Jews celebrate Feast of Weeks

By Chaplain (Capt.) Chana Timoner
11th Infantry Regiment

Shavuot, or the Feast of Weeks, is celebrated this week in synagogues throughout the world.

Exodus 23:14 and Leviticus 23:9-22 refers to this holiday as being part of the entire holy cycle of the spring. Starting with the second night of Passover (April 21 this year), seven days are counted seven times to place this holiday 50 days after the Passover. The intermittent period is called an Omer.

An omer is a measure of a grain or flour. The first new grain of the year was brought to the temple the 16th of Nisan — the second day of Passover. Each evening in the synagogue, the counting is done aloud so the entire community keeps careful account to gather together for Shavuot.

Shavuot commemorates the receiving of the Ten Commandments and the entire Torah (the five books of Moses). It is a time where it was made clear to the Israelites that worship alone was not the only thing demanded of us.

For the first time in history, the religion ties moral behavior to God. All other religions at that time had their particular ways of worship. The Ten Commandments strongly tie in behavior to both God and fellow creatures an explicit expectation of righteousness.

We are required to live according to an ethic that is good and just toward God and toward everyone else. Even animals were included in this remarkable covenant with the almighty.

On this holiday, the Book of Ruth is read because it centers on the two great themes of Shavuot: revelation and harvest. In this text, the main part of this story happens during the gathering of the first harvest.

The widowed daughter-in-law of Naomi, Ruth, willingly and lovingly embraced our religion and culture.

Each year with preparation and thought, we lovingly renew our embracing of Judaism and the eternal covenant God has made with the people of Israel for all eternity.

The Lord teaches you how to be a good Soldier

By Chaplain (Maj.) Robert Thompson
Family Life Center

People in the Army talk a whole lot about professional development. It forms the backbone of the career Soldier. But what about our personal development?

I think it's too easy to develop professionally; to grow as a Soldier while neglecting to grow as a person, basically unchanged in our personal maturity since being a private or a lieutenant.

All of us have seen the results of not growing as a person. Here's a few I have observed: a platoon leader out in the field took a sergeant's sleeping bag, then slept in it while wearing muddy boots. A company commander took his physical fitness test with a pencil to ensure a good score. An outgoing company commander asked the incoming commander to sign a hand receipt, which listed equipment they had not seen.

I think that when a Soldier or leader does not grow as a person, morale suffers. The higher we rise in leadership, the more important our growing as individuals becomes. We affect more people than we did at lower positions.

So how can we minimize, or even avoid, this danger? In Psalm 8, David writes:

"O Lord, our Lord, your greatness is seen in all the world! When I look at the sky, which you made, at the moon and the stars, which you set in their places —What is man, that you think of him; mere man, that you care for him? Yet you have made him a little lower than the angels. You have crowned him with glory and honor. You have made him ruler over the things you made."

In these few lines, I read a sure-fire way to maintain personal growth: stand in awe of God. To grow as a person means to stand in awe of God.

What do you and I usually stand in awe of? Does money impress us? Authority? Muscle? Maybe music or art or nature?

Until we are awed and impressed by God, our creator, we are settling for lesser things, for it is God who has made all things possible. To accept this fact of life is to be cured of our tendency to take life for granted, to see and yet not see, to hear and yet not hear.

We need to see where the real power is, so we don't take ourselves too seriously. We see our lives and works from clear vantage points. Our pride should not rest in how important we think we are; it does not rest on what we have done. Our pride flows out of our joy — the joy of responding to our impressive and wonderful creator.

When I was stationed in Korea, my battalion began receiving some new equipment, which saved time and work. Company B received the equipment long before the other companies. One platoon sergeant bragged about the new equipment and declared that his platoon was now the best in the battalion.

Another platoon sergeant, however, shared his excitement with other platoons, inviting them to try the equipment and even train on it until they received their own.

The second platoon sergeant understood awe. He did not take credit for the new equipment; instead, he shared the power that came with it. The equipment was his, and yet it wasn't. He knew the difference.

Awe of God humbles us in the right way. It leads to proper pride. "O Lord, what is man, that you care for him?"

Lord, may the "awed" person never become the odd person but, rather, the common person in our Army.

Leaders gather to discuss Infantry

By Cpl. Marc G. Turchin
Bayonet staff writer

The 1997 Infantry Conference kicked off Tuesday inside Infantry Hall and ended Thursday with a live-firing at Red Cloud Range.

This annual conference draws Infantry leaders from around the Army to Fort Benning and provides them with a glimpse of what the Infantry School is currently teaching and what's on tap for the future of the Infantry.

The Chief of the Infantry Maj. Gen. Carl F. Ernst gave the State of the Infantry address Wednesday inside Infantry Hall's Classroom 6. Ernst focused on a variety of topics, from training and doctrine to Infantry personnel.

He began his speech by talking about the Infantry's future.

"Obviously, in the next couple of days we'll be talking a lot about the 21st century," Ernst said.

He told the crowd of more than 300 leaders that he needed their help with planning for the future.

"We really need your help. You've got to tell us what you want us to do, where you think we are and where you'd like us to go," Ernst said.

He also spoke about close quarters combat and what the school is doing to help Infantrymen conduct operations safer.

Some of the new manuals coming are Field Manual 100-5, FM 101-5 and 100-40. The FM 100-40 is a new manual dealing with tactics.

Among those in attendance were Gen. David Bramlett, Forces Command commander, Gen. William W. Hartzog, Training and Doctrine Command commander, and Maj. Gen. John W. Hendrix, 3rd Infantry Division commander and former Fort Benning commander.

Wednesday and Thursday were spent discussing some of the more important issues facing the Infantry. These included the survey of Infantry doctrine, discussion of the Infantry branch, training, equipment and manning the force. An advanced concept technology demonstration was also included during the conference. This demonstration showed attendees military operation in urban terrain and the rapid force

Officials discuss sexual misconduct

American Forces Press Service

WASHINGTON — Recent sexual misconduct cases represent the exception, not the rule, according to Department of Defense officials.

Sexual misconduct cases only involve a fraction of one percent of the people in the military, officials said.

"We have 1.5 million men and women in uniform on active duty," said Army Gen. John M. Shalikashvili, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, "and the vast majority — from the lowest recruit to the most seasoned leader — find this behavior ... abhorrent."

Wrongdoing by a small number of individuals has diminished all those in uniform, Shalikashvili said, "and we take that very seriously."

Defense Secretary William Cohen said the United States has "the finest military in the world, and they are being called upon to serve this country and the interests of our allies day in and day out, and they perform admirably.

"Are there people who fail to measure up to the standard set by our military? The answer is yes. But they are in the vast minority, and the overwhelming majority of the people who are serving our military are carrying out their responsibilities and measuring up to the high standards."

Sailors and Marines aboard the USS Kearsarge recently conducted operations that are an example of the real-world missions, U.S. service members perform successfully every day, Cohen said. U.S. forces evacuated about 2,500 civilians from Sierra Leone after a military coup left the African nation in turmoil. The mission was "safe, fast and efficient," he said.

While such military business goes on as usual, a DoD official said, military men and women are distressed by the apparent misperception the public may have of "1.5 million people running around chasing after each other."

"That's not the case," said a DoD official who spoke on background. "These are people who are very busy. They're going about their business, many times under very arduous circumstances, doing their job and performing extraordinarily well. The fact that men and women in uniform today make up a high-quality, motivated and well-led force is a testament to the training they have received throughout their service in the military."

Since the sexual misconduct cases emerged at the Aberdeen Proving Ground, Md., advanced training center, public and congressional scrutiny has focused somewhat mistakenly on whether the military should continue mixed-gender basic training, the official said.

Cohen announced plans Saturday to form a task force to review gender-integrated training. Army, Navy and Air Force officials recently told congressional leaders service members must train the way they will fight — together. The Marine Corps conducts segregated training.

Opportunities for women in the military have increased as their numbers have risen. At the start of the all-volunteer force in 1973, 45,000 women made up two percent of the Rangers remember those who gave all during ceremony

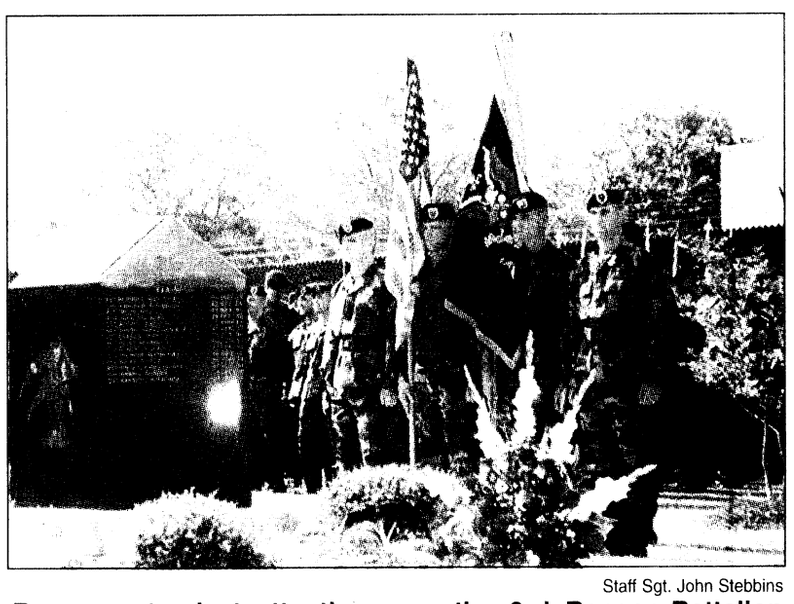
By Staff Sgt. John Stebbins
3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment

Rangers gathered at the 3rd Ranger Battalion Memorial housed within the brown-fenced ranger compound June 6 for the Fallen Comrade Ceremony.

They met there to pay their respects to those rangers who had given their lives for their country in either combat or training since the battalion was formed Oct. 3, 1984.

Lt. Col. Michael Ferriter, 3rd Battalion commander, explained how the monument was erected by private citizens who were impressed by the actions of the rangers in Somalia Oct. 3-4.

"They decided a separate memorial should be dedicated to those who had given their lives so valiantly for those that live dangerously every day," Ferriter said.



But the monument is more for the living than the dead. Such is the case for Sandy Harris, the widow of 1st Sgt. Glenn Harris, who came to the monument with her two daughters for private occasions throughout the year.

After the 22 names were read, a wreath was place at the foot of the memorial by Sandy Harris and by Somalia veterans Capt. Larry Perino and Sgt. 1st Class James Hardy.

"His death is still fresh for me," Harris said. "It takes a good week to recover from these ceremonies, but we never feel alone or forgotten as long as these rangers remember."

Ferriter said rangers participate in a great amount of high-risk training, but do it safer than anybody else. Nonetheless, 14 of the 22 names on the stone were killed in training.

After Ferriter went down the list of live-fire exercises, airborne, rotary-wing, and water operations, and the amounts of ammunition, demolitions and rockets used by the 3rd Ranger Battalion this fiscal year, he pointed out that not a single ranger had lost his life or had been seriously injured.

Staff Sgt. John Stebbins

Rangers stand at attention near the 3rd Ranger Battalion Memorial during the Fallen Comrade Ceremony.

Former post commander, and the first commander of the reactivated ranger battalion, retired Maj. Gen. Kenneth Leuer felt the monument being in the troop area bore a special significance to the ceremony.

"Being in the business we're in, a daily reminder is necessary for our continued vigilance in ensuring the Ranger Creed is being lived."

FATHER'S DAY

Being a dad takes a special person

By Spc. Brian R. Voller
Bayonet staff writer

Spc. Brian R. Voller discovered his father's true side on a vacation.

commentary

There's an old saying: anyone can be a father, but only a really special person can be a dad.

Let's face it, it only takes one of the basic primal functions and a lack of rational thinking for someone who is not prepared to be a father to become one.

It's true because not every person is a real dad. Not every person who fathers a child really has what it takes to raise a child.

That's why I consider myself to be very lucky, because I was fortunate enough to get the best dad anyone could ask for.

My dad is a very quiet man. I always tell people they could light my dad on fire and he'd be like, "Hey, don't do that," and then he'd walk away. To tell you the truth, I've never heard my dad yell at anybody, including me, which is a major feat.

The first time I realized how good a dad I have was when the two of us took a vacation together. For about two years my dad's work had him living in Bermuda where he did insurance underwriting for a lot of the hotels located out there.

While I was waiting to leave for active duty, he asked if I would like to spend a week with him in Bermuda. I enthusiastically agreed and the two of us boarded a plane to cross the ocean.

At first the trip was no big surprise. My dad was as soft-spoken as ever. We talked about this and that. No big deal, but then something really strange happened.

After we landed and went to his house we started talking about books we've both read and enjoyed. Somehow we got on the subject of Superman. I was shocked to learn that my father actually liked Superman. He had never expressed any interest in comic book heroes before.

Eventually we moved our conversation onto the back porch of his house and we watched the sun set over the ocean. This is when my vision of my dad suddenly changed. For the first time in my life he became a human being, not just my dad.

Before I knew it we were talking like we were old friends. We were discussing the Army and school and the work force and some of the conversation even moved to the type of talk you might hear in a high school locker room.

After the sunset, we went out to dinner and we talked more in that four-hour period than we had during my entire life. I learned more about my father than I ever thought possible and it was one of the greatest experiences of my life.

I also learned that my father and I have more in common than I thought. A lot of the crazy things I did as a kid he did too. A lot of the hopes and dreams I hold dear he once used to guide his life. And some of the concerns I worry about he worries about too.

After I left Bermuda, I thought really hard about what my dad did to be such a good father. He did everything that was expected of him. He raised me, protected me, provided for me, taught me the lessons of life, showed me right from wrong and he showed me, in his own special way, how much he cares about me.

But he also has spent most of my life going out of his way for me. Even when he didn't want to or he didn't need to, my dad sacrificed something for his son.

It's a strange sensation when you realize what a good father you really have. I guess I've known my whole life how lucky I have been to be blessed with such a good dad, but I don't think I really realized it until he made that transition from dad to human being.

I wish I would have realized it sooner, maybe then I would have done a lot of things differently. But I'm glad it happened. It terrifies me to think I might have spent the rest of my life looking at him only as my father.

Maybe it's part of growing up, maybe I'm finally starting to act my age. Whatever the reason, I'm glad I have my dad and I'm glad I've met my friend.

Having a good father is important to children

By Staff Sgt. Lori Egan
Bayonet staff writer

Staff Sgt. Lori Egan loves her dad very much and feels that fathers are a necessity in every person's life.

commentary

A wailing, eerie sound echoed throughout the basement. I always hated to go down there — my dad convinced me that it was haunted — by my dad. He used to jump out of one of the storage rooms and chase us up the stairs and around the house.

To this day I still run up those stairs half expecting my dad to leap out at me.

My dad used to take me fishing and camping when I was a kid. No small feat because driving up mountains scared me, driving down mountains scared me and when we finally got to our campsite I was usually a sniveling, squalling snot who had spent too much time in the car and was carsick.

If my 5-year-old daughter acted like I did, we wouldn't do anything together.

Luckily her father exhibits the same type of patience my father had. When she is in a cranky mood, he'll tease her out of it. After three warnings, I just send her to her room.

For awhile, it seemed to me like people were saying that having a father was a "nice to have," not a "need to have."

Dads are a need to have. The more people who love a child, the better off the child is and a father's love and influence is necessary for raising a healthy child.

I'm going to go out on a limb and say I'm a relatively sane and healthy adult because my dad gave me a lot of his time and love.

He taught me compassion without belaboring the point. When I was a teenager, I had to help a sow deliver her litter. I didn't want to but my hand was smaller than Dad's.

Dad got and gave my family a scare this past year when he was diagnosed with a type of throat cancer. The doctors battled the cancer aggressively with radiation and chemotherapy. Dad fought the cancer with an upbeat attitude and humor. When the radiation burnt the uvula from my dad's throat, he took a positive look at things and said he now sounded like a big band singer.

Thankfully Dad's last two checkups have been positive and his prognosis is good.

Dad taught me a lot of things about life by setting the example. And he still does.

Resident complains about loud music

I am writing this letter out of great disgust to all of you on Fort Benning who feel the need to broadcast your profane music to all.

You people know who you are and you disgust me. You know how close the living quarters are. Why can't you respect those who live around you?

My children have to hear your garbage and I do not like it at all. We are Christians and are very much offended by your actions.

Would some authority out there please take action? Maybe if Maj. Gen. (Carl) Ernst were to drive through my neighborhood and witness this it would stop.

People who are doing this do not deserve the privilege of living in government quarters.

AUSA Job Fair packs Infantry Hall

By Elizabeth E. LaMonica
Special to The Bayonet©

More than 1,000 job hunters turned out for the fourth annual Association of the United States Army Job Fair June 5.

The fair brought Soldiers, retirees, their family members and students of area colleges together with 63 potential employers during an all day event in Infantry Hall.

The fair attracted both local employers and some representatives from Ohio and Texas.

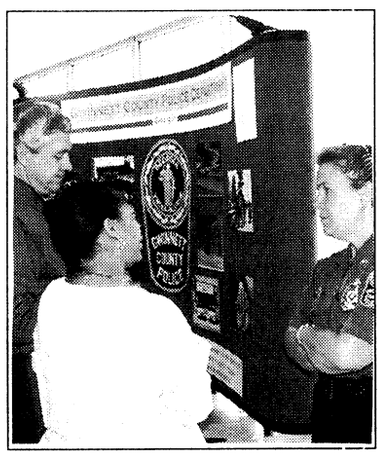
"The fair can help Soldiers find either employment or options," said Mark Mills, Family Member Employment Assistance Program manager. "They get to meet and talk to other employers they may not have thought of before coming to the fair, giving them career choices and job options. The fair stresses learning about the job field versus job openings only."

One change the coordinators implemented at this year's fair was the invitation of college students to the job hunt.

"We really are a tricommunity," Mills said, "so we definitely tried to open it up to them."

Although Fort Benning usually hosts five or six job fairs each year, this annual event is the largest of the year. Both employers and attendees acknowledged the benefits of this fair.

"This is our third fair at Fort Benning this year," said Sgt. M. L. Respess, background supervisor, Gwinnett County Police Department. "We like hiring military because they generally have clean driving, criminal and credit records. They expect to take orders and understand discipline."



Many of the attendees showed interest in the booths that emphasized career progression. Representatives from the Federal Bureau of Investigation, Central Intelligence Agency, Secret Service, U. S. Marshals Service and various police departments from Georgia and Alabama attracted the most attention.

Soldiers, family members and college students also had the opportunity to learn about job and educational requirements from businesses and corporations prior to separation or retirement from active duty or graduation from school.

"So far I'm pretty impressed with what's here," said Spc. Ambra Crim, U.S. Army Medical Department Activity. "I'm getting ready to ETS at the end of the year. I plan to get my degree first, so I'm here getting information and am keeping my options open."

The coordinators of this year's fair also implemented another change. The fair was conducted in the Main NCO Club in the past, but was moved to Infantry Hall due to renovations at the Club.

Despite the new site, fair coordinators remained optimistic.

Elizabeth E. LaMonica

Investigator David Schoenherr (left) and Sgt. M.L. Respess (right), both of the Gwinnett County Police Department, advise Caren Bush during the AUSA Job Fair.

"I think the new venue will get a better flow of people," said Bruce Tait, local veterans employment representative, Georgia Department of Labor.

By that afternoon, Tait's predictions of flow proved correct, with approximate numbers of attendees reaching 1,100-1,200.

"The employers seemed well pleased," said Tait. "I'd be willing to bet this is a better response than the last two years."

Retired Col. Ted Voorhees, co-creator of the AUSA Job Fair program, offered a more straightforward opinion of the event.

"We created the program because of a moral obligation owed to the Soldiers," he said. "There is still a need, but it's not as acute as it was during the drastic cuts. I think today's fair was a huge success."

IOBC completes movement to contact mission

2nd Lt. Kristopher C. Schmidt
11th Infantry Regiment

The sound of machine gun fire erupted from the hilltop ahead as the students of Company B, 2nd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment, Infantry Officer Basic Course (IOBC), conducted a movement to contact mission during their movement and security field training exercise at Griswold Range May 27-31.

The Bushmasters of Co. B spent the week receiving training on platoon operations from IOBC cadre and conducting missions relating to the tactics they learned. On the second and third days of the field training exercise (FTX), the three platoons rotated through a movement to contact lane where they conducted their first platoon-level live fire.

Co. B began the week by occupying platoon assembly areas on Griswold Range where they spent several days practicing light Infantry tactics. IOBC students in the platoon chain of command positions issued operations orders and prepared their units for the upcoming mission.

During the operation, the Bushmasters were pitted against opposition forces (OPFOR) from the 3rd Infantry Division (Mechanized). With the added realism of live OPFOR, blank ammunition and the multi-integrated laser engagement system (MILES), IOBC students were able to perform the mission with circumstances resembling combat.

After completing the blank fire exercise, the IOBC students of Class 4-97 were ready to conduct the live fire mission on the lane.

Their first encounter with the enemy, which consisted of mechanical pop-up targets, was a two-man observation post to their front. The IOBC student leaders engaged the targets and maneuvered their fire teams through the squad battle drill attack. The Bushmasters destroyed the enemy with grenade simulators and cleared the objective with their lead squad.

Again the platoon moved out tactically. As they crested a hill, IOBC students heard the sound of automatic weapon fire from a pneumatic machine gun simulator ahead.

The Bushmasters reacted to the contact by taking cover and returning fire at the pop-up targets down range. After identifying the enemy positions, the platoon leader brought the squad in contact on line and called forward the M-60 machine gun crews to gain fire superiority on the enemy element.

Covered by the suppressive fire of the support element, the platoon leader maneuvered his other squad to a flanking position to begin the assault on the objective. The assault element moved on line and pressed forward toward the enemy positions while the support element continued to fire on the targets.

The platoon leader signaled the support element to shift their fires away from the assault element's approach with a star-cluster flare. The assaulting students began to engage targets as they bounded across the objective with their fire teams.

As the Bushmasters began to clear the enemy positions, the platoon leader signaled the support personnel to cease fire. The assault element moved across the objective to their limit of advance where they took up security positions.

The platoon leader consolidated the rest of his platoon on the objective and the exercise ended after they established a security perimeter around the enemy position.

"The live fire not only provided us with a chance to improve our IOBC platoon's execution of a movement to contact," said 2nd Lt. William R. Prayner of 2nd Platoon, "it also gave us ideas on how we will conduct training exercises in our platoons when we arrive at our units."

Another student said the training exercise shed new light on the mission.

"Conducting a platoon movement to contact with live rounds gave me a new perspective on the planning considerations and control measures necessary to accomplish this mission," said 2nd Lt. Daniel P. Schoenekase of 3rd Platoon. "The added realism really made us pay attention to the fundamental tactics we've learned."

IOBC, Class 4-97, is scheduled to graduate July 25.

Rangers strive to improve at JRTC

By Staff Sgt. Brian Thomas
U.S. Army Special Operations Command

They are already considered the finest light infantry in the world, but even the best strive to improve. With that in mind, the 75th Ranger Regiment came to the Joint Readiness Training Center with only one thought — making better Rangers.

For three weeks in May, the rangers sent two battalions into the infamous "box" while a staff from 3rd Battalion participated in a computer-driven command post exercise.

Rangers from 1st Battalion, Hunter Army Airfield, Ga., and 2nd Battalion, Fort Lewis, Wash., staged out of a camp at the former England Air Force Base. They conducted raids into the JRTC training area to defeat the insurgent forces in the fictional country of Cortina.

Fort Benning's 3rd Battalion participated in the command post exercise and provided convoy defense.

"It was a great training opportunity," said Maj. Scott A. Henry, regimental civil-military operations officer. "We learned a great deal from the individual soldier level up to the regimental staff."

The rangers conducted missions ranging in size from company to a reinforced battalion and also formed the Army Special Operations Task Force.

"This is a big test — this is what it's going to be like if we go to war," said Sgt. 1st Class Ray A. Devins, noncommissioned officer in charge of the reconnaissance detachment. "This is how it would be for us; we're going to have the ARSOTF and it's not going to just be platoon or company size missions.

"When we do well here, it lets us see how it's going to be when it's real life."

The command post exercise gave 3rd Battalion rangers a chance to plan actual missions along with their counterparts in the other battalions, but then put their plans into action in a computer simulation rather than the training area.

"We go through the same planning process in the staging base right up to the point of execution. Then we come to the simulation center and get on the computers," said 1st Lt. Don Brown, Company C, 3rd Bn., 75th Ranger Regt. "In the simulation center, our job is to make things as realistic as we can to the battalion standard the tactical operations center.

"What we're really doing is training them to control the fight."

Brown compared his experiences in the simulation center, where he fills the role of company commander, to being a platoon leader in the box.

The rangers were impressed with JRTC's unique capabilities.

"There's a professional, world-class opposing force that operates in the JRTC training area," Henry said. "All the objectives are manned by both opposing forces and dislocated civilians. There are role players who play everything from a mayor to national guard forces to protesters to media on the battlefield.

Devins said the JRTC is also growing progressively more difficult, creating challenges and making better rangers.

"We're earning our money here with what we're doing, especially the way JRTC has changed," he said. "They've now got the equipment and the personnel out there to make JRTC harder than it's been in the past."

news from the front

498th Medical Company (Air Ambulance)

Now some 60 days into the Balkans mission, the 498th Medical Company is working hard as ever.

Spring has brought both nice weather and, for the forward support team in Croatia, a spawning of missions to support athletic injuries. In addition, a steady flow of new arrivals to the unit's rear detachment have been trained and transitioned through Germany en route to Bosnia for replacement of returning Soldiers prescheduled for schooling, retirement and permanent change of station moves.

At the hub of the support system in Tuzla, Hungary, the main body of Soldiers have recently sponsored children from a local orphanage.

The children were brought into the "blue factory" base of operations where they spent the day. A helicopter display, games and carnival-type events were shared by all in hopes of shedding a glimpse of positive light on the tragic consequences of war.

In collaboration with their departed spouses, family members are taking advantage of the spring garage sale events to gather a few clothing and toy-type items to be shipped over to the unit in support of the orphanage recently sponsored by the 498th.

Anyone wishing to donate these type of items can contact the rear detachment at 545-1040 or 545-9261 for pick up. The box will be sent at the end of June.

Now settled in the support role, the unit has focused on aggressive training to complete specialized aviation qualifications for pilots using the new "heads-up display" system for night vision goggles. This allows pilots to view their most important aircraft performance gauges and navigation information directly through the night vision goggles.

With this new system, the pilots do not have to divert their a attention inside the cockpit while flying low levels in the pitch-black darkness often encountered in sparsely-populated areas.

On the home front, the Family Support Group (FSG) met recently to enjoy a pizza party and view some home movies sent back from the front.

In the near future, the FSG plans to venture out toward places like Callaway Gardens and the Underground Mall in Atlanta. To support these trips, the family members will have a bake sale Saturday at the Wal-Mart on Exit 6 in Columbus from 9:30 a.m. to 2:30 p.m.

force. Today's 195,000 women make up 13.5 percent of the force. Women now serve side by side with men during deployments around the globe. They serve in the field, aboard ships and as fighter pilots. This was not always the case.

Prior to the 1990s, women were restricted from serving in many military specialties. In 1991, the law excluding women from flying combat aircraft was repealed. In 1993, Congress repealed laws prohibiting women from being assigned to combatant ships. Today, there are no laws on the books barring women from any assignments in the military.

Policy, however, places ground combat positions — Infantry, armor and artillery, special operations assignments, submarine duty and a few other assignments — off limits to women. At present, 99 percent of Air Force jobs, 94 percent of Navy jobs, 67 percent of Army jobs and 62 percent of Marine Corps are open to any qualified individual.

Opportunities for women expanded due to the contribution they made to the quality and readiness of U.S. forces, the official said. Women perform no better nor worse than men, he said. The evidence is in their rates of promotion and advancement to positions of leadership, which are no better nor worse than men.

The performance of about 35,000 women who served in the Persian Gulf was crucial to Desert Storm's success, he said. In Bosnia, Army officials deemed women's performance indistinguishable from that of their male counterparts.

"The women in Task Force Eagle performed magnificently, whether turning a wrench in a muddy motor pool or standing guard at a base camp or flying a helicopter," said Army Maj. Gen. William Nash, 1st Armor Division commander.

JAC provides assistance with job hunt

Army Career and Alumni Program

A report issued by David Poythress, Georgia's labor commissioner, May 30 stated, "The state's lowest unemployment rate in 24 years and steady job growth over the past several years indicate that new graduates, older workers and newcomers to Georgia who enter the work force this summer should be able to find both permanent and temporary jobs."

The article further explained how, with so many people already holding jobs, more opportunities will be available for job seekers. Those opportunities cross all occupations and require many different skills and levels of experience.

Fortunately for Soldiers not only staying in Georgia but looking for employment in other parts of the United States, the match between the skills they have and the skills employers need will create opportunities in the job market between now and the end of this year.

These opportunities are being listed daily at the Job Assistance Center (JAC), Building 2634, Soldiers' Plaza, as hundreds of hot leads (these are jobs employers are trying to fill immediately) are being received each week for openings with employers throughout the United States.

Soldiers, civilian employees and their family members who are eligible to use the resources at the JAC should make extensive use of the available job listings, according to Carl Hopp, ACAP advisor. They're easy to use and very convenient to obtain, he said.

Finally, in using the JAC resources, Hopp said, remember job listings change daily and if you need employment in the near future, you should plan on checking out the job lists at least twice a week. All eligible personnel are welcomed every day at the JAC.

USAMU Public Affairs Office

The U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit said goodbye to its sergeant major in a retirement ceremony May 16 at the Pool International Shooting Complex on Fort Benning.

Sgt. Maj. Charles E. DeJarnett hung up his Army greens after more than 24 years of active service to spend time with his wife Judy and their three children, Lisa, 16, Ricky, 15 and Sam, 7.

"This is the start, not the end for me and my family," DeJarnett said. "I will remember USAMU, the dedication of its Soldiers, marksmen, gunsmiths and staff."

DeJarnett grew up in Hobbs, N.M., and attended the New Mexico Military Institute where he attained an associate of arts degree in business administration.

DeJarnett entered the Army in 1973 and his previous assignments include first sergeant observer controller for the Joint Readiness Training Center; first sergeant for Company C, 2nd Battalion, 505th Parachute Infantry Regiment; platoon sergeant for the 1st Battalion of the 505th Parachute Infantry Regiment; operations noncommissioned officer for the Joint Special Operations Command and a ranger instructor at the Mountain Ranger Camp.

"If it wasn't for Jesus Christ, our Lord, our savior, I wouldn't have done the things that I have done," DeJarnett said.

DeJarnett military education includes the Basic Noncommissioned Officers Course, Advanced Noncommissioned Officers Course, First Sergeants Course and the U.S. Army Sergeants Major Academy.

His awards and decorations include the Legion of Merit, Bronze Star Medal, Defense Meritorious Service Medal, two Meritorious Service medals, two Army Commendation medals, two Army Achievement medals, a National Defense Service Medal with star, Armed Forced Expeditionary Medal, Army Service Ribbon, Overseas Service Ribbon, four Noncommissioned Officer Professional Development ribbons, eight Good Conduct medals, Southwest Asia Service Medal with two stars, German Parachutist Badge, Parachutist Badge, Combat Infantryman Badge, Expert Infantryman Badge and Expert Rifleman Badge.

The group in the top left laughed and clapped as they watched the show.

Fort Discovery offers children, families an educational vacation

By Gerry J. Gilmore
Army News Service

WASHINGTON — Imagine a place where young (or old) minds can spend hours soaking up the latest science and technology using colorful, exciting "hands-on" displays.

In this instance, imagination became reality in Augusta, Ga., when Fort Discovery opened to the public April 26. Fort Discovery features more than 250 interactive scientific exhibits designed to appeal to young people. The 128,000-square-foot building (worth $20 million) was privately donated, and the state of Georgia donated $10 million toward obtaining the exhibits.

Fort Discovery is the result of a partnership between the U.S. Army and the National Science Center, Discovery Center, (NSCDC) Inc., a private, nonprofit organization in Augusta.

"We couldn't do this program without our partners," said Marilyn J. White, the Army's NSC executive actions officer at the Pentagon. "We've partnered with the state and local governments, plus the National Guard, the Reserves, the JROTC (Junior Reserve Officer Training Course) summer camps, school districts and corporate sponsors.

"There is no single organization, federal, local government or private, with the resources it takes to do this well all by yourself, anymore. You have to collaborate and share resources. Our private partner, NSCDC, Inc., has raised $38 million in the last year and a half."

The NSC was created by Congress in 1985 in response to concerns that American youths were losing interest in mathematics and the sciences. The Army's National Science Center Task Force supports improved national science and technological education through interactive exhibits and educational outreach programs.

Army leaders realize tomorrow's Soldiers will need high-tech minds and skills to operate 21st century weaponry and systems, White said. The NSC Discovery Center, Inc.'s, chairman and chief executive officer, retired Army Lt. Gen. William J. Hilsman, was the commander of Fort Gordon, Ga., in 1979 when he perceived many recruits at the Army's Signal Center and School lacked knowledge and skills in math and sciences. Hilsman envisioned a program that would make math and science subjects interesting to American youth.

Through his and others' efforts, Fort Discovery was created.

The National Science Center and the Army's Recruiting Support Command, Fort Knox, Ky., cosponsor Mobile Discovery, a mobile math and sciences education program. Two 18-wheel trailers and two van-sized Mobile Discovery vehicles with exhibits and Soldier demonstrators travel the nation to visit with more than 60,000 middle- and high-school students each year. To date, more than 163,000 students have visited Mobile Discovery theater vans nationwide.

"Kids get so excited about these exhibit-experiments," White said of the Mobile Discovery outreach program. "(Some) practically jump over the person sitting in front of them to be chosen as a volunteer."

Recruiting Command's Soldier-demonstrators make a big hit with the public while on the road with Mobile Discovery, White said. "They're model Soldiers, the kind of positive role models the Army can give our nation's youth. It's public relations of a kind you can't buy."

In 1992, then Army Chief of Staff Gen. Gordon R. Sullivan directed the Army's NSC Task Force to expand its outreach efforts, while making maximum use of Army resources. Seven math and science summer camps were started in 1993.

These programs provided hands-on experiences to more than 3,800 students in five JROTC summer camp programs. In 1996, 17,000 JROTC campers learned more about math and science, courtesy of the NSC-TF.

The Army is becoming increasingly high-tech as America moves into the 21st century, White said. Programs like Fort Discovery and Mobile Discovery help to impart important scientific knowledge with American youth, while telling the Army story.

"The Army has grown and developed (technologically) ... we want to share that story with the public. About one-and-a-half years ago, Secretary of the Army (Togo D. West Jr.) was addressing a breakfast audience. He said, 'The National Science Center is the pearl of the Army,'" she said.

YS conduct a job workshop for teens

By Spc. Lisa M. Hibbert
Bayonet staff writer

More than 20 Fort Benning teens turned out Saturday for a job training workshop sponsored by the Directorate of Civilian Personnel and the Equal Employment Office's (EEO) Black Employment Committee (BEC) conducted at Main Youth Services Center.

The program, which was coordinated by the Indianhead Recreation Center manager, Justine Boone, was designed to help the teens obtain jobs.

"With summer coming up, a lot of the teens will be looking for jobs," Boone said. "That's why Youth Services, DCP and EEO are doing this workshop. We want to make sure when the teens go out to apply for jobs or for job interviews, they conduct themselves in a manner that will get them hired."

Shirley Jarrett, DCP employee and representative for the BEC, was the speaker for the event. During the two-hour session, Jarrett discussed such job finding tips as getting there early, keeping in touch with the interviewer, sending thank you cards after the interview, avoid discussing salary, having a positive attitude and how to dress.

"The information she gave on what to wear when looking for a job was really helpful," said 15-year-old Lawrence Swann, son of Myong and Sgt. 1st Class Lawrence Swann. "She gave a handout called "Dressing Like a Winner" and talked about avoiding trendy clothes, no earings for males and no loud or distracting colors."

The handout on clothes was not the only thing the teens received. They received several handouts with tips on how to obtain jobs, including a personal data book.

"The personal data book is where you write down all the jobs you've ever held, their addresses, phone numbers and names,and numbers of people that you use as refences," Swann said. "It's a really good book to have because when most people fill out applications, they don't always remember that kind of information. This way you are always prepared."

Jarrett also gave the teens some uncommon job finding tips. She suggests people ask prospective employers for an interview even if there is not a job currently available.

"This way you can impress the manager so that when a job does become available, he or she will think of you," Jarrett said. "Remember, when interviewing, always present yourself in such a manner that your assets and abilities are superior to any other candidate. Present yourself in such a way that the interviewer can't think of anyone but you for the job."

Successful job finding is a skill people of all ages need.

"I wish that I had heard some of this information when I was a teen," Boone said. "The information these kids got today will not only help them this summer, but they can build off of it the rest of their lives."

"I went to the workshop because I wanted to learn the best way to get a job," Swann said. "It was pretty helpful because I learned skills that will help me later on."

Tips for keeping credit cards away from thieves

Federal Trade Commission

Your credit card bill comes in and you have been charged for purchases you never made. Yet your credit card is still in your purse. Your bank checks start to bounce. Yet you haven't overdrawn your account. Something is very wrong. What may be wrong is that someone is pretending to be you, and is accessing your accounts. You are a victim, of a growing problem for consumers — credit identity theft.

Today, a thief using vital bits of personal data that you would use to verify your credit identity can create a shadow identity. These bits of information — your Social Security number, driver's license number, date of birth, credit card and bank account card numbers — can be lost, carelessly divulged or deliberately stolen.

In Shakespeare's day, a thief might steal your purse. That can still happen, but today's credit identity thieves are information seekers — sorting through trash for discarded account statements or credit receipts, spying at the ATM machine to learn your PIN number, accessing your Social Security number through auto registration lists, even robbing your mailbox.

Legitimate companies that gather information for marketing purposes, well aware of the problem of identity theft, design programs to ensure privacy and quickly spot fraud. Thus, an unlikely buying pattern on a credit card or a rash of long-distance calls on a phone card can often be detected and the account owner alerted.

Seeking new ways to deter identity theft, the Federal Trade Commission has met with credit bureaus, victims of credit fraud, consumer advocacy groups and other law enforcement officials. Consumers have some protection from credit and banking fraud.

Generally, they are not liable for more than the first $50 of the loss if reported within two days of discovery. And there are laws about harassment by collection agencies. But there are steps consumers should take to become less inviting targets:

•Protect your purse and wallet at all times. You can't be too careful.

•Keep only the credit cards you really use and cancel all others. The more accounts and credit lines you have, the more money you can lose in case of theft. Make a photocopy of your cards and secure it so you can report any loss promptly.

•Don't leave credit card receipts sitting on a restaurant table or store counter. If you toss them, shred them first.

•If a monthly statement or a newly ordered credit card doesn't arrive promptly, call the company. Mailbox thieves search for these "innocuous" mailings. If you have doubts about your mailbox, lock it or rent a post office box.

•Don't reveal account numbers over the phone unless you initiated the call and are sure of the company.

•Call each of the three credit bureaus and order a copy of your credit report.

•Avoid using obvious PIN numbers such as your birth date and don't write them on the card.

•Don't write your Social Security number on a check. If the card is compromised, get a new number.

•Keep canceled checks and monthly statements away from prying eyes.

It would be nice if there was a magic number you could call that would make everything right once you've had your credit identity stolen. But acting quickly goes a long way in repairing the damage done.

•Notify your credit card companies and banks. New account numbers can be issued so you can continue carrying on your financial business as you work out your problem.

•Call all three credit bureaus, report the crime, and order copies of your credit report. Only then may you discover the full extent of the damage to your credit record. Have your file flagged and add a "victim's statement."

•Notify the police, and get a copy of the report in case you need proof of the crime. Report a missing driver's license to the department of motor vehicles. Get a new number that's not your Social Security number. Change locks if your keys were stolen.

•The Federal Trade Commission, Postal Service and National Fraud Information Center can also be of help.

•If you're lucky, the case will be closed quickly. But one victim told the FTC it took years to clear his name. Credit counselors say victims should avoid blaming themselves and be assertive.

Staff Sgt. Robin A. Shawlinski

Maj. Gen. John W. Hendrix, commander of the 3rd Infantry Division (Mechanized) presents Staff Sgt. Timothy McFadden, 1st Bn., 15th Inf. Regt., with the Pot O' Gold award as Col. Robert Schook, commander of the 3rd Brigade, 3rd Inf. Div. (Mech.), looks on.

Soldier receives award for volunteerism

After working more than 500 voluntary hours this year, a petroleum supply specialist with Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 1st Battalion, 15th Infantry Regiment, 3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division (Mechanized), received the commander's Pot O' Gold award for his service.

Staff Sgt. Timothy McFadden, Petroleum, Oil and Lubricants supervisor for 1st Bn., 15th Inf. Regt., was presented this award May 20 by Maj. Gen. John W. Hendrix, commander of the 3rd Inf. Div. (Mech.).

He is one of the few military members in 3rd Brigade to ever receive this award, according to Staff Sgt. Robin Shawlinski, 3rd Brigade Public Affairs officer.

"This award has been presented in the division before, but he's one of very few people in the brigade to receive the Pot O' Gold," she said.

A volunteer football and basketball coach for Youth Services, McFadden has not only worked voluntarily at Fort Benning but at previous duty stations as well, including stations in Germany and Fort Polk, La.

This year, McFadden coached the 49ers in football and the Orangemen in basketball. Both of these teams' players ranged in ages between 13 and 15 years.

The award means a lot to McFadden.

"It's outstanding because it will help me when I get out of the Army," McFadden said. "When I get out, I still want to volunteer with the youth in my community."

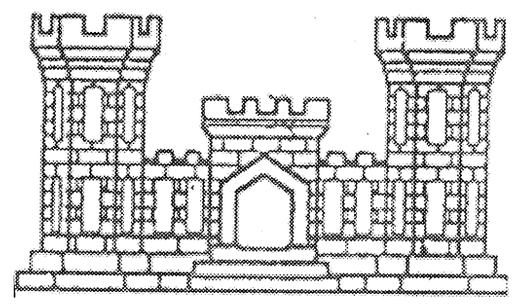
McFadden plans to retire from military service in 2002 and reside somewhere between Atlanta and Augusta, Ga. He said it is the future of America's youth that caused him to volunteer for the past eight years.

"It's something I really enjoy," he said. "If I can help keep them (the youth) busy and off of the streets, then hopefully I'll see one of them go pro one day."

He also said the main goal he wants to achieve through volunteering is to be a good role model to the children he works with.

"I do it for the kids," he said. "I want to be a mentor to them."

Linda Laine, sports director, Youth Services, said McFadden's many hours are appreciated.



"Staff Sergeant McFadden definitely gives 110 percent of his time to the kids," she said. "He also promotes the Youth Services' philosophies of every kid plays, sportsmanship and fair play.

"We couldn't ask for a better volunteer."

Directorate of Public Works

Well, although summer vacation is only two days old, rumors suggest that moms and dads are already looking forward to the next school year, which starts Aug. 26. With this in mind, we would like to give you an update concerning on-going construction projects at three Fort Benning schools •Wilson Elementary. This school is getting a brand new roof at a cost of about $445,000. The work, all exterior, is having no impact on the students or school operation. The contractor is about 25 percent complete and expects to finish by mid-September. The project suffered a major set-back when a very large section of the partially completed roof was blown off by strong winds on Easter Day. Fortunately, no one was injured and the contractor has things rolling again.

•McBride Elementary. This school is undergoing a major renovation (both interior and exterior) Because of the extent of the work, classes have been held for much of this year in temporary trailer units installed adjacent to the school building. This $1.3 million project is 91 percent complete. Students and parents can expect to occupy the renovated facility when school starts in August. The work has included a new roof, all new electrical services and lighting, new heating and cooling, new plumbing. Completely reworked classrooms, and painting and carpeting. In effect, the students will enjoy a new school within the original structure.

•Faith Middle School. Two new instructional wings (composed of seven new classrooms and one specially constructed multi-media classroom) are being added to this school at a cost of about $952,000. This project will eliminate the need for portable classrooms. The contractor has faced a number of unforeseen challenges including weather delays, differing site conditions and labor difficulties. As a result the contract is behind schedule. The original intent was to have this project completed by the start of the next school year; while this remains the contractor's goal, the job may well not be finished until the later part of September. The Fort Benning schools superintendent, Dr. Dell McMullen and the Faith School staff look forward to the increased availability of technology and additional space for educational programs when the new additions are available for occupancy.

If you have questions or topics that you would like to be addressed in the DPW "Information Cormer," please contact Glenn Todd, DPW Customer Relations Specialist, 545-2117, or write to the Directorate of Public Works, Building 6, Room 409 ATTN: ATZB-PW (Glenn Todd) Fort Benning, GA 31905.

FATHERS DAY

Dad's influence child's relationship with God

By Chaplain (Capt.) Terry W. Austin
USAIC Chaplains Office

We must be good fathers for our children because they see us as God. This may sound like a heretical statement, but I hope you will read on and see the message I am trying to communicate.

Children come into the world without the ability to walk, eat, talk, love or perform any other function necessary to survive. They pattern their lives after the environment they are in, the parents who rear them and other influences they come into contact with — friends, TV, music, etc.

But the primary influence on a child is the father. Children are dependent on their fathers in traditional ways like strength; character; and things men are usually identified with, such as tools, hunting and fishing. This is not to exclude women, but usually people think of men teaching their children how to do these things.

The scripture is filled with instruction to fathers on how to be good, successful and especially, godly fathers.

I believe every father wants to be a good father. I don't think that anybody wants to fail at anything, but it is especially true with teaching children.

It is possible to be a bad father. That is why I want to encourage you to be the very best father possible. This will not only make you a good father, but a successful father. When you succeed, your family succeeds. When you succeed, your children grow up as good, godly citizens.

Children develop their heavenly father's image from their earthly father. As you show love to your children, they understand how God loves them. As you show concern for the little things in their lives, they understand how God cares for the little things in their lives. As you show how to communicate with God through prayer and worship attendance, they also learn how to communicate.

In fact, the value you as a father put on your child's spiritual growth will teach him or her how important God must be in his or her life.

As a father, I assume this responsibility and I hope you do. If you do not, I hope you will think about it. There are many investments and important things in life, but none more worthy of our attention than our children.

In one way or another, men are role models to children we know or come in contact with. Let us leave them an impression so that when they pray, "Our father who art in heaven," they will visualize one who loves and cares for them.

God bless all fathers and the mates God has given to them in order to rear their children.

Marriage requires couple to develop communication skills

By Chaplain (Capt.) Tim Atkinson
203rd Forward Support Battalion

Someone once said that a marriage is a good conversation that lasts a lifetime. However, effective communication is not always easy.

Couples communicate, but not very well, since many have poor communication skills. The couple needs to learn how to share in ways that build the relationship up, rather than tear it down. With bad communication, feelings often get hurt, barriers go up and the relationship suffers.

A Soldier once told me that he and his wife never argue. I found that hard to believe, or thought that one partner was probably holding things back.

While people should not strive to be argumentative, couples do disagree. It is good to discuss, in a nonthreatening way, things that impact on each other. Sometimes it is not wise to discuss a hot topic, but the couple can agree upon a time and talk about it later.

One of the biggest keys to having a marriage that keeps on giving is learning to love our differences. If both partners were exactly the same, one would be unnecessary. In order to have intimacy, each partner must be able to be him or herself.

Have you ever met a person who got married thinking he or she could change his or her mate? This plan seldom works. The person trying to change the other usually becomes frustrated and the person who is the subject of change feels unloved and unappreciated.

Some of the biggest problems that inevitably arise are issues related to how each spouse was raised. Each partner brings their own family background into the marriage. Compromise and understanding are so important here. Couples must see hard work as necessary for a healthy relationship.

You can trust God to give you a loving, cooperative spirit toward your spouse. A willingness to compromise in order to meet a partner's needs comes from letting God's unselfish love control our lives. When an attitude of competition is prevalent in the marriage, the relationship will have problems.

The best way to look at competition is to see each other as being on the same team against the influences of Satan, who seeks to destroy marriages.

The godly kind of love that keeps couples from living selfishly is described in the Bible as follows:

"Love is patient and kind. Love is not jealous, it does not brag and it is not proud. Love is not selfish and does not get upset with others. Love does not count up wrongs that have been done. Love is not happy with evil but is happy with the truth. Love patiently accepts all things. It always trusts, always hopes and always remains strong. Love never ends (I Corinthians 13:4-8)."

I recommend that each partner study resources that will enhance their relationship. Many Christian books are available in the Main Post Library and at Christian bookstores, however, the Bible is the best marriage manual. The principles that make marriage work come from the Bible.

Unit chaplains can recommend some good resources of help. He or she is also a good resource.

For more specialized help, the Chaplain Family Life Center offers couples professional marriage counseling at no charge. Also, attending worship services regularly will strengthen the values that glue a couple together.

Like communication skills, skills to help a couple build intimacy can be learned.

One man told me he never saw his parents show affection and said that it was difficult for him to be affectionate with his wife. With encouragement, he learned to enjoy being affectionate and his relationship benefited from the nonsexual touching.

Many couples suffer because of a lack of intimacy. Sometimes, it's because of the stress of raising children, other times it's from financial pressures. Good memories can be built and intimacy can grow with such simple activities as taking a walk. The effort exerted on these little things pays tremendous benefits over time.

For those who are contemplating getting married, the best thing they can do for themselves is get premarital counseling. Studies have shown that couples who receive counseling are much more likely to succeed in marriage than those who do not. The post chaplains emphasize training in many areas of life, but in regard to marriage, training is not emphasized as much as it should be.

"For God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten son (John 3:16)." You will be able to give as God graces you with his power to make a difference in your marriage. As you allow Christ's love to flow through you, you can have a happy marriage that will last.

Grips & Grins

How do I get my photo on this page?

To meet customer needs and requests, The Bayonet added a Grips and Grins Page.

The newspaper receives many requests to run awards, promotions and other photos of this type, so the staff decided to designate a page just for that.

Because of downsizing and the frequency and number of the events that generally produce grip-and-grin type photos, the newspaper's policy remains that we will not send a reporter to take these type of photos, but we will run those submitted by our readers.

Photos you may submit include those from events such as balls, teas, coffees, club and organizational meetings and elections, award presentations, check presentations, official parties, dinners, dining events, dances and group photos.

If you have a good-quality, black and white or color photo of an awards or promotion ceremony, sporting team, social event, etc., send it to The Bayonet, Grips and Grins Page, U.S. Army Infantry Center Public Affairs Office, Infantry Hall, Room 606, Fort Benning, Ga., 31905. No Polaroid shots please.

TECHNOLOGY

Fort Benning tests new systems

Dov Schwartz

Pvt. 2 Joseph Rollins, Company C, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment demonstrates a prototype simulator used in recent Dismounted Warrior exercises.

By Dov Schwartz
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Technology developed by the entertainment industry and used in blockbuster movies like Batman and Aliens is being tested to see if it can be used in training dismounted Infantrymen.

Prototypes of the new systems were unveiled as a part of Dismounted Warrior Network exercises held at Fort Benning in late May and early June.

The exercises involved individual Soldiers being placed into four separate virtual reality simulators. The simulators were interconnected enabling the Soldiers to "see" each other in the virtual world and interact in the same virtual environment.

Each simulator tested advanced concepts in trying to make the Soldiers' experiences as lifelike as possible. .

In one simulator, an armed Soldier tethered to a treadmill is surrounded by four video screens, which display the other members of his squad.

In another simulator, a Soldier moves about freely as he sees the virtual world in a helmet-mounted display.

According to Traci Jones, an engineer at the U.S. Army Simulation, Training and Instrumentation Command (STRICOM), simulation technology has advanced to the level where a Soldier sees the simulated environment in real time, or at the same rate as he would see it in the real world.

Soldiers participating in the exercise said the simulation-produced images were lifelike.

"You can be shot at and killed on these things. It seems really real," said Pvt. 2 Joseph Rollins , Company C, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment.

Soldiers demonstrated hostage rescue and sniper search techniques in a virtual village based on the dimensions of a real village used for military operations on urbanized terrain (MOUT) located at Fort Benning.

While not replacing field training, Rollins said the opportunity to train with high-technology simulators has made him a better Soldier.

"The simulator shows you your mistakes and helps you put things in a better perspective for the field."

Virtual training has the additional advantages of time, cost savings and causing no damage to the environment, unlike field training.

In the virtual world, Soldiers can rehearse the tactics, techniques and procedures for a mission over and over by just restarting the program.

Operations requiring high explosives can be practiced and perfected in simulation, reducing the risk of damaging explosions.

According to officials at STRICOM, Army simulators have cut operating costs of expensive equipment like the Apache helicopter and the Bradley Fighting Vehicle by nearly 90 percent.

Jones said the Army hoped to reduce the cost of training the dismounted Infantryman by 25 percent within 10 years.

Simulators are the technology of tomorrow, according to John D. Galloway, chief of Dismounted Combat at the White Sands Missile Range.

Galloway said, "This is the first step to developing a holodeck," the futuristic chamber of the popular television program Star Trek: The Next Generation, where anything is possible.

Retired Soldier receives Doughboy Award

By Cpl. Marc G. Turchin
Bayonet staff writer

Every year the Infantry community presents the highest award an Infantryman can receive to a person who has served the Army and the Infantry to the best of his ability and has demonstrated the qualities of the highest standard. This year was no exception.

For only the second year, the Infantry's highest award went to an enlisted Soldier as well as an officer. This year's enlisted recipient of the Doughboy Award is retired Sgt. Maj. Frank C. Plass.

Plass received his award at the Infantry Ball June 11 at the Ironworks in downtown Columbus.

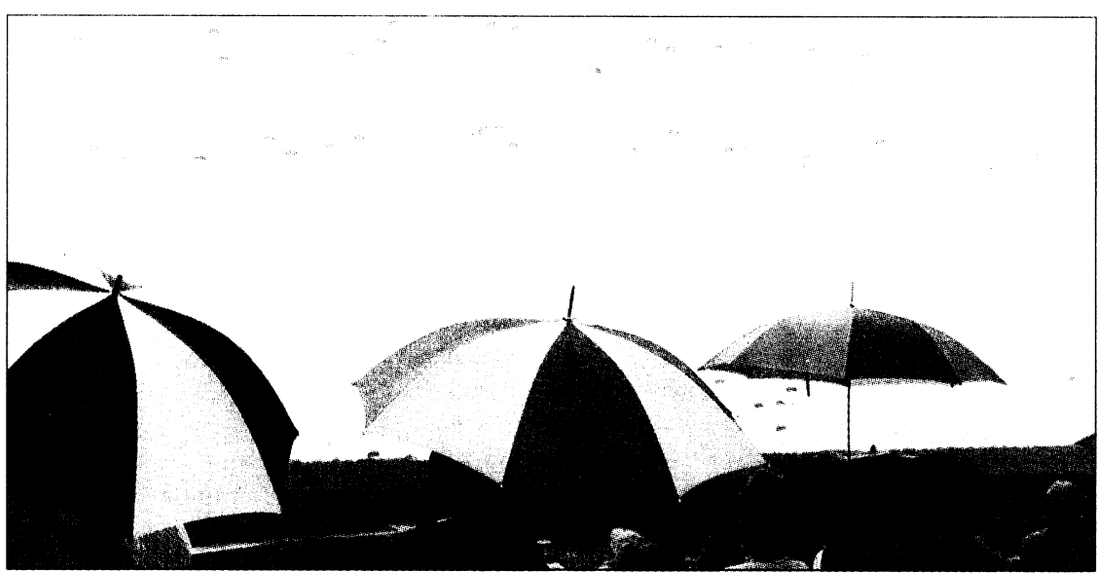
In front of most of the senior ranking leaders in the Infantry, Plass was awarded the Doughboy Award by Fort Benning's Commanding General Maj. Gen. Carl F. Ernst.

Plass said receiving the award was quite an honor.

"Receiving the Doughboy Award is an honor in itself, but receiving it from the chief of the Infantry — words can't explain it," Plass said.

He told the crowd how he wanted to join the Army but no slots were available, so he went to join the Marines. They told him he wasn't big enough to join and to come back after he grew up.

"Well, they made the choice for me," Plass said. "It was the right choice and I'm thankful for what I did."



Plass was awarded three Combat Infantryman Badges during his 33-year Army career. He was the sergeant major for six battalions, three brigades, two corps and the Infantry School.

Plass also received the Order of St. Maurice from the Infantryman's Association. Plass's wife Juliane was awarded the Shield of Sparta for her contributions in supporting Plass and her work with the Infantry community.

During a May 30 ceremony, the officer recipient of this year's Doughboy Award received his award. Retired Gen. William B. Rosson is this year's officer awardee.

Past winners include Bob Hope, Colin Powell, H. Ross Perot and Matthew B. Ridgway.

Last year was the first time the highest Infantryman's award was given to an enlisted Soldier. He was retired Sgt. Maj. Theodore L. Dobol.

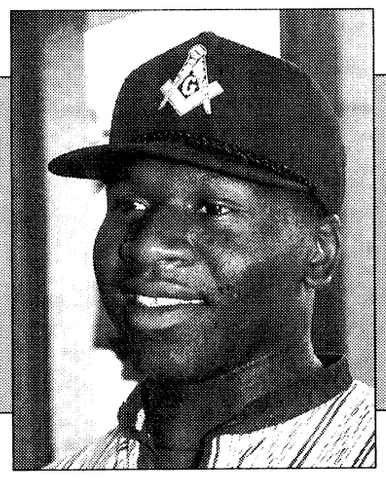
'Rain'gers

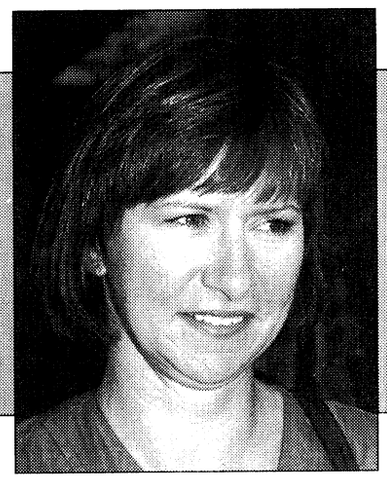
More than 1,500 rangers dropped onto Fryar Drop Zone during the mass tactical drop Tuesday. It was the first part of the annual three-day Ranger Rendezvous, which brings all three ranger battalions together on Fort Benning. During the rendezvous, rangers participate in events such as the ranger stakes, a Rangers-in-Action Demonstration and a regimental physical training formation. The events end today with the regimental change of command when Col. William J. Leszczynski Jr. relinquishes command of the regiment to Col. Stanley A. McChrystal.

VARIOUS VOICES

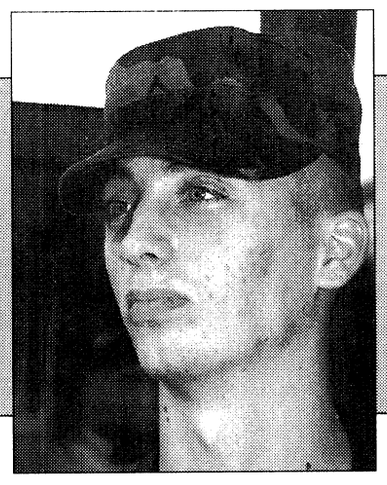
How could pet owners be more responsible about their animals?



Jennifer Willoughby, family member — "They should take them to the vet and love them."



Tara Cadogan, family member — "Pick up behind their animals. It's inconsiderate to the community when people let their animals leave their waste behind."



Hayley Heineken, family member — "They should take care of their animals. If they go away, they should arrange to have their pet looked after. Pets need three things — food, shelter and love."

Sgt. Marlon Knight, Company D, 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor Regiment, 3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division (Mechanized) — "Owners need to maintain discipline and keep their pets in good health. It's hot and humid here, so animals need water and shelter in a fenced in area."

Jamie VanPelt, Department of Defense employee — "Pet owners should keep their animals under control. Animals need to be neutered or spayed. They shouldn't get a pet if they can't afford to take care of it for its lifetime. Vets are expensive and pets need checkups."

Pvt. 2 John Gallucci, 30th Adjutant General (Reception) Battalion, Infantry Training Brigade — "Pet owners should keep their animals in fences and keep collars on them."

SELF-CONTROL

We're responsible for our actions

By Chaplain (Capt.) Garet Aldredge
1st Bn., 19th Inf. Regt., ITB

commentary

Pay attention. I am an expert. If you don't believe it, just ask my wife about the unfortunate incident involving the installation of the water heater tuner (also known as "The Third Battle of Armageddon").

You see, my expertise in the realm of self-control comes from repeated failure. The problem is I have a temper. The far larger problem is, once in a while, I let it fly.

Now, I reckon I could claim I am a poor, misunderstood victim of my upbringing, except that you and I both know that we could grow some high-quality roses in a mound of that sort of rationalization. Everybody seems to be a victim these days. Nobody is responsible for his or her actions. Wrong answer.

Every human being over the age of about 13 is more or less responsible. The 2-year-old child should be made accountable for 2-year-old things; for example, not spitting food in daddy's face during feeding time. The 5-year-old child should be made responsible for (among other things) refraining from beating up the cat and for keeping the walls of his or her room relatively crayon free. The 10-year-old child may be expected to sit quietly through chapel and to keep his or her room in good order. (Soldiers, this is not an excuse to white glove the kids or to put 100 mph tape over their loud little mouths. Be reasonable.

Teen-agers are responsible for their own lame-brained actions, the first time and every time. Adults: while I am concerned and sorrowful you might have had a less-than-ideal upbringing, it is time to get over it. There are lots of helping agencies around.

It's time to grow up and be responsible. You are only a victim if you let yourself be. The culture of victimization is merely an excuse for not exercising self-control.

One of these days, I have got to try this excuse: "I was only doing what comes naturally."

Scream at my wife? That's ok; I was only doing what comes naturally. Smack your husband along the back of the head with a 10-pound frying pan? "That's ok; he made me mad, and I was only doing what comes naturally." Messing around? "Well, you know, chaplain, it is instinctive, and I was only doing what comes naturally."

Doing what comes naturally is what a baby does before potty training. Growing up means putting away childish things. Growing up means exercising self-control.

I really love this one: "I've got my rights." You surely do. But first, we have our responsibilities. To carry out responsibilities means exercising self-control.

For example: Everyone has a right to listen to whatever kind of music he or she wants. A self-controlled driver has a responsibility not to share it with every living soul within 1000 meters of the car.

I am sorry that you spent $1000 on an automobile sound system that can cause a nosebleed in an earthworm and now you don't get to use it because you might disturb your neighbors. That is the price of responsibility. That is the cost of self-control.

I am sorry that a responsible person will not use obscenities in the presence of other gentlemen, ladies or children. But that, too, is the price of self-control.

We live in an uncivilized world. Common kindness and courtesy seems, except in the most blissful of circles, to be a thing of the past. What a shame on each of us. Manners grease the gears of a successful society. Manners are the mark of a person possessed of self-control.

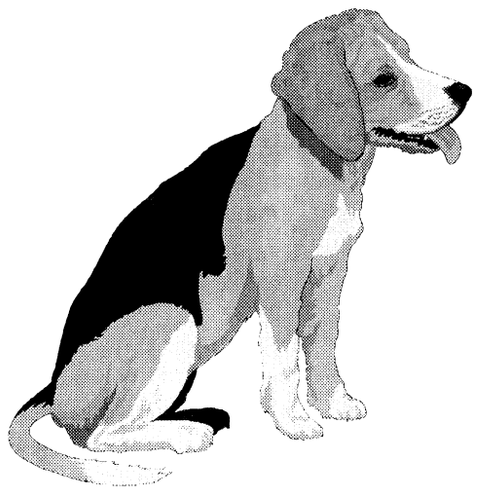
Self-control does not come easily. This, I think, is especially true for those of us not raised in it or encouraged to it. But, if we hope for our civilization to survive, we must each be a part of a rebirth of it.

Ponder what you do before you do it. Always ask if what you propose would be pleasing to God. I don't think you will ever go far wrong doing that. Teach your children those things that are good, proper and righteous. Self-control, as an adult, most often indicates healthy discipline as a child.

Proverbs 29:11 teaches us: "A fool gives full vent to his anger, but a wise man keeps himself under control."

Being a "victim" is a poor excuse. "Doing what comes naturally" doesn't even work for our pet cats. Why should it work for us?

Braying about one's "rights" while failing to put responsibilities first doesn't make a person any less foolish. The only way is self-control.



I have one last warning. We will never get it completely right; at least not in this life. But the God who gives us the strength to persevere and overcome is also the God who loves us enough to cover our sins.

If we give him control over our lives, then self-control is that much easier because we find, suddenly and happily, that we are doing what is right and righteous; not for our own purposes but, rather, for him and his plan for our lives.

Raising a puppy is big responsibility, rewarding

commentary

Owning a puppy can be rewarding, but it's a lifetime commitment.

I didn't just jump into puppyhood. I thought long and hard before getting Sweet Pea and I don't regret it a bit. She's the cutest little English springer spaniel. One look at her, and I knew she was coming home with me.

I'm no expert yet, but there are a few things I've learned since owning Sweet Pea. Turn on lights before walking into a room, for instance. That way you see the surprise before stepping on it. Also, puppy-proof your home. Anything that might be tempting, is tempting. Things like electrical cords are instant bait for puppies. Tie cords out of reach. Then survey for other objects that need to be put up. Think like a puppy when you do this. You'd be surprised at what they chew.

Shortly after Sweet Pea's arrival, I found what looked like a small porcelain cap in my living room. Fairly certain she didn't bring it with her, I scoured the house to find it's rightful place. Three days later when scrubbing the bathroom floor, I found it. The bolt under the commode was missing — you guessed it, a small porcelain cap.

Fortunately I have a small pup. I heard about this owner of a Rottweiler who lost his bicycle, umbrella and lawnmower to his dog.

Generally, dogs chew on your stuff because they don't have their own. One solution is rawhide chews. Sweet Pea's preference is the sticks, but chews come in all shapes and sizes. Puppies need a few other essentials, too, such as a food and water bowl, a bed (a bean bag chair is great), a leash, a good supply of toys and a collar.

I bought Sweet Pea a small elastic collar with a bell on it, so I know where she is at all times. When I don't hear it, I go check.

Puppies need constant supervision. If it gets too quiet, be suspicious. I always feel a little foolish sneaking around the corner to spy on her only to have those innocent eyes staring up at me. I've caught her red-handed, though, and it's usually because I left something within sight.

Remember, what's left in view is a temptation. When possible, offer a toy or rawhide instead. Rawhides make puppies thirsty, though, which leads to my next point.

Everyone knows dogs don't come housebroken. But just when is this supposed to happen? Have patience, I was told. I thought I had a slow learner on my hands until a friend told me puppies aren't housebroken in a week. Worse than that, it could take months. I know this is a hard lesson for Sweet Pea, but it's hard on me too.

It takes training and lots of patience. Training is the tricky part. There are a lot of self-proclaimed experts out there who say spanking or yelling is the only way to make a point. I believe a firm, "No!" gets the same results.

I use puppy psychology, which means giving positive reinforcement and praise when she gets it right. Discipline is up to the individual, but remember — you're dealing with a puppy full of curiosity, energy and, not to mention, puppy chow.

The best advice I can give is to do a little research before getting a puppy. Be sure it's not just a passing fancy. A friend of mine, who now has three puppies, read dog care books to her 5-year-old at bedtime before taking that big step.

