With the end of the Cold War there are many military missions that do not include the use of force, but rather highlight the unique capabilities of the American military.

"This category involves primarily humanitarian interests," Lake said. "Generally, the military is not the best tool to address such concerns, but sometimes a humanitarian crisis, such as in Somalia and Rwanda, may swamp the ability of relief agencies to respond."

In such cases, the American military may be called on to step in.

"None of this means the United States should become the world's policeman," Lake said. "We cannot answer every 911 call around the world. But when we weigh the risks and the costs against our interests, and when we can make a difference, I believe we do have a responsibility to act."

The lessons of the post-Cold War era are just coming out, Lake said.

First, he said, power matters.

"Our military's successes in Haiti and Bosnia came because they established, through intimidation and the threat of overwhelming force, a secure environment through the exercise of military power and military prowess," Lake said.

A second lesson is goals in operations must be practical and limited.

Third, peacekeeping and humanitarian missions provide valuable experience — especially joint experience — for the forces involved. Lake said the operations also gives the United States valuable contact with the armed forces of other nations. He highlighted the Russians working with the United States in Bosnia.

Lake derided those who call for the government to dedicate some forces to peacekeeping only. He said the U.S. military can keep a fighting edge while conducting peacekeeping operations.

The military must continue to attract and keep good people.

"Part of why our military has been so successful is that it seeks to employ the best talents that America has to offer, regardless of gender or race," Lake said. "I think we can safely say that our military is the most merit-based major institution in American society. Not only does it require high quality at the outset, but it encourages all of its members to do even better, and provides opportunities to do so.

"Our armed forces set an example for American society in giving those who take responsibility and who work hard a chance to make the most of their own lives."

Personnel proposing to use these areas for recreational purposes must vacate these areas prior to 9:30 a.m. daily.

Training units using compartments adjacent to those listed above may experience drift smoke and are reminded to exercise caution while traveling in these areas due to the potential for reduced visibility.

Units using ranges and training areas are reminded to remove flammable debris, such as pinestraw, leaves, grass and trash, from around structures in accordance with U.S. Army Infantry Center Regulation 210-4, Paragraph 5-22, Organizational Maintenance.

11th Inf Regt gets female 1st Sgt

By Lisa M. Hibbert
Bayonet staff writer

Company A, 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment, has a female first sergeant — the first female first sergeant in the history of the 11th Inf. Regt.

First Sergeant Leticia Westlake, an administrative specialist who was born in Brooklyn, N.Y., and is of Puerto Rican descent, said that she is happy with her new position.

"It's a thrill and an honor," Westlake said. "I hope that I can be a role model to other females who didn't think that women could hold leadership positions."

As the first sergeant for Company A, 1st Bn, 11th Inf. Regt., Westlake is responsible for more than 300 soldiers. It is her main mission to ensure that the soldiers in her company receive the training they need, Westlake said.

Westlake, who just came off of three years of inspector general duty, said that she is well prepared for her role.

"I know that there are people who have problems with women being in the Army, but a woman can do anything she wants to do," Westlake said. "If she wants to be a soldier, she can be a soldier. If she wants to be a good soldier, she can be a good soldier. Don't let anybody tell you you can't do something (because you are a woman), if you work hard enough, you can do anything."

Capt. David W. Johnson, commander, Co. A, 1st Bn, 11th Inf. Regt., said that he is very happy to have Westlake as his first sergeant.

"She was tailor made for this position," Johnson said. "She had already been to the first sergeant school, so I didn't need to send her there. She was already a part of this company, so she was familiar with it. She's adjutant general, a 71 L, which is what the position commands and she just came off of an I.G. tour, so she knows all of the rules. There isn't anyone better qualified for the job."

Eighteen years ago, when she first joined the Army, Westlake said she never planned on making a career of the military.

"I was attending Hunter College in New York and working part-time," Westlake said. "My grades began to drop, so I decided to join the Army to get the educational benefits. That was 19 years ago."

Somewhere in those 18 years that Westlake has been in the Army, she said she decided to make a career out of it.

"When I was a specialist 5, I was told to reclass or get out of the Army because I would never make staff sergeant," Westlake said. "I'm glad I didn't listen to them because I don't know where I would be now if I had listened to them."

A mother of three, Westlake said that her children are proud of her new job.

"My sons, Tim, 17, and Derrick, 14, are happy because they get to brag to their friends that their mother is a first sergeant," Westlake said.

"My daughter, Jessica, 6, doesn't know, yet, but she's too young to really understand what this means."

Westlake said that her gender will not affect her role as first sergeant and how she deals with her soldiers.

"Being a female will not effect my role as first sergeant because I don't look at gender and I want to be treated the same way."

"The fact that she is female doesn't matter, she's the best person for the job," said Lt. Col. Richard G. Kiaru, commander, 1st Bn, 11th Inf. Regt. "I think she is highly qualified and comes to the job with a good performance record. Plus she's both A.G. and I.G.

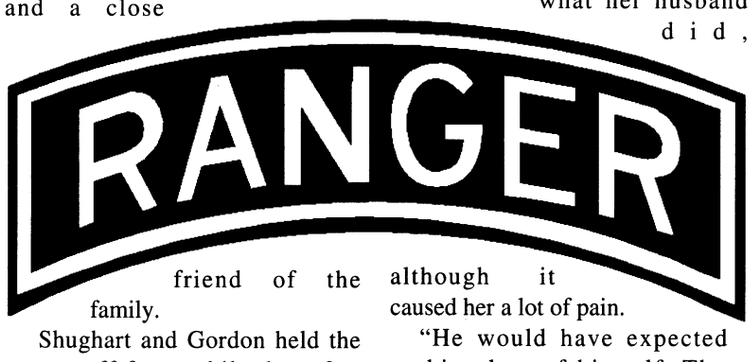
"We needed someone with drive and a willingness to do well for the job and I think we've got that," Kiaru said.

Navy names ship in ranger's honor

By Joyce P. Brayboy
Army News Service

Each letter in the word ranger signifies a paragraph in the ranger creed, a creed that fallen Staff Sgt. Randall D. Shughart, U.S. Army Special Operations Command, lived since becoming a ranger in 1976.

On Oct. 3, 1993, he died by that creed, when he was killed in Mogadishu, Somalia, while helping four soldiers under heavy fire aboard a crippled aircraft.



The memory of Shughart, along with his heroic spirit, will live on aboard the USNS Shughart. The ship, named in Shughart's honor April 13 during a ceremony in San Diego, is the first of a group of three of the Navy's medium-speed, roll-on, roll-off, sea-lift cargo ships that will be used to carry Army cargo, tanks and equipment.

Shughart's widow, Stephanie, who works as a registered nurse at Womack Army Medical Center's Family Practice Clinic, accepted the honor during the ceremony. She became the sponsor of the ship and christened it with the traditional bottle of champagne.

"I am, and always will be, proud to stand for my husband," she said. "He was in extraordinary circumstances and he acted in an exceptional way."

Shughart risked his life when he, and Master Sgt. Gary I. Gordon, USASOC, asked permission to be put down from their aircraft to a fallen Black Hawk that was caught in a fire fight. Stephanie said Army officials told her the two soldiers requested permission three times before they were allowed to go down and suppress fire.

"(Shughart and Gordon) knew that they had a chance. They would have never went out there trying to be heroes. They must have seen something, and went for it," said retired Sgt. Maj. Allen N. Fidler, a soldier who worked with Shughart and a close friend of the family.

Shughart and Gordon held the enemy off for a while, but after Shughart ran out of ammunition, he was killed. Gordon was killed shortly after.

"The ship not only represents him, though, it also represents 18 other U.S. soldiers who were killed that day. Those soldiers were just as precious to their families," Stephanie said.

Stephanie brought a plaque aboard the USNS Shughart, hanging it to honor the others who served with her husband and were also killed. She said she wanted every sailor who served on the ship to know what all of the soldiers did for their country in Somalia, not just what her husband did.

"Without a doubt, Stephanie represented Randy and the Army, displaying the pride and professionalism that makes us what we are (in the unit)," Fidler said.

"Her speech at the ship-naming ceremony let us all know that the loss of life was not for naught," Fidler added. "She is worthy of anything good."

Stephanie said she is proud of what her husband did, although it caused her a lot of pain.

"He would have expected nothing less of himself. There would have been no way Randy would have turned his back on fellow soldiers," she said. Because of that, Stephanie said, she expected no less of her husband.

Stephanie gathers her strength from Randy. They believed in each other, and she draws from those feelings, she said.

"If only for a short while, I was blessed to love a man like Randy, and have him love me." The Shugharts married Dec. 27, 1991.

Looking back, Stephanie said, Randy would have been sad to leave his family and friends behind, but he would have been glad that giving his life allowed others to live. After the initial information on the Cable News Network that there was a fire fight in Somalia in which soldiers were killed, the families in Shughart's unit came together to support one another just like the troops did.

"As the names of the dead were being released, (each wife) went to all of the funerals, not knowing if you would be next. One day, (a wife) would bury her husband; the next day, they would be at another funeral. That's just the kind of people who are in the special operations community," Stephanie said.

Days went by and Shughart was still missing in action. Stephanie hoped he was hiding. She never gave up hope, she said.

"It was a week of hell. I talked to my husband just two days before the fire fight. Then, it seemed like a week later all of our friends were dead. Finally, my husband was identified, pronounced dead and returned."

Shughart died the way he lived — for the moment, Stephanie said. She knows that to him, the ranger creed was not just words in a little book, it was a way of life.

"Energetically will I meet the enemies of my country ... Surrender is not a ranger word. I will never leave a fallen comrade to fall into the hands of the enemy and under no circumstances will I ever embarrass my country."

Summer heat injuries can be prevented

Fort Campbell Courier

Heat injuries demand a high price, first in terms of human suffering, and then in terms of mission loss. But units are getting better at protecting our soldiers in the heat.

Hard-earned experience shows that leaders can help prevent heat injuries by

- acclimatizing soldiers who are unaccustomed to the heat
- carefully selecting and conditioning soldiers for physical work in the heat
- identifying high-risk personnel (soldiers who are overweight, have had previous heat injuries that make them more susceptible to follow-on heat injuries, are new to the unit or not acclimatized)
- enforcing water consumption
- instructing soldiers on precautions to be taken in mission oriented protective posture configuration
- using the Wet Bulb Globe Temperature at all training sites
- by training soldiers on prevention measures, causes, symptoms and first aid treatment of heat injuries.

The following are hot tips pertaining to three types of heat injuries — all of which can be prevented by taking the proper precautionary measures:

Heat cramps

- Cause — loss of salt through excessive sweating
- Symptoms — stomach, leg or arm cramps; pale, wet skin; dizziness; extreme thirst
- First aid — take the victim to a cool, shady place. Have him or her drink at least one canteen full of cool water. If there is no improvement in the victim's condition, transport him of her to a medical facility.

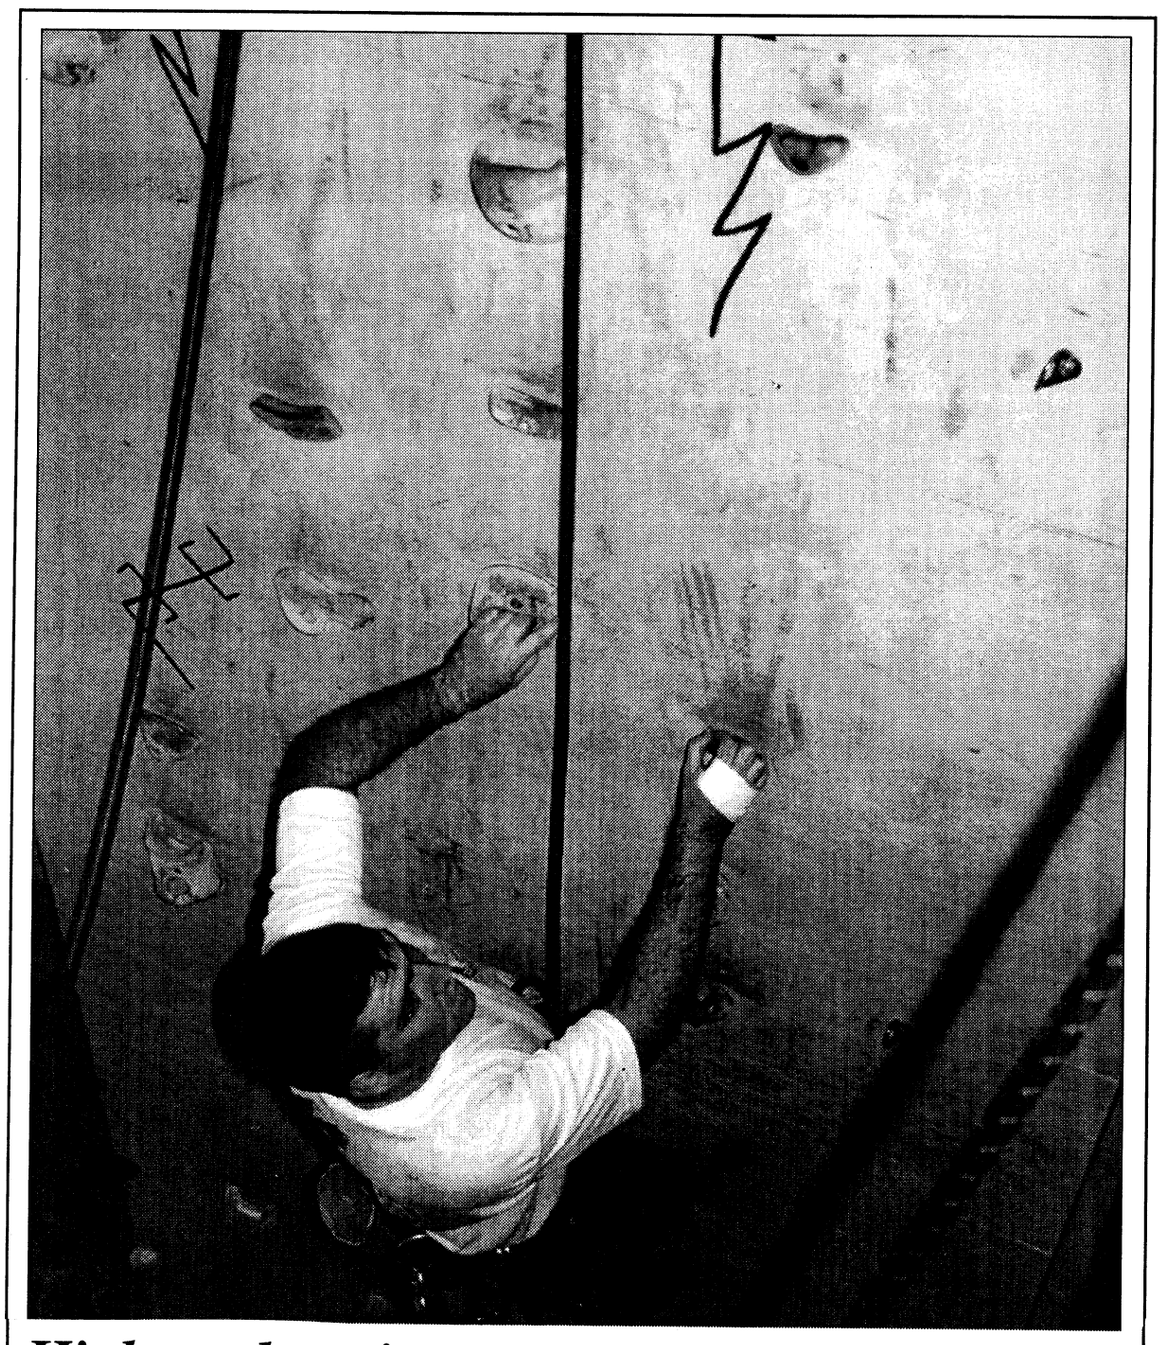
Heat exhaustion

- Cause — loss of water and salt through excessive sweating
- Symptoms — same as heat cramps plus headache and weakness; victim may appear drunk, dizzy or drowsy; skin is pale, cold, moist and clammy; victim might faint
- First aid — lay the victim flat in a cool, shady spot. Elevate the feet and loosen clothing. Pour water on the victim and fan to cool. Seek medical help.

Heat stroke

- Cause — prolonged exposure to high temperatures and failure of the body's cooling mechanism. Heat stroke is more likely to strike a person who is not acclimatized to heat or who has suffered previous heat injury.
- Symptoms — the victim may stop sweating. Skin is red and hot. Victim may experience weakness, dizziness, confusion, headache, seizures, nausea and respiration and pulse may be rapid and weak. Unconsciousness and collapsing may occur suddenly. Temperature sometimes reaches 106 to 110 degrees Fahrenheit.
- First aid — Remember, heat stroke is a medical emergency. Immediately cool victim with ice packs to neck, groin or underarms. If ice packs are not available, spray or soak victim with cool water and fan body. Do not immerse victim in ice water. Do not attempt to give water to an unconscious victim. Rush the victim to a hospital immediately.

Preventive medicine certifies food service employees



Environmental Health Section

Preventive Medicine Services sponsored the SERVSAFE Safe Food Certification Course June 10 through 14. The 40-hour course was attended by 30 food service employees representing Department of Defense Schools, Child Development Service, Veterinary Activity and Martin Army Community Hospital.

The objective of the course was to provide leadership in food service sanitation and foodborne disease prevention. The course consisted of lectures, hands-on demonstrations and homework. Students became familiar with disease-causing microorganisms, proper personal hygiene, safe food preparation and management and accident prevention.

Four students tied for top honors, each scoring 91 percent on the examination: Charlotte Shands, MACH; Katie Wilson, Frank R. Loyd School; Virginia Sims, Freddie C. Stowers School; and Thomas Pope, Child Development Services.

The course will be offered again in September and is open to all military and civilian food service managers and employees. Registration for future classes can be made through the Preventive Medicine Services, Environmental Health Section, (545-3577), or utilizing the Automated 1556 Training Module.

Higher education

Pfc. Brad Johnson, Company A, 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment, works his way up the Upper Iowa University Climbing Wall located in Building 4. The climbing wall is currently being used by students who have completed the Upper Iowa rock climbing class or who are enrolled in the climbing class. Preparations are being made for the wall to be used by units as a training aid.

Center closes after 10 years

Army News Service

LANGLEY AIR FORCE BASE, Va. — An organization that has been a trail blazer for a decade for the Army and Air Force on low intensity conflict and military operations other than war closed shop Friday.

The Center for Low Intensity Conflict was established at Langley Air Force Base by the chiefs of staff of the Army and Air Force in March 1986. Its mission was "to enhance our understanding of, and Army and Air Force preparation for, low intensity conflict in its various forms."

"Over the years, as theories were refined by the increasing tempo of operations, the mission expanded to include what has become known as military operations other than war," said Horace Hunter, CLIC deputy.

CLIC is being deactivated because the Army and joint organizations have several organizations devoted to MOOTW analysis and planning. The Training and Doctrine Command is heavily involved in writing doctrine and working on other aspects of the subject. The Army Peacekeeping Institute, Carlisle Barracks, Pa., is an integration agency to support Army and United Nations in multinational peace operations.

organization of 25 people, CLIC has made its mark not only in Air Force and Army doctrine, but in international circles and among other U.S. federal agencies. At full strength, the center had 11 Army officers, seven Air Force officers, one Air Force noncommissioned officer and three civilians each from both services.

"We produced a number of key doctrinal manuals for TRADOC on joint operations, peace operations, foreign internal defense, domestic support operations, foreign humanitarian logistics operations, and so on," Hunter said.

When the late Gen. Maxwell Thurman took charge of U.S. Southern Command, Quarry Heights, Panama, in 1989, he tasked CLIC to help develop a peacetime strategy for the command.

"As a result of that, we got involved in SOUTHCOM concerns about counterdrug operations," Hunter said. "We then began to do some work with the Drug Enforcement Agency, and other law enforcement agencies, to improve their ability to fight the drug war."

Success with DEA caused "word of mouth" advertising, which led the Border Patrol and Immigration Service to ask for CLIC's help.

"We facilitated the development of their national and regional strategies," Hunter said. "One of the last projects we did was a relook at the national strategy developed by the Border Patrol two years ago."

Teams from CLIC have accompanied several major American military deployments overseas to assist and gather information. They have also done analyses for the Air Force and Army staffs on situations such as Somalia and the Iraqi treatment of Kurds and the "marsh Arabs" in southern Iraq.

The center recently began a major program for the Air Force to create education and training beginning for entry-level officers and enlisted airmen, progressing to the war college level. Part of that effort included producing a primer on MOOTW to be distributed to airmen entering the Air Force.

That project will be completed by the Air Force Doctrine Center.

"I regret that the organization is going away because I think we had a lot of potential that was not fulfilled," Hunter said.

One area of unfulfilled potential was in joint exercises, helping to develop scenarios, consulting with commands running exercises and giving other assistance, Hunter said. Staffers, however, did participate in several exercises with the European Command, SOUTHCOM and the Joint Readiness Training Center, Fort Polk, La.

63rd Eng. Co. renovates air strip using lazers system

By Jason Cornett
63rd Engineer Company

The 1st and 2nd Platoons of the 63rd Engineer Company (Combat Support Equipment) completed a training mission focused on the upgrade of Dekkar Air Strip, located next to Fryar Drop Zone. Designed to simulate a close-battle-area runway, Dekkar is a 2800-foot by 80-foot dirt strip capable of supporting C-l 7 and C-130 aircraft.

"The construction of forward landing strips is a mission essential task for the 63rd," said Staff Sgt. Michael Jackson. "Therefore, it was important that we learned all that we could from this training. This is our probable wartime mission, and I think we are ready."

Laser devices are used in conjunction with earthmoving equipment to create a more accurate slope than the human eye could ever hope to attain.

"The critical factor in the overwhelming success of this training mission was the implementation of our construction laser equipment," said Sgt. 1st Class Scott Dexter.

The laser system consists of three components — a transmitter, a receiver, and a display box. A simple twist of a knob enters data into the transmitter, which emits a plane of laser light over 1000 feet in all directions. The receiver, mounted on the outside of the construction equipment, reads the signal and transfers the information to the operator's display screen. The screen tells the operator how to adjust the equipment to make a more accurate cut.

"It really does an incredible job," said Spc. Willie Ray Owens. "There's no way we could have had Dekkar looking this good without our laser equipment."

"The 63rd is one of the first units to field this equipment," Capt. Jeff Bochonok said. "Eventually, it will become standard throughout the Army, but the system's simplicity, versatility and efficiency made its acquisition a top priority within the company."

Starting early: Key to easy transition

Army Career and Alumni Program

The Army Career and Alumni Program provides career guidance for soldiers transitioning out of the service. Starting early is the key for soldiers to begin thinking about what they want to do after their military service.

Based on soldiers' individual needs, ACAP counselors will offer career guidance and counseling on services and programs available to them.

ACAP offerings

ACAP offers a three-day retirement transition class within 180 days of separation that prepares military members for transition.

• A one-day "advanced course" explaining resume preparation and interviewing skills

• The Defense Outplacement Referral System process provides a free service to match a person's abilities to civilian employment positions by sending a mini-resume to a data base accessed by employers worldwide.

• Career Day provides an opportunity for employers to meet soldiers, provide information on job leads and interview prospective clients as needed.

• The Educational Opportunity Program provides an awareness of tuition assistance, enrollment procedures or current data on any college or university.

• The Skill Development Program is intended to provide training opportunities to soldiers, civilians and family members who transition from the Army.

• Referrals for separation benefits to include special separation benefits, voluntary separation incentive and retirement.

Six months before separation

• Schedule through the unit personnel service noncommissioned officer your preseparation counseling appointment at ACAP Transition Office, Building 2617, and the three-day preseparation classes conducted in Infantry Hall, Classroom 30.

• Develop an individual transition plan with the ACAP transition counselor in Building 2617 and review the mandatory "Preseparation Counseling Checklist" (Department of Defense Form 2648) required for clearing post.

• Begin researching the job market. Develop a career plan, including a list of possible employers in your career field.

• Assess your job skills and interests to determine how they relate to today's job market; take a vocational interest inventory.

• Discuss with your family possible options about your career and where to live next.

Five months before separation

• Seek help if the stresses of your transition to civilian life become too much to handle.

• Contact friends in the private sector who may help you find a job.

• Begin attending job fairs.

• Develop a fall-back plan in case your first career plan falls through.

• Research specific job possibilities, job markets and the economic conditions in the geographic areas where you want to live.

• If you need additional educational or vocational training to compete in the job market, explore your options for adult education.

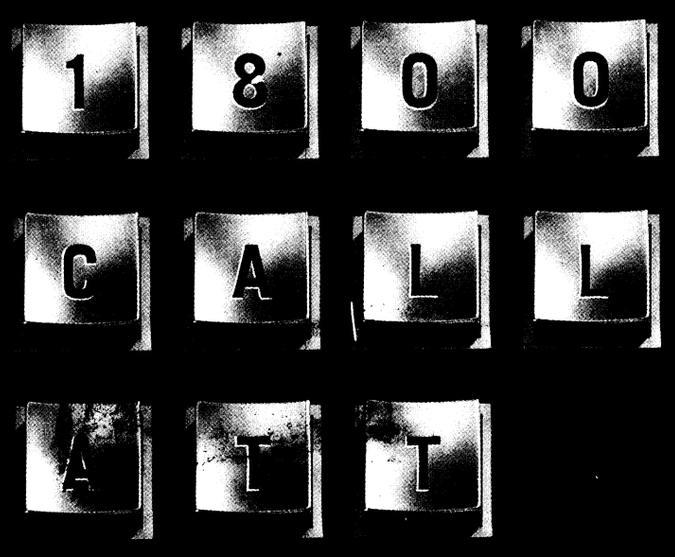
• Establish a financial plan "to make ends meet" during your transition to civilian life.

• If you are separating before fulfilling eight years of active service, you must satisfy your obligation by becoming a member of the Ready Reserve.

Four months before separation

• Receive your "Verification of Military Experience and Training" (DD Form 2586). For specific information, call (800) 258-8638.

• Write a resumé.



• If you are considering federal employment, fill out an application (Standard Form 171). Explore special federal programs and hiring opportunities for veterans.

• Visit the Relocation Assistance Program Office. If you live in government housing, arrange for a preinspection and obtain termination information.

• Learn about the education benefits you can obtain under the Montgomery GI Bill.

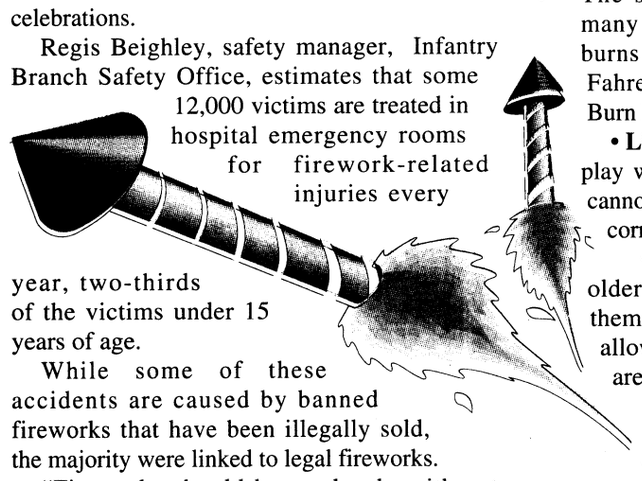
FOURTH OF JULY



Don't let fireworks ruin your day

Enjoy the post display on York Field

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Communities have recognized for years that fireworks, for all their patriotic associations, present a very serious safety hazard, particularly for children. Deaths, blindness, amputations and severe burns have been all too often the result of Fourth of July celebrations.

Regis Beighley, safety manager, Infantry Branch Safety Office, estimates that some 12,000 victims are treated in hospital emergency rooms for firework-related injuries every year, two-thirds of the victims under 15 years of age.

While some of these accidents are caused by banned fireworks that have been illegally sold, the majority were linked to legal fireworks.

"Fireworks should be used only with extreme caution," Beighley said. "Used carelessly, they can cause painful, possibly severe injuries."

To use fireworks more safely, Beighley offers the following recommendations:

• Fireworks are not toys — The sparkler, considered by many the ideal 'safe' firework for the young, burns at temperatures exceeding 1,800 degrees Fahrenheit, according to the Georgia Firefighters Burn Foundation, Inc., and can easily ignite clothing.

• Limit access — Do not allow younger children to play with fireworks under any circumstances. They cannot appreciate the danger involved and cannot act correctly in case of an emergency.

• Supervise at all times — If you permit older children to use fireworks, be sure they use them only under close adult supervision. Do not allow any running or horse play while fireworks are being used.

• Follow all warning instructions — Before using any fireworks, read and follow all warning instructions printed on the label. Instructions are printed for a purpose.

The sale, storage, possession, or use of fireworks of any description on an Army reservation or property, including Army-owned housing areas, is prohibited, Beighley said.

But post residents need not feel left out of Independence Day celebrations. Beighley encourages all Fort Benning soldiers and families, living on and off post, to attend the post fireworks display which begins at dark today. The fireworks, larger than a backyard celebration, will be supervised by professional personnel as well as the Fort Benning Fire Department.

So enjoy the fireworks display on post rather than breaking the law and possibly injuring yourself and others.

Gary Cline III, 8, son of Suk and Sgt. 1st Class Gary Cline Jr., 11th Infantry Regiment, carries his catch to the judging table at the end of the two-hour Youth Services Fishing Rodeo June 29. More than 70 children, ages 6 to 15, participated in the event.

DCA combines swimming for Youth Activities with FBOC

Directorate of Community Activities

Youth Activities pool has been colocated with the Fort Benning Officers' Club Family Pool (upper pool) this year.

Children who possess a YA membership card, a Fort Benning Officers' Club membership card, or pool pass are encouraged to enjoy the pool.

Although parents can take comfort in the addition of youth counselors at the pool this summer, pool policy requires family members 7 to 9 years old be accompanied by a parent or guardian while using the swimming facilities. Parents will be responsible for the actions of children although parents who accompany these children are not required to enter the water.

Family members 6 years and younger may use the facilities only when they are under the immediate supervision of the parent (i.e. in the water with the child while within the pool enclosure).

Parents of Youth Activities members who are not eligible for membership to the Officers' Club will be charged a modest fee. That fee is $1.50 per day, or $5 per week. However, individuals who are eligible to join the FBOC must do so (temporary memberships are available).

Youth Activities and Officers' Club Family Pool operating hours are:

• Sunday and Monday — closed

• Tuesday, Thursday and Friday — noon to 6 p.m.

• Wednesday — noon to 5:45 p.m.

• Saturday and holidays — 11 a.m. to 6 p.m.

The Youth Activities Barracuda Swim Team will use the Briant Wells Field House pool for training. Participants in the summer Latch Key Program will also use the Briant Wells Field House or Sand Hill pools.

Post residents should follow rules regarding backyard pools

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Parents purchase plastic or inflatable swimming pools each year for children anxious for a little fun in the water.

But personally-owned pools can be dangerous for children. Owners should take precautions to ensure family members and neighborhood children do not suffer unnecessary tragedy.

U.S. Army Infantry Center Regulation 210-5, paragraph 25b, states that "occupants who erect swimming pools at their quarters are responsible for providing sufficient security to preclude unauthorized entry.

"Pool covers will be secured in a manner to deny access to small children."

Other precautions owners can take to prevent accidents, include placing the pool in the backyard instead of the front yard or driveway, and enclosed in a fence.

Families living on post who have pools must also conform to paragraph 25a of the same regulation in order to ensure fences meet safety standards.

Fort Benning families who choose to have a pool in their yards must remember they are, by regulation, legally liable for accidents.

So, if you have an inflatable or plastic pool in your backyard, take the time and steps necessary to ensure a tragedy does not come out of typical summer fun.

CHRRS: Post's homefinding services office assists soldiers, family members settling into local life

By Amy Durham
Special to The Bayonet©

Sunday afternoon rides to look for dream homes is a common American pastime. But America's soldiers seldom have that luxury.

Helping military families settle in at their new assignments, the Directorate of Public Works' Community Homefinding, Relocation and Referral Services Office works to make the family life transition as smooth as possible.

Every soldier who inprocesses to Fort Benning must go through the CHRRS office, Building 2621, in Soldiers' Plaza, whether to apply for post quarters or to look for off-post housing.

When the staff of three greets off-post customers with, "How may I help you?", CHRRS representatives already have a good idea how to best lend a hand, according to Anna Wilson, CHRRS officer.

Soldiers needing off-post housing are given rental guides, a map, their basic allowance for quarters and variable housing allowance limits, and a list of vacancies highlighted based on price, location, pet allowance and any other requirements the soldier may have stipulated.

"We also sit down with them and discuss any financial situations that might directly impact how much they can afford to pay for rent," Wilson said.

Soldiers in the rank of specialist or below must have a senior noncommissioned officer go over a Housing Adequacy Checklist with the soldier at the apartment or house they lease. Then, the company commander must sign the checklist.

Wilson said newcomers should consider hidden costs when deciding whether to buy or rent, and whether to lease a house or apartment. For example, a soldier wanting to buy a house must consider not only mortgage, but taxes, utilities, water and garbage bills as well as all maintenance costs.

Another dangerous choice could be that a soldier takes an apartment for $300 or $400 per month. But Wilson said apartments at such a price often may not be energy efficient, and what the soldier thought he would save, he actually spends on higher heating and cooling costs.

Time is another factor in choosing a home. Wilson said soldiers should sign a longer lease if they plan to keep their families there indefinitely. Otherwise, she suggested they sign a six-month lease, especially if they plan to move on post later.

Children and pets are also major factors in deciding on housing. Many apartment and rental homes have pet fees associated with them. People often have school, child care, playground and other neighborhood considerations if they have children. Wilson said it's a good idea for newcomers to take the time to drive around, talk to potential neighbors and see what they are like.

"The choice they make will effect their work performance and home life," she said.

Although CHRRS representatives take the time to help an average of 100 people per day, Wilson said they are also responsible for inspecting vacant off post housing to ensure they meet health and safety standards.

"We want soldiers and their families to have adequate, affordable housing," she said.

Part of their commitment to this priority is building and maintaining a healthy relationship with realtors and landlords throughout the community. Anyone with a rental unit can call and get on the vacancy list if the property meets standards. Real estate companies update their vacancies with CHRRS once a week.

Wilson, who has been with the Housing Division for 15 years and CHRRS for 11 years, and her staff also work closely with the Columbus Board of Realtors and the Columbus Apartment Association, attending monthly meetings.

"It keeps us informed," Wilson said, "and helps us build a great rapport."

Thousands of soldiers move to Fort Benning each year. Wilson said the CHRRS's relationship with the local community enables them to mediate landlord and tenant disputes amicably, making both happy.

Citing a variety of issues, including broken leases, discrimination concerns and leaky roofs, Wilson said she and her staff have a lot of influence working out disagreements.

"A soldier might not have the money to pay rent," she said. "We'll work with the landlord on a payment plan and refer the soldier to Army Community Service for financial counseling. Or, if a soldier is PCSing and they can not get their deposit back," she said, "and we'll find out why."

ask the judge

By, George R. Smawley
Office of the Staff Judge Advocate

Q. During a recent thunderstorm, my stereo "burned out" due to a power surge. The repair firm said that most of the internal components need to be replaced, and that I would be better off buying a new one. Because this happened in government housing, will the government pay me for my loss?

A. Probably not. Frequent thunderstorms are a fact of life in southern Georgia, and often result in violent electrical disturbances that can cause power surges and power outages. Each year, the Claims Office receives numerous claims for compensation for damages to personal property — computers, televisions, VCRs, etc. — that result from these electrical disturbances. Normally, such claims are denied due to the fact that severe thunderstorms are not considered unusual occurrences for the Columbus area.

At Fort Benning, claimants are expected to use surge suppressors to protect delicate or sensitive items, such as computers, stereos and similar electrical items. Surge suppressors are an inexpensive way to protect expensive personal property. They work by diminishing power pulses down to a manageable range that is usually safe for delicate electronics.

Because it is virtually impossible to distinguish between internal damage caused by a mechanical defect and surge damage, neither a statement by a repair firm nor the claimant's honest belief that an electrical surge caused a malfunction is usually sufficient to sustain a claim that damage was the result of a surge of unusual intensity.

In certain, limited situations, claims for damage caused by a power surge may be paid when installation engineers report that a particular set of residences were subject to a power surge of unusual intensity, or when a lightening bolt has actually struck the residence or objects outside the residence. Likewise, a claim may be compensable in a situation where there is evidence that both the electronic item and the surge suppressor to which it was attached were damaged, indicating a surge of uncharacteristically high intensity.

Claims that foodstuffs were spoiled as the result of a power outage may be considered if there is evidence that the outage lasted for an unusual duration. Claimants are under an obligation to make every effort to minimize their losses by keeping the refrigerator and freezer doors closed as much as possible, and looking for alternatives to preserving food in cold storage. While food in a filled freezer will usually stay frozen for as long as two days, when in doubt about food, throw it out.

For more information, call the Fort Benning Claims Office, Office of the Staff Judge Advocate, at 545-2285.

SUMMER CAR MAINTENANCE

Safety office provides tips for vehicle longevity

Infantry Branch Safety Office

As the days lengthen and the temperature rises, the sun's burning rays can take their toll on your car.

Here are some ways to keep your vehicle humming during the summer months.

Coolant check

To prevent overheating, check your car's coolant level often and refill with water and coolant as needed. Replace cracked or leaking hoses. Check the fan belt, too. If your heat gauge flashes a warning while you're driving, try these procedures:

• Turn off your air conditioner to relieve the engine's load and allow it to run cooler.

• Turn on the heater and fan. This draws heat from the engine compartment.

• Pull off to the shoulder of the road, well out of traffic. Race your engine to increase fan speed and move more coolant through the cooling system.

• If the engine is still hot, turn it off and raise the hood. Try starting the engine again in 15 or 20 minutes. If it's still overheated, call for help.

Tire check

Tires take their worst beating during late winter and early spring. Summer thus becomes an ideal time to align your wheels. Tire pressure is another consideration. Since warmer weather increases air pressure within tires, it may be necessary to use less air. Consult your tire dealer or service station on pressure recommendations during hot weather.

Temperature changes cause the metal to contract and expand, thus loosening nuts and bolts. Tighten any bolts that seem loose.

Air filter check

If you can't see light when you hold the air filter up to the sun, it needs to be cleaned or replaced. Don't bounce it off the ground to shake out the dirt. This could break the filters. Some filters can be cleaned in a liquid bath. Others need to be blown from the inside out.

Draining contaminants from the fuel tank is another important summer chore. It doesn't take much to do the job. By draining a gallon or so from the tank, you can rid it of the mud that mysteriously finds its way through the filter cap during the winter months.

De-Bugging

Bugs may be small, but they can cause major problems. Moths have been known to plug up a radiator, with the acid in their remains eating right through it. Clean any areas where bugs have accumulated.

Bugs that have baked on an old paint job can be a nightmare to remove. If your paint isn't bug proof, try waxing or some other method of protection.

Cold weather often prevents us from giving proper care to paint and chrome. Now's the time to get out the degreasing agents, power wash, wax, clean rags and sponges.

Clean the undercarriage, too—engine, transmission and braking system.

Simple solutions break discomfort from heat

U. Ga. Cooperative Extension Service

Staying cool and comfortable is a personal, as well as a health and safety, concern during extremely hot weather. You can do this by wearing cool fabric.

Polyester may be a miracle fiber of no wrinkles, but it is not cool. This is because it holds body moisture and oils, making you feel hot and sticky.

Cotton, on the other hand, is very absorbent. It acts like a natural air conditioner. So, in hot weather, it makes sense to wear clothes made of cotton or a blend of polyester and cotton, for a cool, as well as a wrinkle-free, appearance.

Wear light-weight, light-colored clothing that is loose fitting to allow body moisture to evaporate and air to circulate next to the skin.

Sun precautions

Caution in the sun is the key to surviving in the heat.

Prolonged exposure to the sun and heat leads to dehydration. Drink plenty of water or refreshing fruit juices to replace body fluids. Frozen fruit juice popsicles make cooling treats for young and old people alike and help to keep the body temperature normal.

Refresh yourself several times a day with a cool washcloth. A dusting of baby powder will also assist in reducing prickly heat and increase body comfort.

Work in your garden or yard early in the morning or late in the evening. Stay in the shade as much as possible. If you must be out of doors, wear a hat to keep the sun from beating down on your head.

Remember to be safe and have good sun sense.

Proper treatment important for children's broken bones

Egleston Children's Hospital

As active as children are, it's not surprising so many of them end up with broken bones over the course of childhood. Fortunately, most children's fractures heal without complications if they are correctly diagnosed and treated.

"Detecting a fracture is usually a a matter of simply X-raying the bone," said E. William Schmitt Jr., pediatric orthopedic surgeon, Egleston Children's Hospital at Emory University. "But it is not always so easy. For example, swelling may be the only finding on an X-ray. Proper diagnosis may depend on having a doctor who treats children's fractures regularly — one who combines that specialized experience with clinical examination and instinct."

Proper treatment of children's fractures is especially important, according to Schmitt, since their bones are still growing. Bone growth occurs from "growing centers" at the ends of children's long bones, such as bones in their arms and legs. An untreated fracture of a growing center could alter a child's bone growth or cause other deformities over time.

Children are also prone to getting infection-causing bacteria in the blood stream, especially at the ends of growing bones. Pediatric orthopedic specialists tend to be more alert to symptoms that seem unrelated to a broken bone, such as fever, which could indicate potentially serious infection.

There are other good reasons for having children's fractures treated by pediatric orthopedic specialists.

"We enjoy children," Schmitt said. "I have a fun time with my patients and try to help them turn a bad experience into a good one as much as possible."

Acknowledging that "You can't run and get an X-ray every time your child falls down," Schmitt advises parents to contact their children's primary physicians if they question the seriousness of an injury.

"Remember, it doesn't take much trauma to break children's bones, and children often can't describe their pain well," he said. "Be suspicious if there is swelling or tenderness, or if the child won't use the injured limb. Most primary physicians will want to refer your child to a pediatric orthopedic surgeon for treatment if a fracture is suspected."

CHRRS: Assists settling soldiers

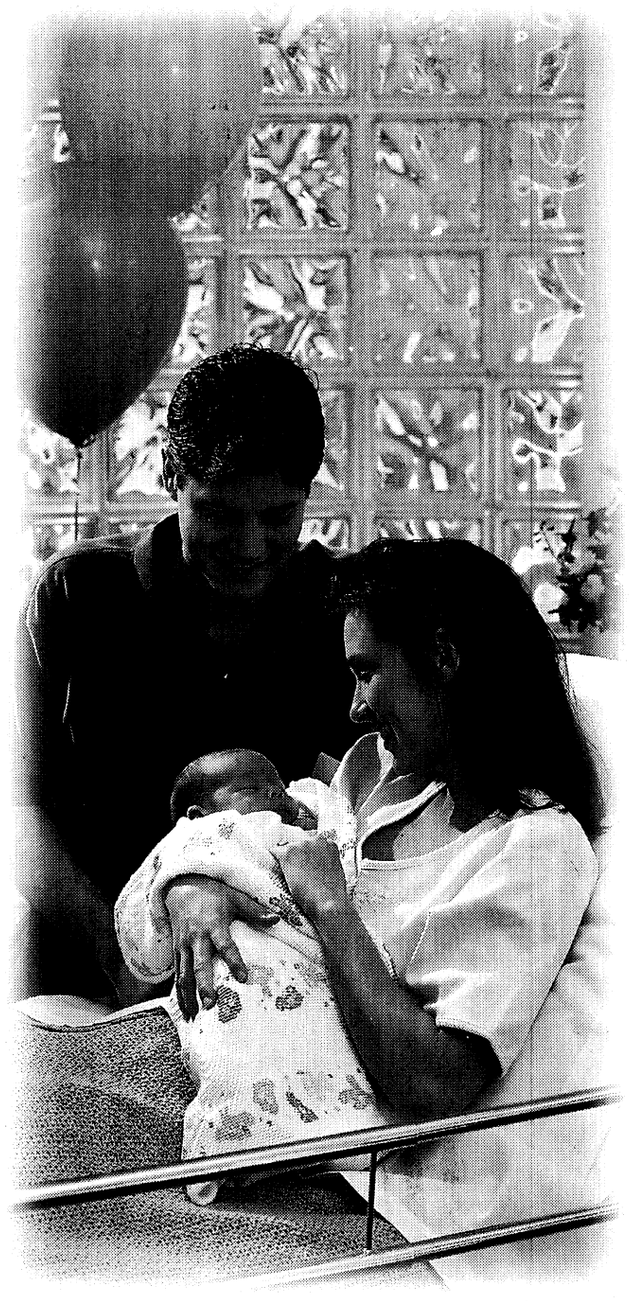
In one instance, Wilson helped a soldier who could not get her deposit back because the landlord said certain items were not clean. Wilson stayed long after hours to help the soldier scrub floors and appliances just so she could get her deposit back.

However, Wilson noted military personnel leaving Fort Benning should not always expect their deposits be returned as soon as they leave their quarters.

"By Georgia law, landlords have 30 days to return deposits to tenants."



And when military personnel do prepare to leave Fort Benning, CHRRS provides PCS House Express, a program to help those heading for another post by providing the phone numbers needed for that post, the BAQ and VHA for that area and a profile of the typical costs for off-post housing there.

Taking care of soldiers as they come to and leave Fort Benning, Wilson said she and the others enjoy helping military personnel and their families simply because "everybody in here loves their job."

Christ calls sinners home

By Phillip Wright
3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment

With the arrival of summer, many people will have plans to travel to places they used to call home. They will plan to visit family and friends they have not seen for a long time. Some will not go home because they feel they cannot.

reflections

Have you ever felt you could not go home or back into a relationship because of something you said or did?

Maybe you could not go back because of what you had become. Pastor Max Lucado tells a true story about such a situation — how one person found that there is someone who will let you come home.

The small house with the red-tiled roof was one of many in the poor Brazilian village. It was comfortable, though, because Maria and her daughter, Christina, had done what they could to add color to the gray walls and warmth to the hard dirt floor. Their personal touches included a faded picture, a calendar and a wooden crucifix. The furnishings were simple, two pallets to sleep on, a wash basin and a wood burning stove.

Maria's husband died when Christina was an infant. The young mother stubbornly refused opportunities to remarry but instead took a job as a maid. Although her salary afforded her few luxuries, it was reliable, and it did provide food and clothes for herself and Christina. Now fifteen years later, Christina was old enough to get a job and help with the expenses.

Some said Christina got her independence from her mother. She recoiled from the traditional idea of marrying young and raising a family. She was extremely attractive and could fill a room with laughter. She could have had her pick of any of the young men who were trying to win her attention. Christina made men feel important when she was around them but it was her curiosity that made her keep all the men at arm's length.

She wanted to get away from her poor dingy village and go see the big city with its exciting avenues. These thoughts horrified Maria and she would remind Christina of the harshness of the streets. She told Christina that people would not know her in the city; jobs were scarce and besides life was cruel there.

"What would you do for a living?" Maria asked, knowing exactly what Christina would do or have to do for a living.

That's why her heart broke the morning she awoke and found Christina's pallet empty. Maria knew immediately where Christina had gone and she also knew what she must now do to find her. She quickly threw some clothes in a bag, gathered up all her money and ran out of the house.

On her way to the bus stop, Maria stopped for one last thing, pictures. She sat in the photograph booth and spent all she could on pictures of herself. Then she boarded the bus bound for Rio de Janerio.

Maria knew Christina had no way of earning money and she knew that her daughter was too stubborn to quit. When pride meets hunger, a human being will do things that are unthinkable before the hunger started. Knowing this, Maria began her search of bars, hotels and other sordid places that had a reputation for having prostitutes around. At each place, she looked for her daughter and after not finding her, she left a picture taped to a mirror, a bar or door.

Maria wrote a note on the backside of each of the pictures. It was not long before both the money and the pictures ran out and Maria had to go home. The weary mother wept as the bus began its long journey back to the dingy little village.

It was a few weeks later that young Christina was descending yet another set of hotel stairs. Her face was tired, her eyes no longer sparkled with youth but spoke of pain, shame and fear; and her laughter, which had once filled a room, was now broken, her dream now a nightmare. Many times, she longed to trade those countless beds for her secure pallet, yet the little village was, in too many ways, to far away.

As she reached the bottom of the stairs, her eyes noticed a familiar face. She looked again and there on the lobby mirror was a small picture of her mother. Christina's eyes burned and her throat tightened as she walked across the room and removed the small photo from the mirror. Written on the back of the picture was this compelling invitation:

"Whatever you have done, whatever you have become, it does not matter, come home."

With tears streaming down her face Christina ran towards the bus station.

Maybe you once had a relationship with God but now feel you cannot come back to him. God calls to each of us saying:

"No matter what you have done, no matter what you have become, I paid the penalty for you, come home!"

INDEPENDENCE DAY

God insures true joy of freedom

By Chana Timoner
Chapel Centers Branch

"Freedom can be won by heroes, but only faith in God can insure it. Freedom of the soul is not freedom to do as you like, but to be what God intended us to be," said Rabbi J. Avigdor.

reflections

The Jewish concept of freedom is that the world is a combination of body and spirit. Creation is like a two-sided coin, one side being matter, the other side being spirit. A person can physically be free, yet spiritually enslaved, and this is not true freedom.

After leaving the physical slavery of Egypt, the Israelites received the spiritual rules called the Ten Commandments. Some misguided folks might see those rules as being limitations, preventing us from doing anything that we please. The popular view of freedom is that it consists of obeying our whims and doing as we please. Not so.

The Bible tells us many stories of people who were free. Pharaoh was free to enslave millions; King Saul was free to order David killed; King David was free to send Uriah, husband of Bathsheba, to be killed on the front lines of battle; marauders were free to do harm to the man helped by the Good Samaritan.

These people all thought that they were free to control the lives of others. However, they did not have the moral strength and power to control their own lives. With reference to Pharaoh, the Bible uses the expression "his heart was heavy." He could not control his own passions, whims and desires.

We know all too well, tales of people of this type, in the Bible and in our own lives. Many of us think of freedom in America as this bogus type of freedom. The ability to do anything we like, including destroying our bodies with drugs, or "sponging' off of others.

This is at best a superficial freedom which leads to harm for ourselves and others. One may be free to do harmful things, but in reality our souls are in horrible bondage to personal inadequacies and problems. Some are in bondage to their lusts for wealth or sex.

Unbridled lust leads us to be enslaved by these desires. Often, we mistakenly believe that our lusts and desires are our needs, and we do not separate our needs from our desires in a mature manner, just as a child in the Commissary is not able to distinguish his needs from his desires. If we allowed that child to make all the food purchases, no doubt, that child would become overweight and undernourished. So it is with our spiritual selves. Not all of us have the spiritual maturity to recognize that the limitations our religion places upon us, are for our own benefit.

For example, the Jewish dietary laws remind the Jew three times a day of his bonds with God. Lenten vows remind the Christian for more than a month, that spiritual needs are as great as physical needs. Ramadan, a month in which the Muslim will not eat and drink during daylight hours, serves to bind the Muslim closer to Allah, which in Arabic means God.

Avigdor once gave a definition of true freedom. He said that one should be free not to do all that he wishes, but to be able to have the freedom to want to do everything that is right. Our generation has the tragedy of believing that true American freedom is to do everything we want to do, rather than to goal and work up to the greatest potential that God has gifted us with.

People need to learn that the desires of here and now, like the child in the Commissary, need to be controlled.

Monetary pleasures may do us long-term harm, but long-term wholesome physical and spiritual goals will do us the greatest good as individuals, and as a nation.

USAMU proves M-16A2's superiority

By Paula J. Randall Pagan
USAMU Public Affairs Office

What do you get when you combine the Army's top shooters, talented gunsmiths and expert ammunition specialists with an M-16A2?

You get the most accurate service rifle the military has ever used.

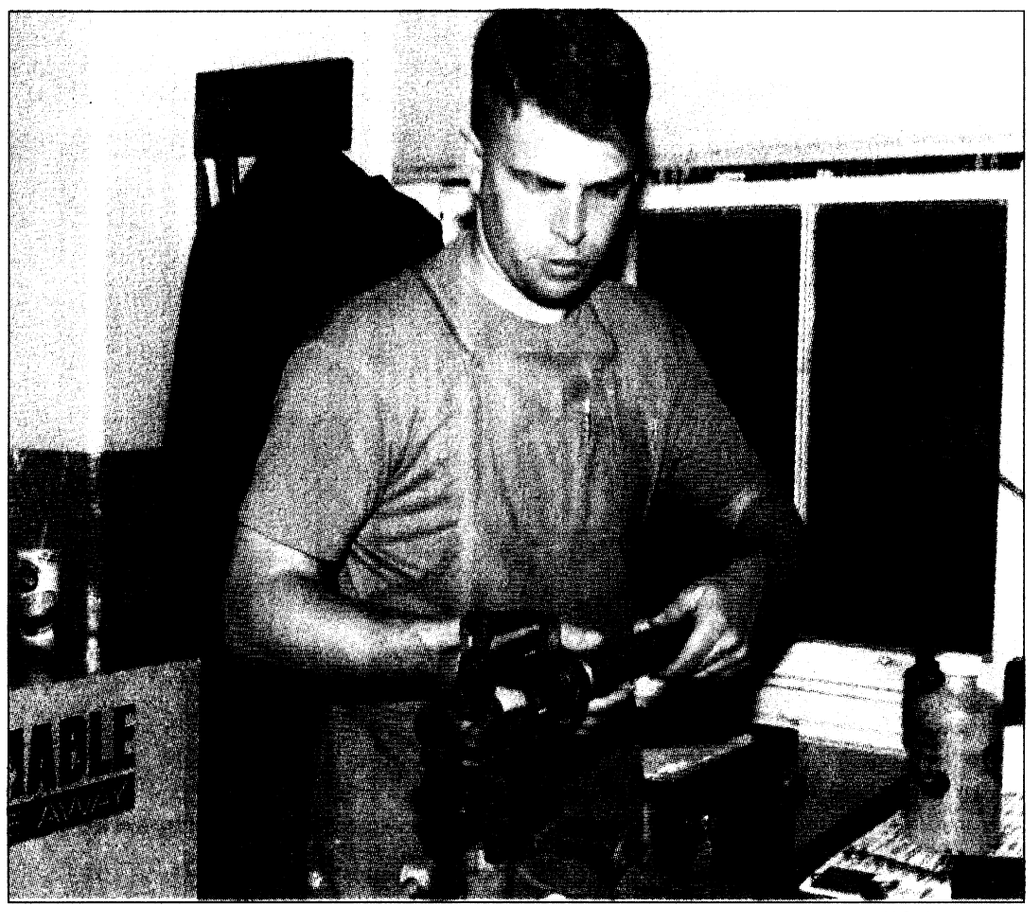
Recent modifications made to the M-16A2 rifle by U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit gunsmiths transformed the reliable combat weapon into a rifle with pinpoint accuracy, which contributed to the USAMU Service Rifle Team's domination in recent interservice and national marksmanship championships, USAMU Deputy Commander Robert Aylward said.

The Service Rifle Team competes in national and interservice competitions using the Army's own M-16A2 rifle. The Interservice Championships started in 1960. The USAMU Service Rifle Team, shooting the M-1, dominated the championships from 1960 to 1962. Shooters had major victories from 1974 to 1978 and USAMU service rifle shooters won most of the championships from 1984 to 1987 using the M-14 rifle.

In 1995, the Service Rifle Team won with the M-16A2 rifle, which was modified by the USAMU Custom Gun Shop.

USAMU shooters are the only service that uses the M-16A2 exclusively in competition.

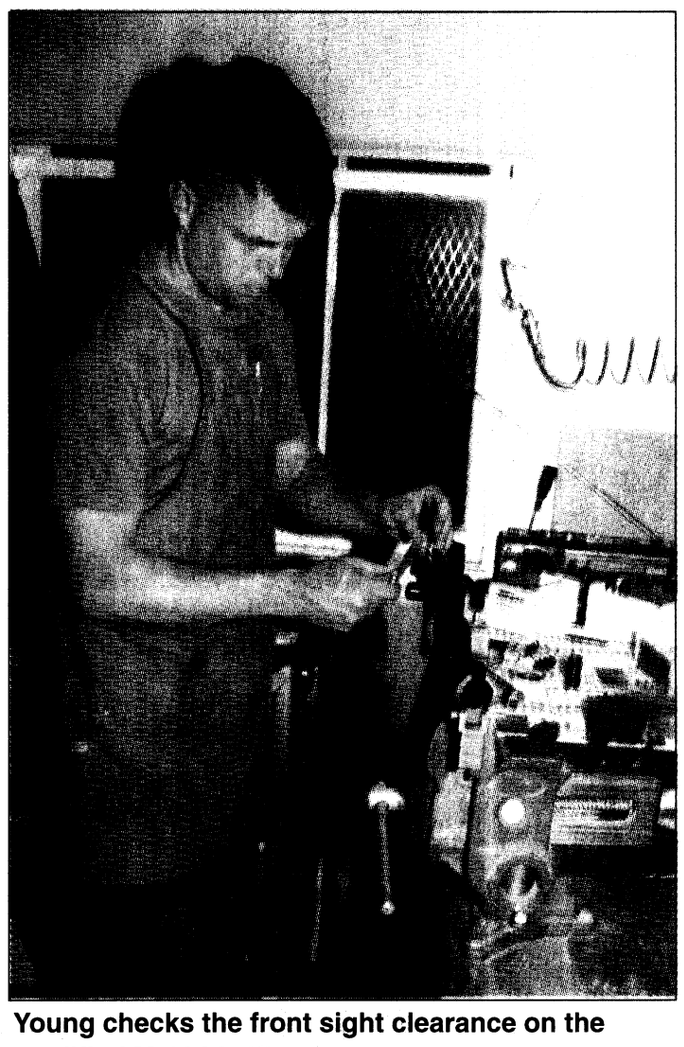
This was the first time the entire Service Rifle Team used the M-16 in competition. The previous weapon of choice for participants in the competition was the more accurate M-14, despite the fact that it went out of service decades ago.



The former Service Rifle Team record was set in 1981 by the Marine Corps using the M-14. Despite the prevalent belief that the M-16 could never be used successfully in competition, the Marksmanship Unit devoted itself to proving how successful it could be, Aylward said.

Recent modifications made to the M-16A2 by USAMU gunsmiths, which transformed the reliable combat weapon into a quality match rifle, include changing the barrel to a thicker one to prevent warping and decreasing the size of the rear sight aperture to improve accuracy. Until these modifications were made, the M-16A2 was not a competitive weapon, according to USAMU Service Rifle shooters.

Shooters determined that the barrel of the M-16A2 warped slightly as a result of heat generated by repeated firing and also by sling tension. The warped barrel, along with the large aperture on the rear sight hindered the accuracy of the weapon. A reduction of the rear-sight aperture, the introduction of a barrel made of a thicker metal that withstands warping and a barrel sleeve improved the performance of the service rifle.



Another factor in the recent success of the M-16 is the adjustments made to the ammunition. USAMU ammunition technicians assembled a match-grade, 600-yard load, making the M-16 superior to the formerly favored M-14.

USAMU Service Rifle shooters, gunsmiths and ammunition technicians said they are still working toward further improving the M-16A2 — a rifle, Aylward said, the Marksmanship unit believes is now the premiere weapon on the competitive firing line or on the battlefield.

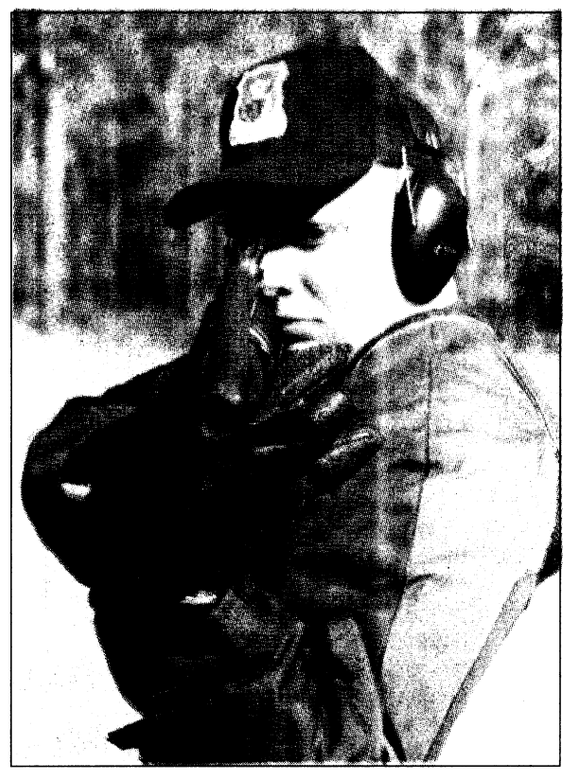
Service rifle team wins infantry trophy, National Match Course

By Paula Randall Pagan
USAMU Public Affairs Office

The U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit Service Rifle Team took top honors at the Virginia State Highpower Championship in Quantico, Va., June 15 and 16.



The USAMU Team, coached by Sgt. 1st Class Richard M. Remily, won the National Match Course with a score of 1,974 out of a possible 2,000 with 75 bull's-eyes out of a possible 200. Team members were Sgt. Lewis A. Tippie, Cpl. Grant L. Singley and Spcs. Norman L. Anderson and Barry L Coleman. The USAMU Team, coached by Staff Sgt. Carl O. Dooley, came in third with a score of 1,968 with 82 bull's-eyes. Team members were Sgt. 1st Class Kenneth V. Gill, Sgts. Kevin McMahon and Charles E. Coffey and Spc. Tobie L. Tomlinson.

Remily's team of Staff Sgt. Rand D. Benson and Gill, Coffey, McMahon, Singley and Anderson also won the Infantry Trophy Team Match with a score of 1,365.

Tippie won the 200-yard rapid fire (siting) match with perfect score, and took second place in the individual 800 aggregate with a score of 793 of a possible 800 with 39 bulls' eyes out of a possible 80, which was only one point behind the first-place finisher.

In 1995, the USAMU team finished first in a number of matches comprising the National Championships, in which more than 1,200 shooters competed. The competitors were the best Army, Marine Corps, Air Force, Coast Guard, Reserves and civilian shooters.

The USAMU Service Rifle Team will defend its titles at the 1996 Interservice Championships at Quantico July 17 to 23 and the 1996 National Matches at Camp Perry, Ohio, July 30 to Aug. 11.

Pistol team places second in interservice match

By Marlene English
USAMU Public Affairs Office

The U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit Service Pistol Team faced competitors representing all branches of the service during the Interservice Pistol Championships recently in Little Rock, Ark.

The USAMU marksmen participated in four individual and team events — the .22 caliber, center fire and service pistol competitions. USAMU placed second in both the .22 caliber individual and team matches.

The USAMU team of Capt. Steven King, Sgts. William King and Roger Jacobson and Pfc. Fritz Ficke came in second out of 15 pistol teams in the .22 caliber team match with a score of 1,174 points out of a possible 1,200 just behind the winning team from the U.S. Army Reserve, which had 1,181 points.

Ficke beat out 31 competitors to take second place in the .22 caliber individual match with a score of 891 out of a possible 900 points with 47 bull's eyes. He trailed the leader, Marine Corps Sgt. Brian Zins, by four points.

Using a modified 9mm pistol, Spc. Dianna Dzek came in second in the excellence in competition leg match.

"Considering the caliber of the competition here, I think our shooters did well," USAMU Service Pistol Team Coach Ray Arredondo said. "Most of the (USAMU) shooters have only been on the Service Pistol Team a little more than a year. Their performing better in an event like this is just a matter of becoming conditioned to competition."

"They're all extremely talented shooters," Arredondo said. "I have no complaints with their performance here."

OUTDOORS

Marine batteries undergo heavy demand during use

Selection important to performance

—Feature Outdoors

A car battery has a life of leisure compared to a boat's cranking or trolling battery. A car battery only has to put out juice for a few seconds to start the engine, then the alternator recharges it while supplying all the necessary electrical power to run the air conditioner, lights and sound system.

Boat owners don't usually use marine cranking batteries to start an outboard in sub-zero weather, but there is a much heavier demand on them to run accessories when the motor is not running and recharging them. Depth finders, GPS and LORAN systems, lights, generators, bilge pumps — all operate off battery power expected to crank the engine over when you head home. If the engine doesn't run for very long, the cranking battery won't be fully replenished.

Trolling motor batteries have the job of supplying substantial amounts of current for an entire day or more of fishing. Trolling motor batteries are always deep-cycle batteries, designed to withstand several hundred full discharge and charge cycles before performance falls off. Unlike marine cranking batteries, deep-cycle trolling motor batteries are often drawn down to well below 50 percent of their capacity on a regular basis, a practice that would kill a starting battery after very few cycles.

•Marine Cranking Batteries - Always select a marine battery for marine use. Automotive starting batteries will work for starting marine engines, but they won't run your accessories for very long. Marine batteries have built in carrying handles and terminals for accessory connections.

•Deep-Cycle Marine Batteries - These are designed to run trolling motors for long periods of time and withstand many charge and discharge cycles. This is equivalent to using your trolling motor for boat positioning or slow trolling for an entire weekend before recharging.

•Dual-Purpose Marine Batteries - Some marine batteries can be used for both deep-cycle operations and marine cranking. Deep-cycle batteries are primarily designed to get top performance from trolling motors, but also have enough cranking amps to start a 350 HP marine engine.

•Battery Capacity - Buy the battery with the highest amp-hour rating your budget will allow. That way, you'll have plenty of reserve power for that extra day of fishing without charging. The minimum recommended rating for trolling motors is 105 amp-hours.

outdoor outlook

Fishing tournaments — Georgia State Parks have scheduled several events where serious anglers, as well as beginning youngsters, can start reeling in their catch.

Some events offer families a chance to spend time together in the summer sunshine, while others challenge seasoned fishermen to land their largest bass yet.

Most state parks have boat ramps and docks, and many rent boats and sell bait. All tournaments are free unless otherwise noted. A $2 park pass fee is charged per vehicle.

For more information about the fishing tournaments, call the host parks. To reserve a campsite or fully equipped cottage, call (800) 864-PARK.

• Children's fishing rodeo, July 25, Reed Bingham State Park, Adel, (912) 896-3551, children 14 and under.

• Children's fishing rodeo, Aug. 31, Reed Bingham State Park, Adel, (912) 896-3551, for children 14 and under.

Fort Benning BASS Club — The Fort Benning Bass Anglers and Sportsman Society Club conducts its biweekly meetings on the second and fourth Tuesdays of each month.

The meetings are conducted at the Don C. Faith Middle School cafeteria at 7:30 p.m.

Membership is open to active duty soldiers, retired military personnel and Department of Defense civilians and their family members.

For more information, call Steve Ward at 569-5705.

Canoeing — Georgia State Park canoe trips for beginning and experienced paddlers will be Saturday at various parks.

Participants can explore some of Georgia's most scenic waterways while on guided canoe trips.

Park staff will explain basic canoeing techniques and interpret natural surroundings while leading canoers on day-long trips.

Paddlers with a sharp eye may see beaver, otter, king fishers, great blue herons, turtles or other wildlife.

The cost is $15 per person, which includes canoe, paddles and life preserver.

The parks that will offer these canoe trips are:

• High Falls State Park, Jackson, Ga., July 13, Aug. 10, Sept. 14 and Oct. 19. Call (912) 993-3053 to register.

• Watson Mill Bridge State Park, Comer, Ga., July 13 and Aug. 10. Call (706) 783-5349 to register.

• Panola Mountain State Park, Stockbridge, Ga., Sept. 21. Call (770) 389-7801 to register.

A $2 park pass fee is charged per vehicle.

Georgia angler wins Red Man Bulldog division qualifier

By Brian G. Sayner
Operation Bass

Eddie Parker of Macon, Ga., took first place, $2,886 plus 50 CITGO Challenge Points in the Red Man Bulldog Division qualifier conducted recently on Lake Eufaula.

Parker landed a limit of five bass weighing 20 pounds, 7 ounces. He topped a field of 188 anglers competing for cash prizes totaling $10,447.

Parker fished 11 inch worms and crankbaits on the lower end of the lake.

Second place went to Phil Smith of Anniston, Ala., for five bass weighing 20 pounds, 2 ounces. Smith fished shallow water on the lower end of the lake using crankbaits and worms with 16-pound-test line. Second place paid $1,443.

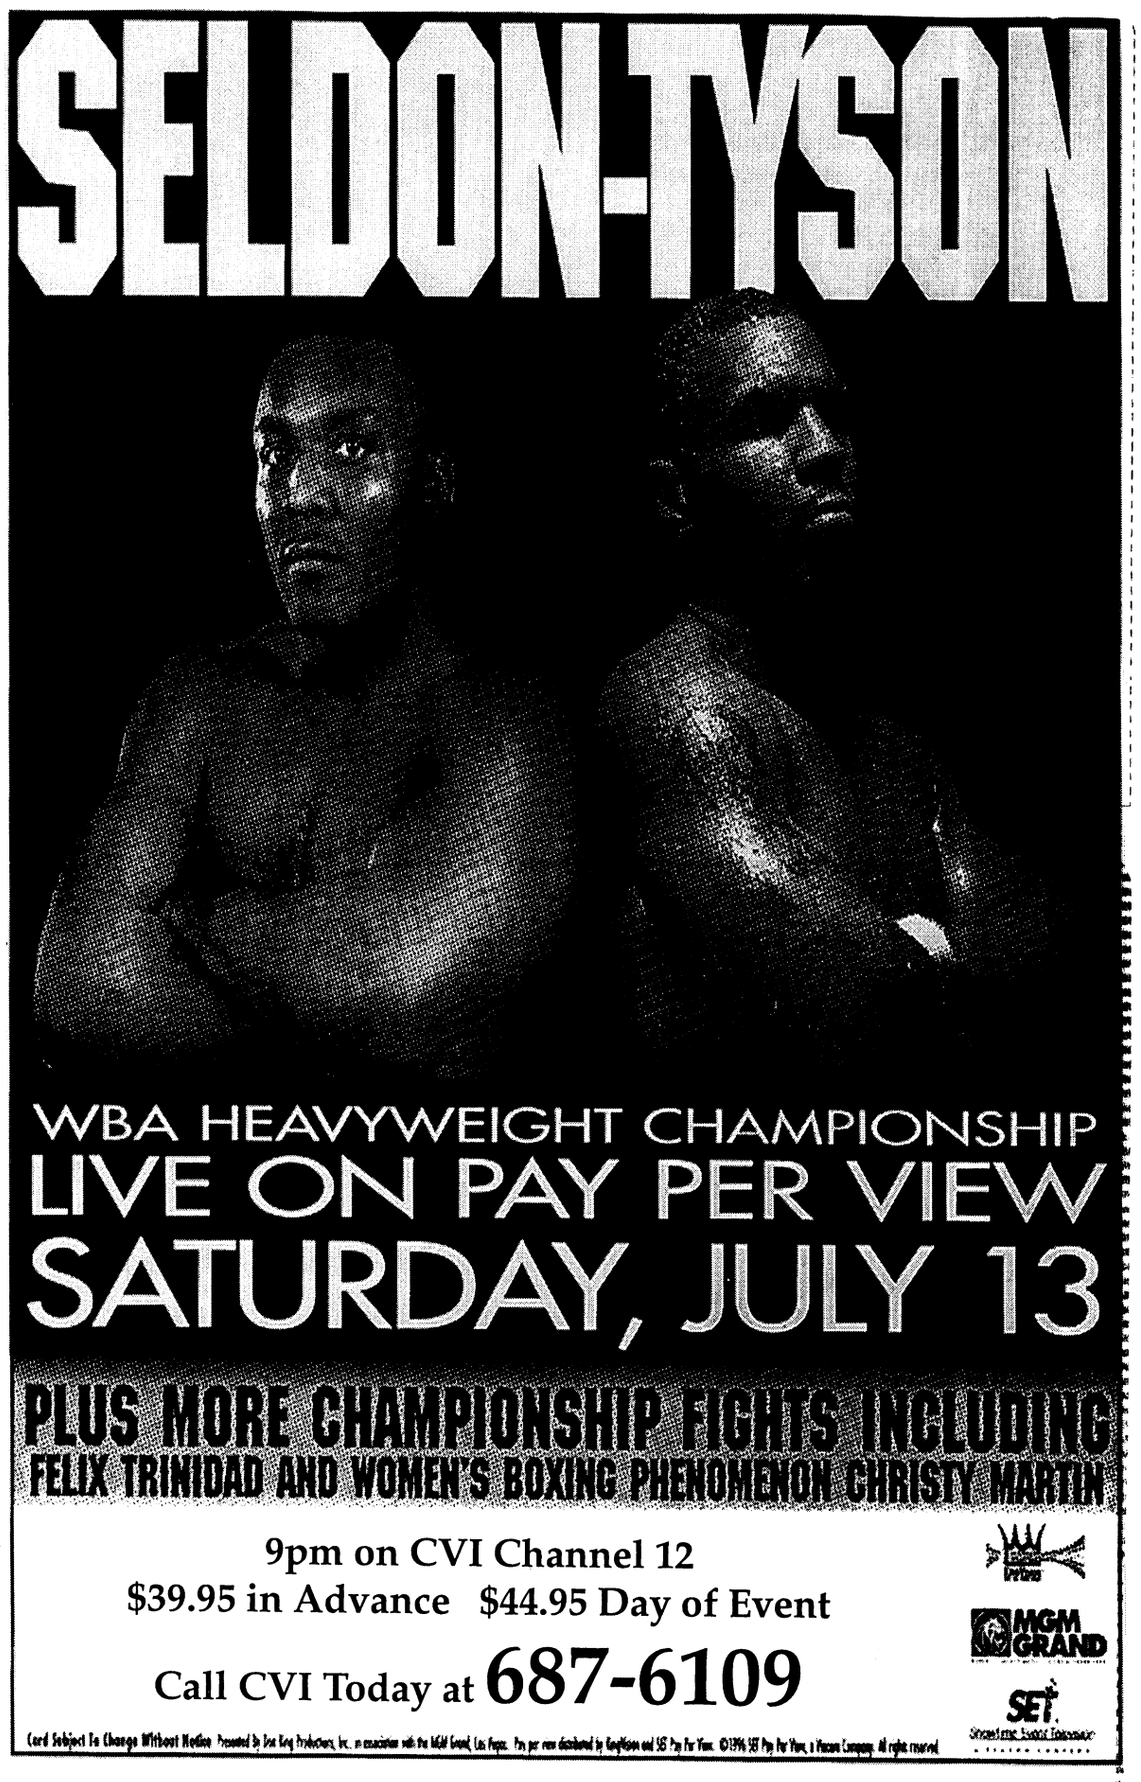
David Parsons of Dothan, Ala., placed third and collected $847 for five bass weighing 20 pounds, 1 ounce. Parsons fished a jig-n-spoon in the midlake area. He caught his fish on 20-pound-test line. Third place paid $847.

Darryl Stewart of Slocomb, Ala., placed fourth with five bass weighing 18 pounds, 3 ounces. Stewart fished ledges using crankbaits and worms. Fourth place paid $542.

Fifth place and $514 went to Charles Ingram of Eufaula, Ala., for five bass weighing 17 pounds, 1 ounce. Ingram fished deep ledges on the south end of the lake using worms.

Rounding out the top positions were: (6) Richard Howard, Columbus, five bass, 16 pounds, 6 ounces, $458; (7) Larry Blount, Eufaula, Ala., four bass, 15 pounds, 15 ounces, $400; (8) Brent Bowden, Macon, Ga., three bass, 15 pounds, 11 ounces; $343; (9) Jeff Atcheson, Cumming, Ga., five bass, 15 pounds, 9 ounces, $286; and (10) Carlos Sellars, Phenix City, five bass, 15 pounds, 4 ounces, $230.

Larry Blount of Dothan, Ala., took the Abu Garcia Big Bass award of $1,000 for a 4-pound catch.



The next event for Bulldog Division anglers will be September 8 on West Point at Highland Marina. Entry deadline is August 28.

At the completion of the six Red Man qualifying events, the top 30 anglers, determined on a basis of pounds and points, will move on to Regional Championship competition. There, they will compete against the top 30 fishermen from three other divisions (only two divisions compete in the Western Regional) for a spot in the Red Man All-American in Pine Bluff, Ark., where the winner will receive $100,000.

The rookie advancing farthest along the Red Man Trail will win the Old Milwaukee Rookie-of the-Year Award. All Red Man tournaments are catch and release events. The Bill Lewis Live Release Award will be given to the Red Man angler weighing in the highest number of live bass during the year.

FORT BENNING

Post gets new commander

By Lisa M. Hibbert
Bayonet staff writer

A man who never dreamed that he would one day become a general took command of Fort Benning when Maj. Gen. John W. Hendrix relinquished command of the post to Maj. Gen. Carl F. Ernst Wednesday.

"I have a picture of my wife, Linda and I standing in front of Iron Mike when I was a second lieutenant in 1966 and at that time I had no idea I would become a general," Ernst said. "I didn't even think I would make major! And here I am, back in front of this statue again. This is my fifth trip to Fort Benning and I'm going to keep doing it until I get it right."

Ernst served as Fort Benning's deputy commanding general from April 1991 to August 1992. Not a stranger to Hendrix either, this is the third time Ernst and Hendrix have met on a parade field in a change of command ceremony

"I'm glad to be back here. Fort Benning is a place where you don't have to explain what hooah means — you live it," Ernst said.

He comes here from his previous assignment as Deputy Chief of Staff for Training at the United Sates Army Training and Doctrine Command, Fort Monroe, Va. Some of his other assignments include commander of the Joint Task Forces in Somalia and assistant division commander of the 82nd Airborne Division, Fort Bragg, NC.

As the reviewing officer, General William Hartzog, TRADOC commander, passed the flag from Hendrix to Ernst.

"Jay and Cheri (Hendrix) were a great team who led Fort Benning well but I have worked with Carl and Linda (Ernst) and I know that Fort Benning will be in capable hands," Hartzog said.

Lisa M. Hibbert

Ernst attended both Airborne and Ranger schools at Fort Benning. He was also a student at the United States Army Command and Staff General College, the United States Army War College, the Inspector General's Course, the Unconventional Warfare Course, the Electronic Warfare Course and the Army Strategist Program.

He received his Bachelors' degree from Louisiana State University and his Masters' degree from Shippensburg University in Pennsylvania.

His awards include the Legion of Merit, the Bronze Star with the V device, the Meritorious Service Medal with three Oak Leaf Clusters, the Air Medal, the Joint Service Commendation Medal, the Humanitarian Service Medal, and a Purple Heart with one Oak Leaf Cluster Ernst and his wife Linda have two children, Erik and Ashley.

Maj. Gen. John W. Hendrix, former post commanding general, will take command of the 3rd Infantry Division (Mechanized) at Fort Stewart Monday, but will be visiting Fort Benning often to check on the 3rd Infantry Division soldiers stationed here, he says.

"People keep saying this is a sad day and how they're going to miss me but I'll be back," Hendrix said. "In fact, I'll be back next week!

"I feel good about going to Fort Stewart because I know that the future of Fort Benning is in good hands."

Javelin passes launch

By Brian R. Voller
Bayonet staff writer

The Javelin antitank weapon system received its first firing at Fort Benning Thursday at 10 a.m. on Red Cloud Range.

Pfc. Jason Gray, 3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment was the first ranger to fire the Javelin.

Sanford Parr, deputy Training and Doctrine Command Systems Manager antitank missiles, said the firing of the Javelin was done to show the Javelin's technological advances.

"This ceremony was done to show the Javelin in action," said Parr. "The demonstration gave visiting VIPs a chance to look through the command launch unit and see the 21st century technology that goes into the Javelin."

The demonstration culminated with a Javelin shot at an M-60 tank from approximately 1500 meters.

Lt. Col. Dave Dorman, Assistant TSM Antitank for Javelin, said the demonstration showed the Javelin's capabilities beyond the weapons systems the Army currently uses.

"The Javelin shot showed the Javelin's capability to fly out to an extended target." Dorman said. "The Javelin is a top attack flight profile weapon and it is fire and forget technology which increases the gunner's survivability."

The Javelin Anti-tank Missile system will be in used in the ranger battalion, and is now part of the military's permanent arsenal.

AUSA elects new chapter president

By Brian R. Voller
Bayonet staff writer

The Chattahoochee Valley-Fort Benning Chapter of the Association of the United States Army conducted their annual summer membership meeting Tuesday at the Fort Benning Officers' club.

Retired Lt. Col. R. Wayne Andrews, Vice President of Columbus Bank and Trust Company, was elected as the new president of the AUSA chapter.

Andrews took over the presidency from Steve Butler who had served as the chapter's president for the past year.

Several soldiers and civilians were also honored during the dinner for outstanding commitment to AUSA.

The newest award, the Gallagher Award, went to retired Post Command Sgt. Maj. James J. Gallagher whom the award is named for. The Gallagher Award will be presented annually to a non-commissioned officer who has shown exceptional service to AUSA, the Army and the community.

Andrews said he was honored to be presenting the Gallagher award to its name sake because of his commitment and his hard work for AUSA.

"For more than 39 years Jim Gallagher has been the spark plug for AUSA," Andrews said. "He continues to supply exemplary service to soldiers, the Army and the Association of the United States Army."

Also recognized during the meeting was Theresa Gunter, director of the civilian personnel, who received the George Heberling award for exceptional service provided by a Department of the Army civilian, and Paul Voorhees, owner of Ranger Joe's, who received the Cliff Livingston award for exceptional service and accomplishments by an individual cooperate member who has given generously to AUSA and the Army.

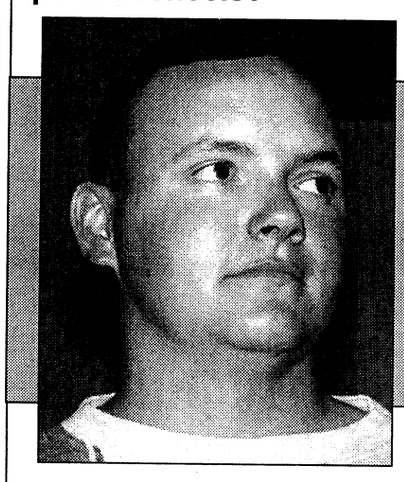
Brian R. Voller

Chapter president R. Wayne Andrews and former president Steve Butler present retired Command Sgt. Maj. Jim Gallagher with the award named in his honor.

Former post Commander Maj. Gen. John W. Hendrix was given a standing ovation before he went to the podium to give his final remarks to the audience before he moves on to his new command at Fort Stewart, Ga.

Hendrix said there were no two people he would rather see honored during the awards than Gunter and Gallagher.

"I am very proud to be here tonight," Hendrix said. "I can't think of two finer individuals then the two individuals we honor tonight with the Heberling award and the Gallagher award.



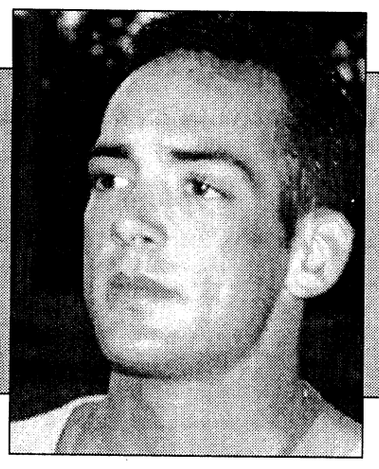
"There has never been a finer proponent of AUSA then the one we have had under Jim Gallagher. They don't come any better or more dedicated than Jim Gallagher.

Also, there has never been a finer public servant than Theresa Gunter...We're happy that she could be here tonight and we're proud of all she has done for our country."

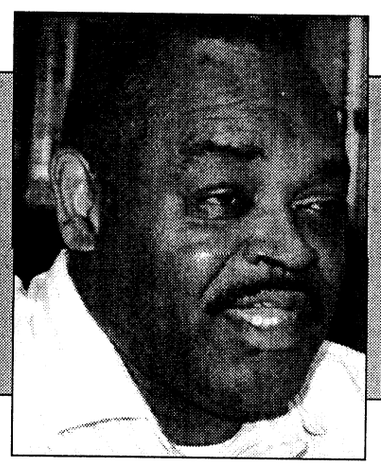
Andrews ended the meeting after he was officially elected as the new president of the AUSA chapter. He closed by telling the audience about how excited he was about the future of Fort Benning and AUSA.

VARIOUS VOICES

What is your opinion of single-gender, state-supported schools?



Spc. Jason N. Oliver, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 1st Battalion, 15th Infantry Regiment — "I think if women can get into men's schools, then men should be able to get into women's schools, no questions asked. The barriers should be dropped."



Staff Sgt. Jason Taylor, Company B, 2nd Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment — "I think if somebody meets the requirements, they should be allowed to go."

Marie Pittmen, Morale, Welfare and Recreation employee — "I don't think there's anything wrong with it because it's tradition and there are all-female schools as well as all-male schools."

Reserve Officer Training Corps Cadet James Hawksworth, 1st Battalion (Airborne), 507th Infantry, 11th Infantry Regiment — "I think following the traditions this country's grown on, as long as there is a competitive opposite-gender school, it's fair and an excellent disciplinary tool."

Thomas F. Zachary, specialist, Plans and Operations Division, Directorate of Logistics — "I think there should be single-gender schools, but if a state supports one single-gender school, it should support all single-gender schools."

Patricia Lewis, material readiness assistant, Plans and Operations Division, Directorate of Logistics — "I believe in coed schools because I went to one, however, if single-gender schooling is what a person wants, it's their choice. If a state is going to support one, it should support all of them."

Court rules VMI must change

Latest battle in sexual equality not won with courage and fortitude, so who are the real winners and are they really ready to be equal?

By April Olsen
USAIC Public Affairs Office

commentary

The Supreme Court recently ruled that Virginia Military Institute's exclusion of women is unconstitutional. VMI must reverse the policy or forfeit state funds. Hooray for women's equality, I guess.

The ruling, being celebrated as the strongest endorsement of sexual equality in recent years, ends a 157-year tradition. VMI supporters believe no one will be better off for the destruction of an institution that served the Commonwealth of Virginia for more than a century and a half. I agree.

I don't think the change will result in its expected outcome. I believe the VMI case is people fighting without true conviction of what they are fighting for.

My mom always taught me that I could do anything I wanted. There was no such thing as a man's job or women's work. All I had to do was believe in myself, and if I worked hard, I could accomplish anything.

She also told me another thing: pick your fights wisely. There's no sense in picking a fight just to have a fight. From this, I learned a few valuable lessons that kept me proud of myself and my accomplishments, even when I was on the losing side.

One, only pick fights you think you can win; don't waste precious time and energy. Two, if you believe in a cause but know your chances of winning are slim, you owe it to yourself to pick the fight anyway.

For these reasons, I try to see the point behind forcing a traditional institution into breaking it's traditions. I tried and I couldn't see the point. It seems to me that such women are just trying to make a point. Under some circumstances, I can support this, but not when it comes at the expense of others. Who wins this latest battle in sexual equality?

Will enough women enter these universities to make the loss of such a prestigious institution's heritage worthwhile? Probably not.

What about male equality? What about those young men who enter the Citadel and VMI seeking a single-sex education with a military regimen? Now, where can they go to get that kind of education?

These young men are not against female equality. They want to be able to attend a single sex school. That doesn't make them bad people.

