Follow your nose

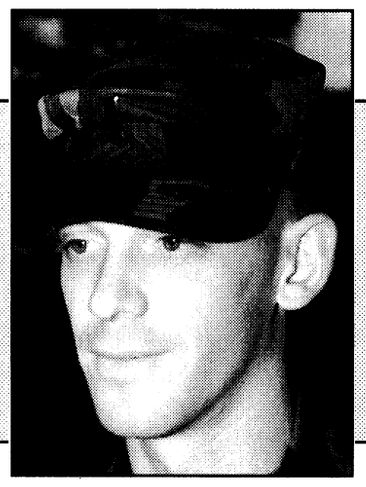
Spc. Michael Dalske of the U.S. Army Infantry Center Military Police Company lets his dog, Nicky, follow his nose to a marijuana-soaked towel during a narcotics detection training exercise. The dogs, which work as partners with a group of MPs, are trained to sniff out many different types of drugs, as well as bombs. Also, sniffing out "plants" is a routine part of their training.

VARIOUS VOICES

Do you think people take good enough care of their pets?

Pamela Henry, family member — "No, I don't think so. In the summer, you see (pets) without water, or in the winter, they're stuck in the cold. (You see them) roaming the streets, too."

Capt. Hilda Burgos, Dismounted Battlespace Battle Lab — "In this area, it seems like they do. You don't see a lot of strays running around."



Pfc. Ken Landenberger, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment — "Yes. I see a lot of people walking their pets, making sure they get plenty of exercise.

Marilyn Lanier, family member — "I know I do — I have fish. I think most people do, but sometimes neighbors' animals get into my trash."

Margaret Hoover, family member — "A lot of people just leave their pets outside and don't take care of them at all, and some people take very good care of them."

2nd Lt. Marc Wheeler, Company D, 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor Regiment— "As far as I can tell, they do. They keep their dogs chained up so they're not running around."

Pet owner learns lessons hard way

By Ruth J. Spaller
Bayonet staff writer

Because post regulations state that dogs must either be on a leash or under voice control, my husband and I never thought twice about letting our dog off his leash when we ran to the fitness trail and back

commentary

I learned two hard lessons last summer. Both began with one frantic phone call from my husband. A pet owner's worst nightmare: our dog had been hit by a car.

As I drove madly to the vet clinic, I imagined my poor puppy bloody and mutilated, or worse — dead.

But we were lucky — only (only?!) a broken (well, shattered) leg. We took him to an off-post clinic for surgery and thought everything was OK.

Then HE called. The guy who had hit our dog. He'd pulled over after he'd hit the dog, but hadn't gotten out of his car. My husband, usually a calm, cool and collected infantryman, fell apart after seeing his "son" run over, so he waved the car away, picked up the dog (who weighs about 75 pounds) and started running for home — about a mile away.

Thankfully, a good samaritan (and this proves there are a few left) stopped to pick them up and insisted on driving out of her way to take them straight to the vet. I still extend my heartfelt thanks to this lady. In fact, I almost wish she had hit our dog, if it had to be someone.

The guy who did hit him called us that evening, about five hours after the accident. He had discovered a dent in his bumper and wanted a settlement, he said, or he'd take us to court.

He didn't even ask if the dog was alive. "I don't care about your dog," he told my husband, "I only care about my car."

This, I think, is one of the major things wrong with the world today. I mean, I love my car as much as the next person, but I would never hold its appearance as more important than a life — even a dog's.

All I can say is if the situation had been reversed — if I had hit someone else's dog — they certainly wouldn't have been left to carry it off by themselves.

My husband and I decided to fight tooth and nail to keep from giving this guy one red cent. Our dog's surgery was not exactly inexpensive, and we never once thought to try to get him to pay for our mistake. (Thankfully, we didn't hear from him again — probably because he wouldn't have had much of a case with no accident report filed.)

Because post regulations state that dogs must either be on a leash or under voice control, my husband and I never thought twice about letting our dog off his leash when we ran to the fitness trail and back. He had always minded — before.

We had to learn the hard way to keep him on his leash at all times. For a long time, while he was recuperating, that was not a problem. Now that his leg is healed, though, the temptation to let him run free is sometimes strong.

But all I have to do to keep from unclipping his leash is remember the day before he went in for surgery, when he wouldn't (couldn't) stand up to come inside for the night, and my husband and I had to muzzle him to pick him up — he was in so much pain he would have bitten us for moving him.

But that wasn't the hardest part of the whole thing. The hardest part was realizing that we live in a world where, for many people, belongings are more important than lives.

The dent in that guy's car was worth more to him than my dog's life. He caused an animal pain and suffering — granted, unintentionally — but he really didn't care.

I think it's even more of a surprise to run into someone like that on a military post, where there is usually such a sense of community and responsibility. The woman who stopped to pick up my husband and our injured dog is, I think, a better representative of the type of person you'd usually meet at Fort Benning.

But I have learned the hard way, there are a few of the "other kind" of people out there.

So, to the rest of the pet owners on Fort Benning, I say, "Watch out." Keep your dog on a leash — to protect both your dog and yourself.

dial 545-BOSS

Dial 545-BOSS is the commander's action line for soldiers, family members and civilians to call when they have problems or complaints that can't be resolved elsewhere.

While it is not a substitute for the chain of command or for agencies established to provide assistance, the line offers another means of communication between Fort Benning's community and commanders.

The Bayonet features some of the calls that may benefit other members of the Fort Benning community.

Call: I am concerned about the possibility of the Custer Terrace Shoppette closing. I believe this is a real necessity for the community.

I can understand the hours being cut, but cannot see the justification for closing the Shoppette completely.

Army and Air Force Exchange Service response:

The Custer Terrace Shoppette probably will not close in the near future. This store should remain operational as long as customers patronize and support it .

But, based on a lack of sufficient customer traffic and purchases, the Shoppette has not been financially viable this year. We urge you and other residents of Custer Terrace and McGraw Manor to shop at Custer Terrace Shoppette as your first choice.

Call: My husband is getting ready to deploy and then he will be getting out of the Army.

I called Housing and was informed that I could place my household goods in storage for six months and go ahead and clear quarters.

I then went to Housing to pick up the necessary paperwork and was again informed that I could in fact do this.

I filled out the paperwork, got all the necessary signatures and went back to Housing. When I went to turn in the paperwork, Housing informed me that I could not do all this.

I would like to know why.

Family Housing Branch response:

If the caller's husband was on a permanent change of station move, the Army would place her household goods in storage for six months and she could clear quarters.

Since her husband was going to be in a temporary duty status, the Army would not place her household goods in storage for six months.

Doctors need to get it together or get out of practicing medicine

This is concerning the doctors who give care at Martin Army Community Hospital in the Family Practice Unit.

I realize doctors go through extensive training to get to where they are, but how can they lose sight of the main reason they wanted to become a doctor — to make sick people better.

Doctors are unsympathetic, condescending and they don't listen.

Do they realize what that does to parents and sick children? It causes a very serious situation and stress.

I'm disgusted with calling the acute care line and getting a quick fix for my children without the doctor really listening because he or she is too busy, or being blown off because the doctor feels the matter is not serious enough.

Because doctors do all this, we parents are having to spend up to five hours in the Emergency Room to have our family members taken care of, which is outrageous!

Do doctors' family members have to spend five hours in the ER? I don't think so!

Doctors need to start listening to what parents tell them. After all, parents know their kids. Doctors need to treat people they care for like they would want their family members to be treated.

Would a doctor want his or her family members to have to go through what they are putting us through? Certainly not!

This is a reality check. If doctors act this way in private practice, I bet they wouldn't have a practice anymore.

Doctors need to go back and look at the reasons they wanted to be a doctor and put themselves in the patient's shoes.

But there are some very caring doctors up at Family Practice — Dr. Michael Place, Dr. Carol Purdy and the doctor who was so sympathetic to our baby who wasn't able to sleep because she was so sick — thank you for your help. God bless you.

As for the rest, though, come on doctors — get it together or get out of medicine.

Martin Army Community Hospital response:

Ms. Chandler spoke to the chief of Family Practice and Community Medicine April 7. She now understands how to appropriately access health care at Martin Army Community Hospital.

The chief of Family Practice and Community Medicine will provide an article to The Bayonet about access to Martin Army Community Hospital's primary care system in the coming weeks.

Spc. Michael Sharp of the Military Police Animal Control Unit tries to capture a stray pet on post.

Prowling pets pose problems

MPs stepping up patrols to catch strays

By Richard Brill
Special to The Bayonet©

Stray pets on post have become a serious problem, according to Military Police Activity officials, who are stepping up efforts to crack down on offenders.

Since October, sweeps by the MPA's Animal Control Unit have netted more than 415 stray animals, according to Maj. Ricky Drury, law Enforcement Operations officer. Also notable were 11 incidences of provoked animal bites and 7 incidences of unprovoked bites, he said.

"This is a serious problem. We simply cannot allow such a large number of stray pets to run loose on post," Drury said.

Most "stray" pets, he added, are in fact owned by post residents who have changed duty stations or have gotten out of the Army and left their pets to fend for themselves.

Garrison Regulation 210-5 states all pets must be kept indoors, or secured outdoors with appropriate food, water and shelter, or on a leash or within voice command.

"Voice command means the animal responds immediately the first time a command is issued," he added.

Another problem that becomes worse every summer is the large number of dog droppings in residential and recreational areas; children play on the fields and should not have to worry about dog waste, officials said.

Dog owners are reminded that if they wash their dog, they need to exhibit courtesy and care for other residents.

Residents who own a pet and go on leave should ensure that adequate provisions are made for the pet to be cared for, Drury said.

"Letting a pet run loose while the owners are gone is simply not an option," he said.

Drury said in addition to incidences of strays, far too many incidences of animal bites are ocurring as well, both provoked and unprovoked.

The Georgia Department of Human Resources Rabies Control Manual defines a provoked attack as one in which an "animal is placed in a situation such that an expected reaction would be to bite or attack" and could include "invasion of an animal's territory, attempting to pet or handle an unfamiliar animal, startling an animal, running or bicycling past an animal, assisting an injured or sick animal, trying to capture an animal or removing food, water or other objects in the animal's possession."

An unprovoked attack is defined as an attack or bite occurring when an animal strikes for no apparent reason.

Sgt. Eddie Cosby, Law Enforcement Operations noncommissioned officer in charge said those bitten are often small children.

"In addition to properly watching their children, parents need to make their children aware that they should not approach or try to pet or catch an unfamiliar animal," Cosby said.

Post residents wishing to report a stray pet can call the Military Police front desk at 545-5222.

Post set to honor all volunteers

By Jan Wesner Childs
Special to The Bayonet©

Fort Benning's 3,000 volunteers will be recognized at a special ceremony April 21 at Riverside.

"We like to recognize each volunteer for contributing service to our installation and to our community," installation volunteer coordinator Olga MacLean said Monday.

The event coincides with National Volunteer Week, April 23 to 29.

Certificates signed by the commanding general will be forwarded to each agency and Family Support Group to be presented to their volunteers.

Eleven volunteers will be singled out for their contributions.

MacLean said five have been volunteers of the month, and the other six were nominated for special recognition by the agencies they serve.

More than 3,000 volunteers work at various agencies on and off post, MacLean said.

Special Olympics, Meals on Wheels, Santa's Castle and the Thrift Shop are some of the agencies that benefit.

The volunteer recognition ceremony will be from 4 to 6 p.m. at Riverside — the home of Commanding General Maj. Gen. John Hendrix, and his wife, Cheri, — located at 100 Vibbert Ave.

MacLean will present a symbolic check to Hendrix, representing the value of the volunteers' work on post.

Reservations for the ceremony must be made by today. Call 545-5602 for more information.

School board seats open to parents

Fort Benning Schools

Parents of the children attending Fort Benning Schools set the direction for the school their children attend through an elected school board.

A nine-member board, elected by parents of children attending the schools, meets monthly to set district policy and provide general direction to the system. Members are elected for two-year terms with each of the seven schools having a representative on the board. In addition to the seven elected school representatives, the board includes an elected president and chaplain. Member's terms are staggered so that the board will include experienced board members each year.

School board elections will be May 16. Board seats up for election are representatives from Dexter, Faith, Stowers and White schools and the "at large" seat for chaplain.

To be eligible to run as a candidate representing a school, an individual must be the parent or guardian of a child enrolled in the school at the time the candidate is elected to the board and must not be an employee or related to any school system employee.

Those interested in running for election can contact the school principal of the school for which they wish to run not later than the close of business April 24.

The board meets the last Monday of each month at noon in the administrative Building on Custer Road. The board considers school policies, approves the budget, approves curriculum changes and functions in much the same way as do school boards in civilian communities.

Current board members are Chief of Staff Col. Gregory Camp, president; Maj. Robert Thompson, chaplain; Karen Marchant, Dexter School representative; Lt. Col. Michael Bingham, Faith School representative; Lisa Grover, Loyd School representative, Staff Sgt. John Purdue, McBride School representative; Mary Renn, Stowers School representative; Adrienne Porter, White School representative; and Staff Sgt. Leroy Coronado, Wilson School representative.

Annual best ranger competition April 28

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Fort Benning will have several teams competing in the 13th annual David E. Grange Jr. Best Ranger Competition April 28 to May 1.

Teams from the 4th, 5th, 6th and 7th Ranger Training battalions and teams from the 3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment, will be among as many as 60 teams from across the country that are expected to participate.

The three-day, nonstop event begins April 28 at 7 a.m. with a physical training test, and it will conclude nearly 60 hours later April 30 at about 5 p.m. with a 2.7-mile buddy run from Victory Pond to the Ranger Training Brigade headquarters.

Two-man teams will compete in head-to-head competition for the title of "Best Ranger."

Competitors will take on other events during the competition to include marksmanship, a parachute spot jump, a 20-mile plus forced foot march, ranger stakes, the 60-foot Prusik climb and rappel, a canoe course, night land navigation, the Darby Queen obstacle course, the water confidence test and a helocast and swim. Awards will be presented May 1.

The competition consists of the following 12 events:

Physical Fitness Test — Physical Fitness Test consisting of push-ups, sit-ups, chin-ups and a two-mile run.

Weapons Firing — Marksmanship will be tested on a firing range consisting of moving targets from 50 to 300 meters in range, arrayed in single and multiple exposures. The competitors will engage and hit as many of the targets as possible within a six-minute time limit. Competitors must obtain 23 hits each or a combination of 50 hits per team.

Spot Parachute Jump — Team members will jump, with combat equipment, from a helicopter using a maneuverable parachute and steer their parachute to a designated point. Upon landing, they must move to their particular assembly area against time. Ranger teams will compete by paddling over a known distance down Upatoi Creek against time.

Forced Foot March — Ranger teams carrying combat equipment (approximately 45 to 50 pounds per individual) at night will conduct a foot march on dirt and hard surfaced roads for approximately 22 miles against time.

Ranger Stakes — Thirteen basic ranger and infantry skills will be evaluated during both day and night conditions. The skills include weapons assembly and disassembly, hand grenade throw, knot tying, first aid and radio communications.

Prusik Climb and Rappel — A timed 60-foot vertical rope climb, using Prusik rope climbing procedures and descent using rappelling techniques.

Teamwork helps AFT Building

By Richard Brill
Special to The Bayonet©

Thanks to a self-help project, the Fort Benning Army Family Team Building program will soon enjoy a newly renovated building in Soldiers' Plaza as its official headquarters.

The Directorate of Public Works, 1st Battalion (Airborne), 507th Infantry, 11th Infantry Regiment, 30th Adjutant General Battalion (Reception) and Army Community Service have worked together to completely rebuild the entire interior of the second story of Building 2624.

"We began by completely gutting the upstairs," said Sgt. 1st Class Edgar Baldwin, noncommissioned officer in charge. "From there we began completely rebuilding the interior, including a new floor, insulation and walls."

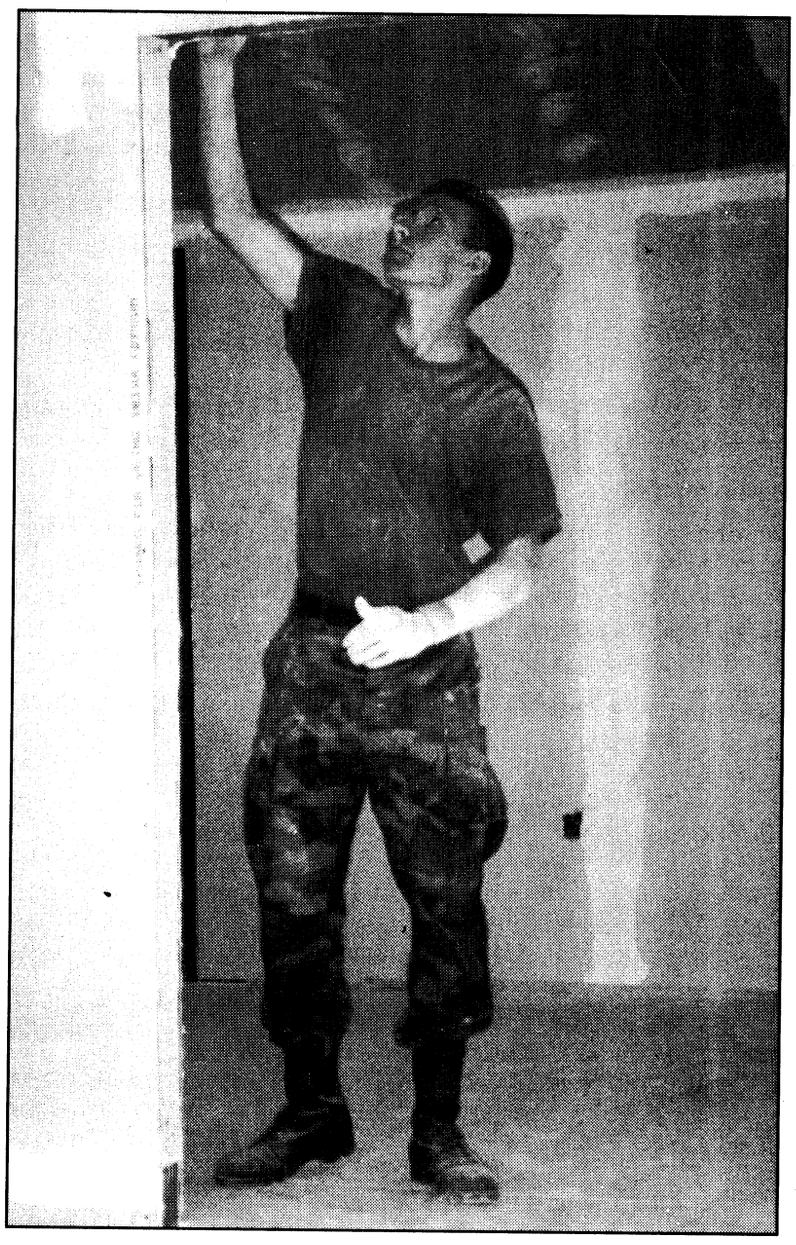
Baldwin has been assisted by Staff Sgt. Ross Tomlinson and weekly detachments from the 30th AG.

"These are new recruits who haven't even started basic training yet," Tomlinson said. "This is their first experience in the Army but they welcome the work and the opportunity just to be able to do something."

Baldwin said the biggest challenge has been coming up with the right tools and having to work around a large air conditioning vent attached to the ceiling.

Most of foundation work has been completed, he said. The remaining work will include splattering the ceiling and putting up paneling, wallpaper and trim.

Claudia Phillips, post AFTB leader, said she and other AFTB members are delighted with the work.



"This will significantly enhance our effectiveness to do business," she said. "We have had the building for some time, but could only occupy part of the lower half. Having a central place for our files and reference materials will make life much easier."

The AFTB provides a training program for soldiers and family members to foster self-reliance and enhance family preparedness for an Army members' absence. The renovated facility will serve as the headquarters for the spouse volunteers who present training to family members, she said.

Phillips added that she is very pleased with the command support for the project on post.

"We have a great support system here at Fort Benning," Phillips said. "ACS, DPW, the Directorate of Community Activities and the entire chain of command have been so helpful in making this project a reality. If nothing else, I'm lucky to be at Fort Benning."

Family members desiring more information about AFTB can call 545-5377, or leave a message with voice mail at 545-2794.

Residents help themselves

Neighbors paint doors, boost community pride

By Richard Brill
Special to The Bayonet©

Painting 129 utility doors, 258 exhaust fan covers, 207 electrical panels and 207 privacy fences may seem like a tall order, but not when an entire Fort Benning community works to get the job done.

Two hundred ninety-two families in the Indianhead Terrace housing area are using self-help to make some needed repairs to their quarters.

"The main idea was to make the area just look better," said Staff Sgt. Dale Handley, Indianhead Terrace Community Life noncommissioned officer.

"The new coats of paint will also prevent the metal from rusting."

By working closely with the Directorate of Public Works and the Self-Help and U-Do-It Center, Handley was able to secure the necessary paint and wood.

Each individual resident is responsible for doing the work themselves.

"This is a great idea, and I don't mind doing the work," said Staff Sgt. Joey Williams, Indianhead resident.

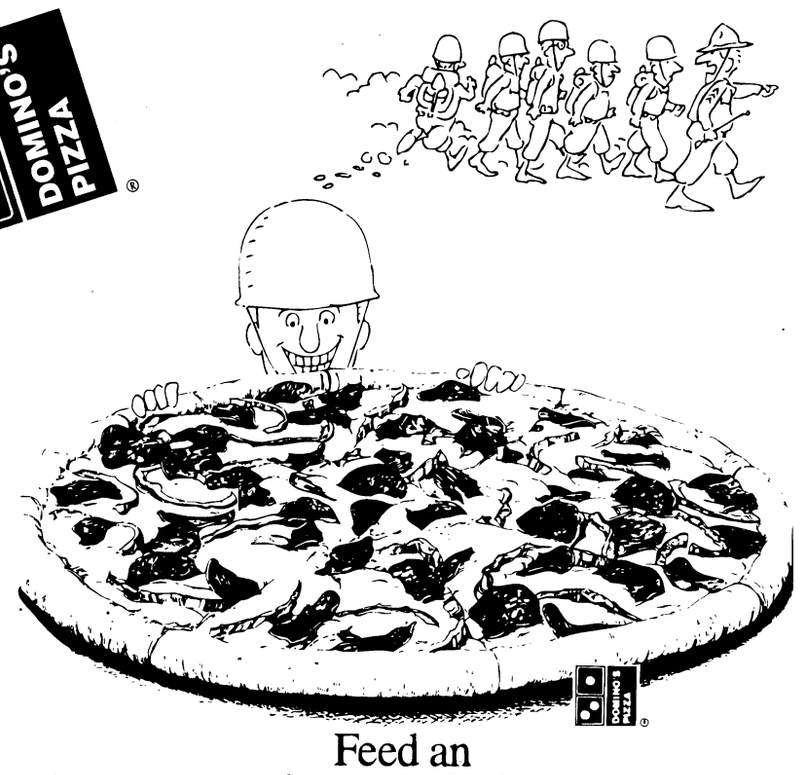
"It only took me about an hour to paint the door, electrical panels and exhaust fan cover. The fence will take a little longer."

Handley said the residents have been openly enthusiastic about the project, which has helped to foster community pride.

Richard Brill/Special to The Bayonet

Indianhead Terrace resident Staff Sgt. Joey Williams applies a fresh coat of paint to the fence outside his quarters.

"This project could not have been done without the residents," Handley said. "They have been really great."



Indianhead Terrace resident Jennifer Jarrett said even though the repairs are small, the difference in appearance is large.

"When we pull up into the driveway, the first thing we notice is how much better everything looks," she said.

"It really has made a significant difference and has helped build community spirit just by making everyone get out and work a little."

Handley said the project is scheduled for completion May 1.

Golden Gloves champion Pfc:

'Gonna fly now'

By Terry K. Ray
Special to The Bayonet©

For one boxer and soldier, winning the 156-pound light-middleweight class Golden Gloves championship is just the first step down a long road that will come full circle in 1996 with the start of the Olympic Games in Atlanta.

Yamar Resto, a private first class with Battery B, 4th Battalion, 41st Field Artillery Regiment, 3rd Brigade, 24th Infantry Division, took the Golden Gloves title at Holyfield Arena in Atlanta March 22.

He began his boxing career at age 13 while growing up on the streets of Rio Grande, Puerto Rico.

"The streets are very rough in Puerto Rico. I was always fighting on the streets and in school," Resto said. "I used to be a short little boy and I learned to fight with the big guys. I found out I liked to box."

Resto also believes boxing and the Army saved his life from the ravenous jaws of the ever-growing, drug-related violence that is spreading across Puerto Rico. In the past two years, more than 20 of Resto's boyhood friends have been killed or jailed.

"I'm glad I'm where I'm at right now," said Resto. "If I were still in Puerto Rico, I would most likely be dead or in jail because I used to run with those guys."

On the advice of his father, José, Resto joined the Army and headed for Fort Sill, Okla., for basic training and advanced individual training. Once Resto completed his training, he was transferred to Fort Benning and immediately searched out Fort Benning boxing coach — then-Sgt. 1st Class Charles Kirkland, now retired.

> "I want to be the first Puerto Rican to represent the United States and win a Gold Medal in the Olympics. That's my goal."
> — Yamar Resto
> Golden Gloves boxing champion

For the past year and a half, Resto has trained under Kirkland's watchful eye while building an impressive 25-3 record. His overall record is 80-6 with 46 knockouts. Last year, Resto finished second at the Georgia Golden Gloves, which in turn got him an invite back this year. He made the most of the opportunity.

Later this month Resto will travel to Knoxville, Tenn., for the Southern Golden Glove championships. If he wins, Resto will then move on to the national Golden Gloves championships in Milwaukee, Wis., in May. A win at the nationals will rank Resto in the top 10 in the United States and will qualify him for the Olympic trials.

Resto also attended the All Army boxing trials at Fort Huachuca, Ariz., earlier this year and finished third; he will be returning in October with hopes of making the All-Army boxing team.

"I want to win in Tennessee, then go to nationals and get ranked in the top three," Resto said. "Then I want to go to All Army, get in the World Class Athlete Program and make the Olympic team. I want to be the first Puerto Rican to represent the United States and win a Gold Medal in the Olympics. That's my goal."

And a lofty goal it is, but to get there Resto has to win at the All-Army trials, then win at the Armed Forces Championships. Resto's coach believes that Resto has the talent to accomplish his mission.

"He is very aggressive and that's something I coach," said Kirkland. "I try to teach him not to depend on just one punch to win. I want him to be able to hit his opponent with anything, be it a jab, a hook or an uppercut. I tell him to tell people when they ask what his best punch is; it's anything you hit your opponent with."

At the rate he is going, Resto will probably hit a lot of people with just about everything.

Columbus team ends Albany Warriors' winning streak

The Columbus Stars did the next best thing to beating the Albany, Ga., Warriors Saturday night at Garrett Stadium — they played the defending Northern League champions to a 27-27 tie and put the first blemish on a spotless record for the Warriors in two years.

The Warriors finished the season once again as Northern League champions with a 9-0-1 record. The Stars will be heading to the playoffs for the first time with a record of 7-2-1.

"It was a war," head coach Tom Staton said. "This was probably the best game I've seen. I'm proud of our boys. They played one heck of a ballgame — it was one of those games where neither team deserved to lose. It's hard to say it that way. We would have loved to win it but neither team deserved to lose."

On the opening drive of the game, it looked as if the Warriors would use their vaunted rushing attack to chew up the yards and take time off the clock. Seventy yards and more than seven minutes later, tailback Reginal Whitehead (16 carries for 84 yards and two touchdowns) broke loose for a 6-yard touchdown run. With the extra-point attempt good by Tommy Amburgey, the Warriors had drawn first blood at 7-0.

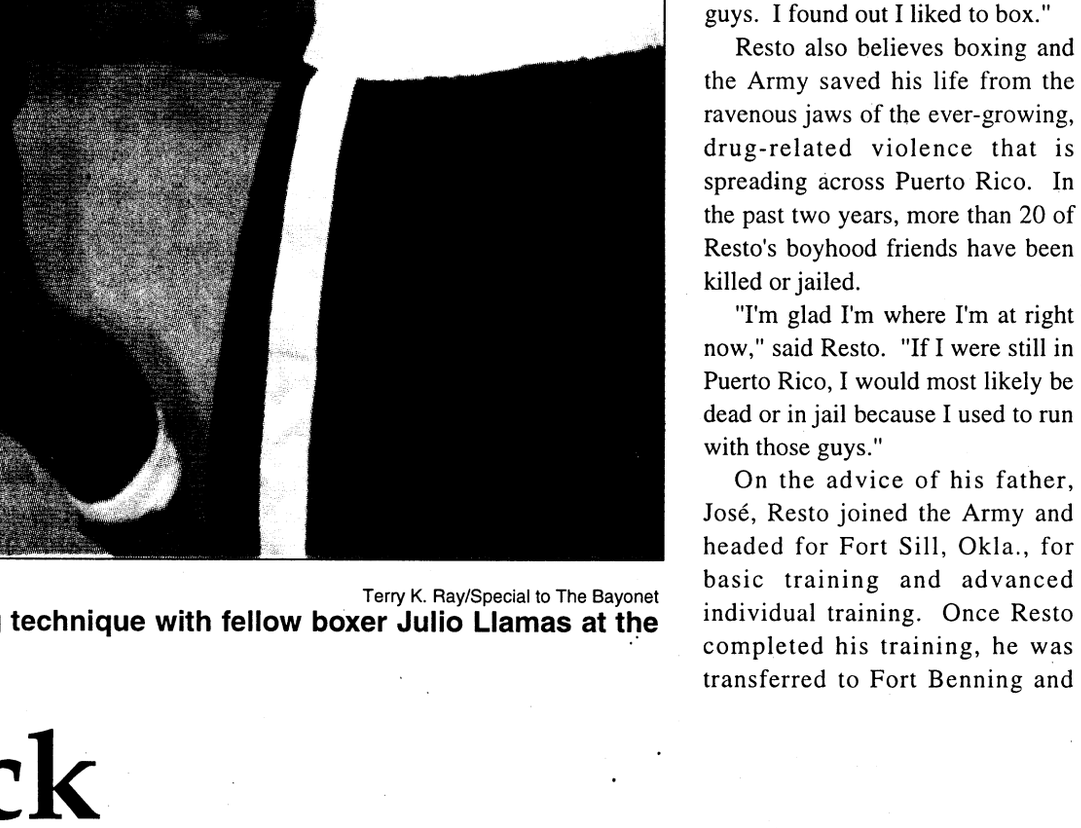
A fumble by Warrior quarterback Nathaniel Curry inside his own 25-yard line set up the Stars for their first score of the game. Fullback Jamon Smith (10 carries for 60 yards and one touchdown) turned an off tackle play into a 6-yard touchdown run late in the first quarter. Scott Alalof's conversion knotted the game for the first time at 7-7.

The Stars broke the tie in the second quarter on a 1-yard touchdown run from quarterback Eddie Mitchell (12 carries for 47 yards and one touchdown, six for 11 passing for 78 yards, one touchdown and one interception). Alalof tacked on the point after for a 14-7 advantage going into halftime.

In the third quarter; the Warriors cut the lead to 14-13 on a 7-yard scamper by fullback Robert Williams (16 carries for 138 yards and one touchdown).

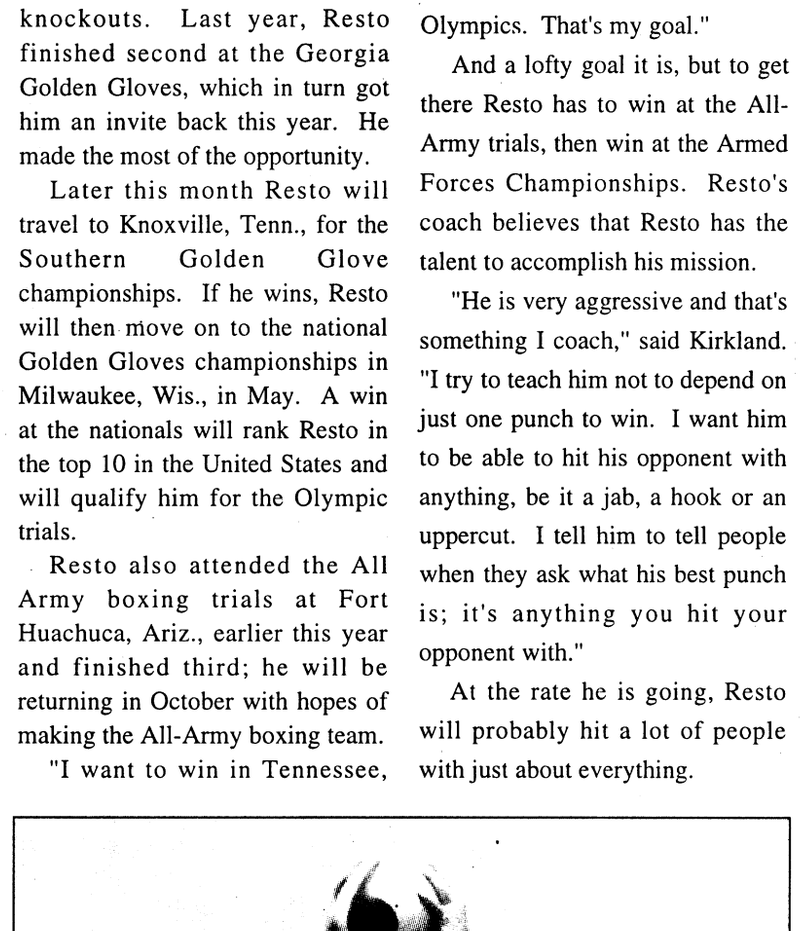
A 40-yard strike from Mitchell to tight end Dave Davis late in the third quarter (two catches for 64 yards and one touchdown) pushed the Stars lead to 21-13 with Alalof's conversion.

In the fourth quarter, the Warriors once again used Whitehead to put points on the board. A 3-yard plunge by Whitehead trimmed the Stars lead down to 21-19.



A 15-yard interception return for a touchdown by strong safety Terrence Perry (nine tackles, three assists and one touchdown) late in the fourth quarter gave the Stars a 27-19 lead and with the clock on their side it looked like the Stars would head into the playoffs on a winning note.

A turnover by Stars tailback Robert Williams gave the Warriors one last chance to tie the game and send it into overtime. With 10 seconds left in the game, backup quarterback Tony Richardson hit tight end Tyrone Watson from 25 yards out, cutting the Stars lead down to 27-25. The Warriors went for and made the two-point conversion, sending the game into an extra quarter.



Neither team was able to put any points on the board in the overtime period ending the game in a tie. (Regular season rules).

The Stars up gave a season-high 422 yards of offense while getting just 209. The defense as it has done all season long rose to the challenge. Strong safety John Harris led the defense with 12 tackles and four assists. Cornerback Tony Smith had five tackles, four assists, one interception and a fumble recovery. Linebacker Steve Crayton had an interception and defensive end David Teel also had a fumble recovery.

The Stars will now head down to Bradenton, Fla., Saturday for a playoff tilt with Central Division winner Clearwater, Fla.

The Columbus Fort Benning Rugby Football Club Cruise-matics ventured down to the plains at Auburn University Saturday and Sunday to defend their championship at the fourth annual War Eagle Ruggerfest hosted by the Auburn Rugby Football Club.

The Cruise-matics came up a little short this time around, dropping two out of three matches to the new champions the University of Georgia Bulldogs.

In their first match of the tournament, the Cruise-matics climbed all over High Country of Atlanta, Ga., 22-0.

36th Engineers dominate semifinals

By Terry K. Ray
Special to The Bayonet©

The final four was paired down to two Tuesday in the 1995 U.S. Army Infantry Center intramural basketball championship, and both teams will be coming from the 36th Engineer Group.

In the first of two semifinal match-ups, the The Hit Squad from the 598th Maintenance Company shot down the high flying Get Some crew from Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment, in overtime 84-80 to claim the first spot in the championship Wednesday afternoon.

Four Hit Squad starters scored in double figures. Center Willie Tucker dropped in 21 to lead the team. Ronald James hit for 20, Bobby Matthews had 18 and Jermaine Carter popped in 14.

Get Some was powered by the duo of Delione Meadows' game high 33 points and Theonis Brown's 26.

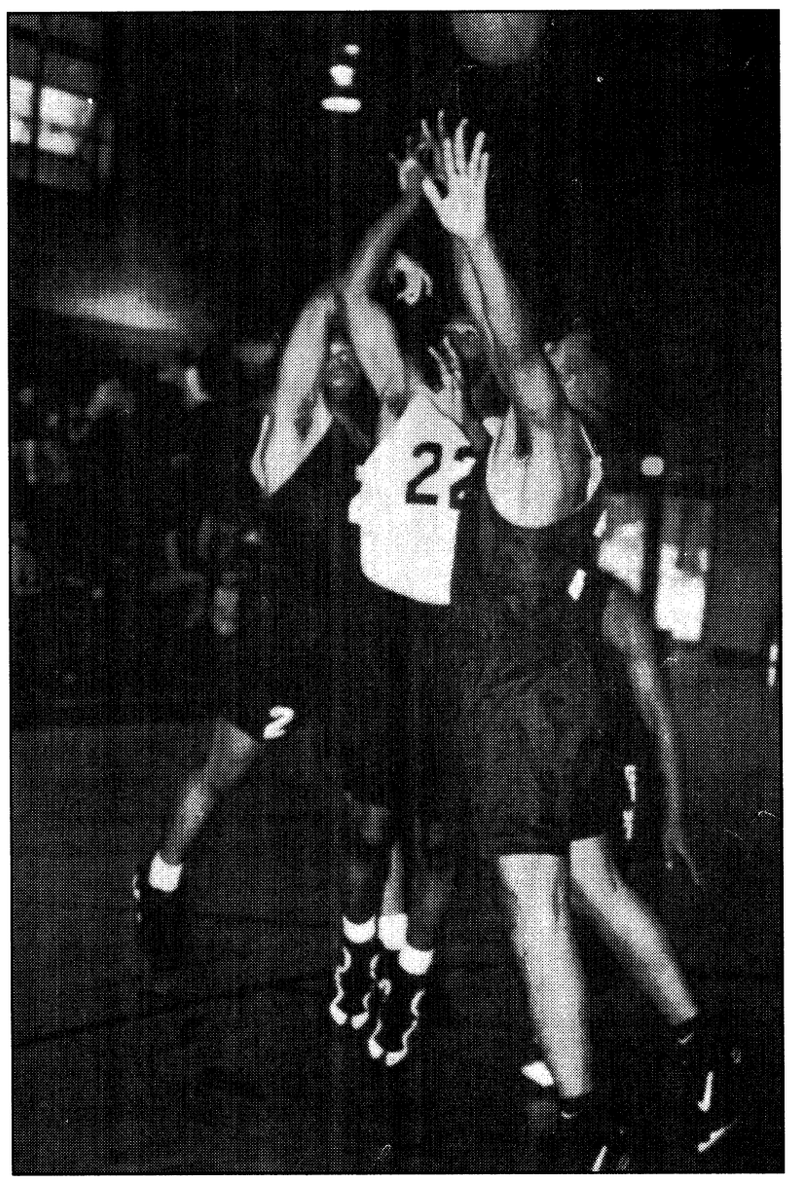
The game was nip and tuck down to the wire action with neither team able to put much distance from the other. The Hit Squad worked the inside game to perfection using Tucker and power forward William Knight down low against the smaller Get Some defenders.

"Our bread and butter has been our inside work," said head coach Larry Braye. "When we can go inside it makes our outside game that much better."

With the score sitting at 73-69 and only 14 ticks left on the clock, the Hit Squad looked to have the game on ice. But Brown hit a layup and was fouled. Brown intentionally missed the free throw and teammate Carlton Little grabbed the rebound and popped in a five foot bank shot to tie the game at 73-73 with three seconds left. In the three minute overtime period, the Hit Squad hit free throws down the stretch to clinch the win.

In the second semifinal game, the Untouchables from 63rd Combat Support Equipment fended off the Bushmasters of Battery B, 4th Battalion, 41st Field Artillery Regiment, 3rd Brigade, 24th Infantry Division, 64-60 to set up an all 36th Eng., Grp., final.

"We used our tremendous physical conditioning to wear on our opponents," head coach Roy Burrell said. "Our man-to-man defense is pretty good too."



The Untouchables powered by Michael Jackson's 16 first half points (game high 32) took a commanding 32-20 lead at the break.

The Bushmasters struck back with a 13-8 run to start the second half and at the 10:32 mark had cut the Untouchables lead down to seven at 40-33. Charles Benning (16 points), Baron Ransome (14 points) and Samuel Chance (13 points) led the charge for the Bushmasters.

Chance set up the Bushmaster big men with drives to the basket time and time again and with 7:21 left in the game the Bushmasters were within striking distance at 44-43.

The Untouchables stepped up the defense and went on a 6-0 run, pushing the score up to 50-43. Less than a minute later, the lead had grown to nine at 56-47 on baskets by Jackson, William Cochran (13 points) and Jerel Jessie (10 points).

The Bushmasters closed the lead to 58-57 on a 10-2 run with Ransome doing the damage with six of the 10 points.

With 44 seconds left in the game, Jackson fouled Chance from behind the three-point line giving Chance a chance to tie the game with three free throws. Chance hit 2 of 3 to get the Bushmasters as close as they would ever get at 60-59.

Jackson closed out the game hitting four straight free throws for the Untouchables sending them into their first title tilt.

CRUISERS:

converted kicks and a penalty kick by fly half Eric Magrum and a converted kick by scrum half Duke Moseley accounted for the Cruise-matics' scoring.

In the second round match against the Bulldogs, the Cruise-matics got bit 30-10. The Bulldogs got scores from hooker Joe Petty, second row Robert Waters and fullback Andrew Rothschild while scrum half Geoff Tanner connected on three penalty kicks and three converted kicks.

The Cruise-matics could manage only a late try by fullback Tim Butterfield and a penalty kick and conversion from Moseley.

In the championship match, the Bulldogs got a grip on the Cruise-matics and would not let go.

The Cruise-matics got on the board first with Moseley putting a up a penalty kick early in the first half to give the Cruise-matics their first and last lead of the match at 3-0.

Moseley trimmed the Bulldog lead to 8-6 moments into the start of the second half with his second penalty kick of the match.

The Bulldogs did not rollover, getting a penalty kick of their own moments later, booting the lead up to 11-6.

Moseley's third and final penalty kick cut the Bulldog lead down to 11-9 and that would be as close as the Cruisers would get.

Tanner got his third penalty kick of the afternoon from outside the Cruise-matic 10-meter line, pushing the lead to 14-9 with the second half nearly over.

The Bulldogs put the match away when Cruise-matic winger Luis Rodriguez misplayed a high kick at his own goal. The ball bounced away from Rodriguez and into the try zone where Bulldog wing forward Kenji Matsumoto pounced on the ball for a try. Tanner added the conversion for a 21-9 advantage and the championship.

"I thought our strategy was very good," said Tanner. "Our leadership by fly half Liam Anderson was very strong. We played them yesterday (Saturday) and came out on top. Today was a much harder match."

"They play a good game," Moseley said. "I'm not going to take anything away from them. We made a couple of mistakes early that gave them a couple of penalty kicks. If we could have kept those from happening I think it would have been a little bit better. They were the better team today. I think we played well, they just played a little bit better."

Military Police Activity

This week's hot topic concerns curfew violations. U.S. Army Infantry Center Regulation 210-5 (Garrison Regulations) requires all family members under the age of 18 years to be in their quarters from 10 p.m. to 5 a.m. unless accompanied by a parent or guardian.

Exceptions are made for certain social functions, emergencies, or other occasions deemed appropriate by the parent or guardian.

Family members found in violation of the curfew will be escorted by Military Police to the police station. The sponsor will be notified and will be required to escort the family member from the station back to his or her quarters.

A repeat in curfew violations is evidence of misconduct and may cause the family to be ejected from family housing. The post curfew also applies to nonfamily member juveniles. The Military Police will take all necessary actions to identify these juveniles and ensure that they are removed from post.

The following entries are from the Fort Benning Military Police blotters from March 30 to April 4. Such entries may be incomplete and are not intended to prove the guilt or innocence of any person.

TAKE A BITE OUT OF CRIME®

• A second lieutenant was charged with larceny of nonappropriated funds after placing a higher priced bottle of spray in a box manufactured and priced for aftershave with a lower price at the Post Exchange. He then paid the price marked on the aftershave box. The MPs apprehended the officer and transported him to the MP station where he was further processed, issued ID card confiscation orders, suspension of Post Exchange privileges and released to his unit.

• A private first class was charged with driving under the influence, failure to drive on a roadway designated for traffic and no proof of insurance. While traveling on Custer Road, the soldier lost control of the vehicle, struck a tree and wound up in a ditch. The MPs transported the soldier to Martin Army Community Hospital for minor injuries and a blood alcohol test. The soldier was further processed and released to his unit.

• A specialist was charged with leaving a motor vehicle unattended. The soldier had parked and left his vehicle unattended when it disengaged from gear and rolled approximately 200 feet into an air-conditioning unit. The MPs discovered that the soldier did not apply the emergency brake prior to leaving the vehicle. The soldier was cited and released.

Other activities included 15 traffic accidents and four cases of driving under the influence of alcohol. There were six shoplifting cases reported at exchange facilities and 10 cases of larceny of private property.

ask the judge

By George R. Smawley
Claims Division, Staff Judge Advocate

There was a time when an individual who filed a claim with the government was able to grossly exaggerate or even lie about certain aspects of the claim, and still have the remaining valid costs paid. No more.

In the past couple of years, the Army policy regarding fraudulent claims has changed so that not only will grossly inaccurate items be denied, but the entire claim including valid items may be denied if a determination is made that the claim is substantially tainted by fraud.

The term "substantially tainted by fraud" is not susceptible to easy definition. At a minimum, it would include a claim with altered estimates representing values in excess of the actual loss or damage, a claim of missing items the claimant clearly never owned and a claim in which the claimant clearly misrepresented the true age or condition of numerous claimed items.

If the fraud has been discovered after the claim is paid, the claimant will be required to repay the government for the full amount, either voluntarily or involuntarily, and may be the subject of an investigation by the Military Police or Criminal Investigation Division.

Filing a fraudulent claim is a crime under Article 132 of the Uniform Code of Military Justice, punishable by a dishonorable discharge, forfeiture of all pay and allowances, reduction to private 1, and confinement of up to five years. Federal law also makes it a crime punishable by up to five years and a fine of up to $100,000.

Clearly, most claimants filing claims with the government have suffered legitimate losses. For those who have not, claims have been denied in full and, in some cases, resulted in criminal or adverse administrative action against the offending service member.

Questions regarding claims can be directed to Fort Benning Claims Office, Office of the Staff Judge Advocate, at 545-2285.

April is Child Abuse Prevention Month

Army Community Service

Since 1983, April has been declared Child Abuse Prevention Month. It is the time of year to promote public awareness of child abuse and its prevention. Education and public awareness is the key.

Child abuse is any behavior directed toward a child by a parent, guardian, caregiver, other family member or other adult, that endangers or impairs a child's physical or emotional health and development. Child abuse includes four major categories — physical abuse, sexual abuse, emotional abuse and neglect

What is child abuse?

The term "child abuse" can be defined as any behavior directed toward a child by a parent, guardian, caregiver, other family member or other adult, that endangers or impairs a child's physical or emotional health and development.

Child abuse includes four major categories; physical abuse, sexual abuse, emotional abuse and neglect.

What are signs of possible physical abuse?

• Unexplained injuries, especially those located on parts of the body not usually affected by normal childhood activities, (eyes, mouth, back, thighs, buttocks, genital areas)

• Repeated injuries such as bruises, welts or burns, especially those where the shape of an object used to produce them is visible, (such as an electric cord, hair brush, belt buckle, board, cigarette)

• Unexplained fractures

• Parents' denial that anything is wrong, unlikely explanations for the child's injuries, delay obtaining medical care or inadequate care given, injuries that occur with increasing frequency or severity.

What about child neglect?

Child neglect is the continued failure to provide a child with necessary care and protection including adequate shelter, food, clothing, medical care, etc. Children left without appropriate supervision, especially young children, for extended periods of time are included in child neglect.

• Child appears poorly nourished or inadequately clothed.

• Child appears consistently tired or listless and always seems as though no one cares. Attendance at school may be inconsistent.

• Child evidences a consistent lack of good hygiene or an obsession with cleanliness.

• Child is left alone regularly over long periods of time or in dangerous situations.

• Child shows evidence that medical needs are not being met.

What is emotional abuse?

Emotional abuse is the most difficult form of child abuse to verify. It includes both verbal assaults and the withholding of positive emotional support.

Although the scars may be invisible to the naked eye, emotional abuse wounds the spirit, frequently leaving its marks for a lifetime.

Victims of emotional child abuse are "hit" every day with the power of words which are demeaning, shaming, threatening, blaming, intimidating, unfairly critical or sarcastic in nature.

• The child displays behavior that is extreme. For example, he or she may be involved in a pattern of lying, stealing, fighting, or is overly aggressive or acts out inappropriately.

• Child may appear defensive, shy or overly dependent.

• Child may be verbally abusive to others by using the same language and demeaning terms she or he has experienced.

What about sexual abuse and its effect on children?

Incest, sexual molestation, rape, sodomy, child pornography, exhibitionism and exploitation are terms most often used when describing child sexual abuse.

Those who sexually victimize children suffer from an emotional or psychological dysfunction, usually as a result of their own previous sexual victimization. They often have severe sexual problems and difficulty relating to adults.

Many are adults with whom the child is familiar, and they may repeatedly abuse the same child. An adult who is a stranger to the child will often abuse that child only once but will continue to abuse other children.

The abuse can be:

• Nonphysical — for example, indecent exposure, obscene phone calls or "peeping toms"

• Physical — including genital or oral stimulation, fondling and intercourse; and behavior

• Abuse — rape and other forms of sexually violent incidents may occur only once or be repeated many times, sometimes over a number of years.

A single seemingly minor incident, such as indecent exposure, fondling or an obscene telephone call, may cause temporary emotional disturbances such as embarrassment, fear, confusion, guilt, anxiety and a distrust of adults or strangers.

A more severe incident, like incest, rape, sodomy, exposure to pornographic activity or other forms of sexual violence may have a lasting effect on the child.

Behavioral problems such as withdrawal, difficulty at school, aggression, running away, nightmares, extreme depression or anxiety may result.

Physical signs of sexual abuse may include genital swelling, cuts or bruises, venereal disease, and pregnancy. Symptoms resulting from emotional harm often do not surface until adulthood.

What to do if you discover a child has been sexually abused?

First and foremost, do not deny the problem. Believe what the child tells you no matter how unbelievable it sounds.

Control your emotions. Fear and anger on your part are natural reactions but may be frightening to the child. Let the child know that your feelings are not directed at him or her.

Never blame, punish or embarrass the child.

Reassure the child that she or he is safe and that it was right to tell you. Let the child ask questions; then provide answers that can be understood.

Find out as much as possible about the events leading up to, during and after the incident but do so delicately.

If the molester was a stranger, get a description of the face, clothes, location, car, etc.

Immediately contact a physician for treatment of physical injuries and the police to report the abuse. Provide the doctor with as much information as possible.

Seek counseling for both the child and yourself as soon as possible. Immediate intervention can help prevent long term lingering effects of the abuse.

Following these guidelines can help prevent abuse

Army Community Service

To help prevent child abuse, Army Community Service is providing the following.

Build self-esteem

• If children or teen-agers feel good about themselves, they will not be as vulnerable.

• Children and teens with a strong sense of their own worth will not be as easily swayed or tricked by sexual abusers.

Talk and listen

• Close parent-child relationships are an important aspect of protecting and supporting children.

• Often abusers gain children's cooperation by warning them that no one will believe them if they tell.

• Children and teen-agers need to hear a clear message early and often from the adults around them: "I care and I will listen to you."

• Make a habit of talking regularly about ordinary activities and what sorts of things make your children and teens feel sad, happy or angry.

• Sharing stories of your own growing-up experiences, both positive and negative, helps your children learn that they are not alone in facing tough decisions.

• Sharing experiences also helps children and teen-agers to get to know their parents as real people.

Supervise and plan

• Make sure that infants, toddlers and preschoolers are carefully supervised by parents, reliable family members or other appropriate caregivers at all times.

• Know where your older children and teens are and who they are with.

Agree on plans for after school, going out with friends and inviting friends to the house. Be around their activities, alert to their behavior and aware of their attitudes.

• Develop a safety plan with your children in the event something unexpected happens outside of the home and you are not immediately available for help.

• Children can learn to be careful without being afraid of people.

Rehearse and practice

• Encourage the development of problem solving skills. Even young children can practice "what if" situations. Parents and children can rehearse what to do or say.

• Together parents and children can come up with different ways to handle real life situations.

• Take advantage of television, current events and everyday occurances to discuss family rules and expectations.

Teach

• Children and teen-agers need information that supports healthy sexuality. From toddlerhood to adolescence, parents and other caring adults can provide information on normal sexual behaviors, thoughts and feelings in a way that makes children comfortable and aware of what is happening to them as they grow.

• Learning about sexuality and sex from parents gives parents the opportunity to stress important underlying values such as respect for self and others.

• Children are naturally curious and very interested in their bodies. From an early age, along with learning the names of other body parts they can be taught the correct terms for their private parts in conjunction with daily activities like bathing and toileting.

• Teaching about all body parts in a matter-of-fact manner accomplishes two important tasks. It makes it clear to children that questions about their bodies and about sex are accepted and it also provides them with the words to use if someone has tried to touch them or hurt them.

• When parents provide ongoing information about sexual development and behavior, they send a powerful message of support.

• Children learn that their parents are aware of their growth and development and that sex is a topic parents are willing to talk about.

• Children and teen-agers talk about sex anyway. It is better for them to get the correct information from a parent rather than wrong information from someone else.

• By providing opportunities to talk about sexual matters, parents may also be able to identify children and teens who are troubled about sex and arrange for help before problems occur.

Child abuse affects everyone and is the whole community's responsibility. There are many resources available to assist parents in their time of need.

"For God so loved the world he gave ..."

By Vincent deP. Burns
ITB staff chaplain

This doesn't make sense. He was the son of a carpenter. When he was about 30 years old he became a street preacher. He taught in the synagogues of local towns and preached on hillsides and lakeshores. He gathered people by the sheer power of his personality. He touched them with his word and embraced them with his eyes.

Wherever he went people wanted to be with him. His mission seemed to be simply to tell the people how much their God loved them and to invite them to respond to that love. And because he did this, because he went so far as to claim to be the Messiah and Redeemer, he was nailed to a cross. This doesn't make sense.

Each Good Friday, the Christian world stops to remember that crucifixion. Believers see again the power of the cross. Disciples hear again the call to follow. Those without faith wonder what it is all about. Some continue to mock those who carry the name Christian.

For all of us, the believer and the unbeliever, the crucifixion of Jesus Christ remains a mystery. No theology has really been able to adequately explain why Jesus, the Son of God, was nailed to a cross as a common criminal. For those who don't need a theological or philosophical explanation, the crucifixion of Christ has a very beautiful as well as powerful meaning. God loves us enough to come and suffer with us. Maybe that sounds too simple. But that is the meaning behind the crucifixion. It isn't any more complicated than that.

Because it is that simple, then it can be grasped by anyone. Levels of education, status in life, position in the community, none of those are essential to accepting the basic principle of Christian faith. Our God loves us enough not only to take on human flesh but even to allow that flesh to be nailed to a tree and left there to die. For some, that fact is so simple it becomes unbelievable.

From the cross, Jesus looks at the person who suffers and with his piercing and love-filled eyes he says, "I understand." To the parents whose young baby has died, he says, "Give me your pain." To the man who is dying of AIDS he invites, "Let me share your fear." He says to the teen-ager who watched his father slowly be consumed by cancer, "Trust me. There is a reason for this." To those who have undergone the unique pain of a broken relationship, Jesus asks to walk with them on their journey. To the hungry and the homeless, the diseased and the mentally ill, the imprisoned, and the chemically dependent, the crucified Christ simply says, "Look at my pain. Look at how much your God loves you. Know that I understand."

reflections

Who is there who has not suffered? Who has not asked, "Why do I suffer? Why doesn't God take away my pain, my fear, my brokenness?" Who has not looked at a suffering, broken body and said, "It doesn't make sense?"

The message of that first Good Friday is that it doesn't have to make sense. We just have to believe that God has a reason, a reason for suffering in the world, a reason for whatever pain you may experience in your life, and a reason for the Son of God to be crucified.

God doesn't ask why we try to make sense out of it all. He only asks that we believe in the message that it was meant to convey. It's all about love — God's love for his people. It's all about forgiveness, God forgiving us and our forgiving one another. And it's all about hope, the hope that comes from the empty tomb on Easter Sunday.

If you miss the message of Good Friday, you will certainly miss the message of Easter.

Passover celebrates God's deliverance

By Steve Bounds
Infantry Training Brigade

Passover is a celebration of God's delivering the nation of Israel from slavery in Egypt. It marks the beginning of Israel's living in a special covenant with God as a free people.

This year, the festival, which lasts for eight days, begins at sundown today.

The book of Exodus records the account of how God brought Israel out of slavery in Egypt. God called Moses from the burning bush to be the leader through whom he would deliver Israel.

Moses went to Pharaoh with a simple message from God: "Let my people go." When Pharaoh refused to let them leave, God sent 10 plagues. The rivers were turned to blood; frogs filled the land; lice covered the people; their livestock died; boils covered man and beast; hail storms destroyed their crops; locusts devoured whatever was left; and great darkness covered the land. The final plague was the death of the first-born of every Egyptian household. Although the Egyptians suffered greatly from all of the plagues, the people of Israel were not affected.

The Passover receives its name from the final plague. In Exodus 12, God instructed the people through Moses to sacrifice a lamb or goat, and to place its blood on the door posts. They were to roast the lamb and eat it with bitter herbs and unleavened bread on that evening.

During the night, the Angel of Death passed through Egypt killing the first born. This final plague broke Pharaoh's stubborn will. He finally sent people of Israel out of the land. They quickly left Egypt during the night.

The Passover celebration begins in the home with a special ceremonial meal, called the Seder, commemorating this event. The Seder begins after sundown and is lead by a parent or grandparent. The table is decorated and set with special dishes. Everyone has a glass of wine, including children, and there is an extra glass for the prophet Elijah. Later in the evening, the door will be opened for Elijah. According to Malachi 4, Elijah will return to announce the coming of the Messiah.

Four questions are asked by the youngest child. All are variations of the basic question — "Why is this night different?"

The questions are answered indirectly through telling the Exodus story. This is in response to the command in Exodus 13:8 that they should teach their children the reason for this special celebration.

In the synagogue on the Sabbath immediately preceding the Seder, the scriptural reading is from Malachi, Chapters 3 and 4. This speaks of Elijah coming to proclaim the coming of the Messiah as the great day of the Lord.

Jewish people celebrate the Passover to remember how God delivered their people from bondage in Egypt. It should remind all of us that God loves his people. He provides a way to escape from bondage of sin for all who will trust in him. May we all learn to trust our Lord and celebrate His deliverance.

FORT BENNING HISTORY BOOK

published to commemorate

FORT BENNING'S 75th ANNIVERSARY

Fort Benning recently celebrated its 75th Anniversary, and The Bayonet published a special edition to coincide with the celebration. Soon after the special edition of the paper was published, we began looking at the information about Fort Benning that we had collected and decided that it was simply too good to leave it just in newspaper form.

We knew the book would be interesting and informative. The next step was to make it as attractive as possible. An experienced layout and design firm was hired, and they have done an absolutely superb job. You will enjoy thumbing through its pages for years to come. You will also be proud to put it in a prominent place at home for friends to enjoy, or at work for your customers to see. And , if you're looking for a gift for a retiree, or a friend who may have served at Fort Benning and is no longer here, there's no better way to remind them of your lasting friendship.

Published by the contract printer of Fort Benning's authorized newspaper, The Bayonet, the hardcover book, protected by a beautiful full-color dust cover, has 168-pages and is filled with more than 200 photos. The book includes detailed timelines of significant events that have shaped Fort Benning, and overview of the post's involvement in World War II, Korea, Viet Nam, and a variety of stories that round out the post's interesting history.

It is the perfect "coffee table" and is a 'must have' for anyone who has been stationed at Fort Benning. It's a book that will be a lasting memento of the winner of the 1994 Commander In Chief's Award signifying it as...

"The Best Army Installation in the World!"

MARTIAL ARTS

University offers program for military

By Sue McKinney
Fort McPherson, Ga., Sentinel

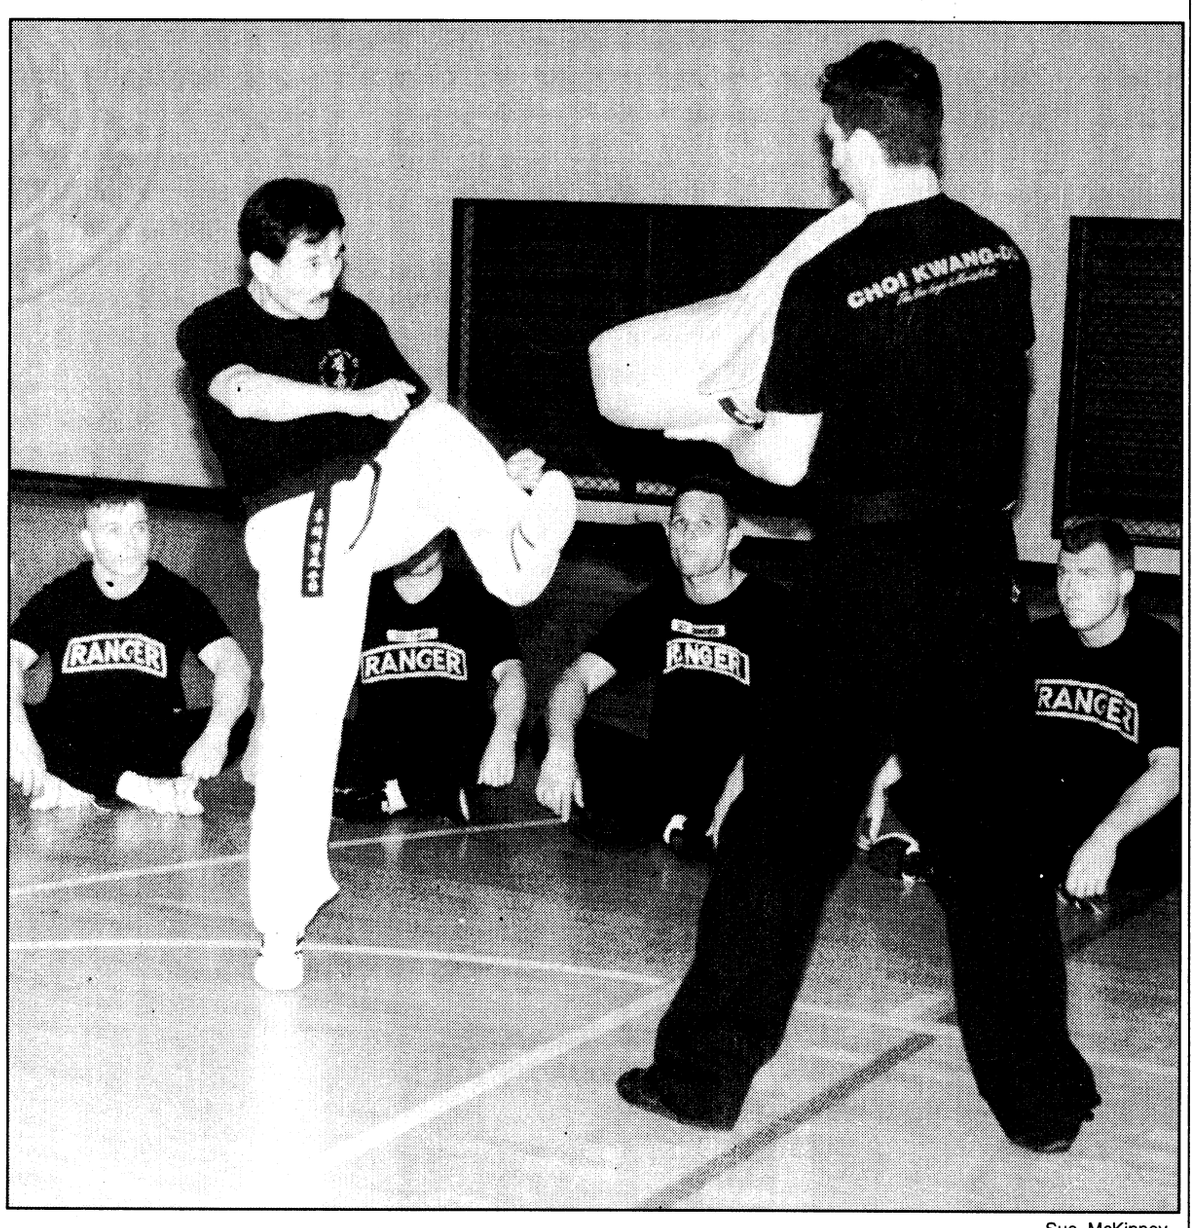
It has been a while in the making, but Upper Iowa University at Fort Benning has specifically developed a program with the military in mind. The program combines physical fitness, leadership skills and college credits.

Ed Thomas, program director for Upper Iowa University at Fort Benning, introduced the program at Camp Frank D. Merrill, the Ranger Camp in Dahlonega, Feb. 6 to 10. Additional classes will be offered April 22 and 29 and April 23 and 30 at Fort Benning.

The program is a combination of restorative and martial arts, and is designed to produce leaders who excel physically as well as intellectually, Thomas said.

"I want to train leaders who are fit to help others to become likewise," he said.

Thomas designed the program to cover more than just the physical aspects of the human body, but also to cover the cognitive and the emotional part as well.



The restorative arts techniques bring the body toward its optimal state of readiness. These techniques include flexibility, training, posture and relaxation, resistance exercise, first-aid, aquatics and aerobic training, Thomas said.

At the same time, the martial arts techniques allow for appropriate responses to external aggression and include a variety of combative systems from both Eastern and Western culture, he said.

Thomas condensed one of the restorative and martial arts classes to fit into five days in order to better serve the needs of the soldiers at the the Ranger Camp.

"I am committed to bringing this program to soldiers at remote sites if there's a need and a request," Thomas said.

It's been hard to take classes for college credits because of their unusual schedule, said Staff Sgt. Robert Frye, 5th Ranger Training Battalion.

Sue McKinney

Grandmaster Kwang Do Chic and assistant Sgt. Eric Henning demonstrate a front push kick during one of the classes.

"This is a course that is both wanted and needed by the soldiers at this camp," Frye said.

Staff Sgt. Kevin Ott, Company C, 5th RTB, said he is glad he took the course because it turned out to be much more than he expected.

The class was more than just an extended physical training session; Thomas also taught the mechanics of good physical fitness, Ott said.

"Much of what we learned can improve the way we do our own PT as well as how to teach it to others," said Ott. "We also learned what happens when you are out of shape, and the proper techniques of PT to benefit you in the long run."

"This program is a new and innovative concept, which moves people out of a physical fitness program that consists primarily of push-ups, sit-ups and a two-mile run," said 1st Sgt. Leon Johnson, first sergeant for the Officer Candidate School. "It develops the total person and not just one part."

Johnson is one of the first from Fort Benning to graduate from this program with a bachelor's degree. He said he hopes to become one of the instructors when he retires from the Army.

"This program is unique because we are always getting input from our students and using that to make it a better class that is more beneficial to the soldiers," said Johnson.

"Training such as this is not only good for the college credits the soldiers need," said Lt. Col. Ralph F. D'elosua, commander of the 5th RTB. "It also improves the soldiers' leadership and physical fitness skills, which are vital to the kind of training camp that we are running here."

For more information or to register for the course, call 698-9555.

Unfit, overweight troops hit training roadblock

Army News Service

WASHINGTON — The Army is getting tougher on soldiers who fail to meet fitness and body weight standards. The bottom line, according to Pentagon operations and plans officials, is that soldiers who are unfit or overweight cannot attend many of the professional development schools needed to progress through the ranks of an Army career.

In the past, soldiers were required to meet fitness and body weight standards as a graduation requirement for a number of Army schools. Now, those soldiers who cannot do so will be turned away at the schoolhouse door.

"As the Army downsizes and changes to meet future challenges, it's critical that soldiers being trained to lead America's Army meet the highest professional standards," said Sgt. Maj. Steven A. Tew, Office of the Deputy Chief of Staff for Operations and Plans.

"Having soldiers take and pass the APFT and height and weight standards before the course begins allows instructors to teach the conduct of fitness training," he said. "It places remediation where it belongs — with the unit commander and first sergeant."

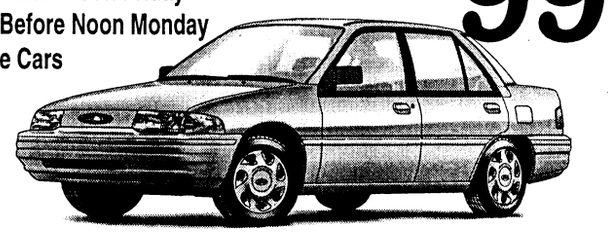
Home stations and losing commands of soldiers who report to Army schools and are subsequently not enrolled for fitness reasons will be held responsible for those soldiers, and may also be responsible for reimbursing training funds related to travel, Tew said.

The policy affects the following schools, beginning April 1 for the Active Component and June 1 for the Reserve Component:

- Primary Leadership Development Course
- Basic Noncommissioned Officer Course
- Advanced Noncommissioned Officer Course
- Battle Staff Noncommissioned Officer Course
- First Sergeant Course
- Command Sergeant Major Course
- Warrant Officer Candidate Course
- Warrant Officer Advanced Course
- Warrant Officer Senior Course; and
- Officer Candidate School.

Soldiers who attend other professional development courses in either a permanent change of station or temporary duty status, or any other resident course eight weeks or longer in length, must pass the Army Physical Fitness Test as a graduation requisite.

There has been no change to Army policy concerning pregnant soldiers as a result of the stricter standards, Tew said. Also, foreign students attending affected courses are exempt from the policy.



Soldiers with temporary physical profiles that prevent full participation in a temporary duty course will be removed from school attendance consideration by their immediate commander.

Permanently profiled soldiers must include physical profile documentation with their school application and will be allowed to attend training if they can meet minimum course graduation requirements.

Tew said the new policy will be followed by official changes in AR 350-41, Training in Units; and AR 351-1, Individual Military Education and Training.

APFT scores to better assess profiled soldiers

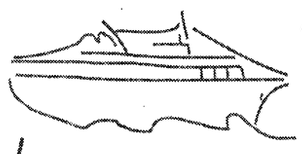
Army News Service

WASHINGTON — Higher Army Physical Fitness Test scores and more promotion points could be on the way for soldiers with permanent medical profiles who are awaiting advancement to the rank of sergeant and staff sergeant.

The affected soldiers are those who, on the APFT, take an alternative event to the two-mile run. Previously, soldiers who took, and passed, an alternate event to the two-mile run — the 800-yard swim, 6.2-mile bike or 2.5-mile walk —received a score of 60 points for that event.

A new policy that will go into effect April 1 will calculate the alternative event score as the average of the scores soldiers receive in the push-up and sit-up events.

The policy could boost promotion point tallies by as many as 20 points, according to Sgt. Maj. Jeff Stoddard, Office of the Deputy Chief of Staff for Personnel.



"We're making it more equitable for profiled soldiers because there is no grading scale for alternate events," Stoddard said.

"The best a soldier taking an alternate event could do was 260 points on the APFT. Now, it is possible for that soldier to get 300 points, if he or she 'maxes' the other two events."

The new scores are not retroactive and apply only to APFTs conducted in April and thereafter. Soldiers whose scores are increased can add the points to their promotion point work sheet at their next scheduled promotion point recomputation or during a reevaluation when they accumulate 25 or more additional points toward promotion.

"The policy should encourage anyone who takes an alternate event to do better on the other two," Stoddard said, "and put all exceptional soldiers on equal ground for APFT promotion points."

world war II

50 years ago this week ...

- President Franklin D. Roosevelt died in Warm Springs, Ga., after 12 years, one month and eight days in the presidency. Harry S. Truman was sworn in as president by Chief Justice Harlan Stone at the White House. The funeral was in Washington D.C., and while only a select few attended the actual services, an estimated 50,000 people gathered in Washington to pay last respects to the man that many felt embodied the ideals of the war.
- In the Pacific, fighting still raged on the island of Okinawa for control of the last key islands that would lead to an invasion of Japan. U.S. planes from the naval task force supporting the landing sank the Japanese Battleship Yamato, the last modern battleship of the Japanese navy. At the same time, U.S. ground forces of the Tenth Army were fighting back desperate counterattacks launched by the Japanese defenders. The Japanese proposed to make the U.S. forces capture of Okinawa costly, and the commander vowed "one plane for one warship, one boat for one ship. One man for 10 enemy, one man for one tank."

DOL recognizes improvement

Directorate of Logistics

The Directorate of Logistics is taking a unique approach to Process Action Teams.

PATs are small groups of individuals specifically chartered to identify areas of improvement and develop courses of action.

The Directorate has seen many tangible benefits result from PATs.

Since March, the Directorate of Logistics has sponsored three PAT contests to merit high achieving PATs. Any DOL PAT completing its mission is eligible to compete.

The semi-annual contest is administered by a balanced nine-member panel. The panel is made up of supervisory and nonsupervisory employees. Members of the panel are Kathy Doran, Luis Figueroa, Dwight Reynolds, Debbie Nason, Vennessa Green, Dorothy Caldwell, Renate Williams, Tim Ivey and Al Green.

The panel met for two months before the first contest began to determine judging criteria, rules and awards. The panel is empowered to decide the winners and to determine the award amounts.

Members of the panel said they believe the contest was a success.

"We've learned to appreciate all the hard work done on PATs; it's nice to see people's efforts rewarded," Nason said.

"I think the contest has built morale; people see the rewards as a good thing. I enjoy the contest because I've gotten to learn more about the rest of the directorate," said Ivey.

The contest winners were: First place — Clothing Initial Issue Point name plate and name tag redesign; second place — Automated Installation Property Book excess turn-in process re-engineering, which reduced steps necessary for excess turn-in from eight to two; third place — work order process flow evaluation.

In addition to receiving a DOL certificate, awards were given that ranged from one day to five days of leave. Collectively, 19 days of leave were awarded to the winning 11 PAT team members.

"I make it a point to go to the individuals' workplace and personally congratulate the PATs on their accomplishments," Director of Logistics Dale Ellis said. "I realize the difficulties of taking on additional assignments in today's Army. I want every DOL PAT to know I appreciate their hard work."

MUSIC EDUCATION

White School's artist in residence harps on music

Alex Fernan, Marquis West, and Robby Berra, fifth-graders in Evelyn Braman's class, play the harmonica using color coded sheets of music attached to their instruments.

Harmonica lesson big hit with kids

Students at White School have become proficient with the versatile harmonica in the past two weeks during an artist-in-residence program sponsored by the school, according to Melanie Keating, assistant principal.

Musician Matthew Shelton introduced the students to one of his favorite instruments, the harmonica, and demonstrated his patented FastStart program, which relies on color codes to signal when to blow or draw (breath in).

Virtually every student was reading the color-coded music sheets and playing tunes and songs by the end of the training, Shelton said while conducting a finale concert in Evelyn Braman's fifth-grade class March 31.

"This instrument gives students instant success. In literally minutes, he has them playing a tune," said Gail Wilson, director of staff development for the schools who attended the concert.

"He has managed to help the little musician come out of everyone," Keating said.

According to Keating, harmonica lessons were offered two years ago and were back by popular demand. Response was so good that Shelton offered two community seminars for others who expressed interest, she said.

"This is a popular instrument. It's contemporary, and you can use it to play any style of music," Shelton said.

Shelton developed his own unique style while driving trucks down long stretches of highways, he said.

Shelton, who learned to play the harmonica as a college sophomore, sometimes uses guitar accompaniment or even a drum synthesizer for rhythm.

The harmonica, however, will always be an individualistic instrument that cannot be synthesized, Shelton said.

"Your body becomes part of the instrument. The way you hold your jaw and your tongue makes a difference, and lets your harmonica sound different from anyone else," he said.

Shelton, who visited White School for two weeks, was hosted by the family of the school board attorney adviser, Lt. Col. Andrew Stewart.

Chess tournament brings book to life

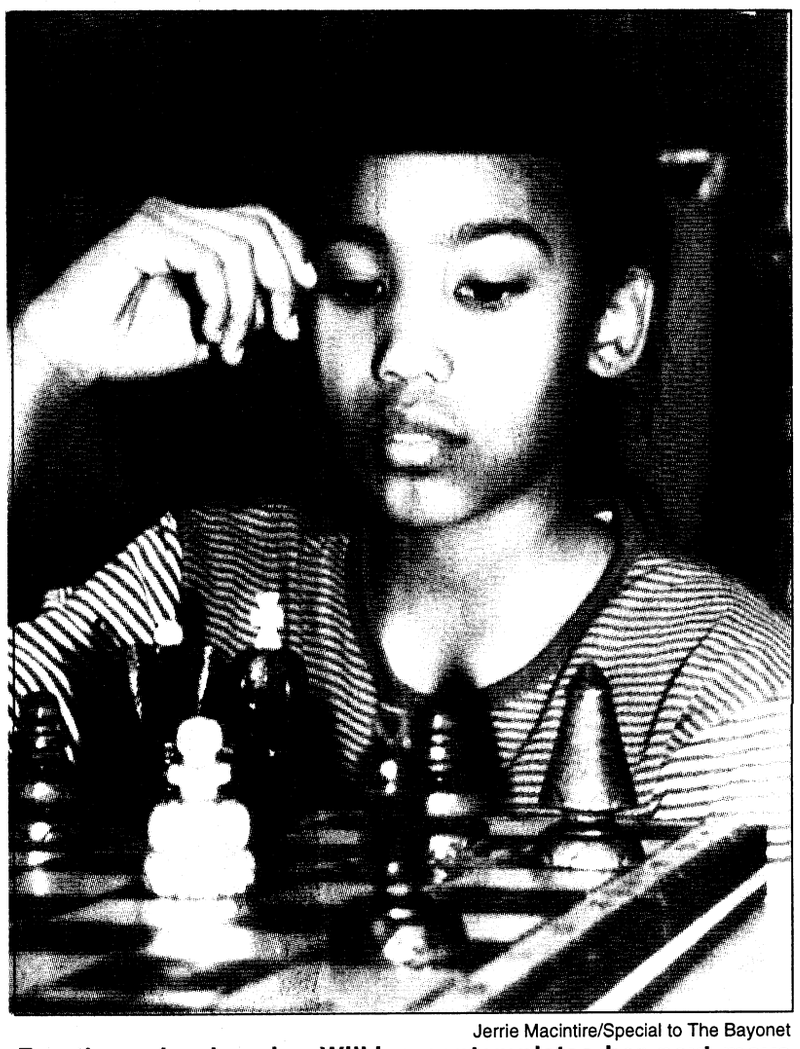
By Jerrie Macintire
Special to The Bayonet©

When Marge Brasfield's students study a novel, they do more than read and summarize.

In a hands-on activity, the class brought "The Westing Game" to life as they paired off at various tables and participated in an afternoon chess tournament March 31.

Brasfield's class wrapped up their language arts study of the Newberry Award-winning book with a better appreciation of the main character who was a master at the game.

Samuel Westing, the protagonist in Ellen Raskin's murder mystery, won his matches by sacrificing his key playing piece, said student Jessica Hardy.



The move, known as "The Queen Sacrifice," was a hallmark of Westing's style as well an important clue in the mystery novel.

"He was famous for his move because he always sacrificed his queen and still won," said Maggie Brown, one of several students who expressed admiration at his ability to overcome the loss of that key piece.

By playing an occasional game of chess during the study of the novel, students were able to better appreciate the clue dealing with chess moves while they developed planning strategies of their own, Brasfield said.

"Some of these children have never played before. They picked it up quickly and are now planning strategy more wisely," she said.

The chess tournament coincided with the last chapter of the book and helped students solve the mystery, Brasfield said.

Post child development center recognized

By Bettie S. Harris
Child Development Services

The Sante Fe Child Development center is the first Army-sponsored center at Fort Benning to be awarded the National Association Education of Young Children accreditation.

In the accreditation process, center personnel and parents join with representatives of the academy to determine whether the program met nationally recognized criterions for high quality.

Kaye Elliott, director of Sante Fe Child Development Center went through a three-step process preparing for the accreditation.

The first step is the self-study. The program personnel and parents conduct a self-study to determine how well the program meets the academy's criteria, make needed improvements, and report the compliance with the criteria on the program description form provided by the academy.

The second step is the validation phase. Trained validators make an on-site visit to verify the accuracy of the program description.

The third step is the accreditation decision. A three-person commission considers the validated program description and makes the accreditation decision.

The goal is to improve the quality of care and education provided for young children in group programs.

The self-study is a comprehensive and internal evaluation of all aspects of an early childhood program. The self-study is used by program personnel and parents to evaluate the program, identify strengths and weaknesses, and make necessary improvements.

The benefits improve the quality of group programs for children and their families.

It establishes a national standard that could be used to educate professionals, parents and the public. It assists parents in their search for high quality early childhood programs and provides professionals and public recognition for high quality programs.

The National Academy of Early Childhood Programs defines a high quality early childhood program as one that meets the needs of and promotes the physical, social, emotional and cognitive development of the children and adults — parents, staff and administrators — who are involved in the program.

Each day of a child's life is viewed as leading toward the growth and development of a healthy, intelligent and contributing member of society.

'Spectacular' horses to appear April 27-29

By Jan Wesner Childs
Special to The Bayonet©

They'll prance, they'll dance and they'll leap high into the air — even though they weigh thousands of pounds.

They are the cream of the crop, descended from a royal breed.

Herrmann's Royal Lipizzan Stallions will perform at Doughboy Stadium April 27 to 29.

"They can do the ultimate," said Hunt Club vice president Barbara Holden .

"They're just fabulous animals. They're the best athletes of the equestrian world. They can do it all."

The three 90-minute Lipizzan shows are sponsored by the Directorate of Community Activities, the Hunt Club and the Officers' Wives' Club.

Shows are at 7 each night. Advance tickets are $10 for adults and $6 for children age 6 to 12. Children under 6 are free.

Advance tickets are available from the Hunt Club, 689-3945, or the OWC, 687-3537.

Tickets at the gate will be $12 for civilians and $10 for active duty military. Children's tickets at the gate will be $8.

The Lipizzan stallions are descended from a breed originated in Austria. The Lipizzans were used in wartime and later were reserved for royalty.

Gen. George Patton, an expert equestrian and avowed horse lover, and his troops rescued the last of the original Lipizzans from Czechoslovakia in April 1945 so that they would not fall into Communist hands.

The Fort Benning shows will commemorate the 50th anniversary of the breed's rescue.

The horses were originally used in battle because of their intense athleticism.

"These horses were bred for their athletic ability, their courage, their stamina," Holden said.

"All horses can jump, but the Lipizzan horses are so athletic that they can jump higher and keep a position in the air longer."

The shows will feature 20 stallions from the traveling Herrmann's troupe. They will perform several difficult maneuvers, including:

- The Pas de Trois, where three stallions perform a ballet drill.
- The Levade, which features a horse rising on his haunches from a standstill position, tucking his forelegs under him and maintaining a perfect 45-degree angle.
- The Capriole, in which the horse leaps from all four feet and strikes out violently with his hind legs.

The moves are designed to highlight the stallions' athletic ability and grace.

"It's a performance by a very talented and beautiful group of horses," Hunt Club President Lt. Col. Kelly Cook said.

Jim Brown, manager of physical activities for DCA, said the horses will arrive at Doughboy Stadium April 24.

The public will be able to look at them during lunch and after 5 p.m., Brown said.

Symposium looks at quality of life

Family Unit Network

Delegates for the Fort Benning Army Family Action Plan Symposium will gather April 25 to discuss quality of life issues and address concerns specific to all segments of the Army community.

The Armywide AFAP program is a grass roots process soliciting comments and suggestions about a variety of issues from Army personnel including soldiers, retirees, family members, reservists and civilians.

The theme for the 1995 symposium is "Change Through Concern." This theme is indicative of the many changes soldiers and families are experiencing and Fort Benning's concern and unyielding commitment to improve the quality of life, according to AFAP officials.

Although officials are seeking issues specific to Fort Benning, Armywide concerns are also welcome. Issues that cannot be resolved locally will be forwarded to the Training and Doctrine Command and possibly to Headquarters, Department of the Army for consideration. The DA AFAP Conference is conducted each October to review those issues forwarded from the major Army command.

The day of the symposium, delegates will break into six work groups to identify and discuss the issues. The six work groups will be: consumer services; youth and education; medical services; housing, relocation and employment; family support; and force support, entitlements and leadership.

The AFAP Symposium is designed to keep the channels of communication open between the Army community and the administration while improving quality of life. Last year at Fort Benning, local issues included safer conditions for joggers, improving the children's library, financial aid for soldiers, and the traffic flow at the Post Exchange and Commissary entrance, to name a few.

Examples of issues raised at the DA conference include: teen clinics to deal with high-risk behavior, lower Delta Dental Plan costs, erosion of health benefits and funding for Army housing.

Over the past 10 years, the Armywide AFAP program has resulted in 212 recommended changes; 32 recommendations resulted in new legislation, 92 changes recommended resulted in new or revised Army policies, and 88 changes recommended resulted in new or improved programs.

Some examples included improved barracks' dayrooms and living spaces, better group life insurance coverage and improved consumer services through the Army Air Force Exchange Service.

Anyone with ideas or suggestions about how to improve services, programs or operational effectiveness can submit their concerns or ideas for discussion during the AFAP.

Quality of life issues may be submitted by soldiers, family members, reservists, National Guard, retirees and civilians. Issues should have a measurable end result, such as new or improved services or programs, implementation of new policies or revision of current policies.

For more information on the AFAP or to submit issues, contact Michelle Aldridge, Family Unit Network Center, Building 359, 545-5246 or 545-5602.

Environmental scholarships available

By Elsie Jackson
Army Career and Alumni Program

Service members, veterans and Department of Defense Civilians interested in environmental management, or cultural and natural resource management careers now have an additional scholarship opportunity to pursue.

The Southern Environmental Education Partnership is looking for grant applicants for the fall 1995 school year. Classes will be conducted at Jacksonville State University in Jacksonville, Ala., and at Talladega College nearby.

All individuals are eligible to apply for these programs, however, current and former members of the armed forces and individuals who are or have been employed by the Department of Defense (or its contractors or subcontractors) will be given preference.

Along with the standard forms and letters required for scholarship applications, individuals should be prepared to submit a Standard Form 171 (Application for Federal Employment) or Optional Form 612 (Optional Application for Federal Employment) with an OF 306 Form (Declaration for Federal Employment), and a copy of their Separation Papers. Scholarship applications, and the list of forms and letters required is available at the Fort Benning Army Career and Alumni Program office.

Scholarships leading to a bachelor of science degree are based on a three-year track, and include tuition for six regular semesters (academic) and for three (mandatory) summer terms, books, supplies and insurance.

Scholarship recipients may pursue either a bachelor of science degree with a major in chemistry and minor in environmental management, or a bachelor of science degree with a major in biology and a minor in cultural and natural resource management.

These degrees will prepare individuals for careers as environmental program managers or cultural and natural resource managers. Upon completion of this program, individuals must agree to serve as full-time civilian employees in an environmental position with the Department of Defense (if such employment is available and offered) for 12 months for each school year the scholarship provides.

In the bachelor's degree programs, students take academic courses at Jacksonville State University or Talladega College during the fall and spring semesters. They enroll at Jacksonville State University for the summer term in a highly structured work-based instruction program. This summer program incorporates work experience courses (on-the-job training) at actual DoD installations.

Students entering the program through Talladega College spend the spring and fall terms for their first two years at Talladega College and their third year in residence at Jacksonville State. After completing their respective degree programs, students may elect to receive their degrees from either institution.

Individuals pursuing a master's in public administration degree with a concentration in environmental science management may apply for a fellowship that will provide tuition, up to $300 per semester for textbooks and fees, and up to $162 per year for insurance.

The master's program includes courses in the areas of environmental chemistry, environmental engineering, environmental geology and environmental law. A broad-based curriculum in management science and engineering, this program provides both academic and practical skills needed to resolve, manage, and prevent environmental problems and issues in air, water, toxic waste and land reclamation.

The master's program is designed to meet the needs of students who hold full-time employment during the day. Courses will be offered during the evening (possibly weekends). Fellowship recipients must be full-time students during the fall and spring; attendance during the summer is optional.

This degree can be completed in 16 to 24 months (four semesters). The Department of Defense service obligation (if available and offered) for the master's program is 24 months for each school year the fellowship provides.

For more information on these programs, contact the Fort Benning Army Career and Alumni Program office at 545-7009 or 545-4913. The ACAP offices are located in Building 2617, Soldiers' Plaza.

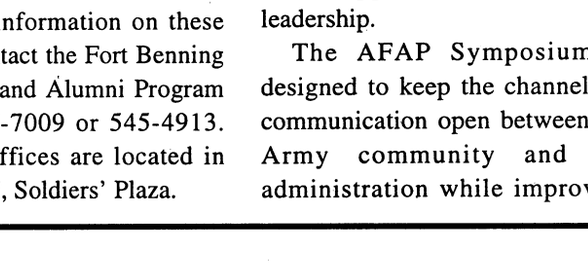
Airborne Festival to honor veterans

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Fort Benning's participation in the four-day 18th annual Airborne Awards Festival will feature a 10 a.m. memorial service April 27 at the Airborne Walk on Eubanks Field.

The 1st Battalion (Airborne), 507th Infantry, 11th Infantry Regiment, will host the service.

Guest speaker at the service will be retired Lt. Gen. Richard J. Seitz, who was a member of the 517th Parachute Infantry Regiment and deployed to Europe during World War II as a battalion commander. He later commanded the 82nd Airborne Division.



Members of the original test platoon of parachutists, formed at Fort Benning in 1940, will be on hand for a day of activities along with other distinguished guests and many airborne veterans from all wars. Fraternal members of the airborne community, both retired and active duty are invited.

While here, festival members will visit the Airborne School, attend the memorial service at the Airborne Walk, observe an 11:15 a.m. Airborne-in-Action demonstration, including a jump by Fort Benning's command exhibition parachute team, the Silver Wings, on Eubanks Field, and attend a 1:45 p.m. jump and 2:30 p.m. graduation of the Basic Airborne Course at Fryar Drop Zone.

The 18th Airborne Awards Festival at the Airport Sheraton Hotel in Atlanta April 26 through 28 highlights the Allied victory in World War II.

FAMILY CHILD CARE
NEEDS YOUR SUPPORT

Thanks to Campbell's® Labels for Education Program, our Post can obtain much needed playground equipment FREE OF CHARGE. However, we need your help in achieving this goal which will benefit all Fort Benning children.

The Program, sponsored by Campbell Soup Company, is actually quite simple: From now until March 1, 1996, Fort Benning will be collecting labels from over 1000 Campbell-made products.

Our goals is to collect 345,650 labels during this program. We are looking to obtain the playground set pictured below. We have been collecting since January, 1995 and at this point are only at about 2% of the way to our goal. We need a lot of support to be able to have our playground by next summer. The projected location to build the playground is Russ Pond.

We're asking everyone to help by saving the labels and proofs of purchase on Campbell products. Please join us in this worthwhile effort.

There are label drop-off points at all the Community of Life buildings as well as the Post Commissary. Thank you in advance for your support and cooperation.

AER

campaign needs more support to reach $175,000

By Jan Wesner Childs
Special to The Bayonet®

Contributions to the 1995 Army Emergency Relief campaign are lagging. Organizers hoped to raise $175,000 this year, but only about $44,200 had come in as of one week ago today.

"Presently the contributions are coming in slow," AER Officer Al Deane said Monday. "As of this past Friday, we were into the sixth week and we've only collected 25.9 percent of the established goal. Last year at this time, we had achieved 54.68 percent of our goal, which was $180,000."

Roughly $130,750 must be collected by May 15, the day the campaign ends, to meet this year's fund-raising goal.

"We are substantially lower than where we would like to be and it looks like it may be very difficult to make our goal of $175,000 this year," said AER Campaign Coordinator Capt. Darren Carter. "I think we can do it if there's enough emphasis put on it to inform soldiers."

AER provides financial assistance to soldiers in need. Loans or grants are available through AER to help pay for emergency leave, living e penses and other necessities. Besides the annual campaign, AER gets money from a central account that serves all posts.

Contributions can be made to AER through cash, check or monthly allotment. Both Deane and Carter theorized that collections are down because the unit project officers have other jobs to do besides solicit AER donations.

"Collecting contributions is just an added responsibility for them," Deane said. "But we need them to understand that in order for AER to help soldiers, we need them to help us reach our goal. We need the project officers and NCOs to aggressively promote contributions."

Deane said the campaign will not be officially extended, but contributions will be accepted until the end of May.

Anyone wishing to contribute to AER can contact their unit key person, or call Deane or Carter at 545-4043.

586th Boat Rodeo

Pfc. Jerry Stephens struggles across the pool holding a plastic M-16 rifle (affectionately known as a "rubber duckie") above the water during the "duckie dash," a relay race that members of the 586th Engineer Company participated in as part of the company's Boat Rodeo. The rodeo, a competitive training exercise conducted for esprit de corps, pitted sections of the company against each other in timed events like the relay, three-man boat races and assembling a six-float ribbon bridge.

Ranger School to cut 2nd phase

By Marc G. Turchin
Bayonet staff writer

One of the ranger training battalions will inactivate and the second phase of the U.S. Army Ranger School will end in the next couple of months.

The 7th RTB at Fort Bliss, Texas, which houses the desert phase of Ranger School, is scheduled for inactivation because travel expenses for students was rising, said Lt Col. Steven Guthrie, commander of 7th RTB.

He said having to fly the students to Fort Bliss and then back was getting too expensive. "We were supposed to (have the students) jump in on the way in and jump in on the way back," Guthrie said.

Problems arose when the battalion couldn't always get U.S. Air Force airplanes to fly to Fort Bliss.

Guthrie said the battalion was forced to budget at least another $500,000 each year to contract civilian airlines. He also said it was these costs that, in the end, caused the unit to inactivate.

"It wasn't the operational costs or the training being conducted," he said.

Each of the other phases, Guthrie said, will be expanded.

"This will provide more training and evaluation (for the students)," he said.

Although the other phases will be expanding in length, the course as a whole will be cut by seven days, according to Master Sgt. Michael A. Kelso, brigade operations sergeant for the Ranger Training Brigade.

The decision was made by Army Chief of Staff Gen. Gordon R. Sullivan in November.

Kelso also said this inactivation isn't meant to make Ranger School training easier.

The training done during the desert phase, which included the first of many platoon-type exercises dealing with raids and reconnaissance missions, will now have to be carried over during training in one of the other phases, Guthrie said. "It's a matter of changing the program of instruction," he said.

Two types of raid and reconnaissance missions are now taught during the desert phase — the point and area raid and the zone and area reconnaissance missions. Other exercises include platoon battle drills, dismounted infantry tactics in the desert and operating as a unit while in the desert. Guthrie said the phases at Fort Benning and Dahlonega, Ga., will pick up most of the slack once the desert phase is discontinued.

Once the battalion is entirely shut down, most of the cadre there will be reassigned to other ranger units. Approximately 54 percent of to kick off annual military week with May 15 breakfast

By Ruth J. Spaller
Bayonet staff writer

The Association of the United States Army will get an early start on Military Appreciation Week this year by sponsoring a kick-off breakfast at 7:30 a.m. May 15 at the Main NCO Club.

The breakfast will be the first in a week-long series of events and activities that will lead up to Armed Forces Day May 20.

Traditionally, AUSA and local businesses and community organizations join together during Military Appreciation Week to sponsor activities and events designed to enhance morale and share the spirit of cooperation enjoyed between Fort Benning and the local communities.

This year, AUSA will be providing the overall support for most of the sports competitions that will take place throughout the week.

Starting with the kick-off relay May 15, AUSA subchapters will sponsor events ranging from basketball and soccer tournaments to billiards and chess.

Local businesses will also be getting into the act, with Scooters hosting the beach volleyball tournament finals May 16, and Coach's Corner hosting a darts tournament each evening from 7 p.m.

Also, the Columbus RedStixx will host military night at Golden Park May 16.

May 18, AUSA will sponsor a job fair at the Main NCO Club from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. More than 300 businesses in the medical, environmental, trucking and communications fields have been invited.

Topping the week off will be the "Burn the General" Run at 9 a.m. May 20 and the Armed Forces Day picnic and open house.

Awards will be presented to the winners of all of the sporting competitions conducted throughout the week at 11 a.m. May 20.

Tickets are still available for the kick-off breakfast. They can be purchased from unit sergeants major for $5, or from Room 608, Infantry Hall.

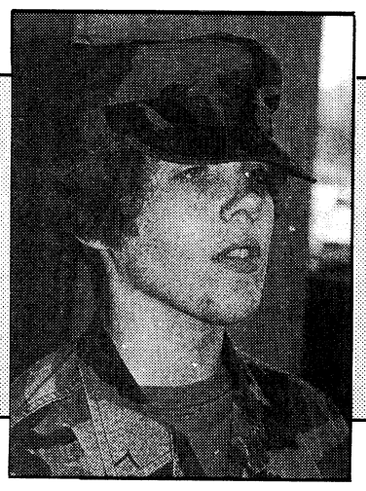
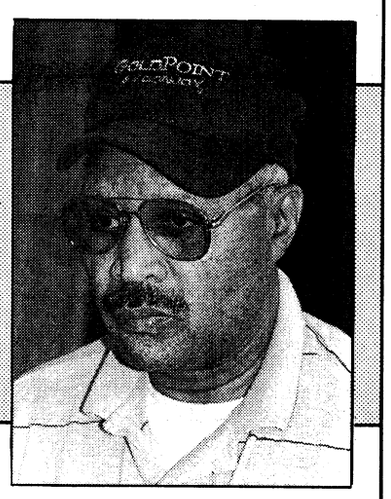
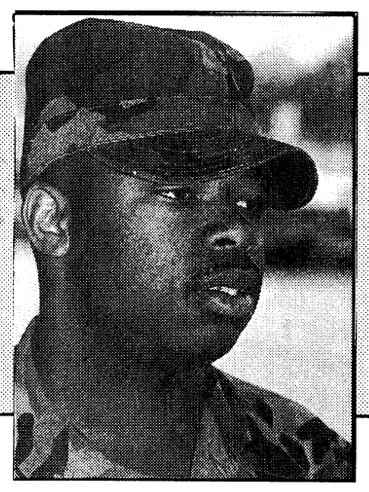
VARIOUS VOICES



What would you most like to do to save or protect the environment?



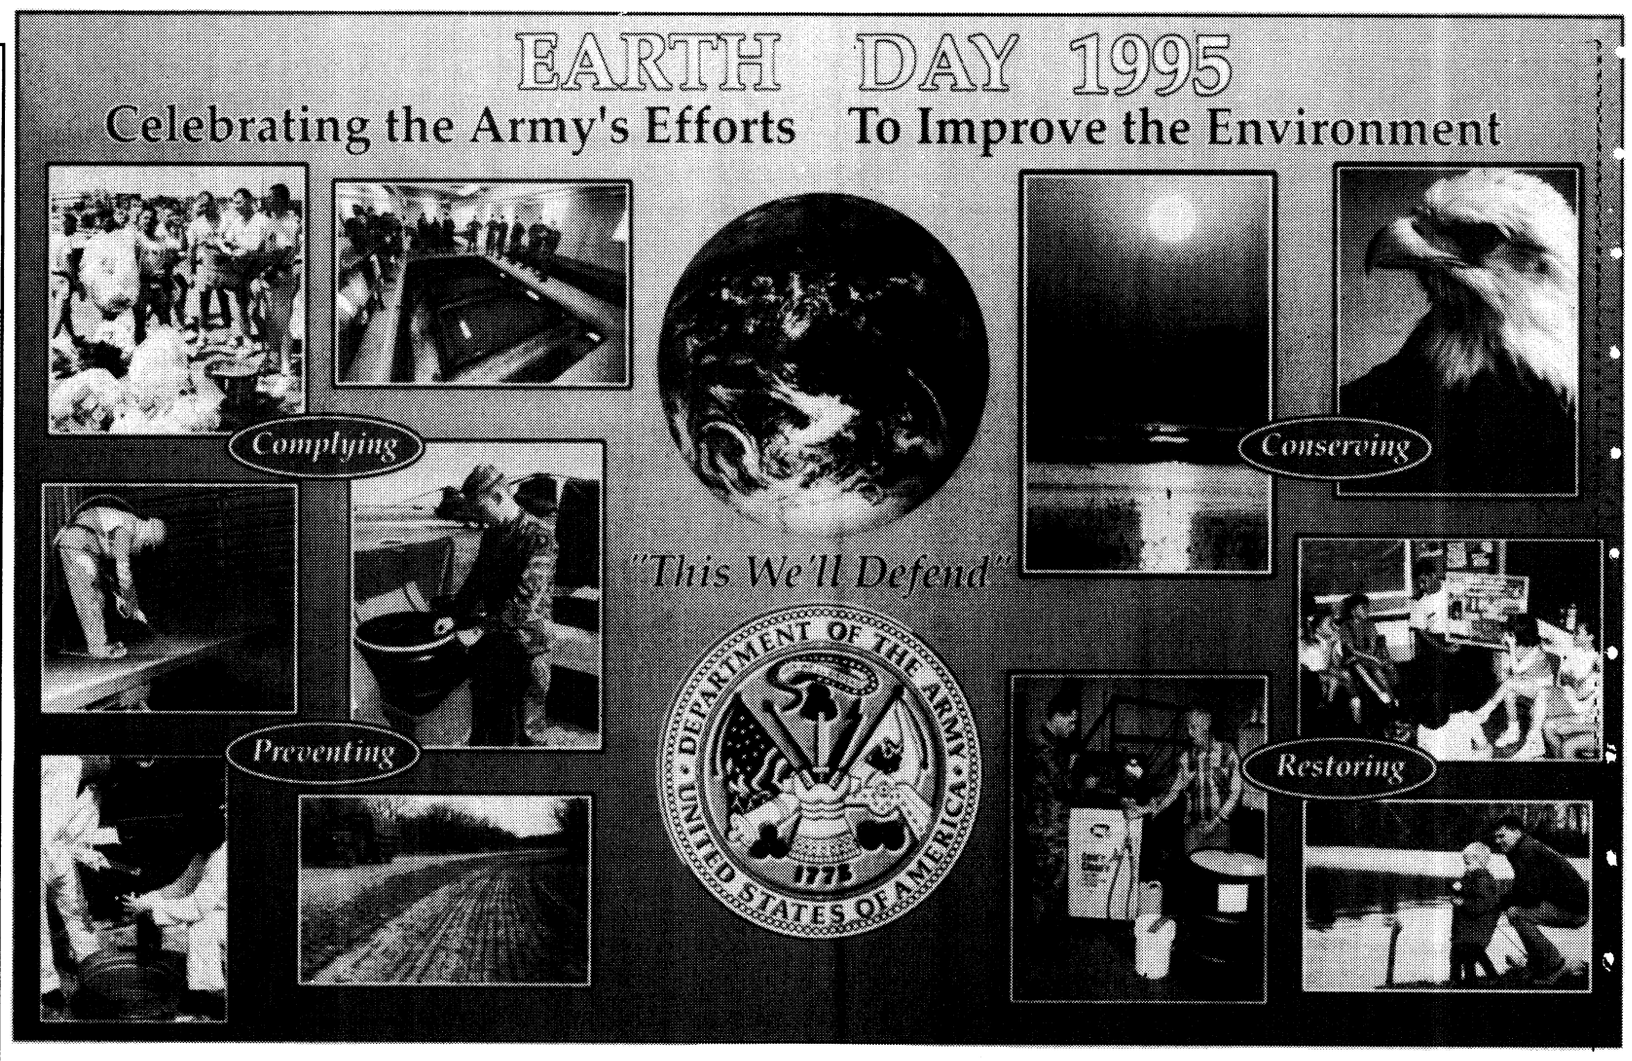
Staff Sgt. Horace Watts, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 4th Ranger Training Battalion — "The government uses a lot of unnecessary vehicles — each congressman doesn't need his own car to get from point A to point B. Let them share a ride."