Puppies need time and attention and love. If that kind of devotion is a problem, don't get a puppy. It is a commitment, but it's rewarding.

I remind myself of that every time I step on a wet spot.

National Infantry Museum receives donation

Frank Hanner displays some of the uniforms donated to the National Infantry Museum.

By Elizabeth E. LaMonica
Special to The Bayonet

Each year the National Infantry Museum provides a link with the U.S. Infantry's historic past to thousands of visitors to Fort Benning.

Dedicated to collecting, documenting and displaying the objects that reflect the more than two centuries of the U.S. Infantry Branch and Fort Benning, the museum recently received a gift of assorted military objects.

Maj. Steve Russell, former executive officer of the Infantry School, donated 155 items pertaining to military history to the National Infantry Museum June 5.

"We get donations quite often, but not of this quality and quantity," said Frank Hanner, museum director. "This is a unique collection of military artifacts. Major Russell was on the post as a young lieutenant and was interested in the museum even then. He's done artwork for the museum and he's done other things over the years to help us out."

Russell said his interest in collecting military things started when he was 10 years old and his friend's mother gave him some items.

"She was an antique dealer and a school teacher," Russell said. "She would give me and old helmet or a canteen. I was fascinated by that because I loved military things. I was fascinated you could actually collect that kind of thing."

> "We're constantly trying to upgrade our collection and thanks to Major Russell, we were able to do that."
> — Frank Hanner
> Museum director

The current donation features items from as early as the Spanish-American War in 1898, World Wars I and II, the Cold War and the more recent Gulf War, and includes uniforms, helmets, mess kits, equipment, posters and other items as well.

"As time goes on, we'll need these things to interpret the Cold War and its aftermath," Hanner said. "I just can't say enough about how good it is to have these things. We're constantly trying to upgrade our collection and thanks to Major Russell, we were able to do that."

Russell offered the museum its choice of items from his 24-year collection.

"I've had great enjoyment out of it," he said. "I've got memories of a lot of it. I've taken a lot of pictures of it. I think I just got to the point when I knew the museum would enjoy the stuff and everyone else would enjoy it as well.

"I also came to the realization that you can't take any of this stuff with you, so why not put it somewhere of my own choosing? Plus, I love the National Infantry Museum. It exists because of people's generosity."

"We have objects from every major time period in U.S. Infantry history," Hanner said, "from colonial and revolutionary times through Desert Shield and Storm. We have some objects from Somalia and are working on getting items from Bosnia and Macedonia."

Hanner said he wants today's Soldiers to realize they're a part of history.

"We have young troops going through training here at Fort Benning," he said. "It's a hard time in their lives. They come to the museum and realize this has been going on for two centuries of American history and realize they're a part of this history, that this is their history of their profession.

"That's what we're here for — to be an institutional memory, a place where the future meets the past."

PATHFINDER

Soldiers lead the way to safe landing strips

Photos by Sgt. Michael Sparks

A member of the Pathfinder School cadre inspects the helmet of one of the students prior to boarding a UH-60 helicopter.

By Sgt. Michael Sparks
Fort Bragg, N.C.

One of the many lessons learned from the rescue of Capt. Scott O'Grady, who was shot down over Bosnia, is the need for trained men on the ground to verify a landing zone is secure and without obstacles. This should be someone who can control the landing flight of a helicopter, touch down quickly, not linger and get out of the open danger area where he or she are vulnerable to enemy fire. These are the Soldiers who are trained at the U.S. Army Pathfinder School.

Pathfinders were created during World War II. Airborne units were dropped into the island of Sicily but were scattered so badly because the inexperienced pilots flying the C-47s, they couldn't locate the drop zones in the dark. Shortly thereafter, Gen. James M. Gavin, 82nd Airborne Division commander, selected a small group of elite paratroopers from the 504th and 505th Parachute Infantry regiments to jump in to mark the drop zones with coded lights and guide troop-carrying aircraft by radio beacons.

U.S. Army pathfinders are trained and qualified at their school and at the myriad drop and landing zones of Fort Benning. Created after the war, by veterans of the WWII pathfinder jumps into Normandy, Pathfinder School serves as the focal point for pathfinders old and new.

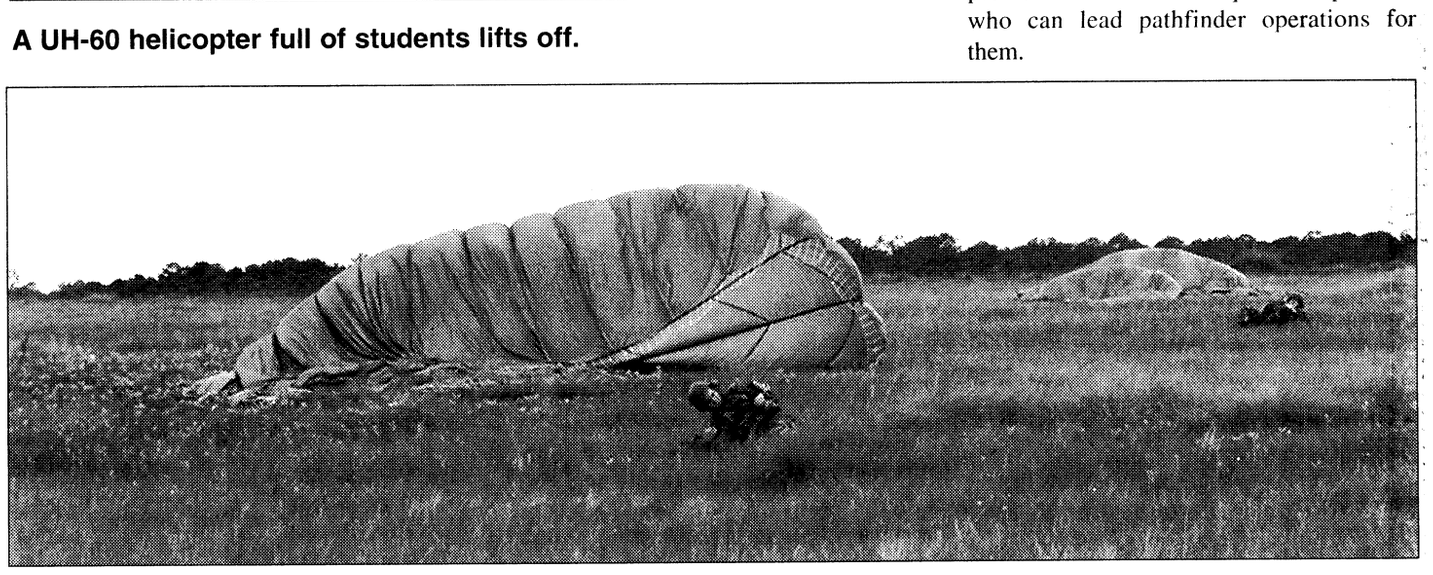
Pathfinder School is three weeks long, beginning with helicopter sling-loading procedures and culminating in a hands-on test inspecting helicopter external sling-loads for rigging errors.

Those that pass the test successfully on the sling-loads then prepare to move out to the field to set up a helicopter landing site (HLS); first led by the cadre, then by the students. The small pathfinder class of about 40 to 50 Soldiers is broken down into two sections of 20 to 25 students led by three instructors per section. After the hands-on practice in the field, the students take a written test on HLS procedures.

"The sling-load test was a scorcher. Fortunately, I had already been through Air Assault School so I was already familiar with sling-loads, so I passed with a first-time 'go,'" said Anthony Campos, an air assault and rappel master qualified expert medic, 928th Aeromedical Evacuation (Air Ambulance).

The next day's classes focus on survey, marking and control of drop zones and wind measurements. After being trained in aircraft and air traffic control procedures, the pathfinder students go to Fryer Drop Zone to control an actual drop of paratroopers under close cadre supervision. Pathfinder students who are airborne qualified go through jump refresher training and jump with the cadre to provide paratroops for their classmates on the ground to control.

Once students who jumped turn in their air items, they practice paratrooper release procedures using the Verbally Initiated Release System or (VIRS). VIRS is primarily used for placing small units into very small drop zones. Pathfinder students learn the mathematical formulas necessary to determine the exact placement of markers on the ground so paratroopers or equipment bundles descend to the correct spot on large drop zones for the Ground Marked Release System.



Next, the class assembles into a jumping order and flies out to a fixed landing site for survey and marking for a two-day tactical field exercise.

The students sling-load and hook up a high-mobility, multi-wheeled vehicle; a water buffalo; ammo boxes in cargo netting; a fuel canister; and field expedient loads for CH-47D Chinook helicopters during the day and night. The actual helicopter route and air movement and loading tables are planned by students acting as a 12-man team led by a student team leader and assistant team leader.

After the final examination covering all areas, those that pass are awarded the "Flaming Torch" badge of the U.S. Army pathfinder. These Soldiers and members of other services then go back to their units and provide them at least one qualified specialist who can lead pathfinder operations for them.

A UH-60 helicopter full of students lifts off.

Students shed their parachutes and prepare to perform their mission.

news from the front

By Chief Warrant Officer Roger Brown
498th Medical Company (Air Ambulance)

The weather has drastically changed from the cold and snow to being very hot. Life for the crews in Bosnia, Croatia and Hungary has not changed much from the last report.

They did, however, get very involved in providing medical evacuation support for a Norwegian Mass Casualty Exercise (MASCAL) that was centered at the Finnish Battalion Headquarters. The exercise took place in the city of Doboj, Bosnia, which has been a hot spot in recent months

Additionally, the 498th participated in a Danish MEDEVAC exercise and was rewarded by the Danish Command with the opportunity for our command to actually drive a Leopard II Tank.

For the computer folks, members of the 498th Maintenance Platoon have established their own web site home page on the Internet. They currently have multiple pictures taken in and around the Blue Factory's main area in Bosnia displayed at the site. With future plans to send the digital camera out to the forward support teams in Hungary and Croatia, the web page should grow with new and interesting sites from the Balkans. The address is: http://members.aol.com/bigjcraig/498th.html

On the home front, the families have been very gracious in taking advantage of the recent post-wide spring yard sale. Children's clothes and games were both purchased and donated by families throughout Fort Benning. These gifts of caring are being sent forward to the 498th in Bosnia in support of the orphans most recently sponsored by the unit.

This will be an ongoing effort and anyone wishing to donate items like these may contact the rear detachment at 545-1040 or 545-9261.

6th RTB gets new commander

By Cpl. Marc G. Turchin
Bayonet staff writer

The Florida swamps have a legacy of their own. The particular swamps around Eglin Air Force Base have their own story. A history of training, heroism and, of course, death. But as with everything, change soon takes place.

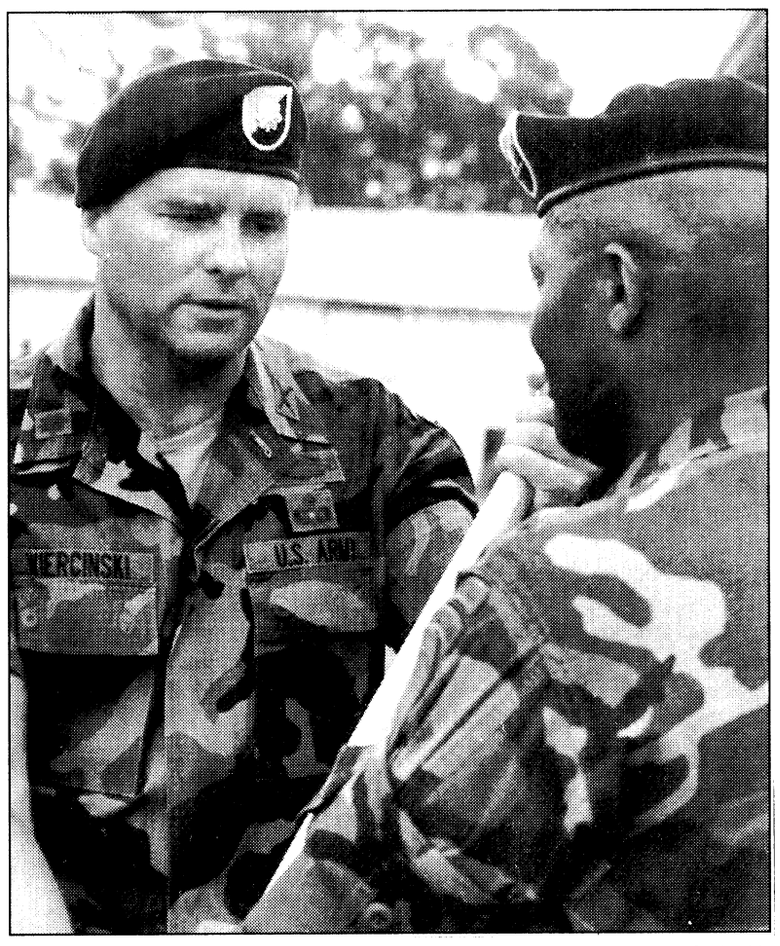
The 6th Ranger Training Battalion is now under new leadership following a change of command ceremony Tuesday.

With rain threatening throughout the ceremony, Lt. Col. Francis J. Wiercinski relinquished command of the battalion to Lt. Col.William G. Kidd.

Kidd comes to the battalion after serving as the policy staff officer, Supreme Headquarters, Allied Powers Europe, Casteau, Belgium.

Kidd said commanding Soldiers is a privilege and an honor.

"Commanding American Soldiers is the highest honor for a U.S. Army officer. Commanding rangers is the stuff dreams are made of," Kidd said.



Kidd later said the ranger community on the base is just as important.

"I"m totally committed to this battalion, our mission, your welfare and your family's welfare," Kidd said.

Before Kidd spoke, Wiercinski said his goodbyes to the battalion's Soldiers and civilians. It turned out to be a tearful one for the outgoing commander.

With a choked-up voice and his emotion spilling into his words, Wiercinski thanked his command group.

"(Major) General Ernst and (Brigadier) General Wodjakowski, thank you for your trust and confidence for letting me command and giving me guidance, leadership and direction. Thanks for making this what it's supposed to be — Ranger School — the premiere combat leadership school in the Army," he said. "I will remember the both of you the rest of my life."

Cpl. Marc G. Turchin

Lt. Col. Francis J. Wiercinski gives the battalion colors to Col. Dorian Anderson, commander of the Ranger Training Brigade.

Wiercinski went on to talk about the cadre members of the battalion. He said he'd never seen such outstanding Soldiers.

"They are all ranger qualified and they are the greatest the Army has," Wiercinski said. "I am astounded at the quality of the junior leadership in our Army. It is the best I have ever seen. All you have to do is ask for a mission and it is accomplished."

Wiercinski moves on to the U.S. Army War College.

Objective aids job search

Army Career and Alumni Program

When the job search process begins, it should do so with either a general or specific job objective, according to Carl F. Hopp, Army Career and Alumni Program advisor.

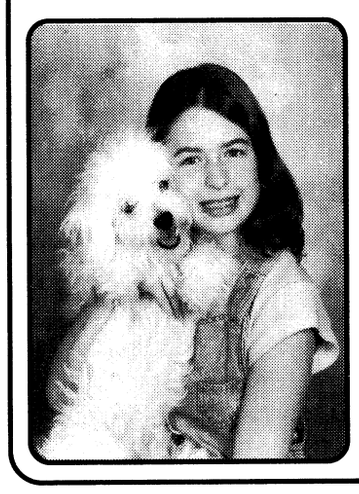
All too often, those entering the job search process at Fort Benning say their job objective is simply to get a job after they leave the Army. While that is a step in the right direction, it will usually result in getting a job that does not match one's interests, does not pay as well as one would like and will probably only last for a relatively short period of time, Hopp said.

Therefore, getting the job of choice requires several steps that will hopefully allow an individual the opportunity to select a job objective that will bring satisfaction and personal rewards.

According to Frank Casey, a counselor at the Job Assistance Center, the first step in establishing a job objective is to make a list of former jobs and identify the duties, equipment used, other skills used and the specific achievements obtained in each position.

The second step involves making a list of technical skills and a list of those things that one would consider to be most important in selecting the next job. Those things could be location, creativity or working conditions.

The third step involves doing an analysis of this information and researching job titles that match your skills and experience. By the time the third step is completed, a more clear understanding of one's job objective should occur, and that understanding should be accompanied by reasons that support the choices being made.



Casey recommends the information be documented on paper and others be involved who can assist in the decision process or provide additional information about the job one has chosen as his or her objective. Without a doubt, Casey stated, it is important to get the assistance of others because they can help a person in conducting a reality check of his or her job objective.

On the other hand, the reality check may show one has excellent employment opportunities, salary requirements will be met and the job will make use of skills and experience, provide personal satisfaction and enjoyment on a daily basis.

Finally, Casey stated that transitioning Soldiers and civilian employees and their family members can get help in selecting their job objective by visiting the Job Assistance Center where detailed information is available on all career fields.

832nd National Guard unit supports Fort Benning

By Elizabeth E. LaMonica
Special to The Bayonet©

Sometimes units deploy to Bosnia leaving a position critical to the function of Fort Benning empty.

This National Guard unit operates out of West Bend, Wis., and is 101 Soldiers strong with 13 aircraft. The 832nd received its selective presidential call-up around Jan. 25 and had people on the ground here within 11 days. Their mission cannot exceed 270 days and will end near Oct. 26.

The company's primary responsibility is to provide Fort Benning with medical evacuation support and military assistance to safety and traffic missions. This unit is also providing medevac site support at Fort Stewart, according to Maj. Gregory Frings, company commander.

"What we've really done is come in and backfilled for the 498th that has gone to Bosnia," Frings said. "We were originally selected to go to Bosnia, but they needed a UH-60 ('Blackhawk') medevac company, so the 498th was selected."

The 832nd flies UH-1s ("Hueys") and replacement and repair parts for the Hueys would not be readily available in Bosnia. Of the 19 National Guard air ambulance units, the Wisconsin unit was chosen based on its external evaluations and unit status reports.

"This is good for us," Frings said. "The 832nd comes in here and shows the active duty Soldiers that we are alive and well. We're ready on short notice and we do a good job with our mission."

While it fulfills its mission, the 832nd can also utilize some of the benefits Fort Benning has to offer. Several of the Soldiers have been sent to schools and have brought credit to the unit, according to Frings. He also plans for all of his Soldiers to become range qualified and for 100 percent of his air crews to become both night vision goggle and hoist qualified and current.

"We are making maximum effective use of all the training assets that are here that we wouldn't normally be exposed to," Frings said.

Frings admits he's hoping his company's performance will draw attention to its need for Blackhawks and upgraded equipment.

Difficulties exist, however, as the 832nd learns to cope with active duty life and the absence of loved ones.

"Some of these people have spent 25 years in the National Guard," Frings said. "Although their military bearing and training is very good, the day-to-day Army life took a little getting used to."

One of these men is 1st Sgt. Francis Gengler. He joined the Guard when he turned 21 and has devoted 33 years to its service.

"I can count on one hand the number of drills I missed for personal reasons," said Gengler, who planned his own wedding around Guard drills. "It becomes a part of you so much that you don't want to leave."

Gengler has served with the company since it formed. He has deployed in 30-day training exercises, but never before has he been activated or been called away for this length of time.

"This exposure is great," Gengler said, "but it's been hard for some families. Some Soldiers had to close their businesses when we were activated."

Frings also noted that while many of the Soldiers took a "shot in the pocket book" to come on active duty, other hardships existed.

"The most difficult thing has nothing to do with the mission," Frings said. "It's the separation from our families. But we have it much easier than the Soldiers in the 498th. We can pick up the phone any time and the families can come down and visit."

The Soldiers have also taken the opportunity to make their surroundings look a little more like home. Banners commemorating the Green Bay Packer's recent Super Bowl win are proudly displayed in the hangar. The Packer G also appears on walls and was even painted on one of the ground handling motorized tugs.

"It's an excellent unit with great esprit de corps," Frings said. "We had a very cohesive unit to begin with and I think this has proven and solidified that fact."

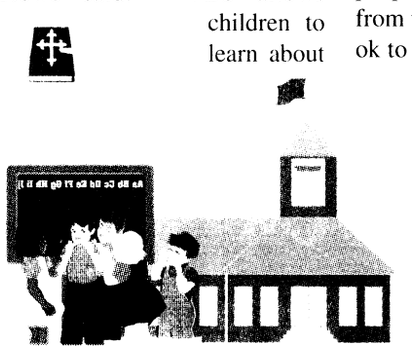
Post children participate, study religion at



Vacation Bible School

By Spc. Lisa M. Hibbert
Bayonet staff writer

More than 180 Fort Benning children participated in this year's Vacation Bible School (VBS) conducted at White Elementary School and concluding today.

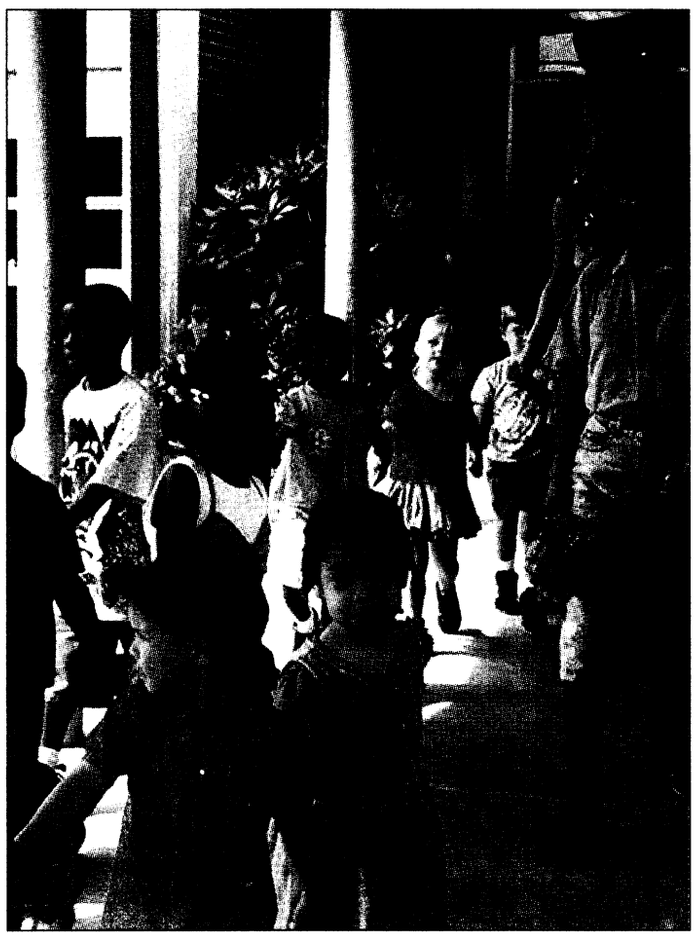
Run by the staff of the Religious Education Center's (REC), Vacation Bible School provides children ages 4 through junior high school the opportunity to learn more about God, said Cackie Howe, director of VBS.

"Children are not always exposed to church at home," Howe said. "VBS allows children to learn about the Gospel. Even though parents take their children to church and to Sunday School, the more you expose your children to God, the more it will help them form their own opinions about God."

One of the students who has already formed her own opinion about God learned people are not always receptive to talking about religion.

"I really like coming to VBS because I can talk about God," said eighth-grader Sarah Davis, daughter of Diane and Lt. Col. Addison Davis. "When you talk about religion at school, some of the kids get upset when people say something different from what they believe. But it's ok to talk about God here."

Although the children talk about God, no emphasis is placed on converting the children to a particular religion.



"We're not trying to make a Jewish child into a Presbyterian or a Catholic child into a Protestant," said Bill Putnam, director of the REC. "It's just important for children to learn about the Bible and we teach them about it in a nondenominational setting."

Through group discussions, song, arts and crafts and recreation activities, the children are not only being taught about the Bible, but how to interact with others on a level they can understand.

"Sometimes in church, I don't understand what the minister is talking about," said eighth-grader Jason Striebeck, son of family member Cindy Hayden. "At VBS, I can learn about God and have fun."

VBS is a free activity and is totally dependent upon volunteer support. All of the 35 teachers and 30 helpers are volunteers.

Post chaplains are available to handle any questions or concerns that may arise and the teachers are not comfortable with handling, but are not teaching the classes.

One of the volunteers is Fern Henderson who said she feels compelled to work with VBS.

"I feel it's necessary to help young people and to teach them about God," Henderson said.

Abuse prevention: Teach children how to protect themselves from becoming victims of sex crimes

By Lisa Edwards
Army News Service

No parent wants to hear the words which I so vividly remember saying to my mother when I was 7 years old, "Mom, I have to tell you something."

My mother laughed and said, "Oh, God, what did you do now?" probably thinking I had just embarrassed myself at school again.

"Mom, I'm serious. I need to talk to you," I said with my head down and my eyes full of tears.

I knew she had no idea what I was about to tell her — I had hid it so well for so long. I had protected my baby sitter's husband who had molested me.

Why would anyone do that, you ask? No one had ever talked to me about sexual abuse, and I did not understand what had happened. I had really liked this guy before the incident occurred. He had been my friend and I didn't want to get him in trouble. I also didn't know how wrong it was, except for the funny feeling I got in my stomach whenever I thought about him after that day.

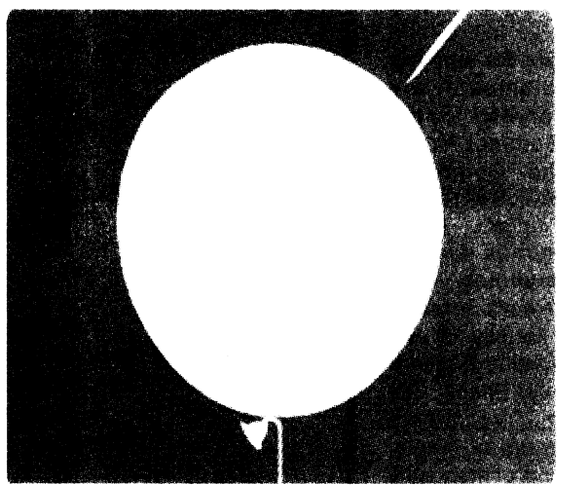
I was one of the lucky ones, though.

Mine was a minor incident which never occurred again. Some kids aren't so lucky.

There are a few basic principles parents must understand to teach their children skills which can help protect them from this kind of abuse.

The first is that their bodies belong to them — that they have a right to say who can touch them, where and how. They need to feel comfortable with speaking up and saying no if someone touches them in any way that makes them feel uncomfortable (this will help protect them from both sexual abuse and physical abuse).

A good way to explain feeling "uncomfortable" to a child is that it is a funny feeling inside, a feeling that something is just not right. Let them know that no one should make them feel uncomfortable by touching any part of their body that their bathing suit would cover (a two-piece for girls and swimming trunks for boys).



It is important that they know that if someone ever does touch them there, then it is something you need to know about, even if it is supposed to be a "secret." Yes, children need to be able to speak up to anyone — including Dad, Mom, siblings, baby-sitters, teachers, scout leaders, Sunday School teachers and any other relative, friend, neighbor, etc.

Most cases of abuse are perpetrated by an adult the child knows and trusts. It is usually a relative, family friend or another adult whom the parents also trust. Teaching children to be assertive does not "spoil" them, it empowers them to protect themselves from being mistreated.

The second principle of abuse protection is teaching them what to do if someone does touch them in a way that makes them feel uncomfortable.

They need to be able to look that person straight in the eye with confidence and tell him or her, "No, I don't like that," and then try to get away. This shows the abuser the child is not going to just sit there and take the abuse. If the person does not stop the touching after the child says no, then the child needs to say, "I'm going to tell if you don't stop that." Then the abuser knows this is not the child to mess with — this child knows what to do.

Ask the children who they would tell if this happened to them. Help them list all the people they could tell — parents, siblings, friends, teachers, doctors, nurses, etc. They need to know to keep telling until someone listens to them and helps them. Children also need to know if they are touched in a way they don't like, it is not their fault — they did not ask for this person to touch them that way, nor did they do anything to deserve it.

The third principle is role-playing.

Children learn by doing. The "What if ..." game is an important part of teaching kids ways they can help defend themselves from harm. After teaching them when they should speak up and how, have them ask you "What if ..." questions.

Kids love to ask questions like "What if I couldn't get away?" Let them ask as many questions as they want, and ask them to try to answer their own questions before you help them out.

Then you can test them by giving example situations and asking what they would do. You could ask, "What if you were at the baby sitter's house, and she kept hugging you really tight, and it really made you feel yucky inside?" Then role-play the situations with them over and over again. Make sure they understand that you are pretending, and give them big sloppy kisses and bear hugs.

Teach them to react by looking you in the eye, telling you no (like they mean it), and getting away from you. Give them every possible situation you can think of. It is not necessary to scare them to get the point across. Just use hugs, squeezes, a peck on the cheek, etc. and have them pretend they're feeling uncomfortable.

Children actually love this "What if ..." game; they enjoy showing they know what to do. Have them do it over and over until they get it right. This role-playing is probably the only thing that will really stick in the minds of young children and help them in the event of someone mistreating them.

When role-playing, try to incorporate the tricks abusers often use to gain children's favor and trust.

Ken Wooden, author of "Child Lures: A Guide to Prevent Abduction" lists the common lures.

Conditional love is one, for example. "Oh, come on. Don't you love me? How can I love you if you won't even let me touch you?"

A stranger may trick a child easily by asking for help, "Can you help me? My puppy ran away ... I need you to come help me catch him." Another possible lure is using authority, "Alex, I am your coach. You have to do what I tell you, or else you won't be on the team."

Bribing with rewards such as candy, money, or toys is another common lure. I was offered a quarter.

To lure a child into pornography, an adult may promise fame, "Trust me, beautiful, if you'll just put this on and do what I say, you'll be famous." Other child lures are fun and games. "Do you want to play a fun new game with me?" Older children may even be offered employment in exchange for sexual favors. Abusers can also use threats, "If you tell anyone about our little game, you will be in big trouble!"

Children are also easily confused by the old stand-by "Jamie, get in the car! Your mommy has been in a bad accident and daddy sent me to bring you to the hospital!"

This is why you need to have a code word with your kids. Then if this was a real situation, the family friend could say the code word, and the child would know that it was all right to go with them. It is important to stress with kids that only the parents and the children can know the code word, and that the parent will only tell someone who is picking up the child in an emergency.

The code word will need to be changed if it is ever revealed to anyone else.

The last principle of abuse protection is teaching children how to act around strangers.

Kids are very confused about what the word stranger means. They often do not understand they need to be just as careful around strangers who are nice, or pretty, or who know their name, or who they have seen before. A stranger is simply someone who they don't know well; they can't tell a good stranger from a bad stranger.

Teach kids to drop what they're doing and stand up when a stranger comes into the yard or playground, and to always stay out of reach of any stranger. Also, teach them not to talk to strangers, not to go anywhere with strangers (unless the code word is used), and never to take anything from a stranger (then the child would be within an arm's reach).

Again, stress the importance of listening to that funny feeling inside to get away from a stranger if something doesn't seem right. Children should not try to help a stranger who claims to need their help; the stranger needs to find another adult to help.

Teach your children that they are responsible for keeping themselves safe when you cannot be with them. Kids also need to understand that they are never responsible for an adult mistreating them.

These basic principles of abuse prevention are recommended for teaching preschool through third-grade children, but are important for children of all ages to know. The most important rule about teaching children these skills is to be open and honest with them, without frightening them.

These teaching methods have been proven to change children's behavior, so that it is natural for them to protect themselves from abuse situations before the abuse occurs.

As with anything, these ideas and skills need to be reinforced to the children continually after the initial lessons, so that they are not forgotten.

Device May Increase Gas Mileage by 22%

BOSTON - National Fuelsaver Corp. of Boston has developed a low cost automotive accessory called the Platinum Gasaver which is guaranteed to increase gas mileage by 22% while meeting all federal and state emission standards.

With a simple connection to a vacuum line, the Gasaver adds microscopic quantities of platinum to the air-fuel mixture entering the engine.

Platinum has the unique ability to make non-burning fuel burn. With platinum in the flame zone, you increase the percentage of fuel burning in the engine from 68% to 90%.

Normally that additional 22% of the fuel would only burn when it came in contact with the platinum surfaces of the catalytic converter.

Unfortunately, the converter process takes place outside of the engine, where the energy produced cannot be harnessed to drive the vehicle.

But with platinum in the combustion chambers, 22% more of each gallon burns inside the engine so that 22% fewer gallons are required to drive the same distance.

After studying this process for five years, the government concluded: "Independent testing shows greater fuel savings with the Gasaver than the 22% claimed by the developer."

In addition to government confirmation of its fuel saving claims, the Gasaver has received patents for raising gasoline octane, and has been approved for reducing emissions to acceptable levels.

Joel Robinson, the developer, commented: "We've been selling Gasavers for a great many years. To our surprise, as many people buy the Gasaver because it extends engine life (by cleaning out the abrasive carbon deposits) as buy it to increase gas mileage."

Military entertains at Soldier Show

Army News Service

ALEXANDRIA, Va. — They're "On the Road Again." "They" being the 28-member cast, crew and drivers of the U.S. Army Soldier Show headed out on their 1997 road tour. The show will be 7 p.m. July 5 at the Sand Hill theater.

In its 14th year, the 80-minute fast-paced, high-energy musical review will play 44 stateside Army installations as well as Japan, Okinawa and Korea. An Army Morale, Welfare and Recreation activity produced by the U.S. Army Community and Family Support Center Entertainment Division, the show opened in May with three performances at Fort Belvoir, Va., playing to packed houses.

The show is sponsored by the Veterans of Foreign Wars and United Services Planning Association Inc. and Independent Research Agency (USPA and IRA), a financial planning and insurance company serving the military.

Each year, the new cast knows it has several traditions to uphold. First and foremost, they carry on the tradition of Soldiers entertaining Soldiers, established by Sgt. Irving Berlin during World War I.

"I think it's one of the highest callings: to be able to use your talent to entertain Soldiers around the world. That's as good as it gets," said vocalist Sgt. Trevor Liverpool, a combat medical specialist stationed at Fort Polk, La.

The second tradition is one of artistic excellence. The Soldiers who survive two sets of auditions (one videotaped and one live) have just six weeks to bond, work and sweat, becoming a team that will live and perform together day in, day out, traveling more than 50,000 miles over land and by air.

Those weeks are filled with learning music (more than 100 songs) and dance routines, aerobic workouts and intensive rehearsals under the tutelage of choreographer Ken Robertson and musical director Dennis Buck — both award-winning, well-respected names in the Broadway show business.

Artistic director Ron Smith is a former Soldier and Soldier Show veteran. He designs the show's theme, selects the songs and orchestrates every aspect of the production.

"We've subtitled this year's show, 'We Shall be Free,'" said Smith. "It's built around the theme of freedom and a promise that the United States Army is performing its mission at home and abroad in the hope all mankind will enjoy freedom," he explained.

Built into the show is a wide variety of music. From a tribute to Tina Turner to country hits by Garth Brooks, Broadway tunes, pop chart-toppers, a special children's segment and a patriotic finale, the show is guaranteed to elicit laughter, cheers and tears.

The third tradition Soldier Show performers carry on is representing the U.S. Army. After each performance, the cast members march off the stage to the front of the theater where they meet and greet the audience.

This year's performers come from six major Army commands and serve in 19 military occupational specialties from Infantry to counter-intelligence, with jobs ranging from armor tank crew to veterinary food inspector. Upon selection to the show, they are assigned to the U.S. Army Community and Family Support Center for 179 days where they report to a unit first sergeant who travels on the road with them.

Despite their different backgrounds, these Soldiers all have one thing in common: a love for performing and the desire share to that love with their fellow Soldiers.

In order to ensure continued Tricare Prime coverage, it is vitally important that Tricare Prime members respond immediately to the letter they will receive from Humana Military Healthcare Services.

Tricare Prime members will receive their re-enrollment notification letter approximately 45 days prior to the end of their first full year of Tricare Prime enrollment. Even if Tricare Prime members do not owe any enrollment fees or need to make any changes to their family's enrollment information, they must respond to this letter to ensure continued coverage for the coming year.

Members who do not respond will be disenrolled and health-care coverage will revert to the higher cost share of the Tricare Standard or Extra plans.

Here's how the process works:

1. Members receive a notification letter approximately 45 days prior to the end of the current enrollment period. The letter offers the opportunity to update family information, as well as to pay any applicable annual or quarterly enrollment fees.

A copy of the current enrollment information will be included with the letter. The letter will indicate the specific date the response is due.

Members are asked to verify their existing record and respond immediately using an enclosed envelope.

2. Upon receipt of the member's correspondence, Humana Military Healthcare Services will promptly update records and process any applicable payments to ensure uninterrupted Tricare Prime coverage.

Beneficiaries may continue to use their current, unexpired Tricare Prime identification cards, as new cards will not be issued.

It is essential to the re-enrollment process that members keep their address record current with Humana Military Healthcare Services throughout the year.

For further information about this process, additional renewal sheets or assistance at any time throughout the year concerning Tricare Prime enrollment, call (800) 444-5445 or visit the local Tricare Service Center, Building 9204, Room 104 (next to Martin Army Community Hospital).

SUNSCREEN

Protect skin from damage

University of Georgia

Medical experts now believe that too much exposure to the sun as a child and teenager is a major cause of skin cancer and premature skin aging.

Regular sun exposure throughout the year also contributes to long-term skin damage. Tanning is a sign of skin damage.

Take the following steps provided by medical experts to protect your child's skin from damage:

•Use waterproof or water resistant sunscreens that help to protect skin from both UVA and UVB rays and have a sun protection factor (SPF) number of at least 15.

•Apply sunscreen liberally about 30 minutes before going outside. Reapply after swimming or after perspiring heavily.

•Talk with camp counselors and others who have child-care responsibilities about applying and reapplying sunscreens on your child.

No sunscreen totally blocks the sun's rays, so to help protect children from the sun, keep in mind the following:

•When scheduling children's outdoor activities, remember the sun is strongest from 10 a.m. to 3 p.m.

•Dress children for sun protection: hats with brims, long sleeves and long pants offer the best protection.

•Sunglasses can help protect children's eyes. Select sunglasses that help to screen out both UVA and UVB rays and are close-fitting to the face with larger lenses.

Who's at risk

Medical experts warn some teen-agers are more at risk than others. These experts offer the following tips:

•Teen-agers who work as lifeguards, gardeners or construction workers are at special risk .

•Discourage teen-agers from going to tanning parlors which can damage skin and eyes as much as the direct sunlight.

•Keep babies younger than 6 months out of the sun. Sunscreens may irritate a baby's skin and his or her developing eyes are especially vulnerable to sunlight.

One of the most time-consuming tasks in environmental management for military and civilian activities is the turn in of hazardous or non-hazardous waste.

During the staff assistance visits by members of the Environmental Quality Control Committee (EQCC) and the courtesy inspections conducted by the hazardous waste program managers, this a topic that always comes up.

The Environmental Programs Management Branch works to find solutions to the problems encountered by units and activities regarding turn in of hazardous waste. They have made a lot of progress in the last few months.

Fort Benning was chosen by the Army Environmental Center (AEC) as one of the test sites for the implementation of a Hazardous Material Control Center (HMCC). This opened the door for funding and implementation assistance from AEC.

The Training and Doctrine Command endorsed the concept of a HMCC at Fort Benning and is offering its assistance. Because of all the support available from these agencies, the opening of the HMCC is on the horizon.

The HMCC will operate with both a supply function and a waste function. The intent is to reduce the amount of excess hazardous material throughout the installation and thus, reduce the amount of hazardous waste generated.

There will be a system for turn in of excess material, which will allow another activity to have access to that material at no charge. For example, units will be able to bring in partial cans of paint or excess paint, which will then be made available to anyone needing that type of paint.

The Directorate of Public Works and Directorate of Logistics have been working to iron out all the details for the start of the HMCC.

The HMCC, located on Main Post, will become the point for turn in of hazardous and non-hazardous wastes and excess material. The HMCC will accept all waste generated by units and activities, and the HMCC personnel will then complete the turn in documentation and actual turn in to the Defense Reutilization and Marketing Office.

The waste portion of the HMCC will be opened first since this is where the need seems to be critical, and units and activities will be phased in one at a time.

During the phase in of units and activities for waste turn in, the supply side of the HMCC will begin gearing up for its full operation. In the final version of the HMCC, 11 sites for essentially "one-stop shopping" for supply of hazardous materials and waste turn in will exist. This facility is scheduled to be open by October.

ask the judge

By 1st Lt. David Barrett
Office of the Staff Judge Advocate

Q. You have just received your monthly bills for the dentist, the car loan, MasterCard, VISA and Wal-Mart credit accounts and the compact disc club. How can you possibly pay off all these debts? Is bankruptcy an option? How does it work? What are the differences between chapters 7 and 13?

A. One of the most obvious reasons for filing bankruptcy is you have debts so great you may never be able to repay them in full.

Another reason is creditors are harassing you through phone calls, letters and threatening lawsuits, creating such anxiety that you are finding it difficult to perform your work. It can cause depression and marital difficulties.

These are legitimate reasons to file for bankruptcy as the policy behind the bankruptcy law is to provide individuals with a clean slate, free of the stress and depression that results from being only one step ahead of the debt collector. The filing of a bankruptcy will halt collections actions and creditors who attempt to collect debts may face contempt charges.

However, there are just as many reasons not to file. A bankruptcy filing is a federal court proceeding that will remain on your credit report for 10 years, prompting some to nickname it a "10-year mistake."

Some of your property may be sold by a bankruptcy trustee to satisfy your debts. Certain debts are non-dischargeable, including taxes, alimony, child support, government insured student loans and certain substantial purchases made just prior to filing.

Bankruptcy also requires full disclosure of all your financial affairs.

The bankruptcy filing fee is approximately $175 and attorney's fees can range from $350 to $1,000, depending on the complexity of your case.

There are two types of bankruptcy an individual may consider. A Chapter 7 bankruptcy will usually allow a debtor to discharge a large portion of their debt. Most of these cases are "no asset" cases.

In "no asset" cases, the trustee does not seize your exempt property and the case is over in a few months. However, in certain cases, a court-appointed trustee may sell certain items of your property to repay a portion of your debt.

A Chapter 13 case is a form of bankruptcy in which you attempt to repay a portion or all of your debt. If you have a regular monthly income, a bankruptcy judge may approve a plan in which you repay your debts over a three- to five-year period.

The decision to file for bankruptcy should be carefully considered. Speaking to an attorney or credit counselor is advisable. Before making a decision to file, alternatives should be considered. One of the services listed below can give you more guidance in making a decision.

The Army Community Service office provides debt counseling, debt liquidation, financial counseling, financial management and consumer education.

In the debt liquidation program, an ACS counselor sets up a payment plan between you and your creditors to assist you in getting out of debt. To learn more about the ACS' free services, call 545-4043.

The Family Center in Columbus provides the Consumer Credit Counseling Service (CCCS). This program provides credit education, budget planning and may be able to help reduce your monthly payments.

For more information on these services, contact the Family Center at 327-3239. Similar services are offered for no fee by Alternative Financial Resolutions who can be contacted at 323-2108.

If you should have any questions about the information provided, contact Legal Assistance at 545-3281 to set up an appointment with an attorney.

Believers need to learn where to find God

By Chaplain (Maj.) Stephen Fry
36th Engineer Group

Two men were walking down a lonely road. They were on their way home, but they were dreading every step of the seven miles.

You see, they were sad. They were seekers and hoped a mighty prophet would be the redeemer of Israel. But, alas, three days before, he was crucified.

Their whole conversation was monopolized by the events of the past few days. Jesus of Nazareth did so many great deeds, and all of the people were amazed at his words. He did only wonderful things, and yet, the chief priests and rulers sentenced him to be crucified.

If this man was not Messiah, how could they even hope for someone greater to deliver them?

They were so absorbed in their conversation that they hardly noticed the stranger approaching. As he joined them, he asked why they were so sad.

"Where have you been?" they asked. Surely he was the only one who hadn't heard about the crucifixion and the rumor that Jesus was alive. "But we did not see him," they said, returning to their sadness.

What a profound sorrow that kept them from recognizing who this stranger was, even when he began to explain to them how all of the Old Testament Scripture explained that Messiah was to suffer.

They were intrigued and asked him to stay, for they were still seekers. When Jesus took the bread, blessed it, and broke it, "their eyes were opened." Someone said they saw the nail marks in his hands.

Immediately, they turned back to Jerusalem, hurrying back the seven miles they just traveled. They found the disciples and excitedly related how they had seen the Lord. The seekers found him.

While they were still speaking, Jesus appeared, continuing to comfort, encourage and expound to them the Scriptures.

So why were these men going home in the first place? They didn't need to go, for apparently they were free to immediately return to Jerusalem.

They heard the testimony of the women and the disciples that Jesus was alive. But instead of checking it out, they became resigned to what they thought was final, and were content to talk about it on their way home to the old routine, away from the first-hand evidence. Perhaps if they had stayed with the disciples, they would have met Jesus even earlier.

Many are seekers today. Mankind seeks peace, truth and happiness. Many see the evidence all around, but it is still only hearsay to them, for they haven't seen Jesus either.

Still talking about it, they head down the road the wrong way, seeking through self-improvement, the newest "religion," philanthropic deeds or even a comet. But just as Jesus went out of the way to meet these men on the Emmaus road, Jesus will meet us where we are.

Even if we are slow to believe, he will patiently reveal himself to us.

Today's seekers need to look in the right places. God reveals himself through the Bible, and we can find teaching and encouragement through the churches that teach the Bible.

Are you a seeker? Be sure you're going down the road the right way.

Praise the Lord with words and song

By Chaplain (Capt.) Jose Resto
2nd Battalion, 54th Infantry

It is very nice to be able to worship God at the Infantry Training Brigade.

Attending chapel services is not a social event, not a routine activity, but rather a truthful recognition of our need to worship God through praising him.

There are many ways we can praise God. In our worship services, we praise God by singing. The hymnody is a special and important way that has been used, throughout history, to worship.

Our services should be a balance of hymns of praise and gospel songs. The hymns express humankind's praise and adoration of God.

Gospel songs speak of that which God has done for humankind in Jesus Christ. Such gospel songs as " Amazing Grace," "When I Serve the Wondrous Cross" and "Beneath the Cross of Jesus" declare the mighty acts of God in the human history.

We need to sing hymns to praise God. If we do not know how, we should learn, but praising him through singing is as important for our spirit as food is for our bodies.

Another way to praise God is by giving. "Ascribe to the Lord the glory due his name; bring an offering and come unto his courts (Psalms 96:6)."

Under the law, all Jews were required to give the tithe of all their possessions to God. The psalmist sees the grace of God at work in the lives of the people. The offering of which he spoke was that which is brought to God over and above the tithe.

Jesus taught that everyone needed to be good stewards of all God had entrusted into their care and to return a portion of that entrusted to their care.

In the Infantry Training Brigade, things do not change just because we have basic training Soldiers. Religion, God and giving is just like country, law, police and you. Just as you obey the speed limits whether the police are present or not, you should give whether you are or are not in your home-town church.

You can give through other means: mailing your tithes and offerings to your home church or donating money or gifts to needy institutions. There are many ways you can worship and praise God by giving.

One of the most important ways to worship God is through our relationships with others.

Out in the world, through your relations with others, is where you prove your Christianity.

The Apostle Paul's writing to the church at Rome states, "I appeal to you, brethren, by the mercies of God to present your bodies as a living sacrifice, holy and acceptable to God, which is your spiritual worship."

For Paul, the living out of one's faith in relationship to others was and is the true worship.

We have to remember the chief aim of the Christian church is to reconcile people to God. This was Christ's mission and it is the mission of the church today.

In our worship services, we praise God in many ways. Whatever we do to worship the Lord, let it not end at the end of the service.

Equal Opportunity Employer (800) 247-2862

Soldiers separating from the Army in the near future will have some excellent opportunities in January to discuss potential employment with civilian business recruiters. Getting "up close and personal"- with company reps visiting Fort Benning is a golden opportunity to learn about specific companies, occupation categories, career paths and employment outlook. Additionally, soldiers will find that they have the chance to compare their skills and experience with those sought by employers. To afford you this opportunity your ACAP Job Assistance Center (JAC) organizes Employer Days and Recruiters visit on a regular basis. If you are nearing an ETS date, call the ACAP office at 545-2308 for information on 1997's events. Tips For Job Seekers: When attending Employer Days, Job Fairs and Recruiters Visits at Fort Benning and elsewhere you should prepare yourself for a good first impression. At Fort Benning during duty: hours wear you newest, cleanest and best fitting duty uniform, spit shined shoes and be well groomed. At other locations or after duty hours wear appropriate civilian attire for the occupation you are considering. Be positive and polite in meeting and talking to employer reps. Introduce yourself and be prepared to ask question, such as, "How many employees do you hire annually?", or "What skills are you seeking in an employee?", or "Can you tell me about opportunities for future growth and advancement?", etc. Carry a notebook, folder or attache case and collect as much informational material and business cards as you can for reference and study. Your purpose is to gather information and ideas about a civilian career path you might follow. If you are --close to your ETS date you should have a resume with you and be prepared to leave a copy with employer representatives that are most promising. However, even if you don't have a resume you should attend and start to learn about the types of skills needed by each organization and for a specific occupation. The job search is so much easier if you know where you want to go! For more information, call your happy ACAP-JAC at 545-2308, or visit Bldg 2634 the next time you are in Soldiers' Plaza.

Family members compete in tournament

By Cpl. Marc G. Turchin
Bayonet staff writer

Golf tournaments come and go. There's the pro tour and then there's the tour that most enjoy — the 18-hole tour each golfer takes on their own.

For Soldiers and their family members, installation courses are where most golfers are found in their free time.

More than 30 years ago, a tournament was started to find out who were the best family members players in the military. Hence the name — the Military Dependent Championship Golf Tournament.

This year's tournament was conducted on post the first week in June. More than 150 family members, representing all five services, hit the greens on Fort Benning for both competition and camaraderie.

"It's great to be with the girls and see each other," said six-time tour veteran Flo Hogan, who represented the Army in the tournament. "It's a great five days."

For some of the women, this is the only chance to see one another during each year.

"It gives us a chance to reminisce," Hogan said. "I don't get to see some of them but once a year."

While the tournament is competitive, most are here just to enjoy themselves.

"The women in the championship flight are very competitive, but I'm just here to have fun," said Lorraine Richards, who also represented the Army.

Here are the top six finishers in each of the flight categories.

Army's 1996 football team could rank among the best

By Spc. Jim Fox
USMA Public Affairs

WEST POINT, N.Y. — The 1996 football season was a vindication of sorts for Army football coach Bob Sutton and his seniors.

Yes, Sutton did deserve a contract extension; in fact, he earned another.

Yes, the Army could and did deserve to be playing Division I football. Long gone are the whispers that academy football should drop down and play Division I-AA. The Army's performance and recent commitment to join Conference USA as a football-only member in 1998 attests to that.

The seniors from last fall's memorable season graduated last week.

Seventeen of 25 position and specialty players will leave us with memories of one of the greatest football seasons the storied banks of the Hudson have seen in 107 years of Army football.

The offense loses quarterback Ronnie McAda, tight end Ron Leshinski, half-backs Jeff Brizic and Rashad Hodge, center Kyle Scott, left guard Doug Chadwick, right tackle Rich Fredricks and split end Ron Thomas.

After three seasons as arguably the Army's best wishbone quarterback, McAda was selected in the seventh round of the National Football League's draft by the Super Bowl Champion Green Bay Packers as the 240th player taken overall. He will be forever known as Mr. Irrelevant 1997, the traditional label that goes to the last player taken in the draft.

Leshinski was considered, by many, to be Army's best draft prospect. He had been selected to play in the Blue-Gray and the Hula Bowl All-Star games. The four-year starter signed a free agent contract with the New Orleans Saints after being passed over in the seven-round draft.

Both players participated in their respective teams mini-camps during the final weekend in April, but each will comply with his five-year Army commitment.

The Black Knight's defense, which ranked sixth against the run and ninth overall nationally, will have to do without the services of eight starters: defensive tackle C.W. Estes; nose guard Colin Kearns; and defensive end Scott Eichelberger along with inside linebackers Ben Kotwica and Stephen King.

Cornerback Garland Gay graduates along with Tom Mullins and Donald Augustus, (who split time at the other corner position). Safety Jerrold Tyquiengco also leaves the veteran defensive unit.

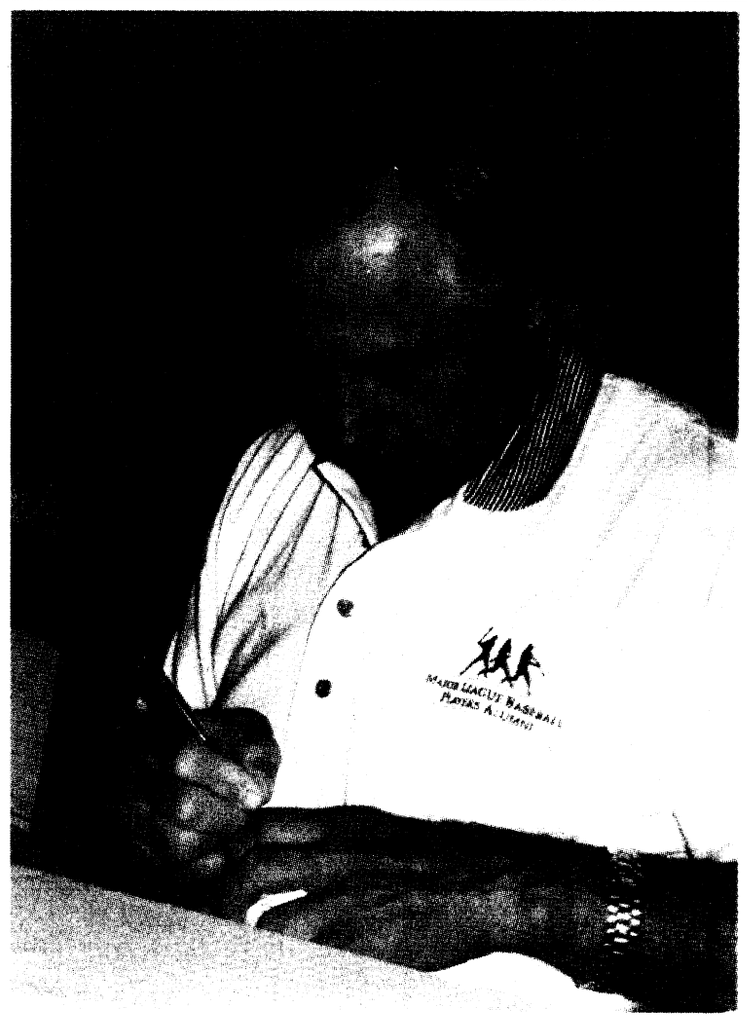
Place-kicker J. Parker and long-snapper Rob Rodenmayer's careers have also come to an end.

commentary

Other seniors leaving Army football are right tackle Tim Booth, quarterback Charles Kean, half-back Coby Short and defensive ends Hise Gibson and Tony Bianchi.

Eight of the seniors (Chadwick, Estes, Mullins, Kotwica, Kane, Eichelberger, Scott and King) will return in some capacity for the 1997 season as graduate assistants either at West Point or at the Prep School. They will live, for one more season, as part of Army football. It will be good for them, good for Army football, but it will not be the same.

The senior gridiron veterans of the 1996 season instilled a dedication to teamwork, encompassing all four classes that has helped lay the groundwork for a new era in Army football.



As Army joins Conference USA next season, it can finally play with a realistic chance for a bowl bid every year.

Conference USA offers many things that football independents outside of South Bend, Ind., don't have, like a television contract. After next season, Army football will be able to reach markets and potential recruits in parts of the country that had previously seen little of cadet football.

A 10-2 season with a national ranking, (24th USA Today, CNN Coaches Poll; 25th AP Poll), can do that. A nine-game winning streak to start the season and a much-needed home victory over the Air Force can make people believe.

A thrilling win over arch-rival Navy, for the fifth year in a row, to clinch the Commander-in-Chief's Trophy for the first time since 1988, can bring back pride and awaken memories of the past.

The class of 1997 football players join the Army as commissioned officers who have never tasted defeat at the hands of the midshipmen during their careers on the gridiron. They leave after avenging seven years of defeat against the Air Force.That's how it will be remembered. Thanks for the memories.

Cpl. Marc G. Turchin

Marksmanship Soldiers finish first in selection championships

By Paula J. Randall Pagán
USAMU Public Affairs Office

Shotgun shooters of the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit took the top slots in the World Championship Selection Matches conducted May 22 to June 1 at Fort Benning's Hook Range.

Outscoring 28 of the top skeet shooters in the United States, James T. Graves, a two-time Olympian, won the Skeet Match June 1 with a score of 193 points out of a possible 200 points.

Joseph D. Buffa, the 1996 National Skeet Champion, took second place with 191 points. Shawn C. Dulohery, a U.S. National Shooting Team member since 1991, came in third with 189 points.

"Training and a lot of practice is what won this match for me," Graves said.

Dulohery, Graves and Buffa will also make up the three-man U.S. Skeet Team, which will compete in the World Shotgun Championships in Lima, Peru, Nov. 8-16 and the Championships of the Americas in Buenos Aires, Argentina, Nov. 16-28.

Graves, who won the Gold Medal in Skeet in the World Cup in Nicosia, Cyprus, in April, said he feels confident going into the World Championships.

David R, Alcoriza, a member of the 1996 U.S. Olympic Shooting Team, won the Double Trap Match May 27 with a score of 187 points out of a possible 200 points, beating 41 of the country's best double trap shooters. Graves came in third with 178 points.

Matthew T. DePuydt, a 1995 Junior Olympic and World Championship Shotgun Team member, won a slot on the World Championship Junior Double Trap Team.

In the Trap Match, competing against 40 of the United States' best trap shooters, two-time Olympian Bret E. Erickson came in second to 1996 Olympic Silver Medalist Joshua Lakatos.

Joetta R. Novinski, the 1996 National Women's Trap and Double Trap Champion, made the World Championship Women's Trap Team along with Denise Morrison, an Army Reservist from Utah.

"The matches went the way I anticipated; we got everyone on the team that I expected would make it," USAMU Shotgun Team Coach Burl Branham said. "We hope we'll win some medals in the World Championships We're certainly capable of it."

State parks post fishing tournaments —

The arrival of spring means it is time to get out your favorite fishing pole and head to Georgia's state parks.

This year, the parks have planned a dozen fishing events where serious anglers can strut their stuff while beginning youngsters learn the basics. The tournaments are a great excuse for families to spend time together in the spring sunshine.

Most state parks have boat ramps and docks, and many rent boats and sell bait. For more information about a fishing tournament, call the host park.

Fishing tournaments are just some of the many events conducted by state parks and historic sites throughout the year.

All events are free and parking is $2.

Rangers remember comrades during rendezvous

Hundreds of rangers, family members and friends gathered at the Ranger Memorial June 19 to honor 14 rangers by inducting them into the Ranger Hall of Fame.

According to retired Gen. Wayne Downing, the ceremony recognizes the formal commitment of current-day rangers to recognize and uphold the traditions of courage, duty and honor — the ethos of the American ranger. Downing was the first commander of the regiment in 1984.

Dedicated to honoring and preserving the spirit and contributions of America's rangers, the Hall of Fame induction ceremony gives past and present rangers the chance to come together, learn from one another and discuss the legacy of ranger heroes.

"It's like a homecoming, seeing all these rangers," said Lt. Col. Al Dochnal, commander, 5th Ranger Training Brigade. "This event brings all rangers together, past and present."

The ceremony began with veterans of past ranger campaigns marching into the memorial area with their representative flags. The crowd cheered as each group was announced but quieted as people prepared to listen to the stories of the 14 inductees.

To be inducted into the Ranger Hall of Fame, candidates had to meet selection criteria and exhibit valor, extraordinary achievement or service.

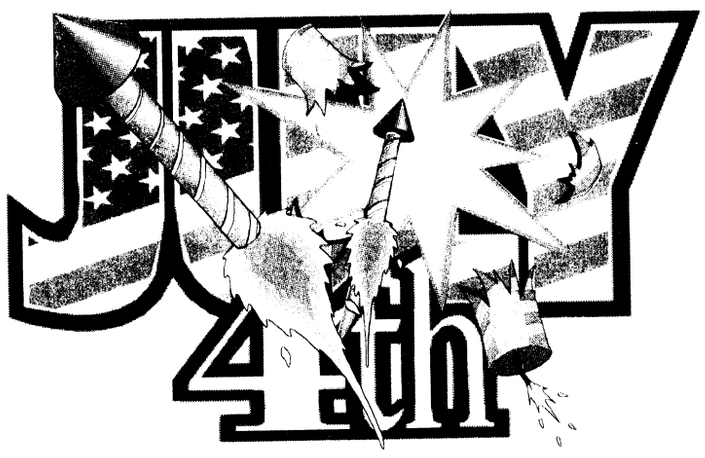
Don't let the 4th of July blow up in your face

By Jacqué Hill
Special to the Bayonet©

Fireworks are not only dangerous, they're illegal at Fort Benning.



Each year, several people in the tricommunity are injured because of their improper use of fireworks, according to Regis Beighley, Fort Benning safety manager. Fortunately, though, no one on the installation has been involved, he said.

"At Fort Benning, all handling of fireworks is done by professionals, so we've had no reported incidents," Beighley said.

The danger of fireworks is not always recognized by individuals using them, Beighley said, and is often extreme and even fatal in some cases.

"Fireworks are explosives and being so, if not handled properly, they can maim an individual," he said.

According to U.S. Army Infantry Center regulations, fireworks are prohibited on the installation. Sgt. 1st Class Mike E. Snapp, noncommissioned officer in charge of Military Police Investigations, explained some of the regulations regarding fireworks on post.

"Because fireworks are hazardous, their introduction, possession and use are prohibited on Fort Benning, except for authorized training and public displays," he said.

Georgia state laws also regulate the use of fireworks, Snapp said, noting that possession and manufacturing of fireworks is prohibited, except by those licensed by the state.

MPs will apprehend anyone caught using fireworks at Fort Benning, according to Snapp.

"If they are military personnel, they will be reported to their commanders," he said.

"It's up to those commanders what punishment service members will receive."

Snapp also explained that civilian offenders of the fireworks regulations and laws will be punished according to state guidelines.

Tricommunity members have several options for celebrating Independence Day.

"Besides the events on post, there will be a fireworks display at the Riverwalk in Columbus," he said. "The professional fireworks displays are much better than any done yourself, and they're much cheaper to enjoy."

Fort Benning's fireworks display takes place Thursday around dusk on York Field in front of Infantry Hall. Many other events are scheduled there throughout the day for community members to enjoy while celebrating Independence Day.

Sledgehammer Brigade changes command during Monday ceremony

By Staff Sgt. Robin A. Shawlinski
3rd Bde., 3rd Inf. Div. (Mech.)

The 3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division (Mechanized), received a new commander during a change of command ceremony Monday on Dickman Field.

During the ceremony, Col. Steven P. Schook relinquished command to Col. Jack Gardner.

Gardner, who comes to the Sledgehammer Brigade after recently completing a senior service college fellowship at Harvard University, is a native of Columbus, Ohio, and a 1976 graduate of the U.S. Military Academy. His troop assignments include rifle and scout platoon leader with the 82nd Airborne Division, company commander and battalion logistics officer with the 3rd Infantry Division (Mechanized) and battalion executive officer, plans officer and operation officer with the 9th Infantry Division.

His most recent assignments include command of a battalion and division operations officer with the 2nd Infantry Division in Korea.

Gardner has attended the Armor Officer Advanced Course and Command and General Staff College and holds a masters degree from Georgetown University.

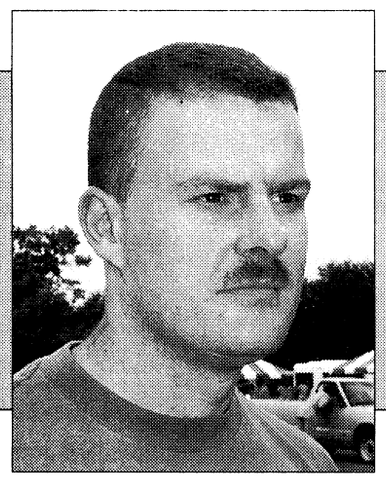
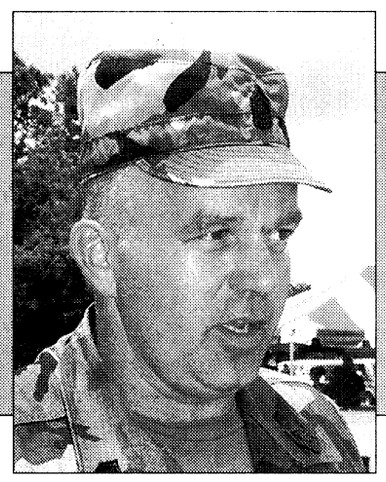
Because of the July 4 holiday, The Bayonet will be published Wednesday. Delivery will be in the afternoon. Look for the York Field activities schedule in that edition.

VARIOUS VOICES

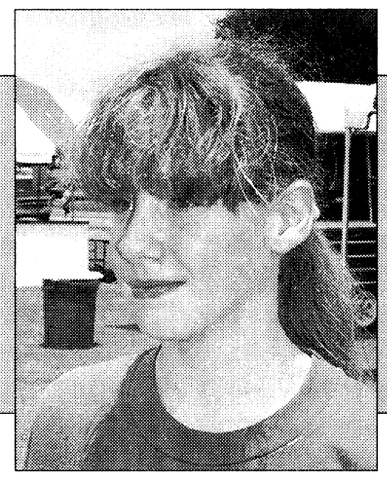


What is your greatest summer safety concern and why?

Staff Sgt. Michael Scaliatine, U.S. Army Infantry Center Military Police Company — "Children riding bicycles without helmets. I have four kids of my own and would hate to see them get hurt."



Command Sgt. Maj. Wayne Uhden, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment — "Soldiers taking part in activities should be smart and use the safety equipment that's supposed to be used with that activity."



Sgt. William Kline, U.S. Army Medical Department Activity — "Road safety — so many people will be traveling on the roads for vacations."

Frankie Perdue, family member — "Now that school's out, kids will be playing and need supervision or they might run out into the road."

Command Sgt. Maj. Lawrence Farrar, 2nd Battalion, 58th Infantry Regiment — "Don't give drown-proofing lip service. Make sure Soldiers can perform that task to standard. It could save their lives."

Shanna Brunaugh, family member — "Swimming — people could drown if they're not careful."

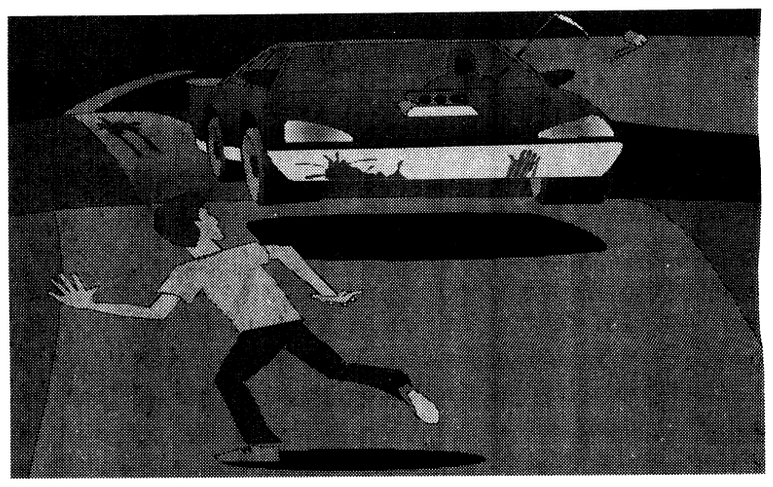
SUMMER SAFETY



Dangers should not be ignored

By Staff Sgt. Lori Egan
Bayonet staff writer

Staff Sgt. Lori Egan says people need to be aware of summertime dangers.

commentary

School's out and I hear more and more people yelling, "Slow down!" at cars (not the drivers because the windows are up and the air conditioner is on).