A possible outcome is that VMI may go all private, no longer receiving state funding. So, tell me who wins? Would the taxpayers win? Those young men certainly won't. If they are not able to pay higher tuition costs, they'll have to drop out. Or worse, the institution will lower it's entrance standards to allow more students to enter and thereby bring tuition costs down.

Working hard to get where I am has given me little patience for those who whine about not getting fair chances. Who said life was fair? You have to make your own chances. You have to earn whatever you expect to get. Don't go crying that you can't reach your full potential because of someone else.

Therefore, to all these women who complained they couldn't get an equal education without attending the Citadel or the Virginia Military Institute, I say look to the service academies.

The Military Academy at West Point rivals the Citadel and VMI in scholastics, physical fitness training and success of officers graduating. And guess what, West Point admits women. The only problem here is that there's no controversy, no headlines, nobody gets famous.

I think a lot of people need to realize that change is a slow process and we can't expect to change in two or three decades what was accepted for generations.

I say there's already a military education available to females at West Point. Women should take that instead of trying to break a tradition that many in the South hold as near and dear as Scarlet and Rhett.

It seems some women just want to make waves, create controversy because everything in the world is not open to them. I'm not questioning their ability, I'm questioning their real motive. They want to be accepted into VMI, The Citadel, the Infantry, the Rangers, blah, blah, blah. But they don't want to shave their head like the males. I'm sorry, did someone mention equality?

Those complainers are too busy crying about what they are not allowed to do to think about if they would even do it if they had the choice. As for me, I don't know if I want to be crawling through the mud with Ranger Smith carrying 140 pounds of equipment and then some. I don't know if I could "hang." I'm woman enough to admit that.

Now, don't get me wrong, I can take a mission, go full speed ahead and bark "hooah" with the best of them. But I'm glad there are fully capable men serving in the infantry. They sacrifice a lot more than me and I'm proud to be supporting them. I'm insulted for them when some women want to take their jobs, but aren't willing to be equal in all aspects.

I've worked with two female commanders, a female first sergeant and several female soldiers who deployed to Somalia, Haiti and the Balkans. They did their duty, they worked along side the men and didn't complain about wanting another job. They had the courage, and fortitude to say, "Hey, I can do my job better than anyone else and I'm not afraid to stand up and fight for my country."

They were too busy doing their best to complain about being allowed to do their best. They proved they could "hang" in their respective jobs and didn't whine or complain.

They make excellent role models for men and women. Ladies and gentlemen, these are the ones leading the equality movement by doing their best in whatever their jobs are.

Following good road not always easy

By Judith O'Toole
School of the Americas

commentary

"It's a wonder I haven't abandoned all my ideas, they seem so absurd and impractical. Yet I cling to them because I still believe, in spite of everything, that people are truly good at heart."

For a young girl not only to have these thoughts, but to be able to express them so eloquently is amazing in and of itself. For Anne Frank to have written these words while she and her family were in hiding during World War II makes them even more inspiring.

I look at this quotation almost daily. I have it taped to the top of my desk at work. Some days though, when my desk is more than a little cluttered, I don't even get a chance to see them — the words of a 13-year-old girl who, with the horrors of an evil world surrounding her, didn't give up hope.

When I think about myself — what I believe in, what I stand for — there are three paths that I usually follow. They're kind of like the good, the bad and the ugly.

The good road is definitely what I should do — the strong, solid beliefs that come straight from my heart.

The bad road is, of course, what I shouldn't do. The bad road is usually spiteful, bitter and just plain mean.

The ugly road is the good and bad combo road and is the worst of all. I usually end up doing the right thing. However, I do it for wrong, selfish and ugly reasons. I hate it when I take the ugly road.

Sometimes, I know, it's very hard to stand up for what you believe. For some people though, it seems that not only do they not stand up for their beliefs, but that they don't really have any to begin with — or at least none of their own. How someone can walk around his or her whole life not having an opinion is beyond me. But that isn't the point that I'm trying to make.

Here we go — do you know what it is that you believe in? Or are you the kind of person that, when asked how you feel about something, doesn't really know. Or maybe you just don't want to say how you feel about a certain subject because you don't know how the other person will feel, or you don't want to look stupid.

Beliefs come in all shapes and sizes, but basically are the things which are important to you— and the only way you'll look stupid is if you don't believe in anything.

I have strong opinions about a lot of things. You name it, I'll probably have something to say about it, good or bad. Being opinionated isn't always a great thing to be when you're a specialist in the Army, but at least I have an outlet for it.

The hardest thing about believing in something, I think, is being true to it. It's hard. Sometimes, it's lonely. Here's the thing you need to ask yourself: Would you risk your life for your beliefs — be it about religion, race, sex, politics, family or anything else important to you — would you risk your life stating your opinion? That's a hard one, isn't it? Think about Anne Frank, from hiding in an attic, to concentration camp, to death. All because of a belief.

Travelers plan to use alternatives to Atlanta

By Jacqué Hill
Special to the Bayonet©

The Transportation Division of the Directorate of Logisitics is gearing up for a busy summer.

Due to the Olympic Games and all of the travelers and visitors associated with them, Transportation will try to avoid scheduling anyone leaving or coming to Fort Benning to travel through Atlanta. To do this, all transportation offices worldwide have been informed to use alternate airport hubs during the Olympic Games.

To accommodate the needs of travelers in this area, the Transportation Office is planning to use alternate airports, avoiding scheduling and ticket availability mayhem in Atlanta.

"We anticipate it will be difficult to book tickets into or out of Atlanta," said Korin J. Mason, installation transportation officer. "Hotels, rental cars and ground transportation will be very scarce.

"Birmingham is the primary alternate airport that we use." Besides the airport at Birmingham, Mason said, travel will be booked through Nashville, Jacksonville and New Orleans.

According to Mason, more than 14,500 people are expected to need travel arrangements bringing them to Fort Benning this summer while more than 18,000 people will need to travel from the installation during the Games.

Mason said it is important that the Transportation Office is notified as soon as a person is aware he or she will be needing travel arrangements.

"They don't even have to have their orders in hand for us to book their travel," said Mason. "We don't need their orders until we do final processing for them."

Sharon Parker, chief, Personnel Movements, agreed with Mason's point of urgency.

"If they wait around until the last minute or they don't notify us in sufficient time, they just aren't going to go anywhere when they expect to," she said.

Mason said those people who normally deal with Carlson-Wagonlit should continue to do so, but in a timely manner because that company will be experiencing the same problems as the Transportation Office.

"Continue to coordinate travel arrangements with Carlson, if you use them; with Transportation, if you use us," she said. "That won't change. But notify them as soon as possible."

Travelers in this area should also expect longer travel times, Mason said, because transportation to the alternate airport hubs will be scheduled by bus, when possible.

To contact Fort Benning Transportation between now and Aug. 31 for assistance with problems in reaching your final destination, call (800) 545-7706 or (800) 545-1941 from 7:30 a.m. to 5 p.m., or call (888) 545-4516 or (888) 545-4503 at any other time.

Driver of hit-and-run sought in soldier's death

By Jacqué Hill

Staff Sgt. Michael Ray Griffith of Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 75th Ranger Regiment, born Sept. 18, 1967, was killed June 30 in a hit-and-run incident that occurred at 7501 River Road in Columbus.

Griffith, who had been in the Army for 11 years, is survived by his parents, Harley and Rosetta Coleman Griffith; grandmothers, Dolly Coleman and Georgia Mae Griffith; a daughter, Brittnay Griffith; a sister, Sondra Thompson, and her husband, Donnie; and a niece, Katrina Thompson.

A memorial service was conducted at Fort Benning's Sightseeing Chapel July 3.

According to Officer Reggie Lewis of the Columbus Police Department, the vehicle which struck Griffith was between a 1981 and 1986 Chevrolet or GMC full-size pickup.

"We believe the vehicle will have moderate to extensive damage on the right side," he said. "Also, one or both headlights and the right marker light will be missing." Lewis said the truck is believed to be light in color, possibly blue or grey.

Persons with any information regarding this incident should contact Officer Reggie Lewis or Officer Mike Myhand at the Columbus Police Department by calling 596-7141 or 596-7000.

Military branches combine for 'purple' mission

By Michael E. Lynch
13th Corps Support Battalions

Purple — it's the latest Army "buzz-word." It's the slang term used to describe Army operations conducted jointly with other services.

Joint operations are typically called "purple" in reference to the combination of the colors associated with the services, such as Army green and Navy blue. The 13th Corps Support Battalion, 36th Engineer Group, is involved in just such an operation in support of the Centennial Olympic Games in Atlanta.

The battalion, designated Task Force 13 for the Olympic's mission, is now composed of Navy, Marine Corps, Air Force and Army Reserve elements in addition to the four companies which deployed from Fort Benning.

"This is a good mission for us," said Lt. Col. Gerald Bated, 13th CSB commander. "We don't often get a chance to work with our counterparts in other services. This is a great opportunity for soldiers to work with sailors, airmen and marines doing similar jobs." For most of them, it was their first joint experience.

•Private Elizabeth Lopez, Headquarters and Headquarters Detachment, 13th CSB, really liked her first experience working with other services.

"You really learn a lot doing this," Lopez said, "You have to watch what you do. If you make a mistake, someone else (from another service) may think that's the Army way of doing it. I pay more attention to what I'm doing now."

•Air Force Staff Sgt. Montreal Peterson, Nellis Air Force Base, Nevada, is working with the other services for the first time, and finds it a bit challenging.

"It's definitely an experience, but it's not that bad," Peterson said, "Everyone in the Air Force should go work with the Army for awhile, to see what it's like."

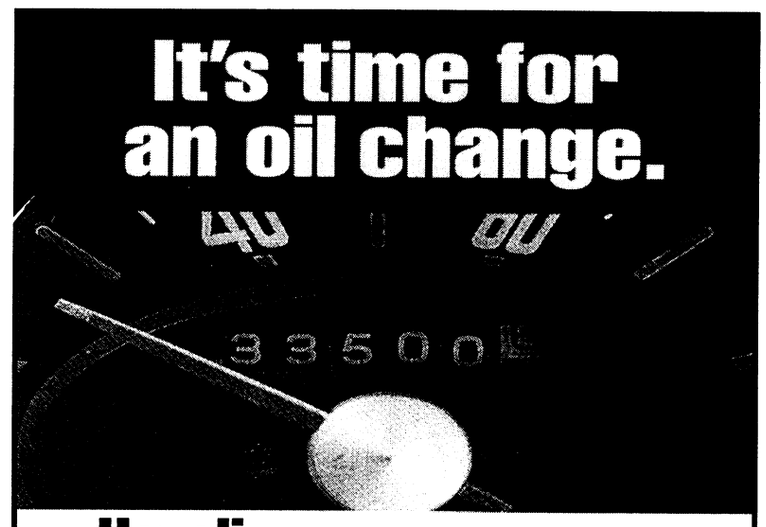
•Navy Mess Spc. 1st Class Steven France, Key West Naval Air Station, said, "Everyone pulled together from the first day."

•Marine Sergeant Edgar Lopez Jr., Camp Lejeune, N.C., said that there were no problems yet.

"This was my first experience working with other services. I had heard (bad) stories before, but I would do this again in a minute."

•Sgt. 1st Class Marex Borja, 63rd Engineer Company, Fort Benning, is the man in charge of the joint dining facility. He had the challenge of bringing people together from the different services into one team.

"All the services are different,' Borja said, "I had worked with other services before, and these guys were very knowledgeable and good workers. We had no trouble getting along."



The 13th CSB headquarters at Camp Peachtree is hosting the 38th Main Support Battalion, Indiana National Guard. The units have similar wartime functions, which has helped build a good working relationship.

"This mission was initially a big concern for me," said Lt. Col. Thomas Hunt, commander of the 38th MSB. "I had not seen my base camp (before arriving in Atlanta) and I had not met our active duty counterparts. Within hours of arriving, however, I knew that we had nothing to worry about."

There are a lot of things to do for both the National Guard and active duty solders to get the mission going, and sometimes things go wrong. Both units worked together to smooth things out. "Each problem is solved quickly and efficiently," Hunt said.

"Purple" missions are the future of the armed forces, and 13th CSB is getting a small taste these joint operations during the Olympics. It is a challenging and rewarding experience for all and great preparation for the future.

Question of the week:

There is not enough space for all the soldiers living in the barracks, am I authorized to live off post? If so, can I receive BAQ?

According to AR 210-50, Chapter 3 paragraph 3-37 and 3-38, permanently assigned personnel who are entitled to BAQ at the without dependent rate in the pay grade of E-7 and above may elect to reside off post. This election may be denied only if it would adversely affect a training mission, military discipline, or military readiness.

Installation commanders may authorize single soldiers in grades E-6 and below to reside off post under the following conditions:

(1) When adequate housing is not available and military necessity is not a factor.

(2) When the service member is pregnant.

(3) When the service member has purchased a home near the installation prior to notification of assignment to that installation.

Personnel who are authorized to reside in the civilian community will receive housing referral counseling on the Equal Opportunity in Off-post Housing Program before negotiating a rental or lease agreement for community housing.

If adequate housing is not available, a Statement of Non-availability (SNA) will be issued. When a member in pay grade E-6 or below is authorized to live off post and receives BAQ at the without dependent rate, the member will be informed in writing that one of the following applies:

a. Housing may be made available to you within 12 months of your arrival. You should make temporary or semi-permanent arrangements off post at your discretion.

b. Housing will not be made available during your tour of duty and you should make permanent billeting arrangements off post.

USAIC Regulation 600-19 Chapter 3 paragraph 3-4a states that specialists and below may live off post at the commanders discretion, but will not be entitled to BAQ.

ARMY PHYSICAL FITNESS TEST

NCOES procedures will not change

Army News Service

FORT MONROE VA (TRADOC News Service) — The decision to continue to require all soldiers to pass the Army Physical Fitness test as an entry qualifier to all Noncommissioned Officer Education System courses was a Total Army decision, according to Training and Doctrine Command's command sergeant major.

At the Sergeant Major of the Army Conference in April, Chief of Staff of the Army Gen. Dennis J. Reimer asked the Forces Command sergeant major, the OCAR (Office, Chief of Army Reserve) sergeant major, and the Army National Guard sergeant major for their opinions and they all were opposed to changing the policy to a graduation requirement, said TRADOC Command Sergeant Major Gilbert Paez, who also prefers retaining the current policy.

When soldiers attend an NCOES course, they must pass the APFT within the first 72 hours. To fail means a soldier fails the course. The policy under consideration was to make passing the APFT a graduation requirement at the end of each course.

The reason a change in the policy was being considered, according to Paez, was a perception that reserve component soldiers were flunking the APFT at an exceptionally high rate.

There was a four percent failure rate for active component soldiers and a six percent failure rate for the reserve component, Paez said. In total numbers, the difference between active and reserve rates is just a drop in the bucket.

According to Paez, the reason for APFT failures lies with soldiers and their chains of command.

"I blame the chain of command for not holding the standards on the soldiers when they're going to school," he said. "A soldier should be assessed on his ability to pass a PT test and counseled by the chain of command that you have to pass a test when you get there."

Paez points out that he has visited every Army Reserve training division during his tenure as TRADOC command sergeant major.

I will tell you that reserve soldiers are just as physically fit and motivated, ready to do their jobs as active soldiers, he said. I think the six percent failure among reserve soldiers has dropped over the past nine months.

Failing an NCOES course because of APFT or academic failure is essentially career-ending for any soldier, he said.

The bottom line is, you have to be ready all the time, Paez said.

Brigadier General presents veteran father with

Army Commendation Medal

By Janis Finegan
Army News Service

WASHINGTON — Army Brigadier General Joe Arbuckle recently had the opportunity to present an Army Commendation Medal to a Korean War veteran for that veterans' initiative in Korea in 1953-54.

What makes the presentation especially significant is the fact that the veteran is retired Air Force Master Sergeant Wayne W. Arbuckle of McClean, Il., Gen. Arbuckle's father.

Retired Master Sergeant Arbuckle was a hydraulics specialist working at Air Base K2, Republic of Korea in 1953 and 1954 where the F84, an early fighter that flew against the early MIG, was crashing on landing due to nose gear collapse.

Though the aircrafts manufacturer couldn't find the problem, Arbuckle concluded a faulty design of a nose gear hydraulic bleed valve was causing the gear to fail. He had difficulty getting the manufacturer to agree with his analysis so he held a demonstration for his commander on a stationary aircraft to prove his point.

After getting the support of his commander, the fix was eventually adopted but by that time Arbuckle had departed Korea and never received recognition for his suggestion.

About a year ago, the elder Arbuckle surfaced the issue with the Air Force, and with the help of his commander, now a retired lieutenant general, was able to reconstruct the chain of events. The Air Force agreed Arbuckle deserved a commendation medal but decided the medal should be one that existed at the time. Since the Air Force had no commendation medal then, the award presented to Arbuckle was the Army Commendation Medal signed by an Air Force major general.

Retired Master Sergeant Arbuckle received the award from his general son at a ceremony at Headquarters, U.S. Army Materiel Command. Gen. Arbuckle is deputy chief of staff for ammunition at the U.S. Army Materiel Command, Alexandria, Va.

Task force examines enforcement needs

By Bettina E. Tilson
Army News Service

TUZLA, Bosnia-Hercegovina (Army News Service) — A U.S. congressional delegation visited Task Force Eagle in late June to examine the intricacies of peace enforcement in the former Yugoslavia.

"I wanted to come here and see it firsthand because we've got to make some decisions about what the future holds here," said Rep. John S. Tanner, D-Tenn., member of the National Security Committee and the Military Authorization Committee.

"We're very proud of them and we're proud of what they are doing for the United States of America over here as part of this NATO force," Tanner said of the soldiers he met. "There are a lot of people who are alive today who would not be, were it not for these fellows."

The group also included Rep. Bill Barrett, R-Neb.; Rep. Joe Knollenberg, R-Mich.; Rep. Dan L. Miller, R-Fla.; Rep. Bob W. Ney, R-Ohio; Rep. Tom Bevill, D-Ala.; and Rep. David L. Hobson, R-Ohio.

After landing at Eagle Base, they boarded three UH-60 Black Hawk helicopters to fly over northeastern Bosnia-Herzegovina.

The aircraft landed on a hilltop near Vlasenica, home of Lodgement Area Lisa, headquarters of 2nd Brigade Combat Team. They were greeted by local commanders and treated to a turkey lunch with soldiers from their home states. Hobson, delegation leader, is a Military Appropriations Committee member.

"I'm extremely proud of these people," said Tanner, who represents Tennessee's 8th Congressional District and is a colonel in the Tennessee Army National Guard. "They are doing a professional job in an even-handed manner under sometimes difficult circumstances and it makes you very proud."

Bevill visited several troops from his home state of Alabama, including Staff Sgt. Jerry R. Smith, 31, from Florence, Ala. Smith is a construction foreman for the 40th Engineer Battalion.

"It's very challenging," Smith said of his work on bunkers and fighting positions.

Tanner said he has kept abreast of events in the former Yugoslavia, but he gained more knowledge by seeing for himself "the contribution that our troops are making to the concept of peace in the Balkans."

The group also visited Ugljevik, home of the 1,500-member Russian Brigade. The day before, the seven lawmakers met with U.S. servicemembers in Taszar, Hungary. Although not all Americans support the peace enforcement mission, Tanner said it is a bargain, considering the alternative - "a return to the Cold War with the world on the brink of nuclear war."

He added, "I'm particularly glad we are here and have a presence in Central Europe right now, (especially considering) the uncertainty in Russia ... and with some of the things that are going on south of here in Turkey and Macedonia.

"It was a farsighted decision for us to become involved and I'm glad we did," Tanner said. "I think it's the right thing to do."

Operation Joint Endeavor

Force protection standards help maintain excellent safety rate

By George Roache
Army News Service

TUZLA, BOSNIA — Six months into Operation Joint Endeavor's planned year-long peace enforcement mission, Task Force Eagle has attained a high degree of success in protecting its force.

The task force safety rate is better than rates back in Germany. Vehicle accident rates have declined since January. No incidents of sniper and indirect fire, terrorism, fratricide or suicide have occurred.

But as newcomers arrive seeing no hostilities, and the sweltering heat makes flak jackets a discomfort to wear, leaders must remind soldiers that success came from strict adherence to force protection standards, say task force senior officers.

"We are where we are because we have taken those extra steps to ensure soldier safety from the outset," said Maj. Gary J. Kelley, task force safety officer.

"We don't want soldiers to have a false sense of security, because this is a very dynamic environment. The relaxing of some wearing of body armor is a luxury that was afforded because we did the hard things up front," he said.

Measures designed to protect and sustain the force resulted from a pre-deployment security assessment by the task force command group, said Col. John M. Brown III, chief of staff.

Their war games, planning and training followed Army doctrine which stated that a commander's first responsibilities in any mission are to secure his force and ensure its readiness, Brown said.

> "Because we're always at such a high force-protection level, we don't give them an inch — not even an opening — to contemplate attacking Task Force Eagle personnel."
> — Capt. Erik O. Daiga
> G-2 operations officer

"The conclusions were that we needed a very aggressive force protection program to ensure we never risked a small unit defeat, minimize the opportunity for ambush and eliminate the opportunity for hostage taking," he said.

That program initially included soldiers wearing personal protection gear, traveling in convoys of no less than four vehicles, not fraternizing with local nationals, having frequent convoy communications checks, a medic, combat life saver and a crew-served weapon with each convoy.

"All accomplish force protection and send a very clear signal to anyone considering doing harm to Task Force Eagle: you are dealing with a force that is prepared," Brown said.

That level of consistency, professionalism and readiness lowers the probability of attack from factional commanders who come in contact with Task Force Eagle units, said Capt. Erik O. Daiga, G-2 operations officer.

"Because we're always at such a high force-protection level, we don't give them an inch - not even an opening — to contemplate attacking Task Force Eagle personnel," he said.

"They recognize that we have the greatest technology, the most sophisticated equipment and highly trained soldiers to maintain it," Kelley said, "that presents a deterrent. That perception has helped us save lives."

The four-vehicle convoy has also saved lives, safety officials said.

Soldiers have driven 8.4 million miles as a task force with a very low rate of accidents, Kelley said. The safety rate is better than unit rates in Central Germany, and accidents have declined from an average of 30 a week in January 1996 to less than five in June 1996.

Safety officers attribute that to the no-drinking policy, better weather, no privately owned vehicles and the force protection program.

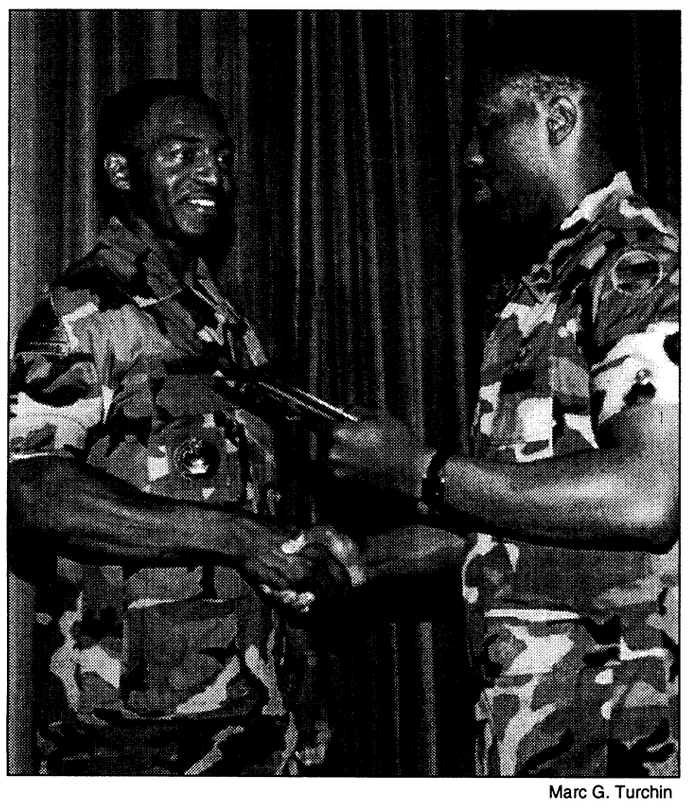
Complacency is always an issue, said officials. The task force leadership has dealt with it by holding live-fire gunneries for combat arms units to maintain soldiers' fighting edge, he said.

Commanders are applying lessons they learned from earlier deployments.

"Clearly, there have been operations when we did not combat complacency and apply force protection, and the lessons of that we paid for in soldiers' blood," Brown said. "The commander of Task Force Eagle (Maj. Gen. William L. Nash) is committed to shedding as little of it as possible, and if that means maintaining high standards of force protection and enforcing that very rigidly, they are ready to do that."

Individual base camp commanders have modified requirements for wearing personal protection gear, but only if the security threat in the area is low enough to warrant it.

Those decisions are in keeping with the intent of Nash, who stated his views in an interview with Jane's Defence Weekly published June 5.



"One of the things about fighter management is the force protection issue," he said. "I know that there have been some comments about the Americans and their harsh rules and flak vests and vehicles in convoys.

"But I have to shave every morning and look at myself in the mirror, and I don't want to have to avert my eyes. We feel pretty good about that and the soldiers understand why we're doing that," he said.

Soldiers do find wearing their "battle rattle" burdensome, but agree it's for their own good, said Spc. William F. Scott, 25, of Company C, 7th Battalion, 227th Aviation, 4th Aviation Brigade.

"I don't think the threat level is very high, but it's always good to have it (personal gear) to keep people on their toes.

"It keeps everybody aware this isn't a joke."

USAMU gunsmith modifies current Army service weapon

Marlene English

Master Sgt. David Sams. a U.S. Army Markmanship Unit gunsmith, makes modifications to the 9mm. Beretta.

USAMU Public Affairs Office

It's no doubt talent and training combined to push Spc. Dianna Dzek, a member of the US Army Marksmanship Unit's Service Pistol team, to the forefront of expert marksmanship performance during the recent Interservice Championships held in Little Rock, Ark.

Still, an equally important third factor contributed to her success there.

Dzek, who finished second in the championship's Excellence in Competition Match ahead of 28 competitors representing all branches of service — including the Marine Corps, Navy, Air Force and Army National Guard — did so while firing the newly accurized 9mm Beretta.

To the casual observer, the accurized pistol looks like the standard 9mm that has been a part of the Army's weapons inventory since 1985.

But to Master Sgt. David Sams, a USAMU gunsmith, it's a representation of more than a year's worth of painstaking work to create the ultimate match-grade service pistol

Since the latter portion of 1994, Sams has worked towards transforming the standard issue 9mm pistol into the more accurate and reliable match pisto that, according to Ray Arredondo, USAMU Service Pistol team coach, will someday phase out the .45 caliber service pistol used in competition today.

"So far, recent results have been really good — better than we expected considering the 9mm's previous competition performance," Arredondo said.

Arredondo makes this comment in reference to the 9mm's 1992 Interservice Championship's poor performance.

At that time, modifications to the standard issue 9mm were still in the developmental stage. While progress had been made toward transforming the 9mm, it wasn't until Sams took over the project that real improvements in the weapon's performance could be seen.

But those improvements weren't made without a lot of fine tuning of the 9mm's three main components — the barrel, the slide and the frame, Sams said.

"The problem we were seeing with the standard issue 9mm was that when it was fired, the three main components were not returning to the same reference point," Sams said — meaning that the spacing between the components was designed to allow for "slippage" of the barrel in the frame, causing reduced accuracy as the barrel changes position in the frame each time the weapon was fired.

Another problem the 9mm presented, Sams said, was that repeated pounding of the steel slide against the aluminum frame, within time, caused wear in the frame — again, a factor that reduced the weapon's accuracy.

To counteract these shortcomings, Sams placed steel inserts in the weapon's aluminum frame to act as a buffer against the steel slide. Sams also replaced the weapon's barrel with a match-grade barrel, and then increased the diameter of the barrel to fit more snugly in the slide. With this, he also placed set screws in the slide to stabilize the bottom rear of the barrel.

"The result is that you have a slide that's tightened to the frames, and a barrel that's tightened to the slide — reducing tolerances within the weapon and allowing greater accuracy," Sams said.

Another improvement was the adjustment of the weapon's triggering system, which allows the shooter to fire the accurized 9mm by exerting a mere four pounds of pressure on the trigger versus the seven-and-one-half or greater pounds of pressure required to fire the standard issue pistol.

"A shooter doesn't want to feel the movement of the trigger when he is competing," Sams said. "With this smoothing out of the trigger pull — they don't."

Along with this, Sams also modified both front and rear sights to allow for a better sight picture for the marksmen.

Despite the many improvements to the 9mm, Sams said the possibility of the accurized weapon being used on combat someday is remote as reduced spacing between the main components makes fouling of the weapon by grit and dirt even easier.

However, that doesn't mean the military can discount the modified 9mm altogether.

"While the fact the modified 9mm requires diligent maintenance makes it impractical for the battlefield — it could be extremely useful to military police or special operations soldiers who require accurate weapon's to complete their mission," Sams said.

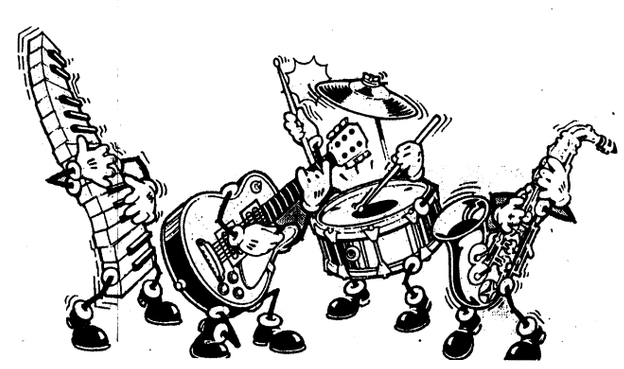
Perhaps someday those soldiers will find use for the accurized 9mm. But, for now, the rest of the Army will have to remain content with the fact USAMU shooters are putting it through its paces.

Personal computers common among service members

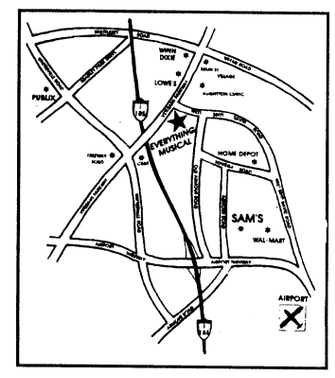
FORT EUSTIS, VA (TRADOC News Service) — Nearly every officer and more than half of enlisted soldiers have access to personal computers at work or at home.

That was the finding in the fall 1995 Army Sample Survey of Military Personnel conducted by the Army Research Institute. Specifically, 96 percent of officers and 60 percent of enlisted have PC access.

That's important for training developers to know so they can format training for the most effective medium, said Lori Evans, of the Army extension training directorate for the Army Training Support Center. The goal is to convert printed training materials to computer formats.



According to the survey, the most common personal computer is a 486 with Microsoft and some form of Windows, including Windows 95, operating systems. Fifty-nine percent of officers have Internet access, compared to 47 percent of enlisted soldiers.



The SSMP is conducted each spring and fall to gather information for policy makers. Each questionnaire deals with 15 to 25 issues important to the Army, soldiers and family members.

The survey has been conducted in the Army since 1943, beginning as the Personnel Survey of the Army. In 1958 it became the SSMP.

Those deployed to Bosnia, Europe get chance to relax

By Stephen Barrett
American Forces Press Service

WASHINGTON — Rest and recuperation leaves for Operation Joint Endeavor troops began recently.

Service members can travel to Germany or the United States. They will fly from either Tuzla, Bosnia-Herzegovina, or Taszar, Hungary, and land at either Rhein-Main Air Base near Frankfurt, Germany, or Philadelphia.

Joint Endeavor service members slated for peacekeeping duties over 180 days are eligible for up to 15 days of rest and recuperation. The policy, approved March 21, affects active duty personnel, reservists and Department of Defense civilians deployed to Bosnia and adjacent areas.

According to U.S. European Command officials, personnel assigned in Bosnia-Herzegovina, Macedonia, Serbia, Montenegro, Croatia, Slovenia and Hungary may take R and R. Service members may travel in battle dress uniform and must have a leave form and their identification card to depart. Those taking leave may also take one carry-on bag and one checked bag not exceeding 66 pounds.

Army officials said contracting procedures with the airlines caused a short delay in beginning R and R flights. However, they added negotiations moved very quickly to award contracts and start the leave program.

Officials said they expect about 235 people per week to fly to Philadelphia and 550 per week to fly to Frankfurt. Flights from Tuzla will depart on Mondays, Wednesdays and Thursdays, while flights from Tazsar depart on Fridays.

To help service members before and during their R and R leave, the Army is coordinating several travel services. Carson Wagonlit, a commercial travel agency, is setting up offices in Tazsar and Tuzla to help service members schedule connecting flights from Frankfurt and Philadelphia.

Those heading to Philadelphia will also receive help from the United Services Organizations and airport military personnel assistance point. Both agencies will assist service members during their Joint Endeavor furlough.

For those flying to Germany, Rhein-Main is setting up a tent staging area for family members to meet returning personnel. Troops will first enter through the air base terminal, then move to the tent for their family reunions.

Vacationers without family transportation from Rhein-Main will have a couple of travel options. The Army and Air Force Exchange Service is increasing its rental car inventory for European travel. Rental cars will also be available at Frankfurt International Airport, collocated with Rhein-Main Officials also said the German Federal Railway is offering discount train fares for Joint Endeavor service members on R and R.

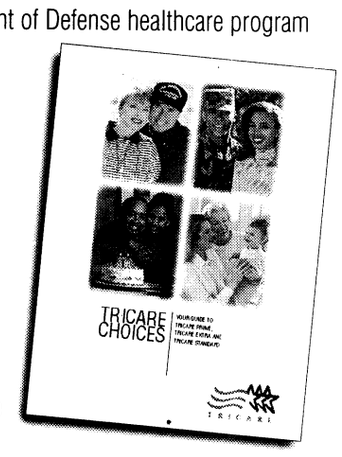
One detail still working is billeting space for troops returning to their Joint Endeavor duty stations. Since most returning flights will leave in the morning, officials said there's a need to provide bedding for those arriving a day in advance.

Department of Defense civilians deployed to Joint Endeavor sites may also take up to 15 days leave and may fly on government transportation. They will not receive extra days for travel. Service members serving less than 180 days in the Joint Endeavor areas are not eligible for R and R leave.



Travelers will receive a booklet prior to departing Tuzla or Taszar that has emergency telephone numbers for use if they need help in returning. The services will also have a 24-hour military control center to handle emergencies.

The center's DSN telephone number is 330-6247 and the commercial number from the United States is 011-49-69699-6247.

4th of July celebration

Hundreds gather for Independence Day festivities, fun, food

"I love being on the salute battery," Jones said. "I feel honored to participate in the Fourth of July celebration."

By Lisa M. Hibbert
Bayonet staff writer

Hundreds of people from the tri-community gathered on York Field as Fort Benning celebrated Independence Day July 4.

The day was kicked off with food as the vendors, which were all coordinated by the Association of the United States Army, opened at 2 p.m. Fourth celebraters dined on hot dogs, hamburgers, watermelon and soft drinks provided by AUSA. Chicken, barbeque and coleslaw were served up by the Noncommissioned Officers Association.

Music filled the air when Gravity, a top-40s band, kicked off the day's entertainment from the stage, followed by the Infantry Band. Off stage, Sgt. 1st Class Carlos Huertes of the School of the Americas put on his own show when he put some Latin tunes on the turntables.

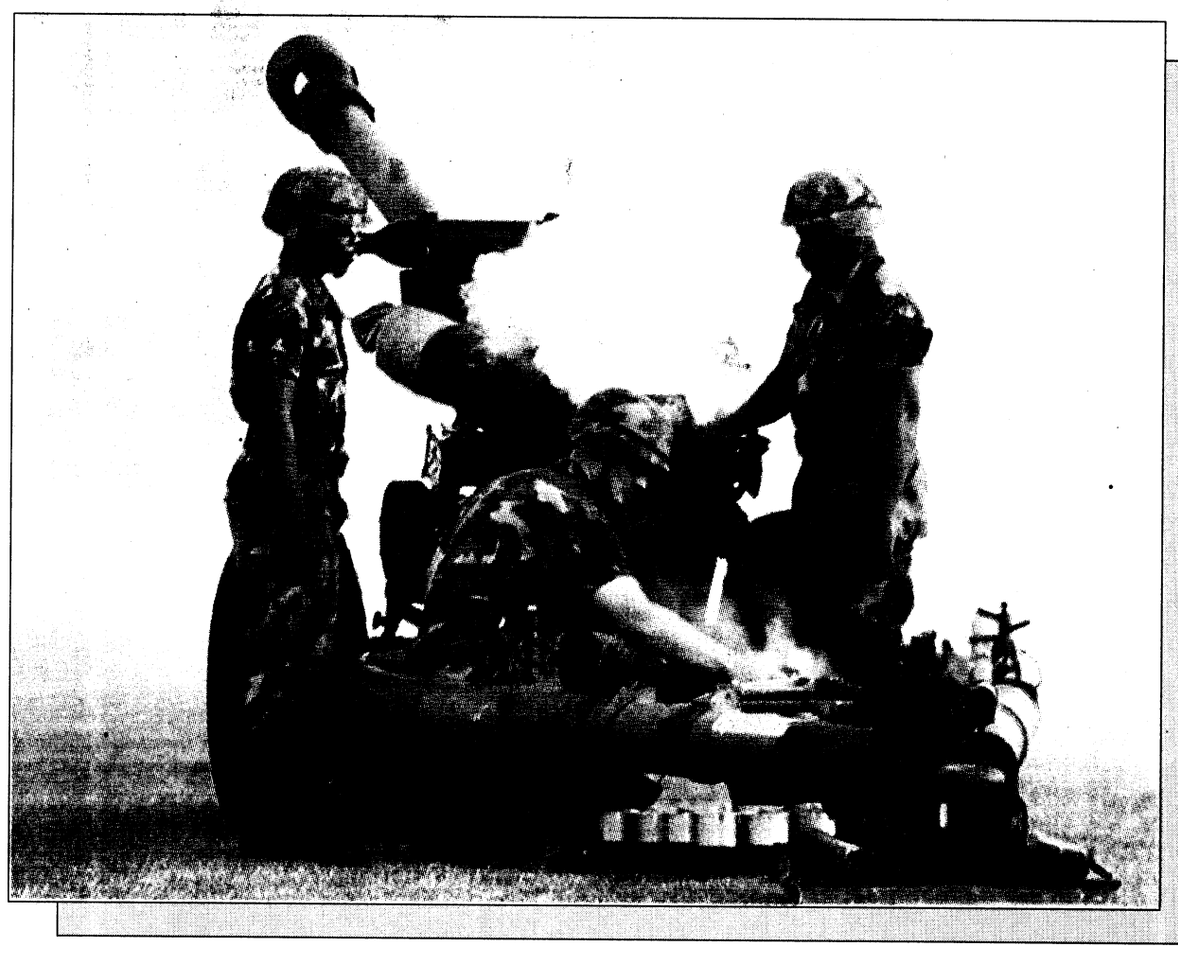
The day also included games as children jumped in the Astrojump and families played with flying disks. Eakmo T. Clown and Bring on the Clowns painted designs on the faces of children and passed out balloons.

Independence Day was celebrated military style as rangers from Company D, 4th Ranger Training Battalion, rapelled and then fast roped for the crowd. The Silver Wings parachuted to targets on York Field from a height of 6,000 feet.

Soldiers from Companies A, C and E, 1st Battalion, 50th Infantry Regiment, Infantry Training Brigade, carried flags for the national flag pageantry while soldiers from the 1st Bn., 10th Field Artillery Regiment, fired a 56-gun salute.

1st Lt. Herman Jones Jr., Battery B, 1st Bn., 10th Artillery Regt., 3rd Infantry Division (Mechanized), participated in the day's activities.

Bells were also ringing as Fort Benning reenacted the "Let Freedom Ring" celebration. Coordinated by the Sons of the Revolution, bells rang for a one-minute duration all over the nation to honor the country's founding fathers.



Flashes of color illuminated the night sky as the evening was culminated by a 30-minute firework show that concluded the post's celebration of America's 220th birthday.

"This has been just a lovely, patriotic day," said Sophia Kontaxis, a Columbus resident. "We've been blessed to be able to live in this country, the land of the free."

ask the judge

By Rick Parker
Office of the Staff Judge Advocate

Q. I have been living with another person without the "benefit of clergy" for the past couple of years. The relationship is getting a little rocky and I believe we're going to split up. One of my friends told me that my girlfriend and I are in a common law marriage. Can that be true? I thought it took seven years for that to happen.

A. Legal marriages are normally those which are sanctioned by obtaining a marriage license and taking vows before a judge or member of the clergy, in accordance with statute.

However, common law marriages are recognized in a number of states, and are simply, legal marriages which are considered to arise because of the intent of the parties to live together as spouses as demonstrated by their actions.

The Georgia courts have long recognized common law marriages. In order for such a marriage to exist in this state, one need only prove that the parties intended to live together as husband and wife. The courts have never imposed any kind of time requirement, such as the seven years you mention.

Of course, the primary problem with common law marriages is proving that they exist. To prove a person's "intent" is a difficult task. It usually involves taking a closer look at how the parties act. Do they keep joint finances? Do they own property jointly? Do they call themselves husband and wife to other people? Do they act and hold themselves out as married people? These are indications of whether or not a common law marriage exists. It is a factual problem.

In recognition of this factual problem, and, probably on "moral" grounds, the Georgia Legislature has enacted a statute which provides that no common law marriage shall be entered into in this state after January 1, 1997. It does go on to state that common law marriages entered into before that date would still be valid and given recognition, but this would mean that after January 1, 1997, you would have to prove that the intent existed before that date.

Why is the issue of common law marriage important? One's marital status has significant impact on property rights and rights to certain benefits. A spouse is an heir at law, and thus, at the death of an individual, his or her spouse, even a common law spouse, would have certain rights with respect to the estate. Social Security, and other benefits, are potentially payable to an individual's spouse, including a common law spouse. In the case you mention, sometime, common law spouses go through divorce and have to litigate property, custody and alimony issues.

If you have any questions concerning common law marriage issues, call the Legal Assistance Office at 545-3281 to make an appointment.

Simple precautions can save backyard cookouts, lives

Georgia Firefighters Burn Foundation, Inc.

With the warm months here, most families grill outdoors regularly. Grilling outdoors needs to be monitored closely, warns the Georgia Firefighters Burn Foundation.

Every year, hundreds of millions of dollars in property are lost due to careless grilling. Even more important, through the summer months hundreds of people, in the Georgia area alone, are injured from careless outdoor grilling.

Burn prevention

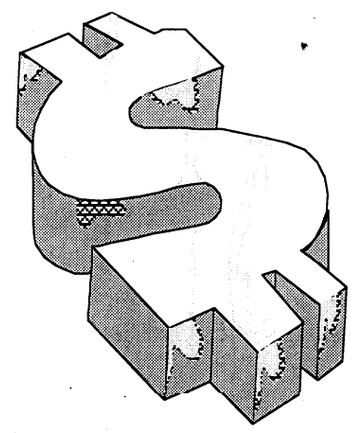
To maintain safety and to avoid serious accidents from harming you or your family, the Burn Foundation offers these simple burn prevention guidelines.

- To avoid burning yourself while grilling, always wear a thick protective apron and pot-holder like gloves.
- Do not allow children to play around the grill.
- Place your grill in an area where sparks and smoke will not fly toward buildings or people.
- If you live in an apartment or condominium, do not grill on your deck.
- Never use lighter fluid or an excellerant on hot coals.
- To safely light coals, douse with fluid, wait 15 minutes and light using a long-stemmed match.
- If using a gas grill, place a long stemmed match by gas outlet then slowly turn on gas. If grill does not ignite, turn off gas, wait a few moments and try again.
- Make sure that your grill is placed on non-combustible flooring, such as concrete or brick.
- Make certain that the ash catcher is properly attached.
- Do not dispose of ashes in anything combustible; fires started by smoldering ashes are frequent during the summer months.

In an effort to reduce the number of burn injuries this summer, the Burn Foundation asks residents to follow these guidelines. Common sense about grilling can save more than your property; it can save your life.

For more information on outdoor cooking or any other fire safety or burn prevention precautions, call the GFBF office at 404-320-6223 or 800-273-2876.

Cautious consumers enjoy credit convenience



Better Business Bureau

Credit is a convenience.

It allows you to take out a loan, rent an apartment, finance an automobile, obtain a mortgage and can even help you to secure employment.

But how should college graduates or others seeking to be fiscally responsible establish good credit records? The Better Business Bureau of West Georgia, Southwest Georgia and East Alabama suggests the following steps:

- Open a savings or checking account. This helps you prove your financial responsibility and offers a convenient, safe way to pay your bills.
- If you have a steady income and have lived in the same area for more than one year, try applying for credit with a local business. Make sure the business sends the information on your new credit account to one or more of the credit reporting bureaus.

- Obtain a secured credit card. A secured credit card is a bank credit card backed by money you keep in a bank account. Banks don't typically charge an application fee for secured cards. If you do not pay your credit card bill, the money in your account will be used to cover that debt. Use your secured card for purchases and pay the bill on time. You can apply for an unsecured card after one year.
- Ask someone — a friend or family member — to cosign your credit application. By cosigning, the person promises to pay if you don't. After you have used the credit account for a year, apply for credit on your own.

If you are unable to pay your bills on time due to a crisis, contact your creditor and explain your problem. They may be able to work out a new payment plan to help you until the crisis is over.

Once you have established credit, be careful who has access to personal information, such as your social security, bank account and credit card numbers.

'Pictures' form image of who, what we are

By Chap. John Wilson
Family Life Center Training Program

Do you enjoy looking at your picture on the wall? Or perhaps your pictures are like mine, waiting for the album, but still treasured.

reflections

Photographs are frozen moments in time when a scene, a person, or a group is captured out of the flowing river of life. Often, they trigger memories of special times and places. They may even bring back images of places or people that are gone from our lives.

Photographs always wrap a story around themselves. Some, perhaps many, will react to the captured scene with something stirring in their mind, an imagined breeze, or smell, or touch, tears or laughter. We see our photographs and we are transported back to the moments they were taken.

We each carry pictures in our minds. Rarely are these pictures neatly arranged and catalogued. These pictures, often jumbled out of sequence, carry with their scenes the sum of our experiences in life. The pictures from our memories are an album that is captured in the heart of our being. Some pictures are beautiful treasures. Some are so filled with agony they are buried deep in the jumble.

The pictures in our minds tell us who we are. They tell us how to react and what to do. Pictures are vital to our well being. They begin to fill our conscious and unconscious minds from the moment of our birth. Young children can only think in pictures of concrete reality. Perhaps that is why infants laugh when adults play "peek-a-boo" with them. If someone kept popping in and out of existence before your eyes, making strange faces at you, how would you react?

If it can't be seen, touched tasted, heard or smelled, it doesn't exist. It is not until early adolescence that children begin to grasp abstract concepts such as algebra or purely philosophical concepts. Yet I suspect that even as adults, we all tend to think best in pictures. We craft scenes in our minds to attempt to explain even the most abstract concepts.

The best speakers engage us with verbal pictures. Artists capture us with images. Television, movies and videos entertain us with entire moving sequences of life. Pictures in our mind are a crucial and critical part of life.

"Big boys don't cry." Now that is a picture, too. A little boy with a skinned and bleeding knee being comforted? Big boys don't cry but it hurts. Oh, boys don't show emotion but it's okay for mommies to show tenderness with the kiss that makes it "all better." What pictures children learn.

In my work I am often given the privilege of seeing the pictures from other people's lives. Some make me want to laugh and smile.

"I remember my birthday when I was (any age), we went to Six Flags ... the zoo ... Disney World ... and it was so much fun."

"I remember the fun we used to have making Christmas cookies. Everybody helped mixing dough, cutting cookies, frosting, decorating and always sampling to see if they were 'okay.'"

Other pictures rip at my heart with pain or give the urge to strike out in anger at those who would inflict such gruesome images upon God's children.

"You are daddy's little special girl, my little lover."

"You are so stupid, you will never be anything, no good. Now I have to beat you again."

"What? You only got a 95 semester average? Why wasn't it 100? You must not be trying hard enough!"

Images flick across our minds every moment. Pictures flashing messages so fast we don't even realize they are there sometimes. Automatic thoughts that set us in motion before we realize they are in control. Some are critical to avoid danger. But others replay images that cut us off from reality.

The good news is that we can "reprogram" our minds. We do not have to live with the conditioning we do not want. It is not easy to change but it can happen. "Do not conform any longer to the pattern of this world, but be transformed by the renewing of your mind." (Romans 12: 2)

It is not just as children that we form the images in our minds.

"What is the perfect sergeant or commander like?"

"What does a 'good wife' mean?"

"What do I need or want to ensure I will be happy?"

We set our goals by pictures in our minds. We act out the pictures in the way we live, the way we react, the way we treat other people. We are what we think, what we see in the pictures in our minds. "For as he thinketh in his heart, so is he ..." (Proverbs 23: 7)

God commands Christians to keep Sabbath holy

By Terry W. Austin
Chaplain Resource Manager

In God's word, you will find a support group of people who have experienced almost anything you could imagine. Some folks reached the top of their social worlds and other folks hit and fell to the bottom.

reflections

Some of them chose to use the help God provided for them while others chose to continue trying "their way."

Take, for example, the commandment, "Remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy." There are at least two advantages for keeping a day set apart for God.

The first advantage reflects God's love for us. He gave us a day to come away from the hard labors of life and reflect on him. In today's world, many demands are placed on us and they are not usually spiritual or religious; unless, of course, you happen to be in that type of profession. Usually, we worry about due dates on bills, weekly events and a host of other things that go on in our lives. At the end of the day, we are so tired we find it hard to read the word of God and pray in a manner we consider effective. You will find these kinds of people throughout scripture and easily identify with them. Their results can be seen and the hard questions like, "Was it worth it?" will be answered.

If we continually run after this world and all it has to offer without taking time for God, we may find ourselves coming short of our goals. Really, if we work ourselves to death, someone else will enjoy the fruits of our labor.

It may be tempting to work seven days a week and endure those long hours without a break, but according to God, we need a break. In fact, if we do not take a break, we may break. Take that day every week to worship God. Even our Lord Jesus made it his "custom" to visit the place of worship. Hopefully, you will also. I encourage you to take the time to praise God.

The second advantage of keeping the Sabbath holy is its wholesomeness. You know there is something wonderful about taking a day off. We operate in a unique environment. We talk differently than our loved ones back home. We even subject ourselves to the possibility of long periods of separation from our family.

Remember the cliche, "up in the morning before day?" I'm sure you do. It simply shows the pace of life we are involved in. It is to our advantage to take some time for ourselves.

God gave us the Sabbath. The Sabbath was made for us, not us for the Sabbath. We need it and the lessons it continues to teach us. Remember to set aside a day to worship God and get away from the daily activities. Sometimes it does us good to simply change the pace. Take a different way home, go on a day trip, with friends or family, or simpy take time to relax.

Now, you are different from anyone else. You know what makes you happy or what will encourage your heart. I want to encourage you to do those things. Be safe, have fun and strengthen yourself in the Lord.

Always remember, if God made it so, it is for our good. What a wonderful support group God has given to us through his son, Jesus Christ, and the host of friends throughout Scripture who are just like us in many ways. We can learn a lot from them.

I encourage you to worship in one of the post chapels. If you are unsure of locations and times, contact you unit chaplain or call the post chaplain's office at 545-2288.

Pistol club conducts gun course

Lori Egan

Mary Bongiovanni of Columbus fires a revolver during the safety course.

By Lori Egan
Bayonet staff writer

It's 12:19 a.m. and a strange noise just woke you from a sound sleep. As you lie in bed straining to identify the noise, you hope that what you hear downstairs is the result of an active imagination, not a burgler breaking into your home.

It is just this type of situation that prompted Fort Benning's Rifle and Pistol Club to offer a class in gun safety and self-defense for women recently.

The course, taught by Haines Shooting Services, was filled with pragmatic advice, such as letting the burgler take the TV — stay in a safe room and call the police; be aware of the area that you are in; and, don't be so ladden down with packages coming from the mall that you fumble with the keys — this gives a thug the opportunity he was looking for.

"It's the little things that make a difference," said Bize Haines of Haines Shooting Services. "The most important thing about owning a weapon is knowing how to use it. Ninety-nine percent of the people who are going to cause you trouble don't have training. That is where this class comes in — we train you how to hold the gun and where to keep it in position with your body so that it isn't taken away from you."

Haines recommends revolvers for home safety because revolvers have built in safety features.

A safety feature is the double action — you have to pull the trigger to make the hammer go back.

"A revolver is a no brainer because if you pull the trigger, the gun is going to fire," Haines said.

"The number one rule of owning a handgun for self protection is do not let anyone take the gun away from you," Haines said. "Then they'll have your loaded gun.

"Rule number two is keep the gun close to your body," Haines said. "Don't carry the gun like they do on TV.

"The police can't be everywhere," said Mary Bongiovanni of Columbus. "You feed and clothe yourself, you should be able to protect yourself. Safety and my protection are the best reasons for taking the class."

Other tips Haines offered for home safety were:

•Stay in a dark room, don't turn on a light. You know your house better in the dark than a stranger does. A light just shows the thug where you are.

•Put a cordless phone in your bedroom. Put fluorescent tape on the numbers nine and one.

•Replace the bedroom door with a solid core door and put a deadbolt without a key on the door.

•Let everyone who has a key to your home know you have a gun and you know how to use it.

"I was scared one night, I had new neighbors and there was a loud noise in my back yard," Bongiovanni said "I came to the door, turned on the light and let the neighbors know I had a gun. I was so scared I couldn't talk.

"I now know," she said, "I should have just stayed in the house and called the police; but sometimes anger just gets the better of you."

"This type of training, the basics, makes sure you can absolutely take care of your self," Haines said.

Shooters win national championships

Novinski

Buffa

By David L. McCormack
USAMU Public Affairs Office

COLORADO SPRINGS. Colo. —Two U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit shotgun shooters captured national championship titles in three events while competing against the nation's top civilian and military competitors during the 1996 USA Shooting National Championships at the Olympic Training Center June 21 to 25.

Spc. Joetta R. Novinski won the Women's Trap and Double Trap titles and Spc. Joseph D. Buffa was named the National Skeet Champion.

After five days of handling a nine-pound match-grade shotgun under the blazing sun, intense heat and windy conditions, Novinski out-shot her competitors with a score of 270 out of a possible 300 points to win the Women's National Trap Competition June 22. She also set a new national championship record to take the Women's National Double Trap title June 25 with a score of 241 points out of a possible 280.

"Earning the title of national champion is an incredible honor," Novinski said. "It takes awhile for it to set in; I still can't get over it."

The National Championships are significant because the winners become members of the National Team that will represent America in future world championships and vie for positions on the U.S. Olympic Shooting Team in the year 2000.

Novinski attributes her ability to win the titles to her shooting coach, the Army and her father.

"My coach, Mr. Burl Branham, taught me everything I know about competitive shooting," Novinski said. "The U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit provided me with excellent training, support and facilities, but I have to say my father is the driving force."

Novinski enlisted in the Army in 1993. She attended basic training at Fort Jackson, S.C., and petroleum supply training at Fort Lee, Va., in 1993, and then was assigned to the Marksmanship Unit.

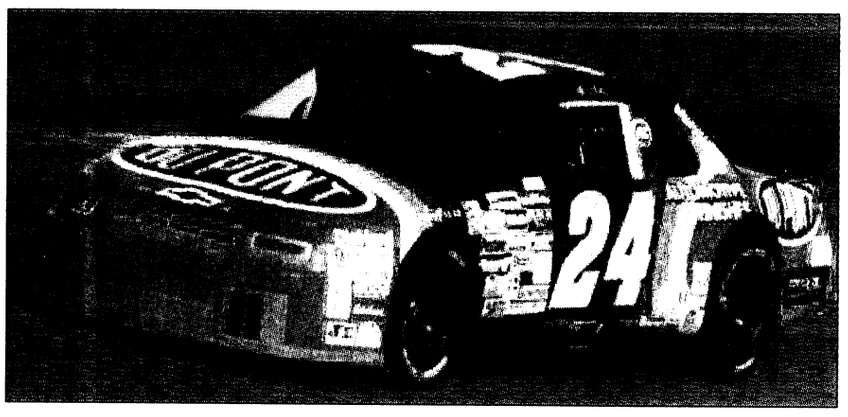
She began shooting in 1989 and has numerous shooting accomplishments. In 1995, she was the Zone Eight Competition Trap and Double Trap Champion, as well as winning second place in double trap in the Fairfield Sportsmen's Club Gator Match. She won second place in the U.S. Shotgun Team Fall Selection Match Trap Aggregate in 1994 and in 1993 she was an Olympic Festival Team Member. In 1992 and 1991, she was the high female in trap, U.S. Development Team, Junior Olympics, as well as being a U.S. National Team Member in 1992 and 1993.

Buffa, who began shooting in 1979, has many shooting accomplishments as well. In 1995, he was a Bronze Medalist in a Skeet Selection Match, the Skeet Champion in the Gator Match and the Skeet Champion at the Tall Pines Match. In 1994, he was an Olympic Festival Team Member, a World Championship Team Member, and a Silver Medalist in the Zone 3 Match in Skeet, as well as winning Bronze Medals in Interservice Shotgun Competition in Skeet and the Zone 3 Match Skeet in 1993.

Raised in Flushing, Mich., Buffa graduated from Flushing High School in 1986 and continued an education in accounting through nearby Baker College. He enlisted in the Army in 1992 and was assigned to the USAMU's Shotgun Team.

Drivers prepare for Talladega Speedway

Talladega Public Relations Dept.



TALLADEGA, Ala. — An "average" race, say at Talladega Superspeedway for five-time DieHard 500 winner Dale Earnhardt, would have most of the rest of the field drooling.

Starting with his 12th place finish in his debut in the 1978 Sears DieHard 500, Earnhardt has amassed an average finish of 11.8 for 35 races at NASCAR's most competitive track.

During that span, he has led 1,090 laps for an average of 31 laps led per race, and has won in excess than $1.3 million, which averages out to more than $38,000 per outing.

Earnhardt is the speedway's all-time leader with 10 wins including, seven Winston Cup, two IROC and one NASCAR Busch Series victories. He also leads the list of money-winners, and will pass Buddy Baker for the most laps led as soon as he shows the way for ten more laps, an event likely to occur in the July 28 Sears DieHard 500.

While the Talladega Superspeedway is a wide, easy-to-drive race track. When you are alone on the track for qualifying, it is an altogether different story when 25-30 cars are racing three and four wide in a hugh cluster of powerful machines that are virtually equal, as will be the case in the July 28th Sears DieHard 500.

Courtesy Photo

Jeff Gordon, defending Winston Cup champion, and his Chevrolet Monte Carlo will be one of the participants at Talladega.

Some of NASCAR's top drivers comment on the mental stress, and what its like when something goes wrong.

Dale Jarrett, who will be racing in both the Sears DieHard 500 and the Hummingbird Fishfinder 500K NASCAR Busch Series race the day before, said, "The last few laps, I enjoy. Up to that point, its pretty much hell. Anyone who tells you it's not the most nerve-wracking place we go, they haven't been up in that pack and been a part of it."

Ricky Craven, who will be back to race in both races after having a frightening crash in the recent Winston Select 500, said, "I think the easiest thing we do in Winston Cup racing is drive the car in qualifying at Talladega. One of the most difficult things we do in Winston Cup is race at Talladega. There's no preferential treatment at Talladega. It doesn't matter if you're a seven-time champion or a rookie. This racetrack treats everybody the same."

Jeff Gordon, defending Winston Cup Champion, who was also involved in a 14-car accident, said, "It's one of the scariest feelings you can ever imagine. You're sitting in there sliding along at 180-190 miles an hour and youre just holding tight. I'd be sliding along and think it's going to stop and then — boom — someone else would hit me. It's the first time I've been in a wreck like that, and it wasn't fun."

Sterling Marlin, winner of the last two Winston Cup races at Talladega, said, "At some tracks, you'll see somebody run away with a race. The difference at Talladega is that nobody is going to run away with anything. All it takes is two or three other cars drafting together and I don't care how strong your car is, you've got a handful. One thing's for sure, if you win at Talladega, you earn it."

Reserved seats tickets for the July 28th Sears DieHard 500, as well as for the Hummingbird Fishfinder 500K the day before, remain on sale at the speedway ticket office.

USAMU soldier gaining recognition in marksmanship arena

USAMU Public Affairs Office

She may be new to the game, but Spc. Dianna Dzek of the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit's Service Pistol team is quickly gaining recognition in the professional marksmanship's competition arena.

After becoming a full-fledged member of the Service Pistol team in January, it wasn't long before Dzek proved her worth during the Interservice Championship held recently in Little Rock, Ark.

There, her score of 269 with 5X landed her a second-place finish. More than 28 competitors representing all branches of service — including the Marine Corps, Navy, Air Force, and Army National Guard — were in the Excellence in Competition Match.

"It says a lot that such a relatively inexperienced shooter can do so well," Ray Arredondo, USAMU Service Pistol team coach, said.

That Dzek did so well while firing the newly modified 9mm said even more.

While Dzek said she was a little surprised by her performance as a new shooter firing a newly modified match pistol at the Interservice Championships, she still believed in her ability to do well.

"I had enough faith in both my abilities as a shooter and the modifications made to the 9mm that I thought I could do well," Dzek said. "I just did a little better than I was expecting to do."

Dzek wasn't the only one who had faith in her abilities.

"I had a favorable opinion of Specialist's Dzek performance the year previously when she was a pick-up shooter on our team," Arrendondo said.

While serving in the 16th Military Police Brigade at Fort Bragg, N.C., Dzek was temporarily attached to the USAMU to participate in the 1995 Interservice Championships.

Thinking she showed a lot of potential, Arredondo asked Dzek to become a permanent member of the team in 1996.

"Lacking the experience that she did then, I could see she was a shooter who worked on raw talent," Arredondo said.

Combining that talent with the experience she'll receive at the USAMU will make Dzek a competitor who is tough to beat.

Canoeing offers quiet escape for vacationers

Feature Outdoors

No one knows for sure when canoeing became a leisure activity, but early explorers must have enjoyed the time on the water as much as today's recreational canoers.

Today, many families are leaving boat and camper behind and venturing into the wilderness with a canoe and some outdoor gear to enjoy a quiet, solitary vacation. It offers an escape from the clamor of daily life and populated tourist areas, and is a way to spend quality time together and teach outdoor skills to kids.

"It's important to get the kids involved in activities, whether it's pitching the tent, learning to read a map, or exploring the surrounding area," said Scott Phillips, canoe salesman. "Parents have to take the time to be a kid again."

Canoeing is also a recreation that families can enjoy close to home. There are streams or lakes near most communities. With a canoe, you can access some secluded waters even on a heavily-traveled river. The bays and inlets off larger bodies of water are often too shallow for boats. But a canoe can glide through four inches of water easily, to reach a quiet area for fishing or a picnic.

"Canoeing allows you to see nature in its purest form," said Phillips. "It's not unusual to come upon a nest of loons or ducks along a riverbank, or to spot a herd of deer on a shoreline, even right outside a big city. I've had deer actually walk toward me with their ears up," he said. "Because a canoe is so silent, they can't quite identify what you are and are curious."

With the right canoe, families can enjoy a one-day river trip, as well as rugged canoe camping in lake country. Phillips recommends a versatile canoe that can be used in various waters: one that is fairly wide, 36 to 40 inches, with a shallow arch bottom and a moderate rocker. This style offers stability and works well on waves and some white water. It can also be maneuvered around obstacles, and has good tracking ability.

Besides the right canoe, a good attitude will make the trip worthwhile for everyone. Here are some tips for getting the most out of a canoe camping trip:

• Preplan the trip so that you can enjoy a leisure time, instead of a mad rush. Take your time getting to the destination. Stop for breaks along the way to see points of interest, dine at a good restaurant, or hike at a state park.

• Don't make it hard for the kids. Allow them to pitch in where necessary, but let the adults handle the harder jobs—loading the canoe, paddling and portaging, hauling heavy gear.

• Don't take risks by paddling all day until everyone is exhausted, or waiting until sunset to find a campsite. Take plenty of breaks.

• Avoid dangerous waters. Rushing water and underwater currents are stronger than you might anticipate, not to mention the danger of jutting rocks. Some white water is okay, but you might not have the right canoe to maneuver properly. Do not risk questionable water conditions.

• Everyone in the canoe should wear a properly fitting personal floatation device. Do not rely on your ability to swim.

• Leave a detailed itinerary with friends at home. Remember, you can't retrieve a forgotten item at the camp store in the wilderness, so plan ahead, bringing essentials for weather changes, shelter, clothing, food, water and first aid.

WRD reminds personal watercraft operators of boating laws, safety

Feature Outdoors

Personal watercraft are growing faster in popularity than any other type of boat, both in Georgia and across the country. Georgia boaters registered more than 18,000 PWC in 1995.

This number is expected to increase in 1996, according to the Georgia Department of Natural Resources, Wildlife Resources Division.

The WRD reminds PWC owners and operators of the rules of the water when operating a PWC:

• PWC Operators and riders must wear a U. S. Coast Guard approved life jacket which is properly fitted and fastened.

• PWC cannot exceed five miles per hour within 100 feet of any moored or anchored vessel, shore, wharf, dock, pier, piling, bridge structure or person in the water. The wake from a fast moving PWC can swamp a small fishing boat or put swimmers in danger.

• PWC operators must be 16 years of age or older. PWC operators between the ages of 12 and 15 must be accompanied by or within sight or hearing distance of an adult 18 years of age or older.

• Skiers can only be towed behind PWC designed to carry three or more persons. Georgia law requires a competent observer other than the operator on board the PWC to watch the skier. A wide-angle mirror cannot be used in place of an observer.

• A self-circling device or a lanyard-type cutoff switch is required on all PWC. The self-circling device should be operational and the lanyard must be attached to the operator's clothing.

• PWC can only be operated after sunrise and before sunset.

"Personal watercraft are very popular because they are inexpensive, easy to operate and fun," said Lt. Col. Joel Brown of DNR Law Enforcement Section. "However, PWC operators must know and follow the boating laws in order to protect themselves and others."

The U.S. Coast Guard Auxiliary, U.S. Power Squadrons, and other organizations frequently offer boating safety courses for boaters of all ages and experience levels. For the date and location of the next course in your area, call 1-800-368-5647.

Soldiers burn up Columbus with Olympic flame

By Lisa M. Hibbert
Bayonet staff writer

Active duty, retired and former soldiers ran the streets of Columbus as Olympic torchbearers July 12.

The crowd lining Victory Drive was thick as people gathered, waving American flags, for an opportunity to see the passing of the Olympic flame.

Fort Benning's part of the race, which began the Columbus relay, started with Sgt 1st Class Joseph Wood, 2nd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment.

Sgt. Willie Brisky of Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment was the second soldier to carry the torch.

"As I stood there waiting for the other runner (Wood) to light my torch, I was overwhelmed by the people cheering me on," Brisky said. "Every once in a while you do things that reconfirm your shot group and I just reconfirmed mine."

Staff Sergeant James Bailey of Company C, 1st Bn. (Airborne), 507th Inf. Regt., made history twice. Not only is he the first Air Force Airborne School instructor, but, he was the third Fort Benning affiliate to carry the flame.

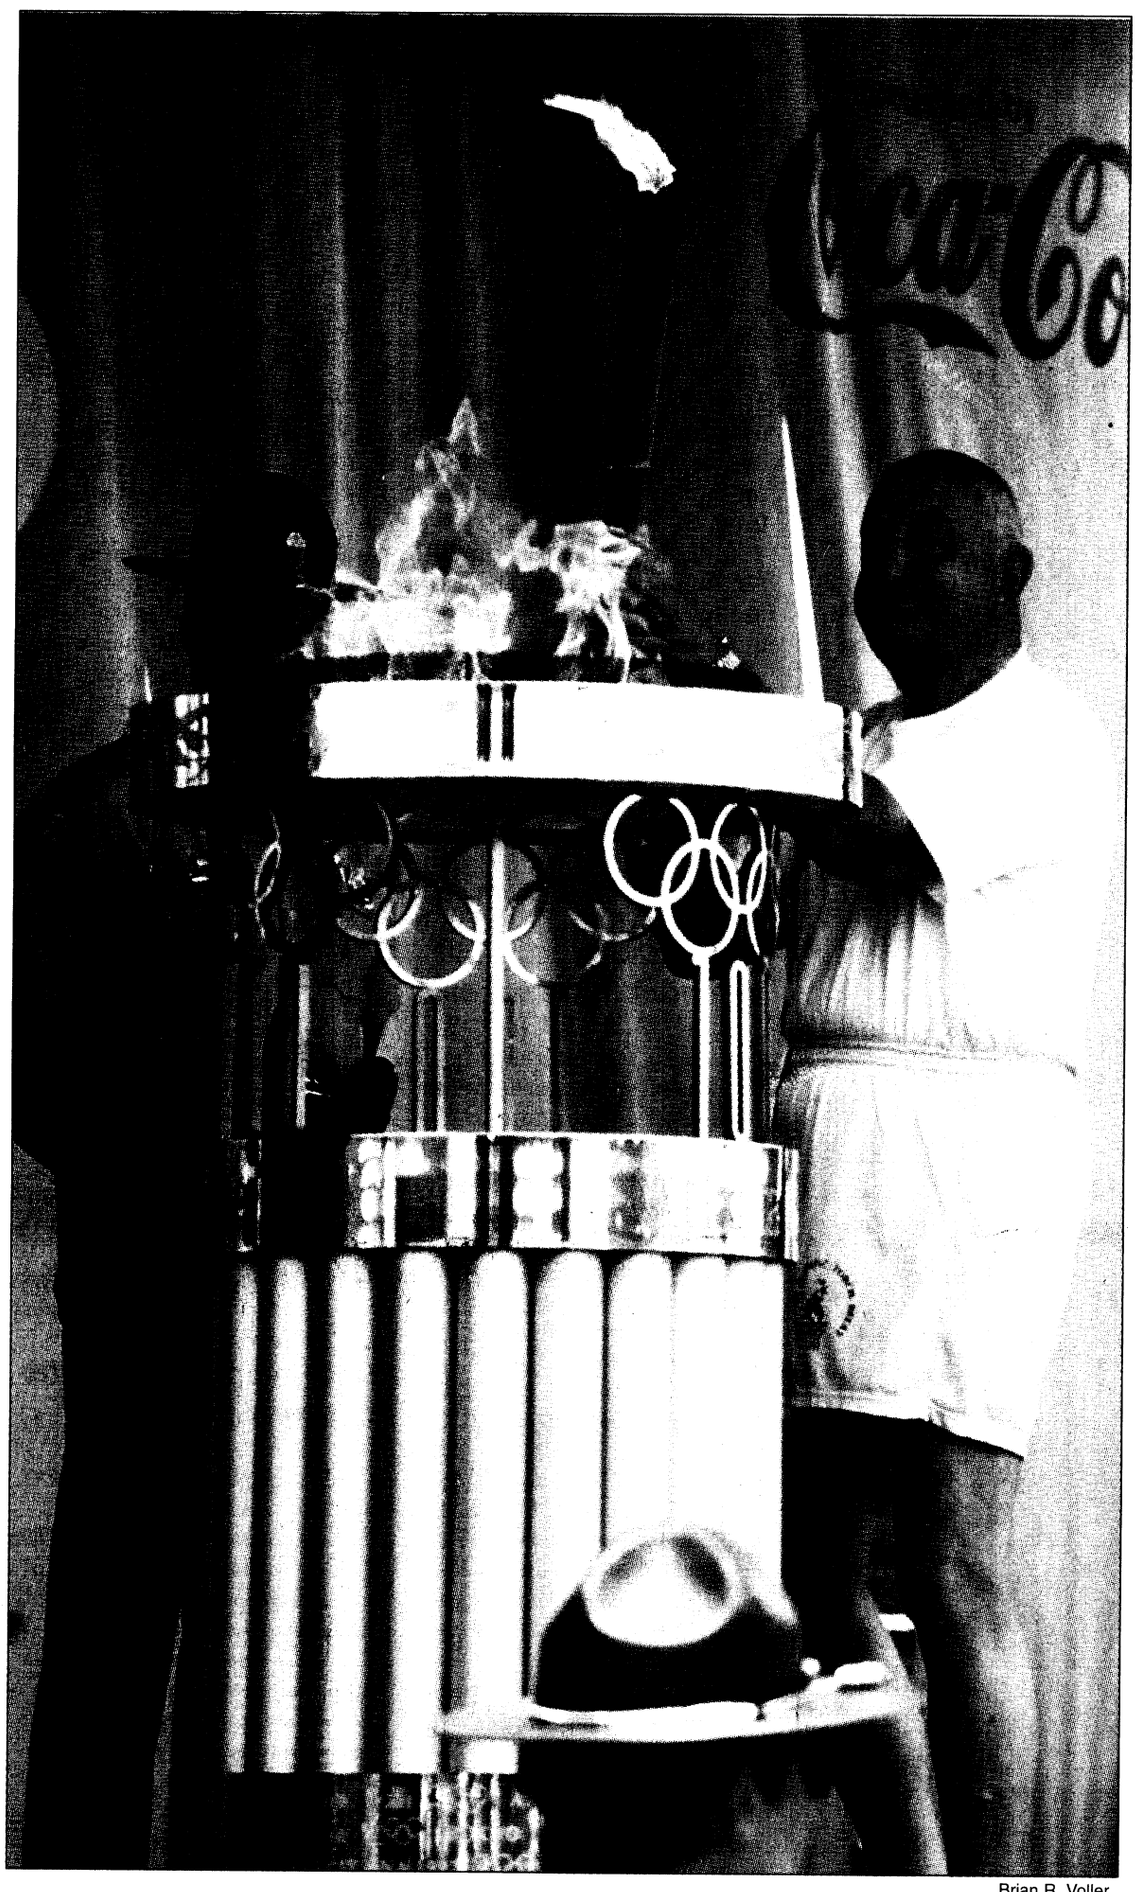
Owen Ditchfield, of the Department of Defense Schools, was the fourth torch bearer and Lawrence Mosely of the Army Marksmanship Unit was the fifth.

"Carrying the torch was the thrill of a lifetime," Mosely said. "I only wish it could have lasted longer."

Retired Col. Robert Nett, was the sixth military runner in Columbus. Nett had the privilege of not only carrying the torch to South Commons, the Olympic arena, but he lit the cauldron marking Columbus' participation in the Olympic games.

"Everyone seemed so happy," Nett said. "It was the greatest thrill to see so many happy people at one time. It made me feel about 10 feet tall."

Also carrying the torch was Sam Wellborn, president of Columbus Bank & Trust and an active supporter of Fort Benning. Wellborn carried the torch in Warm Springs, Ga. later that evening and Capt. Glen Dubis of AMU was part of the torch relay in Newnan, Ga., Wednesday.



Carrying the torch is only a small part of Fort Benning's Olympic effort.

Besides providing the Columbus Olympic Village, which houses all of the athletes participating in the fast-pitch softball games, soldiers from several units on post have been deployed to Atlanta in support of the games.

Every unit in 3rd Brigade, 3rd Inf. Division (Mechanized) is providing some soldier support for the games except for the brigade's Headquarter and Headquarters Company. The majority of the soldiers are coming from 1st Bn., 30th Inf. Regt.

Also providing support for the games is the 36th Engineer Group. The units proving support are the 598th Maintenance Company, the 13th Corps Support Battalion, the 608th Ordnance Company and the 104th Transportation Company.

The Columbus Olympic games will be kicked off with a welcome ceremony Saturday at Memorial Stadium and the games will begin Sunday at 9 a.m. at Golden Park.

Brian R. Voller

Medal of Honor recipient retired Col. Robert Nett, watches as the flames rise after lighting the Olympic cauldron marking Columbus' participation in the Olympic Games.

DPW stops issue of miniblinds

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Because of the U.S. Product Safety Commission's recent determination that some imported vinyl miniblinds contain lead, Fort Benning's Directorate of Public Works has stopped issuing these blinds to post residents.

Col. Richard L. Rutledge, garrison commander said, "We are aware of the potential hazards and are working to eliminate possible danger to young children residing on Fort Benning out of concern for soldiers and their families."

DPW has established an information line, 545-2118, to answer questions concerning blinds containing lead. Individuals may leave questions on the recording.

After testing and analyzing imported vinyl miniblinds, the CPSC found that over time the plastic deteriorates from exposure to sunlight and heat to form lead dust on the surface of the blind. The amount of lead dust formed varied in each blind.

"Some of the vinyl blinds had a level of lead in the dust that would not be considered a health hazard, while others had very high levels" said CPSC Chairman Ann Brown.

Young children can ingest lead by wiping their hands on the blinds and then putting their hands in their mouths. Adults and children older than six generally are not at risk.

The Department of the Army Center for Health Promotion and Preventive Medicine Lead Team recommends the following:

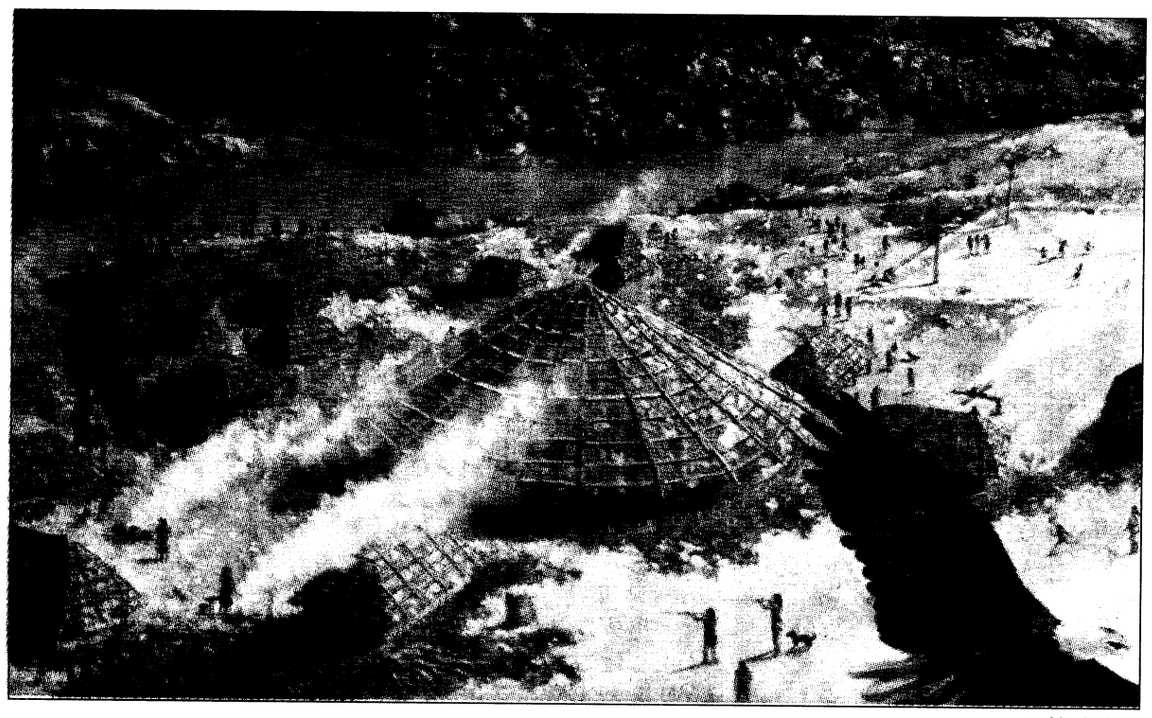
• Children 6 and under should be kept away from vinyl miniblinds.

• Blinds and adjacent window surfaces should be washed with dishwasher detergent solution. Residents should not vacuum the blinds because the dust may be fine enough to blow back into the room through the filter.

The Fort Benning Lead Committee is actively working with the Army medical community and CPSC to establish appropriate action.

National historic landmark approved for post

By John W. Peeler
Special to The Bayonet©



Secretary of Interior Bruce Babbitt designated Yuchi town as a national landmark. The Yuchi site is located on Fort Benning in the eastern part of Russell County.

The site was settled circa 1700 and subsequently rediscovered by David Chase in 1958. Chase, an avocational archaeologist stationed at Fort Benning, later became one of the first curators of the National Infantry Museum.

According to a report by the Army Corps of Engineers, the Yuchi town, which was situated among groups of Creek Indians, had an estimated population of 1,500, with a fighting strength of approximately 500.

Originally thought to be near the mouth of the Uchee Creek, Chase found limited artifacts that did not suggest the presence of a major town site. It was not until further searching downstream, which is southeast of the present day Uchee Creek Army Campground and Marina, that significant discoveries were made.

Chase and Harold Huscher conducted excavations of the site until 1962 when a reduction in the operating budget caused work at the site to cease.

Martin Pate

Yuchi town was a thriving Native American community in the 1700s on land now occupied by Fort Benning.

Some of the items encountered during the excavations were burial sites, clay-lined pits, postholes and structures.

This site is now recognized as the Yuchi town settlement described in 18th century sources.

The Yuchi were forced from Georgia to Oklahoma on the Trail of Tears after the passage of the Indian Removal Act in 1830.

Directorate of Public Works, Environmental Management Division archaeologist Dr. Christopher E. Hamilton said the efforts to get the site "landmark status" began back in 1990.

Hamilton said that individual states are asked periodically about areas that may qualify for landmark status. Once landmark status is requested and a site is nominated, the site is evaluated to see if it qualifies.

Hamilton said quality of life was one of the biggest benefits of landmark status.

"It ensures that the people who live here know that the land has such an historical value," Hamilton said.

Hamilton said the special status tells us as much about ourselves as the land itself and by protecting the site, it gives us time to reflect on our past and the area's history.

Surveys which could locate additional sites of historical significance on Fort Benning are continuing, according to Hamilton.

"By the year 2002 or 2003, all of Fort Benning will have been surveyed," Hamilton said. "This, of course, depends on future funding."

With the designation as a national historic landmark, Fort Benning will gain the added benefit of technical advice and assistance from experts in the field of preservation, if needed.

Hamilton said the actual marker for the site is expected to be placed sometime in the near future.

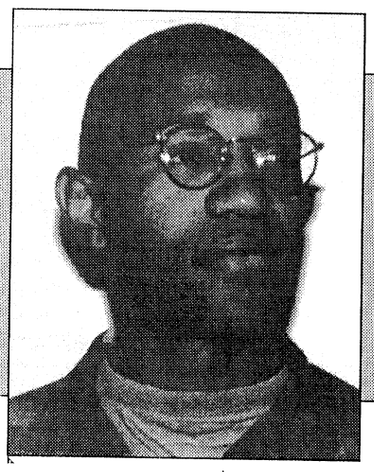
VARIOUS VOICES

What sort of impact will the 1996 Summer Olympic Games have on your life?

Capt. Chris Meredith, Company B, 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment — "I don't think they will very much because I reside on post and travel little on the weekends."



Valinda Elston, family member — "For me, they will affect traffic getting to and from work because I work at the hospital in Phenix City and live in Columbus."

Reneé Cannon, family member — "People living in Atlanta are going to be prisoners in their own homes. The money spent beautifying Atlanta could've been better spent taking care of our people. Sending the homeless away was wrong; we've forgotten America is great because we take care of our own."

Angel Latham, family member — "Well, I'm from a whole different state, so they won't really have an impact."

1st Lt. Ardrelle L. Evans, Company B, 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment — "It's going to be an excellent opportunity to meet people of different communities and cultures."

Sgt. 1st Class Angel Santos, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment — "Right now, my house is up for lease during the games. I'm going to get to meet new people and find out what they think of Columbus. It's a once-in-a-lifetime opportunity."

TORCH RELAY

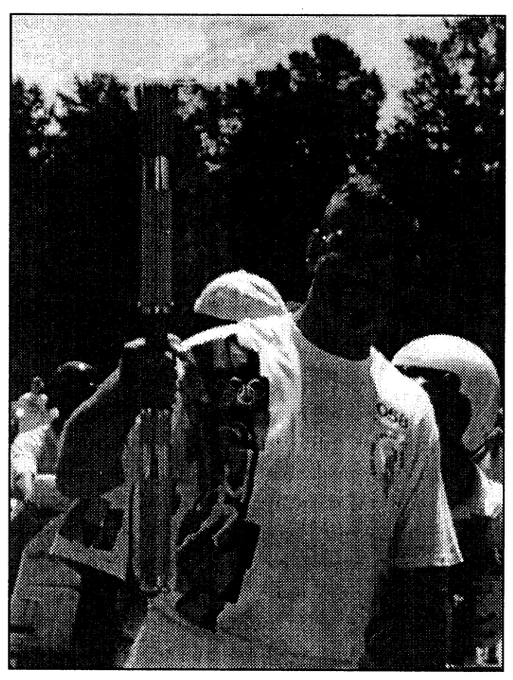
Victory Drive good for spirit

By John W. Peeler
Special to The Bayonet©

As a Columbus resident, I was glad to see the Olympic torch pass through the tricommunity area last week.

Moreover, I was proud that the Columbus phase of the relay originated in South Columbus on Victory Drive with a soldier.

I say this for several reasons. First of all, I grew up as a South Columbus resident which has, for the most part, been looked down upon by those living in the more affluent parts of the city.



Secondly, I was also an Army brat and came to know Fort Benning very early in life and know the sacrifices soldiers and their families make.

Finally, because I am a retired soldier from Fort Benning and know the contributions soldiers have made to this community ever since I can remember.

There are those who would argue that a better route could have been chosen to keep attention away from the bars, strip joints, tattoo parlors and lingerie shops that are located on Victory Drive.

In that respect, I would agree. These businesses do not represent Columbus as we would like others to see us; however, luck of the draw could not have given us a more appropriate place for the Torch Relay to start — Victory Drive.

In my mind, the name says it all.

Lori Egan

Sgt. 1st Class Joseph Wood, 2nd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment, begins Columbus' stretch of the Torch Relay.

Accomplishment, beating the odds, winning and overcoming adversity are just a few of the expressions that come to mind.

The fact that a soldier started the Torch Relay, on Victory Drive, conjures images I have seen in books like Valley Forge and Iwo Jima.

To see the courage on the face of those runners, some no longer in the best health of their lives, finishing their leg of the journey were, in the long run, victorious.

All the runners on the Columbus leg of the Olympic Torch Relay were selected because of past accomplishments, volunteerism and contributions to the community.

I would say that makes not only those who were torch runners victorious, but everyone who has come in contact with them.

Those who would have wanted the torch to travel a different path should also realize it was the victory of our forefathers and mothers that gives them the right to express their opinions.

It should also be recognized that the same victory gave those businesses the privilege of operating. Not that I condone those types of businesses, it is the principle behind the Constitution.

I'm glad I went out to see the torch come through Columbus and I'm especially glad I had the opportunity to see history and the victory put back in Victory Drive.

John W. Peeler is a staff writer for the Bayonet. He is proud the Olympic Torch Relay passed through Columbus and believes Victory Drive was an appropriate place for the tricommunity phase of the event to originate.

Post's money should be spent more wisely

Recently, road construction began on several streets in Custer Terrace, to include my street, Merrill Lane.

