in Matthew, "It is not what goes into the mouth that defiles a person, but what comes out of the mouth that defiles." (NRSV)

We as Christians must concentrate on how we present ourselves and the message of Christ. When persons see and hear us, they see Christ. Let not lies come out of our mouths, but praises. Instead of profanity, let others hear us preach the gospel.

Proverbs 6:16-19 says, "There are six things that the Lord hates, seven that are an abomination to him — haughty eyes, a lying tongue, and hands that shed innocent blood, a heart that devises wicked plans, feet that hurry to run to evil, a lying witness who testifies falsely, and one who sows discord in a family." (NRSV) I propose that instead of being a negative influence, let us be known by the love we have for each other.

As we travel throughout life, it is not an attitude of self-righteousness, but integrity that causes us to be aware of our personal sin. Paul realized that Christ came into the world to save the lost and classified himself as the worst of all sinners. Humbly we realize that all have come short of the glory of god.

Our goal is to make heaven our home. The only way we can get there is to walk with God. My brothers and sisters, let us walk with integrity and in holiness.

Prayerful hands recognize the Chaplains' Corps

By Bob Krause
Army News Service

A sculpture of hands reaching skyward, called "A Veteran's Prayer for Eternal Peace" was dedicated recently to honor the chaplaincy corps of the U.S. Armed Forces.

The sculpture is the only large outdoor memorial in the United States honoring chaplains and was dedicated as part of the ceremonies surrounding the Reserve Officers Association National Convention in Des Moines, Iowa, in early July.

The 12-foot bronze sculpture located in front of Veterans Memorial Auditorium in Des Moines was created by artist Chris Bennett of Bentonsport, Iowa. According to Bennett, it expresses that in the dehumanizing times of war, chaplains bring humanity and hope and act as counselors and healers.

The dedication, presided over by retired Maj. Gen. Evan "Curly" Hultman, was the culmination of work that began in 1989.

USAMU captures Interservice Rifle Championship

Lt. Gen. P.K. Van Riper, commanding general, Marines Corps Combat Development Command, presents trophies to members of the Army Marksmanship Unit.

By Rhonda Syler
U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit

The U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit's Service Rifle team captured the 1995 Interservice Championship Match, shutting out the Marines, National Guard and Army Reserves by over 30 points.

The Interservice Rifle Championships, which take place annually at Quantico Marine Corps Base, Quantico, Va., bring together the top guns of all of the U.S. military services for over a week of grueling competition.

The match is a time for the services to bring together their marksmanship skills from a year of training and competition to see who is the best.

"Competitive marksmanship — it's what gives us the skills, the techniques, and refines them for use on the battlefield," Lt. Gen. P.K. Van Riper, commanding general, Marine Corps Combat Development Command, Quantico, said.

"The shooters can take the skills and knowledge back to their respective services."

"The Army can certainly rest easy and feel confident in the skills and knowledge USAMU soldiers are bringing back," he said.

The 10-man team consisted of Sgt. 1st Class Kenneth Gill, Staff Sgt. Rand Bentson, Sgt. Scott Boyd, Sgt. Lance Dement, Sgt. Lewis Tippie, Sgt. Steven Armstrong, Cpl. Kevin McMahon, Cpl. Grant Singley, Spc. Barry Coleman and Spc. Norman Anderson.

"It was our year," Sgt. 1st Class Michael W. Delk, USAMU team captain said. "I've been on a couple of teams that weren't winners. Now finally we win — it feels great!"

Frank Briggs, coach of the USAMU Service Rifle team, attributes the win to a new-found solidarity among the team members.

"They've come together as a team now. They're working together and getting along. They all have great attitudes," Briggs said.

Building team spirit was Briggs' goal when he took over the team in February. "If you don't have a team that's cohesive, you can have the best shooters in the world and you'll still lose."

Briggs' next priority was to take the weakest shooters and bring them up with the best.

And bring them up he did. "Because of their hard work and devotion, several of the (formerly) weaker shooters are now the strongest."

The USAMU team captured the coveted title after coming off several disappointments. Earlier in the week, USAMU shooter Boyd lost the individual championship by one point in the last day of competition. The USAMU team also lost two overall matches, falling behind the Marines and Army Reserves.

Despite the slide from the overall top gun slot. Boyd won gold in the Interservice Navy Match with a 199 out of 200 (4Xs) while Tippie won gold in the Army Match, tying the match record with a score of 200 with 16Xs. Other team members had strong finishes with USAMU shooters bringing home over eight second and third place finishes.

In team competition, USAMU also won the Any Weapon-Any Sight Division of the 1,000-yard

Top civilian shooter to join Army, USAMU

Columbus Army Recruiting Battalion

Competing in Olympic shooting events is the dream of Richard McCaslin, one of the best pistol sharpshooters in the nation. The Army will give the Ohio State University graduate a chance at that dream.

McCaslin will report to infantry basic training at Fort Benning, Ga., Sept. 17. Fifteen weeks later he will become a member of the Army Marksmanship Unit, the finest shooters in the Army.

"I was not thinking of the Army while I was getting my degree," McCaslin, who graduated OSU in June, said. "My major, Transportation Logistics, is a hot field now with plenty of good-paying jobs awaiting grads."

But he was a three-year member of the Ohio State varsity shooting team, shooting the .22 pistol. One of the competitions the team attends each year is the Army's Collegiate Grand Prix at Fort Benning, Ga., in February.

"The Army always had a seminar on better shooting techniques and they did recruiting at those meetings," McCaslin said. "They basically said 'If you're interested, give us a call. We'll see if you're good enough to join our team.'"

McCaslin, ranked eighth nationally in the free pistol category, looked into the Army as graduation approached. The Army was aware of McCaslin.

"He showed exceptional skills when he was here shooting and we tracked his results at the NCM matches," said Ronnie Boles, the Army Marksmanship Unit pistol coach. "When he spoke to us he asked the right questions and showed a real interest."

"I called Mr . Boles and he told me to send him my results from the past year," McCaslin said. "I wasn't completely sure I wanted to do it but the more I thought about it, the better the idea seemed."

The coach made it clear to McCaslin the AMU was his best shot at becoming the best shooter he could possibly be.

"He wants to become a world-class competitor and frankly, we are the best possible route for him to do that," Boles said. "He has shown the desire to work hard and we offer every opportunity for him to become a champion."

McCaslin, who attended the U.S. Coast Guard Academy for two years, said much thought went into his decision. Ultimately, he chose to pursue his shooting while he is at the top of his abilities.

"They have some of the best facilities in the world and they totally dissect the shooting process," he said. "It borders on fanaticism, what they do down there, but I'm confident I can make it."

McCaslin said he's ready for a regimen of shooting each day and competing all over the world for the next four years. His aim is for shooting events at the 2000 Olympic Games in Sydney, Australia.

"There are many reasons to make this choice, but number one is I want to keep shooting while I'm at the top of my abilities," he said. "I'm at a point where I can focus on shooting exclusively, make a pretty good living doing it, and train for a shot at the Olympic games."

Bodybuilding championship moved to new date

By Brian R. Voller
Bayonet staff writer

The 12th annual Bodybuilding Championship will be conducted at the Main NCO Club Oct. 14.

Weigh-ins will take place from 9 a.m. to 11 a.m. Oct. 14 at the Main NCO club.

Prejudging will begin with the women at 12 p.m., followed by the men at 12:30 p.m.

The competition categories for men are: light weight (up to 160 pounds), middle weight (161-185 pounds) and heavy weight (186 pounds and above).

The categories for women are: light weight (up to 125 pounds), and heavy weight (126 pounds and above).

Additional categories include Mr. and Ms. Fort Benning (restricted to Ft. Benning personnel) and male and female masters (35 years and above).

The contest is open to all active duty personnel, Department of Defense civilians, retirees and family members and a one guest policy per military identification are eligible.

Awards will be presented to the top three finishers in all classes, plus the top two in the 35 and over age group. The registration fee is $25 and an additional $10 for crossover.

Entry deadline must be post marked Sept. 29, late entry fee will be an additional $10. Registration sites are the Infantry Hall Fitness Center and the Sports Office at Doughboy Field.

Contestants must supply their own music on a cassette tape. Music must be no more than 90 seconds in length and must start at the beginning of the tape with no other music on the tape.

Cost for admission will be $2 per person for the prejudging competition, and $5 per person for the finals competition.

USAMU soldier wins President's Rifle Trophy Match

By Marlene Tikal
USAMU Public Affairs Office

A U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit soldier bested 1,221 competitors to win the President's Rifle Trophy Match Aug. 1 at Camp Perry, Ohio.

Sgt. 1st Class John O. Chubb of the USAMU Service Rifle Team won the match — as well as broke the match record which has held since 1976 — with a score of 298 with 12 Xs out of a possible 300 points.

For his efforts, Chubb earned the President's Rifle Trophy along with a congratulatory letter signed by the President of the United States.

Despite his success, Chubb is humble.

"I got lucky," he said. "I only dropped one point on the 200-yard and one point on the 600-yard line."

Firing from both the 200- and 600-yard lines are two of three courses of fire during the match. The third course of fire is shot from a 300-yard line.

Considering the pace and the number of marksmen who participate in the President's Rifle Trophy Match, training has as much as, if not more, to do with Chubb's win than luck.

It's a lot of work keeping these guys finely tuned to the point that they can go out there and totally dominate the competition.

— Staff Sgt. Carl O. Dooley
Service Rifle Team coach

As a member of the USAMU Service Rifle Team, Chubb spends on average eight hours per day, five days per week, training up for a competition as significant as the President's Rifle Trophy Match.

That training includes working on position refinement, ensuring the marksman is firing consistent zeros, trigger control, and reading wind direction, Staff Sgt. Carl O. Dooley, a coach for the Service Rifle Team, said.

"It's a lot of work keeping these guys finely tuned to the point that they can go out there and totally dominate the competition," Dooley said.

If it is a lot of work, it's definitely well worth it for Chubb, who has shot for the President's Rifle Trophy four times before — most recently in 1992.

It was also in 1992 that Chubb, who was then a member of the USAMU, was forced to take a break from shooting while he completed a two-and-a-half-year tour in the Netherlands.

"I just returned to the USAMU to shoot three months ago. I wasn't expecting to do this well this quickly," Chubb said.

However, now that he's reached what some would call the pinnacle of his career -- Chubb, who is hoping to become the next Service Rifle Champion — is still aiming higher.

Army 10-milers prepare for Wash., D.C. competition

By Brian R. Voller
Bayonet staff writer

The Physical Activities Branch is preparing to send two teams, one male and one female, to the Army 10-miler Oct. 15 in Washington D.C. to represent Fort Benning.

Each team will consist of five members, who will be selected during a qualification period. One alternate will be selected for each team in case of emergency dropouts.

The race will begin at the Pentagon. Runners will proceed across the Potomac River into Washington, D.C. through the Potomac River Parks, then back across the Potomac River to finish at the Pentagon.

Over 300 military units and installations and 6400 runners are expected to compete. Fort Benning teams have won this event twice in the last four years.

The Army 10-Miler is sponsored by the Army Recreation Services and the Association of the United States Army.