Yes summer has arrived. Children are playing in the sprinklers, squirting each other with gigantic water guns and trying to escape the bursting water balloons.

But when children are having fun, they often forget about safety. Most children know they shouldn't run out into the street. But they forget — that's why drivers need to take the responsibility to drive cautiously through residential areas.

Sometimes it is even a good idea to turn down the car stereo and the air conditioner so that you can hear the dad yelling at Jack and Jill to stop running for the ice cream truck.

I've watched cars pass the ice cream truck without even slowing down, and little kids meander across the street licking frozen treats without looking for cars.

Sure parents should watch their children all the time and teach them to cross the street safely, and drivers should take care around ice cream trucks — but we don't live in a perfect world. Accidents happen.

When I was in high school, I was riding my bike to a volleyball practice with five other girls and was hit by a car whose driver ran a red light. Luckily I wasn't badly hurt; but my new bike, the bike I saved two years for, was totalled.

The driver of the car and his wife were on vacation and not familiar with the area. He told the policeman he was looking for an ice cream store.

Needless to say, I believe ice cream in the summer is responsible for many accidents. Not! People not paying attention are responsible for accidents.

Summer is a time when people seem to let down their safety guards. Maybe the heat just saps common sense out of them.

I remember one summer when some friends went down to the river to swim and work on their tans. They forgot the sun block, laid on a dock all day long and came home with third degree burns. Not a pretty sight. They couldn't sit comfortably for several days.

Because of these incidents, I've deduced that summer heat fries brain cells, therefore I find it necessary to remind people to play it safe in the summer. Use common sense: watch for cars, slow down, use sun block, wear a bicycle helmet and life jacket, as necessary, and watch for kids chasing a ball into the street.

Commercials in theaters detract from enjoyment

By Spc. Brian R. Voller
Bayonet staff writer

Spc. Brian R. Voller says commercials in movie theaters are unnecessary and hurt the movie-going experience. He says they're unavoidable at home and now unavoidable in the theaters.

commentary

The other day I went to a movie. I've been writing movie reviews for The Bayonet for the past two years, so you could say I was working. While at the theater, a friend of mine brought something to my attention, he said someone needs to write an article about how annoying it is to see products advertised in movie theaters. I decided he was right.

I hate commercials in movie theaters. I hate them with a frothing, burning passion that makes me want to scream.

Why do I hate them so much? Because they're annoying. With their catchy jingles and their cute, overly attractive actors, they make me sick.

I used to go to the movies to see a movie. Now when I go, I have to sit through, no kidding, 20 minutes of previews and a commercial for Coca-Cola. The most recent commercial includes some idiot trying to draw the Shmoo. What does the Shmoo have to do with Coke? Nobody knows.

I guess the big reason why I hate seeing commercials at the movie theaters so much is because they're so unnecessary. I get bombarded with commercials all day long when I watch television, listen to the radio or read a magazine. I feel like the movie theater is almost a sacred place undisturbed by the evils of modern advertising. Well no more, we've been invaded.

What's really sad is the commercials we have to sit through in the theater are there for one reason and one reason only — the theater sells Coca-Cola products. I'd like to let the movie theaters and Coca-Cola in on a little secret. If I'm going to buy something at the food counter, I buy it before I get into the theater. If I want a bladder-bursting, super-sized drink, that for some reason I get free refills of, I buy it before I get comfortable, not because the Shmoo wants me to buy it.

This brings me to another point — when did the movies themselves become giant celluloid billboards? If you look really closely at the movies, or sometimes you don't have to look very hard at all, you will see blatant advertising. Watch when a person picks up a phone in a movie. Notice the little AT&T sticker on the bottom of it? Or pay attention to the vehicles the characters drive. Do you think it's an accident that James Bond drives a BMW? But if you really want to have fun, watch Superman II. The film's climax has more advertising than action, it borders on funny.

If you really think about it, though, it's not funny. It's sad. I don't think we as a society are so thick-headed that we need to be bombarded with images to get us to purchase products. I would actually think that eventually, this type of bombardment would cause a backlash, but apparently not.

I guess it's not so much that movie theaters are now showing commercials, I knew it was just a matter of time before that would happen. I think I'm more sick of the constant barrage of images that try to sell me things. Eventually, I'm going to have to lock myself in the closet and turn the lights out to avoid seeing a commercial. It's too bad. I'd probably end up humming the "Plop Plop Fizz Fizz" jingle.

Dial 545-BOSS is the commander's action line for Soldiers, family members and civilians to call when they have problems or complaints that can't be resolved elsewhere.

While it is not a substitute for the chain of command or for agencies established to provide assistance, the line offers another means of communication between Fort Benning's community and commanders.

The Bayonet features some of the calls that may benefit other members of the Fort Benning community.

Call: The caller suggested a 24-hour day care center be opened for use by parents who have to work 24-hour shifts or night shifts, such as military police, medical personnel, etc.

Directorate of Community Activities response: The Child Development Services coordinator explained that although the post does not have a center that is open 24 hours, there are certified family child care providers who provide 24-hour care. This installation does not have a 24-hour facility because there has not been a documented need for one. The caller was also provided with the name of a center off post which provides 24-hour care.

Reader asks pet owners to be responsible, safe

My 7-year-old daughter's Sunday afternoon at the playground was recently shattered when a 100-pound Rottweiler jumped the fence of an adjacent backyard and attacked her.

Fortunately there were many adults in the area who quickly notified the dog's owner, my daughter's mother, the military police and emergency medical services personnel. Thanks to their quick thinking, the physical damage was kept to a minimum. That's the good news.

The rest of the story is not so good; when is this going to stop?

I'm not "anti-dog" at all, but if you choose to own a pet that's bred to attack, then please, take the proper and required precautions and be a responsible owner.

The incident involving my daughter could have ended much worse, and all the excuses and apologies in the world would not have made a difference. Let's not wait until a child is mauled to death by one of these dogs to take action.

I was surprised to hear when the owners of the dog took it to the veterinarian clinic on post, the staff refused to destroy it because they determined it was docile at the time.

If you can't positively control your Rottweiler, then consider another type of pet, especially if you live next to a playground. If you reside in post housing and are aware of any aggressive dogs that seem to get loose a lot, please don't hesitate to give the MPs a call, in the name of public safety.

75th Ranger Regt receives new boss

By Elizabeth E. LaMonica
Special to The Bayonet©

The 75th Ranger Regiment passed into the hands of its 10th commander at a change of command ceremony June 20.

Hundreds of spectators attended the York Field ceremony where Col. Stanley A. McChrystal assumed command from Col. William J. Leszczynski Jr., who served as the regimental commander during the past two years.

"I've been very lucky," Leszczynski said. "I've had a tremendously supportive wife and family, great bosses, great contemporaries and, most importantly, I've had the absolute best people working for me. Any success I'm fortunate enough to enjoy, I clearly owe to them."

Lt. Gen. Peter Schoomaker, commander, U.S. Army Special Operations Command, praised the regiment's performance and Leszczynski's positive influence on the 75th during his remarks.

"The list of Ranger Regiment accomplishments during the tenure of Colonel Leszczynski is truly impressive," he said. "As a leader, a manager and a man of vision, he has honed the regiment's combat edge."

Schoomaker then welcomed McChrystal and his wife Anne back to the regiment and said he was confident in their abilities to carry on the legacies of the preceding colonels.

"I cannot think of a finer officer to take this command," he said.

McChrystal's previous commands include the 2nd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment, which ended in June 1996. He recently completed a Senior Service College fellowship at the Harvard University's JFK School of Government at Cambridge, Mass.

The 75th Ranger Regiment changes command during a ceremony on York Field.

During his remarks, McChrystal offered thanks to the rangers of the regiment, both past and present, who make being back such an honor.

Leszczynski's next assignment will be Verona, Italy, but he referred to his time here as "the best time of my life.

"I wish I could turn back the clock and start over," Leszczynski said. "I've been fortunate. Some people never meet a real hero in their whole life. I was surrounded by heroes, 2,364 of them."

Soldiers Magazine offers contest

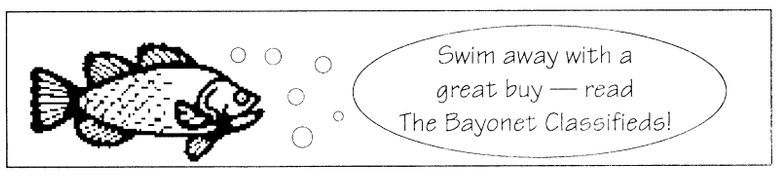
Soldiers Magazine

The staff at Soldiers Magazine wants you, your family and friends to be a part of their hottest issue of the year.

In January, they will publish their annual Almanac edition, which is loaded with facts, figures and photos about the Army, for the Army. A large portion of that issue is dedicated to the "This Is Our Army" photo feature — that's where they need your help.

If you have a good photo that shows the Army family at work or play, Soldiers Magazine wants to see it. You don't have to be a professional photographer, you don't even have to be in the Army. Just mail your best photos before Aug. 15.

Basically, there's only one rule — all photos must have been taken between Sept. 1, 1996, and July 31, 1997.



Color slides are preferred, but color or black and white prints are acceptable. Fancy 8x10 glossy photos aren't necessary — the standard machine print will do. On the back of each photo, include photographer's name, phone number and address. Also include some information about the photo like where and when it was taken and the full name and rank of those pictured. Photos and accompanying information can not be returned.

Need ideas of what Soldiers Magazine is looking for? Got a cool shot of Castles on the Rhine? Ever been shopping in Korea? Been on a training exercise in the jungles of Central America? Do you live in Japan? Do you have photos of the canals of Venice? How about a high school graduation ceremony oversees?

Nothing that exotic? That's OK, they want photos of all aspects of Army life. How about sending photos from the unit picnic? Do you have photos of a physical training test or unit fun run? How about sending in those photos of your unit softball team in the post championship game?

Send your best photos to:

RANGER RENDEZVOUS

75th Soldiers compete in Stakes

By Elizabeth E. LaMonica
Special to The Bayonet©

The Ranger Stakes, a competition consisting of nine events, took place at various sites around Fort Benning June 18.

Part of the 1997 Ranger Rendezvous, the Stakes offered Soldiers from each of the three Ranger Battalions and 75th Ranger Regiment Headquarters the chance to engage in some friendly competition.

The Stakes gave the incoming commander, Col. Stanley A. McChrystal, the opportunity to see how the units work together, according to Maj. Andy Lucas, U.S. Army Special Operations Corps.

"Mostly it's about bragging rights," Lucas said.

Competing rangers welcomed the opportunity to challenge the other battalions for those "bragging rights."

"Anytime we go to a squad competition, it builds camaraderie and helps teamwork," said Sgt. Mark Rohrbach, 2nd Bn., Fort Lewis, Wash.

Rangers competed in the following categories: Rucksack Relay, Ranger Physical Training Challenge, Fire Support Team Competition, Battalion Signal Competition, Squad Combat Biathlon, Squad Reaction Course, Orienteering, Ranger Skills Competition and Boxing.

"I think the Stakes accurately represent what we would be called to do," said Capt. Jim McNair, fire support officer, 2nd Bn.

Along with the physical competitions, the rangers tackled mental challenges in written tests designed to "evaluate technical and tactical proficiency," McNair said.

The Ranger Skills Competition confronted participants with timed challenges, including reassembling five disassembled weapons, building a demolitions timber cutting charge, tying various military knots, putting a radio into operation and other assorted events.

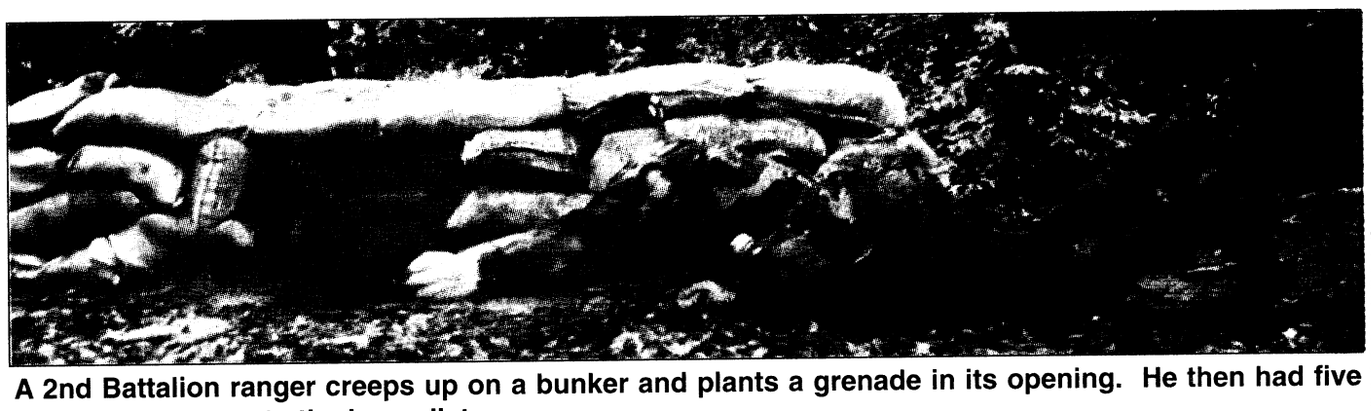
"Some rangers don't expect tying knots to be difficult," said Spc. Todd Kurth, 3rd Bn. "It is hard because it's timed, the rope can't be twisted and there are length allowances."

The heavy morning rain did little to dampen the spirits of the competing squads.

"It seems like every time we go to the field, it rains, so it's what we're used to," said Pfc. Jay Bogle, 3rd Bn., Fort Benning.

When the sun came out that afternoon, the rain was remembered for its benefits.

"It was nice and cool when it was raining," said 1st Lt. Greg Szczesny, 3rd Bn. "The rain leveled the competition."



Sgt. Aaron Brown, 3rd Bn., said although the rain slowed them down, the competition was "a good opportunity for squad leaders and team leaders to see how they react with Soldiers and to see how those Soldiers think things through."

"We don't always do these particular things during normal training," Brown said, "but (the course) interrelates with how squad leaders and their Soldiers work with each other during a mission."

Although competitors in the Ranger Stakes relished the rivalry between the battalions, they appreciated what the event accomplished.

"It doesn't matter who wins," said Sgt. Rob Phipps, 3rd Bn. "It's just good competition."

After the Stakes, rangers enjoyed the opportunity to socialize with friends they may not have seen since Ranger School at a barbecue. During the rest of the Ranger Rendezvous, rangers honored the Ranger Hall of Fame and distinguished and honorary members of the regiment inductees and participated in the 75th change of command ceremony.

A 2nd Battalion ranger creeps up on a bunker and plants a grenade in its opening. He then had five seconds to evacuate the immediate area.

Rangers from the 2nd Battalion attempt to assemble a shotgun. Each team had five minutes to put together five weapons.

IOBC students train for bayonet fighting

2nd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment

There I was, surrounded by the enemy, no weapon and no hope of survival. Battle worn and confused, I had only one thought in mind. Why is this man running at me with a five-foot long cotton swab? Then it hit me — right up side the head.

Company B, 2nd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment, Infantry Officer Basic Course, Class 4-97, recently completed training in bayonet and pugil stick fighting.

As well as learning the spirit of the mighty bayonet, these Soldiers learned how to thrust, slash, smash and butt stroke their opponent to oblivion.

The noncommissioned officer cadre of Co. B then led the lieutenants step by step through a variety of combination moves and blocking techniques.

With this new knowledge, students boldly looked forward to the next step of pugil stick fighting.

Paired up by size, clad in hockey-style protective equipment and armed with a five-foot pugil stick that seemed dipped in concrete, the lieutenants were given a chance to use their bayonet skills.

2nd Lt. Dan Kidd

Infantry Officer Basic Course students hammer each other with pugil sticks during bayonet training.

The NCOs turned from trainers to fight judges, blowing a whistle for every wounding strike.

"This is a good release," IOBC student 2nd Lt. Paul Schreifels said. "In addition to the good training, you can cut loose a little of your built-up frustrations."

Each platoon fought among themselves and picked a champion.

These champions were set in a circle of more than 100 ranting lunatics screaming for blood. After many rounds of blows to the head and body and much teeth-gnashing, 2nd Lt. John Ewert earned the title of Company Stick Champion.

At the end of the day, most students had a painful reminder of the valuable lessons they had learned about bayonet fighting and basic combatants.

news from the front

By Chief Warrant Officer 2 Nick Rud
498th Rear Detachment

Approaching the halfway point of their deployment, the 498th Medical Company (Air Ambulance), 36th Engineer Group (Combat), gears up for summer in the Balkans.

Luckily hostilities are tame in the region, so the medical evacuation (medevac) business is slow for now. That's the way our guys like it. This allows them to conduct more important training and fine-tune their expertise in the volleyball arena. They still haven't defeated the champion Norwegian team, but they're positive it's only a matter of time before they do.

Missed was the opportunity near Father's Day for deployed Soldiers to participate in an AT&T test period when spouses at home could look and talk via video conference to their deployed loved ones. Coordination had begun to schedule the link but was cancelled the next day. The program was reinitiated, but the 498th wasn't notified.

Hopefully, the next teleconference will be more widely publicized, and for now, e-mail is working well.

Back at Fort Benning, the Family Support Group is continuing their flurry of activities. This past weekend, the members held a bake sale to raise money for a getaway to Callaway Gardens or Underground Atlanta.

They're still collecting clothing and other items to send to the children in Bosnia the 498th "adopted."

In the works is the next scheduled Family Support Group meeting slated for Wednesday. Pictures and videos will be made to send to spouses and loved ones abroad. Games, crafts and activities will be provided for the children to enjoy.

Students complete defensive STX

By 2nd Lt. Dan Kidd
2nd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment

Company B, 2nd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment, Infantry Officer Basic Course, Class 4-97, recently completed its four-day Defense Situational Training Exercise.

During this exercise, the company was split and the students took part in the planning and implementation of both a light and mechanized platoon battle positions.

"A lot of planning and time management needs to go into the defense," 2nd Lt. Todd Lucas, a student in IOBC, said. "Time is your enemy."

With shovel and pick axe in hand, the Solders were given the opportunity to construct individual and two-man fighting positions with overhead cover. Implementing their newly learned engineering knowledge, wire obstacles and minefields were set in the roads and trip flares in the wood line.

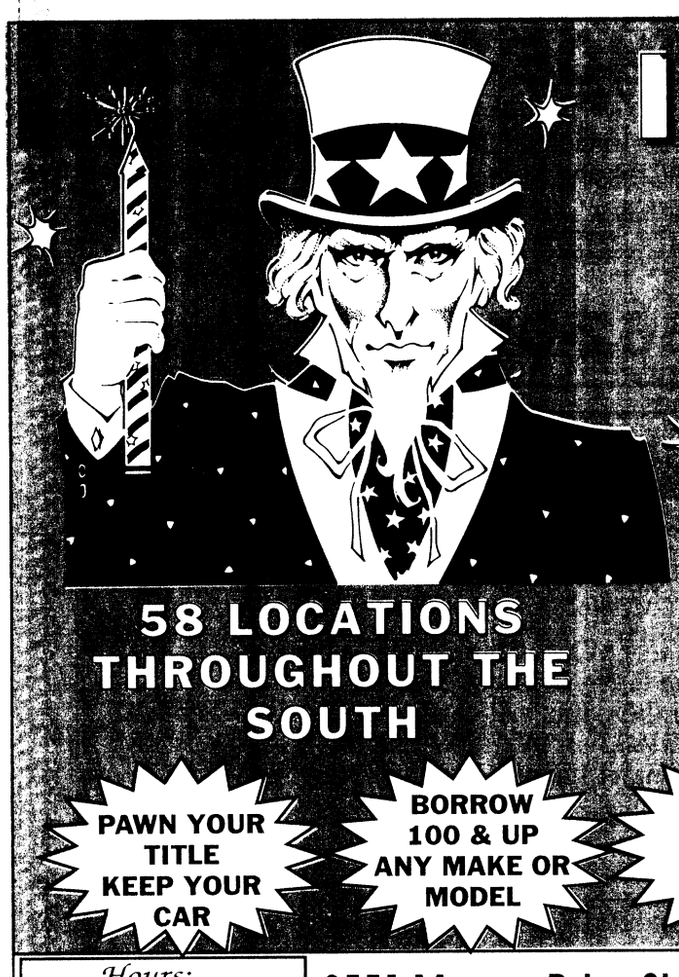
In addition to the battle positions, the students were sent out on numerous day and night surveillance patrols and observation posts.

When the enemy began their reconnaissance of the area, the lieutenants reacted by sending out hunter-kill teams and setting up anti-armor ambushes along the likely avenues of approach.

After the destruction of enemy vehicles and dismounts, the students headed back to the battle position to consolidate and reorganize. The counter-reconnaissance actions were successful and the mission was completed for the day.

With the attempts of enemy reconnaissance thwarted, the Soldiers moved to prepare for the enemy regimental forward patrol.

At dawn, nine enemy vehicles found they had not chosen the best avenue of approach. Running straight into the friendly wire obstacles, the enemy was greeted with a high volume of small arms and anti-armor fire. With a wide variety of star clusters, M-203 illumination rounds, smoke grenades, artillery simulators and hand grenade simulators going off at the same time, this contact resembled a July 4 celebration.



With another mission completed and many lessons learned, the lieutenants of Co. B headed home.

ITB reception battalion changes commanders

By Yvette Stewart
Infantry Training Brigade

The 30th Adjutant General (Reception) Battalion on Sand Hill is now under new leadership following a change of command June 20 at Wetherby Field.

Lt. Col. Deborah Kissel relinquished command of the 30th AG (Reception) Bn. to Lt. Col. Nancy A. Johnson.

Kissel departs Fort Benning for the Washington, D.C., area where she will assume duties with the Adjutant General Directorate, Total Army Personnel Command.

Johnson, a native of Orlando, received her commission in the Corps of Engineers through the Reserve Officer Training Corps at the University of Central Florida in Orlando in 1980.

Johnson comes from Fort Bragg, N.C., where she served as assistant chief of staff, Inspector General Adjutant General of the 82nd Airborne Division.

"It is a tremendous privilege to have the opportunity to command at any level," Johnson said. "Battalion command is a bit different to describe, and to have the opportunity to be able to do it at Fort Benning, it is a gift, a treasure.

"The 30th AG enjoys a tremendous reputation and I am thrilled to be a part of it."

Col. Abraham J. Turner, Infantry Training Brigade commander, opened the ceremony.

"This change of command ceremony is only the eighth since the activation of this battalion in 1983," he said. "Its significance is magnified by the fact that the Soldiers standing before you, the young privates, have been in the Army for a grand total of only eight days.

"Debbie Kissel, the outgoing commander, has been a great battalion commander. She processed more than 40,000 new Infantrymen into the Infantry Training Brigade over the last two years, and has instituted new processing systems and procedures, such as the 30th AG battle buddy system and drill sergeant assistance teams at Martin Army Community Hospital, that will continue to have a positive impact on this brigade for many years to come.

Turner welcomed Johnson to the ITB at the ceremony.

"Nancy Johnson, the incoming commander, isn't a stranger to Fort Benning," he said. "She spent four years at the Home of the Infantry a little more than 10 years ago. The 30th AG Battalion, the Infantry Training Brigade and Fort Benning are fortunate to have Nancy rejoin our ranks as battalion commander of the largest reception battalion in the United States Army.

"The 30th AG Battalion will continue to flourish and meet the high demands placed upon it by the United States Army while under the capable command of Nancy Johnson. She is truly one of the best commanders the Army has to offer."

Johnson's husband David and sons, David and Robert, arrived at the installation with her.

Kissel hails from Weatherford, Texas. She earned a bachelor of arts degree in psychology from State University of New York at Albany and received her commission as a second lieutenant in the Adjutant General's Corps in 1977. She holds a master of human resources degree from the University of South Carolina.

Her military schooling includes the Adjutant General Officer Basic and Advance courses, Combined Arms and Services Staff School and the U.S. Army Command and General Staff College.

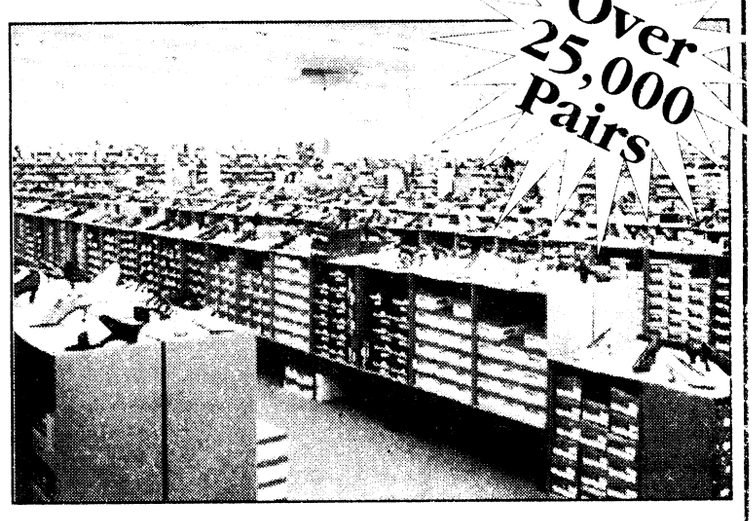
ACAP offers salary advice

By Carl F. Hopp
Army Career and Alumni Program

One of the final steps in the job search process is called "salary and benefit negotiation."

When this step begins, a person in the job search has been offered a job and usually told what the starting salary will be. At this point, the person being offered position has to make a decision. The choices are to accept the job or reject the offer.

Generally the decision to accept to the job is based on several factors, with money often being the foremost of those factors. Likewise, the decision not to accept the position is also usually based on money.



By using money as the sole criteria in accepting or rejecting a job offer, one may overlook positions that will provide great personal satisfaction, according to Mary Reardon, a counselor at the Job Assistance Center. For some, that can be both all right and necessary. However, for most, money should not be the only criteria used when evaluating a position.

Reardon recommended that in addition to money, those in the job search should be concerned about finding jobs that are interesting, make use of their skills and experience, offer a challenge, provide both monetary and non-monetary rewards and offer the chance for advancement.

Furthermore, Reardon stated by using this total approach in the job search, one will find a job that is important, allows opportunities for contributions, provides a sense of purpose and satisfies or exceeds financial goals.

Army names acting sergeants major

Army News Service

WASHINGTON, D.C. — The chief of staff of the Army has appointed two senior noncommissioned officers to serve as acting sergeant major of the Army.

Gen. Dennis J. Reimer has decided that as of June 13, the sergeant major of the Army position will rotate between two command sergeants major, both of whom now serve as the senior enlisted Soldiers of the Army's two largest major commands in the United States.

"It is in the best interest of the Army and our Soldiers will be better served by having an experienced command sergeant major performing duties traditionally performed by the sergeant major of the Army," Reimer said. "It is essential we have someone performing these critical duties during this important period in our nation's history."

Feb. 10, Sgt. Maj. of the Army Gene C. McKinney was suspended from his duties amid allegations he committed acts of sexual misconduct against three Army female Soldiers and one woman sailor.

According to Maj. Mike Galloucis, Reimer's spokesman, the chief of staff has continued to meet with senior enlisted Soldiers on a frequent basis and has discussed a myriad of issues affecting Soldiers during the period of McKinney's suspension. Galloucis also emphasized Reimer always talks with enlisted Soldiers of all ranks during his frequent visits to Army posts.

However, Reimer still felt it would be better for the Army and the enlisted Soldiers if he had a command sergeant major performing some of the duties traditionally performed by the sergeant major of the Army on a consistent basis.

The two sergeants major are Command Sgt. Maj. Jerry T. Alley of U.S. Forces Command at Fort McPherson, Ga., and Command Sgt. Maj. James C. McKinney, the Army's Training and Doctrine Command command sergeant major at Fort Monroe, Va.

Both command sergeants major will remain in their current positions during the time they serve as acting sergeant major of the Army, said Master Sgt. Phil Prater, public affairs advisor to the sergeant major of the Army.

Alley and McKinney will come to Washington as needed to advise Secretary of the Army Togo D. West Jr., Reimer and other senior Army leaders on matters pertaining to enlisted Soldiers, attend key meetings and perform other essential administrative and ceremonial duties.

"There will be some adjustment because both Soldiers will pick up additional responsibilities. They have taken on additional responsibilities throughout their careers and are more than capable of handling the additional responsibilities they will have as a result of this decision," Prater said.

Reimer's decision has no impact whatsoever on the ongoing actions involving McKinney, who remains on active duty assigned to the Military District of Washington. He is awaiting the start of an Article 32 hearing, Prater said, a process similar to the civil grand jury system and conducted in accordance with the Uniform Code of Military Justice.

The duration of the rotational arrangement will be until such time as the disposition of McKinney's case is resolved, Prater said.

Gene and James McKinney, Prater noted, are identical twins.

Reimer made his decision after hearing the recommendations of the Army's senior command sergeants major developed during their Senior Enlisted Leadership Conference at Fort Bliss, Texas, May 29-30, and in other discussions with senior enlisted leaders, Galloucis said.

"The Army's senior leadership has always put the health and welfare of the Soldiers as top priorities," Prater said. "This arrangement will ensure that our enlisted Soldiers' concerns and interests are properly represented."

"The sergeant major of the Army is the chief of staff's principal advisor on matters pertaining to the enlisted Soldiers in the Army," Prater said. "For the past 120 days, the Army has not had someone consistently performing those duties. The two NCOs designated to perform acting sergeant major of the Army duties will provide the chief of staff with advice on enlisted issues just as Sergeant Major of the Army McKinney did."

sometimes gave, their lives for their country and their fellow Soldiers," said RTB Chaplain, Capt. Thomas Wheatley, during the invocation. "The example they set for the rest of us inspires Soldiers today to strive for new heights."

The inductions of the 14 men began when the individual candidate or his representative moved to stand in front of the crowd while his military story was read. Col. William J. Leszczynski Jr., commander, 75th Ranger Regiment, and Col. Dorian T. Anderson, commander, RTB, then placed the bronze Hall of Fame medallion around the candidate's neck. The recipients were then given the opportunity to address those present.

"I feel like I have to say thank you three times," said retired Capt. Donald W. Delorey. "Thank you to the rangers for accepting me as a ranger. Thank you to the (Merrill's) Marauders for accepting me as a Marauder. And thank you to God for the gift of so many fabulous friends."

Accepting the award on behalf of Staff Sgt. Henry Gosho, his widow Jean said her husband "would say he was just doing his duty."

While accepting his award, retired Col. Lewis L. Millett, a Medal of Honor recipient, reflected on the freedoms he fought to defend.

"Nobody has to tell me about race or creed or color," he said, "I've served with them all. I knew if I went down, somebody would pick me up and they didn't stop to ask where I came from or what my religion was.

"I volunteered to fight ... because some people deserve the same liberties that you and I have, regardless of the color of their skin."

PARTNERSHIP FOR PEACE

NATO, former Warsaw Pact Soldiers meet

By Sgt. 1st Class Saralynne Slater
School of the Americas Public Affairs Office

Military officers who once sought to fight each other came to the School of the Americas as partners in the pursuit of peace.

Representatives of former Warsaw Pact nations joined NATO members to hear about SOA's courses in peacekeeping, operations other than war, border observations and countermine operations. The 55 foreign officers, from such nations as Uzbekistan, Macedonia and Kazakstan, spent two full days on Fort Benning as part of Partnership for Peace and Cooperative Nugget '97, based out of Fort Polk, La.

"We're all combining our efforts, training in peacekeeping, working on their ability to (work together) within Western standards," explained Capt. Jeffrey Parks, public affairs officer for Cooperative Nugget '97.

The School of the Americas was an appropriate centerpiece of the Fort Benning visit. Just as Partnership for Peace encourages cooperation and understanding, SOA teaches diverse nations how to work together in peacekeeping.

"It's very similar in some situations to what the school does," Parks said. "We're just dealing with different parts of the world."

Besides the SOA briefers, other experts on peacekeeping spoke to these officers while at the school. At Infantry Hall, the visitors learned how the U.S. Army mobilizes its troops for operations. Starting it all out with a bang, they watched a Rangers-in-Action Demonstration.

"That was a blast. We want them to be impressed," Parks admitted. "It was good for them to see some Soldiers actually performing in their roles, getting a high-speed demonstration."

Partnership for Peace, the umbrella over Cooperative Nugget '97 and the Staff Officer Program, began in 1994 in cooperation with NATO to help nations learn the western standard of operations.

"If you want to be a partner country, you have to be working a few things," Parks said.

"You have to be working to better democratize your nation. We're not going to let in the PFP countries who're not working toward a democratic process. NATO's the one making that decision," he said.

"They have to agree to openness in their military budgeting. They have to understand what human rights are, and show the willingness to respect human rights.

"They must have civilian leadership of the military."

PFP has four missions, Parks explained: coalition-type peacekeeping, humanitarian relief, search and rescue and disaster relief. Cooperative Nugget '97 supports the peacekeeping mission.

CN97 began in early June, with Soldiers from 27 different nations arriving at Fort Polk. Twenty-one countries sent platoons out to the post's Joint Readiness Training Center for a field peacekeeping exercise. This is the actual, NATO-sponsored Cooperative Nugget 97. The other six non-NATO nations came for the Staff Officer Program, which falls under CN97, but doesn't include troops in the field.

"The Staff Officer Program is initiated to take officers from their country, expose them to western staff responsibilities and operations, to U.S. and NATO military standards and to give them an idea of what we do," Parks said.

Besides observing the field exercise, which continues through early July at Fort Polk, the PFP representatives have visited the Peacekeeping Institute at Carlisle Barracks, Pa. They'll hear from the Louisiana National Guard in New Orleans and see the Emergency Response Center in Baton Rouge.

"Many of these officers are former Soviet officers," Parks said. "For so many years, their countries were suppressed. There was only one voice, and that was the voice of the Soviet Union. So they're thrilled to be here for the chance to talk about their countries, to educate us.

"They all feel that they've got things to offer us back. The bulk of them probably hope someday to become members of NATO. "

3rd Bde: Changes

Gardner, who once commanded a company of the 3rd Brigade in Germany, said it's great to be back in the 3rd Brigade and the 3rd Infantry Division.

"It's great to be back. The 3rd Brigade has an important and fast-paced mission," he said. "I look forward to taking on the challenge."

With Gardner's arrival, Schook bid his farewells.

"Two years ago, I was afforded the privilege and honor of assuming command of this wonderful Brigade Combat Team. Never in my wildest dreams did I envision that when today came, I would have so many wonderful memories, so many strong attachments, so many conflicting emotions all at once; all from this great love affair with Kelley Hill," he said.

Schook also went on to thank his staff, battalion commanders and his commanders — Maj. Gen. John W. Hendrix, 3rd Infantry Division (Mechanized) commander, and Maj. Gen. Carl F. Ernst, Fort Benning commander.

Schook then addressed the Sledgehammer Soldiers.

"To the great Marne and Sledgehammer Soldiers, I only hope I have given you some small measure of what you have given to me," he said. "I will always love you. You will always be in my heart and thoughts.

"Stay focused. Stay disciplined. Be a winner. Savor life. Savor your heritage. Savor the history of the Dog Face Soldier — Rock of the Marne, Sledgehammer, Hammer 6 Ancient out."

Schook goes on to the Pentagon where he will work at the Office of the Joint Chief of Staff J7 (Conventional War Plans Division) as the chief of Conventional War Plans.

Army News Service

They're "On the Road Again." "They" being the 28-member cast, crew and drivers of the U.S. Army Soldier Show headed out on their 1997 road tour. The show will be 7 p.m. July 5 at the Sand Hill Theater 3.

In its 14th year, the 80-minute fast-paced, high-energy musical review will play 44 stateside Army installations as well as Japan, Okinawa and Korea. An Army Morale, Welfare and Recreation activity produced by the U.S. Army Community and Family Support Center Entertainment Division, the show opened in May with three performances at Fort Belvoir, Va., playing to packed houses.

The show is sponsored by the Veterans of Foreign Wars and United Services Planning Association Inc. and Independent Research Agency (USPA and IRA), a financial planning and insurance company serving the military.

It may have started with Sgt. Irving Berlin and his "This is the Army," during World War I, but this year's edition of the U.S. Army Soldier show carries on the tradition of "Soldiers entertaining Soldiers."

The Soldier Show is an Army Morale, Welfare and Recreation program produced by the entertainment division of the U.S. Army Community and Family Support Center, a field operating agency under the Headquarters, Department of the Army, assistant chief of staff for installation management. The Soldier Show is not related to any of the Army band units.

The new green containers have been placed on the installation for units and activities to collect their corrugated cardboard. These containers are marked on the front with white lettering stating "Recycle Cardboard Only."

The containers provide a convenient alternative for units and activities to dispose of cardboard rather than making trips to the recycling center.

These containers are designed to accept only boxes that have been flattened. A narrow slot near the top allows the users to place the cardboard in the container. The top doors of the container are not to be opened by the user. Attempts to open the doors will cause damage to the container.

To optimize the system, do not put any material in the green containers except corrugated cardboard. Corrugated cardboard is two layers of dense paper (usually brown) with a fluted inner layer.

Flattening the boxes will allow much more actual material to be stored in the containers, thereby greatly increasing efficiency.

These containers are also a good tool for commanders to assist the installation in meeting the Army's goal to recover and recycle solid waste to the greatest extent possible. Most of all, by recycling cardboard, the installation has a direct cost avoidance for every pound that is not transported off the installation to a landfill.

Other forms of paperboard are not to be placed in the green containers. This includes cardboard that is coated with plastic or wax or grossly contaminated with oil or food. This form of cardboard should be flattened and placed in your refuse containers for disposal.

After the first three weeks of use, Fort Benning has diverted almost 31 tons of corrugated cardboard from its waste stream.

For more information about the green cardboard containers, call Walter Nichols, Directorate of Public Works Solid Waste program manager at, 545-1007

Holiday schedule change

There will be no refuse or recycle collection July 4.

Family housing refuse and recycle collection normally scheduled for Thursday will be picked up July 4. All refuse and recycle collection in family housing areas scheduled through Thursday will be picked up as normally scheduled.

There will be no yard waste picked up July 7. The next scheduled yard waste pick up will be July 14.

U-Do-It Center schedule

In observance of Independence Day, the Self-Help (U-Do-It) Center, Loan Equipment Section, Venetian Blind and Shade Shop, will be closed July 4 through Monday. The Center will reopen for business at 8:30 a.m. July 8.

tricare

Humana Corporation

Tricare Prime members, other than active duty military members, who enrolled in the program last summer should watch their mailboxes for an important letter from Humana Military Healthcare Services.

Each year, Tricare Prime members must review their enrollment information and confirm they wish to continue their Tricare Prime membership. In order to ensure continued Tricare Prime coverage, it is vitally important that Tricare Prime members respond immediately to the letter they will receive from Humana Military Healthcare Services.

Tricare Prime members will receive their re-enrollment notification letter approximately 45 days prior to the end of their first full year of Tricare Prime enrollment. Even if Tricare Prime members do not owe any enrollment fees or need to make any changes to their family's enrollment information, they must respond to this letter to ensure continued coverage for the coming year.

Members who do not respond will be disenrolled and health-care coverage will revert to the higher cost share of the Tricare Standard or Extra plans.

Here's how the process works:

Members receive a notification letter approximately 45 days prior to the end of the current enrollment period. The letter offers the opportunity to update family information, as well as to pay any applicable annual or quarterly enrollment fees.

A copy of the current enrollment information will be included with the letter. The letter will indicate the specific date the response is due.

Members are asked to verify their existing record and respond immediately using an enclosed envelope.

Upon receipt of the member's correspondence, Humana Military Healthcare Services will promptly update records and process any applicable payments to ensure uninterrupted Tricare Prime coverage.

Beneficiaries may continue to use their current, unexpired Tricare Prime identification cards, as new cards will not be issued.

It is essential to the re-enrollment process that members keep their address record current with Humana Military Healthcare Services throughout the year.

For further information about this process, additional renewal sheets or assistance at any time throughout the year concerning Tricare Prime enrollment, call (800) 444-5445 or visit the local Tricare Service Center, Building 9204, Room 104 (next to Martin Army Community Hospital).

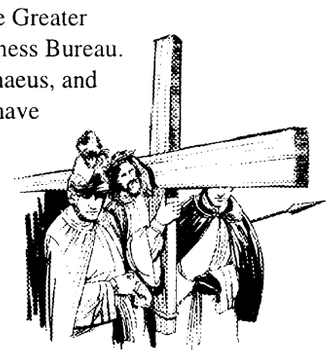
God works with all people

By Chaplain (Capt.) Lane M. Stockeland
2nd Battalion, 69 Armor Regiment, 3rd Bde, 3rd Inf. Div. (Mech)

Recently, I found the following fictitious letter in my files. I do not know who wrote it, but I feel it is worth using since it emphasizes what God can do with unlikely people in unlikely places.



"To: Jesus, son of Joseph
"Woodcrafter's Carpenter Shop, Nazareth 25922
"From: Jordan Management Consultants
"Jerusalem, 26544
"Dear Sir:

"Thank you for submitting the resumes of the 12 men you have picked for management positions in your new organization. All of them have now taken our battery of tests and we have not only run the results through our computer, but also arranged personal interviews for each of them with our psychologist and vocational aptitude consultant.

"It is the staff's opinion most of your nominees are lacking in background, education and vocational aptitude for the type of enterprise you are undertaking. They do not have the team concept. We would recommend you continue your search for persons of experience in ability and proven capacity.

"Simon Peter is emotionally unstable and given to fits of temper. Andrew has absolutely no qualities of leadership. The two brothers, James and John, the sons of Zebedee, place personal interest above company loyalty. Thomas demonstrates a questioning attitude that would tend to undermine morale.

"We feel it is our duty to tell you that Matthew has been blacklisted by the Greater Jerusalem' Better Business Bureau. James, the son of Alphaeus, and Thaddaeus definitely have radical leanings, and they both registered a high score on the manic-depressive scale.

"One of the candidates, however, shows great potential. He is a man of ability and resourcefulness, meets people well, has a keen business mind and has contacts in high places.

"He is highly motivated, ambitious and responsible. We recommend Judas Iscariot as your comptroller and right-hand man.

"All of the other profiles are self-explanatory.

"We wish you every success in your new venture.

"Sincerely yours,

"The Jordan Management Consultants."

Aren't you glad God sometimes does things in ways we do not expect? Aren't you glad he accomplishes his will, in many cases, despite of us rather than because of us?

"For my thoughts are not your thoughts, neither are your ways my ways, declares the Lord. For as the heavens are higher than the earth, so are my ways higher than your ways, and my thoughts than your thoughts (Isaiah 55:8,9)."

Remember, Jesus said, "You did not choose me, but I chose you."

Learn how to prepare for battle

By Chaplain (Capt.) Mark A. Zerger
29th Infantry Regiment

I often think about the great battles our Army fought and won in the past and I attribute our successes to preparation.

Long hours of training and preparation enabled us to be successful on the battlefield. I think about the Continental Army and the things Gen. George Washington did to prepare it. Many historians agree that Washington's hiring of a German officer named Von Steuben was a key factor in this preparation.

It was Von Steuben who taught the rag-tag Continental Army close-order drill. The discipline of this training helped the Soldiers to overcome negative habits in their soldiering abilities. Thus by winning small battles over their negative habits, they were prepared to win in bigger battles.

In I Samuel 17:17-54, we are told of David's battle with Goliath. We often focus on the battle itself and not how David handled himself going into the battle. It is evident to me David had prepared himself for this great battle by having some victories over the negative things in his life.

David's father Jesse asked him to go to the Army of Saul in order to check on his brothers. When David arrived in the camp, he quickly saw the enemy, Goliath, shouting insults at God's Army.

About the same time, David's older brother Eliab came up to David and began to scold him unmercifully for coming into the camp.

We can see here how David had won the victory over the negative problem of being too sensitive. David could have taken up a rock and hit his big brother, but instead, he brushed off the incident and focused his energy on the real mission of fighting Goliath.

One of the biggest problems I see in the churches today is brothers and sisters in Christ throwing stones at each other instead of the real enemy. Over sensitivity can cause us to get mad at each other and not have any energy for the real mission and battles around the next turn in life.

When I was in Germany, I heard a story about a very sensitive lady driving between Neubrucke and Baumholder. She was driving along at the posted speed limit when she saw a shiny new BMW, out of control, come skidding around the corner.

She slowed down and gave the driver the evil eye. As the driver of the BMW went by, he yelled, "Pig!"

She was infuriated and began reaching for a pencil and pad to record his license number. She was so busy being upset she failed to see the 500-pound boar around the corner and wrecked her car.

By not learning how to have the victory over the little negative areas in our lives, like being over sensitive, we often have problems with the bigger things around the corner. When brothers and sisters in Christ pick up stones to throw at each other, they lose sight of what the real mission is.

Just as David brushed off his brother Eliab's unfair remarks and went on to the real victory, so we should stay focused on the real enemies and problems which will require all of our energy.

Chaplain reflects on importance of church attendance

By Chaplain (Capt.) Len Kircher
11th Infantry Regiment

One thing we preachers regularly joke about is the myriad of excuses people use for not coming to church.

Some do not choose to attend because they're on vacation. My response to that is Sunday is still Sunday whether you're on vacation or not. I've always been able to find a church while on vacation, even at campgrounds.

Others simply state, "It's my only day off," "It's the only time I can get my lawn mowed," or, "It's the only time I get to fish, sleep in, goof off, read the paper, golf or whatever."

I'm considering having a "Show and Tell" sermon in my chapel one of these Sundays about the excuses people use to skip services. Here are some of the items I'll bring:

•A first-aid station for those claiming they were too ill to attend church, and aspirin and eye drops for others suffering from Saturday-night parties.

•A sleeping bag, pillow, keep-alert pills and alarm clock for those favoring late Sunday sleeping.

•An Easter lily and Christmas poinsettia for those showing up only on major holidays.

•TV dinners for those who say they need all day Sunday to cook the main meal.

•A scoreboard for those complaining of hypocrisy in church so they can keep score between the "true" Christians and the hypocrites.

•A tree, fishing pole, set of golf clubs and a sailboat for those who say they will find their salvation communing with nature.

•A hearing aid for those who say they can never hear the sermon, cotton balls for those complaining the preacher is too loud, a beanbag chair for those who say the pews are too hard, fans for those who get too hot and blankets for those who get too cold.

I'm sure there are numerous other excuses. Yet, God is very clear about his desire for you to worship him. Church is not a one-person operation. It is a fellowship, a gathering, an assembly, and while there may be extreme circumstances in which you find it impossible to gather to worship with other believers, there's never a time God does not want you to assemble.

"And let us consider one another in order to stir up love and good works, not forsaking the assembling of ourselves together, as is the manner of some, but exhorting one another, and so much more as you see the day approaching (Hebrews 10: 24-25)."

The point of that verse is when you gather together, you are able to encourage each other, "to stir up love and good works." Obviously there is nothing better than a good pep talk, an exhortation, to worship God and to do good things.

God is saying very clearly not to forsake or "disdain" what he has instituted. He didn't start church for you not to attend.

So when you're sitting around your house this Sunday and wondering how to spend your day, ask yourself, "What's my excuse this week?"

Forgiveness offers solution to resentment, relieves stressful times

By Chaplain (Capt.) Xuan Ngoc Tran
1st Battalion, 10th Field Artillery

Have you ever thought, "I'm going to get even," or, "Just wait until next time?" All of us, at one time or another, have entertained personal thoughts of revenge.

We often experience being hurt by other people: rejection by a loved one, an unfulfilled promise from a friend, cheated by an unfaithful spouse or a bad relationship with someone else.

Resentment is the most destructive emotion a person can experience. Its damage is felt, not only in the mind, but also in the soul. This is a terrible way to feel, and it can cause ulcers, migraine headaches, severe back pains and even heart conditions.

As free-will beings, we choose our own destinies, and if left to ourselves, we would certainly bring about our own destruction. It is for this reason we would do well to heed the advice given to us in the Holy Scriptures. God has not left us alone. He has provided a wonderful solution to our predicament in the gospel.

In fact, I believe outside the Christian gospel, there is no real solution to the problem of resentment. Only the gospel of Christ is capable of healing human hurt at its very root.

How should we deal with resentment in our lives? How do we dispose of our need for revenge? By forgiving those who hurt us. There is no other way.

What does it mean to forgive? Simply this: forgiving is surrendering your right to hurt back. Of course, we all experience the urge to seek revenge at one time or another. You may feel it's your right, but when you forgive, you give up this right.

Why? Because you need to be protected from the hurt. Giving up your right to revenge is for your benefit, because if you give in to your urge for revenge, there will be no end to the escalation of the conflict.

God knows us all better than we know ourselves; that is why we are taught to forgive. Do you want to know how to free yourself from anger and resentment and obtain full advantage from forgiveness? Turn your resentment into kindness. Turn your bitterness into joy. Turn your hatred into love. Turn your anger into forgiveness. Healing can only come from complete forgiveness.

The key to forgiving others is remembering how much God has forgiven you. Forgiveness is so important in our daily lives that Jesus Christ included it in his prayer, "Forgive us our debts, as we forgive our debtors." Matthew 6:14-15 states, "For if you forgive men their trespasses, your heavenly Father will also forgive you. But if you do not forgive men their trespasses, neither will your Father forgive your trespasses."

Because when we don't forgive others, we are denying our common ground as sinners in need of God's forgiveness. God does not forgive us because we forgive others, but solely because of his great mercy. As we come to understand his mercy, however, we will want to be like him. Having received forgiveness, we will pass it on to others.

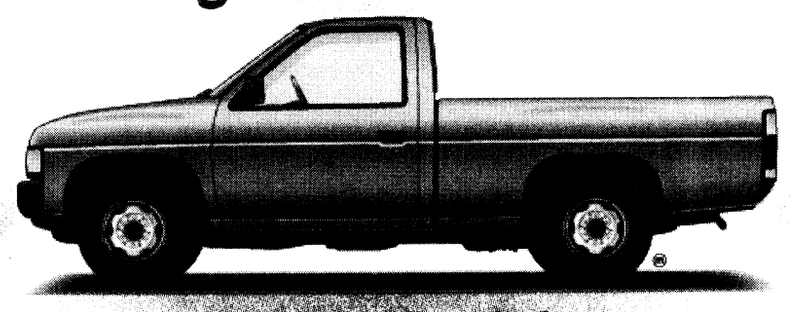
It is easy to ask God for forgiveness, but difficult to grant it to others. Whenever we ask God to forgive us for sin, we should ask ourselves, "Have I forgiven the people who have wronged me?"

Peter asked, "Lord, how long must I wait before I can get revenge of my hurts?" With a parable, Jesus answered Peter's problem of hurt and resentment. The key lesson was this: no matter how much others have hurt you, your hurt is insignificant when compared to the hurt you cause God.

There is no end to how often we must forgive, because our debt to God is always greater than our debt to any other person. When we have this perspective clear in our minds, we find it as easy to forgive others who have wronged us. We find that no matter what has been done against you, no matter what hurt has been inflicted, you can forgive.

God took the total insult of our sin so seriously that he went all the way to Calvary to die. The cross shows how hard it was for God to forgive. The cross is our great example.

Christ suffered for you, leaving you an example, that you and I should follow his steps.



Man owes the debt he cannot pay. So God paid the debt he did not owe.

Crush pitcher Dennis Smith hurls a pitch during the 12-2 victory over the Indians June 21.

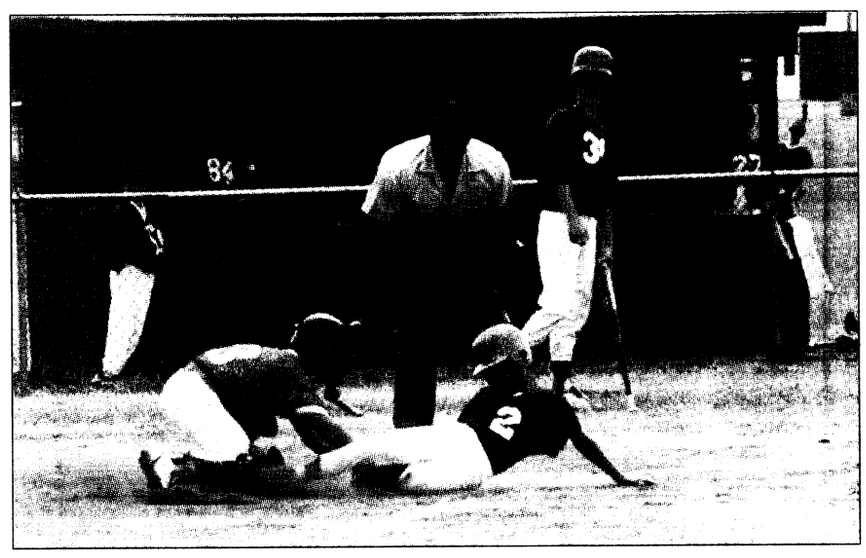
By John W. Peeler
Special to the Bayonet©

Crush scored five runs in the second and fourth innings Saturday to defeat the Indians 12-2 in the finale of the 13- to 15-year-old division of the Youth Services Baseball League.

Crush pitcher Dennis Smith held the Indians to six hits for the entire game while the Crush team tagged the Indians for five hits. The Indians pitchers walked seven batters, keeping the Crush team ahead for the entire game.

Crush opened up the game scoring two runs in the first inning while leaving two stranded on base as the first half of the inning ended.

Dennis Smith sat down the first three Indian batters, ending the first inning with Crush holding a 2-0 lead.



Crush scored five runs in the top of the second inning aided by three walks and a grand slam home run by shortstop Ian Radcliffe.

Smith continued his pitching magic in the bottom of the second inning, sitting down the second, third and fourth batters in the lineup after giving up a lead-off home run to Indians catcher Trent Slone.

The Indians played solid defense in the top of the third inning, holding Crush to no runs on one hit, but were unable to gain any ground on Crush in the bottom of the third inning. The third inning ended with Crush holding a commanding 7-1 lead.

Crush added five more runs in the top of the fourth inning while holding the Indians to one run. At the end of the fourth inning, Crush had put the game out of reach with a 12-2 lead.

Neither team was able to score in the fifth inning, ending both the game and the 1997 Youth Services Baseball season.

Indians second baseman Shawn Brookings is tagged out at home plate during the Indians 12-2 loss to Crush June 21.

DNR announces changes to the fishing regulation

Georgia Dept. of Natural Resources

SOCIAL CIRCLE, Ga. — The Georgia Department of Natural Resources, Wildlife Resources Division (WRD), changed the fishing regulations to modify rules on the state's eight public fishing areas.

Lake Juliette (Rum Creek) in Monroe County is no longer designated as a public fishing area, which means anglers no longer need to purchase a wildlife management area stamp to fish on the lake.

Other fishing regulations included adding rules for the new Rocky Mountain Recreation and Public Fishing Area in Floyd County and modifying boat motor use on the remaining public fishing areas.

Rocky Mountain Recreation and Public Fishing Area in Floyd County opened May 20. Changes to the fishing regulations require area visitors to purchase a daily or annual parking permit, but eliminates the requirement for anglers to purchase a wildlife management area stamp to fish on this area.

Additional rules set dates for camping, allow swimming at the beach area and prohibit alcohol, rappelling, rock climbing and hang gliding at the area.

On designated public fishing area lakes open to outboard motor use, past rules permitted motors smaller than 10 horsepower to be used at any speed, which often created objectionable wakes and noise when motors were operated at full throttle. These new rules restrict motors of all sizes to idle speed.

Other changes allow WRD to designate additional lakes at public fishing areas open to outboard motor use. Past rules limited outboard motor use to lakes larger than 99 acres, yet some lakes smaller than this may be suitable for outboard motors operated at idle speed.

Other new rules allow campers to register later than 4 p.m. at public fishing areas where managers have a system in place to handle late registrations; allow the department to close portions of public fishing area lakes to boats; prohibit personal watercraft (such as "jet skis" and "sea doos"), sailboats and sailboards from public fishing areas; and allow horses to be used in designated parts of public fishing areas.

Georgia's 1997-98 Freshwater and Saltwater Sport Fishing Regulations booklet includes a map showing the location of public fishing areas. This booklet and copies of the rule changes are available wherever fishing licenses are sold or by calling Michael Spencer at (770) 918-6418. For more information, call (770) 918-6418.

outdoor outlook

Georgia state parks offer guided canoe trips — Outdoor enthusiasts can explore Georgia's scenic waterways on guided canoe trips at High Falls and Panola Mountain State Parks.

Park staff will explain basic canoeing techniques and interpret natural surroundings while leading paddlers on day-long trips.

Participants can see beavers, otters, kingfishers, great blue herons, turtles and other wildlife.

Trips fill quickly, so pre-registration is required. To register, call the park directly.

The cost is $15 per person, which includes canoe, paddles and life preserver. Canoeists who bring their own equipment pay $10. A $2 park pass fee is charged per vehicle.

Eighteen of Georgia's state parks rent canoes so visitors can explore lakes and streams on their own.

Prices are $3 to $5 for an hour, $8 to $15 for four hours and $12 to $20 for an entire day. For a free "Guide to Georgia State Parks and Historic Sites" or "1997 Events" brochure, call (404) 656-3530.

To reserve a campsite or fully equipped cottage, call (800) 864-7275.

Parks offering canoe trips are:

Panola Mountain State Conservation Park

Panola Mountain State Conservation park offers a variety of outdoor excursions for the entire family.

For reservations and information, call (770) 389-7801.

Scheduled events and dates are:

Sept. 27

Explore three miles of the South River, which forms the northern boundary of this park from 9 a.m. to 2 p.m.

Nov. 15

Adults may enjoy a sunset float on the park's 3.5-acre lake from 5:30 to 7:30 p.m.

State parks post fishing tournaments — The arrival of spring means it is time to get out your favorite fishing pole and head to Georgia's state parks.

This year, park officials have planned a dozen fishing events where serious anglers can strut their stuff while beginning youngsters learn the basics. The tournaments are a great excuse for families to spend time together in the spring sunshine.

Most state parks have boat ramps and docks, and many rent boats and sell bait. For more information about a fishing tournament, call the host park.

Fishing tournaments are just some of the many events conducted by state parks and historic sites throughout the year.

All events are free and parking is $2.

Roosevelt State Park offers Ranger Camp — Franklin D. Roosevelt State Park is conducting its Junior Ranger Camps in two sessions this summer.

The registration deadline for the first session has past, but the deadline for the second camp is Aug. 5. This session will be Aug. 12-16. Each day will begin at 8 a.m. and end at noon.

The cost is $20 per child for one session. Only one completed session is required for membership. There are limited spaces for each session.

For more information, call the park office at 663-4858.

Pro offers tips for catching pre-spawn bass

By D. Hegel and S. Price
Johnson® and Evinrude® Outboard

Ray Sedgwick remembers the day he and his fishing partner won a tournament with 10 bass weighing more than 66 pounds.

"We were fishing for pre-spawn bass in February, and the key was not so much the lure we were using, but rather, how slowly we could retrieve it," said Sedgwick, owner of a marina and fishing camp on South Carolina's Santee Cooper Lakes.

"The water was still pretty cold, but even then the bass were preparing to come shallow to spawn. They were not at all active, but they would hit a lure if we kept it in front of them long enough."

Sedgwick recommends two lures for fishing this time of year, a 3/4-ounce spin bait with tandem Colorado style blades and a 1/2-ounce jig adorned with a bulky pork trailer.

"I like to slow roll the spinner bait beside dead and fallen timber in 12 to 15 feet of water," he explained. "I let the lure fall right beside the target and then start retrieving so slowly the blades are just barely turning, and I let the lure bump the cover.

"Around timber like this, bass are often suspended, so I keep the spinner bait above the bottom and work it slowly back to the boat. This time of year, it usually takes repeated casts to get a strike, too."

The pro fishes his second lure choice, the jig, around scattered vegetation if the lake has any. He likes to swim the lure about two feet deep and then let it fall beside clumps of grass.

"Again, it's really important to fish slowly," Sedgwick said, "and this is where using a big pork chunk on the jig helps because it slows the jig's fall. It also increases the overall size of the lure so it's more attractive to big bass."

Sedgwick looks for both timber and vegetation along the edges of channels and ditches leading into shallow coves. Bass use the channels as their migration routes; the presence of cover makes them more likely to be used. Favorite places to look for fish in the channels are along bends.

"Strikes won't be very hard, either, because the bass are not feeding actively, so it's important to concentrate and to watch your fishing line. If it jumps or moves to one side, or if you feel your spinner bait blade stop turning, you'd better set the hook."

Even though strikes may be few and far between during the early pre-spawn season, the bass that do hit are likely to be big, as Sedgwick's 66 pound stringer showed.

Threat in Middle East rising

By Linda D. Kozaryn
American Forces Press Service

MUSCAT, OMAN — There's no getting around it. Duty in the Middle East is tough and dangerous, and it's getting more so.

Defense officials said U.S. troops aboard ship in the Persian Gulf and on the ground in places like Saudi Arabia, Kuwait and Bahrain face threats on several fronts: Iran and Iraq, terrorism and in some cases, a harsh desert environment.

During a five-day visit to the Middle East June 14-18, Defense Secretary William S. Cohen talked about regional threats with U.S. troops and local government officials. Army Gen. Binford Peay III, commander, U.S. Central Command, accompanied the secretary to Saudi Arabia, Kuwait, Bahrain, the United Arab Emirates and Oman.

Throughout the trip, Cohen said, local leaders in all five countries offered solid support for the U.S. containment policy toward Iraq and Iran. They also expressed growing concern about Iran's ongoing weapons buildup.

"Iran's words and actions suggest it wants to be able to intimidate its neighbors and to interrupt commerce in the gulf," Cohen said at a press conference in Bahrain. "The United States will not allow this to happen."

Stressing America's commitment to defending the region, Cohen said the United States has overwhelming naval strength in the gulf and is fully capable of protecting U.S. ships, interests and allies.

State of Georgia enacts new drunken driving laws

Office of the Staff Judge Advocate

Drunken drivers need to beware. The state of Georgia started to enforce its new laws against drunken driving Tuesday.

Because of the new laws, the punishment for driving under the influence includes a mandatory 24-hour jail sentence for a conviction.

Habitual offenders face possible seizure of their vehicle's license plates. These laws also apply to military and civilian personnel convicted in the federal magistrate court for driving under the influence of alcohol on the Fort Benning military installation.

The state of Georgia enacted a zero tolerance policy against underage drinking. The policy states that any driver under the age of 21 who has a blood alcohol level of .02 will have his or her driver's license automatically suspended for a period of six months and be reqired to retake the driver's test.

29th Infantry Regiment changes commanders

By Cpl. Marc G. Turchin
Bayonet staff writer

Winds of change continue to blow through Fort Benning as another commander comes to post and another leaves for a new assignment.

Col. Robert J. Fulcher relinquished command of the 29th Infantry Regiment to Col. Richard J. Rowe. The ceremony was conducted June 25 on York Field in front of the regiment's Soldiers.

Presiding over the ceremony was Fort Benning's commander, Maj. Gen. Carl F. Ernst. He said Fulcher has what it takes to command a unit like the 29th Inf. Regt.

"He's a distinguished Infantryman, he has all the credentials you would want in an Infantryman — airborne, ranger, Combat Infantryman Badge; he's done it all and he's done it all with distinction," Ernst said.

Ernst also spoke about the kind of team Fulcher and his wife Deborah were to the Saluting those who serve

It's time for national leaders to defend the honor of the armed services

By David Gergen
US News and World Report

It's about time the secretary of defense and the commander-in-chief stood up and stoutly defended the 1.4 million men and women in military uniform who serve this country with honor.

commentary

In recent months, their reputations and their morale have suffered from a barrage of stories portraying them as the gang that can't keep their clothes on or their rules straight. The leaders have partly brought it on themselves by mindlessly setting up a hot line — thankfully, it's now closing — for anonymous character assassins to spread dirt about superiors. They only made it worse by publicly drumming 1st Lt. Kelly Flinn out of the service and then allowing decorated combat veteran Gen. Joseph Ralston's nomination as chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff to turn into a public relations disaster.

There's no doubt the military has its problems. Its difficulties in integrating the sexes and regulating behavior off base are now obvious. As Senator Ted Stevens of Alaska is learning from recent inquiries, the military still needs more discipline over its spending. Some generals have gone soft and political, and eight years after the collapse of the Berlin Wall, its roles and missions remain confusing.

But the piling on we see in the press and among politicians has gone far enough. When will the president and the secretary shout out the rest of the story? When will they remind the public the U.S. armed services today are the finest, most sophisticated, best-trained fighting force in the world and perhaps in all of world history?

Our military has one central responsibility, and it performs that superbly: to protect the security of the nation. In the bloodiest century ever, this country hasn't engaged in a major war for over 20 years and appears safe as far as the eye can see.

Far from a frolic in bed, life in the Army these days can be lonely and tough. Since the end of the cold war, the Army has cut its forces by a third while the White House has tripled the number of its overseas missions. As a result, the average Soldier now spends 180 days a year deployed away from home, more than double the number of a decade ago. Late last month, the Army announced that American Soldiers are serving in 100 countries, the largest number in its history.

From higher-profile missions in Haiti and the Middle East to lesser-known ones in countries like Belize and Macedonia, these overseas efforts have been carried out with distinction — and not much public notice. In the 19 months since deploying to Bosnia, U.S. forces haven't had a single untoward incident with a civilian there, and not one American Soldier has been killed in combat. Whatever else they have accomplished for the long term, our troops have helped give people there a year and a half without slaughter and mass rapes.

Those who say Soldiers must also learn to behave themselves are absolutely right. Throughout the services, the military should crack down hard on cases of sexual harassment and abuses of power. Everyone must be an officer and a gentleman.

But we should not expect our fighting forces to be warriors on the field and saints off it. Rules of common sense should prevail.. Just as the military should apply the same rules to men and women, and to officers and enlisted personnel, it should call off witch hunts looking into behavior of 15 or 20 years ago. The issue shouldn't be whether a military person has sex off base but whether he or she abuses a position of authority and causes disorder in the ranks. This question must be posed: If "don't ask, don't tell" is the right standard for the sex lives of homosexual Soldiers, shouldn't we consider something similar for the sex lives of heterosexual ones?

In the meantime, we should remember that thousands of fine men and women are out there at this very moment, sentries standing watch around the world. They don't do it for the money; most could earn significantly more in the private sector. They do it because they find pride and satisfaction in preserving freedom. It's time the commanders rallied the troops and told them during this period of stress that the nation salutes their honor and service.

CG stresses safety during Fourth of July celebrations

During the Fourth of July holiday, we celebrate America's heritage in many ways: we celebrate our freedom and independence; we remember those whose sacrifices have preserved those freedoms; and we also recognize the Soldiers and Army civilians making sacrifices around the world today.

As we honor our national heritage, every member of the Army family must strive to make safety a central feature of this celebration. In the last two months, the U.S. Army has lost 17 good Soldiers in privately owned vehicle accidents. Three of these deaths were Soldiers thrown from their vehicles. Seat belts can save lives — but only when worn.