The extent of the repairs will probably cost several million dollars, which could be better spent elsewhere. The roads in question didn't seem to need repair. At the same time, I have to flush my plumbing lines at least once a month, usually calling in a work order to get this accomplished.

If this money used to fix good roads was used to replace 45 year old plumbing, or used to maintain the houses in housing areas, or to maintain barracks —just something as simple as exterminating roaches in barracks — quality of life would drastically improve.

Some might say to keep personal areas clean in the barracks and there wouldn't be a problem. My company's areas are maintained immaculately, yet are still thoroughly infested with roaches.

The money could also be spent to pay for air-conditioning during the summer to keep from forcing families out of their own homes during the hottest parts of the hottest days. Many families also work diligently to maintain their homes despite aging facilities. They and the single soldiers deserve better living conditions.

Fixing good roads isn't a very tangible symbol of our needs being addressed. In this age of dwindling budgets, we need to carefully prioritize what funds we have and not waste them on frivolous projects.

— Sgt. William B. Harriman III
Company A, 3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment

DPW responds to letter concerning funds

The Directorate of Public Works performs periodic inspections of the installation's roads to determine their conditions and safety.

Fort Benning measures these roads using the Pavement Condition Index in association with the Department of the Army PAVER software program. The PCI ranks roads on a scale of one to 100 with 100 being a perfect condition. The PCI is an effective tool in maintaining the installation's 500 miles of paved roads.

Ranking on the PCI scale for the Custer Terrace Area is 48, which is below the standard level of 55. Repairs that are accomplished in this range minimize base failure.

Costs associated to restore a road with base failure is substantially greater than a consistent repair policy. One other factor used to determine if a surface needs to be repaired is age; Merrill Lane was last resurfaced in 1979.

The DPW has developed a detailed plan to upgrade the Quality of Life for residents of family housing and barracks over the next five years. As part of this plan, the installation will spend $25 million to make family housing improvements and $87 million to upgrade barracks for fiscal 1995 and 1996.

Pending congressional approval, the installation will spend an additional $33 million in family housing and $91 million to upgrade or replace barracks for the period fiscal year 1997 through 1999. These expenditures will be used to replace facilities and roofs, make infrastructure improvements and general improvements to the exterior and interior of facilities.

As part of the installation's Energy Management Program, Fort Benning has contracted with Georgia Power to purchase electrical energy on an hourly basis. This enables the installation to choose the most cost effective energy and maximize service to customers during the summer months.

With this new contract in effect, and at the current funding level, interruptions this summer will be considerably less with the possibility that we will have none.

Hopefully, these comments will assist Sgt. Harriman in understanding why the roads in Custer Terrace are being resurfaced and DPW's plan to upgrade facilities for soldiers and families.

dial 545-boss

Dial 545-BOSS is the commander's action line for soldiers, family members and civilians to call when they have problems or complaints that can't be resolved elsewhere.

While it is not a substitute for the chain of command or for agencies established to provide assistance, the line offers another means of communication between Fort Benning's community and commanders.

The Bayonet features some of the calls that may benefit other members of the Fort Benning community.

Caller said she is concerned about the Infantry Hall Fitness Center closing on Saturdays, Sundays and holidays.

The sports director explained that due to downsizing, the Directorate of Community Activities and the 11th Infantry Regiment have reevaluated the need for the operating hours of sports facilities supported by the 11th Inf. Regt. It was determined that Briant Wells Field House would maintain its current hours while the Infantry Hall Fitness Center would be closed on weekends and holidays. Briant Wells Field House was chosen to stay open because it has racquetball courts, a main floor for basketball and a swimming pool.

Caller said that all housing areas have designated parking for each of the quarters, but the military police are telling residents that they don't have to obey the designated parking spaces and this is undermining the authority of the area coordinators.

Directorate of Public Safety said the caller is incorrect in his belief that there is reserved parking in the housing areas. This has been an issue at all Mayor's and Town Hall Meetings. The current policy is that parking would not be reserved, but that common sense and a "good neighbor" approach would be taken. Parking within the housing area is monitored by the community life noncommissioned officers and concerns which cannot be resolved by the quarters occupants should be referred to them.

TOTAL QUALITY MANAGEMENT

Degree program begins

Army Continuing Education System

The nation's first Master's Degree Program in Total Quality Management will be available at Fort Benning this fall.

The degree is granted by the Falmouth School of Quality Management at Anna Maria College in Massachusetts. Unlike traditional graduate programs which focus primarily on research, the total quality program theme is "team-driven with tangible results."

The military pilot program at Fort Dix was praised by Post Commander Col. M. Jeffry Petrucci. He said the fifty students in the master's program were responsible for a tangible savings of $175,000, which was achieved at Fort Dix within the first four weeks of the curriculum start.

Students complete the master's degree in approximately one year by finishing twelve courses, or one course per month. A complete course occurs over two alternate weekends, and students also meet as quality improvement teams in the interim between classes. All assignments are done as teams, and teams improve a process at an organization or unit represented by one or more of the team's members.

Units will typically send several students to the program so that the unit can achieve greater savings. Program graduates point to demonstrable improvement as evidence of their contribution to the installation or as incentives to potential future employers.

Faculty are quality practitioners with current knowledge and wide experience teaching working adults. One example is retired Col. John Hamburg, senior faculty in the Benchmarking Course, past benchmarking champion at Peat Marwick, and member of Vice-President Gore's National Task Force on Benchmarking.

The twelve-course curriculum provides comprehensive training, through courses such as Principles of Quality, Cost of Quality, and Quality in Human Resource Management. Of special interest to military personnel is the Baldrige-Based Assessment Course, which teaches full analysis of the Baldrige Criteria; the master's program is the nation's only graduate program to include two Baldrige Examiners among its alumni, and to also require an assessment course in ISO 9000, the European quality standard.

The command has made a commitment to provide limited sponsorship to civilian employees who are willing to make the commitment and pursue this rigorous training opportunity leading to a Master's Degree in Total Quality Management. Further, employees who meet the selection criteria and performance requirements set forth will be reimbursed at the rate of 75 percent of the tuition costs upon completion of each 3-credit hour module. Military personnel interested in pursuing this master's degree can be partially funded through Tuition Assistance, the GI Bill, or may qualify for possible grants.

Fort Benning needs a total of 40 (civilians and military personnel) to start the program in the fall. A meeting and information session will be held in Classroom 6, Infantry Hall, July 29 at 9 a.m.

If you are interested in applying for this degree and competing for civilian funding, you need to attend this session. Once the 40 applications have been taken and accepted, a board will meet to select civilians competing for this training and funding.

Don't miss out on an opportunity to be the first of a "Quality Team" at Fort Benning.

If you have any questions concerning this session, please call the Education Center at 545-6114 or Anna Maria College at 1-800-838-2580. All criteria for application and competing for funding will be given out at the meeting on July 29.

Better Opportunities for Single Soldiers

By Willie Briskey
3rd Bn., 75th Ranger Regt.

The Alabama Special Camp for Children and Adults, located in Jackson Gap, Ala., like most summer camps is open year round. Many organizations use Camp ASCCA. One of the groups using the facility is the Muscular Dystrophy Association, who sponsored an annual summer camp June 30 to July 5.

Usually, camp volunteers come from the ranks of local fire and police departments. Because of the shortage of volunteers due to the 1996 Olympics in Atlanta, camp organizers came to Fort Benning to fill the gap. Soldiers from Kelley Hill, Martin Army Community Hospital, Main Post, and the 3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment, were among the volunteers.

Many participants in the camp are afflicted with MD, which in most cases is severely debilitating. The purpose of the camp is to give the participants an opportunity to experience new activities. These activities are designed to lift their spirits, instill self-confidence, to let them interact with their peers and just have fun.

Participants were able to try water-tubing, horseback riding, fishing and much more. These activities were designed to accommodate those who had unique physical requirements, such as wheelchairs. Swimming proved to be the most popular activity.

At the conclusion of camp, Jennifer Stein and Fred Martinez brought four kids to Fort Benning to visit the Infantry Museum. The kids had never been on a military installation before and they expressed their desire to visit Fort Benning again.

Camp ASCCA expressed their thanks to the volunteers from Fort Benning, however, the volunteers were just as appreciative, as the experience proved to be as rewarding for the volunteers as it was for the participants.

New president takes over BOSS

By Marc G. Turchin
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Later this year, Americans will head to the polls and vote for the country's next president. As president, this person will have the task of doing what's best for Americans.

A similar election was conducted on post recently and produced the new leader for the Better Opportunities for Single Soldiers Program.

It's up to Spc. Caryn L. Bumpstead, new BOSS president, to do what's best for Fort Benning's single soldiers.

"I'm the main motivating force behind everything that goes on in BOSS," Bumpstead said during an interview for Fort Benning's Command Information Channel's "Inside Fort Benning" talkshow.

She said Fort Benning's BOSS Program has a good foundation, but right now there's not too much activity going on. Past presidents came into office with a lot of activity, she said, but a lot of the attention was turned to writing Army Regulation 600-19 which covers the BOSS Program.

"Now that we (BOSS) have the framework, we can do stuff," she said.

"I want to get motivation behind the soldiers in all the units, at all levels," she said. "I want to try and get them involved in all the events we have going on."

BOSS is currently working on two events with more in the planning. It's cosponsoring the Heritage Festival Thursday through July 28 in Columbus and a BOSS Bash is scheduled for Aug. 23 at Uchee Creek.

Bumpstead is known for her enthusiasm from those who have worked with her in the past.

"She will make a fine president," said Sgt. Willie R. Briskey, who is a BOSS representative for 3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment.

"She has a lot of energy and leadership qualities," he said.

"I think it helped that she worked with the two former presidents. It enhances her because we learn from others," Briskey said.

Bumpstead was involved with the BOSS Program before becoming president. She was the BOSS representative for the Infantry Training Brigade in 1994 where she was responsible for telling single soldiers on Sand Hill about the good things BOSS does.

She said she took a year off from participating in BOSS so she could attend Airborne School and concentrate on going to the promotion board.

Bumpstead, who as a child traveled across the country six times by motor home, entered the Army to see the world.

She said she chose her military occupational specialty, which is unit supply specialist, because, "you can go anywhere in the Army with that MOS."

She came into the Army in March 1993 because of the job market in California.

"It was hard to get a job without experience," she said.

The 21 year-old was born in San Dimas, Calif. "You know, it's the city in the 'Bill and Ted' movies," she said and added that it's the city's only claim to fame.

She grew up with her mother and stepfather, Bob and Sue Hoffman. Because of their jobs and their

Georgia gets hit with insurance hoax

Veterans Service

An insurance hoax has cropped up in Georgia.

False articles and flyers say Congress has recently passed legislation entitling veterans to a dividend on the Soldier's Group Life Insurance they had while in the service.

According to the articles, "both current and former military personnel are entitled to this dividend regardless of whether or not they still carry the insurance."

The phony applications and flyers claim the dividends have been authorized by Congress. In fact, there is no such dividend for veterans, nor a rebate for active duty personnel.

These articles also falsely claim that veterans who served for at least two years would receive a $261 dividend and the pay schedule would increase with years of service.

Legitimate insurance dividends are automatically paid to approximately 47,000 Georgia veterans with active policies.

UCC hours to change

The Utility Coordination Center changed its administrative day, when the office is closed, from Thursday to Monday.

The reason for the change is to provide better service for the soldiers who use it. The number of calls going into the various utility companies on Monday has caused delays in soldiers obtaining service and being cleared through the UCC.

The new UCC operating hours are Tuesday through Friday 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. The UCC is located in Building 2633.

Controlled burning set

Controlled burning of woodland areas will take place Monday through Saturday. If weather permits, the following compartments will be affected: M-7, N-1, N-2, BB-3, and BB-5.

Burning will occur in pine stands within these compartments to enhance endangered species' habitat and training areas.

Personnel proposing to use these areas for recreational purposes must vacate these areas prior to 9:30 a.m. daily.

Training units using compartments adjacent to those listed above may experience drift smoke and are reminded to exercise caution while traveling in these areas due to the potential for reduced visibility.

Units using ranges and training areas are reminded to remove flammable debris, such as pinestraw, leaves, grass and trash, from around structures in accordance with U.S. Army Infantry Center Regulation 210-4, Paragraph 5-22, Organizational Maintenance.

willingness to travel, they never really stayed in one place for too long.

Her mom worked for a cajun fiddle player who traveled the country. Bumpstead would spend her high school summers traveling with her mom.

While her parents were traveling, Bumpstead spent a lot of time with her grandparents.

"It's not that I lived with them, but I spent a lot of time there."

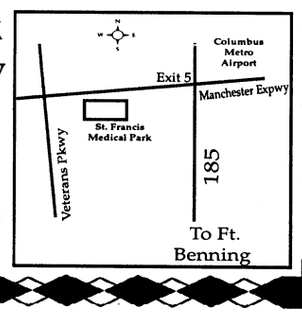
For the longest time, she's wanted to be a model. According to Bumpstead, she still does.

She said the draw of being a model is the highlight of being seen. It's not that she's a show off, she said, but she likes to be seen.

As BOSS president, she may get the chance to be seen. This is also something she wants for the single soldiers on post.

"I'd like to get the soldiers to interact (and) get them excited about knowing people," she said.

"BOSS gives (single soldiers) a chance to become active members of the community. It's a gateway open to them," Bumpstead said.



As the leader of Fort Benning's single soldier community, her decisions will have a direct impact on the soldiers she represents, — which may or may not make her more seen.

MILITARY POLICE

Working dogs take a bite out of crime

By Brian R. Voller
Bayonet staff writer

As he sits next to his handler, the young German shepherd waits patiently for the order to go forward. Finally, the command is given and the shepherd knows exactly which vehicle he needs to go to, but his handler makes him go through the motions of checking each and every vehicle thoroughly. After checking the first three vehicles, the shepherd finally gets to where he wants to be, he immediately sits down and signals his handler that he has found the illegal drugs hidden inside the vehicle's front grill.

The German shepherd's name is Bodie and he is part of the Military Police Working Dogs. Bodie specializes in searching for illegal narcotics, and he is just one of twelve dogs currently being utilized by the military police.

"Our dogs are trained at Lackland Air Force Base, Texas," said Sgt. 1st Class Tony Gayden, kennel master. "We are trained in a variety of missions, but our main mission here is to detect explosives, drugs and provide law enforcement for the Military Police Activity."

The dogs are trained to identify either drugs or explosives. Gayden said it's not a good idea to train dogs to identify both drugs and explosives because of the confusion it can cause if a dog appears to identify drugs, but he has really detected an explosive device.

"Our drug dogs are trained on the main drugs, such as marijuana, cocaine or heroine, plus several others that the 'high rollers' deal with that they might not expect us to be able to identify," Gayden said. "Our explosive dogs are trained to identify nine different odors.

"Also, the dogs are trained on law enforcement techniques, such as basic and advanced obedience. The dogs are taught controlled aggression where the dog is trained to bite and hold, and to cease or attack when given the command."

After the dogs are finished with school at Lackland, the dogs move to their installation where their training continues every day. Gayden said one of the challenges they have to overcome is getting the dogs used to receiving a new handler ever two years.

"We train everyday as part of the regular maintenance training," Gayden said. "There used to be time when the handler and the dog would PCS (permanent change of station) together, but now, because of finances, when the handler has to PCS, the dog stays here.

"That's the difficult part of the program, trying to keep a handler with a dog for a particular amount of time. The handler and the dog stay together for a certain amount of time, and then the dog looks up and he has a new handler to deal with. When this happens, training has to start all over again as the handler and the dog learn to work with each other."

The dogs are used nightly in support of regular military police activity. Gayden said their mission when they are out on a regular night's patrol is to assist in curtailing crime. He said a dog handler is known to handle a situation that normally two or three MPs handle.

In addition to the duties the dogs perform on Fort Benning with the military police, they are regularly tasked to assist other agencies on and offpost.

"We are not allowed to go off post and assist with civilian law enforcement," Gayden said. "But we are allowed to give them assistance with ordinance detection.

"We also work hand in hand with the Explosive Ordnance Disposal Company, and we support the Secret Service and the State Department," he said. "If the president is going to be moving around in a certain area, then our dogs can go (on a temporary duty assignment) and assist with explosives detection."

According to Gayden, the dogs are usually bought between the ages of 1 to 5 years old. There are specific qualifications the dogs have to meet to be considered for training in Texas. The dogs are used in the military system at their assigned position until 10 or 11 years old, when they are retired.

Exchange program swaps NCOs

By Judith O'Toole
School of the Americas

One of the best ways for people to learn about something is to see how others do the same thing and then exchange ideas with one another.

Fifteen soldiers from Fort Benning will take part in a noncommissioned officer exchange program with NCOs from the Ecuador Army this August and September.

The exchange program is sponsored by the School of the Americas; and the group will consist of members of SOA, 3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment, the Infantry Training Brigade, 3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division (Mechanized), the NCO Academy, the Ranger Training Brigade and 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment.

The purpose of the program is to permit U.S. and Ecuadorian NCOs to exchange technical and tactical military information through visits to each other's country while improving coo-peration and trust between the two allied forces, said SOA Command Sgt. Maj. Carlos E. Legoas.

The exch-ange will begin Aug. 18, when a group from Ecuador will come to Fort Benning.

Legoas said that the exchanges benefit everyone involved for a variety of reasons.

"When you're exposed to a different culture, you can compare them," he said, "and appreciate what they have and what we have."

Soldiers will also be able to see, first hand, the capabilities of the other's army. Legoas said that when each group goes home, maybe some of the ideas gained from the exchange will be implemented. He added that SOA soldiers will especially benefit from the training because they teach soldiers from Ecuador who attend SOA, and any additional training the instructors receive will only help the students of the school.

The U.S. NCOs will travel to Ecuador Sept. 8 and will spend three weeks with their counterparts there. During the visit, the group will tour NCO schools. These schools are similar to U.S. Army schools, such as the Basic and Advanced Noncommissioned Officers Courses, as well as a counterinsurgency and jungle schools, Legoas said.

They will visit the Infantry School, a special forces training center, perform an airborne exercise and scale up the side of a mountain.

But, Legoas said, the most useful part of the trip will be the ability to talk to NCOs from another country. Open discussions will be a large part of the exchange program.

New line charge assists 4th ID Engineer Brigade

By Michael J. Brock
Army News Service

FORT HOOD, Texas — The 4th Infantry Division Engineer Brigade is moving to a new kind of mine clearing tool called a Mine Clearing Line Charge, or MICLIC.

While the MICLIC is not a new concept to the Army, the way that it's carried is. The MICLIC was towed behind a vehicle and then launched through the minefield.

"The MICLIC itself is a rocket attached to a 100-meter line with C-4 explosives attached throughout the line," said 2nd Lt. Mark Biehl, executive officer for Company A, 299th Engineer Battalion, 4th Inf. Div. "After the line is down range, the charges are detonated and the after shock should explode any mine within eight meters on either side of the line."

The engineers got the chance to test out its new equipment recently at a qualification course.

"This is the first set of lanes that we've been through," Biehl said. "We've noticed some problems that we need to fix, that's why we're here."

The new MICLICs are proving to be an added bonus for the unit, according to 1st Lt. Elvis Gonzalez, Co A, 299th Eng. Bn., Operations Officer.

"Unlike the old days when a platoon would pull one MICLIC with them, we now can carry two on the M-60 chassis," Gonzalez said. "The standard threat minefield today is 120 meters. If you have a 100-meter line, you need two just to get through the field."

The added ability is a plus, but using them in a live-fire situation has a drawback, he said.

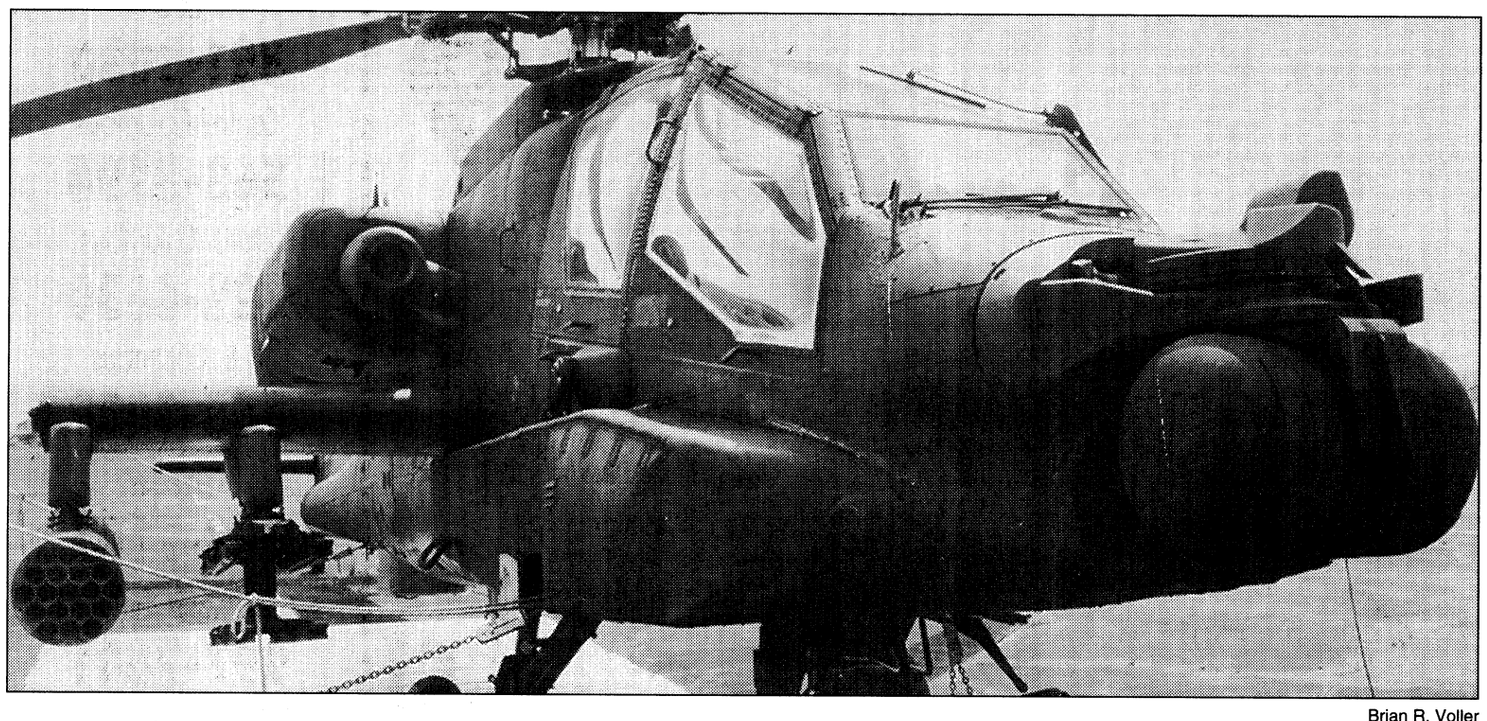
"The battalion only gets to fire three rockets a year, so we let three different teams fire," Gonzalez said.

Safety concerns and the cost to fire the mine-clearing rocket with the charges limits their use, he said.

"This is my first time using the system," said Sgt. Henry Garcia of Co A, 299th Eng. Bn. "It was interesting. Everybody was hyped and ready to go."

Being motivated seemed to help out during this qualification course, Gonzalez said. The best teams got the chance to fire the real rockets.

"This is really good training," Garcia said. "We learn hands on out here in the field rather than inside a classroom reading a manual."

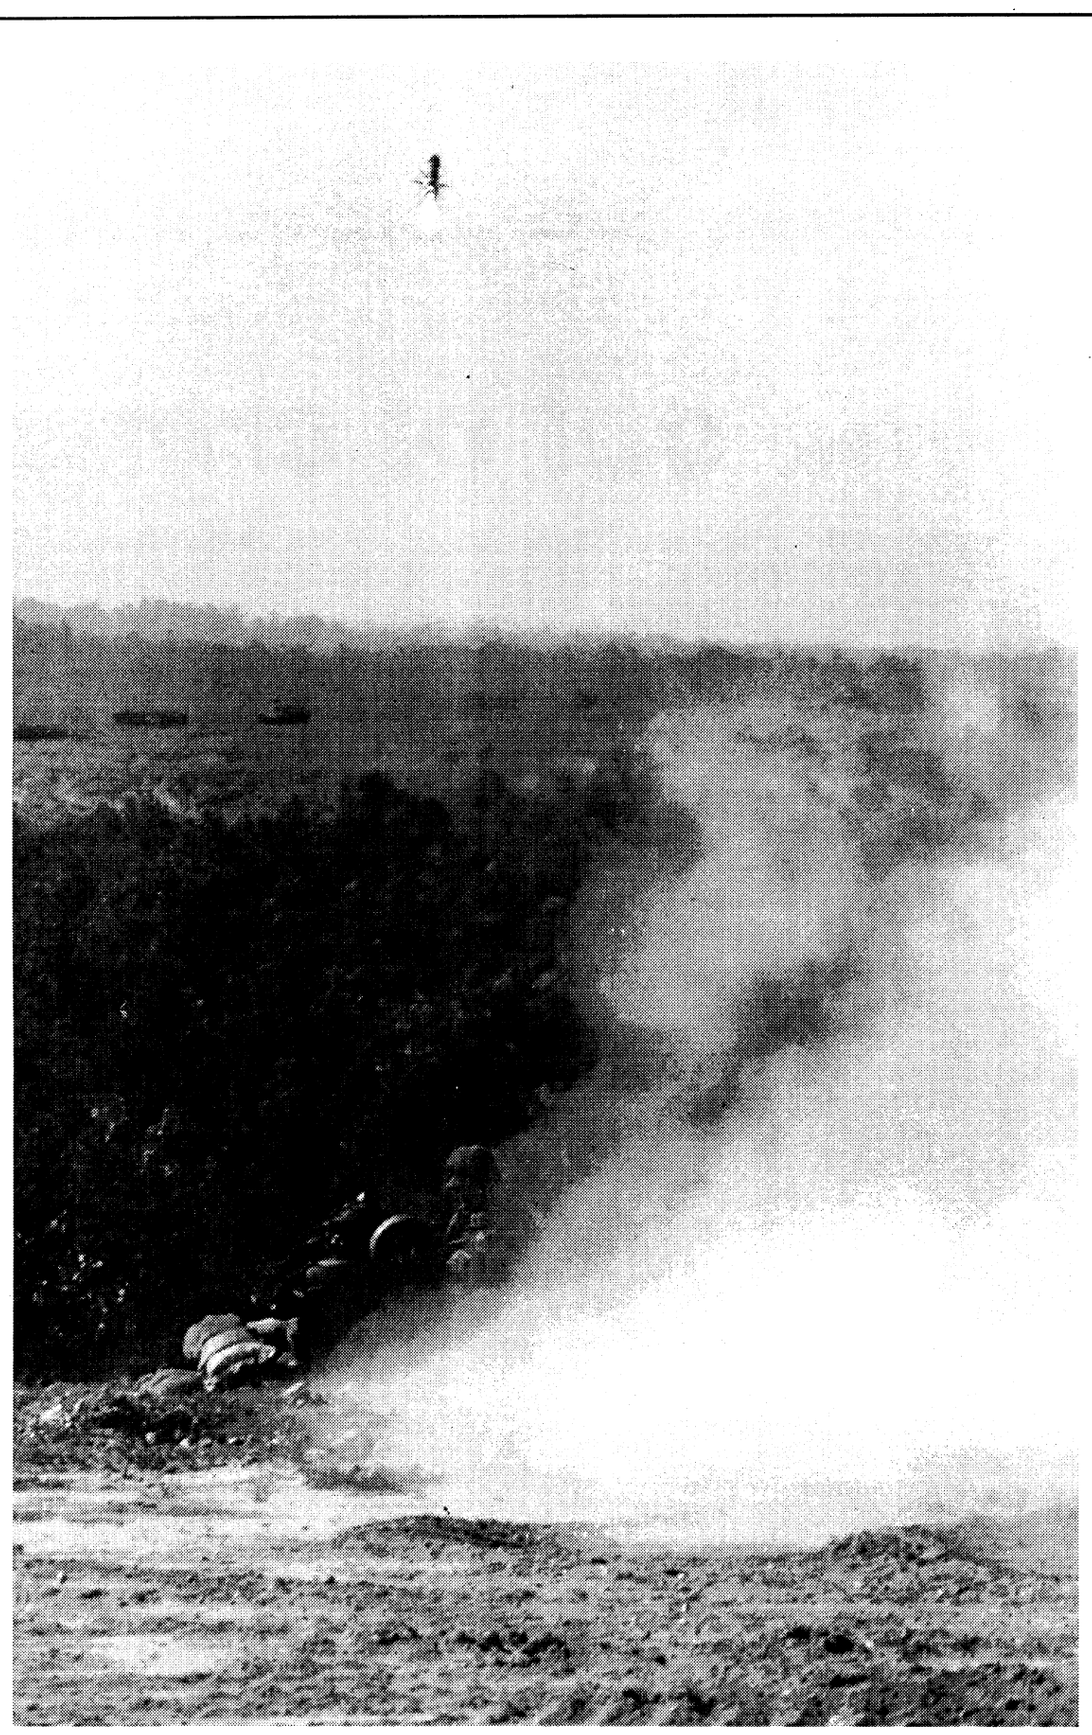


The troops have also been studying the AppliqueÈ System and are getting their vehicles up online with other units already thrust into the Experimental Force Exercise.

Biehl has been impressed with his soldiers ability to adapt and overcome.

"Our troops have been doing a really good job getting ready for the field," Biehl said. "All of my people have been spread out and are just now getting back together. The hardest part is finding time to train."

So far, the battalion has gotten good feedback about the equipment and training, Biehl said.



"The system has great intent," Gonzalez said. "It does what it was designed to do."

Navy names ship after Army hero

By Jerry Rogers
Army News Service

NEWPORT NEWS, Va. — The Army increased its ability to project its force anywhere in the world July 4 when the Navy dedicated a new cargo ship in honor of an Army hero.

Newport News' shipbuilding yard served as the christening point for the commissioning of the Navy's second sealift ship, the USNS Gordon, in honor of Army Master Sgt. Gary Gordon, a posthumous recipient of the Medal of Honor for service in Somalia in 1993.

Gordon, assigned to the Special Operations Command at Fort Bragg, N.C., won our nation's highest military award, along with fellow ranger Staff Sgt. Randall D. Shughart while deployed to Mogadishu, Somalia, in 1993. They died Oct. 3 while helping four soldiers under heavy fire aboard a crippled aircraft.

April 13, during a christening ceremony in San Diego, the USNS Shughart became the Navy's first in a class of large medium-speed, roll-on, roll-off ships. The LMSR ships will become the centerpiece of America's sealift power projection into the next century. They'll replace smaller roll-on, roll-off ships currently being used to preposition the equipment for an Army brigade-sized task force.

Ranging from 900 to 955 feet in length, their roll-on, roll-off design makes them ideal for transporting tanks, trucks and other wheeled and tracked military vehicles. Each ship will provide between 310,000 and 390,000 square feet of cargo-carrying space and sustain speeds up to 24 knots.

Like Shughart's widow, Stephanie, who said she was truly honored to sponsor the christening of her husband's ship, Carmen Gordon proudly took center stage in front of the USNS Gordon, poised to christen it with the traditional bottle of champagne. Nearby, a large contingent of soldiers from the Special Operations Command were clearly noticeable in their class A uniforms. Standing erect as oak trees, the rangers were sharp as a tack; their uniforms taking on the appearance of finely decorated Christmas trees.

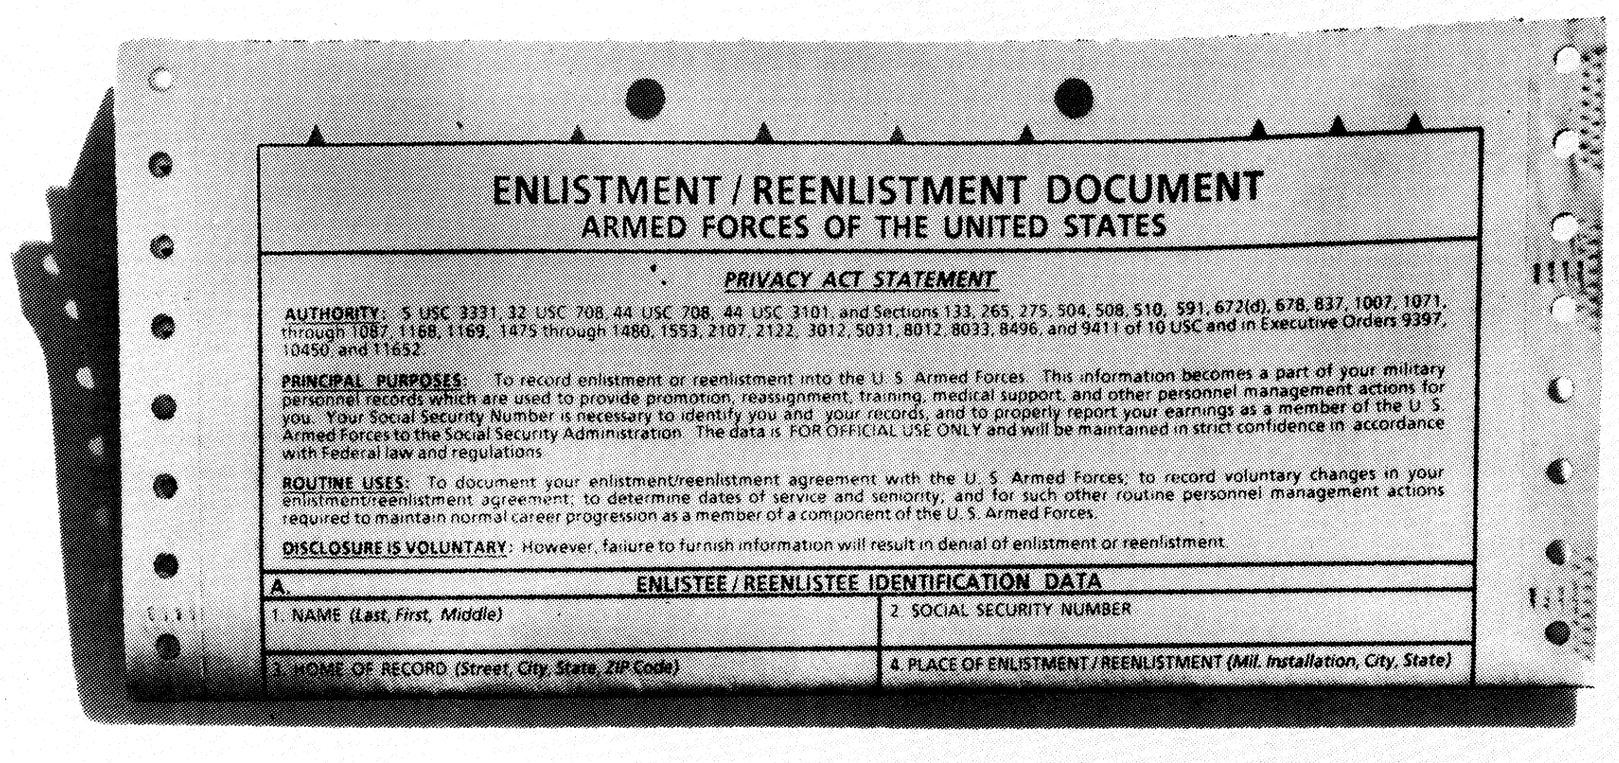
"We're all here to pay homage to a real American hero, against the backdrop of our nation's birthday," said Gen. Dennis J. Reimer, Army chief of staff. "Master Sgt. Gary Gordon did not die in vain. He and fellow ranger Staff Sgt. Randall D. Shughart were performing a vital mission in Mogadishu, where thousands of people were dying of starvation. Their actions Oct. 3, were in keeping with their ranger creed ... 'Never shall I fail my comrades ... Never will I leave a fallen comrade to fall into the hands of the enemy, and under no circumstances will I ever embarrass my country.' "

Reimer also spoke of the importance of the USNS Gordon. "The ships, a total of 19 planned by the year 2001, will join the Army's prepositioned fleet, where they'll become a key element in the United States' ability to rapidly deliver urgently needed supplies and equipment to a theater of operations during a crisis," he said.

Principal speaker for the ceremony, U.S. Rep., D-Pa., John P. Murtha, echoed Reimer's remarks, attesting to the heroism and valor of the two soldiers. He said the commissioning of the USNS Shughart and Gordon marks a new era in our military's force projection capability, and satisfies America's need for increased sealift readiness and capacity well into the next century.

Prior to the introduction of the USNS Gordon's sponsor, Carmen Gordon, many of the people were moved to tears by Brig. Gen. William Boykin's poignant retelling of the heroic actions of Gordon and Shughart. Boykin was the former commander, Army Combat Operations, Somalia, in October 1993.

"Gary went back to save his fellow soldiers, not to die there," said Carmen. "Gary was 100 percent ranger. He lived the Ranger's Creed every day. He knew that he had a chance. He and Shughart wouldn't have ever gone out there trying to be heroes. Their mission was a success."



Carmen Gordon said of the USNS Gordon, "Wherever her mission takes her, Gary's spirit will always see her safely home."

ENTERTAINING TROOPS

Soldiers perform for community

Two shows are scheduled at Sand Hill

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Continuing the tradition of "entertainment for the soldier, by the soldier," established by Irving Berlin during World War I and continued through World War II, a special unit of enlisted soldiers will soon be firing off songs, bringing down the house, and taking Fort Benning audiences by storm.

They are the 25 performers and seven technicians who make up the cast and crew of the 1996 U.S. Army Soldier Show.

During their two-day stop at Fort Benning, the soldier show's cast will perform twice. The Aug. 1 performance will be open to Infantry Training Brigade personnel only while the Aug. 2 performance is open to all Fort Benning personnel and family members.

Both shows will be at 7 p.m. in Theater III at Sand Hill. Admission is free to everyone. Individuals seeking more information about the performances can call 545-3909.

The 90-minute high energy, high tech musical spectacular features a variety of hits from rock to country, show tunes and rhythm and blues. There is even a special salute to veterans with standards from the World War II era.

This year's show will also capture the spirit of the Olympic Games.

"In honor of the international audience, this year's show is themed around the appreciation of the world's many colorful cultures," Campbell-Smith said.

1996 U.S. Army Soldier Show

What: Soldier show, featuring 25 enlisted soldiers showcasing their talents

When: Aug. 1 and 2

Where: Theater III, Sand Hill

Admission: Free

Information: Call 545-3909

Just as the show will celebrate the world's diversity, so does the cast reflect the background and talent variety of the U.S. Army soldier. Many of the soldiers, whose military jobs range from combat medics, supply technicians, mechanics, to flight operations, missile crew member, infantry and military police, are entertainers in their off-duty hours. They bring talent from nine major Army commands located in the United States and around the world: Korea, Europe, Alaska.

In addition to their on-stage jobs performing, cast members must double as stage hands. That means with each tour stop, they have to load, pack, handle and set up 32,000 pounds of stage trusses, 46 miles of cable, 118 stage lights in addition to computers and control panels.

Performers are also responsible for their own wardrobe and makeup as they travel by bus and air more than 25,000 miles through October to visit 44 Army installations across the United States and Europe.

Talent: Fort Benning student dreams of becoming famous, has determination to make herself a singing star

By Amy Durham
Special to The Bayonet©

Many children were humming a happy tune when school let out in June but most were celebrating the beginning of summer's rituals — sleeping in, later curfews, swimming pools and long-anticipated vacations.

Eleven-year-old T'Nesha Pruitt was singing a tune or two as well, but for other reasons.

With the hopes real dreams are made of and the determination to see hers through, Pruitt, who is a rising seventh grader at Don C. Faith Middle School, is pursuing a professional career as a singer.

"Singing is important to me," Pruitt said. "On stage I have fun; I don't get bored."

Spending her summer days practicing and preparing, Pruitt has been singing along with the radio since she was 2, according to her mother, Carlas.

"I knew singing would be important to my daughter," Pruitt's mom said, "and that she would take it seriously."

The road to fulfilling her dream started when Pruitt was living in Germany with her family. At five, she sang "The Greatest Love of All" at her kindergarten graduation. Six years later, at her father's unit barbecue, Pruitt not only gave one of the many performances she has given at Fort Benning, but so impressed Sgt. Lavonnie Haynes, Noncommissioned Officer Academy, that Haynes began managing her.

"I liked what I heard," Haynes said. "T'Nesha's voice is unique. She is not trying to imitate other sounds out there."

Pruitt

Pruitt said she appreciates various sounds, including rhythm and blues and gospel, and names Toni Braxton and Anita Baker as two of her favorite artists. But Pruitt is not one to sing in someone else's shadow. She recently wrote "My Mind's Made Up," which she says is about "not being interested in pursuing relationships because there are other things to pursue."

In this case, art reflects life as Pruitt maintains focus of her goals. An A+ honor roll student and student council member her first year at Fort Benning, Pruitt did not let the fact she loves singing get in the way of school.

"She has lots of friends," her mother said, "and has stayed after school to tutor peers."

Although she continues to work on attaining her goal, Pruitt, who plans to finish high school and complete college, knows finishing her education is necessary.

"If I make the money, I don't want to let it go to waste," she said. "I want to help others make it."

To help her "make it," Haynes leads Pruitt through practice several hours per week, has found a voice instructor and is working in Atlanta to produce a "demo" tape which will showcase the young artist's mature sound.

In the year that Pruitt has been singing for Fort Benning audiences, she has averaged three appearances per month. Backed up by two dancers, Takilah Pruitt, 14, and Maya Wooten, 11, as well as an alternate, Dannyelle Canady, 11, some of her 1996 highlights include singing the National Anthem at this year's Intramural Basketball Championship, as well as performing at the 2nd Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment, Women's Day Celebration and Directorate of Information Management's Black History Month celebration.

Haynes said Pruitt's performances should increase during the summer months, especially since she is expanding her commitments to include Atlanta. But neither manager nor performer seem worried. Pruitt suffers no stage fright and Haynes is equally confident of the young singer's ability to do the job.

"Give her a 'mike' and she's up there," Haynes said.

However, it is Pruitt's mother who seems to suffer from performance jitters.

"They have to calm me down when T'Nesha performs," Carlas Pruitt said. "They (audience members) say, 'That's her mother over there.'"

But the excitement will not go away. Carlas Pruitt said she and T'Nesha's father, Staff Sgt. Warren Pruitt Sr., NCOA, are proud of their daughter. Haynes agreed.

Of Pruitt's talent and determination, Haynes said, "I have no doubt she'll make it."

Army Advocacy Program plans family building workshop for

Kelley Hill couples

Family Advocacy Program

Today, the family unit is under stress. Political, social, business and communication influences increasingly dominate individual time, reduce the effectiveness of parental guidance and challenge the very foundations upon which families are built.

Adults in all walks of life seem to be floundering in a sea of conflicting philosophies about the roles of father, mother, husband, wife and family. Children are facing increasing insecurity about their place in life, and the principles upon which they should build as they grow to adulthood.

Rebecca Welch, Family Advocacy, has a prevention program called "Family Life Education" which focuses on enrichment programs that provide knowledge, social relationship skills and support services for military families.

Welch said that she works with families on a daily basis, and that she knows first hand the pressures and stresses that many military families are faced with.

Couples workshop

For this very reason, Welch has coordinated with Col. Schook, commander, 3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division (Mechanized), to provide a workshop for families at Kelley Hill that will be fun, practical and simple. Couples will have their own workbooks and the materials will be easy to learn, remember and to use in helping couples to build strong families. Overall, the workshop will provide tools for family building where it counts the most, and that is in the home.

According to Welch, The American Family Society will conduct two mini workshops on Building Strong Families for couples at Kelley Hill July 25.

The American Family Society is a nonprofit organization whose mission is to help people help each other build families that are happy, successful and enduring. Since 1975, The American Family Society has focused on what intact, happy families do to successfully cope with challenges that have devastated so many other families.

The AFS has honored many exemplary families in the Great American Family Awards Program in communities all over America, in military installations worldwide and in six White House ceremonies.

Welch said that she is beginning the workshops at Kelley Hill because of frequent deployments, however, "If we find that the workshops are beneficial to families and this is what the families want, we will have more of them available to the units here at Fort Benning," she said.

Military couples who would like to participate in an upcoming workshop by the American Family Society Program Manager may call 545-3344 for more information.

ask the judge

By Anece Baxter White
Office of the Staff Judge Advocate

Q. My wife and I were divorced one year ago. Our divorce decree did not mention anything about financial support for my wife or my child. I received a letter recently from my ex-wife's lawyer stating that I owe my ex-wife my monthly basic allowance for quarters. Is the lawyer right?

A. Not exactly. Army Regulation 608-99 addresses the issue of support owed by a soldier to his family members. When a soldier is separated from his family members, he is still obligated to support them. The regulation designates that a soldier is either obligated to provide his basic allowance for quarters at the with dependents rate or the difference between BAQ with dependents and BAQ without dependents rate, depending upon the circumstances. Failure to do so may result in punishment under the Uniform Code of Military Justice, as well as adverse administrative action and other authorized adverse actions.

A divorce decree is considered a court order which can not be modified without filing for modification with the issuing court. When a court order is issued not containing a financial support agreement, a soldier's obligations are different. If the court order is final and all inclusive of the agreements between the parties, then the soldier may be released by his commander from the regulatory requirement to provide financial support. If, however, the court order merely doesn't include a specific amount of support but does state that the soldier is to provide support, then the regulation applies.

Q. I had my separation agreement drafted by a Fort Benning Judge Advocate General officer. My wife and I have decided not to reconcile and now want to get divorced. I really like my JAG attorney. Can she represent me in my divorce?

A. No. Attorneys of the Staff Judge Advocate Office do not represent parties in divorce actions. Although some of the Legal Assistance attorneys are licensed to practice law in Georgia and do provide in court representation in such matters as step-parent adoptions and probate, representation is not available in divorce actions.

Attorneys at the Legal Assistance Office will assist and furnish legal advice and assist you in resolving most of your legal matters. Though JAG may assist you in preparing for pro se appearance in court, attorneys are not allowed to assist you or serve as your legal counsel in divorce actions in civil courts. Pro se assistance is the help rendered to nonlawyer clients to enable those clients to file legal documents, papers or pleadings in civil proceedings, such as small claims court or uncontested divorces.

The legal Assistance Office is capable of assisting clients with most legal matters and at no cost to the soldier. When it is in the best interest of the client, the JAG office can refer clients to civilian attorneys. Sometimes, there are Reserve JAG attorneys in the area who may be willing to take a soldier's case at a reduced fee or no fee at all.

If you have legal questions, contact the Legal Assistance Office at 545-3281 or 545-3282 for an appointment to speak with an attorney.

Prayer provides strength, help

By Vance P. Theodore
School of the Americas

Prayer is an important factor in our lives. The other day I had the privilege of attending a breakfast about prayer. One of the soldiers sitting by me commented that this was the first prayer breakfast he had ever been to where prayer was discussed. I laughed and we talked about how much we enjoyed listening to the speaker. We were impressed with his counsel and his sincerity about the subject of prayer and how prayer should be a constant companion to all good soldiers. It made me feel good to know that our leaders care enough about us to pray for us. As we left the table to return to our units, this same soldier remarked, "That's the way to start the day." Good counsel.

For many people, it is difficult to pray and I guess I am like many. When we want something or when the going gets tough, then we try to get in touch with the Lord.

In Matthew 6: 5-8, the saviour gives us counsel on how to pray: "But thou, when thou prayest enter into thy closet, and when thou hast shut thy door, pray to thy Father which is in secret; and thy Father which seeth in secret shall reward thee openly." (Matthew 6: 6)

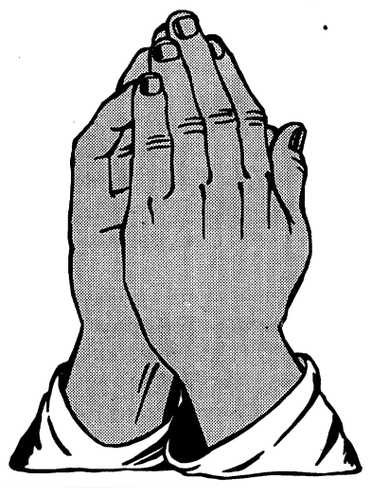
"But when ye pray, use not vain repetitions, as the heathen do: for they think that they shall be heard for their much speaking." (Matthew 6: 7)

"Be not ye therefore like unto them: for your Father knoweth what things ye have need of, before ye ask him." (Matthew 6: 8)

Sometimes prayer can become routine like when you have five hungry children, and you are waiting for the last one to come to the table; or when it's the end of the day, and you gather the family for prayer. Sometimes it's like checking the block. Okay, are we all here, say the prayer. The other day, I was kidding with the kids, and told my youngest son to make it short. That was a mistake: the food got cold. Watch and pray that you enter not into temptation: the spirit indeed is willing, but the flesh is weak.

A wise man once said, pray every day. Observe that great commandment given of the master, always to remember the Lord, to pray in the morning, and in the evening, and always to thank him for the blessings that you receive day by day.

What shall we do if we have been men of prayers? Simply, begin to pray. There is great power in prayer.



Many of our great leaders have been men of prayer: Washington at Valley Forge and Lincoln at Gettysburg.

The week after the battle of Gettysburg, General Sickles, who had been in the battle, asked President Abraham Lincoln if he had not been anxious during the Gettysburg campaign.

President Lincoln replied, "I had no fear."

"How could that be?" asked the general.

"In the pinch of your campaigning up there," replied Lincoln, "when everybody seemed

reflections

panic-stricken and nobody could tell what was going to happen, I went into my room one day and I locked the door, and got down on my knees before Almighty God, and prayed to Him mightily for a victory at Gettysburg.

"I told God, if we were to win the battle, He must do it, for I had done all I could. I told him that this was His, and our cause was His cause, but that we could not stand another Fredericksburg or Chancellorville.

"And then and there I made a solemn vow to Almighty God that if He would stand by our boys at Gettysburg, I would stand by Him, and He did, and I will.

"And after that — I don't know how it was, and I can't explain it — a sweet comfort crept into my soul that things would go all right at Gettysburg, and that is why I had no fears about you." — Abraham Lincoln, Prayer Before Battle of Gettysburg.

What we can learn from prayer is that we are not alone. Prayer can be a great source of strength in our lives, and as we humble ourselves in prayer before almighty God, He will help us.

God able to build healthy marriages

reflections

Marriage is not an institution of man, but of God. Marriage existed before any other institution. Therefore, marriage is very important in every society.

When God creates a marriage, he intends that a couple should love and commit to each other for life.

The two become one flesh in the intimacy and commitment of sexual union that is reserved for marriage. An affair looks romantic; it is accepted as a part of life. Most people are influenced by television, newspapers, or their neighbors. Marriage is often portrayed as unhappy in movies and books. It is sad that so many marriages end in divorce because of infidelity and many other problems couples are unable to resolve.

In our society, some people view marriage like buying clothes or going to a restaurant where they can pick and choose. Many couples marry only for the sake of emotional love, and when they don't feel loving toward their spouses anymore, they want a divorce. When problems and conflicts arise in their relationship, they seek an easy way out. There is no commitment whatsoever. It is heart breaking to see any couple's marriage in the process of divorce.

No matter how long a couple has been married, problems and conflicts will arise. If a couple is not willing to resolve these problems and conflicts over the long term, their marriage will be in danger. They may live in the same house, eat the same food, sleep in the same bed, drink from the same cup, but they treat each other like strangers. They lose interest in doing common things together and in being with each other.

A good marriage is not based upon how much money a couple has in a bank account, or how big their house is, but it is based upon how much commitment a couple has in their marriage. A good marriage needs not only love when everything goes smoothly, but it also needs commitment to endure when conflicts arise. We are all learners. From birth until death, we never stop learning, especially in our marriage. No matter how long a couple has been married, they still learn to love, to communicate, to commit, or to forgive each other in everyday life.

Most married couples do not realize that a good marriage is not an overnight process, but a life-long process. Some enter into a marriage relationship expecting a good marriage from the honeymoon until death, but they are not willing to pay the high cost of commitment to stay together when conflicts arise. Commitment is not a choice, but a will that both have expressed before God and men to stay together "for better, for worse, for richer, for poorer, in sickness and in health, to love and to cherish, until death us do part."

In order to have a good marriage, a couple should follow the blue print of God. God is able to fix any broken marriage, for he is the greatest healer. When the husband and wife follow the blue print of God, that he provides in the holy scriptures, they will find real happiness, joy, love and satisfaction which the world cannot offer to them. Don't let God's best for you be wasted on the illusion of greener pastures somewhere else.

In spite of the world's views about marriage today, any couple can have a happy and good marriage if they just commit their marriage to God. He is able to help the couple save it and to resolve any difficult problems in their marriage. There is nothing too hard for God to restore, even in your marriage.

Mother nature played her hand in the night pistol match scheduled for July 13 at English Range.

Under overcast skies, Jim Graham completed his routine safety briefing to more than 60 competitors when the rain began to fall.

Keeping an ear open to range control, Graham waited for a break in the weather to resume the match.

After an hour, Graham called the match — postponing it until the next day.

The match picked up on July 14 with rain, once again, threatening.

Shooters competed in competitor class, standard (civilian) class, military (active duty) class, female and new shooter class.

The course of fire for the match included three stages with shooters firing a total of 40 rounds at steel targets.

The third firing position was a shoot and move position including two sets of six poppers.

Awards were given to first through third place winners in four of the major classes.

The next tactical pistol match will be August 2 at English Range.

For more information, call Jim Graham at 689-3371.

Sporting double standards

Athletes' money, power are keys to beating the system

By John W. Peeler
Special to The Bayonet©

John W. Peeler believes some athletes use their money and status to take advantage of the system.

commentary

Monday, I listened and watched an interview of former figure skater Tanya Harding on the Geraldo show.

I know Geraldo normally has shows on controversial issues no one really cares about, but this show was different because it was Harding's first interview in front of a live audience since the debacle with Nancy Kerrigan.

Harding, as any other athlete would be advised to do, was on the show to solicit support for a possible comeback, improve her image and to present her side of the story.

Of course, Harding said that she was really a nice person and her publicist David Hans Schmidt emphasized the fact that Harding had paid her debt to society for her offense — three years supervised probation, a $100,000 fine, $50,000 towards a fund for the Olympics, $10,000 to the prosecutor's office for reimbursement of her prosecution, community service and most devastating, being banned from amateur skating for the rest of her life.

I really had not felt any compassion for Harding until after I had watched the show.

I began to think about how politics and money really can have a one-sided impact on the sporting arena.

After all, lets look at some of the more recent events in sports and compare them.

Boxer Mike Tyson, a convicted rapist (whether you believe it or not, he was convicted by our system), paid his debt to society. He is now out of prison and making millions. He wasn't banned from boxing.

Football's Warren Moon, the last time I checked, he was still the quarterback for the Minnesota Vikings after his domestic violence charges.

Atlanta Braves manager Bobby Cox is still the coach and making money at his position.

Baseball's Darryl Strawberry is still playing baseball after being convicted of tax fraud.

Football rookie Lawrence Phillips will probably be able to play even after his domestic violence problem with his former girl friend and even with his recent driving under the influence citation.

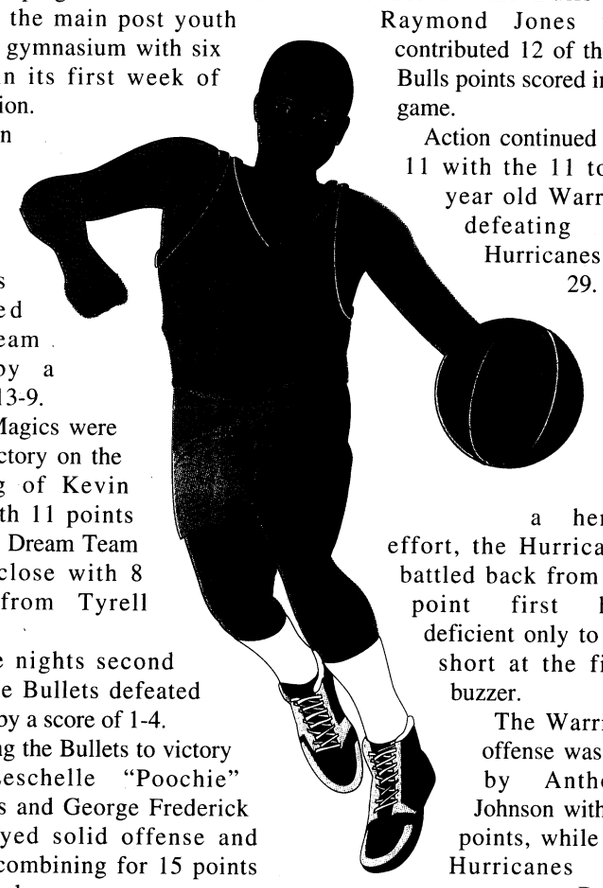
The latest athlete on the chopping block is Dallas Cowboys' wide receiver Michael Irving. who recently pleaded no contest (meaning he did not want to take his chances in court) to drug charges. After he has paid his debt to society, he could miss up to four games this season. That is if the National Football League decides to take action. Four games — big deal. Whatever the future holds for Irving, he has made his money.

So why was Tanya Harding banned from amateur skating for life by the United States Figure Skating Association?

One could only guess they wanted to make an example out of her. She was found guilty of impeding a criminal investigation; not rape, domestic abuse, tax fraud or DUI.

There appears to be a double standard in sports stemming from an athletes status as a superstar, politics and how much money it will cost the sport for a superstar not to be able to compete.

The bottom line today in sports is money, who has the most and who can manipulate the system the best.



Harding has my sympathy in her quest to make a comeback and if she doesn't get the reinstatement she seeks, maybe she should talk to Tyson, Moon, Cox, Strawberry and Irving.

Maybe they can give her some advice on how they beat the system.

The second game of the night had the Bulls pitted against Team 2 with the Bulls rallying from an 8 point deficient to take a 14-12 win. The leader for the Bulls was Raymond Jones who contributed 12 of the 14 Bulls points scored in the game.

Action continued July 11 with the 11 to 12 year old Warriors defeating the Hurricanes 30-29.

In a heroic effort, the Hurricanes battled back from a 7 point first half deficient only to fall short at the final buzzer.

The Warriors offense was led by Anthony Johnson with 17 points, while the Hurricanes top scorer was Brian Johnson with 11 points.

The second game of the evening matched the 13-15 year old Panthers against the Warriors with the Warriors slipping past the Panthers 26-25.

In a tough fought defensive contest, Ramos Ramsen led the Warriors scoring 13 points and pulling down 9 rebounds while the Panthers leading scorer was James Chatman with 10 points.

Soldiers get free tickets to Stixx games

USAIC Public Affairs Office

RedStixx baseball games are free to soldiers and accompanying family members for the remainder of the season.

Baseball for Soldiers and Military Families Program was officially kicked off when Steve Butler, former president of the Chattahoochee Valley-Fort Benning Chapter of the Association of the United States Army signed an agreement with RedStixx owner, Charlie Morrow.

The units are encouraged to "make a night of it at Columbus State College's Cougar Field," Morrow said.

The first two unit nights were sponsored by 1st Battalion (Airborne), 507th Infantry Regiment, 11th Inf. Regt.

"We feel the program is going well," said Matt Musgrove, RedStixx public relations director. "We've had a couple of nights where we've had 700 soldiers in attendance, which adds to the positive atmosphere. Our season is winding down and the soldiers' attendance is helping us end on a positive note. This program is good for the soldiers and good for us."

The current schedule is tonight, 30th Adjutant General Battalion; July 25, School of the Americas; August 22, 36th Engineer Brigade; August 27, 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment; August 28, 3rd Battalion, 11th infantry Regiment.

The 3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division (Mechanized), is also scheduled to host a baseball night, but a date has not been selected.

Units interested in hosting a night at Cougar Field should contact Sgt. 1st Class Art Murphy at 689-3272.

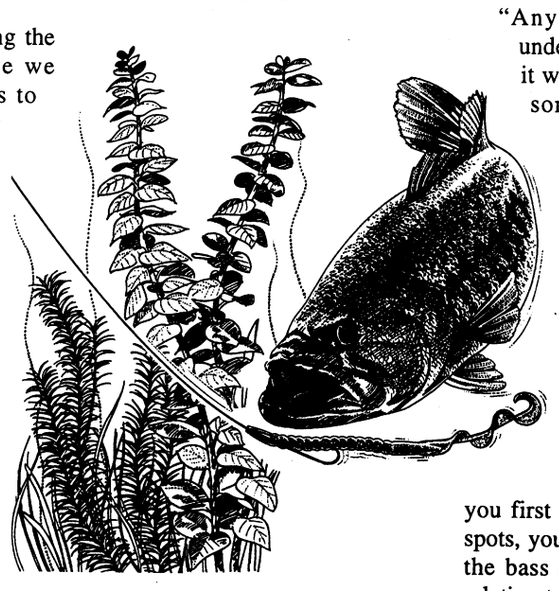
Underwater ridges among best places to find bass

By Earl Bentz and Steve Price
Outboard Marine Corporation

The biggest problem bass fishermen have this time of year is that they keep casting where bass aren't.

That's the opinion of former world champion bass fisherman Ken Cook who says underwater ridges and humps are among the best places to find bass now.



"We all like to keep fishing the shallow shorelines because we usually have specific targets to cast to," Cook said, "but after the spawning season, the majority of bass actually leave the shallow water for deeper underwater structure. The fishing becomes more difficult because we lose those specific visual targets, and after an hour or so of blind casting to deeper water, we tend to move back shallow, even though the fish probably aren't there."

Once he has determined bass have left the shallow water, Cook begins looking for underwater points, humps and ridges that bass may have moved to.

"The easiest to find are main lake points because you can see them coming out into the water from the shoreline, but because they're so easy to find, most points get fished pretty hard so I look for something different," he said.

"I look for places where tributary creeks intersect main lake channels, because this normally produces two different depths of deeper water, underwater points on either side of creek, and an underwater ridge or hump along the side of the river."

Cook said he begins his search by studying the best topographical lake map he can find. Specifically, he looks for the different depth changes the creek and river provide, plus its nearness to shallow water.

"When I find an area on the map that looks promising, I get on the water and start following the main river channel with my depthfinder," Cook said. "I follow it until I find the specific intersection with the river, and after that it's pretty easy to locate the underwater points on either side of the creek."

Cook also likes to fish along the edge of the main river channel itself, for this is often built up like a ridge of higher ground; and it frequently has trees, stumps, or other cover on it.

"Any time you can find underwater structure like this, it will be better if it does have some type of cover on it," said the Oklahoma pro. "Bass will stay around cover, even in deeper water.

"The best way to find cover is with either a deep running crankbait or a Carolina rig lizard," Cook said, "because both can be fished quickly to search a lot of water.

"In the beginning when you first start fishing one of these spots, you really don't know where the bass are or how they may be relating to the structure and cover," he said. "These two lures can be worked on or close to the bottom so they'll bump into the cover, and at the same time they may also draw strikes from nearby bass.

"Once you locate either the cover or the fish, you can slow down and work the area more carefully with other lures."

Trolling motors important to anglers' fishing success

By Earl Bentz and Steve Price
Outboard Marine Corporation

It took a television show to make champion bass fisherman Larry Nixon change from a hand-control to a foot-control trolling motor, but now, two years later, he said the switch was one of the best fishing decisions he's ever made.

"When I began filming my own television show, I couldn't keep eye contact with the camera because I kept having to reach down and turn my trolling motor," the angler said, "so reluctantly, I changed to a model with a foot pedal.

"Now I love it, and wonder how I fished so long without one."

Nixon, a veteran of two decades of professional tournament fishing and winner of more than $1 million in prize money, said improper trolling motor usage with either type of motor is one of the biggest mistakes he sees young anglers make today.

"The trolling motor is really one of the most important pieces of equipment on any fishing boat," he said, "but for it to be truly effective, it has to be used properly, because a noisy trolling motor can scare fish just as fast as an outboard does."

The pro also keeps his motor on the slowest speed possible when he's trying to maintain position.

"The higher the speed you have your trolling motor on, the stronger the noise and vibrations it sends out," said Nixon. "Remember, you're in shallow water where that noise will be amplified even more; I have seen many times in competition where a noisy trolling otor spooked bass from out in front of the boat.

"I think too many fisherman rush into an area and race down the shoreline without thinking carefully about how they're fishing it."

Nixon uses a 1- to 24-volt pulse-speed trolling motor that gradually accelerates rather than starts immediately in top speed.

"That particular feature really saves a lot of wear and tear on the bracket holding the trolling motor," he said. "It doesn't throw you out of the boat when you start. I think all motors will be built that way in the future."

75th names top rangers

By Brian R. Voller
Bayonet staff writer

The top noncommissioned officer and soldier of the 75th Ranger Regiment were chosen Tuesday at the regimental headquarters.

Staff Sgt. Seth T. Lucente, 2nd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regt., and Spc. Rodney H. Hastings, 1st Bn., 75th Ranger Regt., were the top soldier and NCO for the entire ranger regiment.

Hastings said the benefits from winning the soldier of the year competition is the personal satisfaction and the additional help it will give him in his military career.

"I didn't even find out my score because I was in complete shock," Hastings said. "It was a definite feeling of knowing that you are on the top of everyone. It's hard to believe that you have been distinguished from among 5,000 soldiers scattered around the country."

Hastings said he spent a lot of time preparing for the competition.

"I studied a lot of manuals and I studied a lot of Army regulations," Hastings said. "I also made sure that I was physically prepared by doing extreme physical training. To be competitive, you have to achieve a 300 at the minimum or exceed that. You have to achieve the maximum score or go beyond to be considered the best."

Lucente said the competition was tough because of the elite soldiers and NCOs who make up the ranger battalions in the regiment.

"In ranger battalions, and in the entire ranger regiment, you get the most elite or type A personalities," Lucente said. "You find a lot of people who are willing to excel, so they are willing to volunteer. Your whole unit is overachievers and the competition is extreme. Everyone is a winner, it's just a few of us are separated by the small points, which lead us to be distinguished."

Lucente said home units had to nominate soldiers to compete for the competition.

"First, all the platoons within your company submit the names of the most qualified NCO and the most qualified soldier for the competition," Lucente said. "There are several prerequisites such as physical fitness, land navigation, competence, leadership and military education. They want to be sure that you're enhancing your career, and that you're going further than just doing your normal duty assignments."

Then the soldiers compete in their company boards where they compete for the soldier of the quarter at the company level, Lucente said.

After the company level competition, the soldiers move on to the battalion NCO and the soldier of the year boards. Lucente said those boards usually encompass physical fitness tasks, land navigation, shooting and more of the hands on type of testing. Once the soldiers win their battalion soldier of the year competition, they are sent to Fort Benning where they compete against the rest of the ranger regiment.

For winning the competition, both Hastings and Lucente received a three-day, two-night stay at a Florida resort of their choice, Army Commendation Medals, plaques, watches, hunting knives and several other gifts. They also qualify to compete for top honors in the Special Operations Command board Aug. 22 at Fort Bragg, N.C.

Singing enlisted troops come to post with musical Soldier Show

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Continuing the tradition of "entertainment for the soldier, by the soldier," established by Irving Berlin during World War I, a special unit of enlisted soldiers will soon be firing off songs, bringing down the house, and taking Fort Benning audiences by storm.

They are the 25 performers and seven technicians who make up the cast and crew of the 1996 U.S. Army Soldier Show.

During their two-day stop at Fort Benning, the soldier show's cast will perform twice. The Aug. 1 performance will be open to Infantry Training Brigade personnel only while the Aug. 2 performance is open to all Fort Benning personnel and family members.

Both shows will be at 7 p.m. in Theater III at Sand Hill. Admission is free to everyone. Individuals seeking more information about the performances can call 545-3909.

The 90-minute high energy, high tech musical spectacular features a variety of hits from rock to country, show tunes and rhythm and blues. There is even a special salute to veterans with standards from the World War II era.

"In honor of the international audience, this year's show is themed around the appreciation of the world's many colorful cultures," said Ron Campbell-Smith, artistic director.

Just as the show will celebrate the world's diversity, so does the cast reflect the background and talent variety of the U.S. Army soldier. The performers bring talent from nine major Army commands located in the United States and around the world: Korea, Europe, Alaska.

In addition to their on-stage jobs performing, cast members must double as stage hands. That means with each tour stop, they have to load, pack, handle and set up 32,000 pounds of stage trusses, 46 miles of cable, 118 stage lights in addition to computers and control panels.

Performers are also responsible for their own wardrobe and makeup as they travel by bus and air more than 25,000 miles through October to visit 44 Army installations across the United States and Europe.

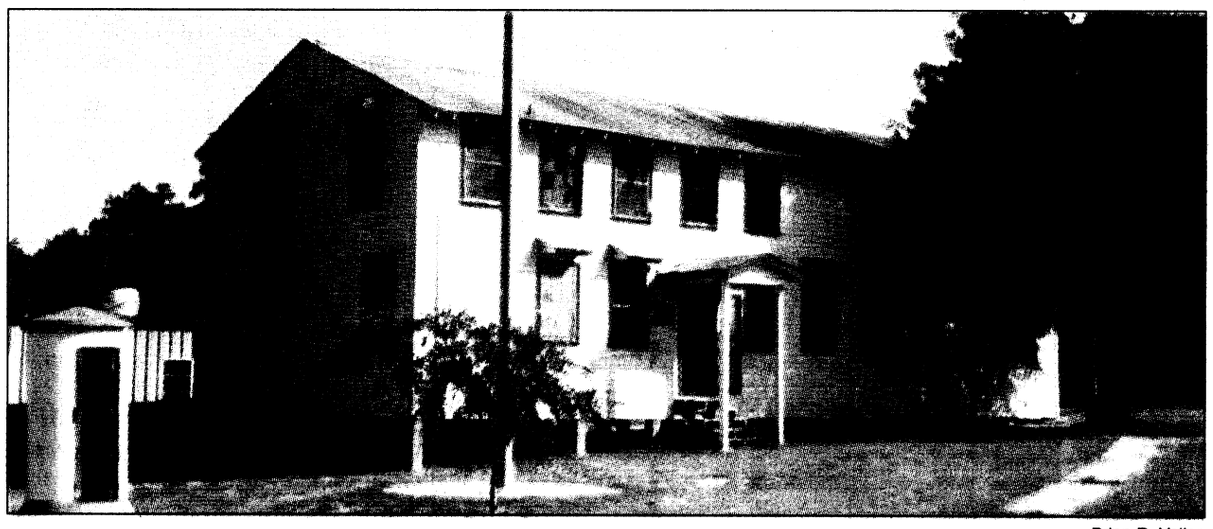
WWII history to be preserved in Infantry Museum barracks

By Brian R. Voller
Bayonet staff writer



It started with the bombing of Pearl Harbor and it became a reality with the storming of the beaches of Normandy. It brought with it the rise and fall of Nazi powers, the great battles in the Pacific and the deserts of Africa. It pulled millions of young men away from their homes and sent them to other countries where they died defending their flag. It was World War II, and it saw the largest mobilized Army ever sent into battle.

For some, this may be a part of history that will never be forgotten, but for Frank Hanner, director of the National Infantry Museum, it's a part of history he is afraid may slip away.

That is why Hanner is currently trying to restore original World War II barracks for the National Infantry Museum. Hanner's plan is to build a World War II company street as a permanent addition to the museum.

"This is a project that has been ongoing since probably 1972," Hanner said. "The idea came when the Army began tearing down all of the old World War II structures or modifying them so they no longer looked like the World War II structures the soldiers trained in.

"We realized that there was going to be a problem in saving at least a company street somewhere on Fort Benning that would reflect the type of structures which the soldiers lived in before and during World War II. Fort Benning mobilized thousands and thousands of soldiers from various divisions who trained here prior to leaving for service in the Pacific theater of operations, the China, Burma, India theater of operations or the European and Mediterranean theater of operations."

Brian R. Voller

The World War II barracks located behind the National Infantry Museum will be restored to the condition they were in when they were originally built to house soldiers.

Hanner said because of the major role Fort Benning played in mobilizing troops for the war, it is the perfect place to have something like the barracks street to remember World War II and all the soldiers who served during the war.

"Fort Benning can be very proud of what it accomplished, and now is the time for us to begin to remember and for us to have something tangible that can reflect back to those years on Fort Benning when our armed forces expanded to more than 8.5 million soldiers in the Army alone and more than 12.5 million soldiers, Marines, sailors and airmen as the war progressed," Hanner said.

The barracks that will be refurbished for the World War II display were buildings used by Gen. George S. Patton when he commanded the 2nd Armored Division here on Fort Benning. The buildings will be used to not only show the history of Patton but the history of all the soldiers who came through Fort Benning for training.

"We have the headquarters building that was used by Patton, and we would like to have maps that they used or at least reproductions of the maps that were used by the 2nd Armored Division and the other units that trained here," Hanner said. "We would like to have the types of desks,

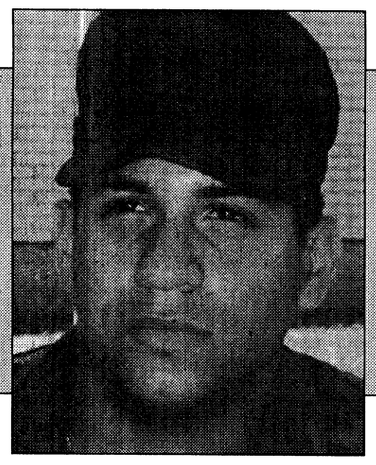
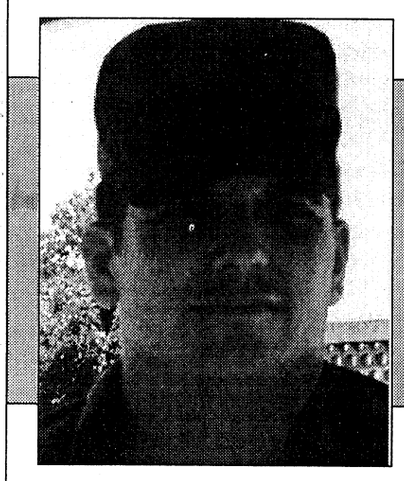
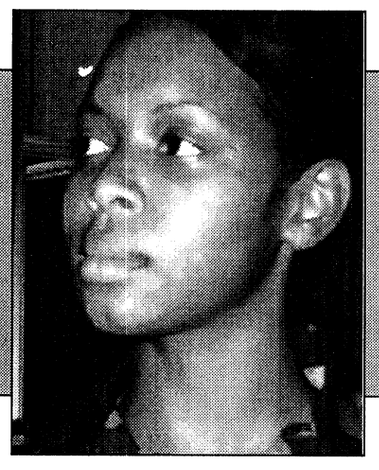
What can be done to stop racism in America?



Joyce B. Owens, civilian employee — "Follow the golden rule: treat others as you would like to be treated — with respect."



Sgt. 1st Class John Ohrt, Office of Infantry Proponency — "Education is the key."



Pfc. Michael Calarusso, Company B, 1st Bn., 38th Inf. Regt., Infantry Training Brigade — "The only way to eliminate racism is through a better understanding of people. Basic training has been good because working with people from varied ethnic backgrounds has allowed the platoon to grow intellectually."

Pvt. James Kastanis, 1st Platoon, Company B, 1st Battalion, 38th Infantry Regiment, Infantry Training Brigade — "Brief on the standing of all races, America's history and togetherness."

Spc. Douglas M. Gantt, 1st Platoon, Co. B, 1st Bn., 38th Inf. Regt., Infantry Training Brigade — "Ignorance is the basis of racism. People need to educate themselves. This world is coming to a boiling point and we need to stop it by accepting who we are. We are all God's people."

Spc. Stephanie Woodruff, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment — "I think it starts in childhood because children don't know color. Sometimes, it starts at home or with one bad experience and a person judges an entire race from that experience. It's just bad judgement."

RACISM

People dwell on exteriors

By William Richards
Fort Knox Equal Opportunity Office

commentary

In the business of equal opportunity, I've noticed that in general, people place too much importance to the exterior of a person and not as much on the interior.

We put forth so much energy trying to show how bad or evil some people are based solely on their exterior. We try to base intelligence, beauty, aggression and the ability to assimilate into cultures on people's exteriors.

We try to use history as a basis of proof that all these people act the same, you can't trust them, they all group together and they are not going to give us a break due to the color of our exteriors. Worse of all, they feel like they have the sole right to racism.

Each of us carry hate names that we are socially conditioned to respond to in a violent or vulgar manner.

One of my hobbies is to keep up with the various hate groups. In my studies of these groups, I have found that if you simply remove the words in reference to people's exteriors, all their hate filled speeches sound the same.

Most of these groups want war between the races, separate states and control of their own economy. Instead of taking what we have and making it better, they want to destroy what is and create a new society where people of their same exterior exist in peace and prosperity.

This utopia is a dream. There has never been a race on the face of the earth that did not fight wars against people of its own kind.

Unfortunately, these hate groups are willing to kill our children based on the color of their exteriors without trying to see the inner content of their person. I have personally felt the cruel bite and hate of racism from both children and adults.

Martin Luther King Jr. once said, "There will be a day when a man will be judged not by the color of his skin, but by the content of his character."

Most people are socially restricted to the confines of their exteriors. The music they listen to, books they read and way they dress are pre-established for them by others of their same exterior.

To have relationships outside of people that share the same exterior as yourself is taboo, and you will be marked as a traitor to your race.

The great minds in history have belonged to free thinkers, people that have the ability to think beyond the limits placed on them by society. Humankind's greatest achievements were accomplished by people who pushed through these barriers and found out that what they were told was impossible was only impossible to people that limit themselves.

When we teach our children to act, dress and think within the limits of their exteriors, we are limiting their ability of free thought. It's like chaining your children to a post.

One thing I have learned in life is that no matter how beautiful the bottle of poison, the contents are just as deadly.

Hate destroys the vessel that contains it.

Ethnic observances

Gatherings increase awareness, acceptance of various cultures

By Brian Miyamoto
Army News Service

It's been almost 30 years since the Department of Defense encouraged installations to hold ethnic observations.

commentary

In that time, the United States, the world and the military have changed. With these changes questions arise. Why do we have ethnic observances anyway? With all the changes and advances in the Army, are ethnic observances necessary? Why should I participate and encourage others to participate in ethnic observances?

The first question is easy to answer. In 1976, President Jimmy Carter passed an executive order instituting these observances. The purpose was to recognize the contributions and achievements of various ethnic groups to the American culture and to increase awareness, mutual respect and understanding.

Additionally, we have observances for women and disabled people, although they're not considered ethnic groups. Nevertheless, their presence in the Army family has increased in such numbers that they can't be overlooked.

The second is a little harder. Yes, the world has changed and the Army has made great advances in including women and minorities in all areas of the Army. I wish we could say we no longer need ethnic observances, and discrimination and disparity no longer existed in the Army.

Look around you and see how many top officers are minorities and women. Listen to remarks, jokes and slurs said behind closed doors or in "jest." Ethnic observances help to eliminate prejudices and stereotypes, and increase awareness and acceptance of various groups through double exposure and education.

The last question that can be asked, "What do ethnic observances offer to me?" This can only be answered on a personal level and each person has to determine whether the pay back for ethnic observances is worth the time spent attending them. Probably the most important result is better workplace relations.

By learning about other people and their cultures, we can dispel stereotypes and replace them with friendliness and acceptance.

Another real benefit is being able to accomplish tasks quicker. Instead of spending extra time bickering about how a task should be done or not wanting to work with someone, people should spend their time and energy on the task itself. For the commander or supervisor, this translates into being able to do more and save money.

There's also the issue of commanders and supervisors not needing to spend time and effort on harassment or discrimination complaints.

We have ethnic observances to assist us in accomplishing the mission. Ultimately, that's what it boils down to. If the unit isn't able to do its mission, and we aren't contributing toward it, we should just go home.

Survey: Staff will incorporate suggestions

By Rich McDowell
Public Affairs Officer

The post newspaper and television survey is just about completed. We thank those of you who took the time to participate and we especially appreciated the comments you provided.

We will now get to work on trying to incorporate your suggestions by adding coverage on events that you say need coverage, reducing coverage on those you say we give too much coverage to and adjusting coverage where you say we need to adjust.

Of course we won't be able to please everyone, just as we aren't pleasing everyone all of the time now, for as you might expect, some of the suggestions are completely opposite. Some readers think we need more spiritual coverage, others say we have too much. There are those who love crime watch and those who think we could do without. There's an equal number of respondents who love the crossword puzzle and who hate it.

Since there are no features that nearly everyone opposes — like pet of the week a few years back — our challenge is to make those features we have better.

One suggestion that we would like to carry out, but have no control over is: "run more letters to the editor." Short of making them up, we can't run what we don't get. But there were some of you who have strong opinions that you voiced in the survey and we'd love to hear from you in a letter we could publish, because we know other readers would like to see what you have to say.

commentary

Now to some specifics:

• For the reader who wants to know how to subscribe to the newspaper, that's simple, send a check for $12 to cover the cost of postage to: The Bayonet, 1819 South Lumpkin Road, Columbus, Ga. 31903, and they'll take care of you.

• For those of you who want to see the paper downtown, we too would like to, but are prohibited by regulation to distribute it off post except in a few areas that generate a lot of soldier traffic, and most of those places are in South Columbus.

• For those of you in Meloy Hall, we are checking to see if we can get a rack placed at the main entrance since we can't get inside to make distribution. In the meantime, you should be getting it through the distribution system, if the person who picks up distribution at the post office is picking up newspapers.

• We acknowledge that this is not a perfect post, but instead of writing negative stories, we write what is being done to correct problems.

• We do want to cover information for teenagers. If you know of any teenagers who would be interested in writing, have them give us a call. We are trying especially hard to run Spencer High School news in the paper.

• We are working on our proof reading. Each page is read by at least two people before it's finalized. But errors are still slipping through. We are in the process of devising ways to do better.

Next month, the post newspaper will be operating under a new contract — The Bayonet is published by a civilian printer at no cost to the government — and we hope to produce an even better product — more color, better television section and more features.

As for our television programming, we know we have a long way to go. We are looking at ways to improve the programming and to make it more current.

We were certainly glad to hear from those of you who do like what we are doing.

Again, thank you for your responses and let us hear from you more than every other year when we conduct this survey.

Heatstroke can easily strike

By Regis Beighley
Directorate of Public Safety

Olympic athletes from around the world came to Georgia early to acclimate to our hot weather. They know the dangers of competing in this harsh climate. For spectators accustomed to air-conditioned living, this hot climate can be deadly.

Heatstroke, also known as sunstroke, is the often fatal condition that occurs when a person's normal temperature-regulating mechanisms become overloaded and shut down, said Thomas Adams, professor of physiology at Michigan State University in East Lansing, Mich. He cautioned people not to rely on complicated calculations, or measurements of body or environmental temperatures.

"I put a lot of faith in people knowing the early warning signs and acting appropriately," he said.

Look for warning signs:

• Visible sweating — Visible sweat on the skin's surface is a sure indication that a person is in a hot environment. Whenever you cease sweating while in a hot environment, you are at great risk of a heat injury.

• Increased heart rate — A normal response to walking or climbing stairs even in cold weather is an increase heart rate. If in hot weather, however, you feel a pounding pulse during only moderate exertion, slow down, go to a cooler spot and rest.

• Clumsiness or confusion — If a person misplaces frequently used things, seems confused or clumsier than normal and finds that routine chores require more concentration, he or she has progressed further toward severe heat strain and is at high risk.

• Unexplained irritability — Tempers flare and people are more easily frustrated than usual. If someone "doesn't seem to be themselves," get them to cool off and rest.

• "Feeling kind of funny" — Heat strain often feels similar to mild or moderately severe flu-like symptoms, such as light headedness, nausea, fever or chills, or clammy or shaking hands.

Heat exhaustion can lead to these serious physiological disorders:

• Heat Syncope — In the first stage of heat exhaustion (not stroke), a person may faint or have blurred vision or reduced peripheral fields, see spots, hear ringing in the ears, or experience odd tastes or smells, tingling in tongue or face, nausea, weakness or disorientation. To avoid this condition, be physically fit, rest in a cool place for 10 minutes of each hour of exertion and keep body fluids and electrolytes in a normal range (see below).

• Loss of body water and salts — If these are not replaced, a person will feel fatigue, nausea, muscle cramps and dizziness, and could suffer from vomiting, circulatory failure and death. People who are exposed to the heat must learn to use electrolyte replacement fluids rather than plain water. Consult a physician to determine the best solution for you. To avoid this condition, drink small amounts of water frequently. If you urinate throughout the day at about the same rate as other times of the year, you are probably getting the right amount and mix of water electrolytes. Quenched thirst is not a reliable indicator of adequate hydration.

• Thermoregulatory failure or heatstroke — The victim may be panicky, confused, manic delirious, unconscious or have convulsions. To reverse this condition, get emergency medical help. Meanwhile, loosen or remove clothing, flood the victim's skin with tepid (not cold) water and fan his or her body vigorously. Insist that the victim be hospitalized. Without advanced medical care, a person may die from tissue damage within 24 to 72 hours of heatstroke even if his or her body temperature is reduced.

Take precautions for yourself and keep an informed eye on your family or friends. If you can't take the heat, take these hints and take care of yourself.

Information will bring $58,000 reward

By Jacqué Hill
Special to the Bayonet©

Sometime in the early morning hours of Jan. 3, 1995, Michelle Cartagena, 19, and Patrick Grant Hendrickson, 22, were killed at Lake Juliette, just 13 miles north of Macon, Ga., when they were parked at the "lover's lane" area.

A $58,000 reward is being offered for information leading to the arrest and conviction of the murderer or murderers.

Cartagena's father, retired Lt. Col. Louis Cartagena, is a former chief of staff of Fort Benning's School of the Americas.

According to Special Agent Randy F. Upton of the Georgia Bureau of Investigation, the couple was shot to death. The murders were believed to have been committed with an AR-15 assault weapon and a 9 mm pistol.

"There were 14 rounds from a .223-caliber rifle and a total of six rounds from a 9 mm," said Upton.

The murderer or murderers are believed to have been traveling in either a 1985 to 1987 Honda CRX or a 1984 to 1985 Chevrolet S-10 pickup, according to witnesses, Upton said.

"There were witnesses at the scene who said they saw a Honda CRX and others who saw an Chevrolet S-10 pickup," Upton said.

"The S-10 seen in the area was red and black with an old, white camper shell," he said. "It possibly had a Brooks and Dunn decal on the top, rear window. There was also possibly a college decal on the bumper.

"The CRX is believed to be blue over gray with wide tires and five-star rims, fog lights, white windshield wiper blades, tinted windows and a spoiler. It possibly had a Daugherty County tag and an Albany Warriors sticker in the rear window," Upton said.

Upton believes the missing links to solve this case lie in Columbus and hopes someone will come forward with the information.

"We're hoping someone can make the connection between an owner of one of the vehicles described as possessing the described weapons," he said.

"We have enough evidence here, so if anyone can give us a lead, we'll follow the case."

Anyone with information concerning this crime should contact Special Agent Randy F. Upton at the Georgia Bureau of Investigation by calling (912) 453-4173.