Backwater areas best place for catching fish

By Earl Bentz and Steve Price
Outboard Marine Corporation

commentary

Professional bass angler Mickey Bruce recently fished a national tournament on the Mississippi River, and described the experience as "daunting and difficult."

"There is so much water it's overwhelming," said Bruce, a member of the Evinrude Outboards Pro Staff who has fished on other major rivers in his career but never on the Mississippi when it was several feet high.

"The first thing you do when fishing the Mississippi is to get off the main river itself and into one of the calmer backwater areas. Once you get into the sloughs and off-river lakes, the habitat begins to look more familiar."

Bruce fished out of Moline, Illinois, located in Pool 15 of the river but motored about 60 miles upstream into Pool 13 to work a huge, shallow protected backwater.

"The key to fishing any large river system like this," he explains, "is looking first for places where bass can spawn. It has to be a large area that provides food and cover and which does not have a current that flows through it.

"If you find that type of area, you'll generally find bass. It's true on rivers throughout the United States, and especially on the Mississippi. It took nearly 50 pounds to win our tournament."

The Evinrude pro does not believe bass migrate in and out of the backwater areas on the Mississippi, primarily because the flow of the main river current is so strong.

"I don't think bass would ever leave a backwater area unless conditions absolutely forced them to," he says. "The bass are spawned in the shallow water of the backwaters and they never move very far away, which is why you go straight to these types of areas when you're looking for fish."

The Mississippi River backwaters Bruce fished extend for miles and include stumps, standing timber, and several types of vegetation. In addition, there are islands, bays, small channels, and even lakes available for fishing.

"Everything seems to be magnified," Bruce laughs again. "The first thing anyone fishing here does is purchase the best river navigational chart he can and study it carefully.

"The backwater areas will be outlined so an angler can choose where he wants to fish. I wouldn't dream of fishing any part of the Mississippi without first studying a good map."

While fishing the Mississippi River tournament, Bruce and the other anglers had to lock through several dams each morning to get to their chosen areas, and then lock back through those same dams as they returned to the weigh-in site.

Plastic worm fishing is learned technique

By Earl Bentz and Steve Price

commentary

Even though the plastic worm ranks as one of the most effective bass lures ever developed, many anglers, don't use it because it's a difficult lure to learn to use properly.

"The best way to learn to use a plastic worm is to fish it in shallow water around visible cover like stumps and logs," explained Florida guide and professional angler Steve Daniel. "Don't try to fish deep water or cover you can't see.

"Just cast to the target, work the lure around it, then reel in and cast to another spot. I think about 90 percent of the strikes on a plastic worm come within just a foot or two of the cover you're casting to, so there really isn't any need to work the lure all the way back to the boat."

Daniel, who guides on huge Lake Okeechobee and who frequently spends his guiding days teaching fishing techniques to new anglers, said he gets more requests for help in worm fishing than for any other lure in his tackle box.

"It's a lure that demands a lot of concentration as well as some experience in actually catching fish with it," he said. "If I can get my clients to catch three or four bass with a plastic worm during a day on the water, they gain some confidence and usually start enjoying the lure."

One of the techniques the Johnson pro emphasizes when teaching worm fishing is line watching, since the majority of worm strikes occur as the lure is falling.

"A newcomer to plastic worm fishing often has difficulty detecting strikes, especially if they occur as the lure is falling through open water," Daniel said, "so it's important to watch the line for any movement.

"If there has not been a strike on the initial fall, I tell my students to immediately lift their rods when the worm touches bottom so the lure can fall again. More often than not, they'll get a strike as soon as the worm begins falling again."

Daniel describes the plastic worm as a "contact" lure, meaning it is a lure most often fished in contact with the bottom. Anglers must learn to distinguish actual bass strikes from the bumps and pulls of rocks logs.

"This isn't as hard as it seems if you fish the worm with more of a hopping retrieve than a crawling retrieve, especially when you're just learning to use the lure," he said. "Bass rarely hit while you're actually pulling the lure along the bottom, which i8 when you feel the cover.

"Most of the time, bass hit a plastic worm as it is falling, or when it's completely motionless on the bottom. When you cast to a target, hop it around that target, let it set motionless for a few moments, then just reel it back for another cast."

Isolated structures, vegetation hold summer bass

By Earl Bentz and Steve Price
Outboard Marine Corporation

When bass leave shallow water in late spring and head for their summer haunts, professional tournament fisherman Ron Shuffield goes with them.

"Now is the time to begin looking for bass around isolated cover and structure between 10 and 25 feet deep," the Johnson Outboards Pro Staff angler said. "The key to finding summer bass like this is locating something different along the bottom, which is why isolated cover like brushpiles or boulders can be so productive.

"Bass relate to many of the same types of cover in deep water as they do in shallow water. The only difference is that we can't see them."

The way to see them, notes Shuffield, is with electronic depthfinders. When he is looking for isolated cover, he frequently criss-crosses over a creek channel until he sees what he wants.

"One of the things I really like to find around isolated cover is a deep water channel nearby," he explained. "Summer bass often relate to deep breaklines, so I simply follow a creek channel and look for something around it."

Once he does locate promising cover, the Johnson pro marks it with a buoy that serves simply as a reference point for casting. With the buoy in place, he backs off in his boat so he can retrieve his lures across the cover and down the incline of the channel.

"I try several different types of retrieves, too," Shuffield continued, "such as crawling, hopping, or even swimming it above the bottom. If bass are present , sooner or later I'll get a strike."

While the large plastic worm is Shuffield's first choice, he may also use a diving crankbait if the cover is not that deep.

"The important rule to remember about using a crankbait is that you really need to be hitting the cover and the bottom with it during the retrieve, and some structure is just too deep to reach with a crankbait.

"Another consideration is that the bass may really want a slow presentation, and that isn't always possible with a crankbait in deep water. I'll try a crankbait if I can, but a big plastic worm is really my favorite choice."

Healthy bait increases chance for catching more fish

Plano Molding Company

Successful anglers go to great pains to keep their minnow, wigglers, crawfish and leeches healthy.

Several factors contribute to bait survival, including the condition it was in when purchased, the type of container used to carry it to the lake, and the overall quality of the water.

"Make sure you buy bait from a reputable dealer," said Public Relations Manager Bill Cork of Plano, a manufacturer of tackle and bait containers. "If the bait isn't healthy to begin with, it may not survive the trip."

To keep bait alive for extended periods, attach a battery-operated aerator to the bucket and keep it running when the bucket isn't in use.

"Don't overcrowded minnows in a bait bucket and remove dead bait immediately, added Cork. "With a little maintenance and common sense, bait can be kept alive in a bucket for several days."

AMU shooter takes pistol honors

By Rhonda Syler
USAMU Public Affairs

Sgt. Roger Jacobson ranked second place over 806 shooters in the .45-caliber pistol championships at Camp Perry, Ohio recently.

Jacobson, with the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit, was within one point of taking the lead and capturing the .45 championship, one phase of the National Pistol Championship.

Also, he finished sixth overall in the championship and received the distinguished President's 100 Badge. The badge places him among the nation's best.

"It's an awesome feeling," Jacobson said. "It's one of the greatest things that has ever happened to me."

This is Jacobson's fifth trip to compete in the nationals, this year proved promising as he inched closer to the national title.

"I'm moving up every year. I went from placing in the 50s overall in 1992 to 17th overall last year." Now he's placed sixth in he overall aggregate competition.

Jacobson's results are significant considering there were over 800 shooters competing. "Many of these shooters have been competing 15 to 20 years — many (shooters competing) before I was born. They're seasoned."

"I've been shooting full-time for two years and I'm already serious competition for them."

The Nationals at Camp Perry is the most important match of the year for Jacobson. "Now it's time to settle back, find my mistakes and make a plan to do the best I can next year," he said

FAMILY CHILD CARE NEEDS YOUR SUPPORT

Thanks to Campbell's® Labels for Education Program, our Post can obtain much needed playground equipment FREE OF CHARGE. However, we need your help in achieving this goal which will benefit all Fort Benning children.

The Program, sponsored by Campbell Soup Company, is actually quite simple: From now until March 1, 1996, Fort Benning will be collecting labels from over 1000 Campbell-made products.

Our goals is to collect 345,650 labels during this program. We are looking to obtain the playground set pictured below. We have been collecting since January, 1995 and at this point are only at about 2% of the way to our goal. We need a lot of support to be able to have our playground by next summer. The projected location to build the playground is Russ Pond.

We're asking everyone to help by saving the labels and proofs of purchase on Campbell products. Please join us in this worthwhile effort.

There are label drop-off points at all the Community of Life buildings as well as the Post Commissary. Thank you in advance for your support and cooperation.

Jigs effective at depth, retrieves

By Earl Bentz and Steve Price
Outboard Marine Corporation

No matter where he's fishing this time of year, former world champion bass fisherman Larry Nixon will have a jig tied on at least one of his rods.

"Day in and day out, in clear water or dingy, shallow or deep, a jig is one of the best all-around lures for bass because it looks like one of their natural foods," explains Nixon, a member of the Evinrude Outboards Pro Staff and winner of more than $1 million in bass tournament prize money.

"You can fish them at practically any depth and with a wide variety of retrieves. They're Nixon believes one of the things that makes jigs effective is adding a pork trailer to the hook. The trailer provides most of the lure's action and can actually help attract visual strikes.

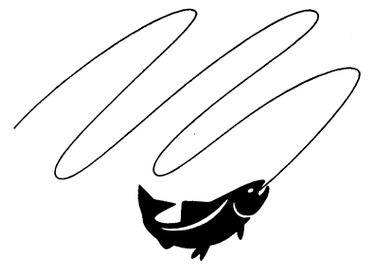
"I use a pork trailer that has long legs that really swim when you let the jig fall," he explains. "In clear water, for example, or when you're fishing lakes with a lot of angling pressure, you don't want bass to get a good look at the jig so you retrieve it with a fast lift and fall motion."



Another thing Nixon looks for in a pork trailer is a narrow or angular head design so it more closely corresponds with the jig design.

"A lot of pork trailers have a very wide head," said the Evinrude pro, "so when you fish them around grass or thick brush, they often get snagged.

"I'd usually trim mine with a pair of scissors, but now manufacturers are making the trailers with the slimmer heads."

Nixon said the best jig to use around thick vegetation is a 3/4 or one ounce model because the heavier weight gets the lure through the vegetation easier.

When bass are sluggish, as they are in really hot or really cold water, Nixon recommends a much slower retrieve because the fish won't be chasing the lure.

"This is when you want your jig to fall very slowly," he explains, "so you may use a lighter jig, or perhaps a heavier line. The pork trailer will add some buoyancy, but you can also slow a jig's fall by fishing with a heavier line, such as 20 or 25 pound test."

Buzzbait aggravates big bass to bite

By Earl Bentz and Steve Price
Outboard Marine Corporation

Larry Nixon's "secret" lure also happens to be the "secret" lure of about 150 other professional bass fishermen.