Water activities are an important and fun part of the Fourth of July holiday, however, water sports are inherently very dangerous — one Soldier lost his life this year when struck by a boat propeller. The danger is always there for all of us.

Every commander, leader and supervisor needs to remind their Soldiers and Army civilian employees about the continued importance of safety awareness and how to apply both common sense and risk management in duty and recreation activities. There are many safety risk-management tools available that when used, can prevent someone from becoming a sad statistic during the holiday.

Encourage your Soldiers and Army civilians to talk to each other and their family members about safety during the holiday.

Soldiers and Army civilians taking care of each other and their families is the Army way.

Soldiers are our credentials.

Soldiers and Army civilians, wherever assigned, whatever the mission, take great pride and satisfaction in knowing that we are protecting America's freedom and independence. Protecting ourselves and those we love from holiday hazards is an important part of our mission.

I hope each of you enjoys a happy and safe Fourth of July holiday.

545-boss

Dial 545-BOSS is the commander's action line for Soldiers, family members and civilians to call when they have problems or complaints that can't be resolved elsewhere.

While it is not a substitute for the chain of command or for agencies established to provide assistance, the line offers another means of communication between Fort Benning's community and commanders.

The Bayonet features some of the calls that may benefit other members of the Fort Benning community.

Call: The caller would like to see a child development center reopened in the Custer Terrace Housing Area.

Directorate of Community Activities response: The Child Development Center coordinator explained the Custer Terrace Child Development Center was closed because of low usage, failure to meet new child care facility standards and continued funding constraints. Although there are more families now living in Custer Terrace, the child care demand does not support opening an additional center. Working parents who need child care may contact Central Registration for assistance with enrollment. If demand increases and warrants additional child care spaces and funding is available, many possible options will be reviewed, including renovation of the Custer Terrace Child Development Center.

Call: The caller suggests a 24-hour day care center be opened for use by parents who have to work 24hour shifts or night shifts, such as military police, medical personnel, etc. She said it would be a great way to serve the community.

DCA response: The Child Development Services coordinator explained although the post does not have a center that is opened 24 hours, there are certified Family Child Care providers who provide 24-hour care. This installation does not have a 24-hour facility because there has not been a documented need for one. The caller was also provided with the name of a center off post that does provide 24-hour care.

Threat: Remains in Middle East

rests on our resolve, the quality of our forces and the support of our allies," he said.

Iran and Iraq continue to violate international norms of good behavior, Cohen said. Iraq poses a land threat. Iran threatens ships at sea, and this particular threat recently heightened.

Iran's acquisition of weapons of mass destruction and continuing support of terrorism threaten stability, Cohen said. The most immediate concern, however, is Iran's acquisition of missiles that can strike neighboring nations and its boasting about its ability to close the Strait of Hormuz, he said.

Over the last few years, Iran has concentrated on developing a more robust anti-ship missile capability, Cohen said. Iran's military has sharply increased training launches of sea-based missiles from about 20 last year to 60 so far this year. In June, it successfully tested air-launched cruise missiles for the first time.

The two developments mean the threat to U.S. forces is increasing and the need for surveillance and readiness is greater than ever, said a senior defense official traveling with Cohen.

During the Iran-Iraq war, which started in 1980, Iran had mines and small boats with rocket-propelled grenades, the official said. It acquired land-based cruise missiles about 10 years ago, and last year, it put Chinese-made C-802 cruise missiles aboard its ships. Today, about 20 patrol boats are armed with missiles with a range greater than 20 miles.

"You now have a 360-degree threat. Before, you knew any cruise missile that might come at you was coming from land," the official said. "Now, that attack could come from any direction."

June 3 and 6, Iran tested air-launched Chinese C-801R missiles from an F-4 aircraft, he said. Air-launched missiles narrow the time line, he said, creating a 360-degree threat in seconds rather than hours.

"Does that mean we're scared and we're going to leave the gulf? Obviously, not," the official said. "We have some of the most capable (defense) systems in our ships out here. The Aegis destroyer, for example, is designed specifically to handle a cruise missile threat."

After talking with U.S. Navy officials in the region, Cohen said he is satisfied the United States "is fully capable of defeating an operation the Iranians might launch against us or our allies."

Iran's military buildup is but one of the threats U.S. service members must face in the Middle East. Iraq's Saddam Hussein continues to threaten regional stability, posing a threat to Kuwait and potentially to Saudi Arabia, Cohen said.

"Iraq's refusal to comply with the U.N. Security Council resolutions and its arsenal of weapons of mass destruction show that Saddam Hussein remains a threat to peace and stability," he said.

Peay said the Iraqi threat changes from week to week, and U.S. military officials watch it every day in great detail.

"Over the past year and a half, Saddam Hussein has increased his (air force) training level," Peay said. For the first time, U.S. officials have seen some night operations training.

"It's not significant, and I don't want to create the image of a monster 10 feet tall because, certainly, his forces don't compare professionally to our Air Force," Peay said. "But Hussein is still the largest threat in the region. Saddam's force is not a professional force. However, he still has the largest land army in the region, and he is only miles from the Kuwait border."

regiment.

"The Fulchers leave us with great memories of their tenure here and we are proud and pleased with what they've done," Ernst said.

Fulcher thanked the Soldiers in the regiment for their hard work and said they maintain the Infantry standards.

"You are the backbone of the regiment. There's not a better group of noncommissioned officers and Soldiers in the Army. Not only are you the backbone of the regiment, but you're also the keepers of our Infantry standards.

"Nobody in the world trains Soldiers better than the noncommissioned officers, Soldiers and officers standing on the field today," Fulcher said.

The Fulchers move on to Heidelberg, Germany, where he will be the chief of Current Operations, 1st Armored Division.

Rowe comes to post after serving as a senior service college student and as a School of Advanced Military Studies seminar leader.

Rowe said it was quite an achievement to take command of the regiment.

"Today is indeed an honor and it is special to assume command of this regiment of magnificent Soldiers," Rowe said.

Rowe and his wife Dale have four daughters, Therese, Hannah, Natalie and Katherine.

CID believes barracks break-in not racially motivated

USAIC Public Affairs Office

The Criminal Investigation Division identified three suspects involved in the barracks break-in that occurred on Kelley Hill the night of June 21.

One of the room's occupants, Pfc. Steven L. Hill, Headquarters and Headquarters Battery, 1st Battalion, 10th Field Artillery, 3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division (Mechanized), told investigators someone took stereo equipment and a television set and painted racial slurs on the room's walls.

While the investigation is ongoing, officials said they are certain the incident was not racially motivated.

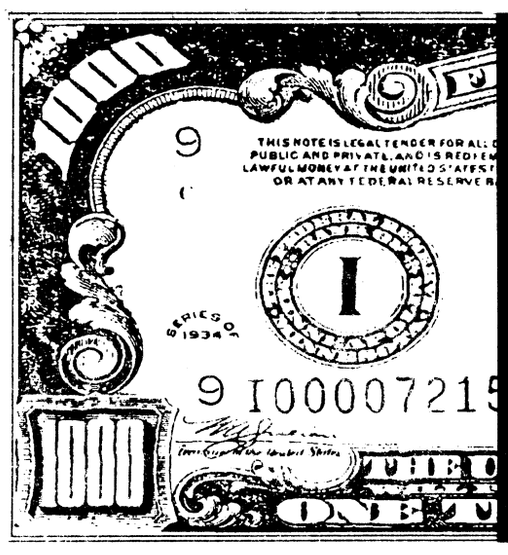
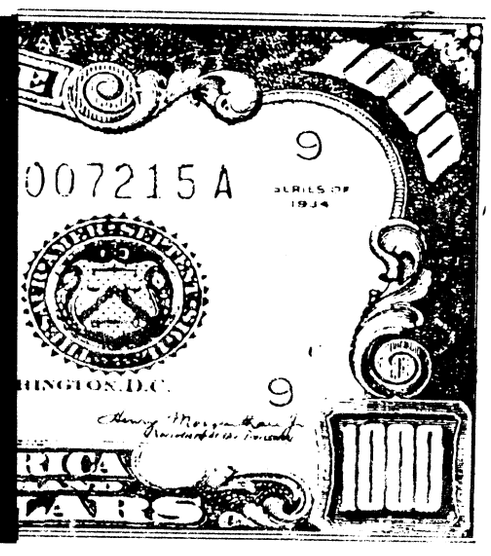
commitment to quality can be demonstrated through improved customer service or significant taxpayer savings.

Commenting on the impending ceremony, Jim King, director of the Office of Personnel Management, which has oversight for the award, noted Fort Benning's track record in customer service and product development.

"There is no doubt that the contributions Fort Benning employees have made and continue to make to the security of our nation and the safety of our Soldiers are of the highest caliber. Their commitment to customer service and their 'can-do' attitude are incontrovertible evidence of Fort Benning's right to this year's Presidential Award for Federal Quality."

Recognition for excellence is nothing new at Fort Benning. The post has earned seven quality achievement awards since 1993, including the Commander-in-Chief's Award for Installation Excellence in 1994, 1995 and 1997.





While in Washington the Fort Benning contingent will be making several presentations on quality.

Ernst will be the guest speaker July 8, before the Department of Defense's four star generals and other key leaders. The title of the speech is "Hooah!- Quality at Fort Benning."

July 9, Ernst, Col. Larry White, Fort Benning's chief of staff and Col. Hank Kinnison, director of TRADOC Systems-Soldier will present a workshop on "The Hooah Factor."

Prior to the award presentation July 10, Ernst and White will be the guest speakers for the Federal Executive Leadership Forum which consists of key leaders in the federal government and private industry.

The awards ceremony is planned for 3:15 p.m. and will be televised live on Fort Benning's TV4.

Female 'black hat' trains students

USAIC Public Affairs Office

The sight of 250 airborne students running in formation at Fort Benning wouldn't be unusual for the home of the Airborne School, but this group of students is just a little different because they are being lead by the only female airborne instructor currently working in the Army.

Sgt. Sonia Lewis, Company B, 1st Battalion (Airborne), 507th Infantry, 11th Infantry Regiment, has been working at the Airborne School as a "black hat" for more than three years.

"I wasn't the first female to be an airborne instructor, but I am the only one here now," Lewis said. "I think there is another female instructor getting ready to join us soon."

In addition to work she did with the Airborne School, Lewis also spent a lot of time developing herself professionally. She is a senior parachutist and jump master and she wears a black star above her silver jump wings. She is also a recent graduate of the U.S. Army Pathfinder School.

One of the things Lewis said she brings to the Airborne School is some additional incentive for the female students attending the school.

"I'm especially concerned about the females coming down here to Airborne School," Lewis said. "I think too many fall out of the runs because they're giving up too early in their mind — long before their body says quit.

"I want the students to know they need to come down here ready to give 100 percent and say deep down in their hearts that they aren't going to let anyone degrade them or make them feel like they don't belong here. I think seeing me leading a formation and leading the runs is a good influence for the students."

Lewis said Airborne School is a once-in-a-lifetime opportunity, and all of the students there, whether they are female or male, have to give 100 percent to graduate.

One of Lewis' former co-workers, who is now an instructor with the Pathfinder School, said Lewis is an outstanding Soldier.

"She's very respected in this community," said Staff Sgt. Paul Cromer. "She's a hard worker and she's also a good runner who ran on the post's 10-miler team. We will all miss her when she's gone."

Sgt. Michael Sparks, a student in the Pathfinder School with Lewis said she brings out a lot of good thoughts in the people she works with.

"After you meet Sergeant Lewis, you are reminded of the thousands of outstanding men and women who have come from all across the United States to defend our country and make the Army move forward," Sparks said. "As bad as situations can get, there is always a 'hard corps' of competent people who will stand up to the challenges when the going gets tough. You can count on people like Sergeant Lewis. As long as people like her are in the Army, we'll have what it takes when it counts most."

"I am going to Hawaii as my next duty station," Lewis said. "I'm getting married to a Marine in the next two weeks, he lives in Hawaii right now."

Sgt. Michael Sparks

Sgt. Sonia Lewis prepares to board a helicopter during her recent trip through the Pathfinder School.

As a reward for her tour as an Airborne School instructor, Lewis received a Meritorious Service Medal.

K-9 units train for multiple missions

By Sgt. Ron McLendon II
Military District of Washington

A dog is known as man's best friend, but for the Fort Myer, Va., Military Police K-9 Unit, the relationship between dog and man goes much deeper than friendship.

Dogs play a number of important law-enforcement roles within the community, the nation and overseas.

"They're like our kids," said Sgt. Bonnie Bierzychudek. Bierzychudek, an explosives-dog handler who has been with the unit since July 1995.

"It's a bond we have ... and we're definitely attached," she said, adding that the bond makes it enjoyable to come to work each day.

For example, Spc. Brian L. Sommer talked of working a 24-hour shift at the kennel, then staying for an extra four hours, then coming back later in the day to train with his dog, Tex.

Dogs are usually fed by their individual handlers, Bierzychudek said. The only exception is when a Soldier who has charge-of-quarters duty feeds the dogs overnight, she added.

To help initiate and stimulate the bond between handler and dog, the MPs use a lot of positive reinforcement and verbal praise. They also give the dogs rubber balls as a reward for good behavior, according to Sommer.

He said it is impressive to see how much control the handler has, and how much love the dog and handler actually have for each other.

Sommer has only been with the unit a couple of months since returning from more than two months of training at Lackland Air Force Base, Texas. Lackland is where all military working dogs and handlers are trained, Sommer explained.

Fort Myer has 16 working dogs in its kennels, Bierzychudek said. All are patrol certified and nine are dual certified — as patrol and detection dogs.

All the dogs now coming out of Lackland are dual certified — which has become mandatory, Sommer explained.

The dogs not dual certified will be sent back to Lackland for whatever certification they are missing, Bierzychudek said.

For patrol work, dogs are trained on the six stages of controlled aggression, according to Sommer.

Those stages include: false run, false run to bite, stand-off, search and call by, search and reattack, and escort.

Sommer explained that in a false run, the dog sits next to its

AWE proves effective in the desert of Fort

By Gerry J. Gilmore
Army News Service

Did the Army's prototype force of the future perform according to design in March during the Advanced Warfighting Experiment (AWE) at Fort Irwin, Calif.?

The answer is "yes," said Gen. William M. Hartzog, U.S. Army Training and Doctrine Command's Commanding General. Hartzog briefed reporters and some members of Congress about the March AWE recently at the U.S. House of Representatives' Rayburn Office Building in Washington, D.C.

AWEs, such as the one performed at Fort Irwin in March, are used to test the application of new technologies on mock battlefields.

The 1st Brigade, 4th Infantry Division, the Army's digitized, experimental force (EFOR), matched wits and weaponry with the lower-tech opposition force (OPFOR), played by the 11th Armored Cavalry Regiment, during the AWE at Irwin. The EXFOR brought along its technologically-enhanced M-1A2 Abrams tanks, Bradley Fighting Vehicles, howitzers and more from Fort Hood, Texas, to the National Training Center.

"We think this outfit (EXFOR), has better doctrinal flexibility," Hartzog said. "It can be used ... (across) the spectrum of conflict. Ultimately, our goal is to build something that can operate comfortably as a full-dimensional force, able to be moved in different parts of any task we are given."

The 1st Brigade troops used Information Age equipment, such as laptop computers, vehicle locator systems, dual-purpose, voice-digital radios, night-fighting equipment and anti-fratricide devices. These high-tech enhancements are designed to improve command and control on the battlefield, Hartzog said.

Hartzog described a mock battle at Fort Irwin between the EXFOR and the OPFOR where the technologically advanced force used its enhanced information-gathering ability to quickly dominate and destroy most of its opponent's forces with minimal losses. In the past, he said, mock battles were fought at Fort Irwin in one of three large areas, or corridors. This time, the EXFOR's area of operations covered all three corridors.

"We had the Experimental Force take control of the entire area," Hartzog said. "We put it under the control of one brigade commander and we asked ourselves if this (new technology and doctrine) would enable us to cover more battle space, or not.

"This mock battle took place on the 14th day of the exercise. On this particular day, the brigade commander of the Experimental Force had control of the entire National Training Center. The enemy was in the Western Corridor. His mission was to attack to the east. The EXFOR brigade's mission was to defend in the eastern part of the reservation."

The conventional force began a movement south, Hartzog said,

IOBC completes final mission before graduation

By 2nd Lt. Stephen Padilla
Co. A, 2nd Battalion, 11th Inf Regt.

Students from Company A, 2nd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment, Infantry Officer Basic Course (IOBC), recently participated in the final exercise of its cycle.

The exercise began with an insertion by Blackhawk helicopters into a landing zone near the McKenna military operations in urban terrain (MOUT) site. Third Platoon secured the landing zone for the rest of the company. Each platoon was able to use helicopters to move from Lawson Army Air Field to the MOUT site.

Co. A's mission was to perform a deliberate attack on enemy positions on Terrell Hill. Reconnaissance elements were deployed to get a better picture of enemy positions on the objective once the company arrived at the objective rally point.

At 4:15 a.m., the company simulated a five-minute artillery preparation of the objective which allowed the supporting elements to get into position. Once completed, 3rd Platoon, the support-by-fire element, began suppressing the objective. 1st Platoon, the main effort, began assaulting the objective.

About 4:20 a.m., Co. A performed a deliberate attack against enemy positions. Third Platoon moved out first to gain a support-by-fire position to provide suppressive fire for the rest of the company. First Platoon moved out to get into their attack positions and to be the main effort of the operation. The rest of the company was used as a supporting effort of the operation.

Day two of the exercise consisted of conducting reconnaissance of named areas of interest (NAIs). These NAIs can be enemy cache sites, enemy battle positions or other areas where enemy activity is suspected.

Squads from each platoon patrolled areas around Terrell Hill in order to find these NAIs. Two squads from 3rd Platoon were held in reserve as a quick reaction force for use in the event of contact being made with a numerically superior enemy.

Along with the patrols, individual platoons conducted ambushes, established patrol bases and performed casualty evacuation throughout the night until mid-morning of day three. The lieutenants performed these tasks to more closely simulate battlefield conditions.

The afternoon of the third day, the students gathered and consolidated in an assembly area in order to prepare for their final exercise, an attack into McKenna MOUT Site. The operation started around 7 p.m. with reconnaissance elements of 4th Platoon moving out to gain information on the enemy positions.

The other platoons conducted rehearsals and prepared for the mission. Their preparation included ammunition resupply, rest and finalizing plans. Third Platoon moved out around 1 a.m. and linked up with 4th Platoon and moved into their objective rally point, which was located approximately 400 meters from the objective. These two elements were the main effort of the operation.

Similar to the beginning of the operation, each platoon was flown out on Blackhawk helicopters back to Lawson Army Airfield where they marched back to the company area.

news from the front

498th Medical Co. (Air Ambulance)

Having set up more than 220,000 metric tons of equipment, flown in support of multi-national mass casualty exercises, transported land mine dog-sniffing teams, supported the pope and saving lives, the time has flown during the first half of the Balkans mission.

In recent weeks, many of the Soldiers from the 498th Medical Company (Air Ambulance), 36th Engineer Group (Combat), have been able to take advantage of the newly released Balkans task force rest and relaxation policy. Approximately 35 Soldiers will be returning home for a two-week visit.

Through regularly scheduled support flights in and out of Bosnia, the Soldiers arrive in Philadelphia and then onto their final destinations for some well deserved relaxation. Several have returned to Fort Benning, while others have gone on to other areas of the country to meet with family and friends.

With daily manning strengths and leadership requirements, several morale, welfare and recreation weekend trips have been established to nice locales in Hungary and along the Adriatic Sea. These alternative opportunities support those unable to depart the Balkans for the lengthy time offered under the R&R policy.

The Soldiers said they are packing up the leaders and sending them off for the weekend together

"We've got to get them out of our hair so they can let off a little steam," said one Soldier.

"And so we can get some work done around here," said another.

The Family Support Group continues to accumulate clothing and toy items in support of the local orphanage near the Blue Factory base at Tuzla, Bosnia. In addition, they recently had a successful bake sale at Wal-Mart in Columbus to raise money for future excursions to Callaway Gardens and an upcoming ice cream social for the children.

The rear detachment again thanks all of Fort Benning for it's support of our Soldiers and family members.

DOGS: Military trains handlers, animals for mission handler without moving or biting as a perpetrator approaches the handler. That shows the control of the handler and the obedience of the dog, Sommer said.

A false run to bite results in the dog biting a potential attacker who comes within five feet of the handler.

A stand-off occurs when the dog is called off an attack without biting as the person gives up.

During search and call by, a dog sits next to a handler while the officer searches a suspect without incident.

Search and reattack occurs when an officer searches a suspect and the suspect attempts to injure or run from the officer, Sommer said.

The escort is for that stage in which the dog is along with a handler escorting a suspect.

Most dogs in use at Fort Myer were initially trained separate from their handlers by instructors at the school. They are paired with handlers after their arrival here, according to Bierzychudek.

Spc. Matthew Dimmick, an explosives-detection-dog handler, said that only one team in the unit -- Spc. Aaron Harper and his dog, Don — was trained as a team at Lackland.

Albrecht said under a pilot program, the school at Lackland is trying to train more dogs and handlers together when school space and the needs of the services and installations allow.

Patrol dogs are also trained to search buildings for suspects, to scout in open fields and to obey the commands of the handler.

Detection dogs are trained to detect five different narcotic odors and nine different explosives odors, Sommer said.

Different government agencies, including the Secret Service and U.S. Customs, take full advantage of the highly-regarded unit, Bierzychudek said.

"We are a huge support for the Secret Service," she added. "They know our dogs."

"We work hand in hand with EOD (explosive ordnance disposal) when we do sweeps for the president, vice-president and heads of state," Bierzychudek said.

While on missions throughout the country and world, the Fort Myer K-9 Unit has produced results.

Last month, Sgt. Denise Grosnick and her dog, Freddy, a German shepherd, found 265 pounds of marijuana while on a support mission for customs in El Paso, Texas, according to Bierzychudek.

She added that Dimmick and his dog located 963 pounds of cocaine, with a street value of $43 million, in a tractor-trailer earlier this year.

Constant training and demanding schedules, the Soldiers said, do not distract from their job satisfaction.

"Sometimes I feel like I don't want to come to work. Then I think about my dog and I want to come in," Sommer said. "It keeps you motivated," he said.

EXFOR: Proves effective

which was picked up by the EXFOR's regular forward reconnaissance troops, special forward observers working with the artillery, called Strikers, and unmanned aerial vehicles (intelligence-gathering, remote-controlled drone aircraft).

"This movement left the OPFOR commander a bit exposed and gave the EXFOR commander the confidence of seeing the 'picture' of movement as it occurred," Hartzog said. The EXFOR commander then ordered that an air-delivered minefield volcano be placed in the path of the OPFOR to slow down the movement of its motorized rifle regiment. The EXFOR's forward reconnaissance elements "were arranged in depth," Hartzog said, to relay coordinates to the artillery.

"The OPFOR began to take casualties as it entered the minefield," Hartzog said. "The OPFOR lost more troops and equipment as it attempted to move through the minefield. By the time the OPFOR cleared the minefield, the EXFOR's artillery was firing with lethal effect.

"The artillery knocked out the front echelons of the advancing tanks," Hartzog said. "In this part of the battlefield, the OPFOR lost a third of its total strength."

Under recently released Quadrennial Defense Review (QDR) proposals, the Army is to receive an additional $1 billion in funding to be used to speed up its Force XXI efforts. The QDR is the Department of Defense's evaluation of America's defense needs from now until 2015.

CG recognizes civilians

By Cpl. Marc G. Turchin
Bayonet staff writer

Two men who recently said goodbye to Department of Defense (DOD) service had a combined total of 90 years of service to this country.

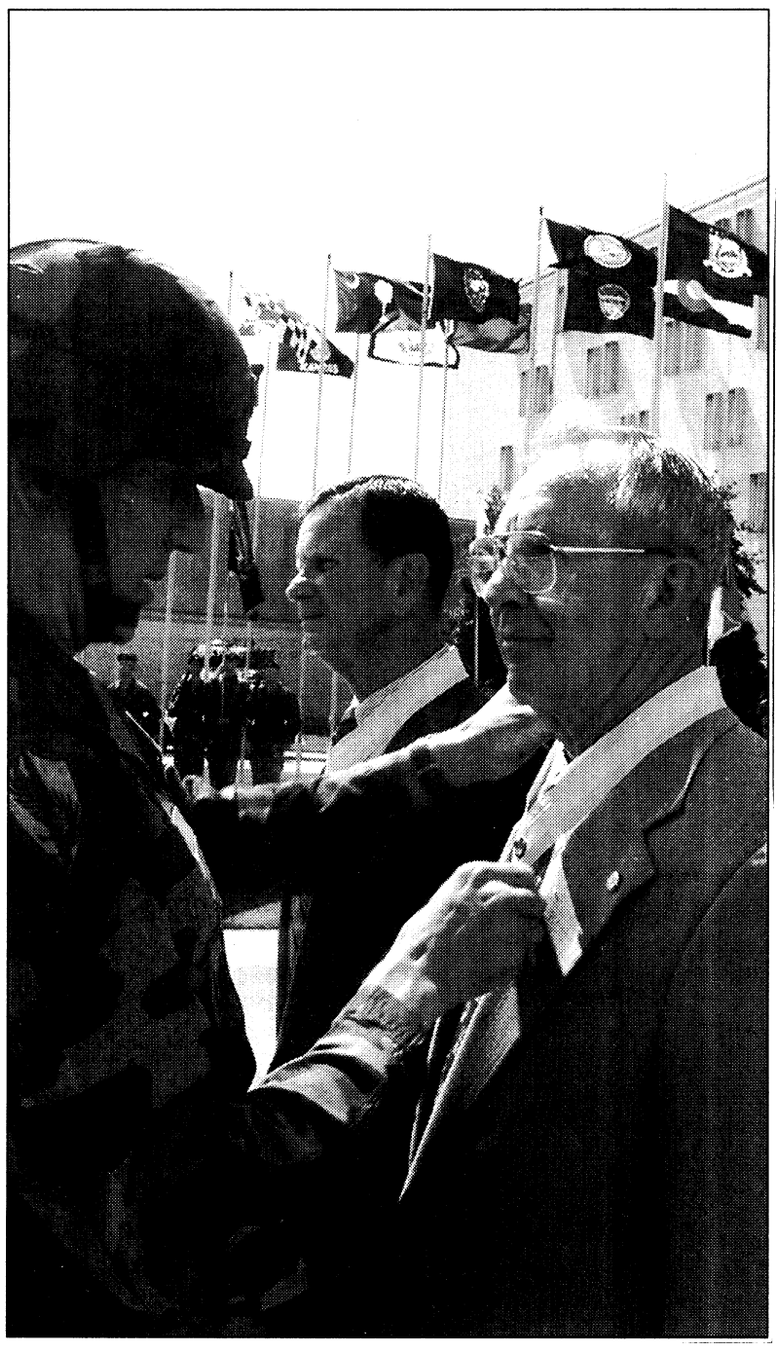
Retired Command Sgts. Maj. James J. Gallagher and Edgar C. Burkhalter retired from DoD services June 25 during a special retreat ceremony conducted in front of Infantry Hall's Iron Mike statute.

A crowd of friends, family and colleagues gathered as the two patriots were awarded the Order of St. Maurice by the National Infantry Association. The medals were presented to the men by Fort Benning Commander Maj. Gen. Carl F. Ernst.

Burkhalter finishes his career with 44 years of total federal service. He served 25 years in the Infantry and 19 years in the DoD.

Gallagher leaves with 46 years of service — 30 years in the Army and 16 years as a civilian. Gallagher once served as Fort Benning's post command sergeant major.

Ernst said both men are known even beyond the post's gates.



"These two great Soldiers and civilians are known throughout the Army. We shall miss them at Fort Benning," Ernst said.

Burkhalter's and Gallagher's interest in the Infantry stems from their careers in the Infantry.

Burkhalter was awarded the Purple Heart and the Cross of Gallantry while Gallagher was awarded the Silver Star and the Bronze Star.

Burkhalter said he loved the times spent at Fort Benning.

"Very few people get the opportunity to spend the great majority of their lifetime doing the things they really want to do," Burkhalter said. "I was fortunate twice in that area."

Commanding General Maj. Gen Carl F. Ernst presents Jim Gallagher with the Order of Saint Maurice after giving the award to Jim Burkhalter.

Gallagher said he never thought he'd see this day.

"This is an honor," he said. "It's an honor I certainly never dreamed would occur.

"Like Ed, you wonder why when you've had so much fun in a career and such great adventure, challenges and excitement that you would even look for a reward when you finish your career," Gallagher said.

Networking helps long distance job search

Army Career and Alumni Program

Many Soldiers transitioning from the Army at Fort Benning are looking for employment at locations many miles from Fort Benning.

When looking for employment at distant locations, Soldiers will find their job search is different from those staying in the Columbus area. The difference involves the issues of research, networking, time available to find employment and the cost of doing a long-distance search.

In searching for a job long distance, researching the job market may be difficult. For Soldiers who are not familiar with the new job location or who are returning home after five or more years, the market will be a big unknown. In lieu of a list of research steps, it is important to remember the words of Diane Ermi, an Army Career and Alumni Program counselor.

"Those doing research for distant jobs should first visit the Job Assistance Center where they will be provided information and other services that will meet their research requirements," Ermi said.

After completion of basic research, the next issue to be addressed is networking. In the job search process, networking is absolutely essential, even if the job location is many miles away.

If family members or friends are at the location, they should be contacted immediately so they can start to provide information about the job market and also the names of other individuals who can be contacted for additional information. Most of this networking will be done over the phone; therefore practicing telephone techniques is important, Ermi said.

The next issue involves finding the time to actually visit the new location for at least a week, if possible. All too often, Soldiers, particularly those going back home, use this time as a mini-vacation with the emphasis on play rather than job searching. Instead of playing, gather information, build your network and visit the State Employment Service and, hopefully, potential employers, Ermi said.

Finally, the issue of cost cannot be ignored. Be sure to include extra travel and telephone expenses in your job search budget. Keep in mind that long distance travel by air is very expensive if made on short notice and that telephone calls made during the business day are usually more expensive. Therefore, plan your travel early and know what you want to say when you make your call. A script might even help.

Use the help of the Job Assistance Center in conducting your long distance job search. You will be successful and the journey will be enjoyable, Ermi said.

School's out but officials meet, discuss activities

By Spc. Lisa M. Hibbert
Bayonet staff writer

While the students are enjoying their summer vacation, Fort Benning's school board members and the schools' staff met Monday to discuss year-end issues and to plan the upcoming school year.

This month's meeting opened with presentations from Tommye Woods, director of Special Education, and Kathy Einhorn, director of Curriculum and Testing. Woods and Einhorn presented status reports on the system's special education and prekindergarten programs to the board.

In her presentation, Woods discussed the types of students that comprise Fort Benning's special education program. The special needs of the students range from information processing deficits to intellectual impairments to other health impairments, which include blindness and deafness. Nearly 370 students participate in the special education program.

This year the program was monitored by the Department of Defense. Evaluation criteria were school records, teaching practices and what actually took place in the classrooms. The special education program was recognized for being the only one in 20 years to pass all the monitoring standards.

It was not the only program to receive recognition; the post prekindergarten program also received favorable praise. Einhorn discussed the success of the program and evaluated its first year with the board members.

"Cathryn Calamari, a consultant for the High Scope program (the basis for Fort Benning's prekindergarten program), visited Fort Benning and said we have the most dedicated and creative group of teachers she has ever worked with," Einhorn said.

The schools conducted transition meetings for the parents of the pre-K students to let them know what to expect in kindergarten. At the conclusion of the meetings, the parents were surveyed, and 98 percent of the parents surveyed said their children are more prepared because of the program.

More than 320 students were enrolled in the pre-K program.

Also at the meeting, officials approved the May consolidated lunchroom fund statement.

The monthly net income was $4,646, the current year-to-date income is $71,866 and the current fund equity is $184,566.

In her report, Dr. Dell McMullen, Fort Benning Schools superintendent, discussed happenings in the system in the month of June.

"The post Commander Maj. Gen. Carl F. Ernst visited Stowers Elementary School June 5," McMullen said. "He had the opportunity to visit the media learning center, special education, math and science classes.

"The principals, along with Gail Wilson, Staff Development, were in Washington last week (June 23-27) for School Improvement Training," McMullen said. "Reports are that the training was fantastic with a number of nationally known trainers in student assessment, motivation and curriculum. The training supports our strategic planning process and we are excited about new strategies we can implement in the fall to help our students.

"Regarding the transfer issue, while I have not received anything in writing yet, the results of the study were that the Department of Defense Schools will be maintained on the military installations and not moved to the county," McMullen said.

People should use caution around fireworks

American Academy of Ophthalmology

Fireworks are an important part of our Independence Day celebrations. But these displays also result in numerous injuries to participants and bystanders.

In the United States, fireworks cause approximately 2,000 eye injuries each year. About one-third of these result in permanent eye damage and one-fourth in permanent vision loss or blindness.

The American Academy of Ophthalmology encourages people to view public fireworks displays rather than putting on their own shows. If an individual does use fireworks, however, the academy recommends the following guidelines:

•Use only legal devices. Legal fireworks are printed with the manufacturer's name, address and warnings on the label.

•Never allow children to handle explosive fireworks. The average age of injured persons is 13 years.

•Always wear glasses or safety goggles when lighting fireworks. Even spectators should consider wearing protective gear; about one-fourth of those injured each year are bystanders.

•Never put firecrackers in tin cans, clay pots or bottles that can shatter under impact and scatter fragments like shrapnel.

•Ignite fireworks one at a time; never ignite fireworks indoors.

•Place a bucket of water nearby to put out fires or douse fireworks that don't work.

•In the case of an eye injury, do not touch the eye. Immediately seek emergency medical attention.

For more information, visit the academy's website at www.eyenet.org.

Avoiding accidents can save lives

By Regis Beighley
Infantry Branch Safety Office

Avoidable accidents, such as slips, trips and falls, have become a major burden to Americans and the military.

According to the National Institute for Occupational Safety and Health, these statistics should provide the drive for increased safety awareness. Here are some tips to help Soldiers and their families prevent injuries:

•Keep all work and traffic areas, including stairways, clear of obstacles and keep floors dry to allow for proper traction.

•Walking from a light area into a darker one may cause individual to trip over a misplaced item or on a wet floor. Improved lighting may avoid injury.

•Do not walk too fast or run from place to place, especially if your hands are full, it may be difficult to avoid objects that are in the way.

•The soles of shoes should be slip resistant that will provide enough traction to allow for safe movement.

•Pay attention to where you are going and don't carry material that can obstruct your view. Do not wear sunglasses in low-light areas and use handrails whenever possible.

•Exercise extra caution when using ladders. Always make sure a ladder is long enough so your waist is never higher than the top rung or higher than the rung at that the side rails rest against the upper support. The ladder should extend at least three feet beyond the top of the structure you are climbing onto. Ensure the ladder is secure before climbing.

By being careful and conscious of surroundings and taking a little extra time for safety, one can be protected.

Each year, Fort Benning spends $11 million for electricity, $5 million for natural gas and $500,000 for heating fuel and propane.

All of this money comes from the installation's operating budget. Therefore, every dollar saved on energy is a dollar that can be spent on other needs of the installation. Some other good reasons to save energy include the following:

•Energy conservation helps the environment. When people burn less fossil fuel, they release fewer pollutants into the atmosphere.

•Our conservation efforts help reduce America's dependence on imported fuel.

•Conserving fuel for tactical vehicles means the availability of fuel for unit training and field exercises.

•Conserving fossil fuel now means America possesses fossil fuel for future use, while searching for alternative sources of energy.

Here are some ways you can help save energy with little or no impact to your daily routine:

•Turn off lights, computers and other electrical equipment when they're not needed.

•Avoid nonessential electrical use between the hours of 3 and 8 p.m. during the months of May through September. This lowers the electrical demand during peak periods which reduces overall electrical energy cost.

•Carpool, walk or ride a bicycle when possible to complete errands or combine into one trip when you drive.

•Insulate, weather-strip and keep your blinds or drapes closed on hot summer days. Closing drapes or blinds during the summer months reduces solar energy gain, which saves air conditioning costs.

Veterans suffer from reproductive problems

Maj. Donna Miles
American Forces Press Services

When Army Capt. Raymond Topp returned from Desert Storm six years ago, he and his wife Stephanie had dreams of starting a family.

But the Topps' dreams didn't have a storybook ending. Their daughter Daley was born a year later with a serious heart problem, and their second child died eight days after birth.

Department of Veterans Affairs officials have opened a research center to study families like the Topps to see if military service has any impact on what the VA calls "reproductive health."

The center, located at the VA Medical Center in Louisville, Ky., is researching the potential link between military service and the ability not only to reproduce, but to produce healthy babies.

Dr. Kenneth Kizer, VA's undersecretary for health, said the goal is to resolve unanswered questions. Among them: Do military personnel have more birth defects? Do military personnel have more stillbirths or miscarriages? Are there more problems in pregnancy, either among women who have been on active duty or the wives of men who have been on active duty?

"No one has looked at this," Kizer said in an interview with Armed Forces Radio and Television Service. "What are the consequences? What are the implications for our active duty people, particularly later in life? Those are questions that are just not answered."

Topp admitted he sometimes wonders if his military service affected his children's health. "During Desert Storm, there were the oil wells and the oil fires. We were always in mission-oriented protective posture (MOPP) gear, and we never were sure what we were being exposed to," he said.

But he acknowledged no concrete evidence has ever linked those exposures to his children's health.

"Even though we've had lots of exposures, after Desert Storm and going to the field and the normal hazards of being in military life, we never could really pinpoint anything," he said.

Dr. Jerald Hoffman, a researcher at the center, said that's what the staff is trying to do. They are conducting two clinical projects, one to measure the effects of Agent Orange exposure in Vietnam veterans and the other testing blood samples from Gulf War veterans to search for mustard gas exposure. Hoffman said the staff is running several basic research projects, too. One focuses on environmental toxins that either act as, or affect, male and female hormones.

But Kizer said so far, no studies at the VA center or elsewhere have identified a higher incidence of birth defects among children of veterans, including Gulf War veterans, as compared to civilians.

Dr. Alicia Armstrong, the assistant professor of obstetrics and gynecology at the Uniformed Services University of the Health Sciences in Bethesda, Md., said it's important to keep studying the issue.

"Looking at large numbers, it doesn't appear from the preliminary analysis that there is an increased risk," she said. "But that doesn't mean that for an individual family that there wouldn't be questions and concerns. And I think it's important for us to continue to do research in this area to answer those questions."

Topp's wife, Stephanie, said the VA research center might answer what she calls the most important questions for military families: "Did something cause this, and could something be prevented next time for somebody else?"

Kizer said the VA's research effort is a big step toward doing just that, not only for military members and their families today, but also for those yet to serve.

"As we look to the future, it appears that warfare is becoming even more dirty and more contaminated than previous wars," Kizer said. "The Gulf War is a good example of what's likely to come: smoke from the oil wells, concerns about chemical and biological warfare, the need to take different types of medications to potentially protect against illness.

"All of these raise the question, Is this going to have some effect, ultimately, on the individual or their offspring? That's what we're working to find out. It's something we owe our veterans."

Insurance service offers coverage tips for apartment renters

Georgia Insurance Information Service

Members of the Georgia Insurance Information Service (GIIS) said it is very important for those who rent town homes, condominiums, apartments or homes to obtain renters insurance as the only sure way to protect their assets in case of fire, theft or similar mishaps.

According to David Colmans, GIIS executive director, the best way to protect against losing everything is to be prepared. Recent apartment and condominium fires in and around Columbus make this issue very timely, he said, but the need for such insurance never changes. The following information is a thumbnail sketch of what renter's insurance is about and why it is so important.

Who needs insurance?

People need renter's insurance if they rent and have stereos, cameras, computers, clothing, jewelry, bicycles, televisions or other valuables they can't afford to replace if stolen, damaged or destroyed.

A renter's policy can protect investments, but a policy must be chosen wisely to be sure all possessions are covered, and that you don't purchase too much coverage. This information can help a consumer make a decision about whether or not one may need renter's insurance.

If you rent, your landlord's insurance does not cover your personal property or your clothes, stereo, furniture, television, bicycle, jewelry, personal computer, artwork or other items against destruction or loss. Renter's insurance, however, gives you both property and liability coverage.

Renter's insurance will protect against losses due to fire or smoke, lightning, vandalism, theft, explosion, windstorm and water damage of plumbing.

Renter's insurance will also cover you within your policy limits if someone slips and falls in your home or is injured by any of your possessions and then sues. The insurance should cover your responsibility to other people injured at your home or elsewhere, and include legal defense costs if you are taken to court.

Common questions

Q. Does renter's insurance cover all my possessions?

A. It depends. Some possessions — jewelry, computers — are often subject to a per-category theft limit (for example, some policies have a $5,000 limit for computers).

When seeking information on renter's insurance policies, ask about the various category limits and how they apply to expensive items you own. You may purchase a floater, providing additional coverage for specific items not included in your basic policy.

Q. Is my property covered away from home?

A. Yes, but coverage may be limited. Restrictions in terms and the amount of coverage might apply (from 10 percent of your personal property coverage to full value). Ask your agent for details.

Your liability coverage does not change.

Q. Can I purchase a renter's policy with my roommates?

A. If you live in a group house or share an apartment and want to purchase renter's insurance, be aware that the regulations vary state to state and policies vary significantly from company to company.

Find out what regulations apply in this state. Then, shop around to find an insurance company that can accommodate your situation.

Also, find out whether your policy needs to be updated if you get a new roommate or if all your roommates need to be named under the policy.

Q. What about unmarried couples?

A. Some insurance companies now allow unmarried couples, who have been living together, to obtain coverage. Some policies automatically extend coverage to any future resident of a policyholder's household who fits the definition of domestic partner.

Q. What happens if my rented or borrowed items are stolen?

A. Items that are "in your possession" are covered under a standard renter's policy.

Q. What if my insurance company does not respond to a claim?

A. Your state insurance department or local consumer protection office can answer questions on filing claims and also take complaints.

Q. Is my bicycle or car covered by renter's insurance?

A. Your bike is protected by a standard renter's insurance policy. Motor vehicles are not covered. A separate insurance policy is needed to protect your car, van or motorcycle.

Buying renter's insurance

Some tips for purchasing renter's insurance follow:

•Take an inventory. Before purchasing, make an itemized list of everything you own with price estimates and purchase dates (if possible). Your inventory will help ensure that you purchase the right amount of insurance — not too much or too little.

Also, an inventory will help make filing a claim easier. Make copies of this inventory and keep it in a safe place outside of your home (at work, in a safe-deposit box or friend's house).

Take photographs or a video of your property: this can be helpful when filing a claim.

•Ask about theft limits. For example, most renter's policies have a $1,000 total limit on jewelry that is stolen, a $3,000 to $10,000 limit for computers and $2,500 to $10,000 for silverware or flatware.

Policies vary, so ask. Ask for a list of standard coverage limits so you know whether you'll need to buy a floater, which provides additional coverage for some of your items.

•Ask about cash or replacement value. Your policy can insure possessions one of two ways for either the cash or the replacement value.

Cash value coverage takes into account the age and condition of items at the time of damage or loss. Replacement value pays today's cost of a new item when replaced.

For instance, if your five-year-old TV is stolen, a cash value policy will pay part of the original purchase price while a replacement policy will reimburse the current price of a comparable set. Replacement value policies tend to cost more, and there may be other requirements as well.

•Inquire about deductible options. Find out about the deductible — your out-of-pocket cost. The lower the deductible, the more the policy will cost you.

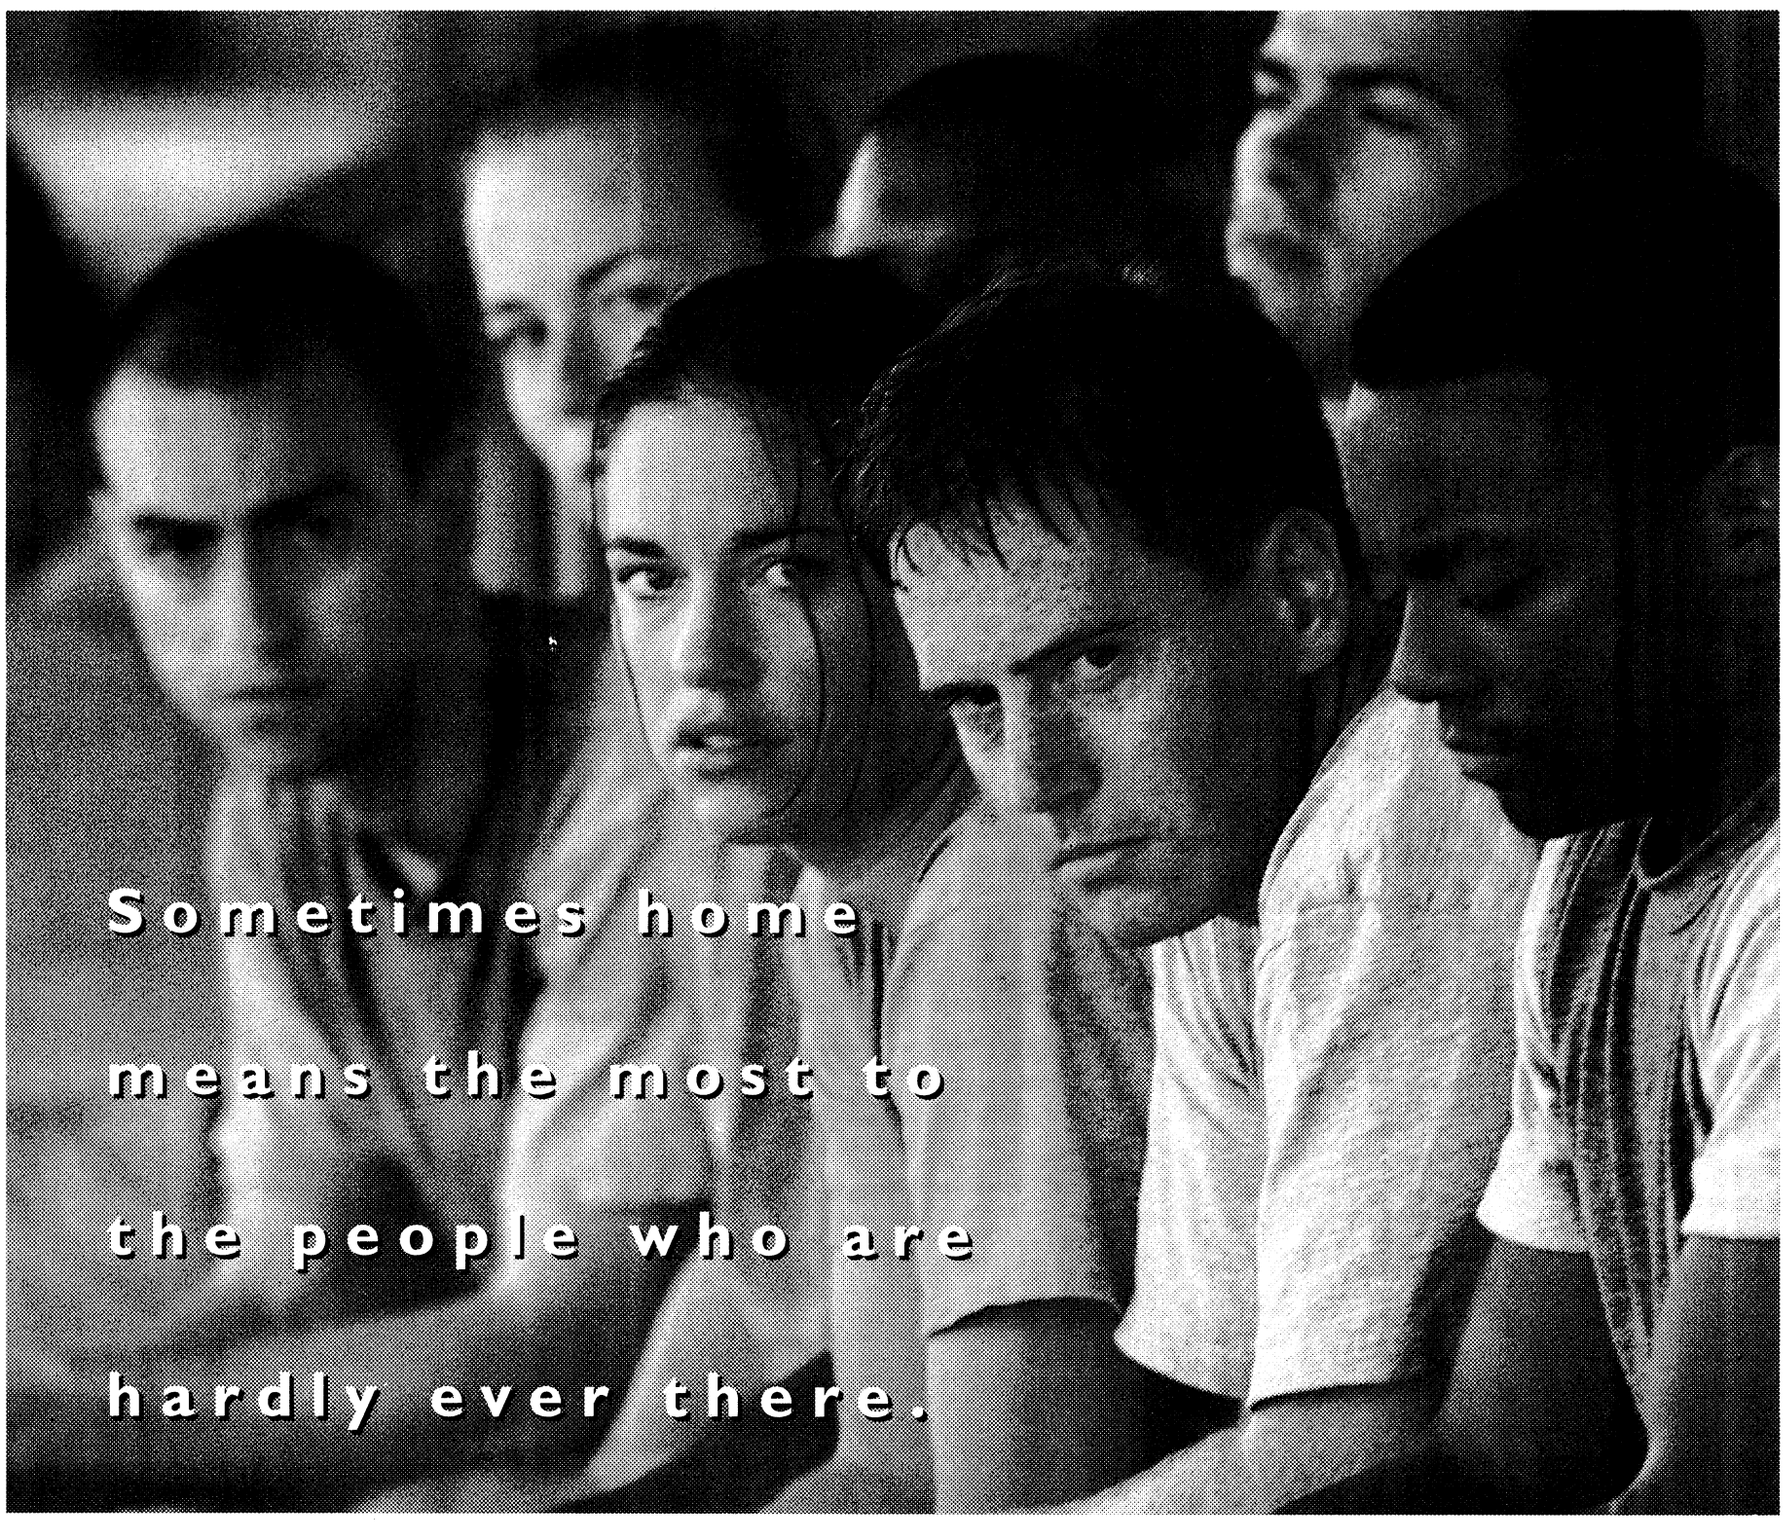
•Seek discounts. Some insurance companies may offer discounts to their auto policyholders interested in buying a renter's policy from them. You also may be eligible for discounts if your apartment or home has a security system, smoke detectors or deadbolt locks.

Additional discounts may be available depending on your age or whether you are a non-smoker. Policies vary. Examine as many options as possible.

•Shop around. Find an insurance agent or insurance company representative with whom you are comfortable. Ask friends or relatives or consult the yellow pages. Call a variety of insurance companies and agents. Ask questions.

Keep your inventory handy, so you can find the amount of coverage that is most appropriate for you ($16,000 is usually the smallest amount of coverage you can get).

•Read your policy. An insurance policy is a contract between you and your insurance company. Read the policy carefully — if you have questions or if something is unclear, call your insurance company representative.



Don't sign the contract unless you fully understand the company's responsibilities as well as your own. An insurance policy spells out several obligations for both you and the company.

For example, the company has a duty to defend the insured renter in court if the renter is sued for a covered loss. On the other hand, you must give the insurer complete, accurate and timely information.

Grips & Grins

How do I get my photo on this page?

To meet customer needs and requests, The Bayonet added a Grips and Grins Page.

The newspaper receives many requests to run awards, promotions and other photos of this type, so the staff decided to designate a page just for that.

Because of the small size of our staff and the frequency and number of the events that generally produce grip-and-grin type photos, the newspaper's policy remains that we will not send a reporter to take these type of photos, but we will run those submitted by our readers.

Photos you may submit include those from events such as balls, teas, coffees, club and organizational meetings and elections, award presentations, check presentations, official parties, dinners, dining events, dances and group photos.

If you have a good-quality, black and white or color photo of an awards or promotion ceremony, sporting team, social event, etc., send it to The Bayonet, Grips and Grins Page, U.S. Army Infantry Center Public Affairs Office, Infantry Hall, Room 606, Fort Benning, Ga., 31905. No Polaroid shots please.

ask the judge

Office of the Staff Judge Advocate

Q: My parents and I have decided it would be best if my sister, who is 15, comes to live with my wife and me at Fort Benning. Do I need to have any special documents once we get her here? Will she be entitled to any kind of military benefits?

A: You will want to obtain legal guardianship of your sister. Legally, minors are not capable of managing their personal affairs and require an adult, usually one or both of the natural parents, to act on their behalf. Good examples of this are registering for school or consenting to medical treatment for the child. However, in order to act on your sister's behalf, you must be approved by the appropriate court to act as guardian in place of the parents.

In Columbus and Fort Benning, the staff of the Office of the Staff Judge Advocate usually advise people in this situation to apply for and obtain what is called a temporary guardianship of the minor. This is a relatively quick and easy procedure, and unlike a permanent guardianship, it normally does not require a waiting period, costs less and does not require a person to post a bond in order to become the guardian.

Although it is called a "temporary" guardianship, it is open-ended; that is, it has no expiration date and continues until either the child becomes an adult or until one of the parents of the child decides they want to have it dissolved. It gives the guardian the power and authority he or she requires to take care of the child's needs. Note that a person must have the child in his or her actual physical custody in order to file for guardianship.

The procedure is quite simple. It requires the preparation and filing of a petition for guardianship in the county where the person filing resides (in Columbus and a small portion of Fort Benning, this is Muscogee County; on most of Fort Benning, this is Chattahoochee County). The petition is accompanied by the written consent of the parents of the child, if available. Muscogee County only requires the consent of one of the parents, while Chattahoochee County requires the consent of both.

If a parent does not consent or cannot be found such that consent can be obtained, the person wishing to obtain guardianship may be required to publish a notice in the newspaper for a period of time before the guardianship can be approved. The Legal Assistance Office can assist a person in preparing all of the paperwork needed to file and obtain the guardianship. The person wishing to obtain guardianship will have to pay court costs, which run from approximately $80 to $125.

As to benefits, a "ward" (that is, the minor child under a guardian's control) is entitled to a military family member id card for commissary and exchange privileges and may be enrolled for military health care services, provided that the service member expects to have custody of the ward for at least 12 months.

For answers to questions concerning this, contact the Legal Assistance Division at 545-3281 for an appointment with an attorney.

BBB offers money saving tips

Better Business Bureau

If you are having trouble paying your bills or are worried about losing your home or your car, you're not alone.

Consumer debt is at an all-time high. What's more, record numbers of consumers — more than one million in 1996 — are filing for bankruptcy.

In your effort to solve your problem, the Better Business Bureau (BBB) cautions consumers against advertisements that offer quick fixes. These ads offer the promise of debt relief, but fail to mention the relief being offered is bankruptcy.

While bankruptcy is one option to deal with financial problems, it's usually considered the option of last resort. By federal law, a bankruptcy stays on your credit report for 10 years, making it difficult for you to obtain credit in the future.

The BBB, along with the Federal Trade Commission, cautions consumers to read between the lines when faced with ads in newspapers, magazines, on the Internet or even in telephone directories that say:

•"Consolidate your bills into one monthly payment without borrowing;"

•"Stop credit harassment, foreclosures, repossessions, tax levies and garnishments. Keep your property;" and

•"Wipe out your debts. Consolidate your bills. How? By using the protection and assistance provided by federal law. For once, let the law work for you."

You'll find out later that phrases such as these often involve bankruptcy proceedings, which can hurt your credit and cost you legal fees.

Before resorting to bankruptcy, consumers who find themselves financially overextended should contact their creditors immediately and fully explain the situation. Creditors may be willing to work out a modified payment plan.

Consumers may also want to contact a nonprofit credit counseling service that will work with them and their creditors to develop a debt repayment plan. To find the credit counseling service office nearest you, call (800) 388-2227.

Such plans require you to deposit money each month with the counseling service. The service pays your creditors.

A second mortgage or home equity line of credit is another possibility, but think carefully before taking these on. While these loans may allow you to consolidate your debt, they also require you to put your home up as collateral. If you miss a payment, you could lose your home.

If none of these options are possible, and you feel that bankruptcy is your best option, be sure to seek competent legal advice first.

Fourth of July

A celebration of independence

By Chaplain (Capt.) Tom Wheatley
Ranger Training Brigade

As we celebrate our day of independence, we have much to be grateful for in this country.

Not only are we free from the despotic rule of another country, but we enjoy a tremendous amount of personal freedoms that are unprecedented.

Our founding fathers designed a system that has checks and balances so no single branch of government can have too much control over the citizens of the United States. We enjoy an amount of financial prosperity that other countries' citizens dream about — and this frees many Americans from the worry of where they will get their next meal. We don't face an inordinate amount of censorship over what we read, watch or say. We seem to have the freedom to try and reach any goal we put our minds to and this is only limited by our imagination.

But what about the tyranny of addiction — addiction to alcohol, drugs and pornography, just to name a few? With the tobacco industry under fire, we can certainly include the addiction to cigarette smoking. Can we really say that people with addictions are totally free?

What about the tyranny of prejudice or hatred that would enslave our minds to incorrect and outdated ways of thinking and behaving? Those suffering from physical or mental illnesses may not enjoy complete freedom to live their lives without restrictions. Can we ever truly be free from mental or physical limitations which plague us all?

Is there a way available to meet all of our human needs and that would help us to enjoy ultimate freedom?

In the Bible, the Book of Romans states Paul wrestles with some of these same questions. He apparently suffered from some kind of physical ailment. He wrestles with the issue of sin that keeps him chained to certain patterns of thought and behavior he knows are wrong.

As he struggles with these questions, he describes clearly the struggle each of us faces daily in our own lives.

"I know that nothing good lives in me, that is, in my sinful nature. For I have the desire to do what is good, but I cannot carry it out. For what I do is not the good I want to do; nor the evil I do not want to do — this I keep on doing.

"Now if I do what I do not want to do, it is no longer I who do it, but it is sin living in me that does it. So I find this law at work: when I want to do good, evil is right there with me.

"For in my inner being, I delight in God's law; but I see another law at work in the members of my body, waging war against the law of my mind and making me a prisoner of the law of sin at work within my members. What a wretched man I am! Who will rescue me from this body of death (Romans 7:18-24)?"

But as Paul reaches the end of this lamenting sin's control over his thought and actions, he gains a point of freedom that he celebrated and also shared with each of us for our own victory over sin and suffering. He states clearly the answer he arrived at and the answer that we can all discover:

"Thanks be to God through Jesus Christ our Lord!

"So then, I myself in my mind am a slave to God's law, but in the sinful nature a slave to the law of sin. Therefore, there is now no condemnation for those who are in Christ Jesus, because through Christ Jesus the law of the spirit of life set me free from the law of sin and death (Romans 7:258:2)."

What an amazing promise. God had already proved his willingness repeatedly to free his people from physical slavery.

Take a look at his deliverance of the children of Israel out of their bondage in Egypt through his great servant Moses and then Joshua after the change of command (see the Book of Exodus). Or how about when God released Peter from prison and later, Paul and Silas from prison (see the Book of Acts)?

But God is willing not only to release us from physical slavery or imprisonment — he also wants to free us from our addiction to sin that would govern each of us and rule us with an iron fist. As long as we are a slave to sin, can we ever really say we are truly free?

As you celebrate your freedom this Independence Day, consider how much sin claims of you in your thoughts and actions. Remember the only answer available to any of us — Christ continues to be the way God has provided for us all.

Have you accepted the freedom that only comes through Christ? If so, then you might be able to say, as did Martin Luther King, "Free at last, free at last, thank God Almighty, I'm free at last!"

Remember the Lord and his works

By Chaplain (Capt.) Terry Austin
USAIC Chaplain's Office

Jesus Christ left the Earth telling believers to remember him. In celebration of this, Christians do several things to remind us of the sacrifice Jesus made for our sins and the promise of his return, when we shall be with him forever.

In many Christian churches, you will find various items that turn our attention to God and the things of God. Even in our homes, there are crosses, Bibles, spiritual pictures, Christian magazines and so on. However, there is one area of life that should concern some people greatly.

Our society is void of many things to remind us of God. The absence of God and the things that remind us of God in our society breeds unfamiliarity. As a result of some changes in our country, succeeding and current, generations of American young people will soon be the richest mission field in the world. We have worked hard to erase God from our daily activities and our ways of life, but the effect is nothing to brag about.

The big question is, "Why do we continue to erase God from our lives when it is not in our best interests?" We hurt one another by removing God from our marriages. Family prayer is traded for fun. Sunday worship is sacrificed for rest.

Meanwhile our spiritual conditions continues to erode, but for some strange reason, we do not want to be reminded of what is good for us. The sad thing is, this kind of philosophy or thinking has saturated our society. So now we want to do whatever we want to because we have the right to.

However, because we have the legal right to do something does not mean we have divine approval to do it. The result is seen in broken homes and our troubled society.

Not only do we need to remember God, but because we have gone so far away from him, we need to return to him. Sometimes people return to God after troubled lives, and sometimes societies return to God after terrible turmoils. Whatever God would use to get our attention, I simply pray he will use it and get us back to doing the things which please him.

It is for our own good. Sometimes it is hard to conform to God's will, but it is always the best thing to do.

We shall see him one day and give the final account of everything. God remembers all and all things must be forgiven.

Listen for God. Look for God. Remember God in the morning of a new day, in every activity you do, and live in such a way to bring God's love to a troubled heart or society.

Jesus said, "Peace I leave with you, my peace I give unto you: not as the world giveth, give I unto you. Let not your heart be troubled, neither let it be afraid (John 14:27)."

It is possible to have peace in this world, but the world cannot give it. Remember God and look for him in the near future.

ARMY MARKSMANSHIP UNIT

M-9, gunsmith prove to be difference in match

By Paula J. Randall Pagán
USAMU Public Affairs Office

Service pistol shooters with the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit recently proved that when it comes to shooting service pistols, the Army is the best in the Department of Defense.

The USAMU Team won the 1997 Interservice Service Pistol Team Championship at the 38th annual Interservice Pistol Championships in Little Rock, Ark., June 16-19. Representing the Army, the USAMU competed against teams from the Army Reserve, Army National Guard, Air Force, Marine Corps, Marine Corps Reserve, Navy and Naval Reserve.

USAMU team members Steven M. King, Roger C. Jacobson, Aaron P. Schreiber and Fritz A. Ficke not only won the Service Pistol Team Match, but they won it using the USAMU's modified M-9 Beretta, a semiautomatic 9mm pistol, making them the first members of the armed forces to compete and win with the M-9.

Out of a score of a possible 300 points, King received 291 points, Schreiber got 280 points, Ficke shot 279 and Jacobson 277. With a total team score of 1,127 points out of a possible 1,200, the USAMU Blue Team beat the second-place Army Reserve Black Team by 6 points; third place went to the Army Reserve Red Team with 1,118 points.

Jacobson said he felt "absolutely fantastic" when he realized they had won the match.

"It's the best feeling in the world," Jacobson said. "This was the first major event in which we used the Beretta and the first major win with the new service pistol."

According to Michael A. Lane, noncommissioned officer in charge of the USAMU Service Pistol Team, training and the desire to win is what gave the team the edge over the other competitors.

"We worked really hard trying to develop the team and the weapons; the coaching and gunsmith support are tremendous," Lane said. "The team's dedication to the sport is unequaled; they think of themselves as winners and won't settle for less. Winning this match makes all the hard work and effort worthwhile."

But Lane and the team members agreed most of the credit goes to David E. Sams, the master pistol gunsmith of the USAMU Custom Firearms Shop, who was responsible for accurizing the weapon.

All the branches of the service, except for the USAMU Team, used the .45-caliber pistol in the service pistol match because, according to USAMU Chief of Competition David I. Boyd, up to this point, the accurized .45 has been much more accurate than the best M-9.

But being able to use the modified M-9, rather than the .45-caliber, enabled the USAMU team to win the match, according to Ficke.

"The M-9 is easier to use than the .45-caliber," Ficke said. "The other services have not been able to use it because their gunsmiths have not been able to get the accuracy up to competitive standards."

"Next year they may use the 9mm," Jacobson said. "Since we shot and won with it, everyone else will probably try to. Some of the other services already talked to Sams at the match about the work he did on the weapon."

According to Schreiber, the Service Pistol match is the most difficult match to shoot because service weapons do not have any sighting aids such as scopes; they have a heavy four-pound trigger pull and they use full-powered ammunition, which makes the weapon harder to control.

"We got our extra edge from our gunsmith, Sams, who was able to accurize our M-9 pistols to be competitive at this level," Schreiber said. "That, along with our coach, Ray Arredondo, gave us the ability to excel."

"The shooters are adapting well to the M-9 and gaining confidence in the guns, not only because of the accuracy but also because of the reliability," Sams said.

"We're looking forward to the National Championships next month where we'll be able to put the M-9 up against the .45 again," Boyd said.

The National Service Pistol Championships will be conducted July 11-21 at Camp Perry, Ohio.

Soldier readies weapon for competition

USAMU Public Affairs Office

A portion of the Army's win at the recent Interservice Championships with the M-9 pistol can be attributed to a U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit Soldier.

Since the early 1990s, David E. Sams, the master pistol gunsmith of the Custom Firearms Shop of the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit, has been working to add to the performance scope of the M-9, a semiautomatic 9mm pistol, making it as reliable on the firing line of competition as it is in combat.

Sams said not only are the modifications important to the USAMU's mission to compete and win in competitions, but it is also important to the rest of the Army. He said he believes someday the modified M-9 can be integrated into specialized Army organizations, such as Military Police or Special Forces units and, eventually, the entire Army.

"The 9mm has been highly accurized in the modification process to provide our shooters weapons of pinpoint accuracy," Sams said.

According to Sams, there were numerous problems with accuracy before the modifications were made.