Thomas E. McCullough, Navy retiree — "I would think, stop stripping the land of all the timber."

Pvt. 2 Renee Kowitz, 324th Forward Support Battalion — "Plant more trees."

Ralph Odom, retiree — "First of all, I'd stop people from throwing trash on the highways — it costs tax dollars, and it's just shameful."



Pvt. 2 Domingo Puckett, 324th Forward Support Battalion — "Everybody shouldn't drive their car on Sundays; use other forms of transportation."

Kellie Utzman, family member — "I'm a big greenhouse effect person, so anything that has to do with trees, basically."

Army greener as Earth Day turns 25

Leadership committed to environmental management

By Frank R. Finch
Army News Service

WASHINGTON — The 25th anniversary of Earth Day has a special significance to me as the director of Army environmental programs. And I know how different today's Army is from the one I joined 25 short years ago.

The Army today is better and greener in every respect.

In 1969, then-President Richard Nixon signed a landmark law called the National Environmental Protection Act. Although we didn't realize it then, NEPA ushered in the modern environmental movement. It prompted people in positions of responsibility to focus on the environment. And in 1970 Wisconsin Sen. Gaylord Nelson organized a grass-roots environmental movement — Earth Day — to raise America's environmental awareness.

We will once again celebrate Earth Day Saturday. The Army's accomplishments over the past 25 years are dramatic. We have modernized our Army, repeatedly deployed and fought around the world and through it all have been able to achieve real progress in protecting the environment.

We've done it by making major changes in processes, systems and training to comply with the law, clean up problems from the past, and conserve our natural and cultural resources. In the 25 years since the first Earth Day, we have fundamentally changed the way we do business, and the Army's leaders are fully committed to sound environmental management.

As the trustee for a widely varying environment on more than 24 million acres of land across the United States, the Army's environmental challenges are many. These lands are vital to our mission. We simply cannot maintain our combat readiness with maneuver areas too muddy to be trafficable, lands denuded of forest and ground cover, or areas that contain tainted water, asbestos, lead-based paint or other hazardous substances.

The Army has responded to these challenges aggressively over the past 25 years, and we can claim success stories too numerous to mention.

Armywide programs have achieved impressive results, but people can still do a lot as individuals. Recycling programs are thriving on many Army installations because people are actively taking part. Army community volunteers are pitching in to help local sports clubs, conservation groups and Scout troops by improving fish habitat, setting out nests for songbirds and waterfowl, planting trees and native grasses — the list goes on and on. It's not just something we focus on during Earth Day. All of us need to do what we can — every day and every year.

Where will the Army be 25 years from now? Most of us in th Army now won't be wearing a uniform by then, but our children might. I believe we've set this institution on the right path, and I'm confident tomorrow's soldiers will continue to protect and benefit from this nation's environmental heritage.

Hospital's ER staff's work impressive

Upon reading the latest issue of The Bayonet (April 14), I was inclined to respond with this letter.

On the night of April 13, my son became sick with symptoms of a severe headache and vomiting. We immediately took him to the Emergency Room (at Martin Army Community Hospital); he was screened and within 30 minutes upon arriving he was seen.

The nurse on duty (Brenda McGriff) was very compassionate and made me feel very comfortable that she would help make this visit less traumatic to a 13-year-old.

She had to perform several blood tests and the expertise she showed would make any parent want her to provide assistance. Throughout our entire visit in the ER, she showed much concern and care.

And for the doctor, Capt. Patrick Noone, his treatment was also worth commending. He took the time and paid attention to what my son had to say. He evaluated and analyzed his symptoms and to my complete satisfaction, he performed and ordered several tests to rule out possible diagnoses. He kept me and my husband informed on every test he was ordering and the reason he felt it necessary.

Needless to say, all tests came back fine, although he could not determine the reason for my son's sudden severe headache and vomiting, he told me what to watch for in the next few days. He also advised me to bring him back if other symptoms occurred.

So to the nurse who was so compassionate last night, and the doctor who helped ease two parents' minds, we want to commend you both.

If another trip has to be made to the hospital, I would not hesitate if the treatment received is as impressive as what was received April 13. All medical staff should take pointers from those two individuals.

Thank you MACH.

My mother, three sons and I went to the Easter Egg Hunt at Riverside this weekend. We all had a fantastic time.

I just wanted to say thank you to Maj. Gen. John Hendrix and his wife, Cheri, and all the volunteers who made this Easter weekend special for my family.

MACH Family Practice clinic checks out well

I felt the need to address Lynn Chandler's letter, "Doctors need to get it together or get out of practicing medicine" (April 14 issue of The Bayonet).

Blanket generalizations are very hard to to prove, extremely unfair and even harder to believe. She wrote, "Doctors are unsympathetic, condescending ..."

Our family has lived at Fort Benning and been going to the Martin Army Community Hospital Family Practice Clinic for a long time. We have three children under the age of 5 with visits to the clinic for check-ups, shots, usual infections and even stitches and a couple of bouts of pneumonia.

Chandler named two good and "caring" doctors. It was unfair to name those two "good" ones and blanket the rest as unprofessional as if she has seen every single doctor there.

Our doctor is Dr. Michael Latzka. He is very attentive, patient and has always rendered outstanding care with each visit and telephone call, and there have been a lot. The only other doctor we've seen at MACH clinic is Dr. Steve Reeseman. He was equally professional.

It is unfortunate that Chandler believed she needed to gripe in such a public forum. She probably had a bad experience, but her rash generalizations put a lot of professionals in a category they didn't belong in. Doctors do their extensive training and they provide us a wonderful service; we sometimes forget its value. They work endless hours, not getting to spend a lot of time with their own families much of the time.

There are more efficient channels to access for complaints or suggestions. People are very quick at times to complain about the medical services in the Army. Do they think the civilian sector is so miraculously perfect? "Grass is not always greener in the other pasture."

Ranger's wife 'leads the way'

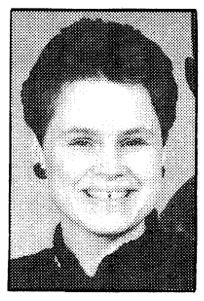
By Lisa M. Hibbert
Bayonet staff writer

When Sandy Harris, wife of the late 1st Sgt. Glenn Harris, entered the room at the headquarters of 3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment, April 14, she was immediately surrounded by well-wishers.

As she moved about, the soldiers and civilians who were present for the ceremony, vied for a chance just to talk with her. She was never alone.

Harris had come to be recognized for her work with Company B's family support group. She would receive the Commander's Award for Public Service.

Lt. Col. Francis H. Kearny III, commander of the 3rd Battalion and presenter of the award, spoke about Harris' contributions.



"(She) worked with the family support group for five years and she ran the support group for a year (December 1993 to December 1994)," he said.

The family support group is comprised of families and extended families of the rangers. Its mission is to provide continuous support to the soldiers, welcome families and support the families when soldiers deploy. The group also sponsors activities throughout the year such as briefings on how to obtain wills and a Christmas party for the soldiers who reside in the barracks.

Nancy Jackson, wife of the regimental commander, spoke highly of Harris.

"I'm pleased (that she received the award)," Jackson said. "She's always been real involved, especially when her husband was the first sergeant and especially when her husband was deployed to Somalia. She was a big help to me."

Harris said she ran the support group when the company commander's wife, who usually holds the position, was in school in Atlanta. As a leader, Harris said that she was "more of a facilitator." Information about jumps or activities open to the group would be passed to Harris from the battalion commander's wife.

"Sandy is a model Army wife," said Betty Sue Kearny, wife of the 3rd battalion commander. "She more than deserved (the award). Sandy was a leader in the Company B family support group and the battalion family support group. During Somalia, she was paramount in the healing of soldiers and wives by getting counselors to come in.

"Sandy is somebody who the wives come to for advice and guidance," Kearny continued. "She's always been there."

For all the praise that she received, Harris was modest in her acceptance speech.

"Everything that I did was all given back to me when Glenn died — not just from the wives, but from the rangers too," she said.

Harris' husband was killed in a parachute accident during a training exercise at Fort Benning Dec. 9.

Harris said that she had been prepared financially for her husband's death through his will but she never thought this would happen to her.

"I thought that my husband was invincible," she said.

Harris said she has always felt a real sense of closeness with the family support group members.

"When you receive the concern yourself (that you once gave to others) and realize that it's genuine, it's touching," Harris said. "I feel a sense of camaraderie with the group that most people can never fathom, and I am real proud of that.

"I feel different (than I did before Glenn's death)," she continued. "It's hard for me to be around the rangers, but I know they really care. (That) gives me a sense of security."

Originally from El Paso, Texas, Harris said she plans to remain in Columbus with her two girls.

"I like it here," she said. "This is the only place that the girls know as home; I'm not planning to go any place else."

Environmental jobs available

By Mary Allen
Army Career and Alumni Program

The Fort Benning Regional Army Career and Alumni Program office is sponsoring a skill development program to promote environmental training and employment for soldiers getting out of the service.

Careers in environmental sciences are growing, and one of the post's training partners has been Onsite Environmental Staffing. Because of an immediate need to fill openings all over the United States for environmental technicians, OnSite has reduced the cost of its hazardous materials course to $250 per soldier.

OnSite Environmental Staffing is recruiting and training soldiers in response to increased demand in the environmental industry.

"Military employees give us the edge in the marketplace," said Tom Thornton, Onsite's sales director. "Soldiers have proved to be hardworking and loyal, which leads to customer satisfaction.

"I often have clients call to specifically request military technicians," he continued. "In a market as competitive as ours, this speaks volumes about the capabilities of veterans. Because of this, I plan to employ as many soldiers as possible."

To prepare for work in the environmental industry, OnSite will teach a 40-hour course, which certifies entry-level personnel, equipment operators and professionals for work on hazardous waste projects.

The course begins Monday. Soldiers may be eligible for Job Training Partnership Act financial assistance to attend this course. Contact an ACAP counselor for information.

At the completion of the training, each graduate conditionally becomes a contract employee for OnSite. OnSite has openings in virtually every city in the United States, but huge demand exists in the Northwest, Texas, the Great Lakes area and the Eastern Seaboard.

Minimum pay offered by OnSite is $9 per hour for entry-level personnel. Equipment operators are in short supply and earn $12 to $14 per hour. Environmental professional, health and safety personnel and engineers earn much more.

Interested soldiers may contact OnSite recruiters Jim Gardner or Dave Wilmot at ACAP, Building 2617, 545-4892 or 545-4913 or call Rich Heller in Atlanta at (800) 807-0454.

RANGERS: Desert phase to end

the cadre will still be with the brigade, Guthrie said, while the remaining soldiers will probably end up with units such as the 75th Ranger Regiment.

"I know some are headed to Drill Sergeant School," he said.

The cadre are now teaching the last class that will undergo the desert phase. Class 7-95 will leave Fort Bliss April 28 and return to Fort Benning April 29 on their way to the mountain phase in Dahlonega. The class will graduate at Fort Benning June 2.

The initial study to have a desert phase for Ranger School was done in 1972 and was found to be too costly. By 1981, a test was done at Fort Bliss to see how it would work. In 1983 a one-week phase was introduced as part of the ranger course.

By 1985, the desert phase was extended to two weeks; then in 1989, it was designated 7th RTB.

Commanding General Maj. Gen. John W. Hendrix presents a Customer Service Award to James E. Brinson, director of Military Personnel and the post's Adjutant General.

CG lauds excellence at breakfast

By Richard Brill
Special to The Bayonet©

A hearty congratulations from Commanding General Maj. Gen. John W. Hendrix to post employees was heard at the quarterly Excellence Appreciation Day Breakfast and Quality Awards Ceremony Wednesday at the Officers' Club Supper Club.

Hendrix offered the words of praise to the post's work force for winning the Commander-in-Chief's award two years in a row.

"You are all important," Hendrix said. "What you do is important to Fort Benning and the Army. Thank you for being the Army's symbol of excellence individually and collectively. I'm proud of you."

Hendrix said Fort Benning's victory is a victory for excellence Armywide that other posts will seek to emulate.

"That is good. It's for the health of the Army and the betterment of soldiers everywhere," Hendrix said. "There is nothing better than being No. 1 and having other people trying to take it from us. It will cause us to have to change more dramatically to stay No. 1."

Hendrix also extended his congratulations for the post taking Best Military Personnel Services and Best Morale, Welfare and Recreation and Family Support Services in the 1994 Army Communities of Excellence Competition. Other awards are pending, he said.

In addition to the awarding of quality employee paperweights to 92 Fort Benning employees, the following special awards were presented:

- The U.S. Coast Guard Auxiliary Certificate of Appreciation: Uchee Creek Army Campground/Marina
- Environmental Quality Awards: Col. Robert L. Jordan Jr., commander, 29th Infantry Regiment; Chief Warrant Officer 2 Mark D. York, Aviation Division, Directorate of Operations and Training; James D. Harris, Services Division, Directorate of Community Activities
- Quarterly Customer Service Award: James E. Brinson, Director of Military Personnel and Adjutant General
- Quarterly Best Self Help/U-Do-It Award: Personnel Movements Section, Transportation Division, Directorate of Logistics

ACAP offers job training

Army Career and Alumni Program

For those leaving the Army within the next year, the Army Career and Alumni Program Transition Assistance Office has numerous job retraining opportunities available to soldiers, civilians and family members seeking new careers in the private sector.

Purpose: The ACAP skill Development Program is a job retraining, skill enhancement opportunity intended to provide training opportunities to soldiers, civilians and family members who transition from the Army. Since ACAP is a regional office, these opportunities are open to any departing personnel within its area of responsibility.

Who may participate: The Fort Benning Regional ACAP Office does not limit participation in the SDP. Training is open to soldiers, civilians and family members of either. Veterans of any service may use the program. However, in order to participate, veterans must agree to come to Fort Benning to register and to attend training. Almost all training is being conducted at Fort Benning or in Columbus.

Courses available: There is generally no limit to the courses available; however, several specific programs have been established for clients' consideration. ACAP's intent is to ensure that participants are encouraged to select courses that result in certification with excellent employment opportunities. Examples are law enforcement, commercial drivers licenses, electrician, welding, environmental technician, heavy equipment operations and computer repair. New courses are added every week

Job retraining under defense conversion act: Many of the courses available quality for tuition assistance under a special partnership program between the Georgia Department of Labor and ACAP. Funds provided by the U.S. Department of Labor are allocated to numerous training courses. Soldiers who are eligible may have their courses paid for without affecting their VA education benefits or personal resources. Eligibility depends upon the circumstances under which a soldier is leaving the Army. Generally, if it can be shown that a soldier is leaving as a result of downsizing, he or she will likely be eligible. However, final eligibility is determined by the State of Georgia and is on a first come, first served basis.

Methods of payment for courses: ACAP does not bill or collect for courses. It does, however, attempt to ensure the best price for these courses. Paying for courses is the responsibility of the client. The forms of payment include:

- Grants available through the Job Retraining Program
- Cash paid from individuals' resources.
- VA educational benefits.
- Scholarships, fellowships or grants available from the training institution.

Many of the courses available are approved for use of VA educational benefits and the list grows steadily week by week. Check with the respective training institution or activity prior to enrollment.

Job opportunities and job placement: Many of the training activities provide job leads, fairs and opportunities for their graduates. Several actually assist with job placement. Even so, it is important for a client to remember that it is to their advantage to seek the best possible job to fit their desires. Consequently, one should never depend upon one activity to determine your future.

How to obtain information: Because of the hundreds of personnel interested in the program, ACAP is unable to discuss the program by telephone. Information packages and questionnaires will be sent to regional customers who leave their name, address and telephone numbers. Locally, clients can come by the ACAP TAO, Building 2617, DSN: 835-7009 or 545-4892 to get their packages.

TAQ users meet, discuss successes

By Lisa M. Hibbert
Bayonet staff writer

Col. Robert L. Jordan Jr., 29th Infantry Regimental commander, was the guest speaker at the total Army quality user's group meeting Monday.

Jordan spoke to the group about how TAQ is working at the 29th Regiment.

Jordan emphasized including the enlisted and lower grade civilians in the problem-solving process.

"(Present the lower enlisted with problems) and challenge them to come up with good ideas to fix them," Jordan said.

After getting ideas, Jordan said "you have to walk the talk." When leadership fails to provide responsive timely feedback, problem solving goes out the window.

Jordan went on to stress relating customer service to the military. "Who is our customer and what is your obligation to ... them..?"

Finally being able to adapt and make changes is an important step of TAQ.

In closing, Jordon said "It works if you keep a positive attitude, use participation, give feedback and become a part of a team."

Jordan said that he is another believer that "TAQ works."

DOC proves 'it can be done'

Directorate of Contracting

In support of the recent Training and Doctrine Command's Assistant Commandant's Conference at Fort Benning March 27 to 29, the Directorate of Contracting implemented a new kind of acquisition program.

Director of Contracting John Machovec has dubbed it "Customer Service Action" contracting.

A major upgrade of the audio visual facilities was needed for Classroom 6 in Infantry Hall. The estimated cost of the project was $100,000. Such an action would normally take from 90 to 120 days, according to Machovec.

"At first, I didn't feel that we could do it and was prepared to tell Director of Operations and Training Col. Michael McKean that," Machovec said. "Then I remembered something I was taught at an executive contracting course in January. The Navy called it Alpha Contracting. It was a greatly accelerated and concentrated process whereby critical actions could be completed to meet extremely critical dates."

Machovec said the process requires total acquisition team involvement, including the prospective contractors. Everything happens at the same time, he said. The team prepares the statement of work, discusses the solicitation, provides feedback, negotiations are conducted and the award made with all members involved, he said.

The process started Feb. 15 with the first team meeting. The award was made March 8 and the work completed March 24.

The team consisted of Bruce Piper, Charlene Cowman, George Carbonic and Marie Clark from DOC. Marie Bruner and Ralph Corrizzo represented DOT.

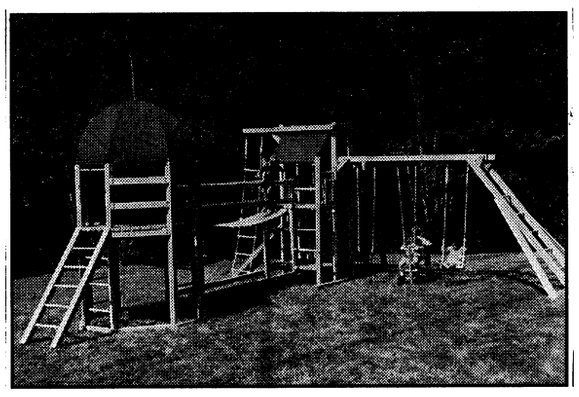
The Combined Arms and Tactics Directorate was represented by Lt. Col. Donald C. Bell, Capt. Kenneth C. Garrett and Maj. Joseph A. Lee Jr. Charles Platt was there from the Directorate of Logistics. The contractor was Media Visions and represented by Mike Cruce, Jeff Smitherson and Butch Huston. Their subcontractor was Sunshine Electric Company, which was headed by Dan Sargent and Jeff Calma.

"There were a few "hiccups," Machovec said, "but it was a real lesson for all of us in what could be done if everyone was truly committed to success."

The project was completed on schedule and within budget. Machovec said both Brig. Gen. John Maher and McKean told him they were extremely happy with the results.

"We hope this is a model for us to follow, but this was definitely not the norm," Machovec said. "This process can succeed, but it must only be used in extreme urgencies. But, we proved that it could be done."

Seven small ways to stop one big problem.



The next time everyday pressures build up to the point where you feel like lashing out — STOP! Here's what to do instead:

1. Take a deep breath. And another. Then remember you are the adult.
2. Close your eyes and imagine you're hearing what your child is about to hear.
3. Press your lips together and count to 10. Or, better yet, to 20.
4. Put your child in a time out chair. (Remember the rule: one time-out minute for each year of age.)
5. Call a friend.
6. If someone can watch the children, go outside and take a walk.
7. Write for parenting information:

FAMILY CHILD CARE NEEDS YOUR SUPPORT

Thanks to Campbell's® Labels for Education Program, our Post can obtain much needed playground equipment FREE OF CHARGE. However, we need your help in achieving this goal which will benefit all Fort Benning children.

The Program, sponsored by Campbell Soup Company, is actually quite simple: From now until March 1, 1996, Fort Benning will be collecting labels from over 1000 Campbell-made products.

Our goals is to collect 345,650 labels during this program. We are looking to obtain the playground set pictured below. We have been collecting since January, 1995 and at this point are only at about 2% of the way to our goal. We need a lot of support to be able to have our playground by next summer. The projected location to build the playground is Russ Pond.

We're asking everyone to help by saving the labels and proofs of purchase on Campbell products. Please join us in this worthwhile effort.

There are label drop-off points at all the Community of Life buildings as well as the Post Commissary. Thank you in advance for your support and cooperation.

TRADOC official sees many success stories

Army News Service

WASHINGTON — "You can lose sight of the fact that we are doing a much better job of protecting our environment than in the past, because we tend to focus on the problems, not the successes," said Phil Prisco, chief of the Environmental Division at U.S. Army Training and Doctrine Command.

In six years on the job, Prisco has faced many environmental challenges, but it's the success stories that keep him and the TRADOC environmental team energized.

The new Center for Environmental Initiatives and Hands-on Training at Fort Sill, Okla., is one initiative that comes to Prisco's mind. It is the only Defense Department center for training "blue collar" workers who come in day-to-day contact with hazardous materials. Design of a new $3 million school for the CEIHOT is complete, and ground will be broken this year.

Fort Knox, Ky., is also at the forefront of environmental success stories with its recycling center geared toward composting. Army installations must cut solid waste production by half over the next few years, and Prisco believes the only way to achieve that reduction is through initiatives like the one at Fort Knox.

"Better than 60 percent of an installation's solid waste is suitable for recycling and composting," Prisco said, "so we're hoping this initiative will migrate throughout the rest of the Army."

No discussion of Army environmental success stories could be complete, Prisco said, without mention of the tremendous progress made at Fort Benning, Ga., in managing the red cockaded woodpecker so that neither Army training nor the bird's habitat are adversely affected.

No discussion of Army environmental success stories could be complete without mention of the tremendous progress made at Fort Benning, Ga., in managing the red cockaded woodpecker so that neither Army training nor the bird's habitat are adversely affected.

— Phil Prisco
chief, Environmental Division,
Training and Doctrine Command

Convinced that the key to long-term environmental protection is in training and education, Prisco is especially impressed by the environmental success story at Fort Gordon, Ga. A pilot program in installation community planning is in effect there — a program that includes aggressive education about the environment.

Everyone who lives and works on the installation has the opportunity to comment on what they believe the community environmental standards should be.

"It's very heartening to see the interest in protecting the environment, and in raising children to be good environmental stewards," said Prisco.

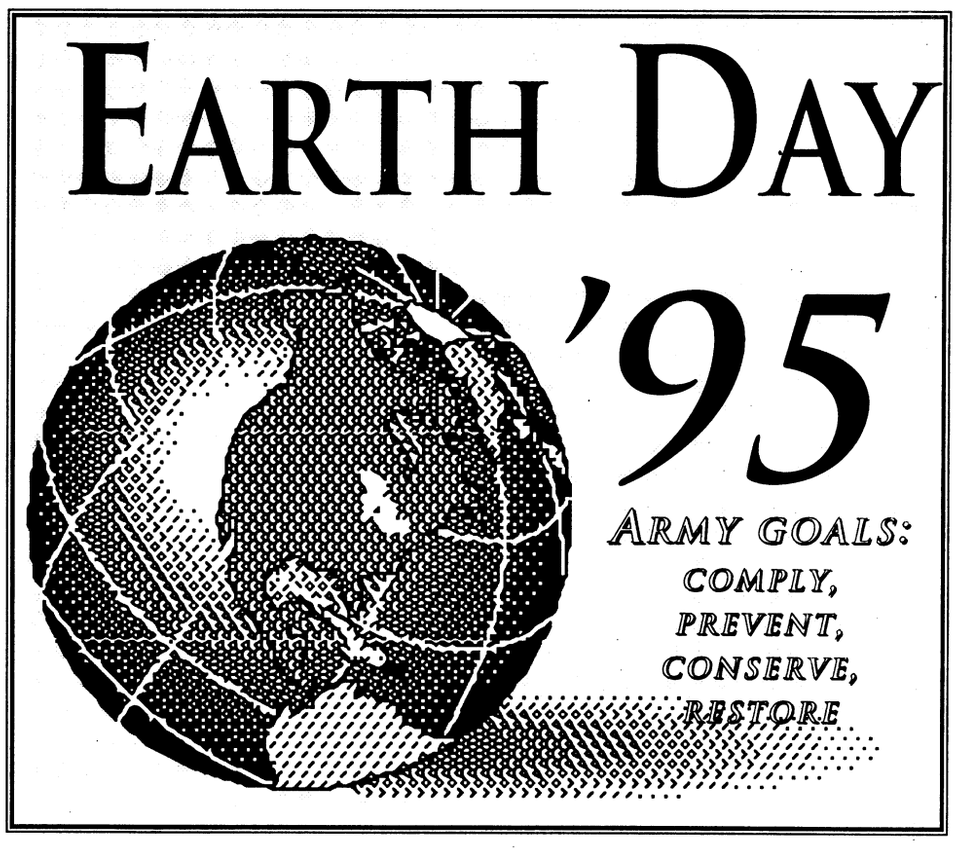
"The Army has some of the best environmental training in the world," he added, "and our challenge now is to get some level of environmental training into every military occupational specialty and every grade structure in the Army." TRADOC's deputy chief of staff for base operations support coordinates the Army's environmental training. Specific responsibilities are spread throughout the Army. Environmental management training is handled by the Army Logistics Management College at Fort Lee, Va., and the Corps of Engineers' Huntsville Division at Huntsville, Ala.; Fort Sill is the Defense Department's "hands-on" environmental training center and the U.S. Army Engineer School at Fort Leonard Wood, Mo., is the executive agent for troop environmental training.

According to Prisco, the Sergeants Major Academy is also very active in environmental training for soldiers.

The TRADOC environmental staff is working to maintain the momentum of success by providing the advice and assistance its installations need. TRADOC provided resources in fiscal 1994 for 52 new environmental positions within units under its command.

"We provided the resources, and installations are hiring people with the specific environmental skills they need," Prisco said.

Although none of the 52 new positions are within TRADOC's headquarters at Fort Monroe, Va., the organizational structure there has also changed. The Environmental Division recently reorganized and merged with the Safety Directorate to enable these organizations to take a joint approach to TRADOC's environmental challenges. They are now part of the Directorate of Safety, Environment, Fire and Ammunition Security.



To illustrate how installations will benefit from the reorganization, Prisco cited the approach to asbestos management because it is one area where safety and environmental missions overlap.

"In the past, our approach might have focused solely on the medium, the asbestos, and not the significant requirements for personal safety," Prisco explained. "Our new directorate will issue policies and doctrine that capture the complete picture."

Despite the increased staffing and reorganization, manpower is still one of the biggest environmental management challenges facing TRADOC, Prisco said.

"We've grown a lot in the last 10 years, and it's getting better, but it's not enough." So for the near future, Prisco's focus will be on the manpower challenge. He hopes to provide more and better support to the professionals who make up TRADOC's environmental team.

"We need to strengthen the environmental career management field, and show people they can progress through the system," he said. "These are the people who are going to maintain the successful momentum for our environmental program."

'96 DoD budget contains $5 billion for environment

By Donna Miles
American Forces Information Service

When the fiscal 1996 Department of Defense budget request hit the streets in early February, the $5.047 billion allocated for environmental concerns raised some eyebrows.

With ever-tightening dollars, some critics question whether the DoD budget should include items that have no effect on the nation's defense.

Patrick J. Meehan Jr. has heard the argument before, but as director of program integration for DoD's environmental security office, he insists DoD's environmental stewardship is more than just "the right thing to do."

"It's a cost of doing business," Meehan said, pointing to "compliance," the single highest line item in the environmental budget request. Like every other U.S. business or agency, DoD is legally required to comply with a variety of environmental laws, including the Clean Air, Clean Water and Resource Recovery and Conservation acts.

It's an endeavor expected to cost DoD $2.2 billion in fiscal 1996, but Meehan said there's no out. Private businesses that don't comply with environmental laws get shut down, and the same goes for the military.

Meehan gave some examples. If a Fort Bragg, N.C., commander floods his landing zones to reduce jump injuries but ignores Clean Water Act requirements that he control runoff, he too is out of business.

Likewise, an aircraft repair facility at Nellis Air Force Base, Nev., that doesn't control emissions to keep them in line with the Clean Air Act is out of business. And a ship's crew at the Norfolk (Va.) Naval Station that doesn't comply with federal guidelines regulating the storage and disposal of solvents is out of business.

In every case readiness suffers. And military readiness, Meehan stressed, is the No. 1 consideration behind DoD's environmental budget request.

But closely behind it, he continued, is DoD's responsibility to clean up areas harmed by past military operations, to protect those in military hands today and to plan for a future, more environmentally friendly military.

With ever-tightening dollars, some critics question whether the DoD budget should include items that have no effect on the nation's defense

Nearly $2 billion of the proposed fiscal 1996 budget will go toward cleaning up environmental mistakes of the past. Among the hundreds of installations faced with environmental cleanup projects is McClellan Air Force Base in Sacramento, Calif.

DoD officials noted that since 1950, when it became a major jet fighter maintenance facility, McClellan was engaged in a wide variety of operations that involved toxic and hazardous materials — industrial solvents, caustic cleaners, heavy metal waste from electroplating, contaminated oils, jet fuels and low-level radioactive wastes among them.

McClellan and other bases disposed of these wastes by the commonly accepted practices of the times — they dumped, buried or burned them. Drums of waste were dumped into lagoons. Storage basins, when they were built at all, were often unlined, allowing toxins to leach downstream or into the groundwater.

The day of reckoning is here — not only at McClellan, but at military facilities nationwide. It's especially critical at installations scheduled to close as a result of Base Closure and Realignment Commission decisions. Facilities are required to clean up their land before turning it over for public use — that means everything from cleaning up groundwater contaminated by diesel fuel to clearing impact areas of unexploded ordnance.

Existing methods to conduct many of these cleanup operations are slow and costly, Meehan said. That's why for fiscal 1996 DoD has requested $229 million for technology to explore, among other things, faster, less expensive cleanup methods.

Meehan described other research and development programs these dollars will help fund, such as fire suppression systems that don't rely on ozone-destroying halon gases, lasers that blast hazardous waste from inside missile silos, and maintenance procedures that dramatically reduce excess solvents and fuels.

While working to speed up the process of restoring the environment, DoD will continue efforts to control pollution at its source. The proposed fiscal 1996 budget includes $356 million for pollution prevention. It will fund installation recycling programs and modernization programs aimed at more environmentally friendly weapon systems.

While cleaning up past mistakes and working toward a "greener" future, DoD continues to focus on its environmental responsibilities today. The fiscal 1996 budget request includes $148 million for conservation to protect valuable resources on more than 25 million acres of land controlled by DoD.

In addition to supporting training, testing and maneuver operations, this land supports important natural, cultural and historical resources. More than 300 threatened and endangered species live on more than 200 installations, and hundreds of military installations are listed on the National Historic Register. In addition, DoD has the largest federal archaeological collection in the world, including ancient Native American cave paintings and burial sites and the old scout houses used by U.S. Army Indian scouts. Protecting these legacies in addition to carrying out other DoD environmental initiatives, Meehan summarized, is the right thing to do.

"It's important to the health, safety and well-being of the people who live and work on our installations, as well as the larger communities that surround those bases," he said. "But just as importantly, it's important to military readiness. It ensures that our servic members have continued access t the air, land and water they rely on to carry out their defense mission."

HOW TO RECYCLE

Post housing residents may place recyclable materials in brown plastic bins for weekly curbside pickup.

Here is a list of the items that can and cannot be placed in the bin for recycling.

• Glass: Only the following can be recycled: soft drink, beer, juice, ketchup, wine, liquor and food containers. All caps and lids are to be removed and containers are to be rinsed out. Special care should be taken to avoid breaking glass when placing it in the recycling bin. Glass will be separated by color at the curb for processing at the Materials Recovery facility.

• Cans: Only aluminum and steel cans are accepted at this time. Cans must be rinsed out. Labels may remain on the cans.

• Plastic: All plastic materials containing the Recycling Triangle (Three Chasing Arrows) may be recycled. This includes soft drink bottles and milk jugs. Caps must be removed and may be placed in the recycling bin. All containers must be rinsed out.

• Paper: All paper products except used personal type materials may be recycled. These items should be placed in brown paper bags or bundled together and tied then placed beside the recycling bin.

NOTE: incidents whereby used personal items are placed for recycling is cause for rejection.

• Cardboard: Pick-up of cardboard from moving will be coordinated directly with the Materials Recovery Facility, at 544-6142. Ask for the manager or leave a message containing your address, housing area, name and phone number.

• Inert Waste: Tree limbs, grass clippings and leaves will be picked up on

Trash and recycle pickup schedule

Household trash and recycling will be collected once a week on the same day. If there is recyclable material mixed in with the trash can it will not be picked up until the following week, or until recyclables are separated.

Mission: train to defend; defend the endangered

By Karen S. Morarie
Bayonet staff writer

Imagine you could only live in a one-story house that's between 20 and 50 years old, built of Vermont granite and with all windows facing north. If the house is 51 years old or made of brick, you can't live there, and if you can't find one that meets your specs, you die.

That's essentially the situation facing many endangered species. Humans can live in a wide range of settings, but some species of plants and animals require surprisingly specific surroundings. Those least able to adapt can face decline or extinction when development, disturbances or natural disasters affect their homesites.

Several species on Fort Benning are endangered or threatened because of the disappearance of the ecosystems they're adapted to inhabit. The red cockaded woodpecker and the mature pine forest are linked, as are gopher tortoises and sand hills, and relict trillium (a plant) and hardwood stands with leaf litter and moisture.

All of these specialized ecosystems are contained in Fort Benning's borders, and so are their accompanying species. Biologists at the Directorate of Public Works' Natural Resources Branch are tasked with monitoring these species, along with the post's lone nesting pair of bald eagles. They coordinate with Range Control and unit commanders to balance training requirements with the need to provide the necessary conditions for each species' survival.

Although the endangered species on post — particularly the red cockaded woodpecker — have received a lot of attention in the last several years, their impact on Fort Benning's training mission is minimized whenever possible, according to biologists.

According to Pete Swiderek, supervisory fish and wildlife specialist with Natural Resources, there are 110,000 maneuver training acres on post, 58,000 impact acres, which may contain unexploded ordnance. Approximately 3,700 acres of the maneuver training area carry some training restrictions because of the presence of bald eagles, gopher tortoises or red cockaded woodpeckers.

"Basically, there's no fixed training in most of these areas," Tom Brooks, red cockaded woodpecker coordinator, said. "(Soldiers) can travel through on foot, and with vehicles on existing roads, and they can shoot blanks, up to 5.56mm."

Brooks said while one facet of Natural Resource's mission is to interfere as little as possible with training, another facet involves aggressively pursuing new methods of ensuring species survive and, if possible, increase.

Efforts to protect Fort Benning's endangered species include:

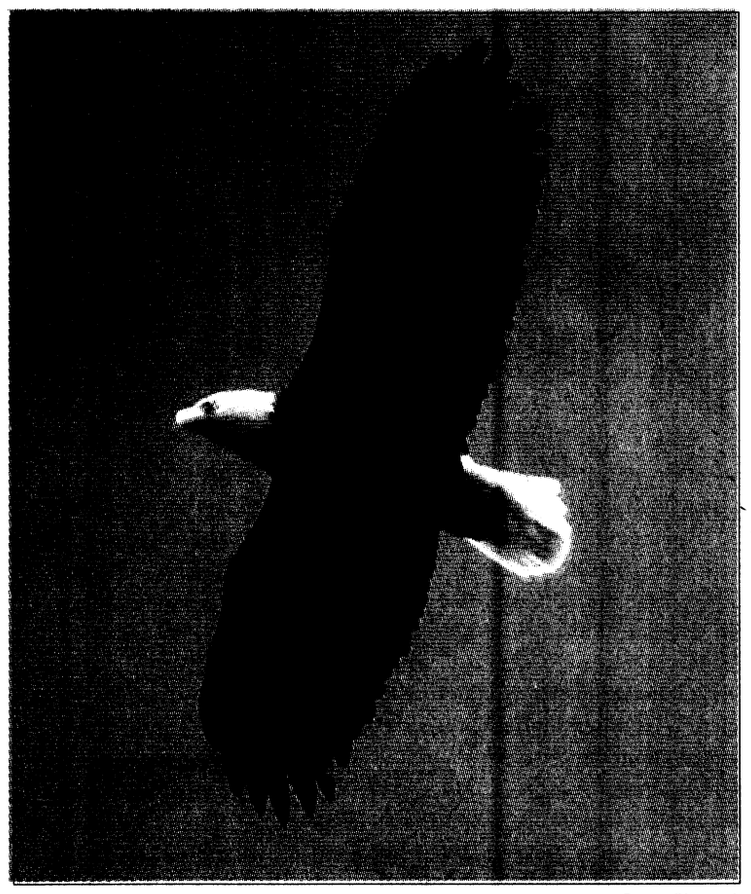
- The U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service is conducting a three-year survey to inventory populations of endangered species and their nest, burrow or growing sites.
- The Nature Conservancy of Georgia, a branch of a national nonprofit organization, is also installing artificial cavities for red cockaded woodpeckers. The cavities are constructed inside blocks of wood, which are then inserted into prepared holes in mature longleaf, shortleaf and loblolly pines, the only trees on post the birds will live in. Plans call for installing a total of 240 boxes, with 140 already complete.

"It normally takes the birds one to two years to complete a cavity," Brooks said, "so we're hoping the artificial cavities will lead to a population increase."

- Areas containing gopher tortoise burrows are posted with "sensitive area" signs or marked with PVC pipe to protect from digging and vehicles. Burrows, which are typically constructed in sand hills and are up to 30 feet long, may house up to 39 invertebrate and 42 vertebrate species during and after their occupation by the tortoises.
- Controlled burning prevents overgrowth of underbrush. Red cockaded woodpeckers and gopher tortoises both require fairly open habitats, Brooks said. Burning also encourages growth of longleaf pine, which historically has been replaced by the faster-growing loblolly pine.
- Natural Resources Branch is coordinating with Range Control and Lawson Army Airfield flight operations to protect the post's one bald eagle nesting site.

"It's totally off-limits within a 1,500-foot radius of the nest during the six months of nesting," Swiderek said. "Flight operations voluntarily shifted the flight path that went over it one kilometer to the west for that six-month period."

Swiderek said the eagle hatching is expected to occur some time in May.



Charles Ford, Natural Resources Branch chief, said the post's commitment to environmental issues is well established. According to the Directorate of Public Works, in this era of budget cuts,

MARATHONERS

Female team prepares for upcoming race

By Terry K. Ray
Special to The Bayonet©

The Fort Benning female marathon relay team pared its nine-member squad down to six (plus one alternate) for the upcoming 1995 Army Marathon in San Antonio, Texas, April 30.

At the North Creek 5K run for organ and tissue donation Saturday in Atlanta, four members competed for the final two slots on the team for the trip to San Antonio. The seven best times from selected races were used to determine the team .

The team will consist of:

• Capt. Millie Daniels, (coach) a communications officer with the 36th Engineer Group

• Capt. Carol Anderson (assistant coach) commander of the 586th Engineer Company, 36th Engineer Group

• Sgt. Sonia Lewis of Company B, 1st Battalion (Airborne), 507th Infantry, 11th Infantry Regiment

• Officer Candidate Joni Moore, 3rd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment

• Officer Candidate Corinna Robinson, 3rd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment

• Sgt. Katrina Boston of Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment.

Spc. Louise Porter of the 498th Medical Company (Air Ambulance), will be the alternate runner if necessary.

According to Daniels, the team has been training every day for several months for the upcoming event and are now on the down slide of training so as not to drain their energy and to give them more time to work on raising funds for the race.

"We sent a team to the Army 10-Miler in Washington, D.C., last year at the expense of the 36th Eng. Grp., " Daniels said. "For this race, we will be footing the bill. On April 22, we will be holding a car wash at the Bonanza parking lot at exit 5B from 9 a.m to 3 p.m. to help defray the cost."

This is the first time a female team from Fort Benning will be participating in the Army Marathon and Daniels says it's all thanks to the support of their commander, Col. Dean A. Kershaw of the 36th Eng. Grp., and to 11th Infantry Regiment Commander Col. Walt Wojdakowski, who has permitted three of his soldiers, two of whom are in Officer Candidate School, to train for the race.

"If it weren't for the support we are getting from these people, we would not have a team," Daniels said.

B-BALL CHAMPIONS

63rd CSE team proves itself "Untouchable"

By Terry K. Ray
Special to The Bayonet©

The Untouchables from the 63rd Combat Support Equipment won their first championship April 12 with a 73-62 win over Hit Squad of the 598th Maintenance Company before a packed house of jubilant fans at Briant Wells Field House.

Michael Jackson scored a game high 29 points; 22 in the second half to power the Untouchables to the win.

"In the first half, they (Hit Squad) had a very aggressive defense on me," Jackson said. "The other guys helped out a lot — that kept us in the ball game. In the second half, they went to a man-to-man defense which freed me up for the open shot."

With the Hit Squad leading at the half 32-29, the Untouchables went on a 12-4 run to open the second half to take a 41-35 lead.

Two free throws by Jackson gave the Untouchables an eight-point lead at 46-38 with eight minutes to play.

The Hit Squad took aim and made a charge cutting into the Untouchable lead 46-42 on baskets by Jomo Daniels (11 points) and Ronald James (11 points).

At the seven-minute mark and the score at 50-44, Jackson banged in a three - pointer to boost the Untouchable lead to 53-44.

Hit Squad center Willie Tucker (team high 17 points) scored on an inside move to cut the Untouchable lead down to 50-46 at the six-minute mark.

The Untouchables pushed the lead to double digits at 60-46 on a 10-0 run in a two and a half minute stretch with Jackson hitting a deuce and another three pointer before James hit a basket to stem the tide at 60-48 with less than five minutes to play.

The Hit Squad rallied again going on a 6-0 run, cutting the Untouchable advantage to 60-54 on a three pointer from Bobby Matthews (10 points), a layup by Timothy Hill (eight points) and a free throw from William Knight (three points).

A baseline jumper by Jackson increased the lead to 64-55. With 1:48 left to play, things got interesting.

An intentional foul call against the Hit Squad put Jackson on the line for two free throws, which he promptly made for a 66-55 advantage.

Moments later, Daniels drained a three pointer at the 1:10 mark to cut the lead down to 66-58. Two free throws by Karl Lyles of the Untouchables pushed the lead up to 68-58.

Daniels canned another three-pointer with 49 seconds left, trimming the Untouchable lead to 68-61. Jackson hit two free throws for a 70-61 lead with 38 seconds to go for the Untouchables.

With 15 seconds left in the game, Jerel Jessie (17 points) hit one of two free throws for a 10-point lead at 71-61.

Lyles put the finishing touches on the win with the Untouchables' final points at 73-61. Tucker hit a free throw with one second left on the clock for the final score of 73-62.

"I looked at the game as if it were a chess match," Untouchable coach Roy Burrell said. " I was concerned with their big man (Tucker). He played very well in the semi finals. When I put our big man 6-foot-5-inch center Jeffery Bochonok on him in the second half, he was able to limit Tucker to two baskets. Once we took that part of their game away, they were disoriented.

When they put Tucker on the bench because of foul trouble, it fit right into our hands because he was the only person we were concerned about. We matched up well with their other players."

For Larry Braye, the head coach for the Hit Squad, it was a disheartening loss.

"We basically got our heads out of the game on a couple of controversial calls," said Braye.

"We were fortunate to overcome those calls, but we ended up getting into foul trouble and didn't stick to our game plan. It was a good game. Their defense late in the game was probably the best they played all season."

In the consolation game, the Bushmasters of Battery B, 4th Battalion, 41st Field Artillery Regiment, 3rd Brigade, 24th Infantry Division, downed the Get Some crew of Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment, 72-68.

To land a third-place finish, the Bushmasters got double-digit scoring from Charles Benning (27 points), Baron Ransome (17 points) and Samuel Chance (14 points).

Delione Meadows paced the Get Some crew with 22 points, while teammates Theonis Brown had 17 and Phillip Grayer had 14 .

Wrestling team takes armed forces crown

By Terry K. Ray
Special to The Bayonet©

For the sixth year in a row the All-Army wrestling team has won the armed forces wrestling crown.

The Army sent its top wrestlers to the mile-high atmosphere of the Olympic Training Center at Colorado Springs, Colo., April 13 through 15, which was hosted by the U.S. Air Force.

The Army started its quest for the sixth title with the freestyle competition and placed all 10 wrestlers in either a first-, second- or third-place finish giving the Army a team total of 37 points. The Marine Corps took second with 33. The Navy finished in third, garnering 27 points, and the Air Force brought up the rear with 12 points.

In the Greco-Roman competition, the Army won six of the 10 weight divisions for a point total of 39 points. The Marine Corps had 28 points for second, the Navy finished third with 25 and the Air Force flying slow and low topped out in fourth with 16 points.

In all, the Army team won 10 weight classes out of a possible 20. It also placed second in six weight classes and third in three weight divisions.

Each weigh-class winner is now qualified to compete at the Counseil Internationale du Sport Militaire in Rome, Italy, Sept. 14 through 16.

Waldroup, who has been wrestling for the Army since 1986, won his 15th and 16th armed forces titles, tying him with former Army wrestler and coach Floyd Winters. Waldroup is only four wins away from tying the armed forces record of 20, which is held by David Butler of the Navy.

"One of the goals I set out to accomplish when I started wrestling was to get the all-time record," Waldrop said. "That's the only reason why I wrestled freestyle this year was to get closer to the record. I'm still going to have to wrestle a couple of more years and win to get it; I just don't know if I can hold out that long."

"I told our guys after the championships that I thought this was the best armed forces competition that we have ever had," Waldroup said.

"Not because we had guys with better technique, but guys who had a lot of heart and went out and fought. That's what got us over, just that team bonding. To me, it's the best performance by far that I've seen in the 10 years I've been with the team."

Glock pistol match to fire up April 29, 30

Columbus Convention & Visitors Bureau

The Old South Regional Classic III pistol match sponsored by the Glock Sport Shooting Foundation is scheduled for April 29 and 30. This match will be hosted by the Fort Benning Rifle And Pistol Club and GSSF.

The match is open to civilians, law enforcement and military personnel with separate prize and award schedules for each. Civilians, law enforcement officers and military personnel may choose to shoot on either day.

The match hours will be 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. Saturday and 9 a.m. to 3 p.m. Sunday. Preregistrations postmarked by today are $25 or S35. If paid the day of the match, military preregistration is $20 or $30 at the door.

In order to compete, you must be a GSSF member, with memberships available at the match for $15. All firearms must be stock Glock pistols, however, there is an unlimited class for modified Glock pistols for professional shooters.

More than $10,000 in prizes, cash and Glock pistols, will be available for civilian, law enforcement and military matches.

Prize winners will be determined by the Lewis system, based upon the final scores after the match has been completed.

The top score is the high over all match and (A) class winner. This system allows the (B) and (C) class shooters an equal chance to win prizes. Competitors shooting Glock 17Ls or G24s compete separately. Competitors who are master shooters, or have modified their weapon, will compete in the unlimited class.

Cash prizes will also be awarded to high women, high junior female, high junior male, high senior, high female law enforcement officer, high challenged (handicapped) and military competitors.

Additionally, there are plaques for the top civilian dealer team and law enforcement department or agency team and military team.

The GSSF, founded in 1991 as a nonprofit organization, is dedicated to promoting firearms safety, responsibility, and competitive sport shooting of stock Glock pistols as a family activity.

AMU shooters participate in international world cups

U. S. Army Marksmanship Unit

Six U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit shotgun team members are participating in two world cups, the first in Chaiba, Japan, which ended Monday and the second in Seoul, Korea, through May 4.

The six marksmen, including Sgts. Shawn Dulohery, Bret Erickson, James Graves, Theresa Wentzela and Spcs. Joseph Buffa and Daniel White are participating in the competitions in preparation for the 1996 Olympic Games to take place in Atlanta.

Each of the team members will compete in one of three, or a combination of two of the three shotgun disciplines — trap, doubles trap and skeet, according to Sgt. 1st Class Richard Haynie, Shotgun Team noncommissioned officer in charge.

And Dulohery will be competing to earn his minimum qualifying score in the skeet event, Haynie said. A minimum qualifying score is the score a marksman is required to shoot before he qualifies to enter Olympic competition.

"In Sgt. Dulohery's case," Haynie said, "that means he must shoot a minimum of 114 points out of 125 to earn his minimum qualifying score in skeet."

The rest of the Shotgun Team members participating in the World Cups have already earned their minimum qualifying scores through previous competitions, Burl Branham, Shotgun Team coach, said.

"However, they are earning something just as important by competing in the World Cups — good, quality training," Branham said. With anywhere from 80 to 100 marksmen from locations worldwide participating in the World Cups, the international-level competition is similar to that U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit marksmen will experience during the Olympics.

In fact, many of the shooters the USAMU marksmen are going up against, will be some of the same during the Olympics.

"The World Cups are sort of a heads up," Branham said, "a prediction of how things will go for us during the Olympics and a wake-up call for the rest of the world."

crime watch

Military Police Activity

This week's hot topic concerns reporting a crime in progress. In many instances, there is no way to stop a crime from occurring. There are, however, measures that can be taken to help deter criminal activity. Employees and residents of Fort Benning can help "Give Crime Arrest" by maintaining proper information pertaining to their personal property and by keeping a watchful eye out for criminal activity.

There have been several cases of larceny on Fort Benning recently in which the victims had no serial numbers or photographs of the stolen items. This makes catching the suspects extremely difficult for the investigating officer.

In most cases (especially break-ins) the subjects are stealing the items for one reason. They intend to sell it. In some cases, the thief actually cruises the post looking for special items (usually stereo equipment) to steal because people have made themselves easy targets.

Marking property with your Social Security number or initials and maintaining a copy of the serial numbers makes it difficult to sell stolen items. If the item has no serial number take a picture of it and keep the photograph on hand.

Reporting suspicious vehicles (tag numbers, if possible) and their occupants to the Military Police desk sergeant at 545-5222, will increase the MP's chances of apprehending these individuals, possibly stopping them from making you or someone you know their next victim.

The following entries are from the Fort Benning Military Police blotters from April 6 to 12. Such entries may be incomplete and are not intended to prove the guilt or innocence of anyone.

• A specialist was charged with driving under the influence, driving without taillights and driving with a suspended license. While on routine patrol, the MPs noticed a vehicle driving without taillights. The driver was stopped and alcohol was detected. He was administered a field sobriety test, which he failed. He was then apprehended and taken to the MP station where he was administered a breathalyzer test with a result of .206. Further investigation showed that he was also operating a vehicle under suspended license. The soldier was further processed, issued post suspension orders and released to his unit.

• A civilian was charged with shoplifting at the Post Exchange at the Main Mall. She was observed removing a tube of eyebrow makeup from the shelf and placing it in her purse. She then exited the store without paying. Upon arrival of the MPs, the civilian was apprehended and transported to the MP station where she was further processed, issued suspension of Post Exchange privileges and released on her own recognizance.

• A sergeant was charged with contributing to underage drinking and failure to obey a lawful order, and a specialist was charged with failure to obey a lawful order and underage drinking. While on routine patrol, the MPs observed the two soldiers pouring beer on top of cars from a balcony. The two soldiers were ordered to come downstairs when they attempted to leave the scene. They were detained by the MPs and transported to the MP station. Further investigation revealed that the specialist was under the legal drinking age. Both the sergeant and the specialist were further processed and released to their units.

Other activities include six cases of driving under the influence of alcohol, 12 traffic accidents, 11 cases of larceny and four cases of shoplifting at the main exchange facilities.

Remember to help "Make Our Post The Best — Give Crime Arrest." Report any activity that seems wrong or out of place to the military police at 545-5223 or 545-5224 or the "Crime In Progress" line at 545-5222.

TAKE A BITE OUT OF CRIME®

ask the judge

By George R. Smawley
Chief, Claims Division

The Fort Benning Claims Office is commonly asked whether there is a mechanism in place for victims of property damage and theft to recover from the party responsible for the loss. Article 139 of the Uniform Code of Military Justice was created for this purpose, and provides an administrative means by which victims are able to assert claims for damages against a soldier for harm committed by the soldier.

Article 139 claims may be asserted by an individual whether military or civilian, a business, charity, or state or local government for losses caused by intentional acts of active duty service members. The loss must be due to damage to land or other property, owned by the claimant, that has been intentionally damaged or stolen by a soldier. To be considered, the claim must be asserted within 90 days of the incident out of which the loss originated.

Intentional damage refers to damage that is willfully, knowingly, and purposefully inflicted without justifiable excuse. Damage that is accidental, inadvertent, or the result of a form of negligence is not considered intentional. For example, if a soldier vandalizes your car, then you may file an Article 139 claim. If, on the other hand, your car is involved in an accident caused by a soldier, no Article 139 claim would be allowed.

Stolen means exactly that. If a soldier takes property without authority, or borrows it with the intent to sell it or never return it, or writes a bad check with the intent to never pay you; then you may file an Article 139 claim. If, however, the claimant and the soldier have a dispute over an agreement or contract, then an Article 139 claim would be inappropriate. For example, if an individual allows a soldier to use his telephone calling card to make distance phone calls, with the agreement that the soldier pay him back at a later time, and the soldier later disputes the calls and the charges, an Article 139 claim would be inappropriate. Article 139 is not intended as a forum or a means for debt collection or dispute resolution regarding services or the ownership of property.

If an individual filing an Article 139 claim is successful in proving intentional damage or theft of property, they will receive compensation directly from the soldier's military pay. Government money is not involved. For more information about Article 139 claims, call the Fort Benning Claims Office at 545-2285.

Dogs: Avoid being bitten

Egleston Children's Hospital

How do you teach children to avoid being bitten by dogs without causing them undue fear of them?

According to the Atlanta Humane Society, children should be taught rules about staying safe around dogs but should also be taught respect for canines; children need to understand why dogs bite to reduce their chances of being bitten.

The Atlanta Humane Society advises parents to teach their children these points:

Play gently and calmly with dogs. If a dog gets too excited, freeze, then walk away. Dogs sometimes get too excited when there is a lot of movement and noise. Dogs are used to playing rough and using their teeth with other dogs so they may forget they can't play the same way with children.

Never go into a yard where there is a dog you don't know. Don't reach through a car window or fence to pet a dog or pet a dog that is tied up. And don't touch a dog's "stuff." Dogs protect their things and their owner's things, including their beds, toys, food, water bowls and their yards. A dog may bite to make someone leave its "stuff" alone.

If a dog seems sick or hurt, leave it alone — even if the dog belongs to your family. If you touch it, it may think you are causing its pain and bite you to make the pain stop.

Always ask permission from a dog's owner before touching the dog. If the owner is not there to ask, leave the dog alone.

Know these warning signs that a dog might bite — ears laid back against the head, legs stiff, hair on back is standing up or the dog is growling or barking with the teeth showing.

If you see any of these warning signs, follow these steps:

1. Stop whatever you're doing that upset the dog.
2. Freeze.
3. Count to five, slowly and silently.
4. Move away very slowly, sideways or backward.

5. If the dog jumps on you, act like a rock. Curl up into a ball and cover your face and head with your hands.

"Animal bites that break the skin are always contaminated with bacteria," said Egleston emergency center nurse Maryann Johnston. "Infections may occur despite thorough cleaning so it's important to call your pediatrician about the bite."

Regardless of the seriousness of the bite, you should notify the owner and animal control in your county.

for the record

The dog shown in "Prowling Pets Pose Problems" story, which ran on Page A-3 of the April 14 issue of The Bayonet was not actually a stray dog. The animal, which belongs to Sgt. Maurice Jones, was on a secured chain but had gotten outside of the fence and could not get back inside. The Military Police officer was helping the dog get back inside its fenced area.

Owning the NIGHT

New night vision facility trains soldiers in the dark

By Ruth J. Spaller
Bayonet staff writer

There's a classroom in Infantry Hall where all training is conducted with the lights off. There are no desks and chairs, and there is no overhead projector.

Instead, a waterfall runs into a small pool at the base of a grove of skinny bamboo trees. Mahogany and pine trees stretch their branches toward a sparkling starry sky, and not 50 feet away prickly cacti and dry tumbleweeds sit quietly in the desert sand, basking in the moonlight.

In this "classroom," it is always nighttime because this is the Dismounted Battlespace Battle Lab's new night-fighting training facility, a life-sized terrain model designed to familiarize soldiers with night vision equipment.

The facility consists of a classroom and five 63-foot "lanes," one for zeroing laser-mounted weapons and four designed after the different types of terrain in which a modern soldier might find him- or herself: forest, jungle, desert and urban.

The facility, now receiving finishing touches from a Training Support Center crew, should have pilot training groups going through this month, said Capt. Ed Jennings, Battle Lab projects officer.

The facility is "designed to increase individual proficiency in the use of current night vision devices," Jennings said.

No matter what time of day it is, no matter what the weather, and with little chance of losing the expensive gear, students in leadership courses like the Infantry Officer Basic and Advanced courses, Basic Noncommissioned Officer Course and Primary Leadership Development Course will be able to familiarize themselves with standard night vision equipment and the accompanying distortion of depth perception.

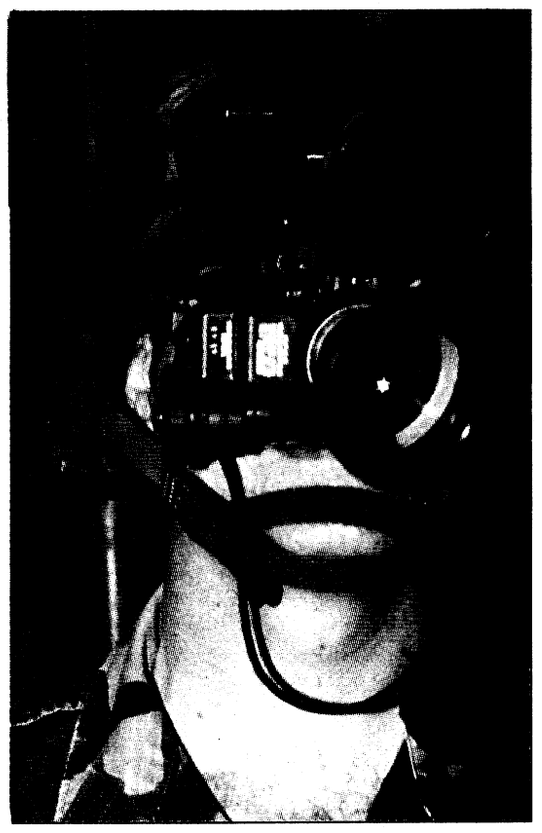
Equipped with helmet- mounted PVS-7B night vision goggles, soldiers will negotiate their way through the lanes — over fallen trees, along a climbing wall, through a cave and down from the second-story window of an abandoned apartment building — in the dark.

Through the goggles, soldiers "see" the objects and obstacles as if they were looking through a green filter in daylight — the picture is slightly grainy, differentiated in shades of green and black, with light areas seeming to glow.

For the TSC crew that built it, the process of creating the facility was much like what it is for the students — a walk in the dark.

They started with basic guidelines and blueprints; and, using a lot of their own imagination and creativity, they made the jungle, desert and forest "grow" in an empty room, Jennings said.

Constructing the facility was a learning experience for everyone, he said, and the TSC crew remained flexible throughout the process, reorganizing and redoing things as necessary. A depression in the forest lane was determined to be too dangerous, for example, and had to be filled in.



"You just can't visualize the problems or the way it's actually going to look until you start assembling it," Jennings said.

But the TSC crew anticipated many design problems and fixed them on the spot, he said, as well as adding special touches of their own — like a hanging bat in the cave, and a red cockaded woodpecker (an endangered species found on Fort Benning) in the forest.

From the installation of fiber optic blankets by electrician Luis "Sparky" Ortiz to make stars twinkle overhead, to the scaled-perspective wall murals by artists Al J. Reid, Charles Spence and Bill Lee, the crew left no detail out.

They donned night vision goggles themselves while painting to determine the effect — "black comes out kind of gray, green is very dark, and red is very light," Reid said — and compensated for it to give depth to the murals.

The crew added "just those little things that make that right touch" Jennings said, so that when the soldiers come to the night fighting facility to train in the dark, everything looks just right.

Retiring post CSM passes on torch

By Lisa M. Hibbert
Bayonet staff writer

President Bill Clinton, during his visit to Fort Benning April 12, issued words of praise for a job well done to Post Command Sgt. Maj. William H. Acebes.

"If you were retiring after 30 years, how would you like to have the President visit on the day before your retirement," said Commanding General Maj. Gen. John W. Hendrix. "Quite a going-out for a very deserving person."

Acebes retired and Command Sgt. Maj. George D. Conrad assumed the post command sergeant major position April 13 in a ceremony on York Field.

The accolades flowed not only from Clinton and Hendrix, but from Conrad and former commander of the 2nd Infantry Division of Korea, — Lt. Gen. Glen Marsh and his wife, Claire.

Acebes was not the only one who received recognition for excellent service, his wife, Brenda, was also praised.

While here, she served as Enlisted Club board member, adviser and newsletter chairwoman, volunteer tax officer, Santa's Castle volunteer, a member of the Commander's Advisory Council and the Post Exchange Advisory Council and a volunteer at the Post Thrift Shop.

"Brenda Acebes ... has been such a solid citizen of Fort Benning ...," Hendrix said. "Throughout, she has conducted herself with the modesty, good humor and humility that are trademarks of this great couple. Brenda, you too have my heartfelt thanks and that of Fort Benning, and we will miss you."

Conrad comes from the position of command sergeant major of the U.S. Army Infantry School.

Egg hunt is fun time for all

By Lisa M. Hibbert
Bayonet staff writer

Riverside, the home of Commanding General Maj. Gen. John W. Hendrix and his wife, Cheri, was the site of Fort Benning's annual Easter Egg Hunt and Spring Carnival

On a bright and sunny Saturday morning, approximately 2,000 children dressed in their spring finery prepared to gather as many Easter eggs as possible while their parents anxiously looked on.

Eight prizes, including a large Easter bunny and four Easter baskets were given to the children who collected the most eggs in their age groups.

Riverside, the home of Commanding General Maj. Gen. John W. Hendrix and his wife, Cheri, was the site of Fort Benning's annual Easter Egg Hunt and Spring Carnival where 16,000 plastic and candy eggs were hidden on the lawn.

In his opening comments, Hendrix welcomed the crowd of more than 2,500 to his home and talked about the special guest, Peter Cottontail, who graced his home on the previous evening. Cottontail, who attended the hunt, entertained the children by allowing them to sit on his lap and take pictures with him.

Cottontail was not the only celebrity on the scene; also present was Clem the Clown who thrilled the youngsters with balloon tricks and toys.

Families swarmed the lawn of Riverside, and they waited in line to ride the American Legion Train — a trolley caboose and car that circled the estate. Children played on the Astro Jump and sat in a fire truck.

Savoring free cotton candy and sipping free soft drinks, guests listened to the old-time jazzy tunes of the Infantry Band, watched puppet shows, made crafts and strolled along the tree-filled grounds.

The event was sponsored by TIC Federal Credit Union, Pioneer Military Lending, Buffalo Rock Pepsi, Dunham and Smith Candy Company, the Fort Benning Commissary, Army Community Services and Youth Services.

Brentan M. Webb, 2, son of Sgt. Donald and Tamara Webb, strolls around Riverside.

Benning schools honor parent volunteers

Program gives teachers added measure of support

By Jerrie Macintire
Special to The Bayonet©

April is Volunteer Month, and Fort Benning Schools are honoring parental involvement with appreciation coffees, teas and meals, according to Gail Wilson, director of staff development who tracks volunteer hours for the schools.

So far this school year, volunteers have donated more than 8,660 hours to the seven Fort Benning schools. From supporting academic programs to chaperoning field trips, volunteers "are a vital part of our schools," Wilson said.

"The volunteer program gives teachers an added measure of support to allow them to focus on academic instruction," said Wilson.

The role of volunteers at White School has been growing over the past few years as parents contribute their time and talents in a variety of ways to enhance education, according to Janet Wynn, principal.

"The role of volunteers has evolved over the years from clerical support to more of a partnership with teachers. Our parents plan, implement and reinforce academic lessons; they are comfortable with the role, and we are trusting of their abilities," Wynn said.

Kara Roth said she is more than just comfortable with her volunteer role; she finds it fulfilling and fun.

Roth coordinates hands-on science activities after planning sessions with teacher Kris Keske. The activities, which highlight scientific procedures and help children learn the steps of experiments, are time-consuming and would be difficult for one teacher to do without help, Roth said.

"I do enjoy this very much. It also sends the message to our children that education is so important we are willing to give our time for it," said Roth, whose two children attend White.

Having children at a school is not a prerequisite for volunteering; just ask Sgt. Curtis Bryan who shares his swimming skills with students in the Special Olympics program at Loyd School.

With the support o£ his unit, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment, he has been teaching students to swim at Briant Wells pool after his wife, a teacher aide at Loyd, encouraged him to share his lifeguarding skills.

"Involvement with schools and children is a must. They represent the future," he said.

In addition to Bryan's skills, Loyd has drawn on the talents of members of the Army wrestling team who share a building with the students while their regular school undergoes renovations.

Parents also volunteer in traditional roles.

"Interest in the art program is so great we are trying to coordinate an art class for parents next year as a direct result of our volunteer program," said Dr. Judy Gilliam, principal.

Faith Middle School also has classes for parents; this year volunteers in the media center and multi-media center underwent a training seminar in technology to better help the approximately 500 students who use the centers each day, said Dr. Beth Middlemiss, principal.

Parents also support academic classroom activities and maintain "an incredibly active role" in fund-raising and as chaperons for field trips and school dances, she said.

"We are thrilled with the support we have, and would like to have even more," Middlemiss said.

Schools benefit from the efforts of volunteers while those who donate time seem pleased to have found "a way of giving something back to their communities through their children," said Glenn Hughes, principal at Stowers.

Parents fill traditional roles as volunteers and may also participate in the "Very Involved Parents" program at the school, which allows them individual time with their child, he said. "The VIP program gives parents a regular opportunity to participate one on one with their child during class," he said.

Volunteers at Dexter School enjoy their roles as classroom supporters, but they aren't afraid to dig in the dirt a little bit in support of education, according to Vicki Rodgers, principal. A number of volunteers work with students in the school's greenhouse as they participate in hands-on activities and experiments relating to plants.

"All of us here feel parent volunteers play an important role in the day to day operation of our school," Rodgers said. "They provide an extra pair of helping hands with instruction."

He said they also help with activities such as the before-school fitness program and a writing program. With the help of volunteers, students publish original books by providing manuscripts, which parents type, proofread and help bind into volumes with help from a publishing program, Rogers said.

Enhancing reading is also an important role of volunteers at Wilson School, said Phyllis Parker, principal.

"Our parents work directly with children, and it's beneficial for those who need individual attention, especially with reading," she said. "That is so important."

Sharpening reading skills is also a goal of the at McBride, according to Del Hicks, principal.

Uta Foreman, who volunteered to shelve books in September, now helps students sharpen their word recognition and comprehension skills with a reading program with exercises for various ages and skill levels.

Foreman, whose two children attend McBride, said she enjoys her role as reading advocate and likes to see students enhance their skills as they read essays and then discuss the text.

Foreman is one of McBride's volunteers who "helps us reinforce and enrich our program. They are a vital part of our school," said Del Hicks, principal.

The role of parent volunteers in the school is as varied as the students themselves, but is important to the educational enrichment of the military child, Wilson said.

"Research has shown that the greatest single factor that contributes to school success is parental involvement in education," she said.

Post set to honor all volunteers

By Jan Wesner Childs

Fort Benning's 3,000 volunteers will be recognized at a special ceremony today at Riverside.

"We like to recognize each volunteer for contributing service to our installation and to our community," installation volunteer coordinator Olga MacLean said Monday.

The event coincides with National Volunteer Week, Sunday to April 29.

Certificates signed by the commanding general will be forwarded to each agency and Family Support Group to be presented to their volunteers.

Eleven volunteers will be singled out for their contributions.

MacLean said five have been volunteers of the month, and the other six were nominated for special recognition by the agencies they serve.

More than 3,000 volunteers work at various agencies on and off post, MacLean said.

Special Olympics, Meals on Wheels, Santa's Castle and the Thrift Shop are some of the agencies that benefit.

The volunteer recognition ceremony will be from 4 to 6 p.m. at Riverside — the home of Commanding General Maj. Gen. John Hendrix, and his wife, Cheri, — located at 100 Vibbert Ave.

MacLean will present a symbolic check to Hendrix, representing the value of the volunteers' work on post.

Reservations for the ceremony must be made by today. Call 545-5602 for more information.

Is marriage a crucible?

By Wilbert C. Harrison
USAIC Chaplain Office

reflections

A friend of mine said to me, "Now that you recently married, you are in the crucible." I immediately thought of a Family Life Conference I attended in Colorado Springs, Colo. The word "crucible" was one of the many challenging words the speaker chose to use throughout the week.

I have given much thought to that word. I have asked myself, how is it that marriage could be a crucible? Before I go any further let me explain the word "crucible." The New Merriam-Webster Dictionary, defines the word, "a heat resistant container in which material can be subjected to great heat." In human terms, this is like a trial or testing where a person undergoes great physical or mental stress.

One example is found in the book of Genesis. The story is told of Abraham who was told by God to offer his son Isaac upon the altar as a sacrifice. (Genesis 22:1-14). The scriptures tell us in that passage that God "tested" Abraham. However, we ask the question, "Why did God test Abraham, when he knew the outcome of Abraham's choice?"

Some would conclude that God gets joy out of seeing people suffer and that is the reason for the test. Others would probably say that God wanted to see if Abraham was loyal. Since Abraham passed the test, he proved his love for God.

I dare to say that God did not test Abraham to see what kind of man he was. God knew all about Abraham just as he knows all about all of his people. The test for Abraham was so he might know himself — might know the kind of person he was — might know the kind of response he would provide under severe testing in the crucible of life.

Perhaps Abraham didn't know he could be loyal to God. Maybe, like many of us he thought that real loyalty was in words. Abraham needed to know real loyalty and love is always tested. It was not enough for Abraham to say that he loved God. He had to demonstrate it with his behavior. The real issue is that Abraham's integrity was at stake.

That is precisely what the crucible does to any of us. It lets us know where our love and loyalty lay. When we are selfish and want things our way, it tells us we need to change. The test always proves what kind of person we really are.

Let's go back to the word crucible. The definition implies a testing, and not just any kind of test. The test is a severe one where a person is pushed seemingly beyond his human endurance. In other words, it is a test where what goes in comes out different. Abraham was a different man as a result of his testing.

This is what happens to those who are God's children. God's will is not to keep us sweet and clean. He expects us to be like Christ — able to stand the extremes of living. He tests our readiness and refines our lives in the crucible of living.

What kinds of testing are you undergoing? It could be a marriage, sickness, death or any number of different things where the extreme pain, frustration, or anger make you want to shout or scream. Whatever it is, God wants to help and create something new in your life.

The speaker at the conference made this remarkable statement, "God made marriage as a crucible, but it sure does make sense now that I understand its meaning.

Marriage is never about the other person. It is about you and who you are in the marriage. It is about what really comes out now that you are married. Marriage can be one of God's ways to help people see who they really are.

The cross that Christ carried was really the crucible for him. The result of the cross is eternal life for all mankind. I believe my friend was right — marriage is a crucible — but, then, so is all of life. It seems paradoxical. Yet I have to admit that after the testing there is a new awareness of who we really are and to whom we really belong.

Take the initiative in life; God will help

By Chip Huey
2nd Battalion, 58th Infantry Regiment

reflections

We've all seen the bumper stickers, "Let go and let God." The message — stop trying to do things your way and let God do his way through you. This is a passive approach to living out Christianity.

On the other hand, we've all heard the saying, "God helps them that help themselves." (Poor Richard's Almanac, B. Franklin) The message — take the initiative in life and God will help you along. This is a very active approach to living out Christianity.

See the tension here? Which is it? Do you sit back, trust God, and wait for him to move in your life? Or do you take the bull by the horns, live your life and expect God to help you along?

Most of us experience this choice in our lives. Do you maintain a laid-back approach to your work and trust God.

On the contrary, do you rely upon your own effort, trust God to help out here and there, and work like crazy to achieve your own success? In living the Christian life, do you rely on God or on your own efforts?

The Bible contains the story of a man whose day-to-day living shows the answer to this dilemma. Nehemiah was one of the top servants of the King of Persia. His country, Judah, the southern portion of the old kingdom of David and Solomon, was conquered years earlier by the Babylonians. The cream of society in Judah was carried into captivity in Babylonia.

Years later the Babylonian Empire was taken over by the Persians, but the Jewish Exiles continued to live and prosper there. One of them, Nehemiah, rose to the rank of cupbearer to the King. Meanwhile, many of the Jewish captives began to filter back to the old region of Israel. They, along with the Jews who had remained behind, started to rebuild their country and its capital.

Nehemiah returned to Jerusalem to lead the effort to rebuild the walls of the city. Nehemiah and his people faced severe opposition from regional non-Jewish leaders. This confrontation over the rebuilding of Jerusalem's walls provides the setting for our example. Nehemiah shows how to balance "letting go and letting God" while relying on ourselves. The confrontation and Nehemiah's actions are recorded in the book of Nehemiah in the Bible.

Upon hearing of an imminent attack by their foes, Nehemiah and his people first sought God in prayer. They then acted by placing guards on the partly constructed walls both by day and by night. Nehemiah placed his guards at the low points of the unfinished wall. He also placed them with their families so they would be more apt to stay alert and to fight more stubbornly. He also devised a plan for his people to rally on a bugle call to be blown whenever and wherever the walls might be breached.

Throughout the construction and defense of the walls, Nehemiah encouraged his people to trust God to fight for them. Therein lies the answer to our dilemma. Nehemiah and his people first sought God in prayer regarding their problem. They then took the necessary measures to deal with their situation. Throughout the taking of those measures, their faith was in God to fight and provide for them.

This is the model for believers. Living as a Christian is grounded first in faith in God that he is in control of all. Faith in God is exhibited by seeking him in prayer first as you live life and face dilemmas. This doesn't mean a formal on-the-knees session. Rather, prayer is an on-going communion with God. The Apostle Paul said for us to be constant in prayer.

You then act. Take the measures appropriate to your situation without violating Biblical standards. All the while your confidence must rest in God, even as you act. Depending on God as you live is the answer to the 'let go and let God' vs. 'God helps them that help themselves' dilemma.

Makovec awards to be presented

USAIC Chaplain Office

reflections

The 1995 Makovec Awards will be presented Saturday at the Main Post Catholic Chapel at 5 p.m.

The awards are given in memory of Master Sgt. John J. Makovec through a fund established by Lt. Col. Philip Gage Jr. in 1977.

Makovec, known to the people of Fort Benning as "Big John," was born in Austria in 1899. He served in the Austrian army during World War I and immigrated to the United States in the '20s. Later, he enlisted in the United States Army, and retired in 1958 with 20 years of service. Upon his retirement he chose to serve the Fort Benning Catholic community working on the Main Post Catholic Chapel grounds, assisting the senior priest who at that time lived on Sigerfoos Road. Big John lived in the basement of those quarters.

One day as he was tending the grounds at the chapel, a teen-ager stopped to talk with him. The old man talked of his past and of his time in the military. The boy talked of his plans for the future and his hopes to attend the U.S. Military Academy at West Point. As time went by, the two became friends and the boy learned the "old ways" of soldiering from Big John.

Big John told of his many experiences and of the decorations and awards he had received including the Combat Infantryman Badge, Europe-Middle East Campaign Medal with two bronze stars, World War II Victory Medal, Army of Occupation Medal with Germany clasp, National Defense Service Medal and several awards of the Good Conduct Medal. He was also the recipient of several Certificates of Achievement.

When Philip Gage Jr. was commissioned at West Point, Big John was in attendance and had brought a gift. Through the many faithful years of his service in the military, Gage and Big John kept in touch until Big John's death in August 1976.

Thirteen priests celebrated Big John's funeral Mass. The chapel was filled with his many friends — friends of a man who had worked without pay for nearly 20 years for the people and priests of the Fort Benning Catholic Community.

Post collects more excellence awards

AG, MWR, DCP win top honors — again !

By Ruth J. Spaller and Lisa M. Hibbert
Bayonet staff writers

Fort Benning hit the history books as the only post to win the best in the Army title two years in a row, and several post directorates are setting records as well.

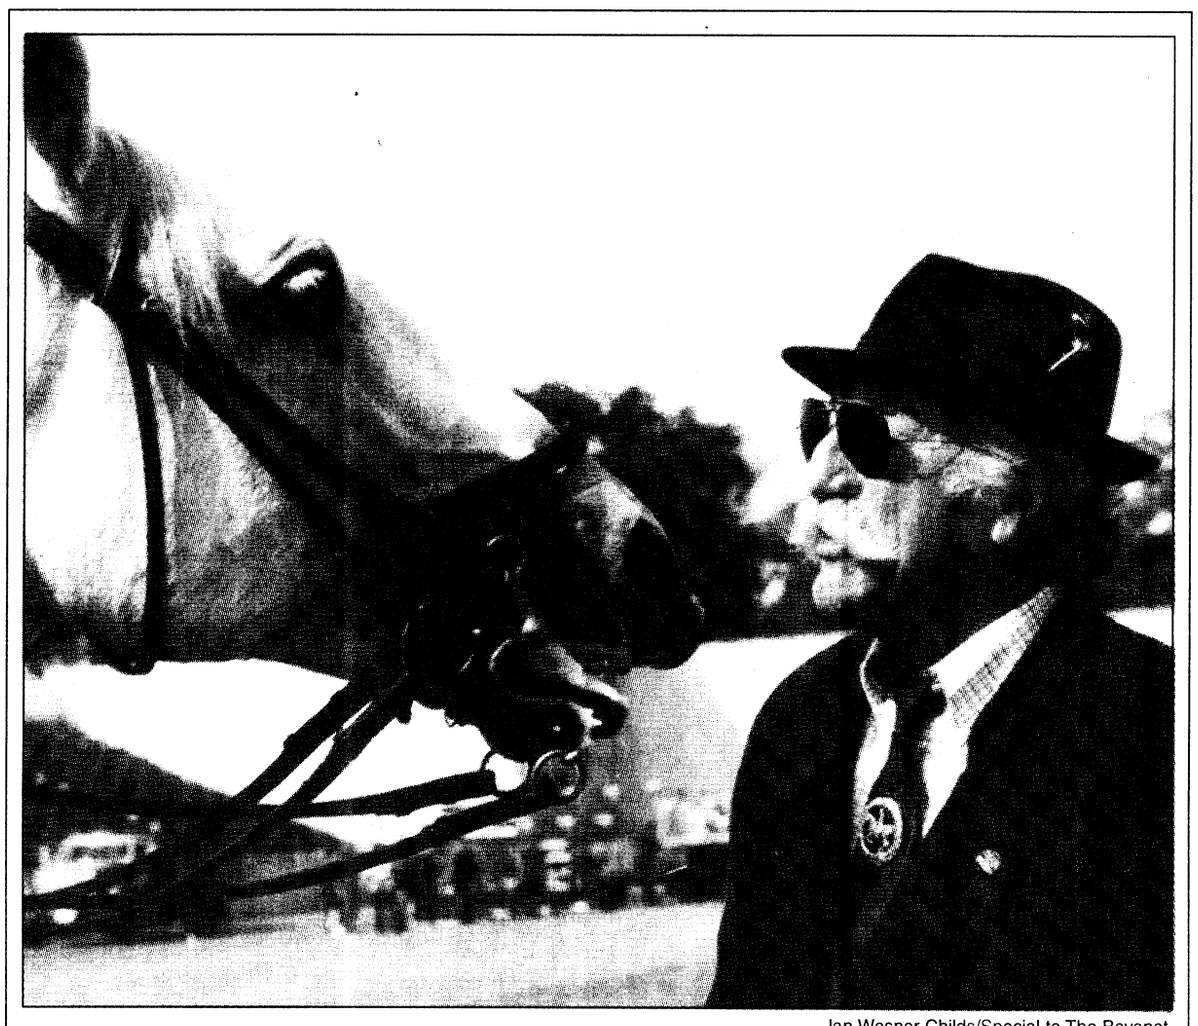
The Directorate of Military Personnel-Adjutant General, the Directorate of Community Activities' Morale, Welfare and Recreation, and the Directorate of Civilian Personnel have also been named the best of their kind in the Army.

AG has taken the best in the world title three years in a row, MWR takes the award for the second year — back to back, and DCP has also taken top honors for two years.

During Army Chief of Staff Gen. Gordon R. Sullivan's visit here March 30 and 31, he praised Fort Benning for its accomplishments.

"What you (Fort Benning) have done is a real accomplishment, made possible by men and women working to standard," Sullivan said. "I appreciate it, and Army leadership appreciates what you have done."

In the Army Communities of Excellence Feedback Report, Sullivan commended the directorates for their achievements.



DCP "cares about good quality service and has vigorously moved into a streamlined function to prepare for regionalization," the report said, and MWR received kudos for the new junior enlisted club.

"Community interaction between the installation Better Opportunities for Single Soldiers Council and leadership has engineered a modern entertainment complex complete with the latest sound and video system that can be modularized to suit the needs of changing tastes," the report said.

Commanding General Maj. Gen. John W. Hendrix will travel to Washington, D.C., May 11 and 12 to accept two separate ACOE awards. In one ceremony, Hendrix will receive the Commander-in-Chief's Award on behalf of the Army; and, in another ceremony, Sullivan will present Hendrix with the Chief of Staff of the Army Award.

A team of 59 representatives from Fort Benning and the Columbus and Phenix City area will be traveling with the general.

The honored directorates will receive awards in ceremonies that have not been scheduled yet.

Military week of appreciation set

By Ruth J. Spaller
Bayonet staff writer

Local businesses, community organizations and post units are gearing up for Military Appreciation Week and Armed Forces Day May 15 through 20.

Traditionally, the Association of the United States Army and other community organizations join together during the week to sponsor activities and events designed to enhance morale and cooperation between soldiers and the local community.

"Military Appreciation Week gives us an opportunity to pull together the three communities — the military, Columbus and Phenix City — and just focus on what the American fighting man and woman means to our community and to the nation," said Jon Hill, chairman of the Military Appreciation Week Committee. "It's a way of saying thanks in a very visible and tangible way."

This year, AUSA will start the week off with a 7:30 a.m. breakfast May 15 at the Main NCO Club. Tickets are $5 and can be purchased from unit sergeants major or from Room 608, Infantry Hall.

Throughout the week, AUSA and other organizations will sponsor sporting events ranging from golf and fishing tournaments to track and field. Scooters in Columbus will host the beach volleyball tournament finals May 16, and Coach's Corner and Victoria's in Columbus will host darts tournaments at 9 p.m. several evenings.

The Columbus RedStixx will host military night at Golden Park May 16 and AUSA will sponsor a job fair May 18 at the Main NCO Club from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m.

A retiree open house will coincide with this year's activities, culminating May 20 with events in Infantry Hall.

Topping off the week will be the Armed Forces Day picnic and open house May 20 on York Field, beginning with the "Burn the General" Run at 9 a.m.

Awards will be presented May 20 at 11 a.m. to the winners of all of the sporting competitions conducted during the week.

Symposium tackles family issues

By Jan Wesner Childs
Special to The Bayonet©

A skating rink on post, housing, commissary benefits and health care were among the hot topics at the annual Army Family Action Program symposium Tuesday.

The program gives family members the opportunity to discuss concerns and issues important to them.

"The Army Family Action Program is really the cornerstone of the foundation for improving the quality of life," post AFAP coordinator Michelle Aldridge said.

About 130 soldiers and family members attended the day-long conference at the Officers' Club. Delegates were chosen by post units.

Participants divided into six groups and spent the day discussing everything from education to retirement benefits. The groups then presented their reports to Commanding General Maj. Gen. John W. Hendrix and the other delegates.

One group leader, Staff Sgt. Ron Tillman, said his group listed deteriorating housing as a concern.

"This is a quality of life issue," Tillman said. "It affects morale and retention."

Each group listed five post services they thought were especially valuable. Included on the list were housing, medical services, recreation and education.

Services listed as least important included the horse stables, Army and Air Force Exchange Service concessions, car rental and the club system.

Hendrix said all suggestions from the symposium will be considered. Some may be forwarded to Training and Doctrine Command Headquarters or the Department of the Army.

But Hendrix warned big-budget items probably won't fly.

"It's tough times in the Army," Hendrix said. "You did your part and you gave us some really good issues to work with. Our big problem is money and ideas. You've given us the ideas."

"In reasonable expectations, we won't get all these things done," he continued. "I'm hopeful that we can at least take a few of these things to fruition."

But Hendrix praised delegates for their input.

"This country was founded on town hall meetings and good citizenship," he said. "That's the spirit in which this was done. I think you've been part of an American institution applied to Fort Benning, Ga., and the Army."

Who's best? Rangers will decide

Three-day, nonstop competition to include Fort Benning teams

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Fort Benning will host the 13th annual David E. Grange Jr. Best Ranger Competition today through Monday at locations throughout post.

Several teams from the 4th Ranger Training Battalion and teams from the 3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment, will be among as many as 40 teams from across the country that are expected to participate.

The three-day, nonstop event begins today at 7 a.m. with a physical training test, and it will conclude nearly 60 hours later Sunday at about 5 p.m. with a 2.7-mile buddy run from Victory Pond to the Ranger Training Brigade headquarters.

Two-man teams will compete in head-to-head competition for the title of "Best Ranger."

Competitors will take on other events during the competition to include marksmanship, a parachute spot jump, a 20-mile plus forced foot march, ranger stakes, the 60-foot Prusik climb and rappel, a canoe course, night land navigation, the Darby Queen obstacle course, a water confidence test and helocast and swim.

Awards will be presented on Hurley Hill May 1, following a rangers-in-action demonstration at Victory Pond.

Reimer is Army's next chief of staff

Army News Service

WASHINGTON — Medford, Okla., native Gen. Dennis J. Reimer, 55, is slated to become the next Army chief of staff.

Reimer will replace Gen. Gordon R. Sullivan as the Army's top-ranking officer.

Reimer is currently the commanding general of U.S. Army Forces Command at Fort McPherson, Ga., a position he has held since April 1993.

He was commissioned a second lieutenant in the field artillery and awarded a bachelor of science degree from the U.S. Military Academy in 1962.

As Army chief of staff, Reimer will be the principal military adviser to the secretary of the Army, responsible for planning, developing, executing, reviewing and analyzing Army programs.

He will likely assume his new duties in late June, following Senate confirmation.

Reimer and his wife, Mary Jo, have a daughter, Ann Marie, and a son, Michael.

VARIOUS VOICES

When does disciplining a child become child abuse?

Kathy Y. Kirkland, family member— "If you beat a child and he didn't to anything wrong or if you go too far (in your discipline, that's child abuse). Once a child learns his lesson, no more discipline is necessary."

Master Sgt. James E. Betsill, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 36th Engineer Group — "Any time you have to resort to hitting a kid to get a point across, that's child abuse. Instead, take away their privileges."

Spc. Dan S. Gahagan, Company C, 317th Engineer Battalion — "If (discipline) gets out of control by hitting too hard, (it's child abuse)."

Capt. Louis D. Mayo, 2nd Battalion, 58th Infantry Regiment — "As soon as you hit them (it becomes child abuse)."

Spc. Reinaldo Torres, School of the Americas — "Severe beatings (become child abuse). When I have kids, I will not spank them; I will scold them."

Joann G. Tucker, family member — "Whenever you kick or hit a child with your fist, (that's child abuse)."

CHILD ABUSE PREVENTION MONTH

Let children know you value them

Army Community Services

Your children first begin forming an opinion of themselves by the manner in which you talk to them.

How they feel about themselves affects all aspects of their lives.

Is much of what they hear from you positive or negative?

• Make ordinary, everyday experiences pleasurable ones for your child.

• Set aside special times with each of your children. Allow them to choose an activity that they would like to do.

• Catch your child being good. Move physically closer to your children when you talk with them.

commentary

Hold them.

• For a heart-to-heart talk, go to the child's room or to a quiet place. Encourage your children to express their feelings— both positive and negative.

• When you talk with your children or when they talk with you, stop what you are doing and look into their eyes.

• Remember they are their own person and may do things differently than you.

• Respond to your child with patience and understanding. Scolding or criticizing your child in front of others demonstrates a lack of sensitivity and respect.

• Share your positive feelings with your child, often.

• Comments such as "That's no big deal" or "You shouldn't feel that way" makes your children believe that their feelings are not important to you.

• Help your child focus upon other people's strengths, developing tolerance for those with different values and backgrounds.

• Through your daily words and actions, let your children know that they can't be replaced — that each is very special to you and that you love and value them.

Evaluate your ACAP options

Army Career and Alumni Program

Many soldiers and civilians who come to the Army Career and Alumni Program offices want simply to "punch their ticket" so they can leave the Army as quickly and painlessly as possible.

Transition assistance takes on more faces at Fort Benning than anywhere else in the world, but some people do not always take advantage of the services available at ACAP.

ACAP has basically two functions. First, ACAP exists to be the focal point for soldiers to receive assistance in obtaining information about separating from the Army.

Any technical questions, such as inquiries about veterans benefits, are usually referred to subject experts. The other service is to provide job search training and career counseling assistance.

"What makes Fort Benning different than other installations' ACAP offices is the support we get from the command group and senior noncommissioned officer chain, ACAP official Mary Allen said. "The commanding general is totally concerned about setting the standard for caring for soldiers, civilians and families.

"This concept has filtered throughout the command group and noncommissioned officer chain and has encouraged your ACAP staff to develop new programs that are not available at any other DoD (Department of Defense) installation," she said.

ARMY CAREER & ALUMNI PROGRAM "SHOWING WE CARE"

commentary

ACAP polled more than 12,000 soldiers to find out what additional services they need before leaving the Army. The surveys show that 49 percent of them believe that they have marketable skills and want to proceed directly to job-search training.

People who want to start their job search process have the ACAP Job Assistance Center at their disposal.

Education plays a vital role in everyone's success in today's job search ACAP surveys indicate that 20 percent (one of every five) of soldiers leaving the Army plan to pursue higher educational training.

ACAP has several scholarship opportunities available in education, environmental sciences and natural resources management. It also has been granted approval to have a community service specialist join the staff every Wednesday to provide automated information on educational opportunities throughout the United States.

From the survey ACAP has also learned that 31 percent of the soldiers stated that they need additional skills to enhance those they already have.

ACAP has established a skill development program to assist soldiers through retraining or skill enhancement opportunities. The current program is designed to provide soldiers with the opportunities for quick skill certifications (usually within three to six months) that have high job-placement opportunities.

Many soldiers are eligible for special job retraining grants available from the states of Georgia and Alabama. Alternative financing such as Veterans Affairs education benefits, other grants and loans may be also available.

ACAP has 18 institutions providing skill training on about 50 different courses. Some of the more popular courses include training as law enforcement officers, commercial drivers, heavy equipment operators, computer repairers, welders, electricians and nurses.

dial 545-boss

Dial 545-BOSS is the commander's action line for soldiers, family members and civilians to call when they have problems or complaints that can't be resolved elsewhere.

While it is not a substitute for the chain of command or for agencies established to provide assistance, the line offers another means of communication between Fort Benning's community and commanders.

The Bayonet features some of the calls that may benefit other members of the Fort Benning community.

Call: It is hot everywhere on post. When will the air conditioners be turned on?

Garrison Commander's response:

The Fort Benning budget was dramatically decreased last year. These budget cuts have caused us to look for ways we operate so that we can continue to train soldiers and run our installation within our assigned budget. When the operating budget was approved last year, the commanding general approved a late start-up of air conditioning in an effort to stretch post dollars as far possible. This decision was based on normal weather conditions and other needs throughout post.

During the last two weeks, we had normal weather for three days and hotter than normal weather for 10. In order to stay within budget, and to have sufficient funds to provide air conditioning in the hottest part of summer, it was necessary to postpone starting the air conditioning as long as possible.

We regret the inconvenience caused as a result of this policy. We ask for your patience and understanding during this time so that we will have funds to provide air conditioning later in the summer when it is most needed.

Call: I am the Better Opportunity for Single Soldiers representative for my company. Our first sergeant made one of our soldiers take down Zig Zag posters. What is the policy on this?

Soldier's unit's response:

The reason the soldier was told to remove the poster was that it gives the impression that the soldier uses the cigarette papers, which are commonly used to roll and smoke marijuana. Also, it could convey to the commander that the unit condones such activity.

If soldiers desire to have this type of poster on their walls, they could, but it would need to be taken down during any barracks inspections.

The BOSS representative was briefed on the matter and explained that the policy on posters is: "Posters will not reflect negatively on the unit or the U.S. Army."

Call: Single soldiers are being packed into small living areas because married soldiers are allowed to live in the barracks for various reasons, such as when they are separated from their spouse or when there is a domestic disturbance, or when they are confined to the company area.

I believe single soldiers should not have to live in crowded areas because married soldiers can't control themselves.

Provost Marshal's Office's response:

Soldiers are assigned rooms in accordance with U.S. Army Infantry Center Regulation 210-11. No soldier within this command is being packed into any room.

All available rooms are designed as two-person rooms. Room assignments for private 1 through corporal are always two soldiers per room. When available, sergeants and staff sergeants can be assigned single soldier accommodations.

Commanders are responsible for their assigned soldiers and their families; therefore, when a domestic disturbance occurs, a soldier may be required to reside in the billets for a limited time.

Asian American, Pacific Islander Heritage Month to kick off May 3

By Jan Wesner Childs
Special to The Bayonet©

The Army Equal Opportunity Office will take the month of May to honor the accomplishments of Asian Americans and Pacific Islanders.

An opening ceremony for Asian American and Pacific Islander Heritage Month will be 11:30 a.m. to 1:30 p.m. Wednesday in the Infantry Hall Marshall Auditorium.

Equal opportunity staff adviser Sgt. James Madison said Monday that the event will be similar to other special heritage months throughout the year.

"They are all designed to promote cross-cultural awareness and to promote harmony among the soldiers, their families and our civilians," Madison said.

The event also offers people from other cultures or different backgrounds the chance to see another perspective.

"In addition, they get to see what some of the other cultures have done," Madison said.

The Asian American and Pacific Islander Heritage Month ceremony will include cultural dances and food sampling.

Guest speaker will be Ken Suddeth. Suddeth is a Muscogee County marshal and previously served as a U.S. Army Reserve Criminal Investigation Division officer. He served five years in the Air Force, including two tours in Vietnam.

Call Sgt. 1st Class Richard Franks at 545-3200 for more information on the ceremony.

Post HIV programs offer information, training

By Jan Wesner Childs
Special to The Bayonet©

Consider these statistics from a recent survey of 18,000 Army soldiers:

• 16 percent indicated that sex without a condom is worth the risk of HIV infection.

• 14 percent thought it was safe to have unprotected sex with other soldiers because they are routinely tested for HIV.

• 42 percent of soldiers surveyed reported engaging in at least one high-risk sexual activity over the past year. Those activities included having five or more sexual partners and having sex with a person they knew was HIV-positive.

"That's like playing Russian roulette with your life," Fort Benning community health nurse Capt. Katreece Larry said Tuesday. According to the Centers for Disease Control in Atlanta, AIDS is the No. 1 cause of death for women and men age 25 to 44.

Larry and Patrice Cathright, the post HIV coordinator and educators, work to teach soldiers and civilians how to prevent HIV. Also, they are taking part in an annual HIV and AIDs conference at the Columbus Iron Works and Trade Center.

"Education is the key," Cathright said. "We don't have a cure right around the corner, that's for sure. We must educate.

"You have to look at it this way: One mistake, it's fatal. You can't go back for antibiotics."

Army regulations state that every soldier must go through HIV training once a year. That requirement also applies to civilian employees.

In addition, soldiers must be tested for HIV at least every two years. Any soldier who is deployable or who is going overseas must have had an HIV test within six months.

HIV testing is available from 8 to 10 a.m. on Mondays and from 12:30 to 3:30 p.m. Tuesdays and Thursdays at Building 2631 in Soldiers' Plaza. It takes five to seven days for the results.

Cathright runs the post training programs, which usually lasts a couple of hours. The program focuses on prevention, safe sex, modes of transmission and how the disease develops.

Basic trainees and other young soldiers are among Cathright's top priorities.

Because HIV may lie dormant for several years before developing into AIDS, those who are 25 to 44 now probably contracted the disease at a much younger age.

"They have the idea they're invincible — this won't happen to me," Cathright said.

42 percent of soldiers surveyed reported engaging in at least one high-risk sexual activity over the past year. Those activities included having five or more sexual partners and having sex with a person they knew was HIV-positive.

In an effort to better reach basic training soldiers, drill sergeants are being trained to teach the HIV prevention programs.

"If it's the drill sergeants saying it, they'll listen to it more than if it's us whitecoats saying it," Cathright said.

The preventive health office provides other services besides formal training programs. Information is available to anyone who asks. Soldiers or family members with questions can call or stop by.

"Some people just want to ask questions," Larry said. "People do come over and get condoms. We're happy to give them out."

Training is also available for schools and other interested groups.

"I really think that we're a good resource," Cathright said.

Anyone who tests positive for HIV is referred to a larger installation for medical treatment, to social workers and to off-post support groups.

Larry said there is no on-post support group because of concerns about confidentiality.

Those who test positive are allowed to remain in the Army until a medical board decides they can no longer do their job.

"They continue to work," Larry said. "They may have to be transferred to another position and/or unit."

Larry and Cathright have been through several training courses and continue to educate themselves. The educators said there is a stigma involved in teaching HIV and AIDS prevention.

"In America, we're so taboo with (talking about) sex, but so promiscuous," Cathright said.

Larry said one commander asked her not to mention condoms during her HIV presentation.

"Some people get upset when we mention condoms," she said. "They think we're promoting sex. We're here to show you how to protect yourself and possibly prevent yourself from getting these (diseases)."

The educators provide information on how to use the condoms and other ways to prevent HIV, as well.

"We want to make sure people don't just come over and get information without knowing how to use it," Cathright said. "You've got to know how the wheel turns before you go pushing it down the road."

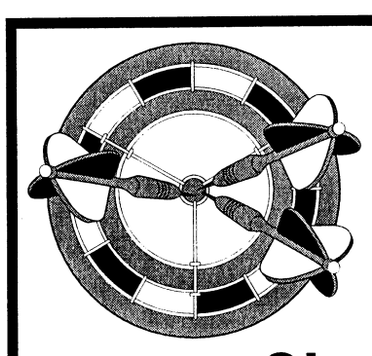
Evidence necessary for computer claims

By George R. Smawley
Staff Judge Advocate's Office

As personal computers become more common, so is the number of service members who ship their computers and related equipment during government sponsored moves.

As a result, the Claims Office is seeing an increasing number of claimants with internal damage to their personal computers. Like all claims for damage to personal property, it is the burden of the service member to show that the loss or damage claimed was the result of mishandling by the carrier.



Sometimes there is evidence, such as broken parts, which shows that this damage is attributable to rough handling and therefore compensable under the Personnel Claims Act.

Often, however, the computer's operating system is simply not working. Absent evidence of physical damage, it is the position of the U.S. Army Claims Service that the damage is because of a "mechanical defect." In other words, the computer should be able to withstand normal handling in shipment. If there is no evidence of abnormal handling, then the problem is related to the manufacture of the item, not the shipment of the item.

Personal computers are delicate items. Quite often, without showing any external damage, they will malfunction after shipment. Unless there is reliable evidence that internal damage to a computer is due to rough handling in shipment rather than due to some other cause, neither the government nor a private insurer will pay for the repairs. The only protection against this type of loss would be under a service contract of the manufacturer's warranty.

It is also important for service members to understand that the maximum allowance per shipment for all computers and computer accessory equipment (printers, software, compact disk read-only memory, etc) is often less than the value of the property. For this reason it is important to ensure that carriers take the time to properly pack and inventory all computer related equipment.

For more information, call the Fort Benning Claims Office, Office of the Staff Judge Advocate, at 545-2285.

Free ACAP counseling available for military family members

By Mary Allen
Army Career and Alumni Program

The Army Career and Alumni Program's Transition Assistance Office conducts monthly scheduled preseparation briefings for soldiers who are leaving of the Army or retiring and transition counseling sessions to ease the stress related to the transition process.

All family members of soldiers leaving the military or retiring are eligible for more than approximately $1,000 of free counseling and training to improve self-esteem and build job seeking skills.

The Transition Assistance Office is designed to fulfill clients' individual needs in order to assist them in making a smooth transition from the daily military lifestyle into the new civilian community.

Services are available six months prior to leaving the Army or retirement and extends to 60 days after separation.

Military family members can take advantage of these services as needed on an individual basis and do not have to be accompanied by their sponsor.

At the office, a transition specialist is available to give each client personal attention in identification of needs and to answer questions regarding the transition process.

ACAP clients receive an automated individual transition plan that enables them to make appointments with ease prior to separation. Counselors answer questions about transportation, personal finances, veterans' benefits and retirement.

Family members may also use the Georgia Department of Labor's free course every Tuesday in Infantry Hall, Classroom 30, from 8 a.m. to 4:30 p.m.

This job-search skills training course provides the foundation for job information. On Wednesdays, the advanced course is taught as a one-day workshop on job-search counseling.

For information or to schedule an appointment, call or visit the Transition Assistance Office, Building 2617, Soldiers' Plaza. The telephone number is 545-4892 or 545-7009.

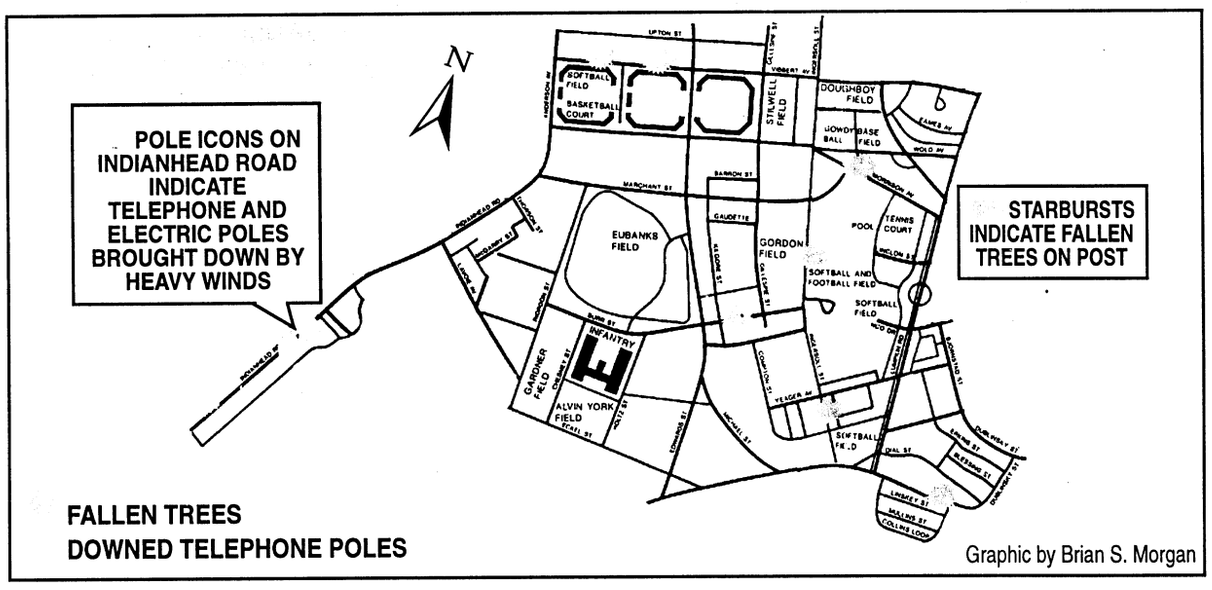
Spring storms in with high winds, rain

By Terry K. Ray and Karen S. Morarie
Bayonet staff writers

Fort Benning experienced cloudy skies, rain, thunderstorms and high winds within the space of a few hours April 21.