Barracks: WWII company street to be restored

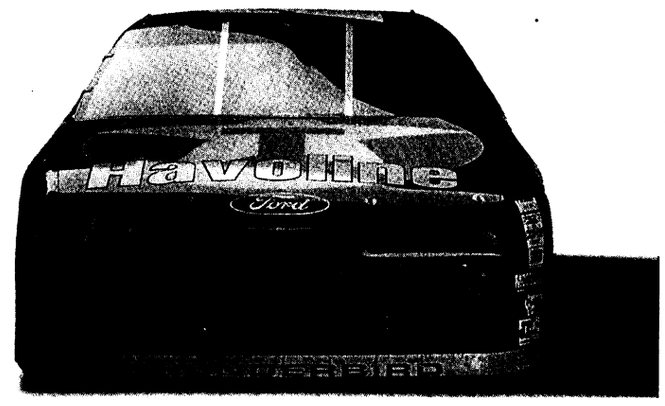
typewriters and radios they used back then.

"We have a (dining facility) that we would like to re-equip the way it would have been for the soldier with the little stools and things they had to sit on."

Hanner also said they have the original sleeping quarters used by Patton, a company office building and a guard post. He said the only thing he would like to see in addition to the barracks is a chapel.



Currently the lack of financial backing for the project has halted progress on the reconstruction of the barracks. Hanner said the estimated cost of the project could reach as much as $1 million because of the extent of the repairs that need to be done to make the museum pieces look authentic.

The museum recently got a financial boost when a former battalion commander of Patton, and a prominent local businessman, retired Lt. Col. Frank Lumpkin Jr. donated $100,000 to help begin the reconstruction of the barracks.

Hanner said the restoration of the World War II barracks will not only provide a learning tool and a source of history it will become a showpiece for the Columbus and Fort Benning community.

How To Recycle

Post housing residents may place recyclable materials in brown plastic bins for weekly curbside pickup.

Here is a list of the items that can and cannot be placed in the bin for recycling.

• Glass: Recycle soft drink, beer, juice, ketchup, wine, liquor and food containers. All caps and lids are to be removed and containers are to be rinsed out.

Special care should be taken to avoid breaking glass when placing it in the recycling bin.

• Cans: Only aluminum and steel cans are accepted at this time. Cans must be rinsed out. Labels may remain on the cans.

• Plastic: All plastic materials containing the Recycling Triangle (Three Chasing Arrows) may be recycled. This includes soft drink bottles and milk jugs. Caps must be removed and may be placed in the recycling bin. All containers must be rinsed out.

• Paper: All paper products except used personal type materials may be recycled. These items should be placed in brown paper bags or bundled together and tied; then they should be placed beside the recycling bin.

• Inert Waste: Tree limbs, grass clippings and leaves will be picked up on Mondays only. Clippings and leaves should be placed in a garbage bag and tied.

• Motor Oil: • Recycle used motor oil and filters by taking them to the auto craft centers or the Recycling Center, Building 4000, in Harmony Church.

Trash and recycle pickup schedule

Household trash and recycling will be collected once a week on the same day. If there is recyclable material mixed in with the trash can, it will not be picked up until the following week and recyclables are separated.

DPW updates current policy on recycling

Environmental Management Division

The Fort Benning recycling program is increasing the amount of materials recycled and the number of people who participate in the program is also increasing, said Tom Moore, recycling program manager for the Directorate of Public Works .

"This is to be commended as landfills reach their maximum capacity across the nation," Moore said. "Recycling has become an investment in our future. It is a fact that the typical American family cannot prepare and consume a meal without generating recyclable materials."

The Environmental Management Division of DPW is updating the current policy on recycling, which is due out in October. The update will improve the safety and efficiency of the recycling program because it will update the proper handling of recyclable materials, Moore said.

"The continued success of this program depends on how the Fort Benning community works together to optimize the recycling program," Moore said. "This means learning how to recycle."

Listed below are some dos and don'ts to improve the recycling program in family housing:

• Attend self help training on how to recycle. Call the Unit and Housing Support Branch at 545-1121.

• Recycle aluminum and steel cans.

• Recycle all plastic material containing the recycling triangle (three chasing arrows). This includes soft drink bottles, milk jugs and other food containers.

• Separate recyclable waste from other household waste.

• Place all household waste pick-up items at the curb before 7:30 a.m. on the appropriate day.

• Place recyclable materials other than paper products in the brown plastic recycling bins.

• Recycle glass containers such as soft drink, beer, juice, ketchup, wine, liquor and food containers (be sure to rinse with clean water before recycling).

• Place paper products, including newspapers, magazines, cereal boxes and other paper, except for personal items, in brown paper bags or tie into bundles and place at the curbside.

• On Mondays, place tree limbs, bagged grass clippings and leaves at the curbside.

• Place one to five collapsed cardboard containers with the other recyclables at the curbside for pick up.

• Coordinate the pickup of more than five cardboard containers by calling the Recycling Center at 545-6142 from 1 to 3 p.m. Monday through Friday.

• Recycle used motor oil and filters by taking them to the auto craft centers or the Recycling Center, Building 4000, in Harmony Church.

• Don't recycle personal paper items such as tissue and napkins.

• Don't place ashes in recycling bins.

• Don't place food or scrap items in recycling bins.

• Don't recycle plastic motor oil or paint containers.

• Don't recycle mirrors, ceramics or window glass.

Units can also participate in recycling by bringing sorted office paper, expired or excess publications and recyclable collapsed cardboard to the Recycling Center.

For information, call Walter Nichols, solid waste program manager, at 545-1007 or Tom Moore at 544-6142.

Doctrine for multinational operations due out this fall

By Jim Caldwell
TRADOC News Service

In an environment of increased operational tempo, soldiers are deploying to overseas locations where they are partners with troops from other countries. Often it is the first time the Army has worked with those countries.

"There was a need for doctrine on how we were going to fight with other nations," said Maj. Tracy Herbert, Training and Doctrine Command's deputy chief of staff for doctrine organization.

Herbert is the author for Field Manual 100-8, The Army in Multinational Operations, a doctrinal publication meant to help leaders and commanders work with other countries' armies. Distribution of the manual is slated for this fall.

"This manual basically goes into some of the considerations, command structures, different areas of the battle space and what they should look like," Herbert said.

One annex of the manual is a checklist based on one developed by the10th Mountain Division, Fort Drum, N.Y., for dealing with international partners. The checklist is divided into categories, according to Herbert. For example, what are the allied engineer elements that will be working with U.S. Army engineers? What are their capabilities? What type of equipment do they have?

"The feedback I've gotten from the field is that they like the checklist," Herbert said. "It's probably one of the things that they'll use in the manual that's a little more specific. The rest of the manual tends to be more general, going through all the considerations."

The draft of the manual was staffed with the Air Force, Navy and the Joint Chiefs of Staff organization. It was also staffed with a North Atlantic Treaty Organization doctrinal working group, of which Herbert is a member.

"We received comments back from Turkey and the United Kingdom, in particular, which were good and a lot of which were incorporated into the manual," he said.

"Members of the working group said they like the way it's set up," Herbert said. "They said it's obviously a U.S. manual, but it gives them an idea of how we look at working in the multinational environment."

Herbert is actually the final author of the manual. Development began in 1989, but events such as Operation Desert Storm and deployments to Somalia, Rwanda, Haiti and other areas caused its delay.

"Every two or three years, something came up and we said, 'Stop. We have to take into consideration this or that military operation,'" he said.

Post cemetery mirrors military history

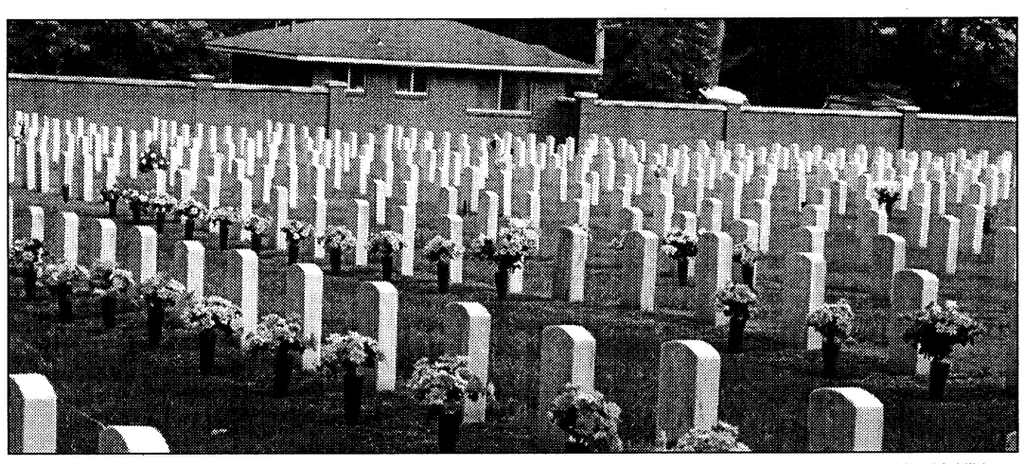
By Lisa M. Hibbert
Bayonet staff writer

Despite the multitude of people, it is extremely quiet. Squirrels roam here and birds keep a playful vigil overhead.

With more than 6,600 bodies interred at the Fort Benning Cemetery, if it could talk, it would speak volumes.

One of the things it would probably say is that there are four unknowns buried here — not just the one that is recognized on Memorial Day.

"We have a baby, a skull and a body that washed up in the river in the 1970's buried under unknowns here too, besides the unknown near the flag post, said James Grantham, cemetery administrator."



The cemetery first opened in 1922 with the burial of Pvt. William S. Hart, a World War I casualty from New York. His mother chose to have him buried here because of Hart's love for Fort Benning, Grantham said.

Since that time, the post cemetery has undergone some major changes. One of the changes was desegregation.

"We used to have noncommissioned officers buried in one area, their families in another, officers in one area, their families in another and then you had the black NCO's with their families in one area and the black officers and their families in another," Grantham. said. "I'm glad I wasn't working here back then, it must have been hard trying to keep it all straight."

Another change is the wall surrounding the cemetery. Originally, the wall only enclosed the area surrounding the flag post. The wall was later extended to Lumpkin Road in 1988.

Two prisoners sentenced to death were buried outside the cemetery walls in 1945. Pvt. John J. O'Conner was hung after he killed a guard while escaping a work detail. Pvt. Curn L. Jones was hung for killing an officer candidate outside a store in Columbus. The two later became part of the main cemetery when the wall by Terry Drive was extended in 1974.

The yellow flowers mark the graves of 44 German POWs at the Fort Benning Cemetery.

Spc. Donald R. Johnston, killed in Vietnam, is the only medal of honor recipient in the cemetery and he rests at the base of the flag post. He was originally buried in a different location but was moved to the flag post after his posthumous award of the Medal of Honor. Johnston's headstone stands out from the rest because the letters on his white marble headstone are trimmed in gold.

Two major generals rest here, Normandy Costello and Thomas Tarpley, who was post commander from 1973 through 1975, as well as Brig. Gen. Marcus Bell.

But not just Fort Benning soldiers are buried in the post cemetery, soldiers from all over the world rest here. There are airmen, sailors Marines and even a Coast Guardsman.

"It depends on where the person requests to be buried," Grantham said. "A lot of times they will choose the closest federal cemetery to the family."

The cemetery is also home to 44 German prisoners of war, seven Italians POW's and four Chinese allies.

"At one time there were eight Italians but the family requested that we have the remains sent back over there," he said. "A lot of relatives of the people from other countries come here to visit the graves."

Being buried six feet under is not the rule of thumb at Fort Benning's cemetery. All of the bodies are buried eight feet under in case a family member needs be buried on top, the original grave need not be redug, Grantham said. This differs from civilian cemeteries where families are buried side by side.

In fact, on the back of some of the headstones is another name, denoting that there are two people buried in the same plot. Families can do this by making a request when the first body is buried.

A benefit soldiers and their family members receive is a free burial which includes coffin, headstone and funeral parlor fees.

This benefit is only open to those who die on active duty, retirees and spouses who have not remarried. Former military are ineligible.

When this cemetery fills, that will be it for Fort Benning's cemetery. In an effort to get the military out of the cemetery business, the government passed a law that no new federal cemeteries would be built so when the post cemetery is filled soldiers will have to seek a different resting place.

Government credit card abuse can ruin careers

Accounts past due more than 120 days are reported to credit bureaus

By Gerry J. Gilmore
Army News Service

Let's say you're a soldier or an Army civilian employee and you're short on cash. All of your regular charge cards are maxed out, but you do have the American Express government travel charge card.

Why not use it at an automated teller machine to get some quick money, or present it at the music store to buy that coveted compact disc?

Do it, and you may be sorry.

People who continue to abuse government travel cards and are delinquent on paying travel bills could wreck their credit, and their careers, said Karl Gansberg, administrative officer for the Directorate of Resource Management at Fort Belvoir, Va.

American Express is now reporting all government card holders whose accounts are 120 days overdue or have been cancelled and have remaining balances of $100 or more to national credit-reporting bureaus. Although the Army isn't responsible to AMEX for unpaid debts, it does pay a monetary penalty for maintaining negative charge-card balances.

"We've pulled a few cards from people who have been abusers," Gansberg said.

"These people won't be able to go on temporary duty, because finance won't give them cash advances. If they can't perform their missions, their supervisors probably won't be happy with them," Military and civilian employees who misuse their government travel cards may also be subject to oral or written disciplinary action, according to a Military District of Washington resource management information paper, dated Feb.1 this year. MDW employees who are 60 days delinquent in paying their government card accounts will have their cards suspended by American Express, with the added possibility of oral or written reprimands.

"We have been directed to get tougher on the misuse of government travel cards and delinquent accounts," Gansberg said. "If someone has been getting away with it, we'll be calling his or her supervisor. After that, it's the supervisor's job to follow up."

The Department of Defense Travel Charge Card Program was created as a lower-cost means to provide funds to authorized personnel only for use during approved TDY missions. Common uses include:

- Lodging expenses while on official travel orders
- Rental car authorized on travel orders
- Meals while on official travel away from home installation
- Cash advances for official travel-related expenses such as parking, taxis, toll fees and meals.

DoD sexual harassment incidents down

Army News Service

The incidence of sexual harassment within the Department of Defense has declined since 1988, according to a recently-released 1995 servicemember survey, but leaders say one case of sexual harassment is one too many.

The survey results were discussed at a July 2 DoD press briefing at the Pentagon. The survey, mailed to 90,000 servicemembers, is the largest of its kind, said Edwin Dorn, undersecretary of defense for personnel and readiness.

"Our (sexual harassment) goal is zero ... there is some good news here, sexual harassment is declining," Dorn said at the news briefing. "People know the rules, they understand how to report these unwanted incidents and most aren't reluctant to report. There's confidence their leaders will deal with it.

"However sexual harassment is occurring. It may be occurring in your organization, on your watch, and some believe it isn't being taken seriously enough," he said.

The survey said between 1988 and 1995, the percentage of military women who reported they had received uninvited and unwanted sexual attention from someone at work during the last 12 months declined from 64 to 55 percent. The percentage of men dropped from 17 to 14 percent.

In addition, survey respondents with six to ten years of military experience were asked their opinion of how often sexual harassment occurs, compared to a few years ago. Sixty percent of female respondents and 76 percent of males reported that it occurs less frequently. Only 10 percent of female respondents and 5 percent of males said sexual harassment occurs more often today.

Regardless of improvements to date, Secretary of Defense William Perry has said any incidence of sexual harassment within DoD is unacceptable.

"All employees of this department have a right to carry out their jobs without discrimination or harassment," Perry said.

The survey was fielded at the same time other DoD initiatives to prevent sexual harassment were being implemented. Three survey forms were mailed to military members between February and September 1995. The first survey replicated a 1988 DoD survey to provide comparisons to the 1988 time frame.

A second survey differed from the first in three ways. It provided:

- Survey respondents an opportunity to report on an expanded list of behaviors and to indicate if they considered any of those behaviors to have been sexual harassment.
- An opportunity to report on experiences that occurred outside of their military duty hours, and.
- Measures of servicemembers' perceptions of the complaint process and the extent of effectiveness of training related to sexual harassment.

A third survey, for which no results were tabulated, was administered to a small sample to provide information researchers could use to transition to a single survey in the future.

In addition to the decline in sexual harassment, other indicators that DoD initiatives were already making a difference were:

- Training: More than 80 percent of members reported being trained and about 60 percent indicated the training was moderately or very effective.
- Awareness of sexual harassment: When asked if they knew what words and actions constitute sexual harassment, 82 percent of female respondents and 84 percent of men said "to a large extent."
- Reporting: Eighty-seven percent of female respondents and 89 percent of men said they knew the process for reporting sexual harassment. Also, personnel are increasingly reporting their experiences. In 1995, 40 percent of female respondents and 17 percent of men indicated they chose to report an incident, compared to 1988 when 8 percent of the women surveyed and 10 percent of men said they had done so.

va q&a

Department of Veterans Affairs

Q: A mortgage company turned me down for a VA-guaranteed loan, but I don't think they listened to my explanation of the status of a debt that showed up on my credit report. Is there anything VA can do for me?

A: You should contact your regional office (800) 827-1000 to discuss your situation with a loan guaranty officer. If there are extenuating circumstances, the local VA officials may want to review your application with the lender or, alternatively, they could suggest other lenders in your area who are active in VA guaranteed loans that you might contact.

Q: I heard something on the news about a committee's continued scientific review of the possible effects of Agent Orange on Vietnam veterans. Does VA still have the special health screening program for Vietnam veterans?

A: Yes. If you are a Vietnam veteran and have not had the free physical examination to be included in the Agent Orange Registry, you may wish to contact your local VA medical center and make an appointment. While the Agent Orange Registry exam will not provide you with definitive answers about the relationship between Agent Orange exposure and any medical problems you may have, it may uncover conditions that require prompt treatment.

Q: Are there special Agent Orange tests that I will get in the examination?

A: When you have your appointment, your medical history will be recorded, you will be asked about your herbicide exposure, and a complete physical examination will be conducted. That includes certain blood tests, urine analysis and a chest x-ray, if you have not had a chest x-ray in the past six months. The person who examines you will look carefully for symptoms of any of the conditions that have been recognized as service-connected based on exposure to herbicides. Unfortunately, there are no medical tests that can show whether a health problem was caused by Agent Orange or other herbicides used in Vietnam. There are tests that show the current level of dioxin, a contaminant found in one of the ingredients of Agent Orange, in blood or tissue. Such tests are used for research and there are serious questions about their value in a routine examination.

Q: Who is eligible for Veterans Affairs vocational rehabilitation?

A: Veterans and active-duty service members generally are eligible if three conditions are met. First, they must have suffered a service-connected disability in active service after Sept. 15, 1940, and are receiving at least 20 percent compensation, or would be except for receipt of military retired pay. Secondly, they must have been discharged or released under other than dishonorable conditions or are currently hospitalized awaiting separation for a service-connected disability. Finally, they must be in need of vocational rehabilitation services to overcome an employment handicap.

Q: Are there any exceptions for people rated at less than 20 percent?

A: Yes. Veterans with a 10 percent service-connected disability can be eligible on a case-by-case basis if found to have a serious employment handicap.

Q: What is the basic vocational rehabilitation benefit?

A: A disabled veteran may receive employment assistance, on-the-job training, or other training. While in training and for two months after completing training, eligible veterans may receive subsistence allowances in addition to their disability compensation or retirement pay. In addition, VA pays the costs of tuition and required fees, books, supplies and equipment.

Editor's note: If you have a question regarding your VA benefits, call the VA regional office at (800) 827-1000.

EEO benefits from conflict resolution

Equal Employment Opportunity Office

The department of Defense uses mediation, a form of alternate conflict resolution, to help resolve disputes between management and employees that usually end up as Equal Employment Opportunites discrimination complaints.

Both the Congress and Equal Employment Opportunity Commission have wholeheartedly endorsed ADR as a beneficial tool in resolving disputes.

Mediation is a form of ADR that is informal, yet structured, said Ellis Dandy, director of the Equal Employment Opportunity Office. It is usually conducted in a private setting with the mediator and the opposing parties in conference with the mediator attempting to help the parties reach a resolution or agreement that is satisfactory to both parties.

This form of conflict resolution has proven itself to be a viable tool that can be effectively used to resolve many issues that arise in labor-management disputes. The process of mediation has produced large monetary savings for the DoD since its implementation in 1992.

The mediator is an impartial and neutral third party who helps the parties attempt to reach a resolution of their issues. The mediator helps the parties look at or review a variety of options and interests without placing blame, finding guilt, fault, innocence or liability. The mediator is there to help find a solution, Dandy said.

Mediation has been widely used in many settings including diplomatic circles, and is beginning to be widely used in legal proceedings, with the courts using this process to help streamline its heavy dockets.

The military services have begun to use mediation on a broad scale and reports of monetary savings while reaching amicable settlements abound, he said. The U.S. Air Force reported over $3 million saved in their first year using this process. The Army's Corps of Engineers was the first Army element sanctioned to use mediation as part of their EEO process and reported over $1.6 million saved with very positive outcomes for the parties involved.

The Civil Rights Act of 1991 and the Americans with Disabilities Act of 1990 encourage the use of some form of ADR for settling disputes. In the EEO arena, 29 C.F.R. Part 1614 (Federal Sector Equal Employment Opportunity: Rule and Proposed Rule), EEOC's guideline for processing EEO complaints of discrimination, encourages the development of an ADR procedure as part of the pre-complaint process.

Under its guidelines, if the complainant agrees to try mediation, further processing is held in abeyance until the mediation is attempted. Should mediation prove successful the complaint is stopped and closed, Dandy said. However, should mediation prove unsuccessful, the complaint is continued through the normal administrative processing procedures.

Complainants do not lose any of their legal rights under EEO for using mediation to try to resolve their issues, Dandy said.

Training and Doctrine Command guidelines for mediation state once a complainant has agreed to try mediation, managing officials have no choice but to take part in the proceedings on behalf of the government.

During mediation, there are no records kept of the proceedings except for the settlement agreements that are developed between the parties.

Mediation falls under the authority of the EEO Office when used as part of the administrative processing of EEO complaints. Under TRADOC guidelines, the EEO officer will head a team comprised of the EEO, Staff Judge Advocate labor counselor and a representative of Civilian Personnel Office to consider which complaints should be offered mediation.

However, they will not be involved in the actual mediation process, Dandy said. The mediator will operate under the general supervision of the EEO officer, just as the EEO counselors now do.

"Currently, we have three persons trained and certified as mediators for this installation," Dandy said. "As this process becomes used more and more often, others will be added from within the general work force."

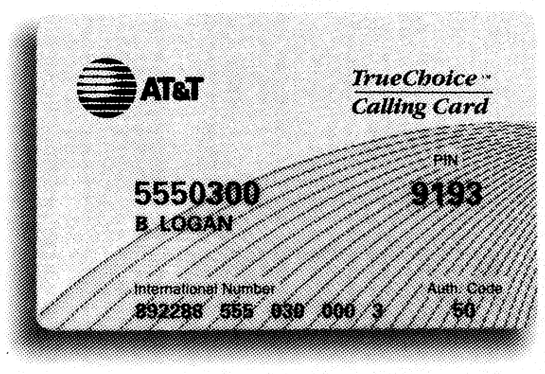
The use of mediation will be implemented at this installation in the very near future in an attempt to further assist in the resolution of EEO complaints.

Contact the EEO Office for further information on mediation at 545-1872.

Caution key with gas cans

Chevron USA

Care should be used when filling gas cans due to increased incident of explosions.



Recently there have been several instances reported of metal gas cans exploding while being filled in the backs of pickup trucks at service stations.

In a warning published in Chevron's Marketing Bulletin 36-1904, Chevron said the insulating effect of the plastic liners found in the backs of many pickup trucks prevents the static charge generated by gasoline flowing into a metal can from grounding.

As the charge builds, it can create a static spark between the can and the gas nozzel. Chevron is advising that all gas cans should be placed on the ground away from vehicles and people when being filled.

FORCE XXI

4th ID fields Army's Future

By Mark Newell
Fort Hood, Texas

Unless you live on the fringes of society, by now you have heard the term Force XXI in some way or fashion. Force XXI is the future, as well as now, and has roots in the past. Contrary to what some say, Force XXI is both a revolution and an evolution.

The essence is that Force XXI is the redesign of the Army at all echelons organized around information and information technologies.

One of the main facets of Force XXI is the "digital" battlefield. In this digital battlefield, warfighters and commanders will have greatly enhanced situational awareness and will be empowered to react to the dynamic nature of the non-linear battlespace.

This development is evolutionary in that it utilizes many of the existing military concepts, systems and lessons learned. It is revolutionary in the sense that it will provide new capabilities that increase the lethality and effective range of weapons systems and even more, the ability of commander to be in the right place at the right time to use these weapons and information systems to their maximum potential.

This digital force is the basis of the Army's Experimental Force, or EXFOR, which is headquartered at the 4th Infantry Division, Fort Hood, Texas. Under the 10 division redesign from the Secretary of the Army, the 2nd Armored Division at Fort Hood cased its division colors and was reflagged as the 4th Infantry Division in December 1995. A few months prior to that ceremony, the 2nd Armored Division was tagged as the Army's EXFOR, so at the reflagging event, the new EXFOR flag was added to the division color guard.

The initial unit conducting the digital experimentation will be the 4th ID's 1st Brigade. The brigade has been augmented by fire support, aviation, service support units from the division to form at task force. Additionally, a light infantry battalion from Fort Lewis , Wash., 1st Battalion, 5th Infantry Regiment, has been added to test Force XXI concepts and equipment in light units.

The task force has been designated as Task Force XXI and is currently being outfitted with a myriad of information and digital technologies, mostly on contemporary weapons systems and command platforms. Simultaneously, the soldiers of the task force are being trained on the new digital systems and equipment by a combination of military instructors, civilian subject matter experts and industry representatives.

The task force will go through a series of incremental exercises to experiment with and refine the components and doctrine of the digital battlefield. The tests climax with a rotation to the National Training Center at Fort Irwin, Calif., in March where the task force will conduct an Advanced Warfighter Experiment against the NTC opposing forces.

The March AWE will not be an end, but rather a barometer to judge the direction of Force XXI. While the Task Force XXI is preparing for the AWE, the 4th ID is equipping the entire division with forms of the digital equipment for the Division AWE to be held at Fort Hood in November of 1997. This exercise will be a computer driven scenario to test the digital capabilities and enhanced command and control advantages at the division level.

It is important to remember that the road to Force XXI is a journey, not a destination. Insights gained from the AWE's will largely shape the structure, capabilities and doctrine of the new force for the new century.

The experiments are a great step forward into information technology, but are experiments, not validations of weapon systems, organizations or concepts. Still, the bedrock of the entire process is quality soldiers, competent leaders and reliable equipment.

Protection: New technology could save soldiers lives

By George Roache
Army News Service

TUZLA, Bosnia-Hercegovina — A new force protection measure against mine blasts has soldiers feeling well covered. Units throughout Task Force Eagle recently received ballistic protection blankets for non-armored vehicles. Designed to protect passengers against anti-personnel mine strikes, the covers fit over vehicle seat backs and floorboards.

Soldiers of 2nd Battalion, 227th Aviation, got an early start recently at the Comanche Base motor park, tolerating the hot July sun to install the devices.

"I'm glad to have this little extra protection," said Sgt. Norman T. Stollberg, 29, an assistant supply sergeant from Phenix City. "We would have liked to have had them before we deployed from Hungary, but I'm glad we have them now."

Stollberg and Pvt. Darcy J. Serbu, 19, a light-wheeled vehicle mechanic from Las Vegas, attended a Guardian Base class on how to properly install the ballistic seat and floor covers. They, in turn, instructed the rest of Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 2nd Battalion.

The blankets are designed to fit on high-mobility, multi-wheeled vehicles, 2 1/2-ton and 5-ton trucks, said Timothy Dunn of Dimensions International, a private firm contracted to field force-modernization measures.

The kits, which weigh more than 300 pounds, come in four, 6-foot long pieces that wrap from the top of each seat down onto the floorboard.

Velcro strips glued to the floorboard keep the covers from slipping, while web straps secure to seat backs. The covers were designed to withstand a 12-cubic centimeter blast, Stollberg said.

"When the blast hits, it goes up," he said. "It will probably lift the vehicle and turn it over, but it (the covers) will keep all your body parts intact. Generally, it'll save your life."

Soldiers should use them whenever leaving the Task Force Eagle area of operations, going off prescribed routes and at the commander's discretion in areas where soldiers feel unsafe, Stollberg said.

Serbu found the blankets easy to install except for their weight.

"No tools used, just my two hands," she said.

And it was well worth the effort, said Sgt. Patrick Frost, 31, a mechanic from Holly Hill, S.C.

"It's great to have them," he said. "This is an extra measure to ensure the safety of each and every soldier. Anything that can lower casualties is a good measure."

Force Protection Initiative

Secretary of Defense plans upgrade in anti-terrorism

Gerry J. Gilmore
Army News Service

Secretary of Defense William J. Perry said he has established a Force Protection Initiative to provide more safeguards for U.S. service members and civilians against terrorist attacks like the Nov. 5 and June 25 bombings in Saudi Arabia.

"U.S. forces aren't leaving Saudi Arabia; we won't be scared-off by terrorists," Perry said at a July 17 Pentagon news briefing.

Perry said he told U.S. senators earlier that day that the initiative would upgrade DoD's anti-terrorism capabilities worldwide. Such a program, he said, could "cost hundreds of millions of dollars."

The need for increased anti-terrorism initiatives is self-evident, Perry said, as terrorist activities directed against U.S. forces worldwide become more sophisticated. Terrorists targeting U.S. forces are seemingly raising the ante, using powerful bombs such as the one which caused the June 25 explosion at Khobar Towers in Dhahran, Saudi Arabia, which killed 19 Air Force personnel and wounded hundreds of others.

Recently Perry appointed retired Army Gen. Wayne A. Downing to head a 30-member task force to assess the facts and circumstances surrounding the Khobar Towers bombing. The task force's findings will be incorporated into Force Protection Initiative decision making.

> "We cannot provide adequate force protection against terrorism threats of increased intensity and scope simply by moving fences and adding guards and putting Mylar on windows."
> — William J. Perry
> Secretary of Defense

Upgrades undertaken at Khobar Towers include adding machine-gun-manned guard posts, more concrete barriers at entrances and fence lines and covering windows with plastic film (Mylar) to reduce blast effects. These upgrades may have convinced the bombers that an attempt to pierce the perimeter of the housing complex with a car bomb would have been fruitless, Perry said.

"All of those (security) measures being taken, quite obviously, didn't stop the (Khobar) bombing from taking place. But, without them, the loss of life would have been much, much worse," he said.

Besides using more powerful bombs, recent U.S. intelligence suggests that terrorists could also attempt to tamper with U.S. forces' water supplies, use mortars and rockets, and introduce biological and chemical threats, Perry said. Troops in Saudi Arabia, and in places like Turkey and Egypt, may be moved out of vulnerable urban areas into more defensible locales. To reduce the danger to service members' families, the U.S. military could specify unaccompanied tours to high terrorist threat areas.

"Whatever we do (to guard against terrorism) won't be perfect," Perry said. "I believe that we'll get more attacks in the Gulf region ... three of our bases in Saudi Arabia have gone on high alert. We have some basis to be concerned about specific bases in some other countries: Kuwait, Qatar, Bahrain, Egypt, for example. We're also concerned about terrorism in Bosnia and Turkey."

Perry said that terrorism "will always be a threat" to U.S. service members as they serve worldwide. But, risks to service members can be reduced by establishing the Force Protection Initiative. Traditional passive means to deter terrorists, such as security fences and concrete "Jersey" barriers, would be employed in tandem with increased intelligence-gathering activities to deduce terrorists' targets.

"We cannot provide adequate force protection against terrorism threats of increased intensity and scope simply by moving fences and adding guards and putting Mylar on windows. This requires a drastic change in the way we do business in our operations," Perry said.

Soldiers test Force XXI computer system

By William Bradner
Army News Service

FORT HOOD, Texas — "From the freezer to the microwave" is a common enough phrase, but it's usually reserved for food products, not sophisticated computer devices.

Staff Sgt. Joseph K. George of 2nd Platoon, 4th Military Police Company, 4th Infantry Division, was one of the first soldiers to get his hands on the hand-held data entry device for the Multi-Technology Automated Reader Card system, and while he hasn't gone quite to the extreme of placing it in a microwave, he's come close.

During the Intelligence and Enemy Prisoner of War Exercise '96, he left the input device in direct sunlight for three hours, just to see what effect it would have on the liquid crystal display screen.

"It went completely black, but after a couple hours in the shade, it worked fine," he said.

George was given the device before the exercise in order to familiarize himself with its capabilities and its functions. One of the areas he was asked to assess was durability and survivability in a field environment.

"I've exposed it to rain, dust, even stuck it in my freezer overnight," he said. "I'm doing my best to see how it works, and what screws it up."

To this point he hasn't been able to damage the device. His only complaint is the keyboard is a bit too small to handle.

There have also been some minor problems found in the software, but the software developers have been making corrections as they've been identified, George said.

"If they're putting this much effort into the development, I think the whole MARC card system is going to be awesome," he said.

"But the real test will be during (our rotation at the) National Training Center — we'll see what 130-degree heat does to this thing."

Not quite a microwave — but close.

Fort Benning program provides evaluation, treatment for young children with developmental delays

By Jacqué Hill
Special to the Bayonet©

If your infant or toddler seems to be a bit behind others in the development of social, speech, motor or other crucial skills, there is help available to bring your child's skills up to par prior to beginning school.

Fort Benning's Early Intervention Program, sponsored by Martin Army Community Hospital, works in accordance with the Individuals with Disabilities Education Act and provides services to all infants and toddlers, from birth to 3 years, with disabilities who are entitled to medical care and education from the Department of Defense, according to Cindy Falk, manager, Early Intervention Services.

"Early Intervention Services is a program set up to provide evaluations, assessments and treatments to children with developmental delays or having high probabilities of developmental delays due to medical conditions," Falk said. "Through the program, we try to make sure the child is prepared to begin school, or at least to lessen the impact of beginning school."

A child can be referred to Early Intervention Services by a parent, physician, community health nurse, community member, off-post agency representative, or almost anyone, she said.

After the referral, a representative from Early Intervention Services contacts the child's parents to find out if they are interested in receiving help with their child's development. If the parents are interested in early intervention services, they participate in an intake process.

During this process, the parents exchange information with Early Intervention Services representatives, such as the family's and the child's history, family's needs, and the representative then explains what will be done for the family and child and the family's rights.

"This is a family-based service," Falk said. "It is family oriented and family directed."

After the initial exchange of information, the child undergoes a multidisciplinary assessment. At least two representatives from different disciplines, including speech pathology, family therapy and early childhood special education, participate in the assessment process and give their evaluation of the child's needs.

From this evaluation, an eligibility report, including the child's strengths and weaknesses and the representatives' recommendations, is given to the family.

The child's family can choose to participate in any or none of the services recommended for its child.

"All of the services are free," said Falk. "The family decides what service or services they want.

"They can refuse one service without jeopardizing getting another service."

Early Intervention Services offers help in the following areas: cognitive, speech and language, gross and fine motor skills, self help and social and emotional skills.

An individualized family service plan is implemented once the family decides which services it wants for its child, based upon the recommendations of those participating in the assessment process. This plan serves as a contract between the family and Early Intervention Services.

To refer a child or family to Early Intervention Services, contact Cindy Falk or another service representative at 545-3835 or 545-6374.

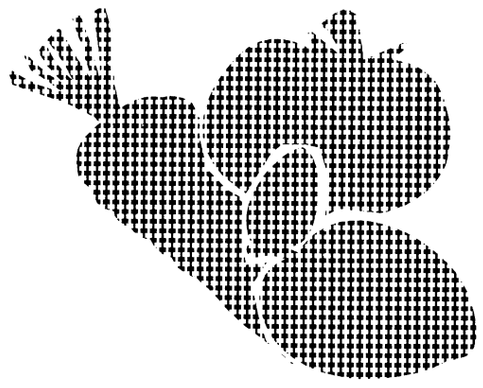
Fresh flavor

Seasonal fruits, vegetables offer higher nutritional value

American Institute for Cancer Research

Summer is the ideal time to boost the number of fresh fruits and vegetables in your daily diet. With the great variety in season, you'll also find local fresh produce offers more flavor and nutritional value.



The best way to get the most nutrients from fruits and vegetables is to buy them as soon after harvest as possible and to eat them soon after purchase. Fresh fruits and vegetables contain the greatest supply of dietary fiber, essential vitamins, minerals and a varied supply of phytochemicals — all of which have been linked to a lower risk of cancer.

Health authorities, including the American Institute for Cancer Research and the National Cancer Institute, advise eating at least five servings of fruits and vegetables a day for good health with one serving equaling one-half cup cooked or one cup raw. Surveys show, however, that most Americans currently eat only half of the recommended amount.

Although winter and fall may limit the number, quality and variety of fruits and vegetables available in some areas, making healthy eating more difficult, summer offers direct access to freshly-harvested produce at fresh produce stands, many supermarkets and local farmer's markets.

Health experts recommend eating a variety of fresh fruits and vegetables, rather than relying on dietary supplements, to gain a full-range of vitamins and nutrients.

To reach the recommended number of fruit and vegetable servings in your summer diet, you can follow these simple suggestions with delicious and nutritious results.

• Start your day by adding fresh sliced fruit on hot or cold cereal. Top pancakes, waffles or French toast with fruit instead of syrup. Puree fruits with cinnamon, nutmeg or vanilla to use as a fat-free spread for toast.

• Blend fruits with low-fat milk or yogurt, fruit juice and crushed ice for a delicious nutrient-packed snack. Shredded vegetables like zucchini, carrots or yellow squash can be mixed into quick bread and muffin batter as a way to replace some of the fat.

• Add chopped fruits and vegetables to tuna salads and sandwiches. Serve chopped fresh fruit as a refreshing topping for low-fat or nonfat frozen yogurt.

• At your next cookout, throw a kabob of zucchini, mushrooms, and cherry tomatoes on the grill instead of another burger.

Grilled peaches on the half shell are a delicious, no-fuss dessert for your next barbecue.

Grilled peaches on half shell

2 ripe peaches
1/2 cup fresh raspberries
4 tsp. brown sugar
2 tsp. lemon juice

Wash and halve the peaches and remove pits. Place each peach half, flat side up, in the center of a square piece of doubled aluminum foil. Fill each peach cavity with berries. Then, sprinkle with two teaspoons of brown sugar and one teaspoon of lemon juice. Seal the peach halves in the foil and grill them approximately 15 to 20 minutes over a hot flame, turning once. A serving of two peach halves contains 80 calories and no fat.

For a free booklet showing other ways you can incorporate more fruits and vegetables into your diet and follow the AICR guidelines for lower cancer risk, write to the American Institute for Cancer Research, Dept. FF, Washington, DC 20069.

The American Institute for Cancer Research is the only major cancer charity focusing exclusively on the link between diet, nutrition and cancer. The institute provides a wide range of consumer education programs that have helped millions of Americans learn to make changes for lower cancer risk. AICR also supports innovative research in cancer prevention and treatment at universities, hospitals and research centers across the U.S. The institute has provided more than $37 million in funding for research in diet, nutrition and cancer. ask the judge

Office of the Staff Judge Advocate

Q. My car was recently vandalized in the parking lot of the Officers' Club. When I called the Claims Office I was told that, while I was welcome to file a claim, Army regulations generally prohibit payment of claims that occur at a location other than assigned housing. What are the standards used in evaluating these kinds of claims?

A. The national epidemic of auto theft and vandalism has expanded to military installations with increasing frequency. Fortunately, the military claims system offers some relief to active duty service members who find themselves the victim of this type of crime.

Army Regulation 27-20, Chapter 11, defines vehicles as "automobiles, motorcycles, mopeds, utility trailers, camping trailers, trucks, motor homes, boats, boat trailers, bicycles and aircraft." Damage or theft to these vehicles may be compensated up to $3,000 where the following conditions are met:

• The damage or theft occurred while the vehicle was located at the soldier's assigned government quarters or authorized off-post lodging (hotel while on temporary duty but not off-post housing at permanent duty station);

• The vehicle must be property insured and registered with a state Department of Motor Vehicles and the Fort Benning Provost Marshal's Office;

• At the time of the incident that gave rise to the damage or theft, the vehicle must have been lawfully parked in accordance with post regulations and directives.

• Claimants are also required to secure their vehicles and any property contained within. Motorcycles and bicycles should be secured inside a locked storage shed or chained to a fixed object such as a rack, post or tree.

In accordance with recent changes to the Claims regulation, AR 27-20, "there is a presumption that vehicle theft or vandalism occurs off the military installation and is generally not compensable. Such claims are only payable when the claimant proves that the theft or vandalism occurred while the vehicle was located at his or her authorized quarters (e.g. a military police report indicating broken glass from the window is on the driveway)."

Failure to register, insure or properly secure your vehicle contrary to law and regulation could result in the denial of the claim. This includes property located inside of the vehicle. For example, radar detectors are not compensable because they are used to evade the law, and stereo equipment must be bolted to the vehicle in such a way that tools are required to remove it. Small high-value items such as radio headsets and expensive sunglasses should be secured in the trunk of the vehicle or locked in the glove compartment.

While the Army claims system offers some limited relief from theft and vandalism, a service member's best guarantee against a loss continues to be private insurance.

For more information, call the Fort Benning Claims Office, Office of the Staff Judge Advocate, at 545-2285.

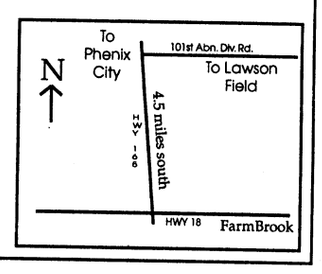
tricare

USAIC Public Affairs Office

The Department of Defense recently switched to a new health care program for the Army, Navy and Air Force.

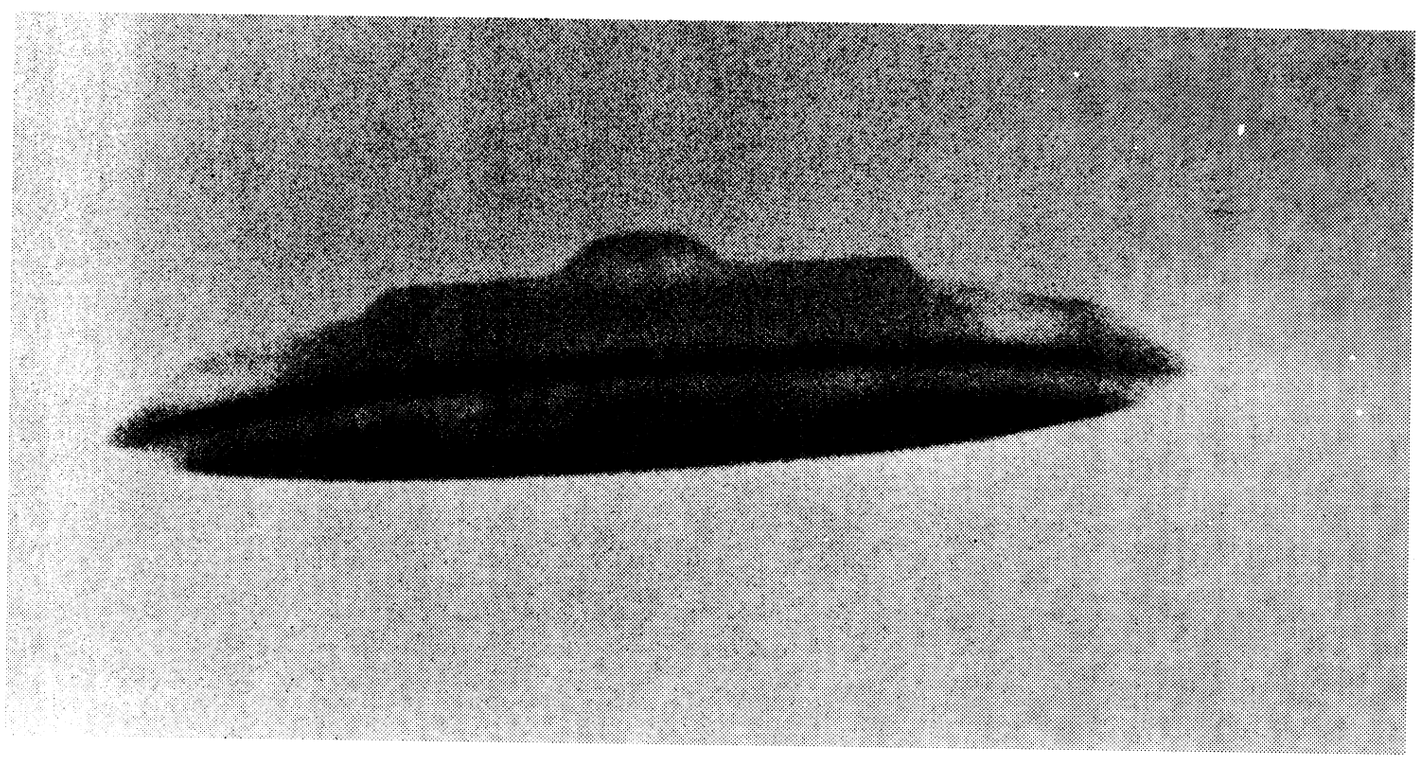
Representatives from Martin Army Community Hospital have been providing Tricare information briefings to soldiers, retirees and family members for the last few months. In those briefings, many eligible beneficiaries have shown concern about the change and how it will affect their care.



Following are two of the most commonly asked questions.

Q. When will my Prime enrollment become effective?

A. If the beneficiary's enrollment packet is received by Humana Military Health Services, Louisville, Ky., by the 20th of the month, the Prime enrollment period will become effective on the first day of the following month. If the enrollment packet is received after the 20th of the month, the effective date of enrollment will be the first day of the second month (e.g. if the packet is received by HMHS on the 21 of July, the enrollment will be effective on the 1st of September).



Q. If I enroll in Tricare Prime and select a Martin Army Community Hospital primary care manager, will I have to pay for my visits at the military hospital?

A. The only charges a beneficiary will incur at MACH are the nominal daily subsistence fees for an inpatient stay. The current rate is $9.70 for each day of hospitalization for family members of active duty and retirees; active duty and retired officers are charged $4.75 per day of hospitalization.

GRACE-GIVING GOD

Life's snafus make us laugh, balance our faith

By Robert Thompson
USAIC Chaplain Office

reflections

"And the Word became flesh and dwelt among us, full of grace and truth." (John 1: 14)

The summer before I started high school, I went camping for a few days with my mother, her sister and my brother. I have only one solid memory of the trip — putting up the tent.

One of us went inside and set up the center pole. So far, so good. While setting up a couple of the side poles, however, the center pole tipped over. Someone else went inside to retrieve it. She or he (I can't remember who's who) got it up but knocked over one of the side poles. In picking it up, one person rammed it into the leg of the other person. Then the center pole fell over again.

One of the outside persons volunteered to go inside and have a try. The sequence started all over. The details changed, but the effect was the same — poles, people, persistence and no progress. After a few minutes, someone else came out and someone else went in. Same story.

The situation was made more difficult by the blackout conditions inside the tent.

Once in awhile an elusive dot of sunlight — that's where the pole was supposed to go — danced somewhere in front of our eyes. We held open the door flap, which allowed the outside persons to see the feet of the inside persons, who could still see nothing. The canvas was heavy and droopy like the wrinkled skin of an elephant. That's what it felt like — we were trying to stand up a sleeping elephant.

The heat didn't help any, either. The tent was made of heavy canvas, which effectively kept in most of the heat generated by our persistent physical exertions. The longer we stayed inside, the hotter we got.

Oh yes, we also laughed, hard. Amid our seemingly useless efforts, we laughed, all four of us, waterfalls of laughter, giggles and guffaws and outbursts of laughter, like howling hyenas. At times that's all we were doing — paralyzed except for shaking shoulders, doubled over with bracing hands on knees, massaging cheeks and tummies that were aching with laughter, wanting to stop it yet relishing the grace of that moment.

We got the tent up somehow, and I don't think any of us even considered cursing it. It was a lot of work, a lot of trial and error, but we relished the grace.

Life often hands us tents to put up. They are sometimes heavy, hot, dark and awkward. They don't seem to work the way we think they should, or we don't think we can do what we should do to put them up. Frustration. Discouragement. Cursing.

But we can laugh, too, during tent times, in giggles and guffaws, with aching cheeks and tummies, like howling hyenas. We can laugh because the word became flesh and dwelt among us, full of grace and truth.

The word "dwelt" comes from a word meaning "pitched a tent." God pitched his tent among us when Christ became flesh. There were some who tried to knock it down, and eventually a few of them did. His followers felt deep frustration, discouragement, cursing; but not for long. God emptied that tomb and had the last (and best) laugh.

Tent times can be tough. That's the truth, isn't it? The truth is often serious, sobering. But we need balance on our faith journey. We need grace, which is freeing yet not at all frivolous. And, laughter will get us to grace. Let's relish it.

Fort Benning believers study, fellowship in neighborhoods

Officers Christian Fellowship

For those who've been wanting a time and place outside of Sunday morning worship to learn more about God, the Fort Benning Officers' Christian Fellowship provides that chance.

The group, which was founded in 1943 as a nondenominational worldwide ministry to the members of the U.S. Armed Forces and their families, hosts several home Bible studies, each week, to help focus believers serving the military to better serve God.

These are informal studies in the comfort of individuals' homes and are a great place to meet with fellow believers at Fort Benning.

Following are the weekly opportunities.

• Monday (Infantry Officer Basic Course), 7 p.m., 501 Wickersham St.; coordinated by Lt. Col. Kim Kadesch, 689-4725

• Thursday (neighborhood), 7:30 p.m., 204 Austin Loop; Capt. Steve Russell, 685-9276

• Friday (neighborhood), 7:30 p.m., 612 Perkins St.; Capt. Michael Latzka, 687-1154

There is also a lunchtime study in Infantry Hall, Room 450, at noon each Wednesday. Contact Capt. Dave Cannon at 480-9226 for more information.

reflections

There is an old Greek motto that says: "You will break the bow if you keep it always bent." For a bow to be strong, you must loosen the strings when not in use. Otherwise it will either break or will gradually reform to its bent position and never be effective in its purpose.

Many of us are like that bow. We are tense and high strung. Even when we make attempts to slow down and relax, others will place high demands upon us. Their "shoulds," "oughts" and "musts" hit us like strong gusts of wind, driving our lives onto shallow reefs of frustration and even desperation.

The Bible speaks directly to this issue. There is the classic story, in Luke 10, of Mary and Martha, two unmarried sisters whom Jesus visited in their home in Bethany.

Jesus made a brief stop and Mary, recognizing how privileged they were, decided to make the most of it and sat down at his feet and listened to him. She knew from whence the wealth for her life was going to come and she did not want to lose that opportunity. Worship of her lord preceded and exceeded any other duty in her life. She knew Jesus with her heart, not just her mind or sense of duty.

Martha, on the other hand, instead of enjoying Jesus' presence, got in a frenzy to prepare a great meal. She was trying to do all the right things in feasting Jesus but missed the point. She was doing things rather than just enjoying Jesus like her sister. Martha got upset. She reacted.

"Lord," she said in verse 40, "don't you care that my sister has left me to do all the serving alone? Then tell her to help me."

She assumed that Jesus did not care and she blamed Mary for being irresponsible, so she tried to work things out her way.

It is interesting to note that anxiety-prone people frequently blame others for their plight, rather than realizing their own stress. She did more than was necessary, and made life difficult for others.

Can you hear Jesus? "Martha....Martha! You are worried and bothered by so many things. But only a few things are necessary, really only one, for Mary has chosen the better."

He identified her situation in two words. "Worried and bothered." She was pulled in two different directions, concentrating on the picky details of the napkins, dishes, meat spread, the setting of the table, etc. The most important thing she should have chosen got lost in her anxiety and her telling others to do things.

Charles Hummel calls this "the tyranny of the urgent." The important things get replaced by the urgent things. Martha's bow was strung and ready to break. Jesus wanted her to unstring her life in order for her to be at peace.

Jesus, as well, in the very midst of his high profile ministry preaching to thousands and healing, the masses went away to the high mountains to get away from all the noise and the people in need. He too needed to become unstrung and relax with the quiet presence of his father.

We Christians are full of many many expectations for duties. But we need to know when to stop doing all the things and be with God. We can enjoy him and become fascinated with him and enjoy the greatest blessing that we as a Christian could possibly know — intimacy with God.

This is the release and peace for the Christian.

OLYMPIC GAMES

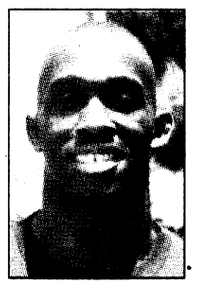
Soldiers make gallant run at medals

By John W. Peeler
Special to The Bayonet©

Four Fort Benning soldiers' dreams of capturing Olympic medals in Atlanta, ended this week.

Wrestlers Derrick Waldroup and Rodney Smith, along with U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit shooters Theresa DeWitt and Roy Harbison, made a gallant run at winning medals in the Centennial Olympics.

Smith, a 1992 Olympic Bronze Medalist and two-time U.S. National champion, started like wildfire defeating Jose Escobar of Colombia 6-1 in his opening match. Smith followed up with a 12-1 technical superiority win over Yalcin Karapinar of Turkey.



With the 1992 Olympic gold medalist Atilla Repka and the 1995 World Champion Rustam Adzhy of Ukraine eliminated, it appeared lady luck was on Smith's side.

Smith advanced into the quarterfinals to face Grigorly Pulyayev of Uzbekistan where he lost 4-0.

Smith was eliminated later in the day in his Group B match, losing 3-2 to Colas Oris.

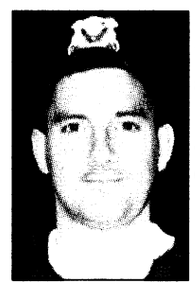
Derrick Waldroup's first trip to the Olympics started out much differently than Smith as Belarus wrestler Aleksandr Sidorenko defeated Waldroup 3-0.

Waldroup bounced back from the loss to defeat 1988 Olympic silver medalist Harri Koskela of Finland by technical superiority 11-1.

Derrick Waldroup finished seventh in the overall Greco-Roman competition.

Rodney Smith made it to the quarterfinals in the Greco-Roman competition.

Waldroup said the difference between losing the first match and winning the second was that he was more prepared for the second match.



Waldroup attributed the loss to being over-excited and the fact that this was his first Olympics.

Waldroup followed up with wins two and three over Fahrudin Hodzic of Bosnia and Herzegovina (10-0 technical superiority) and Nandor Gelenesi of Hungary (6-0).

In the quarterfinals, Waldroup faced Maik Bullman of Germany. This was the second meeting between the two wrestlers with Bullman winning a 1993 match by pinning Waldroup.

Theresa DeWitt finished in fourth place in the women's double trap competition.

Roy Harbison finished in seventh place in the 10-meter air rifle competition.

Waldroup was not able to get past Bullman and lost the match 4-0.

In his last amateur match, Waldroup defeated Marek Svec of the Czech Republic 10-2 for seventh place then in a time-honored military tradition, announced his retirement from competitive wrestling to the capacity crowd of more than 7,400.

Waldroup took off his shoes, laid them at the center of the mat, covered them with his "blood cloth", saluted the cheering crowd with a kiss, then walked off the mat.

"Twenty years of hard work finally paid off," Waldroup said. "Set your goals and set your dreams and it will happen."

According to Olympic sources, Waldroup has been named head coach of the U.S. Army wrestling team at Fort Benning and will replace coach Tony Thomas who is retiring.

As Waldroup's career ended, USAMU double trap shooter Theresa DeWitt's career is just starting to take off.

DeWitt came within two-tenths of a point from winning a Bronze medal losing out to Deserie Huddleston of Australia 13.7 to 13.9.

In the qualifier, DeWitt and Yoshiko Kira of Japan tied for fourth place with a total score of 105.

Going into the finals, it appeared DeWitt had a good chance at a medal but DeWitt was not able to move up in the standings losing the Bronze medal to Huddleston.

Another USAMU shooter, Robert Harbison, came within one shot of a Bronze medal during the men's 10-meter air rifle finals.

Harbison held a narrow sixth tenths of a point lead going into the final set of 10 shots and appeared to have the Bronze medal sewn up.

Harbison shot an 8.4 on the final shot, dropping him from third to seventh place.

Harbison said he was disappointed, but not heartbroken over his performance.

U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit soldier misses Bronze Medal

USAMU Public Affairs Office

ATLANTA — An Olympic Bronze Medal was close, but still out of reach for the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit's Capt. Robert E. Harbison.

In a single shot, Harbison lost his sixth-tenth's of a point lead for the bronze during the last of 10 shots that comprised the men's 10-meter air rifle final Monday.

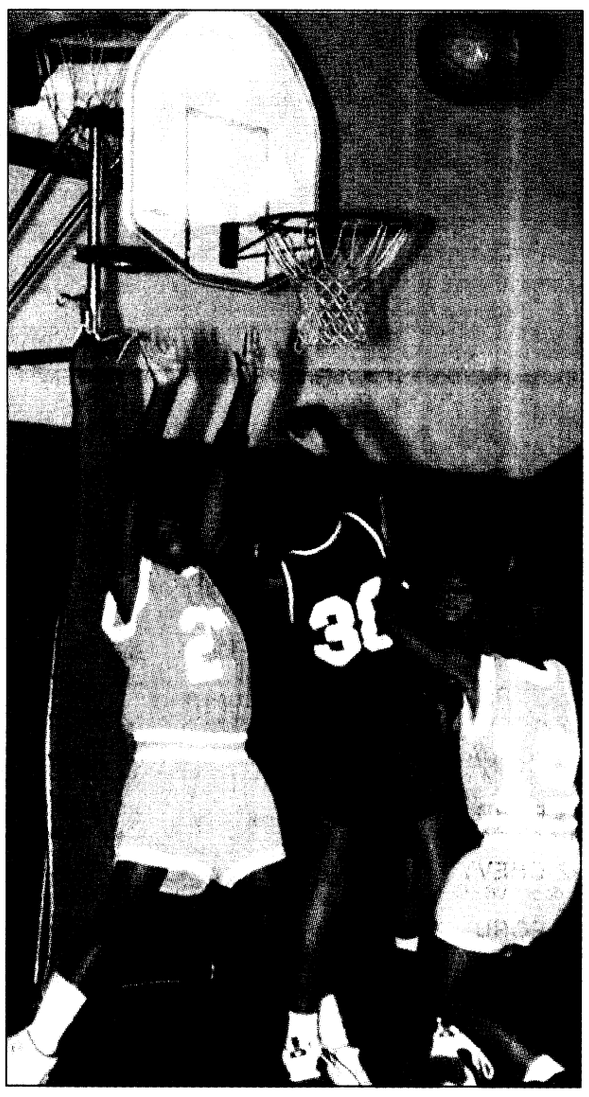
The moment was tense, sighs of regret coming from those rooting for the only member of the U.S. Olympic Shooting Team to make the final cut.

Eight top shooters, out of 44 competitors who participated in the qualification round, rose above the clamor of the more than thousands spectators who packed the stands of Wolf Creek Shooting Complex's indoor range.

It was made even more tense since Harbison followed a perfect 10.7 on the ninth shot — what many thought would clinch the Bronze for USAMU marksman — with an 8.4 on the final round.

The last shot took Harbison from third to seventh place with a final score of 691.8 out of a total 700 points.

Russia's Artern Khadzibibekov was first with a score of 695.7, followed by Austria's Wolfram Waibel, who shot 695.7. Jean-Pierre Amat took third for France with a score of 693.1



Harbison said he was disappointed, but not heartbroken over his performance.

"I've been training hard for this for a long time," Harbison, a 1995 Pan American Games 50-meter free rifle gold medalist, said. "I can walk away knowing I did the best I could going up against this caliber of competition."

Still, all is not lost.

Harbison, along with fellow USAMU marksman Capt. Glenn Dubis, will get another shot at the Gold Saturday when the two will compete in the men's 50-meter free rifle event.

"I look forward to giving this another shot," Harbison said. "It's the chance of a lifetime to just be here. The only way it could be better is to take home the gold."

B Co, 1st Bn, 15th Inf Regt, rolls past redlegs 20-14

By John W. Peeler
Special to The Bayonet©

Company B, 1st Battalion, 15th Infantry, rolled past Headquarters and Headquarters Battery, 1st Battalion, 10th Field Artillery, 20-14 Tuesday in the 3rd Brigade's post season softball tournament.

The double elimination tournament will decide who will represent the 3rd Brigade in the annual post softball tournament.

The HHB, 1st Bn., 10th FA, jumped out to quick start scoring 8 runs off two singles and a double. Company B, 1st Bn., 15th Inf., aided in the effort by walking four batters, helping the HHB team take an early lead.

Company B was able to muster only 2 runs in the first ending the inning with the HHB team ahead 8-2.

Company B's defense shut down HHB in the second inning, allowing only two runs as Marsh Scott ripped a double followed later in the inning by a home run from teammate Tom O'Donnell. Company B was able to pick up 4 runs in the second, trimming the HHB lead to 10-6.

The second inning would be the last time HHB would have the lead in the game as the Company B team lit up the scoreboard in the third.

Jason Martin gets called out as he attempts to slide past catcher Roscoe Evans.

Company B ripped off 14 runs in the third inning, aided by five walks from HHB pitcher Ronnie Johnson, taking a 20-10 lead over the HHB team.

HHB was able to pick up 4 runs in the top of the fourth inning from the bottom of the order bringing the score to 20-14 in favor of Company B.

The HHB defense trotted on to the field in the top of the fifth inning knowing they would have to shut down the strong Company B offense, which they did.

HHB took their final stab at taking the lead in the top of the fifth inning, but the Company B defense shut the HHB team down.

With the win, Company B advanced to the next round in the 3rd Bde. tournament and a chance to play in the championship game today at 7 p.m. on Essebagger Field.

Mountain cyclists needed for 3rd annual military competition

By Stephen Barret
American Forces Press Service

Military mountain cyclists will compete at the third annual National Military Mountain Bike Championships Oct. 12 to 13 at Snow Summit, near Big Bear Lake, Calif.

This year's competition will run in conjunction with the 1996 Big Bear Fall Classic. Service members not only have a chance to win military medals, they will also compete against civilian cyclists for overall honors.

Military race officials at Peterson Air Force Base, Colo., are hoping for a better turnout this year over the 1995 championships. Last year, less than 10 military racers competed at the championships in Frederick, Md., they said.

"We're sure the biggest problem last year was the word didn't get out (to the services)," said Air Force James Ramsey, spokesman for the military competition. "This year, we're hoping to get the best military mountain bikers by promoting it often."

Ramsey said the 1996 competition will feature two events, held on separate days. The first event is a mountain downhill race — a first for the military championships. He described the race as an off-road, individual time-trial where racers travel a point-to-point downhill course.

"Normally, most courses contain lots of switchback turns, fast, steep sections and jumps," said Ramsey. "Course length is typically two-to-five miles." He said because of downhill hazards, riders typically wear protective "body armor" to protect them from crashes.

On the second day, cyclists take on an 18-mile cross country course. Racers will navigate hills and water hazards trying to record the fastest time in their group.

Ramsey said entrants may compete in either or both events. Unlike traditional cycling events that combine scores from each event for an overall winner, each event at Snow Summit is a separate competition with winners in each category.

Cyclists compete in age and gender categories, with Gold, Silver and Bronze medals going to the top finisher's in each division. Military men and women may compete in the following categories: professional, 19 to 24, 25 to 29, 30 to 34, 35 to 44, 45 to 54 and 55 and older.

Each category winner will also receive a "National Champion" jersey.

Although the Big Bear Classic is open to all mountain bike racers, the military championship limits its entries to uniformed service members. To enter the military competition, service members must pay a $32 entry fee for either event, or $57 for both.

Athletes must also hold a National Off-Road Bicycle Association license. Those not holding a license may purchase a one-day license at each race.

Ramsey said unit commanders may authorize racers to compete while on permissive temporary duty. All travel, lodging and dining expenses are the athlete's responsibility.

"Depending on the caliber of cyclist, organizations such as U. S. Military Sports Association can give limited financial assistance through their grant programs," he said.

Ramsey also suggests competitors make early lodging reservations.

"There are a few Marine Corps cabins at the Snow Summit race site which sleep six," he said. "However, reservations fill quickly."

The closest military base is March Air Force Base, Calif, about 90 minutes away from Snow Summit. Ramsey said he is working with nearby bases to reserve rooms for military competitors.

Currently, most rooms for permissive travel are on a space-available basis.

For more information about the competition, entry requirements and fees, contact Ramsey at (719) 554-5486.

NMRB receives $40,000 to improve fishing ponds

Peter K. Swiderick
Natural Resources Management Branch

Natural Resources Management Branch received $40,000 from Army Communities of Excellence monies that Fort Benning was awarded for being the best Army installation in the world in 1995.

This money was provided to improve fishing opportunities in the fish ponds located throughout the installation. Five major activities will be done from now until fall, mostly by contract.

These activities include pond balance checks, fertilization, liming, weed control and brush removal along the banks to improve access.

One of the most important activities will be electroshocking to determine the balance of the ponds. Electroshocking is done by boat equipped with a generator and electrodes. When the electrodes are placed in the water, an electrical current stuns the fish. Once they come to the surface, the fish are netted, identified, measured, weighed and released. Electroshocking is a commonly accepted practice for determining pond balance and does not harm the fish. The mild electrical shock only stuns the fish for a few minutes and they recover quickly. The information derived from electroshocking can then be used to manage the pond properly.

Analysis of the species, size and general condition of fish will determine if the pond is in balance or not. Balance is a state of equilibrium in the number and size of fish in a pond.

For example, there should be a ratio of about 5 pounds of bluegill to 1 pound of bass. If this ratio changes significantly, then the pond may get out of balance. A pond with many 3- to 5-inch bluegill is called bluegill heavy and is out of balance. There is not enough big bass to keep the population under control and the bluegill get stunted because of lack of food. Some management options for ponds with balance problems include draining and restocking, winter drawdown, supplemental stocking and selective population control.

Pond balance checks will be conducted in King's, Weem's, Victory, Schley, Upper King's, Hedley's, Twilight, Averett's, Kirk's and Snelling ponds.

Another much needed activity is clearing brush from the dams and shorelines for better fishing access. This will be done at Schley, Averett's, Snelling, Kirk's, Upper King's, Twilight and Weem's ponds.

Aquatic weed control is scheduled for Weem's, Hedley's, Kirk's and Sand Hill Duck ponds. Lime has already been applied to Schley, Kirk's, King's, Twilight, Hedley's and Snelling's ponds.

Lime will keep the acidity of a pond from getting too high and make fertilization more effective. Two year's supply of liquid fertilizer is being purchased to fertilize King's, Twilight, Hedley's and Averett's ponds three to four times per year.

There is more to maintaining good fishing in a pond then just stocking fish. The water must be the proper depth, alkalinity and fertility, weeds must be controlled or they will absorb the nutrients in the water and the species of fish must be compatible and they must have enough to eat. Harvest of fish should also be controlled and trash fish should be kept out of the pond.

Olympic softball players receive lesson on life at

Fort Benning

By Brian R. Voller
Bayonet staff writer

Olympic softball players who spent the past two weeks behind a security fence at Fort Benning's Olympic Village emerged Wednesday for a look and taste of what the post is all about.

Players from the Canadian, Japanese and Norwegian teams, along with the Gold medal-winning U.S. team visited Eubanks Field where they learned what it takes to earn the coveted jump wings by themselves jumping from a 34-foot tower.

Airborne instructors from the 1st Battalion (Airborne), 507th Infantry, 11th Infantry Regiment took the softball players step by step through the different areas of concentration students train on during Airborne School.

After several demonstrations of the different devices used to train the Airborne students, and after seeing a jump by the Silver Wings parachute team, the softball players and their families were told they would be allowed to jump from the 34-foot towers.

The first person to jump from the towers was United States pitcher Lisa Fernandez who said she didn't know exactly what to expect when she was jumping from the towers.

"Your stomach drops for a minute," Fernandez said. "It's kind of scary not knowing where you're going because you jump out one in direction and then you go another direction."

Aside from the airborne school demonstrations, the softball players were shown the Battle Lab's Night Fighting Training Facility and were able to watch a ranger-in-action demonstration which highlighted hand-to-hand combat.

The softball players were also allowed to look at different static displays of vehicles used by the Army such as the high mobility, multi-purposed wheeled vehicle, a Bradley fighting vehicle and an M1A1 Abrams tank. Their tour of Fort Benning ended when they arrived at Riverside where they were treated to a barbeque in their honor.

Because of the tour and, after spending more than two weeks on Fort Benning and witnessing the different types of training that occur on post, Fernandez said she has found a new respect for the military.

"I have much more respect now that I've seen you guys waking up at five in the morning doing all of your drills," Fernandez said. "It was great to be in an Olympic setting fighting for your country in terms of athletics and yet being on a post where the soldiers are giving their lives in support of this nation as well.

"It was neat to have that kind of interaction during the Olympics. We both are representing our country, in majorly different ways, but it gave our team more motivation to see what you guys go through, to see what you sacrifice to represent us and to support us."

DoD's focus on quality of life

By Linda D. Kozaryn
American Forces Press Service

Since he started visiting military bases with the services' top noncommissioned officers about three years ago, Defense Secretary William J. Perry has put the Department of Defense's focus on improving quality of life, and that's where he intends to keep it.

Perry talked about continuing efforts to improve quality of life and ways to institutionalize the process during a 20-hour flight to Sydney, Australia, July 24. Keeping pay levels up over the next five years and accelerating family and barracks housing improvements are two top quality of life priorities, according to the secretary.

"The single most important thing we've done on compensation is get salary increases incorporated into the five-year plan," Perry said. "This very significant step puts more stability into the compensation plan than we've ever had before."

The fiscal 1997 budget proposal includes a 3 percent military pay raise and the maximum raise allowed by law for the Future Years Defense Program, fiscal 1998 to 2001.

By law, military pay raises are linked to federal civilian employee pay increases. The Federal Compensation Act ensures civilian employees get an across-the-board pay raise each year based on the Employment Cost Index minus .5 percent, civilian federal employees will get a 2.3 percent boost.

The military must get at least the same amount. For the last few years, the military has received the same amount as civilians, a DoD official said. But for fiscal 1997, DoD requested the higher rate of 3 percent for service members.

DoD cannot relax its efforts to ensure raises are included in the future years' budgets, Perry said, since the funding is not yet appropriated. "The fact that it's in the five-year plan, the fact that it has been endorsed and supported by the key leaders in Congress, makes me confident we're going to be able to maintain that stability in the compensation."

Continuing vigilance is needed to ensure service members get adequate pay, Perry said. "Nailing down the maximum legal pay allowed by law should not be the end of the compensation picture," he said. A quadrennial review board is scheduled to review salary levels, he said.

DoD has put "a very bright laser beam" on military housing and gotten a lot of people interested in housing initiatives, Perry said. "Base commanders are using their base funds for improved housing. Committee chairmen in Congress are putting in additional money for housing — all of that on top of the extra funds put into DoD's budget as a result of the quality of life initiative launched over a year ago."

The fiscal 1997 budget proposal includes funds to build or modernize about 48,900 living spaces in 208 barracks from fiscal 1997 to fiscal 2001. About 2,300 family housing units and 13 support facilities will be built or modernized. Another 4,100 family housing units will be improved. Five fitness centers will be built or modernized.

The need to accelerate housing improvements was dramatically demonstrated during Perry's senior enlisted visits to U.S. bases. The secretary toured barracks with corroded floors and cramped, antiquated family housing. The infrastructure is wearing out, he said, and will be expensive to replace.

While many housing improvement projects are under way, Perry said, the idea to fund housing by bringing in private investors has yet to become a reality. The quality of life task force chaired by former Army Secretary John O. Marsh Jr. recommended that idea and other new ways of producing military housing. In addition to funds for new barracks and new family housing, the fiscal 1997 budget proposal allocated $20 million for service-run, private-venture pilot projects to bring in additional capital.

"To do that, we have to have changes in the law, and we did not succeed in getting those changes this year," Perry said. "I believe it's important to maintain that objective and push hard to get that legislative change next year."

IRS will help Bosnia troops answer tax questions

By Stephen Barrett
American Forces Press Service

Although income tax time is months away, those deployed to operations Joint Endeavor and Able Sentry may have questions about their tax status. These questions may range from their tax-exempt status to adjusted filing deadlines.

The Internal Revenue Service recently issued IRS Notice 96-34, its interpretation of the law President Clinton signed last spring granting tax benefits to Balkan-based troops "as if" they were serving in a combat zone. Included are questions and answers on tax issues the troops face.

Officials with the Department of Defense's compensation office said the IRS patterned the questions and responses on its publication 945, "Tax Information for Those Affected by Operation Desert Storm."

One question deals with how DoD will record hazardous duty zone pay. Service members annually receive a Form W-2 that records income earned over the tax year. To determine the difference between taxable and tax-free income, the IRS said DoD will issue a Form W-2c to those who deployed. Those forms will clearly indicate the service member's exempt earnings. Compensation officials said they are issuing revised 1995 W-2c forms soon.

The IRS notice also addresses questions about civilian personnel supporting the U.S. mission, troop hospitalization, individual retirement accounts, overseas phone calls and home ownership issues. It also provides telephone numbers to stateside and overseas IRS offices that can answer other deployment-related tax questions.

The tax bill Clinton signed is retroactive to Nov. 21, 1995. For warrant officer and enlisted members, all military pay earned in the contingency zone of Bosnia, Croatia and Macedonia is tax free. The law excludes the first $4,250 of officers' monthly pay for 1996 — a major increase from the monthly $500 exemption that existed since 1966 under the old law. All other monthly income remains taxable.

The new law also granted special filing extensions and waivers of interest and penalties for all service members and DoD civilians deployed in support of Joint Endeavor.

The law grants the benefits in what defense officials call a "two-circle approach." The inner circle encompasses the qualified hazardous duty area of Bosnia, Croatia and Macedonia. Service members assigned within the circle or who fly missions in it receive the complete tax benefit of tax-free income, extensions and waivers. The inner circle also includes Serbia and Montenegro, which means U.S. forces would be covered should they need to move into these areas of the former Yugoslavia.

Service members assigned to Operation Joint Endeavor support areas outside the first circle generally fall within the second, wider circle. They are eligible for the extensions and waivers but do not qualify for tax-free income unless mission requirements move them into the inner zone, officials said.

To qualify under the new law, officials said service members must deploy outside the United States and away from their permanent duty stations in support of Joint Endeavor. The extensions and waivers apply at least 180 days after the individual departs the deployment area for home station.

Troops or family members in the United States can direct Joint Endeavor tax questions to the IRS by calling (800) 829-1040. They may also e-mail questions to oje@ccmail.irs.gov.

The IRS also has offices in Rome, Italy, and Bonn, Germany, to assist overseas taxpayers with federal income tax questions. Service members may contact the Rome office by calling 39-6-4674-2560, or via fax at 39-6-4674-2223. The IRS' Bonn Branch is at 49-228-339-2119, or via fax at 49-228-339-2810.

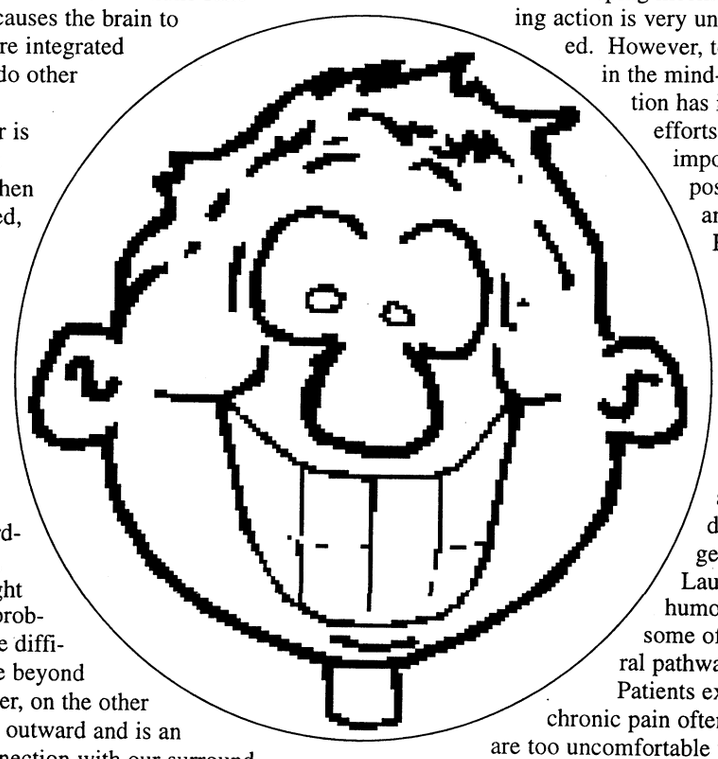
HAPPINESS

Humor's uplifting quality is healthy



By Judy Harris
Fort Stewart Patriot

commentary

Humor is refreshing and uplifting. Fun is, well, fun.

Did you know that there is a physiological as well as a psychological basis for the "boost" you get from laughter?

Several studies have documented the positive effect that humor has on immune function. It also causes the brain to work in a more integrated fashion than do other emotions.

Yet, humor is often the first thing to go when we are stressed, sad or angry.

Negative emotions turn our focus inward. The crying person can't see beyond him or herself. Like an inward-turning spiral, the more caught up we are in problems, the more difficult it is to see beyond them. Laughter, on the other hand, turns us outward and is an avenue to connection with our surroundings — friends, family, and co-workers.

Laughter and crying serve similar functions. They both result in catharsis, the release of tension, stress, or other strong feelings. However, while crying is very draining, laughter is invigorating. It allows us to step back emotionally and put events in a broader context than the immediate, unhappy situation.

It's not that laughter makes things instantly better, but it allows us to view our problems as part of a bigger picture that isn't entirely negative. Just as importantly, we get a break from the weight of sadness, anger or stress.

Frequently this is enough to allow us to think more clearly or cope better with the source of the negative feelings.

Sometimes humor is perceived as an inappropriate response to a somber or dire event, that it belittles the significance of the situation. Its usefulness as a coping mechanism or healing action is very under-appreciated. However, today's interest in the mind-body connection has increased efforts to prove the importance of a positive attitude and having fun.

Recent research has demonstrated that the placebo effect is a direct result of believing that a situation (pain, anxiety, depression) will get better.

Laughter and humor work via some of the same neural pathways.

Patients experiencing chronic pain often feel that they are too uncomfortable to participate in enjoyable activities.

If they can be persuaded to, they find that having fun diminishes their perception of pain. As Allen Klein, author of "The Healing Power of Humor," said, "It's not that our pain itself has diminished; it's just that the space around it has gotten bigger." In effect, we keep pain — whether emotional, psychological, or physical — from dominating our lives.

Yes, but what if you're not naturally funny and can never remember the punch-line to jokes?

While you may not ever earn a living as a stand-up comedian or a clown, you can take humor training. It is increasingly common to see workshops on humor offered as a part of conferences for healthcare professionals. Participants learn techniques for the appropriate use of humor with colleagues and patients and that it's okay to include it in their interactions.

There are also professional publication devoted to humor. For example, the Journal of Nursing Jocularity is published quarterly, and the Humor & Health Journal is published bimonthly, which is available on the World Wide Web at http://www.jocularity.com/

Studies have shown that using humor increases our sense of control over events and diminishes the feeling of powerlessness that is character of most negative situations and emotions .

Remember the old phrase, "fake it till you make it." Even if you don't like it, greet others with a smile; more often than not, you'll get a cheerful greeting in return. You actually see the other person visibly brighten and that will give you a boost, lifting your mood a notch. Life is too short not to be pleasant!

Looking for laughs

Tips for successfully incorporating laughter into your life:

• Start collecting books and tapes of humor that appeal to you, such as humor anecdotes, cat jokes or funny sayings. Begin and end each day by reading one or two.

• Keep it clean. Avoid ethnic or racial slurs, off-color material, anything that makes fun of anyone other than yourself.

• When you hear something funny, share it with someone else immediately by phone, letter, or in person. This will help you remember the item longer and give you the good feeling about brightening someone else's day.

• Collect humorous pins or buttons and wear a different one every day.

• Send a "joke-of-the-week" by e-mail to colleagues every Monday morning.

• Practice looking first for the funny side of every situation rather than the gloomy side.

Olympics: Games have lost much of their luster due to greed, disrespectful athletes

By Rich McDowell
Public Affairs Officer

commentary

During past Olympiads, I used to devour the sports pages each morning to see how the United States of America did, to compare its medal count to the rest of the world's, especially the hated Soviet Union.

Now, I root for U.S. athletes to win no matter what event they are in, but I couldn't tell you what the medal count is. Maybe it's a sign of maturity, or perhaps it's because I don't care anymore. For me, the Olympics have lost some of their luster. Greed is the number one reason. When tickets went on sale and the Atlanta Committee on the Olympic Games tacked on a handling charge, I was turned off.

When ACOG hit the Visa accounts for payment, without knowing who would get tickets, I was chagrined. What a sleazy way to make money, interest on some poor working stiff's Visa account. The poor guy didn't even know if he'd get a ticket. I liken this to legalized scalping.

Add to this the requirement that everyone had to have a ticket to get in, took usury a step too far. Here's a young couple, they show up at the turnstile of the swimming competition with a five-month-old in a stomach pack (backpack worn in front). But since this infant doesn't have a ticket, these kids who work sixty hours a week to make ends meet are turned away. So now are they not only out the price of the tickets, but also the cost of transportation to the venue and the exorbitant parking fees to boot.

Yet look at the venues and there's always a block of empty seats in prime areas. These are reserved for the ACOG big wigs who apparently only come out when key gold medals are at stake.

I watch snippets of the dream team's romp through it's basketball competition and wonder why these pros are playing in the games. Is it because our amateurs lost a few games? If these guys are playing basketball for us, then why don't we have pro baseball players on the diamond? I'm sure Greg Maddux wouldn't mind trying his hand at striking out a few Cubans.

I'm also a little upset about the way athletes handle themselves. Like the sprinter who was disqualified and wouldn't leave the area and when he eventually did, dumped his shoes in a trash can. There's far too much whining. I can handle tears for joy, but all this sobbing over getting beaten in a race is too much. What happened to stoicism?

I'm very much upset over the way our athletes can't seem to figure out that the blue field of our flag is the top part, not the bottom, as they traipse around the track, declaring they are the best. Of course, if I were French, I would be in an outrage over the way the woman runner dragged her country's flag in the dirt.

But before I get to be as snively-nosed as some of the athletes, I can say there was a positive side. I thought our rangers in their smurf suits did a good job in the opening ceremonies. The way we hosted the softball venue was nothing short of Herculean and was appreciated by the athletes. Our military police and the 34 MPs from the Army Reserve's 317th MP Battalion in Florida did a great job in securing the village while still performing routine MP missions on post.

Just as busy as the MPs were members of the 89th Ordnance Company (Explosive Ordnance Disposal). They had teams holding down the fort, working in Columbus and Atlanta.

Cheers too, to the people at the Directorate of Public Works who had to perform the actual billeting duties for team members.

And, of course, there were the nearly 1,000 soldiers from the 36th Engineer Group and 3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division (Mechanized) who also supported the Olympics, many in thankless, out-of-the-way locations. Just like all of our soldiers, they were given a mission and they accomplished it professionally.

So, while all the athletes, and ACOG pooh bahs may not have acted in an Olympic manner that we thought promoted sports in the best light, at least our soldiers did.

CONSUMER FRAUD

Council warns retirees to beware

By Lisa M. Hibbert
Bayonet staff writer

Consumers beware was the theme at the Fort Benning retiree council meeting July 17.

Retired Lt. Col. Charles Mendoza, chairman of the Criminal Justice Department at Troy State University and co-chairman of the Georgia Consumer Fraud Task Force, spoke to council members about being aware of scams.

Today, more money is being made with a telephone than with a gun, Mendoza said. According to FBI reports, consumer fraud takes more than $20 billion each year.

"Incidents of violent crime are going down and basically involve the youth," Mendoza said. "Today, criminals are using different means and are targeting the elderly which is the largest growing segment of society."

Young people generally have more bills than the elderly so criminals target the retired community because they are thought to have money.

One of the more popular scams going on now is with investments. A person will call asking you to invest in a real estate venture, stocks or mutual funds.

"People are sending their money to these addresses and are not receiving anything in return," Mendoza said.

There are things that consumers can do to avoid falling for consumer traps. Mendoza created cards to be kept by the telephone in case of a soliciting call.

He suggests being prepared to hang up on a stranger when the person calling:

- Keeps talking after you've said no
- Wants money for a prize you are told you won
- Offers to send a courier to pick up your check
- Wants a credit card or bank account number
- Insists you make an immediate financial decision
- Offers a fee to recover money that you previously lost
- Makes you feel uncomfortable.

One situation that Mendoza described was how a Fort Benning soldier became a victim of consumer fraud.

"He was told that he had won a prize and needed to call in to claim it," Mendoza said. "The number he called was a 900 number and the guy was put on hold by a recording for several minutes before he finally hung up. When the soldier received his phone bill, he was charged $94 for the call."

There are also several mail order scams that are going on, Mendoza said.

A solar clothes drying system that sold for more than $30 was one such scam. When ordered, the consumer received a cord clothesline and some clothespins.

Recently, an ad ran in a newspaper that read "Last chance to order, send money now," but it never stated what was being ordered.

"People actually sent money to a post office box number," Mendoza said.

People should not be afraid to talk to a salesperson, Mendoza said, but they should be careful about what they say.

Diplomatic solution sought for war criminals

Armed Forces Press Service

WASHINGTON — Using the North Atlantic Treaty Organization forces to seek out and arrest indicted Bosnia war criminals is not part of the military mission outlined in last year's Dayton peace agreement, U.S. Defense Secretary William Perry said July 17.

Apprehending war criminals is not part of the IFOR mission unless they encounter the criminal as part of their other duties, Perry told PBS interviewer Jim Lehrer during "The Newshour."

"If they come across an indicted war criminal, they are authorized to arrest him and they will," he said.

Changing the mission to seek out criminals would take an initiative by the North Atlantic Council, but such an action would be premature since diplomatic efforts have not yet been exhausted, Perry said.

"The people who have the view that this is something that we just snap our fingers and do, do not have a correct picture of it," Perry said. "This would be a difficult and probably a bloody operation. Our military forces are prepared to take on difficult and bloody operations, but not if they're not necessary."

Better Opportunities for Single Soldiers

By Caryn Bumpstead
BOSS President

As I was walking through the east corridor in Infantry Hall, class for the Infantry Officer Basic Course was starting. A young lieutenant, obviously in a rush to get to class, attempted to put his glass bottle into the trash can across the hall from his classroom.

Finding the trash can full, he looked at the Better Opportunities for Single Soldiers recycling can, and saw that the hole was perfect for the trash he wanted to throw away. So, there it went, a glass bottle into the aluminum recycling bin. I shook my head, and he knew that he was wrong. Knowing that he needed to get to class, I was not able to stop him to ask him to remove the trash.

Does anyone know Spc. David Shaffer? Well, I will tell you who this soldier is. Shaffer is the one person on Fort Benning who has to sift through the trash in the aluminum cans. He does not do this only for BOSS to reap the benefits of the program, but also to give a little back to the community. Every can that we recycle is one less piece of trash that goes to the landfill. Since we do not see Shaffer out there collecting the cans, we do not think much of it, but we should.

