Post program prepares prekindergartners

By Lori Egan
Bayonet staff writer

With an apple for the teacher, Fort Benning Schools' new prekindergarten program started Tuesday, when more than 300 4-year-olds arrived at their neighborhood school for their first day of formal schooling.

The curriculum design prepares the youngsters for the educational process, said Kathy Einhorn, prekindergarten coordinator.

The program uses creative learning, not rote memorization to reinforce academic concepts, she said.

"Our program is the discovery program," said Peggy Gindville, a pre-K teacher at Herbert J. Dexter Elementary. "We let the children discover things; the teacher is the facilitator to learning."

Fort Benning Schools selected the High/Scope program for its pre-K program. This is a curriculum used throughout Georgia and in the majority of the federal school system with pre-K programs, Einhorn said.

"We didn't want our pre-K program to be a watered-down version of kindergarten," she said, "so we chose a program that lets children learn in small and large groups and one which also uses independent work periods during the day."

This program is not as structured as most kindergarten programs, she said.

The children plan, do and review, which means they will make plans about what they work on during part of the day — be it prewriting activities or drawing on one of the class' computers or playing in the housekeeping center.

High/Scope research indicates that as the planning phase gets longer and more complicated and the children are able to follow through with their plans, academic concepts are being reinforced through key experiences.

Some of the High/Scope preschool key experiences include:

• Language and literacy — activities that fall into this category are describing objects, events and relations; dictating stories; writing in various ways

• Initiative and social relations — making and expressing choices, plans and decisions; expressing feelings in words; dealing with social conflict; solving problems encountered in play

• Seriation — comparing attributes; arranging several things one after the other in a series or pattern and describing the relationship

• Number — comparing the numbers of things in two sets to determine more, fewer and same number; counting objects.

These are critical skills for children to learn and are prerequisites for academic learning, Einhorn said, and our program teaches children in a fun way.

The children learn while playing in the housekeeping center, pouring sand at the sand table or decorating a gingerbread man, Gindville said.

The first day went by quickly and smoothly, Gindville said.

"I think the children were ready for today because we had the open house last Friday," Gindville said. "The children had an opportunity to come in and meet me and get comfortable in the classroom with their parents nearby and then talk about school over the weekend."

This is a child-oriented program, Gindville said.

"This afternoon when we decorated gingerbread men, one little boy wanted to talk about facial features — so we did," she said. "When a child brings something up, we discuss it."

Camille Hood, whose daughter, Gabrielle, attends the pre-K program at Morris R. McBride School, said she and her daughter were excited the first day of class.

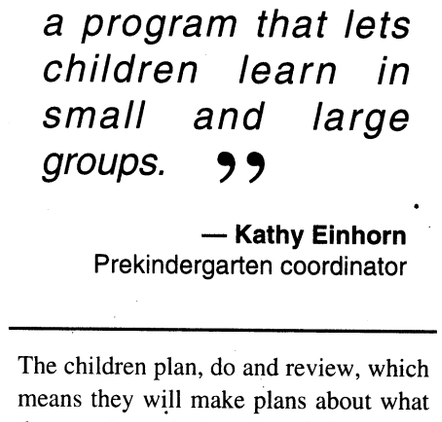
"This is a good opportunity for her to meet and play with other children and prepare her for kindergarten at the same time," Hood said.

"Pre-K will prepare Josh for kindergarten," said Theresa Milliken. "I hope he learns to recognize letters and write his name. I think the social interaction with children his own age is important, too.

"Fort Benning has an excellent program," Milliken said. "Where we were before, I wouldn't have enrolled him in that program."

A lot of planning went into making the pre-K program successful, Einhorn said, from interviewing 20 highly qualified teachers for nine preschool teaching positions to starting the program on the short day of the week.

A pre-K parent meeting, planned for Monday 7 to 8:30 p.m. at Edward A. White School, 300 1st Division Road, informs parents about the program. This is also an opportunity for parents to meet the teachers,



Neighborhoods elect mayors, vice mayors

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Fort Benning residents elect mayors and vice mayors Sept. 19 and 20.

Individuals interested in volunteering time and energy to the quality-of-life program can submit applications through Sept. 13. Applications may be obtained at the Youth Services Center in Building 1056, the U-Do-It Center in Building 385, all post child development centers and all area community life centers as well as the Installation Community Life Office, located in the Family Unit Network Center, Building 359, directly behind the Red Cross Building at the corner of Vibbert Avenue and Ingersoll Street.

Although each post community has one mayor and vice mayor, everyone living in the communities can help make a difference; the best way is to vote and be heard. Voting ballots will be delivered to each resident on or before Sept. 18 and will also be available at each voting area. Voting boxes will be located at all Community Life centers. Centers' operating hours during elections will be from 8 a.m. to 6 p.m.

For more information, call your area Community Life Office or the Installation Community Life Office at 545-2830, 545-2910 or 545-3069.

Commissary shoppers save with century-old policy

Defense Commissary Agency

Shoppers at military commissaries save, on average, about 29.7 percent of what they would spend for the same products at civilian grocery stores.

This is possible because the Defense Commissary Agency follows a policy established in 1826 of selling goods at cost — that is, at no profit to the commissary or to the government.

Most commissary shoppers know that a five percent surcharge is added to their grocery bill at checkout. This surcharge money goes right back into the stores, paying for new construction, renovations and upgrades, maintenance, supplies and equipment.

The largest share of surcharge funds is used for building new facilities and modifying existing ones. Commissary customers' surcharge dollars have paid for these projects since 1974. No tax dollars are normally used for these purposes.

Surcharge funds also buy supplies such as paper and plastic bags, packaging materials for meat and produce items and equipment like electronic scanners and scales. Overall, the surcharge is used to make shopping quick, convenient and pleasant — measures that encourage customers to continue using their commissary privilege, which in turn helps to generate more surcharge funds.

The first large-scale experiment with a surcharge came in 1879, when Congress established a surcharge on all commissary items — except tobacco — to help pay spoilage and transportation costs.

The positive effect of the surcharge can best be expressed in simple terms: while it provides funds to maintain the commissary, it simultaneously enables this valuable part of the military compensation package to be maintained at no additional cost in tax dollars.

From the customer's viewpoint, it is a cost that provides an important, tangible benefit, yet costs only half of what it did 100 years ago.

Several commissary construction and modification projects, costing more than $130 million, were accomplished in fiscal 1995. That's construction made possible by the surcharge.

ON POST

ITB to sponsor annual Spouses' Night Out — The Infantry Training Brigade sponsors its annual Spouses' Night Out Sept. 30 at the Sand Hill NCO club.

The ITB invites all ITB spouses and their friends to participate in the festivities, including dinner and a fashion show, followed by bingo games. Local merchants will donate door prizes such as movie tickets, make-overs, gift certificates and dinners at local restaurants. Also, participants receive an opportunity to win craft items donated by each of the ITB battalions.

Social hour begins at 6 p.m.; the dinner and fashion show begin at 6:45 p.m. and bingo starts at 8 p.m.

The evening's proceeds go to a charity chosen by spouses.

The $5.75 tickets include dinner and two bingo cards. To make reservations, contact your Family Support Group leader by Sept. 20.

For more information, call Nadine Norton at 687-9143.

Center accepts child care applications — McGraw Child Development Center seeks applications for part-day preschool, which began Tuesday.

The center provides two programs:

- Tuesday and Thursday — for 3-year-olds
- Monday, Wednesday and Friday — for 4-year-olds

Classes begin at 8:30 a.m. and end at 11:45 a.m. The sponsor's earnings determine fees.

The center, located in Building 11304 on Custer Road, near I-185, includes the National Association for the Education of Young Children guidelines in its program.

For more information, call Earnestine Neal or Huguette E. May at 544-2521.

Naval Institute seeks essay contest entries

U.S. Naval Institute

Annapolis Md. — The U.S. Naval Institute seeks entries for its 117th annual Arleigh Burke Essay Contest.

Prizes will be awarded for the top three essays. First prize earns a lifetime membership in the Naval Institute, a Gold medal and $3,000. First honorable mention wins a Silver Medal and $2,000. Second honorable mention wins a Bronze Medal and $1,000.

Essay topics must relate to the objective of the U.S. Naval Institute: "The advancement of professional, literary and scientific knowledge in the naval and maritime services, and the advancement of the knowledge of sea power."

The essay must analyze, argue, persuade or interpret, not merely offer an exposition, a personal narrative or report. The editorial board of the institute will judge the essays.

Essays must be original, must not exceed 3,500 words, and must not have been previously published. Essays must be submitted exclusively to the Naval Institute, with the U.S. Naval Institute having first publication rights. An exact word count must appear on the title page. Direct all entries to: Publisher, U.S. Naval Institute, 118 Maryland Avenue, Annapolis, Md. 21402-5035. Essays must be postmarked on or before Dec. 1.

The name of the author shall not appear on the essay. Each author shall assign a motto in addition to a title of the essay. This motto must appear on the title page of the essay in lieu of the author's name, along with the essay title and on the outside of an accompanying sealed envelope, which will contain the writers name, address, telephone number, Social Security number and short biography.

The Naval Institute will present awards to the winning essayists at its 123rd annual meeting of the membership of the naval Institute in Annapolis, Md., in April. Award winners will be notified in February, and all other authors by March.

All essays must be typewritten, double-spaced, on paper approximately eight and one-half inches by eleven inches. Submit two complete copies. If typed on a computer, please also submit an IBM-compatible disk and specify software used.

The Naval Institute will publish the three prize-winning essays in "Proceedings," and may also publish some essays not awarded prizes. Writers will be compensated at the rate established for purchase of articles.

Q. I bought a brand new car seven months ago. Three weeks after I bought it, it started having problems. I took the car into the dealer to have it repaired. When I got the car back, the problem still existed. Since then I have taken the car back about ten times to have it repaired. I'm sick of this lemon. Can I get my money back?

A. It depends. The Georgia Lemon Law applies to new cars only and not used cars. Certain eligibility requirements need to be met before you will be covered under the lemon law.

First, the noted defect occurred within the first 12 months or 12,000 miles of ownership. Second, you took the car in for a reasonable number of repair attempts to give the dealer a chance to repair the automobile. The defect under complaint must create a serious safety defect or a condition that substantially impairs the use, value or safety of the automobile.

Once you have met these preliminary requirements, move on to the next step. After making a reasonable number of attempts at repairing the car, send a written statement to the manufacturer by certified mail, return receipt requested.

This letter notifies the manufacturer that you have attempted to have the car repaired several times and are now giving him or her a final chance to repair the defect. Caution: Make sure you send the letter to the car manufacturer and not the dealership.

The manufacturer then has seven days after receiving the letter to respond. In his or her response, he or she must designate a reasonably accessible repair facility for the final attempt to repair. You, the consumer, must deliver the car to the designated facility. Upon delivery, the manufacturer has 14 days to correct the defect.

If you receive no response or the defect continues, take the next course of action. If you purchased your car, you can request the manufacturer either replace or repurchase the vehicle. If all else fails, you may apply for arbitration through the Georgia informal dispute settlement program.

Each notice and letter sent requires that certain information be included. An attorney will be able to provide you with all the information that must be submitted and additional nuances faced if you leased your car.

If you have questions concerning the Georgia Lemon Law, call the Office of the Staff Judge Advocate to make an appointment to see an attorney. For more information, call 545-3281.

USAIC Public Affairs Office

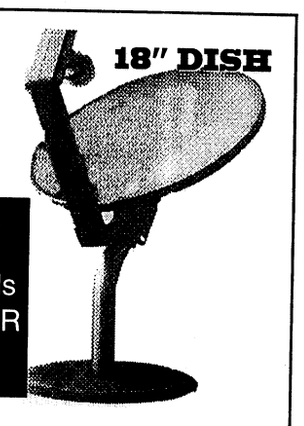
The Department of Defense recently switched to a new health care program for the Army, Navy and Air Force.

Representatives from Martin Army Community Hospital and Humana Military Health Services provide Tricare information to soldiers, retirees and families.

Many eligible beneficiaries show concern about the change and how it will affect their care. Following are two of the most commonly asked questions.

How do I know which physician to choose for my primary care manager? Will I be able to change my selection if I am unhappy with my choice?

A Tricare provider directory will accompany the Prime enrollment form. At the current time beneficiaries who reside within the designated service area (approximately 30-mile radius) of the military treatment facility will have an option to choose a MACH primary care manager as indicated in the directory. Tricare beneficiaries whose residences identified to be outside of the 30-mile radius (but are within the historical 40-mile service area of the military installation), may have an opportunity to select a civilian PCM in certain areas. The Tricare Service Center which may be contacted at (800) 444-5445 will update the provider directory as the network development changes. Take a moment to review the MACH commander's letter in the front section of the Tricare provider directory for additional information regarding implementation of the Tricare program at MACH.



If I enroll in Tricare Prime and select a Martin Army Community Hospital primary care manager, will I have to pay for my visits at the military hospital?

The only charges a beneficiary will incur at MACH are the nominal daily subsistence fees for an inpatient stay. The current rate is $9.70 for each day of hospitalization for family members of active duty and retirees; active duty and retired officers are charged $4.75 per day of hospitalization.

POTENTIAL POWER

Genuine encouragement empowers people to succeed

By Vern E. Jordan II

reflections

A story about two small boys who went into a dentist's office goes like this: One said, "I want a tooth pulled, and I don't want any gas. I don't want it deadened because I'm in a hurry."

"Well," the dentist said, "You're a brave little boy. Which tooth is it?"

The boy turned to his smaller, silent friend and said, "Show him your tooth, Albert."

Albert's friend provided encouragement that comes from moral support. One who encourages others provides a great thing. Sometimes our encouragements may require more sacrifice to be effective.

The dictionary defines encourage: "to inspire to continue on a chosen course, to impart courage or confidence; to give support to; to raise the spirits."

The Greek (dictionary) defines encouragement: to urge forward; a calling along side; and, to comfort.

Encouragement results from genuine belief in another person and his or her potential to be successful — in overcoming failures or grief or whatever discourages us. Most people enjoy it when someone believes in and expresses faith in them.

Joses, called Barnabas, possessed this kind of faith in others. He received this nickname from the disciples. It means, "son of encouragement."

When others avoided Apostle Paul for fear of persecution, Barnabas introduced him to the believers at Antioch. There Paul's missionary career began.

Who do Christians consider more successful in the first century than the Apostle Paul? When a young and frightened John Mark ran away during a missionary journey, Barnabas gave him a second chance. Paul's impatience with the youth later changed, and Paul asked for his assistance.

Sometimes we need the person who believes in us to urge us forward. A professor in a small New England college adopted a wise plan early in his teaching career. Whenever he discovered a student discouraged about his work, the teacher gave that student a mark better than he really deserved. He also made sure the others in the class knew about the grade.

"Almost invariably," the professor said, "the student perks up and earns that kind of mark the next time. It's a sly, little secret … but it works magic."

God possesses that kind of faith in us. Demonstrated by his grace in forgiving our sins, God shows that he still believes in us, and we need not give up on ourselves.

A man named Carlyle Marney tells of the delightful 5-year-old boy who came by his house each evening for their daily" rough-house and wrestling" appointment.

One day the vigorous little chap assaulted him — hip and thigh and teeth — until, in exasperation, the older battler rolled his 200 pounds over onto the younger one's 40 pounds and pinned him to the floor.

Then, with eyes wide open, fists and teeth clinched as if in mortal combat, struggling against overpowering odds, the 5-year-old warrior said, "Even when I'm on the bottom, I'm winning!"

If this young boy keeps that kind of attitude, he will never be defeated — at least not for long.

Who can you be an encouragement to today? Who can you believe in ? A spouse? A son or daughter? A friend? Yourself? Encourage others.

Faith in God calms worst fears

reflections

A common phrase, "You can run, but you can't hide," reminds us that we can't run away from problems, difficulties, God, spouses and anything else that requires us to act responsibly and unselfishly. Still, it doesn't keep some of us from trying. We run as if we can hide.

Our propensity to run from responsibility seems more typical of this generation than those of the past.

Some years ago I pastored a small church where a good number of visitors came to worship each week. I noted that most of them were single mothers with children. Most of these mothers were single because their husbands had abandoned them. The most common reason given was unemployment; the men would loose their jobs, and then abandon their families. They didn't want to accept the responsibility of taking care of themselves and their family, so they decided just to take care of themselves.

Our attempts to run from God are particularly perplexing. After all, where can we run to hide from God? Still, we try to run from him, partly because of the kinds of things that God requires: honoring our fathers and mothers, loving and serving our spouses, serving and loving others, being generous with our time and resources to benefit others, and so on.

All of these qualities and more are the natural result of living life in a way that is pleasing to God. But the selfless effort and acknowledgement of our responsibility toward one another and to God is a price too many of us are unwilling to pay.

The problem is that, when we attempt to avoid the responsibility of living for God, we also avoid the benefits of living for him. We cut ourselves off from the one who is best able to see us through the problems and troubles we face.

In Psalm 139, we see that God knows each of us intimately.

"O Lord, you have searched me and you know me … you are familiar with all my ways … before a word is on my tongue you know it completely … you created my innermost being, you knit me together in my mother's womb, I praise you because I am fearfully and wonderfully made. All the days ordained for me were written in your book before one of them came to be."

God created each of us. We are all unique and infinitely valuable to him. He knows us intimately. When we do not seek him — the only one who can truly change any situation, and the one who knows us best — we cut ourselves off from the only one who knows how to help us in any situation.

The psalmist also notes the absurdity of trying to run from God.

"Where can I flee from your presence? … If I go up to the heavens … or in the depths, you are there … If I settle on the far side of the sea, even there your hand will guide me." (Psalms 139:7-10)

God is all-powerful and ever-present. He is greater than our problems, and he is greater than us. He is God, and we are not. That is why we can seek him for answers to things that trouble us, and why we should seek to live lives pleasing to him.

When we really consider the greatness of God, we will naturally respond as the psalmist does: "…Search me, O God, and know my heart; test me and know my anxious thoughts. See if there is any offensive way in me, and lead me in the way everlasting." (Psalms 139: 27 NIV)

I believe that if we are responsible and work through our problems, we will turn to God, the only one who knows our "anxious thoughts" — the things that stress us out; the things we fear — and seek him for the answers that we really need. Maybe then we will be able to face responsibilities that confront us, rather than running away from them.

Catholics to celebrate Catechetical Sunday

By Phil Reilly
USAIC Chaplains Office

Catholic churches throughout the country will celebrate Catechetical Sunday Sept. 15.

Everyone involved in the Confraternity of Christian Doctrine programs will be commissioned as catechists. Catechist is rooted in the Greek verb "katechein" meaning to resound or to echo. Catechists are those who echo the word of God in CCD programs.

The first society of Christian doctrine was established in Rome under Pius IV during the time of the Council of Trent, between 1545 and 1563. It was an organization formed to provide religious education for adults and children who had never taken part in any formal catechesis. Pope Pius X was a strong advocate for the renewal and extension of the confraternity. In 1905 he mandated the establishment of CCD in every parish to counteract the decline in religious knowledge, and to provide religious education for children attending public schools.

In the United States, Edwin V. O'Hara, bishop of Kansas City and organizer of the National Catholic Rural Life Conference, was a zealous supporter of the CCD. He served as chairman of the episcopal committee of the CCD and established the National Center at the Catholic University of America in 1935.

CCD is most widely known for providing religious instruction for elementary school children who do not attend parochial schools, but it provides catechesis for all stages of life, including religious vacation schools, correspondence courses, high school and college sessions, and adult theological education.

va q&a

Department of Veterans Affairs

Editor's note: Following are representative questions answered daily by Veterans Affairs Counselors. Full information is available at any VA office.

Q. — I am in the process of obtaining a divorce. Can my divorced spouse require me by court order to maintain her as a beneficiary of my VA life insurance policy?

A. — Under your government life insurance contract, you have the right to designate or change a beneficiary at any time. You can do this without the knowledge or consent of your designated beneficiary or beneficiaries. However, all change requests must be provided to the VA in writing.

Q. — Can premiums on my National Service Life Insurance policy be waived if I become totally disabled?

A. — Yes. NSLI policy holders who become totally disabled before their 65th birthday and are likely to remain so for six or more months are entitled to waiver of premiums. You may contact VA toll-free at 800-669-8477 for an application and additional information. You may still file a claim if you are older than age 65, but the total disability must have started before reaching age 65.

Q. — I cashed in my VA insurance and now I would like to have it reinstated. Is this possible?

A. — No. Once a VA insurance policy is surrendered, it cannot be reinstated.

Q. — What is the maximum amount of loan value of my VA insurance?

A. — You may borrow up to 94 percent of the cash value of your policy.

Q. — If I die, how does my spouse go about collecting on my Veterans Group Life Insurance Policy?

A. — The beneficiary should notify the Office of Service member's Group Life Insurance by calling its toll-free number, 800-419-1473, to get instructions on filing a claim and the documentation needed, such as a death certificate.

Q. — I am insured under Veterans Mortgage Life Insurance. At what age will my coverage end?

A. — Regulations mandate that coverage cease when you reach age 70.

Q. — May a veteran obtain a VA loan for the purchase of property in a foreign country if the veteran has permanently moved overseas?

A. — No. VA-guaranteed loans may only be approved for property located in the United States, but that does include property in U.S. territories and possessions.

Q. — I received a certificate of eligibility for a VA home loan. Does this mean that I have a guarantee of approval?

A. — No. While VA guarantees part of a home loan, the veteran must still find a willing private lender who is required to take into consideration the applicant's credit history and income.

Q. — Does VA's guarantee on a property mean the government is satisfied the house is structurally sound? We have found cracks in the foundation of the older home we bought last year and are concerned this could lead to future problems.

A. — No. VA's guarantee of the home loan is based on an appraisal, but the appraiser's job is not the same as a home inspector. VA affixes warning statements to this effect on the VA certificate of reasonable value. In new construction loans, VA inspectors ensure the construction conforms to the contract specifications. Home purchasers should make their own arrangements for professional structural inspection if desired.

Soldier Fun: Special Thanks to Corporate & Community AUSA Support

Taking care of soldiers is the most important activity of any successful military installation and community. In the tricommunity of Columbus, Phenix City, and Fort Benning, the Association of the United States Army serves as a focus for many very successful soldier support activities involving a myriad of community and corporate entities. Fort Benning and AUSA acknowledge the great support and extend special thanks to both corporate and community organizations.

What are the activities? They represent a variety of programs throughout the year that let soldiers know their service is appreciated. Included are:

• Baseball for Soldiers and Military Families. This was a creative new program cosponsored by AUSA and the Columbus RedStixx through the end of the 1996 baseball season. The generosity of RedStixx owner and AUSA second vice president, Charlie Morrow, provided all active duty personnel free admission to games with their military identification card along with their family members. Special AUSA nights were scheduled and sponsored by each subchapter. AUSA is grateful to Charlie Morrow and the entire Columbus RedStixx organization for their longstanding support of soldiers.

• Buick Challenge - Military Appreciation Day. The Professional Golf Association tournament and the local AUSA chapter co-sponsor the annual event at Callaway Gardens. The Buick Challenge Tournament honors all military personnel including active duty, reserve, National Guard, reserve, civilian employees and retirees of all military services. Included is free admission on Friday, the second day of the tournament. More than seven thousand military and family members participated last year. The Buick Challenge Tournament office headed by Bob Berry and other Buick leaders deserve special thanks for their support and appreciation of soldiers.

• AUSA Sports and Entertainment Program vice Operation Holiday. For more than 15 years AUSA provided a variety of activities for soldiers at Fort Benning who are unable to go home for the holidays. This year the program is being expanded to year round activities providing tickets for various sporting and entertainment events. A large number of corporate and civic organizations provide the support.

• Military Appreciation Week includes a week long celebration of sports and entertainment, a job fair and an Armed Forces Day picnic. Corporate sponsors make the week special and include a wide cross-section of the community. The AUSA Golf Tournament sponsors and prize donors for Military Appreciation week are listed to illustrate the extensive support.

• AUSA and Fort Benning are deeply indebted to the many corporate sponsors who contributed their time, money and merchandise. The caring spirit, concern and sincere interest in Fort Benning and those who serve the nation make this community special. It is the reason the region enjoys an unequal reputation throughout the Army for extraordinary support of soldiers and their families.

• AUSA provides extraordinary service and support for the Army and Fort Benning. New chapter programs are being developed under the "Sports and Entertainment" umbrella which will continue the tradition of soldier and family support. Both corporate and community support are the key to making the program work. Say thanks to AUSA and these sponsors for their great installation and Army support.

Youth Services extends registration — Registration for Youth Services football for players age 12, over 100-pounds, to age 15 extends until further notice.

Players must be present at time of registration for weigh-in.

Parents registering their children must have a copy of each child's current physical during registration.

Registration, open to youth family members of active duty and retired military personnel and Department of Defense employees, takes place Monday through Friday from 8:30 a.m. until 4:30 p.m. at Youth Services, Building 1056.

All children who participate must have a Youth Services card, which cost $20 per year, per family, and can be purchased at the YS administration office and the Main Post Youth Center, as well as all community outreach centers. All sports registrations are conducted at the Youth Services administration office.

SOA plans 5K run — In celebration of its 50th anniversary, the School of the Americas sponsors a 5K run Sept. 21 at 9 a.m.

The run, open to the general public, starts and ends at the Columbus Civic Center.

Registration for the run, which includes a Run of the Americas T-shirt, prior to Sept. 16 costs $8 and $10 the day of the event.

The top three finishers in each age group receive medallions, and all finishers receive certificates.

For more information, call 545-6675.

Punt, pass, and kick competition set — The Youth Services will conduct the National Football League Gatorade Punt, Pass and Kick Competition Sept. 20 on Blue Field beginning at 4:30 p.m.

Registration for the event began Sept. 3 and runs through Sept. 13.

The competition, open to boys and girls ages 8 to 15 who compete in separate divisions, is free. However, all entrants must possess a youth services membership card.

For more information, call 545-3070.

YS offers programs —Youth Services offers a variety of programs for children in tae kwon do, tumbling, piano and dance.

Fees for the classes range from $20 to $25 per month.

Registration takes place Monday through Friday from 8:30 a.m. until 4:30 p.m. at Youth Services, Building 1056, for youth family members of active duty and retired military personnel and Department of Defense employees.

All children who participate must possess a YS card, which costs $20 per year, per family, and can be purchased at the YS administration office and the Main Post Youth Center, as well as all community outreach centers. All sports registrations are conducted at the YS administration office.

Olympians meet President, senior Army staff

By Anna O'Leska
U. S. Army Marksmanship Unit

The U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit's 1996 Olympic shooters and other members of the unit who served as Olympic officials joined the U.S. Olympic team recently in Washington, D.C.

While in Washington, the athletes visited the Pentagon in Arlington, Va., where they met with senior Army staff members.

Sgt. Theresa DeWitt, who came in fourth place in women's double trap at the 1996 Olympics, spoke to the Army staff during the reception, thanking them for the support they gave to all the military athletes.

Army Chief of Staff, Gen. Dennis J. Reimer, congratulated the Olympians in the Hall of Heroes at the Pentagon and Secretary of the Army, Togo D. West Jr., presented the athletes with the commemorative coins.

DeWitt presented Commander of the U.S. Community and Family Support Center Brig. Gen. John G. Meyer Jr., with a framed memento of the Olympics. Speaking on behalf of her fellow Olympics teammates, she mentioned their gratefulness for the support provided by all the staff. Members of the World Class Athlete Program and organizers for all U.S. military athletes who participated in the 1996 Olympics in Atlanta attended.

"The trip was really impressive," said William Krilling, the USAMU international rifle coach. "The team had a standing ovation every time we walked into a room."

On the second day of their visit, the Olympic marksmen, along with the entire U.S. Olympic team, went to the White House to meet President Bill Clinton, his wife, Hillary, and their daughter Chelsea.

Wrapping up their visit to Washington, the Army Marksmanship Unit Olympians met with the Secretary of Defense William J. Perry and the Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff Gen. John M. D. Shalikashvili, who each gave the Olympians a congratulatory briefing.

Departing from the Pentagon, DeWitt said, "It was definitely an honor to meet the senior Army leadership and to be in Washington representing the Army as an Olympian."

Race needs 10-milers

By Jacqué Hill
Special to the Bayonet©

The Army 10-Miler will take place Oct. 13 in Washington, D.C. and all are invited to run, according to 10-miler coach, Lt. Col. Charles Hunsaker, deputy commandant, U.S. Army Physical Fitness School.

"The race is open to any military personnel," he said. "Family members can run in the race, but not on the team because it's a military only team."

Time trials for the 10-miler will be Sept. 15 at Santiago Fitness Center, Sand Hill. Anyone interested in trying out for the Fort Benning team should be at the trial area before 6:30 a.m. that day for registration. Tryouts start at 7:30.

This race concludes the final selection for Fort Benning's 10-Miler team.

"Our goal is to have the best team we can possibly have," he said. "There is a minimum of four to a team, but a fifth, or an alternate, may also run. Only the top four finishing times per team are used to calculate the team's average.

"We have three men already. We're really looking for a couple more strong men to run.

"For the female team, we have two women that ran on last year's team and we're anxious to at least come up with a couple more."

There is no fee, nor are there separate age groups for the Washington race. According to Hunsaker, the only requirement for participation on Fort Benning's 10-miler team is that the runner be an Army member assigned or attached to the installation.

For further information about the Army 10-Miler or to inquire about participating on the team, contact Hunsaker at 545-6382 or 545-6380, or Hazel Henry at 544-9595.

Bud Hilton of the 9-12 year old Vikings football team shows fast footwork around a cone in a ball-handling exercise during the conditioning phase of the Youth Services tackle football program. Youth Services concludes the conditioning phase today with opening day games beginning Sept. 21. The conditioning phase is designed to ready players for full pads practices and league play. During conditioning, players receive a series of agility, speed and stamina drills. A minimum of five days of conditioning are required prior to equipment being issued.

Shooters compete in CISM

By Paula J. Randall Pagan
USAMU Public Affairs Office

The U.S. Military Shooting Team completes their competition Saturday at the 1996 World Military Games in Skovde, Sweden.

The games, known as CISM, or Counseil International du Sport Militaire, started in 1948 as a way of bringing soldiers together from around the world to build friendly relations through athletic competition. More than 500 of the world's toughest military rifle and pistol shooters are competing at this year's match.

The U.S. Shooting Team, comprised primarily of shooters from the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit, is strong and ready to go, according to Robert Aylward, USAMU deputy commander.

CISM team members from USAMU include:

• International rifle shooters Stephen C. Goff, Glenn A. Dubuis, Robert E. Harbison, Webster M. Wright III, Matthew P. Suggs and Allana J. Balkam.

• International pistol shooters Rhonda L. Bright, Paul D. Johnston and Amy L. Szarenski

"This competition determines the world's best military marksmen," Aylward said.

Last year, the U.S. Military Shooting Team brought home one-third of the armed forces team medals — three individual and team Gold Medals, two individual Silvers and two Bronze Medals.

Post requires hunter safety course — Anyone born on or after Jan. 1, 1961, must attend an approved hunter safety course if they wish to hunt in Georgia, including Fort Benning.

The Georgia Department of Natural Resources Hunter Safety Course will be conducted Sept. 14 in Infantry Hall, Classroom 5, from 8:30 a.m. to 3 p.m.

Students must bring their Social Security numbers with them.

For more information, call Harley Chase at 545-4812.

Ga State Parks offers canoe trips — Georgia State Parks offers canoe trips for beginning and experienced paddlers at various parks.

Participants explore some of Georgia's most scenic waterways while on guided canoe trips.

Park staff explain basic canoeing techniques and interpret natural surroundings while leading canoers on day-long trips.

Paddlers with a sharp eye see beaver, otter, king fishers, great blue herons, turtles or other wildlife.

The $15 cost per person includes canoe, paddles and life preserver.

The parks offering these canoe trips include:

• Panola Mountain State Park, Stockbridge, Ga., Sept. 21. Call (770) 389-7801 to register.

• High Falls State Park, Jackson, Ga., Oct. 19. Call (912) 993-3053 to register.

The parks charge a $2 park pass fee per vehicle.

Outdoors women workshop set for Oct — The Department of Natural Resources, Wildlife Resources Division, offers a weekend Becoming an Outdoors Woman Program at the Eagle 4-H Center Oct. 4 to 6 in Eatonton, Ga.

The program aims to teach both beginners and those with outdoor experience the skills needed to participate in a wide array of outdoor activities.

The $125 cost for the weekend before Sept. 15 includes lodging, meals and use of equipment. The registration fee rises to $150 after Sept. 15.

The workshop accepts registration on a first-come, first-served basis. Contact the Wildlife Resources Division at (770) 918-6400 for more information.

Pistol club conducts ladies' course — The Fort Benning Rifle and Pistol Club will conduct a basic personal protection course Saturday at 9 a.m. on English Range.

The all-day course is open to the general public and includes a catered lunch.

The fee for the course is $38 with spouses of current Fort Benning Rifle and Pistol Club members receiving a 20 percent discount.

Participants must have a serviceable handgun, 150 rounds of serviceable ammunition, hearing and eye protection.

Club handguns for students without their own weapons are available at no cost on a first come, first served basis.

For more information, call Jim Graham at 689-3371.

Natural Resources Council to meet — The commanding general's advisory council on natural resources will conduct its annual public meeting Sept. 11 at 6:30 p.m., Building 4, Classroom 8. The agenda will include an overview of the game and fish program and an update on hunting and fishing regulations.

For more information, call Col. Thomas D. Richardson, at 544-2051, Ext. 253.

Pros fish deep with hard to catch bass

By Earl Bentz & Steve Price
Outboard Marine Corporation

When bass fishing turns really tough, most professional tournament anglers have a favorite lure they start using. Former world champion Larry Nixon is no different.

"If the bass just aren't co-operating for whatever reason, I put on a 3/16-ounce spinner bait with two gold willow leaf blades," said the pro angler. "It's a lure I can fish slow and deep, which is what you need when bass are hard to catch.

"You're going to have to work around cover, and this spinner bait lets me do that without getting snagged," he said.

The gold willow leaf blades are size three in front and size four on the end. This is a change from the willow leaf or Colorado blade combination many anglers use.

"When you have to keep a spinner bait down, the tandem willow leaf blades do a much better job," said Nixon. The Colorado blade, with its more rounded shape, actually creates lift so the spinnerbait is constantly trying to rise.

"It's a good combination when fishing around shallow cover, but when you're slow-rolling a small, light spinnerbait, you don't want any lift at all," he said.

The pro has used this particular spinnerbait many times during his career and can't begin to estimate how much money the lure has won for him. He does remember that it was directly responsible for one of his four Bass Anglers Sportsman Society MegaBucks victories and earned him $83,000.

"With that tournament format you're forced to fish water that has already been fished by as many as nine other anglers, so by the time you get there the bass have seen plenty of lures and generally aren't very aggressive," he said.

"That's why I like this bait. Not very many anglers use this particular blade combination so the bass haven't seen it very often," he said. "The vibration pattern is slightly different, and I can put it in places other spinnerbaits may not reach.

"When you slow-roll a spinner bait you're reeling the lure very, very slowly so the blades are just barely turning," Nixon added. "This allows you to keep the lure in the potential strike zone longer than a crankbait, but at the same time it gives you more visual attraction and more vibration than a jig.

"Besides all that, I simply have confidence in the lure," laughs Nixon, "and that may be the most important ingredient of all."

Angler offers tips to prevent line tangles

By Earl Bentz & Steve Price
Outboard Marine Corporation

They're called bird nests, but they're not made by birds.

In bass fishing, they're those awful, impossible-to-untangle line snarls that suddenly come off your rod when you're using open-face spinning tackle. To get rid of them generally means cutting your line, pulling your lure in by hand, and re-tying.

They're caused by one simple little error in casting, they are also very easy to prevent, said pro angler Guy Eaker.

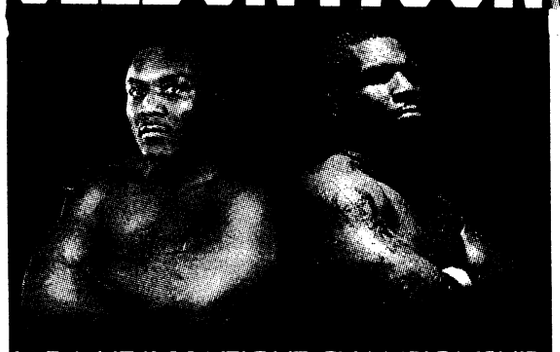
"What happens," Eaker said, a veteran tournament angler who uses spinning equipment frequently, "is that an inexperienced fisherman makes a long cast, then drops his rod and begins reeling back his lure.

"When he drops the rod, it creates slack in the line that loops itself loosely on the reel," he said. "After you do this constantly for 20 or 30 minutes of casting, the line suddenly shoots off all at once and becomes hopelessly snarled."

Eaker recommends a simple technique known as "feathering" to prevent this from happening. When done properly and consistently, a fisherman can cast all day without ever experiencing a snarl.

"The key is keeping tension on your line both during casting and retrieving," said the pro, "and you can do this with your index finger.

"When you grip your rod for casting, put the stem of the reel between your third and fourth fingers, so you have two in front of the spool and two behind," he said.



"When you make a cast, move your index finger slightly so it extends around the front of the spool and line touches it each time it rotates off the reel. This is known as 'feathering', and it slows the line just slightly," he said.

The next step, just before your lure reaches the water, is to touch the front edge of the spool with your index finger. This will stop the line since it can't rotate any further.

"As you start reeling, pick up the line with your index finger so the very first turn of the reel handle puts line down tightly on the spool," said the angler. "This is all it takes to prevent those huge bird nests."

Line twist is another problem with spinning tackle, and it also causes snarls. To prevent this, Eaker recommends taking off your lure and letting 20 to 30 feet of line unspool itself in the water while you're underway in your boat. A few minutes of letting the line ride like this in the water will remove the twist.

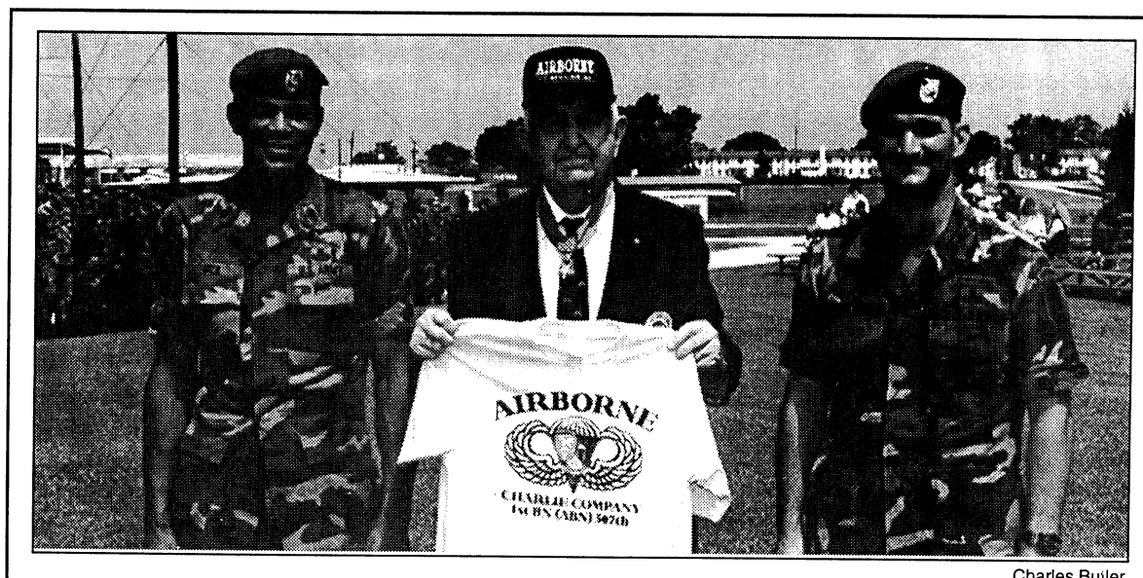
Commissary shoppers take a closer look at the Tide car.

Tidy

The Proctor and Gamble Company presented Fort Benning with a check for $2,000 for its efforts in recognizing Tide's 50th anniversary. The Commissary erected a birthday cake using 1,500 boxes of Tide, and Ricky Rudd's No. 5 Tide racing car was on display for race fans to see.



Workers use more than a thousand boxes to design Tide's birthday cake.

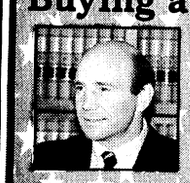
Budget Car Sales in Columbus is over-stocked and Forced to Sell Used Cars and Trucks as low as $300! For One Day Only! This Saturday, Sept. 7th.

COLUMBUS, GA - Budget Car Sales, one of West Georgia's largest used automobile dealers just announced plans to hold the biggest one day pre-owned sales event in their history. The event will take place Saturday, September 7th, 1996, beginning at 10 a.m.

According to Joe Kennedy, General Manager, "recent car sales events have left us severely over-stocked with late model low-mileage, extra-clean trade-ins. Rather than liquidate these vehicles through auctions or our normal wholesale outlets, we have decided to offer them to the public below market value! In addition to these trade-ins, we have recently purchased over 200 almost-new factory program cars, including: Lincolns, Mercurys, Buicks, Oldsmobiles, Chevrolets, Fords, Chryslers, Cadillacs, as well as Toyotas, Nissans, Isuzus, Hondas and Mazdas."



In an attempt to sell 40 vehicles in one day, Budget Car Sales Management staff has decided to slash prices on their entire inventory. David Christian, General Sales manager, said, "the owner has even ordered me to sell a few cars as low as $300!"Mr. Christian continued, "the average sale price will be anywhere from $1,000 to $3,000 less than our normal low retail price. The savings will be incredible!"

Budget Car Sales will have all vehicles on display in front of the dealership at least one hour early to give people time to look at all the vehicles before prices are revealed at 10 a.m. sharp. All the vehicles will be unlocked, and whoever is sitting behind the wheel at 10 a.m. when prices are put on the windshield, will be given first opportunity to purchase the vehicle at that sale price, Mr. Kennedy said, "this innovative approach to selling used vehicles should make it quick and easy for anybody to get a great car, at a very low price with no hassle. Pick it out, drive it if you like, you already know the price, what could be easier?"

Budget Car Sales will have local banks available to help with low cost financing. Most vehicles for sale have been serviced, inspected and qualify for extended service contracts. "Word of mouth is the best form of advertising, and if you sell someone a good car at a great price, they're sure to tell others where they bought it," Joe Kennedy said, expressing Budget Car Sales' store philosophies.

PICK-UP TRUCK MISHAP

11th Inf soldier loses life in accident

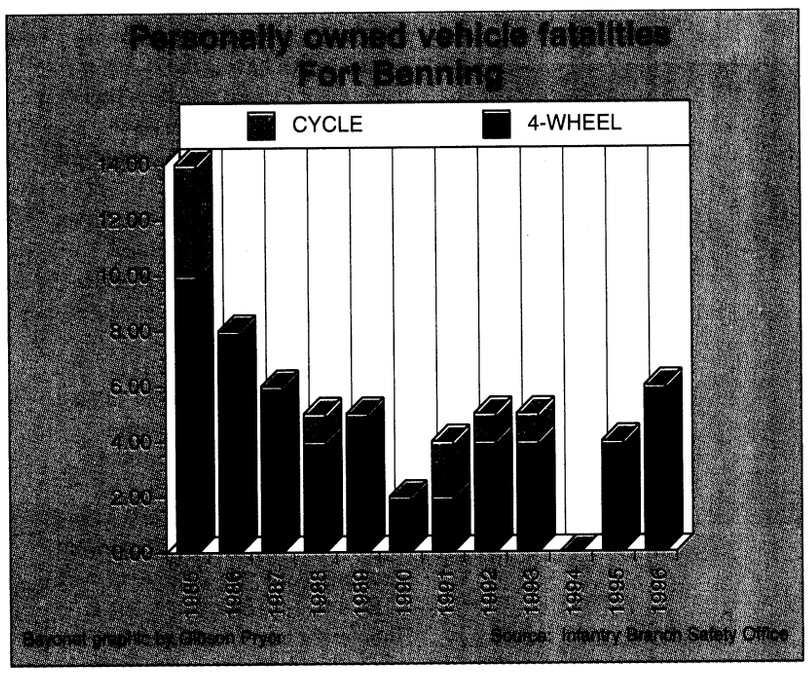
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Fort Benning tragically lost another soldier in a traffic accident early Wednesday morning.

Spc. William Thomas Nolan Jr., 30, of Company A, 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment died after falling from the back of a moving pick-up truck on Fort Benning at 1:55 a.m. Ambulances transported Nolan to Martin Army Hospital where doctors pronounced him dead as a result of severe head injuries.

Nolan and three other soldiers from his unit were returning to post in a 1984 Ford pick-up truck when the incident occurred about one-half mile inside the post. The cause of the accident is under investigation by the military police, as are all safety-related cases.

Nolan, stationed at Fort Benning for about two years, worked at the Briant Wells Field House. He was married with three children and called Cincinnati, Ohio, his hometown. Fellow soldiers and friends will gather at a memorial service at The Infantry Center Chapel today at 2:30 p.m.



Commanding General Maj. Gen. Carl F. Ernst said he was saddened by the news of this loss and emphasized the importance of vehicle safety on and off duty.

"We go to great lengths to protect our soldiers during training," Ernst said, "but once they get in the POV, they're at the greatest risk for being killed." As a result, Ernst has called for a renewed safety awareness effort across post.

According to Safety Manager Regis Beighley, it's the simple, habit-forming practices that can save your life, such as wearing road guard vests and taking time to buckle up.

"The best safety feature we've had in vehicle safety is the seatbelt," said Beighley, "but it only works when you wear it."

To determine how well you drive, Beighley offers an automated risk assessment program. The computer program assesses whether you are at risk of causing a POV accident. It also offers measures to reduce personal risk. For commanders who want more information, contact the Safety Office at 545-7900.

Beeper bearers beware

By Lisa M. Hibbert
Bayonet staff writer

Beeper bearers beware. Phone numbers beginning with an unfamiliar area code prove costly to the unwary.

Numbers starting with 809 began appearing on beepers nationwide, prompting pager users to return what appears to be a domestic call said Larry Cox, a GTE spokesman. Instead, they end up calling the Caribbean island of Antigua and getting billed up to $25 a minute.

The prefix is misleading because the greater Caribbean area, which falls under the 809 area code, does not require the 011 international code, Cox said.

Many soldiers on post have private pagers and as well as pagers through the Fort Benning paging system. "If soldiers receive a page with a strange area code and are uncomfortable with returning the number, they are advised to call their supervisors or they can call me at 545-5965 first," said Peggy Ozley, Fort Benning's mobilization planner.

Soldiers may also call the local telephone operator and inquire about area codes before returning calls, Cox said.

Some calls go to the "Impotency Infoline," while others reach the "Gay Hot Party Line." One line informs callers, "Oh, you have been set up by your friends to call this line," then invites them to join "chat rooms." The recording also requests pager numbers of others so callers "can set up" their friends too.

It is not known how pager numbers are being obtained by such operations, but, Cox said, he thinks automated dialing machines call numbers in sequence, detecting whether the call is answered by a voice or a pager. When it's the latter, they then enter the 809 number and initiate the page.

"To operate within the confines of the law, 900 numbers begin with a preamble, which informs callers they've reached a 900 number, and allows them eight seconds to hang up before the billing begins," Cox said. "This is not required of companies that operate outside of the United States."

Many of the calls appear to be emanating from customers of two entities: Boat Phone Antigua Ltd., a mobile phone company, and Cable and Wireless West Indies Ltd. in the British Virgin Islands.

GTE will credit its customers' bills if they call to complain, but only for the first instance, Cox said. However, the long-distance carrier may pursue you for the charges as this is beyond the jurisdiction of the local carrier.

OCS rededicates hall

By Brian R. Voller
Bayonet staff writer

The 3rd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment, Officer Candidate School reopened the doors to the OCS Hall of Fame, named in honor of 2nd Lt. Thomas W. Wigle, Sept. 6 after almost 10 months of redesigning and refurbishing the building.

Lt. Gen. John Miller, deputy commander of Training and Doctrine Command, Lt. Col. Scott L. Armbrister, commander of OCS, Diane Czar, Wigle's daughter and Suzanne Vankerschaever, Wigle's granddaughter cut the ribbon to the newly remodeled Wigle Hall.

As part of the rededication ceremony Medal of Honor recipient, retired Col. Robert Nett, placed a Medal of Honor on a painting of Wigle that will be on display inside the OCS Hall of Fame, and the current class of officer candidates presented Czar and Vankerschaever with a plaque commemorating Wigle's memory.

Armbrister said when he started working as the commander of OCS, the condition of Wigle Hall concerned him and he made it a high priority to renovate the facility.

"When I walked around the area of Wigle Hall after I arrived here, it didn't take me long to decide the building needed repair," Armbrister said. "I walked into the building and found the rug was in complete disrepair, the paint on the walls was chipped, the outside of building looked really bad and many of the pictures of past inductees were not there.

"I guess what really put it over the top for me was that there were almost 300 hundred pictures of OCS Hall of Famers that were not present in the building."

Armbrister said he felt the condition of Wigle Hall at the time was completely disgraceful and he decided to do something about it, looking into ways to refurbish the building.

Armbrister considers the renovations completed thus far as phase one of the process.

The renovations and improvements include the display of all 1,776 photos of past inductees, fresh paint inside and outside the building and new carpet and furniture. A 21st century computer system now stores the photos and biographies of almost every member of the OCS Hall of Fame, which is available to Internet users.

Armbrister said the renovations thus far cost $90,000. He said one of the biggest boosts for the renovation project came when Hugh Trumbull Adams donated $44,820 to the renovation project after being asked to do so by former OCS graduate and Hall of Fame inductee retired Col. Frank Hurray.

OCS candidates who volunteer their time during their senior phase of the school made almost all of the renovations, Armbrister said.

"The participation of the OCS candidates was absolutely critical to the completion of this project," Armbrister said. "Without their help, we wouldn't be where we are right now because I really have no labor force.

"We didn't force the candidates to participate in the renovations. This was each cycles' senior class project. They voluntarily wanted to contribute something to this institution. That's what so special about Wigle Hall right now. It was done with contributions and voluntary work."

Physical fitness experts to gather

By Jacqué Hill
Special to the Bayonet©

• For the conference agenda, see page A-3

The U.S. Army Physical Fitness School conducts physical training research as it pertains to soldiers and introduces its findings Armywide.

The second annual Battle-Focused Physical Training conference Tuesday and Wednesday at Fort Benning will help bring about the accomplishment of this portion of the school's mission.

Col. Jeanne M. Picariello, commandant, U.S. Army Physical Fitness School, outlined some of the school's goals for the conference.

"The second annual BFPT conference will address the human issue of the Force XXI soldier," she said.

Goals include sharing current research projects and results specific to human performance, providing a forum for leaders and Army exercise researchers to discuss training issues, reviewing the benefits and issues associated with gender integration specific to physical training and examining the clinical trends and medical concerns associated with conducting physical training across all age groups.

Dr. Louis F. Tomasi, chief, Research Physiology, U.S. Army Physical Fitness School, expects the school to meet these goals successfully.

"We're looking forward to having a good conference, bringing together the combatants as well as the research individuals for the benefit of the soldiers," he said. "It's an attempt by the researchers to share this information with our combatants so they can take the information and apply it, which is what the physical fitness school is tasked to do."

Some of the topics covered include physical training for pregnant women, physical training for retirees, issues for soldier performance in hot and cold weather, sleep deprivation, cognitive performance in special operations and the effects of choline on physical, mental and cognitive performance.

"Choline is a body fluid that is essential in normal fat and carbohydrate usage," said Tomasi, who has a doctorate in research physiology. "When it is not used, it results in irritation of the liver. It is used extensively in endurance training and because it's used in endurance training, people have been researching how it helps endurance."

The U.S. Army Research Institute for Environmental Medicine presents much of the research information discussed at the conference. The institute displayed this information, including nutrition, reducing foot blisters and training injuries, strength training on occupational performances of the genders and night fighting lab, among other topics, at the 1996 American College of Sports Medicine's annual conference.

According to Tomasi, some sources only recently released their research findings.

"Some of this information from West Point is only three weeks old," he said.

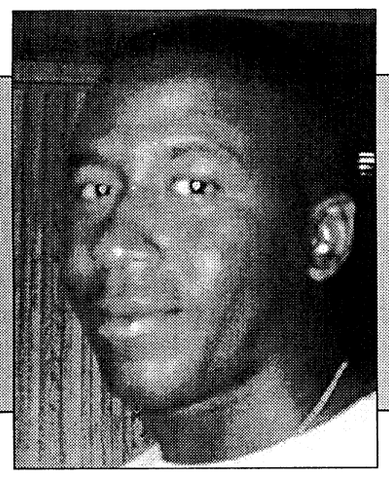
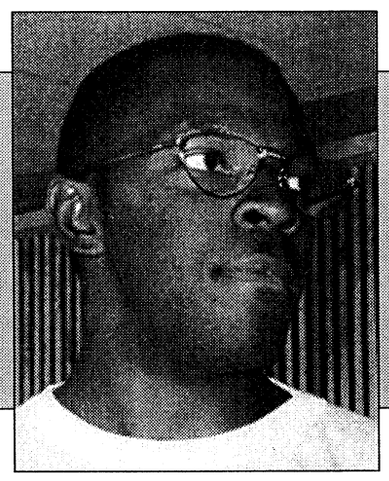
VARIOUS VOICES

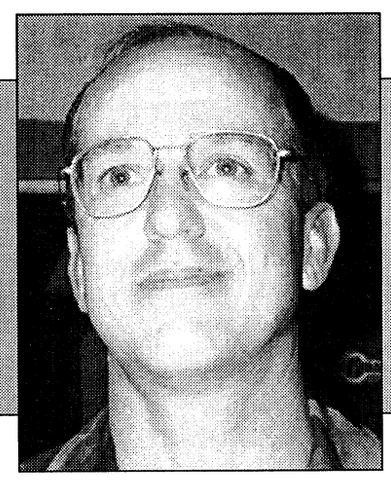
What should be done about people who ignore the no-smoking signs and regulations?



Staff Sgt. Yolanda D. Flemings, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment — "First offenders should be warned and their supervisors notified. Second offenders should be considered for some type of punishment."



Vicki D. Miracle, support agreements coordinator, Directorate of Logistics — "They should be removed, and they should go where they are supposed to smoke because we still have to pass through the area."



Sonya A. Powell, family member — "To be honest, they should be banned from smoking on government premises."

Staff Sgt. Lamarr S. Payne, Company A, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment — "I think some sort of action, such as UCMJ (Uniform Code of Military Justice) action, should be taken. If it's a law — some sort of fine or ticket should be imposed."

Sgt. Derrick D. Ross, Company A, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment — "They should be escorted off the premises or be fined."

Master Sgt. Robert Catherman, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment — "They should be initially counseled because it is disobeying a direct order. If it's continued, whatever action deemed appropriate should be taken."

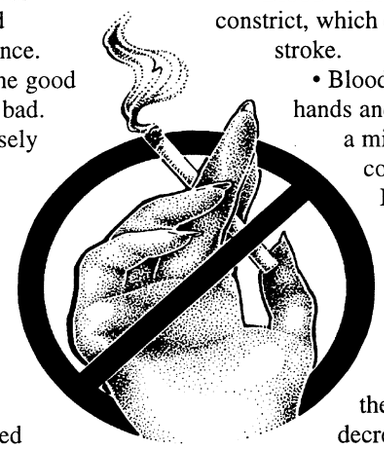
Smoking

Nicotine's risks, negative effects far outweigh benefits, positive results

By Brian R. Voller
Bayonet staff writer

I grew up with parents who smoked. Whenever we sat around the living room watching television, it didn't take very long before the room looked like a smoke screen — my eyes watered, my throat hurt and fresh air could not be found.



commentary

Initially, my parents' smoking caused me to have a really strong resentment toward people who smoked. But after witnessing several things, such as the multiple times my parents tried unsuccessfully to quit and my own trials with chewing tobacco, I stopped feeling resentment and started to give more understanding to a smoker's position.

I did some research into the ill effects of smoking to better relate why people might want to quit other than just telling them the smoke bothered me.

This article contains little known facts about what nicotine and what smoking really can do to your body.

In actuality, nicotine is not a completely horrible drug. According to Dr. Dean Ornish's Program for Reversing Heart Disease, nicotine calms you down and wakes you up; it improves memory, decreases anxiety, raises tolerance of pain, lifts depression, increases metabolism, reduces hunger and improves overall mental and physical performance. Of course, with the good always comes the bad.

If you look closely at all the good things about nicotine, you notice all the good effects last a short while, causing a person to increase their nicotine intake to maintain the desired effect. Thus a very vicious cycle begins that leads to what some people call a hopeless addiction.

The only thing long term about nicotine addictions is the long-term health problems that come with years of nicotine intake. Also, nicotine causes several types of cancer, heart disease and high blood pressure.

Basically, every cigarette a person smokes hurts his or her health. In Ornish's book he describes several short-term effects people subject themselves to every time they intake nicotine. Most people don't realize these effects hurt their bodies:

• Blood vessels to the skin constrict, causing a person's skin to wrinkle more quickly.

• Blood vessels to the heart constrict, which could lead to chest pain and heart attacks.

• Blood vessels to the brain constrict, which could cause a stroke.

• Blood vessels to the hands and feet constrict. At a minimum, this causes cold hands and feet. In worse cases, such as people with diabetes, this can cause gangrene and amputation.

• Blood flow to the sexual organs decrease. Studies by Dr. Irving Goldstein of the Boston University Medical School show that nearly two-thirds of impotent men smoke, almost twice the rate of the general population. He also found the number of cigarettes smoked decreased blood flow to the penis proportionately .

• Nicotine clearly decreases a person's sense of taste, touch and smell.

• Women who smoke are three times more likely to be infertile than nonsmokers. In men, smoking decreases sperm count and sperm motility.

• Over a long period of time, nicotine damages the lining of the arteries in your heart and throughout your body, causing blockages to form more readily, further decreasing blood flow.

• Nicotine, like chronic stress, causes your body to produce excess cortisol, which suppresses a person's immune system and increases the formation of arterial blockages.

• Nicotine increases the tendency of your heart to beat irregularly, increasing the risk of sudden cardiac arrest.

These are just some of the problems that come along with nicotine consumption, along with an endless series of diseases and other things.

In Ornish's book, he cites some staggering statistics about the ill-effects of smoking. More than 350,000 people die prematurely in the United States each year from smoking-related deaths, more than the total number of Americans killed in World War I, Korea and Vietnam combined. Medical experts attribute 30 percent of the deaths from coronary heart disease, or 170,000 deaths each year, to smoking.

Now, every smoker may not die of a smoking-related illness. Some smokers who live 80, 90 or even 100 years don't see a single sign of ill health. But to me, the risks outweigh the benefits, and I value my life too much to gamble with it. I don't have the guts to play Russian Roulette.

Smokers often invade nonsmokers' territory

By Linda Lee
Bayonet editorial assistant

Healthy, odorless, inexpensive and bothers no one. People who believe that are probably smokers.

commentary

It's been undoubtedly proved that smoking effects are unhealthy not only to the smoker but also to anyone else who has to put up with breathing in someone else's deadly habit. No one should be forced to put up with someone else's cigarette smoke. Yet every day, countless Americans do.

Recently, a medical report linked second-hand smoke to Sudden Infant Death Syndrome. I believe this could be possible. Cigarette smoke contains carbon monoxide, among other ingredients, and enough carbon monoxide can kill an adult, so why can't a small amount kill a baby?

I've heard smokers say they want to quit but can't afford the nicotine patches. What do they think cigarettes cost, nothing? In fact, service members and retirees get the patches free.

Ever been somewhere and a person walks by you and you smell the smoke on them and they're not even smoking? Their breath, body, clothes, car and home smell the same awful way. They can't smell it, but a nonsmoker can. They go in a restaurant and light up, and just one smoker ruins the whole area.

For the smokers who believe their smoke is not affecting other people, I have a suggestion. I'd like to see you, your family, including your children, put in a room. Have a few people light up a joint and smoke it. Now, do you think everyone in that room was affected?

Cigarette smoke affects everyone around it. Yet some smokers feel they have the right to smoke in the areas nonsmokers use.

I consider myself an ex-smoker and a second-hand smoker, because I quit and yet, I still inhale second-hand smoke.

There are places I won't patronize because I've learned there's smoke in them. I'd rather go somewhere else and get what I need. My health is not worth that item.

Nonsmokers live in and put up with a world where we are subjected to other people's ignorance and inconsideration when it comes to smoking. I wish I could live and work in a smoke-free world. I say put all smokers in one part of the world and all nonsmokers in another. Let's see who's healthier after a while.

Some nicotine addicts ignore no smoking signs

By Marc G. Turchin
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Follow the rules. Treat people as you want to be treated. Never lie and always tell the truth.

commentary

These are just a few guidelines our parents taught us as children that for many of us fell to the wayside when we grew up. We decided to conform to the rules we wanted to and not worry about the others.

For example, common sense tells you not to intentionally harm yourself, but millions of people do everyday by smoking cigarettes. In the process, some of these same smokers choose to smoke wherever and whenever they want — not paying any attention to the no-smoking signs posted around them, or smoking in an area knowing they're not supposed to.

OK, I'm not a smoker, and I'm not against people who smoke, as long as it doesn't bother other people.

Restaurants and employers go out of their way to have designated areas for smokers — in respect for the nonsmokers. Why should someone who doesn't smoke inhale nicotine-filled smoke when he or she doesn't have to?

Smoking is someone's right and anyone can smoke. But, what if someone stands in front of the doorway to your office blaring music you hate? This person's respect extends nowhere.

Nonsmokers constantly go through this type of warfare all the time when smokers start puffing away anywhere they please.

I don't mind because just about my entire family smokes. But, that's another story.

It all comes down to being fair and respecting other people.

When did following the rules become so difficult? My regiment promotes the motto, "Do the right thing." What happened to walking to the other side of the building or, in some cases, leaving the building so you can light up in the proper area?

Smokers complain "the areas are in the sun," or "there's no place to sit down." Waa! I say quit your moaning and crying. You chose to smoke, not me or the other nonsmokers. Then there's the complaint of, "Why do the smokers have go to a different area? Why don't the nonsmokers go somewhere else?"

That's the dumbest complaint of them all.

First of all, nonsmokers outnumber smokers. Secondly, if the nonsmokers take the walk to the break area, then they breathe in the second-hand smoke on the way back into the building.

Then there's the smokers who lie about smoking in the proper areas or in the building.

If smokers obeyed the rules in the first place, they wouldn't need to lie. Then when they get caught, they use the excuse, "It was just this once." Yea, right. They probably spent several times lighting up in this area and finally got caught. Smokers who break the law need punishment, but they normally get only wrist slaps.

More severe punishment seems to be the only answer to deter the would-be law breakers. How about this? If caught smoking in the building or in the wrong area, the smoker's on-post smoking privileges are taken away. Think of a smoker's workday without inhaling nicotine — eight or nine hours at a time with clean air. Imagine that. The days of people smoking at work will become a thing of the past. Oh well, I can still dream without inhaling death.

Littering presents another reason why people need to smoke only where they're allowed.

Next time walking into any building on post, count the number of cigarette butts on the ground or the sidewalk. Thank all the smokers for that addition to the environment.

Smoking leads to nothing good for smokers and the people around them. If smokers make the dumb choice to kill themselves early, by all means, let them get some more cigarettes and puff until their last breath.

But, for nonsmokers who need the fresh air around to survive, I'm asking smokers to be considerate and take heed to the lessons taught them as children. Follow the rules and treat people considerately, even if it means going out of the way once in a while.

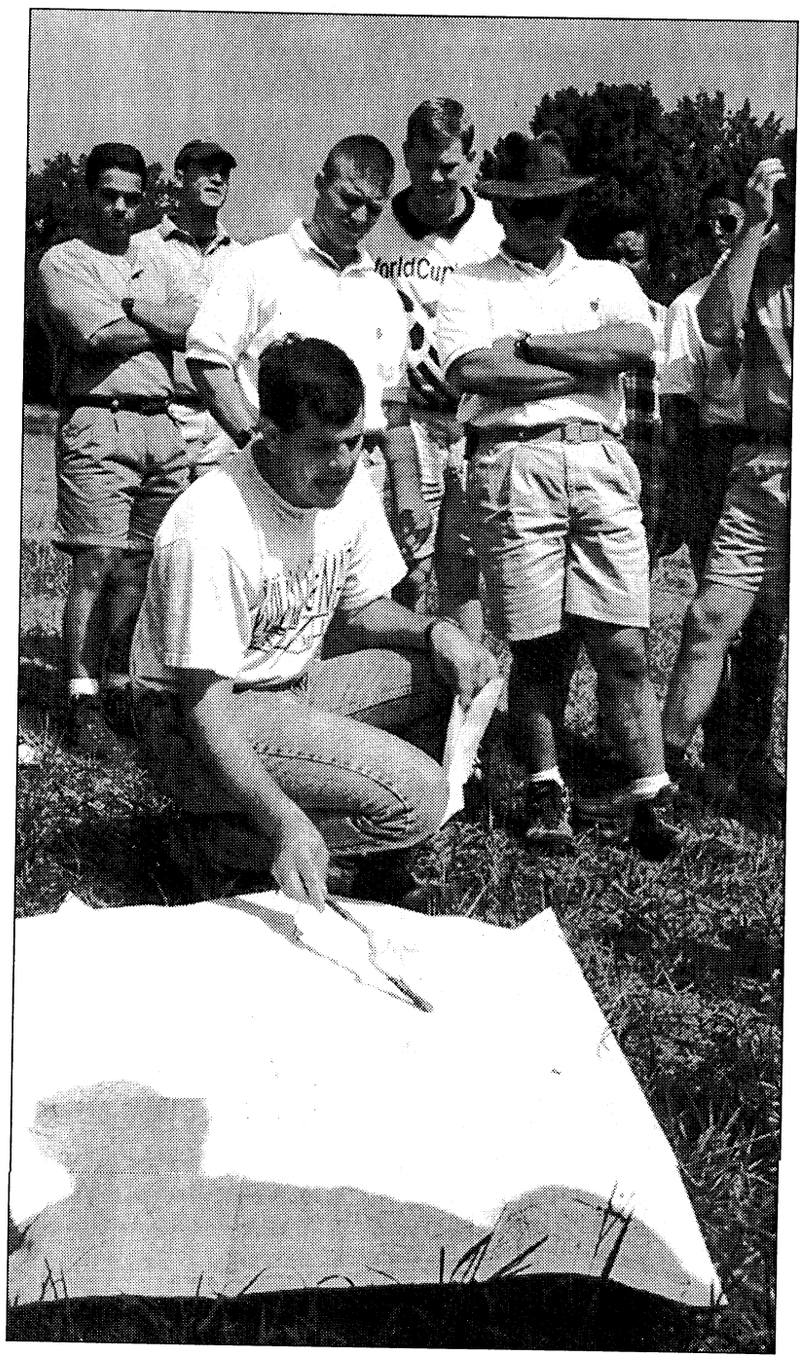
36th group continues professional development

By Michael E. Lynch
13th Corps Support Battalion

The 36th Engineer Group recently completed a staff ride to the Chickamauga Battlefield, continuing a series of lectures and presentations which make up the group's Officer Professional Development program.

For several weeks, the officers studied the battle of Chickamauga in order to better understand Army operations and to gain some historical perspective.

Col Thomas L. Bailey, commander of the 36th Engineer Group, outlined the importance of this form of study.



"The staff ride is an excellent tool to learn the craft of the professional soldier and is often used during the Command and General Staff Officer Course and the Army War College," he said.

Touring the battlefield for a staff ride provides more than just sightseeing. It provides a serious, detailed study of the tactics, techniques and procedures used during the battle, Bailey said.

"This is done using 20th century terminology to better understand the events, which are then analyzed to better understand the military art," said Maj. Robert Delassandro of the Combat Studies Institute, "We are looking for insights for the 20th century professional using historical examples."

The training for the staff ride started six weeks ago with reading assignments for all officers. Each officer prepared a short paper on one of the selected reading assignments and several made presentations.

Three weeks ago, Dr. Charles White, historian of the National Infantry Museum, presented a lecture and discussion, which offered an overview of the battle. This session included discussion of some of the people and equipment involved in the battle as well as some of the tactics used

Michael E. Lynch

Maj. Robert Delassandro of the Combat Studies Institute explains troop movements of the Battle of Chickamauga to the 36th Engineer Group officers.

The second session consisted of a series of presentations given by various officers in the group.

Other officers were assigned to brief the nine principles of war and their relation to the Chickamauga Battle. This proved to be an exceptional way to understand the profession of arms according to Lt. Col. Gerald Bates, Commander of 13th CSB.

"It's important for us as professionals to thoroughly understand the basic tenets of our craft," Bates said. "Applying the nine principles of war to actual historical examples is a great way to do that."

The trip to Chickamauga culminated the study program. The tour of the battlefield covered all of the major combat areas of the battle of Chickamauga and the subsequent battle of Chattanooga. After the tour, officers conducted an after-action review and analysis using the information and insights gained during the previous study. This analysis provides the primary learning experience for the officers.

New inductees enter Officer Candidate School Hall of Fame

By Brian R. Voller
Bayonet staff writer

Fort Benning's Officer Candidate School inducted 48 former graduates into its hall of fame Sept. 6 in Infantry Hall's Marshall Auditorium.

Maj. Gen. John M. Riggs, chief of staff for operations and plans, Headquarters, Department of the Army, and 1969 OCS graduate, spoke.

Riggs said OCS plays an integral part of the U.S. Army's officer developing system. He said the general officer ranks prove the quality officers OCS produces since OCS graduates comprise almost 20 percent of the general officers in the Army.

Eligibility for induction into the hall of fame requires an OCS graduate to achieve the rank of colonel, receive the Medal of Honor or distinguish themselves in their civilian occupations. This year's graduates include two U.S. ambassadors, one to Lesotho and one to Algiers.

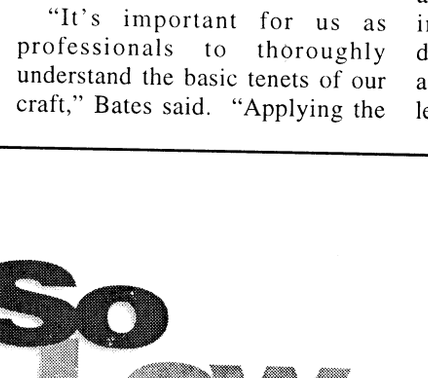
Col. James W. Parker, commander of the 7th Special Forces Group, Fort Bragg, N.C. said the induction highlights one of the biggest honors of his life.

"Being inducted into the OCS Hall of Fame means a great deal to me, " Parker said. "I was thinking back during the induction ceremony to when I graduated from OCS back in 1975. Of course back then, I never envisioned I would be a part of the hall of fame.

"But I can remember shinning my brass around Wigle Hall as a cadet, and I think about all the great officers who have passed through OCS. " he continued. "I'm really honored to be a part of the hall of fame. I can't think of any honor I've received that rank any higher than this one."

Col. Giles F. Crider, chairman of military strategy with the Army War College, said the honor of is ranks as one of his highest.

"Being inducted into the hall of fame ranks really high on my list of achievements," Crider said. "I think it ranks so high because without OCS all of the other accomplishments I've ever reached would have never been possible."



OCS inducted the following people into its hall of fame:

Barracks-dwelling soldiers should take pride in living area

Better Opportunities for Single Soldiers

Better Opportunities for Single Soldiers

For the nearly 4,000 single soldiers stationed on Fort Benning their quarters represent home away from home.

The Department of the Army allows soldiers the flexibility to decorate and arrange the room to his or her liking while maintaining cleanliness, safety, and proper accountability with respect to others, according to a U.S. Forces Command policy letter. The Army no longer requires soldiers to maintain a room in a stringent configuration once implemented by the standard operating procedures guidelines, said Spc. Michael T. James, former Better Opportunities for Single Soldiers president.

But the downside of these private and comfortable living environments, James said, is some soldiers' living standards have dropped below even the minimum requirements.

What can be done to ensure cleanliness and safety in soldiers' rooms? One simple word answers that question — "inspection."

Commanders and NCOs possess full authority and responsibility to conduct health and welfare and various other inspections to ensure order and discipline in single soldier quarters. This remains the same. With the Department of the Army standards respecting the privacy of soldiers, the NCOs now enforce stated standards and make frequent "checks" of existing facilities and soldiers' rooms based on demonstrated performance of each soldier. These "checks" keep soldier quarters in good order and safe to live in.

Question of the week:

How often can my room be inspected?

As often as necessary, with respect to privacy, to ensure proper health and welfare of the soldiers living in single-soldier quarters. The post quality-of-life regulation is being revised to further define and update living standards.

Drill sergeant registers trainees to vote

Linda Kaup
Bayonet correspondent

Linda Kaup

Staff Sgt. William Gentry, drill sergeant with Company E, 2nd Battalion, 54th Infantry Regiment, Infantry Training Brigade, talks to trainees in his company about voting.

Voters usually hear that turnout in the United States compares low to that in other democratic nations. Something less known among voters is the present-day turnout falls shorter than that of 19th century America.

Staff Sgt. William Gentry, Company E, 2nd Battalion, 54th Infantry Regiment, Inf. Training Brigade, wants to turn these figures around. Gentry and fellow cadre recently established a procedure to solicit all eligible soldiers, then assisted them in the proper techniques needed to become registered voters.

Gentry chose to use the Federal Post Card Application. Registration establishes a voter's eligibility before election day.

"Unfortunately registration is often times more difficult than voting," said Glen Wallace, Muscogee, Board of Election Office. "The Federal Post Card Applications can be very confusing to the requester and to the party receiving the FPCA if not filled out properly and entirely. This can result in delay of receiving your ballot to being denied the right to vote in the present election."

Currently, 140 soldiers make up Company E, 2nd Bn., 54th Inf. Regt., ITB; of those, three remain under the voting age and four are not U.S. citizens. The other 133 assigned personnel registered and will exercise the right to place an informed vote for the presidential primary election, Gentry said.

Gentry's motivational route for this task came from Music Television's Road Rules, a campaign to get the most eligible voters registered.

"I asked myself, 'Could this be done with a company of men?' Yes it could, so I started gathering all the paperwork necessary to accomplish the venture," Gentry said.

Gentry and cadre educated the soldiers in his company by familiarizing them with procedures, answering questions concerning the voting process.

Ballots are mailed out four to six weeks in advance and Oct. 7 is the deadline to be registered for this coming election. Spouses and family members may also use the FPCA to become registered. For more information on the FPCA or other related questions, unit voting officers are encouraged to contact Wallace at 571-4700.

Retirement Services Office assists transition

Retirement Services Office

Retirement represents a battle many soldiers and families approach unprepared.

Once a soldier retires, what happens to his or her benefits. Where does a person not on active duty get medical care? Will he or she need a new identification card?

As a retiree, a person still remains a part of the total Army, but benefits and obligations change from those on active duty.

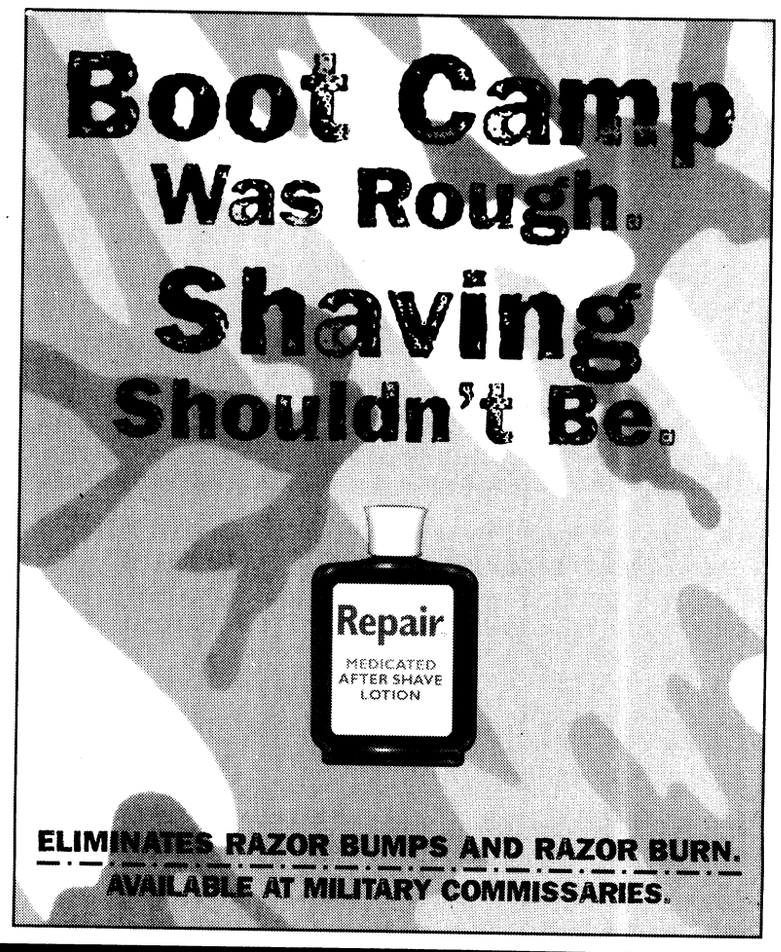
To win the retirement battle, remember three letters — RSO, which stands for Retirement Services officer, someone who can answer a retiree's questions and many more dealing with life after active duty.

Even if a person faces retirement several years from now, a visit to meet the Retirement Services officer helps. Ask for a copy of Army Echoes, the bulletin published for retirees by the Army Retirement Services Office of the Deputy Chief of Staff of Personnel.

And, ask for the installation retiree newsletter, Still Serving Survivor Benefit Plan, which lets retirees make sure that part of their retired pay continues to go to family members after the retiree's death.

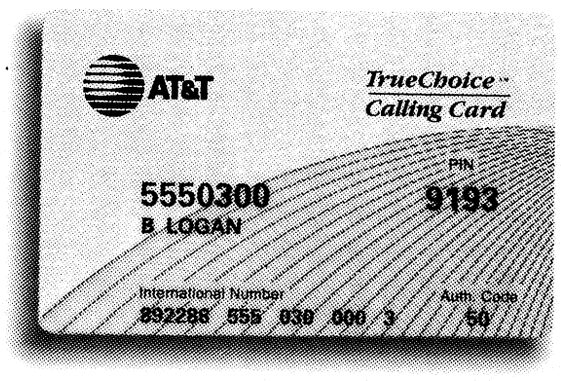
No matter how much research a soldier conducts to try to get ready for retirement, there comes the question of how to find that next job, how soon to decide where to settle for retirement, how to prepare for the transition into retirement, etc.

As soon as a soldier applies for retirement, a representative from the Retirement Services Office automatically refers the service member to the Army Career and Alumni Program personnel who schedule an appointment for preseparation orientation and a one-on-one consultation to assist the soldier with all transition needs.



During Retiree Activity Day, soldiers meet and chat with those who've already fought the retirement battle and hear experts speak on retirement and related subjects.

Speakers from various agencies talk about retirement and retirement benefits. Agencies include: Army Retirement Services, the Defense Finance and Accounting Services' Retired and Annuitant Pay Centers, Social Security, the Department of Veterans Affairs, the Civilian Health and Medical Program of the Uniformed Services Office and Tricare, Martin Army Community Hospital and other sources.



By volunteering for RAD, service members meet retirees, learn about your benefits and assist Retirement Services Office in preparing for this mega-event.

Don't enter the retirement battle without a plan, visit the Retirement Services Office.

Rangers attend LRSLC

By Lisa M. Hibbert
Bayonet staff writer

If Ranger School equates to college, then the Long Range Surveillance Leaders Course equates to ranger graduate school, according to Capt. David P. Anders, commander of Company D, 4th Ranger Training Battalion, Ranger Training Brigade.

"The course is designed to train soldiers who have a specific need for these skills," said Lt. Col. Kim Kadesch, commander of the 4th Bn., RTB. "It is open to officers and noncommissioned officers who have been designated as leaders by their units."

The course trains leaders how to perform in a realistic tactical environment, under mental and physical stress, simulating combat.

Although the course requires ranger qualification, that does not guarantee admission. Only soldiers en route or assigned to LRS units, certain Special Forces units and scout platoons make the cut without a waiver.

"We do not apply the same stresses as in Ranger School," Anders said. "But we do expect them to apply what they learned in Ranger School to this course."

Students average 16 hours a day of training, seven days a week during the five-week course.

While performing as a team leader and a team member, the student receives an opportunity to refine his leadership and technical skills to a high degree of proficiency so that he may return to his unit and train other soldiers.

During the two field training exercises of the 33-day course, the students form six-man teams that remain isolated from each other.

"We do this to simulate real world situations," Anders said. "Teams do not have knowledge of each others missions for operational security reasons.

"Only 10 LRS units currently exist in the Army," Anders continued. "Six detachments are attached to light divisions and four companies are at the corps level. These units normally attach to military intelligence battalions."

Soldiers in LRS teams prove valuable to division and corps commanders because of their ranger skills and their ability to gather human intelligence, Anders said.

"A LRS unit provides division or corps commander with his human intelligence gathering capability," Kadesch said.

Commanders insert LRS teams behind enemy lines before combat operations so that they may get critical information about the enemy or the area of operations that will assist them with their planning, Anders said.

When LRS soldiers go on missions behind enemy lines, they travel lightly armed, with heavy rucksacks.

"Most of the contents of the rucks are water, especially when they are in desert environments, and batteries for the radios," Anders said. "The soldiers have to carry everything they will need to survive for the duration of the mission."

The course teaches soldiers how to survive from the land if necessary.

"Soldiers learn what plants are edible and how to make snares and traps to catch game," Anders said.

According to Anders, most of the present-day LRS units claim their historical lineage from Vietnam-era long range patrol units. The biggest difference is that LRP's were used in direct missions conducting ambushes and prisoner snatches. Today's LRS teams are designed and trained to observe and report and to observe all contact.

"The LRS soldier's mission is to avoid all human contact and just observe surroundings, we're not killers," Anders said.

The next LRSLC graduation takes place today in Rabel Hall, Bldg. 5014 at 1 p.m.

13th CSB supports Paralympics

By Michael E. Lynch
13th Corps Support Battalion

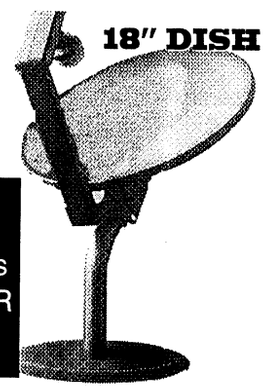
The final event of the 26th Olympiad concluded recently with the closing ceremonies of the 1996 Paralympic Games. Throughout both the Olympics and the Paralympics, the 13th Corps Support Battalion provided logistical support.

Approximately 140 soldiers from 13th CSB deployed to Atlanta during August to construct and operate Paralympic venue sites, transport and distribute supplies and equipment, provide on-site support during the games; prepare meals and dismantle the venues when the Games ended.

Frequent deployment represents nothing new to the soldiers of the 13th who have participated in two recent National Training Center rotations in support of 3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division, and associated training exercises as well as real world deployments to Somalia and Southwest Asia. The battalion also operated three base camps during the Olympic Games.

Soldiers from all companies in the battalion made up the Paralympic support unit, commanded by Capt. Karl Haas, commander of Headquarters and Headquarters Detachment, 13th CSB.

"We put this unit together specifically for this mission," Haas said. "Some of them came straight from the Olympics, but many came from Fort Benning. We were busy since from the moment we arrived and everyone works well together."



The battalion, deployed almost constantly since April to the National Training Center and the Olympics immediately afterward, also conducted ammunition support missions in Concord, Calif. and supported the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit in recent competitions.

Lt. Col. Gerald Bates, commander of the 13th CSB, highlighted the battalion's busy schedule.

"We've been extremely busy — in addition to the deployments," Bates said, "we still support the installation and have been conducting external evaluations of National Guard units in Florida and Wisconsin."

Haas said even though this mission was not something the 13th CSB trains for, it completed it well and the soldiers enjoyed it.

"Most soldiers appreciated the opportunity to support the Games," Haas said "It gave them a chance to demonstrate they are flexible enough to accomplish other missions in addition to their normal wartime missions. They also got to see most of the events, which they really enjoyed."

Firefighters in Bosnia overcome obstacles

By Andrew Aquino
350th Mobile Public Affairs Detachment

Moving from one military camp to another proves difficult in Bosnia, especially when a fire rages.

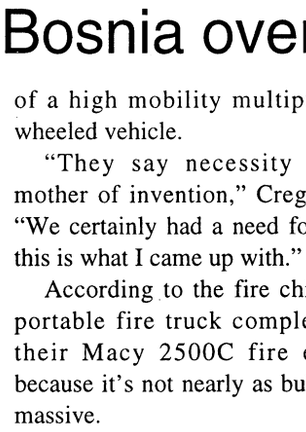
According to Staff Sgt. Charles Crego, fire chief of the 369th Engineers, (Firefighter) at Tuzla Main, answering emergency calls outside the immediate area, takes up valuable time, especially when going to remote camps in his area of responsibility.

"We answer calls from as far north as Camp Burke and as far east as Alicia," Crego said. "It can take 45 minutes or more for us to arrive on the scene. We had to find a way of getting fire equipment closer to the source. A tent can go up in flames in about 37 seconds."

Using spare aviation equipment, Crego devised a portable fire pump powerful enough to dampen brush fires and other incendiary hazards far from rapid-response range. By hooking a 1,000-liter fuel tank up to a diesel-powered portable fuel pump, he devised a water delivery system that is also small enough and light enough to fit on the back of a high mobility multipurpose wheeled vehicle.

"They say necessity is the mother of invention," Crego said. "We certainly had a need for it, so this is what I came up with."

According to the fire chief, the portable fire truck complements their Macy 2500C fire engine because it's not nearly as bulky nor massive.



"We can easily maneuver around a tent city with one of these," he said. "It goes places where we'd be afraid to take the fire truck."

Strapped to the back of a high mobility, multipurpose, wheeled vehicle, the portable fire pump climbs steep hills and muddy roads as well as into tight places without risking damage to irreplaceable equipment. Although the portable fire pump doesn't deliver nearly as much water power as the fire department's fire truck, it still delivers up to 100 gallons-per-minute.

Because it consists of pre-existing parts, production and repair remains relatively inexpensive. A portable fire pump at a remote camp could be operational in minutes and save thousands of dollars of equipment and personal property, according to the fire chief.

The Tuzla-based firefighters, tasked to put together four more experimental portable fire pumps for theater operations, plan to build a total of 14 portable fire pumps for outlying camps in the U.S. Bosnian sector.

Delta Force to conduct briefings

The Delta Force Team conducts orientation briefings starting Oct. 7 at 1 p.m. and Oct. 8 through 10 at 9 a.m. and 1 p.m. in Building 4, Room 21. The physical fitness qualification test will be administered Oct. 11 at 7 a.m. at Stewart-Watson Field. Immediately following the test, a 100-meter swim test will be administered at the Briant Wells swimming pool. Uniform for both tests is battle dress uniform and combat boots.

For more information, call Carol Gilchrist at 545-1917, 545-4702 or 545-3341.

ITB seeks instructor

The Infantry Training Brigade seeks a master sergeant or first sergeant for immediate placement as the chief instructor at the Fort Benning Drill Sergeant School.

Applicants require drill sergeant qualification and return to drill sergeant status at a rate of $275 per month. All personnel interested should contact their command sergeant major to schedule an appointment, or call Command Sgt. Maj. Gary Hurley at 544-9484 or 544-9130.

CGSOC starts Oct. 1

The Command and General Staff Officer Course begins Oct. 1 in Building 4, Room W-210.

Those eligible for the course include: all majors and above and promotable captains in the reserve and active components if they are Combined Arms Staff Services School graduates; Army Medical Department, Chaplain and Judge Advocate General officers need not meet this requirement.

Instructors from the 108th Division will present the course, also offered in residence at Fort Leavenworth, Kan., over the T-NET interactive television system.

For more information, call 291-2879 and leave a message.

Law enforcement training continues

State-certified Law Enforcement training programs continue at Fort Benning.

The next Georgia Peace Officer and Jailer basic training program takes place Oct. 7 through Dec. 17. Successful completion of this 10-week program qualifies participants for certification as law enforcement officers and jailers within the state of Georgia.

For further information, call David Godfrey or Kim Howell, Building 328, Brown Hall or call 649-1377.

Awards to be given

The Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff awards the Joint Meritorious Unit Award to individuals assigned to the designated areas during the periods indicated below:

- U.S. Army Commander in Chief, Europe (Forward) Command and Control Detachment (Operation Quicklift), Split Croatia from July 3, 1995 through Aug. 11, 1995.
- Joint Logistics Support Element, Guantanamo Bay, Cuba from Jan. 20 through April 15.
- Joint Task Force 160, Operation Sea Signal from May 20, 1994 through April 15.

The JMUA ribbon may be purchased through normal supply channels. Adjutant General Personnel Operations and Services Division, Records Sections, Building 2620, will update your military personnel records.

The chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff has also awarded the Joint Meritorious Unit Award to individuals that participated in Operation Uphold Democracy from Sept. 4, 1994 through March 31, 1995.

For more information, call 545-3341 or 545-4702.

Special Forces briefs continue on post

The Special Forces recruiting office conducts briefings every Wednesday at 10 a.m., 2 and 6 p.m. in McVeigh Hall, Building 75B, Room 109. For more information, call Sgt.1st Class Ernest Donaldson at 545-3079.

Controlled burning set

Controlled burning of woodland areas will take place Monday through Sept. 21. If weather permits, the following compartments will be affected: C-2, C-3, F-1, F-3, P-1, Q-2, Z-2, Z-1, Z-4.

Burning will occur in pine stands within these compartments to enhance endangered species habitat and training areas.

Personnel proposing to use these areas for recreational purposes must vacate these areas prior to 9:30 a.m. daily. Training units using compartments adjacent to those listed above may experience drift smoke and are reminded to exercise caution while traveling in these areas due to the potential for reduced visibility.

Units using ranges and training areas are reminded to remove flammable debris, such as pinestraw, leaves, grass and trash, from around structures in accordance with U.S. Army Infantry Center Regulation 210-4, Paragraph 5-22, Organizational Maintenance.

For more information, call Jack Greenlee, Natural Resources Management Branch, at 544-6206.

ACS provides training aids

dedicated in 1958 and it was named after Wigle because he was the first OCS graduate to be awarded with the Congressional Medal of Honor.

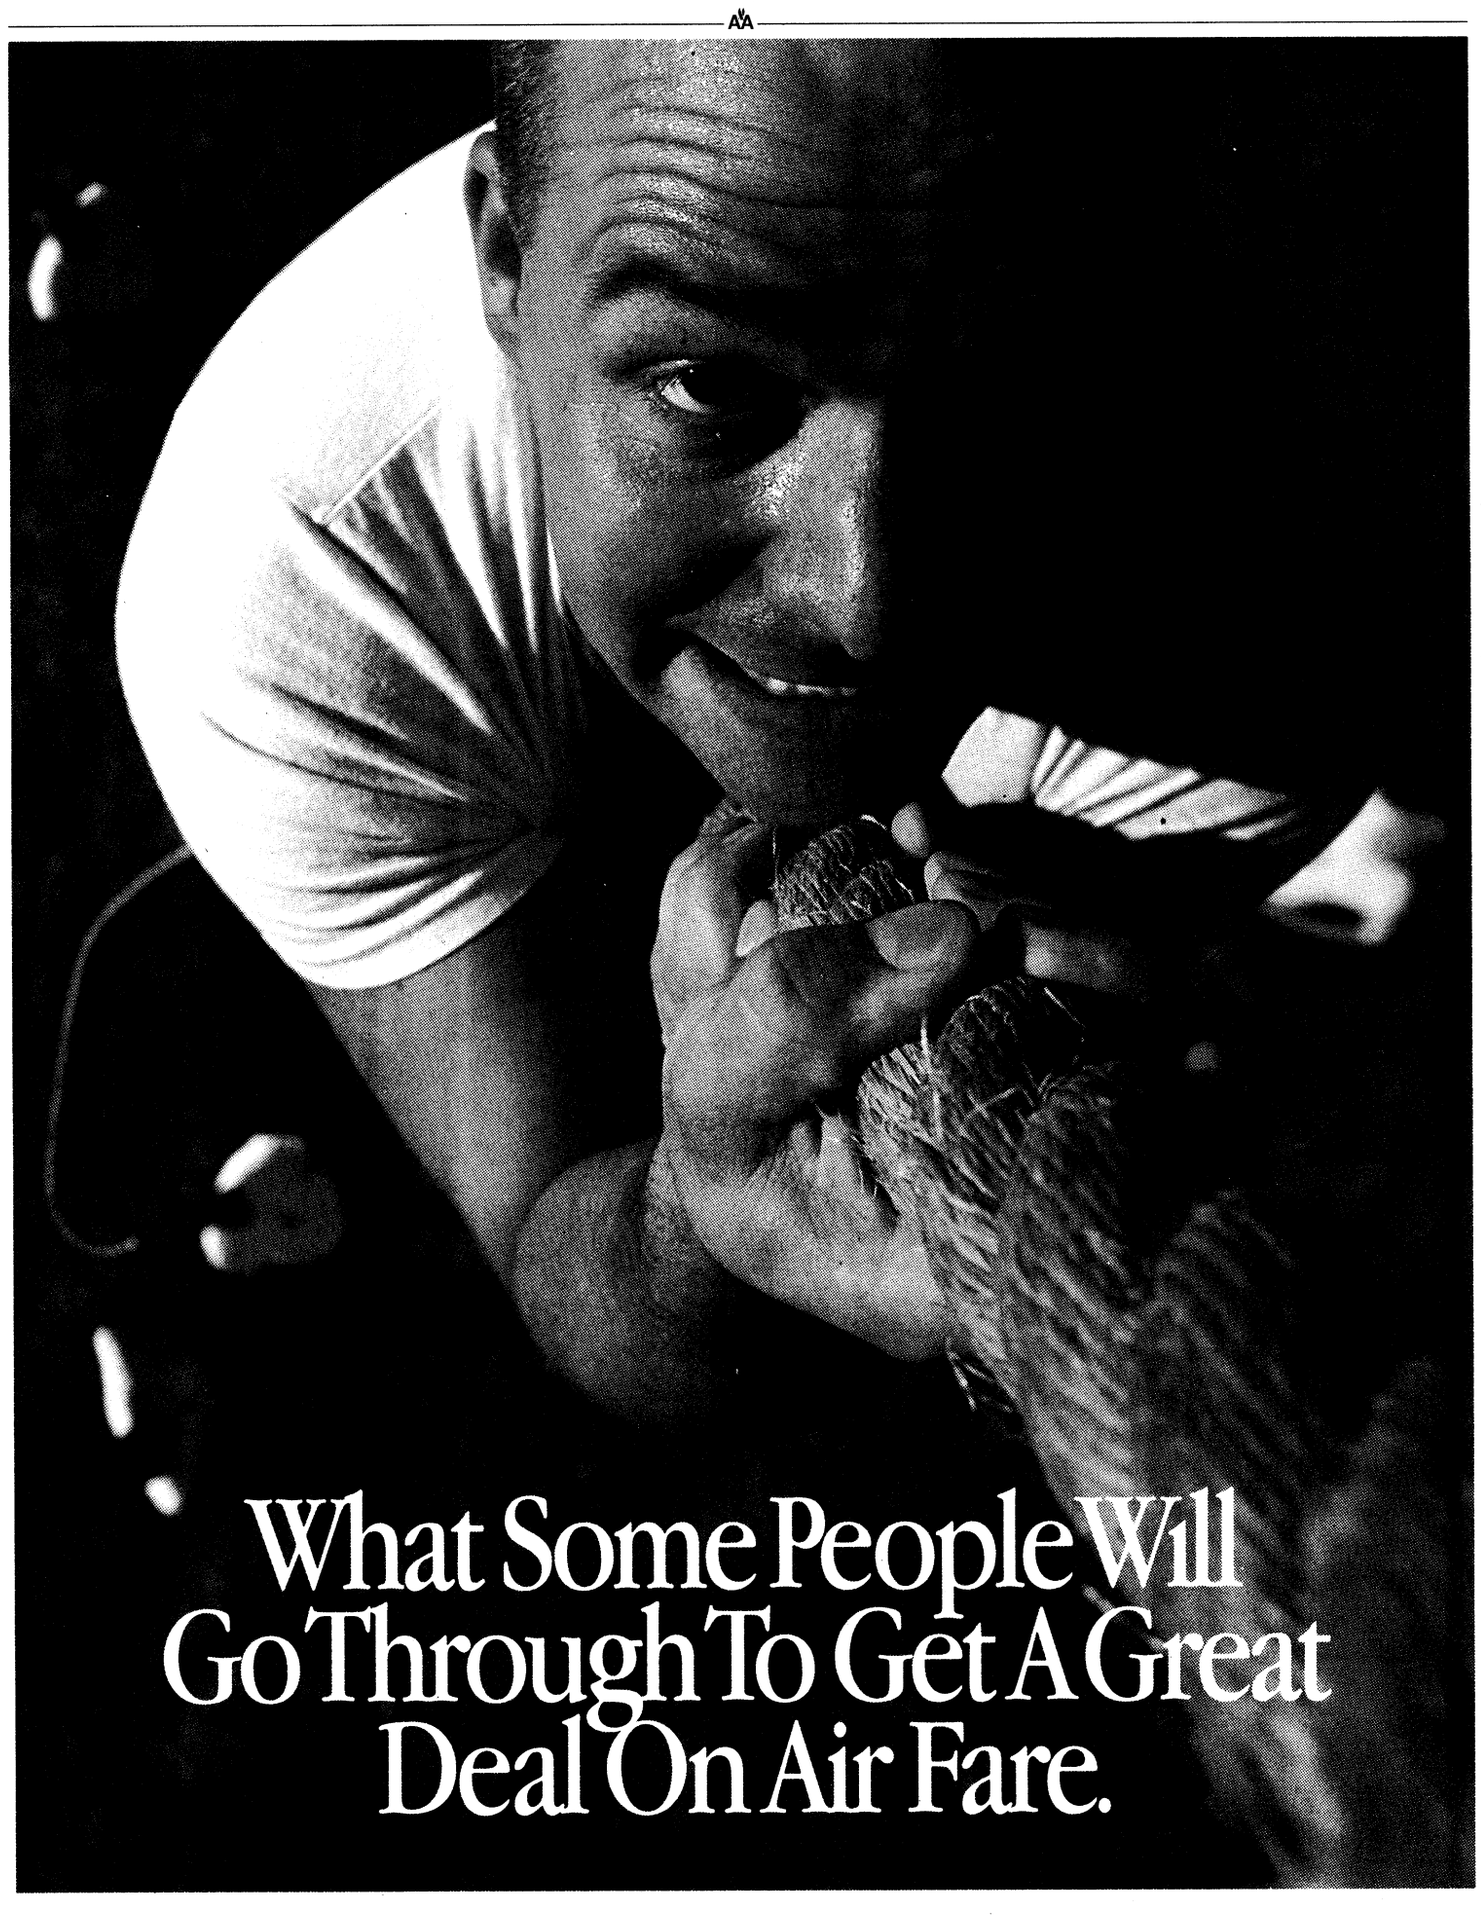
While stationed in Italy during World War II, Wigle, acting as a company executive officer, observed that his platoon was without an commanding officer and volunteered to take command.

Leading his men up a bare, rocky slope through intense and concentrated fire, Wigle succeeded in reaching the first of several stone walls.

Wigle had himself boosted to the top of the wall where he drew his weapon and returned fire while his men helped each other up and over the wall.

Using the same method, Wigle successfully negotiated the second wall. Upon reaching the top of the third wall, he faced three houses which were the key point of the enemy's defense.

Wigle made a dash through a hail of machine gun and pistol fire and reached the nearest house.



Firing his carbine as he entered, he drove the enemy out of the back door and into the second house. Following closely he drove the second house and into the third, where the enemy took refuge in the cellar.

When Wigle's men rejoined him, they found him mortally wounded on the cellar stairs, which he had started to descend to try and force the surrender of the enemy.

His actions resulted in the capture of 36 German soldiers, the seizure of the strong point and his being awarded with the Congressional Medal of Honor.

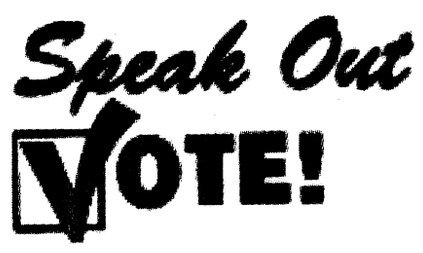
COMMUNITY CONSCIENCE

Fort Benning residents to vote for mayors



Community Life Office

Elections for volunteer mayor and vice mayor in each of Fort Benning's six communities take place Thursday and Sept. 20 from 8 a.m. to 6 p.m.

For two days, post residents cast their votes for people who are ready to dedicate hours time and talent to voice concerns and raise issues for the soldiers and families living in Fort Benning neighborhoods.

Volunteers who serve in the Community Life Mayoral Program, a part of Fort Benning's Community Life Program, are active duty military spouses who work to enhance the quality of life for soldiers and their families.

The volunteer mayors sponsor two postwide events: the annual Safety Carnival at which community agencies and organizations focus on the everyday hazards awaiting children in and around the home, and stress safety to combat injury; and the Santa Ride Around, in which Santa rides through each housing area on a fire truck with candy for the children.

The volunteer mayors also conduct town hall meetings, prepare and distribute community newsletters, greet new residents and conduct fundraisers which support their private organization. Mayors also have been instrumental in acquiring approximately $200,000 used to purchase new playground equipment.

Volunteers devote their time and efforts to maintain this volunteer program, but they need community support to make it a success. And residents can support mayors through voting.

Post residents can vote for mayor and vice mayor at several locations.

Following are the locations:

• Indianhead Community Life Center, Building 8, 545-5940

• East and West Main Post Community Life Center, Building 80, 682-4723 or 682-4724

• Custer Terrace and Upatoi Terrace Community Life Center, Building 10800, 689-1058

• McGraw Manor Community Life Center, Building 11303, 544-1168;

• Wilson Elementary School, Indianhead Terrace community

• Dexter Elementary, East Main Post community

• Stowers Elementary School, Bouton Heights and Davis Hill community

• McBride Elementary School, McGraw Manor community.

School voting areas close at 4 p.m. while all community life centers remain open until 6 p.m.

The post conducts formal post-wide elections annually to allow maximum participation in the program. Part of the mayoral duties include surfacing residential issues and concern. Volunteer mayors conduct monthly meetings with agency representatives and garrison staff to resolve these issues.

Post programs seek volunteer assistance

Volunteer Resource Center

Hundreds of volunteers help agencies and organizations in various capacities each day.

Two post organizations seek assistance from people interested in giving their time and skills.

The Volunteer Resource Center needs a volunteer to perform clerical duties at the center.

Would you like to make the upcoming Christmas holidays brighter for some Fort Benning children?

You can by volunteering at Santa's Castle, a private organization providing toys for those children.

The organization needs volunteers to serve in the following capacities.

Inventory control clerk — Duties include: assigning price categories and age groups to clean toys, updating and maintaining the inventory book and attending monthly board meetings.

Volunteer supervisor — Duties include: maintaining statistics for all Santa's Castle volunteers, submitting monthly volunteer hours to the Volunteer Resource Center, coordinating with the VRC to recruit volunteers and planning appropriate recognition efforts for volunteers.