What made this typical spring weather unusual was the amount of damage it left behind.



According to Bruce Sturcken, grounds supervisor for the Directorate of Public Works' Buildings and Grounds Division, at least eight damage reports were called in between 11 a.m. and 4 p.m.; all had to do with either tree limbs or trees.

According to John Carol, supervisor of the Exterior Electric Section of DPW, one call was referred to his section because of two damaged poles on Indianhead Road. Power was also knocked out in the Harmony Church area because of tree limbs falling on the power lines in several different locations.

"All power was restored to the Harmony Church area by 7 p.m." Carol said.

Damage occurred at the following locations:

- Building 66 on Vibbert Avenue.
- Building 83 on Vibbert Avenue.
- Two large tree limbs down on Ingersol Street.
- Tree limbs down on Morrison Avenue.
- One tree uprooted in playground on Gillespie Street.
- Eight trees down on Jamestown and Sunshine Roads.
- Two damaged power poles on Indianhead Road.
- Power lines down in the Harmony Church area.

Sturcken said there were limbs down everywhere, but a broken tree at the corner of Dixie and Lumpkin roads was "about the worst — it blocked the main thoroughfare."

DPW workers were on site with a tractor forklift and chainsaw within a matter of minutes, Sturcken said, along with Military Police vehicles and law enforcement officials to control the flow of traffic.

The intersection was cleared within an hour Sturcken said, but other damage control continued throughout the day and into Saturday.

"The road crews under the supervision of Trent Lingafelter, Roads Section supervisor, did a superb job of clearing all the roads on post by Friday evening." Sturcken said. Cleanup was expected to continue through the next couple of weeks.

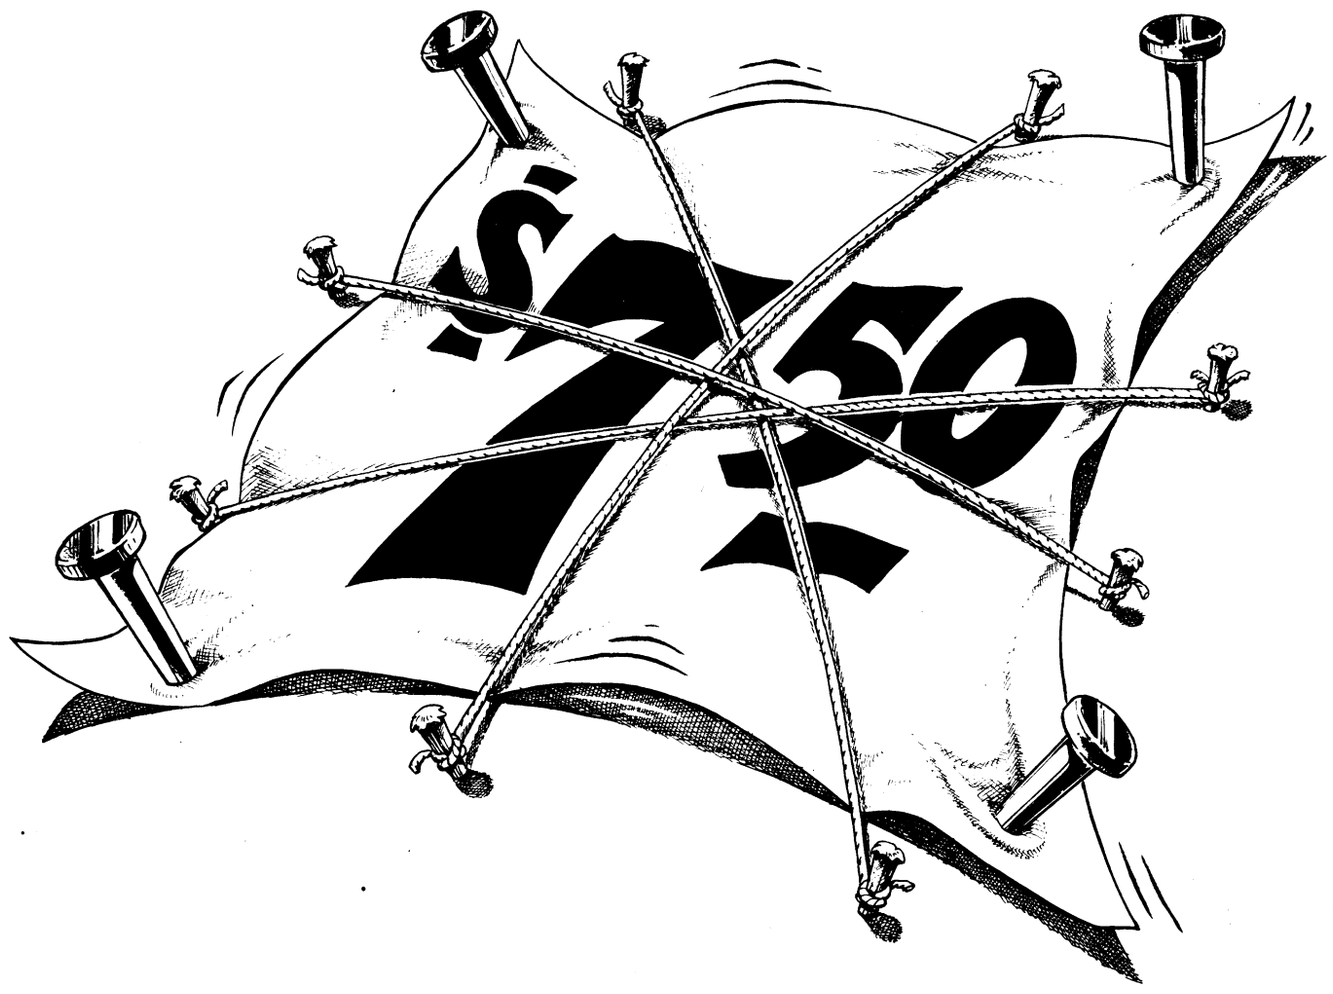
Fire Inspector Hollis Brown had an up-close and personal look at some of the damage when a limb the size of a small tree landed within inches of his truck, directly in front of the Officers' Wives' Club Thrift Shop, while he was on his way to a routine inspection at the Sante Fe Child Development Center.

"A few more inches closer to the curb, and most of the tree would have landed on my truck," Brown said.

"I did not see a funnel cloud," he said, "and it happened so fast. I believe it was caused by straight-line winds."

Master Sgt. James Reid, chief of operations for Weather C Flight, 17th Air Support Squadron, said it was most likely a collapsing thunderstorm cell that caused the damage.

"We had rain and thunderstorm showers that day, and we believe it was a storm cell on the east side of post, where most of the damage occurred, that put out most of that wind."



Recorded wind gusts were from 25 to 33 mph, but localized gusts may have been higher, Reid said.

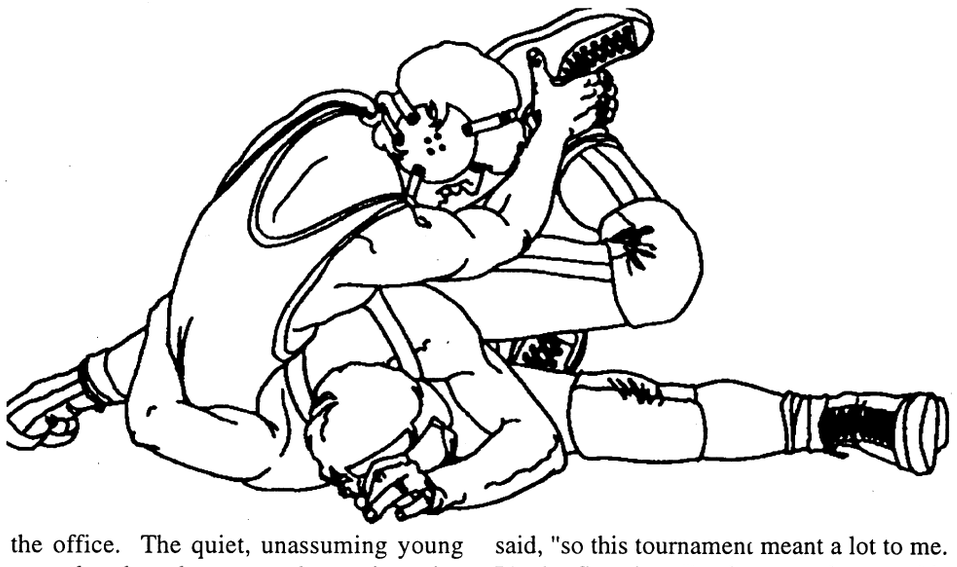
Wrestlers take gold medals at University Nationals



By Terry K. Ray
Special to The Bayonet©

All-Army wrestlers Jason Tolbert, Miguel Spencer and Kenneth Owens won gold medals in Greco-Roman competition at the University Nationals April 21 through Sunday, at Northwestern University in Evanston, Ill., to help propel the armed forces team to its third straight university team title in Greco-Roman competition.

Tolbert won his second title in as many years, and Spencer and Owens each won their first university championship.

"It was kind of good for me, because this was my last university nationals," Owens said. "I got knocked out last year, so it was real big for me to win this year. It puts me back into the Olympic Festival. I was happy to get this win off my chest."

Owens swept through the tournament without giving up a point in any match while improving his status among the 180 pound division wrestlers across the country.

For Tolbert, it was just another day at the office. The quiet, unassuming young wrestler has been to the university nationals for the past three years and now owns back-to-back titles, which makes him the No. 1 wrestler 24 years of age or younger in the 125.5-pound division at the university level.

"I didn't get a chance to fully compete at armed forces because of the passing of my aunt while I was in Colorado," Tolbert said, "so this tournament meant a lot to me. It's the first time I've been on the mat this year before Las Vegas, and it gave me the chance to sharpen the tools for a big tournament."

Spencer, coming off his first armed forces championship title in freestyle, was looking forward to attending his first university nationals.

"I have been working on my freestyle of late so I was a little rusty on my Greco," Spencer said. "But I got back in the wrestling room right after armed forces and started working on my Greco and got it back into shape. My toughest match was in the finals, which went into overtime against Jose Trevino of St. Paul, Minn. Now I can turn my attention to the U.S. Nationals, which will also be a first for me."

Keith Sieracki placed second at 163 pounds in Greco-Roman and freestyle for the Silver Medal losing only to Joe Williams of the University of Iowa, the No. 1 ranked wrestler at 163 pounds in freestyle and to Heath Sims, the No. 3 ranked wrestler at 149 pounds in Greco-Roman competition.

"I had a chance to win the match but a close call went the other way and instead of getting two points in my favor the points were awarded to Williams giving him the win at 7-4," Sieracki said.

Teammate Kevin Brumitt won the Silver in Greco-Roman at 125.5 pounds.

Patrick Antonie at 105.5 pounds won a Bronze Medal in Greco-Roman, and Ryan Hintz finished fourth at 114.5 pounds in Greco-Roman competition.

All Army wrestling coach Tony Thomas was impressed with the overall performance of the team but held the performance's of Owens and Sieracki slightly above the rest.

"Owens didn't do well at the armed forces championships," Thomas said. "Owens dominated the guy who won at armed forces (Anthony Esposito, Marine Corps) in the finals 7-0. He also did not give up a single point outscoring his opponents 31-0. Sieracki wrestled in both styles and wrestled the best college wrestlers in the United States. Sieracki has not wrestled freestyle all year; he did an outstanding job."

All seven wrestlers qualify for the U. S. Olympic Festival in Boulder, Colo., July 26 through 30.

Next up for the Army wrestlers will be the U.S. Nationals in Las Vegas, Nevada, this weekend.

Changes take pressure off

By Earl Bentz and Steve Price
Outboard Marine Corporation

Bass anglers now realize heavy fishing pressure seems to make fish stop striking particular lures. What fishermen don't understand is how to make those fish start biting again.

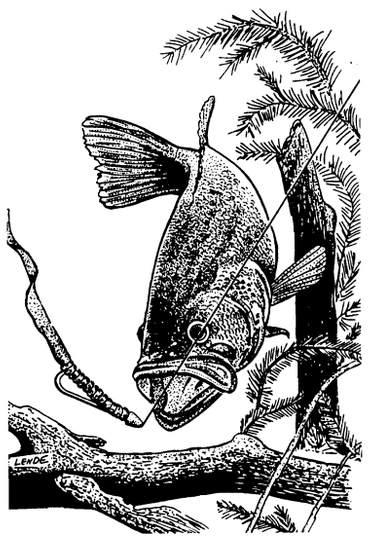
"If I knew the answer to that, I'd win every tournament I entered," said tournament angler Mickey Bruce of the Evinrude Outboards Pro Staff.

"There are certain techniques an angler can try and possible places he can go to get more strikes, but nothing works every time.

When he is forced to fish lakes that have heavy fishing pressure or at least heavy boating traffic, Bruce often relies on several techniques to catch the fish.

"One of the techniques that often works is to change lures and do something other anglers rarely do," he said.

"For example, if you see several fishermen working the same point or shoreline with spinnerbaits but they aren't getting any strikes, try a crankbait, but fish it differently. Instead of easing a shallow-running lure around the brush and logs, use a big deep-diving model and just crash and ricochet it around the cover.



"If you see fishermen working big topwater lures slow and methodically over deep points, switch to a smaller one and skip it across the surface as fast as you can move it. Sometimes, this is all it takes."

The next option available to anglers is to fish areas other fishermen don't fish as often.

"This may mean making a long boat ride to a different end of the lake or to a distant tributary," Bruce said, "but again, the results may be worth it. I know several tournaments that have been won by anglers who drove more than 100 miles one way to fish water that rarely got fished."

Another technique Bruce himself has used with success is to fish boat docks and piers.

"A lake with a lot of boat traffic naturally has a lot of boat houses," he said, "and I believe the bass become accustomed to the noise and waves of the boats.

commentary

"I've seen this for years on Lake Lanier north of Atlanta where I live. It's an excellent fishing lake but it has more boat traffic than most lakes because of its location.

"The bass move to the boat houses where there is shade and cover, and if you fish them carefully you'll get plenty of action.

"Besides," Bruce said, "fishing the docks gets you out of the boat traffic so you can concentrate on what you're doing."

Healthy bait catches more fish

Plano Molding Company

Experienced live bait fishermen will tell you that keeping bait fresh and lively is as important as where and how you use it.

Successful anglers go to great pains to keep their minnow, wigglers, crawfish and leeches healthy. After all, healthy bait equates to lively bait and better fish appeal.

Several factors contribute to bait survival, including the condition it was in when purchased, the type of container used to carry it to the lake, and the overall quality of the water.

"Make sure you buy bait from a reputable dealer," said Public Relations Manager Bill Cork of Plano, a manufacturer of tackle and bait containers. "If the bait isn't healthy to begin with, it may not survive the trip to the lake or river.

With a little maintenance and common sense, bait can be kept alive in a bucket for several days

"Minnow buckets don't have to be expensive," Cork said, "but they do need to be functional."

Water quality is equally important to bait survival. Anglers should change water often to keep minnows alive for long periods and avoid filling buckets with chlorinated water.

commentary

Also, remember that drastic changes in water temperatures are harmful to bait.

Add lake water to the bucket gradually so bait isn't "shocked" by a sudden change in temperature when it's being used.

To keep bait alive for extended periods, attach a battery-operated aerator to the bucket and keep it running when the bucket isn't in use.

"Don't overcrowd minnows in a bait bucket and remove dead bait immediately, Cork said. "With a little maintenance and common sense, bait can be kept alive in a bucket for several days."

Military Police Activity

This week's hot topic concerns vehicle registration. All motor vehicles owned or operated by a person who resides, performs duty, is employed on or frequently uses the facilities of Fort Benning must be registered within 10 working days after introducing the vehicle onto Fort Benning.

If circumstances preclude immediate registration, a temporary registration will be issued.

Violation of the registration requirements provides basis for disciplinary action under Article 92, Uniform Code of Military Justice.

Violators who are not subject to the UCMJ are subject to have their post driving privileges revoked.

If you have any questions or concerns, contact the Post Vehicle Registration Office at 545-3223.

The following entries were taken from the Fort Benning MIlitary Police blotters from April 13 to 20.

Such entries may be incomplete and are not intended to prove the guilt or innocence of any person.

• A civilian was charged with shoplifting at the Post Exchange at the Main Mall when he was observed placing a bottle of cologne and two watches in his sweater pocket.

The individual then exited the store without paying and was detained.

When the MPs arrived, he was apprehended and taken to the MP station where his identification card was confiscated, his Post Exchange privileges were suspended, he was issued post ejection orders and later released on his own recognizance.

• A private first class was charged with driving under the influence of alcohol and failure to drive on the roadway designated for traffic.

TAKE A BITE OUT OF CRIME

While on routine patrol, the MPs observed a vehicle traveling on the Riverwalk pavement adjacent to incoming Benning Road.

The driver was stopped and a strong odor of alcohol was detected. He was administered a field sobriety test, which he failed.

He was then taken to the MP station where he was administered a breathalyzer test with results of .137. He was further processed, issued orders for suspension of post driving privileges and later released to his unit.

• A civilian was charged with possession of a controlled substance and speeding. While on routine patrol, the MPs observed a vehicle traveling 72 mph in a 55 mph.

A traffic stop was made and an odor of suspected marijuana was detected coming from the driver's window.

The driver was asked to exit the vehicle, and a narcotic-detecting canine searched it. The presence of a narcotic substance was detected.

The MP searched the vehicle and several partially burnt, hand-rolled cigarettes were discovered.

A field test confirmed they were marijuana. The individual was apprehended and searched. During the search, two plastic bags containing suspected marijuana were found.

The civilian was transported to the MP station and administered a urinalysis with results pending.

He was further processed, issued a speeding ticket, post ejection orders and escorted to post boundaries.

Other activities include six cases of driving under the influence of alcohol, 13 traffic accidents, five cases of larceny and one case of shoplifting.

Computer costs can add up

Better Business Bureau

If you have finally given up on your old typewriter and decided to leap into the information age and buy a computer, the Better Business Bureau has some advice.

Buying a computer may cost more than you anticipate. The initial cost for the hardware (the basic equipment such as the hard drive, monitor and keyboard) may not be the final cost.

The software (programs that allow you to do word processing, play games or calculate a budget) can be quite expensive. Also, computer maintenance and other hardware purchases may increase the total cost.

Personal home computers are available at general merchandise catalog stores, specialized computer outlets, office equipment stores, mail order houses and through other retailers.

Before beginning your search, read computer magazines or other literature and speak to friends or colleagues who have home computers so that you get a good idea of what computer specific applications you want and need.

Most retailers selling computers have demonstration models set up in their showrooms. Do not be afraid to ask for a demonstration, and most important, ask to operate the computer yourself.

Be sure to ask about the equipment warranty and service. If something goes wrong, where can you get the computer serviced? How long are the various components covered under the warranty?

Also, ask if the retailer offers computer support through initial classes or via an ongoing telephone support service.

The bottom line is, if you are in the market for a home or personal computer, know what you want the computer to do, and do not buy a computer until you thoroughly shop and test the variety of models being offered by manufacturers.

Also, take the time to become familiar with some of the basics of computer terminology before you shop.

For more information on home computers, the Council of Better Business Bureaus has published a booklet, "Buying a Home Computer."

For a copy, send $2 for postage and handling and a self-addressed, business-sized envelope to CBBB, Dept. 023, Washington, D.C. 20042-0023.

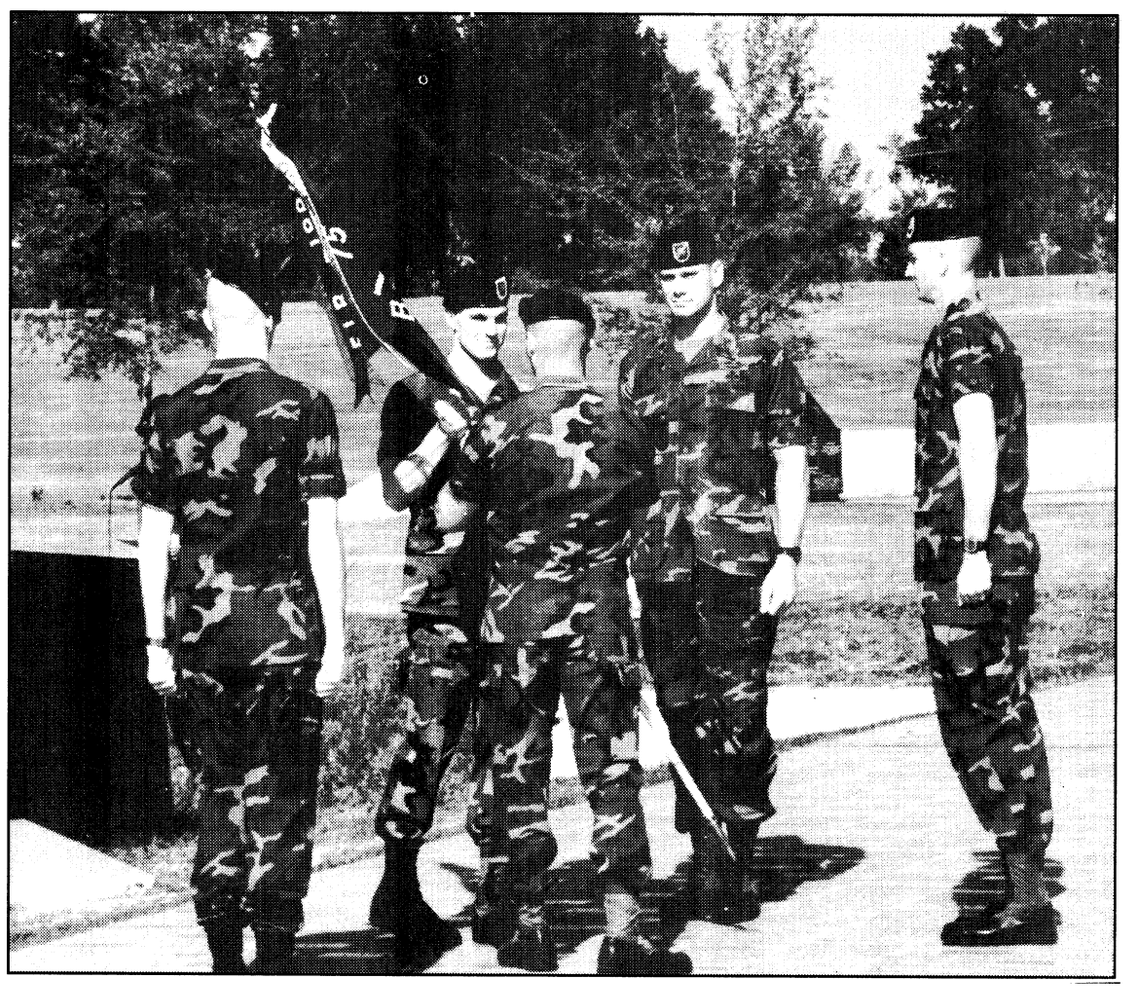
Students visit Civil War battlefield

Infantry Officer Advanced Course

The Infantry Officer Advanced Course recently completed a staff ride to Kennesaw Battlefield Park in northern Georgia.



The staff ride is part of the IOAC curriculum. It serves as a means of exposing students to military history, reinforcing their appreciation for terrain, the importance of combat leadership and allowing them to see the relationship between tactics and technology.

The battle for Kennesaw Mountain occurred on June 27, 1864, as part of Gen. William T. Sherman's Atlanta Campaign during the Civil War.

More than 3,000 Federal and 800 Confederate forces were lost in one day, making the battle for Kennesaw Mountain the costliest battle of the campaign.

The park's curator, Dennis Kelly, has been working with IOAC students since 1983. He coordinates a living history demonstration and historical information of the Civil War for the students.

Kelly was recently presented a plaque from the Tactics Division in appreciation for his support in developing the U.S. Army's future leaders.

Future NCOs

will need technological edge

By John A. Dubia
TRADOC News Service

perspective

What will it take to be a noncommissioned officer in the next century?

NCOs will need the same attributes that have always made them the taproot of discipline and cohesion in military units. These traditional skills of leadership will blend with the unprecedented capabilities of information-age technology to produce the NCO of the future — a leader for the 21st century.

Some qualities of the NCO will never change. From my earliest days as a second lieutenant, to visiting soldiers and section chiefs around the world as the Fort Sill commander, I've seen that the best NCOs balance needs of people and mission. They're committed — with equal emphasis — to getting the task done and growing the Army's future leaders.

The best NCOs are competent. They know their job, and they pass their expertise on. They train soldiers and provide their officers honest, clear feedback.

Most importantly, the best NCOs are courageous — both morally and physically. They have a kind of quiet confidence and determination that steadies a unit and inspires its soldiers.

There is nothing new in this list of timeless traits. You've heard them all before. That in itself is a powerful message. The standards of leading are not current fashion or doctrinal abstracts — they're the real stuff of leadership.

What the future will change is how we exercise leadership. Armed with information technology like computers and satellite communications, units will have an unprecedented ability to distribute battlefield data.

The Army of tomorrow will train, plan, prepare and execute at a speed thought unattainable a few years ago. If you could watch the the section chief of a Paladin howitzer at the National Training Center in the desert environment of Fort Irwin, Calif., or a multiple launch rocket system crew chief at the Combat Maneuver Training Center in Germany, you'd get a pretty good glimpse of the NCO of the next century — more capability, more speed, more access to information, more responsibility for the NCO.

NCOs are becoming increasingly independent decision makers in military operations.

In the 21st century, they'll be fed essential information over high-speed data links; then they'll have to use their own tactical judgement and the commander's intent to ensure they're executing at the right time and place to get the job done.

To harness the information age, NCOs will have to become comfortable with new technology. I'm not worried about the younger generation. Young soldiers who have grown up with computers, the internet and CD-ROM are coming into the Army. For many of our senior NCOs, however, the world of modems and satellite dishes is a brave new world.

Reviewing new equipment training over a video monitor and receiving orders via computer screen was not how we did things in the past, but it's how we'll function in the future.

We all have to embrace this challenge. Whether we want to accept it or not, technology is about to fundamentally change how we train, lead and fight.

The possibilities of the information age will also increase the importance of the officer-NCO leader team. Officer-NCO teamwork has always been the core of military leadership in our Army. In the future, military operations will be even more dependent on shared leadership. Senior leaders must develop a strong relationship between commanders and command sergeants major and first sergeants, and soldiers must witness this.

The stronger the bond between officer and NCO, the greater the capacity to exploit the potential of new technology. Teamwork will be a key facet of NCO leadership in the next century.

There is an old saying: "No one is a leader until his appointment is ratified in the hearts and minds of his soldier."

It's true. In the 21st century, NCOs will have to meet some very high standards to lead the soldiers of the future. They will need to have the timeless traits of courageous, honest and intelligent leadership — as well as the skill to master information-age technology. That's what it will take to be an NCO for the next hundred years.

Engineers put new vehicle through paces

Fort Leonard Wood, Mo., Public Affairs

FORT LEONARD WOOD, Mo. — The rmy constantly seeks ways to improve its quipment as it moves into the future with a smaller, more mobile force .

Fort Leonard Wood recently received a vehicle that could improve the combat engineer mission on the battlefield.

United Defense, a California-based manufacturer, delivered a Combat Engineer Squad Vehicle during hand-off ceremonies there in March.

For approximately six months the post's 5th Engineer Battalion will be evaluating the CESV, the only one of its kind. The battalion worked on a load plan for the vehicle in March, establishing a system for storing equipment in it.

They will take the vehicle to Fort Bliss, Texas, Fort Chaffee, Ark., and the National Training Center at Fort Irwin, Calif., to evaluate the load plan and see if the vehicle performs as promised, according to Staff Sgt. Robert Scena, material development noncommissioned officer for the Directorate of Combat Development.

The new vehicle is based on a modified version of the M113A3 armored personnel carrier now used to move squad-sized elements of engineers to their destination.

The new vehicle is based on a modified version of the M113A3 armored personnel carrier now used to move squad-sized elements of engineers to their destination

The new design is longer, more mobile and more powerful than other members of the M113 family, according to a United Defense spokesman.

Bill Grusonik, program manager for the M11 family said the CESV aims to remedy three problems the old design displayed during Operation Desert Storm.

"The M113 has inadequate space for underarmor payload, has less mobility than modern supported maneuver systems and lacks sufficient survivability to operate on the front lines," he said.

The CESV gives an extra 70 cubic feet of storage space and increased payload capacity by 3,000 pound. A 350-horsepower engine is supposed to provide mobility to match the M1 series of manned battle tanks. Finally, the system offers modular armor packages that offer increased survivability, he said.

The extra storage space is an important consideration. Now engineers must haul a 1.5-ton trailer behind their APCs to carry explosives, mines, tools and other equipment

"It's a handicap for the M113 to pull the trailer," said Scena. He explained that the trailer has a higher silhouette than the APC and slows the vehicle down The trailer also hampers soldiers trying to get out of the vehicle.

"They want to be able to load this vehicle up with enough equipment to be able to complete the breach without using the 1.5-ton trailer," said Scena "We're going to see if the soldiers can load it up and effectively fight and do their squad mission."

The Engineer School agreed to evaluate the new equipment and United Defense agreed to provide maintenance support.

"Nobody really knows yet what this vehicle can do. That's why the 5th Engineers have it," said Scena.

U.S., Ukraine work to expand communications base

By Jim Ward
Army News Service

WASHINGTON — When Staff Sgt. Mary Hobbs stepped off a Russian plane onto Ukraine soil, she was met with two contrasting visions.

One was a desperately poor country struggling to come to grips with its new-found freedom. The other was the reason for her trip — the Ukrainians were thirsty for technical knowledge.

"Our team deployed to the Ukraine during the winter of 1994 to teach Ukrainian army technicians how to properly operate and maintain the U.S.-manufactured computer that allows the direct communications link between our two countries," Hobbs said.

What Hobbs, of the U.S. Army Information Systems Command Office of the Deputy Chief of Staff for Force Management New Systems Training, and her team found was a professional group of eager technicians who prepared for the visit and "really wanted to get it right," she said.

Planning for the mission began in 1993, when officials from the State Department, National Security Agency, Defense Information Systems Agency, and ISC determined the program requirements and put the operation in motion.

Under the Nunn-Lugar Act, each of the four former Soviet republics with nuclear capabilities receive assistance from the United States in monitoring and reporting on their programs.

DISA, serving as team leader, was charged to deliver the systems needed to provide the link between each country.

ISC Information Systems Management Activity supplied the equipment.

"Our job was to develop specialized training media and present instruction on the specific equipment that, when installed, comprises a complete system," Hobbs said.

The four team members' first step was to write documentation on the commercial equipment, then design lesson plans which would allow them to get the information across.

"A key item of business was hiring a Russian language professor out of Cochise College (in Sierra Vista, Ariz.) to teach us the basics of the language so that we could at least talk to our students on a social basis," Hobbs said.

The Ukrainian trip was one of a series of such missions designed to add to the overall technology base in Moscow, Belarus, the Ukraine and Kazakhstan.

The same equipment is being installed at each location for training by members of the 504th Signal Battalion and the USAISC-Pentagon. It consists of three work stations — one on, one off, and a spare.

"Under the government-to-government treaty protocols, the system must work as flawlessly as possible, so it's vital the operators understand how the system works.

Having members of ISC do the actual installation makes it much easier to design training the operators need," Hobbs said.

Another key element of the process was training U.S.-based teams of six soldiers each. "Since the operators in the U.S. will communicate directly with the Republics using identical equipment, they had to receive training on is as well," she said.

Once the eight-day training class began, it became clear to Hobbs and her fellow team members that the Ukrainians were taking this opportunity seriously.

"They came to class ready and willing to learn. The Ukrainians were the best we've seen because the Ukrainian military obviously selected the top-of-the-line to do this work," she said.

world war II

50 years ago this week ...

• Benito Mussolini, fleeing with his mistress and his cabinet members, was captured near the Swiss border. A summary trial followed by a swift execution brought the dictator's career to an end. The bodies of the dictator and his companions were taken to Milan for display to the public that he had once held absolute power.

• The First U.S. Army and the First Ukrainian Army linked up at the city of Torgau on the Elbe, splitting the German defenses into two pockets: one centered on Berlin, the other in western Czechoslovakia and northern Austria.

• Within Berlin, two Soviet Armies linked up, giving the Soviets control over one quarter of the city, including the Templehoff district as vicious house to house fighting occurred in the German capital.

• Reichsfuhrer Heinrich Himmler approached Sweden to arrange a meeting with Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower to discuss the capitulation of German forces on the Western Front. President Harry Truman notified Winston Churchill and Josef Stalin, and the leaders agreed that only unconditional surrender on all fronts would be accepted.

• In the Pacific, the U.S. Tenth Army broke through the Japanese defenses on Okinawa, and began the final drive south.

• In the United States, the San Francisco Conference opened, with Truman asking that the delegates strive to create an organization that would secure a lasting peace following the war.

• In local news, The Bayonet reported that 2,100 Fort Benning soldiers were part of the honor guard during the funeral proceedings following Franklin D. Roosevelt's death earlier that month.

EARTH DAY CELEBRATION

White School students study environment

3rd-, 4th-, 5th-graders explore effects of acid rain on vegetation, more

By Jerrie Macintire
Special to The Bayonet©

White School students do more than their share of helping the environment, said Principal Janet Wynn, and their science projects in commemoration of the 25th Earth Day seem to prove it.

Students in third, fourth and fifth grades have worked on various projects since February that highlight such issues as the dangers of acid rain on vegetation, ways to use red worms to recycle kitchen garbage, and innovative uses for old clothes instead of adding to the landfill.

"They are really interested in the environment," Wynn said. "The issues the projects explore are more complex, detailed and elaborate that we have seen in the past."

Environmentalist Kris Keske, science teacher at the school, agrees. "They won't throw phone books in the trash," she said.

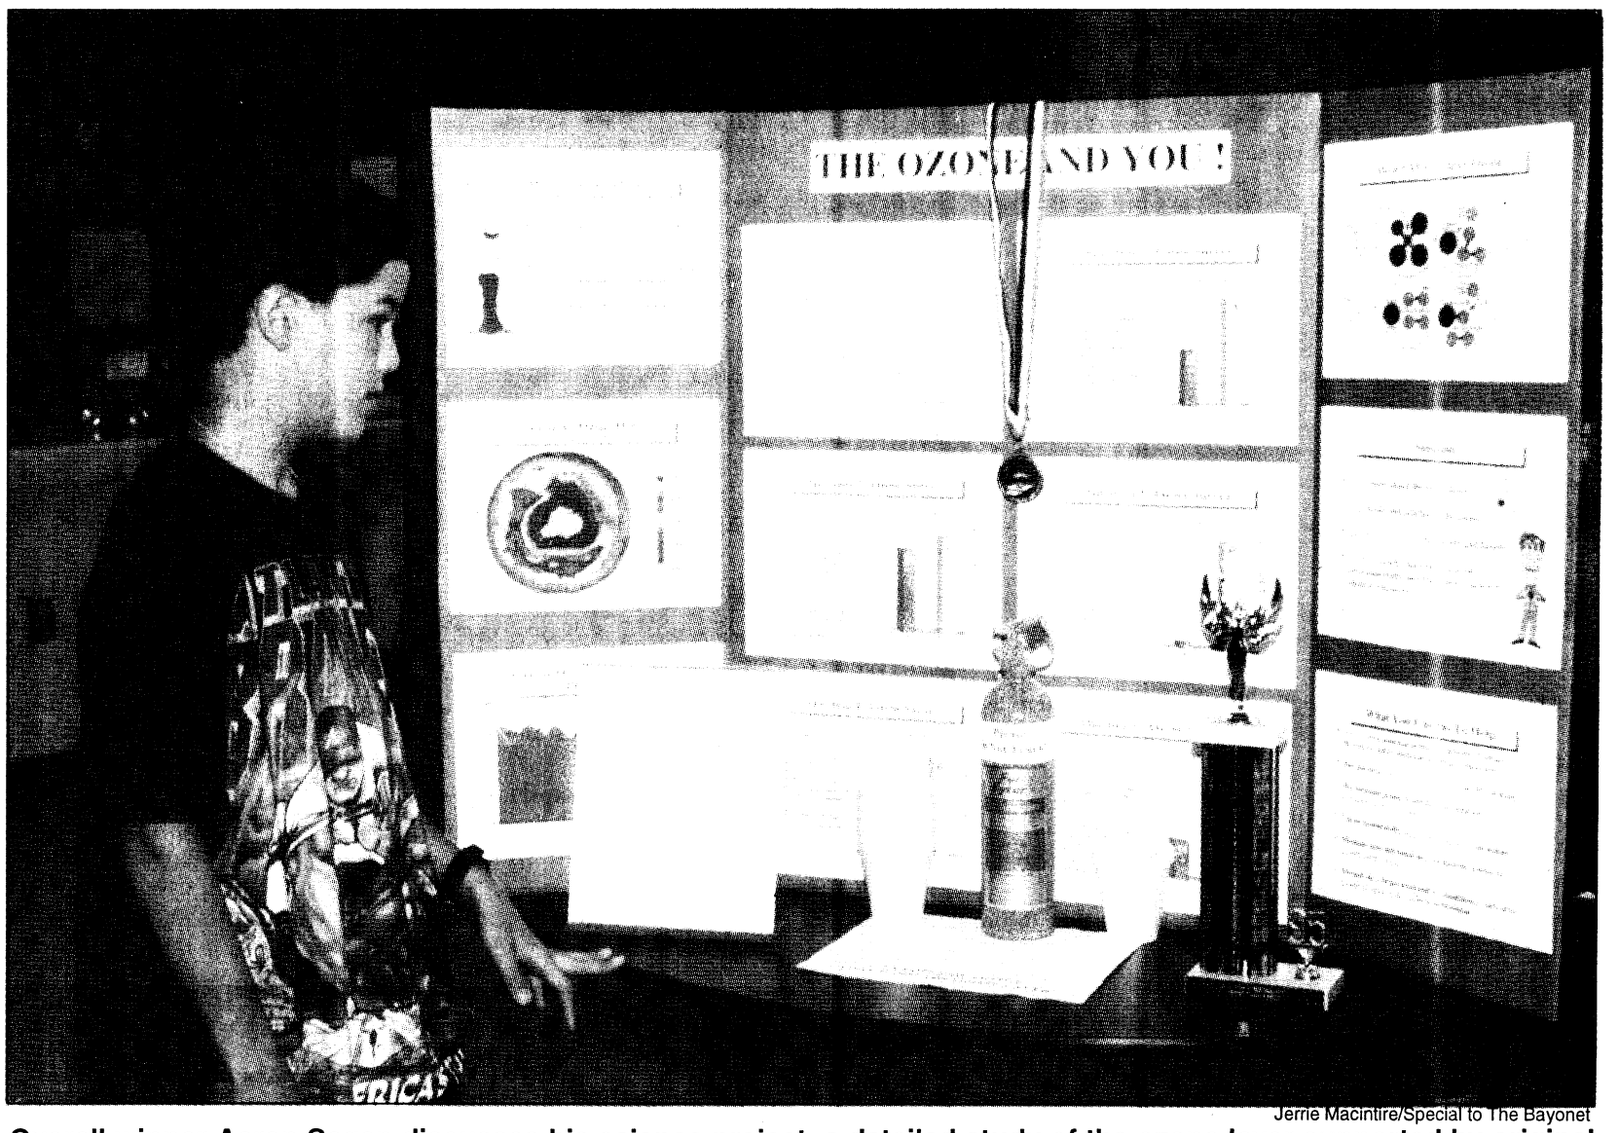
"They are always thinking of news ways to recycle, reduce, reuse and renew. They came to us with the suggestion of recycling school lunch milk containers."

The Earth Day projects represent one hands-on lesson in a curriculum filled with environmental issues, Keske said.

"It's part of our curriculum. We incorporate the environment in all subject areas all year long," she said.

In addition, each class in the school planted its own tree on Arbor Day, and classes regularly perform litter patrol duties at the school. The school also enthusiastically supports the yearly telephone book recycling project and the Christmas tree recycling service in Columbus, Wynn said.

Celebrating Earth Day is natural extension of the year-round emphasis on the environment, said Keske, an environmental advocate who is involved with the Keep Columbus Beautiful Commission.



The national Earth Day theme this year is preservation of natural resources by conserving energy, Keske said.

The first Earth Day was celebrated April 22, 1970, with the goal of including the environment as a major political issue.

The movement has grown and was revitalized five years ago with a major recycling campaign in celebration of the 20th anniversary.

In support of this year's national theme of energy, some students focused on the various sources of energy as well as conservation and renewal.

For example, one student used plastic balls and mouse traps to demonstrate what happens at the atomic level during nuclear fusion.

Jerrie Macintire/Special to The Bayonet

Overall winner Aaron Sagan discusses his science project, a detailed study of the ozone layer supported by original computer graphics and survey results.

Another student visited a local recycling center and photographed what he saw to coincide with his essay, while others conducted earth science experiments on plants, used cast off clothing to make crafts and illustrated methods of testing for lead in drinking water.

The overall winner was fifth-grader Aaron Sagan.

Other winners for the fifth grade include: Elizabeth Rowland, first; Ian Stewart, second; and Robby Berra, third.

Fourth-grade winners are Ryan Roth, first; Kenneth Curley, second; and Jon Rutledge; third.

Third-grade winners are Johnny Miller, first; Jessica Rousseau, second; and Angela Jackson, third.

Post volunteers shine at ceremony

By Jan Wesner Childs

Fort Benning's 3,500 volunteers contributed an estimated $3 million worth of service to the post last year. The dedicated volunteers were honored during a special ceremony April 21 at the Officers' Club.

"We love you; we appreciate what you do. Don't stop doing it," Fort Benning Commanding General Maj. Gen. John W. Hendrix told about 200 people gathered for the event.

"What you do makes us able to do things that we couldn't do in any other way," he said.

Installation Volunteer Coordinator Olga MacLean presented Hendrix with a mock check, drawn on "Infantry Bank," in the symbolic sum of $3 million. The check represents the amount of hours put in by post volunteers last year.

"The $3 million just kind of brings it home and puts it in quantifiable terms," Hendrix said. "For most of us who live in the austere world now in the Army, $3 million is a lot of money.

"If you had $3 million, you couldn't have bought the volunteers that we got because you can't buy that kind of quality for any amount of money."

The general joked that $3 million would be enough to provide heat or air conditioning to all the housing units on post for six months.

Volunteers who worked both on and off post were recognized for their hard work, long hours and commitment. MacLean praised them all for giving so freely of their time and talents.

"Annually, hundreds of people coach, teach, type, research ... and lend a hand to those less fortunate," MacLean said.

"At the foundation of a free society is a spirit of volunteerism."

While all post volunteers will receive a certificate of appreciation from Hendrix, several received special recognition at the ceremony.

Four were volunteers of the month:

• Kathy Dykes was given a certificate for her work with Santa's Castle.

• Sgt. Maj. Thomas Lytle and his wife, Debbi, were honored for their contributions to the Boy Scouts of America.

• Peggy Jackson, who helped develop the Army Family Team Building, was also recognized.

Seven people received the Patriotic Service Award for outstanding volunteer service. They are:

• Michelle Brito, who donated thousands of hours to the family member leadership seminars over the past four years. She's also worked with the Officers' Wives' Club, Patch Preschool and her family support group.

• Christina Fowler was honored for her work with 1st Battalion, 50th Infantry Regiment's family support groups. Fowler puts out the unit newsletter, serves as welcome wagon chairwoman and organizes fund-raisers.

• William Jones, who works with the Directorate of Public Works, initiated a program to reforest post lands with sawtoothed oaks, which provide a better habitat for deer and other animals. He and other volunteers have planted about 2,000 trees over the past three years. Jones paid for some of them himself.

• W. Eric Kennedy, a volunteer with post religious programs, has worked with the programs since 1986 and has donated thousands of hours, especially to single soldier programs.

• Mariah Sherman, who was recognized for her work both on and off post, volunteers at the Parent-Teacher Association at Faith Middle School, Big Brother and Big Sisters, St. John's Church, Santa's Castle and 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry family support group.

• Tina Warren, treasurer and co-chairwoman of Santa's Castle, is credited with extending the hours of Santa's Castle on Tuesday nights, which allowed more people to participate.

• Tammy Wisher, who is active at Dexter Elementary, has contributed countless hours with the Dexter Parent-Teacher Organization, including working with various fund-raisers.

Counseling services help soldiers, employees

By Richard Brill
Special to The Bayonet©

Fort Benning's Civilian Counseling Service helps employees deal with a variety of problems.

CCS offers assessment, crisis intervention, short-term counseling, community referral information, education and supervisory consultation, said Yvonne Wilbanks, civilian program coordinator.

These services are free of charge and are available to all civilian employees (Department of the Army and nonappropriated fund) and their families.

"We have no restrictions on what kinds of problems we deal with," Wilbanks said. "Stress, family problems, problems with children, depression, anger, substance abuse ... anything that affects the well-being of employees and their performance at work."

Wilbanks said the CCS will help employees recognize what problems they are having and determine a course of action. If it is necessary to refer the employee to outside counseling or services, then the CCS will work with the employee to find services the employee can afford.

Civilian counseling services are conducted on a completely confidential basis.

"No one will ever know that you came unless you tell them," Wilbanks said. "Participation in the program will not adversely affect your employment or promotion status."

Wilbanks encouraged employees to seek help while their problems are still small.

"If the problem is tackled while it is still small, it will be easier to overcome; but, no matter what the problem, large or small, we are here to help," she said.

She also encouraged supervisors to refer employees experiencing problems to the program as a form of nondisciplinary assistance.

In addition, Wilbanks asked supervisors to contact her to set up a stress management briefing for their employees in 1995. The briefings can be conducted at the worksite she said.

Richard Brill/Special to The Bayonet

Yvonne Wilbanks counsels a Fort Benning employee.

For information, call 545-2475.

"I look at the program as an employee benefit," Wilbanks said. "Similar services downtown cost money, but our services are free." "Both supervisors and employees are recognizing the value of the program. It's a good sign when people feel free to come and get help for their problems rather than trying to hide them."

Respite care helps disabled children

Exceptional Family Member Program

Respite care is defined in Army Regulation 608-75 as a program providing a temporary rest period for family members responsible for regular care of persons with disabilities.

The birth of a child with a disability or chronic illness, or the discovery that a child has a disability, has profound effects on a family.

When parents learn that their child has a disability or special health care need, they begin a process of continuous, lifelong adjustment. Adjustment is characterized by periods of stress; and, during this time, family members' individual feelings of loss can be overwhelming, shutting out almost all other feelings.

Coping with uncertainty about the child's development may interfere with the parents' ability to provide support to each other and to other family members. Even when the diagnosis is clear, there are still many uncertainties — health, programmatic and financial.

Social and community support can reduce stress experienced by families. The support of relatives, friends, service providers and the community can help families ease the adjustment period.

Over the years, there has been a growing awareness that adjustment to the special needs of a child influences all family members. This awareness has generated interest and has led to the development of support services for families to assist them throughout the lifelong adjustment process.

Within the diversity of family support services, respite care consistently has been identified as a priority need.

Families with children who have disabilities or chronic illnesses know the commitment and intensity of care necessary for their children. The level of dedication and care becomes part of daily life, part of the family routine, but this same commitment can make stress routine too. Parents can become accustomed to having no time for themselves.

Respite care is an essential part of the overall support that families may need to keep their child with a disability or chronic illness at home. Accordingly, in the spirit of care and concern for families with special needs or disabilities, Army Family Advocacy and the Exceptional Family Member Program have collaborated to provide respite care service.

Rebecca Welch, Family Advocacy social worker and program manager, reports that this collaboration is seen as a pro-active measure to assist in the prevention of child and spouse abuse.

Frances Howard, Exceptional Family Member Program manager, said that since not all families have the same needs, respite care is determined on a case by case need.

According to Howard, the most difficult problem for the family with a child who has a disability is finding the quality of care and expertise the child needs. Howard said that is where the special needs resource team can assist. This team helps in identifying the most appropriate child care for disabled children and will assist in coordination of services when necessary.

In addition to providing direct relief, respite has added benefits for families, including:

• Relaxation — respite gives families peace of mind, helps them relax and renews their humor and energy

• Enjoyment — respite allows families to enjoy favorite past-times and pursue new activities

• Stability — respite improves the family's ability to cope with daily responsibilities and maintain stability during crisis

• Preservation —- respite helps preserve the family unit and lessens the pressures that might lead to institutionalization, divorce, neglect and child abuse

• Involvement — respite allows families to become involved in community activities and to feel less isolated

• Time off — respite allows families to take that needed vacation, spend time together and time alone

• Enrichment — respite makes it possible for family members to establish individual identities and enrich their own growth and development.

For additional information on respite care for families members with disabilities, call Howard at 545-6969 or 545-5516.

Patricio Cobos (left) encourages his students Alejandra and Eugenio Urrutia at a fine arts concert at Stowers School last week.

Chilean violinists tune in students

By Jerrie Macintire
Special to The Bayonet©

A brother-and-sister team from Chile performed violin and piano numbers in a series of fine arts concerts in post schools last week.

Under the direction of their teacher, violinist Patricio Cobos, Columbus College students Alejandra and Eugenio Urrutia performed three pieces for youngsters including a Romanian folk song, a piano solo and a number by Polish violinist Henry Wieniawsky.

Alejandra Urrutia began studying violin at age 7, while her brother, Eugenio, began studying piano at age 5.

The duo presented two cooperative pieces, a folk dance by Bela Bartok and a piece by well-known Polish violinist Henry Wieniawsky titled "Polanaise Brivaute." Eugenio Urrutia also played a piano solo from memory, from Schuman's "Carnival."

In addition, Cobos, conductor of the Columbus College Orchestra, gave a brief history of the violin.

The violin has remained unchanged for the past 400 years.

"There are no marks of threads; you have to learn by memory where every note is," Cobos told Stowers students.

The bow, which is drawn across the four strings, is made from flexible wood and tightly drawn hair from the tail of a horse, he said.

"Don't worry," Cobos said. "The horse doesn't have to die. His tail is just shaved."

The concert was sponsored by the Enlisted Wives' Club and the Officers' Wives' Club.

Lifejackets required on small boats

By Emerson E. Addington
U.S. Coast Guard Auxiliary

Under a new law, small boat operators, who are responsible for more than 80 percent of all boating fatalities each year, must now have an extra measure of protection aboard their boats.

As of Monday, boats under 16 feet must have one wearable life jacket or personal flotation device for each person aboard, under new rules issued by the U.S. Coast Guard.

Under the new regulation, a "throwable" personal flotation device, such as a buoyant cushion, will no longer qualify for the carriage requirement.

The new rules also allow states to establish their own requirements for children.

Many states have already enacted rules that require youngsters to wear life jackets at all times when aboard small boats that are under way.

These same rules allow states to require people to wear life jackets while in canoes and kayaks and while riding sailboards and personal water craft.

The requirements for vessels over 16 feet remain unchanged — one wearable life jacket for each person on board, plus one throwable, such as a buoyant cushion.

Vote in GA, pay taxes here

By Jane Winand
Staff Judge Advocate's Office

The Georgia Motor Voter Registration Act makes it very easy to register to vote in this state. Applications for voter registration are accepted by several agencies, to include each county's motor vehicle registration office. Thus, you may register your vehicle and register to vote all in one location.

Many soldiers are taking advantage of this new easy way to register to vote.

By registering to vote in Georgia, you may be subjecting your income to taxation by Georgia. You may only register to vote in the county and state in which you permanently reside.

For example, you may claim Florida at your home for military and other official purposes. The added benefit is that Florida doesn't have an income tax for individuals.

But, if you register to vote in Georgia, that voter registration information is shared with the Georgia Department of Revenue — the income tax people.

Thus, when you file your federal income tax return, the Internal Revenue Service will then pass on to the Georgia Department of Revenue information about your income. Georgia will then send you a notice of the tax you owe. It may be easy to register to vote in Georgia, but is it worth paying Georgia income taxes?

If you don't mind paying Georgia income taxes and want to register to vote in this state, you must list your actual residence address on the application.

If you live in the barracks, you list your barracks' address. If you live on post but not in the barracks, use that on-post housing address.

If you live off post, use that off-post address. You must register in the county in which you live.

So, if you are assigned to lst Battalion, llth Infantry Regiment, which is headquartered in Chattahoochee County, but you live in McGraw Manor in Muscogee County, you must register in Muscogee County.

For questions about voter registration, contact the Chattahoochee County Board of Registrars at 989-3602 or the Muscogee County Board of Registrars at 571-4830.

Field pays homage to WWII chaplains

USAIC Chaplain Office

The Field of Four Chaplains is located between the Infantry Center Chapel and the School of the Americas. Many people remember this field as Chapel Field where reviews and honors ceremonies were conducted when Building 35 was headquarters for the U.S. Army Infantry Center and School. This area was renamed in 1987 in memory of four U.S. Army chaplains who served during World War II.

Chaplains George L. Fox, a Methodist minister; Alexander D. Goode, a Jewish rabbi; Clark C. Poling, a Dutch Reformed minister; and John P. Washington, a Roman Catholic priest, were on the S. S. Dorchester bound for Europe.

In the icy dawn of Feb. 3, 1943, the old ship, which had been pressed hastily into service as a troop transport, was pushing its way through North Atlantic waters with 900 American service men aboard. The ship was close enough to its intermediate destination, Greenland, that the accompanying convoy had left it. Then tragedy struck.

A Nazi submarine had been stalking her undetected; and, with the convoy gone, sent a torpedo slithering through the murky waters straight for the old ship's flank. The deadly missile struck amidships and exploded in the boiler room. Many died instantly. Others were trapped below deck. Jolted from their bunks, sleepy soldiers and sailors clambered to reach the decks of the stricken ship.

Many survivors told of how the chaplains quieted the panic of men frozen by fear at the ship's rail, whom the chaplains forced into life boats and life jackets. They told of how they prayed with the men and spoke words of encouragement. Several saw them hand out life belts from a box; when those were exhausted, they took off their own and put them on enlisted men. They helped rig a raft out of timber, cork, and other materials at hand. They were credited with saving many lives.

"The sound of men in panic is worse than any woman's screams ... hearing some calling for their mothers ... it was awful.," said one survivor, Richard McHale. The chaplains convinced many to at least leave the ship, that there was a chance for rescue over the side.

Exposure to the cold killed many, and those lightly clad suffered most. One witness saw Goode give his gloves to another man. After spending eight hours awash in a crowded lifeboat he was rescued. "Without the chaplain's gloves," he said, "my fingers would have frozen stiff. I would never have made it. As it was, only two of us survived of the 40 who were on the boat. I owed my life to the chaplain who gave me those gloves."

The four men of God had given away their only means of saving themselves in order to save others.

Men rowing away from the stricken ship in lifeboats saw the four chaplains clinging to each other on the slanting deck. Their arms were linked together and their heads were bowed. They were praying to the one God whom each of them loved and served, the God and Father of all mankind.

The S.S. Dorchester sank beneath the icy waters of the Atlantic, carrying with it the four chaplains and some 600 soldiers and sailors.

BEST RANGER COMPETITION

Teams from 25th ID are best

'Home' team takes fourth

By Marc G. Turchin
Bayonet staff writer

The 13th David E. Grange Jr. Best Ranger Competition came to a close Monday with an awards ceremony at Victory Pond in Harmony Church.

The ceremony honored all 44 soldiers who finished the competition.

The competition is a three-day event to test the competitors' mental and physical stamina, as well as their technical skills. This year's contest began April 28 with a physical training test and ended Sunday with a 2.7-mile buddy run.

Capt. Michael Trisler and Staff Sgt. Eric White, both of 25th Infantry Division, Schofield Barracks, Hawaii, came in first place. Their fellow rangers from the 25th Inf. Div., 1st Lt. Doug McCormick and Staff Sgt. David Howell, placed second. The third-place finishers were Master Sgt. Steven Green and Staff Sgt. Joseph Clark from the Special Warfare Center, Fort Bragg, N.C.

Staff Sgt. Jeffery Streucker and Staff Sgt. Aaron Weaver from Fort Benning's 3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment placed fourth in the competition. In fifth place was 1st Lt. Liam Collins and 2nd Lt. Todd Wright, both from the 82nd Airborne Division, Fort Bragg, N.C.

Gen. Barry R. McCaffrey, commander in chief, U.S. Southern Command and Maj. Gen. John W. Hendrix, Fort Benning's commanding general, were on hand for the ceremony.

"This ceremony is really to recognize the elite soldiers of the United States Army," McCaffrey said.

The soldiers who participated in the competition "came back here to compete to be recognized as the standard-setters for the combat force of the United States Army," he said.

One of those standard-setters, Trisler, who finished second in the competition last year and third the year before, said prior experience helped him.

"The experience and knowing how to deal with the pain ... finally paid off," Trisler said.

Ruth J. Spaller

Capt. Michael Trisler, who won the Best Ranger Competition with his partner Staff Sgt. Eric White, belly crawls under a barbed wire obstacle.

Trisler and White trailed McCormick and Howell with only three events left. He said he and his partner knew the final day would be theirs.

"We did everything we could, and we never gave up," he said.

Both Trisler and White had competed before, but never together. Trisler said he was stronger in some events than his partner and vice versa — they helped each other out.

"You're only as strong as your partner," Trisler said.

According to McCormick, you learn a lot about yourself by taking part in competitions like these.

"I think you learn what you're capable of because you are forced to push yourself (to) limits you wouldn't otherwise," McCormick said.

He said there was a healthy competitiveness between his team and Trisler and White.

"During the competition we competed against each other because straight up — we all wanted to win," McCormick said. "But, if we didn't win, we wanted them to win."

"I have the highest respect for the soldiers of the United States Army, and the rangers are the best of the best," Trisler said. "I have so much respect for the competition and the soldiers who do it that it raises the level of respect of myself and my partner," he said.

Post cable service to improve soon

Cablevision Industries signs new contract

By Jan Wesner Childs
Special to The Bayonet©

Fort Benning residents will soon see improvements in their cable service, under a new contract recently signed with Cablevision Industries.

The contract is effective May 1, and the improvements should be implemented within six months, according to Roger Garrity, a program manager at the Directorate of Community Affairs.

"What they're going to have is more channels and more options on premium channels and better reception," Garrity said.

Garrity said the current 33 channels will be expanded to 42. The monthly fee will stay the same for now, he said, but Cablevision is allowed to raise the price.

Post residents will also get special premium channel packages and pay-per-view service, similar to what is available in civilian neighborhoods.

In addition, Cablevision will install new fiber optic cables within the next six months, which should improve reception.

"The cable they have now is from the original contract about 10 or 11 years ago and it's just outdated," Garrity said.

Also under the contract, Cablevision will provide full cable service to all Fort Benning schools with cable lines.

Soldier dayrooms will continue to get cable at a reduced rate and there will be two post information channels instead of one.

Annual safety fair to focus on fun

Bike rodeo, prizes, skating, train rides to highlight event

By Jan Wesner Childs
Special to The Bayonet©

In-line skating, a bike rodeo, safety displays and door prizes will be among the highlights during the annual Mayor's Safety Carnival Saturday.

The event will run from 11 a.m. to 4 p.m. in the west parking lot of Infantry Hall and in front of the building on Gardner Field. It's sponsored by the Community Life Mayors' Council.

"The carnival provides information about safety concerns for children, both inside and outside the home," Community Life Officer Jennifer Morgan said Tuesday.

Several post and community groups are participating. Demonstrations will include the ident-a-kid van, where parents can have their children fingerprinted. There will also be displays by the DARE program, Alabama Power and the Coast Guard Auxiliary.

McGruff the crime dog will be there, and there will be static displays featuring a fire truck and a helicopter. The Columbus in-line skating hockey team will perform at 2 p.m.

There will be door prizes every 30 minutes, free train rides and free refreshments for children.

The day's main events are the bicycle and in-line skating rodeos. Children bring their own equipment and go through a riding or skating course designed to improve safety awareness. All participants will receive a special "license" and are eligible to win a new bicycle. Two bikes will be given away.

Although the activities are geared toward children in kindergarten through eighth grade, safety officer Debbie Gutierrez said everyone is welcome.

Organizers ask that pets please be left at home.

Young, old alike gather to honor airborne

By Lisa M. Hibbert
Bayonet staff writer

The sky was gray as though it would rain, but that didn't stop the 18th annual Airborne Awards Festival from taking off.

When the retired airborne veterans, their friends and family members arrived at the Airborne Walk, they came in hugging and talking — sharing the spirit of camaraderie.

Retired Lt. Gen. Richard J. Seitz, the guest speaker for the event, said he had come to recognize those soldiers whose service has been honored throughout the world.

"It was a real honor to be invited to speak," Seitz said. "I love these paratroopers! (By coming here), I get a chance to see people I have the greatest respect for."

"Airborne is airborne; you have that tie," Retired Cpl. Albert D. Resko said. "When I talk to the young soldiers here, it's a beneficial conversation between two parties — they look at us as airborne dinosaurs and listen to our stories and we're interested in what they are doing now."

"I've only missed the festival one year, 1989, and that was because I was sick," said O.B. Hill, founder and chairman of the 508th Parachute Infantry Regiment Association. "I love these guys; they're like my family. This is like going home."

The festival was not just for the retired paratrooper, many active duty soldiers also participated.

"This day lets older paratroopers reflect back on what they used to do and lets us (active duty) learn from them," Staff Sgt. Lou Woods, pathfinder instructor, said. "They tell good stories and it's fun listening to them."

Harold L. Wilson, a private first class while in the service, said it's the camaraderie that keeps people coming back.

"Once you've done it (gone airborne), you can't get it out of your system, whether you've been in one year or 20 years," Wilson said.

The festival included a memorial service at the Airborne Walk, a display of what the airborne student will go through while in Airborne School, an observance of an airborne operation and a Basic Airborne Course graduation.

Though the day was filled with structured events, there was still plenty of time for the participants to do what they'd come to do — share the company of their brave comrades.

Sgt. Maj. William B. Cox, Lessie V. Ivy and Spc. Sherri D. Reese lay a wreath during a memorial service at the Airborne Awards Festival.

Asian American, Pacific Islander Heritage Month Proclamation

In recognition of Asian American and Pacific Islanders and our nation's ethnic and national diversity, the month of May is proclaimed "Asian American and Pacific Islander Heritage Month." The theme for this year's observance is "Asian-Pacific Americans — Equality, Excellence and Empowerment."

The United States as a nation is comprised almost entirely of immigrants and their descendants. There are now more than 4 million Americans who trace their ancestry to Asia or the Pacific Islands. Their history is one of proud accomplishment with many contributions to the arts, literature, science, agriculture, industry, commerce and the armed forces of the United States. Asian Americans and Pacific Islanders have contributed significantly in the struggle for America's national goals and in the quest for freedom and opportunity. Asian American and Pacific Islander Heritage Month fosters an increased national awareness of the history and contributions of these people. It also inspires a renewed sense of pride among Asian Americans and Pacific Islanders.

I encourage everyone to enjoy activities here at Fort Benning during Asian American and Pacific Islander Heritage Month.

risk management

The Army's major mission and the reason the Army exists is to fight wars. Force protection — or what we used to refer to as "safety" — is value added to the warfight.

Force protection is so important that Field Manual 100-5: Operations includes it, along with maneuver, firepower and leadership as one of the major elements of combat power.

Its importance is obvious if you look at what accidents cost in terms of both lives and dollars.

The risk management process is being integrated into the staff procedures portion of the commander's decision process, which is how the Army does business in its most fundamental way — how it plans for and executes operations. We have, in fact, embraced safety in the name of force protection and are moving out with it.

Historically, more casualties occur in combat from accidents than from enemy fire. Accidents have caused more Army casualties than the enemy in every war in this century except the Korean War. In Desert Shield and Desert Storm, 75 percent of our casualties were due to accidents.

Tot Town sponsors say farewell

Army families throughout the world who have ever had an association with Fort Benning since World War II are familiar with the wonderful commitment and dedication of the Tot Town child development centers and the incredible love and attention expressed by the child-care providers for our military dependent children.

We have had an active center for the drop-in care of children since the early stage of World War II, initially so that wives of Army soldiers could roll bandages and support the military efforts. Finally, in the early 1960s, Daughters of the U.S. Army raised enough money to build a special facility for the care of dependent children at Fort Benning — Tot Town.

When the Commissary and Post Exchange Mall was constru , in the 1960s, we raised the funds to build a Tot Town annex. Both facilities were constructed with our funds, built on Fort Benning property and immediately turned over to the military as a gift to the post. Through all of these years we have provided staff and volunteers to assure the finest child care facilities possible. When other military posts around the United States began similar facilities with government funding, our director, Ida Barnes and her DUSA volunteers were asked to visit those posts to offer guidance on the set-up and operation.

DUSA's purpose has been loving, dedicated service to the military families and their children. It has been our joy and privilege. Throughout the senior Army staff and the senior retired Army staff, the commitment of Tot Town and DUSA has been famous.

Letters of request to keep Tot Town open as the military began to develop a child-care system were sent by us to all quarters. We stayed open, anxious to serve.

But, it is with incredibly deep regret that we must pass the baton to another agency or to the Army. We have done what no other child-care facility on an Army installation has bee able to do in the past 10 years. We have maintained a warm, safe, positive environment for the drop-in care of military children without spending a dime of taxpayers' money.

When parents are frustrated and need some time to themselves to avoid overreacting, Tot Town has been a safe haven for their children. When single military personnel have been deployed, Tot Town has been a home for their children. When volunteer organizations have needed workers, Tot Town has been there to care for the volunteer's children. When post leaders have made requests for child-care service, Tot Town has answered the call.

Designing, scheduling, providing well-trained care-givers, caring for and loving our military children has been our purpose. We are unique.

We have not ever been a drain on the U.S. taxpayers or the military budget. But, we have asked for help. We have asked for exceptions to policy. We have expressed concern at the outlandish requirements for child-care ratios in a constantly shifting drop-in program, in the requirement to discard perfectly wonderful toys because of a little chip or scratch.

We have understood that a large bureaucracy can get out of hand. But, in the past several years, we have lived with unfunded mandates, a scaled hourly rate that has now drained us beyond recovery.

Patch Preschool has faced the very same problem. It is impossible for volunteers and private organizations to survive with a graded payment scale. This is totally unrealistic. The rest of the world lives without such a system. It is a shame that the military has been forced to take this route.

Tot Town agreed to take a full daycare infant program for the post to assist in the care of the large number of infants. However, the majority of our clients pay the lowest rate outlined by the military for their infants' daycare. During the past 16 months, every day that we opened the doors to full-day care for infants, we lost money. We did not have Uncle Sam to pick up the slack.

During the past year, we have lost $45,000. No business, for profit or nonprofit, can survive that kind of loss for very long. We have asked for assistance (not in the form of money, but in the form of common sense exceptions to today's unrealistic child-care policies). Nothing has been forthcoming.

Despite it all, we have been honored nationally as a totally certified child development center — the first child-care facility at Fort Benning to be so honored. We did this with our own money, with a dedicated staff, with caring volunteers and an incredible director.

As much as we would like to continue to maintain Tot Town for many years into the future, it is impossible for us to do so. Our key leadership is retiring June 15. Our key volunteers are departing the post.

We are operating in the red at a more alarming rate with each month. Until the pay grade-weighted fee scale is revised, Tot Town and the entire military child-care system will operate in the red.

The American taxpayer should not be asked to subsidize military child care. The current standards do not fit with the political mode of the nation today. Parents should not be asked to subsidize the child-care demands of the government.

These demands are not being requested by the parents. The child-care standards set by the civilian arm of the military, which does not seem to place genuine love and caring above all else, must be revised to meet the strong, but simple standards of child care set by the average well-run American family.

Given the history of DUSA and Tot Town and our genuine commitment for the military child, you can imagine how devastating it is for us to make the decision to pass the baton. But, we have no choice. We earnestly pray that the Army will pick up the baton.

We are very proud that we have been able to provide our child support services for so many decades and the Tot Town sites for more than 37 years. We will never forget the precious children, fantastic families and committed staff that has made the Tot Town family.

Fort Benning has a very talented and dedicated child development team under the able leadership of the Director of Community Activities. This team has supported the Tot Town team at every turn. They can do no more.

The challenge lies in"unfunded mandates" from above. We support the child development staff and wish them great success in the future.

Garrison commander's response: Tot Town Child Development Center, sponsored by the Daughters of the U.S. Army, has provided a truly great service to the families of Fort Benning. For nearly 30 years, dedicated staff and board volunteers led by Sally Lasseter, Ida Barnes, Barbara Baxter and countless others gave their time and untiring effort to offer child care for children when the Army did not. When the Army began providing full day child care services at Fort Benning in 1985, Tot Town and DUSA joined the team and continued to serve as Fort Benning's hourly care center, provided full-day infant care at the Army's request and opened for special occasion care. Every effort was made to provide great service to parents at low cost. This desire to provide care without increasing hourly care rates has been a factor in Tot Town's decision to close.

We extend to Barnes and Baxter congratulations on their impending retirement. We will truly miss the fine staff and current Tot Town operation. The sponsorship and leadership at Tot Town will change. The Army is, however, dedicated to continuing to offer hourly care services to the installation. The Directorate of Community Activities is in the process of contracting out hourly care service. Every effort is being made to change program operation without closing the doors at the Tot Town facility.

Army targets smoking soldiers

New program looks at individual needs to quit

By Jan Wesner Childs
Special to The Bayonet©

Fort Benning is taking part in an Armywide effort aimed at getting 10,000 soldiers to stop smoking.

"We're trying to find out not how many soldiers are smoking at Fort Benning, but how many soldiers are interested in quitting and how many have tried to quit," said Lt. Col. Daniel Davidson, chief of Preventive Medicine.

To accomplish that goal, the post is participating in a two-year smoking cessation project. Fort Bragg, N.C., and Fort Hood, Texas, are also taking part.

Under the program, which started in April, soldiers are asked to fill out a health risk appraisal and smoking survey during in-processing. The survey determines if the soldier smokes and if the soldier has tried to quit or seek out information about quitting.

Based on their answers, soldiers are referred to quit-smoking programs on post — including two clinics that were started in January at Martin Army Community Hospital — or are provided with other information and resources.

The idea is to treat everyone on an individual basis.

"Depending on what stage a person is in, they may get a different type of intervention," Davidson said.

One reason Fort Benning is taking part is because of the high number of young enlisted soldiers here.

Nationally, one-fourth of all people smoke. But in the Army, 43 percent of active-duty personnel are smokers. In the junior enlisted ranks, the number is 49 percent.

"The goal is to get it to 20 percent," Ann Keiffer, coordinator of post smoking cessation programs, said.

Davidson said smoking in the Army affects unit readiness.

"Soldiers who smoke usually wind up going to health clinics more often. They don't perform as well in physical training," Davidson said. "In addition, we know smokers are susceptible to a number of diseases."

Reaction from soldiers during in-processing has been mixed.

"I've had a lot of them say 'How can I get intervention? I want to quit but I don't know how,'" Keiffer said.

Others have refused to even contemplate quitting, she said.

The program will eventually be expanded to include all post units and, possibly family members.

Anyone interested in more information on any programs to stop smoking can call Keiffer at 545-4041.

School board ponders program cuts

By Jerrie Macintire
Special to The Bayonet©

Changes in the before- and after-school tutorial program and English as a second language program were major topics at the regular school board meeting Monday.

The after-hours programs are expensive because of additional transportation and salary costs, said Richard Skinner, assistant superintendent for budget and personnel.

Skinner, who said the cost of both programs totals $390,000, recommended the extra instruction be offered during the regular school day.

"We are convinced we can meet these needs during the regular school day. It will cost some money, but not as much," he told the board.

Board members expressed some concern about the impact on regular students as well as those involved with ESOL or tutorial programs if teachers were expected to divide their attention during class. The superintendent responded, assuring board members that the needs of all students are "of primary concern."

"We are looking beyond the old pull-out programs of the past," said Dr. Dell Karr, superintendent. Enrichment programs could be offered during regular class time for those not needing extra instruction, she said.

After discussion of the impact of a pull-out program on all students, the board agreed to hear a more detailed proposal from Karr on the changes at the next school board meeting.

Also at the meeting, the board continued an on-going discussion of automating school cafeterias to save money and track information more efficiently.

A cafeteria computer system that tracks data from food inventories to daily menu planning "would help us significantly," said Alice Skinner, schools director of logistics, who has been researching various computer systems.

Skinner told the board the ideal computer package, including hardware, software and licensing for all seven schools, would cost $50,000.

"It might be worthwhile to make an investment in the future," said Col. Gregory Camp, school board president and Fort Benning chief of staff.

He noted that implementing the automated cafeteria program would save money in a number of ways, including reducing the number of cashiers and eliminating the need for meal coupon tickets students currently use.

The board voted to consider the proposal; members decided to order standard meal coupons for next year with the option of canceling the order, which would cost $5,126, pending the decision next month on the computer system.

In other action:

• The school board discussed upcoming elections. Scheduled for May 16, the elections would be for five positions: representatives from Dexter, Faith, Stowers and White schools and for the chaplain representative.

• The board heard a report from Janet Wynn, principal at White School, about the various programs in place including a schoolwide enrichment program, the active role of volunteers at the school, the science program and its on-going environmental focus and the arts program.

• The board heard a report that the school lunchroom fund for March had once again made a profit because of recent changes in menu selections and procedures. The fund netted $73, though the amount would have been higher if three payroll periods had not fallen in that month, Alice Skinner said.

• The board approved the school calendar for the 1995-96 school year.

• In the superintendent's report, Karr noted post schools celebrated the Month of the Military Child with a variety of programs.

She also reported the air-conditioning panel at McBride School that was struck by lighting had been repaired, and that kindergarten roundup, or preregistration, is scheduled for Tuesday.

Stowers representative Mary Renn asked when the post would be implementing a prekindergarten program for 4-year-olds that some schools in Georgia have started.

Karr said August of 1996 is the target date, but "the schools would need resources and funding for that program."

The next board meeting will be May 22 at noon in the conference room of the School Administration Building.

Feeding frenzy

Caroline deCamp of Faith Middle School participates in a math exercise designed to sharpen skills in graphing, grouping, statistics and calculating percentages and drawing conclusions from available facts. Sixth-graders on the Dinomite team fashioned cardboard beaks and broke into "bird families," then gathered a variety of seeds from their school lawn. The seeds provided data for math exercises and was a welcome exercise at the conclusion of intense national tests last week, teachers said.

Budget counselor one of first accredited in Army

By Karen S. Morarie
Bayonet staff writer

Fort Benning is among the first 17 Army installations to have an accredited financial counselor in its Army Community Service Consumer Affairs and Financial Assistance Program.

Patti Herron, an ACS financial counselor since 1989, received the accreditation March 1. While only 17 Department of the Army workers have received the certification thus far, ACS workers anticipate the training will become a requirement in their field.

"The information (in the course) really wasn't anything most counselors don't already know," Herron said, "but it was helpful to be reminded of some things. Sometimes we get used to working only in certain areas, and we develop a sort of tunnel vision. This helped remind me of some options I haven't explored in a while."

Accreditation requirements include:

- Two years' financial counseling experience
- Two courses and two standardized national examinations
- Three letters attesting to professional competence (one from a supervisor, one from a client and one from a fellow professional financial counselor)
- 20 credit hours of approved continuing education courses each year.

Herron has worked at Fort Benning for 18 years, nearly 10 of them with ACS. As a financial counselor, she provides workshops on budgeting, checking account maintenance, investing, home buying, consumer issues, using credit and planning for retirement, transition and permanent change of station moves.

Herron also provides individual assistance to soldiers and their families in budgeting, debt liquidation, planning for transition, home buying and consumer issues.

According to Ann Pratcher, Financial Assistance Program manager, soldiers and their families often dread going to financial counseling because they don't understand the program.

"They'll avoid coming here as long as possible," she said, "and by that time, they've probably made some bad financial decisions. They may have thought there was no other way out, but what we can do is help people solve their financial problems without making them worse."

Pratcher said one of Herron's strengths as a financial counselor is that she not only knows her job, she works well with customers.

"She (Herron) really cares about her clients," Pratcher said. "She's compassionate, yet objective."

Herron said she sees no point in taking a judgmental attitude toward her clients.

"We've all made mistakes, and I'm not here to judge people," Herron said. "If people are honest, I can work with creditors and help them."

Pratcher emphasized the program is not just for married soldiers, but it can help single ones as well.

"Most ACS programs are available to soldiers, retirees, family members of active or retired soldiers and civilian employees," she said.

ACS also offers Army Emergency Relief, Relocation Assistance, the Exceptional Family Member Program, the Family Member Employment Assistance Program, the Family Advocacy Program and the Information and Referral Program.

For more information about ACS, call 545-6969.

Money not an issue to this counselor

By Karen S. Morarie
Bayonet staff writer

She may be a newly accredited financial counselor for the Army with a case load big enough for three, but she's anything but the stereotypical "bean counter."

Patti Herron is experienced and thoroughly trained, and many customers credit her with saving their budgetary skins; but first, they're likely to tell you what a great person she is.

"I was really dreading going to budget counseling," one client said, "but she made me feel completely at ease. She didn't make me feel guilty or stupid, and she helped me come up with a budget I could live with."

One of the adjectives you'll most often hear about Herron is "friendly."

"I'm here to help people," Herron said. "When someone really takes in what we're teaching here, and successfully follows through with the program, that's what makes my job satisfying. It's a learning process for the person who's in counseling, and it can be hard for them, but when they make it, they feel a real sense of accomplishment."

Heron and Ann Pratcher, the financial assistance program manger, handle 12 to 18 new financial counseling cases each month, along with 30 to 40 follow-up cases.

"We have people lined up every Monday, and all the phone lines going," Herron said. "We advise people not to wait until they're in a real crisis before calling to sign up, because it can take us a few weeks to get them on the schedule. It's a lot easier to work with people before they hit the crisis point."

Herron herself seems to thrive in an atmosphere of near-crisis. She has worked at Fort Benning for 18 years while raising four children with her husband, Jack — sons Stephen, Douglas and Joel, and daughter Leigh Ann, who eight weeks ago presented Herron with a granddaughter, Taylor Ann.

Herron only recently quit her second job, under her doctor's advice. But the dark-haired, fast-talking, faster-moving Herron doesn't look to slow down too much.

"I plan to start my own financial planning and bookkeeping service when I retire," she said. "I have no plans to stop working."

MCSS to exchange too tight BDU coats

Army military clothing sales stores will accept exchanges on certain battle dress uniform coats, following a pattern redesign that causes sleeves to be too tight when rolled.

While the flaw has been corrected for future procurement, soldiers in possession of improperly fitting BDU coats can exchange them, at no cost, until Sept. 30.

Soldiers are encouraged to try on the coat before purchasing, ensuring a comfortable fit when sleeves are rolled, officials said.

Returned coats must be in serviceable condition.

Infantry Chorus needs soldiers to volunteer

The Fort Benning chorus is looking for any soldier who wishes to volunteer for six months. Soldiers who are selected will be attached to the 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment.

To audition, soldiers must get approval from their chain of command. Vocalists and pianists are needed.

For more information, call 545-4225, 545-4227 or 545-7078.

Yard work can blossom into awards for post residents

By Richard Brill
Special to The Bayonet©

It's not what you put or plant in your yard that counts, but rather meeting or exceeding the post standards consistently

Yard of the Month and Yard of the Quarter are two honors for which many post residents strive.

It's a quest that leads some to try anything from plastic gnomes and pink flamingos to plain old-fashioned dirt on your overalls yard work.

Jennifer Morgan, Community Life officer, said it's not what you put or plant in your yard that counts, but rather meeting or exceeding the post standards consistently.

"Yard of the Month and Quarter are not just arbitrary awards," Morgan said. "They represent some genuine, hard work on the part of those who earn it."

To be selected for Yard of the Month requires no less than eight separate inspections in a month, according to the standard operating procedures for selecting yard of the Month and Quarter. The inspections are usually conducted twice a week by the Community Life noncommissioned officers in charge when they perform their routine yard maintenance and deficiency inspections.

In each inspection, the yards are rated on a scale from one to 10. The mayor and the Community Life NCOICs will determine which quarters are selected, Morgan said. Inspections for Yard of the Month are not conducted in December or January because of climactic conditions.

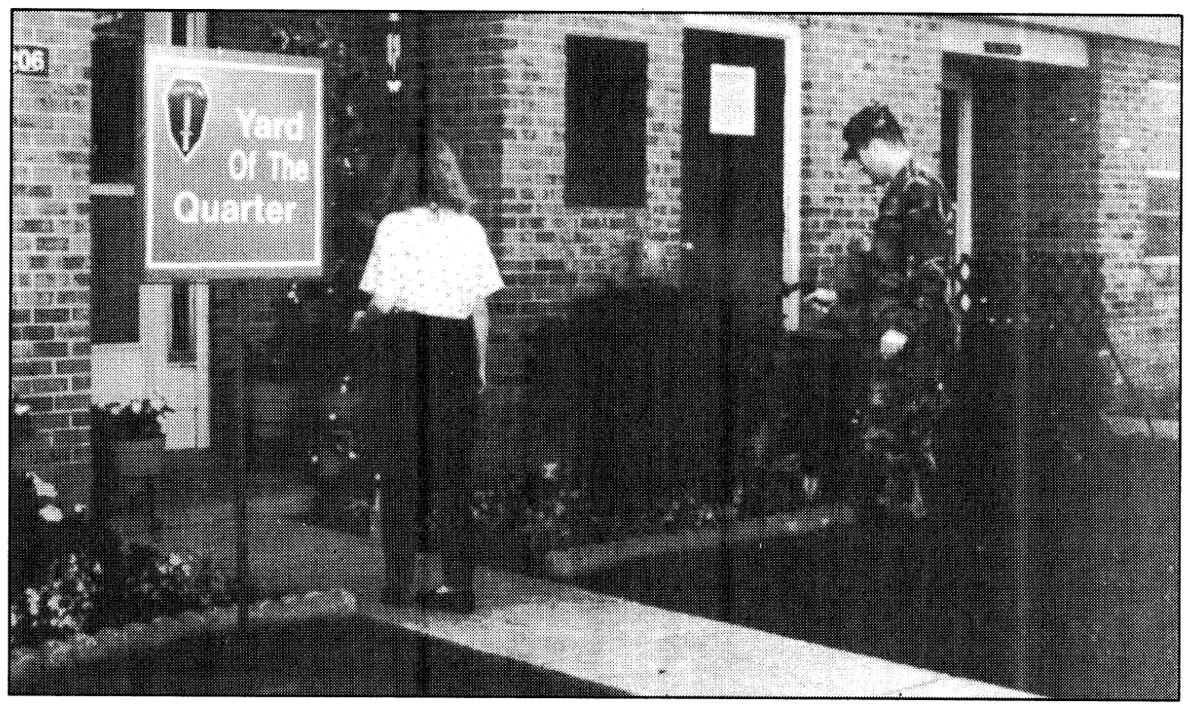
Because of the large number of quarters in Bouton Heights, Davis Hill, Custer Terrace, Upatoi Terrace and McGraw Manor, two sets of quarters are selected each month in these areas, she said.

Morgan said the inspectors try to be as fair as possible.

"The selection is not based on personal preference," she said. "The inspectors are looking for consistency. They are looking for how well the yard is maintained, if the grass is cut on a regular basis and if the bushes are trimmed properly."

Deficiencies that would count against a yard being selected include the yard requiring policing, mowing, edging along walks, driveways and street, raking of grass or leaves, trimming of shrubbery or vines, removal of grass or leaves in flower beds and removal of personally-owned vehicles parked on grass.

Since the rating is based on overall appearance, other deficiencies include untidy garbage cans, unauthorized or unsightly fences and pet waste in the yard.



Indianhead Terrace resident Sgt. Stanley Henry of the 104th Transportation Company recently had his quarters selected as Yard of the Quarter. Deborah, his wife, said the most important thing is consistency.

"You have to work on your yard every single day," she said. "It's not about putting a lot of extra things in your yard either. I've seen lawns with no flowers or decorations that look very nice."

Winners of Yard and Building of the Quarter receive Army and Air Force Exchange Service gift certificates, Morgan said. She said she hopes to increase the incentives given and also establish a Community of the Quarter Award to foster community spirit.

"It is important for individuals to take pride in ownership of their quarters because it says something about the kind of post this is," she said. "Residents can help keep this post in a high state of maintenance and beautification, and everything they do is highly appreciated."

Morgan encouraged anyone who has questions concerning the standards or selection process to call the Community Life Office 545-5931 or 545-5246.

School board elections soon

Fort Benning Schools

Fort Benning parents will be heading for the polls May 16 from 8 a.m. to 4 p.m. to elect school board representatives for the Dexter, Faith, Stowers and White Schools as well as the "at large" seat for chaplain.

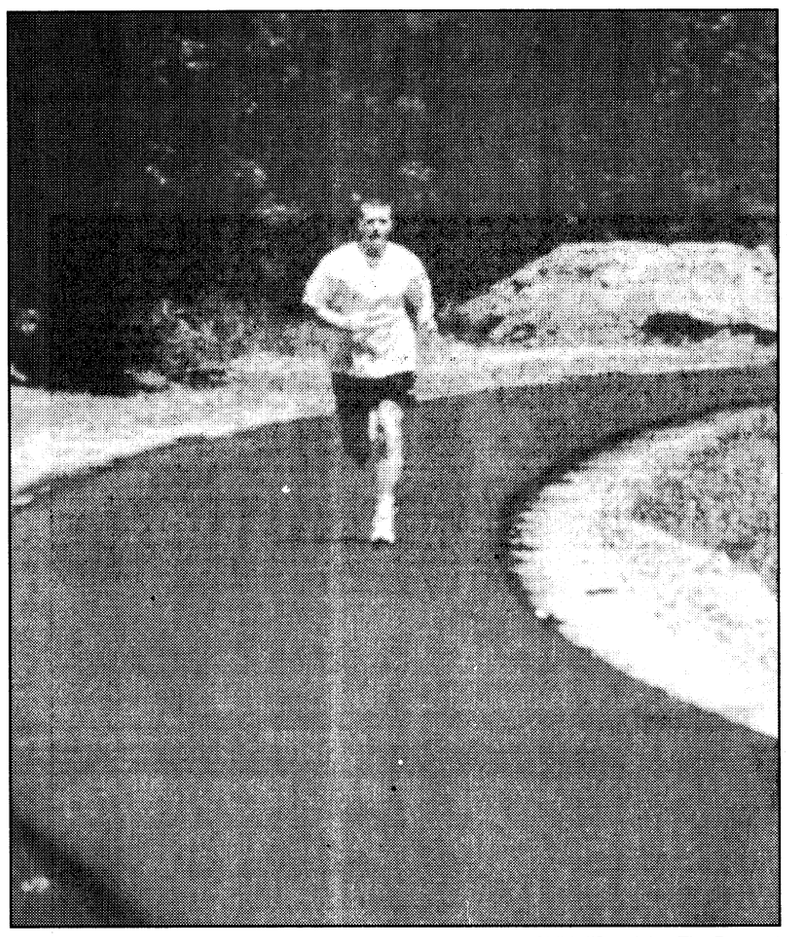
School board representatives are elected for two-year terms. The Loyd, McBride and Wilson School representatives have one more year remaining in their two-year terms of office.

Parents or guardians who live in the student's immediate household are eligible to vote for the school representative in each school where they have a child in attendance. Votes for the "at large" seat may be cast by each sponsor only once.

Absentee ballots for eligible voters who are unable to vote on election day can be obtained if the parent has a legitimate and prior commitment preventing voting from 8 a.m. to 4 p.m. on election day. Applications for absentee ballots can be obtained by visiting the school's office until close of business May 15.

Voting will take place at each school, where a sealed box will be placed in a centralized location. When the ballots are counted, no fewer than three eligible voters will be present.

There are five candidates running in the upcoming election. All of these candidates will run on uncontested ballots. The candidates are as follows:



At large: Chaplain — Maj. Robert Thompson, election for two years

School representatives: Dexter — Rhoda Zerger, election for two years

Faith — Col. William Brown, election for two years

Stowers — Sheila Long, election for two years

White — Adrienne Porter, election for two years.

Capt. Allen Edwards runs on part of the brand new Riverwalk near the post Information Center recently. Although the paved recreation trail isn't officially open yet, many people are already using it.

Riverwalk

on track for June finish

By Jan Wesner Childs
Special to The Bayonet©

The first part of Fort Benning's Riverwalk, a paved recreation trail, should be finished by the end of June.

"We are about 88 percent complete," Richard Chancey, chief of the Construction and Inspection Branch, said recently. "It has the asphalt paving on it. We are currently working on the shoulders.

"There seems to be a lot of interest," Chancey said. "We've already had people trying to use it."

The trail can be used for biking, running or walking. Phase one will be 1.4 miles long.

Garrison Executive Officer Maj. Chuck Walls said the Riverwalk was built because the post had so many requests for a recreation trail.

The $220,000 project was funded with money from the post's 1994 Army Community of Excellence Award.

"It will be a nice place for family members and soldiers," Walls said.

"It links up Benning and the city of Columbus a little closer."

The recreation trail will connect with Columbus' Riverwalk, which will eventually run all the way from downtown to the edge of post.

The trail leaves the riverbanks before it enters post. Phase one runs parallel with South Lumpkin Road, past the Information Center, parallel to Benning Boulevard and then right to 10th Mountain Division Road.

Eventually, the walk will go all the way to the National Infantry Museum.

Chancey said phase two is now in the planning stages.

Post, local community to celebrate

Armed Forces Day

By Ruth J. Spaller
Bayonet staff writer

"Forces for Freedom" is the theme for Fort Benning's Armed Forces Day picnic and open house May 20, which tops off Military Appreciation Week.

Soldiers, family members, retirees, civilian employees and the general public are all invited to participate in the week's festivities.

Local businesses, community organizations and post units are joining together to sponsor activities and events that enhance morale and promote cooperation between Fort Benning and the local community.

The Association of the United States Army will start off the week with a 7:30 a.m. breakfast May 15 at the Main NCO Club. Tickets are $5 and can be purchased from unit sergeants major or from Room 608, Infantry Hall.

Throughout the week, sporting events such as basketball, soccer, wrestling, boxing, tennis, fishing and golf tournaments will take place on post.

Several local businesses will also host events, with beach volleyball tournament finals at Scooters in Columbus May 16, and a darts tournament split between Coach's Corner and Victoria's, both in Columbus, May 15, 16 and 19.

The Columbus RedStixx will host military night at Golden Park May 16 and AUSA will sponsor a job fair at the Main NCO Club from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. May 18. More than 300 businesses have been invited.

A retiree open house will coincide with Military Appreciation Week this year, culminating May 20 with events in Infantry Hall.

The grand finale of the week is the Armed Forces Day picnic and open house in front of Infantry Hall, beginning with the "Burn the General" Run at 8 a.m. May 20.

From 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. there will be military displays and demonstrations, games, children's rides, entertainment and a business showcase. A variety of food and beverages will be on sale.

For more information, call the Fort Benning Sports Office at 545-4300 or 545-5777.

Paintball teaches teamwork

By Edward Benoit Jr.
TRADOC News Service

FORT BLISS, Texas — The object of the sport is survival, not simply hosing down your opponent with paint. For soldiers, it is combat training that allows their true colors to show — literally. It is the sport of paintball and many soldiers are getting into the increasing popularity of it.

Paintball is an international sport with more than 400,000 players on nearly 3,000 paintball fields in the United States.

The game is played with carbon dioxide pump action and automatic pistols and shotguns that shoot various colored paintballs as fast as 200 mph. The paintballs explode on impact leaving the shooter's colored mark on the target.

Two teams battle each other on a field loaded with barricades and obstacles. The objective of each game depends on the type of game that is being played.

According to Chuck Werder, a paintball establishment owner, the most popular games with soldiers are "Capture the Flag" and "Traitor," in which one teammate is a traitor and no one knows who.

"These kinds of games are great training for soldiers," said Sgt. James Ray of K Troop, 3rd Battalion, 3rd Armored Cavalry Regiment. "A lot of units do this kind of training in the field using MILES (multiple integrated laser engagement system) gear. Although MILES gear shoots farther, paintball is more realistic because it is quite obvious when you are hit. You can train a squad quite nicely out here and have fun in the process."

Spc. John G. Bole, Company C, William Beaumont Army Medical Center, began playing paintball while stationed in California four years ago.

"There is a lot of teamwork involved in the sport with just the right element of danger to make it challenging," Bole said. "You won't get hurt playing the game but you can get stung by a paintball."

The dangers only happen when people don't follow the rules, Werder said.

"Paintball has a real good safety record," Werder said. "It is statistically safer than golf. Also, all participants in the sport must sign a release stating that they have read all of the rules and are willing to abide by them."

There are many different people who enjoy the game, from Boy Scouts to platoon.

crime watch

Military Police Activity

This week's hot topic concerns the Armed Forces Disciplinary Control Board. The board advises commanders about off-post conditions that adversely affect the health, safety, morale, welfare and discipline of the armed forces.

The board receives reports and investigates incidents that expose service members to crime conducive conditions or other situations that affect their health, safety and welfare. Such conditions include racial and other discriminatory practices, prostitution, illicit gambling and unfair commercial or consumer practices.

Off-post establishments may be declared off limits to service members based on the recommendation of the board. This action is used by commanders to maintain good discipline and to prevent service members from being victimized.

The board can be very effective when other options have failed. Service members experiencing problems with off-post establishments should first try to solve the problem through the company's management. Then, if necessary, they should notify the Better Business Bureau. If the problem can't be resolved to everyone's satisfaction, contact the board, as it should be used only as a last resort.

TAKE A BITE OUT OF CRIME

The point of contact for the Fort Benning AFDCB is Ina Davis at 545-1133.

The following entries were extracted from the Fort Benning Military Police blotters. Such entries may be incomplete and are not the adjudication of the guilt or innocence of any person.

• A civilian was charged with shoplifting at the Main Post Exchange. The individual placed stereo equipment in a shopping cart and proceeded to the men's department. He then took out an Army and Air Force Exchange Service bag and concealed a bottle of cologne and the two stereos. He then went to the front line with the items, made a minor purchase, and exited the store without paying for the additional items.

When he attempted to leave the scene, the MPs apprehended him. Upon being searched, an identification card not belonging to him was found. He was taken to the MP station where he was issued a citation, post ejection orders and released to a relative.

• A civilian was charged with driving under the influence after an MP patrol heard loud music coming from a white BMW at a distance of more than 100 feet in the housing area. The MPs stopped the vehicle and upon approaching the driver detected a strong odor of alcohol.

The individual was given a field sobriety test that he failed and was taken to the MP Station where he was administered a breathalyzer with results of .092. He was then issued post ejection orders.

Other activities include 13 traffic accidents and five cases of driving under the influence of alcohol. There were six shoplifting cases reported at the post exchange facilities and cases of larceny of private property.

Remember to help "Make Our Pot the Best — Give Crime Arrest." Report any activity that seems wrong or out of place to the Military Police Station 545-5222 or 545-5223 or the "Crime in Progress" line at 545-5224.

ask the judge

Staff Judge Advocate's Office

Q: I recently tried to purchase some compact discs with a personal check from a record store at the shopping mall. The clerk demanded to see my credit card and then wanted to write my credit card number on the check.

The store's policy states it accepts personal checks so I do not understand why the clerk wanted my credit card numbers as well. In the end, I decided not to purchase any CDs from this store. However, I still would like to know whether the clerks actions were correct.

A: No. This store is engaging in illegal trade practices, according to Georgia law. Stores are not required to accept personal checks as forms of payment. However, if they do accept checks, there are limits on the credit card information they can require from customers as a condition to accepting checks.

Under Georgia law, a merchant is prohibited from either imprinting a credit card or recording the credit card number anywhere on the check as a prerequisite to accepting the check. Therefore, the clerk was wrong when he or she tried to write your credit card number down on the check.

On the other hand, the clerk can legitimately ask to see the credit card for several reasons.

For instance, a store can request a customer to show them a credit card as a means of identification or as an indication of credit worthiness.

Also, the store can record on your check, or elsewhere, the type of credit card you showed and its expiration date provided the notation is for the purpose of indicating your credit worthiness or financial responsibility.

Georgia law makes an exception to this rule in one situation. This occurs when the store has made an agreement with the credit card issuer to cash checks as a service to its card holders. Here the store is allowed to record the credit card number and expiration dates as a condition to cashing or accepting the check because the credit card issuer has agreed to guarantee payment of all card holder checks.

Finally, just because you show a credit card to a store does not guarantee the store will accept your check. The store makes the final determination whether your check is an acceptable means of payment.

Week recognizes Emergency Medical Services

American College of Emergency Physicians Public Relations Department

National Emergency Medical Services Week is May 14 to 20.

What is EMS Week?

As the nation moves closer and closer to health-care reform, it is important that the role of EMS in the health-care system is defined.

Emergency Medical Services is a vital public service, like fire and police departments. National Emergency Medical Services Week encourages awareness and understanding of our nation's Emergency Medical Services system.

Since President Gerald Ford signed the first proclamation in 1973, the American College of Emergency Physicians has coordinated the week along with a coalition of national EMS organizations and agencies to:

• Educate the public about the EMS system and its appropriate use

• Help Americans recognize and respond to medical emergencies

• Encourage prevention of illness and injury

• Show appreciation for the contributions of every member of the EMS team

EMS: We're There for Life

EMS providers are skilled and dedicated individuals ready to provide lifesaving assistance whenever and wherever its needed. They are available 24 hours a day, seven days a week, 52 weeks a year. The 1995 EMS Week theme emphasizes this important fact.

The Public's Role in EMS

Members of the public are often the first at the scene of a medical emergency and play an important role in activating the EMS system. Everyone should be able to recognize an emergency, call for help, and provide first aid. It is important that the public is aware of this great responsibility.

Not being able to tell if a situation is a true emergency or not knowing the correct number to call in case of an emergency can sometimes mean the difference between life and death. It can also unnecessarily increase health care costs.

EMS Week Activities

During National EMS Week, more than 30,000 hospitals and EMS agencies nationwide will conduct grassroots education programs and activities with the theme: EMS: We're There for Life. For information on EMS Week activities in your area, contact your state EMS office or your local EMS agency or hospital emergency department.

For information on national EMS Week activities contact the ACEP Public Relations Department at (202) 728-0610.

Story of the Staff of Healing

A common question asked during EMS Week is "What does the staff with the snake coiled around it in the star of life symbol represent?"

According to the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration, the story goes back to Greek mythology. Asclepius was the Greek god of medicine. In Greek mythology he was the son of Apollo (god of light, truth and prophecy) and the nymph Coronis. The centaur Chiron taught him the art of healing, but Zeus (the king of gods), afraid that he might render all men immortal, slew him with a thunderbolt.

Asclepius was frequently represented standing, dressed in a long cloak, with bare breast holding a staff with a serpent coiled around it. The staff is the only true symbol of medicine. Ironically, the caduceus with its winged staff and intertwined serpents, used by the Military Medical Corps and some physicians, is without medical origin, since it represents the magic wand of Hermes (in Greek mythology a deity) and Mercury of Roman mythology.

In 293 B.C. because of the plague, Romans adopted the cult of Asclepius who became known in Roman mythology as Aesculapius.

Another significant reference to the serpent on a staff associated with healing is as follows: "Moses accordingly made a bronze serpent and mounted it on a pole, and whenever anyone who had been bitten by a serpent looked at the bronze serpent, he recovered." (Numbers 21:9)

Competitors burn to be 'Best Ranger'

By Ruth J. Spaller
Bayonet staff writer

He's tired and sore. His muscles burn. His arms and legs are cramping, but he can't stop now. The blisters on his heels are hot and raw — as is the spot on his back where his rucksack rubbed during the road march.

He faces the obstacle, refusing to even let himself think he won't make it. He musters all his remaining strength, jumps as high as possible, latches on and climbs the 25-foot rope, his face contorted with the effort. His legs and arms shake visibly, his muscles failing. He's up and over the top, then down the other side, sweating profusely.

Putting all thoughts of fatigue, pain and defeat out of his mind, he runs to the next obstacle — a tall tower of logs with long, sloping ropes to slide down. He's only halfway through.

Multiply this scenario by the 12 events competitors braved in the 13th annual David E. Grange Jr. Best Ranger Competition April 28 through Sunday, and you have an idea what the rangers were up against.

Forty teams started the three-day, nonstop competition — two-man teams made up of the elite's elite, all in peak physical shape — but only 22 finished.

Ranging in age from 22 to 39 and in rank from specialist to major, the competitors pushed themselves through grueling events like the Prusik climb, hitching themselves 60 feet straight up a rope as fast as possible, then rappelling down again in one long, smooth motion, like a spider.

The first night they struggled through a forced road march, known as "the big weed out," carrying 50-pound rucksacks 23.1 miles in less than six hours.

The winning team completed the march in 4 hours and 43 minutes. Ten teams did not make it in the required time and were dropped from the competition.

They slept 15 minutes to 1 1/2 hours at a stretch when they had time between events. They ate the same way, digging into one of the five issued meals, ready-to-eat when they had a spare moment not long enough for a nap.

"It's like the sign going into Camp Darby says," said three-year veteran competitor Staff Sgt. Peter J. Roethke, coach of this year's teams from the 25th Infantry Division. "It's not for the weak or faint hearted ... it takes a lot of desire and personal effort."

Many of the competitors spent at least three months doing nothing but training for the competition. Most came early to Fort Benning to familiarize themselves with the moving target range, land navigation and canoe race courses.

But despite all the preparation, "You don't know what it's going to be like on day two," Roethke said. Unless they've done it before, competitors just can't prepare for the level of physical and mental exhaustion they reach, he said.

By the morning of the third day, "You can't even think about it (the pain) — if you do, it'll overcome you," said Staff Sgt. John Breach, a fourth-year competitor from the 82nd Airborne Division.

"By then you're pretty much depleted," said competitor Staff Sgt. Julian Blum of the 18th Airborne Corps. "It's all gut from there."

So why do they do it? "The pistols," Breach said, referring to the handguns awarded to the winners, "and everything that goes with them."

"It's the desire to reach the pinnacle goal in the ranger community ... to prove to everybody that they're the best," Roethke said. "Once you've won it, what else is there to prove? You are the best of the best."

U.S. Sen. Paul Coverdell (Georgia) attended a briefing at Camp Frank D. Merrill in Dahlonega, Ga., April 21. Coverdell was briefed by the commander, 5th Ranger Training Battalion, Lt. Col. Luke Green on the camp's organization, area of operation, units that visit the camp for training, and the economic impact statement showing the effect of the ranger camp on Dahlonega and Lumpkin County. Following the briefing, the senator was taken on a tour of the camp and was presented a commemorative 5th RTB coin.

SOUTHCOM cdr visits School of Americas

By Judith Ginder
School of the Americas

The commander in chief, U.S. Southern Command was at the School of the Americas Monday to talk to officers at the school's Command and General Staff Course.