I will take this opportunity to give you an insight into what he finds in those cans. First and worst, food! This stuff rots in the cans, just imagine. Now for the list — styrofoam, plastic, wire, rope, coat hangers, maps, beer bottles, pool balls, frogs, a snake, stuffed animals, various Army regulations and field manuals and once, an empty syringe. Whew! I do not think I could handle that job!!

Knowing all this "stuff" goes into the cans, and also knowing that someone has to go through them, will you think twice about putting the extra trash into them? Remember, there is always a trash can in the next room, and that room is not very far away.

Volunteers graduate dental program

By Jacqué Hill
Special to the Bayonet©

Eleven Fort Benning volunteers graduated from the first phase of the U.S. Army Dental Activity and American Red Cross sponsored Dental Assistants' Training Program offered at the installation.

The program is made up of two educational phases, classroom instruction and clinical practice.

During the first phase, consisting of three weeks of classroom instruction, participants learn the basic dental assistance skills of preventive dentistry, infection control, basic life support and oral anatomy.

"This program really is detailed," said Spc. Bridgette Swan, a program participant. "They taught us a lot of things about dental hygiene that I never knew. There was a whole mound of information."

These volunteers learned about temperature taking, blood pressure screening, instrument identification, charting and materials mixing as related to the dental field in phase one. Additionally, during the first phase, participants learned safety procedures and precautions, sterilization techniques and how to use protective equipment.

"It's much more complicated than I expected," said Brenda Burditt.

According to Arden McSween, the program's first male participant the classroom phase was tough.

"This program is better than a college-type course," McSween said. "It's more visual and hands on than looking in a book. The instructors are more willing to work one-on-one, and everyone's closer. You get more of an insight here than in a college atmosphere."

The program's instructors, Cathy Hatfield and Paula Winn, also received praise from the participants.

"If I had teachers like them in high school, I would've been more attentive and more productive," said Cindy Kuliczkowski.

Throughout the 250-hour clinical practice phase of the program, participants will perform as trainees in a dental office setting. They will interact with patients and be involved with their dental treatments.

"Right now, I feel very confident in working with patients because of my training," said Swan, who used the program for cross training purposes.

From this two-part training, participants in the Dental Assistants' Training Program are prepared to work in a dental office, according to Hatfield, who was also the program coordinator.

"These graduates are hoping to get employment," she said. "This program is actually set up for them to have a vocation."

Lt. Col. Alberto Lugo, Preventive Dentistry officer, said the Dental Assistants' Training Program is important to the community.

"This program is very important to us," he said. "It's a great partnership between us and the Red Cross We get the benefit of the volunteers' help, they get the benefit of the training and the community gets the benefit overall from the trained assistants."

Anyone interested in participating in the Dental Assistants' Training Program should register as a volunteer with Fort Benning's American Red Cross, Building 1699. The Red Cross will then give the names of those interested in dental assistance training to DENTAC.

va q&a

Department of Veterans Affairs

Q: If I am found to qualify for VA vocational rehabilitation benefits, how many years do I have to complete my rehabilitation program?

A: A disabled veteran found to be eligible generally must complete the rehabilitation program within 12 years of the date of his or her discharge or release from active duty.

Q: Are there any exceptions permitted to the requirement for completion within 12 years?

A: Yes. The period may be deferred or extended if a medical condition has prevented the veteran from training or if the veteran has a serious employment handicap. Disabled veterans may receive services until they have reached their rehabilitation goals, generally up to 48 months.

Q: What is the amount of the assistance provided?

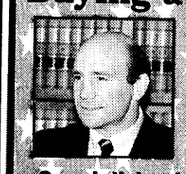
A: Rates vary depending upon whether the training is full-time or less, the type of training, and the number of dependents of the veteran. For example, under the 1996 rate schedule, a veteran with two dependents taking a full-time vocational course in a community college generally would receive $663.94 per month, while a single veteran who is learning skills in an "independent living" program 1/4-time generally would receive $96.97 per month.

Q: What is meant by the term "originations" in describing home loan functions?

A: An origination generally refers to a new home loan secured for the purchase of a property as opposed to a refinance loan. While VA does not assess an "origination fee," which in the private sector essentially is a processing charge for a new loan, VA does have a "funding fee," which varies depending on whether it is a purchase or new construction loan, an interest rate reduction refinancing loan, or another type of loan.

Q: I understand most of VA's home loan interest rate reduction refinancing is under a "streamlined" program, so what is the regular refinance procedure for?

A: The streamlined program covers those who already have VA loans and who wish to obtain a lower interest rate by refinancing with another loan guaranteed by VA. The "regular" refinancing involves veterans who have other private-sector loans that are not VA-guaranteed, including Federal Housing Administration loans, but who then refinance under the VA guaranty, usually to get cash from their equity. There are stricter limitations and additional requirements, such as appraisals, on loans in this latter category.



Q: I defaulted on my VA-guaranteed loan after I lost my job and the bank foreclosed. With this on my record, will it jeopardize my eventually being able to be buried in a national cemetery?

A: Veterans eligible for VA burial benefits must have been discharged or separated from active duty under conditions other than dishonorable or completed the required period of service. Except for disqualification due to a conviction for treason, burial benefits are unaffected by actions that take place following military service.

Year 2000 presents problems for computers

By Jim Garamone
American Forces Press Service

It sounds like a joke, but it's not. With less than four years until the year 2000, scientists and technicians around the world are trying to teach computers how to tell what year it is.

The problem is most computers use only the last two digits when computing years. Things are fine through '96, '97, '98 and '99, but '00 means problems and money.

Computer companies and government computer experts have known of the problem for years. The crux of the year 2000 problem is many computer systems and software applications cannot tell '00 means 2000, not 1900.

How much money? According to the Gartner Group, a research firm following this problem, it could mean $300 billion to $600 billion worldwide, and Gartner spokesmen say their estimate may be low.

Department of Defense is following the problem, but doesn't have an estimate yet of how much the fix will cost the department.

"We will have to examine millions of lines of code," said Bob Molter, a computer scientist with the Office of the Assistant Secretary of Defense for Command, Control, Communications and Intelligence.

Molter said the industry faced a similar problem in the 1960s. During that decade, programmers often used only one digit to indicate dates. When 1970 came around, computers saw only the 0 and assumed it was 1960 all over again. Programmers had to find the systems affected, make the changes, then test them. In 1970, there weren't that many computers, and few computers "talked" to each other.

Today, there are millions of computers, and most speak to each other. Finding the code that needs to be changed and making and testing the changes will be an enormous job.

"Many people are in denial about this or believe we'll find a 'silver bullet,'" Molter said. "Denial doesn't work. There's a real problem here; automated tools will help, but there will be no tool that will solve every problem. Networks really add to the complexity of this. Your system may be safe, but another system you deal with may have the problem. This could affect your data."

Some systems have already crashed because of the date problem, officials said. Examples are those dealing with long-range inventories.

"Often the systems will continue to run, but just do the wrong calculations," Molter said. "This is like a virus set to go off in the year 2000. Many physical security access systems are set to date input, and you may not even be able to get into your office. Crazy stuff is going to happen if we don't do something."

Computers run the world's banking systems. They are at the heart of the communications industry. The New York Stock Exchange couldn't function without computers. The year 2000 problem affects these and other vital systems.

One example of a bizarre computer glitch is making a simple telephone call: Imagine calling a friend to wish him Happy New Year at 11:59 p.m. Dec. 31, 1999. You watch the ball drop in New York's Times Square on the television and hang up at 12:01 a.m., Jan. 1, 2000.

If the year 2000 problem isn't corrected or it's corrected imperfectly, you could receive a telephone bill listing that call as lasting 5256 million minutes — 100 years.

The problem mostly affects older programs. In many cases, computer technicians simply didn't expect programs to still be in use around the year 2000. In recent years, programmers have understood the problem, and DoD information management contracts, for instance, have begun stipulating that any new computer software or systems must handle the year 2000 problem.

In some cases, the solution will be to take older software off the market sooner than anticipated.

"You can expect a number of firms to go out of business because of this problem," Molter said. "They won't be able to come up with the money to pay for the changes that must be made in the software."

It is going to be expensive, and businesses and government are going to have to pay big bucks and get no added benefit from the money.

"The money will be spent to allow your system to continue as it's presently operating," Molter said. "That bothers a lot of people."

The money will probably come from existing budgets, but there are some jurisdictions using creative approaches. Nebraska is considering adding a tax to cigarettes to pay for the fix in that state.

DoD: Quality of life issues concern NCOs

Perry attributes many recent quality of life initiatives to the influence of the services' top NCOs and the quarterly installation visits they make to meet enlisted service members. Only the services' top NCOs and the senior enlisted assigned to the visited base accompany him.

"These visits were immediately responsible for identifying the importance of quality of life to me, and specifically, motivating me to put forward the quality of the life funding increase I requested over a year ago from the president," he said.

There's also an intangible benefit from the visits - an understanding developed between the civilian leadership of the Pentagon and the enlisted force, Perry said. "I gained a better understanding of their needs and motivations, and I think they were able to gain a better understanding of what I was trying to do as secretary and what the department's leadership was trying to do.

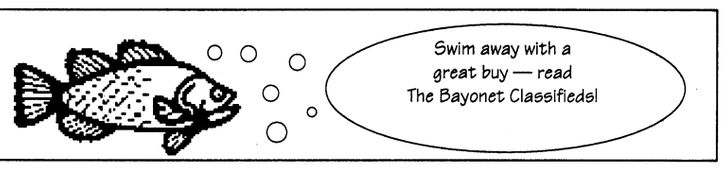
"The bonding and mutual understanding that can develop between the leadership and the enlisted personnel may be one of the best reasons for maintaining the senior enlisted meetings," Perry said. He said he expects the visits will become a DoD institution with future defense secretaries going on the road with the enlisted chiefs.

Perry is expanding his network among the NCO corps. He recently spoke at the Navy's senior enlisted academy in Newport, R.I., and is scheduled to address the Air Force NCO Association in Houston and visit the Army's Sergeants Major Academy at Fort Bliss, Texas, in August.

This fall, the Air Force enlisted corps plans to induct Perry into the Headquarters Air Force Order of the Sword during an all-enlisted ceremony at Andrews Air Force Base, Md.

Perry will join former Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger as only the second civilian to receive the Air Force chief enlisted corps' highest tribute. Only those who provide outstanding leadership and support to the enlisted corps may be inducted into the order.

Chief Master Sgt. of the Air Force David Campanale, the Air Force's top enlisted member and adviser to the Air Force chief of staff, said he nominated Perry because of the secretary's "great focus" and dedication to "taking care of the enlisted folks," especially on quality of life issues.



Perry's tough stance against the "High-One" proposal, which threatened to cut military retirement pay by as much as 9 percent, led to its defeat in Congress. Perry had vowed to "drive a stake" through the heart of the High-One proposal. "And he did," Campanale said.

The secretary also championed the "one plus one" dormitory occupancy standard that will give single enlisted members private rooms. "It's a tough initiative, and it's going to cost a lot of money. But he's willing to pay the expense because he sees the worthiness in it. If he had done nothing else, that would have been worthy of consideration."

But it is Perry's willingness to talk to and listen to the troops and act on their recommendations that Campanale said has distinguished his term as the defense secretary.

"He has made a big difference in helping folks out in terms of extra money for base housing, for training facilities," Campanale said. "He has done a lot of great things for our military - across the board - not just the Air Force."

FUTURE LEADERS

PLDC trains soldiers to become NCOs

By Brian R. Voller
Bayonet staff writer

It is the first step in the noncommissioned officer ladder. It is where enlisted soldiers about to take their first steps into the rank of sergeant learn how to make the correct decision on a moments notice. It is the Primary Leadership Development Course and it is four weeks of training that change a soldier from a follower to a leader.

"PLDC is the first place to train the up and coming NCO's," said 1st Sgt. Alvin Woodard Jr., PLDC first sergeant. "They learn the basics of what a noncommissioned officer needs to know.

"They learn land navigation, leadership, drill and ceremony, physical fitness training and they have a full field training exercise, and all of that is geared around basic leadership. I like to call it the foundation of an NCO."

Students report to PLDC when they reach the status of a promotable specialist or corporal. Their first week begins with inprocessing, orientation and a physical fitness test, Woodard said.

From there, the students move into different classes, such as the wear and appearance of the military uniform. They also go over drill and ceremony, training safety and the history of the NCO.

Woodard said during the first two weeks, the students spend a lot of time in the classroom. The students also begin to learn how to lead proper physical fitness training, but the primary concentration for the first two weeks of training is leadership. Different lessons, such as introduction to leadership, maintaining discipline, duties and responsibilities of an NCO and several other classes are stressed and then finally tested with the leadership one and two exams.

After the students successfully complete the first two exams, the next part of the course is what Woodard describes as the most challenging portion of the PLDC class — the land navigation qualification.

"On Thursday and Friday of the third week, the students move into map reading," Woodard said. "On that Saturday, we have part one of land navigation, and we conduct the land navigation practical exercise. On Monday, we have the actual land navigation test.

"In the class I have now, we had 32 first time no-gos out of a class of 102," he said. "Land navigation is our biggie. On Tuesday, the students who didn't pass the land navigation portion of the test get retrained and then get an opportunity to retake the test."

After passing the land navigation practical exam, the students concentrate on "training the force." This is where students learn how to teach classes and instruct soldiers in the field, Woodard said.

The final test for the class is their field training exercise, which lasts for three and a half days, and then they clean up and prepare for graduation.

Woodard said PLDC differs from the training the students received prior to coming to PLDC because when they arrive at the company, they take over.

"We have a student first sergeant, we have platoon sergeants, team leaders and squad leaders," Woodard said. "The team leaders and the squad leaders are evaluated positions for record, and we evaluate the student first sergeant and the platoon sergeants position, but those positions are not for record.

"Students run the course as far as formation times, maintenance and getting from point A to point B," he said. "I always have one of my instructors with them so they don't get too far off course, but they are running the show."

Woodard said the biggest advantage the students get from the class is the hands-on type of instruction they receive from the school.

"The experience the students get from being in the different positions is the biggest advantage of the course," Woodard said. "They receive a mission, develop a plan and then carry it out. They lead physical fitness sessions, they call cadence when they are the ones in charge. It is that hands-on experience, you can't beat it."

Woodard said he believes the PLDC on Fort Benning is graduating quality soldiers and the type of NCOs he would like to receive if he was in a regular unit. He said he would be proud to have 100 percent of the soldiers who graduate from PLDC serve under him because they are good NCOs.

Spc. James Jackman plots out the points he must find before going out on the land navigation practical exercise.

Force XXI

New card improves processing of POWs

By William Bradner
Army News Service

FORT HOOD, Texas — Force XXI has many faces. Moving our Armed Forces into the 21st Century's "digitized" battlefield means high-speed, highly visible applications, and conjures up images of satellite links, computerized fire control, "real-time" computer maps and laser-guided weapons.

But it's not all color-matrix screens and lasers. Sometimes the cutting edge is as simple as changing the way people do things.

One example of the less glamorous, but highly practical, side of Force XXI is the use of the Multi-technology Automated Reader Card while processing prisoners of war. The system was tested last week during the Internment of Prisoners of War, Counter Intelligence and Enemy Prisoner of War Exercise, a corps-level exercise held at Fort Hood.

The exercise was hosted by the 504th Military Intelligence Battalion, and included more than 1,000 soldiers from III Corps, the 1st Cavalry Division and the 4th Infantry Division. It also included Marine, National Guard and Reserve units and a contingent of observers from the Canadian armed forces.

The MARC is essentially a credit-card-sized identification card with a microchip embedded in the plastic. It is used to store the internee's data, eliminating the need for paper files. Currently the chip holds two kilobytes of information — approximately 12 pages of data — but an upgrade being considered now will boost that number to eight kilobytes, according to system designers.

What makes this card useful, however, is the ability to read and write to that chip using hand-held interfaces, said Staff Sgt. Joseph K. George of 2nd Platoon, 4th Military Police Company, 4th Infantry Division.

The MARC isn't new — the Navy is already using the system in a limited way with great success — but Force XXI has created an interface, or bridge, between the MARC system and the Prisoner of War Information System. This has greatly reduced the manpower and effort involved in caring for prisoners of war, according to Capt. Sherry L. Maniere, personnel officer for the 391st Military Police Battalion, 300th MP Command.

Managing an enemy prisoner of war and civilian internment site isn't just a matter of putting up fences and locking a gate. Each internee is inprocessed, and personnel and medical files are created and maintained.

"It's just like your 201 file, or like inprocessing into the Army," Maniere said.

"We have to keep records of everything, from what they were carrying when they were captured to a complete medical and personnel file," she said.

In the past, those files were created and filled — sometimes in triplicate — as the POW processed into the internment center.

When the new system is fully operational, each inprocessing station will be equipped with a hand-held computer or laptop into which the appropriate data will be keyed. The prisoner will carry his card from station to station. When he's finished inprocessing, it will be used as his identification card.

The card will contain information on his internment from day one until his release, and will include a complete history of his internment. Every meal, every visit to the clinic, every request will be logged onto his data chip..

Two of the most time-consuming aspects of the former prisoner-of-war information system was the final records check and data entry of all the prisoners' information into computers for transmission to higher headquarters.

"We've completely eliminated those steps ... freeing up three or more soldiers right there," Maniere said.

Savings in time and manpower for our soldiers isn't the only benefit. The speed and ease of data gathering and transfer means the International Red Cross receives POW data faster, making notification of the POW's unit and family more timely.

"This is going to cut our processing time in half, and I know it's going to make a big difference," she said.

Because the system is new and currently being tested, the soldiers used both the traditional paper records and the electronic records on the MARC card during the exercise. While the dual recordkeeping meant twice as much work, it helps illustrate how useful the system will be once it's fully tested and operational.

"In the first 16 prisoners we inprocessed, there was one whose sweat made the ink on the paper run. We couldn't read it and that set us back while we tried to figure out who he was. We had to pull him from the wire and reconfigure everything using his arm band. That kind of problem is eliminated with the MARC system," she said.

Part of the success of the new system stems directly from the soldiers Beta testing the system and partly from the lessons learned trying to intern soldiers and civilians during Desert Storm.

"We basically took the PWIS used in Desert Storm, then added enhancements and fixed problems that were identified," according to software designer Sharon K. Godfrey of the U.S. Army Software Development Center in Washington, D.C.

"The old PWIS was automated, but not to this extreme," she said. "The MARC card is just an enhancement of PWIS, not an end in itself," she said.

Soldiers receive help avoiding insects

Army News Service

Soldiers deployed in the Balkans in support of Operation Joint Endeavor don't have to get "ticked-off" by the little blood-sucking insects and other pests. It's all in the cards.

The cards contain information telling troops how to prevent and treat tick bites and avoid diseases. These cards are courtesy of the U.S. Army Center for Health Promotion and Preventive Medicine, Aberdeen Proving Ground, Md.

Two different cards, one for the soldier to carry and one bifold card providing additional guidance for use by officers and noncommissioned officers, were developed to alert soldiers to the health threat from ticks and rodent-borne diseases in the Balkan Theater.

USACHPPM began distributing the tick and rodent disease information cards to U.S. troops in the Balkans in March. More than 78,000 cards have been provided.

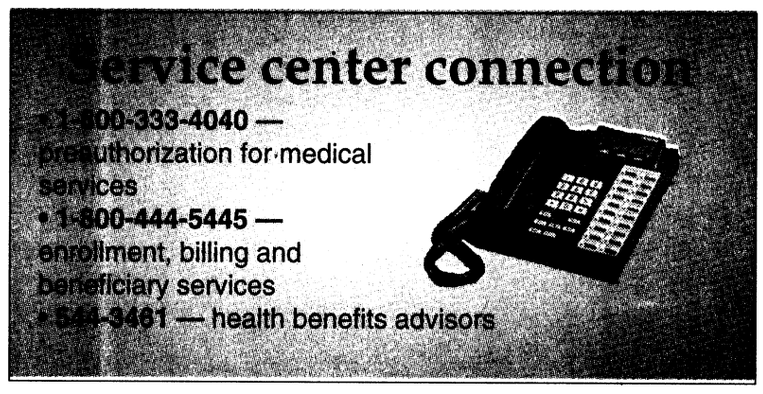
TRICARE

Program enhances care, choices



By Amy Durham
Special to The Bayonet©

The military has been working for years to effectively transition thousands of soldiers into the civilian workforce as the U.S. Armed Forces continue to "downsize."

Now the Department of Defense is transitioning military families into Tricare, the military's new health care system.

"Tricare has caused a lot of anxiety in the community," said Col. Everett W. Newcomb III, Martin Army Community Hospital commander and director of Health Services for Fort Benning. "A lot of people have heard the term and they are not really familiar with the provisions of this program. Consequently, they are very concerned."

To alleviate those concerns, MACH officials and representatives from Humana Military Health Services, have been briefing the many segments of Fort Benning's health care beneficiary population.

"Congress realized the military was getting smaller," Newcomb said. "The line units are coming down by about 37 percent, and the Army medical department is also drawing down by about 31 percent."

The problem exists, Newcomb said, because the number of eligible health care beneficiaries has only dropped 10 percent.

Congress recognized this disparity in numbers and mandated that DoD create a new military health care program to reflect the changing needs, according to Newcomb, and to accomplish four objectives. Program mustÚ

- Provide at least the same quality of care
- Improve access
- Develop choices for patients so that they can actively participate in deciding how they are going to

Officials want health care recipients to understand

Three options

By Amy Durham
Special to The Bayonet©

Since Martin Army Community Hospital officials and Humana Military Health Services representatives began briefing Fort Benning's beneficiaries, they have been trying to answer the two-fold question, 'What is Tricare and how does it affect me?'"

According to Col. Everett W. Newcomb III, Tricare is about choices, and each are significantly different.

"Those differences involve the amount of choice they have in each one of these (plans)," he said.

Tricare Standard

The option with the greatest flexibility is Tricare Standard, basically the old CHAMPUS program with a new name. With Standard, there is no need to enroll in Tricare. Participants use their military identification cards to receive care from any physician in the civilian community.

But Newcomb warns that individuals who choose this option realize the costs for Tricare Standard are the greatest of the three options. There are co-payments for every visit to a physician, deductibles that health care recipients must meet before the Tricare program even begins to pay and significant costs incurred for both inpatient and outpatient visits in the civilian health care community.

Tricare Extra

Combining the flexibility of choosing civilian providers at lower costs is the key to Tricare Extra. This option provides beneficiaries the opportunity to seek care from a network of civilian physicians who can provide care at a lower cost than the Tricare Standard program.

"Our Humana partners have developed this network of civilian providers who have agreed to see our patients at a reduced rate," Newcomb said.

However, individuals who opt for Tricare Extra will also pay a deductible although their co-payments will be less than with Standard.

For example, someone who chooses to receive health care through the Extra plan, from a civilian physician in the preferred provider network, is going to pay a lower percentage of a lower number because that physician has agreed to charge a lower price to be a member of the Tricare network.

Tricare Prime

The most significant difference in the way the military receives its health care is reflected in the Tricare Prime option, which operates more along the lines of a health maintenance organization. Individuals and families enrolled in Prime can select their primary care manager, or doctor, at the military treatment facility.

"That person's going to manage the individual's health care needs," Newcomb said.

If the primary care manager determines the individual must be seen by a specialist, the PCM will make arrangements for that specialty appointment and visit.

While active duty personnel are automatically enrolled in Tricare Prime, active duty family members, retirees and retiree family members must actually enroll in the program to participate.

"This is an option where you have to put pen to paper and say this is the option I want to choose for my family members," Newcomb said.

Retirees: Older beneficiaries wonder how the new system effects them

By Amy Durham
Special to the Bayonet©

[redacted]ear and frustration can be unhealthy.

It was frustration that led the military to change its health care system, and it is fear most retirees feel as they make the transition to the new Tricare plan.

"Tricare is a word that strikes fear into a lot of us because it represents change," said Col. Everett W. Newcomb III, Martin Army Community Hospital commander, during a Retiree Open House briefing in May.

It was the unknown that put retired Army Staff Sgt. Harold McClelland and his wife, Lillian Whitene, in two seats near the front of Marshall Auditorium. Retired since 1969 and living in Cedar, Ala., 74-year-old McClelland is diabetic and has emphysema, and has undergone two recent operations to rule out cancer. Before the briefing, he said he was concerned the new Tricare plan would cut him and his wife completely out of the MACH system.

"I want to keep getting treatment at Fort Benning," he said.

His wife agreed. "He has a lot of problems," she said. "He has excellent care here and we're scared he's going to lose it."

Medicare-eligible retirees

Newcomb assured the over-65-Medicare crowd they would not be cut out of the system at MACH.

"It's important for our folks over 65 to understand that I feel a very strong commitment to continue providing health care for (beneficiaries) over 65," Newcomb said.

"Consequently, I set aside the same quantity of health care we have provided historically both on an inpatient and an outpatient basis for over-65 beneficiaries."

Although McClelland, his wife and other retiree families who are eligible for Medicare are not able to enroll in the Tricare plan, Newcomb assured the group they will still be seen on a space-available basis just as they have in the past. In addition, over-65 retirees and survivors can participate in the Tricare Service Center's health care provider program, a new option stemming directly from the Tricare plan. The program is designed to help retirees find civilian health care providers in the beneficiary's area who accept Medicare payment.

"Also, the Tricare Service Center is available to help them fill out Medicare claims forms," Newcomb said, "and explain their medicare benefits, all of which can be very confusing."

Of the several hundred retirees and spouses who listened through the mid-May Tricare briefing, and those since, Retirement Services Officer Friede McDonald said, "Many are frustrated because the hospital has always taken care of them, and now they have decisions to make (about health care)."

Other retirees

Retirees, family members and survivors under the age of 65 definitely have decisions to make under the new health care program. The biggest decision will be choosing the most cost-effective plan because retirees will have to pay out-of-pocket expenses in each of the three options.

For those who choose the Tricare Extra or Tricare Standard option, there are no annual enrollment fees. However, annual deductibles ($150 for individuals and $300 for families) and the percentage of fees charged to retirees for outpatient and inpatient care are substantial. The Tricare Prime option requires retirees to pay an annual enrollment fee — $230 for individual or $460 for family coverage, but their out-of-pocket costs, if any, from that point on are considerably less than with Standard or Extra..

Although retirees under 65 will incur costs in each of the three Tricare options they will also have a distinguishable advantage over same-age retirees who received care under the Civilian Health and Medical Program for the Uniformed Services plan.

Retirees and family members who are enrolled in Tricare Prime will have priority for care at MACH over those not enrolled in the prime program — even active duty family members.

As thousands of retired service members decide whether priority of care is enough to enroll in Tricare Prime, or if Extra or Standard are more flexible, Newcomb suggested they talk with representatives at the TSC to help them decide which of the three options is best for their specific needs.

"It is important to remember, however, that regardless of their age or the option they choose, if they receive care at MACH it remains free of charge," Newcomb said.

Retirees who have questions about Tricare may contact the Health Benefits Office at MACH at 544-3461.

BASS club helps scouts earn merit badges

By John W. Peeler
Special to The Bayonet©

With a little help from the Fort Benning Bass Anglers Sport and Sportsman Society Club, scouts from the Fort Benning District Boy Scouts of America Troop earned their fishing and motor-boating merit badges at Uchee Creek Army Campground and Marina Saturday.

Sixteen scouts earned their merit badges, according to District Training Officer Al Lugo.

Rigging, fishing lines, components of motor boats, state laws, boating safety, identification of water markers and rules of the waterways were among some of the areas in which the scouts received instruction.

BASS Club member, Harry Hall, told the scouts the first thing they needed when using motor boats was the ability to apply common sense.

"Common sense is deductive reasoning based on knowledge and experience," Hall said, which is a definition he learned while working with a group of Boy Scouts years ago.

"Knowledge is what you are taught, like in school. What I will teach you here today will be the knowledge you need to be a safe boater."

After each area of instruction, the scouts were tested by the instructor covering all facets of the class and graded as either a go, or a no-go.

Class instruction culminated with hands-on practice. After the boater-safety class, scouts had the opportunity to put what they had learned to use by taking a motor boat out on the Chattahoochee River.

Once out of the boat dock area, BASS instructors turned the boat over to the scouts for the practical exercise.

Both the boater-safety class and the practical exercise were required for a scout to earn his motor boating merit badge.

For the fishing badge, scouts had to rely on what they were taught and a little luck.

Each scout had to rig his own fishing line and catch two different species of fish to qualify for the badge.

Michael Merva said his catch consisted of blue gill. or so he thought.

John W. Peeler

Boy scout Michael Merva, 11, son of Dawn Merva, takes control of the 16-foot john boat from John Aprill as Fort Benning BASS club members help 16 scouts earn their fishing and motor boating merit badges.

At the day's end with fish stories abound, each scout who earned their merit badges learned fishing and boating was more than just putting a line or motor boat into the water — thanks to the BASS club.

Tricare: New program enhances care

receive their health care

• The new program can not cost any more than the former Civilian Health and Medical Program for the Uniformed Services.

From those stipulations, DoD developed Tricare, which serves the Air Force, Navy and Army. Replacing CHAMPUS, Tricare is designed to serve active duty personnel and their families as well as retirees, family members and survivors under 65.

"It (Tricare) really does expand some of the capabilities and choices," Newcomb said, "and frankly, I believe, it expands the quality of care we are able to provide."

> "It (Tricare) really does expand some of the capabilities and choices, ... and frankly, I believe, it expands the quality of care we are able to provide."
> — Col. Everett W. Newcomb
> MACH commander

Humana partnership

To make this program work, MACH, as part of the Southeast Region, entered into a partnership with the civilian contractor Humana Military Health Services, headquartered in Louisville, Ky.

"HMHS is a very large corporation that's been dealing in health maintenance organizations for years and we feel lucky to develop this relationship with Humana," Newcomb said.

While the overall responsibility for providing health care at MACH and in the Fort Benning area remains the Army's, Humana's involvement will help expand the Army's capability to provide care for thousands of soldiers, retirees and family members.

"Their role is to help augment our services; to help us develop the Tricare program," Newcomb said.

Humana is responsible for developing the network of civilian physicians in the Tricare Extra program, which, according to Newcomb, is expanding on a daily basis. Not only is the list of specialists growing, Newcomb said that three local hospitals — Doctors Hospital and St. Francis Hospital, both of Columbus, and Houghston Hospital in Eufala, Al., — have signed up under the new program as preferred providers.

"Humana is here as a partner to help us expand our capability and to bring health care with greater choices and greater access," Newcomb said, "and we're hoping even better quality than we've enjoyed in the past."

The major difference between the old health care system and the new program is that people have choices to make. And there are some significant differences, Newcomb said.

The bottom line is that everyone has a choice, Newcomb said, based on the families' specific needs. While active duty and retirees may be seeking care based on various criteria, there are general rules of thumb that apply.

General rules

While active duty soldiers are automatically enrolled in the Tricare Prime option, their families are not. In the past, family members of soldiers have had priority over retirees and their dependents. But with the Tricare Prime program, that privilege has changed. Individuals enrolled in the Prime plan have priority before anyone not enrolled. So retirees and their family members who opt for Prime care will have priority for appointments over active duty family members who are not Tricare Prime beneficiaries.

However, Newcomb stressed that no one will be closed out of the system if they do not enroll in Prime, or elect to use Standard or Extra.

"If you're an eligible beneficiary at MACH," he said, "you're going to continue to be eligible for care; you're going to forever be eligible for care at MACH, on at least a space-available basis."

Eligibility for Prime care at MACH is based on where you live. The catchment area is an approximate 30-mile radius around the Fort Benning hospital.

"When we drew that circle around Martin Army Hospital," Newcomb said, "if zip codes were more than 50 percent in that circle, we included them. If they were more than 50 percent outside that circle, we excluded them from our catchment area."

So individuals living inside that radius who enroll in Prime should select their primary care manager from the list of doctors at MACH. Those living outside the catchment area have an option.

"You can ask for a primary care manager, or family doctor, in the civilian sector who might be closer than MACH," Newcomb said, "or you can waive the 30-minute rule and request care from a PCM at Martin Army Hospital."

So what happens when soldiers or their families enrolled in Tricare Prime at MACH, move on to their next duty station? As part of their outprocessing procedures, they will disenroll from Tricare Prime at MACH, and re-enroll at their next duty station.

"During their actual transportation, soldiers will be covered as they've always been covered by the military," Newcomb said. "Their families will be covered under Tricare Standard, the old CHAMPUS program.

Because this is a very cumbersome procedure, Newcomb said the DoD and Congress are looking at ways to change it.

"They're trying to make this enrollment transportable," he said, "so if you move from one duty station to another, you're covered under the Tricare Prime program."

While officials work to correct this issue, Newcomb said it is important that eligible beneficiaries make decisions now about the program that is going to best serve their needs.

Soldiers, retirees and family members who have yet to decide which plan is best for their needs can call 800-444-5445, or stop by the Tricare Service Center, Building 9204, Section C, adjacent to the hospital, and talk with representatives.

The Fort Jackson Leader

The following is a list of abbreviations and terms associated with Tricare. Feel free to cut this list out as a reference.

• CHAMPUS — Civilian Health and Medical Program of the Uniformed Services; a cost-sharing program that helps military families and retirees pay for civilian care where military care is not available. Tricare is a CHAMPUS program.

• CHAMPUS allowable — The amount CHAMPUS regards as a fair price and will help pay for a given service. Any excess charges must be paid by the patient.

• Balance Billing — Billing by a provider who charges more than the CHAMPUS-allowable fee. The patient must pay the difference.

• Beneficiary — Anyone eligible for military health care, including active-duty or retired military and their family members.

• Medical Treatment Facility (MTF) — In these articles, refers to military hospitals or clinics.

• Co-payment, Co-pay, Cost Share — A certain percentage of the cost of care, which the patient must pay even for care covered by CHAMPUS.

• Deductible — An annual amount that a patient must pay out-of-pocket for care before CHAMPUS begins to share costs.

• Direct Care, In-House Care — Care given in a MTF by military or civil-service providers.

• Primary Care Manager (PCM) — A patient's first provider for any medical need. PCMs make referrals for tests and specialty care and monitor the adequacy and continuity of care while avoiding unneeded care. PCMs are usually physicians but some are physician assistants or nurse practitioners. In Tricare Prime, PCMs will be part of MTF staff whenever possible.

• Empanelment — Assigning a patient to a PCM.

• Enrollment — Signing up for Tricare Prime at the Tricare Service Center. Enrollment is for one year. Re-enrollment is automatic unless one acts to disenroll.

• Health Care Finder (HCF) — A person who makes test and specialty-care appointments for patients. Under Tricare, the HCF will be a contractor employee who makes appointments with providers in the MTF or contractor network.

• Managed Care — A system in which patients need not shop for their own care. PCMs act as patient advocates, monitoring all care, avoiding needless care and referring patients to economical care sources. Such systems negotiate discount fees with providers and stress keeping people healthy through health promotion and preventive medicine.

• Preferred Provider Network — A group of civilian practitioners organized by Tricare contractors to supplement military direct care in Tricare Prime and Extra. In exchange for contractor referrals, PPN members discount fees (to CHAMPUS allowable or less) for Tricare users, and file patients' claims. PPN members must meet the same professional standards as MTF providers.

• Tricare Prime — Health maintenance organization-type option offering true managed care. Usually an MTF forms the nucleus of a Tricare Prime site, supplemented by a contractor's PPN. One must enroll for this option.

• Tricare Extra — Voluntary option that patients can choose case-by-case, merely by using a contractor's PPN. No enrollment is required.

• Tricare Standard — This is the same as standard CHAMPUS; patients can select any provider. No enrollment is required.

• Tricare Service Center (TSC) — A "one-stop shopping center" for beneficiaries, operated by the Tricare contractor. Tricare Prime enrollment, HCF services, etc., are found here.

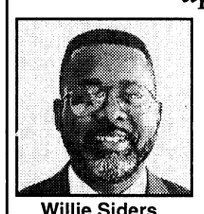
Q. May I enroll my family member who is attending college in another area?



A. There are several options available in this scenario. First, the family does not have to enroll as a unit and may choose to keep Tricare Standard or Extra benefits for the student. This could be quite costly, especially if supplemental insurance is needed.

Second, if the student attends school within the same region in which the family is enrolled in Prime, he or she could be assigned to a primary care manager in that location if available.

Third, if the student attends school within a region where Prime is not offered or outside of the region, he or she could retain Prime benefits but would have to call the Tricare Service Center Health Care Finder 800 number for authorization for non-emergency services.

Finally, if the student attends school in another region and wishes to be part of the local Prime program in that region, the student could be enrolled as an individual family member and if applicable, pay the individual enrollment fee.

Laughter aids mental, physical well being

Radford University

Parents naturally feel responsible for providing their children with food, shelter and the necessities of life. But what about working to provide your children with one of the best tools for dealing with life — a sense of humor?

That's the advice of Radford University physical and health education professor B.B. Strum.

"Some families regularly practice humor and some don't, but children need to develop a sense of humor," she said. "It's an important part of life. Laughter is a great stress reducer and a great coping tool."

Studies have documented the stress-reducing power of laughter.

"The physical results of 100 good belly laughs a day equate to the results achieved by running a mile," Strum said. "Laughter stimulates endorphins (the body's natural pain killers) and helps to create a feeling of well-being.

"One of the first things we try to do after a baby is born is to try and get it to smile," Strum said. "That's not just because smiling is important but because smiling and laughter have a valuable effect on our total frame of mind."

Strum believes an emphasis on humor benefits all of society.

"If people can learn to laugh at their situations maybe they won't be so easily frustrated or angry and resort to violence. It's hard to laugh and stay tense."

Families should try to find ways to work humor into their lives, even when going through a physically or emotionally stressful time, Strum said.

"We should try to find something humorous each day," she said.

Q. I called a satellite dealer to request information about their satellite system. The dealer's sales representative asked me some questions and I answered them. They promised to send the information out to me. Later that afternoon, I arrived home to find the dealer's installation crew waiting for me. The installation crew explained that they were here to install my new satellite system. I told them they were mistaken, I only requested information on the satellite system not installation. A workman explained that it was for a free trial period. I replied that my husband needed to be included in the decision and I had to go and pick him up from work. When I returned home with my husband, they had already installed the system. The workman gave my husband paper work to sign but he refused. He told them to remove the system immediately, they said they would the next day. The next day they removed the system but charged us $300 for labor cost, incident to the removal. We wrote the dealer a check so they would leave us alone. Is there anyway they can do this to us?

A. No, the satellite dealer cannot force you to pay for the installation cost of the satellite system. You did not agree to buy the system. The Sale of Goods Act applies to this situation. The Act requires that any sale of a good, which costs more than $500 from a merchant must be in writing. In your case, you and your husband did not sign the contract (the paper work). The satellite dish and other components qualify as a good under the Act. Therefore, the dealer failed to have a written contract with you as required by the Act for this satellite system.

The satellite dealer cannot successfully sue you in court without providing a written contract. A phone call or even a credit check fails to meet the written agreement definition. However, beware of signing documents that a salesperson claims is only for a credit check. Read the fine print. Many people are misled that the document they are signing is only for a credit check, but in reality it is a contract for goods or services.

The satellite dealer's actions at your home were illegal. A salesperson who is asked to leave your property must do so. If they fail to leave you should call the military police or local police or sheriff department. Their failure to leave is trespassing. Remember, it is not impolite to say "Please leave, I am not interested." If you allow a salesperson or installer to remain, they will use hard-sales tactics on you. This pressure usually results in the consumer purchasing or agreeing to something they do not want or need. If a salesperson comes to your home or calls you on the phone to sell a product, ask for the brochure. This gives you time to think about whether you need the product or not. Never accept samples or agree to free installation without knowing the full details. Remember, nothing is for free. In your case, you may file suit against the satellite dealer for civil trespass and any damage they caused to your home by installing the system without permission.

Neither you nor your husband contracted for the satellite system. The dealer did not have permission to install the system. You legally may cancel the check you wrote to the dealer. However, if the dealer already cashed the check, and refuses to return the money voluntarily, a lawsuit will have to be filed to recover that money.

If you have had a problem with satellite dealers please contact the Legal Assistance Office at (706) 545-3281.

TOO WISE TO WORRY

God strengthens daily living

By Steve Bounds
1st Battalion, 38th Inf. Regt., ITB

Don't worry about it. That sentence is very powerful.

Sometimes it's used to tell someone to mind his own business. Perhaps that may be a rude way to tell someone else not to rudely stick his nose into your personal affairs. However, I like to think of this sentence in a more positive way.

reflections

In Psalm 37, the phrase "fret not" is God's way of saying, "Don't worry about it." He tells us not to worry about those who live in sin. (Verse 1) We should not allow our worry to tempt us to live in sin. (Verse 8) God assures us that the wicked will be cut down soon enough.

Of course, we should follow Jesus' teachings to love our enemies. We should always be careful to love the sinner while we hate his sin. We should make every tactful effort to show him the error of his way and lead him to give his life over to God through faith and repentance.

It's always easier to say "Don't worry about it" than it is to actually practice it. It's hard not to think about something. For the next five minutes, try not to think about little pink bunny rabbits. Whatever else happens, don't think about little pink bunny rabbits.

Of course, there is not such a thing as little pink bunny rabbits so it should be easy not to think about such creatures. What are you thinking about now, little pink bunny rabbits?

The only way not to think about something is to think about something else. Have you ever forgotten to do something that you promised someone else that you would do? I'm sure you didn't lie to the person when you made the promise. You probably became preoccupied thinking about something else. We will only learn not to worry in the same way. God has given us four principles in Psalm 37:1-8 to help us not to worry.

Verse three tells us to "trust in the Lord." Trust is the most important part of our spiritual lives. Trust is necessary for us to receive God's salvation. Hebrews 11:6 tells us: "Without faith it is impossible to please him; for he that cometh to God must believe that he is, and that he is the rewarder of them that diligently seek him."

Trust is a prerequisite to worship God, whether in private or public. Trust is necessary to live the Christian life. No one will obey God's commandments without first believing that they are really his commandments. Trust makes us realize that we receive our daily needs from God.

Verse four tells us to "delight in the Lord." To delight in something is to have a strong affection for it. When we delight in something we think about it often and learn every thing we can about it. When we delight in a person, whether that be a spouse or best friend, we want to get to know that person and spend time with him.

If we truly "delight in the Lord," then we will want to know him. We will study the Bible to learn all that we can about him from his own written revelation. We will want to spend time with others who know him and share our knowledge and experiences. We will also want to spend time talking to him in prayer.

Verse five tells us to "commit thy way to the Lord." When we commit to something, then we subordinate our own desires to it. Those of us in the military have all taken an oath that has committed us to the Constitution and the President as well as our superior officers. We are bound to obey them even when we may not understand their reasons or may disagree with them. In the same way we must decide to serve God faithfully no matter what may happen.

Don't forsake your commitment to the Lord even when you don't understand what he is doing. His wisdom is far greater than ours. He really does know what is in our best interest. God always saves his very best for those who leave the choices to him.

Verse seven tells us to "rest in the Lord and wait patiently for Him." This is perhaps the most difficult of all. We all know what it is like to wait on a spouse or child to get ready for an event we plan to attend.

However, the idea here is not to sit down and do nothing while we wait. It is rather to continue doing what we know to be right while we wait; to avoid doing what we know to be wrong while we wait; to spend time in prayer talking to God while we wait, and to insure that our relationships are right with God and others while we wait. It also carries the idea of endurance while we wait.

Wait for him to give you the strength when you need it most. Isaiah 40:31 tells us: "But they that wait upon the Lord shall renew their strength; they shall mount up with wings as eagles; they shall run, and not be weary; and they shall walk, and not faint."

A wise pastor once shared the following thought that I'll never forget: "God never gets in a hurry, but he is never late."

Let's remember these four principles from Psalm 37:1-8, to trust and delight in the Lord, to commit to the Lord, and to wait patiently on the Lord. As we focus our thoughts on the Lord, it is difficult to worry. We can truly practice God's command: "Don't worry about it."

Tomorrow: Parents' flame lights future generations

By Tim Atkinson
203rd Forward Support Battalion

Like thousands of others, I recently had the opportunity to see the Olympic Torch in Columbus. The cheer from the crowd encouraged the runners as they proudly passed by.

reflections

The runners did not have to carry the torch very far until he or she passed it on to the next runner. More than 15 security officers surrounded the runners. A van, preceding the torch bearers, carried those who had completed their course. Also, a runner accompanied the torchbearer.

What a vivid portrait of the awesome responsibility to be someone who influences others in so many ways. Whether we are a family member, a service member or a retiree, our lives touch so many.

My wife and children can tell if I'm bearing the torch or not. The way I live to a large degree influences how my children will carry the torch. We don't often realize the influence we have on those around us. We touch people, especially our families, either in positive or negative ways.

I saw the faith of my parents as I was growing up. Something about my parents' faith helped me to want to pass the torch to my children. I hope my children will continue in their faith in God in order to pass it on to their children. Someone has said that we parent our great, great, great grandchildren. We often overlook the power of being a father or mother.

The military member serves as a role model around the world. The scenario of a service member convicted of rape in Japan is an example of the negative repercussions one can have. Capt. Scott O'Grady is an example of a positive influence as he heroically survived behind the lines in Bosnia and gave God the glory.

The Bible says "We are surrounded by so great a cloud of witnesses, let us lay aside every weight, and the sin which so easily ensnares us, and let us run with endurance the race that is set before us." (Hebrews 12:1)

Even as we cheered the Olympic torch bearer on, it is a marvelous thing to think that those faithful who have departed this life are cheering for us.

Someone is depending on us to pass the faith along. Debbie Boone and Phil Driskel sang the duet "Keep the Flame Burning." The lyrics ask God not only to keep the flame burning but to light our way with the fire of his spirit. The song also asks God to let it spread to whomever comes near it. This is my prayer too as I carry the torch and pass it along. How are you doing with your spiritual Olympic torch run?

Soldiers, families open homes for fellowship

Officers Christian Fellowship

For those who've been wanting a time and place outside of Sunday morning worship to learn more about God, the Fort Benning Officers' Christian Fellowship provides that chance.

The group, which was founded in 1943 as a nondenominational worldwide ministry to the members of the U.S. Armed Forces and their families, hosts several home Bible studies, each week, to help focus believers serving the military to better serve God.

These are informal studies in the comfort of individuals' homes and are a great place to meet with fellow believers at Fort Benning.

Following are the weekly opportunities.

• Monday (Infantry Officer Basic Course), 7 p.m., 501 Wickersham St.; coordinated by Lt. Col. Kim Kadesch, 689-4725

• Thursday (neighborhood), 7:30 p.m., 204 Austin Loop; Capt. Steve Russell, 685-9276

• Friday (neighborhood), 7:30 p.m., 612 Perkins St.; Capt. Michael Latzka, 687-1154

There is also a lunchtime study in Infantry Hall, Room 450, at noon each Wednesday. Contact Capt. Dave Cannon at 480-9226 for more information.

INTRAMURAL SOFTBALL

Knights collar Red Dogs in finals

By John W. Peeler
Special to The Bayonet©

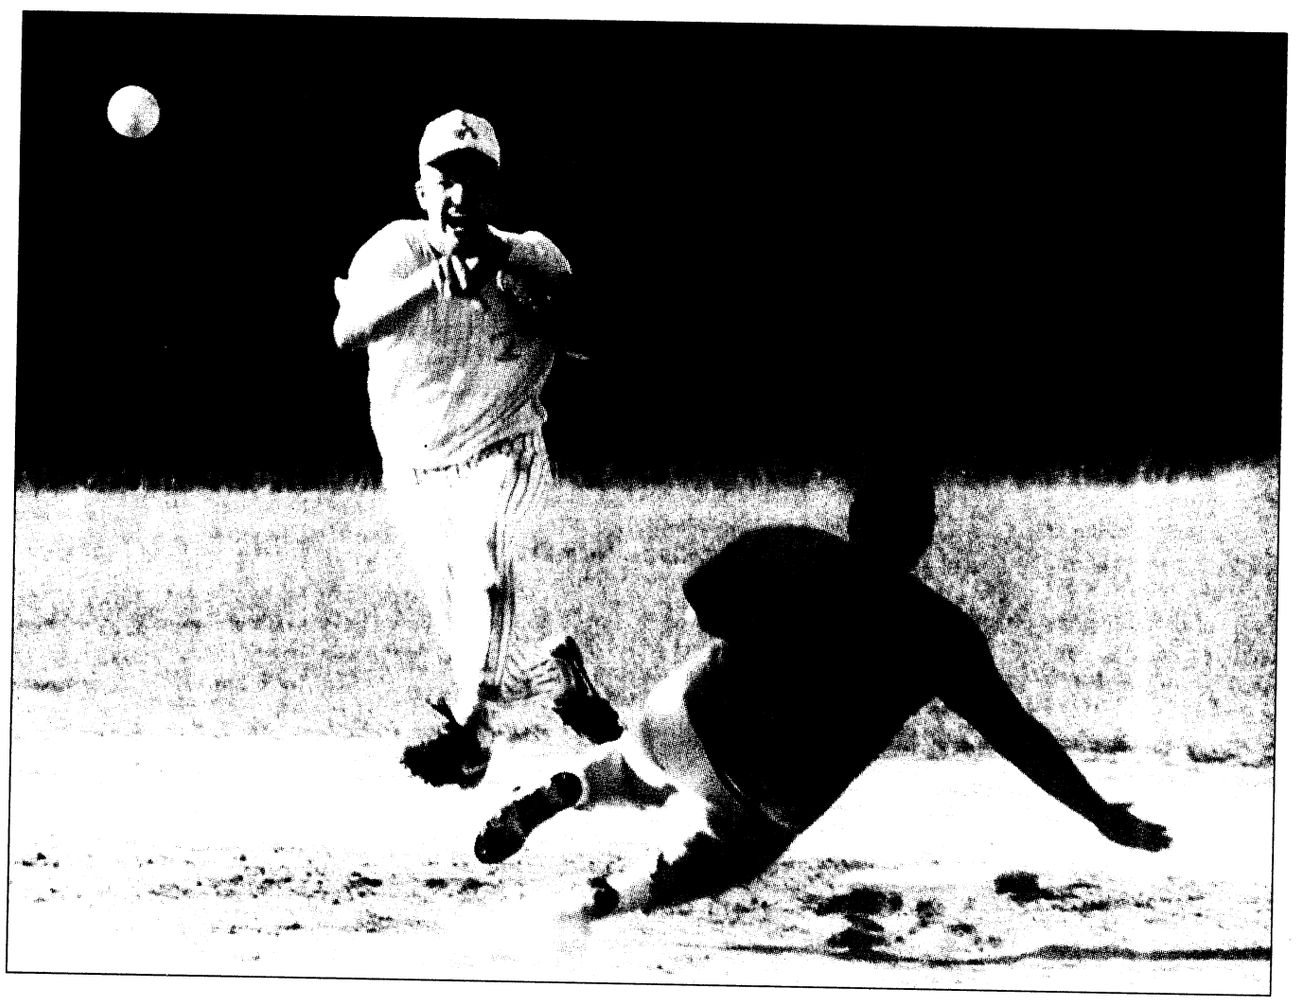
The Knights from Company A, 317th Engineer Battalion fought their way through the losers bracket to become the 3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division (Mechanized) softball champions and "King of the Hill" Monday at Essebagger Field.

The Red Dogs of Service Battery, 1st Battalion, 10th Field Artillery discovered that being in the winners bracket of a softball championship game does not necessarily guarantee a championship, as they fell to the Knights in two straight games 8-5 and 6-5 to see their dreams of a championship fall by the wayside.

In the first game, neither team was able to get anything going and went three up and three down in the first inning on strong pitching and defense.

In the second inning, the Knights collected 5 runs on 5 hits with pitcher Ronnie Houston allowing only one run to the Red Dogs.

Solid pitching and fielding was the key for both teams in the third inning as neither team was able to push across a run with the Knights collecting the only hit of the inning.



The fourth inning saw the Knights add 2 more runs while their defense stifled the Red Dogs.

With the score 7-1, The Red Dogs were able to hold the Knights to 1 run while collecting 3 runs sparked by a lead-off double by Brian Warren.

The Red Dogs were able to pick up one more run in the bottom of the seventh inning, but it was too little, too late as the Knights took the victory 8-5.

With both teams now in the losers bracket, a second game between the two teams would determine who would call themselves champions.

Both teams elected to go with the same starting pitchers from the previous game for the second outing.

John W. Peeler

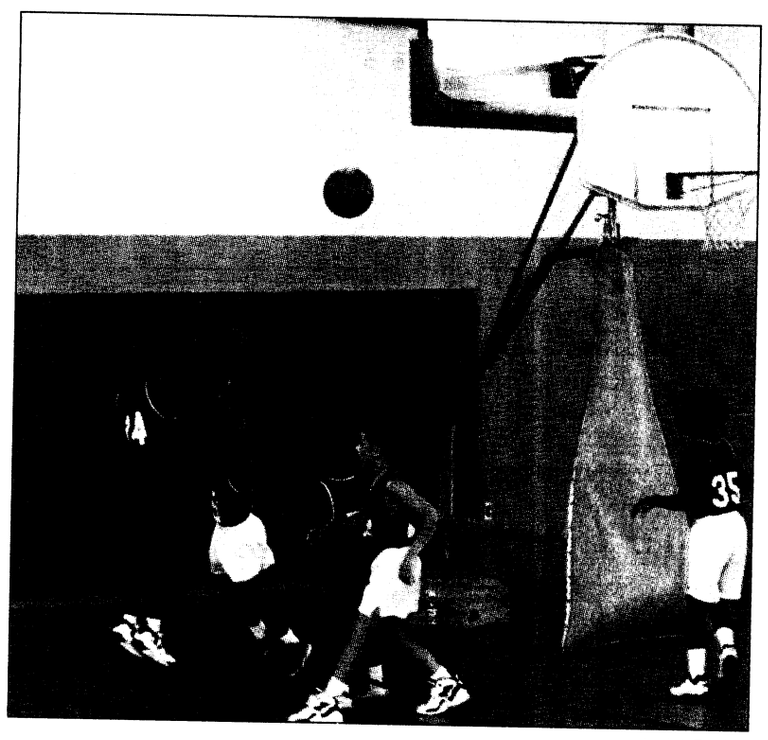
Chris Pehoke slides under shortstop Christopher Carman in an attempt to break up a double play.

Houston started off the game for the Knights with some tough pitching, keeping the Red Dogs off the scoreboard in the first. Offensively, the Knights kept the pressure on by scoring 4 runs.

Houston, who forced 14 fly outs in game one, continued to force Red Dog batters to fly out in the top of the second inning, keeping the score 4-0 going into the bottom of the inning.

The Red Dogs answered the challenge by scoring 2 runs in the third, 2 in the fourth and finally took the lead 5-4 with 1 run in the sixth inning while shutting out Knights batters.

The Knights were able to knot the score at 5-5 in the bottom of the seventh, and had a chance to win the game on a long drive to center field by Wessell Wessell.



Wessell, waived on by the third base coach, tried to stretch the triple into a home run and was thrown out at the plate.

The out took the fire out of the Knights as the win slipped away in the seventh.

Adding insult to injury, Wessell was thrown out of the game for the devastating hit he put on the Knights catcher at the plate, a hit that cleared the benches.

Houston set the Red Dogs down in the top of the eighth, giving the Knights another chance at victory.

This time, Knights batters answered the call, scoring in the bottom of the eighth, and with it the designation of champion and "King of the Hill."

Shooters get final shot at Olympic Medals

USAMU Public Affairs Office

The final four U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit shooters competed in the '96 Summer Olympics in Atlanta July 24 to 27.

David R. Alcoriza shot in the men's double trap qualification matches July 24 and after two rounds was in 10th place with 91 shots out of 100. After the final 50 shots in the last round, Alcoriza was in a three-way tie with Korea and China for sixth place with a score of 138, at 3 points behind the first place shooter. There was a shoot-off to determine who would take sixth place and advance to the finals. Out of six shots, Alcoriza missed one, as did the China shooter; the Korean shooter did not miss any and advanced to the finals. Alcoriza ended up tied for seventh place.

outdoor outlook

Fishing tournaments — Georgia State Parks have scheduled several events where serious anglers, as well as beginners, can start reeling in their catch.

Some events offer families a chance to spend time together in the summer sunshine, while others challenge seasoned fishermen to land their largest bass yet.

Most state parks have boat ramps and docks, and many rent boats and sell bait. All tournaments are free unless otherwise noted. A $2 park pass fee is charged per vehicle.

There will be a children's fishing rodeo Aug. 31 at Reed Bingham State Park in Adel, Ga. for children 14 and under.

For more information, call (912) 896-3551.

To reserve a campsite or fully equipped cottage, call (800) 864-PARK.

Fort Benning BASS Club — The Fort Benning Bass Anglers and Sportsman Society Club conducts its biweekly meetings on the second and fourth Tuesday of each month.

The meetings are at the Don C. Faith Middle School cafeteria at 7:30 p.m.

Membership is open to active duty soldiers, retired military personnel and Department of Defense civilian employees and their family members.

For more information, call Steve Ward at 569-5705.

Canoeing — Georgia State Parks will be hosting canoe trips for beginning and experienced paddlers on Saturdays at various parks.

Participants can explore some of Georgia's most scenic waterways while on guided canoe trips.

Park staff will explain basic canoeing techniques and interpret natural surroundings while leading canoers on day-long trips.

Paddlers with a sharp eye may see beaver, otter, king fishers, great blue herons, turtles or other wildlife.

The cost is $15 per person, which includes canoe, paddles and life preserver.

The parks that will offer these canoe trips are:

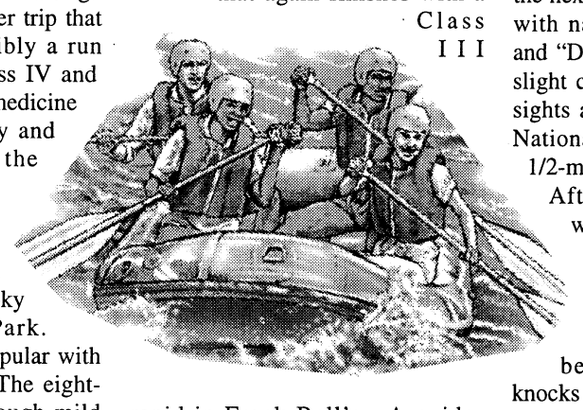
- High Falls State Park, Jackson, Ga., Aug. 10, Sept. 14 and Oct. 19. Call (912) 993-3053 to register.
- Watson Mill Bridge State Park, Comer, Ga., Aug. 10. Call (706) 783-5349 to register.
- Panola Mountain State Park, Stockbridge, Ga., Sept. 21. Call (770) 389-7801 to register.

A $2 park pass fee is charged per vehicle.

Outdoors Women Workshop — The Department of Natural Resources, Wildlife Resources Division is offering a weekend Becoming an Outdoors Woman Program at the Eagle 4-H Center Oct. 4 to 6 in Eatonton, Ga.

The program is designed to teach both beginners and those with outdoor experience the skills needed to participate in a wide array of outdoor activities.

Cost for the weekend is $125 before Sept. 15, which includes lodging, meals and use of equipment. The registration fee is $150 after Sept. 15.



Registration for the workshop is open now and is available on a first come, first serve basis. Contact the Wildlife Resources Division at (770) 918-6400.

Nantahala offers rafting experience

Nanthahala Outdoor Center

WESSER, N.C. — The Nantahala Outdoor Center offers a way to outsmart the hottest of these summer days — whitewater rafting.

Maybe it is a mild river trip that holds the cure, or possibly a run through exhilarating Class IV and V rapids. Whatever the medicine may be, trust the quality and experience offered by the NOC.

The Nantahala River is located in the Nantahala Gorge just outside of the Great Smoky Mountains National Park. This river seems to be popular with beginners and novices. The eight-mile run carries you through mild Class II rapids for most of the three hours. The trip culminates with a powerful blast through Nantahala Falls, a Class III rapid.

NOC has its main facilities on the Nantahala River. Guide-assisted raft trips and raft rentals offer two different ways to "skin this cat." Raft and inflatable kayak rentals are available through the NOC only on the Nantahala.

The French Broad River is reputedly the second oldest river in the world. This is a Class II river that again finishes with a Class III rapid in Frank Bell's. A guide-assisted raft trip down this historic river will take you along densely forested river banks and rich farmlands.

NOC offers both full-day and half-day trips ranging from five to eight miles. Just north of Asheville, N.C., the French Broad can be a quick trip out of town or a timeless historic adventure.

The Ocoee River is best described as a roller coaster. Consistent Class III rapids keep the rafter guessing behind which rock the next big drop is lurking. Rapids with names such as "Table Saw" and "Diamond Splitter" give only a slight clue of what to expect. The sights and sounds of the Cherokee National Forest accompany this 4 1/2-mile trip in Eastern Tennessee.

After the summer, the Ocoee will be known internationally as the river that hosted the whitewater Olympic events.

The Chattooga River is best known for the hard-knocks it gave Burt Reynolds in the movie "Deliverance." Rafters will experience Class IV and V rapids at the "Five Falls" if spending the day on Section Four, or will have a trip through mostly Class II (with a Class IV rapid at "Bull Sluice") water on Section Three.

For more information about NOC rafting trips, please call 800-232-7238.

Madeline and Betra Beek of Holland, members of the Netherlands Olympic Fast-Pitch Softball team, relax in the Briant Wells Fieldhouse pool July 19. Proud to represent their country, the Beek's said they were disappointed the games would not be televised. The sisters said the team was prepared for the heat because the Netherlands simulated an environment for them that duplicated the hot and humid weather conditions of Georgia. Despite a win over Puerto Rico July 27, the team failed to advance to the next round of play.

Post gets new GC

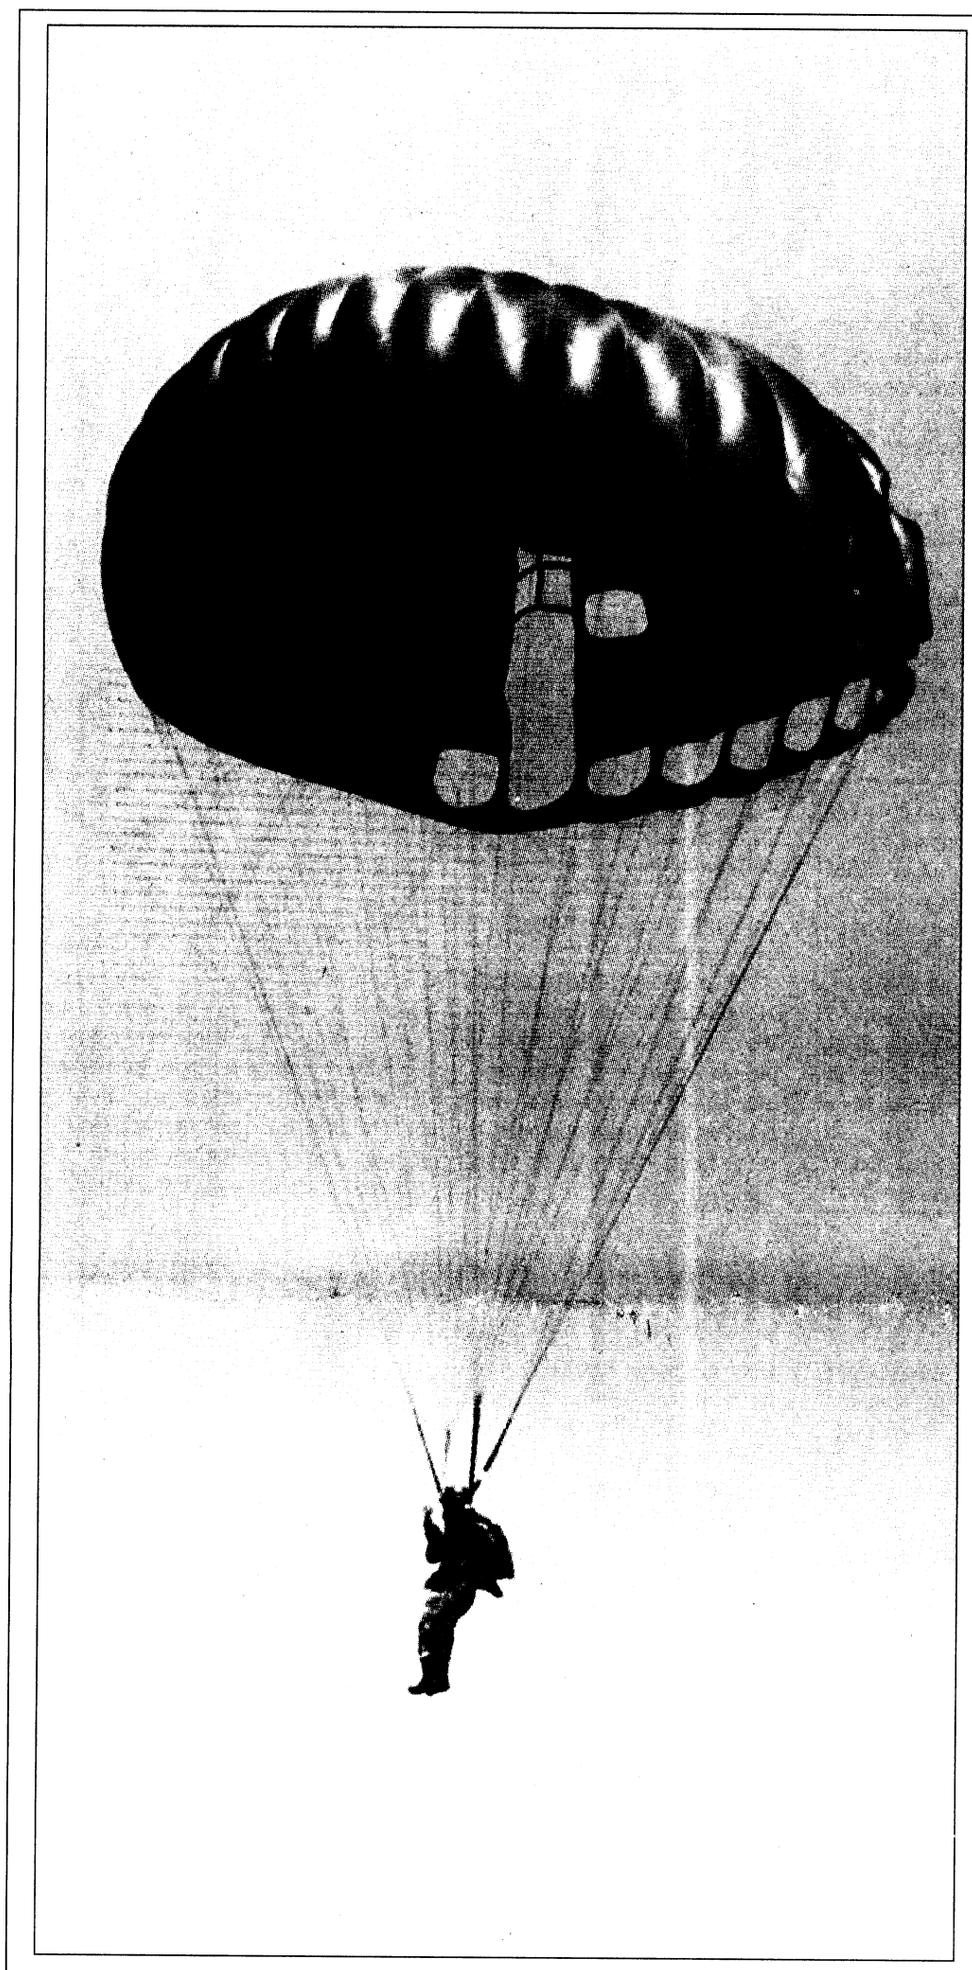
By Lisa M. Hibbert
Bayonet staff writer

Maj. Gen. Carl F. Ernst, post commanding general passed the garrison flag from Col. Richard L. Rutledge to Col. Byron D. Greene III in a change of command ceremony on York Field, Aug. 8.

"Although Rutledge is a good man and he will be missed, it has always been the Army way that when one soldier departs, another soldier falls in to take his place," Ernst said. "Today the strong command team that is leaving is being replaced by an equally strong command team — the Greenes, Ron and Nina."

Former deputy commander of the 29th Infantry Regiment, Greene returns to Fort Benning after serving as the Director of Plans, Training and Mobilization at Fort Jackson, S.C.

In his acceptance speech, Greene told the audience how happy he and his family are to be back at Fort Benning.



"There could not possibly be a more fitting place for two infantry brats to return to than this place where we met and grew up," Greene said. "Nina and I are proud and humbled to rejoin this community of excellence and the outstanding installation team."

Some of Greene's previous assignments include commander of the Bradley Fighting Vehicle Instructor Detachment and chief of the Mechanized Infantry Doctrine, both at Fort Benning, and commander of the 2nd Battalion, 28th Infantry Regiment at Fort Jackson, S.C.

A distinguished military graduate of Wofford College, Greene also holds a masters' degree in sociology from the University of South Carolina. His awards include the Meritorious Service Medal with three oak leaf clusters, the Army Commendation Medal, and the Army Achievement Medal, the Expert Infantryman Badge, Parachutist Badge and the Ranger Tab.

Greene and his wife, Nina, have two children, Cristel and Robert.

Rutledge, the outgoing commander, leaves Fort Benning after two years of service as the garrison commander. His new assignment is the deputy chief of operations at the Community Family Support Center in Alexandria, Va.

Red Cross verification no longer needed for emergency leave

By Stephen Barrett
American Forces Press Service

WASHINGTON — Commanders do not need American Red Cross verification to approve emergency leaves, a top Department of Defense personnel official announced.

Carolyn Becraft, deputy assistant defense secretary for personnel support, families and education, said DoD is trying to change a widespread belief that commanders must receive Red Cross verification before approving leaves. Instead of verifying every situation and delaying leave, Becraft said commanders should use the Red Cross only when they question the validity of the leave request.

In clarifying the defense leave policy, Becraft said DoD wants to reduce the burden on service members, families and commanders caused by verification delays.

"Most service members are mature and responsible individuals whose emergency leave needs can be considered on their own merits," said Becraft.

Defense policy says commanders should grant leave to any service member for family emergencies involving members of their household, immediate family and sole surviving blood relatives. By granting leave, commanders allow their troops to be home with family during hardship and meet family responsibilities.

Becraft said commanders questioning an emergency situation must exercise care to ensure the emergency exists. In those cases, she said commanders should contact a military service agency near the emergency site or request help from the American Red Cross in approving leave.

Although verification is not required, Becraft said the need for American Red Cross services continues. She said the Red Cross remains vital to communities and small towns as a bridge between home and service member.

Military personnel can help their families prepare for emergencies by compiling information the Red Cross or military authorities will need. Jesse Cowart of the American Red Cross' national headquarters said this information includes the service member's name, rank, Social Security number, military unit and location, home and duty phone numbers and the nature of the emergency.

In a medical emergency, Cowart said, families should provide a hospital name and location, the doctor's name and phone number and the illness prognosis. In case of death the Red Cross would need the time of death and funeral date. He said this information will help commanders granting emergency leaves and the Red Cross in sending emergency messages.

Commanders looking for additional guidance on granting emergency leave can review DoD Directive 1327.5, paragraph F.5. Army discusses its leave policy in Chapter 6, AR 600-8-10, while Air Force guidance is in AFI 36-3003. BUPERS Manual 30280 sets the guidance for Navy and Marine Corps personnel.

Secretary: US won't give in to terrorism

By Linda D. Kozaryn
American Forces Press Service

WASHINGTON — Defense Secretary William Perry recently applauded the folks in Atlanta who did not let a terrorist bomb keep them away from the Olympics. According to Perry, staying home would have meant giving in to terrorism.

"It was heartening to see the return of thousands to Olympic Park in Atlanta as soon as it was reopened," Perry told members of the American Bar Association in Orlando, Fla., Aug. 7. Terrorism, whether domestic, international or aimed at U.S. military forces — is like a "chronic disease," he said. "You must fight it even as you have to live with it."

Perry quoted Richard Haas, a former member of the National Security Council staff, who recently said: "We cannot and should not ground our planes, shutter our embassies, hand in our passports, bring all our troops home, close the government or shut down the Olympics. If we stop being who we are and stop living a life worth living, we hand the terrorists their greatest victory."

The United States is a relatively easy target for its enemies because it is a free and open society, Perry said.

"Domestic terrorism is a crime against the order and tranquillity of our nation," he said. "International terrorism is an assault on the peace and stability of the world."

Terrorists reject the rule of law and basic decency, Perry said. They are "cold-blooded and fanatical, but also clever." Unable to achieve their goals through conventional diplomatic or military means,

DoD holds travel education conference

By Rudi Williams
American Forces Press Service

ST. LOUIS — More than 300 key players in revamping the Department of Defense's temporary duty travel system recently gathered here to discuss the pilot test programs and their benefits to travelers and the government.

The new system, being tested at 27 sites worldwide, among other changes will help eliminate travel horror stories, reduce costs, simplify paperwork, and scrap pages of regulations.

Finance officials hope the new travel system proves easier for customers to use, and they encouraged conferees to offer suggestions to improve it. The officials met with service and DoD agency representatives from an 11-state area called Defense Travel Region 6. This region will be the first to receive a contract with a commercial travel organization.

"We modeled the conference on what we've learned so far in the pilot program," said Karen Alderman, director of DoD's Re-engineering Travel Transition Office. "We've learned that you have to introduce the concept, give people the information and a little time for it to settle in.

"We're explaining the concept of operations to people in the field to ensure they understand the information we're giving them," Alderman said. "We'd like them to offer suggestions they think will help improve the system."

One goal is to treat commanders and travelers as honest and responsible customers.

"We know we're always going to have a certain element — about 2 percent — that are not going to be honest customers of the system," Alderman said. "But the old process is too long and burdensome with layer on layer of controls and specifications. It's cumbersome, paper-bound and overchecking, and we still haven't caught the 2 percent of abusers. A nd the old system gives us no management information, but is extremely costly and not customer friendly."

DoD is concentrating on bettering the travel system for the 98 percent of honest customers with new management information technology and a different philosophy. But abusers will not be forgotten. Officials said they hope new technology will ferret out cheaters.

Reserve component representatives voiced concerns about not participating in the pilot programs.

"The pilot programs don't extend to the reserve components because they have a complicated method of paying entitlements," Alderman said. "Their travel orders are also their authority to be paid their regular active duty pay. There are so many part-time arrangements that it wasn't practical to include reservists in the first shot out of the door. But we're studying ways to include them later."

DoD decided to simplify entitlements for active duty components first.

"We didn't know what to expect from our audience because we're giving a big package of changes to field operations that didn't necessarily volunteer to be pilot organizations," Alderman said. "But this audience is real receptive to the change package and the concept. The devil is always in the details, but when we talk about the vision and policy and process changes, people say, 'Gee, I hope this happens soon."

A representative from a major Army command told Alderman that after a commanders conference where all financial managers were briefed, the new three-star general asked, "When is my voucher going to be paid in two days?"

"That was a cute story, because commanders have had bad experiences with the old system for years,"Alderman said. "Not only do they want to improve services for their people, they'd like to have improved service for themselves, too."

In 1994, DoD chartered a task force to initiate a review of the temporary duty travel system.

The 27 pilot organizations were named in June 1995. Their representatives conferred in the Pentagon last September.

"Their pilot tests were approved in December and January, but they didn't get up and running until recently," Alderman said. "We've extended pilot testing for six months, which will end in March 1997. We'll have an interim conference in October to see where they are."

FAMILY VALUES

Americans develop permissiveness

By Jack Loudermilk
Army News Service

commentary

Did you know that there's a group of people in Colorado Springs, Colo., who say they stand for family values? They are frequently featured in newspapers or on television, always trying to encourage the general population to "do what is right and good."

They are against everything that seems to be popular: violence, excessive drinking, vandalism, truancy, prostitution, child abuse, abandonment, unwed mothers, gangs, drugs, etc. These people actually want parents to take responsibility for the welfare and education of their children. They have even gone so far as to insist that adults behave responsibly.

Can you believe the nerve of these people?

If they had their way, parents would show up at middle school faculty and parents' meetings to discuss the school's desire to teach the human reproduction system to sixth, seventh and eighth graders. It's so much less complicated when parents don't show up.

Chances are that these kids don't need to be taught about sex in an educational institution. Let's face it, just about anywhere you go, you will hear children using profanity. They already know all the words. Those who don't can pick up new words just by listening to the adults. We don't need any goody-two-shoes telling us how to educate our kids. We can let our neighbors' kids handle that.

If anything needs to be changed, let the politicians handle it. We only need to be concerned that all these value motivated people are the ones going to the election polls. But that's a chance we'll just have to take; can you imagine what would happen if the rest of us tried to get involved in deciding our country's leadership? What a traffic jam that would cause! There's nothing wrong with losing control over our personal lives.

We also don't need a clear sense of values, nor a personal identity. It's okay to have a society of people who tend to be extremely unattached, uprooted and confused. It keeps life interesting because you never know what's going to happen next.

Will the driver in the car behind you try to run you off the road because you're driving too slow? Will the person ringing your doorbell blow you away when you open the door? Will the kids standing on the sidewalk bash in your skull because you may have some money in your pocket? It's the drama that makes life worth living in the '90s.

Ever since this country got involved in Vietnam, we began to develop and implement a permissiveness philosophy for rearing children. The idea was to allow children to act out their emotions and passions without recourse. And it seems to have worked quite well.

Psychologists, sociologists, government officials, teachers, clergy and parents who were foolish enough to resist this change argued that too much permissiveness prevents the proper development of an integrated, disciplined personality. Instead of children learning the traditional values — patriotism, respect for parents, duty to God — they had a tendency to be egotistical; caring only for the pursuit of physical pleasure. So what?

Isn't "pleasure" what it's all about?

Discipline is just too negative. Do we really need or want young people to grow up with boundaries on their behavior? It could stifle their creativity.

The ones who try to do "good" things and make a difference may get lucky. As for the rest, they will be out there — somewhere — keeping us on our toes and keeping life interesting. That's the direction we chose several decades ago. So why do we now have to put up with these fanatics who want to mess it all up?

Listen up you weirdoes, society has spoken. We don't care about adding "meaning" to our lives. Just give us some money — or power over others — and let us have some fun.

Our kids will have to learn to take care of themselves. How else are they going to develop character?

P.S. If you think I really believe what you have just read, I have an island off the coast of Arizona I can let you have really cheap.

Loudermilk works for the Public Affairs Office at the U.S. Army Information Systems Command, Fort Huachuca, Ariz.

CG congratulates post

Congratulations to the men and women of Fort Benning! Once again, you've proven why we are the best.

This time you've been selected to compete with all federal agencies for the prestigious Presidential Quality Award. And you did it with only six weeks notice. Normally, institutions spend three to five years planning and preparing for these submissions.

The reason we, at Fort Benning, were able to do it on such short notice is quality is a way of life, it's embedded in everything we do — how else can you explain our past awards — four times best large installation in the Army and two times best overall.

A lot of work went into this effort. Many people were involved in pulling this together. And it was truly a team effort — that's why we're so great —teamwork. Spearheading the effort was the Quality Management Division team of Sarah McLaney, Pat Porter, Bill Crane, Lisa Kogel, Sara Hodges and Sgt. Jason Ruby.

This team received superb support from five key process teams.

The teams and their leaders are: Infantry Training Team, Lee Capraro and Mary Speser; Infantry Doctrine Team, Lt.Col. David Kelly; Infantry Future Team, Lt. Col. Cory Perkins and Bob O'Neil; Force Projection Team, Tom Channell; Base Operations Team, Sgt. Maj. Steve Chittum and Spc. Michael James, and its subordinate teams of Debbi Addison of Quality of Life; Paul Yates and Darrell Hearn of Communication and Automation; Gillian Long of Resource Management; and John Machovec of Purchasing.

I would be remiss if I didn't make special mention of the team of writers who not only devoted long hours and weekends to pulling the various teams' efforts together, but who put in 27 continuos hours down the stretch to meet the deadline. These valiant people were McLaney, Porter, Kogel, Hodges, Ruby, Channel and Chittum.

Thanks for putting this project above everything else so Fort Benning could once again reach new levels of excellence. I am proud to be a part of this great team and I know the experience we gain through our participation in the PQA will prove beneficial when we once again compete for the Army Community of Excellence Award.

Proclamation

The President of the United States designated Women's Equality Day Aug. 26, 1973, denoting the ratification of the 19th Amendment to the U.S. Constitution giving women the right to vote. Our annual celebration reminds us of women's continuing efforts toward equality in all spheres of our society.

From its radical beginning in 1848 during the Women's Rights Convention in Seneca Falls, the suffrage movement was a long, uphill battle for courageous women like Elizabeth Cady Stanton, who drafted the Declaration of Sentiments. The declaration listed the legal disadvantages of women and became the catalyst for future Suffrage Conventions.

From 1870 to 1910, there were 480 attempts across the nation to pass legislation, resulting in only 27 state votes, of which only two were successful. Then on August 26, 1920, Tennessee became the 36th state to ratify the 19th Amendment making it a constitutional right for women.

Since then, the 19th Amendment provided everyone a chance to honor the work of Stanton and others who worked so hard to gain the right to vote. By observing this celebration and casting our vote, we ensure that the fight for equality continues.

This year, Women's Equality Day celebrates the 76th Anniversary of the 19th Amendment. The right to vote is a precious privilege which should not be taken lightly. The entire governmental process is enhanced by men and women who cast their votes. Women's Equality Day is an excellent opportunity for soldiers and civilians at Fort Benning to acknowledge their responsibilities to vote and to recognize the continuing efforts toward women's equality and equality for all Americans.

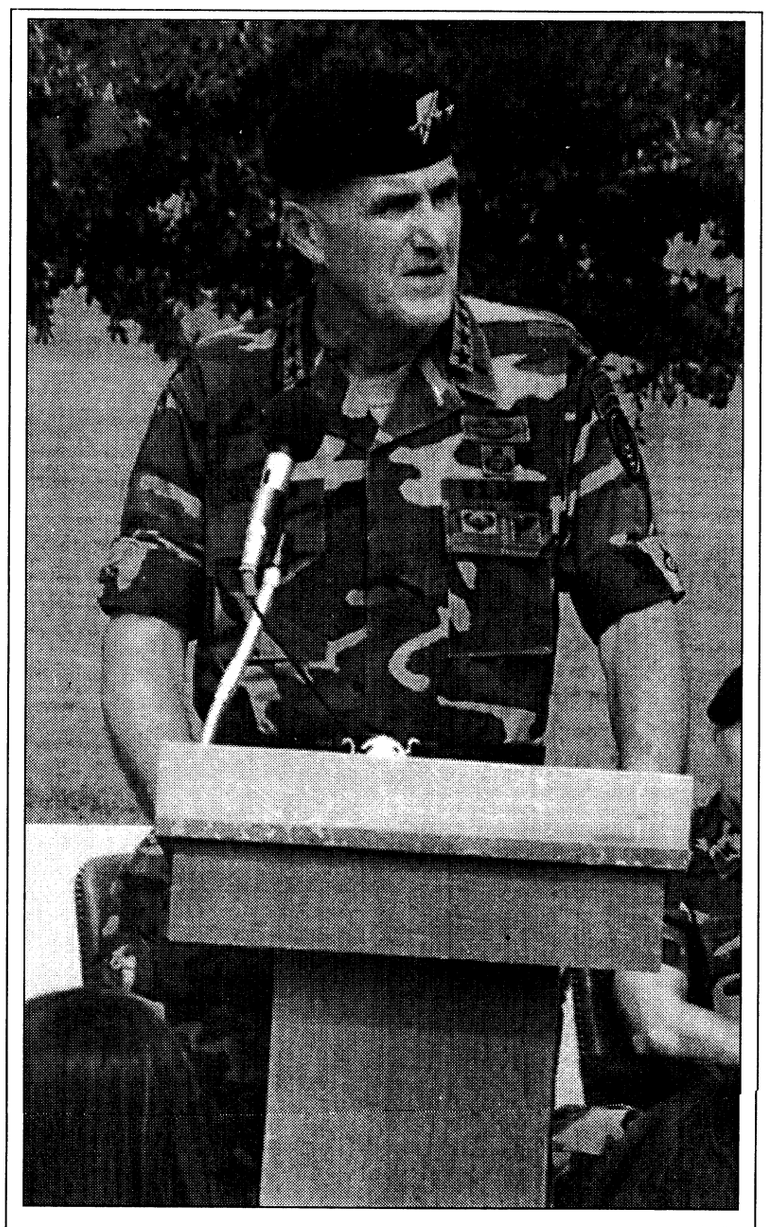
DA raises price for newborn deliveries



Martin Army Community Hospital

Effective Oct. 1, directives from the Deputy Secretary of the Army will require the following charges be assessed for newborn infants beginning with the date of birth:

• When an active duty soldier, retiree or their spouse delivers at Martin Army Community Hospital, the infant will accrue charges at the family member rate, which is currently $9.70 per day.

• When the daughter of an active duty or retiree delivers at MACH, the daughter, who is an eligible beneficiary, will accrue charges at the usual family member rate. Upon the birth, the infant is the grandchild of the sponsor and is thus not an eligible beneficiary. The infant therefore will accrue charges at the full reimbursable rate which is currently $500 for a normal birth without any complications and higher if any complications should occur.

• Former service members who deliver at MACH (ends term of service while pregnant) will accrue charges at the current rate of $4.75 per day, while the infant accrues charges at the full reimbursable rate, which is currently $500 for a normal birth.

COLUMBUS MUSEUM

Soldiers bring exhibit to life

By Lisa M. Hibbert
Bayonet staff writer

The voices of Fort Benning soldiers became a part of a permanent display at the Columbus Museum on Wynnton Road.

Two drill sergeants from the Drill Sergeant School made an audio recording that plays whenever motion is detected by sensors in the display area.

"Originally, the representatives from the museum only wanted one drill sergeant to simulate an initial entry training environment for the taping," said Sgt. 1st Class Christopher K. Greca, instructor at the Drill Sergeant School. "We suggested they use two drill sergeants to make it more realistic."

The display is a tent, representing the Korean War era, complete with bunks, foot lockers and a cigarette-butt can.

Michael Sand, of Rare, Media, Well Done, a Boston based, museum-exhibit consulting firm, was in charge of revamping the display and making the recording.

"Originally, the display was a closed one," Sand said. "It was just a closed tent that you couldn't enter. We added the sound and the furnishings and made it an open exhibit you can walk into."

"When we first went into the conference room, (it was recorded at the Drill Sergeant School) we didn't have any idea what to expect," said Staff Sgt. John P. Lowthorpe, instructor at the Drill Sergeant School. "We just knew the museum needed someone to make a recording for a new display."

In the conference room, Sand told the sergeants what type of things he wanted for the tape and then sat back and watched them work, Sand said.

"It was funny because he asked us if we needed to rehearse and we both said no," Lowthorpe said. "Once you've been a drill sergeant for a while, you know what an IET environment is like and it's not hard to recreate.

"Even though we didn't know what exactly we were going to say, we knew that we could do it," Lowthorpe said. "We just role played off of each other, whenever one of us got tired, the other would pick up, just like in a real training situation."