Sams, who was solely responsible for the weapon's transformation from the developmental stage to production, said the process involved fine-tuning of the pistol's three main components — the barrel, the slide and the frame.

"The problem that we were seeing with the standard-issue 9mm was when it was fired, the main components were not returning to the same exact place," Sams said. "The spacing between the components was designed with loose tolerances to keep dirt and carbon from seizing the action. These loose tolerances reduced accuracy as the barrel changed position in the frame each time it was fired."

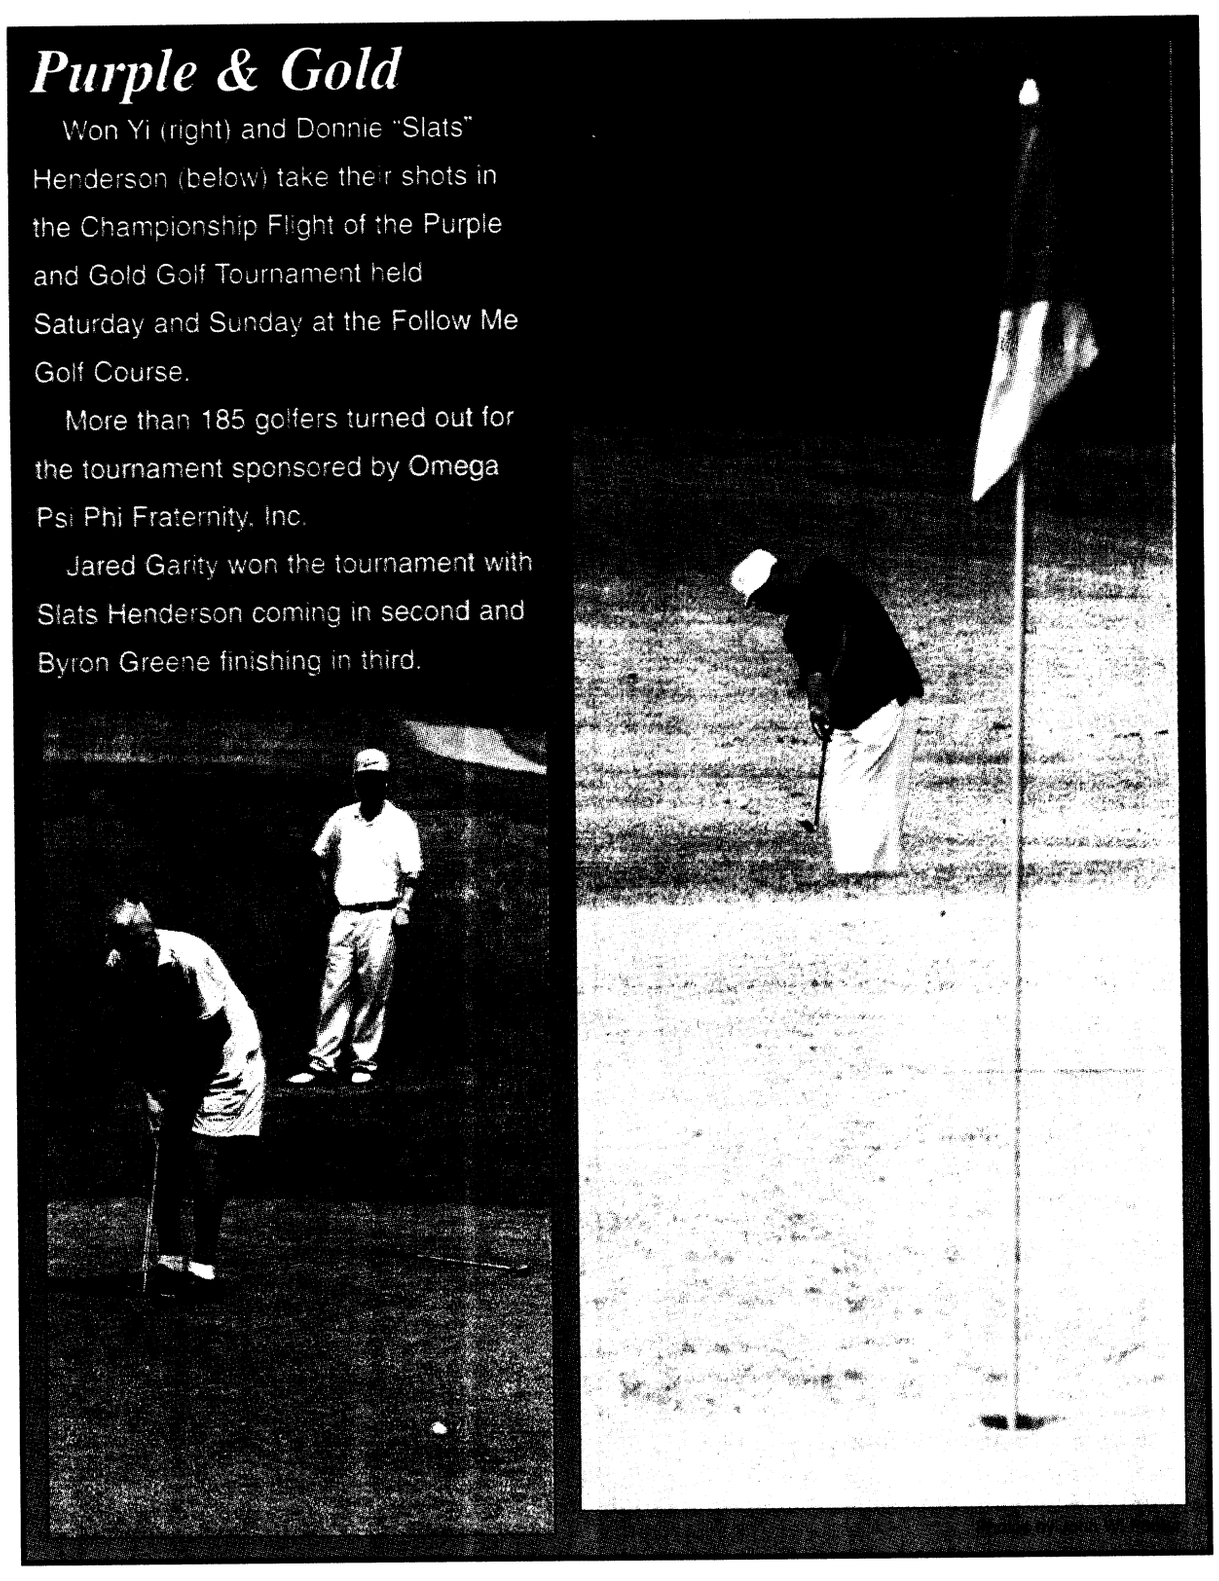
Another problem the M-9 presented, according to Sams, was repeated pounding of the steel slide against the aluminum frame caused wear on the frame, which quickly reduced accuracy.

To counteract these shortcomings, Sams placed steel inserts in the pistol's frame to act as a buffer against the slide. He also replaced the weapon's barrel with a match-grade barrel and then increased the diameter of the barrel to fit more snugly in the slide. He also placed set screws in the slide to stabilize the bottom rear of the barrel.



"The result is you have a slide that's tightened to the frame and a barrel that's tightened to the slide, which reduces tolerances within the weapon and allows greater accuracy," Sams said.

Army 10-Miler set for October in DC

By Anders Smith
Military District of Washington News Service

The 13th annual Army 10-Miler will be held Oct. 12. The largest 10-mile race in the United States, it is widely recognized as one the nation's premier races and a high point in the Army's year.

Co-hosted by the Military District of Washington (MDW) and the Association of the U.S. Army, the race is open to all ages and abilities. Proceeds from the race benefit Soldier and Soldier-family programs.

"This year's race continues the great tradition of the Army 10-Miler," race coordinator Paul Banta said. Banta is with MDW, which is conducting the race this year independently from the Headquarters, Army Recreation Services. "We are excited about making the race the best one yet," Banta said.

One way the race is different will be its ability to communicate to the rest of the Army and the public through its own web page, which can be accessed directly or from the MDW home page on the web at www.mdw.army.mail.

The page will provide information about all aspects of the race, from fees and registration to awards and race times, updated regularly with new information.

For example, individuals, teams or corporations wanting to participate in the race will be able to download a registration form.

Registrations for individuals must be postmarked by Sept. 26 and team registrations must be postmarked by Sept. 19.

For those without Internet access, the Pentagram will carry further information as the race date approaches, as will such outlets as Metro Sports Magazine.

Race information is also available by telephone at (202) 685-3361 or DSN 325-3361.

Docks offer reliable spot for bass fishing

By D. Hegel and S. Price
Johnson® and Evinrude® Outboard

If you're looking for a reliable place to catch bass this summer, boat docks and piers may offer one of your best opportunities.

That's the advice of professional tournament angler Denny Brauer, who nearly won the 1994 Bass Masters Classic© world championship of bass fishing by concentrating on docks.

"While it is true that boat docks are generally not very exciting places to fish, they normally do hold bass," said the angler, "and bass may spawn around them. I know of a number of tournaments that have been won strictly by fishing boathouses.

"Boathouses and even plain piers offer bass cover, shade, protection and a reliable food source, so it's natural for them to stay around them. On lakes without much shoreline cover, or on clear lakes that have a great deal of boating and skiing pressure, boathouses may offer the best fishing opportunities on the entire lake."

Brauer said boathouses closest to the mouth of a cove or the entrance to a tributary creek are frequently the most productive because of their access to deeper water, but this is not always true.

"In early spring when bass are still moving shallow, the boathouses out on the points of a cove are the first cover available for the bass, so they may stop on them," he said. "Later, however, the bass may move further back into the cove or creek, especially if boathouses there have abundant cover around them.

"In fact, if you find a boathouse where the owners have put out a lot of brush or trees, you'll probably find bass around it throughout the year. The brush is usually put out for crappie, but it will also draw bass, bream and even catfish."

The pro's favorite lure for boathouse fishing is a 1/2-ounce rattling jig, normally with a medium-sized pork or plastic trailer attached.

"Jigs are effective around boathouses because you can present them a lot of different ways," explained Brauer. "I like to pitch them around the corners when I first approach, but I'll flip them when I get closer and then I'll skip them to get underneath the cover.

One presentation that works often for Brauer is known as "shaking." After the jig reaches the bottom, Brauer raises his rod tip slightly and starts shaking it.

"This gives the jig a lot of action and motion, but it keeps it in the same place," Brauer explained. "I believe it attracts bass to the lure and then entices them to strike. The rattle in the jig is much louder, too, when I shake it, and I think that also helps attract fish."

Other retrieves Brauer has found successful include both hopping and swimming the lure back after it settles on the bottom.

"You just have to keep experimenting until you find something that draws a strike," said the Missouri pro. "Fish all around the pilings and look for brush around the edges, and bring your lure right through the middle of it. If bass are there, they'll bite."

Spc. Fred Shaw inspects the gas lines of one of the vehicles prior to the 63rd's departure for Fort Stewart.

63rd Eng Co deploys to Fort Stewart

By Spc. Brian R. Voller
Bayonet staff writer

Soldiers from the 63rd Engineer Company (Combat Support Equipment), 36th Eng. Group (Combat), loaded up several heavy equipment transports (HET) and headed for Fort Stewart, Ga., Tuesday.

The group of 128 combat engineers was tasked to travel to Fort Stewart to assist the 92nd Combat Engineer Battalion (Heavy) with the renovation of the Red Cloud Range complex.

2nd Lt. John T. Tucker III, platoon leader, said the mission is supposed to last three months, but the unit plans to try to finish early.

He said while the Soldiers are at Fort Stewart, they will help repair the ranges by building such things as berms and repairing roads.

The mission has not been without its difficulties, Tucker said. Due to the size of the HET vehicles, the 63rd had to get special permission to travel on Georgia highways. Also, the 63rd will have to take an extra long route to and from Fort Stewart in order to travel on the highways.

"This is an extremely great training mission," Tucker said. "A lot of Soldiers had a permanent change of station recently so we've got a lot of new Soldiers in the unit.

"This mission gives these young Soldiers the opportunity to train on the vehicles involved in their MOS (military occupational specialty)."

Tucker also said during the three-month deployment, the unit will participate in a two-week field training exercise and a 24-hour training exercise. He said if time permits, the unit will also try to complete some weapons qualifications.

The 63rd arrived on Fort Stewart Wednesday, but returned to Fort Benning for the 36th Eng. Grp. (Combat) change of command ceremony, which takes place today at 9 a.m. on York Field.

The 63rd will again return to Fort Stewart Monday to begin renovations to the ranges.

Dog policy changes on post

By Cpl. Marc G. Turchin
Bayonet staff writer

It's Sunday morning. A quiet walk down the street is on the agenda to start the day. The family dog sits by the door anticipating a walk.

When he sees his owner coming toward the door with leash in hand his eyes brighten and he begins to whine as excitement overwhelms him.

Once outside, the dog knows what business is first and he gets right to it, but he and his owner are no longer inside the owner's yard. They both know what the first priority is, so the dog plops right down where he's most comfortable and takes care of business.

Once the dog is done, he and the owner move on for their walk. While moving down the street, dogs bark at him. Some have been barking all night. The smell and sight of another dog just makes the barking more intense.

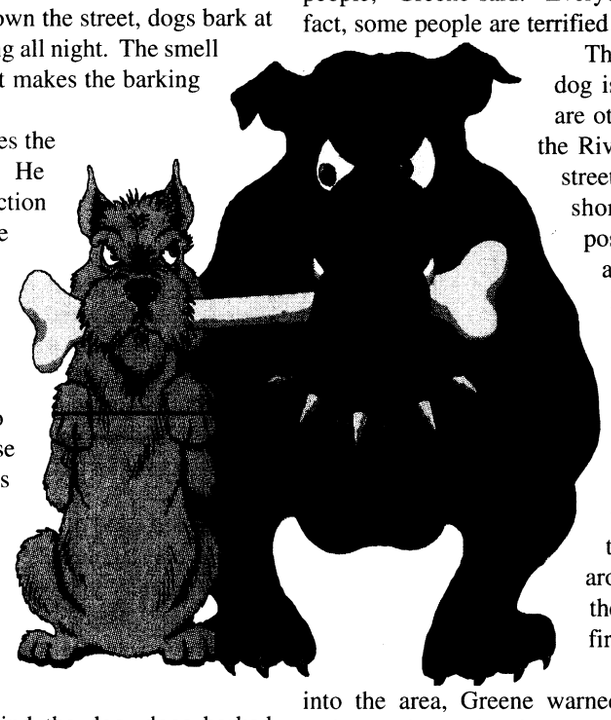
This barking in turn causes the dog being walked to bark. He pulls his owner in the direction of two dogs chained to the ground behind a chain-link fence. The owner struggles to control his dog, but continues to be pulled.

This is a collection of incidences that are all too common on post and because of an increase of complaints and dog attacks, dog owners are going to have to rethink how they handle their dogs in public.

This scene depicts the most common dog owner violations on post. The dog owner did not pick-up behind the dog, dogs barked uncontrollably and the dog owner did not have control of the dog.

All of these are typical problems on Fort Benning, according to Garrison Commander Col. Byron Greene.

There have been a number of personal observations, complaints and blotter reports to document these problems, Greene said.



Greene's observations plus an increase in complaints and dog attacks led him to change the current post policy to tighten the control of dogs.

"The intent is not to hassle people and infringe on their rights, because we're a community just like anywhere else," Greene said. "We want them (community members) to have the same comforts, securities, rights and privileges that anybody in any other community has. We also want a first-rate community that's free of nuisances and distractions."

Some of the nuisances, Greene said, include dog attacks, barking and dog control.

Dog owners have had the right to interact with their dogs, no matter where, by either leash or firm voice command. Greene changed the post policy so community members must have their dogs on leashes unless in areas mostly frequented by dog owners and their dogs.

"Your dog shouldn't be taken to playgrounds, picnics or anyplace there's going to be crowds of people," Greene said. "Everyone doesn't like dogs. In fact, some people are terrified of dogs."

The new policy states if a dog is in an area where there are other people, for example, the Riverwalk or neighborhood streets, that dog must be on a short leash at the heel position. If no one is in the area, the dog can be on a long leash, Greene said. Other people shouldn't have to worry about what a nearby dog will do.

If an owner and the family dog are in the woods or a large field by themselves and not around other people, then the dog must still be under firm voice control.

If someone should walk into the area, Greene warned, the owner must take action and put the dog on a short leash at the heel position.

If the dog does not obey voice commands and scares someone, the owner is responsible.

"Whether or not the dog was under voice command will be up to the person who was inconvenienced or frightened by the dog," Greene said. "It will not be the owner's opinion."

If by chance a dog does attack someone, according to Greene, the dog's days on post may be numbered.

"If a dog viciously attacks or bites someone, that dog will go (leave the installation)."

CB&T expands into commissary

USAIC Public Affairs Office

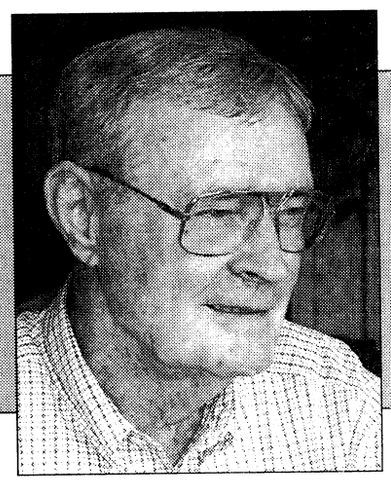
Once again Fort Benning is leading the way. The commissary is now home to a branch of Columbus Bank and Trust. This is the first time a bank is located in a U.S. Army commissary.

The bank provides check cashing, deposit, withdrawl, loan, night drop, safety deposit boxes and other services.

"CB&T is excited to be the first bank to open a full-service banking center inside an Army commissary," said Stephen A. Melton, CB&T president.

The center offers banking services that will benefit active duty military, military retirees and qualified civil service personnel who shop.

"It is important to us to provide military customers the additional level of convenience of banking while they shop," Melton said.

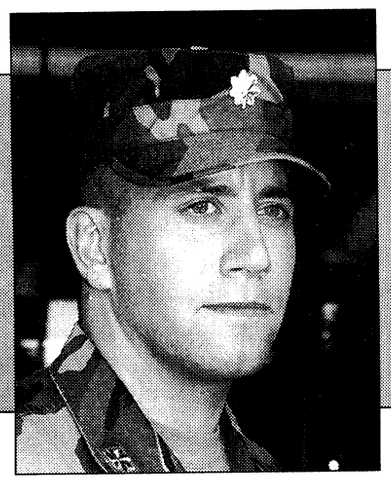


Director of Resource Management David Flo said, "CB&T's new Commissary Banking Center will enable us to provide a convenience to our customers that exists nowhere else in the Army."

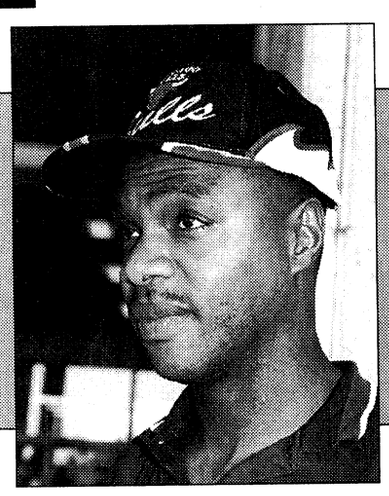
The hours of the bank are 9 a.m. to 7 p.m. Tuesdays, Thursdays and Saturdays; 10 a.m. to 7 p.m. Wednesdays and Fridays; and noon to 5 p.m. Sundays.

The bank opened Wednesday, but the ribbon-cutting ceremony will be at 10:30 a.m. July 18.

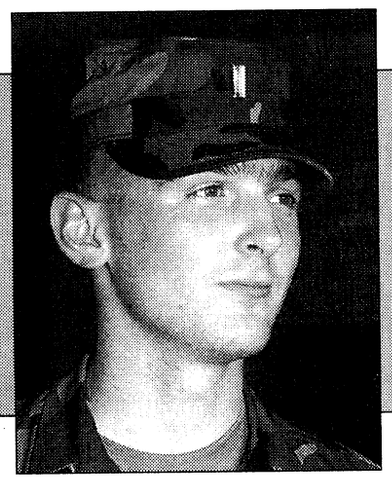
VARIOUS VOICES



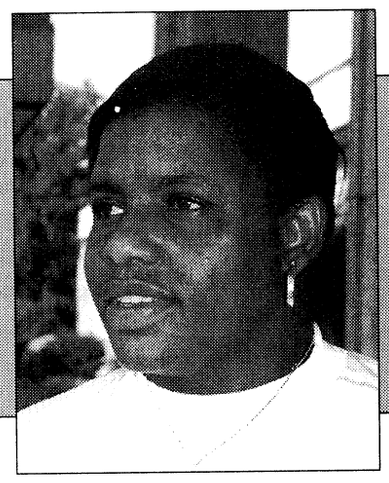
What do you remember most about your first car?



Retired Sgt. Maj. Philip Byrne — "The payments. I bought it when I was single and then I got married."



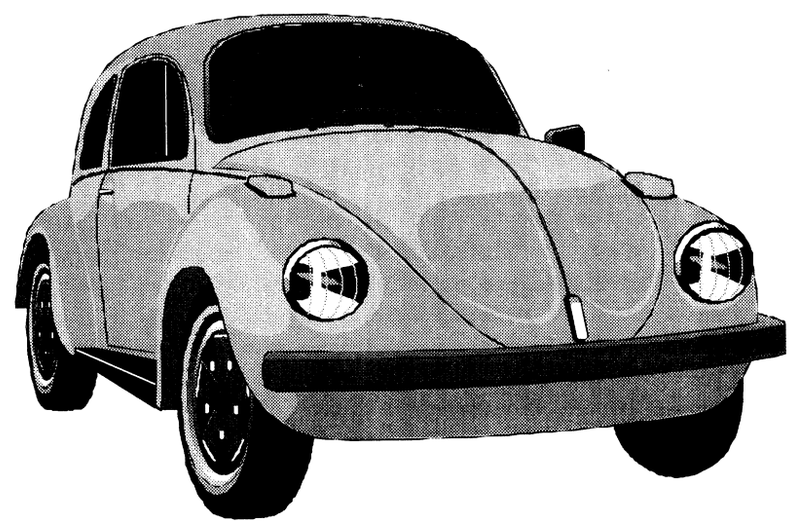
Linda Callender, family member — "I got it when I was in college. It was green and it had buttons to push to change gears instead of a stick shift."



Maj. John Leighow, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment — "It was peppy, maneuverable and fast."

Sgt. 1st Class Walter Lewis, U.S. Army Reserve, 1st Battalion, 347th Regiment, Fort Gilliam, Ga. — "It was a lemon. I bought it on Victory Drive and it didn't make it back to Sand Hill."

2nd Lt. Steve Fabiano, 2nd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment — "It was a Jeep and I took it everywhere. It broke down a lot. I spent as much money fixing it as I paid for it."



Maurine Dubose, family member — "It was an '86 navy blue Cavalier. It stuck with me through thick and thin and was dependable. It was my best friend."

Coming of age
Cars usher in adulthood

By Doug Soleida
Fort Huachuca, Ariz., Scout

Rust poked yellowish stains through the Pontiac's chalky white paint along the rain gutters and below the door sills. A fist-sized gap beside the floor-mounted, three-speed shifter provided the cheap entertainment of watching the asphalt rush by just a few inches below your right kneecap. Arthritic doors creaked in protest. The anemic four-cylinder engine, long in need of major surgery, wheezed to make it over the slightest incline.

commentary

But for a wide-eyed teen-ager flushed with the excitement of owning his first car, that terminal-case Tempest, more than anything else, ushered in adulthood.

I had arrived, I thought, though I still shaved twice a week and could never afford to fill the tank, even with gas at 29 cents a gallon.

It's not hard to appreciate America's fascination with the automobile. From their arrival, cars opened up America like no invention before or since. A car made it possible to drive where you liked and work where you had to. Cars were an inexpensive door to vacations in places you had only read about or seen in the movies.

Favorite cars took their place beside snapshots of reunions and relatives in family albums. Driving came to rival baseball as the national pastime.

Though cars as works of art and engineering had been appreciated by the well-heeled since the long-hooded supercars of the '30s, it was in the dawn of the post-World War II West Coast culture that the automobile progressed beyond the status of an application of transportation to that of something to be enjoyed on its own merits by the masses.

Coming of age in Southern California's San Fernando Valley in the '60s, a car was everything. It was what you did: dances, games, movies, the beach, a job. It reflected who you thought you were or what you wanted to be: Madison Avenue understood that equation, and Detroit played it for all it was worth.

It was an object of devotion: pick any street in any neighborhood on any given weekend and you could quickly spot teens' shoes and greasy cutoffs poking out from under, hanging over the fender of or otherwise attached to their mechanical best friends.

Cars taught you other things, intangibles that were part and parcel of growing up in America. Car ownership was an object lesson for things you never really learned in school. More than any high school social studies course, the car was a graphic introduction to a society of rules and laws; break 'em and you quickly discovered the consequences.

Car ownership instilled the basics of responsibility: you learned the importance of upkeep and something about life and something about life not being a free ride. From that first timid venture into heavy traffic, you became aware that, like it or not, you shared the planet and the streets with lots of other folks that you had to get along with. And you discovered that driving, like life, was a privilege, not a right.

Cars and driving have changed a lot since then. Plastic has largely replaced chrome inside and out. Tinny sounding radios that picked up Jan and Dean on AM have become woofered and tweetered stereos, and compact discs that play better that any eight track resound from cars today.

Tires are now radials, brakes are discs and something akin to a mylar birthday balloon will pop out of where the horn button used to sit if I hit something in a significant way. I'm even concerned with mileage.

But some things will never change. That Pontiac was the pumpkin that ushered me and my freckle-faced date to the enchantment of the senior prom. It was my entrance pass to the world of meaningful employment as I graduated from summer jobs at local fast food palaces to a bank across town.

Saturday afternoons, underneath a glistening coat of suds and a determined sponge, that faded white hood reflected the unbridled dreams of all the potential the future could hold.

Leaving Army becomes lesson in character, style

By Karen Jolley Drewen
Editor, Aberdeen Proving Ground News

When the newspapers do write about the general, we all know the final paragraph goes, by heart, something like, "Longhouser, a graduate of West Point, served two tours in Vietnam and received two Purple Heart medals." That's the cursory, obligatory way to sum up a career that spanned three decades, a career that meant sacrifice for not only him but also his family.

"Sometimes life isn't fair." Those words were spoken last week by a man who should know.

June 20, Maj. Gen. John E. Longhouser presented what was, by far, the classiest speech I've seen in 10 years with the Army. This is a man who has every right to rail against the Army. This is a man who became a victim of bad timing and political correctness at its worst.

commentary

What did he say as he addressed his employees for one of the last times? He said this is the best Army not only in the world, but in the history of the world.

Wow. Would I be able to say that after going through the month that man has had? No. Sadly, I lack the noble quality that allows me to see the good in that which wrongs me.

But Longhouser has a lot more experience in life than me. He knows what's important — his wife, his family, his Army. And when it comes down to making the "right" decision, he did it with style.

You had to be there to hear the emotion in his voice. I can quote him, but I can't truly convey the conviction he expressed. I also can't tell you how it felt when the audience, which stood throughout the presentation of his Legion of Merit, started applauding and just wouldn't stop. It's little enough what we can do to show our support and appreciation of a man who has led our installation through some of the toughest times in our history for the past nine months and who has served our nation honorably for 32 years.

What seems to stick in the mind of everyone who was in the room was his statement: "This marriage survived. That's a story you won't read about in any newspaper." There's a reason that statement is on the front page this week — I am able to be the first to rectify that omission. Their marriage did survive. And, after they walked into the room, Karen Longhouser did what she's done for three decades — she stood by her husband's side. Then she looked at him, took one step closer and held his hand.

I don't know if she needed his strength, or wanted to give him hers. Frankly, I think they've been hounded enough and don't need any more questions prying into their personal lives. I do know that whatever has happened in the past, they have the strength to get through this — together.

When the newspapers do write about the general, we all know the final paragraph goes, by heart, something like, "Longhouser, a graduate of West Point, served two tours in Vietnam and received two Purple Heart medals." That's the cursory, obligatory way to sum up a career that spanned three decades, a career that meant sacrifice for not only him but also his family.

Anyone married to a Soldier will tell you how incredibly easy it is. All you have to do is move every two years, yank your kids out of school in the middle of the year and try to furnish a new house which, by regulation, must have windows of a completely different size than your previous house so none of your curtains fit. You must also spend weeks tracking the boxes that got lost in the move — the ones that contain unimportant things like your wedding photos or most of your clothes — and make ends meet on one salary because the constant moving makes having a second career tough.

Then, as you're relaxing in your luxurious new home, your spouse gets orders. One year in Germany — unaccompanied; six weeks in the field; Bosnia; Somalia; Korea; Vietnam. As you read this, American Soldiers are serving in more than 60 countries around the world.

If all goes well, they come back fine. If some goes well, they come back almost fine — a few holes, a few missing parts, but alive. If the worst happens, you get a bugle, a solemn ceremony, a flag, your nation's gratitude. And you get to start over.

The one guarantee you do get is that if you make it to the end of your military career, you will have to most certainly start over. You may be lucky enough to get help with the transition, even though they chopped the money for most of the programs that did just that.

You may not even be 40 years old when you retire. You may be 53 years old and have spent most of your adult life serving your country.

Whatever your case, anyone who has served this nation honorably deserves to go out with style. And if you don't know how, ask Longhouser.

Dogs: Policy changes

"I think it's a good idea," said Sgt. Valarie Claxton, a dog owner assigned to Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment.

"If you have good control over your dog, you don't have to worry about anything," she said.

The control of dogs is the only real change in the policy, Greene said, and some of the other problems, will just be watched more carefully.

One problem is dog owners must clean up behind dogs.

Greene said a dog is an extension of the family. Just as parents are responsible for the actions of their children, dog owners are responsible for the actions of their animals.

"If you're walking your dog, you better have some visible means of picking up after the dog, even if you think the dog won't go to the bathroom," Greene said.

If not, the dog owner will be cited.

Other infractions of the post dog control policy include dog attacks, trespassing, dogs off of a leash around people and animal abuse.

Repeat offenders, Greene said, may have their privilege of owning a pet on post taken away or they may be told to find a residence off post.

Greene said the best way for residents to handle a problem is to talk to the dog owners first. He said tact is an important key when doing this because most dog owners get defensive when something critical is said about the family pet.

"People can get really attached to their animals," Greene said. "They are really proud of their animals — but everybody does not share their concerns."

If speaking with the owners does not meet with productive results, Greene said community members have other options.

Post residents can contact their mayors or community life noncommissioned officers. They may also call the 545-BOSS line or even call the military police.

Another problem is barking dogs.

"Dogs yapping and bothering everybody — even if their neighbors don't think they're bothering people — is not a common state of affairs," Greene said.

According to Greene, post residents should not have to tolerate barking dogs.

"A dog that continues barking or otherwise bothering neighbors — even if it's the greatest canine in the world and it's Lassie's brother and saved four people — that dog is going to be asked to leave the installation if it persists," Greene said.

Greene said the post policy is here to ensure Sunday morning walks can be pleasurable for everyone.

"We value our community life, we value our family life in the Army and we value the peace and the order in our neighborhoods," Greene said. "This is just part of maintaining that."

Dental plan to cover military retirees as early as Oct 1

By Douglas J. Gillert
American Forces Press Service

WASHINGTON — Military retirees and their families will soon have access to low-cost dental insurance similar in scope to the active duty family dental plan.

As early as Oct. 1, the retiree dental program will begin offering military retirees, their spouses and dependent children dental coverage to include basic diagnostic, preventive and restorative dental services, dental surgery and emergency examinations. The exact date of availability and actual costs will depend on the contract, which has not yet been awarded.

"The request for purchase has gone out, but obviously, it will take time for the company awarded the contract to market the program and enroll members," said Air Force Dr. (Col.) Marvin Bennett, senior Department of Defense dental consultant. "The plan is quite simple, however, so it shouldn't be too difficult to start up. We're reasonably optimistic it will start on time."

The plan will be offered at little cost to DoD. Premiums withdrawn from monthly retiree paychecks and member cost-shares will fund the plan, Bennett said. The Defense Finance and Accounting Service will provide financial management. Because the contract hasn't been awarded, Bennett said he doesn't know how much the premiums will be.

The plan will offer three enrollment rates: single, two-party and family. Not remarried spouses of deceased retirees and some other limited enrollment categories also will be offered, Bennett said.

The premiums will cover one basic examination and one cleaning per enrollment year. New members will be required to pay the first four months' premiums when they enroll and must enroll for a full year. Excluding exams and cleanings, they must pay a $50 annual deductible before cost-share payments kick in, Bennett said.

After paying the deductible, they will be billed just 20 percent of costs for restorative care and sealants and 40 percent of costs for other services. The contractor will directly reimburse participating dentists for remaining costs.

The plan may offer a network of dentists, but it won't deny care received from non-network dentists, Bennett said.

"Because of the range of ages the program covers, it will offer a fairly broad spectrum of services," he said. "However, it may not be as desirable for some older folks who tend to need crown and bridge work the plan doesn't cover. Before enrolling, people should carefully weigh the plan's benefits against their dental needs."

The contractor will send information and enrollment forms to prospective members. Health benefits advisers at military hospitals and clinics also will offer assistance, he said.

"The retiree dental program will give many military retirees access to low-cost dental work they haven't had before," Bennett said. "It will take care of a large portion of our retiree population."

INDEPENDENCE DAY

3rd goes off with a bang

By Spc. Lisa M. Hibbert
Bayonet staff writer

Fort Benning wrapped up its Independence Day celebration with a bang July 3 on York Field

The vendors arrived for the 2 p.m. start, but Independence Day celebraters arrived slowly because of a 97-degree temperature. Although things got off to a slow start, the vendors' patient waiting paid off in the late afternoon. Hundreds of people from Fort Benning and the surrounding communities strolled around York Field looking for something to buy.

Vendor wares ranged from hot dogs and hamburgers to Filipino and Spanish food. Of course the regulars, funnel cakes, snow cones and ice-cold soft drinks, showed up for the party, too.

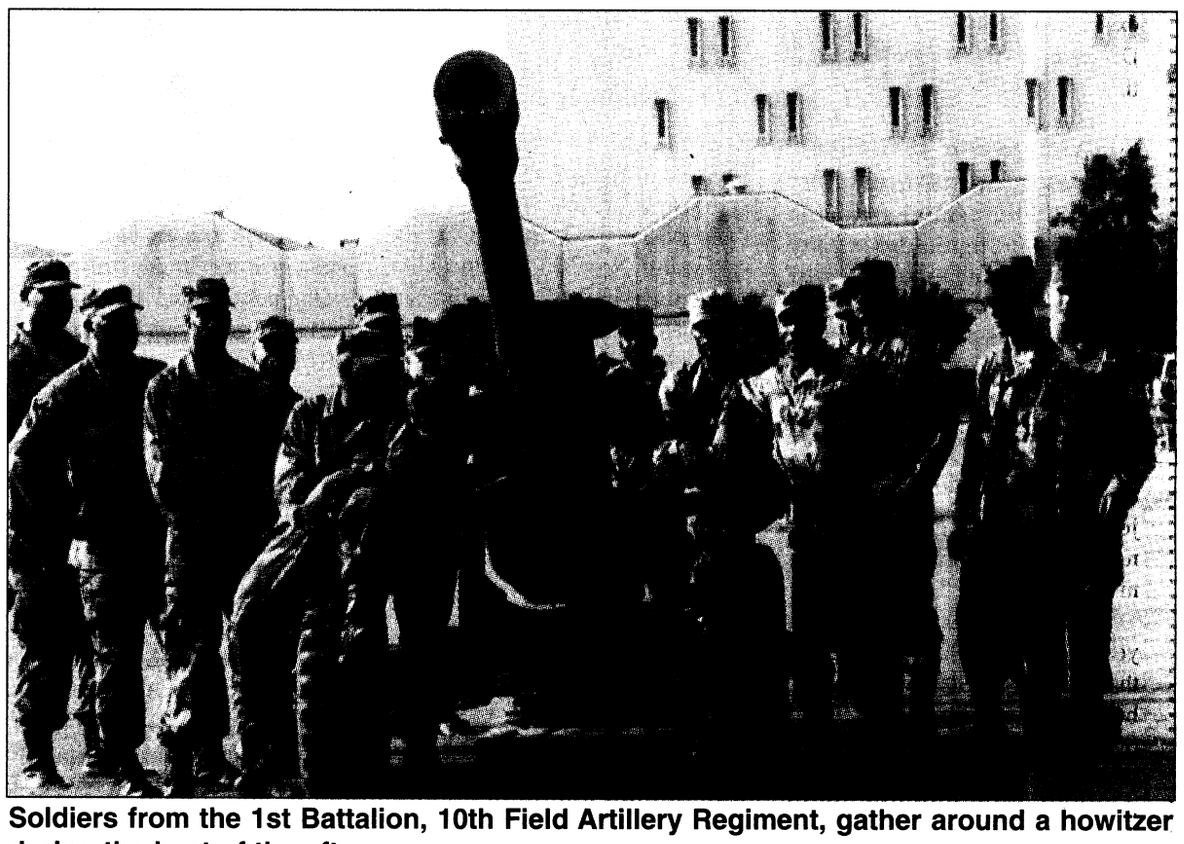
The radio station Kissin' 99.3 provided the special entertainment for this year. Rimi Daniels sang a few country songs and wooed a group of Infantry Training Brigade Soldiers when she told them she was shopping for a boyfriend.

Not wanting to miss all of the fun, members of the Silver Wings Parachute team leaped from a UH-60 Blackhawk and landed within their target on the party field.

Members of the the 75th Ranger Regiment fast-roped out of a Blackhawk down onto Stewart Field. After performing a few tactical maneuvers, they were extracted from the field using a special patrol insertion extraction system and flew off into the sun.

Just as the sky grew dusky, the flag pageantry started. Soldiers from Company C, 1st Battalion, 50th Infantry Regiment, comprised the flag detail this year. The Soldiers marched on the field bearing either a state or national flag. The Soldiers stood in a U-shaped formation with the national colors in front.

The breeze kicked up a bit and the flags flew in the wind as the crowd sang the national anthem while the band played.

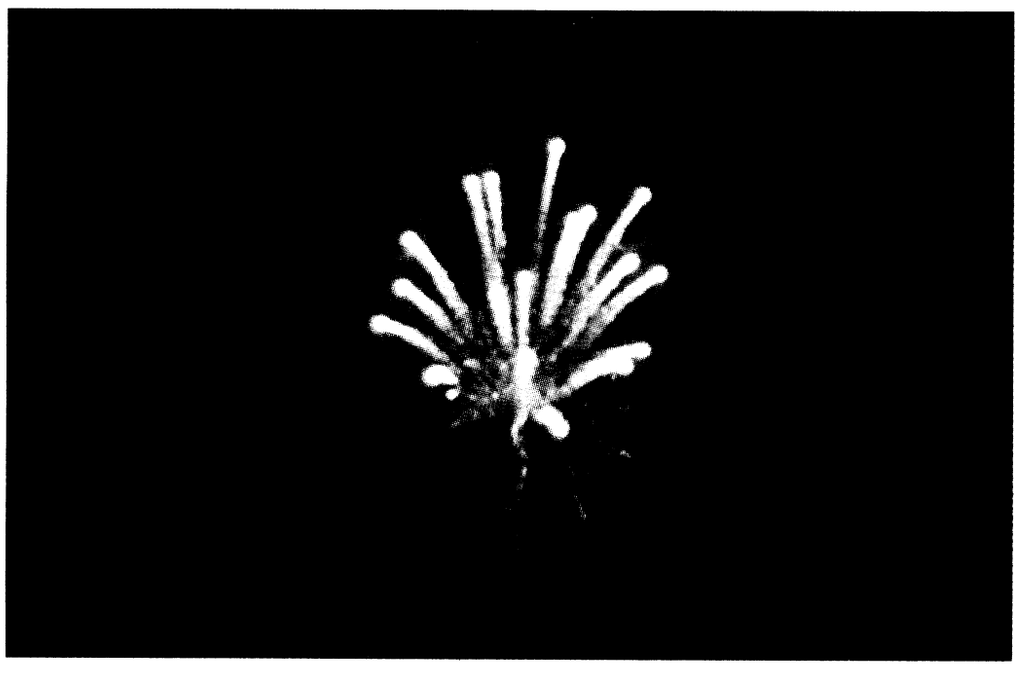


Suddenly the roar of artillery rang out as members of Battery B, 1st Battalion, 10th Field Artillery Regiment, 3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division (Mechanized), fired a 50-gun salute, one shot for each state of the union, while the flag-bearing Soldiers walked off the field.

The band played a few jazzy tunes as people spread their blankets, pulled out their lawn chairs and bought refreshments before the grand finale of the evening.

Anticipation built as the band concluded with the "1812 Overture" and Soldiers from Btry. B, 1st Bn., 10th FA Regt., 3rd Bde., 3rd Inf. Div. (Mech.), fired off the howitzers, signaling the beginning of the fireworks show.

Begin they did. Red, green, gold, silver and purple lights filled the night sky with patterns that resembled flowers, weeping willow trees, raindrops and waterfalls.



The post conducted its celebration July 3 at the request of post Commanding General Maj. Gen. Carl F. Ernst. He said he wanted to allow the Soldiers and their families to not only have fun at Fort Benning, but to spend July 4 with their friends and families.

A concessionaire makes a snow cone to try to cool off some of the spectators during the celebration.

CAR REGISTRATION

SJA explains where, how, fees, documentation

Office of the Staff Judge Advocate

A Soldier stationed at Fort Benning has the option of registering his or her vehicle either in his or her home state or in Georgia.

If the Soldier opts for a Georgia registration, he or she must be aware of several requirements. Some of these requirements have just taken effect and will adversely impact upon Soldiers already stationed at Fort Benning. These requirements follow:

Ad valorem tax — All vehicles registered in Georgia are subject to an annual ad valorem tax based upon the value of the vehicle. As of Jan. 1, this tax will be assessed on the 30th day prior to the date of the owner's birthday and is paid at the time of registration.

Soldiers who are not residents of Georgia are exempt from this tax by the Soldiers' and Sailors' Relief Act. Soldiers desiring to claim the exemption must come to the Legal Assistance Division, Office of the Staff Judge Advocate. They must complete an ad valorem exemption affidavit.

Each Soldier must bring a Leave and Earnings Statement dated within the past three months showing the Soldier's state of residence as something other than Georgia, proof of insurance and a valid military identification card. The completed ad valorem exemption form is then given to the Division of Motor Vehicles at the time of registration.

Jointly owned vehicles — The biggest change concerns the taxation of vehicles jointly owned by a Soldier and nonmilitary spouse. Previously, the tax commissioners of Muscogee and Chattahoochee counties granted the exemption to a Soldier who owned a vehicle solely or with another person, typically the spouse.

However, as of May 1, Muscogee and Chattahoochee counties stopped exempting the jointly owned vehicles if one or more of the owners is a non-military member.

To avoid the tax for the 1998 tax year, the Soldier can either retitle the car solely in the Soldier's name before the 30th day prior to the owner's birthday and then register it in Georgia or he or she can register the car in the his or her home state.

A car owner should consider carefully all issues before removing nonmilitary members from the title. There is a fee of $18 to retitle a vehicle in Georgia. In addition, there may be problems if a vehicle is solely titled in the Soldier's name and the Soldier and spouse divorce or the Soldier dies.

Furthermore, if there is a loan on the vehicle, the loan company must agree to the change in the title. The loan company may require the vehicle be refinanced at an additional cost when the title is changed.

New registration periods — Georgia will begin a new system of registration Jan. 1. Cars will come due for registration 30 days prior to the owner's birth date.

During the 1997 registration period, each owner was asked to provide the birth month on the current form. There is a 30-day period, ending on the owner s birth date, in which to register the vehicle. Any vehicle not registered within the 30 days will be subject to a late registration fee.

Tax on used vehicles — Under the current Georgia law, the ad valorem tax is levied on every vehicle owned by a Georgia resident individual, not a business such as a car dealership, on the 30th day prior to the owner's birthday of each year. This tax is levied on the vehicle and goes with the vehicle to any owner who attempts to register it for that year.

Thus, if a Soldier purchases a vehicle from a Georgia resident who did not bother to register it for the year and pay the tax, the Soldier must pay the tax before the vehicle may be registered. The Soldier can avoid the tax only if the previous owner on the 30th day prior to the owner's birthday was a Soldier entitled to claim the ad valorem exemption.

Furthermore, the Soldier must obtain a signed ad valorem exemption form from the previous owner to avoid the tax. Each Soldier anticipating the purchase of a used vehicle must either receive proof the ad valorem tax has been paid for the year of purchase or obtain the signed ad valorem exemption form from the seller.

If the seller has not paid the ad valorem tax and is ineligible for the exemption, the Soldier should adjust the purchase price of the vehicle to take into consideration the additional ad valorem tax that must be paid.

Where to register — A Soldier who opts to register his or her vehicle in Georgia must do so in the county he or she resides.

A Soldier living in Columbus must register in Muscogee County. All Soldiers living on post in housing areas or billets north of the Upatoi Creek live in Muscogee County. This includes all units on Sand Hill and all residents of McGraw Manor, Custer Terrace, Battle Park and Old Officers' Capehart. All other Fort Benning residents and units are located in Chattahoochee County.

For Muscogee County, Soldiers may register in the Government Center, located between First and Second avenues and Ninth and 10th streets in Columbus.

For Chattahoochee County, registration is at the Chattahoochee County Courthouse on Highway 520 (Business) in Cusseta.

Registration fees — There are charges assessed for the registration of a vehicle in Georgia. The registration fee is $20. An additional $18 charge is assessed for first-time registrants. The ad valorem tax, which is based on the value of the vehicle, may be as much as $300 or more for new vehicles.

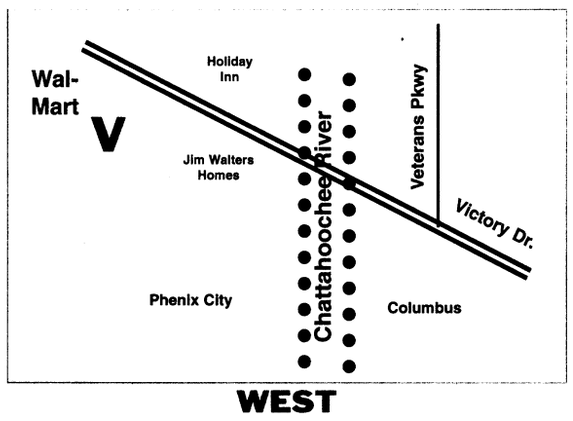
Chattahoochee County accepts only cash and money orders as payment. Chattahoochee County does not accept personal checks. Muscogee County accepts personal checks drawn on a local bank as well as cash and money orders.

Documentation needed for registration — A Soldier registering a vehicle in Georgia must bring to the tax office in the county in which the Soldier resides the following: current registration paperwork, written proof of insurance, the ad valorem exemption form completed by the Legal Assistance Division of the Office of the Staff Judge Advocate, a Leave and Earnings Statement dated within the past three months and a military identification card. Those persons using a power of attorney to register a vehicle for a Soldier must bring the original power of attorney from the Soldier.

Sales tax on new vehicles — New vehicles purchased in this state, as well as some new vehicles purchased in other states that are being registered for the first time in Georgia, are subject to a one-time sales tax. There is no exemption from the sales tax under the Soldiers' and Sailors' Civil Relief Act.

The current tax for Muscogee County is six percent of the value of the vehicle. Persons registering their vehicles for the first time will be given a credit for any sales tax already paid if proof of payment is shown.

As an example, if a Soldier purchases a vehicle in a state that charges a four percent sales tax, that Soldier will be given a credit for the four percent paid and will be responsible for payment of the additional two percent to the local county tax commissioner.



This sales tax is not to be confused with the ad valorem tax.

Additional information — Additional information may be obtained at the Legal Assistance Division by calling 545-3281 or 545-3282. The office hours are from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. Monday to Friday. The Legal Assistance Division is located in the Office of the Staff Judge Advocate, Building 5, located at the corner of Vibbert Avenue and Sigerfoos Road on Main Post.

Overcoming obstacles

Soldiers from the Infantry Training Brigade maneuver through "the weave" obstacle on the Sand Hill Obstacle Course during a recent training exercise.

Columbus pays tribute, entertains ITB Soldiers

By Capt. Roger Cavazos
1st Battalion, 19th infantry Regiment

Six hundred Soldiers from the 1st Battalion, 19th Infantry Regiment, Infantry Training Brigade, were honored and treated to entertainment and music by several members of the Columbus community at a recent gathering celebrating the Fourth of July.

During the ceremony, Columbus Mayor Bobby Peters congratulated Fort Benning on winning the coveted title of Best Army Installation in the World for the third time. He also stressed the importance of a good relationship between the civilian and military communities, and he said the leaders of both communities will continue to strive to keep this relationship alive and well.

Bob Poydasheff, a former Fort Benning staff judge advocate, and Jack Rogers, a member of the Columbus City Council, extended their greetings on behalf of the Consolidated Government Council. John Wells of the Muskogee County School Board and a former Soldier welcomed the Infantry trainees and related how he understood what it is like to be in the armed forces.

Lt. Col. Mark A. Stevens, commander of 1st Bn., 19th Inf. Regt., thanked the people for their outstanding show of support. He also expressed his joy at seeing the people of Columbus choosing to celebrate the nation's birthday by honoring those sworn to "support and defend the Constitution."

All the civilian and military leaders who were involved in the celebration stressed the mutual support and close relationship between Columbus and Fort Benning.

The event then moved on with a 10-number musical extravaganza and a tribute to the nation. Several soloists sang songs in honor of the nation's 221st birthday. The show finished with a rendition of "God Bless the USA."

The event was sponsored by the Evangel Temple of Columbus.

news from the front

By 1st Lt. Scott D. Rollston
498th Medical Co., 36th Eng. Group

If you've seen the June 29 issue of the Ledger-Enquirer, you've had a birds-eye view of "Eagle Base," also called "The Blue Factory," in Bosnia.

Among the color pictures of war-torn relics and the home of the 498th Medical Company (Air Ambulance), 36th Engineer Group (Combat), a few snaps of daily life bring the separations a little closer for our families and loved ones.

Sure, the Norwegian soldiers look happy and relaxed in their swimming pool and yes, our guys and gals have to stay in their mission uniforms, but American task force leaders feel their rules help ensure our Soldiers will return safe and sound. Besides, many of our Soldiers are currently rotating home under the new rest and relaxation policy and getting to spend two weeks of time with their families and friends.

Mission operating tempo has remained subdued, offering both solace to the people of the region and allowing for continued multi-national training opportunities for the 498th supply lines.

Maintenance systems are working well while many aircrew members and support personnel are being rotated through the outpost sites located in Hungary and Croatia.

While the cultural and training events abound in the Balkans, the rear detachment continues its support of the Soldiers and their families. During this week's Family Support Group Children's Ice Cream Social, the rear detachment commander briefed family members on the beginning plans for the unit's return to Fort Benning.

While stability in the region will ultimately determine the return of their loved ones, current tentative dates have redeployment beginning in mid-October. Though it's a cautious statement hoping not to disappoint or mislead the families, it's important they know what we are working toward, as we're all in this together.

Next month, the Family Support Group hopes to make a weekend day trip to Callaway Gardens.

The rear detachment commander is looking for a bus to make the trip. Anyone who has an extra bus available the first weekend in August can call 545-1040 or 545-9261.

Thanks again to all who donated clothes and toys to support the unit's orphanage in Bosnia. The children were overwhelmed, which gave our Soldiers warm hearts.

Post names Soldier, NCO of the Quarter

By Cpl. Marc G. Turchin
Bayonet staff writer

Soldiers and noncommissioned officers recently competed in competitions to become Fort Benning's Soldier and NCO of the Third Quarter.

Out of the 13 Soldiers who competed, Pfc. Rebekah Champouillon, Company E, 1st Battalion, 507th Infantry, 11th Infantry Regiment, took home the Soldier of the Quarter Award and Staff Sgt. William Gentry, Headquarters Service Company, Drill Sergeant School, Infantry Training Brigade, earned the NCO of the Quarter Award.

The ceremony was conducted July 1 at the Main NCO Club.

Commanding General Maj. Gen. Carl F. Ernst attended the ceremony and said training future leaders is one of the post's main missions.

"These fine Soldiers here today are the Army's future. You must continue to do better than what the standard is. You can't expect to barely get by and succeed," Ernst said.

Both Gentry and Champouillon have succeeded in their own ways. They both had to endure the pressures of going before many oral boards before reaching their newly acclaimed status. Gentry said he didn't do it alone.

"I owe everything I am to my wife Jennifer," he said. "All that I was awarded should be in her name."

Champouillon said her unit was behind her all the way.

"My unit was very supportive. They gave me the time and the tools I needed to succeed," she said.

Both Soldiers took home more than just new titles.

Some of what each of them earned included a Certificate of Achievement, which was presented by Ernst; a $25 check from TIC Credit Union; a plaque and one-year membership from the Association of the U.S. Army; a $100 savings bond from the Military Benefits Association and a satellite dish from Freeway Ford.

Champouillon said she credits her prior experiences for her success.

"I think my confidence level combined with the amount of questions helped," she said. "I picked the brains of other NCOs and learned from past boards."

Gentry said having family members in attendance gave him confidence and made the event that much better.

"I was extremely ecstatic," he said. "I was really, really proud my wife could be there. I wanted her to see the fruits of her labor."

Gentry's mother Thelma Nelson and grandfather, retired Master Sgt. Bill Nelson, also attended the ceremony.

Cpl. Marc G. Turchin

Pfc. Rebekah Champouillon, the Soldier of the Quarter, and Staff Sgt. William Gentry, the Noncommissioned Officer of the Quarter, stand at attention during the recent Soldier and NCO of the Quarter awards ceremony.

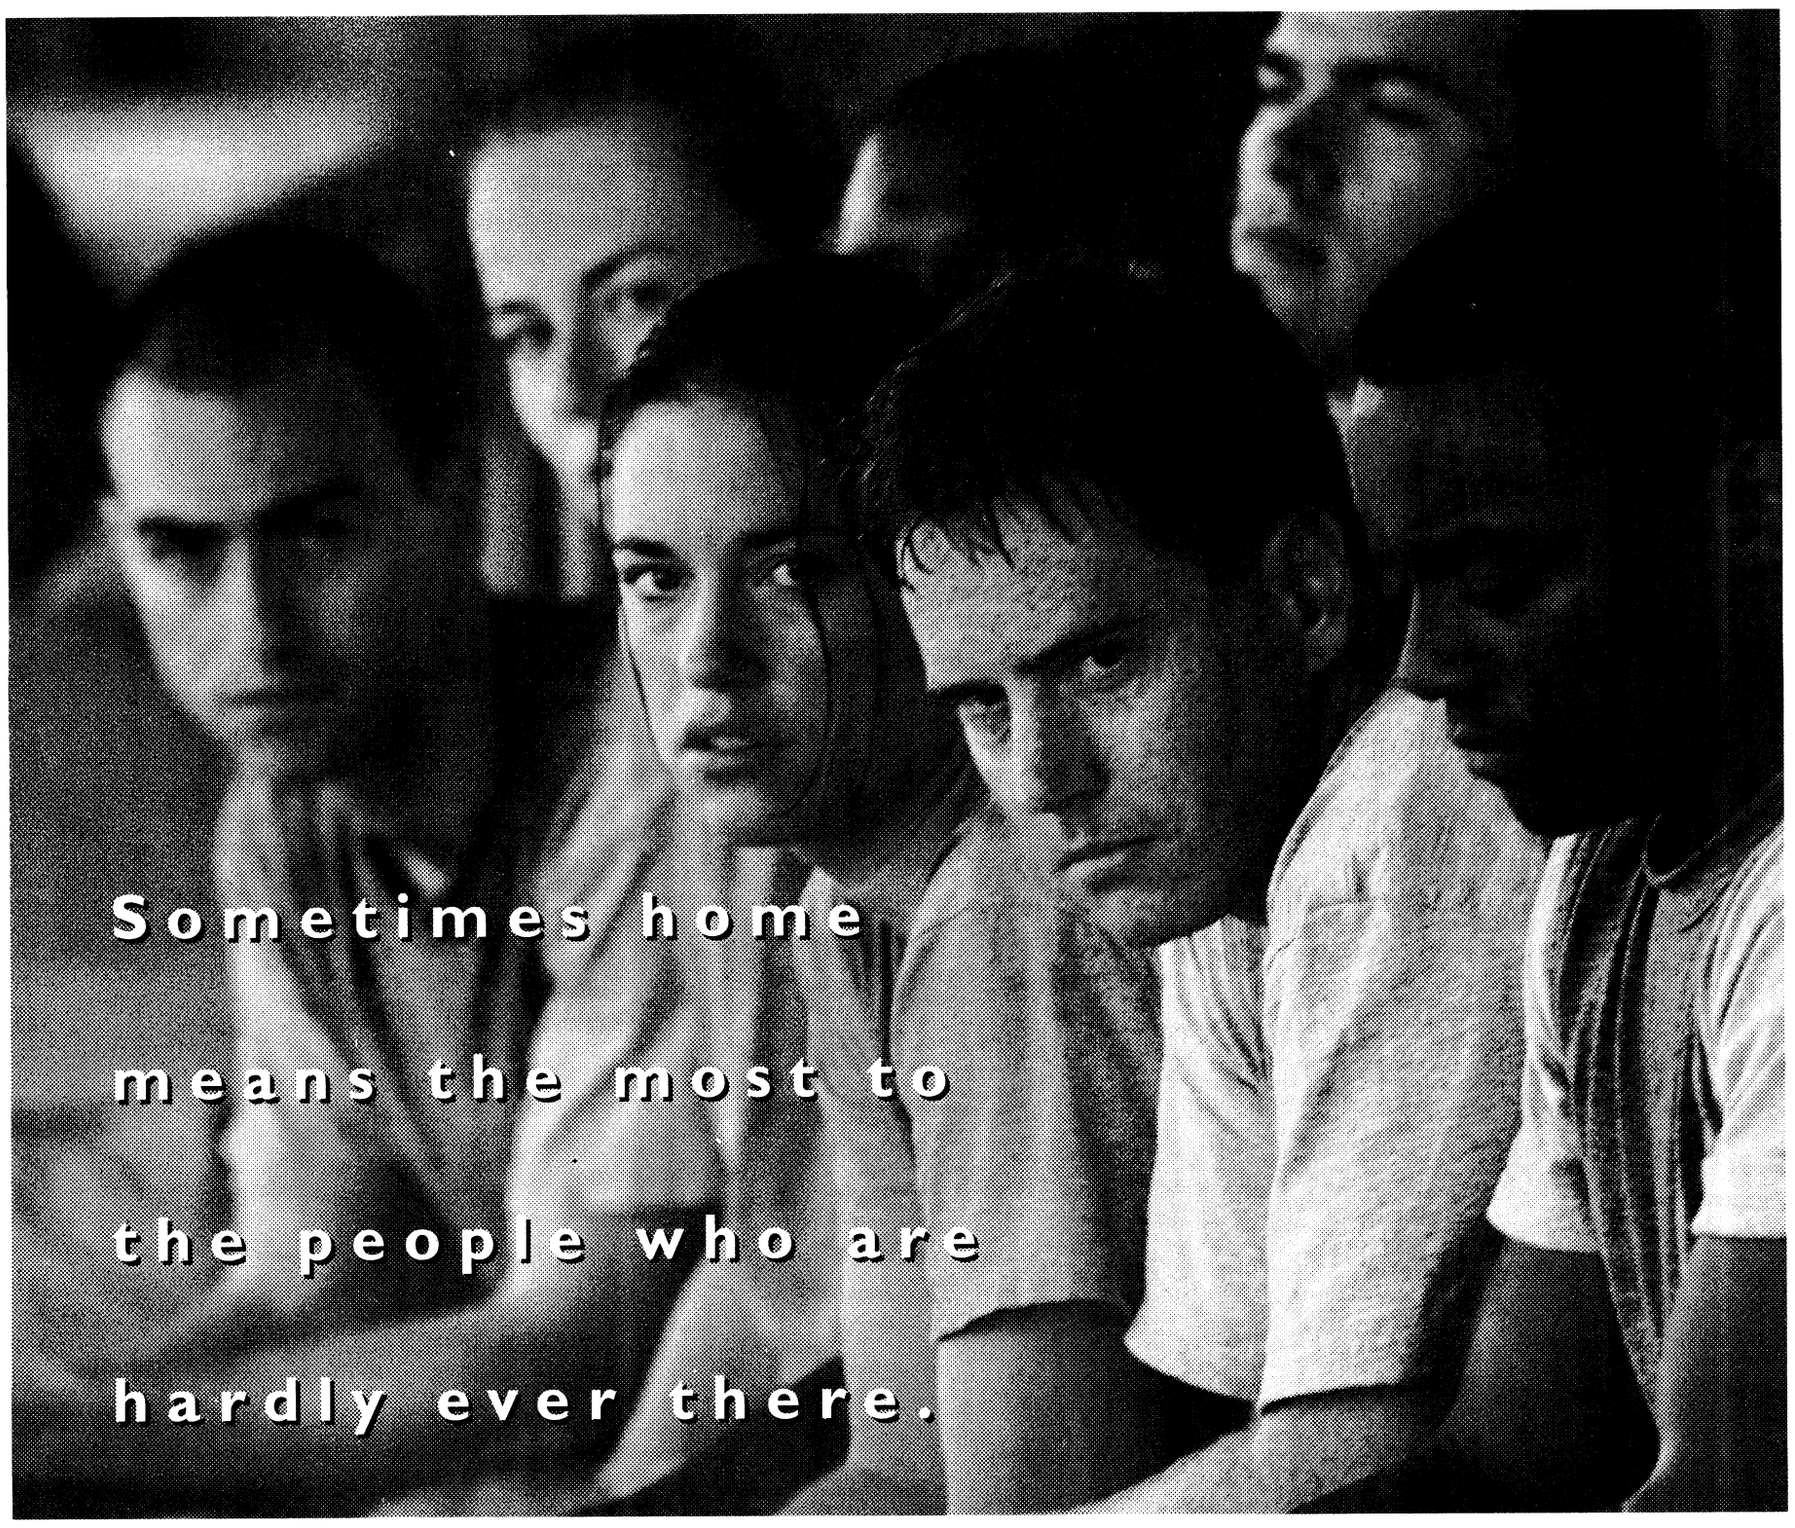
11th regiment conducts family day

By Chaplain (Capt.) Len Kircher
11th Infantry Regiment

The Soldiers, cadre and family members of the 11th Infantry Regiment gathered June 29 at Uchee Creek for a family day celebration.

The purpose of the event was to bring together the cadre and family members of the four battalions to enjoy a relaxed, stress-free day with their families. There were no timed events or schedules to keep, just the opportunity to get out and have fun.

A catered meal of barbecue pork, chicken, hot dogs and hamburgers helped begin the afternoon. Many youngsters tried their luck sticking themselves to a Velcro wall while the smaller ones jumped for hours inside the spacewalk.



Further entertainment for the children included popcorn, cotton candy and "Rainbow" and "Soapy" the Clowns.

Col. John P. Lewis, commander of the 11th Inf. Regt., and other battalion commanders presented certificates to spouses who made significant contributions to the regiment through their Family Support Group networks.

The regiment wanted to do something special to recognize the contributions of the family members.

Family members recognized included:

Michele Preston,
Kim Hackney,
Martha Jackson,
Lori Brown,
Clare Holder,
Carolyn Dashiell,
Cindy Carnes,
Christine Holt,
Ana MacMullen,
Diana Ermi,
Patti Megerdichian,

FAMILY FUN

Soldier Show rocks Fort Benning

By Elizabeth E. LaMonica
Special to The Bayonet©

The 1997 U.S. Army Soldier Show entertained more than 900 Soldiers and family members as they packed Sand Hill Theater 3 Saturday.

The show brought the Fort Benning community together for an evening of entertainment, "For the Soldier, by the Soldier."

The 80-minute production included a wide variety of music from several traditions. Cast members sang and danced to selections from pop, country and rhythm and blues. The Soldiers only had six weeks to design, choreograph, rehearse and finalize the show.

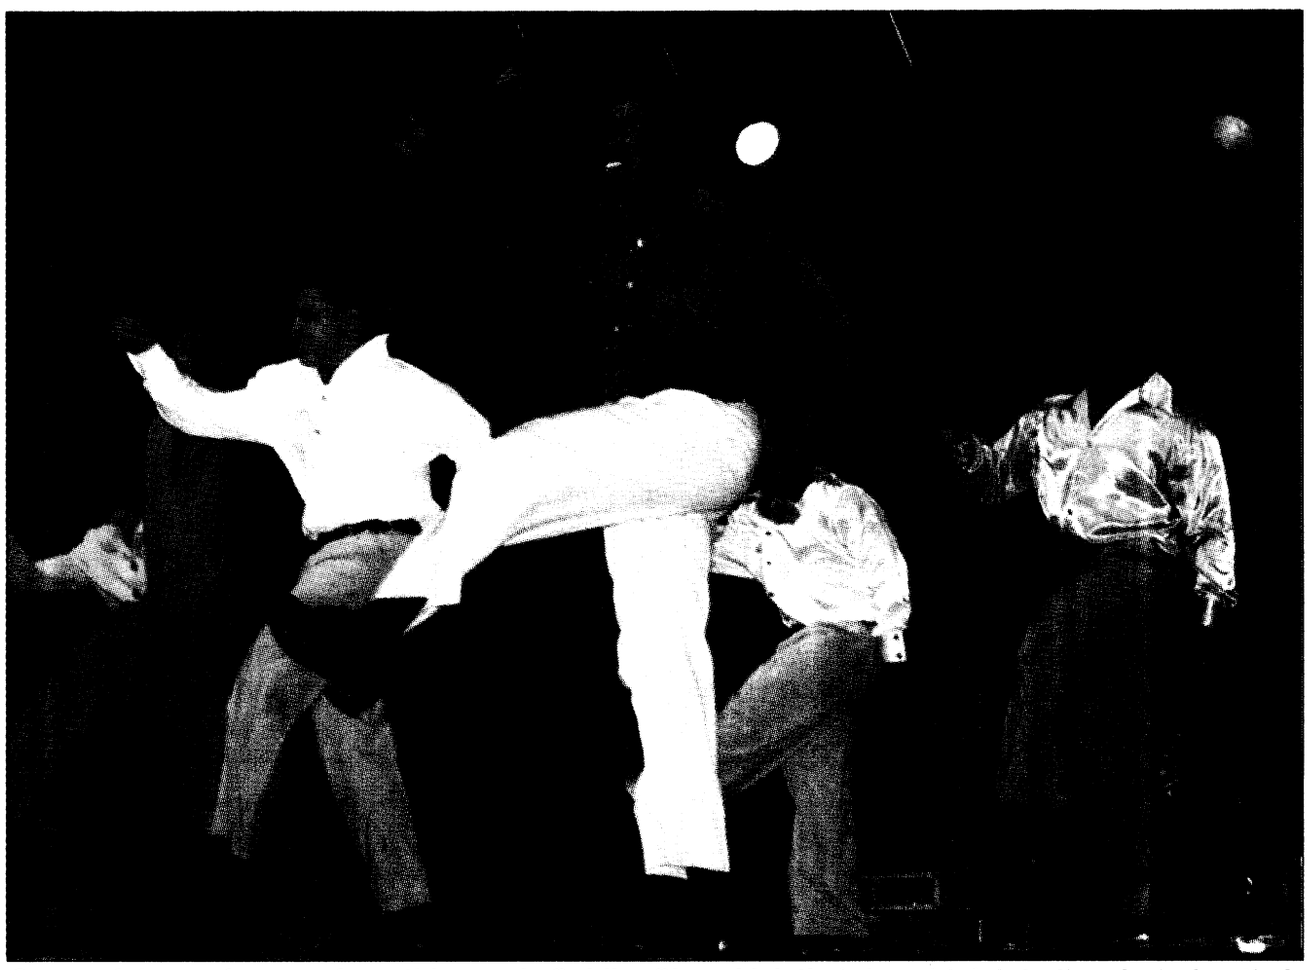
The audience seemed to appreciate the final result.