"It's a buzzbait," laughs Nixon, winner of more than $1 million in tournament prize money and a member of the Evinrude Outboards Pro Staff. "I think it's one of the best big-bass lures available, and I keep one handy from late spring through September."

Nixon believes the slow-turning, clacking blade bait aggravates bass more than attracts them the way other topwater lures do. That's why buzzbait strikes are so ferocious.

"Two of the most important considerations when fishing a buzzbait are to work it as close to heavy cover as possible, and to fish it as slow as you can, "explains Nixon. "A fast buzzbait retrieve seldom gets much attention."

Buzzbaits really started becoming popular among professional bass fishermen in 1977 and 1978 when the lure played a key role in tournament wins for one of Nixon's close friends and competitors, Rick Clunn. Since then, Nixon has tried to become a master at using the lure.

"In the summer months, the prime time to fish a buzzbait is early in the morning, especially around stumps, lily pads, grassbeds, and fallen logs," says the Evinrude pro, "but you don't have to put the lure away after the sun gets high."

"I also like to fish buzzbaits around rock rip rap and beside bridge pilings in the middle of the day. I've seen huge bass caught on buzzbaits in the hottest part of the day."

Many anglers complain about missing bass when using buzzbaits, and Nixon believes the problem may be improper rod selection.

"A good buzzbait rod will probably be a medium to medium/heavy action with a flexible tip that bends when the bass hits so the fish can engulf the lure," he explains, "but it also has to have plenty of strength to handle the fish."

Nixon also advises trying to hesitate for an extra split second after a bass hits before setting the hook.

"If you can train yourself to wait until you firmly feel the fish on the lure, you'll probably improve your hook-up ratio," he says, "but that's hard to do.

"For some reason buzzbait attract the really big bass, and when they strike, it's difficult to hesitate for anything because it's so sudden and explosive."

Keeping fish no longer trend of fishermen

By Earl Bentz and Steve Price
Outboard Marine Corporation

Randy Dearman has been a professional bass fishing guide since 1969, and the biggest change he's seen in his profession during that time is that today sometimes his clients don't even want to catch fish.

Dearman, a member of the Johnson Outboards Pro Staff, said the technique of flipping is probably what he teaches the most. Because it generally requires a special rod, Dearman makes sure he always has a spare in his rod box.

"For some reason, new or inexperienced bass fishermen are intrigued with flipping," he says, "and I'm happy to teach them how to do it.

"Flipping has played a major part in many of my national tournaments and it has received a lot of publicity in magazines and on television.

"Fortunately, it's also an easy technique to learn. We usually have a lot of fun when I'm teaching it to new anglers because they're amazed at how effective it can be in catching bass."

Dearman remembers the times not that many years ago when perhaps 75 percent of his clients simply wanted fish to take home. Now, very, very few of his clients keep bass.

"If we have educated today's bass fishermen about anything, it has to be the concept of catch and release," explained the Johnson pro.

"As fishermen, we also realize we can recycle bass from one angler to another when we put a fish back after catching it."

High temperatures and vegitation change tactics

By Earl Bentz and Steve Price
Outboard Marine Corporation

Professional bass tournament angler Denny Brauer of Missouri enjoys a reputation as one of the most successful jig fishermen on the tournament circuit, but when he's fishing heavy vegetation in warm weather, he changes tactics completely.

"One of my favorite lures in late summer is the weedless spoon," explains Brauer.

Brauer normally fishes a 1/2 ounce model in either gold or silver color, and he generally adds a plastic split-tail trailer to increase the lure's side-to-side swimming action.

"I fish a spoon two different ways, according to the weather and water conditions," he said.

When the weather has been severe and the water is choppy or wind-blown, Brauer prefers to fish a spoon just below the surface, swimming it through the vegetation and then letting it flutter deeper into open pockets.

"Under these conditions, bass are usually a little less active so it's important to work the lure slower and more deliberately," Brauer said. "This is when the trailer is especially important because it adds action that helps attract bass."

In calm, stable weather, Brauer fishes a weedless spoon on the surface. He retrieves the lure faster, and may add more action by jiggling his rod tip as he retrieves.

"One of the problems anglers have when fishing a weedless spoon is missing strikes," notes Brauer. "With this lure, it's critical to let the bass take the lure for a moment before setting the hook.

"I don't think using a rod with a limber tip is the answer, either," he adds. "because you fish a spoon in thick cover and you need a powerful tip action to help control the fish.

"The weedless spoon is definitely a big-bass lure, too. I've caught some of my heaviest stringers using it."

Virginia Kussman, wife of outgoing Martin Army Community Hospital commander Col. Michael J. Kussman, receives the Commanders Award for Public Service medal at the Aug. 10 ceremony near MACH.

MACH bids farewell to outgoing commander

By Lori Egan
Bayonet staff writer

Col. Michael J. Kussman relinquished command of U.S. Army Medical Department Activity during a relinquishment of command ceremony at a parade field near Martin Army Community Hospital Aug. 10.

The ceremony included a Silver Wings demonstration and remarks by Maj. Gen. John W. Hendrix, Fort Benning commanding general and Brig. Gen. Vernon C. Spaulding, Jr., commanding general, Eishenhower Army Medical Center and Southeast Health Service Support Area, Fort Gordon, Ga.

When acknowledging Kussman's achievements, Hendrix said the most worthy statement of Kussman's leadership and ability was his competence. This was recognized by the hospital's accreditation with commendation by the joint commission which less than four percent of the hospitals in the country received.

"For two consecutive years the hospital has received that rating, " Hendrix said. "That's what vision and leadership are all about and that's what Mike Kussman has done for us."

Kussman is moving to San Antonio, Texas to become the director of clinical operations at the U.S. Army Medical Command at Fort Sam Houston.

During the ceremony, Kussman was awarded the Legion of Merit with oak leaf cluster. His other awards include the defense Meritorious Service Medal, Army Meritorious Service Medal with second oak leaf cluster, army Commendation Medal with second oak leaf cluster, Army Achievement Medal and the Order of Military Medical Merit.

Other honors awarded to Kussman include the Expert Field Medical Badge and has been awarded the prestigious "A" designator by the Army Surgeon General signifying professorial rank.

Kussman and his wife, Virginia, have two children — Joshua, 23, and Deana, 20.

Kussman's replacement is Col. Robert F. Griffin. Until Griffin's arrival, the interim commander of the hospital is Col. Gerald M. Cross, deputy commander.

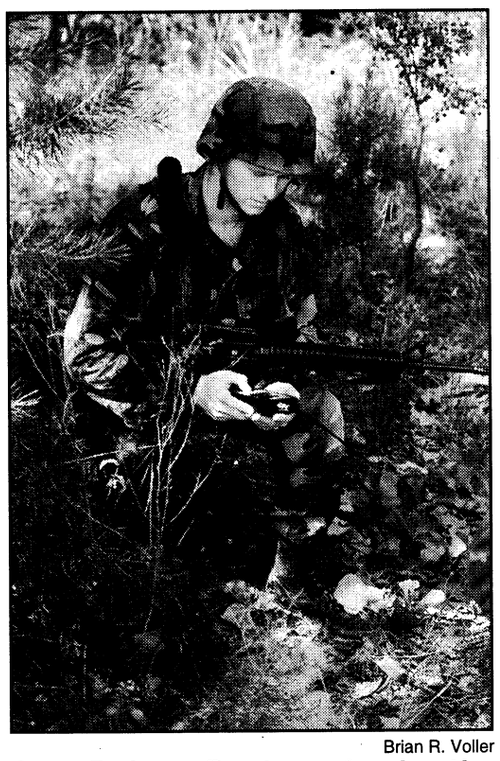
Battle Lab debuts early warning system

By Brian R. Voller
Bayonet staff writer

The Dismounted Battle Space Lab conducted a capabilities demonstration of the prototype Tactical Sentry Radio Aug. 10 at Buckner Range.

The TSR is a light weight, hand held transmitter/receiver designed to enhance soldier survivability and situational awareness by providing digital sensor and command and control information to the dismounted soldier.

"The TSR, produced by MCQ Associates, is a Fiscal Year 95 Advanced Concepts and Technologies II (ACT II), program," Capt. Edward Jennings, project officer of the Battle Lab, said. "It is designed as a direct response to the demand for the integration of digital sensor information."



The TSR is designed to assist the dismounted soldier in identifying potential enemy movements. The system weighs approximately 10-ounces, and receives its power from a nine-volt battery.

"The TSR is very user friendly," Jennings said. "It has an LED (Light Emitting Diode) readout which has a backlight that can be engaged or disengaged, which will help the dismounted soldier at night."

The readout on the TSR has two capabilities. It can receive information or it can send information.

"Essentially the TSR is an early warning system for the soldiers in the field," Jennings said. "Most importantly everything that comes over the TSR unit is digital traffic, which means it won't get caught up with other voice traffic or radio communications."

The TSR receives its information from various types of sensors that can be positioned in the field. The sensors include acoustic, magnetic, passive-infrared and seismic sensors.

Brian R. Voller

Sgt. Robert Deaton checks the tactical sentry radio readout before moving his soldiers into position.

When one of the sensors is activated it sends an alarm to the field processing units, which is a receiver that analyze the incoming signals. The sensor information is sent to the field display unit where personnel monitoring the field display unit are given the warning, and it is instantly sent to the field soldier.

"There are two methods by which the TSR can alert soldiers," Jennings said. "It can either give a beep or a buzz, or it can be set to vibrate when information is being transmitted to the soldier.

"The soldiers who have been testing the TSR have experimented with setting the TSR on the vibration signal. They have placed the TSR on their LCE (Load Carrying Equipment), or one soldier said he put it on the sling of his weapon and he felt his whole weapon vibrate when a signal was coming in."

During the demonstration, soldiers from Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 1st Battalion, 325 Infantry Regiment 82nd Airborne, from Fort Bragg, N.C. portrayed United Nations forces equipped with the TSR, and Company A, 2nd Battalion 18th Infantry Regiment from Kelley Hill portrayed the opposing forces.

Sgt. Robert Deaton, squad leader for the 82nd Airborne, said he liked the TSR as an additional form of early alert.

"It's a good early warning system for a defensive monitoring position," Deaton said. "The system is really reliable and it's a very positive addition to the normal visual identification method."

Deaton also added the TSR is a good device, but he said he feels it needs a stronger range to be effective.

"All the system needs is a stronger signal range," Deaton said. "If they add a couple more batteries to it, the range will increase to an acceptable level. Right now the system limits are movement to a confined area."

Jennings said the TSR was being demonstrated for the first time in its prototype form. He said the system will still be improved to better accommodate the dismounted soldier.

SOA to participate in joint peacekeeping mission in Argentina

By Judith Ginder
School of the Americas

International aid is formally requested by the Straconian government, as civil war continues and an outbreak of contagious diseases plagues the country.

Straconia? Where on earth is that?

The nation of Straconia is a fictitious state that is being used for a real joint peacekeeping exercise among the United States, Argentina, Brazil, Paraguay and Uruguay.

The U.S. participants for the Aug. 21-31 training, which will be held in Buenos Aires, Argentina, include U.S. Army Southern Command, U.S. Forces Command, U.S. Army South and U.S. Army Training and Doctrine Command. Going with the TRADOC group are 15 people from the School of the Americas who will be putting their linguistic skills to use during the exercise.