Although the museum only needed 30 seconds of tape, Greca and Lowthorpe talked for almost 20 minutes, enacting different scenarios, Sand said.

"The guys were just fabulous," Sand said. "The only bad thing is that we couldn't use the whole tape. I am really glad the tape is a part of the display because it gives the community a chance to understand and appreciate the life of a recruit."

Even though museum visitors will never see the faces or hear the names that go with the voices, both drill sergeants are very proud of their work.

"I'm really glad that the community is recognizing Fort Benning and drill sergeants in particular," Greca said. "It doesn't bother me that the recording is anonymous, it's more important that the message that Fort Benning is here gets across."

"This means something to me because I get to tell my kids that their dad is a part of history ," Lowthorpe said. "Everybody who walks into that exhibit at the museum will hear my voice, doing what I love the most and what I think is the best job I've ever had since I've been in the Army — being a drill sergeant."

"It is a good feeling that 100 years from now, as long as that exhibit still stands, my great-grandchildren will be able to enter that exhibit and hear my voice," Greca said.

Terrorism: Won't be tolerated

"they seek to impose their will on others through acts of violence, almost always aimed at the innocent."

Terrorism is the opposite of everything America stands for, Perry said. It is the enemy of the basic human rights — freedom of movement, expression and religion. America must stand firm defending its freedom and liberty, Perry said.

"The fight is not and will not be easy," he said.

"When terrorists attack our trade centers, federal buildings or airliners, the worst thing we can do as a society is to withdraw from our daily lives and commerce. When terrorists attack our military forces in Saudi Arabia or anywhere they are needed in the world, the worst thing we could do for our national security would be to withdraw our forces from where they are needed.

"Withdrawal is not an acceptable alternative — our strategic imperative requires that we maintain our forces in the region," he said.

Leaving the Persian Gulf, for example, would give a small group of terrorists with truck bombs a victory Saddam Hussein could not achieve with 40 divisions, he said.

The United States intends to combat threats against its forces by increasing physical security to reduce troops' vulnerability and increasing intelligence capabilities to pre-empt and disrupt terrorist attacks before they occur, Perry said.

"We need to strengthen our resolve that we will not let terrorists drive us away from protecting our national interests," he said.

Soldiers keep post picked up

By Caryn Bumpstead
Better Opportunities for Single Soldiers

Fort Benning is the best Army installation in the world, we've won many awards that tell us this, said Sgt. Maj. Arthur Van Allen, garrison sergeant major. Many organizations on post have made it that way.

One of the first thing that visitors see when they arrive here is how clean this post is. First impressions count, and police call is the force behind that first impression.

On any given day, soldiers are seen all over post picking up trash. Those soldiers are typically the lower enlisted, single soldiers who live in the barracks.

Some of the trash that these soldiers pick up duirng police call include: dirty diapers, ash trays emptied into parking lots and furniture on I-185. There is absolutely no reason for soldiers to be picking up this type of trash, Wilkinson said. Garbage cans are available and nearby to empty ash trays in and dispose of diapers.

Soldiers do police call not only to keep Fort Benning looking good, but also to keep diseases from spreading, he said.

Trash can be a hazard to everyone. Soldiers who have children run the risk of their children bringing unwanted items into their homes because others threw their trash away improperly. It is up to everyone to dispose of their trash properly, Wilkinson said.

If everyone made an effort to throw away their trash correctly, and pick up the trash they see on the ground, Fort Benning would be a cleaner place and the need for police call may even be eliminated.

Question of the week:

Is there a set amount of furniture that a single soldier should have in the barracks?

Common Table of Allowances 50-909, Table 42, gives a list of basic items for enlisted barracks. There is not a required amount of furniture per soldier, but CTA 50-909 will give a guideline for what is authorized if the items are available.

va q&a

Department of Veterans Affairs

Q: I am insured under Veterans Mortgage Life Insurance. At what age will my coverage end?

A: Regulations mandate that coverage cease when you reach age 70.

Q: May a veteran obtain a VA loan for the purchase of property in a foreign country if the veteran has permanently moved overseas?

A: No. VA-guaranteed loans may only be approved for property located in the United States, but that does include property in U.S. territories and possessions.

Q: I received a "certificate of eligibility" for a VA home loan. Does this mean that I have a guarantee of approval?

A: No. While VA guarantees part of a home loan, the veteran must still find a willing private lender who is required to take into consideration the applicant's credit history and income.

Q: Does VA's guarantee on a property mean the government is satisfied the house is structurally sound? We have found cracks in the foundation of the older home we bought last year and are concerned this could lead to future problems.

A: No. VA's guarantee of the home loan is based on an appraisal, but the appraiser's job is not the same as a home inspector. VA affixes warning statements to this effect on the VA "certificate of reasonable value." In new construction loans, VA inspectors ensure the construction conforms to the contract specifications. Home purchasers should make their own arrangements for professional structural inspection if desired.

Q: I am the widow of a Vietnam veteran who is buried in a VA national cemetery in our hometown. I expect our family will remain here for sometime, and I would like to be buried next to my husband when I die. However, I was never in the military.

A: Although gravesites in national cemeteries cannot be reserved, spouses and minor children of eligible veterans may be buried in a national cemetery. If a surviving spouse of an eligible veteran marries a non-veteran, she becomes ineligible. If, however, this remarriage is terminated by death or divorce of the nonveteran, the spouse regains eligibility for burial in a national cemetery.

Q: I understood that health care provided under the Persian Gulf program was free, so I was surprised to get a notice from my insurance company that it was billed for care I received in follow-up visits after my Persian Gulf Registry exam. Is that right?

A: VA has special authority to provide follow-up care to those deployed to the Gulf at no charge to the veteran if a VA physician determines that a condition could have been possibly related to Gulf service. While the followup care, like the registry health examination, is free to the veteran, VA is authorized by law to seek reimbursement from third-party insurance companies for all care for conditions that are not service-connected; this billing policy even includes insurers of service-connected veterans receiving care for nonservice-connected conditions, and it covers veterans of all eras. The only case in which VA charges a copayment of Gulf veterans covered by the special medical eligibility is a small fee for medications, currently limited to $2 per each 30-day outpatient supply of pharmaceuticals. Otherwise, there should never be any charge passed along to the Gulf veteran for treatment under the special program.

Editor's note: If you have a question regarding your VA benefits, call the VA regional office at (800) 827-1000.

VA reviewing education claims

Department of Veterans Affairs

The Department of Veterans Affairs is contacting 276 class members of a 1987 class action lawsuit filed on behalf of certain veterans in Puerto Rico and the U.S. Virgin Islands to ensure that they are aware of the potential availability of educational assistance benefits for their dependents.

A settlement of the suit, which had challenged VA reductions in compensation benefits for mental disorders, was approved and publicized in 1993. Additional outreach is now being conducted because of concerns that dependents of the class members may not have taken advantage of education benefits to which they may be entitled.

The settlement in Giusti Bravo v. the Department of Veterans Affairs, approved Oct. 15, 1993, by the U.S. District Court in Puerto Rico, arose in a lawsuit alleging unlawful discrimination during a mass VA review of disability compensation claims. Plaintiffs charged that VA had used standards and procedures that were less favorable to those veterans than the department used in its review of cases from other geographic areas.

The original review of compensation claims began in 1982 and resulted in reducing the disability ratings of about 700 veterans. Following the court challenge, a special settlement review was conducted, resulting in restoring the ratings to 100 percent in more than 600 cases.

Inquiries should be submitted to VA regional offices in Atlanta or San Juan. For information, veterans or family members may call 1-800-827-1000.

Air Mobility

ITB soldiers fly into field training exercise

By Lisa M. Hibbert
Bayonet staff writer

Members of Company D, 1st Battalion, 38th Infantry Regiment, Infantry Training Brigade, got a lift in their basic training routine when they flew in UH-60 Blackhawk helicopters to Combs Drop Zone, Aug. 10.

The 118 trainees began their air assault mission with a safety briefing from the 131st Aviation Regt., Alabama National Guard, and then by conducting static load training in the aircraft so the soldiers would know what to expect.

Each of the four platoons was assigned a lift. Each platoon was then broken down into four groups and the aircraft made four lifts between Weatherby Field and Combs Drop Zone.

The air assault mission consisted of having the soldiers board the aircraft with their rucksacks and weapons, fly to the field training exercize site and unload quickly, going into the prone position until the aircraft flew off, before moving tactically to the established sites.

After the soldiers took the 10 minute flight to Combs Drop Zone, they began their field training, a five-day exercise which includedsquad tactical lane training, nuclear biological and chemical training and the construction of fighting positions.

"We normally road march or truck the company to their field training exercise," said Capt. Alan J. Deogracias, commander of Co. D, 1st Bn., 38th Inf. Regt. "We decided to do something a little different to build motivation, esprit de corps and to add some excitement, so we contacted the Alabama National Guard. This is the first time in more than a year that a company from the Infantry Training Brigade has been able to obtain aircraft."

ITB does not have air time scheduled at Lawson Army Airfield so the unit had to solicit help from outside sources, Deogracias said.

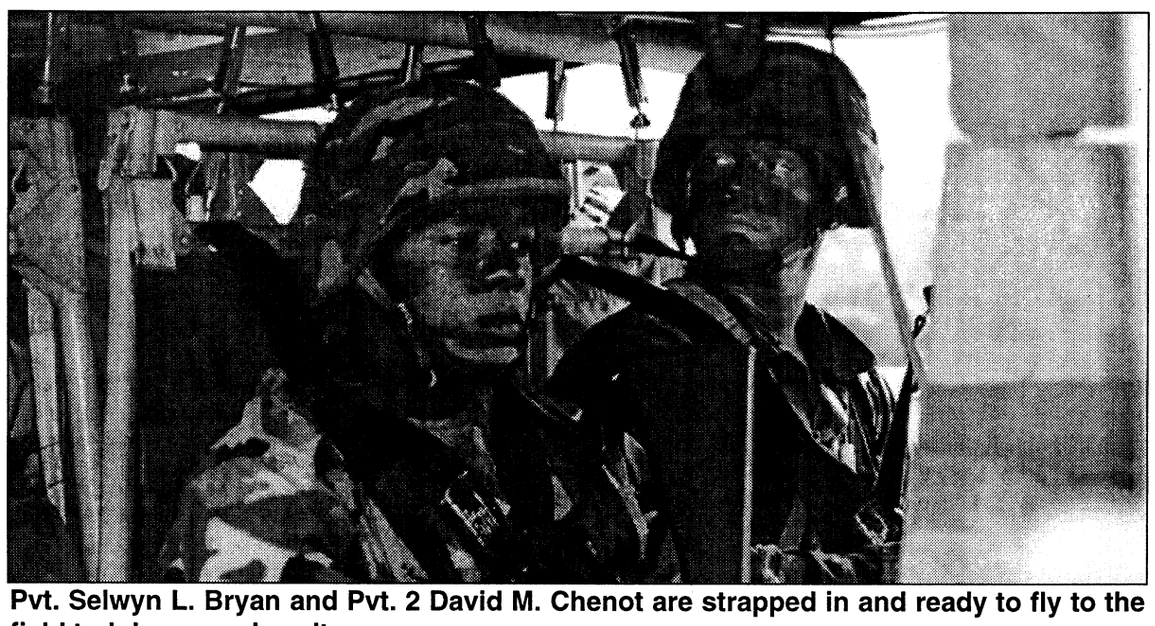
"Most of the aircraft on post are scheduled to support the Ranger Training Brigade and the 1st Battalion, 507th Infantry Regiment, so we were unable to secure an aircraft through Lawson," Deogracias said. "They did provide us with a list of possible units that we could call and that's how we found out about the Alabama National Guard."

First Lt. Corey A. Ford, company executive officer was responsible for getting the 1st Battalion, 131st Aviation Regiment to fly for his company.

"I kept calling around until I found a unit that was willing," Ford said. "We were originally going to fly with the 1st Bn., 131st Aviation Regt. in March but things fell through. In fact, we were not sure up until two weeks ago that the unit would be able to fly us this time."

"When we found out that we were definitely going to have the aircraft, we had the drill sergeants inform the trainees and get them pumped up for the mission," Deogracias said. "The soldiers are all excited. For many of the soldiers who will go into Bradley units, this will probably be the only opportunity they will have in their careers to ride in a blackhawk."

Although not a part of the normal weekend drills, eight members of the 131st Aviation Regt. volunteered to fly Company D.



"We had our monthly drill last weekend but we thought this would be a good experience and good training for us," said 1st Lt. Mark Colvin, air mission commander and platoon leader in Company A, 1st Bn., 131st Aviation Regt. "We normally practice terrain-flight navigation at night so we don't really get the chance to fly much in the daytime. Plus these helicopters are new to our unit so we could use the experience."

The FTX is one of the final stages of training for the ITB soldiers they will be graduating at the Infantry Museum, Aug. 23.

3rd ID soldiers deploy to Mississippi for multi-service mission

By Robin A. Shawlinski
3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division

Two hundred and fifty soldiers from the 3rd Brigade Combat Team, 3rd Infantry Division (Mechanized) deployed to Camp Shelby, Mississippi, Sunday to participate in an All Service Combat Identification Team exercise.

The soldiers which make up Task Force 1-15, include soldiers from Company A, 1st Battalion, 15th Infantry Regiment, Co. A, 2nd Bn., 69th Armor Regiment, elements from 1st Bn., 10th Field Artillery and the U.S. Air Force Tactical Operations Control Party.

Throughout the 30-day exercise, the soldiers will train with elements from the Air Force, Marine Corps and Navy to help in evaluating, investigating and assessing different concepts and technologies of combat identification on the battlefield, according to Task Force 1-15 commander, Lt. Col. Tad Davis.

"The primary mission will be to assist in this test, which will enhance the ability to identify friendly vehicles," he said. "In recent engagements, such as Operation Desert Storm, equipment and soldiers were destroyed as a result of friendly elements.

"We will be assisting in coming up with mechanisms, both electronic and graphical control measures we can use to control troop movements."

Upon deploying, the soldiers will draw Bradley Fighting vehicles and M1 Abrams from the National Guard which will be instrumented with electronic equipment that will allow the vehicles to be tracked on the battlefield during maneuvers, Davis said.

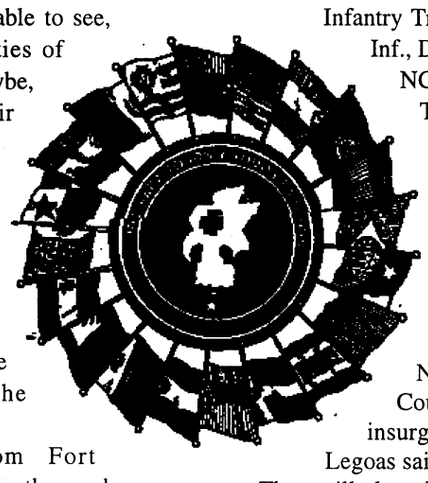
Co. A, 1st Bn., 15th Inf. commander, Capt. John Brown said this mission will help his soldiers in the short and long term.

"This mission will allow us to train on what we train on every day on Kelley Hill and for the greater reason, for what happens when they go to war," he said. "And we're doing our part in reducing fracticide in future battles."

The soldiers will return to Fort Benning Sept. 11.

SCHOOL OF THE AMERICAS

Soldiers from Ecuador arrive to begin NCO exchange program



By Judith O'Toole
School of the Americas

Noncommissioned officers from the Army of Ecuador will arrive at the School of the Americas, Sunday, for the start of an NCO exchange program with sergeants from the U.S. Army. The Ecuadorian NCOs will be at SOA until Sept. 8, participating in training and exchanging ideas with their American counterparts.

The purpose of the program, said SOA Command Sgt. Maj. Carlos E. Legoas, is to permit U.S. and Ecuadorian NCOs to exchange technical and tactical military information through visits to each others' country while improving the cooperation and trust between the two allied forces.

"When you're exposed to a different culture," he said, "then you appreciate what they have and what we have."

Soldiers will also be able to see, first-hand, the capabilities of the other's army and, maybe, implement some of their ideas. SOA soldiers will especially benefit from the training, Legoas said, because of the fact that Ecuadorians attend SOA and any additional training the instructors receive will only help the students who attend the school.

Fifteen NCOs from Fort Benning will take part in the exchange, sponsored by the School of the Americas. The group will consist of members of SOA, 3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment, the Infantry Training Brigade, 3rd Bde., Inf., Division (Mechanized), the NCO Academy, the Ranger Training Brigade and 1st Bn., 11th Inf.Regt.

During the visit to Ecuador, the group will tour NCO schools. These schools are similar to U.S. Army schools, such as the Basic and Advanced Noncommissioned Officer Courses, as well as counter-insurgency and jungle schools, Legoas said.

They will also visit the Infantry School of the Ecuador Army, a special forces training center, perform an airborne exercise, and have the chance to scale up the side of a mountain.

But, Legoas said, the most useful part of the trip will be the ability to talk to NCOs from another country. Open discussions will be a large part of the exchange program. Groups will focus on different topics during each session.

They will be able to visit training areas and the armies' schools and then have the opportunity to talk with fellow soldiers about a variety of subjects — from new advances in equipment to better ways to look after their soldiers.

He said that if the NCOs come away from the program with new ideas and a better understanding of the other nation, then it will have been a success. And that is what the program is all about — exchanging ideas.

500 National Guard MPs return from peacekeeping

By Bob Haskell
National Guard Bureau

Five hundred Army National Guard members who got used to laying down the law in Germany were advised to proceed with caution in their own back yards following several months of Joint Endeavor peacekeeping duty.

"Getting back together is more stressful than leaving. It's going to take some time to get readjusted," an Army social worker cautioned the men and women in four Army Guard military police companies who flew in to Fort Benning, during the second weekend in August.

Homes in Iowa, Mississippi and Missouri were their destinations during the next week after spending six or seven months protecting military communities in Germany while replacing active Army MPs who were deployed to help keep the peace in Bosnia.

The Army Guard roll call included the 113th and 114th MP Companies from Brandon and Clinton, Miss., the 186th MP Company from Camp Dodge, Iowa, and the 1137th MP Company from Kennett, Mo.

More than half of the Army Guard soldiers who were quickly mobilized and sent to Europe last December and January returned to this country ready to resume their civilian lives.

Anxiety took a couple of different forms: They wanted to see their families and they wondered what was waiting for them at home and at work.

Staff Sgt. Tammy Campos, a patrol supervisor in the 186th, expects to spend a month getting reacquainted with her 9-year-old daughter Ashley after returning to Des Moines, Iowa.

"She doesn't want me to leave again — ever," said Campos, a single mother who left her daughter with a friend while doing her duty in Baumholder, Germany.

"I'm going to have to work hard at getting back into her life," said Campos. The first order of business would be a belated celebration of Ashley's ninth birthday on July 6.

Spc. Keith Weaver from Norwalk, Iowa, encountered a different situation — finding out who he would have to displace to resume his job as a track repairman for Union Pacific Railroad.

"I have to find out who I have to bump and then call them and tell them," Weaver said .

Although not a pleasant prospect, bumping people is part of his employment situation, Weaver explained. "I got bumped seven times last year," he said.

A few soldiers were welcomed home by their families at Fort Benning. About 30 wives, children and friends from Mississippi greeted members of the 114th who landed at 9:50 p.m. Saturday, after their departure was delayed for several hours in Germany.

It was nearly midnight when Spc. Howard Prince got to hold his new son Zachary Taylor Prince for the first time. Zachary, his third son, had checked in at a robust 7 pounds, 11 ounces on July 16.

"I couldn't wait," said Prince of the prospects of seeing his wife Alisha and their new son after he got off the 747 at Lawson Army Airfield.

A lot of concern was taken to ensure the Guard members' reunions with their families went as smooth as possible.

Getting reacquainted will take longer than most people expect, said Rebecca S. Welch, manager of the Family Advocacy Program at Fort Benning.

"A family needs healing time," she said.

A lot of communication is critical to overcoming the effects of a long separation and fitting back into a family, points out a film "Getting It Back Together."

Some of the common concerns:

• The spouse has managed the household and the budget while the soldier has been away and it could appear the spouse no longer needs their help.

• Young children may have forgotten who the soldier is and need time to get reacquainted. The soldiers have to be careful about how they discipline their youngsters.

• Older children may resent the returning soldier because they have been "left in charge" or because they have been warned they are going to "get it" when the soldier gets home.

• Couples need time together to get reacquainted and enjoy the intimacy they had before the soldier left.

• The absence may have made the hearts grow fonder, but it has probably not solved any problems the couple had before the deployment.

"Problems do not go away and do not heal," said Welch. "Everything may be okay for the first couple of weeks back home, but those old creepy crawlers will come right back up."

To be sure, some of the MPs believed they were going to pick up parts of their lives where they left off.

One soldier, for example, anticipated his promotion to command sergeant major of the Army Guard's 1st Battalion, 133rd Infantry Regiment and to resuming his responsibilities as Butler County's elected recorder for deeds and mortgages when he returned to Iowa.

Weaver did not foresee any problems fitting back into his household because, he said, "my wife has always taken care of the checkbook. All I have to do is put money in."

But Welch said some soldiers play down the problems of coming home again until it is too late to bring everyone back together.

"Whether you intend to or not," she warned, "you take things out on the people you love the most."

Dental program sets new fees

Armed Forces Communications, Inc.

CAMP HILL, Pa. — The fee schedules used to reimburse services provided patients covered under the Tricare Active Duty Family Member Dental Plan were updated Aug. 1 to reflect dentists' current charges.

United Concordia, currently the nation's sixth largest dental insurer and the program administrator, announced the fee updates as part of its ongoing assessment of the program's option. United Concordia began administering the FMDP Feb. 1, which serves more than 1.8 million family members of active duty, uniformed services personnel.

"This update review was not a requirement in our contract to administer the program," said Thomas A. Dzuryachko, Chief Operating Officer of United Concordia. "This was company-initiated, and reflects our commitment to respond and make adjustments to the program whenever appropriate."

In addition to increasing the payment allowances for many commonly performed procedures, the update also expands the number of fee schedule regions from seven to sixteen. According to Dzuryachko, the new regional designations are more influenced by geography than the previous alignment. As a result, they promote payment allowances that are more reflective of local charging practices.

Under the contract, which is overseen by the Office of Civilian Health and Medical Program of the Uniformed Services, a family member must be able to schedule an appointment with a participating dentist within 21 days and a 35-mile radius. With the exception of a few isolated locations, all areas of the country meet this requirement.

"It's important for beneficiaries to know that they can receive benefits in this program by going to any dentist they choose," said Dzuryachko. "But by visiting a participating dentist, there is no claim filing or paperwork for the family member to handle. More importantly, family members cannot be charged the difference between the dentist's fees and our allowance for the services provided."

For services not covered at 100 percent, family members are only responsible for the cost share percentage not paid by United Concordia. This cost share should be discussed between the dentist and family member before extensive treatment is started.

"The increase in fees, and the expansion of fee schedule regions, is good for everyone involved in the FMDP," he said. "The bottom line is a more responsive program that makes available quality dental care to family members."

United Concordia Companies, Inc., headquartered in Camp Hill, Pa., processed 3.2 million dental claims for nearly two million subscribers in 1995 and paid out more than $265 million in benefits.

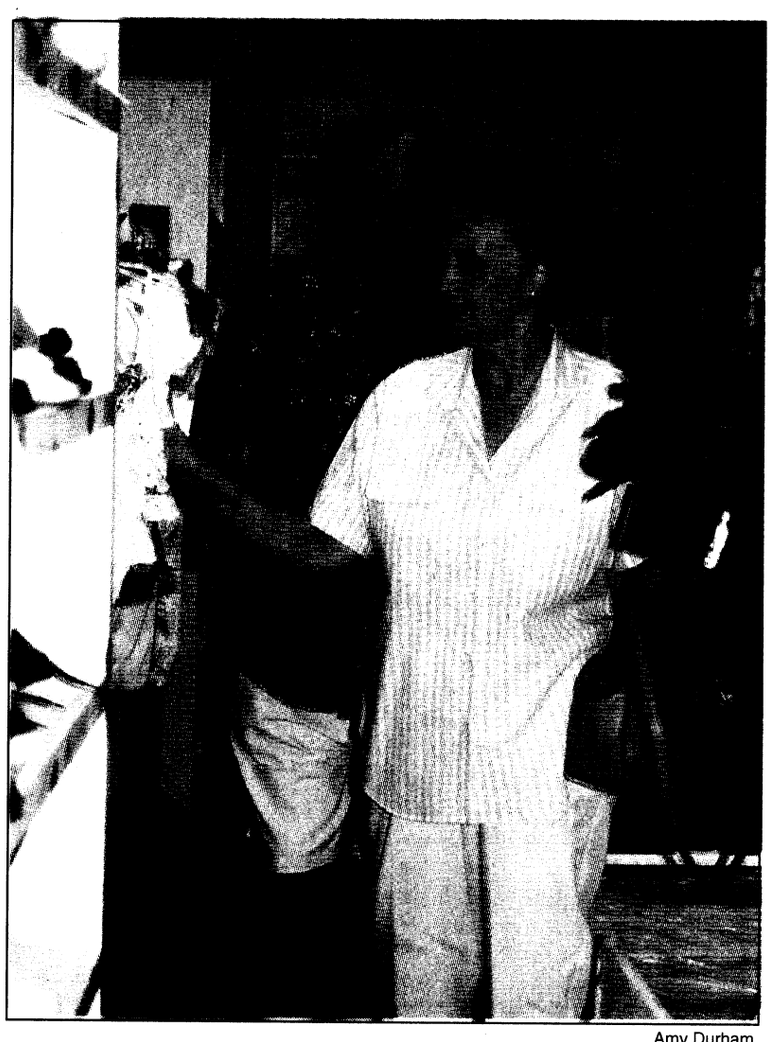
Thrift shop

Buyers' bargains bountiful at bazaar

By Amy Durham
Special to the Bayonet©

Situated in the old NCO Club at the corner of Dixie Road and Ingersoll Avenue, the Fort Benning Officers' Wives' Club Thrift Shop, Building 229, is a bargain buyer's paradise.



For young soldiers furnishing their first home as well as the veteran family whose many moves around the world are reflected in their wall-to-wall decorating, the OWC Thrift Shop business can benefit both.

But the management has changed the way it does business. Originally open the first and third Saturday of each month, Deborah Blunt, OWC Thrift Shop manager, said they made the decision to change their hours to reflect patrons' use of the store.

"We were originally open two Saturdays a month to give working families a chance to use the thrift shop's services," Blunt said. "But in the last three years, revenues continued to drop."

The thrift shop remains open Tuesdays and Thursdays from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m. All military identification card holders, including officer, enlisted, retired and reserve personnel and their family members, can continue consign seasonal items from 10 a.m. to noon. But, instead of opening on Saturdays, the shop is open the first and third Friday of each month, from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m.

Personnel, either making a permanent-change-of-station move to or from Fort Benning can make appointments for the thrift shop's services from 10 a.m. to 1:30 p.m., Fridays only. However, appointments must be made within 120 days of the soldier's report date.

Looking for outfits for their new grandson, Retired Sgt. 1st Class Milton Kitts, and his wife, Alma, shop at the Officers' Wives' Club Thrift Shop on a regular basis.

Another change in the shop's procedures includes an increase in its commission, which Blunt said had not increased since 1986.

"The commission rate went up March 1, " Blunt said, "from 20 percent to 25 percent."

Although increasing monthly expenses caused the OWC Thrift Shop workers to change the rates, Blount said it is the post community that benefits in the end. Some of the ways in which thrift shop proceeds help Fort Benning include awarding scholarships and welfare requests regardless of rank, as well as funding child care costs for volunteers who help with such programs as the annual Tax Office.

So the next time you're looking for furniture, clothes, pictures, dishes, or handmade craft items, browsing through the OWC Thrift Shop and Craft Corner could be worth your time. And your money may go to help a fellow soldier or family member.

A complete list of the thrift shop's rules is available at the thrift shop's consignment counter.

HOLA hosts help provide smoother transition for

SOA soldiers

By Judith O'Toole
School of the Americas

Adjusting to a new environment isn't easy. You've got to find a new home, have the utilities turned on, get the children into school, not to mention trying to find your way around in a new city.

Imagine for a moment how tough that would be if this new place were in another country. Not only do you not speak the language, but you also don't know anyone to help you find your way around.

At the School of the Americas, some courses last an entire year, and students enrolled in these courses usually bring their families. Latin American guest instructors come here with their families for two years.

But these visitors aren't alone. There's a group that helps ease their way — Hosts of Latin America.

HOLA, which means hello in Spanish, is a group of volunteers whose main purpose is to welcome guest instructors, students and their families to SOA and to the United States.

"Volunteer sponsors are matched with either a student or an instructor," said Cecilia Alexander, HOLA coordinator. "HOLA hosts a getting-acquainted type of open house for the initial meeting of the two groups."

Alexander said one of the biggest benefits of HOLA is that sponsors show the Latin Americans what normal, everyday life is like in the United States.

"We encourage our sponsors not to put on a big show with parties and lavish meals just to impress their guests," Alexander said. "The whole point of the program is to welcome the families."

Not only is the sponsor program a learning experience for the Latin American families assigned to SOA, but also for the sponsoring American families as well, she said. You don't have to speak Spanish to become an HOLA sponsor since some of the students and guest instructors speak English. But, Alexander said, it is helpful.

HOLA is looking for more volunteer hosts. For more information, contact Alexander at 545-1285.

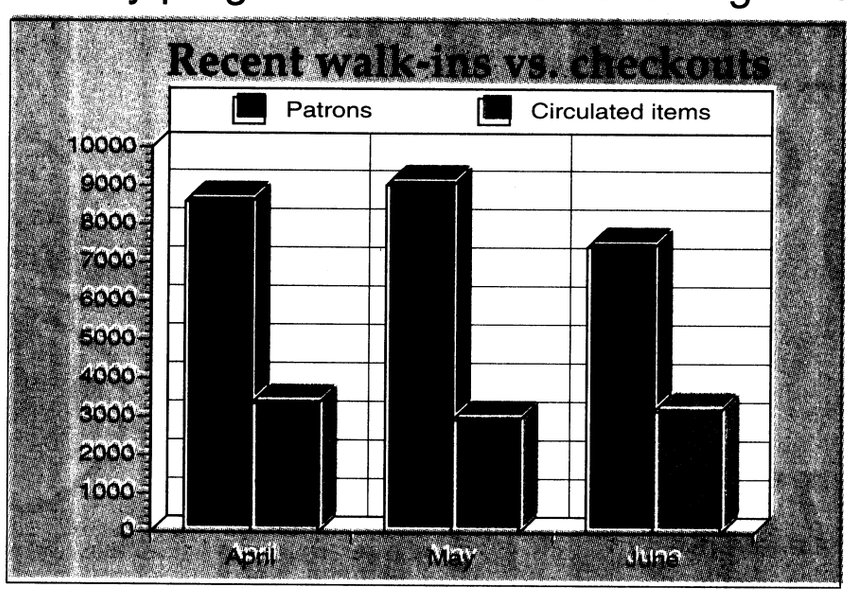
Summer reading

Sayers Memorial Library program teaches Fort Benning children benefits of books

By Amy Durham
Special to the Bayonet©

Reading is fun.

So was the simple message workers from Sayers Memorial Library sent to the 67 participants of this year's summer reading program.



The program, which ran from June 24 to Aug. 6, is geared toward increasing children's interest in reading while conveying the importance reading has in successful lives. Participants received a reading log to write down the authors and titles of the books they read throughout the summer.

For both program coordinators, Barbara Jordan, librarian, and LaVerne Grooms, library technician, the program's success is reflected in reader participation.

"We started this year's program with an Olympic theme, 'Win with Reading,'" Jordan said. "But the important thing was not only for the children to read lots of books, but also to branch out and read books outside their normal interests.

"I think they did that," she said, "because they checked out a lot of books."

Nichole Ziglier, 11, who read 110 books during the summer program, said reading so many books was easy because she didn't watch television and loves to read.

Of one of her favorite books, "Little Women," by Louisa May Alcott, the soon-to-be seventh grader said reading the literary classic increased her vocabulary.

Nine-year-old Lapresha Rackard who participated in the summer program for her third year, read 63 books.

"I like to read," she said. "It's my favorite thing to do."

While reading was the focus of the program, Jordan and Grooms incorporated various activities into the program, which included activities in Origami, water color painting, sign language and aerobics and physical fitness.

Both Jordan and Grooms said the program was such a success that parents have asked when the library will provide this type of program again. And library staffers are already brainstorming ideas for expanding the program.

"Next summer, if we could get volunteers," Jordan said, "we would like to provide something for 3-, 4- and 5-year-olds in the morning before we open."

But volunteers will be the key to making their ideas work.

"We would like to have volunteers who have an expertise and the interest to share it."

This summer's participants were treated to an awards lunch and party Aug. 6 at the Burger King on Main Post. The Infantry Center Federal Credit Union hosted the party and supported the reading program by providing supplies for activities and supplying party prizes. Children received certificates for their reading achievements.

Participants who maintained reading logs for the program were: Nicole Ziglier (110 books), Melishia Francis (72), Christina Van Allen (66), Lapresha Rackard (63), Sarah Leigh Williams (47), Nikita Mewborn (40), Angie Andino (37), Francisco Machuca (35), Veronica Machuca (34), Patrick Gamino (34), Clarisa Gamino (30), Jaleesa Farrison (26), David Russ (25), Jonathon Rackard (25), Magen Lee Siegfried (24), Jennifer Muray McClung (22), Brian Jones (21), Monica Shawn Greeno (20), Johnny Fisher (20), Stephanie Russ (17), Sharde Ashley Lawrence (17), Ilka Andino (17), Leslie Gene Sigfried (16), Oliver Russ (12), Ethan Russ (12), Charles Siegfried (12), Trimease King (10), Rebel A. Tullos (7), Jennifer C. Ray (3) and Sean Mewborn (5).

USAIC Public Affairs Office

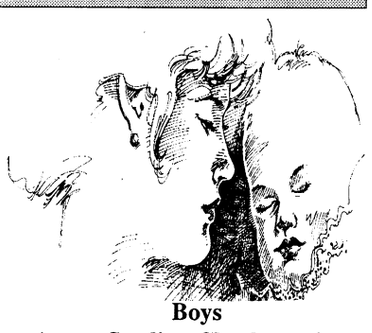
The Department of Defense recently switched to a new health care program for the Army, Navy and Air Force.

Representatives from Martin Army Community Hospital have been providing Tricare information briefings to soldiers, retirees and family members.

In those briefings, many eligible beneficiaries have shown concern about the change and how it will affect their care. Following is one of the most commonly asked questions.

As a Medicare-eligible beneficiary, I am not entitled to enroll in Tricare Prime. What benefits are available to me at the military treatment facility?

At the current time Tricare is not available for Medicare-eligible beneficiaries (age 65 and above). Martin Army Community Hospital will continue to provide the same level of services that have traditionally been rendered to our Medicare-eligible beneficiaries.



If MACH is unable to provide the necessary care, Healthcare Finders are available at the Tricare Service Center who will locate area providers who accept Medicare assignment. TSC personnel will also assist with Medicare claims questions.

Simple steps help alleviate stress

By Donald Keeling
U.S. Army Cadet Command

Burnout is the ongoing sum of all the events of stress in our lives and the symptoms we experience as a result of these events. The good news is that stress is manageable. Following are simple steps we can all take to ease the effects of stress.

Stay healthy — Nothing adds stress to one's life more than being unhealthy. Maintaining an ideal body weight, blood pressure and cholesterol level will keep you in tip-top shape and ready to deal with life's many challenges.

Reduce caffeine, sugar and alcohol intake — Caffeine heightens anxiety and can make you feel jittery, anxious and nervous. Sugar drains energy. Use alcohol in moderation because under stress, alcohol speeds its way into your system, hitting you harder than when you are relaxed. While alcohol may initially help you feel relaxed, its effects are short lived.

Relax — Take time to read a book, listen to music or meditate. Try to spend one full day per week outdoors. When you create opportunities to rejuvenate, you will help de-stress your life.

Visualize yourself in your favorite place — Find a comfortable posture and close your eyes. Imagine the most relaxed place you've ever been. Visualize lying on a beach, reading in a park, skiing on the world's largest mountain or star gazing. Now, every time you begin feeling "stressed-out," try to bring this special place to mind.

Take deep slow breaths — Deep breathing increases oxygen to your brain and body, helping to clear your head. Slow breathing will help calm you down. Deep, slow breathing is a quick fix for instant relaxation.

Learn to manage time — Plan your schedule accordingly to fit in time for work, recreation and family. If you overplan in one area, you will feel stress in other areas.

Exercise — Do any kind, any length of time, ideally three to five times a week. Regular exercise increases alpha waves (electrical energy patterns in the brain associated with calmness), lowers blood pressure and relaxes muscles.

Laugh — Watch a funny movie, read a book or comic strips or invite friends over for an evening of joke telling. A good laugh is the best way to reduce stress.

Roll with the punches — Recognize that unexpected things happen in life (illness, inclement weather, extraneous work deadlines). Leave some "holes" in your schedule to accommodate these unplanned events.

Surround your workspace with positive images — Put pictures of ones you love or environments that inspire you on the walls surrounding your workspace. Change these objects and images as needed so that they stay current and continually inspiring.

ask the judge

By Rick Parker
Office of Staff Judge Advocate

Q. I got a divorce about five years ago, and in it, my ex agreed to pay the balance on a credit card we had. I just received a call from a bill collector who said the bill had not been paid in three months and he wanted me to pay it. I told him about the divorce decree, but he didn't seem to care. Is this legal?

A. In a word, yes. Unfortunately, what you described happens a lot in divorce situations. If a joint debt is made during a marriage, it is made by a contract with the creditor by both spouses.

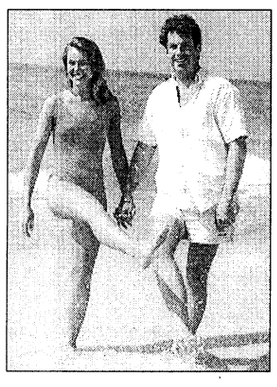
Many times, when a marriage breaks up, the parties will enter into an agreement, or the court will enter an order, determining who is responsible for paying what debts. However, the creditor is never a party to the agreement or the court action in which the order is entered. As a result, neither the agreement nor the court order is binding on the creditor. As far as the creditor is concerned, both parties are still liable for the debt.

There are a couple of ways to provide some protection against this sort of thing occurring:

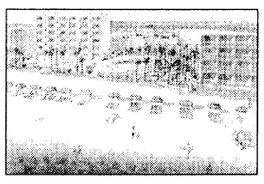
• The best remedy, if at all possible, is to secure from the creditor a release of liability for the spouse who is not going to be responsible for the debt. Sometimes, this will mean that the responsible spouse will have to refinance the debt into his or her own name.

However, if the paying spouse doesn't have good credit, this may be impossible. Sometimes, although rarely, a creditor may agree to simply release the nonpaying spouse from the debt. It certainly doesn't hurt to ask, and if the answer is "yes," be sure to get it in writing. An oral release is not legally effective.

• The next best remedy, if you are the nonpaying spouse, is to become the paying spouse. Agree to be responsible for the debts, conditioned on an agreement by the other spouse to pay you an amount equal to what would have been the debt payment.



The up side of this arrangement is that you have control over the payment of the debt and know that it gets done. The down side is the question of what happens if the other spouse doesn't make timely payments to you.



• Third, if the other spouse is going to be responsible for making payments on a joint debt, insist on an agreement that you be provided with evidence, on a continuing basis, that payments are being made. Being and keeping informed will help you to take appropriate steps to protect yourself from default by the other spouse on these debts.

As to the situation posed in the question, your only remedy is to seek some accommodation from the creditor, if possible, and to take action against your ex-spouse based on his or her court-ordered responsibility to make those debt payments.

If you are in this situation, you may want to seek legal advice before doing anything else. You should call the Legal Assistance Division for an appointment with one of our attorneys. Our telephone number is 545-3281.

WONDERFUL WITNESS

God calls Christians to share message of salvation

reflections

Have you ever been "caught with your mouth open?" You know the feeling of being overwhelmed by something so spectacular that it takes your breath away. Maybe it's a sunset, a shuttle launch or July 4th fireworks.

There's also a negative expression, "Don't get caught with your mouth open." That phrase is a warning against losing your focus or purpose in life. The words are often spoken in a sharp tone, and mean that we should quit wasting time and get on with what's really important in life.

One of my favorite comic strips is Beetle Bailey. He is the classic example of someone who is always distracted, always daydreaming or always looking for a way to get out of work. It's a full-time job for his sergeant to keep him from loafing, ignoring his responsibilities and, most of all, ensuring that he gets his work done.

The first disciples of our Lord received such a warning from both Jesus and an angel in Acts, Chapter 1. It happened when they were with Jesus on the mountain when he was about to return to the Father in Heaven. It would have been very easy for them just to keep looking up into heaven with their mouths open, overwhelmed by the glory and wonder of Jesus' ascension.

As patriotic, religious people, it was easy for them to forget that Jesus did not come as a political leader to re-establish the kingdom, but to bring the kingdom of heaven into the hearts and lives of people of every race and nationality. It was also a much safer place to be than back in Jerusalem, having to face the hostility and threats of those who hated them and their message.

"Don't just stand there with your mouths wide open," one angel said to them. "You have a mission to complete for the Lord. You are to be witnesses, not gazers!"

Jesus warned the disciples that they shouldn't get distracted by speculation. We also have to guard against getting side tracked, or going off on a tangent. We're all pretty good at that. There's nothing quite like a good "war story" about our faith.

For the disciples, it was their hope that Jesus would restore the kingdom. For us, it could be questions about the right songs to sing in church, the proper way to baptize or even the time of the second coming. That's not our mission as the disciples of Jesus.

The disciples even had to be warned against being caught up in the wonder and glory of the ascension. I've never met a Christian yet who didn't want to have a "mountaintop experience," where the presence, love and grace of God was real to them. Jesus warns us that we can't stay "on the mountain." We have to get back down into the valley, the city, the post, the motor pool or the neighborhood and share the message of God's love and grace that changes people's lives.

We're called by Jesus to be witnesses, not gazers. We're not to keep the wonder of the love of God to ourselves. We are to be witnesses of who Jesus is and what he's done. We're to be calling people to follow Jesus and to be his disciples.

Believers should let light shine

reflections

Matthew 5:13-16 gives us a great challenge. Jesus used two metaphors which should describe the life of a Christian.

Jesus said, "You are the salt of the earth; you are the light of the world." Salt and light have many purposes. Salt purifies, preserves, seasons, heals. Light helps us to see our way through this life. Jesus mentioned salt and light as having certain characteristics specifically in Matthew 5-7.

Some of these salt and light characteristics are as follows:

- Be gentle.
- Be merciful.
- Be a peacemaker and not a troublemaker.
- Hunger and thirst for righteousness.
- Don't hate your adversaries but love and forgive them.
- Don't judge others. Have pure thoughts.
- Don't let your life be dominated by worry.
- Let your true values be spiritual and not material.
- Be generous and don't expect anything back.

These are the characteristics that make us salty and bright.

When I think of these two metaphors, I believe Jesus wanted us to be salt and light for a very specific purpose. He wants us to have salt and light characteristics so that we will reflect our relationship to him.

The Psalmist said in Psalms 34:8, "O taste and see that the Lord is good; how blessed is the man who takes refuge in Him." Have you ever heard the adage, "You can lead a horse to water but you can't make him drink?" Well, I'm sorry but it's just not true.

I remember when I was 16-years-old growing up on a wheat and dairy farm in northwestern Oklahoma. I had a quarter horse that I used to bring the dairy cows in for morning and evening milking. This horse was smart and stubborn. She would run from me on occasions to keep from getting saddled. I learned that if I enticed her with a sugar cube, she would hold still long enough for me to get the bridle on her.

One morning, I was running late and I forgot the sugar cube. I looked down and saw a salt block that was for the dairy cows. I kicked off a corner and shaped it like a sugar cube and held it out for my old horse. Sure enough, she took it and then pulled away from me. I watched her as she went over to the watering trough and began to drink.

When we as Christians show those salt and light characteristics, we point to the source, Jesus Christ, who is the water of life. May we live our lives in such a salty way so that we will make those around us thirsty for a relationship with him.

INTRAMURAL SOFTBALL

MEDDAC clubs Sting 13-3 in tourney

By John W. Peeler
Special to The Bayonet©

The post intramural softball tournament continued Aug. 9 at Engineer Field with U.S. Army Medical Department Activity defeating Sting from Company A, 317th Engineer Battalion 13-3.

Sting started the game off with solid singles from shortstop John Franklin and left fielder John Gieo.

With runners on first and second base, center fielder Kenneth Wilson stepped up to the plate and slammed a three RBI home run, giving the Sting an early lead.

MEDDAC pitcher Daniel White retired the next three batters and Sting took the field with a 3-0 first inning lead.

MEDDAC got off to a strong offensive start in the first inning with doubles from right center fielder Thomas Lynn and shortstop Harry Tharp and a two run RBI double from first baseman Mike Adranga.

The clean-up batter, second baseman Eric Maroyka, hit a single moving Adranga to third base but the next batter, center fielder Taylor Butland, ended the inning for MEDDAC hitting into a double play leaving a batter stranded and Sting in the lead 3-2.

Sting batters were no match for MEDDAC's pitching and fielding, as the first three batters went down in order, in the top half of the second inning.

MEDDAC pitcher Daniel White started off the bottom of the second with a double followed by a single from third baseman Jeff Newsome.

Sting pitcher Ronny Houston gave the next batter, MEDDAC catcher Jim Finder, a gift with a walk to load the bases before recording outs on the next two batters.

With two outs and the bases loaded, Lynn and Tharp doubled back to back to give MEDDAC a 6-3 lead going into the third inning.

White faced four batters in the third inning allowing one single to Franklin, forcing two long pop outs to center field and forcing a 4-6 ground out.

In the third inning, MEDDAC continued hitting consistently with a single from Maroyka, a double by Butland and a single by right fielder James Cotton, scoring 3 runs on three hits to lead 9-3.

MEDDAC shut down the Sting offense in the fourth inning, forcing a 6-3 ground out by Wilson, a 5-3 ground out by Houston and a 6-3 ground out by Chris Pehoke for a three up and three down inning.

In the bottom half of the fourth inning, MEDDAC was only able to get a double from Tharp, but a sacrifice fly pushed Tharp across the plate for a 10-3 MEDDAC lead.

Sting had one more opportunity to score in the top of the fifth inning but were unable to get the score any closer.

MEDDAC had one final at bat scoring 3 runs on a single from White, a double from Finder and a single from Cotton.

With the win, MEDDAC advances to the next round of play in the post intramural softball tournament.

The post championship game will be played tonight at 7 p.m. on Gowdy Field.

Shooters take aim in all steel match

Lori Egan
Bayonet staff writer

Serious steel and cash awards were the draw at English Range Sunday when the Fort Benning Rifle and Pistol Club hosted a combat pistol match.

"The combat pistol match uses the same course of fire for every match, which is different from the tactical pistol matches we host monthly," said Jim Graham, assistant manager of the pistol club.

"By using the same course, shooters are provided a yardstick to measure their individual progress," Graham said. "Shooters in tactical matches don't have this yard stick because you can't compare apples and oranges, and tactical matches are never the same. The combat match will give shooters an opportunity to judge their improvement."

"It takes a lot of hard work, practice, patience and discipline to shoot well," said Emilio Barriga, who competed in his second match.

"I'm taking an Upper Iowa course on weapons, to learn safety and the basic fundamentals and competing in these matches gives me a chance to practice," he said.

Shooters competing in the combat pistol match will have the same course of fire every time and can compare their factors to judge improvement.

"Marcus Boyd set the standard for the course when he finished the course with a factor of 4.002," Graham said. "This exceeded any factor shot, even those who competed in the competitor class."

Graham said there will be two matches conducted per month beginning this month.

Tactical matches will be the first Saturday of each month and the all combat pistol matches will be on the second Sunday of each month.

For complete results of Sunday's match, see page C-2.

Sports teach competitors lessons that last a lifetime

By John W. Peeler
Special to The Bayonet©

John W. Peeler believes good sportsmanship is important in the game of life.

commentary

Shante Carver, a defensive lineman for the Dallas Cowboys, was recently suspended from professional football for six games for violating the National Football League's substance abuse policy.

In a recent interview, Carver's response and admission of guilt confirmed what I have always believed, "If your going to do the crime, you have to do the time."

This was the first time, in a long time, I have actually heard a professional athlete admit he had broken the rules and intended on paying the penalty without trying to get out of it, a la teammate Michael Irvin.

Carver was wrong, he broke the rules. Fortunately, somewhere along the way, parents, teachers and coaches taught Carver about good sportsmanship and taking responsibility for his actions.

Yes, sportsmanship.

Whether it is football, softball, baseball, basketball, tennis or even darts, gaining an unfair advantage by breaking the rules is unsportsmanlike.

Crossing the line can have a long lasting adverse effect on players, coaches, fans and the sport.

Teaching good sportsmanship starts at the earliest of ages at home, progresses through a child's first sporting venture and matures at every level of advancement.

If good sportsmanship is not reinforced at each playing level, the potential to cross the line will be there.

Many say, "It is just a game." In my opinion, this approach is one reason so many children in this country have gone astray.

I have my own philosophy why sports really are not "just a game."

Life is a series of wins and losses; therefore, a person handles life the same way they handle winning and losing.

In an athletic event, a player may face many of the emotions they will experience throughout life: happiness, anguish, self-worth, nervousness, hope, pride, sorrow, loneliness, self-doubt, and probably the biggest emotion to overcome, disappointment.

Any parent or coach worth their salt knows the way they teach their child or player to handle those emotions will be lessons that last a lifetime.

Breaking the rules, no matter how big or small, can ultimately lead to undesired results, which in the long run makes it difficult to get back on the right path, especially if it means the difference between winning and loosing.

The emotions involved in an honest loss are far easier to overcome than the loss of self esteem, reputation and pride involved in a "false" win.

Although Carver should not be favorably looked upon for his substance abuse, he should be commended for the way he handled the situation.

Someone, somewhere, taught Carver something that stuck with him, sportsmanship.

For parents and coaches, teaching good sportsmanship is an endeavor that will have long reaching effects.

For players, drawing on the teachings of good sportsmanship will help in life's many wins and losses.

Parents, coaches and players who believe in "win at all costs," should get out of the sporting arena, you're bad for those who believe in playing by the rules, fair play and the sport itself.

Pro favors current for summer bass

By Earl Bentz & Steve Price
Outboard Marine Corporation

When Guy Eaker looks for bass in the heat of the summer, he tries to find moving water or current, no matter how far he has to travel to get to it.

"Over the years, I have driven my boat 50 or 60 miles or more many times to find moving water," said the angler. "It's that important to me."

The current offers several important fishing advantages, according to Eaker, who grew up fishing the Catawba River near his home in Cherryville, N.C.

"More than anything else, I believe current positions bass very predictably behind rocks and close to the shoreline in shallow water," he said. "Moving water is also cooler so the fish tend to be more active, especially in summer. They'll hit a variety of lures more readily than fish in the main lake, so they're actually easier to catch."

To find moving water on most lakes, Eaker runs to the far upper end where he is actually fishing the primary tributary river of that lake. On some lakes, this may mean a long distance boat ride, but it may also open up many miles of water that others seldom fish.

"One of the keys to fishing river current," Eaker said, "is to remember that the moving water nearly always positions bass so they are looking upstream watching for food being washed down by the current.

"That means you'll nearly always do better when your lures come downstream the same way. I like to point my boat upstream and cast upstream above my intended target, then let the water wash my lure down by the rocks or logs."

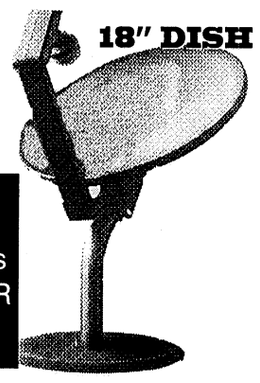
The pro said jigs, plastic worms, spinnerbaits, crankbaits and buzz baits can all be used in moving water like this, but each needs to be retrieved downstream.

"Always concentrate on getting your lures into the calm water behind obstacles because that's where the bass will be," he said. "They don't stay in the main current using all their energy fighting the flow of the water. They move behind rocks and logs where they can rest.

"I especially like to fish small plastic worms or jigs in conditions like this. I'll cast upstream, then hold my rod tip fairly high so the lure washes downstream but doesn't get snagged on the bottom. As it washes down, I'll guide it into the calm eddies behind the rocks. If the bass is there, it usually hits pretty quickly."

"Current is actually a good fishing choice year-round, not just in the heat of the summer, because the water temperature is more stable," he said. "In fact, in winter when cold fronts keep hitting an area and dropping temperatures overnight, finding current is one of the best tactics you can try because the water there is already cold and the bass have adapted.

"Overall, I'd rate current and moving water as one of my favorite places to fish anytime."



Duck calling contest set

SPRINGFIELD, Mo. — One thousand dollars will be awarded to the winner of the first annual Redhead Regional Duck Calling Contest at Bass Pro Shops Outdoor World Aug. 24. The event will be part of the popular Fall Hunting Classic held each year at Outdoor World.

"This year's Fall Hunting Classic will run from Thursday through Aug. 25," said Randy Vance, outdoor communications manager. "It has become one of the Midwest's most popular tourism events. Hunters have come to this event from as far away as Saskatchewan, Canada."

The Redhead Regional Duck Calling Contest, sanctioned by the World's Championship Duck Calling Contest is conducted each year in Stuttgart, Ark. There will be a $25 entry fee. Proceeds of the contest will benefit Ducks Unlimited.

The winners of the contest will be eligible to compete in the World's Championship Duck Calling Contest. In addition to the Redhead Regional contest, callers can compete in the Missouri State Championship Contest and Goose Calling Contest.

Gimme' blood!

Retired Warrant Officer John Ward, a member of the original airborne test platoon, is out for blood as he puts the airborne wings on the chest of Chief Warrant Officer 2 Daughtery at her airborne graduation.

Sixteen Fort Benning soldiers volunteered their time at the Muscular Dystrophy Association Summer program at the Alabama Special Camp for Children and Adults in Jackson, Ala. from June 30 through July 5. Many of the camp participants are afflicted with MD and the camp is designed to give them an opportunity to experience something new while building self confidence and having fun.

Pharmacy prepares for upgrade

By Jacqué Hill
Special to the Bayonet©

Martin Army Community Hospital's Main Pharmacy will undergo renovation throughout September to upgrade the facility to a bank teller window system.

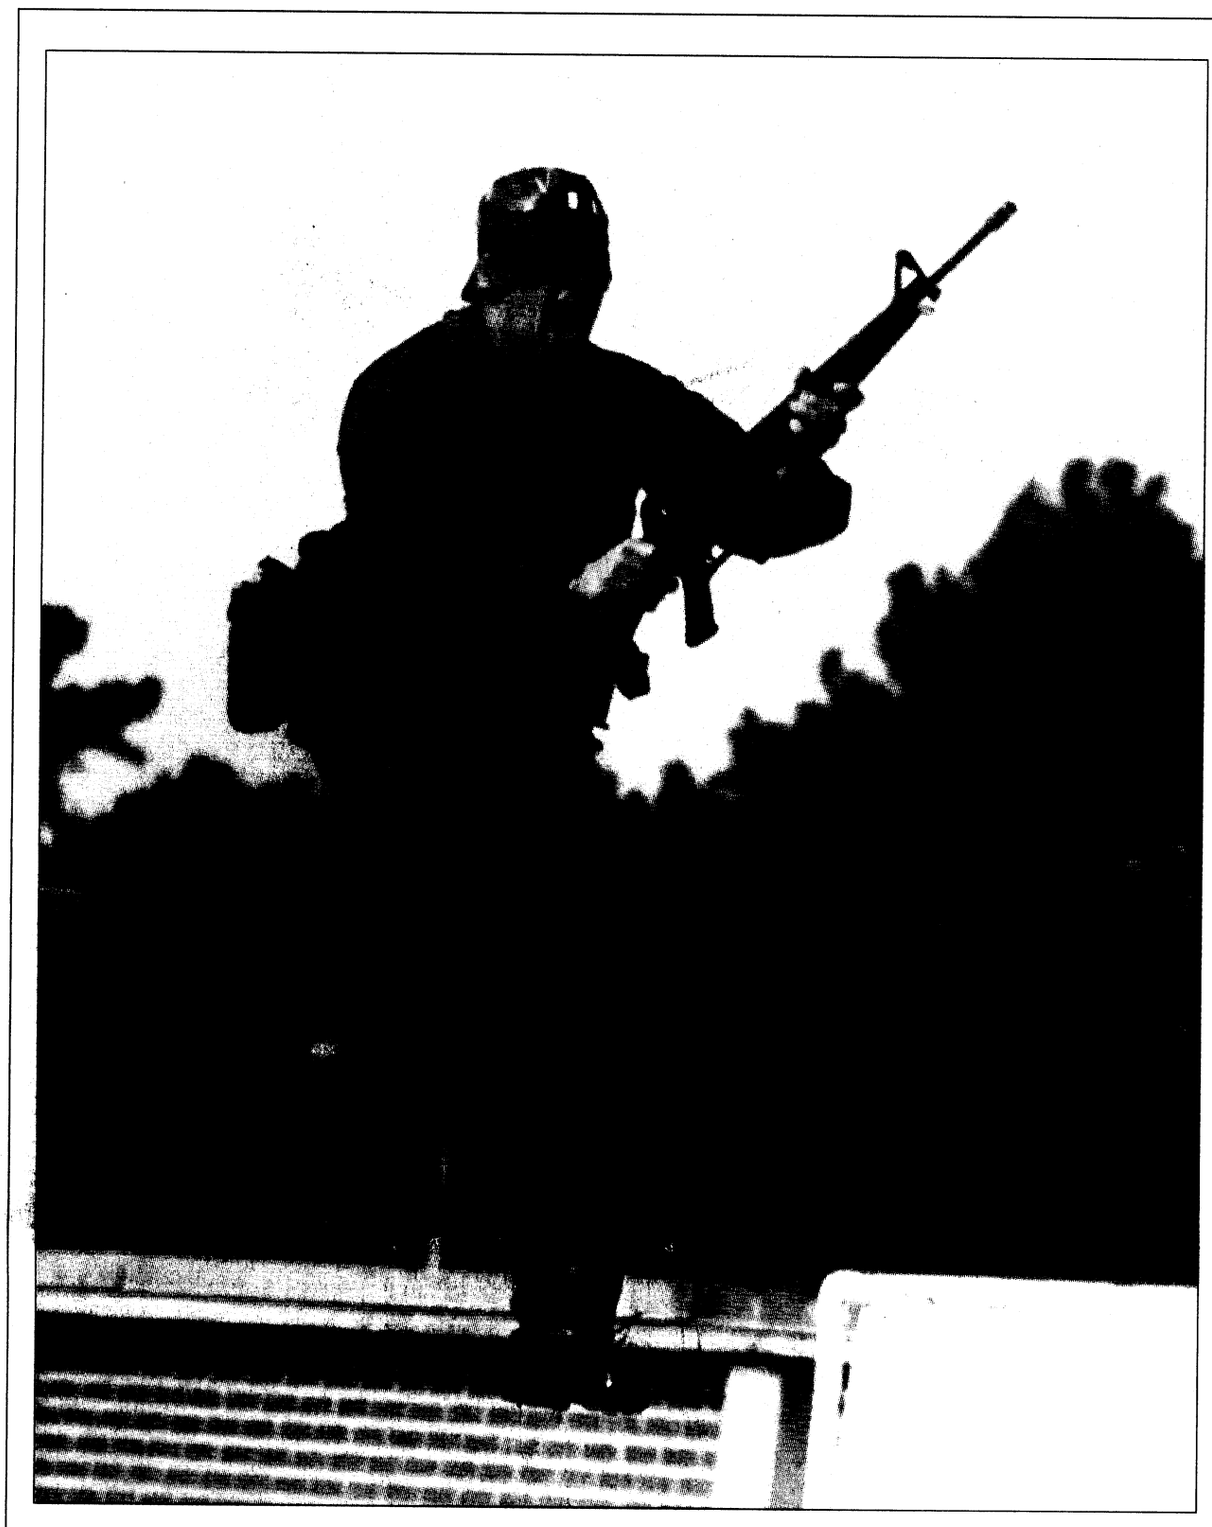
According to Maj. Antonio F. Reyes, assistant chief of Pharmacy Service, the overall goal of the renovation is to significantly upgrade the delivery of pharmaceutical care to MACH patients and quicken the prescription filling process.

"Pharmaceutical care provides value-added services for the purpose of assisting patients with medication needs and to ensure that optimal therapeutic outcomes are achieved," Reyes said. "With this system, we will have better interaction with the patients and improve the outcome of their care."

"We are going to have our medical supplies as close to the service windows as possible to make the system faster," said Reyes. "With the supplies forward, we will be able to knock 15 minutes off the waiting time easily."

Having everything forward means having the top 200 prescribed medications available at the pick up windows with automatic pill counters directly behind them.

"This type of customer focused service is becoming the standard of care in all Army pharmacies," Reyes said.



There will be a total of five service windows when the renovation is completed. Each of these windows will be manned by a registered pharmacist and one technician, according to Reyes. A claim ticket dispenser will be available in front of the pharmacy to give each patient a service number. Once the patient's number is shown on the digital display over the dispensing window, he or she will go to the appropriate window and receive service while interacting with the pharmacist.

Winning the Army Community of Excellence Award in 1995 provided the funds for this renovation.

"We are attempting to minimize the impact on the pharmaceutical service provided to our patients throughout the month of September," Reyes said. "That is why the majority of the renovations will be done on the weekends.

"We're going to seal off the area under construction to prevent any kind of problems with dust or noise. We'll post signs explaining what we re doing.

"We request a little bit of understanding from our patients while this is being done. After construction is completed, the benefits of the new system will greatly outweigh any minor inconveniences our patients encounter during this short time."

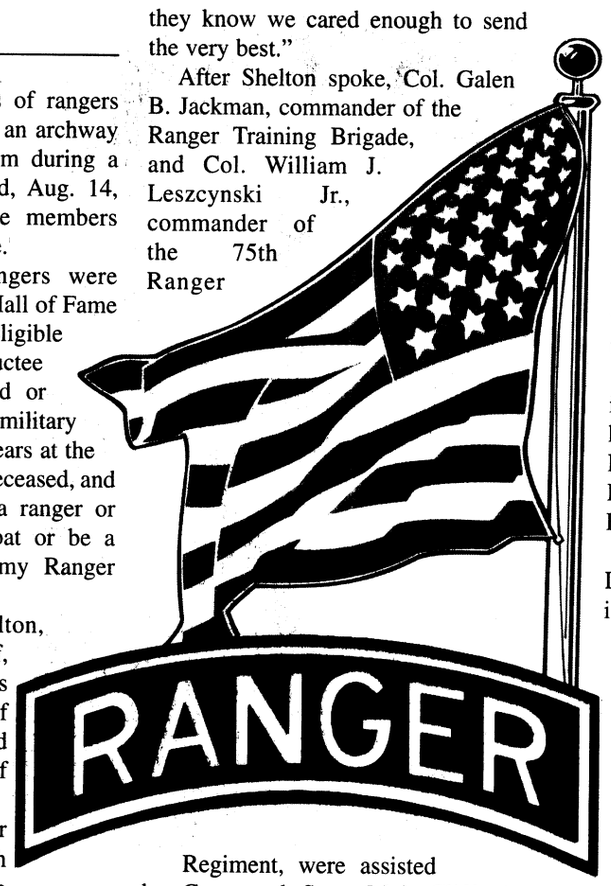
Hall of Fame

17 inductees celebrate during Ranger Rendezvous

By Jacqué Hill
Special to the Bayonet©

As several generations of rangers walked in groups beneath an archway bearing the ranger emblem during a ceremony at Ranger Field, Aug. 14, participants and audience members seemed to swell with pride.



Seventeen former rangers were inducted into the Ranger Hall of Fame at this ceremony. To be eligible for this honor, each inductee must have been separated or retired from active duty military service for at least three years at the time of nomination or be deceased, and he must have served in a ranger or ranger type unit in combat or be a graduate of the U.S. Army Ranger School.

Gen. Henry H. Shelton, commander in chief, Special Operations Command, spoke highly of rangers, both past and present, during the Hall of Fame Ceremony.

"These men ... and their comrades who are not with us today have made the grade ... and they really form the core of the (ranger) creed we uphold," he said. "Are they heroes? I submit to you that these men are heroes by any stretch of the imagination.

"We know that when the American public hears we've deployed rangers, they know we cared enough to send the very best."

After Shelton spoke, Col. Galen B. Jackman, commander of the Ranger Training Brigade, and Col. William J. Leszczynski Jr., commander of the 75th Ranger Regiment, were assisted by Command Sgts. Maj. Clifford West and Michael Hall in presenting each inductee or his representative with a bronze Ranger Hall of Fame medallion.

Jackman told of the significance of the event before presenting the medallions.

"This is a special day for rangers," he said, "because today, we honor those who have made valuable contributions to their country and communities."

Fourteen Japanese-Americans were also honored during the ceremony. Phil Piazza of Merrill's Marauders spoke of the honored soldiers.

"At this time the Marauders would like to honor these 14 terrific Americans," he said.

The following day, each inductee's portrait and narrative history was unveiled at the Ranger Training Brigade's Headquarters, where the Hall of Fame is actually housed.

Retired Lt. Col. Roy Lombardo was one of the inductees.

"I'm very humbled by that experience — to be among the midst of a cadre of heroes that I followed from my days as a young lieutenant to today," he said.

Other former rangers inducted into the Ranger Hall of Fame include Joe Alderman, Albert E. Basil, Clarence Banscomb, Richard C. Burnell, George Chaney, Robert Channon, Ormand B. Crabtree, Warren Evans, Larry A. Fletcher, Hubert H. Frost, Norman Janis, Robert C. Kingston, Joseph R. Lacy, Richard Meadows, Lee Mize and Berkeley J. Strong.

'Follow Me' Fitness Program helps civilians

By Jacqué Hill
Special to the Bayonet©

The U.S. Army Physical Fitness School, Martin Army Community Hospital and Fort Benning's Directorate of Civilian Personnel are sponsoring the "Follow Me to Fitness 2001" Civilian Fitness Program, a voluntary, free program for civilians wanting to get into shape.

Staff members from the three sponsoring organizations will instruct and advise program participants during exercise workouts, as well as offer classroom instruction in several health and well-being areas, according to Krystal H. McGee, Health Promotion Program coordinator. McGee said the classroom instruction areas will include nutrition, tobacco cessation, stress management, substance avoidance and others.

Department of the Army civilian employees wishing to participate in the program will receive three paid hours each week to do so, according to Army Regulation 600-63, Army Health Promotion.

"Studies have already shown that in programs such as this, sick leave is decreased and productivity is increased," McGee said. "We know it's going to improve morale and make happier, healthier employees."

McGee said each individual participating in the program will be welcome to work at his or her own pace, and the guidance each participant receives from instructors will be based on personal desires.

"It's their own activities at their own pace," she said. "Basically, we want to change lifestyles and make people happy and healthy and get them interested in staying fit.

"We're not going to give them a grueling workout, but it will be structured and safe."

For those participants who simply want advice on a particular fitness routine, possibly ones they already use, McGee said instructors will be available to offer guidance in those areas, too.

"This is going to be a really personal program," she said. "Even if they choose to work out on their own, we're going to keep in touch through phone calls, personal letters, etc.

"We'll offer incentives to stick with the program and keep motivation up."

Col. Jeanne M. Picariello, commandant, U.S. Army Physical Fitness School, said assistance will be available whenever it is wanted or needed.

"If you need or prefer assistance, you'll get it," she said. "If you only want to validate a personal program already in place, that's fine, too. You get first-class, professional assistance. Because of our staff at the physical fitness school, you're getting the Army's best."

McGee is hopeful that the program will be beneficial to its participants.

"If this program can get one person to get out and walk three miles in a week, that's our goal — to promote his or her health and well-being and make positive lifestyle changes," she said.

Picariello said the program will benefit civilians.

"As a person gets in better shape and reaches a better level of health, which can be achieved with even minimal lifestyle changes, he or she will have more stamina to not only do his or her job, but to enjoy personal and family time more," Picariello said. "Participants will have less sick time and be more productive. Also, exercise is the key to stress management."

Participants will have no problem finding an activity appropriate to the program's requirements, according to Picariello.

"There should be enough variety in selections that everyone will be able to find something they'll enjoy," she said. "We tried to make the time slots convenient for folks and to vary the activities."

The next six-month program will begin in September and is open to all DA civilian employees. Others wishing to participate must work with their employers for scheduling purposes, according to Picariello.

"The time off of work allotment is through DA, but anyone who wants to join the program and can work it out with his or her employer is welcome to do so," she said.

Anyone interested in participating in the physical fitness program may contact Krystal McGee at 545-6380.

Women's equality

Nation celebrates with pride, hope

By Randy L. Watson
Equal Opportunity Advisor

The 76-year long suffrage movement offers us a unique window on the emergence of women into American political life. The story of the women's suffrage movement is a dramatic one, filled with intrigue, dedication, frustration, commitment, failure and ultimately, a hard-won victory. The suffrage movement opened many doors for women to achieve equality in America.

commentary

Aug. 26 is Women's Equality Day. This year marks the 76th anniversary of the women's suffrage movement's great victory, (ratification of the 19th amendment to the U.S. Constitution) which guaranteed all Americans the right to vote. This victory had been a very long time coming, and should be celebrated with pride and hope for the future.

The women's suffrage movement is evidence of a courageous and consistent political campaign that took over 76-years. This involved tens of thousands of women and men and resulted in the enfranchisement of one-half of the citizens of the United States. The campaign was inspired by idealism and was grounded by sacrifice. It was of enormous political and social significance, yet still virtually unacknowledged in the chronicles of American history. All across America, women vote and actively participate in all levels of government because of commitment and dedication to equality by such women as Lucretia Mott, Carrie Chapman Catt and Alice Paul. These women had to fight for their rights against entrenched opposition, with virtually no financial, legal or political power of their own.

If the history of the suffrage movement was better known, we would understand that democracy, for the first 150 years of our nation's existence, excluded more than half of the population. We would realize that this situation changed only after one of the most remarkable and successful nonviolent efforts the world has ever seen.

Consider this for a moment: women were a poor and disenfranchised class when they first organized to gain political power in the mid-1800s. Their struggle for the ballot took more than 70 years of constant, determined campaigning, yet it did not take a single life, and its success has endured. Compare this with male-led independence movements. Without firing a shot, throwing a rock, of issuing a personal threat, women won for themselves rights that men have launched violent rebellions to achieve.

The suffragist's nonviolent approach was a logical strategy, since a remarkable number of the movement's prominent leaders, (including Mott, Susan B. Anthony and Paul) were Quakers and pacifists.

They were committed to peaceful resistance, were opponents of violence and they were clear about their goal — not victory over men, but equality with men.

Women won the vote in 1920. They were not given it or granted it, but won the vote as truly as any political campaign in America. Although the vote was won by a slim of margin, it only underscored the difficulty and magnitude of their struggles and victories.

The women's suffrage movement is a record of the experiences of ordinary citizens forced to fight for their own rights against tremendous odds and social inequities. This included many American women whose talents and abilities would have made them prime candidates for national office, if their opportunities had been equal.

It is important to remember that men were suffragists, too. The suffragist movement included both men as supporters and depended on the votes that only men could cast. Even when the state suffrage measures were lost, the question often received tens of thousands of votes of male approval.

And, of course, it was virtually an all-male Senate and House that approved the amendment, along with 36 virtually all-male state legislature that ratified it. Many courageous men risked ridicule and worse to actively support women's rights.

Learning empowers soldiers

commentary

You're sweating like a pig, you feel like you're gonna throw up, and you have five or six people — all of whom seem really big — right in your face asking you all sorts of questions that they actually expect you to answer.

Are you being interrogated by homicide detectives? No, you could only hope to be that lucky. You're actually sitting in front of a Soldier of the Quarter board.

I know this may seem to be an exaggeration, but anyone who has gone to a board knows that it's not really that off-base.

I was "encouraged" to go to my first board about a year and a half ago. I had just been promoted to private first class, but wanted to become a specialist ASAP. I knew if I wanted to get promoted, with a waiver for time in service (which they still did at that time), I would need to do extra things — and going to a Soldier of the Quarter board was one of those things.

So ... I started to study. At the School of the Americas, we have a great study guide. It has so much information about the Army that I thought my head was going to explode the first time I looked at it.

Lucky for me, I retain trivial information easily. This is not to say that I think all of this is trivial, but there is a lot of material to learn to get ready for a board.

For almost three weeks, I studied constantly. Between you and me, I think my boyfriend, who is now my husband, was starting to tire of my idea of a fun evening — him asking me questions while we drank a couple of six-packs of Coke and chain smoked. I mean, you can't blame the poor guy because, really, who wants to know the ins and outs of the women's dress uniform or the 439 correct ways to fold a flag? Just kidding about that one, everyone knows there's only one correct way to fold a flag!

Anyway, I learned a lot by going to those boards. I went to a SOA Soldier of the Quarter board and won that, then went to the post board and lost big-time. I want to say that there must have been something on my mind that day for me to have done so badly (but really, it seems pretty obvious that there was absolutely nothing on my mind that day).

Then, I went to the SOA Soldier of the Year board and won that. But I guess I shouldn't be so self-serving. A new noncommissioned officer and soldier at SOA were named to compete for the year board. And, although I'm a little sad that my picture won't be hanging prominently in Ridgeway Hall anymore, I'm happy for this year's winners. I hope they'll enjoy it as I did.

So, I learned a lot by going to the boards. I know now that when I go to the promotion board for sergeant, I won't have the extra worry about wondering what to expect. In a way, I've been preparing for this board for more than a year now, and I'm hardly nervous at all.

But seriously, I would encourage all young (and I mean that in a young-to-the-Army kind of way) soldiers to go to a board for three main reasons:

1. You are able to prepare yourself for the promotion board.

2. Going to a board gives you a chance to practice your public speaking skills, which can improve your self-confidence.

3. And most important, studying for a board is just another way to educate yourself. Even if you don't plan on making the Army a career and don't care about learning any of this stuff, it is still better to be well-informed than ignorant about the things that go on around you. Knowledge is power!

Okay, so I know this is getting a little preachy, and that's the last thing that I want to do. The point I want to get across is this: do something to better yourself. If that means going to a board, getting an education, getting promoted, exercising more or whatever it is that makes you feel better about yourself so that you can accomplish your goal — do it.

Ten reasons to go to board

10. They give you a really neat certificate if you win.

9. You get to see your pretty mug shot on your unit bulletin board every day.

8. All of the stuff that you learned at basic training starts to make sense.

7. Now you have a reason to wear your nice, shiny low quarters.

6. You can impress people at parties with all of your vast Army trivia.

5. You now have the chance to embarrass yourself at the post board.

4. Free food — you'll be invited to all of the Association of the U.S. Army functions for the quarter.

3. Sitting up straight during the board improves your posture.

2. They give you a 10 percent off coupon for an Army and Air Force Exchange Service haircut.

And the number one reason soldiers should go to the board is ...

1. You'll be able to annoy your first sergeant with your new ability to quote regulations and Uniform Code of Military Justice articles.

RTB leads the way with new commander

By Lisa M. Hibbert
Bayonet staff writer

A new commander will lead the way for the Ranger Training Brigade. A change of command ceremony took place at Harmony Church Aug. 15.

Col. Galen B. Jackman relinquished command to Col. Dorian T. Anderson, during the Ranger Rendezvous festivities.

In his acceptance speech, Anderson talked about how honored he was to be in his new position.

"I consider this to be a blessing and an honor to be selected for this command and I would like to publicly thank God for this opportunity," Anderson said.

Anderson said he has served in a variety of positions where the ranger ethos was alive and which has prepared him for his new assignment. He served in the 75th Ranger Regiment as the regimental adjutant and as the commander of the 4th Bn., 87th Infantry Regt., 25th Infantry Division (Light), at Schofield Barracks, Hawaii. His most recent assignment was as the director of the Combined Arms and Tactics Directorate at Fort Benning.

A graduate of the United States Military Academy at West Point, Anderson has a bachelor of science degree, and a master's degree in management from Webster University.

In his outgoing speech, Jackman discussed his time at RTB and how surprised he was to return there.

"I had no idea when I left the RTB 24 years ago that I would have ever ended up here again," Jackman said.

Also in his speech, Jackman gave Anderson something to help him in his new position.

"I left some bug and chigger juice in my wall locker for you," Jackman said. "You'll need it!"

Jackman's new assignment will be with joint operations for the Pacific Command at Camp Smith, Hawaii.

Rangers receive Valorous Unit Award

By Lisa M. Hibbert
Bayonet staff writer

In recognition of their efforts in Somalia, the 3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment was presented with the Valorous Unit Award in Marshall Auditorium, Monday.

TASK FORCE Ranger conducted a combat raid Oct. 3. During the mission, after the capture of 24 Somalians, two TASK Force Ranger helicopters were shot down by rocket-propelled grenades. TASK FORCE Ranger rallied around the downed helicopters until assistance arrived more than 18 hours later.

Gen. Henry H. Shelton, commander in chief of the U.S. Special Operations Command, MacDill Air Force Base, Fla., presented the unit with a streamer.

"It's an honor and a privilege to be here recognizing the courage of this unit," Shelton said in his remarks at the ceremony. "This unit, along with its sister battalions, rallied together and fought for your country, your mission and each other. You displayed unblinking courage and decisive action."

The award citation reads in part that the battalion displayed "extraordinary versatility while executing a mission of highest national priority under the most austere and challenging circumstances. In taking the conflict to the enemy, 3rd Bn., 75th Ranger Regt. established a presence and a record of heroic achievement that transcended its spirit, skill and discipline under fire in intense urban combat against a well armed and numerically superior enemy, demonstrated impressive moral character and concern for human life."

Elements of the 3rd Bn., 75th Ranger Regt., were deployed to Mogadishu, Somalia, in support of United Nations Operations from Aug. to Oct. 1993.

The size of the hostile force is unknown, but the International Red Cross estimated Somalian casualties at 300 killed in action and 1,000 wounded in action. TASK FORCE Ranger sustained 74 casualties during the operation. Six rangers from 3rd Bn., 75th Ranger Regt., were killed in action.

In addition to the unit streamers, soldiers who were assigned to the battalion during the conflict are authorized the wear of an award. All rangers, while assigned to 3rd Bn., 75th Ranger Regt., are authorized wear of the ribbon.

In his closing remarks, Shelton again told the rangers how proud he was of them.

"Continue to train and sharpen your skills because I assure you that when the nation calls, rangers will lead the way!"

The Valorous Unit Award is presented to units of the U.S. Armed Forces for extraordinary heroism in action against an armed enemy of the United States while engaged in military operations involving conflict with an opposing foreign force, or while serving with friendly foreign forces engaged in an armed conflict against an opposing armed force in which the United States is not a belligerent party.

AAFES announces recall of baby carrier

Army and Air Force Exchange Service

DALLAS — The Army and Air Force Exchange Service and Playskool, in conjunction with the Consumer Product Safety Commission, announced the immediate recall of Playskool's Baby Fold N' Travel Infant Carrier, model numbers 100, 101, 102 and 103.

Playskool received reports of 10 accidental falls associated with the carrier.

The lightweight plastic infant carriers measures about 17 inches long when fully extended. They were available in blue or teal with either a fabric or vinyl pad.

AAFES sold only 48 of the model number 102 carriers through the exchange order catalog in 1993. The price was $35.

Parents should stop using the recalled baby carrier immediately.

Customers in the United States should call Playskool toll-free at (800) 447-7707.

Playskool will provide customers with prepaid shipping material to mail in the carrier.

A full refund will be issued upon receipt of the infant carrier.

Customers overseas should return any of the infant carriers (model numbers 100, 101, 102 and 103) to their local exchange for a refund of $35.

Volunteers act as language agents

By Judith O'Toole
School of the Americas

More than 800 people volunteered their time for the Olympic Women's Softball Games this summer. Two of these were noncommissioned officers from the School of the Americas. They acted as language agents for the Olympic softball competition in Columbus.

Sgt. 1st Class Bobby Hernandez, SOA security manager, and Sgt. 1st Class Joel Villa, SOA psychological operations instructor, were part of a 40-person language team that consisted of bilingual people fluent in either Spanish, French or Chinese. Because of their Spanish language skills, the NCOs translated for the Puerto Rican softball team.

Every team of language agents had two groups, and those groups were split between the Olympic Village at Fort Benning and the stadium, Hernandez said. However, before the games began, both Hernandez and Villa helped out at the Olympic Village.

During the games, Hernandez was at the ballpark interpreting for the umpires and players, and was given the additional duty of escort for the Panamanian umpire. He said he had always wanted to go to the Olympics; and being involved with them was a fun, but sometimes exhausting experience. During the three-week period, he and Villa each had two or three days off. So, although they were volunteers, they did work hard.

Villa, however, was an old hand at Olympic volunteering. He helped with security during the 1984 Olympics in Los Angeles. A San Diego native, Villa was assigned at the time to the U.S. Marine Corps Helicopter Air Station at Tustin, Calif., which has since closed.

For the Atlanta games, Villa said he wanted to do a little more. He volunteered at both the Olympic Village and the venue during the games, interpreting for the Spanish-speaking players.

Whenever any of the team members was interviewed by the press, Villa said, he was right next to her to interpret.

The volunteers worked hard to get ready for the Olympics. They interpreted at the Superball Softball Tournament last year to prepare. And they also took two interpersonal relations classes to help them, Hernandez said.

He said that he thought all of the volunteer linguists were outstanding and that they all worked really well together.

Villa also thought the people involved were great. And although the hours that he put in during the three weeks were long, it was well worth it and a lot of fun.

"I enjoyed helping out in 1984, so I thought I would keep up with the tradition," Villa said. "I mean, how many people can say that they've been involved in not only one Olympics, but two?"

BOSS

Better Opportunities for Single Soldiers

Volunteers help run programs

By Caryn Bumpstead
Better Opportunities for Single Soldiers

The Fort Benning Better Opportunities for Single Soldiers program promotes volunteerism. In the past BOSS has volunteered for several special events, such as helping to return the soapbox racer cars back to the starting point at the Soapbox Derby, hanging Christmas lights in downtown Columbus, and even selling concessions at the Heritage Festival, which was an exhibit of Civil War era events that have happened here in Columbus.

BOSS now asks for soldiers to help on post. The BOSS recycling program is in need of volunteers to make rounds with Spec. David Schaffer, who collects all the cans around post.

"One person a couple of days a week would be a great help," Schaffer said. "Especially Fridays when the whole load is taken to the recycling plant for turn in. Anyone who has some time to devote to BOSS and the single soldiers of Fort Benning would be appreciated. It only takes a couple of hours to do the whole run when there is more than one person to do the work," Schaffer said.

On an average, the BOSS program generates two to three hundred pounds of cans per week, which contributes approximately $80 a week to our program, Schaffer said.

This money is spent on BOSS functions like trips to Six Flags over Georgia in Atlanta, BOSS picnics and even the BOSS Bash coming up this October at Uchee Creek.

These events are for single soldiers, to promote an alternative to hanging out in the barracks and give them the opportunity to meet other single soldiers like themselves.

All soldiers interested in volunteering or who would like additional information on upcoming BOSS events can contact their major subordinate command BOSS representative or call the BOSS president at 545-6800 or 545-6688.

Question of the week:

Every week before I am released for the weekend, my section sergeant tells me to stay close by in case he or she may need me to work over the weekend, even though the unit doesn't have any critical missions going on. I am the only soldier that lives in the barracks in my section. I waste my weekends because I don't want to fail my section in case they really need me. What can I do?

In any situation such as this, the easiest solution would be to talk to your section sergeant, or notify the chain of command.

The United States Army Infantry Center Regulation 600-19, Paragraph 3-10, states if a soldier is not required after duty hours, on any given weekend, he or she is considered on pass. All mileage, hour restrictions and requirements to submit a pass request will be eliminated for these normal weekend passes. Commanders may impose special restrictions for mission essential requirements only.

RANGER RENDEZVOUS

Memorial honors rangers, advisors

By Jacqué Hill
Special to the Bayonet©

A memorial honoring Vietnamese rangers and their American advisors was unveiled Aug. 15 at the Ranger Training Brigade headquarters.

Retired Chief Warrant Officer 2 Bryan H. Jackson, a board of trustees member of the National Medal of Honor Museum of Military History in Chattanooga, Tenn., was pleased with the unveiling ceremony.

"It's long overdue," he said. "It was a super program — very impressive."

Col. Galen B. Jackman, RTB commander, felt the ceremony was enriching to the Ranger Hall of Fame.

"Today we enrich our hall by recognizing a unique group of rangers — the Vietnamese rangers and their ranger advisors," he said.

The memorial is displayed in front of RTB and contains a stone marker in which is written, "Ranger — In memory of all Vietnamese rangers and their American ranger advisors, 1960 to 1975. Their patriotism, valor and fidelity in the defense of freedom must never be forgotten."

"The ceremony was very emotional and moving and filled in an important piece of ranger history with the dedication of this memorial to Vietnamese rangers and their American ranger advisors," said retired Lt. Col. Roy Lombardo, who was inducted Aug. 14 into the Ranger Hall of Fame.

One of last year's inductees into the Ranger Hall of Fame, retired Command Sgt. Maj. Mike Martin, spoke about the importance of the dedication ceremony.

"There are bonds shared in war that only a combat soldier can relate to," he said. "Such was the experience of the U.S. Army ranger advisor, his Vietnamese counterpart, the members of his advisory team and the ranger unit he served with.

"Those bonds formed some 20, 30 years ago in a war-torn Vietnam are just as strong today as both the American and Vietnamese rangers work together to ensure the valor and dedication of our fallen comrades are not forgotten."

29th Infantry Regiment

The 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment, Motor Pool recently won the 1995 Best Motor Pool in the Army, Heavy Category Award.

The regimental commander, Col. Robert J. Fulcher Jr., conducted an awards ceremony, recognizing the accomplishments of the civilian mechanics of Aug. 13.

This is not a new honor to the battalion, as they have won the Training and Doctrine Command award on six previous occasions as well as winning the Department of the Army level award on several occasions and the best Department of Defense motor pool once.

"It is a great accomplishment to win this award once, but it is a much greater accomplishment and a display of the exceptional professionalism and pride in your work to win the award on seven separate occasions," Fulcher said.

Each of the 22 civilians received a Department of the Army Certificate of Achievement and a cash award of $250.