Quality control clerk — Responsibilities include inspecting toys and ensuring donations are intact, clean, unbroken, etc.

Santa's helper — The job varies depending on skills. Duties include: cleaning and sorting through donated toys, puzzles and games and fixing electronics, bikes, etc. This is a good volunteer position for teens or active duty soldiers.

Vice chairwoman — Duties include: assisting the chairwoman with managing Santa's Castle, attending monthly board meetings and learning all aspects of Santa's Castle operations. Candidate should be available for one-year commitment, 10 to 15 hours per week.

Treasurer — Responsibilities include: receiving, accounting for and dispersing all organizational funds, depositing all money, maintaining checking account, signing all checks and being present when shopping for toys. Volunteer also submits financial reports at all meetings and attends monthly board meetings. Bookkeeping skills are not required, but are helpful.

Special projects clerk — Duties include: organizing and helping with fundraisers and submitting written requests to companies for assistance. The volunteer should be available for six-month commitment.

Public relations — Duties include: serving as spokesperson for Santa's Castle at orientation briefings, assisting with publicity and acting as the link between the community and Santa's Castle to inform and generate support.

Toy manager — Duties include: overseeing Saturday work, determining what work needs to be done, briefing volunteer groups on how to perform specified work and organizing tables with supplies.

For more information about opportunities to volunteer with Santa's Castle, the Volunteer Resource Center or any post agency, call 545-5602.

Catholic community celebrates

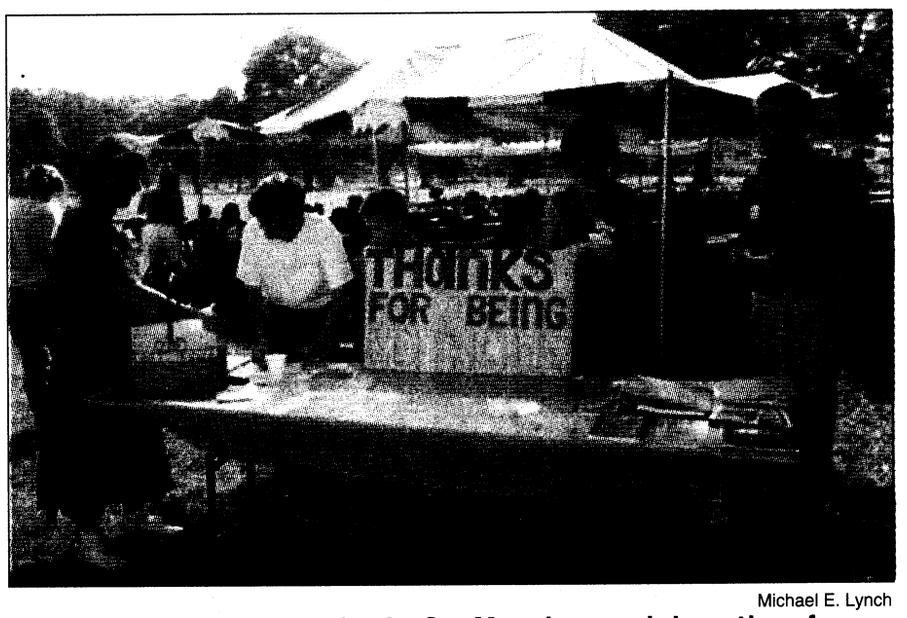
By Michael E. Lynch
13th Corps Support Battalion

The Fort Benning Catholic community celebrated its "Thanks for Being Catholic Day" Sunday.

Members of St. Maurice Parish (named as such for the patron saint of the Infantry) celebrated an outdoor Mass at Gowdy Field. Chaplain (Lt. Col.) Vincent Burns, installation Catholic chaplain, and Chaplains (Capt.) David Kirk and (Maj.) Mike Honor lead the Mass, which was followed by a potluck brunch on the Field of Four Chaplains.

Because of the size of the St. Maurice Parish community, several Masses are offered each week at the Main Post Catholic Chapel, the Regimental Chapel on Sand Hill and at the Chapel in Martin Army Community Hospital. The many different Masses make it convenient for parishioners to attend, but Sunday's semi-annual celebration attempted to bring the whole community together at one time.

"It's important that we get together occasionally as one community," Burns said. "This way, everyone gets to meet everyone else, and we all feel part of something."



Burns places a high priority on hospitality and works hard to make everyone feel part of the parish.

"I want everyone who visits or joins our parish to feel they are part of a family," he said.

Nancy Gere, chairman of the Social Committee, agreed.

"We hope this Mass and brunch will help the parish come together," Gere said. "If you always go to Mass at 11:30 a.m., you might not know the people who go at 9 a.m. This is a way to meet other people in the church."

The mass and brunch also provided an opportunity for the Pastoral Council to recruit volunteers to help with the various ministries that support St. Maurice Parish. Lt. Col. Mike Phillips, president of the Pastoral Council, outlined the need for this recruitment.

"The parish runs on volunteers," he said. "We have six different ministries, all run by volunteers. The youth ministry and the education and liturgy committees focus on explaining our faith, while the social, outreach, and evangelistic ministries work to reach Catholics and believers who might like to become active in our church."

Phillips sees the semi-annual "Thanks for Being Catholic Sunday" as a very important recruiting tool.

"Events like this help people connect with others in the parish community," he said. "We have a lot of parishioners, but not all of them are active volunteers. We always need more."

Rita Connolly Musto of Boston said she enjoyed the Mass and brunch.

"This a very nice community, and I think anything that brings it together is worthwhile," Musto said. "People are really warm and friendly here. I've visited before, and I've always been impressed with hospitality."

"There are so many things to do in a church, and so few people to do them," Musto said. "If I lived here, I'd volunteer!"

St. Maurice Parish provides a one-faith community for all soldiers, family members, retirees and civilians to share in the Gospel and call people to a deeper awareness and relationship with God. Parishioners interested in volunteering in the various ministries that support the community can call the Main Post Catholic Chapel office at 545-3461.

ON POST

Nabisco Video Van to visit Commissary — The Nabisco Video Van, staffed by professional operators who distribute product samples and coupons, visits the Fort Benning Commissary Sunday.

Customers can register for shopping sprees and a $5,000 Zero Coupon Bond. For each 100 dozen designated products purchased, the Commissary earns a $100 shopping spree for its customers. The more the customers buy, the more shopping sprees the Commissary earns. Also, one Fort Benning Commissary entry will be entered in the final drawing for the $5,000 Zero Coupon Bond.

The Nabisco Biscuit Company, sponsors the van.

Youth Services opens registration for dance lessons — Youth Services continues to accept students for dance, tap and jazz lessons. Registration takes place in the administrative office, Building 1056, from 8:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. Monday through Friday.

Classes provide lessons for youth ages 3 through 18 for beginners, advanced beginners and experienced dancers. An all-male tap class provides lessons for ages 8 through 12.

Classes, open to members only, cost $20 per month. The Youth Services card must be presented at the time of registration.

For more information, call 545-3070.

ACS to conduct spouse orientation — A spouse orientation today at 8:45 a.m. provides information for spouses who are either new to the Army or to Fort Benning.

Gymnastics and cheerleading for anyone age 5 and older occurs from 3 to 7 p.m. Monday through Thursday. Call Sally McDaniel at 563-7870.

Other classes for young people include crafts, languages and art.

Classes take place in the OWC Activities Building, 1317.

Bowling league begins soon — The Officers' Wives' Bowling League begins Thursday and continues through Spring.

League members bowl Thursdays from 9:30 to 11:30 a.m. at the on-post bowling center.

For more information or to join, call Debbie Sittnick at 682-8715.

Center accepts child care applications — McGraw Child Development Center seeks applications for part-day preschool, which began Tuesday.

The center provides two programs:

- Tuesday and Thursday — for 3-year-olds
- Monday, Wednesday and Friday — for 4-year-olds

Classes begin at 8:30 a.m. and end at 11:45 a.m. The sponsor's earnings determine fees.

The center, located in Building 11304 on Custer Road, near I-185, includes the National Association for the Education of Young Children guidelines in its program.

For more information, call Earnestine Neal or Huguette E. May at 544-2521.

Kelley Hill Recreation Center continues book swap — Many soldiers benefit from the paperback book swap library at Kelley Hill Recreation Center.

The center needs more books. Book swaps are free.

For more information, call the Kelley Hill Recreation Center at 544-3079 Thursday through Saturday from noon to 8 p.m., or Sunday from 10 a.m. to 7 p.m.

Employment Assistance — Army Community Service's Family Member Employment Assistance Program provides help to those seeking employment.

The third Wednesday of each month, local area temporary agencies visit the Family Unit Network Center, Building 359, from 1:30 to 3:30 p.m.

The agency representatives possess application forms and provide answers to any questions concerning their services. All agencies' services are free.

For information, call Mark Mills at 545-6969 or 545-5516.

Registration set for military college — Individuals interested in attending Georgia Military College during the fall quarter can register from 8 a.m. to 7 p.m. Sept. 26 and 27.

Students drop or add classes Oct. 1 through 4.

Georgia tuition equalization grants and HOPE scholarships are available.

For more information, call 545-5826 or 545-4863.

CSU to offer "Intro to Education" on post — The Fort Benning office of Columbus State University offers "Intro to Education" in the fall on Tuesday and Thursday evenings only beginning Sept. 24.

For more information, call the on-post office at 545-1085.

Call 545-5194 to learn more about the duties and rewards of serving with the Red Cross.

Tricare Service Center helps military families — Tricare Service Center personnel provide assistance to Medicare patients in finding health-care providers, conduct enrollment for Tricare Prime and provide a current list of preferred providers for those in Tricare Extra.

Tricare beneficiaries who need preauthorization for medical services can call (800) 333-4040.

For more information on enrollment, billing and beneficiary services, call the Tricare Service Center at (800) 444-5445, or the health benefits advisers at 544-3461.

OFF POST

Humane Society plans bazaar — The Muscogee County Humane Society plans its annual bazaar Nov. 1 and 2 from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. and Nov. 3 from 1 p.m. to 5 p.m. at 7133 Sacerdote Lane.

Bazaar planners need donations of household items, discarded toys, used furniture or anything else resalable. Planners also need pledges from those willing to bake cookies, cakes and such for a bake sale.

The Humane Society seeks volunteers to help prepare the bazaar, put up posters, or pick up donated items.

Since the society is a non-profit organization, the yearly event helps it make money toward the care and feeding of an ever-increasing volume of animals.

For more information, call Ritva Wisenall at 327-0449, or Grace Robinson at 561-9414.

Buick Challenge Military Appreciation Day scheduled — In appreciation to all service members and their families for their service to country, the Buick Challenge honors Fort Benning personnel and families during the Fort Benning and Military Appreciation Day at the 1996 Buick Challenge.

This allows free entry to the golf tournament Sept. 27 at Callaway Gardens in Pine Mountain, Ga.

All active duty military personnel, retirees, reservists and guardsmen, and their families with military identification receive free access.

For more information, call 689-3272.

CSU to offer procurement course — The Center for Procurement Technical Assistance at Columbus State University offers a free course about government contracts Sept 26 from 5 to 6:30 p.m. at the Elizabeth Bradley Turner Center, instructed by Roy Leggett Sr., counselor.

The course, "How to Bid on Government Contracts," focuses on the contracting the business of the Department of Defense and other federal agencies. Students learn how to prepare bids and proposals or offers to sell supplies and services, become familiar with various government contracting forms, the uniform contract form and tips on how to gain complete understanding of the government's requirements, clauses and more.

Star Trek fan club to meet — The USS DaVinci, Columbus' Star Trek fan club, conducts its general membership meeting at 7 p.m. Thursday at the Source Book (formerly The Book Mark), located at 4214 Hamilton Road.

The guest speaker Joanne DeLavan directs communications at Randstad Staffing Services, which is one of the largest staffing services in the world.

DeLavan speaks from noon to 1 p.m. Lunch costs $10 for members and $12 for guests.

SINCE 1979, MEETING THE NEEDS OF CHILDREN IN AMERICA AND AROUND THE WORLD

...with love.

It takes more than food to give a child self respect and hope. It takes the compassionate hands of love providing both food for the body and food for the inner spirit. For the past 19 years we have been committed to one mission . . . feed the children with help and hope. It's the kind of feeding we do best!

Last year we distributed more than 60 million pounds of food and other essential commodities. Over 80% was delivered right here in America.

By designating your contribution to Feed The Children you'll be investing in the future of our society . . . our children.

ask the judge

By Michael H. Lane
Office of the Staff Judge Advocate

Q. My wife and I have marital troubles. She went to Legal Assistance for counseling about our problems. When I went to get counseling, someone at Legal Assistance told me their attorneys could not see me and that I would have to see an attorney not working there. I don't like this; who is on active duty anyway? What do you have to say about this?

A. The Legal Assistance Division of the Office of the Staff Judge Advocate focuses completely on customer service. Satisfied clients prove the best way to ensure valued service. As a result, it concerns us whenever service members feel that Legal Assistance fails to provide the service they deserve.

Sometimes, however, efficiency must give way to professional requirements. As in all professions, rules of conduct govern lawyers, and these rules determine how to handle certain situations. No lawyer knowingly violates these basic standards.

In domestic relations cases, Army policy discourages attorneys in the same Army legal office from providing legal assistance to both parties in a legal assistance dispute. The policy ensures that each client receives the undivided loyalty of his attorney and that his or her confidential disclosures to that attorney remain confidential.

This does not mean that you must go to another military post or pay to see a civilian attorney in order to discuss your situation. We simply contact an attorney from another division of the SJA Office or a Trial Defense attorney to discuss your case with you. That attorney contacts you to make an appointment to discuss your problem and provides you competent and professional legal advice. Any inconvenience you suffer should be minimal.

This protects your rights and the integrity of the legal process. Bar associations require attorneys to avoid situations that may lead to conflicts of interest and to safeguard client confidentiality. This can best be done if the attorneys, legal staff and records remain in separate physical locations.

We regret the need to refer any client to an outside attorney, but we sincerely believe it protects your interests. If you have any questions about this or any other legal assistance matter, make an appointment with an attorney by calling 545-3281 or 545-3282.

tricare

USAIC Public Affairs Office

The Department of Defense switched to a new health care program for the Army, Navy and Air Force this year.

Representatives from Martin Army Community Hospital provide Tricare information to soldiers, retirees and family members.

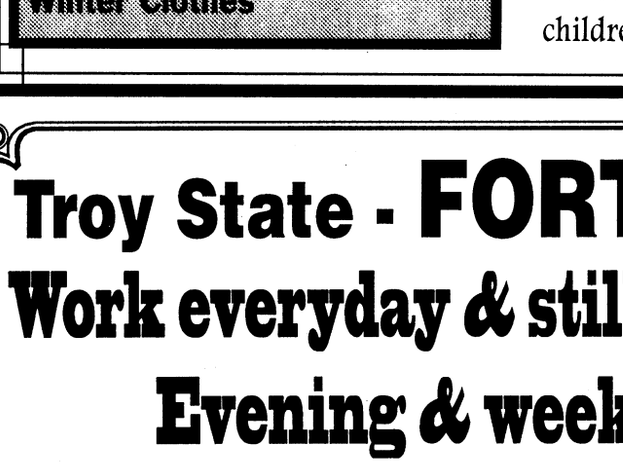
Many eligible beneficiaries show concern about the change and how it affects their care. One of the most commonly asked questions follows.

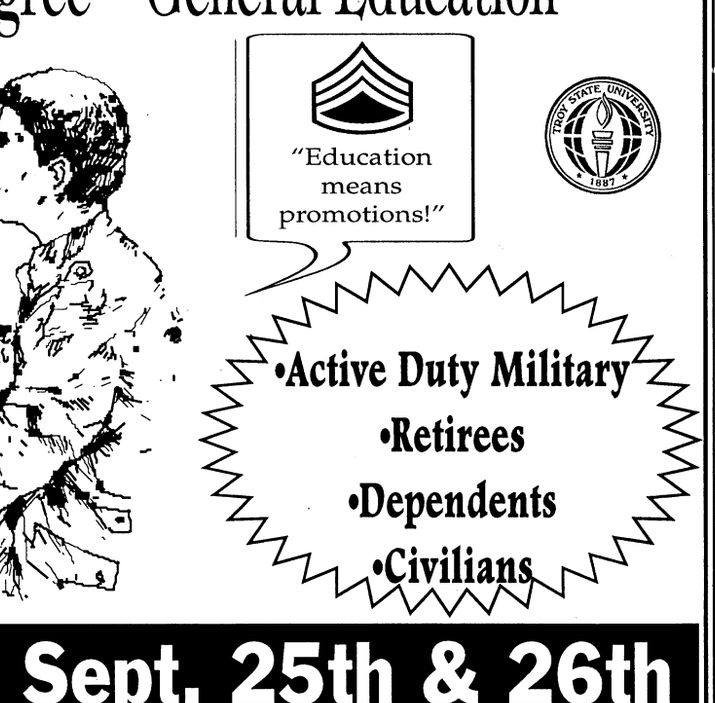
As a Tricare beneficiary who elects not to join Tricare Prime, what benefits are available to me at the military treatment facility?

Tricare beneficiaries who choose to use Martin Army Community Hospital for their health-care needs continue to do so on a space available basis.

This applies to all active duty families, retirees and their family members. Public law significantly changed the priority of appointments for all military beneficiaries as follows: active duty, Prime enrollees, non-Prime enrollees, etc.

For example: An active duty family member who elects not to enroll in Prime will be seen on a space-available basis and thus will have a lower priority for appointments than a retiree or retiree family member who has enrolled in Tricare Prime.





At Martin Army Community Hospital, Prime enrollees receive guaranteed access standards for care. Prime enrollees requesting urgent care receive appointments within one day, routine appointments within seven days and wellness visits within 30 days.

OMNIPOTENCE

God's presence abides

By Tom Wheatley
Ranger Training Brigade

reflections

How often it seems as if we fall outside God's care — we feel somehow separate from his power and presence?

We get so involved in our own problems and daily responsibilities that we begin to lose sight of God and his constant activity in our lives. Yet when we use the name "God," we refer to that being whose very nature implies omnipotence, or all powerful, and omnipresence, ever present (omni is adopted from the Latin adjective meaning all). Many books tell us about angels, or God's messengers, and they remind us of God's constant presence. Psalm 139: 7-10 sums up this theme well:

"Where can I go from your Spirit? Where can I flee from your presence? If I go up to the heavens, you are there; if I make my bed in the depths, you are there.

"If I rise on the wings of the dawn, if I settle on the far side of the sea, even there your hand will guide me, your right hand will hold me fast."

Often, just the reassurance or understanding that God remains with us every step of the way gives us the very courage, strength, inspiration, or peace of mind we need to continue on our course. Whether a work-related mission, a challenge which has blocked our path, or the desire for new direction in our lives, our recognition and trust in God's guiding hand helps us to move forward, confident that we face this adventure in his presence. As a child naturally reaches up for the father's hand when crossing a busy street, we reach out for the father's hand to lead us across the busy times of our lives.

As the chaplain for those going through ranger school, I hear many testimonies of ranger students who feel God's strong and loving presence with them, especially in their darkest hour.

Some have told that they felt God's hand pushing them up the mountainous terrain in Dahlonega, Ga., or holding them up in the swamps of Florida. After having experienced this touch of God's presence for themselves, these rangers become recommitted to their spiritual walk and promise to become active in local churches or chapels upon their return home. It inspires me to witness how God works in their lives when they really need him; and it reminds me that God is always with me, too.

God's presence stays with each of us, but to feel his presence requires going beyond what the human scene tells us. When we do this by using our spiritual senses, webecome overwhelmed with the awesome nature of God's powerful presence and constant care for each of us his children.

Elisha's servant had this kind of exciting spiritual revelation when enemy troops surrounded him and his master in Dothan (not Alabama). Elisha prayed that God open his servant's eyes to see God's protecting presence at hand, and said, "Don't be afraid … Those who are with us are more than those who are with them."

Then the servant saw the hills full of horses and chariots of fire around Elisha. (11 Kings 6:8-23)

Jacob also had a spiritual awakening. On his way to Haran, he lay down to sleep. During his rest, he dreamed he saw a ladder that reached to heaven with angels ascending and descending it.

In this dream, God promised to be with him and give him the land where he lay. When he awoke, he professed, "Surely the Lord is in this place; and I knew it not." He then gained the strength of courage to continue on his journey. (Genesis 28:10-16)

All of us certainly face challenges, or opportunities in the days ahead, at work or at home. May God reveal himself to each of us in these days in a way that makes us also exclaim, "Surely the Lord is in this place, and I knew it not!"

Then we will know for sure that our savior walks with us, as Christ promised in his words to his disciples, "And surely I am with you always, to the very end of the age." (Matthew 28:20)

"Remember me, O Lord, with the favour that thou bearest unto thy people: O visit me with thy salvation …"
Psalm 106: 4

Rosh Hashanah allows Jews to start over

By Kenneth R. Williams
1st Battalion, 50th Infantry Regiment

reflections

Ever made a bad mistake and wanted to back up and start over? Only a few things in life allow us second chances. Usually the significant things in life allow no second chances.

Making mistakes most of our life involves fines, or penalties, or punishment. I'm glad God allows second chances. His mercy allows him to give us not what we deserve, but what we need. His love remains unconditional; his forgiveness, eternal. We, on the other hand, hold grudges and harbor bitterness.

Early in Jewish history, the Jews celebrated a time of forgiveness, putting away the past and starting over — Rosh Hashanah, or the New Year.

Modern Rosh Hashanah traces back to the so-called "Feast of Trumpets," the sounding of the trumpets on the first day of the seventh month (Tishri) of the Jewish religious calendar year. (Leviticus 23: 24 and Numbers 29: 1)

Unlike the silver trumpets they blew on the other new moons, Jews blew the shofar, a ram's horn, on the beginning of the month of Tishri. This day evolved into the second-most holy day on the modern Jewish religious calendar.

It begins the "ten days of awe" before the Day of Atonement, the day upon which the people made sacrifices for their sins. According to Leviticus 23: 24-27, the celebration consisted of the blowing of trumpets, a time of rest, and "an offering made by fire."

The text itself says nothing specifically about a New Year's Day, and the term "rosin hashanah" is found only one time in scripture. (Ezekiel 40: 1 in the Roman Bible Dictionary)

The month of Tishri signifies several things to Jews. On the Day of Atonement, which occurs on the tenth of the month, the people experienced the forgiveness of sins and the cleansing of guilt. The Feast of Tabernacles begins on the 15th of the month, and commemorates the deliverance of the Israelites from slavery, their travels through the wilderness to the Promised Land, and the gathering at the harvest.

So, in one month the Jewish people celebrate the forgiveness, cleansing, deliverance, provision and the love of God. The month of Tishri to a Jew may be considered like the month of December to a Christian, a joyous time of celebration.

Since the Feast of Trumpets marked a time of new beginnings, a New Year's celebration came to be associated with it. And as with any celebration, there is great revelry, the blowing of trumpets

During the Feast of Trumpets, Jews chant Psalm 81 because in this chapter God hears his people's call for help in their distress. He removes their burdens and sets them free from what enslaves them. God gives his people guidance in how they should live.

Yet, many times God's people go their own way and do their own thing. He allows his people to follow their own wants and wishes, and experience the resulting anxiety, stress and heartache of living a selfish lifestyle.

Then God says in Psalm 81: 13-16, "If my people would but listen to me, if Israel would follow my ways, how quickly would I subdue their enemies and turn my hand against their foes. Those who hate the Lord would cringe before him, and their punishment would last forever. But you would be fed with the finest of wheat; with honey from the rock I would satisfy you." (NIV)

The secret of a joyful, meaningful life is very simple. If we live according to God's instructions, he acts on our behalf to give us success. If we live to please him, then he goes to battle for us. God desires to demonstrate his power in your life. He offers his best to you. He longs to satisfy your each and every need. God can do anything, even produce honey from a rock.

You can experience his forgiveness, mercy, provision and a second chance every day of your life, not just on an annual celebration. It takes a willingness to admit your mistakes, a decision to turn from disobedience to God, and a commitment to follow God.

"If my people, who are called by my name, will humble themselves and pray and seek my face and turn from their wicked ways, then will I hear from heaven and will forgive their sin and will heal their land." (2 Chronicles 7: 14, NIV)

SOA plans 5K run — In celebration of its 50th anniversary, the School of the Americas sponsors a 5K run Sept. 21 at 9 a.m.

The run, open to the general public, starts and ends at the Columbus Civic Center.

Registration for the run before Monday costs $8 and $10 the day of the event. All registrants receive a Run of the Americas T-shirt.

The top three finishers in each age group receive medallions, and all finishers receive certificates.

For more information, call 545-6675.

Army 10-mile qualifier set — Fort Benning conducts its Army 10-mile qualifier Sunday beginning at 7:30 a.m. at the Santiago Fitness Center on Sand Hill.

All runners can attend; however, only the top active duty finishers represent the post at the Army 10-miler Oct. 13 in Washington D.C.

For more information, call Hazel Henry at 544-9595 or 544-9486.

Punt, pass, and kick competition set — Youth Services conducts the National Football League Gatorade Punt, Pass and Kick Competition Sept. 20 on Blue Field beginning at 4:30 p.m.

Registration for the event began Sept. 3 and runs through today.

The competition, open to boys and girls ages 8 to 15 who compete in separate divisions, is free. However, all entrants must possess a youth services membership card.

For more information, call 545-3070.

YS offers programs — Youth Services offers a variety of programs for children in tae kwon do, tumbling, piano and dance.

Fees for the classes range from $20 to $25 per month.

Registration takes place Monday through Friday from 8:30 a.m. until 4:30 p.m. at Youth Services, Building 1056, for youth family members of active duty and retired military personnel and Department of Defense employees.

All children who participate must possess a YS card, which costs $20 per year, per family, and can be purchased at the YS administration office and the Main Post Youth Center, as well as all community outreach centers. All sports registrations are conducted at the YS administration office.

For more information, call 545-3070.

Golfer shoots double eagle in tournament

By John W. Peeler
Special to the Bayonet©

Bob Osborne and David Pursley came out on top during the 1996 Club Championship Saturday and Sunday at the Follow Me Golf Course, but everyone was talking about Ron Greene.

Greene shot a double eagle on the par-5, 433-yard ninth hole.

"A double eagle is an extremely rare shot in golf," George Cliff, resident golf pro, said.

"I have seen four holes in one, but this is the first double eagle I have ever seen."

Greene finished third in the championship flight B division.

In championship flight A division, Bob Osborne set the pace with a two day total of 148.

David Pursley took the top spot in the championship flight B division with a 155 total

Jim Fowler, John Middleton, Bill Powell, Napoleon Johnson and Joe Araujo won the first through fifth flights.

Billy Conner took first in the 50 plus, open senior division; Ed Davis wrapped up first in the 65 plus, super senior's division; and Roy McCage locked up first place in both active duty and active duty, 40 plus, seniors division.

Jon Blossom and Robert Thompson received special awards for closest to the hole on hole seven.

The Follow Me Golf Course conducts the Fort Benning Ladies Golf Association annual championship Monday and Tuesday followed by the Commanding General's Payday Golf Tournament Oct. 4.

For more information on the upcoming tournament, call Cliff at 687-1940.

Cross-country runner sets sights on Army 10-Miler

By Lisa M. Hibbert
Bayonet staff writer

This soldier-athlete represents corporate sponsors that provide him with energy bars and a complete line of athletic wear. He runs two miles in eight minutes and 49 seconds, making him perhaps the fastest runner on post.

Twenty-seven year old Spc. Samuel A. Bobbitt of the U.S. Army Physical Fitness School currently trains for the Army 10-miler in Washington, D.C., and the five-mile Governor's Cup in Columbia, S.C.

Bobbitt, who finished third in the 1995 Army 10-miler, said he began running seriously while a senior in high school in 1987.

"I got put out of the marching band because I missed summer camp," Bobbitt said quietly. "Band took up so much of my time and I needed something to fill that void, so I joined the track team and took up cross-country running."

Do not mistake Bobbitt's soft-spoken tone for a lack of fervor as a runner. Bobbitt, a Rocky Mount, N.C., native ran so well that year that he landed college scholarship offers. Bobbitt said there is nothing unusual about being offered a scholarship after training for just one year.

"I got a scholarship offer to attend Appalachian State University (in North Carolina) but the coach left to go to Clemson University (in South Carolina)," Bobbitt said. "I had the opportunity to follow him, but I didn't think I would have gotten enough scholarship money because of the out-of-state fees."

Instead, Bobbitt ran for Wallace College, in Hanceville, Ala., in 1988.

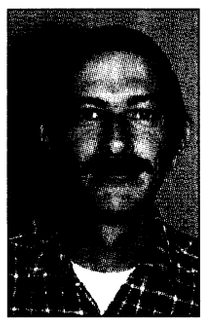
"I stayed there for one semester, hated it, and I knew it was time for me to leave," het said.

The University of North Carolina at Wilmington became Bobbitt's next home, from which he graduated in 1994 with a degree in physical education.

The 5-foot-10-inch, 147-pound Bobbitt said he joined the Army in 1994 to get a break between college and to get the $20,000 Army College Fund.

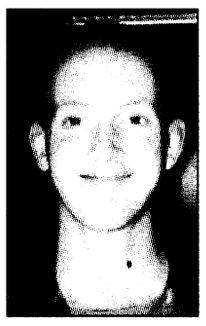
"I was a holdover after I went through basic training at Sand Hill because I had been recommended for the World Class Athlete Program by my drill sergeant," Bobbitt said. (The World Class Athlete Program allows soldiers to train exclusively for the Olympics two years prior to the games.)

Bobbitt began working at the U.S. Army Physical Fitness School where he trains on his own for upcoming races.



"I have to compete and place in the top percentile to keep my sponsors (Adidas and Powerbar)," Bobbitt said.

Bobbitt said he got his sponsors by just submitting resumés.



Although Bobbitt only planned to serve two years in the Army, he recently re-enlisted and plans to apply for the Officer Candidate School.

Champion returns to challenge

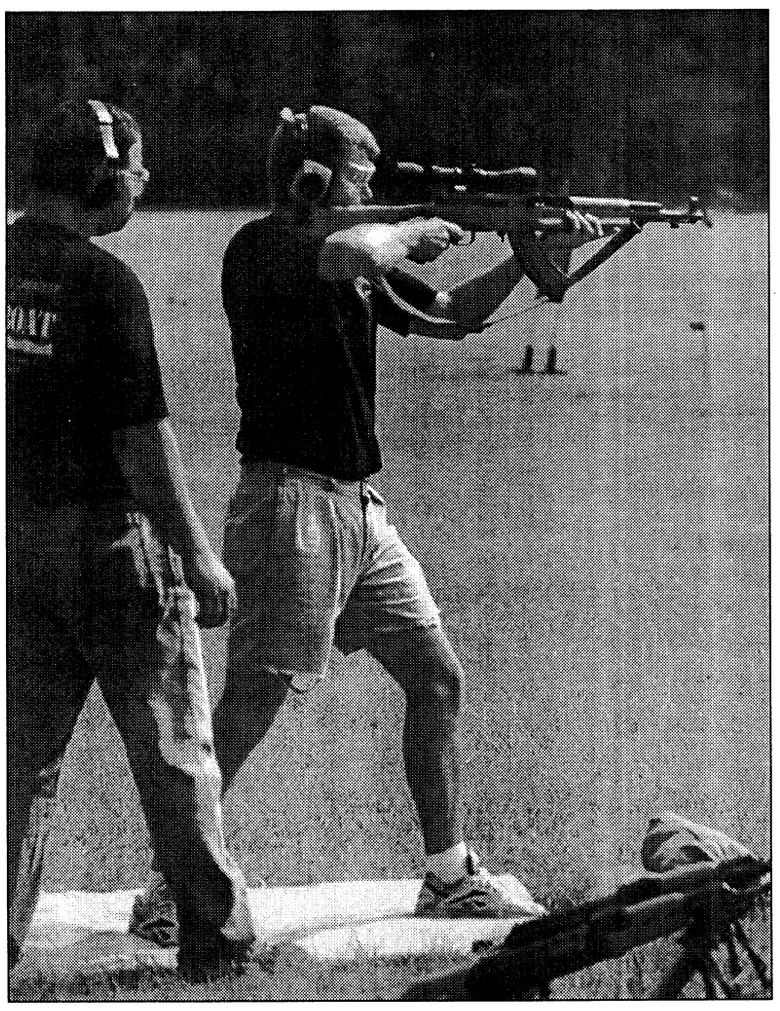
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Last year's Buick Challenge champion, Fred Funk, returns to Callaway Gardens Sept. 26 to 29 to defend.

But the biggest gallery probably will follow Tiger Woods who won his third amateur title in as many years before turning pro.

Woods, here to play and seeking to win enough prize money before the end of the season to earn his PGA card and avoid having to go to qualifying school, receives the Fred Haskins Award for most outstanding collegiate golfer of the year.

Funk and Woods lead the pack of top golfers in a stellar field, which includes Mark Brooks, Jim Gallagher Jr., Scott Hoch, Davis Love III, Larry Mize, Loren Roberts, Clarence Rose, Hugh Royer III, Curtis Strange and Fuzzy Zoeller.



While the tournament runs from Sept. 26 to Sept. 29, the Larry Mize Pro Am takes place Sept. 23 and the AFLAC International Sept. 25.

Sept. 27, Military Appreciation Day, members of the military and their family members receive free admission to the tournament as well as Callaway Gardens. The Association of the United States Army sponsors the day along with Callaway Gardens and the Buick Challenge.

This include retirees and reservists and Department of Defense civilians who possess identification cards.

Last year some 7,000 military members and their families took advantage of this offer, made possible through the Association of the United States Army, Buick and Callaway Gardens.

For more information, call Art Murphy at 545-3273.

Shooters take aim in all steel match

By John W. Peeler
Special to the Bayonet©

More than 70 competitors from the tricommunity area gathered at English Range English Saturday to compete in the monthly all-steel pistol match.

Shooters competed in competitor class, standard (civilian) class, military (active duty) class and new shooter class.

The course of fire for the match included three stages with shooters firing at Brussels paper targets and steel poppers.

The match included a side match for exotic rifles, including replicas of the Chinese SKS, AK-47 and AR-15, with shooters taking aim at aggressor targets.

Shooters tested their aiming skills at the shoot and move position that included a moving "bad guy" and "good guy" target. Firers received a 10-point deduction for hitting the "good guy" portion of the target.

First through third-place winners received awards in four major classes, team trophies for first through fourth place, trophies for first place through third place for the rifle side match and a trophy for the high bolt action rifle.

The next all-steel pistol match takes place Sept. 15 at English Range with the next tactical pistol match on Oct. 5. For more information, call Jim Graham at 689-3371.

USAMU soldiers win trophies

By Anna O'Leska
U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit

U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit Running Target shooter Armando R. Ayala recently placed first in the 10-meter Mixed Running Target Competition during the 1996 USA Shooting National Championships at Fort Benning.

For the first time since 1981, Fort Benning served as the site for the USA Running Target Shooting National Championships. Also, this marked the first time the USAMU won first, second and third place in the 10-meter mixed.

USAMU won the 10-meter 30 plus 30 team match with a score of 1,651, the 50-meter 30 plus 30 team event by 30 points with a score of 1,707, and the 10-meter mixed team event by a very wide margin, a score of 1,122, beating out the National Guard, the National Reserve and the National Teams.

This competition determined members for the U.S. Running Target National Team, which will represent the United States in all upcoming major international matches. The National Championships begin the selection process for the 1997 U.S. Team.

"I'm excited about winning my first national championship and am really happy to make the National Team, Ayala said. "I'm really looking forward to the world-class championships."

Ayala made the National Team two years in a row. He said he feels his training at USAMU helped him become a better shooter not only because of the training but because of the the coaches' support and the practice time.

"The first year Ayala made the team, he did so by out shooting the top competitors at the U.S. selection match in February," said Troy Lawton, running target coach. Now, six months later he made the national team by placing in the top five in the 10-meter 30 plus 30 which is an Olympic event."

"Ayala placed 14th in the 10-meter Mixed 20 plus 20 match last year," Lawton said. "Now, a year and a half later, he took first place."

Taking top honors at the 10-meter Mixed Runs Match were two other USAMU competitive shooters: Lance D. Dement. second place, and Michael E. Johnson, third place.

"Second place is good," Dement said. "I feel pretty successful for the short time I've been shooting running target, but next year I'll do a lot better."

Dement said he felt the amount of training time and support and the state-of-the-art guns and ammunition USAMU provided allowed him to achieve this level of expertise in such a relatively short period of time.

"This is the first National Championship Team Match that I participated in," third-place trophy winner, Johnson said, "and the strongest team I've ever shot with."

Fort Benning BASS Club plans meeting — The Fort Benning Bass Anglers and Sportsman Society Club conducts its biweekly meetings the second and fourth Tuesday of each month at the Don C. Faith Middle School cafeteria at 7:30 p.m.

The club offers membership to active duty soldiers, retired military and Department of Defense civilians and their family members.

For more information, call Steve Ward at 569-5705.

Post requires hunter safety course — Hunters born on or after Jan. 1, 1961, must attend an approved safety course if they wish to hunt in Georgia, including Fort Benning.

The Georgia Department of Natural Resources Hunter Safety Course takes place Sept. 14 in Infantry Hall, Classroom 5, from 8:30 a.m. to 3 p.m.

Students must bring their Social Security numbers with them.

For more information, call Harley Chase at 545-4812.

Ga. State Parks offer canoe trips — Georgia State Parks offer canoe trips for beginning and experienced paddlers at various parks.

Participants explore some of Georgia's most scenic waterways while on guided canoe trips.

Park staff explain basic canoeing techniques and interpret natural surroundings while leading canoers on day-long trips.

Paddlers with a sharp eye see beaver, otter, king fishers, great blue herons or other wildlife.

The $15 cost per person includes canoe, paddles and life preserver.

The parks offering these canoe trips include:

• Panola Mountain State Park, Stockbridge, Ga., Sept. 21. Call (770) 389-7801 to register.

• High Falls State Park, Jackson, Ga., Oct. 19. Call (912) 993-3053 to register.

The parks charge a $2 park pass fee per vehicle.

Outdoors women workshop set for Oct. — The Department of Natural Resources, Wildlife Resources Division, offers a weekend Becoming an Outdoors Woman Program at the Eagle 4-H Center Oct. 4 to 6 in Eatonton, Ga.

The program aims to teach both beginners and those with outdoor experience the skills needed to participate in a wide array of outdoor activities.

The $125 cost for the weekend before Sept. 15 includes lodging, meals and use of equipment. The registration fee rises to $150 after Sept. 15.

The workshop accepts registration on a first-come, first-served basis. Contact the Wildlife Resources Division at (770) 918-6400 for more information.

BOSS to conduct bass tournament — A bass tournament at Uchee Creek Camp Ground and Marina takes place Sept. 28.

Sponsored by the Better Opportunities for Single Soldiers, the tournament, conducted from 6:30 a.m., or safe light, until 3 p.m., costs $30 per boat, plus a $5 optional, big bass pot.

Only large mouth bass measuring more than 16-inches and spotted bass measuring more than 12 inches will be weighed, with a limit of seven fish per boat.

Pick up tournament rules and entry forms at Uchee Creek and Ranger Joe's barber shop Sept. 14. Turn in entry forms and fees to Ed Hannaman at Headquarters Company, 1st Battalion (Airborne), 507th Infantry Regiment, or Howard Givens at Uchee Creek. Participants may register at Uchee Creek the morning of the tournament.

For more information, call Ed Hannaman at 545-3828 or 545-829.

Officials remind watercraft operators to follow rules, laws

Georgia Dept. of Natural Resources

Conservation rangers encourage all boat operators to boat smart, boat safe, and boat sober.

"It is imperative for personal watercraft operators to know and follow the rules of the water," said Georgia Department of Natural Resources Col. V.J. Garrison, chief of Law Enforcement. "When personal watercraft operate at high speeds near docks, shorelines, or other boats, they can endanger swimmers, anglers, other boaters and themselves."

Personal watercraft, such as water-propelled boats, account for more than 18,000 of Georgia's 298,000 registered boats. The number of personal watercraft involved in accidents increased in recent years. The percentage of total boating accidents involving personal watercraft rose from 8 percent in 1990 to 30 percent in 1995. While last year's total of 30 personal watercraft accidents makes the highest total recorded in Georgia, this year records 18 accidents so far.

"Personal watercraft operators often take advantage of their boat's mobility and speed," said Garrison. "We receive a large number of complaints and face the continual threat of serious accidents when personal watercraft operate at high speeds near publicly inhabited areas or other boats. Personal watercraft operators need to slow down and obey the law."

"Accidents and falls overboard can happen in the blink of an eye," Garrison said. "Adults can be a positive role model for children and teaching them the importance of water safety."

During the 1995 Fourth of July weekend, conservation rangers made 81 boating under the influence arrests. This number of BUIs jumps from the 1994 Fourth of July weekend total of 39 BUIs. The historical perspective shows that BUI arrests increasing steadily ever since BUI laws became effective in 1986.

These statistics prove recreational boaters need to heed water safety rules.

"If boat operators continue to boat while under the influence of alcohol or drugs, Georgians can expect to see an increase in the number of accidents on their waterways," Garrison said. "Not only will these accidents cost Georgia boaters thousands of dollars, but more importantly these accidents may also cost some people their lives."

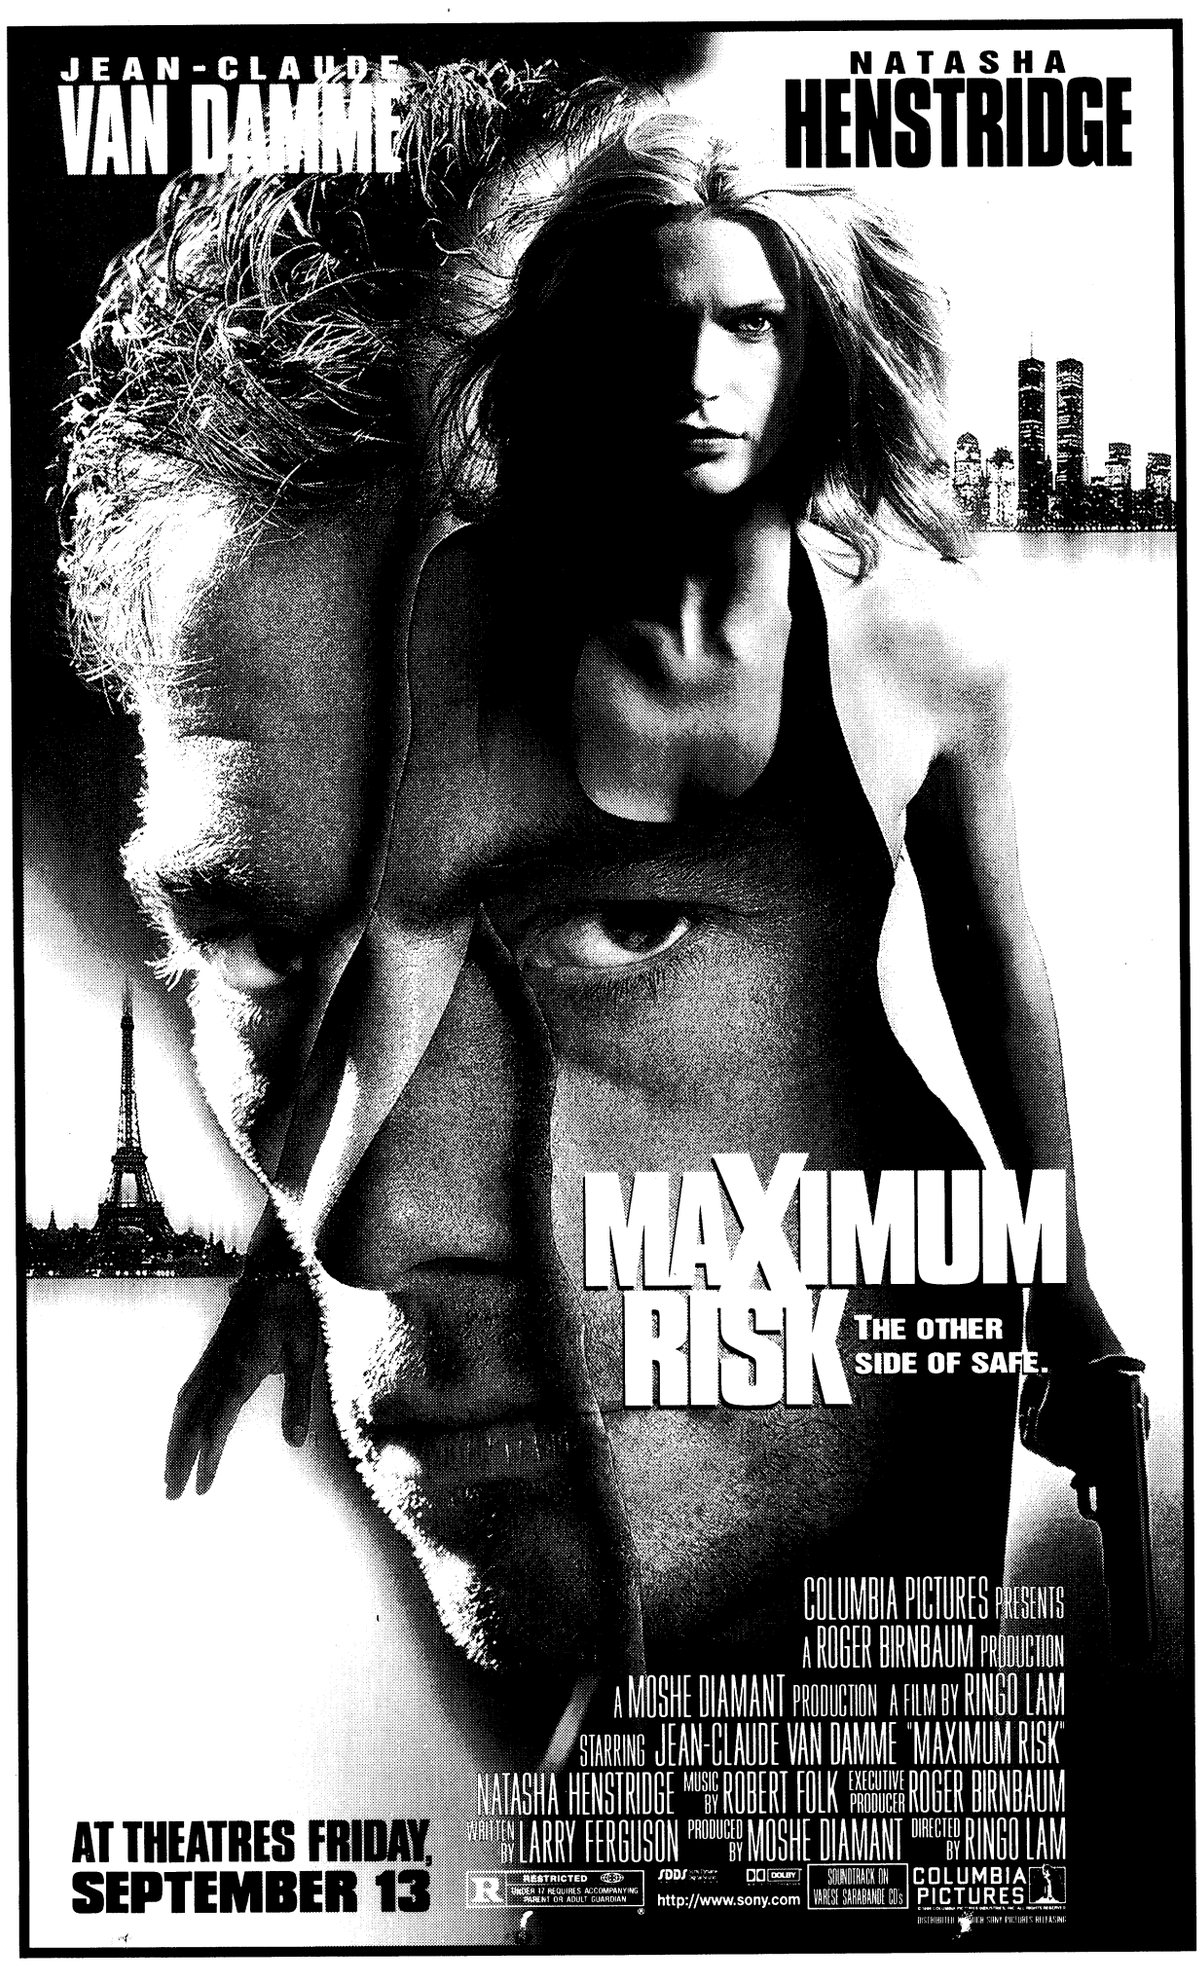
Studies done by various public health groups show that consumption of alcohol impedes peripheral vision, color perception, ability to focus, coordination and judgement. Wind, noise, glare, vibration and other factors compound this in the boating environment. Boat operators impaired by alcohol endanger themselves and those around them, particularly, in situations where good judgement prevents life-threatening situations. Unfortunately, many boaters disregard the dangers and continue to drink and boat.

Boaters caught operating a vessel under the influence of alcohol face stiff fines and penalties. Boat operators caught while intoxicated for their first offense receive a ticket and fines costing up to $1,000. Both BUI and driving under the influence arrests apply the same blood alcohol levels — .08 presumptive and .10 absolute.

"DNR conservation rangers realize that people are out on the water to have fun, but we encourage boaters to leave alcohol on the dock and wait until after the boating is over to begin drinking," Garrison said. "If, however, people take alcohol out on their boats, we encourage them to designate a boat operator and carry soft drinks or other nonalcoholic beverages for that person to enjoy throughout the day."

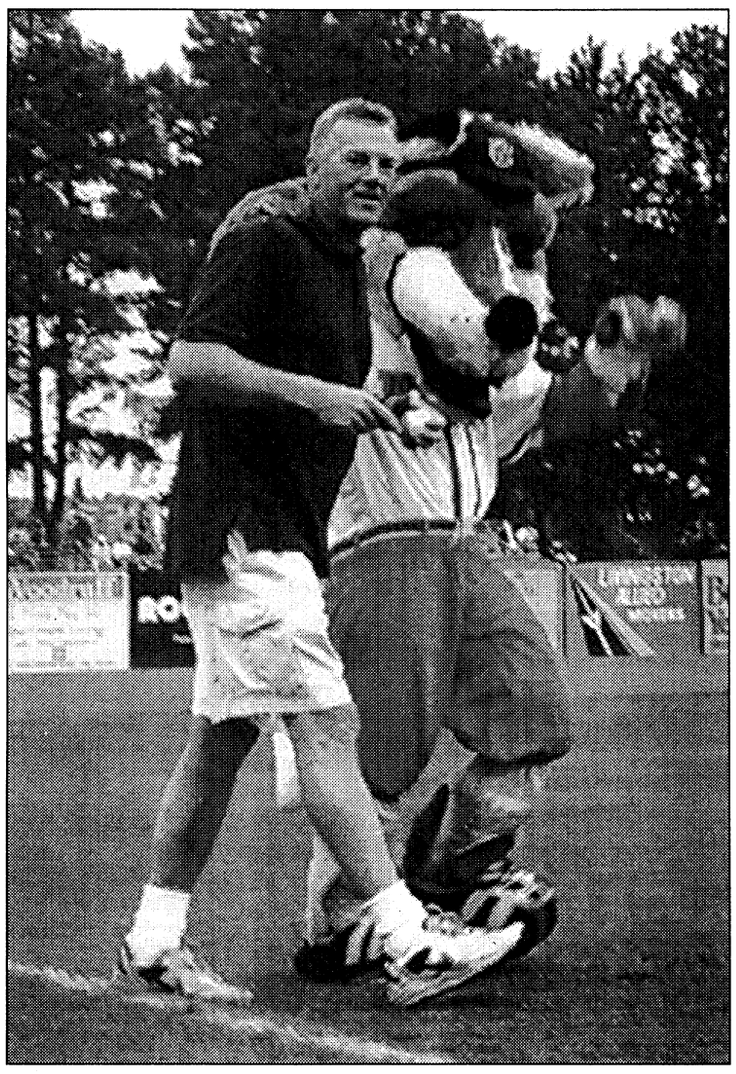
Follow these tips:

• Georgia law requires all boaters to carry a life jacket for each person on board any vessel. In addition, the new law requires children under 10 years of age to wear a life jacket at all times when on a moving boat, unless the child is in an enclosed cabin, according to the Department of Natural Resources, Wildlife Resources Division.



• In the past six months, conservation rangers arrested more than 150 people for boating under the influence. Boating accidents involving alcohol resulted in three fatalities so far this year. The Department of Natural Resources Wildlife Resources Division urges boaters to stay sober and designate a boat operator who will abstain from drinking alcohol while on the water.

• Fast, fun and the most rapidly growing segment of registered boats in Georgia and throughout the country — personal watercraft. But, while these water-propelled boats can quickly zip in and out almost anywhere, there are some places that they cannot operate at high speeds.



For more information on boating safety in Georgia, call the Wildlife Resources Division Law Enforcement Section at (770) 918-6408.

The Changing Face Of Technology
SYSTEMS PROFESSIONALS
At Blue Cross and Shield of Florida, Inc., technology has become a top priority. The ever-changing nature of the healthcare arena has demanded creative solutions. And we are meeting that demand with the help of our dedicated technical professionals.
Many people don't fully realize the extent of our commitment to technology. No longer limited to processing insurance claims, the focus of our business has shifted to attaining relevant technology in a timely basis to remain competitive. In order to accomplish this, we've implemented a team approach to providing cost effective and creative conceptual solutions to problems. If you are a multi-faceted professional with a minimum of 2+ years experience with one or more of the following areas, talk with us about current opportunities to become one of our solution providers.

PowerBuilder	WEB Design
Visual Basic	C/S 3-tiered messaging architecture
GUI	Oracle (or similar RDBMS)
UNIX	Communication/network technology
C, C++	Workflow technologies

In addition to working as a valued team member, you will enjoy a competitive compensation and benefits package, and all of the perks of living in Money Magazine's #3 best place to live in the United States - Jacksonville! MWR wants feedback

USAIC Public Affairs Office

The Army Community and Family Support Center wants to know your morale, welfare and recreation needs as it prepares to conduct the 1996 Morale, Welfare and Recreation Leisure Needs Survey.

The survey, which begins sometime in the next several weeks, provides an opportunity for soldiers, family members and civilians to have a major impact on the morale, welfare and recreation programs at Fort Benning, according to Brian Smith of the Directorate of Community Activities' Marketing Office.

"Soldiers, family members and civilians will receive the survey through unit coordinators at major subordinate commands and civilian coordinators at directorates," he said. "The responses affect MWR programs and ultimately their quality of life."

Nearly 6,000 service members, their spouses, Army retirees and Department of the Army civilian employees were randomly selected by computer to complete this survey.

Smith said survey participants have two weeks to return the form to the unit or civilian directorate coordinators.

"We encourage participants to complete the survey," Smith said. "The data collected provides the information necessary for the morale, welfare and recreation program managers to assess recreational needs and customers' level of satisfaction with MWR programs.

Survey results assist officials in identifying strengths and weaknesses of MWR programs and ultimately serve to improve responsiveness to customers' needs, he said.

Improvements as a result of previous surveys include Fort Benning's Uchee Creek Campground and Marina and the Destin, Fla., recreation area, Smith said.

"These facilities lead the Army in quality outdoor recreation and were a direct result of the Leisure Needs Surveys in 1987 and 1991," he said. "Your vote counts and significantly impacts you and your family members' quality of life at Fort Benning."

Combined Federal Campaign to begin

Kickoff set Oct 2 at Officers' Club

USAIC Public Affairs Office

The Combined Federal Campaign kicks off Oct. 2 at Fort Benning and continues through Nov. 15.

The annual CFC fund drive allows federal employees to donate to various charities in a single fund-raising campaign. The post's goal for this year's campaign is $500,000. The kick-off ceremony takes place Oct. 4 at 11:30 a.m. at the Fort Benning Officers' Club.

"CFC is a one-time shot at donating to a particular charity," said Doris Willis, CFC coordinator.

"The emphasis of this year's campaign is to ensure that all military personnel, family members and Department of Defense civilians are contacted, informed and given an opportunity to contribute to CFC," said Col. Byron D. Greene III, garrison commander. "The campaign has a different look this year with the code number 9001 instead of the traditional 5001. This new number allows everyone to contribute to the Fort Benning community. This number allow us to help ourselves and continue to make Fort Benning the best installation in the world."

When contributors mark codes 9001, their donations go to the Soldier and Family Support Association, a fund that pays for services and provides equipment and supplies for various activities on post, according to Marge Copland, administrator. Contributions made to code 9000 go to support associations in Columbus and Phenix City.

Soldiers and Department of Defense civilians begin pledging their donations Oct. 2 by contacting designated personnel in their offices or units.

Soldiers and civilians make contributions in one of two ways — payroll deduction or a one-time donation using cash, check or money order, Willis said. The minimum donation for either is $4.

The charities selected come from the national CFC list, which provides a four-digit code for each charitable organization and includes hundreds of nationally and internationally known charitable organizations, from emergency relief organizations to medical research institutes to environmental protection agencies. Donors write the code of the organization on their pledge forms, she said.

"Code 9001 benefits Fort Benning agencies only and code 9000 benefits Columbus and Phenix City agencies," she said. "These are great choices for soldiers and civilians who want to see their donations stay local."

9001 benefits Fort Benning; 9000 helps Columbus, PC

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Contributors to the Combined Federal Campaign who earmark their donations for code 9001 help Fort Benning agencies. Those who choose code 9000 make donations to Columbus and Phenix City agencies.

According to Marge Copland, administrator of the Soldier and Family Support Association, money donated to 9001 directly benefits Fort Benning. Donations to code 9000 help Columbus and Phenix City support agencies.

The Soldier and Family Support Association fund provides support for post organizations and services, including youth and handicap programs, Santa's Castle, volunteer services, lending closet, food locker, Army Community Service, Red Cross, family support groups, community improvement, Boy and Girl Scouts and others.

The Soldier and Family Support Association allocates the money received from 9001 donations according to expense requests submitted by the various post organizations helped by the fund, she said.

Michelle Aldridge, Army Family Action Plan coordinator, said the 9001 fund contributes to a successful installation AFAP symposium

"Other CFC organizations are worthy, but 9001 is the only organization that truly benefits the total Army community of Fort Benning," she said. "With many charities, you might not ever directly see the results of your donation; but, with 9001, you see exactly where your money is going. — back to the community at Fort Benning."

Every soldier on post, especially those with children, benefit by contributing to the 9001 fund, according to Doris Willis, CFC coordinator.

"Peoples' contributions really do make a difference," she said. "Many programs benefit from contributions through the 9001 fund."

What: Code 9001 and code 9000, part of the Combined Federal Campaign

Purpose The only CFC codes devoted entirely to the Fort Benning community and Columbus and Phenix City agencies

Agencies to benefit: Code 9001, the Soldier and Family Support Association, helps support post organizations and services, including youth and handicap programs, Santa's Castle, volunteer services, lending closet, food locker, Army Community Service, Red Cross, family support groups, community improvement, Boy and Girl Scouts and others.
Code 9000 benefits Columbus and Phenix City family support agencies.

Post seeks bids on utilities

By Brian R. Voller
Bayonet staff Writer

Fort Benning residents may soon use civilian-owned water, electricity and gas.

If a Department of Defense initiative to study the privatization of military installation utilities proves financially beneficial for the installation, Fort Benning residents will begin to receive their utilities from civilian-owned companies, according to Roy A. Bethel, chief of Energy and Utilities Division, Directorate of Public Works.

"The privatization of utilities is a DoD initiative," Bethel said. "DoD wants every installation to look at their utilities and go through a privatization evaluation process to see if it is more economical for the government to run our utilities or for the private sector to run our utilities.

"So the whole process is to see what is the most economical way for the government to obtain the utilities."

According to Bethel, currently almost all installations in the Army are examining privatization of utilities. He said only a few installations have actually awarded a contract to a civilian utility company.

Bethel said Fort Benning sent out solicitations for water and the electrical services, but the gas solicitation will not be released for bid until the installation determines if the electric and the water bids are beneficial to the installation.

Bethel said several companies showed an interest in bidding on the Fort Benning contracts. Bids must be in to the Fort Worth District Engineer by Oct. 1, and as soon as the bids are received a technical and economical evaluation will be made.

The technical part of the evaluation will determine if the contractor has the experience or staffing to perform the job. The economic portion of the evaluation will compare the bidder's proposed price to the cost to perform the same service with government equipment and the government work force.

Bethel also said the solicitations stipulate certain guidelines for the companies to meet or exceed if they are awarded a contract. For example the quality of water must meet the national standards, and if the national standards change during the time of the contract, the company must meet those new standards.

If a contract is awarded for a utility, Bethel said, the company receives a contract for a period of ten years, and becomes the owner of the utilities system. For example the substation, the current water supply and any other property involved with the utility system will become the property of the company.

Bethel said if a change in ownership occurs, Fort Benning residents will not see any changes in their water or electricity.

"The residents of Fort Benning will never know the difference when the change is made," Bethel said. "The residents will not be charged a water bill or an electric bill. Everything will remain the same as it is now."

Bethel said, after bids are received it will take approximately 30 days for the Fort Worth District's portion of the evaluation. Then the bids must be forwarded to the secretary of the Army and to the Army Power Procurement Officer for final approval.

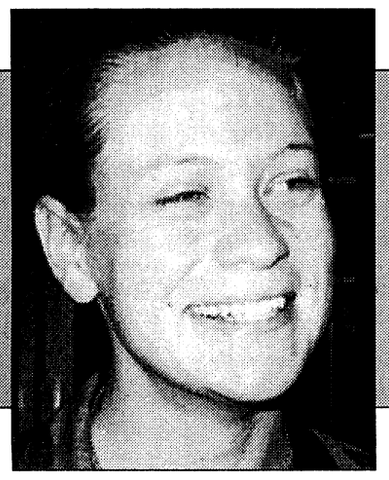
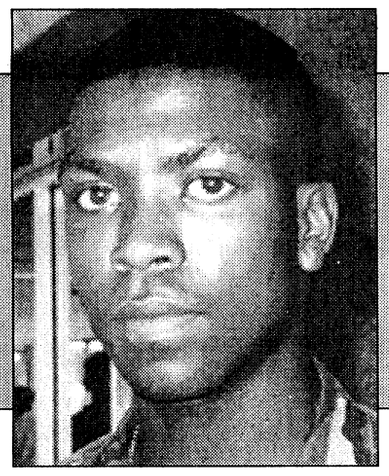
VARIOUS VOICES

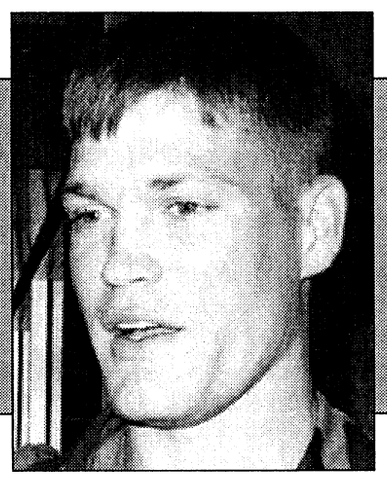


How will Military Appreciation Day at Callaway Gardens and the Buick Challenge help boost soldier morale?



Deniz Mazuranic, family member — "I guess it helps them and their families because there's not much to see in Columbus. It's a chance to get out and see other things."

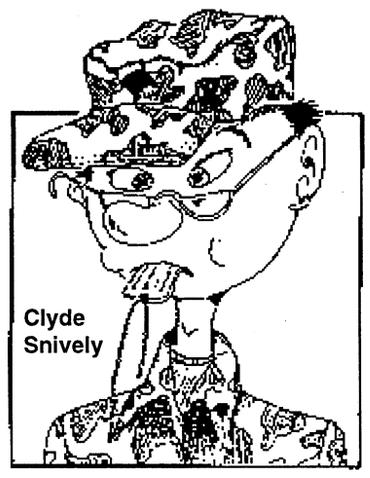
Retired Master Sgt. Jim Mitchell — "Anytime someone in the community is willing to do something for the soldiers, it lets them know we appreciate them. This lets them know the community still loves and appreciates them for the sacrifices they make."



Spc. Caryn L. Bumpstead, Better Opportunities for Single Soldiers program — "It's good because soldiers can get together and meet other soldiers from Fort Benning. Also, they get a good day to relax after a long summer."

2nd Lt. Lee W. Greene, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 2nd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment — "Basically, it gives them something to do because there's really not much to do around here. I look for a lot to do."

Spc. Tammy R. Moore, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment — "It's giving them a nice event in a place that they usually have to pay a lot to get into. It's a family-oriented atmosphere that they can enjoy."



2nd Lt. Tobin A. Magsig, Company C., 2nd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment — "Soldiers will see how much the community cares for them, and it provides them feedback for the great job they're doing."

Buick Challenge invites soldiers to watch pro golfers

By Clyde Snivley
Bayonet columnist

commentary

Saddle oxfords. Orange, green and blue polyester pants with a black and white, vertically stripped polo shirt, topped off with a plaid tam'o'shanter.

If you see anyone dressed like that at the Sept. 27 Military Appreciation Day at Callaway Gardens, it will probably be a ranger, not a golfer.

Golfers used to wear outfits like that. But since women took up the sport, they became more conservative in their ensemble except perhaps for Payne Stewart who still wears his knickers.

Anyway, this is to remind you that you need not spend your training holiday looking at the four walls of a barracks room while you smash your brains out with Pearl Jam, or haunt the halls of the malls seeking ways to spend money or pickup teenyboppers.

Instead, you can be in Infantry Country (the great outdoors) watching grown men trying to put small, white, dimpled balls into a hole in the middle of a sea of perfectly manicured green grass.

Some say watching a golf match is as exciting as watching grass grow. But then they weren't watching Sunday when Freddie Couples, who'll be here next week, sank a 25-foot putt on the 17th hole to win the President's Cup for the American team. He did this even as his fellow teammates valiantly tried to snatch defeat from the jaws of victory, as they did in the Ryder Cup.

OK, so you're still not convinced. Tiger Woods, the kid who just turned professional after winning three straight amateur titles, is just another name to you. Fuzzy Zoeller is just another guy who whistles while he works, and Davis Love III is a runt of a golfer who has a knack of hitting 300-yard drives. Nothing there for you.

If spending some time watching them doesn't excite you, fine. You can still go to Callaway Gardens where you can check out the native flora and fauna or to one of the unit barbecues and stuff yourself on food a lot better than you'd find at the local fast-food restaurant.

For those of you without wheels, Fort Benning is providing buses. And they'll even bring you back.

And finally, if you have to be bribed, the Association of the United States Army, which is sponsoring this along with Buick and Callaway Gardens, thought of that, too.

Like last year, there'll be door prizes. There'll be vacation trips, stereos and even cash. This leaves you with one last excuse for not going — have to get up too early in the morning.

Sorry about that.

Hispanic Heritage

Commanding general encourages participation in ethnic observance

In recognition of Hispanic Americans and our nation's ethnic and national diversity, I proclaim Sept. 15 through Oct. 15 as National Hispanic Heritage Month at Fort Benning, focusing on this year's theme, "Hispanics: Challenging the Future."

Hispanic Americans' military and civilian contributions reflect a deep commitment to the principles of freedom and democracy, which make up the strengths of the United States.

The Hispanic community includes generals, admirals, philosophers, statesmen, musicians, athletes, and Nobel prize-winning scientists and continues to make significant contributions to our society. The various Hispanic cultures contribute significantly to our American society.

I encourage all personnel on Fort Benning and in surrounding communities to participate in this observance through the planned activities by units, staffs and other agencies.

— Maj. Gen. Carl F. Ernst
Commanding general

Caution: It's better to be safe than sorry

By Monica Manganaro
Deputy Public Affairs officer

Most of us know something about safety, but knowing about safety and actually practicing it can mean the difference between getting a little hurt or worse.

commentary

Recently, our commanding general rejuvenated a safety campaign out of concern following a recent traffic accident. I know we talk a lot about safety in the Army, but not everyone gets the message.

Our office, like any other unit or office on post, conducts a safety briefing before every major holiday. We include donuts, which is an added incentive for attending, but the main reason we look forward to the safety briefings is our lieutenant makes them interesting.

In the old days, we'd moan and groan about attending the safety briefings. Quite frankly, they were downright boring. She changed all that. She uses creative means to get the messages across, and that makes a difference.

On the Fourth of July, she gave each of us a small American flag with a safety message rolled up around the staff. Another time, we each read a safety message pulled out of a yellow hard hat (she's an engineer, by branch). We never know what she'll spring on us, but it always makes an impression.

Whether it's her message or her method, she's a success. We are now accident free. Before this, our safety record needed improvement.

One employee had a record comparable to that of Scotty Pippen of the Chicago Bulls, with one injury after another. Accidents just found her, or so she said. She accidently injured herself one time while walking in the woods. Instead of keeping the person ahead at a safe distance, she followed too closely. Predictably, a branch snapped back and hit her in the eye. She not only missed work, but wore an eyepatch for sometime after that.

She became a casualty again during a friendly match of volleyball with her co-workers. She knew better, but she wore open-toed sandals during the game anyway. Needless to say, she was sidelined after a hefty player landed on her big toe. This time she lost a toenail, plus it cost the office two days of work.

Perhaps accidents just find her, but I'm more inclined to think she just doesn't heed the safety messages. These accidents were avoidable.

So, how do we get people to practice safety? Talk about safety, but be imaginative and say it often. New soldiers or employees come in everyday who need to hear the message. Sure, a few safety experts exist, but for most of us, it's an ongoing lesson. Make it an interesting one.

THE BAYONET

wants your safety ideas, stories

If you have a safety story you'd like to share, we'd like to hear it. Perhaps an accident was avoided because of the quick thinking of someone in your unit, or maybe you have a personal experience with a lesson for others. Let us know. Also, we'll tell others about how your unit or office gets the safety message across, especially if it's creative. Your safety message doesn't have to be told the same way month after month. Get creative and tell us about it! Call us at 545-4622 or write to:

Soldiers remember comrade

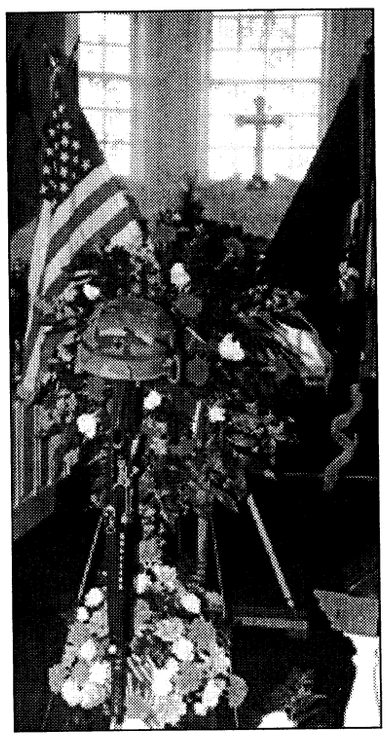
By Lisa M. Hibbert
Bayonet staff writer

Soldiers gathered at The Infantry Center Chapel Sept. 13 to remember a comrade who died recently.

Spc. William T. Nolan Jr. of Company A, 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment, and a member of the Briant Wells Field House staff, died from multiple head injuries after falling from the back of a moving pickup Sept. 11.

Nolan's survivors include his wife, Kristina, his stepchildren Adam and Krystal, his daughter Brittany, all of Coshocton, Ohio; his parents William and Mary Nolan of Cincinnati, Ohio; and his sister, Jennifer Benzinger and nephew Nicholas, also of Cincinnati.

"Nolan was not only a soldier to me but also a friend," said Sgt. 1st Class Jose F. De La Torre, Nolan's platoon sergeant. "I loved him like a son, and I will still love him like a son. Nolan will never be missed by me because he is still with me and always will be."



De La Torre recounted memories of Nolan to the mourners gathered at the ceremony. He described the 30-year-old Nolan as a caring person who always went above and beyond to help.

"We were like a family," De La Torre said. "We created a team that survived a shortage of people, shortage of equipment and many stresses. Nolan was a part of that team."

Master Sgt. Michael R. Pflanz of the Directorate of Community Activities described Nolan as a dedicated soldier.

"Whenever I went over to Briant Wells, I saw Specialist Nolan," Pflanz said. "He impressed me with his dedication and his willingness to volunteer to help and go above the call of duty."

During the service, Lt. Col. Richard G. Kaiura, commander of 1st Bn., 11th Inf. Regt., laid an Army Commendation Medal by the boots, identification tag, M-16 rifle and Kevlar helmet that symbolized Nolan's presence.

Lisa M. Hibbert

Spc. William T. Nolan Jr.'s boots, identification tags, M-16 rifle and Kevlar helmet symbolize his remains at the memorial service in The Infantry Center Chapel.

Kaiura said he presented the award to honor Nolan's meritorious service at Fort Benning.

Throughout the service, a somber mood pervaded the chapel, and the silence was filled with the words of the 23rd Psalm, read by Spc. Tristan C. Smith: "... Even though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I will fear no evil, for you are with me: your rod and your staff, they comfort me. ..." (NIV)

First Sgt. Leticia Westlake of Co. A, 1st Bn., 11th Inf. Regt., called out for Nolan's name three times during the traditional final roll call.

At the conclusion of the ceremony, Maj. Gen. Carl F. Ernst, post commanding general, paid tribute to Nolan before heading out by saluting the symbolic display of empty boots, Kevlar helmet, M-16 rifle and ID tags.

AUSA to present President's Award to post employee

By Brian R. Voller
Bayonet staff Writer

After almost 30 years of dedicated service to the Association of the United States Army, a retired command sergeant major and government employee receives the second highest award given at the annual AUSA convention Oct. 14.

Jim Gallagher, executive officer of the Combined Arms and Tactics Directorate, receives the President's Award at the AUSA convention in Washington D.C.

Gallagher said when he received a phone call from AUSA president, retired General Jack N. Merritt, he was not expecting to be told he was getting an award.

"I was just shocked when I got the call," Gallagher said. "When I picked up the phone General Merritt's secretary was on the phone. I thought to myself, 'I wonder what General Merritt wants our chapter to do, or what is he checking the status on.' But when he got on the phone, the first thing he did was congratulate me. I was caught completely off guard."

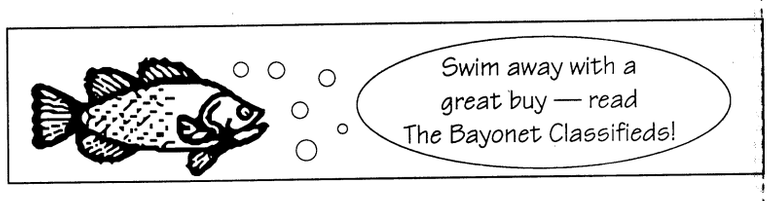
Despite the prestige of the President's Award, Gallagher said he doesn't feel he did anything outside of what he considers normal.

"I don't think I did anything beyond what I am expected to do," Gallagher said. "I just did what I thought was expected of me in the position I was in, so for me to be recognized at the national level for what I considered to be normal duties is a really great honor for me."

Wayne Andrews, president of the Fort Benning-Chattahoochee Valley Chapter of AUSA, and vice president of military banking at Columbus Bank and Trust said Gallagher's ability to work and get things done sets him apart from other people.

"Jim Gallagher is a creative guy that comes up with ideas and makes those ideas happen," Andrews said. "But many people have good ideas. What sets him apart is how he rolls up his sleeves and makes things happen. He's not afraid to get down and work for something he believes in."

Gallagher



Col. Gregory C. Camp, chief of staff of the U.S. Army Infantry School, said he couldn't think of a person who deserved the President's Award more.

"The President's Award is an unbelievably high-level award," Camp said. "That just shows how much not only we here at Fort Benning think of Jim Gallagher, but also how much he is thought of at the national level. He is so deserving not just because of what he's done for AUSA as an organization, but what he has helped AUSA do for the soldiers at Fort Benning."

Camp said Gallagher distinguishes himself because of his commitment to soldiers both during his military career and after he retired.

"He was a command sergeant major here at Fort Benning before he retired, and I can't imagine anyone who took better care of soldiers as a sergeant major than Jim Gallagher," Camp said. "But the thing is, he hasn't retired. He's off the payroll of the active Army, but he's still taking care of soldiers."

Gallagher said after he receives the President's Award and after having the local AUSA chapter name an award (the Gallagher Award) after him, he plans to continue his work with sporting and entertainment opportunities for soldiers. He said he has several ideas he wants to incorporate into AUSA and he'll take the next few years making sure they happen.

Better Opportunities for Single Soldiers

Army officials shun extremism activities

Better Opportunities for Single Soldiers

Army officials say soldiers' personal beliefs remain their own. But, a few exceptions exist. Extremist views and belonging to extremist organizations represent two things the Army does not tolerate, according to Spc. Michael T. James of the Better Opportunity for Single Soldiers program.

Army Regulation 600-20 prohibits soldiers from actively participating in extremist organizations that espouse supremacist causes, discrimination or violence in an effort to deprive someone of their civil rights.

The Army protects the rights of soldiers by educating them on its policy of fair and equitable treatment for everyone, said Master Sgt. Beverly Riley of the installation's Equal Opportunity Office.

Although these organizations target single soldiers for recruitment, she said, less than one percent of the Army's total force has seen extremist activities or knows someone who is a member of an extremist organizations. Education and awareness provide the best protection for soldiers, she said.

"Commanders must be prepared to take appropriate action when their soldiers are identified as members or participants in hate groups or extremist organizations," said Secretary of the Army Togo D. West in a May 1996 policy memorandum to all commanders. These soldiers would be considered for removal of security clearance, bar from the Army, as appropriate, he said.

"Boss representatives at all levels are required to report to their command quarterly of any known extremist activities in their units," James said.

"Soldiers must be made aware of the repercussions of this type of behavior and adhere to the rights of all, regardless of race, color, creed, gender, religion or national origin," he continued. "It's only right and fair to treat others with respect," he said. "Doing so will carry over and build long-lasting friendships."

CENA TIPICA

SOA sponsors dinner, honors month

By Judith O'Toole
School of the Americas

To recognize the differences of each Latin American nation, every September, in honor of Hispanic Heritage Month, the School of the Americas sponsors Cena Tipica, a Spanish term for typical dinner. The event celebrates Hispanic heritage with dance, food and friends.

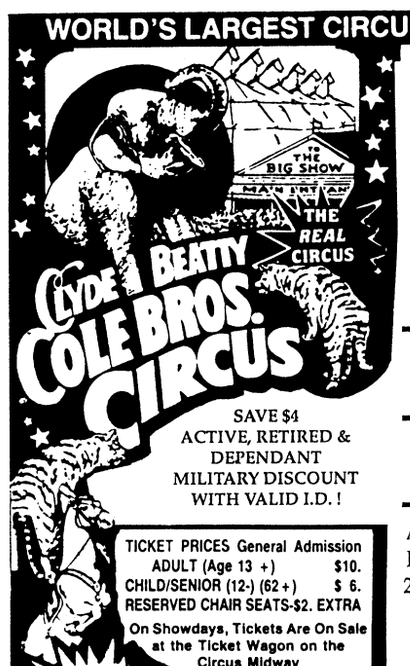
The day before Cena Tipica, participating Latin American nations present country displays to the area's school children. Last year, more than 1,000 students viewed the displays. The Latin Americans show their differences with various displays.

While at the different booths, visitors view items like jewelry, leather goods, pottery, money and clothing. The people in the booths also answer questions about the country's geographical, economic or cultural appearances, said Maj. Pedro Rivera, SOA chief of staff.

The night of Cena Tipica, however, presents a different atmosphere, with music and dancers.

Representatives of each country presents a unique appetizer to share with the guests. After this social time, dancing and dining takes place.

Dinner includes authentic dishes from several Latin American countries.



The dancers wear brightly-colored costumes, most somewhat sparkly, others just kind of plain. The countries plan for a good representation of social or economic groups with the different costumes.

One thing remains certain, said Nivia Butler, SOA protocol officer, when most people participate in Cena Tipica, they not only receive entertainment and enjoyment by the dancing and great food but also they learn a lot about the different cultures in Latin America.

Dept of Army announces options

Retirement Services Office

The Department of the Army announces eligibility requirements and early retirement application procedures for the fiscal 1997 Noncommissioned Officer Reduction program.

This program, part of the overall drawdown program for fiscal 1997, includes the Voluntary Separation Incentive Program and the Voluntary Early Release and Retirement Program.

Eligible soldiers include staff sergeants with more than 15 but less than 18 years of service by date of retirement, promotable staff sergeants with more than 15 years, sergeants first class with more than 15 years; and sergeants first class promotable with more than 18 years of service.

Only those soldiers in military occupational specialties not listed below can apply. Headquarters DA makes no exceptions to policy to this program.

Applications must be at the Department of the Army Personnel Command by Dec. 15. Personnel officials notify soldiers of approval or disapproval by Feb. 14, with retirements occurring no later than June 30.

Soldiers should check with their personnel sergeant or commander to determine their eligibility or inquire on the Internet by contacting the PERSCOM online home page.

Soldiers in the following MOS are prohibited from applying

Hall of Fame honors former USAMU shooter

USAMU Public Affairs Office

The Chattahoochee Valley Sports Hall of Fame named a former shooter of the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit as its most recent honoree.

The Hall of Fame Committee announced at a noon luncheon Sept. 11 in the RedStixx Room at Golden Park in Columbus plans to induct retired Lt. Col. Lones W. Wigger Jr.

The Hall of Fame, established with the purpose of recognizing individuals from the Chattahoochee Valley region who distinguish themselves through their talents and achievements in the world of athletics, honors Wigger during an induction ceremony later this year.

Wigger, also a member of the marksman unit's Hall of Fame, carries the title as the USAMU's greatest international rifleman. This year, the U.S. Olympic Committee named him as one of the top 100 outstanding Olympians of all time.

Wigger

He started shooting with his father in Montana and achieved four-time All-American status at Montana State. Wigger enrolled in the Army Reserve Officers' Training Corps program hoping to get in the USAMU.

He began active duty in 1960; and, after his basic course, he served with the Marksmanship Unit where he remained until 1963 when he left active duty. Six months later, Wigger returned to active duty and to the USAMU where he shot for the unit from 1963 to 1967.

Wigger returned to the USAMU in 1972; and, in 1977, he became the officer in charge of the International Rifle Section, a position he served in until he retired from the Army in 1987. He continued to contribute to the U.S. shooting program as the director of the U.S. Shooting Team until 1992.

In his more than 20 years of world-level competition, Wigger won 65 Gold, 38 Silver and eight Bronze medals, including Gold Medals in free rifle at the 1964 and 1972 Olympic Games. He also set 13 individual world records and participated as a member of 14 world-record-setting teams.

Fort Benning to recognize POWs, MIAs

By Jacqué Hill
Special to the Bayonet©

In remembrance of prisoners of war and those missing in action, today marks the national POW, MIA Recognition Day, and Fort Benning conducts a ceremony at 2 p.m. in Infantry Hall's Marshall Auditorium.

During today's ceremony, soldiers and civilians pay tribute to former American prisoners of war, personnel still missing and the families of both.

Lt. Col. Alfred E. Dochnal, director of operations, Joint Task Force - Full Accounting, Camp Smith, Hawaii, speaks at the event.

"Men and women of Joint Task Force are deeply committed to conducting the fullest possible accounting of everyone," he said. Dochnal plans to show videos of the accounting mission of the Joint Task Force, as well as a video of some of its previous cases.

"I'll show a video of some of our famous and more spectacular cases, but by no means are they unique," he said.

He explained every case the Joint Task Force investigates goes through basically the same process.

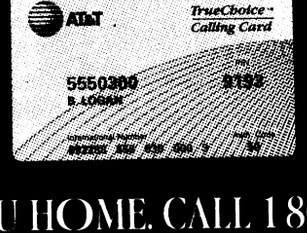
"The process to account for somebody is really time consuming and meticulous," he said.

After Dochnal speaks, Col. Gregory C. Camp, post chief of staff, presents a replica of Iron Mike, the infantryman statue, to Dochnal as a memento of his participation in the ceremony.

Bart Vigo, project officer, Directorate of Operations and Training, said the ceremony continues to place emphasis on POWs and those missing in action.

"We can never forget or stop searching for our fallen comrades," he said.

Dochnal echoed Vigo's sentiment.



"(Our ongoing searches) show our commitment to our fallen comrades and that we will never forget them," he said.

Sgt. Paul Townsend crawls under a protective works designed to direct a blast outward places plastic explosives on top of two pieces of unexploded ordnance before inserting blasting caps into the C-4 and then pulls the fuses to detonate the explosives.

Soldiers built this design to shield overhead power lines from the explosion caused by the detonation.

Explosive ordnance company tests skills with protective works

By Brian R. Voller
Bayonet staff Writer

While moving through the land navigation course, a basic training soldier finds a piece of metal resembling an unexploded 40 mm round. The soldier identifies the ordnance to his drill sergeant who, in turn, calls the 89th Ordnance Company (Explosive Ordnance Disposal) to detonate the unexploded round. Unfortunately the round lies directly below overhead power lines, which forces the EOD team to find alternative means to dispose of the round avoiding damage to the lines.

EOD specialists solve this kind of situation by using protective works to deflect the blast, and Sept. 6, soldiers from the 89th Ord. Co. (EOD) conducted testing on several different protective works scenarios.

According to Staff Sgt. Philip Quillen, team leader, protective works involve building a cushion or a type of obstruction to help protect a building or other objects that cannot be damaged by an explosion.

"The scenario we trained on involved finding a piece of unexploded ordnance in an area near a building, pipe lines or overhead power lines," Quillen said. "The soldiers had to build protective works that would allow the piece of ordnance to be destroyed while deflecting the blast so the structures near the ordnance would not be damaged or destroyed."

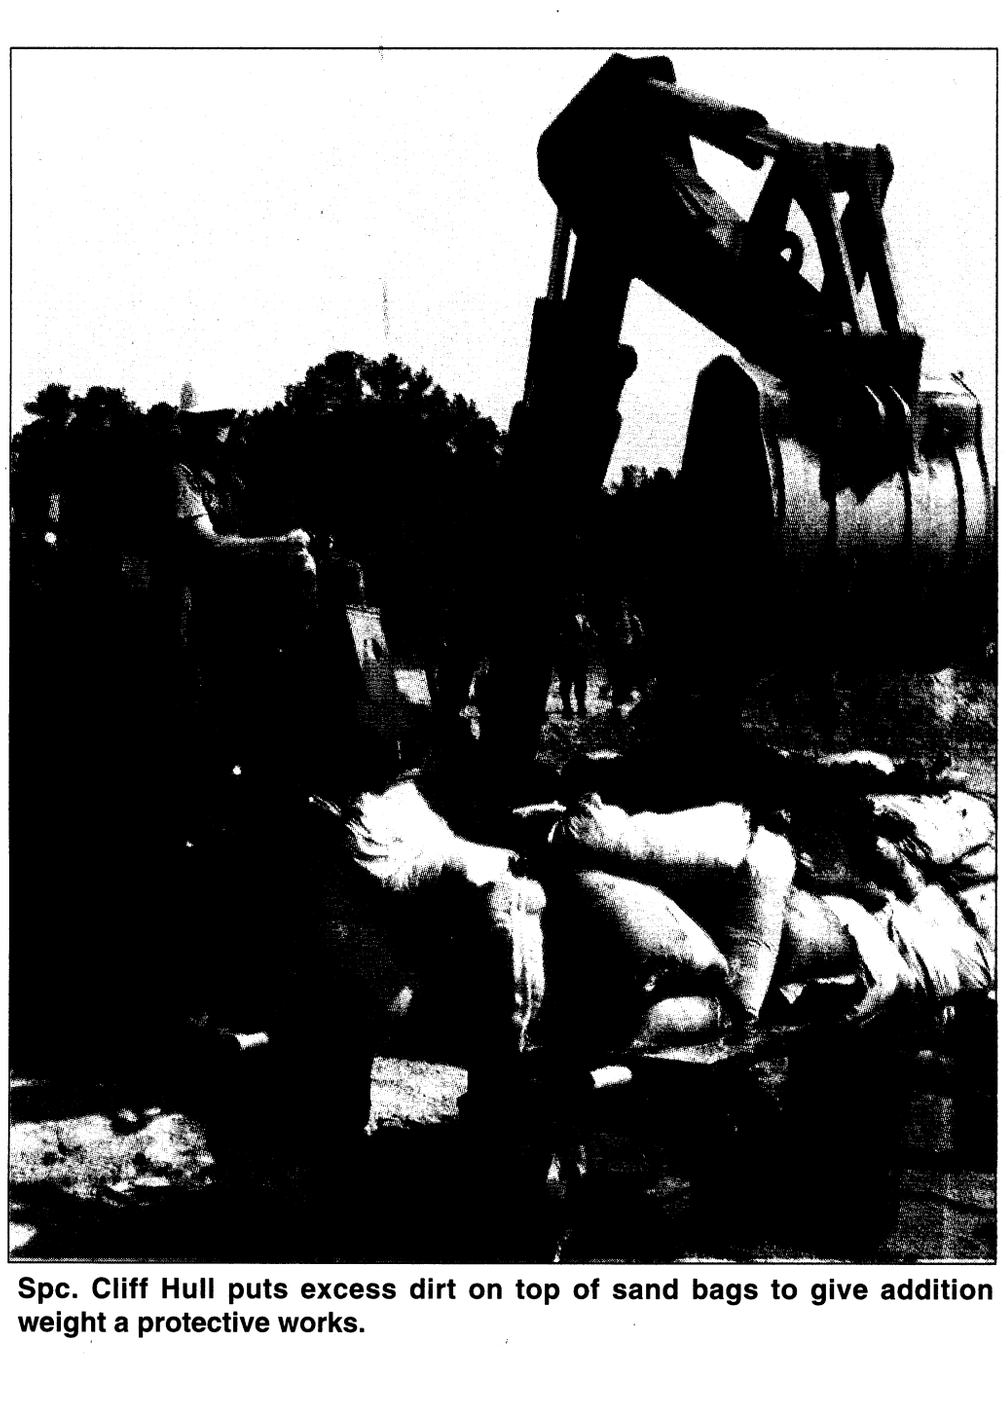
Quillen said the soldiers in the unit do not receive materials to build the obstructions. He said they take materials from the surrounding area to build their protective structures.

"Soldiers do not encounter a protective works problem very often," Quillen said. "But the soldiers need to know how to handle the situation when they encounter it. We set up scenarios where there was limited access, limited materials and limited personnel. We tasked the soldiers to build protective works with only the materials they could find in the given area. Then we tested their protective works by detonating an explosive device to see how the blast effected the surrounding area."

The 89th Ord. Co. (EOD) trains with protective works, said Capt. Mike Durham, 89th commander, because the soldiers do not receive hands-on training in protective works during EOD school.

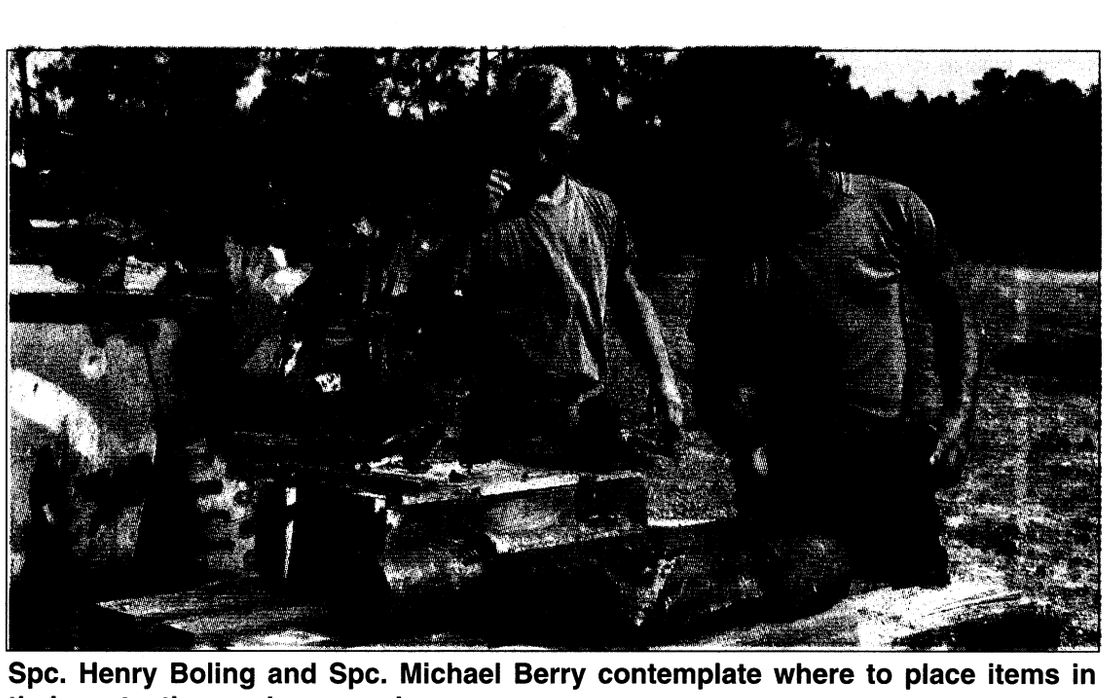
"The soldiers are not directly taught protective works during EOD school," Durham said. "They receive some book training, and there is the possibility of some training during their BNCOC (Basic Noncommissioned Officer Course), so the only training they receive in protective works happens here. It's a problem that can occur."

During the training, the EOD soldiers divide into three teams, and each team receives a separate scenario to overcome, Quillen said. The three different scenarios included building a protective works to protect a building, to protect overhead power lines or to design a protective works for use in a neighborhood where the blast needs to vent directly upward.



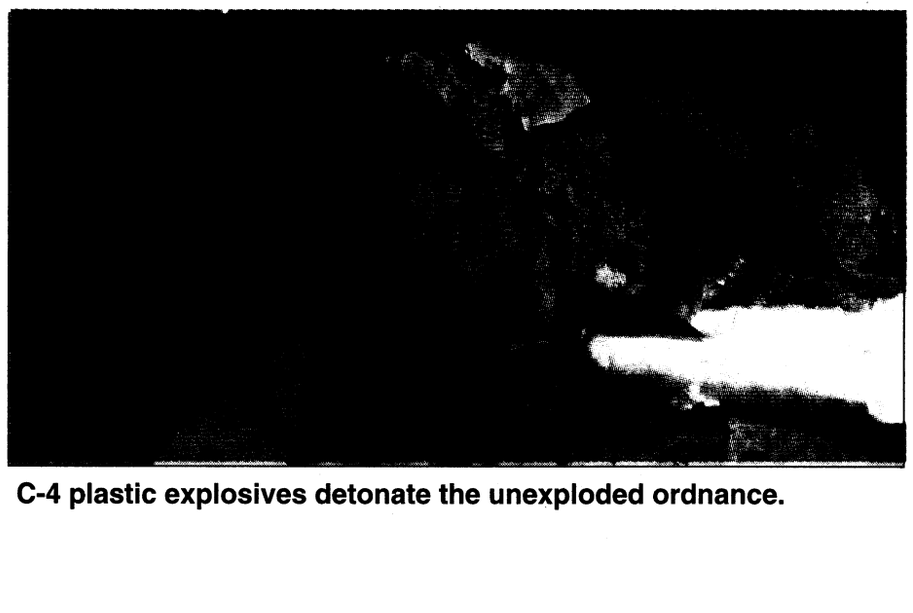
Each of the three teams received a different scenario during the training exercise, and each team tested its solutions using live explosives.

Durham said he decided to conduct the protective works training after he read several after-action reviews from EOD commanders during Desert Storm that said protective works was an area that needed to be improved upon.



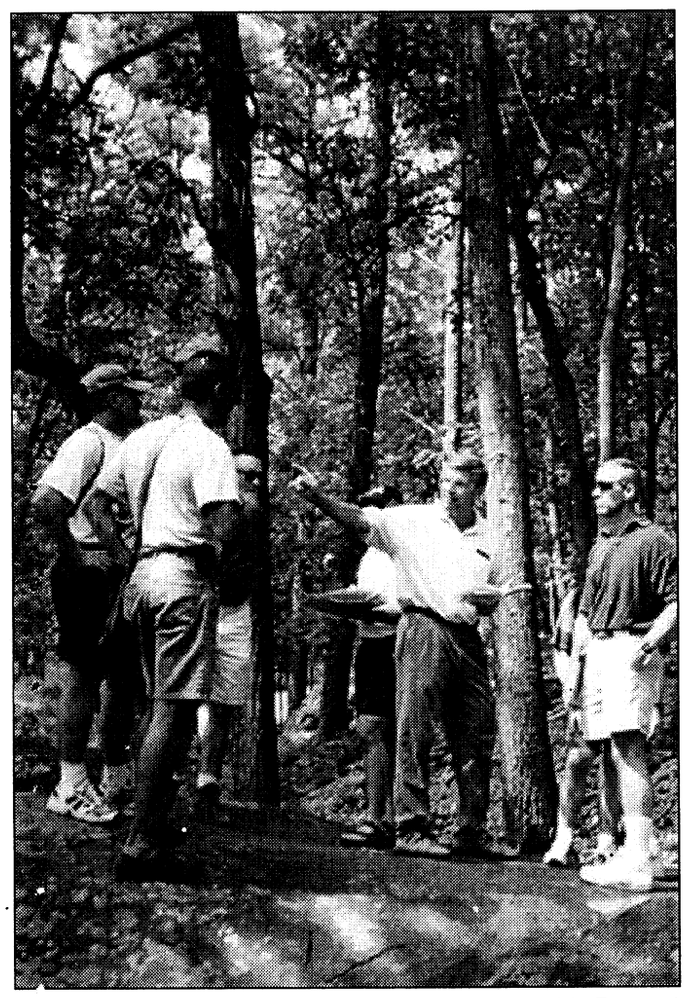
Durham said the training they conducted taught them what is actually required to deflect an actual blast.

"We gained a genuine assessment of what is actually required when building protective works," Durham said. "Initially I thought that four or five sand bags would deflect a 40 mm blast. But it actually requires more like 40 to 50 sand bags."



In addition to protective works, the 89th Ord. Co. (EOD) also specializes in finding and disposing of possible explosive devices. They work in southern Georgia, the Florida panhandle and Alabama providing explosive ordnance disposal assistance to the military, civilian corporations and the civilian police force. Also, the 89th also supplies assistance to the U.S. Secret Service, Department of Defense and the State Department.

Spc. Cliff Hull puts excess dirt on top of sand bags to give addition weight a protective works.



Spc. Henry Boling and Spc. Michael Berry contemplate where to place items in their protective works scenario.

C-4 plastic explosives detonate the unexploded ordnance.

Ranger leaders assault Green Manor

John Townsend

Members of the 75th Ranger Regiment gather around Green Manor Turf Farm as part of a staff ride to civil war sights. The tour gave the rangers insight into Civil War leaders' decision-making processes. The staff ride helped build esprit de corps and strengthen battalion camaraderie.

By John Townsend
3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment

Leaders of the 3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment, recently conducted an airborne assault onto the Green Manor Turf Farm, just west of Gettysburg, Pa.

The drop zone placed the rangers directly between where Confederate Maj. Gen. Henry Heth met the Union Brig. Gen. John Buford.

The rangers arrived more than 133 years too late to impact the outcome of the battle fought there July 1 through 4, 1863. They conducted the jump on the outskirts of Gettysburg one day before starting a staff ride of the battlefield.

The staff ride provided the battalion's leaders insight into the Civil War leaders' decision-making process, built unit esprit de corps and strengthened battalion camaraderie.

Before the jump the rangers conducted a leader professional development seminar at the Fort Benning Officer's Club. At the seminar, rangers discussed the personalities of the battle's key leaders, events leading to the battle, soldiers' load, the development of light infantry tactics and actions on the battlefield — all of which facilitated a greater understanding of the Battle of Gettysburg once rangers were on the ground.

Two colonels from the Army War College led the two-day staff ride and provided the expertise required to lead the rangers from one historic site to another with insight and vignettes at each one.

The staff ride traveled the footsteps of both the Blue and the Gray starting at a statue dedicated to an ancestor of one of the battalion's members, Sgt. 1st Class John Burns. The statue depicted a 72-year-old man, the mayor of Gettysburg, who upon the arrival of the Confederate forces, took up arms with the North to protect his own land.

The next stop was Seminary Ridge, followed by Cemetery Ridge, Devil's Den, both Big and Little Round Tops, Culp's Hill and the "Angle."

Before the staff ride's conclusion, the participants walked the very ground that Maj. Gen. George Pickett led his heroic one-mile charge over open terrain against the defending Union troops on Cemetery Ridge.

"This has been a great training event," said Lt. Col. Michael Ferriter. "Our leaders really learned to appreciate the effects of terrain, space and time on the battlefield. It was also a great team builder."

Upon the completion of the staff ride and presentation of coins and certificates to the guides, the rangers conducted an airborne assault onto Fryar Drop Zone, each with perhaps a greater appreciation of history and the actions taken by the soldiers of the past.

Promotion freeze ends

Army News Service

WASHINGTON — Privates first class looking for that early promotion to specialist have good news coming later this month: The Army lifts the freeze on early promotions to E-4 effective Oct.1.

Waivers will be calculated at battalion or separate company level based on current E-4 authorizations. The time-in-service requirement for accelerated advancements is 18 to 25 months and the minimum time-in-grade remains three months as a private first class. The waiver ceiling is 5 percent.

The Army announced details in the Headquarters Department of the Army Monthly Cutoff Score Memorandum for September 96.

3rd Brigade storms multi-service mission

By Robin A. Shawlinski
3rd Bde., 3rd Inf. Div. (Mech.)

The Bradleys roll across the terrain, continually searching for a target. The enemy vehicle fires mobility kill. A Marine helicopter calls in the enemy's position. The M-1A1 Abrams acquires the target and move in to begin their assault. An Air Force F-16 flies their path overhead. The Abrams fires and destroys the enemy.

This set the scene for about 250 soldiers from the 3rd Brigade Combat Team, 3rd Infantry Division (Mechanized), who deployed to Camp Shelby, Miss., from Aug. 11 to Sept. 6 to participate in an All Services Combat Identification Evaluation Team '96 exercise.

The soldiers that made up Task Force 1-15th, included soldiers from Company A, 1st Battalion, 15th Inf. Regiment, Co. A, 2nd Bn., 69th Armor, and elements from 1st Bn., 10th Field Artillery and the U. S. Air Force Tactical Operations Control Party.

Throughout the exercise, the soldiers trained with elements from the Air Force, Marine Corps and Navy to help evaluate, investigate and assess different concepts and technologies of combat identification on the battlefield, according to Task Force 1-15th commander, Lt. Col. Tad Davis.

The Department of Defense established ASCIET in 1994 in an effort to improve joint tactics, techniques and procedures across all combat identification mission areas.

Aside from testing tactics, techniques and procedures, the exercise also tested more than 40 government-sponsored developing technologies. ASCIET 96 focused on air-ground and ground-to-ground missions.

"We're looking for truth data, not what the players believed happened" said William Rierson, fire support data analyst. "We assist the units with the operations while we're here. When we're done we take the data, crunch the numbers and analyze it."

Soldiers from Co. A, 2nd Bn., 69th Artillery, attacked the Leaders Reaction Course, performed some common task training and received classes on heat injury, environmental safety and drug and alcohol abuse. They also received about four hours of practice in the Unit Conduct of Fire Trainer.