"Participants will basically be making a dry run of an actual peacekeeping operation," said Sgt. 1st Class David de Camp, SOA Training and Management Division noncommissioned officer in charge.

The intent of a peacekeeping operation is to establish a stable environment in which negotiations can take place, he said. As the need grows for peacekeeping operations throughout the world, this type of joint training is essential.

The group will exercise command and control of a multinational force, conduct maneuvers, provide logistics to the force, develop intelligence in a peacekeeping environment, and provide combat support under non-combat conditions, de Camp said. Also covered will be subjects such as voting-place security, crowd control and handling media also will be covered during the exercise.

The SOA soldiers headed down south Aug. 6 for a pre-operations training in Panama, and are expected Sept. 2 to return to Fort Benning.

Army Materiel Command receives praise from VP

By Tami Terella
Army News Service

WASHINGTON — The Army Materiel Command, headquartered in Alexandria, Va., recently earned high marks for quality improvement from Vice President Al Gore, the president's leader for re-inventing government.

The praise came Aug. 2 at the Federal Quality Conference in Washington, D.C., when Gore presented the awards to three AMC commands: the U.S. Army Tank-Automotive Research, Development and Engineering Command; the Armament Research, Development and Engineering Center; and the Red River Army Depot for improving the caliber of their organizations.

"Re-inventing government is hard," Gore said to conference attendees. "But it is extremely fulfilling work for all who are involved in it. And it helps to know that those of us involved in it are not alone. All of you are involved. You advocates of quality management are with President Clinton and me in the effort to make government work better and cost less. That's the right way to change government, making it work better as well as cost less. And it's done through quality management."

The Tank-Automotive Research, Development and Engineering Center in Warren, Mich. — or TARDEC, as it is called — won the 1995 Presidential Award for Quality, "in recognition of service to customers and commitment to excellence."

TARDEC designs and develops tanks, other armored vehicles and specialized trucks and trailers for the U.S. armed forces, federal agencies and more than 60 other countries.

TARDEC was recognized by the vice president for establishing its own university in 1992, to advance the development of the command's scientists and engineers, and to school TARDEC employees on total quality management. It was also recognized for improving its team-based organization by eliminating several layers of management and 140 supervisory positions. The result was a newly formed work force of 155 Integrated Product Teams that control their own budgets, personnel functions and program initiatives in order to move decision making closer to the customer.

TARDEC has also created the National Automotive Center to serve as the Army's site for development of dual-use automotive technologies and their application to military ground vehicles. Since its inception, 36 dual-use automotive-technology contracts have been signed with industry.

TARDEC associates were also recognized for their development of a "virtual prototyping" process, which allows TARDEC engineers to create, design, test, evaluate and manufacture new military/automotive vehicles in a computer.

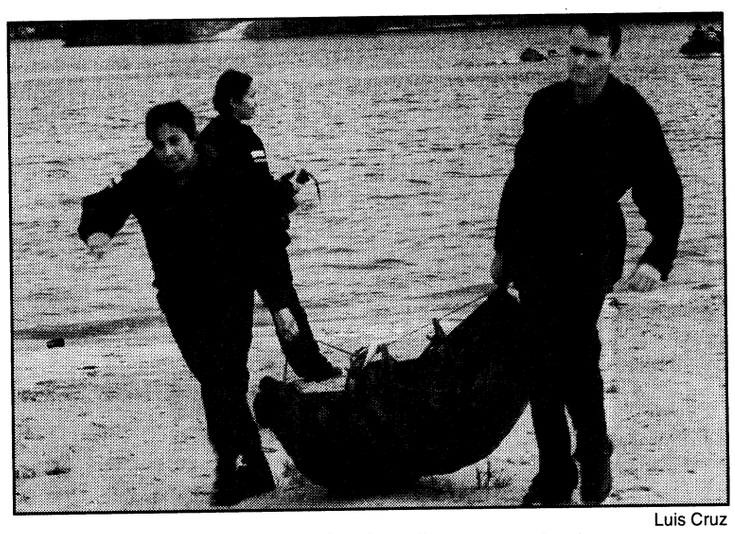
In one example, TARDEC engineers compared the traditional process with the virtual-prototype process of developing and building an M1 Abrams Main Battle Tank. The virtual-prototype process resulted in a four-year reduction in development time, at a projected savings of $168 million.

The Armament Research, Development and Engineering Center, and the Red River Army Depot are sub-agencies of TARDEC. These agencies were presented the Quality Improvement Prototype Award "for demonstrating outstanding achievement in quality management."

ARDEC's accomplishments included: increasing their unconditional product release from 90 to 100 percent in the past five years. This allowed ARDEC to hand off weapons to soldiers without any unresolved problems.

ARDEC also found success in fielding the PALADIN, a howitzer with a 25 percent increase in range and a 33 percent reduction in the number of crew members needed over its predecessor.

And finally ARDEC was recognized for reducing its average processing time for technical-data packages from 198 in 1988 to 36 days in 1994, while error rates dropped from 24 percent to less than 1 percent.



SOA cadets plunge to victory

By Judith Ginder
School of the Americas

Students from the School of the Americas Counternarcotics Cadet Course graduated Aug. 11 in a ceremony at Ridgway Hall.

The four-week course is designed to give Latin Americans in the military and police academy an introduction into counternarcotics operations. Realistic and strenuous field operations are taught during the course.

One such operation requires the students to helocast into Victory Pond, then move into the McKenna Military Operations on Urbanized Terrain facility, said Sgt. Edgar Ramirez, SOA special operations instructor.

Luis Cruz

Two Counternarcotic Cadet Course students carry their poncho raft onto shore after helocasting.

After the helocast, cadets move in squads toward the MOUT site, he said. There, students get a realistic view of what to expect when going into an urban area.

Luis Cruz

School of the Americas Counternarcotics Cadet course students helocast into Victory Pond.

"After setting up a perimeter, the students decide together how to handle the situation at the MOUT site," Ramirez said.

While this is taking place, SOA personnel await the students, ready to play the parts of drug dealers, rioters and drug manufacturers. To achieve this mission, three elements have to be met.

"When the students enter the MOUT site, they must take down the enemy without endangering civilian lives, Ramirez said. "Also, the students have to secure the area and control the rioters.

"The MOUT exercise is successful in part because of the use of the role players," he said. "This makes the experience more realistic for the students."

Greensboro, North Carolina
Hospital-Based: OB/GYN Generalist
Internal & Family Medicine: Private Practice
The Women's Hospital of Greensboro is recruiting 2 OB/GYN Generalists for a busy inpatient practice. The primary responsibility is teaching residents, medical students and physician assistants. Call is seven nights per month.
Also in Greensboro, we have several private practice opportunities for both Family and Internal Medicine. The positions range from joining large, multi-specialty groups, to medium-sized single specialty, to joining a solo doctor.
Greensboro, with a population of 190,000, is large enough to offer recreational activities to suit just about everyone's tastes -- parks within a mile of every resident's home, minor league hockey and baseball, the symphony, museums, five colleges/ universities, and much more! If you are interested in learning more, please call Pamela Lietz at 800-476-6737 or forward your CV to her at:

SCHOOL DAYS

Students fill classrooms again

First-day jitters strike parents, pupils alike

By Donna S. Budjenska
Special to The Bayonet©

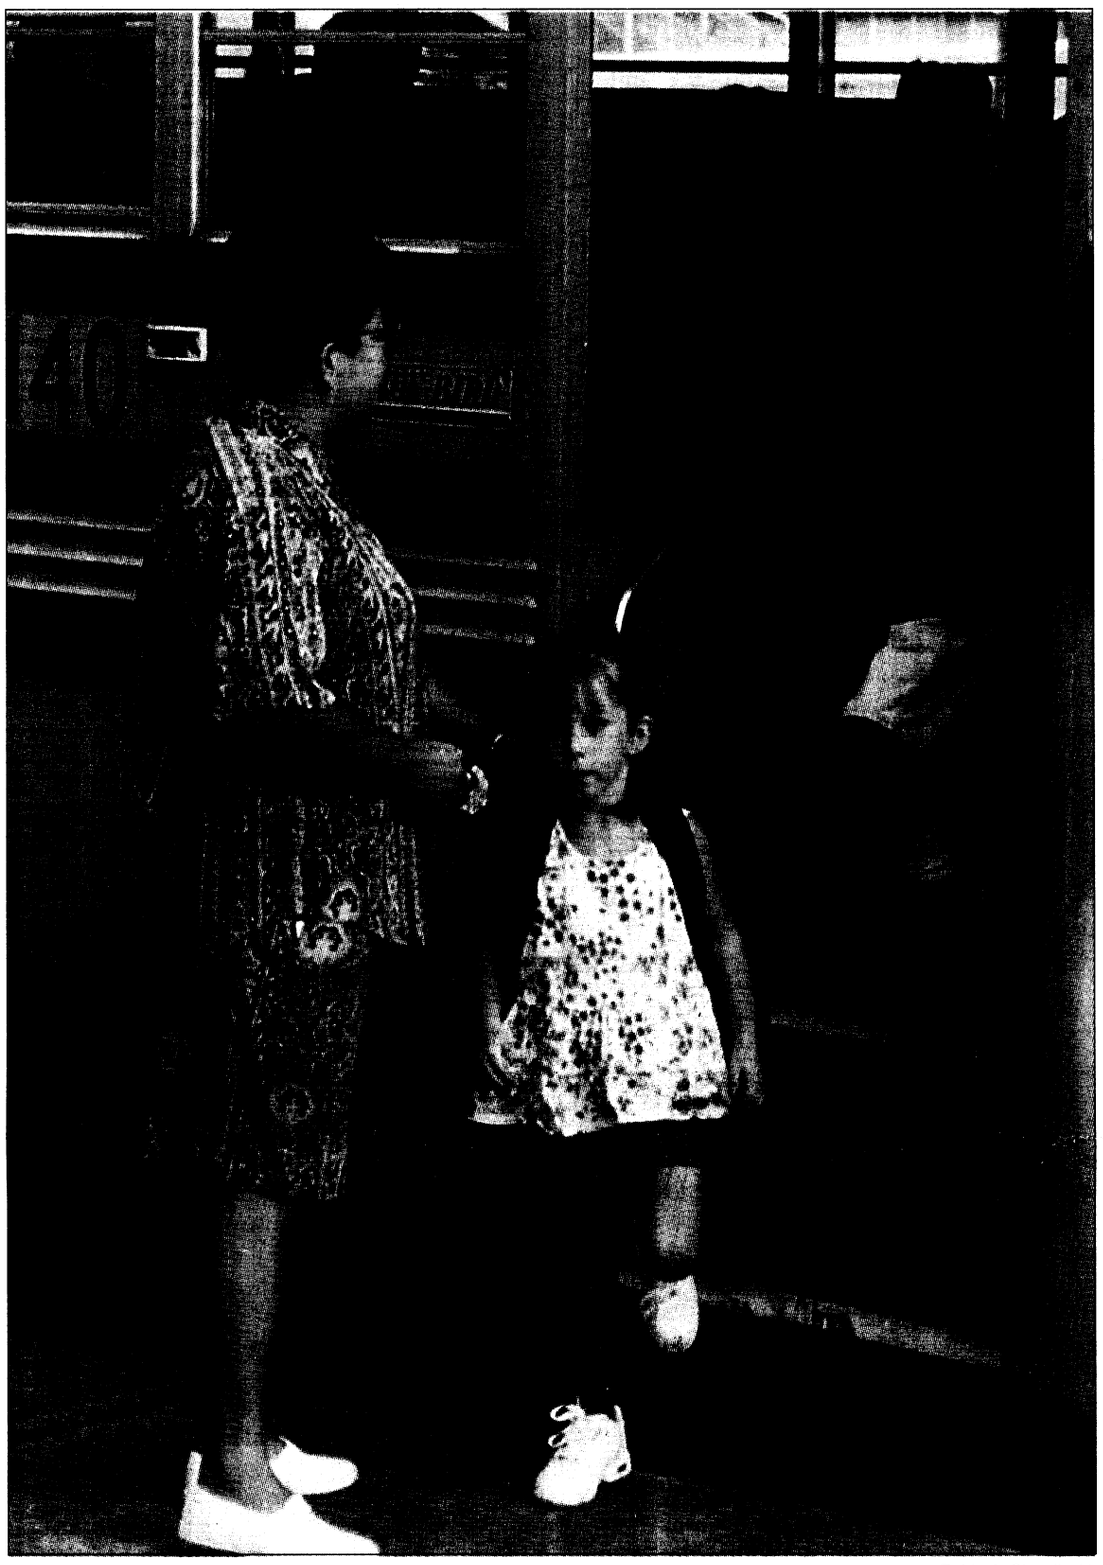
Clutching backpacks and eyeballing their future teachers, students lined up early outside Richard G. Wilson Elementary School.