The following were recognized during the ceremony:

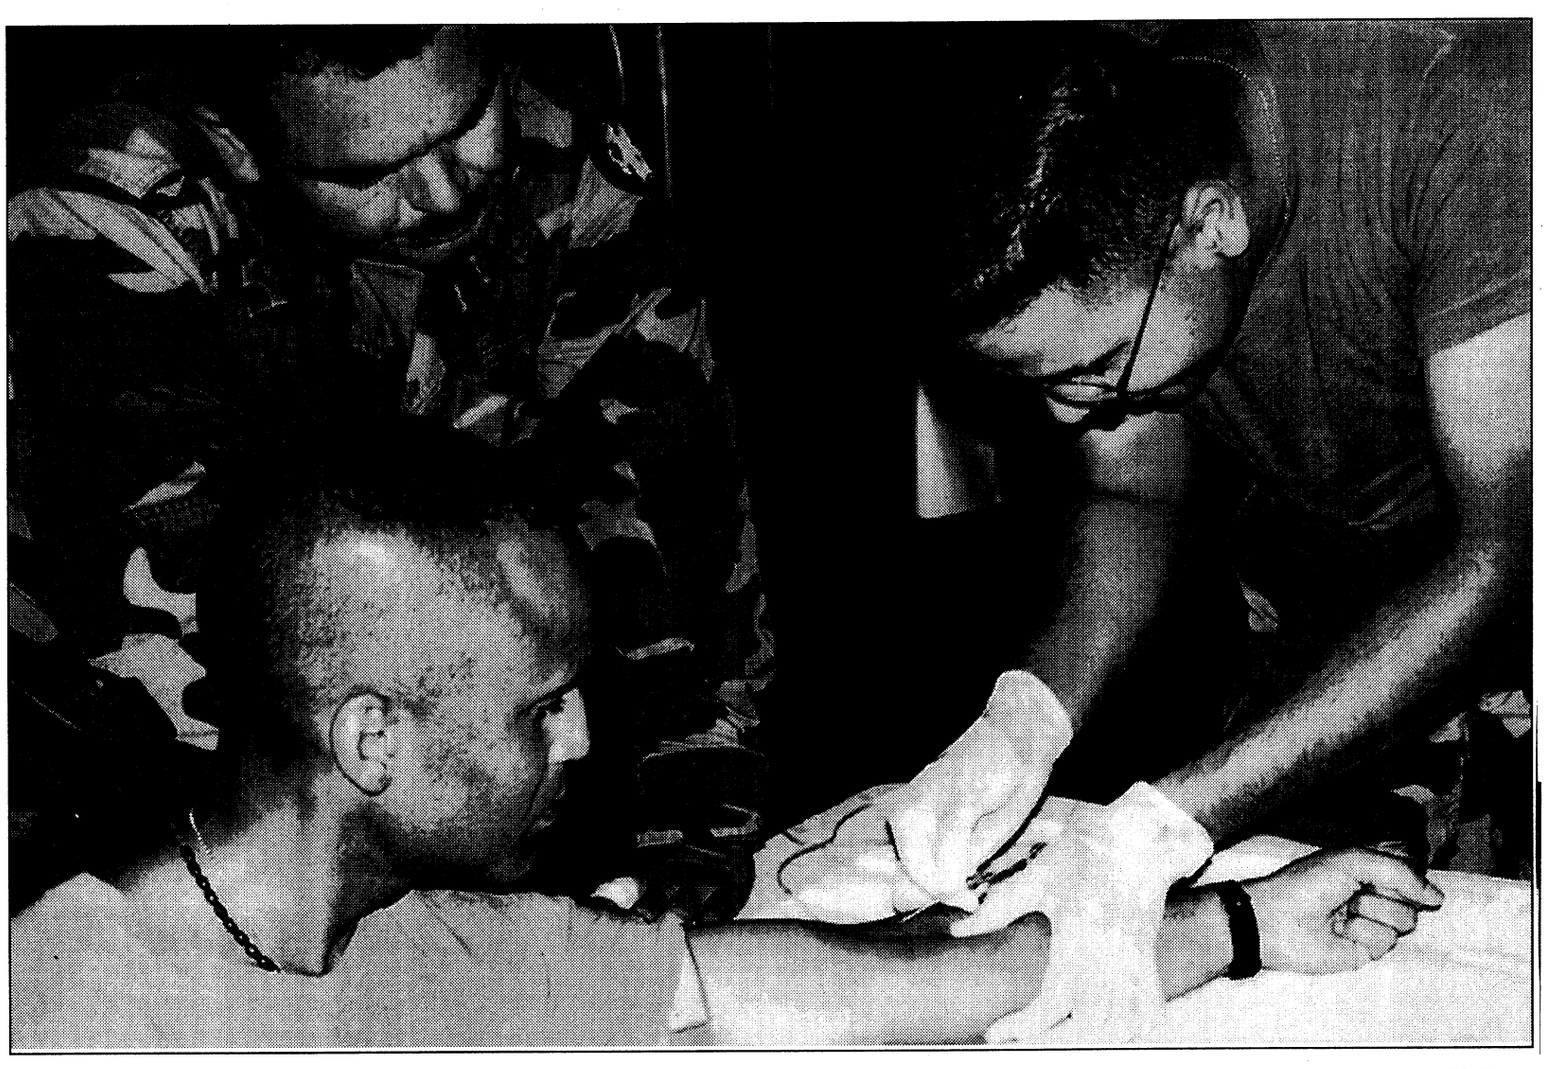
Lifesavers

SOA soldiers receive combat first aid experience

By Judith O'Toole
School of the Americas

Every soldier in the Army has had some experience with buddy aid and other basic first aid. Remember basic training? But about 20 soldiers assigned to the School of the Americas got a little more experience than that when they attended the school's Combat Lifesaver Course.

Presented in English, so all of the non-Spanish speaking members assigned to SOA would be able to attend, the course lasted three days. The training included buddy aid, the litter and fireman carries, application of a field pressure dressing and a tourniquet, splinting a fracture, treatment of head and chest wounds, cardiopulmonary resuscitation and how to apply an intravenous venipuncture.



First, the students were given instruction in each area, said Sgt. 1st Class Robert Saenz, SOA medical instructor. Then, there would be a hands-on portion of the class where the students could practice what they had just learned.

Saenz said that after a predetermined time, the students would then have both a written and a hands-on test for each section that was covered during the instruction.

Most of the students said they were most concerned with administering the IV, which they did on dummy patients first, then on their partners. Most said they didn't mind receiving the IV as much as they did giving it. They didn't want to hurt their partners when they stuck them with the needle.

On the last day of class, the soldier-students took a final test, and those who passed the exam have now completed the Army Correspondence Course for Combat Medical Skills.

Saenz said that offering courses like this to soldiers is very important. Not only does it enable soldiers to be able to react well in an emergency situation, but it also helps them with their next promotion. For soldiers working toward promotions to sergeant and staff sergeant, completion of this also gave them eight promotion points.

OCS students refurbish Wigle Hall

By Pam Newbern
Officer Candidate School

The symbol of what graduates of the Officer Candidate School can achieve is taking on a new look.

Wigle Hall, which houses the OCS Hall of Fame, will be rededicated Sept. 6 at 1 p.m. For the past 10 months, OCS candidates, graduates and staff members have put countless hours into renovating and refurbishing the building.

Dedicated in 1958, the structure was named in honor of Thomas Wigle, the first OCS graduate to earn the Congressional Medal of Honor. The building, located near the OCS archway at Fort Benning, has long housed the OCS Hall of Fame and other OCS memorabilia, such as trophies and class gifts. But the years had taken their toll on the structure.

"The building had deteriorated to the state where it was no longer a facility where it could properly honor distinguished OCS graduates who've served their country with great distinction in both military and civilian careers," said Lt. Col. Scott L. Armbrister, commander, 3rd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regt.

"Early in my tenure, I decided to take on the renovation of the building and bring it back to the standard it should be to properly honor great OCS grads of the past, present and future," he said.

And a lot of renovating it took. Armbrister said the inside of the building was gutted. New lighting and speaker systems were installed, and the outside walls were stripped and repainted. New carpeting and furniture also have been added.

"Since I got here (in August 1995), every senior class has contributed to the OCS Hall of Fame and the renovation of Wigle Hall," Armbrister said. "I feel it is important that these candidates have a sense they contributed to this institution.

"They leave here with more than a commission," he said. "They leave with a sense of making a contribution to this place. I think it's just as important as passing the tactics test."

One of the biggest renovation tasks was finding and displaying all 1,776 pictures of the Hall of Fame inductees. Before the renovation began, many of the pictures were stored in back rooms of the building, and had not been seen in years, if ever.

"One of the hardest projects was to find all the photos," Armbrister said. "We didn't even know who they were. The candidates spent hours upon hours researching, trying to find out who the gentlemen were."

All of the pictures were resized, and mounted on the walls. Only a few of the inductees now lack a picture or biography.

In addition, the pictures and biographies have all been computerized by members of the 3rd Bn., 11th Inf. Regt., staff. Armbrister said an OCS page also has been created for Internet users.

"The battalion bought a 21st century automation system," Armbrister said. "All of the biographical material on the inductees, as well as their pictures, will be available to Internet users.

"We're still missing about 30 to 40 biographies," Armbrister said, adding the OCS page will be used to ask readers if they have any information about the inductees.

In addition to all the other changes, Wigle Hall also will serve another purpose, Armbrister said.

"Probably the biggest thing — OCS has coordinated and made arrangements with the National Infantry Museum to place articles within Wigle Hall as an annex of the National Infantry Museum," he said.

Funding for all the renovation has come from OCS alumni and friends, Armbrister said. An OCS Foundation was established earlier this year, and the funds are all used directly for the building renovation.

"The renovation could not have been possible without the tremendous response of OCS alumni in contributing funds in order for the battalion to make the improvements that were so sorely needed," Armbrister said. "I could not have done this with my budget. Without their help, I could not have done any of this."

New members to be inducted into Hall of Fame

By Pam Newbern
Officer Candidate School

Two U.S. ambassadors are among 51 Officer Candidate School graduates who will be inducted into the OCS Hall of Fame Sept. 6.

Bismarck Myrick, the U.S. ambassador to Lesotho, and Ronald E. Neumann, the U.S. ambassador to Algiers, will take their places among more than 1,776 distinguished OCS graduates whose pictures are on display in the Hall of Fame at Wigle Hall.

OCS graduates who have achieved the rank of colonel, Medal of Honor recipients, or those who have distinguished themselves in civilian occupations are eligible for induction.

According to Capt. Mary M. Martindale, personnel officer, 3rd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regt., inductees are chosen by a committee composed of the OCS battalion commander, the 11th Inf. Regt., commander, the chief of staff of the U.S. Army Infantry School, the chief of staff of the U.S. Army Infantry Center, and the assistant commandant of the Infantry School.

An inductee must receive at least three votes to be selected for the Hall of Fame. The installation commander, Maj. Gen. Carl F. Ernst, can override committee decisions.

The Sept. 6 induction ceremony is one of several activities scheduled at Wigle Hall, located near the OCS archway.

According to Lt. Col. Scott L. Armbrister, commander, 3rd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regt., there are numerous events scheduled for the inductees, their families and friends.

A formal induction dinner will be held at the Officers' Club Sept. 5. Lt. Gen. Joe Kinzer, 5th Army commander, will be the guest speaker.

A no-host breakfast will be held

3rd Bde soldiers test non-lethal weapons

By Robin A. Shawlinski
3rd Bde., 3rd Inf. Div. (Mech)

Clad in flak vests with weapons slung, a platoon of dismounted soldiers have been assigned to distribute food and clothing to civilians somewhere in the world. An issue point has been established in front of a building. More than 200 are expected to be present for the distribution. Reports have come down that insurgent agitators will be in the area.

The civilians, talking loudly and carrying sticks, approach the issue point. The squad leaders now have some decisions to make. "What do we do if the crowd starts swinging their sticks? Fire live rounds on them? Throw tear gas?"

Last week, soldiers from Company D, 1st Battalion, 15th Infantry Regiment, in conjunction with the Dismounted Battlespace Battle Lab, learned that they may have other choices — non-lethal weapons. Some of the munitions included the bean bag round, rubber pellets, riot control agent, the Stinger round and the foam batons.

"Non-lethal weapons have been around for a while, so we're kind of late arrivals to the concept," said Maj. Rene Burgess, project officer with the Dismounted Battlespace Battle Lab. "We've found that there's a definite gap between positioning a Bradley (fighting vehicle) to intimidate and shooting. Non-lethal weapons will bridge that gap."

Burgess said one of the goals of the testing included investigating the operational suitability of various non-lethal weapons and narrowing down the choice of munitions from the many that are manufactured today.

"The environment has changed," Burgess said. "It

See WEAPONS, A-9

Weapons: Soldiers train for peacekeeping seems like we're getting more support and stability missions. That means they're not military missions and there are non-combatants."

To achieve this goal, the soldiers acted out several potential confrontation scenarios. Some of the scenarios included performing crowd control tasks.

Many of these scenarios also helped in determining the fielding of the non-lethal weapons and squad organization and basic issue, and the tactics, techniques and procedures for non-lethal weapons employment, he said.

"Many of these munitions have already been in use in Haiti, Somalia and Bosnia, but there were really no established tactics, techniques or procedures for their use," Burgess said. "We're looking at different variations; like seeing how fast we can reload."

The soldiers also helped in determining the potential for non-lethal weapons munitions in military operations in urban terrain.

Burgess said the soldier's input has been invaluable.

"We're getting some good lessons from these 3rd Brigade (Combat Team), 3rd Infantry Division (Mechanized), soldiers," he said. "It's a different prospective. It's important to have that M203 gunner our there firing the munitions.

"It's our goal to put the user into the picture earlier in the process," he said.

The Dismounted Battlespace Battle Lab benefited from this union, but so did the soldiers. They are helping to shape the future of non-lethal operations.

"I feel really good about using the non-lethal munitions now," said Staff Sgt. Willie Harris, Co. D, 1st Bn., 15th Inf. Regt. "Due to the recent conflicts in Somalia and Haiti, these weapons systems will come in handy."

Pvt. 2 Frank McKay, Co. D, 1st Bn., 15th Inf. Regt., echoed Harris' opinion.

"I think this training is good with our job being less defined and having to be deployed as global police," he said. "We're getting a look at what we'll have to handle in the near future."

The only challenge some of the soldiers found was the different perspective non-lethal munitions brings into play.

"It's different; it's more about riot control," McKay said. "It's a different mentality, so we'll have to change our train of thinking."

Robin A. Shawlinski

for the inductees and their families in the OCS dining facility from 7 to 8:45 a.m Sept. 6. The breakfast will be followed by a tour of the National Infantry Museum at 9 a.m.

The induction ceremony will be in Marshall Auditorium, Building 4, at 11 a.m. The guest speaker will be Maj. Gen. Johnny Riggs, the assistant Deputy Chief of Staff for Operations and Plans at the Pentagon.

The reception will be followed at 1 p.m. by the rededication of Wigle Hall. The hall was named in honor of Thomas Wigle, the first OCS graduate to earn the Congressional Medal of Honor. Wigle died Sept. 16, 1944, of wounds he received while storming an enemy stronghold in Italy.

"This year, for the first time," Armbrister said. "There will be a procession of honor for the inductees, which will become an annual tradition at OCS. The procession of honor is where past and current year Hall of Fame inductees will be honored by walking down a cordon of flags and officer candidates to Wigle Hall."

Following is a list of the 1996 inductees:

Col. Larry N. Barker, Francis M. Bator, Clyde W. Bauer, Col. Fred R. Brown Jr., Col. Carl R. Bruno, Col. Edward J. Burke, Col. Alfred C. Channels, Col. George H. Chase and Col. Frank J. Cook II.

Four chaplains complete marriage, family counseling training

By Lisa M. Hibbert
Bayonet staff writer

Fort Benning's Family Life Chaplains Center, in conjunction with Columbus State University and the Pastoral Institute, graduated four chaplains from the U.S. Army Family Life Chaplain Training Program, at The Infantry Center Chapel, Monday.

Two was the significant number of this year's graduation, marking this program as being the second of its kind in the Army and the only one in the Training and Doctrine Command (the other program is through Forces Command at Fort Riley, Ks.). Two also signifies that this is Fort Benning's second graduating class.

The mission of the program is to train the chaplains as marriage and family therapists and as family life chaplains, said Chaplain (Lt. Col.) Bob R. Davidson, director of the training program. Each chaplain who completes the program will go on to establish Family Life Training Centers and train other chaplains throughout the Army.

> "The program started ... because (military) families are usually in crisis, especially with having to deal with deployments."
> — Chaplain (Lt. Col.) Bob R. Davidson
> U.S. Army Family Life Chaplain Training Program director

"The program started more than 20 years ago because (military) families are usually in crisis, especially with having to deal with deployments," Davidson said. "There was not an advocate to assist and help families solve problems."

The program begins with three months of theory classes and follows up with 12 months of clinical training, during which the students integrate their theory training into their clinical work.

Through Columbus State University and the Pastoral Institute, the chaplains learn how to conduct confidential counseling sessions.

At the Family Life Center, the chaplains are able to learn from each other's counseling sessions through the use of two-way mirrors, cameras and conference rooms.

"Each student sees between nine to 15, up to 20 families a week at the Family Life Center," Davidson said.

By providing the certified marriage and family counseling, each chaplain that completes the program will save the Army more than $40,000 and will save soldiers more than $6,000 in out-of-pocket expenses that would have otherwise been spent at civilian counseling facilities.

The graduates and the locations where they will be assigned are:

Chaplain (Capt.) Mike W. Dugal, Fort Sam Houston, Tx.

Chaplain (Capt.) Thomas E. Killgore, Fort Richardson, Ala.

Chaplain (Maj.) Robert T. Meek, Fort Mead, Md.

Chaplain (Maj.) John W. Wilson, Fort Irwin, Ca.

The Army produces an average of 20 chaplains per year.

Pre-K preparations

Kathy Einhorn, pre-K coordinator for the Fort Benning Schools, and Janie Pride, pre-K teacher at White School, go through learning materials and toys purchased for the post's pre-kindergarten program. Although school starts Tuesday for most students, almost 300 children enrolled in the program will begin Sept. 3. Nine morning and afternoon classes have been set up.

CareMobile

Program shuttles patients to MACH entrance from parking

Martin Army Community Hospital

Martin Army Community Hospital recently addressed the most common complaint of patients' shortage of parking spaces close to the hospital.

"Patients, especially those who are extremely ill, do not like the prospect of parking in the lower lots and making the long journey to and from the hospital," said 2nd Lt. Michael J. Andragna, chief, Specialty Care.

In response to this complaint, MACH has purchased two four-seat patient transportation carts using the prize money obtained from the 1995 Army Communities of Excellence. The new carts, named the CareMobile Shuttles, will assist the patients to and from the parking areas and the hospital entrance.

However, the success of the operation is contingent upon help from the community. American Red Cross and the hospital need friendly, dedicated volunteers to operate the new CareMobiles. Volunteers must have a valid civilian driver's license, complete the Red Cross orientation and driver's training program.

With help from the community, MACH will have the cart service fully operational by Oct. 1. The cart service will be available from 8 a.m. to 4 p.m. Monday through Friday. For more information, call Andragna at 544-2389, or Deitre Russell, director, American Red Cross, at 544-4223.

SCHOOL SAFETY

Driver focus eliminates traffic hazards

Infantry Branch Safety Office

The human race has not been endowed with a sense of impending danger or disaster. We are, therefore, given the free will to develop this sense within ourselves and to promote safety consciousness in others.

There are three stages in life that require special effort from all safety-minded people. These three stages in life seem to share a common attribute — carelessness. Careless individuals are found in innocence of childhood, the recklessness of youth and the forgetfulness of maturity.

"We should all be crusaders concerning safety," said Regis Beighley, safety manager, Infantry Branch Safety Office, "because safety is everybody's business."

Beighley said statistics show that the innocent have often paid with their lives for the recklessness, carelessness and stupidity of those who have no regard for their own or others' safety and are prone not to listen to the voice of reason.

In order to eliminate accident causes, he said there must be support from every individual, instilling a safe behavior pattern toward individuals' everyday on- and off-duty conduct.

"Starting in September, and for the next nine months, our concern must be focused on school children and the associated traffic problems," Beighley said.

The bright yellow bus laden with children will be a familiar sight in the area. It travels in the early morning hour, at midday and in the afternoon. We may even see the school bus during hours of darkness. Whenever school buses are moving, Beighley said both bus drivers and others on the road must exercise special caution to protect the lives of young passengers.

Then, there are children walking to school or to the bus stop. When sidewalks are not provided, youngsters will walk or ride their bikes on the streets.

"Parents should ensure that their children wear at least one light colored article of clothing —anything to make the child more visible to drivers," Beighley said.

Reflective tape can be placed on book covers or belts. If the child will be walking during darkness, he should carry a small flashlight with the light turned on.

Beighley said drivers have no time for carelessness or forgetfulness.

"They must be alert at all times and be prepared for the child who may wander into the path of a car," he said.

"We cannot depend on instinct or intuition to warn us of a dangerous situation, but should always be ready for the unexpected."

Eisenhower designated first DoD cardiac surgery facility

Eisenhower Army Medical Center

FORT GORDON, Ga. — Dwight D. Eisenhower Army Medical Center has been designated the first Department of Defense Specialized Treatment Services Facility for Cardiac Surgery and Interventional Cardiology.

Currently 180 cases are being done annually, which is expected to rise to 300 to 350 cases per year when the STS is established in September. The STS extended the Eisenhower catchment area for these services from a radius of 40 miles to 200 miles.

Eisenhower Army Medical Center is accredited by the Joint Commission on Accreditation of Health Organizations, and the cardiac surgery program participates in the Society of Thoracic Surgeons' national data base. The overall results of the open heart surgery program here are comparable or better than the national standards.

The EAMC cardiac catheterization laboratory is equipped with the state-of-the-art technology in imaging and computer programming. Procedures performed in the lab include diagnostic catheterization, balloon angioplasty, stent placement and pacemaker insertion.

The surgical intensive care unit and the post-operative heart recovery unit were expanded this year to accommodate increased surgical cases. The cardiothoracic surgical ward is adjacent to the coronary care unit and shares a common telemetry monitoring system, as well as a multidisciplinary impatient cardiac rehabilitation program with the cardiology service.

The EAMC multidisciplinary discharge planning coordinates services such as home health, physical therapy or further impatient rehabilitation before a patient is discharged.

When a patient is discharged from the Medical Center, they are enrolled in a 12-week, out-patient rehabilitation program that focuses on heart conditions exercises and risk reduction by changing lifestyles.

Post-operative heart patients are monitored weekly at home for the first four weeks by telephone with a registered nurse. In addition, a 24-hour-a-day telephone answering service is available to our post-op patients.

For more information on the Eisenhower cardiac and cardiothoracic surgical program, call Tina Luken, regional referral coordinator, at 787-6714.

Freon phase out increases cost

Better Business Bureau

Did you notice the last time you had your vehicle's air conditioning system serviced that it cost more than it did a few years ago? These higher costs may, in part, be due to global efforts to protect the ozone layer.

The refrigerant, chlorofluorocarbon-12, also known as CFC-12 or Freon, used in all but the most recent model year vehicles, was no longer being produced in developed countries as of the end of 1995. It has been determined that CFC-12 depletes the ozone layer, which protects us from overexposure to ultraviolet radiation.

The Better Business Bureau, as advised by the Environmental Protection Agency, suggests the following tips to help you maintain the cool in your vehicle's air conditioning system before and after the CFC-12 production ban.

Your service technician can continue to put CFC-12 refrigerant in your vehicle's system as long as the supplies are available. While production of CFC-12 ceased at the end of 1995, use of existing supplies of CFC-12 is permitted. Prices will most likely continue to increase as existing stocks are depleted.

If refrigerant needs to be added to your vehicle's air conditioning system, have your service technician check the system for leaks, and have them repaired. Keep in mind that leak repair is not an EPA requirement, although some states and cities do require it. Repairing leaks will save you money in the long run as the cost of CFC-12 increases.

Consider having your system converted to use an alternative refrigerant if you are having major service performed on your air conditioning system, such as when you have been in a front-end collision, or have experienced major air conditioning system failure. The additional cost of doing the conversion over and above the cost of the repair work may be small. In addition, over the next few years, as the supply of CFC-12 decreases and its cost increases, consider modifying your system to use an EPA-accepted alternative.

Keep in mind that using an alternative not yet reviewed and accepted by the EPA may result in damage to your air conditioning system components, pose a potential fire hazard, and limit your ability to have your vehicle's system serviced in the future. Currently, R-134a is the only EPA-accepted alternative which has been tested and recommenced by auto makers. R-134a is the refrigerant used in all new-car production.

If you want to convert your vehicle to use a different refrigerant, consult your vehicle manufacturer or an authorized dealer or reputable service facility about what steps should be taken and what the conversion will cost. If in doubt, get a second opinion.

Q. I have two years left before my expiration of term of service, but I really want to get out of the Army now. I have a great job lined up at home which will pay me a much higher salary than the Army. This is supposed to be a volunteer Army. Can't I just volunteer myself out of the service? What can I do?

A. An enlistment is a contract between yourself and the Army. The Army expects you to serve your country for the entire enlistment period. The volunteer force applies to joining the Army and not necessarily leaving it before your enlistment period. The Army expects you to honor that commitment. However, the Army does recognize extraordinary circumstances and unforeseen conditions that may allow you to terminate your enlistment prior to ETS.

Army Regulation 635-200 provides soldiers with administrative separations for a variety of reasons ranging from pre-existing medical conditions to personality disorders. One of the more common types of administrative separations without negative consequences occurs under Chapter 6, Separation Because of Dependency or Hardship.

Under Chapter 6 of AR 635-200, a soldier may be discharged or released from his commitment because of genuine dependency or hardship. Dependency exists when death or disability of a member of soldier's (or spouse's) immediate family causes that member to rely upon the soldier for principal care or support. For example, a soldier who must support his elderly mother after his father dies would probably qualify for separation under this chapter.

Hardship, on the other hand, exists where neither death nor disability of a member of the soldier's (or spouse's) family applies. Rather, the soldier's separation from the service will materially affect the care or support of the family by alleviating undue and genuine hardship caused by his or her service. AR 635-200 specifically provides that a married service woman who becomes a parent may apply for this type of separation if the child resides in her household. The regulation also allows sole parents to apply for the same separation whether male or female.

If neither dependency or hardship apply to your reason for wanting a separation from the Army, you may explore the other chapters in AR 635-200. Unfortunately, many soldiers attempt to leave the Army by intentionally failing to meet such standards as the Army Physical Fitness Test, the Army weight standards, or training standards.

Intentional poor performance for the purpose of separation could result in a negative characterization of your service. This characterization could prevent you from applying for other government and many civilian jobs. Furthermore, your commander may decide to take Uniform Code of Military Justice action against you for such possible offenses as dereliction of duty, which may carry a criminal penalty. Consequently, a soldier should avoid intentional misconduct for the purposes of separation or you may really shoot yourself in the foot.

The Army does not allow its soldiers to leave based on the desire to do something different or make more money. However, the Army has recognized that certain circumstances warrant the early termination of an enlistment contract.

If you have a bona fide reason for getting out of the Army before your ETS and want to consult with an attorney, you may make an appointment by calling the Legal Assistance Office at 545-3281.

tricare

USAIC Public Affairs Office

The Department of Defense recently switched to a new health care program for the Army, Navy and Air Force.

Martin Army Community Hospital representatives have provided Tricare information briefings to soldiers, retirees and family members.

In those briefings, many eligible beneficiaries have shown concern about the change and how it will affect their care. Following is one of the most commonly asked questions.

What happens if I enroll in Prime at MACH and later move to another area?

If the beneficiary moves within the region to a Prime location, he or she would simply change primary care managers. If the patient moves within the region to a non-Prime location, disenrollment would be required or the out-of-network provisions would apply for the duration of the enrollment period. We are currently awaiting guidance on disenrollment and in transit benefits for active duty family members making a permanent-change-of-station move to another location.

'Bag' old lunches, prepare healthier options

Egleston Children's Hospital

Pondering what to pack in your child's lunch box this fall? Egleston Children's Hospital at Emory University nutritionist Robin Davis said lay off the chips and gooey desserts and sneak in some high-energy, low-fat foods.

"Lunch provides at least one-third of a child's nutrition each day," said the nutritionist, "so you'd better make the nutrients count."

Davis said that good lunch time nutrition is like money in the bank. "You want a good return on your investment. Don't fill your children up with junk and fatty foods just to make their stomachs full. Give them sustained energy in return for the lunches you pack."

Children get prolonged energy from complex carbohydrates — pastas, whole grains, breads and crackers. And they need protein found in yogurt, milk, cheese and sandwich meat.

Packing a healthful lunch is made easy in the '90s with the insulated lunch boxes and sacks on the market. Serving hot lunches — leftovers — is simple with non-breakable containers made to keep food warm.

The most important lunch-time tip Davis has to offer is this: variety is the spice of lunch. "The best way to make sure your child gets the nutrients he or she needs is by offering a broad menu. Don't send the same old sandwich every day — adults get burned out on food, too."

Kids can be turned onto raw veggies if they are dunked into low-fat dips. Munching on bite-sized foods with a sandwich is fun, but a la carte items needn't be potato chips chock-full of fat. Celery filled with pimento cheese and chopped into tiny nuggets is a winning alternative to chips.

And to top off your child's nutritional noon-time fare, toss in an occasional sweet treat, such as pudding or a low-fat cookie.

Davis advised overly conscientious parents that every lunch doesn't have to be perfect. What's important is that lunches be perfectly palatable to your finicky eater's ever-changing palate.

Involve children in week-long menu

Egleston Children's Hospital

To ensure that your child gets the nutrients he or she needs at lunch, plan ahead, said Robin Davis, a nutritionist at an Atlanta hospital. Look at the big picture, including breakfast, dinner and snacks and plan lunches accordingly.

Five-day lunch forecast

While developing a lunch-time plan, Davis suggested keeping four things in mind:

• Broaden your child's taste for nutritional foods by varying the menu from week to week. If your child insists on the same sandwich every day, chances are the lunch packer created that habit.

• Increase your child's chances of having an energy-filled day by selecting complex carbohydrates and foods that are high in protein.

• Include your child in the planning process. He or she may suggest foods that aren't exactly the height of nutrition, but with a little bit of compromising, the two of you can come up with a lunch that is nutritious and is guaranteed to be eaten.

• Make the contents fun. Surprise your young eater with foods cut into interesting shapes.

Davis offers the following lunch menu to kick off the school year.

Monday — Make a traditional sandwich, preferably with lean meat and whole grain bread, cheese strips and plums cut into wedges.

Tuesday — Prepare a miniature lunch in a box with multiple food items placed in a sectioned airtight container. Contents may include lean ham cut into triangles, a variety of cheeses in fun shapes (use small cookie cutters), whole wheat crackers, grapes pulled from the stems and a small carton of yogurt.

Wednesday — Build a stuffed sandwich using pita bread and sneaking in chopped celery, diced tomatoes and other vegetables along with tuna or chicken salad. Serve with popcorn and fat-free pudding.

Thursday — Prepare a hot meal, which could be leftover chicken casserole or a low-fat pasta dish from a can. Serve it with raw vegetables and a fat-free dip.

Friday — Make this lunch a free for all. Ask your child to plan the menu. He or she might choose to repeat (or revise) a favorite meal from earlier in the week or decide to take part in a special meal from the school cafeteria, such as pizza.

Parental guidance can help first-time students adjust

Egleston Children's Hospital

Whether your child is starting school for the first time or hitting the books again after summer vacation, the start of the school year brings new demands and new expectations. These tips, provided by Hallie Bloom, director of the child life department and school program at Egleston Children's Hospital at Emory University in Atlanta, Ga., may help him or her with the transition.

First-time students

• Any worries your child has about starting school — or day care — probably stem from not knowing what to expect. Give him or her as much information as possible. A few weeks before school starts, check out and read together a book about a child's first day of school. Visit his or her school, let him or her play on the playground, and see the child's classroom and meet the teacher.

• Have trial runs a few days before to show the child what school mornings will be like. For example, have the child get up on time and dress as he or she would for school, and help him or her pack her lunch. Then go on a special outing together.

• Make sure your child is not intimidated by the bathroom at school and knows how to ask for permission to use it.

• Listen and be understanding, but don't coddle or be overly concerned yourself. If you seem confident, she or he will do fine and feel more confident.

• Get the family into school routines before school starts. Begin new bed and bath times, set up a quiet homework space and discuss how homework will be handled.

• Encourage your child to be responsible for getting ready in the mornings. It's good for the child and keeps you from having to nag every morning.

• School-age children benefit from having their own alarm clocks and calendars. These help them understand the concept of time and keep track of important days, deadlines for school projects and other scheduled activities.

• Involve your child in selecting school clothes. It's okay to set limits, such as on costs and types of clothing, but leave some choices to her or him. Fitting in with classmates is important.

• Try to send your child off to school after a calm, enjoyable morning. Organization helps. For example, teach the child to lay out her or his clothes the night before. Plan breakfasts and school lunches the night before, too.

• Show the child you value his or her work. Don't talk down about his or her school or teacher or belittle the child's assignments. Show your interest by displaying his or her projects and asking about his or her day.

Teaching children bus rules helps alleviate dangers

Egleston Children's Hospital

About 22 million students ride school buses daily, and about 60 percent of them are of elementary school age. Because they are such an everyday part of life for so many young children, parents may not realize how dangerous they can be.

But if you understand the dangers associated with school buses, you can "bus-proof" your child, preparing him or her for a school year of safe rides, according to Beth Strickland, director of a children's safety program headquartered at Egleston Children's Hospital at Emory University in Atlanta, Ga.

"Some children are injured or killed every year while riding in school buses, and many more are injured or killed while waiting at bus stops," Strickland said. "Most injuries occur when children are boarding or exiting the bus. Usually, that's due to the blind spot which extends about 10 feet in front of a bus, blocking the view of the driver."

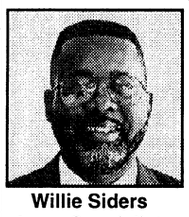
Strickland recommends that parents follow these guidelines to bus-proof their children:

• If your child is under age 8, an adult or much older child should walk him or her to and from the bus stop and supervise the younger child as he or she boards and exits the bus.

• Dress your bus rider in clothes that can be easily seen, especially on dark winter days.

For safety purposes, teach your child the following tips:

• Not to approach the bus until it completely stops when boarding



• To walk away from the bus quickly after exiting and to stay on the sidewalk until the bus pulls away

• That if they drop something under or near the bus, the child should leave it until the bus pulls away and all traffic is clear or ask the driver permission to pick up the item

• To stay seated at all times on the bus and to keep his or her head and arms in the bus at all times

• To stay calm, not to throw objects, shout or distract the driver.

Christians go for spiritual gold

reflections

By Kenneth R. Williams
1st Bn., 50th Inf. Regt., ITB

The 1996 Olympic Games are now history. Athletes from all over the world came to Atlanta and the surrounding areas to pursue the gold.

These athletes put in countless hours of training, following the philosophy of "no pain, no gain." They strived to be the best in the world at their chosen sports. They went for the gold.

Yet, only a small percentage of them earned a medal, much less the coveted Gold Medal. For many, nothing but being the best is good enough. I watched as one competitor removed his Bronze Medal immediately upon leaving the awards platform. In the televised interview, he expressed that he had failed.

We, like these athletes, pursue greatness. We go for whatever we have determined to be our "gold." Often, we vainly pursue temporary greatness. Jesus once asked a question of his followers.

"What shall it profit a man if he shall gain the whole world, yet lose his own soul?" (Mark 8:36 NIV)

Sometimes we misplace the things of true importance in pursuit of greatness.

Wouldn't we be wise to pursue the gold that will last for all eternity rather than the gold that is temporary? Jesus said, "Do not store up for yourselves treasures on earth, where moth and rust destroy, and where thieves break in and steal. But store up for yourselves treasures in heaven, where moth and rust do not destroy, and where thieves do not break in and steal." (Matthew 6:19-20 NIV)

Would you rather settle for being the best when you could be better than the best? The Apostle Paul wrote, "Who shall separate us from the love of Christ? Shall trouble or hardship or persecution or famine or nakedness or danger or sword? No, in all these things we are more than conquerors through him who loved us." (Romans 8:35, 37 NIV)

Humanly speaking, people can accomplish great things. But, spiritually speaking, we are very limited. We cannot produce eternal life. We cannot be perfect. We cannot save ourselves from death. We cannot defeat Satan. Only through God's power can we be victorious in these areas.

Once Jesus told his followers about a man who found a treasure buried on some land. The man then scraped together all the wealth he could in order to purchase that land. The man gave everything he had to buy the property which contained the buried treasure.

There is an example of going for the gold. The meaning of the story is this: God is the man who found the treasure. He gave everything he had, his own son, to buy your freedom from eternal darkness.

Achieving the gold that is permanent is not a matter of human effort. It is a matter of God's grace — allowing him to do for us what we cannot do for ourselves.

Paul wrote, "For it is by grace you have been saved, through faith — and this not from yourselves, it is the gift of God — not by works, so that no one can boast." (Ephesians 2:8-9 NIV)

The secret of true greatness is to put your faith in God. Invite him to take control of your life.

Chaplains plan Sunday School curriculum

By Bill Putman
USAIC Chaplains Office

It's new. It's different. It begins Sept. 1 and it's for ages two-year-olds to adults.

It's the new Sunday School curriculum material.

The material that the Fort Benning Sunday School will use from September through August 1997 is written and edited by a diverse group of experienced teachers, leaders and pastors from an ecumenical group of churches.

This year's study theme is, "The Inviting Word." One aspect of this study is that it is written based on the lectionary readings from the Bible.

The lectionary contains a list of scripture readings to be used each Sunday in the worship service. This material is compatible with the special occasions observed during the Christian church year. For example, during the Advent season Fort Benning worshippers will study and prepare for Christmas and the celebration of the birth of Christ.

A new adult class which will be studying the scripture in preparation for the morning's sermon, will begin Sept. 8. All adults interested in learning more about the sermon scripture, are encouraged to attend this class.

In addition to the new class, the Fort Benning Sunday School will continue to offer the two current adult classes. One of these classes uses the International Lesson Quarterly while the other group studies a selected subject, and is now studying the book of Revelation.

All Fort Benning personnel are invited and encouraged to attend Sunday School, which is conducted every Sunday from 9:30 to 10:30 a.m. in Building 2517 at the Religious Education Center. A special invitation is extended to new arrivals and those here for temporary duty. For more information, call 545-4715.

INTRAMURAL SOFTBALL

1/11th jail Bandits 20-8 in championship

By John W. Peeler
Special to The Bayonet©

The Bandits of the 1st Battalion, 50th Infantry Regiment, went directly to jail, did not pass go and did not collect the championship trophy, as Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment, pounded the Bandits 20-8 in the post intramural softball championship Aug. 16 at Gowdy Field.

With the introduction of the officials, the opening coin toss to determine the home team and the playing of the National Anthem, the championship game got underway.

HHC trotted onto the field and immediately took charge of the game, shutting down the Bandits. They allowed two hits with five batters coming to the plate and left two on base as the top half of the inning ended.

The Bandits allowed two early runs and then the defense shut down HHC 11th Inf. Regt. batters, which stranded two batters on base.

Behind 2-0, Bandits left center fielder Dennis Gunn stroked a single to start the inning. The next two batters recorded outs on infield flys.

Catcher Mark Krumin advanced Gunn to second base with a two-out single before pitcher Ross Starnes recorded the third out of the inning. This ended the Bandits hopes of scoring a run in the inning.

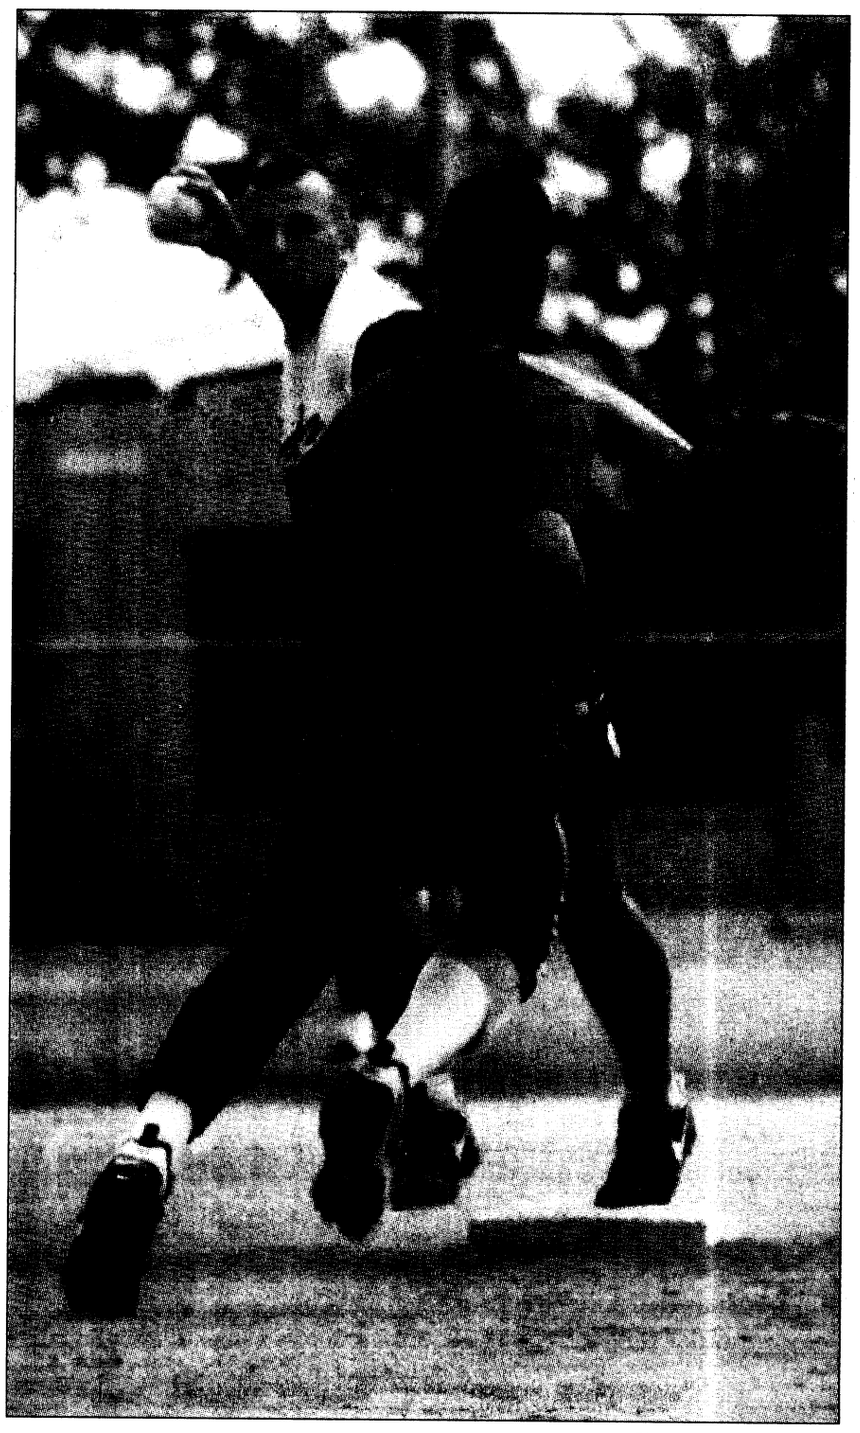
The onslaught began for HHC in the bottom of the second inning with singles from first baseman Aaron Young, left fielder Tray Tankersley, second baseman Antonio Santiago and right fielder Jeff King. With no one out, designated hitter Jimmy Armstrong stepped up to the plate and hit what should have been a routine single into the outfield. Armstong's placement of the ball and base running skills turned the hit into an in-the-park home run and a 7-0 second inning lead.

The Bandits were able to contain HHC hitters for the rest of the inning and came to bat needing to make up 7 runs.

In the top of the third inning, the Bandits were able to muster some hits of their own with the top of the order at bat. With one out, Bandits left fielder Santos Santiago started the comeback with a single. This was followed with singles from second baseman Allen Ricks, third baseman Chris Weidner and RBI singles from right center fielder Clinton Yates, right fielder Thomas Hayden, catcher Grant Davis and shortstop Ken Williams.

Trailing 7-4 with two outs and the bases loaded, catcher Mark Krumin slapped a 2 RBI double, which brought the Bandits to within 1 run of HHC Pitcher Ross Starnes recorded the final out for the Bandits. Going into the bottom of the third inning, the Bandits trailed HHC 7-6.

The Bandits scoring spree appeared to challenge HHC as they ripped off 11 hits, scored 10 runs and took a commanding 17-6 third-inning lead.



The HHC defense shut the Bandits down in the top of the fourth inning. They retired the batters in order, and th slim hopes of a championship.

In the top of the fourth inning, HHC was able to add three insurance runs on doubles from Tankersley and Santiago, a single from King and a sacrifice fly from second baseman Dave Kelley.

With the score 20-6, the Bandits had one more chance to come from behind for the championship in the top of the fifth inning. Close enough to taste victory, the HHC defense allowed 2 runs early in the inning to the Bandits then played furiously to record two straight put-outs.

With two outs and a man on first base, the hopes and dreams of the Bandits rested in Williams' bat. With the count 0-2, Williams hit a long fly ball that ended up in the glove of right fielder King and along with it a 20-8 HHC victory and post championship.

This is the second year in a row the 11th Infantry Regiment has captured the post softball championship trophy.

1/38th wins dogfight 10-7 in consolation game

By John W. Peeler
Special to The Bayonet©

Someone said, "It's not the size of the dog in the fight, it's the size of the fight in the dog." The Red Dogs from Service Battery, 1st Battalion, 10th Field Artillery Regiment, found that the bigger and more ferocious dog Aug.16 at Gowdy Field was the 1st Battalion, 38th Infantry Regiment, as the Red Dogs lost the post intramural consolation game 10-7.

The 38th team won the coin toss to become the home team and did not look back enroute to victory.

In the first inning, the Red Dogs sent five batters to the plate and managed to collect only two singles on strong pitching from the 38th pitcher Bill Bradley.

The Red Dogs were not able to muster any offense in the bottom of the second inning and managed only a double against the tough 38th defense.

In the bottom of the second inning, the 38th put together three singles, but were unable to push any of the base runners across the plate and ended the inning leading 3-0.

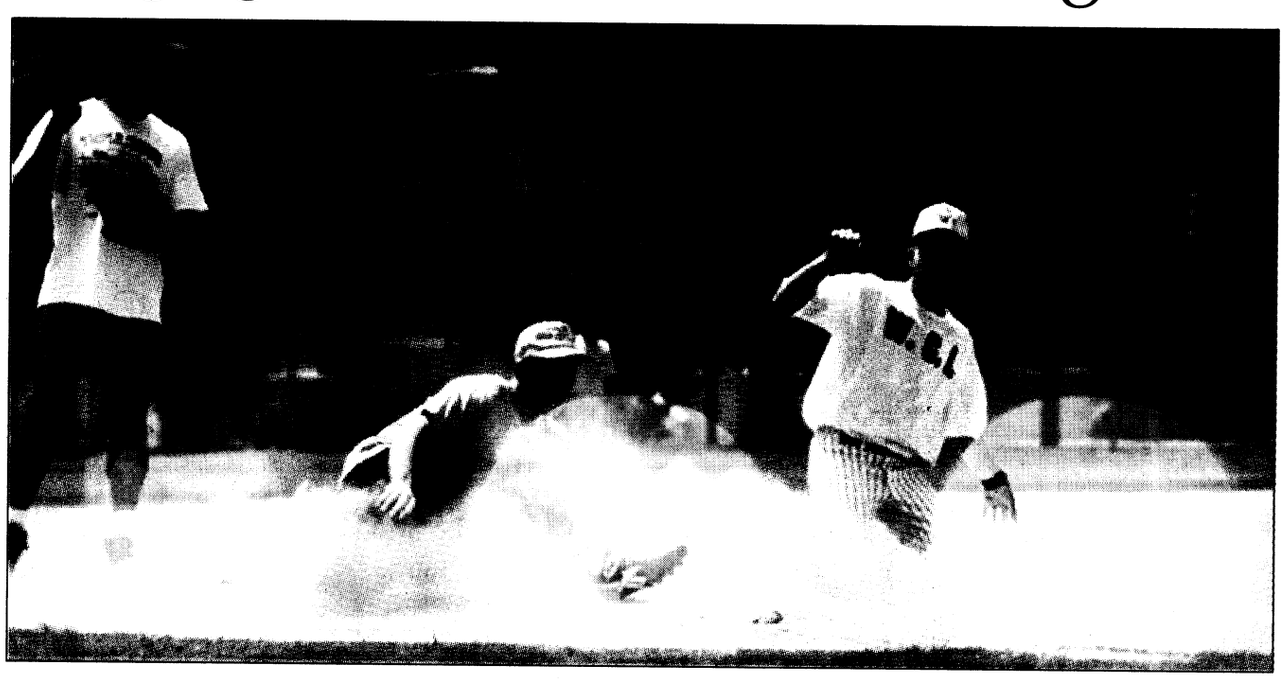
The Red Dogs started off the third inning with pop out by second baseman James Rooks, a single by designated hitter Scott Wright, followed by a strike out of Jim Smith by 1 st Bn., 38th Inf. Regt. pitcher Bradley.

Bradley ended the inning by throwing out Pat Boley at first base.

The 38th raised the stakes in the bottom of the third inning when shortstop Michael Williams slammed a home run with a man on first base making the score 5-0.

Solid team hitting by first baseman Thomas Verdree, Bradley, third baseman James Chatmon and catcher Luis Cebollero in the bottom half of the third inning scored four more runs.

In the top of the fourth inning, the Red Dogs were able to score 2 runs on two hits when James Clemmons and Richard Young hit sacrifice flys.



The Red Dog defense held in the bottom of the fourth inning allowing one hit in four at-bats and went in to the top of the fifth inning trailing 9-2.

During the fifth inning, both teams played solid defense with neither team able to gain a scoring opportunity on the other.

The Red Dogs bats came alive in the sixth inning when the Dogs scored 5 runs on six hits. The key play of the inning was a home run by cleanup batter Chris Carmin.

With the score 7-5 in favor of the 38th, designated hitter Scott Hampton stepped to the plate connecting for a triple to lead off the seventh inning. Two batters later, Hampton crossed home plate on a sacrifice fly and along with it a 10-7 38th lead. The inning ended with a pop out by Holleyfied to Red Dogs outfielder David Kelly.

The Red Dogs had one more chance to catch the 38th, but every dog has his day and the Red Dogs day ended on a long out by Kelly and a 10-7 1st Bn, 38th Inf. Regt. victory.

Strikes can determine bass patterns

By Earl Bentz & Steve Price
Outboard Marine Corporation

When professional bass tournament angler Denny Brauer looks for bass, he needs only two or three strikes in an area to know he's found them.

"That's really all it takes," Brauer said, a veteran tournament competitor. "The key is making certain each of those strikes comes from the same location or the same type of cover or structure."

Another key, said the Missouri pro, is that each strike be from a quality fish, one he could keep to weigh in during a tournament.

"I fish fast in tournament practice," he said, "so if I go into an area and get three strikes from good fish, then I expect to get eight or nine strikes there when the tournament begins because I'll be fishing much more slowly."

> "When bass are barely hooked, it could mean the lure you're using could be too large or your retrieve speed needs to be changed."
> — Denny Brauer
> Professional bass angler

Once he does get his two or three strikes, Brauer usually stops setting the hook on the fish, or he bends the barb down so the bass can't get hooked.

"Once I do that, I may continue fishing the same area just to try for a couple of more strikes, but then I'll usually leave that particular spot and try to find similar conditions somewhere else," he said.

According to Brauer, it is important that anglers be aware of how they are fishing when a strike occurs, especially the first strike in a particular area.

"You did something special to make a bass strike," he said, "and you need to know what it was so you can repeat it. Lure speed, retrieve depth, or the placement of your cast could be the key that triggered the strike.

"I think two of the most important things to be aware of are the depth your lure is running and its action at the time the fish hits, because these can really tell you how and where bass want a lure presented."

The pro said the way bass strike is also important in helping establish a pattern.

"When bass are barely hooked, it could mean the lure you're using could be too large or your retrieve speed needs to be changed," Brauer said, "because the bass may not be very active. On the other hand, when bass really swallow your lure, it generally means you're doing everything right.

"That's why it's so important to be aware of what your lure is doing so you can continue doing it to catch more fish."

The most difficult pattern of all to establish is what Brauer calls a "one fish" pattern, in which each particular piece of cover or structure is good only for a single bass.

"What that means," he said, "is that you have to keep running to different spots, and in tournament competition that translates into a lot of lost fishing time. When I'm forced to fish this way, I usually make only two or three casts or pitches to a target and then leave. Often, I don't even turn off my outboard while I'm fishing this way."

Spinnerbaits, crankbaits find bass quickly

By Earl Bentz & Steve Price
Outboard Marine Corporation

When he needs to find fish in a hurry, former world champion bass angler Larry Nixon takes two tackle boxes with him. The surprising thing is, those boxes contain only two types of lures: spinnerbaits and crankbaits.

"When I'm looking for fish in preparation for a tournament, I like lures I can work quickly and use to cover a lot of water," Nixon said.

"Spinnerbaits and crankbaits are probably the best at letting me do that, and they're also proven fish catchers."

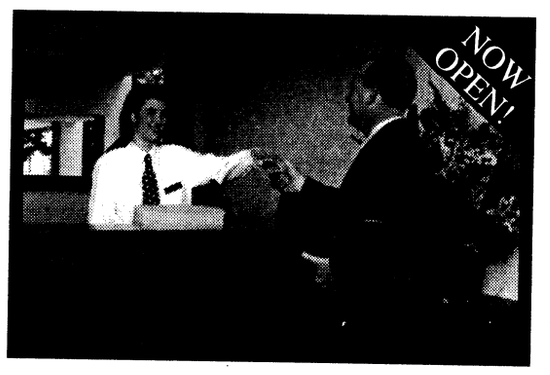
Nixon uses the two lures practically interchangeably, alternating primarily according to the type of cover or structure he's fishing.

"I'll use a spinnerbait for 30 minutes to an hour as long as I have good targets to cast to," he said. "Then, if the cover changes, such as becoming more rocky, I'll switch to the crankbait.

"My basic rule of thumb is that if I feel bass are relating pretty close to cover, especially vegetation, I'll use the spinnerbait more, but if I think the bass are staying closer to the dropoffs like ridges and ditches, I'll use the crankbait because it covers that type of water more efficiently.

"The season of the year; spring, summer, fall, or winter, basically tells us what bass are doing and where they're located, but only in broad terms," Nixon said, "and this changes, depending on the region of the country."

"August in Arkansas or Texas is quite different from August in New York or Minnesota, so we have to adjust our thinking. That's why it's important to use lures like spinnerbaits and crankbaits you can fish quickly because bass have a lot of places they can be hiding."



Spinnerbaits and crankbaits are also good fish-locating lures because of their versatility. Both come in a wide range of sizes and weights that produce different actions and cover various water depths.

"The only other lure any of the pros use regularly to locate bass are Carolina rigs with small plastic worms or lizards," he said, "and these are particularly effective if you're fishing deeper water."

With either a spinnerbait or crankbait, Nixon changes his retrieve regularly, trying fast, slow, and a stop-and-go returns. He also bumps cover with both lures, and he changes colors periodically if the water conditions or cloud cover changes.

"Covering a lot of water is just part of the solution," he said. "You still have to give the fish what they want and present it the way they want it. That's why I have two complete tackle boxes full of nothing but spinnerbaits and crankbaits."

CG names post's new chief of staff

USAIC Public Affairs Office

A former commander of the 11th Infantry Regiment returns soon to the Home of the Infantry to assume duties as the Infantry Center's chief of staff, Maj. Gen. Carl F. Ernst, post commanding general, announced Aug. 21.

White

Col. Lawrence K. White Jr. assumes his duties sometime this fall, replacing Col. Gregory C. Camp who retires in October.

White, a 1970 graduate of the U. S. Military Academy, served as a platoon leader, executive officer and company commander at Forts Carson, Bragg and Hood as well as the Republic of Vietnam.

Ground-breaking ceremony begins $29.5M project on Kelley Hill

By Robin A. Shawlinski
3rd Bde., 3rd Inf. Div. (Mech.)

The 3rd Brigade conducted a ground-breaking ceremony for the kickoff of the $29.5 million Kelley Hill barracks construction project Aug. 21 at the site of the new consolidated dining facility.

The construction, which includes the 1994 and 1996 projects, provides six barracks with more than 850 living spaces, a recreation facility and four company operation facilities for soldiers assigned to the 3rd Brigade (Combat Team), 3rd Infantry Division (Mechanized), according to Master Sgt. Jeff Fields, 3rd Brigade facilities noncommissioned officer.

Col. Steven P. Schook, 3rd Bde., 3rd Inf. Div. (Mech.), commander, said this construction is important.

"This is extremely important," he said. "The (operation) tempo and (personnel) tempo has increased since 1990. With the joint deployments we go on, exercises we do and (National Training Center) rotations, (the soldiers') time away is so great that I believe, with all my heart, they must have some place to come back to."

"This is evidence of the Army's commitment to improve the quality of life for soldiers," said Lt. Col. Robert Leon, 3rd Bde., 3rd Inf. Div. (Mech.), deputy commander.

The first phase of the 1996 Kelley Hill project involves the construction of a consolidated dining facility, with completion in fiscal 1997.

"This new dining facility will allow us to consolidate how we feed soldiers into a first-class facility versus the ones that were built in the late '50s, early '60s," Schook said.

The second phase of this project, which begins in early September, includes the construction of three barracks buildings and one soldier recreation facility in the area of Buildings 9008, 9009 and 9020.

The construction of these barracks provides more than 450 soldier living spaces. The barracks' designs include one four-story building containing 12 two-soldier rooms per floor and two other buildings containing 22 two-soldier rooms per floor. Each room measures 500 square feet, Fields said.

The soldiers' recreation facility, to be completed by fiscal 1999, will house a laundry room, game rooms, television rooms, kitchen, weight room and individual storage areas.

The final phase of the Kelley Hill project, construction of four company operation facilities, involves moving personnel out of Buildings 9010, 9011 and 9017 by January 1997, Leon said. Plans call for the demolition of these buildings and construction of the new buildings to begin mid-year 1997.

The operation company facilities offer platoon control points, arms rooms, supply rooms, administration space and on-post shower facility.

"These company operation facilities will help pull the company administrative areas out of the soldiers' living areas," Schook said.

Aside from the 1996 project, the 1994 Kelley Hill project begins in November and includes the stripping down of Buildings 9006 and 9007 to their frames and beginning construction on three additional barracks buildings and another soldier recreation facility. These barracks consist of three floors with 22 two-soldier rooms per floor. The buildings provide more than 400 soldier spaces. Plans call for construction completion by fiscal 2001.

With the completion of this phase of the 1996 project, soldiers living in Building 9012 and 9013 move to the new barracks. At that time, work calls for the demolition of Building 9012 and construction on two operation facilities due for completion by fiscal 2001.

"This will be a difficult time for everyone on Fort Benning, with the noise and traffic," Leon said. "But at the conclusion, a state of the art barracks complex will provide a quality of life the soldiers deserve."

The contractors for the 1994 and 1996 projects, Connor Brothers Construction Inc. from Auburn, Ga., will oversee construction of buildings designed by the U. S. Army Corps of Engineers,.

"I think as the Army has gotten smaller," Schook said, "we had to go back and pay attention to the quality of life issue. And I think (this construction) is right on target. These soldiers deserve much better than what they have."

29th Inf moves back to Main Post

By Lisa M. Hibbert
Bayonet staff writer

Moving vans arrived on Kelley Hill and Harmony Church Monday to help the 29th Infantry Regiment move to Main Post — back to the building it originally occupied from 1930 through 1943.

"We moved into the cuartels as soon as construction finished in 1930," said Frank C. Plass, honorary command sergeant major for the 29th Inf. Regt. and president of the 29th Infantry Regimental Association.

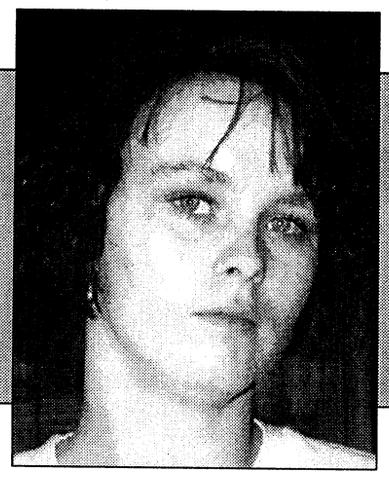
"The regimental headquarters and 1st Battalion occupied Olson Hall (Building 399) and 2nd and 3rd Battalions lived in Henry Hall," Plass said. "We lived in those buildings until the Regiment was moved to Iceland in 1943 during World War II."

Henry Hall, the newly vacated Olympic village, once again becomes home to barracks-dwelling soldiers of the 29th Infantry Regiment.

"We are excited about the move," said Command Sgt. Maj. George O. Crockett, 29th Infantry Regiment sergeant major. "It will be a real boost for the soldiers and the regiment. Morale increases when the living conditions are good, which causes work production to increase."

The move exposes soldiers currently living in the Harmony Church barracks to something completely new for them — convenience.

"Soldiers will be able to go the bank when they need to," Crockett said. "They will have access to an ATM, a post exchange and a movie theater."



The regiment moves to Main Post for several reasons, said Maj. Thomas E. Barnes, deputy commander of the 29th Inf. Regt. "Kelley Hill is scheduled to be renovated and will become home to the 3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division (Mechanized) so the 29th has to move from there," Barnes said. "Soldiers on Harmony Church are moving to Main Post because it's more cost effective for Fort Benning to have the regiment housed in one place, using one dining facility."

Future plans for the regiment include moving the battalion headquarters and one of the motor pools to Main Post. The regimental headquarters and the Bradley Instructors Course will remain at the Collins Training Center on Harmony Church. The motor pool on Kelley Hill remains where it is, according to Barnes.

PEER PRESSURE

Evil monster teaches good lessons

By Brian R. Voller
Bayonet staff writer

Brian R. Voller thinks peer pressure can devastate or enhance people, depending on what each person learns from his or her experiences.

commentary

There's this evil little monster that sits inside your head. The monster likes to grab hold of your brain and choke it until it gasps to make a decision. Most of the time, that little monster causes you to head down the wrong pathway.

That little monster doesn't care about side effects, he doesn't care about whose feelings you hurt, he doesn't even care if you receive hurt as long as your friends think you're cool. That little monster is pride, and it's being tempted by one of the most powerful forces in the universe — peer pressure.

I couldn't begin to tell you about my first experience with peer pressure. It started probably as early as infancy — ever been in a public place when a baby starts crying? It doesn't take too long before a half a dozen babies are wailing at the top of their lungs and slowly chiseling away at everyone's sanity.

I do remember the first time I felt ramifications as a result of peer pressure. When I was about five, a group of childhood friends and I were sitting around discussing our favorite flavors of ice cream. At the same time, coincidentally, we heard the wonderful summer sound of an ice cream truck in the distance. I remember mentioning that I had just filled my piggy bank to the top, and that I could buy ice cream if I were to break it open. Well, before I knew what was happening, I had been talked into buying ice cream for almost the entire neighborhood.

Eventually word of my extreme generosity got back to my mother, by probably one of those sedentary house wives who had nothing better to do than tell on a little kid who had been manipulated into satisfying the sweet tooth of a lot of hungry children.

Needless to say, my mother was not too happy with her son, and I spent a great deal of time over the next couple days trying to figure out interesting things to do in my bedroom. I believe it was during this grounding that I managed to tip over my dresser, send all of my clothes all over my room and put the first of many holes in the wall of my room.

The reason I tell this story is because I don't think peer pressure is necessarily a bad thing. Granted, there are facets of it that are bad. How many people can truly say they started smoking because of a deep rooted, childhood fantasy? Peer pressure can cause people to do things they know are bad for them, but they do it anyway because they want to fit in.

At it's heart, peer pressure is a very negative and evil thing. It makes people do things they probably never would have done without the influence of the outside pressure. It's also evil because after a while, people don't even have to exert peer pressure on you, because you are fully capable of pushing it on yourself.

But I do think a lot of the results of peer pressure can be beneficial in the long run. I think it is human nature to live and learn. I know after wasting a lot of money on ungrateful "friends," I never gave away free stuff again. Because of this experience, I realized that people don't always have your best interests in mind and it's a lesson I carry with me to this day.

Peer pressure is something that can't be avoided, it's as American as apple pie, but it's what a person gets from the results of peer pressure that can make all the difference. Lessons a person learns as a result of peer pressure can last a lifetime.

Role models: Children learn from adults

By Lisa M. Hibbert
Bayonet staff writer

I have five younger cousins whom I love dearly, not to mention my son who is my pride and joy. Together, they range in ages from 5 months to 18 years old. As I watch them move about at their different stages in life, there is so much that I want to share with them.

Unfortunately, they are a lot like me, so I know that learning from my mistakes is not a viable option for them and they will have to learn from their own.

I watch my son, Daniel, as he is learning how to sit up at the day care center. He intently watches a group of older children play and tries to join in on their merry making.

When I was growing up, all of my friends were older than me, too. I was obsessed with people who I thought could do more or knew more than I did. I wish I could teach him to pick his friends because of their character, not because they look like fun.

Now, Jennifer and Morgan, my two youngest cousins, attend elementary school. I watched as they were showing their Barbie Doll collection to their new friends.

I remember sharing my toys with friends, too. Later I realized some of my friends were only interested in playing with whatever I could give them instead of playing with me. I wish I could teach them that everybody who hangs around you is not really your friend.

Cousin number three is Courtney. She is entering junior high school this year and I think she is blossoming into the most beautiful young lady I know (that's not just because she's my cousin, either). When I saw her last, she told me that the boys were making fun of her thin legs.

I used to get teased, too, but for my large lips. Oh, how they used to tease me! It's funny that as an adult, my lips have become my best asset. I wish I could make Courtney believe that what is her crutch today will one day be her crown.

Rodney is the only boy out of the eight cousins. He's about to graduate from high school this year and has grown into such a polite young man. I think I worry about him the most.

As a high school student, I tried my first drink. I tried smoking a cigarette. Luckily, none of these habits stuck with me, but I often wondered why I tried these things to begin with. I can blame it on peer pressure, but I can counter that I should have been a stronger person. I can say that I was curious, but I can counter that had not my friends been drinking and smoking, I would not have tried it.

I wish that I could teach Rodney it is okay to say no and that maybe, just maybe, he can be the positive influence his friends need to just say no.

Jami is the oldest of my cousins and she is a sophomore at the University of North Carolina at Greensboro.

To say I was a wild woman my freshman year might be an understatement. I just had to do everything and be everywhere. I was at every party (and I do mean every), every social function, every committee meeting and attending very few classes.

I wish Jami could know how important this time is for the rest of her life. The decisions she makes now will affect what type of job she gets in just a few short years.

I'm not the person I used to be, but I'm still far from what I should be. I'm just striving to be what God wants me to be.

I only hope that if I am to be a role model to those younger than me, they will follow the person I hope to be instead of the one I once was.

As the author James Baldwin said, "Children have never been very good at listening to their elders, but they have never failed to imitate them." I can only live right and hope that my lifestyle will be emulated.

No matter what paths my cousins and my son choose to wander down, I will be there for them. I just pray that when it is time to make those important choices, they make the right ones.

Lisa M. Hibbert believes children emulate adults, and hopes she sets a good example for her family.

dial 545-boss

Dial 545-BOSS is the commander's action line for soldiers, family members and civilians to call when they have problems or complaints that can't be resolved elsewhere.

While it is not a substitute for the chain of command or for agencies established to provide assistance, the line offers another means of communication between Fort Benning's community and commanders.

The Bayonet features some of the calls that may benefit other members of the Fort Benning community.

Caller said when he was overseas he bought an International Panasonic television from the Army and Air Force Exchange Service. He said when soldiers return to the United States, these $800 TV sets cannot be repaired, even by AAFES. The caller said he cannot get the phone number for the Japanese manufacturer to order the service manual or parts. He said thousands of soldiers experience this problem.

AAFES Field and Merchandise manager arranged for the soldier to come to the PX to replace his TV set. AAFES does not procure merchandise that cannot be serviced in the United States, and the exchange bought this merchandise locally at the time the caller purchased it.

CG reminds soldiers, civilians to stay safe

By Carl F. Ernst
Commanding general

Every Labor Day weekend, people crowd highways trying to enjoy the last summer holiday of the year. Unfortunately, traffic accidents reach their peak during this holiday.

To combat this danger, I am asking everyone to inspect their privately owned vehicles before the holiday and pay attention to water and driving safety. Furthermore, follow these safety tips:

- Swim sober in authorized and supervised areas
- Arrange schedules for alert and sober diving
- Follow all traffic laws, especially the speed limit
- Use seat belts
- Test the condition of vehicles, e.g., brakes, lights, horns, etc.
- Yield to the less capable driver.

Labor Day weekend poses an extremely high risk period. I expect everyone to practice safety precautions at all times.

USAMU dedicates its headquarters building

U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit

The U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit dedicated its Headquarters, Building 243, to a former commander Aug. 18.

USAMU Headquarters now named Sharpe Hall, honors the late Col. Thomas J. Sharpe II, the person recognized as the single most important individual in the creation of the Army Marksmanship Unit, and commander of the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit from December, 1958 to May, 1959.

Marksmen nationwide recognize Sharpe as a highly decorated war hero and the team captain of a Gold-Medal winning Olympic shooting team and as the staff officer most responsible for organizing and forming the U.S. Army (Advanced) Marksmanship Training Unit concept and creating almost single handedly the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit.

USAMU Commander Col. Alan D. Fenty welcomed the crowd of approximately 250 people to the afternoon ceremony, which took place in front of Building 243.

Brig. Gen. John G. Meyer Jr., the commander of the U.S. Army Community and Family Support Center in Washington, D.C., the USAMU's higher headquarters, spoke.

"The Marksmanship Unit is the only organization of its kind in the Army today," Meyer said. "It represents America's finest military rifle and pistol shooters. It is an organization dedicated to enhancing the prestige of the U.S. Army through marksmanship competition at the highest level.

"The Army Marksmanship Unit has gained worldwide recognition and respect for its shooting proficiency," he said. "Most importantly, members of the unit are known for their high standards of conduct, professional ethics and the extreme degree of good sportsmanship they manifest in each and every phase of competition.

"And what better way to honor the Marksmanship Unit than to dedicate it to Colonel Sharpe — one of the principal founders of the Army Marksmanship Unit," Meyer continued. "He was able to perceive the need for specialized marksmanship training in order for United States shooters to compete and win on the world scene."

Sharpe's widow, Naomi, and Meyer unveiled an oil painting of Sharpe done by USAMU graphic artist Charles R. Pagan to dedicate the building. After unveiling the portrait, she cut the ribbon officially designating Building 243 as Sharpe Hall. Her son, Thomas R. Sharpe, daughters, Elizabeth Kelsch and Lisa Sharpe, and two grandchildren, Thomas J. Sharpe III and Jonas Kelsch, joined in the ribbon cutting.

"We were so thrilled that the Army and the unit have recognized my husband's work," Sharpe said. "He was one of the main, prime movers in founding the unit. It's just wonderful that this honor has come to him."

Sharpe saw the need for mental training and how it applied to competitive shooting. Sharpe caused the first symposium on mental visualization and mental training to be conducted at the Marksmanship Unit. These early efforts paid off when he led the 1964 U.S. Olympic Shooting Team to an unprecedented medal tally of two Gold, two Silver and three Bronze Medals.

Sharpe served during World War II in France, Belgium and Luxembourg and took part in four major battle campaigns including the Battle of the Bulge, the relief of the surrounded 101st Airborne Division at Bastone, Belgium, and the capture of the Remagen Bridge over the Rhine River for which he received the Silver Star for heroism.

He later served in Germany with the U.S. Constabulary Forces from 1946 to 1949; and, during the Korean War, he was assigned to the the 40th Infantry Division earning three more battle stars. He also served a tour in Vietnam as a special adviser.

the site with its ANDROS Mark-V robot. Spc. Chris Woodson with the 89th demonstrated it.

"This robot is used to handle explosive devices without endangering the soldier," Woodson said. "We can operate the robot from some distance away and safely detonate explosives without endangering ourselves."

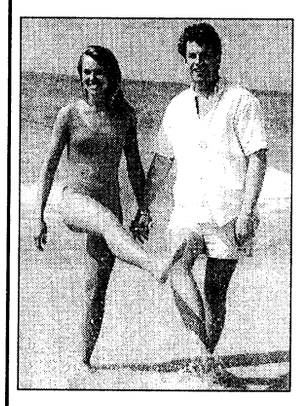
The commander of the 13th Corps Support Battalion, Lt. Col. Gerald Bates, expressed his unit's pride to showcase their equipment.

"We're very proud of our equipment and soldiers, and we're grateful to the Redstixx and AUSA for the opportunity to show them off," said Bates.

Staff Sgt. Donald Eriksen of the 104th Transportation Company displayed a M-915 tractor and M-872 trailer.

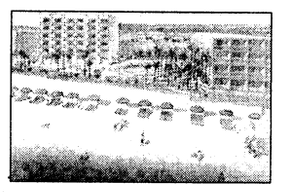
The 608th Ordnance Company operates the Installation Ammunition Supply Point.

The 598th Maintenance Company exhibited a wrecker to symbolize the unit's mission.



In addition to the displays and the demonstration, the 36th Engineer group provided several other services for the game. The Group color guard, consisting of Sgt. Shannon Banks, Pfc. Edward Hoffman, Pfc. Joshua Carr, all of HHC, 36th Engineer Group, and Pvt. Trista Vanderslice of 586th Engineer Company presented the colors at the game.

Group Chaplain (Maj.) Steven Fry led the invocation, then turned the microphone over to Sgt. Patricia Johnson and Sgt. Darlene Rose who sang the national anthem. Bailey then started the ball game by throwing out the ceremonial first pitch of the game.



At the conclusion of the game, Command Sgt. Maj. William Kagee, group command sergeant major, reflected on the activities of the day.

"We've had a lot of fun today, but it's been busy," Kagee said. "We work hard and play hard." The 36th Engineer Group is a diverse organization with a number of demanding missions that support the entire Fort Benning community and the 18th Airborne Corps."

Better Opportunities for Single Soldiers

Representatives of the Fort Benning Better Opportunities for Single Soldiers program head to Washington, D.C., for the 1996 Worldwide BOSS Conference.

Spc. Caryn Bumpstead, BOSS president, and Spc. Richard Germann, Single Soldier Living Communities Program manager, received the honors to attend one of the most important duties associated with the BOSS program.

"I think this will be a great opportunity to show Army BOSS what Fort Benning's program is really made of," Bumpstead said. "We made a big deal of making the BOSS video this year and hope to bring all the glory home to Fort Benning by winning best installation."

The BOSS conference is not only a place for all the installations to compete for the best program, but also a place to learn, motivate and share ideas with others by networking.

This year's theme is "BOSS Basic Training, Setting the Pace ... Going the Distance," and the objectives will parallel those of basic training.

"I am looking forward to the conference," Germann said. "I believe this will be an opportunity to grow and develop in my new position as the SSLC Program manager."

Attendees plan a tour of the Pentagon and the D.C. area.

"The BOSS conference makes learning fun," Bumpstead said, "I hope to bring what I have learned back to Fort Benning to make Fort Benning's BOSS program even more successful than it is today."

Question of the week:

Q. The vending machine in the dayroom constantly "eats" my money. I would like reimbursement. How do I do this?

A. The information plate affixed on all Army and Air Force Exchange Service soda and snack machines provides a phone number, 682-0941, that can be called in case the machine "eats" your money. Always write the machine number down. This will assist AAFES in determining the validity of your claim. Kicking or rocking the machine fails to provide a solution for getting your money back.

Displays, demonstration cap summer

By Michael E. Lynch
13th Corps Support Battalion

The 36th Engineer Group capped a busy summer Thursday by conducting a static display and helicopter medical evacuation demonstration at a RedStixx game at Cougar Field at Columbus State University.

The demonstration, part of the 36th Engineer Group Night, highlighted the final event of the Association of the U.S. Army Sports Day.

The display involved all units in the Group including unique equipment that represented their missions.

"This is one of the most diverse units on post," Col. Thomas Bailey, commander of the 36th Engineer Group, said. "In addition to engineer units, we also have medical, maintenance, ammunition, transportation and aviation units. This gives us a chance to show what else the 36th can do."

The 36th Engineer Group consists of Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 36th Engineer Group; the 13th Corps Support Battalion; the 14th Field Hospital; the 586th Engineer Company (Assault Float Bridge); 63rd Engineer Company (Combat Support Equipment); the 498th Medical Company (Air Ambulance); the 690th Medical Company; the 926th Medical Detachment (Preventive Medicine); and the 89th Ordnance Company (Explosive Ordnance Disposal).

The aerial medical evacuation highlighted the evening, said 2nd Lt. Doyle Fontenot, HHC, 36th Engineer Group.

The demonstration, conducted jointly by 498th Medical Company (Air Ambulance) and 690th Medical Company, began with the arrival of a simulated casualty by ground ambulance. An ambulance team from 690th Medical Company established an ambulance exchange point.

"This is a real mission for us," Capt. Keith Johnson, commander of 690th Medical Company, said. "The 690th is the only ground ambulance unit supporting 18th Airborne Corps, the Infantry Center and the Ranger Regiment."

The 498th Medical Company keeps busy, according to its commander.

"We're assigned to the 18th Airborne Corps at Fort Bragg, but we support Fort Benning and the local community with medical evacuation support," said Maj. Tracy Wyatt, commander of the 498th.

"It's nice to get a chance to show what we can do," said 2nd Lt. Scott Piecek, copilot of the helicopter, "especially when it's not an emergency!"

The ambulance crew, 2nd Lt. John Barksdale, Spc. Michael O'Campo, Spc. Steven Can and Pfc. Railene Hagan, unloaded the simulated casualty and transferred him to a helicopter flown by Chief Warrant Officer 2 Thomas Schultz and 2nd Lt. Piecek.

In combat, the ambulance crew flies the wounded soldier to a medical treatment facility, such as 14th Field Hospital. Maj. Fred Hebron, commander of the 14th, outlined his unit's mission.

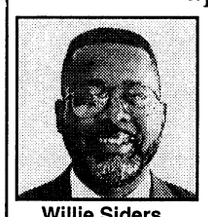
"We're a 500-bed hospital capable of providing health care for contingency missions and operations other than war," Hebron said.

The units not participating in the demonstration provided a representative piece of equipment and soldiers who explained the equipment's functions.

The 63rd Engineer Company (CSE) provided a D7G bulldozer, one the unit's primary tools. Capt. Melody Smith explained her unit's mission.

"The 63rd is a horizontal construction unit that can build roads and culverts, tank ditches and defensive positions," she said.

Sgt. David Jackson of the 586th Engineer Company (Assault Float Bridge), who recently returned from a long deployment to Bosnia, explained his unit's mission.



"We have a boat and a section of a bridge here identical to the ones we used in Bosnia," Jackson said.

The 89th Ordnance Company (EOD) provides support to the installation and the surrounding communities. The 89th also works with law enforcement agencies throughout the southeast for specific security missions.

"We've been on the road most of the summer," said Capt. Mike Durham, commander of the 89th; "We covered the Olympics and Paralympics and every presidential visit to the area."

Course tests soldiers skills, mettle for 75th Ranger Regiment entrance

By Marc G. Turchin
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Soldiers of the 75th Ranger Regiment represent a special breed. They "move further, faster and fight harder than any other soldier," according to the Ranger Creed.

Enlisted soldiers wanting to be a part of the regiment first endure a taste of its way of life by going through the Ranger Indoctrination Program.

The 18-day course, allows enlisted soldiers to become accustomed to the regiment's way of life, according to Sgt. 1st Class Jose E.G. Gordon, senior RIP platoon sergeant.

"It gives them a snapshot of what battalion life is going to be like," Gordon said.

What Gordon means by battalion life includes what the soldiers should expect once in one of the regiment's three battalions — First Battalion, Fort Stewart, Ga., 2nd Battalion , Fort Lewis, Wash., and 3rd Battalion, Fort Benning.

But, before the enlisted soldiers reach the regiment, they need to survive the RIP.

"It kicked me in the butt a few times," said Pvt. 2 John McNerney, a recent graduate of the course.

"You have to show endurance constantly — you're running everywhere, you're running more, you're running fast, you're coming back, you're doing physical training til you can't do PT anymore," McNerney said. "You have to get back up the next day and do it again."

The program challenges the students in many different ways.

Soldiers endure a Combat Water Survival Test consisting of at least a 15-meter swim wearing load carrying equipment and carrying their weapon, a three-meter blind drop off a diving board and an equipment removal station where the soldiers go underwater and remove their LCE.

The soldiers still need to pass a PT test and complete a five-mile run in 40 minutes and a 12-mile road march in three hours or less.

Some other things students perform during the course include:

- Classes on ranger history, knot tying and medical procedures
- Day and night land navigation
- Airborne operations
- Fast roping
- Basic patrolling

According to Gordon, the 12-mile road march pushes the students to the limit.

"The first ten miles weren't so bad," said Pvt. 2 Jason W. Norton, RIP graduate. "But the last two-miles they cranked it up a notch. We were hurting."

"It's sort of a rude awakening for them," Gordon said.

Road marches exist not only during the RIP, but also in battalion life — something the cadre knows all too well.

"They know what it's like being in the battalion," Gordon said. Each member of the 12-man cadre spent time in the regiment and knows how to lead soldiers.

He said they are extremely well versed and know-ledgeable.

"Because they've all been leaders on the line before, they know what it takes to make a ranger at the battalion level," Gordon said.

With their experience, including combat for some, program instructors use their wisdom to encourage the students to form a combat frame of mind.

By design, the course puts the students in a proper mindset because the students need to be deployable at a moment's notice — something for which the regiment is known.

"We get our guys integrated quickly into their squads and platoons so that the next day they could possibly deploy to war or to a combat situation," Gordon said.

In at least one instance, course graduates deployed soon after arriving at a battalion.

During Operation Uphold Democracy in Haiti, according to Sgt. Robert W. Larson, squad leader at the RIP, soldiers arrived to the unit just before they received orders to deploy.

"We received some new soldiers on Thursday, and we flew out on Sunday so they (the students) have to be a little better and stronger," Larson said.

Although those soldiers graduated from the course then deployed to a combat zone, in the past, people just showed up and joined ranger units.

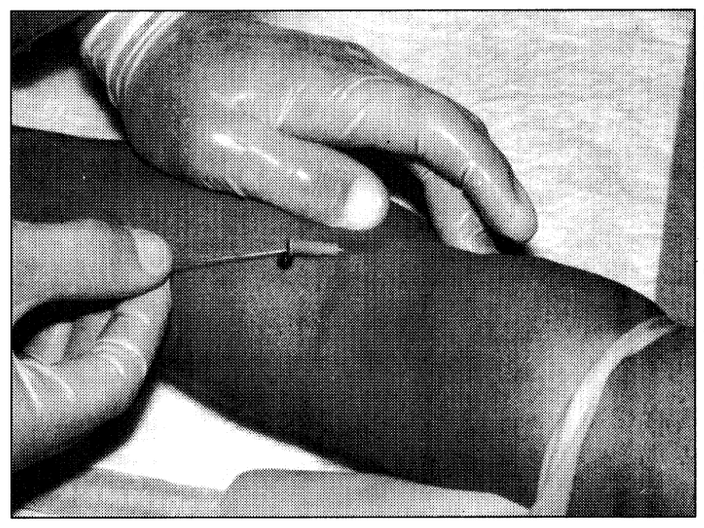
For example, new soldiers going to Vietnam joined seasoned rangers without prior training. When the conflict ended, the ranger units disbanded. Then in 1974, the Army formed the first and second battalions as ranger units. At that time each battalion established its own indoctrination program.

Now, each regiment conducts the same indoctrination program, which the regiment developed in 1984 when it formed.

As a matter of fact, Command Sgt. Maj. George D. Conrad, Fort Benning's command sergeant major, was the first commandant of the course as well as the commandant for 2nd battalion's indoctrination program.

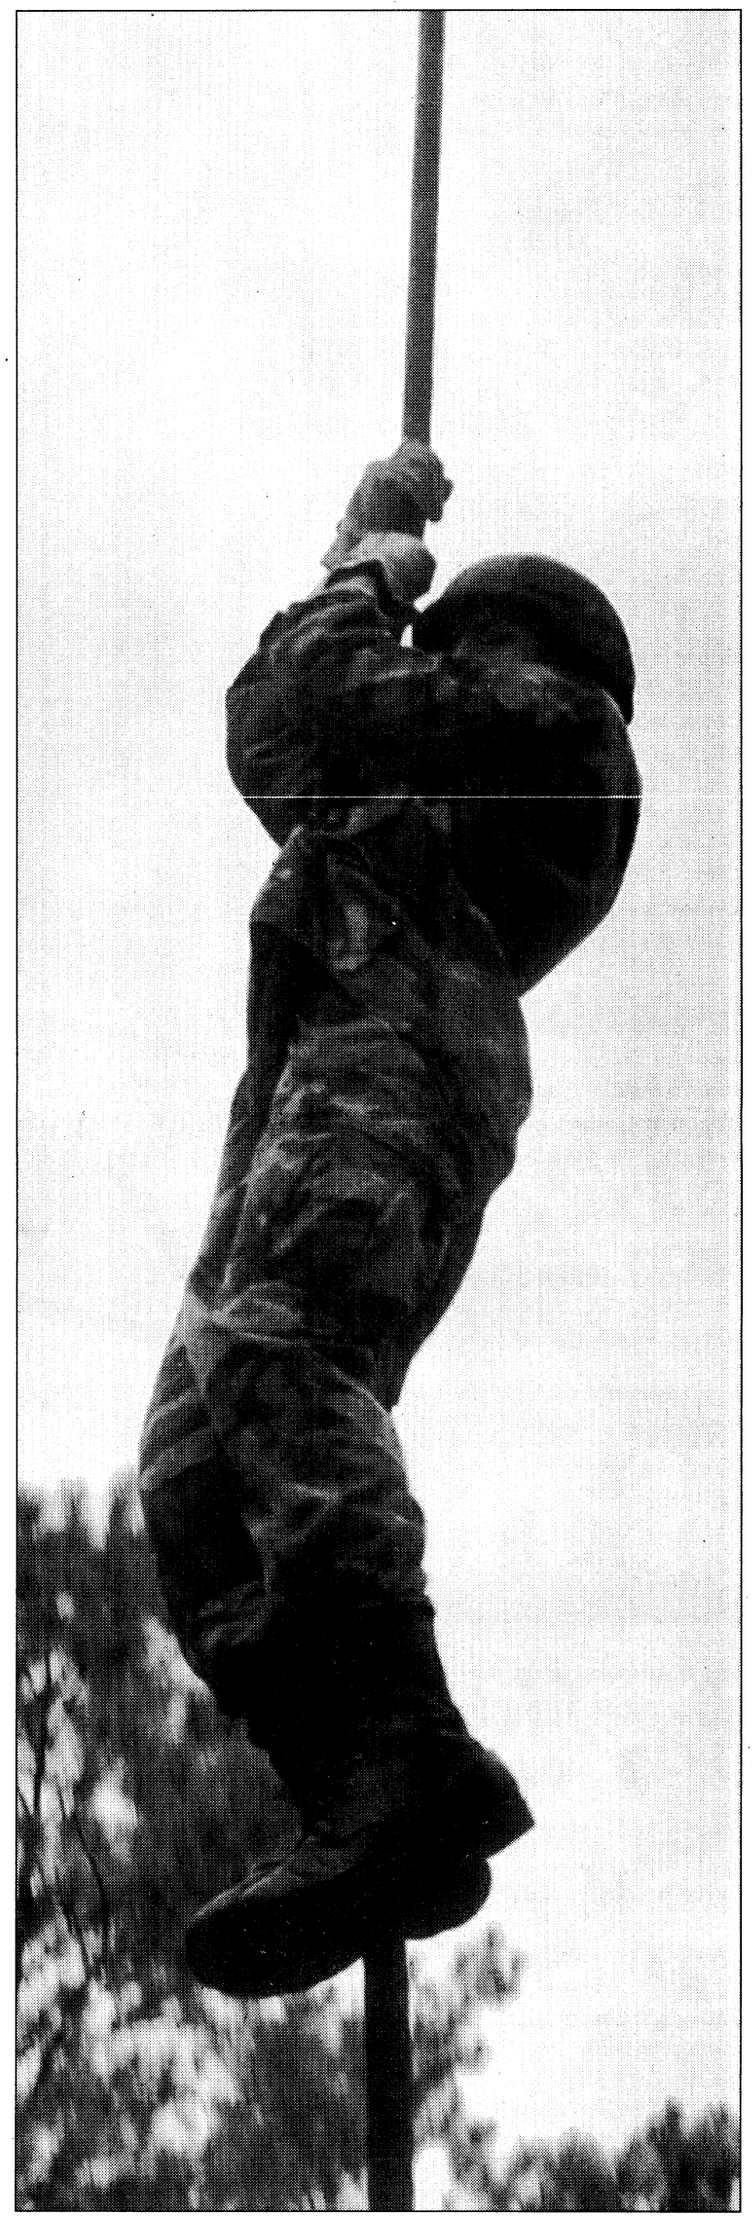
"My main mission in the regiment was to help form the regiment and 3rd Battalion, and my secondary mission was to establish and develop a regimental RIP program that will cause standardization within the regiment," Conrad said.