"This whole exercise has been a valuable learning experience," said Capt. Darren Holbrook, Co. A, 2nd Bn., 69th Armor, company commander. "As part of the exercise, we learned that situational awareness was very important, and we got to conduct training that we needed to conduct."

profile in excellence

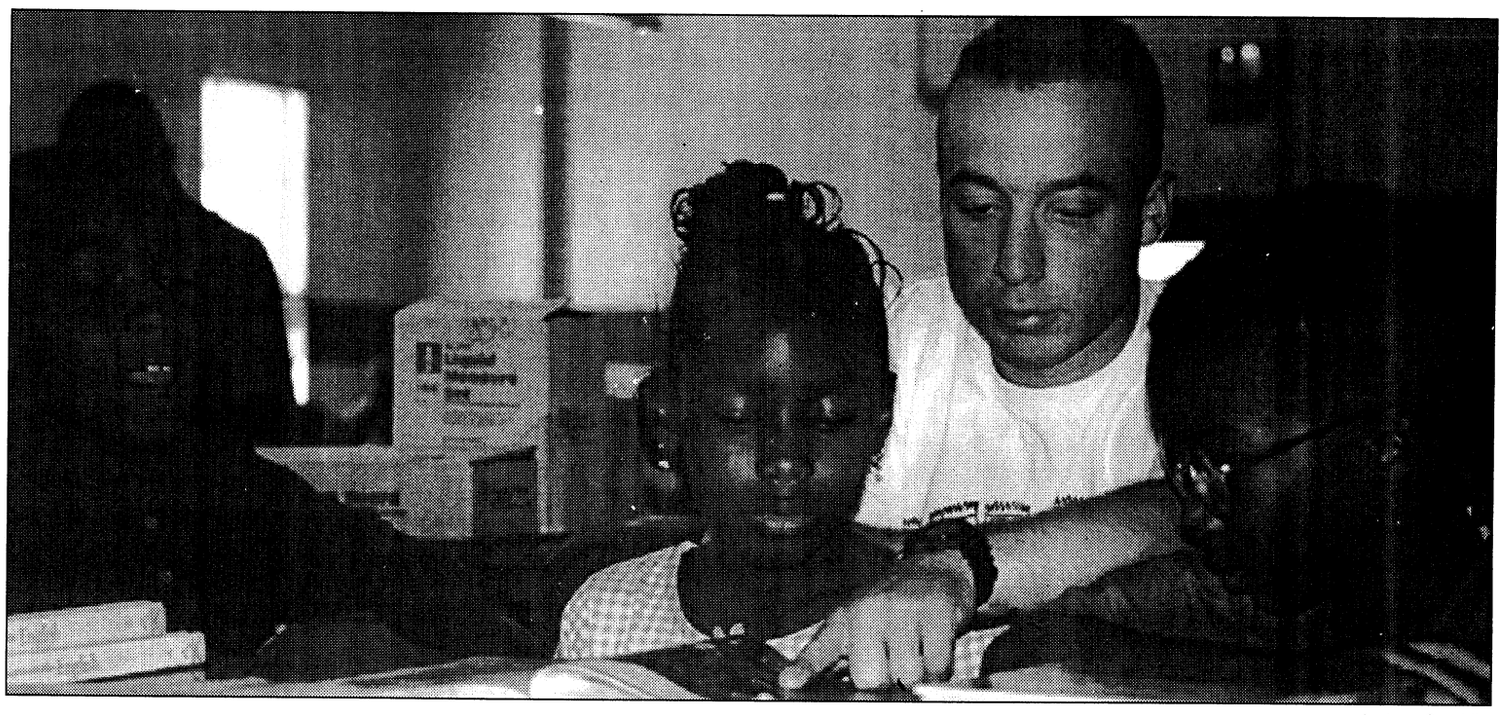
Name: Spc. Kevin Phipps

Award or recognition: U.S. Army Infantry Center Soldier of the Quarter
Unit: 75th Ranger Regiment
Job title: Administrative specialist
Years on the job: 15 months

What were your reasons for joining the Army?
I believe the military experience offered by the Army would be extremely beneficial to my placement in the FBI or other federal law enforcement agencies.

What person has most influenced your career?
Retired Lt. Col. George E. Smith, my grandfather. I think he would have been proud of my accomplishments.

If you were sergeant major of the Army for a day, what improvements would you make?
I would increase the level of discipline. I feel discipline is something today's soldier lacks considerably. As sergeant major of the Army, I would instill more discipline in soldiers by raising standards and demanding respect for higher ranking noncommissioned officers and officers.



What were your reasons for choosing your MOS?
At the time, it was the only military occupational specialty that offered me a slot with a ranger contract.

Describe a memorable moment in your career.
A lot of emphasis has been placed on the importance of winning these events. Being able to represent the 75th Ranger Regiment and winning the competition makes this even more meaningful.

What are your future career plans?
I still have my sights set on the FBI, but I'm also considering aviation via Warrant Office School.

What others have to say about you.
Phipps is a model ranger: tough, physically fit, mature and he has an excellent understanding of his role in the larger picture. He exhibits great initiative and consistently exceeds the standards of excellence by which the 75th Ranger Regt. measures itself. He is a truly outstanding soldier who is a great asset to any organization. He will succeed at anything he wants to do.

The School of Americas celebrates its 50th anniversary Wednesday at 10 a.m. in front of its headquarters, Building 35. Joe Reeder, undersecretary of the Army, speaks at the ceremony as well as Gen. Jaime Guzman, minister of Defense for El Salvador.

A reception follows at the Officers' Club.

System offers employees access to admin records

Directorate of Civilian Personnel

The paperless world of administrative records comes soon to Fort Benning' civilian employees.

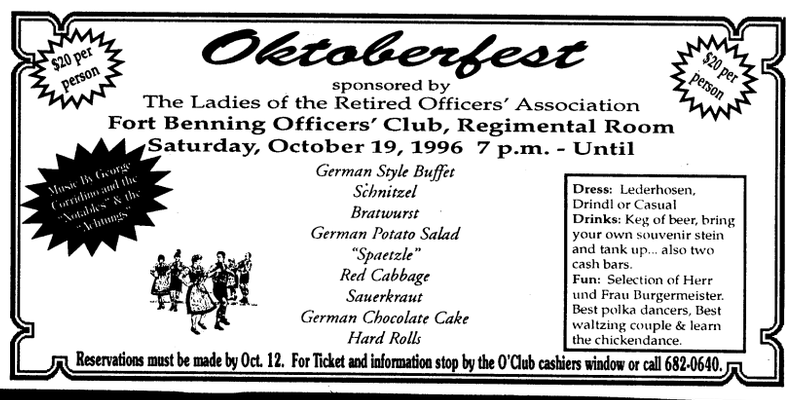
A new Employee Express System gives the employee control to access and manage his or her own records.

Only permanent Department of Defense and Department of the Army government employees will be able to use this system.

No temporary employees are allowed to use it. The employee will be able to change federal exemptions, allotments, home address, direct deposits, federal employees health benefit and the thrift savings program.

This system becomes effective Nov. 11.

Civilian employees reach the system via a phone communication system, 24 hours a day, seven days a week. By dialing (800) 827-6270 employees access a huge personnel computer system in Washington D.C. Voice instructions will then be given.



To use the system, callers need to punch in their Social Security number and a pin number, which will be mailed to their home address by Nov. 11.

The first pin number is issued free; but, if you forget or lose it, you will have to pay $1.80 for a new number. You will be given the option when you activate you pin number to change it to a number that will be easier for you to remember.

The system was created by a group of federal agencies. Brochures will be distributed by Directorate of Civilian Personnel.

For more information, call Michelle Flemming at 545-2470 or 545-3374.

Staff Sgt. Greg Biltz, Jumpmaster Branch, 1st Battalion (Airborne), 507th Infantry Regiment, practices for his upcoming brush with fame. The instructor will perform with Chet Atkins at the Mountain Hill Schoolhouse in Harris County Saturday and Sunday.

Jumpmaster instructor to perform at Chet Atkins' schoolhouse festival

By Lisa M. Hibbert
Bayonet staff writer

Casually dressed, wearing jeans and a striped shirt, the soldier sits softly plucking the strings on his guitar.

Staff Sgt. Greg Biltz, an instructor in the Jumpmaster Branch of the Airborne School, normally teaches officers and noncommissioned officers how to be a jumpmaster on board an Army or Air Force aircraft.

But, at the moment, he serves as his own student and teacher — not in airborne operations, but in singing and playing the guitar.

Biltz practices for the upcoming Mountain Hill Schoolhouse Festival Saturday and Sunday in Harris County, Ga. Sponsored by country singer Chet Atkins, the festival features amateurs such as Biltz in an effort to raise money to keep the dilapidated schoolhouse from being torn down.

At the festival, Biltz performs a 15-minute solo act in which he sings and plays the music for three songs he wrote: "The Fertile Valley," Good Ol' Tennessee" and The Angel."

A salt and peppered haired man wearing brown, horn-rimmed glasses, Biltz said he found out about the festival through a newspaper article.

"I read about how Atkins was trying to raise money for the schoolhouse to keep it from being torn down," he said. "I submitted a tape to the address in the paper and one of Atkins' people called me back with the OK."

The festival marks the first of many sponsored by the country singer to raise money for the schoolhouse's foundation. (Atkins attended school there and is trying to renovate the building to keep it from destruction.)

Performances by Atkins, Biltz and several other entertainers, as well as arts and crafts, children's games and a barbecue, highlight the benefit program.

Biltz, originally from the Atlanta area and a graduate of Columbia High School in Decatur, Ga., said he's been playing the guitar for 27 years.

"I got my first guitar when I was 12," he said. "I took lessons but I got bored with it. Seven years later, I picked up the guitar again when Crosby, Stills and Nash came out, and I've been playing ever since.

Biltz, who moved to Nashville at age 22, said he tried to go professional with his music career but was unsuccessful.

"I did the Nashville bit for a couple of years, and I tried to make it as a professional; but, it just didn't happen for me," Biltz said. "Now, I just play for the fun of it."

On Wednesdays during open-mike night at The Loft, a local club in downtown Columbus, he plays and sings.

"I love being in front of an audience," Biltz said. "I love the energy.

Biltz said he joined the Army so he could get paid for practicing his hobby, skydiving.

"Before I joined the Army, I was an operations manager for a small company in Tennessee," Blitz said. "I hated my job; I used to dread going into work everyday. I skydived in my spare time, so I decided, why not join the Army and get paid for doing what I love."

Now, he said he enjoys two things he loves — his job allows him to jump out of airplanes and he still manages to find time to play his guitar.

The festival takes place Saturday and Sunday from 11 a.m. to 6 p.m. Tickets for adults cost $8 in advance and $10 at the gate. Children ages six through 12 see the show for $3 and children under five get in for free.

Local teen voices youths' opinions

By Amy Durham
Special to The Bayonet©

Those who wonder about today's teens and the direction they're taking need not worry about Correy Hudson.

Learning the virtues of hard work, 15-year-old Hudson works part time for two local radio stations — WOKS and Foxie 105 — for which he is paid. But the Spencer High School 10th-grader also understands the need for community involvement.

Not only does Hudson play saxophone in the school band, serve on his school's student council and participate in the Future Business Leaders of America, but he also volunteers in the Department of Pathology at Martin Army Community Hospital and works at the Indianhead Youth Center.

His work at the youth center provided Hudson a once-in-a-lifetime opportunity Aug. 5 through 11 when he represented Fort Benning teens at the U.S. Army Teen Discovery in Columbiana and Huntsville, Ala.

"I learned a lot of skills I can use the rest of my life," Hudson said, "not just on the job, but any place."

Designed to develop teens' leadership, problem-solving and teamwork skills, the seven-day camp also allowed approximately 180 teens the chance not only to voice the concerns and issues of young people living on Army installations around the country, but also to seek solutions.

Chosen by his peers during a local Teen Discovery Day at the Leadership Reaction Course, Hudson, the son of Joyce and Sgt. 1st Class Wesley Hudson, Company C, 2nd Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment, carried the concerns of his peers to a national forum.

"Correy is really outstanding; he is articulate, a good spokes-person," said Justine Boone, recreation assistant. "He communicates well with adults and fits in well with all the other kids, wherever you might put him."

Throughout the camp, Hudson participated in hands-on activities that helped him and the others to appreciate the skills necessary to apply to community issues. One such skill Hudson said he and the others found most challenging was communication.

Hudson

"We sat in a circle, each of us holding hands with the person across from us;" he said, "and the group had to figure out how to become a circle without letting go of one another."

While teen representatives spent a few days at the 4-H Camp in Columbiana, Ala., Hudson said visiting the U.S. Space and Rocket Center was the most interesting. The teen delegates used their new team-building and leadership skills to master the space shuttle simulator and other Space Center stations.

Although Hudson attended the camp intent on presenting Fort Benning youths' top issues of concern, one of which included wanting a later curfew, none of the local issues made it into the top five for the Training and Doctrine Command.

TRADOC's top issues were as follows:

- •Teen employment
- •Community support
- •Insufficient funds for teen programs
- •Delayed communication
- •Teen and staff relationships.

Hudson prepares to meet with post officials and other teens to put into action some of the solutions he learned about the teen discovery camp.

"The major issue that came out of this year's program was the relationship between youth services staff and children," Boone said. "We are going to work with Correy and the other Fort Benning teens to fill that gap."

And, as post officials try to provide teens the services and programs they need to become well-rounded adults, Hudson plans to be a part of that process.

NCOA soldier manages local musical talents

By Lisa M. Hibbert
Bayonet staff writer

Sgt. LaVonnie Haynes, assistant operations sergeant at the Noncommissioned Officer Academy, wants to manage acts in the music industry.

"I started in the music business in 1993 while stationed in Alabama," Haynes said. "Before I came to Fort Benning in 1995, I did the books for this guy who opened up a record label in Huntsville."

Haynes

Even before she started managing groups, this former president of the Better Opportunities for Single Soldiers program at Red Stone Arsenal, Ala., helped promote groups.

"There was this all-male singing group called Flex that was very talented," Haynes said. "Every time I had a BOSS function, they opened for me."

Haynes said she began considering managing someone else's musical career in 1995.

"There were several groups out there that I could have managed, but I didn't want to work with a child with bad grades or a group who did things that I didn't believe in," Haynes said. "Education is important to me and I think it's hard to balance a singing career and high school."

A brief encounter with 11-year-old T'Nesha Pruitt, daughter of Staff Sgt. Warren Pruitt of the NCO Academy, broke ground for Haynes.

"I attended a unit cookout and T'Nesha's father told her to sing." Haynes said. "When I heard her voice, it hit me. She was so good, and she's only 11!

"I chose to manage T'Nesha's singing career because aside from the fact that she has so much talent she makes straight A's on her report card," Haynes said.

Although she tried working on other ventures during her time in the military, this is the first one that she said she stuck with.

"Managing groups is not something you can just stop doing when you get tired of it," Haynes said. "When you have someone's career, someone's life in your hands. You can't just walk away."

Haynes also manages a group called Kazuale (pronounced casual) out of Columbus.

"The group is made up of five guys who range in age from 14 to 20," Haynes said. "They all get good grades and attend church every Sunday."

Managing is not the only hat Haynes wears when she is with her proteges; she also acts as mother, sister, counselor and role model.

"I help the guys with their girl problems; I discipline them when they get out of line," she said. "I do it all. I don't allow them to curse, drink or smoke.

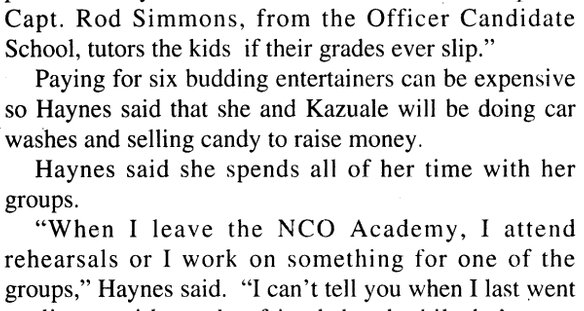
"I don't want them to get into things like that because smoking can ruin the voice and drinking makes people too relaxed," Haynes said. "Besides, drinking and smoking are not what I'm about."

Just as Haynes wears many hats, she said she expects her acts to as well.

"It's rare that a person who just sings makes it very far in this business," she said. "You have to be able to do it all, write music and songs in order to be a success. Both T'Nesha and Kazuale write some of their own music."

Financial responsibility comes with being a manager. Haynes said she pays for everything for her groups.

"I pay for outfits, studio time, paperwork, gasoline to take them everywhere and hotels," she said. "Plus, they practice in my house, and I have friends who help out. Capt. Rod Simmons, from the Officer Candidate School, tutors the kids if their grades ever slip."



Paying for six budding entertainers can be expensive so Haynes said that she and Kazuale will be doing car washes and selling candy to raise money.

Haynes said she spends all of her time with her groups.

"When I leave the NCO Academy, I attend rehearsals or I work on something for one of the groups," Haynes said. "I can't tell you when I last went to dinner with my boyfriend, but luckily he's very supportive and understanding."

Originally from Augusta, Ark, Haynes' Army career spans seven years. She said after she finishes being all that she can be in the Army, she plans to open up a management company in Atlanta.

"I love music," Haynes said, "and managing groups is something I can really put myself into."

Penny-pinching tips help consumers save money

Consumer Literacy Consortium

Experts provide answers to consumers' common questions about saving money.

Q. I'm looking for a new car. How do I make sure that I'm getting the best price?

A: Simply shop around. Call three dealers in your area and ask for price quotes. Inform them you are calling other dealers. Know which make and model you want and which options you want, in advance. If a dealer offers you an option not on your list, negotiate. Tell them you will buy the car from them — and not the other dealers you've called — if they'll give you the option at a large discount or even for free. If not, remember you've got four other dealers waiting to sell you a car from their lots.

Q. I built up thousands of dollars of credit card debt. How do I keep my monthly payments from overwhelming me?

A. Reduce the number of credit cards you have to one or two. You can save more than $100 a year by getting rid of all but one or two cards. Avoid late payment and over-the-credit limit fees. Then, switch to credit cards with the lowest annual percentage rate. If your rate is more than 18 percent, obtain one with a lower rate.

Q. I'm buying a house. What can I do to get a good rate on homeowners' insurance?

A. Ask your state insurance department for a publication with typical prices charged by licensed companies. Call the companies with the four lowest prices and get a quote. You can save $100 or more a year from these licensed insurers. If your state doesn't publish this guide, it is even more important that you call four or more insurers. Also, do not insure your land — it isn't replaceable.

ask the judge

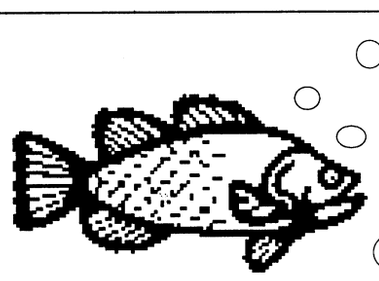
By Robert A. Magnuson
Office of the Staff Judge Advocate

Q. I recently transferred to Fort Benning and seek a place to live off post. I have heard many stories about landlords who refuse to return your security deposit when you move. I also heard that some landlords charge you more than your security deposit to repair so-called damages to a property. How can I best protect myself from these landlords?

A. To protect yourself from losing your security deposit, thoroughly document all the pre-existing damage to the rental property before you move into the new place.

Georgia law requires that landlords, who own more than 10 units or are professional property managers, conduct a premove inspection to determine any rental property damage. Usually, the landlord simply gives you a standard form, tells you to list any damages and asks you to return the list to the leasing office.

A word of advice: fill out the form. Far too many tenants fail to properly complete the form and return it to the landlord. Consequently, when the landlord withholds the security deposit for property damages after you move out, you possess no evidence to dispute the claim, other than to pit your word against theirs. Taking the time to thoroughly inspect the property and fill out the form saves you an enormous amount of trouble and money down the road. You may also want to take pictures of, or video tape, the property documenting pre-existing damage. Make sure you keep a copy of the form and have the landlord sign your copy.



Once you move out of the property, the landlord must conduct an inspection within three business days and compile a comprehensive list of damages that he or she plans to offset with your security deposit. The landlord may only charge you for damages, beyond normal wear and tear, that did not exist when you moved into the property.

Former tenants possess the right to inspect the property within five days of termination to determine if the list remains accurate. If the tenant finds the list inaccurate, he or she must write a statement to that effect and submit it to the landlord immediately.

Assuming the property remains substantially in the same shape as when you moved in, the landlord must return your deposit within 30 days. The completed premove inspection sheet helps prevent charges for damage that existed prior to your occupancy. In Georgia, a detailed inspection sheet signed by both you and the landlord serves as conclusive proof as to the condition of the property, at the time you moved into the property.

Despite this conclusive proof, if the landlord still refuses to return your security deposit, or worse, charges you more than your security deposit, to repair pre-existing damage to the property, you may file suit in small claims court to recover your money. Georgia law allows you to recover three times the amount of any security deposit if the judge determines the landlord wrongfully withheld any portion of the security deposit and the landlord owns more than 10 units or serves a professional property manager.

To pursue this course of action, make an appointment with an attorney in the Legal Assistance Office by calling 545-3281. An attorney will discuss with you the necessary steps to represent yourself in this matter.

4-H...More Than You Ever Imagined

Every child's future isn't as rosy as this drawing.
It's often easier for kids to join a gang, buy drugs, and skip school than to find a way in their community to be useful and helpful to others. ▪ Early adolescence, ages 10-14, is when kids make many lifestyle choices. . .they begin to engage in risky behaviors. . .they develop lifelong learning, exercise and eating habits. Without a valued, constructive group and environment, many kids will make the easy choice, the wrong choice. ▪ 4-H is engaging the voices and actions of youth in solving issues critical to their lives and communities. . .issues like violence, drugs, jobs, the environment. . .the same issues that you are concerned about. ▪ Wherever you live, 4-H is there supporting our children, one child at a time.

USAIC Public Affairs Office

The Department of Defense recently switched to a new health care program for the Army, Navy and Air Force this year.

Representatives from Martin Army Community Hospital provide Tricare information to soldiers, retirees and family members.

Many eligible beneficiaries show concern about the change and how it affects their care. One of the most commonly asked questions follows.

When can I enroll in Tricare Prime?

Tricare-eligible beneficiaries enroll in the health-care program at any time. If you enroll before the 20th of the month, your enrollment starts the first of the next month. If you enroll after the 20th of the month, your enrollment begins the first of the second month.

For military retirees and retirees' family members who pay enrollment fees by check, Tricare officials sometimes require additional time to process the enrollment.

Representatives assist with enrollment at the Tricare Service Center, Building 9204, Room 105, Monday through Friday from 8 a.m. to 4:30 p.m.

Active duty family members pay no enrollment fee for Tricare Prime coverage. Retirees and their family members, however, pay $230 for individual coverage and $460 for family coverage.

Other fees associated with Tricare Prime include a charge for civilian outpatient care: $6 for families of soldiers E-4 and below, $12 for families of soldiers E-5 and above as well as retirees and their family members. Cost for civilian inpatient care is $11 per day for anyone enrolled in Tricare Prime.

NATIONAL HISPANIC SCHOLARSHIP FUND

The National Hispanic Scholarship Fund is dedicated to strengthening America by providing scholarships to deserving Hispanic-American students pursuing a higher education.

As the nation's largest Hispanic scholarship organization, NHSF distributed over $3 million in scholarships in 1995. In its twenty year history, NHSF has awarded $25 million to 26,000 outstanding Hispanic-American students attending colleges and universities across the United States and Puerto Rico. NHSF is also very proud to have been designated the nation's most efficient charitable organization by Worth magazine.

Value system guides free will

By David Zalis
USAIC Chaplains Office

Many denominations hold free will — our ability to choose between right and wrong — as a basic belief.

However, recent scientific and genetic studies show that we inherit behavior and personality traits.

This means that upon birth we possess a predilection for a certain type of behavior. Some of us may be born destined for a criminal way of life. Does this mean that we really don't have "free will"?

The following legend answers this contradiction between our religious beliefs and modern scientific research. The events surrounding the miraculous exodus of the Jewish people from Egypt and Moses receiving the law at Mount Sinai became known to the leader of a certain nation in that region. The sultan became curious and wanted to learn more about the Prophet Moses. Unable to make a trip to find out firsthand, he sent his court artist to find Moses and draw his portrait. The artist drew the portrait and the sultan showed the portrait to his advisers and wise men to study the picture and produce a psychological profile of Moses. They returned with the unanimous verdict that his picture depicted a murderer and totally wicked individual.

Having heard of Moses' greatness, the sultan said that judgment was impossible. Either the artist drew the wrong picture or his advisers failed to possess the skill to determine one's character by looking at his image.

The sultan set out on his camel and reached the Israelite camp. He beheld Moses and saw that the portrait accurately depicted him. He then realized that his court artist made no error, but rather his advisers knew nothing about human behavior.

reflections

The sultan and Moses arranged a meeting in which the sultan told Moses how his advisers wrongly interpreted the picture and accused Moses of being a murderer and criminal. Moses then told the sultan that his advisers were not wrong.

"I was born with all those criminal desires and often feel an urge to do wrong," Moses said, "but I call upon the Lord for the strength and courage to control myself and not give in to my evil thoughts and desires."

From this legend, we see that we really are in control of our behavior and that we do have free will and freedom of choice. May we, like Moses, call upon the Lord to help us make the right choices in life.

TEACHING CHILDREN

Parents, teachers share task

By L. Stockeland and J. Stewart
11th Infantry Regiment

Every summer, as September draws near, children excitedly and apprehensively look forward to a new school year while their parents look forward to handing their offspring over to the teachers for a few hours each day. Fort Benning boasts a good school system staffed by many competent and dedicated teachers.

But parents cannot expect the teachers to perform all of the educating of our children. Parents need to cooperate with them, back them up with educational experiences in the home and support them in the classroom.

A variety of chapel programs, Sunday School classes and youth activities provide spiritual education for our young people, but they alone fail to guarantee a person's spiritual growth.

As Moses told the Israelites concerning the laws of the Lord, "Fix these words of mine in your hearts and minds, … Teach them to your children, talking about them when you sit at home and when you walk along the road, when you lie down and when you get up." (Deuteronomy 11: 18-19)

Parents need never abandon their personal responsibility to teach God's word in the home. These verses imply the admonition not only to teach but also to live God's truth in front of young people.

What parents want their children to become, they must be. Parents make children what they are, not necessarily what they tell them to be.

reflections

As with all "projects," parents' goals ensure focused actions.

"Train a child in the way he should go, and when he is old he will not turn from it." (Proverbs 22: 6)

G. Campbell Morgan paraphrases this as "Train up a child according to his way," which means that parents discover what God puts within every child in order to nurture him or her to fulfillment.

Parents cannot handle children, each with their unique personalities, as a herd. One child may need firm discipline while another needs a gentle reminder. But whatever the style, the goal remains the same — to guide each child to a personal relationship with Christ and to teach them to follow his ways. These goals serve them well through life.

Children's program — The Religious Education Center plans a new segment of its children's Bible study program, Personal Attitudes Relating To You. The new segment, Children Living Under the Bible, includes Bible study and scripture memorization, basic etiquette skills, table and home decorating and some sewing and cooking skills.

The first class meets the first Saturday of each month, beginning Oct. 5, from noon to 2 p.m. at the Religious Education Center, Building 2521.

All girls in grades three through six can attend.

PWOC to meet — The Protestant Women of the Chapel meet for their first Thursday general meeting Oct. 3 from 9:30 a.m. to 1:30 p.m. in the Religious Education Center, Building 2521.

Focusing on the theme, "Sisters in Christ, Arise and Stand Firm, Hilda Forehand, a military wife from Fort Rucker, Ala., discusses spiritual warfare — its reality and what Christians do to fight it. Her discussion includes material that relates to teen-agers.

Bible study, prayer, singing, food and fellowship also highlight the meeting's agenda. PWOC provides lunch for participants although moms must bring a sack lunch for children in the program's child care in Building 2517.

Each successive Thursday following the Oct. 3 meeting, PWOC plans to meet from 9:30 to 11:45 a.m. for Bible study and fellowship. The fall study highlights Henry Blackaby's, "Experiencing God."

For more information, call Jean Fry at 689-6049 or Cackie Howe at 685-2217.

Class continues study of Revelation — Members of the Adult 1 Sunday School continue their study of Revelation at 9:30 a.m. each Sunday at the Religious Education Center, Building 2521, behind the Airborne Chapel.

For more information, call Steve Russell at 685-9276.

Language classes to resume — Instructors conduct English language classes for beginners and advanced students each Tuesday from 9:30 to 11:30 a.m.at the Religious Education Center, Building 2522.

Students must purchase books for the free classes.

MACH offers new worship services — Martin Army Community Hospital chaplains now provide two collective protestant services in the hospital chapel:

•Sundays — 8 to 8:30 a.m.

•Thursdays — noon to 12:30 p.m.

Individuals also attend a Bible study Tuesdays from noon to 12:30 p.m in the hospital chapel.

Schedule set for Jewish high holy days — Jewish services of the High Holy Days take place at the Regimental Chapel, Building 3220, at Sand Hill, as follows:

•Yom Kippur Eve — Sunday, 7:30 p.m.;

•Yom Kippur (Day of Atonement) — Monday, 9:30 a.m.;

•Yom Kippur afternoon services — Monday, 5:30 p.m.

•Succot Eve (Feast of Booths) — Sept. 27, 7:30 p.m.

Call 545-2050 for more information.

Buick Challenge to open doors to military

ID card holders admitted free during Military Appreciation Day Sept. 27

USAIC Public Affairs Office

The big guns of golf will once again display their talents during the Buick Challenge at Callaway Gardens Sept. 26 to 29.

Last year's Buick Challenge champion, Fred Funk, returns to Callaway Gardens along with Tiger Woods, who won his third amateur title in as many years before turning pro, Mark Brooks, Jim Gallagher Jr., Scott Hoch, Davis Love III, Larry Mize, Loren Roberts, Clarence Rose, Hugh Royer III, Curtis Strange and Fuzzy Zoeller.

Thousands of soldiers, sailors, Marines, airmen and family members plan to watch the second round Sept. 27 as part of the second annual Military Appreciation Day sponsored the Buick Challenge, Callaway Gardens and the Association of the United States Army.

Last year's crowd exceeded all expectations as Department of Defense identification card holders flocked to the golf course in droves. In fact the 7,000 plus members helped Friday's attendance beat out the final round attendance on Sunday.

This year, like last year, members of the military, to include those in the reserve components, receive free entrance to the course. But unlike last year, Callaway Gardens will be available for touring, so those who want a break from watching golf, or who don't even want to watch golf, can visit the flora and fauna for which the gardens are famous, to include the Sibley Butterfly Center.

Buick officials said they experience so much success with last year's event they plan to incorporate it in other Buick events, making Military Appreciation Day an event at the San Diego tournament.

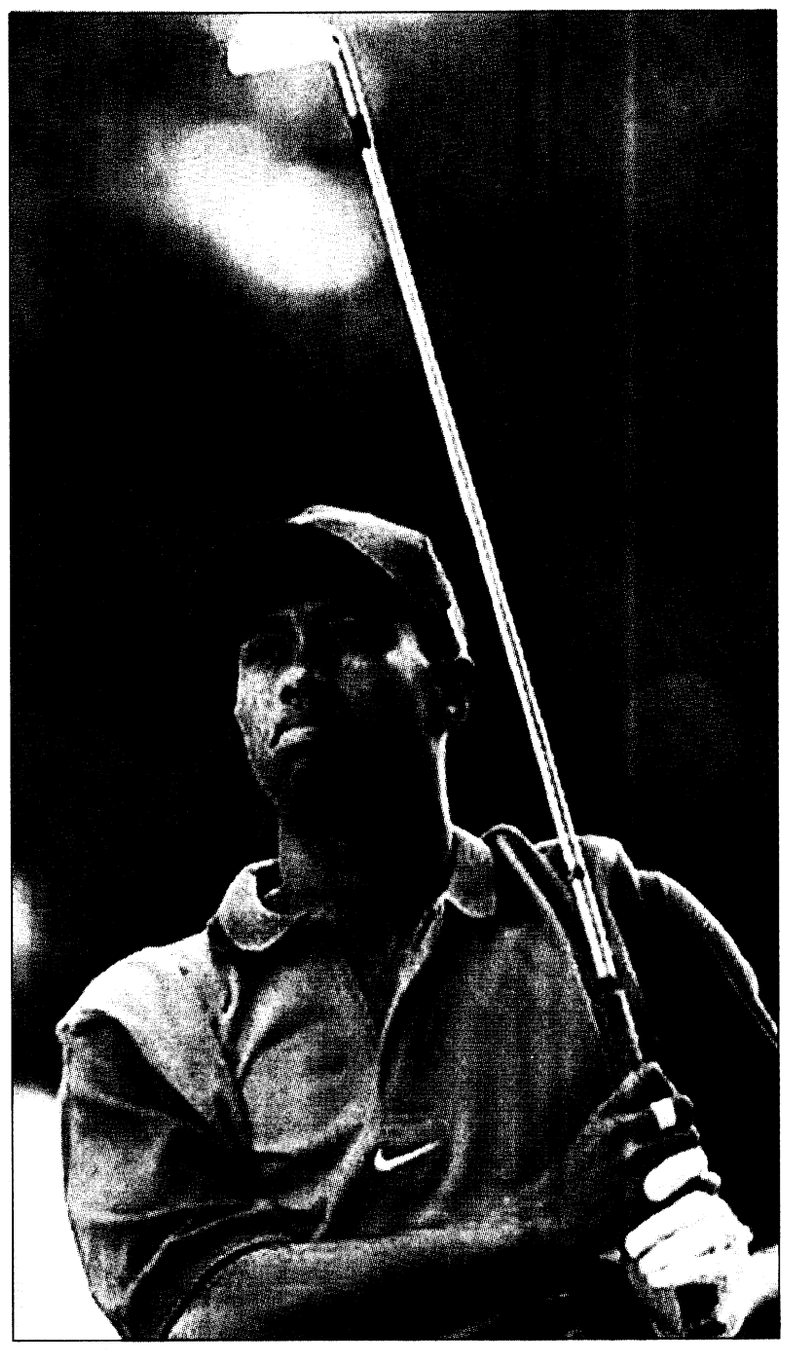
To sweeten the pot for the military members, AUSA corporate members are donating door prizes that will be given out during a drawing on Friday. Last year, soldiers received some $2,500 in prizes.

In celebration of Military Appreciation Day, the 11th Infantry Regiment, 29th Infantry Regiment and the 3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Brigade plan picnics with plenty to eat for the soldiers attending the event at Callaway.

For those interested in only following one or more pros, it's a good idea to get a program or clip the pairings and tee times from the local newspaper. This way you will know when your pro is teeing off and if he's teeing off from the front or back first.

If you plan to wander about visiting greens and tee boxes, hopscotching from one pro to another, always be aware of what is taking place on the course. You do not want to be talking and or walking while a pro is preparing to make his shot.

It can be embarrassing when a pro backs away from his ball and has to ask you to stop moving or stop talking. Items that cannot be brought onto the course include cameras and coolers.



Also, dress for the weather. Normally it's cool in the mornings and will warm up in the afternoons. Also if it looks like rain, it probably will.

Umbrellas are always a good idea. Keep your eye on what other spectators are doing and take your cues from them and the marshals.

Finally, don't pick up a golf ball just because it's by itself in the woods or buried in a deep rough. Just as you touch it, you can be assured that some pro will come by looking for it. Bottom line.

Take advantage of this training holiday. Go to Callaway Gardens and watch some golf. If you get tired of the golf see what Callaway Gardens has to offer it's open for your inspection too.

For more information, call Art Murphy at 545-3273.

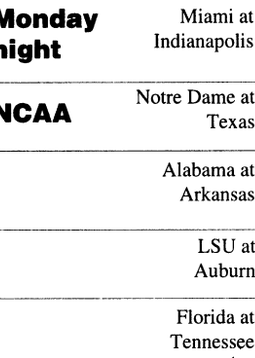
Wrestlers offer training

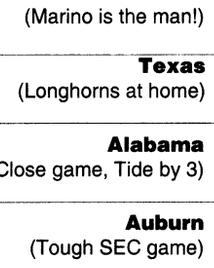
Fort Benning Recreation Center

Fort Benning and the All-Army Wrestling Team offers the opportunity for prospective wrestlers to train every Sunday at the Army wrestling training area.

Army coach Anatoliy Nazarenko coaches this open training in Building 3305 at Sand Hill from 9 a.m. to 11 a.m.



Nazarenko, a three-time world champion, a 1972 Silver Medalist and former Soviet Union Coach, brings much expertise to the Army wrestling program. During his year-long work with the Army wrestling team, he helped develop three national champions — Shon Lewis, Keith Sierack and Rodney Smith — and two Olympians — Smith and Derrick Waldroup.



For anyone interested in trying out for the Army team, or just doing some wrestling, this training provides an opportunity to learn from one of the best.

Also this fall, Fort Benning's Community Recreation Division conducts three wrestling competitions open to military. The first competition, Oct. 19 at Santiago Fitness Center, begins at 11 a.m.; weigh ins take place from 8 to 9 a.m. CRD schedules two more competitions Nov. 16 and Dec. 14.

Armando R. Ayala captured first place with a final score of 1,298.8 in the 1996 Running Target Championship at the Canadian Nationals.

Shooters dominate Canadian Nationals

By Anna O'Leska
U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit

The U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit Running Target team swept the 1996 Running Target Championship at the Canadian Nationals at the Peterborough Fish and Game Association Range in Ontario, Canada, Aug. 31 to Sept. 8.

After dominant performances in several matches, the USAMU team members finished in first, second and third place. This championship served as a training match for the USAMU Running Target team.

In the 10-meter 30+30 event, Sept. 1 to 5, Armando R. Ayala captured first place with a final score of 1,298.8, Kenneth M. Jones took second scoring 1,240.1 and Lance D. Dement scored 1,222.2 winning third place. In the 10-meter mixed run event, Sept. 2 to 6, Ayala scored 379, winning first place, Dement came in second with a score of 371 and Jones took third scoring 350.

Ayala's victory in the two matches during the Canadian Nationals marked his second and third straight wins in national championship-level events. Earlier this season, he won first place in the 10-meter mixed running target competition during the 1996 USA Shooting National Championships in August.

"He's performing very well considering he's only been competing in the sport of running target since February 1995," said running target coach Troy A. Lawton. "This is the first time Pfc. Ayala has fired in a tournament outside the United States and won both events."

Ayala grew up in El Paso, Texas, where he studied criminal justice at the University of Texas. After enlisting in the Army in 1994, he attended basic and infantry training at Fort Benning and Air Assault School at Fort Rucker, Ala. He served with the 54th Infantry Regiment and transferred to the Army Marksmanship Unit in 1995. He serves as the 1996 men's interservice running target champion and National Team member.

Ayala attributes winning the Canadian Nationals to a number of things.

"The time they give us to train and the facility where I train prepares us to win ," he said. "The ranges we practice on are equivalent to the ranges where we compete, and the entire rifle is custom made to fit me. It's top of the line, and I have confidence in my abilities."

The USAMU team currently trains for the USA Shooting Team selection matches, which begin in January. The USA Shooting Team competes in world cups, world championships, Pan Am Games and Championship of the Americas Games.

The USAMU team competes in the New York State Running Target Championship in Binghamton, N.Y., Saturday and Sunday.

Combination licenses offered

Georgia Dept. of Natural Resources

SOCIAL CIRCLE, Ga. — When hunters and anglers visit their local license dealers to purchase their 1996 licenses, they find two new combination licenses for sale this year — a sportsman's license and a combination resident archery and firearms license.

These licenses cost less than purchasing individual licenses and stamps, according to the Department of Natural Resources, Wildlife Resources Division.

People who hunt and fish in Georgia save time and money by purchasing a sportsman's license for $60. This combination license covers all hunting and fishing licenses and stamps, except for the federal duck stamp.

It also includes the Harvest Information Program participation stamp. Hunters must have the HIP participation stamp to hunt doves, ducks, geese, snipe and other species of migratory game birds this year. Hunters should complete the HIP questionnaire when they purchase the sportsman's license.

Filling out the HIP questionnaire validates the license for migratory bird hunting although a separate stamp will not be fixed to the license. The sportsman's license saves hunters $4.50.

A resident archery and firearms combination license, available for the 1996 season, costs $26 and includes the archery, general hunting and big game licenses.

Hunters still must purchase individual stamps such as the wildlife management area stamp, the Georgia waterfowl conservation stamp and the federal duck stamp for additional privileges. Purchasing this combination license saves hunters $1.

"These combination licenses are great alternatives for sportsmen and women," said David Waller, director of the Wildlife Resources Division.

"For example, people who hunt both dove and deer may purchase the sportsman's license for dove season and not have to return to the license dealer to purchase a big game license when deer season opens. Hunters and anglers will be prepared for every hunting and fishing season of the year."

License dealers make available the two new combination licenses, as well as all individual licenses and stamps that have been sold in the past.

For more information on the sportsman's license or the resident archery and firearms combination license, call the Wildlife Resources Division at (770) 414-3333.

USAMU plans Hunter Zero Days

U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit

The U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit serves as host for two Hunter Zero Days from 9 a.m. to 1 p.m. Saturday and from 2 to 5 p.m. Oct. 6 on Fort Benning's English Range.

Hunter Zero Days prepare the more than 10,000 hunters registered to hunt on post for the opening of deer season Oct. 26. Members of the USAMU Service Rifle Team plan to help shooters by manning four stations, each having 50-, 100-, 200- and 300-yard scoring targets.

"We'll be verifying zeros," Service Rifle shooter and coach Richard M. Remily said. "We don't teach people how to shoot; we assist people with their weapons. We help spot the rounds and we help people adjust their scopes or sights. We make sure the hunters will hit where their guns are pointed."

USAMU gunsmiths zero and inspect the shooters' guns upon request to ensure safety.

"We'll be looking at people's personal weapons and checking for the safety of the guns," USAMU gunsmith Mark Palmer said. "If they're having problems with their weapons, we answer their questions, and we help them put on simple accessories like a scope. The main thing we're concerned with is that they have a safe gun and the right ammunition. The biggest problems we see are neglect of the guns and improper or no maintenance."

According to Palmer, last year the gunsmiths served several hundred people who turned out for the event and needed their services.

Fort Benning BASS Club plans meeting — The Fort Benning Bass Anglers and Sportsman Society Club conducts its biweekly meetings the second and fourth Tuesday of each month at the Don C. Faith Middle School cafeteria at 7:30 p.m.

The club offers membership to active duty soldiers, retired military and Department of Defense civilians and their family members.

For more information, call Steve Ward at 569-5705.

Ga. State Parks offer canoe trips — Georgia State Parks offer canoe trips for beginning and experienced paddlers at various parks.

Participants explore some of Georgia's most scenic waterways while on guided canoe trips.

Park staff members explain basic canoeing techniques and interpret natural surroundings while leading canoers on day-long trips.

Paddlers with a sharp eye see beaver, otter, king fishers, great blue herons or other wildlife.

The $15 cost per person includes canoe, paddles and life preserver.

The parks offering these canoe trips include:

- Panola Mountain State Park, Stockbridge, Ga., Saturday. Call (770) 389-7801 to register.
- High Falls State Park, Jackson, Ga., Oct. 19. Call (912) 993-3053 to register.

The parks charge a $2 park pass fee per vehicle.

Outdoors women workshop set — The Department of Natural Resources, Wildlife Resources Division, offers a weekend Becoming an Outdoors Woman Program at the Eagle 4-H Center Oct. 4 to 6 in Eatonton, Ga.

The program aims to teach both beginners and those with outdoor experience the skills needed to participate in a wide array of outdoor activities.

The $125 cost for the weekend before Sept. 15 includes lodging, meals and use of equipment. The registration fee rises to $150 after Sept. 15.

The workshop accepts registration on a first-come, first-served basis. Contact the Wildlife Resources Division at (770) 918-6400 for more information.

BOSS to conduct bass tournament — A bass tournament at Uchee Creek Camp Ground and Marina takes place Sept. 28.

Sponsored by the Better Opportunities for Single Soldiers, the tournament, conducted from 6:30 a.m., or safe light, until 3 p.m., costs $30 per boat, plus a $5 optional, big bass pot.

Only large mouth bass measuring more than 16-inches and spotted bass measuring more than 12 inches will be weighed, with a limit of seven fish per boat.

Pick up tournament rules and entry forms at Uchee Creek and Ranger Joe's barber shop Sept. 14. Turn in entry forms and fees to Ed Hannaman at Headquarters Company, 1st Battalion (Airborne), 507th Infantry Regiment, or Howard Givens at Uchee Creek. Participants may register at Uchee Creek the morning of the tournament.

For more information, call Ed Hannaman at 545-3828 or 545-3829.

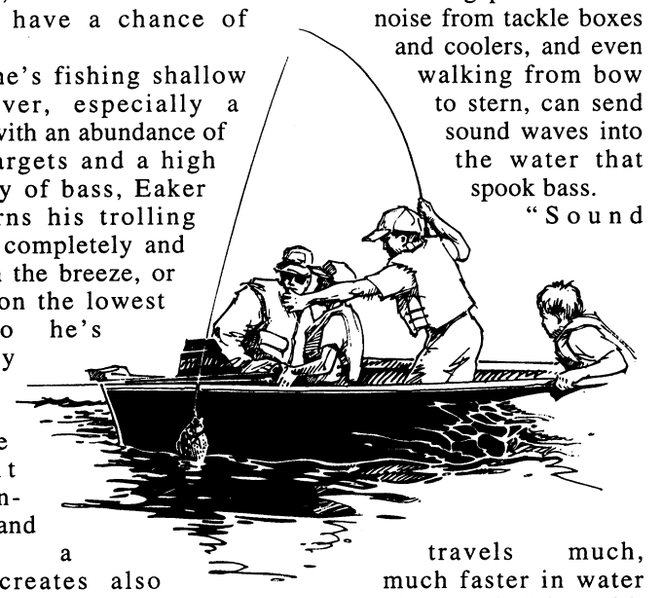
Excess boat noise spooks shallow bass

By Earl Bentz & Steve Price
Outboard Marine Corporation



Sometimes professional tournament angler Guy Eaker feels like tiptoeing around in his boat. He stops talking, turns off his electronics and leaves his tackle boxes closed.

"Noise, any type of noise from your boat, spooks bass, particularly when you're in shallow water," said the fisherman. "I think making excess noise or vibration is probably one of the most overlooked factors in bass fishing success."

One of the most common mistakes bass fisherman make include improper use of trolling motors.

"You can't believe how often I see fishermen hit stumps or brush piles with their trolling motors simply because they're not paying attention to what they're doing," he said. "If a bass is hiding around a stump in shallow water, you'll usually see it darting away when you do hit something, and that's one less bass you have a chance of catching."

When he's fishing shallow water cover, especially a shoreline with an abundance of casting targets and a high possibility of bass, Eaker either turns his trolling motor off completely and drifts with the breeze, or leaves it on the lowest speed so he's continually moving.

"I believe the constant on-off, on-off noise and vibration a trolling creates also spooks fish, especially larger ones," he said, "so I leave mine on constantly. I may go back and forth along the same bank three or four times until I feel like I've fished it thoroughly, but at least I'm not spooking the fish."

The fishing pro said that noise from tackle boxes and coolers, and even walking from bow to stern, can send sound waves into the water that spook bass.

"Sound travels much, much faster in water than in the air," he said, "and I believe bass and other fish recognize sounds we make as unnatural in their environment so they immediately become alerted. Good boat carpeting helps, but slamming a tackle box lid still creates vibrations that may pass through the hull and out into the water.

"When I know I'm in or near a school of bass, I simply try to be as quiet as possible."

At times, Eaker even turns off his electronics, believing the sonar signals sent by his depthfinders may at times cause fish to re-locate.

"I know this sounds like I'm going to extremes," he said, "but a very good friend of mine, who spent many years guiding and who is also a professional bass tournament fisherman now, told me he used to sit over schools of bass watching them with his depth finder. He never moved or dropped a lure down to them, but after a few minutes the entire school would simply leave.

"He was usually 15 to as much as 25 feet above the fish, but he's convinced those bass could somehow sense the signals his electronic depth finders were sending, and it frightened them."

The Changing Face Of Technology

SYSTEMS PROFESSIONALS

At Blue Cross and Shield of Florida, Inc., technology has become a top priority. The ever-changing nature of the healthcare arena has demanded creative solutions. And we are meeting that demand with the help of our dedicated technical professionals.

Many people don't fully realize the extent of our commitment to technology. No longer limited to processing insurance claims, the focus of our business has shifted to attaining relevant technology in a timely basis to remain competitive. In order to accomplish this, we've implemented a team approach to providing cost effective and creative conceptual solutions to problems. If you are a multi-faceted professional with a minimum of 2+ years experience with one or more of the following areas, talk with us about current opportunities to become one of our solution providers.

PowerBuilder	WEB Design
Visual Basic	C/S 3-tiered messaging architecture
GUI	Oracle (or similar RDBMS)
UNIX	Communication/network technology
C, C++	Workflow technologies

In addition to working as a valued team member, you will enjoy a competitive compensation and benefits package, and all of the perks of living in Money Magazine's #3 best place to live in the United States - Jacksonville! For consideration, please forward your resume to: BLUE CROSS AND BLUE SHIELD OF FLORIDA, INC., Human Resources Department, Attn: SGS-RENG, P.O. Box 44088, Jacksonville, FL 32231-4088, or fax using "fine" mode to 904/791-6855. Resumes are optically scanned. Recommended resume format is on 8 1/2" X 11" white paper, using standard type face fonts (Arial, Courier, and Times 12 to 14 points). COMMAND SERGEANT MAJOR

Post's top enlisted soldier retires

By Brian R. Voller
Bayonet staff writer

After almost 35 years of service in almost every possible infantry enlisted position, Command Sgt. Maj. George D. Conrad faces life away from the Army when he retires Oct. 4 at 9 a.m.

Conrad, Fort Benning's command sergeant major, entered the Army as an infantry private at 18 years old. During his years, he served in the Vietnam Conflict and contributed to the development of the Ranger Regiment.

"I've been a head machine gunner, a 3.5 man when the Army used the 3.5 shoulder-fired rocket launcher and I was the Browning automatic rifle man," he said. "I've been a team leader, a squad leader, a platoon sergeant and a first sergeant. I've been battalion sergeant major, a brigade sergeant major and a division sergeant major, and, of course, most recently, the command sergeant major of the Infantry Center."

When he first enlisted in the Army, Conrad said he didn't plan to make a career out of the military, but he said after he saw some of things the Army offered, he changed his mind.

"After I spent some time in and I got to see what the military was about, I changed my mind," the 53-year-old said.

Conrad said he has not seen a change in the Army, but he has seen a change in the people.

"I've seen people who say the Army today is much better than yesterday's Army," Conrad said. "But I get offended with that because (I) love the Army of yesterday. I always say, 'The Army is the Army, is the Army.' As far as I'm concerned, the Army never changes; it's the people who are in the Army who change."

Conrad said our society's values change depending on the administration that is in office. He said when he entered the Army people joined because their values were love of country, love of patriotism and they could run and they could fight.

Today, Conrad said people still hold true to those same ideals, but he said about every six years what people consider important about joining the military seems to change — whether it be love of country, college money or other such ideas.

Marc G. Turchin

Post Command Sgt. Maj. George D. Conrad is inspected minutes before his final jump. Conrad along with his boss, post commander Maj. Gen. Carl F. Ernst, and friends jumped from a C-130 airplane onto Fryar Drop Zone in Alabama.

Conrad said he has seen many of the changes the Army has gone through — one being the increased role of women in the military. Conrad said this change is a welcome one because of the importance of having female soldiers in combat support roles, but he does not feel women should be placed in combat arms units.

"I think the issue of having women in the Army is an important one, but I think it needs to be looked at very carefully," Conrad said. "In my personal opinion, the combat arms is no place for a female soldier.

"The role of a female soldier in a support role is just as important and they can do great things as we in the combat arms can by supplying us with the things we need to survive on the battlefield.

"Could women serve in combat arms? Probably. Is it the right thing to do? In my opinion, no. And I say this because there are roles women can play in the Army that are just as important as me picking up my rifle and marching onto the battlefield."

Conrad said he takes several things with him from the Army, but he holds a few aspects of military life very close.

"I would say the sense of responsibility, caring, completing the mission, team work and loving what you're doing are what I come away with most from the Army," Conrad said. "I would like people to look back and say they remember George Conrad as a soldier who knew and understood the mission of the United States Army, knew and understood his country, who cared for his soldiers and who was very proud he was allowed to serve his country for 34 and a half years."

With his career coming to an end, Conrad said he offers valuable advice for young men and women who are considering entering the military.

"I want young men and women to realize they are about to enter a profession where coming in second place is not an option," Conrad said.

"I want them to understand they are joining a volunteer Army with standards and ethics. I want them to know that just because they are joining the Army, the Army is not going to change the way it does things ... and I want them to realize they are going to be called upon to put their lives on the line one day."

Conrad officially retires in front of Infantry Hall on York Field.

He said he plans to pass a physical training test and complete a 12-mile road march before his retirement. He said after he completes these tasks, he officially end his career as an infantry soldier.

Post CSMs, SGMs meet

By Brian R. Voller
Bayonet staff writer

The top noncommissioned officers from the U.S. Army Infantry Center gathered in Infantry Hall's Classroom 6 for the Fort Benning Command Sergeants Major and Sergeants Major Conference Sept. 17 through 19.

Sgt. Maj. Arthur Van Allen, garrison sergeant major, said the conference provided a good opportunity for the senior NCOs of Fort Benning to get together and exchange ideas.

"This was an excellent opportunity for us as NCOs to judge where we are," Van Allen said. "We were able to see where we are as individuals, units and as an installation.

"It was an excellent opportunity for us to identify problems, and to have a meeting of the minds to address these problems and hopefully come to solutions that benefit everyone."

During the three-day conference, the sergeants major received briefings on several issues and informational instruction in several other subjects.

Some of the subjects participants discussed included:

- Senior NCO promotion boards
- The NCO education system
- Issues concerning the Better Opportunities for Single Soldiers program and the Single Soldier Living Community
- NCO safety teams
- Training and tasking issues
- Tricare.

The conference ended with the Soldier and NCO of the Quarter and of the Year presentations to Spc. Christian Chisholm, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment, who received his promotion to sergeant following the award ceremony, and Staff Sgt. Tony L. McGee, U.S. Army Infantry Center Military Police Co., who also earned recognition as the NCO of the quarter for the fourth quarter.

Spc. Kevin C.E. Phipps of 75th Ranger Regiment received the award for Soldier of the Quarter for the fourth quarter.

Van Allen said the gatherings of all of Fort Benning's sergeants major provided the best benefit of the conference and finding the solutions to the separate issues proved very beneficial and aides the community as a whole as well.

"The camaraderie among all of Fort Benning's sergeants major offered the greatest reward of the conference," Van Allen said. "All of the problems and all of the issues that were brought out were resolved almost immediately. In some of the cases, the issues brought out required us to do some additional research to find guidance to solve a solution; but, once the guidance was found, the situation was resolved."

Van Allen said under the direction of Command Sgt. Maj. George D. Conrad, post command sergeant major, this first conference established the plan for future conferences.

"The plan is to have a collective, three-day conference like the one we just completed every year," Van Allen said, "but we also plan to have short three- to four-hour quarterly mini conferences to make sure the NCO leadership is up to date and on the same sheet of music."

Van Allen said the conference ended as a success, and he attributes that to the work of the garrison commander's office staff, the work of Command Sgt. Maj. Michael Pflanz of the Directorate of Community Activities and the initial idea that came from Conrad.

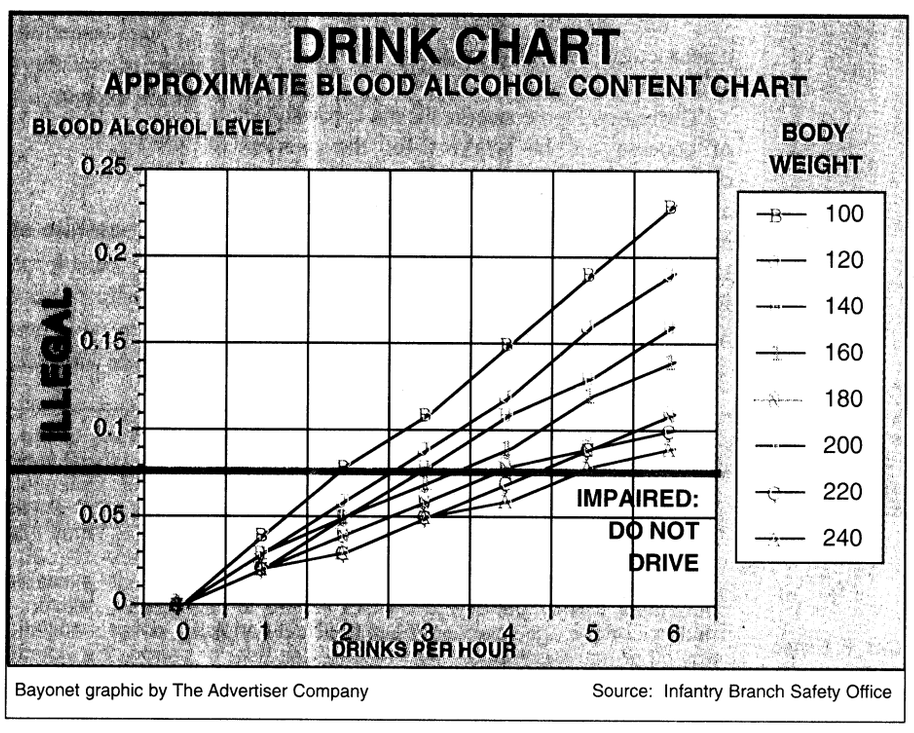
Drinking drivers increase fatalities

Infantry Branch Safety Office

Alcoholic drinks do not cause accidents — unless someone drinks then tries to drive.



A drinking driver is involved in about 30 percent of all fatal accidents, according to Regis Beighley, safety manager, Infantry Branch safety Office.

Most drinking driver accidents occurs during hours of darkness. One study found that less than 50 percent of all accidents occur during the 12 hours following 6 p.m.; however, 75 percent of the drinking accidents occur during this period.

Scientists determined that two drinks (bottle of beer, highball or cocktail) can play havoc with our driving abilities long before we are aware of it, Beighley said.

Even a slight amount of alcohol caused a deterioration of between 25 and 30 percent in the driving performance of expert drivers.

Many motorists claim they drive better after a couple of drinks. This is utter nonsense, Beighley said. The motorist merely thinks he or she drives better because the alcohol makes him or her less able to critically evaluate himself or herself.

Alcohol doesn't cause accidents — until someone drinks it and tries to drive in the usual manner.

In 1996, the military police issued traffic tickets to 68 active duty soldiers, five family members and 72 civilians (Highway 27) for driving under the influence on Fort Benning, Beighley said.

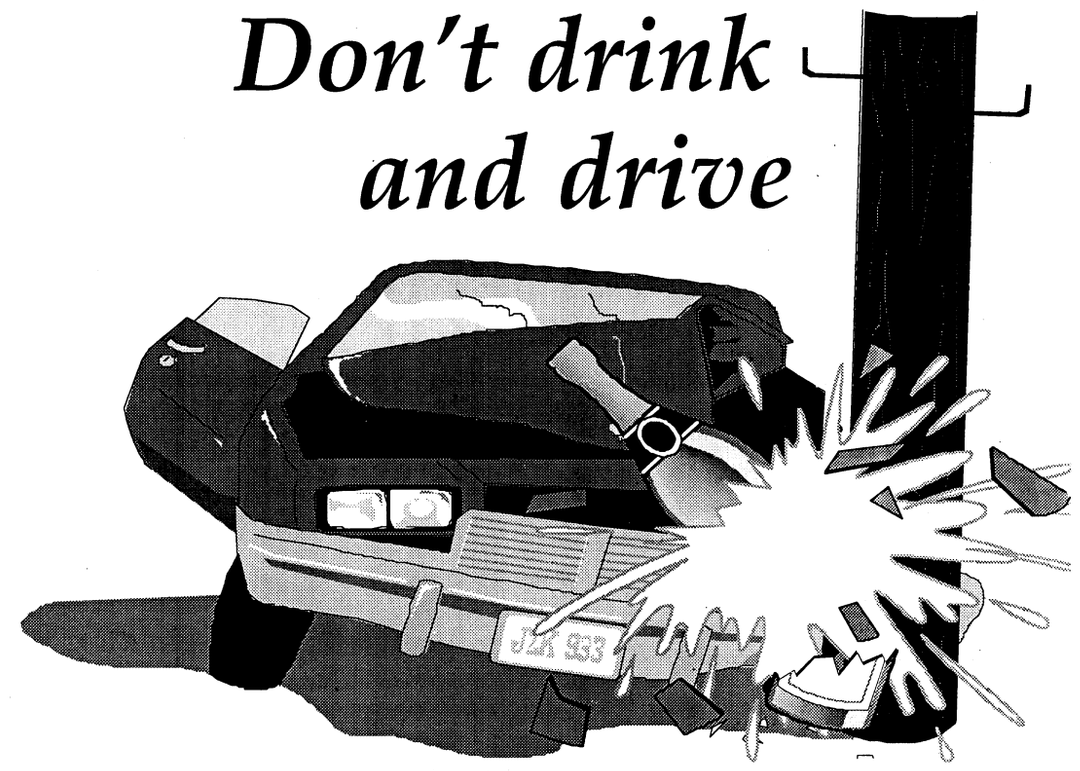
DRIVING UNDER THE INFLUENCE



People forget common sense

By April N. Olsen
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Don't drink and drive. Sounds like good advice, common sense, right? Yeah, you'd think so.

But we at Fort Benning, despite frequent safety briefings, are not immune to the tragic consequences of disregarding such a common sense piece of advice.

Last month alone, military police officers arrested 13 people on post for driving under the influence, according to the Military Police Activity Traffic Accident Investigation Section. Seven of those drivers were active duty service members; six were civilians.

commentary

It's outrageous! It's plain and simple stupidity.

No matter how often leaders at all levels inform their soldiers, no matter how much we preach, lecture or tell, common sense is the key to safe behavior. We could avoid many accidents by applying good old common sense.

Because of recent accidents on post, we're now promoting a "Safety Campaign" to make sure everyone is aware of potential safety risks. In a recent policy letter, Commanding General Maj. Gen. Carl F. Ernst empowered every leader, regardless of rank, to stop any unsafe training or operation. This may work for military training but for off-duty "operations," it takes common sense at the individual level.

Common sense lies within the individual and unless each person takes responsibility for his or her own actions, safety briefings and campaigns are not going to be effective.

If you want to go party, hey, go for it. But getting behind the wheel of a vehicle after indulging in any alcoholic beverages is stupid and irresponsible. It's equivalent to handing a loaded weapon to an eight-year-old.

As adults, we're expected to be able to make smart decisions. As soldiers, we're supposed to be disciplined. Drinking and then driving is not smart, and it shows a lack of discipline and good judgment. After consuming alcohol, your ability to operate a motor vehicle is impaired; your body and brain are affected. It's as simple as that.

If you find out you suffer from an illness that will cause you to die in 10 years unless you take one pill a day for the rest of your life, wouldn't you apply common sense and take that pill? The same concept should be applied to drinking and driving.

Drunken driving accidents are 100 percent preventable. All it takes is for the person drinking to make the decision to not drive. It's that simple.

Call a cab, call a friend, call a fellow soldier - a squad leader, a platoon sergeant or platoon leader. If all else fails, call the staff duty officer. He or she can arrange for a ride. Don't use excuses like "cabs are expensive" or "I only had a couple of drinks, I'm fine."

I say any drink is one too many to be driving.

It could ruin your career if you get caught, but the saddest part is that it can cost innocent lives.

As an officer, I have a responsibility to be concerned for all soldiers and their families. As a wife, daughter, sister and aunt, I recognize another responsibility to my family, and I want to make sure they are safe.

When you drink and drive, you take your life and the lives of every other person on the road into your hands because you didn't call a cab or a friend or even bother to designate a sober driver.

I have a hard and fast rule: if I take one drink of one beer or any alcoholic beverage, I don't drive. That rule has proved at times to be inconvenient. I would rather be inconvenienced than risk killing someone else or myself. Don't make a horrible mistake that could cost a life because you don't want to be inconvenienced.

There's no excuse. There is always an alternative to drinking and driving. You just have to apply common sense. Would you give a loaded weapon to an eight year old? Then why even risk a tragedy by drinking and driving?

The next time you're out having a good time with Bud or Jack or Mr. Beam, use common sense.

letter

Construction workers lack concern for residential area

I am writing concerning the roofing construction currently ongoing in the Custer Terrace housing area.

The reason I am concerned is the apparent lack of concern by the workers for the quarters' occupants. Many families spend numerous hours and dollars planting shrubs, flowers and plants around their quarters only to have roofing shingles pushed off the roof to destroy them. Roofing nails have to be picked up before allowing children to play outside.

Who supervises this construction?

If construction workers tear up and damage flowers and shrubs, they should come to these quarters and reseed the grass, and someone should pay for damaged flowers and shrubs.

I understand the roofs have to be replaced and there is probably a deadline to be met. But at whose expense ... the quarter's occupant?

Name withheld

Directorate of Public Works response:
The Directorate of Public works directed the contractor to use a magnet device to pick up any leftover nails around the housing unit and to preclude any damage to existing vegetation surrounding the housing units.

DPW officials care about damage caused by any contractor working within our housing areas. Residents who experience damaged flowers, shrubs or plants, or observe nails left at the work site can call the DPW Construction Inspection Branch at 545-4749 and report the incidents.

This office attempts to resolve the complaint directly with the contractor.

If this fails, the occupants may file a claim with the Office of the Staff Judge Advocate for possible reimbursement.

14th rotates personnel for training

By Jacqué Hill
Special to the Bayonet©

Soldiers with the 14th Field Hospital, 36th Engineer Group (Combat), began taking inventory of their supplies two weeks ago at their newly constructed training complex located adjacent to Lawson Army Airfield.

Once they complete the month-long inventory process, personnel begin one- to two-week training rotations at the site, according to Maj. Mike Moore, executive officer and chief nurse, 14th Field Hospital.

"For the month of September, my cadre of 60 people are inventorying supplies," he said. "In October, we will begin training PROFIS (professional fillers) people ... that's a continual training process."

When complete, the 500-bed hospital includes two intensive care units and seven intermediate care wards. Because of this size, Moore said, the hospital rotates the training of its personnel, setting up only portions at a time.

Not only the 260 personnel assigned to the unit from Fort Benning rotate training at the hospital, but also 14th Field Hospital personnel from Forts Campbell, Gordon, McClellan, Rucker and Stewart train with their equipment at the station.

Moore said he expects a fully functional hospital by mid-February.

"Everything has to be inventoried and functional, and that's the process we're going through now," he said. "We train and prepare to deploy to wars and should be ready to do that by mid-February."

The facility, used primarily for training purposes, might be used to treat patients in the future, according to Moore.

"In the future, we will do some limited patient treatment as part of our collective training," he said.

The hospital covers 7.6 acres of ground, according to Moore.

"This hospital is two times the size of Martin Army Community Hospital and 10 times the size of the 2nd Mobile Army Surgical Hospital, which recently inactivated," he said. "This is a 500-bed hospital. I've set up 500 beds once before — it took about 10 football fields to do that."

Hospital training complexes similar to the 14th Field Hospital's, where personnel rotate through to inventory supplies and train with their equipment, are a result of downsizing, said Moore.

"This concept is somewhat new to the Army," he said. "As a result of downsizing, the Army is going to these cadre hospitals. The idea is to use medical personnel to their fullest."

63rd Eng Co clears way for 14th Field Hospital

By Jacqué Hill
Special to the Bayonet©

Personnel from the 63rd Engineer Company (Combat Support Equipment), 36th Eng. Group (Combat), recently cleared the way for the 14th Field Hospital, 36th Eng. Grp. (Combat), to begin taking inventory and training with their equipment adjacent to Lawson Army Airfield.

The work began the second week of July and the company completed it the last week in August.

Clearing the way entailed hauling away unusable top soil, replacing it with gravel and leveling the area, according to 2nd Lt. William J. Brown, platoon leader, 63rd Eng. Co.

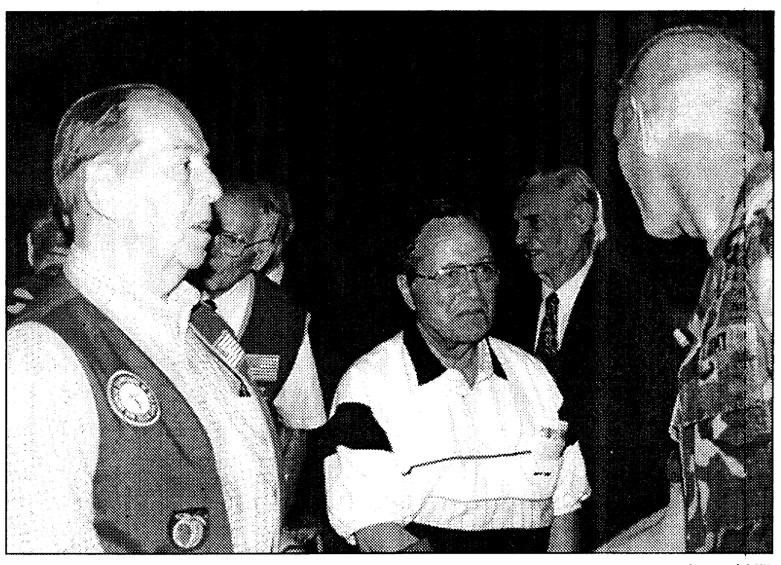
"Our portion of the project was to clear and strip, or shape, the earth for drainage purposes," he said.

"We hauled about 5,000 tons of organic top soil away," he said. "We compacted the earth underneath, then replaced and packed gravel on top."

A laser plane employed by the 63rd Eng. Co. helped with the grading and leveling process.

"Essentially, the laser plane is a tool used to emit a laser beam to a receiver," said 1st Lt. Adrian A. Marsh, platoon leader, 63rd Eng.. Co. "A slope can be programmed into the equipment at a specific grade and the equipment follows that grade. It increases the efficiency of the operators."

The area cleared and leveled for the 14th Field Hospital covers 7.6 acres of ground, according to Brown.



"This area is going to be the 14th Field Hospital's training complex," said Capt. John M. Miller, commander, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 14th Field Hospital, explaining the necessity of the work done by the 63rd Eng.Co. "We're going to stage our medical equipment here and set up a 32-bed training package."

The facility, utilized primarily for training purposes, might be used for patient treatment in the future, according to Maj. Mike Moore, executive officer and chief nurse, 14th Field Hospital.

"In the future, we will do some limited patient treatment as part of our collective training," he said.

Post remembers POWs, MIAs

By Jacqué Hill

People gather at Marshall Auditorium Sept. 20 to remember prisoners of war and those missing in action.

Fort Benning conducted a ceremony recognizing and remembering prisoners of war and those missing in action in conjunction with national POW, MIA Recognition Day Sept. 20.

Lt. Col. Alfred E. Dochnal, director of Operations, Joint Task Force - Full Accounting, Camp Smith, Hawaii, spoke at the event.

Dochnal told of the task force's mission for the fullest possible accounting for each prisoner of war and person still missing in Southeast Asia using slides and videos to emphasize the task force's efforts.

The videos shown at the ceremony included actual footage of searches and investigations previously performed by the task force.

One video included footage of task force members fast roping into a remote, mountainous terrain in Southeast Asia to investigate a particular site believed to contain evidence related to the case of someone still unaccounted for.

Other scenes included task force members digging trenches and damming rivers to conduct thorough investigations of unresolved cases.

"These are some of our more famous and spectacular cases, but by no means are they unique," Dochnal said.

He explained every case the Joint Task Force investigates goes through basically the same process.

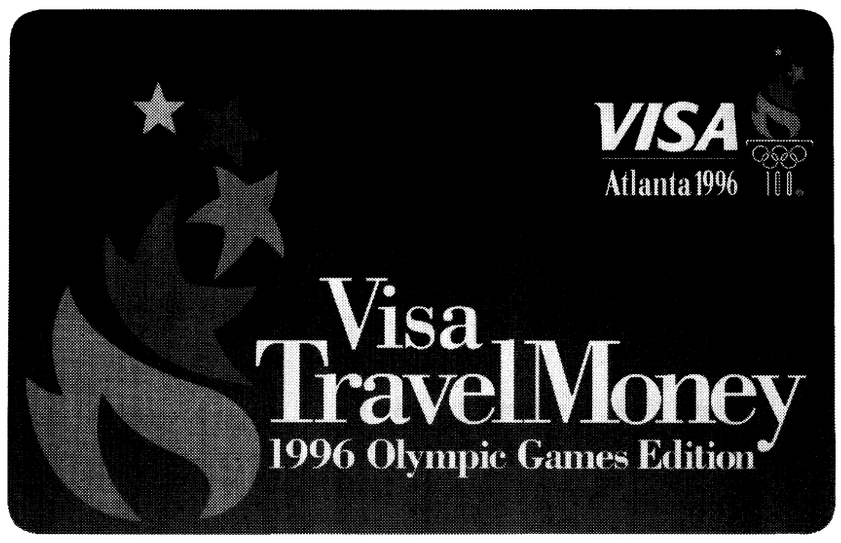
"The process to account for somebody is really time consuming and meticulous," he said. "Men and women of the Joint Task Force are deeply committed to conducting the fullest possible accounting of everyone."

Several family members of POWs and MIAs attended the ceremony.

Bart Vigo, project officer, Directorate of Operations and Training, believes in the importance of the ceremony.

"We must never forget or stop searching for our fallen comrades," Vigo said.

Dochnal believes not only the purpose of the event, but also the importance of the Joint Task Force's job.



"(Our ongoing searches) show our commitment to our fallen comrades and that we will never forget them," he said.

Boss

Volunteers eligible for awards

Better Opportunities for Single Soldiers

The Better Opportunities for Single Soldiers Program often becomes an all-consuming vocation for some of the people involved, said Spc. Anthony McCurdy, a Department of the Army BOSS representative.

BOSS consists of many volunteers who help other soldiers and the surrounding community. As with any other volunteer organization, program officials sometime fail to recognize and reward volunteers for their efforts, McCurdy said.

Officials recognize and reward soldiers in many ways including certificates, plaques, trophies and news.

"The most grandiose way to recognize a soldier is through an actual military award" McCurdy said. "One military award that is appropriate is the Military Outstanding Volunteer Service Medal."

According to Military Personnel memorandum number 94-3, the medal goes to "members of the Armed Forces of the United States and reserve components who subsequent to Dec. 31, 1992, perform outstanding volunteer service of a sustained, direct and consequential nature."

The service member considered for the medal must provide volunteer service:

- To the civilian community to include the military family community.
- That is significant in nature and produces tangible results.
- That reflects favorably on the Army and Department of Defense.
- Of a sustained and direct nature.

Commanders "serving in the rank of brigadier general or higher and colonel-level commanders who exercise general court martial authority" possess approving authority for the medal. Also, substantiating documentation, such as record of hours contributed, letters or certificates from activity supervisors, or other proof of the soldier's volunteer services, may be attached as enclosures to the documentation."

Recognition and awards are important for a volunteer organization such as BOSS, according to Spc. Caryn Bumpstead, Fort Benning's BOSS program president Simple or grand, an award lets people know commanders and others appreciate them, she said.

For more information on the medal, call Justine Vance at 545-4702.

Question of the week:

Does Fort Benning's BOSS program representatives meet? If so, how often, when and where?

The Fort Benning BOSS program representatives meet twice a month in the garrison commanders' suite. The representatives also conduct postwide meetings quarterly, open to any single soldier. The next quarterly meeting is Oct. 8 at 1 p.m. at the Afterhours club.

108th Div offers CGSC on post

By Michael Jacobson
11th Bn., 108th Regt., 108th Div.

The 108th Division's Institutional Training division offers the Command and General Staff College course on Tuesday nights beginning Tuesday at Infantry Hall.

The course, open to all active duty Army promotable captains and majors, Army Reserve and Army National Guard promotable captains who have completed Combined Arms and Service Staff School and majors, provides an opportunity for these service members to meet active duty promotion requirements.

Commissioned officers of equivalent rank of other U. S. services may also attend.

Statistics from the last active duty lieutenant colonel selection board show that some officers did not meet the requirement of completion of the Command and General Staff College course.

According to an article in the armor and military intelligence branch newsletters, panel members of the most recent lieutenant colonel selection board did not consider armor majors and 15 military intelligence majors for lieutenant colonel because they had not finished the Command and General Staff College course.

Only 50 percent of active duty majors make the cut for resident Command and General Staff College. The other 50 percent and the majority of Army Reserve and Army National Guard officers complete Command and General Staff College through the nonresident program.

According to an article in the most recent engineer branch newsletter, "Officers not selected to attend the resident Command and General Staff College course after one look are encouraged to apply now."

Officers complete the nonresident Command and General Staff College program, a four-phase program, in two years. Each phase can be completed either with an instructor or by correspondence course, and the student chooses which option to take after completing each phase.

The nonresident Command and General Staff College diploma remains the same as the resident diploma and can be worth up to 12 graduate credits.

For more information on the Fort Benning Command and General Staff College class, call Lt. Col. Mike Smajd at 291-2879 and leave a message.

For information about Command and General Staff College in Georgia, Florida, North Carolina and South Carolina, call Mike Jacobson at 545-1561.

Sand Hill barracks phone service begins

Individual phone service is now available for soldiers in Sand Hill barracks rooms. Soldiers pick up applications for barracks phone services at Morale, Welfare and Recreation, most AAFES locations and the Barracks Phone Center, Building 9234, located directly behind the Mall Bowling Center.

The Barracks Phone Center opens from 9 a.m. to 6 p.m., Monday through Friday. For more information, call 685-2466.

Regulations require proper PT uniform

Post regulations require that soldiers wear the standard Army physical fitness training uniform for PT from 6 to 7:30 a.m. on duty days, whether units organize PT or soldiers conduct it on their own. Reflective vests are required.

The only approved exceptions are the School of the Americas, the Ranger Training Brigade and the 75th Ranger Regiment. These units have an exception to wear a different uniform, but must remain uniform.

OCS board to meet

The next Officer Candidate School selection board meets March 24 to 28, with a Feb. 21 cutoff date for applications to arrive at the Personnel Command.

Applications must arrive at the Adjutant General's Personnel Operations Division, Building 2619, no later than Jan. 10 to allow sufficient time for each applicant to appear before a local board.

For more information, call Sina Evans at 545-3341 or 545-4702.

Dates set for course

The next first sergeants and commanders course begins Oct. 21 and ends Oct 25. Names to attend the course should be submitted no later then Oct. 16.

The prerequisites to attend are promotable sergeants first class, master sergeants and first sergeants who are projected to assume a first sergeant position or already serving as a first sergeant.

Those officers promotable to first lieutenant, captain or major, projected to assume command or already in command are eligible to attend this course.

The unit S-3 must submit the name, social security number, unit assignment and position soldier will assume. Only submit soldiers that meet the requirements for attendance.

For more information, call Elaine Livingston or Sgt. 1st Class Victor Bond at 545-3237 or 545-4094.

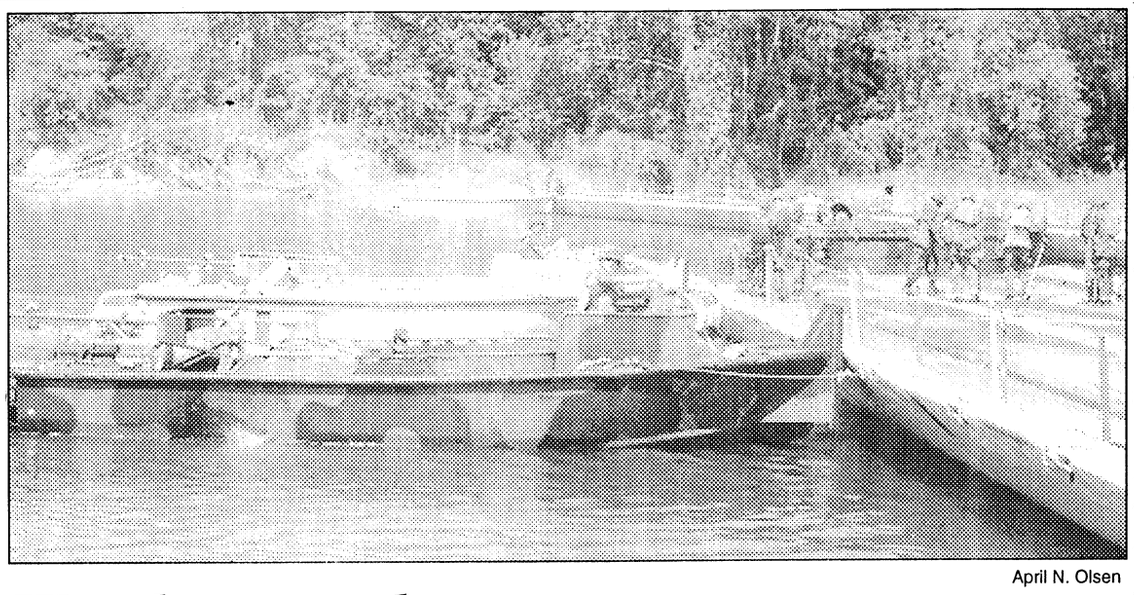
Delta Force to conduct briefings

The Delta Force Team conducts orientation briefings beginning Oct. 7 at 1 p.m. and Oct. 8 through 10 at 9 a.m. and 1 p.m. in Building 4, Room 21. The physical fitness qualification test will be administered Oct. 11 at 7 a.m. at Stewart-Watson Field. Uniform for the physical fitness qualification test is the unit PT uniform.

For more information, call Carol Gilchrist at 545-1917, 545-4702 or 545-3341.

Dental clinics to close

All dental clinics close today for a training holiday. All dental clinics also close Oct. 4 from 11:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. Patients requiring emergency care report to the Martin Army Community Hospital Emergency Room.



Retirement ceremony set

Col. Gregory C. Camp, chief of staff, U.S. Army Infantry Center, retires after 28 years in the Army.

The retirement ceremony is Oct. 8 at 10 a.m. on York Field.

Ga. Military College comes to post

The Georgia Military College comes to Fort Benning with classes beginning Tuesday. For more information, contact the Fort Benning office, Building 2611, Dixie Road. Call 689-9333 or the Main Campus Admissions Office at (800) 342-0413.

Soldiers from Infantry Training Brigade learn how react to Nuclear, biological, chemical threats

By Lisa M. Hibbert
Bayonet staff writer

Just the mere mention of the gas chamber phase of nuclear biological and chemical training makes some service members throughout all branches of the military cry.

Soldiers from Company D, 2nd, Battalion, 54th Infantry Regiment and Company D, 1st Battalion, 38th Infantry Regiment, Infantry Training Brigade, encountered the chamber and exited teary eyed from the fumes Sept. 9 and 13 at Brittin Range in the Malone Complex on Harmony Church.

The training, designed to provide soldiers an opportunity to test their protective masks, gives them the confidence they need if they ever experience a biological or chemical threat in a combat environment, said Staff Sgt. Thomas A. Woodson Jr., NBC instructor at the Chemical School, Combined Arms and Tactics Directorate.

"One of the good things about going through the chamber is it teaches soldiers confidence in their equipment," said Staff Sgt. Ivor Griffiths, noncommissioned officer in charge of Brittin Range. "I want soldiers to remember that everything was OK until they took off their masks."

> "I want soldiers to remember that everything was OK (inside the gas chamber) until they took off their masks."
> — Staff Sgt. Ivor Griffiths
> Noncommissioned Officer in Charge,
> Brittin Range, NBC training

Pvt. 2 Gilberto Chacin of Co. D, 1st Bn., 38th Inf. Regt., ITB, agreed with Griffiths.

"I'm glad I went through the gas chamber," Chacin said. "I learned that if you don't have your mask on right, it could kill you if it were real gas."

Today's soldiers receive training on the M-40 protective mask series, which replaced the M-17 protective mask in January.

"The M-40 series is a better mask because it's made of silicon rubber, unlike the M-17, which was made of butyl rubber," said Staff Sgt. Elphonso Thomas, NBC instructor at the Chemical School, CATD. "Silicon is three-fourths away from being a liquid, which allows the mask to mold to the head. The eye pieces are now in the front instead, giving mask wearers a more peripheral vision instead of the tunnel vision caused by the eye pieces being on the sides in the M-17.

"Plus the M-40 series feature a quick disconnect canister filter that screw of and on for easy filter changes, before the M-17 had to be removed in to change the filters," Thompson said.

While the CS, or 0-chlorobenzyl-malononitrile gas, otherwise known as riot gas, used in the chambers is not deadly, many of the gases used in combat kill.

"Nerve, blood, blister and choking agents are all being used today," Griffiths said. "Some are undetectable by sight and smell alone, which is why we give training on the use of the M-8 and the M-9 paper."

M-8 and M-9 detector papers change colors when they come in contact with a liquid chemical.

As a part of the NBC training, soldiers learn not only how to don the protective mask and detect chemicals but also how to decontaminate themselves and their equipment in case of exposure to a biological or chemical agent and how to react to a nuclear attack, Griffiths said.

"We teach safe positions to be in during a nuclear blast," Woodson said. "The force of a nuclear blast travels at light speed. We teach them survival skills for the NBC battlefield."

The two-week NBC course, also taught at Brittin Range, provides training on how to run gas chambers, Woodson said.

Pvt. 2 Tshonda Bernard, Company D, 1st Battalion 38th Infantry Regiment, Infantry Training Brigade, takes a knee after failing to react correctly to a simulated nuclear attack.

Pvt. 1 Edward J. Cutter lies on his back, symbolizing being killed because he did not react correctly to a simulated nuclear blast.

IOBC students conduct field training exercise

By Reginald Perry
Infantry Officer Basic Course

Hooah: Contagious in the U.S. Army, an epidemic in the Infantry Officer Basic Course.

Soldiers of IOBC Class 3-96, Company B, 2nd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment, entered their 14th week of class recently and trained at Ware Range.

The students participated in their offensive field training exercise. The missions of the five-day FTX consisted of the deliberate attack, movement to contact, and the ambush.

The offensive FTX began Sept. 9; the players planned and rehearsed for the next morning's deliberate attack. The company moved more than 2,000 meters after crossing the line of departure at midnight; the attack began at approximately 5:45 a.m.

After tactically occupying the objective rally point and conducting final preparations, the soldiers began their attack on Objective Animal, a series of trench lines.

The support-by-fire positions suppressed the objective while breach teams cleared obstacles, allowing assault elements to pass through. Soldiers soon secured Objective Animal, then consolidated and reorganized. After a change of mission, Co. B began platoon after action reviews.

"Our movement was long, hard and dark," 2nd Lt. T. Chad Laird said. "Three hours of humping — but that's the Infantry and that's what makes us a cut above the rest. Everyone at some point questions whether or not they'll make it or why they chose this profession. Ultimately, you gain the mental fortitude that will one day save you and your buddies' lives."

By early afternoon, new soldiers tactically occupied assembly areas and prepared for the next morning's live-fire movement to contact.

Throughout the day and early the following morning, soldiers ran blank fire rehearsals and crew drills repeatedly until the platoons were ready to execute. When the movement began, the tactical scenario unfolded with the lead squad making contact with a one- to two-man enemy opposition force in position. Making contact with their smallest element and holding the crew-serve weapons in reserve, the platoons performed a squad attack.

The platoon consolidated and made contact with a larger element, who then called for live-fire support positions and live-fire attacks.

Second Lt. Carl Pfuetze said several aspects lead to a soldier's success during a mission.

"Rehearsals are the key to success," Pfuetze said. "Familiarity of a soldier with his position and job are necessary for smooth operations."

According to 2nd Lt. John Parker, the enemy plays a big role in the success of initial rehearsals.

"No matter how much you rehearse, the enemy is always out there to change the conditions," Parker said. "It worked during rehearsals, and it's great to be a leader when all goes smoothly."

Movement was soon conducted to Co. B's next assembly areas for conduct of the platoon ambush, after a field visit and discussions with Col. Dorian T. Anderson, commander of the Ranger Training Brigade.

Soldiers conducted all preparations and rehearsals throughout the day and the evening Sept. 12; the final blank fire rehearsals concluded at approximately 2 a.m.

Four thunderous bangs of claymores sounded in the early morning hours as soldiers executed the ambush with left and right flank security popping M-203 illumination rounds approximately every five seconds. Teams tired M-60s while the M-249 squad automatic weapons and individual weapons sent rounds downrange.

Soldiers from Company B maintained safety throughout the FTX, enabling them to succeed in their mission.

Physical Fitness

authorities gather Sept 17, 18 on post

By Jacqué Hill
Special to the Bayonet©

Physical training experts attending the second annual Battle-Focused Physical Training conference, sponsored by the U.S. Army Physical Fitness School Sept. 17 and 18, introduced a lot of research relating to soldiers' physical training.

Goals for the conference, according to Col. Jeanne M. Picariello, commandant, U.S. Army Physical Fitness School, included:

•Sharing current research projects and results specific to human performance,

•Providing a forum for leaders and Army exercise researchers to discuss training issues,

•Reviewing the benefits and issues associated with gender integration specific to physical training and •Examining the clinical trends and medical concerns associated with conducting physical training across all age groups.

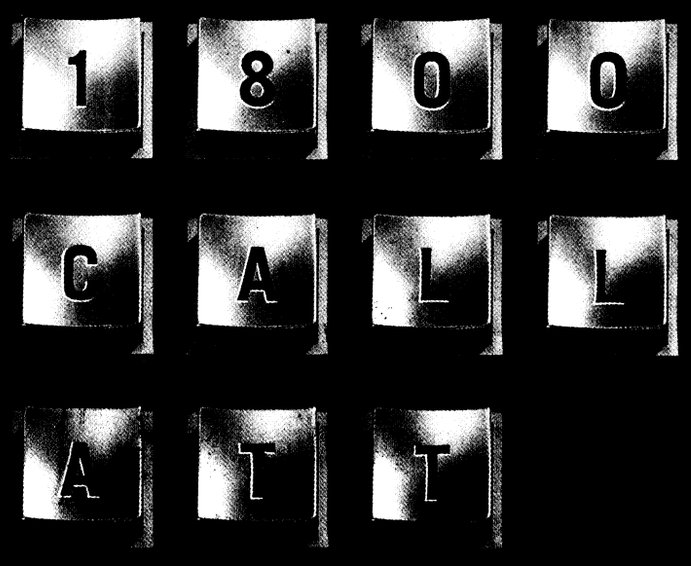
Picariello said the conference went well.

"I am very pleased with the turnout, especially the sharing of information among the Army Physical Fitness School, the combatants and research personnel," she said.

The conference's results also pleased Dr. Louis F. Tomasi, chief, Research Physiology, U.S. Army Physical Fitness School.

"It was a resounding success," he said. "The interaction between researchers and combatants was beyond our expectations, and the dialogue was very productive for both parties."

Some of the topics covered included: physical training for pregnant women, physical training for retirees, issues for soldier performance in hot and cold weather, sleep deprivation, cognitive performance in special operations and the effects of choline on physical, mental and cognitive performance.



Research from the U.S. Army Research Institute for Environmental Medicine compiled much of the information presented at the conference, including topics such as nutrition, reducing foot blisters and training injuries, strength training on occupational performances of the genders and night-fighting lab.

Participation and attendance at the conference increased from last year, according to Tomasi.

"The number of out-of-town guests almost doubled from last year," he said.

Post recognizes soldier, NCO of year at conference

Wayne Andrews, president of the Fort Benning-Chattahoochee Valley Chapter of the Association of the United States Army, presents Staff Sgt. Tony L. McGee, U.S. Army Infantry Center Military Police Company, with several gifts for winning the noncommissioned officer of the quarter.

Command Sgt. Maj. Gregory Crockett reads biographical information about Spc. Christian Chisholm, before Chisholm received the Soldier of the Year award.

By Brian R. Voller
Bayonet staff writer

The Fort Benning soldier and noncommissioned officer of the year and of the fourth quarter received recognition at the U.S. Army Infantry Center Command Sergeant Major and Sergeant Major Conference Sept. 19 in Classroom 6 of Infantry Hall.

Staff Sgt. Tony L. McGee, USAIC Military Police Company, received the NCO of the year and NCO of the quarter awards.

Spc. Christian Chisholm, Headquarters and Headquarters Co., 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment, received the Soldier of the Year award. Immediately following the award presentation, Chisholm received his sergeant stripes.

Also Spc. Kevin C.E. Phipps of the 75th Ranger Regt. received recognition as the post soldier of the quarter.

This year's competition ended differently than competitions in the past because it served as the closing session of the first Command Sergeant Major and Sergeant Major Conference conducted on Fort Benning.

All the soldiers and NCOs who competed in this year's competition received a brief biography report from their units' sergeants major; then Sgt. Maj. Arthur Van Allen, garrison sergeant major, announced the official winners of each category.

McGee said winning the award pleased him and the award possessed special meaning because he won it as a military policeman on an infantry post.

"Winning this award is the culmination of a lot of hard work," McGee said. "It feels good because I'm an MP working on an infantry post, and I was able to establish myself. I was able to represent myself and receive recognition for it."

Chisholm said the award for the soldier of the year came as complete surprise to him.

"It came as a surprise because I know the other soldiers had worked real hard to prepare for the competition," Chisholm said. "It was a real surprise, and everyone from my unit all the way up to my battalion commander have been congratulating me. It was a day I'll always remember."

For winning the NCO soldier of the year competitions, both Chisholm and McGee received several prizes donated by local businesses or military associations.

The gifts and organizations that donated them include:

•A Department of the Army certificate

•A coupon book containing a $50 gift certificate and a Class A uniform, donated by the Army and Air Force Exchange Service

•A $50 check from TIC Federal Credit Union

•An Infantryman Statue from the Sergeants Major Association

•A $100 savings bond and congratulatory letter from Columbus Bank & Trust

•A medallion from Regency Jewelers

•A $25 check, a plaque and a wristwatch from Noncommissioned Officer Association

•A plaque, three-year free membership, dress blue uniform and a congratulatory letter, all from AUSA

•A $100 savings bond and congratulatory letter from First Union Bank

•A plaque and wristwatch, from the Government Employees Insurance Company.

Chisholm also received a $100 check and congratulatory letter from the Columbus Ledger-Enquirer for the soldier of the year honor.

Residents elect local mayors

By Lisa M. Hibbert
Bayonet staff writer

Fort Benning residents exercised their right to vote Sept. 19 and 20 when they chose community mayors and vice mayors to represent their concerns.

Housing area residents cast their votes last week at the Community Life Centers, Wilson, Dexter, Stowers and McBride elementary schools and with ballots delivered to the quarters.

Residents voted for candidates on the ballots as well as right-ins said Jennifer Morgan, Community Life officer for the Directorate of Community Activities.

The newly elected officials are:

Custer-Upatoi-Battle Park — Andrea Gronau, 530-D N. Valdez Court; vice mayor, vacant

East Main Post — Shawna O'Neil, 110 Zuckerman Ave.; vice mayor, Melinda Estep, 940-F Carey St.

Indianhead Terrace — Dorothy White, 222 Garrett St.; vice mayor, Shelly Marley, 106 McAfee St.

McGraw Manor — Becky Murphy, 140-E Magrath St.; vice mayor, Amy Daniel, 141 C Magrath St.

Bouton Heights does not have a mayor or a vice mayor at this time.

Mayors and vice mayors serve one-year terms and represent their communities when post officials gather to discuss and provide solutions for Fort Benning-related problems at Community Life meetings.

The new mayors will be installed during the Oct. 16 mayors meeting in the garrison commanders office.

County fair comes to Columbus

By Lisa M. Hibbert
Bayonet staff writer

The Chattahoochee Valley Fair comes to town Thursday through Oct. 13 and offers free admission to active duty soldiers Oct. 6.

Pay procedures for this year's fair changed from last year, said Elaine DeMarco, general manager and corporate secretary for the Chattahoochee Valley Fair. A one-price admission allows fair goers to ride as many rides as they want all day long.

Entertainment includes the Great American Lumberjacks, a live shark show, a Native American-themed dancing bear show and the Fairchild Magic Illusion show. Ms. Columbus and the Sierra Rose dancers, a line dancing group also appear at the fair.

A chili competition, a complement to the foot-long hotdogs, takes place throughout the 11-day event.

The fair opens weekdays at 5 and closes at 11 p.m., 1 p.m. through 12 a.m. Saturdays and 1 through 11 p.m. Sundays.

Adult tickets cost $12; children younger than 5 tickets cost $10. A walk around only ticket costs $6 and a second chance ticket for the person who changes his or her mind and decides to ride costs $7.

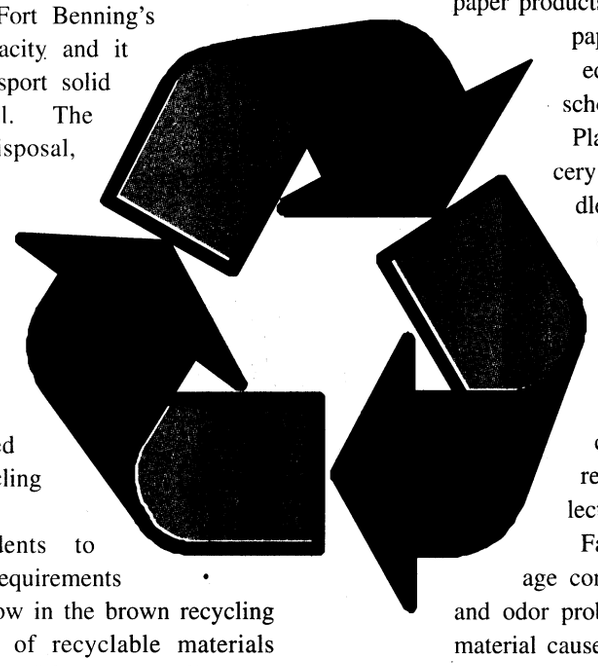
The fair ground is located off of Victory Drive, between Jackson Avenue and Blanchard Boulevard, near the Dolly Madison plant. Vehicles park through the Jackson Avenue entrance.

For information, call 324-7166.

Recycling

Program conserves landfill space, saves environ-

Environmental Management, DPW



As the amount of material collected through the curbside collection program increases, the amount of material disposed of in the landfill decreases.

Recycling not only conserves landfill space, but also reduces several serious environmental problems associated with land disposal.

Seventy-three percent of Army housing families participate in the recycling program while the national curbside participation rate for cities with curbside programs in 1995 was 67 percent.

Resident support of the Follow Me Recycling Program extended the useful life of the Fort Benning Landfill; although, in the near future, Fort Benning's landfill reaches maximum capacity and it will become necessary to transport solid waste to an off-post landfill. The increased cost of off-post disposal, makes recycling even more important and cost effective.

The Environmental Manage-ment Division distributes an updated Fort Benning Recycling Guide to Army Family Housing residents by Oct. 1. The guide includes some changes of material collected caused by changes in the recycling markets.

Officials encourage residents to become familiar with recycling requirements and place only items listed below in the brown recycling container. Proper separation of recyclable materials improves the safety and efficiency of the post recycling program. Success of the recycling program depends on how well everyone does their part.

Recycling collection crews will not pick up unacceptable materials placed in recycling bins. Residents should place any rejected material in the trash for collection. Residents who ensure their recycling bin contain only items listed on the acceptable list help prevent problems caused by contaminated materials in the recycle bin.

Residents need to separate all their recyclable materials from nonrecyclable waste and properly set out recyclables for collection on the same day as trash collection.

Rules of recycling

•Cardboard — Flatten corrugated cardboard containers and place them neatly at the curb to be collected by the recycling contractor. Contact the Recycling Center at 544-6142 to schedule pickup of more than five cardboard containers.

•Glass — This category includes food and beverage containers only.

•Plastic — Category includes all plastic containers and items with the recycling arrows.

•Aluminum Cans

•Steel and tin cans — These items must be rinsed. The recycling collector accepts no cans containing food waste.

•Paper — This recyclable category consists of paper products including food boxes, newspaper, books, magazines, unwanted mail, paper bags, office and school paper.

Place these items in paper grocery bags or tie with cord into bundles. Position the bags or bundles of paper products next to the brown Fort Benning recycling box.

Remove all tops and caps from plastic and glass containers. Caps left on the container can cause injury to recycling personnel during collection and processing.

Failure to rinse food and beverage containers will cause insect, pet and odor problems. Grossly contaminated material causes avoidable health risk to the community and recycling material handlers.

Personal paper items such as tissue, napkins, pet box liners and diapers are not recyclable. The recycling container must not be used for disposal of any items not listed above. Care must be taken to prevent recyclables from becoming unnecessarily contaminated with food.

Contact Walter Nichols, Solid Waste Program manager, at 545-1007 or Tom Moore, Recycling Center manager, at 544-6142 if you have any questions or comments about the Fort Benning Curbside Recycling Program.

PET PRIVILEGES

Post clinic provides services

By Vanessa Ella Craine
Veterinary Services

The Fort Benning Veterinary Clinic provides many services for active duty soldiers and retired military who own pets.

The clinic offers vaccinations, on-post registration, health certificates for travel, treatment of diseases transmittable to other animals or to humans and euthanasia of ill or aggressive animals. The clinic also provides minor diagnostic examinations including heartworm tests, feline leukemia tests and examinations for internal parasites.

Pet owners need to make appointments to use clinic services. Make appointments Mondays for the following week. Make sick call appointments for animals with a transmittable disease.

The Veterinary Clinic handles no emergencies, surgeries, radiology, hospitalization, boarding or grooming. The clinic refers animals that require these services off post.

The Veterinary Clinic also handles stray adoption during regular business hours. Dog adoption fees currently cost $32 and include rabies vaccination, distemper and parvo vaccination and a heartworm test. The $42 cat adoption fee includes feline distemper, feline leukemia, rabies vaccinations as well as a feline leukemia test.

U.S. Army Infantry Center Regulations 40-905 and 210-5 govern on-post pet ownership. Register pets within 14 days of the soldier arriving on post or acquiring the animal.

Animal Control impounds stray, neglected or abused animals at the Veterinary Clinic. Commercial breeding of pets on post is prohibited. Dogs require current rabies vaccine, current parvo and distemper vaccinations and must be on heartworm prevention. Cats require current rabies and feline distemper vaccinations.

The clinic operates from 8 to 11:30 a.m. and noon to 3 p.m. Mondays, Tuesdays, Thursdays and Fridays and 8 to 11:30 a.m. Wednesdays. The clinic remains closed weekends and the last working day of each month for inventory.

For more information, call the clinic at 545-4444.

ask the judge

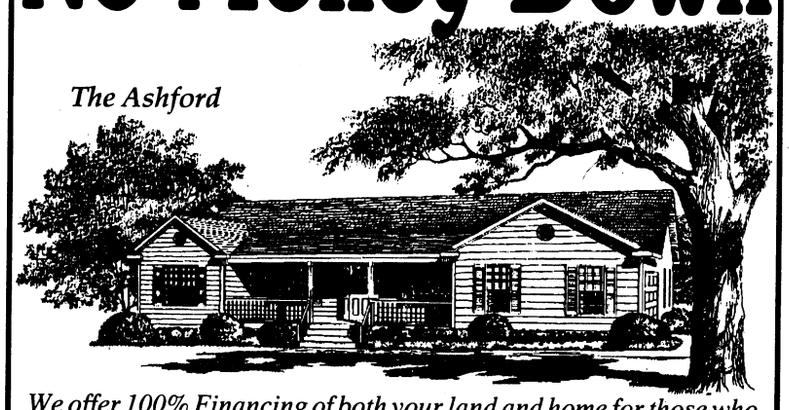
By Rick Parker
Office of the Staff Judge Advocate

Q. My parents and I decided that it would be best if my young sister, who is 15, comes to live with my wife and I at Fort Benning. Do I need any special documents once she gets here? Will she be entitled to any kind of military benefits?