Some toted parents along, others arrived alone. But arrive they did, and by the time the first bell rang at 8:25 Tuesday morning, approximately 350 children were waiting to take their places in their new classrooms.

They were among the nearly 2,700 students who started classes this week at Fort Benning's seven schools.

"I'm most excited about painting," said 5-year-old Lacey Alexis Sims, entering Marianne Smith's kindergarten class. Her mother, Donna, accompanied her, camcorder in hand.

"I think I'm more nervous to let her go than she is," Sims said. Mother and daughter had a tough time getting to sleep last night, both anticipating the first day of school and this new phase in their lives.



"I think (mornings will) be more exciting now," Sims said. "We'll have something to look forward to and see what she comes home with every day."

Anticipation was a common trend among parents and children Tuesday morning.

"He's been wanting to go to school for the last two weeks, putting on his school clothes and getting his backpack," said Dorothy White of her son Christopher, 6.

Christopher, meanwhile visited with a future classmate as he waited in line. He is starting first grade in Maria Patterson's class.

Several parents seemed as reluctant to go as some children were to have them leave. "You can't be in kindergarten!" one mother lamented jokingly as she watched her son join his classmates.

Robin A. Shawlinski

Yolanda Rodriguez, a teacher's aide at McBride Elementary School, greets kindergartners Shawna Roseman, daughter of Sgt. Jeff and Cheryl Roseman, and Tommy Parker-Davis, son of 1st Lt. Tommy Davis, as they arrive on the first day of school.

Once the tears dried, though, the first-day fun and games began as teachers met students and students met each other, some recognizing peers from kindergarten or other classes.

All in all, it seemed as though enthusiasm ran high among Wilson's students and teachers as the final bell rang, signaling the start of classes for the 1995-1996 school year.

Combined Federal Campaign to begin

By Richard Brill
Special to The Bayonet©

The Combined Federal Campaign will kick off Oct. 2 and continue through Nov. 15.

The CFC is an annual fund drive that allows federal employees to donate to various charities of their choice in a single fund-raising campaign.

"It's a one-time shot at donating to a particular charity that you want to donate to," said Marge Copland, CFC coordinator.

Maj. Chuck Walls, garrison commander, said the emphasis on this year's campaign is maximum participation.

"We want to make sure that every soldier and every Department of Defense civilian has been approached and asked, 'Do you want to contribute?'" Walls said.

Soldiers and Department of Defense civilians will be able to pledge their donations beginning Oct. 2 through designated personnel in their offices or units.

Contributors can donate in one of two ways — payroll deduction or a one-time donation using cash, check or money order, Copland said. The minimum donation for either is $4.

The charities selected must come from the national CFC list, which provides a four-digit code for each charitable organization and includes hundreds of nationally and internationally known charitable organizations, from emergency relief organizations to medical research institutes to environmental protection agencies. Donors must write the code of the organization on their pledge forms, she said.

"A special code, 5001, benefits only Fort Benning agencies and is a great choice for soldiers who want to see their donation help soldiers," she said.

The post's goal for this year's campaign is $500,000.

5001 benefits Fort Benning

By Richard Brill
Special to The Bayonet©

Contributors to the Combined Federal Campaign, which begins Oct. 2, have the option of earmarking their donations to help Fort Benning agencies by selecting Code 5001.

According to Marge Copland, CFC coordinator, money donated to 5001 directly benefits Fort Benning.

The fund helps support post organizations and services, including youth and handicap programs, Santa's Castle, volunteer services, lending closet, food locker, Army Community Service, Red Cross, family support groups, community improvement, Boy and Girl Scouts and others.

The Soldier and Family Support Association allocates the money received from 5001 donations according to expense requests submitted by the various post organizations helped by the fund, she said.

Michele Aldridge, Army Family Action Plan coordinator, said it would be difficult, if not impossible, to host the post's annual AFAP symposium without support from the 5001 fund.

"Other CFC organizations are worthy, but 5001 is the only organization that truly benefits the total Army community of Fort Benning," she said. "With many charities you might not ever directly see the results of your donation, but with 5001 you see exactly where your money is going."

Every soldier on post, especially those with children, benefit by contributing to the 5001 fund, Copland said.

At a glance

What: Code 5001, part of the Combined Federal Campaign

Purpose The only CFC organization devoted entirely to the Fort Benning community

Agencies to benefit: The fund helps support post organizations and services, including youth and handicap programs, Santa's Castle, volunteer services, lending closet, food locker, Army Community Service, Red Cross, family support groups, community improvement, Boy and Girl Scouts and others.

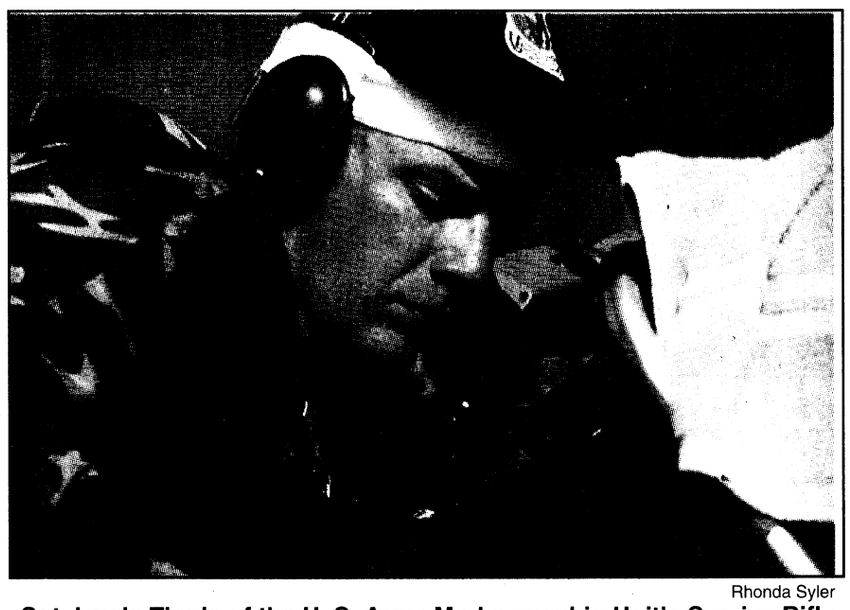
AMU shooters dominate rifle championships

By Deana Kussman and Marlene Tikal
U.S. Army Marksmanship Office



The U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit's Service Rifle Team made history with the M-16 rifle this month, sweeping the National Rifle Championships at Camp Perry, Ohio.

For the first time in the event's 92-year history, the USAMU marksmen dominated the 1,221 competitors who represented Marine Corps, Navy, Air Force, Coast Guard and civilian shooting teams by taking first-place finishes in the majority of competitions comprising the Nationals.

"For the Service Rifle Team, these accomplishments were something in themselves," Sgt. 1st Class Michael Delk, a Service Rifle Team coach, said.

However, the fact these accomplishments were made with the modified M-16 is even more astounding.

"Everybody said the M-16 (that's used on a day-to-day basis by the military) couldn't hit the broad side of a barn," said Brig. Gen. John G. Meyer, commander of the Community and Family Support Center, USAMU's higher headquarters.

Rhonda Syler

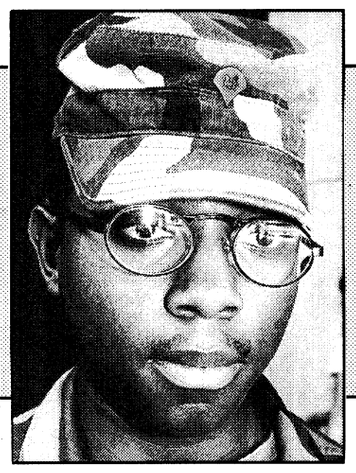
Sgt. Lewis Tippie of the U. S. Army Marksmanship Unit's Service Rifle Team set a national record in the National Long-Range Service Rifle competition, winning the event during the championships at Camp Perry, Ohio.

While it's true the M-16 is capable of producing a large number of casualties in combat situations, it once lacked the accuracy to be used in service rifle competitions.

That's not the case anymore. Modifications have transformed the weapon into a quality match rifle.

Some modifications include the introduction of a barrel made of a heavier metal that withstands warping and reduction of the rear-sight aperture for improved accuracy and were made to the M-16 by USAMU gunsmiths, "When that kind of rifle, as opposed to the M-14 still used by a majority of service rifle competitors, is placed in the hands of someone like a highly skilled USAMU marksman, it's an unbeatable combination," Delk said.

The performance of the USAMU Service Rifle Team members, who on average spend eight hours per day, five days per week, training up for a competition as significant as the nationals, proves that.



"It takes a lot of time keeping these guys finely tuned to the point where they can go out there and totally dominate the competition," Staff Sgt. Carl Dooley, another coach for the Service Rifle Team, said.