Gen. Barry R. McCaffrey, who has served as the SOUTHCOM commander in chief in Panama since February 1994, told the officers how important their training at the School of the Americas is.

The course is 48 weeks long and is the same as the CGSC at Fort Leavenworth, Kan., except that it is taught solely in Spanish.

"We come together to study and work for a common goal using the Spanish language as our tool," McCaffrey said.

McCaffrey commands U. S. sea, air and ground operations in Latin America and looks at the Americas as an enormous area with tremendous prospects for the future.

"Of course we do have our problems in Latin America," he said. "You see it in the crime, in the lost opportunity and the destruction of youth."

McCaffrey was quick to point out, however, that Latin America is an area of forward movement and change. All Latin American countries are now democratic with the exception of Cuba.

He also pointed out that the nations in Latin America are not only the least militarized nations in the world, but they are not and do not intend to create any weapons of mass destruction.

McCaffrey told the "generals of tomorrow" that they must learn from each other and from their Latin American allies by working together.

He spoke about the downsizing of U.S. forces in Latin America.

"Our presence will be one-third smaller," McCaffrey said, "It will be smaller, smarter and cheaper."

Of the 63,000 U.S. forces deployed to Latin America last year, more than half were reservists on their once a year, two-week training mission. The others were, for the most part, special operations groups including Special Forces and Navy Sea-Earth-Air-Land teams.

McCaffrey said the training in the future needs to be practical not only theoretical.

Gen. Barry R. McCaffrey, commander of SOUTHCOM, visited Fort Benning Monday.

"At the end of the day, the classroom isn't reality; the field training is," McCaffrey said.

McCaffrey spoke highly of the School of the Americas and what is being done in the school.

"Based on the standards and laws of the United States, the School of the Americas has made a small, but important contribution to the Americas mission," McCaffrey said.

Green to gold offers college opportunities

By Gerald J. Gallegos
Retention Services Division

The Army Green to Gold program seeks talented young enlisted soldiers who are considering leaving active duty to attend college.

This program allows qualified soldiers with officer potential to request early discharge for enrollment into college and an Army ROTC program. Upon graduating, participants earn an undergraduate degree and an Army commission as a second lieutenant.

Army ROTC provides funding for college costs, through its scholarship program, for selected students. Armywide, 452 soldiers applied for the 250 scholarships awarded this academic year. The scholarship application window begins around Dec. 1 and ends around March. Now is the time to start preparing for academic year 1996-97.

Those who elect not to apply, or do not qualify for the scholarship program, may opt for the nonscholarship Green to Gold Program.

Unit retention noncommissioned officers or the ROTC unit at Columbus College can explain the eligibility requirements.

Individuals participating in either the scholarship or nonscholarship program will receive a $150 per month stipend for up to 10 months per year, and all earned veterans benefits, and entitlements under the Montgomery GI Bill and College Fund. Participants may also join a National Guard or Reserve unit and participate in the Simultaneous Membership Program. Additional cash benefits may be earned through that program.

Army ROTC has opportunities for veterans too close to getting out of the Army to take part in the Green to Gold Program.

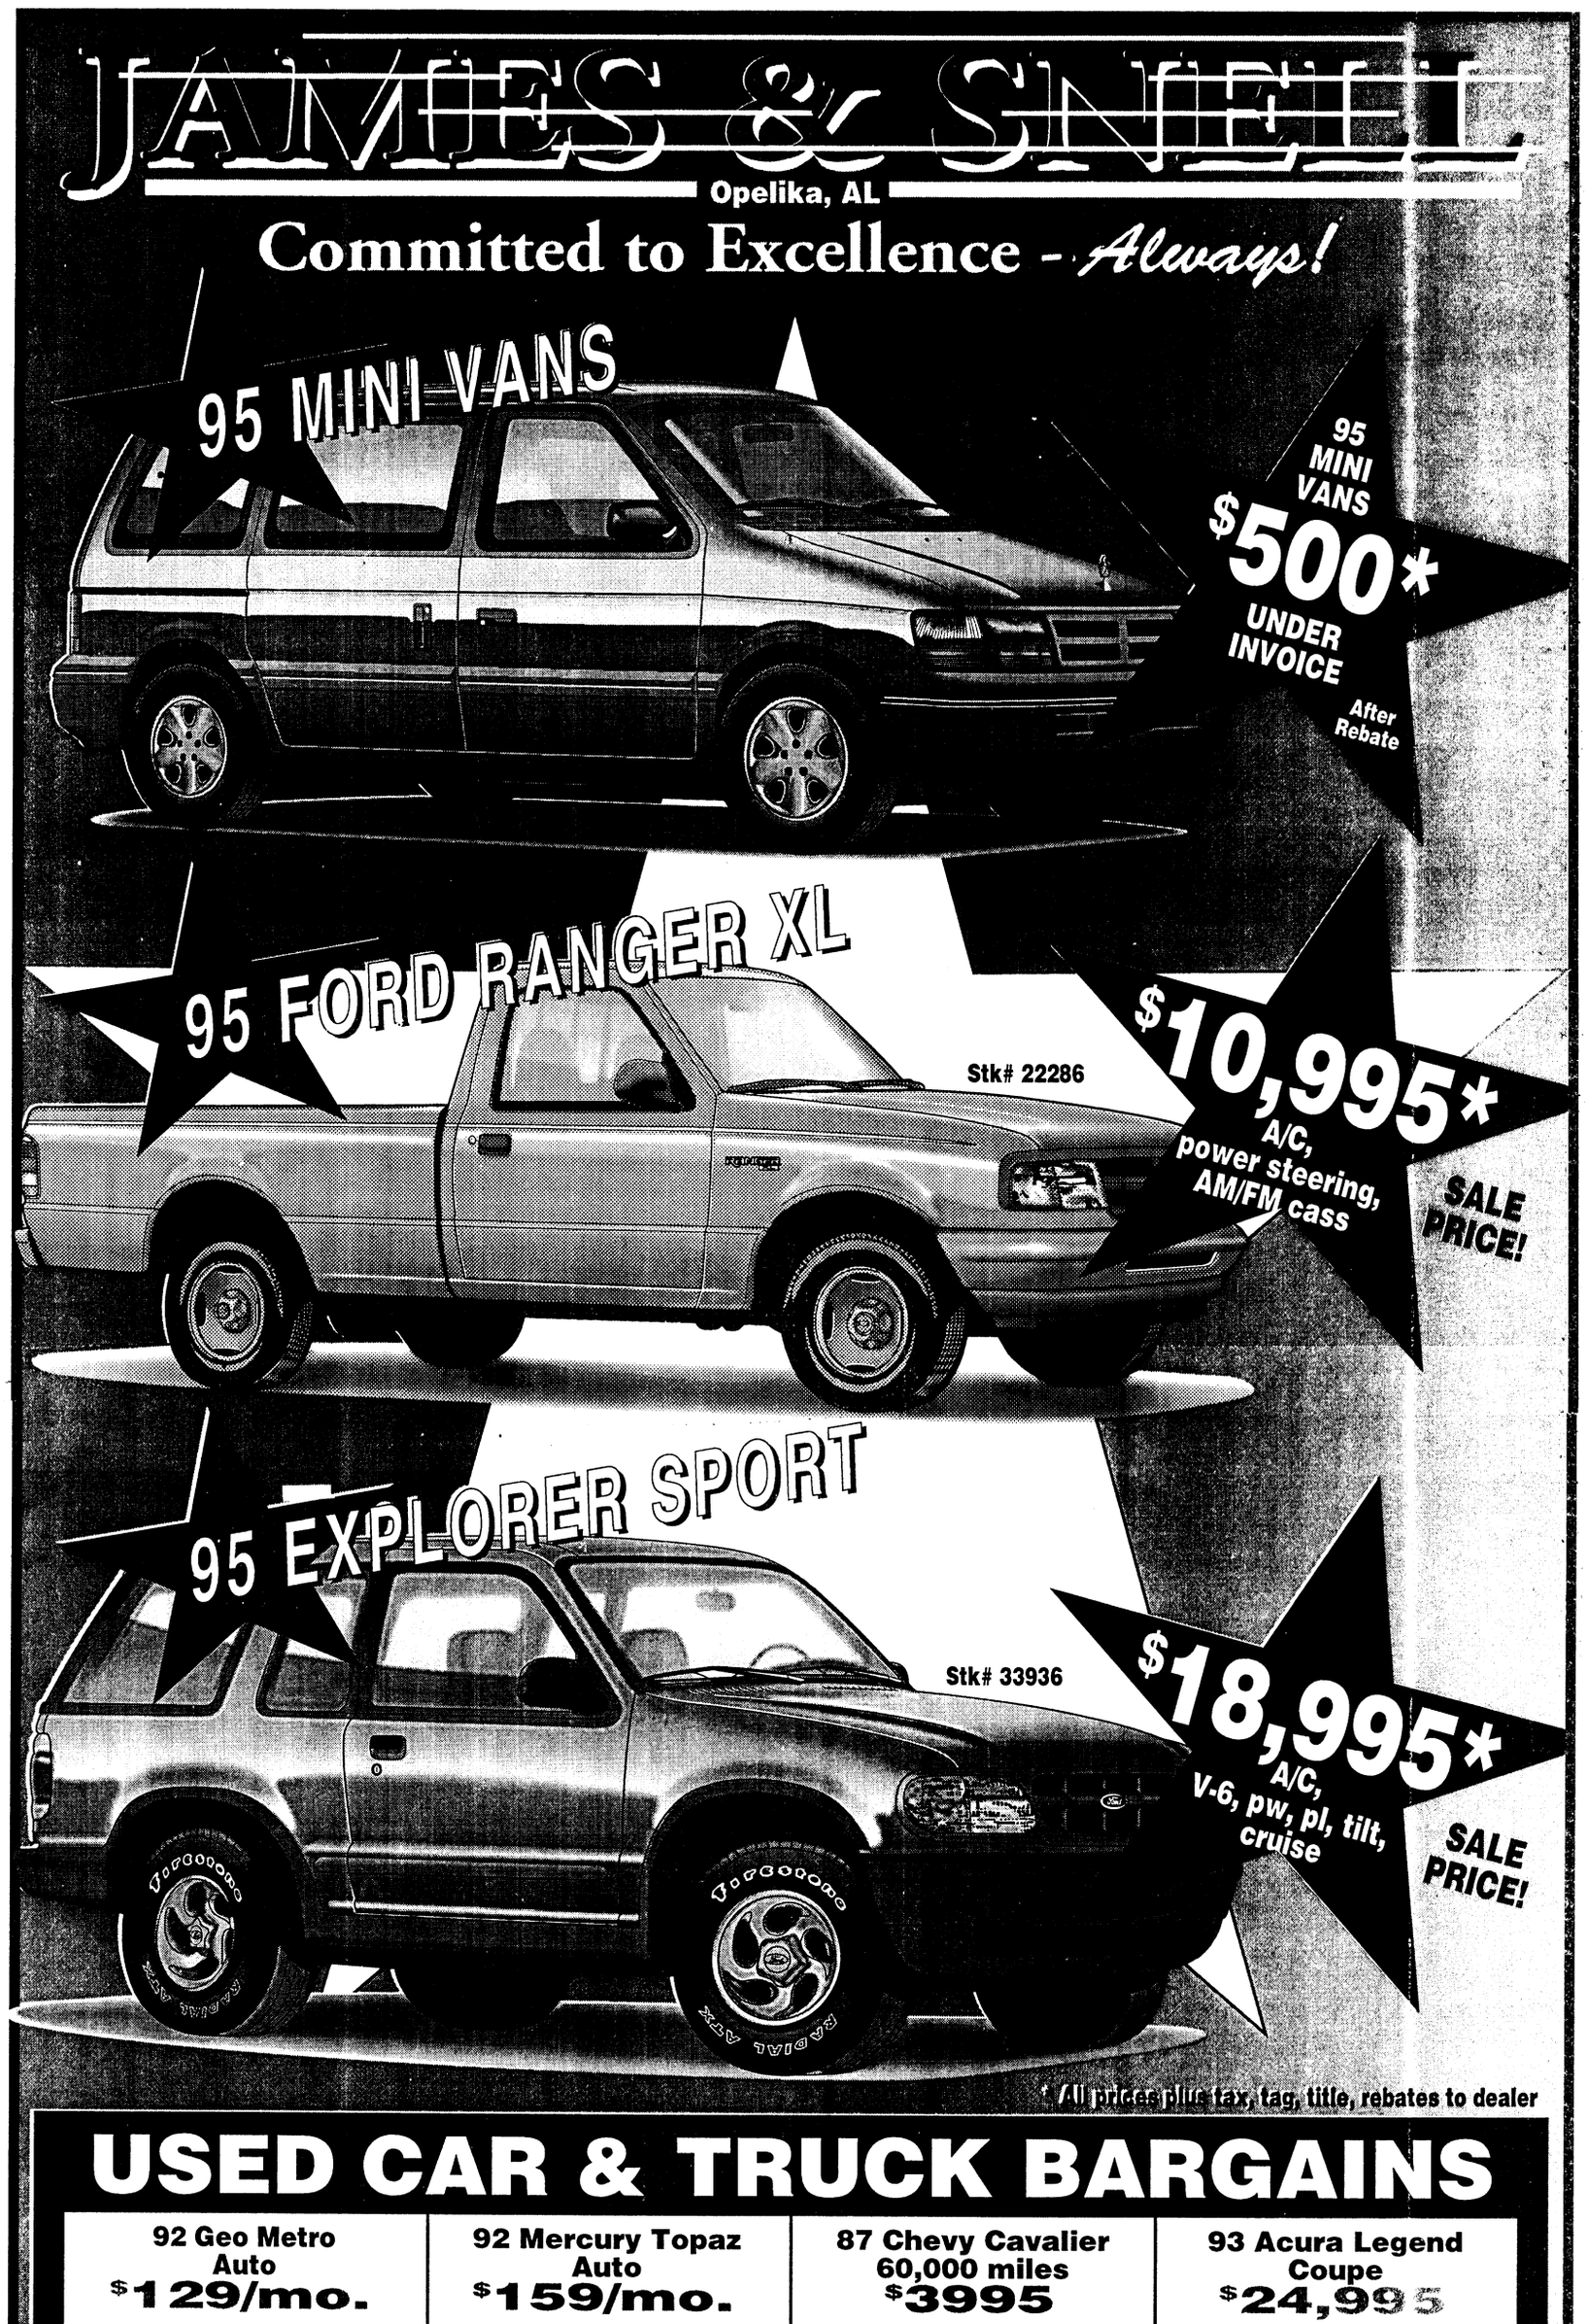
For more information, call your unit retention noncommissioned officer or the Columbus College ROTC Department at 568-2058.

IOBC to graduate officers

By Ed Gawlik
2nd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment

The students of Class 2-95, Company B, 2nd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment, will graduate from the Infantry Officer Basic Course at 1 p.m. May 12 in Marshall Auditorium.

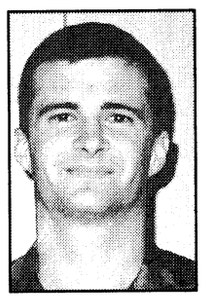
The course is 16 weeks long and is a field-oriented, hands-on program of instruction designed to educate lieutenants and prepare them to lead rifle platoons in combat. Class 2-95 began Jan. 22.



The course includes instruction in squad through company-level tactics, capabilities of modern weapons and supporting arms and leadership. There are also five major field training exercises, including squad- and platoon-level maneuver live-fire exercises.

The student company is divided into four student platoons of approximately 26 lieutenants. Each platoon is trained by cadre consisting of one senior platoon trainer, a captain and two other platoon trainers — a sergeant first class and a staff sergeant.

The class consists of 91 U.S. officers commissioned through state and federal Officer Candidate Schools, ROTC and the military academies.



Two-thirds of the class will return to their National Guard units. The remainder will remain on active duty, most reporting to the U.S. Army Ranger School in the next month before going to their units.

The class also included 12 international military students from nine countries. These students must first complete language certification in San Antonio, Texas, before reporting to IOBC.

Bayonet writer wins educators' awards

By Agatha Hudson Debrow
Bayonet editor

A staff writer for the Fort Benning Bayonet received two awards at the Georgia Association of Educators annual awards banquet April 28.

Jerrie Macintire, a contract staff writer for The Advertiser Company, printers of The Bayonet, received two Georgia Association of Educators' School Bell Media Awards — one for best year-round coverage and one for best feature article in the weekly or biweekly newspaper with less than 30,000 circulation category.

"This is a wonderful honor for both Jerrie and The Bayonet," Dr. Dell Karr, superintendent of Fort Benning Schools, said at the banquet. "The support we get from the media is extremely important as we work together to provide the very best for children."

Caroline Myers, a second grade teacher at Fort Benning's Morris R. McBride School and president of the Benning Education Association, nominated Macintire for the awards.

"We feel excellence should be recognized, and that's why we chose (to nominate) her," Myers said. "Jerrie has been a tremendous asset to Fort Benning schools and very cooperative in working with the schools in getting out information to the public. We feel she went further than a lot of people would have to help us, and we appreciate it."

The awards banquet was part of the 25th anniversary of the Georgia Association of Educators annual convention. More than 550 educators from across the state attended the gala event at the Sheraton Gateway Hotel and Georgia International Convention and Trade Center in College Park, Ga.

Faye Smith, a first-grade teacher who has worked for 27 years in the Baldwin County School System in Milledgeville, Ga., and president of the GAE, said the association recognizes members of the media because the coverage they provide touches everybody.

"One way we get the commitment we need is from media support through the publication of positive coverage that explains what goes on in the classroom today," Smith said. "The media — both television and newspapers — touch everybody."

Macintire received two engraved, golden bells along with a framed certificate. She summed up her feelings about the awards in one word: "Honored."

Labels needed for drive

Family Child Care

Organizers need soup labels to purchase playground equipment for Russ Pond.

Only two percent of the 345,650 Campbell's Soup Company labels needed have been collected.

The drive is part of the Campbell's Labels for Education program and was launched in January by the Family Child Care providers at Fort Benning.

Labels from more than 1,000 Campbell's products can be redeemed for educational equipment and materials.

Campbell's products include: anything with the company's label, Marie's, Mrs. Paul's, Swanson, V-8, Early California, Franco-American, Vlasic, Pepperidge Farm and Prego.

The goal is to collect enough labels to trade for the playground equipment. Only 5,000 of the 345,650 labels needed have been collected. The drive will end March 1.

There are label drop-off points at all community of life buildings and the Commissary. Many of the child-care providers will accept labels. Their homes can be identified by the yellow rainbows in the windows.

The Family Child Care providers are also looking for volunteers to help distribute fliers about the program, trim and remove labels from cans, and count and sort labels.

For more information, call Debbie Snoke at 687-6823.

Students re-enact Battle of Gettysburg

Confederate and Union soldiers engage in hand-to-hand fighting on Cemetery Ridge as students dramatize Pickett's Charge.

Fifth-graders take history to heart with realistic soldiers and wounded

By Jerrie Macintire
Special to The Bayonet©

History came alive for fifth-grade students at White School, who re-enacted one phase of the famous Battle of Gettysburg at their school recently.

Under the direction of teacher Evelyn Braman, students played out their assigned roles as they dramatized Pickett's Charge, one of the most well-known assaults in American military history, which is recognized as a turning point in the Civil War.

Counting cadence and stepping in time to a field near their school, the students took up their assigned roles as Braman orchestrated the event and narrated with the aid of a megaphone.

"Soldiers" in the Confederate Army under General George Pickett gave a rebel yell as they marched shoulder to shoulder into the superior weapons of "Union" marksmen.

Confederates continued to fall as they crossed Cemetery Ridge until a contingent of half the original soldiers reached the center of the Union line and engaged in hand to hand fighting.

After the mock battle, students took up additional roles as they re-enacted what the field hospital must have been like for the soldiers.

With bandages, plastic saws and ketchup adding realism, the "doctors" rotated among their many classmates to bandage wounds and amputate limbs for those still alive.

Getting into his role, "physician" Nate Lanier bent over an injured classmate as patted his shoulder and pretended to amputate an arm. "You'll be OK, son. Just hang in there. You'll soon be going home to your wife," he said.

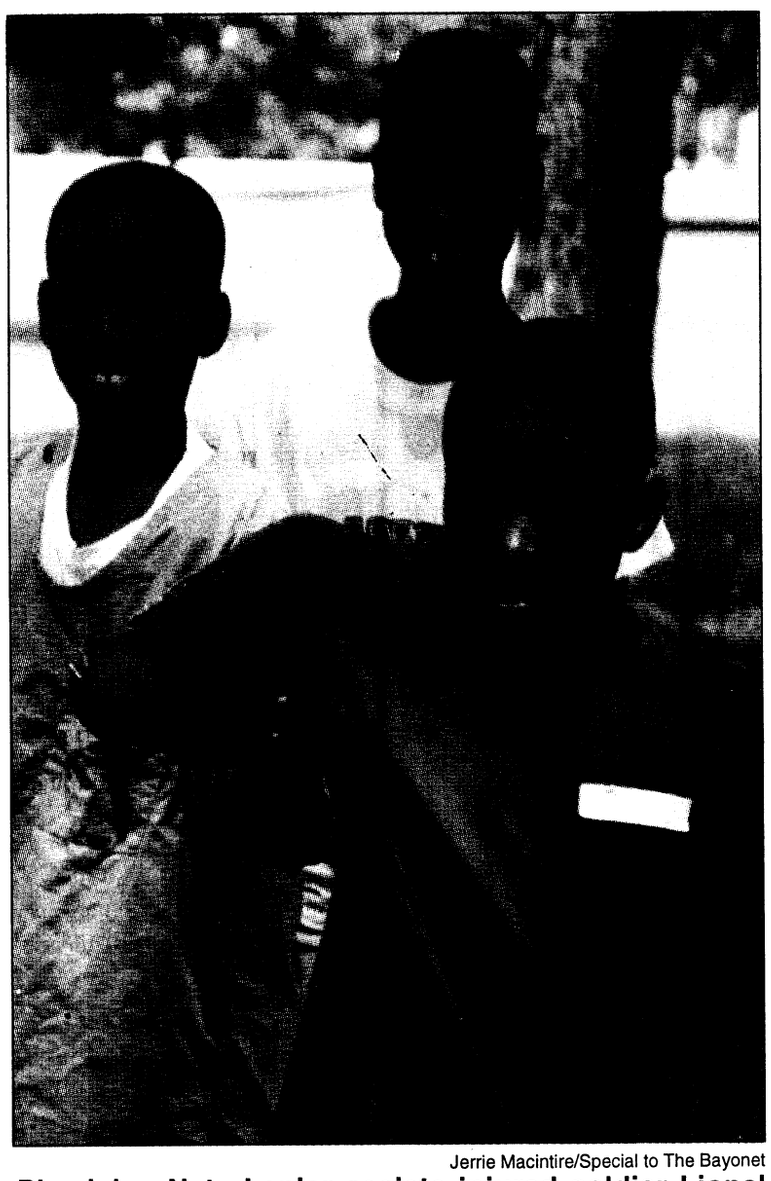
"This re-enactment is statistically correct," said assistant principal Melanie Keating. Braman helped students use math to figure the number of classmates who would be mortally wounded in battle, the ones who would portray Union soldiers, and those who would portray Confederates.

A small group of students designated as doctors rotated among their "wounded" peers, helping the children visualize how heavy casualties were and emphasizing the shortage of medical care.

In addition to historical facts and statistics, students discussed the human element of battle as they imagined what it might have been like.

"There was a shortage of doctors, and they ran out of medicine. It was terrible," Braman said.

Students also discussed the compassion fatigue doctors must have felt as they amputated hundreds of arms and legs. Casualties were high, with Pickett losing 5,000 of his original force of 15,000 men.



In addition to the battle statistics, Braman also incorporated language arts into the study unit; students put themselves in the place of survivors and wrote imaginary letters home to family members and to the families of their fallen comrades.

"The letters were touching," said Janet Wynn, principal. "One boy wrote that he would be returning home, but he wouldn't be whole. This assignment enabled students to visualize the long range effects of the battle."

In addition, students studied the famous Gettysburg Address and sharpened their oratory skills as they learned their lines.

The realistic history lesson peaked interest in the Civil War, Wynn said.

"Some of our students even visited battlefields while on vacation with their families. They asked their parents to tour the sites; They were that interested," Wynn said.

Students debate School of Americas

By Judith Ginder
School of the Americas

Students from a Spanish class at Shaw High School spent the afternoon of April 21 debating the topic of the School of the Americas.

Approximately six weeks ago the Spanish class came to the School of the Americas for a briefing and tour of the school. After visiting the school and meeting some of the SOA personnel, the students went back to their school excited about what they had learned.

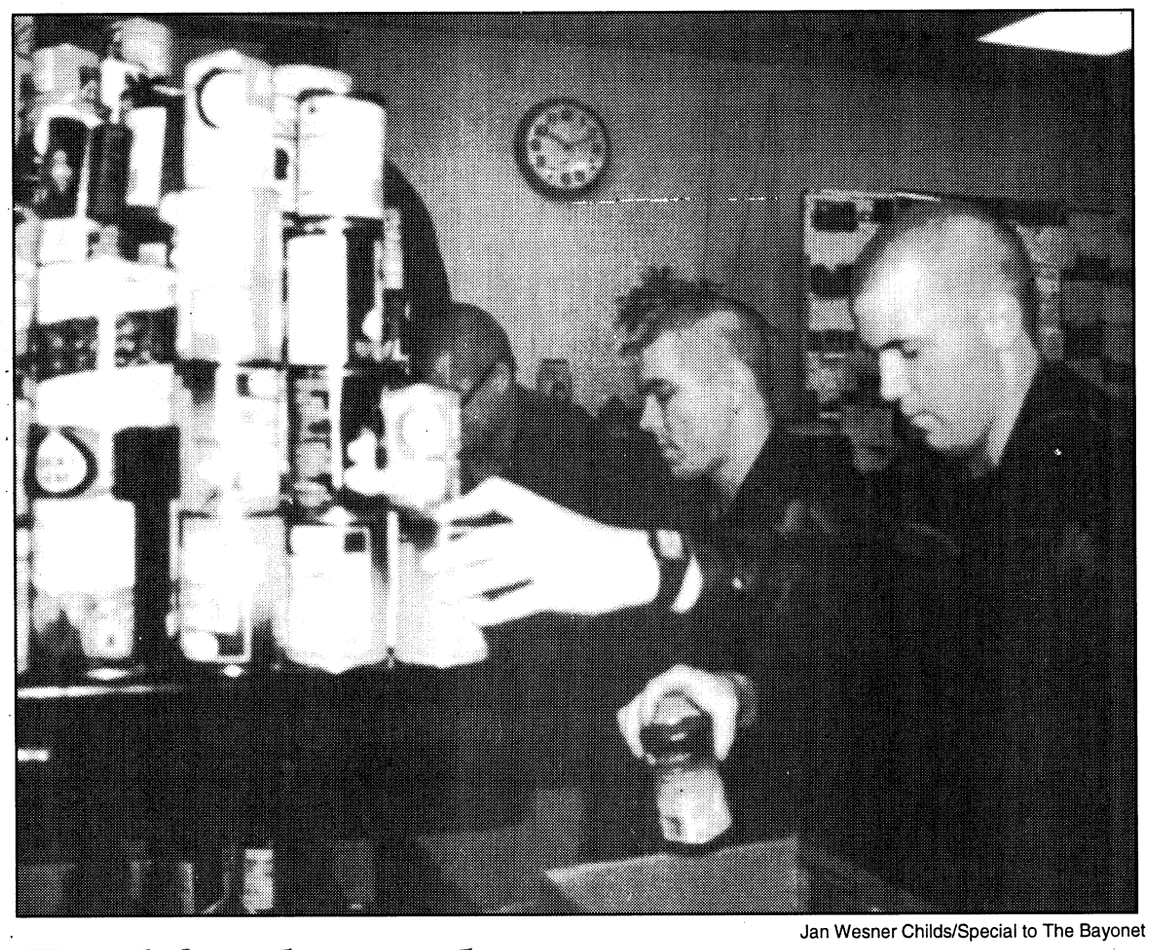
It was around this time also that the School of the Americas was once again under fire by protesters who want the school closed. After hearing about the controversy with SOA, one of the students in the Spanish class sent U.S. Rep. Joe Kennedy, a certified letter asking questions about why he wants the school closed.

"This has really sparked an interest by the students in the School of the Americas," said Cora Leigh Clark, a Spanish teacher and Spanish club advisor at Shaw High School.

According to Clark, the student's letter to Kennedy was received but the student hasn't received a response yet. Kennedy has been at the forefront in the effort to close the School of the Americas.

"Since visiting SOA, the students have been gathering as much information as possible about the School of the Americas," said Clark.

Clark said she decided to incorporate the debate over SOA into their current events curriculum. The culmination of this was a debate.



The students were broken into two groups, one group supporting SOA, one group opposing SOA.

"Most of the students who are on the opposing side didn't want to be," said Clark. "But, this is good experience for them," she said.

The students had several weeks to prepare for the debate assignment. On both sides of the debate, one student from each group gave an opening and closing remark in Spanish. As this is a beginning Spanish class, the students then translated what they had said into English.

During the debate the students opposing the School of the Americas talked about why SOA is in the United States and about the SOA budget.

Students in favor of the school discussed having open ties with all of the Western Hemisphere and Latin Americans wanting good, hard U.S. Army training.

Mock trial teaches court proceedings

By Jerrie Macintire
Special to The Bayonet

John Smith was once again found innocent of stealing a bicycle. Smith was tried last year and the year before that for the same crime.

Double jeopardy? No.

Smith is a character in a scripted trial who goes before a jury of seventh-graders each May in a Law Day observance designed to highlight the way the legal system works in this country, according to Ann Justice, assistant principal at Faith Middle School.

The annual event gives students a first-hand look at courtroom proceedings rather than merely reading about the legal system, she said.

Members of the Fort Benning Staff Judge Advocate's Office portrayed the roles of attorneys, courtroom personnel, witnesses and the defendant in Monday's mock trial. The post judge, Col. Keith Hodges, sat in as the mock trial judge.

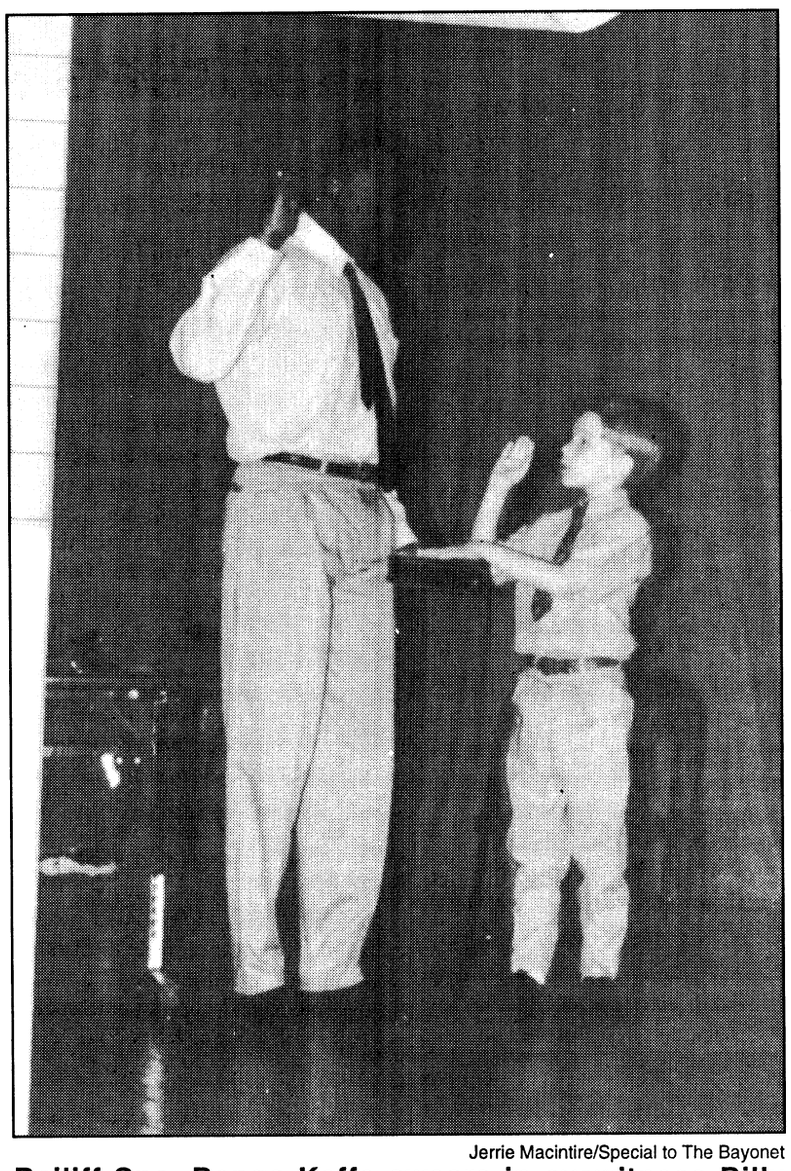
Hodges discussed legal issues with an audience of seventh-graders while those students on the jury deliberated in private.

After carefully considering conflicting testimony, jurors had "reasonable doubt" and found Smith "not guilty," said Capt. Phil Appenzeller, mock trial coordinator with SJA.

The interpretation of various pieces of evidence demonstrated the importance of detail, the concepts of innocent until proven guilty and the weight of circumstantial evidence, he said.

The script contained references to leading questions, hearsay and the admissibility of a child's testimony.

Hodges, who wrote the scripted trial while stationed at Fort Stewart, Ga., said there is generally a 50 percent acquittal rate and a 50 percent conviction rate. Circumstantial evidence and disagreement over the description of clothing the defendant was wearing often plant doubt in the minds of jurors.



On the other hand, the defendant's shoes match those of a footprint found at the scene, and he fit the description of the individual seen taking the bike. Even with overwhelming circumstantial evidence, "The burden of proof is on the prosecution, Hodges told the jury.

"This exercise really focuses on the importance of the different roles necessary for the legal system to work," said Ken Stettes, assistant principal at Faith. "The students saw first-hand some of the workings of our judicial system."

Also in celebration of Law Day, winners of the annual poster contest attended a luncheon hosted by the Columbus Bar Association and the Fort Benning SJA at Green Island Hills Country Club.

Winners are: Stephanie Fry, Melissa Reyes and Denielle Berra of Faith Middle School; Jennifer Martinez, Adrian Bishop and Shelby Carter of White School; Constance Lowe and Keyona Antionette Yeldell of Loyd School; and Brittanie Massey of Dexter School.

Veterans loan financing campaign attracts 100,000

Department of Veterans Affairs

Some 100,000 veterans will save almost $1.5 billion over the next 10 years because they responded to a Department of Veterans Affairs' effort to inform them of the benefits of refinancing their existing VA-guaranteed home loans.

"VA's campaign earlier this year to reach veterans still holding mortgages with high interest rates has been a tremendous success and will have resounding effects for years to come," said VA Secretary Jesse Brown.

VA's Interest Rate Reduction Refinancing Loan program allows a veteran with an outstanding VA-guaranteed loan to obtain at little or no cost a new loan at a lower interest rate by using the same entitlement the veteran previously used to buy the home. The department sent letters to some 1.6 million veterans with mortgages ranging from 8.5 to 17.5 percent, explaining its streamlined program.

The average monthly saving for the 100,000 veterans who converted their loans is $123, or $14,760 over an average loan life of 10 years. The total savings in payments for these veterans for the 10-year period is nearly $1.5 billion.

The devil's siren song – tune it out

By Ford F. G'Segner
USAIC Chaplain Office

Martin Luther claimed that whenever and wherever God builds a church, the devil builds a chapel. Like-minded women and men all over the world from most every nation have worked long and hard in the modern, civilized world to create societies where human rights and dignity and basic freedoms are respected.

Just as fast as we have labored to do what is right, the devil has been there working overtime to construct his chapels. He has been so successful that he has taken his choir on the road to happily sing the devil's siren song.

The interesting thing about this choir is that each voice is pure and sweet and promises great luxury and riches, great personal rewards, great benefits for us to add our voices. As the different voices are added, a most amazing thing happens; they are all singing a different tune, in a different key, using different words.

What the devil loves to hear is a discordant sound of millions of voices singing their own song, no harmony, no melody, no chorus, only a din of solos.

Anybody can join this choir. Anybody can write and sing and play. There is only one rule of composition — you must sing in the first person singular. Every line begins with "I."

Every verse begins and ends with me, what I need, what I want, what I have that you do not. There is no "we," no "she or he," no "they;" nothing but "me."

Ulysses S. Grant once admitted, "I only know two tunes; one is Yankee Doodle and the other isn't."

Increasingly in the United States, as well as the rest of the world, we only know two tunes; one is the devil's "I" and the other isn't.

What has gone wrong? Where are the results of promises for things to get better? Where is the risen Christ come to set people free? Where is the "new deal," the "great society" and "a kinder, gentler nation?"

The devil's siren song has become the theme song. My rights, my pleasures, my needs, my happiness, my life. I deserve to do anything I want to do.

Watch the talk television shows. Watch the soap operas. Listen to talk radio. Do you ever hear anything except "I?" Do you hear anything other than my feelings, my money, my right to get ahead, my satisfaction?

Do you ever hear anything about God? You might hear God's name. Some people even acknowledge there is a God. But the great truth, even among too many of us who go to church, is that there is nothing higher than oneself, nothing but oneself. The Earl of Gurney in a play, called "The Ruling Class" by Peter Barnes, is asked how he knows he is God.

"Simple." He answers. "When I pray to him, I find I'm talking to myself."

We are surrounded by people singing the devil's siren song. "Get yours first," "Look out for yourself; nobody else will." "If somebody else cannot make it, it is their fault; they deserve to die."

If you listen real close, you can hear the tune behind all the "I's," all the "me firsts," all the verses of the devil's siren song. You will hear in the background, very faint, very softly that the motivation is fear. Fear that somehow "I" won't be able to "do it all," "have it all" or "be it all."

The "me-only" solo is a frighteningly lonely tune. When there is no one else but myself and everything depends on me, when troubles occur, when setbacks appear, when my best efforts end in failure and there is no one for me to turn to, then I sing even louder, grab ever faster, lose hope even faster and eventually destroy myself and those around me.

OK, chaplain, what does all this mean? You've laid out the problem. What is the solution? How do we live our lives according to God's rules? What do we do to overcome the temptation to sing the devil's siren song? How can I succeed and still be true to the Biblical witness that our world for the most part has discarded?

If you read the Bible carefully, you will find the Biblical witness:

reflections

We are not on our own. God is God, and we are not. God is the absolute of all absolutes. This is God's world, and it works best according to his rules.

When we surrender the authority over our lives to God, when we finally admit that God is God and we are not, we then open ourselves up to God's saving grace and the power of the Holy Spirit.

When pleasing God, serving God and obeying God become the songs we sing, the love of God becomes very real. When we follow God's way using the truth we read in our Scriptures, there is no time to sing the devil's siren song.

We are too busy doing God's thing, looking after the neighbors we love, taking care that they see and feel the hope and love brought into our lives when we sing the Lord's song.

Chaplain gives, receives blessing

By Robert W. Thompson

reflections

The cheerful voice of Dr. Judy Gilliam, principal of Loyd Elementary School said, "We'd like you to give the blessing at our seventh annual soldier breakfast. This is our small way of honoring the soldier parents of our school's children. Maj. Gen. (John W.) Hendrix (commanding general) is our guest speaker." My response was quick. I'd be most happy to do this.

The day before the breakfast, I spent more than an hour working on what I would say in my prayer of blessing. Prayers I speak for a group require some planning. My mind blanked out repeatedly, however, while I scribbled words and phrases on paper. I took home my meager notes to let the thoughts simmer in my head. Nothing solid ever came to me though. I still wasn't sure how my prayer would sound.

Seeing the school folks chased away my worry for awhile. I had met many of them and worked on projects with several of them. They are a great bunch of people. Gilliam described them to the parents as no finer group of teachers and teachers aides anywhere. I thought to myself that Loyd children are unusually fortunate.

I counted 45 moms and dads in uniform. Almost four dozen parents made the effort to come to their children's school at 7 o'clock in the morning. Their turnout impressed me. As a family chaplain, I was reassured that lots of parents still value their children enough to take time for them.

Hendrix's talk was outstanding, as he spoke one parent to another. He spoke of the vital importance of spending time with our children, listening to them and not just talking to them. He said we need to encourage them more than criticize them. He told us to help them with their homework — after they have read the chapter of course. He said that parents are a child's most important influence.

After listening to him, I knew what I would pray. I would echo him. My meager notes filled out fully in my heart and mind as I stood up for the blessing. I thanked God all of us could gather to eat. I thanked him for Hendrix, who provided Loyd with its temporary building and inspired us parents. I thanked God for skilled and dedicated teachers and assistants. I thanked him especially for the parents, the unsung at-home heroes of every child.

After the prayer, Gilliam expressed her thanks. Hendrix joined her, adding, I've never figured out why we don't clap for a good prayer just like we clap for good music. I said, Thank you and replied that my words were mostly reinforcement training based on his.

As I drove to my office, I noticed a good feeling inside, and I realized what had happened. I had seen some excellent teachers and friends, had talked and listened to our outstanding chief of infantry, and had basked in the devotion of many soldier parents for the welfare of their children. I received much more of a blessing than I gave.

You reflect the goodness of our heavenly Father, the great parent of us all.

'True American'

Korean orphan shares story, heritage

By Jan Wesner Childs
Special to The Bayonet©

Korean-born Ken Suddeth's first impressions of America came from a soldier walking the streets of Pu San in 1951.

"I had heard the rumors that GIs were good to kids," Suddeth said. "The two words of English I knew at the time were GI and chocolate. So I said 'GI and chocolate.' He asked me to follow him and I did."

Thus began Suddeth's journey to America.

Suddeth shared his memories of that day and the years that followed at a May 3 celebration of Asian Pacific Heritage Month.

The lively event in Marshall Auditorium featured Korean, Filipino, Japanese and Polynesian dancers. Community groups, including the Filipino-American Association, the Columbus Korean Association and Hula Halau O'Kalei performed.

The entertainment was followed by lunch featuring native Pacific and Asian dishes like sushi and kim chee. Much of the food was donated by family members and local businesses.

Sgt. 1st Class Richard Franks organized the event for the Equal Opportunity Office. He estimated that nearly 500 people attended.

"I think it's indicative of the things that are going on on the installation in equal opportunity," Franks said.

Suddeth's speech was the highlight.

"I do not recall where my parents are or who they were," Suddeth, who is now a Muscogee County marshall, told the crowd.

At the age of 4, Suddeth was wandering the streets alone when the U.S. serviceman stopped to talk to him.

The soldier tried several times to adopt the young boy. Finally, three years after their first meeting, the adoption was approved. Suddeth came to America in 1954, when he was seven -years old.

"The life in America was very good," Suddeth said.

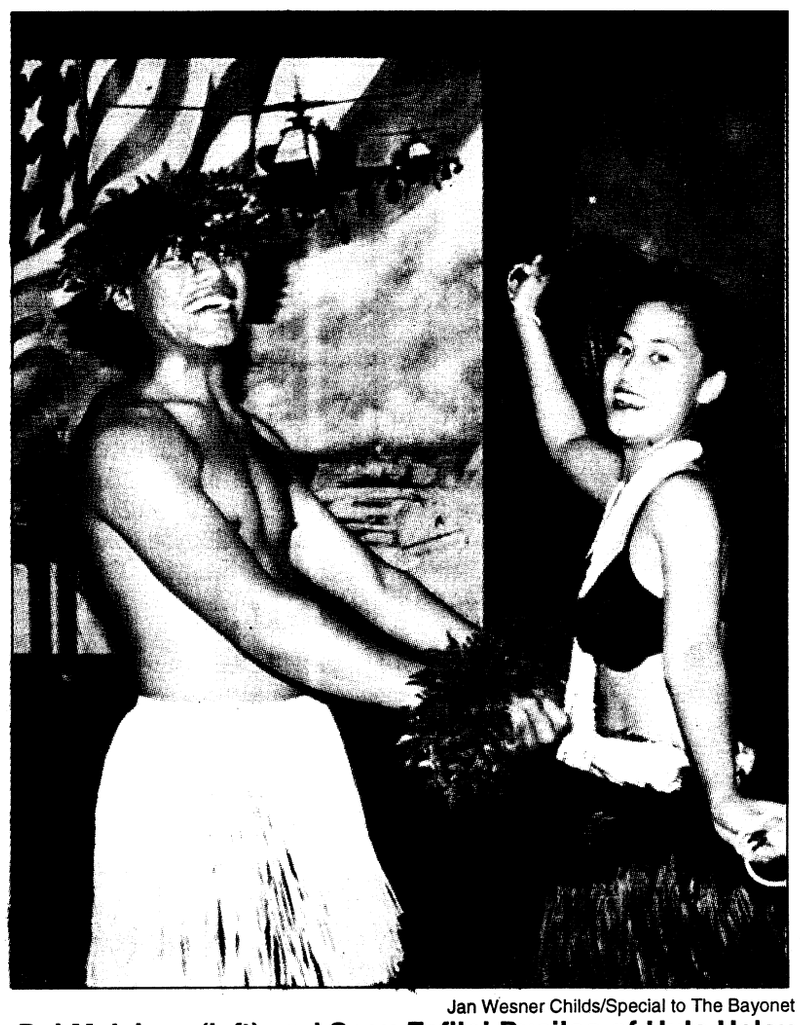
But when he was 11 his adoptive parents divorced. At the time, the family lived in Columbus. Georgia state law dictated that children of divorced parents were automatically turned over to the mother's custody.

Suddeth refused to live with his adoptive mother and was sent to live at Boy's Town in Nebraska.

"Can you imagine being an orphan at one time and then being an orphan again?" he said.

But Suddeth adapted to his life at Boy's Town and became a student leader. After high school he joined the Air Force, which gave him the chance to travel to many different places.

"I have even visited my own homeland," he said. "I know there is not any country greater than the United States of America."



Suddeth served two tours in Vietnam and considers himself a true American.

"I'm glad to say that I did my share," he said. "I lost many friends, many classmates during that war."

Before Vietnam, Suddeth had not had much contact with his native culture.

"Therefore, I did not eat any Korean food or speak the language."

But in Vietnam, Suddeth saw his Korean brothers give up their lives in battle. He wanted to learn more about his culture.

Jan Wesner Childs/Special to The Bayonet

Two things surprised him.

"In a Korean family, when a child is born, that child is the center of attention," he said. And in the later stages of life, people are treated with respect.

Col. John Reitzell, director of the Combined Arms and Tactics Directorate, called Suddeth's story "amazing."

"It's typically American and it's wonderfully Asian," Reitzell said in closing remarks at the ceremony.

Reitzell also talked about divisiveness in America.

"In our ranks, in the Army, we are filled with the antithesis of that," he said. "We are integrators."

Post welcomes retirees at open house

By Lisa M. Hibbert
Bayonet staff writer

Fort Benning will host the 13th annual Military Retiree Open House Thursday through May 20, with more than 30,000 retirees from Alabama, Florida and Georgia invited to attend.

Retired Sgt. Maj. Nathaniel E. Guydon, co-chairman, is encouraging retirees to support this event.

"It will be an opportunity to become reacquainted with old (friends) from a past time of service," Guydon said. "It will be like a homecoming. Retirees will have the opportunity to see new faces, new equipment and exchange information."

While here, retirees will get the opportunity to conduct personal business related to their rights, benefits, privileges and entitlements as retired service members.

A briefing will be conducted to inform retirees of the latest developments and concepts in the modern Army.

They will also have an opportunity to renew the common bonds between the retired and active Army communities when the post celebrates Armed Forces Day.

Retired ranger 1st Sgt. Davey Lockett said that he will participate in the festivities.

"It's good that the Department of the Army recognizes retirees," Lockett said. "The post opens once a year to remember us. They can't give us everything that we've lost but they can remember us; they haven't forgotten our contributions. Most of the people who retired in this area know each other and it's good for us to get together."

Open house registration begins in the lobby of Infantry Hall May 20 at 6:45 a.m.

For more information, call Sgt. 1st Class James R. Mullennax at 545-5369.

Air conditioning

Housing residents to wait it out

By Jan Wesner Childs
Special to The Bayonet©

The commanding general expresses concern about it at public appearances.

Soldiers and civilian workers can't stop talking about it.

Family members wonder why they can't control it themselves.

Air conditioning just might be the hottest topic on post right now.

Various post agencies are receiving numerous complaints from residents who want the air conditioning in housing units turned on.

And amid rumors that air conditioning is being cut back because of a budget crunch, many residents are confused as to what the policy on air conditioning is.

"We are not changing the rules on air conditioning in family housing," Garrison Commander Col. Richard Rutledge said in a recent interview.

Each housing unit has its own thermostat to control temperature, but the air must first be turned on by the Directorate of Public Works.

Rutledge said the air conditioning will be turned on when the temperature reaches 85 degrees four out of five consecutive days. He said the temperature is measured taking humidity into account.

As of press time, those conditions had not occurred.

"Historically the air has been turned on between the second and third weeks of May," Rutledge said. "We're not even there yet."

Money for air conditioning and all other family housing utilities comes from its own account. The post contracts with Georgia Power to provide a certain amount of electricity throughout the year. That power has to be rationed out over the course of the Soldiers, family members, retirees, civilian employees and the general public are all invited to participate in the week's festivities.

The Association of the United States Army will kick off the week with a 7:30 a.m. breakfast Monday at the Main NCO Club. Tickets are $5 and can be purchased from unit sergeants major or from Room 608, Infantry Hall. Retired Lt. Gen. Michael F. Spigelmire will be the guest speaker.

Throughout the week, sporting events such as basketball, soccer, wrestling, boxing, tennis, fishing and golf tournaments will take place on post.

Several local businesses will also host events, with beach volleyball tournament finals at Scooters in Columbus Tuesday, and a darts tournament split between Coach's Corner and Victoria's, both in Columbus, Monday, Tuesday, May 19 and 20.

The Columbus RedStixx will host military night at Golden Park Tuesday and AUSA will sponsor a job fair at the Main NCO Club from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. Thursday. More than 300 businesses have been invited.

A retiree open house will coincide with Military Appreciation Week this year, culminating May 20 with events in Infantry Hall.

The grand finale of the week is the Armed Forces Day picnic and open house in front of Infantry Hall, beginning with the "Burn the General" Run at 8 a.m. May 20.

From 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. there will be military displays and demonstrations, games, children's rides, entertainment and a business showcase. A variety of food and beverages will be on sale.

Reflections of a former leg ...

By Marc G. Turchin

commentary

Pfc. Marc G. Turchin graduated from Airborne School April 14.

When I first joined the Army, the sergeant at the Military Entrance Processing Center told me that going to Airborne School wasn't part of my contract. I told him I didn't care because I had no ambition to jump out of a plane.

The thought of throwing myself into the air while moving more than 100 mph didn't exactly thrill me at first. Then I got stationed at Fort Benning.

It was after that, while attending Six Flags over Georgia and being forced to ride roller coasters for the very first time by my buddy, that I decided that I could be airborne — or at least try.

My attempt to get wings on my chest took me through Company B, 1st Battalion, 507th Infantry (Airborne), 11th Infantry Regiment.

The first week was rather painful.

I heard from everyone, even "leg" soldiers, that there would be a lot of running — total understatement. We ran to the physical training area, during PT, back from PT, to the training area, to the break area, to the latrine and back to the company area. That was the norm every day of Airborne School.

During the course, our company had four mandatory runs. These runs are mandatory because if you fall out, you are dropped from the course. The first one acted as the biggest of weed eaters — a lot of people fell out. I heard one guy dropped out just because his girlfriend fell out of the run. Geez, the things people do.

The blackhats calling cadence helped while running countless laps around 34- and 250-foot towers. Staff Sgt. Ivan Salas, a blackhat with third platoon, even went as far as to call cadence in Spanish. My buddies and I found humor in that and many other things throughout the three-week period.

Throughout the school, I had two airborne buddies who kept me sane.

One is now an airborne guitar player with the Infantry Band whose nickname ranged from Eric Clapton to Jimi Hendrix and the other was a sergeant first class with the 586th Engineer Company (Assault Float Bridge) whose nickname will always remain "crazy." Without these two, I would have been one of those labeled "braindead" by the instructors.

The blackhats offered plenty of opportunities to laugh at ourselves.

For example, while learning to exit the mock door of an airplane, one soldier couldn't get it right after trying about five times. The blackhat questioned the soldier, "Where you from crazy?" "Oklahoma, sergeant airborne," screamed back the soldier. "That's your whole problem right there, you," Salas said.

He and other instructors used that type of question as a rhetorical question — meaning no matter what the reply was, the only answer was, "that's your whole problem right there."

The real problem was listening to the complaints of pain and injuries after the first week. Learning to perform "dynamic" parachute landing falls, jumping out of 34-foot towers and the constant "beat your face" or push-ups, found Bravo Company smoked by the end of the week. Some more than others.

During the second week, or tower week, more of the same was provided.

We swung back and forth during the swing landing training — which sometimes taught you how to land from different heights, depending on the blackhat in charge. That was the highlight of the week.

Finally came the week we all waited for — jump week. The first day was a gorgeous day to jump. There were almost no clouds in the sky and the winds were minimal. All the planes were operational and the day went very smoothly.

I don't think I'll ever forget that first jump. I don't think I'll ever forget the plane ride up. I was very nervous but tried to hide it by talking a lot and making jokes. Both Clapton and Crazy sat quietly in the plane with Clapton the color of a diaper — which is what I thought he might need if we didn't get out of the plane soon.

When we reached 1,250 feet, which is the standard altitude, the jumpmasters opened the doors and the most ferocious sound I have ever heard Mother Nature make came whirling through the doorway. In my mind, wind was not suppose to sound like that, gusting and totally uninviting. I was supposed to jump into that?

I began to rethink my choice to come to this school and wonder just what the heck was I about to do? I had to remember it would all be over soon.

Am I glad I did. After stepping out of the door, my body went through the most violent shock of my life. I have never been tossed around with such force. Now I know what a sock inside a dryer feels like. But this sensation only lasts for three seconds. After that, it was standing room only during the most pleasant, most serene, most unbelievable three or so minutes of my life.

I saw the world from a whole new perspective and couldn't believe how peaceful it was 1,000 feet up in the air. I could still see the aircraft but I wasn't able to hear it. I was in total awe.

The next four jumps came and went without too many problems. My third jump found me oscillating, which is when you have no control of the canopy and are being blown in just about every direction. I hit like a sack of potatoes. The PLF that I was taught to do never even evolved. Luckily I did the most important thing concerning landing — keep your feet and knees together.

But I did graduate. My silver wings became bloodwings as they were pinned on my chest by one of my airborne NCOs in my office, among others.

As I look back at the entire course, I realize how incredibly talented the blackhats are.

The blackhats for third platoon, including the platoon sergeant, company commander and executive officer are a "class act" in my mind.

Their desire to uphold the standards and add some human nature by allowing the soldiers to laugh at themselves while learning made for an outstanding training atmosphere. They were serious when they needed to be and each of them has my highest respect, "you!" I'd call them crazy if I had more rank on my collar.

My advice to all those who think they can't be airborne because they're scared of heights or something else— to quote Nike, "just do it," or at least try.

Veterans appreciate support during drive

We, the members of Ladies Auxiliary to the Veterans of Foreign Wars Post 665 wish to thank all of our military friends who purchased a poppy from one of our members.

We sold and you purchased 9,250 poppies, to the tune of approximately $2,883. After our second Buddy Poppy Drive, which will be later next month, we will announce the combined total.

All of this money stays here in Columbus and is put in the VFW and Ladies Auxiliary Relief Fund that is used only for veterans in need within our community. This is a combined effort of the VFW and Ladies Auxiliary.

The following are further donations our auxiliary gives to within the community: VA Hospital Tuskegee, $861; Cotton Baptist Church Building Fund, $30; one auxiliary member in need, $300; Little League Boys Rigden Park softball, $200; March of Dimes, $200; Arthritis Foundation, $200; a member's brother in need, $500; and a 14-year-old girl with cancer who lost a leg and will need medical help for years, $500.

These are just a few of what we have been able to do just these last few months of the new year. We project into the community on needy projects throughout the entire year as we raise money and we are also able to fulfill our national and state projects as directed because of our members working long and hard to raise money to take care of these and more.

The Ladies Auxiliary of the VFW Post 665 is not just a fun group; it is a serious commitment, we all take as we join this organization and it takes long hours of volunteering on all of our members. We need all the help from all our members.

risk management

Thinking ahead can go a long way toward success

Risk management is a tool, a thinking process. It's an orderly way for commanders and other leaders to look at very complex situations and make appropriate decisions.

It's also a tool soldiers themselves can and must take to the field with them. In fact, the most important part of risk management is the actual execution of the mission — taking risk management to the field. And that's where soldiers come in.

Risk management gets people thinking about what can go wrong and what they can do about it: "What can go wrong in this leg of the convoy? Rain's rolling in. I'm under goggles. It's worse out here than we figured on. What are my options?"

Anticipating problems: That's risk management; that's thinking on the go. It's hazards and controls. "What can go wrong? What can I do about it?" So you anticipate the hazard, and if it develops, you're ready to deal with it. You take a different route. You take off your goggles and turn on the lights. You put out ground guides. But you do something.

Risk management has brought us a long way from the days of inspecting troops and units and just saying, "Do this safer or do that safer." Commanders have always cared about safety. But it's a long way from saying, "Be safe" to being able to execute a mission safely.

Risk management has given commanders and other leaders something they can use. I think that the better we learn to apply the risk-management process, the more we'll do it. And that's going to be the key to safer operations.

The process starts with the mission essential task list. From that, all things fall. Analysis of your METL tasks enables you to design training programs to get your soldiers up to standard on those METL tasks. Only then are you ready to go to war.

EMS: Post, nation to honor life-savers

Martin Army Community Hospital

Fort Benning Emergency Medical Services and Martin Army Community Hospital are joining EMS providers nationwide in encouraging schools, businesses and community groups to set aside National Emergency Medical Services Week, May 14 to 20, as a time to honor those who are ready to provide care at anytime — their EMS time.

The emergency medical services team, including dispatchers, paramedics, emergency medical technicians, firefighters, emergency physicians, nurses, flight medics, is available anytime day or night, any day of the year. Career and volunteer EMS providers play a significant role in saving lives.

To assist local residents and organizations in honoring these lifesavers and learn how to access them, Fort Benning EMS and Martin Army Hospital will host an EMS Open House May 17 at the hospital.

As part of National EMS Week, Fort Benning EMS and Martin Army Hospital are launching a new public education program to help citizens make the right call in medical emergencies.

According to Mark Joyce, chief, EMS, the effort will increase community awareness of emergency medical services and actions to take in an emergency. Making the right call provides potential life-saving information about what EMS is, how to contact EMS, when to contact EMS, what information should be given to the emergency operator and what to do until help arrives.

National Emergency Medical Services Week is sponsored annually by the American College of Emergency Physicians along with the American Ambulance Association, the Emergency Nurses Association, the International Association of Fire Chiefs, the National Association of Emergency Medical Technicians, the National Association of State EMS Directors, the National Council of EMS Training Coordinators, the National Association of EMS Physicians, the U.S. Department of Transportation's National Highway Traffic Administration, Maternal and Child Health Bureau and the Federal Emergency Management Agency's U.S. Fire Administration.

BRIDGESTONE Firestone Triumph

OKLAHOMA TRAGEDY

Military responds to bombing disaster

The Cannoneer, Fort Sill, Okla.

At the request of the FBI, personnel and equipment from Fort Sill were immediately dispatched to the site of the car bomb attack in Oklahoma City April 19 where scores of people were killed or injured, and 80 percent of the nine-story building was destroyed.

The explosion occurred at 9:02 a.m. in the Alfred Murrah Federal Building, which houses federal offices including Army, Navy and Marine recruiting offices; Social Security offices, Veterans Administration offices; the Federal Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms; and a Secret Service office.

Shortly after the explosion, two UH-1 medical evacuation helicopters from Fort Sill's 82nd Medical Company flew to the city and soldiers of the 61st Explosive Ordnance Disposal Detachment were readied for deployment at Tinker Air Force Base, while the remainder of the unit remained on standby.

Two bomb-detection dog and handler teams were also sent to help secure the area, while more than 80 Guardsmen from the 745th Military Police Company and 14 other soldiers on state active duty helped provide perimeter security.

Several Fort Sill troops also deployed as a casualty assistance team to Oklahoma City medical examiner's office.

Col. Stewart Bornhoft, Fort Sill's director of Public Works was appointed as the defense coordinating officer, co-located at the site with Federal Emergency Management Agency and FBI officials.

Soon after the blast, FEMA requested military assistance from the Director of Military Support. DOMS is the point of contact for providing military support for disaster incidents to civil authorities. Army Secretary Togo D. West Jr. is exercising direct oversight of the operation and coordinates with DOMS for the dispatch of troops and equipment used to assist in rescue and recovery.

Shortly after the explosion, two UH-l medical evacuation helicopters from Fort Sill's 82nd Medical Company flew to the city and soldiers of the 61st Explosive Ordnance Disposal Detachment were readied for deployment at Tinker Air Force Base

The Tinker Air Force Base commander immediately dispatched two ambulances with doctors and a 66-member rescue team to the site.

The team included 18 firefighters, a canine bomb search unit, 10 civil engineers and two surgeons. Lackland Air Force Base, Texas. responded with four mini-forward surgical teams and six casualty-care trauma teams comprised of 32 airmen and six soldiers.

Six C-141 aircraft moved FEMA urban search and rescue teams from their hometowns to the site. The teams specialize in locating, extricating and providing immediate medical treatment to victims trapped in collapsed structures. Most responded to the bombing of the World Trace Center and the recent L.A. earthquake.

A C-5 transport aircraft was also deployed from Andrews Air Force Base, Md., to transport FBI crime lab vans, and other aircraft crews were put on alert for possible evacuation and transport missions.

Emergency workers evacuated a square mile of the area, which remained closed to all but business owners who were boarding windows blown out by the blast up to five blocks away. However, one week after the explosion, engineering officials have not declared all of the surrounding buildings safe to enter.

Security was immediately tightened at all federal installations. The Lawton federal building, along with many others, was closed. They have since reopened. Fort Sill closed several gates and posted military police at remaining gates as a security measure.

Today, 167 are confirmed dead, and the toll included infants and children who were in the building's second floor day care center, according to CNN and other reports. Scores more were injured and many remain hospitalized. Two are still missing, but workers hope to fin the bodies when they tear the building down.

Soldier helps search wreckage

By Tonya Riley-Rodriguez
The Cannoneer, Fort Sill, Okla.

He stood beneath a tree, which survived the blast, and took a long drink of his bottled water.

"I'm going to be here until they all come home," said Staff Sgt. Don M. Majors, a U.S. Army nurse recruiter. "I have worked in this building for 5 1/2 years, and I knew everybody."

He slipped a surgical mask back up to his sweat- and dirt-covered face, ineffectually wiped at a streak of plaster on his forehead and turned to go under the collapsed building again. He wasn't sure how long he had been searching that day. "Maybe 1 or 14 hours," he offered.

At his left were boxes of body bags. To his right, an ambulance waited for survivors. As the hours ticked by, most of the stretchers wheeled up from below were rolled past the ambulance to an old church — a temporary morgue.

Majors was in nearby Wichita Falls Wednesday morning when he heard there had been an explosion at a courthouse in Oklahoma City. Within minutes, newscasters corrected their information and announced, to his horror, that the Murrah Federal Building had apparently been bombed.

Majors sped back to the city to offer assistance. He joined volunteers — firefighters, airmen, trained dogs and their handlers, and urban disaster recovery team specialists at the site — and began to dig.

Some of his friends and coworkers had survived, but so many were still missing. Beneath the building, where nine above-ground stories and three basement parking levels rested together, the work was back-breaking, heartbreaking and dangerous.

By the second day, a few survivors were miraculously freed from the grasp of collapsed cement and steel. Majors and the teams began to find more and more bodies, but kept hoping against all odds to find someone inside clinging to life.

"My Maj. Gen. Simpson just said, 'Go and do what you do best.' I've got a lot of friends missing. I'm tough. I've been an EMT for eight years but I've never seen anything like this. This is like something out of World War II."

Majors' home office, company headquarters, credit union and more were inside the once beautiful building. "I have a leave form in there somewhere....'" his voice trailed off.

He put on his hard hat and walked underground, where there was once a parking lot.

Defense coordinating office arranges military support

By Tonya Riley-Rodriguez
The Cannoneer, Fort Sill, Okla.

The room is crowded, noisy and cluttered with notes and soda cans. Though it appears disheveled, it is the center for coordination of military assets communication and disaster relief support.

Each bit of paper and scribbled note is vital. Cold sodas grow warm because most of the soldiers and civilians working there have a telephone in one hand and are making volumes of notes with the other.

The nine telephone receivers rest on their cradles for less than 30 seconds between rings.

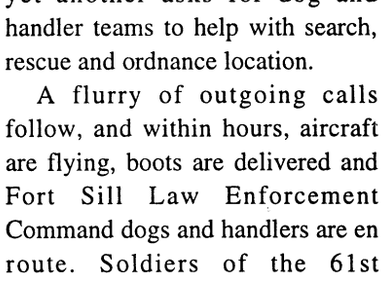
One caller verifies the need for helicopter support, another requests two pairs of steel toed workboots, yet another asks for dog and handler teams to help with search, rescue and ordnance location.

A flurry of outgoing calls follow, and within hours, aircraft are flying, boots are delivered and Fort Sill Law Enforcement Command dogs and handlers are en route. Soldiers of the 61st Explosive Ordnance Disposal Detachment are sent to Tinker Air Force Base to stand by.

Col. Stewart Bornhoft, who usually directs the Fort Sill Directorate of Public Works, is the defense coordinating officer at the center. With him rests the nearly overwhelming responsibility of coordinating all Department of Defense assets in support of the Federal Emergency Management Agency and the FBI, the two lead agencies for responding to the disaster and the crime scene. Seven soldiers and four Department of the Army civilians from Fort Sill, and liaisons from 5th Army and the Air Force work with him.

"It seems like I've got one phone on my ear, one caller on hold ... I'd say I receive at least a dozen calls per hour," Bornhoft said. "This has all jelled exceedingly well. I've been very favorably impressed ... people have done whatever they could.

Meanwhile, the incoming requests continue — the FBI and firefighters need cots, the weather has changed and 500 Army field jackets are requested, the American Red Cross needs oxygen bottles and searchers need 200 hard hats. Team members trained by FEMA for urban disaster recovery missions receive word that they are needed, and the DCO coordinates their travel from home towns to the site.



The center occupies only one room at the former Southwestern Bell building, 11 NE 6th St., just three blocks from the blast. The rest of the building became the FBI field and FEMA coordination office within hours after the blast. Hundreds of FBI agents crunch through glass from the windows of businesses in the neighborhood as they walk from evidence sites to the center. Among them are Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms agents, special anti-terrorist units, CID agents and representatives of nearly every state and federal agency. More than four CID agents from the Fort Sill area are supporting the crime scene and casualty assistance mission, but cannot be identified for security reasons.

"Some of the things we've been asked to provide include body bags. We initially provided 200, but we were asked to provide an additional 250," said Lt. Col. Ronald D. Cone, 5th Army liaison officer. "Fort Sill has also provided drivers to bring down some GSA cars for the FBI."

On April 19, DCO communications log records the following:

"15:15 Col. Cameron (5th USADCSPOS) conveyed Lt. Gen. Cisneros' satisfaction with overall operations to date.

15:17 The body bags have arrived at 8th and Harvey."

31st Infantry donates Shanghai bowl to National Infantry Museum

By James M. Tatum
3rd Brigade, 70th Div. (IT) PAO

Fuzzy reflections of retired soldiers added color to the gleaming silver of the punch bowl as about 100 veterans filed into the auditorium.

Veterans of World War II, Korea, Vietnam and other 31st Infantry Association members crowded into Fort Benning's National Infantry Museum May 5 to present an important part of their heritage to the museum — the Shanghai Bowl.

The bowl was a 1932 gift to the 31st Infantry Regiment "Polar Bears" from the residents of Shanghai during the Sino-Japanese War. It was presented to Frank Hanner, museum curator, by Capt. Ernest Irick, commander of Company D, 4th Battalion, 31st Infantry Regiment, stationed at Fort Sill, Okla. The unit is the last remaining active duty component of the 31st and is scheduled for deactivation in June.

"The Shanghai Bowl is part of our culture and tradition and is the heart of the regiment," said retired Lt. Gen. R.L. "Sam" Wetzel, honorary colonel of the regiment. "The bowl binds members of the unit together."

As the veteran Polar Bears grasped the opportunity to view the bowl, they whispered the memories that the bowl and the nearby regimental colors, reflecting off the bowl's polished surface, brought to mind.

"We were there at the beginning and at the end," retired Maj. Homer Wright said about himself and his sister Mary Neil, who were living in Shanghai when the bowl was created. Wright is the national commander of the 400-member 31st Infantry Regiment Association and is a second generation Polar Bear. His father, Robert Lee Wright, was a captain commanding Company B when the unit received the bowl.

Wright and Neil searched among the 102 silver cups surrounding the punch bowl until they found the one engraved with their father's name.

"This reminds me of going to school in a rickshaw," Wright said as he gazed at the bowl and thought of his childhood days in Shanghai.

"This stands for what our Dad stood for," Neil said, gesturing toward the bowl. "He was a very patriotic gentleman. We are also very proud of the unit's background and history."

The bowl was fashioned by Shanghai silversmiths using 1,500 U.S. trade dollars. The handles are in the form of traditional Chinese dragons, and the bowl rests on the backs of three lions. The sides are engraved with lotus blossoms and the inscription reads "Presented to the 31st Infantry by the officers of the U.S. Army troops in Shanghai, China, in 1932." Along with the bowl are 102 silver cups and a ladle.

"We couldn't be more honored than to have the Shanghai Bowl at Fort Benning and to have you here who fought so bravely," Hanner said to the gathered crowd. "This is a very appropriate place to honor you infantrymen, and you honor us by bringing us the symbol of the 31st."

Although the bowl was dedicated to the museum May 5, it will not be housed there until the final unit of the 31st is deactivated in June at Fort Sill, Okla.

The 31st Regiment was formed in 1916 and has spanned the globe from Siberia to Cambodia. The regiment played important roles in World War II, the Korean War and Vietnam.

World War II brought about an important period in the history of the Shanghai Bowl. While in combat with Japanese forces it became apparent that capture was inevitable. Capt. George A. Sansep burned the regimental colors to keep them out of the enemy's hands; the bowl was then buried on Corregidor, just prior to the islands capture.

The bowl and cups remained buried until after the Japanese surrender in 1945. The area was covered with 10 to 15 feet of rock and rubble because of shelling and bombing, but the bowl and cups were recovered, still in good condition.

As in the past, the unit used the punch bowl during ceremonies; and, as the years and battles added up, they gave more meaning to the unit symbol.

The deactivation ceremony in June may increase the meaning of the symbol to those soldiers as they reflect on the importance of the regiment to the Army and the nation.

When the Shanghai Bowl reaches its resting place in the National Infantry Museum, many soldiers will have the opportunity to view their reflection on the polished silver.

Nobody can say for certain how many soldiers of the 31st have seen their faces reflected on the shiny surface, or what part each soldier played in the defense of their country.

The bowl has been and will remain a part of the heritage of the 31st Infantry Regiment and the U.S. Army and a symbol of the sacrifices the soldiers of the past have made.

Olympic tickets now available

Atlanta Committee for the Olympic Games

If you are interested in buying tickets to the Summer Olympics July 19 to Aug. 4 in Atlanta, the following are some suggestions from the Atlanta Committee for the Olympic Games

• Olympics organizers in Atlanta are accepting ticket applications.

• Through Dec. 1 you can order tickets only through the Atlanta Committee for the Olympic Games, only through the mail and only by filing out the official form in the 48-page ticket brochure. The free brochure is available in participating grocery stores and Home Depot stores across the United States.

Only one application form a person. You must pay for tickets by check or VISA charge when you send in ticket requests.

• Day-by-day schedules for each sport, except for track and field, are detailed in the ticket brochures.

• Organizers anticipate many more requests than tickets available for seats at events such as gymnastics, boxing, swimming and diving and finals in track and field. So they have arranged for a lottery for those who send in applications before June 30.

Through Dec. 1 you can order tickets only through the Atlanta Committee for the Olympic Games

When there are more requests than available seats, applications for those events go into a pool in which every applicant has an equal chance to be randomly chosen.

• You'll be encouraged to pick two alternate requests for each first choice on your application.

• You can order multiple tickets for each session — except for the most popular ones, which have a ticket cap of four a customer. Each applicant is limited to 16 sessions.

A session is a competition in one sport at a specific day and time. Such as: Games 1 and 2 of preliminary men's basketball, scheduled for 10 a.m. to 1:30 p.m. July 20.

• Call (404) 744-1996 for a recorded run-through of ticket information from the Olympic organizers.

President says service members stand for old-fashioned American values

By Linda D. Kozaryn
American Forces Information Service

Today's service members stand for the old-fashioned American values that lead to success and the good life, according to President Bill Clinton.

He recently visited Fort Benning, the first presidential visit since Jimmy Carter's in 1977.

Accompanied by Georgia Sen. Sam Nunn and state and local officials, Clinton met with service members at Lawson Army Airfield. He commended Fort Benning for winning the Commander in Chief's Army Community of Excellence Award for the second time. He also acknowledged the contributions of then post Command Sgt. Maj. William H. Acebes, a ranger and Special Forces soldier, retiring after 30 years of service.

Clinton addressed the service members, thanking those who served in Somalia, Rwanda and Haiti, and those who responded when Iraq moved toward Kuwait's border last fall.

"The mission we face today as a people is to move into the 21st century ... still the world's greatest force for peace and freedom and democracy and still the country with the American dream alive—the dream that if you work hard and make the most of your own life, you can live up to your God-given capacities," he said.

To accomplish this mission, Clinton said, the administration is trying to make government smaller and less bureaucratic, to create more jobs and to invest in training and education.

"Much as the military has done," he said, "we must do for all Americans, and not just when they're young, but throughout their work lives ... We know clearly that in the 21st century what you earn will depend upon what you can learn. And we know that the great divide in our country today between those who are doing well and those who are struggling is often defined by how much education they have and what they can still learn."

Clinton pointed out that the military has been downsized dramatically, a process he termed "somewhat traumatic."

"I think it's fair to say that no major organization in the history of the United States has ever done so much change so rapidly with such a high level of professionalism and commitment and ultimate success. We still have the best trained, best equipped and most highly motivated, most effective military in the world."

Clinton said service members are a valuable force for America's security interest around the world and for long-term security here at home. "Our security involves what we do here at home, as well as what we do beyond our borders," he said.

"So many of you are role models to our young people, role models to those who are discouraged, who may want to quit, who may think that they can't make the most of their lives, who understand that they may have personal problems or be living in a country with big economic problems that they don't feel they can overcome. All of you can make a difference.

"I can't tell you how many places I go around this country where young people who are despairing, who are confused, who don't know what they are going to do with their lives, ... look at you and know that if they live by old-fashioned values and if they support the American way, they can succeed. You are that to them.

"Never forget that your mission in improving, enhancing and protecting our security not only involves what you may be called upon to do in distant places around the world, but what you may do every day; just walking down the street or speaking to a child or standing tall, so that people can see that in this country, if you do the right thing, you can live a good life and be a great American."

Military Police Activity

This week's hot topic concerns bicycle safety.

Summer is near and schools will soon be closed. It's time to remind ourselves of a few safety tips when we see children playing outside.

Posted speed limits, especially in the housing areas, must be observed at all times. Children are often unpredictable and it is your responsibility as the driver to expect the unexpected.

Parents should be aware that the Georgia legislature has passed a law requiring children, 16 years old and under, to wear bicycle helmets while operating a bicycle, whether on the road or in the backyard. The bicycle helmet must be a helmet approved by the Snell Memorial Foundation or another approving authority.

As a parent, it is your responsibility to ensure that your children obey governing traffic laws and regulations. Children should cross the street only at intersections, walk on sidewalks and always ride their bicycles on the right side of the road with the flow of traffic.

Adult bicyclists are also required to wear a helmet when traveling on roadways with a speed limit of 35 mph or more. In addition, Fort Benning policy dictates the use of a reflective vest when the speed limit is 35 mph or more.

The following entries are taken from the Fort Benning Military Police blotters. Such entries may be incomplete and are not intended to prove guilt or innocence of anyone.

• A private first class was charged with failure to drive to right of the roadway and failure to obey a lawful order or regulation. While on routine patrol, the MPs noticed a vehicle crossing the center line, the vehicle was stopped and upon contact with the driver, two .22-caliber long rifle rounds were in plain view. Upon verbal and written consent to search the vehicle, a .22-rifle, 14 live .22-rounds and five empty .22-rounds were found in the trunk. The soldier was apprehended and taken to the MP station where he was advised of his legal rights and rendered a statement admitting to firing five rounds into the woodline near the pet cemetery. When it was discovered that the weapon was not registered on post, he was cited and released to his unit.

• Two civilians were charged with shoplifting when they were observed removing tank tops, shorts, shirts, aftershave, cologne and a watch from display shelves at the Post Exchange. The two then exited without paying, were stopped and detained. Upon arrival of the MPs, they were apprehended, searched and taken to the MP station where they were issued post ejection orders and escorted to the post boundaries by the MPs and released.

Remember to help "Make Our Post The Best — Give Crime Arrest." Report any activity that seems wrong or out of place to the Military Police at 545-5223 or 545-5224 or the "Crime in Progress" line at 545-5222.

ask the judge

Office of the Staff Judge Advocate

Q: I need to borrow some money to meet substantial unexpected expenses. I have heard that "home equity line of credit" loans are at low interest rates, and are tax deductible. Is this a good way to borrow?

A: A home equity line is a revolving credit in which your home serves as collateral for the money. You are approved for a specific amount of credit, your credit "limit," which is the maximum amount you can borrow. This amount is usually based on the unused equity in your home.

For example, if you have a $60,000 home and owe a $40,000 mortgage, you have $20,000 equity in the home. If, the lender will lend only up to 80 percent of the value, as is the usual practice $48,000 is the maximum amount of debt they allow on the house. In the example, you can borrow $8,000.

The interest rate is variable. For example, the rate might be quoted as "prime plus 2 percent." This indicates that the rate of interest will be the same as the published prime rate index that appears in financial sections of newspapers, plus 2 percent. The rate changes as the prime rate goes up or down. If prime is 6 percent, your loan rate would be 8 percent.

Comparing the line of credit to a second mortgage, the most significant difference is that the second mortgage offers a fixed rate of interest. Costs are a factor in any mortgage. You will be assessed certain charges in getting the equity line — a property appraisal fee, an up-front charge for the loan called "points," fees for attorneys, title search, mortgage preparation and filing, title insurance and perhaps an application fee.

These costs will be substantial, sometimes 5 percent or more of the credit limit amount. As with any mortgage, the interest paid on most home equity credit lines is deductible, but points paid are not, because the equity line is considered a refinancing of the home.

Because the home is likely to be a consumer's largest asset, many homeowners use credit lines only for major items such as education, home improvement or medical bills, and not for day-to-day expenses. Prudent borrowers repay the loan as they would their house payment, paying down the amount each month.

If you are in the market for credit, a home equity plan may be best for you, but weigh the costs against the benefits carefully before committing yourself. Remember that failure to pay a home equity line may result in foreclosure and loss of your home, just as a first mortgage. Compare plans and select the one with the best combination of initial fees, interest rates, and repayment terms.

If you would like to discuss this with an attorney, call the Legal Assistance Office at 545-3282 for an appointment.

Protect your child's precious hearing

Egleston Children's Hospital

Turn it down! Most parents at some point will ask their children to "turn down that television" because they are tired of the noise.

And that's a good start, according to Egleston Children's Hospital audiologist Jolie Fainberg. While the volume of the average television set won't cause hearing loss, some of today's other entertainment forms definitely can.

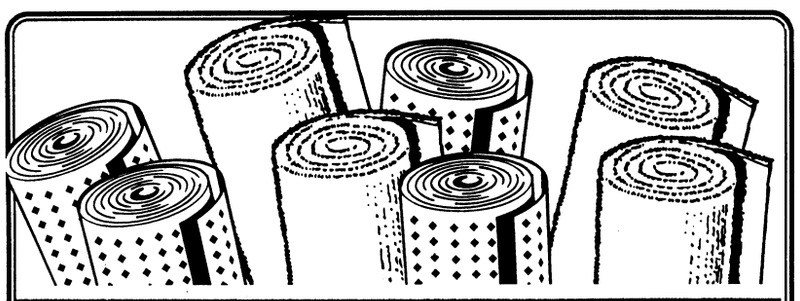
During National Better Hearing and Speech Month in May, Fainberg said she hopes to help parents detect existing hearing impairment in their babies and young children, and prevent it in their older children.

"Between the noise we choose to hear, such as music, and the background noise we can't control, such as traffic, we live in a very noisy world today," she said. "Of course, we can't protect children from all of it. But exposure to high noise levels over time can rob them of precious hearing. So we should teach them to respect their ability to hear and to protect it whenever possible."

Fainberg offers these tips:

• The major culprit for older children and teens is loud music. Radios and stereo systems should be kept at a reasonable level (people should be able to talk and be heard over the music). Music loud enough to hurt the ears is too loud.

Music listened to through headphones, including portable radios, can be especially dangerous, because the sound is so close to the eardrum. If the music can be heard by anyone other than the child wearing the headphones, it's too loud.



• Occasional loud concerts probably won't cause permanent hearing loss, but they can affect hearing temporarily. When combined with all other noise exposures over time, loud concerts may contribute to hearing problems. Wearing hearing protection, such as simple earplugs available at most pharmacies, is a good idea at loud concerts. The music can usually be heard through them.

• Sudden loud noises, such as gunshots during hunting, can cause serious hearing impairment. Ear protection should be worn any time exposure to such noises is likely. Long-term exposure to loud machinery, such as lawnmowers and other lawn equipment, can damage hearing. Older teens who work around this type of machinery should wear ear protection.

• All acquired hearing damage isn't caused by loud noise. Ear infections and childhood illnesses such as measles, mumps, head injury and side effects from medications are sometimes associated with hearing loss.

Most schools screen children for hearing impairment periodically throughout the school years. But you should arrange for a screening on your own if you suspect your child has a problem. Signs of possible hearing problems in school-age children include poor school performance, behavior or attention problems, ringing in the ears and ear pain.

If you suspect hearing loss in your older child or want to learn about indicators of hearing problems in babies and young children, talk to your doctor or call the Egleston Audiology Service at (404) 315-2454.

ACAP offers job training

Army Career and Alumni Program

For those leaving the Army within the next year, the Army Career and Alumni Program Transition Assistance Office has numerous job retraining opportunities available to soldiers, civilians and family members who are seeking new careers in the private sector.

Purpose: The ACAP skill Development Program is a job retraining, skill enhancement opportunity intended to provide training opportunities to soldiers, civilians and family members who transition from the Army. Since ACAP is a regional office, these opportunities are open to any departing personnel within its sphere of influence. Skill development courses give clients timely, marketable skills with high potential for employment.

Who may participate: The Fort Benning Regional ACAP Office does not limit participation in the SDP. Training is open to soldiers, civilians and family members of either. Veterans of any service may use the program. However, in order to participate, veterans must agree to come to Fort Benning to register and to attend training. Almost all training is being conducted at Fort Benning or in Columbus.

Courses available: There is generally no limit to the courses available; however, several specific programs have been established for clients' consideration. ACAP's intent is to ensure that participants are encouraged to select courses that result in certification with excellent employment opportunities. Examples are law enforcement, commercial drivers licenses, electrician, welding, environmental technician, heavy equipment operations and computer repair. New courses are added every week.

Job retraining under Defense Conversion Act: Many of the courses available qualify for tuition assistance under a special partnership program between the Georgia Department of Labor and ACAP. Funds provided by the U.S. Department of Labor are allocated to numerous training courses. Soldiers who are eligible may have their courses paid for without affecting their VA education benefits or personal resources. Eligibility depends upon the circumstances under which a soldier is leaving the Army. Generally, if it can be shown that a soldier is leaving as a result of downsizing, he or she will likely be eligible. However, final eligibility is determined by the State of Georgia and is on a first come, first served basis.

Methods of payment for courses: ACAP does not bill or collect for courses. It does, however, attempt to ensure the best price for these courses. Paying for courses is the responsibility of the client. The forms for payment include grants available through the Job Retraining Program, cash paid from individuals' resources, VA educational benefits, scholarships, fellowships or grants available from the training institution.

Many of the courses available are approved for use of VA educational benefits and the list grows steadily week by week. Check with the respective training institution or activity prior to enrollment.

Job opportunities and job placement: Many of the training activities provide job leads, fairs and opportunities for their graduates. Several actually assist with job placement. Even so, it is important for a client to remember that it is to their advantage to seek the best possible job to fit their desires. Consequently, one should never depend upon one activity to determine your future.

How this program is integrated into ACAP: Many people and activities have played a significant role in developing SDP being managed by the ACAP TAO staff. This program is an integral part of the overall ACAP services and it is important that clients use all services available from ACAP. Counseling at the TAO, attendance at the pretransition classes, and training available at the Job Assistance Center all adds up to success when done in conjunction with the SDP. The SDP is another valuable tool made available at the ACAP TAO. This program is only available at Fort Benning.

How to obtain information: Because of the hundreds of personnel interested in the program, ACAP is unable to discuss the program by telephone. Information packages and questionnaires will be sent to regional customers who leave their name, address and telephone numbers. Locally, clients can come by the ACAP TAO, Building 2617, DSN: 835-7009 or 545-4892 to get their packages.

Special seminars: TAO counselors will be conducting SDP seminars beginning Thursday between 10 a.m. and noon. The information briefing will be in Infantry Hall, ACAP Classroom 30.

Representatives from many of the training schools will be on hand to answer questions. ACAP plans to conduct these seminars each Thursday and recommends participants start early; no appointment is necessary.

New welcome center opens

By Richard Brill
Special to The Bayonet©

The newly renovated Fort Benning Information Center, located at the intersection of South Lumpkin Road and Benning Boulevard, opened with a ribbon-cutting ceremony May 3.

Taking scissors in hand were Col. Richard Rutledge, garrison commander, and Col. Ronnie Alton, provost marshal and Directorate of Public Safety.

"This is the first spot many people arrive at when they come to Fort Benning, and we want to make a lasting impression," Alton said in his opening remarks. "You never get a second chance to make a first impression, and we want them to know this is the best post in the Army."

The self-help renovation project began in February and was completed using personnel from the Military Police Activity and the Directorate of Public Works. The $32,907 project was funded with Army Communities of Excellence money, Alton said.

According to Alton, some 50 to 60 people use the center per day, which is staffed by a uniformed military police officer who can answer questions and provide directions to post locations for visitors.

Rutledge said the center helps to foster good community relations between Fort Benning and the civilian community.

"This project is about partnership in making this post a great place to live," Rutledge said.

Alton said future projects will include the building of a Medal of Honor grove near the center to honor local recipients of the medal.

Soldiers are encouraged to try on the coat before purchasing, ensuring a comfortable fit when sleeves are rolled, officials said.

AIR: Residents to wait it out

contract, Rutledge said.

Money for air conditioning in barracks and office buildings, though, comes from a different account. In an effort to save money there, air in those facilities won't come on until at least June 1, Rutledge said.

It costs $384,000 to provide air to barracks and offices for 45 days.

"That's more than 10 civilian jobs," Rutledge said.

Some post residents think the air conditioning policy should be changed.

"We think it's hot and it should be turned on," Melinda Alleyne, who lives on Zuckerman Avenue, said.

But Alleyne said she understands why residents don't have free rein with the air conditioning. Some people might take advantage of it, she said.

Pedra Morton, another Zuckerman Avenue resident, thinks people should be allowed to turn on the air whenever they want. The same should go for heat in the winter time, she said.

"A lot of times it was very cold at night and it didn't come on," Morton said.

Turning on the air too early, Rutledge said, could mean that it would have to be turned off toward the middle or end of the summer when the weather is usually much hotter than now.

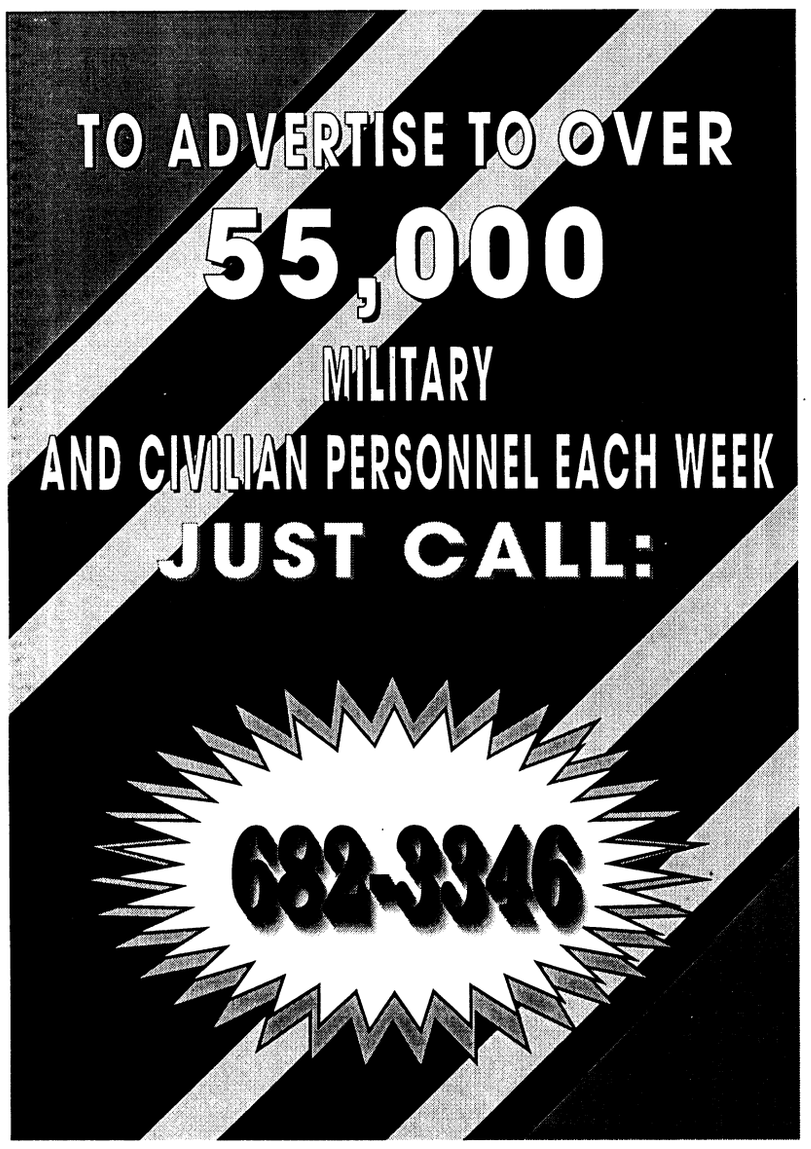
"This is much better than saying 'OK, we've got to turn off the air conditioning' on Aug. 15," he said.

Rutledge said many people think the post can get money from other sources to supplement the utilities account.

"The reality is that we have different pots of money," he said. "We do not have the ability to move dollars from one pot to another."

He added that some post residents have tampered with their air conditioning controls and are using the system without authorization.

"In fact, there are a small percentage of folks that are stealing from the government," he said. "There are families using air conditioning by disconnecting the radio FM controls that we use to control air conditioning in the family housing."



Because of that, post maintenance workers have been inspecting the controls. Those found in violation will have to pay the cost of any repairs to get the controls working again.

Families that require air conditioning because of a medical condition need a signed affidavit from a doctor, Rutledge said.

"You have to be a team player," Rutledge said. "We're all in this together."

"The Army can't provide you with everything in life."

Six women from Fort Benning made history April 30, when they ventured down to Fort Sam Houston, Texas, for the 1995 Army Marathon and returned home winners in the female relay team category with a combined time of three hours, three minutes and nine seconds.

Capts. Carol Anderson and Millie Daniels of the 36th Engineer Group, officer candidates Joni Mae Moore and Corrina Robinson of 3rd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment, Sgt. Sonia Lewis of Company B, 1st Battalion (Airborne), 507th Infantry, 11th Infantry Regiment, and Sgt. Katrina Boston of Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment, breezed past their nearest competitor (Team Bennet from New Jersey) by more than 30 minutes on their way to their first win as a team.

More than 1,000 runners participated in three different categories: full marathon, two-person marathon relay and the six-person marathon relay.

Winners were broken down in each category by competition divisions with the Fort Benning team running in the six-person active duty female division.

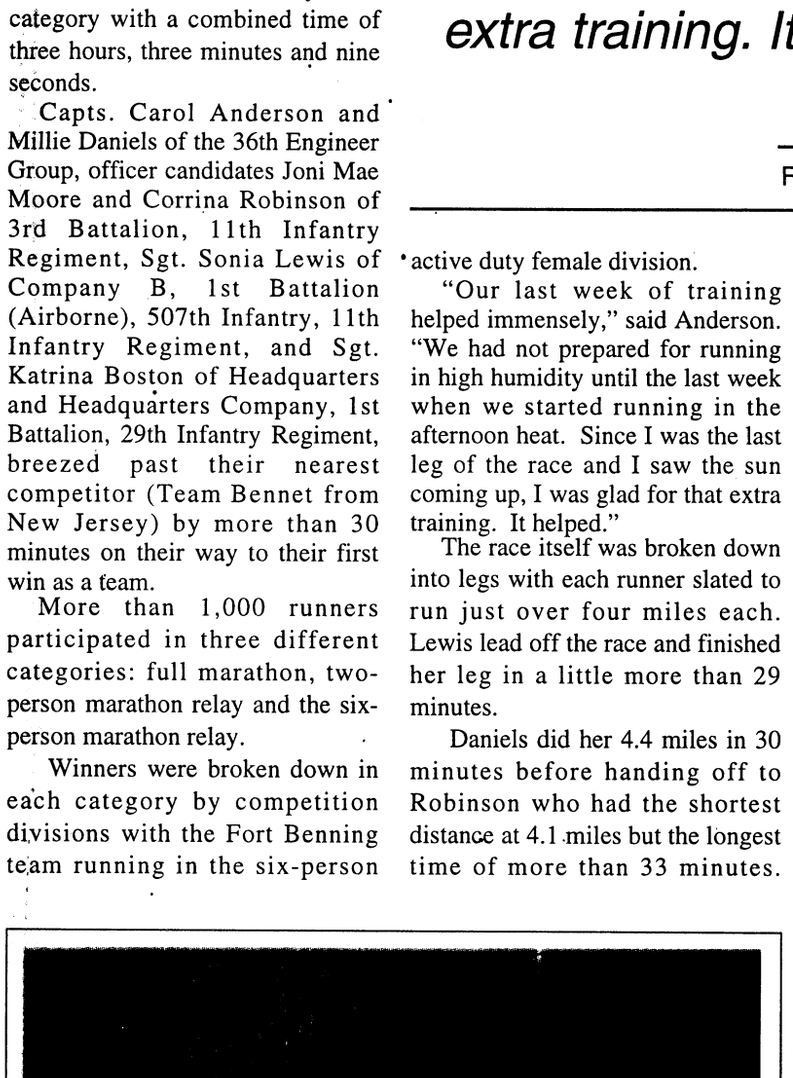
"Our last week of training helped immensely," said Anderson. "We had not prepared for running in high humidity until the last week when we started running in the afternoon heat. Since I was the last leg of the race and I saw the sun coming up, I was glad for that extra training. It helped."

The race itself was broken down into legs with each runner slated to run just over four miles each. Lewis lead off the race and finished her leg in a little more than 29 minutes.

Daniels did her 4.4 miles in 30 minutes before handing off to Robinson who had the shortest distance at 4.1 miles but the longest time of more than 33 minutes. Boston ate up her portion of the race in just over 30 minutes. Moore also finished her leg in just over 30 minutes before giving way to Anderson for the sixth and final leg. Anderson completed her run in less than 30 minutes giving the team a first place finish and a 10th place finish overall.



"This was a hard course," said Anderson. "They advertised this as a fast course. It was not a fast course. This was the worst course I have ever seen in my life."

"There were 18 major turns in the race so you actually get 36 turns and loops; it was very confusing. One team on the men's side actually missed a turn causing them to lose out on first place."

Softball season off to winning start

By Terry K. Ray
Special to The Bayonet©

The softball season is officially here. With two games played Monday evening at the 29th Infantry Regiment's softball field, the season is off and running.

The following is a recap of those two games.

In game one, The Headhunters of Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment, sliced and diced the Roughnecks of HHC 2nd Bn., 29th Inf. Regt., 23-5.

The Headhunters went on a rampage in the bottom of the first inning with 14 runs on 13 hits, one walk and two Roughneck errors.

The Roughnecks cut the lead to 14-3 with three runs in the top of the second inning. Catcher McTyron Lanier drove in one run with a single to left and Douglas Doyle singled home two more runs before being tagged out in a run down at second base.

The Headhunters tacked on five more runs in the bottom of the second for a 19-3 lead on a two-run homer from left centerfielder, John Frasier, a solo blast from Beaudine, a sacrifice fly by right fielder James Reed and a run scoring triple off the bat of second baseman Pablo Santiago.

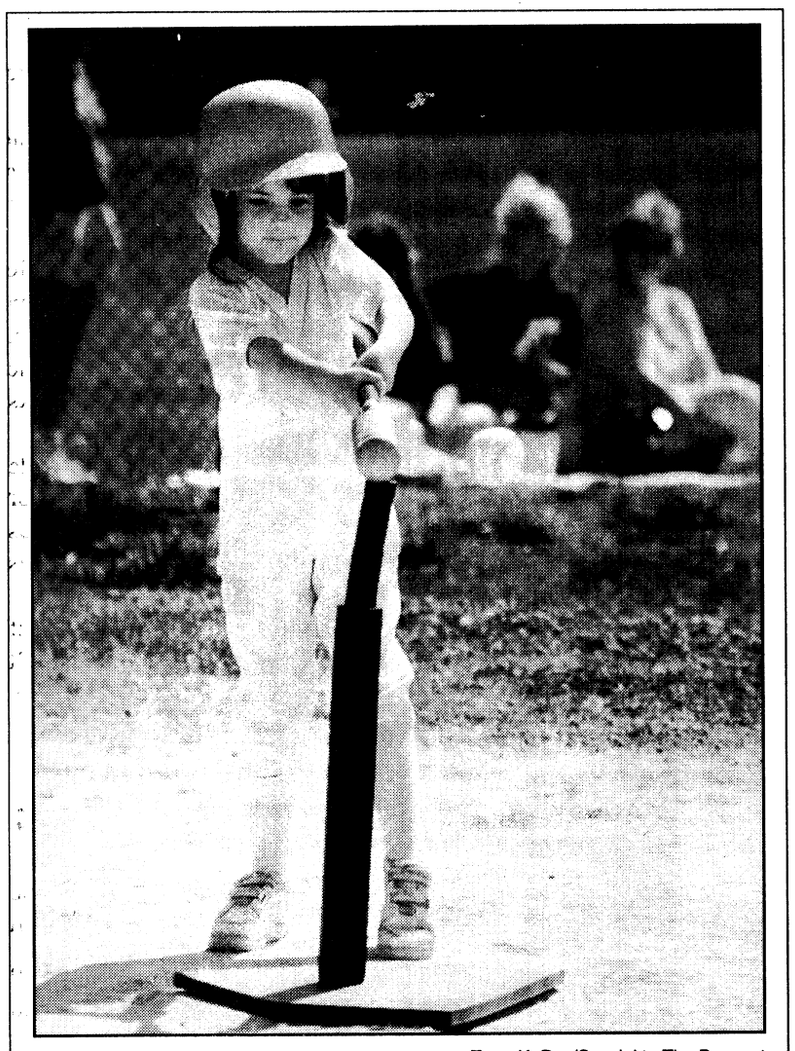
The top of the third inning would be the last time the Roughnecks would push any runs across the plate. At the end of the third the score was 19-5.

The Headhunters got their final four runs of the game in the bottom of the third inning on a fielders choice for two runs, a sacrifice fly for one run a triple from Reed for the final run and a 23-5 final.

In game two, The Hellcats of HHC 29th Regt., tripped up the Aces of Company A, 1st Bn., 29th Inf. Regt., 10-5.



The Hellcats opened up the scoring with a four spot in the top of the first inning on run producing hits from Dave Davis, Omar Basilius and Radames Mendoza for a 4-0 lead after a half inning of play.

Two more runs in the top of the second for the Hellcats pushed the lead up to 6-0. The Aces put one run on the board in the bottom of the second inning. With runners at the corners, centerfielder Stephen Smithe hit into a fielder's choice scoring the run from third for a 6-1 deficit.

The Hellcats got the run back in the top of the third on a sacrifice fly after pitcher Ernest Falk slapped a triple into left center.

The score stayed at 7-1 for two innings before the Hellcats scratched out three runs in the top of the fifth inning for a 10-1 bulge.

The Aces pulled out all the stops in the bottom of the sixth inning, scoring four runs before the time limit expired ending the game with the last out of the inning.

Army wrestlers take 2nd title

By Terry K. Ray
Special to The Bayonet©

The All Army wrestling team powered the armed forces team to its second consecutive U.S National Greco-Roman wrestling team championship in Las Vegas, Nevada May 4 through 7.

Along the way the Army won seven medals, four silver and three bronze. In all, 15 soldiers finished in the top eight qualifying them for two upcoming major tournaments.

"This was the best finish by the Army ever." said All Army coach Anthony Thomas.

Shon Lewis, vying for his third U.S. National title, had to settle for the silver after losing to champion Van Fronhofer of Salem, New York at 136.5 pounds, 6-3. Lewis allowed two three point high amplitude throws to spell the difference between victory and defeat.

Kenneth Owens lost to Marty Morgan of St. Louis Park, Minn. 1-0 in the 180.5-pound division. Morgan scored the only point of the match on a gut wrench with one minute and 30 seconds left in the championship match. The win gave Morgan his fourth national victory. Owens pulled off the upset of the tournament in the quartertfinals when he defeated 1992 Olympian Dan Henderson of Huntington Beach, Calif., 3-1.

Two-time Olympian Michial Foy of Brooklyn Park, Minn., won his fourth national championship at 198 pounds when he defeated Derrick Waldroup 3-1 in the finals.

Foy was able to get the only major move of the match on Waldroup during the five-minute period.

Jerry Jackson dropped a 2-0 overtime decision to champion James Johnson of Phoenix, Ariz., in the 220-pound weight class finishing with the silver medal.

A body lock and bridge by Johnson one minute into the overtime gave Johnson the only points of the match.

Bronze medal winners Jason Tolbert (136.5 pounds) and Keith Sieracki (163 pounds) each scored a personal best. Both had a goal of medaling in the tournament, which they were able to accomplish.

Listed below are the 15 soldiers who have qualified for the U.S. Olympic Festival July 26 through 30 at Boulder, Colo., and the World Team Trials Aug. 6 through 8 in Atlanta, Ga. Each is identified by his weight class and finish at the U.S. Nationals.

Trevor Humphrey, 125.5 pounds, sixth

Jason Tolbert, 136.5 pounds, third, Bronze Medal

Dingy, strained water moves bass into shallows

By Earl Bentz and Steve Price
Outboard Marine Corporation

One of the first things bass tournament pro Guy Eaker looks for on any lake he's fishing is dirty water.

Actually, the proper term is "dingy," or "stained" water, which denotes conditions where visibility is less than two feet.

"Dingy water moves bass shallow," explains the Evinrude Outboards Pro Staff angler, "and because I am primarily a shallow water spinnerbait fisherman, I really try to find these conditions."