A. You need to obtain legal guardianship of your sister. The law requires an adult to manage a minor's personal affairs. Usually one or both of the natural parents act on the minor's behalf. Examples of this include registering for school or consenting to medical treatment for the child. However, in order to act on your sister's behalf, the appropriate court must approve your guardianship.

In Columbus and Fort Benning, attorneys usually advise you to apply for, and obtain, a temporary guardianship of the minor. A relatively quick and easy procedure, and unlike a permanent guardianship, it normally requires no waiting period, costs less and requires no bond.

Although referred to as "temporary" guardianship, it is open-ended; therefore, no expiration date exists, and it continues until either the child becomes an adult or until one of the child's parents decides that they want it dissolved. It gives you all the power and authority you need to take care of the child's needs.



A simple procedure, it requires the preparation and filing of a petition for guardianship in the county where you reside. (Muscogee County covers Columbus and a small portion of Fort Benning; Chattahoochee County serves most of Fort Benning.) The written consent of the parents of the child, if available, accompanies the petition. Muscogee County only requires the consent of one parent, while Chattahoochee County requires the consent of both. Inability to gain parental consent or to find the a parent may require you to publish a notice in the newspaper for a period of time before the guardianship can be approved.

The Legal Assistance Office assists individuals in preparing all of the paperwork needed to file and obtain the guardianship. Individuals seeking guardianship pay court costs, which run from approximately $80 to $125.

As to benefits, a "ward" (the minor child under a guardian's control) receives a military family member identification card for commissary and exchange privileges and enrollment in military health-care services provided that the service member expects to have custody of the ward for at least 12 months.

Contact the Legal Assistance Division at 545-3281 for more information or to make an appointment with an attorney.

National advisory helps students find funds

National Academic Funding Advisory

With election year politics and confusing promises about federal student grant approvals, direct government student loans, tax credits and changes in college financial aid guidelines, many students find it difficult to identify and understand all of their financial aid options.

Unfortunately, many students miss out on receiving financial assistance available to them.

Students taking the traditional path of relying on federal, state and institutional financial aid become frustrated as they discover they can't afford to pay the increasing dollars institutions require they contribute each year. These extra payments strain family budgets and assets as many families try to fund schooling through burdensome debt.

Yet, unknown to many people, more than 375,000 non-government scholarship and grant sources exist that do not have to be paid back. More than 80 percent of these private scholarships do not depend on family need or exceptional grades. Officials award these private scholarships based on factors such as the student's interests, hobbies, academic focus, age gender, heritage or parent's work or military service.

Remarkably, according to the National Commission on Student Financial Aid, more than $6 billion of assistance goes uncollected each year simply because students do not apply for it. Now, the National Academic Funding Advisory, makes available an updated publication for 1996-'97 that spells out academic funding guidelines, steps students through the maze of the financial aid process and shows what students need to secure private assistance.

For information on how to receive academic funding and scholarships, send a No. 10 self-addressed, double-stamped business envelope plus $2 to cover handling to NAFA, 815 Middle Street, Dept. A7, Portsmouth, N.H. 03801.

Newborn know-how

Doctor recommends simple measures for parents to protect their infants

Egleston Children's Hospital

At last. You and your infant go home together. He or she counts on you to love, care and protect. But just how much protection does your newborn need? And from what?

Since no hard and fast rules exist about where — or with whom — newborns should spend their time, most parents base these judgments on some combination of folklore, advice from relatives and instinct.

That usually works fine, according to Egleston pediatric urgent care physician Dr. Tom M. Pantino, but it leads more than a few new parents to unnecessary or unwise extremes.

At one end of the spectrum, exists the parent who diligently keeps a baby wrapped in blankets and refuses to take him outdoors at all during the first month, save for his two-week check-up.

At the other end, there exists the parent who takes a 3-day-old baby grocery shopping on the way home from the hospital.

"Parents can't shield their babies from everything," Pantino said. "But if they know what the major risks are, they can rely on common sense to keep their babies safe and healthy."

Besides routine health and hygiene matters, the most important considerations fall into two categories: protecting newborns against infection and protecting them from the elements.

Most babies don't become ill during the first weeks of life, but some good reasons exist for preventing their exposure to contagious illnesses, according to Pantino. Many of the mother's antibodies cross the placenta during pregnancy, so babies receive protection against some illnesses. But this "passive" immunity protects no baby from all germs. It takes time for babies' immunities to build up — even breast-fed babies.

Furthermore, babies under 6 to 8 weeks old tend to get sicker than older babies with the same illness. Fever presents more of a concern. And newborns can't localize infection, so infections they get sometime spread to other areas of their bodies.

Protect against infection

To help reduce their newborns' risk of infection, Pantino recommends that parents:

•Avoid a lot of company for the first month or two

•Request that sick people visit another time

•Avoid large crowds

•Wait at least six weeks before putting newborns in day care and postpone big social or religious events, such as christenings, until babies are 4 to 6 weeks old. (All those hugs and kisses can spread germs.)

"After the two-week pediatrician's visit, many mothers are eager to get out and go visiting," Pantino said. "The key is moderation. No harm usually exists in stopping by work or a club meeting to show off the new baby. But make these visits short and with few people."

Protect against elements

"There's no reason to keep a baby of any age from being outdoors in nice weather," Pantino said. "Relaxing on the porch and strolling around the block are probably as refreshing for babies as parents. The watchwords here: sunburn and overdressing."

Avoid using sunscreens on babies under 6 months old because of their sensitive skin. Instead, keep babies out of direct sunlight during the hottest part of the day. Bonnets and lightweight T-shirts block the sun's rays.

Also a layette towel draped over the stroller canopy shades the baby's face and shoulders or draped over his exposed legs. Avoid using bug sprays on babies. Pantino advises heading indoors if insects become a problem.

New parents tend to overdress their babies.

"There's a perception that babies chill easily, but they're usually comfortable in the same temperature as adults, indoors or out," Pantino said. Dress babies in the same layers of clothing adults wear. Babies need hats outdoors in cold temperatures, though, since people lose body heat through the head.

"Protecting a newborn shouldn't be a burden," Pantino said. "In fact, much of the advice I give about protecting new babies is just as beneficial for new mothers."

Strategies like avoiding too much company, avoiding sick people and getting outdoors on pretty days can help mothers keep up their strength and adjust to new routines.

"It makes sense to take some extra precautions to protect newborns," Pantino said. "After the first four to six weeks, though, parents should be able to relax a bit—to begin incorporating the baby into their ordinary family lives.

Of course, anytime taking their babies out to interact with the world involves a car, parents must protect their children by properly restraining them in car safety seats."

tricare

Martin Army Community Hospital

The Department of Defense recently switched to a new health care program for the Army, Navy and Air Force this year.

Representatives from Martin Army Community Hospital provide Tricare information to soldiers, retirees and family members.

Many eligible beneficiaries show concern about the change and how it affects their care. One of the most commonly asked questions follows.

Q. What happens if I enroll in Tricare Prime at Martin Army Community Hospital and later move to another area?

A. If you move inside Region 3 or to Region 4, you simply transfer your Tricare enrollment to the new location. If you move into another area, pick up a disenrollment form from the Tricare Service Center, Building 9204, and take it with you. When you reach your new area, complete the disenrollment form and send it to Fort Benning before you enroll in Tricare or use standard Civilian Health and Medical Program of the Uniformed Services at your new location if Tricare remains unavailable.

Q. What is the point-of-service option under Tricare?

A. This rule applies to people enrolled in Tricare Prime. The point-of-service option consists of the financial expenses to you for circumventing your primary care manager to receive care. A Tricare Prime enrollee who seeks nonemergency care outside without your primary care manager's authorization referral, becomes liable for the point-of service option. This costs an annual deductible of $300 per individual or $600 per family and 50 percent cost share after meeting the deductible. Always consult with your PCM for your medical care needs.

Jews reflect on life after fleeing Egypt

By Chip Huey
2nd Battalion, 58th Infantry

Imagine living in a desert for 40 years without any modern amenities? The people of Israel did that with no food, water or shelter.

How did a million people survive in the desert roughly 4,000 years ago?

The Hebrew people and their leader, Moses, faced that dilemma after they escaped captivity in Egypt. God brought them out from under 400 years of slavery to the Egyptians. Moses and his people were free, but they were also stuck in the desert with no means of providing for themselves.

As usual, God came through. The children of Israel spent 40 years in the desert while God provided for them. During that time, they moved from location to location, living in their homemade tents. Those 40 years provided a formative period for the Jewish nation.

After the 40 years in the desert, God brought his people into the land he promised them. Once there, the Lord led his people in building the foundations of a nation. In the Scriptures, God commanded a series of major festivals as part of the nation's foundation, including Sukkot or the Festival of Tabernacles, also known as the Festival Of Tents or Booths.

God commanded three pilgrimage festivals including Sukkot. In a pilgrimage festival, the people packed up and traveled to the location of the Tabernacle or the Temple in Jerusalem. Sukkot, a week-long festival, occurred in the fall, five days after Yom Kippur.

reflections

Sukkot served a two-fold purpose: to celebrate the new harvest and to memorialize the 40 years Israel spent in the desert.

Jewish people celebrated the new harvest through the use of two symbolic objects: the lulov, a dried palm branch with sprigs of willow and myrtle attached to it and the etrog, a representation of a litron, a type of citrus fruit similar to a lemon.

During their wanderings in the desert, the Israelites lived in tents. Sukkot commemorates that experience by requiring that the participants build small tents, or booths, to live in during the week-long festival. The name of the festival, Sukkot, means booths in Hebrew.

chapel notes

Sunday school class uses sermon scriptures — A new adult class provides students an opportunity to study the Scripture in preparation for the morning sermon.

The Fort Benning Sunday School takes place Sundays from 9:30 to 10:30 a.m. in Building 2517 at the Religious Education Center.

For more information, call 545-4715.

Children's program — The Religious Education Center plans a new segment of its children's Bible study program, Personal Attitudes Relating To You. The new segment, Children Living Under the Bible, includes Bible study and scripture memorization, basic etiquette skills, table and home decorating and some sewing and cooking skills.

The first class meets the first Saturday of each month, beginning Oct. 5, from noon to 2 p.m. at the Religious Education Center, Building 2521.

All girls in grades three through six can attend.

PWOC to meet — The Protestant Women of the Chapel meet for their first Thursday general meeting Thursday from 9:30 a.m. to 1:30 p.m. in the Religious Education Center, Building 2521.

Focusing on the theme, "Sisters in Christ, Arise and Stand Firm, Hilda Forehand, a military wife from Fort Rucker, Ala., discusses spiritual warfare — its reality and what Christians do to fight it. Her discussion includes material that relates to teen-agers.

Bible study, prayer, singing, food and fellowship also highlight the meeting's agenda.

PWOC provides lunch for participants although moms must bring a sack lunch for children in the program's child care in Building 2517.

Each successive Thursday following the Oct. 3 meeting, PWOC plans to meet from 9:30 to 11:45 a.m. for Bible study and fellowship. The fall study highlights Henry Blackaby's, "Experiencing God."

For more information, call Jean Fry at 689-6049 or Cackie Howe at 685-2217.

Schedule set for Jewish high holy days — Jewish services of the High Holy Days take place at the Regimental Chapel, Building 3220, at Sand Hill , as follows:

- Yom Kippur Eve — Sunday, 7:30 p.m.;
- Yom Kippur (Day of Atonement) — Monday, 9:30 a.m.;
- Yom Kippur afternoon services — Monday, 5:30 p.m.
- Sukkot Eve (Feast of Booths) — Sept. 27, 7:30 p.m.

Call 545-2050 for more information.

Post chapel to change mass schedule — The 9 a.m. Mass at the Main Post Catholic Chapel changes to 8:45 a.m.

REC to resume language classes — Instructors conduct English language classes for beginners and advanced students each Tuesday from 9:30 to 11:30 a.m. at the Religious Education Center, Building 2522.

Students must purchase books for the free classes.

Military Appreciation Day today — The Buick Challenge sponsors Military Appreciation Day today at Callaway Gardens.

Members of the military, to include those in the reserve components, receive free entrance to the Buick Challenge at Callaway.

Also, Callaway Gardens opens its doors to those who want a break from watching golf or who don't even want to watch golf.

In celebration of Military Appreciation Day, several units plan picnics for their soldiers attending the event at Callaway.

The 11th Infantry Regiment, the 29th Infantry Regiment and the 3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division, plan picnics with plenty to eat for their soldiers.

For more information, contact your unit representative.

Tactical pistol match set — The Fort Benning Rifle and Pistol Club conducts a tactical pistol match Oct. 5 at 10 a.m. at English Range for expert and inexperienced shooters.

The club offers guns for the competition.

Preregistration through Oct. 2 costs $12 and $15 thereafter.

For more information, call Jim Graham at 689-3371.

Tuskegee, Morehouse football classic set — Oct. 12 marks the date of the Tuskegee University vs Morehouse College rivalry in Columbus.

This 61st annual football classic features entertainment and fun all day long beginning with a parade at 1 p.m. in Phenix City. The parade begins on Broad Street and crosses the 14th Street bridge to Columbus and continues down Broadway to the Coca-Cola Space Center.

For information on the parade, call Karen Jackson at 297-9042 or 687-2808.

A Greek step show starts at 3 p.m. at the Columbus Civic Center. Tickets cost $5 advance and $8 at the door.

Pregame festivities begin at 6:30 p.m. at Memorial Stadium with the kickoff at 7 p.m. Advance game tickets cost $12, and admission at the gate costs $15.

For ticket information, contact Jim Jackson at 322-2579 or 561-5920 or 561-5920.

YS offers programs — Youth Services offers a variety of programs for children in tae kwon do, tumbling, piano and dance.

Fees for the classes range from $20 to $25 per month.

Registration takes place Monday through Friday from 8:30 a.m. until 4:30 p.m. at Youth Services, Building 1056, for youth family members of active duty and retired military personnel and Department of Defense employees.

All children who participate must possess a YS card, which costs $20 per year, per family, and can be purchased at the YS administration office and the Main Post Youth Center, as well as all community outreach centers. The YS administration office conducts all sports registrations.

For more information, call 545-3070.

Shooters win World Military Championships

By David L. McCormack
U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit

U.S. Army competitive rifle shooters brought home Gold, Silver and Bronze medals and a world record for the United States after the 35th annual Conseil International du Sport Militaire, better known as CISM, World Military Shooting Championships Sept. 1 to 5.

CISM, a series of world championships involving 110 member nations competing in more than 20 sporting events, of which shooting is but one, represents the world's "military Olympics" in which member nations rotate the responsibility for hosting these championships annually. The event builds friendship and a better understanding among nations through sports, officials said.

Although the 600-plus competitors representing more than 40 nations, competing in this year's world shooting championships in Sweden remained friendly on the range and in social settings, each competitor's personal goal on the field of competition represented an intense desire to win for his team and his nation.

U.S. Army competitive rifle shooters, Glenn A. Dubis and Stephen C. Goff of the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit, proved no exception.

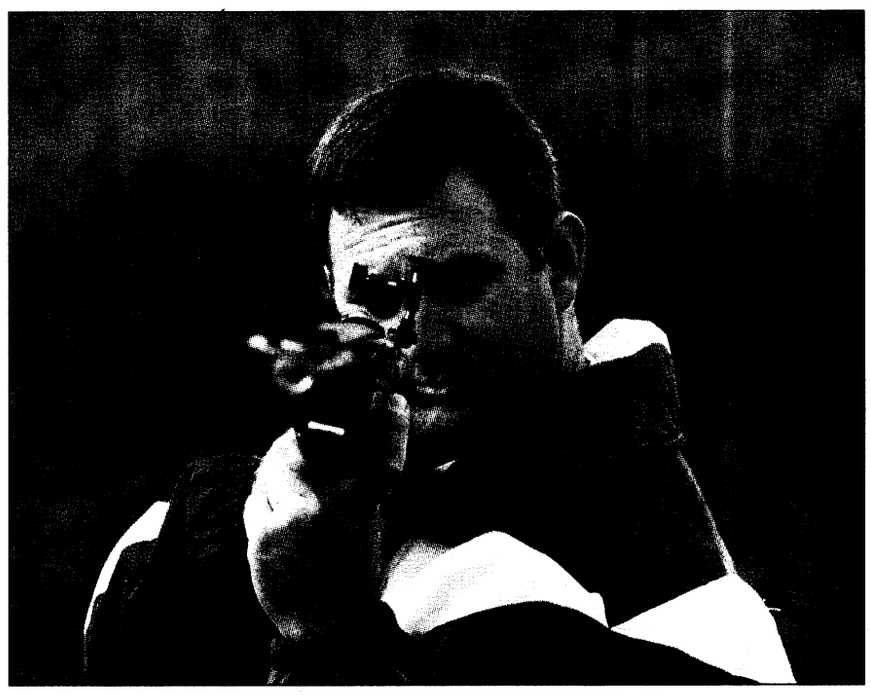
Individually, Dubis, a three-time Olympian and three-time world military rifle champion, won the Gold Medal in the 300-meter military rapid fire match with a score of 573 points and a Silver in the 300-meter standard rifle with a score of 581.

Dubis' aggregate individual score of 1,154 points for both matches won him the Polytronic Trophy — akin to the "Oscar of international competitive shooting" — and earned him the prestigious title of the world's military rifle champion for the fourth time.

"I feel very satisfied," Dubis said, speaking of his overall individual performance. "It's good to have your best day when it counts."

Goff, last year's CISM world military rifle championship title holder, came in a close second in the 300-meter military rapid fire event with a score of 571, earning him the Silver Medal, while Russia took the Bronze in the same match with a score of 569.

"I think they had an outstanding performance," said Bill E. Krilling, U.S. CISM rifle team coach, referring to Dubis' and Goff's individual scores. "They performed to their potential."



Krilling, an international legend himself, possesses more than 30 years of CISM experience both as a shooter competing in the world championships and as the coach for the U.S. CISM Rifle Team.

In the team events, Dubis led the U.S. team to a Silver Medal win in the 300-meter military rapid fire rifle match with a team score of 2,237 points and the Bronze in the 300-meter standard Rifle match with a team score of 2,311.

"I always want to shoot good for the team," Dubis said. "I try to shoot high scores and let the results fall where they may."

His personal strategy to keep the competitive pressure at a manageable level includes not worrying about the final results.

During the 300-meter standard rifle team match, Dubis set a world record by achieving a score of 590 points out of a possible 600 (four points over the previous world record).

Glenn Dubis won a Gold Medal in the military rapid fire competition and a Silver Medal in the standard rifle competition.

"I'll always try to better my score," Dubis said about his new world record, "but, 590's do not come everyday."

According to Dubis, Finland, Norway, Switzerland and Sweden ranked among the strongest competitors in past CISM championships. Now, Russia and many of the former east block countries like Belarus make the competition that much stiffer. He attributed this to improvements in the quality of the competitors and advances in technology.

Other members of the U.S. Rifle Team include Robert E. Harbison, Matthew P. Suggs and Webster M. Wright III, all of whom are also assigned to the USAMU.

In a ceremony that officially marked the end of the 35th Annual CISM World Military Shooting Championships Sept. 5, the chiefs of mission for the 40-plus delegations representing nations from around the world such as Russia, China and Syria, looked on as the members of the U.S. CISM Rifle Team took their place on the winner's stand.

Youths compete in NFL punt, pass, kick

By John W. Peeler
Special to the Bayonet©

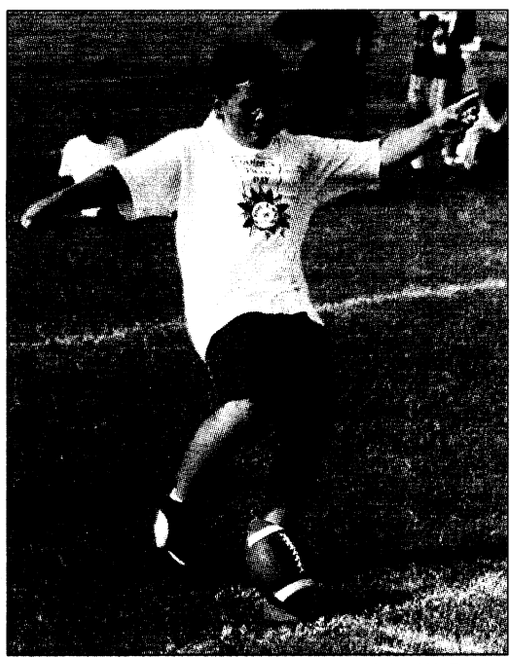
What do John Elway, Jim Kelly, Drew Bledsoe and Cordell Stewart have in common? They were all NFL punt, pass and kick competitors. In fact, John Elway captured the title in his age group years ago.

For the first time on post, the Youth Services offered the opportunity for children to participate in the National Football League's punt, pass and kick and, along with it, a chance to compete in sectional, team and national finals.

The competition, open to boys and girls ages 8-15, tests the competitors ability in both accuracy and distance with points being deducted for lack of accuracy.

Scores were determined from the point where the participants punt, pass or kick first makes contact with the ground, measured from the start point, for distance, and from the center line, for accuracy.

First, second and third place ribbons were awarded to the contestants in four separate age groups. The winners proceed to the section finals in Moultrie, Ga., Oct.19 with the opportunity to go to the team championships and, ultimately, participate in the national championships set for one of the American Football Conference playoff games.



Winners of the local competition were:

8- to 9-year-old division
Raymond Jones, 112 feet, 6 inches
Steven Antonia, 94 feet, 6 inches

10- to 11-year-old division
William Proctor, 199 feet, 4 and 1/2 inches
Richard White, 177 feet, 7 inches
Patrick Funkhouser, 142 feet, 9 inches

12- to 13-year-old division
Daniel Gilbert, 217 feet, 2 inches
Roderick Williams, 199 feet, 6 inches
Jason Verette, 192 feet, 5 inches

14- to 15-year-old division
Brandon Webb, 249 feet, 10 and 1/2 inches
Robert Barrett, 228 feet, 3 and 1/2 inches
Anthony Ayres, 190 feet, 5 inches

Youth programs teach children sport, fun

By Linda Kaup
Special to The Bayonet

commentary

The good news: More children sign up for organized sports today than any previous generation. The bad news: They drop out in record numbers.

I, as a parent and coach, see children start with a burst of enthusiasm and energy.

What makes them lose their drive? Dr. Kevin Seefeldt, director of the Youth Sports Institute at Michigan State University, said by the time children reach 15, seventy-five percent of them who ever played a sport dropped out.

In a study conducted by Seefeldt, the answer seemed very simple: Children said playing just wasn't fun anymore. The youths said that coaches criticized too much and made practices too long and boring.

The few suggestions listed below help parents make their child's sports experience a positive one.

•Learn the philosophy of the league or sports organization before you sign up. Communities often provide many organized sports teams, including recreational teams that play anyone who signs up. These present less competitiveness than the travel, or try-out, leagues, for which players are chosen.

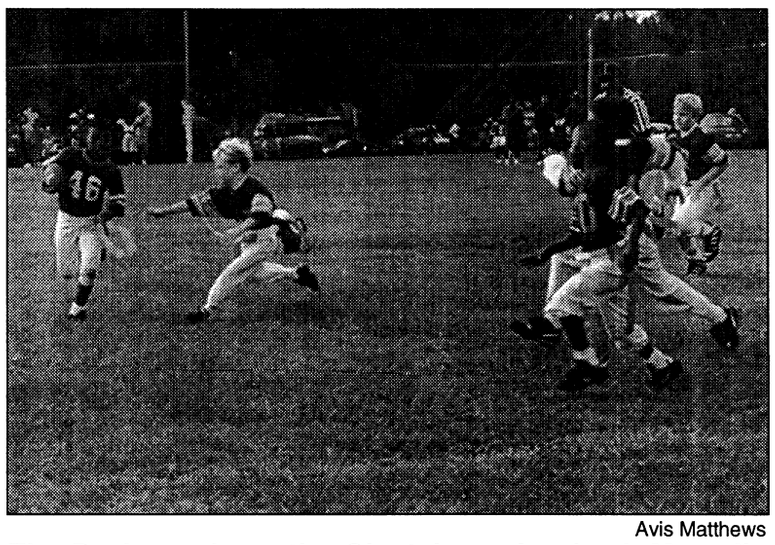
•Children by nature want to play, but not all children want to compete. Parents and coaches steer children who dislike the stress of competition toward non-competitive activities: hiking, biking, swimming and running.

As parents, we all want our child to excel, but as adults we must recognize our children's developmental level and encourage programs that are appropriate to it. In the early years — 5 through 10 — a successful program concentrates on helping each child improve their individual skill level.

"Kids want to be able to do something that they haven't been able to do before," Seefeldt said. (These include such activities as dribbling a basketball, controlling a soccer ball, swimming the length of a pool by himself — that exhilarates a child.)

Ask about the length of the sports season or lesson. Two to three practices a week, an hour or less each, provide enough training for youngsters under the age of 10. Try to keep children in only one physical sport at a time, you can over train.

Check out coaches' reputations. In the best of possible worlds, coaches would be certified. But until that happens, talk to parents of other children in the league to find out about the coach and his style. Do they try to learn the children's names quickly? Do they talk to players like they are children or bark orders like they talk to pros? Do they rotate players during a game so everyone gets to play with everyone else, or do they send in the "bad" players only at the end of the game or inning (a painfully obvious practice to children as well as adults)?



Linda Laine, youth center sports director, said it best when she said, "Often times a coach will lose site of the goal at the Youth Center — to have fun."

It is important to attend practices and support your child continuously throughout his growth. Instead of asking the score, ask if he had fun. Be happy when they win, of course, but always praise personal accomplishments.

If you feel you or your child's coach needs some training, contact the National Youth Sports Coaches Association at (800) 729-2057.

The Fort Benning Youth Center always needs volunteer coaches.

Contact Linda Laine at 545-3070, or stop by Building 1056 from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. Monday through Friday.

The Packers chase the Giants' running back Marsalis McCloud in flag football. The Giants won 20-6.

YS kicks off 1996 football season

By John W. Peeler
Special to the Bayonet©

The Youth Services football season kicked off Saturday at Blue Field with two games on tap in the 6- to 8-year-old flag football division and three games in the 9 to 12 tackle football division.

In the flag division, the Giants defeated the Packers 20-6 on the strong running of Marsalis McCloud who scored two touchdowns in the game, with Joshua Vargas adding a touchdown for the Giants.

In the division's second game,, the 49ers went down in defeat to the Vikings by a score of 19-6.

The 49ers failed to get their offense on track as the Vikings defense kept them to a single touchdown.

In the 9- to 12-year-old tackle division, the Vikings defeated the Eagles 24-6 with an aerial onslaught from quarterback Zeke Morris.

Morris passed for 100 yards and one touchdown and ran for one touchdown to lead the Vikings.

In the other early game, the Chiefs slipped past the Seminoles 14-6.

In the late game, the Cowboys shut out the Panthers 12-0 with touchdowns from Sean Brookins in the first quarter and Chris Jones in the second quarter.

The Panthers defense shut down the Cowboy offense in the second half, but the Panthers failed to score as the game ended.

Youth Services flag and tackle football teams play every Saturday beginning at 9 a.m. on Blue Field. The season continues through Nov. 19.

Shooters zero their weapons

USAMU Public Affairs Office

The U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit served as host for the first of two Hunter Zero days from 9 a.m. to 1 p.m. Saturday on Fort Benning's English Range.

Hunter Zero days prepare the more than 1,000 hunters registered to hunt on post for the opening of deer season Oct. 26. Members of the USAMU Service Rifle Team help shooters zero their weapons by manning four shooting stations, each having 50-, 100-, 200- and 300-yard scoring targets. Before shooters zero their guns, USAMU gunsmiths inspect them to ensure their safety.

"I checked to make sure the gun safeties worked, the bores were not obstructed and the shooters were using the right ammunition," USAMU gunsmith Joey Leon said.

"Besides doing the safety checks, I helped the shooters adjust their scopes."

The first day attracted mostly soldiers and a few civilians and retirees, according to Leon.

"We've been adjusting a lot of scopes to where the bullets are hitting," John O. Chubb, USAMU Service Rifle shooter, said.

"One guy had real serious problems," USAMU Service Rifle shooter Lewis A. Tippie said. "His sight base was messed up, but we (Leon and I) got it fixed."

The USAMU Service Rifle Team and gunsmiths serve as hosts for the final Hunter Zero Day for this season Oct. 6 from 2 to 5 p.m. at English Range.

"We verify zeros," Service Rifle shooter and coach Richard M. Remily said. "We don't teach people how to shoot; we assist people with their weapon."

"We help spot the rounds and we can help people adjust their scopes or sights," he continued. "We make sure the hunters will hit where their guns are pointed."

"We look at people's personal weapons and check the safety of the guns," USAMU gunsmith Staff Mark T. Paltner said. "If they're having problems with their weapons, we can answer their questions, and we can help them put on simple accessories like a scope. The main thing we're concerned with is that they have a safe gun and the right ammunition."

Rules change for 1996-1997 hunting season

Environment Management Division, DPW

Hunters and people who like to fish face several changes in post regulations for 1996-1997.

The Outdoor Recreation Office, Building 1707, provides copies of the revised hunting and fishing regulation and the hunting seasons and bag limits circular.

Many hunters pursue the white-tailed deer so Directorate of Public Works focuses its management efforts on that, according to Pete K. Swiderek, acting chief of the Natural Resources Management Branch.

"Our goal is to maintain deer in good physical condition through manipulation of the habitat and harvest levels," he said. "More than 1,000 deer are harvested annually at Fort Benning.

However, the voluntary deer check has not provided an adequate sample for biologists to evaluate the deer herd. The measurements of deer physical condition are an important factor in making management decisions. Therefore, a mandatory deer check will be conducted on certain dates."

Nov. 2 and 3, hunters must bring all deer harvested on the Georgia side of the reservation to the Harmony Church check station, Building 5883, or to the intersection of 10th Armored Division Road and Buena Vista Road.

Dec. 14 and 15, hunters must bring all deer harvested on the Alabama side of the reservation to the Uchee Creek Recreation Area.

Hunters not bringing deer to the check station on these dates face a suspension of hunting privileges for 30 days, Swiderek said.

The voluntary deer check operates from 7:45 a.m. until 4:15 p.m., Monday through Friday at Building 5883. Also, the Georgia Department of Natural Resources no longer uses the deer tagging system. However, post officials continue to use the Fort Benning deer permits or "kill cards."

Weapons

Several changes regarding legal weapons affect hunters. Hunters may not carry a firearm when bow hunting even during the firearms season. Deer hunters may use shotguns with slugs and handguns (.357, .41, and .44 magnums, ammunition capable of generating 500 feet/pounds of energy at 100 yards, barrel length of 5.9 inches or longer) in any compartment not designated for bow hunting or waterfowl only.

However, hunters may not carry handguns in a concealed manner. To further clarify the shotgun and rifle areas, the revised regulation states: rifles, muzzle-loading rifles, and handguns (not specified above) are prohibited in the following compartments: A-4, A-5, A-6, A-7, A-8, A-19, C-1, C-2, C-3, P-1, P-2, P-3, Q-2, Q-3, R-1, R-2, S-1, S-2, S-3, U-4, W-4, Y-1, AA, BB-1, BB-2, BB-3, BB-4, BB-5, BB-6, and CC-3 and those areas designated for bow or waterfowl only.

Hunters also express confusion about the call-in and call-out procedures. The regulation requires daily call ins and call outs by all hunters during each state's respective firearms deer season. For example, hunting in Georgia requires call in or call out during the Georgia firearms deer season. However, when the Georgia firearms deer season ends, the regulation allows small game hunters in Georgia to not call in even though the Alabama firearms deer season continues in progress.

There is a new hunting map location at Building 9079, Kelley Hill Recreation Center. The Range Division, at the request of the 3rd Brigade, sends hunting and fishing information sheets to the recreation center. This area serves as a permanent map location.

Swine

"During the 1995-1996 hunting season, we received the first widespread reports of swine on the reservation, Swiderek said. "The origin of these swine is unknown, but they were undoubtedly released within the last couple of years on or near Fort Benning. Currently, the swine are most concentrated in the A, K, and CC training areas. There are a few swine on the Alabama side of the reservation."

Regulations prohibit the release of swine onto the reservation. Swine can increase in number rapidly, which creates severe competition with other wildlife.

The potential for disease transmission presents another concern, Swiderek said. Two diseases of concern associated with swine include brucellosis and pseudo-rabies.

"At this time, we do not know if the swine carry these diseases," Swiderek said. "Natural Resources Management Branch biologists are working in cooperation with U.S. Department of Agriculture to test the Fort Benning swine for disease. These diseases can cause reproductive losses in domestic animals, and brucellosis is transmissible to humans.

"Since the disease can be transmitted through direct contact with the blood or reproductive organs, hunters should wear plastic gloves when field dressing swine. Swine diseases are not transmitted to humans through eating the pork if the meat is thoroughly cooked," he said.

The firearms hunting season for swine coincides with the Georgia firearms deer season of Oct. 26 until Jan. 12. A year-round archery season for swine exists in selected compartments.

"Hunters are encouraged to report swine harvest and sightings to the Natural Resources Management Branch," Swiderek said. "If possible, blood samples should be taken from harvested swine," he said. The Outdoor Recreation Office provides sampling tubes and survey forms.

"With the addition of swine and a slight increase in the deer population over the last two years, the 1996-1997 season will have increased hunting opportunities," he said. "However, a single accident can ruin an otherwise successful hunting season. Always exercise muzzle control, read and obey the hunting regulations and be courteous to other hunters."

Report violations to the Military Police Activity at 545-5222..

THE BAYONET is looking for soldiers, Department of Defense civilians and family members to be guest pickers for The Benning Line. Interested individuals should call 545-2201 or stop by The Bayonet office located in Infantry Hall, Building 4, Room 606.

Lockheed Martin's D3 Engineering team is looking for individuals skilled in the following areas:

SCIENTIFIC PROGRAMMERS
Serial communications, trusted software development, multi-level secure systems implementation, operating systems, and integrated development environments skills are required. A BS in computer science, math, or a physical science and four plus years' programming experience, including C/C++, UNIX, X-Windows, Motif, and object-oriented analysis/design are necessary. Extensive travel required.

ELECTRONIC DATA SYSTEMS ANALYSTS
Data analysis experience in both digital and analog processing is desired, as is two years technical training beyond high school. Three years' experience with electronic data analysis and non communications signals a must. Travel required.

SOFTWARE QUALITY ASSURANCE ENGINEERS
One plus years' demonstrated experience in UNIX, C/C++, SQL, X-Windows and Motif application development is key. A BS in engineering, computer science, math or a physical science is required, plus four years' experience in scientific programming, engineering, mathematics or systems administration is necessary. Travel required.

SYSTEMS ENGINEER
Five to eight years' experience in coordinating, planning and conducting system test activities is necessary, including building testing, format testing to the customer; generation of software integration test plans, actual conducting of pre- and post- test activities, test data evaluation and test report generation. A BS in engineering, computer science, math or a physical science is required.

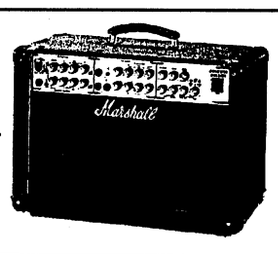
TECHNICAL TRAINERS
Tasking will require familiarity with embedded training and multimedia resources in an electronic signal-based curriculum. Candidates should have experience with ICON Author and AIM Development Tools, software development/maintenance (C++, UNIX) and familiarity with NAVEDTRA 130/USAF Handbook 36-2235 Directives. A BS in education or a related discipline, plus a minimum of 5-9 years' experience in designing/developing technical training instruction materials, in accordance with ISD/CRI strategies, is necessary.

SENIOR RESEARCH ENGINEERS
A minimum of 5 years' experience in design and implementation of automated maintenance control elements for large distributed computer systems is key. You will be required to develop/refine requirements and concepts of operations for OO, C++ software maintenance. GUI experience in screen design and layout and the ability to analyze/develop software and related troubleshooting is required. A BS in computer science, engineering or technical field is essential.

PROGRAM PLANS COST ANALYSTS
A BS in business administration with 3-5 years' experience in financial planning, budgeting and tracking of cost and schedule performance for major contract is highly desirable.

FIELD ENGINEERS
C++, UNIX, DOS and Windows plus NOVELL, VME Bus interfaces required, along with silicon graphics and telemetry experience. A degree in electrical engineering preferred. Extensive travel to remote locations performing systems test and maintenance is necessary.

Applicants will be subject to a government security investigation and must meet eligibility requirements for access to classified information.



Please send your resume (without bold or italics), indicating position of interest, to: Lockheed Martin Missiles and Space/D3, Attn: Staffing/MPM, 4820 E. Dry Creek Road, Bldg. 721, Littleton, CO 80122.

Fair arrives in Columbus

By Lisa M. Hibbert
Bayonet staff writer

The Chattahoochee Valley Fair remains in town through Oct. 13 and offers free admission and free rides to active duty soldiers Sunday between 1 and 5 p.m. Soldiers admitted to fair free Monday, however, rides will cost soldiers $7.

Pay procedures for this year's fair changed from last year, said Elaine DeMarco, general manager and corporate secretary for the Chattahoochee Valley Fair. A one-price admission allows fair goers to ride as many rides as they want all day long.

Entertainment includes the Great American Lumberjacks, a live shark show, a Native American-themed dancing bear show and the Fairchild Magic Illusion show. Ms. Columbus and the Sierra Rose dancers, a line dancing group also appear at the fair.

A chili competition, a complement to the foot-long hot dogs, takes place throughout the 11-day event.

The fair opens weekdays at 5 p.m. and closes at 11 p.m, opens at 1 p.m. and closes midnight Saturdays and opens at 1 and closes at 11 p.m. Sundays.

Adult tickets cost $12; children younger than 12 tickets cost $10. Unless riding rides, children under four are admitted to the fair for free. A walk around only ticket costs $6 and a second chance ticket for the person who changes his or her mind and decides to ride costs $7.

The fair grounds is located off of Victory Drive, between Jackson Avenue and Blanchard Boulevard, near the Dolly Madison plant. Vehicles park through the Jackson Avenue entrance.

Other special fair dates include:

•Saturdays, Kiddie Day — Children under 12 admitted to fair free between noon and 2 p.m.; rides cost $7.

•Sundays, Church Appreciation Day — Fair goers receive free admission when presenting a church bulletin between 1 and 3 p.m., rides cost $7.

•Wednesday, Senior Night — Senior citizens receive free admission when presenting an identification card, rides cost $7.

•Thursday, School Night — Fair admission free for children under 12, rides cost $7.

Golf and stuff ...

Fort Benning community members traveled to Callaway Gardens Friday taking part in Military Appreciation Day. This was the second time the event was conducted in conjunction with the Buick Challenge Golf Tournament. Soldiers got a chance to try their hand at golf under the Buick Spectator Exhibit Tent. Units from across post set up tents and conducted their own activities on the gardens' grounds. The Association of the United States Army, which co-sponsored of the day's events, gave away gifts and trips including a portable compact disc player, a basketball hoop and stand and a trip to the Pocono Mountains in Pa. Mother Nature also played a role in the tournament and the military's activities as rain fell during day. In the end, the tournament was cut in half, and Michael Bradley won the tournament during a one-hole, five-man playoff finishing with a -10. Last year's champion, Fred Funk, tied for second.

Dedication set

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Columbus and Fort Benning officially dedicate the RiverWalk Oct. 12 with these events: a corporate relay race, a River March and a ceremony.

Scheduled first, the corporate relay race, beginning at 8 a.m., spans the length of the RiverWalk from Fort Benning's National Infantry Museum, ending at the Columbus pavilion behind the Ironworks Convention Center in downtown Columbus.

Registration costs $40 for each seven-person relay team. This fee earns each participant an official T-shirt, a certificate of participation and $2 discount off the admission price to the Uptown Jam, a community-wide celebration of the RiverWalk's opening occurring the evening of the dedication ceremony and the following day in Columbus.

The Uptown Jam features food, entertainment and fireworks.

The second portion, the River March, a modified volksmarch, starts at Fort Benning's Information Center on Benning Boulevard at 9 a.m. and ends at the Columbus pavilion. River March participants walk, run, skate or bicycle the course. A $5 registration fee earns each participant an official T-shirt, a certificate of participation and $2 discounted off the admission price to the Uptown Jam and a chance at door prizes.

Participants not wishing to begin at the Information Center can start at any one of five other sites along the 12-mile route, including Oxbow Meadows, the Water Works' South Plant, Bull Creek Bridge, Rotary Park and South Commons.

Beth A. Taylor, publicity specialist, Uptown Columbus, said the River March represents a community- oriented event.

"The River March is a community-wide celebration in recognition of the opening of the completed RiverWalk from Fort Benning to Columbus," she said. "It is a grand way to enjoy the beauty of the River Walk and the river itself during a family-oriented, fun community celebration."

Relay participants register at the Information Center between 7 and 8 a.m., and River March participants register between 8:30 a.m. and noon on the day of the event.

Participants in the race and River March, an expected 100 to 200 people, return to the starting point by bus as needed.

An official RiverWalk dedication ceremony takes place at the Columbus Pavilion, culminating the activities. Festivities begin at 1 p.m., with Fort Benning Commanding General Maj. Gen. Carl F. Ernst, Columbus Mayor Bobby G. Peters and Phenix City Mayor Sammy Howard dedicating the river's scenic overlook.

"We're hoping for and getting a good response from all different aspects of the community, including community groups and organizations," she said.

For more information regarding the River March, contact Brad Castleberry, Fort Benning Public Affairs Office, at 545-2238. Regarding the Relay Race, contact Jim Brown, Directorate of Community Activities, at 545-5771. The dedication ceremony contact is Burnie Quick, Uptown Columbus, at 596-0111.

Commissary renovation to expand floor space

By Lisa M. Hibbert
Bayonet staff writer

The Fort Benning Commissary's sales floor increases in size, and officials plan to make wider selections available as a result of a major renovation project currently under way.

Although the renovation project began in December 1995, commissary shoppers noticed the construction two weeks ago when workers built a wall behind the meat department, blocking off the construction.

"We are renovating the commissary in phases," said Mike S. Waksmonski, deputy commissary officer.

"We finished the first phase, which includes the new produce department, and we just started work on the meat department."

Commissary officials plan to keep the store open during the renovation, according to Jim Hobbins, commissary officer. This may mean temporary inconvenience for the customers, he said.

"Hopefully the customers will be patient while the construction is going on," Hobbins said.

As workers complete construction on each phase, the new sections open so that renovations begin in the older sections of the store.

"Everything except the walls will change," Hobbins said. "There will be new tiles on the floor, new, brighter lighting, new coolers, new freezers and new roofs."

The renovation enlarges the selling floor. Currently the store occupies 38,000 square feet, but after the renovation, the store increases to 47,000 square feet. The extra space comes from the warehouse, Waksmonski said.

"What this means to customers is they are getting a larger, more state-of-the-art facility with a wider selection," Waksmonski said.

"There will also be a lot of changes that our customers won't see like two new employee break areas, a locker room, new administrative offices and a new employee entrance," Waksmonski said.

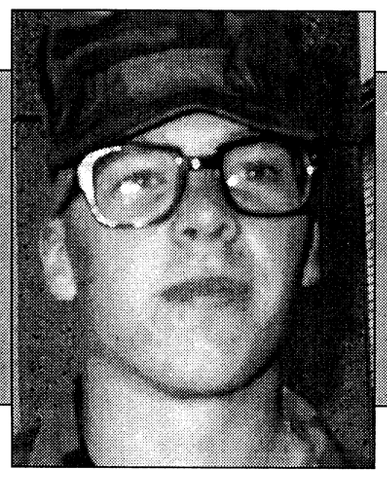
Practical as well as cosmetic changes enhance the commissary's new appearance, Waksmonski said.

Renovated sections of the store feature white tile, with mauve trim that mark different sections. Mauve walls, trimmed in oak with splashes of deep blue trim and deep blue tile give the store a new look.

Energy-efficient lighting and freon-free coolants will pay off in the long run with lower energy bills, Hobbins said.

The store's layout changes as a part of the project. The produce department, which nearly quadruples, moves to the front of the store, and the dairy section moves to the back aisles. The deli and meat departments become larger and additional frozen food cases increase the number of foods available to customers.

Commissary officials plan to add new departments to the store.



"We are adding a fresh bakery section featuring bread, cakes, and donuts," Hobbins said. "The deli department will carry hot rotisserie chicken and hot pizza sold whole, half and by the slice."

The new commissary also features customer restrooms and debit card machines at registers. Also, customers no longer need to present military identification cards when

Sgt. Lora Land, U.S. Army Medical Department Activity — "Sitting down and taking time with your child. Also, counting to 10 before disciplining."

Pvt. 1 Patrick S. Kulp. Company A, 1st Battalion, 50th Infantry Regiment — "Drinking in the family leads to child abuse. They should go to counseling for that."

Staff Sgt. Santiago Martinez, Company D, 1st Battalion, 19th Infantry Regiment — "Education of the parents and the children is the key because there is a lot of ignorance about it."

Staff Sgt. Gary Land, 104th Transportation Company — "Educate yourself about child abuse. Be able to identify some of the features of child abuse."

Alvesta Springer, family member — "I think more involvement by parents not allowing children to be harmed, and more screening of day-care centers and baby-sitters. In the home, parents should do more communicating with children instead of resorting to abuse."

Domestic violence

Many families hide dark secrets along with bruises, pain

Army Community Services

Carrie and John seemed like they had everything going for them. Both performed very well in school and involved themselves in a lot of school activities.

Their dad works as the manager of a local company and their mom stays home. The entire family seems very normal and healthy to the outside world. But pain and violence fill the inside of their home.

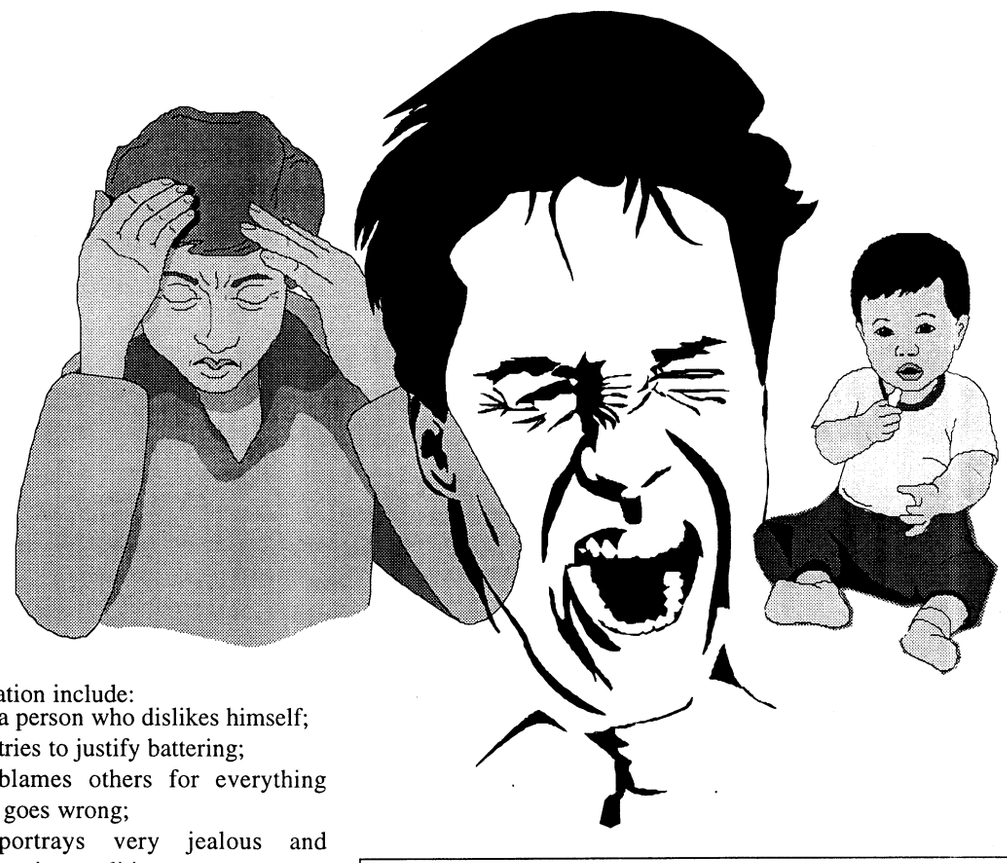
commentary

The violence usually begins with some tension in the air when dad gets home. It ends up in a shouting match in which Carrie and John are sent to bed.

Soon, they can hear the slaps, thuds and cries that come from the living room, and both children remain afraid to go down to help.

In the morning, the evidence of the abuse remains clear. Carrie and John again see their mom with bruises and black eyes, and again, they escape to school where no one knows what happens at their house."

The above scenario, taken from information produced by the Rape and Abuse Crisis Center of Fargo-Moorhead in Fargo, N.D., represents what sadly may be considered a trend in many American homes today.



Not only causing suffering to spouses, domestic violence hurts entire families experiencing it, especially children who witness these occurrences.

According to statistics from the Rape and Abuse Crisis Center of Fargo-Moorhead, males make up 95 percent of abusers. Also, in America, a woman remains more likely to get seriously hurt or killed by a male partner than by anyone else.

The idea that the majority of domestic violence occurs in low-income or minority homes remains a myth. Domestic violence affects all areas of society and every race, economical status and religion.

An epidemic of such violence led the U.S. surgeon general to declare the situation as a major health problem to women.

Some characteristics of a typical abuser that enables someone to identify and assist another in a bad situation include:

•a person who dislikes himself;
•tries to justify battering;
•blames others for everything that goes wrong;
•portrays very jealous and possessive qualities;
•believes the man rules the household and he remains the boss; and •probably suffered domestic violence as a child.

The center also offers these tips for identifying someone suffering abuse: The victim:

•doesn't like herself and tries to excuse her batterer;
•believes the batterer will change;
•feels controlled by the abuser;
•denies the problem and out of fear suppresses the anger that it causes;
•blames herself for the continual battering, and •believes society condones violence against women probably because of some past experience.

Domestic violence causes not only physical, but also severe emotional harm to every person involved in its cycle.

Anyone witnessing this tragedy needs to report it to local authorities and insist that action be taken to stop the cycle.

Remember, America's spouses not only suffer, its children hurt, too.

Editor's note: October marks Domestic Violence Awareness Month. The Family Advocacy Program plans an informational display at Army Community Service, Building 2643, in Soldiers' Plaza, throughout the month.

Effects of abuse on victim, children

How children feel when abuse occurs between parents:

•powerless because they can't stop the abuse,
•guilty, believing that they somehow caused the abuse,
•angry, blaming mom, thinking it may somehow be her fault,
•angry at dad for hurting mom,
•helpless because they feel a need to help solve the problem, but only end up getting hurt when they try to help,
•confused because parents may try to get children to choose sides,
•afraid for themselves and all family members,
•isolated and insecure, often making up excuses so they don't have to go home,
•dishonest and embarrassed because they make up excuses to family and friends for mom's bruises, •overwhelmed by the situation, often leading to poor school performance and avoiding friends.

Understanding why mom stays:

•Even though there are violent and bad times in the relationship, there are also loving and good times.
•She probably believes she must stay married until "death do they part."
•She probably believes the violence will stop if she does all the things a "good wife" should do.
•She is isolated from family and friends by her husband who has told her she doesn't need anyone but him, and because she feels embarrassed about bruises and lacerations.
•She's afraid.

Mom fears if she leaves:

•the abuser will find her and hurt her even more;
•she won't be able to support herself or her children;
•the husband may get custody of the children because he has more money and may be able to hire a better attorney.

DCA response:

The Director of McGraw Child Developmen Center explained that since the McGraw van i presently unserviceable, the center must share vans with other centers and the School Age Services Program. Attempts were made to secure other means of transportation. However, transportation for the Olympics had priority. Trips are scheduled weekly and the Center will be able to add activities.

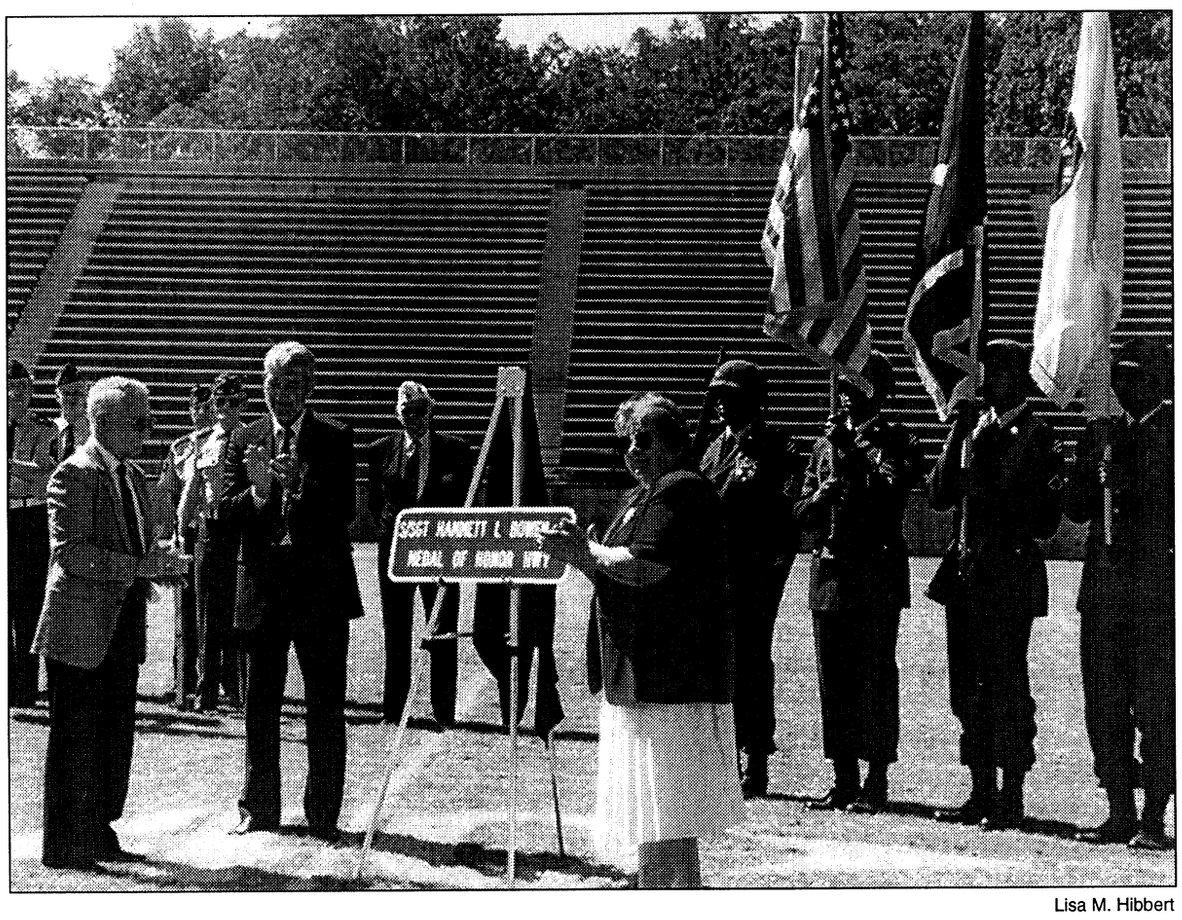
City names highway for Medal of Honor recipient

By Lisa M. Hibbert
Bayonet staff writer

A Medal of Honor recipient received more honors Sept. 24 as the city of LaGrange, Ga., named a stretch of Georgia State Route 109 East in his honor.



Staff Sgt. Hammett L. Bowen Jr., who once served at Fort Benning and received the Medal of Honor posthumously in 1972 for his actions while serving in Vietnam, received the honors as hundreds of family members, friends and post officials gathered.

Maj. Gen. Carl F. Ernst, Fort Benning commanding general, delivered the keynote address at the ceremony, which took place at Callaway Stadium on the campus of LaGrange College.

"I didn't have the privilege of knowing Bowen, but I knew him," Ernst said. "I knew him because I served with so many soldiers who were like him, dedicated to their country."

Serving as a platoon sergeant in the Binh Duong Province, Bowen's platoon advanced on a reconnaissance mission into enemy controlled territory. After coming under crossfire from an enemy ambush force, Bowen returned heavy fire on the enemy positions and ordered his men to retreat.

As the platoon moved out, an enemy grenade landed among them. Bowen shouted a warning to his men and hurled himself on the grenade, taking the blow with his body while saving the lives of his fellow soldiers.

Ernst challenged the crowd of students gathered at the stadium to live as Bowen did.

"If you live as Bowen did, this world will be a better place," Ernst said. "When his true moment came, when the officer asked him if he could handle the mission, knowing he might not make it back, Bowen answered, 'Yes sir, I've got it,'" Ernst said. "He will live forever in the Army."

The Infantry Band and a color guard comprised of soldiers from Battery B, 1st Battalion, 10th Field Artillery, 3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division (Mechanized), accompanied Ernst.

Bowen's father, Hammett Bowen, expressed his pleasure with the celebration of his son's life and service.

"If Hammett Jr. were here, he would be as honored as I am by this day," Hammett Bowen said. "I am very proud of my son and of the sacrifice he made."

Quoting John 15:13 Hammett said, "Greater love has no one than this, that he lay down his life for his friends."

Safety checks begin

By Jacqué Hill
Special to the Bayonet©

Fort Benning's military police began setting up motor vehicle check points at various locations on the post recently.

These check points, according to Maj. Ronald G. Jones, chief, Law Enforcement Division, focus on safety.

Performing these checks weekly, members of the Military Police Activity inspect vehicles for compliance with safety regulations, he said.

Drivers need to possess a valid license to drive, and all vehicles must be properly insured and registered, both with a state agency and the installation, he said.

Also, everyone in vehicles needs to wear safety belts, infants need to ride in child safety seats and all the lights on the vehicles need to work properly, he said.

"We are trying to enhance compliance with safety regulations from community members," Jones said.

MPs stay at one location for approximately two hours and an individual stop lasts between four and six minutes, Jones said.

"We are not out to get anyone with these check points," Jones said. "We are trying to promote safety and compliance with regulations. Most members of the community are already complying with them."

Service members get new meal rates on TDY

By Gerry Gilmore
Army News Service

WASHINGTON — Soldiers and other service members on temporary duty will receive a more flexible and simplified per diem meal rate when traveling on TDY orders starting Oct. 1.

The old system of meal-by-meal adjustment based on availability or use of individual meals created extra record keeping and extra work in settling travel claims, according to personnel officials.

A new per diem rate for meals, combining the average of the on-base rate and locality off-base rate, plus incidental costs, provides the best solution. The lodging portion of per diem isn't affected; the new system deals with it in the same manner as before.

The new system brings a totally different perspective to establishing per diem rates for meals, said Army Lt. Col. Kay Moore, who works in the deputy chief of staff for personnel's compensation and entitlements branch in the Pentagon. The orders approving authority, she added, will now make the call on the appropriate rate based on availability and practicality of government meals.

"The Office of the Secretary of Defense Comptroller has decided to simplify dining facility operations by charging a single-meal rate instead of the current variety of rates," Moore said. "For TDY service members, this changes the daily meal cost at dining facilities from $18.15 to $7 (breakfast, $1.50; lunch, $2.75, dinner, $2.75)."

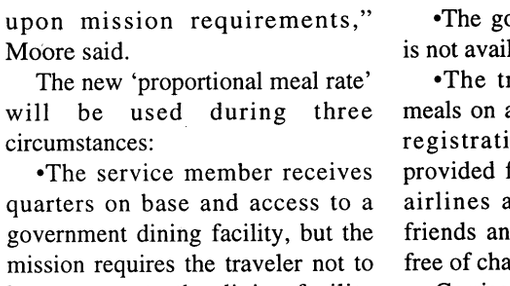
Without the corresponding per diem reduction, those travelers who could use the dining facility some of the time either would receive the locality per diem rate (and be potentially very overpaid) or receive the on-base rate (and be potentially very underpaid), he said.

"If the dining facility rate was changing, that meant that the per diem rate had to change, as well," Moore said.

TDY order issuing officials and commanders of a 'schoolhouse' facility will play key roles in determining an individual's per diem rate for meals.

"They look at whether government meals are available at the location where the individual is going, and secondly, whether it's practical to use an available government dining facility, based upon mission requirements," Moore said.

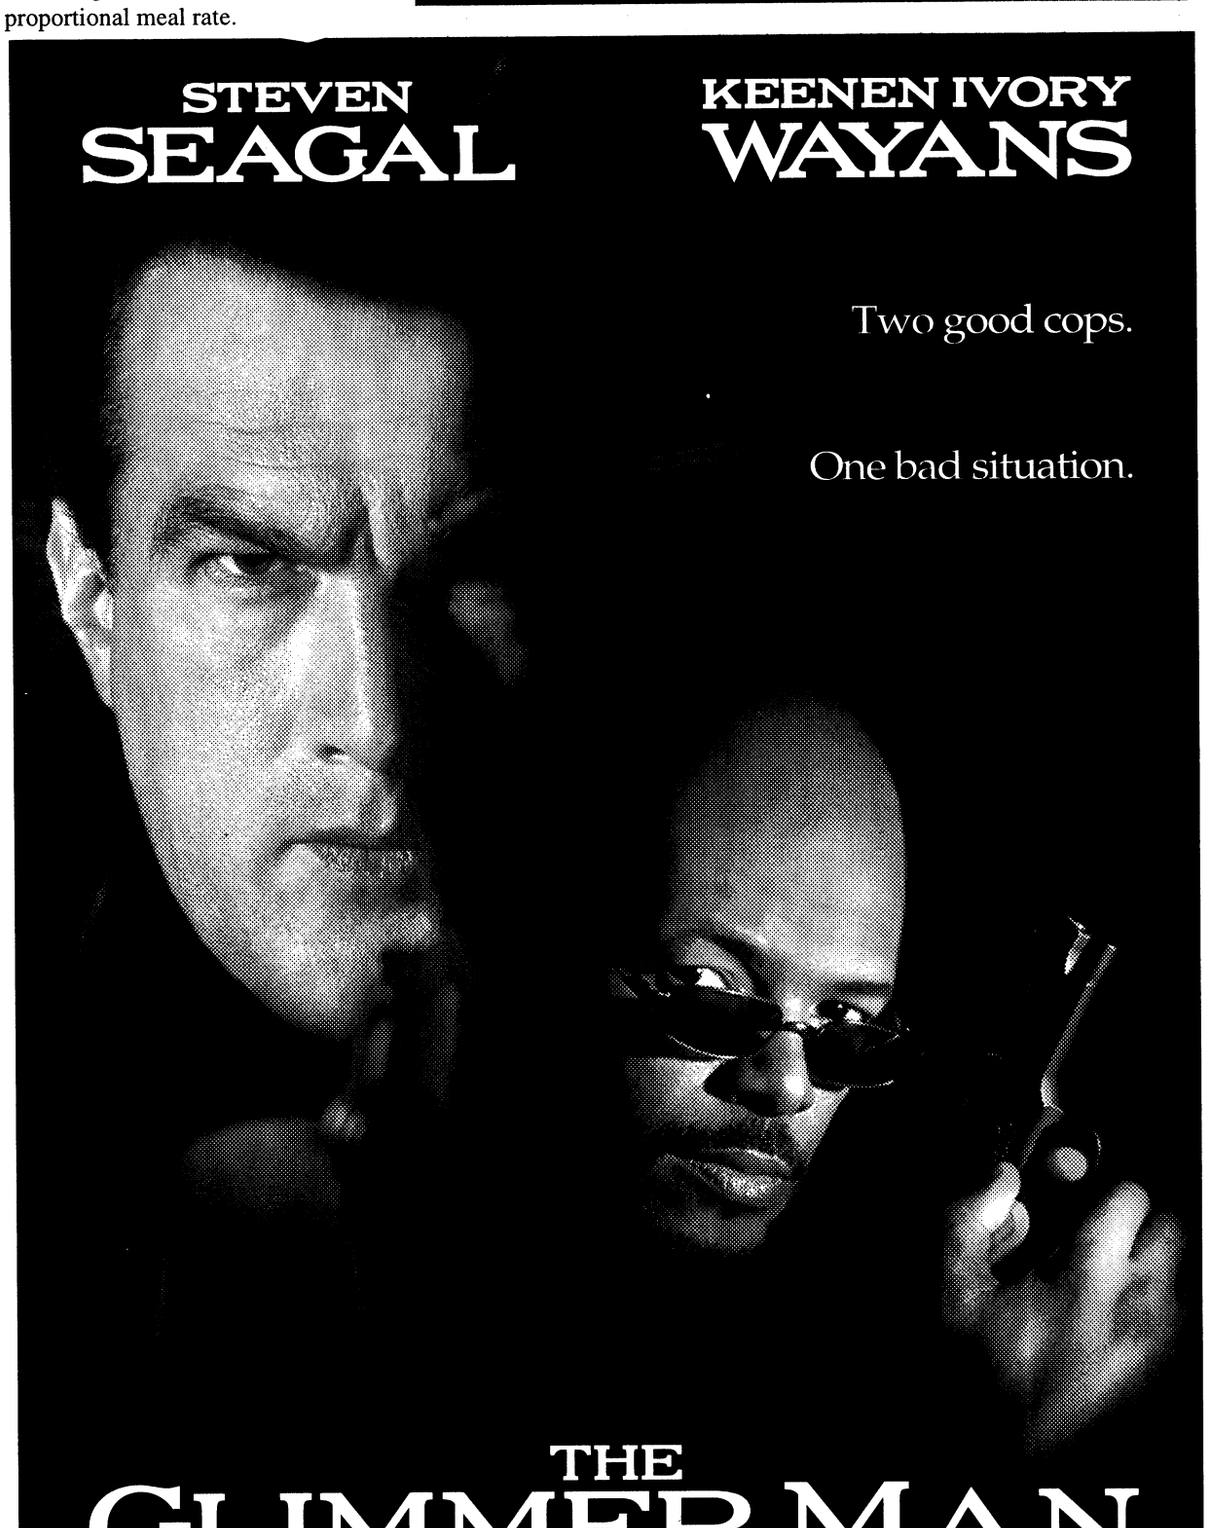
The new 'proportional meal rate' will be used during three circumstances:



•The service member receives quarters on base and access to a government dining facility, but the mission requires the traveler not to have access to the dining facility part of the time;

•The government dining facility is not available for all three meals;

•The traveler has one or two meals on a given day included in a registration fee or otherwise provided free of charge. Meals on airlines and meals provided by friends and relatives aren't in this free of charge category.



Garrison commanders and major Army commands, as well as finance offices will receive more detailed information, including chain-teaching slides, on the new proportional meal rate.

LIVE-FIRE EXERCISE

Soldiers show Army weapons

By Brian R. Voller
Bayonet staff writer

The hail of gun fire, artillery and missiles turns the horizon into a giant cloud of dust and smoke. Within seconds, only the bright orange glow of tracer rounds screaming toward their targets can be recognized in the distance. After the thundering bang of the M-1A1 Abrams, the repetitive firing of the Bradley Fighting vehicles and the wooshing rush of the AH-64 Apache attack helicopters ceases, a collective cheer from the crowd gathered to witness the event fills the air.

This scenario occurred Sept. 26 when the 3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division (Mechanized), invited the public to attend a combined arms live-fire exercise at Cactus Range in Harmony Church.

"The combined arms live-fire exercise allows us to showcase a lot of the weapons we have available in the modern combined arms task force," said Lt. Col. Patrick Stallings, commander of the 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor Regiment. "During the demonstration, we are going to have tanks firing, Bradleys firing and aviation firing.

"We'll also see artillery and the capabilities of chemical systems. It is really a great opportunity for us to show soldiers, their families and civilians where their tax dollars are going."

In addition to the live-fire exercise that showcased the power of some of the heavy weaponry used by the 3rd Bde., an AH-64 Apache helicopter display and several static displays allowed soldiers and civilians to get an up-close look at the weapons.

Soldiers from several units located on Kelley Hill provided detailed descriptions of the weapons, and made themselves available to answer any questions from spectators.

The CALFEX also provided Infantry Officer Advanced Course students an opportunity to receive some additional training to go along with the training they receive in the school.

Stallings said the CALFEX allows both soldiers and civilians to get a better understanding of the Army.

"The display portion gives us two very big advantages," Stallings said. "For the light infantry soldiers who come to the CALFEX who have been in the light infantry units for a while, we get a chance to showcase the heavy side of the house. The CALFEX provides us with an opportunity for them to see the modern heavy weaponry we use today.

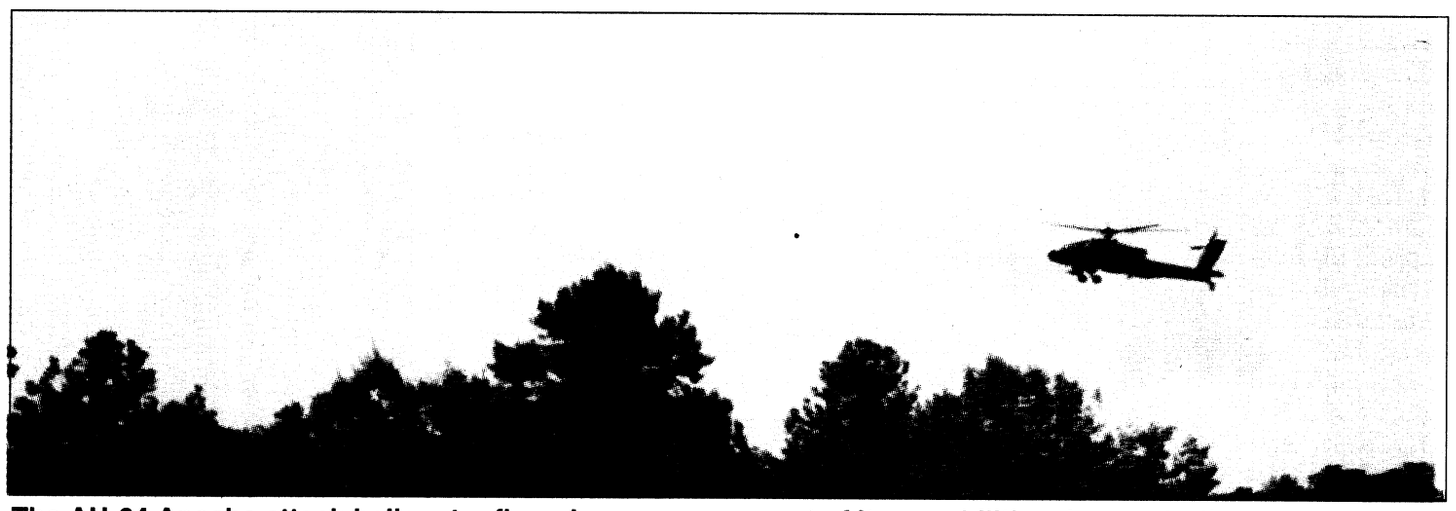
"But more than that, it is a great opportunity for the community, for the families and other folks from Fort Benning to come in and see what we do out here," he continued. "I think it's important that they, as taxpayers, are allowed to see what we do and what the Army can provide."

Russell Berry, a retired major general, said he attended the presentation to see the Army's technological improvements.

"I came out to the CALFEX because I wanted to see the modernization of the weaponry," Berry said. "Thus far, things have definitely changed considerably since I was in, but this presentation has been outstanding. I've been very much impressed so far."

For another civilian, the soldiers who explained the equipment remained a very impressive part of the presentation.

"The soldiers have been impressive," Pam Zoller said. "They've been really patient and they've answered all of the questions we've asked thus far. They've been a joy to be around."



The 3rd Bde. usually conducts the exercises twice yearly, Stallings said.

Spc. Joshua Goonan, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor Regiment, 3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division (Mechanized), explains the M-1A1 Abrams main battle tank and all of the equipment used in and outside of the tank to civilians who attended the live-fire exercise.

IOBC students train in urban environment

By Jorge O. Cordeiro
Co. B, 2nd Bn., 11th Inf. Regt.

Darkness still dominated the early morning sky as students of the Infantry Officer Basic Course, class 3-96, prepared to attack the fictional town of McKenna in an early morning assault.

Their objective: to secure a building that helped determine the success of a larger platoon's deliberate attack.

IOBC students conducted military operations in urbanized terrain at McKenna Range Sept. 18 and 19. Members of Company B, 2nd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment, participated in MOUT training as part of the 16-week course they complete before joining their units as platoon leaders.

Employing their newly acquired skills, students maneuvered themselves through dense smoke and determined opposing forces to breach the enemy defenses. Isolating their target, they prepared to enter the building. In dense, four-men stacks, the attackers burst into the structure securing a foothold. Follow-on groups quickly entered and began clearing the remaining rooms.

"All recent and future deployments will involve MOUT operations," said Capt. Ara Megerdichian, the 4th Platoon Trainer for Co. B, officer in charge of the training. "The current trends all point to an increased presence of U.S. forces operating in urban areas."

The training at McKenna Range consisted of a two-day exercise.

The students learned the basics of close quarters battle, a necessary element of MOUT training. Students began by working within their teams and squads. Working in small four-man stacks, students learned how to move from building to building, and how to enter, clear and secure a building.

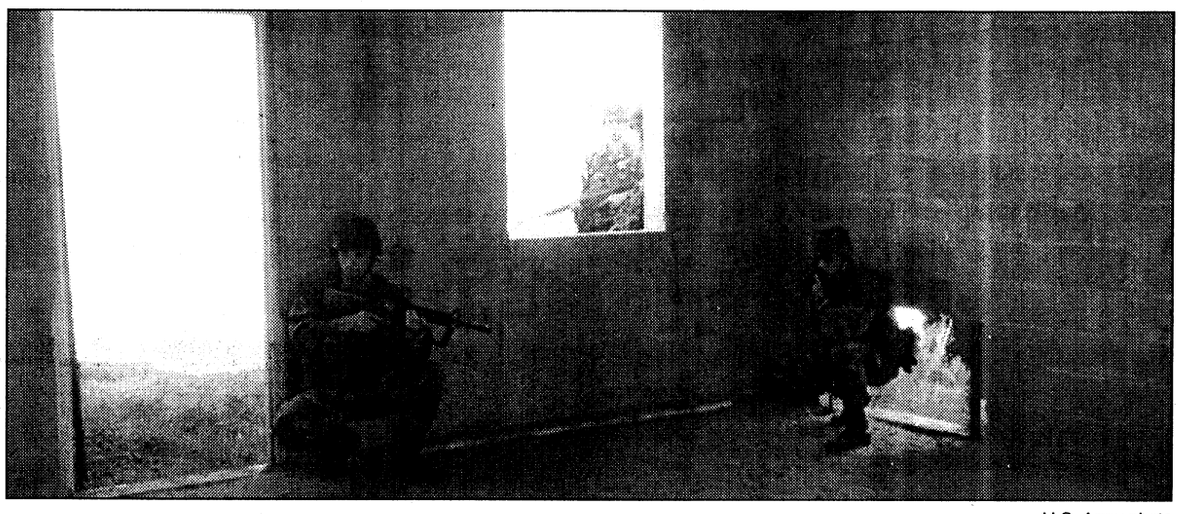
Students rehearsed their new techniques after receiving explanation. Numerous practical exercises that simulate a variety of scenarios followed classroom instruction. The training placed special emphasis on fire control techniques and target acquisition. To lessen the chances of fratricide, cadre evaluated the students' ability to correctly identify friendly from enemy personnel.

Students crawled, walked and ran through each scenario. After each run, the teams and squads conducted an after action review with the instructors to evaluate their performance after each run.

Officers of various allied nations who participated in the training commented on the day's training.

First Lt. Winston Green of Barbados, a veteran of the Grenada invasion, compared the training to his experiences in Grenada.

"It's as realistic as you can get given the training limitations that are imposed," Green said. "This type of training has great importance for me due to the nature of my country. We are most likely going to be involved with urban operations rather than traditional conventional tactics,"



In addition to the new leadership challenges of a platoon attack, the evening hours offered the students the chance to conduct MOUT operations in limited visibility. In the darkness, target acquisition and identification became a major concern for leaders and students, making communication skills paramount.

"Training at night showed us that communication is essential to maintaining the momentum and speed of an attack at night," said 2nd Lt. William Burch. "Because of the decentralized leadership, it is much more difficult to maintain control."

By the second day of training, the students readily ran through various scenarios as part of planned platoon attack or defense.

"MOUT training lets you really know what is required of the individual soldier and team in order to accomplish the mission," said 2nd Lt. Joe Escandon. "You really develop an appreciation for the limitations of your soldiers and the value of training in allowing you to accomplish the mission."

After completing the final mission, students conducted their final after action reviews and assessed the two-day training in order to make changes before the students final IOBC field training exercise.

FORCE XXI

Army receives newest helicopter

By Michael J. Brock
13th Public Affairs Det., 4th Inf. Div.

The Army's newest weapon in the sky received an introduction to the ranks of 1st Battalion, 4th Aviation Regiment, 4th Infantry Division, in a ceremony Aug. 28 at Hood Army Airfield, Fort Hood, Texas.

The unit received two of the prototype AH-64D Apache Longbows as part of the Force XXI experiment.

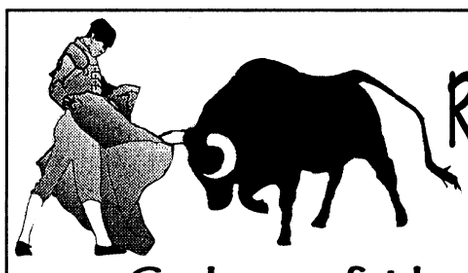
"This aircraft will take us to the 21st century," said 1st Lt. Donnie Lee, pilot for the Longbow. "This is far above what we are flying now."

The Apaches received stripping and digital radar systems and cockpit instrumentation improved the helicopter, and designers lightened it so it could carry more firepower.

Additionally, the Longbow carries missiles and a weapons system that allows the crew to acquire, fire and forget about the target, unlike the Apache where the gunner maintains the target laced with a laser guidance system.

According to the pamphlet from the manufacturer, McDonnell Douglas Corp., the Longbow Apache becomes the most advanced, versatile, survivable, deployable and maintainable multi-role combat helicopter in the world.

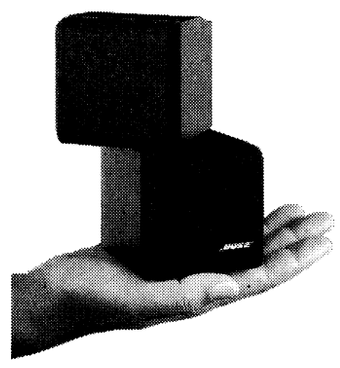
Sixteen times more effective than the battle-proven AH-64D, the Longbow Apache stands uniquely suited to dominate the digital battlefield of the future. The Longbow's fire control radar system automatically detects, classifies and prioritizes multiple targets day or night in virtually any weather, the brochure said.



"Two years ago, we tested and experimented the Longbow Apache against the regular A-model," Lee said.

"We came out seven times more lethal, four times more survivable; and, overall, we were 16 times better," he said.

The Longbows will train and deploy with the experimental force to the National Training Center, Calif., for an advanced warfighting experiment in Spring '97. After the AWE, the aircrafts return to the manufacturer for further testing and final acceptance by the Army.



Even though the Army does not own the Longbows yet, the first shipments of Army Longbows will go to Fort Hood's 1st Cavalry Division some time next year, according to Chief Warrant Officer 2 Todd Bryant, a Longbow pilot.

MEDICAL RESIDENCY

Physicians graduate from program

By Steven E. Reissman
Martin Army Community Hospital

Nine physicians recently completed a three-year Family Practice Residency Program at Martin Army Community Hospital.

The residency program, begun in 1972, provides the Army's oldest family practice program. Accredited by the Residency Review Committee of the Accreditation Council for Graduate Medical Education, 170 family physicians have graduated from the program since its inception.

The education required to become a family physician includes four years of college, followed by four years of medical school and three years of training in an accredited family practice training program.

After completion of residency training, family physicians take an intensive board certification exam given by the American Board of Family Practice.

After becoming certified, they re-examine every seven years to retain their board certification status and meet state medical licensing standards.

The family physician's specialized training focuses on prevention — the art and science of maintaining a family's lifelong health from the care of pregnant women, infants and children, through adulthood to geriatric medicine.

Young poet receives recognition for writing

By Brian R. Voller

Thomas

A local Fort Benning resident recently received the Editor's Choice Award from the National Library of Poetry and publication in "Of Sunshine and Day Dreams" for a poem she wrote six years ago.

Amber Thomas, 12-year-old daughter of 1st Sgt. Rickey and Cathleen Thomas, won the award for her poem titled "To Mommy," which she wrote as a birthday present for her mother when she was in the first grade.

After she found out she received the award Thomas said she felt very excited

Thomas also received an award for an essay she wrote when she was 9 years old while her family was stationed in Germany.

She won the award for an essay she wrote about the most admired black leader. Thomas received a $100 savings bond from the Kirchgoens Military Lodge, Kirchgoens, Germany for the essay she wrote on Rosa Parks.

Thomas' received the Editor's Choice Award last month, and her poem will appear in the poetry publication later this month.

Soldiers earn German Efficiency Badge

USAIC Public Affairs Office

The German Armed Forces Efficiency Badge certifies a soldier's special leadership and physical fitness efficiency.

This year German army Sgt. Maj. Michael Knoell of Fort Benning's German Liaison Office tested 24 U.S. Army soldiers for the badge.

The GEB consists of seven events; 200-meter swim, 100-meter dash, high jump, shot put, five-kilometer run, 25mm pistol qualification and 30-kilometer road march.

The GEB awards three classifications; Gold, Silver and Bronze.

entering the store, Hobbins said. Cashiers will check identification when ringing up the customer's purchase.

Unlike stores in the civilian sector that increase their prices after renovating, the commissary still plans to sell groceries at cost, Hobbins said.

"The renovations have nothing to do with what we charge for food," Hobbins said. "The money for the renovations comes from the 5 percent surcharge shoppers are charged. Defense Commissary Agency officials decide which stores need major renovations and present that information to members of Congress. Congressional members decide which stores will be renovated."

"We reduced the size of our meat department, and we will reduce the size of our frozen food section until the renovations are complete," Waksmonski said. "But when the renovation finishes, customers will have a larger shopping area."

Officials project completion by February.

Better Opportunities for Single Soldiers

U.S. Army begins improvements for soldiers' billets

Better Opportunities for Single Soldiers

The Department of the Army recently began several initiatives on single soldier quality-of-life issues.

One of the most ambitious of these remains the Army's program to modernize current billets and to build new ones to higher standard, said Spc. Richard Germann, Better Opportunities for Single Soldiers vice president.

The Army wants to improve and increase living areas available to individual single soldiers, eliminate all buildings constructed during World War II and eliminate the gang latrine concept in all U.S. Army billets, he said.

New standards improve the present billeting system, Germann said. Each soldier gets his or her own room joined to a common living space and bathroom. The new standards allot 118 square feet of living and sleeping space for privates and specialists. For sergeants and staff sergeants, the new standards require 236 square feet of living and sleeping space. All soldiers get 20 square feet of closet space per room.

The new billets contain their own climate control units for each module (a module being two rooms, a bathroom and a common living area), and each soldier shares a common bathroom.

The improvements in soldier living include a designated parking area to be constructed with each new billet.

The single-soldier living community calls for separate locations for administrative, command and control facilities and dining facilities.

These new barracks will not appear overnight though, Germann said. From the beginning of the planning phase to the day construction begins spans as many as seven years.

The projected budget of $250 million a year covers fiscal years 1997 through 2000, and then increases to $300 million a year until 2003; all of which remains earmarked for barracks construction and renovation.

An investment of this magnitude shows the Army placed top priority on improving the living conditions of the single soldier, Germann said.

Question of the week:

Is the company commander required to give corporals and below 118 square feet of living space?

The new barracks standard requires 118 square feet of living space. However, this standard applies to the new barracks construction, not pre-existing barracks.

Changes made in women's uniform

Army News Service

NATICK, Mass. — Finding one uniform that appeals to each of the 60,000 women serving in the Army seems like a Herculean feat, but one undertaken by the clothing designers and project managers of the U.S. Army Soldier Systems Command.

With more than 380 surveys, seven fit and wear test sessions involving more than 530 women, the new uniform designs address the questions and concerns of today's Army women.

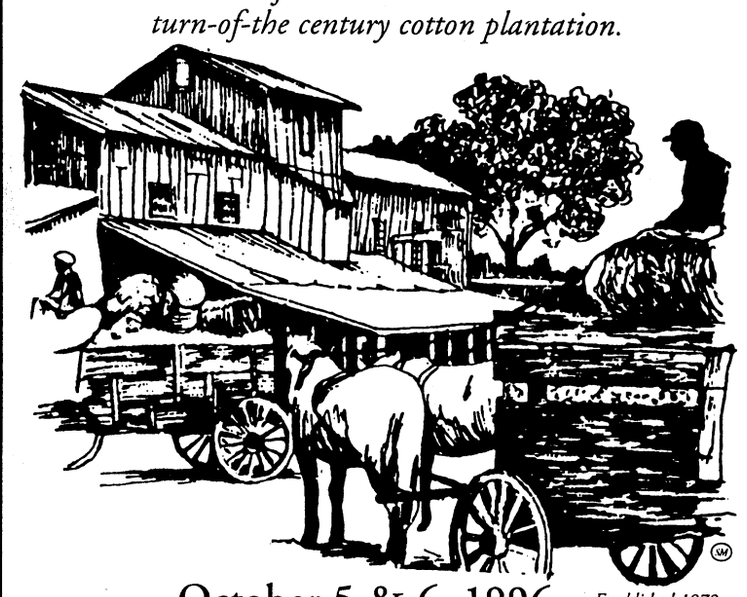
"Throughout the design process, we focused on improving the fit, size, comfort, appearance and style of the women's uniform," said Maj. Julia Cook, special assistant to Project Manager-Soldier. "Although its still a uniform, I think female soldiers will really appreciate the changes that we've made, especially in the areas of fit and comfort."

As of Tuesday, Army officials issued the following items to female soldiers at recruit centers and to Military Clothing Sales Stores.

•New slacks — gone are the bell bottoms. The new slacks feature a more tapered leg. The two piece waist band remains sturdier, easier to alter and has a "gripper" rubberized strip to keep the shirt in place. The redesigned slacks retail for $33.75. New belt loops accommodate a scaled-down version of the men's belt. The one-inch black cotton web belt with brass buckle costs $3.30. An elastic style belt costs $3 as an optional item.

•New shirt — pockets ... to have or to have not. While women originally asked for front pockets on the shirt, in wear tests they proved unflattering. The new shirt features princess seaming down the front, with added ease across the chest and back. The cotton and polyester blend short and long sleeved shirts cost $8.75 and $21.75 respectively. The overblouse becomes optional. With design changes including an increase in length and fuller armholes, a raised arm will no longer result in an exposed midriff. Cut from a polyester and wool blend, the short and long sleeved overblouse retails for $26.95 and $29.95.

•New skirt — pockets or no pockets ... above or below the knee ... pleats or no pleats? Army women tested these design changes. The new skirt remains basic, yet flattering. It is straight, without pleats and fully lined. The zipper closure is now located in the back. Tapered sides make the skirt more stylish, while a back kick pleat allows for freer movement. The skirt also features a waistband pocket and a waistband with gripper rubberized strip. It retails for $34.85.



•New oxfords — say goodbye to granny shoes. The new oxford is lighter, comfortable and more stylish. The leather shoe features a rubberized sole and a cushioned insole. The oxford no longer includes top stitching, and it retails for $29.50.

•New sizes — the new uniform items use the new Department of Defense sizing system. This system uses actual body measurements (i.e., waist, hips, bust) rather than an arbitrary size (i.e., 8, 10, 12). Three different size ranges exist: junior, misses and womens, as well as three height ranges: petite, regular and tall. Most women will probably discover that they need to go down a size or two when shopping for the new clothing items.

VA establishes mammogram hot line number

Department of Veterans Affairs

The Department of Veterans Affairs established a toll-free number, (888) 492-7844, for women veterans to obtain information about the department's mammography services.

Staffed between the hours of 8 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. (Eastern Time), Monday through Friday, the information line provides callers information on VA mammography policies and the locations of all VA and VA-certified mammography facilities within the callers' geographic area.

By using the help line, callers comment on these services; and during nonbusiness hours, leave messages on a recorder for response the next business day.

VA's Women Veterans Health Care Guidelines call for breast screenings, including mammograms, as part of the department's provision of basic primary care for women veterans.

Currently, 42 VA medical facilities provide in-house mammography units. VA uses community facilities to obtain these services elsewhere.

VA facilities with mammography units follow the American College of Radiology Quality Standards and meet all requirements of the Mammography Quality Standards Act, just like Food and Drug Administration-certified facilities.

The VA requires FDA-approval and certification of facilities providing mammography services.

During fiscal 1995, 22,560 women veterans obtained mammography services through the VA.

DOMESTIC ABUSE MONTH

Awareness helps stop the cycle

Family Advocacy Program

October launches a sustained year-round campaign to end spouse abuse and child abuse and to assure the protection of victims.

The month emphasizes the prevention of domestic violence and encourages family members to seek appropriate supportive and rehabilitative services, said Rebecca S. Welch, Army Family Advocacy Program manager.

"Each person in the military community has the responsibility to help make the community safe and to ensure that family members live in a violence-free home," Welch said. "This is a year-round task."

Domestic violence studies show that children in violent homes suffer, Welch said. They become victims of direct abuse and injury and of the psychological battering that comes from witnessing violent acts.

"What should awaken all of us is the fact that acts of domestic violence are carried out by the very people who should be making sure that their loved ones are safe and secure," Welch said. "This is a chilling thought, but we should realize that something can be done to turn the tide and end the violence. Each of us can and must take positive action."

Welch advises each person to take responsibility for the safety and security of ourselves and of our loved ones.

"Each of us is capable of making our own households violence-free, but personal responsibility extends beyond the walls of our homes, and reaches out to our streets, our shopping centers and our jobs," she said.

"In the military, domestic violence undermines the mission of readiness," she continued. "In society at large, it undermines the fabric of our communities and of our lives."

Welch also stated that prevention can happen everywhere, not just at home. It can happen in the media, in the workplace and in the neighborhoods, she said.

"All of us need to make the message clear: domestic violence is not tolerated; everyone deserves to be safe and secure," she said.

"Couples and individuals need to understand that there are options to violence," she said. "In the military, we have longstanding programs that put special emphasis on domestic violence prevention and intervention."

Events scheduled for the month of October include:

•Through Oct. 31 — An information display on the prevention of domestic abuse at Army Community Service Office in Building 2643, Soldiers' Plaza. Promotional items, to include halloween coloring books for the children, will also be distributed to anyone seeking information.

•October 16 — Family Advocacy and the Exceptional Family Member Program staff members will set up a display at the Post Exchange at the Main Mall from 9 a.m. to noon with educational materials on ensuring family wellness, respite care and safety coloring books for children.

•October 26 — Family Advocacy Program and the Exceptional Family Member Program staff members will set up a display at Youth Services for the Fall Family Fair from 10 a.m. to 3 p.m. Give-aways, coloring books on child safety education, finger printing for children and available resources will be distributed to all military families.

Also, many services exist for individuals and couples through Army Community Services, Social Work Services and the Chaplain's Family Life Center. To find out about these services and the Family Advocacy Program as a whole, call Welch at 545-3344.

Take a timeout — Improve your marriage

Couples disagree on a wide variety of subjects. Sometimes tension builds to the point where violence may erupt. If you feel you are about to become abusive, try taking a timeout instead. In sporting activities, teams use timeouts to regroup and refocus. A timeout is not avoiding a conflict or a disagreement, it is temporarily removing yourself from the situation until you calm down and think.

Pick a time when you and your spouse are not angry to establish the ground rules for using a timeout in your relationship:

•Either partner can call a timeout.
•Decide who will stay with the children.
•How you will signal a timeout. (Making the T-sign; "I need to take a timeout.")
•Agree to acknowledge the timeout when called.

Decide when to call a timeout:

•When you recognize that you are getting out of control.
•Your body gets tense or feels like it will explode.
•You feel yourself getting physically or verbally aggressive.
•When winning the argument is your sole focus.

Steps to take when using timeout

1. State that you are taking a timeout, don't just leave.

•Make an "I" statement: "I need a timeout," leave silently instead of getting in the last word.

2. Things to do when you take a timeout.

•Go for a walk, run or bike ride.
•Concentrate on cooling off.
•Will yourself to stop going over the incident in your mind.
•Abstain from drinking and driving.

3. Things to do once you calm down.

•Consider your own mistakes (behaviors and thoughts) that contributed to the problem getting out of hand.
•Think of mutually agreeable solutions.
•Check with your spouse before returning home.

School board discusses concerns

By Lisa M. Hibbert
Bayonet staff writer

School board officials discussed increased student enrollments and the decrease in the number of students receiving free and reduced lunches at the Fort Benning Schools' board meeting Monday.

"Overall enrollment increased from last year's but only when the preschool program is figured in the count," said Dell Karr, Fort Benning School's superintendent. The preschool program increased enrollment by 321 students from last year, getting the program off to a fantastic start, Karr said.

"Enrollment decreased in kindergarten through eighth grades."

Despite the lack of an overall student population increase, Karr said enrollment in the gifted program increased from last year.

The number of students eligible for free and reduced lunch declined from last year.

"Although enrollment criteria remains the same in the free and reduced lunch program, many families moved off (the program) because of increases in income" said Rhoda Zerger, Dexter Elementary School representative.

Board members also discussed projects pertaining to the individual schools.

"Trailers arrived at Morris R. McBride Elementary School, and we plan to move classrooms into the trailers over the Thanksgiving holiday," Karr said, "and the erosion correction project at Freddie Stowers Elementary School was awarded."

Discourse, an instructional tool implemented at Frank R. Loyd Elementary School, provides each student with a keyboard that connects to the teachers' computer, Karr said. This allows teachers to monitor individual student responses immediately and use these responses to teach overall lessons.

Interviews for the Edward A. White Elementary School principal position concluded and the board will announce selection soon.

Col. Gregory C. Camp, board president received a farewell presentation from Karr at the conclusion of the general meeting. Before giving two plaques to Camp, Karr told the board of some of Camps unknown works.

"I knew that I would miss him, but the schools are going to miss him, too," Karr said. "He gave up so much of his time going to the schools and reading books to the children and sharing his time; he will really be missed."

While the lunchroom fund lost $1,173 for the month of August, it gained $22,297 year to date, which brings the current fund equity to $89,621.

Other board members present include: Sgt. Joe Todd, Loyd Elementary School representative; Staff Sgt. Ricardo Linton, Richard G. Wilson Elementary School representative; Lt. Col. Stephanie Willson, school's attorney; Richard Skinner, assistant superintendent for budget and personnel; Alice Skinner, Director of Logistics; Robbie Norris, Human Resources Office, site manager; Mitzi Crow, Benning Education Association rep-representative; Stephanie Davis, president of the American Federation of Government Employees; Rhonda Mobley, administrative assistant to the superintendent, Col. Byron Greene, schools' officer; Lt. Col. Mike Bingham, Don C. Faith Middle School representative and Sgt. 1st Class Henry Porter, White Elementary School representative.

ask the judge

By Michael H. Lane
Office of the Staff Judge Advocate

Q. My wife and I disagree, and we want your opinion. How much debt is too much?

A. According to various experts on the topic, a number of clues point to financial trouble. Ask yourself honestly if any of these apply to you. Do you:

•make monthly payments to creditors that total more than 20 percent of your take-home income?

•use "consolidation loans" or credit card "checks" to pay other credit card debts?

•use credit cards to buy groceries and other necessaries?

•pay just the minimum amount due or less on your credit cards and other bills?

•get past-due notices or calls from collectors?

•receive credit card denials, or have you been denied additional credit when you have charged the maximum on any credit card?

•feel a sense that something bad is about to happen, and that you will not be financially able to handle it?

•argue with your spouse about money and finances, and this affects your home life?

If these questions seem to hit a nerve with you, start thinking hard about your spending habits and your life priorities. Stop spending without any thought and planning, and take the time to look at your situation honestly. It is probably not too late to correct the problem, but it takes more than the wish to do better.

A good first step involves considering the options available to you as a soldier. Stop by the Family Unit Network Center in Building 359, behind the Red Cross on Ingersoll Street.

The FUN Center serves as a contact point for information on support agencies, groups and services available to soldiers and family members on the installation and in the civilian community.

Army Community Services provides specific assistance in getting control of debts. They maintain a Consumer Affairs and Financial Assistance Program with a consumer counseling and financial management mission.

Located in Building 2643, the office provides a wide range of services to help you get control of finances.

Consult the Legal Assistance Division in the Office of the Staff Judge Advocate to discuss legal options. To make an appointment, call 545-3282.

Commissary commits to customers

Defense Commissary Agency

Customers going to the Commissary after Tuesday need take note of the SAVER 2000 banners, stickers and buttons on display.

They represent significant events in the five-year history of the Defense Commissary Agency.

"We're celebrating our fifth anniversary as an agency and we're also starting a new chapter as a performance based organization," said Director of Operations John McGowan.

DeCA becomes the first federal government agency to become a performance based organization. Put simply, it's all part of a federal initiative to make government work better and cost less. DeCA begins to take on characteristics of a private-sector business to increase efficiency and service to customers.

"DeCA was nominated as a PBO because it has a solid track record in customer service and operating efficiency," said Steve Rossetti, executive director, Morale, Welfare and Recreation and Resale Activities. "PBO status gives employees and managers the opportunity to approach the 21st century as a front runner in government reinvention."

That in mind, DeCA strives for excellence through the SAVER 2000 program. (SAVER stands for service, access, value, efficiency and Response.)

"The SAVER 2000 program is as significant for our customers as it is for the agency," McGowan said. "The banners and buttons represent our pledge that DeCA is looking toward a new century of value and service. We're renewing our commitment to: Service for our patrons, access to modern stores and value to our customers in the form of quality merchandise at low prices."

"We're excited about the prospect of a single fund because it allows the agency to reduce costs and use the savings to benefit customers and taxpayers," Lutz said.

Undersecretary of Defense Comptroller John Hamre said he supports the concept.

"The Department of Defense is also working on getting the treasury to pay interest on the patron surcharge account. As things stand now, the fund is not earning interest for the customers."

Lutz estimates the interest amounts to more than $15 million per year.

"But only if the savings are recurring, not one-time savings like inventory investment."

Director of Personnel and Training Wynn Hasty said legislative initiatives are still being developed, but he already sees positive action on requests for relief from government-mandated personnel reductions. In retail operations such as the commissaries, mandatory personnel reductions interfere with store operations by limiting store hours and the number of cashiers available to serve customers.

"We are also seeking greater authority to test new systems and programs and evaluate how well they impact our mission and corporate culture.

"We'd like to be able to explore more concepts and technology from the retail world to help us better serve the customers," Hasty said.

The waivers and legislative initiatives extend to asking for flexibility in regulations controlling how government agencies buy products.

"We are uniquely qualified to be a test agency for a change in the rules," said Director of Acquisition Management Crosby H. Johnson. "There are a lot of hoops you have to jump through in contracting to buy commodities. That might make sense for some DoD agencies," Johnson said. "But we don't buy tanks and guns, we buy and sell groceries.

"Whether it's beef or display cases, most of what we buy is unique to grocery stores and when we're the only users of a product, the regulations just cost money and time," Johnson said. "Whether it's buying a new butcher knife or a floor-cleaning machine, we think we ought to be able to have it there when the stores need it."

Acting responsibly improves football season

GEICO

Autumn approaches, and that means football. Parties usually accompany or follow football games.

When entertaining friends and family at your home or in the parking lot before or after the game, make sure your guests never overindulge with alcohol and then get behind the wheel of an automobile.

Richard Kidd, director of military services for Government Employees Insurance Company, offers the following tips to help responsible hosts see that their guests party safely.

•Make plenty of nonalcoholic drinks available, and make sure everyone knows that alcohol-free options exist.

•Offer your guests food frequently to balance their drinking. Serve food in waves to encourage return trips to the table, or pass trays of food among your guests.

•Make sure your menu includes plenty of protein-oriented items and rich, starchy foods. (Good choices include cheese, pizza and seafood.) These slow the absorption of alcohol into the bloodstream.

•Avoid serving salty or sweet foods that tend to make people thirsty.

•Offer low calorie foods, like cut vegetables, to encourage dieters to eat as well as drink.

•Stop serving alcohol at least an hour before the party ends.

Vets warn: Antifreeze poisoning kills pets

By Vanessa Ella Craine
Veterinary Services

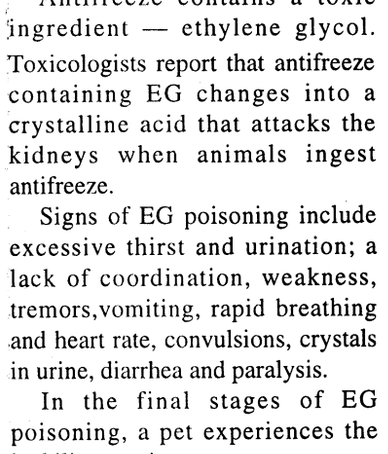
With cool weather approaching, many people change the antifreeze in their vehicles.

Though a necessary part of proper vehicle maintenance, antifreeze becomes a fatal experience for pets if owners do it carelessly.

Antifreeze contains a toxic ingredient — ethylene glycol. Toxicologists report that antifreeze containing EG changes into a crystalline acid that attacks the kidneys when animals ingest antifreeze.

Signs of EG poisoning include excessive thirst and urination; a lack of coordination, weakness, tremors,vomiting, rapid breathing and heart rate, convulsions, crystals in urine, diarrhea and paralysis.

In the final stages of EG poisoning, a pet experiences the inability to urinate.



However, treatment remains possible for animals with EG poisoning if veterinarians diagnose it in time.

Veterinarians induce vomiting and feed the pet activated charcoal in order to absorb and neutralize the acid.

Vets also administer alcohol intravenously to inhibit the EG from converting to the kidney-damaging acid.

Avoid antifreeze poisoning by keeping pets away from antifreeze, wiping spills, washing away residue immediately and using an antifreeze that contains propylene glycol instead of ethylene glycol.

Fort Benning veterinarians advise pet owners to see an off-post veterinarian to handle antifreeze poisoning since the post clinic does not handle these cases.

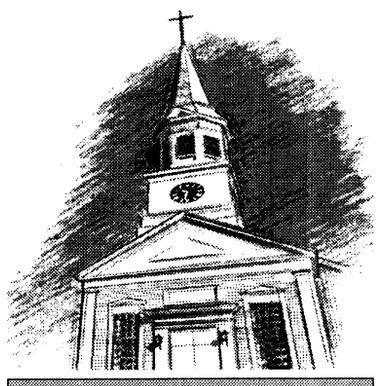
Jewish reading cycle begins

By Chana Timoner
Company A, 1st Battalion, 11th Inf. Regt.