Training time for the USAMU marksmen is spent working on position refinement, firing consistent zeros, practicing trigger control and reading

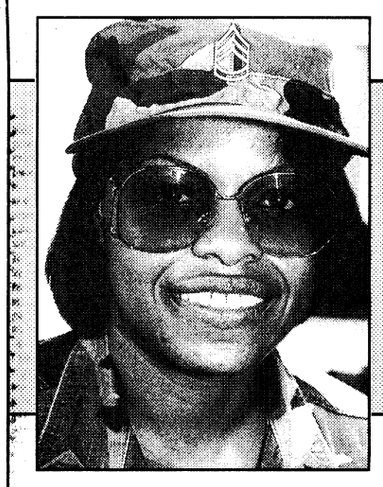
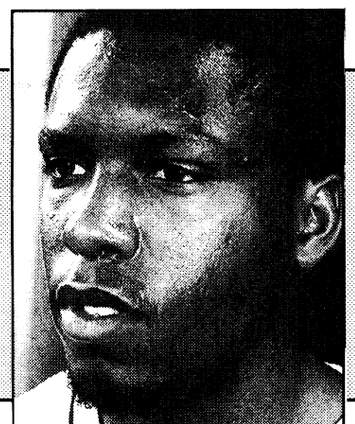
VARIOUS VOICES

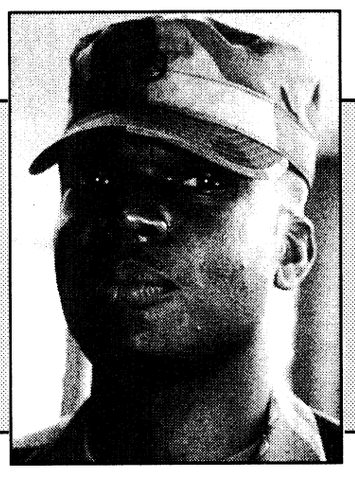


How do you feel about Shannon Faulkner being at The Citadel? (Faulkner has left The Citadel since The Bayonet asked this question.)



Spc. Rod D. Hardy, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 2nd Battalion, 18th Infantry — "I think women should be represented equally at all military colleges."

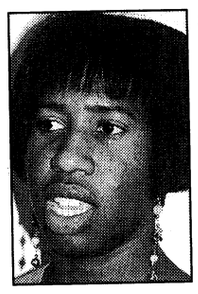
Lt. Col. Roger A. Cook, U.S. Army Medical Department Activity — "Since I'm a Citadel graduate, I'm very unhappy."



Sgt. 1st Class Elizabeth L. Porter, Headquarters and Headquarters Detachment, 13th Corps Support Battalion — "I think it is great that she is there, for women to get into that academy to prove they're equal to men. It will be a great challenge for her to make it through. Maybe more women will join if she makes it."

Charles F. Hill, civilian — "It was a long time coming; everybody should have the same privileges. Just because she is a female, she shouldn't be discriminated against. It's the '90s; times change."

Sandra F. Hunter, family member — "I have mixed feelings. I hate to see it end because of the tradition, but she has the right to be where she wants to be. I'm bothered by the fact that she has said she doesn't know if she wants to make a career out of the military."



Staff Sgt. Rodney L. Yelder, 104th Transportation Company — "I think it is great; it's breaking down the walls of stereotyping in our nation. I think we are resembling America more by accepting all races and sexes into organizations like this. But she needs to conform to the weight standards."

Who's right? Faulkner or The Citadel

By Lisa M. Hibbert
Bayonet staff writer

Spc. Lisa M. Hibbert believes Faulkner wasn't given a fair chance by the media or The Citadel.

commentary

As a graduate of North Carolina Central University, a predominantly single-race college, I can identify with The Citadel; but as a woman I also understand Shannon Faulkner.

I've often been asked why I chose to attend a historically black institution — an "all-black college."

First of all, it was not all-black. None of the state-supported schools and very few of the private ones are all-black. In fact, when I graduated in 1992, the NCCU Law School was 40 percent white. The difference between my state-supported alma mater and The Citadel is that anyone was able to and did attend class.

In fact, if we did not fulfill a 17 percent quota of "minority" students, our state funding would have been cut immediately. (At a historically black institution white students. as well as those from other ethnic groups, are considered the minority and are eligible for minority-presence grants and scholarships.)

I was under the naive impression that all state schools were regulated this way; after all, it is state money. How come The Citadel is exempt from these rules? How can the state-supported Citadel maintain a single-gender institution?

I can even understand The Citadel not wanting to change its all-male status. In regards to my alma mater, the University of North Carolina system wants NCCU to change its name to the University of North Carolina at Durham — a change that would also erase its historically black institution status.

As much as I can identify with The Citadel, I was surprised by the attitude of its faculty, staff and students.

See, while I did attend a predominantly single-race college, I can't even imagine any of my classmates behaving in such a manner.

All of the hostility that was bestowed on Faulkner, especially by such high-ranking officers, was really disturbing. I felt like it was the 1960s and I was watching the integration of the Alabama school system.

Many male soldiers on post (and off) are saying that Faulkner should never have tried to enroll in The Citadel. After all, they said, she's overweight and out of shape so she obviously could not handle the physical training program.

But Monday, as I was watching "Good Morning America," I learned from Faulkner's attorney that she had been running five miles a day in preparation for her new role as a cadet — something that I do not do.

Many of my male counterparts have balked at this, saying there is no way that Faulkner could run five miles. "Did you see how that girl looked?" they said. All I know is that I've seen many soldiers in "the real Army" who look very overweight, who I am sure have to get taped and I believe must have difficulty passing their physical training tests.

Some people have even gone so far as to say that if she were more attractive, physically, she would have fared better. Hey, if beauty were the key to success, Andy Rooney of "60 Minutes" fame would have been dismissed a while ago.

To be honest, when Faulkner first waged her war, I had mixed feelings. I was very eager to understand where she was coming from, what was driving her. Reading an article she wrote that was published in the July 28 issue of "USA Today Weekend Magazine," I came to learn why.

Faulkner said that she wanted to attend The Citadel because of its excellent education program (she wants to be a teacher), the great alumni network and the rich military tradition.

The sad thing is that Faulkner's decision to withdraw from The Citadel came at a bad time for women in the military in general.

There is a new Marine general who is trying to have women taken out of the few roles that they are in. According to an article published in the "Fort Benning Leader," he doesn't want to see women in combat because "they're just not strong enough."

Also, there is a naval commander who may be removed from service for his religious view that men need to protect women and therefore women should not be in a combat environment.

What do I think now that Faulkner has decided not to continue her battle? Well, it makes me wonder if women had never joined the Army, where would I be? What if public schools had never been integrated, what would I know?

Shannon, you fought a good fight but couldn't you have stuck it out a little while longer? While I understand your pain, you are not the only one to feel the icy, isolating pain of being the first.

1st female cadet ill-prepared for challenge

By Judith Ginder
School of the Americas

commentary

She's outta there!

After only five days — well actually after one day of training and four days in an infirmary — Shannon Faulkner gave up and left The Citadel Military Academy in Charleston, S. C.

She said that the stress of the past two years was just too much.

Too much?

What in the world did she think life as a cadet was going to be like? Girl Scout camp?

All right, so maybe the South Carolina summer heat was just more than she could handle. Oh, but wait a minute, Shannon's a native of that state. Surely she would have been prepared for such scorching weather.

OK, OK. Maybe I'm being a little hard on poor Shannon.

No — I don't think so. All I know is this — If I wanted to get into a school or group so badly that I would leave pertinent information off of my application, and so badly that the U.S. Supreme Court would have to make a ruling, I would make darn sure that I was up to the challenge, both mentally and physically.

This brings me to the thing that's really been bothering me.

Shannon was more than 20 pounds overweight and was still admitted into The Citadel. If you look back at photos and television clips from the past couple of years, you would see that although the girl was never skinny, she was definitely not as large as she is now.

Pfc. Judith Ginder believes Faulkner was the wrong woman at the right time.

So, you want to get into an all-male military academy, do you?

Don't you think you should maybe, oh, I don't know — work out?

I know, I know, I've heard the stories from her attorneys that Shannon was running five miles a day. But I'm sorry, I just don't buy it. She is completely out of shape and should not have been admitted until the weight requirement was met.

Believe it or not, I do think women should be admitted into The Citadel. They have every right. No one should be denied admittance because of race, sex, religion or creed; and, the kind of thinking that one should be denied for these reasons does not belong in this day and age.

However, Shannon Faulkner was not the person to lead the way for women at The Citadel. She did accomplish a great deal with her legal battle; I'll give her that.

But, when it came right down to being a cadet, she just couldn't hack it. Maybe next fall there will be a group of mentally able, physically fit young women willing to meet the challenge.

Foul language fouls out

According to U.S. Army Infantry Center Policy Memorandum 94-64, Prohibitions Against Alcohol, Loud Music and Profanity, the use of obscene, vulgar or profane language in any public area on the Fort Benning military reservation is prohibited. Language is obscene, vulgar or profane when, when under circumstances and manner in which such utterances were made, it would clearly offend a reasonable person's sense of dignity.

The prohibition on language is not intended to curtail individual liberties of any person. Rather, it is set forth to ensure that the individual dignity of every person on this installation is protected and that all military personnel and family members may move freely about the installation without fear of threatening situations, real or perceived.

I ask that everyone be aware of how your language may affect those around you so that we may avoid any embarrassing situations.

Good soldiers are considerate of others.

Proclamation

On Aug. 26, 1973, the president of the United States designated Women's Equality Day. This denotes the ratification of the l9th Amendment to the U.S. Constitution giving women the right to vote and reminds us of women's continuing efforts toward equality in all spheres of our society.

From its radical beginning in 1848 at the Women's Rights Convention (Seneca Falls, N.Y.), women in the suffrage movement had a long, uphill fight. Elizabeth Cody Stanton drafted the Declaration of Sentiments listing the legal disadvantages of women, which became the catalyst for future Suffrage Conventions.

From 1870 to l910, there were 480 campaigns in 33 states for passage of the amendment. The campaigns resulted in two referenda, only two of which, Colorado and Idaho, were successful. Wyoming was the front runner state for women's rights as stated in its Constitution. Finally, on Aug. 26, 1920, Tennessee became the 36th state to ratify the 19th Amendment, and it became part of the U.S. Constitution.

This year, Women's Equality Day celebrates its 75th anniversary of the 19th Amendment. Fort Benning will celebrate this day with a luncheon today at the Main NCO Club.

Women's Equality Day is an excellent opportunity for soldiers and civilians to acknowledge their responsibilities to vote and to acknowledge the continuing efforts toward women's equality.