"It's an excellent show," said Sgt. 1st Class Kevin Channey, a drill sergeant with 1st Battalion, 19th Infantry Regiment. "It's great for the morale of the Soldiers who are going through training. It's a good break for them."

Channey, who had seen a Soldiers Show while stationed in Korea, remembered what the show had meant to him.

"It was a tremendous boost. It was one of those things that reminded me of what it's all about and why I was there."

Each year Army Entertainment conducts a world-wide audition to select the cast members.



"The most rewarding thing for me is seeing the joy and the happiness among the troops and the family members of the military community," said performer Staff Sgt. Cornelius Andrews, 751st Military Intelligence Battalion, Camp Humphreys, Korea. "That's my favorite part — pleasing them, seeing them happy."

To participate in the show, Soldiers submit application packets including videotapes of their talent. If selected, the Soldier must be willing to sacrifice six months away from home.

"It's hard being away from my husband," said performer Spc. Diana Bond, 104th Military Intelligence Battalion, Fort Hood, Texas, "but this is like a dream come true. The Fort Benning audience was great. I enjoyed every minute of it."

After the six-month tour, the 33 Soldiers will return to their regular duties.

Meanwhile the cast will continue the tradition established by Sgt. Irvin Berlin during World War I of Soldiers entertaining Soldiers.

Some of the performers from this year's Soldier Show kick their legs high into the air during their performance at the Sand Hill theater.

Soldiers from the Infantry Training Brigade show their appreciation by giving the members of the Soldier Show a standing ovation.

Institute offers tips for eating

American Institute for Cancer Research

"Are we there yet? Why do we have to listen to that radio station? Why is the car making that funny noise? Are we there now?"

Summer is the busiest travel season of the year. Families pack up their cars and minivans and head for the beach, mountains and Grandma's house. As any parent knows, traveling with children can create some interesting challenges and one of the most difficult is how to eat healthy meals while on the road.

Parents who are sick of mealtime battles with their children often opt for meals at roadside fast food restaurants, where kids are happy to consume cheeseburgers, fries and shakes in short order with huge calorie and fat counts. Not only can these places be nutritional disasters for both parents and children, but they can also place a considerable financial drain on families trying to make every vacation dollar count.

Parents can make a real difference with a little imagination and some healthy foods for the car trip. Make the choice for your children harder than one between a brown bag with carrot sticks, or a burger and french fries from a life-size clown. Create a "fun meal" for your child by putting together a variety pack of fun-to-eat healthy foods and a mini-box of fruit juice in a colorful insulated lunch box. Include a plastic dinosaur, play jewelry or a wiggly toy worm as a prize to complete the package.

Asking kids to help you get meals ready can also make them more interested in the food you're serving and proud that they helped prepare it. Instead of just peanut butter and jelly, let them choose from a variety of sandwich fillings like turkey breast, low-fat cheese slices and shredded carrots to tuck into pocket pita bread. They can also help freeze grapes, banana and peach slices as desserts that will make a steamy car ride a little cooler.

Grocery stores provide a number of kid-sized food items designed to be eaten away from home. Let kids pick out their own flavors of snack-size, low-fat yogurt, single-serve fruit juice boxes and low-fat granola bars as healthy treats. Dried fruits, requiring no refrigeration and providing a good supply of vitamins and dietary fiber, can be combined into "trail mix" by combining with dry cereal and putting in zippered plastic bags.

Food safety never goes on holiday, so it's important to keep cold foods cold and hot foods hot while you are traveling. Pack food going long distances in insulated ice chests or coolers including plenty of ice or refrigerant blocks.

If you must stop for fast food, vary your destination. You may be surprised at the lighter low-fat menus that some restaurants offer. Look for foods which are low in fat and can provide nutritional benefits often missing in regular burger and fries. Low-fat frozen yogurt, plain baked potatoes, grilled skinless chicken breasts, fat-free muffins and garden salads with low-fat dressings are only a few of the healthier options now on fast food menus. You can also request food without high-fat "special" sauces.

So for summer travel this year, encourage healthier eating. Whether it's home-packed goodies that are fun and high in nutrition, or just healthier calories when you do make that fast food stop, eating on the road can be good for you.

For a free brochure on how you can eat healthy meals away from home and lower your cancer risk, write to the American Institute for Cancer Research, Department EH, Washington, DC 20069.

Foreign students need host families

Pacific Intercultural Exchange

Foreign high school students are scheduled to arrive soon for academic program homestays and the sponsoring organization needs a few more local host families.

According to Pacific Intercultural Exchange (PIE) Executive Director John Doty, the students are all between the ages of 15 and 18 years, are English-speaking, have their own spending money, carry accident and health insurance and are anxious to share their cultural experiences with their new American families.

PIE area representatives match students with host families by finding common interests and lifestyles through an informal, in-home meeting. Prospective host families are able to review student applications and select the perfect match.

Families which host for PIE are also eligible to claim a $50-per-month charitable -contribution deduction on their itemized tax returns for each month they host a sponsored student.

For the upcoming programs, PIE has students from Spain, Denmark, Germany, Poland, Russia, Finland, Argentina, Brazil, Colombia, Paraguay, Australia, New Zealand, Croatia and many other countries. PIE has also been invited to participate in a special government-funded program to bring scholarship students from the newly independent states of the former Soviet Union to the United States.

Fort Benning area families interested in learning more about student exchange or arranging for a meeting with a community representative may call PIE at (800) 631-1818.

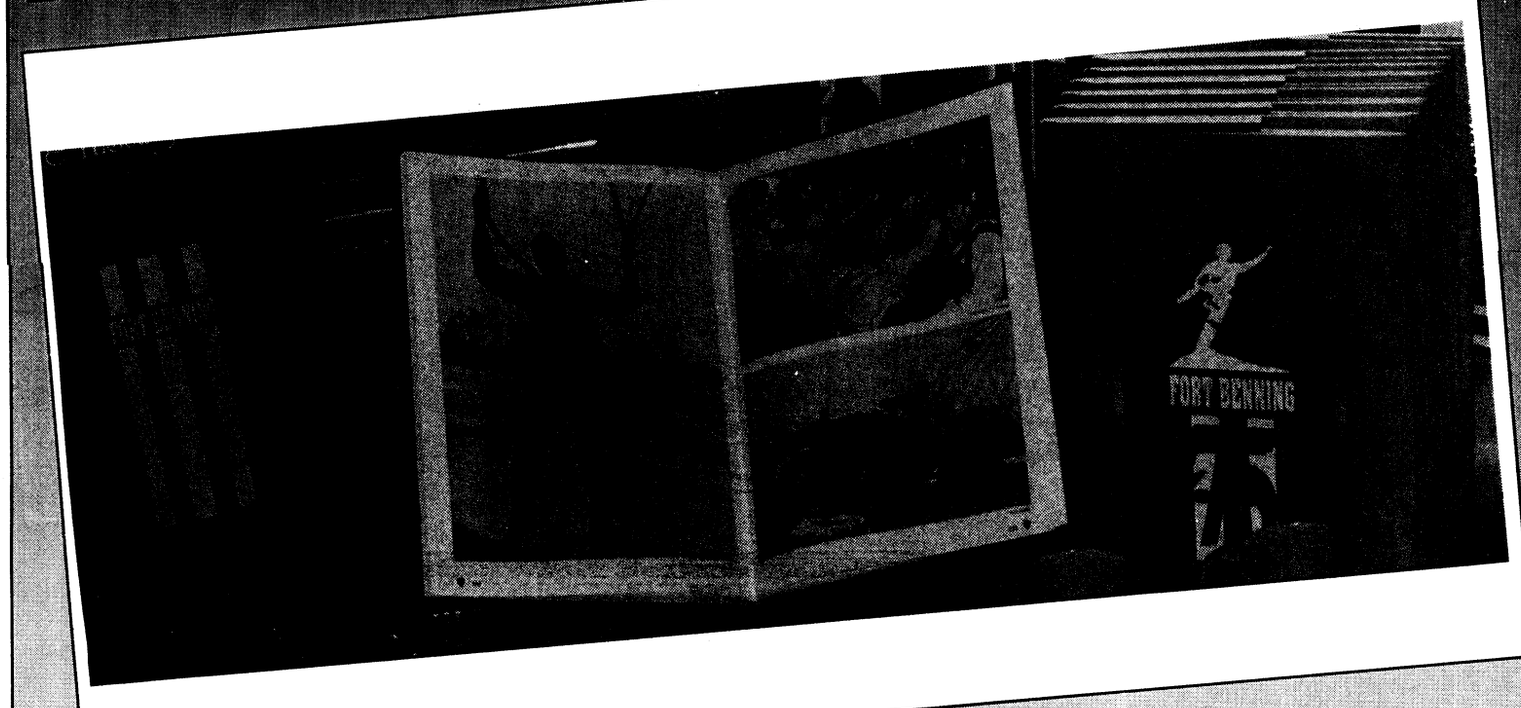
How do I get my photo on this page?

To meet customer needs and requests, The Bayonet added a Grips and Grins Page.

The newspaper receives many requests to run awards, promotions and other photos of this type, so the staff decided to designate a page just for that.

Because of the small size of our staff and the frequency and number of the events that generally produce grip-and-grin type photos, the newspaper's policy remains that we will not send a reporter to take these type of photos, but we will run those submitted by our readers.



Photos you may submit include those from events such as balls, teas, coffees, club and organizational meetings and elections, award presentations, check presentations, official parties, dinners, dining events, dances and group photos.

If you have a good-quality, black and white or color photo of an awards or promotion ceremony, sporting team, social event, etc., send it to The Bayonet, Grips and Grins Page, U.S. Army Infantry Center Public Affairs Office, Infantry Hall, Room 606, Fort Benning, Ga., 31905. Traveling with pets takes planning

Veterinary Services

Summertime is travelling season, and people with pets need to plan ahead, according to the Veterinary Services' staff.

Whether vacationing or relocating, special considerations must be made when a family mascot is involved. Things to think about include boarding facilities, health certificates, required vaccinations and quarantine procedures for the destination.

If you are going on vacation and only plan to be gone a short time, boarding your pet may be an option. Boarding facilities require all vaccinations to be up to date and may require additional vaccines, such as Bordetella (kennel cough).

In some areas, home pet-care may be available. This service is usually slightly more expensive than outside boarding, but "pet sitters" may also act as "house sitters."

Pets travelling with you may need a health certificate, depending on the destination and mode of transportation. A health certificate is a document filled out by a veterinarian stating the pet is fit for travel, free from disease and in good general health.

Health certificates are required by airlines, most foreign countries and some states, and they are only valid for 10 days after issuance.

Before leaving, check with your veterinarian to make sure all requirements have been met. For example, Oregon requires all animals to have a state-issued license number and Hawaii requires several tests and microchipping in order to qualify for a 30-day quarantine (otherwise,e it's 120 days).

Germany doesn't have a quarantine but you'll still need a health certificate for flight. Some places will not allow entry of exotic pets, such as snakes, iguanas, birds and ferrets.

Before leaving for vacation or packing to move, be sure your pet's needs have been considered. There are several steps to make before locking the door behind you, from visiting boarding facilities to scheduling vet appointments. A little planning can avoid a lot of headaches.

Humane Society warns about Heat, dogs, cars

Humane Society of the United States

As summer officially arrives and the weather heats up, the Humane Society of the United States (HSUS) reminds readers that pets, like people, can suffer from the heat — especially when left in a parked car.

Like their owners, companion animals enjoy the opportunities warm weather provides for outdoor activities. However, the needless suffering and occasional death of an animal imprisoned in a car on a warm day is a tragedy that is entirely preventable.

On a hot and humid day, the temperature inside a car rises very quickly. On an 85-degree day, for example, the temperature inside a car with the windows open slightly will reach 102 degrees within 10 minutes. After 30 minutes, the temperature will reach 120 degrees. On warmer days, it will get even hotter.

A dog's normal body temperature is 101.5 to 102.2 degrees. A dog can withstand a body temperature of 107 to 108 degrees for only a very short time before suffering irreparable brain damage, or even death.

Although many pet owners may not realize the danger of leaving their dogs in parked cars even for a few minutes, their ignorance may prove fatal. A brochure to educate others about the hazards of leaving pets in hot cars may be obtained from the HSUS. It can be placed on a car, in store windows or on bulletin boards.

To obtain one of these brochures, send a business-size, self-addressed, stamped envelope with your request for flyers to: "Hot Car," The HSUS Southeast Regional Office, 1624 Metropolitan Circle, Suite B, Tallahassee, FL 32308.

Faith leads to strong marriage

By Chaplain (Maj.) William C. Shelnutt IX
3rd Brigade Chaplains Office

Cupid shoots an arrow and another couple falls hopelessly in love and walks down the aisle and lives happily ever after.

Nice story, but is it that simple?

Statistics state that for every two marriages, one ends in divorce and many of the others exist in quiet desperation. Many other couples spend the majority of their time in conflict resolution. Where now are the promises so faithfully made and so soon forgotten?

Traditionally, June and July have been two of the busiest months for couples saying marriage vows. Whether in chapels, churches or the judges' chambers, they surround themselves with friends and family to witness a covenant stronger than a legal and binding contract. A few words of promise bind them together for life.

Remember the words? Remember the feeling? Remember the way you gazed into the eyes of that one you married and made promises, which would assure happiness for the both of you? Read the vows below and see if you recall your own commitment.

"I ... take you ... to be my lawfully wedded husband (or wife), secure in the knowledge that you will be my constant friend, my faithful partner in life and my one true love.

"On this special day, I affirm and give to you in the presence of God and these witnesses my sacred promise to stay by your side as your faithful wife (or husband) in sickness and in health, in joy and in sorrow, as well as through the good times and the bad. I further promise to love you without reservation, honor and respect you, comfort you in times of distress, encourage you to achieve all your goals, laugh with you and cry with you, grow with you in mind and spirit, always be open and honest with you and cherish you as long as we both shall live."

The daily combination of these words and actions could truly produce the kind of marriage we all want and need. If your pledges have long since come up empty, then maybe it is time to consider a recommitment of your vows.

Let all of us reverently remember God has established and blessed marriage for the welfare and happiness of humankind. He was one of our witnesses on that very special day. His word provides us with guidance to make this most sacred union fulfilling.

Maybe what marriages are missing is the spiritual link. A little-known fact states couples who faithfully pray together enjoy happier marriages and experience significantly lower divorces rates.

Knowing, loving, being faithful, honoring, nurturing, comforting and encouraging are all products of a life devoted to caring for the growth and welfare of another person.

As you know, we do not naturally exhibit this attitude or way of life. That is where God steps in with the preparation, plan and provisions.

Try praying for your partner daily and thoughtfully and see if your marriage does not take a wonderful jump in the right direction. Who knows, life may even change.

Accept God's gift of love

By Chaplain (Capt.) Lane Stockeland and Pvt. 2 David Weisenberg
2nd Bn., 69th Armor Regt.

Many of us can quote John 3:16. It was probably one of the first verses of Scripture we memorized as a child.

Martin Luther called it "the gospel in miniature. It's so simple a child can understand it, yet it condenses the deep and marvelous truths of redemption."

For us, the following story sums up the verse very well.

There was once a little homeless boy who lived on the streets of Chicago. It was wintertime and he was cold.

He saw a policeman on the street corner and asked the policeman where to find shelter. The policeman said, "Go down the street, turn left and you will see a big white house. Knock on the door and when the lady answers the door, say 'John 3:16' and she will let you in."

The boy did that and the lady let him in. She built him a nice warm fire in the fireplace where he warmed himself.

He said, "John 3:16, I sure don't understand it, but it sure makes a cold boy warm."

Later, the lady drew a warm bath for the boy. He eagerly got in the bathtub and soaked in the warm, bubbly water. He said to himself, "John 3:16, I sure don't understand it, but it sure makes a dirty boy clean."

After his bath, the lady made a nice supper for the boy. He devoured every bit of the meal and said to himself, "John 3:16, I sure don't understand it, but it sure makes a hungry boy full."

After supper, the lady made a bed upstairs and the little boy climbed in, very tired from his long day. He soon drifted off to sleep. As he was drifting off, he thought to himself, "John 3:16, I sure don't understand it, but it sure makes a tired boy rested."

The next morning, the lady made the boy a nice breakfast which he enjoyed very much. She then asked him, "Do you know what John 3:16 means?"

"No," the boy said. She then told him the gospel story about how Jesus came to die for our sins because he loved us so much. There at the kitchen table, the little boy gave his heart to the Lord.

As he was leaving the home, he turned to the lady and said, "John 3:16, I sure don't understand it, but it sure makes a lost boy saved."

How about you, friend? Have you responded to the love of God? We don't have to understand it all, just respond and accept God's gift of love, which is his son Jesus Christ.

NAPA 500 Pole Day will mark the first day of competition on the reconfigured 1.54-mile Atlanta Motor Speedway quad-oval, when the world's best race drivers attempt to shatter Robby Gordon's track record of 186.507 mph and attempt to earn berths in the season-ending Winston Cup showdown, the NAPA 500, Nov. 16. The ARCA 400 is the season finale for the Automobile Racing Club of America Bondo and Mar-Hyde Series and figures to determine who'll earn that prestigious title.

Military guests who wish to take advantage of this special offer should report to any gate numbered 12-15 at Atlanta Motor Speedway Nov. 14 for NAPA 500 Pole Day or to the special military and veterans window at Gate 13 for the ARCA 400 Nov. 15 with a valid photo identification and one of four forms of military identification:

•Honorable discharge — all other former military personnel.

Fans without military experience who wish to attend NAPA 500 Pole Day, the ARCA 400 or the NAPA 500 can purchase tickets in advance by calling the Atlanta Motor Speedway Ticket Office at (770) 946-4211.

Tyson gets bitten back by athletic commission

By John W. Peeler
Special to the Bayonet©

John W. Peeler believes Mike Tyson's antics put a black eye on the sport of boxing.

In the world of professional sports, an athlete's popularity and marketability rises and falls with each victory and defeat.

That is the nature of sports and the fans.

So has the marketability of Mike Tyson changed after his recent boxing bout at the MGM Grand Hotel with World Heavyweight Champion Evander Holyfield in which Tyson was disqualified for twice biting Holyfield on the ear.

Tyson was banned from boxing Wednesday and fined $3 million by the Nevada State Athletic Commission for the incident.

Is this the end of the line for Tyson? I hope so.

commentary

Tyson's antics and viciousness in the ring were despicable and disgusting and have no place in organized sports. They may, however, be appropriate behind a padded cell or even back in prison where he probably belongs.

His post-fight apologies and placing the blame elsewhere in no way excuses his behavior and seem to be a pattern with Tyson. His uncontrolled violence in the ring and subsequent lame apologies should silence all the naysayers who doubted his guilt in the rape conviction of Desiree Washington in 1991.

Fortunately, a new law went into effect July 1 forcing other states to honor any suspension or ban that Nevada imposes. This at least keeps Tyson from making a living in the sport he discredited until he reapplies for his license in a year.

Tyson said in an apologetically prepared seven-page statement to the press after the fight that he is receiving psychiatric treatment. So is this supposed to make it all better? I don't think so.

Tyson has hit rock bottom, and to put things in perspective, any hopes Tyson had of being considered as one of the all time great heavyweights went away the moment he was disqualified — it will be Holyfield and not Tyson who has earned and deserves that place.

To those who feel compassion toward Tyson because of his background and because fighting is all he knows, do not waste your time. After all, when was the last time you were paid $27 million for a few minutes of work or for breaking the rules — some example, huh!

It is said that desperate men use desperate measures. Tyson's desperate moment may have well ended his career and in reality would be no great loss to the institution of boxing.

Nessie makes new home in Carey Pool

Directorate of Community Activities

Nessie and her friends will be at the pool courtesy of the Directorate of Community Activities Community Recreation Division, which received a grant this year in the form of pool partners.

The pool partners are inflatable objects used in pools for climbing on and through and for jumping and sliding off of.

Some of the inflatables that will be at the pool are the Loch Ness Monster, Dolphin Slide, Slippadebob and Dobree.

Other locations for the pool partners include the Officers' Club and Youth Services outdoor swimming pools.

As a stipulation to receiving the grant, a fee of $1 will be charged to everyone during the times the pool partners are in use at Carey Pool. Fees for the Officers' Club and Youth Services outdoor pools are included in the membership fee and are not applicable at these two facilities.

Georgia Games Torch Run begins

Georgia Games

When the 1997 District Sports Festivals came to a close June 28, it meant only one thing for Georgia residents — it's time for the fifth annual Georgia Games Torch Run.

The torch, which symbolizes the camaraderie and competition of Georgia's amateur athletes, will be ignited today in Valdosta, Ga. Two teams will then carry the flame throughout the state, one team traveling along the west side of the state and the other heading east. They will reunite Thursday in Gainesville, Ga.

Then, July 18, the united team will make a stop at Centennial Olympic Park for a special ceremony before making their way to the Georgia Dome for the lighting of the cauldron at the Opening Ceremonies of the Georgia Games Championships.

Approximately 30 locations will have the torch pass through on its way to Atlanta. Celebrations will be held in each city with local dignitaries and athletes, sponsor representatives and members of the Georgia State Games Commission giving speeches and welcoming the passing of the torch.

"The Torch Run epitomizes every aspect of the Georgia Games," said Nick Gailey, executive director of the Georgia Games. "It unites the athletes, volunteers, sponsors and residents of Georgia under the banner of amateur sports."

The tradition and pageantry of the Georgia Games Torch Run has its roots in ancient Greece, where nightly competitions were held to determine who could transport the flame the fastest.

The Olympic Flame was resurrected in the modern area for the 1928 Olympic Games in Amsterdam, and eight years later in Berlin, the Torch Relay made its comeback.

The Torch Run is the kick-off event for the 1997 Georgia Games Championships. More than 15,000 athletes from throughout the state will come to Atlanta Thursday to July 20 to compete in 38 Olympic-style competitions, 65 percent of which will be at Olympic competition or training venues.

For more information about the Torch Run, contact the Georgia Games office at (404) 206-5420 or visit the website at www.georgiagames.org.

Muscle soreness common after periods of inactivity

By Linda Kaup
Bayonet correspondent

Now that the Week of Fit to Win is over, I am sure more than just a few individuals are a little sore.

Muscle soreness and stiffness are conditions that are common in individuals who begin an exercise program or participate after a long layoff from exercise.

There are two types of muscle soreness, acute and delayed. Acute soreness occurs during or immediately following exercise. The muscular tension developed during the exercise reduces blood flow to the active muscle, causing lactic acid potassium to build up, stimulating pain receptors.

commentary

For example, one type of discomfort, called ischemic pain occurs when muscle tissue does not have enough oxygen to continue working. This accounts for the ache you feel when you are trying to perform more sit-ups or lift more weight than you are used to doing. The pain disappears after you stop exerting yourself or lessen the load.

The other type of soreness is delayed soreness. This occurs one to five days following the unaccustomed or severe exercise. This may be related to tiny tears in muscle tissue.

During soreness, muscles temporarily lose their usual capacity to produce force. Unfortunately, there is no proven way to prevent delayed onset muscle soreness. Many people believe that stretching after exercise can help prevent it.

One thing that does work in minimizing the soreness is to do some mild training before hand, and if you discover you have muscle soreness, resting a few days may help ease the discomfort.

Another remedy that may work for you is active rest, that is, repeating the exercise that caused the discomfort at a lower intensity.

If you become very uncomfortable and you want a pain reliever, aspirin and ibuprofen are not recommended, they block the production of prostaglandins that help in the stimulus of muscle repair. Acetaminophen is the best choice for relief.

This year, park officials have planned a dozen fishing events where serious anglers can strut their stuff while beginning youngsters learn the basics. The tournaments are a great excuse for families to spend time together in the spring sunshine.

Most state parks have boat ramps and docks, and many rent boats and sell bait. For more information about a fishing tournament, call the host park.

Top-water lures keep fish in the strike zone

By D. Hegal and S. Price
Johnson® and Evinrude® Outboards

Throughout the post-spawn fishing seasons, many bass anglers rely on soft plastic lures and jigs they hop and crawl along the bottom, but professional tournament angler Denny Brauer does just the opposite.

He likes to use top-water lures.

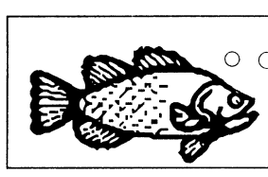
"One of the things you can do with a top-water lure is keep it in the strike zone for a long time, and this time of year, that can really be important," said Brauer, a veteran competitor. "Sometimes I think you really have to irritate bass into striking and a top-water lure lets you do that."

One of the best ways to irritate bass with a top-water lure is with a very slow, stop-and-go retrieve, especially around shallow cover, according to Brauer.

"Bass often relate to the very same bushes and logs in the post-spawn that they used several weeks earlier when they were moving shallow to spawn," he said. "During the post-spawn, however, the fish are generally much less aggressive, which is why a slow retrieve usually works best.

"I like a top-water lure that makes a lot of commotion, too," the pro said. "I'll cast beyond the target, work the lure up to it, then stop it for several seconds. I'll twitch it a time or two with my rod tip, then start retrieving it again. Most strikes come when the lure is stopped."

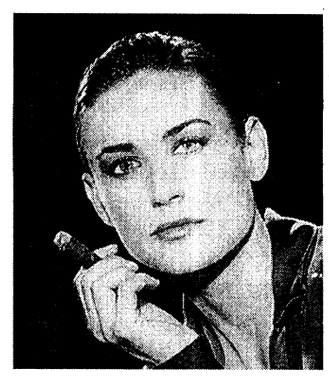
At this time of year, Brauer said action may be sporadic, so he recommends making repeated casts to each stump or bush, as well as revisiting each spot two or three times during the day.



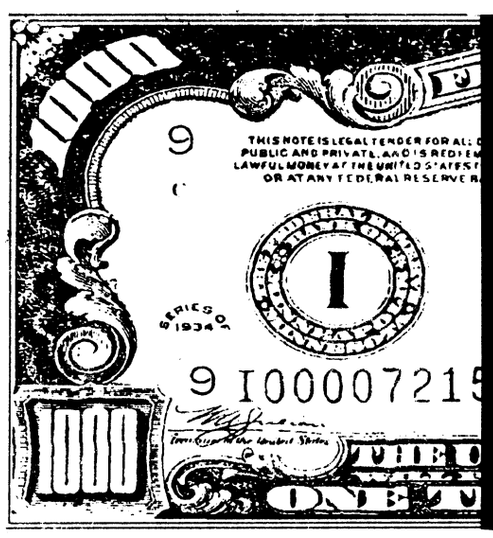
"One of the characteristics of post-spawn bass is that they tend to move a lot," he said. "They will hold beside a log or stump, but they may not necessarily remain there. I've caught a lot of bass this time of year that appeared to be swimming or roving in open water. They did not seem to be relating to any particular piece of cover at all.

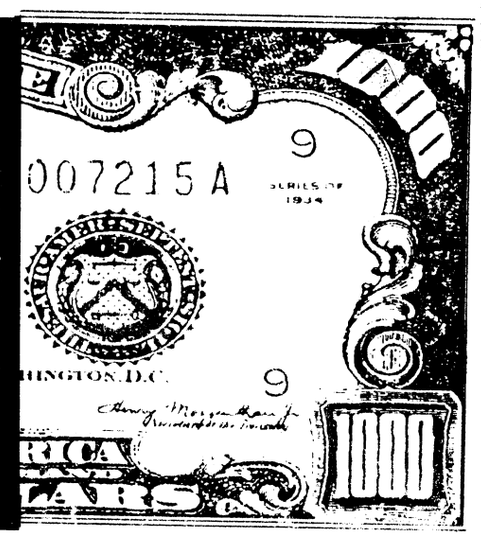
"At the same time, when one bass leaves a log, stump or bush, another may move in to claim it. That's why I always like to revisit an area several times each day."

Brauer also noted that top-water lures will catch big bass this time of year. His own personal best is a nine pounder, but he's seen others caught that weighed more.



"Sometimes the biggest bass move shallow to spawn first, so naturally, they're the first to leave and swim back to slightly deeper water," the Missouri pro said. "Even if you see some bass on their shallow water spawning beds, take some time to work a top-water lure around the visible cover in a little deeper water.





"You just might catch one of your biggest bass of the year."

Bass pro promotes standing

By D. Hegal and S. Price
Johnson®, Evinrude® Outboards

If you've ever watched a professional bass tournament angler at work, you've probably noticed his or her office doesn't have any chairs.

That's because most of them believe standing, rather than sitting, while fishing keeps them more alert.

"That's one of the primary reasons we stand," said Ken Cook, winner of the 1991 Bass Masters Classic© world championship, "but in reality, standing also allows us to cast better, to move around easier when we need to and certainly, to see better."

Cook, a former fisheries biologist, remembered when he began standing while fishing. It was in one of his earliest bass tournaments on Lake Tawakoni in Texas, and he and his partner were fishing grass beds.

"By the end of the tournament, I was literally standing on top of his outboard just so I could see the little holes in the grass better," Cook said. "As it turned out, I finished third in the tournament and won a depth finder, the very first prize I ever won in bass fishing. I've been standing to fish ever since."

Certainly one of the advantages of standing is it allows anglers to use certain fishing techniques, particularly flipping, pitching and underhand casting. Cook frequently uses underhand casts when fishing spinner baits, and because he uses a seven-foot rod, he has to stand.

"Another advantage I believe standing offers is it helps keep you more alert," the pro said. "On days when strikes are few and far between, it's very easy to let your attention wander. If you're sitting down and really comfortable, it's even easier to lose concentration.

"Standing forces you to pay more attention to what you're doing. You move around more just trying to keep the boat under control and that keeps you more alert."

Cook advised fishermen to learn to stand and fish gradually if they've been accustomed to sitting while fishing. In other words, he believes fishermen probably should keep their bow seats in the boat rather than remove them entirely as he and many other full-time pros do.

"If you're not accustomed to standing for several hours, it's going to hurt," he said. "Don't try to do it all at once. You can use your seat to brace yourself while you stand and that will help.

"The biggest thing you're going to notice is standing allows you to become a more efficient fisherman. You'll discover this right away and probably wonder why haven't I been standing before?"

Confidence is critical in professional bass fishing

By D. Hegel and S. Price
Johnson® and Evinrude® Outboards

Professional tournament angler Denny Brauer always carries several tackle boxes in the boat with him during a day of tournament competition, but his most important lure is one he carries in his mind.

It's known as confidence, and without it, Brauer said, there is no way to compete successfully in national bass fishing tournaments.

"You simply have to keep believing in yourself and your ability to catch fish," said the angler, winner of nearly $1 million during his fishing career. "Even when the fish aren't biting and you have a terrible tournament, you have to concentrate on the positive aspects of that experience.

"You have to remember that you have years of fishing experience and that you didn't suddenly lose all that experience in a single eight-hour day on the water. Every tournament pro has bad days and bad tournaments during his career.

Brauer emphasized that desire is also important in building confidence. A person has to want to catch fish and has to truly want to compete before he or she will ever be successful.

"This is one of the reasons beginners often do well, especially when they're just learning to fish," said the Missouri pro. "They never dream that they might not catch fish because they haven't experienced a fishless day on the water.

"Once you begin to accumulate fishing experiences, then concentration becomes more important as a confidence builder. That's one reason most of the pros fish alone in practice. It allows them to concentrate completely on what they're doing.

"Overall, experience is probably the best teacher when you're trying to gain confidence," Brauer said. "You know there will be bad days because you've had them, but you also know there are going to be good days because you've experienced them, as well.

"What you concentrate on are those good days."

ANN BOLES & JIM OWENS
PARTNERS IN REAL ESTATE SATISFACTION
Your International Military Relocation Representatives

When it's time to buy or sell a home, turn to Ann Boles and Jim Owens. Ann and Jim have over 20 years combined experience in Real Estate. It's friendly, efficient service that makes them the best real estate teams in the area. As you tour homes with them, they provide FREE childcare.

Ann, an Alabama native, has quite a reputation in real estate. After 14 years of negotiating and solving problems, her experience offers buyers and sellers expert care and professionalism not found in the average Realtor.

"My 20 point written plan to market homes is invaluable to me and my clients. Price and condition are the keys to selling a home. I know how to "stage" a home to appeal to the buyer's eye. I prepare buyers and sellers for the home buying experience," Ann says.

Ann, a Psychology graduate of Judson College, and Jim are Multi-Million Dollar producers. Ann says "Success is more than money. A large part of my satisfaction comes from first time home buyers. I love it every time I see a young family buy their first home. There is so much pride and excitement, I love being a part of their joy!"

Since joining the real estate profession in 1983, Ann has made her place in the Columbus, Phenix City area. Ann, and husband Arnold, employed by Colorado Beef, have two children. Julie and John are graduates of Hardaway High and Auburn University.

Jim Owens, a native of Rochelle, Georgia, has earned a valuable reputation in real estate in Alabama and Georgia. He graduated from Auburn University in 1969 then earned a Masters from UCA. His wife, Pat, is a surgical nurse at the Medical Center. They have a daughter, Courtney. Pat and Jim are retired from the U.S. Army. He is knows the needs of military families, understanding the transition. Jim and Ann are members of IMRC, a Military Relocation Service, and The AMWAY Referral Network.

Ann and Jim joined Allen Parham in the development of a Real Estate Company based on professionalism and ethical service. Allen Parham Realtors is located near the Hollywood Connection off Bradley Park Drive. Ann will be teaching Pre-License and training new agents in addition to selling. Jim is the Managing Broker for Alabama transactions.

Ann and Jim have homes available in Phenix City and Columbus in all price ranges. "We would like to have good listings in every subdivision," says Jim. Let these two put their experience to work in your best interest. Successful methods and teamwork pay off!

BEST ARMY INSTALLATION

Fort Benning wins quality award

By Cpl. Marc G. Turchin
Bayonet staff writer

Fort Benning is the Best Army Installation in the World. Local community members have heard that phrase over and over again. The post has been the top Army installation three out of the past four years.

This year Fort Benning reached the pinnacle of it's drive to be the best by winning the Presidential Award for Quality (PAQ). This award is given in recognition of service to customers and commitment to excellence.

Fort Benning Commanding General Maj. Gen. Carl F. Ernst accepted the award in Washington, D.C., July 10. The award was given to Ernst by James Lee Witt, director, Federal Emergency Management Agency, and John J. Hamre, undersecretary of Defense (Comptroller).

More than 80 Soldiers and civilians traveled to the nation's capital for the ceremony. When Fort Benning was announced as the winner, an applause with a volume level worthy of a concert echoed inside the ballroom of the hotel where the ceremony was conducted.

Once Ernst was on stage and received the award, he unexpectedly asked Witt if he could say a few words. Witt agreed.

"I can't tell you what a privilege and a honor it is to be up here," Ernst said. "I'm really excited for the folks at Fort Benning today." He ended his remarks with a "hooah" and again the crowd cheered.

Hooah, almost single-handedly has been the post motto since the quest to become more customer oriented began in 1992.

The post was nearly dead last in the Training and Doctrine Command's (TRADOC) Army Communities of Excellence Competition (ACOE) in 1992. In 1993, the post not only won TRADOC's competition, but also took home the Commander-in-Chief's Award for Best Army Installation in the World. Since then it has been nonstop winning for the installation.

"This is the top award in the federal government. It's the best of the best," said Sarah McLaney, director of the Quality Management Division, Directorate of Resource Management. "We cannot do any better than this as far as awards."

Cpl. Marc G. Turchin

Maj. Gen. Carl F. Ernst displays the award for federal quality.

McLaney said she had to wipe away her tears of joy during the ceremony.

"It's a Utopia kind of feeling," she said. "We really did this. We have really done it. Our Soldiers and the Army and everything that is good about our nation was showcased to the world by Fort Benning winning this award. It shows that we do care and we do try to do the best that we can do."

Winning the PAQ in only it's first attempt signifies Fort Benning's continued desire for excellent customer service.

"It took the whole team. It took the whole Fort Benning team," Ernst said. "We decided we were going to go for this award, and we did and we got it."

One of the post's Soldiers who attended the ceremony, Master Sgt. Kim S. Silcox, who works in Soldiers Plaza and is assigned to Company A, 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment, said this award means a lot.

"I think it gives us credibility as far as our commitment to quality and how serious we are about it," Silcox said.

She operates the in- and out-processing section and said she wants Soldiers to have good impressions of the post.

"Our number-one priority is the Soldiers arriving and leaving Fort Benning have the very best first impression and the very best last impression of Fort Benning," Silcox said. "That's important to us. Customer service is what we do. Without the Soldiers, we wouldn't be here and we value them."

People are what make the post what it is, Ernst said, and he spent a few days in Washington, D.C., telling others about Fort Benning.

Ernst and post Chief of Staff Col. Lawrence K. White conducted workshops with representatives of other federal agencies telling how things are done in the Army and on Fort Benning.

During one session, Ernst and White were asked questions concerning after action reviews, new tactics of customer service and getting feedback from Soldiers and civilians of all ranks.

Soldier's death under investigation

By Pvt. 2 Tricia A. Schipmann
USAIC Public Affairs Office

A Fort Benning Soldier died from a heat-related incident July 9.

Pvt. Clinton Dock, Company D, 1st Battalion, 38th Infantry Regiment, was in his fourth week of one station unit training when he suffered an irreversible brain injury and died after being treated for heat exhaustion.

Dock, an Alaskan, arrived at Sand Hill in late May for basic training.

While those who train Soldiers are aware of the precautions that need to be taken during hot weather, officials in the post safety office remind people that one can never be too careful. They cite U.S. Army Infantry Center Regulation 40-14 that provides rules for hot weather training.

For instance, the Soldier's first day of training, he or she should have one hour maximum of outdoor exposure. The Soldier must also rest 10 minutes for every 15 minutes of strenuous activity and drink a quart of water every 90 minutes.

Examples of strenuous activity include unit runs, road marches, drills involving push-ups, sit-ups, pull-ups and timed obstacle or land navigation courses.

Each day, the Soldier spends more time outdoors and may train longer between periods of rest. The Soldier, therefore, builds up tolerance to the heat, and after 14 days is considered "acclimatized."

A number of post agencies work together to educate the community on what can be done to prevent heat injuries.

The Infantry Branch Safety Office advised personnel to drink water 30 to 40 minutes before exercising and then a cupful every 10 to 15 minutes while exercising.

Also, personnel should dress coolly and gradually build up tolerance to heat. They also advised personnel to stay fit, not overestimate their level of fitness and be aware of any medical conditions that can affect their heat tolerance. These conditions include diabetes, high blood pressure and obesity.

Also working to educate the community is the post Preventative Medicine Department, which is responsible for monitoring and reporting the heat index, or the actual temperature combined with the percentage of humidity.

This information is updated and available to all commanders, according to Capt. Lisa Forsyth, chief of Environmental Health. Forsyth said this helps

Commander charges two 1/10 FA Soldiers

USAIC Public Affairs Office

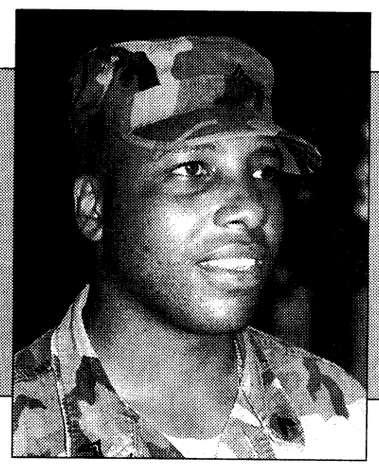
Two 3rd Brigade Soldiers were charged Wednesday for their alleged involvement in a barracks larceny reported the night of June 21 on Kelley Hill.

Pfc. Steven L. Hill and an accomplice are charged with conspiracy to commit fraud by removing Hill's stereo equipment then painting racial slurs in Hill's room to cover up the crime.

Hill and Spc. Lashion Robinson, both of Headquarters and Headquarters Battery, 1st Battalion, 10th Field Artillery, 3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division (Mechanized), were charged following an extensive investigation by the Criminal Investigation Division.

Hill is charged with conspiracy to commit fraud and larceny, attempted larceny, attempted fraud, damage to government property and making three false official statements.

Robinson is also charged with conspiracy to commit fraud and larceny, attempted larceny, damage to government property and making a false official statement.



Once charges are preferred, under the provisions of the Uniform Code of Military Justice, an investigation under Article 32 of the code must be conducted prior to the case being referred to trial by general courts martial. This process is similar to a grand jury review.

Hill and Robinson are expected to continue working during this process and deploy with the unit when it goes to the National Training Center in Fort Irwin, Calif., later this month.

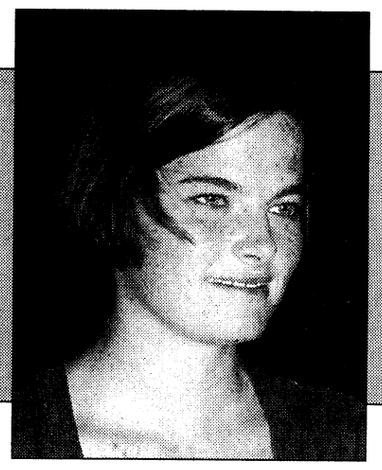
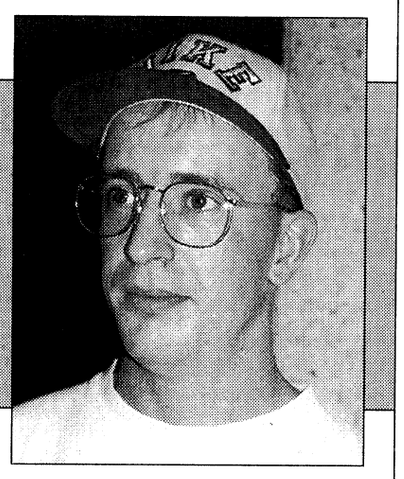
VARIOUS VOICES

What do you think about the new post regulations concerning animal control?

Cpl. Terry Cornwell, Company B, 1st Battalion, 10th Field Artillery Regiment, 3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division (Mechanized) — "I think it's good. It will keep dogs from wandering off and messing with kids. It will also keep the owner more aware of where the dog is."



Pfc. Shannon Grega, 317th Engineer Battalion, 3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division (Mechanized) — "It's a good idea. A dog on a leash is a good idea anyway. It gives the owner more control of his animal."



Frances Wilson, family member — "I think dogs should be on leashes. It's good the regulations are in effect."

Sadie Dennis, family member — "It might not necessarily apply to smaller dogs. I'm more concerned about the larger, more dangerous dogs like Rottweilers and pit bulls."

Pfc. Rhiannon Shannon, 317th Engineer Battalion, 3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division (Mechanized) — "I think it's a good idea. When I lived in post housing, there were too many loose dogs."

Sgt. Ralph McCardell, 5694th National Guard Unit, Ohio — "It's a good idea. A lot of kids might be scared of a bigger dog."

Animal abuse

Pets should be treated with respect, consideration

By Elizabeth E. LaMonica
Special to The Bayonet©

Elizabeth E. LaMonica says indifferent, irresponsible pet owners harm the truly innocent.

commentary

Whether fuzzy, furry, feathery or scaly, animals are fascinating windows into the realm of nature. Humans can look to wild creatures for education or entertaining antics. But in pets, humans can give and receive love, companionship, friendship, comfort and a range of other emotions and qualities. One of the most wonderful gifts a human can receive is the love of an animal.

Think back to your first pet. Was it a cat, a dog? Maybe a goldfish? Now remember your other pets. If you're like me, you've run the gamut of possible domesticated animals. I brought home several animals as a child. Some, like the cat, got to stay. Some, like that really cool rat snake, had to leave — fast. But I loved each and every one of them and did my best to care for them, as I'm sure you did.

But what if our beloved pets had not been as lucky as to have one of us to care for it? What if someone who was indifferent, or worse, deliberately cruel had claimed our adopt-a-pets? It makes me mad just thinking about someone hurting an animal, but the sad fact is, it happens. Every day.

I wonder why some people get pets. They think of their pet as a status symbol or a profit-making venture. Maybe it's a way of establishing themselves. You know, the same mentality as "graduate, get married, get a dog, have a kid." But the responsibilities of pet ownership soon set in.

Some pets, like dogs, cats and birds, require huge commitments of time and money. Others, like hermit crabs, do not. (I know, I've had 'em.) But all creatures deserve proper treatment. This includes good food, health-care and emotional care.

We all can recognize the obvious types of abuse. Beating the animal tops that list. Sometimes people just expect an animal to know better. That mentality is stupid. For instance, an acquaintance of mine used to play with her cat by running her fingers back and forth in front of him until he pounced on her hand. Then she'd whack him for using his claws.

This girl had found the cat right after he'd opened his eyes and had kept the cat indoors for months. But when the cost of taking care of the cat became too "expensive" (the cat needed to get immunized and be neutered), she decided to return him to the wild.

When I asked her why she wouldn't take him to the pound, she replied the pound was too cruel, he probably wouldn't be adopted and then he would be put to sleep. "At least this way he'll have a fighting chance," she said.

These "freed" pets may survive. But any abused animal who gets away or is thrown away can pose a threat when confronted by a perceived threat — humans.

One of the apartments I lived in while at college was extremely tiny — 440 square feet. Yet one of my neighbors had a Great Dane and a Black Lab-St. Bernard mix living in that space. We had no yards, so he left them inside for most of the day while he went to classes. Those poor, bored creatures ate the couch, the carpet, the cabinets and the baseboards off the walls — and then got beaten for it.

Sometimes abuse is not taking the time to consider the result of an action. An owner may leave an animal in a car "just for a few minutes" while he runs an errand. While away from his car, he becomes distracted and forgets the heat, causing unnecessary suffering for the neglected animal.

Sometimes the actions are deliberately cruel. I know of several situations where owners knowingly fed their pets alcohol. I'm not really sure the intention of such behavior, but it ranks right up there with tying firecrackers to their tails: unnecessary, cruel and downright evil.

Here on post, I am fortunate enough to live in an area that has fenced-in yards. One of my neighbors has a beautiful dog that exists on a short length of chain tied around a tree. In a year, I have never seen that dog receive any attention or leave the immediate vicinity of that tree. I can't excuse that kind of neglect. Other types of inexcusable neglect exist, though.

I have known people who left their homes for two weeks and left their pets outside without getting a friend to even check on them. Regardless of how much food and water they left, these short-sighted owners failed to consider the effects scavengers and the weather might have on their pets' food supplies.

I asked a veterinarian what people do to their animals that upsets him. Apparently people will get their animals immunized for rabies, because they are required to by law, but they won't do anything about heart worms or fleas. One vet I spoke with here in Columbus said fleas can kill an animal.

"Owners will bring their pet in and say, 'He seemed sort of sluggish.' The poor thing is covered in fleas and has flea anemia as a result, which can be deadly!"

He went on to tell me how frustrating irresponsible owners can be.

Responsibility and consideration — that's what it boils down to. Pet owners need to be considerate of their animals' needs and be responsible for the care of their pets.

Soldier readiness should include family

By Deanna Fendler
Walter Reed Army Medical Center, Md., Stripe

In today's "power projected" Army, a vital part of maintaining deployment readiness is maintaining family readiness. The importance of family readiness to the overall goal of Soldier readiness, and ultimately to the outcome of a mission, can't be overemphasized.

commentary

Family readiness is a 52-weeks-a-year commitment that ensures both the Soldier and his or her loved ones are continuously prepared for a separation of two weeks or longer because of military duty. It is too important to be left to the last minute. Leaving important personal and family matters until deployment notification is risky and produces needless worry, stress and expense for Soldiers and their family members.

With a little year-round effort, Soldiers and their families can find deployment to be an orderly activity with adequate time to handle unanticipated details. Being prepared for deployment on an ongoing basis gives them the peace of mind of knowing they are ready for whatever lies ahead.

If the Soldier and his or her family work together to maintain family readiness as an ongoing activity, they will have time when a deployment is announced to psychologically prepare each other for the separation. There will be time to talk about feelings, alleviate fears and plan activities that will help maintain the Soldier's presence in the family and help them use the separation time constructively.

A deployment requires clear heads and quick thinking for Soldiers. Needless worrying about a spouse, children, car, pets and so on can interfere with their concentration and safety, as well as that of their units. The best way to solve potential problems is to anticipate and take care of them in advance. After a deployment takes place, the ability to help resolve these problems is either significantly reduced or eliminated altogether.

If you are a Soldier with a spouse or children, it is your responsibility to ensure that your family is prepared for a separation. Here are some tips:

•Make sure your spouse or personal representative has the name, address and telephone number and company of a tax advisor and a list of military and civilian community organizations that can provide financial advice and assistance during your absence.

•Review your leave and earnings statement with your spouse or representative and develop a family budget that will help him or her understand your income and monthly, periodic and special expenses. Make provisions for payment of your bills and maintenance of your financial affairs. Leave names, addresses and telephone numbers of companies to which bill payments should be made.

•Make sure your paycheck is automatically deposited in your checking account. Ensure that your spouse or representative is listed on the account and on the bank's signature card to authorize withdrawals. Remember, if your family is on food stamps, your benefits will be reduced by one person during your deployment.

•Make sure all transactions and services that are needed during your absence will be made automatically or can be handled with your spouse or representative's signature. Your spouse or representative needs to have access to all the bank books, loan papers, automated teller cards and so on that he or she might need. Make a list of key contact people, addresses and telephone numbers for these organizations.

•Ensure that your spouse and dependent children each have a military identification card. Almost nothing can be done by them without a current military ID card. This one essential item ensures their well-being. Without a military ID, they can't use the hospital, post or base exchange, commissary or other military services.

•Make sure your spouse or representative has a copy of all necessary keys: the house, garage, car, private storage unit, safety deposit box and so on. Also, if applicable, don't forget to give them information about taking care of your pets and plants during your absence.

•Ensure that you have an up-to-date family care plan, with your current address and phone number, on file with your unit. Also be sure to let your unit know if your spouse, representative or family members have special needs, such as pregnancy, not speaking English, not driving or having a serious illness or injury, so they can ensure their needs are met in your absence.

36th changes command

By Spc. Brian R. Voller
Bayonet staff writer

The Soldiers of the 36th Engineer Group (Combat) stepped onto York Field July 11 to welcome their new commander during a change of command ceremony.

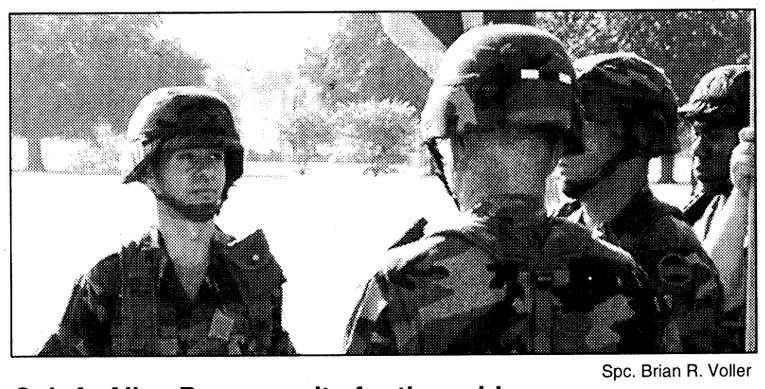
Col. A. Allen Rasper was handed the colors and command of the 36th from Col. Thomas L. Bailey.

After two years as the commander of the 36th, Bailey and his wife Sue are leaving to take a position in Korea .

Fort Benning's Commanding General Maj. Gen. Carl F. Ernst said Bailey was a model commander during his two years on Fort Benning.

"We are recognizing a great Soldier who is departing the 36th Engineer Group," Ernst said. "Colonel Thomas Bailey came to Fort Benning as a distinguished colonel, he had all the right credentials, and he's done a magnificent job commanding the most diverse group of Soldiers on Fort Benning."

In his final address to the Soldiers of the 36th, Bailey thanked all of the past commanders of Fort Benning who he served under and he thanked the Soldiers he commanded.



"I've been blessed with some of the best officers, noncommissioned officers and enlisted Soldiers the Army can provide," Bailey said. "All of the leadership of the 36th has a deep sense of caring and concern for the Soldiers and families of the group. It is truly leadership by example."

After Bailey completed thanking the Soldiers and civilians he has worked with, Rasper spoke about how proud he was to be taking command of the 36th Eng. Grp.

"I am both honored and privileged to be standing before you today as your new commander," Rasper said. "It is an awesome responsibility that will receive my total dedication. I approach the inherent responsibilities of command with humility and a full appreciation of the important work ahead."

Rasper graduated from the Virginia Military Institute in 1974 as a distinguished military graduate, and was commissioned as a second lieutenant in the Corps of Engineers.

He holds a bachelor's in Civil Engineering from VMI and a master's in science degree in Management from Troy State University.

Spc. Brian R. Voller

Col. A. Allen Rasper waits for the guidon.

His military education includes the Engineer Officer Basic and Advanced Courses, Command and General Staff College and the U.S. Army War College.

Since graduating from college, Rasper served in Germany, Honduras, Korea and various CONUS posts.

Rasper is married to the former Judy F. Mangs and they have one daughter, Michelle.

If convicted off all charges and specifications, they could face dishonorable discharges, forfeiture of all pay and allowances, reductions to the rank of private and in excess of 20 years each in a military prison.

Both men agreed most of the post's success belongs to the community members and past commanders.

But when the workshops were done, the time came to pick up the post's latest hardware.

"This is as good as it gets," said Pat Porter, management analyst, Quality Management Division, ,Directorate of Resource Management.

She said a lot of people worked extremely hard for this award.

"It's the culmination of five to six years of hard work for everybody at Fort Benning," she said.

Ernst said Fort Benning's future success will depend on it's focus.

"You have to focus on what's important," Ernst said. "People are important, not things, people."

"We have quality people at Fort Benning," Porter said. "We have a wonderful work force with both the civilians and the military."

Now that the Fort Benning community has proven itself a leader in customer service, Ernst believes this adds another dimension for the post.

"I think there's more pressure on us now to live up to our own reputation, which is good for Fort Benning."

injury prevention guides. These guides describe the heat categories and control measures needed to recognize and prevent heat injuries.

For example, a heat category of "three" requires a person to drink at least one quart of water per hour, and acclimatized soldiers should rest 15 minutes for every 45 minutes of work.

Gary Conner, chief of Range Operations, Directorate of Operations and Training, said it's especially important for units training in the field to get and use this information. Once Conner receives the heat category, he broadcasts it three times on a special range control radio frequency.

This helps commanders in the field remain up to date on weather changes. The commanders can then refer to the heat injury prevention guides to schedule training.

To get a copy of this guide or schedule a heat injury prevention and first aid class, contact the Preventative Medicine Department at 544-3385.

Rangers plan Banner Day

By Staff Sgt. John H. Stebbins
3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment

The 3rd Ranger Battalion, just back from a two-week block leave, plans to hit the ground running with the celebrated ranger tradition of "Banner Day" today.

Banner Day is held semi-annually to promote cohesion in the battalion and test the mettle of the rangers in both individual and team efforts, according to Capt. Kevin Lampert, 3rd Battalion public affairs officer.

This Banner Day consists of nine events that pit the companies against each other. The events were designed to challenge without breaking the ranger.

Events such as American ball, the highest casualty-producing contest in the battalion, and boxing have been dropped from the agenda. The substitute events include the ranger special operations vehicle (RSOV). Six rangers push a vehicle around Peden Field for the fastest time.

Also brand new is the quadrathon, a multi-event relay involving a 600-meter swim, a bike race around Lawson Army Airfield, a 35-pound ruck run and a five-mile foot race.

Lampert said the events will begin early in the morning in order to beat the heat and go on throughout the day, culminating with a battalion tug o' war contest and awards ceremony.

Banner Day has been a 3rd Battalion tradition for 11 years, and of those years, the Banner Day ribbon has hung from the Company A guidon for 10 of them.

"In the spirit of friendly competition, the rest of the battalion will be striving fiercely to snatch the ribbon from Company A," said Sgt. 1st Class Luke Ledger, Banner Day coordinator.

Soldiers and family members gathered at the Ranger Memorial July 11 to witness the promotion of Col. William J. Leszczynski Jr. to the rank of brigadier general during a ceremony punctuated by humor and reminiscence.

Lt. Gen. Peter J. Schoomaker, commanding general, U.S. Army Special Operations Command, praised Leszczynski and spoke about the significance of the ceremony during his remarks.

"This is the first officer promoted to the general officer ranks at this memorial," Schoomaker said. "I think that's significant because Bill Leszczynski represents and has personified over the time that I've known him precisely what this memorial (stands for). He's earned it by walking the walk and participating at every level and doing a hard job ... standing up for his folks .... the man is quality."

Then Schoomaker, along with Leszczynski's wife Jennifer pinned the rank to his lapel. Leszczynski's son Peter attached the single star to his father's black beret.

During his remarks, Leszczynski recognized his family's, Soldiers' and bosses' supportive behaviors.

"I consider myself very fortunate," Leszczynski said. "(My bosses) encouraged me, they motivated me and they kept me on track."

He went on to acknowledge the Soldiers of the 75th Ranger Regiment.

"I'm here today ... because of you and I appreciate everything you did on my behalf," he said. "I'm indebted to you. I've been surrounded by great rangers who every single day did what I asked them to do and, more importantly, did what was right and did what their country asked them to do."

Both Leszczynski and his wife admitted they will miss Fort Benning, but they both said they were looking forward to his next assignment, which will be in Verona, Italy.

Battalion brings added dimension to ITB

By Elizabeth E. LaMonica
Special to The Bayonet©

Last October, people at the Department of the Army noticed there would be a shortage of Infantrymen during the summer of '97 and '98. Their solution? Create another Infantry training battalion to produce more of these needed troops.

So started the 2nd Battalion, 19th Infantry Regiment. Its mission: to receive and train Soldiers and train them as Infantrymen and, upon graduation, send them on as their individual contracts specify.

Located in Kinsman Barracks, Sand Hill, the 2nd currently consists of two companies, but will receive its three remaining companies by September. The company that will become Company E, presently Company F, 1st Battalion, 50th Infantry Regiment, already works in the same building as the 2nd, which provides both benefits and confusion.

"I think of them as mine, but technically, they're not," said Command Sgt. Maj. Clifford Lewis. "It requires a large degree of participation on my and their parts because, for example, the first sergeant has two sets of meetings to go to. So it's mostly a time management problem."

Time is not the only issue being faced. As the battalion is established, administrative work rises. The drill sergeants must become certified. The 2nd must compose a standard operating procedure.

"That's a time-consuming task by itself that calls for some late nights just sitting here proofing," Lewis said. "How do I want sick call to run? How do I want staff duty noncommissioned officers to run? What uniform will the Soldiers wear this winter?

"Actually there are a lot of advantages to starting a new battalion. You have a fresh start. You can do a lot of things your way. But it's not fundamentally different from the other battalions."

The barracks, which in the past have been used as a temporary site for one of the post's elementary schools damaged by hurricane Opal, must be returned to Soldiers' quarters.

"The support we've received is real strong," Lewis said. The Brigade and the on post agencies are responding to us. That's good. But the bottom line is: it's a busy time and place trying to get everything done."

"The most important aspect about training Soldiers is attention to detail and the discipline to use it. The Soldiers are the important part of why we're here."

New battalion gets new commander at Infantry Training Brigade

By Yvette Stewart
Infantry Training Brigade

The 2nd Battalion, 19th Infantry Regiment, is under new command.

Lt. Col. Roy C. Howle Jr. assumed command of the battalion July 11, which was reactivated May 28.

Howle, a native of Mobile, Ala., received his commission as a second lieutenant in the Infantry in 1980 from the ROTC program at Spring Hill College, Mobile. He graduated with military honors as the school's only distinguished military graduate in the year.

Howle comes from Camp Smith, Hawaii, where he served with the U.S. Pacific Communication Command.

"I feel like the luckiest man in the U.S. Army," Howle said. "I may be the commander, but I am part of a very important team."

The 2nd Bn., 19th Inf. Regt., has a long and distinguished history that began May 3, 1861. It fought throughout the Civil War and earned it's motto as "The Rock of the Chickamagua" for its rock-steady performance in the battle of Chickamagua. The colors continue to fly in 31 military campaigns throughout history, in the Civil War, Indian Wars with Spain, Philippine Insurrection, World War II and the Korean War before it was inactivated May 1, 1966, in Germany.

"Since its activation, the battalion has gone about preparing for the eventual training of our new Infantrymen like no other I have witnessed within the brigade," said Col. Abraham J. Turner, Infantry Training Brigade commander.

"The only piece that was missing from the birth of this new battalion was the assignment of a lieutenant colonel battalion commander. Lieutenant Colonel Howle now joins the ranks of the Infantry Training Brigade commanders," Turner said.

The 2nd Battalion now has two fully operational companies in the ITB, which trains approximately 5,500 Soldiers each day.

Charter member of Bradley Fighting Vehicle System retires

Early developer leaves mechanized legacy behind him for future Soldiers

By Lt. Col. Tim Mishkofski
TRADOC System Manager-BFV

Charlie O'Dell, one of the "fathers" of the Bradley Fighting Vehicle System (BFVS), and known to Infantrymen worldwide, retires this month after more than 40 years of service to the United States.

For 43 years O'Dell's work was with the military, first as a Soldier then as a Department of the Army civilian working with the Bradley.

"Nearly 6,800 Bradleys have been built and Charlie O'Dell has played a major role in the development, fielding and support of each," said Lt. Col. Ted Johnson, program manager for the Bradley's latest variant — the digitized A3.

"As a 17-year-old in 1951, I worked on the assembly line, refurbishing half-tracks for war in Korea," O'Dell said. "As a maintenance sergeant in the '50s in Germany, I helped deprocess the first M-59 Armored Personnel Carrier delivered to troops. In the '60s I was an M-113 Infantry Company commander in Korea. And in 1983, I helped field the first BFVS to 1st Battalion, 41st Infantry, at Fort Hood, Texas. So you might say I've got a background for this," he said.

Today, O'Dell serves as the deputy Training and Doctrine Command (TRADOC) system manager (TSM) for the Bradley.

During a 27-year career in uniform, the Lincoln, Ala., native served in Korea, Germany, and two tours in Vietnam.

In 1968 O'Dell was an instructor in the Infantry Company Tactics Department.

"We trained officers and NCOs for combat on a seven-days-a-week schedule that ran over 100 hours per week," he said. "The school ran 24 hours a day. Those were my friends going to war: we had to do it right," O'Dell said.

In the late '70s, O'Dell returned to Fort Benning and was part of Gen. William DePuys' TRADOC revolution in military affairs that took the Army from a post-Vietnam defensive attrition strategy to the information-age war today: speed, lethality and full spectrum dominance.

"Charlie was part of the Infantry School when it began to develop new doctrine and training after Vietnam," said Steve Takacs, product support manager for United Defense LP, the Bradley's manufacturer. "The Bradley Fighting Vehicle and its success in Desert Storm grew out of this 'concept based' requirements system."

The Army will test a new digitized A3 Bradley version at Fort Benning this December for the first time without O'Dell.

With that in mind, Sgt. 1st Class Ron Kuykendall, master gunner with the 29th Infantry Regiment, said, "Charlie's retirement leaves a void in experience and knowledge that we Soldiers will have to work hard to fill. He was always dedicated to support the Infantry Soldier first."

A retirement dinner for O'Dell will be at 6:30 p.m. Thursday at the Fort Benning Officers' Club. For more information, call 545-5386.

Soldier Enhancement Program

By Sgt. 1st Class Larry Lane
Public Affairs Office NCOIC

As an Infantry platoon leader with the 82nd Airborne at Fort Bragg, N.C., 1st Lt. Christopher Geolas often had to lead his Soldiers through minefield obstacles.

Using expedient light Infantry tactics, his Soldiers would take a folded entrenching tool (ET), tie some thin rope to the handle and clear the area by dragging the shovel across the ground. The minefield clearing was a slow process, he said, with more time added to the process by probing the area by bayonet.

"The ET was all we had at first. You would figure after World War II we would have developed something better." The time to negotiate a minefield had to be quicker, he said, and he looked to a grappling hook as a possible answer.

One grappling hook already available to Soldiers can be fired from a weapon. The hook does

news from the front

By 1st Lt. Scott Rollston
498th Medical Co. Rear Detachment

In a recent e-mail message, Maj. Tracy Wyatt, commander of the deployed 498th Medical Company (Air Ambulance), 36th Engineer Group (Combat), wrote of some events the company's Soldiers took part in.

"We had a great Fourth of July here in Bosnia. There were lots of competitions with every Soldier from the 498th pitching in to take away three trophies for tug of war, humvee stuffing and a multi-event called the gladiator.

"We had a blast stuffing 44 Soldiers into a four-seat humvee, eating barbecue and listening to several bands. Country, rock (American and Swedish) and the San Francisco 49er Cheerleaders were here on a USO tour.

"One Soldier threw the command sergeant major into the mud pit, and our first sergeant and I were tossed in by others. We wore our new 498th T-shirts, the envy of all Multi-National Division North, and we really did have some fun."

"Over Memorial Day, the Forward Support Team in Hungary participated in the first International Air Show at Kesckement, Hungary, providing both aerial and ground displays."

"We have now flown more than 900 hours and completed 60 missions. I remain extremely proud of the unit's accomplishments thus far, and we will remain focused until we are all home safe".

At Fort Benning, the rear detachment continues to support its forward unit. New Soldiers and families arrive weekly.

Immediately these Soldiers train to become deployment qualified and many are on their way to Bosnia as soon as their families are settled.

It's a tough way to start a new duty station which is why the Family Support Group continues to thrive on camaraderie and plan children's events. Together they slowly shrink the gap towards the return of friends and loved ones.

SEP: Program gives Soldiers opportunity to field ideas exactly what the platoon leader wanted it to — it flies over a minefield, lands and is then dragged back across the field. This grappling hook system, he said, was a one-time use tool and very heavy.

"That was the last thing we (the light Infantry) would want to carry," he said. "We needed something we could use several times to practice with."

Geolas looked at some of the other grappling hooks available through the Army inventory. All of the hooks seemed too big and awkward for a Soldier to carry. A light Infantryman has to be able to low crawl, drop and roll, and move through tough obstacles with his individual equipment.

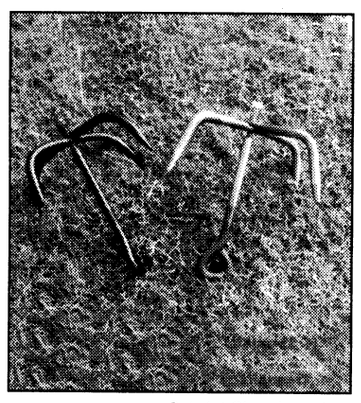
"It's dangerous," he said about carrying a large grappling hook. "If you fall down, you can gore yourself."