Everyone in the world celebrates a birthday, a day in which the person's family and friends rejoice in his or her birth.

So the Pentateuch, the Five Books of Moses, the first five books of the Old Testament, marks a great day of celebration — the end and immediately the beginning of the reading cycle.



Saturday evening, Jewish people in synagogues around the world, and the Jewish congregation at Sand Hill celebrate, — with music, dancing and lots of food — thanking God for the receiving of the history, laws and miracles that kept the Jewish people in God's favor for nearly 6,000 years.

For nearly 2,000 years, sister religions, Islam and Christianity, adopted and revered this collection of what consisted originally of five separate scrolls.

During the Saturday celebration, the entire Sand Hill congregation takes part in reading the last section of Deuteronomy and begins reading Genesis, thus never ending the annual cycle of reading the entire Torah in one year.

The reading usually takes place under a wedding canopy, symbolizing the wedding of God to the Jewish people. Celebrants take the Torahs from the ark, which cradle them lovingly, and parade around the chapel seven times, reenacting God's creation of the universe in seven days. The people celebrate by dancing and giving children sweets.

On this evening — the last day of the festival or the Feast of Booths, Sukkot — the people erect small huts for eight days, commemorating the 40 years in which the Israelites wandered in the wilderness.

reflections

The people decorate the huts with fall foliage and freshly harvested fruits and flowers and use them extensively this week to study and eat meals in. In Israel, and in the South where warmer weather exists, people sleep in the booths, just as their ancient ancestors did.

For more information about the celebration, call 545-2050.

Giving best does not mean being first

By Vincent Burns
Infantry Training Brigade

reflections

A coach acts as a motivator as well as a leader. He or she tries to pull out our best — usually to reach a goal such as some kind of a championship, the best individual, or the best team in the league or conference.

A sign over the runway that leads from the locker room to the stadium at the University of Notre Dame reads, "First be the best, then you will be first."

Now think about the words of Christ in the ninth chapter of Saint Mark, "Whoever wishes to rank first must remain the last one of all and the servant of all."

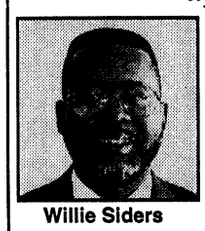
Does this contradict what a coach tells his or her team members? I don't think so. We live in a world of competition that the sports world magnifies. This world presents winning and success as the only objective of life. These words of Christ tell us about his priorities. They tell us how Christ thinks and operates and how he wants us to think and operate. Christ rates us, not by how many championships we win, or how many times we come in first place, or beat out our competitors.

Christ rates us by performance and by how hard we try and by whether or not we do our best. Then he rates us by how we try to take care of others. "He must remain the last one of all and the servant of all."

Life consists of more than being the best; life is about doing our best. Life isn't about being number one; life is about being all that God created us to be. Life isn't about beating out the competition; life is about each of us being better every time we take the field, or step up to the plate, or take an Army Physical Fitness Test, or every time we do our job, whatever that job happens to be. Life isn't about competing with the rest of the world; life is about competing with ourselves — our selfishness, our laziness, our tendency to sin or to do the wrong thing, or to feel sorry for ourselves.

The Christian dimension that comes from the message of the Gospel is that as participants in this game of life — the challenge is not necessarily to win; the challenge is to put forth our best effort, time after time, day after day, at every moment, no matter what the circumstances, no matter what the personal cost.

The call is not to be recognized as first or number one or the winner, but the call is to serve, to serve others, to serve our families, our nation, those who need help, our buddies, our fellow soldier, the financially poor, the people on the street, the refugees.



In the kingdom of Christ, we are the most important when we use every talent and skill and gift that God gave us to enrich the life of someone else. How we do this is for each of us and God to work out. But be assured that according to the standards of Christ and the principles of the Gospel, greatness comes only with service and the only way to fail is to not be all that God created us to be.

Believers need not worry

By Xuan Ngoc Tran
1st Battalion, 10th Field Artillery

reflections

Many things cause us to worry, such as our job, our marriage and our needs.

Sometimes we think we have a reason to worry about our daily life, but we want to stop worrying.

A difference exists between worry and genuine concern. Worry divides, rips, immobilizes, or tears apart, but concern moves you to action.

Today, we suffer from anxiety, hurt, depression and grief about our home life. We face a lifestyle of insecurity and doubt. We live in a country that possesses much food, clothes and other goodies, yet we worry about tomorrow and what we eat, drink or wear.

Many people lack purpose and direction. When we remain detached from God, trying to be self-sufficient, everything threatens our existence.

In Matthew 6:25-34, Jesus offers us an alternative to worry, because God cares for his children. The grass and flowers of the field teach us to trust God's providence for our daily life. They illustrate God's thoughtful care.

We accomplish nothing by worrying. Our purpose in this life remains to glorify God and enjoy him forever. God values us more than the grass and the flowers in the field.

Jesus says, "Look at the birds of the air, for they neither sow nor reap nor gather into barns; yet your heavenly Father feeds them. Are you not of more value than they?'

Worry means we fail to learn from the natural creation. God, who remains sovereign over the universe, feeds the fowls of the air.

Therefore, we should not worry about tomorrow, but we should trust God and serve him faithfully.

I Peter 5:7 says, "Cast all your care upon him, for he cares for you."

The stock market, gold or money brings no security in this life. These things remain temporal, but God remains eternal.

God who promises to supply all our necessities, represents our continuing security.

Open your life to the ruling God and let him be the Lord. Our focus in this life remains not to seek our daily needs, but to seek God's kingdom and his righteousness.

The Bible promises "all things work together for good to them that love God ..." Romans 8:28

Communion Sunday reminds Christians of unity

By Tom Wheatley
USAIC Chaplains Office

reflections

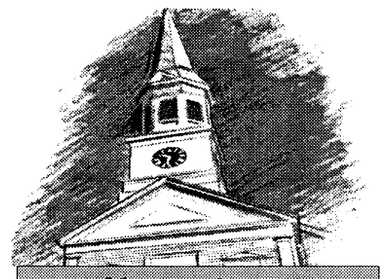
Is unity within the Christian church a possibility with so many differences from denomination to denomination?

For example, look at the many ways of worship. Services exist for those who like to sing, still others exist for those who prefer a more quiet, almost meditative time of worship.

Differences in doctrine, interpretation of Scripture and church organization also exist. But, Jesus Christ remains the one constant within the Christian churches.

Christ celebrated something with his disciples on the eve of his betrayal that Christians continue to celebrate now. The disciples had eaten, yet Christ took bread, broke it and distributed it among those seated. He told them that this was his body, which was given for them and that they were to eat or partake of it fully. He then passed the cup and said that this was his blood of the new covenant; he told them to drink it all.

This becomes the way of taking in Christ, of feeding ourselves with this "bread of life" (John 6) and of sharing in his sufferings and sacrifice for mankind. And as people come together over this body of Christ, through communion, all become one body. The word "communion" itself means "a possessing or sharing of common participation by all."



Sunday all of the Christian chapel congregations on Fort Benning celebrate World Communion Sunday in Gowdy Stadium. The congregations worship and then continue the celebration with a cookout.

Worshipers then demonstrate Paul's words to the Corinthians when he said, "Is not the cup of thanksgiving for which we give thanks a participation (communion) in the blood of Christ? Because there is one loaf, we, who are many, are one body, for we all partake of the one loaf." (I Corinthians 10:16-17)

Join Christians around the world on World Communion Sunday to celebrate and participate in the worship and partaking of Christ, which unites so many people with many differences in one body in Christ.

Purpose, significance come from God

By William D. Smith
Martin Army Community Hospital

reflections

Humans possess an innate need to feel significant. We need purpose so as to gain a sense of value. Some see their purpose arising out of a relationship. Others find purpose in performance.

For the ones who find purpose in a relationship, their significance rises or falls based on the interactions they share with others. In a sense, they allow others to have power over their own sense of value and worth.

In healthy relationships, individuals find ample assurance of their value. However, many relationships fail to always provide adequate assurance of individual values. Consequently, for these people, life becomes an endless effort of seeking to gain favor, acceptance and love. Tools of the trade include manipulation, deception or even making oneself a slave to the whims of others.

As a result, people find themselves in a double bind. Angry over the lack of emotional support, but fearing to be open and frank, they resort to manipulation and deception.

For the ones who gain their significance through performance, they seek to excel in whatever they do in order to feel a sense of purpose and value. People who grew up with love and acceptance seem to have the greatest balance between performance and relationships.

However, perhaps because of a lack of love and acceptance as a child, some folks process praise poorly. The need to perform drives them toward being workaholics and their joy is robbed by this tenacious drive to over achieve.

Many people fail to avoid the quest for acceptance through relationships or performance. We, therefore, need to consider another perspective.

Instead of allowing others the power over our sense of significance, we need to realize that our true value lies not in a human relationship or an earthly job. Rather, each individual remains significant because God made us and our purpose remains in him.

Consequently, contemplate building your self-esteem by a personal relationship with the creator from which comes your purpose and value in life.

Criticism destroys relationships, tears down self-esteem

By William C. Shelnutt
3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division

reflections

Criticism remains one of man's deadliest weapons. It destroys relationships and tears down a person's self-respect, dignity and self-esteem.

Psychological studies conducted by a midwestern university on hundreds of people in all walks of life discovered that when people experience criticism in public, only 30 percent increased their performance. The same study indicated that when people receive praise in public, 90 percent did a better job the next time around. In other words, praise works three times better than criticism to get results from people. Criticizing others always works against the goal.

Every individual needs to feel important. The fulfillment of this need nurtures the quality of life and individuals mature with well-balanced interactions with other people and life's situations. Concurrently, self-esteem and overall health grow stronger. If this need becomes circumvented or not met, people often stew in the juices of rejection and self-pity while wandering aimlessly through this world constantly seeking the approval of others.

Rom J. Markin and Charles M. Lillis, in an article in Business Horizons, "Sales Managers Get What They Expect," says the Golden Rule still works. Undisputable evidence supports their findings that criticizing, threatening or ridiculing others, particularly subordinates, produces negative results. With such overwhelming facts, it becomes hard to imagine people's productivity remaining high when experiencing the blatantly destructive force of criticism. Criticism actually pushes people farther away from our intended purpose.

The act of threatening and ridiculing others closely relates to criticism. People who constantly receive threats of loss of job, penalty, punishment, etc., never work to their potential. Fear fails to produce the best results; if anything, it stymies growth and life expression. Another study shows that when people experience ridicule in public, only one of 10 improve their job the next time around. Those statistics stress the fact that nine out of 10 did worse than before.

Praise, on the other hand, acts as an energizer and causes a person to work harder, more efficiently, and with greater enthusiasm. A U.S. Army study revealed that when soldiers received praise for their efforts, nine out of 10 did a better job next time. However, when they received criticism, only three out of 10 did a better job next time.

The next time you criticize someone, remember it serves as the least effective method for changing behavior and improving production.

Someone once said, "The self-image is the key to human behavior. Change the self-image and we change the behavior. Even more than this, the self-image sets the boundaries of individual accomplishment. It defines what one can or cannot do. Expand the self-image, and we expand the area of the possible."

If your criticism helps someone, then your words of correction will be interpreted as concern and not criticism.

If criticism remains one of man's deadliest weapons, then praise serves as one of man's greatest life-giving gifts. Proverbs 16:24 contains a word for us all, "Pleasant words are like a honeycomb, sweet to the soul, and health to the bones."

Strongest men,women compete in powerlifting

By John W. Peeler
Special to the Bayonet©

Some of the strongest men and women on post competed in the ninth annual Powerlifting Championships Saturday at the Audie Murphy Fitness Center.

The Ranger Training Brigade walked away with the first place team trophy with one first place finish, two second place finishes and one third place finish, followed by the 29th Infantry Regiment in second place with two first place finishes.

In the women's competition, Pamela Dickens of the Infantry Training Brigade, wrapped up first place in the 114-pound division with lifts of 145, 95 and 200 pounds for a total lift of 440 pounds.

In the women's 148-pound category, Darlene Adams from the U.S. Army Medical Department Activity, took first place with lifts of 175, 115 and 225 pounds for a combined total of 515 pounds.

Melvina Barnes, 36th Engineer Group (Combat), took first place in the women's 165-pound and above division with lifts of 175, 155 and 240 pounds for a combined winning total of 570 pounds.

In the men's divisions, the 29th Infantry Regiment's Fred Smith and Donald Williams took first place in the 148- and 198-pound divisions. Smith lifted a combined total of 745 pounds with lifts of 270, 250 and 225 pounds in the 148-pound weight division while Williams' 1,250-pound total on lifts of 450, 385 415 pounds captured first place in the 198-pound division.

In the 165-pound division, Wallace Bohanan, from the 11th Infantry Regiment, captured first place with lifts of 270, 270 and 300 pounds for a total of 840 pounds.

Retiree John Shelly's combined total of 1,240 pounds on lifts of 425, 290 and 525 pounds enabled him to take first place in the 181-pound division.

Neil D. Criteser completes a successful squat of 335 pounds. Criteser finished second in the 198-pound class with a total lift of 1,115 pounds.

Henry Daily walked away with the first-place trophy in the 220-pound weight division with a total lift of 1385 pounds on lifts of 500, 385 and 500-pounds.

The biggest total of the day at 1410 pounds belonged to Esua Bright with lifts of 525, 335 and 550 pounds.

Other awards given at the championships included best squat, best bench press, best dead lift and best overall lifter.

Editor's note: For complete results of the powerlifting championships, see the Sports Scoreboard on Page C-2.

Esua Bright grimaces as he completes a successful squat of 525 pounds at the powerlifting championships. Bright won the 242-pound class with a combined lift of 1,410 pounds.

Vikings, Cowboys remain unbeaten in YS football

By John W. Peeler
Special to the Bayonet©

The Youth Services football program continued Saturday with six games at Blue Field.

In the 9- to 12-year-old age group, the Vikings and Cowboys came away with close victories to remain the only unbeaten teams in their age divisions.

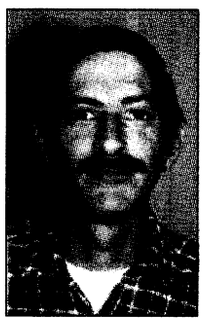
The Vikings defeated the Panthers 8-0 in a game marred by penalties with both team offenses suffering setbacks from illegal procedure penalties. The Vikings' Zeke Morris made the lone score in the game with a two-yard run along with a safety recorded by inside linebacker Paul Fry. The Vikings improved their record to 2-0 with the victory.

In the division's other early game, the Eagles slipped past the Chiefs 6-0 in a defensive struggle. The Chiefs thwarted the two-point conversion to keep the game within reach; however, the Chiefs' drive to get into scoring position ended unsuccessfully.

In the 9- to 12-year-old late game, the Cowboys pushed their record to 2-0 with an 8-6 victory over the Seminoles. The Seminoles took an early 6-0 lead and maintained the lead going into the second half; but, as the rain began to fall, the Cowboys took control with a ball-control running game ultimately scoring.

With a two-point conversion, the Cowboys took a late fourth-quarter lead with time running out in the game. The Seminoles failed to get back in scoring position as time ran out on the Noles.

In the 6- to 8-year-old flag division, the Vikings defeated the Packers 6-0 to push their record to 2-0.



In the late game, the 49ers and Giants battled to a 12-12 tie.

Youth Services plans more football games at Blue Field Saturday beginning at 9 a.m.

USAMU shooters win at national championships

By Paula J. Randall Pagan
USAMU Public Affairs Office

International rifle shooters from the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit won several victories at this year's USA Shooting National Championships at Chino, Calif., Sept. 15 to 21.

Lance S. Hopper won the first day of the two-day prone match Sept. 16 with a score of 597 points. Three-time Olympian Glenn A. Dubis came in second with 595 points, followed by 1992 Olympian Thomas A. Tamas in third with 594 and 1996 Olympic alternate Kenneth A. Johnson tied for fourth place with 593. On day two, Sept. 17, Hopper became the overall winner with a total score of 1,293.7 and won the title of Smallbore Free Rifle Prone National Champion. Dubis took second place with 1,293.2 points.

Hopper said his first international rifle national championship excited him.

"There were four Olympians like Dubis in that final; and, even though I only beat him by half a point, it gave me a lot of confidence to compete and win against the world's best shooters," Hopper said.

In the prone team match, Sept. 16, the USAMU team of Hopper, Johnson and Troy A. Bassham took first place with the USAMU team of Dubis, Tamas and 1988 Olympian Webster M. Wright III coming in third.

On the first day of the three-position matches, Sept. 18, Wright won with a score of 1,169 and Johnson finished second with 1,167. In the three-position finals, Sept. 19, Wright took the three-position national championship with a score of 2,432.4, followed by Johnson in second with 2,427.5. Bassham finished fourth, just one-tenth of a point out of third place.

Wrights' victory represented the most significant win of the championships, according to William E. Krilling, USAMU International Rifle coach.

> "The competition was pretty good; most of the national team was there and a few Olympians."
> — Webster M. Wright III
> USAMU international rifle shooter

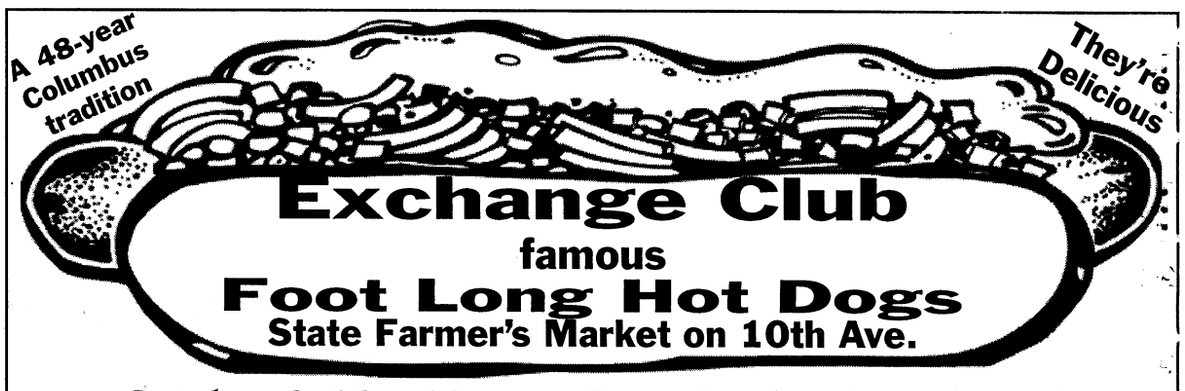
"I just got back from shooting at Conseil International du Sports Militaire and hadn't been training smallbore, so I was really happy that I did so well," Wright said. "The competition was pretty good; most of the national team was there and a few Olympians."

In the three-position team matches, Sept. 18, the USAMU team of Dubis, Johnson and Bassham won with a score of 3,487 followed by the USAMU team of Wright, Hopper and Tamas in second with 3,475.

Wright, Hopper and Bassham made the U.S National Team; Olympians Dubis, Johnson and Robert E. Harbison, who missed the USA Shooting Nationals because of the World Cup finals, in Switzerland, already made the National Team.

In the air rifle team matches Sept. 20, the USAMU team of Johnson, Dubis and Bassham took first place and the team of Wright, Stephen C. Goff and Timothy R. Manges came in third. Johnson earned the biggest score of the day with 590 points; Dubis placed second with 589 and Goff third with 587.

Johnson came in third in the National Air Rifle Championships Sept. 21; Bassham placed fourth and Dubis fifth.



"These matches were extremely important," Krilling said. "If you don't make the top four, you don't make the National Team; and, you can't shoot in the World Cups or Olympics."

The International Rifle Team gears up for the Interservice and 300-Meter National Championships Oct. 24 to Nov. 4 at Fort Benning. The shooters compete next in the fall selection match when approximately 60 of the country's top male and female shooters take aim at making the National Team, tentatively scheduled for Nov. 20 to 24 at Fort Benning.

Reservation system proves successful

Georgia State Parks and Historic Sites

ATLANTA — Despite Hurricane Opal and severe winter storms, Georgia's state parks increased revenue nearly nine percent largely because of a reservation system that began last August.

The Reservation Resource Center system allows park visitors to make one toll-free call to reserve campsites, cottages, lodge rooms and picnic shelters at any of Georgia's 48 state parks.

During the operation's first year, the center took 220,310 calls and made 107,555 reservations, representing more than $8.5 million in revenue.

The Department of Natural Resources attributes the center's success to several factors. Before Georgia state parks began using the centralized reservation system, callers made long-distance calls to each park they wished to visit. If their preferred park had no vacancies, they made another call to another park.

"Rather than pay for a second call, many potential visitors would simply give up," said Ken Buford, the center's director.

With Reservation Resource, operators suggest alternate parks or dates if the caller's first choice remains unavailable. Nearly one-third of all reservations made during the first year fell into this "referral" category, representing a large amount of revenue. Referrals also introduce visitors to lesser-known but equally beautiful parks, reducing wear and tear on the most popular parks by spreading out visitation. Park staff members benefit from centralized reservations because numerous calls no longer occupy them, leaving more time to spend with park visitors.

Calls overwhelmed the center's staff when Reservation Resource opened Aug. 15, 1995.

"We knew opening day would be busy, but we were surprised by the absolute deluge of calls during the first week," Buford said. "Even though it was challenging, we were thrilled to have proof of the park system's popularity."

Georgia State Park director Burt Weerts attributes the center's success to Buford's background in hotel management coupled with his assistant's background in park operations. Buford and Assistant Director Sharon Fitzgerald worked long hours to teach operators about the different parks to better serve customers. They found patterns to calls and adjusted staffing accordingly, reducing the number of callers who wait for an operator.

"Because reservations must be made at least two days prior to arrival, Mondays are our busiest and Fridays are our least busy," Fitzgerald said. The center took a record 1,798 calls the Monday before Labor Day weekend.

The system, though not without problems, pleases the DNR. With a modest one-night deposit for campsites, the program experiences a higher number of no-shows than anticipated. This occasionally causes problems when walk-in campers ask to set up on empty, but reserved, sites.

"Hotels have the same problem," Buford said, "but their guests aren't standing there looking at an empty room while the front desk tells them the hotel is full." Currently, officials hold campsites until 10 p.m. when no shows forfeit their camping deposit. Still, park guests, unable to arrive before the weekend, appreciate the ability to reserve campsites for Saturday nights.

Reservation Resource is open Monday through Friday, 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. To make a reservation, call (800) 864-7275. Metro-Atlanta residents call (770) 389-7275. For a free brochure on Georgia's state parks, call (404) 656-3530.

RETIREMENT

CSM ends 34-year career

By Lori Egan
Bayonet staff writer

The rucksack, load-bearing equipment and Kevlar helmet with command sergeant major insignia came to a final resting place in front of the Ranger Memorial.

Command Sgt. Maj. George D. Conrad finished his more than 34 years in the Army Oct. 4 with an Army Physical Fitness Test, an infantry standard road march and a formal retirement ceremony at York Field.

After the formal ceremony, which took place at 9 a.m., Conrad donned the web gear, the ruck and the "steel pot" and double timed over to the Ranger Memorial to say goodbye to the rangers who gathered there to present Conrad with a framed black and white print of the Ranger Memorial.

"Command Sergeant Major Conrad is the last of the old breed of soldier," said Sgt. 1st Class Bernard Ford, garrison operations sergeant. "There aren't too many left like him."

Commanding General Maj. Gen. Carl F. Ernst agreed with Ford.

"Conrad is a soldier's soldier," Ernst said. "But, because of the quality of his service, (the Army) will be OK. Everyone who had an opportunity to soldier with him is a better soldier for that opportunity."

"He's (molded) a lot of soldiers," Col. Dorian T. Anderson, commander of the Ranger Training Brigade, said. "He's not being lost at all because his legacy is left in the soldiers behind him.

"Conrad is the epitome of what you would expect from a command sergeant major and a soldier," Anderson continued.

Retired Maj. Gen. Ken Leuer said Conrad was instrumental in the formation of the first ranger units and that he was one of the first squad leaders when the first ranger battalion formed in 1974.

Lori Egan

Col. William Leszczynski, commander of the 75th Ranger Regiment, presents Command Sgt. Maj. George D. and Helen Conrad with a framed print of the Ranger Memorial with the brigade and battalion coins mounted in the matting.

Finishing up at the Ranger Memorial completes the circle, Conrad said as he spoke to the rangers and other well wishers.

"Don't cut corners in training," Conrad said. "Technology is great, but we meet the enemy eye to eye."

CFC kicks off

By April N. Olsen
USAIC Public Affairs Office

The installation's Combined Federal Campaign kicked off Oct. 4 during a luncheon at the Officers' Club.

The annual fund-raising drive offers federal employees the opportunity to contribute to their favorite participating charities. Soldiers and civilians may donate by giving cash or check, or may choose the payroll deduction option.

Fort Benning's Commanding General Maj. Gen. Carl F. Ernst, who served as one of the speakers, announced this year's $500,000 and 100 percent exposure goal to commanders, directorate chiefs, project officers and unit key persons in attendance.

Ernst encouraged all to make a contribution to the Combined Federal Campaign.

"Our soldiers, their families and the civilian work force benefit from these agencies," Ernst said.

Former Fort Benning commanding general, retired Maj. Gen. Jerry White told the crowd that many soldiers and their families benefit from agencies downtown that receive much of their funds through Combined Federal Campaign and its parent organization, United Way.

White, the president of the Chattahoochee Valley Chapter of the United Way, said many local United Way agencies provide support to soldiers, family members, civilians and their families living both on and off post.

"We either sink or swim as a community," White said, "I think we should encourage ... to take care of our own first."

Only about 35 percent of last year's donations stayed in the Fort Benning and local communities, he said, because they weren't designated for agencies in this area.

White echoed Ernst's call for commanders to get behind the campaign and inform soldiers and civilians of the importance of contributing.

"All of us need to do better," White said referring to last year's campaign, which failed to reach the monetary goal.

"Go for 100 percent participation," White said, "Ask everyone to give more than they did last year."

Fort Benning's six-week campaign runs through Nov. 15. For more information, contact your unit's Combined Federal Campaign key person or the post Combined Federal Campaign office at 682-5142.

Council meets

USAIC Public Affairs Office

The Civilian and Military Council celebrates 50 years of promoting civilian and military relations Oct. 18 at 7 p.m. at the Fort Benning Officers' Club.

Past commanding generals, mayors and committee chairmen join the current membership of the Civilian and Military Council in reflecting on the strides made in the tricommunity area since the committee's founding Oct. 11, 1946.

Former post commander, retired Lt. Gen. Orwin C. Talbott, who presided during the 25th anniversary of the organization will talk briefly about the early years.

Former Columbus Mayor Harry Jackson (1979-1982) and current members toast the CMC, and Chuck McClure of McClure broadcasting plans to read a narrative that traces the history of CMC.

The Infantry Center Band will provide big band sound during the reception with music from the 1940s and 50s and Capt. Sean Welch will present a display of World War II weapons and equipment, while wearing a World

Tricommunity area to dedicate RiverWalk

USAIC Public Affairs Office

RiverWalk dedication at a glance

What: Dedication ceremony of the RiverWalk that connects Fort Benning with Columbus.

When: Saturday

Cost: The corporate relay race costs $40 for a seven-man team. The River March costs $5. Participants receive a $2 discount to the Uptown Jam

Information:
Call Brad Castleberry at 545-2238 for River March information, Jim Brown 545-5771 for corporate relay race information or Burnie Quick at 596-0111 for information concerning the dedication ceremony.

With a corporate relay race, a River March and an official ceremony, Columbus, Phenix City and Fort Benning officials dedicate the RiverWalk Saturday.

Scheduled first, the corporate relay race, beginning at 8 a.m., spans the length of the RiverWalk from Fort Benning's National Infantry Museum, ending at the Columbus pavilion behind the Ironworks Convention Center in downtown Columbus.

Registration costs $40 for each seven-person corporate relay team. This fee earns each participant an official T-shirt, a certificate of participation and $2 discount off the admission price to the Uptown Jam, an annual community-wide celebration of Columbus Day occurring this evening and Saturday in Columbus.

The Uptown Jam features food, entertainment and fireworks.

The second portion, the River March, a modified volksmarch, starts at Fort Benning's Information Center on Benning Boulevard at 9 a.m. and ends at the Columbus pavilion. River March participants walk, run, skate or bicycle the course. A $5 registration fee earns each participant an official T-shirt, a certificate of participation and $2 discounted off the admission price to the Uptown Jam and a chance at door prizes.

Participants not wishing to begin at the Information Center can start at any one of five other sites along the 12-mile route, including Oxbow Meadows, the Water Works' South Plant, Bull Creek Bridge, Rotary Park and South Commons.

Beth A. Taylor, publicity specialist, Uptown Columbus, said the River March represents a community-oriented event.

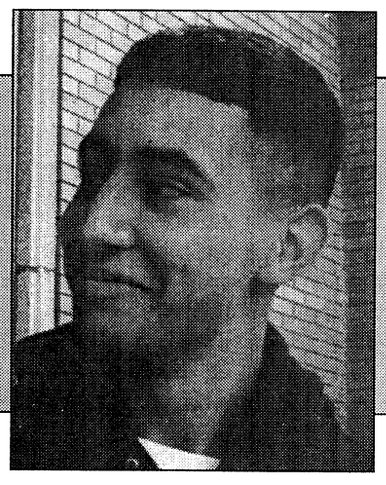
"The River March is a community-wide celebration in recognition of the opening of the completed RiverWalk from Fort Benning to Columbus," she said. "It is a grand way to enjoy the beauty of the RiverWalk and the river itself during a family-oriented, fun community celebration."

Relay participants register at the Information Center between 7 and 8 a.m., and River March participants register between 8:30 a.m. and noon the day of the event.

Participants in the race and River March, an expected 100 to 200 people, return to the starting point by bus as needed.

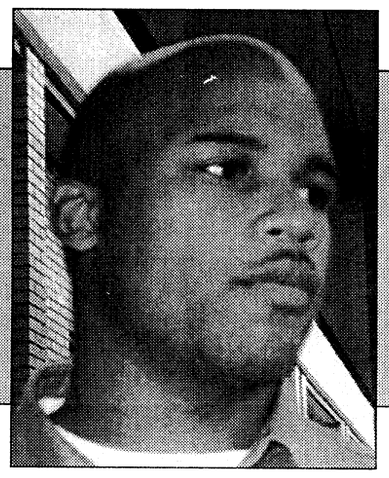
An official RiverWalk dedication ceremony takes place at the Columbus Pavilion, culminating the activities. Festivities begin at 1 p.m., with Fort Benning Commanding General Maj. Gen. Carl F. Ernst, Columbus Mayor Bobby G. Peters and Phenix City Mayor Sammy Howard dedicating the river's scenic overlook.

"We're hoping for and getting a good response from all different aspects of the community, including community groups and organizations," Taylor said.



For more information regarding the River March, contact Brad Castleberry, Fort Benning Public Affairs Office, at 545-2238. Regarding the Relay Race, contact Jim Brown, Directorate of Community Activities, at 545-5771. The dedication ceremony contact is Burnie Quick, Uptown Columbus, at 596-0111.

VARIOUS VOICES



What is the importance of the RiverWalk connecting Columbus and Fort Benning?

Sgt. Joe Mandell, U.S. Army Medical Department Activity — "It's brought a lot of attractions to the area and is certainly a beautiful place to walk or ride a bike."

Pfc. Steve Harnandez, Company C, 1st Battalion, 15th Infantry Regiment — "It keeps the area from being too boring."

Sgt. Orbeny Wilson, Company C, 1st Battalion, 15th Infantry Regiment — "It's really not doing much to connect the two because this is an open post already."

Marsha Lopez, family member — "It's a tourist attraction."

Lisa Sullivan, family member — "With the celebration and dedication ceremony, it's bringing Fort Benning closer to the Columbus community."

Retired Master Sgt. Betty Russell — "I think it's important the two communities be connected. They interact and share a lot of things, so why not the RiverWalk? The interaction between the sister communities is marvelous."

HAND IN HAND

Take a stroll along the RiverWalk

By Richard J. McDowell
Public Affairs officer

The RiverWalk represents more than a ribbon of asphalt linking Fort Benning with Columbus. It bridges races and cultures as well.

commentary

If the United States is a melting pot, then the RiverWalk is the ladle that stirs and blends the cultures together. Pick any number of starting points, including the National Infantry Museum, the welcome station on Benning Road, the nature center off of Lumpkin Road, Rotary Park, or the River Club in Uptown Columbus. Then strike out by foot, roller blade, bicycle and, if you venture far enough, you'll come across a representative of nearly every ethnic background of our region.

They're there, doing the same thing you are — enjoying the fresh air, exercise, the view of the river, or just one another's company.

There's the old man sitting on the concrete culvert with his cane pole, patiently waiting for a fish to sample his offerings; Fort Benning soldiers slipping their bass boat into the water at the Rotary Park landing. They could be the three women, strolling side by side, recently retired from Fort Benning, but not retired from life. Or maybe they're the men in the motorized wheelchairs out sampling the wind that licks their faces.

They could be the puffing mother, pushing her bike up the hill while her 3 year-old daughter darts merrily and easily ahead on her scaled down bike. Whoever they are, they're glad to be there and glad to share their company with anyone who passes.

Riches matter not. Job titles matter not. Race, sex and religion matter not. All are equal and all share their space on the RiverWalk.

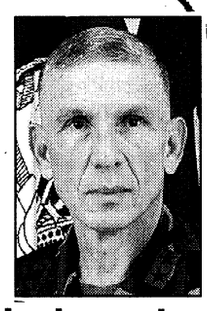
The RiverWalk includes something for everyone. Starting at the National Infantry Museum, the traveler passes under the sagging branches of hard wood trees, and relishes the shade they provide. Crossing Lumpkin and Sigerfoos roads, he passes near Russ Pond before breaking out of the wood line onto 10th Mountain Division Road where he needs to be careful if he's a biker or skater because of the dip between path and road.

He then crosses the Upatoi Creek, paralleling Lumpkin Road passes the Fort Benning's Visitors' Center, travels along the tree-lined route to the wetlands of Oxbow Meadows. Following the path, he passes quiet ponds, where kids play with dogs, dads fish and moms try to relax.

Next he sees the sewage treatment plant offering up a palate of smells that can clear the worst case of sinuses on some days, or provide no hint at all to what takes place there on other days. From there, the RiverWalk follows the Chattahoochee River, dipping into heavily forested areas, then back out in the clear and the panoramic view of the river. There's a covered wooden bridge to cross just after Rotary Park.

The RiverWalk snakes below the softball complex and Golden Park, passes under the Oglethorpe Bridge and then to the pavilion where the paddle wheeler waits to take people for a cruise along the river. Cross under the Dillingham Bridge behind the Trade Center and the RiverWalk becomes a bricked thoroughfare, skimming just above the water's surface.

Then you reach not the end, but a new start point, the River Club. The overall distance covers approximately 13 miles.



Along the route, there are water stations, rest room facilities and markers that describe the various portions of the walk.

Tomorrow, the RiverWalk officially opens with a 1 p.m. ceremony at the pavilion behind the Trade Center.

For those who want to share the walk with others and get a T-shirt and certificate of participation for their efforts, they can check into one of six check points along the route, pay $5 and join the masses enjoying the day. The T-shirts will be available for pickup until 3 p.m. at the pavilion.

For those needing transportation back to their starting point, bus service will be provided. If you can't make it Saturday, make it some day. You'll be hooked.

Benning's budget

Commanding general explains home improvements

By Carl F. Ernst
Post commanding general

commentary

It takes a lot of money to run an installation the size of Fort Benning. A fact of life remains that as our Army downsizes, so does our budgets.

One of the major impacts of reduced funding occurs in the maintenance and repair of our living areas, both family housing and barracks. All levels of Army command recognize the steady deterioration of this primary quality of life area.

During the past fiscal year, which ended Sept. 30, we made substantial monetary investments in improving some of the most deteriorated facilities.

The most obvious barracks improvements occurred in the barracks renewal program. The Army plans to complete major renovation of two barracks complexes in the Main Post and Kelley Hill areas at a combined cost of $35 million by January 1997 for Main Post and by fiscal 1999 for Kelley Hill.

This will provide a maximum of 800 soldiers with completely new modernized barracks. The Corps of Engineers awarded another contract for $29.5 million begins the second barracks project on Kelley Hill that will provide new barracks for an additional 448 soldiers.

The maintenance and repair of barracks remains not so obvious but just as critical. This is a two pronged attack. First, I directed that commanders move all soldiers who are billeted in old World War II wooden structures to more permanent buildings and that the WWII wooden structures be torn down. These are extremely old buildings that are expensive to maintain, heat, and cool. Over the long haul, this saves us money.

Secondly, I tasked the director of Public Works to identify the worst barracks and to apply as much maintenance and repair to these barracks as possible. This remains my No. 1 priority for our maintenance dollars.

During the past fiscal year, we spent $14.8 million in maintenance and repair of barracks, $5.8 million in maintenance and repair of our utility systems and $1.6 million in demolition of WWII buildings.

Family housing remains perhaps the area where the Army has made the most improvement in providing resources for quality of life. The new business operating practice procedure provides money based upon our occupancy rate multiplied by the average basic allowance for quarters for the average soldier. This means an increase in family housing funding for Fort Benning from $15.3 million in fiscal 1995 to $27.9 million in fiscal 1996, an increase of 83 percent.

These funds covered such projects as roof repairs in McGraw Manor, the white elephants, Miller Loop, McDonald Manor and Indianhead Terrace; furnace replacements in Indianhead Terrace; window replacements in Davis Hill;, and patio door replacements in Indianhead Terrace.

We hope to continue to receive funding under the business operating practice program and to continue to make improvements in family housing. Our extremely old facilities need replacing.

We will continue the quest for funds to build new facilities, but that remains a long-term project. In the meantime, we will continue to bring our aging facilities up to a livable standard. Our soldiers and their families deserve no less, and I remain committed to doing so.

Precautions prevent fire tragedies

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Every year 1,200 children age 14 and younger die because of home fires in the United States, according to Deborah Gutierrez, safety and occupational health specialist, Infantry Branch Safety Office.

Monday through today, Fort Benning children continue to learn about fires, how to prevent them and how to react when faced with a fire.

Fort Benning firefighters show the school children their fire trucks today and offer them fire safety advice.

During Fire Prevention Week firefighters teach children how to react in a fire, what to do if their or a classmate's clothes catches fire and begins to burn.

"Stop, drop and roll," students in a pre-K class chimed in unison.

"Getting children involved in fire prevention works because they remind their parents," Gutierrez said. "Families need to practice fire safety because most home fires happen during the night when people are sleeping."

Gutierrez offered the following advice for preventing home fires:

•Install smoke detectors. Place the detectors outside every sleeping area and on every level of the home, including the basement.

•Test the smoke detectors monthly and replace the batteries at least once a year and even better, twice. A good reminder for replacing the batteries is to do it when the time changes in the spring and fall. Replace the smoke detector if it is more than 10 years old.

Gutierrez said most people will sleep through a fire. The poisonous gases and smoke produced by a fire can numb the senses and put you in a deeper sleep.

•Develop an escape plan. Families need useable exits from bedrooms — a window and the door. Upstairs bedrooms need to be equipped with a chain ladder. Store the ladders under the beds.

•Practice escaping. Children need to know how to get rid of the window screen, attach the ladder to the window, and climb down the ladder.

•Choose a safe meeting place outside.

Phenix City, Columbus and Fort Benning serve as the host for the dinner. Don Leebern of Georgia Crown Distributing Company serves as host for the reception.

Maj. Gen. John W. (Iron Mike) O'Daniel formed CMC because he remembered what happened to civilian and military relations following major conflicts — civilians wanted to get back to their lives and forgot about the sacrifices made by soldiers and the need to continue a military presence.

To prevent this from happening, he called on civic leaders in Columbus and Phenix City to discuss what they could do when landlords and taxi drivers tried to gouge soldiers or when soldiers got too rowdy downtown.

The purpose of CMC, as reflected in the minutes of the first meeting, was: "to act in an advisory capacity on all matters pertaining to relations between Army personnel and the civilian population in the community and for the purpose of settling difficulties which may arise due to either local military or civilian policies, to promote better understanding and develop joint Army-community interest in each other's activities and problems, to determine how the Army could best do its share toward attaining these ends, to report on public reaction and opinion concerning existing and new Army procedures and policies and to assist the Army in keeping the public informed."

In addition to O'Daniel, other members of the Fort Benning staff including Brig. Gen. Benjamin F. Caffey, Brig. Gen. William M. Miley, Col. Roy N. Hagerty, Col. Gilbert T. Collar and Lt. Col. Edgar O. Hobbs served on the staff.

The civilian community representatives included Columbus Mayor Sterling Albrecht, Phenix City Mayor Homer D. Cobb; Dr. L.P. Banks, chairman, Board of Commissioners, Muscogee County; Oscar E. Cole, chairman, Board of Commissioners, Russell County; Ralph I. King, president, Columbus Chamber of Commerce; Richard E. Tukey, executive director, Columbus Chamber of Commerce; W. W. Hunt, Jr., president, Phenix City Chamber of Commerce; C. R. Morton, Jr., president, Columbus Junior Chamber of Commerce; Harold Coulter, president, Phenix City Junior Chamber of Commerce; Reverend Bruce B. Hall, president, Columbus Ministerial Alliance; Maynard R. Ashworth, publisher, Ledger-Enquirer; Allen M. Woodall, WDAK; J. W. Woodruff, Jr., WRBL; and William H. Shaw, Columbus superintendent of schools.

The plan to meet at monthly luncheon meetings with various organizations serving as host remains in effect today.

"While the issues of today are not as volatile as in years past, the council remains a viable organization where military and civilian leaders can meet once a month to get to know one another and keep the lines of communication open for the benefit of both the military and civilian communities," said current commission chairman Mac Plummer.

Plummer plans to preside at the dinner.

CPO director retires

Directorate of Civilian Personnel

A retirement ceremony for Theresa V. Gunter, Fort Benning's director of Civilian Personnel, took place Oct. 1 at the Civilian Personnel Advisory Center, Building 85. Gunter retired Sept. 3 after more than 40 years of service.

Gunter became the first female personnel director in 1984.

"She met challenges with the confidence that she could make a difference," said Loraine Lester, Personnel Management Services, Directorate of Civilian Personnel. "And she instilled that attitude in others around her."

Under her direction, the Fort Benning Directorate of Civilian Personnel received many awards and recognition for its personnel administration plans, some of which serve as models Armywide, Lester said.

In 1987 and 1988, the Directorate of Civilian Personnel received the award of Outstanding Training and Doctrine Command Civilian Personnel Office and received continued recognition as the best CPO TRADOC for the next five consecutive years.

Gunter received the George Heberling award for exceptional service provided by a Department of the Army civilian employee from the local chapter of the Association of the U.S. Army in July.

Gunter received many honorary and distinguished awards, including a TRADOC award for First Civilian Personnel Services Within TRADOC, 1991; TRADOC Civilian Personnel Sustained Leadership Award, 1990 to 1994; Meritorious Civilian Service Award, 199O; TRADOC Civilian Personnel Excellence Award for Leadership, 1986 and 1988; Outstanding TRADOC CPO Staff Award.

"I have had the distinct pleasure of working with every civilian personnel officer assigned to Fort Benning from T. A. Barefoot to Theresa Gunter, and I can say without equivocation that she has been the best," said Mary Loudermilk, Labor Relations specialist, Civilian Personnel Office.

"She absolutely refused to accept less than our best and encouraged and nudged us in the direction of her visions, which were always innovative and quantum leaps ahead of her peers."

"She was a terrific lady to work with and will be greatly missed," Lester said. "We are all proud to have served under her leadership."

Better Opportunities for Single Soldiers

BOSS conducts postwide meeting

By Richard Germann
Better Opportunities for Single Soldiers

Officials of the Better Opportunities for Single Soldiers program conducted a postwide meeting Tuesday at Afterhours, the enlisted club.

Single soldiers came to this meeting to talk about single-soldier issues and to receive some free pizza.

Besides unit representatives, Jim Gallagher of the Association of the U.S. Army, Sgt. Maj. Alexander Ferguson of the Directorate of Public Works, and Sgt. Maj. Arthur Van Allen the garrison sergeant major attended this meeting.

Ferguson talked about a topic close to the single soldiers heart, barracks upgrades. Ferguson spoke about new construction planned and new construction that is under way and the 36th Engineer Groups nearly completed barracks.

On Kelley Hill, the construction began for the 3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division (Mechanized). This project contains plans for many new barracks at the cost of millions of dollars over the next eight years.

Van Allen expressed support for the BOSS program and any issues that would improve single soldier quality of life, however he said he does not support their interference with the Army's mission.

"I will not support any initiative that interferes with the mission of the U.S. Army or the readiness of its soldiers," he said.

Gallagher told the soldiers about various AUSA programs. The most exciting of these, he said, is Operation Holiday, a program where AUSA acquires tickets to sporting and entertainment events at no or reduced price for soldiers.

Some of the more recent events AUSA acquired tickets for or admission to included the nationally televised Georgia Tech vs. Duke football game and the Buick Challenge for Military Appreciation Day.

Gallagher said AUSA officials are currently negotiating with the Columbus Cottonmouths to provide one free ticket for every ticket AUSA buys to their games and Auburn University officials for reduced price admissions to Auburn basketball games next spring. Gallagher said AUSA plans to obtain free tickets for sporting events or social events for soldiers every month.

Question of the week:

Why have prices gone up in dining facilities?

In the past, officers paid a surcharge for some meals when eating in dining facilities. After careful consideration, Army officials decided to eliminate the surcharge. To offset the loss of income, the base prices have been raised for everyone who eats in the dining facilities.

USAR recruits full-time soldiers

U.S. Army Reserve Personnel Center

The U.S. Army Reserve searches for highly qualified soldiers to serve full time in the Active Guard Reserve program. The AGR allows reservists to support the U.S. Army Reserve as active duty soldiers.

The AGR soldier receives all benefits and advantages of active duty and carries a green ID card. Those benefits include active duty pay, housing, and subsistence allowances. Additional benefits include soldier and family health care, 30 days paid leave per year, and up to $200,000 of Servicemen's Group Life Insurance.

An AGR soldier usually serves a minimum three-year tour in a reserve unit location. Assignments include hometown units and overseas destinations.

Suited for self-starting, self-motivated soldiers, the AGR program trains soldiers to provide and improve the readiness of the USAR units and assist in the transition of the USAR units from peacetime to wartime.

The Full Time Support Management Directorate, a Directorate within the Army Reserve Personnel Center, manages the AGR force. The Directorate always looks for qualified applicants for the program.

The AGR program, a career program, offers soldiers retirement with full Army retirement benefits to soldiers serving 20 qualifying years of active duty.

FTSMD seeks applications for enlisted grades specialist through sergeant first class in all military occupational specialties and combat support and combat service support officers in the grades of second lieutenant to captain.

For more information or to request an application, call the FTSMD Boards Section at (800) 325-4118, and at the chimes, press 4.

AGR staff members encourage soldiers leaving active duty or in transition to the Reserve, and Army Reservists seeking a full-time career in the Army Reserve, to apply.

Submit a completed application to FTSMD by Nov. 15. The next accessions board convenes Jan. 1 to select new soldiers for the AGR program. The board then notifies applicants of the results by mail.

This program offers an excellent opportunity for a soldier to establish or continue to fulfill a career in the Army, but not necessarily at an Army post, officials said.

Airborne!

This year, more than 14,000 members of the U.S. military will earn their "wings" by attending the U.S. Army Airborne School at Fort Benning. The school is required for anyone who is or will be stationed in an airborne unit in any branch of the military. The three-week long school is divided into three areas of instruction, ground week, tower week and jump week. According to instructors, one of the most important parts of the course is teaching students how to perform a parachute landing fall, which when performed properly ensures the student does not get hurt when coming in contact with the ground. Each student performs five jumps before graduation — two jumps, one at night and one during the day, with combat equipment, which includes a rucksack and a weapon carrying case, and three "hollywood jumps," which are jumps without combat equipment.

Soldier

donates bone marrow to child

By Cindy Kronman
Army News Service

PORT-AU-PRINCE, Haiti — Being a member of the armed forces means making a commitment to serve and support America and its people.

Cpt. Kevin Degnan not only takes his oath as a service member seriously, he also believes his duties as an American citizen mean helping others in times of need.

Degnan is a soldier in the U.S. Army currently deployed to Haiti. He is also a bone marrow donor slated to undergo surgery next week in an attempt to save the life of a nine-year-old child with leukemia.

"The military is all about helping people — that's our business. This is what it is all about, helping this child is consistent with our mission in the armed forces," Degnan said.

Permanently assigned to US Atlantic Command in Norfolk, Virginia as the senior intelligence exercise planner, Degnan is currently the intelligence officer assigned to US Support Group Haiti under Exercise Fairwinds.

"I became a bone marrow donor under the Department of Defense program in 1993. In January of 1996 the National Bone Marrow Foundation contacted me as a potential match," he explained.

Degnan underwent a series of four blood typing tests over the next seven months to verify he was a match with the patient. In June he was selected to become a bone marrow donor to a child in Europe.

"I found out about being selected for major on the same day I found out about being selected as a donor for the child. I was much more excited about being a donor," he said.

Degnan flew back to the United States Sept. 10 to be admitted to Georgetown Hospital in Washington, DC.

Although bone marrow transplantation will offer the child a chance of a cure, there are still several hazards involved with the procedure, including infection and rejection of the donor's marrow cells.

According to Degnan, the child who has been undergoing extensive chemotherapy prior to the transplant, has a form of leukemia that is 80 percent curable.

"I don't think there is a greater gift you can give someone than their life. The personal reward is tremendous," he said.

1st Bn, 30th Inf Regiment tank crews qualify on Table 8

By Robin Shawlinski
3rd Brigade 3rd Infantry Division

Soldiers from 1st Battalion, 30th Infantry Regiment, confirmed their combat readiness during their biannual gunnery Sept. 12 to 30.

The battalion qualified 99 percent of its soldiers, with 15 crews firing superior.

As a warm-up to Table 8, the single-vehicle qualification, the crews practice different maneuvers on several intermediate gunnery "tables". Tables 6 and 7, which are conducted as live-fire ranges, aid the crews in learning and perfecting crew coordination.

Once firing on these tables, the crews must prove their worth on Table 8

On Table 8, the crews must fire six day engagements and four night engagements at targets ranging from 500 to 1,600 meters. The crews must engage targets in nuclear, biological and chemical environments as well as at moving Soviet-style vehicles with troops, a three-truck target and other stationary and moving target combinations, according to Staff Sgt. Kevin Bliss, 1st Bn., 30th Inf., master gunner.

The crew receive up to a possible 100 on each engagement, but must pass one of the two NBC engagements and score at least a 700, Bliss said.

The crews receive a rating based on the time it takes to acquire a target and fire on a target as well as the Bradley commander's commands and the crew's ability to work together, he said.

Robin A. Shawlinski

A Bradley Fighting Vehicle crew fires at a target during the day engagement on Hastings Range.

Sgt. Otha Robinson, a gunner from Company B, 1st Bn., 30th Inf., fired his first gunnery with his new Bradley crew. He said soldiers must make adjustments when firing with a new crew.

"With a new crew, you have to learn how your (Bradley commander) and driver work," he said. "You have to get to know each other and get your coordination down."

After the completion of the day engagements, Robinson's Bradley commander, 2nd Lt. Wayne Townsend, said his crew didn't do as well as they should have done But he said his crew would work on some key points and improve during the night engagement.

"We'll keep our heads in the game," be said. "I'll stress the little things, and we'll make the corrections.

Townsend's crew scored an 840 out of 1,000 earning them a "superior" qualification.

Once the soldiers complete the day and night engagements, evaluators calculate the crew's score and gives the crew an overall qualification rating. A crew receives a "distinguished" rating for a score of at least 900 points, a "superior" rating for 800 to 899 points, a "qualified" rating for 700 to 799 and an "unqualified" is given to a crew which fires a 699 or if the crew fires less than 699 points on four of ten engagements.

Aside from the Bradley qualification, the mounted and dismounted soldiers also qualified on small arms such as the M-16A2, 9mm pistol, M-203 grenade launcher and the M-249 squad automatic weapon.

Soldiers from Company B, 1st Battalion, 30th Infantry Regiment, wait for their turn to qualify on Table 8. Co. B, 1st bn, 30th Inf. qualified 99 percent of the company with four crews earning a "distinguished" qualification.

Columbus to rock with Uptown Jam

By Jacqué Hill
Special to the Bayonet©

The Columbus Business Association sponsors its fifth annual Uptown Jam today and Saturday in recognition of Columbus Day.

From 5 p.m. to midnight today and from noon to midnight Saturday, the association provides food, live entertainment and special events for adults and children along the RiverWalk.

Performances by musicians, such as country singer Rick Trevino on the Bud Light Stage at 11 p.m., and musical groups, including Taylor Made at 5 p.m. on the Georgia Lotto Stage and Blues Jam at 10:15 p.m. in the Regions Bank Tent today, will keep jam-goers entertained.

Some of Saturday's musical entertainment highlights include the Village People at 10:45 p.m. on the Bud Light Stage, Big White Undies at 10 p.m. on the Georgia Lotto Stage and Friends at 4:30 p.m. in the Regions Bank Tent.

Some acts showcased on the Publix Children's Stage include Magic Tony Contino and Company, Miss Columbus, Raggedy Ann and Andy and Professor Effuvium's Poppycock Review.

Available at all Spectrum stores, advance two-day passes sell for $7 each. Individual one-day tickets cost $5.

Delia Postell, director, Uptown Jam, expects a big community turnout.

"Last year, we had around 35,000 people," she said. "This year, we're hoping for 40 to 45,000."

Several roads blocked off during the two-day event, Postell said, include 10th Street from Broadway to Bay Avenue and Front and Bay avenues from Dillingham Street to 11th Street.

Uptown Business Association members suggest those attending the Uptown Jam park in any of the public lots along Broadway, in Columbus Bank and Trust's parking deck or at the Trade Center. Members also recommend people not park in the lots located at retail outlets when planning to attend the jam's festivities.

Post plans to replace power pole

Residents to experience 4-hour electrical outages

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Replacement of a high voltage power pole along Custer Road means a four-hour power outage for many Fort Benning residents Oct. 19 and 26.

Scheduled from 8 a.m. to noon, the power outages will allow construction crews to shut off electrical power and replace the pole.

"These outages have been scheduled in four-hour increments and on Saturdays to minimize the impact on the most affected areas," said Richard Chancey, chief of the Construction Inspection Branch, Directorate of public Works. "This work is a continuing effort by the DPW to upgrade and maintain the installation facilities."

The work calls for construction crews to upgrade and replace deteriorated high voltage utility lines in conjunction with a Corps of Engineers contract.

"We're trying to do the work on Saturdays and on weekends to make it easier for post housing residents," Chancey said.

The affected areas include:

Loyd School
Wilbur School
Custer Road Fire Station
Building 2677 (Eiler Hall)
Water Treatment Plant
Water Tank (Torch Hill)
Lift Station No. 5
Water Torch (Custer Terrace)
Main Post Cemetery
Traffic Light at Custer Road and Benning Boulevard
Custer Terrace (family housing residents)
Upatoi Terrace (family housing residents)
Arrowhead Road (family housing residents)
Galt Court (family housing residents)
Butts Street (family housing residents)
Monteith Court

"We recommend that family housing residents refrain from opening refrigerators and freezers during these outages as much as possible," Chancey said.

Community to clean the Chattahoochee

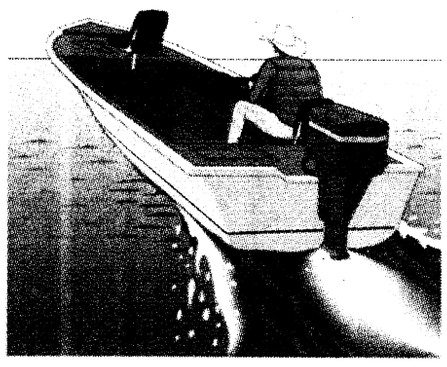
USAIC Public Affairs Office

"Help The Hooch," a campaign to clean up the Chattahoochee River area, takes place Oct. 19 from 9 a.m. until noon.

Campaign organizers need volunteers to help in the cleanup efforts on both sides of the river.

Chattahoochee Valley Community College and the Phenix City-Russell County Chamber of Commerce seek volunteers to help on the Alabama side, and the Keep Columbus Beautiful Commission needs volunteers to help clean up along the RiverWalk and around area lakes and streams on the Georgia side.

Campaign organizers said the effort includes more than the Chattahoochee River area. Select any creek, lake or stream in the Chattahoochee Valley area as a cleanup site.



Phenix City

Alabama coordinator, Jerry Hicks, a biology instructor at CVCC, seeks volunteers from Russell County and Phenix City to clean up the Alabama side.

Hicks said volunteers can be elementary, junior high school and high school students; senior citizens; law enforcement officers; college students; fire firefighters; administrators of area industries and business representatives.

Interested individuals need to call Hicks at 291-4955 or call the Phenix City Chamber of Commerce at 298-3639 by Monday.

Volunteer groups may select a site on their own or seek the advice of the event organizers for selection of sites. Volunteers need to indicate preference in the appropriate space on the volunteer registration form.

Organizers prohibit youth under 18 years of age on the river or its banks. They recommend that youth groups select creek or lake sites with easy accessibility.

Each volunteer receives a "tally" card to keep up with items collected during the cleanup.

This card serves as the volunteer's ticket for admission to a party along the Riverwalk in Columbus following the clean-up effort. Each volunteer also receives a T-shirt upon presentation of the tally card at the party.

Volunteers need to dress in long slacks or jeans and wear long-sleeve shirts and work gloves, even though rubber gloves will be provided. Some volunteers may wish to bring insect repellent as well.

After volunteers place the trash in provided trash bags and place them at designated disposition sites, the Department of Public Works personnel gather and dispose of the garbage.

Organizers expect people to collect recyclable materials in separate bags.

Organizers ask volunteers to work in groups or at least on a "buddy" system, since there is no designated "gathering site" Oct. 19. However, groups needing a last-minute assignment site should meet at the amphitheater at 8:30 a.m.

Volunteer registration forms must arrive at CVCC, Attention: Jerry W. Hicks, 2602 College Drive, Phenix City, Ala., 36869, no later than Monday.

A volunteer thank-you party occurs immediately following the cleanup at the Chattahoochee Promenade Park.

Columbus

The Keep Columbus Beautiful Commission needs volunteers to help clean up along the RiverWalk and around area lakes and streams.

To volunteer as a group or as an individual, call 571-4937. All volunteers who participate and complete a cleanup report of their activity receive a special T-shirt at the volunteer thank-you party.

The Keep Columbus Beautiful Commission, the Chattahoochee River Keeper, the Columbus Water Works, the Riverfront Development Committee, the River Kids' Network and Columbus State University serve as joint sponsors of the annual "Help the Hooch River Cleanup" campaign.

For more information or to volunteer in Columbus, call the Keep Columbus Beautiful Commission at 571-4937.

ON POST

"Trick or treating" rules set — Halloween "trick or treating" in post housing areas occurs Oct. 31 from 6 p.m. to 8 p.m.

Trick or treating activities are limited to children less than 13 years of age. Preschool children need supervision by persons 14 years or older.

Children need to wear light-colored, fire-resistant costumes short enough to prevent tripping. Mark costumes with reflective tape or a glow spray paint to ensure vehicle headlights and street and house lights reflect.

Observe all basic safety precautions. Use sidewalks and crosswalks and don't cut through yards. Pet owners need to take measures to prevent pets from being a nuisance or a menace to children. Caution children about the wrongs of vandalism and causing damage to the property of others.

Children need to carry flashlights and follow every safety precaution when crossing streets. Motorists should remain alert during "trick or treating" time. Parents need to inspect all "treats" before their children eat them. Give your child a full meal before he or she goes "trick or treating."

Tricare briefings set — The Tricare Service Center plans to conduct briefings so its representatives can explain the Tricare system and its options to all eligible personnel Thursday at 10 a.m. and Oct. 29 at 6 p.m.

WIC program offers health benefits

By Jacqué Hill
Special to the Bayonet©

The Special Supplemental Nutrition Program for Women, Infants and Children, a government program funded by the U.S. Department of Agriculture, helps promote nutrition of pregnant women, their infants, women who have recently delivered children and the families of these people.

Through nutritional counseling and food provisions, the program offers healthy benefits to women and children who need them, according to Amie Hardin, nutrition program manager, WIC.

Each month, every pregnant woman enrolled in WIC receives vouchers good for purchasing specified, healthy grocery items, such as milk, eggs, cereal, cheese, juice and beans. Once she gives birth to a child, she enrolls her child and receives vouchers good for purchasing items such as formula and baby cereal, Hardin said.

A women may continue to use the program for up to one year after she delivers her baby if she breast feeds or for six months if not breast feeding. Vouchers and counseling remain available for children enrolled in the program until they reach age 5, according to Hardin.

"Infants are eligible until they are 1 year old, but we like to do an assessment between 5 and 7 months," she said. "If breast feeding, a woman can remain on the program until the child is 1 year old. If someone is not breast feeding, her program participation ends when the infant turns 6 months old."

Most local grocery stores, including the Commissary, redeem the vouchers issued to these families.

Besides food vouchers, WIC offers nutritional counseling and health service referrals to persons enrolled in the program.

Eligibility requirements for each WIC enrollee include meeting household income limitations and nutritional risks.

Contrary to what some people believe, WIC clerks calculate only a soldier's base pay and the spouse's income when figuring a family's income total instead of incorporating all of a soldier's income into the total amount. Income guidelines, Hardin said, allow for families above poverty level.

"Our guidelines are 185 percent of the poverty level," she said. "Anyone can call our office, and we can do an income screening over the telephone."

Once WIC officials determine an enrollee meets income requirements, a nurse or nutritionist reviews the eating habits of the enrollee to determine an enrollee's nutritional risk. To accomplish this, each enrollee brings a 24-hour, written diet log to the WIC office for assessment by a nutritionist or nurse based on risk criteria provided by the State of Georgia.

Linda Lee, a licensed practical nurse at Fort Benning's WIC Office, performs nutritional assessments and counseling.

"Besides counseling, we also offer participants nutritional pamphlets explaining dietary recommendations," she said.

An important part of the nutritional counseling centers around breast feeding, Hardin said.

"We really promote breast feeding," she said, "because it can be so beneficial to the health of a newborn."

Program officials also complete a height and weight screening on each enrollee and a hemoglobin value blood test to determine eligibility.

Once a person meets the eligibility requirements, he or she receives nutritional counseling and information about picking up food vouchers. At this time, WIC personnel explain rules and regulations of the program to the new enrollee.

Each adult participant, including pregnant women, those who recently delivered children and fathers enrolling their children, attends a brief nutrition education session quarterly at a voucher issuance site. These sessions last between three and five minutes and take place while clerks prepare the enrollees' vouchers.

Once every six months, WIC participants must be recertified, a process similar to enrollment proceedings. A few exceptions to the recertification guidelines include participants who recertify at six weeks postpartum and newborn infants who recertify at 1 year of age.

Persons at Fort Benning wishing to participate in the WIC program may contact the local WIC Office by calling 682-8455 or 682-8369. Military personnel and their family members residing in the Columbus area may contact either Fort Benning's WIC Office at these numbers or the Columbus office by calling 321-6280.

Approximately 2,500 Fort Benning families currently use the WIC program.

Planning to stay

October is Domestic Abuse Awareness Month. Victims of domestic abuse need to always choose the safest plan of action when making decisions related to staying in an abusive situation.

1. Know your resources or people who can help you.
•Doctors, nurses and medical staff
•Social workers
•Chaplains
•Family Service Center and Family Advocacy Program staff
•Friends and neighbors
•Community organizations and program staff

2. Have a safety plan
•Tell a trusted friend (or two or three) about your problem.
•Always carry change (never phone cards) for emergency phone calls.
•Teach your children how and when to call 911 for the police or fire department.
•Avoid the use of alcohol or drugs; you need to be alert and able to think.
•Do not use violence yourself.
•You can use force necessary to defend yourself
If violence occurs:
•Get the children and yourself outside to safety.
•Avoid the kitchen, bathroom, garage, basement or any room without a door.
•Go directly to a neighbor, friend, police or other source of help.

3. Pack your safety suitcase.
At some point, your situation at home may become unsafe. If leaving becomes necessary, you need some important documents. These (or copies of them) should be stored for emergencies, in a safe place where they can be easily retrieved.
You will need, at least:
•identification for yourself or children, such as military identification cards, passports and Immigration and Naturalization green cards, birth certificates, and Social Security cards
•driver's license and car registration
•Cash or checkbook or automated teller machine card and credit cards
•Wedding certificate or divorce papers
•Bank books or insurance papers
•School and immunization records or medical records
•Address book
•Keys the your car, house, office or other •Medications

4. Understand the problem
You did not cause the abuse. The problem is within the batterer.
Work with counselors, who understand and support your choices.
Don't fall for excuses or false apologies.
Violence is not negotiable; everything else is!

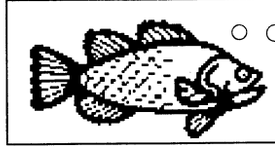
tricare

Martin Army Community Hospital

The Department of Defense recently switched to a new health care program for the Army, Navy and Air Force this year.

Representatives from Martin Army Community Hospital provide Tricare information to soldiers, retirees and family members.



Many eligible beneficiaries show concern about the change and how it affects their care. Two of the most commonly asked questions follows.

Q. What is the Tricare phone number to call for beneficiary information?

A Call the Tricare number, (800) 444-5445, for information about enrollment eligibility and effective dates, change of enrollment, etc.

Q. What number do I call to find out about available mental health coverage under Tricare?

A. To reach the Tricare Behavioral Health Line, call (800) 700-8646. This number reaches Choice Behavioral Health Services — the Tricare provider.

Device May Increase Gas Mileage by 22%

BOSTON - National Fuelsaver Corp. of Boston has developed a low cost automotive accessory called the Platinum Gasaver which is guaranteed to increase gas mileage by 22% while meeting all federal and state emission standards.

With a simple connection to a vacuum line, the Gasaver adds microscopic quantities of platinum to the air-fuel mixture entering the engine.

Platinum has the unique ability to make non-burning fuel burn. With platinum in the flame zone, you increase the percentage of fuel burning in the engine from 68% to 90%.

Normally that additional 22% of the fuel would only burn when it came in contact with the platinum surfaces of the catalytic converter.

Unfortunately, the converter process takes place outside of the engine, where the energy produced cannot be harnessed to drive the vehicle.

But with platinum in the combustion chambers, 22% more of each gallon burns inside the engine so that 22% fewer gallons are required to drive the same distance.

After studying this process for five years, the government concluded: "Independent testing shows greater fuel savings with the Gasaver than the 22% claimed by the developer."

In addition to government confirmation of its fuel saving claims, the Gasaver has received patents for raising gasoline octane, and has been approved for reducing emissions to acceptable levels.

Joel Robinson, the developer, commented: "We've already sold over 250,000 Gasavers. To our surprise, as many people buy the Gasaver because it extends engine life by cleaning out the abrasive carbon deposits as buy it to increase gas mileage."

TEST DATA

The government studied test data on vehicles made by several auto makers. Listed below is the data from a fleet of 15 identical 5-liter vehicles.

59	12.0	17.8	48.3%
63	11.3	16.6	46.9%
53	14.1	20.7	46.8%

Christians share common bond

reflections

Christians observe Laity Sunday this Sunday across the country.

The word "laity" comes from the Greek word "lags" meaning people. The term "laity" refers to "God's chosen people."

They become born again into God's family by accepting Jesus Christ as their personal Savior; furthermore, they belong to local churches, but they are not specifically called into the ministry, such as the pastor, preacher, evangelist, missionary or prophet. But, they serve as lay people who support God's kingdom in their local church and who witness in their community.

They possess one common bond and purpose: to glorify God and to expand his kingdom. No matter where they come from, or what color their skin, they represent the biggest community of God on earth.

I Peter 2:9 says: "But you are a chosen generation, a royal priesthood, a holy nation, his special people, that you may proclaim the praises of him who called you out of darkness into his marvelous light."

At the time of the Reformation, Christians believed in the priesthood of all believers. Some theologians believe all clergy are laymen, and all laymen are also clergy.

I Corinthians l 4:26 says: "How is it then bretheren? Whenever you come together, each of you has a psalm, has a teaching, has a tongue, has a revelation, has an interpretation. Let all things be done for edification."

It doesn't matter that God ordains one person to be a member of the clergy to pastor in a local church or another to be a lay person to play the piano. Christians share one common goal which is to glorify God, to edify one another and to bring the gospel to sinners.

God gave the church an enormous responsibility, and in his infinite wisdom he gives to each believer a different task to fulfill in his kingdom. The clergy alone cannot carry out all the heavy work of pastoring, preaching, evangelism, administration, visitation and other ministries to expand God's kingdom. Therefore, the clergy and the laity need to work as a team.

Romans 12:48 says, "For as we have many members in one body, but all the members do not have the same function, so we, being many, are one body in Christ, and individually members of one another. Having then gifts differing according to the grace that is given to us, let us use them: if prophecy, let us prophesy in proportion to our faith; or ministry, let us use it in our ministering; he who teaches, in teaching; he who exhorts, in exhortation; he who gives, with liberality; he who leads, with diligence; he who shows mercy, with cheerfulness."

Paul uses the concept of the human body to teach how Christians should live and work together. Paul exhorts the Corinthian believers to "Let all things be done decently and in order." (I Cor. 14:40)

One theologian said, "While all believers are ministers with varied services, the Spirit has distributed the ministries in such a way that the body may function with order."

As Christians celebrate this Laity Sunday in the church calendar, they need to remember our common bond in Christ Jesus and our common goal to glorify God in all of our service.

Whether clergy or laity serving in Fort Benning chapels or in Columbus churches, we are all God's chosen people. We are God's holy priesthood. Whether working in a nursery, playing a piano, greeting visitors, or visiting sick people, everyone remains important in the kingdom of God.

When he saved us out of darkness, God intended that we serve him.

Paul exhorts the Corinthian laity, "Therefore, my beloved bretheren, be steadfast, immovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord, knowing that your labor is not in vain in the Lord." (I Corinthians 15:58)

In my family, learning is everything.

Books don't just enlighten. They empower. Our children are growing up knowing this. A good education is one of the most important things we can give them. And we will, with the help of U.S. Savings Bonds.

Through the Payroll Savings Plan, we put aside something with every payday. And little by little, it will add up to college for our children.

U.S. Savings Bonds helped my parents put me through college. And next year, it's Michelle's turn. Sure, Savings Bonds have been important to our past, but they'll be even more important to our future. That's what makes our investment so valuable.

Ask your employer or banker about saving with U.S. Savings Bonds. For all the right reasons.

Chiefs knock Cowboys from unbeaten ranks

By John W. Peeler
Special to the Bayonet©

The Youth Services football program continued Saturday with seven games at Blue Field.

In the 9- to 12-year-old age group, the Chiefs knocked the Cowboys from the ranks of the unbeaten with a 12-6 victory.

The Chiefs running success coupled with their stingy defense proved to be the difference in the victory.

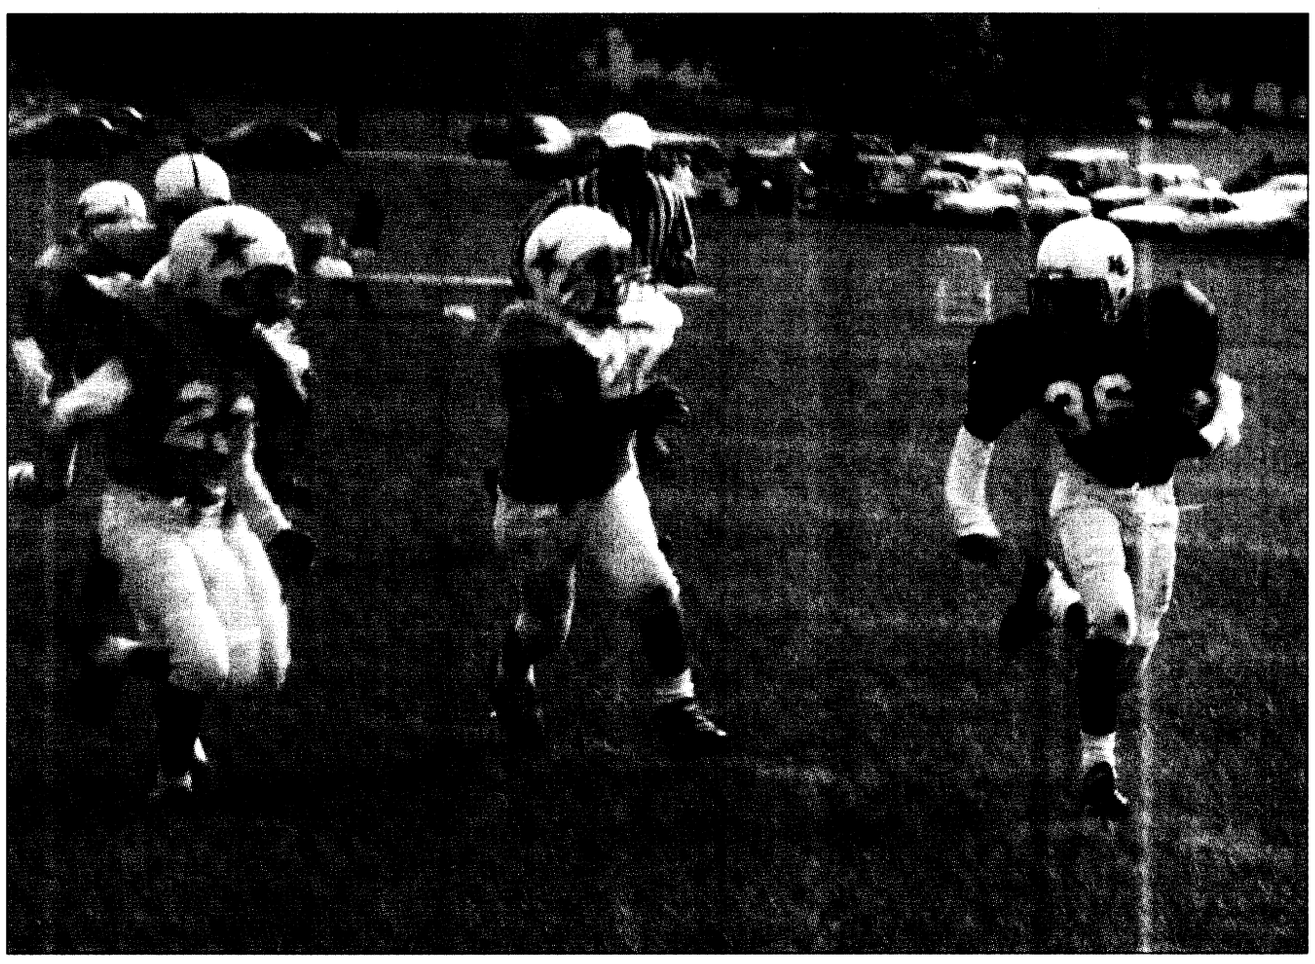
Chiefs running back Marquies Richardson scored two touchdowns to lead the scoring while the defense held the Cowboys to one offensive score.

The victory put the Chiefs into a three-way tie with the Cowboys and Eagles with a record of 2-1.

The Vikings continued their unbeaten streak, remaining in first place with a 20-0 victory over the Seminoles. The Vikings quarterback Zeke Morris passed for 102 yards with touchdown strikes of 21 and 12 yards to wide receiver William Proctor. Morris also scored on a fourth down 1-yard dive to cap the victory.

In the other 9- to 12-year-old game, the Eagles pushed their record to 2-1 with an 22-0 victory over the Panthers. The Eagles took an early lead in the game and never looked back as their defense was able to frustrate the Panthers offense all game.

In the 6- to 8-year-old flag division, the 49ers won their first game of the season by defeating the Packers 13-7.



In the late game, the Vikings' offense took control of the game scoring 34 points to defeat the Giants.

The 12-and-over league kicked off its season Saturday with two games played.

In the first game, the Lions blanked the Steelers 14-0 with a solid defensive performance; and, in the late game, the Browns slipped past the 49ers 12-6.

Youth Services plans more football games at Blue Field Saturday beginning at 9 a.m.

USAMU pistol shooters sweep Georgia match

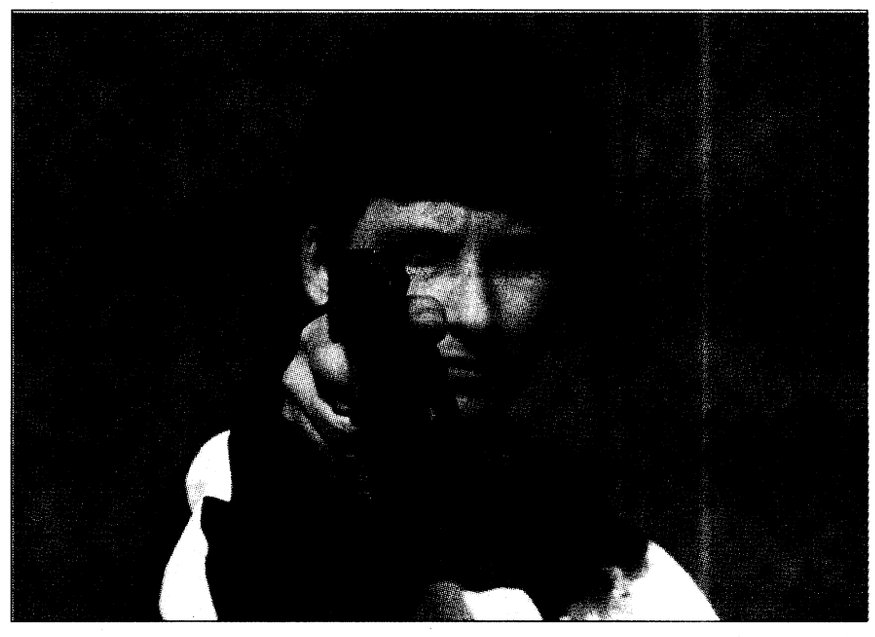
USAMU Public Affairs Office

International pistol shooters with the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit swept all seven matches at the Pinetucky Gun Club preliminary tryout match in Augusta, Ga., Sept. 26 to 29.

Daryl L. Szarenski received the Gold Medal in the men's free pistol with 542 points out of a possible 600 and William L. Christopher came in second.

Szarenski also won the men's air pistol with 580 points out of 600, Paul Johnston took second and Carl W. Trompeter II came in third.

In the men's center fire pistol match, Szarenski won the Gold Medal with 570 points out of 600, Trompeter won the Silver and Eric G. Daniels took the Bronze.



This year, Szarenski won the title of USA National Shooting, Championships free pistol champion. Johnston won the men's rapid fire pistol match with a score of 577 points out of 600, Daniels came in second and Trompeter came in third.

Trompeter won the standard pistol Gold Medal with 568 points out of 600, Szarenski captured the Silver and Daniels look the Bronze.

Rhonda L. Bright won Gold Medals in the women's air pistol and sport pistol matches and set a new national record by shooting 387 points out of 400 in the air pistol event.

Bright is a five-time Gold Medalist, a three-time Silver Medalist, a three-time Bronze Medalist, a three-time national champion and a two-time world record setter.

Shooters who obtain a qualifying score receive an invitation to compete in the national championships, and this competition provided a step in the selection system for the National Team.

USAMU sweeps national steel showdown match

By Anna O'Leska
USAMU Public Affairs Office

The U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit's service rifle team swept the National Sporting Clays Association's Steel Showdown Match at the National Championships' Winchester Shooting Center and took top awards at the Texas State Highpower Service Rifle Championships at Camp Bullis Sept. 12 to 14 in San Antonio, Texas.

"The Steel Showdown is a new event in the NSCAs National Championships this year," said Rand I. Bentson, USAMU service rifle shooter. "Traditionally the national championship has consisted of shotgun events only. This year, the Steel Showdown pistol and rifle events were added to the championships."

The new Steel Showdown event, divided into three segments, consists of two-person teams shooting a rifle, pistol and a combination of rifle and pistol shooting.

The rifle event tested the shooter's individual marksmanship skills as well as the team's ability to devise a winning strategy. The course consisted of 46 targets of varying sizes and shapes.

The pistol event tested a team's ability to work together. Each shooter, responsible for 50 percent of the team's points, shot at 24 targets at various distances.

The course in the combo event consist of 50 targets. One shooter shot a pistol and the other shot a rifle at various distances for a total of 100 points.

In each event, the most successful team developed the best overall strategy. Both shooters on the team shot at the same time.

"We won three trophies ... one for overall, another for the pistol stage and a third for the combo rifle and pistol stage," service rifle shooter Bruce A. McCauley said.

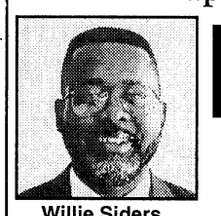
The winning two-man USAMU team, composed of Bentson and McCauley, dominated two stages of the steel showdown to place first in the combination rifle and pistol event with a score of 100 points and the pistol event also with a score of 100. The USAMU team competed as the only team with a perfect score in these events.

"I'm used to shooting an M-16 service rifle with iron sights, not a .22- caliber pistol with a scope," said McCauley. "As rifle shooters, we rarely do pistol training."

Although a training match, competition was significant because the USAMU team outshot a lot of professional teams, according to McCauley.

The USAMU service rifle shooters competed in San Antonio Sept. 12 to 14 in the Texas State Highpower Service Rifle Championships at Camp Bullis, a national trophy course of fire, where they dominated several events.



The championships consisted of one day of individual events and one day of team events.

In the individual events, Carl O. Dooley took first place in the 200-yard slow fire standing match, scoring 192 points with eight bull's eyes, and placed second in the individual aggregate match scoring 777 with 20 bull's eyes. John O. Chubb took second place in the 200-yard slow fire standing with a score of 197 points with eight bull's eyes.

Kenneth V. Gill placed first in the 200-yard sitting rapid fire match, scoring 200 points with 14 bull's eyes, and placed second overall with a match aggregate score of 791 with 33 bull's eyes. This closely followed the winner's score of 791 with 40 bull's eyes.

In the four-man team event, USAMU service rifle shooters Bentson, McCauley, Lewis A. Tippie and Scott A. Boyd took second place with a score of 1,966 points with 71 bull's eyes, only three points behind the winning team.

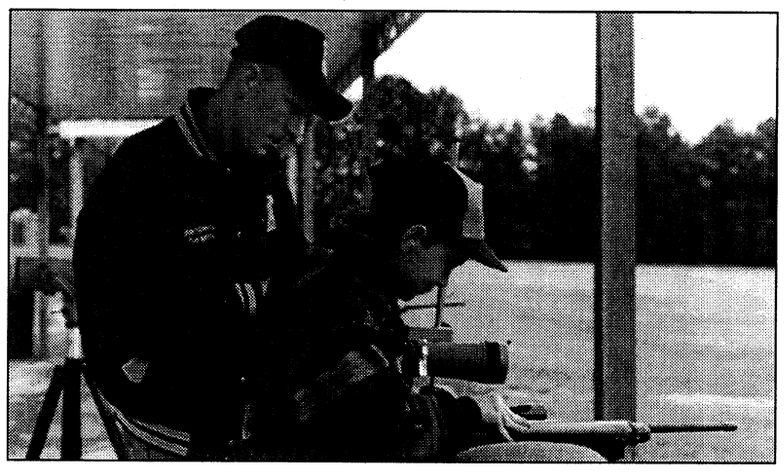
Outdoors women workshop set — The Department of Natural Resources, Wildlife Resources Division, offers a weekend Becoming an Outdoors Woman Program at the Eagle 4-H Center Saturday in Eatonton, Ga.

The program aims to teach beginners and those with outdoor experience a wide array of outdoor activities.

The workshop officials accept registration on a first-come, first-served basis. Contact the Wildlife Resources Division at (770) 918-6400 for more information.

Fort Benning BASS Club plans meeting — The Fort Benning Bass Anglers and Sportsman Society Club conducts its biweekly meetings the second and fourth Tuesday of each month at the Don C. Faith Middle School cafeteria at 7:30 p.m.



The club offers membership to active duty soldiers, retired military and Department of Defense civilian employees and their family members. For more information, call Steve Ward at 569-5705.

Post requires hunter safety course — Hunters born on or after Jan. 1, 1961, must attend an approved safety course if they wish to hunt in Georgia, including Fort Benning.

The Georgia Department of Natural Resources Hunter Safety Course takes place Oct. 19 in Infantry Hall, Classroom 4, from 8:30 a.m. to 3 p.m.

Students need to bring their Social Security numbers with them.

For more information, call Harley Chase at 545-4812.

Hunters zero weapons

USAMU Public Affairs Office

The U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit served as host for Hunter Zero Days Sept. 21 and Oct. 6 at English Range.

Hunter Zero Days prepared more than 1,000 registered hunters on post for the opening of deer season Oct. 26.

Members of the USAMU Service Rifle Team helped shooters zero their weapons by manning four shooting stations, each having 50-, 100-, 200- and 300-yard scoring targets.

Before zeroing the weapons, USAMU gunsmiths performed safety checks to ensure the safety of the weapons for firing.

"I checked to make sure the gun safeties worked, the bores were not obstructed and the shooters were using the right ammunition," said USAMU gunsmith Joey Leon. "Besides doing the safety checks, I helped the shooters adjust their scopes."

"We've been adjusting a lot of scopes to where the bullets hit in the appropriate place," said USAMU Service Rifle shooter John O. Chubb.

"One guy had real serious problems," USAMU Service Rifle shooter Lewis A. Tippie said. "His sight base was messed up, but we (Leon and I) got it fixed."

"We verify zeroes; we don't teach people how to shoot," said service rifle shooter and coach Richard M. Remily. "We assist people with their weapons. We help spot the rounds, and we can help people adjust their scopes or sights. We make sure the hunters will hit where their guns are pointed."

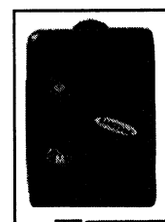
"If they're having problems with their weapons, we can answer their questions, and we can help them put on simple accessories like a scope," USAMU gunsmith Mark T. Palmer said. "The main thing we're concerned with is that they have a safe gun and the right ammunition."

Nantahala offers mountain bike trips

Nantahala Outdoor Center

WESSER, N.C. — For those interested in exploring the nooks and crannies of the western North Carolina mountains, the Nantahala Outdoor Center offers various mountain bike excursions throughout the fall.

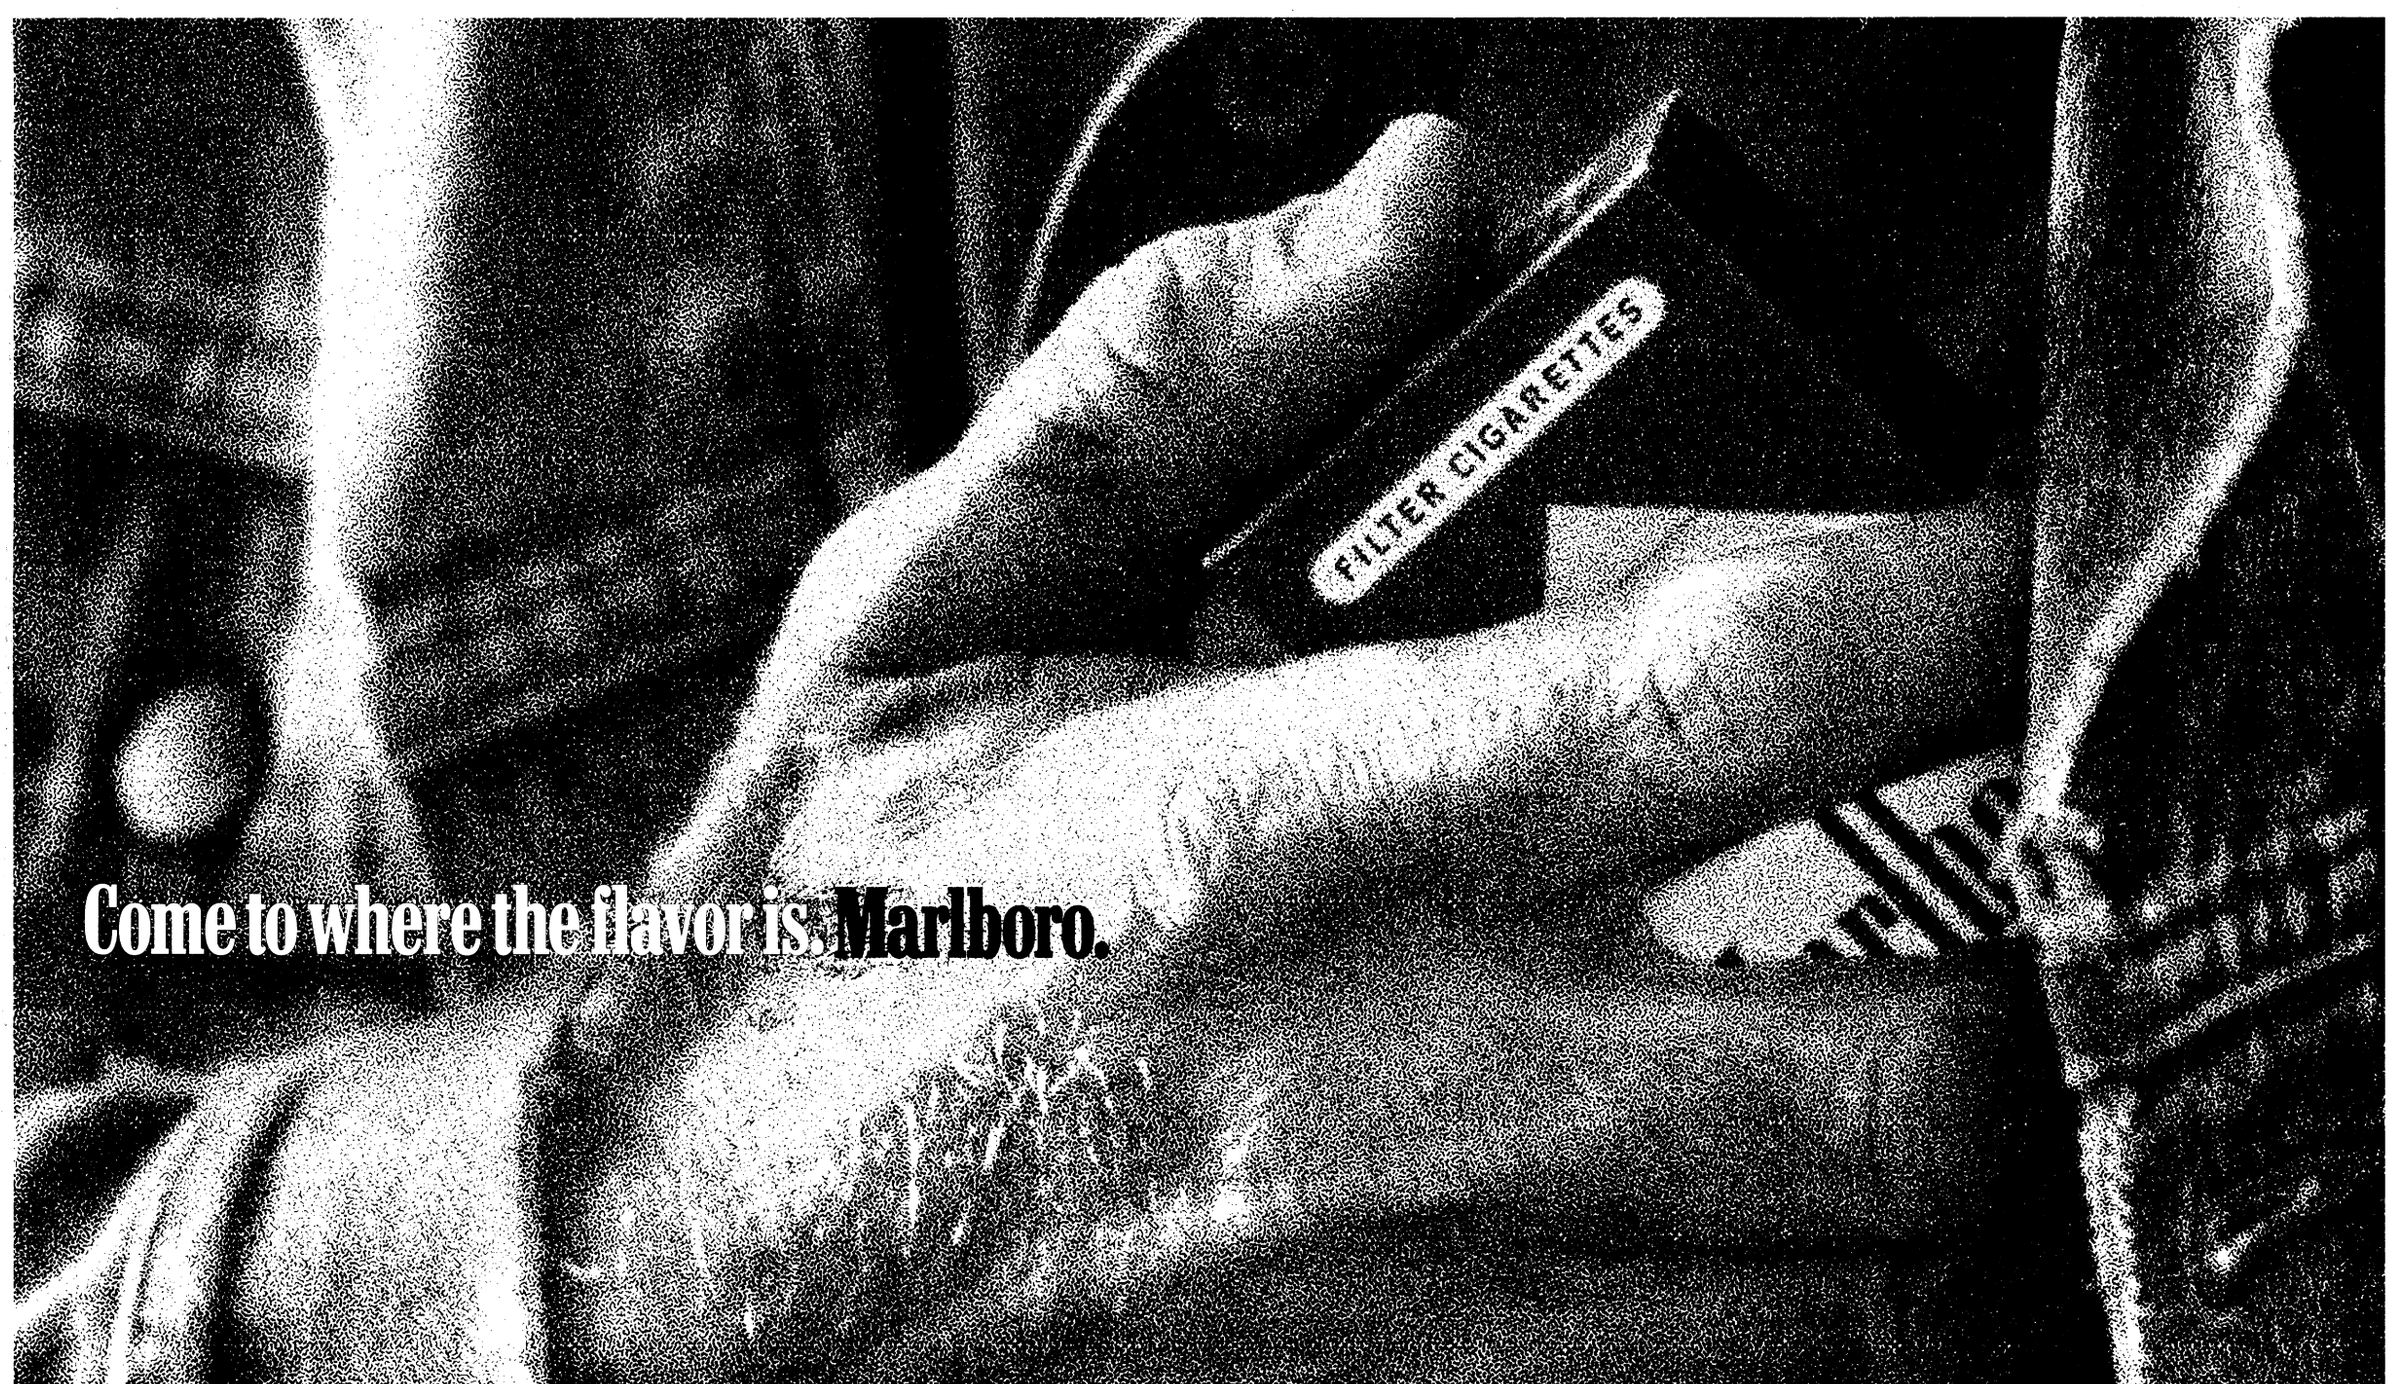
Refreshing and relatively solitary journeys on a mountain bike offer a truly unique perspective to see the changing display of fall color.



The third and final "Week of Trails" for '96 rides Saturday through Oct. 18. Join Jim Parham, author of "Off the Beaten Track" mountain bike guide series, for a week of riding in the North Carolina mountains. The event emphasizes fun and camaraderie. These five-day camps explore the unique riding opportunities of the Nantahala and Pisgah national forests. The $750 cost includes meals, shared lodging, mountain bike rentals and local transportation.

The center provides one-day samplers every Friday and Saturday throughout September and October for those leery of investing time and money in something of which they are unsure. Basic introduction and instruction to mountain biking start off the morning and local trail exploration completes the day. A mountain bike rental, lunch and transportation cost $70.

The NOC Bike Shop rents mountain bikes by the day for those who need only a set of wheels. A specialized rockhopper rents for $25; the full suspension specialized ground control rents for $30 and the test pilot bike rents for $35. Rental packages include helmets, bike racks and local information.



The Knob Scorcher, a cross-country race for all skill levels, runs Nov. 8 through 10. The final race of the the '96 Knob Scorcher series and a favorite among racers in the Southeast, the race course runs over mixed mountainous terrain in the Nantahala National Forest. First timers and noncompetitive classes receive free registration. Preregistration costs $25 and requires a current membership.

For more information about reservations, call (704) 488-6737, or send electronic mail to programs@noc.com.

NCOs ruin careers with drug usage

Office of the Staff Judge Advocate

In August and September, three Fort Benning noncommissioned officers ruined their careers and permanently affected their lives when they received federal convictions for wrongful use of cocaine.

Sgt. 1st Class Darrell K. Ruffin, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 29th Infantry Regiment, accused of cocaine use, received a guilty verdict Aug. 6. His sentence included forfeiture of $583 pay per month for two months, confinement for two months and a bad-conduct discharge.

Staff Sgt. Patrick B. Rolle, Company B, 1st Battalion (Airborne), 507th Infantry, 11th Infantry Regiment, accused of cocaine use, received a guilty verdict and sentencing of reduction to E-1 and a bad-conduct discharge Aug. 8.

The third noncommissioned officer, Staff Sgt. David L. Belcher, Bradley Fighting Vehicle New Equipment Training Team, 1st Bn., 29th Inf. Regt., also accused of cocaine use, received a guilty verdict Sept. 20. His sentence includes reduction to E-1, confinement for four months and a bad-conduct discharge. A review of the record of trial revealed all three soldiers previously appeared as excellent noncommissioned officers.

"The U.S. Army takes a hard-line attitude toward drug use by service members," said Capt. Signa Oliver, trial counsel, Staff Judge Advocate Office. "The message is simple — if you use drugs and get caught, you subject yourself to serious action."

Detecting drug users has become standard through the use of the command-directed random urinalysis. The Army routinely tests for opium, heroin, cocaine, amphetamine, lysergic acid diethylamide, marijuana, barbituric acid, methamphetamine and phencyclidine. However, the laboratory routinely tests for other controlled substances as well.

According to Army policy, every soldier undergoes random testing a minimum of two times each year.

"Habitual, experimental or even one-time drug use often results in the ruin of an otherwise stellar military career," Oliver said.

He also said soldiers also ought to know that the impact extends far beyond the court-martial conviction.

"Federal convictions for drug use devastates entire families," he said. "The loss of a career and benefits just begins the list of losses. The service member's potential for quality future employment is severely curtailed by the federal criminal conviction and the characterization of discharge the soldier receives as a result of the conviction.

"Loss of career, benefits, family security and sense of self-worth represent only a few of the reasons to 'just say no.' More than a catchy slogan, to military service members, avoiding drug use remains mandatory."

River walkin'

Four women walk along the Riverwalk Saturday during the River March, part of the activities planned for the Riverwalk dedication ceremony. The Riverwalk stretches from the National Infantry Museum to downtown Columbus. The 2.84 miles from Oxbow Meadows to the museum were completed this summer and paid for with the Army Communities of Excellence award money Fort Benning received for being the best military installation in the world.

Nation kicks off annual Red Ribbon campaign

Alcohol Drug Control Office, DCA

The Red Ribbon Campaign, conducted this year from Oct. 23 to 31, began in 1985 when federal agent Enrique Camarena underwent torture and murder by drug traffickers. The red ribbon became the symbol to reduce the demand for drugs and to stop the illegal use of drugs.

Columbus and Phenix City residents conduct a red ribbon, border-tying ceremony on the grand staircase of the Riverwalk Oct. 24 at 9 a.m. This event symbolizes the unified effort of the community in its effort to promote healthy lifestyles for all individuals.

"Georgia's Red Ribbon campaign encourages people to make a personal and public commitment for drug free living, promotes healthy lifestyle choices and supports ongoing community-wide prevention planning and efforts," said Sgt. 1st Class Darryel M. Johnson, education coordinator, Alcohol Drug Control Office, Directorate of Community Activities.

The campaign promotes healthy lifestyles for individuals, families and communities by preventing problems related to alcohol and other drug abuse. By encouraging 100 percent participation, organizers hope to involve every aspect of the community.

Wearing a red ribbon for one week a year only remains the first step in dealing with America's alcohol, tobacco and other drug-abuse challenges, Johnson said.

"The heart of America's drug problem lies within its own neighborhoods and communities," Johnson said. "Red Ribbon Week serves as a catalyst to bring attention to the problem, and provides a time for Americans to focus on drug prevention and education.

"Wearing Red Ribbon buttons, stickers and ribbons uses this focus to initiate year-long prevention planning in the nation's communities. Display Red Ribbon banners and bows to show America's support."

For educational information and prevention activities support, call Johnson or Tom Tennent, chief, Alcohol Drug Control Office, at 545-1138 or 545-4993.

Vietnam vets receive honors

By April N. Olsen
USAIC Public Affairs Office

The men of 2nd Battalion, 7th Cavalry, 1st Cavalry Division (Airmobile), conducted search-and-destroy missions for several days, some of them without sleeping for 72 hours, when on the afternoon of Nov. 17, 1965, they became involved in the bloodiest one-day battle of the Vietnam War.

Two retired soldiers living in the local area received awards Oct. 10 for their gallant efforts during that battle.

Retired Command Sgt. Maj. James A. Scott and retired Sgt. 1st Class Donald J. Slovak stood before a crowd gathered in Infantry Hall's Marshall Auditorium while receiving a Distinguished Service Cross and a Bronze Star, respectively, for the battle that occurred nearly 31 years ago.

Scott accepted his award, the nations second highest combat decoration, on behalf of his men.

"I just want to say this with sincerity," he said. "I accept this award on behalf of the men of the 2nd Battalion, 7th Cavalry."

Scott, the command sergeant major of the 2nd Battalion, remembers the scene as if it were yesterday.