Frequently, the best place to find them is in the far upper end of a lake where it begins to narrow into a river. Normally, this area will also have current and fairly heavy shoreline brush, both of which bass prefer.

"I like to fish close to the shore, normally from one to 10 feet out," adds Eaker, "which I think is where most of the bass are located. I fish fast and I cover a lot of water, but the bass I'm searching for are active and aggressive, and if they're there, they'll hit a spinnerbait."

When the current is noticeable, Eaker fishes the protected down-stream side of cover, and water temperature dictates the speed of his retrieve. In cooler water he retrieves more slowly and fishes the spinnerbait slightly deeper, often touching the cover he's fishing.

"In the late spring and early summer, rain may turn water dingy in many parts of the lake so you don't have to make a long boat ride to the upper end," continues the Evinrude pro. "Bass will still be shallow, too, and they'll hit a spinnerbait.

"Rising water moves bass into the newly-flooded cover. The problem is that rising water also tends to scatter bass, so you rarely find them bunched in a small area."

Eaker cautions anglers to understand the difference between dingy water and muddy water, which can also be caused by late spring/early summer rains.

"In muddy water, you can't see your lure at all," he says, "and although you can still use a spinnerbait, you'll normally have better success in clearer water.

"Surprisingly, you can often find little pockets of clear water along a shoreline, even when the entire lake is muddy. You can occasionally find clear or dingy water in the lower part of a lake, or in the backs of creeks once the rain ends."

Extremely clear water, in which it is possible to see lures at depths of eight to 10 feet or greater, pushes bass deeper and creates extremely difficult fishing conditions, says Eaker.

"That's why I'll make a 100-mile boat ride, if necessary, to locate dingy water. I just don't like to fish clear water if I can find something else."

VICTORY FOCUS

3rd Brigade soldiers hit field

Exercise targets wartime mission

By Marc G. Turchin
Bayonet staff writer

A printer is busy making a copy of something from a computer. The pattering of fingertips on a keyboard come from different directions of the office. But this office has no walls and no air conditioning.

The floor on the inside is the same as the outside — clay. Only the inside has the luxury of mats.

Outside the office's entrance is a dirt road with dust flying in the air from the two high-mobility multi purpose wheeled vehicles that have just passed. The terrain in this area is far from flat — either from natural curvature of the Earth or from the M-1 Abrams Tanks or Bradley Fighting Vehicles that have made their way through here recently. Is this a scene from a movie? Is this a scene from troop movements in Europe?

This is the 3rd Brigade, 24th Infantry Division's (Mechanized), Victory Focus deployment at Fort Benning.

This deployment, which is scheduled to last approximately three weeks, is when the brigade goes to the field to sharpen it's battle skills.

"Our first mission is to be deployable," said Lt. Col. William M. Bransford, executive officer for 3rd Bde., 24th Inf. Div. (Mech). "That's what drives the way we go to the field."

In only two days, all of the brigade's units based on Fort Benning were deployed.

"(This) is part of our home station training plan that gets us ready to go to the National Training Center," he said.

Bransford said the training here will mostly consist of squad-platoon- and company-level training. There will be more brigade and division training at NTC.

He said evaluations of armor, artillery, infantry, engineer and the direct support battalions will be done externally during the deployment. The armor and infantry battalions will be evaluated by 3rd Bde., 24th Inf. Div. (Mech), Bransford said. The artillery, engineer and direct support battalions, Bransford said, will be evaluated by their parent units from Fort Stewart, Ga. Other activities during the deployment include both dry and live fires.

"This (deployment) is an opportunity to get all the soldiers together and then fight together," said Sgt. Maj. Felix McNair, operations sergeant major for the brigade.

McNair said the soldiers are trained and tested on certain tasks and skills, which are different from unit to unit.

Sgt. Michael R. Skarhous, a gunner with 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor Regiment, said his task is to give the soldiers who work inside his tank the skills needed for NTC.

Some of these skills include chemical protection suit exchange, how to set up an assembly area, what a perimeter is and how to perform challenge and password.

"This is stuff they should know, but it goes a little deeper than that," Skarhous said. In this case, all the people in the tank should know Skarhous's job, he said.

"If I go down, (they) need to be able to man that tank as well as I can or better," he said.

"This (deployment) gives us a chance to reduce the distractions of the garrison environment and focus on the wartime mission, " said Capt. Donald V. Phillips, commander, Company A, 2nd Bn., 69th Armor Regt.

The more the soldiers practice their tasks, the better prepared they'll be in a time of actual deployment, said Sgt. 1st Class Earl M. Chambers, assistant operations sergeant for the brigade.

Though they never really leave post, Chambers said the idea is to treat this (Victory Focus) as if it were a bona fide deployment.

"This is a good stepping stone for actual deployment," Phillips said. "We strive to make it a realistic as possible," he said.

"I think it's pretty close (to an actual deployment)," McNair said, "because we conduct those skills used in battle."

"This is an important time for us," Bransford said. "We going to make the most of it."

The brigade is scheduled for rotation to NTC in August.

Pentagon recognizes two Fort Benning officers

By Lisa M. Hibbert
Bayonet staff writer

Two Fort Benning officers will be presented with the Gen. Douglas MacArthur Leadership Award in a ceremony in the Pentagon May 19.

Capt. Wilton S. Gorske and Capt. Scott J. Lofreddo are two of the 24 officers selected for the award.

The award is presented annually to selected lieutenants or captains who demonstrate the ideals of "Duty Honor and Country" that MacArthur stood for.

According to Col. Michael J. Ford, special assistant to the commanding general, Army National Guard, "Gorske's superb leadership performance and contributions to the local community are truly a reflection of General MacArthur commitment."

"As an action officer in the Electronic and Special Developments Division, Directorate of Combat Developments, U.S. Army Infantry School, Gorske has demonstrated outstanding leadership skill in the digitization command, control, communications, computers and intelligence arenas," said Ford.

Gorske is a member of the Spring Place Neighborhood Association where he actively petitioned against rezoning laws in Columbus and is also a member of Phi Alpha Theta — national history honor society.

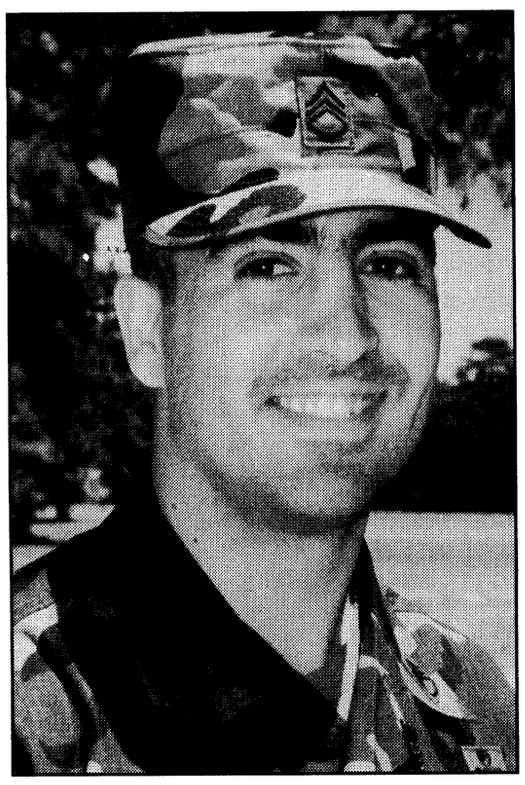
Gorske is a 1992 graduate of Armstrong State College in Savannah. His military education consists of Airborne School, Jumpmaster School, Ranger School, Infantry Advanced Officer Course, Command and Staff Service School.

He lives off post with his wife, Margot, and son, Benjamin, 2.

Lofreddo, commander of the 598th Maintenance Company, 13th Corps Support Battalion, 36th Engineer Group, also met the selection requirements.

Capt. Wilton S. Gorske is one of two Fort Benning officers selected to receive the MacArthur Award.

Capt. Scott J. Lofreddo is one of two Fort Benning officers selected to receive the MacArthur Award.



Lofreddo served in Somalia as the battalion operations officer for the 13th Corps Support Battalion, and controlled the defensive perimeter for a 1,400 soldier logistics base. While there his section provided all of the combat services to the unit forces.

Lofreddo is a member of the National Defense Transportation Association. He joined the officer corps after serving an enlisted tour as a military policeman.

Lofreddo is a 1987 graduate of the University of Southern Florida at Tampa. His military education consists of Jumpmaster School, Ranger School, Airborne School, Battalion Motor Officer Course, Strategic Deployment Course, Nuclear, Biological and Chemical School, the Combined Arms Service and Staff School and the Advanced Transportation Officer Course.

He lives in Phenix City with his wife, Kathleen, his son, Peter, 5, and his daughter, Sarah, 4.

AMU soldier learns diligence pays off

Marlene Tikal

After applying twice, Staff Sgt. Luis R. Mora will be attending the Warrant Officer Training program at Fort Rucker, Ala., beginning Aug. 10.

By Marlene Tikal
USAMU Public Affairs Office

Soldiers at the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit strive for excellence daily, not only in marksmanship competition but in career development.

An example is Staff Sgt. Luis R. Mora of the USAMU Property Book Office. A soldier with 11 years of service, Mora recently submitted an application for the Warrant Officer's Program at Fort Rucker, Ala. — for the second time.

Where the first time his application was disapproved, this time it was accepted and Mora partially credits the soldiers of the USAMU for setting the standards which motivated him to achieve his own career high.

"The saying's true," Mora said. "Anything worth having isn't always easy to get."

And that's a fact any USAMU soldier would confirm. Since the unit's inception in 1956, USAMU marksmen have won hundreds of individual and team national titles, with more than 40 world championships and 19 Olympic Games medals, USAMU officials said.

To think any of those medals were won by marksmen the first time, or even second or third time they stood on the firing line of competition is infeasible, Mora said.

"But, the medals were eventually,won," Mora said. "And they were won through hard work and dedication to training."

So, when Mora's first application was nixed due to the fact he hadn't spent two years working continuously in his field of application, property book management, he did what USAMU marksmen do when they fail to win — recognize the problem, overcome it, and move on.

"I knew what I had to do when my application was denied," said Mora, who at that time was with the 3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment.

The Ranger Regiment is an elite combat unit, and the nature of its mission requires its soldiers to spend most of their time training in the field. Being one of those soldiers, Mora said he was not getting the office training he needed to apply as a property book management warrant officer candidate.

"So I transferred to the Marksmanship Unit," Mora said. "That was 10 months ago. Since then, I've gotten the training I need working full-time in the PBO, and I've also taken time to complete several college courses at night."

AS for being accepted this time, "It's a long-time goal finally realized," Mora said. And, along with thanking the USAMU, Mora also thanks his wife of nine years, Yolanda.

"I think this is the best thing that's ever happened for my husband," Yolanda said. "His going to Warrant Officer School has been a goal of both of ours for some time."

5 medics earn EFMB

By Jennifer Newaski
2nd MASH

The 36th Engineer Group had five medics receive the Expert Field Medical Badge April 28.

They were 2nd Lt. David Diamond, Sgt. Michael Stubbs, Cpl. Brent Byrd, Pfc. Steve Can from 690th Medical Company and Spc. Jacob Garcia from 2nd Mobile Army Surgical Hospital.

From April 17 to 28, these soldiers were challenged in a battlefield scenario to skillfully demonstrate their soldier and medical competence. The competition consisted of day and night land navigation, a physical fitness test, marksmanship skills, communication, evacuation of sick and wounded, emergency medical treatment, cardiopulmonary resuscitation, nuclear, biological and chemical tasks, a 12-mile forced road march and a 100-question written test.

There were initially 295 participants. April 28 there were only 36 soldiers, or 12 percent, remaining that received the EFMB.

Co. D, 2/29 deactivates

By Ian D. Murdoch
2nd Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment

The 2nd Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment deactivated its Delta Company during a ceremony May 1 at Dickman Field. The company was deactivated to help the battalion adapt to the downsizing of the Army, according to Lt. Col. Michael A. Phillips, battalion commander.

Company D had included the U.S. Army Sniper School and the Squad Tactic Training Section. Following the casing of the guidon, these two elements were assigned to the battalion's Companies C and A respectively. The training conducted by these sections will remain unchanged, according to Phillips.

Capt. Michael B. Ryan and 1st Sgt. Anthony Chatmon cased the company guidon for the last time in a ceremony lasting about 45 minutes. Ryan will be attending the Combined Arms and Staff Service School. Chatmon will be reassigned to the Dismounted Battlespace Battle Lab here.

Although the battalion was losing a company, Phillips called the ceremony a celebration.

"I am excited that we must now embrace change," he said. "It causes us to stretch our intellect as we do the same mission more efficiently." Phillips said the Company D was chosen for deactivation because it was the smallest company in the battalion and that its instructors and missions could be most easily transferred to other companies.

Ryan described the ceremony as a "privilege and an honor." He praised his soldiers as true professionals who take a lot of pride in instructing infantrymen.

The ceremony was the highlight of a day full of activities to commemorate the achievement s of the company.

The day began with an awards ceremony in which Edwin B. Nelson Jr., former chief instructor of the Sniper School, was laterally promoted to first sergeant of Company C.

The awards ceremony was followed by a battalion eight kilometer race. After the deactivation, the entire battalion turned out for a picnic.

Retreat ceremony honors excellence

By Lisa M. Hibbert
Bayonet staff writer

Military and civilian employees of Fort Benning, as well as two civilians from the community, were honored May 1 at the monthly retreat ceremony for their contributions to Fort Benning.

Commanding General Maj. Gen. John W. Hendrix honored 15 people on York Field who have achieved excellence.

The honorees were:

• Pfc. Candace L. Hall — The military police patrolwoman revived a civilian employee, who had passed out in Building 280, by performing cardiopulmonary resuscitation until emergency medical services arrived. Medical authorities credit Hall with saving the employee's life.

• Spc. Danny L. Stottle — The military police patrolman confronted two males detaining a female in a vehicle parked in a remote location on Sand Hill. Stottle protected the victim from further harm; the suspects were later charged with kidnapping and intent to commit rape.

• William J. White — The Fort Benning firefighter was visiting his parents when his mother heard a gunshot nearby. Upon investigation, he found a neighbor with a self-inflicted gunshot wound to the chest. The neighbor was attempting to fire another round when White intervened. His emergency first aid directly resulted in averting a death.

• Mark J. Fincher — The Directorate of Logistics employee was presented the Commander's Award for Civilian Service because he identified a possibility to save money on the purchase of natural gas and caused negotiations to be implemented, which saved Fort Benning more than $1 million for fiscal 1995.

• Glenn C. Todd — A Directorate of Logistics employee was presented the Achievement Medal for Civilian Service for his work in preparation for and assisting in the renegotiation of the natural gas contract for Fort Benning, which resulted in the Army saving more than $1 million for fiscal 1995.

• Tina Warren — Santa's Castle Volunteer of the Month provided outstanding support in her capacity as treasurer and acting co-chairwoman for Santa's Castle. Warren is credited with proper management and accountability of all donations and upkeep of financial records as well as conducting fund-raisers for Santa's Castle.

• Rudolph Brantley — Directorate of Public Works, Civilian Employee of the Month (February), Brantley showed his desire to service soldiers and customers by providing the best service possible.

• Walter I. Jones — Directorate of Logistics, Civilian Employee for the Month (January), during the month of January, Jones demonstrated his devotion to duty by improving the Directorate of Public Works fund control as well as service orders response time.

• Dan and Mary Reed — Columbus Rotary Club, received the Fort Benning Momento Award for their support of Fort Benning.

After presenting the awards, Hendrix said the reason why we won the ACOE award was because of some of the people we recognized.

"They lead by example — they say, as Iron Mike does, "Follow me," Hendrix said.

New post CSM stresses teamwork

By Lisa M. Hibbert
Bayonet staff writer

Post Command Sgt. Maj. George D. Conrad, assumed his current position April 13 in a change of position ceremony on York Field.

Conrad replaced Post Command Sgt. Maj. William H. Acebes, who will retire May 31.

Conrad's career began in 1961 when he wanted a job where he could serve his country, receive a mental and physical challenge and better himself. In April of that year, Conrad enlisted in the Army as an infantryman and was sent to Fort Jackson, S.C., for his basic combat training and his advanced individual training.

Conrad not only attended the Infantry Course, he also attended the Airborne, Jumpmaster, Ranger and Jungle Warfare schools, as well as the Basic and Advanced Noncommissioned Officer courses, the Instructor Course and the U.S. Sergeants Major Academy.

Today Conrad wears the Ranger Tab, the Canadian Parachutist Badge, the Combat Infantryman Badge, the Expert Infantryman Badge and the Master Parachutists Badge with a combat star.

Conrad's experiences prepared him for his current position. His resume includes being command sergeant major of the U.S. Army Infantry School, the 5th Division, the 6th Infantry Division (Light) and U.S. Army Japan and IX Corps.

Conrad said his most memorable experience in the military was being considered for Sergeant Major of the Army in 1994.

"I was recommended by the Corps Commander, Lt. Gen. Jack D. Woodall, in Japan for Sergeant Major of the Army," Conrad said. "Although I did not get the job, it was an honor to have even been considered."

Conrad said his primary focus as the leader of the enlisted soldiers on post will be teamwork.

"You have to work together as a team — there is strength in numbers," Conrad said. "Once you show people that you're a team, no one can bring you down."

Conrad said that with a little guidance, the NCO Corps will be stronger.

In a memorandum dated April 18, Conrad listed 17 points that express his philosophy on leadership. The points included being physically fit, military bearing and demeanor, community involvement, promptness and tactics and techniques.

"Tactics are what you do; technique is how you do it," Conrad said in the memorandum.

"Tacticians are made not born. It takes hours, days and years of study and work to be proficient and even then there is never an end. No point is ever reached where you can say 'I need not go further.' Do you know exactly what to do with your soldiers under all conditions," Conrad asked. "Can you easily and smoothly accomplish such action? I think not, and therein lies your goal as a noncommissioned officer. If you can clearly think both back and ahead, you will see that daily training is pointed toward the goal — what to do and can you do it?"

Conrad said that it was important to him to put out this memorandum.

"I think that it is only fair as a noncommissioned officer of this command that I, as (the) USAIC, Fort Benning command sergeant major, state my philosophy on leadership and the standards I expect from you," Conrad said.

Conrad plans to retire after he completes his tour at Fort Benning.

School counselor saves girl from choking

By Jerrie Macintire
Special to The Bayonet©

A Fort Benning school counselor lived up to his job description of being a true friend when he administered emergency first aid and saved the life of a youngster who was choking.

McBride first-grader Ashtin Henderson and a classmate were racing to see who could finish the lunch roll first when a ball of sticky dough became lodged in her throat May 5, said Del Hicks, principal.

Counselor Jim Rutland performed the Heimlich Maneuver; then he, along with media specialist Jean Baty and visiting parent Bonnie Bernier, administered emergency breathing techniques and cardiopulmonary resuscitation that saved Henderson's life, Hicks said.

"I thought we were going to lose a student," he said. "She was out for four or five minutes. He really saved her life."

Rutland was quick to share credit with Batey, who happened to be walking past the cafeteria, and Bernier, who was having lunch with her child. All three have had first aid training.

"It was a team effort. We all worked together to help Ashtin," he said.

When seven-year-old Henderson first began to choke, a teacher's aide quickly carried her to Rutland, who was having lunch in the cafeteria for just the second time this year.

Rutland, who knew first aid from staff development courses, immediately performed the Heimlich Maneuver, a bear-hug type procedure designed to dislodge food from the windpipe, while someone called 911.

The maneuver forced air from Henderson's lungs but did not dislodge the roll; she attempted to gasp after the initial procedure, but instead sucked the roll more tightly into her windpipe, witnesses said.

"I did the Heimlich Maneuver several times, but she just had no air in her lungs. There was no way to force the roll out," Rutland said.

Rutland, Batey and Bernier rushed Henderson to the nurse's office where they began cardiopulmonary resuscitation. All three individuals knew the correct procedures; Rutland and Batey had training through staff development and the school nurse, and Bernier had training as part of her certification to provide child care in her Fort Benning home.

Witnesses said Henderson's complexion was purple, her jaw was locked and her eyes were rolled back when Rutland tried a desperate measure: to blow air into her lungs with mouth-to-mouth resuscitation.

"I know that isn't the procedure you're supposed to use, but nothing was working. She was dying," he said. "It was like blowing into a bottle. Nothing. No air would go in."

"I blew as hard as I could," said Rutland, the six-foot-tall, former physical education teacher and coach.

The procedure dislodged the roll slightly as the CPR team continued to provide emergency medical intervention, Hicks said.

As the ambulance pulled up, Ashtin coughed up the bread; approximately five minutes had elapsed since she swallowed the roll, he estimated.

"It was a perfect plug," Hicks said. "It was at least as big around as a quarter and two inches long. The paramedics thought it was a potato."

Paramedics administered oxygen and rushed Ashtin to Martin Army Community Hospital where she underwent X-rays and a thorough evaluation, said Angela Henderson, her mother.

Jerrie Macintire/Special to The Bayonet

McBride student Ashtin Henderson shares her feelings about being frightened because she almost died with school counselor Jim Rutland, who helped save her life along with Jean Batey and Bonnie Bernier.

She had no broken ribs, an occasional consequence of the Heimlich Maneuver, and was released later that day. She has no permanent damage from the incident although she is undergoing regular checkups, Henderson said.

Rutland was also evaluated at the hospital; his blood pressure was soaring and he was held in observation for several hours.

"In my 30 years of teaching, this is the scariest thing that has happened," Rutland said.

Henderson and her mother visited the school the next day with house plants and thank-you notes.

"I picked house plants instead of cut flowers because they live longer," she said. "They can see the plants every day."

(Ashtin) is adjusting well to her brush with death, Henderson said.

"She woke up at midnight that night and wanted to talk about it. She knows she almost died," Henderson said.

Classmates have rallied around Ashtin and wrote notes and get-well cards the day after the incident, Henderson said.

"Justin even gave me a ceramic duckie," Henderson said. "I sleep with it every night." Henderson said she is "really glad" adults were able to help her.

"It was scary," said Henderson, who remembers frantically jumping up and down in the cafeteria when she was choking, then awakening to an ambulance siren.

"We are fortunate that we had the training and that it worked," Batey said. "I am a firm believer in first aid training."

All post teachers have Heimlich Maneuver training, according to Gail Wilson, director of staff development.

School nurses schedule training, during the year, and staff development courses are offered regularly for school staff, Wilson said.

Family Child Care

Organizers need soup labels to purchase playground equipment for Russ Pond.

Only 2 percent of the 345,650 Campbell's Soup Company labels needed have been collected.

The drive is part of the Campbell's Labels for Education program and was launched in January by the Family Child Care providers at Fort Benning.

Labels from more than 1,000 Campbell's products can be redeemed for educational equipment and materials.

Campbell's products include: anything with the company's label, Marie's, Mrs. Paul's, Swanson, V-8, Early California, Franco-American, Vlasic, Pepperidge Farm and Prego.

The goal is to collect enough labels to trade for the playground equipment.

Only 5,000 of the 345,650 labels needed have been collected. The drive ends March 1.

There are label drop-off points at all community of life buildings and the Commissary.

Many of the child-care providers will accept labels. Their homes can be identified by the yellow rainbows in the windows.

The Family Child Care providers are also looking for volunteers to help distribute fliers about the program, trim and remove labels from cans, and count and sort labels.

Call Debbie Snoke at 687-6823 for more information.

Students

celebrate olympics with 'taste' of culture

By Jerrie Macintire
Special to The Bayonet©

Inspired by the upcoming Olympic Games, students brought a little taste of the world to White School May 5 with an International Night celebration.

"This was a cultural awareness exercise," said Melanie Keating, assistant principal. "The whole school was decorated; we had the program of songs and dances, and parent volunteers served finger foods from the adopted country."

Foods included such regional favorites as bratwurst from Germany and, of course, hot dogs and hamburgers from the United States.

Outfitted in native costumes and props, students from each class performed before a capacity crowd of parents and families, Keating said.

"It was a wonderful way to bring about cultural awareness and highlight the Olympics," she said.

After the presentation, visitors toured the different classroom pods to view school assignments and talk with teachers.

As part of the study unit, classes had guest speakers from their adopted countries and also participated in a variety of cross-curricular activities.

Environmental scholarships available

By Elsie Jackson
Army Career and Alumni Program

Service members, veterans and Department of Defense Civilians interested in environmental management or cultural and natural resource management careers now have an additional scholarship opportunity to pursue.

The Southern Environmental Education Partnership is looking for grant applicants for the fall 1995 school year. Classes will be conducted at Jacksonville State University in Jacksonville, Ala., and at Talladega College nearby.

All individuals are eligible to apply for these programs; however, current and former members of the armed forces and individuals who are or have been employed by the Department of Defense (or its contractors or subcontractors) will be given preference.

Along with the standard forms and letters required for scholarship applications, individuals should be prepared to submit a Standard Form 171 (Application for Federal Employment) or Optional Form 612 (Optional Application for Federal Employment) with an OF 306 (Declaration for Federal Employment), and a copy of their separation papers. Scholarship applications, and the list of forms and letters required is available at the Fort Benning Army Career and Alumni Program office.

Scholarships leading to a bachelor of science degree are based on a three-year track, and include tuition for six regular semesters (academic) and for three (mandatory) summer terms, books, supplies and insurance.

Scholarship recipients may pursue either a bachelor of science degree with a major in chemistry and minor in environmental management, or a bachelor of science degree with a major in biology and a minor in cultural and natural resource management.

These degrees will prepare individuals for careers as environmental program managers or cultural and natural resource managers. Upon completion of this program, individuals must agree to serve as full-time civilian employees in an environmental position with the Department of Defense (if such employment is available and offered) for 12 months for each school year the scholarship provides.

In the bachelor's degree programs, students take academic courses at Jacksonville State University or Talladega College during the fall and spring semesters. They enroll at Jacksonville State University for the summer term in a highly structured work-based instruction program. This summer program incorporates work experience courses (on-the-job training) at actual DoD installations.

Students entering the program through Talladega College spend the spring and fall terms for their first two years at Talladega College and their third year in residence at Jacksonville State. After completing their respective degree programs, students may elect to receive their degrees from either institution.

Individuals pursuing a master's in public administration degree with a concentration in environmental science management may apply for a fellowship that will provide tuition, up to $300 per semester for textbooks and fees, and up to $162 per year for insurance.

The master's program includes courses in the areas of environmental chemistry, environmental engineering, environmental geology and environmental law. A broad-based curriculum in management science and engineering, this program provides both academic and practical skills needed to resolve, manage, and prevent environmental problems and issues in air, water, toxic waste and land reclamation.

Foreign students need local homes for program

Pacific Intercultural Exchange

Foreign high school students are scheduled to arrive in the Fort Benning area for academic program homestays and the sponsoring organization needs a few more local host families.

According to John Doty, Pacific Intercultural Exchange executive director, the students are all between the ages of 15 and 18 years, are English-speaking, have their own spending money, carry accident and health insurance, and are anxious to share their cultural experiences with their new American families.

The organization currently has programs to match almost every family's needs, ranging in length from a semester to a full academic year, where the students attend local high schools.

Area representatives match students with host families by finding common interests and lifestyles through an informal in-home meeting. Prospective host families are able to review student applications and select the perfect match. As there are no "typical" host families, the organization can fit a student into just about any situation, whether it be a single parent, a childless couple, a retired couple or a large family.

Families who host for PIE are also eligible to claim a $50 per month charitable contribution deduction on their itemized tax returns for each month they host a sponsored student.

For the upcoming programs, the organization has students from Spain, Germany, Poland, Russia, Finland, Argentina, Brazil, Colombia, Paraguay, Australia, New Zealand, Croatia and many other countries.

The organization has also been invited to participate in a special government-funded program to bring scholarship students from the newly independent states of the former Soviet Union to the United States. The organization is a nonprofit educational organization that has sponsored more than 18,000 students from 40 countries since its founding in 1975.

Doty encourages families to contact the program immediately, as it will allow the proper time for the students and hosts to get to know one another before they actually meet for the first time.

The agency also has travel or study program opportunities available for American high school students as well as possibilities for community volunteers to assist and work with area host families, students and schools.

Fort Benning area families interested in learning more about student exchange or arranging for a meeting with a community representative can call (800) 631-1818.

Church tasks mothers with teaching heritage

By Anibal Cruz-Baez
School of the Americas

Mothers are very special. Most are so special that we let them know how much we appreciate everything they have done for us.

The church places upon mothers the priestly responsibility and vocation for teaching the heritage of families to the children. This heritage includes family and religious values. That's why, in the baptismal ritual, the church asks the parents to live a life before the children "that becomes the gospel" — the good news for our heritage.

If our age is different from others, it's different in the number of influences to which children are exposed. Parents are no longer the sole models for children on what is right and wrong — good and bad.

The mass media, the peer society and the school teach values to our children. When you measure the time that children spend exposed outside the home over the time they spend with their parents, it's no wonder that parents feel embattled and there are crises in the family. Parents get little support for their vocation to teach their children. Parents must continue to assert their responsibility to express the values of their heritage.

Many parents feel that the greatest threat to the family is not television, drugs, alcohol, permissive sex, divorce or a spouse working outside the home. The greatest threat is inattentive parents. Dads and Moms who do not or cannot give enough attention to their own children and rely on other influences to provide and teach values to their children are the real threat.

Children are great learners. It's been said children learn about half of what they will ever know from birth to 6 years old. When children play, they learn what it means to be an adult man and a father or a woman and a mother.

Children learn what adults do and what they do not do. Parents are the primary source of learning for children. The primary source is not the church, not the school, not the baby sitter, not the nursery, not society. There is a myth that the primary learning experience for children is from their peers. This is true only if parents forfeit their responsibility to be the primary source of learning for children

Most children will try other ways. When the other ways are not acceptable to parents, they come back to the values of their parents. Many adolescents reject the values of parents as a test. They substitute their own initiatives or the initiatives of peers. They have to find out for themselves what works.

In most cases, this is not a crisis. The crisis occurs when parents forfeit their responsibility to stand for what's right because it is right. When parents yield to some other source to set the standard and instruct their children, they see the child forsake what they, the parents, want.

Parents can give children a sense of right, wrong, good, bad, true and beautiful. They can equip them to find their own way. Parents give children an appreciation for love, compassion and care despite the pressures to do otherwise. The deepest meaning behind the dedication or baptism of a child is the vow to live before the children a life befitting one who trusts God.

Families take many forms and styles. A distinctive quality of a family is that of a community. It is in this community where, in spite of all human sins and errors committed, one is received with forgiving love and care. The greatest gift a family can give individuals is the assurance that they are important.

In our age, it is very difficult to give great quantities of time to the family but we can still give one another focused attention. Work, school, friends and many other things take our family time away. Time taken away results in loneliness and searching for someone or something to fill the gap.

Mothers, set before your children an example of care and concern. Take time to pay attention and do what's right because it is right.

Fathers, love the mothers and children. Set before them an example of care and concern. Pay attention and do what's right because it is right.

Families, let us express to one another that we are important, wanted, loved and cared for.

A merry heart is good medicine

By Richard D. King
Family Life Training Center

King Solomon spoke of a merry heart producing the same effect as good medicine (Proverbs 17:22). The medicine of which he spoke cannot be found on the shelf of a Troop Medical Clinic or on a field table of a battalion aid station.

In fact, none of the levels of health service support carry the type of medicine to which the Scriptures refer. "A right spirit and a good outlook" are strengthening qualities implanted in the Christian's heart by the Holy Spirit.

There is a close relationship between our inner well-being and our physical health. Solomon was pointing out that a positive attitude toward life and a sense of contentment do have great healing value. Not all physical ills though, have a nonphysical cause. The point is that even though people may suffer from sickness and pain, they can stay spiritually healthy, which in turn promotes their total well-being.

While some insist that faith cures all sickness, the Bible reminds us that the "Outward man perishes, but the inner man can be renewed day by day." (II Corinthians 4:16).

Most prescriptions are taken three or four times a day until the medicine is depleted. The person who is saved or is born into the family of God through faith in the Lord Jesus Christ has a life-long prescription from the great physician that will never reach an expiration date.

Even though a Christian is not exempt from the daily trials of this life, he or she can have the eternal "peace of God that passes all understanding."

True joy is found in a personal relationship with the Son of God. Christians, of all the people in the world, should have a merry heart.

By the way, when was the last time you laughed so hard your side began to ache or a tear rolled down your cheek? Genuine relief comes from a merry heart, which is effective medicine. A merry heart goes all day long; a sad heart tires in a minute.

Hawaiian queen prays

By Bill Putman
USAIC Chaplain Office

prayer

In recognition of Asian American and Pacific Islander Heritage Month, this article focus on the rich history of Hawaii.

Prior to the time that the missionaries from New England went to Hawaii in the early 19th century and brought Christianity to the islands, the Hawaiians had their own religion, standards of conduct and ethics. They also had a royal family and a royal palace, which is the only royal palace in the United States.

The last member of the royal family to reign over Hawaii was Queen Liliuokalani. She was an accomplished musician and composer. She served as organist at the Kawaiahao Church, which is called the Westminster Abbey of Hawaii.

Probably the most famous and most loved of Queen Liliuokalani's compositions is "Aloha Oe." However, another of her compositions, which is used widely in Hawaiian churches, is the Queen's Prayer.

The first verse is:

"0 Kou aloha no, Aia i ka lani
A o kou oia i o hehemolele ho i Amen."

"0 Lord thy loving mercy is high as the heavens. It tells of thy truth and 'tis filled with holiness. Amen."

"Hear my prayer, O God; give ear to the words of my mouth."
Psalms 54:2

ARMY COMMUNITIES OF EXCELLENCE

Fort Benning receives 'best' in world crown

Hendrix brings home cup, flag, wooden trophy

By Agatha Hudson Debrow
Bayonet editor

WASHINGTON — Fort Benning was officially recognized — for the second year in a row — as America's premier Army installation in the world May 11 and 12 in ceremonies at the Pentagon.

Army Chief of Staff Gen. Gordon R. Sullivan presented Maj. Gen. John W. Hendrix, Fort Benning commanding general, the Army Communities of Excellence competition's first-place engraved silver cup at an awards ceremony May 11.

The next day, Hendrix, on behalf of the post, accepted an installation of excellence flag and a huge wooden trophy at the Commander in Chief's Annual Awards for Installation Excellence.

"It doesn't get any better than this," Hendrix said. "(This is) special to me (as a) commander in America's Army."

Army Communities of Excellence awards are given yearly to Army installations for their efforts to provide services and support to soldiers, civilian workers, retirees and family members. Despite dwindling resources, ACOE award winners have succeeded in improving the quality of life in the Army, Sullivan said.

"I know that every day is not great in Army communities around the world," he told members of the audience. "Resources are drying up. We're losing a lot of people. Dollars are drying up; missions are going up. Yet, you have succeeded.

"Quality of life is about readiness," he continued. "You can't separate the two. (When) you have good quality of life, the Army is more ready."

Senior leaders attend

More than 500 people, including senior military and civilian leaders in America's Army — active, National Guard and the Reserves — and members of Congress, sweated through bright sunshiny weather for the chief of staff's ceremony, which was at 3 p.m. on the lower parade field at the River Entrance to the Pentagon.

In a smaller ceremony the next day, the best installations in the Department of Defense were recognized. "Hooahs" from Fort Benning's contingent of 59 military and civilian members were intensely audible despite the noise from 747s, DC-10s and other intermittent aircraft flying overhead.

Columbus Mayor Bobby Peters and the presidents of Columbus' and Phenix City's chambers of commerce, Mike Gaymon and Vic Cross, respectively, were also on hand for the ceremonies.

"(We're here) to show the leadership in Washington that when Fort Benning needs us somewhere, we're going to be there," Peters said. "We're like a family; we're all just one community."

Gaymon said he believes the post won the award because it provides excellence on an everyday basis.

"It's a everyday process," he said. "It's not just when the ACOE team comes. Every day, we're trying to do our best to support the fort and they try to support us. When the team comes, that's the easy part. It's easy to do when you're (already) working at it than trying to get geared up when the team comes."

The U.S. Army Band played, and several Congressmen attended, including U.S. Reps. Sanford Bishop and Mac Collins.

Other winners

Other active Army installations that won other top awards at the chief of staff's ceremony were Camp Zama, Japan; Fort Shafter, Hawaii; Fort McCoy, Wis.; Redstone Arsenal, Ala.; and Schofield Barracks, Hawaii.

Top honors for Army Reserve went to the 377th theater Army Area Command in New Orleans, La. The Tulsa Engineer District in Oklahoma was the winner in the special category. The top National Guard winner was the state of Utah.

Other service installations and the Defense Logistics Agency to win a Commander-in-Chief's Award for Installation Excellence were the Marine Corps Logistics Base in Albany, Ga.; the Naval Air Station in Lemoore, Calif.; Robins Air Force Base, Warner Robins, Ga.; and the Defense Personnel Support Center in Philadelphia, Pa.

This year's monetary prize has not yet been determined, according to ACOE officials.

ACOE, post leadership pledge to 'three-peat'; map out new strategies

By Agatha Hudson Debrow
Bayonet editor

WASHINGTON — While other posts' officials were basking in the limelight and the sunlight at the installation excellence ceremonies at the Pentagon May 11 and 12, Fort Benning officials were planning strategies on how to "three-peat," or win the award three years in a row.

Officials said their goal is to capture the Commander in Chief's Award as the best Army installation in the world again next year and work to that end has already begun.

Maj. Gen. John W. Hendrix, post commanding general, told officials at the Chief of Staff of the Army's Communities of Excellence Awards ceremony that the post is going to be No. 1 three times in a row.

"We're humbled to be No. 1 (this year), he said. "But, we're gonna fight like hell to be No. 1 (again) next year."

Sarah McLaney, post Army Communities of Excellence and Total Army Quality coordinator, echoed Hendrix's confidence.

"There's no doubt in my mind that we can do it," she said. "Once you're a winner and everyone gets involved, you can do it."

McLaney said the post's ACOE staff has already laid the framework for the new direction in which the Army is going.

"We're working toward (implementing) the new criteria — exactly what the Army is going to do and the direction the Army is headed."

McLaney said the big change is called "improving the process."

"What we've done (already) is look at our processes and the way they (team members) evaluate installations," she said. "We're trying to improve our processes so that they become more mission-oriented, and we have to find new ways to capture that."

McLaney said Fort Benning's leadership is already on board.

"We have already had the kickoff (for next year's program)," she said, "and we have (scheduled) the Senior Executive Leaders' Seminar May 31 and June 1."

The seminar is for the post's top leaders, according to Pat Porter, management assistant, Total Army Quality Office. It is designed to build knowledge and increase understanding of the Army performance improvement criteria, identify the top four to six focus areas for improvement and to provide an opportunity for senior leaders to learn how to use the assessment process as a management tool, she said

Post cools off; officials turn on air

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Wednesday afternoon, Col. Wm. David Brown, director of Public Works, announced that post officials have made the decision to turn on the air conditioning in all buildings on post.

"We need the cooperation of everyone to practice energy conservation," Brown said. "Those offices that have control over their air conditioning units are strongly encouraged to use them only when needed."

Brown said the post is currently working on a curtailment plan to meet its energy goals and budget requirements.

"We are taking risks now by turning on the air earlier than planned," he said. "We will monitor the energy usage throughout the summer."

According to DPW, this process will take several days with Heating, Ventilation and Air Conditioning Section employees working 10 hours per day. Brown said, DPW's goal is to have all air conditioning on by close of business Tuesday.

Anyone whose air conditioning doesn't work by Tuesday, can call a work order into the DPW Service Order Center at 545-2135. Service orders will not be accepted before Tuesday. Family housing air conditioning has already been authorized and the DPW Service Order Center will accept service orders for Family Housing.

7th RTB to inactivate

USAIC Public Affairs Office

The 7th Ranger Training Battalion, Ranger Training Brigade, U.S. Army Infantry School, will inactivate June 2 during a 10 a.m. ceremony at Camp McGregor, Fort Bliss, Texas.

The 7th Ranger Training Battalion, Ranger Training Brigade, U.S. Army Infantry School, has conducted the desert phase of Ranger School at Camp McGregor, Fort Bliss, Texas, since 1991.

From 1986 to 1991, the 7th Battalion conducted the training at Dugway Proving Ground, Utah, but was subsequently moved to Fort Bliss to reduce operating costs, increase training support and avoid Utah's extreme winter weather conditions.

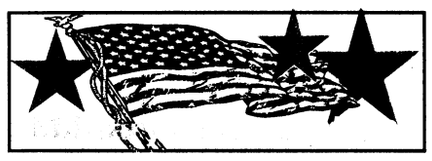
Appreciation week to climax Saturday with Armed Forces Day

USAIC Public Affairs Office



The theme for this year's grand finale to Military Appreciation Week — the Armed Forces Day picnic and open house — is "Forces for Freedom."

Armed Forces Day activities will take place Saturday on York Field from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m., and all are invited.

Events begin with the "Burn the General" run at 8 a.m. and a portrayal at 10:30 a.m. of the Buffalo Soldiers, the black cavalry soldiers who fought in the Indian Wars.

Military working dogs and the Spike and the Spider rock band will perform several times throughout the day, along with the Miss Georgia Superstars.

There will be also be military displays and demonstrations, games, children's rides and a business showcase, as well as food and beverages.

Military Appreciation Week kicked off Monday with more than 230 people attending theAssociation of the United States Army breakfast.

Throughout the week, the major units on post have been competing in sporting events such as basketball, soccer, wrestling, boxing, tennis and softball.

As of press time, the 11th Infantry Regiment was leading the competition for the commanders trophy with the 29th Infantry Regiment in hot pursuit. Awards will be presented Saturday at an 11 a.m. ceremony on York Field.

Several local businesses have hosted events, including Scooters, Coach's Corner and Victoria's.

The Columbus RedStixx hosted military night at Golden Park Tuesday with commanding general Maj. Gen. John W. Hendrix tossing out the ceremonial first pitch. The RedStixx went on to win the game against the Albany Polecats 12-6.

A retiree open house is taking place in conjunction with Military Appreciation Week this year, with events Saturday in Infantry Hall.

AUSA sponsored a job fair today at the Main NCO Club, giving those who attended the chance to network and get resumes to the many businesses that attended.

Technology is great but ...

By Shannon Rasmussen
Fort Bragg Paraglide

commentary

The "newer" and "more improved" a product is, the happier we are to rush right out and buy it

Technology is a funny thing. It's growing by leaps and bounds as we continue our constant search to make our lives easier and more convenient. We have computers that can pay our bills and do our taxes, and coffee makers that can be programmed to brew coffee even when we aren't around to turn them on.

But there's a price tag that comes with all this convenience, and I think the technological advances of the '90s should have come with a warning label. Who'd have thought the inventions of today would have left us feeling so empty?

I first realized my reliance on these inventions while I was away at an Army school for two months. I had just arrived in Indiana and thought I'd call my Dad just to let him know how to get in touch with me. I picked up the telephone and realized I didn't know my Dad's number, which is pretty odd because I can normally remember telephone numbers easily.

The problem, though, is that I have one of those telephones at home that will dial people's numbers for you. You know, one of those telephones that will save you all of the rigorous work of opening an address book, turning the pages, then pushing a series of buttons in order to make a call.

I never thought much about it until that moment in Indiana when I realized my kitchen telephone was the only entity in my home that knew my father's number.

Because of the new "improvements" with my telephone, I hadn't even bothered to write the number down on paper anywhere. I guess subconsciously I decided that from this point forward I'd never again own a telephone that won't protect me from the exertion of manually dialing a telephone number.

It could be argued that there's a bright side to these telephonic marvels. Not only do they save us time and effort, they offer a subtle confidence boost to all those who are close to us. Who among us hasn't felt a little bit privileged to notice their name and telephone number programmed into someone else's telephone? It's like a little piece of reassurance that there's someone who likes us enough to program our number into a telephone.

The down side, then, is that there is usually only room for 10 numbers in the telephone's memory. So we're all left to rate our loved ones in order of importance. It's no easy task to decide who will rate a position in the mind of our telephones.

And of course we'll feel put out when the need arises to call someone outside our telephone's repertoire of numbers.

And while we're on the subject of telephones, what about the "breakthrough" that robbed of us hearing human voices on the other end of the line?

Answering machines started the onslaught but have now lost the limelight to the voice we hear every time we call our bank, loan holder or mortgage company.

"Welcome to Company X's automated customer service line. If you know the extension of the party you 're trying to reach, you may enter it at anytime. If you do not know the extension, I hope you packed a lunch because you're going to be here for a minimum of three days just trying to get the information you need."

I sometimes feel like the voice at my bank knows me better than anyone in my life. She's heard me on the other end of the line muttering insults at the "time-saving technology" that keeps me on the telephone for 10 minutes hoping I'll know the magic numbers that will lead me to my account information.

And the newest technology is the 100-disc compact disc changer, here to protect us from risking life and limb having to walk to our stereo, open a plastic case and put the shiny CD in the player.

I can hear the advertisements in the future: "Get the compact disc player that will provide you 8,000 hours of nonstop music. Our compact disc player will play music so long, that all your music will be outdated by the time it finishes."

What they don't tell you is that you'll then have to spend the time they saved you scrambling to catch up with the music scene you've been away from for 8,000 hours.

The 1999 Car X can be programmed to go where you want it to go. Your feet never have to touch the pedals, and you'll never again have to shift gears.

But if you're on a trip and you need to stop somewhere along the way, you'll have to get clearance from the Pentagon to change the car's course.

It's all done in the name of saving us time. People around the world are part of a perpetual race to make everything new and improved. The "newer" and "more improved" a product is, the happier we are to rush right out and buy it. And the more technological advances we make, the easier it becomes for each of us to live in the rat race we call 1995.

For now, I'm going to start work on a new machine to cut down on the number of things I have to do in a day. The human body requires that we blink thousands of times a day, and my eyes are really tired.

Post air conditioning is being abused

My son was diagnosed with asthma in November of 1993. As part of his treatment, he needs strict environmental control such as humidity control through air conditioning. Therefore, we were entitled to have our air conditioning all year round.

I try to be reasonable in the usage of this waiver and only turn on the air conditioning when needed.

Over the past year, it has come to my attention that there is widespread abuse of this privilege in Custer Terrace. Families who had the original waivers have moved and the following occupants are still enjoying those privileges and are also abusing them.

I am not in any way trying to be mischievous or mean, but there is no reason to run air conditioning in the middle of January or to run it without a stop this time of the year, especially when the air will be shut off during the middle of summer for the entire community in preservation of energy.

In my opinion, there should be strict rules in the follow-up of who is entitled to this waiver. This could be a very effective and cost conscious way of conserving energy on post. I am sure that there is a list of houses with such waivers at the Housing Office or somewhere else.

— Michaela Watts
Fort Benning

Garrison commander's response:

With more than 4,000 families on post, there will always be some who have a family member who medically requires a special environment in which to live.

The deputy director of Clinical Services at Martin Army Community Hospital is the sole approving official for Family Housing medical exceptions to the air conditioning policy. The physician has the medical experience and insight to know what is a bona fide necessity for environmental control.

Once exceptions are approved, they are forwarded to the Energy Branch, Directorate of Public Works, where a list is maintained. Each winter the list is purged by comparing the name of the current resident with the name on the medical exception list. If the names do not match, a telephone call is made to verify that the person requiring the medical exception does not reside there any longer. At this point, the air conditioners are reconnected to the radio-controlled switches.

The air conditioners you have seen operating are not the result of a breakdown in the above procedures. A recent survey of the control switches for the air conditioning indicated a large number of unauthorized modifications designed to bypass the controls.

This is clearly unethical and DPW is in the process of disabling those units found to be operating without an exception to policy and taking appropriate administrative action against those who are in violation.

— Col. Richard L. Rutledge
Garrison commander

Cool relief is on the way

I am writing in regards to the air conditioning not being turned on in Fort Benning family housing areas.

Since Fort Benning has won best Army installation two years in a row and has won numerous financial awards, why must military families suffer with no air in the Georgia heat and humidity? Why must our heat and air be regulated when basic allowance for quarters comes out of our check every month, and we still have no say in being comfortable or miserable?

We called Housing officials to find out when the air conditioning would be turned on. Their answer was "when it reaches 90 degrees three days in a row." Eighty-five degrees is just as hot with the high humidity, which makes it just as hard to be comfortable while cooking our soldiers' meals at night or trying to sleep when you're sticking to your bed sheets.

The contract with Georgia Power needs to be brought up to date with today's times and temperatures.

Think about all the families whom this affects. It is not just a select few; all of us are suffering. This needs to change for everyone's benefit. Everyone's air should be off or on at the same time.

This is only my opinion, but if you ask around, you will find many people who feel the same way.

— Frances Hunt
Fort Benning

Garrison commander's response:

Your concern is understood; however, I would like to take this opportunity to explain the background of our current situation.

The Fort Benning budget has been dramatically decreased this last year. These budget cuts have caused us to relook ways we operate so that we can continue to train soldiers and run our installation within our assigned budget.

When the operating budget was approved last year, the commanding general approved a late startup of air conditioning in an effort to stretch post dollars as far as possible. This decision was based on normal weather conditions and other needs throughout the post.

In order to stay within budget, and to have sufficient funds to provide air conditioning in the hottest part of summer, it is necessary to postpone startup of air conditioning as long as possible. This situation will be past us in six short weeks.

We all, including the command group, are looking forward to air conditioning startup.

We regret the inconvenience caused as a result of this policy. We ask for your patience and understanding during this time, so that we will have funds to provide air conditioning later in the summer when it is most needed.

Soldier aids Oklahoma City

By Sgt. Michael Maddox
The Cannoneer

FORT SILL, Okla. — As he was speeding toward the Oklahoma City bombing site, Staff Sgt. Patrick Vaughn didn't know exactly what he would find. All he knew was that he wanted to do something to help the victims — after all, jumping into something like this is what he has been training to do for the past two years.

In addition to his military career, Vaughn, the senior instructor for the Radar Repair Course, has been training as an Emergency Medical Technician. The bombing provided him an opportunity to use what he has learned to help take care of others.

When he decided to go for a degree in the medical field, he never dreamed that one day he would take part in such a disaster. He said he made that decision after a physical training accident.

Since he began his side career in the medical field, Vaughn has earned his state and national EMT license, and is working on his state and national Intermediate Paramedical license.

Spending more than 700 hours in the classroom and on the job combined, Vaughn was ready to do all he could when the call for volunteers at the bomb site came down.

"When I got to my office, one of the guys there asked me if I had heard about the explosion in Oklahoma City. Then my supervisor, Warrant Officer 1 William Brunt, said "Why don't you go up and see what you can do to help out?"

Vaughn didn't think twice. He made the trip. "I guess it's just like in the military, you train for something, then it's time to implement what you have learned.

"I was supposed to meet up with a local ambulance service that I have been training with to get a ride. I missed them before they left. So I decided to drive up there myself," he said.

On the way, many things went through his mind.

"All of these things go through your head like what are you going to do, how will the triage area be set up, or what situations might come up? You just have to stay focused on what's happening," Vaughn said. "I was thinking about all of the casualties and the types of injuries they might have. You just don't know what to expect, but from watching television and listening to the radio, I knew there would be a lot of casualties."

Going where his skills would be most needed, Vaughn headed to St. Anthony's Hospital in Oklahoma City.

"I parked in the back of St. Anthony's Emergency Room. At first, I just sat there for a minute and watched the situation because I had never seen a disaster scene before," Vaughn said. "I saw they had a good set-up and I wanted to help."

So many medical volunteers from across the state had shown up to pitch in, Vaughn found that he could help in other ways.

"I saw they had a stand set up where they were passing out food and sodas. A lot of people who were working the booth looked stressed so I asked if I could help them," he explained.

Vaughn later found his friends from the ambulance service and got a ride to the home site.

"At the site, I talked to some firemen and Federal Bureau of Investigation officials. They said they were looking for any help they could get," he said.

"I went to the primary triage area. It was set up like a field hospital. I helped the National Guardsmen and EMTs finish getting everything set up," Vaughn said.

Even though he didn't get to treat any of the injured due to the overwhelming response by medical volunteers, it didn't bother Vaughn.

"Primarily, I just wanted to help people as much as I could. You try not to think 'Well, I wasn't needed.' or 'I made this trip for no reason,'" he said. "The way I look at it is that you try to do the greater good for the greater number. You just do what you have to do no matter what the situation calls for."

Soldiers' is looking for the best photographs from the field, for a worldwide representation of what makes the Army what it is.

The following are some basic rules to keep in mind.

- Photographs must be shot during the time period of June 12 to 18.
- Submit processed color slides or 5x7 or 8x10 black and white prints.
- Photographs should be printed for magazine quality with good contrast.
- Submissions will not be used without complete photo credits and cutlines. Include the full name, rank and service, as applicable, of the photographer, names of identifiable people in the photograph, details on what is happening in the photo and the location.

Cutlines must be attached individually to the photo or slide and the photographs must be processed and received by Soldiers' Magazine by Aug. 31. Photographs and accompanying information will not be returned.

Environmental scholarships available

By Elsie Jackson
Army Career and Alumni Program

Service members, veterans and Department of Defense Civilians interested in environmental management or cultural and natural resource management careers now have an additional scholarship opportunity to pursue.

The Southern Environmental Education Partnership is looking for grant applicants for the fall 1995 school year. Classes will be conducted at Jacksonville State University in Jacksonville, Ala., and at Talladega College nearby.

All individuals are eligible to apply for these programs, however, current and former members of the armed forces and individuals who are or have been employed by the Department of Defense (or its contractors or subcontractors) will be given preference.

Along with the standard forms and letters required for scholarship applications, individuals should be prepared to submit a Standard Form 171 (Application for Federal Employment) or Optional Form 612 (Optional Application for Federal Employment) with an OF 306 Form (Declaration for Federal Employment), and a copy of their Separation Papers. Scholarship applications, and the list of forms and letters required is available at the Fort Benning Army Career and Alumni Program office.

Scholarships leading to a bachelor of science degree are based on a three-year track, and include tuition for six regular semesters (academic) and for three (mandatory) summer terms, books, supplies and insurance.

Scholarship recipients may pursue either a bachelor of science degree with a major in chemistry and minor in environmental management, or a bachelor of science degree with a major in biology and a minor in cultural and natural resource management.

These degrees will prepare individuals for careers as environmental program managers or cultural and natural resource managers. Upon completion of this program, individuals must agree to serve as full-time civilian employees in an environmental position with the Department of Defense (if such employment is available and offered) for 12 months for each school year the scholarship provides.

Students entering the program through Talladega College spend the spring and fall terms for their first two years at Talladega College and their third year in residence at Jacksonville State. After completing their respective degree programs, students may elect to receive their degrees from either institution.

Individuals pursuing a master's in public administration degree with a concentration in environmental science management may apply for a fellowship that will provide tuition, up to $300 per semester for textbooks and fees, and up to $162 per year for insurance.

The master's program includes courses in the areas of environmental chemistry, environmental engineering, environmental geology and environmental law. A broad-based curriculum in management science and engineering, this program provides both academic and practical skills needed to resolve, manage, and prevent environmental problems and issues in air, water, toxic waste and land reclamation.

This degree can be completed in 16 to 24 months (four semesters). The Department of Defense service obligation (if available and offered) for the master's program is 24 months for each school year the fellowship provides.

For more information on these programs, contact the Fort Benning Army Career and Alumni Program office at 545-7009 or 545-4913. The ACAP offices are located in Building 2617, Soldiers' Plaza.

Week recognizes EMS workers

Martin Army Community Hospital

National Emergency Medical Services Week, a celebration honoring approximately 750,000 EMS providers nationwide who deliver lifesaving emergency care, is scheduled through Saturday.

The 1995 EMS Week theme "EMS: We're There for Life," emphasizes the significant role career and volunteer EMS providers play in saving lives.

"Since the general public is often the first at the scene of a medical emergency, it's essential for individuals to be prepared," says Mark Joyce, chief, EMS. "EMS Week is an excellent opportunity to educate the public about emergency preparedness, first aid and injury prevention."

National EMS Week honors the lifesaving care EMS providers offer nationwide, 24 hours a day, seven days a week.

"The men and women in this field deserve to be recognized and honored for their heroic efforts, and EMS Week is an opportunity to say thanks," says Dr. (Capt.) Brian Baxter, director, Prehospital Care, Martin Army Community Hospital.

National Emergency Medical Services Week is sponsored by the American College of Emergency Physicians along with the American Ambulance Association, the Emergency Nurses Association, the International Association of Fire Chiefs, the National Association of Emergency Medical Technicians, the National Association of State EMS Directors, the National Council of State EMS Training Coordinators, the National Association of EMS Physicians, the U.S. Department of Transportation's National Highway Traffic Administration, Maternal and Child Health Bureau and the Federal Emergency Management Agency's U.S. Fire Administration.

Surprise: Dialing 800 number can cost caller

800 numbers aren't always toll-free calls

By Evelyn D. Harris
American Forces Information Service

If you think "toll free" and "800 number" mean the same, beware. A 1992 rule change made it legal for companies to charge consumers for certain 800 calls, according to Federal Communications Commission officials. Furthermore, while customers can block 900 number calls, they cannot block 800 calls.

The 1992 Telephone Disclosure and Dispute Resolution Act said 900 numbers should be the prime means of access to telephone information and entertainment services. However it allowed companies to bill for certain 800 entertainment and information calls providing callers "presubscribed" to receive the service.

According to FCC's Mary Romano, complaints concerning companies' abuses of this privilege led the FCC and the Federal Trade Commission, the two government agencies regulating the telephone industry, to strengthen consumer protections in rules effective Nov. 1.

Complaints involved callers to 800 numbers who were switched to 900 numbers or international numbers without being informed of the charges, sometimes as high as $4.99 a minute.

The companies billed possibly unwary individuals and businesses for calls made from their telephones to sex, dating service and psychic advice lines, according to FTC officials.

Before making the rules, FTC brought charges against two dozen companies for unfair practices involving pay-per-call services.

One company involved, American TelNet, was the first prosecuted under the new rules. American TelNet agreed to a consent decree settlement with FTC to set up (800-460-0307) as a free number so consumers can claim a refund or credit, said FTC's Bonnie Jansen.

The new rules prohibit an information provider from billing for an 800 call unless the customer pays with a credit card (which gives consumers important billing error dispute resolution rights) or unless a legally competent adult establishes a presubscription arrangement in writing. This agreement must spell out the provider's name and address, its rates (flat fee or per minute, and how much per minute) and tell customers where to complain about billing errors.

The rules generally prohibit companies from placing collect return calls to 800-number callers. In addition, companies cannot direct pay-per-call services to children under 12 unless they are educational services directed to areas of school study. Services directed to children under 18 must state parental permission is necessary to make the call.

Jansen advised consumers who believe they have been billed wrongly for 800-number calls to dispute the charges.

"Follow the instructions included with your billing statement for disputes," she said. "Call or write your local or long-distance telephone company or, in some cases, the independent firm that provides billing services. To be protected you must notify the company listed on your bill within 60 days after the first statement containing the error was sent."

Consumers can also report problems with telephone information or entertainment services to the National Fraud Information Center, a private organization. Call toll-free (800) 876-7060.

It is open 9 a.m. to 5:30 p.m., Monday through Friday. The center will also report complaints to the national Telemarketing Complaint System operated by FTC and state attorneys general.

Call with caution; watch for clues

By Evelyn Harris
American Forces Information Service

Tip-offs that an 800 call may not be free are if they offer services such as "adult" talk lines, dating, horoscopes or psychic readings, said Bonnie Jansen of the Federal Trade Commission.

International prefixes like "809" or "011" are another tip-off. Such services often advertise on late night television, in supermarket tabloids or in classified or personal ads.

"Remember that both legitimate services and those that violate the law may advertise in the same places," Jansen said. She also suggested telling children or other adults in the household they must get your permission to use the telephone to call one of these services, be they on an 800 or 900 number.

Consumers who are interested in services from a pay-per-call provider should proceed with caution, said Jansen.

"Signing a contractual agreement with such a company may result in your losing certain consumer protection rights," she said.

And some services, such as "psychic friends," can be habit-forming, if a case reported recently in a major daily newspaper is any indication. The paper reported that a military wife, whose husband was deployed overseas, ran up $45,000 in phone bills for calls to psychic lines. Each time her local telephone company shut off her service for nonpayment, she obtained a new number, often using a false name, and made more calls for which she could not pay, the paper said.

According to the news account, her attorney contended such services "feed on the weaknesses of others" and that his client was seeking treatment for mental problems through the telephone at "$4 to $5.99 a minute."

The judge agreed with the defense and the state attorney that the woman had an illness, but found her guilty and imposed a three-year suspended sentence and probation. The woman, who worked as a day-care provider and was the mother of a toddler, was also ordered to repay the telephone company and to make no more 900 calls, ever.

"If you do, pack a toothbrush," said the judge.

Federal employees' insurance enrollment open

Directorate of Civilian Personnel

A limited open season under the Federal Employee's Group Life Insurance program will be from Monday through July 21.

During this open season, any eligible employee who is not currently enrolled may elect basic insurance; employees may not elect any optional insurance. Employees who are already enrolled in FEGLI may not participate in the open season; no physical examination is required. Any existing waiver of basic insurance will not be disturbed unless a new election is submitted. Similarly, exiting designations of beneficiary for currently enrolled employees will not be affected.

Employees will receive revised FEGLI Booklet, R176-21, which provides information about the FEGLI program. Employees who are eligible and wish to enroll, complete a Standard Form 2817, life insurance election. This form is available from Directorate of Civilian Personnel, Personnel Management and Systems Support Division, Personnel Services Center, Meloy Hall, Building 6, Room 115, and must be submitted to this office in time to be received before close of business on July 21.

Open season elections and accompanying withholdings will be effective the first day of the first pay period on or after the date the employing office receives the SF 2817.

In order to carry any newly elected coverage into retirement, it must be in effect for the five years of service immediately before the date of retirement or for the entire period of service during which it was available, if this is less than five years.

Employees approaching retirement eligibility, should be aware of the five-year/first opportunity requirement. There is no waiver authority under the FEGLI Law. If employees do not meet the five-year/first opportunity requirement, they will be eligible to convert to nongroup insurance without a medical examination.

For further information or assistance, contact Patricia Richardson, Directorate of Civilian Personnel, Personnel Management and Systems Support Division, Personnel Services Center, Meloy Hall, Building 6, Room 115, 545-2470 or 545-3374.

Army Learning Center to go on-line with computer instruction

Soldiers can access dozens of courses from Fort Leavenworth's electronic library

By Richard Brill
Special to The Bayonet©

Want to improve your general technical score, prepare for general equivalency diploma and college entry examinations or just brush up on basic reading, writing and arithmetic?

At the Army Learning Center, Building 2611, Soldiers' Plaza, an on-line, computer based instructional program allows users to access dozens of courses from an electronic library at Fort Leavenworth, Kan.

Jack Lenahan, Learning Center education services specialist, said the courses are free, easy to use and allow users to progress at whatever pace they want.

"Fort Benning On-Line requires no knowledge of computers to use," Lenahan said. "There are no complicated directions and the ability to type is not necessary. Also, trained personnel are available at the center to assist users if they need help."

Another advantage, Lenahan said, is that the program can be accessed 24 hours a day, seven days a week at home or work by users who have access to an IBM compatible computer with a modem and graphics card.

The Learning Center will provide the access program and detailed instructions free of charge, he said. The user just has to supply a 3 1/2 inch high-density or double density floppy disk.

"The courses are extremely popular and are great for academic subjects," Lenahan said. "We have a lot of soldiers who use the programs to improve their GT scores."

In addition to the computer-based instruction, the Main Post and Sightseeing Road Learning Center offer a large selection of video and audio courses, including foreign language instruction, computer skills and professional development instruction.

Courses offered include:

• College Level Examination Program preparation in English, math, social studies and science.

• College examination preparation, including the Scholastic Aptitude Test. Graduate Management Admissions Test. Graduate Record Examination and Miller's Analogy Test.

• Computer and data processing courses, including basic programming, computer literacy and courses in DOS 5.0, Wordperfect 5.1, Lotus and Harvard Graphics.

• Speed reading.

• Typing

• Foreign language instruction, including English as a second language, German, Italian, French, Arabic and Turkish.

• GED math, reading, social studies, science and writing preparation.

• Management courses in effective supervision and resource and time management.

• Mathematics and science courses, including algebra, precalculus, calculus, geometry, chemistry and physics.

The Sightseeing Road Center is also the home of the post Military Occupational Specialty Library. Lenahan added.

Lenahan encouraged people to call or visit the centers for a complete listing of all the courses offered.

Users will receive a DA 87 certificate of training for many of the computer applications courses, he added.

Units, residents should recycle cardboard

By Jan Wesner Childs
Special to The Bayonet©

Fort Benning units and residents threw away $18,000 in April.

That's the amount of money that solid waste program manager Walter Nichols estimates could have been made by selling recyclable cardboard that was instead dumped into the post landfill.

All Fort Benning military units, activities and contractors are required to recycle cardboard boxes, corrugated paperboard and other cardboard waste.

Residents of family housing are also encouraged to recycle cardboard materials. But Nichols said many units and residents are not doing so.

As a result, money is being lost. Funds from selling recyclable materials go toward maintaining the post recycling program and funding safety and Morale, Welfare and Recreation activities.

There are also environmental factors to consider. The Fort Benning landfill will probably be at capacity in less than two years, according to Nichols. The more waste that can be recycled, the more room there is in the landfill.

Putting cardboard in the landfill can be dangerous. Upon decomposition, Nichols said, cardboard produces methane gas — a fire hazard. Decomposing cardboard also leaves space in the landfill, causing it to settle. This can cause the "cap" — the soil cover over the landfill — to break. "We might think of cardboard as being an innocent material, but it can cause some real problems out at the landfill," he said.

The guidelines for recycling cardboard are:

• All military units should separate cardboard from the rest of their waste and haul it to the Materials Recycling Facility (Building 4000) at Harmony Church. Pick-up can be arranged for smaller units that don't have vehicles to carry the waste. Call the MRF at 544-6142 for more information.

• Nongovernmental vendors operating on Fort Benning are required to separate cardboard from the rest of their waste and deliver it to the MRF.

• Residents of family housing should place daily cardboard waste, such as cereal boxes and shoe boxes, in the curbside recycling collection boxes. Large boxes should be flattened. Anyone with a large number of boxes, such as moving boxes, can call 544-6142 for pickup.

Call Nichols at 545-1007 for more information.

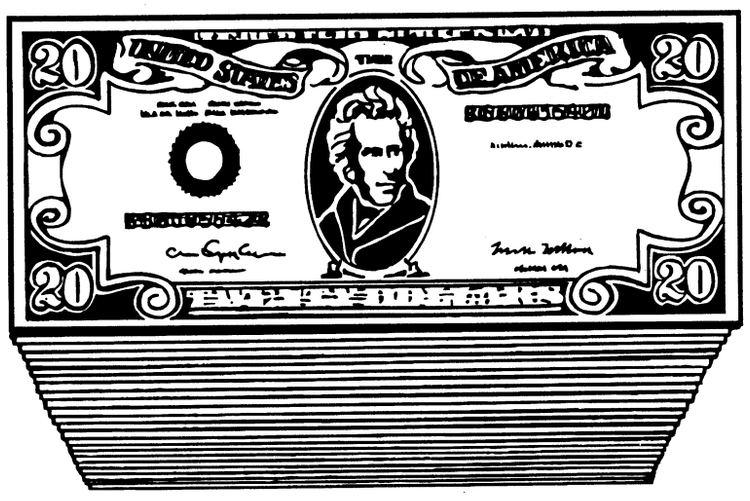
Debt:

Creditors can garnish wages

By Rick Parker
Staff Judge Advocate's Office

Last year, Congress passed legislation allowing judgment creditors to attach military pay. Over the past year, the various service branches have been working on the regulations necessary to make the law work.



Those regulations have been completed and have been in place since Jan. 1. The net result is that creditors who have judgments against you can now apply for an involuntary allotment from your pay.

You need to know how this can happen, how the system works, and what you can do if you get notice that a creditor is trying to get into your paycheck.

The only people who can apply to get an involuntary allotment from your pay are creditors who have sued you and obtained a judgment against you. In order to apply for the allotment, the creditor must send an application to Defense Finance and Accounting Service in Cleveland, Ohio.

DFAS will review the application to make sure it includes all the information and documents it is supposed to contain, and if all is in order, DFAS will send a notification memorandum to both you and your commander. The date of mailing of the notice to the commander begins a 90-day suspense period for response.

On receiving the package, the commander will first determine if you are a member of his or her command. If so, he or she will notify you, provide you with a copy of the package, and counsel you on your right to respond to the request for the allotment, as well as of your right to seek legal advice concerning the request. The response is due within 15 days of the date the commander notifies you.

What if you are away on temporary duty, deployed or for some other good reason, unavailable for response or need additional time to put together your response?

The commander can, for good cause, grant an extension of time to respond. In fact, if you are TDY or deployed, the commander should, upon receipt of the package from DFAS, notify DFAS of your status and how long it will be before you are back with your unit.

You can either consent to the allotment or contest it. You can contest it on the following grounds:

- The creditor did not comply with the requirements of the Soldiers and Sailors Civil Relief Act
- "Exigencies of military duty" caused your absence from appearance in a judicial proceeding forming the basis for the judgment
- Information in the creditor's application is patently false or erroneous
- The judgment has been fully satisfied (paid), superseded or set aside
- The judgment has been materially amended or partially satisfied
- There is a legal impediment to an involuntary allotment (you have filed for bankruptcy or already went through a bankruptcy on this debt).

To contest, you must provide evidence supporting your claim that the allotment should not be established because of one or more of those reasons. If you are contesting because of "exigencies of military duty," your commander will decide whether or not this is true.

If you are contesting for any of the other reasons, DFAS makes the decision. If you do not respond within the time period allotted, the commander will send the package back to DFAS noting the failure to respond and the allotment will start shortly thereafter.

If you receive notice from DFAS of an application for involuntary allotment, getting legal advice is a must. The new regulations have specific provisions allowing you to request a reasonable extension of time to respond in order to obtain legal assistance, but the request will be denied where the service member does not seek such assistance with diligence.

Practically speaking, this means that you must contact the Legal Assistance Division, or, if you desire, your own civilian attorney, promptly, and schedule an appointment.

To wait until a few days before the response is due to try to schedule an appointment is not diligent.

You can contact the Legal Assistance Division if you have questions concerning an application for involuntary allotment from your pay at 545-3281.

Soldiers can fend off creditors

By Rick Parker
Staff Judge Advocate's Office

One of the possible grounds to contest the application of a creditor for an involuntary allotment is that the creditor did not comply with the requirements of the Soldiers and Sailors Civil Relief Act.

The SSCRA is a federal law adopted during World War II in an effort to provide some protection to the numerous people who either enlisted or were called to active duty during that war.

Congress recognized that military service had the potential of creating disastrous economic and legal consequences to those who left their civilian lives, and the SSCRA was passed into law to minimize some of those consequences.

The SSCRA provides a wide range of benefits and protections; but, from the standpoint of involuntary allotments by creditors, there are two protective measures that are most important.

The first allows a service member who has received notice of a pending legal proceeding to request that the proceeding be stayed or "put on hold" where his or her military duties prevent him or her from making an appearance in the case.

For example, suppose that while stationed at Fort Benning, you find yourself on the receiving end of a lawsuit that has been filed in California.

You are entitled to request that the court stay the action until you have an adequate opportunity, considering your military duties, to get to California to defend yourself or to find a lawyer to help you with it.

Or, let's suppose that you're already involved in a suit, a court hearing is scheduled and you suddenly find yourself ordered on deployment overseas.

The SSCRA allows you to request that the court put the case on hold until you have completed your deployment and can appear.

This does not mean that you can necessarily expect the stay to last for your entire military career. Most courts are aware that soldiers do get leave and will expect you to use leave to attend to court business.

Furthermore, there are some cases where the courts are less likely to give a lot of leeway on a request for a stay. Prime examples are cases involving child support or custody of children.

Finally, the SSCRA provides no protection in criminal cases. Although the SSCRA does not specify the form of the request, care must be taken on how to request the stay and to whom it must be sent.

The best advice is to seek the assistance of your Legal Assistance Division on receiving notification of a lawsuit.

The second protection has to do with "default judgments." A creditor seeking an involuntary allotment must have a judgment. A "default judgment" is one obtained when the person being sued did not respond to the lawsuit within the time allowed by law.

The SSCRA recognizes that sometimes, because of their military duties, soldiers do not receive notice of a lawsuit in enough time to respond.

The SSCRA requires that before any default judgment is granted, the plaintiff must file an affidavit setting out whether or not to the knowledge of the plaintiff, the person being sued is in the military. If it appears that the defendant is in the military, the court is required to appoint an attorney to represent the defendant's interests.

Failure to comply with these requirements may be a valid ground for contesting an application for an involuntary allotment by a creditor.

The important thing is that you preserve your right to assert these grounds by taking proper action when you first become aware of a lawsuit. This means getting legal advice as soon as possible.

Involuntary allotments: Court order requirement

By Rick Parker
Staff Judge Advocate's Office

Remember that car you let go back to the dealer because you thought you got ripped off, the health spa you joined but decided not to pay for because you weren't using it or the photo developing contract you signed but concluded was a scam and quit making payments?

In the good old days, you might get called by a collection agency or get a bad mark on your credit file. However, your creditors can now apply for and obtain an involuntary allotment from your military pay.

Now before you run scared, you need to realize that before a creditor can even think about getting into your paycheck they have to have sued you in court and obtained a judgment against you.

So your first line of defense is trying to keep that creditor from getting a judgment in the first place.

No creditor can file suit and get a judgment against you without having served notice on you that you are being sued. This is called "service of process."

Every state has its own requirements about service of process, but generally speaking, it should be done in a way that is "reasonably calculated" to make sure that the the defendant actually gets the notice.

The whole point of requiring this is to ensure that you have a chance to present your side of the story to the court — you may have valid defenses against the lawsuit.

The best and surest way of giving notice of a lawsuit is to have a sheriff personally deliver the suit papers to the defendant.

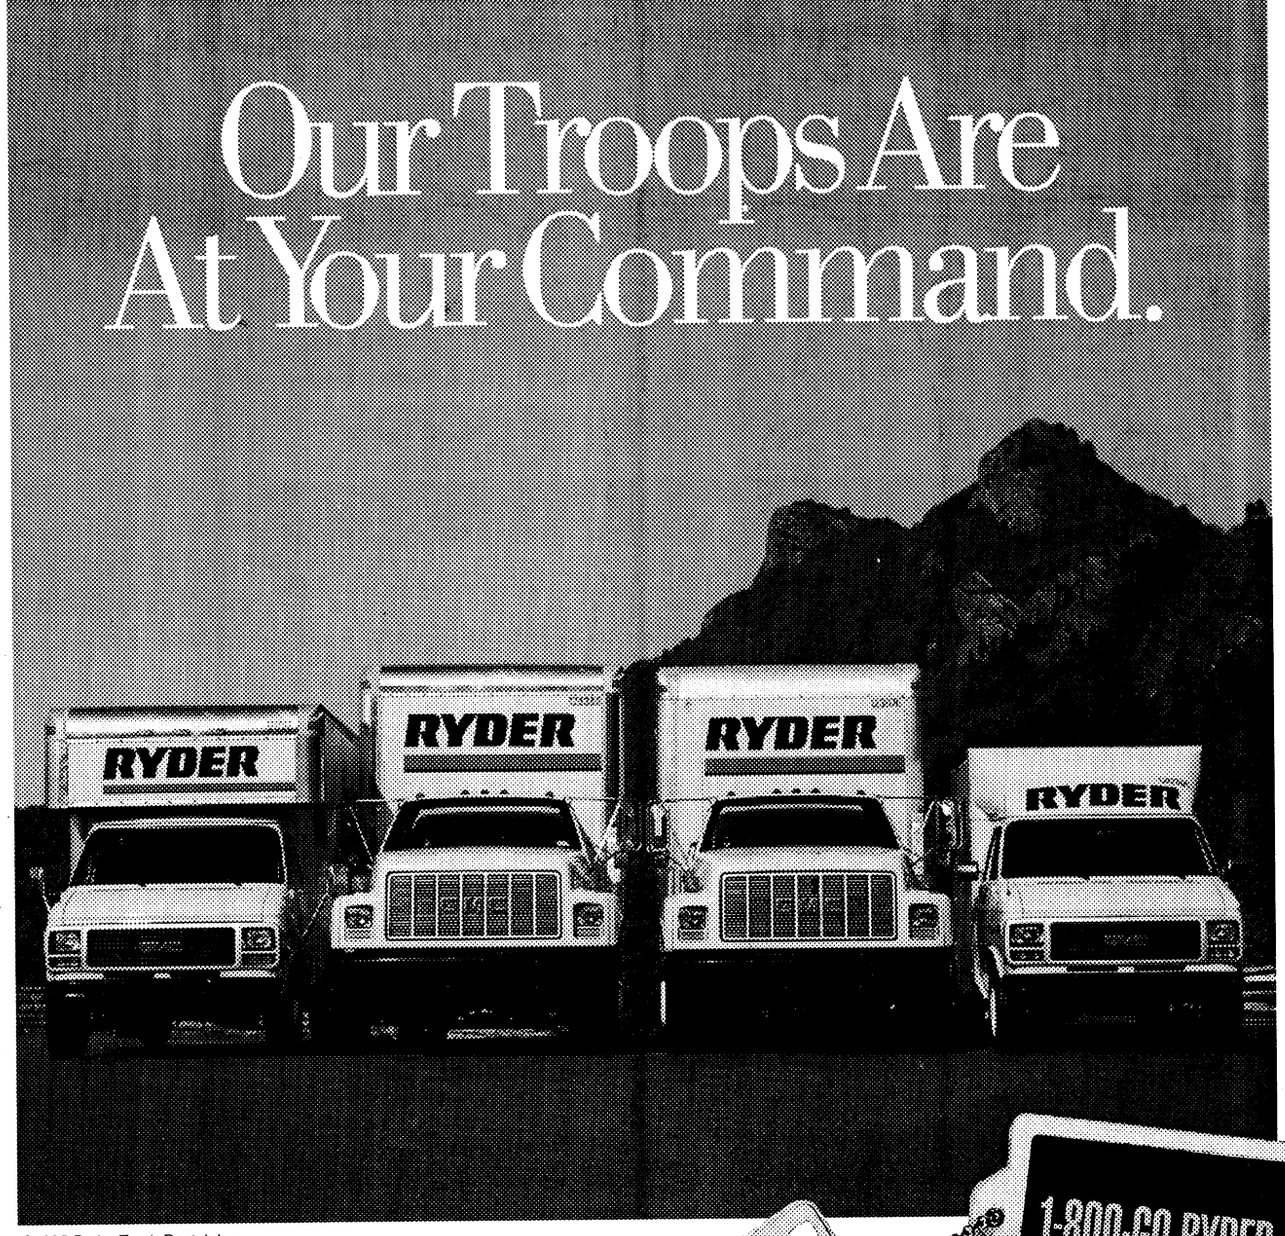
Some states allow service to be accomplished by mailing the papers by certified mail. Of course, this assumes that the creditor filing suit knows how to locate the defendant. Just about every state allows service to be made by publishing a notice in the local paper if the defendant's address is unknown.

Now if you're living at Fort Benning and a creditor you had in Idaho doesn't know where you are, sues you and serves notice by publishing an ad in the Boise Sun, you probably won't know that you were sued.

If you don't know that you've been sued, you won't have a chance to respond and the creditor will likely get its judgment.

Is that legal? Maybe, maybe not, but the upshot of all this is that it might be a good idea to make sure that your creditors know where you are, so that if one files a suit, you will know about it.

Frankly, it doesn't pay to hide from creditors or ignore or forget about these things they have a bad habit of coming back to haunt you.



Now, let's suppose that you're here at Fort Benning and you get notice that you've been sued. What do you do? First, the papers served are going to tell you that you have a certain number of days to file a response to the lawsuit. That's your suspense date, so don't delay.

You need to get legal advice. There are a number of possible defenses to such suits, and, at the very least, even if it's an ironclad claim, an attorney may be able to help you negotiate a settlement. There is also the Soldiers and Sailors Civil Relief Act, which may be of some use in dealing with the problem.

In the meantime, the most important advice is that you should not ignore any possible claim against you. Seek legal advice now, before the problem gets worse.

You can call the Legal Assistance Division for an appointment at 545-3281.

TAKE A BITE OUT OF CRIME

Military Police Activity

This week's hot topic concerns vehicle theft.

The latest statistics show that more than 1 million vehicles are stolen every year. Unfortunately, as thieves get smarter, the recovery rate of stolen vehicles becomes lower.

Make it hard for thieves and joy riders by taking the following steps to protect yourself and your vehicle.

Always lock you car and take your keys with you. Never use an identification tag on your key ring, this will only help a thief locate you or your car if you lose your keys. Take valuables and important papers with you. If you must leave packages or other articles in your car, cover them; for better security lock them in you trunk. Try parking in well-lighted or busy areas, and always have your key ready when returning to you vehicle.

If you're in the market for a new car, ask your dealer about anti-theft options. Keep in mind, many insurance companies offer reduced rates for vehicles equipped with security devices.

As always, if your car is stolen or broken into, report it to the police immediately. Stolen vehicles are often used in the act of other crimes, Quick action with accurate information could lead to the recovery of your vehicle and prevent its use in other illegal activities.

The following entries were extracted from the Fort Benning Military Police blotters. Such entries may be incomplete and are not the adjudication of the guilt or innocence of any person.

• A civilian was charged with failure to obey a traffic control device and driving under the influence of alcohol. While on a routine patrol, the Military Police saw a vehicle make an illegal turn. The vehicle was stopped and upon contact with the driver a strong odor of alcohol was detected. She was then given the field sobriety test in which she failed.

She was then taken to the MP station where she was given a breathalyzer test with results of .089. She was issued a suspension of post driving privileges, post ejection orders, released to a friend and escorted to post boundaries.

• A family member was charged with expired plates, simple battery and obstructing or hindering law enforcement officers. While on patrol, the MPs observed a vehicle with expired plates. When the MPs stopped the vehicle, the driver got out of the vehicle and became uncooperative and belligerent when the MPs told her to stay in the vehicle. She then shoved, pushed and grabbed an MP in an attempt to resist. She was apprehended and taken to the MP station where she was then processed and released to her spouse.

Other activities include 15 traffic accidents, 12 case of larceny, and eight cases of driving under the influence of alcohol.

Remember to help "Make our Post the best – Give Crime Arrest." Report any activity that seems wrong or out of place to the Military Police at 545-5223 or 545-5224 or the "Crime in Progress" line at 545-5222.

Staff Judge Advocate's Office

Q: Every now and then I run a little short on money, and it always seems to happen at the wrong time. I've heard about these places where you can cash a postdated check. Would this be a good place to get some cash?

A: No. You are talking about utilizing the services of a check cashing service, the likes of which dot the landscape of the Victory Drive area like cowpies in a pasture.

Writing postdated checks under any circumstances, whether for cash, to creditors, to landlords, or to anyone else, is a bad idea anyway. There is too much potential for abuse and mistakes to occur; the typical scenario is that the person or business to whom you give the check will attempt to negotiate it before the intended date, causing you to bounce that check, as well as other checks. The people you've written the checks to usually take a dim view of this (returned checks can lead to criminal charges being taken against you), and, the service charges assessed by your bank and the merchants holding your worthless checks will mount rapidly.

When you take your business to one of the so-called check-cashing services, you are not simply deferring the cashing of a check, you are borrowing money. Anytime you borrow money, you do so at a price — the interest charged by the lender to have the use of their money. In the case of check cashing services, the interest is in the form of so-called "service charges."

In the Columbus area, the typical service charge is anywhere between 20 percent to 25 percent of the check amount, depending on the credit rating of the borrower. With military customers, the check casher expects the check to be picked up by either mid-month or end-of-month. Assuming a $100 check, with a 20 percent service charge, to be picked up in 14 days, this translates into an effective interest rate of over 500 per year! If you don't pick up the check on the due date, the check casher will go ahead and process the check. If it bounces, you will owe the check casher an additional fee.

Robbing your future paycheck to meet your present expenses is no way to live. If you find yourself in this situation, you should consider getting assistance with budgeting ideas. It is possible to live within one's income given proper planning and a little discipline. Army Community Services offers budgeting advice to service-members and their dependents. In the case of true emergencies requiring money you don't have, consider asking Army Emergency Relief for assistance.

Preparation prevents food poisoning

By Rudi Williams
American Forces Information Service

More than 4 million Americans reportedly suffer from food poisoning every year — mostly between May and October. Unreported cases could swell the number to more than 80 million, according to the Department of Agriculture's Food Safety and Inspection Service.

During summer months, tens of thousands of cases are caused by contaminated food at picnics, backyard cookouts, camping and brown-bagging in the park.

However, food safety specialist Diane Van said the number of cases would be nil if people would adhere to rules that prevent foodborne illnesses.

Problems arise, Van said, when cooks contaminate such things as potato salad because their hands are infected with bacteria from handling raw meat or poultry. The germs are transmitted while cutting vegetables for the salad.

"Mayonnaise isn't the villain it was thought to be; the villain is the carbohydrates the mayonnaise is put in — potato, macaroni, tuna and pasta salads," said Van. "These are good sources for bacteria to grow. The acid in commercial mayonnaise — vinegar — helps retard bacteria growth."

But, Van warned, using homemade mayonnaise isn't recommended because of the possibility of salmonella in the eggs.

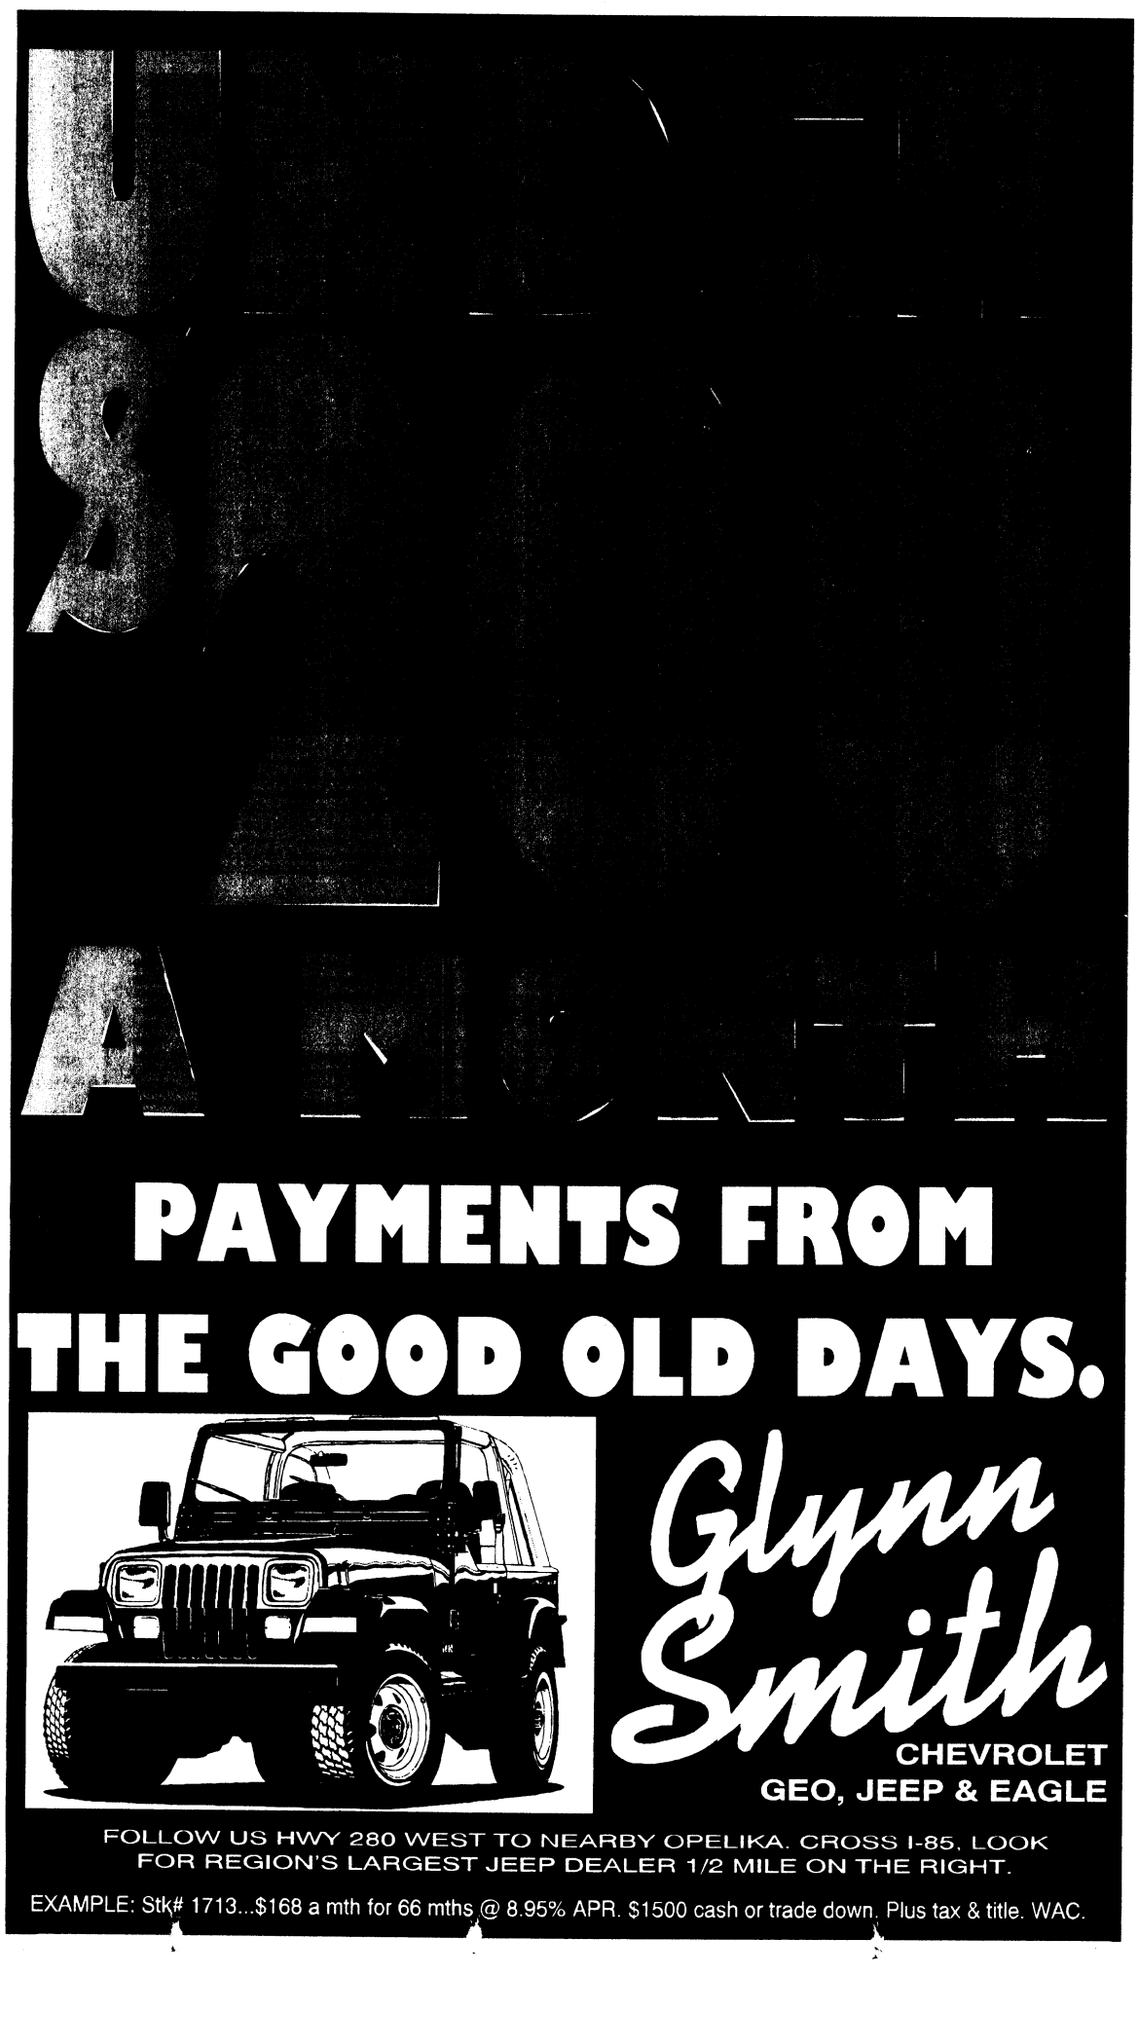
Adding lemon juice or vinegar to homemade mayonnaise makes it safe, she said.

Hard-boiled eggs and deviled eggs are fine picnic delights, but they must be cooked well to prevent food poisoning, Van said. All perishable foods should be kept cold until just before serving time, she added.

Van said meat and poultry shouldn't be thawed on the kitchen counter because bacteria can multiply in the outer layers before inner areas are thawed. She suggests taking items out of the freezer and putting them on a refrigerator shelf a night or two before they're to be used. If frozen meat and poultry is taken on a picnic, it should be wrapped separately so juices don't drip onto other foods, she said.

"We recommend that ground meat — beef, chicken and turkey — be cooked until it's brown or gray in the middle and the juices run clear," Van said.

She recommended marinating foods in a glass dish inside a refrigerator and immediately shifting it to a cooler.



"Precooking — blanching — meat ahead of time is very unsafe," Van emphasized. "If you don't cook it completely, don't cook it at all."

When the meat is taken off the grill, it should be placed on a clean plate with no raw juices that can cause contamination, she said.

"Food shouldn't be left out for more than two hours — not more than one hour in temperatures above 90 degrees Fahrenheit," Van said. "Place leftovers in a cooler and transfer them to the refrigerator right away after arriving home.

"As soon as picnickers finish eating, put the food back into the cooler," Van stressed.

The soldiers resumed training once their families departed, and the last units are expected to return from the field Tuesday.

AUSA seeks nominees for civilian award

USAIC Public Affairs Office

The Heberling Award recognizes exemplary service by a civilian in soldier support, family support, Army community support, support of military operations and their impact on the success of the installations missions. It will be presented at the AUSA June membership meeting

The Association of the United States Army is seeking nominations for the third annual Heberling Award, which recognizes exemplary service by a civilian in soldier support, family support, Army community support, support of military operations and their impact on the success of the installations missions.

Nominations should be submitted to the Public Affairs Office, Room 608, Infantry Hall, Building 4, by June 1.

Nominations should include the nominee's name and organizations, as well as reasons why he or she should receive the award. Nominations should also include the nominator's name, address and phone number.

The award will be presented at the AUSA June membership meeting, date to be announced.

"There are very few missions on the post that civilians don't play a vital role," said Gary Burkhalter, personnel management specialist for the Directorate of Civilian Personnel.

"Civilians on the post are very customer-service oriented, particularly in the area of family support," Burkhalter said. "We never lose sight of the fact that our function is to serve the soldiers and their families. AUSA recognizes that fact, which is why they came up with this award. It's truly an honor for them to recognize our efforts."

The award, called in full the George Heberling Award for Distinguished Civilian Service, was presented last year to Alan Stewart who went on to win the National AUSA Award for Distinguished Civilian Service.

The award was named for the post's former director of Resource Management, who was also the first civilian to serve as comptroller of a military post. The vestibule of Meloy Hall is also named for Heberling, who retired from Fort Benning after 34 years of government service. Heberling died in 1987.

"Heberling was truly a distinguished civilian," Burkhalter said. "This award is prestigious. It was very difficult to choose a winner last year because although Mr. Stewart richly deserved it, so did many others. Our civilians are dedicated, and it's not easy to choose just one."

PERSCOM to select Olmsted recipient

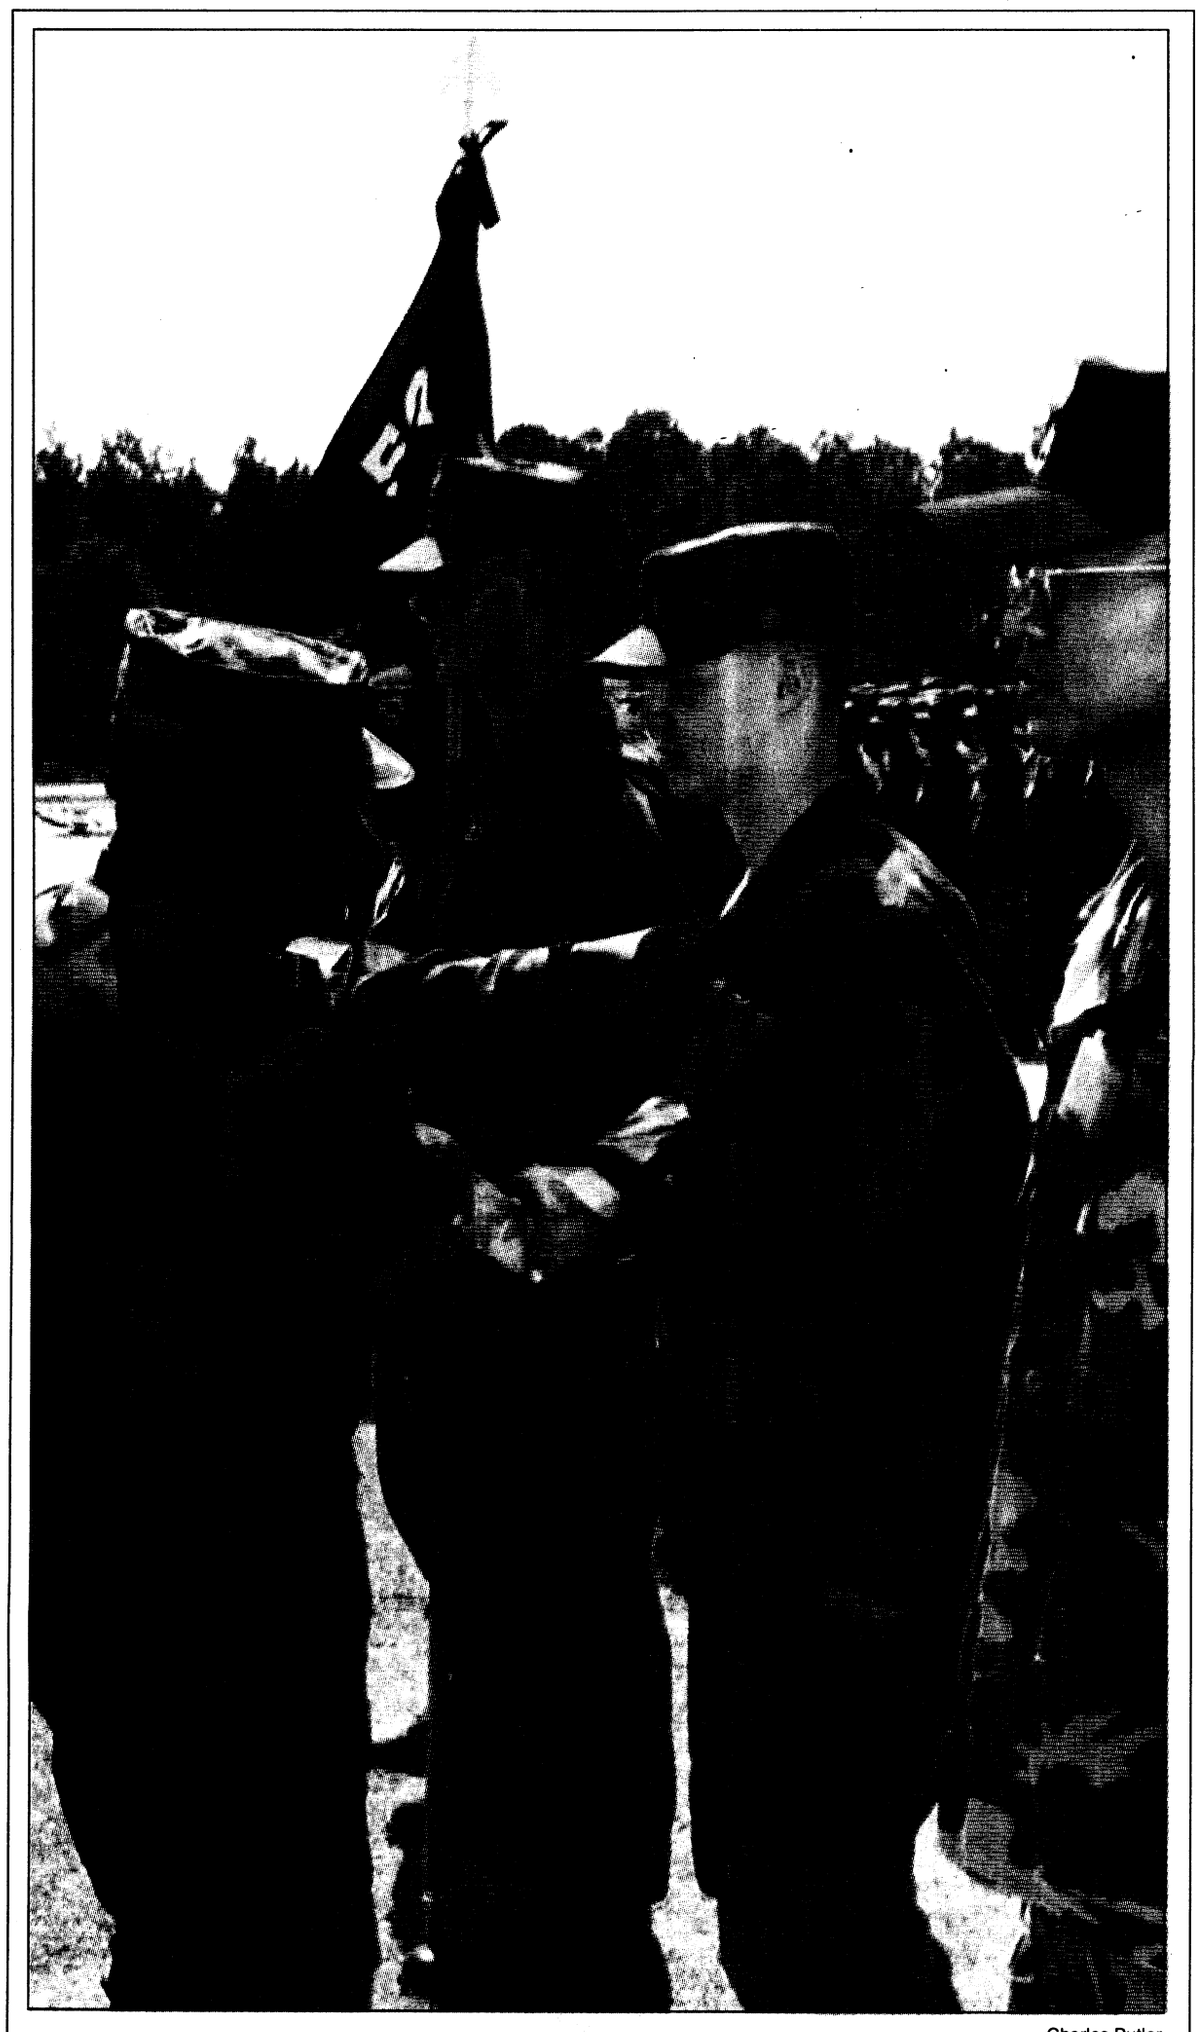
Personnel Command

Personnel Command will convene a selection board Jan. 25 to select seven candidates for presentation to the Olmsted Foundation for final selection as Olmsted Scholars, class of 1996.

The Olmsted Scholarship provides a unique and valuable opportunity to those officers meeting its rigid selection criteria. Awardees and their families become part of a foreign culture while the officer attends one of the host nation's universities.

The officer and his or her family reside in the local community, speaking only the native language.