What if a grappling hook could be collapsed small enough to fit in a Soldiers butt-pack, Geolas asked himself. With his experience and idea, he went to a local maintenance shop that forged his idea into a potential new piece of equipment for the light Infantry.

This collapsible grappling hook is now in the hands of Soldier Enhancement Program (SEP) reviewers at the Training and Doctrine Command System Manager-Soldier office, the office at Fort Benning tasked to test ideas submitted by Soldiers. Mandated by Congress in 1989, SEP looks at these potential new items for the Soldier by asking these questions:

•Will this item be worn, carried,or consumed for individual use in a tactical environment?

•Is this a non-developmental item that is commercially available, off-the-shelf, right now?



•Are Soldiers spending their own money on this item to make their life better in the field?

•Is it intended as a mid- to long-term solution to be fielded to a large segment of the Army?

•Does it duplicate an existing or ongoing program?

•Does this idea have the support of the combat developer and proponent?

After passing this initial series

Sgt. 1st Class Larry Lane

Pictured are two grappling hooks the SEP office is now testing for possible future fielding.

of questions, the idea is then considered by the SEP office to determine if the Army wants to invest in the item. Soldiers and commanders in the field are the best source for ideas that work, said Ken Sutton, the SEP program manager.

"We get ideas from everywhere," Sutton said "but we prefer them from Soldiers and commanders in the field." Soldiers who will eventually use the equipment are always the best developers, he said.

"We get an awful lot of input from materiel developers and from the industry. They aren't bad ideas, but I think people that are a little bit closer to the problems have better ideas."

Teams also visit the National Training Center at Fort Irwin, Calif., and the Joint Readiness Training Center at Fort Polk, La.

In the past, the research and development process increased the time it took for a piece of equipment to be tested, fielded and issued to a Soldier. The cost and the overall time it takes to field a piece of equipment decreases when that equipment is already available on store shelves.

"Soldiers are going out and spending their own money buying things," Sutton said. "They would go to military surplus and camping stores to buy things that are lighter, more effective, more efficient and more comfortable to use in the field."

For several years, Soldiers have bought a self-inflating mattress and carried it to the field instead of using the ground insulator, a roll up pad. This is one of the items SEP worked on and the matress is now being fielded.

Force Provider, a large mobile support complex, got its start in SEP. During Operation Desert Storm, SEP helped develop a soft ammunition bag for the M-240 medium machine gun and 10,000 were issued. The multi-faith MRE, humanitarian rations and the MRE flameless ration heater all got their start in SEP. Inconspicuous body armor worn beneath civilian clothing was recently tested and sent to Bosnia.

Whatever the item is — worn, carried or consumed — it is designed for the firstline Soldiers who are out in the field and have an immediate need, said Bill Thetford, program manager for the Clothing and Individual Equipment Section. Later, these items may make their way to all Soldiers.

"This is a quick, down and dirty, inexpensive way of doing research and development and putting good stuff in the hands of Soldiers quickly," Thetford said. The field testing, in many cases, is already being done by Soldiers in a field environment.

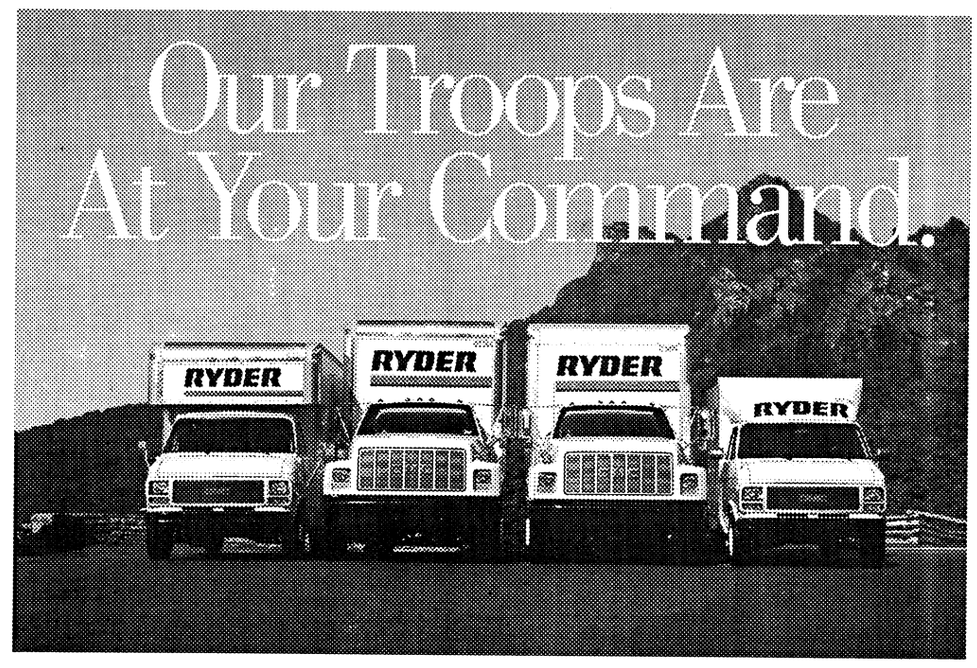
From 177 SEP suggestions last year, 21 were selected as "new start projects," that is, items that were considered meeting a battlefield need and will be funded beginning in October 1997. These projects include:

•a machine gun assault bag designed to carry a minimum of 300 rounds of linked ammunition;

•an emergency breathing device that provides helicopter crews with a small, compact, lightweight emergency breathing source with a regulated supply of air to allow egress from a submerged helicopter;

•a canteen insert water purifier to provide Soldiers with the ability to purify water directly from the canteen as a Soldier drinks;

•protective gloves to provide Soldiers involved in combat, service support and stability operations protection from knives, barbed wire, cut and slash threats; and



•an improved combat shelter to provide Soldiers with a lightweight, easily assembled, one- or two-man shelter that can also be used as a poncho.

While some of these items have the targeted use of the combat arms Soldier, other items have a wider application to every Soldier, regardless of job.

In the past, it might take up to seven years to field some of these new items. Through SEP, a Soldier can expect the item in three years or less.

"We have been receiving good funding support to accomplish the minimal research and development actions required for SEP proposals," Thetford said. "The problem now is that we don't have enough procurement dollars to get everybody in the Army whatever that new item is. But we are at least able to give it to the warriors, those who have to go tomorrow and fight first."

An official SEP proposal submission form must be faxed to the office at 545-1377 for an idea to be considered. For more information, call Ken Sutton at 545-6047 or send e-mail to, suttonk@benning-emh2.army.mil.

DD Form 2286 helps sum up military experience

Army Career and Alumni Program

Verification of your military experience and training is useful in preparing your resume and establishing your capabilities with prospective employers.

Verification is also helpful if you are applying to a college or vocational institution, according to Carl Hopp, counselor at the Job Assistance Center.

"Without a doubt, you need to gather all the information available concerning your experience and training because employers and schools will be using this information as part of their selection process," Hopp said.

Soldiers have numerous training and job experiences, perhaps too many to recall easily and include on a job or college application.

Fortunately, the Army has made life a little easier in this regard, Hopp said. It has a verification document, DD Form 2286, Verification of Military Experience and Training, that is created from automated records on file.

It lists a Soldier's military job experience and training history, recommended college credit information and civilian equivalent job titles. The document is designed to provide Soldiers with important information about themselves, but it is not a resume, Hopp pointed out.

Soldiers who are transitioning should receive this document no later than 120 days prior to separation. If Soldiers have less than 120 days and have not received their verification document, they can call (800) 258-8638.

"Remember this is a very important document and the information contained in it can help you win a job," Hopp said.

Rifle shooters beat the heat

By John W. Peeler
Special to the Bayonet©

With the temperatures in the 90s, the searing heat was visible as it rolled across English Range Sunday during the fifth in a series of eight tactical rifle matches.

Even with the heat, more than 70 shooters from across the tricommunity area and surrounding states competed in the tournament.

Rifles from the standard hunting rifle to sniper, bolt action and military-style semi-automatic were fired in the event with shooters firing a total of 30 rounds in a prone-supported position attempting to place 10 shots in bullseyes at 100, 200 and 300 yards.

For shooter Randy Jackson, it was a long way to come for a shooting match. Jackson, from Griffin, Ga., travelled 90 miles to attend the tournament.

"It is a long way, but there is really nowhere else to shoot around Griffin," Jackson said.

"It is just one of those fun things to do (shooting), and of course, you just try to be the best you can. Sometimes the expectations are better than it actually turns out, but it is fun."

Jackson, a novice who shot in pistol matches last year, said this was his third match this year.

"It has been a lot of fun here and you meet a lot of nice people," Jackson said.

Another novice, but tournament veteran shooter, Nancy R. Haecker, said she competed in all five tournaments this year.

"Last year I competed in pistol matches and this year, I have shot in all rifle matches," Haecker said.

Haecker, who competes in the featherweight division, said in her very first rifle match, she finished fifth, followed by two third-place finishes and a second-place finish leading up to this match. Haecker finished in second place for this match.

"We compete along side the male competitors; there are no women's categories or special provisions for women," Haecker said.

Haecker said she competes with a Winchester 243 Model 70 that has two inches taken off the stock, but other than that, it is a standard Model 70.

There will be two more matches in the tactical rifle series, one of which will be at English Range. The next match will be conducted at the CottonHill Shooting Complex in Eufaula, Ala., at 8 a.m. July 26 with the eighth and final match being conducted at English Range at 1 p.m. Aug. 10.

For more information on upcoming matches, call Jim Graham at 689-3371.

Exercise program contributes to elderly wellness

By Linda Kaup
Bayonet Correspondent

The fastest growing minority in the United States is the elderly, those who have reached or passed the age of 65.

It is hard to believe that in 1900, only 25 percent of Americans lived beyond age 65, while in 1990, approximately 72 percent survived age 65 and 30 percent made it to 80 or older.

Aging refers to the normal yet irreversible biological changes that occur throughout a person's lifetime. The aging process takes place at all ages, but for those older than 65, it often becomes more manifested with significant changes in quality of life.

Our bodies change as we age. For example, studies show the ability of the cardiovascular system to deliver oxygen to working muscles declines slightly every year after age 30. Heart muscle contractibility slowly declines, as does general muscle strength. The percentage of body fat, as opposed to lean-muscle tissue, tends to increase with age.

Fortunate are the people who reach the age 60 or 70 both fit and competent. Physical fitness experts said all they need to do is continue on a wellness program with allowances for aging.

Such people, unfortunately, are all too rare in America. Studies show the majority of Americans are overweight by the age of 50. However, some people choose to stay vigorous and active much longer than others. Interestingly, many of the changes that accompany aging are similar to those associated with inactivity.

Experts now believe age-associated declines can be explained in terms of lifestyle, habits, diet and other factors not directly part of the aging process.

It is still widely believed that weekend activity is sufficient to keep a person in shape. It isn't. In fact, health experts said it is safer to do nothing than to exercise vigorously once a week. Serious injuries, stiffness and fatigue may be the reward, and the danger of a heart attack is increased.

Many people who are not fit may attend an aerobics class or attempt to jog with a friend and decide the effort is too great. They may conclude they have passed the age when fitness is a feasible goal.

This conclusion would be most unfortunate because it needs not be accepted.

Older people can improve their fitness, but do need more time for adaptation.

Walking, with gradual progression, is a most convient and adaptable form of exercise for the elderly. It is also the perfect exercise for promoting a healthy back, a significant problem faced by older Americans. Walking is aerobic, inexpensive, does not require coordination with others for participation, can be done alone and is flexible in its scheduling. About one-third of the population who regularly participate in physical activity choose walking.

While walking burns fewer calories than running, its energy cost can be increased by carrying weights. Hand or wrist weights increase energy expenditure significantly.

If you are inactive but healthy, why don't you give walking a try? Start with a mile-long walk at a pace of about 3 mph three to five times a week. During a period of a month, increase your distance until you are up to three miles, and don't ride when you can walk. When it is cold outside or raining, try a treadmill at your local fitness center.

Don't let exercise get boring, try new routes, invite a friend, take your dog. At least give it a try. I can't guarantee it will increase your longevity, but I'll guarantee you it will increase your quality of life while you're here.

Boat noises, vibrations scare fish

By David Hegel, Steve Price
Johnson® and Evinrude® Outboards

When he's in serious tournament competition, professional bass angler and former world champion Ken Cook doesn't talk much. Neither does he scrape tackle boxes across the deck or slam live well lids.

In a word, he's quiet, because he believes boat noises will spook the fish he's trying to catch.

"Sound travels much faster through the water than through the air," said the angler and former fisheries biologist, "and the boat itself offers a perfect route for that sound to enter the water."

Most boat noises, such as scraping tackle boxes and slamming live well lids, don't mean noise so much as they mean vibration, Cook explained, and these will also frighten nearby fish.

"Basically, these types of vibrations aren't natural in their world," the 1991 Bass Masters Classic world champion said, "and also because they usually occur suddenly, it does spook bass.

"It's practically the same as hitting a stump with your trolling motor. If there's a bass there, it will flee, even though it has stayed there while you fished lures around it.

"It's sudden, it's different and it's threatening to the fish."

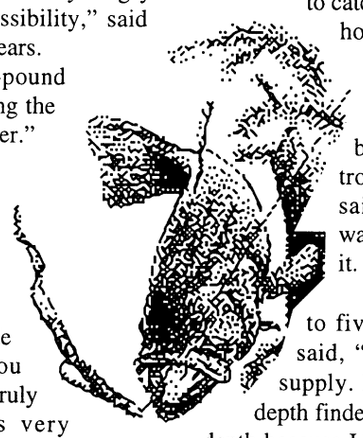
The pro also acknowledged loud talking in the boat can frighten fish, especially bait fish, near the surface.

"If you see a swarm of bait fish near the surface and yell at them suddenly and loudly, they'll scatter," he said, "but if you slowly put your hand into the water instead, it doesn't frighten them nearly as much.

Keeping noise at a minimum is one reason all of today's major bass boat companies put thick carpeting in their boats. Not that many years ago, no one put carpet in boat products.

Underwater observations and studies of bass indicate the fish can detect lures entering the water from more than 30 and 40 feet away.

"There is no question bass are very aware of the things going on around them," Cook said, "and that even the slightest noises and vibrations may frighten them. I can remember many times when simply walking along the shoreline of a pond frightened away bass and bream that were resting in the shade along that shoreline.



Proper tackle produces big bass

By David Hegel and Steve Price
Johnson® and Evinrude® Outboards

Richard McCarty has caught three largemouth bass weighing more than 13 pounds, and the formula for each has been the same: use the proper tackle and be prepared.

"When you're fishing in a lake known for big bass as we are at Lake Fork in Texas, any strike has the potential to be from a trophy fish, so everything you do has to be geared toward that possibility," said McCarty, a Lake Fork guide for 12 years.

"Even if I'm catching 2- and 3-pound fish on every cast, I still keep thinking the next bass that hits will be a 12-pounder."

McCarty has good reason to believe that way. On one guide trip recently he and his clients had caught 35 fish weighing less than 4 pounds. Then McCarty caught an 11-pounder from the same spot.

"Having the proper mental attitude is so important, simply because you just don't get that many chances at truly big bass," he said. "It happens very suddenly, and if you're not prepared, it will also be over just as suddenly."

When clients book him for a guide trip, the pro advises them to bring stout rods and reels spooled with 25- to 30-pound test line. The biggest mistake he sees Lake Fork visitors making is fishing with improper tackle.

"This lake has produced one bass more than 18 pounds, five more than 17 pounds and at least 30 more than 13 pounds," he said.

"The lake is filled with standing and fallen timber, stumps, and thick hydrilla, all of which are used by the fish when they're hooked. It's much easier to lose a big bass in this lake than it is to land one."

McCarty urges anglers to have their tackle prepared beforehand so they don't ever think about losing a big fish.

"Once you think about losing a big fish, I believe the potential for losing that fish increases," he said.

"Each year, beginning in February and continuing into May, Lake Fork is crowded with visitors hoping to catch a true trophy. A lot of the anglers go home happy, but a lot of them also go home frustrated because they did lose a trophy."

At Lake Fork, which is considered by many to be one of the premier trophy bass lakes in America, McCarty said big fish are not always in deeper water but they're almost always close to it.

"Big bass, on average, seem to be two to five feet deeper than smaller fish," he said, "and they're usually close to a food supply. If I see a swarm of bait fish on my depth finder, I start looking for cover at that same depth because I know that's a good place to find a big bass."

The Texas guide also notes that big bass seldom chase lures very far, which means a slower, more methodical retrieve usually produces better results. The best times to catch big bass are between 11 a.m. and 2 p.m., or when a full moon rises or sets while the sun is shining.

"Overall, however," he said, "attitude is the most important ingredient when going after a trophy bass. You really have to believe the fish you want is going to hit on each and every cast."

Simple precautions prevent dehydration

Feature Outdoors

When mountain biking, hiking, backpacking and cycle touring, many people expose themselves to a danger that never crosses their minds — dehydration.

You do not have to be in a desert wasteland or marooned at sea to experience it. Dehydration can occur five miles from your home if you are not prepared.

Because your body is 60 percent fluid, most of the metabolic energy production that is essential for outdoor fun and recreation requires water. That is why it is important to maintain an optimum body fluid level when you are active outdoors.

Just a four percent fluid depletion can reduce your aerobic work capacity by almost 50 percent. As you ride, hike or climb, your fluid level steadily declines because of sweating and muscle use. If not replaced, this liquid loss leads to dehydration. Symptoms include: lack of sweat, dry mouth, chills, severe fatigue, nausea and muscle cramps.

The answer for an increasing number of active people is to carry a compact water purifier and refill their water bottle at a convenient stream or public faucet. Weighing less than a pound, a water purifier eliminates all microorganisms and ensures the water is safe to drink.

"Let's face it," said Tom Klein, marketing manager for a company specializing in antimicrobial water purification products, "it's tough to carry a full day's supply of drinking water, and the days of dipping a canteen into a nearby stream are gone. Bacteria, protozoan cysts, such as Giardia and even viruses, can contaminate any stream or lake and cause serious illness. If you don't have a safe way to refill your water bottle, you run the risk of becoming dehydrated."

Some water purifiers weigh only 12 ounces and can produce up to one quart of water per minute with a simple pumping action, like that of a bicycle pump. If you are thirsty while cycling or hiking and the nearest water source is a pond or stream, a water purifier will quickly eliminate any dangerous microorganisms, filter out suspended sediments and produce safe, good tasting water. Unlike slow-acting iodine tablets, which leave a strong iodine taste in the water, a water purifier quickly produces safe water that is much more palatable and appealing to drink.

A water purifier is a good investment for all outdoor enthusiasts. For example, a cyclist loses one to 1.5 quarts of water cycling at a moderate pace for three hours on a typical 80-degree summer day. But, cyclists may not feel thirsty or sweaty, even though their bodies are rapidly losing fluid. The wind generated from biking constantly cools the skin and evaporates the sweat, leaving cyclists unaware of the amount of moisture being lost. A good rule of thumb is to drink three to four glasses of water before heading out, and drink a standard size bottle of water for each hour of cycling, or 4 to 8 ounces every 15 to 30 minutes.

However, water is heavy. You do not want to carry four quarts, or 10 pounds, of water on your back. The convenient solution is to carry a purifier and frequently refill your water bottles during the day.

It is almost impossible to drink too much water when active. Remember, thirst is not a reliable signal that dehydration is setting in, so drink water steadily and make sure it is safe by using a water purifier.

school outlook

Education continues year round at CCSC

By Elizabeth E. LaMonica
Special to The Bayonet©

School may be out for summer, but learning never stops for children involved in the Combined Communities of Southeast Columbus summer tutorial program.

An extension of a 15-year-old regular school year Saturday education program, the month-long summer tutorial exists to promote education and literacy. Students from first through eighth grades meet at Eastway Elementary School from 9 to 11 a.m. Monday through Friday. This year's session will culminate in a graduation ceremony conducted today at the school.

"In 15 years, we have tutored 12,500 students free of charge," said Lonnie Jackson, CCSC founder. "This summer we have 350 students registered and 140 volunteers helping them."

The volunteers come from a large network of sororities, fraternities, churches, high schools and some Fort Benning Soldiers, Jackson said.

The session begins each day with an assembly in the school's cafeteria, where the students recite the Pledge of Allegiance and a head count is taken. After the students are divided up, they can expect to spend one hour working on their math skills and the other hour reading. The summer session is devoted to those two skills, but during the regular year's Saturday school, students can receive help with any subject.

"The biggest challenge is being able to help the students keep pace with their classes," said Daisy Honor, CCSC principal, 15-year volunteer, retired teacher and substitute teacher for the Muscogee County School System.

Students usually come to the program at the recommendation of their teachers and parents. Progress is measured through a system of pre- and post-tests and Jackson is quick to point out success stories.

"One boy was doing rather poorly in math but recently made a 98 on an exam," he said. "Many of the kids come back year after year and then come back to help. We have a lot of success stories."

CCSC itself is one of those success stories. In 1993 CCSC was recognized as an example of community spiritedness and received a Points of Light Award from President William J. Clinton.

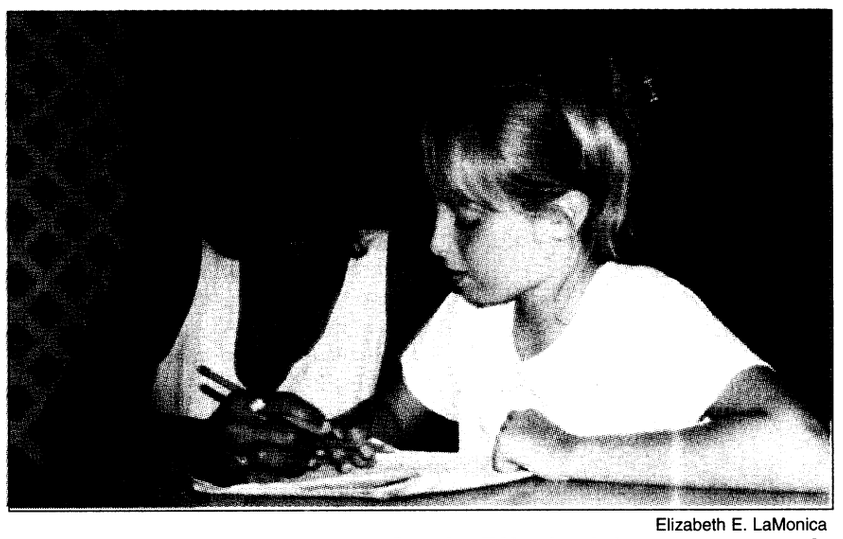
"I started the organization by cleaning up, picking up litter," Jackson said. "It worked so well cleaning up that I thought we could do the same thing for literacy."

Volunteers also receive many benefits as a result of the program.

"I'm helping because I want to be a teacher," said volunteer NaTishia Evans, Spencer High School student. "The hardest thing about tutoring is getting the students to open up to you."

Even the students themselves recognize the positive effects the program has on them.

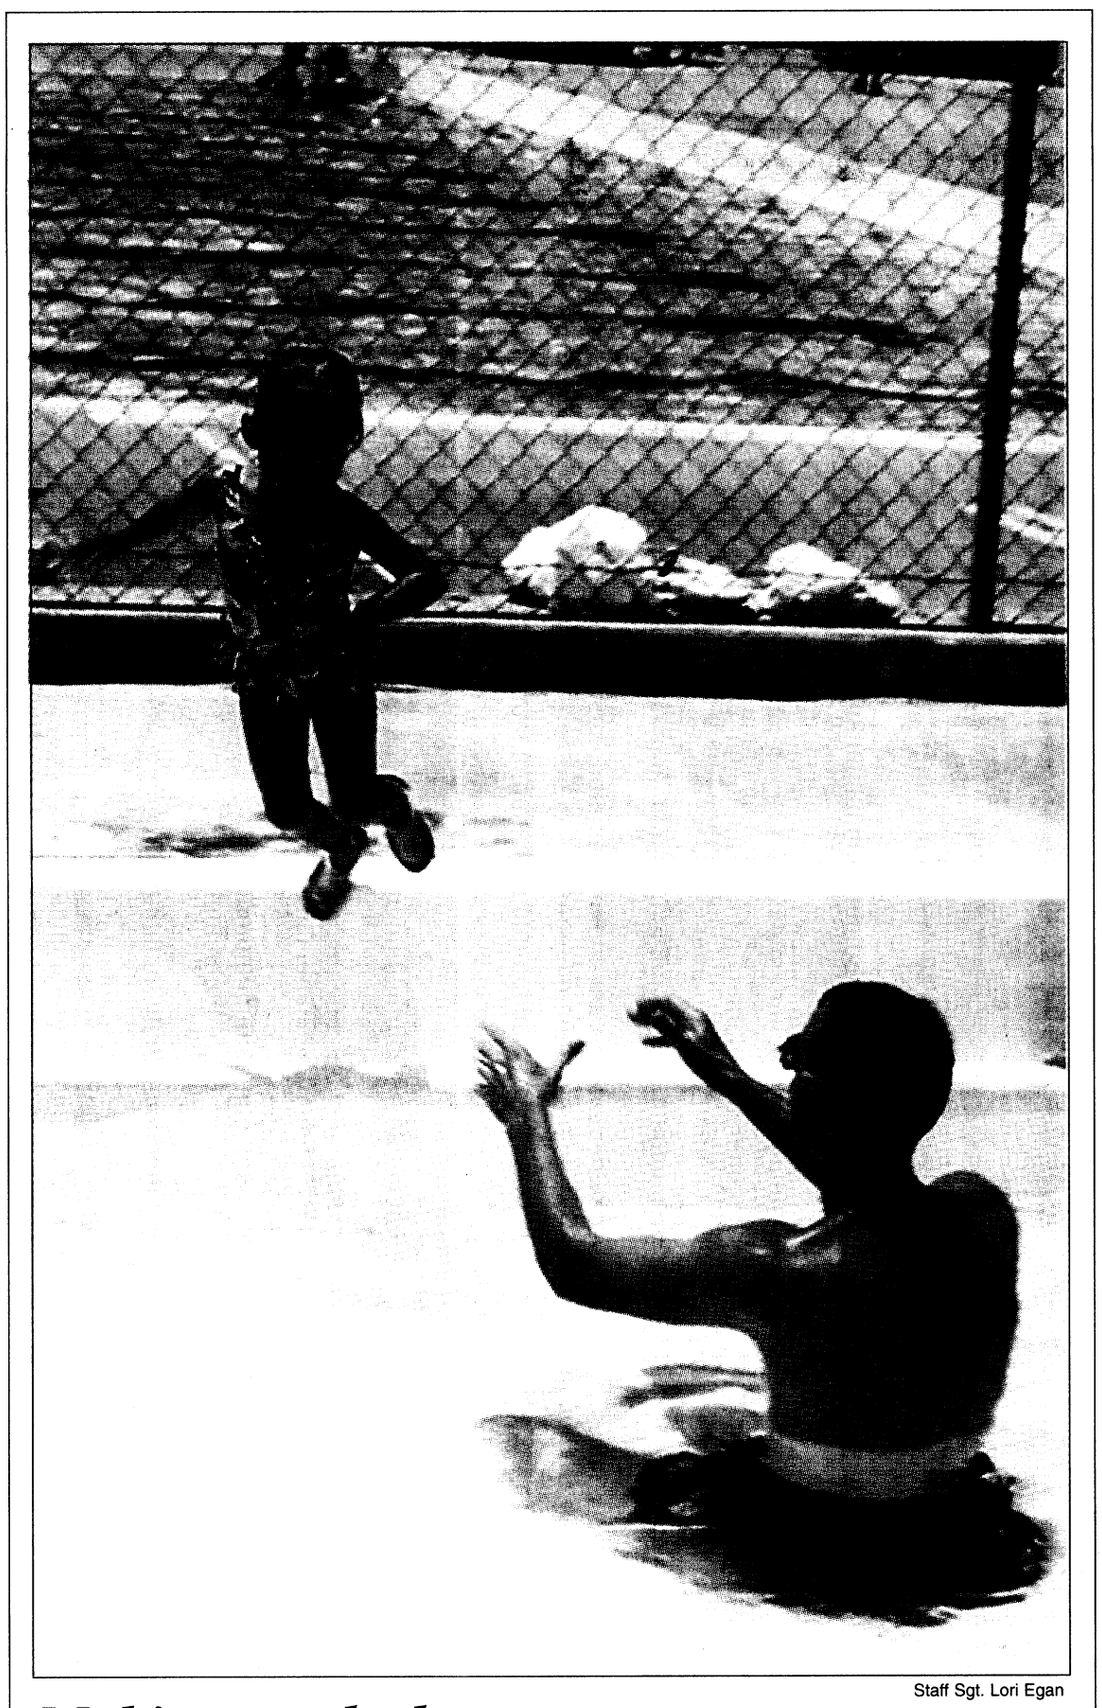
"It can help you and that way, you won't be held back or have a bad grade," said Stevie Rifenberick, daughter of Spc. Steve Rifenberick. Stevie will enter the sixth grade at Faith Middle School this fall and isn't going to let anything hold her back.



Community responsibility is also an important lesson for the children, who each took an anti-litter pledge when they entered the program.

The students also learn about their community. Volunteers teach the children about cultures they may not be familiar with. Along with that education, these scholars spend time learning key phrases from foreign languages like Korean, Japanese and Russian.

"We have so many different people in this area," Jackson said. "We teach the children to count, say good morning, good afternoon and then there's a word for the day. If you try to learn a person's language, he or she will appreciate you more.



"Fort Benning is good for this community because they have so many different types of people there. They've been so many places. What it is is diversity. This really is a tricommunity effort."

For more information about volunteering as a teacher or an aide with the program or getting your child involved in the in-school program, call Lonnie Jackson at 687-5357 or 321-9596.

Program offers health-care for children

By Jacqué Hill
Special to the Bayonet©

Although most military personnel and their family members receive sufficient health-care coverage, some Department of Defense civilian employees will find the Georgia Caring Program for Children helpful with the health-care needs of their families.

The Georgia Caring Program for Children is a charity. Sponsored by Blue Cross and Blue Shield of Georgia, the program provides health-care services to children of qualifying working parents through contributions from individuals, businesses, churches, foundations and community groups. These contributions are matched dollar for dollar up to $300,000 by Blue Cross and Blue Shield.

DoD employees are offered health-care coverage for their families, but in some cases, according to Carolyn Polakowski of Blue Cross and Blue Shield of Georgia and the Georgia Caring Program for Children, some employees may be struggling financially to meet living expenses and pay for health-care for their children. In these cases, employees may opt not to have the coverage costs deducted from their paychecks.

"If a family can't make ends meet, a parent may choose not to have money for health-care coverage taken out of his or her check," she said. "The program has proven to be an effective public and private partnership to aid children in this black hole of health care."

Polakowski said the program means local dollars helping local children and the sponsorship from Blue Cross and Blue Shield helps ensure every penny is used for the children's health-care.

"One hundred percent of the money donated to this program is used for children's health services," Polakowski said. "The program is designed to help parents who are trying to help themselves by not turning to welfare and Medicaid programs and by continuing to work."

To be eligible, children must be 1 to 18 years old and come from families with incomes not exceeding 150 percent of the federal poverty level. This means the entire family gross income can be only $24,084 or less for a family of four and $15,924 or less for a family of two.

Also to qualify, the family must not be eligible for coverage through Medicaid or have any other health insurance coverage. The children must be legal residents of Georgia, and if school age, they must be enrolled in and attending school.

Each child's annual premium is $384, and with Blue Cross and Blue Shield matching contributions, that translates into a $192 donation to provide a child health-care services for one year.

To pledge a contribution of any amount to the Georgia Caring Program for Children, for an application for health-care coverage for a child or for more information, call (800) 551-KIDS.

Office explains in-home child-care

Directorate of Community Activities

There is often confusion about what constitutes unauthorized child-care in Army quarters.

Anyone providing child-care in quarters for more than 10 total hours for all children per week on a regular basis is giving unauthorized care, even if no payment is made. Uncertified child-care in quarters could result in the loss of post housing.

Individuals who are certified as Family Child Care (FCC) providers go through a process that begins with a background clearance check on all family members over the age of 12.

They attend 30 hours of training and must be certified in first aid and cardiopulmonary resuscitation. Their quarters are inspected by personnel from the Fort Benning Safety Office, Fire Prevention and Preventive Medicine.

After they are approved to keep children, their homes are monitored regularly by FCC staff to ensure that nutritional standards, educa-tional programs, administrative procedures and safety features are maintained. Ongoing training hours are also required. They are authorized to keep up to six children (two under 2 years), including their own, who are under 8 years.

Becoming an FCC provider is a lengthy process, but parents can be assured their child will receive excellent care by a trained professional in a safe, nurturing and stimulating home environment, said Diane Sinkule, Family Child-Care outreach worker.

Home providers offer greater flexibility in hours of care to meet the needs of the Soldier. Their homes can be identified by the FCC symbol, a yellow sign with a rainbow, displayed in one of the windows in plain sight from the outside of the home.

To get more information on becoming an FCC provider or to obtain names of the providers who have openings, call the FCC office at 544-1623 or 687-4038.

DPW Customer Relations

As the Directorate of Public Works (DPW) looks for better ways to provide its customers a safer environment in which to train, live, work and play, the staff has developed a series of safety reminders, as shown below.

DPW asks its patrons to cut them out and place them in a convenient location for future reference.

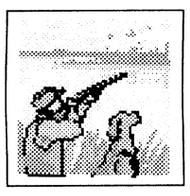
Make yourself at home and enjoy your stay in family housing. This quick-reference information is intended to make your stay more enjoyable.

If you have ideas or ways DPW can improve this service, call the DPW Information line at 545-2118.

Fires

Follow these guidelines to ensure fire safety.

•Dial 911 to report all fires and gas odors.



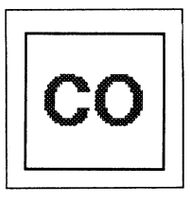
•Do not smoke in bed.

•Gasoline and other related flammables may not be stored in quarters.

•Do not leave stove tops or ovens unattended while on.

•Store matches and lighters out of reach of children.

•Test smoke detectors monthly.



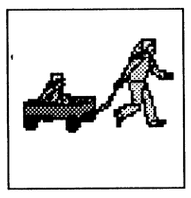
Weapons

You must register privately owned weapons with the Military Police in Bldg. 2637. The telephone number is 545-3646. Some other guidelines for storing weapons follow:

•Keep firearms secured and away from children.

•Store ammunition and weapons separately.

•Weapons may not be carried in automobiles or on your person except to hunting and shooting ranges, etc.



Carbon monoxide

Your furnace and water heater are inspected annually. If you wish to conduct your own test, a carbon monoxide tester is available for checkout by calling 545-8323.

Lead paint

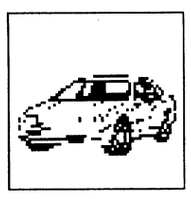
Quarters built before 1978 (the vast majority of Fort Benning's quarters) contain lead-based paint. The lead paint has been contained through a process called encapsulation, so no safety problems exist.

Baby-sitting

Children under the age of 12 may not be left unattended in quarters. Baby-sitters must be certified. An approved baby sitter list is available at the Family Child-Care (FCC) Office. The telephone number is 544-1623.

Poisoning

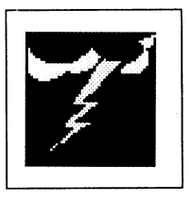
Store poisonous substances (oven cleaner, bleach, cleansers, etc.) out of reach of children.



If a poisoning occurs, read the label of substance (if available) and follow its directions. Call the hospital emergency room at 544-1502 or 544-1123 or Posion Control at (800) 282-5846.

Privately owned pools

Swimmers must be attended by an adult.



Small or inflatable pools don't need a cover or fence if emptied after each use; all other pools require a cover or fence.

Automobile safety

The speed limit in all family housing areas is 15 mph and is strictly enforced.

Check behind your vehicle when pulling out, and don't let children play in or around cars. Use extreme caution when using jackstands and do not leave them unattended.

Weather

Tune in to your local radio or television station for warnings.

Consult Fort Benning Form 75 for meanings of civil defense whistle sounds.

Beliefs overcome obstacles

By Chaplain (Capt.) Mark Zerger
29th Infantry Regiment

In I Samuel 17:32-36, young David told King Saul he was ready to go do battle with the giant Goliath.

King Saul looked at the shepherd boy and then looked at the Rambo deluxe Soldier Goliath and thought, "This is not a good plan."

David began to explain to the hesitant commander in chief about his preparation for this very battle. David told the king he had already earned his Combat Shepherd's Badge. David said he had already single-handedly killed a lion and later a bear.

The text doesn't say how David killed these trophy game animals, but one thing is for certain, gun powder had not been invented yet. The text does say David grabbed these animals by their beards and then smote them. However you look at it, David was no softy at this point in his life.

I believe there is some profound spiritual truth here. We can see a progressive preparation that was leading up to this great battle with Goliath.

Maybe you're facing some kind of obstacle today like a bear or a lion. God wants us to prove ourselves faithful in smaller things, such as bears and lions, so we can move up to giants. Your new job or promotion may seem like you're wrestling with a lion or a bear, but God wants you to prove faithful in it so you can go on to giant-sized challenges and opportunities to excel and win.

I am reminded of a friend from my hometown in north western Oklahoma. Danny Marney was a very shy farmer. He was so shy, he would often avoid answering the door bell and hide in the house until the person at the door left.

One day Danny did answer the door, and it was a pastor friend of mine named Travis Hannah. Travis shared with Danny the good news of Christ's love. Danny became a committed follower of Jesus and joined the church.

A few months later, the shy farmer asked the pastor if he could drive one of the church buses. He was allowed to, and he was always on time every Sunday morning, and he kept his bus swept clean, washed and shined. He always smiled and greeted the children as they piled onto the bus.

After a few months, Danny asked the pastor if he might teach a children's Sunday School class. The pastor replied that the only class open was an adult class. Danny gulped and said, "OK."

Danny was not the greatest teacher in the church, but his students said he was the kindest, most caring one.

After a few years, Danny told the pastor he was going to start a Bible study in an old store in Waukhomis, Okla. To everyone's amazement, within one year, the Bible study grew into a congregation of about 100 people. This group asked Danny, the shy man of God, to become ordained and to be their pastor.

Jesus taught if you're faithful in small things, he would put you in charge of bigger and more challenging things. I pray whatever bear or lion task you're challenged with today will only serve to prepare you for bigger and better opportunities for service in the future.

The soul: One of God's greatest gifts

By Chaplain (Capt.) Julie Rowan
13th Corps Support Battalion

What is the soul and where is its greatness? We need to see how Christ seeks and saves souls.

What is the soul? One might be tempted to say if the soul was worth the atonement on the cross, it must be too great to define. In the many books in my office library, there are definitions of God, Christ, the Holy Spirit, the Bible, repentance, faith and salvation, but no definition of the soul.

Perhaps, when one says "Credo, I believe," he bears witness to the fact he has a living soul. The soul is not a part of the body, although the body houses it. Jesus warned his disciples not to fear those who could kill the body, but could not kill the soul. Man can neither create nor destroy the soul.

The clearest question of Jesus about the soul is found in Luke 9:25, "For what is a man advantaged if he gain the whole world and lose himself or be cast away?"

The soul is yourself, it is myself, it is the part of you that hopes, aspires, suffers, prays, loves, is tempted, sins, repents and can be saved.

The physical body is made of a little iron, lime, water, sulfur, gluten, salt and some other ingredients, but add the soul, and what a piece of work.

There are two lights that death can not quench: God and the soul. Man is wonderfully made, but the only thing God has written the word "forever" on is man's soul.

Christ came to seek the soul and to save it. He asked two similar, but quite different, questions about the soul in Mark 8:36-37. The first: "What shall it profit a man if he gain the whole world, and lose his own soul?" Anyone can answer that question, but the second question is the difficult one.

"Or what shall a man give in exchange for his soul?" He did not ask what a man would take in exchange, but what he would give. He knew, and you and I know, how little a man will sometimes take for his soul — a dollar or two, a little spark of this world's fleeting fame or a moment's embrace of passion.

But the question "what shall a man take in exchange" — what philosopher, statesman or scientist can answer that? None can — only the one who gave his own life on the cross for our soul's redemption.

Christ paid the price. As Isaiah 53:5 states: "He was wounded for our transgressions, he was bruised for our iniquities."

Salute, then, the soul. Satan salutes it. He desires to have it. The angels salute it and rejoice over its salvation. Christ salutes it, for he shed his precious blood upon the cross to redeem it.

Will you, too, salute it?

Grips & Grins

How do I get my photo on this page?

To meet customer needs and requests, The Bayonet added a Grips and Grins Page.

The newspaper receives many requests to run awards, promotions and other photos of this type, so the staff decided to designate a page just for that.

Because of the small size of our staff and the frequency and number of the events that generally produce grip-and-grin type photos, the newspaper's policy remains that we will not send a reporter to take these type of photos, but we will run those submitted by our readers.

Photos you may submit include those from events such as balls, teas, coffees, club and organizational meetings and elections, award presentations, check presentations, official parties, dinners, dining events, dances and group photos.

If you have a good-quality, black and white or color photo of an awards or promotion ceremony, sporting team, social event, etc., send it to The Bayonet, Grips and Grins Page, U.S. Army Infantry Center Public Affairs Office, Infantry Hall, Room 606, Fort Benning, GA 31905. No Polaroid shots please.

Timing is everything: when to refinance your mortgage

Georgia Society of CPAs

Everyone loves the thought of lower monthly mortgage payments. But before you refinance your mortgage, the Georgia Society of Certified Public Accountants suggests you take a careful look at how refinancing fits into your family's overall financial picture.

What works for your neighbor might not be the best financial strategy for you. Some guidelines for refinancing follow:

•Know your break-even point — Homeowners who decide to refinance should be aware of the costs involved. When you refinance, you pay off an existing mortgage and take out a new one.

Since, in effect, you are applying for a new mortgage, you're required to pay many of the same expenses associated with a new mortgage, including fees for application processing, a credit check appraisal, title search and title insurance, attorneys fees and other related closing costs. In most cases, you'll also pay points.

To determine whether it makes sense for you to refinance, you'll need to do a few calculations. Start by adding up the costs of refinancing. Next, determine the amount of your new monthly payment by asking your lender or by using one of the many on-line mortgage calculators available on the Internet.

Then, divide your total refinancing costs by your monthly savings. The result tells you how many months it will take for you to reach your break-even point.

If you plan to stay in your home for at least the break-even period, it may make financial sense for you to refinance.

•Check with your current lender — Before you start shopping around, it's a good idea to check with your current lender. Your lender might be willing to waive certain closing costs or agree to "modify" your current loan without a complete refinancing. But watch out for trade-offs; a mortgage with low up-front costs usually comes with a higher interest rate.

The right alternative for you depends on your financial situation. If you're in it for the long term, you're probably better off going with the lower-rate option.

•Consider after-tax implications — On an after-tax basis, refinancing may not be as good a deal as it appears on paper. Interest on a home mortgage is one of the few significant tax deductions left.

When you refinance your mortgage, the lower interest rate translates into a smaller mortgage interest deduction. That means some of the money saved in lower monthly mortgage payments will be offset by the additional tax you may pay on income that is no longer sheltered.

Generally speaking, the higher your tax bracket, the more you have to gain from making larger interest payments, and the less you have to gain from reducing those payments. In addition, if you refinance your current mortgage for more than the existing balance, the deductibility of the interest on the excess amount depends on how you use the funds and the amount of the refinancing.

•Shorten your mortgage term — When interest rates drop, refinancing can allow you to switch from a 30-year to a 15-year mortgage without a major increase in your monthly payment. Doing so is an excellent strategy for homeowners who want to pay off their mortgage before retirement or before the children's college tuition bills start rolling in.

With a 15-year mortgage, you can save tens of thousands of dollars in interest and pay off your mortgage faster.

Fifteen-year mortgages are especially beneficial to individuals who have already made a big dent in paying off the balance and don't want to be saddled with a 30-year loan.

•Best way to "cash out" — If your primary reason for refinancing is not to take advantage of lower interest rates, but rather, to "cash out" some of the equity in your home, you need to decide whether refinancing your mortgage or taking out a home equity loan is the better alternative for your situation.

A home equity product is usually a much cheaper and simpler alternative. It's also more flexible in that you can borrow only what you need, when you need it, and pay interest only on the amount you actually take out.

On the other hand, refinancing generally results in a lower interest rate, and a fixed-rate mortgage offers less interest-rate risk than a home equity product, which typically has a variable interest rate.

Before you rush into refinancing, take a careful look at your family's present and future financial position and assess, as best as possible, how long you plan to reside in your home.

SITUATIONAL TRAINING

608th prepares for mission

By Sgt. 1st Class Larry Lane
Public Affairs Office NCOIC

Sgt. 1st Class Larry Lane

Sgt. 1st Class Leon McQueen teaches a team of Soldiers the proper way to search a vehicle as part of a Situational Training Exercise held at the CONUS Replacement Center.

The Bosnian role-player reached into the front seat of her truck, pulled out an automatic pistol and waved it in the air.

"You and your squad leader are now dead," the instructor said to the Soldier who was leading the vehicle inspection. "Continue inspecting the vehicle."

The "dead" Soldier led the role-player from the driver's seat, around the front of the truck and to the passenger's side. The Soldier opened the door and had the driver reach in and move her hand over the same areas he would inspect. The Soldier stood too close to the role-player, the instructor said, but he allowed the Soldier to finish the search.

When the inspection was completed, the instructor, Sgt. 1st Class Leon McQueen of the Readiness Group, Fort Sheridan, Ill., told the Soldiers to sit down on a bunker surrounding the vehicle inspection station.

McQueen reached behind the back seat of the truck, grabbed a hidden dummy AK-47 rifle that the Soldier missed and threw the weapon to the ground in front of the group.

"You have to get your mind straight, because apparently, you are not paying attention to detail out here," McQueen said to the Soldiers with some disgust. The Soldiers also missed a block of C-4 hidden in a back left corner panel where the tire jack was kept. The Soldiers opened the panel and looked in but somehow he didn't see it.

"You Soldiers need to go over to Bosnia, do your mission and come back alive, not in body bags," McQueen said.

These words were perhaps not the most inspiring words for the Soldiers of the 608th Ordnance Company, but the words caught the Soldiers' attention. It was the direct kind of critical feedback the Soldiers needed to receive in the training environment, McQueen said, before the Soldiers deploy to a real mission.

The Soldiers were participating in a Situational Training Exercise (STX) at Harmony Church, a three-day-course designed to train and tests Soldiers in tasks needed for duty in the Hungary and Bosnia region. The 608th Ord. Co. was identified as a unit that may replace a reserve unit already over in Taszar, Hungary. Their mission would be to run an ammunition supply point.

While the orders to deploy have not been issued, the Soldiers are taking advantage of the training opportunities available to them. All Soldiers deploying to Bosnia from the U.S. train at the CONUS Replacement Center (CRC) at Fort Benning.

The final day of the STX is devoted to a number of tasks tested in the field. Fort Benning's 29th Infantry Regiment supplied the material and built the stations and lanes, while the 1st U.S. Army, headquartered at Fort Gilliam, Ga., supplied Soldiers as instructors from its various Readiness groups located at forts within the eastern region of the United States.

During the station training, Soldiers handled media questions, ran checkpoints and searched personnel and vehicles. Local civilians were hired for the day to role-play as Bosnian civilians.

The vehicle inspection was one of the more labor-intensive tasks, requiring upwards to eight Soldiers to properly search both driver and vehicle. A squad should task organize each responsibility to properly control a vehicle search, McQueen said, with each Soldier identified and prepared to be a guard or to perform the inspection.

"If you have someone in your squad who is mechanically inclined, you need to have that person search the vehicles," he said. This Soldier would be one who could figure out where all the compartments and hiding spots might be in a vehicle.

The Soldiers could improve their control of the driver during the vehicle inspection, McQueen said.

"They are letting them wander around a little too much. That's one of the areas they need to concentrate on. They also need to do a thorough search of the vehicle," he said. "They are a little surprised at all of the things that could be hidden on the vehicle, so I think this serves as a wake up call."

While running a checkpoint, Soldiers were interviewed by role-playing reporters. Soldiers were asked questions like: Can you kill a Bosnian with that gun? If a Bosnian shot at you, would you fire back? Many of the question were focused on the rules of engagement. Their responses were videotaped and shown to them after the confrontation.

"There were times I wished I had approached subjects differently," Pfc. Vance Cantrell, an ammo specialist, said. "They asked if the United States should pick up and get out of Bosnia. I couldn't think of what to say. I decided not to say anything."

Cantrell said he let another Soldier, Pfc. Justin Raphael, answer the question.

"I told them that I can't tell the Soldiers to go home," Raphael said. "We are here to keep the peace and

Col. Victor J. Bero assumes command of the 11th Infantry Regiment from Col. John P. Lewis during a change of command ceremony conducted July 18 on York Field.

Hundreds of spectators gathered to witness the change of command of the 11th Infantry Regiment on July 18 York Field.

During the ceremony, Col. Victor J. Bero assumed responsibility of the regiment from Col. John P. Lewis, who served as its commander for the past two years.

"This command and any success achieved is not about me. It is about we, and the we is on the field before us," Lewis said during his final address to the Soldiers of the 11th. "You make me proud. You are our Army and our future."

Commanding General Maj. Gen. Carl F. Ernst praised Lewis for a job well done.

"John has touched 40,000 Soldiers during his two years here," Ernst said. "He leaves us after a very active two years, distinguished two years; two years where he was a team player and supported everything we did at the Infantry Center and School."

Ernst then welcomed Bero to the command position, calling him a "great colonel of Infantry."

During his remarks, Bero pledged himself to the regiment and spoke of how proud he was to accept this command.

"It is truly an honor for me to assume command of this great, hardworking regiment," he said. "I can think of no unit that contributes more on a daily basis to the Army's mission to fight this nation's wars and win. As your commander, I will dedicate myself to you and the mission."

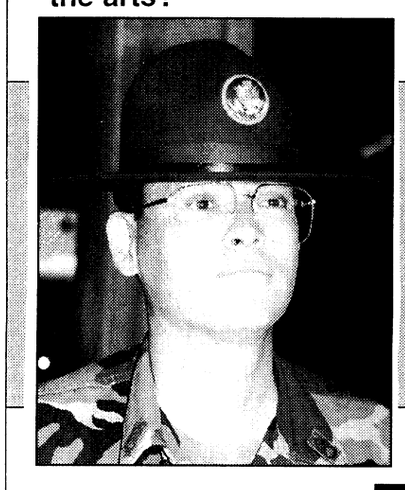
Bero, a native of Galveston, Texas, received a commission as an Infantry second lieutenant upon his graduation from West Point in 1975. He holds a master's of science degree in administration from Central Michigan University. His military education includes the Infantry Officers' Basic and Advanced courses, Command and General Staff College and the U.S. Army War College. Bero has completed many assignments within his past two decades of service, including one as the commander of the 3rd Battalion, 14th Infantry (Light Infantry), 10th Mountain Division, at Fort Drum, N.Y., when it was deployed to Somalia in support of Operation Restore Hope.

In 1992, the Director of Central Intelligence awarded Bero the National Intelligence Distinguished Service Medal for his contribution during Operation Desert Shield and Desert Storm and post-war contingency planning and Iraq Treaty verification.

Drawdown impacts Fort Benning

USAIC Public Affairs Office

As a result of fiscal 1998 budget reduction guidance and a study of installation functions, 137 Fort Benning employees received letters Tuesday informing them of changes to their job status. This begins a 60-day notice period where all efforts are made to avoid involuntary actions and help save jobs.



Most individuals will be reassigned or changed to a lower grade effective Sept. 28. Approximately 20 people may be separated Sept. 27, but that number will be less likely as the notice procedure progresses.

The impact of this reduction was softened as a result of 106 employees who elected to retire early this year and receive voluntary separation incentive pay. The purpose of this program

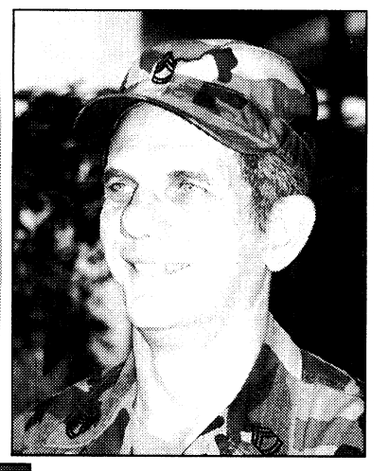
VARIOUS VOICES

What should be done to help keep children aware, adept, knowledgeable and interested in the arts?



Staff Sgt. David Francis, Company A, 1st Battalion, 38th Infantry Regiment, Infantry Training Brigade — "Schools should take students on field trips to museums. They're often free. Also, keep art supplies handy as a creative outlet for the child."

Retired Sgt. 1st Class Billy Bullard — "Children should spend less time in front of a TV and read more children's books. Families could spend more time together studying art history."

Dorothy Wilborn, family member — "Parents should get involved and show interest in the fine arts. My son has a gift. Had we not shown interest, he might not have flourished as he did."

Sgt. 1st Class Jerry Wojtecki, Alabama National Guard — "More parents should have more involvement and control in their children's educational studies. Maybe they could take video games away and get them involved in games that provide creative stimulation."

Staff Sgt. Sharita Rhodes, 1st Basic Combat Training Brigade, Fort Jackson, S.C. — "I think schools do a good job with earlier grades but they don't do enough in higher grade levels. If it were a consistent part of the curricula in schools, it would keep kids interested."

Maritza Pabon, family member — "Schools should make the arts fun and adaptable for different ages."

Musical children

Parental assessment critical prior to beginning lessons

By Jancy Bueckers and Wendy K. Burt
Mountaineer columnists

Although you are never too old to take up an instrument, you can be too young. It is important to remember children mature at different ages. Just because your neighbor's 6-year-old son is on his way to becoming the next Beethoven doesn't mean your 6-year-old is ready. Children have different interests, attention spans and ideas about what they're willing to commit their time to. Don't feed into the pressure of starting your child too young in hopes of creating a child prodigy.

commentary

What instrument is appropriate for your child? Consider your child's size. Would you give your 4-year-old an adult-sized tablespoon to eat with? Probably not. The same goes for certain instruments.

Unless your 4-year-old is exceptionally large for his or her age, don't expect the child to be able to play a guitar. Although some things, such as dexterity, rhythm and concentration, can be learned at a very young age, size is up to genetics. Some instruments, such as the tuba, the guitar and the oboe, may just be too big for a small child to maneuver, no matter how talented he or she is.

Remember your budget. Purchasing a grand piano is a luxury that most can not afford. After your child shows a general interest in music, call around to find out what you can realistically afford.

Check out pawn shops, second-hand stores and classified advertisements for quality used instruments. Consider renting, especially if your child is young or has a tendency to change his or her mind frequently about current activities.

Narrow options down to several instruments in order to allow your child to choose if he or she is interested in following up on the idea.

Assess your family's needs. Money is not the only thing lacking in households today. For many families, time is their most valuable commodity. If you already have to struggle to find quality time with your children, perhaps music lessons should wait until your schedule changes.

Be sure to consider your available space as well. Do you really want your child practicing the drums in your living room four nights a week?

What about music lessons? Get price estimates. You wouldn't walk into a dealership to buy a car without first comparing prices, so why not compare prices for music lessons?

Look in your local phone book for a list of professionals. Be sure to specifically ask if they have experience working with children. Don't be afraid to call all of the businesses listed, but consider the location in relation to your home or place of employment.

Remember if you don't have the instrument that your child has chosen to play (such as a piano), someone is going to have to drive your child to and from his or her practices. Who would that be? Ask around.

Do you have a friend or relative with a child who plays an instrument? Ask them for information. Even if the instrument is different, their music teacher may be able to recommend another who teaches lessons for your child's choice.

Better still, if you know someone who is especially talented, ask them if they can give your child any pointers. They may offer information, instruments or perhaps, if you're lucky, a free lesson.

How can I tell if my child is really interested? Read the signs. Just because your child shows an initial interest doesn't mean he or she will stick with it.

Watch for some typical signals that demonstrate a lack of interest: constant complaining before their lesson, disappointment at missing a favorite television show due to "having to practice," or obvious procrastination toward practicing.

A general rule is children who truly enjoy playing an instrument will probably practice on their own. If you have to constantly prompt them, you're probably pushing an issue that is best left alone.

However, if your child comes home from school to proudly announce he or she has just joined the school band, chances are his or her interest has blossomed.

Perhaps most important is the need to talk to your child. Let him or her know it is okay to not want to play an instrument. Be sure that it is not the teacher, type of music or difficulty of the instrument that is causing the frustration. Encourage them to express their concerns and be sure to listen to a "home recital" at least once each week.

Who knows, you may be cheering on the next Beethoven.

Dial 545-BOSS is the commander's action line for Soldiers, family members and civilians to call when they have problems or complaints that can't be resolved elsewhere.

While it is not a substitute for the chain of command or for agencies established to provide assistance, the line offers another means of communication between Fort Benning's community and commanders.

The Bayonet features some of the calls that may benefit other members of the Fort Benning community.

Call: The caller wanted to know why the Golf Course Dining Room took pancakes off the breakfast menu.

Directorate of Community Activities response: The chief, Community Operations Division, DCA, advised the caller that changes in the breakfast menu were required to adjust staffing levels and cut substantial snack bar losses at breakfast time. The dining room will continue to provide a full breakfast menu on weekends and for special or catered events.

The caller was also informed the action was fully coordinated with the Golf Advisory Council and the garrison commander, plus a seven-day notification period was given to customers. Since the caller was a casual user, he had missed the notification.

Call: The caller said she was stopped by a military police officer and told she would have to remove the tint from the windows of her privately owned vehicle.

Directorate of Public Safety response:

The traffic NCOIC explained that Georgia Code (40-8-73.1) prohibits window tinting that blocks more than 65 percent of the light from passing through the window of a vehicle. The tinting on the caller's windows was checked with a special meter, which registered the windows had 88 percent tinting.

The MP performing the check informed the caller of this violation but chose not to cite her with a magistrate violation notice requiring payment of a fine or appearance in court. The MP cautioned the caller that she should remove the excessive window tinting to avoid being cited in the future.

Call: The caller said it seems that the Directorate of Public Works staff members are holding quarters for key and essential people who have not even signed in at Fort Benning. She said she has been here for more than a year and it doesn't look as if she will get quarters any time soon because of this.

DPW response:

The chief, Family Housing Branch, DPW, explained that key and essential personnel are required by the post commander to reside on the installation and, as a result, have first priority for assignment to government quarters. It was also explained that only colonel quarters located in the Iron Triangle are held for up to 30 days for incoming colonels.

3rd Bde deploys to NTC

Soldiers of 3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division prepare their vehicles for deployment to the National Training Center, Fort Irwin, Calif.

More than 3,000 Soldiers from 3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division (Mechanized), deployed Wednesday to the National Training Center, Fort Irwin, Calif., for a month-long desert training exercise ending Aug. 31.

The annual training operation includes 1st Battalion, 15th Infantry Regiment; 2nd Bn., 26th Armor Regt.; and 1st Bn., 10th Field Artillery Regt., as well as 3rd Bn., 321st FA Regt.; 317th Engineer Bn.; 203rd Forward Support Bn.; and Detachment D, 24th Personnel Support Group.

Soldiers of the units that are going to NTC have all gone through Soldiers' readiness processing checks (SRCs).

"The purpose of SRC is to make sure Soldiers and family members are ready for deployment," said Sgt 1st Class Debra A. Everett, the NCO in charge of operations.

SRC includes medical, emergency data forms and life insurance, legal, dental, optometry, finance and training updates. Upon completion of the checks, the Soldiers are free to concentrate on the challenging training ahead.

The five-phase training at NTC consists of predeployment training, deployment- and build-combat power, as well as combat operations and redeployment. There will be force-on-force and live-fire training exercises.

"We train like we fight," said Capt. Jeffrey J. Dilullo, the officer in charge of reception, staging, onward movement and integration. "We've got to train realistically and, in order to fight realistically, we've got to fire live ammunition, we've got to have malfunction and see how good our gunners are with targets.

"The essence of NTC is to have visual representation of how our plan will actually work if we execute them right."

Maj. Malcolm A. Shorter, the officer in charge of Force Protection, explained the purpose of the Soldiers training at NTC.

"The goal of the exercise is to go out there and win a brigade combat," he said. "We've got the Soldiers to do it. We cannot afford to lose out there.

"The goal of the commanders is to conduct a safe exercise. We will try to keep all injuries, whether heat or vehicle related, to the barest minimum. We will take them all and bring them all back, safe and sound."

Dilullo stressed the training's safety factor, especially during hot weather.

"It is absolutely safe, as long as we fight within the doctrine of the plan," Dilullo said. "We have to do an intense amount of acclimatization, and it takes a lot leadership supervision."

The 3rd Brigade commander, Col. John D. Gardner, also stressed the importance of safety at NTC.

"It is the responsibility of the leadership and the individual soldier," Gardner said.

During the training operation at NTC, the brigade will be testing a new device known as Situational Awareness Data Link (SADL) as part of an advanced combat identification concept technology demonstration. SADL enables pilots flying close air support missions to identify friendly ground units while also allowing units on the ground to identify friendly aircraft, thereby reducing the risks of fratricide.

1st Bn., 30th Inf. Regt., is not deploying with the rest of the brigade, but some of the units will support the brigade in different tasks. 1st Bn., 30th Inf. Regt., will form the rear detachment for the brigade during NTC.

"The welfare of Soldiers' dependents is in the hands of various Family Support groups at every level of command and it is from them that family members are expected to seek answers for any questions regarding any Soldier at NTC (during the training)," Gardner said.

if I leave, it's up to those higher up in the chain of command. I tried to be calm and show them I was OK."

Soldiers patrolling skills were tested while on the march during lane training.

While moving down a road, Soldiers were confronted by Bosnian civilians who would try to get the Soldiers to leave the road. There are several million land-mines in Bosnia still unrecovered and the policy for Soldiers is to not leave the road.

Also during the lane training, the patrolling unit would have to administer emergency medical treatment to a Soldier injured by a land-mine detonation. After the casualty was recovered, Soldiers had to probe their way out of the mined road. Another task had the unit react to sniper fire.

"The Soldiers did really well," role-player Shirley Shirley said. "We couldn't speak English and we tried to get them to leave the road, but they wouldn't leave. We told them where the mines were and I started to pick one up, but they wouldn't take it."

The 608th Ord. Co. attempts to take advantage of every training opportunity offered to the unit, company commander Capt. Katherine Graef said. The unit ran a field ammunition point during the 3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division's Marne Focus, a train-up exercise for a rotation at the National Training Center at Fort Irwin, Calif.

"The Soldiers are trained to do the ammunition mission," Graef said. "This training here is great for them because it's more tactical. We don't get much of an opportunity to do stuff like that, especially in such an organized way with certified instructors, really good terrain and pyrotechnics. This was a great opportunity for us."

Until the orders to deploy come, the unit continues to train and now focuses on the "what if" scenarios for the Soldiers' families.

"The families are our big concern now; making sure that the families are informed about what support is available to them once their spouse, father or mother departs," she said.

SOA students visit capital, tour Pentagon

By Spc. Judith O'Toole
School of the Americas

Legend has it that during the Cold War, the Soviets believed the most important of the U.S. military's top-secret information must have been kept at the very center of the Pentagon. In all actuality, the spot is the sight of an outdoor cafe for employees.

Cafe Ground Zero was just one of the many areas of the Pentagon students from the Command and General Staff Officer's Course (CGSOC) at the U.S. Army School of the Americas (SOA) visited recently while in Washington, D.C.

The CGSOC at SOA is a 47-week course for U.S. Army and Air Force, as well as Latin American, field-grade officers.

After viewing a short film about the Pentagon's history, the group was briefed by Maj. Gen. Joseph G. Garrett III, military deputy to the deputy under secretary of the Army. Garrett commended the CGSOC students for being selected for the SOA course and told them how well that speaks of them.

"For the Latin American students in the class, attending SOA and studying U.S. military doctrine is very important to your country, as well as for your country's military," Garrett said.

In addition, he said it was great for the United States and to the U.S. military for U.S. and Latin American officers to be studying together at SOA.

Garrett also said that as this is such a technologically advanced world, it is even more important than ever that the world's armed forces be able to work together to accomplish a variety of missions.

The visit to the District of Columbia also included stops at the Organization of American States, the U.S. Holocaust Memorial Museum and a luncheon with U.S. Rep. Sanford Bishop of Georgia.

Precautions keep illegitimate, bad practicing businesses from scamming

By Cpl. Marc G. Turchin
Bayonet staff writer

For some, trust is something earned. It's an understanding between people. It's the belief someone is telling the truth, will do what they say and provides an imaginary contract between the parties involved.

This relationship of credibility is especially apparent between a person and a business.

That type of faith is often breached when something happens to undermine the established confidence.

On more than one occasion, Soldiers have been taken advantage of, gotten a raw deals or have been scammed in some way. Not all establishments practice bad business, but there are some that do.

"A scam is when someone is trying to get something for nothing," said Sgt. 1st Class Mike Snapp, NCO in charge of Military Police Investigations. "When you try and collect on it, that's when you come up on the short end of the stick," Snapp said.

According to Snapp, there are many different types of scams.

Some of them include telemarketing and multi-level marketing, phone cards, Internet and work-at-home scams.

Anyone is susceptible to these scams, Snapp said, but sometimes businesses prey on Soldiers.

"Soldiers need to be a little more aware of what's going on around them, a little more consumer conscious," Snapp said.

He said recently Soldiers were tricked into signing up for magazines costing close to $1,000. In a lot of the cases, the Soldiers are new to the Army, just out of basic training and think they have a lot of money.

"If they think it's too good to be true, it probably is."

The Better Business Bureau (BBB) monitors businesses and their practices and gives information about avoiding scams.

"We rate businesses and let the consumers know which have good and bad ratings, " said Louis H. Marcotte, president of the local BBB.

Although the BBB listens to customers and their complaints, Marcotte said the BBB is more about education.

"Seventy percent of our effort is to educate consumers," Marcotte said. "Education is the key to not allowing yourself to be taken."

Marcotte said there are certain things to look for when something fishy may be going on.

He agrees with Snapp, if it sounds too good to be true, it probably is. He also said be aware of high-pressure salespersons who want credit card numbers before explaining all of the conditions. Marcotte said phrases such as, "you must act now" and "you must send your money today" are alarms unreputable for businesses.

Hasty decisions are bad ideas according to Marcotte.

"Don't let emotion play a role in purchasing," he said. "You should research a product before buying it."

Soldiers have a variety of ways of handling scams.

Like anyone, according to Snapp, Soldiers should talk with the business and let them know what the problem is. If that doesn't work, Soldiers can bring their complaints to the Military Disciplinary Control Board (MDCB) or the Staff Judge Advocate.

The MDCB decides what businesses are off-limits to Soldiers and their families. The businesses listed by the board have a history of unethical practices against Soldiers or their family members.

Currently only a small number of businesses remain on the off-limits list.

Again, not all businesses have bad practicing habits and they can be trusted. It's up to the individual to not become a victim of a scam.

OCS: Prior service Soldiers move into senior phase of school

By Spc. Rick Scavetta
362 Mobile Public Affairs Detachment

Sabers drawn and rifles at sling arms, 64 officer candidates of the Officer Candidate School marched onto York Field July 22 to formally mark their transition to senior status.

The Silver Wings parachute team kicked off the ceremony, jumping in from 3,500 feet, streaming purple and yellow smoke.