The battalion of soldiers moved in a column through chest-high elephant grass for nearly three hours, exhausted after days of continuous missions with little sleep, when the reconnaissance squad lead by point man, then-sergeant Slovak, captured two North Vietnamese soldiers.

Unsure of the enemy situation in the area and believing the lead element had reached the landing zone where they were to be picked up and returned to their base camp, the battalion commander called the company commanders to the battalion position for further guidance.

The soldiers, resting and waiting for orders to move, had no idea they lay within small arms range of the enemy. The impending battle soon caused nearly 300 American casualties, of which some 160 died.

"At about 1300, the enemy struck with full force with about 600 men against our 400," he said.

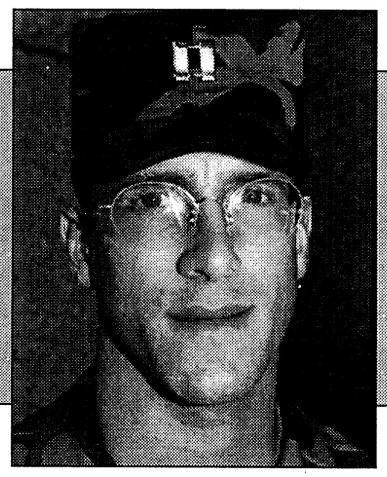
The platoon leaders and platoon sergeants organized a defense, Scott said, because the commanders remained at the battalion area.

"I just happened to be with our A Company when they struck," he said.

The enemy bombarded the battalion with heavy weapons fire and mortar attacks before moving in and severing the battalion's tactical integrity and lines of communication.

"The battle became hand to hand at point blank range," Scott said.

The soldiers slowly withdrew to the landing zone perimeter.



"If we could get the men there, we could form battle positions," he said.

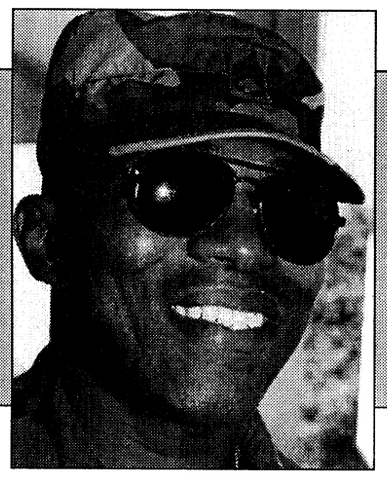
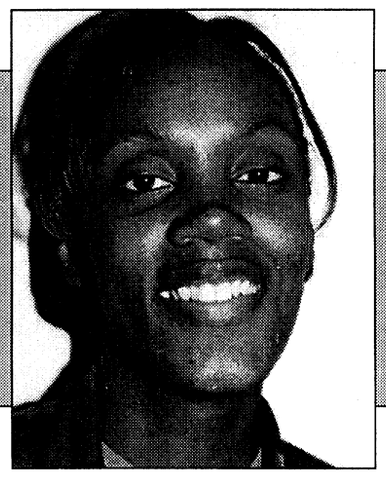
VARIOUS VOICES

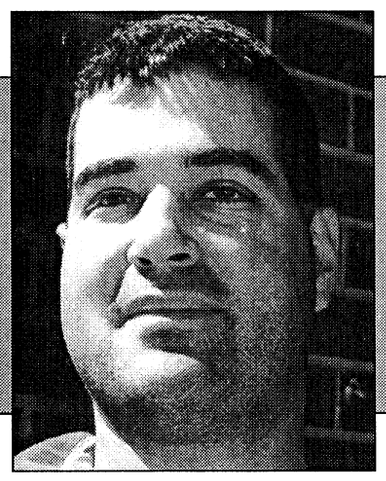


What role does the Association of the U.S. Army play in the Army?

Capt. Chad Reiman, Company B, 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment — "It's an association for people in the Army. They do different programs, dinners, picnics and parties for soldiers."



1st Lt. Jonathan Stone, 2nd Battalion, 70th Armor Regiment, Fort Riley, Kan. — "It lobbies Congress to push the needs of service members and their families. They also provide benefits such as discounted auto insurance."



Staff Sgt. Stanley Clay, Advanced Noncommissioned Officer Course — "They help us get our promotions, and they speak up for us. They make sure that we're not left out of the Army downsizing issue."

Spc. Sheren Broadhurst, Company A, 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment — "They fight in Congress for our raises and benefits. They try to make the Army a better environment for the soldiers."

Sgt. Valarie Claxton, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment — "They are instrumental in lobbying Congress on behalf of the military."

Sgt. David I. Nunnery, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor Regiment — "It is the organization that lobbies on behalf of the Army for pay raises and quality of life issues."

AUSA conducts 42nd annual meeting

Association of the United States Army

The Association of the U.S. Army officials expected more than 20,000 visitors to attend AUSA's 42nd annual meeting, which ended Wednesday in Washington, D.C.

More than 20 representatives from Fort Benning attended the meeting.

The largest land power forum in the world featured three days of professional education programs, including addresses by the secretary of the Army, the Army chief of staff and many of the Army's senior commanders and civilian leaders.

The meeting took place in both the Sheraton Washington and Omni Shoreham Hotels. Soldiers of all grades, active, reserve and retired joined with hundreds of civilians concerned about the state of the Army and national defense at the gathering.

Attendees viewed more than 500 military and defense industry displays in the exhibit halls and outdoor areas of the two hotels. These displays reflected the latest in military technology and hardware development.

Monday, Sgt. Maj. of the Army Gene C. McKinney conducted the annual Sergeants Major Conference. The 42nd annual meeting of the Association of the United States Army officially got underway with the opening ceremony at 9:30 a.m. The ceremony featured the Army color guard; music by the U.S. Army band Pershing's Own; "Soldiers Are Our Credentials," a short review of the Army today, as told by soldiers, video and music; and an address by Togo D. West Jr., secretary of the Army.

Other highlights Monday included the corporate member luncheon at which Gen. George A. Joulwan, Supreme Allied commander, Europe, spoke. Gen. John H. Tilelli Jr., commander in chief, U.N. Command, Combined Forces Command and commander, U.S. Forces Korea, spoke at the Reserve Officer Training Corps luncheon. Also the annual sergeants major luncheon featured Gen. Dennis J. Reimer, chief of staff, U.S. Army as the speaker.

The Institute of Land Warfare sponsored two contemporary military forums Monday. The first topic "Update on Reserve Component Issues," included a presentation by Gen. Ronald H. Griffith, vice chief of staff, U.S. Army. The second forum, "Update on U.S. Army in Bosnia," featured a speech by Gen. William W. Crouch, commander in chief, U.S. Army Europe and 7th Army.

Tuesday's events began with the Sergeant Major of the Army's conference with outstanding soldiers at 7 a.m. Next Gen. William W. Hartzog, commanding general, U.S. Army Training and Doctrine Command, conducted a TRADOC presentation. The annual Dwight David Eisenhower Luncheon, featured an address by Reimer. ILW's third contemporary military forum, "U.S. Military Activities in Latin America," featured a presentation by Gen. Wesley K. Clark, commander in chief, U.S. Southern Command. The U.S. Army Drill Team and the 82nd Airborne Chorus performed Tuesday.

Wednesday soldiers toured the U.S. Soldiers' and Airmen's home. The Army Civilian Employees Development Seminar covered the topic "The Army Civilian Force: Direct Support to Army Readiness." ILW conducted a presentation of three professional papers by their authors.

This year's Land Warfare Papers included "Nonlethal Technology and Fourth Epoch War," by Robert J. Bunker and T. Lindsay Moore; "U.S. Power Projection Capability and Rear Area Security," by Lt. Col. Richard F. Ballard; and "Creating Combat Power for the 21st Century," by Col. James M. Dubik.

The annual sustaining members luncheon was sponsored by the Norman R. Augustine. Susan Morrisey Livingstone conducted the Department of the Army Civilian Luncheon. Gen. Johnnie E. Wilson, commanding general, U.S. Army Materiel Command, spoke at the event. Also scheduled was a tour of Arlington National Cemetery.

The George Catlett Marshall Memorial reception and dinner brought the association's 42nd annual meeting to a close. U.S. Senator Sam Nunn received the George Catlett Marshall Medal, the association's highest honor. Pershing's Own provided entertainment for the black-tie affair.

All program sessions and exhibits and some social functions were opened to AUSA members, members and civilian employees of the U.S. Armed Forces, designated representatives of exhibitor and member companies, invited guests of the association and those who have an identifiable relationship with the U.S. Army and immediate family members of any of the above.

dial 545-boss

Dial 545-BOSS serves as the commander's action line for soldiers, family members and civilians to call when they have problems or complaints that can't be resolved elsewhere.

While the action line offers no substitute for the chain of command or for agencies established to provide assistance, it provides another means of communication between Fort Benning's community and commanders.

The Bayonet features some of the calls that may benefit other members of the Fort Benning community.

Caller: I want to know why speed bumps were not put in when the housing areas' roads were resurfaced? Drivers ignore the 15 mph speed limit and travel at least 30 mph in these areas.

Directorate of Public Works' response: Although speed bumps appear as a logical, low-cost way to end vehicle speeding, engineering studies show that they do not always work. Often, in fact, the bumps become less noticeable as speed increases. Furthermore, speed bumps present a definite and immediate hazard to some vehicles — bicycles, motorcycles, subcompact automobiles, as well as fire and emergency vehicles. Because they cause hazards to the unwary, a challenge to the daredevil and a disruption to the movement of both emergency and service vehicles, traffic engineers and safety experts do not recommend speed bumps as a standard traffic control device.

Caller: I tried to make a local phone call while at Sand Hill and a recording instructed me to put $2 into the phone's coin slot. This costs too much for a local call and most of the phone booths in this area are set up that way.

Army and Air Force Exchange Service's response: AAFES contacted an AT&T sales representative who advised that power surges cause computers to malfunction, causing the $2 recording to play. He said the company reprogrammed the computer.

Caller: The Military Clothing Sales Store carries most items necessary for Army personnel's uniforms but not for Air Force personnel's uniforms. This requires Air Force personnel to travel to Warner Robins Air Force Base or some other Air Force base to obtain these necessities. Since Air Force personnel work at this post, the Military Clothing Sales Store ought to carry all needed items for Air Force uniforms.

Army and Air Force Exchange Service's response: An AAFES representative explained that not enough Air Force personnel work at Fort Benning to require the Military Clothing Sales Store to carry a full line of Air Force items, but AAFES offers to get any item delivered within 24 to 48 hours from an Air Force installation as needed.

DSC: Heroes get awards

Though wounded in the arm and chest minutes after the battle began, Scott continued to organized his men into small fighting groups.

"I'd organize one group of four, put a Pfc. in charge and move on to another group," Scott said. "Myself and other leaders convinced the men they were fighting for survival," Scott said.

As stated in the award recommendation, Scott "... demonstrated fearless and forceful leadership by moving freely about the battle area inspiring the men around him and encouraging them to fight hard despite the overwhelming odds."

After the battle, one soldier said Scott was "fighting like a demon."

The soldiers continued to fight while forming the perimeter that would eventually allow them to repel the enemy enough to call in air support, Scott said.

"When the napalm started falling on the enemy, they broke and tried getting away." Scott said. "I knew then we had survived."

Scott was no stranger to combat after participating in the invasion of France at Omaha Beach and serving in the Korean War, but, said the soldiers of 2nd Battalion fought remarkably well.

"Even during World War II and Korea, I have never seen such bravery even though they were completely exhausted," Scott said.

Scott said he requested Slovak's unit accompany them on the mission that lead to the battle because the two men served together before.

"I knew how good he was," Scott said.

Retired Command Sgt. Maj. James A. Scott (middle) and retired Sgt. 1st Class Donald J. Slovack (right) receive the Distinguished Service Cross and the Bronze Star Medal "V" device, respectively.

"Sergeant Slovak said this: 'If I can be point man, I'll go,' " Scott said.

Slovak led the battalion column, capturing two North Vietnamese soldiers. Later in the battle, the recon squad leader rallied his scattered men and lead them fighting their way back to the newly formed defensive perimeter.

Scott returned to Vietnam for another tour in 1970 and later retired after more than 30 years in the Army. He serves as an honorary instructor for the U.S. Army Infantry School, providing briefings to the Infantry Officer Basic and Advanced Courses and the Primary Leadership Development Course.

Slovak also completed another tour of duty in Vietnam and later retired from the Army in 1975 but continues serving Fort Benning as a civilian working in the Directorate of Public Works.

As a result of the sacrifices made and the victories achieved in the Ia Drang Valley by men of the 7th Cavalry Regiment, the Vietnam War's sole and the Army's fifth ever division-level Presidential Unit Citation was awarded to the Ist Cavalry Division (Airmobile).

Editor's note: The book "We Were Soldiers Once ... And Young," by retired Lt. Gen. Harold G. Moore, a former battalion commander in the 7th Cavalry, and Joseph L. Galloway, a journalist on the ground during the fighting, chronicles the 1st and 2nd Battalions of the 7th Cavalry during their battles in the la Drang Valley.

Mourners remember chief nurse

By Lisa M. Hibbert

A memorial service for Martin Army Community Hospital's former chief of the Department of Nursing took place Oct. 11 on the hospital's parade field.

Col. Roslyn D. Booker died of a pulmonary embolism following surgery Oct. 9 at Dwight D. Eisenhower Army Medical Center, Fort Gordon, Ga. A graveside service and burial took place Wednesday at the Arlington National Cemetery in Washington, D.C.

At the service, Chaplain (Maj.) Andrew Bullard recalled some previous encounters with Booker.

"While Colonel Booker was in the hospital, I received a call from a chaplain in Washington, D.C.," Bullard said. "He called to tell me what a good job Colonel Booker thought I was doing. This woman was in the hospital, concerned about other people and not thinking about herself. Colonel Booker was always like that."

Master Sgt. Beverly Riley, noncommissioned officer in charge of Fort Benning's Equal Opportunity Office, agreed.

"I recently went to the hospital to have some tests done, and I ran into Colonel Booker while I was there," Riley said. "While we were talking, a lab technician told her there was a problem with her X-ray and it needed to be redone. She just said, 'OK,' and went on to offer me words of encouragement. She didn't focus on herself."

In his message, Bullard also told the group of mourners that Booker went to a better place.

"I stopped last week and talked with her and Sergeant Major (Henry) Holt (MACH's command sergeant major) in front of the hospital," Bullard said. "I asked her if she needed me to pray for her. She told me that it wouldn't be necessary because she had connections. I was so glad to hear that she had made spiritual preparations for her life."

Born Sept. 2, 1943, in Galveston, Texas, Booker attended Prairie View A&M University and Texas Woman's University where she earned her bachelor of science degree and a master's degree in nursing, respectively.

In 1973, Booker joined the staff at St. Thomas University, School of Nursing, in Houston, Texas, where she served as an assistant professor, specializing in mental and psychological nursing.

She remained with the university until, at age 38, "she saw the light and joined the Army," said Col. Everett Newcomb, commander of the hospital.

Booker began her military career February 17, 1981, when she received her commission as a major in the nursing corps. Her military awards include the Meritorious Service Medal with three oak leaf clusters, the Army Commendation Medal with two oak leaf clusters.

A member of the American Nurse's Association, Sigma Theta Tau Honor Society of Nursing and Chi Eta Phi Sorority, Booker attended the Fourth Street Baptist Church in Columbus and actively participated in the Fort Benning community, where she once spoke at a Women's History Month celebration program.

Her survivors include a daughter, Hazel Booker of Columbus; a son, Adrian Booker of Texas; and a brother, U.S. Air Force Chief Master Sgt. William Smith of Texas.

As a lasting tribute, the hospital plans to name a future women's health clinic the Col. Roslyn D. Booker Clinic. The clinic will include obstetrics and gynecology services and labor and delivery and will be located on the third floor of the hospital.

Army Family Team Building

Training provided by instructors in the Army Family Team Building Program teaches spouses to prepare for deployments and other day-to-day challenges that exist within the Army community.

AFTB instructors volunteer and receive special training, a specific tailored job description and credit for their volunteer hours.

Through AFTB training, spouses get the tools needed to function at their highest level in any military life situation with minimal outside support.

This training improves personal and family readiness and, overall, strengthens the quality of life within Army families.

AFTB training consists of the following three levels:

•Level I — Beginners introduction to military lifestyles, Family Unit Network Center Building 359;

•Level II — Intermediate military lifestyles, leadership training, AFTB Building, Building 2624, Soldiers' Plaza; and •Level III — Advanced training, AFTB Building, Building 2624, Soldiers' Plaza.

Registration begins five minutes before class. For information, contact AFTB's staff at 545-5377. .

Lecturer to speak on marketing for second careers

Army Career and Alumni Program

A Washington lecturer and author on career transition from military to civilian employment plans to talk to officers, senior noncommissioned officers and spouses on "Marketing Yourself for a Second Career" Dec. 10 in Infantry Hall, Classroom 30, from 9 to 11 a.m.

Retired Col. Jerry Crews, deputy director of the Officer Placement Service for The Retired Officers Association, travels nationwide addressing military audiences composed of people nearing retirement, involuntarily separation or opting to leave military service.

In his free, two-hour presentation, Crews plans to introduce the audience to the realities of the competition in the civilian job market and the perceptions civilian employers have of military personnel.

He also plans to speak on how to plan for the job search; give tips for strengthening the resume (to include how employers read a resume); networking; preparing for and conducting a successful interview; salary and benefit packages; and rejection.

TROA sponsors these lectures at military installations throughout the United States and Europe.

For additional information, call Mary Allen, Army Career and Alumni Program, at 545-4892 or 545-7020.

VIRTUAL REALITY

Battle lab conducts demonstration

By Brian R. Voller
Bayonet staff writer

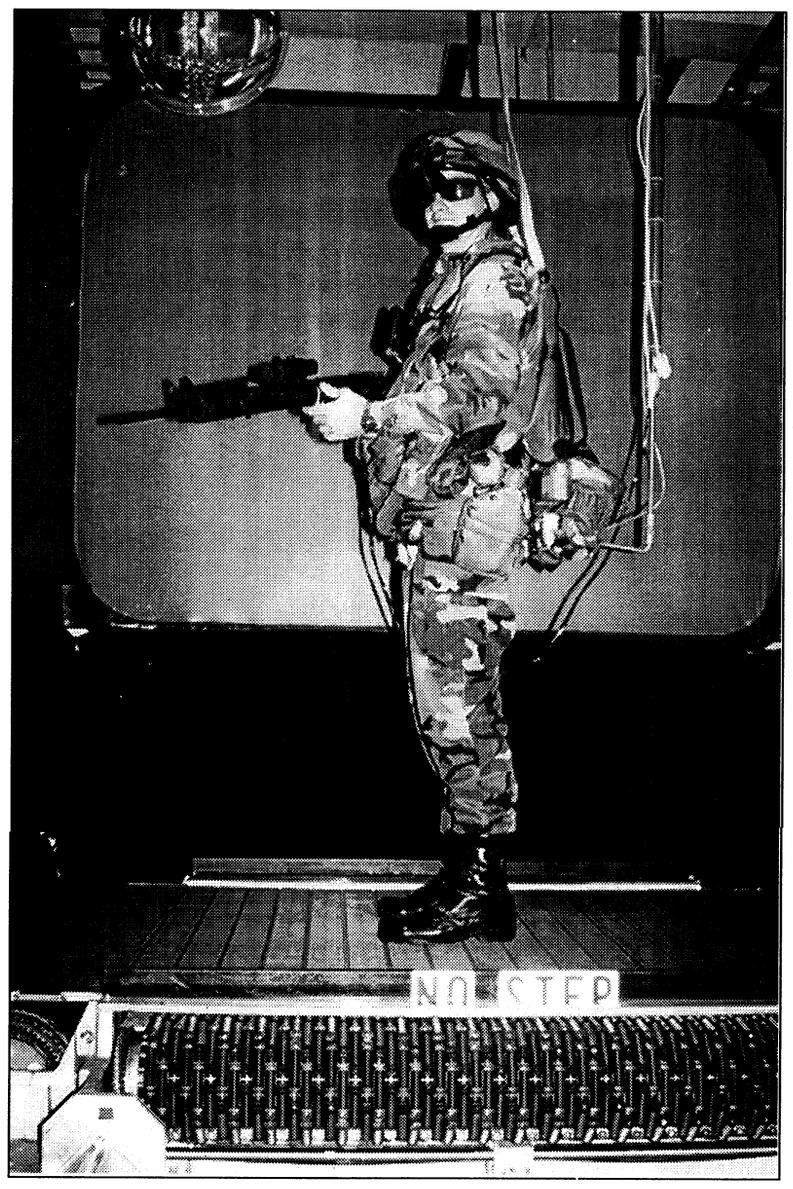
Technology of the Army's future received attention at the annual Association of the U.S. Army convention Monday through Wednesday as part of a Dismounted Battlespace Battle Lab land warrior test bed demonstration.

Soldiers from Company B, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment, the battle lab and members of several computer corporations, used computers and virtual reality technology to demonstrate how some of the land warrior technology works to an audience in Washington, D.C.

According to Bill Potter, operations manager, Land Warrior Test Bed, the demonstration used a live video feed to send the Fort Benning demonstration to Army Experiment III, a special presentation at the AUSA conference.

"During the live video, we placed a real soldier on an omni-directional treadmill (the treadmill allows the soldier to move in any direction while still staying centered on the treadmill)," Potter said. "The soldier is inserted into a virtual environment as a fire team leader whose mission is to secure the buildings in a detailed virtual replication of the McKenna MOUT (military operations in urban terrain) site, to find and kill an enemy sniper in the third story window of one of the buildings and to use the laser range finder to provide artillery information to the higher headquarters."

Potter said the soldier placed on the treadmill played the fire team leader in the virtual environment, while soldiers on several other computers operated the additional soldiers in the fire team and an enemy sniper located inside one of the buildings.



The live video also provided a showcase for the capabilities of the technology used in the land warrior system, Potter said.

"Certain elements or capabilities of the land warrior equipment were also demonstrated by the video feed," Potter said. "Specifically (this included) the individual heads-up display, which allows the soldier on the treadmill to utilize the weapon mounted miniature video camera to look around corners without exposing himself to enemy fire."

The demonstration also focused on an on-board computer radio signal that allows the soldier to communicate with his higher headquarters and the on-weapon mounted laser range finding device contained on the weapon that allows the soldier to confirm and reconfirm artillery fire missions that are in progress around him.

The live video demonstration conducted by Fort Benning served as only one part of several different demonstrations being conducted on other installations around the Army. Potter said the combination of the different live video feeds contributed to a complete 20-minute narrative the spectators at the AUSA conference could watch.

Potter said the demonstration showcased the research and development the Army currently participates in. He said the Army Experiment III demonstrates possible future applications of the technology, but he stressed most of the technology remains in the early stages of development.

Leaders participate in Janus Center simulation

By Sang-Woo Pak
11th Infantry Regiment

Leaders of the 11th Infantry Regiment watched as enemy personnel carriers rolled into view.

"Warlord Six, this is Eagle Six. Four BMPs (Russian personnel carriers) have entered our sector; permission to engage."

"Eagle Six, this is Warlord Six. Engage."

With that command, imaginary 11th Infantry Regiment soldiers engaged and quickly destroyed the enemy vehicles.

This virtual battle took place not in the field, but at the Fort Benning Janus Center. Janus, a computer-driven, combat-simulation system provides battle-focus tactics training.

The simulated battle served as the capstone officer development program event for the leaders of the 11th Infantry Regiment. Maj. Kevin Hackney, the Regimental Operations and Training officer, oversaw the execution of this event.

"The exercise was the culmination of over a year of OPDs," Hackney said.

According to Hackney, preparations for this culminating event began nearly a year ago with the development of the OPD goals and organization.

The regiment, which includes instructors for Infantry Officer Basic Course, Infantry Officer Advance Course, Officer Candidate School and Airborne School, applied the same doctrine and techniques they teach to their students during the OPD sessions. All leaders participated in the Janus simulation.

The year-long series of OPDs was devised under the guidance of Col. John Lewis, 11th Infantry Regiment commander.

"(The purpose of the OPD was) to train our leadership so that they are proficient in war-fighting skills when they return to (table of organization and equipment) units," Lewis said. "In this school environment, we wanted to focus on the professional development of our soldiers and leaders where they are exposed to real-world missions."

The leadership approached the OPD as an actual field training event. After the creation of the scenario, the regimental officers conducted a mission analysis. The regiment and battalions then developed operations orders, which were amended as fragmentary orders took place.

To ensure the feasibility of the plan, the officers then conducted a studied rock drill and a tactical exercise without troops on the actual ground of the upcoming battle. After final modifications to the plan, the regiment was ready to fight the battle.

"By having the battalions come in and work with Janus, we have been able to take the learning process to its logical conclusion," Hackney said. "We reaped the benefits of conducting the written portion of the orders exercise. With Janus, we are able to simulate the battle to see how good our plans were."

Through the Janus' computer simulation, unit leaders enhance command and staff procedures and exercise decision-making processes. Janus allows leaders to evaluate their tactical standard operating procedures and observe and analyze the effects of battlefield decisions before going to the field. Janus allows for maneuvering, nuclear biological chemicals effects, army aviation, engineer, threat operations, tactical air, air assault and land and air transportation.

"Janus does not replace going to the field, but it allows leaders to work out coordination issues before expending troop time and resources in an actual field exercise," said Fort Benning Janus site manager George Mabry.

Janus helps course instructors for Advanced Noncommissioned Officer Course, OCS, IOBC and IOAC instruct their students in the tactics and doctrine of the combined arms fight. Instead of critiquing an order in the classroom environment, the students evaluate the plan through a Janus simulation. During the after-action review, the instructor illustrates the tactical and doctrinal points the students applied well and those that require further clarification.

The Fort Benning Janus center personnel operate the computer. The unit leader communicates via radio with other leaders and tells the computer operator where he wants his forces to go and how he wants them employed. The computer operator in turn informs the leader of the simulation's happenings.

Mabry said computer operators do not give the tactical or doctrinal recommendation. The operators minimize train-up time for the units and keep the leaders focused on making decisions.

"Janus simulation is only a simulation, not reality," Mabry said. "However, with the Army facing ever diminishing resources and funding, many units will discover Janus to be an invaluable training tool."

IOBC students complete final exercise

By Brian Strider
Infantry Officer Basic Course

After 16 weeks of learning the intricacies of how to become platoon leaders, members of Company B, 2nd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment, put all of their training to the test with one final exercise from Sept. 23 to 26.

This exercise proved much different than others conducted during the Infantry Officer Basic Course because it involved every aspect of training learned during the cycle, and it also consisted of four days of continuous operations with a limited amount of sleep for the soldiers involved.

The week's training consisted of seven missions, including a deliberate attack, three air assaults, a movement to contact and an ambush. It culminated with one final deliberate attack conducted at the McKenna Military Operations on Urbanized Terrain site.

This exercise began with an air assault from Boneyard Pickup Zone and concluded with an air-mobile movement back into garrison on UH-60 Blackhawks.

"Our culmination exercise is a great opportunity to experience how operations are conducted using the combined arms aspect of the Army," said 2nd Lt. Shaun Streator. "It lets us see how quickly the infantry can react to conflicts on the ground."

"Our culmination exercise is a great opportunity to experience how operations are conducted using the combined arms aspect of the Army."

— 2nd Lt. Shaun Streator
Company B, 2nd Battalion,
11th Infantry Regiment

During the cycle, lieutenants received instruction on how to operate mainly as part of a platoon-sized element while conducting training as part of a company-sized element.

"A lot more thought and coordination has to go into everything you plan," said 2nd Lt. Chet Storrs. "You're not only thinking about your mission, you have to know what's going on with all of the other platoons operating in your area as well."

Upon completion of the first mission, a deliberate attack, the students realized how chaotic the objective becomes when people become injured and the company takes casualties.

An opposing force positioned itself for the mission, and this made for an even more difficult situation, requiring the leaders not only to react to friendly casualties, but to decide on how to deal with enemy casualties and enemy prisoners of war.

With most of the company's members operating on less than five hours of sleep, they launched an attack on the city at the McKenna MOUT site as their final mission. UH-60s landed at Selby Pickup Zone and carried the entire company to a location approximately 2,000 meters from the objective. Once all rehearsals and final preparations concluded, the company set up in "hide sites" until the attack time came.

At the first sign of light, the leaders prepared the objective for attack by calling in artillery fire on the entire area. Once the artillery ceased, the attack began. All the platoons worked together to clear the entire city. After 30 minutes, and numerous casualties, the students gained control of the city.

"This was by far the most exciting part of the entire 16 weeks of training," said 2nd Lt. Bill Sabbagh. "Conducting missions in the woods all the time can become monotonous, and this is a good change for us."

"It is a totally different game when your men are fatigued," said 2nd Lt. John Schwemmer, the platoon leader in charge of 4th Platoon during the attack. "You have to be very clear in how you relay information to them when they are in that condition. It was definitely a leadership challenge."

IOBC ended for these new lieutenants Oct. 4, and they moved on to other schools or other assignments.

ITB soldiers battle bad weather during field training exercise

By Roger F. Cavazos
1st Battalion, 19th Infantry Regt., ITB

Soldiers in Company A, 1st Battalion, 19th Infantry Regiment, Infantry Training Brigade, conducted field training exercise Sept. 30 to Oct. 4, culminating their one station unit training. The exercise itself, the terrain and the weather proved the soldiers' three biggest challenges.

According to Lt. Col. Mark Stevens, 1st Bn., 19th Inf. Regt., ITB, commander, the exercise allows drill sergeants to evaluate individual soldier proficiency in 28 combat-critical tasks.

This particular initial entry exercise provided training for light infantrymen (11B), or "groundpounders," anti-tank infantrymen (11H) specially trained to use the tube-launched, optically tracked, wire-guided missile to destroy tanks and other armored vehicles; and mortarmen (11C) trained in mortar operations to provide indirect fire support.

Instructors looked far and wide to find the right terrain to support and integrate the training to increase realism.

The Bush Hill area, some 30 kilometers from Sand Hill, includes a dirt road, which rapidly turns into slogging mud in the constant rain, providing the ideal infantry terrain for integrating all the different MOSs.

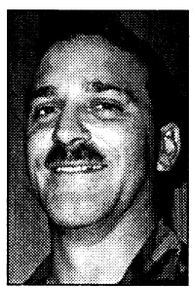
Some infantrymen fired at armored vehicles, destroying tanks and forcing soldiers to dismount their vehicles, while other infantrymen conducted operations to destroy the dismounted soldiers. Still other infantrymen used their skills to provide support crucial to the dismounted infantry movement to contact.

Lieutenants from the Infantry Officer Basic Course, 2nd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment, volunteered as squad leaders. The lieutenants allowed drill sergeants to focus on evaluating the proficiency of trainees.

The weather remained an uncontrollable factor. The rain started Sept. 29 and continued until the end of the exercise.

First Sgt. Emory Young said he attributed the mission's success to the drill sergeants' and trainees' positive attitudes despite the inclement conditions.

"Everybody stayed motivated and didn't let the weather get them down," he said.



Staff Sgt. George A. Parker, recognized as the drill sergeant of the cycle, said it was easy to motivate the troops by setting the example and "just making the training happen" with a win-win philosophy.

"As long as you kept a good attitude as a drill sergeant, your trainees kept a positive attitude and were motivated," he said.

Strong command presence, such as visits by 19th Inf. Regt. command sergeant major, Command Sgt. Maj. George Brown, and the ITB commander, Col. Johnny W. Brooks, also helped keep morale high.

Company A soldiers graduated from one station unit training Oct. 10 and joined Army units worldwide.

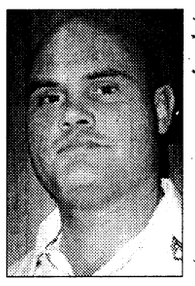
Army cook leads culinary team to second-place finish



3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment

A soldier from Fort Benning helped the military's culinary arts team reach a near victory at this year's Culinary Olympics in Germany.

During the competition from Aug. 19 to Sept. 14, Staff Sgt. David C. Russ, assistant dining facility manager, 3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment, led the U.S. Army Culinary Arts Olympic Team to a second-place finish as the team's captain.

A member of the team since 1989, Russ participated in numerous culinary competitions in the past.

"Each Olympic competition is different," Russ said. "They're a good way to get to know other armies and to become familiar with their thoughts on food service."

Staff Sgt. David C. Russ led the U.S. Army Culinary Arts Olympic Team.

The U.S. Army Culinary Arts Olympic Team excelled throughout the competition by winning 16 Gold, 14 Silver and five Bronze medals, according to 1st Lt. Thomas Goldner, executive officer, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 3rd Bn., 75th Ranger Regt.

Russ personally contributed one Gold medal and one Silver medal to the team's collection of awards.

"Russ truly is a specially selected and well trained soldier, as demonstrated by his earning of 30 Gold, 22 Silver and 14 Bronze medals in national and international competitions," Goldner said.

Pilot receives plaque

By Andrew Sickler
Directorate of Logistics

A pilot with the Aviation Maintenance Division of the Directorate of Logistics received the Commanding General's Award of Merit and Safety plaque Sept. 17.

David W. Jacob, a maintenance supervisor and flight test pilot, piloted an Army aircraft for 3,500 hours without experiencing a Class A, B, or C accident as defined by Army Regulation 385-40.

Kennard Strumpler, chief, Maintenance Division, DOL, presented the award at the Aircraft Branch, Shop 4, Building 2446.

The award's narrative reads, "For outstanding accomplishment of 3,500 hours of accident and incident free flying during the period of July 1, 1972, through March 1, 1996. Your concern for the inherent hazards involved in aviation, your flight experience, and your safety consciousness mark you for special recognition of your superb accomplishments within the U.S. Army flight community. Your continued dedication to flight safety reflects great merit on you and the military service."

4-H...More Than You Ever Imagined

Every child's future isn't as rosy as this drawing.
It's often easier for kids to join a gang, buy drugs, and skip school than to find a way in their community to be useful and helpful to others. ▪ Early adolescence, ages 10-14, is when kids make many lifestyle choices. . .they begin to engage in risky behaviors. . .they develop lifelong learning, exercise and eating habits. Without a valued, constructive group and environment, many kids will make the easy choice, the wrong choice. ▪ 4-H is engaging the voices and actions of youth in solving issues critical to their lives and communities. . .issues like violence, drugs, jobs, the environment. . .the same issues that you are concerned about. ▪ Wherever you live, 4-H is there supporting our children, one child at a time.

Better Opportunities for Single Soldiers

MWR offers leisure activities

By Michael T. James
Better Opportunities for Single Soldiers

What do you do when the work day ends? How do you spend your valuable time? What can you do to make the most of that time?

Single soldiers, for the most part seem to possess more spare time than any one else in the Army. Their time is not in great demand for a child, spouse or family. So where does all that free time go and how can it be better spent?

The Fort Benning Morale, Welfare and Recreation team provides an ample number of activities and services. You can try your hand at a new hobby like arts and crafts, fix car problems at the auto craft shop or play a few notes on guitar at one of the recreation centers. All of these and more are available for you to take full advantage of and enjoy. If you do not have the patience for a hobby then maybe sports are more your thing.

The Fort Benning Fitness centers offer a wide variety of sporting interest for everyone. Basketball, racquetball, volleyball, weightlifting and aerobics can keep you looking and feeling great. If that becomes too physically demanding, try something less demanding.

Bowling might just be right up your "alley." The bowling centers are the most widely used of all the services offered, and it only takes up a little of your "spare" time.

The Outdoor Recreation Center is a great place to rent outdoor equipment and obtain a fishing or hunting license. Rent a canoe or boat for a relaxing time with friends or family at Uchee Creek. Uchee Creek has cabins available for rent so you can relax in total comfort.

There are so many things to do there is not time to waste. Call for reservations or your Better Opportunities for Single Soldiers office for events and activities.

Call Carlson Wagonlit Travel at 687-2679 for all airline tickets and reservations.

va q&a

Department of Veterans Affairs

Q: I am insured under Veterans Mortgage Life Insurance. At what age will my coverage end?

A: Regulations mandate that coverage ceases when you reach age 70.

Q: May a veteran obtain a VA loan for the purchase of property in a foreign country if the veteran has permanently moved overseas?

A: No. VA-guaranteed loans may only be approved for property located in the United States, but that does include property in U.S. territories and possessions.

Q: I received a "certificate of eligibility" for a VA home loan. Does this mean that I have a guarantee of approval?

A: No. While VA guarantees part of a home loan, the veteran must still find a willing private lender who is required to take into consideration the applicant's credit history and income.

Q: Does VA's guarantee on a property mean the government is satisfied the house is structurally sound? We have found cracks in the foundation of the older home we bought last year and are concerned this could lead to future problems.

A: No. VA's guarantee of the home loan is based on an appraisal, but the appraiser's job is not the same as a home inspector. VA affixes warning statements to this effect on the VA "certificate of reasonable value."

In new construction loans, VA inspectors ensure the construction conforms to the contract specifications.

Home purchasers should make their own arrangements for professional structural inspection if desired.

Q: I am the widow of a Vietnam veteran who is buried in a VA national cemetery in our hometown. I expect our family will remain here for sometime, and I would like to be buried next to my husband when I die. However, I was never in the military.

A: Although gravesites in national cemeteries cannot be reserved, spouses and minor children of eligible veterans may be buried in a national cemetery.

If a surviving spouse of an eligible veteran marries a non-veteran, she becomes ineligible. If, however, this remarriage is terminated by death or divorce of the nonveteran, the spouse regains eligibility for burial in a national cemetery.

Editor's note: If you have a question regarding your VA benefits, call the VA regional office at (800) 827-1000.

Columbus Riverwalk

By Lori Egan
Bayonet staff writer

"Twelve miles of unity" describes the Riverwalk, according to Mickey Davis, Long Beach City College women's athletic director, Long Beach, Calif. Davis read these words Saturday from a poem she wrote for the dedication of the Riverwalk in Columbus.

Maj. Gen. Carl F. Ernst, post commanding general, echoed that sentiment.

"The Riverwalk has brought an awareness of the bonding, the joining of the communities," Ernst said. "The Riverwalk joins Fort Benning with Columbus and Phenix City ... They're one community now."

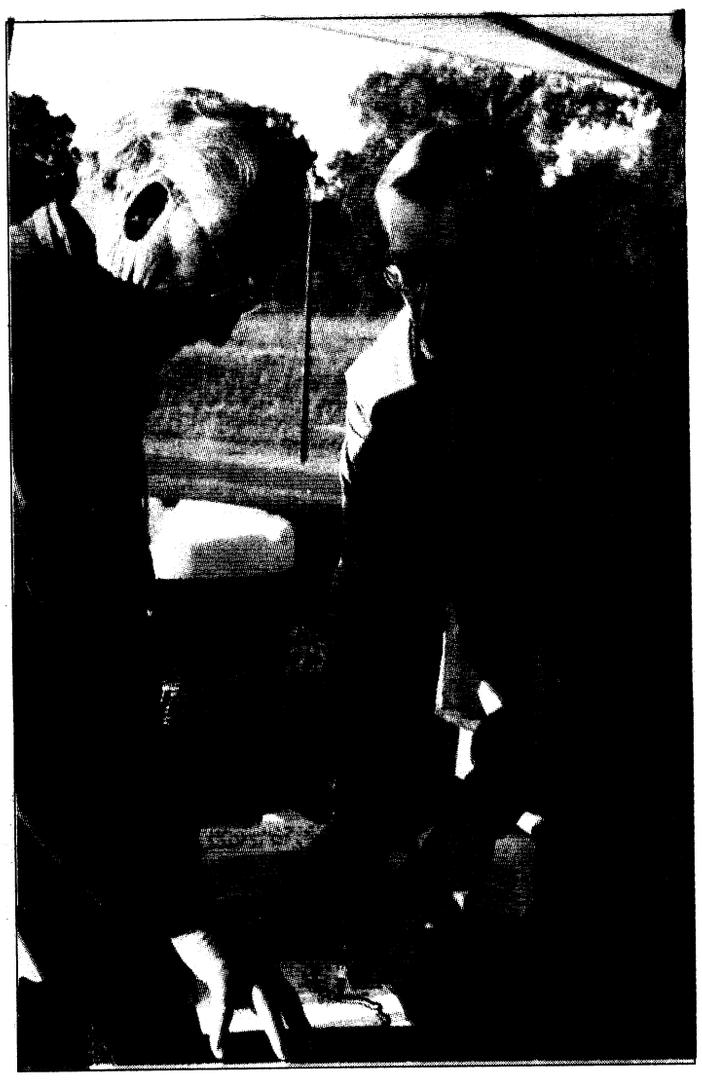
"The Riverwalk enhances the quality of life for all those who come to Columbus," said Billy Turner, president of Columbus Water Works and former Columbus mayor.

"Columbus is now not just a great place to visit, but a better place to live," said Nancy Skaife, Columbus resident. "The Riverwalk is a great place for grandmas and grandkids."

Not just grandmothers and grandchildren enjoyed the Riverwalk. People from as far away as Oregon and New York helped celebrate the Riverwalk's grand opening by walking, biking and in-line skating in the River March, which started at Fort Benning's Information Center.and ended at the Riverwalk Pavilion behind the Iron Works Trade Center.

Jim Browne from Eugene, Ore., rode his bike along the Riverwalk.

"I was visiting Fort Benning because I have sons in the military," he said. "When I found out about the Riverwalk's grand opening, I wanted to be part of it, to be part of the history of the Riverwalk."



Although the dedication ceremony took place Saturday and many Fort Benning and Columbus residents walked along the trail for the first time, Susan Dickson, a Columbus resident, said she started walking her English cocker spaniel, Toby, along the Riverwalk in January.

"It's a beautiful place to spend Sunday mornings, very peaceful," she said.

Volunteers helped to contribute to the overall success of the dedication ceremony. Volunteers from the Columbus Water Works gave away water bottles, cotton candy and popcorn and the Boy Scouts from Troop 54 gave bird feeders made out of pine cones, peanut butter and bird seed to the river marchers to hang along the tree-lined trail.

"It was well organized and the check points operated well," Skaife said. "In fact, everything went so smoothly that my husband and I overestimated the time I would need to complete the walk."

The River March and Riverwalk dedication ceremony started clean water week. It ends Saturday with "Help the Hooch," a day dedicated to cleaning up the Chattahoochee River.

Brad Castleberry, Community Relations officer, shows Jim Browne the Riverwalk route.

Workshops offer intervention

By Lisa M. Hibbert
Bayonet staff writer

Fourteen members of the Fort Benning and the Columbus communities recently received certification to conduct two-day suicide intervention workshops.

Col. Jeanne M. Picariello, commandant, U.S. Army Physical Fitness School, and retired Lt. Col. Bruce Murphy of Vanderbilt University, Nashville, Tenn. certified the trainers over a five-day period at the Henry A. Caro Noncommissioned Officers Academy.

"Normally we conduct a two-day workshop that teaches leaders, both NCOs and officers, how to identify and help persons at risk for suicide," Murphy said. "What we're doing now is certifying people to conduct these workshops. This marks the first time this training occurred at Fort Benning."

The training will provide Fort Benning with a cadre of instructors, trained to conduct the two-day suicide intervention course, Murphy said. Because of the subject matter, the class size has remained small, with ratios of no larger than 15 students to one instructor. In the past, with only two certified trainers (Picariello and Murphy) only 30 leaders could attend the workshop at a time.

"Now we are getting a cadre of certified trainers to expand upon the training for this post so that we may work more effectively," Picariello said.

Picariello and Murphy certified the trainers in the LivingWorks system of suicide intervention. The LivingWorks system, developed at the University of Calgary in Alberta, Canada, by four psychologists, has trained more than 50,000 professionals in Canada and the United States.

"They are considered the world's leader in the field of suicide intervention," Picariello said.

Dr. Bill Lang, one of the four pioneers of LivingWorks, assisted with the post's training program since one of the original four designers always attends to ensure the core principles remain intact.

"The Canadians lead the way in suicide intervention," Picariello said. "That's why we implemented the LivingWorks system over the years for the Army."

Picariello and Murphy received their LivingWorks certification in Europe in 1989. Since then, the two have conducted the two-day workshop for more than 2,000 leaders Armywide, to include during Desert Storm and recent deployments.

The new trainers learned how to conduct workshops through role-playing, as well as with slides and handouts.

"I really liked doing the role-playing," said Chaplain (Maj.) Robert Thompson. "You can learn some things in theory; but, until you actually do them, you can't really understand."

Through role-playing, class participants, broken down into small groups, learned how best to help a suicidal person. Each participant played the role of a suicidal person as others practiced different approaches to use to help that person.

The class not only included Fort Benning leaders but also professionals from the Columbus community because of the large number of Army members they deal with, Picariello said.

Annette Berry of the Columbus Crisis Hotline (Contact) and John Adams of the Pastoral Institute also attended the course.

"We deal with a lot of spouses from the Fort Benning area," Berry said. "They're new in town; and, they're away from their families, so we try to be there for them. Some suicide prevention courses focus on where to refer people, but this course provided training on what you, as an individual, can do to save a life. It's kind of like the cardiopulmonary resuscitation course for suicide."

Fort Benning's new trainers will now conduct suicide intervention workshops for their units or activities and be active members of the post's Suicide Prevention Task Force. The program will also be exported to other Army installations as a model for risk management.

Post plans for an evening filled with Tricks and Treats

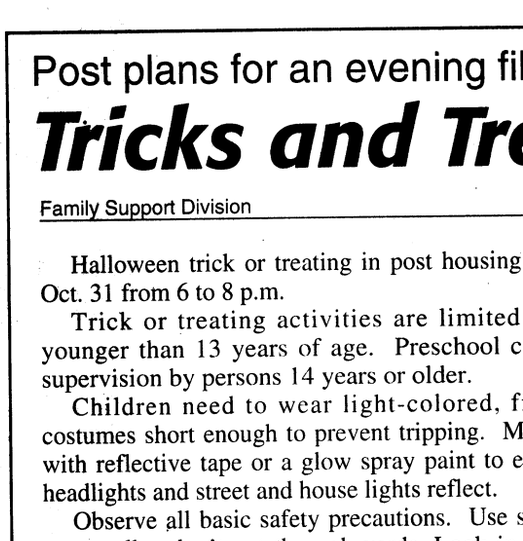
Family Support Division



Halloween trick or treating in post housing areas occurs Oct. 31 from 6 to 8 p.m.

Trick or treating activities are limited to children younger than 13 years of age. Preschool children need supervision by persons 14 years or older.

Children need to wear light-colored, fire-resistant costumes short enough to prevent tripping. Mark costumes with reflective tape or a glow spray paint to ensure vehicle headlights and street and house lights reflect.

Observe all basic safety precautions. Use sidewalks and crosswalks; don't cut through yards. Look in all directions before walking across the the street. Pet owners need to take measures to prevent pets from being a nuisance or a menace to children. Caution children about the wrongs of vandalism and causing damage to the property of others.

Children need to carry flashlights and follow every safety precaution when crossing streets. Motorists should remain alert during trick or treating time. Parents need to inspect all treats before their children eat them. Give your child a full meal before he or she goes trick or treating.

Haunted House to benefit Santa's Castle — The 11th Infantry Regiment plans to sponsor a Haunted House, located in Building 2409, on 82nd Airborne Division Road by Lawson Airfield.

The house opens today and Saturday from 6 to 10 p.m., Monday through Thursday from 6 to 9 p.m., Oct. 25 and 26 from 6 to 10 p.m. and Oct. 31 from 6 p.m. to 9 p.m. Admission costs $5 per family or a new toy.

Program manager advises abuse victims to develop safety plans

Family Advocacy Program

Many people believe leaving an abusive or violent spouse is a relatively simple matter. Some common advice offered to abuse victims includes get out of the house, go to a friend's or go to the police.

Good advice — but Rebecca S. Welch, program manager, Family Advocacy Program, Army Community Service, urges victims to make preparations before leaving and to stay safe afterwards.

Well-meaning, but inexperienced friends sometimes fail to recognize the complexity and danger inherent in situations that escalate to the point where leaving home remains the only realistic alternative remaining for an abuse victim.

When violence or abuse reaches this point, no time remains for the required planning of an efficient and safe exit plan.

Plan development

Safety plans developed and reviewed over a period of time give the victim of violence the reassurance of knowing that he or she took reasonable precautions to keep herself or himself and the children safe from abuse. These precautions include practical measures, which establish a safety network for the victim, helping keep her or him safe during an emotional and often confusing time.

As victims write their safety plans, they become aware of their options and often realize more fully that they need to make decisions concerning staying in an abusive situation. Safety plan reviews minimize any denial of risks inherent in staying in an abusive household and allow for re-evaluation of the family situation at regular intervals. They reinforce the importance of staying safe.

Concerning victims

Victims of violence need treatment as competent human beings, capable of making decisions that affect their personal welfare and the well-being of their children. The safety plan, when developed carefully and tactfully, offers an abuse victim a tool to enhance these concepts.

Not every victim possesses the ability to prepare a full safety plan, Welch said. Not every victim stays reasonable and rational all the time. Some experience conflict about the process, and some quit prematurely. Ideally, victims make a realistic plan and make it as complete as possible.

The victim prepares the plan gradually and independently, but hopefully he or she develops it with the support of another individual. The advocate, counselor or helper who supports the development of her or his plan provides the victim companionship on her or his journey towards safety, reducing her or his isolation and helping the victim work through the fears that inevitably arise.

Some sections of the plan offer choices, using the words "I can." These sections encourage the victim to maintain confidence in her or his ability to take action.

Other more demanding sections ask for the step's completion date. Designed to help the victim who needs a visual reminder, these sections reassure a victim once a concrete step reaches accomplishment.

The safety plan remains in the victim's personal possession, a safe place nearby, or with trusted friends.

Realize that safety plans cannot entirely ensure victim safety, although they sometimes mean the difference between knowing how to act in a highly-charged crisis situation and floundering around not knowing what action to take.

MACH promotes early detection of breast cancer

Martin Army Community Hospital

Saturday serves as the first national Mammography Day in the United States, and members of the Radiology Department at Martin Army Community Hospital join national sponsors in promoting this month.

Because too many women die from breast cancer detected too late, the objective remains to encourage women to protect themselves by getting regularly scheduled mammograms, practicing monthly breast self-examinations and having annual clinical breast examinations.

National Mammography Day stresses the importance of finding a cancer before it can be felt, particularly for certain parts of the populations, older women and women at high risk for breast cancer.

American Cancer Society officials said more than 44,000 women will die from breast cancer this year. Early detection saves as many as one third, but women need to practice self-examinations on a regular basis, get annual clinical breast exams from a health care provider and get mammograms.

Mammography plays an important role in saving lives because it finds a breast cancer tumor as early as two years before it can be felt.

Far too many women die because they do not find their breast cancer soon enough, officials said.

National Mammography Day allows millions of women to follow the mammography guidelines.

Mammography alone, however, is not always enough. Almost 10 percent of all breast cancers remain undetectable by a mammogram, so the practice of breast self-examination and clinical exams in concert with screening remains crucial.

Radiology professionals at the urge women to ask their health-care providers about how to properly practice breast self-examination — something easily demonstrated during a clinical exam or mammogram — and about the appropriate timing of screening mammography.

Experts agree that regular screening mammograms remain the most effective means of finding breast cancer early and most importantly for women age 40 and over.

Hospital officials will provide more information on breast health at the post's fall health fair at the Youth Activities Center, Building 1056, Oct. 26 from 10 a.m. to 3 p.m.

Flu season approaches, shots available

By William P. Corr
Preventive Medicine, MEDDAC

Influenza, or the flu, spreads by direct contact and inhalation. More common in the fall and winter, a different group of viruses cause this illness each year.

Because of this, the Centers for Disease Control in Atlanta prepares a different vaccination on an annual basis.

The military requires active duty personnel to receive the flu shot while it recommends beneficiaries age 65 and older; adults and children with chronic medical problems such as diabetes, asthma , congenital heart disease, etc. and personnel who work in hospitals, outpatient clinics and nursing homes receive the vaccination.

Martin Army Community Hospital's Immunization Clinic, as well as at all family practice and troop medical clinics, offer the flu shot as the flu season approaches.

For active duty U.S. Army Medical Department Activity personnel or U.S. Army Dental Activity personnel and Department of the Army civilian personnel, vaccinations began Thursday in the Immunization Clinic, Room 956. Morning hours (except Wednesdays) include 7:30 to 11:30 a.m. Afternoon hours (Monday, Tuesday, and Thursdays) include 1 to 2:30 p.m. Bring your yellow shot record and medical record.

Health-care professionals in the Family Practice Clinic give the flu shot to Tricare members until Oct. 31. Hours include 9 to 11 a.m. and 1 to 2:30 p.m. (except Thursday). Thursdays, patients receive vaccinations 9 a.m. to 5:30 p.m., and between Oct. 29 and 31, also from 4:30 to 7:30 p.m.

Family Practice, Aviation, and Winder Clinic Tricare members need to get their flu shots on Tuesdays and Thursdays from their respective clinics. Call clinics for time.

Victory Clinic Tricare members receive flu shots on a walk-in basis. Call 544-1033 for further Victory Clinic information.

Beneficiaries not in Tricare receive vaccination at the hospital's Immunization Clinic, Room 956, without appointments from 7:30 to 11:30 a.m.(except Wednesday) and Monday, Tuesday, and Thursdays from 1 to 2:30 p.m. Bring your yellow shot record and medical record.

For more information about vaccination scheduling, call Preventive Medicine at 545-1144.

Some commonly asked questions about flu shots

Q: Why does the Army require soldiers to get flu shots?
A: Because flu shots keep soldiers on the job. As reported in the New England Journal of Medicine (Vol. 333, No. 14), personnel who get flu shots in October and early November have 25 percent fewer episodes of respiratory illnesses than employees without a flu shot. Civilians who get the flu shot take 43 percent fewer days of sick leave and make 44 percent fewer visits to doctors' offices for respiratory illnesses. Vaccination against influenza offers substantial health and economic benefits for healthy, working adults. Officials at the Centers for Disease Control recommends all people who wish to avoid illness consider vaccination.

Q: What side effects occur as a result of the flu shot?
A: Commonly, people suffer from a sore arm. Some people develop a mild fever or body aches, probably an allergic reaction to the fluid that carries the vaccine, for one to two days following the vaccine. The vaccine contains only infectious, or killed, viruses, therefore rendering it incapable of causing illness.

Q: What steps lessen the side effects?
A: By taking acetaminophen before you feel the side effects, you lessen or even prevent fever, body aches and a sore arm.

Q: Who should not receive the vaccine?
A: Only those with a severe allergy to eggs or to the flu vaccine itself.

Q: Can pregnant women get the flu shot?
A: The Army requires influenza vaccination, considered safe at any stage of pregnancy, for all active duty soldiers, even pregnant ones.

Sgt. Paul Davidson, chaplain's assistant assigned to the Airborne School, receives an jumpmaster personnel inspection by Sgt. 1st Class Noel Ramos before a jump Oct. 9 while Chaplain (Capt.) Lane Stockland, the Airborne School's chaplain, looks on.

Airborne chaplaincy takes flight

By Lisa M. Hibbert
Bayonet staff writer

When Chaplain (Capt.) Lane M. Stockland and Chaplain's Assistant (Sgt.) Paul L. Davidson talk about their wings, they mean more than just in the spiritual sense.

Maroon beret-wearing Stockland and Davidson work at the Airborne School, providing spiritual inspiration to the more than 14,000 soldiers, sailors, airmen, Marines, Guardsmen, Reservists and students from foreign armies who attend the school every year.

"I spent four and a half months in Desert Storm and nobody ever asked me for prayer," Davidson said. "I was never asked in Germany nor on Kelley Hill. I feel really needed here because the soldiers want me to pray with them. Being assigned to the Airborne School is really fulfilling to me."

Being assigned to an airborne unit fulfills Stockland also.

"We spend our time at the school," Stockland said. "We try to remain accessible to the students so that we can pray with them whenever they need it."

Why do soldiers here require so much prayer?

"I think it's the near-death experience of jumping from an airplane," Stockland said. "Sometimes, just praying with the students helps them get over their fear of the unknown."

But Stockland's and Davidson's duties go beyond praying for the students; these jumpmaster-qualified soldiers jump with every class.

"I think it helps the students to see the chaplain and the chaplain's assistant jump," Stockland said. "Students told me that when they saw me jump, they knew that everything was going to be OK."

"I think we have to lead the way," Davidson said. "When people tell you do something and they're not willing to do it themselves, you don't feel comfortable following that person. After we give the prejump prayer, we go with them."

These two airborne-prayer warriors jump because they want to, not because they have to.

"I think it makes our job easier by being out there, being near the students," Stockland said.

Aside from being the airborne chaplain, Stockland also conducts Protestant services at the Regimental Road Chapel.

"Airborne students, officer candidates, active duty personnel, family members and retirees all make up the congregation," Stockland said. "I can't give messages geared toward the airborne students because of the diversity, but I try to give inspirational messages instead."

God brings peace to mankind

By William D. Smith
Martin Army Community Hospital

As people draw their attention toward world peace on United Nations Day, Thursday, "peace on Earth, good will toward men" remains unique because the world has never experienced a lasting peace since the beginning of mankind.

In a couple of months, most families of the Christian tradition start thinking about this message, which was uttered by the angels at the birth of Christ.

Yet, the Bible, as understood in both the Jewish and Christian traditions, foretells of a time when the world no longer experiences wars or rumors or wars.

According to Isaiah, leveling of rough places and straightening of crooked ways takes place in the future so that Jerusalem and its messianic ruler who brings this foretold peace become accessible to people.

Since World War I, America, the western culture and various leaders

reflections

throughout the world, growing tired of wars and rumors of wars, formed unities to help dilute the fighting.

First came the League of Nations seeking to bring a respite to the ravages of world-wide conflicts. Hitler, who wanted power at the expense of peace, short-circuited this unified venture.

Now, these areas look to the United Nations to usher in a lasting peace.

The United Nations brought the world together in a way never before experienced and addressed the plights of third-world countries. Aid flows from the 'haves' to the 'have nots'.

The United Nations makes many efforts to seek peace, however, hatred and greed still rages in the hearts of men and women.

Perhaps, people need to again consider the message of the angels long ago who spoke of "peace on Earth, good will toward men."

The point of that message remains centered on God's ability to bring peace to the heart of all of mankind.

For the Christian, this points to the purpose of Christ's first coming — to pay for people's sins through his death on the cross.

Consequently, the Christian believes that ultimate peace begins by accepting God's provision and thus gaining forgiveness so they possess the ability to forgive and love others.

God's people need to possess faith

By Vance P. Theodore
School of the Americas

Soldiers sometime hear the phrase "It ain't nuttin' but a thang." The saying means that in the real scheme of things, it really doesn't matter.

It brings a smile to my face every time I hear it. It defines a great deal of feelings and quiets complaining. It connotes the definitions of patience, persistence, resolution and perseverance. It gives us a simple faith in ourselves, allowing us to endure life's complexities.

One man in the Scriptures possessed this kind of faith — Job. He never cursed God; he never complained. In only one day, the Scriptures say, Job's wealth — his asses, oxen, servants, sheep, camels and even his children — vanished.

When this happened, Job said, "Naked came I out of my mother's womb, and naked shall I return; the Lord gave, and the Lord hath taken away. Blessed be the name of the Lord" (Job 1:21).

Instead of cursing God, Job said, "Blessed be the name of the Lord."

Wrongly, Satan expected Job to give up. Job patiently persisted and remains remembered for his patience and faith.

Winston Churchill, in the last years of his life, gave advice to one of the graduating classes of his alma mater. Reportedly, the graduating class seemed excited about this great statesman addressing them. When Churchill arrived at the graduation, he proceeded to walk to the podium. He walked slowly, being aided by a cane. When he reached the podium, he looked sternly at the graduating class and said, "Never give up — never, never, never," and slowly walked away.

Truthfully, ordinary people possess the ability to achieve extraordinary results. Today, I believe too much negativity surrounds us. We try not until we succeed, but we try and then give up. Job never doubted God. He went the limit and never cursed God.

I challenge all of you to never give up. We spend only a short amount of time together at Fort Benning, but our lives on Earth influence many.

I hope we, like Job, possess patience to withstand pain. I pray we possess faith to believe in God and not fear God. I hope God makes those who feel alone, like Job, aware of his constant presence and the presence of others.

Also, I hope when all seems lost and we find life's pain unjust that we, like Job, possess the ability to say with firmness and humility, "Naked came I out from my mother's womb, and naked shall I return. The Lord giveth, and the Lord hath taken away. Blessed be the name of the Lord" (Job 1:21).

Hospitality:

God wants us to welcome new people in our midst

By David Kirk
1st Battalion, 15th Infantry Regiment

All service members and their families experience a permanent change-of-station move every few years.

It can be a time of real joy and excitement; a time for new positions, new opportunities, new friends and personal growth; and a time of frustration, anxiety and loneliness.

The Scriptures make many references about people on journeys. God gave them "orders." They received new assignments and undertook them. Second Kings 4: 8-11 relates one such instance.

In this passage, the prophet Elisha, who had taken over for Elijah, was going about his work. The story tells us he came to a town named Shunem.

There, a woman of influence invited him to dine with her and her husband. Whenever in the area, Elisha stopped and dined with this couple. A special bond developed. The couple even arranged a furnished room for Elisha to use whenever he passed through the town.

They saw Elisha as a holy man of God. During one of his visits, Elisha returned the favor by bestowing a special blessing upon the couple.

The Gospels give another example. Many times on his journey, Jesus welcomes others into his midst. He invites the sick, the lame, the poor, the rich, the outcasts and children, to name a few. Jesus always makes them feel important and special in his presence.

On many occasions, Jesus allows others the opportunity to welcome him. Lazarus of Bethany and his sisters, Martha and Mary, served as Jesus' hosts on numerous occasions. Zacchieus and many others did the same.

For some, welcome comes easy. For others, it comes harder. Sometimes people give but don't receive. There are those who are not welcomed for one reason or another.

Everyone can extend hospitality. It takes no multitude of great skills. It requires one to have an open heart, a sense of making others feel important, special and comfortable in our presence — to make them feel at home.

Welcoming and being welcomed by others remains a part of moving in which everyone can partake.

chapel notes

Sunday school class uses sermon scriptures — A new adult class provides students an opportunity to study the Scripture in preparation for the morning sermon.

The Fort Benning Sunday School takes place Sundays from 9:30 to 10:30 a.m. in Building 2517 at the Religious Education Center.

For more information, call 545-4715.

Children's program — The Religious Education Center plans a new segment of its children's Bible study program, Personal Attitudes Relating To You. The new segment, Children Living Under the Bible, includes Bible study and Scripture memorization, basic etiquette skills, table and home decorating and some sewing and cooking skills.

The first class meets the first Saturday of each month, beginning Oct. 5, from noon to 2 p.m. at the Religious Education Center, Building 2521.

The class opens to girls in grades three through six.

CCD classes to resume — The Post Chaplains Office conducts Confraternity of Christian Doctrine classes at 10:10 a.m. Sundays in Herbert J. Dexter School.

Classes are conducted for preschool children as well as for primary grades, junior and high school students and adults.

Parents may register their children after mass at the Main Post Catholic Chapel.

REC to resume language classes — Instructors conduct English language classes for beginners and advanced students each Tuesday from 9:30 to 11:30 a.m.at the Religious Education Center, Building 2522.

Students must purchase books for the free classes.

MACH offers new worship services — Martin Army Community Hospital chaplains now provide two collective Protestant services in the hospital chapel:

- Sundays — 8 to 8:30 a.m.
- Thursdays — noon to 12:30 p.m.

Individuals can also attend a Bible study Tuesdays from noon to 12:30 p.m in the hospital chapel.

Post chaplains seek workers — Fort Benning chaplains seek pianists, organists, choir directors, bus drivers and teachers for Sunday School and Confraternity of Christian Doctrine classes.

The chaplains also need part-time office help and individuals to watch young children during religious activities.

Call the USAIC Chaplains Office at 545-1934, or visit the office in Building 75, for details of times, places and duties.

Class continues study of Revelation — Members of the Adult 1 Sunday School continue their study of the Book of Revelation at 9:30 a.m. each Sunday at the Religious Education Center, Building 2521, behind the Airborne Chapel.

For more information, call Steve Russell at 685-9276.

Sunday School bus — The U.S. Army Infantry Center Chaplains Office provides bus transportation to and from Fort Benning Main Post Sunday School for all soldiers and families living on post.

The Main Post Sunday School includes classes for ages 2 years through adult and meets at the Religious Education Center, Building 2517.

Tactical pistol match set — The Fort Benning Rifle and Pistol Club conducts a night tactical pistol match Nov. 2 at 6:30 p.m. at English Range for expert and inexperienced shooters.

The club offers weapons for the competition.

Preregistration costs $14 prior to Oct. 30 and $17 thereafter.

For more information, call Jim Graham at 689-3371.

Wrestling tournament set — A wrestling tournament, featuring Greco-Roman and freestyle, takes place Saturday at Santiago Fitness Center on Sand Hill at 10 a.m.

Weigh-ins take place today and Saturday from 8:30 to 9 a.m.

Open to active duty military only.

YS basketball registration begins — Youth Services basketball registration for ages 6 to 15 begins Oct. 28 and ends Nov. 8.

Other childrens programs offered by the Youth Services include instruction in tae kwon do, tumbling, piano and dance.

Fees for the classes range from $20 to $25 per month.

Registration takes place Monday through Friday from 8:30 a.m. until 4:30 p.m. at Youth Services, Building 1056, for youth family members of active duty and retired military personnel and Department of Defense employees.

All children who participate must possess a YS card, which costs $20 per year, per family and can be purchased at the YS administration office and the Main Post Youth Center, as well as all community outreach centers. The YS administration office conducts all sports registrations.

For more information, call 545-3070.

Karate instruction offered — The Fort Benning Officers Club offers instruction in karate for children and adults.

Childrens classes are Saturday and Sunday from 11 a.m. to 1 p.m. and from 1:15 p.m. to 3:15 p.m.

Adult classes are Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday from 7:30 p.m. to 9 p.m.

Cost of the classes is $25 per month for individuals and $45 to $60 for families.

All classes are conducted at the Officers Club Fitness Center.

For more information, call Ron Ziss at 324-3113.

Hard bodies compete in championship

By John W. Peeler
Special to the Bayonet©

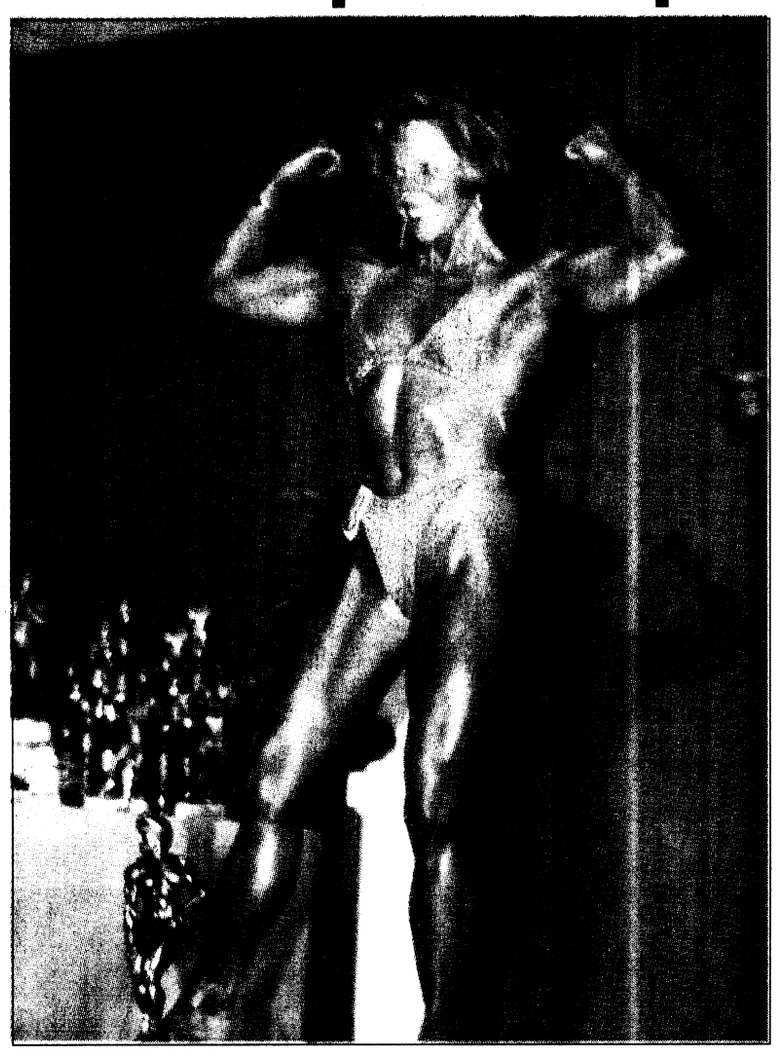
Bright lights, music, body oil and hard bodies abounded throughout the day at the Main NCO Club Saturday when competitors from Fort Benning, Columbus, Atlanta, Phenix City and Eufaula competed in the 1996 Fort Benning Bodybuilding Championships.

Randy Watson and Paula Lebov returned to this year's tournament in top form, successfully defending their Mr. and Ms. Fort Benning titles. Twelve former Mr. and Ms. Fort Benning competitors also participated.

Watson and Lebov captured the men's middle weight and women's light weight titles, respectively, with Lebov taking the master's division title.

In the other divisions, Eric Jenkins from Atlanta took first place in the men's light weight division, Woodie Sons Jr. took first place in the heavyweight division, and Michael Russell captured first place in the master's division.

In the other women's division, Levista Graham took first place in the women's heavyweight division.



In this year's new team competition, Fort Benning took the team title with 27 points.

The evening provided more than bodybuilding for the hard-body enthusiast when the Cory Everson aerobic team kicked off the evening with a demonstration. Greens Taekwondo Plus provided an intermission show with forms and board-breaking demonstrations.

Browns, Steelers battle to tie in the over 12 division

By John W. Peeler
Special to the Bayonet©

In Youth Services football action Saturday on Blue Field, the Browns and Steelers fought to a 8-8 tie in the over 12 division.

Both teams' defense dominated, holding each others offense in check throughout the game. The tie moved the Browns' record to 1-0-1 to stay a half game ahead in the division while the Steelers' record moved to 0-1-1 for the season.

In the other over 12 division game, the 49ers handed the Lions their first defeat of the season by a score of 24-6.

In the 9- to 12-year-old division, the Chiefs squeaked past the Panthers 6-0 on a Marquies Richardson 6-yard run. Richardson took the hand-off from quarterback Ronald Tubbs, started up the middle, then broke his run outside for the score. With the win, the Chiefs moved their record to 3-1.

The Vikings moved their record to 4-0 with a 14-0 victory over the Cowboys. The Vikings scored on a touchdown pass from quarterback Zeke Morris to wide receiver William Proctor and a 3-yard run from Morris.

In the other 9- to 12-year-old game, the Eagles fell to the Seminoles 14-12. The Seminole defense played hard in the fourth quarter, stifling the Eagles offense, to secure the victory.

The loss pushed the Eagles record to 2-2 while the Seminoles moved to 1-3 on the season.

In the 6- to 8-year-old flag division, the Vikings kept their record at a perfect 4-0 by defeating the 49ers 19-0. The loss dropped the 49ers record to 1-2-1.

In the other 6- to 8-year-old flag game, the Giants outscored the Packers 18-14 to move their record to 2-1-1 while the Packers slipped to 0-4.

Youth Services plans more football games at Blue Field Saturday beginning at 9 a.m.

Shooters win at Fall Selection Match

U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit

The U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit shotgun shooters, competing against other military and civilians, scored big at the fall selection match recently at the Olympic Training Center in Colorado Springs, Colo.

In the skeet team match, the U.S. Army black team, composed of Shawn C. Dulohery, James T. Graves and Joseph D. Buffa, finished first with a score of 361 out of a possible 375.

This represents Dulohery's second match win this year. He also won a USA Shooting Gold Medal at the Tall Pines Skeet Match in August.

"It's put me in good shape for the 1997 World Championships being held in Lima, Peru, in November and also to represent the U.S. at the Championship of the Americas in Buenos Aires, Argentina, in October," Dulohery said.

In the men's individual trap match, Bret E. Erickson finished second with a score of 196 out of a possible 200 points plus 22 points in the shootoff but tied for first in the selection process with Lance Bade, Bronze medalist in the 1996 Olympics, who finished third in the match.

Josh Lakatos, Silver medalist in the 1996 Olympics in Trap, came in first in the match.

In the women's trap match, Joetta R. Novinski finished second with a score of 181 points plus 24 points in the shoot-off and came in second in the selection process.

In the trap team match, the U.S. Army blue team, composed of Erickson, Graves and David Alcoriza, finished second with a score of 356 points out of a possible 375 and second in the double trap team match with a score of 407 out of 450.

In men's individual double trap, Erickson finished third with a score of 138 points plus 46 points and Joetta R. Novinski finished third in women's double trap with a score of 1,044 plus 35 points.

In the double trap match juniors, Matthew T. DePuydt came in third with a score of 135 plus 43 points and placed second in the selection process in trap match juniors with a score of 186. DePuydt leads the selection process for the World Championship Team.

The fall selection match marks the first of two matches taking place for shooters trying out for the World Shotgun Championship team.

The top three scorers of the spring selection match and the fall selection match participate on the world championship team that shoots in Lima, Peru, in November 1997.

Fort Benning BASS Club plans meeting — The Fort Benning Bass Anglers and Sportsman Society Club conducts its biweekly meetings the second and fourth Tuesday of each month at the Don C. Faith Middle School cafeteria at 7:30 p.m.

The club offers membership to active duty soldiers, retired military and Department of Defense civilian employees and their family members.

For more information, call Steve Ward at 569-5705.

Post requires hunter safety course — Hunters born on or after Jan. 1, 1961, must attend an approved safety course if they wish to hunt in Georgia, including Fort Benning.

The Georgia Department of Natural Resources Hunter Safety Course takes place Saturday in Infantry Hall, Classroom 4, from 8:30 a.m. to 3 p.m.

Students need to bring their Social Security numbers with them.

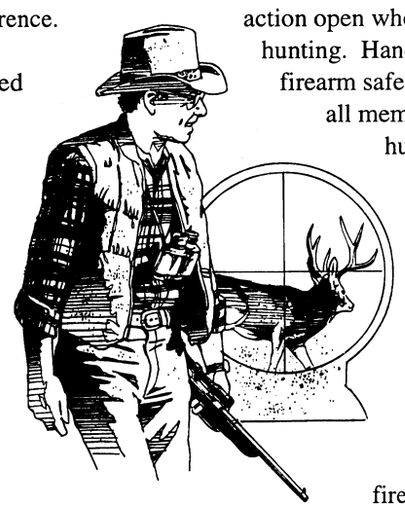
Firearms safety, handling make for enjoyable hunting experience

By Harley Chase
Infantry Branch Safety Office

Cool weather finally started to make its way back into the South. Cooler weather also means the presence of the hunting season.



Like any sport, hunting brings rewards and enjoyment and allows time for the great outdoors, companionship, camping and many stories to tell.

Millions of sportsmen enjoy hunting, but like one bad apple in a barrel, a few irresponsible hunters give a very bad public image for all hunters. Examples of their irresponsible behavior include poor firearms' safety, ignorance of the laws and their consequences or trespassing.

Key aspects of hunting include safe, responsible, and know-legible firearms handling. Georgia Department of Natural Resource statistics show that firearm handling causes nearly 50 percent of the accidents. Tree stand accidents account for almost 50 percent, and hunters mistaken for game represent the largest accident cause in turkey hunting. Safe firearms handling eliminates most firearm injuries.

You are the most important factor in reducing firearm accidents. You make the difference.

After states and provinces introduced hunter education, the firearm accident rate reduced throughout North America.

The key to hunting or shooting safety lies in always handling your firearm in a safe and responsible manner. To do this means you must:

•Always control the muzzle of your firearm, pointing it in a safe direction. Keep your finger off the trigger until ready to fire. Keep the action open when not actually hunting. Handle your firearm safely. Insist that all members of your hunting or shooting group handle their firearms safely. Real friends do not take chances with each others' lives.

•Treat each firearm as if it is loaded. Never accept a firearm from anyone else until you personally check to see that it remains unloaded. For added safety, leave the action of a firearm open when it changes hands. "I didn't know it was loaded" serves as an excuse for poor firearm handling.

commentary

•Be sure of your target and what lies beyond it. A safe hunter never shoots at a flash of color, a sound, or the shape in a tree.

•Responsible shooters fire only at what they want to hit. In most cases, you first identify the sex of the game before deciding to shoot.

All responsible hunters remain certain about the background to ensure they don't hit people, buildings, livestock, vehicles or equipment.

Experts do not exist in firearms safety, just responsible firearm users who gain experience by following safe handling procedures.

Human error remains the largest cause of firearm accidents. In knowing this, always think about why, and not just how, accidents happen.

Every responsible hunter makes himself or herself aware of local laws or hunting regulations. Yet, many people fail to read the state regulation or the Fort Benning regulation or circular, which is given to hunters free when they buy their post hunting permit.

When they receive a ticket they say, "I didn't know ..." This fails to serve as an excuse.

The law requires hunters to make sure they and all the hunters with them obey all laws.

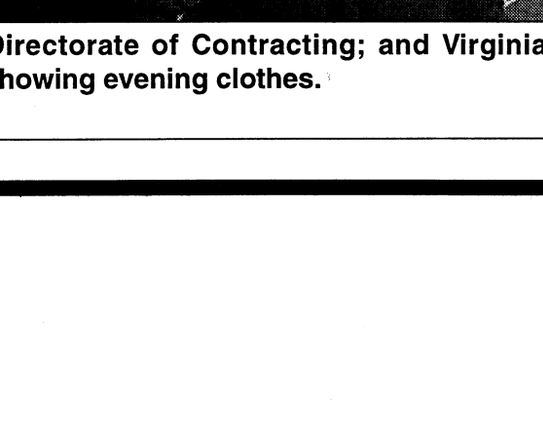
Stylin' at the O'Club



The Fort Benning Management Association sponsored a Dress for Success fashion show designed for career-oriented, social and casual dressers Oct. 10 in the Fort Benning Officers' Club. Department of the Army civilians and military, all members of the FBMA, modeled the fashions to acquaint the public with trends and fashions for dressing for success. Sears, Roebuck and Company provided the clothes and Mable Bailey of Mable Bailey Fashion College School of Modeling and Cosmetology, provided the commentary. FBMA, a private organization, promotes management training, techniques, concepts and methodologies.

13th CSB fields new equipment

By Michael E. Lynch
13th Corps Support Battalion

The sound of diesel engines filled the air last week as the 13th Corps Support Battalion began receiving new equipment.

The Battalion's 104th Transportation Company maintained its status as one of the busiest units on post as it received new equipment and turned in the old, while completing missions all over the Southeastern United States. The company recently gained a new platoon, complete with soldiers and new equipment, while completely changing out old equipment.

A platoon of heavy equipment transportation systems began arriving over Saturday and Sunday at the Sand Hill railhead. The 4th Platoon of the 233rd Transportation Company, Fort Knox, Ky., moved to Fort Benning and is now assigned to the 104th Transportation Company.

The M-1070 HET system, the largest wheeled vehicle in the Army inventory, stands 12 feet high, 67 feet long and 12 feet wide. Each of the 24 huge vehicles weighs 12 tons and carries loads weighing up to 70 tons.

"These trucks are designed to carry tanks, howitzers and other large tracked vehicles," said Capt. Matthew Redding, commander, 104th Trans. Co. "They really add a lot of hauling capability to the company."

The addition of the new equipment increases the company's already heavy work load.

"We have been looking forward to getting the HETS," said Maj. Steve Bayer, 13th CSB Support Operations officer. "We already have missions scheduled for these trucks, and we look forward to showing what they can do."

As the equipment arrived, a team of mechanics departed for a special school in Salina, Kan., to learn how to fix the massive vehicles.

"Our mechanics are used to working on big vehicles, but nothing quite this big," said Warrant Officer 1 Donald R. Bonds, company maintenance officer. "This class should help us figure it out, though." The Army's Tank-Automotive Command offers the class at several locations throughout the United States.

In addition to the arrival of the HET platoon, the company began conversion of its entire truck fleet. The conversion to tactical trucks also increases the company s capabilities.

Pfc. Jason Welsh, 104th Transportation Company, unties chains on an M-1020 tractor.

"The new trucks we're getting are tactical tractors, meaning we can take them off the road," Redding said. "The old ones were designed primarily for highway driving."

The company retains some of the older model "highway" trucks for post support missions.

The company's conversion to the M-931 tactical truck makes it easier to train for the company's wartime mission.

"The M-915 (the truck currently in use) is essentially a commercial truck painted green," said Lt. Col. Gerald Bates, commander of the 13th CSB. "The new truck (M-931) allows the company to train as it will go to war."

The company recently completed two rotations to the National Training Center, but needed to retrain all of its drivers on tactical vehicles before they left Fort Benning.

"These guys go all over the South supporting Fort Benning and some of the reserve units around here," Bayer said.

"They'll still do that, but now they'll be able to do more tactical missions, like NTC."

Despite the hectic pace of the many missions — the ongoing new equipment reception and training and the maintenance and turn in of the old equipment — the "Road Dawgs" of the 104th Trans. Co. remain motivated. Staff Sgt. Stanley G. Price summed it all up when he said, "Road Dawgs are on a roll."

ENLISTED MANAGEMENT

Director gives outlook

By Marc G. Turchin
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Change happens, and there is almost nothing anyone can do to stop it. In the enlisted and officer ranks, change comes and goes and occurs seemingly without end.

Recently, the director of enlisted personnel management spoke to a class at the Advanced Noncommissioned Officer Course, detailing some of the past and future changes affecting enlisted soldiers.

Brig. Gen. Stephen R. Smith said because of the military's downsizing and using qualified soldiers in the right positions, the Army is more efficient.

"In a smaller force, you can't afford to not use the soldier right," Smith added.

And the force continues to dwindle, Smith said.

According to Smith, for the Army to continue with its mission, it needs 518,000 soldiers. But that mission fails to take into account the Army only being budgeted to pay 475,000. To remedy the situation, Smith recommends cutting costs instead of firing soldiers.

Unfortunately for the soldiers involved, cost cutting means leaving open slots for soldiers in some units and no equipment in others.

That cost cutting directly impacts unit readiness and the staffing of those units, Smith said.

The staffing of units breaks down into three prioritized categories — meaning the units in category one get the highest priority and category three units fall to the bottom of the priority list.

Some of the units in category one include the 75th Ranger Regiment, recruiting and basic training units and the units stationed at the National Training Center at Fort Irwin, Calif.

Units in category two, according to Smith, lack some military occupational specialities and force unqualified soldiers to perform certain jobs.

Some of these units include the 1st Cavalry Division at Fort Hood, Texas; 3rd Infantry Division at Fort Stewart, Ga.; 82nd Airborne Division at Fort Bragg, N.C.; and the 101st Airborne Division at Fort Campbell, Ky.

The units in category three need a lot of help, Smith said.

"These units are really short," Smith said. "This is not a good way to run the Army."

Some of the units in the third category include the 10th Mountain Division at Fort Drum, N.Y., and the 25th Infantry Division at Schofield Barracks, Hawaii.

But Smith also brought along good news.

He talked about a rise in enlistment bonuses within the next two years, with approximately $15 million in 1997 and possibly up to $18 million in 1998.

Smith spoke about projected re-enlistments going up, but only at a small percentage. Re-enlistments in more than 30 combat arms and support military occupational specialties expect to see higher numbers, according to projections.

Other news concerning enlisted soldiers was offered.

Plans to restructure the NCO support channel, according to Smith, eases some of the stagnation affecting the NCOs.

Currently, NCOs make up roughly 50 percent of the Army, Smith said. With the restructuring, that number falls to 47 percent.

"Not every MOS will have 47 percent," Smith said. "The number will be driven by the MOS's entire structure.

"The impact is spread over three years," Smith said.

Smith said he expects no change in one aspect of the enlisted ranks, the NCO education system.

"This is the lifeblood of what we're all about," Smith said. He said he and other Army officials remain absolutely committed to the system.

Smith's commitment expands from there; he wants the Army's enlisted ranks balanced as well.

He said past mistakes such as force alignment over selection of promotions led to the situation in which the Army's enlisted ranks currently find themselves.

"This is what I call an adjustment year," Smith said. "I hope that next year we can smooth things out, and we can do that through promotions."

Smith said even with all the changes going on affecting enlisted personnel, without a doubt, the Army remains a good career choice.

"The problems that exist in the military exist anywhere," Smith said. "I just think if people give us a chance, they'd be really happy. I think the Army is a great, great place to serve."

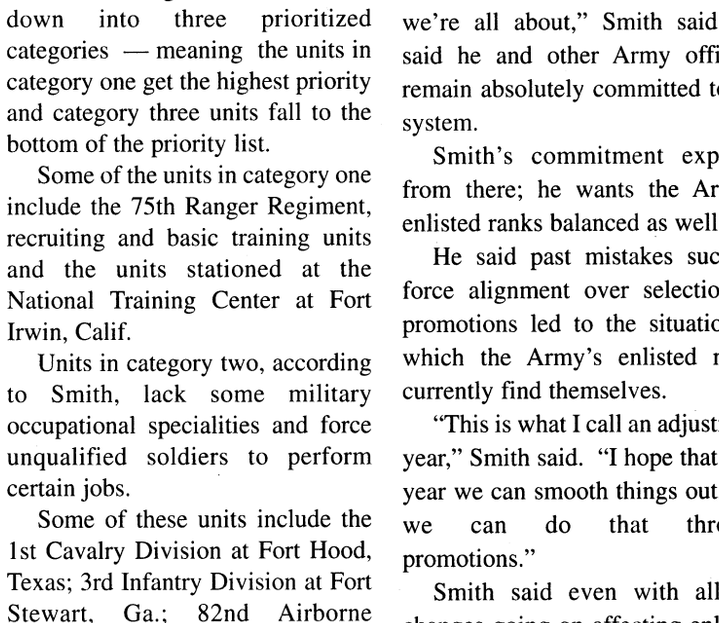
FRIGHT NIGHT

Fort Benning childre[n] . . . are to trick or treat

Family Support Division

Halloween trick or treating in post housing areas takes place Thursday from 6 to 8 p.m.

Trick or treating activities are limited to children younger than 13 years of age. Preschool children need supervision by someone 14 years or older.



Children need to wear light-colored, fire-resistant costumes short enough to prevent tripping. Mark costumes with reflective tape or a glow spray paint to ensure vehicle headlights and street and house lights reflect.

Observe all basic safety precautions. Use sidewalks and crosswalks; don't cut through yards. Look in all directions before walking across the the street.

Pet owners need to take measures to prevent pets from being a nuisance or a menace to children. Caution children about the wrongs of vandalism and causing damage to the property of others.

Children need to carry flashlights and follow every safety precaution when crossing streets. Motorists should remain alert during trick or treating time. Parents need to inspect all treats before their children eat them, and give your child a full meal before he or she goes trick or treating.

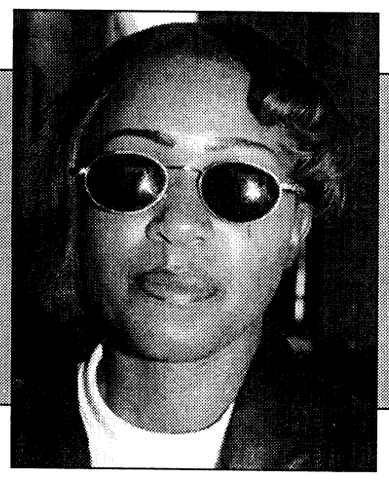
Martin Army Community Hospital's Department of Radiology plans to X-ray Halloween candy from 6 to 9 p.m.

Remember to turn your clocks back one hour Sunday.

VARIOUS VOICES

What is the best Halloween costume you've ever seen?

Sgt. Richard A. Medal, 8th Marine Regiment, Camp Lejune, N.C. — "In Illinois, Jim Warfield has an awesome image. The costume was a cross between a crow and a monster."



Petty Officer 3rd Class James A. Zurek, U.S. Navy, 8th Marine Regiment, Camp Lejeune, N.C. — "A couple of years ago at Camp Lejeune, a guy dressed like the Crypt Keeper from 'Tales From the Crypt.' He hid inside a trash can where the kids had to go to get the candy."

Cheryl Roseman, family member — "The best costume I ever saw was a spider that had all of the arms hanging off the sides. It was really cute."

Tina Mauk, family member — "My nephew went as a pea pod last year. He had three peas and his head was the fourth pea."

Jessie Gregg, family member — "The best costume was the Grim Reaper. I see that costume a lot, and it's usually the best one I see."

Gloria Amon, retired civilian employee — "The best costume I've ever seen was a streaker. He had on a hat and an overcoat and when he flashed, he was wearing underwear with red hearts on them."

Halloween: Worthless holiday

By Lori Egan
Bayonet staff writer

Lori Egan believes Halloween is a waste of time and a dangerous holiday.

commentary

It's happened. The thing that I wanted to avoid for at least several more years started around mid-September. My preschooler started to talk about Halloween and the costume she wants to dress up in. Oh no!

I really wanted to avoid the entire event. (Just call me the Grinch of Halloween.) I really believe it is a worthless holiday.

What exactly is the significance of Halloween? Why do we celebrate it? I don't know — we've always done it.

So just because we've always done it, do we continue with the celebration? That follows the same logic that my mother never agreed with; which is, if someone jumps off a bridge, are you going to follow? I used to hate hearing her say that when I was child, but I guess I listened.

Halloween progressively gets worse and worse as the years go by. When I was a child, hooliganism was a problem but not the problem it is today.

Today parents need to worry about drug-laced candy, drive-by shootings and other horrors.

Today we tell our children not to talk to strangers and not to take candy from strangers. We start telling them when they are babies and continue to talk to them about the danger of a stranger taking them, offering them candy in order to lure them into a trap of some sort.

Why is it on one day we forget the rules and the risks? Why do we allow our children to walk up and down the streets in costumes, knock on doors and ask for candy?

Some parents have told me that the risk is mitigated because we live on an Army post and because adults always accompany their children.

I've been told by some parents that they allow their children to trick or treat only in their own neighborhood.

As a child, my brothers and sisters were only allowed to trick or treat in our own neighborhood and only go to the houses where we knew the people. It is amazing how big our neighborhood became and how many people we knew on Halloween.

My memories of Halloween include how cute we looked in the Halloween costumes but how cold it was when we went out to trick or treat.

Another thing I remember is bigger kids stealing my little sister's bag of candy when we were finally old enough to go out without Mom.

And then were the times when we had to run from kids who were throwing eggs and rotten tomatoes at cars (and anything else that struck their fancy) and toilet papering houses.

I also remember the trouble I got into when I came home with a dozen eggs purchased for the Halloween festivities. Mom confiscated them for breakfast.

The next year I had to stay in and answer the door, ooh and aah over the costumes and put up with my friends knocking and running.

Some of my best memories of Halloween are from my years in grade school. We had costume parades, dunked for apples and played games.

I remember what I said last year about this holiday, how Jessie wouldn't miss out on the candy and the costumes, only the trick or treating. She asks why we don't decorate the house for Halloween like the neighbors do and now instead of answering her I wonder, "How do I get out of this?"

Pumpkins stand as more treat than trick

By Marc G. Turchin
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Marc G. Turchin says Halloween is a chance for children to enjoy themselves.

commentary

For those who think Halloween represents some sort of evil or bad holiday, get over it!

I remember dressing up for Halloween and going door to door, gathering candy for hours upon hours. I love those great memories. So what's the problem?

I think parents need to allow children to keep with the tradition of receiving candy. When did it start? I don't know. But I know as a child, I loved the month of October just because of Halloween.

Just because this holiday involves witches and devils, provides no evidence people spend it worshiping the devil. Hey, children put on costumes; they don't make human sacrifices to Satan.

The holiday also offers no evidence that people participating in the festivities worship the devil.

It just so happens that ghosts, ghouls and devils conjure up scary thoughts. That remains the whole idea in my mind — experiencing fun and acting scary.

You know what really gets me? Where were all these people a generation ago? I never heard any of these complaints back then.

Why all of a sudden is there such a worry about devil worshiping? Nothing against living religiously, but usually those highly -religious types make all this fuss. Again I say, get a life!

To me, those people represent closed-mindedness and they possess no right to tell other people how to act. If they keep their children from celebrating Halloween, fine. But don't push your opinions on those us who love Halloween and the way it's celebrated. Call it paranoia or call it conservatism — call it wahtever you want, just don't call me when your child is crying and begging you to go trick or treating with the rest of the civilized world. Maybe if you tried celebrating Halloween, you might actually like it.

After growing older, I understand the dangers of the yearly ritual. But the child in me says, "Oh well, go ahead!"

Parents worry about the dangers of candy tampering or the chance of their children ending up kidnapped. That remains truly understandable. But, if parents take the proper precautions, these worries will be put to ease.

I say go out with the children and check the candy. This also allows you to protect the children from strangers, and it gives families an opportunity to spend more time together. Considering the Army life, military families probably welcome and enjoy the night.

This is a time when the child inside all of us comes out and gets seen, or not seen, depending on how good you disguise yourself.

Halloween remains a most important holiday. It represents something different to everyone. For me, it brings back memories of trick or treating with my family. I really miss that because my family hardly ever gets together. But, I still keep my memories.

'Challenges for the Future' displays heritage, native dances, contributions of community

The 3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division (Mechanized), celebrated Hispanic Heritage Month with various events on Kelley Hill.

The 1st Battalion, 15th Infantry Regiment, sponsored the Hispanic Heritage Month Program, "Challenges for the Future," Oct. 10 at the Kelley Hill Recreation Center.

"This was a great display of heritage," said Sgt. 1st Class Ana Davila, 3rd Brigade Equal Opportunity adviser. "We had about 50 people there, but most importantly, battalion commanders and command sergeants major came."

The event featured guest speaker Evelyn M. Woodson, a member of the City Council of the Columbus Consolidated Government and a native of Puerto Rico.

Woodson spoke of the many contributions of Hispanics in the country and in this area. She spoke of her pride and the pride of other Hispanics as being part of the United States.

"We, in the Hispanic community, are proud of our shared heritage," she said. "We are happy to be part of this multicultural society (the United States)."

After speaking, Woodson turned over the floor to Pvt. 1st Class Salvador Perez from Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment, and his dance partner, Gloria Ramirez, who showed the crowd how to marange.

Pvt. 2 Robinson Diaz from Company C, 1st Battalion, 15th Infantry Regiment, recited two poems.

People attending the program also got another taste of the Hispanic heritage of dance. Youths from the Coupania Tropical Latina danced nine traditional dances from Brazil, Panama, Honduras, Puerto Rico, Cuba, Mexico and Spain.

Davila said programs such as this provide recognition for those groups that have done so much for this country.

"It's important for our soldiers to understand why people are the way they are, and learning about their heritage can help," she said.

The program concluded with attendees winning door prizes.

Aside from the program, the 3rd Bde., 3rd Inf. Div. (Mech.), dining facilities each offered Hispanic meals throughout the month. They offered soldiers choices of picadillo, arroz con polio, Spanish style fish and rice, Mexican style cauliflower, enchiladas, tostadas, burritos and tacos.

Dancers from the Coupania Tropical "Latina" show the traditional Panamanian dance. The troupe danced at the Kelley Hill Recreation Center Oct. 1.

Post to replace power poles

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Replacement of a high voltage power pole along Custer Road means a four-hour power outage for many Fort Benning residents Saturday.

Scheduled from 8 a.m. to noon, the power outages will allow construction crews to shut off electrical power and replace the pole.

"These outages have been scheduled in four-hour increments and on Saturdays to minimize the impact on the most affected areas," said Richard Chancey, chief of the Construction Inspection Branch, Directorate of Public Works. The work calls for construction crews to upgrade and replace deteriorated high voltage utility lines in conjunction with a Corps of Engineers contract.

The affected areas include: Loyd School, Wilbur School, Custer Road Fire Station, Building 2677 (Eiler Hall), Water Treatment Plant, Water Tank (Torch Hill), Lift Station No. 5, Water Torch (Custer Terrace), Main Post Cemetery, Traffic Light at Custer Road and Benning Boulevard, Custer Terrace (family housing residents), Upatoi Terrace (family housing residents), Arrowhead Road (family housing residents), Galt Court (family housing residents), Butts Street (family housing residents) and Monteith Court.

"We recommend that family housing residents refrain from opening refrigerators and freezers during these outages as much as possible," Chancey said.

Better Opportunities for Single Soldiers

Recycling provides dollars for program

Better Opportunities for Single Soldiers program

The Better Opportunities for Single Soldiers recycling program provides money for the BOSS program.

"Recycling represents a small contribution, but it adds up," said Spc. Caryn Bumpstead, BOSS President.

"BOSS wants to collect at least 4,500 pounds of cans per quarter during fiscal 1997, which gives the BOSS program a potential $1,000 each quarter," Bumpstead said. "If we can get this much recycling done, we will top last years record by more than 1,500 pounds."

The funds collected from recycling pay for single soldier trips and events. During the past few years, the BOSS program sponsored events like the Single Soldier Valentines Day auction, free food at the Sledgehammer Sports Bar, a golf tournament, and more recently, free pizza for those who attended the quarterly post BOSS meeting.

The money raised during the last fiscal year combined with the money raised this year helps to sponsor upcoming BOSS events. Officials currently plan a trip for March, Bumpstead said.

"The recycling program is at an all-time low this year," she said. "It seems as if most people would rather throw their cans in the garbage than in the recycling bins. I see this every day, everywhere I go.

"But this isn't the only problem," she said. "I've even watched people take the cans out of the BOSS containers for their own personal gain.

"This takes away from the soldiers who are trying to contribute to the program, and it defeats the purpose of providing the collection containers."

For more information, call the BOSS recycling hot line at 545-7204.

AG changes points recomps

Adjutant General's Office

Effective Oct. 1, Army officials will no longer recompute promotion points for soldiers on promotion standing lists to grades E-5 and E-6.

Now officials add or subtract promotion points through the re-evaluation or the promotion point adjustment process.

The procedure and requirements to request promotion point adjustments remain the same.

However, the re-evaluation process has changed.

The Adjutant General's Promotions Branch requires the receipt of re-evaluations no later than the 20th of each month for them to take effect that month.

Under this new policy, the minimum points needed to request re-evaluation become 20 instead of 25. Each time a soldier obtains 20 or more points, he or she requests these points be added at any time by requesting re-evaluation on DA Form 3355.

Soldiers who possess 781 or more points on the promotion standing list request re-evaluation on DA Form 3355 once they increase their score by at least one-third, with fractions not included, of the remaining point total needed to achieve 800 points.

Re-evaluation points become effective on the first day of the third month following the date the new score is entered into the system. For instance, re-evaluation points entered into the system on any day in October become effective for promotion cut-off scores in January.

Some areas, such as an Army Physical Fitness Test score, become outdated in a soldier's promotion point worksheet and result in these points being withdrawn. If this happens, notification of the commander and soldier takes place in writing, and they receive 60 days to verify these points. The points given in this area become suspended until receipt of their verification. Suspended points not verified within 60 days become withdrawn on the 61st day and the new points entered immediately into the system and become effective immediately.

Updated information provided within that 60 days gets entered into the system as a promotion point adjustment and becomes effective the first day of the third month following the date entered, unless the point verification request came as a result of the soldier meeting the promotion cut-off score. In this case, the points become effective for the month of the cut-off score.

Soldiers with a total point score of 699 or less need to validate their promotion list standing within a 24-month period based on the date of their latest approved promotion action (this includes initial boards, re-evaluations and recomputations). Validation becomes accomplished through the re-evaluation process prior to the 24-month deadline.

Failure to accomplish this validation results in the soldier's administrative removal from the promotion standing list effective the first day of the 25th month. If the soldier fails to accrue 20 points at the 24-month deadline, then he or she gets either removed from the promotion standing list or requests total re-evaluation. Total re-evaluation includes the total process — the commander's recommendation, promotion board and administrative points.

Soldiers under suspension of favorable actions, or flagged, with 699 points or less during their 24th month need written validation no later than the last day of the 24th month from their promotion authority in order to remain on the promotion standing list. The soldier gets 60 days from the flag's removal date to complete a re-evaluation under these new rules. In addition, only those points accumulated during the 24 months from the last approved promotion action become included in this re-evaluation.

Soldiers with 700 or more total points are not subject to the 24-month validation rule.

Under these new rules, the probability of soldiers remaining on the promotion standing list longer than 12 months without any type of promotion action taken becomes great. If any of these soldiers meet the cut-off score for promotion, they then become at risk of not receiving the promotion because of outdated points.

Requirements stand for the promotion branch to review the promotion packets of all soldiers who meet promotion cut-off scores to verify eligibility and to ensure accuracy of administrative points granted. If, during this review, the branch discovers an outdated APFT, then the promotion points awarded in this area become suspended for 60 days, pending verification from the commander. This also suspends the promotion. The commander receives 60 days to verify these points.

Documentation verifying these points needs dating prior to the promotion month. If the documentation provided includes an updated APFT score and that score provides enough promotion points to keep the soldier's total points at or higher than the cut-off score announced, then the promotion becomes accomplished with the original effective date.

If the new APFT score causes the soldier's total points to drop below the announced cut-off score, then the soldier receives no promotion.

Lastly, if the points' verification remains impossible, then these points become removed on the 61st day, which also causes the soldier to not possess enough points for promotion as previously indicated.

The individual soldier bears the responsibility of ensuring updated and accurate documentation to support promotion points, and their receipt at the promotions branch in a timely manner. Failure to accomplish this results in possible removal action or missing a promotion opportunity.

Top black hat chosen

By Brian R. Voller
Bayonet staff writer

The top airborne instructor for 1996 received the title of Black Hat of the Year recently after he won the title besting several other instructors at the U.S. Army Airborne School.

Staff Sgt. Michael L. Elliot, Company D, 1st Battalion (Airborne), 507th Infantry, 11th Infantry Regiment, took the title after serving as an airborne instructor for only one year and three months.

"The Black hat of the Year competition involves taking a prepicked airborne instructor from each of the companies in the airborne battalion," Elliot said. "These instructors go through a battalion competition where they receive several different challenges that go toward a point system to determine the winner of the competition."

During the battalion competition, Elliot said, the competitors first take an Army Physical Fitness Test. Then, they receive a jumpmaster primary inspection test. Next, a board, similar to a regular E-5, or E-6 promotion board, evaluates them. Finally, the competitors deliver a lecture on one of the elements of Airborne School.

Elliot said each of these challenges gave the competitors certain points, which the battalion tallied to determine the Black Hat of the Year.

Staff Sgt. Michael L. Elliot is the Black Hat of the Year.

With his victory, Elliot now receives several opportunities to go with his new title.

"When you win Black Hat of the Year, you get to choose where it is you want to work at the Airborne School," Elliot said. "Now that I have won the competition, I've chosen to work as a master trainer at the jump branch of the school. I also wear a different black hat than everyone else in the school. I get to wear a gold band on my black hat with gold rank and gold airborne wings. These let everyone else know that I am the Black Hat of the Year."

After Elliot found out he received the Black Hat of the Year honor, he said he felt a mixture of both pride and respect.

"I had a very proud feeling and felt very good after I found out I won," Elliot said. "I felt a lot of respect also because all of the airborne instructors are really good at what they do, so to be chosen as this year's best feels really good."