Officers selected as Olmsted Scholars attend the Defense Language Institute for six to 12 months, depending on the host nation.



Following the institute, the officer will attend in-country language training for about three to four months prior to attending the foreign university for two years.

Olmsted scholars are not obligated to serve a utilization assignment; this allows the officer to return to troops or attend the Command and Staff College depending upon professional development requirements.

Eligible officers must be captains with three to 11 years of commissioned service as of April 1, 1996; branch-qualified; must have a minimum Defense Language Aptitude Battery score of 85; must have a graduate record examination score of 1,150 and must have a minimum grade point average of 3.5.

Officers must receive branch permission to compete; and be in compliance with Army Regulation 621-7.

The final selection board will convene next April .

world war II

50 years ago this week ...

• About 500 Marianas-based B-29s dropped 4,000 tons of incendiary bombs on key targets in Tokyo. Japanese radio reported that the city had been "scorched to the earth" by the raid and subsequent firestorm. Similar raids were conducted against other Japanese cities such as Yokohama and Hiroshima.

• Two Japanese suicide planes crashed into the aircraft carrier Bunkerhill off the coast of Okinawa, causing 373 deaths and significant structural damage to the ship.

• Australian troops captured Wewak Peninsula, clearing all remaining Japanese from the north coast of New Guinea.

• U.S Marines gained positions inside the city of Naha, Okinawa, as other units advanced to Ishimi, close to the central anchor of the Japanese defensive line. Further efforts were stalled by renewed Japanese resistance.

• German resistance in Central Europe was eliminated when the last German units in Czechoslovakia surrendered to U.S. forces.

• Plans were announced in The Bayonet to bring 14 mothers of Fort Benning soldiers to visit their sons at Fort Benning on Mother's Day.

Battle labs working toward Force XXI

TRADOC News Service

FORT MONROE, Va. — The U.S. Army Battlefield Laboratories are "totally institutionalized and imbedded in the Army's fabric," said the man who oversaw development of the labs from idea to reality.

Col. William Hubbard has worked for three years to make battle labs a solid program. This month he will become the assistant division commander for the 1st Infantry Division, Fort Riley, Kan.

> "We cannot execute Force XXI without battle labs and experimentation."
> — Col. William Hubbard
> future asst. division commander, 1st Infantry Division

"The intent of battle labs was to give us a way to try new and courageous ideas to evolve our warfighting capabilities for the future," said Gen. William W. Hartzog, commander of Training and Doctrine Command. "Col. Hubbard not only shared this vision, but his leadership created a program that now has a tremendous impact on the entire Army. Through his efforts in the battle lab program, Col. Hubbard has given us the capability to see and create the army of the future — Force XXI."

Gen. Frederick M. Franks Jr., TRADOC commander from 1991-1994, conceived the idea of battle labs.

"Gen. Franks wanted a mechanism so you could look at the requirements holistically across the battlefield," Hubbard said.

"Another underlying tenet (of Gen. Franks'), it helps to get ... real soldiers involved early on in the requirements definition."

A battle lab was created in 1992 for each of the "battlefield dynamics" — areas of warfighting or military operations that appear to have the greatest potential for change.

These labs are the Dismounted Battlespace Battle Lab, Fort Benning; Mounted Battle Space Battle Lab, Fort Knox, Ky.; Early Entry, Lethality and Survivability Battle Lab, Fort Monroe; Depth and Simultaneous Attack Battle Lab, Fort Sill, Okla.; and Combat Service Support Battle Lab, Fort Lee, Va.

The Battle Command Battle Lab is comprised of three labs. Art of command is at Fort Leavenworth, Kan. Communications is at Fort Gordon, Ga., and the intelligence function is at Fort Huachuca, Ariz.

Support labs have since been established for aviation, air defense and engineer at Fort Rucker, Ala.; Fort Bliss, Texas; and Fort Leonard Wood, Mo.

Battle labs also became a means to shorten the acquisition process. Materiel and combat developers were joined to reduce the time it takes to define combat requirements. The objective was to get new equipment to soldiers quicker.

"We had a requirements system for a number of years that served us very well," Hubbard said. "Our requirements system was largely paper-based, pencil-based and we wrote requirements without a whole bunch of experimentation."

Materiel and combat developers were then linked to the Army's testing community.

"Before you put the first word on paper, you experiment with it (equipment) to get it about right," he said. "We'd like to get it more than about right; we'd like to get it so you don't have to change it."

Testing was accomplished during experimentation instead of being the last step, as it was previously.

"We spent a lot of time in the last 2 1/2 years ... making battle labs a holistic approach," Hubbard said. "This is not a TRADOC-only entity."

Forces Command and Army Materiel Command are active supporters and players in battle labs. The Air Force, Navy and Marine Corps have participated, too. "The Marines are probably the biggest participant because they have similar systems and capabilities and missions," Hubbard said.

TRADOC's success with battle labs led Great Britain and Germany to establish their own versions.

"Both of these programs are ... largely patterned after ours, but there are some differences," he said. "We are electronically connected with them. We're participating in sharing information."

As battle labs began experimenting with new ideas and technologies there was a need to subject them to more realistic situations. That led to advanced warfighting experiments. AWEs examine the battlefield dynamics, as well as doctrine and organizational designs.

AWEs provide settings with real soldiers under actual conditions so new technologies can be fairly evaluated. Soldiers provide immediate feedback on the equipment performance and how it can be improved.

The first major AWE was at Fort Irwin, Calif. Called 94-07, it tested the effectiveness of a heavy task force equipped with digitized information systems.

That AWE was a learning experience for battle lab staffers, and members from other Army agencies. Many lessons were taken from 94-07. One was how to collect and analyze data to correctly interpret events. Another was that forces using modernized equipment must have enough time to train with it in order to properly employ the new gear.

As Hubbard ends his tenure as director of TRADOC's Battlefield Laboratories, Integration, Technology and Concepts, there are several AWEs scheduled in 1995.

Each of the AWEs has a direct impact on organizing and arming the Army of the future — Force XXI.

They include further testing of digitized heavy forces, digitized light-heavy infantry and theater missile-defense. The structure of forces will also he studied to determine new organizational designs for combat forces, primarily at division level and below.

"In 26 years in the Army, I have never seen the Army as cohesive and talking across major command lines as it is today. The focus has been because of Force XXI," Hubbard said.

"Battle labs are inextricably connected to the Force XXI campaign plan. We cannot execute Force XXI without battle labs and experimentation.

AWEs lay groundwork for Force XXI

TRADOC News Service

FORT MONROE, Va. — A series of four advanced warfighting experiments constitute the first step in creating the Army of the 21st Century — Force XXI.

Theater missile defense will be part of Roving Sands, a Joint Chiefs of Staff exercise at Fort Bliss, Texas, and White Sands, N.M., which started April 28 and will conclude Sunday.

Operations Desert Shield and Desert Storm showed there is a need for theater missile defense. The potential for an enemy to have the capability to deliver sophisticated munitions and weapons of mass destruction is increasing rapidly. A more effective missile defense is needed to counter that threat.

The objectives of TMD are to develop capabilities that can be applied to joint doctrine, and assess current and and future capabilities to recommend investments in TMD.

Prairie Warrior and Mobile Strike Force will be conducted at Fort Leavenworth, Kan., this month to focus on the operations and organization of the division and subordinate levels.

Students at the Command and General Staff College will exercise through constructive and virtual analytic simulation to experiment with and evaluate future Army organizational and experiment with and evaluate future Army organizational and operational concepts in a joint context. Mobile Strike Force is an organizational concept of a future division-level task force. Insights gained from Prairie Warrior and MSF will help design Force XXI warfighting units.

Focused Dispatch is a follow-on to AWE 94-07 at Fort Irwin, Calif., in April 1994. It will be conducted at Fort Knox, Ky., and the Western Kentucky Training Area from Aug. 14 to Sept. 1.

It will further evaluate procedural, functional and organizational changes of digitized heavy armor forces in the areas of fire support, intelligence, logistics and battle command. The AWE will also examine organizational design of the future mounted force, and will contribute to developing tactics, techniques and procedures for Task Force XXI.

The Mounted Battlespace Battle Lab at Fort Knox is using constructive, virtual and live simulations before, during and after the AWE to prepare for, execute and analyze the results of Focused Dispatch.

Other outcomes of the AWE will be refined digital communications requirements, and insights across the domains of doctrine, training, leader development, organizational design of the materiel and soldiers.

Warrior Focus is the digitized infantry AWE at the Joint Readiness Training Center, Fort Polk, La., Nov. 5 to 25. In addition to extensive digitized technology, dismounted forces will use state-of-the-art nightfighting equipment.

The experiment will examine 59 systems and 74 initiatives. Different technologies and tactics, techniques and procedures will be integrated with existing organizational structures of light-heavy and special operations forces. Of special interest is the impact these technologies and initiatives will have on battle command, maneuver, intelligence, fire support and combat service support to increase lethality, survivability and operational tempo of forces.

The AWE is under the auspices of the Dismounted Battlespace Battle Lab, Fort Benning. Soldiers from the 10th Mountain Division, Fort Drum, N.Y., will conduct operations against the JRTC's opposing force.

Army men beat Navy in hoops

By Stephen Barrett
American Forces Information Service

Army won the battle of guards, getting 75 points from their backcourt players in the championship game to win the 1995 armed forces men's basketball title recently at Robbins Air Force Base, Ga.

Four Army guards scored in double figures as Army rallied from a three-point halftime deficit to defeat Navy 111-106. The backcourt combination of Spc. Eric McLaughlin (Fort Polk, La.) and Spc. Roderick Hall (Fort Hood, Texas) scored 22 points each in pacing Army to the title.

Backcourt teammate Staff Sgt. Vincent Williams (Wuerzburg, Germany) added 19 points, and backup guard Staff Sgt. Raymond Rucker (Fort Hood) tossed in 12.

Navy's backcourt duo combined for 56 points in the title game. Petty Officer 3rd Class Andre Walker (Bangor Submarine Base, Wash.) led all scorers with 30 points. Petty Officer 2nd Class Jeff Johnson (New Orleans Naval Reserve Personnel Center) chipped in 26.

Paced by Walker's 23 first-period points, Navy grabbed a slim 58-55 halftime lead. The 6-foot-1 guard canned eight field goals in the opening period, including two three-pointers. However, Army held him to seven points and limited Navy's offense to 46 points in the final stanza.

Meanwhile, Army's forwards and centers spent most of the second half watching their guards do the scoring. Of Army's 56 final period points, 42 came from the backcourt. Hall scored 12 of his 22 in the second period, while McLaughlin, Williams and Rucker added 10 each.

Army head coach Timothy Spikes had hoped to win the tournament one game earlier. His team beat Air Force 104-85 in the first round and then beat the Marine Corps 115-103 to earn a spot in the championship game — and revenge for the Marine victory in the title match last year.

But Navy foiled Army's hopes of a one-game final. With a 21-point effort from Petty Officer 3rd Class John Jackson (Coronado Naval Amphibious Base, Calif.), Navy forged a 94-92 win over Army in what could have been the tournament final.

The sailors got there by recovering from a 93-92 loss against the Marines to win two games in the consolation bracket. They eliminated Air Force 96-88, then knocked the defending champion Marines out of the running with a 97-91 victory. The victory forced the "if necessary" game for the armed forces championship.

In the consolation game, a balanced scoring attack led by Staff Sgt. Charles Caldwell gave Air Force (1-2) third place, as they beat the Marines 112-95. Caldwell (Tyndall Air Force Base, Fla.) scored 24 points in leading Air Force to the 17-point victory.

Four other Air Force players reached double figures. Scoring 12 points each were 2nd Lt. Charles Robinson (Keesler Air Force Base, Miss.) and Staff Sgt. Mark Forbes (Hurlburt Field, Fla.). Airman 1st Class Ken Mitchell-Phillips (Yokota Air Base, Japan) added 11 points, and Senior Airman, Edward Simpson (Pope Air Force Base, N.C.) scored 10.

Marine Corps Cpl. Antonio Ford (Camp Lejeune, N.C.) paced the Corps' effort, scoring 36 points. Staff Sgt. Barry Celstein (Iwakuni Marine Corps Air Station, Japan) canned 28 points and Lance Cpl.. Rockey Bailey (Cherry Point Marine Corps Air Station, N.C.) added 12 as the Marines finished 1-3 in the tournament.

Championship game — Army (111), Navy (106)

Consolation game — Air Force (112), Marine Corps (95)

Tournament games:
Marine Corps 93, Navy 92
Army 104, Air Force 85

AMU shooter wins World cup

U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit

A U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit soldier has won the World Cup men's three-position marksmanship title during competition April 30 to May 4 in Seoul, Korea.

Capt. Rob Harbison of the USAMU International Rifle team bested 70 participants with a score of 1,174 out of 1,200 points.

"I'm happy with my win," said Harbison, who also won three Gold Medals and set a new world record during the recent Pan American Games in Argentina. "My performance here brings me one step closer to my ultimate goal — competing in the 1996 Olympic Games."

For now though, Harbison will have to settle for the World Cup finals where he'll face another round of competitors Aug. 30 through Sept. 4 in Munich, Germany.

Bikers to roll to Augusta

By Jerry Colley
Bicycle Ride Across Georgia

About 2,600 bicyclists will be heading for the hills of North Georgia when the 16th annual Bicycle Ride Across Georgia rolls June 11 to 17.

Riders and support personnel will spend the night June 10 at Rome High School before starting to pedal June 11, with overnight stops at Dalton, Ellijay, Dahlonega, Toccoa, Elberton and Clarks Hill Lake before the 345-mile ride ends with a festive, catered end-of-the-road party at Augusta's Riverwalk June 17.

As always, BRAG offers riders a way to get to know the history, terrain, sights and people of Georgia in a way that few other vacations ever will.

This year's ride will include stops at some of the Peach State's rivers and waterfalls, an ostrich farm, the Cabbage Patch Doll Hospital, Royston's Ty Cobb Museum, as well as tours of apple farms and country stores.

Entertainment will include panning for gold in Dahlonega, the fourth annual BRAG Talent Show, featuring the Kazoo Cycling Band and street dance in Elberton, and the shaggin' sounds of the Swingin' Medallions at the Fort Gordon Recreational Area.

Each day's ride ranges from 35 to 60 miles, with most riders camping each night in tents or recreational vehicles. Some riders stay in local motels. Past studies have shown that BRAG riders spend an average of $80,000 in each town in which they stop overnight.

Overnight camping sites are June 10 at Rome High School, June 11 at Dalton High School, June 12 at the Lion's Club Park on the Coosawatee River and Gilmer High School, June 13 at North Georgia College in Dahlonega, June 14 at Toccoa Falls College in Toccoa, June 15 at Elbert County High School in Elberton and June 16 at Fort Gordon Recreational area on Clarks Hill Lake.

For an application, send a self-addressed, stamped envelope to BRAG '95, P.O. Box 576, Stone Mountain, GA 30086-0576. For more information, call (404) 469-2091 and leave your name and address.

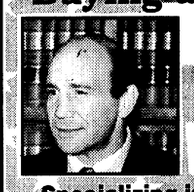
Student wins history competition, will compete nationally in June

Faith Middle School



Faith School's Stephanie Fry placed first at the Georgia State History Day competition in the category of Junior Historical Paper.

Fry will travel to the University of Maryland to compete at the national contest June 12. She will be in competition with as many as 99 other students who have also written papers.

The junior category includes sixth- through eight-graders and all first- and second-place winners at each state level are eligible to compete at the University of Maryland.

Group honors post teachers

Fort Benning Schools

Two Fort Benning teachers were honored for their contributions to education by the Georgia Math-Science Roundtable.

Joyce Flatt, fourth-grade teacher at Dexter, and Judy Hanley, sixth-grade teacher at Faith, were recognized at the 95h Annual Honors Seminar for Mathematics and Science Teachers in Atlanta April 19 to 21.

This year's conference included behind-the-scenes tours of high-tech manufacturing and production facilities and a visit to the recently opened dinosaur exhibit at Fernbank Museum of Natural History.

Teacher participants had sharing sessions exchanging ideas on improving student achievement and interest in science and mathematics. They also participated in discussions with chief executive officers from a number of technology companies based in Georgia. The opportunity for business and education leaders to discuss ways of fostering excellence in science and math instruction in our state in the central function of the seminar.

Other highlights of the conference included an awards luncheon featuring Dr. John Pippin, recently retired chairman of the board of Electromagnetic Sciences and Tom Upchurch, president of the Georgia Partnership for Excellence in Education. Pippin described the importance of his math and science teachers in his career and the changing face of the technology workplace, while Upchurch shared success stories of partnerships between local businesses and schools throughout Georgia.

During the luncheon, each teacher received a Roundtable award cup and a copy of a proclamation from Gov. Zell Miller recognizing their contribution to the youth of the state and declaring April 17 to 23 "Georgia Math-Science Roundtable Week."

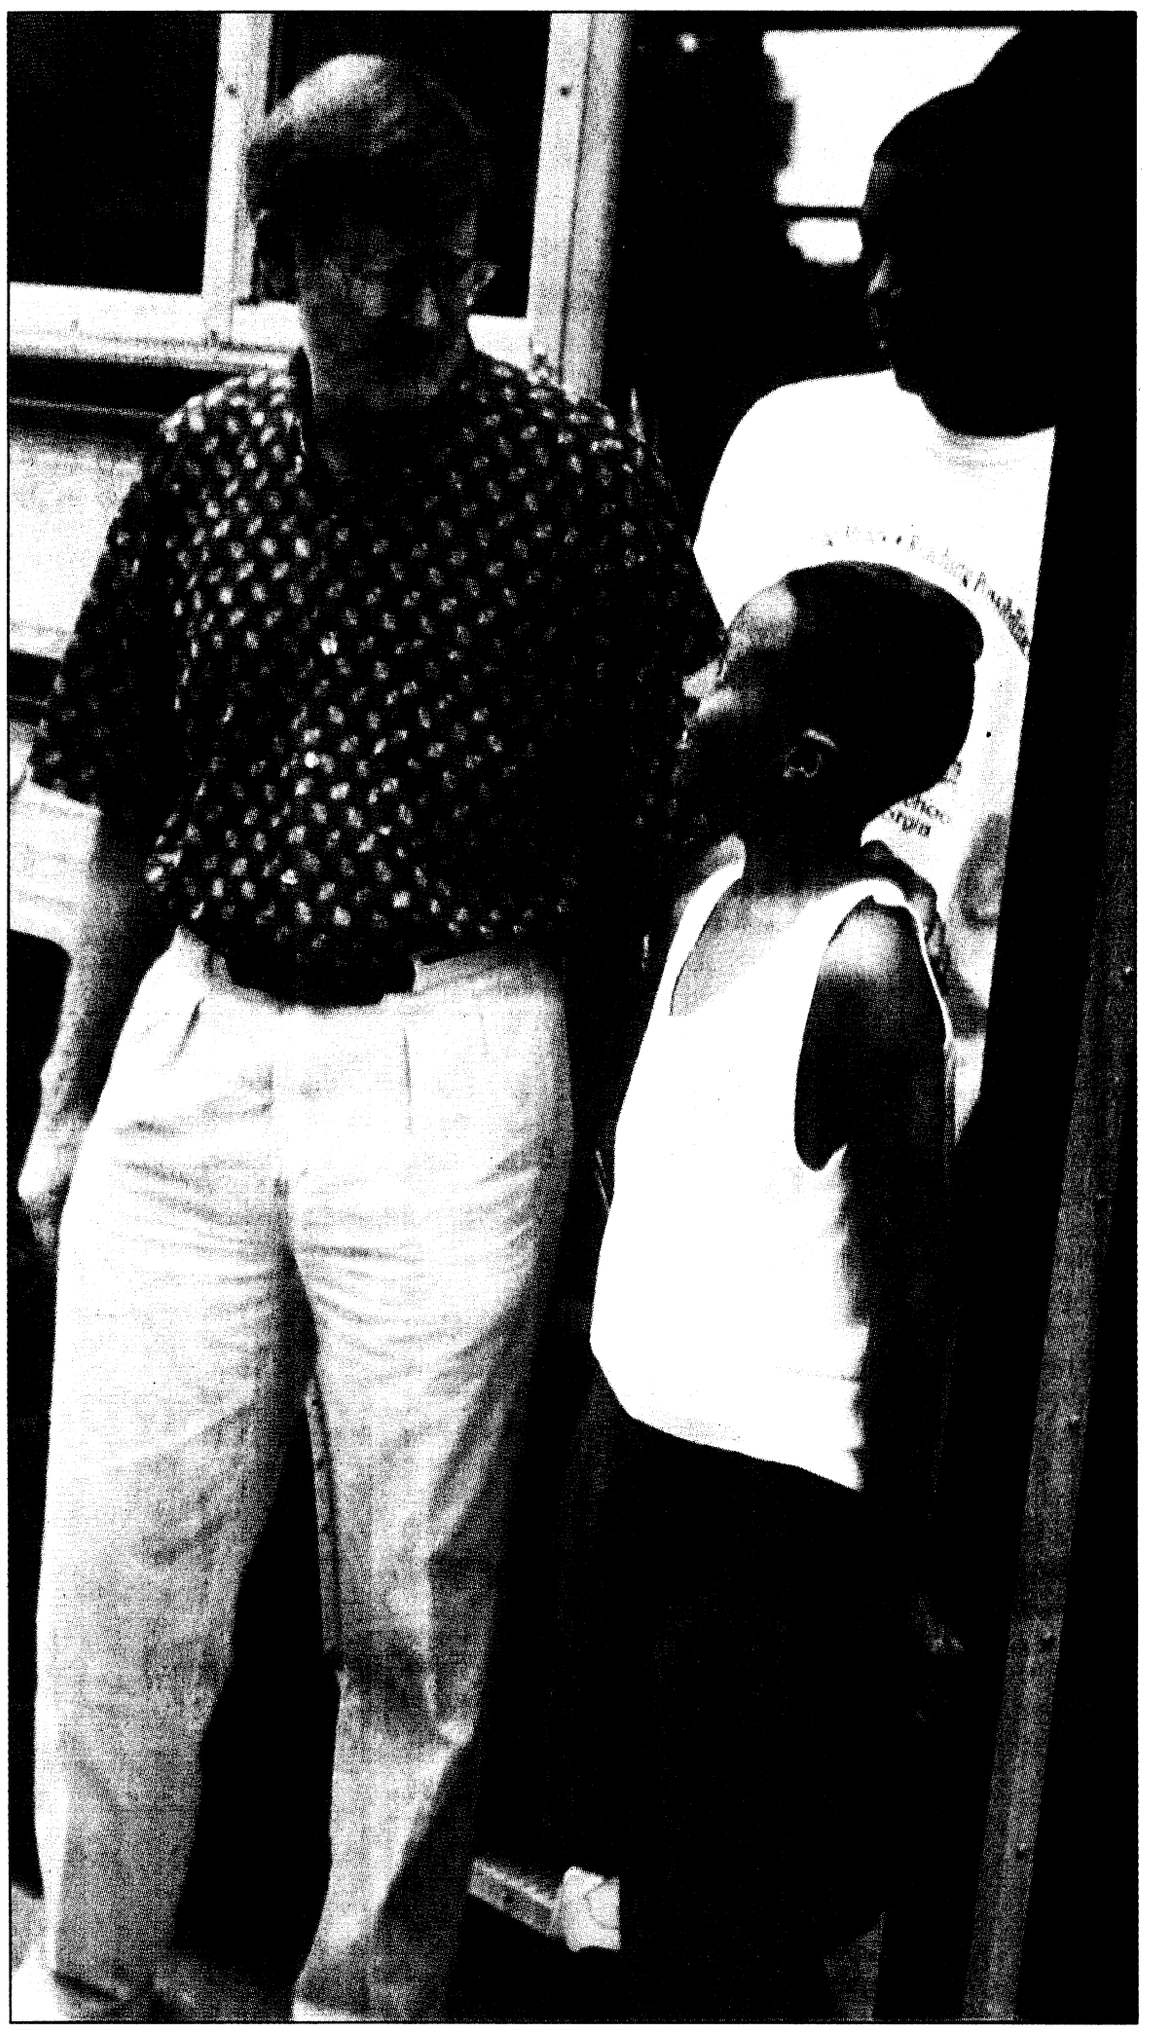
The Georgia Math-Science Roundtable is cooperative effort between education and business to strengthen science and mathematics teaching in Georgia Schools. The roundtable is comprised of teachers, educational administrators, community leaders and representatives from industries interested in technology.

Principal furthers education

Fort Benning Schools

Glenn Hughes, principal of Freddie Stowers Elementary School, was one of 6,000 principals who attended the 74th convention of the National Association of Elementary School Principals April 8 through 12 in San Diego, Calif.

The agenda included more than 100 program sessions and featured several of the most respected methods for improving schools. Hughes learned — often from education reformers themselves — not only how these model programs work, but how many of them may be adapted to fit Fort Benning students' needs.



Carnegie Foundation for the Advancement of Teaching president Ernest Boyer introduced his basic schools philosophy, organized around time-honored K-5 education practices that have proved to work the best.

Stanford University professor Henry Levin discussed his accelerated schools program, which centers on high expectations for all children regardless of academic ability.

Johns Hopkins University's Robert Slavin detailed "Success for All," a program that serves disadvantaged students in schools in 17 states.

Sharon Lynn Kagan of Yale's Bush Center addressed national progress in school readiness and early education.

The meeting also featured more than 300 exhibits of the latest in educational products and services including a mobile technology station that allowed convention participants to experiment with innovations in educational technology, the National Principal's Hotline, a nationwide toll-free telephone bank for parents staffed by volnteers.

Volunteers needed to clip labels

Family Child Care

Organizers need soup labels to purchase playground equipment for Russ Pond, and volunteers to clip labels June 5 and 6 from 6:30 to 8 p.m. at Patch School.

"We need people willing to volunteer their time to clip soup labels," Debbie Snoke, one of the organizers, said. "They need to bring some scissors and be prepared to clip."

The drive is part of the Campbell's Labels for Education program and was launched in January by the Family Child Care providers at Fort Benning.

Labels from more than 1,000 Campbell's products can be redeemed for educational equipment and materials. Only 2 percent of the 345,650 Campbell's Soup Company labels needed have been collected.

Campbell's products include anything with the company's label, Marie's, Mrs. Paul's, Swanson, V-8, Early California, Franco-American, Vlasic, Pepperidge Farm and Prego.

The goal is to collect enough labels to trade for the playground equipment. The new playground would be for children from toddler to school age. There are no playgrounds on post for this varied age group.

Only 5,000 of the 345,650 labels needed have been collected. The drive ends March 1.

There are label drop-off points at all community of life buildings and the Commissary. Many child-care providers will accept labels. Their homes can be identified by the yellow rainbows in the windows.

For information, call Snoke at 687-6823.

Retiree open house set

By Lisa M. Hibbert
Bayonet staff writer

Fort Benning will host the 13th annual Military Retiree Open House through Saturday, with more than 30,000 retirees from Alabama, Florida and Georgia invited to attend.

Retired Sgt. Maj. Nathaniel E. Guydon, co-chairman, is encouraging retirees to support this event.

"It will be an opportunity to become reacquainted with old (friends) from a past time of service," Guydon said. "It will be like a homecoming. Retirees will have the opportunity to see new faces, new equipment and exchange information."

While here, retirees will get the opportunity to conduct personal business related to their rights, benefits, privileges and entitlements as retired service members.

A briefing will be conducted to inform retirees of the latest developments and concepts in the Army.

They will also have an opportunity to renew the common bonds between the retired and active Army communities during Armed Forces Day.

Retired ranger 1st Sgt. Davey Lockett said that he will participate in the festivities.

"It's good that the Department of the Army recognizes retirees," Lockett said. "The post opens once a year to remember us. They can't give us everything that we've lost but they can remember us; they haven't forgotten our contributions. Most of the people who retired in this area know each other and it's good for us to get together."

Open house registration begins in the lobby of Infantry Hall Saturday at 6:45 a.m.

Fort Sill soldiers rush to meet need for blood

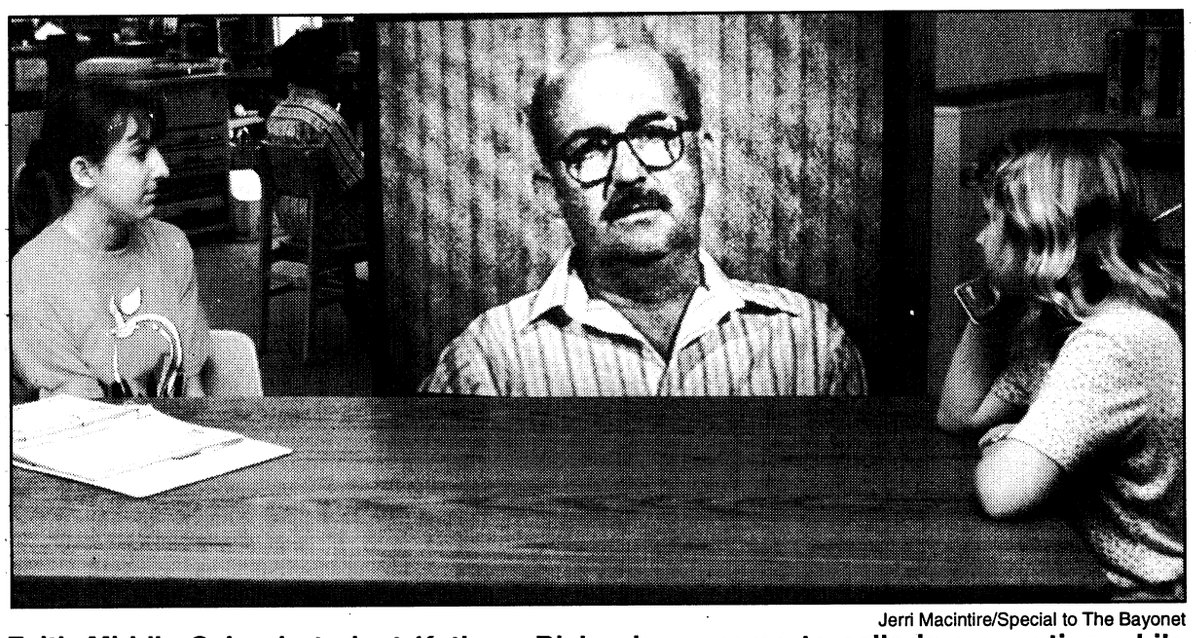
By Laurie Wise
TRADOC News Service

Soldiers from all over Fort Sill, Okla., came in droves to the Oklahoma Blood Institute to give blood for the victims of the Oklahoma City bombing, said Barbara Lankford, director of the Southwest Oklahoma Blood Institute in Lawton.

"There has been a great number of soldiers that have helped us by donating their blood and their time. We've had personnel here from Reynolds Army Community Hospital. They provided staff and equipment that was just invaluable to us. We've also had a lot of soldier volunteers," said Lankford.

Lankford said Fort Sill played a critical role in the collection of 3,500 units of blood.

That collection was due in part to the efforts of soldiers like Spc. John Tillison, 1st Battalion, 12th Field Artillery.



"I just wanted to help somehow and this seemed like a good way to do it," said Tillison.

The desire to help seemed to be the primary motivator for most soldiers, but one soldier had a little more on his mind.

Spc. Christopher Knaff, Headquarters and Headquarters Battery, Field Artillery Training Center, said, "I donated not just because I want to help, but also because if I were in this situation, I hope someone would do it for me."

If Fort Sill's history is any indication, Knaff can be assured that help would be provided since, according to Lankford.

"They are always willing to help," Lankford said. "I feel very fortunate to have such a great partnership with Fort Sill. Not all areas have that kind of relationship with their surrounding military installations. Fort Sill never ceases to amaze me with how much they are willing to do for their community.

Faith goes globetrotting on V-E Day

By Jerrie Macintire
Special to The Bayonet©

Faith Middle School students remembered the 50th anniversary of Germany's surrender during World War II with an electronic field trip to various sites around the globe.

The eighth-graders, under the direction of teacher Patti Jones, travelled via satellite connection and computer service from their school to various sites across Europe to celebrate Victory in Europe Day May 8, 1945.

Interacting with a worldwide panel of experts, Faith students asked two questions that were broadcast live: how much did Hitler actually tell his people concerning what was taking place, and how do you (experts) feel about the recent neo-Nazi uprising in Germany?

Faith students also conducted numerous "chatting sessions" through an on-line link with other schools around the world involved in the V-E Day remembrance.

In addition, Faith students watched their large screen television set in the media center as professional reporters interviewed former soldiers from both sides, Holocaust survivors, and military strategists and experts.

For example, WWII veteran Don Lassen described in vivid detail the parachutist's jump at 2 a.m. the morning of D-Day, the invasion of Europe June 6, 1944, that was one of the largest parachute drops in the War.

Lassen, who joined the 82nd paratroopers just in time for D-Day, remembers stepping out of the plane into the pitch black sky.

"The whole German army was waiting for us," Lassen remembered. "I stepped into the sky and hoped for the best."

Lassen told students he landed in a field, heard another movement close by, and used his "cricket" to signal he was an American.

A cricket is a metal clicking device the paratroopers used in the darkness to communicate they were Americans. One small click would quietly send the message, "don't shoot; I'm a friend."

"He clicked back, so I knew it was another American," he said.

Sharing memories of those like Lassen who were really there is an effective way to make history come alive, Jones said.

The electronic trip across Europe was a wonderful opportunity to expand the students insight and perspective of WWII and add the human perspective to history, she said.

"There is no comparison between activities such as this and just reading about the war in a book," said Cindy Givens, media specialist.

The electronic field trip, which capped a study unit on WWII, covered three days.

The first day of the activity, students studied the five key events that led to victory in Europe for the allies.

The second day covered the American military presence in Europe following V-E Day, and the third day focused on global alliances in today's society and positive solutions to aggression.

Students were so impressed with the televised interviews of those who were there they plan to conduct their own interviews with family members who lived during the war, Jones said.

In addition, the students have read novels and poetry and written term papers during their study of WWII.

Southern Command to move

By Linda D. Kozaryn
American Forces Information Service

Adios, Panama City; hello, Miami. Southern Command headquarters is moving from Panama to the Florida coast.

President Bill Clinton recently named Miami as the Department of Defense's new home for Southern Command. Selection was based on costs, quality of life, available housing and office facilities, and communications and travel access to the Southern Command's area of responsibility.

"We chose the city that we believe will allow Southern Command to accomplish its mission and provide a good quality of life for its personnel at a reasonable cost to the American taxpayers," said Deputy Secretary of Defense John M. Deutch.

About 700 military and civilian staff and about 1,500 family members will relocate from the present headquarters at Quarry Heights near Panama City, a DoD official said. The staff payroll is about $27 million.

DoD is currently doing an environmental analysis of Richmond Heights, a Coast Guard facility in southern Dade County. If approved to house the command, officials plan to move in the summer of 1998. The cost of the move is estimated at $60 million.

Under provisions of the Panama Canal Treaty of 1977, the command must leave Panama by the end of 1999. The treaty calls for the phased withdrawal of all U.S. service members from Panama and the turnover of U.S. military-controlled installations to the government of Panama.

Southern Command's territory covers 7 million square miles and includes 19 Central and South American countries. About 8,500 service members are assigned to the command to defend the Panama Canal, promote democracy, implement U.S. drug control policy and promote regional defense cooperation.

Dexter salutes diversity

By Jerrie Macintire
Special to The Bayonet©

Dexter School capped a year-long multi-cultural study with closing ceremonies that included art displays, ethnic dances, songs and greetings in several languages.

Under the Olympic Connections theme, each class has studied various aspects of an "adopted" country, according to Vicky Rodgers, principal.

During the year, teachers wove cross-curricular activities relating to their adopted countries into subjects such as physical education, math, social studies, language arts and music, Rodgers said.

In addition, students have been writing pen pals, celebrating ethnic festivals, learning native dances and making flags.

As part of the year-long study, classes also designed and made patchwork quilts to present to their adopted country, an Olympic tradition.

The quilts, along with artwork, were on display during closing ceremonies recently.

Visiting artist-in-education Judy Leonard led students in original and traditional songs celebrating various cultures from around the globe.

Students also performed native dances such as the traditional wedding number, "Circle of Friends," popular in Italy and Israel.

Jerri Macintire/Special to The Bayonet
Dexter third-graders display sign language skills as they 'sing' a multi-cultural song under the direction of teacher Pam Wright at the Olympic Connections unit of study closing ceremony.

Pam Wright, physical education teacher, led the song "The World is a Rainbow" in the spirit of the multi-cultural program, while selected students gave welcoming and farewell greetings from their adopted countries.

Retired Maj. Marcus Alexander, liaison for the paralympics games in 1996 in Georgia, gave closing remarks and spoke of the brotherhood of the Olympics and the determination that makes all competitors successful in life.

Before and after the ceremonies, parents and visitors toured the school to observe decorations and art work centering around the multi-cultural theme.

For example, students who adopted Canada learned the art of scrimshaw; they carved delicate images onto flat pieces of pottery which represented ivory.

Those who studied the Netherlands painted flowers in the distinct style of the famous artist, Vincent Van Gogh, and those studying Kenya fashioned traditional tribal shields.

Students explained the personalized clay stamps, or seals, in this way: men of Norway declare their love by fashioning a personal stamp that imprints an original design. Their sweethearts return the sentiments using the seal to decorate the top of freshly baked cookies.

'Jerry's Kids' to go to camp

Muscular Dystrophy Association

The Atlanta and Macon District Muscular Dystrophy Association has announced plans for its 1995 Annual Camp Walk 'n' Roll for "Jerry's Kids."

Camp will be from Aug. 5 to 11 at Camp-Will-A-Way in Winder, Ga.

This special camp is open to all children and young adults ages 6 to 21 years old with a neuromuscular disease. There is no cost to attend camp.

This camp is specifically designed for use by orthopedically handicapped people, in addition to being in a location surrounded by trees, rustic cabins and a huge lake. The campers participate in a variety of activities such as swimming, fishing, boating, playing softball, silly olympic games, arts, crafts, parties and numerous other activities.

Key people in the success of the MDA summer camp program are the volunteer attendants who are companions to the campers. The VAs assist their campers in all their daily activities, and get involved in activities themselves.

For approximately the past six years, soldiers from Fort Stewart, Ga., have worked as volunteers at the MDA Summer Camp. This year, the MDA is extending an invitation to the personnel of Fort Benning.

As counselors, soldiers give of themselves physically and emotionally by serving as the "arms and legs" of the camper to whom they are assigned during the week.

profile in excellence

Name: Spc. Joy Michelle Oliver
Position : Better Opportunities for Single Soldiers Program representative
Unit: USAIC Military Police Company
Military Occupational Specialty: 95BZ6, Military Police
Job Title: Military Police working dog handler
Years on the job: Five years
Hometown: Austin, Pa.

What were your reasons for joining the Army? Experience and education, learning different lifestyles and discipline.

What were your reasons for choosing your MOS? A challenge and better opportunities for further advancement.

What person has most influenced your military career? I have two — Capt. James Starkey, now a commander at Fort Riley, Kan., who was my platoon leader in Korea, and Staff Sgt. Stephen Rhea, who is a platoon sergeant at Fort Stewart, Ga. with whom I was stationed in Korea. Both were above average leaders who were for their soldiers 100 percent. I have never seen such great quality. Their enthusiasm and dedication as leaders and examples to soldiers is exemplary.

If you were the sergeant major of the Army for a day, what improvements would you make? More schools for lower enlisted soldiers, better styles of living for all soldiers.

What are your future career plans? To be a soldier's soldier, attend Special Reaction Team and Airborne schools before getting out, and then to finish my degree and move on to bigger and better things.

What do you think about the BOSS program and why is it important? The BOSS program is essential as it supports morale of single soldiers living in barracks and lets soldiers take charge of issues they are concerned with.

What have you accomplished as the BOSS representative for your unit? A better understanding of what the quality of life program is, a foundation for the program to grow on within the MPA, and getting soldiers interested and involved.

In your opinion, how can the individual soldier get involved in the BOSS program? Open their ears, eyes and minds to a program that is the betterment of their wants and needs. The more individuals that get involved, the more we can work on better programs for morale and comfortable living.

What specifically has the BOSS program done to help the soldiers in your unit? Some barracks improvement, more freedom in living conditions, opened doors for concerns, good and bad, to be heard.

What others have to say about you: "Very pleasant and understanding, hard working in all tasks, extremely ambitious in every detail. Tops in her class."

— Sgt. Robert Hoague, MP Desk Sergeant

"Spc. Oliver is a true professional soldier in every aspect. Her dedication to the mission has been unparalleled. She has demonstrated the leadership of someone in a much higher duty position. In her many duties as dog handler and member of the special reaction team she has truly shown the attitude of 'Be, know, do. I am a professional.' "

—Staff Sgt. Donnie Lucas, Military Police

Prayers yield response

By Geoffrey and Melinda Alleyne
13th Corps Support Battalion

Is prayer like a slot machine? Many people think so! Everyone knows that occasionally someone puts a quarter into a slot machine and by some stroke of luck, they win big. This person has not done anything out of the ordinary; they just put their quarter in at the right time. Many people see God as the slot machine. They hope if they put some time into prayer then perhaps God will answers them. They, also believe God passes out the "big wins" only occasionally.

This approach to prayer will leave you as empty-hearted as the pockets of those who trust in the slot machines for financial gain. The Bible teaches us that "fervent prayers of the righteous availeth much." (James 5:16 KJV) In other words, we are able to expect an answer every time we pray, not just occasionally.

First of all, the Bible instructs us to come to prayer with a heart full of desire to seek the Lord. The psalmist stated "if I had cherished sin in heart, the Lord would not have listened." Much the same thing happens when you approach your spouse to speak to them. If you are really thinking about something else, communication is broken down. Well, the Bible tells us sin stands in the way of effective communication with God. It's important that the issue of sin be resolved first before we can have a successful prayer life.

Secondly, the Bible instructs us to approach prayer with thanksgiving. (Phil. 4:6) In other words, conversation with God should not be hampered by an ungrateful heart, regardless of our circumstances. So often we stand in the way of effective communication with God because we are hung up being bitter over our circumstances. Yet Habakkuk 3:17-19 states "though the fig tree does not bud and there are no grapes on the vines yet I will rejoice in the Lord ... (for) he enables me to go on, to heights."

Finally, we need to ask God to meet our needs and believe that he has our best interest at heart. The Bible says "commit to the Lord whatever you do and your plans will succeed." (Prov.16:3 NIV) Many people get hung up here. They believe that because they ask, they should get what they asked for. They failed to "commit their prayers."

God is not in the business of conducting lotteries. He is in the business of meeting our needs. James 1:5 says "if any of you lacks wisdom, he should ask God, who gives generously to all ..."

We can expect answers to our

prayers. II Chronicles 7:14 says "if my people ... will humble themselves and pray and seek my face and turn from their wicked ways, then I will hear from heaven and will forgive their sins and will heal their land. God will honor our attempts to have a meaningful relationship with him. He gives to us generously when our desires are aligned with his instructions for a meaningful relationship with him.

Much like a marriage is our relationship with God. God requires us to first desire no one else above him; second, to be thankful for the relationship with him; and finally, to earnestly seek the correct solution to any given problem and be able to expect a clear answer from God.

Ascension is a mystery

By Wilbert C. Harrison
USAIC Chaplain Office

In John 16:7 Jesus said to his disciples, "It is expedient for you that I depart. For if I do not go, the advocate will not come to you, but if I go, I will send him to you." (NKJV)

The very fact Jesus ascended to his father in heaven was the sure guarantee that Christians everywhere could now experience the presence of the Holy Spirit.

Paul in Ephesians 2:4-6 makes it clear that Christ's exaltation was the beginning of our own glory by reason of the mysterious living unity we have with the physical Christ who ascended to the Father.

Thomas, following Paul, maintains that our contact with Christ in glory is not merely something in the future, but is now, in the present. Indeed, it is a marvelous basis for hope (II Corinthians 5:16-18).

As a pledge of our glory, the mystery of the Ascension points out clearly that our human nature in its totality is now glorified with Christ.

In Christ Jesus the final effect of God's grace is attained. Our bodies are redeemed. Through this

The very fact Jesus ascended to his father in heaven was the sure guarantee that Christians everywhere could now experience the presence of the Holy Spirit act all creation attains its full achievement.

What this means for the Christian in his practical everyday life is beautifully expressed in Chapter 4 of Ephesians. By means of Christ's Ascension, the individual Christian is able to mature to the full stature of Christ.

He is drawn by the gift of the Spirit toward his own personal fulfillment, and that of the whole universe, in one simultaneous movement of faith, hope, and love.

Without the Resurrection and the Ascension of Christ,

reflections

Christianity would be nothing more than a manmade religion with lots of dos and don'ts. As I see it no one can explain the Resurrection nor the Ascension of Christ. We can write about it from Scriptures, but we never explain it. I guess this is what makes this event a mystery.

It is beyond human comprehension and understanding and yet it is true. It takes faith to believe in God and takes the same faith to believe in the Ascension.

Yet regardless of my lack of understanding, there is something mystical imparted to my soul that I can't help but believe in the Ascension of our Lord.

Ascension is not about star gazing, nor is it sitting idly by waiting for the return of Christ. It is about Christians taking up the cross of Christ daily and following his leadership.

The Ascension is about the hundreds of people who lost loved ones in the recent bombing in Oklahoma City, but who know that the risen and ascended Christ cares.

109 workers face job cuts

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Post employees affected by the fiscal 1996 budget reduction guidance received letters last week informing them of changes to their job status. The notices will affect 109 employees, most of whom will be reassigned and changed to a lower grade effective Oct. 1. It is estimated that fewer than 50 employees will be separated Sept. 30.

The impact of this reduction was softened as a result of 125 employees who elected to retire earlier this year and receive the voluntary separation incentive bonus.

The Directorate of Civilian Personnel used reduction-in-force procedures to determine which employees were affected.

All employees involved in this action will be individually counseled regarding their employment status, entitlement to other jobs, pay retention or adjustment, retirement eligibility and placement assistance at other federal agencies as well as private industry.

Fort Benning officials noted the post is dedicated to protecting the job rights of individuals and is striving to minimize the impact of this reduction on the work force. They said that all employees involved in this action should be aware that specific job offers or notices of separation identified in their letters are subject to change.

Facilities, schools, offices to close Memorial Day

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Most military and civilian personnel at Fort Benning will observe Memorial Day Monday and soldiers are having a training holiday today. Both days will result in a number of post facilities being closed or operating at reduced hours.

- Fort Benning Schools will be closed Monday.
- The Commissary will be closed Monday and Tuesday.
- The Main Post Exchange will be open from 9 a.m. to 9 p.m. today and from 10 a.m. to 7 p.m. Monday.
- The Custer Terrace Shoppette will be open from 11 a.m. to 8 p.m. today and from 11 a.m. to 6 p.m. Monday.
- The Mini Mall Shoppette is open today and Monday from 9 a.m. to 9 p.m.
- There will be no refuse and recycle pick-up Monday.

Senior infantry leaders to gather June 14, 15 on post

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Fort Benning will host the 1995 Senior Leader Update Conference June 14 to 15.

Maj. Gen. John W. Hendrix, the commandant of the U.S. Army Infantry School, will welcome attendees at 8 a.m. Wednesday in Infantry Hall's Classroom 6.

The conference will provide a forum for discussions in the areas of doctrine, training, leader development, force design of infantry organizations, equipment and materiel requirements and other aspects of the infantry mission.

The conference will provide an opportunity for dialogue among major field commanders, industry and the Infantry School on significant issues.

The conference will focus on the latest advances in soldier systems, a demonstration of "Land Warrior XXI" and the use of sophisticated computer systems that will "digitize" the infantry soldier and enhance his ability to gather and pass on information on the battlefield.

Emerging technological, organization and training advances will be examined that will transform the Army into a smaller, rapidly deployable, yet lethal force envisioned by its leaders that will serve the nation well into the 21st century.

Post Olympic contract is signed, sealed, delivered!

By Lisa M. Hibbert
Bayonet staff writer

The contract for Fort Benning to host the Columbus Olympic Village was officially signed Monday by retired Lt. Gen Carmen J. Cavezza, executive director of Columbus '96 and post Commanding General Maj. Gen. John W. Hendrix.

According to Maj. Chuck Walls, garrison executive officer, negotiations got under way in December 1993 when former post Commanding General retired Maj. Gen. Jerry A. White was approached by Columbus Mayor Frank Martin about hosting Olympic quarters.

"The housing arrangement is city funded, not Army funded so we had to do cost estimates for food, transportation, and lodging costs," Walls said.

The details had to be worked out with the Department of Defense Special Events Office and the Deputy Chief of Staff for Operations and Plans, he said.

Approximately 155 Olympians will be here from July 6, 1996, to Aug. 3, 1996, and will be housed in Henry Hall, Building 73. The area will be fenced in to provide security and only those with prearranged security clearances will be allowed in unescorted.

"What is so good about the (accommodations) here is that the Olympians will be housed one to a room with a private bath, microwave, television, telephone and even coffee makers — they will have everything at their disposal," Walls said.

While here, special arrangements will be made for use of facilities such as the Post Exchange. For their convenience, a mini PX will be set up inside the Olympic village. Along with the PX, a phone center will also be available in the village since the phones in the rooms will only access local calls. There will be a mail room to ensure the Olympians receive correspondence, and the local banks will be equipped for currency exchange. Olympians will not only be staying in the barracks, but dining on Army chow in the Follow Me Dining Facility as well.

Students who are currently staying there will be gradually moved out to different areas beginning in April to cause a minimum amount of disruption.

"We have to be careful not to push anybody out because the Olympians are coming," Walls said. "We have to take care of the soldiers first."

Loud music not tolerated

To regulate behavior that has an adverse impact on quality of life for soldiers and family members on Fort Benning, the post policy against loud music prohibits the following:

The playing of hand-carried radios and electronic sound devices, unless such devices are equipped with earphones or headphones being used for private listening, in any Post Exchange facility, Army Commissary, post movie theater or military bus.

The playing of a radio or electronic sound device in a motor vehicle that emits sound outside the passenger or driver compartment of the motor vehicle at a volume that is audible to a person with normal hearing (not hypersensitive) at a distance of 15 feet from the motor vehicle on any public street, public parking area, or private driveway on the Fort Benning military reservation.

The prohibitions are not designed or intended to curtail the individual liberties of any person

The playing of hand-carried radios or electronic sound devices while walking or running around the Fort Benning military reservation at a volume that is audible to a person with normal hearing (not hypersensitive) at a distance of 15 feet.

The wearing of earphones or headphones for private listening is prohibited while running on the installation.

These prohibitions are not designed or intended to curtail the individual liberties of any person. Rather, they are set forth to ensure that the individual dignity of every person on this installation is protected and that all military personnel and family members may move freely about the installation without fear of threatening situations, real or perceived.

The prohibitions are punitive and violation of them can lead to prosecution under the Uniform Code of Military Justice or administrative action or sanctions.

dial 545-BOSS

Dial 545-BOSS is the commander's action line for soldiers, family members and civilians to call when they have problems or complaints that can't be resolved elsewhere.

While it is not a substitute for the chain of command or for agencies established to provide assistance, the line offers another means of communication between Fort Benning's community and commanders.

The Bayonet features some of the calls that may benefit other members of the Fort Benning community.

Call: A boy in my son's kindergarten class at Wilson School fell and was injured on a big piece of concrete jutting out of the ground on the school's playground.

I was assured this would be taken care of. It's been covered with sand, but sand won't solve the problem because it will wash away.

This poses a safety hazard and I would like to see something done about it.

Fort Benning Schools response:
A contractor has removed the concrete.

Call: I would like to know why there are no medical personnel on the fields when the children from Youth Services are playing sports.

Youth Services response: *A request for medical support was submitted but was denied. Youth Services recruited volunteer medics to be on the sports fields every Saturday; however, those volunteers have been deployed. The Youth Services truck will be on the field each Saturday equipped with a telephone if there are injuries, emergency medical services will be called from Martin Army Community Hospital. Let's improve recycling

Fort Benning is the best; that's good. Fort Benning is not recycling all that it could; that's bad. Our family housing recycling is good. Our unit and workplace recycling is not good.

I challenge all commanders, managers and leaders to look into the trash bins in your areas. You will find items that can be recycled.

Cardboard will be your biggest challenge to recycle. Our recycle center does not have the manpower or equipment to pick up all the cardboard for recycle. The challenge will be to get the cardboard to the recycle center. That should be no problem for the best.

Fort Benning could start a recycle community with members from major units.

Remember we lose in three ways when we do not recycle.

• We have to pay the state of Georgia 50 cents per ton of refuse that goes into our landfill.

• We will fill our landfill a lot faster; cardboard is very hard to compact.

• We lose the money we would get for selling the cardboard or other recycle materials.

— Gene Gross
Directorate of Public Works

DPW response:

Fort Benning's sanitary landfill is rapidly approaching capacity. Based on the present rate of use and remaining permitted space, it will be completely filled within two years.

A concerted effort is being made to extend the life of this disposal facility by modifying operational methods. These modifications require prior approval of the Georgia Department of Natural Resources, Environmental Protection Division.

Based on a recent survey of the solid waste collection program, paper products, including cardboard, is by far the major material being sent to the landfill. Cardboard and other paper products not only fill up the landfill, they cause operational and environmental problems as well.

As the paper decomposes, it generates methane gas and leachate, which is very difficult and expensive to manage. Underground landfill fires can be fueled by paper products. Decomposing paper can also cause the landfill cover to collapse, breaking the protective seal that is required on the buried waste.

The Fort Benning Material Recovery Facility's Recycling Center is a better solution for the large amounts of paper products that Fort Benning generates. Paper and cardboard are selling at record highs.

To operate the recycling program as economically as possible, we need to divert a much higher percentage of our used materials, especially paper products, into the recycling loop.

The Fort Benning family is to be commended for the progress that has been made in reducing the amount of material going to the landfill and increasing the amount being recycled.

In 1993, more than 44,000 tons of material was buried in the sanitary landfill. In 1994, that amount was reduced to 28,000 tons.

In 1995, we are continuing to reduce the amount going to the landfill. With the support of the entire Fort Benning community, we can improve our environment and reduce solid waste management costs.

A concerted effort to separate these valuable paper products from the waste stream, divert it to our Material Recovery Facility and take advantage of the excellent current paper market is necessary.

Fort Benning has an opportunity to recover a large amount of material and maximize the remaining capacity of its solid waste disposal facility at the same time. This will also give us additional time to plan and develop our solid waste program.

Make sure you live in Chattahoochee to register to vote there

Chattahoochee County is having a problem concerning some of the voter registration applications that have been generated through the New Motor Voter Registration Act. The new motor voter registration makes registering to vote one of the easiest things to do.

The applications are generated through various mandated agencies such as the drivers license bureau, the library, WIC program, health departments. When a person goes to one of these places and says he or she would like to register to vote that application is then sent to the County Registrar's Office via the Secretary of State's Office.

The problem we are facing in Chattahoochee County is the absence of residence addresses on some of the applications from Fort Benning personnel. The soldier is using his company address as his residence address and does not indicate if he lives in the barracks, quarters or off post.

Using the company address as a mailing address is acceptable as long as we have an actual residence address also.

In order to be a registered voter, you must live in the county in which you are registering to vote. Without a residence address, I am unable to tell if the applicant is a Chattahoochee County resident or if he or she is a resident of Muscogee County.

Some soldiers have informed me that they are being told if their company is on the Chattahoochee County side then they register to vote in Chattahoochee County. This, of course, is not so as several of the applications we have received were Muscogee County residents.

There is a great deal of time, paperwork and telephone calls involved in trying to determine the residence of the applicant. We do not want to reject anyone's application to vote, but we are having to do so because of insufficient information on the application.

I will continue to do all that I can in order to register those who wish to vote in our county.

If there are any questions or problems that I can help with, call me at 989-3602.

1994 TRADOC's safest year

TRADOC News Service

FORT MONROE, Va. — Training and Doctrine Command recorded its safest year in fiscal 1994, and Gen. William W. Hartzog, TRADOC commander, gives the credit to leaders at all levels of command.

"TRADOC had great safety performance last year," he said. "Attention by commanders and leaders is the reason. Safety is leaders' business. We cannot allow complacency to creep in."

There were 26 accidental deaths on TRADOC installations in fiscal 94. The figure includes 11 soldiers from other commands. The previous lowest accidental death total in the preceding five years was 35 in 1993.

Privately owned vehicle accidents account for TRADOC accident fatalities. Safety officials report that contributing factors in POV deaths continue to be fatigue, alcohol, speed and not using seat belts.

The year also saw fewer military injuries, privately owned and military vehicle accidents and aviation accidents.

There was a significant drop in the number of fires and property and monetary loss in calendar year 1994.

TRADOC installations reported 129 fires in 1994 compared to 164 in 1993. Monetary loss decreased by more than $2 million to $9.7 million.

"Safety for me is force protection," Hartzog said. "You can have safety officers and safety supervisors and safety specialists to assist leaders, but it's the chain of command that's responsible for risk assessment and setting the conditions in which safe activity occurs.

"Yes, we did have a good year, and I'm very thankful for that, he added. "We need to work at it hard to make it a real force protection program, not an item on an inspector general's checklist."

Open house honors gone but not forgotten

Retirees

By Lisa M. Hibbert
Bayonet staff writer

Fort Benning remembered those gone but not forgotten soldiers May 18 to 20 when the post hosted the 13th annual Military Retirees Open house.

The event kicked off May 18 with free physical examinations at Martin Army Community Hospital for those retirees who live outside of the 50- mile radius.

On the evening of May 19, retirees dined on a barbecue-style meal — complete with ribs, coleslaw, rolls and iced tea. After dinner, which was at the Supper Club of the Officers' Club, the Infantry Band played some swinging jazz tunes.

"I like to (come back and) fellowship with other retirees and see what is going on in the military," retired Sgt. 1st Class Nathaniel Beavers said. "The Army has changed. A lot of progress has been made for the good of the soldiers. They get a lot more benefits now."

"I enjoy coming to the open house — hearing the speeches, meeting people and learning what I am entitled to as a member of the retired community," said Bessie W. Beavers, Beavers' wife. "I enjoy the programs more now that my husband is retired."

May 20 was the big day for the open house. Participants were welcomed by retired Col. Biff A. Hadden, co-chairman of the Fort Benning Retiree Council, treated to the "I am the Infantry" epic poem presentation, serenaded by the Infantry Chorus and briefed by Col. Michael J. Kussman, commander, MACH on changes being made to the hospital to improve service. Throughout the sessions, the retirees were able to voice their concerns in question-and-answer sessions.

Retired Sgt. Maj. James E. Dyson, has been associated with the retiree council for about 30 years.

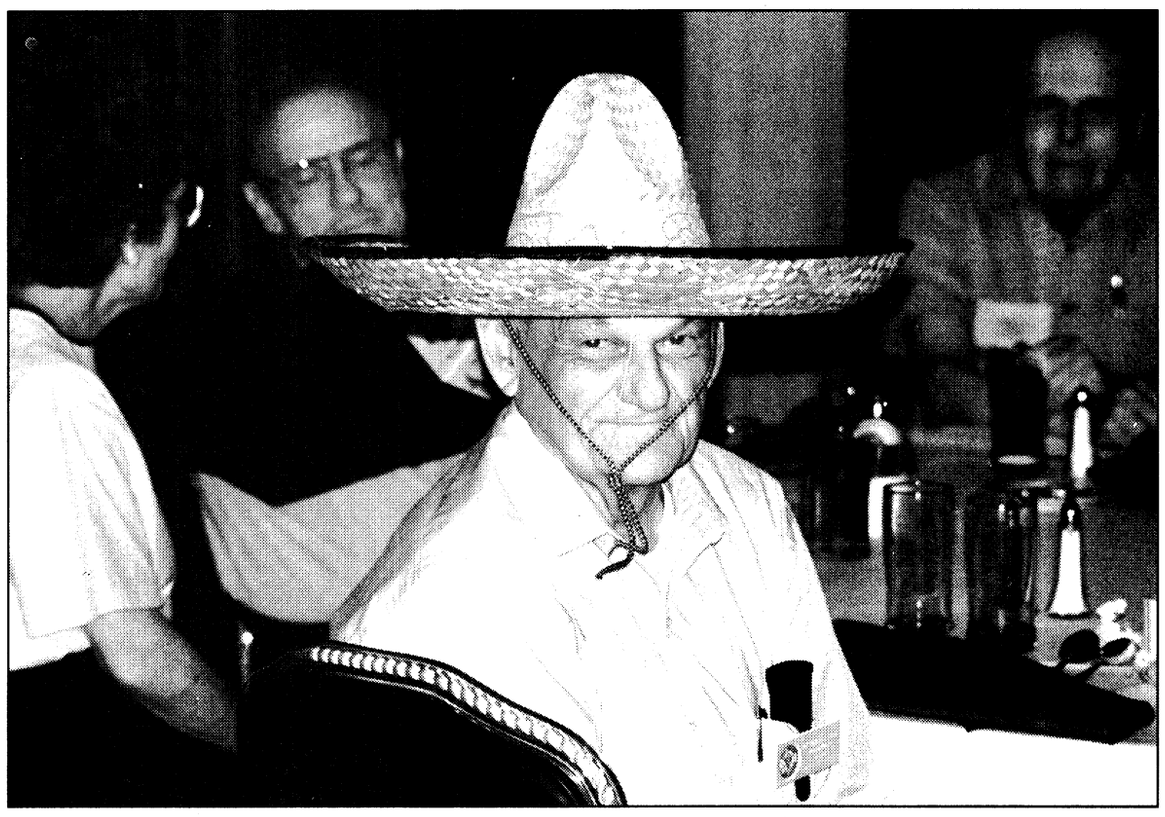
Maj. Gen. John W. Hendrix recognizes Isabel Engledingor, the Retirement Services Office Volunteer of the Year, for contributing more than 200 volunteer hours.

"I always come to support the open house," Dyson said. "I come to meet new friends and see old faces. I am the co-chairman of the Alabama sub-council, so I make it a point to stay on top of things."



Taking time to recognize positive contributions, the council, along with post Commanding General Maj. Gen. John W. Hendrix saluted Isabel Engeldingor as the Retirement Services Office Volunteer of the Year. Engledingor contributed approximately 200 hours of volunteer time as the receptionist at the RSO.

The guest speaker, Retired Lt. Gen. Ellis Parker, co-chairman, chief of staff, Army Retiree Council, discussed the five main concerns of the retired military community.

They are medical care problems, cost of living allowance, dental care, commissaries and the level of retiree support from the communities.

Representing the Women's Army Corps was retired Reserve Lt. Col. Dorothy C. Carson.

"I joined the Army in 1948," Carson said. "I served 4 1/2 years active and the rest of my 30 years I was in the Reserves. (I come) to keep abreast of what is going on in the active Army."

Retired Sgt. T.C. Falls of Adel, Ga., models his new Sombrero, one of the many door prizes given away May 19 at the Barbeque dinner at the Supper Club, Officers' Club during the three-day Military Retirees Open House.

The program concluded with a county health and dental fair in the lobby of Infantry Hall. Retirees got the opportunity to get identification cards, test their strength on fitness machines brought in by the Army Physical Fitness School, and talk with representatives from the Disabled American Veterans Association.

Retired Sgt. 1st Class Walter L. Pierce remembered his time in service as he participated in the open house.

"I've been out of the military for 30 years but 50 years ago today I was in Germany and it was World War II," Pierce said.

After the open house ended, many of the retirees stayed for the Armed Forces Day festivities.

Retired Reserve Sgt. Maj. Harry G. Moody said he enjoys "participating in the act."

"Fort Benning is a special place," Moody said. "We (he and his wife) like coming. The meetings are beneficial, and you know knowledge is power!"

AG Replacement renovates barracks

Spc. Jerome Turner of the Adjutant General Replacement Detachment puts up framework for the construction of a new wall.

Soldiers are giving seven rooms used as permanent party living quarters a completely new look

Soldiers assigned to the Adjutant General Replacement Detachment, 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment, are using self-help to improve their quality of life.

At Building 2756B, Spc. Jerome Turner and some assistants are giving seven rooms used as permanent party living quarters a completely new look.

Using materials purchased from the Directorate of Public Works, the soldiers are renovating the run down, brick-walled barracks rooms by constructing new sheet-rock walls over the brick and adding paint, wallpaper and trim.

Turner is also constructing built-in, walk-in wall lockers, which he said is the most challenging part of the job because they are built completely from scratch and require precise measurements and the fashioning of large wooden doors.

"I don't mind doing this job at all," Turner said. "It's a good feeling to be put in charge and trusted with the responsibility to do the job."

So far two rooms have been completed. Turner said it takes about 2 1/2 weeks to complete each room.

"As I get experience with each room it goes a little faster," he said. "It's challenging because I am the only full-time person on this project. Usually, other soldiers help me daily as they can, but the unit doesn't have enough personnel to spare anyone else full time."

First Lt. Hugh Hardin, 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment adjutant, said self-help projects are good for building soldiers' morale.

"This is something they can be proud of and it gives them a better place to live," Hardin said.

DPS economies validated by GAO

Defense Printing Service

The report, which culminates three years of various GAO probes into DPS operations, concludes that DPS produces two major categories of printing and duplicating cheaper than they can be obtained via the Government Printing Office

WASHINGTON — Defense Printing Service's widely publicized goal of being the "one-stop" best value source for all Department of Defense document processing services is clearly echoed in a General Accounting Office report to Congress released March 15.

The report, which culminates three years of various GAO probes into DPS operations, concludes that DPS produces two major categories of printing and duplicating cheaper than they can be obtained via the Government Printing Office.

Only one category, long run printing, was shown to favor private sector procurement via the GPO. Because DPS has always procured long-run printing, it was validated as the "one stop" source for all Department of Defense document service requirements that uses the most cost effective means to accomplish these requirements.

To analyze the DPS total workload, the GAO reduced a full year's billing activity into a manageable statistical model reflecting DoD's annual printing and duplicating requirements.

These requirements were categorized as either short- (under $500 per order) or long-run printing. Next, the GAO selected "live" DoD jobs that matched those in the sample.

The GAO then processed these survey jobs through DPS and from GPO, and tracked prices. Survey jobs were not identified to the GPO.

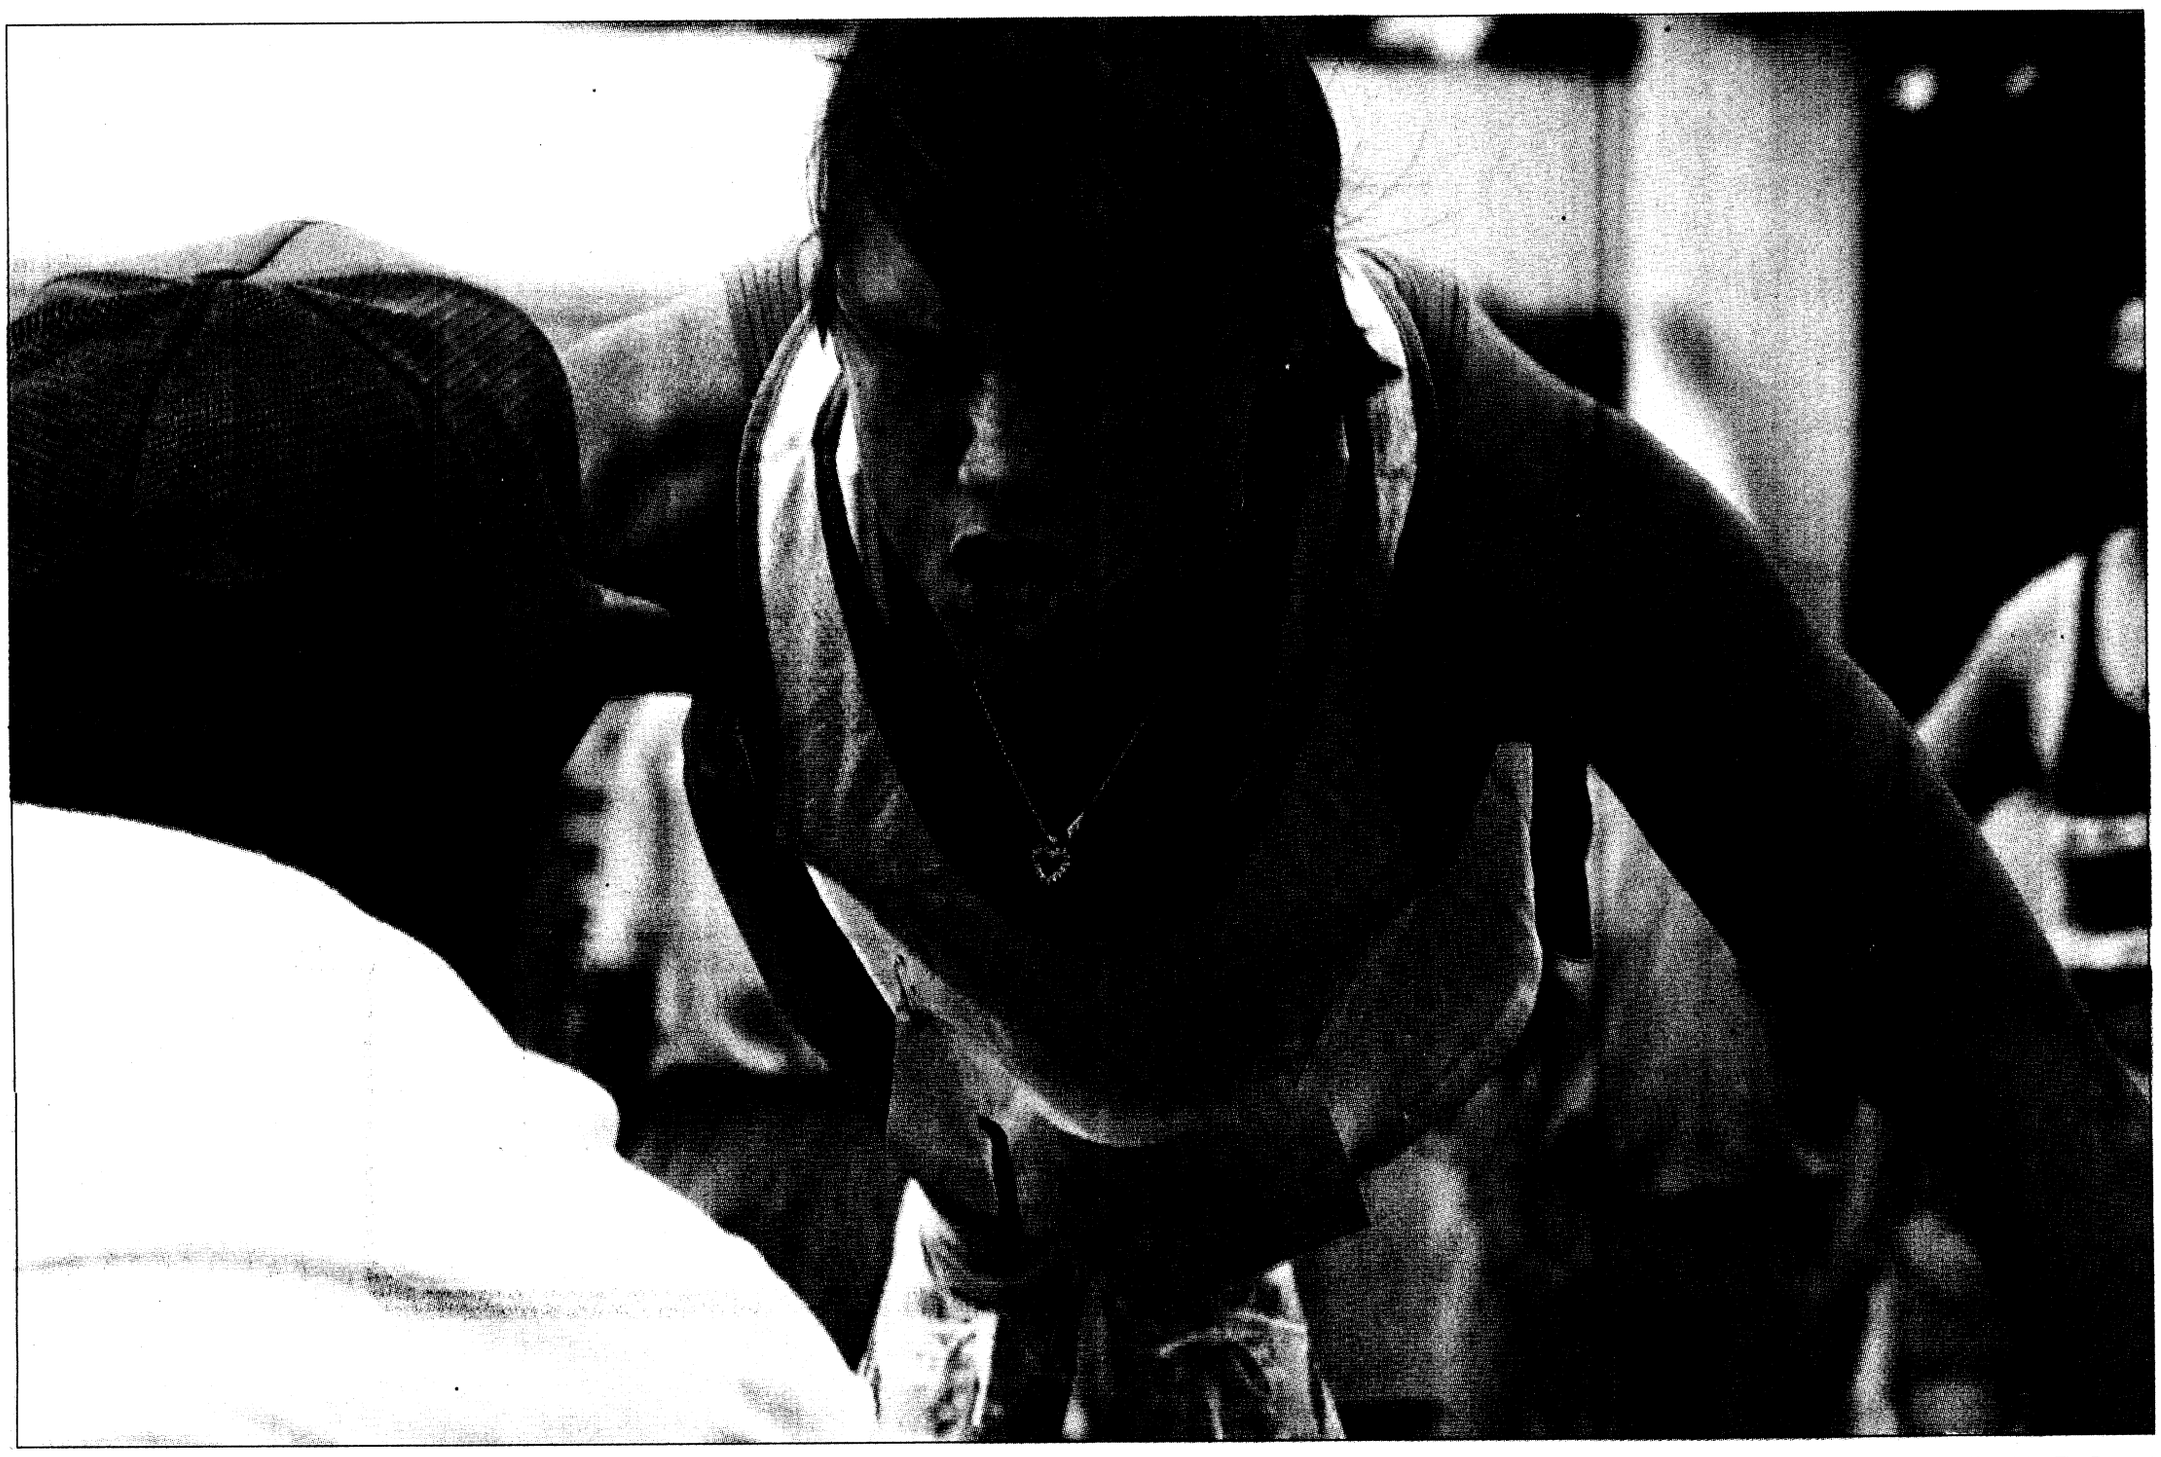
According to the GAO, DPS produces short-run traditional (negatives, plates) printing. Long-run printing was procured from GPO contractors at a savings of 21 percent over DPS in-house. Overall, "all" printing was 10 percent less when procured through GPO.

Defense Printing Service fully supports the GAO's conclusions. In facts, an aggressive effort to downsize and refocus on state-of-the-art digital technology is already under way.

Furthermore, DPS is rapidly "getting out of printing" altogether and using GPO as the preferred DoD printing source.

More than 3,000 pieces of production equipment have been surplused, and 90 facilities have been closed.

Simultaneously, private sector procurement via the GPO continues to rise. DPS increased its annual GPO procurement in fiscal 1994 to $168 million.



The DPS was created April 6, 1992, when fragmented DoD printing facilities were consolidated under the former Navy Publishing and Printing Service.

The consolidation generated considerable Congressional interest and DPS has been subjected to almost continuous scrutiny since.

Copies of the GAO report, "Comparison of DoD and GPO Prices for Printing and Duplicating Work," project B-259522, are available from the GAO's Automated Documents Distribution Center on (202) 512-6000.

Military Appreciation Week ends; 11th Regiment takes commander's trophy

By Terry K. Ray
Special to The Bayonet©

Military Appreciation Week is over. With the culmination of the Burn the General Run Saturday morning, all the sports competitions were completed and the point totals counted for the Commander's Trophy and the Follow Me Cup.

In the Commander's Trophy and Follow Me Cup battle, a points system ranging from 12 points for first place and one point for ninth was used to give points to each competing team. Each major unit on post submitted at least one team for each event in the Commander's Trophy competitions while in the Follow Me Cup competition units could enter as many as they liked but only the top two would count for points. Civilians could also compete.

The 11th Infantry Regiment, rolled up 86 total points to win the Commander's Trophy, walking away from the Infantry Training Brigade, their nearest competitor by 22.5 points and then tallied 137.5 points against some stiff competition from the 29th Infantry Regiment (second place, 111 points) to garner the Follow Me Cup.

"For the soldiers, it's fun," said Commanding General Maj. Gen. John W. Hendrix. "It's just a way of trying to show that you're the best in the spirit of friendly competition. All soldiers like to be the best they can possibly be at their skills and these competitions give them a chance to demonstrate that they are the best."

The race for the Commander's Trophy was started with the kickoff relay race with the team of Kyle Rambo, Brad Dostal, Scott Ellinger, Michael Jackson, Machail Huerter and Scott Spellmeyer taking the top spot for the 11th Inf. Regt., with a time of 41 minutes and one second for the eight-mile race.

The Infantry Training Brigade pinned down the wrestling competition with Louie Duque winning at 114 pounds, Eric Bakey at 180 pounds and Steven Emberton taking the win at 198 pounds.

At the boxing venue, the Infantry Training Brigade once again had its hand raised in victory. In the 164-pound weight class, Milton Bond of ITB downed Matt Smith of 1st Battalion (Airborne), 507th Infantry, 11th Infantry Regiment, on a first-round stoppage by the referee.

David Elmore, also of ITB, won his bout at the 174-pound class on a referee stoppage against Mark Pearce of Company A, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment.

The clincher was decided for ITB in the 190-pound division when William Riser stopped Jaysan Arnote of Company B, 2nd Battalion, 18th Infantry Regiment, 3rd Brigade, 24th Infantry Division (Mechanized), when referee Charles Kirkland stopped the bout at 59 seconds of the first round.

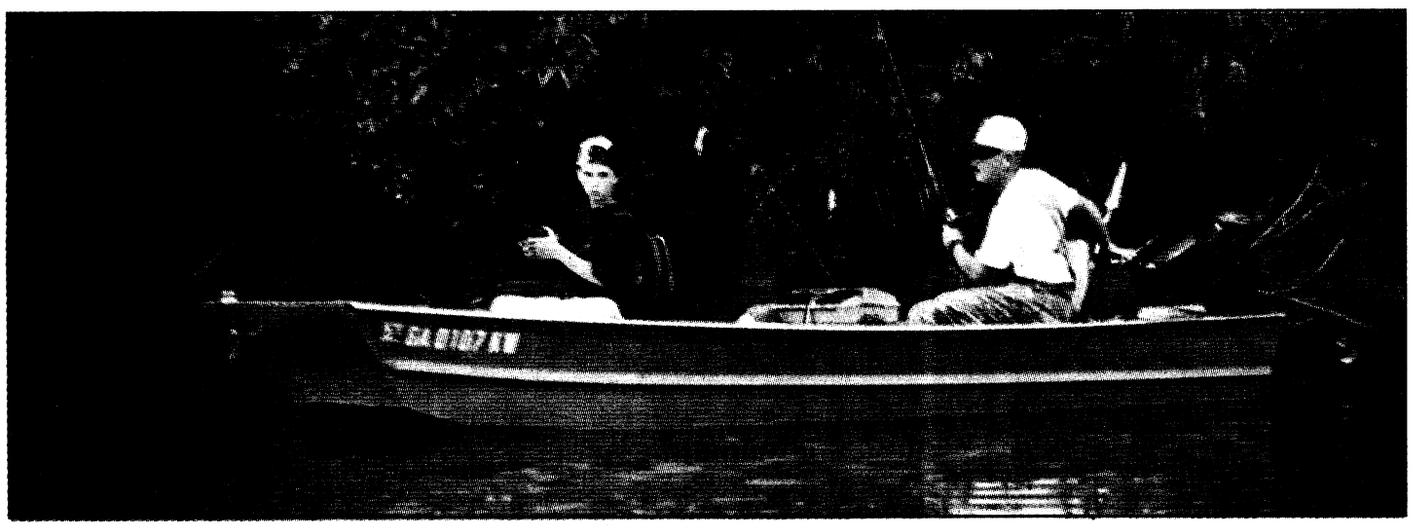
The 29th Infantry Regiment got into the winner's category in the 100-meter dash when Dedrick Evans ran a time of 11.25 for the win. On the women's side, Michele Baker, also of the 29th Inf. Regt., took the top spot with a time of 13.40.

In the one-mile run, Rambo once again stepped up to the winners podium for the 11th Inf. Regt. with a time of 4:43. Carol Anderson of the 36th Engineer Group won the female one-mile with a time of 5:48.

For the fourth straight year, the 29th Inf. Regt. laid claim to the tug-of-war crown, beating all three of its opponents in a combined time of 24 seconds.

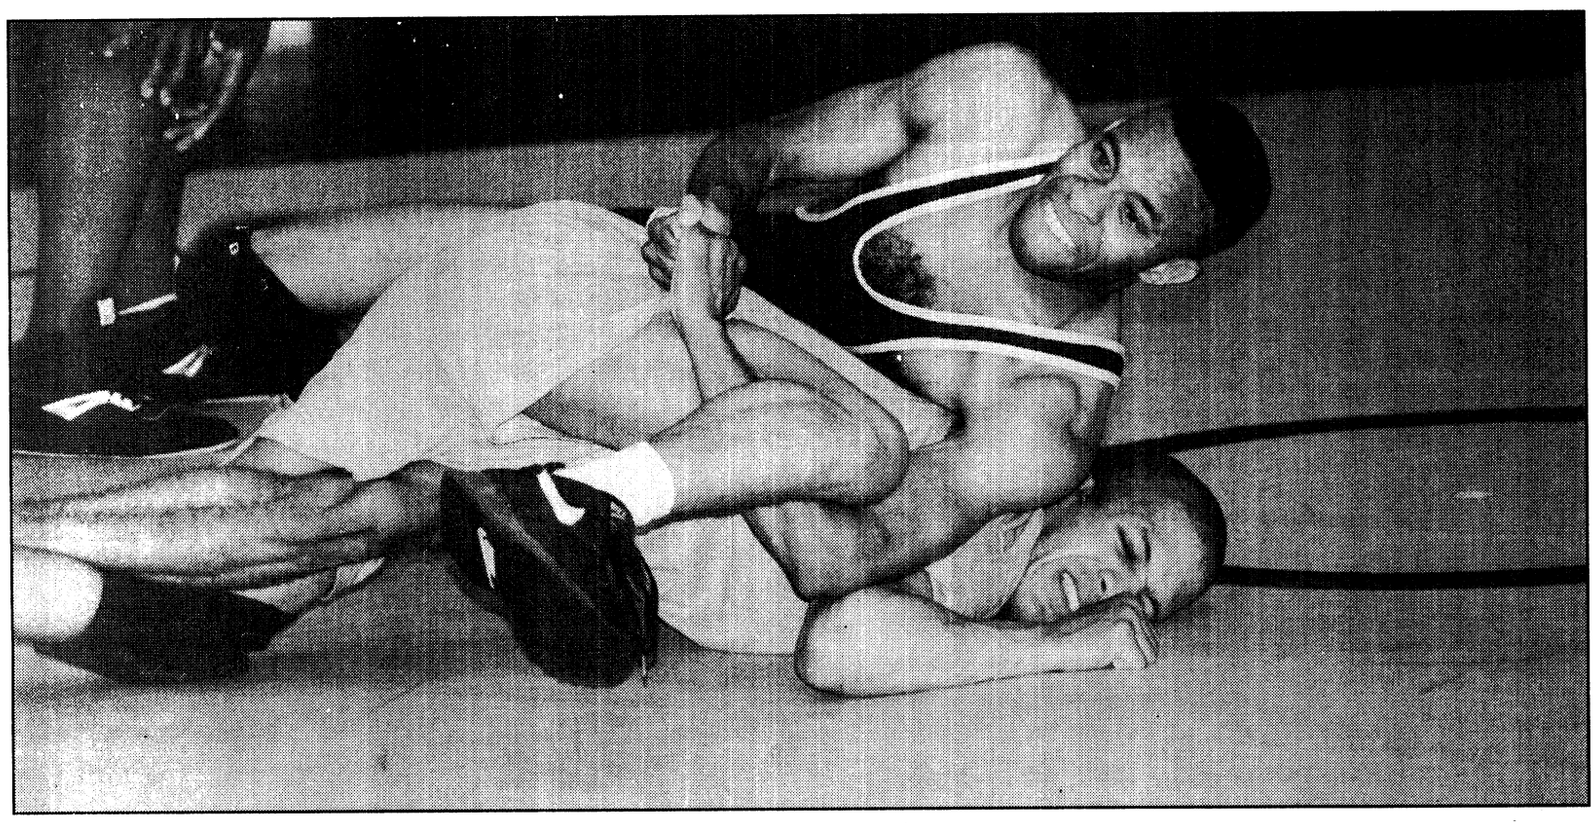
In the pushup competition, with a combined total of 555 pushups, five members from ITB once again pushed to the forefront.

Michael Moyers of Co. E, 29th Inf. Regt., racked up a win in the billiards competition at the Kelley Hill Recreation Center to start the hunt for the Follow Me Cup.



In the triathlon, George Crabb of the 75th Ranger Regiment breezed through the three-stage event in a time of 59:26.

Pedro L. Guerad of the School of the Americas attacked and countered his way to first place in the chess competition.



In the volleyball competition, held at Scooters, the 11th Inf. Regt., slammed its way to the top staying in the hunt for the cup.

In the soccer competition at French Field, the International Student Training Detachment of Co. A, 11th Inf. Regt., downed the Infantry Training Brigade 7-0 for first place and 12 more points.

John Bull of Co. B, 2nd Bn., 58th Inf. Regt., ITB, won the spades tournament at the Kelley Hill Recreation Center.

In the two-day track and field events at Doughboy Stadium, the 11th Inf. Regt. pulled out a close finish with the 29th Inf. Regt. to win the event 63 to 56.

In the softball tournament, the 36th Engineer Group took first and second when the 598th Maintenance Company sunk the 586th Engineer Company (Assault Float Bridge) 13-8 in the finals at Gowdy Field.

The 11th Inf. Regt. team members swam their way to the Follow Me Cup in the swimming competition at Briant Wells Field House with a team total of 259 points.

There were other sporting events that were not involved with either of the trophy races.

The sergeants major downed the colonels of Fort Benning 14-6 in a celebrity softball game at Gowdy Field May 18.

At Newgarden tennis courts at the Officers' Club, Jim O'Keffe won the men's singles title while Alison Cripe took the women's singles crown.

David and Alison Cripe won the mixed doubles and Michael Maston and O'Keffe teamed up to take the men's doubles competition.

The week-long doubles nine-pin bowling tournament drew 98 teams to the posts' bowling centers. Bob Wilson and Calvin Figley rolled their way to a high score of 1,437 for first place and $500. Donald Cobb and Juan Rosales teamed up for a score of 1,412 and $250 for second place. Third place and $100 went to Leo Menahal and Rick Murray.

The 29th Infantry Regiment in conjunction with the Association of the United States Army hosted the open bass tournament at Uchee Creek and had 73 boats take off at first light May 19.

The top five places were: Cooks and Myers, $613.20; Sprinkler and Smith, $335.80; Smith and Holloway, $219; Villman and Mendez, $175.20; and Walker and Thompson, $116.80.

More than 240 golfers turned out for the AUSA golf tournament at the Follow Me Golf Course May 18. Former Commanding General Gen. William J. Livesy was the grand marshal. The AUSA sub-chapter winner was the 11th Infantry Regiment with Ed Woolfolk, Dana Foley, Roy McCage and Willie Black firing a 58 for the win.

In the Burn the General Run, more than 600 runners turned out to kick off Armed Forces Day Saturday at York Field.

More than 400 of the runners burned the commanding general. Rambo was the top male to burn the general with a time of 15:39 while Anderson also singed the general with a time of 19:29. Hendrix finished the race with a time of 22:47.

Fruits add to summer

American Institute for Cancer Research

Those lazy, hazy days of summer are the perfect time to refresh yourself with fresh fruits and cool vegetables because so many delicious varieties are now in season. Not only can summer's bounty of produce add variety to your day, eating plenty of fruit and vegetables also protects your health.

In-season produce is usually in better condition and better tasting, since it is usually available locally grown and does not have to be shipped. Summertime produce starts appearing in May and new fruits and vegetables continue to appear through August.

Feasting on summer produce also fortifies your health with nutrients. In addition to fiber and essential vitamins, researchers are still finding new substances in fruits and vegetables that protect our health and may help lower our risk for cancer and other diseases, according to the American Institute for Cancer Research. So the wider the variety you eat, the more health benefits you'll get.

Since summer is swimsuit season as well, it's nice to know that most fruits and vegetables are low in calories and have little or no fat. Eating lots of the seasonal produce can help keep you trim while enjoying lots of tastes.

Flavor them with nonfat dressings, fruit juices, herbs, mustard, flavored vinegars, or nonfat yogurt. Grill chunks of fruits and vegetables, or toss them into salads and rice dishes. Put fruits on cereal and vegetables on sandwiches.

This easy recipe for berry sauce can be adapted for a different type of berry.

Berry sauce

1 pint fresh berries (strawberries, blueberries, raspberries or blackberries)
2 tablespoons sugar
1/2 teaspoons cornstarch
1 1/2 teaspoons water

Wash the berries, then puree them in a food processor or blender. Pour them into a strainer set over a saucepan. Press the puree through the strainer with the back of a spoon; discard the residue in the strainer. Stir the sugar into the puree until it is dissolved. Stir the cornstarch and the water together in a cup or small dish until the cornstarch is dissolved, then stir it into the puree.

Heat the puree over medium-low heat, stirring frequently until the mixture thickens and boils. Boil one minute, then remove from heat. Let cool to room temperature for immediate use, or cover and refrigerate up to one day until ready to use. Each of the four servings contains 106 calories and 1 gram of fat.

Plan ahead for children's summer

Egleston Children's Hospital

Summer is special for children — especially for school-aged children, who appreciate the break from routines and academic expectations. For parents, the challenge is finding fun, safe, enriching experiences to keep children's minds and bodies active while also allowing them relaxed, spontaneous play time.

For best results in planning a well-balanced summer, begin planning early. The best programs and activities fill up quickly. Susan Bryant, program development specialist for the Egleston Children's Advocacy Center in Atlanta, offers these tips:

• For working parents, making reliable arrangements for day-to-day child care will be the priority. Remember, even children who manage their own care after school aren't always ready for self-care during the summer.

• When seeking full-time summer child care for your school-aged child, evaluate the arrangements as you would for a preschool child. Consider, for example, the caregiver's attention to safety and injury prevention and their level of experience in child care.

• Once you've found several child-care arrangements, figure out which one offers the best summer experience. Ask:

— Will my child be grouped with others his or her own age?

— What special activities or field trips are planned?

— Is there time for physical activity as well as relaxed time for reading, art work or just quiet thinking?

• Whether your children stay with another caregiver or are home with you all summer, try to plan at least one extended activity that removes them from their ordinary surroundings and exposes them to new experiences. What about day camp, overnight camp or even visiting relatives who live in a different environment, such as on a farm or lake?

• Day camps offer enriching experiences in sports, music, computers and many other interests, usually for two to eight weeks. If your children are interested, and you can afford it, help them choose a day camp that suits their hobbies, interests and personality. Think about your children's age, maturity, ability to make friends and experience being away from the family before opting for an extended overnight experience. In addition to questions concerning your children's health and safety needs, ask how children's emotional issues, such as homesickness, are handled.

• Consider any special health needs your children have when choosing a summer camp. For example, children with asthma triggered by allergens may prefer an air-conditioned environment. Special camps for children with cystic fibrosis, cancer and other various illnesses are also available.

• If you work full time, take advantage of weekends and longer daylight hours to have fun together as a family. Turn routine errands into unexpected fun times. Consider relaxing bedtimes and other school-year policies. And above all, take time to play with your children.

ask the judge

By George R. Smawley
Claims Division

Q: What's the status on filing claims concerning power surges on home electrical equipment?

A: Frequent thunderstorms are a fact of life in southern Georgia and often result in violent electrical disturbances that can cause power surges or power outages.

Each year the Claims Office receives numerous claims for compensation for damages to personal property such as computers, televisions and VCRs that result from these electrical disturbances.

Army Regulation 27-20 authorizes payment of claims for damages of an unusual nature that occur incident to military service. Unusual occurrences are defined as "hazards outside the normal risks of day-to-day living and working." Normally, claims for damages due to power surges are denied on the grounds that severe thunderstorms are not unusual occurrences for the Columbus area.

At Fort Benning, claimants are expected to use surge suppressors to protect delicate or sensitive items such as computers, stereos, and similar electrical items. Surge suppressors are an inexpensive way to protect expensive personal property. They work by diminishing power pulses down to a manageable range that is usually safe for delicate electronics.

Because it is virtually impossible to distinguish between internal damage caused by a mechanical defect and surge damage, neither a statement by a repair firm nor the claimant's honest belief that an electrical surge caused a malfunction is sufficient to sustain a claim that damage was the result of a surge of unusual intensity.

In certain limited situations, claims for damage caused by a power surge may be paid when installation engineers report that a particular set of residences were subject to a power surge of unusual intensity, or when a lightning bolt has actually struck the residence or objects outside the residence.

Likewise, a claim may be considered in a situation where there is evidence that both the electronic item and the surge suppressor to which it was attached were damaged, indicating a surge of unusually high intensity.

Claims that foodstuffs were spoiled as the result of a power outage may be considered if there is evidence that the outage lasted for an unusual duration. Claimants are obligated to make every effort to minimize their losses by keeping the refrigerator or freezer door closed as much as possible and looking for alternatives to preserving food in cold storage.

Many Georgia residents do not put suppressors on refrigerators because, in the event of a minor interruption in power, the suppressor will prevent the refrigerator from turning back on.

While food in a filled freezer will usually stay frozen for as long as two days, when in doubt about food, throw it out.

Staff Sgt. Patrick R. Aguillard, Advanced Noncommissioned Officers Course student, monitors the grid coordinates on the terminal that appear on the continuous screens to his right.

Students from the Advanced Noncommissioned Officers Course watch the simulated battle, "Prairie Warrior" on continuous screens at the Dismounted Battlespace Battle Lab on May 19. Participants see only a small sector while operating simulators while the entire grid coordinate is visible on this screen.

High-tech system creates virtual battle

By Lisa M. Hibbert
Bayonet staff writer

Prairie Warrior, the first exercise to successfully combine the Simulation Network and the Brigade and Battalion Battle Simulation System, went off May 16 to 19 at the Dismounted Battlespace Battle Lab on post, according to Pete Bush, DBBL systems manager.

The exercise was a part of the end-of-course battle at the Command and General Staff College at Fort Leavenworth, Kan.

SIMNET systems offers users a virtual reality type setting. Users are actually driving a tank on a terrain and are subject to all the nuances that would normally be encountered in the field. Players are subject to running out of fuel, ammunition and throwing a track on the tank.

BBS operates in a constructive simulation environment. All the maneuvers that occur here are computer simulated — users are placed in a battlefield scenario being role-played by the computer.

Prairie Warrior combined the SIMNET facilities from Fort Benning, Fort Rucker, Ala., Fort Knox, Ky., and Grafenwoehr, Germany, with the BBS facilities from Fort Leavenworth and Grafenwoehr — Grafenwoehr participating on both fronts.

For the exercise, Fort Benning provided one platoon of mechanized heavy tank force to Fort Knox's battalion of fighting vehicles

"Officers from staff colleges in the Republic of Korea, Germany, Netherlands, France and the United Kingdom" participated in the exercise as well as students from the U.S. Army Sergeant Major Academy at Fort Bliss, Texas, according to Spc. Eric B. Reinhardt, editor, The Lamp, Fort Leavenworth's newspaper.

Soldiers participate in SIMNET by maneuvering tanks through a virtual reality type scenario built to simulate whatever piece of equipment they are operating.

"In this exercise, the commander was at Fort Knox unlike during the practice run when the commander was here," Bush said. "This put a different slant on the exercise. The commander from Fort Knox would call in instructions to the acting commander here who was an NCO (noncommissioned officer)."

During the practice week, Company B, 2nd Battalion, 18th Infantry Regiment, and 3rd Platoon, Company A, 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor Regiment, participated in the exercise. When the event actually went off, Advanced Noncommissioned Officer Course students replaced 2nd Bn, 18th Inf. Regt.

For the exercise, Fort Benning provided one platoon of mechanized heavy tank force to Fort Knox's battalion of fighting vehicles. Fort Rucker provided aerial support, Grafenwoehr provided tank and Bradley support and Fort Leavenworth provided a separate platoon of heavy fighting vehicles.

"Just by being able to link all of the systems together was a success," Bush said.

Leaders get combat training via computer

By Lisa M. Hibbert
Bayonet staff writer

Fort Benning hosted its first Brigade and Battalion Battle Simulation Exercise May 8 through 12.

While this combined Fort Benning and Fort Stewart exercise has been conducted here before, this is first time Fort Benning provided the computers. Previously Fort Stewart transported their computers for the exercise.

BBS is a computer-stimulated exercise operating simular to a video game, that helps prepare officers for combat command decisions. Officers act as division commanders and their staff as they role play a combat scenario.

The computers work by generating a printout at the various work stations of what is on the screen. The map in the field should be a reflection of the computer print out.

During a BBS operation, soldiers man the computer room where the scenario is actually being generated. Soldiers designated as the commanders in the computer room have telephones that link them to the soldiers manning a separate training center in the field.

Whenever anything happens, no matter how minute, it gets called into to the soldiers who are manning a training station in the field. The soldiers in the field have a map on which they mark all of the recorded changes. At the end of every BBS training day, a small after action report with the commander of the computer unit and the commander of the field unit to see if both were reporting the same thing at the end of the day. If the lines of communication were clear and everything was reported as it happened, both reports will read the same at the end of the day.

According to John E. Westlake, Dismounted Battlespace Battle Lab, the benefit of BBS is that the computer can generate everything.

"The computer generates a casualty with a fractured leg and first aid measures have to be applied to get the person and their equipment operational again," Westlake said. "The tanks malfunction as they would in the field and won't move until it is either attended to or towed out of the way. (BBS) prepares the command staff for the National Training Center at Fort Irwin, Ca."

Lt. Col. William M. Bransford, 3rd Brigade executive officer, said the operation was very realistic.

"You know that you have two forces moving towards the same point and that there is going to be a conflict," Bransford said. "You have to accomplish your mission with minimal costs (casualties, equipment, etc.). The computer lets you know if you succeeded. It even tells you whether or not you are using your weapons efficiently."

"BBS lets us put together an entire operation exercise under the stress of real battle, plus it gives you feedback about the decision-making process," Bransford said.

Battle Lab, Fort Bragg soldiers test laser technology

By Marc G. Turchin
Bayonet staff writer

Fort Benning's contribution to Force XXI, the future Army, continued when one of its directorates conducted an exercise testing new engagement equipment last week.

The Dismounted Battlespace Battle Lab in conjunction with 2nd Platoon, 2nd Battalion, 325th Airborne Infantry Regiment, Fort Bragg, NC, tested two new laser-based, combat identification systems.

"We are trying to prove or disprove the capabilities of a laser-based combat I.D. system," said Capt. Edward D. Jennings, project officer for the Dismounted Battlespace Battle Lab.

The two systems being tested are the Parallel Interrogation Prior to Engagement and the Simulation Laser system.

Both systems, when being used, are mounted on the top carrying handle of the M-16.

The soldier points the weapon in the direction of the target and the laser reads the target's equipment and sends back a signal to the soldier.

A small receiving unit is attached to the soldier's load-carrying equipment and it sounds off with audible tones.

The new systems, according to Jennings, are designed to help prevent fratricide for the dismounted soldiers.

"If this stuff gets fielded, we'll have an advantage over any kind of enemy we face at night."

— 2nd Lt. John P. Repisarda
Platoon leader

During the 12 days of the exercise, both systems were tested in different scenarios ranging from urban terrain to open fields and deep vegetation.

"We've had various mission scenarios and various terrains; so that we can get some feedback on what types of ranges the systems will work at (and) what types of environments and foilages (they) may have impact on, " Jennings said.

Marc G. Turchin

During an exercise at McKenna Military Operation on Urbanized Terrain training site, Spc. John R. Cloud, 2nd Battalion, 325th Airborne Infantry Regiment, Fort Bragg, NC, gets identification on a target while using a prototype laser I.D. system.

"This is a concept evaluation program test," Jennings said,which means prototype devices are taken to the field by a unit and have test soldiers give feedback about what is good and bad about the device.

"I think they (Battle lab) are trying to get it out to us and identify any major problems before they drive on to the complete product," said 2nd Lt. John P. Rapisarda, platoon leader for 2nd plt., 2nd Bn., 325th AIR.

At McKenna Military Operation on Urbanized Terrain training site, 2nd platoon was split up into different teams and put to the test of spotting and identifying people during day and night operations.

"It's good if it's all working," said Pvt. 2 John A. Psalmonds, a squad automatic weapon gunner for 2nd Bn., 325th AIR. "You can lase 'em, find out if they're friendly or foe; and, if they (are) foe, you can light 'em up."

"I feel that as soon as all the bugs are worked out, this is going to be a great tool for anybody who (carries) a weapon," said Pvt. 2 Kyle D. Molencupp, who is also a SAW gunner.

He said these systems will really help when they are on a mission and there may or may not be other squads or platoons in the area.

"If we can identify them, it'll work out better to kill the enemy than our own guys," Molencupp said.

"If this stuff gets fielded, we'll have an advantage over any kind of enemy we face at night," Rapisarda said.

Man, woman take top drill honors

TRADOC News Services

FORT MONROE, Va. — Two noncommissioned officers who wanted to be drill sergeants to improve themselves and carry on a tradition of professionalism are now the top active Army and Reserve component drill sergeants of the year for 1995.

Sgt. 1st Class Anita Jordan, of Fort Jackson, S.C., and Staff Sgt. Bruce Clark, of the Army Reserve's 100th Division (Training) at Fort Knox, Ky., were named the best from a field of 24 NCOs representing active and Reserve training units around the country at Fort Monroe May 12.

Jordan is the second woman to have won the drill sergeant honors. Two years ago, Staff Sgt. Jill J. Henderson, then of Fort McClellan, Ala., became the first.