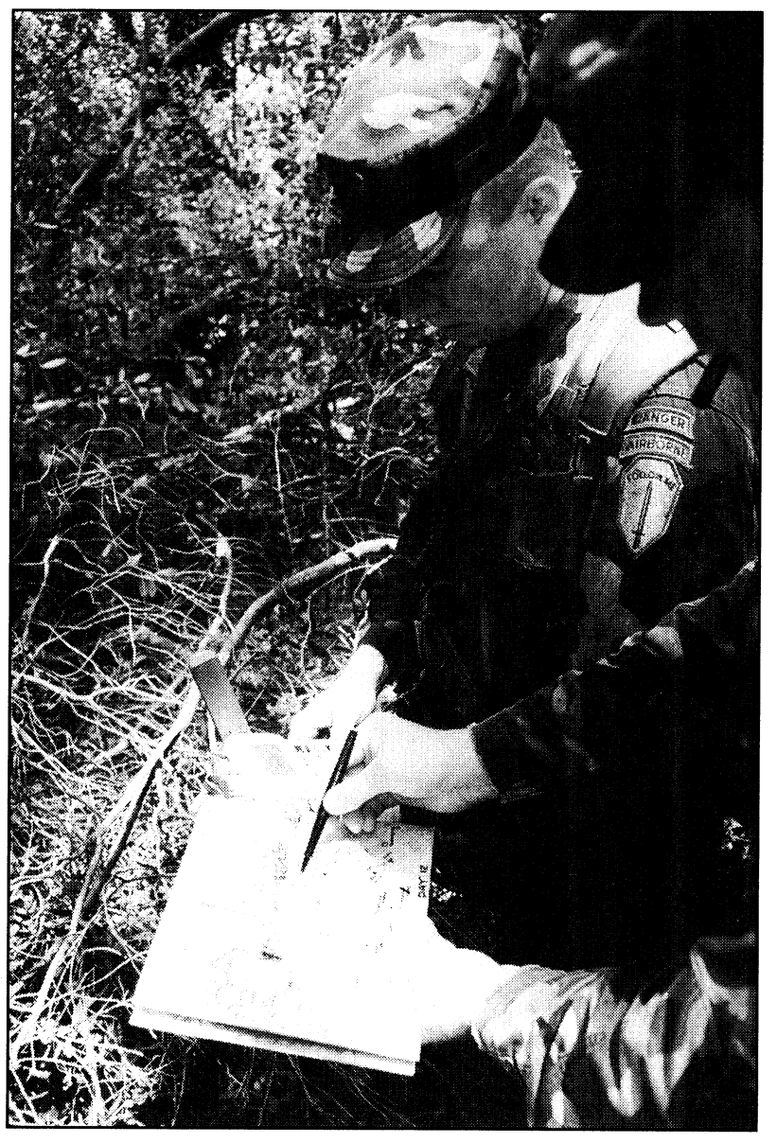
Rangers

implement new safety procedures, resume waterborne training operations

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Ranger Training Brigade officials announced Monday the implementation of 38 safety measures designed to make the Florida phase of Ranger School safer.



The commander of the 6th Ranger Training Battalion, Lt. Col. Frank Wiercinski, and Col. Galen Jackman, the Ranger Training Brigade commander, made the announcement at a press conference at Camp James E. Rudder, which is located at Eglin Air Force Base, Fla.

The announcement comes as a result of a thorough investigation into the Feb. 15 accident in which four ranger students died during training in the Florida swamps. Numerous corrective actions were reviewed and approved by Fort Benning Commanding General Maj. Gen. John W. Hendrix.

Some of the new equipment that will be on hand to keep ranger students out of trouble are one-man inflatable rafts designed to arrest hypothermia, water measuring devices and global positioning systems.

Wiercinski discussed command and control procedures that were instituted or reinforced since the training accident that claimed the four ranger students' lives.

He said he has the final say over whether or not all waterborne operations are a "go," "no go" or "modified," but noted that even after he decrees waterborne operations are a "go," the on-site ranger instructor can still call it off if a situation arises that makes the training too risky.

Richard J. McDowell

Sgt. 1st Class Lance Dyckman (left) uses his global positioning system to check his location on the map with Lt. Col. Frank Wiercinski, commander of the 6th Ranger Training Battalion at Camp James E. Rudder. All ranger patrols will have these devices to assist in accurately plotting locations during Florida operations.

He also explained how all training lanes would be physically inspected prior to taking the rangers down them, how the lanes were narrower and how there would be no deviation in the landing sites for the ranger patrols.

Jackman briefed on the corrective actions and noted that lack of familiarity with a training lane last February was a contributing factor in the deaths of the students.

He also said that better information about the weather, and especially the rivers in the area, would have alerted the command about the potential hazards.

He said that is now being fixed with monitoring stations to be installed in October and with a better exchange of weather information between the camp and outside agencies.

Wiercinski said that even with these safety procedures in place, Ranger School is still tough and that Ranger School graduates will still be "combat ready" when they earn the Ranger Tab.

Air conditioning is heated topic

By Richard J. McDowell
USAIC Public Affairs Officer

Why do we have curtailments? Aren't we supposed to be taking care of family members?

"Air conditioning."

Now there's a term to heat one up, depending on where you live and work.

If we live and work at Fort Benning we probably have some very definite opinions on the subject, and some of us are not shy about sharing them with the command group, the director of Public Works and even the news media, as though the media can turn on our air.

commentary

But during the recent heat wave, most of us demonstrated why Fort Benning is the best installation in the Army — team work and cooperation.

Most of us recognized the need to curtail air and gutted out the periods when the air wasn't on.

Soldiers who returned to hot barracks are commended for their stoicism, as are the civilians and soldiers who worked in buildings where the air was usually turned off about 2 p.m. each day. Kudos too to the family members who made the most of it and thought of other things to do to keep cool instead of boiling over and complaining.

An informal survey turned up some common questions:

Why do we have curtailments? Aren't we supposed to be taking care of family members?

Up front, curtailment reduces our electric bill by $1.5 million a year. To get that reduction, we have to agree to curtailments.

Normally electricity runs the post about 3 cents per kilowatt hour. When the cost of electricity rises to about 20 cents per kilowatt hour, the post begins to curtail.

This savings is used to purchase more expensive electricity at other times and it is used to extend the length of the air-conditioning season.

But people still wonder, why curtailment?

We do have soldiers to train and that too costs money. And training is our reason for existence.

Why do the Post Exchange and Commissary and the club systems have air when everyone else is without? Because they are nonappropriated fund activities and use their own funds to buy the electricity from Fort Benning.

Well, I'm still hot, you say. Aren't there other solutions? There are a couple. Georgia Power would love to come in and meter all of our buildings. But then we wouldn't get the bulk rate discounts, and not only would Fort Benning's electric bill skyrocket, but each family would pay for electricity, just as they do on the economy.

That bill could run about $200 a month during the summer months.

Since that won't happen because everyone will lose, the other solution is to move off post and give up one of the best benefits the Army can give you — a house with maintenance and free utilities for the price of your basic allowance for quarters.

At least family members have the option of leaving the house and going to a cooler location (I have no transportation is not an excuse).

The people who have to work in our buildings, designed for air conditioning, not the free flow of air, don't have that option.

And we all can pray for another summer like last year when we curtailed for a total of two hours.

SELF-HELP PROJECT

2/18 reopens dining facility

Richard Brill//Special to The Bayonet

Servers of the 2nd Battalion, 18th Infantry Regiment's dining facility dish up steak, lobster and fried chicken to celebrate the facility's grand reopening.

Soldiers use skills to make improvements themselves

By Richard Brill
Special to The Bayonet©

Soldiers feasted on steak, lobster, fried chicken and barbecued ribs Aug. 1 when the 2nd Battalion, 18th Infantry Regiment, celebrated the grand reopening of its dining facility, Building 9015.

The reopening featured a ribbon-cutting ceremony by Maj. Ned Woolfolk, battalion executive officer. The Self-Help, U-Do-It renovation project began in March and was completed June 2.

Woolfolk stood in for Lt. Col. Brian Zahn, battalion commander, who was unable to attend the ceremony.

"We have saved the Army quite a bit of money by doing the work ourselves," Woolfolk said. "The Directorate of Public Works has done a great job by providing materials, and we were fortunate enough to have great soldiers who could lend their expertise."

Sgt. 1st Class Edward Richardson, dining facility manager, said the light blue and mauve color scheme has led some soldiers to jokingly refer to the facility as the "day care center," but that no one can deny the improvements have greatly enhanced the appearance and comfort of the facility.

Using soldier labor led by Staff Sgt. Ervin Harris, new tiles, window blinds, ceiling fans and wallpaper were installed, in addition to knocking down previously existing walls to enlarge the dining room and office, he said.

"The atmosphere in the facility is much better," Richardson said. "The ceiling fans help keep it much cooler, which is good for morale." The facility, which originally seated 100 diners, now seats 124, he said.

Transition Assistance Classes

Army Career and Alumni Program

If you're getting out of the military, the Army Career and Alumni Program is available to help you make the transition.

All service members getting out of or retiring from the military must process through the Army Career and Alumni Program's Transition Assistance Office, Building 2617, Soldiers' Plaza, before attending a Transition Assistance Program class in Infantry Hall.

The National Defense Authorization Act Fiscal 1991, Public Law 101-510 states that soldiers within 180 days of expiration term of service are required to attend a Transition Assistance Program class.

Classes are given in three-day blocks and are scheduled throughout the year.

Classes are in Classroom 30, Infantry Hall, from 7:45 a.m. to 4:30 p.m.

Runners have priority during PT hours

Formations and individual runners have priority of movement on Fort Benning during the established physical training hours of 6 to 7:30 a.m. Monday through Friday. Formation running is not authorized on sidewalks throughout the installation. Units must use roadways, and proper safety equipment must be worn and operational.

Individual runners and walkers may use the sidewalks and also are required to wear proper reflective clothing or road guard vests.

Speed limit during PT hours is 15 mph and 10 mph when passing individuals and troop formations.

SHOOTERS: sweep rifle nationals

wind direction.

"It's definitely hard work," Dooley said. "But the results we've seen during the nationals indicate the hard work pays off."

The following is a list of USAMU Service Rifle Team accomplishments during the nationals.

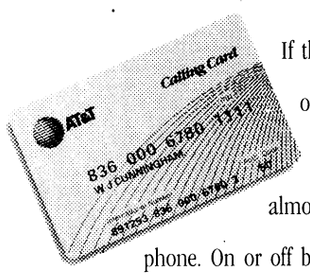
• Spc. Tobie Tomlinson defeated hundreds of competitors to win the National Service Rifle Individual Championship. Tomlinson shot a 2,360 with 75 Xs for the win. Teammate Cpl. Kevin McMahon placed second with a score of 2,359 and 96 Xs.

• Sgt. Lewis Tippie won the National Long-Range Service Rifle Championship with a new national record aggregate score of 2,226.

• In the Infantry Trophy Team Match, the team coached by Delk and Dooley placed first with a score of 1,404, followed by the team under Sgt. 1st. Class Richard Remily and Staff Sgt. Gary Estes that shot a 1,398. Both scores blasted the former national match record of 1,375, with the first place score standing as the new national record. The third place team from the U.S. Marine Corps was more than 200 points behind.

Shooters on the winning team were Sgt. 1st Class Kenneth Gill, Sgt. 1st Class John Chubb, Tippie, Sgt. Bruce McCauley, McMahon and Tomlinson. The second-place team consisted of Staff Sgt. Rand Bentson, Sgt. Steven Armstrong, Sgt. Lance Dement, Cpl. Grant Singley, Spc. Norman Anderson and Spc. Barry Coleman.

For the first time in 11 years, Army shooters won the National Trophy Team Match with another new national record. The team, coached by Remily and lead by Dooley, shot 2,951 with 133 Xs.



In the Four-Man Enlisted Trophy Team Match National Service Rifle Championships, Remily's team once again placed first with a score of 1,959 with 7.8 Xs, almost 10 points above the second-place Marines.