Prior to becoming a black hat, Elliot worked as a squad leader with the 82nd Airborne Division, Fort Bragg, N.C. He said he became a black hat when the Department of the Army selected him to perform the duty.

"When I was notified that I was chosen to become an airborne instructor, I was kind of happy," Elliot said. "I knew that I was going to be teaching students, both young and old — something I love to do, which is being airborne."

With one year and three months of serving as a black hat behind him, Elliot said, he feels the graduation day and the pinning on of airborne wings remain the best parts of serving as a black hat.

"The best part of being a black hat is graduation day when I get the chance to pin the airborne wings on the soldiers," Elliot said. "When I get an airborne soldier who is 17 or 18 years old and he gets teary eyed in front of me because in three weeks he learned how to jump out of airplanes, I feel a lot of pride because of what we teach," he said.

Now that Elliot boasts the Black Hat of the Year title, he said he plans to look ahead to the rest of his career and his short-term goals.

"My short-term goal for right now is to spend a year to a year and a half at the jump branch," Elliot said. "I eventually would like to take over the Silver Wings, the post's command exhibition parachute team, of which I have been a member for about a year."

Water treatment unit hydrates Force XXI

By Richard Puckett
13th Public Affairs Detachment

FORT HOOD, TEXAS — With an estimated 5,000 4th Infantry Division Experimental Force soldiers drinking about six quarts of water a day during training, the four-person water treatment team from the 4th Forward Support Battalion might be excused for feeling a bit overwhelmed.

But Sgt. Ignacio Martinez's troops met the challenge head on, providing not only fresh drinking water but also training on the river's osmosis water purification unit.

Although weather conditions at Fort Hood prevented the unit from providing drinking water from area lakes, the team continues to prepare for the possibility.

"In a real-world scenario, we may be the only water source for the entire brigade," Martinez said. "You can't always get water from folks like Range Control or have drinking water readily available. It's important that we are ready to perform that mission.

"The purified water tastes just like water form a faucet," Martinez said. "It's got more of a chlorine taste, but other than that, it's the same."

Playing such a vital role in the survival of so many soldiers remains great feeling, according to Pfc. Wayne Potter.

"It's nice to know that so many people rely on you," he said. "It really helps you feel good about doing your job."

The Force XXI configuration calls for a treatment team at the brigade support area level. The added importance means even more dependency on this four-person team.

"It definitely makes the job more interesting," Martinez said. "This really enhances our mission."

Every truckload of water brought out for soldiers receives testing. Using a chlorine compensator, the team members evaluate its drinkability.

"This is one of our most important functions," Martinez said. "Potable water is used for so many things. Cooks use the most and it has to be usable. Without water, people wouldn't be clean, they'd get infections and wouldn't be effective."

Tactical network improves future Army force

By William P. Bradner
13th Public Affairs Detachment

Army officials considered operational security and maintaining the network — even with battle losses — when designing the Force XXI tactical network.

"The net has a number of fail safes built into it — and the architecture is always thinking about back-ups for every situation ... we have challenges a standard network manager doesn't have to consider," said Sgt. 1st Class Enrique Mendoza, the Signal Center Liaison noncommissioned officer at the experimental force coordination cell.

Those challenges include losses due to enemy fire, captured network stations and electronic jamming and interference to radio signals. The network protocol — called Open Shortest Path First — assists the internet controller in determining the best path to send the traffic. Meanwhile, a systems integration van monitors every link or break in the system, overcoming these potential shortfalls.

Force XXI makes improvements

By William P. Bradner

FORT HOOD, Texas — Situational awareness represents one of the cornerstones of the Force XXI effort. Knowing the location of all friendly and enemy elements on the battlefield remains an instrumental part of the experiment being conducted at Fort Hood.

Data on friendlies receives updating in the computer system as frequently as every 30 seconds, using input from the users, global positioning technology and message and radio traffic. The enemy, however, usually offers no easily-obtainable information.

Seventy-seven soldiers recently organized into a recon troop that directly supports the 1st Brigade, 4th Infantry Division, with human intelligence, according to troop commander Capt. Troy Faber.

"Nothing beats eyes forward on the battle field," Faber said.

A brigade-level reconnaissance element remains one of more than 90 initiatives receiving testing in the Advanced Warfighting Experiment.

"Between this troop and the Applique system (Applique is voice and data flows), we now have a link with recon, scout and division intelligence on the same platform — we're able to cross check each other," Maj. William Weigeshoff, brigade intelligence officer said.

While Weigeshoff emphasized that accurate, up-to-date information on enemy movement remains essential to battle planning, Faber focused more on what he sends back to the commander on the move.

Using Force XXI hardware, Faber's soldiers possess the ability to send a picture of the forward terrain back to the brigade operations center. In less than 30 seconds the commander looks at the terrain through his computer screen.

"There's no interpretation," Faber said. "We have a lot of fun with this; and, in the right location, it's an incredible tool."

Pfc. Jason A. McClain, a scout assigned to the troop, thinks the new hardware definitely affects the way the troops perform.

"We'll maneuver into smaller cover and see more without giving our position away, but our mission is still to locate and identify targets," he said. "We could do that with binoculars, but we sure wouldn't be able to see 10 kilometers like we can using the technology," he said.

Faber quickly points out that Applique and Force XXI initiatives change the way he gathers and sends data, but really fail to change his mission or the way he carries out operations.

"We still have to sneak and peak, but now we can see farther and move quicker," Faber said.

The recon troop writes Army doctrine, as well as history, according to Maj. Gen. Paul J. Kern, 4th Infantry Division commanding general.

"You are learning what the Army needs to know," he said to a group of soldiers during a recent field visit. "When you hit sergeant major and break out the book to teach your soldiers how it's done, you'll be able to say you wrote that book. We need to learn your lessons, so tell it like it is," he said.

The recon troop includes its own support elements and remains self-sufficient in the field and in garrison and, Faber said, that standing the troop up in the middle of a training cycle became a challenge, but one that his soldiers met with confidence.

network remains possible when the platform becomes overrun or captured.

"Brigade tactical operations centers have always been high risk, so standing operating procedures are in place to identify security breaches and destroy equipment if necessary," Mendoza said.

The situational awareness that commanders receive using the network remains worth the minimal security risk, according to Lt. Col. Philip North, 1st Battalion, 22nd Infantry Regiment, commander.

"This affords me the opportunity to start thinking long-term and start planning operations with more time to get all my elements ready to go," North said.

profile in excellence

Name: Staff Sgt. Stanley D. Varner

Award or recognition: Drill Sergeant of the Year 1996
MOS: 11M3X (Bradley fighting vehicle infantryman)
Unit: Company C, 2nd Battalion, 58th Infantry Regiment
Job title: Drill sergeant
Years in the service: 8 years, 2 months

What were your reasons for joining the Army? Originally, I joined the Army on a whim. Once I got to my first duty station; I started working with the Bradley fighting vehicles and really got interested in becoming part of the Army team.

Define your style of leadership.
I lead through example. I believe that you can get more out of a soldier if you are there with him or her in the cold and the mud than on the sidelines yelling and screaming at him or her.

What person has most influenced your career?
My wife, Crystal, has played an enormous role in my Army career by always supporting me and being there when I needed her.

If you were sergeant major of the Army for a day, what improvements would you make?
I would give staff sergeants and sergeants first class a narrative on exactly what board members are looking for in their selection processes to the next rank.

What were your reasons for choosing your military occupational specialty?
My MOS was chosen for me. However, I chose to attend drill sergeant school. I wanted to take an active part in the change of today's soldiers coming from one station unit training to your units.

Describe a memorable moment in your career.
Participating in Desert Storm and returning home to see my family.

What are your future career plans?
After completing my drill sergeant commitment, I plan to return to a deployable unit and motivate a platoon of 11Ms. I also plan to further my civilian schooling and continue working toward a degree in criminal justice.

What others have to say: "Drill Sergeant Varner's professionalism and dedication to duty have proved to his superiors that he can be counted on. He is a drill sergeant who leads from the front, sets the example and maintains the standards."

— 1st Sgt. Lionel Haynes
First sergeant, Company C, 2nd Bn., 58th Inf. Regt.

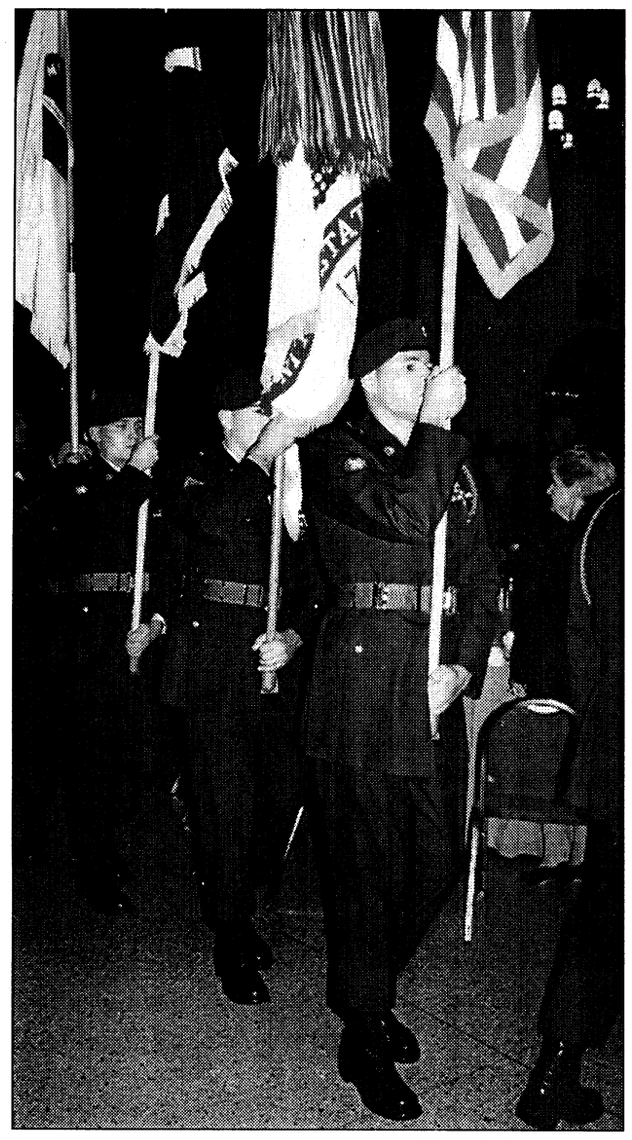
The principal at Fort Benning's Herbert J. Dexter Elementary School has been selected to represent the Department of Defense Elementary and Secondary Schools on the Advisory Council of Dependents' Education.

Vicki Rogers received her invitation to join the group from Lillian Gonzalez, director, Department of Defense Education Activity after Rogers' selection as a national distinguished principal.



The Department of Defense Elementary and Secondary Schools was selected to send a representative for council evaluations only once before.

As a member of the advisory council team, which accredits overseas schools, Rogers travels to schools in Okinawa. After that visit takes place, the team meets with three others in Tokyo to develop an accreditation report for schools in the Pacific region.

Good relations

Leaders from Fort Benning, Columbus and Phenix City's past and present gathered in the Fort Benning Officers' Club Oct. 18 to celebrate the 50th anniversary of the Civilian Military Council. During the ceremony, Columbus Mayor Bobby Peters, Phenix City's City Manager Bobby Gaylor and Fort Benning's Commanding General Maj. Gen. Carl F. Ernst signed a proclamation to continue the CMC and to continue good relations between the civilian and military communities. Former Columbus Mayor Harry Jackson toasted the 50th anniversary and said the council was essential to keeping the military and the civilian communities up to date and on good terms. Former post commander and retired Lt. Gen. Orwin C. Talbott called the CMC an invaluable organization. Talbott also presided at the council's 25th anniversary.

va q&a

Department of Veterans Affairs

Q: I understood that health care provided under the Persian Gulf program was free, so I was surprised to get a notice from my insurance company that it was billed for care I received in follow-up visits after my Persian Gulf Registry exam. Is that right?

A: VA has special authority to provide follow-up care to those deployed to the Gulf at no charge to the veteran if a VA physician determines that a condition could have been possibly related to Gulf service. While the follow-up care, like the registry health examination, is free to the veteran, VA is authorized by law to seek reimbursement from third-party insurance companies for all care for conditions that are not service-connected. This billing policy even includes insurers of service-connected veterans receiving care for nonservice-connected conditions, and it covers veterans of all eras. The only case in which VA charges a copayment of Gulf veterans covered by the special medical eligibility is a small fee for medications, currently limited to $2 per each 30-day outpatient supply of pharmaceuticals. Otherwise, there should never be any charge passed along to the Gulf veteran for treatment under the special program.

Q: For recipients of Dependency and Indemnity Compensation, what are the new rates for those of us in the post-1992 program, and how much extra is being added for each child?

A: Effective Dec. 1, 1995, survivors covered in that program are receiving $810 per month with $205 additional for each child under age 18. Survivors covered in the earlier program (deaths prior to January 1993) are compensated according to the servicemember's rank.

Q: I am optimistic the outcome of my pending claim will be favorable. If awarded, will it be retroactive to the date of the diagnosis or to when I filed the claim?

A: Compensation generally is awarded retroactive to the date of the veteran's claim filing.

Q: Does a Department of Veterans home loan entitlement provide cash to the veteran?

A: No. The amount of entitlement relates only to the amount VA will guarantee the lender against loss. The one exception is that Native American veterans are entitled to a direct loan for up to $80,000 to purchase, construct or improve dwellings located on trust lands.

Editor's note: If you have a question regarding your VA benefits, call the VA regional office at (800) 827-1000.

Haunted House to benefit Santa's Castle — The 11th Infantry Regiment sponsors a Haunted House, located in Building 2409, on 82nd Airborne Division Road by Lawson Army Airfield. The house opens today and Saturday from 6 to 10 p.m., and Thursday from 6 to 9 p.m. Admission costs $5 per family or a new toy.

Post school to sponsor a free track meet — A school-wide track meet takes place Saturday from 9:30 to 11:30 a.m. at Edward A. White Elementary School.

Competitions at the event include 200-400- and 600-meter runs, the 50-yard dash, pull ups, standing long jump, medicine ball throw and an obstacle course.

It costs students nothing to compete, but event coordinators require each participant to provide a signed permission slip.

Childcare center celebrates with open house — To celebrate 39 years of service to the Fort Benning community, Tot Town offers goodies and coffee Monday from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m.

Tricare briefings set — The Tricare Service Center representatives plan to conduct briefings so they can explain the Tricare system and its options to all eligible personnel Tuesday at 6 p.m. in Infantry Hall, Building 4, Classroom 4.

For information, call the Tricare Service Center at (800) 444-5445 or the health benefits adviser at 544-3461.

Commissary to make changes — The mall entrance to the Commissary closes Tuesday through Nov. 5 and moves to the first set of doors in front of the building which was formerly used as the bagger entrance. A commissary employee will check patron identification at the new entrance. Also, a new produce department opens Tuesday and the Commissary deli relocates next to the new produce department on a temporary basis. Finally, cashiers begin checking identifications at the check-out stand. Cashiers must see identification before ringing out the patron's order.

Fall cleanup — A post-wide fall cleanup of the post cantonment and housing areas takes place from Nov. 18 to 22.

Occupants bear the responsibility for the cleanup of their quarters, including yard maintenance and moving improperly parked vehicles.

Area coordinators offer assistance in the facilitating of removal of large debris, bulk recyclable aluminum and large scrap aluminum. These coordinators also conduct inspections Nov. 22 to ensure each person's quarters meet required installation standards.

Agencies to provide family support at Post Fall Family Fair

By Lisa M. Hibbert
Bayonet staff writer

Several Fort Benning family support agencies team up to serve as hosts for a Fall Family Fair Saturday from 10 a.m. to 3 p.m. at the Youth Activities Center.

The fair gives soldiers and their families the opportunity to experience in one place the many post agencies that serve them, said Chaplain (Maj.) Robert Thompson, chief of Family Life Ministries. Each representing agency sets up an exhibit or booth with staff to answer questions.

Participating agencies include the U.S. Army Dental Activity, the Directorate of Public Safety, the U.S. Army Medical Department Activity and more. Fair-goers receive prizes and health assessments and enrollment information for classes in dealing with stress and family issues.

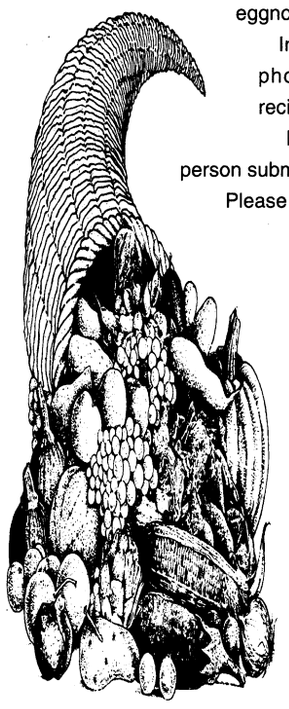
"We believe that Army families are special and face special challenges," said Lt. Col. Joann Hollandsworth, chairwoman of the council and chief of Preventive Medicine and community health nurse at Martin Army Community Hospital.

"We want to let them know of all the many places here at Fort Benning where they can find help," she said.

"Army families are fortunate to have access to a variety of helping agencies, which are not readily available off post," Thompson said. "The fair is a great reminder of all these resources."

Fair activities include breast and prostate health information from hospital representatives, finger printing for children by members of the Military Police Activity and the presence of a Tricare representative to answer enrollment questions.

Activities for the children include a climbing wall and a bicycle rodeo. McGruff the crime dog also plans to make an appearance at the fair.



Patch Preschool's new computer lab opens its doors to the community during the fair.

Organizers also offer free food and door prizes at the fair.

Tricare to implement health care hot line

By Lisa M. Hibbert
Bayonet staff writer

"Taking Care of Yourself," a self-care manual, and Ask-A-Nurse, a healthcare information hot line, comprise the newest additions to the Tricare system.

The 24-hour, Ask-A-Nurse healthcare information hot line, (800) 333-5331, links callers with nurses at phone centers throughout the country who help callers decide what type of care they need.

"One of the initiatives of Tricare is to get patients and doctors to form a partnership in health care," said Lt. Col. Joann Hollandsworth, chief of preventive medicine. "Consumers can get help and information at the appropriate level of care they need."

"One of the ways you can find out what type of care you need is by calling the hot line rather than just coming to the emergency room or going to the doctor."

"They use the algorithm method," Hollandsworth said. "They'll ask, for example, if your child has a fever, how old is the child. If the child is under a certain age or the temperature is over a certain point, they'll tell you to go to the emergency room. But if callers answer no to the first set of questions, they'll keep going down the list until they can assist the callers with what type of services they might need.

Self-care manuals, plus nurse advice hot lines already exist in many locations throughout the country. Through the new Tricare system, all active duty soldiers, family members and retirees throughout all the branches of service now can access the additional service at no cost to them.

"This service is not to discourage people from going to the hospital," Hollandsworth said. "We hope this will save the consumer time. Instead of sitting in an emergency room waiting area for hours, they can now call and find out if the illness is serious enough to require emergency care; and, if not, the consumer receives information on how to apply home treatments."

"We really want people to know how important it is to be a partner in their own health care," Hollandsworth said. "It really works to their advantage by saving them time and money, and it improves the care the doctors are able to provide.

"This is just an attempt to meet beneficiaries' needs by offering more choices," Hollandsworth said.

ENERGY AWARENESS WEEK

Conserving saves environment, money

Directorate of Public Works

Energy Awareness Week, a time to reflect on past energy use and to think of how to better use and save energy in the future, starts today and continues through Nov. 1.

Each year, Fort Benning spends $11 million for electricity, $5 million for natural gas, $500,000 for heating fuels and $500,000 for propane. All of this money comes from the installations operational budget. According to Mark Fincher, chief, Energy Branch, Directorate of Public Works, every dollar saved on energy is a dollar spent on upgrading the facilities that military families live or work in.

"Experience shows that low-cost and no-cost measures cut an installation's energy bill by 10 to 25 percent," Fincher said. "This means millions of dollars in savings at a typical installation."

Some of the good reasons to save energy, according to Fincher, follow:

•Energy conservation helps the environment. When people burn less fossil fuel, they release fewer pollutants into the atmosphere.

•Energy conservation affects national security in a very direct way; using less oil reduces the nation's dependence on imports.

•Conserving fuel for tactical vehicles means the availability of fuel for unit training and field exercises.

•Finally, conserving fossil fuel now means Americans possess fossil fuel for future use, while scientists develop alternative sources of energy.

Everyone can help by saving energy at home and at work, Fincher said. A few tips for energy conservation follow:

•Turn off lights, computers and other electrical equipment when not using them.

•Avoid using nonessential appliances during peak demand times. Clothes dryers, washing machines and dishwashers all consume large amounts of electricity.

For instance, drying clothes during a peak period increases the installation's demand for electricity by as much as five kilowatts, which costs Fort Benning as much as $450 over the course of a year, according to Fincher. The Energy Office offers information about when the peak demand occurs on the installation.

•Use public transportation when possible. It uses one-thirtieth the energy, per person, of driving alone in a car.

•Car pool, walk or ride a bicycle, especially to and from work.

•Combine errands when driving. Try to accomplish several errands in one trip.

•Avoid leaving a vehicle's engine idling unnecessarily. This wastes fuel and causes air pollution.

•Obey speed limits and drive smoothly. A car gets 20 percent better gas mileage at 55 mph than at 70 mph. According to experts, a car's gas mileage increases by five percent when smoothly starting and speeding up.

•Insulate, weather-strip and install drapes to reduce drafts all year. Close drapes during the summer months to reduce solar heating.

•When running a furnace or air conditioner, keep doors and windows closed. Leaving them open wastes energy. (Open windows and doors instead of using air-conditioning to cool off a hot room during the winter. Window exhaust fans work well on cool summer evenings).

•Re-use things. Use them as long as possible. (Find new uses for old things). Avoid buying a new appliance if the old one can be repaired. This saves money as well as energy.

•Purchase the most energy-efficient appliances. Many utilities pay part or all of the added cost of energy-efficient refrigerators, heat pumps and other major appliances.

•Support restrictions on smoking indoors. Tobacco smoke raises energy costs for heating and cooling buildings, especially cooling.

Why? Ventilation and air filtration to remove smoke make air conditioners work harder, boosting energy consumption greatly. The extra energy used does not guarantee the healthiness or smoke-free scent of indoor air.

•Form a "green squad" within each unit. Hold meetings, inspect for energy waste, make suggestions to management, get everybody involved and keep energy awareness high.

"Make energy conservation a year-round habit," Fincher said. "It saves money for the individual and the government, while helping the environment."

Victims need to leave any abusive situation

Family Advocacy Program

Americans focus on domestic violence awareness during October.

The Army Community Service, Family Advocacy Program manager, Rebecca S. Welch offers the following tips for making the safest possible decision when leaving an abusive situation.

•Keep important papers and supplies together in a safe, accessible place. Keep copies of these papers with trusted friends, just in case an unexpected emergency occurs. Important papers and supplies include identification cards, passports, Immigration and Naturalization Services green cards, birth certificates, social security cards, cash, checkbook, automatic teller machine cards, and credit cards.

Other items include a marriage certificate or divorce papers; bank books; insurance papers; school and immunization records; medical records; address books; keys to car, house, office, or other important places; medications, and other necessary items.

•Establish a signal or code with neighbors or friends so that they know to call the police to help you if your situation becomes violent.

•If violence seems imminent, stay away from the kitchen, bathroom, garage or any room without a door.

•Leave quietly and quickly, avoiding confrontation. Try to stay calm.

•Notify the police whenever necessary, and cooperate fully with their procedures.

•Obtain an order of protection, carry it with you, and consistently enforce it. Make sure that the police keep a copy of it on file.

•Notify your children's schools, baby-sitters, scout leaders, etc., what you expect from them if your spouse attempts to pick the children up or remove them from their program. If your Order of Protection includes the children in any way, the school will need a copy of it.

•Notify your employer and security at your workplace about your leaving. They need to know your situation in case your spouse calls or comes to your workplace.

•Vary your routines — travel by another route, shop at different stores.

•Carry change for emergency phone calls and report any harassment promptly.

•Avoid contact with your abuser, unless it occurs in a public place and with other adults present.

•Accept no excuses or romantic or tearful apologies.

•Believe in yourself and in the correctness of your decision.

Creepy costumes, goblins create childhood fears

Egleston Children's Hospital

Children commonly experience fears. Helping them learn to cope with and overcome these fears, at Halloween and anytime, remains the best medicine a parent can give, said Dr. Laura L. Mee, child psychologist with Egleston Children's Hospital at Emory University.

For preschoolers, fears heighten at Halloween. Mee advised parents to choose activities, and costumes, carefully.

"Each developmental stage in a child's life brings new fears," she said. "Monsters, supernatural phenomenon and the dark are especially frightening for preschoolers.

"The first step in helping young children cope during Halloween is avoiding movies, activities (such as haunted houses) and costume characters that are intended to frighten people," Mee said. To help preschoolers enjoy Halloween festivities, Mee offered these tips:

•Dress preschoolers in cheerful Halloween costumes, including happy ghosts and goblins. Playing "dress up" helps them understand that some scary characters they see trick-or-treating are really older boys and girls having fun.

•Consider school or community carnivals rather than taking little ghosts or goblins door-to-door in the neighborhood.

•If your preschooler wants to trick-or-treat like the big kids, go in small groups late in the afternoon or before dusk. Things seem less scary in the sunshine.

While teaching coping strategies remains the best tool a parent possesses, belittling fears or ridiculing a child represents the worst possible action to take.

"Even though we know there is no monster under the bed or ghost in the closet, to a child, those possibilities are very real," Mee said. "Do your best to calm a frightened child by asking him to talk about it. And I am all for crutches of any kind that work. Flashlights that 'zap' monsters in the dark and water bottles that squirt magic spray to keep ghosts away are great for conquering fears."

Mee suggested families with very scared children not participate in Halloween festivities.

"I think it's a big myth that forcing a child to go through a fearful situation will help him get over it," she said. "Forcing a child often does more harm than good. You have to let a child go at his or her own pace. I'm a strong believer in gradual exposure to experiences a child finds stressful."

Since fears change with each stage of a child's development, Mee offered parents a list of the most common childhood fears:

•Infants — fear of heights, loss of physical support, loud noises and unpredictable events;

•Toddlers — fear of strangers, separation from parents and toilet training;

•Preschoolers — fear of abandonment, uncontrollable things, monsters, supernatural phenomenon and the dark;

•School-age kids — school-related worries, such as school performance and fear of failure, peer problems and illness; and •Adolescents — peer acceptance, relationships, sexual matters and relationships.

Pet owners need to remember holiday safety for animals during Halloween

ARMY CAREER & ALUMNI PROGRAM "SHOWING WE CARE"

By Vanessa Craine
Veterinary Services

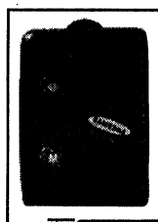
Holiday safety applies to pets as well as people. What people see as fun and exciting sometimes cause drastic changes to an animal's normal routine and often becomes upsetting for the family dog or cat.

Halloween, for example, causes stress, especially when a dog or cat meets up with Frankenstein or the Wolfman.

What people see as make believe, pets often view as threatening or aggressive.

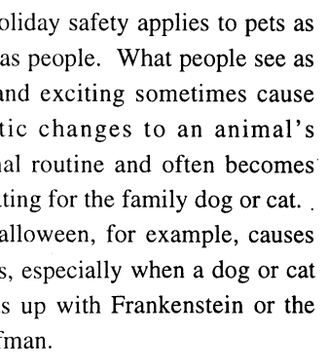
Keeping pets away from Halloween festivities remains the best way to avoid someone getting bit.

The same rule applies for Halloween treats. Chocolate becomes a deadly treat when fed to pets.



Hard candies also remain terrible for an animal's diet, as well as all human foods. Just like human teeth, biting down on hard candy causes damage to pets' teeth.

If people take their pets trick or treating with them, they need to make sure they keep the animals on leashes and under control at all times. They also need to take extra plastic bags along to dispose of their animals' waste.



Keeping pets away from trick or treaters, especially those in costumes, remains the best way to keep animals happy, healthy and safe. Also, avoid feeding pets any treats, even table scraps.

By following these safety tips and applying common sense, pet owners avoid tragedy.

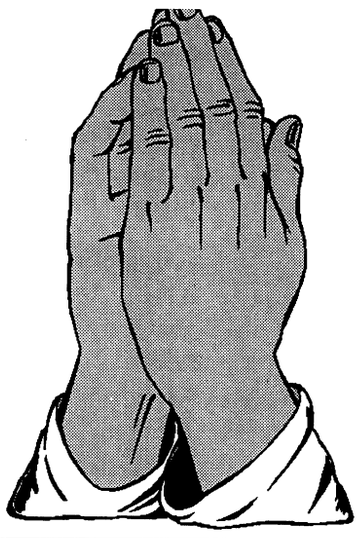
Growing: Breaking outer molds releases inner beauty

By Robert Blessing
2nd Battalion, 69th Armor Regiment

Most precious coins, plaques or statues come from a cast mold. Looking at the outside of a mold, it appears ugly, useless, dirty and ready for the junk heap.

A mold looks bad and possesses no great strength of its own. The true beauty and brightness lies with the element inside the ugly mold.

People from all nations respond in awe to the beauty revealed when the mold breaks. Without the ugly mold, the precious elements never develop.



Do you ever feel useless, unskilled and incapable? Do you feel that God never uses you to honor him in this world? Do you ever feel physically, emotionally or intellectually handicapped by something in your life; and, as a result, you feel discouraged about trying to follow God and serve him. Your handicaps seem insurmountable.

I have never met anyone without some kind of handicap or problem that causes them concern, such as a lack of beauty, intelligence, skill or talent. They believe they are no good and give up.

Although perfection seems unattainable for whatever reason, the precious Holy Spirit within you shines out to show God's glory. This happens through the image of God that shows through you.

Psalm 139:14 reads, "I praise you because I am fearfully and wonderfully made." This states that though you remain imperfect, God made you to reveal his glory to the world. You represent perfection in God's service.

He uses you, in spite of any imperfection you possess. His name receives glory, but only if you break your pride and let him use you, in spite of all your imperfections.

reflections

The mold appears ugly but when broken, the precious element inside emerges. You need to let your mold break open. You need it broken to let his glory emerge.

Submitting to him breaks the outer mold of bitterness and pride and allows the precious element within you to shine

REFORMATION

Protest starts Protestant religion

By Richard Gary Moore
USAIC Chaplains Office

On All Hallows Eve, Oct. 31, 1517, Martin Luther, a professor of biblical theology at the University of Wittenberg, Germany, posted his 95 theses on the door of the Castle Church.

By posting a printed Latin placard in accord with current practice, Luther sought a debate with church scholars on his objection to the validity of indulgences. These 95 candid and bold statements started a movement and, in the course of time, that October day marks the beginning of the Protestant Reformation.

Luther objected to the proclaimed salvation power of these indulgences, letters sold to nobles and common people for cash money. Vendors, priests authorized by the Roman Church, entered towns in solemn processions. They set in the market places a cross and began preaching. The sermon intended for the people to consider the tormented souls of their loved ones. Those who bought letters of indulgence attempted to redeem their dead relatives from purgatory to the joys and freedom of heaven. A short rhyme that brought home the point of the sermon was: "As soon as the coin in the coffer rings, The soul from purgatory springs."

Too much for Martin Luther, he sought academic discussions so that changes in the church's teaching and practices would follow. He did not intend a public debate, but others secretly translated the theses into German and rushed them to the printing press.

Many praised Luther's theses as a call to the reformation of the Christian church. Others criticized him for attacking the church. Woven into the theses, Luther took a stand for an individual's salvation. Eternal life, living after the physical body dies as offered in the Gospel, demonstrates an act of God's grace through faith in Jesus Christ — nothing more and nothing less. Luther's new interpretation came from his understanding of the Scriptures. This final reliance on the Scriptures alone and the resolute belief that grace saves a person through faith alone comprise the foundations of the Reformation movement.

Martin Luther's unexpected rise as the originator of the Protestant Reformation resembles a man climbing a winding and very dark staircase in the steeple of an old church. In the darkness he reached out to steady himself and his hand took hold of a rope. The clanging of a bell surprised him.

chapel notes

Sunday school class uses sermon scriptures — A new adult class provides students an opportunity to study the Scripture in preparation for the morning sermon.

The Fort Benning Sunday School takes place Sundays from 9:30 to 10:30 a.m. in Building 2517 at the Religious Education Center.

For more information, call 545-4715.

Children's program — The Religious Education Center plans a new segment of its children's Bible study program, Personal Attitudes Relating To You.

The new segment, Children Living Under the Bible, includes Bible study and Scripture memorization, basic etiquette skills, table and home decorating and some sewing and cooking skills.

The class meets the first Saturday of each month from noon to 2 p.m. at the Religious Education Center, Building 2521.

The class is open to girls in grades three through six.

CCD classes to resume — The Post Chaplains Office conducts Confraternity of Christian Doctrine classes at 10:10 a.m. Sundays in Herbert J. Dexter School.

Classes are conducted for preschool children as well as for primary grades, junior and high school students and adults.

Parents may register their children after mass at the Main Post Catholic Chapel.

MACH offers new worship services — Martin Army Community Hospital chaplains now provide two collective Protestant services in the hospital chapel:

- Sundays — 8 to 8:30 a.m.
- Thursdays — noon to 12:30 p.m.

Individuals can also attend a Bible study Tuesdays from noon to 12:30 p.m in the hospital chapel.

Post chaplains seek workers — Fort Benning chaplains seek pianists, organists, choir directors, bus drivers and teachers for Sunday School and Confraternity of Christian Doctrine classes.

The chaplains also need part-time office help and individuals to watch young children during religious activities.

Call the USAIC Chaplains Office at 545-1934, or visit the office in Building 75, for details of times, places and duties.

Class continues study of Revelation — Members of the Adult 1 Sunday School continue their study of the Book of Revelation at 9:30 a.m. each Sunday at the Religious Education Center, Building 2521, behind the Airborne Chapel.

For more information, call Steve Russell at 685-9276.

Sunday School bus — The U.S. Army Infantry Center Chaplains Office provides bus transportation to and from Fort Benning Main Post Sunday School for all soldiers and families living on post.

The Main Post Sunday School includes classes for ages 2 years through adult and meets at the Religious Education Center, Building 2517.

REC to resume language classes — Instructors conduct English language classes for beginners and advanced students each Tuesday from 9:30 to 11:30 a.m.at the Religious Education Center, Building 2522.

Students must purchase books for the free classes.

Fire officials say test your smoke detectors

Fire Prevention and Protection Division

The single-station, battery-powered smoke detectors, similar to the ones used today, became available to consumers in the 1970s.

According to the National Fire Prevention Agency, 93 percent of U.S. home owners possess at least one smoke detector. They save so many lives that most states require them in residential dwellings.

Still a major problem

Although 13 of every 14 homes have at least one smoke detector, almost half of home fires and three-fifths of fire deaths occur in the share of homes with no detectors. Thousands of people still die each year in fires at homes without detectors.

In addition, the homes with nonworking smoke detectors out numbers the homes without smoke detectors.

These poorly maintained units create a false sense of security among occupants. Approximately one-third of the homes with smoke detectors that experience fires possess malfunctioning detectors, and hundreds of people die each year in these fires.

Tragically, the importance of installing and maintaining smoke detectors still remains not yet realized. Most people who die in a home fire die in a room other than the one in which the fire starts. Working smoke detectors alert people to fire and give them time to escape in a situation where minutes mean the difference between life and death.

Saving lives

Smoke detectors cut the chance of dying in a home fire nearly in half. By properly placing, regularly testing and maintaining detectors, home owners ensure themselves of an alert to fire.

Make sure to buy only those detectors that bear the mark of an independent testing laboratory. Some detectors operate using an "ionization" sensor while others use a "photoelectric" sensor. An ionization detector uses an extremely small quantity of radio-active material to make the air in the detector chamber conduct electricity. Smoke from a fire interferes with the electrical current and triggers the alarm.

A photoelectric detector uses a tiny light source shining on a light sensitive sensor. Smoke from a fire interferes with the light and triggers the alarm. All tested and labeled smoke detectors offer adequate protection if properly installed and maintained.

Placement remains priority

A recent NFPA report on smoke detectors found that a substantial number of households fail to carry the devices on every level of the home as needed.

The majority of fire deaths occur at night when people sleep. NFPA's National Fire Alarm Code (NFPA 72) requires installation of smoke detectors on every level — including the basement — and outside each sleeping area. The code requires installation in new homes of a smoke detector in each sleeping area as well.

To slow the spread of smoke and fumes if a fire develops, NFPA suggests that people sleep with bedroom doors closed. If sleeping with bedroom doors closed, install a smoke detector inside each bedroom. Detectors also need installation in other areas of the home where people sleep.

In new homes, the National Fire Alarm Code requires the interconnection of hard-wired detectors, so that if one detector activates, all detectors sound the alarm signal. On floors without bedrooms, install smoke detectors in or near living areas such as family rooms and living rooms.

Detectors hard-wired into the home electrical system need installation by a qualified electrician. If the detector plugs into a wall socket, make sure it includes a restraining device to keep its plug from being pulled out. Never connect a detector to a closable circuit. Most detectors run off battery power and can be installed with screwdrivers and drills.

No Fort Benning fire death has ever been attributed to residential fires, according to Arthur Simmons, chief of Fire Protection and Prevention Division, Directorate of Public Safety.

ask the judge

By Rick Parker
Office of the Staff Judge Advocate

Q: What requirements for automobile insurance exist in Georgia, and what do I need to know about buying it?

A: Every person operating a motor vehicle requiring registration in Georgia needs to possess, at a minimum, a policy of liability insurance on the vehicle, which pays up to $15,000 as a result of injury to one person, up to $30,000 as a result of injury to more than one person in one accident and up to $10,000 as a result of damage to property belonging to another person.

Liability insurance pays for damages to others caused when a driver acts carelessly or negligently.

If a driver causes someone damage or injury because of carelessness, the law requires that driver to pay that person for his or her damages, medical expenses, pain and suffering and the like. With today's astronomical medical expenses, most people remain unable to afford such cost.

The minimum state law requirements only apply to liability insurance. Know that most banks require persons with liens against their vehicles to purchase collision and comprehensive insurance for their vehicles. This insurance pays for damage or loss to a persons car, no matter who might be at fault. It also pays for damage or loss because of theft, vandalism and weather.

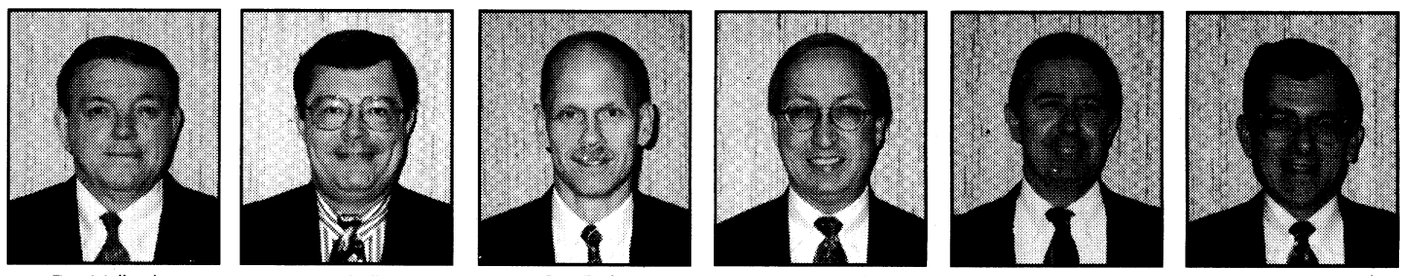
The liability insurance required by the state does not satisfy bank requirements. If the bank requires a person to purchase this type of insurance and he or she fails to comply, the bank purchases a policy that only covers the bank's interest in the vehicle (the balance of the loan) and adds the cost of the insurance to the vehicle purchaser's loan.

When seeking to purchase liability or collision and comprehensive insurance, people need to shop around. Go to agents that only sell one company's insurance policies and to independent agents who sell policies from a number of different companies. Although they sell the same coverage, different companies handle claims differently — some handle them quite well while others seem terrible in the area of customer service.

Ask friends and acquaintances about their experience with their companies. Most policies sell for a minimum six-month term of coverage, and most insurance companies require a driver to pay the premium for the full six-month period up front.

If a driver purchases collision and comprehensive insurance and wants to keep the cost down, he or she needs to consider a higher deductible. Most policies offer a standard $250 deductible, but a $500 deductible significantly lowers the premium.

Of course, this means that a person pays the first $500 in damages out of his or her pocket. The option of purchasing insurance with a higher deductible for a lower premium remains a gamble a driver takes.



For more information about insurance requirements or problems concerning an insurance policy, contact the Legal Assistance Division at 545-3281 for an appointment.

Competitions begin at 8 a.m. and 1 p.m. Golfers compete in the open division, a four-man team scramble; the hooah division, a four-man team scramble requiring at least three rangers to participate on each team; or the coed division, a two-male, two-female team scramble.

Entry fees, which include green and cart fees, driving range balls, beverages and admission to the Hooah Bash at the 19th hole, cost $21 for military members ranking E-6 and below; $23 for E-7 ranking and above; and $25 for civilians, excluding family members. Mulligans cost $2 each.

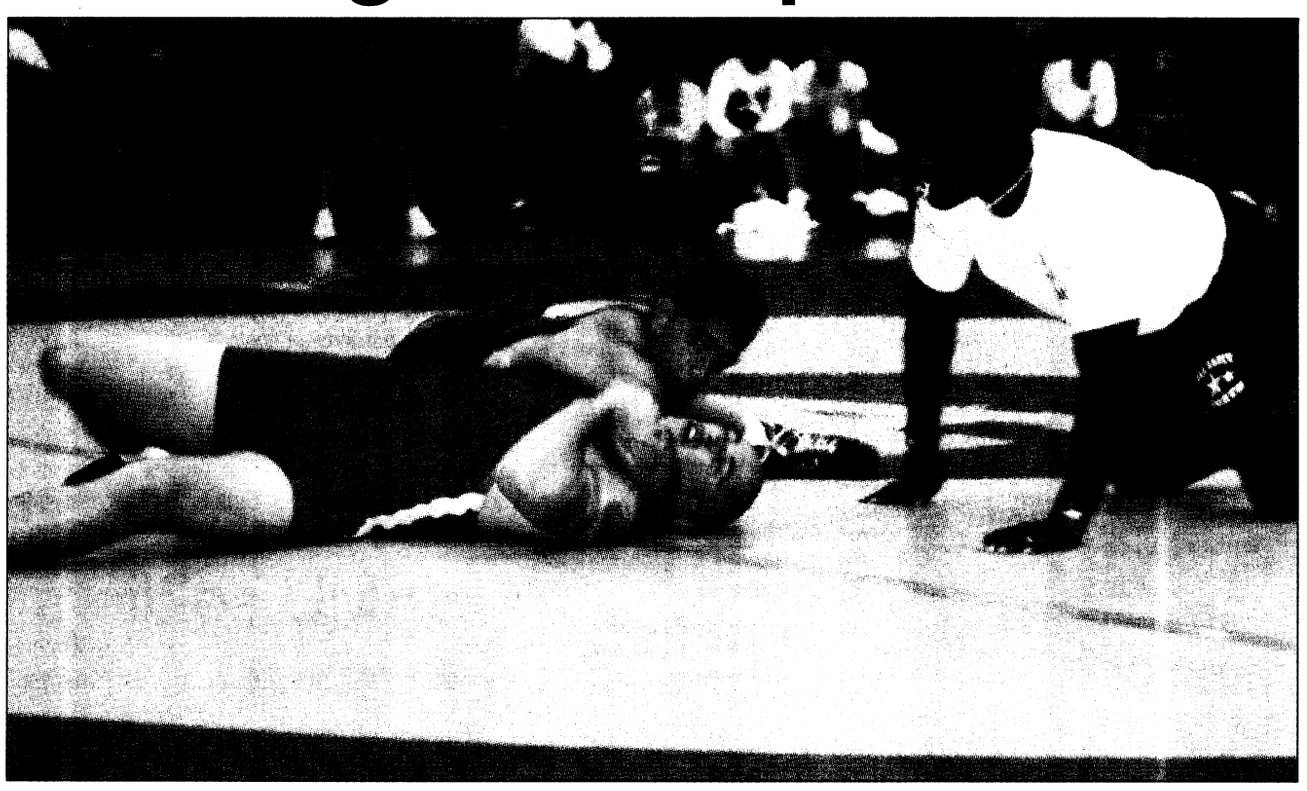
Submit names, handicaps, or approximate scores to Capt. David Morrison, Building 2839; by calling 545-7715; or to the Follow Me Golf Course Pro Shop.

All-Army wrestling team captures wins

By John W. Peeler
Special to The Bayonet©

The All-Army Wrestling Team scored a take-down Saturday at the Santiago Fitness Center by capturing six out of eight first-place finishes in the Fort Benning Wrestling Tournament.

Derrick Waldroup, in his first tournament as the All-Army wrestling coach, said the tournament went well and more installations participated than expected. Fifty-one wrestlers competed in the freestyle tournament.



"There are a couple of prospects competing here today that look really good," Waldroup said. He said that in the future, he needs to address getting them released from their units to train.

Waldroup assumed the job as the coach for the All-Army Wrestling Team following his return as a Greco-Roman wrestler in the 1996 Olympics. He won the 1996 Army Male Athlete of the Year award and previously received nomination as the Department of Defense Male Athlete of the Year.

All-Army wrestlers Jason Tolbert, Keith Idleberg, Glenn Nieradka, Keith Sieracki, Kenny Owens and Dremiel Byers captured first-place honors in their respective weight classes while Michel Santos from the 3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division (Mechanized), took first place in the 54-kilogram weight class. Guillermo Valdivia won in the 58-kilogram weight class.

The 3rd Infantry Division (Mechanized) captured first place in team scoring with eight points while Fort Gordon and the 75th Ranger Regiment snatched a close second with seven points, followed by Fort Lewis in fourth place with 5 points. The 11th Infantry Regiment came in fifth with four points, followed by Fort Lewis in sixth place with three points.

All-Army wrestler Keith Sieracki takes the advantage over Brian Carlson in the wrestling tournament Saturday at the Santiago Fitness Center. Sieracki won the match on his way to first place in the 85-kilogram weight class.

Teams remain unbeaten in Youth Services football

By John W. Peeler
Special to The Bayonet©

Week five of the Youth Services Football program ended Saturday on Blue Field with one team in each of the three age divisions remaining unbeaten.

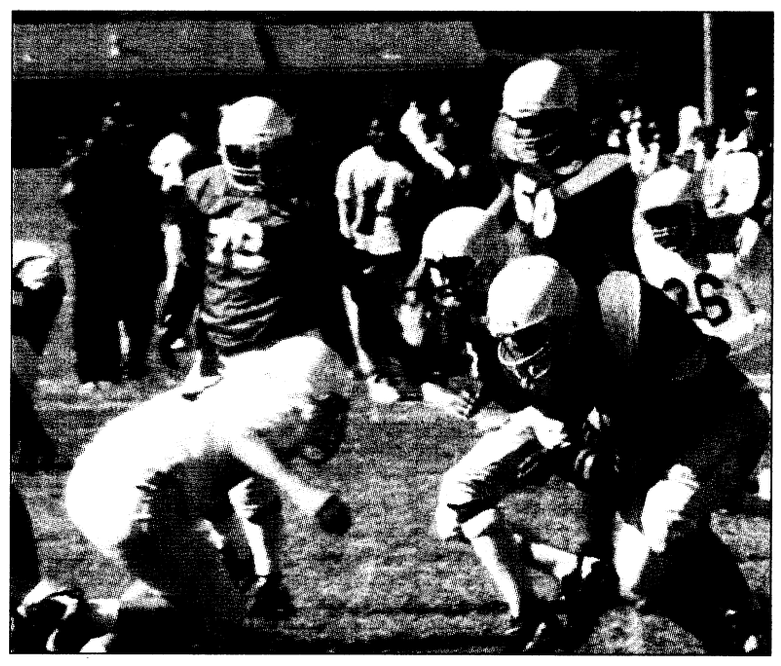
The Browns (2-0-1) remained undefeated in the over-12 division, rolling past the Lions (1-2) 30-6.

The running back tandem of David Arce and Derrick Royal accounted for three of the Browns' scores with quarterback Tim Hardcastle accounting for the fourth touchdown.

Royal scored on a run up the middle from 12 yards out while Arce scored on a 15-yard run up the middle and a 25-yard touchdown pass from Hardcastle. Hardcastle's score came on a 1-yard quarterback sneak.

The Vikings (5-0) remained unbeaten in the 9- to 12-year-old division by defeating the Chiefs (3-2) 22-8. The Vikings scored on two long runs of 30 and 45 yards from quarterback Zeke Morris and an 18-yard punt return from safety Dupree Johnson. The Chiefs' lone score came on a kickoff return of 75 yards from running back Marquies Richardson.

In the 6- to 8-year-old division, the Vikings (5-0) defeated the Packers (0-5) 12-0 to remain unbeaten. The Vikings shut out the Packers on two runs of 30 yards by running back Shevon Thomas.



In the other 6- to 8-year-old division game, the 49ers (2-2-1) defeated the Giants (2-2-1) by a score of 13-0.

In the 9- to 12-year-old division, the Seminoles (2-3) defeated the Panthers (0-5) 6-0, while the Eagles (2-3) fell to the Cowboys (3-2) 6-0.

In the other over-12 division play, the 49ers (1-2) slipped by the Steelers (0-2-1) 6-0.

Youth Services plans more football games on Blue Field Saturday beginning at 9 a.m.

Active feet deserve proper fitting shoes

By Linda Kaup
Bayonet correspondent

Take a minute to think about the demands we place on our feet.

We often cram them into shoes that are too tight (not to mention high heels), and ask them to walk on concrete sidewalks. Then we go to the fitness center. There, we ask our feet to walk and run for miles, and make them jump up and down for extended periods of time, or zigzag like crazy all over a racquetball court.

The foot remains an anatomical wonder. It includes 26 bones, about 20 muscles, 33 joints and more than 100 ligaments to hold it together. This structure gives the foot an ideal union of strength and flexibility to support the functions it performs.

While the healthy foot remains a strong, sturdy structure, the repetitive movement demands of activities such as aerobic dance, tennis, volleyball and basketball seem relatively new to the human form. That remains the reason for taking the time (and spending the money) to shop for good shoes.

commentary

Health experts explain that a good fit remains hard to find. Over 77 percent of all shoes sold in America today come from other countries. Size measurements, unfortunately, are not standard worldwide.

Another complicating factor remains feet's individuality. Research shows, much like fingerprints, no two (not even your own two) are exactly the same.

Also, shoe sizes often change when your weight or patterns of activity change. Taking these factors into account, a few tips to help you purchase shoes right for you follow:

•Shop for shoes in the late afternoon, when your feet become largest.

•One foot is often bigger than the other, so always buy for the bigger foot.

•When trying on new shoes, stand on one foot at a time and on your tip-toe, too. The shoe needs to bend when your foot bends. Also make sure the widest part of your foot fits comfortably in the shoe.

•Finally, check to see that you have one-half inch of space between the end of your big toe and the top of your shoe.

Wearing good shoes, but still experiencing some occasional pain sends a message that something remains wrong.

USAMU soldiers take New York State Championship

U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit

Members of the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit Running Target Team took their talent north — stopping in Binghamton, N.Y., to pass along shooting tips and to take top places in the New York State Running Target Championships Sept. 21 and 22.

Armando Ayala took first in the 50-meter 30+30 match with a score of 568 out of a possible 600 points. Teammate Lance Dement followed in second with a score of 556.

Troy Lawton, running target team coach said winning represents only half the mission of the USAMU marksmen.

"They also gave some pointers to the other competitors who participated in the championships," Lawton said.

Some of those pointers included ways to improve trigger squeeze, following through and how to properly move from the ready position to the shooting position while tracking the target, Ayala said.

Teaching a receptive audience how to improve their shooting performance also taught Ayala and Dement a little about the responsibilities of being professional marksmen.

Ayala, the 1996 National Match 10-meter mixed run winner, and Dement, a former USAMU Service rifle team member, found that as successful professional marksmen, their reputations preceded them to New York.

"Most of the competitors were older and hadn't been shooting for long," Ayala said. Being a 1996 National Match champion made Ayala well known among the competitors.

"A lot of them were curious about the way I approached the nationals and how I walked away winning the 10-meter mixed run," Ayala said.

Because of their accomplishments, Ayala and Dement served as running target subject matter experts and passed their knowledge on to others.

It served as quite an experience, said Ayala, who joined the USAMU in 1994. And Dement agrees with that opinion.

"We took a lot home from this match," Dement said.

The USAMU marksmen learned how to overcome the adverse weather conditions in New York state, which at the time were cold and wet and proved a challenge to their shooting performance, and they learned the price of success.

"That price is the expectation put on you to pass what you know to others," Ayala said.

And for now, Ayala and Dement have paid in full.

Service pistol team prevails at Maine regionals

U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit

The U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit service pistol team won top awards at the Maine Regional "Lobster Classic" Sept. 10 to 16 in Portland, Maine.

Competing against the U.S. Marine Corps regular and reserve teams, the U.S. Army Reserve gold, silver, blue and black teams, Pine Tree state team, Pine Tree state gold team and the Rhode Island service team, USAMU's blue team finished in first place in two events.

They won the center fire team match with a total score of 1,162 points and 54 bull's eyes, and the .45-caliber team match with a score of 1167 points and 52 bull's eyes.

They also finished second in the .22-caliber team match scoring 1,171 points with 54 bull's eyes. USAMU won first place in the team aggregate with a score of 3,500 points out of a possible 3,600 with 160 bull's eyes.

Shooters Steven M. King, Roger C. Jacobson, Fritz A Ficke, William King Jr. and Aaron P. Schreiber make up the USAMU blue service pistol team.

"It's the highest score the Army team shot in over a year in this event or all matches," said Ficke. "We were all shooting well and put forth a good effort."

USAMU shooters also won the individual Excellence-In-Competition Match where they shot the .45-caliber service pistol. Schreiber won first place shooting 289 points out of a possible 300. King took second place with 283 points and Ficke placed third scoring a 279.

"It felt pretty good coming in first," Schreiber said. "This is the highest score I've ever shot with this kind of service pistol. I'm still a new shooter, and I hope to keep shooting good. I'm planning to shoot at the Camp Perry Nationals next year."

Coach Ray Arredondo said that the Lobster Classic represents a popular match and a lot of talent competes.

"All the top shooting teams were there to participate," he said, "which makes it a real good training experience for the team."

Go back to basics in bass fishing

By Earl Bentz and Steve Price
Outboard Marine Corporation

When all else fails, return to the basics.

That remains the philosophy of professional bass angler Bud Pruitt, and he proved its importance during the recent Bass Masters Classic world championship on Alabama's Lay Lake.

Pruitt finished fourth in the three-day event, creeling 23 pounds, six ounces of bass. The Houston, Texas, pro caught more than 15 pounds of those fish the final day when conditions were the most difficult. He began the last day in 29th place after weighing in a total of just four bass the previous two days.

"I realized the techniques I had been using simply were not producing enough bass to finish well in the tournament," he said, "so I changed tactics completely and started pitching a plastic worm into shallow grassbeds, a very basic pattern that I have a lot of confidence using. Looking back now, I certainly wish I'd spent all three days doing it."

If the pro caught just eight more pounds of fish, he would have won the championship and the $100,000 first prize. But, he collected $8,000 for fourth, as well as an extra $1,000 bonus for catching the largest bass of the final day.

"I learned a lot from the experience," Pruitt said. "I started the tournament looking for some of the big spotted bass Lay Lake is famous for. Even though I couldn't catch them the first day, I kept looking for them the next day, too. I was using a jigging spoon and a crankbait, neither of which are my favorite lures, and as a result I weighed in only two bass each day.

"All the time I was trying for those big fish out in the deep river channel, I kept thinking about the long grassbeds I'd seen in one of the creeks," he said. "Flipping and pitching worms into shallow vegetation is one of my favorite techniques and it usually works on any lake I fish, but I kept hoping I could get one or two big bites so I stayed on the channel."

After a second frustrating day that saw him going down the score sheet instead of up, Pruitt returned to the basics.

Using his favorite plastic worm rig, Pruitt began pitching the outside edge of the weedline where he found the bass in less than four feet of water. He caught his limit within his first hour of fishing.

"Even in the hot summer, bass will be around vegetation," Pruitt said, "especially along the outside edge in slightly deeper water. The key for me was concentrating on irregularities along that edge, such as points and small openings, which is also a basic rule of fishing grasslines. To me, this tournament proved you should stay with the techniques and basic patterns you know best, no matter where you're fishing."

Adjusting to conditions critical for bass pros

By Earl Bentz and Steve Price
Outboard Marine Corporation

Some days, it seems, professional bass tournament angler Denny Brauer spends most of his time changing lures, techniques, or locations as he tries to catch fish.

"We don't like to refer to it as changing," said Brauer, a veteran competitor. "Instead, we like to say we're adjusting.

"We're searching for the right combination of factors that will let us catch bass; and, on some days, those factors change often and quickly. There are times when you can go out in the morning and fish the same lure in basically the same place all day and catch bass continually, but there are far more days when something changes and you have to figure out what has changed and adjust to it."

Weather factors affect bass the quickest, Brauer said.

"Most bass fishermen have experienced a change as simple as the sun rising," Brauer said. "You can go to a point or perhaps a grass bed before the sun comes up and catch bass on a top-water lure; but, once the sun climbs above the horizon, the bass stop biting.

"You have to determine if the bass have simply gone to the bottom where you might catch them with a different lure like a jig or plastic worm, or if they have completely left the area," Brauer continued. "This is what we mean by adjusting. Something has changed, and you need to change with it."

The pro admits not all changes are as easy to determine as a rising sun that brightens the water.

"When the fish suddenly stop biting and you're having trouble figuring out why, you may need to sit down for a few moments and analyze the situation," Brauer said. "Has wind created a ripple on the water, have the clouds moved, is the temperature rising or falling? Look around carefully because something will give you a clue."

Before moving to a totally new location, Brauer recommends an angler try a different lure. Switching from a mid-running crankbait, for example, to a bottom-bumping jig or plastic worm provide a needed change. Likewise, changing retrieves from fast to slow triggers action again.

"You can definitely wear a spot out if you fish it long enough and catch a lot of bass there," the Missouri angler said.

"Even though you may be releasing everything you catch, the school of bass can get tuned in to your lure and your retrieve," he said. "Sometimes they just stop biting that particular lure, but other times they will actually leave that area."

When changing lures and retrieves doesn't help, then it usually means the bass have left and you need to leave, too.

"The important thing to remember when you leave bass that have been biting is to look for another spot with similar conditions," Brauer said. "Very often, you'll find fish there that will bite. And, after a while, you can return to your original spot and often start catching those bass again, too. It's all part of adjusting to changing conditions."

Lake Fork fishing picks up

By Earl Bentz and Steve Price
Outboard Marine Corporation

Richard McCarty, a bass guide on Lake Fork in east Texas for 12 years, looks forward to the autumn and early winter fishing.

"Autumn is a transitional time for Lake Fork," said McCarty, a professional tournament competitor, "and although the fish may be relocating, it's really a nice time to be on the water. It isn't as crowded, and it seems like the really big bass become a little less wary."

McCarty plans to spend this autumn concentrating on the grass beds in the 27,000 acre impoundment. Because the summer becomes extremely hot, the vegetation grows considerably in both the creeks as well as in the main lake.

"I suggest anyone coming to Lake Fork in hopes of catching one of the lake's really big bass, fish the main lake vegetation with a heavy jig," McCarty said. "A lot of anglers will spend their time in one of the tributary creeks; but, after a dozen years of guiding here, I'm convinced there are a lot of 'super bass' in Lake Fork that spend their entire lives in the main lake.

"I know autumn is a time when bass on most lakes move into the tributaries to feed on shad, but on Lake Fork the vegetation seems to hold a lot of fish out closer to deeper water."

Lake Fork, impounded in 1980 and fully filled in 1985, gained a reputation as one of the top trophy bass lakes in the world.

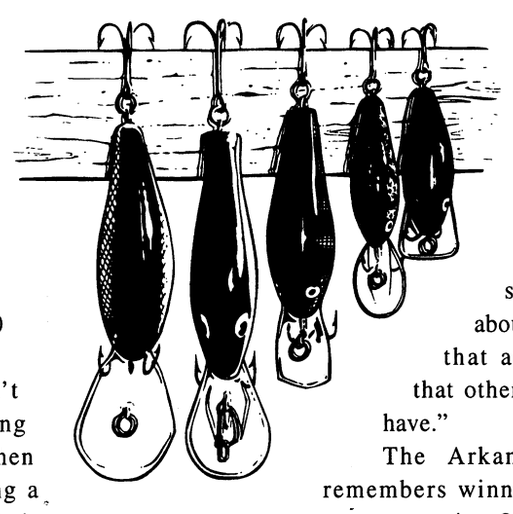
"When I'm fishing the vegetation for really big fish, I'll actually get my boat back in the grass if I can and then work a jig through it," the pro said. "It isn't easy fishing because you generally have to cover a lot of water between strikes, but the strikes you do get are usually from big bass."

"Any bass measuring between 14 and 21 inches in length has to be released immediately," the Alba, Texas, angler said, "and I think this slot limit is what allows the lake to keep producing such big bass. It gives the fish at least two years of protection.

"Today when my clients catch a 21-inch bass, it will probably weigh nearly seven pounds; and, for many fishermen, that's the largest bass they've ever caught. They're stunned when I tell them the next fish they catch could very well weigh twice as much. It happens often on Lake Fork especially this time of year."

Buzz baits work well for autumn bass

By Earl Bentz and Steve Price
Outboard Marine Corporation



If looking for a special lure this autumn that imitates a small school of baitfish, trigger strikes from big bass and can be used in both shallow and deep water, consider a buzz bait.

That, according to professional bass tournament angler Ron Shuffield, who last year at this time won a big tournament by catching 22 pounds of bass with a buzz bait in one day, works best.

"Buzz baits probably rate as some of the best overall lures anyone can use this time of year," said Shuffield, an eight-time qualifier for the bass fishing world championship. "The best part of all is that they're both easy and fun to use, too. Buzz baits are basically throw and wind lures that don't require any type of finesse."

When fishing water less than five feet deep, Shuffield prefers to use one-eighth and one-fourth ounce buzz baits, because when bass are feeding in water that shallow they're looking for smaller shad.

"When I'm fishing deeper water, I like to use a heavier one-half ounce lure," Shuffield said, "because it makes more noise and may actually attract bass up from depths of 25 to 30 feet.

"I don't do anything special when I'm fishing a buzz bait, either," he said, "except to speed up my retrieve periodically to try to get reaction strikes."

Normally, said the pro, buzz baits become most effective when fished close to heavy cover. Retrieves let the lure touch logs, bushes, rocks, or pilings, but buzz baits also catch bass from deeper underwater cover, too.

"That is one of the main reasons I like buzz baits so well," Shuffield said. "You can retrieve a slow, chattering buzz bait over deep cover and bring bass up from that cover to strike on the surface. There is something about a buzz bait that attracts bass that other lures don't have."

The Arkansas angler remembers winning two big tournaments in October and November last year in which he fished a buzz bait in more than 30 feet of water. The fish remained suspended in standing timber about 12 feet deep and came up to hit the lure.

During a two-day event on the clear waters of Lake Ouachita, he won with 38 pounds, and later he won a one-day tournament on Lake DeGray with 22 pounds.

One of the tricks Shuffield uses to increase his buzz bait catch includes a trailer hook. If fishing buzz baits around shallow cover, he points the trailer hook up. In open water, he points the hook down.

"Bass are notorious about short-striking buzz baits," he said, "and when they do, one of the best ways to catch them is with the extra trailer hook slipped over the barb of the main hook. In shallow cover, however, you have to have the trailer pointed up so you don't get snagged."

Shuffield fishes buzz baits with a seven-foot medium or heavy action rod because it allows him to make longer casts and he uses lines testing 12- to 17-pound test.

"Using heavier 17-pound test line doesn't alter the action of the lure at all," he said, "and it adds a measure of safety when you're fishing around heavier cover. It's also nice to use heavier dine when you're in a lake known for big bass, because this time of year a buzz bait will definitely attract them."

BASS club tackles West Point Lake

By Stephen W. Ward
Bass Anglers Sportsman Society Club

The Bass Anglers Sportsman Society Club of Fort Benning conducted this month's tournament Oct. 12 at West Point Lake.

A cool start to the day's fishing did not deter the enthusiasm of the local fishermen. The weather warmed to 76 degrees with clear horizons and clouds floating across the skies.

The results of the tournament areas follows:

•First place — George Mendez
•Second place — David Moore
•Third place — Mark Myles
•Rig Bass — Chris Cox

The BASS Club opens its membership to all military service personnel (active, reserve and retired), their family members (over age 16) and eligible Department of Defense civilian employees, whether boat owners or not.

The club conducts meetings on post on the second and fourth Tuesdays. For more information, call Steve Ward at 569-5705.

BOSS conducts bass tourney

Community Recreation Division

Forty-eight boats turned out for the first annual Fort Benning Better Opportunities for Single Soldiers Bass Tournament conducted at Uchee Creek Sept. 28.

Competitors battled the rainy weather as they applied their fishing skills against the bass.

Cash prizes went to the following top five teams:

•First place — J. Pines and G. Mendez with 12 pounds,
•Second place — J. Allen and R. Enke with 11.6 pounds,
•Third place — M. Aviles and R. Chmolack with 10.8 pounds,
•Fourth place — J. Bailey and P. Payne with 8.7 pounds,
•Fifth place — J.D. Mercer and J. Bennis with 8.2 pounds, and •Big bass — M. Tomczewski with a 6.3-pound large mouth.

Tournament director, Ed Hannaman, said the tournament went very well. Some of the top anglers in Southwest Georgia and Alabama participated to include members of the Fort Benning BASS Club and Cusseta BASS Club.

Don't Find A Home Without It.

Our New PurchasePower Card Will Show Just How Much Home You Can Afford.

All it takes is a touch-tone phone, a few minutes, and the answers to a few simple questions about your income and debt payments. It's quick and easy because it's fully automated, and walks you through each push-button step in a flash. By the next business day, you'll know which mortgage types and how much you qualify for. Then we'll send you a card that spells out that details of your loan, including the amount that's been pre-approved. And you can show the seller that you've got real PurchasePower. It's just that simple. And simply the easiest way home.

Call 1-800-731-2205, Ext.05

LEGAL NOTICE

Recently the Uchee Creek Army Campground failed to submit bacteriological monitoring water samples for the month of August to the Alabama Department of Environmental Management.

The state of Alabama requires that the campground submit a water sample for testing every month. The water samples for September and October were submitted and the water received testing on Aug. 5 by other agencies.

The water at Uchee Creek was tested for the month of August by a trained analyst from the U.S. Army Medical Department Activity's Preventive Medicine Office and the water treatment plant on Fort Benning. Officials from both offices tested the water and found it to be free of fecal coliform bacteria.

The water at Uchee Creek receives testing every month and has never had a bad water sample come back from any of the three agencies that test the water's purity.

Residents responsible for hazardous waste disposal, clean up

By Lori Egan
Bayonet staff writer

It wasn't even Halloween and Chelsie and Madison were white as ghosts.

Someone left a half-full can of white residential paint at the curb and in the open for two small curious children to find and play with.

"Do you know who left the half-full paint can at the curb?" asked Angie Adams, a McGraw Manor resident. "I'm really mad. Both Chelsie and Madison were covered in the paint. When I find out who left the paint out ..."

Hazardous household waste becomes a problem for everyone if it is not disposed of properly, said Sgt. Maj. Arthur Van Allen, garrison sergeant major.

Pretty much anything containing chemicals qualifies as a hazardous material, such as paint thinners, pesticides, insecticides and herbicides, motor oil and even flea collars, said Debbie Gamble, an environmental specialist with the Directorate of Public Works, and improper disposal leads to a number of problems.

Improper disposal methods of household waste include dumping the waste down the drain or burying it in the backyard. Don't do this, said Michael Nuckols, environmental specialist with DPW.

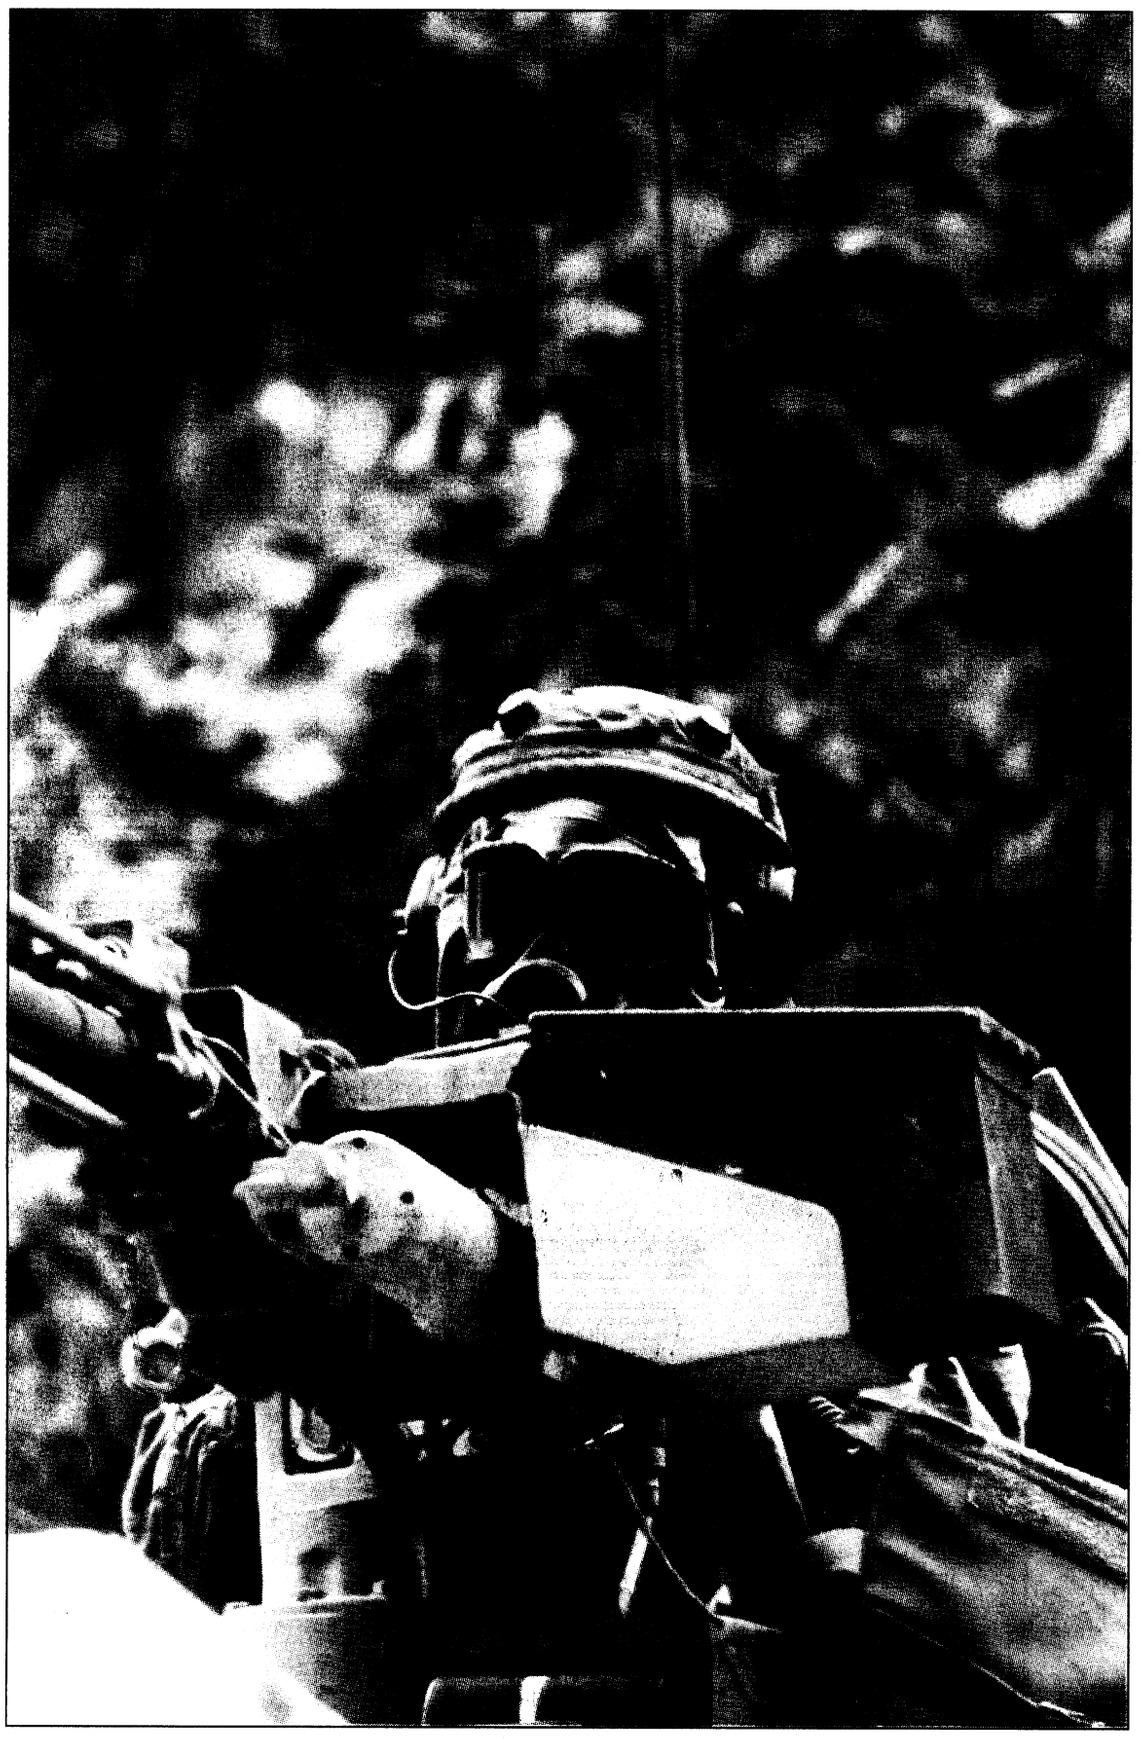
Problems associated with improper disposal include toxic fumes, corrosion of plumbing materials, ground and surface water pollution, children playing with poisons, soil contamination, explosions and toxic ash.

It's important for residents to realize that the disposal of household hazardous waste falls under a household exemption policy, said John Brent, chief, Environmental Management Division, DPW.

"This is not the same our as commercial, industrial, administrative sites and motor pools," Brent said. "Each of these areas has specific guidelines to follow and are covered in eight-hour and 40-hour training courses offered through DPW."

"We need to be good stewards," Nuckols said.

To be a good steward, residents should dispose of hazardous household waste by following the recommendations on the manufacturer's label, Gamble said.



Nuckols said other ways to alleviate the problem of disposal includes buying only the amount needed and using it up. And if the resident buys too much of a product, share it with a neighbor. Recycling rids residents of the product also, Gamble said.

"If you own unused paint, donate it to charity," she said. "Habitat for Humanity accepts excess building supplies.

"As the last result for disposal," she said, "wrap the empty container in newspaper and put it in the trash. But the best policy is to buy only what you need and to use it up."

"People need to start looking out for their neighbors and not leave poisons where kids play," Adams said. "They need to act responsibly."

"Good stewardship protects all of us and our futures," Nuckols said.

Training in the lanes

A soldier from the 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor Regiment, 3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division (Mechanized), aims his 50-caliber machine gun while wearing multiple integrated laser engagement system equipment during a chemical environment training exercise Oct. 7 to 16 at training areas D7 through 14 in the Buena Vista area. The training included moving tactically, reacting to dismounted troops and breaching an obstacle.

PICKUP TRUCKS

Post changes policy

By Brian R. Voller
Bayonet staff writer

Due to a recent accident that claimed the life of a Fort Benning soldier, riding in the back of an uncovered pickup truck will soon become illegal.

According to Col. Thomas J. Cain, provost marshal, the military police will begin issuing warnings today to both soldiers and civilians for transporting passengers in the back of uncovered pickup trucks.

He also said the planned date for the regulation to go into effect is Jan. 1, and if the regulation does go into effect, the MPs will begin issuing citations on that date.

Cain said the state of Georgia currently enforces a law that prohibits passengers under the age of 18 from riding in the back of uncovered pickup trucks on interstate highways, but until recently, Fort Benning had no similar prohibitions.

Cain said signs warning soldiers and civilians of the new regulations will be posted prior to the regulation going into effect.

In addition to the new pickup truck regulation, the MPs plan to continue with their vehicle safety inspections.

So far a total of 1,953 vehicles have been monitored and 438 vehicles have been inspected.

According to Maj. Ronald G. Jones, chief, Law Enforcement Division, the MPs doing the safety inspections are looking for vehicles being driven in violation of Fort Benning regulations.

The MPs have issued two types of citations during the safety inspection. The citation DD form 1805 is a U.S. District Court violation notice which requires the violator to appear before a federal magistrate. The citation DD form 1408 is an armed forces traffic ticket which is an administrative ticket that goes to a soldier's company commander or a civilian employee's supervisor.

The MPs issued citations DD form 1805 for:
•Child seat infractions: 8
•Driving under the influence: 1
•Expired plates:1
•Illegal transfer of plates: 1
•Loud music: 1
•No driver's license: 3

Red Ribbon Week symbolizes effort to battle drugs

By April N. Olsen
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Members of the Fort Benning, Columbus and Phenix City communities gathered on the Grand Staircase of the Riverwalk for a border-tying ceremony Oct. 24, symbolizing the unified effort to battle drugs and promote a healthy lifestyle for all individuals.

The event officially kicked off Red Ribbon Week, which ran Oct. 23 to Oct. 31. In 1985, the red ribbon became the symbol to reduce the demand for illegal use of drugs following the murder of a federal agent by drug traffickers.

Representing Fort Benning, Col. Thomas Cain, the director of Public Safety, said no community is free of the drug problem sweeping our nation.

"We know that the problems are real. The victims are real and the devastation that it brings is real," Cain said.

Recognizing that it takes a unified effort from everyone in the community to tackle the seriousness of the drug problem, Cain said, Fort Benning and the local cities support each other's efforts in combating the drug problem.

> "You can find your identity in more than just a bottle of pills or a cheap thrill."
> — David Nasser
> Red Ribbon speaker

"This is another way of demonstrating that we're committed to being a member of the tricommunity," Cain said.

The featured speaker at the celebration, David Nasser, echoed the community sentiment and warned the young students in the audience about placing too much value on their physical appearance and trying to fit in with the crowd.

"You can find your identity in more than just a bottle of pills or a cheap thrill," Nasser said.

Nasser, a member of the Franklin Graham Crusade, was born in Iran but escaped with his family in 1979. Leaving behind all he was accustomed to, Nasser said it was difficult fitting in with American kids at school. He said after being an outsider, he changed his outward appearance with new, fashionable clothes and started hanging around with the wrong crowd, all for the sake of being accepted.

"The price of acceptance was too high," Nasser said. "Within two years, I'd become an alcoholic." He said experimenting with drugs soon followed.

"I totally lost my whole identity, who I was ... just to blend in," Nasser said.

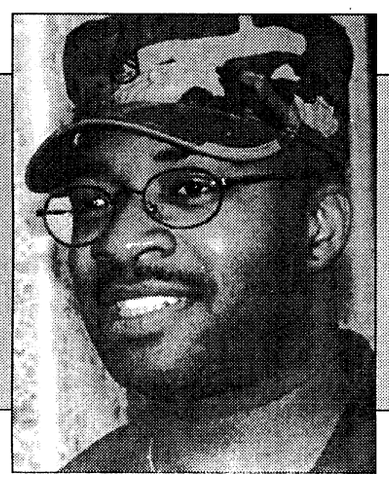
Nasser now travels with the Franklin Graham Crusade as an evangelist, hoping to make a difference by sharing his story with young people, he said.

There's a battle going on and students who don't think past the Friday-night agenda get caught up in it, Nasser said, urging the students in the audience to think about the future.

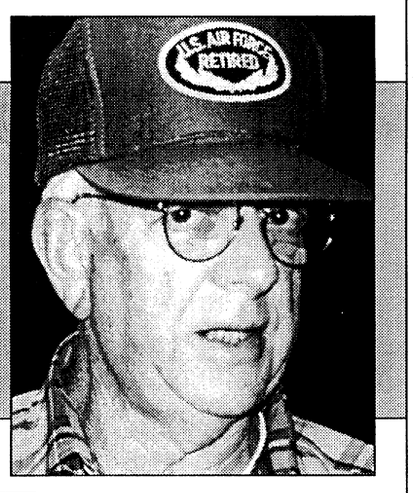
"I'm not giving up," he said to the crowd on the Riverwalk. "Don't give up. Don't give up on our kids. Continue to fight the good fight. I think we can be victorious," he said.

The event concluded as the Georgia and Alabama sides of the Chattahoochee River were united by a giant red ribbon, draped across by police department representatives on a personal water craft.

VARIOUS VOICES

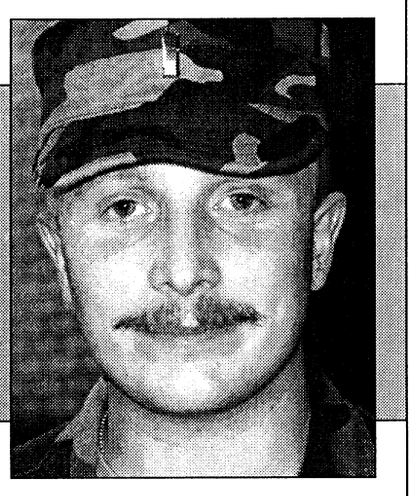


Why is voting important?



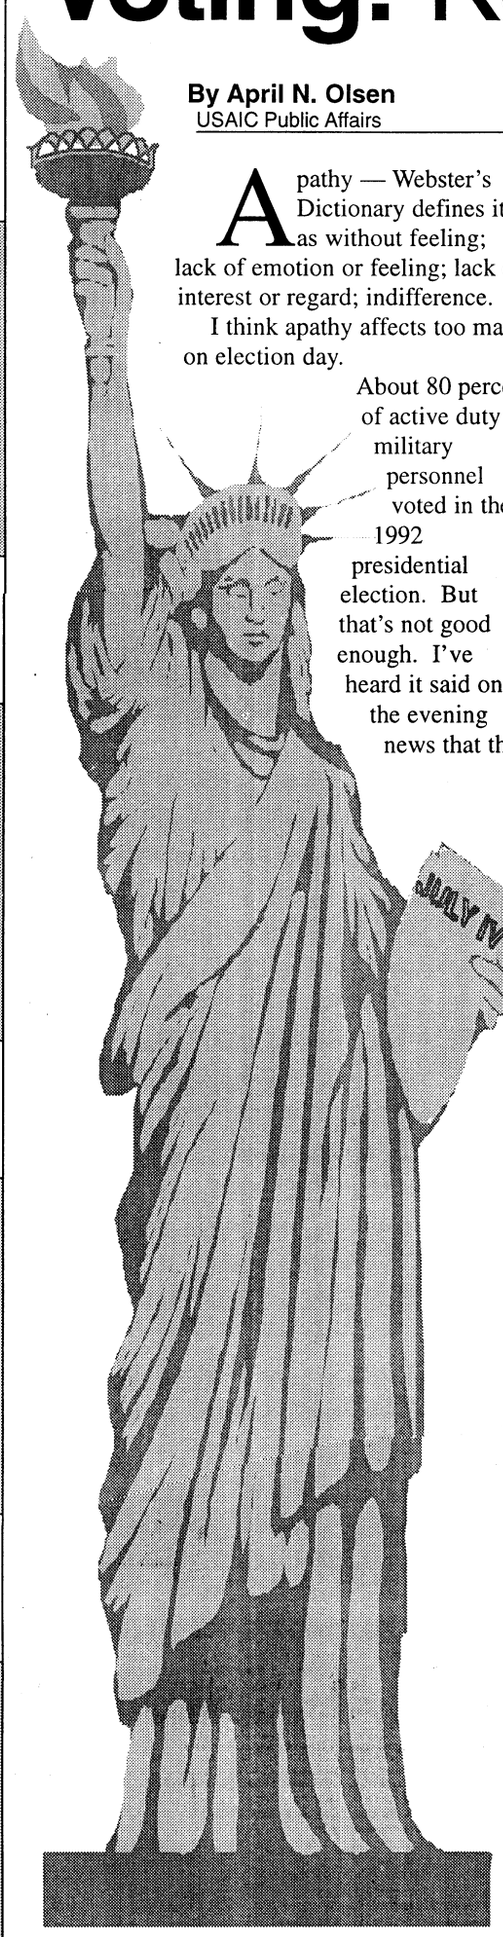
Tina Patriarca, family member — "It decides everything that goes on in this country."

Mary Cook, family member — "Because it is one of the only ways we have to express how we feel and think about issues and what is important."



Staff Sgt. Eric Phillips, Headquarters Service Company, Infantry Training Brigade — "Because it shapes your everyday life. It starts in Washington and comes down. Voting is a right, so use it."

Retired Master Sgt. James Pearce — "To express your freedom to vote."



Ruth Shuff, family member — "You need to vote in order to put the best people in office."

1st Lt. Leonas Lukosevicius, Infantry Officer Basic Course — "It is a way for people to express their opinions."

Voting: Key to democratic nation

By April N. Olsen
USAIC Public Affairs

commentary

Apathy — Webster's Dictionary defines it as without feeling; lack of emotion or feeling; lack of interest or regard; indifference.

I think apathy affects too many on election day.

About 80 percent of active duty military personnel voted in the 1992 presidential election. But that's not good enough. I've heard it said on the evening news that the American turnout on election day is one of the lowest of any democratic nations.

What about a democracy? Let's see what Webster says about that: government exercised either directly by the people or through elected representatives; the populace as the primary source of political power.

I'm not a genius or even a master of political phraseology, but to me, a government exercised by the people requires some exercising on the part of the people governed.

I say one person eligible to vote who doesn't is one too many. Year after year, election after election, too many people fail to vote. Too busy, too uninformed, too what? Why is it that in the greatest nation in the world, many don't to go to the polls? Have they forgotten that one of the main reasons we are the greatest nation in the world is because our citizens possess the right to vote?

Apathy has infected our country.

There are countless excuses why not to vote, I've heard them all: "My vote doesn't count, one vote can't make a difference, none of the candidates are worth voting for, it won't change anything." One guy even told me, "I'm exercising my right not to vote."

It's been my experience that folks who make these excuses are at the head of the line when it's time to complain. And they're more than willing to pass the buck when there's a problem, saying, "I didn't vote for him or I didn't support that law."

If you don't exercise your right to vote, I say shut up, don't complain about anything that's going on because you were too apathetic to voice your opinion at the polls, so don't voice it later. You had your chance.

A little history lesson coming up: America was not born free. (Sometimes I think the Nintendo generation doesn't realize this.) George Washington was not just our first president. That guy on the one dollar bill was a soldier fighting for independence. He was a soldier fighting for the right to have his voice heard. And what about Martin Luther King Jr.? What if Dr. King had been apathetic and thought his voice didn't matter?

Voices bring change. Change starts with one guy or gal with a notion that something could or should be better. Throughout our nation's history, it was the voice of the people that brought change.

Let's throw in the fact that millions died establishing and preserving democracy. You would think we'd be a little more appreciative of the sacrifices of our ancestors. But nope, many apathetic ungratefuls in our nation can't even manage to exercise this right our forefathers fought and died to give us.

Now, it's not just the soldiers in uniform fighting wars protecting our country's interest who make a difference. There are soldiers not in uniform all across this nation who fight daily for various causes: the war on drugs, the battle against child abuse and spouse abuse, the battle against crime, save the whales, the fight for equal rights for homosexuals. You name it, there's a cause for everything. Those individuals are standing up for what they believe. They're voting and ensuring their voices are heard.

Do you disagree with them? Do you think marijuana should be legalized? Do you think people living alternative lifestyles should enjoy the same civil liberties as everyone else? Do you think industrial growth should supersede the protection of an endangered species?

Then vote — tell your government what you think.

You'd think that in the military, every soldier would be eager to cast his or her ballot. After all, it's one of few professions where the organization (i.e., the soldiers who make up the U.S. military) actually have a say in who their boss (i.e., the commander-in-chief, the president) will be.

Many wearing the uniform today do not agree with our nation's policy involving troops on a peacekeeping mission in the former Yugoslavia. Yet many of those men and women will not be casting their votes next week. Many in uniform today do not agree with the changes affecting benefits of military retirees. Yet many of those service members, retiring soon, will not make their way to the polls next week nor fill out an absentee ballot.

I credit all this to apathy. Many in our society settle for what they're given and are not too concerned about anything that doesn't directly affect them. But I consider the privileges of citizenship of this nation an obligation to act responsibly as one of its citizens. I believe I must care about its future, therefore, I vote.

According to the National Association for Uniformed Services, with more than 26 million veterans, including 1.6 million retirees, 1.5 million active duty and a Reserve and National Guard force of 1.6 million, when combined with family members and survivors, the military and veteran-related eligible voting population is almost 80 million. That amounts to a third of America's eligible voters.

I urge everyone to vote. One vote may not solve all the problems in our society, but one vote put together with my vote with another vote with another vote can make a difference. We must tell our elected representatives what we want and think is right. Only then can this country be the democratic society so many have fought and died for.

DARE program no longer taught on post

I express deep disappointment due to a decision made by Fort Benning Schools to no longer offer the Drug Abuse Resistance Education program at the installation's schools.

The DARE program, a well known and highly regarded drug education program, teaches children in civilian and military schools throughout the nation to avoid drugs, alcohol, tobacco and violence.

As the formal coordinator and instructor of the program, I believe when the Fort Benning school system abolished the program, it abandoned the area's children.

The installation's children participated in and enjoyed the successful program while learning valuable lessons from its well-organized curriculum.

Because our military children remain just as important as their civilian counterparts, and just as vulnerable to the effects of drugs, alcohol and tobacco, they need the program, too.

— Walter Jackson
Police Officer,
Department of Defense

Fort Benning Schools' response

The Fort Benning Schools remain deeply committed to providing a quality education, which develops each child to his or her full potential academically as well as physically, socially and emotionally. To ensure this quality, continuous review, evaluation and revision of programs is essential.

The schools continue to place a high priority on providing a high-quality program for all students, which educates them regarding the dangers of drug and alcohol abuse. Kindergarten through 8th grade health curriculums remain designed to provide students information on the dangers of drugs and alcohol. In addition, the schools' staffs plan special activities to supplement the health curriculum.

Last year, Dr. Lonise Bias, mother of the late basketball star Len Bias, provided a program for all elementary and middle school students on the issues of drugs, alcohol, family, hope and love. Bias remains one of the most visible and successful warriors in the fight against substance abuse.

This school year, Ron Conley provided a program for all elementary school students. The magical "Just Say No Show" teaches a system of saying "no" to alcohol and drugs and building self-esteem and confidence.

Last week, Lt. Cmdr. Drew Brown, best selling author and nationally-known motivational speaker, provided a hard-hitting and powerful antidrug abuse message to our middle school students. Brown is internationally acclaimed for his ability to inspire young people with his message that education plus hard work minus drugs equals success and the American dream.

In addition to these excellent programs, several community organizations provide valuable resources for our students which further educate them regarding the dangers of drugs and alcohol.

Tar Wars, a program conducted by doctors at Martin Army Community Hospital Family Practice, promotes smoking prevention. Tar Wars was developed in 1988 and expanded to become an award-winning national program recognized by the American Medical Association and World Health Organization for excellence in adolescent education.

We greatly appreciate the continued support of the Military Police Activity in providing information and assistance in this area when needed. Other community organizations which provide exemplary, on-going support in this area include Youth Activities, Family Support, Preventive Medicine and Alcohol and Drug Abuse Prevention and Control.

Through the regular health curriculum, special activities and utilization of community resources, the staff of Fort Benning Schools remains confident that the installation's students receive a quality educational program.

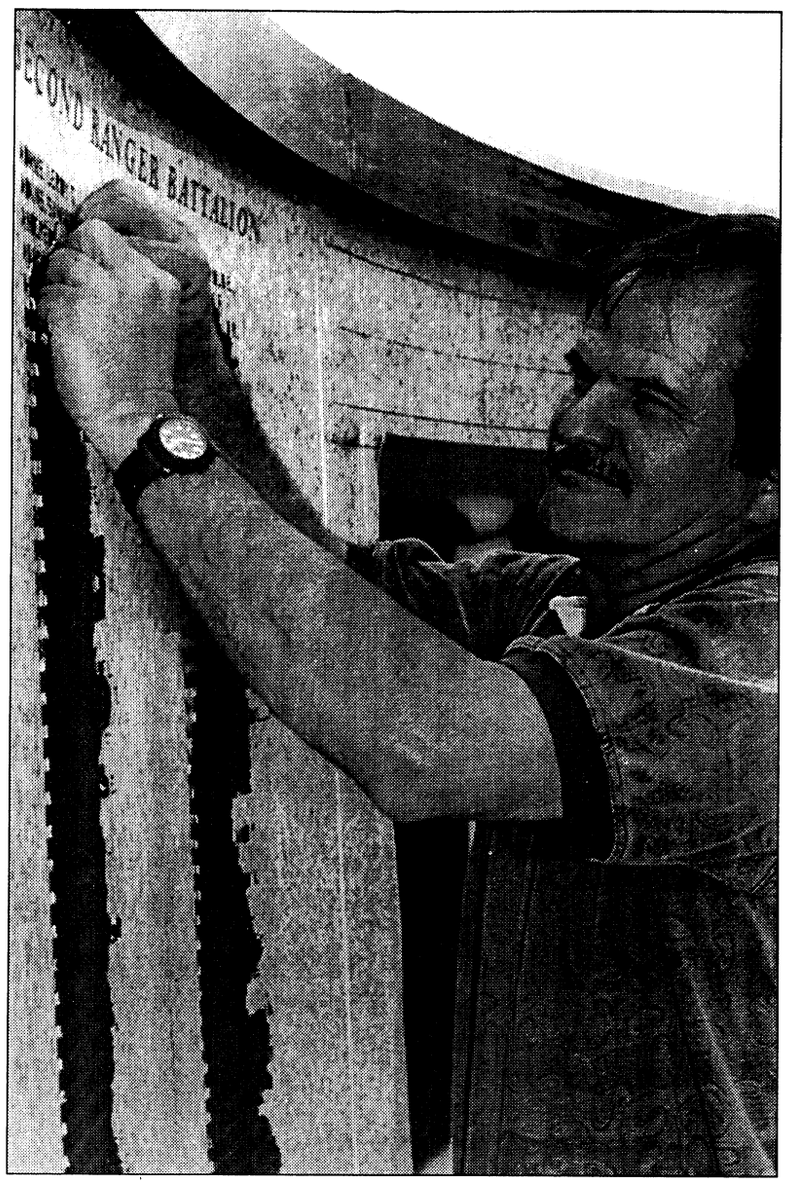
Ceremony plans set

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Secretary of the Army Togo D. West Jr. will join Maj. Gen. Carl F. Ernst, post commanding general, and World War II rangers in dedicating a ranger monument and wall to those who served in the World War II ranger battalions Nov. 14 at 2 p.m.



Sited on Sacrifice Field in front of the National Infantry Museum, the monument features tributes to World War II generals Dwight Eisenhower, Douglas MacAuthor, Omar Bradley, Matthew B. Ridgway, Mark Clark, Lucian K Truscott and John "Iron Mike" O'Daniel.

Many rangers will be on hand for the event, including James J. Altieri, general chairman of the World War II Remembrance Society who will also act as emcee; Maj. Gen. William Kernan, commanding general of the 101st Airborne Division and former commander of the 75th Ranger Regiment; and Jay Northrup, president of the Ranger Battalions Association.

Northrup will lay a wreath that pays homage to the 580 Rangers killed in action and during training. Their names are etched on the wall.

Taps will be played, followed by bagpipes playing Amazing Grace.

The association is currently raising funds to build a ranger wing to the National Infantry Museum which will be built directly behind Sacrifice Field and the monuments.

3rd ID deploys for training

By Robin A. Shawlinski
3rd Bde., 3rd Inf. Div. (Mech.)

More than 500 soldiers from the 3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division (Mechanized), deployed Oct. 15 to 21 to Southwest Asia to participate in a month-long combined exercise.

The exercise, spearheaded by 1st Battalion, 15th Infantry Regiment, is a routine training exercise that has been planned for more than a year, according to Maj. Roger McDonald, 1st Bn., 15th Inf. Regt., training officer.

"(Exercises of this type) are what we joined the Army for," he said. "We're ambassadors for the United States. This gives us a chance to show off the professionalism and pride of individuals."

The 1st Bn., 15th Inf. Regt., is joined by Company B, 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor Regiment; Company C, 317th Engineer Battalion, 3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division (Mechanized); 3rd Military Police Company; 203rd Forward Support Battalion; 1st Battalion, 10th Field Artillery Regiment; and included support elements from 16th Field Service Company, Fort Lee, Va.; 226th Supply and Service Company; and 103rd Military Intelligence, both from Fort Stewart, Ga.; and 96th Civil Affairs Company, Fort Bragg, N.C.

The exercise will feature tank and Bradley fighting vehicle platoon operations and will increase in size and intensity, McDonald said.

Many of the soldiers see this as a great opportunity to participate in realistic training and train with foreign armies.

"This is exciting," said Staff Sgt. Raymond Barger, Company C, 1st Battalion, 15th Inf. Regt. "We get to use combined arms and forces, and it gives us a chance to establish a relationship with our allies. We'll get to see how they operate; they see how we operate and both will get a better understanding of how we work."

Spc. Terrance Walka, Company B, 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor Regt., said he was looking forward to the training and felt proud to be representing the United States.

Brigade officials expect the troops to return before Thanksgiving.

Improvements lead to better quality of life

Better Opportunities for Single Soldiers

With all of the new barracks construction, soldiers have plenty to look forward to in the next several years. But what about barracks improvement now?

Currently, quality of life improvements occurred in units like Company A, 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment. These projects improved the living environment of the soldiers in the billets. With new carpet, ceiling fans and microwaves, Co. A's single soldiers find a little goes a long way.

The company received new carpet in September. The company provided the carpet, the soldiers provided the muscle.

"The old carpets had some water damage and really showed their age," said Spc. David Shafer, Co. A, 1st Bn., 11th Inf. Regt. "The new carpets look a lot better. It was well worth the time it took to install it."

Ceiling fans were the next improvement seen by the soldiers of Co. A.

"They help provide better circulation in my room," said Shafer.

The latest improvement introduced included new microwaves for the company. Each soldier is able to sign out a microwave on his or her room's hand receipt. For some, the new microwaves improve their leisure time greatly.

"It makes it easier on soldiers on separate rations who can't afford a microwave," Shafer said.

According to Spc. Richard Germann, a BOSS spokesman, these minor improvements positively affected single soldier quality of life. The soldiers of Co. A live with many of the modern comforts of a modern dorm room. These improvements lead to a happier Army.

AUSA returns from national meeting

Lori Egan
Bayonet staff writer

More than 50 people representing the Chattahoochee Valley-Fort Benning Chapter of the Association of the U.S. Army traveled to Washington, D.C., recently to participate in the 42nd annual AUSA meeting.

"The chapter did superbly," said Wayne Andrews, chapter president. "We received the Chapter of Excellence Award and were named a Merit Chapter also, but the award I'm really excited about is the honorable mention we received from the Council of Trustees as the Best Chapter Overall.

"This is a significant achievement," Andrews continued. "We received this award because of the numerous activities the chapter plans for the soldiers, such as Military Appreciation Week, Operation Holiday, Military Appreciation Day at the Buick Challenge and soldiers' awards.

"We also received recognition as the runner up for the most active in pursuit of AUSA objectives. Those objectives include: adequate funding to equip, train and field a professional Army; and ensuring that military and federal compensation and the retirement system keeps pace with the civilian counterpart."

The national meeting started Monday with the Sergeants Majors Conference. Sgt. Maj. of the Army Gene C. McKinney spoke about the importance of communication, said Sgt. 1st Class Art Murphy, Community Relations noncommissioned officer in charge.

"The President's Reception was nice because it gave soldiers the opportunity to mingle with military leaders, such as Secretary of the Army Togo D. West Jr., Army Chief of Staff Gen. Dennis J. Reimer and Sergeant Major of the Army Gene C. McKinney," said Sgt. 1st Class Steve Klein, Community Relations representative.

"I think it is important to send the people who complain about the membership fees to the national meeting," said Drill Sergeant of the Year Sgt. 1st Class Gregory J. Mance, Headquarters Service Company, Infantry Training Brigade. "By sending those soldiers, they will see what AUSA

Post sets speed limits, bans roads during PT

USAIC Public Affairs Office

The speed limit is 15 mph on Main Post during the established physical training hours (6 to 7:30 a.m.) Monday through Friday.

The speed limit when passing individual runners or formations is 10 mph. Both have priority on post during the stated hours, according to a post policy. The following roads are exempt from the new speed limits because all running is banned on those roads.

•10th Mountain Division Road

•Dixie Road, except the portion from Sightseeing Road (Sandy Patch) to Lawson Army Airfield

•Sunshine Road

•Lumpkin Road from Dixie Road to Custer Road

•Custer Road from Benning Road to Eisenhower Exchange

Also, the 82nd Airborne Division Road from Sunshine Road to Bradshaw Road will be closed to traffic from 6 to 7:30 a.m. Monday through Friday for use by formations and individual runners. Kelley Hill is completely closed to traffic during this time.

The speed limit is 15 mph on Sand Hill Monday through Saturday from 5:30 to 7 a.m.

Also, 11th Airborne Division Road on Sand Hill is permanently closed.

does for them to ensure that we (the Army) have the best equipment to choose from for job performance."

"The AUSA national meeting is the greatest display of landpower in the entire world," said retired Command Sgt. Maj. Jim Gallagher, Combined Arms and Training Directorate executive officer. "Big trucks, guns, electronic equipment, it was all there. The defense industries of the U.S., Germany, Israel, France and Britain all had displays there.

"The displays show the career soldier what's down the road for the Army ... the professional aspect of the displays gives soldiers insight to the Army of the 21st century," Gallagher continued.

The chapter also served as host along with the Columbus Chamber of Commerce, W.C. Bradley Company and the Columbus Bank and Trust Company for luncheon whose special guest and speaker was Bo Callaway, former Secretary of the Army and chief executive officer of Callaway Gardens.

CATD XO receives award

USAIC Public Affairs Office

The executive officer of the Combined Arms and Tactics Directorate received the President's Medal at the Association of the U.S. Army's national convention in Washington D.C.

Retired Command Sgt. Maj. Jim Gallagher received the medal during the opening session of the meeting.

"Always concerned," the medal's citation reads, "about the well-being of soldiers, he initiated numerous programs to benefit them. One of the most memorable is Operation Holiday, a very popular program to take care of soldiers who remain on post during holiday periods."

Gallagher, also instrumental in founding the chapter's Oktoberfest and Fish Fry, brought soldiers and civilians together for food and entertainment at the event and the Fort Benning Military Appreciation Week, which provided a series of opportunities for soldiers to interact with local community leaders and for the leaders to demonstrate their support and appreciation of soldiers.