That is outweighed by the fact that she is a soldier first in Jordan's opinion.

"There is no separation of who we are — race, sex, religion or national origin," she said. "I believe there's not a difference between male vs. female from a professional viewpoint."

When she graduated from high school in Charlotte, N.C., Jordan describes herself as being spoiled, with no goals or motivation. She had a vague feeling that she "wanted to do something and be somebody," however. In that search, she joined the Army in September 1981.

After basic and advanced individual training, her attitude had not changed. Then she was made a squad leader.

"I enjoyed leading and motivating others to do the right thing," Jordan said. "It seemed to come so naturally and I began to feel at home."

As an administrative specialist, she was assigned to Fort Huachuca, Ariz., and then to the headquarters company of the Berlin Brigade. There she began taking college courses at night, and before she left Germany she had earned an associate degree. She now holds a bachelor's degree in computer information systems from Park College, Parkville, Mo.

A tour of duty as a recruiter in Orlando, Fla., strengthened her ties to the Army.

"Selling the Army to the civilian community made me realize that I represented the U.S. Army and that I was a proud member of it. I would not trade places with anyone in the civilian community ... because I knew how wonderful the Army was and I had something they could never have," Jordan said.

When she attended her advanced NCO course in 1993, she became impressed with the former drill sergeants among her classmates.

"There was one in particular. She was really sharp," Jordan said. "I knew the Drill Sergeants School could probably train me to be that way, too."

Even though she made the Commandant's List at Drill Sergeant School, Jordan said she felt overwhelmed when she received her first trainees at Fort Jackson.

"There were 62 soldiers looking to me for guidance. I felt there was not enough time in the day to perform everything that had to be accomplished," she said. "There were days that I was so exhausted and began to wonder where I would ever get the energy.

"But I quickly realized my energy came from the privates themselves. They looked to me to motivate them and I knew then that I could not let them down."

Jordan insists that drill sergeants adhere to standards just as trainees are required to. When she notices any others swearing or using abusive methods with trainees, she corrects them instantly.

"By taking the hard right I feel you will gain more respect from subordinates, peers and superiors than taking the easy wrong," she said.

The results she achieved with her trainees led to her selection as an instructor at the Fort Jackson Drill Sergeants School.

"There's only a slight difference in training drill sergeants instead of privates," Jordan said. "But you have to be a lot more sharp at the school because you're training other NCOs."

Clark also trains drill sergeants at the 100th Division Drill Sergeants Academy at Fort Knox.

"I don't take anything for granted. Everything's got to be thought out in advance. That's the difference in training drill sergeants; more professionalism among the students," he said.

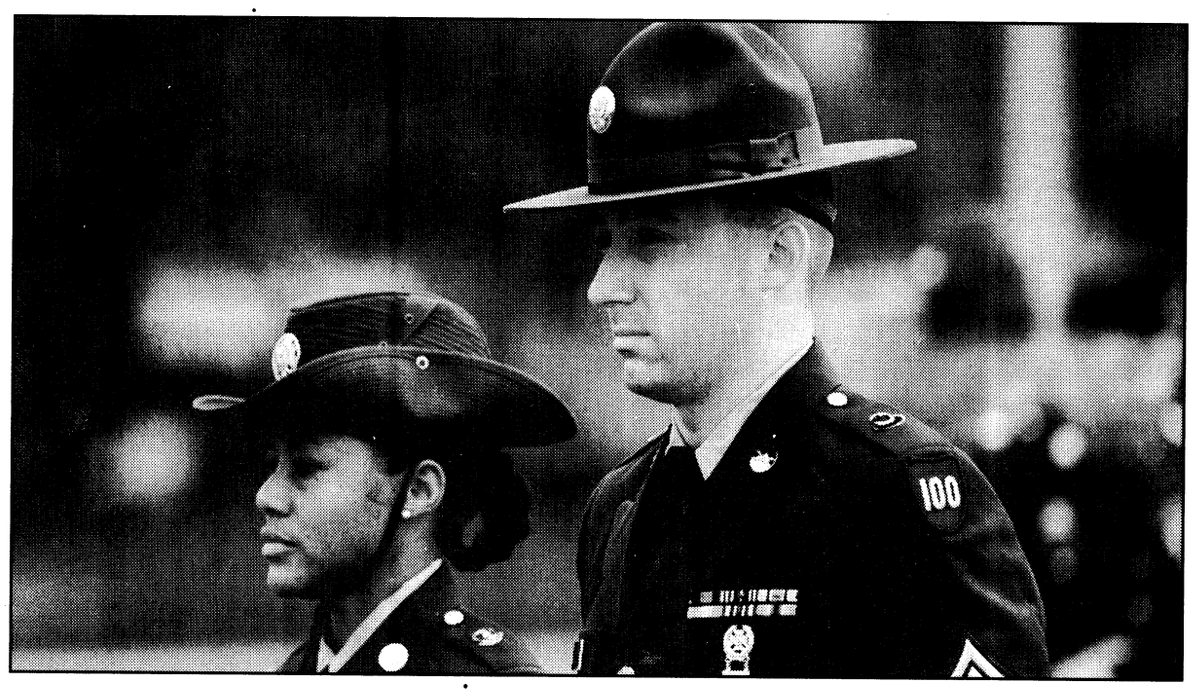
Clark joined the Army Reserve on the split option in February 1986 while a high school junior. The professionalism and competence of his advanced individual training drill sergeant inspired him to go "on the trail." At the Fort Knox Drill Sergeant School in 1989, he found further motivation.

"My platoon sergeant was what you call, I guess, a 'soldiers' soldier. His ways were nothing but military and professionalism. Ever since then, I've tried to live up to standards he set ," Clark said.

In his civilian life, Clark is in real estate with his family. He earned a bachelor of arts in political science in 1992 from Morehead (Ky.) State University. Clark has trained both active and Reserve recruits. He is impressed with the quality of people joining the Army today. "The new soldiers the Army is receiving are the most highly educated and motivated soldiers in our nation's history," he said.

The Army's "insist and assist" philosophy of training is just right for these soldiers, he feels.

"That, to me, is really the only way to train. I've always insisted that trainees achieve the standard and I've always assisted them to realize it," Clark said.



Clark said he plans to remain a drill sergeant for a couple more years. After that he wants to be assigned to a line unit where he can perform in his primary military occupational specialty.

Jordan has made no definite plans after her drill sergeant tour is up in 1 1/2 years. However, her long-term goal is to be promoted to sergeant major.

Whatever their Army careers bring them, both NCOs said that being a drill sergeant has prepared them for it.

"Being a drill sergeant helps you look at a lot of things, not just one area. It helps you see the big picture," Jordan said. "That can only help you."

"The attributes of being a drill sergeant, the ability to plan prepares you for more than being a drill sergeant," Clark said.

Sgt. 1st Class Anita Jordan of Fort Jackson, S.C., and Staff Sgt. Bruce Clark, 100th Division (Training) of Fort Knox Ky., are the active duty and reserve component drill sergeants of the year for 1995.

Post to honor Doughboy Award winner

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Retired Lt. Gen. Harry W.O. Kinnard, airborne pioneer and former commanding general of the 11th Air Assault Division and the 1st Cavalry Division (Airmobile), will be this year's recipient of the Doughboy Award June 14.

The Doughboy Award, which is received annually by a person who has made a significant contribution to the infantry force, will be presented to Kinnard during the annual Infantry Ball at the Officers' Club.

Kinnard, born in Dallas, Texas, in 1915, was commissioned in the infantry upon graduation from the U.S. Military Academy in 1939. He served with distinction during World War II with the 101st Airborne Division.

He parachuted into Normandy on D-Day June 5 to 6, 1944, and took command of the 1st Battalion, 501st Parachute Infantry Regiment, six days later. He served as the division's operations officer during the Battle of the Bulge and performed in that capacity until the end of WWII.

He held a succession of command and staff assignments during the 1950s. In 1963, Kinnard was selected to command the 11th Air Assault Division at Fort Benning to test the evolving air mobile concept involving the tactical use of helicopters.

With the success of these tests and increasing U.S. involvement in Vietnam, the 11th Air Assault Division was redesignated as the 1st Cavalry Division (Airmobile) in July 1965. Within two months, the division deployed to South Vietnam.

Within another month, the division had decisively engaged the enemy in a blocking movement in the Ia Drang valley, the first major battle between the U.S. and North Vietnamese forces. This battle validated the airmobile concept.

Kinnard commanded the Army Combat Development Command upon return to the United States and retired in 1969.

Secretary leaves legacy

By Robert Thompson
USAIC Chaplain Office

The place was more crowded than I'd ever seen it. I didn't know where I would find a place to park. Cars were everywhere. The hearse and the minister's car were parked in front of the church building, blocking one of the four lanes. I saw a man in a dark suit motioning to cars ahead of me. "Are you driving to the cemetery afterward?" he asked when my turn came. "Then pull in right behind that car," he instructed, pointing to the parking lot across the street.

Never had I seen the church building this full. There must have been 400 people inside. My family and I stood at the back of the sanctuary for a few minutes, wondering if we would have to stand for the funeral. We finally found seats in front.

After the funeral, which lasted an hour, we returned to our cars and waited our turn to join the procession. A man told me later that he and his wife counted 130 cars in the procession.

Never had I seen so many people at a graveside service. So many persons huddled around the casket and family that those of us standing on the fringe could see and hear little. After the last prayer, the minister greeted the family, who then walked out from under the tent to greet their crowd of friends. For 45 minutes they shook hands, embraced, wiped tears and smiled in hope.

This was an afternoon of superlatives. The sheer numbers staggered me. The turnout for this event was the greatest that I have personally witnessed in the 100 or so funerals I have attended.

Who was this person who drew these throngs? Who was it who attracted the respect of dozens and dozens of people? A general? A soldier killed in action? A policeman shot on duty? An entertainer? An athlete? A beloved pastor?

A school secretary. A woman with a husband, two children and a high school diploma. Not a principal. Not a teacher. The secretary.

So, why the crowd? Because she cared; she helped; she loved.

She was known for her caring ways with people. She was consistently sincere, accepting and personable, flashing a gentle and bright smile. People felt comfortable in her presence and knew they could rely on her to do what she said she would do. Even during her months of surgery, chemotherapy and more surgery and treatments, she did not complain; returning to the school as soon as she was able.

Relationships: that's what makes life worth living. Nothing else lasts like loving. No other pursuit perseveres. What good is it to succeed in career, money-making and hobbies, if we neglect caring for others?

reflections

The overwhelming response to her death reassures me of what makes the world go 'round. Technology is impressive; it sure makes life easier. Education allows us to work and understand things our ignorance would shut out. Power and rank gives us influence over others. None of these, though, are ever enough to keep life meaningful.

This lady simply and sincerely cared for others. Neither her life nor her death was in vain. Neither her life nor her death escaped those of us who received her warmth. "Neither death nor life . . . nor anything in all creation can separate us from the love of God in Christ Jesus our Lord" (Romans 8: 38, 39). See you later, our beloved.

Return to faith affects thoughts, actions

By Timothy H. Atkinson
324th FSB, 3rd Bde., 24th Inf. Div.

I have a burning desire in me to see people return to a genuine faith in God that would affect our thoughts and actions.

After the Oklahoma City bombing, I've increasingly seen the need for America to look to God for spiritual awakening. When someone made the statement, "America is in a post-Christian era," I heard our Installation Chaplain (Col.) Herbert Kitchens say something that inspired me. He said,"That's nothing a great revival would not change."

I know many are dedicated to God. They are strong in their faith. However, I think there are a large number of people in our country, who have not let the message of God's love and grace touch their lives.

Moreover, even more have a "lukewarm" commitment to God. They do not involve themselves in a congregation of believers. Many have lost trust in "formal" religion. America has historically been a strong nation because of her spiritual heritage. Two great awakenings in America helped to shape her and keep her great. Let's pray for another one.

If you have stopped attending worship, I encourage you to find your way back. To those who worship regularly, I invite you to become more active in your spiritual life. Combine your faith with countless others who have faith that God is working in our nation.

Don't get caught in the ditch (on the one side of the road) that says, 'I believe in God. But, it's a private thing. These people never integrate their faith in God with a community of faith, or with society. The ditch (on the other side) contains religion for show. These people never internalize what they say they believe nor do they live their lives beyond the surface.

Jesus said, "A branch cannot bear fruit, unless it abides in me." He also said "You will know a tree by its fruit." God is calling you to receive his love and to love others. I know your chaplain could use your talents.

reflections

Why not have a talk with your minister about God and how you can work for Him?

If you do, then my prayers for revival will have started to be answered in your life. God greatly wants to have mercy on us and revive us as a people. Without his help, we are lost as individuals, as families, as communities of faith, and as a nation.

"God, call us to yourself and help us to draw near to you. Amen."

Memorial Day dates back to Decoration Day

By Harry C. Huey
Infantry Training Brigade

The observance of Memorial Day is rooted in the aftermath of the Civil War. In Waterloo, N. Y., flowers were placed on the graves of those killed in the war. This act became a custom that caught on outside of Waterloo.

In 1868, Gen. John A. Logan declared May 30 as a day of remembrance of the Civil War dead. Logan was the president of the Grand Army of the Republic, a sort of alumni club for those who had served in that army in the war. He proclaimed that May 30 would be a day to place flowers on "the graves of comrades who died in defense of their country..." The day was called Decoration Day.

After World War I, the remembrance of the day was expanded to include America's dead from all its wars. In 1971, the observance day of May 20 was changed to the last Monday in May. This was done for the benefit of federal employees.

Customary practices in observing Memorial Day are still based on remembering our dead servicemen and women by placing flowers on their graves. Other practices that have developed are military and civic parades and memorial services and ceremonies on land and at sea. The most renowned of the ceremonies is conducted at the Tomb of the Unknown Soldier in Arlington National Cemetery in Virginia.

Week of appreciation ends; awards given for competition

By Robin A. Shawlinski
Bayonet assistant editor

Military Appreciation Week climaxed with the Armed Forces Day Picnic and Open House Saturday on York Field.

The day began with the "Burn the General" run when 600 runners challenged Commanding General Maj. Gen. John W. Hendrix to a three-mile run.

At 11 a.m., awards were presented to the top winners from the sports activities sponsored throughout the week.

Throughout the day, picnic-goers had an opportunity to see the many activities occurring on York Field. Some of the entertainment included by the Buffalo Soldiers, Military Police dogs and the Miss Georgia Superstars.

Adults and children alike received a chance to view the different types of military equipment ranging from an M-60 machine gun to a Bradley Fighting Vehicle. Children were also treated to the thrill of the kiddie tower and the Moonwalk.

Leading up to the day's events was a week of Military Appreciation Week activities.

Throughout the week, the major units on post competed in events such as soccer, basketball, wrestling and softball in the race for the commander's trophy and the Follow Me Cup.

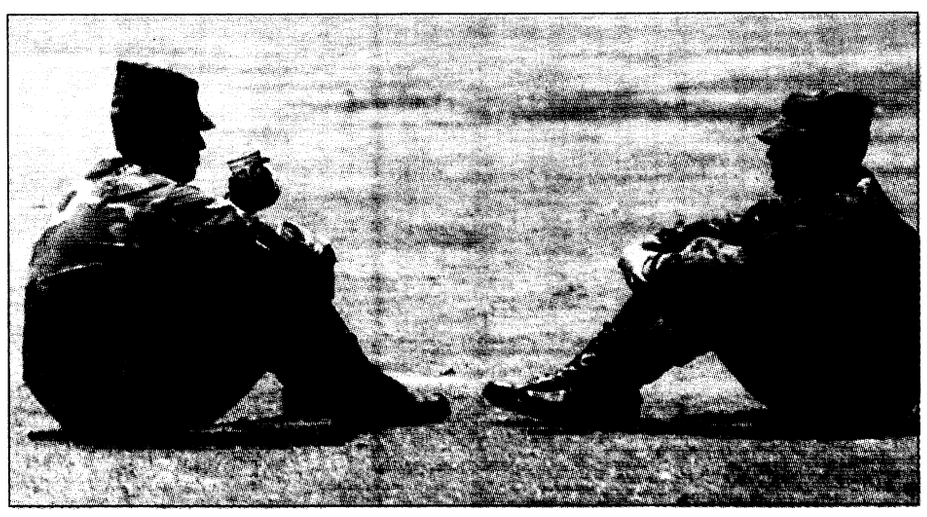
The 11th Infantry Regiment was presented with the trophy Saturday.

The Columbus Redstixx also hosted military night at Golden Park May 16, and a job fair was held at the Main NCO Club May 19.

The youth in the community were also involved in the Military Appreciation Week activities.

During April and May, more than 250 youths from the tri-city sixth-, seventh- and eighth-graders wrote essays for the Paul Timm Memorial Military Essay Contest.

The first-place winner was B.J. Plemons from Phenix City Middle School. The second-place winner was Lashanda Williams from Baker Middle School and the third-place winner was Kimberly Kump from Fort Middle School.



The crowning event of the week was the naming of Ms. AUSA in the large and small sub-chapter categories.

The winners were Christa Yates from the Infantry Training Brigade in the large chapter category and Judith Ginder from the School of the Americas in the small chapter category.

Hospital adds deck, picnic area

By Jerrie Macintire
Special to The Bayonet©

Martin Army Community Hospital officially opened a new dining facility outdoor deck May 18, although hospital personnel and visitors have been using it for weeks.

The 3,000-square foot multi-tiered deck is a joint effort of the 36th Engineer Group and soldiers at the hospital, said Col. Michael Kussman, hospital commander.

"This is a first-class deck that will last a long time,"Kussman said. "We really appreciate what was done for the whole hospital to enjoy."

The idea for a pleasant outdoor picnic area for hospital employees and visitors began about a year ago with Maj. Brenda Forman, former chief of Nutritional Care. Maj. Janet Tingle, current chief, carried the idea forward.

The 36th Engineer Group agreed to build the deck if the hospital purchased the materials; engineers completed the basic foundation and flooring before deployment to Haiti.

Soldiers in the optical lab, under the direction of retired Sgt. 1st Class James Jerman, completed the project.

"We give credit to his prowess as a carpenter," said Kussman, noting that Jerman and five fellow soldiers added steps, ramps, railings, seats, and a pergola, or overhead sun shade, in late March.

They also sealed the structure to preserve the wood.

As a finishing touch, 1st Lt. Michael Sassano ordered and installed about 20 picnic tables to go with the built-in seating around the deck.

"This is a good use of the area," said 1st Lt. Chris Christon of the hospital's Public Information Office. "It was just a small break area before. More people use it and enjoy it now."

CDCs get recognition

Child Development Services

The Main Post Child Development Center, directed by Lavoie Bradley, and the McGraw Child Development Center, directed by Meta Bush, were awarded the National Association Education of Young Children Accreditation.

The accreditation is a process that centers' personnel and parents join with representatives of the National Academy of Early Childhood Programs to decide whether the program meets national recognized criterions for high quality child-care standards.

The academy defines a high quality in early childhood programs as one that meets the needs of and promotes the physical, social, emotional and cognitive development of the children, adults, parents, staff and administrators who are involved in the program.

Parents who are looking for child care and education provided for their children can visit one of the four Army Child Development Centers on post.

Other accredited programs are Sante Fe Child Development Center, Patch Preschool and Tot Town Child Development Center.

ACAP, partner provides heavy equipment training

By Mary Allen
Army Career and Alumni Program

The Army Career and Alumni Program office sponsors a skill development program that provides training opportunities for soldiers, civilians and family members who are transitioning from the Army.

A new partner in the program, Transportation Technologies South Inc., offers training for persons pursuing a career in heavy equipment operations, commercial drivers licenses or both.

The Trans-Tech South training program was conceived to provide all aspects of heavy equipment operator and class A driver training.

The training center is located on Route 1, Box 282C, Opelika, Ala. The training center is 14 miles west of Phenix City on Highway 80.

The company will operate both a full-time and part-time program of instruction for soldiers. The course includes 200 hours of detailed instruction for students in the operation, maintenance and safety of heavy equipment and another 200 hours of instruction on commercial drivers training.

"Although our program may not be for everyone, almost anyone with a reasonable degree of motor skills and a willing mind can learn to operate heavy equipment or drive a truck," Joe Stanley, owner of Trans-Tech South, said. "It should be remembered that there is a great demand in the job market for these professionals; just look at the number of job opportunities in the Sunday newspaper."

Financial help may be available for eligible soldiers. Generally, soldiers who are transitioning as a result of the downsizing of the Army will qualify for the grants.

The only way to be sure a soldier is eligible for a grant is to register at ACAP for a referral to the Department of Labor for final approval.

For those persons who are not eligible for a grant, Trans-Tech South has alternative financing plans to discuss with soldiers.

To learn more about the Trans-Tech South heavy equipment training programs, call Stanley at (334) 298-9194 or call the ACAP office at 545-4892 or 545-7009.

Commissary improves its customer service

Fort Benning Commissary

The Fort Benning Commissary has established a Customer Service Section. Commissary Officer Ben Wainwright said that he and his staff are dedicated to providing customer service of the highest quality.

The Customer Service personnel will have various tools and forms available to them to assist the customer including:

• "Not in Stock" — A listing of items currently not in stock and when they will be available.

• "Department Specials" — The Customer Service personnel will be provided information on a daily basis of the specials in the Produce and Meat Markets. Grocery Department specials are on display in the Main Lobby of the Commissary.

The Customer Service desk will also have various forms available to assist the customer.

• DeCA Form 40-54 — Patron Communication — to be used for complaints, suggestions and kudos.

• DeCA Form 40-1 — Special Order Form — Customers who need an item for a special occasion, can ask the Customer Service personnel to help them fill out this form.

The Customer service desk will also handle all returns for credits, swap-outs of items or items requiring a complaint form.

"We hope this added service will enhance your shopping at your Commissary," Wainwright said.

Parents get involved at McGraw CDC

By Bettie S. Harris
Parent Advisory McGraw CDC

During the "Month of the Military Child," the parents at McGraw Child Development Center celebrated with the staff and children.

Parents participated by visiting the center and helping the children to make homemade instruments and decorative T-shirts.

The last day of the "Week of the Young Child," April 28, the center had a big parade. The children were formed into groups and marched around the center. The children wore the T-shirts and marched with the homemade instruments.

After the parade, the parents had a "brown bag" lunch and picnic outside with the children.

This event was for the part-day preschool, pretoddlers, toddlers, full-day preschool classes, staff and parents.

ALOHA

Deputy CG heads to Hawaii

By Marc G. Turchin
Bayonet staff writer

The assistant commandant of the Infantry School said "Aloha" to Fort Benning during a farewell ceremony Tuesday on York Field.

Brig. Gen. John J. Maher III, who was also the post's deputy commanding general, will be leaving Saturday to take command of the 25th Infantry Division (Light) at Schofield Barracks, Hawaii. Maher will also receive his second star and become a major general.

In attendance for the ceremony was Maj. Gen. John W. Hendrix, post commanding general, and friends and family of the Maher family.

The dark, overcast clouds that threatened rain came through on their threat and poured down, soaking the participants. Hendrix spoke of the weather in his opening remarks.

"John, it just wouldn't be fitting if it hadn't happened this way," Hendrix said. "It's a real ranger ceremony."

Hendrix went on to describe Maher as the best of the best.

"Infantry leaders don't come any better than John Maher," he said. "John Maher is the epitome of infantry leadership."

Hendrix said as far as he is concerned, Maher is leaving too soon.

"I could not have had a finer copilot in this operation," he said while looking out over the soldiers from all the units standing in formation. "I just wish it could last longer," he said.

Maher began his speech by welcoming his family, including his mother and father, and his buddy from ranger school, Bob Johnson.

He told the crowd how his wife, Cynthia, corrected him about the number of times they have moved.

He thought this would be the seventh move in eight summers. Actually, it will be the eighth move in nine summers.

He also spoke of the pleasure he found watching the noncommissioned officers train soldiers on a daily basis.

"(They're) out there instilling in the hearts, minds and souls — tattooing some minds if you will, with the spirit of the infantry — something these soldiers will never forget, no matter what their rank.

"No matter (if) they become a civilian in short order or not, they will always remember what this great institution has imbued upon them. It has been my honor to be a part of that," Maher said.

At the Memorial Day ceremony, the commanding general and the post chaplain laid a wreath on the grave of an unknown soldier in the Main Post Cemetery.

Memorial Day

Remembering those who went before

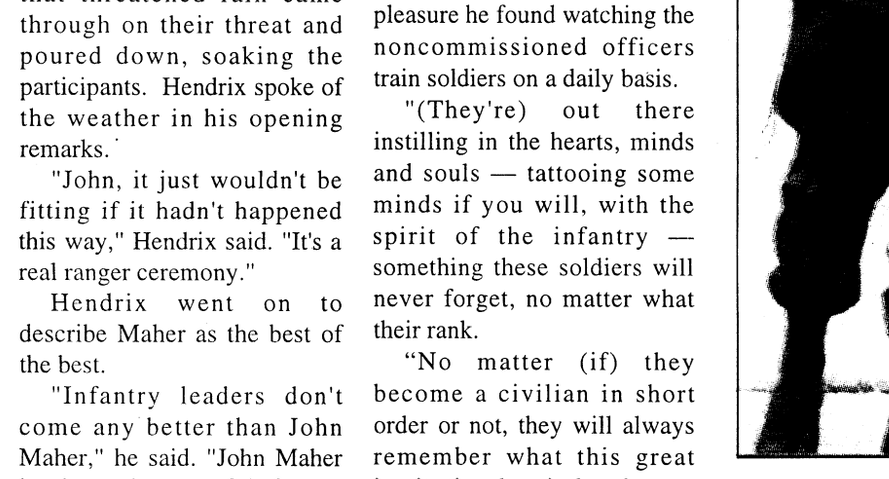
By Lisa M. Hibbert
Bayonet staff writer

Taking time to remember those who have gone before was the theme during the Memorial Day ceremony at the Post Cemetery.

Chaplain (Col.) Herbert E. Kitchens prayed for the lost lives of the soldiers who had given their lives for freedom.

In his remarks, Fort Benning Commanding General Maj. Gen. John W. Hendrix said, "In cemeteries across the U.S. and in many foreign lands, row upon row of white crosses pay silent tribute to the ultimate sacrifice (made) on a thousand battlefields, large and small. Some well remembered, others long since forgotten, from wars both declared and undeclared.

"The crosses stand as memorials for those who died in combat or in combat training," Hendrix said.



"They stand for those who died desperately trying to free other Americans held hostage in a hostile land.

"They stand for those who died on peacekeeping and humanitarian missions.

"They even stand for a military astronaut who was tragically killed while trying to reach the stars on the ill-fated Challenger mission."

In an act of tribute, Hendrix and Kitchens, together laid a wreath on the grave of the unknown soldier.

"There is no finer tribute to war dead than to have people come and pay respect and honor," Hendrix said.

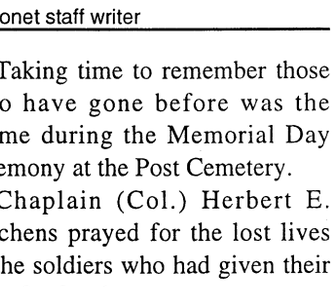
Marc G. Turchin

Brig. Gen. John J. Maher III and friends, Col. Paul T. Mikolashek and Col. Walter Wojdakowski Jr. give the thumbs up in preparation for Maher's last jump on Fort Benning.

Post bids farewell to infantry leader

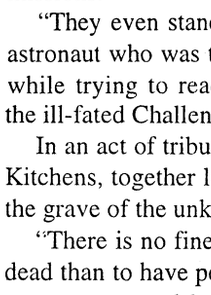
By Marc G. Turchin
Bayonet staff writer

He stands well over six feet tall and has almost perfect posture. His shoulders seem as wide as a mountain range. His frame alone would scare even Superman — until he heard him talk.



His vocal manner is cool, calm and collected. With just a hint of the South in his speech, the words flow to the tempo of a slow-moving stream.

His eyes have seen a lot. Everything from Vietnam to the new digital Army. He has seen the Army go through a series of changes throughout his career. Now, it is time for yet another change. The time has come for Brig. Gen. John J. Maher III, Fort Benning's deputy commanding general, to move on.



Just three weeks short of an entire year at Fort Benning, Maher and his family are going west — all the way to Hawaii so he can command the 25th Infantry Division (Light).

dial 545-boss

Dial 545-BOSS is the commander's action line for soldiers, family members and civilians to call when they have problems or complaints that can't be resolved elsewhere.

While it is not a substitute for the chain of command or for agencies established to provide assistance, the line offers another means of communication between Fort Benning's community and commanders.

The Bayonet features some of the calls that may benefit other members of the Fort Benning community.

Call: I am concerned with the frequency in which my electricity goes out. Once the power went out about 7 p.m. and did not come back on until after 2 a.m.

Utilities Branch response: A contractor was installing new primary distribution lines and hooked jumpers from existing primary lines to new primary lines to transfer electrical power. The contractor then shut down his crew until the next business day.

Subsequently that evening the wind caused the temporary jumpers to make contact and shorted out the electrical service to Custer Terrace, McGraw Manor and Upatoi Terrace.

A request for reimbursement for expenses incurred by the DPW exterior electric is being made through the DPW Engineering Division, which monitors the contractor's operations.

The power outage was caused by contractor error in having the jumpers too close together. DPW regrets the inconvenience caused by the outage and is working with the contractor to minimize these incidents.

Call: The work that the people at the Alteration Shop on Sand Hill did on my uniforms was terrible and they will not redo the work or refund my money.

If this is how they treat a drill sergeant, I am very concerned about how they must treat the trainee.

Army and Air Force Exchange Service response: The caller can take the uniforms back to the cleaners to have them redone at no additional cost.

Call: My wife visited the Commissary and was upset concerning the number of children on the sales floor without supervision, as well as parents feeding their children food and fruit before paying for it and children running and playing in the aisles.

Fort Benning Commissary response: The Customer Service representative was contacted with instructions on how to handle the problems. The Customer Service representative was instructed to make announcements every 30 to 45 minutes concerning child supervision on the sales floor. The Customer Service Support Team representative spends more time walking and observing the actions of the customers on the sales floor.

risk management

The Chattahoochee River can be a very dangerous body of water.

Twenty-four service members lost their lives in the river during the past 35 years. Many local civilians also drowned. All of the deaths could have been avoided if safety precautions had been used.

Several persons drowned because they underestimated the width of the river. A service member drowned at Rotary Park in an attempt to swim the river, which was well over 400 feet wide at that point.

There is always some current in the river though there are locks and dams the entire length from Columbus to Apalachicola, Fla. The current can increase tremendously on the immediate downstream side of dams when a gate is opened.

The law does not require any warning to fishermen or swimmers when a gate is opened. There is no siren, light, horn or any other signal. The water depth also increases when a gate is opened, and the combination of increased stream velocity and depth can be deadly.

There are frequent instances of boaters striking a stump or another partially submerged obstacle. This contact generally results in only a broken shear pin, but boaters traveling at high speed have been thrown from their boats.

A person thrown from a boat can easily drown if not wearing a life jacket. Water skiers have also been injured by striking underwater floating objects. Everyone who uses the river for recreation should wear a life jacket.

The river is a great recreational asset, but it must be respected as a dangerous area.

Maher: General leaves post

Maher said he expects the 25th ID to be as professional an infantry unit as there is.

He said he compares commanding the 25th ID to running the run-and-shoot offense in professional football.

"I'm comfortable with that," Maher said. "In fact I'd be uncomfortable if I wasn't with an all-out unit."

"I expect to have fun, I expect to work hard and I expect we'll be good," Maher said in a laid-back, but firm voice.

His tone of voice matched the smile on his face when Maher spoke of the past year at Fort Benning.

He said there were a number of highlights throughout the year.

Maher recalled the amount of energy it took to transition the new commanding general at Fort Benning.

"There's an awful lot of things that have to get done that aren't in your job description," he said. "I wanted to help everyone get started, get adjusted and get the team on track for the boss," he said.

Maher said another highlight was the preparation for the advanced warfighting experiment and the warrior focus exercise.

He said he kidded with Col. Arnold J. Canada, chief of the Dismounted Battlespace Battle Lab about watching his (Maher's) electronic mail and professional office system to see what he would have to do each afternoon.

"It took quite a bit of flexibility," he said.

Two other events also stand out in Maher's mind, he said, but it has to do with the same thing — Army Communities of Excellence.

He said he remembers Maj. Gen. John W. Hendrix, post commanding general, telling the ACOE team while they were here, "What are you going to tell them? How are you going to face the other installations and tell them they're second best?" Maher described those weeks as "Go, go, go weeks."

> "I expect to have fun, I expect to work hard and I expect we'll be good."
> — Brig. Gen John J. Maher III
> Outgoing deputy commanding general

Maher said other key happenings included the ranger investigation and his focus on training on post.

His focus on training and being in the position he was in enabled Maher to take a hands-on approach to classes given on and off post.

"You get the opportunity to talk to every leadership class for officer candidates of all branches," Maher said. He said he directly participated in their leadership and tactical training, including the preparation.

"You're talking to every platoon leader, every company commander, every battalion commander and every brigade commander of every infantry unit, Maher said, his face glowing with excitement as he reflected on that.

"I was glad to have the opportunity to do it," he said.

Maher called the assistant commandant of the Infantry School "probably the best job a brigadier general of the infantry could have."

But, Maher said, it wasn't always easy.

Having to brief the chief of staff of the Army about the advanced warfighting experiment during his first month on post wasn't easy, Maher said.

He said it was hard because Maher was under the impression that the software and digitalization hardware wouldn't be ready by May 1995. He ended up talking with retired Maj. Gen. Jerry A. White, former post commander, who decided to recommend postponing the experiment until a later date.

"That briefing was hard to do because I had a lot to learn very quickly," he said.

His remorse was visible on his face when he described the ranger investigation. His only remark was it was "painful."

It was being a ranger that first brought Maher to Fort Benning for Ranger School. Then, years later, he returned to command the Ranger Training Brigade. Now that he is leaving again, he said some way or another he feels he'll be back.

"You never know about your next assignment," Maher said, "it would be an honor to come back here." He said he loves Fort Benning and it is his professional home.

He said that he and his wife, Cynthia, could settle down here, or at least close by. Maher is from Atlanta.

"We like all the things that Fort Benning and its nearby communities ... have to offer," he said. "It's home."

Documents can help separating soldiers

By Elsie Jackson
Army Career and Alumni Program

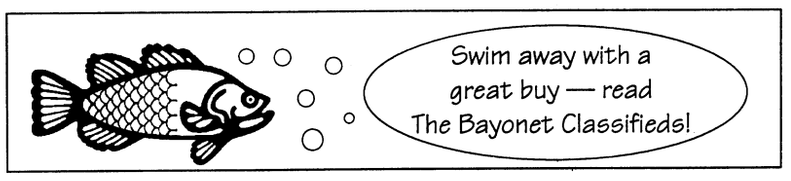
Your military experience and training may be invaluable assets in a civilian career, but only if you can communicate your abilities to a prospective employer.

If you are planning to use a resume to get your message across, your DD Form 2586 (Verification of Military Experience and Training) can be a very useful tool. VMET statements list military job experiences and training histories, recommended civilian college credit information and any civilian equivalent job titles. They are provided to separating and retiring soldiers who have served a minimum of 180 days on active duty.

If you are separating (or separated after Sept. 15, 1992) you should receive your VMET statement automatically, at your unit mailing address, about 150 days from your separation date. If you are within 30 days of your separation date and have not received this document or separated between Oct. 1, 1990, and Sept. 14, 1992, you will need to call or write to: PRC, Inc., ATTN: VMET, Suite 401, 2900 Eisenhower Ave., Alexandria, Va. 22314, (800) 258-8638.

VMET documents have proven themselves to be useful for enlisted soldiers and warrant officers. It has been less useful for commissioned officers because officers lack accurate duty descriptions and VMET is an automated document. Because of this, the Army has temporarily suspended automatic VMET distribution for commissioned officers.

In the near future, modified versions of the VMET will be issued to commissioned officers. The modified VMET will show military training histories, combining Officer Record Briefs and Officer Evaluation Reports to provide a picture of an officer's training, skills and experience.



Don't confuse your VMET document with an Army or American Council on Education Registry Transcript System AARTS transcript. AARTS transcripts are records of your active duty military education experiences, including training for which you may receive college credits. Of course, acceptance of credit recommendations will depend on the policies and procedures of the school you choose to attend.

If a college or university accepts AARTS credit recommendations, and those credits are awarded on their official college transcript, AARTS credit recommendations may be applied toward Army promotion points. Besides helping you get college credits, an AARTS transcript can supplement your resume, giving prospective employers a clearer picture of the skills you learned in the Army.

Three kinds of learning are recognized on an AARTS transcript — successful completion of formal service school courses (longer than 45 hours), successfully held military occupational specialties and passing scores in college-level tests such as the Scholastic Aptitude Test, College Level Examination Program and American College Testing Program.

All enlisted soldiers and veterans with a basic active service date on or after Oct. 1, 1981, may receive an AARTS transcript. Requests may be made through the Army Education Center.

For more information on VMET, ask your Army Career and Alumni Program counselor, Soldiers' Plaza, Building 2617, or call 545-4892 and 545-7009.

Adopt-a-pet from post veterinary facility

By Richard Brill
Special to The Bayonet©

The animals available for adoption are selected from stray animals picked up on post by animal control personnel

You might find the pet of your dreams right here on post.

Fort Benning's Veterinary Treatment Facility, Building 265, offers an adopt-a-pet program through which military personnel can adopt a homeless cat or dog from the facility's kennel, Building 283, located next door.

"A lot of people don't even know that the kennel is here," said Brenda Miller, kennel manager. "People are welcome to come and look at the animals during normal business hours, or they can view the dogs through the fence anytime it is daylight."

According to Pfc. Chad Warren, animal care specialist, the animals available for adoption are selected from stray animals picked up on post by animal control personnel.

"When an animal is picked up and placed in the facility the owner has three working days to claim the animal, after which the animal becomes government property and is put up for adoption," he said.

The kennel will only accept animals from people who no longer wish to keep their animals if there is room and for a fee, he added.

When adopting a pet there is no cost for the actual animal, but the adopter must pay for any vaccinations and tests the animal needs at the time of adoption, Warren said. Registration of the pet is also required.

The veterinary facility and kennel are open 8 to 11:30 a.m. and 12:45 to 3 p.m. Monday, Tuesday, Thursday and Friday and 8:30 to 11:30 a.m. on Wednesday. The facilities are closed on the last working day of each month for inventory.

In addition to the adopt-a-pet program, vaccinations and on-post registration, the VTF offers health certificates, treatment of diseases transmittable to humans or other animals and humane euthanasia for ill or aggressive pets, Warren said.

Minor diagnostic tests, including tests for feline leukemia, heartworm and parasites are also available. Appointments for vaccinations or diagnostic tests can be made on Mondays for the following week.

The VTF also offers a sick call service for animals with diseases that may be transmittable to humans. Sick call appointments can be scheduled on Mondays for times available that week. Animals requiring emergency treatment, surgery, radiology, hospitalization or long term treatment will be referred off post, he said.

Warren also reminded post residents to be familiar with U.S. Army Infantry Center Regulations 40-905 and 210-5, which govern the keeping of pets on post. Owners must register pets within 14 days of arriving on post or acquiring the animal, and animals that are stray or are neglected or abused will be picked up by animal control. In addition, commercial breeding of pets on post is prohibited, he said.

Environmental training, jobs available

By Mary Allen
Army Career and Alumni Program

The Fort Benning Regional Army Career and Alumni Program office is sponsoring a skill development program to promote environmental training and employment for soldiers getting out of the service.

Careers in environmental sciences are growing, and one of the post's training partners has been OnSite Environmental Staffing. Because of an immediate need to fill openings all over the United States for environmental technicians, OnSite has reduced the cost of its hazardous materials course to $250 per soldier.

OnSite Environmental Staffing is recruiting and training soldiers in response to increased demand in the environmental industry.

"Military employees give us the edge in the marketplace," said Tom Thornton, OnSite's sales director. "Soldiers have proved to be hardworking and loyal, which leads to customer satisfaction.

"I often have clients call to specifically request military technicians," he continued. "In a market as competitive as ours, this speaks volumes about the capabilities of veterans. Because of this, I plan to employ as many soldiers as possible."

To prepare for work in the environmental industry, OnSite will teach a 40-hour course, which certifies entry-level personnel, equipment operators and professionals for work on hazardous waste projects.

The course begins Monday. Soldiers may be eligible for Job Training Partnership Act financial assistance to attend this course. Contact an ACAP counselor for information.

At the completion of the training, each graduate conditionally becomes a contract employee for OnSite. OnSite has openings in virtually every city in the United States, but huge demand exists in the Northwest, Texas, the Great Lakes area and the Eastern Seaboard.

Minimum pay offered by OnSite is $9 per hour for entry-level personnel. Equipment operators are in short supply and earn $12 to $14 per hour. Environmental professional, health and safety personnel and engineers earn much more.

Interested soldiers may contact OnSite recruiters Jim Gardner or Dave Wilmot at ACAP, Building 2617, 545-4892 or 545-4913 or call Rich Heller in Atlanta at (800) 807-0454.

ACAP offers job retraining opportunities

Army Career and Alumni Program

For those leaving the Army within the next year, the Army Career and Alumni Program Transition Assistance Office has numerous job retraining opportunities available to soldiers, civilians and family members who are seeking new careers in the private sector.

Purpose: The ACAP skill Development Program is a job retraining, skill enhancement opportunity intended to provide training opportunities to soldiers, civilians and family members who transition from the Army. Since ACAP is a regional office, these opportunities are open to any departing personnel within its sphere of influence. Skill development courses give clients timely, marketable skills with high potential for employment.

Who may participate: The Fort Benning Regional ACAP Office does not limit participation in the SDP. Training is open to soldiers, civilians and family members of either. Veterans of any service may use the program. However, in order to participate, veterans must agree to come to Fort Benning to register and to attend training. Almost all training is being conducted at Fort Benning or in Columbus.

Courses available: There is generally no limit to the courses available; however, several specific programs have been established for clients' consideration. ACAP's intent is to ensure that participants are encouraged to select courses that result in certification with excellent employment opportunities. Examples are law enforcement, commercial drivers licenses, electrician, welding, environmental technician, heavy equipment operations and computer repair. New courses are added every week.

Job retraining under Defense Conversion Act: Many of the courses available qualify for tuition assistance under a special partnership program between the Georgia Department of Labor and ACAP. Funds provided by the U.S. Department of Labor are allocated to numerous training courses. Soldiers who are eligible may have their courses paid for without affecting their VA education benefits or personal resources. Eligibility depends upon the circumstances under which a soldier is leaving the Army. Generally, if it can be shown that a soldier is leaving as a result of downsizing, he or she will likely be eligible. However, final eligibility is determined by the State of Georgia and is on a first come, first served basis.

Methods of payment for courses: ACAP does not bill or collect for courses. It does, however, attempt to ensure the best price for these courses. Paying for courses is the responsibility of the client. The forms of payment include:

- Grants available through the Job Retraining Program
- Cash paid from individuals' resources.
- VA educational benefits.
- Scholarships, fellowships or grants available from the training institution.

Many of the courses available are approved for use of VA educational benefits and the list grows steadily week by week. Check with the respective training institution or activity prior to enrollment.

Job opportunities and job placement: Many of the training activities provide job leads, fairs and opportunities for their graduates. Several actually assist with job placement. Even so, it is important for a client to remember that it is to their advantage to seek the best possible job to fit their desires. Consequently, one should never depend upon one activity to determine ones future.

How this program is integrated into ACAP: Many people and activities have played a significant role in developing SDP being managed by the ACAP TAO staff. This program is an integral part of the overall ACAP services and it is important that clients use all services available from ACAP. Counseling at the TAO, attendance at the pretransition classes, and training available at the Job Assistance Center all adds up to success when done in conjunction with the SDP. The SDP is another valuable tool made available at the ACAP TAO. This program is only available at Fort Benning.

How to obtain information: Because of the hundreds of personnel interested in the program, ACAP is unable to discuss the program by telephone. Information packages and questionnaires will be sent to regional customers who leave their name, address and telephone numbers. Locally, clients can come by the ACAP TAO, Building 2617, DSN: 835-7009 or 545-4892 to get their packages.

Special seminars: TAO counselors will be conducting SDP seminars beginning Thursday between 10 a.m. and noon. The information briefing will be in Infantry Hall, ACAP Classroom 30.

Representatives from many of the training schools will be on hand to answer questions. ACAP plans to conduct these seminars each Thursday and recommends participants start early; no appointment is necessary.

ACAP shows up in unexpected places

By Mary Allen
Army Career and Alumni Office

The Army Career and Alumni Program staff is diversified in the many facets of serving soldiers. They show up in the most unexpected places.

The Fort Benning ACAP staff serve soldiers in active Army, Reservists and National Guard personnel assigned in Louisiana, Mississippi, Tennessee, Florida, Puerto Rico and the Carolinas.

A trained staff of ACAP counselors provide quality customer service to transitioning soldiers and family members residing in local and remote areas. Personnel residing in remote sites obtain ACAP services at the nearest ACAP office or travel to Fort Benning on permissive temporary duty.

Besides Fort Benning, ACAP offices in the Southeast United States are located at Fort Bragg, N.C., Fort Gordon, Ga., Fort Jackson, S.C., Fort Stewart, Ga., Fort McClellan, Ala., Fort Rucker, Ala., and at Redstone Arsenal, Ala. If none of these options is feasible, a mobile team takes ACAP services to those soldiers and families.

The team usually consists of one transition services specialist from the Transition Assistance Office, two Job Assistance Center counselors, and an administrative assistant.

Feedback from remote sites has labeled ACAP as the best thing the Army has implemented because the focus is on the individual, the family and how people are treated. All transitioning soldiers are processed in a caring, disciplined, organized and dignified manner, officials said.

Anyone leaving the Army — soldiers, civilians and family members — is eligible to participate in the Army Career and Alumni Program whether it is a voluntary or an involuntary transition.

Soldiers can contact their unit personnel noncommissioned officer for an ACAP appointment or the ACAP office, Building 2617, at 545-4913, 545-4892 for more information.

MPs do special deed

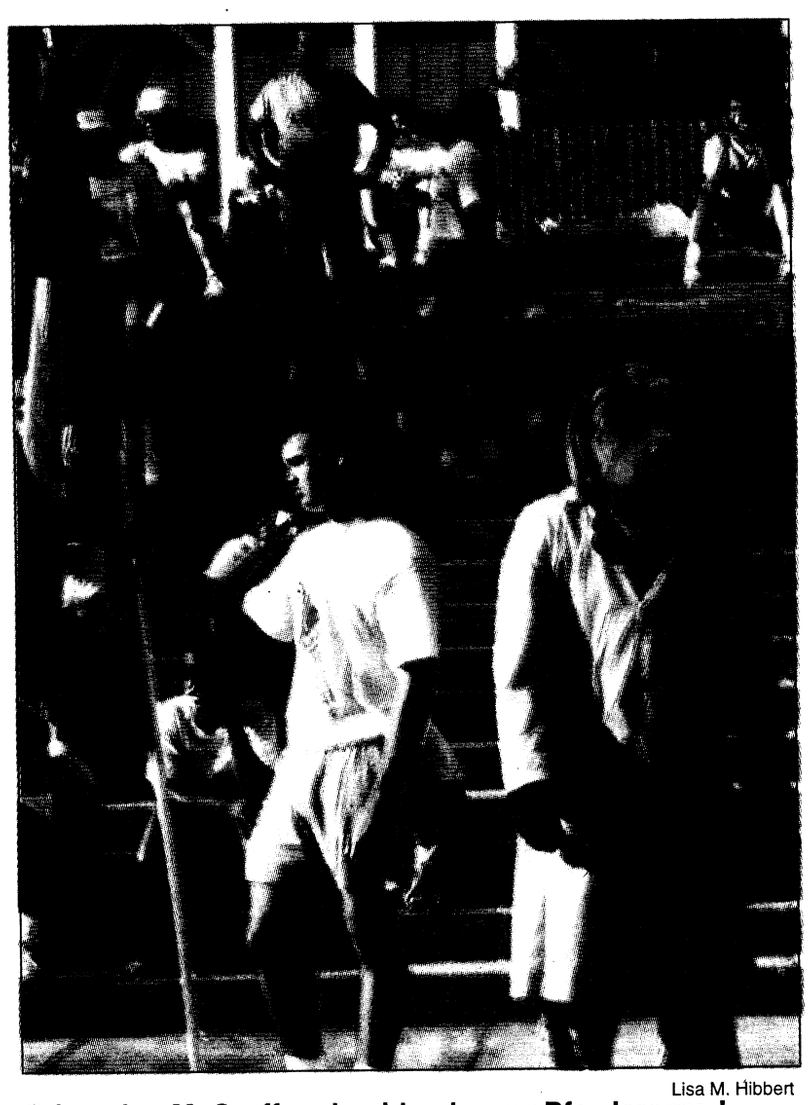
By Lisa M. Hibbert
Bayonet staff writer

More than 200 Military Police ran 10 miles to carry the Special Olympics torch from Fort Benning to the Columbus Government Center where they passed it on for the next leg of the Special Olympics Torch Run after a brief rally May 25.

"This is the 10th annual run that Fort Benning has participated in," said Col. Ronnie D. Alton, provost marshal. "We're carrying on the tradition of carrying the torch for the Special Olympics."

Special Olympians from the area — freestyle and backstroke swimmer Jonathan E. Curran, 34, of Columbus and gymnast Joslyn Nieves, 13, of Fort Benning were at the Government Center rally.

The MPs raised more than $1,600 in donations for the Special Olympics by participating in the run said MP Sgt. Maj. John C. Craddock.



"We trained for the run as a part of our regular physical training routine," Craddock said. "The run isn't the only way we're contributing to the Special Olympics; we're participating in the Special Olympic golf tournament in Cusseta, Ga."

Three MP teams competed in the Special Olympic Golf tournament in Cusseta, on the same day as the run.

Approximately 40 percent of the battalion completed the 124 minute 10-mile-run, Craddock said. The route the MPs took was Wold Avenue to South Lumpkin Road to Fort Benning Road to Victory Drive to Fourth Avenue to the Government Center.

From Columbus, the torch was taken to Newnan, Ga., and from Newnan it was taken to Atlanta. Several runners waited along the designated route to Atlanta for their turn to carry the torch.

Curran, who has been training for the Special Olympics for four years, received two Gold Medals for winning the 50-meter backstroke and the 50-meter freestyle competitions at the games on Saturday. Nieves won three gold medals for her balance beam, floor routine and the uneven bar, and a Silver Medal for the vault. She has been training for three years.

Shooter takes Ohio Regional

By Marlene Tikal
U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit

A U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit soldier overcame windy conditions and 265 competitors to win the Ohio State Rifle Regional Championship Saturday at Camp Perry, Ohio.

Sgt. Lance Dement, a member of the USAMU Service Rifle Team, won the championship by securing a 773-23X score out of a total 800 points in the Grand Aggregate Competition.

The grand aggregate is composed of four smaller matches, said David L. Boyd, USAMU chief of competition.

Those matches include the 200-yard standing, 200-yard sitting, rapid fire, 300-yard rapid fire and the 600-yard slow fire. The scores from each of the matches are combined to receive the grand aggregate score, he said.

Dement scored consistently high in each match despite stiff competition, high winds and cooler temperatures.

"I felt more than well prepared to face my competitors," Dement said, even though the competition consisted of civilian and military members who traveled from locations nationwide to participate in the competition.

Dement said the rigorous training the USAMU Service Rifle Team members go through on a daily basis gave him the confidence he needed to do well against the other competitors.

"We train hard – five, sometimes more days per week," he said.

While training, USAMU soldiers practice everything from breathing and relaxation techniques, to trigger control and foot placement.

While the competition didn't present much of a problem, the weather proved to be quite a challenge.

Cloudy conditions, which reduced visibility, and higher winds, which altered the trajectory of the rounds, forced Dement to readjust his fire several times.

The whole situation has the potential of not turning out as well as it had if Dement hadn't kept a level head and remained calm during the competition.

"The trick is to focus on your objective, remember the reason you're out there and overcome the obstacles you face," he said.

It takes a little extra effort to maintain a positive attitude, Dement said.

Dement will compete next in the Mid-Atlantic Match at Quantico Marine Corps Base, Va.

'95 BRAG rolls from Rome to Augusta

By Jerry Colley
Bicycle Ride Across Georgia

About 2,600 bicyclists will be heading for the hills of North Georgia when the 16th annual Bicycle Ride Across Georgia rolls June 11 to 17.

Riders and support personnel will spend the night June 10 at Rome High School before starting to pedal June 11, with overnight stops at Dalton, Ellijay, Dahlonega, Toccoa, Elberton and Clarks Hill Lake before the 345-mile ride ends with a festive, catered end-of-the-road party at Augusta's Riverwalk June 17.

"BRAG '95 will be our hilliest ride yet, but one of our most scenic," said ride director Jerry Colley.

As always, BRAG offers riders a way to get to know the history, terrain, sights and people of Georgia in a way that few other vacations ever will.

This year's ride will include stops at some of the Peach State's rivers and waterfalls, an ostrich farm, the Cabbage Patch Doll Hospital, Royston's Ty Cobb Museum, as well as tours of apple farms and country stores.

Entertainment will include panning for gold in Dahlonega, the fourth annual BRAG Talent Show, featuring the Kazoo Cycling Band and street dance in Elberton, and the shaggin' sounds of the Swingin' Medallions at the Fort Gordon Recreational Area.

BRAG is a family ride — some of the riders are still in elementary school, while others are drawing Social Security checks. Some parents tow their babies and toddlers behind their bikes in carriers. Many couples ride tandem bikes made for two riders.

Each day's ride ranges from 35 to 60 miles, with most riders camping each night in tents or recreational vehicles. Some riders stay in local motels. Past studies have shown that BRAG riders spend an average of $80,000 in each town in which they stop overnight.

Overnight camping sites are June 10 at Rome High School, June 11 at Dalton High School, June 12 at the Lion's Club Park on the Coosawatee River and Gilmer High School, June 13 at North Georgia College in Dahlonega, June 14 at Toccoa Falls College in Toccoa, June 15 at Elbert County High School in Elberton and June 16 at Fort Gordon Recreational area on Clarks Hill Lake.

BRAG has named the Georgia chapter of the National Multiple Sclerosis Society as its official recipient charity for the 1995 ride. The MS Society will provide rest stops and some lunches along the ride. Money raised from BRAG will provide support services for more than 4,000 Georgians with multiple sclerosis, a central nervous system disease that affects a third of a million Americans.

Those support services include information and referral, support groups, counseling, medical equipment and therapeutic recreation.

The American Red Cross will provide first-aid services. Air-conditioned bus service, for about $35 per trip, will bring riders from Atlanta to Rome, and from Augusta to Atlanta June 17.

Registration for the ride is $70 for adults and $45 for children and seniors, which covers camping for seven nights, route maps, luggage transportation, a T-shirt, sag wagon support, rest stops stocked with water, fruit and food every 10 miles, street dance and the final party.

For an application, send a self-addressed, stamped envelope to BRAG '95, P.O. Box 576, Stone Mountain, GA 30086-0576. For more information, call (404) 469-2091 and leave your name and address.

For more information about moteling on BRAG, contact Global Travel Advisors in Atlanta at (404) 879-4952.

Unstable spring weather slows bass fishing action

By Earl Bentz and Steve Price
Outboard Marine Corporation

Spring often means periods of unsettled weather, and when it is, bass fishing can become just as unsettled.

"There is no question changing weather has an effect on how bass act," veteran tournament angler Ron Shuffield said. "We don't really understand why the fish change their behavior. We just know they act differently under different conditions, so we have to adjust our fishing techniques accordingly."

For example, the Johnson Outboards Pro Staff angler said, fishers have long realized changing cloud cover can totally change the way fish hit lures.

"When it's cloudy, bass are less spooky, more aggressive, and generally not as deep," he said. "Even fish that may be suspended in cover can be tempted to strike a surface lure like a spinnerbait or chugger.

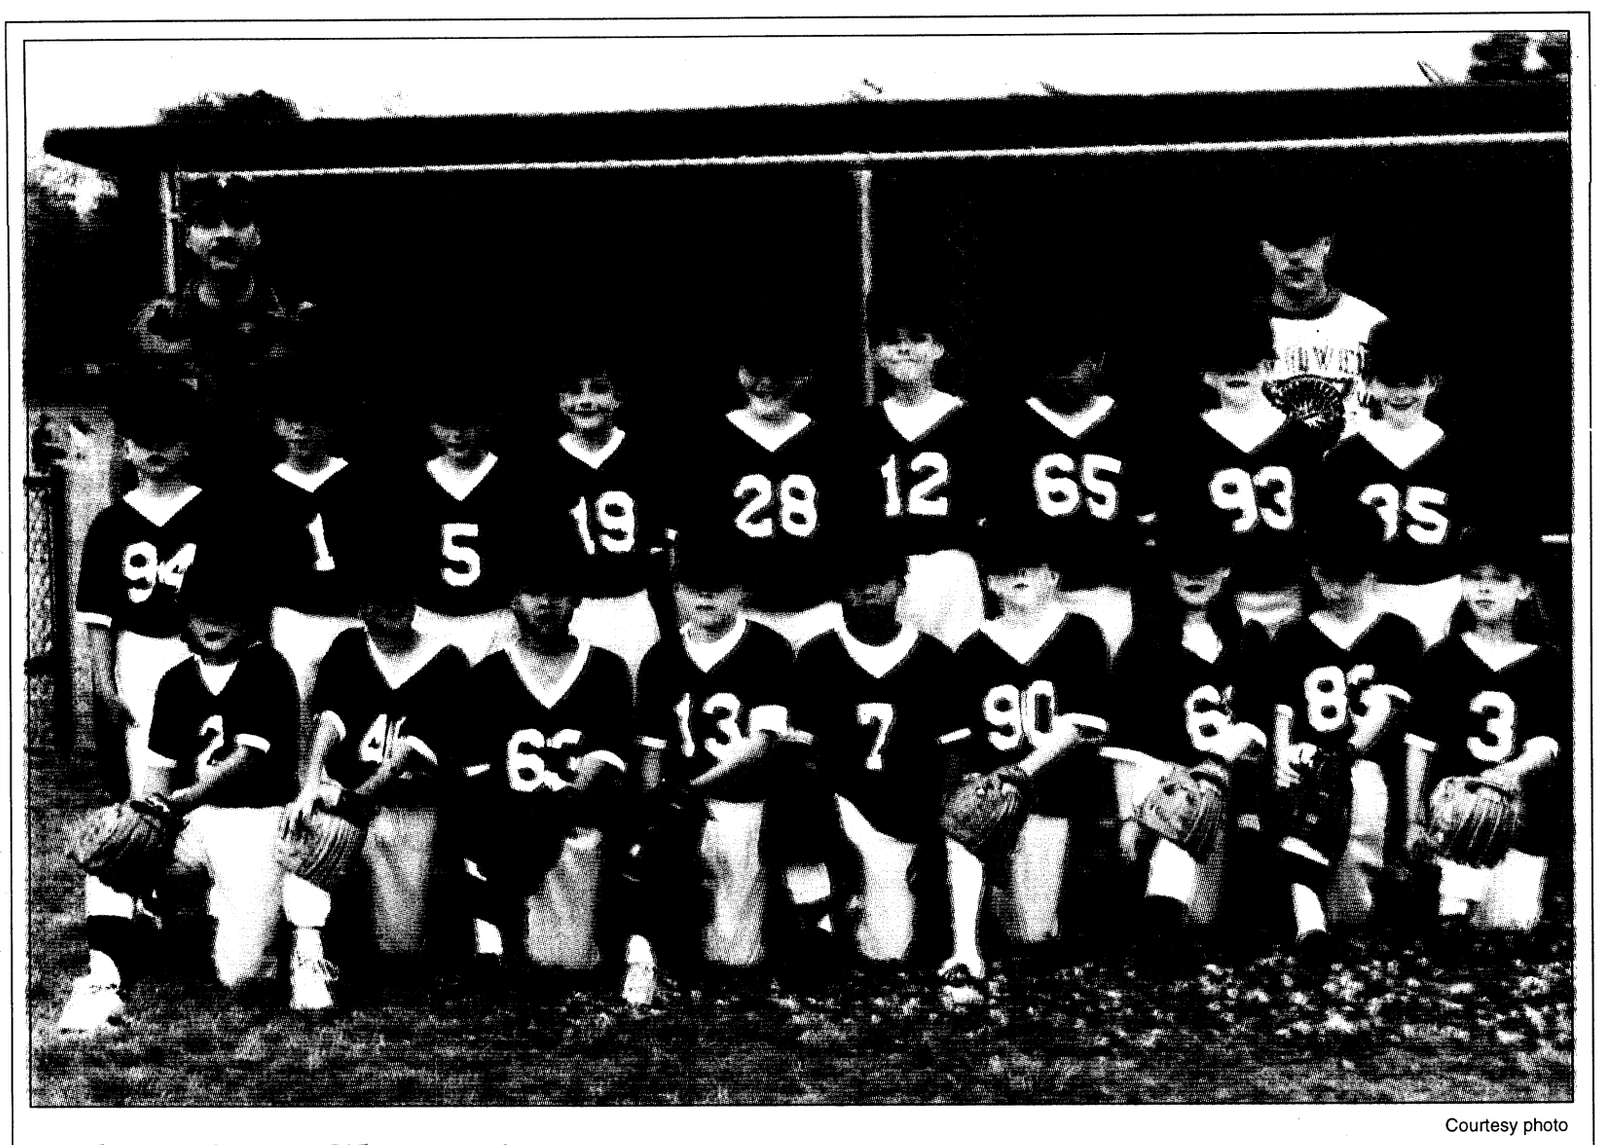
"On the other hand, when the weather is clear and sunny, the bass hold much tighter to cover. They're usually deeper, too, and not nearly as susceptible to a topwater lure."

Another condition that quickly changes bass behavior is a thunder and lightning storm. Before the storm, bass may be active; during it they stop feeding: and afterwards they may become active again. Prolonged unstable weather in which thunderstorms rumble through an area for several days often causes the fish to become less and less active.

"I believe the changing barometric pressure affects the bass," the Johnson pro said, "but just how it does, I can't say. One thing I have realized is that on some cloudy, windy days the fishing is excellent but on other similar days the fishing is very slow, and when it was, the barometric pressure was always high.

"Just because it's cloudy and blustery does not necessarily mean the barometer is low or falling."

Under these changing conditions, lure presentation can become critical, adds the Arkansas pro.



"When it's cloudy and the bass are fairly active, you can pull them out of cover to hit a lure," Shuffield said, "so your cast doesn't necessarily have to be exactly to that cover.

"On brighter sunny days, or on those stormy days when the bass just are not as active, your presentation has to be much more precise. You have to get your lure right in front of them."

Shuffield offered encouragement by noting that just because bass may be inactive in the morning does not mean they'll be inactive the entire day.

"Bass can change their activity level as fast as the weather can change," he said, "which is pretty fast."

TB cases drop in Georgia

Georgia Department of Human Resources

Cases of tuberculosis have decreased over the past two years in both Atlanta and the state as a whole, thanks to an influx of private and public funds earmarked for treatment and prevention, according to the Georgia Department of Human Resources and the Emory School of Medicine.

Tuberculosis cases reported between 1992 and 1994 decreased by 17 percent statewide, 20 percent in Fulton and DeKalb Counties combined, and 23 percent in the city of Atlanta.

"We've been able to greatly increase our community prevention and treatment efforts with expanded state funding, federal funds from the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, and a $1.1 million grant from the Robert Wood Johnson Foundation, which was awarded to Emory and the Atlanta Tuberculosis Prevention Coalition," Dr. Kathleen E. Toomey, director of DHR's Epidemiology and Prevention Branch, said.

"We've also worked hard to improve collaboration among public health agencies, medical schools and community groups concerned with preventing the spread of tuberculosis."

Since 1992, DHR has funded county health departments to hire more staff who identify and give preventive medication to people exposed to tuberculosis as well as treating people who have an active case of the disease.

Emory provides staff to assist tuberculosis control at homeless shelters, prisons and health departments in Fulton and DeKalb Counties.

"Tuberculosis is a particularly challenging public health threat because treating it requires patients to take medication daily for months," Dr. Henry M. Blumberg, assistant professor of medicine at Emory University, said. "In 1992 the city of Atlanta had the highest rate of tuberculosis in the United States.

Georgia has had the resources over the past two years to increase the number of people on treatment called directly observed therapy, which ensures that people with active tuberculosis take all their medication. This also prevents the emergence of drug-resistant strains of the bacteria. But the problem hasn't gone away. Any reduction in federal funds for tuberculosis control could rapidly reverse these accomplishments."

According to Toomey, almost all patients with active tuberculosis in DeKalb County and 70 percent in Fulton County are now receiving directly observed therapy.

ask the judge

By Scott Frost
Staff Judge Advocate's Office

Q: I recently transferred to Fort Benning from Fort Bragg, N.C. We have three cars — one in my wife's name, one in both of our names and one in my name. I am from Kentucky and my wife is from Ohio.

I bought my car in Kentucky and it has current Kentucky license plates. My wife bought her car in Ohio and it has current North Carolina plates. Now that we are here, what do we have to do about the licensing of our vehicles?

A: Georgia law requires that any vehicle owned and operated by a nonresident in this state for a period of 30 days or more must be registered here.

There is an exception to this rule when the vehicle in question is owned by a person in the military, stationed in Georgia under military orders. This exception does not apply to a vehicle that's solely in the name of a service member's family or spouse.

The service member has the choice of either maintaining registration of the vehicle in their state of residence, or registering the vehicle in Georgia. Your wife must register the vehicle that is solely in her name in Georgia withing 30 days of arriving here. She may want to transfer all or half ownership to you before the expiration of the 30 days. If she does this, you will have the choice of either registering the car in Kentucky or Georgia.

The car that is registered in North Carolina must be registered in Kentucky or Georgia, not North Carolina.

The decision between Kentucky and Georgia should be made based on the tax consequences of registration in that state. Some states charge an ad valorem tax on vehicles titled in their state. But, the state where the service member is stationed can not impose an ad valorem tax.

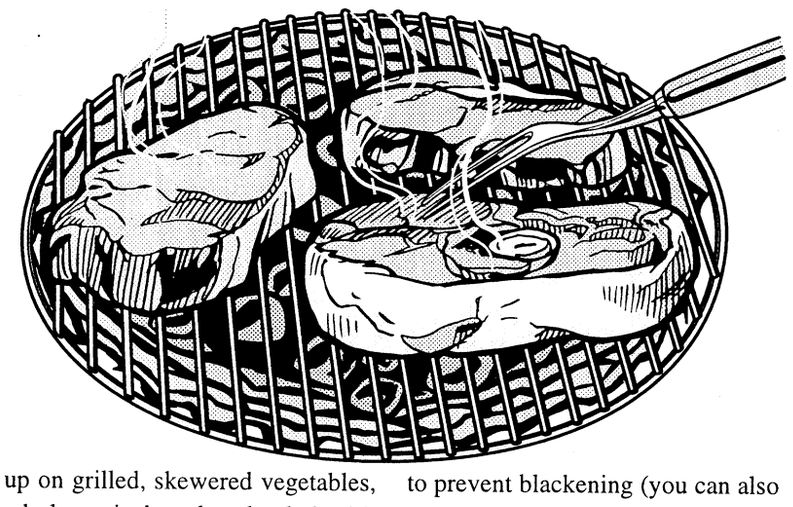
You would be allowed to register the cars that are in you name or partially in your name without having to pay the tax imposed in Georgia. If you decide to register your car in Georgia, you must obtain a Georgia title for the car and you must show that you are entitled to exemption from taxation.

The proof of entitlement is shown through the use of an affidavit that you complete at the Legal Assistance Division of the Office of the Staff Judge Advocate. The affidavit states that you swear the vehicle is yours, that you are not a resident of this state, and that you are stationed here under military orders. The affidavit is acknowledged by a notary public at the Office of the Staff Judge Advocate.

You must take the affidavit to the registration office along with a copy of your leave and earnings statement dated within the last 90 days that shows what state you claim as your residence. You must also have proof of your car insurance.

Anyone with questions about registering a car in Georgia or Alabama can contact the Legal Assistance Division in Building 5, on the corner of Vibbert and Sigerfoos streets, or call 545-3281 or 545-3282.

Barbecue fruits, meats for tasty, healthy summer



American Institute for Cancer Research

If you're firing up the barbecue and looking forward to a season of delicious grilling, you're not alone.

Americans everywhere are joining family and friends for cook-outs. But when you move from the kitchen stove to the grill, be sure to use a few low-fat tips to make your outdoor meals healthy as well as tasty.

Low-fat barbecuing is wise not only because the food has less fat, but also because fat that drips onto hot coals creates smoke that blackens food with possible carcinogens. The American Institute for Cancer Research recommends choosing lean cuts of meat over higher-fat types such as ribs and sausages.

If you do eat higher fat hot dogs or hamburgers, just eat one and fill up on grilled, skewered vegetables, whole-grain bread and salad with low-fat dressing. If you grill poultry, remove the skin and baste it with lemon, orange or lime juice, or a nonfat sauce to keep it moist.

Grill all foods far enough away from the coals or other heat source to prevent blackening (you can also microwave foods for several minutes then grill for less time to get that barbecue flavor with less exposure to hot coals).

Many vegetables are delicious grilled — skewered or wrapped in aluminum foil with herbs and a splash of water, juice or flavored vinegar. Try cherry tomatoes, eggplant, potatoes, mushrooms, onions, peppers, summer squash, zucchini, sweet potatoes and corn on the cob.

Even fruit tastes delicious barbecued. The heat of the grill will caramelize the sugar in fruit and make it a sweet treat. To keep it from drying out, brush it with a bit of oil or juice. Brochettes of firm-fleshed summer fruits like strawberries and chunks of apricots, peaches, pineapple and plums can be delicious. Fruits and vegetables grill in minutes.

For a free brochure of tips on delicious ways to cut back fat and eat more grains, fruits and vegetables, send a stamped, self-addressed envelope to the American Institute for Cancer Research, Dept. TT, Washington, D.C. 20069.

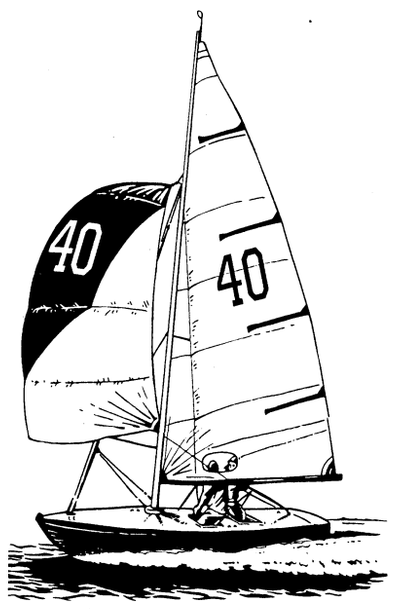
Life jackets will save children's lives

U.S. Coast Guard Auxiliary

With boating season upon us, more and more families are out on the weekends pleasure boating.



Many of these families have their children with them. Most will have their child wear a personal floatation device (life jacket) when near or on the water, but many do not.

In most states, it's the law that children under a certain age must wear a life jacket near or on the water, but many do not. In Alabama, the law requires any child under 8 years old to wear a PFD while on a boat except when the child is in an enclosed cabin.

There is much discussion and even debate in some cases regarding children and PFDs. Some advocates both individual and state, believe children under 12 years old should be required to wear them. (Alabama, for example, believes it to be 8 years old or younger and have made it a state law.) Many of these same advocates believe requiring children to wear PFDs will also lead to adults wearing PFDs. There is documented evidence to support both contentions.

Dissenters of these arguments contend children are already wearing PFDs and since child boating fatalities are not significant (less than 5 percent of reported fatalities), there is no need for legislating mandatory wear for this age group.

But underneath this controversy lies requirement and that is when a child goes boating, a properly sized PFD must be available, serviceable and accessible. Many ask the question, "What is the selection criteria for such PFDs and how do they relate to specific characteristics and ages of the children?" When selecting a PFD, keep in mind the following:

• Select only a U.S. Coast Guard approved life jacket.

• Children's PFDs are sized according to weight ranges: under 30 pounds, 30 to 50 pounds and 50 to 90 pounds. Choose the one that is right for your child.

• Many manufactures specify a chest size, so measure your child's chest, underneath the arms, before purchasing a PFD. Be sure his or her chest measurement is accommodated by the PFD considering.

• If your child has a fear of the water or does not swim, a Type II child or infant PFD is recommended.

• Choose brightly colored PFDs, or with the child's favorite character on it, as children are more likely to wear devices that are attractive to them.

• Take your child to the store when you purchase a PFD. Have the child try the PFD on; it should fit snugly. To determine fit, lift the shoulders of the PFD to make sure it does not slip over the child's chin or ears. If it does, they could slide out of the PFD. If there is more than three inches between the child's shoulders and the PFD, it is too big.

After purchasing a PFD, consider the following suggestions:

• Crotch straps are an important feature on children's PFDs as they ensure a secure fit. For your child's protection, be sure they are used at all times. They don't have to be so snug as to be uncomfortable to add significant security.

Parents, assist your child in testing his or her PFD in the water. Adjust it where necessary so that its optimum performance can be achieved. Let your child indicate to you where on his or her body the PFD needs to be tightened or loosened.

• Often a child fights the PFD tendency to float them slightly back or vertical. This should be explained to the child. Some children float best in one style, while others will float better in another style. Select the one that works well with your child.

Soldiers need to know of heat hazards

Army Safety Center, Fort Rucker, Ala.

Soldiers need to know the dangers of hot weather before they become heat casualties. To prevent heat injury, leaders should acclimatize soldiers to warmer temperatures. This takes about two weeks of gradually increasing exposure to heat. However, acclimatization doesn't last forever.

The soldier who grew up in Florida is not better protected than the one from Alaska if he or she has been away from the heat and humidity of a hot summer for awhile. In fact, once out of a hot environment, acclimatization will disappear within the same two weeks it takes to achieve it.

Physical activity should be reduced in a hot climate and increased only gradually. It should also be tailored to fit the climate. Work that requires a great deal of physical exertion should be scheduled for the early morning or late evening hours. Alternating work and rest periods is also helpful. Use special caution during any mission-oriented protection posture actions.

Good physical condition is also important because illness, medication and being overweight lower resistance to heat stress. The "chairborne" soldier who goes to the field for two weeks can be in for trouble if he or she doesn't use caution.

Clothing offers protection from direct sun. Bare skin absorbs the sun's radiant heat and raises body temperature. Loose clothing allows air to circulate and sweat to evaporate.

Leaders should ensure that soldiers know the causes of the following heat injuries and prevention techniques, as well as standard first aid.

Sunburn is caused by too much exposure to the ultraviolet rays of the sun. Leaders should caution soldiers to watch how much time they spend in the sun and insist that they use a sunscreen. Also, wearing the uniform with the sleeves down offers more protection from the sun. Failure to prevent serious sunburn can, in some cases, be considered a negligent act.

Heat cramps are identified by muscular pains and cramps. Leg and abdominal muscles are usually affected first. Have victims sip four ounces of salt water (one-quarter teaspoon of salt per quart of water) every 15 minutes for one hour. (Caution: People with high blood pressure should check with a doctor before taking salt water.) Gently massage cramped muscles. A heating pad or hot water bottle will help relieve muscle spasms.

Heat exhaustion is characterized by fatigue, weakness, and collapse. The skin becomes pale, cool, and clammy. Victims usually complain of general weakness, nausea, dizziness, and cramps.

Remove the victim to a cool, shady place and give sips of salt water. Have the victim lie with feet raised eight to 12 inches above the head. Always observe the soldier after removing him or her from the sun. If there is no improvement, seek medical attention at once.

Heatstroke is the most dangerous of heat injuries and should be considered a medical emergency. It is a breakdown of the body's ability to perspire. Unacclimatized soldiers are especially prone to heatstroke.

A heatstroke victim may suffer from confusion, high body temperature, red, hot, dry skin, a throbbing headache and nausea, and may even lapse into unconsciousness.

Lack of sweating is one sign of imminent heatstroke. Victims must receive immediate medical treatment. If medical treatment is not immediately available, undress the victim and sponge off the skin with cool, wet towels. Do not give stimulants. Get the victim to a medical facility as soon as possible.

Nonselect majors may retire early

FORT MONROE, VA. — The fiscal 1995 selective continuation board has been canceled because of continuing officer reductions.

IOBC students learn basics of defense

By Bradley Rees
Infantry Officer Basic Course

Infantry Officer Basic Course Class 4-95 entered its 11th week recently when the students participated in a defense situational training exercise.

The Defense STX was conducted on and around Bush Hill with the help of 24th Infantry Division (Mechanized), which acted as opposition forces for the lieutenants.

The four platoons of IOBC students joined forces to create two reinforced platoons for the defense.

On the first morning, one platoon occupied Bush Hill and another defended a sector near Box Springs and Red Diamond roads. By the afternoon, the remaining combined platoon occupied the defense, conducted terrain analysis and performed a training exercise without troops to better familiarize the lieutenants with the terrain and characteristics of the defense near Red Diamond Road.

By Tuesday morning, the platoon occupied the defense and began their priorities of work.

Throughout the exercise, squad leader to platoon leader positions were rotated, which created a more challenging atmosphere for the lieutenants to operate in.

Tuesday also provided time for the students to improve individual fighting positions and communications, and they were introduced to the adversities of a defense as forward scouts from the OPFOR began their reconnaissance and probing of the defense.

The next morning, the OPFOR, portraying a threat motorized rifle company, advanced north toward Bush Hill. The battle lasted about three hours when the OPFOR was allowed to advance up Bush Hill.

On Wednesday afternoon, the combined platoon moved to the defense site on Bush Hill. They defended the hill in a battle position with two squads covering dismounted avenues of approach. One squad augmented with four Bradley fighting vehicles on Box Spring Road and one squad in reserve.

The OPFOR's main attack began Thursday with dismounts attacking from the Southeast and mounted forces converging on Bush Hill along with Box Springs Road.

The lieutenants learned a lot from the exercise. They learned the importance of obstacles, counter reconnaissance, to defend in depth and the employment of special weapons. The use of the Bradley Fighting Vehicle, AT-4s and M-47 Dragons helped the students better understand the principles of war with mass and concentration and introduced them to the anti-armor role the infantry platoon has in today's Army.

With the completion of the defense exercise, the students only have the offense and the culmination exercise before they graduate June 23.

White School students 'on line'

By Jerrie Macintire
Special to The Bayonet©

Some students from White School are chatting with teachers, turning in homework assignments and working on drills to enhance their vocabulary.

Not so unusual by itself, but these students are relaxing at home while accomplishing these tasks through a new computer link with their school.

The White School electronic bulletin board allows students, parents and teachers to communicate via telephone line and computer, said Dr. Wanda Persons, fifth-grade teacher who helped bring the program on-line (a colloquial expression in the computer world for making it happen).

"This is another way we communicate with parents," said Janet Wynn, principal. "We're strong on communication anyway, and this is another method of getting and receiving information."

"I see where this can really grow," she said.

In the manner of Prodigy and On-line America, the bulletin board offers users a variety of services — only there's no monthly fee. Imagine, no more calling every child in the class for those elusive spelling words—students can merely use their modems and scroll into that week's language arts assignment.

Students can also play games like hangman, one of Person's favorites for strengthening vocabulary. In addition, users can read class newsletters, leave electronic-mail (messages) for teachers and check homework assignments.

Anyone who has access to a computer and modem at home or at work can call the board, and parents are using the service with increasing frequency, said Wynn. In one morning, 300 calls were logged to the computer, she said.

The student chat service has been popular, said Persons, with up to nine students "talking" via computer at the same time.

The board is a wonderful communication tool, Wynn said, but getting the program running was no easy task. With the help of parent volunteer Maj. Frank Rowland, Persons ordered and installed the program during evenings and weekends. Rowland is a computer expert who works with Martin Army Community Hospital as chief of information management.

Persons said she is already seeing benefits as more students and parents come to use the board.

"Some grades have improved," she said. "This comes from parents being able to reinforce daily what we are doing in class."

In addition, the students' problem solving skills are enhanced as they learn to scroll through the board and accomplish various tasks, Persons said.

"When students work through their problems with the board, they are willing to go on to other applications and try more things," she said.

While the bulletin board seems like a lot of fun for users, the benefits are more than just enjoyment; students are acquiring skills they will need to succeed in the work force of the 21st century, Wynn said.

In Persons' words, "This makes our school a little bit more like the real world."

USING THE BULLETIN BOARD

- Using a computer equipped with a modem, call 545-6150. The board is open 24 hours a day.
- First-time users are limited to 10 minutes, which allows them to register and select a personal password. Their security level and access time are upgraded as they use the board.
- The program is user-friendly; that is, callers receive instructions on how to navigate through the files and accomplish their tasks, whether it's leaving electronic mail for teachers or checking a social studies assignment.

Students navigate info superhighway to North Pole

White Elementary School students are journeying to the North Pole to study animals, pollution and geography.

No, the school hasn't added dogsledding to its curriculum. White's 80 fifth-graders are using a much more comfortable mode of travel — the information superhighway.

The students are following the adventures of five real-life explorers as part of the International Arctic Project. Since January, they have sent computer messages to the explorers and received information via the Internet.

"We've fit in geography lessons, we've studied the biology of the area," Hyder said. "The students have done research on the animals and the life."

For example, students studied the effects of pesticides in the food chain on polar bears.

Fort Benning schools curriculum coordinator Jerry Christy said the purpose of the project is to show students how all different parts of the earth interact with each other.

"It's to create new awareness of the global environment, how all systems are connected," Christy said.

Members of the International Arctic Project show off the White Elementary School banner at the North Pole.

He said the school has participated in the program for several years.

A banner carried to the North Pole by the explorers was returned to the school Monday. The banner featured the school mascot and the names of students and teachers.

"Our names have all been to the North Pole, which is more than most people in the world will ever be able to say," fifth-grade teacher Dorothy Hyder told the excited students.

Each student received a picture of the five members of the expedition team holding the school banner at the North Pole.

4th-graders solve mystery of wet teddy bear

By Jerrie Macintire

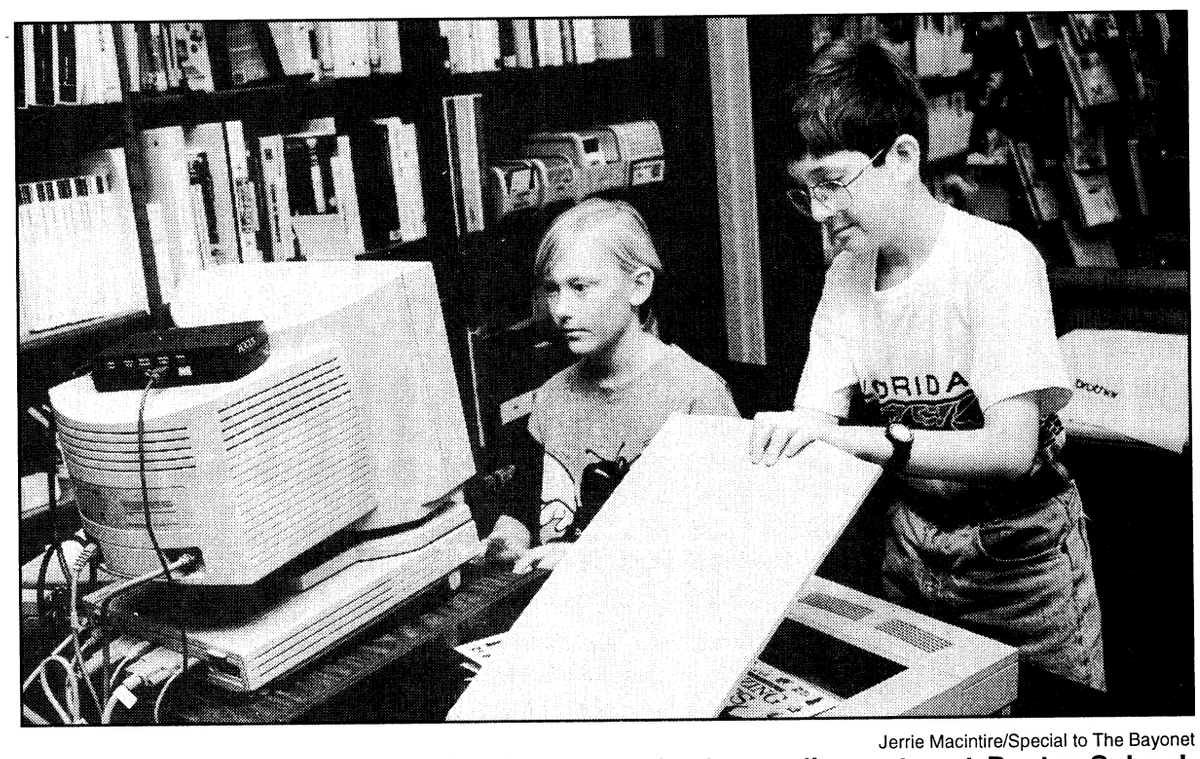
It's a mystery, a logic puzzle and a science lesson all rolled into one activity.

In the manner of the boy detective from popular literature, Encyclopedia Brown, Fort Benning fourth-graders cracked the case of the wet teddy bear by using skills of deduction and clues such as clothing fibers and fingerprints.

White School fourth-graders, under the direction of teacher Cynthia Kenimer, visited the "crime scene" and gathered clues as to which fictitious friend snatched Mr. Bear and took him swimming while Sam napped.

"Their natural curiosity and enthusiasm for solving mysteries make this a fun science activity that teaches the importance of gathering and analyzing facts," Kenimer said as the students dressed as crime-lab chemists and rotated through various scientific tests.



A close look at the loops and whorls on a fingerprint narrowed the list of suspects, and a scrap of cloth near the crime scene clinched the case, students said.

Circumstantial evidence at first pointed to a number of suspects, but scientific tests like the fiber analysis and ink stain tests revealed Bill and Jan to be the culprits.

This activity showed Greg Wolfe that, "You need a lot of evidence to get the right person," while Henry Buffeteau learned, "You need to check all the facts before you draw your conclusions."

Kenimer said the students enjoyed the activity designed to teach important scientific concepts, methods and techniques.

"It also ties into our language arts. We've been reading Encyclopedia Brown books this year," she said, referring to the popular series about a boy detective who cracks neighborhood cases.

Dexter teams recognized in media festival

By Jerrie Macintire

Dexter students participating in a media festival centered around technology have been recognized at the district and state levels, and two entries will go on to international competition in the fall.

Four Dexter teams entered the festival. Using their media center resources, they created videos, booklets and documentaries centered around themes such as the environment and the upcoming Olympic Games in Georgia.

"Students not only learned more about their subjects, but came away with a better understanding of how to solve technological problems," said Lynn Harp, media specialist who acted as a consultant for the students.

In addition, the students have more appreciation for the amount of time it takes to produce exceptional technological products, she said.

It was time consuming, agreed student Bryan Marchant, but it was also fun. Marchant and Alex Gorski worked together on a documentary about endangered animals.

In the process, they learned about copyright law as they wrote letters of request to use specific materials from publications such as National Geographic.

Their copyright requests went smoothly, Gorski said, but they ran into trouble while scanning photos.

"We ran out of memory. We had to make more memory available," Marchant said.

In addition to scanning photos, they used techniques such as animation, scrolling and eye-catching graphics to illustrate the plight of four endangered animals.

Other Dexter teams developed their own styles and used different approaches, Harp said. For example, the "Rhyme Time News" team presented a humorous spoof of Mother Goose Nursery Rhymes designed to entertain.

The entries were judged on content and organization, technical quality and general effectiveness. All entries received 90 or more out of 100 points at the district competition. "Rhyme Time News" and "Endangered Animals" met the criteria to go forward to international competition in the fall, Harp said.

The productions and participating students from Marge Brasfield's and Carroll Thebaud's classes include:

- The illustrated booklet, "A Special Gift" by students Caleb Pillow, Katie Gleen, Tierney Stevens and Rickey Bernard.
- A video about P.H. Polk by Eric Burtner-Abt, Kenny Davis, Michael Scribner and Aaron Wilkins.
- A humorous video, "Rhyme Time News," by Lisa Fry, Jessica Kettler, Hannah McCarthey and Christina Zahn.
- A computer-generated documentary about endangered animals by Gorski and Marchant.

The event was sponsored by the Georgia Association for Instructional Technology Inc., an affiliate of the Association for Education Communications and Technology; the Georgia Library Media Association, an affiliate of the Georgia Association of Educators; the National Education Association and the American Association of School Libraries.

DARE: Students pledge to say no to drugs, alcohol

By Jerrie Macintire

The pressures on children to stay away from drugs and alcohol and to avoid violence are far greater than they were a generation ago, according to Col. Ronnie Alton, provost marshal.

Alton encouraged youngsters to apply techniques they have been learning in sixth grade to help them resist peer pressure and to "always, always say no to drugs and alcohol."

Alton's remarks were part graduation ceremonies of the Drug Abuse Resistance and Education program at Faith Middle School last week.

Addressing the 179 students who completed the course, Alton said, "I trust your pledges to say no to drugs, alcohol and violence will be a lifelong commitment."

Also as part of the ceremony, student essay winners presented their thoughts on how the DARE program helps them cope with pressures.

One student compared drug abuse to being "stabbed every day and slowly dying," while another asked, "Why can't people work to stop drug abuse before it happens?"

Another student addressed the problem of violence, noting it was important to avoid wearing prominent colors and clothing associated with gangs.

"Don't dress like a gang member; it will get you in trouble," she said.

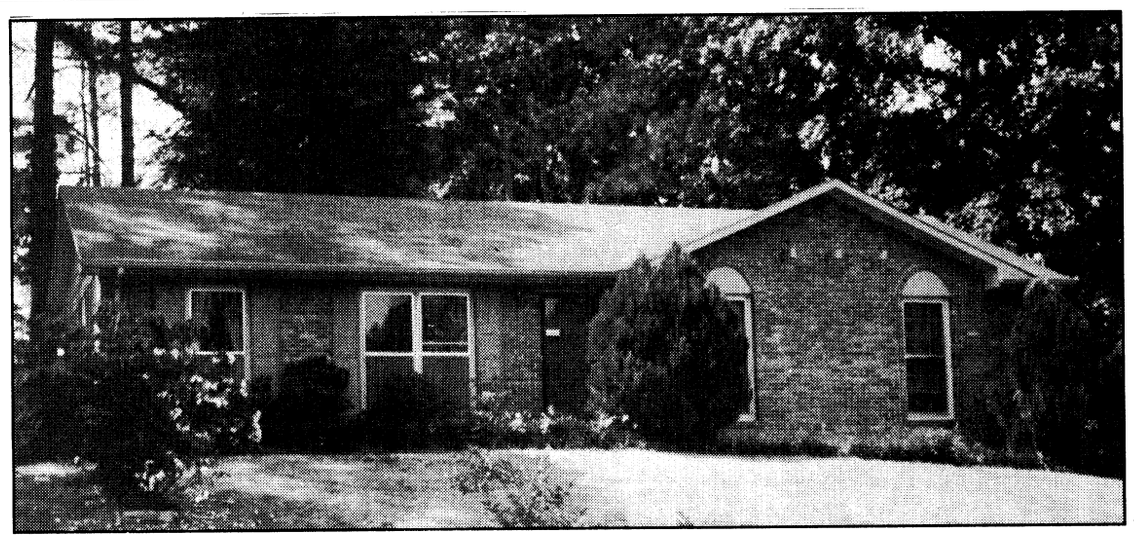
DARE coordinator Capt. Walter Jackson talks with Latoya Brantley (left) and Jessica Obermeyer.



These students were among the more than 2,000 Fort Benning sixth-graders who have completed the 17-week course over the past six years, said Capt. Walter Jackson, DARE coordinator.

DARE provides children the coping skills needed to resist drug and alcohol experimentation and to feel positive about themselves, he said.

Essay winners recognized at the ceremony were: Jessica Obermeyer, Candace Duggan, Samantha White, Latoya Brantley, Latonya Williams, Tiffany Webber, Christina Perez, Juan Gonzales, Ann-Fleur Buffeteau, Jeff Sittnick, Devin Ham, Katie Corsette, Jennifer Carter, Darrell Whittaker, Lasundra Williams and Dennis Smith.

2/69 hosts families in field

By Clay Schuett
2nd Battalion, 69th Armor Regiment

The soldiers of the 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor Regiment, received a gift in the field May 14; their families came to visit them.

After being deployed to the post training areas May 4 for Victory Focus '95, the soldiers got a break from the intense training to see their loved ones on Mother's Day. The event was planned by the battalion as a part of the training exercise.

More than 250 family members came to the battalion headquarters early that morning where they loaded onto buses which took them 35 miles to Hastings Range to see their husbands and fathers.

Upon arriving at Hastings Range, the family members were treated to a multitude of events.

To begin the day, Company D put on a combined arms live fire exercise, allowing the family members to see their husbands in action and have a better idea of what the "Speed and Power" battalion does for a living.

After viewing this demonstration, the families were given an opportunity to crawl around the vehicles that their husbands work and train on daily including an M1A1 Main Battle Tank and an M3A3 Bradley Fighting Vehicle, while also having the chance to take rides on high-mobility, multi-purpose, wheeled vehicles and view the medical platoon's aid station display.

Chaplain (Capt.) Robert Blessing provided a religious service to celebrate Mothers' Day and many games, including volleyball and toys provided by the family support group, were on hand to entertain the families while they spent valuable time together.

The day was capped off by a barbecue, where the soldiers and their families were served hot dogs and hamburgers under the bright sun.

As one wife and mother stated, "Though I would have rather had my husband at home for Mothers' Day, it was awful nice to spend time with him while he was out in the field."

Soup labels, clippers needed

Family Child Care

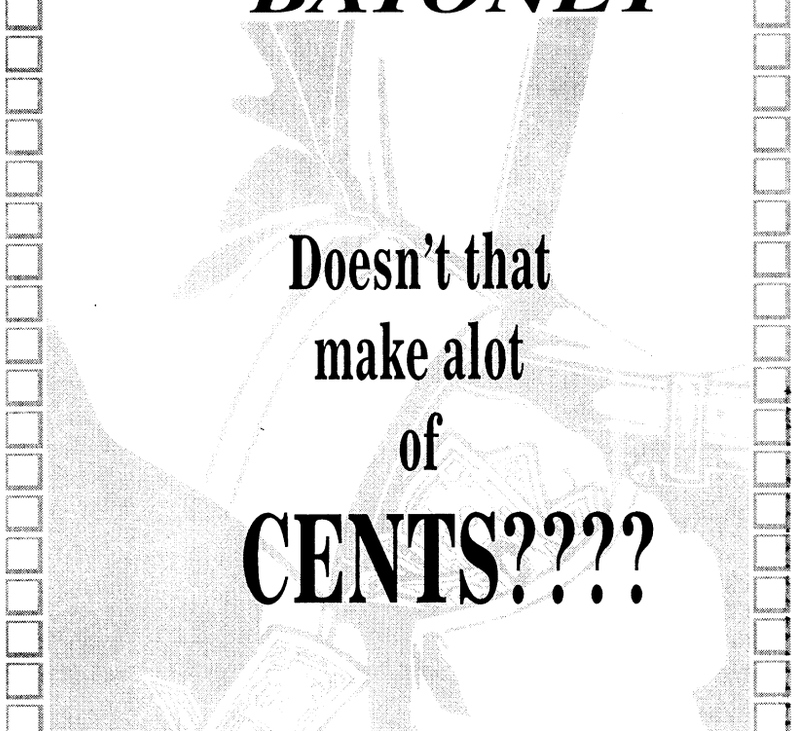
Organizers need soup labels to purchase playground equipment for Russ Pond, and volunteers to clip labels Monday and Tuesday from 6:30 to 8 p.m. at Patch School.

"We need people willing to volunteer their time to clip soup labels," Debbie Snoke, one of the organizers, said. "They need to bring some scissors and be prepared to clip."

The drive is part of the Campbell's Labels for Education program and was launched in January by the Family Child Care providers at Fort Benning.

Labels from more than 1,000 Campbell's products can be redeemed for educational equipment and materials. Only 2 percent of the 345,650 Campbell's Soup Company labels needed have been collected.

Campbell's products include anything with the company's label, Marie's, Mrs. Paul's, Swanson, V-8, Early California, Franco-American, Vlasic, Pepperidge Farm and Prego.



The goal is to collect enough labels to trade for the playground equipment. The new playground would be for children from toddler to school age. There are no playgrounds on post for this varied age group.

Only 5,000 of the 345,650 labels needed have been collected. The drive ends March 1.

There are label drop-off points at all community of life buildings and the Commissary. Many child-care providers will accept labels. Their homes can be identified by the yellow rainbows in the windows.

For information, call Snoke at 687-6823.

Pentecost gives vision of God's possibility, unifying theme

By Timothy S. Mallard
3nd Battalion, 18th Infantry Regiment

We are often more adept at seeing that which is broken and fractured in our world than that which may be joined together.

The difference between the two is often the difference between reality and possibility. It is so much easier to see that which is — than that which "may be." Herein lies the key to understanding the event in Christian history known as Pentecost.

Many today would probably be critical of Jesus Christ for leaving the earth after his resurrection. After coming out of the grave, he walked the Earth for 40 days. He did this to prove to disbelieving human eyes his complete triumph over the power of hell. Then he left his disciples, most of whom were probably just realizing the divine power of their savior.

reflections

Some today would say he left us humans in the lurch. However, before he left, he promised that one would come to bind the faithful together, strengthen them, teach them, and lead them as the people of God.

This one would be the parakletos (Greek for the comforter), or that which we know as the Holy Spirit. True to his word, Christ sent the Holy Spirit to the disciples on the day we now call Pentecost.

Saint Luke reports on the scene, and he writes:

"And suddenly there came a sound from heaven, rushing mighty wind, and it filled the whole house where they were sitting. Then there appeared to them divided tongues, as of fire, and one sat upon each of them. And they were all filled with the Holy Spirit and began to speak with other tongues, as the Spirit gave them utterance."(Acts 2:2-4 NKJV)

Some who were there believed all these people were drunk.

Saint Peter assured all present that it was only nine o'clock in the morning. Moreover, he said that what was happening was a fulfillment of a vision by the prophet Joel. This was the response by God to the crucifixion of his son, and it was a call to repentance for all who believe.

Saint Luke goes on to report that more than 3,000 people repented of their sins and joined the original disciples that day. The church, in a sense, was born.

Going back to my original assertion, I think the key to understanding this event is understanding the difference between reality and possibility. There is no question that there is brokenness, fracture, discord, disharmony, death and evil in this world. We look no farther than the headlines of any daily newspaper to prove this point. This is our reality.

I believe, however, that pentecost gives us a vision of God's possibility. Here in this event are men and women who have experienced the same things we experience. Reality then was the same as reality now.

Yet God sends his Holy Spirit to unite thousands of different people under the lordship of the resurrected Christ.

Saint Luke clearly points out that no less than 16 different nations are represented by those who hear these Galileans all testifying of " ... the wonderful works of God."

Their reality was dramatically shaken up, altered, and given a new order so that God could unite a disjointed world under the Christ.

This unifying theme of Pentecost is the mission of the church today — so that those who see may know that we are one in Christ.

God's vision for his creation includes Hispanics, blacks, whites, women, men, doctors, lawyers, Americans, Africans, soldiers, civilians, etc., all praying together, studying together, fellowshipping together. God's reality is made possible, for we are given the task to carry it out.

Pentecost teaches us that God is not content to continue to see his creation in its disjointed state. He expects the church to illustrate his vision anticipating what he shall do when Christ returns, and the kingdom of God is joined together through the Holy Spirit.

Shavuot celebrates commandments

By Chana Timoner
USAIC Chaplain Office

Shavuot (The Feast of Weeks or Pentecost) commemorates the receiving of the Ten Commandments and the Torah by the Jewish people at Mount Sinai.

Shavuot comes from the Feast of the Harvest (Exod. 23:14-19; Lev. 23:9-22), or the day of the first fruits. The Bible does not make a connection between the revelation on Mt. Sinai and Shavuot.

Shavuot is actually the culmination of that great process of birth and development of the Israelite nation (later to be called Jewish).

When the Israelites left Egypt with the mixed multitudes of slaves accompanying them, they went through the Sea of Reeds.

This may be thought of as spiritual birth waters parting to receive us into the world. At that time we were a semitic group of tribes with only political and social cohesion.

It was with the receiving of the Ten Commandments our ancestors said "We hear and we obey." With the acceptance of the teachings we became a religion and a way of life. So Passover and Shavuot are inexorably bound together as two phases of the birth of the Hebrew nation.

The laws of the Torah were given to the Jews and continued to develop under the guidance of the Biblical and prophetic leaders. These are the basis for much of our legal and ethical system in the west.

Laws of fair labor practices, equality for all men and women, fair judgement of court cases, property rights for all, inheritance laws, treatment of foreigners, rules of hygiene and cleanliness, kindness to animals, charitable acts, limitation of interest on loans, sharing of communal responsibility and more all come from the five Books of Moses (the Torah.)

Of particular note is the mixed multitude of people who left Egypt with the Israelites. Clearly the overwhelming majority of them were black slaves captured from Africa.

These people then became part of the Israelite nation as they, too, heard the voice of the Lord at the foot of Mt. Sinai.

reflections

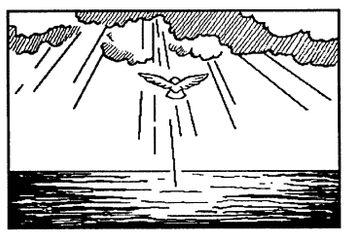
Historically, Jews have been found in Africa as well as other parts of the world. This is one of the many places where the revealed law teaches us the there is no place in Judaism for prejudice.



Many people throughout the world embrace Judaism. It is a "light unto the nations" of much of the world in monotheism (belief on one God), ethics and legal systems

Shavuot is surely a feast for all people who value truth, democracy, and following God's path in this world.

ATHLETIC EQUIPMENT

Sports section opens at Mini Mall

Items relocated from Main Mall Post Exchange

By Jan Wesner Childs
Special to The Bayonet©

Sports equipment, shoes, clothing and exercise equipment are now for sale in a new section of the Main Post Mini Mall Post Exchange.

"It has (in-line skates), it has swimming (apparel), it has exercise equipment, hunting and fishing equipment," said Mary Babbitt, manager of Army and Air Force Exchange Services for Fort Benning.

Those items are no longer available in the Main Post Exchange, Babbitt said.

The new 3,000 square-foot sports section is an effort by AAFES to cater to the needs of soldiers.

Babbitt said a local marketing survey showed that AAFES customers wanted a bigger selection of sports equipment.

Another revamped section of the exchange includes an expanded paperback book section and video rentals.

"We took a space that was nothing but storage area and made it into a store," Babbitt said.

The Sports Store had its official opening with a ribbon-cutting ceremony June 1. Marine Gunnery Sgt. Greg Gibson, assigned to the U.S. Mint, and Sgt. Willie Briskey, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment, did the honors.

Customers started shopping immediately.

"I think it's pretty nice," said Sgt. Vielka Jackson, assigned to the School of the Americas. "I think this is a pretty good idea."

Jackson said she thinks the shop is a good location for the sports equipment because it's convenient to soldiers during lunchtime.

Shop manager Ken Buckner said convenience was a consideration. The Mini Mall is closer to many soldiers than the Main Mall PX, he said.

Buckner said that only a few items were eliminated to make space for the new sports section. Other items were rearranged.

"The store was actually too big for what we were doing in sales," he said. "We were just trying to fill up space."

Since most of the sporting goods have been moved out of the Main PX to the Sports Shop, Babbitt said some PX departments will be expanded. She said there may be more luggage and linens at the main store in the future.