In the Interservice 1,000-yard Iron Sight team match, Delk and Dooley lead Maj. Richard Hawkins, Staff Sgt. Kenneth Jones, Gill, Dement, Chubb and Boyd to victory with a score of 1,185 and 46 Xs.

Singley was named the 600- and 1000-yard Long Range Service Rifle winner. Dement won the Colt Cup Match for the second year in a row. Gill also claimed a trophy for the second consecutive year, winning the McCann Trophy. The trophy is awarded for the top scorer in the rapid fire aggregate, which is composed of six separate matches.

Captain's service spans branches

During the Vietnam War in the early 1970s, America was in turmoil. War protests were rampant, but the government kept sending more soldiers overseas. At that time, "nice girls" didn't join the military, according to Capt. Millie M. Daniels, signal officer, 36th Engineer Group. That didn't stop her.

Daniels grew up on a farm, coming from a family in which no one had ever gone to college.

In high school, she was an avid runner and traveled all over Virginia to track competitions. She was offered a scholarship to Hampton University in Virginia.

"I knew from traveling around the state to competitions that I wanted to travel." she said. "So when I was approached by an Air Force recruiter at school, I decided that would be a great way to travel. I turned down the scholarship and joined the Air Force instead."

She said Air Force basic training was not bad.

"I remember having make-up classes, and we never touched a weapon the whole time," the 39-year-old said. "We also got to eat all we wanted and could go back for seconds. I never saw that in the Navy or Army."

Daniels was a maintenance analysis technician for B52s and KC 135 tankers.

At that point, America was still flying bombing missions in Vietnam and beginning to pull troops out.

"It was not a very nice time to be in the military," she said. "If you went out in public in uniform you were called things like 'baby killer' and would get spit on."

Although her life in the Air Force kept her busy, Daniels' passion for running did not subside. She said her goal was to make the All-Air Force track team. She spent time training with Joe Cribbs and James Brooks, now professional football players, in Warner Robins.

In 1976, she was the first woman ever to be selected for the All-Air Force track team. In 1976 there weren't any women on any of the other service's premier track teams, so she didn't have any competition at interservice meets.

She turned down an offer to attend the Air Force Academy and decided to go to Middle Tennessee State University to attend college.

Her GI bill was cut off because she did not attend the summer term at the college, so she said she decided to join the Navy.

"I went into the Navy as an E-3 and was stationed at the Naval Test Facility in Maryland as a data processing seaman," the five-foot, seven-inch woman said.

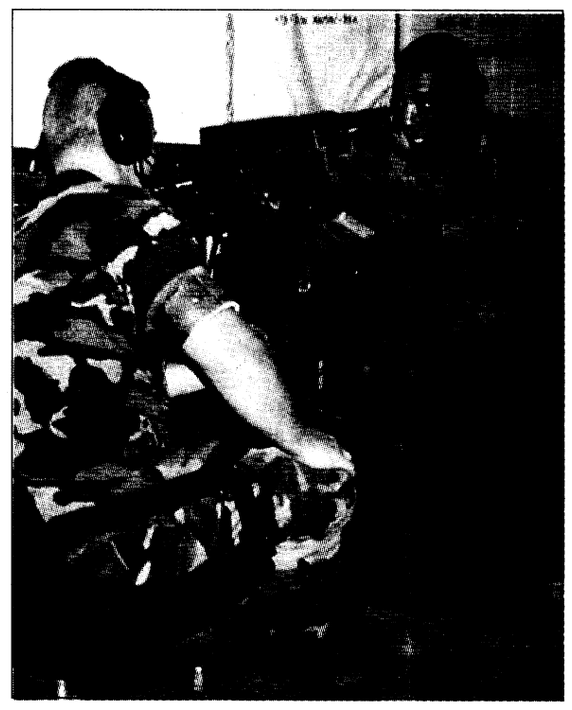
While she was there, her unit broke the world record with the Surface Effect Ship Test Facility hydroplane by pushing it to a speed of 105 knots. President Jimmy Carter presented her unit with the Meritorious Unit Award.

In the spring of 1981, she made the All-Navy track team. She left the Navy that fall to go back to Middle Tennessee State University.

"When I went to sign up for the GI Bill, there was an Army sergeant there." she said. "He said I could get $100 a month to join ROTC and another $100 a month if I joined the active Reserves. That sounded good to me."

Her first assignment was at Fort Hood, Texas.

"It was a superb challenge," she said. "I knew then that I loved the Army. I'm a very physical person, and I was eating it up — night reconnaissance and crawling around in the mud with a weapon."



She said she decided to become active duty again and has been happy with her decision ever since.

Not only has she spent 19 years in the military, but she is also a single parent of three children.

She said when she decides to retire, she is looking forward to spending time with her children.

"I am going to spend my days doing things like driving them back and forth to ballet or soccer," she said. "I'm really looking forward to that."

Daniels has not given up on running. She helped put together a winning team for the Army Marathon Relay in San Antonio, Texas.

LABELS FOR EDUCATION

Clipper continues playground crusade

Debbie Snoke is a woman with a mission: to compile enough labels from certain grocery products to qualify for free, deluxe playground equipment for Fort Benning.

"Why?" you might ask, when there are bunches of playgrounds dotting post housing areas, schoolyards and child-care centers.

Snoke's response to that query is simple: the equipment she's working for is handicapped-accessible, multi-age in its appeal and can accommodate up to 50 children at a time while still being easy to monitor.

Snoke is a Family Child Care provider and often has to go to Columbus' Cooper Creek Park for group FCC meetings since no single Fort Benning playground can accommodate the number of children enrolled in FCC. But having a large, easily monitored playground on Fort Benning would be a boost for everyone, she said.

"This will benefit the entire post by having a large area for people to go," Snoke said, citing the need for play space for children at unit picnics, organizational days and the like. "It's not just for a special group of people; it's for everybody."

The program she's working with is Campbell's Labels for Education. Portions of labels from certain Campbell's, Marie's, Chef's Kettle, Early California, Franco-American, Mrs. Paul's, Oven Pit, Pepperidge Farm, Prego, Sanwa, Specialty Kitchens, Swanson, V8 and Vlasic products can be collected and redeemed to earn items ranging from dictionaries to computers to playgrounds. (See B-3 for products and the part of the label to save from them for redemption.)

Since she started the collection drive in January, Snoke has collected 40,000 labels, quite a few short of the 345,650 needed for the deluxe playground. Those gathered so far have come from drop-off bins at the Commissary and Community Life buildings and from the Recycling Center. Snoke and a few of her Family Child Care provider peers get together every so often for a "cutting party," where the necessary information from cans, jars and boxes submitted to them are gathered and sorted.

Snoke found out about Campbell's program by recycling herself. She spotted a notice on a soup can label and called Campbell's for details. Now, months later, paper sacks filled with clipped labels and labels yet to be clipped fill her living room and storage shed. Two of her co-campaigners sport the same decorative schemes in their homes, bearing the temporary inconvenience for the sake of their cause.

"This post is large enough that we need this (playground area)," Snoke said.

When enough labels have finally been collected and redeemed and a brand-new CedarWorks Deluxe playground is delivered, Snoke plans to assemble it in proximity to an existing playground setup near Russ Pond. The reason for putting the two together, she said, is to augment an existing location so that a playground complex, easy to get to and monitor children on, is available to anyone who

Center serves child-care needs

Tot Town Child Development Center needs your help.

The hourly care service is facing some tough times and indeed had to raise its prices recently in order to cope with a lack of consistent patronage, said Director Leda Brown.

She said people begged for the service to continue but fail to make use of it still.

"People said they needed it, said they couldn't live without it," she said. The handful of folks who then make use of the center, though, aren't enough for the center to earn enough to pay its child-care providers, according to Brown.

Director's hopes

What Brown said she hopes for is for families to use the center once a week, even for just an hour at a time. Just that would provide enough business for the center to be self-sufficient.

Tot Town is accredited by the National Academy of Early Childhood Programs and caters to children up to 12 years old or older. Children must be registered at Central Registration to use Tot Town services.

Reservations are preferred and may be made by telephone, but hourly services are available on a drop-in basis if enough caregivers are available.

A new option is a prepaid hourly care card, Brown said. After 25 hours of care, Brown explained, the 26th hour is free.

Children's activities

Children are not plopped in front of a television and forgotten at Tot Town, either, Brown said. Its programs include age-appropriate games and activities to encourage children's development and communication. Parents are welcome to visit at any time and voice their concerns about or praises for the center, Brown said.

Jackie Place is one such parent. She has been bringing her son, Jake, 18 months, to Tot Town since he was 9 months old.

"I've always been very pleased with the care he gets there," she said. "He always seems to enjoy it."

Place volunteers on post quite a bit and didn't want Jake to go into full-time day care. She admitted the recent price increase was somewhat of a shock, but, she said, "It's still less than I would pay a baby-sitter."

Plus, she said, the increased number of caregivers at Tot Town provides extra watchfulness.

New programs

Tot Town is making efforts to make the program more attractive to potential clients. Mondays, Wednesdays and Fridays the center opens at 5:30 a.m. to help parents with child care during physical training hours.

Also, the center remains open late Friday nights closest to paydays. Upcoming late-night Fridays are Sept. 1 and 15, Oct. 1 and 13, and Nov. 3 and 17.

Brown said Tot Town can now pick up children at Patch Preschool and White Elementary School for after-school hourly care or for overflow students from White's latchkey program. The children will be walked from the schools to Tot Town, so Brown recommended keeping a light raincoat in their backpacks.

Other arrangements will be made if parents request and enough clients are interested.

"You can see the military is trying to strongly support the community (with these new programs), but it's a two-way street," Brown said.

Columbus girls' club members experience Latin American culture

By Judith Ginder
School of the Americas

Members of a Columbus girls' club got a taste of Latin American culture Aug. 16 when families of the School of the Americas guest instructors visited the Girls' Club's Garrard Center.

Andrea Dowling, of Chile, began by showing the girls a map of South America. She showed the girls money, flags and jewelry from Chile and spoke of the the different regions of the country. She explained that in Chile it is possible to go to the beach and to the mountains to ski, all in one day.

The girls eagerly asked questions of Dowling. They wanted to know what school was like for children in Chile and if they had school buses to ride to school in.

Dowling assured the girls that school was about the same there, and, yes, they do ride to school in buses.

Next, the Martinez family spoke about their home in Equador. David Martinez asked the girls if they had ever seen big turtles, and explained that these turtles had originated in the Galapagos Islands of Equador.

Yes, they do ride the bus to school in Chile.

— Andrea Dowling

His sister, Christina, showed the group crafts and tapestry of the Otabaleno Indians of Equador while she wore a traditional dress of the Otabalenos.

Peruvian family member Janet Rondan told the girls that the people of Peru "work a lot with their hands," making jewelry, dolls, woodcraft and leather goods. Her son, Geanmarco Rondan, closed the program with a performance of a traditional dance from Peru.

Members of the girls' group then had a chance to talk to the women and children and look at the artifacts more closely.