DoD investigates Gulf War illnesses, seeks possible information

Reserve Command Public Affairs

Deputy Secretary of Defense John P. White announced Oct. 22 a series of actions to reach out to and seek the help of about 20,000 Gulf War veterans who were possibly near Khamisiyah, Iraq, between March 4 to 15, 1991.

These actions are being undertaken as part of the ongoing efforts, at the direction of President William J. Clinton and Secretary of Defense William Perry, to conduct a full investigation of any information helpful in determining the causes of illnesses being explained by veterans of the Gulf War.

U.S. troops destroyed large quantities of Iraqi ammunition at Khamisiyah, a sprawling ammunition storage site in southern Iraq, shortly after the Gulf War ended. Evidence that chemical weapons possibly were among the munitions destroyed on March 4 and 10 triggered an intensified effort on the part of the Department of Defense to reconstruct the events at that time.

"The story of Khamisiyah is still incomplete," White said referring to the ongoing extensive investigation of the events at Khamisiyah.

"We are putting the puzzle together, and we want those who were there to help us fill in the missing pieces. Khamisiyah is a watershed event in our search for information and understanding of Gulf War illnesses. It is the first event where we can place American troops in an area where we believe chemical weapons were destroyed. To our knowledge, service members at that time did not report the symptoms associated with exposure to chemical agents, but our search for information continues.

"We want to reassure our veterans that no effort will be spared in understanding Gulf War veterans' illnesses, and no Gulf War veterans will be without the health care they need."

DoD began contacting 1,168 U.S. service members assigned to units involved in the March 4, 1991, demolition operations at the Khamisiyah bunker complex in August 1996. The veterans were asked to call the DoD Persian Gulf Veterans hot line to report any medical problems they experienced and provide any information they believe pertinent to this service incident.

"Today as one key step in the Department's efforts," White said. "We are launching an outreach effort to about 20,000 Gulf War veterans who were within 31 miles (50 kilometers) of the Khamisiyah site from March 4 through March 15, 1991.

"We are going beyond the area in which there were likely to have been immediate effects from any chemical agent (nerve gas) exposure. Since there is evidence that chemical weapons were present during the demolition of a bunker and crated munitions in a pit area, we are asking for help from our people in learning more about what happened," White said.

"At the same time we are asking for our Gulf War veterans to help, we want to assure them that we take care of our own. An aggressive health-care outreach effort is being carried out to these 20,000 Gulf War veterans. For any of them who have health concerns, we are asking that they contact us or Veterans Affairs so that we can give them a medical evaluation.

"In addition, the department is now investigating the possibility of a detonation at the Khamisiyah complex on March 12, two days after the demolition reported earlier. It is not known if the unit logs containing this report are accurate or, if such a demolition occurred, if chemical munitions were involved.

"The department has launched an extensive research effort to understand what happened during the war, investigating incidents that may have exposed U.S. troops to chemical weapons or other unknown substances, and assessing the health of Gulf War veterans.

"DoD is allocating up to $15 million in new research into the possible effects of low-level exposure to chemical agents. Additionally, DoD is funding another $12 million for general research on other possible causes of Gulf War illnesses.

"We were always concerned with the health of our troops — especially when they are deployed to unfamiliar environments where they may be exposed to chemical weapons," White said. "We will continue to investigate incidents that may have exposed our troops to chemical weapons or to unknown substances, and to assess and provide for the health of our Gulf War veterans."

Post plans to memorialize 86 rangers fallen during the Vietnam War

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Eighty-six rangers who paid the ultimate price during the Vietnam conflict will be memorialized Nov. 11 at the post's Ranger Memorial.

The dedication of memorial bricks takes place during a 9 a.m. service beneath the arches of the Ranger Monument. During the service, representatives of four ranger companies plan to read the names of the rangers who made the supreme sacrifice in Vietnam.

The four ranger companies honoring their fallen comrades include Companies G, P and N; 75th Ranger Regiment; and Company D (Ranger), 151st Airborne Infantry.

Each ranger company beared the responsibility for collecting the funds to purchase the bricks for their fallen comrades. McDonnell Douglas provided matching funds.

According to Steve Crabtree, a veteran of Co. G, 371 rangers died during the conflict.

He said it remains the goal of the 75th Ranger Regiment Association to purchase bricks for all these rangers.

The public is invited to the service.

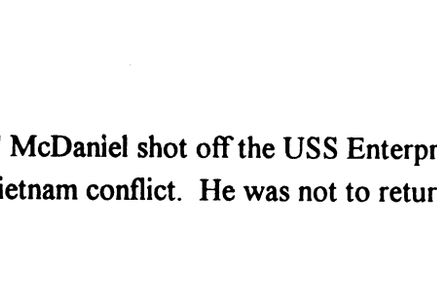
...for over six years I couldn't vote...



In May of 1967, Eugene "Red" McDaniel shot off the USS Enterprise in his A-6 Intruder, headed for Hanoi during the Vietnam conflict. He was not to return for over six years. He was shot down and captured.

Political decisions were made during his captivity which lengthened his imprisonment by leaders who were elected when he was back home.

But he had not voted in those elections.

Stripped of his freedom, Red realized the importance of the military's vote.

"VOTING IS NOT JUST A RIGHT . . .

. . . it's a responsibility."

ENGINEER TABLE

317th concurs qualification

By Robin A. Shawlinski
3rd Bde., 3rd Inf. Div. (Mech.)

The 317th Engineer Battalion became the first mechanized engineers in the U.S. Army to qualify soldiers using the newly proposed Engineer Qualification Tables Oct. 21 through 26.

Not only was the 317th the first to qualify, they have played a large part in setting the standards for the qualification, according to Lt. Col. David Kingston, 317th Eng. Bn., commander.

"The 3rd Infantry Division Engineer Brigade has been the developer and tester of these training tables, which will require approval through the Army Engineer Center at Fort Leonard Wood, Missouri, before it can be fully implemented," said Col. Billy Newman, 3rd Infantry Division Engineer Brigade commander.

Newman said the tables were developed to support the engineers who support the mechanized maneuver brigades.

"Because of the limited resources and the operations tempo of maneuver units, we have not, in the past, been able to get our own 6-week training cycle," he said. "(With the EQT) engineers will be able to train with the same concept in mind as the maneuver battalions, whereby lane training can be conducted simultaneously."

The Engineer Qualification Tables are based on 12 tables. Tables 1 through 6 exercise an engineer soldiers' individual skills. These tasks include leader certification, individual and crew certification, mine and demolition qualification and squad battle training drills.

> "When you use training aids, you don't get feedback. When you use live demolitions, if it doesn't blow you know you didn't do something right."
> — 1st Sgt. Mike Fike
> Company B, 317th Eng. Bn.

Table 7 is a rehearsal for Table 8, which is the actual squad qualification table. Tables 9 through 12 are platoon level skills.

As part of Table 8, the soldiers are required to complete seven battle drills that apply to every combat engineer, according to Maj. Jonathan A. Revolinsky, 317th Eng. Bn. training officer.

The seven tasks include constructing a wire entanglement, creating a crater obstacle, placing a row in a hasty row minefield for tracked and wheeled vehicles, emplacing a nuisance minefield, breaching a minefield with a hand-emplaced explosive, clearing a footpath with a bangalore torpedo and conducting minesweep operations.

Each task is worth 100 points, giving the squad a possible 700 points. If a squad scores lower than 75 points on a task, though, they must retest, according to Revolinsky.

"It's important to qualify because it proves to the soldiers that they can accomplish their mission with the use of real explosives, and this is as close to combat conditions as possible," he said. "If they can qualify here, it'll help them in combat," he said.

First Sgt. Mike Fike, Company B, 317th Eng. Bn. said he and his soldiers are happy about the qualification tables.

"All the soldiers are motivated. Using live demolitions really pumps the soldiers up."

Fike said the most important part of the EQT is the feedback the soldiers receive.

"When you use training aids, you don't get good feedback," he said. "When you use live demolitions, if it doesn't blow you know you didn't do something right."

The battalion qualified 100 percent of its squads.

203rd FSB soldiers train on bayonet course

By Larry Wright Jr.
Co. B, 203rd Forward Support Battalion

Company B, 203rd Forward Support Battalion, attacked the bayonet course during Sledgehammer sergeants' time training Oct. 17 at Sand Hill.

The soldiers put on their combat faces as they focused on Staff Sgt. Lloyd Clarke and his demonstrator, Sgt. Jeffrey Sumpter, as they went over the basics of offensive and defensive movements on the bayonet course.

"Such intense training should be constant so as to continue to sharpen the soldiers' skills," Clarke said. "Training at the bayonet course for a unit such as this — a support unit — should be conducted twice a year."

After reiterating the movements, which included smashes and slashes, the soldiers took to the practice course to hone their bayonet skills. The soldiers then got a chance to practice their offensive steps against a bayonet target made of a rubber center target and pivoting wooden arms.

Maj. Dale Wronko, the 203rd FSB executive officer, pointed out the need for soldiers to gain a solid understanding in hand-to-hand self defense.

After practicing, the soldiers got to tackle the actual course. They climbed an 8-feet log wall, straddled hurdles, crawled under barbed wire and charged the bayonet target.

Although the course proved very challenging, Company B's soldiers sped through it.

Pfc. Damon Jordan posted the fastest time and said he felt good about his effort and the company's effort.

"I really love training here and wish we could do it more," he said.

He was awarded the title of Company Distinguished Bayonet Fighter and received a battalion coin.

Most of the soldiers agreed with him about the training.

"(This training) benefits us because of the familiarity with the basics and sets the stage for mental awareness," said Pfc. Elmer Straton.

Company B Commander Capt. William Marks said the company's training hones close combat skills, and promotes esprit de corps.

He also said he felt the motivation factor was very important because it was a sign of alertness that is necessary when wielding a rifle with fixed bayonets.

This training was just one of many high-intensity training exercises the unit accomplished. They also completed the confidence course and the nuclear biological chemical chamber.

The company plans on completing more sergeants' training such as land navigation, squad tactics and the leader reaction course.

2nd Bn 69th Armor Regt conducts lane training

By Robin A. Shawlinski
3rd Bde., 3rd Inf. Div. (Mech.)

The four M1A1 Abrams tanks travel through the wooded area at about 15 miles per hour. Inside, the crew scans the area for the enemy. The gunner in one of the Abrams spots an obstacle in the distance. The platoon leader sends out one of the Abrams to breach the obstacle.

Platoons from 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor, received realistic training during platoon lane training Oct. 7 to 16.

"This is a tool to show how a platoon works together," said Command Sgt. Maj. Ronald Buzzell, 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor Regiment, sergeant major.

During the lane training, a platoon is given a movement-to-contact mission. After planning and rehearsals, the platoon, which consists of four Abrams, begins movement.

The lane is set up to move tactically; react to dismount troops; react to a nuclear, biological and chemical environment; and to breach an obstacle

Company D, 2nd Bn., 69th Armor Regt., platoon leader, 2nd Lt. James Lee, said the lane training offers himself and his platoon realistic training.

"It allows the soldiers to develop individual skills, the tank crews to develop tanks skills and myself and my platoon sergeant to develop our command and control skills," he said.

Lee said the entire lane was demanding. With obstacles, the most demanding part is knowing that someone is watching you, he said.

"When we approach an obstacle, first we have to find a way to get through while safeguarding the whole element," he said.

When reacting to dismounted troops, the platoon must react quickly.

"Dismounts are the number one threat to a tank, so we must react correctly to save lives," he said.

Sgt. James Walker, a tank commander, said lane training is good training.

"This is the closest thing we're going to get as far as realism," Walker said. "The training we do here is probably harder than the combat we'll be in."

Lee said the most challenging part of this lane training remains the use of the new Tank Weapons Gunnery Simulator System, which is a gunnery simulator that uses the M1A1 tank's fire control system and superimposes a computer generated projectile onto the reticle. This allows crews to see the effects of the rounds fired without using ammunition.

Because the TWGSS system does not require ammunition or a live fire range to employ, it can be used more frequently and at much less cost than standard gunnery tables, Lee said.

The lane training was only the second time 2nd Bn., 69th Armor Regt. used the new system.

"This is a new system, but we're working out the kinks," Lee said. "Even so, it's even better than MILES (multiple integrated laser engagement system). It's just like firing with live ammunition."

Each company performed two days of lane training over a three-week period.

"This wasn't the first set of major field exercises after NTC (National Training Center)," said Lt Col. Patrick Stallings, 2nd Bn., 69th Armor Regt., commander, "but it's the first in gearing up for next year."

Warrior XXI activates TNET sites

By Jim Caldwell
TRADOC News Service

The largest group of Training and Doctrine Command Video Teletraining Network sites ever activated at one time went on line for the Warrior XXI Working Group meeting Oct. 9 to 10 at Fort Eustis, Va.

There were 25 TNET sites connected by satellite, according to Dr. Millie Abell, chief of technologies in the futures training division of TRADOC's deputy chief of staff for training organization.

"Just as TRADOC must rethink the way it delivers training, so also must the headquarters explore other means of conducting conferences and working groups," Abell said.

Holding the conference over the same systems over which training is delivered to soldiers at their home stations allowed 354 trainers, training developers and managers to participate. Only about 50 could attend a meeting in person.

"We had the conference to update trainers on Warrior XXI initiatives," Abell said, "Specifically in the areas of training development, distance learning and Classroom XXI."

During live interactive periods, some conferees asked questions directly of the briefers at Fort Eustis. Others phoned, faxed, or e-mailed an additional 108 questions, which received answers during those sessions.

Warrior XXI remains one of three axes of Army Training XXI and is concerned with redesigning institutional training and adapting technologies to move Army training into the 21st century. A major portion of Warrior XXI includes a paradigm shift in training, according to Abell, where new training technologies and strategies deliver institutional training to soldiers when and where needed.

Warfighter XXI focuses on supporting units with appropriate training programs. Warnet XXI deals with new equipment training delivered through distance learning systems and mobile training teams.

"We need to take a serious look at the way we're doing business and the opportunities offered by educational information technologies," said Robert Seger, acting DCST. "If you can deliver the education or the training where the soldier lives, it saves a lot of wear and tear emotionally on the family as well as the soldier."

Seger pointed out that Gen. Dennis J. Reimer, Army chief of staff, supports such efforts because they continue to train soldiers to standards while reducing personnel turbulence. They also receive backing at Department of Defense and Congressional levels, he said.

Col. Christopher Olso, DCST's director of training development and analysis, asked participants for feedback to help improve similar future conferences.

Air Force staff sgts win Lightning Challenge

AETC News Service

HURLBURT FIELD, Fla. — An Air Force tactical air control party from Fort Benning took first place in Lightning Challenge '96 conducted in Hurlburt Field, Fla., Oct. 20 to 25.

Staff Sgts. Robert Arserio and Paul Ford won the team event while Arserio garnered first place in the individual category.

Organized by Air Education and Training Command's Detachment 1, 335th Training Squadron, Hurlburt Field, Fla., the annual competition tests tactical air command and control specialists' combat skills and readiness through eight challenges.

"The competition was fierce and a huge success," said Tech. Sgt. Dan Hanneken, event coordinator assigned to Det. 1, 335th TRS. "We had 110 competitors representing every Air Force tactical air control party unit in the world. In addition to enhancing mission readiness, we'll provide feedback on the effectiveness of our unit's training to commanders in the field."

Events in the competition include a job knowledge test, close air support mission planning test, obstacle course, marksmanship, tactical road march field skills, communication and foot navigation.

Officials at the training squadron said the term "lightning" symbolizes the electronic means by which tactical air command and control specialists provide command and control for close air support, and the air-to-ground nature of the mission. The term "challenge" represents the competitive nature of both the career field and the annual measure of their combat skills and readiness at Hurlburt Field.

AROUND POST

Commissary makes changes — The mall entrance to the Commissary closes through Tuesday and moves to the first set of doors in front of the building, which was formerly used as the bagger entrance. A commissary employee will check patron identification at the new entrance. Also, a new produce department opened Tuesday and the Commissary deli relocated next to the new produce department on a temporary basis. Finally, cashiers will begin checking identifications at the check-out stand on Tuesday. Cashiers must see identification before ringing out the patron's order.

Post conducts fall cleanup — A post-wide fall cleanup of the post cantonment and housing areas takes place from Nov. 18 through 22.

Occupants bear the responsibility for the cleanup of their quarters, including yard maintenance and moving improperly parked vehicles.

Area coordinators offer assistance in the facilitating of removal of large debris, bulk recyclable aluminum and large scrap aluminum. These coordinators also conduct inspections Nov. 22 to ensure each person's quarters meet required installation standards.

AUSA to meet for a fish fry — The Chattahoochee Valley-Fort Benning Chapter of the Association of the U.S. Army meets on Nov. 26 for a fish fry and general membership meeting accompanied by live entertainment at the Fort Benning Officers' Club.

The doors open with a cash bar at 6 p.m. and the serving line opens at 6:30.

Tickets cost $12 and include beer and a buffet meal. Only advanced ticket sales are offered. The attire for the evening is casual.

For information, call 689-3272 no later than Nov. 20.

School's PTO sponsors a Parent's Night Out — Richard G. Wilson Elementary School's Parent Teacher Organization plans to give a class on stress management at its first Parent's Night Out in the schools auditorium Wednesday at 7 p.m.

Featured speaker, Chaplain (Lt. Col.) Robert Wildeman, the Infantry Center chaplain, will speak about creative parenting and offers parents ways to distress from the job of raising children.

The PTO opens the evenings activities to the public. For information, call Laura Walker at 687-6261.

FAITH MIDDLE SCHOOL

Students get motivated to succeed

By Lisa M. Hibbert
Bayonet staff writer

Being in gangs, using drugs and hanging out does not make you 'bad,' said Drew Brown III, pilot for Federal Express, a lieutenant commander in the U.S. Naval Reserve and president of the American Dream Foundation. Being drug free and a college graduate makes you 'bad!'

Entering the gymnasium at Don C. Faith Middle School, where the entire student body gathered to hear his message, Brown looked at the assembly through darkly-tinted glasses. The program took place as a part of Red Ribbon Week.

"People in the Bloods and the Crypts think their bad because they're gang members," Brown said. "But I'm a member of a bigger gang called the U.S. Navy, and if those punks ever bother me, I'll get my boys together and we have enough gun powder to take out the entire state of Georgia."

Brown said he comes out tough to the audience to grip the kids attention.

"It's funny being there in front of everybody," Brown said. "When I come out talking that way, the teachers look at each other like, 'Get this guy out of here!' But when I get further into my message, the teachers are like, 'Yeah! you tell 'em!'"

With his own formula for achievement — education plus hard work minus drugs equals success and the American dream — Brown talked to more than four million children over the past 10 years throughout the country about making something of themselves.

Dressed in a blue flight suit embroidered with the words Dark Gable, Brown told the group how education refines their lives.

"You wear your hair and your clothes the way you do to be happy and have fun," Brown said. "But since I went to college, my level of fun raised. Now when I party, I party in Paris; when I jam, I jam in Jamaica.

"A whole nation of people were kept enslaved in this country because they could not read and if you are having trouble, you need to ask one of these teachers for help," Brown said. "Well-to-do people always have libraries. You will be kept enslaved if you don't learn.

Lisa M. Hibbert

Motivational speaker Drew Brown gives the students at Don C. Faith Middle School a motivational talk during a Red Ribbon Week program conducted in the school's gym Oct. 24.

"You are actually being invited to the biggest party of your life," Brown said. "They party hard at Georgia State!"

According to Brown, getting high is not a bad thing. During the program, Brown encouraged the children to try 'getting high.'

"If you want to get high, go to medical school and become a doctor," Brown said. "When someone hands you a check for $40,000 for a day's work, you are toasted!"

Drugs get called dope for a reason, Brown said. They make you stupid.

"The only cell in your body that does not reproduce is the brain cell," Brown said. "Why would you use anything that will destroy your brain?"

Laughter makes good medicine for children

Egleston Children's Hospital

Parents naturally feel responsible for providing their children with food, shelter and the necessities of life. But what about working to provide your children with one of the best tools for dealing with life — a sense of humor?

That advice comes from Radford University physical and health education professor B.B. Strum.

"Some families regularly practice humor and some don't, but children need to develop a sense of humor," Strum said. "It's an important part of life. Laughter is a great stress reducer and a great coping tool."

Studies document the stress-reducing power of laughter, Strum said.

"The physical results of 100 good belly laughs a day equate to the results achieved by running a mile. Laughter stimulates endorphins (the body's natural pain killers) and helps to create a feeling of well-being."

"People always try to make newborn babies laugh," Strum continued. "That's not just because smiling is important, but because smiling and laughter have a valuable effect on our total frame of mind."

Strum said he believes an emphasis on humor benefits all of society.

"If people can learn to laugh at their situations maybe they won't be so easily frustrated or angry and resort to violence," she said. "It's hard to laugh and stay tense."

Family members need to try to find ways to work humor into their lives, even when going through physically or emotionally stressful times, Strum said, adding that seemingly insurmountable problems diminish in the light of laughter.

"We should try to find something humorous each day," she said.

Open communication leads to good relations

Egleston Children's Hospital

Communication remains essential to a healthy relationship between parents and teens, but it remains no easy task, according to Laura L. Mee, Ph.D., who practices clinical child psychology at Egleston Children's Hospital at Emory University in Atlanta.

"It's been a problem from the dawn of time," Mee said. "Remember Romeo and Juliet? Teens who are yearning for independence aren't likely to confide in their parents."

Mee advises parents to encourage teenagers to be open with them. Many teens want independence, but sometimes situations develop that the teen cannot handle alone, she said. Unless the teen feels able to talk to his or her parents without risking disapproval, he or she hesitates to ask for help.

"A teen's judgment isn't always good," Mee said. "You have to be there to help them and to impart some wisdom in a way they can accept."

Mee suggests these tips for parents who want to bridge the communication gap before problems occur:

•Watch for opportunities to talk. Take advantage of your teenager's open moments and allow conversations to evolve. Those openings occur at odd times so be willing to seize the opportunity even when in the midst of something else.

•Remain open to insignificant chitchat; it paves the way to important matters.

•Show interest in everything your adolescent tells you, even the boring details. If you hold out for "the good stuff," you probably won't hear anything at all.

•Talk to their friends, but don't pry. Sometimes a parent lures a distant teen into conversation by talking with visiting friends. But keep the conversation general and don't pry.

Your goal remains to encourage your teen to feel comfortable talking to you, not to gather information.

•Participate in things together. If you become involved in a teen's life by attending sporting events together or sharing a hobby, for example, your teen becomes more likely to feel close to you and more likely to confide in you.

•Keep breathing and count to 10. Inevitably, sometimes bad news comes. Make sure your teen knows that you won't go off the deep end and that you stand by him in the time of real trouble.

That fails to mean parents should compromise immunity in exchange for information. Instead, teens need to understand their parents need to help them resolve their problems and level fair consequences for wrongdoing.

Above all, remember an open relationship with an adolescent serves as more than an exercise in problem prevention, Mee said. It allows an opportunity to create a bond that enriches both your lives for many years to come.

Transfusions increase risk for hepatitis

Martin Army Community Hospital

Hepatitis C is a virus that affects the liver. Approximately 150,000 patients become afflicted with this illness each year.

Seventy to 80 percent of people who become infected develop a life-long infection. Less than five percent of patients develop life-threatening complications.

Blood testing for this disease began in 1989, therefore, patients who received blood or blood products prior to 1990 remain at risk of developing the disease.

Transmission

Hepatitis C usually gets transmitted from person to person by exposure to blood or blood products.

Other methods of transmission include intravenous drug abuse, hemophiliacs, health care workers exposed to blood or blood products, people with tatoos, hemodialysis patients, organ transplant recipients and by sexual intercourse with an infected person.

Casual (non-sexual) household contacts generally pose no risk unless they come in contact with the patient's blood, possibly by sharing a razor or a toothbrush.

Symptoms

Most chronic Hepatitis C virus carriers notice few, if any, symptoms.

When symptoms are present, they usually include fatigue (70 percent), abdominal pain or discomfort (20 percent), loss of appetite (15 percent) and weight loss (5 percent).

Testing

If someone suspects their exposure to Hepatitis C in the past (such as blood transfusion before 1990), then they need to see their physician and receive blood testing for evidence of inflammation in the liver.

If this test gives a positive result, then they receive testing for antibodies to Hepatitis C.

Treatment

Hepatitis C slowly progresses, and decades often pass between contracting the disease and the onset of its seriousness.

Serial lab tests remain required to determine the presence of liver inflammation. Therapy becomes based on the results of those blood tests over time.

tricare

Martin Army Community Hospital

The Department of Defense recently switched to a new health care program for the Army, Navy and Air Force this year.

Representatives from Martin Army Community Hospital provide Tricare information to soldiers, retirees and family members.

Many eligible beneficiaries show concern about the change and how it affects their care. One of the most commonly asked questions follows.

Q. What happens if I enroll in Tricare Prime at Martin Army Community Hospital and later move to another area?

A. If you move inside Region 3 or to Region 4, you simply transfer your Tricare enrollment to the new location. If you move into another area, pick up a disenrollment form from the Tricare Service Center, Building 9204, and take it with you. When you reach your new area, complete the disenrollment form and send it to Fort Benning before you enroll in Tricare or use standard Civilian Health and Medical Program of the Uniformed Services at your new location if Tricare remains unavailable.

Brown also gave the children a safe sex message.

"If I gave you a bullet-proof vest and I told you it only works 80 percent of the time, would you let me shoot you?" Brown asked. "Then why would you have sex with someone infected with the AIDS virus? Condoms don't always work."

Nothing good ever comes easy, Brown said. People need to work hard for the things they want.

"I wanted to be a pilot because I wanted a job where I could make a lot of money and not have to work hard," Brown said. "The problem was that I didn't know how to fly, so I joined the military to learn how.

"For the first time in my life, I worked hard because being a pilot was something I really wanted," Brown said. "Today I am a pilot because I never quit. If you're a quitter, then you'll marry a quitter. Then you'll have kids called the quitetts."

Brown called 10 students to stand with him at the front of the gym.

"Some of you might call them nerds," Brown said, referring to the students beside him. "But one day, they're going to be driving a nerdy big car and living in a nerdy big house, and some of you who think you know what time it is, won't even have a watch to look at."

When someone is smart and drug free, people listen to what that person has to say, regardless of their color, according to Brown.

"Would you follow a drunk, white man who slurred his words or would you follow a nerdy-Steve Erckle-like black kid?" Brown said. "There is no color; people always follow the person who knows the most.

"Prejudice is not about not liking someone's skin color," Brown said. "It's about not liking yourself and having to put others down to make yourself feel good."

In closing, Brown encouraged the students to remember their teachers.

"Teachers are gifts from God and you should never disrespect them," Brown said. "Teachers are addicted to students and you can show your appreciation by just coming back and saying thank you."

Brown said that whenever he speaks to children, he talks to them as if they were his own.

"Some people say that all children were not meant to go to college and that there is nothing wrong with being a truck driver or working in a factory," Brown said. "Then you ask those same people about their own children and they've all gone to college. A lot of kids have never gone and won't go to college because they were never motivated to go.

"This is my mission," Brown said. "Helping kids is my gift. We have to remember that kids are not the problem. Adults who don't give their kids the proper message are the problem."

Brown and his wife, Laurie, have two children, a daughter, Taryn, a basketball player at Southern University in Louisiana, and Drew IV, a student at White Station High School in Memphis, Tenn.

Catholics celebrate all saints

By David Kirk
1st Battalion, 15th Infantry Regiment

reflections

Today, we celebrate All Saints Day, a day set aside to honor Heaven's very important people.

We honor them not for their accomplishments on Earth, but to recognize that they are indeed one with God in Heaven.

On this day, we recognize those saints who we know by name. More importantly, we remember all the unnamed thousands upon thousands in Heaven without another special day set aside during the year for their recognition.

Too often, we think of saints as perfect people. Saints Peter, Augustine and Mary Magdalene are examples of people who are known for their holiness as well as for the struggles and sinfulness that they overcame by turning their lives over to God.

It was by focusing on really important things in life that helped them. They focused upon God and life in his kingdom as the most important thing and goal in their lives. Hence, all in Heaven have done the same thing.

God invited all of us to his kingdom and receive VIP status. Since we remain very important to God, he wishes us to live with him forever in this kingdom.

Today, we take time to honor all those who listened to God's invitation, who lived out their lives on Earth focusing upon the promises of Heaven. They understand that the only VIP designation that really counts is the one in Heaven.

God's people possess unfailing faith

By Jimmy Clay Davis
2145th U. S. Army Garrison

reflections

Have you ever failed in your faith? Have you ever doubted something God said or some promise he made?

Often, we allow troublesome circumstances to shake our faith. We sometimes fail to admit it, but we feel as if God let us down or no longer cares. If this description fits you, I want to encourage you to strive for an unfailing faith even in the midst of trials.

If we possess this kind of faith, however, we need to know what it looks like and its characteristics. Joshua, Chapter 6, accounts of the people of Israel conquering Jericho and it describes the characteristics of an unfailing faith.

First, faith without fail brings conflicts. We often think that if we possess a strong faith, things will go smoothly. But in Joshua 6:1, we learn that Jericho stood tightly barricaded and ready for battle. Its people planned not to allow the Israelites to enter the land unchallenged.

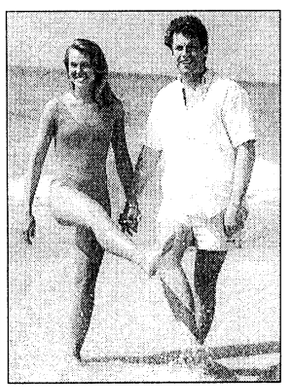
Jesus warns us that believers would be opposed and hated by the world. Expect strong faith to invite conflict from the unbelieving world.

The second characteristic of an unfailing faith is obedience. God gave very specific instructions to the Israelites. He told them to march around the city once a day for six days and on the seventh, to march seven times. Notice that the walls failed to fall until they fully obeyed every command, thus demonstrating that unfailing faith obeys God completely.

This obedience remains often difficult because God's plans sometimes seem illogical from a human perspective. Who ever heard of capturing an enemy city in this way? Yet, God expected them to trust and obey.

The third characteristic of an unfailing faith is patience. Surely, the plan God gave Israel called for a lot of patience. There they stood, ready to capture Jericho and get on with conquering the rest of the Promised Land.

Instead, they spent several days just marching around the city. Certainly this wasted time. It called for patience. How did patience benefit them?



First, it showed them their helplessness. As they marched around the city and exercised patience, they appreciated the size of the city walls and realized how small their human strength was. Being patient also allowed God to work in his own time and in his own way, and would result in God getting the glory, which ought to remain the goal of every believer.

The tournament begins at 9 a.m. with teams limited to 1 team consisting of 12 players per major subordinate command.

In addition, there will be an indian arts and crafts display and Native American dance.

For more information, call Sgt. 1st Class James Madison at 545-6596.

Wrestling tournament planned — Members of the Army Wrestling Team plan a wrestling tournament and clinic Nov. 16 at the Santiago Fitness Center.

Weigh-ins begin Nov. 15 at 5 p.m. and Nov. 16 from 8:30 to 9 a.m.

The tournament is open to active duty military only.

The wrestling clinic begins at 9:15 a.m. on Nov. 16 and covers both Greco-Roman and freestyle wrestling.

For more information, call Jim Brown at 545-4178.

ARMY 10-MILER

Post team takes second place in annual meet

By John W. Peeler
Special to the Bayonet©

With more than 9,000 runners in the 12th Annual Army 10-Miler "Run the River Bridges" race, Fort Benning sent its complement of six men and five women finishing second in the overall active duty team standings behind Fort Hood, Texas.

In the largest Army 10-miler race ever, 391 teams took part in the race taking more than 5 minutes for all the runners to cross the starting line.

The Fort Hood team, led by the men's division winner, finished with a time of 51:41 followed by the Fort Benning team at 52:51.

In the individual categories Samuel Bobbitt from the U.S. Army Physical Fitness School finished fourth overall with a time of 50:16 and Lloyd McDonald in fifth place.

"I felt both the men's and women's teams we sent did very well," said Army 10-miler coach Charles Hunsaker.

"We felt we had a good chance of winning going in," Hunsaker said. "None of our runners ran poorly; Fort Hood was just really good."

Hunsaker said six months training time is really needed to compete in a race of the caliber of the 10-miler. He also said that experience is another factor in how well the runners do.

Both Bobbitt and McDonald are sponsored by Powerbar and compete regularly in races.

"I try to pick and choose the races I run in," McDonald said. "This race was one I knew I needed to compete in."

Hunsaker said he will probably be the coach of the team next year and hopefully runners can be identified a little earlier in the process next year.

Hunsaker credited Bobbitt for putting together most of this year's team.

"Next year, we'll probably have to start at ground zero due to personnel movement," Hunsaker said.

"The keys to next year will be early recognition of the runners and getting started early on a specific training program for each runner."

If you are interested in cross country running or participating in the Army 10-miler, contact Charles Hunsaker at 545-6382.

John W. Peeler

The Fort Benning ten-miler team finished in second place at the 12th Annual Army Ten-Miler race with an average time of 52:51. Youth advances in NFL punt, pass, kick competition

By John W. Peeler

A Fort Benning youth advanced to the next round of the National Football League Gatorade Punt, Pass and Kick competition Oct. 19 by winning the 8- to 9-year-old division in Moultrie, Ga.

Raymond D. Jones Jr., son of Linda and Chief Warrant Officer Raymond D. Jones, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 75th Ranger Regiment, credited his father and mother for his success in the competition.

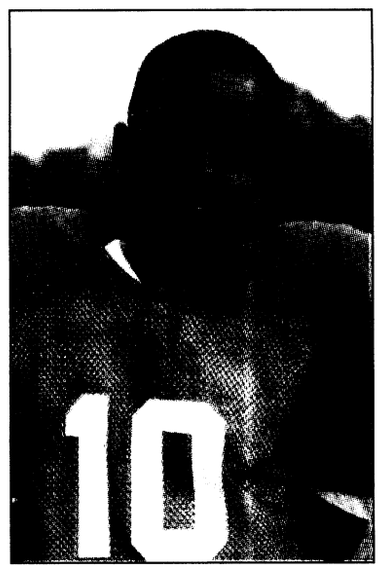
Jones made it to the sectional finals by winning the 8- to 9-year-old division at the first punt, pass and kick conducted on post Sept. 20.

The competition, open to boys and girls ages 8 to 15, test the competitors ability in both accuracy and distance with points being deducted for lack of accuracy.

Jones said his father helped him to develop the fundamentals of the competition and his mother supported him throughout the competition.

Linda Jones said the competition gave Raymond the opportunity to experience other things that he may not have the opportunity to do later on. "It's all about having fun," said Linda Jones.

Jones played two years of flag football and currently plays for the Youth Services Eagles tackle football team as a running back and cornerback.

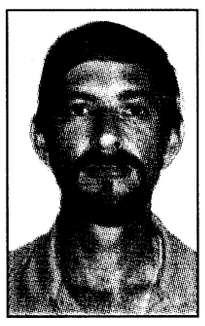


Jones said he practices his skills for the punt, pass and kick competition with his dad in their back yard with a regulation punt, pass and kick football.

Jones said he signed up for the competition because of other kids who had signed up.

"I saw everyone else signing up and decided I would try it," Jones said. He said he looked forward to the next level of competition.

The next level for Jones will be a regional competition Dec. 15 in the Georgia Dome in Atlanta during half-time of the Atlanta Falcons and St. Louis Rams game. Should Jones win in Atlanta, he will advance to the finals at the American Football Conference championship game Jan. 12.



When Jones was ask how he thought he would do in Atlanta, Jones answered confidently, "I will win again."

Action Shooting Team wins every division at competition

By Paula J. Randall Pagán
USAMU Public Affairs Office

BRASILIA, BRAZIL — Three members of the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit's Action Shooting Team represented the United States in the 1996 International Shooting Con-federation World Championships Oct. 6 to 12.

More than 40 countries participated in the competition that takes place every three years and remains the highest level match in which action shooters compete.

Action shooters from the USAMU at Fort Benning who participated include Harold A. Christy Jr., Gregory S. Way and Kenneth S. Suratt. Tony Kidd, also of USAMU, provided gunsmith support.

The United States dominated the competition by winning every division. Christy, a member of the U.S. Standard Division Team that won a Gold medal, took third place overall in the Standard Division's Individual Match.

Out of 608 of the world's best action pistol shooters, Way finished 19th in the Open Division Individual Match and placed in the top 20 shooters recognized at the IPSC awards banquet. Suratt finished in sixth place.

"We (Americans) probably have the edge in the competition because IPSC was started in the United States back in the early '70s and it has spread to 60 nations around the world, so we've been doing it a lot longer than other countries," Christy said.

Christy, who began shooting in 1986, achieved numerous marksmanship accomplishments. In 1995, he served as a member of the Silver medal winning team at the European IPSC Championship and at the Bianchi Cup, at which he placed second in the military shooter competition, and placed ninth in the North American IPSC Championship. He was also the Limited Gun Champion in the Canada Cup and placed fourth in the North Corona Calif., Safariland Friendship Classic. In 1994, he finished 11th in the U.S. Practical Shooting Association Limited Gun National Championship and became the Area VI Limited Gun Champion.

Injuries weigh heavily on overworked muscles, tendons

By Linda Kaup
Bayonet correspondent

commentary

People need to avoid using weight training to speed recovery of injured muscles, tendons and ligaments until swelling subsides and the injured parts move in a full range of motion with little or no pain.

Unlike tendons and ligaments, a great deal of blood circulates throughout muscles. Thus, light- or medium- to high-repetitions (between 10 and 15 times), low-weight exercises after a decrease in swelling speeds the recovery by coursing blood through the injured muscle, rebuilding tissue and flushing out waste.

Tendons and ligaments differ from muscles in that their make up includes tough, fibrous, inelastic tissue with very little blood circulation and, therefore, heal more slowly. Tendons, the connective link between muscle and bone, produce some of the most common sports injuries. Tendon and ligament injuries usually consist of tears in the fibers accompanied by inflammation, such as with tendonitis. With these injuries, performing many repetitions usually causes further irritation.

Many people work so hard in physical fitness centers, they become exhausted. That often leads to injuries. Others take more weight than possible to handle.

Most injuries heal with time. In fact, if injured right now, while reading this, try to imagine recovery occurring soon.

Some tips to prevent injuries from happening follow:

•Warm up — Especially important in cold weather, a good warm up prepares the muscles, tendons and ligaments for action. It gets the blood circulating, raises body temperature and enhances joint flexibility.

Move each body part through the full range of motion, first without resistance, then with light resistance. Include some calisthenics and stretching as part of the warm up.

•Lift progressively — Start with a light weight, then progress and add resistance with each set. Never start with the heaviest set first. Muscles remain unprepared for such sudden exertion.

•Position yourself — Proper positioning remains important in maintaining the correct alignment of the skeletal system and in positioning the muscle for maximum force development.

•Balance muscles — Two types of muscle groups exist — the agonist and the antagonist. The agonist, or prime mover muscles, directly engage in contraction and make the body part move.

The antagonist muscles need to relax at the same time the agonists work. When the natural balance becomes disrupted by the over development of one muscle, the opposite muscle often gets injured.

Hunters donate deer to feed hungry people in Georgia

Georgia Dept. of Natural Resources

SOCIAL CIRCLE, Ga. — Georgia hunters contribute to the fight against hunger by participating in the fourth annual Hunters for the Hungry program Nov. 9 to 10 and Nov. 30 to Dec. 1.

Deer collection takes place at seven locations throughout the state, including new locations in Tifton and Gainesville.

Hunters for the Hungry, a program that aims to feed hungry people throughout the state by collecting deer taken by hunters, is sponsored by the Department of Natural Resources, Wildlife Resources Division; the Department of Corrections; the Department of Agriculture; the Greater Atlanta Chapter of the Safari Club International; and the Georgia Wildlife Federation.

"In the last three years, hunters have donated nearly 10 tons of meat to feed the hungry," said David Waller, director of the Wildlife Resources Division. "The number of deer donated almost equaled the total number of deer collected during the first two years of the program combined. Hopefully, the number of deer donated this fall will double again, meaning even more ground venison for hungry people in Georgia."

Hunters' deer donation locations follow:

•Social Circle — Exit 48 off I-20 at the junction of I-20 and Hwy 278;

•Lexington — Oglethorpe County Farmer's Market on U.S. Hwy 278, west of town, adjacent to the Farm Bureau Office;

•Locust Grove — Locust Grove exit off I-75 on the east side of the Interstate;

•Cedar Creek WMA and B.F. Grant WMA check stations — Saturday only;

•Gainesville — Jesse Jewel Parkway at 1-985; and •Tifton — Exit 20 off I-75 at the Rural Development Center.

Hunters need to look for the blaze-orange Hunters for the Hungry banners at each collection location. Deer accepting takes place from 9 a.m. to 8 p.m., and all deer require field dressing by the hunters before donation. In return for their donation, each hunter receives a blaze-orange Hunters for the Hungry hat donated by the Georgia Wildlife Federation.

After each weekend collection period, the deer get transported by refrigerated trucks to a DOC meat processing plant. Prisoners process the deer into ground venison and pack it into 10-pound tubes labeled with the Hunters for the Hungry logo, under guidelines provided by Georgia Department of Agriculture.

The Middle Georgia Community Food Bank picks up the ground venison and distributes it through the seven Second Harvest Food Banks in Albany, Athens, Atlanta, Augusta, Columbus, Macon and Savannah.

"Unlike many Hunters for the Hungry programs throughout the country where hunters or deer processors must pay a portion of the processing fee, there is no monetary cost to the hunter associated with Georgia's program," said Waller. "The only cost to the hunter is the time and effort expended to donate a deer. The rewards of joining with other hunters to help feed thousands of hungry people is well worth the effort."

For more information on donating a deer to the Hunters for the Hungry program, contact the Wildlife Resources Division at (770) 918-6400.

Midday bass hide close to cover to avoid heat

By Earl Bentz and Steve Price
Outboard Marine Corporation

Middle-of-the-day bass seldom come easy, but for professional tournament anglers whose competition days extend from dawn to late afternoon, fishing at high noon becomes part of the business.

"Ideally, you hope you can catch all your fish early in the morning so you can spend the rest of the day looking instead of casting," said former world champion Ken Cook, "but things rarely work out that way.

"Instead, you have to work even harder, not only to catch fish, but also just to keep your concentration. When it's hot and the fishing is slow, that can be tough."

Cook, who trained in fisheries biology, usually spends his midday hours fishing shaded water and heavy cover.

"Bass are naturally cover-oriented," Cook said, "so shaded areas become especially important during the midday hours when the sun is brightest. Bass feed primarily by ambushing their prey, and one of the best ways to do this is from a darker, shadier spot where they are not as obvious.

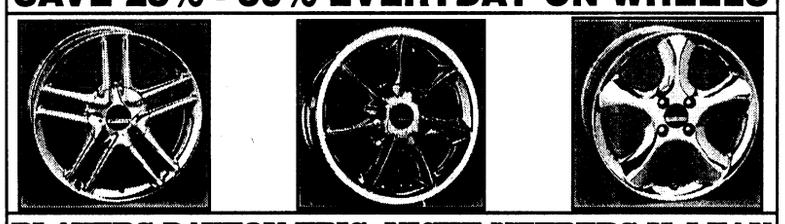
"At the same time, as the day gets hotter bass become less active, just like other types of wildlife," he said. "To get them to hit a lure, you have to put that lure right where they're hiding, because they normally won't chase it very far."

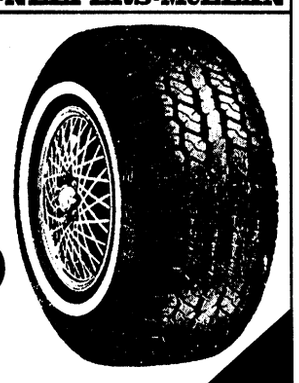
The pro suggests anglers concentrate on fishing laydown logs, especially along shaded shorelines; vegetation; boat houses; and any other type of cover that provides shade and shadows.

"When I'm fishing these types of places, I'll use some type of weedless lure like a spinnerbait, plastic worm, or a jig," Cook said, "and really try to make my first presentation the best one.

"Multiple presentations will often be necessary, so this is also a good time to practice erratic retrieves, too. I'll shake my rod tip so my spinnerbait dances and flutters, and I'll usually hop a plastic worm or jig more than normal."

By fishing this way, Cook said he tries to get reaction strikes rather than actually trying to imitate a food source the bass would feed on naturally. He used this technique to win the world championship on the Chesapeake Bay in 1991.





"There the bass were using isolated clumps of thick grass to hide in," Cook said, "so I would cast my spinnerbait beyond the grass, retrieve to it, then let the lure fall right beside it.

"I was trying to make the lure imitate a dying or injured baitfish that presented an easy meal, and fortunately, the bass cooperated.

"Overall," Cook said, "fishing during the middle of the day usually means having to make very exacting lure presentations into thick cover. This is one reason the technique of flipping works very well, but other lures can certainly be used.

"The action may slow down, but the bass can be enticed into biting," he said.

Don't Find A Home Without It.

Our New PurchasePower Card Will Show Just How Much Home You Can Afford.
All it takes is a touch-tone phone, a few minutes, and the answers to a few simple questions about your income and debt payments. It's quick and easy because it's fully automated, and walks you through each push-button step in a flash. By the next business day, you'll know which mortgage types and how much you qualify for.
Then we'll send you a card that spells out that details of your loan, including the amount that's been pre-approved. And you can show the seller that you've got real PurchasePower. It's just that simple. And simply the easiest way home.
Call 1-800-731-2205, Ext.05
24 hours a day, 7 days a week.
*Loan amount shown on sample card is an example only, and is not a loan commitment.

Don't get fooled by all this "Buy for Less" advertising by CarMax, Budget & other companies offering the new car alternatives: They bay the same price for the off lease cars they buy as we do and cannot offer the personal follow-up and service after the sale. Also any factory warranty must be taken back to the franchise dealer for warranty service, therefore why not buy at home from a family owned dealer that had been offering you top values, services, & the best line of vehicles for the past 52 years.

Deputy CG to take new assignment

By Al Blanchard
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Brig. Gen. Robert T. Clark will move to TRADOC in his new assignment at Fort Monroe, Va.

The deputy commanding general and assistant commandant of the U.S. Army Infantry Center and School will soon be reassigned as the deputy chief of staff for Combat Developments, U.S. Army Training and Doctrine Command, Fort Monroe, Va.

Brig. Gen. Robert T. Clark, recently selected for promotion to the rank of major general, will occupy a two-star position at TRADOC with a report date to be determined.

"We at Fort Benning will miss General Clark," said Maj. Gen. Carl F. Ernst, post commanding general. "He's a great soldier, infantryman and leader. His impact will be felt here for years. He was absolutely the right guy for assistant commandant here and has had a positive impact on all that we do here. He is also absolutely the right soldier to head TRADOC's Combat Development team. We will hear a great deal more of Bob Clark in the years ahead."

Ernst said that one of Clark's innovations that was well received throughout the infantry community was the infantry traveling team.

"The infantry traveling team was a big hit with commanders," Ernst said. "The team updated them on all that was happening at Fort Benning in combat developments, doctrine, Force XXI; but, more importantly, it provided them an opportunity to tell us what was on their minds."

The team checked to see how well infantry school graduates were doing at the units, from the new soldier fresh out of One Station Unit Training to the non-commissioned officer out of the NCO Academy to the captain out of the Infantry Officer Advanced Course, he said.

"The good news is they all were delighted with the soldiers, NCOs and officers we are sending them," Ernst continued. "Our graduates are making a positive impact on the units they go to."

Clark assumed duties as the deputy commanding general and assistant commandant in June 1995.

He previously served as the assistant division commander, 25th Infantry Division, Schofield Barracks, Hawaii.

Other assignments include: company commands with the 9th ID and the 25th ID; command of the 3rd Battalion, 327th Inf. Regiment, 101st Airborne Div. (Air Assault); and commander of the 3rd Brigade, 101st Airborne Div., during Desert Shield and Desert Storm as well as afterward.

Clark also served as aide and assistant executive officer to the chief of staff of the Army and chief of staff, 101st Airborne Div.

A graduate of the Air Command and Staff College and the National War College, Clark has a bachelor's degree in history from Texas Technical University and a master's degree in political science from Auburn University.

His awards and decorations include the Legion of Merit with two oak leaf clusters, Bronze Star with V device and two oak leaf clusters, the Purple Heart, four awards of the Meritorious Service Medal, Air Medal, Combat Infantryman Badge, Parachutist Badge, Air Assault Badge and Ranger Tab.

Clark and his wife, Karen, have a daughter, Anne C. Jordan of Clarksville, Tenn., and a son, Robert Jr., of Houston, Texas.

CG selects new CSM

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Fort Benning's next command sergeant major was announced this week by Maj. Gen. Carl F. Ernst, Fort Benning's commanding general.

The soldier selected to fill this position is the current command sergeant major of the Alaska Command, Command Sgt. Maj. Mack H. Vereen. Vereen assumes his new duties as the command sergeant major of the infantry in mid-December.

"I served with Command Sgt. Maj. Vereen in Somalia," Ernst said. "He is a distinguished infantryman and model 'top soldier.' Fort Benning and the infantry will be well served by this great command sergeant major."

Vereen, a Nichols, S.C., native entered the Army 25 years ago at Fort Jackson, S.C., and has served in every infantry leadership position from team leader to command sergeant major.

His combat tours include Operation Just Cause in Panama and Operation Restore Hope in Somalia.

He was also the command sergeant major of Joint Task Force Somalia. He's served in Korea and was the operations sergeant for the Ranger Training Brigade.

He's schooled in all phases of the infantry craft, being a graduate of the Jungle Course, Light Leader Course, French Commando School, Recondo School, Ranger School, Air Assault School and Airborne School.

He attended the Sergeant Major Academy and the Command Sergeant Major Course.

Some of his civilian schooling includes an associates of science degree and a bachelor of science degree from New York's university system. He also has a masters of arts degree from Liberty Baptist Theological Seminary.

His military awards include the Defense Meritorious Service Medal and seven Meritorious Service Medals.

Post gets APIC nod

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Fort Benning will once again represent Training and Doctrine Command in the Army Performance Improvement Criteria competition.

Gen. William H. Hartzog, TRADOC commander, made the announcement at the TRADOC Commander's Conference at Fort Sill, Okla., Nov. 1.

The other two posts representing TRADOC are Fort Knox, Ky., and Fort Bliss, Texas.

Unlike past years when posts competed according to size, this year all are on the same footing, according to Sarah McLaney of Fort Benning's Quality Management Division.

The three TRADOC posts will be competing with posts throughout the Army for the prestigious commander-in-chief's award.

The selection will be based on a visit to the different posts by a Department of the Army level team. Fort Benning will be visited sometime early next year.

Hospital treats Gulf War vets

Martin Army Community Hospital

The Department of Defense recently released new evidence that some chemical warfare agents may have been inadvertently released during the destruction of Iraqi weapons storage sites during the Gulf War in 1991.

DoD sent letters to soldiers possibly exposed to chemical nerve agents to encourage them to seek medical evaluations through the Comprehensive Clinical Evaluation Program if they experience any health problems they believe resulted from their service.

Martin Army Community Hospital remains one of nearly 160 military health facilities worldwide involved in evaluating and treating veterans of the Gulf War with medical problems possibly related to their service in Operation Desert Storm.

Since the initiation of the program in June 1994, the hospital provided quality care to 466 patients with more initial appointments currently scheduled because of new information and the letters sent to soldiers.

In spite of efforts to find a scientific explanation for the diverse symptoms reported by the soldiers and their family members, so far a cause has not been identified. Neither has a single disease been found.

Some patients report extreme fatigue, others suffer from memory loss, yet others experience muscle aches, headaches, gastrointestinal disorders, rashes or weight loss. In most cases, doctors possess the ability to make diagnosis but not to determine what caused the problem.

However, the hospital remains committed to seeking a cause and providing the best care possible for all soldiers and their families experiencing medical problems regardless of whether or not they served in the Gulf War, said 1st Lt. Jasha Griffen, MACH Public Affairs officer.

For more information on this topic, link to the web site at www.dtic.mil/gulflink/. If experiencing any symptoms possibly as a result of service in the Gulf War, call the program hot line at (800) 796-9699.

Questions and Answers

Q: What kinds of weapons received destruction by U.S. forces at Khamisiyah?

A: Of the approximately 100 bunkers destroyed in March 1991 in Khamisiyah, a large Iraqi ammunition storage site, one received assessment by the United Nations Special Commission as containing 122mm rockets containing chemical agents (the nerve agents sarin and cyclosarin).

In addition, commission inspectors found rockets containing these nerve agents in an open pit near the bunker complex where U.S. forces also conducted demolition operations in March 1991.

Q: These chemical weapons cause what effects?

A: Chemical weapons create serious immediate symptoms (blurred vision, tightness in the chest, runny nose, dizziness) and, if immediate treatment is not provided, incapacitation or death of troops on the battlefield may occur.

While research continues, the best

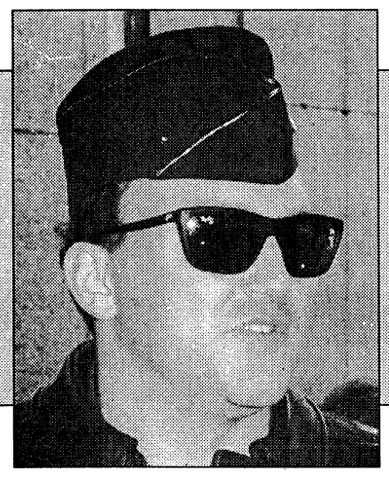
Veterans ceremonies set

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Fort Benning plans to honor veterans in two separate ceremonies next week.

Secretary of the Army Togo D. West Jr. will join Maj. Gen. Carl F. Ernst, post commanding general, and World War II rangers in dedicating a ranger monument and wall of those who served in the World War II ranger battalions Nov. 14 at 2 p.m.



Also, 86 rangers who paid the ultimate price during the Vietnam conflict will be memorialized Nov. 11 at the post's Ranger Memorial.

The dedication of memorial bricks takes place during a 9 a.m. service beneath the arches of the Ranger Monument.

During the service, representatives of four ranger companies plan to read the names of the rangers who made the supreme sacrifice in Vietnam.

VARIOUS VOICES

What should be done to people who ignore school bus stop signs?

Capt. Rick Terrel, 50th Air Lift Squadron — "People who ignore school bus stop signs should have their names printed in the post newspaper. People will be less likely to commit violations if they know their neighbors will read about it."

Petty Officer 1st Class Jeff Burgess — "Violators should receive a ticket."

Pvt. 2 Dwayne Gore, 1st Battalion, 10th Mountain Division — "The first two times they ignore a bus sign they should receive a $50 ticket; the third time they should be required to serve some kind of sentence."

Vivian McGee, family member — "Violators should have to do some community service and pay a fine."

Edith Stewart, family member — "They should be forced to drive with the school bus all day long and help children get on and off the bus."

Denise Johnson, family member — "People who ignore the signs should have their license taken away for three months."

School bus

Ignoring stop sign creates unnecessary danger

By Linda Lee
Special correspondent

commentary

The old saying "you learn something new everyday" easily applies to school bus drivers. As a school bus driver, I learned people actually run the flashing red lights and stop signs the buses display when school children load and unload.

Before I became a bus driver, I never dreamed people so blatantly endangered children.

So far this year, the same vehicle, but by no means the only vehicle, ran my bus' warnings to stop three times.

The last time he ran the stop arm on my left side, he came from behind and actually sped up, as if to get around me before I turned my lights off, and laughed as he drove by. This incident reminded me of a scene from "Gremlins" when the little gremlin stands on a car's seat while driving, bouncing up and down and laughing because he found humor in his ability to disobey the law.

Another incident I encountered involved a driver unable to pass my bus on the left side with his vehicle, so he drove over the curb and passed on the right side. He endangered several children boarding the bus from the right side at that exact time. The possible outcome of such careless actions absolutely terrifies me.

My route seems to have turned into a running gauntlet of drivers who insist upon proceeding around my bus at all costs. I turn in the license plate numbers of vehicles whose drivers disobey my bus's warnings to my contract manager. Drivers who ignore my bus's stop sign are so numerous, the children and I developed a system for getting the license numbers. The children seated on the left side of the bus get the first few numbers and the children seated on the right side get the last few numbers.

I drive very carefully with a watchful eye to avoid accidents caused by selfish, hurried people on the roads.

A strict policy in place at Taylor Motors, which provides school bus transportation to Fort Benning, requires the reporting of all offenders to proper law enforcement agencies.

I believe not only bus drivers but also parents, neighbors and other drivers need to watch for and report to the proper authorities any incidents of drivers running the stop signs of school buses.

Danger lurks if these incidents continue. I expect only a matter of time to elapse before something terrible and irrevocable happens, leading to the serious injury or death of one of our community's children.

Perhaps unit commanders need to start reminding soldiers at formation that this type of dangerous driving remains unacceptable, against the law and intolerable.

The community and its drivers bear the responsibility of making the roads safe for children. Think about it.

Veterans Day: A time to remember

By April N. Olsen
USAIC Public Affairs

commentary

The Veterans Day holiday means different things to different people. Some take time to honor soldiers of wars they know little more about than what they read in elementary school history books. Some reflect on their own personal service. And yes, some just enjoy a day off from work.

While some participate in celebrations and parades to show respect for service members who made sacrifices for their country, I prefer to subtly and quietly show my appreciation.

I'll simply hang my American flag outside my quarters as usual, think about the veterans I know and pay a personal tribute to one very special veteran.

I hang the flag to display my patriotism on a regular basis. No big show involved, I handle the red, white and blue with respect and reverence and I do it proudly.

On Monday, I'll have a few soldiers on my mind. I'll think about the ones who made the ultimate sacrifice in foreign lands. I'll think about the ones who returned home as heroes as well as the ones who fought in unpopular wars and returned physically disabled or forever changed mentally or emotionally. I am inspired by their courage.

After hanging the flag, and in the midst of thinking about heroic veterans, I'll pick up the phone and call my father.

Most of what I know about being a good soldier I learned from him. He served two tours in Vietnam, the first few months as a combat engineer and the rest as an infantryman. Since he was a small man, he'd frequently be called upon to venture down into enemy tunnels. Long after he left the jungles of South Vietnam, he battled effects from Agent Orange sprayed as a defoliant. His experiences of deadly anti-personnel mines, lost buddies and horrible memories could not turn him against his Army or his country.

I've never heard him speak badly of our armed forces, the politicians at that time or the civilians who spit on GIs as they returned from the unpopular war. I have, however, seen and heard him display fierce patriotism. His love of country and love of the Army are unrivaled by any public figure or politician I've observed.

I'll call him to let him know I appreciate his dedication to our country and the Army that I serve. I'll remind him that I'm proud of his service and the service of his fellow soldiers who fought along side him in the jungles of Vietnam.

I'll also let him know that I'm grateful he was so proud of me when I joined the Army, because I did so because of his example.

My dad also provided me with the insight that being the bad guy to the rest of the world does not make you a bad guy, but gives you courage to go against the socially or politically acceptable for what you believe is the right thing to do.

On Monday, I'll thank him for all those lessons that helped make me the soldier I am.

When I take down my flag at the end of the day, I'll begin thinking of him and hope I continue to make him proud as I serve my country.

Benning's success

Commanding general compliments post

By Carl F. Ernst
Post commanding general

letter

Once again, Fort Benning was chosen to represent the Training and Doctrine Command in the Army Community of Excellence competition.

My congratulations to all members of the Fort Benning team — soldiers, families and civilians, for you are the ones who brought us to this point through your diligent work, professionalism and can-do attitude.

I am proud of each of you and know we will do well when the Army Communities of Excellence evaluators come here to conduct their assessment early next year. I fully expect to receive the commander-in-chief's trophy for being the best installation in the Army next spring.

Remember, being the best post in our Army is a journey, not a destination. It requires teamwork and excellence everyday.

Hooah!

TRADOC commander congratulates post

Congratulation on your selection as an Army Communities of Excellence finalist. Your installation's implementation of the Army Performance Improvement Criteria is commendable.

APIC is extremely valuable in assessing system maturity and overall organizational health. Your application is evidence that you have met a major challenge and are dedicated to the continuous performance improvement process.

Congratulations to every member of your command.

AER offers college scholarships

Army Emergency Relief

Soldiers with college-aged children often wonder how to afford education costs. Many people fail to realize that Army Emergency Relief sometimes helps with this dilemma.

The AER provides financial assistance through scholarships. This little-known resource makes college possible for many people.

To qualify for financial assistance through AER, students need to enroll and gain acceptance or pending acceptance as a full-time student for the entire academic year in a post-secondary educational institution approved by the U.S. Department of Education.

Scholarships remain available through AER. Eligible students include those unmarried, U.S. citizens or permanent U.S. residents, under the age of 22 on June 1 preceding the beginning of the school year for which the scholarship is requested and authorized dependents of active duty, retired or deceased soldiers.

The awarding of scholarships remains based on financial need, academic achievement and individual accomplishments.

Students awarded scholarships need to reapply each year. Students need to remain in good academic standing and carry a minimum cumulative grade point average of 2.0 to receive scholarships. By requiring students to reapply each year, AER monitors their progress.

As part of the application, students need to submit a family financial analysis and an essay describing their goals and accomplishments.

Applications must be submitted by March 1, for the upcoming academic year. Initial applications request forms became available Nov. 1 for school year 1997-1998 at AER, Building 2643, Soldiers' Plaza. The office opens at 8 a.m. and closes at 5 p.m. Monday through Friday.

AER officials mail letters to students in mid-May from Headquarters, AER, informing them whether they receive scholarships, and if so, how much.

Kuwait Liberation Medal available

By Helene C. Stikkel
American Forces Press Service

WASHINGTON — Persian Gulf War veterans eligible for the Kuwait Liberation Medal need to apply for them through their service channels.

Defense Personnel Support Center officials in Philadelphia said 131,000 medals remain of the 500,000 presented by the Kuwaiti government in 1991.

For all services except the Marine Corps, eligible troops need to provide documents proving they served in Desert Shield or Desert Storm.

Eligible Marines also need to submit requests for the medals, but a Marine Corps board reviews applications and directly issues the medals from Washington.

Former service members who served in the Persian Gulf may also apply for their awards, according to Dorothy O'Connell, an inventory management specialist with the center's Heraldry Division.

"Former service members need to contact their units to apply for the medal," she said. "We do not handle personal requisitions — they must take their request to their former unit and submit through channels."

Service members need to meet the following criteria to receive the Kuwait Liberation Medal:

•Served in support of Desert Shield or Desert Storm in one or more eligible areas between Aug. 2, 1990, and Aug. 31, 1991.

Those areas include the Arabian Gulf, the Red Sea, the Gulf of Oman, the Gulf of Aden, portions of the Arabian Sea, Iraq, Kuwait, Saudi Arabia, Oman, Bahrain, Qatar and the United Arab Emirates;

•Possessed orders assigning or attaching troops to units deployed to Desert Shield or Desert Storm for one or more days;

•Possessed orders assigning or attaching troops to Navy vessels directly supporting the operation;

•Participated as a crew member in one or more flights directly supporting military operations during the Persian Gulf War; or •Possessed temporary duty orders assigning troops to 30 consecutive or 60 non-consecutive days in the war zone. Possibly, approving authorities waive the time requirement for temporary duty if service members participated in a combat operation.

Nerve agents cause flu-like symptoms

Martin Army Community Hospital

Nerve agents are designed to interfere with the function of the nervous system and disrupt normal control of vital organ systems required to sustain life.

Sarin and cyclosarin contain organophosphate nerve agents, a common ingredient of insecticides used in homes, industry and agriculture; however, sarin and cyclosarin are much more lethal.

It is possible to deliver nerve agents in the form of either vapor or liquid. The delivery pattern remains dependent on the type of munition (rocket, mine, bomb), capacity of the chemical container and weather conditions such as wind, temperature and humidity.

If contact with sarin and cyclosarin occurs, several factors determine whether harmful effects result. These factors primarily involve the exposure level (how much), the duration of exposure (how long) and the way in which soldiers gained exposure (inhalation or contact with skin). Exposure to sarin and cyclosarin lead to loss of muscle control, twitching, paralysis, unconsciousness, convulsions and coma.

The most common cause of death after acute exposure remains respiratory arrest (inability to breathe). Death may occur within several minutes or take several hours.

The sudden onset of other symptoms occurring immediately or within minutes of an exposure to even small amounts of nerve agent include impaired vision, drooling, very severe flu-like symptoms, chest discomfort and uncontrolled sweating.

Gulf: Health officials provide answers to questions current medical evidence indicates long-term health problems need not be experienced from low-level exposure to chemical nerve agents.

Q: Were any such symptoms experienced by our troops during the Gulf War?

A: Officials say to date, service members neither died nor reported any immediate symptoms in connection with exposure at Khamisiyah. Soldiers reported possible chemical events during the war, but no confirmation has been made of any nerve agent exposure from these reports.

Q: What long-term health effects of nonlethal exposure to nerve agent exist?

A: Although limited in number, studies of human exposure to nerve agents suggest that no long-term health effects from low-level, short-term exposure to nerve agents remain likely, even with doses large enough to produce some immediate symptoms.

Health officials still perform research toward finding a more definitive answer.

Better Opportunities for Single Soldiers

The Better Opportunities for Single Soldiers program improves Fort Benning, said Sgt. Maj. Arthur Van Allen, garrison sergeant major.

"Not only do we have a strong BOSS president, we also have strong leaders who care about the way their soldiers are living," Van Allen said.

One group of leaders that have gone out of their way to make sure that soldiers are heard and taken care of is Building 17 Command Council.

This unique council, comprised of six companies, meets on a monthly basis to address single soldier issues and concerns, Van Allen said. Chaired by Lt. Col. Richard Kaiura, commander of the 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment, the Command Council consists of sergeants major, company commanders, and first sergeants from Military Police Activity, U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit, 11th Inf. Regt., U.S. Army Medical Department Activity and U.S. Army Dental Activity. Not only do key leaders attend but soldiers are encouraged to participate, Van Allen said.

The Command Council is unique because five major subordinate commands participate collectively to achieve one goal, to improve the quality of life for their soldiers, he said. This forum allows single soldiers to be heard, and leaders are able to voice their concerns about effective and efficient ways to sustain common areas and increase soldier satisfaction.

The Council was recognized for its support of the Better Opportunities for Single Soldier program during the Quarterly Commanding General's BOSS awards breakfast. The Council was given $50,000 from Fort Benning's BOSS program after receiving $250,000 for its first-place finish in the TRADOC competition.

"This Command Council is a model for other commands to emulate," Van Allen said. "It demonstrates to soldiers that their chain of command is concerned about soldiers needs and strives to meet those needs."

Soldiers learn basic skills at U.S. Army Sniper School

By Brian R. Voller
Bayonet staff writer

Low crawling through the wood line, a sniper and his spotter find a good position of concealment where they prepare to take their shot. After identifying their target, the sniper gets the range from his spotter and makes the adjustments to his rifle sight. With a relaxed motion, the sniper squeezes the trigger and lives up to the motto of the U.S. Army Sniper School, "One shot, one kill."

The five-week U.S. Army Sniper School located in Harmony Church teaches infantry, Special Forces and scout soldiers the basic techniques of being an Army sniper.

According to Ronald J. Galloway, a Sniper School instructor, the students learn the basics of stalking skills, range estimations, shooting, target detection and camouflage techniques.

Galloway said usually the best soldiers of an infantry unit get sent to the Sniper School.

"Generally the soldiers have to have a general technical score of 110 or higher," Galloway said. "The soldiers usually are privates first class, specialists or sergeants. We occasionally get officers and staff sergeants. They have to be expert marksmen in good physical condition with 20/20 correctable vision."

The sniper students currently train with the M-24 sniper weapon system, a modified version of the the Remington 700 rifle, Galloway said. Snipers use a 7.62mm special ball ammunition (M-118) to engage targets. The snipers also use the M-3A sight to help increase their accuracy and to improve target detection.

Galloway said during the sniper training cycle, the students receive grading on being able to identify and engage stationary and moving targets from distances of 300 to 800 meters. Also, students train for familiarization on targets as much as 900 to 1,000 meters away.

During the course, students learn the basic techniques of camouflage by learning how to build and use their own ghillie suits (a specially made camouflage uniform that is covered with irregular patterns of garnish or netting) and being taught how to move properly through an area while remaining undetected, Galloway said. Students are taught basic techniques such as avoiding detectable sounds, not moving in quick, jerky movements that catch the human eye, using proper camouflage, not disturbing wildlife or creating unnatural odors from things such as soaps and lotions or insect repellents.

Galloway said when the students go back to their units to fill their rolls as snipers, they bring more to the unit than just single target elimination.

"During times of combat, the snipers are also used as forward observation in 24- to 48-hour deployments," Galloway said. "They are deployed in front of friendly troops and can be used to deliver artillery. This gives commanders an additional weapon because he gets eyes on the ground that are capable of delivering long range fire at key targets."

Sniper student Staff Sgt. David Hoogendorn, 75th Ranger Regiment, said the school opens students' eyes to skills they didn't realize they possessed.

"This school will improve your skills even if you don't graduate," Hoogendorn said. "The school really opens your eyes. Not a lot of people in the military are accustomed to target detection — this is the first time I've ever encountered it. Things like target detection really put your skills on a pedestal and they give you a wake up call."

Sgt. Stephen Onbriel, Company D, 2nd Battalion, 7th Cavalry, Fort Hood, Texas, said he feels the school is very beneficial, but he doesn't think commanders know how to use snipers effectively.

"The sniper mission is a really sound mission and they've worked effectively in past wars," Onbriel said. "There's a need for snipers, but the commanders don't know how to use them or don't know enough about them to successfully employ snipers.

"I really didn't know what this school was about until I got here, and for the most part, people outside of this school don't know what snipers are all about. My commander has sent me here to learn and hopefully go back and teach my unit what being a sniper is all about."

Galloway said the role of the sniper decreased over the years and at one point became completely eliminated from the mindset of Army officials. But he said the sniper mission continues to be an important one, and he said he feels the school will continue to teach students what he feels is a vital mission in the Army.

Lt. Col. Michael E. Boatner, incoming commander, 2nd Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment, waits to receive the battalion colors from Col. Robert Fulcher, 29th Inf. Regt. commander, during the 2nd Bn. change of command ceremony Nov. 1 on York Field.

New leader takes charge of 2nd Bn 29th Inf Regt

By Brian R. Voller
Bayonet staff writer

The 2nd Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment, came under the command of a new leader Nov. 1 during a ceremony on York Field.

Lt. Col. Michael E. Boatner took command of the 2nd Bn., 29th Inf. Regt., from Lt. Col. Michael A. Phillips who plans to stay at Fort Benning to become the chief of tactics at the Combined Arms and Tactics Directorate.

Col. Robert Fulcher, commander of the 29th Inf. Regt., spoke during the ceremony and called Boatner a proven infantryman.

"As Lt. Col. Phillips leaves, the sun goes down on the day and a new day begins," Fulcher said. "Mike (Boatner) and his wife and two sons are the new day. Mike comes to us a proven infantryman. He has led troops at all levels of the Army. He has the skills to lead the soul of the infantry. That is the 2nd Bn., 29th Inf. Regt."

Boatner said becoming a part of the 2nd Bn., 29th Inf. Regt., is an honor, and he stands prepared to help the battalion lead the Army into the 21st century.

"My wife and I are delighted to be joining the 2nd Bn., 29th Inf. Regt., team," Boatner said. "We have been looking forward to it for the couple of months we've been at Fort Benning. We've learned that the battalion holds a great reputation on post. We've been approached by several people who have complimented the way the battalion supports the Infantry School.

"Your mission is important and you accomplish that mission every day. You are ... preparing the infantry for the 21st century, and I am proud to be a part of that mission."

Boatner began his military career after graduating from the U.S. Military Academy at West Point. He has completed the Infantry Officer Basic Course, Airborne School and Ranger School.

He first served with 1st Battalion (Mechanized), 22nd Infantry Regiment, at Fort Carson, Colo., as a rifle platoon leader, company executive officer, battalion adjutant and mechanized company commander.

Following his completion of the Armor Advanced Course at Fort Knox, Ky., Boatner became part of the Infantry Team, 5th Army Readiness Group, at Fort Sam Houston, Texas, where he also completed his master's of science degree in systems administrations.

In 1989, Boatner became part of the 6th Bn., 502nd Inf. Regt., in Berlin, Germany, as a company commander and later became the operations officer at the battalion level.

In 1991, he transferred to Fort Leavenworth, Kan., as a maneuver analyst at the Center for Army Lessons Learned, and he subsequently attended the Command and General Staff College and School for Advanced Military Studies.

In 1994, Boatner became assigned to Fort Lewis, Wash., as a I Corps assistant chief of staff for operations planner and then became chief of that directorate.

He is married to Maj. Patricia Langley Boatner, a medical service corps officer currently assigned to the Office of Infantry Proponency. They have two children — Bryant, age 6, and Matthew, age 4.

Post names instructors of the quarter

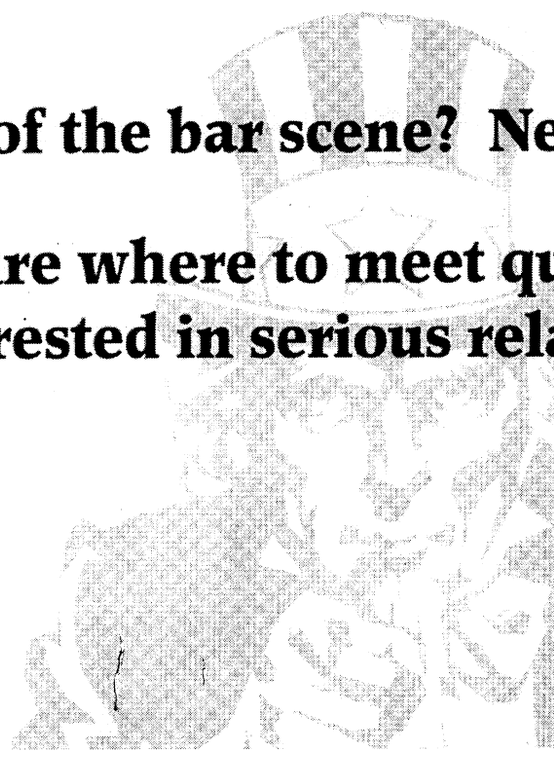
By Brian R. Voller
Bayonet staff writer

The officer, senior noncommissioned officer and junior NCO instructors of the fourth quarter received recognition during a 1:30 p.m. ceremony conducted in Infantry Hall Oct. 31.

Capt. Bruce V. Sones, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment, Sgt. 1st Class Gilbert M. Stewart, HHC, 29th Inf. Regt., and Staff Sgt. David B. Burnell, HHC, 1st Bn., 11th Inf. Regt. received awards as the instructors of the quarter.

Sones, the senior aviation instructor, said it was a real honor to receive the award.

"It is indeed a real honor to receive this recognition," Sones said. "I receive this award with a certain humility because I recognize that there are a great deal of very good instructors that are part of the school. I hope my presentation of aviation and what aviation, especially the Apache, can do for the soldiers and for their operations has helped the students in their missions."



Burnell, an engineer instructor, said he wanted to thank the Instructor Training Course cadre for their help in teaching him to be good instructor.

"I would just like say thanks to the folks at ITC for the fine work they do," Burnell said, "in maintaining the instructor incentive program and assuring the quality instruction that is taught here at the Infantry School."

Stewart was unable to attend the ceremony because of temporary duty.

SECTION STAKES

586th battles to be the best

By Tanya Devall
586th Engineer Company, AFB

Soldiers of the 586th Engineer Company (Assault Float Bridge) recently competed in physically and technically demanding section stakes to be named the best in the company.

First section of second platoon won the title Nov. 1 after eight days of intense competition, said Sgt. 1st Class Brandt Poole, the platoon sergeant of 2nd platoon.

"They are considered the best section in the company," Poole said.

The four bridge sections competed against each other for top scores in 12 lane exercises including a physical fitness test, a 15-mile relay race, truck rodeo, vehicle maintenance, ruck march, construction of a six-bay raft, set up of an engineer regulating point, day and night land navigation, construction of an overhead anchorage system, boat rodeo and a leadership reaction course.

Poole said the soldiers were worn out by the third day of competition because the more physically demanding events were conducted first.

"The physical stuff was a good competitive boost," said 1st Lt. Shawn Elliott, the company executive officer.

Conducting the more physical events at the beginning allowed the soldiers to concentrate on the more technical aspects later in the competition, Elliott said.

The six-mile ruck march, a four-event obstacle course, was very challenging, said Staff Sgt. Orlando Maldonado, the winning section sergeant. The sections started near Lawson Army Airfield at a pickup zone where their uniforms and equipment were inspected.

Soldiers then boarded UH-60 blackhawks. Pilots from the 498th Medical Company (Air Ambulance) flew them to McKenna Air Strip.

From the landing zone, the soldiers ruck marched one mile to their first event, a mock assault crossing over Clear Creek Pond. Once across the pond, they rucked two more miles to a 25-foot wet gap where sections had to construct a one rope bridge to negotiate the obstacle.

The sections went an additional three miles to their final obstacle — the "Slide for Life" at Victory Pond. Once the section's last soldier completed the drop, the section's time stopped.

Maldonado said the competition was challenging.

"Overall, it was some good training," Maldonado said.

He agreed that the first three days were the toughest physically, but all of the lanes were "good, effective training" for the company.

The lanes that required more technical bridge crew member skills were the boat rodeo, truck rodeo and the vehicle maintenance competitions, Elliott said.

The boat rodeo consisted of a raft relay race, bridge erection boat launch and a buoy obstacle course. Nine soldiers from each section competed in the race.

Each section selected three teams of two to compete in the buoy obstacle course. Then the teams backed a five-ton truck through a series of cones and launched a boat into the water.

The truck rodeo and vehicle maintenance lanes required the soldiers to conduct a vehicle preventive maintenance check and service, take a vehicle driving exam and drive a M-945 bridge transporter through an obstacle course.

The winning section received a 36th Engineer Group coin, a three-day pass and will display their equipment during the company's change of command ceremony in December.

Constructing the raft during the ceremony is considered an honor, company commander Greg Gondeck said.

3rd ID plans Marne Homecoming Week

By Robin A. Shawlinski
3rd Bde., 3rd Inf. Div. (Mech.)

The 3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division (Mechanized) serves as host to Marne Homecoming Week Nov. 25 to 28 to officially welcome back the division to Columbus and Fort Benning

The unit came to Fort Benning in 1946 and the cities adopted the unit during the Auf Wiedersehen ceremony Feb. 12, 1958, on Wetherby Field at Fort Benning.

The battalion plans to begin the week by renaming the field behind building 9074 after Medal of Honor recipient musician William J. Carson.

During the Battle of Chickamauga Sept. 19, 1863, Carson, on his own initiative, bugled "To the Colors" amid the wavering soldiers of the 18th U.S. Infantry who formed by him and held the enemy. Within a few minutes, Carson moved up the line to the 2nd Ohio Infantry and repeated the call. The bugling deceived the enemy who believed reinforcements arrived and delayed their attack.

The 1st Battalion, 15th Infantry Regiment, plans to honor his efforts with a re-enactment followed by the renaming of the field.

Following the renaming ceremony, the battalion will officially open the China Room, which displays many of the trophies, wartime souvenirs and gifts from the 15th Inf. Regt. dating back to the early 1900s.

The day's events conclude with the homecoming ceremony when the cities of Columbus and Phenix City gather to once again adopt the 3rd Inf. Div. (Mech.). The ceremony begins at 10 a.m, Nov. 26, on Dickman Field.

During the ceremony, the mayors of both cities will present proclamations and exchange flags with the 3rd Bde. commander, Col. Steven P. Schook, who will also speak at the event.

From 11 a.m. to 4:30 p m., Kelley Hill will be open for people to tour. Visitors can visit the brigade headquarters building, the Truscott Center, the Kelley Hill Chapel and the six battalion headquarters building. Visitors can receive information and maps from the Welcome Center, which will be set up in the Kelley Hill Recreation Center.

The Truscott Center will be dedicated at 1 30 p.m. The Truscott Center, once the Kelley Hill theater, serves as a multimedia conference center for the 3rd Bde. Schook plans to speak at the dedication and then a ribbon-cutting ceremony will be conducted.

The day will end with the Sledgehammer boxing smoker at 3:30 p.m. at the Kelley Hill Fitness Center. Boxers representing each battalion will box a total of seven bouts. The bouts will be fought in seven weight classes with three one-minute rounds. A gold medal and trophy will be given to the winner in each class. A silver will be given to the runners-up in each class and a bronze to all participants.

The 3rd Bde. will conduct a brigade run at 6:30 a.m., Nov. 27 and a Sledgehammer golf tournament at 11a.m. The golf tournament is open to the first 120 players and the entry fee is $33. The tournament will be at the Follow Me Golf Course. Players will receive 3rd Bde. logo golf balls, mugs and towels.

Marne Homecoming Week concludes with an ecumenical service at the Kelley Hill Chapel at 11 a.m Nov. 28 and Thanksgiving meals beginning at 11 a.m. at the Kelley Hill dining facilities.

SAFETY on the front line

The noncommissioned officer serves as the first line of defense for safety in tactical operations, unit training and on and off duty recreational activities. The NCO corps will implement and execute the best force protection safety program through the following NCO risk management safety goals and objectives.

Goal no. 1

Noncommissioned officers will ensure that soldiers conduct all high-risk training safely.

Objectives

1. High-risk training (training with the potential for serious injury, death or destruction of equipment) will be identified and fully assessed. The assessment will address all possible courses of action and will ensure all safety measures and requirements are in place. Risk management work sheets will be completed and approved for all high-risk training.

2. NCOs will ensure that instructor personnel and unit noncommissioned officers and cadre receive safety certification for all high-risk training and that soldiers attend appropriate safety classes before training.

3. During all live-fire training, soldiers will strictly enforce procedures for the storage, transportation, and handling of weapons and ammunition. Also, soldiers will protect all weapons and ammunition from the elements.

4. NCOs will brief all soldiers on medical evacuation procedures for day and night, ground, air and water operations. Emergency radio frequencies and telephone numbers will be distributed to all NCOs and radio operators. All NCOs will know standard phone and standard medical evacuation frequency.

5. NCOs will ensure that all power projection operations (rail loading, ship loading, aircraft loading and convoy movements) will be closely supervised to ensure aggressive safety measures are adhered to and any deficiency immediately corrected.

AROUND POST

Post conducts fall cleanup — A postwide fall cleanup of the post cantonment and housing areas takes place from Nov. 18 through 22.

Occupants bear the responsibility for the cleanup of their quarters, including yard maintenance and moving improperly parked vehicles.

Area coordinators offer assistance in the removal of large debris, bulk recyclable aluminum and large scrap aluminum. These coordinators also conduct inspections Nov. 22 to ensure each person's quarters meet required installation standards.

AUSA to meet for fish fry — The Chattahoochee Valley-Fort Benning Chapter of the Association of the U.S. Army meets Nov. 26 for a fish fry and general membership meeting accompanied by live entertainment at the Fort Benning Officers' Club.

The doors open with a cash bar at 6 p.m. and the serving line opens at 6:30.

Tickets cost $12 and include a buffet meal. Only advanced ticket sales are offered. The attire for the evening is casual.

For information, call 689-3272 no later than Nov. 20.

Spouse orientation for new personnel — All newly assigned personnel, especially those with spouses, need to attend the Fort Benning Spouse Orientation Program today in Building 359, located on Ingersoll Street. Orientation provides information about all available post services and facilities offered to soldiers' and their families. Free child care is provided, but reservations need to be made by calling 545-4043.

For more information, call 545-4043 or 545-7517.

Cost for newborn deliveries increases — As directed by the Secretary of the Army, the cost for new born infants was reassessed.

The new charges include:

•$9.90 per day for the birth of an active duty or retired military member's infant,

•$500 (without complications) for the birth of an active duty or retired military member's dependent grandchild,

The Martin Army Community Hospital's staff encourages all expectant mothers to ask questions regarding changes.

For further information about changes call 544-2041.

Post students rock mock elections

Students at several of the Fort Benning Schools participated in the presidential elections by casting their vote for their chosen candidates Monday and Tuesday.

Second-grade students in Louise Anderson's class wore patriotic hats of their own creation and "I voted" pins, and dined on a cake decorated to look like the American flag at Frank R. Loyd Elementary School.

The students prepared for their day at the polls, which were in the hallway right outside their classroom, by learning the age and citizenship requirements for becoming the president, the address of the White House and more.

"We didn't have to let the children vote, but we thought it was important for the children to learn how the election process works," Anderson said.

The fifth-grade students and their teachers, Kathryn Van Horn and Carroll Thebaud, of Herbert J. Dexter Elementary School took the election process one step further. These students registered to vote before election day, just like in the real world.

Also, the faculty simulated a real voting situation by putting the voting "booth," a telephone booth brought in by one of the teachers, in the school's gym with a box outside the booth to place the ballots.

"We wanted to use the booth to give the students privacy when they voted, just like how we enter a booth," said Vickie Rodgers, principal, Dexter Elementary School.

Not only did the seventh- and eighth-grade students at Don C. Faith Middle School vote, they worked on their own mock campaigns for various political offices. Eighth-grade teachers Mary Barnette and Pattie Jones took two classes through the Balloteers program, taken from the Internet.

"The program was developed by a group of educators to help children become aware of the election process," Jones said.

And aware they became. The program encouraged the students to break down into groups and take on roles in a campaign, such as becoming a presidential candidate, working as a reporter or a researcher, or just working behind the scenes to help their candidates get elected.

"Samantha White, daughter of Sgt. 1st Class Richard and Lorrie White, one of the students in the eighth-grade class, took it upon herself to organize the students," Barnette said. "Without her, we would have been lost."

Frustrated with not being able to vote, White said she and her fellow students wanted to conduct a mock election.

"When we first did the Balloteers program in the library, the students and I were discussing how unfair it was that we couldn't vote," White said. "I'm pleased with the way the classroom elections went, but I'm not pleased with the winner of the real election."

Bus drivers give to Santa's Castle, Food Locker

By Lisa M. Hibbert
Bayonet staff writer

Taylor Motors Inc., the contractor for Fort Benning Schools bus service, presented Santa's Castle and the Army Community Services Food Locker with $500 each Monday.

"The money came from the drivers and the employees," said Robert Ouimette Jr., contract manager. "We wanted to give to organizations related to children and the military. Since we are new to the area, we asked our assistant Gabrielle Higgs for help and she immediately called these organizations and coordinated it."

Roy B. Burns, director of ACS, Al Deane, supervisor of the ACS Food Locker and Chris Hurley, president of the ACS support fund and member of Santa's Castle's publicity committee, accepted the checks.

"We will use this money to purchase turkeys from the Commissary to give to soldiers and their families for the Thanksgiving and Christmas holidays," Dean said.

Soldiers or family members receive free turkeys on a need bases, assessed through that soldier's chain of command.

"We used to do the assessments here but what we did this year is set aside a certain amount of turkeys to each unit and the unit sergeant major decides who will get one," Hurley said.

Although the Food Locker did receive a $500 boost in its economy, there still remains a need for more money and or donations of food items, Burns said.

If people donate nonperishable items to the Food Locker, it would help in making up baskets that augment the turkeys, Deane said.

Needed items include: boxed stuffing mix, corn bread mix, cranberry sauce, canned yams, cake mix and pie mix. Donations of turkeys or other meats would also be accepted.

The food locker is not just a holiday service, but provides support to the Army community year round.

"Some families become unable to provide for themselves for any number of reasons," Deane said. "It could be a mismanagement of funds, an involuntary pay deduction or a soldier might be in a high-cost situation like having to pay for a move or car problems."

If a soldiers find himself or herself in this type of situation, the Food Locker provides food when the family becomes unable to get its own.

"We let the soldier of family member get enough for two days," Deane said. "Generally when soldiers require food for a longer period of time than that, I suggest that they apply for an Army Emergency Relief

tricare

Martin Army Community Hospital

The Department of Defense recently switched to a new health care program for the Army, Navy and Air Force this year.

Representatives from Martin Army Community Hospital provide Tricare information to soldiers, retirees and family members.

Many eligible beneficiaries show concern about the change and how it affects their care. One of the most commonly asked questions follows.

Q. What is the point-of-service option under Tricare?

A. This rule applies to people enrolled in Tricare Prime. The point-of-service option consists of the financial expenses to you for circumventing your primary care manager to receive care. A Tricare Prime enrollee who seeks nonemergency care outside without your primary care manager's authorization referral, becomes liable for the point-of service option. This costs an annual deductible of $300 per individual or $600 per family and 50 percent cost share after meeting the deductible. Always consult with your primary care manager for your medical care needs.

Doctor explains flu treatments

USA News

If the thought of experiencing a high fever, body aches and chills fills you with dread, some information about influenza, or "the flu," may help set your mind — and your body — at ease.

Dr. Steven R. Mostow, an expert in flu prevention and treatment at Rose Medical Center in Denver, offers the following answers to these frequently asked questions:

Q. How do you tell the difference between the flu and a bad cold?

A. The flu is usually more severe than a cold. Influenza comes on suddenly and almost always gets accompanied by a high fever, severe body aches, chills and cough.

Q. Does a flu shot really prevent you from catching the flu? When is the best time to get vaccinated?

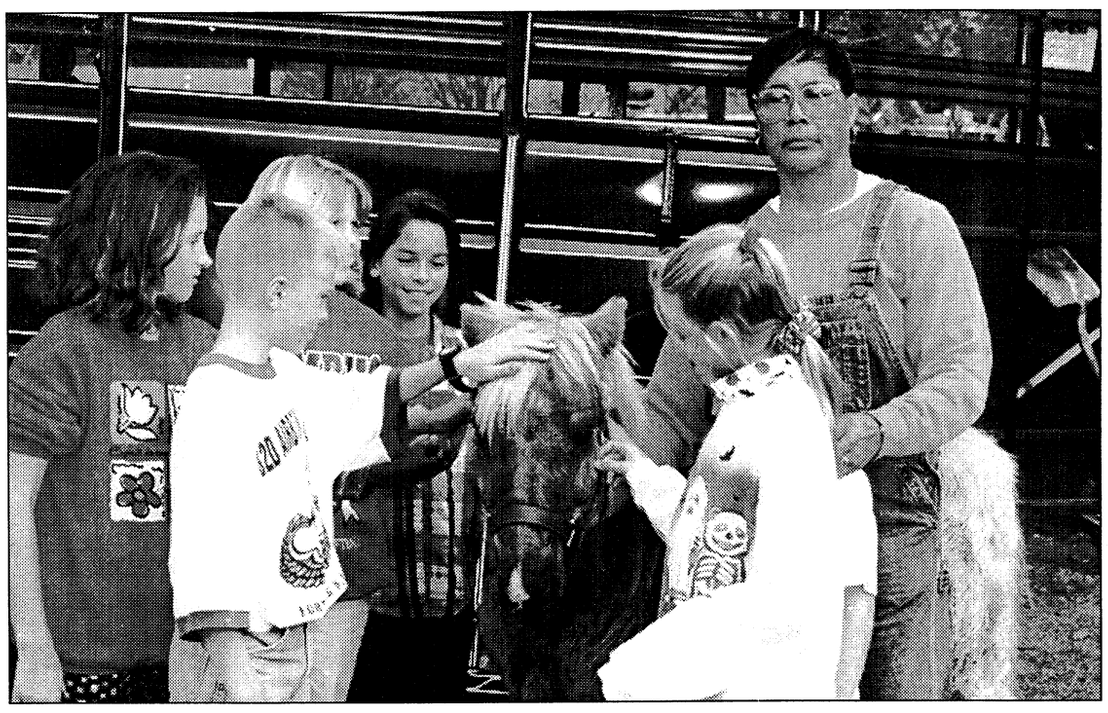
A. Vaccination is the number one method of flu prevention. It remains approximately 70 percent effective in preventing illness from influenza viruses in healthy adults under age 65.

Although the vaccine can be administered at any time during the flu season, the optimal time for people to receive a flu shot is from the beginning of October through mid-November.

Q. Once someone gets the flu, can it be treated?

A. Despite what many people think, the flu can be treated effectively. Two prescription antiviral agents, Flumadine (rimantadine HCI) and Symmetrel (amantadine HCI) remain available for those experiencing illness caused by influenza A. Unlike over-the-counter medications, antivirals actually help stop the influenza A virus from reproducing in the body, thereby reducing its severity and shortening the duration of the illness.

Q. When should a person experiencing flu-like symptoms see a physician?



A. As soon as symptoms appear. If you or a family member experience these symptoms, it is important to see or call your doctor within the first 48 hours of symptom onset for the most effective treatment with antivirals.

Q. Do antiviral drugs cause any side effects?

A. In clinical trials, Flumadine's side effects included nausea, insomnia and dizziness, each of which generally occurred in less than three percent of patients. People who previously reacted to either rimantadine or amantadine should not receive rimantadine. Amantadine is associated with a higher incidence of adverse central nervous system reactions than rimantadine.

Q. What months are the most common to contract the flu?

A. Most outbreaks of influenza occur between October and May with activity peaking between late December and early March. However, sporadic cases may be seen at other times throughout the year.

Hospital sets flu shot schedule

By William P. Corr
U.S. Army Medical Department Activity

Martin Army Community Hospital's Immunization Clinic provides flu shots at all family practice and troop medical clinics.

Active duty service members must make coordination through their supporting troop medical clinic.

Active duty U.S. Army Medical Department Activity and U.S. Army Dental Activity personnel receive immunizations at the hospital's immunization clinic on the ninth floor. The clinic operates from 7:30 to 11:30 a.m. each morning except Wednesdays. The clinic opens each Monday, Tuesday and Thursday afternoon from 1 to 3:30 p.m. Patients need to bring their yellow shot records and medical records.

Staff members give flu shots on a walk-in basis Tuesdays and Thursdays from 1:30 to 3:30 p.m. Immunizations will be given in the Family Practice Clinic, and patients need to bring a valid identification card and medical card.

Aviation Clinic (545-2162) Tricare members can get flu shots on a walk-in-basis, Tuesdays and Thursdays from 1 to 3 p.m. They should bring their yellow shot record, medical record, valid ID card and medical card.

Winder Clinic (544-9855) Tricare members get flu shots on Tuesdays and Thursdays from 1:30 to 2:30 p.m. Patients with scheduled appointments can request flu shots at the appointment. Bring medical record.

Victory Clinic (544-1033) Tricare members get flu shots on a walk-in basis. Mondays 1 to 5 p.m. and 6 to 8 p.m.; Fridays 9 a.m. to noon, 1 to 5 p.m. and 6 to 8 p.m.; and Saturdays 9 a.m to noon. Patients need to bring a valid ID and medical card.

Beneficiaries not in Tricare receive vaccinations at the hospital's Immunization Clinic (544-4710), Room 956 (no appointment required). The clinic operates from 7:30 to 11:30 a.m. except Wednesdays and Monday, Tuesday and Thursdays from 1 to 3:30 p.m. Patients need to bring their yellow shot records and medical records.

ask the judge

Q: I have been looking at the new satellite TV dishes. The dish works best with a digital television and surround sound stereo system for a good home theater effect. The system is expensive, but the store offers a program where I can charge the whole amount and pay no interest at all on the cost. They call it "12 months, zero percent payments." It seems that I can't lose on this deal; I pay no interest for 12 months and get to use the gear. I can pay the whole amount off in two years at only $100 per month. Am I smart or what?

A: I don't how smart you really are, but it seems to me that your "Consumer IQ" may need to be raised a few notches. Like so much in the life of the consumer, the reality may be more complex than appearances in the "zero interest" ads.

All of us see advertised specials in newspapers or on television for consumer items, including automobiles. When car prices rose, manufacturers began offering consumer incentives such as $1,000 rebates to keep new buyers coming. Now consumers expect the rebate or they hesitate to buy.

Variations of the rebate get implemented when involving expensive consumer goods. You get offered great interest savings on a major purchase for a specific period of time. A typical ad offers "zero interest for 12 months" and is a legitimate way to get customers into a store and to motivate them to buy. Consumers find the monthly payments more affordable since there is only principal and no interest. "Zero interest" also increases sales by appealing to every dedicated shopper's urge to get a bargain.

Unfortunately, the silver lining has a dark cloud. The ads do not mention two important points: this price may be higher than normal sale prices for the identical item and the "zero interest" applies only to a limited period of time, usually six to 12 months. This means consumers must do their homework as consumers to make sure that the item's stated price is a true bargain. Then consumers need to read the fine print.

Several major chains have been sued for misleading consumer ads about "zero interest." The fine print in these contracts provided for no interest if the total purchase price was paid in the time specified. Failure to pay on time would mean that the store's usual rate of interest, typically 21 percent, applied to the contract backdated to the day that the purchase contract was signed. To settle the suit, the chains agreed to advertise the back-dating feature as part of the offer.

An unwary consumer, in the meantime, may pay hundreds of dollars or more in interest if the purchase is not paid on time.

loan. We do this because we don't have the resources to feed families for periods longer than that."

Soldiers needing assistance from the food locker can come directly to ACS for the first visits.

On subsequent visits, soldiers need the recommendation of either their first sergeant, their company commander, a chaplain or an ACS official.

Santa's Castle, the other beneficiary of a $500 check presented by the school bus drivers also remains in need of more donations.

Santa's Castle, a private organization on Fort Benning receives no Army funding and remains completely volunteer run, gives toys to needy families during the Christmas season.

Volunteers take used toys and restore them as well as take money from donations to purchase new toys. Santa's Castle operates throughout the year preparing for Christmas.

"It costs an average of $25 per child for each child that comes through Santa's Castle," Hurley said. "Last year we had approximately 1200 families come through Santa's Castle and this year we are expecting even more."

Soldiers and family members receive toys from Santa's Castle after being recommended by chain of command, chaplain or through ACS.

"Unfortunately we can't give toys away to everybody," Hurley said. "We give based upon the severity of the need."

Both Santa's Castle and the ACS Food Locker are in Soldiers' Plaza.

VOTING: students use right

The students even made campaign commercials and political cartoons, Barnette said.

The students stayed on the Internet as one student from each group tapped in and printed out information for the rest of the team.

"The program takes the students through the candidate selection process to the primaries to the actual election," Jones said. "Faith School became involved with the program in October."

The Faith School class conducted a debate first thing election day, complete with a media table to fire questions at the candidates. Each candidate presented his position to the class. The candidates answered questions on equalizing civilian and military pay, welfare reform, abortion rights and more. The students voted later that afternoon.

"We told the kids ahead of time that this was not a popularity contest and that they shouldn't vote for somebody because they were friends," Jones said.

Portraying the candidates were T.J. Ross, son of retired Sgt. Amos and Spc. Paula Ross, as President Bill Clinton; Andrew Antonia, son of Maj. Keith and Angela Antonia, as former Senator Bob Dole; and James Ramo, son of Sgt. 1st Class Joel Ramo, as Ross Perot.

Antonia said he wanted to play Dole so that he could learn more about his views and Ramo played Perot because he wanted to learn more about the candidates and the political system.

Ross, playing the winning candidate, said he liked everything about his Balloteer experience.

"I liked it because it was interactive, not just writing and textbook," Ross said. "Also, I like history. I like to see what other people are doing around the world."

Reflective of society, Clinton won the elections at Loyd, Dexter, and Faith.

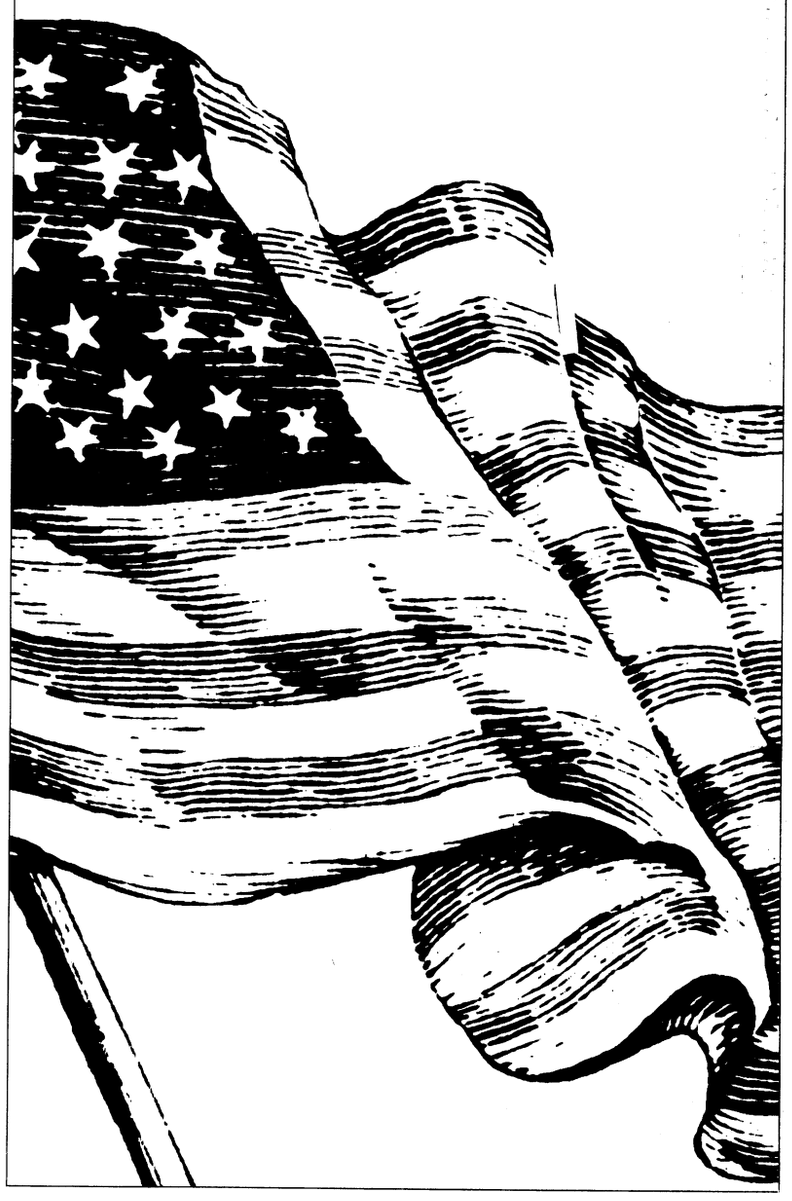
Neutering, spaying good for pet

Veterinary Services

To avoid adding to America's overpopulation of pets, dog and cat owners need to spay or neuter their animals in all cases, except those animals that are purebreds of show quality kept for breeding purposes.

Most veterinarians prefer spaying or neutering pets at 4 to 6 months old, but they sometimes offer to perform the procedure on pets as young as 6 weeks of age.



Spaying involves a general anesthetic and abdominal surgery. Once the incision heals completely, a female pet lives longer, avoids heat cycles and experiences fewer health problems. Older, unspayed dogs run a higher risk of mammary tumors, uterine infections and other health problems.

Neutering takes place with the male pet under general anesthesia and requires only a brief stay in the hospital. Many compelling reasons to neuter a pet exist.

From a medical standpoint, neutered dogs develop common prostate-related problems, such as tumors of the rectum, prostate enlargement and various bacterial infections, far less often than other dogs. Neutering often effectively reverses several annoying behaviors, such as urine marking, mounting, roaming and aggression toward other dogs.