PT uniform

Updated reg now in effect

By Lisa M. Hibbert
Bayonet staff writer

Soldiers need to be aware of the new and existing policies concerning the wear of military uniforms and dress codes established by the commanding general, according to Garrison Sgt. Maj. Steven G. Chittum.

The updated Fort Benning Regulation No. 95-12, effective June 1, allows soldiers to wear black as well as gray spandex shorts with the physical training uniform if desired.

The updated policy also established that shirts must be worn during any physical training activities.

This includes off-duty as well as on-duty physical training, according to the regulation. The policy applies to soldiers, their dependents and guests. The is not intended to change existing dress standards at Fort Benning's swimming pools.

Physical training uniforms are to be worn for organized Army PT and those activities normally associated with Army physical readiness training.

"PT uniforms are not to be worn while (in-line) skating, playing tennis or any other sport not designed for soldier readiness," Chittum said. "Although these activities may contribute to physical fitness, they are not recognized as Army PT activities."

Chittum also addressed the wearing of the battle dress and utility uniforms.

"The utility uniform is not authorized for wear off post ... except for (short) stops for gas, convenience stores, (a quick lunch, cleaners) and bona fide emergencies," according to Fort Benning Regulation No. 94-65.

"You can't go to the mall or to department stores and you should not travel long distances while in BDUs," Chittum said.

In addition to the above limitations, the BDU will not be worn after duty hours, in any off-post facility that serves alcohol.

The Class A or B uniform is the only appropriate dress for any business that requires more than 45 minutes, according to FB Regulation No. 94-65.

The Hi Tech boots are not authorized for wear with any Army uniform, Chittum said.

"There is an established dress code for use of any facility on the installation, which applies to soldiers, family members, retirees and all guests," Chittum said.

"(While) AAFES (the Army and Air Force Exchange Service) does not enforce the dress code, it is the user's responsibility to adhere," he said. The Courtesy Patrol will enforce the dress code. (Admittance to facilities may be denied if the code is violated.)"

Post to host conference

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Fort Benning will be the site of the 1995 Senior Leader Update Conference Wednesday and Thursday. Maj. Gen. John W. Hendrix, the commandant of the U.S. Army Infantry School, will welcome attendees at 8 a.m. Wednesday in Infantry Hall's Classroom 6.

The conference will provide a forum for discussions in the areas of doctrine, training, leader development, force design of infantry organizations, equipment and materiel requirements and other aspects of the infantry mission.

The conference will afford an opportunity for dialogue among major field commanders, industry and the Infantry School on significant issues.

The conference will focus on the latest advances in soldier systems, a demonstration of "Land Warrior XXI" and the use of sophisticated computer systems that will "digitize" the infantry soldier and enhance his ability to gather and pass on information on the battlefield.

Emerging technological, organizational and training advances will be examined that will transform the Army into a smaller, rapidly deployable, yet lethal force envisioned by its leaders that will serve the nation well into the 21st century.

MWR to get new logo

By Marc G. Turchin
Bayonet staff writer

The Morale, Welfare and Recreation Division, Directorate of Community Activities is getting a new logo. At Fort Benning, DCA will unveil the new logo in conjunction with Army Community Service's birthday celebration July 21.

Blue and red graphics on a white background give the new logo a patriotic look. A half globe, representing the worldwide scope of MWR, rests atop the letters "MWR." Underneath "MWR," the slogan "Serving America's Army" stands out in small red letters.

"This will give the MWR operations, inside the Department of the Army, a united corporate identity," said Brian Smith, chief, Marketing Division, Directorate of Community Activities.

Last summer, people submitted more than 140 graphic designs and slogans in a U.S. Army Community and Family Support Center-sponsored contest. The winning graphic was designed by Debra Bowman-Stacy, Army's Shades of Green at Walt Disney World Resort, Lake Buena Vista, Florida.

MWR
SERVING AMERICA'S ARMY

"We want to create a new MWR corporate image, which communicates our mission to deliver top quality programs to soldiers, civilians and their families wherever in the world they are stationed, " said Brig. Gen. John G. Meyer Jr., commander, U.S. Army Community and Family Support Center.

"Simply, this is going to show that our purpose is to serve America's Army," Smith said.

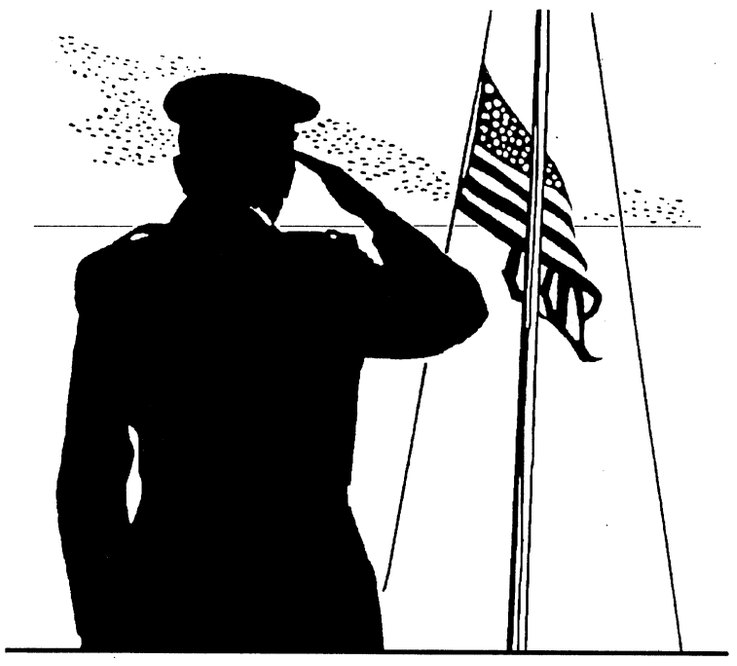
Soldiers' winning spirit, pride, training, readiness will sustain America's superiority



Army to celebrate 220th

The celebration of the 220th birthday of the U.S. Army Wednesday is especially significant this year because it represents both a rebirth and new beginning for much of our Army.

As we move toward the 21st century, our re-engineering effort, which you will develop into a full-grown program, will lead Forces Command and the Army into the 21st century.

We are well into a period of change that has challenged us as never before. This year will be a turning point in how we do our jobs and with your help and dedication, the next birthday we celebrate will find our Army stronger, more agile and more powerful than even today.

We must prepare now for tomorrow's crises. We must be ready to overcome obstacles, just as Gen. George Washington's Continentals were prepared to cross the bitterly cold Delaware River on Christmas night to win their first major victory.

We must cherish the heritage of that Army of patriots and emulate their strength and courage to ensure we win our next battle.

On each Army birthday, we must rededicate ourselves to protect this great country. No other Army in the world has soldiers more determined, more professional and more dedicated to winning than the men and women who wear the U.S. Army green. Your winning spirit, pride, training and readiness will sustain our superiority for years to come.

Thank you very much for the excellent support you have given me during my years with Forces Command. I am extremely proud of you every day and will carry that great memory to my new assignment.

We must continue to work hard, not matter what our jobs or responsibilities so that we may celebrate many more Army birthdays together — proud that because of our efforts, all citizens can celebrate birthdays in a free, strong America.

— Gen. Dennis Reimer

How to get your news in The Bayonet

Editor's note: Many people call us with questions about how to get their information in the paper or with erroneous information about deadlines, so we have compiled the following for your information.

Film, photos, stories, letters to the editor and other news items for publication must arrive at The Bayonet office no later than noon Friday prior to the next week's publication

Our mission

The Bayonet is here to serve you — our audience. Our mission is to provide timely, accurate and truthful information that supports Army goals and directives.

We get a lot of feedback from readers, and we appreciate your letters, story ideas and comments. We appreciate the positive comments, and we do our best to address the negative ones.

As Fort Benning's authorized newspaper, we are dedicated to giving you the most complete coverage possible. In order to do this, we rely on members of our audience to keep us informed about their units' or directorates' activities.

Requesting coverage of news events

The staff of The Bayonet enjoys covering newsworthy events on post that are timely and pertinent to our readers. Some events we cover include brigade-level changes of command, changes in post policies or procedures and other postwide events.

We don't have enough personnel to cover everything on post, so we focus on the events that affect most of the post.

Also due to our limited number of personnel, we prefer that coverage requests be submitted at least two weeks in advance.

Some events we do not send a reporter to cover are parties, dinners, dining events, dances, balls, teas, coffees, club and organization meetings and elections, award presentations, changes of command below the brigade level, check presentations and group photos.

The frequency of such events on post and small number of photojournalists on The Bayonet staff prohibits us from covering these sorts of events.

Also, Army Regulation 360-81, which governs the production and content of Department of the Army newspapers, states covering such events is not a function of the post newspaper or the Public Affairs Office.

If you need a photographer to record events for official purposes, call the Training and Audiovisual Support Center's photo lab at 545-4417.

Deadlines

Film, photos, stories, letters to the editor and other news items intended for The Bayonet must arrive in our office no later than noon Friday prior to the next week's publication.

Also, you may leave stories, film, photos for publication in The Bayonet's drop box located in the Information Office, Room 111, Infantry Hall, Building 4. The deadline for items left in the drop box is noon Friday, also.

Copy must be typed and doubled-spaced, except for letters to the editor which may be handwritten. Everything else must be typed. Typed copy is easier for us to edit, easier for our typesetter and results in fewer errors.

Use civilian dates, times, the name of the building as well as the building number. You may include the street or road if desired. Also, be sure to include the first and last names of all individuals mentioned in the story, and spell out all acronyms on first reference.

If you submit an announcement for post briefs or community briefs, check it when it appears in The Bayonet. Then, if you must resubmit it at a later date, submit it as it ran in the paper.

Story ideas, submission

If you believe you have a good story idea and want to write the story yourself, call us to see if we're interested. If you don't want to write the story, call us and we'll arrange a time for you to talk with a reporter.

We reserve the right to edit all stories for publication, and we cannot guarantee if or when submitted stories will appear in the paper. Stories that are submitted after the deadline will be published in the next week's paper.

Stringers

Stringers are people belonging to various units who write about and take photos of unit activities for The Bayonet.

Without stringers, our coverage of unit activities would be decreased. Unit commanders who would like to arrange for a stringer should call The Bayonet's command information officer at 545-2201.

Stringers need not be trained or have experience as journalists; The Bayonet will provide training and materials including film and photo processing.

Letters

The Bayonet welcomes letters to the editor and readers' responses to the paper's content. Letters may be typed, or handwritten, and must include name and telephone number.

Our policy is to staff letters to the appropriate directorate or activity and to run their response at the same time we run your letter.

Also, names may be withheld upon request; however, in order for your letter to be considered for publication, you must include your name and daytime telephone number. Letters received without the author's name and telephone number will not be published. We reserve the right to edit all letters.

Photos

We will accept photos that are black and white glossy prints or color prints. We also accept black-and-white and color negatives and color slides. We prefer action shots — people doing their jobs or interacting with other people. Head and shoulder shots of individuals are also acceptable.

Complaints

If you have a complaint, question or comment about The Bayonet, call the editor or the command information officer at 545-2201.

Corrections

We strive for accuracy, so if we make a error, we will correct it in the next edition of The Bayonet. Call us at 545-2201.

Board votes to automate cafeterias

By Jerrie Macintire
Special to The Bayonet©

The Fort Benning school board voted to start automating the school cafeterias next year using money saved from a bus contract.

The schools saved $33,000 from an unused portion of a contract, which is enough to install the system for cafeteria automation, buy site licenses for all the schools, and implement the system in one pilot school, according to Alice Skinner, Fort Benning Schools' director of logistics.

The board has been considering the move for months in the face of cafeteria costs increases but did not have the necessary funds. The board voted to install the Computer Assisted Food Service system in one pilot school and add other schools as other funds became available from appropriated and nonappropriated sources.

The board has been exploring ways to cut the cost of providing meals without compromising taste and nutrition. The first half of the year, the school lunch fund lost money each month because of insurance costs for employees and spiraling food prices.

Menu changes and cost-cutting measures are helping, and cafeteria automation should help even more in the future, according to Col. Gregory Camp, school board president and post chief of staff.

"It's nice to see that slope going up," said Camp as Skinner reported the fund had a net income of $4,586 for the month of April.

In a separate issue, the school board learned it would have to implement savings across other areas because of unexpected budget cuts.

According to figures released by Richard Skinner, assistant superintendent, the Fort Benning Schools will receive more than $3 million less than anticipated.

Assistant superintendent told the board Fort Benning was slated to get $22,584,000, but will receive only $19,549,000.

All segments of the school operation will be scrutinized, he said noting, "We really have our work cut out for us."

The board didn't discuss specific budget cuts.

In a separate issue, the superintendent assured visiting parents of gifted children that, "In no way, shape or form will the gifted program be cut."

Several parents of gifted students attended the meeting to show support for education in general and the gifted program in particular, they said.

The parents, who had heard rumors that the gifted program would be cut, said it's important to continue offering an accelerated curriculum so the students can work to their abilities.

Dr. Dell Karr, superintendent, assured them the program would continue, probably in its current format if enrollment remains the same.

The format depends upon the numbers of students enrolled, but current figures show the numbers will be about the same for next year, Karr said.

Also at the meeting, the board voted in a closed session to decline to grant an exception to policy that would enable a child who is too young by one day to start school next year.

The child's birthday is Sept. 2, one day past the state cutoff day of Sept. 1. The parents questioned the fact that if the child were enrolled in another Department of Defense school, such as the one at Fort Bragg, N.C., he could begin school since the state of N.C. has a later cutoff date. Camp said the soldier brought up a good point and responded the board would bring up the question of a uniform policy for DoD schools regarding start dates at the next policy meeting. Currently, most DoD schools adapt the state regulations regarding issues such as age requirements.

In other action:

• The board recognized outgoing members Lt. Col. Andrew Stewart and Mary Renn.

• Three Faith Middle School students read essays commemorating Victory in Europe Day and the end of World War II. The poems, by Diressa Sellers, Lenita Lawson and Jennifer Chung, reflected reactions of various ethnic groups to the war and its aftermath.

• Karr reported the partnership between Faith Middle School and Spencer High School was progressing well.

Members present include Karr, Camp, Stewart, Renn, Col. Richard Rutledge, Maj. Robert Thompson, Staff Sgt. Leroy Coronado, Adrienne Porter, Lisa Grover and Karen Marchant.

Environmental scholarships available

By Elsie Jackson
Army Career and Alumni Program

Service members, veterans and Department of Defense civilians interested in environmental management or cultural and natural resource management careers now have an additional scholarship opportunity to pursue.

The Southern Environmental Education Partnership is looking for grant applicants for the fall 1995 school year.

Classes will be conducted at Jacksonville State University in Jacksonville, Ala., and at Talladega College nearby.

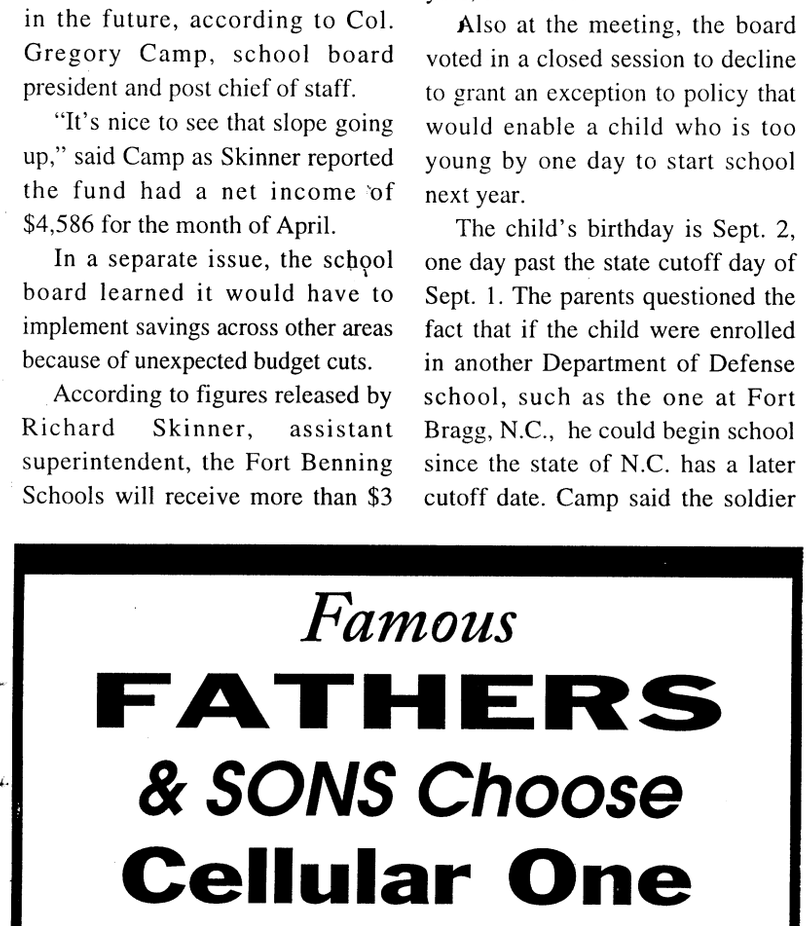
All individuals are eligible to apply for these programs, however, current and former members of the armed forces and individuals who are or have been employed by the Department of Defense (or its contractors or subcontractors) will be given preference.

Along with the standard forms and letters required for scholarship applications, individuals should be prepared to submit a Standard Form 171 (Application for Federal Employment) or Optional Form 612 (Optional Application for Federal Employment) with an OF 306 Form (Declaration for Federal Employment), and a copy of their separation papers.

Scholarship applications and the list of forms and letters required is available at the Fort Benning Army Career and Alumni Program office.

Scholarships leading to a bachelor of science degree are based on a three-year track, and include tuition for six regular semesters (academic) and for three (mandatory) summer terms, books, supplies and insurance.

Scholarship recipients may pursue either a bachelor of science degree with a major in chemistry and minor in environmental management, or a bachelor of science degree with a major in biology and a minor in cultural and natural resource management.



Upon completion of this program, individuals must agree to serve as full-time civilian employees in an environmental position with the Department of Defense (if such employment is available and offered) for 12 months for each school year the scholarship provides.

Students entering the program through Talladega College spend the spring and fall terms for their first two years at Talladega College and their third year in residence at Jacksonville State.

Individuals pursuing a master's in public administration degree with a concentration in environmental science management may apply for a fellowship that will provide tuition, up to $300 per semester for textbooks and fees, and up to $162 per year for insurance.

For more information on these programs, contact the Fort Benning Army Career and Alumni Program office at 545-7009 or 545-4913. The ACAP offices are located in Building 2617, Soldiers' Plaza.

Prevent 'parvo' in puppies — get them vaccinated

Ruth J. Spaller

To ward off dehydration, puppies with parvo are treated with antibiotics and intravenous fluids, which can cost anywhere from $150 to $600.

By Ruth J. Spaller
Bayonet staff writer

A disease known as "parvo" is spreading through the post's dog population; and, if you have a puppy that has not been vaccinated, it may be in danger of getting it.

Canine parvo virus is a highly contagious form of viral diarrhea that is spread from dog to dog through direct or indirect contact with infected feces.

The Benning Animal Hospital treated more than 20 cases of parvo in May, and there has been an increased number of cases over the last few months, according to Dr. Lena Reed, the veterinarian there.

A majority of those cases have come from Fort Benning, Reed said, especially the neighborhoods around Arrowhead and Lumpkin roads.

"A lot of them (infected dogs) come from the same street," Reed said. "It's that easily carried."

How parvo spreads

Though dogs of any age can be infected, parvo most often affects puppies. Rottweilers are especially susceptible to the disease — something in the breed's immune system makes it more sensitive to parvo than other types of dogs, Reed said.

The virus is so contagious that a person can walk into the yard or home of an infected dog and carry it back to their own home on their shoes, she said.

The virus is not airborne, Reed said. Dogs have to ingest it, but they can eat it on anything — grass, sticks or toys — or pick it up by licking their feet or chewing a shoe.

The virus is resistant to temperature extremes and can live in the soil for up to three years, making it very difficult to eliminate.

A 10 percent bleach solution can be used to kill it, Reed said, "But you can't bleach carpets or furniture," and the bleach solution may kill grass.

"The parvo virus is almost impossible to kill, and impossible to avoid," said Dr. James R. Thorsen, veterinarian at the Animal Health Center, which has treated 30 to 40 parvo cases in the past few months.

"You can't avoid exposure," Thorsen said, but with a proper vaccination program, it is possible to avoid infection.

Preventing parvo

Though vaccinations do not guarantee that a dog is immunized against parvo, "Every puppy needs to be vaccinated," Reed said. "It's the only hope we have of protecting them."

The main problem is that people have no idea when to start vaccinating puppies, she said.

Puppies should receive their first vaccination between 4 and 6 weeks of age, or when they are weaned. (Prior to weaning, maternal antibodies passed on by the mother protect puppies.)

This should be followed by a series of vaccinations at two- to three-week intervals to help build up immunity.

Parvo Vaccinations

Vaccinations — Puppies should receive their first vaccination between 4 and six weeks of age, followed by a series of vaccinations at two- and three-week intervals until they are about 16 weeks old. Then they should receive yearly boosters.

Veterinary Treatment Facility — The Fort Benning Veterinary Treatment Facility provides all basic vaccinations, including those for canine parvo virus. Appointments can be scheduled by calling 545-4444 Monday mornings. Animals requiring emergency treatment or hospitalization are referred to civilian veterinary clinics.

Once the initial vaccinations are completed (at about the age of 16 weeks) dogs should get a yearly booster.

Vaccination schedules may vary from veterinarian to veterinarian and depend on the age of the puppy, Thorsen said. "The most important thing is to get on a routine preventive health-care program."

Symptoms and treatment

Canine parvo virus, which is not contagious to humans, shows up between four to seven days after exposure, Reed said.

The most obvious symptoms include vomiting, depression and bloody, fluid diarrhea, but parvo also causes loss of appetite, high fever, rapid dehydration and death.

Puppies and dogs with these symptoms should be immediately examined by a veterinarian, who can determine if they have the virus by doing a fecal test and a white blood cell count.

Treatment consists of antibiotics and intravenous fluids to ward off dehydration, and can cost anywhere from $150 to $600 depending on how severely affected the dog is and how long the animal remains sick, Reed said.

The recovery rate is only 50 percent for Rottweilers, but can be as high as 80 to 90 percent in other breeds, she said.

Generally, if a dog recovers from parvo, it will not get it again, according to Thorsen.

New vaccines are becoming available, Thorsen said, and even with those available now, "parvo is a much easier disease to prevent than it used to be."

Accidental deaths in TRADOC on rise in '95

TRADOC News Service

FORT MONROE, Va. — After recording the best record in several years in fiscal 1994, Training and Doctrine Command safety officials have seen accidental deaths in the command nearly equal last year's total in just the first eight months of fiscal 1995.

By the second week of May, there have been 25 accidental deaths throughout TRADOC. There were 26 in all of last year.

"And we still have the peak summer season ahead of us," said Dave Prentice, installation safety manager in the TRADOC safety office. Privately owned vehicle accidents continue to be the main cause of deaths. But training accidents have accounted for seven more.

"Commanders are the key to force protection," said Gen. William W. Hartzog, TRADOC commander, in a message to center and school commanders. "Your personal involvement and the involvement of your subordinate commanders and leaders will significantly raise safety awareness of our soldiers, civilian employees and their family members.

"Re-emphasize the use of risk assessment and management as an integral part of all operations and training activities."

Training accident statistics include the deaths of four ranger students in a Florida swamp in February.

Two military vehicle accidents also accounted for two deaths. One occurred when the driver of a tanker truck attempted to pass a passenger car on a highway and lost control of the truck. A high-mobility, multi purpose, wheeled vehicle being driven too fast on a dirt road in a training area went out of control. The soldier who was killed had been standing by the machine gun mount.

"What is really significant about training deaths is that training is the most controlled activity," Prentice said. "It has been planned and assessed for risk. When there is a fatality, that means there is a breakdown in the system."

Among the privately owned vehicle accidents were four motorcycle wrecks. The official cause of nearly every accident was "lost control." However, Prentice said the actual cause was high speed or fatigue, or a combination of both.

A variety of nontraining accidents accounted for six deaths, according to Prentice. They included a small arms discharge and a fire.

Nine of the soldiers who died were from other major commands.

Senior leaders strive for improvement

By Lisa M.Hibbert
Bayonet staff writer

A unit self-assessment orientation for senior executive leaders was conducted May 31 and June 1 at Uchee Creek.

Mary Nell McCorquodale, president of McC Consulting Incorporated of Annapolis, Md., helped to facilitate the exchange of ideas and information at the seminar, said Sarah McLaney, post Army Communities of Excellence and Total Army Quality coordinator.

"Ms. McCorquodale was highly recommended as a consultant," said McLaney. "The Department of the Army said she was the best in training senior-level officers in the Army performance improvement criteria."

Strengths and weaknesses were pulled out and looked at as participants tossed ideas back and forth. McCorquodale encouraged the exchange and allowed the leaders to assist each other by throwing out solutions to each other's problems.

The objectives of the seminar were to increase understanding of the Army performance improvement criteria's applicability to improve mission effectiveness, to identify the post's five focus areas for improvement, to learn how to use the assessment process as a day-to-day management tool and to clarify how senior leaders can support the use of self assessment for the Army performance improvement criteria cycle.

Key major focus areas for the seminar were delivery of training, delivery of doctrine development, combat development, soldier quality of life and a force projection platform.

"The feedback from the critiques has been really positive," McLaney said. "A lot of the participants felt it was an excellent working session."

While this type of seminar has been popular in the Air Force, this was one of the first that the Army has conducted, McLaney said.

"The seminar is a good way for managers to learn what approaches to use, how to deploy ideas and to evaluate the results," McLaney said. "It is a good way for mangers to learn what needs improvement and how they can make those improvements."

Heavy equipment operator training available

By Mary Allen
Army Career and Alumni Program

The Army Career and Alumni Program office sponsors a skill development program that provides training opportunities for soldiers, civilians and family members who are transitioning from the Army.

A new partner in the program, Transportation Technologies South Inc., offers training for persons pursuing a career in heavy equipment operations, commercial drivers licenses or both.

The Trans-Tech South training program was conceived to provide all aspects of heavy equipment operator and class A driver training. The training center is located on Route 1, Box 282C, Opelika, Ala. The training center is 14 miles west of Phenix City on Highway 80.

The company will operate both a full-time and part-time program of instruction for soldiers. The course includes 200 hours of detailed instruction for students in the operation, maintenance and safety of heavy equipment and another 200 hours of instruction on commercial drivers training.

"Although our program may not be for everyone, almost anyone with a reasonable degree of motor skills and a willing mind can learn to operate heavy equipment or drive a truck," said Joe Stanley, owner of Trans-Tech South. "It should be remembered that there is a great demand in the job market for these professionals; just look at the number of job opportunities in the Sunday newspaper."

Financial help may be available for eligible soldiers. Generally, soldiers who are transitioning as a result of the downsizing of the Army will qualify for grants.

The only way to be sure a soldier is eligible for a grant is to register at ACAP for a referral to the Department of Labor for final approval. For those persons who are not eligible for a grant, Trans-Tech South has alternative financing plans to discuss with soldiers.

To learn more about the Trans-Tech South heavy equipment training programs, call Stanley at (334) 298-9194 or call the ACAP office at 545-4892 or 545-7009.

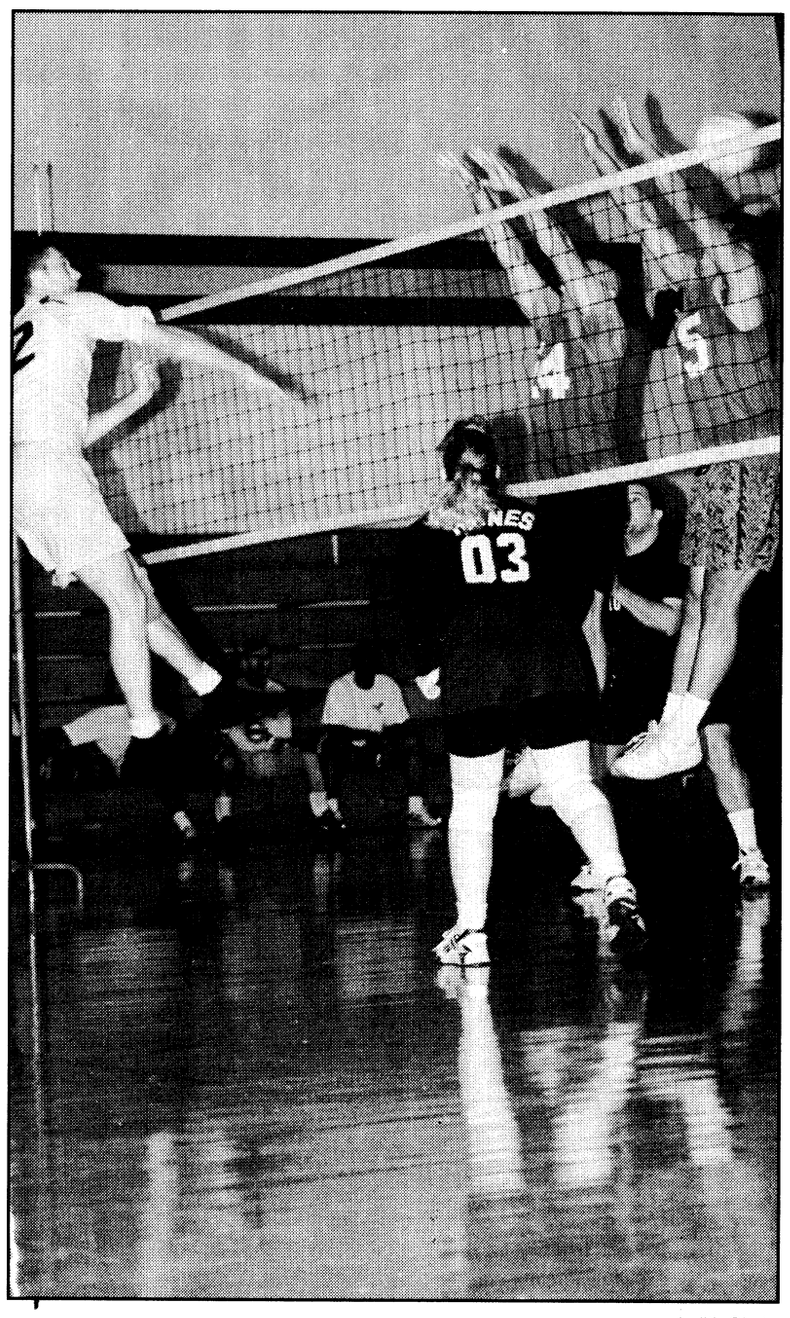
SOA remains undefeated

By Judith Ginder
School of the Americas

The School of the Americas volleyball team slammed the U.S. Army Medical Department Activity two sets to one May 31 at Audie Murphy Gymnasium.

MEDDAC edged past SOA in the first set 15-10, but SOA lead the rest of the match, winning the second and third sets 15-9, 15-11.



The 10-man team, coached by Emilio Alvarado, has an impressive 8-0 record. Members attribute this to teamwork.

"The team is really well set. We know what needs to be done and we do it together," said Antonio Vega.

"One player cannot win the game; obviously it must be a group effort," said Fernando Gracia. "However, when you put all of our talents together, the team comes out on top."

Without giving away any team secrets, Gracia said that coach Alvarado has a knack for positioning his players on the court. Capitalizing on each man's talent makes a winning team, he said.

With only four more games left in the season, the SOA team has already secured a first-place position in the upcoming post-season tournament. But members say they are not going to let that get them overconfident. They will still strive to be undefeated.

Army women grab basketball title

By Stephen Barrett
American Forces Information Service

Army retained the armed forces women's basketball title, defeating Air Force 77-57 in the championship game at Camp Lejeune, N.C.

Paced by Sgt. Cassandra Howard of Fort Hood, Texas, Army jumped to a 40-24 halftime lead and cruised through the second half to win its second straight title. Army (3-0) defeated Air Force last year 63-47 for the 1994 interservice title.

Howard averaged nearly 25 points in the four-game tournament and scored 21 in the championship game. Sgt. Cotrina McCants of Bad Kreuznach, Germany, scored 13 points in the final, while Sgt. Gail Potts from Supreme Headquarters Allied Powers-Europe added 12.

Sgt. Stephanie Garner of Lackland Air Force Base, Texas, led Air Force scorers with 18 points. Staff Sgt. Sherry Crumpler of Peterson Air Force Base, Colo., added 10 in the losing effort.

Army had no problem defending its 1994 title, outscoring opponents 240-172 in the three-day, double-elimination tournament.

In Game 1, the Army got double-figure performances from Howard, McCants, Staff Sgt. Countess Irvin, Fort Gordon, Ga., and Spc. Tracye Coursey, Fort Bragg, N.C., in beating the Marine Corps, 82-61.

That same foursome then combined for 63 of Army's 81 points for a finals berth, defeating Air Force 81-54. Howard's 27-point performance offset the 19-point effort of Senior Airman Tracey Kinton, Osan Air Base, South Korea.

In taking second place, Air Force (2-2) first defeated Navy 73-46. Capt. Deborah Bunch, Vandenberg Air Force Base, Calif., scored 14 points and grabbed 10 rebounds in sending Navy to the consolation bracket.

After losing to Army, Air Force eliminated Navy from title contention with a 90-70 victory. Tech. Sgt. Melody Bland, Edwards Air Force Base, Calif., scored 17 points, leading five Air Force players in double figures. That win put Air Force into the finals.

In the tournament consolation game, Marine Corps Sgt. Carlotta Moore scored 25 points in pacing the Corps (1-2) to a 70-57 win over Navy (1-3). Moore got scoring help from Cpl. Trinia Allen and Sgt. Thira Coleman. The two Camp Lejeune Marines scored 12 and 10 points, respectively.

Seaman Sherrill Dancy USS Puget Sound, led Navy with 20 points.

Bass club offers active duty, retirees fishing time

By Stephen Ward
Fort Benning BASS Club

The May Tournament for the Fort Benning BASS Club was May 13 and Mother Nature enjoyed playing tricks on all involved.

This has been a very dry spring with unusually high temperatures. Tournament day was no exception. Launching the tournament from the Uchee Creek Recreation Center Ramp, the anglers attacked the Chattahoochee River with an all-out blitz. Twelve boats with 19 anglers did battle with Mother Nature and the mighty largemouth of the south. Clear skies, high temperatures, low water and post spawn meant the advantage was tilted against the anglers.

The totals for the day revealed the advantage held by the natural elements, 13 fish were weighed-in for a total of 23 pounds, 6 ounces. David Moore held onto first place with two largemouth bass weighing an even 5 pounds. Dale Courington finished a close second with 4 pounds, 12 ounces. Randy Blake closed in third place with one fish that weighed 3 pounds, 9 ounces, that also proved to be the large bass of the day.

May was also election month for the club.

Elections were conducted and new officers assumed their roles in the club. The new president is Moore, vice president is George Mendez, secretary is Bo Terry and treasurer is Harry Hall.

The Fort Benning BASS Club is open to membership to all armed forces members, all retired armed forces members and all their dependents (active and retired). Membership is also open to various Department of Defense civilians and their family members.

Meetings are the second and fourth Tuesdays for the month at 7:30 p.m. at the Scout Meeting Hall, Building 1796, on Main Post.

For more information, call Stephen Ward at 569-5705 or Moore at 298-5955.

Sports Festival sets stage for Georgia Games

Columbus Parks and Recreation

With the Georgia Games Championships set to begin in just two months, the competition heats up the first weekend in June with the Southwest District Sports Festival presented by AT&T. Last year, 1,600 athletes of all ages and skill levels participated in the Southwest District.

Swimming, a qualifying event for the championships, kicked off the festivities June 2 at the Key Pool in Columbus. Athletes may also compete in a variety of sports which include three-on-three basketball, golf, road race and walk, shooting, softball, recreational swimming and wrestling.

Swimming and track and field are the only events in this district where athletes must qualify for the Georgia Games Championships.

"The Georgia Games greatest growth potential is in the DSF program," Nick Gailey, executive director of the Georgia Games, said.

Every summer, the Georgia Games stages eight District Sports Festivals during June and championships July 20 to 24 in Atlanta.

Corporate Georgia also shows their support.The major sponsors for the 1995 Georgia Games include Greater Atlanta Sports Medicine at West Paces, WXIA-TV 11 ALiVE, AT&T, Coca-Cola, Courtyard by Marriott, IBM, Atlanta Gas Light Company, Georgia Recreation and Park Association, Inc., Mead, Subway and 99X.

For more information about volunteering or competing in the festival, call Tod Tentler, Columbus Parks and Recreation at 571-5880.

USAMU soldier wins Tennessee state title

By Deana Kussman
USAMU Public Affairs Office

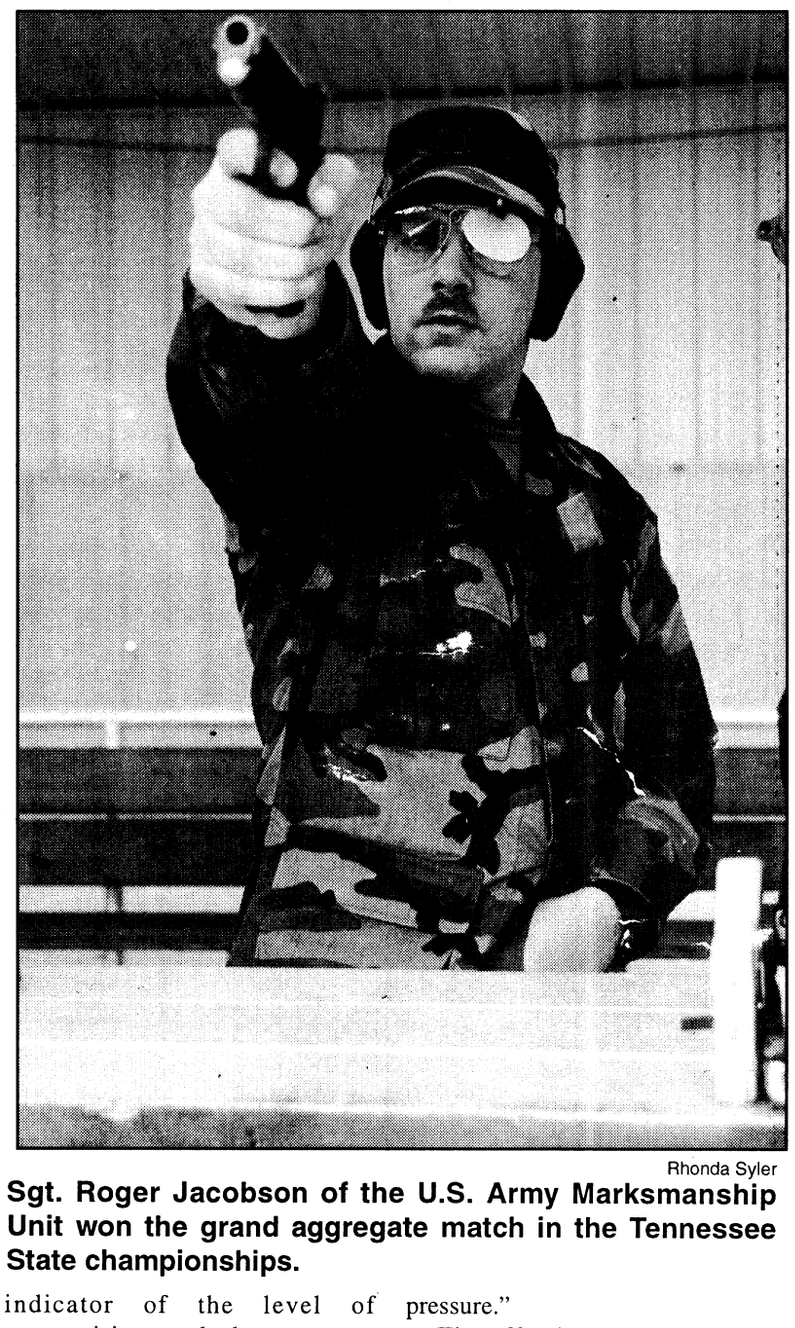
A U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit soldier endured a grueling day of competition with ease to win the Tennessee State Championships May 28 in Columbia, Tenn.

USAMU Service Pistol Team member Sgt. Roger Jacobson won the competition, scoring 2,646 out of 2,700 points in the aggregate match.

The grand aggregate match consists of three subaggregates: the .22-caliber, the center fire and the .45-caliber competitions. Each subaggregate has a possible 900 points, the scores combining to make the grand aggregate score.

The three subaggregates were shot in one day. Competition began at 7:30 a.m. and continued until 5 p.m. Early morning rain cleared up but the day remained windy.

Jacobson said he did not let the weather conditions affect his shooting.



"Wind only affects competitors who allow it to affect them," he said. Often wind disrupts a shooter's concentration, making the shooter nervous and diminishing his or her accuracy. Training to not allow his surroundings or pressure from the match to shape his shooting has been Jacobson's focus, he said. "I feel very confident in my ability to control match pressure."

Allowing this pressure to grow is fatal to a shooter's score, Jacobson said.

The Tennessee State Championships, hosted by U.S. National Guard shooters and attended by the National Guard's best marksmen, was a good indicator of the level of competition and the pressure Jacobson will face for the remainder of the year.

"It was a tight match; the competition was good," Jacobson said. "This match was a good test for seeing how you hold up under pressure."

The effectiveness of this test will be proven at his two biggest matches of the year, the Interservice Match in Little Rock, Ark., in June, and next month by the National Championships at Camp Perry, Ohio.

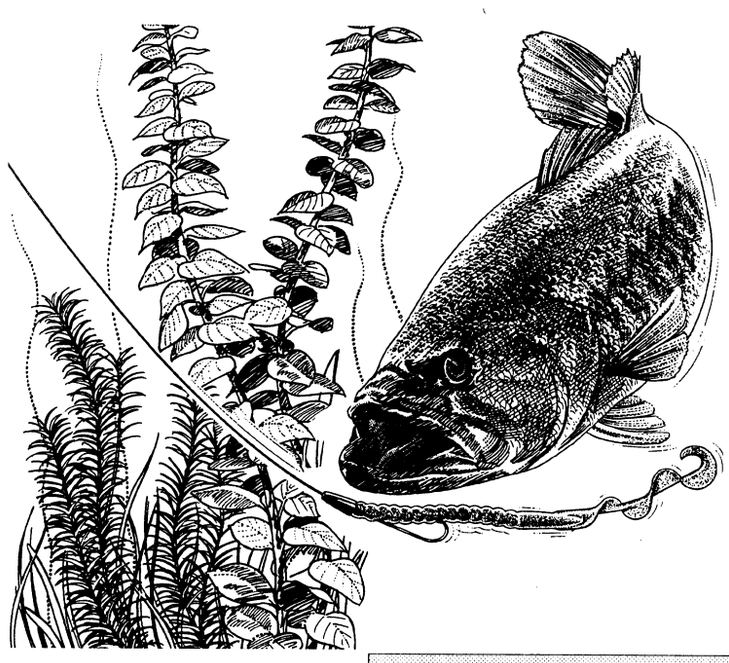
Choosing one technique aids fishing victory

By Earl Bentz and Steve Price
Outboard Marine Corporation

Years ago, professional bass fisherman Denny Brauer decided to specialize in one technique, flipping and pitching jigs. Today, he believes he made the right decision.



"I think everyone on the tournament circuit is good enough with all the techniques to get by," said Brauer, a member of the Evinrude Outboards Pro Staff, "but to win you have to choose one technique and become better at it than the competition. You have to try to elevate yourself above everyone else."

Few can argue with Brauer's success as a jig fisherman. Two years ago his tournament prize winnings totaled more than $200,000, most of it won with a jig and pitching rod.

"When you choose a particular technique, or even just a certain lure, and learn all you can about using it, you gain a tremendous boost in confidence," Brauer said.

"I think you become a better fisherman. You certainly tend to fish more efficiently and more thoroughly because you have so much confidence. When conditions get right for that technique or for that lure, your chances of winning become much greater."

The Evinrude pro believes most of today's top tournament anglers do have a specialty, although all of them are certainly capable of using and winning with other techniques.

commentary

"What happens," Brauer said, "is that when you do specialize, you tend to look for the type of water of conditions where you can use that technique. In my cases, this is shallow brush where I can flip or pitch a jig.

"You almost have tunnel vision, because you can focus so clearly on exactly what you're doing. You don't even consider other options or techniques, and that can be a tremendous advantage."

There are times, however, adds Brauer, that specialization can lead to tournament disaster.

"There are going to be times when the conditions just are not right for your technique," he said, "and no matter how hard you work, you just won't catch any fish.

"Even though specialization allows you to focus completely on what you like to do most, you still have to keep and open mind about other techniques, in case yours doesn't work.

Brauer recalls a tournament several years ago on Tennessee's Lake Chickamauga in which he spent two and a half days fishing a jig around submerged vegetation. Even though he was catching a few bass, he wasn't in a position to win.

Then he remembered a stump flat he'd found earlier in practice that might attract bass if conditions were right. Brauer made the long run to the flat and fished it not with a jig but with a crankbait, and caught enough bass to come from behind and win.

The Bayonet has ALL of Fort Benning's news

Pick a spot and fish

commentary

By Earl Bentz and Steve Price
Outboard Marine Corporation

"The lake may contain more than 100,000 acres and stretch 40 or 50 miles from end to end, but I'll probably only fish one or two tributary creeks."

That's the technique former world bass fishing champion Guido Hibdon uses when he's competing in national bass tournaments, and it's a technique anyone can use to find bass on strange water in a short time.

"I study a good lake map and pick one area of the lake just two to three miles long, and concentrate there," Hibdon said .

Hibdon's area must meet certain requirements, regardless of the time of year. The primary requirement is that it have two to four tributary creeks because if he locates bass in one he wants to be able to duplicate the conditions nearby.

"The area I choose also has to have a lot of cover and structure available," Hibdon said. "I'll look for vegetation, boat docks, deep channels, points, flats, or standing timber. These are all places bass can and will utilize, and I'll fish them all; but, if they're close to each other, I won't have to spend all my time running from place to place."

The Johnson pro also looks for subtle things his competition might miss. These include small cuts and channels hardly wide enough for his boat, or secondary points within a cove or tributary that have deep water nearby.

Hibdon is also famous for using light line and small lures, a tactic shunned by most other anglers in big tournaments.

During a recent national tournament on Alabama's Wheeler Lake, a lake well-known for producing heavy largemouth and smallmouth bass, Hibdon pitched a tiny three-eighths ounce jig beside a piling and hooked a six pound, 11 ounce smallmouth, the heaviest of his career. Four casts later to the same dock piling, he hooked but lost an even larger smallmouth. That lost fish was probably worth more than $4,000 in possible prize money.

ask the judge

By George R. Smawley
Office of the Staff Judge Advocate

Q: What are the regulations governing auto theft and vandalism on and off post, and what can be claimed?

A: The national epidemic of auto theft and vandalism has expanded to military installations with increasing frequency.

Fortunately, the military claims system offers some relief to active duty service members who find themselves the victim of this type of crime.

Army Regulation 27-20, Chapter 11, defines vehicles as "automobiles, motorcycles, mopeds, utility trailers, camping trailers, trucks, motor homes, boats, boat trailers, bicycles and aircraft."

Damage or theft to these vehicles may be compensated up to $3,000 where the following conditions are met:

- The damage and theft occurred while the vehicle was located at the soldier's on-post quarters or authorized off-post lodging (hotel while on temporary duty but not off-post housing at permanent duty station), or the soldier's assigned place of duty
- The vehicle must be properly insured and registered with a state department of motor vehicles and the Fort Benning Provost Marshal's Office
- At the time of the incident that gave rise to the damage or theft, the vehicle must have been lawfully parked in accordance with post regulations and directives.

Claimants are also required to secure their vehicles and any property contained within. Motorcycles and bicycles should be secured inside a locked storage shed or chained to a fixed object such as a rack, post or tree.

Failure to register, insure or properly secure your vehicle pursuant to law and regulation could result in the denial of the claim. This includes property located inside of the vehicle.

For example, radar detectors are not compensable because they are used to evade the law, and stereo equipment must be bolted to the vehicle in such a way that tools are required to remove it. Small high-value items such as radio headsets and expensive sunglasses should be secured in the truck of the vehicle or locked in the glove compartment.

For more information, call the Fort Benning Claims Office, Office of the Staff Judge Advocate, at 545-2281.

A little milk goes a long way

American Institute for Cancer Research

As if there's not enough confusion already about the fat in the food we eat, new reports say that some milk may not be as low in fat as we thought.

Two-percent milk, termed "low-fat," does not actually meet the criteria for the low-fat label. One serving (8 ounces) contains about 5 grams but the labeling guidelines limit "low-fat" to 3 grams per serving.

But how can a percent or two difference get so much bad press?

It's because small differences can really add up when you add in other factors, according to Melanie Polk, director of nutrition education for the American Institute for Cancer Research.

"Your choice of milk should depend on how much you drink and how much fat is in the milk," she said. "It also depends on the quantity of fat you get from other foods during the day. If you'd prefer getting fat from salad dressing or an extra ounce or two of lean red meat, you'll probably want to go with skim or 1 percent fat milk."

Per 8 ounces, or one cup, whole milk contains 8 grams of fat. That's more than one-eighth of the maximum recommended amount of fat for the day for an adult of average build who is maintaining a healthy weight. A cup of 1 percent milk has 2 1/2 grams (half that of 2 percent milk); and a cup of skim milk has less than half a gram.

"You can make gradual changes for better health and lower cancer risk," Polk said. "If you use whole milk, switch to 2 percent for a while. When you're used to that, switch to 1 percent milk. Then try using skim milk. You might find out that you prefer it to whole milk, which can begin to taste too rich and fatty when you're no longer used to it."

For a free brochure on dietary fat, how it affects your health; and how to eat less, send a stamped, self-addressed envelope to the American Institute for Cancer Research, Dept. FA, Washington, D.C. 20069.

Prevent summer ear infections

Egleston Children's Hospital

It's summertime, and your children go swimming almost every day. Then they complain of a very bad earache. How do you tell if this is a "real" ear infection or just swimmer's ear?

According to Egleston Children's Hospital at Emory University ear, nose and throat specialist Dr. Wendell Todd, swimmer's ear is a real ear infection. Technically known as otitis externa, swimmer's ear is an infection of the ear canal. It often occurs when water gets trapped in the ear canal after swimming or bathing, creating ideal conditions for bacteria to grow. And just like any other ear infection, swimmer's ear means a trip to the doctor

"Swimmer's ear can usually be treated with antibiotic eardrops," Todd said, "but you'll be doing your child a great favor by doing what you can to prevent the infection in the first place. It can hurt terribly. "

Todd offers these tips to prevent swimmer's ear:

- Don't let water stay in the ear canal after your child swims or bathes. While tried and true methods such as pulling back on the child's outer ear and tilting the head to the side or using commercial eardrop products may work, a more modern solution is to use a blow dryer. Blowing warm air across the ears will help evaporate the moisture in the ear canal. (Note: Do not hold the dryer too close to the ear; it could burn the child's skin.)
- Never poke anything into the ear canal, hoping to loosen the wax and let the water drain out. Many serious ear injuries occur when well-meaning parents stick items ranging from Q-tips to nails in children's ears
- The general rule is that children with tubes in their eardrums should not get their ears wet. Your doctor may recommend otherwise based on your child's particular situation.
- If your child has a chronic illness or is unable to fight infections well, swimmer's ear could lead to more serious problems.

BBB offers tips on what to look for in contracts

Better Business Bureau

Not all contracts are as far-reaching as the marriage contract ... nor should any other contract let you in for so many unknowns and unpredictable adventures.

When you and the seller sign an agreement requiring him to perform a service or deliver a product and you to pay money, you are both entering into a contract. A contract is a legal document. Sometimes it is very formalized and "official looking," but it can also be handwritten on a plain sheet of paper. A contract describes the exact obligations of the signers to one another.

Once in force, a contract generally cannot be changed or broken unless both parties agree.

A trade regulation rule from the Federal Trade Commission allows a consumer three business days in which to cancel a contract signed in a door-to-door sale of a product or service and through motel-hotel sales. The salesperson must give the customer a cancellation form that fully explains this right and how to exercise it. If the customer cancels, the seller must return any money or trade-in merchandise that was taken at the time of sale and, of course, the customer must return any merchandise that the seller left behind.

This FTC rule applies to most sales of $25 or more made off the seller's premises in interstate commerce. Some states have similar "cooling-off" laws that cover additional circumstances. But if you sign an agreement that is not covered by such a law, or if you let the three-day period elapse, you then are bound by your side of the agreement, and you may be subject to penalty if you cancel. So know ahead of time what you are signing.

Read before you sign

A busy homemaker, who signed an agreement to receive a "free" book just to get rid of a salesperson who showed up at dinner time, was shocked three weeks later to receive a set of books with a bill for $52.

There is no better way to protect yourself than to read and thoroughly understand the agreement before you sign. Then is the time to change the agreement by adding or removing conditions that you are unwilling to agree to or which are not what you bargained for.

After signing, be sure to keep a copy of the agreement. Your copy of the contract is the only proof you have of the conditions of the agreement.

Include all provisions

A person's word is just that. A dealer's contract is a legal obligation. A woman who recently signed a contract for the purchase of a dishwasher noticed that installation was not mentioned in the contract. The salesperson assured her that installation service was offered all the time now, and that the old contract form simply did not mention it. Weeks after delivery of the appliance, the manager of the store informed her that since installation was not included in her agreement, she would have to pay an added charge for it.

Oral promises are not always legally binding. Any installation or service provisions should be in the contract before you sign it.

Even when you do get a promise in writing, make sure you understand what it really means.

A man bought a power mower warranted for five years. When he brought it in for service six months later he discovered that the warranty only covered the physical breakage of defective parts. Mechanical failure was not included and so he paid a substantial charge for labor.

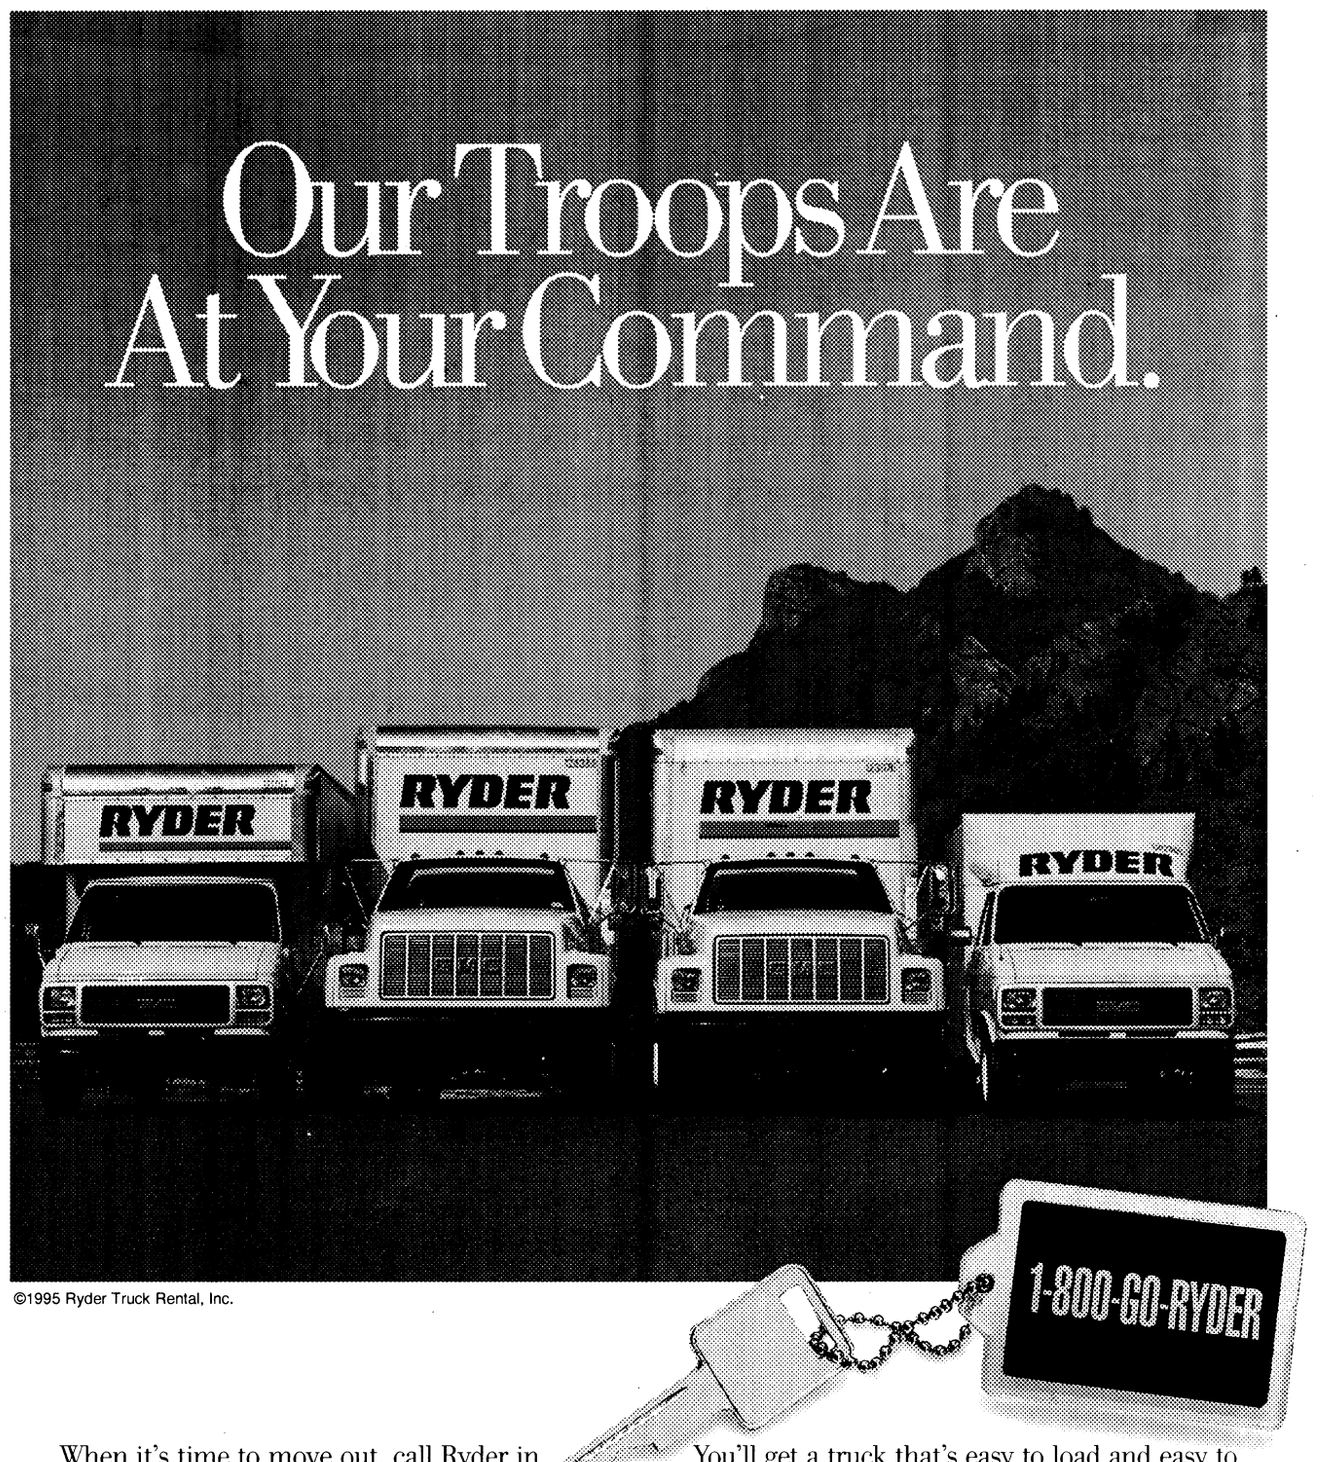
A retailer is required by law to let the buyer know all provisions of a product's warranty before purchase. It is to your advantage to compare warranties before buying a product.

All parts of the agreement should be completed before the contract is signed.

Another man who bought a small sailboat told the salesperson that he would decide in several weeks the exact fittings he wanted and where to deliver the boat. He left the salesperson with a signed contract to be completed when he had made these final decisions. When presented with the bill prior to delivery, he found that he had "bought" many expensive additional fittings for the sailboat which he did not want.

Never sign a blank contract. Signing a blank check. It simply tempts some sellers to fill in terms that are not advantageous to the buyer.

What should a contract contain?



To be sure that you are satisfied with the seller's part of the agreement, you must verify that everything the seller is to do is covered by the contract. The price, type and model number of every item, the quality and condition of the materials to be used, service obligations and the time of delivery or completion should be stated precisely. On installment contracts, finance charges must be set forth and expressed as an annual percentage rate, according to the Federal Truth In Lending law.

You should also be aware that products sold "as is" are sold without any obligation as to their condition, service, or return.

Be sure that the contract required neither less from the seller nor more from you than your understanding of the agreement calls for.

One of the best ways to be sure you will not be cheated is by dealing with a reputable dealer. Responsible businesses have an interest in maintaining good customer relationships by dealing openly and honestly. The other kind of "operators" should be reported to the Better Business Bureau.

Co A, 2/69th cited for service

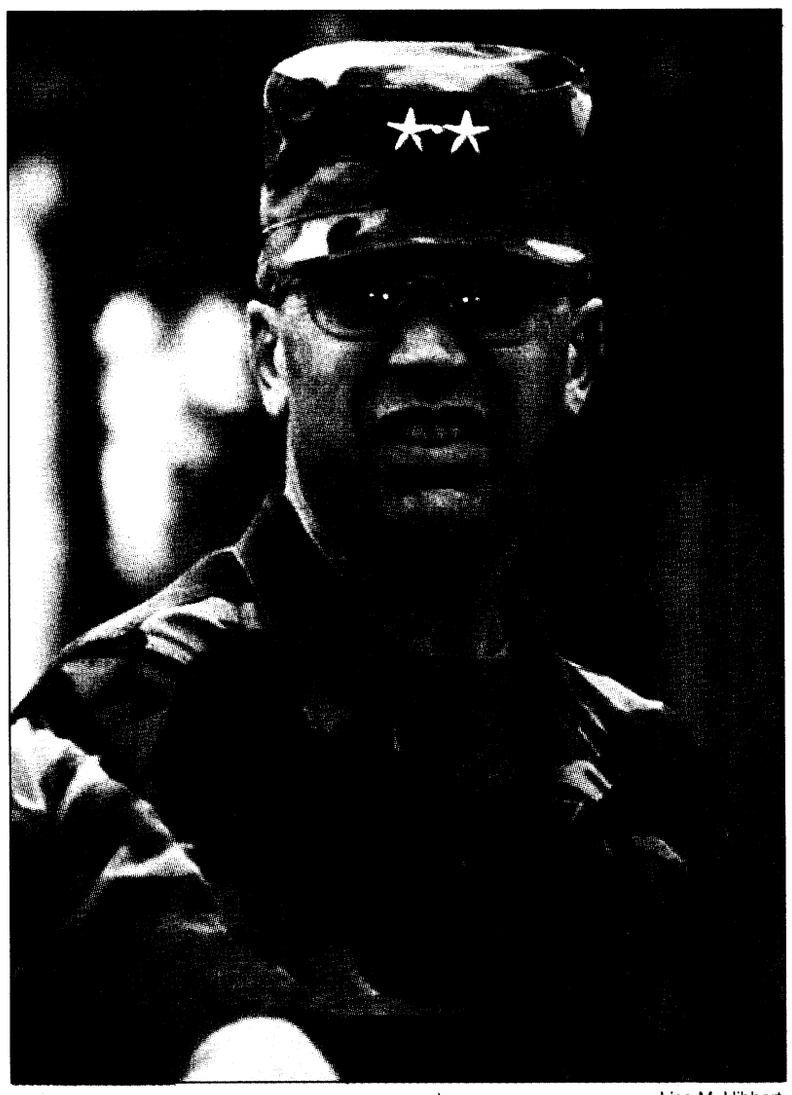
The Goodrich Riding Trophy — representative of the Draper Combat Leadership Award, was presented to Company A, 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor Regiment, June 2 during a change of command ceremony.

Maj. Gen. Joseph E. DeFrancisco, 24th Infantry Division commander, presented the award.

"Everything they do, they do with an extraordinarily high standard," DeFrancisco said. "That is why I am glad to present this award to you; you richly deserve it."



Company A was recognized for its exemplary service during Operation Vigilant Warrior in Saudi Arabia.

While in Saudi, Co. A marched 531 kilometers, performed a sterilization of equipment, used prepositioned equipment — saving Army money by not having to bring equipment with them, said Sgt. Michael R. Skarhus.

To even be considered as a recipient for the Draper Award, the armor company or cavalry troop must display an outstanding overall unit performance, according to the requirements for the award.

Originally, the "Draper test" was administered to combat leadership in small cavalry units.

The test is no longer necessary as the results of units field exercises are considered.

Lightning — supercharged summer threat

U.S. Army Safety Center

Last year 10 soldiers were injured when they were struck by lightning. Most of the injured soldiers were involved in combat soldiering activities when they were hit. In an incident several years ago, a soldier was struck while telephoning field positions to alert his soldiers to stay off the field telephone.

Noncommissioned officers and other leaders can take precautions to keep soldiers safe. The best thing to do is to keep people inside. However, soldiers' environments aren't limited by walls. When soldiers are caught outdoors during a storm, they should be trained to look for shelter, but not under trees.

When shelter is not available, soldiers should make themselves as small as possible to lessen their chances of being struck; soldiers should drop to their knees, bend forward and put their hands on their knees. They should not lie flat or place their hands on the ground.

In addition, soldiers should be trained on the following controls to reduce the risks when they are caught in electrical storms:

- Ground or drop metal tools or equipment.
- Avoid hilltops, trees and watery areas.
- Look for shelter in low places.
- Do not allow soldiers to use electrical equipment of any kind especially phones.
- Ensure soldiers are trained in correct emergency posture.
- Ensure soldiers are trained in correct emergency first-aid procedures, especially cardiopulmonary resuscitation.

Even mild exposure can knock a soldier unconscious or sear the skin and cause painful burns. Soldiers who are struck should be given immediate medical attention.

- Indoors, avoid using appliances, power tools, telephones, electric typewriters and computers; also avoid baths, open porches and balconies.

Some folks think that to get the cheapest airfare or the best airline connection, it's necessary to drive to Atlanta. Leaving Columbus two hours early to make the 100 mile drive, parking their car in a suburb of Harris County, fighting the crowds, catching a train and finding any one of hundreds of departure gates, and then being faced with the same grim process on their return, doesn't seem to deter the cost-conscious traveller in his quest to find the absolute lowest fare.

EEO employee's fairness rewarded

By Jan Wesner Childs

Elva Shoemaker has made a career out of making sure others are treated fairly in theirs.

"I love work and I love the type of work I do," Shoemaker, an equal employment opportunity specialist, said. "My focus is on making sure that Fort Benning is better than OK."

Shoemaker recently received an Achievement Medal for Civilian Service from Training and Doctrine Command Commander Gen. William Hartzog.

She was recognized for her work during six weeks of temporary duty at TRADOC headquarters in August and September.

Shoemaker was cited for developing an early resolution program to deal with EEO complaints, a cultural diversity awareness training program and a survey to determine if minorities and women employed by the Department of Defense hit a "glass ceiling."

Her day-to-day duties at the EEO Office included processing EEO complaints, conducting training, overseeing the Black Employment Program Committee and serving as affirmative action officer.

She travels to historically black colleges to encourage students to consider the federal government in career choices, and to offer programs on sexual harassment and she fields complaints from all over post.

Shoemaker

"Here at Fort Benning, I'm usually into 10 projects or more at a time," she said. "I'm multi-hatted."

She said she was attracted to the job because it offered an opportunity to make a difference in "something I care about."

Dealing with EEO problems or complaints is not always a pleasant business. But those who have come in contact with Shoemaker say she makes the process run more smoothly.

"She is very knowledgeable and very experienced," said John Baggett, deputy director of Public Works. "It's enjoyable working with her because you can depend on her. She's reliable. I've never had anything but positive experiences in dealing with Elva Shoemaker."

Although Shoemaker works with several agencies on post and is involved in all kinds of issues, she prefers to keep a low profile.

"I believe in being a prop — a very sturdy prop," she said.

Dexter School fourth-, fifth-graders learn the delicate art of Bridge Building

Robin A Shawlinski

Jerry Cristy, a system-wide curriculum director, compares the design plan with the actual finished bridge.

By Robin A. Shawlinski
Bayonet assistant editor

"The students have to work together. That's what I like best ... for example, if the carpenter isn't following specs, the bridge can fall down and then everyone is affected."

— Marjory Brasfield
Fourth-grade gifted program teacher

Students from Dexter Elementary School got a personal look at what the song "London Bridge is Falling Down" is all about June 2.

Fourth– and fifth–graders in the gifted program were given the task of building a bridge from the ground up and then seeing it come crashing down

The project, known as the 1995 Brasfield Bridge-Off, is an annual project that requires students to apply skills using arithmetic calculations and geometry to design, plan and build scale model toothpick bridges within a certain budget, according to Marjory Brasfield, the fourth–grade gifted program teacher.

"The students are given specifications for the bridge, such as how high it must be and are also given a budget," she said.

The 28 students were given the project in the beginning of May. The students were broken down into three- or four-person groups and created a "bridge building company."

"The students have to work together," said Brasfield. "That's what I like best ... for example, if the carpenter isn't following specs, the bridge can fall down and then everyone is affected."

Each company had an architect, project director, carpenter and accountant, but the students worked together to plan and design the bridge.

The project director is charged with keeping the project on schedule, maintaining a diary, signing and approving building plans, checks and order forms, cleaning up the site and keeping company records.

The architect must design and draw plans, show others how to construct the bridge according to plans and order supplies.

Jacob McCoy, the architect for the Bareable Bridges Company, said he learned a lot trying to design the bridge.

"I learned by myself (how to design the bridge) by finding out what the strongest structure was — which was an arch — and building it," McCoy said.

The carpenter must build the bridge according to the architect's plans, consult with the architect as building proceeds and supervise the company members who help construct.

Joey Connor, the carpenter for the We Build Bridges Company, said he learned that he needed certain skills in building.

"I learned that you need certain skills in building and that you can't just keep stacking," Connor said. "I learned that you had to know what a radius is and how to make those work."

While the design and building of the bridge is important, so is the budget in which the students must follow.

Each company is given $1,550,000 to begin the project, Brasfield said.

"This seems like an enormous amount to the students at first; but once they have had to pay $500,000 for their land and $10,000 for each piece of lumber (toothpick), they begin to recognize the importance of planning to stay within the budget," she said.

While everyone learned from performing their own job, many of them learned what it meant to work together.

The biggest thing John Bell, the accountant for GBS Bridges, learned in his job was that it was hard working together.

"Everyone always blamed me," he said.

The members of We Build Bridges had to learn to cooperate by signing a contract.

"We learned we had to work together as a team to make a winning bridge," Connor said.

The month's worth of work came to an end June 2.

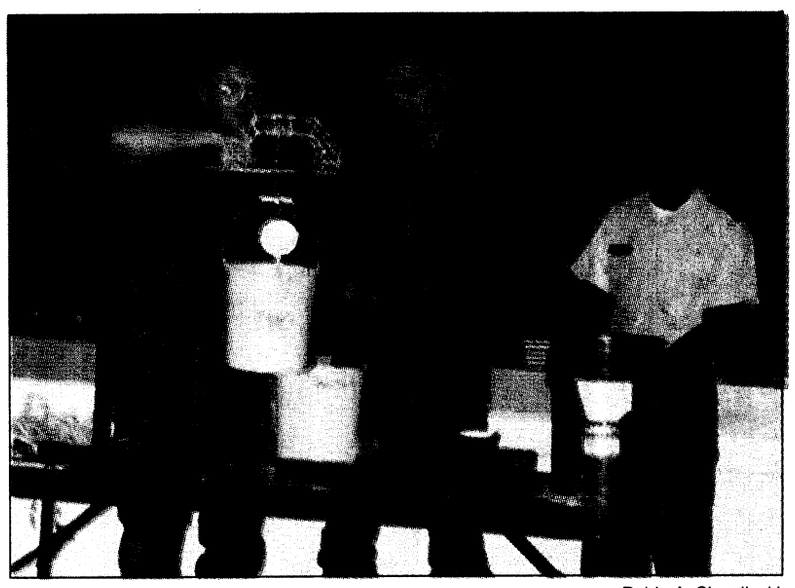
During the morning, the eight bridges were evaluated on the design, quality of building plans and the strength of the bridge.

The judges were Col. Dave Brown, director of Public Works; 1st Sgt. James Steele, of Company B, 317th Engineer Battalion; Jerry Cristy, a system-wide curriculum director; and Sgt. Maj. Reginald Salinas from the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit.

When the evaluations were complete, the bridge-off began.

Each bridge was set between two desks and a bucket was connected to the bridge supports and slowly filled with sand.

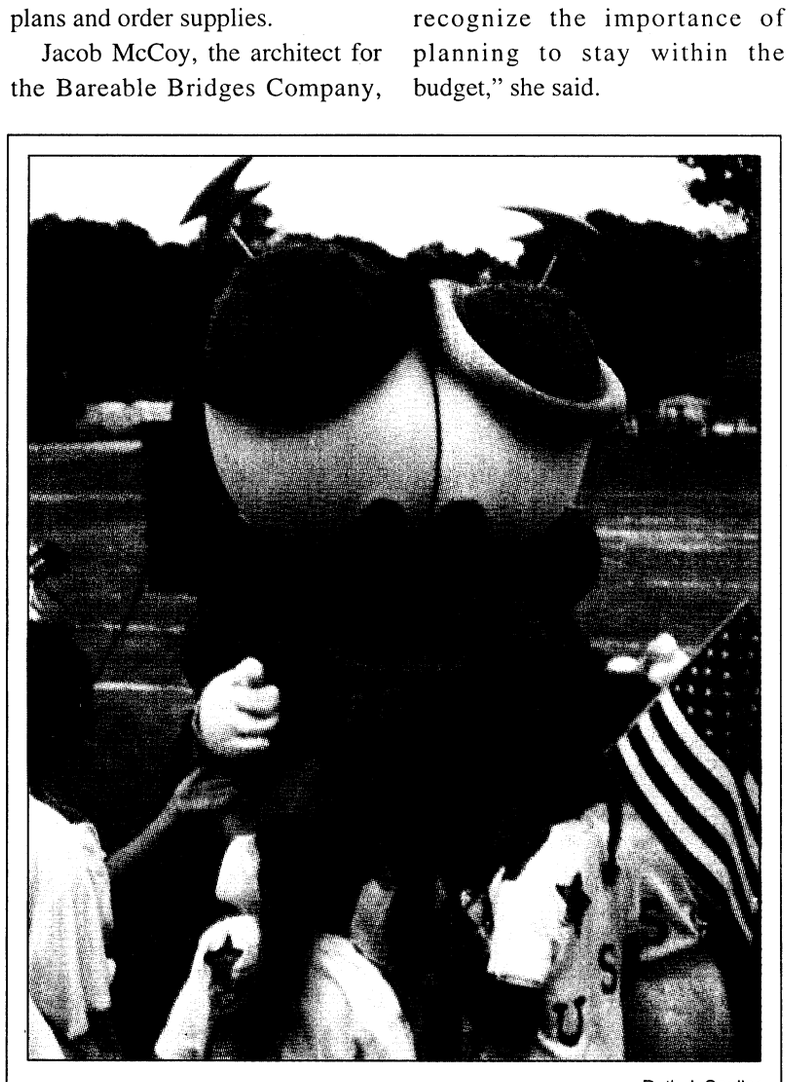
The overall bridge winner was given to the company whose bridge held the most weight before collapsing.



The strongest bridge winner was awarded to the We Build Bridges Company when it held 22.25 pounds. The second-place winner was Bareable Bridges with 22 pounds.

Trophies were also given for each position in the company.

The outstanding architect was awarded to McCoy of Bareable Bridges.



The outstanding project manager was Jasmine Wilkins of Bridge Thumbs.

The outstanding carpenter was Sean Kearney of No Break Bridges, and the outstanding accountant was Lauren Morse of Big B Bridge.

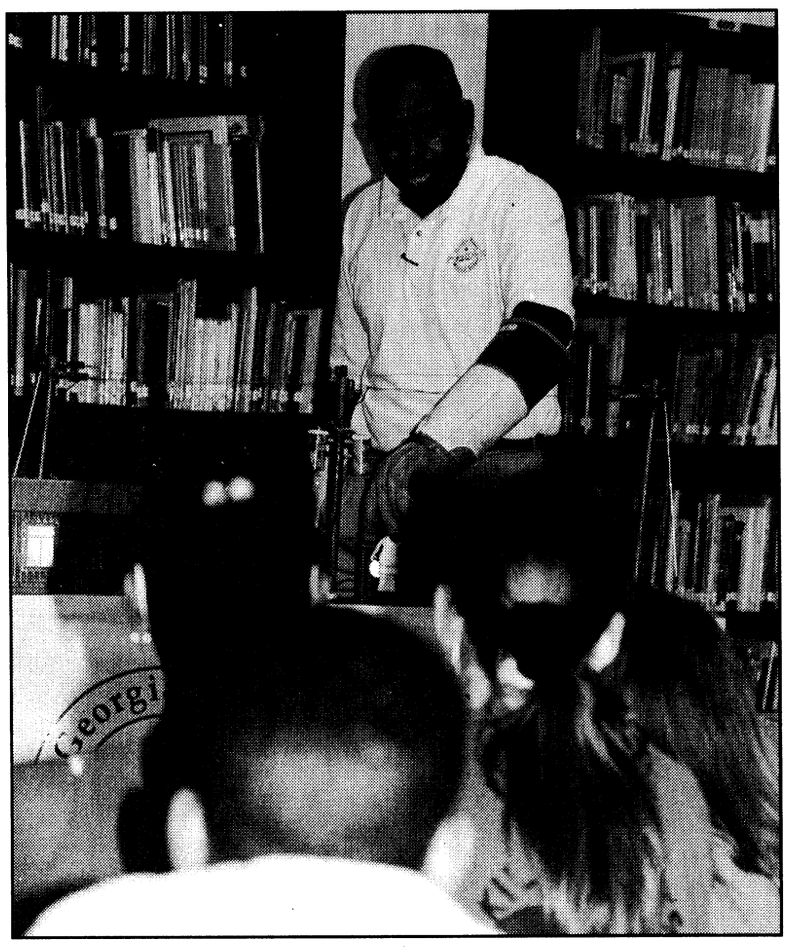
Soldiers needs photographs that tell a story and capture the faces of soldiers, families and Department of the Army civilians. The magazine is looking for imagination and creativity — obviously posed shots will be screened out.

Shoot what is unique to your installation, something you may see every day but others may never get the opportunity to see.

Soldiers is looking for the best photographs from the field, for a worldwide representation of what makes the Army what it is.

The following are some basic rules to keep in mind.

- Photographs must be shot from Monday to June 18.
- Submit processed color slides or 5x7 or 8x10 black and white prints.
- Photographs should be printed for magazine quality with good contrast.
- Submissions will not be used without complete photo credits and cutlines. Include the full name, rank and service, as applicable, of the photographer, names of identifiable people in the photograph, details on what is happening in the photo and the location.



Cutlines must be attached individually to the photo or slide and the photographs must be processed and received by Soldiers magazine by Aug. 31. Photographs and accompanying information will not be returned.

The address is: Soldiers, 9325 Gunston Road, Suite S108, Fort Belvoir, Va. 22060-5548.

Discovery Day

Loyd Elementary School students were given the chance to experience Discovery Day June 2. This special event is conducted to remind children that just because the summer is here, they don't have to stop learning. There were classes and shows throughout the day including "Power Town," an actual working model showing the children the importance of electricity safety. Other classes included health safety, archaeology and natural wildlife. "Binky the Clown" also conducted a magic show. On display outside the school were different types of military vehicles and weapons.

Labels wanted for playground equipment

Family Child Care

Organizers need soup labels to purchase playground equipment for Russ Pond. Only 2 percent of the 345,650 Campbell's Soup Company labels needed have been collected.

The drive is part of the Campbell's Labels for Education program and was launched in January by the Family Child Care providers at Fort Benning.

Labels from more than 1,000 Campbell's products can be redeemed for educational equipment and materials.

Campbell's products include: anything with the company's label, Marie's, Mrs. Paul's, Swanson, V-8, Early California, Franco-American, Vlasic, Pepperidge Farm and Prego.

The goal is to collect enough labels to trade for the playground equipment.

Only 5,000 of the 345,650 labels needed have been collected. The drive ends March 1, 1996.

There are label drop-off points at all community of life buildings and the Commissary.

Call Debbie Snoke at 687-6823 for more information or if you would like to volunteer to help.

Summer builds memories

By Steve Bounds
1st Battalion, 38th Infantry Regiment

reflections

Summertime is here! All the children cheer with the thought of no school for three months.

Mom wonders what to do with them during their off time. Dad is more concerned about the grass that needs mowing and the grass that needs pulling.

The days are longer, and the weather is warmer. Summertime is truly full of much activity. What a tremendous opportunity to spend quality time with our families to build lifelong family memories.

I remember many of the summer activities that I enjoyed as a child. Our family would spend vacations at the old farm house my Dad owned near my grandmother's farm. There always seemed to be a constant flurry of activity. Aunts, uncles and cousins would filter in and out as we visited together at my grandmother's house. The old folks would usually hang out around the house while the children would find other ways to entertain themselves.

There were forts to build out of hay bales stacked in the barn. An endless supply of corn cobs and dirt clods provided ammunition for our frequent battles. Rocks, sticks and pine cones were outlawed under the rules of engagement. When we were interested in more organized forms of recreation, someone would find a ball and bat. There were always burlap sacks, old shingles, or perhaps a few piles of dried cow manure to use for bases. We had to be resourceful at times. Balls and strikes were called on the honor system, which led to several lively discussions around home plate.

When the weather became too hot, one of the adults would suggest a trip to a carefully selected "swim hole." We would all load up in cars or pickup trucks and head for Red Creek.

There were also fishing trips in the daytime and frog gigging at night. Of course, there were also Sunday school and church services to attend.

We usually went to Vacation Bible School and revival meetings in most every church in the community. Those country preachers spoke with an enthusiasm that captured our attention. The singing was filled with excitement. The fact that our Sunday school and VBS teachers knew our parents so well discouraged us from carrying our pranks into the Bible classes.

These all built a solid spiritual foundation that continues today. Those were fun days indeed. Amid our pulling pranks on one another and the challenges of strength, speed or daring, we were never far from the watchful eye of the adults. We didn't always realize it, but they were there.

Of course, they were often part of the fun. At times, we would have to endure stories of how things were when they were young. This was all part of a very important process — adults caring enough to actively participate in building family memories with their children.

Now our extended family meets for an annual family reunion. Our children have to endure those stories of how things were when we were young. We do enjoy the time together, but we must return to our homes. Throughout the year, we try to keep contact. Of course, we all spend quality time building family memories with our own children.

The world around us is constantly changing. Young people today look back on the days of black and white television with the same view that our generation looked back on the Model T Ford automobiles, and our parents and grandparents on horse-drawn buggies. The Vietnam War is ancient history to them just as World Wars I and II are to us. Many of us grew up in the age of the information highway. We all enjoy looking back to the good old days when we were young.

We as adults have the responsibility to train up our children "in the way they should go." (Proverbs 22:6). We need to teach them the difference between right and wrong. We need to tell those stories, that pass on our unique family and cultural traditions from one generation to the next. We need to teach them to build on our faith and traditions as they prepare for their future.

Let's not allow the hurry and flurry of building a career rob us of these precious years. All too soon our children will be teen-agers and then off to college. Finally, they will establish their own families.

What kind of family memories will they have then? Let's use this time that we have together while our children are young to build family memories.

Remember to keep holy the Sabbath

By Randy Holmes
USAIC Chaplain Office

reflections

"Sabbath" is a Hebrew word that means "to cease" or "to desist." The word is applied to several festivals in the Old Testament, but it usually refers to the seventh day of the week, the Jewish day of rest and worship.

The Sabbath was instituted at creation. God ceased from his labor on the seventh day of creation and set a pattern for man to follow. God rested from his work and reflected on the goodness of his creation.

Later, the principle of resting and reflecting was incorporated into the Ten Commandments. Moses recorded God's command to "remember the Sabbath to keep it holy." (Exodus 20:11) The Sabbath was to be a day set apart for man to rest and reflect on the goodness of God. Resting and reflecting are flip sides of the same sabbath coin.

With the development of the synagogue during the intertestamental period, the Sabbath became a day of worship and study of the law as well as cessation from work. Soon there arose a tendency toward legalism that later led to many prohibited activities on the Sabbath.

By the time of Jesus, religious zealots accused Jesus of breaking the Sabbath in many ways. These included healing people or illegally harvesting grain when his disciples helped themselves to a meal during their arduous ministry.

Jesus responded to their accusations by claiming to be the Lord of the Sabbath. (Mark 2:28) He set himself above the Sabbath for two reasons. First, he intended to point out his unique relationship to the Father. He and the Father are one.

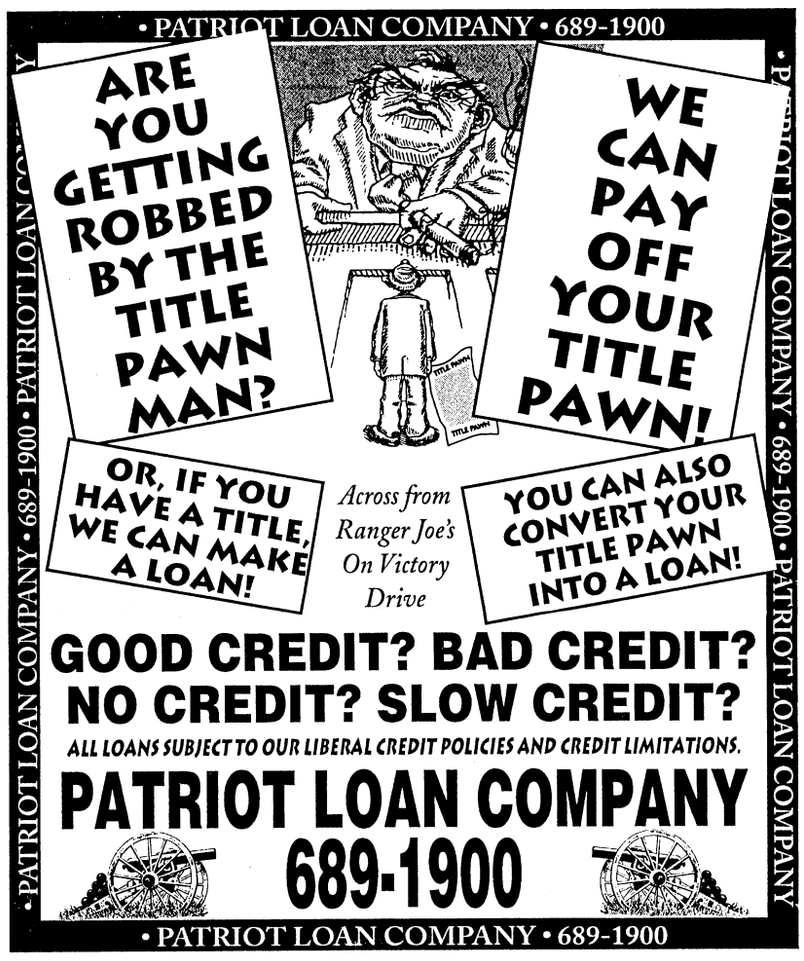
Secondly, as a man, Jesus declared he had a right to use the Sabbath in the way he thought best since the Sabbath was made for man and not man for the Sabbath.

In so doing, he pointed the Jews back to the original intent of the Sabbath, which was to provide man a change in his daily routine. In honor of Jesus' resurrection on the first day of the week, Christians changed their Sabbath celebration from Saturday to Sunday.

Today, people use the Sabbath to change their daily routines in many ways.

Some people use the weekend (Saturday and Sunday being the Sabbath for different traditions) to rest by reading the newspaper, watching television, hunting, fishing, camping, doing yard work, traveling, visiting family, partying or dancing.

These are all legitimate ways of ceasing from your labors and resting from your work. But when Sunday night comes and the activities end, have you ever found yourself feeling empty inside?



No matter how much fun you have squeezed into the weekend, something seems to be missing. You feel an uneasiness as if you didn't fulfill what you needed to accomplish.

What is missing is the reflecting. Without spending time reflecting on the goodness of God in the presence of others (usually in a worship service), the Sabbath loses its meaning and intended purpose.

God is not the one who suffers in our failing to keep the Sabbath. We do. God doesn't need our praise. He can get along quite well without us. But we need God.

He created us with a need to reflect on his goodness and to join with others in expressing our thanks. Don't let the next Sabbath end with you feeling empty inside.

Spend some time resting. But don't forget to join with others in reflecting. Attend the worship service of your choice this Sabbath day.

The Directorate of Contracting is sponsoring its first-ever Construction and Environmental Small Business Consortium Luncheon.

The event will be at noon Wednesday in the Officers' Club Supper Club. Cost is $10.

The purpose is to inform small businesses about the acquisition process and procedures for bidding on construction and environmental projects, according to Robert Battle, installation small and disadvantaged business utilization specialist in the Directorate of Contracting.

The luncheon will feature two guest speakers, Diane S. Sisson from the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers and Leon Hampton from the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency.

"They'll talk about contracting and environmental issues from a national level," Battle said. "There's a lot of environmental changes going on."

He said Fort Benning awards between $30 million and $40 million in construction and environmental contracts each year.

Much of the work used to be done by the Corps of Engineers. But Battle said more construction is being handled by the Directorate of Contracting at the local level now, opening markets up to area businesses.

For more information on the luncheon, call Battle at 545-1013.

EEO wants directors, commanders to nominate counselors

By Jan Wesner Childs

The Equal Employment Opportunity Office needs directors, commanders and supervisors to nominate employees for volunteer counselors to handle equal opportunity complaints.

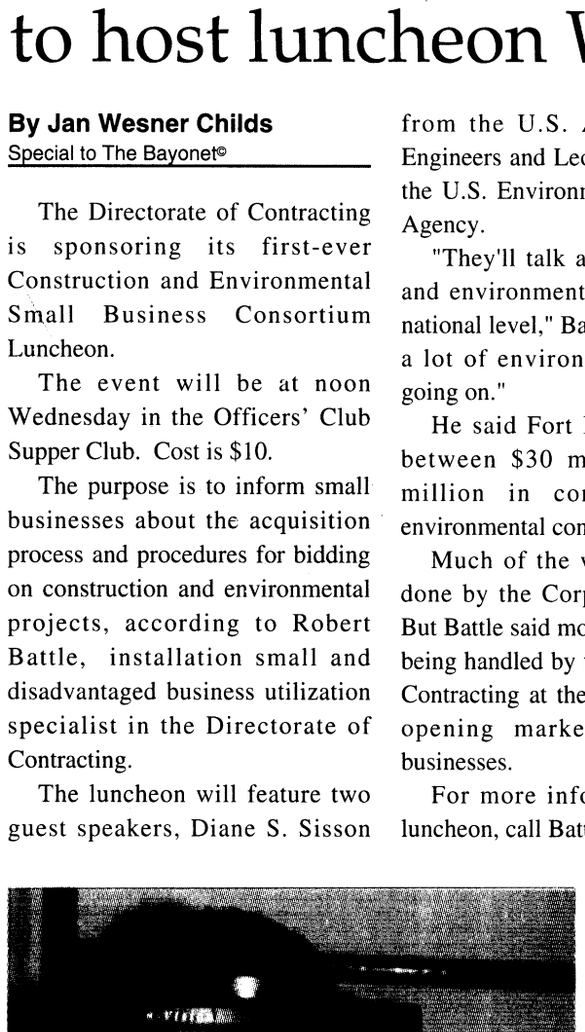
EEO Manager Ellis Dandy said volunteer counselors are responsible for investigating complaints by civilian employees on post. The counselors must interview all parties involved and compile a report.

Counselors must be nominated by their supervisors or commanders.

The position is a voluntary extra duty, but Dandy said it provides several fringe benefits.

"You get to learn a lot about the government system and you get to interact with people at all levels," Dandy said.

Skills learned as an EEO counselor can be applied to any job, he said.



The EEO office handles about 25 cases a month. Right now there are 18 counselors.

Dandy said several counselors have had to quit recently.

"What has happened is the (reduction in force) caused some folks to get shuffled around," he said.

There are no strict requirements for EEO counselors, except that the person must be a GS-5 or above and must be nominated. Dandy reviews the nomination, then passes it to the commanding general for approval.

Supervisors who wish to make nominations should call the EEO Office at 545-3465.

Senior infantry leaders gather to learn advances in future soldier systems

By Marc G. Turchin
Bayonet staff writer

The U.S. Army Infantry School hosted the 1995 Senior Leader Update Conference Wednesday and Thursday at Infantry Hall.

Maj. Gen. John W. Hendrix, commandant of the school, welcomed the attendees Wednesday morning with an opening briefing inside Classroom 6, Infantry Hall.

"The purpose of (the conference) is purely feedback," Hendrix said. "We'll let you know what we're trying to do (and) we need your feed back on that."

Senior leaders from across the Army were here for the event. Some of them included Lt. Gen John E. Miller, commanding general, U.S. Army Combined Arms Command, Fort Leavenworth, Kan.; Maj. Gen. Robert S. Coffey, commander, 2nd Armored Division, Fort Hood, Texas; Maj. Gen. Carl F. Ernst, deputy chief of staff for training, Training and Doctrine Command, Fort Monroe, Va. and Maj. Gen. George L. Gunderman, commander, U.S. Army Reserve Command, Atlanta, Ga.

The two days were split into two categories. Wednesday was spent talking about today's infantry while Thursday's agenda dealt with tomorrow's infantry.

The conference was designed to provide a forum for discussions in the areas of doctrine, training, leader development, force design of infantry organizations, equipment and material requirements and other aspects of the infantry mission.

In addition, the conference focused on the latest advances in soldier systems, demonstrations of "Land Warrior XXI," the Army's future soldier, and the use of sophisticated computer systems that will "digitize" the infantry soldier and enhance his ability to gather and pass on information on the battlefield.

Along with the discussions, displays of new weapon technology, field gear and equipment were available on the first floor of Infantry Hall. Soldiers and civilians were able to stop and talk with civilian company representatives about their product or try it out themselves.

Hendrix said the conference is all about discussing new infantry ideas and concepts.

"We'll give you the facts and the trends as we see them ... we need you to come back and tell us how you think that works ," Hendrix said. "Today that's more of a need than probably it has ever been."

Was life better for soldiers in 1775 than it is today?

By Lisa M. Hibbert
Bayonet staff writer

Soldiers today complain about everything from inadequate housing to poor food quality, but what would happen if we were all time warped back to 1775 when the Army began?

Soldiers didn't have housing then. Officers slept in tents while enlisted men slept in the open in good weather or erected brush structures to ward off rain or cold.

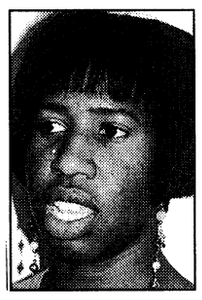
In the winters, high ranking officers sought shelter in private homes while lower ranking officers and enlisted men erected log huts. The huts were built on hill tops with good water supplies, but the officers took the higher ground and left the low ground for the privates.

Today's soldier no longer sleeps outdoors — heck, we don't even sleep in open bays any more! Although our living conditions are not what we would like them to be, at least we are indoors. Single soldiers live in semi-private rooms with indoor plumbing and married soldiers live in houses.

No meals, ready-to-eat then, soldiers were given raw rations and a pot and were expected to make out as best they could. On top of that, officers often inspected meals to ensure proper cooking methods — provisions were to be boiled or roasted as baking, broiling and frying were considered unhealthy methods of food preparation.

Today, we are fed in dining facilities — we don't have to cook our own food. In fact, some soldiers manage to gain weight on Army chow, even though they complain that the food is not good.

The uniforms of that time tended to consist of ruffled blouses and brightly colored jackets with shiny brass buttons. Since there were no factories, the uniforms that they wore were not exactly alike — they depended on the particular seamstress' personal style.



Speaking of uniforms, what do you suppose Gen. George Washington would have thought of the simply cut camouflaged battle dress uniform that allow the wearer to blend into the scenery?

It was common for soldiers who didn't have shoes to bundle their feet in rags and to keep on marching. Some would beg cowhide from the butcher shops and fashion moccasins from it.

Many of the blankets that were issued were made into clothes, but that meant the soldiers had nothing to cover themselves with at night to keep warm.

Soldiers often brought whatever clothes they wore when they went to fight and the quality was often poor.

Today, soldiers complain about having to buy a gortex jacket or a pair of jungle boots.

Spc. Lisa M. Hibbert is happy not to have been a soldier in 1775.

We are given uniforms and boots, long johns and socks.

It was common for soldiers to march 40 miles a day, every day, go 48 hours without sleep, wade through the icy rivers of New York State and brave the summer heat of Virginia.

Unless the soldier is infantry, it is very likely that strong complaints about this excessive physical activity would arise. And going without sleep? Today's soldiers on average get at least eight hours of sleep a day, every day — unless of course they're on charge of quarters.

Soldiers at that time brought their own weapons and each one was unique. Since there were no factories, each weapon had its own special nuances. They couldn't receive any formal training classes on the use of the weapons because they were all basically different.

Today, we are issued weapons and ammunition and provided with basic rifle marksmanship training so that we all know how to use them.

The weapons they used generated smoke and the battlefields soon became smog filled — but as long as the troops saw the guidon bearer and heard the drummer, they fought on.

Today's guidon is left in front of the commander's tent and the drummer is left at home for fear that he would give away their position by making noise.

What would the soldiers of the Revolutionary war think of the Army today?

Our units are integrated — no more all black units. In fact, on June 30, the Army will have its first black sergeant major of the Army, Command Sgt. Maj. Gene C. McKinney.

The Women's Army Corps has been abolished. There are even women generals such as Brig. Gen. Pat Hickerson, deputy commander of the U.S. Army Recruiting Command.

And while we're on the subject of women, it has been said that many women dressed in men's clothes and fought in the Revolutionary war.

I believe that is why the Army conducts physical exams before soldiers even enlist — to make sure that kind of thing doesn't happen anymore.

What would Washington have thought of integrated units, semi-private rooms, and co-ed basic training? What would he have thought of BOSS?

What would our forefathers have thought of chemical warfare and night vision goggles?

The Army has changed drastically in 220 years, but those changes only reflect the changes made to society as a whole.

Imagine what the Army will be like in another 220 years after dismounted battle labs and E-mail are things of the past?

Birthday greetings for the U.S. Army

Wednesday, we joined together to celebrate the 220th birthday of the nation's oldest and most venerable military service — the U.S. Army — and the 218th birthday of the American flag.

Like our Army, the American flag grew out of revolution. And like our Army, the design of our flag, Old Glory, has evolved over the years since its creation.

The liberty it stands for, however, remains constant. So does the Army's vigil to protect that liberty.

Born under the gathering storm clouds of the American Revolution, the Army has grown from a small band of minutemen on Lexington Green to the finest fighting force in the world today. It is much smaller today than it was just five years ago, and it has changed in many other ways as well.

Change has been essential to achieve our current state of readiness. Still more change is needed to forge our fighting force for the 21st century. Indeed, change has become so pervasive in the Army climate that it seems at times to overshadow the constants.

There are constants, though, to guide us. The most basic one is the Army's mission — to fight and win our nation's wars.

When we are not fighting our nation's wars, we remain ready to fight them. That is the bedrock upon which we now reshape the Army to meet the challenges of the 21st century.

Yesterday we were ready, from Lexington and Concord to Gettysburg, and from Normandy to the Persian Gulf. Tomorrow, too, we'll be ready. Our country remains free today not only because of the Army's brave deeds of the past, but because of the magnificent service of the men and women of America's Army today.

Whatever our mission of the moment — fighting forest fires, providing relief to refugees, sheltering victims of hurricanes and floods, or keeping the peace — we remain ready to fight and win our nation's wars. America counts on us.

Dog owners lack respect for others

I am writing in response to your recent article in the June 9 edition of The Bayonet titled, "Prevent parvo in puppies..."

It stated in the article that "the majority of the cases have come from Fort Benning ... especially the neighborhoods around Arrowhead and Lumpkin Road."

I live in Custer Terrace where most of these cases are reported, and I can say this, it does not surprise (me). The owners of dogs here have no respect for the other residents and their yards.

I have seen, time after time, people walking their dogs and watching them defecate on (my) and other residents' yards and leaving it for someone else to pick up.

It can also cause other dogs to sniff and maybe infect themselves with the parvo.

I don't know if it is the same in other housing areas, but that is what I have seen in this area; and, it is sad to see the lack of respect people have for one another and their pets.

DoD gives sexual harassment guidelines

By Evelyn D. Harris
American Forces Information Service

When Edwin Dorn calls sexual harassment repugnant, he sounds like he is spitting out something extremely distasteful. Sheila Widnall says harassment happens when leaders fail to lead.

Dorn, undersecretary of defense for personnel and readiness, and Widnall, secretary of the Air Force, outlined tough new guidelines to stop harassment and discrimination by making leaders more accountable for the complaint process.

The two co-chaired DoD's Task Force on Discrimination and Sexual Harassment, which recently sent its final report to Defense Secretary William J. Perry. Officials said an updated DoD directive incorporating the changes will be issued shortly.

Widnall said unit effectiveness and fairness are the two essential goals of the military equal opportunity system.

"Because of the dangerous nature of their job, military units must function as a team unified by special bonds of trust and mutual respect. Discrimination and harassment weaken those bonds and create distrust, she said. "To ensure our readiness, commanders must deal effectively with such offenses."

Fairness is just as important. "The military's team succeeds only when all members are accepted as equals," she said.

The task force identified five principles as the basis for fulfilling the goals of effectiveness and fairness, Widnall said.

First, commanders' commitment must be visible and unequivocal. Second, the services can choose their own means to achieve the common ends: While an Army post or an Air Force base can support a robust equal opportunity staff, a Navy submarine wouldn't be expected to have a full-time equal opportunity officer.

Third, DoD will issue clear definitions of sexual harassment and discrimination for use by all services as well as guidelines on how to file complaints and protect the rights of all involved.

> "Sexual harassment is illegal, it's repugnant and it undermines military effectiveness. Secretary Perry has said he will not tolerate it."
> — Edward Dorn
> Undersecretary of Defense for personnel and readiness

Fourth, equal opportunity training should continue throughout a military member's career, with training for officers stressing their personal responsibility.

Finally, complaint systems should be prompt, thorough and fair. They should also allow for informal resolution, prevent reprisals and include appropriate sanctions.

One recommendation strongly encourages commanders to conduct equal opportunity climate assessments every two or three years.

These assessments measure unit members' perceptions about the command's human relations atmosphere and unit effectiveness.

The task force also recommends these services:

- Evaluate each service member's commitment to equal opportunity and document deviations from that in performance appraisals;
- Ensure the chain of command remain an integral part of complaint processing and resolution;
- Ensure time limits for complaint filing, investigation and feedback to complainants are met;
- Insist senior officials and commanders prominently post statements describing their personal and institutional commitment to equal opportunity.

The task force worked for a year and undertook the most intensive review of the military's equal opportunity system ever, said Widnall.

Dorn said the military services have already enacted many of the report's 48 recommendations. Still, he said, officials found a number of instances where things went wrong, complaints were not taken seriously or investigated properly or reprisals occurred.

"There were enough of these deviations that we felt it important to issue these recommendations," Dorn said.