With the Army an ever changing environment, Gordon doesn't think the program will deviate from its present course.



"The regiment changes constantly, but the standards remain the same," Gordon said.

According to Gordon, the course's future doesn't look much different.



"RIP is going to be RIP ... minor instances where things will have to be tweaked in order to make it better is all that will happen," Gordon said.

Whether or not RIP goes through any changes, Gordon said, there will always be a need for rangers.

"The bottom line is that (a ranger) is a quiet professional. To me, he is a patriot — he's not in this for the money ... he's in it because the United States needs people like rangers," Gordon said. "These young kids are willing to step out into the darkness and do it (their jobs) without getting any recognition for it at all."

Trainees experience day one

By John Hand and Lisa Hibbert
USAIC Public Affairs Office

The doors of the cattle truck fly open. "Get off my truck!" yells the drill sergeant. "Move, move, move!" It's a noisy scene, full of organized confusion as the privates rush to get themselves and their gear to the company area of Company B, 2nd Battalion, 54th Infantry Regiment, Infantry Training Brigade.

Sgt. 1st Class Maurey E. Williams, senior drill sergeant for 4th Platoon, Co. B, 2nd Bn., 54th Inf. Regt., may yell at the soldiers a lot during pick-up but said he needs to do this in order to let the soldiers know who is in charge.

"My mission for the first day is to establish firm discipline," Williams said. "The privates get their first exposure to the real Army here and they need to learn how to focus their attention on the task at hand and still follow orders in a hazardous environment.

"Plus, voice inflection is an effective tool to teach the soldiers who is in charge, plus it develops awareness and alertness" Williams said.

One might think Williams prepares for his first day of basic training by terrorizing small children or by shooting animals but Williams said that he always relaxes before

Eighteen-year-old Pvt. 2 Joey W. Williams of Hazard, Ky., said he received Williams' message loud and clear.

"It's a little scary right now but I believe I'll get used to it," said the private. "I just have to try and do what the drill sergeants say."

Although Joey's father was in the military and had given him some tips on how to survive basic training, he said he was not sure how things would be.

Even drill sergeants have anxieties of what the first day of basic training will be like.

"You pretty much get the same type of soldiers every cycle," Williams said. "We get some who are overweight and some with behavioral problems but it's the overweight soldiers that I worry about the most because they have the most to overcome."

Long hours and worries over the soldiers under his care do not diminish Williams' love for the job.

"I enjoy the soldierization process," said Williams, who volunteered to be a drill sergeant. "I expect to receive soldiers and give them the firmest training possible so that I may produce a disciplined, motivated and self trained soldier."

Soldiers enjoy deployment to Bosnia

By Cheryl A. Kraning
100th Mobile Public Affairs Detachment

Some soldiers stationed at other base camps refer to Camp Steel Castle in Tuzla, Bosnia-Herzegovina, as a barren dust bowl. The soldiers living and working at the camp, however, possess a different outlook.

Pfc. Jerome Wynn, 19, of Panama City, Fla., said he enjoys "The Castle."

"As we drove up to the checkpoint at the entrance to the encampment, all I could see were a few tents in the distance," said Wynn, a single channel radio operator with Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 1st Armored Division, 9th Psychological Operations Battalion. "My first impression was there wasn't going to be much available, recreation-wise, to occupy my time.

"However, my outlook quickly changed. I noticed a softball game being played on an actual field and volleyball matches taking place on the surrounding courts.

"Things began to look even brighter when I found out the Morale,Welfare and Recreation tent remains open 24 hours. Being a broadcaster for 'Rock of the Balkans' on AM 1017 KHZ radio IFOR, my schedule doesn't always coincide with regular business hours. This way I can work out or hang around in the game room whenever I feel like it," Wynn said.

According to Sgt. Damon Draught, postal administrative specialist of the 90th Postal Co., this is the only softball field in Bosnia.

"At first, we were playing out on the grass; but, after the grass began to wear, the engineers tilled the field and smoothed it out with bulldozers," he said. "It was a morale booster. Softball or volleyball is what most of us at Steel Castle look forward to. I play softball for the division artillery team; we have the best record in the league."

The recreation opportunities at Steel Castle also impress Spc. Felicia D. Maddox, a unit supply specialist for Co. B, 94th Engineers.

"When I arrived at Steel Castle in March there wasn't much here," she said. "The first thing I noticed was that there weren't any buildings. It was empty, but I told myself it could get better — and it definitely could be a lot worse. For instance, I expected to be sleeping in a tent with a dirt floor. Instead, I live in a temper tent with a wooden foundation. During the day we run the air condition; and, in the evening, we turn on the heater. It's nice."

During his morning formations, 1st Sgt. James H. Cheney, B Co., 94th Eng., announces the times and locations of the daily sporting event.

"In B Company, we support each other," he said. "Either the soldiers are out there playing or they're on the sidelines cheering. Our team lost yesterday, in overtime, but it doesn't matter if we win or lose. At that point, it's just plain fun for everyone," he said.

The soldiers at Steel Castle expressed only a few desires. Wynn would like to see the engineers construct a basketball court next, nothing fancy, just a hard surface and a hoop.

All in all, despite what some soldiers assigned to other base camps might think, things appear deceiving and Steel Castle seems the hot spot.

"I'm getting ready to go home on leave; and, believe it or not, I am sad I'm leaving," Draught said. "I've made many close friends here."

"The only real drawback about being here compared to the states is, I can't get into my car with a friend and go to the mall," Wynn said. "Other than that, it's not that bad. I'm not planing to take leave, either. I'm really enjoying myself at The Castle."

Chemical weapons disposal begins

Gerry J. Gilmore
Army News Service

Cold War-era chemical weapons continue to go up in environmentally safe smoke in Utah. The incineration makes up part of a $12 billion Department of Defense program that aims to eliminate most of America's nerve- and blister-agent arsenal by 2004.

Officials fired up Tooele Chemical Agent Disposal Facility Aug. 22 and incinerated the first nerve agent-filled M-55 rocket. The facility, completed in August 1993, represents the first in the continental United States designed exclusively for the purpose of destroying chemical weapons. Since then, the plant continues to undergo equipment testing, prove out and surrogate trial burns.

The United States stopped manufacturing chemical weapons in 1968. With the end of the Cold War, America declared it no longer needs its 30,000-ton chemical weapon stockpile. Forty-four percent of the nation's chemical-weapons stockpile, about 13,000 agent tons, remains stored at Tooele, which is located about 30 miles west of Salt Lake City.

Chemical weapons stored at Tooele include artillery shells, mortar rounds, cartridges, land mines, rockets, bombs and agents stored in bulk containers. Nerve agents GB [sarin] and VX and with blister agents, also known as mustard, fill the weapons. Mission completion at Tooele takes place by 2002.

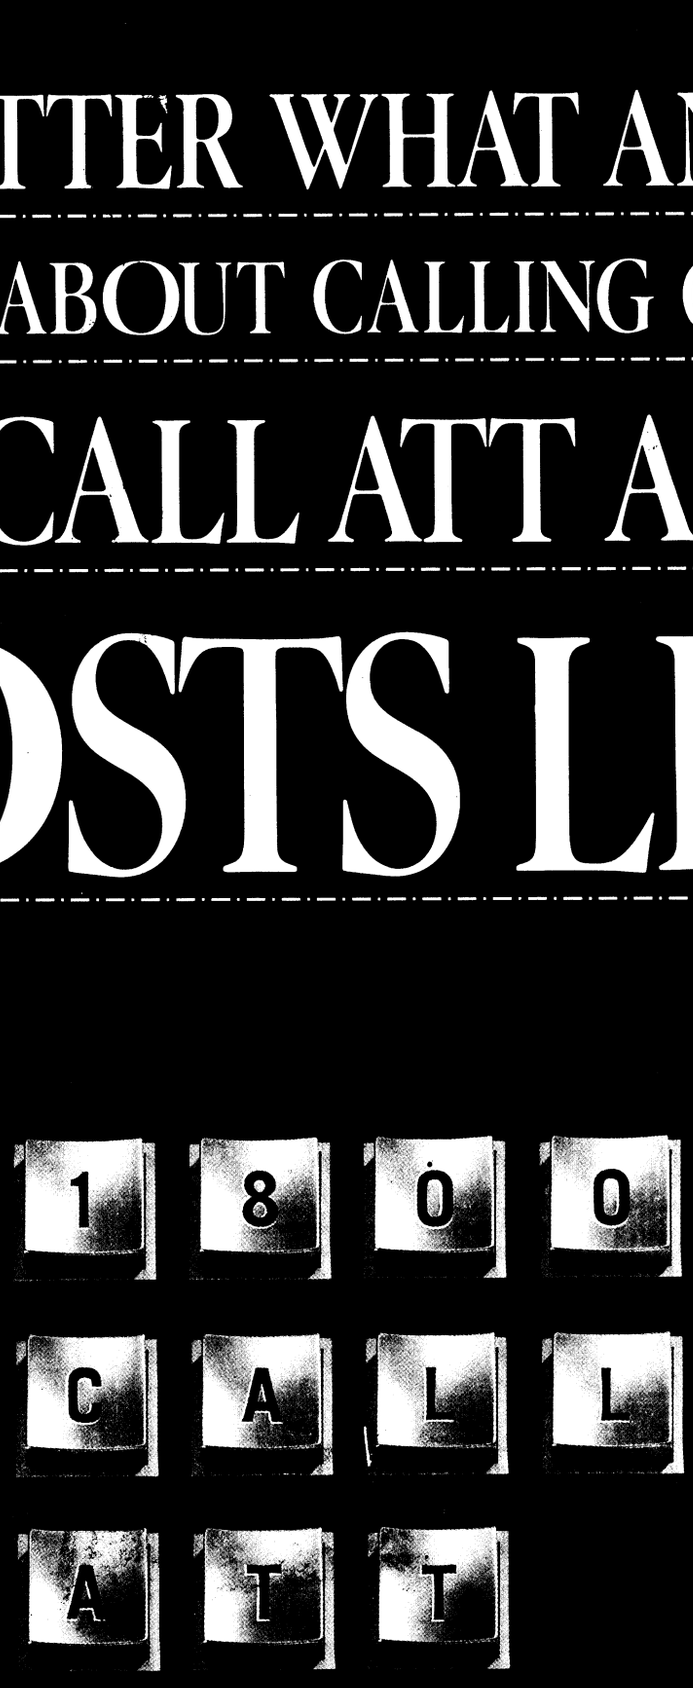
"Start of operations at the Tooele chemical agent disposal facility is a major milestone toward completely eliminating our nation's stockpile of chemical weapons," said Gilbert F. Decker, assistant secretary of the Army for research, development and acquisition.

The Army serves as executive agent for the Chemical Stockpile Disposal Program. The Army program manager for chemical demilitarization, Aberdeen Proving Ground, Md., oversees the disposal program.

When the Tooele facility safely completes its mission, nearly half of our nation's chemical weapons will have been destroyed.

The incineration process destroys chemical agents, explosives, packing material, and decontaminates metal parts in an environmentally-safe manner, said Dr. Ted Prociv, deputy assistant secretary of defense for nuclear, chemical and biological matters.

"We've done exhaustive work since the early '70s on the different types of destruction processes," Prociv said."... We've chosen the incineration process because, to us, that produced the most effective disassociation of the molecules, a way that it can't be recombined ... The products that we're going to be generating, like phosphorous pentoxide, water, carbon dioxide, etcetera, are going to be, essentially, environmentally compatible.



"Our air-treatment [system] that comes out of the plant is designed to take out any residual amount of anything, including chemical agents, any residue that might have gotten out," he continued. "The chances of anything getting out are virtually impossible. We've designed it to make sure that anything that goes through that incinerator will get destroyed," he said.

Officials point out now is the time to deal with a decaying chemical weapon inventory. Besides becoming unnecessary to keep in the inventory, America deemed its chemical weapon stockpile, now more than 40 years old, increasingly difficult to store and vulnerable to natural disasters and terrorism, Prociv said. Sophisticated monitoring systems, he said, detected minute leaks in some aluminum rocket warheads.

Successful operations at the chemical munitions disposal facility at Johnson Atoll, located about 825 miles southwest of Hawaii, serves as the basis for much of the Tooele facility processes. Since 1990, Johnson Atoll Chemical Agent Disposal System safely destroys more than two million pounds of chemical agent, to include most of the agent collected from storage facilities in Europe, Decker said.

Infantry Officer Basic Course

Students from Company B, 2nd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment, Infantry Officer Basic Course, took on the Darby Queen Obstacle Course Aug. 16.

Well known to ranger school students, the course offered the infantry officers a chance to tackle the course in order to help build their confidence as officers and future platoon leaders.

"The Darby Queen not only builds confidence in soldiers who train on it,but it also has definite applications for soldiers after they leave the military," said Staff Sgt. Jose Diaz, the primary instructor for the course and a former ranger instructor who addressed the IOBC students.

"Enlisted men can tell when a lieutenant has confidence in himself and his abilities," he continued. "And that confidence can help the enlisted men overcome their own fears." He considers the Darby Queen an important step in that confidence development for the future platoon leaders.

The course consists of approximately 15 obstacles designed to test a soldier's physical, mental, and emotional limits. The obstacles that make up the course have names like the inverted climb, the horizontal ladder, the tough one, the inverted rope descent, and the sky scraper.

The course took the lieutenants an average of 1 1/2 hours to complete, much longer than the average 25 minutes it takes a two-man team to finish the course. The lieutenants ran the course with their platoons, conducting physical training like pushups, flutter kicks and other calisthenics in between each obstacle.

An Infantry Officer Basic Course student hangs upside while trying to maneuver his way down one of the Darby Queen obstacles.

Second Lt. Jack Koons, a veteran of the Gulf War, said the Darby Queen challenged him physically. He said it was the best single training event the IOBC class had done because it would help them succeed in Ranger School.

Second Lt. Bill McDowell, commissioned through ROTC with no prior service, said the Darby Queen was a "definite" challenge.

"It showed me that I had a lot to learn, but my confidence was greater after having gone through the obstacle course," he said.

The international students shared a similar perspective. First Lt. Winston Green, from Barbados, said similar obstacle courses trained soldiers in his country. He said he felt they were important in developing the confidence of soldiers, officers and enlisted, who were new to the military. Also, Capt. Muhsen Inwairan, from Jordan, said that this obstacle course proved harder than any that he had done before.

A national guardsman from Hawaii, 2nd Lt. Paul Agena, said that while obstacle courses were not a significant part of the training program in his state, after going through the Darby Queen, he wanted to take his platoon back home through similar training.

Most of the IOBC students receive another chance to revisit the Darby Queen after they graduate, and several of the students engage the Darby Queen during their first week of Ranger School.

Army officers become astronauts

Army News Service

Two Army officers, undergoing astronaut training at the National Aeronautics and Space Administration's Johnson Space Center in Houston, Texas, arrived Aug 12.

Lt. Col. Patrick G. Forrester and Maj. Jeffrey N. Williams, selected May 2 as two of the 35-member astronaut Class of 1996, arrived for one year of evaluation and training. Afterward, the officers receive technical assignments within the Astronaut Office to further prepare them for shuttle flight mission assignments.

Forrester, a master Army aviator and a 1979 U.S. Military Academy graduate, formerly served as a Landing and Rollout Support Engineer at the Space Center. Before his NASA assignment, he served as a test pilot at the Aviation Technical Test Center, Fort Rucker, Ala. Forrester received his applied sciences and engineering degree from West Point, and a master's in mechanical and aerospace engineering at the University of Virginia in 1989.

Williams, an Army aviator and a 1980 U.S. Military Academy graduate, completed studies at the Naval War College, Newport, R.I. Previously assigned at the Space Center from 1987 to 1992 as chief of the operations development office, Williams graduated in 1993 from the Naval Postgraduate School, Monterey, Calif., where he received two degrees, a master's in aeronautical engineering and an aeronautical engineer degree.

This year's astronaut candidates surpassed more than 2,400 applicants. The class of 1996, the largest class selected since the first class of shuttle astronauts, also numbers 35.

In Houston, Forrester and Williams join the three current Army astronauts, Col. Jim Voss, Col. Bill McArthur, and Maj. Nancy Currie.

Army astronauts serve at the U.S. Army Space and Strategic Defense Command with duty in Houston.

ADVANCED EDUCATION PROGRAM

Dentists graduate from 1-year course

By Brian R. Voller
Bayonet staff writer

Six dental students graduated from the Advanced Education Program in General Dentistry August 23, after completing one year of post-doctoral training at Fort Benning's Dental Activity.

The program aims to provide professional education to selected dental officers during their first year of active duty.

"Our primary concern is to make these dentists professionally excellent," said Col. Thomas D. Richardson, program director. "We also train them on military aspects, but more slanted towards the medical side. We provide them with training in things like splinting a fracture, marksmanship, land navigation and NBC (nuclear, biological and chemical), all the things that are considered common tasks; but, the students have to know if they're going to be in harms way."

Richardson said the students receive instruction in the common task aspects because most of them acquire permanent duty station assignments like the demilitarized zone in Korea or areas involved Operation Joint Endeavor.

Despite the extra emphasis of the military common task training, clinical training makes up the bulk of the training the students received, Richardson said. Students received training in a variety of areas to improve their overall performance as a dentist.

Aside from the on the job training opportunities, program requirements also include several course that helped to develop the students in other aspects of dentistry.

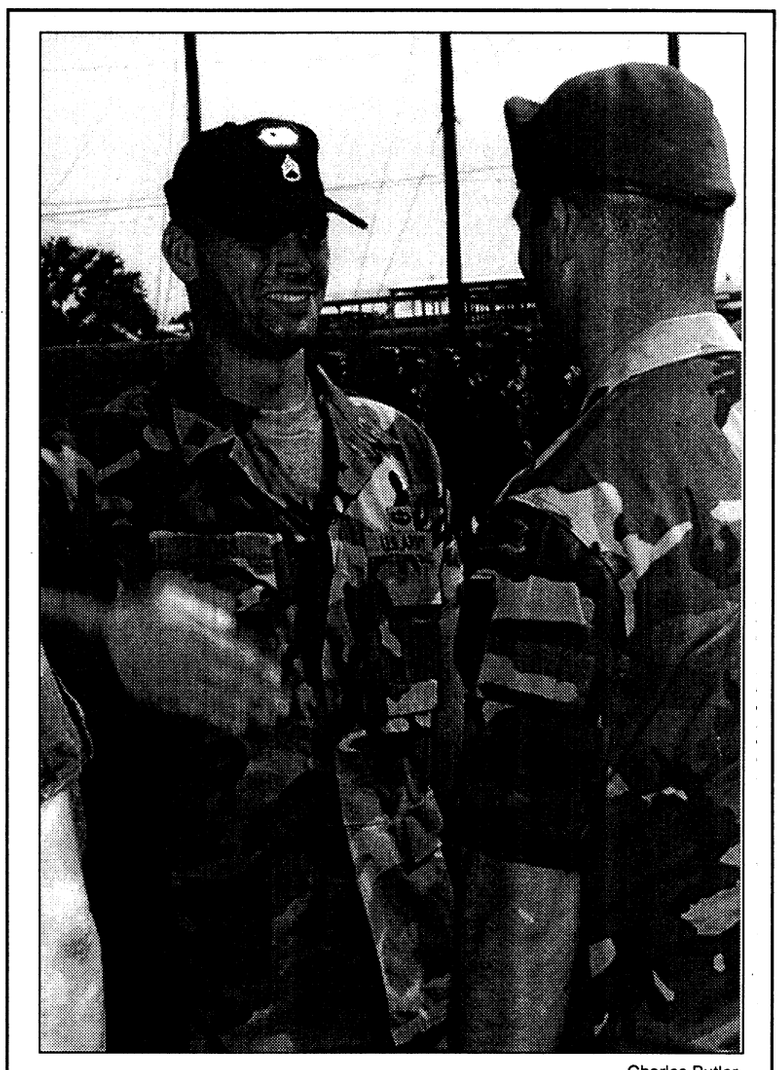
Also, the students attended a dental laboratory course at Fort Gordon, Ga. where technicians make all the Army's crowns and bridges. At the lab, the students saw the contruction and design of different and how to order such items.

In addition to several other courses, the students also attended the Advanced Cardiac Life Support Course at Martin Army Community Hospital. This course, designed for both physicians and dentists, provides instruction on basic life support techniques and patient resuscitation using the most advanced equipment.

Richardson said the advanced instruction gives the students a big advantage over other dentists who do not take the one-year course.

"They make great strides in their professional competence because of the course," Richardson said. "Our doctors, as compared to how they are when they just get out of dental school, are light years ahead of where their peers are who did not take this course."

Richardson said the experience the students receive combined with the skill and expertise of the course's instructors allows the students to excel after they graduate.



"This class takes the students with little or no experience and gives them multiple and intense experience in all facets of dentistry," Richardson said. "They have all the supervision they could ever want from board-certified mentors. The people who actually run this course and who oversee the students are very accomplished senior dental officers.

"However, our goal is too make them competent on their own," he continued, "so I look at it kind of like parenting. At the beginning, we are there a lot; but, our goal is to gradually pull away so they can do it on their own and eventually do everything independently."

The six students who graduated include:

- Capt. Anthony B. Maiorana
- Capt. Dong S. Park
- Capt. Robert S. Pearson
- Capt. Kimberly L. Perkins
- Capt. Robert L. Stone
- Capt. Roberto A. Torres

The program's next class begins Tuesday.

OES provides employment opportunities

Army Career and Alumni Program

Onsite Environmental Staffing continues to provide training and employment opportunities to soldiers, civilians, and family members who transition from the Army through the Fort Benning Army Career and Alumni Program.

Military veterans comprise the top five percent of Onsite Environmental's employees, based on job performance and hours worked. Recruiting transitioning services members has been so productive for Onsite that these applicants are given priority placement in the hiring process and the company has designated two full-time recruiters as base coordinators to work exclusively with military personnel.

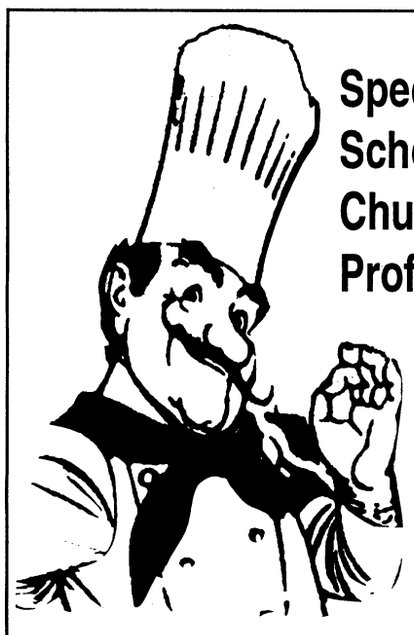
According to one of their base coordinators, Dave Wilmot, military veterans are particularly well suited for environmental projects that require highly skilled, motivated, and hardworking employees. He said soldiers are the perfect candidates.

Onsite Environmental Staffing, based in Duluth, Ga., is the nations largest provider of engineering and field services personnel in the environmental industry. Employees respond to emergency environmental disasters or fill specialized hiring needs.

Because Onsite does not have managers at every project location, it requires employees who need little or no supervision, are dependable, and possess strong work ethics. Military alumni fit into this category. Veterans are also accustomed to mobilizing quickly and traveling long distances to perform critical operations, another important asset on Onsite.

Wilmot said that physical strength and maintaining a drug free lifestyle are essential for certain physically demanding positions such as hydroblaster and demolition laborer.

The required fitness and drug screening tests cost about $400, and military alumni pass them — an important factor when the company tests thousands of applicants a year.



According to Wilmot, many military alumni possess loyalty, integrity, maturity, dependability, leadership qualities, and discipline. These intangibles are everything to a recruiter. Finding an employee who will show up for a job — on time and prepared — is his biggest recruiting challenge.

For almost three years, Onsite has been recruiting Army alumni by participating in job fairs and working closely with transition professionals on numerous installations.

This company has discovered an "untapped resource of qualified personnel" with the transistioning military candidates, Wilmot said. Onsite saves time and money with this recruiting initiative, and in turn, provides its environmental clients with the trained, mature employees they need.

For more information about training and employment, contact Wilmot at (800) 807-0454.

No more naps!

Six-year-old John-Paul Keegan charged courageously into the new school year Tuesday as Morris R. McBride student, along with more than three thousands other children, and took his place in one of Fort Benning School's classrooms.

Already a first-grade fan, Keegan said with certainty, "I like the first grade better than kindergarten because we don't have to take naps."

Required rest time didn't dampen Buddy Dyer's excitement about starting kindergarten at White School.

"He was so excited, he couldn't go to sleep last night," said his mom, Steffani Dyer. "He came down this morning with his clothes already on."

But first-day jitters got the best of just a few students as principals, counselors and teachers coaxed children from their parents' pants legs and into the classrooms.

While saying goodbye proved hard, school counselor Deborah Morgan said quickly is best.

"It's better if they (parents) remove themselves quickly," she said, "so the child can acclimate to the classroom."

Dell Karr, Fort Benning School superintendent, who visited each school Monday, said Fort Benning students are in caring hands.

"They (children) couldn't get a better education anywhere."

INFECTIOUS ILLNESS

Good hygiene fights off childhood viruses

Egleston Children's Hospital

Back-to-school jitters may give your child an upset stomach or even make him sick for a day or two. Childhood illness experts at Egleston Children's Hospital at Emory University in Atlanta say what sometimes may look like a bad case of the summertime blues may actually be a virus that strikes particularly hard in late summer and early fall.

If your child complains of a sore throat, vomits more than once and has diarrhea or abdominal pain, he might have an enterovirus.

Enteroviruses are actually a family of more than 75 viral types that can cause anything from eye inflammation to stomach upset to viral meningitis, according to Egleston infectious disease specialist Harry Keyserling. The disease spreads by hands contaminated by human feces. Enterovirus is contagious and can affect all ages, but it seems most often to hit school-aged children or children who live or play in crowded conditions. Although your child can be infected by an enterovirus any time of year, it thrives in the summer and early fall months. No cure or vaccine exists for the disease. Symptoms last from three to four days.

Because so many different forms this virus exist, diagnosing whether your child contracts an enterovirus is tricky, said Corinne Taylor, a general pediatrician at Egleston. A culture of your child's stool or blood may be taken. If your child complains of a stiff neck and headache, a spinal tap may be done. Since some enterovirus strains develop into viral meningitis, the tap rules out bacterial meningitis.

Parents should note if their child seems unable to move his or her head easily.

Taylor offers these tips to help stop the spread:

• Wash your hands thoroughly with soap and water after going to the restroom or changing diapers. Until your children learn good hand washing habits, wash their hands with soap and water after they go to the bathroom.

• If your child attends day care, make sure the provider properly disinfects surfaces and uses gloves to change diapers.

• Clean toys and other surfaces regularly with soap and water.

• If your child complains of a headache and stiff neck, take him to your pediatrician immediately.

Labor Day: Common sense precautions keep holiday weekend safe

Infantry Branch Safety Office

Each year, Labor Day, coupled with a long weekend, results in a heavy traffic toll, primarily because of accidents from highway travel and water sports.

Fort Benning families exposed to the heavy holiday traffic in the local area must exercise defensive driving practices, according to Regis Beighley, safety manager, Infantry Branch Safety Office.

"Be sure you know how to make the highway a happy way for the long weekend," he said. "The ability to drive safely prevents the disability that spoils life."

Beighley recommends all drivers know and observe these fundamentals:

• Don't press chances with fatigue. Change drivers or stop and rest often.

• Don't drive if you have drunk any alcohol.

• Reduce your speed for rainy weather and bad roads. Remember that posted speed limits refer to ideal pavement conditions only.

• Try to anticipate the mistakes of other drivers.

• Heed traffic signs and signals and obey the traffic regulations.

• Stay well to the right of the center line, except when passing.

• And, to reduce the risk of disability and tragedy, use safety belts.

"Keep in mind that no matter what your occupation is, when you are behind the wheel of your car, safe driving is a full-time job which requires the use of knowledge, skill and good judgement," Beighley said.

Drowning and boating accidents also contribute to holiday injuries and fatalities.

Beighley recommends these safety tips for swimmers and boaters:

• Supervise small children near water.

• Swim only in the company of others and in properly supervised areas.

• Have a life preserver for each person in the boat. Make sure children and poor swimmers wear a life preserver at all times while in a boat.

• Recognize the limitations of your boat and the extent of your ability.

• Respect bad weather and keep out of dangerous situations.

• If the boat swamps or capsizes, stay with the boat and push or paddle to shore, or wait until help arrives.

"Let's all apply courtesy, caution and common sense to this Labor Day weekend and try by example to encourage others to do the same," he said.

Post policies put limits on pet parameters

USAIC Public Affairs Office

As the fall season for Youth Services' outdoor sports program begins, it seems the perfect time to remind Fort Benning animal owners of the rules and regulations governing post pet owners' responsibilities.

According to U.S. Army Infantry Center Regulation 40-905, Paragraph 3-9 a (3), "Animals will not interfere with official reviews, ceremonies or parades. Animals will be kept from golf courses, school yards, playgrounds, athletic fields, swimming pool enclosures, food handling establishments, Post Exchange facilities and medical treatment facilities."

Hundreds of children fill school playgrounds and use several of Fort Benning's athletic fields for soccer and football. Pet owners who like to walk their dogs should stay clear of these areas.

Hospital overhaul

Reconstruction begins Oct 1, gives post facility facelift

By Jalesia M. Griffin
Martin Army Community Hospital

Major reconstruction begins Oct. 1 throughout Martin Army Community Hospital.

A life-safety upgrade necessitates installing an automatic fire sprinkler system, acoustical ceiling tiles and new fluorescent lights; upgrading the medical gas system; and restructuring emergency exits in order to meet new safety code standards.

Hospital renovation also includes Labor and Delivery, Newborn Nursery, Post Partum wards; the Intensive Care and Intermediate Care wards; and the sixth and seventh floor wards.

Plans call for construction completion in approximately two years. Moving wards and other departments to different areas in phases allows the hospital to remain fully operational during the project. To eliminate confusion, officials will post signs to direct patients to the relocated departments.

Patients will experience some noise from the construction and a minimal amount of dust. Most of the construction takes place during nonduty hours; however, some occurs during the duty day. To control the process, the hospital's Preventive Medicine and Infection Control personnel will monitor all areas under construction.

Around mid-September, the Intensive Care and Intermediate Care wards will move from the second floor to the sixth floor. In the latter part of September, Labor and Delivery and Newborn Nursery wards will move to the second floor, and Post Partum will move the fifth floor.

The upgrade and renovations allow the hospital to meet new safety code standards and improve patient care.

Precautions keep field trips safe

Egleston Children's Hospital

Field trips provide a perfect way of not only reinforcing a classroom lesson, but also making a child's learning experience memorable and fun.

The safety experts at Egleston Children's Hospital at Emory University in Atlanta remind parents and teachers to make safety an important part of the lesson as well.

"If parent-volunteers and teachers are transporting children in a car, station wagon or van, they need to make sure all passengers are properly buckled," said Egleston emergency center nurse Maryann Johnston. "Every rider should have his own safety belt. Sharing safety belts (double buckling) is not a safe option."

The emergency center nurse recommends that children never ride in the bed of a pickup truck since there exists no child restraint mechanism and children could be thrown out of the vehicle in the event of a crash.

Safety concerns addresses bus transportation, also. Remind children they need to remain seated at all times, keeping their heads and arms inside the bus. Bus passengers wait until the bus comes to a complete stop before exiting the bus. Regardless of the mode of transportation, remind children to provide courtesy when riding in a vehicle and not to distract the driver.

If parent-volunteers provide the driving and supervise children, they should be given the names of their assigned children. Johnston recommended children pair with a buddy and remind them not to wander off or leave with a stranger. Also, volunteers and teachers perform head counts to account for everyone.

Johnston said that before the field trip, parents and teachers review with their children that a stranger may be a familiar face. Remind children to keep any shopping money in a safe place and not to take gifts or food from strangers.

"Develop a plan for a missing child and review with the child what they should do if they should get lost," Johnston said. "Make sure the plan is discussed with parent-volunteers who are accompanying the class on the field trip. This way everyone is apprised of the appropriate procedures to follow," Johnston said.

Use caution if children will be crossing the street. Direct young children to hold hands and use appropriate crosswalks with adult supervision. Teachers and parent-volunteers need to serve as role models and stop at all intersections and look left, right and left again before crossing the street.

"Field trips are an important part of a child's school experience," Johnston said. "Make the classroom excursion a safe one by taking the appropriate precautions."

tricare

USAIC Public Affairs Office

The Department of Defense recently switched to a new health care program for the Army, Navy and Air Force.

Representatives from Martin Army Community Hospital provide Tricare information to soldiers, retirees and family members.

Many eligible beneficiaries show concern about the change and how it affects their care. They often ask this question.

Q. If I live outside of MACH's service area and Prime is not offered in my area, may I elect to enroll and receive my care at the military treatment facility?

A. Yes, but the enrollee waives the Tricare Prime 30-minute drive access standard.

BOARD MEETING

Students, officials prepare for school

By Amy Durham
Special to The Bayonet©

While parents made last minute purchases for their children's return to the Fort Benning Schools, officials made adjustments in preparation for the post's approximate 3,100 students.

During their monthly school board meeting Monday, members listened as Dell Karr, schools superintendent, discussed the decrease in Fort Benning Schools enrollment.

Karr told board members the "schools are experiencing a very dramatic decrease (in student enrollment)."

Student enrollment

According to Karr, Sept. 30 enrollment for school year 1990 was 3,809 while same-date enrollment for school year 1996 was 3,001, including the 300 students enrolled in pre-kindergarten.

As those several thousand students prepare for school at Fort Benning, Karr said the schools' administrators relocated teachers to meet the fluctuating number of students at each of the schools. A few teachers and some students were being reassigned to better balance each school's teacher-student ratios.

"We don't take these decisions lightly," Karr told board members. "We are looking at each situation carefully."

School officials also monitor the gifted program, its eligibility requirements as well as enrollment. Fort Benning elementary schools operate self-contained gifted programs in which students remain with their teacher and study with the same group throughout the day. Faith Middle School, which, as of Aug. 23, enrolled 16 students in the program, operates as a resource program. Students remain with their teacher for two periods, math and literature, then join regular classes for the remainder of the day.

Karr said placing the students in the regular classrooms still meets the needs of students in the gifted program, yet balances teaching resources with needs of all students. She also said testing continued so enrollment in the gifted program may change slightly.

Karr said the school system hired 13 new teachers.

"We didn't hire any new classroom teachers except for a Math teacher for Faith School," she said. "The others have specialty classes."

In her school board report, Karr also said opening workshops for all teachers who returned for the school year Aug. 19 went well. Training focused on this year's theme, Navigating the C's — Choice, Commitment, Challenge and Communication.

"As we see increased standardization and centralization from Washington and decreased enrollments with corresponding diminishing resources," Karr said, "it is important that we change our way of looking at things, with an eye to what we do have and how we can use that creatively, rather than remembering what we used to have."

Upcoming projects

Karr also said school board elections Sept. 23 features several positions up for election.

The superintendent reiterated the policy governing enrollment of students in guest housing.

"We cannot enroll students who are living in guest housing unless they have a 90-day occupancy letter from Housing," she said, citing eligibility requirements for enrollment are very strict. Students living in guest housing who cannot obtain a 90-day occupancy letter must enroll in the local district.

Renovation, construction and correction projects for several schools are also in various phases, according to Karr. She told those in the meeting all bids for the Wilson School roof are in; although no contract has been awarded. Karr said she anticipated work would begin in late fall.

"Concerning the McBride School renovation ... the lease for trailers has been awarded and we anticipate their arrival around Nov. 1," she said.

Karr said bids for the Faith School addition of eight classrooms opened last week and administrators expect to award the Stowers School erosion project near the end of September.

In other business, Alice Skinner, director of Logistics and Support Services, presented the consolidated income statements for the School Lunchroom Fund for June and July. In June, the schools' loss was $21,411, something Skinner said was expected because of the payroll and only four days of sales. The year-to-date gain was $27,062, and the current fund equity is $93,781.

For July, the lunchroom fund lost $3,592 while it gained $23,470 year-to-date. Current fund equity amounts to $90,491.

Others present included: Col. Gregory C. Camp, president; Rhoda Zerger, Dexter School representative; Sgt. Joe Todd, Loyd School representative; Chap. (Maj.) Robert Thompson, chaplain representative; Sheila Long, Stowers School representative; Adrienne Porter, White School representative; Staff Sgt. Ricardo Linton, Wilson School representative; Caroline Myers, president, Benning Education Association; Stephanie Davis, president, American Federation of Government Employees; Cheryl Garner, vice-president, American Federation of Government Employees; Robbie Norris, Human Resources Site manager; and, Richard Skinner, assistant superintendent.

Q. We plan to move in the near future and would like to know if we can increase our household goods coverage to protect against shipment loss or damage.

A. Understanding the government's obligation to compensate for losses accrued from a government-sponsored move helps you prepare for the transition.

Letting the government contract a carrier to move your goods (as opposed to doing a do-it-yourself-move) binds you to the guidelines detailed in Army claims regulations. These limitations include the time in which you must give notice of any losses, the right of the carrier to reclaim certain damaged items and the maximum allowances that can be paid for individual items. For most individuals, this provides adequate protection against loss or damage.

Two insurance protection plans exist for individuals moving within the continental United States and interested in increasing coverage. Service members purchase either plan, which is similar to many private insurance policies, from the carrier through the transportation office. Individuals leaving Fort Benning for overseas assignments should contact private insurance firms for policy information.

Increased Basic Valuation, the first plan available through the transportation office, provides an economical option; it multiplies the weight of your property by a certain dollar value. IBV provides additional protection if the amount of your loss exceeds the amount otherwise allowed by the Claims Office.

For example, if you ship $10,000 worth of jewelry and the property came up missing, the Claims Office allows a maximum pay of of $1,000 per item and a total of $4,000 for the entire claim. Knowing that, you decide to purchase additional coverage equal to the amount of the difference between what the Claims Office pays and the value of the property, or $6,000.

If you discover you are missing items when you receive your goods at the new duty station, file and substantiate the loss with the local Claims Office. A local claims representative makes an immediate payment of $4,000 and the U.S. Army Claims Service asserts the claim against the carrier for the full $10,000 and pays you the additional $6,000 when the carrier pays the claim to the government.

Full Replacement Protection, the second plan, costs considerably more than the IBV plan because it provides the full replacement value of all lost or damaged property. While the IBV plan predetermines amount of coverage, FRP sets no limit and compensates you for any and all losses incurred during shipment. Officials recommend this for individuals with high value items such as pianos and art collections.

One of the conditions of the FRP plan requires the service member to first file a claim with the carrier, who has the option of repairing or replacing lost or damaged property. If the carrier denies or delays your claim for more than 30 days, the FRP plan allows you to file a claim with the local Claims Office.

The decision of whether or not to purchase additional insurance should be based upon the actual value of your property and the amount that you are willing to pay to protect that property. A failure to purchase the right plan, or any plan, could cost you several thousand dollars.

For more information, contact the Claims Office, Office of the Staff Judge Advocate, at 545-2285.

LABOR DAY

Christianity promotes a good work ethic

By Robert A. Wildeman
The Infantry Center Chapel

Labor Day brings many different images to mind: the last summer holiday; school beginning again; and, the question, "Where has the summer gone?"

Historically, President Grover Cleveland, at the urging of the labor unions, signed a bill June 28, 1894, establishing the first Monday in September as Labor Day. The celebration intended to recognize the contributions of organized labor. Today, the day provides an opportunity for leisure and reflection on the victories won by the unions for their workers.

We spend a great deal of time and expend a great deal of energy working in one way or another. Whether raising our children, cleaning the house, going to the Commissary or to the field, we seem to catch ourselves going and coming. Enough hours or days in the week do not exist. Then it seems as if no matter how hard we work and how much money we make, more month than money usually remains and as much work left undone as done.

So why work? Do we work just because we have to, or does work possess a deeper, more fulfilling meaning? Is it a job or a vocation? Do we work just to pay the bills and meet our physical needs? Or, does work provide a higher purpose and calling to our lives?

reflections

During the Protestant Reformation, two Christian leaders, Martin Luther and John Calvin, found that God intended all workers feel a sense of dignity about what they did, no matter how menial or great.

They used the word "vocation" to describe the work of any Christian. The word implies a divine calling that gives purpose to our work, a separateness enjoyed previously by those in religious works. The word implied that a divine calling, blessing and purpose applied to any job. Whether a farmer, servant, parent, soldier, merchant, teacher, priest or king, whatever you were and did had the same special recognition and blessing from God.

In I Corinthians 10:31, the Apostle Paul gives us the proper motivation for everything we do. He wrote, "So whether you eat or drink or whatever you do, do it all to the glory of God."

Our motivation requires that we do our best, no matter what we do, not so we get the credit, but that God will.

Whatever we do, we do with a sense of purpose, fulfillment and joy because we know that we have been called by God to do it. And because we know that God called us and gave us the ability to do our work and that we have a unique contribution to make in his kingdom, we take dignity and pride in all that we do. To use an Army phrase, our vocation is "not just a job; it's an adventure."

Do you see your work as a job or a vocation? If you see what you do as a calling from God that has a special place in his grand plan for his world, your work takes on a new and deeper meaning.

Post to observe Religious Education Month

By Bill Putman
USAIC Chaplains Office

During September, Fort Benning observes Religious Education Month.

Probably the first record of the requirement for religious education occurred when Moses relayed to the elders of the Israelites, instructions for preparing for the tenth plague — the first born from every household which did not have the blood of the lamb sprinkled on the door posts, would die. At the end of the instructions, Moses told them to observe this feast throughout all generations.

"And when your children ask, 'What do you mean by this observance?' you shall say, 'It is the passover sacrifice to the Lord, for he passed over the houses of the Israelites in Egypt ...'" (Exodus 12:26-27 NRSV)

There are references in the New Testament of people going to the temple to hear the Scriptures read and discussed. Jesus participated in this during his childhood years, as well as later as a teacher.

Many people today think that Sunday School is the complete answer to religious education, and that it is only for children. Actually, Sunday School provides a base for religious education, but without religious teachings by parents at home, and continuing in other settings, our knowledge of religious matters would be seriously lacking. Who would give a child one hour of public school education per week, and expect him to become a productive adult?

Today's Sunday School grew from a movement started by Robert Raikes in Gloucester, England, in 1780. He wanted to teach poor children who could not attend school during the week because of work to read and write. Initially he received criticism for desecrating the Sabbath, but he later gained support from some of the chief leaders of the church of that day. By the time of his death in 1811, thousands of Sunday schools existed in England.

In America, the Sunday School movement began in 1785 and grew rather quickly. Public schools provided less and less Bible instruction, and Sunday schools provided more.

Many opportunities for religious education exist at Fort Benning. The worship services schedule on this page indicates some religious education activities. Others include women's Bible studies, youth groups, home and unit Bible studies and other special programs.

For more information about these programs, contact your unit chaplain or call 545-2050 or 545-4715.

Run and shoot weekend concludes

John W. Peeler

Biathletes from the surrounding area flocked to the post to test their combined running and shooting skills in the summer biathlon at English Range Friday and Sunday.

Competitors run fast, shoot fast, shoot straight and plain have fun.

"I just came down to have a little fun," said retired Army Brig. Gen. David Funk of Montgomery, Ala.

The first summer biathlon event, conducted in Memphis, Tenn., in 1987, served as the warm-weather version of the Olympic winter biathlon. The event replaces the cross county skiing with running and is governed by the U.S. Biathlon Association, a U.S. Olympic Committee affiliate.

Since its inception, the event grew from five races in 1988 to more than 100 races annually in the United States.

The course, divided into three segments, combines a 5K run (3.1 miles) with two shooting stops and tests both the endurance and shooting accuracy of the athletes.

In the shooting portion of the event, participants fire in the prone position (lying down) first, then in the standing position.

A .22-caliber biathlon rifle using federal standard velocity ammunition loaded in a five-shot clip serves as the standard firearm for the event.

Standard summer biathlon metal knock down target plates, measuring 3.5 inches in diameter, serve as targets.

According to the latest statistics, more than 7,000 people participate annually with 80 percent of the competitors being runners and shooters making up the other 20 percent.

The average competitor hits five out of ten targets, three in the prone position and two in the standing position.

"The most interesting part of the event is the shooting," Funk said. Funk won the Gold Medal in the over 60 division of the competition.

Although a competitor may be as young as 14 years old to compete in the event, most competitors are in their 30s and 40s.

After the event, spectators and competitors were invited back to the firing positions to shoot for fun.

"It's depressing to come over after the race and shoot better than you did in the race," Funk said.

"I have competed in events in Illinois and in New Jersey, and I can tell you this event was well run and organized," Dick Wells said.

Wells, stationed at Rock Island Arsenal, Ill., reported to Fort Benning for inprocessing Monday.

"I was down here a little early, found out about the competition and decided to come out and have a little fun."

Army 10-Miler: Physical Fitness School chooses its deputy commandant as coach

By Jacqué Hill
Special to the Bayonet©

The U.S. Army Physical Fitness School's deputy commandant, Lt. Col. Charles Hunsaker, serves as coach of the post's Army 10-Miler team, scheduled to compete Oct. 13 in Washington, D.C.

According to Col. Jeanne M. Picariello, commandant, U.S. Army Physical Fitness School, choosing Hunsaker to coach Fort Benning's 10-miler team was an easy choice once the school received the coaching responsibilities by the command group.

"The fitness school assumed the duties for coaching the post's 10-miler team and with his position as deputy commandant and his coaching background, Hunsaker was the logical choice for coach," she said.

Hunsaker's involvement with track and field began unexpectedly in his high school at Lima, Ohio he said. As a member of the band, he helped set up the field for band practices and performances. This occurred at the same time Shawnee High School's cross country team practiced and he watched the team's efforts.

Then, he asked to join the team. Hunsaker admitted being unsure of his abilities in the track arena.

Lt. Col. Charles Hunsaker serves as the coach for the Fort Benning team in Army 10-Miler race.

"I didn't even know what cross country was," he said. After finishing several races in last position that first year, he still had the drive to compete in cross country events.

"I kept running and trained over the summer," he said. "When I came back the next year, I ended up being number one on the team."

From Shawnee's cross country team, Hunsaker went on to participate in track and field at Capital University in Columbus, Ohio. There, he won the team's most valuable player award twice and set several records, including his 15-year standing record for the 600-yard race. Hunsaker did not intend for cross country to take such precedence in his college life.

"I initially went to college with the idea I wanted to be a doctor," he said.

The Capital University Athletic Hall of Fame made a place for him because of his performances with the school's track team.

Hunsaker chose the University of Cincinnati as the next step in his cross country career. After serving as assistant track and cross country coach at Cincinnati for two years, Hunsaker took a job there, coaching the schools first-ever All Americans in both cross country and track and field and serving as the United States' youngest college track coach.

Major "tracks" were made by Hunsaker at Southwest Missouri State University, where he was head track and cross country coach after being involved in the 1972 Olympic trials.

SMSU track program improved with Hunsaker. excelling in the sport, taking several National Collegiate Athletic Association honors, including one NCAA National Championship Team award and two NCAA National Coach of the Year Awards.

"During the time I was there, we won five Missouri Collegiate Athletic Association championships," Hunsaker said. Hunsaker received honors by the Missouri Track and Cross Country Coaches Association in 1991, which inducted him into the Missouri Track Hall of Fame.

"It was a great honor," he said. "There are not many people who can say they won an NCAA National Championship ... I'm especially proud of that. The award was really a tribute to the outstanding people who made up those teams."

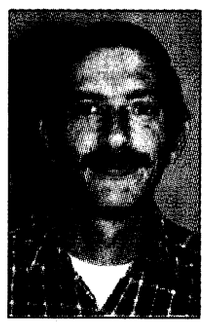
After nomination as the distance coach for the U.S. Olympic team in 1976, but not selection, Hunsaker was inducted into the Ohio Track Hall of Fame.

Called to active duty from the Army Reserves in 1977, Hunsaker served as a physical education instructor at the U.S. Military Academy at West Point. At West Point, he coordinated the academy's first women's track program.

"The thing that convinced them to choose me over others was because I had coached before and they wanted to start the women's program," he said. "I started the women's track and cross country program at West Point."

Track and field influenced Hunsaker's life in a major way.

"It's given me the opportunity to do so many things," he said. "Everything great that's happened in my life has been in part due to my involvement in track and field.



"I even met my wife at a track event."

Hunsaker said he wants a good team for the Army 10-Miler.

"Our goal is to have the best team we can possibly have," he said.

The gardens also extend free admission to active duty military, retirees and family members not attending the tournament but who would rather take advantage of other activities.

To drive to Callaway Gardens, go north on Interstate 185, exit east on Highway 18 (exit 13) to Pine Mountain. Turn right on U.S. Highway 27 and enter Callaway Gardens.

Paddlers with a sharp eye see beaver, otter, king fishers, great blue herons, turtles or other wildlife.

The $15 cost per person includes canoe, paddles and life preserver.

The parks offering these canoe trips include:

Plastic worms provide effective option

By Steve Price and Earl Bentz
Outboard Marine Corporation

Of all the lures in his tackle box, professional bass tournament fisherman Guy Eaker's favorites date back more than 40 years.

"Actually, the lures themselves aren't that old," Eaker said, "but fishermen have been using them that long.

"They're plastic worms, which were originally developed in the early 1950s. I doubt any other lure has caught as many bass as has the plastic worm."

Eaker likes to fish plastic worms in shallow water. When he does, he prefers to use a sinker that literally screws into the head of the worm.

"Many anglers simply peg the sliding sinker on their line with a toothpick," Eaker said. "But that can damage the line. I use a sinker that has a small corkscrew on the base. After threading the sinker on your line, you screw it into the head of the worm and it will stay in place."

"This type of sinker makes your casting more accurate and keeps the lure from snagging on brush or limbs, which often happens when the sinker slides freely on your line.

> "All in all, the plastic worm is an extremely versatile lure."
> — Guy Eaker
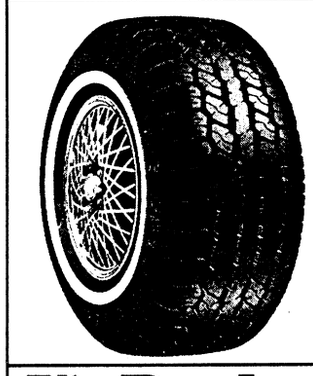
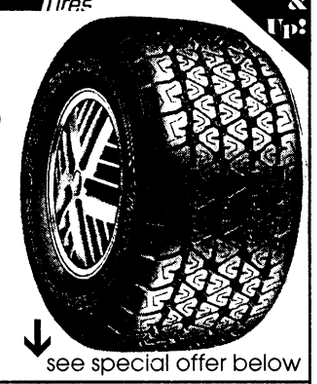
> Professional fisherman

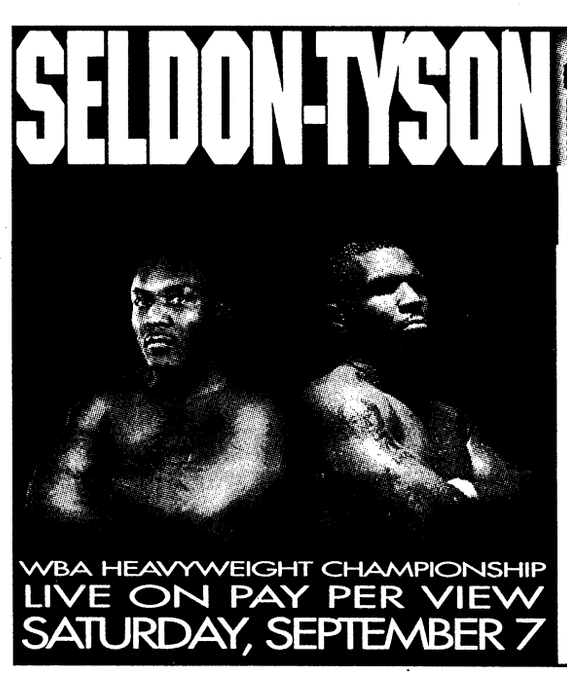
"Having a screw-in sinker also improves the worm's action in vegetation like hydrilla," the pro said, "because it allows the lure to fall straight down into tiny holes and openings instead of drifting from side to side where it frequently gets snagged.

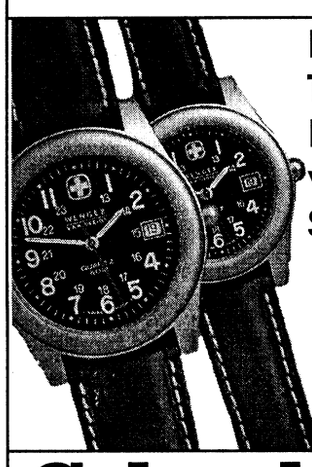
"Another thing I like to do with my plastic worms is hop them rather than crawl them along the bottom," Eaker said. "The majority of strikes on both a plastic worm and a jig come when the lure is falling, so I try to make the lure fall as many times as possible. The best way to do that is by raising your rod tip to jump the worm up, then lowering it so it falls again."

For fishermen who lack confidence fishing a plastic worm, the North Carolina angler recommends they rig a six-inch purple or black-and-blue worm with a No. 20 hook and a three-sixteenth ounce sinker. This is a famous color-weight-size combination that catches bass under a wide variety of conditions in lakes throughout the United States.









Often during the warmer summer, Eaker fishes a swimming worm by leaving off the sinker. Instead of fishing the lure on the bottom, he swims it on the surface.

"A swimming worm is a great topwater lure around heavy shoreline brush as well as in open water where scattered vegetation is present," Eaker said.

"My favorite retrieves with swimming worms are either a steady swimming action that causes the worm to look more like a small snake, or a series of short jerks that make the worm dart erratically from side to side."

The fact it floats and can be kept in the strike zone for a long time makes the swimming worm so effective, Eaker said. Plus it's weedlessness keeps it from getting snagged.

"All in all, the plastic worm is an extremely versatile lure," he said. "I'm not at all surprised that it remains so popular after all these years."

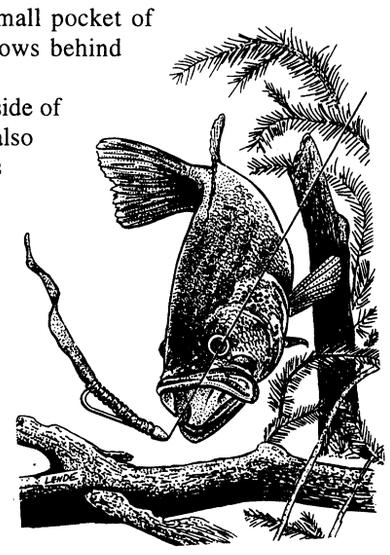
Channel bends best when fishing creeks

By Earl Bentz and Steve Price
Outboard Marine Corporation



In tournament bass fishing, the pros make creek fishing a science, but any angler can master this science.

"The easiest way to fish a creek is to concentrate on the bends," said Missouri veteran Denny Brauer. "Spend your time fishing either the inside or the outside of the bends, and most of the time you'll be close."

Brauer said professional anglers go to tributary creeks first when fishing large impoundments or major river systems.

"Channel bends usually offer several features bass like, including depth changes, cover, current and protection from that current, and because of the current, a constant supply of food," Brauer said. "Not only are all or most of these features present, they're usually very close together. Bass have all they need to survive in a small area."

Inside bends, said the pro, occur like points, and feature a gradual depth change from shallow to deep. In rivers, these points simulate big sand bars and a small pocket of protected water flows behind them.

"The upstream side of these points may also have brush that has washed in with the current, while right behind it on the back side of the point the water depth changes much faster," he said. "Whenever you have shallow cover very close to deeper water, you practically have a magnet for bass."

The outside bends lack cover or they may possess an abundance of it, depending on the current, Brauer said. The water's depth increases on the inside of the bend because of the current, and often attracts bass after sudden cold fronts or other weather changes.

Several different lures provide effective channel-bend fishing, depending on water depth. Crankbaits help locate underwater brush and debris, while jigs produce more when working the brush itself. Also, spinnerbaits, plastic worms, and possibly even topwater lures work, depending on the season of the year.

"Visible cover can also be a factor in your lure choice," Brauer said. "If there is cover, such as lily pads or other vegetation, bass will usually be relating to it in some way.

"You may want to use a spinnerbait around cover on the inside of a bend and a jig or other lure in the cover in the deeper water on the outside of the bend," he said.

TSM Soldier seeks ideas for program

TRADOC System Manager-Soldier Office

The Training and Doctrine Command System Manager-Soldier Office at Fort Benning seeks Soldier Enhancement Program proposals for fiscal 1998.

Since 1990, the Army actively sought common-sense solutions from soldiers to enhance their lethality, mobility and survivability on the battlefield through the Soldier Enhancement Program, said Ken Sutton, TSM-Soldier program manager. SEP accelerates the acquisition of lighter, more lethal weapons and improved soldier items of equipment, and puts them in the hands of soldiers in three years or less.

Once the Army receives ideas, the ideas get screened to ensure they meet the minimum criteria for a SEP proposal and get forwarded to the Army Materiel Command for technical risk assessment.

TRADOC proponent schools then evaluate the ideas to determine if an operational need or requirement exists. Those meeting the criteria, are low to moderate technical risk, and solve a battlefield deficiency or need, are then placed on priority order for funding as "new starts" for the next fiscal year.

The Army will soon be accepting new suggestions for the fiscal 1998 SEP program, which require the following criteria: a soldier system item of equipment that is worn, carried or consumed by the soldier for his or her individual use in a tactical environment; a commercially available off-the-shelf item with little or no modification for field military use; and satisfies an operational need or battlefield deficiency. This process is different from the Army suggestion program, said Dick Wright, deputy, TSM-Soldier program. By submitting suggestions this way, the implementation processes is shortened by three or four years.

If it makes the soldier more effective or efficient on the battlefield, reduces the soldier's load in either weight or bulk, enhances lethality, survivability, command and control, sustainment, mobility, safety, training or quality of life, or, if soldiers are spending their own money to buy it, then it may be a strong SEP candidate.

No monetary awards are given for proposals that are adopted for use and result in a cost saving to the government.

To obtain a SEP proposal form, contact the TRADOC System Manager-Soldier, ATTN: ATZB-TS, Fort Benning, Ga., 31905-5000, or call (706) 545-1189, 545-6047 or DSN 835-1189, 835-6047. Information can be faxed to (706) 545-1377 or DSN 835-1377.

Send proposals to the TSM-Soldier Office no later than Sept. 16 for consideration for the fiscal 1998 program.

Fort Benning's Military Police and the Criminal Investigation Division still seek witnesses to a fatal accident.

Two vehicles collided in a traffic accident on Highway 27, one-fourth mile east of the Interstate 185 exchange, on Fort Benning. The cars involved were a blue 1966 Ford Mustang and a late model red Nissan Sentra.

The collision left three dead and six injured. The deceased are: Andressa J. Dorsey of Albany, Ga.; Pvt. 2 Joshua D. Ward of Company B, 1st Battalion, 15th Infantry Regiment; and Phyllis A. Wright of Albany, Ga.

According to preliminary findings, the Mustang, driven by Vargas, was passing a vehicle in the passing lane, when an unknown vehicle turned into the passing lane in front of the Mustang. Vargas made an evasive move to avoid the vehicle, lost control of his car, crossed the median and struck the Nissan Sentra.

The injured were Pvt. 2 Joshua B. Vargas of Co. D, 1st Bn., 15th Inf. Regt.; Pvt. 2 Charles R. Boyles III, Co. D, 1st Bn., 15th Inf. Regt.; Pvt. 2 William D. Knight, Co. D, 1st Bn., 15th Inf. Regt.; Michael Duckworth of Albany, Ga.; Julian Wright of Albany, Ga.; and Kevin Wright of Albany, Ga.

If any information can be provided regarding this accident, contact the Military Police Station at 545-5222 or Special Agent James D. Gressley at 545-4500.

Post celebrates federal employees week

By Lisa M. Hibbert
Bayonet staff writer

Fort Benning celebrated Federal Employees Week with a variety of programs designed to enhance the federal employee Aug. 26 through 30 in Infantry Hall.

The week, which began with a Women's Equality Day celebration, marked the 76th anniversary of the passing of the 19th amendment — the amendment that granted women the right to vote.

Lulu Lunsford-Huff, a certified public accountant and speaker at the kickoff, encouraged women to use their right to vote for which women like Susan B. Anthony and Sojourner Truth fought.

"We reap the benefits of their struggle," Lunsford-Huff said. "We have the right to vote and make our own decisions about our future and our children's."

The program also featured Staff Sgt. Evelyn Richardson of the 29th Infantry Regiment who read her version of Maya Angelou's poem, "And Still I Rise," and Sgt. Diane Chatfield of Dental Activity who sang a gospel rendition of "Lean on Me."

Winifred Torain, Equal Employment Office specialist and the Federal Women's Program manager, said she was pleased with the way the sessions were facilitated but was disappointed with the low attendance.

"This year, we used Fort Benning employees because we have some of the best trained facilitators here," Torain said.

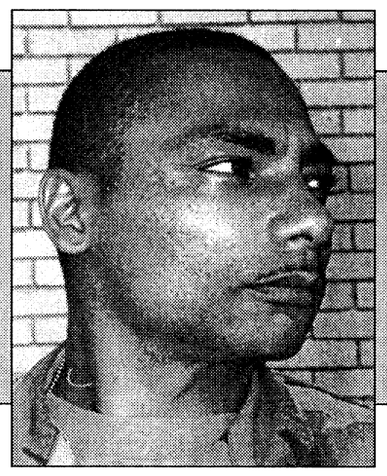
Lead by Barbara Ray, of the Southeast Civilian Personnel Operation Center, and Jane Mendoza of the Civilian Personnel Advisory Center, a session titled "CPOC or CPAC: where do I fit in?" explained the differences between the two offices and what services each provides.

Other sessions included:

• "Don't say yes when you want to say no," a session on communication skills presented by Ann Pratcher of Army Community Services

• "Work experience for college credit" by Gloria Kelsey of the Army Continuing Education System, provided information about how to equate job experience with college credit

• "Emotional toughness and stress management," facilitated by Becky Welch of ACS, gave tips on monitoring and handling stress

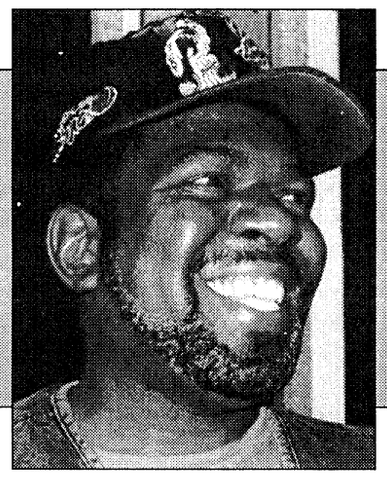


• "A whole approach to optimum health care diet and nutrition," led by 1st Lt. Julie DelRio of the U.S. Army Medical Department Activity, who explained fat and calorie counts

• "Preventive health care and women's health," by Lt. Col. Joan Hollandsworth of Martin Army Community Hospital, who discussed the preventive vs. proactive health care

• "What you want to know about survivor's benefit" was led by Capt. Anece Baxter-White of the Staff Judge Advocate's Office.

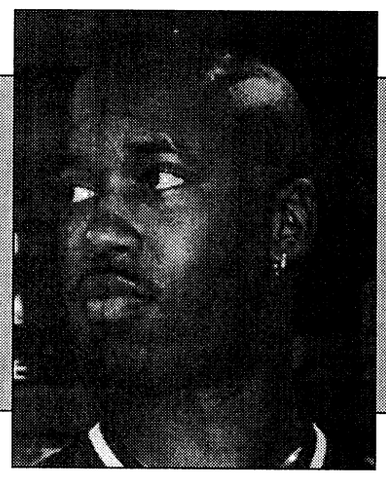
VARIOUS VOICES



What types of service have you received from household goods carriers?

Staff Sgt. Craig Solomon, Headquarters Command, New Equipment Training Team, Fort Monmouth, N.J. — "They broke my stuff when I moved from Korea."

Debbie Wilson, family member — "We had an excellent move this time. In the past, we haven't had the best moves, but this move was good."



Retired Master Sgt. Joseph Ferguson — "I had a good experience. They were very organized."

Beverly A. Rosser, family member — "They broke all of my lamps and end tables."

Sgt. Verita N. Morgan, U.S. Army Medical Department Activity — "I had a bad experience where they came late and said they couldn't unpack, and I had to call the next day to have them come back."

Senior Airman Rod B. Scott, 68th Fighter Squadron, Moody Air Force Base, Valdosta, Ga. — "Just a couple of small things were broken."

ON THE MOVE

One in four shipments sustain damage

By Jim Garamone
American Forces Press Service

It's so common; it's not news in the military. But it was news to the civilian media, and The Washington Post had a front-page story about a military officer whose household goods were ruined or broken in a routine move.

commentary

The kicker to the story was the officer was the Army brigadier general in charge of the Eastern Area of the Military Traffic Management Command — the command responsible for moving military personnel and their families. Boyd King used his horror story as just one example of damage done to service members' personal belongings every day.

The damage to his household goods didn't come as a surprise to the general; he knows something is wrong with procedures for moving military families. Military Traffic Management Command statistics show almost one in four military shipments sustain some sort of damage or loss. This compares with one in 10 for all moves. The government picks up about 35 percent of the $100 million annual damage tab.

You can be sure if the same thing happened to IBM or General Motors, someone would change procedures in a hurry to find a better, less damaging way to move.

Military Traffic Management Command officials know what's wrong. Essentially, they are working with an outdated system. They have identified shortcomings and have been constrained by budget to just patching the system. It is a case most of those in the military are all too familiar with: "Do more with less."

But eventually you get less with less, and the moving process cannot be patched anymore, it must be dismantled and rebuilt.

But changing anything in government is difficult. In this case, Congress must give permission for many of the changes the command wants to institute.

Foul language

Soldier urges others to decrease utterings of bad words, stop cursing

By Cliff Sees
Camp Humphreys, Korea

commentary

You can hear it everyday. Walking down the street, you hear it. Go to the PX and you can hear it. In fact, go just about anywhere now-a-days and you can hear it.

You can't get away from it. People who wouldn't have done it 10 or 15 years ago now do it without even thinking about it.
Just about the only place you don't hear it is in church.

Cussing, cursing, swearing — whatever you choose to call it, what used to be rare is now common. Or, to quote the Doobie Brothers' album title: "What were once vices are now habits."

In the military, cussing used to be quite common — remember the phrase, "Swore like a sailor?"

Perhaps it was the sudden manhood brought on by war and the urge to appear "grown up," or that there were no women around to object.

In fact, it used to be that gentlemen did not cuss around women; now the ladies are just as bad as the men.

Is this the price we have to pay for equality among the genders? I hope not.

Recently, "Good Morning America" devoted about 30 minutes — a long time in television — to the loss of civility in society today.

The problem is not new. Before "The Cosby Show," Bill Cosby starred in a situation comedy set in a high school.

Members of the basketball team frequently swore during practices and games, which brought protests from fans.

Cosby's solution was to have the players utter such nonsensical and inoffensive phrase as "Oh, marshmallow!"

When I was at the Primary Leadership Development Course, the policy was no cussing.

One day, the class was marching to lunch and the student platoon sergeant called out a cadence with the four-letter synonym for dung in it.

The cadre sergeant stopped the platoon and made us go to the back of the company, thereby our loosing place in the order for chow.

I frequently hear soldiers bandying about in public words and phrases that, not so long ago, would have caused them to have a bar of soap for lunch.

On occasion, I have called a cusser on the language. Usually, I'm greeted with a confused look; the person was not even thinking about what he or she was saying. One time, a soldier tried to pick a fight with me over it.

It's time to bring decency back to our language and communication. Think about what you are saying.

If you wouldn't want your mother, grandmother, or daughter to hear it, don't say it.

Before you utter that dirty word, stop for a second and ask yourself if you really need to use that word. Maybe there is a cleaner one available.

After a while, you'll probably notice you are not using those words anymore.

It will make you a nicer person, It will help keep our community cuss free!

dial 545-boss

Dial 545-BOSS is the commander's action line for soldiers, family members and civilians to call when they have problems or complaints that can't be resolved elsewhere.

While it is not a substitute for the chain of command or for agencies established to provide assistance, the line offers another means of communication between Fort Benning's community and commanders.

The Bayonet features some of the calls that may benefit other members of the Fort Benning community.

The caller questioned why gasoline prices remain higher on post than off post and higher at Fort Benning than at Fort Stewart.

The AAFES Retail Business manager informed the caller that AAFES conducts weekly gasoline surveys in a 15-mile radius around the entrances to Fort Benning. The exchange then uses the average price unless one of the competitors on Victory Drive or Fort Benning Road possesses the lowest price, then the exchange uses that price. All installations use local surveys.

The caller said that when AAFES reopened the Main Post Gas Station, the exchange removed the outside pay booth and now customers go inside and stand in line for a long time to pay for gasoline. She said this inconvenience requires you to take your children out of the car and take them inside the store with you. She said usually only one cashier works, and this delays the customers.

The Retail Business manager said AAFES plans to add credit cards at the pumps. AAFES will ensure that cashiers remain on all registers at all times to keep the lines moving. Also, exchange personnel provide assistance to handicapped customers when needed.

The caller said the Briant Wells Field House used to open at 9 a.m. Saturdays and Sundays, and now it opens at 11 a.m. He wants to know why the hours changed.

The sports director said a shortage of staff required the change in operating hours for Briant Wells Field House. The new hours of 11 a.m. to 7 p.m. requires only one shift, which helps reduce staffing. Audie Murphy Fitness Center opens at 8 a.m. on Saturdays.

The caller said the Kelley Hill Auto Craft Shop could not repair his air conditioner in his privately owned vehicle.

The chief, Arts & Crafts Branch, Directorate of Community Activities, said the vehicle's air conditioning system requires the new environmentally safe freon (R1344A), which the Kelley Hill Automotive Shop does not possess. Signs posted at the tool room and air conditioning stand now inform customers that automotive shop personnel cannot service new systems. Automotive shop personnel will ascertain which system the vehicle operates prior to having the customer wait in line for service.

The caller's concern regards the danger of lead poisoning in the mini blinds on his quarter's windows.

The Business Management Division, Directorate of Public Works, contacted the caller and gave him an update on DPW's actions to identify and correct problems associated with mini-blinds that contain lead. The Fort Benning Lead Management Committee works with the U. S. Consumer Product Safety Commission, the Fort Benning medical community and the Environmental Protection Agency to develop an appropriate course of action to safeguard the well-being of residents.

DPW no longer issues this type of blind and requests that children six and under not be allowed to ingest dust from mini-blinds. As a precaution, washing the blinds and the adjacent areas with a high phosphate soap minimizes the chances of coming in contact with lead that forms over time from exposure to sunlight and heat. As more information becomes available, DPW will inform housing residents through The Bayonet and Family Housing flyers.

BOSS

Soldiers answer calls at telethon

Better Opportunities for Single Soldiers

The Fort Benning Better Opportunities for Single Soldiers program showed up in full force Labor Day to help the Jerry Lewis Stars Across America Telethon. BOSS supplied 11 volunteers to man the telephones during the most crucial and hectic last segment of the 31st Annual Muscular Dystrophy Association Telethon.

"Everyone was really excited about being part of the crew, knowing that for most of us, this would be a once in a lifetime opportunity," said Spc. Caryn Bumpstead, BOSS president. "One of our volunteers even got to be on national television."

The local telethon was broadcast live from the Hilton Hotel in uptown Columbus by WRBL-TV 3. When the volunteers arrived, the Columbus area had pledged $24,903; but, by the time the phones stopped ringing four hours later, the grand total was more than $118,000. This year's total was nearly a $2,000 increase over last year's total.

This event was not all hard work for the volunteer's; some time was spent joking with television personnel and enjoying the food and drink, donated from local restaurants.

"Above all, we had a good time supporting a worthwhile charity," said Spc. Richard Germann of Company A, 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment "I think we got a lot more out of this than we put into it. Nothing matches the feeling of freely giving your time to people who need it."

THE BAYONET

Treating casualties for a variety of injuries such as a sucking chest wound is part of the evaluation process.

EFMB

Medics test skills, knowledge for expert bragging rights

By Brian R. Voller
Bayonet staff writer

The medic bends over and begins to pick up a soldier posing as a casualty. With all his strength, the medic hoists the casualty over his shoulder and prepares to be evaluated on his ability to carry an injured soldier using the fireman's carry. But, before he can take his first steps, he loses his balance and both the medic and the casualty fall to the muddy ground. Without missing a beat, the medic gets back to his feet and starts the whole process over so he can complete his testing for the Expert Field Medical Badge.

The 3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment, conducted testing for the EFMB Aug. 19 through 28.

Staff Sgt. Michael Nesbitt, 3rd Bn., 75th Ranger Regt., said soldiers begin their first week of competition primarily in the classroom where they receive instruction on the advanced life-saving techniques.

"The first week consists of classroom training with hands-on practical exercises at the end of each block of instruction," Nesbitt said. "They cover a lot of advanced trauma life support subjects, which means the classes themselves are designed to teach the students a higher level of care than most of the students received in their regular training."

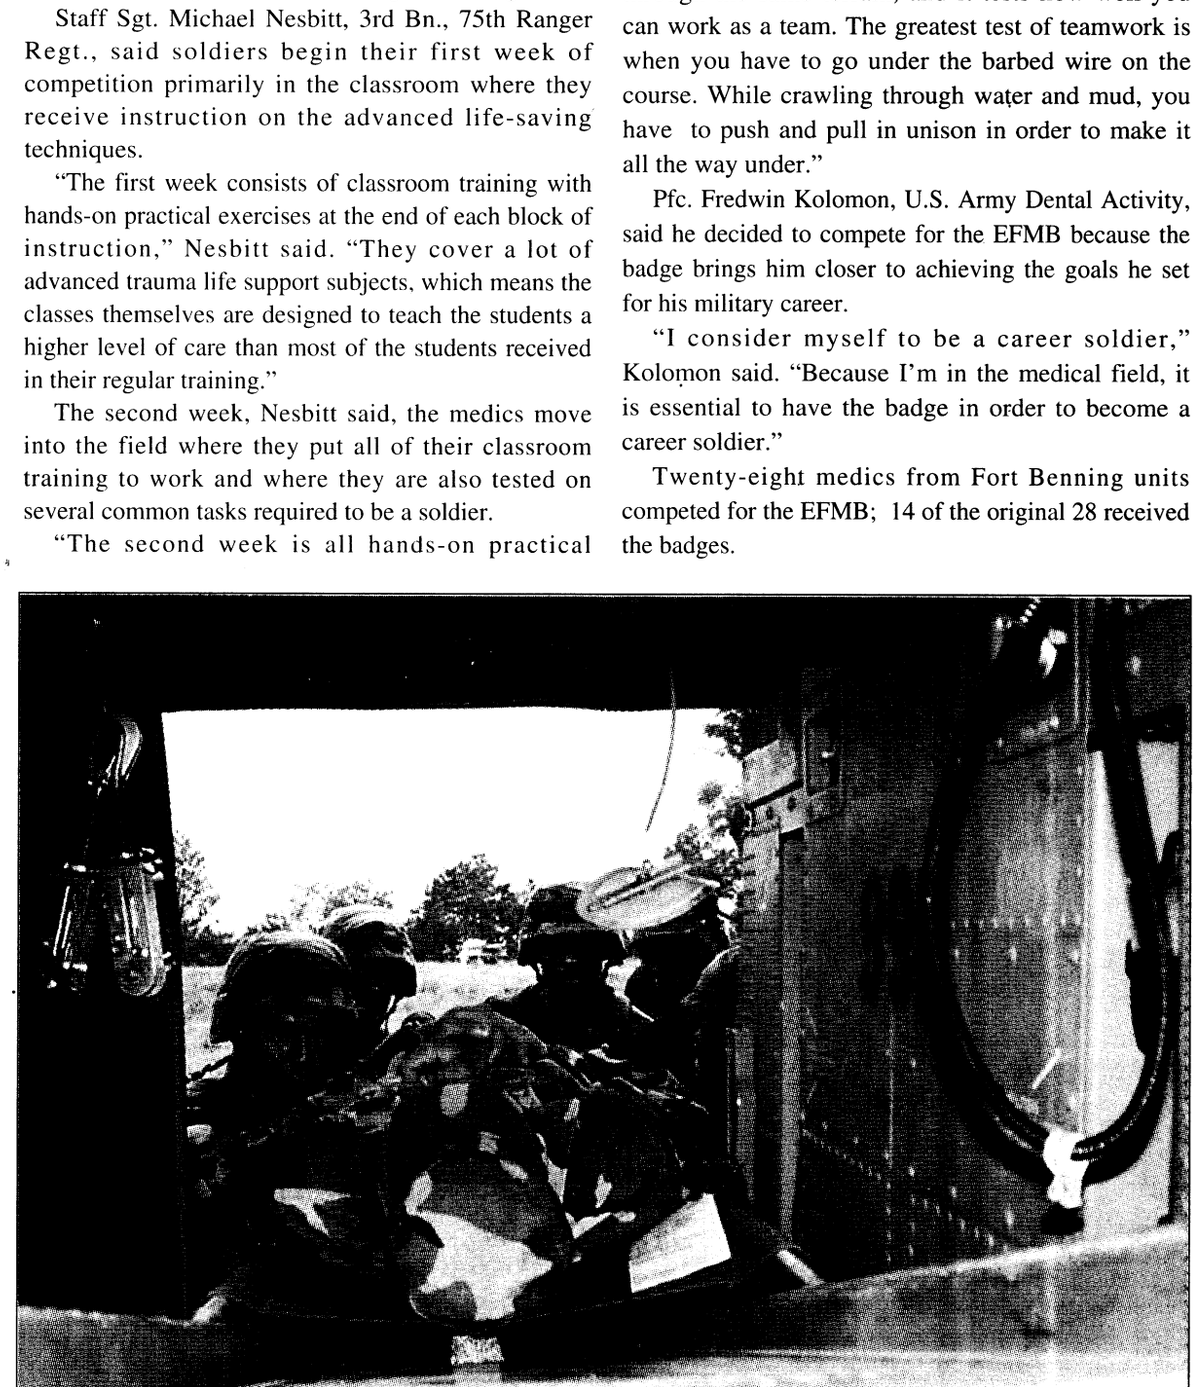
The second week, Nesbitt said, the medics move into the field where they put all of their classroom training to work and where they are also tested on several common tasks required to be a soldier.

"The second week is all hands-on practical exercises," Nesbitt said. "We conduct a land navigation course with several different stations that test their skill level at the Yankee Road Land Navigation Complex. We also conduct exercises for patient extraction and treatment."

According to Cpl. Ron Henley, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 2nd Bn., 69th Armor Regiment, 3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division (Mechanized), the litter obstacle course provides some of the best training because it tests the medics both physically and mentally.

"It's a great course," Henley said. "The whole course is a great training exercise. It tests your endurance level because you're never moving through the same terrain, and it tests how well you can work as a team. The greatest test of teamwork is when you have to go under the barbed wire on the course. While crawling through water and mud, you have to push and pull in unison in order to make it all the way under."

Pfc. Fredwin Kolomon, U.S. Army Dental Activity, said he decided to compete for the EFMB because the badge brings him closer to achieving the goals he set for his military career.



"I consider myself to be a career soldier," Kolomon said. "Because I'm in the medical field, it is essential to have the badge in order to become a career soldier."

Twenty-eight medics from Fort Benning units competed for the EFMB; 14 of the original 28 received the badges.

IOBC students conduct four-day FTX

By Robert Gleckler
Infantry Officer Basic Course

Students in Infantry Officer Basic Course class 3-96 concluded a four day defense field training exercise on August 29 at Bush Hill training area.

It was one of a series of field training exercises new infantry officers participate in to learn the missions they will soon be conducting as infantry platoon leaders throughout the Army.

The students are members of Company B, 2nd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment (IOBC). IOBC trains infantry second lieutenants over a sixteen week period before sending them on to their units as platoon leaders. The twelfth week of training focuses on a light infantry company defense against a mechanized attack.

Capt. Tony Benitez, the trainer for Company B's 1st platoon, was the officer in charge of the week's training. "We conduct this training to give the students a better appreciation for the effort it takes to conduct the defense given a certain amount of time," Benitez said. "We explain the characteristics of the defense and how those characteristics apply to our terrain."

The training exercise is fit into a scenario in which U.S. forces are needed to defend the territory of the fictional island nation of Cortina against invasion from its Atlantican neighbors. The Atlanticans are poised to attack with mechanized infantry, and the Americans must prepare a defense to meet the threat.

A vital part of the training students receive involves planning defensive operations. The first portion of the field training exercise is devoted to selected students briefing their plan for the upcoming mission. The briefings are a way of showing the students just how much effort must go into an operation even before the first spade of dirt is lifted or the first reconnaissance is sent out.

The second portion of the training involves the actual preparation and conduct of the defense. The students, divided into four platoons, move into their positions under cover of darkness. Throughout the night and the following day the students adjust and strengthen their positions, prepare obstacles to turn, fix, or disrupt the enemy attack, and conduct reconnaissance and security patrols in the area to keep an eye out for the enemy and get a better look at the terrain.

Engineers are also called in to help with the preparation, and the small equipment excavator vehicle they bring helps cut down on the amount of time it takes to dig positions. By the time the attackers come the following morning, the students have a prepared defense waiting for them.

"It takes a lot of preparation, a lot of hard work," says 2nd Lt. Brian Cheripka. "It would be a lot more difficult without the engineer support. It takes a lot of man hours, not even counting obstacles."

Officers from allied nations who participated in the training also gave their opinions of the week's exercise. Capt. Tzmir Bako of Albania described the importance of the defense in his country.

"My country is small and very mountainous. It is well suited for the defense," Bako said. "I am very pleased to be training with the best army in the world."

Capt. Ahmed Fouad of Egypt, who fought in the Gulf War, described the realism of the attack on the last day of the training exercise. "It was like real war." Because of the artillery simulators and smoke and blank rounds firing, "You can feel the real feelings of war. It gives the platoon leaders more confidence."

At the conclusion of a short, vicious battle, the platoon trainers gathered their platoons for an after action review to discuss the week's events and lessons reamed. Although the training exercise lasted only four days, "We stressed the primary characteristics of the defense," said Benitez.

"By learning the characteristics and fundamentals, the students can apply them to numerous situations. Hopefully the training will serve them well."

Then it was time for the new infantry lieutenants to practice another aspect of their jobs as platoon leaders: account for and clean all your equipment.

Medical specialists deploy

By Donna Moore-Sturgill
63rd RSC Public Affairs Office

Reserve medical personnel from California left in support of Operation Joint Endeavor, from Fort Benning's Lawson Army Air Field, Aug. 17.

Approximately 200 physicians, nurses and medical specialists were mobilized from Los Alamitos, Calif., Aug. 19. The soldiers, members of the 176th and 2nd Medical Brigades, left to relieve medical personnel currently supporting the peacekeeping mission.

Their specialties include veterinary services, internal medicine, family practice, surgical, nurse practitioner, lab technician, medic and several others.

Despite the fact that these are not the first reservists to be mobilized for this effort, Lt. Col. John Hayes, a veterinary officer with the 109th Veterinary Detachment, 176th Medical Brigade, said they all had to make arrangements and concessions in their personal and professional lives.

"Initially I hoped I wouldn't have to go," Haynes said. "It created some problems for me as I am a supervisor in my civilian job, but I'm looking forward to it."

The medical specialists have been called to active duty to serve in various duty assignments for 140 days.

ACAP provides assistance

Army Career and Alumni Program

Onsite Environmental Staffing continues to provide training and employment opportunities to soldiers, civilians, and family members who transition from the Army through the Fort Benning Army Career and Alumni Program.

The top five percent of Onsite Environmental's employees, based on job performance and hours worked, are military veterans. Recruiting transitioning services members has been so productive for Onsite that these applicants are given priority placement in the hiring process and the company has designated two full-time recruiters as base coordinators to work exclusively with military personnel. According to one of their base coordinators, Dave Wilmot, military veterans are particularly well suited for environmental projects that require highly skilled, motivated, and hardworking employees.

Onsite Environmental Staffing, based in Duluth, Ga., is the nations largest provider of engineering and field services personnel in the environmental industry. Employees respond to emergency environmental disasters or fill specialized hiring needs.

Because Onsite does not have managers at every project location, it requires employees who need little or no supervision, are dependable, and possess strong work ethics. Military alumni fit into this category. Veterans are also accustomed to mobilizing quickly and traveling long distances to perform critical operations, another important asset on Onsite.

Wilmot said that physical strength and maintaining a drug free lifestyle are essential for certain physically demanding positions such as hydroblaster and demolition laborer.

The required fitness and drug screening tests cost about $400, and military alumni pass them — an important factor when the company tests thousands of applicants a year.

According to Wilmot, many military alumni possess loyalty, integrity, maturity, dependability, leadership qualities, and discipline. These intangibles are everything to a recruiter. Finding an employee who will show up for a job — on time and prepared — is his biggest recruiting challenge.

For almost three years, Onsite has been recruiting Army alumni by participating in job fairs and working closely with transition professionals on numerous installations.

This company has discovered an "untapped resource of qualified personnel" with the transitioning military candidates, Wilmot said. Onsite saves time and money with this recruiting initiative, and in turn, provides its environmental clients with the trained, mature employees they need.