The pomp and circumstance of their recognition ceremony is a 30-year tradition at Fort Benning. The reviewing officer, Col. Randy Buck, who was also the guest speaker, emphasized the need for the candidates to communicate with superiors, peers and subordinates.

"They need to remember the help they received getting through OCS. Hopefully, they can help someone else coming through the ranks who aspires for the same future," Buck said.

After 11 weeks of intensive basic and intermediate training, these prior-service Soldiers are glad to reach this turning point.

"It's like the enlisted schools on steroids. You get a little less sleep and the pace is a lot faster," said officer candidate Gregory Hirschey, a former Military Intelligence sergeant.

The pace slows up as the course gets longer.

"We back off as they get more responsibility. They are supposed to act like second lieutenants now," said Sgt. 1st Class Calvin Glenn, tactical NCO for the company.

Blue helmets and white ascots signify the students as advanced-level candidates.

The top three candidates carrying sabers during the event, student commander Charles K. Larry, executive officer Hirschey and student first sergeant George I. Corbari, were selected for outstanding leadership during the intermediate phase of training.

The last weeks of training for the senior officer candidates will consist of military history classes and preparation for the formal dining in Aug. 5.

The company graduates Aug. 7.

National Guard unit's civilian employees become deployable US Army Soldiers

By Maj. Tom Wilkinson
Virginia National Guard PAO

The year was 1968, and the United States was escalating its involvement in the Vietnam War. Company D (Ranger), 151st Infantry, of the Indiana Army National Guard was mobilized and deployed to support the war effort.

Thirty years later, a company of the Virginia Army National Guard is gearing up for mobilization and deployment in support of Operation Joint Guard in Bosnia. Company C, 3rd Battalion, 116th Infantry, from Leesburg, Va., has been identified to participate in this historic endeavor.

"You are the first combat arms (Infantry) National Guard unit to deploy since Vietnam," said Col. Danny McKnight, the senior Army advisor to the 29th Infantry Division (Light), as he spoke to the group of assembled Soldiers. "You are the first combat arms unit ever to deploy to Bosnia for operations other than war."

The unit received notification for training March 24 and began preparing for the possible deployment. Undergoing Soldier-readiness processing at its armory, the unit began the task of identifying the 129 Soldiers plus the 18-man additional personnel who will deploy as early as October. More than 170 Soldiers processed through the myriad of stations set up to determine deployability status. The task was to identify the 148 deployable Soldiers who will fill the company.

"We identified about 100 Soldiers early on who would be deployable," said Col. Steve Arey, the 1st Brigade commander. "We put out a call throughout the brigade for volunteers to join the company, making up the difference of 48 Soldiers. We ended up with more than 140 volunteers."

The company commander was pleased with the amount of volunteers, also.

"I received six enlistments that following week," said Capt. Mike Patterson, the company commander. "People are hearing about the possible deployment and they want to go."

With the onset of drawdowns and budget crunches, the National Guard is assuming more and more missions with the active components.

"It's as much a recruiting tool as it is a retention tool," said Lt. Col. Bob Martinez, the chief of Mobilization and Training for the National Guard Bureau. "Today's Guard Soldiers want the adventure and training opportunities as much as the active force."

Company C is much like its active counterparts, with a few exceptions.

"The age of my Soldiers ranges from 19 to 53 years old," said Patterson. "What's unique is that they come from all walks of life. We have police officers, lawyers, teachers and bankers, to name a few."

Because of their proximity to the Washington, D.C., area, there are also a number of individuals involved with the government and State Department activities.

Staff Sgt. Robert B. Smolar, a squad leader with 2nd Platoon, works for the State Department and is of Slovakian descent.

"I've had the opportunity to go to Bosnia a couple of times on business and to visit with friends and relatives," he said. "The Croatians and Bosnians really do love Americans, and I hope the company gets a chance to experience their hospitality.

"I really welcome the opportunity to participate in this mission and I think the Soldiers will truly understand how blessed we are here in America with what we have and enjoy."

The unit was alerted June 13 and is currently training at Fort Benning for a week. They will return home to Leesburg, Va., Saturday to a hometown parade and picnic.

Like the unit in Vietnam, Company C stands ready to prove their worth to the Total Army concept. The tradition of the citizen-Soldier is a testament to the patriotism and professionalism that will make this historic mission a success.

news from the front

By 1st Lt. Scott D. Rollston
498th Medical Co. (Air Ambulance)

Supporting the reported escalation of activities surrounding war crime criminals in the Balkans, the 498th Medical Company (Air Ambulance), 36th Engineer Group (Combat), operations have grown.

Most recently, four of the Fort Benning Soldiers were involved in an aeromedical evacuation of a wounded NATO peace keeper. The 498th team was the first on the scene to treat and transport the injured British Soldier.

"Great stuff, we're proud of them, they did a wonderful job," said Maj. Tracy Wyatt, 498th commander.

This week on the home front, commanders of the 36th Engineer Group, 832nd Medical Company and 498th Rear Detachment met with an entourage representing the 812th Medical Company (Air Ambulance) visiting from New Orleans, La. The commander of the 812th is preparing to mobilize his National Guard Helicopter Ambulance Company to support Fort Benning.

With Congressional mandates limiting the active duty service of the National Guard Units to 270 days, the 832nd Medical Company is preparing to redeploy back to Wisconsin.

The two National Guard units will overlap during the month of September for training and continuity of the mission hand over. The New Orleans Guard unit expects to remain at Fort Benning until mid-December, at which time the 498th will have recovered all of its equipment from Bosnia and assume it's normal duties supporting the National Infantry Center.

Army Signal Command set for future

By Staff Sgt. Jim Ward
Army News Service

FORT HUACHUCA, Ariz. — Most defense experts agree warfare in the next century will require the kind of split-second communications only dreamed about, even in the latter part of this one. The systems include cellular faxes, classified e-mail from forward fighting positions and a global command-and-control system only now starting to take shape.

Ushering in this new wave of emerging battlefield and global communications systems is the U.S. Army Signal Command (ASC). The ASC is attempting to direct its share of the traffic on the information superhighway, while supporting information operations throughout the world.

Until October 1996, however, ASC was busy with acquisition and engineering new equipment. Now, those pieces continue to be the responsibility of the Information Systems Engineering Command, spun off from the Information Systems Command and now part of the Communications-Electronics Command.

"What we've done is give our signal commanders out there in the world the kind of signal organization that will focus 100 percent of our efforts on preparing our Soldiers to fight and win on the information battlefield of the next century," said Maj. Gen. Charles G. Sutten Jr., ASC commander.

To do this requires a lash-up between the signal commanders and the commanders-in-chief for their respective areas of operations. To the signal officer, this relationship is nothing new.

"Signal Corps officers grow up working on the staff of a battalion-, brigade-, division- or higher-level commander. We understand this lash-up. So when we talk about being at the table when decisions are made, what we're really saying is being a fully integrated member of the commander's staff," Sutten said.

Sutten and others also understand the need to develop a one-person approach to the way the global nodal network is fielded, operated and maintained. This gives the Signal Corps the means to control configuration, equipment and procedures needed to give commanders from the National Command Authority on down the flexibility and connectivity the modern information battlefield requires, Sutten said.

When Soldiers deployed to Bosnia in support of Joint Endeavor, they succeeded because they had a global reach-back capability that extended from their forward-based locations, through the Landstuhl, Germany, earth station and on to the Continental United States, Sutten said.

The Signal Corps' success in Joint Endeavor also strengthened the relationship between signal commanders and the four-star commanders-in-chief.

"What we demonstrated in Bosnia was that if we had control over the entire global nodal network, there would be clear value added because of our presence on the ground," said Brig. Gen. Robert L. Nabors, the commander of ASC's 5th Signal Command.

It is this formal lash-up of signal forces and commanders that drove the decisions the Army's senior leadership made when they aligned the ASC with U.S. Forces Command earlier this year. The move clarified how important it is to the warfighting commanders in chief that signal forces are fully integrated into their operations.

What remains with the ASC is the 5th Signal Command, Mannheim, Germany, and its two brigades; the 1st Signal Brigade, at Yongsan, South Korea, and its four battalions; the 516th Signal Brigade, Fort Shafter, Hawaii, and four battalions; the 106th Signal Brigade, Fort Clayton, Panama, and its two battalions; the 11th Signal Brigade, and five battalions; the 1108th Signal Brigade, Fort Ritchie, Md., with two battalions; and the 54th Signal Battalion Saudi Arabia.

This relationship is apparent in the Pacific region, where the 516th Signal Brigade manages communications over one-third of the globe's surface.

According to the brigade's deputy commander, Lt. Col. David Lopez, it is this "tyranny of distance" that gives communicators under his charge both the challenges and the rewards of keeping such a large area connected.

"Even though we have such dispersion of support, we continue to lead the way by making improvements designed to keep pace with information technology," Lopez said. "We know that the things we do and the individual mobilization augmentee policy we help to set for U.S. Army Pacific are making a big difference in this theater."

This gives the command the kind of global nodal network capability it needs as it supports allied and U.S. defense interests around the world.

"Such a structure actually creates power-projection platforms out beyond the continental United States and into the operating theaters where the Soldiers will operate the systems," Sutten said.

In another area, the Army Signal Command is in the process of deepening its relationship with the power Major Army commands of Forces Command, Training and Doctrine Command and the Army Materiel Command, thus ensuring the power projection platforms in the United States are fully integrated into the defense information infrastructure.

Such an infrastructure, with its reliance on such emerging technologies as asynchronous transfer mode, the Army Regional Transition Network and the emergence of new matrix switches, the strategic-to-tactical entry point and routers will find their way onto Army posts camps and stations, thanks to the efforts of the ASC.

These systems give commanders confidence when they send Soldiers on global deployments to places where communications play a critical role in the success of each mission.

This can be seen by a trip to the border between Peru and Ecuador, where peacekeepers are working to find solutions to those countries' intractable problems. Helping in this effort are Soldiers from the ASC's 106th Signal Brigade. These tactical communicators are providing connectivity between forces deployed in the jungles that mark that area and their higher headquarters.

Through the use of single and multi-channel tactical satellite equipment, usually operated by three-Soldier teams, peacemakers receive the support they need to keep operations up and running.

"We sent a Soldier with a single- channel tactical satellite to Costa Rica following a hurricane and he was out the door in two hours and up and running almost from the minute he hit the ground. That's an example of what we can do and are doing around the region," the commander of the 106th Signal Brigade, Col. Marilyn Quagliotti, said.

According to Sutten, these efforts are already paying dividends.

"When the military looked around for an organization to work the issue of moving U.S. Southern Command information infrastructure from Quarry Heights and other sites in Panama to Miami, the ASC was selected. I am confident that happened because our leaders had seen what we can do and knew we'd get the job done. So far, we have," Sutten said.

That goes for Saudi Arabia, as well. Following the Khobar Towers bombing in June of 1996, senior military leadership decided U.S. forces needed greater security. That meant relocating the information infrastructure.

"The 54th Signal Battalion had an important part to play in this and they are doing a great job, even as they continue their day-to-day mission," Sutten said.

These examples, among many others, will broaden the scope of the work being done at the ASC and will position the command for the kinds of missions it will be expected to take on in the years to come.

From its headquarters at Fort Huachuca, the Army Signal Command remains on the cutting edge of information technology. All of this is designed to support Soldiers, whether in the sustaining base or deployed in support of a contingency or exercise. This echelons-above-corps information technology serves to give Soldiers the upper hand as they move into the Force XXI battlefield of the future.

Rangers take part in activities, build cohesion throughout unit

By Elizabeth E. LaMonica
Special to The Bayonet©

Approximately 600 rangers from 3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment, stepped onto Peden Field July 18 with one goal in mind: winning a small strip of red ribbon.

The rangers came together for Banner Day, a semi-annual event that provides these Soldiers with the opportunity for both camaraderie and competition.

"For one day, it allows each company to focus on being a company and competing toward the goal of winning the banner," said Capt. Ralph Kauzlarich, commander, Headquarters and Headquarters Company. "For my guys, it's an opportunity for them to worry about having fun for a day instead of being mechanics, or cooking food or doing personnel stuff."

Banner Day is composed of nine events designed to test the athletic abilities of individuals and teams of rangers. Their efforts are judged and measured and, after the final tally, one company attaches the prestigious red strip to their guidon.

"It brings out the competitiveness in everybody," said Staff Sgt. Bobby Bostick, Company B. "We all want to be the best and have bragging rights until the next time we have our Banner Day. Meanwhile we get to spend time with our buddies and have a good time with our ranger brothers."

Some of the events, like flicker ball, soccer, volleyball, basketball and the tug of war, were carried over from the last Banner Day, but two events were completely new to the competition: the quadrathon and the ranger special operations vehicle (RSOV) push.

The companies begin establishing their teams about one week prior to the event, according to Capt. Kevin Petit, Headquarters and Headquarters Company.

"It's a task organization game," Petit said. "For instance, we had a five-mile run and a relay. We need runners for both, so we really have to pick and choose our battles.

"This is a great, great day. Everybody is outside, nobody is at his desk. There are regional-level athletes out here just doing what they love."

Family members also turned out for the event to watch and to cheer on their loved ones' teams.

"The kids love to come out here and watch their daddy get involved in the sports," said Cynthia A. Irwin. "I think it's fun to watch the guys play. But we also came out to watch Charlie Company win the banner."

By the end of the competition, Company C managed to claim the banner for its own, breaking Company A's eight-year winning streak.

"Banner Day is all about winning, teamwork and guys trying as hard as they can," said Lt. Col. Michael Ferriter, commander, 3rd Bn. "The events required endurance, strength and sportsmanship. We've got the best guys all competing against each other. We finished today with each team winning at least two events.

"We've got a winning spirit in every guy in this battalion."

ITB DCO leaves for Army War College

By Yvette Stewart
Infantry Training Brigade

Losing personnel at any level can be hard on any organization.

But to lose the deputy commanding officer in a very busy and constantly moving brigade can be overwhelming.

Lt. Col. Andrew J. Stanley, deputy commander, Infantry Training Brigade, left July 18 for the Army War College, Carlile Barracks, Pa.

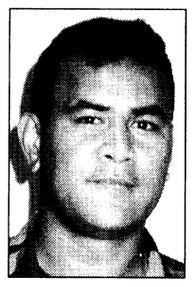
"I will miss the people and living at Fort Benning — This is a family-oriented post," Stanley said.

Col. Abraham J. Turner, ITB commander, presented Stanley with the Order of St. Maurice in an award ceremony held at ITB Headquarters.

"I am happy for him," Turner said. "Going to the War College is a very good choice."

Accepting the award, Stanley said, "I feel the most contribution I have made is right here at Sand Hill. We need to get the word out to everyone how important the Army is. If they don't believe it, come out to ITB."

Born in Savannah, Tenn., Stanley was commissioned a second lieutenant of Infantry upon graduation from the U.S. Military Academy in 1975.



Stanley holds a master's degree in Systems Management from the University of Southern California.

Women's Memorial registration deadline looms

By Rudi Williams
American Forces Press Service

WASHINGTON — Wilma L. Vaught is perplexed, disappointed and baffled by the meager number of women, particularly those on active duty, who have registered with the Women's Memorial.

"We thought at least 350,000 women would register, but it doesn't look like we'll have that many," said Vaught, president of the Women in Military Service for America Memorial Foundation, Inc. With the Oct. 18 dedication day looming, only about 11,000 of more than 200,000 women on active duty have registered, she said.

Registration by women veterans is also disappointing, Vaught said. There are 1.2 million women veterans in the nation, according to the Department of Veterans Affairs. Only 117,000 have registered, most from the World War II era. More than 1.8 million women have served in the armed forces, starting with the American Revolution.

"Registering is easy," said Vaught, a retired Air Force brigadier general. Eligible women — or their descendants or friends — can obtain registration forms by writing to:

The Women's Memorial
Dept. 560
Washington, DC 20042-0560.

For more information, call (800) 222-2294. Send e-mail requests for registration forms to wimsa@aol.com. The foundation's Internet web site address is: http://www.wimsa.org/pub/wimsa/.

The registration form requires the woman's name, date and place of birth, hometown, service branch, highest rank, military awards and decorations. The registrant also may include most memorable experiences and photographs.

Memorial officials request a $25 donation upon registration to help defray construction costs, but the tax-deductible donation isn't a prerequisite. The Women's Memorial is a Combined Federal Campaign beneficiary.

All women with military experience are eligible, including those on active or reserve component duty, veterans living and deceased and members of service auxiliaries (such as the Women's Auxiliary Army Corps during World War II and uniformed corps of the U.S. Public Health Service). Red Cross, USO and Special Service members who served overseas in direct support of the armed forces during conflicts are also eligible in the "We Also Served" category.

The memorial, at the gates of Arlington National Cemetery on the Virginia side of the Potomac River opposite the Lincoln Memorial, recognizes women who served in the armed forces. It documents their experiences and tells their stories of service, sacrifice and achievement, Vaught said.

The information will be in the memorial's education center to document and preserve the individual and collective histories of women who have served in defense of the nation.

"What convinces active duty women to register is another active duty person telling them about the memorial, getting them excited and explaining why the memorial is important," Vaught said. She believes active duty women should register to join "the long line of women who stepped forward and served their country in the armed forces."

"When you register, in a sense you're paying tribute to those who preceded you," she said. "If they had not done well, you might not have had the opportunity to be doing what you do in the military today. Taking pride in registering says you're appreciative of what they did."

Many women haven't registered because they wrongly view the memorial as being mostly for women who served in World War II, she said. It is true more of them have registered than veterans of any other era, but age isn't a prerequisite for membership in the Women's Memorial, Vaught explained.

She said women in today's military are not bonded and networked as their World War II counterparts were and remain today. During the war years, women worked, lived, trained and went overseas together in tight little groups, such as the Women's Army Corps (WACs), Navy Women Accepted for Volunteer Emergency Service (WAVES) and Coast Guard Semper Paratus — Always Ready (SPARs). After the war, they continued their togetherness by forming women's veterans organizations that still exist today.

"For more than 50 years, they've kept in contact with each other and have attended reunions and other functions together," Vaught said. "Their organizations give us names and addresses to get in touch with people. We don't have that access to active duty women."

One of the most poignant reasons to register is to have a permanent record of military service for future generations, Vaught said.

"Some children of women who served in World War II don't really know what their mothers did," she said. "Some of the children hardly knew their mothers were in the war, which was a great moment in American history. Women should register so their children and grandchildren will know what they did."

Navy Chief Petty Officer Dave Evans, an Armed Forces Radio and Television Service broadcaster, registered his wife Stephanie, a former Navy hospital corpsman.

"Three or four generations down the line, when we're long gone," Evans said, "our grandchildren, great-grandchildren and relatives can go back to that place and say: 'This is where our great aunt or great great grandmother was in the military.' It will be a resource for genealogical research."

"Being part of the Women's Memorial is a great honor," said Vernetta M. Fields, a personnel assistant in the National Guard Bureau's Human Resources Office in Alexandria, Va. "When I first heard about the Women's Memorial, I knew I wanted to be part of this awesome project. I was very enthusiastic about getting registered, so I could be a member. I hope to one day take my daughter and mother to see this wonderful memorial, so that they can share with me this awesome experience.

"I try to solicit women to register for the memorial," said Fields, also an Army National Guard staff sergeant with 129th Signal Battalion, Bel Air, Md. "Most people I talk to know about the memorial; some are already members. But I find older women — senior officers and NCOs — register more than younger women. Perhaps, because of their experiences in the military, they appreciate the memorial more than younger women."

Soldiers Magazine

The staff at Soldiers Magazine wants you, your family and friends to be a part of their hottest issue of the year.

In January, they will publish their annual Almanac edition, which is loaded with facts, figures and photos about the Army, for the Army. A large portion of that issue is dedicated to the "This Is Our Army" photo feature — that's where they need your help.

If you have a good photo that shows the Army family at work or play, Soldiers Magazine wants to see it. You don't have to be a professional photographer, you don't even have to be in the Army. Just mail your best photos before Aug. 15.

Basically, there's only one rule — all photos must have been taken between Sept. 1, 1996, and July 31, 1997.

Color slides are preferred, but color or black and white prints are acceptable. Fancy 8x10 glossy photos aren't necessary — the standard machine print will do. On the back of each photo, include photographer's name, phone number and address. Also include some information about the photo like where and when it was taken and the full name and rank of those pictured. Photos and accompanying information can not be returned.

Send your best photos to:

Students return to 'new' McBride

By Jacqué Hill
Special to the Bayonet©

When McBride Elementary School students return for the 1997-98 school year, they will enter a practically new building.

This is because the school building was renovated over the past few months and the changes are now almost complete. The final inspection of the building is expected to take place the first week of August.

The project, which began in December, included the replacement of the heating and air conditioning systems, complete rewiring of the building, new light fixtures and ceiling structures throughout, new carpeting and some new cabinetry and bookcases, new exterior doors and a new fire alarm system.

The work also included computer networking in the school. With this networking, computers in remote locations throughout McBride will be connected to the school's media center where they will have easier and faster access to the center's information.

Because of a leaking roof, the 30-year-old building needed the renovations quickly, according to Alice Skinner, director of Logistics, Fort Benning Schools.

"We had an extremely leaky roof," she said, "and the building sustained interior damage because of it.

"The renovation would have happened anyway because it was in our five-year plan, but we did it quickly because of this damage."

Skinner is pleased with the work the contractor, Harmon and Associates, did at McBride.

"We were lucky to have an excellent contractor," she said. "They completed the work in record time and the quality of the work is excellent.

"We're looking forward to moving into an essentially new building."

When the students do move into the completed building, the portable classrooms used during the renovation will disappear.

"The portable buildings are leased," Skinner said, "and when the classes are moved out of them, the contractor will reclaim them.

"We expect this to happen by the time school starts."

McBride's principal, Del L. Hicks, is looking forward to beginning the school year in the renovated building.

"Everything's really nice," he said. "A nice environment is very conducive to a good education."

School registration begins soon

Fort Benning Schools

Directorate of Public Works Information Corner 'Essayons'

Directorate of Public Works

Fort Benning is one of the Army's 15 power-projection platforms.

It is home to three combat units that have a very short deployment string: the 3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division (Mechanized); the Headquarters and 3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment; and the 36th Engineer Group.

The rapid deployment of any of these units requires teamwork between the deploying unit and a host of post staff elements, as well as such other supporting entities as the Corps of Engineers, Savannah, Ga., District, Fort Benning Directorate of Public Works (DPW). With an in-house staff of approximately 700 individuals, this is a key member of the team.

The following is a summary of DPW activities that support the rapid deployment of power-projection forces.

Master planning

Well before any deployment operation, the DPW master planning staff ensures that a myriad of up-to-date replacement facilities are properly documented and sited.

Fort Benning is currently reaping the benefits of the Army's drive to place permanent-party Soldiers in their own room, sharing a bathroom. (That is the desired new standard for enlisted unaccompanied personnel in permanent-party barracks).

Other examples of the master planning effort as the installation to project its forces anywhere in the world at a moment's notice are:

•The recently completed deployment warehouse facility with 53,000 square feet at a cost of $4,300,000; and

•The construction of a new rail loading facility in Harmony Church. Construction of the facility is scheduled to begin in the early fall at cost of $9,100,000.

Facilities

Maintenance of existing facilities is vital to the ability of the installation's power-projection units to deploy on a moment's notice. As on most Army installations, Fort Benning's operation and maintenance funds are at a premium. Their expenditure reflects the priorities of Commanding General Maj. Gen. Carl F. Ernst's commitment to safety, training, power projection and quality of life.

Seaport

The DPW's power-projection responsibilities extend beyond post boundaries. If a large deployment operation requires additional seaport capabilities, the DPW is part of a 250-person contingent from Fort Benning that proceeds to the Port of Jacksonville, Fla., to operate the military seaport.

Fort Benning's mission includes on-site contracting for housing and subsistence (to support the port support activity contingent and acquiring and installing fencing needed to secure marshaling and holding arms at the port).

DPW's staff is an integral part of the post's power-projection mission. Working hand-in-hand with deploying unity, the installation's many staff agencies and various off-post organizations, DPW helps support the installations mission to project combat power on a moment's notice.

Comments, questions

If you have questions or topics you would like addressed in the DPW "Information Corner," contact Glenn Todd, DPW customer relations specialist, at 545-2117 or write to the Directorate of Public Works, Building 6, Room 409, ATTN: ATZB-PWM (Glenn Todd), Fort Benning, GA 31905.

Tricare Prime features portability for enrolled members

Humana Health Services

Driven by a desire to meet the needs of a mobile military population and fueled by requests from Congressional leadership, the Department of Defense implemented a three-phased approach to Tricare Prime enrollment portability July 1.

The first phase of enrollment is provided to active duty military families. The second phase, which will be instituted in the fall of 1997, will be available for retirees and their family members enrolled in Tricare Prime.

Finally, in the spring of 1998, the split enrollment benefit will be offered to retirees and their families. This benefit will allow members of the same family to enroll in separate regions with a maximum of one family enrollment fee.

Enrollment transfer

Tricare Prime enrollment portability allows beneficiaries to move their Prime coverage during a permanent move to another Tricare Prime region. Even if active duty military families move temporarily for 30 days or more, it is recommended they transfer enrollment to the temporary residence. (Keep in mind that retirees and their family members will be limited in the number of times the may transfer enrollment during an enrollment year.)

Upon transfer of enrollment, beneficiaries can seamlessly transition their healthcare coverage simply and easily; reduce the risk of encountering higher point-of-service costs for seeking health service outside of their established Tricare Prime network; maintain continuity of coverage and maintain preventative wellness and routine care coverage.

While traveling outside of their "home" region to the new location, Tricare Prime beneficiaries should remain enrolled at their old location and follow existing guidelines regarding nonemergency care authorizations. Upon arrival at the new location, families should transfer enrollment to the new region and select a new Primary Care Manager.

To transfer enrollment, beneficiaries must contact the Tricare Prime contractor in the new region through the local Tricare Service Center or call the new region's toll-free information line.

Enroll when available

When transferring to an area where Tricare Prime is available, it is recommended that Prime members first contact the new contractor upon arrival to enroll in the new location. The new contractor will coordinate the enrollment transfer with the contractor in the old location.

During this process, the new contractor will also receive information on the member's enrollment anniversary date, the amount the member has paid toward the annual maximum charges (catastrophic cap) and other pertinent information. Enrollment in the new location is effective when the new contractor received a completed enrollment application. If a Prime member were to disenroll from the old location first, there would be a gap in Prime coverage.

When it's unavailable

When transferring to an area where Tricare Prime is not available, enrollees may contact the old contractor to disenroll prior to leaving their region or they may disenroll after they move to their new location.

Beneficiaries who disenroll before they move will revert to coverage under Tricare Standard. Beneficiaries who disenroll after they move and then seek unauthorized care after leaving will find that they are subject to higher costs under the point-of-service option.

The most significant difference Tricare Prime enrollees will experience with the implementation of enrollment portability is the uninterrupted health-care service and the potential for less cost and improved access to that health service nationwide.

For more information on transferring Tricare Prime enrollment, contact the nearest Tricare Service Center.

Unselfish acts influence all

By Chaplain (Maj.) Vance P. Theodore
School of the Americas

The B-17 was called the Flying Fortress during World War II. It was one of America's most dependable bombers.

During a mission, flying back toward the English Channel from Germany, a B-17 was engaged by the enemy and crippled. An 18-year-old airman who was in the ball of the turret under the B- 17 was critically wounded and was in such a position that he was unable to get out of the plane.

As the pilot ordered the crew to take their parachutes and abandon the plane, it was reported by one of the crew members that the young crewman, knowing he was soon to ride the huge fortress of steel into the cold waters of the English Channel, cried out with terror and pain.

The pilot, laying his parachute aside, went back and took the young man's hand and said, "Don't worry, son, we are going to ride this down together."

This Army captain was later posthumously awarded the country's highest award, the Medal of Honor.

How many of us are selfish in our daily activities? It wasn't selfishness that caused this pilot to give his life with one of his crew members. It was because of commitment to something higher than himself.

Unfortunately, we live in a world where people are constantly grabbing for all they can get. How are we committed to our families, to our God, to our country and to our friends? What is it that pushes us to perform or to work on a daily basis?

Unfortunately, it is selfishness that often rules the day.

I remember one Army captain who was commander of a light Infantry company. One of his friends, another commander in the battalion, was having difficulty preparing for the battalion Army Training and Evaluation Program (ARTEP). This company commander spent hours with his friend helping to bring his company to a high level so that both companies would be successful.

During the battalion ARTEPs, both companies excelled. The battalion commander knew what happened, but he never said anything. When both of these officers were rated by the brigade commander, they received outstanding ratings.

Over two thousand years ago, the savior, hanging from a cross, said, "Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do (Luke 23:34)."

As we strive to be unselfish, let us remember the sacrifice and unselfishness of the Lord. "For God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son (John 3:16)."

This unselfish act influences all of us today. Because of this act, we can repent, we can start anew. Because of Christ, and his sacrifice, we can all be saved.

Let us remember he is committed to us and he will help us when we have problems or concerns. As we strive to be unselfish, as we strive to help others, let us not forget there is a purpose for our existence on Earth.

I would not be surprised if there was another set of hands that day with that Army captain as they rode that B-17 down together echoing his words, "Don't worry, son, we are going to ride this down together."

Faith makes a lasting positive statement

By Chaplain (Capt.) Tim Atkinson
317th Engineer Battalion

Caleb is one of the few Bible characters about whom Scripture records only positive comments.

His life was one marked by conviction and faith. He was one of Israel's military leaders as the people wandered in the wilderness and then entered and possessed the Promised Land.

He was not promoted to be Israel's chief leader like Joshua, his contemporary, but his life certainly had an impact. Think of him as an old master sergeant that just wouldn't quit.

After Moses had sent the 12 spies into the Promised Land, Caleb brought back a good report. "And Caleb stilled the people before Moses and said, 'Let us go up at once and possess it; for we are well able to overcome it' (Numbers 13:30)."

Caleb was a Soldier and leader with a spirit of faith. He saw the obstacles in the land, but also took into account the greatness and the power of his God.

Commanders have so much pressure and responsibility in the Army that chaplains are encouraged to point out possible solutions and not just the problems. Caleb was such a Soldier.

The Scriptures record the 10 spies brought back an "evil report." It was evil because it was a report that did not reflect trust in God. They said, "we seemed like grasshoppers in our own eyes (Numbers 13:33)."

The bad report prevailed and the people missed out on the blessings of God.

The nation of Israel did not overcome this obstacle until much later. Only two of the adult male Soldiers survived to enter the Promise Land: Joshua and Caleb.

It is interesting to note the evil report from the 10 came first and last, with Caleb's comments sandwiched in the middle. That is why it is important to put the good news first. Moreover, with God, there is always good news.

He spoke his faith as a warrior who trusted in God and ended up strong enough to make a positive statement at age 80. Caleb said, "Now then, just as the Lord promised, he has kept me alive for 45 years since the time he said this to Moses, while Israel moved about in the desert.

"So here I am today, 80 years old. I am still as strong today as the day Moses sent me out; I'm just as vigorous to go out to battle now as I was then.

"Now give me this hill country that the Lord promised me that day. You yourself heard then that the Anakites were there and their cities were large and fortified, but, the Lord helping me, I will drive them out just as he said (Joshua 14:10-12)."

What a man, what a Soldier, what a positive statement Caleb's life made.

Caleb was truly an inspiring Soldier and man of God, but we, too, can have the same spirit of faith through our trials and difficulties. If we do, our lives and lips will make lasting positive statements as well.

For the Super Sonics, Jonathan Cole led the team, scoring 8 points, with Lewis Posey scoring 4 points.

In 10- to 11-year-old division play July 17, Team 1 held on to take a 27-26 victory over the Orangemen. Roosevelt Vickers (12 points) and Gregory Raymond (9 points) combined for 21 of the 27 Team 1 points in the win while Omar Tyler led the Orangemen with 14 points, followed by Robert Penn with 6 points.

In July 17 late game action, Team 1 pulled past the Tarheels with a 45-44 victory in the 12- to 15-year-old division. Nick Brown led Team 1 to victory, scoring 16 points, with teammate Nick Ellerson scoring 11 points. Cornelius Lights was the leading scorer in the game with 18 Tarheels points, with teammate Toddrick Henry scoring 8 points in the loss.

Youth Services programs success begins with parents

By John W. Peeler
Special to the Bayonet©

John W. Peeler believes parents should do their part by registering children for YS programs on time.

commentary

With football, soccer and cheerleading seasons just around the corner, I stopped by the Youth Services for my routine prefootball registration check.

I do this every season to see how the registration is going, check on conditioning camps and to try to get a good estimate of how many teams each sport will have.

As a football coach, I was eager to get started teaching a completely new group of children the game of football and watching them grow, both individually and within the sport.

Once again, as I have many times within the past six years, I was disappointed to find out the registration had been extended, which to me, meant the season starts later.

Looking back on the previous six years, I thought to myself there has to be a way to get the fall sports season underway on time for a change, so I began to evaluate the process and the where-with-all it took to get the job done.

I thought: designate when the season will be, conduct registration, have conditioning camp, then begin the season.

Easy, right?

From a coach's and parent's standpoint, it may sound that easy, but after hanging around the Youth Services for the past six years, I can tell you it is not.

There are many other dynamics involved in getting a sporting competition together.

Have you thought about how and when the Youth Services gets the money to fund the sport? How about buying, maintaining and issuing of equipment? Coordination of volunteer coaches? Scheduling, to include holiday periods? Umpires? How about the doling out of the teams or maybe even something as simple as getting parents to sign their children up on time?

In my opinion, the Youth Services does a great job of doing all of those things with the limited staff they have, except one. That is getting parents to sign their children up on time for the sports programs.

After all, everyone knows that if it does not happen, it is the Youth Services staff's fault, right? I don't think so!

Never mind that the registration period is published in the paper, put up on marquees and flyers are sent out, someone always has an excuse for not registering their child before the deadline.

What does this do? It puts the whole sequence of events behind.

The end result is parent complaints before, during and after the season about how messed up the season is or was.

Well, I am here to tell you it takes the cooperation of the Youth Services staff, coaches, and yes, believe it or not, parents to make a program successful and, for the parents' part, that starts with registering their children.

The Youth Services, in my opinion, has always bent over backwards to accommodate its customers and tried to find new and better ways to run the programs.

Without the support of the community, including parents, the hard work put in to each and every program the Youth Services offers, would be for naught.

Support the Youth Services and do your part. After all, it is the children who will end up suffering in the long run if everyone doesn't do their part.

If you are one of those who complains from the sidelines or the bleachers, volunteer — your time and efforts are better served in a positive manner rather than lambasting the program and those trying to do the right thing for your children.

Swimmer wins medals at Games

By Pfc. Tricia A. Schipmann
USAIC Public Affairs Office

A Fort Benning swimmer brought home three Gold medals this week after competing in the Georgia Games in Atlanta Sunday.

Chuck Gantner, chief of Personnel Proponency, Office of Infantry Proponency, won all three 50-meter swimming events he entered, including the backstroke, butterfly and freestyle.

Being in the spotlight is nothing new for the swimmer. Gantner, now 52 years old, has competed nationally and internationally since he was 16 and has won a total of 12 Gold medals in the Georgia Games.

Gantner, a high school and college "All-American" at the U.S. Miliary Academy at West Point, is most proud of an accomplishment that came in 1985.

As a Masters swimmer, he earned four Gold medals and one Silver Medal during the World Masters Games in Toronto, Canada. There he set a world record in the 200-meter backstroke. He won another three Gold medals and one Silver Medal the following year in Tokyo, where he set another world record this time for the 100-meter backstroke.

Gantner gives partial credit for his success to being part of the great Fort Benning team.

"One great thing about Fort Benning," he said, "is that Department of Army civilians aren't just allowed, but are encouraged to use facilities on post, such as the swimming pool. I take advantage of that."

Gantner began swimming at age 11 because he had the opportunity and parents who supported his interest. He continued to swim and compete to help keep mentally and physically fit. Gantner still swims everyday, however, he said it's not necessarily training for competition anymore. His family and two children, ages 5 and 8, are his top priority. His swimming now is for relaxation and fun.

State parks post fishing tournaments —

The arrival of summer means it is time to get out your favorite fishing pole and head to Georgia's state parks.

This year, park officials have planned a dozen fishing events where serious anglers can strut their stuff while beginning youngsters learn the basics. The tournaments are a great excuse for families to spend time together in the summer sunshine.

Most state parks have boat ramps and docks, and many rent boats and sell bait. For more information about a fishing tournament, call the host park.

Fishing tournaments are just some of the many events conducted by state parks and historic sites throughout the year.

All events are free and parking is $2.

Roosevelt State Park offers Ranger Camp —

Franklin D. Roosevelt State Park is conducting its Junior Ranger Camps in two sessions this summer.

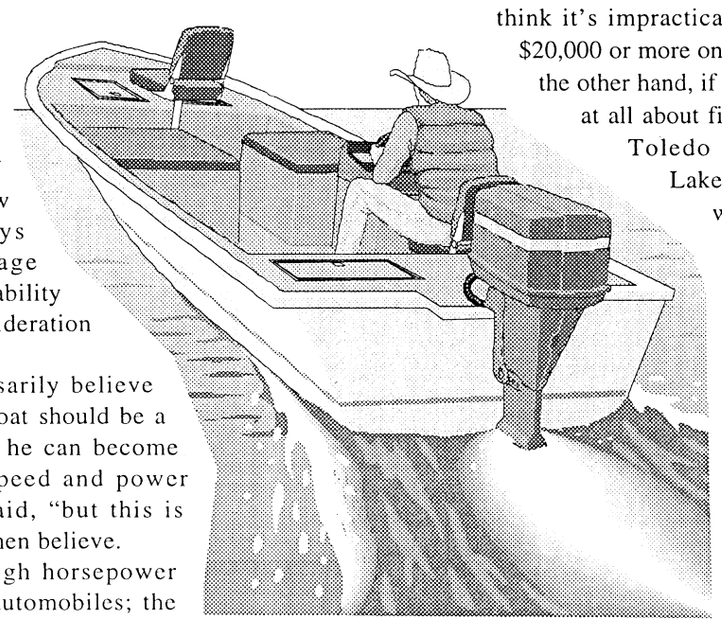
Buying a new boat requires decisions on use

By David Hegel, Steve Price
Johnson® and Evinrude® Outboards



As a full-time professional bass tournament fisherman, Ron Shuffield has certainly been in his share of bass boats. More than a few, he has decided, are not truly suitable for major-league fishing competition.

"One of the biggest problems I see is fishermen do not purchase the boat that best suits their individual needs," said Shuffield, winner of five national bass tournaments.

"If an angler only fishes a few days each year and then only on small lakes, he really does not need to spend the money on a big 19- or 20-foot bass boat. On the other hand, if he does plan to enter tournament competition, he needs to purchase a large boat that will handle rough water and accommodate two anglers and their equipment comfortably.

"Buying a new boat should never be a spur-of-the-moment decision," Shuffield said, "but unfortunately, I believe it is for many fishermen."

Shuffield, who appears at many sport and tackle shows throughout the United States during the winter months, spends much of his show time counseling fishermen about the finer points of purchasing new boats. He always stresses boat usage rather than affordability as the prime consideration for purchase.

"I don't necessarily believe an angler's first boat should be a small one just so he can become accustomed to speed and power gradually," he said, "but this is what many fishermen believe.

"Boats with high horsepower engines are like automobiles; the power is there but you don't have to use it.

"If a fisherman doesn't fish very often and really has no plans to fish big, open lakes, then I do think it's impractical for him to spend $20,000 or more on a big bass boat. On the other hand, if he has any thoughts at all about fishing big lakes like Toledo Bend, Cooper or Lake Ontario where the water can get really rough in a hurry, then I strongly recommend he get a big boat, regardless of his tournament ambitions.

"Sooner or later, rough water will catch him, and he'll be a lot safer in an 18- to 20-foot boat and have the power available to drive through it to safety."

The pro also advises potential boat buyers to carefully consider a boat's storage capacity for extra tackle, clothes and related equipment, along with live wells to keep fish alive.

"Of course, cost is also a major consideration for nearly everyone," Shuffield said, "and I tell fishermen to purchase the best equipment they can afford. February and March are two of the best months to purchase a new boat because many dealers have them on sale then at boat and fishing shows.

"Surprisingly, another good time to purchase a bass boat is at a bass tournament," he said. "Many tournaments award fully rigged bass boats to tournament winners and those anglers often sell them right on the spot and usually at a major discount."

Losing bass can cost money

By David Hegel, Steve Price
Johnson® and Evinrude® Outboards

Bass fishermen consider losing fish simply part of the sport, but what happens when a lost fish would have been worth $100,000 in a national tournament?

"Admittedly, it takes a little longer to get over something like that, but in the end, it's still a lost fish," said Cliff Craft, who did lose just such a bass as he was about to get it into the boat during a recent tournament. "That bass cost me $88,000, the difference between first place that I would have won and the $12,000 I did win for second. I had to sit down and think about it for a few minutes."

Craft, a veteran tournament competitor, thinks bass fishermen should treat lost fish just like a cast that doesn't bring a strike because the results are the same.

"What's really important is making each lost fish a learning experience," he said. "Some fish are simply going to get free, so you have to remember to play each one carefully and try to minimize the number you lose. When you do lose a fish, you have to keep casting and try not to lose another one.

"If an angler loses fish continually, however, then he's probably using a poor technique or he's using improper equipment."

Craft believes one of the primary reasons anglers lose bass is because they don't play the fish correctly after it's been hooked. Fishermen try to bring the fish to the boat too quickly.

"When you try to pull a bass to the boat, you increase the chances of ripping your lure free," the pro said. "At the same time, forcing a bass to the surface often causes it to jump, which is when many fish get free.

"It's much better to keep a firm, constant pressure on the bass and play it with your rod tip low. You can guide it out of brush and around your boat until it tires and you can land it. Most largemouth bass, regardless of their size, do not fight very long."

Craft also believes many bass are lost because anglers don't use the proper equipment for the conditions they're fishing.

"This is especially true on lakes that have big bass or heavy cover," he said. "If you're fishing in either of these situations, you need stronger rods and lines.

"On the other hand, at Lake Lanier in Georgia, where I live, the water is clear and we often fish very light line. When you fish light tackle, you really have to take your time playing bass because the line can break much easier."

In tournament competition, Craft often sees anglers lose bass because of dull hooks.

"Believe it or not, many of the lures sold today come with pretty dull hooks," the Georgia pro said. "Some of us spend a lot of time either sharpening hooks or exchanging them completely. In fact, that's one of the nightly rituals we perform after every day on the water.

"Still, no matter how many precautions you take to keep from losing fish, some will still get free somehow," Craft said. "I certainly know that as well as anyone."

Wings: plunge in, bring Army to world

By Spc. Laura Corbin
362nd Mobile Public Affairs Det.

Fort Benning has a calling card, but it isn't printed on paper and it won't fit in your wallet. It may, however, drop in on you from 10,000 feet.

Imagine a circle of Soldiers clad in black freefalling in geometric formations, the tiny group becoming larger and larger, until they their parachutes open and spiral gently toward the ground suspended under Infantry blue canopies. This is a typical "high show" for the Silver Wings, Fort Benning's 16-member Command Exhibition Parachute Team.

As team leader and the only full-time member, Black Hat of the Year Staff Sgt. Michael Elliott has been responsible for the Silver Wings' growth by beginning what he called, "small changes that went a long way."

Elliot said his first project involved building up the team's image by establishing uniformity of dress, painting a mural, putting up pictures of the parachute team in action and holding classes for those interested in learning the ins and outs of skydiving.

"People see us jumping," Elliott said. "They don't see us packing. They don't see the dirt diving — the planning that goes into a jump."

According to Elliott, the team jumps every Monday and Friday for Airborne School introductions and graduations and travels almost

PHYSICAL TRAINING

Uniforms, standards to change

By Pvt. 2 Michelle Cambrils
362nd Mobile Public Affairs Detachment

The Army is proposing changes to the current physical training uniforms and Army physical fitness testing (APFT) standards.

The changes to the uniform come from a random census of Soldiers from various bases in the CONUS. Some of the changes include a different material and different style.

The new summer uniform will be made of a material called CoolMax. It pulls sweat to the surface of the fabric where moisture quickly evaporates. Because CoolMax doesn't absorb sweat, it won't cling to your skin, unlike the current APFT shirt made of cotton and polyester.

Other new features are the reflective black Army emblem on the front of the shirt and a reflective V on the back for better visibility.

New changes are in store for the winter uniforms also. An idea for a nylon jump suit is being discussed.

"Sweats may take longer to change because they can't be made at a competitive price," said Lt. Col. Charles Hunsaker, deputy commandant of the Master Fitness School.

Until the Army can find a cost-efficient way to manufacture the sweat suits, the idea is temporarily on hold, he said. However, the winter uniform will still have a new look. Soldiers can expect a better fit without the hood, zipper or pockets to deal with. Layering is also an important issue. A long-sleeve shirt could be a possibility during the fall and spring months.

"It all depends on funding, but we are definitely pushing for a long-sleeve shirt," Hunsaker said.

Expect to see these changes by the year 2000.

Changes in the APFT uniform came at approximately the same time as the proposed changes in the current APFT standards, although the specific details have not been determined.

"Generally Soldiers can expect the maximum points to lower and the minimum points to raise slightly," said Frank Palkoska, chief of Doctrine at the U.S. Army Physical Fitness School.

"Marginal performers could fail now due to this new test. This tells people they have to be up to Army standards," he said.

The new APFT will be based upon randomly selected individuals by the Army Research Institute.

The goal of changing the standards is to make the APFT test equal for both genders.

"More men will respect women because of the equal points for the equal effort. Women want to be competitive against men and this will give them their chance," Hunsaker said.

These changes will be shown to Army Chief of Staff Gen. Dennis J. Reimer in September. If the plan is approved, scoring methods will be implemented as soon as October.

However, Soldiers could have up to a year to prepare for the new scoring.

"We'll give commanders a full year before the new standards will be fully implemented," Hunsaker said.

Soldiers could see the new APFT test standards by October 1998.

Post plans for missions

By Cpl. Marc G. Turchin
Bayonet staff writer

In the not so distant future, Fort Benning will have the capabilities of launching multi-unit deployments.

A number of Army installations inside the United States are currently working to make a unit's deployment more efficient and the Army's projection more powerful. Fort Benning is one of those installations.

Power Projection defines how fast a unit can get from its home installation to anywhere in the world.

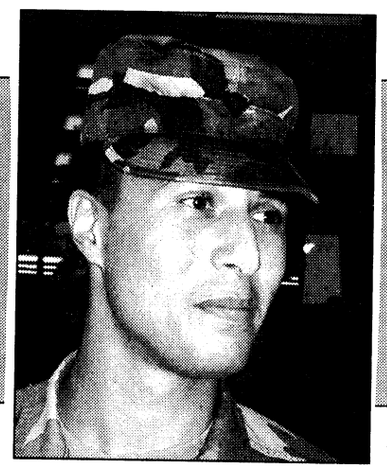
In all, 15 Army installations have plans to improve their power projection platforms, said Dale Ellis, director of the Directorate of Logistics.

Other installations making renovations include Fort Sill, Okla.; Fort Bliss, Texas; and Fort Carson, Colo.

"We have to have the capabilities of taking any type of unit, to include Army Reserve and National Guard, and project them from Fort Benning to someplace else," Ellis said.

Fort Benning's main deployable units are the 75th Ranger Regiment, which has an 18-hour readiness status and 3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division (Mechanized), which has a 24-hour time limit.

To be able to deploy both units or even more, a number of things need to or will happen.



The first step in this process was the building of the Contingency Supply Warehouse located near Lawson Army Airfield.

This facility currently houses "contingency stocks." These stocks are articles issued by the Central Issue Facility (CIF). This includes boots, head gear and other types of clothing used in different types of climates, Ellis said.

Soldiers learn to cope with change as they answer country's call

By Spc. Rick Scavetta
362nd Mobile Public Affairs Detachment

There are more than just ghosts at Harmony Church these days. It's actually the most popular stop on the shuttle. Why? The dreaded reservists are making a pit stop enroute to Europe.

commentary

The shuttle was our lifeline to civilization during the two weeks here at Fort Benning as we waited to cross the pond.

The waiting game started back on Jan. 22. For reservists, that early call meant not only breaking the news to families and employers, but also cleaning up our lives and getting back to a dress-right-dress lifestyle.

As always in the Army, the waiting is what gets to you the most. Waiting for the kiss that must last nine long months, waiting to board that plane which takes me from my New England summer to the sweltering heat of Georgia and waiting to reach my destination, the war-torn Balkans.

For someone who has spent most of his adult life serving his country, coming back on active duty fits like a worn glove.

It was only January 1995 when I left my job as a gunner on an M-1A1 in Germany. It was time to get an education. I left to pursue a communications degree at Central Connecticut State University.

I would have graduated next May, but Uncle Sam has decided differently.

That is just a small horror story. Imagine walking in Sgt. Jerry Parisella's shoes.

A recent law school graduate from Beverly, Mass., he studied for the bar exam during our pre-deployment training here in Georgia. He returned to Boston last week to take the exam and, when he's through, will fly out to our mission in Bosnia the next day.

Leaving work for me was actually a blessing. I work security in an emergency room and as a production assistant at an oldies radio station in Hartford, Conn. If that were not enough, I am the director of the campus radio news department.

So, after reducing my work load to only one job and freeing my life from classes and homework, Army life is a comparative walk in the park.

Another Soldier is a contractor in civilian life. He began building a house under contract in his home state which would have been complete by next month. Someone else will continue his work as well as his earnings.

The deployment has focused our soldiering skills but our near future is still a bit fuzzy. Bits and pieces of the mission filtered in, yet even though we flew out on Tuesday, our puzzle is not complete. At least we have been well prepared. The 3397th Garrison Support Unit from Chattanooga, Tenn., squared us away and did it with style.

Part-timer, wannabe, weekend warriors, we signed the paper and know what that entails.

While active duty Soldiers train each day for their missions, we may get a few weekends to prepare for whatever they throw at us.

So if you see an odd looking patch, or get asked directions on post, remember how far reservists have come and how far we must go to get back home.

Outlook hinges on attitude

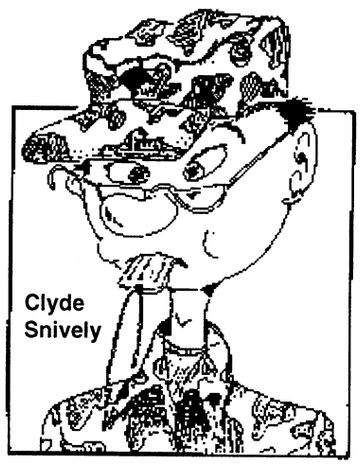
War stories. All Soldiers have war stories but not all war stories are about war. In fact, few are, at least among the younger breed.

My war stories of basic training at Fort Jackson centered around the senior drill sergeant who had six-foot long legs, which meant he could walk faster than most of us could run. That was important at Fort Jackson in the summer when the battalion commander was telling the drill sergeants not to run because of the heat.



He may have not been running, but we sure were.

For us vets, (more than two PCSs) we also have war stories about first sergeants and commanders.

Like the first sergeant I had in Panama who kept the toilet paper dispensers locked up. He did this because that was an inspection point for the brigade commander. The brigade commander believed that if each stall did not have a toilet paper dispenser with a roll of toilet paper on it, then we were not taking care of the troops.

Not a problem normally, unless you had a company of Soldiers who found toilet papers to be "collectibles."

So whenever the brigade commander would enter the company area, the lookouts would warn the first sergeant who would grab the company clerks and rush to the latrines to install the dispensers. The brigade commander was thus always pleased with what he found in Charlie Company and the company and battalion commanders would each breathe a sigh of relief at not being relieved over toilet paper.

commentary

There were also the war stories about training areas. Like the attached armor company commander who never crossed a line of departure on time, would get separated from his troops — one day his tanks left without full crews and the captain was seen chasing after them with a truck full of tank crewmen.

He later got so lost and so frustrated he no longer would talk to the battalion operations officer on the radio, giving that job to his driver, who, when asked to describe what he saw so he could be talked out of his predicament, replied, "trees, lots of trees."

Assignments are also hot subjects for war stories. There are always those who are never happy with where they are, be it "paradise" or some place in between.

Troops in Hawaii complain about frequent deployments and being "stuck on the rock."

Soldiers in California hate the high cost of living. Those at Fort Drum, might not like the winter and those at Fort Benning may hate August.

I've noticed that spouses play a key role in all this. If the spouse is happy, generally the Soldier is happy. But if the spouse carps every day about her neighbors, her neighbors' brats, about not having a job, or having a job and not having a baby sitter; if she complains about the Soldier's many trips to the field, complains about the family quarters, then the Soldier will soon have second thoughts about his job and his assignment.

That's one reason Army Times carries such long lists under "Stateside swaps."

Then there are Soldiers who seem to be happy no matter what job they have or where they're assigned.

My grandmother had a term for that — "Polly Annas." Polly Annas were people who were always happy, always agreeable, always wanted to get along.

They made the most of bad situations.

I think we need more Polly Annas in the Army. Some people might look down on their noses at them because they are so unflappable and agreeable.

Polly Anna is certainly not an Army term. Not a hero phrase, but Polly Annas certainly do the right thing for the right reason and it wouldn't hurt to emulate them.

Okay, so you say a Soldier isn't happy unless he's complaining. Well, sooner or later you've got to stop complaining and get to work.

And just remember, no matter how bad you might think the post is, how bad you might think your roommate is, no matter how bad the first sergeant or the commander is, the great thing about the military is that sooner or later either you'll leave or the other guy will.

That's the good news. The bad news is if you're a professional whiner, it won't get any better.

Situations are what we make of them.

We are what we is and only a positive outlook on life is going to improve our lot.

CGSOC to be offered on interactive television

The Command and General Staff Officer Course (CGSOC) phases I and III will be offered beginning in October. The course will be presented by instructors of the 108th Division and from other locations over the T-NET interactive television systems.

All majors and above in the active duty military, Reserve components and the National Guard are eligible.

Captains in the active duty military and Reserve components are eligible if they are Combined Arms Services Staff School (CAS3) graduates. Chaplains and Army medical and Judge Advocated General officers are not required to be graduates of the CAS3 Course.

This is the same course offered in residence at Fort Leavenworth, Kan.

For more information, call Lt. Col Mike Smajd at 291-2264 by leaving a message.

BOSS recycles aluminum cans

The Fort Benning Better Opportunities for Single Soldiers (BOSS) program wants aluminum cans for recycling. Currently, only one Soldier is collecting cans for the entire installation and help is needed.

If your office or barracks have cans ready for pick up or needs blue recycle containers, call Spc. Jonathan Winn at 544-5000 or Sgt. Maj. Michael Pflanz at 545-3485 for more information.

Deadline set for Legal Education Program

The Office of Judge Advocate General is now accepting applications for the Army Funded Legal Education Program.

Under this program, the Army will send up to 15 active duty commissioned Soldiers to law school at government expense.

Selected officers will attend law school beginning in the fall of 1998 and will remain on active duty while attending law school.

This program is open to commissioned officers in the ranks of second lieutenant through captain. Applicants must have at least two but not more than six years of active duty service at the time the legal training begins.

Eligible officers interested in applying should immediately register for the summer or fall offering of the Law School Admission Test. Applicants must send their request by Nov. 1 through the Office of the Judge Advocate General, Attn: DAJA-PT, Washington, DC 20310-2200. Submission of the applications well in advance is advised.

For more information, contact Capt. Malcolm Schaefer at 545-1590.

Warehouse: Enables rapid deployment

"All those extra things they (Soldiers) need, above what they are given at initial entry, we're going to put in this warehouse," Ellis said.

Richard McDonald, chief of CIF, thinks this will end a lot of problems experienced in the past.

"This is ideal," McDonald said. "You can put all this stuff in one building and not have to run all over the place to get it. When they built this, they got their money's worth."

McDonald referred back to the days of Operation Desert Shield and Storm when CIF employees were traveling on and off post to get items because the holding facilities were so spread out.

The warehouse has 52,000 square feet of space and is equipped to store and issue items to Soldiers. It was designed with the help of McDonald, said Brandon C. Cockrell, a post industrial engineer who also worked on the building.

"We needed them (CIF) to tell us what they needed for the building," Cockrell said. The warehouse, which takes the place of three other post storage facilities, also has a more than 20,000 square foot staging area for vehicles behind the warehouse. The total cost was $4.95 million dollars.

"As a power projection platform," Ellis said, "we can now put troops in Haiti, Rwanda or Bosnia. Fort Benning now has stocks available and easily accessible in this warehouse to prepare people to go wherever they are needed."

The warehouse is just the beginning for Fort Benning.

More construction of power projection facilities are on the way, according to Ellis.

Other additions include the Ochilli Railhead on the east edge of post, ammunition "igloos" placed at strategically located spots on post and more parking space and the hardening of the surface at Lawson Army Airfield. All work should be done by the year 2000, Ellis said.

Construction of the new railhead stems from problems in the existing track, Ellis said. The current track has a curve in it and it makes it difficult, if not impossible, to load onto railcars, he said.

"This will allow us to move troops in a very short period of time by rail to some seaport," Ellis said.

When units deploy, another necessity needed in a short period of time is ammunition.

Eleven storage "igloos" are planned and they will contain pre-configured palettes that can be picked up and loaded, Ellis said. The airfield itself will, if all goes as planned, undergo some changes also.

The plan is to have more space for the aircraft to park and hardening of some of the existing asphalt, Ellis said.

The post's newest projects don't come without a price tag. In this case, it's a costly one.

"The total cost all of these projects, including the warehouse, is around $28 million," Ellis said. "The money is programmed as part of the Defense Department's yearly budget."

Although Fort Benning is not footing the bill of the projects, the outcome makes the post more prepared.

"Fort Benning is well on its way to becoming a power projection platform installation," Ellis said. "It's now part of our mission."

Silver Wings: Jump for fun

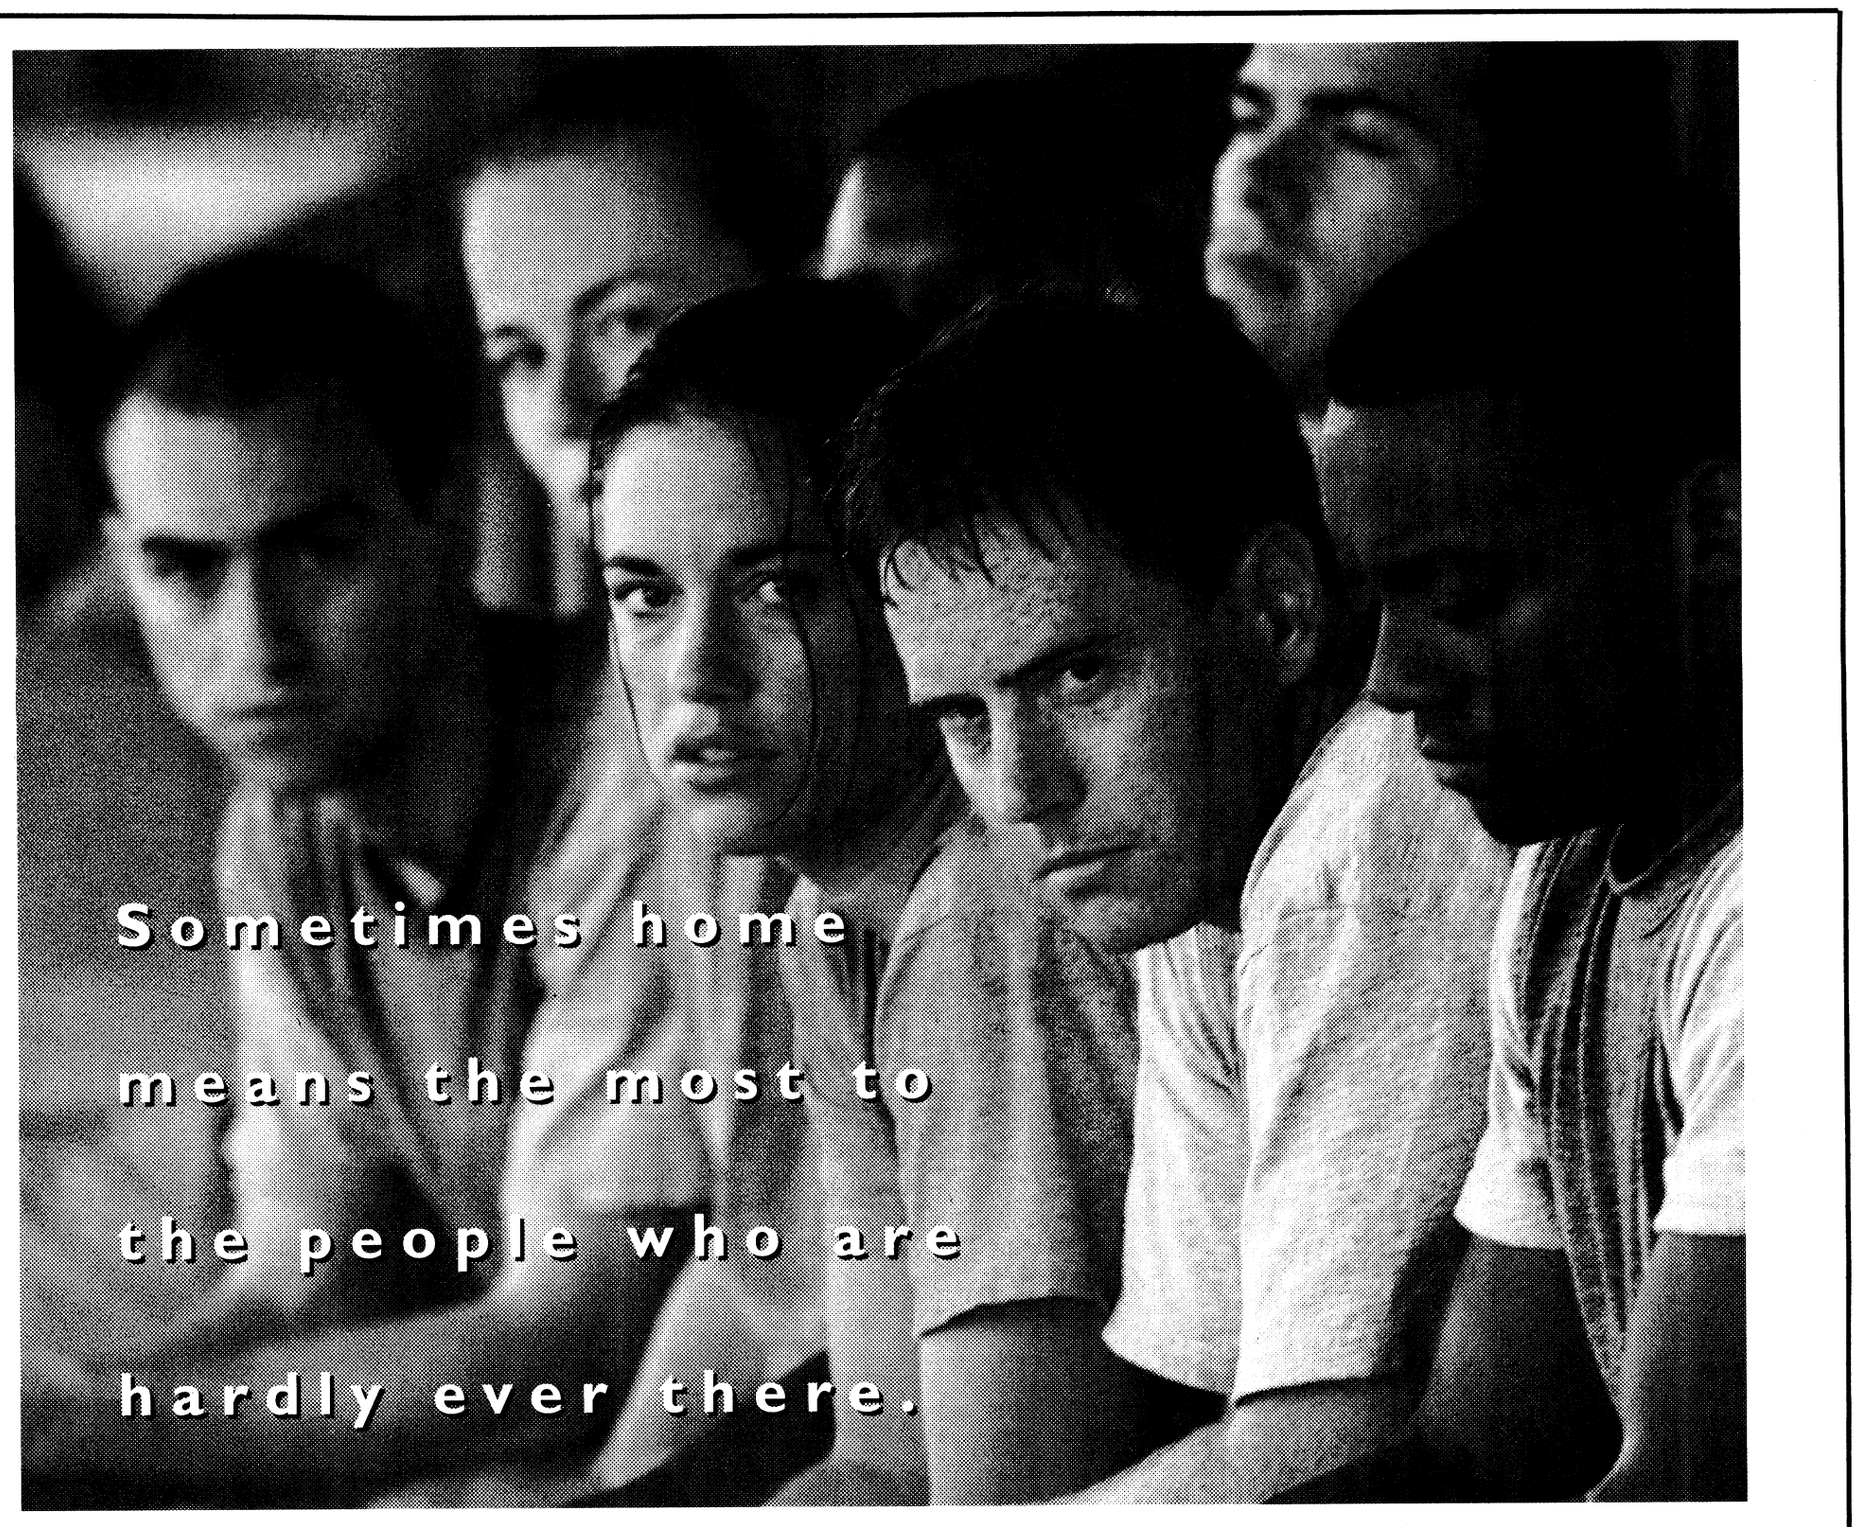
every weekend, a demanding schedule for Soldiers whose membership on the team is considered an additional duty. Though this schedule can be a drain on family and personal time, according to Staff Sgt. Tommy Sullivan, a "black hat" instructor at the Airborne School, team members find a way to make it work. Sullivan said his family loves to watch skydiving and goes to every exhibition they can.

"We're out there doing good things for the community," Sullivan said. "And when you're out there doing that, then your family supports you."



The support of family members, team members and the companies to which the Soldiers of the Silver Wings are assigned is what keeps this team flying, Sullivan said.

"(The Silver Wings) is a great organization," he said. "But on the other hand, you've got to have a supporting organization like the 'black hats' in the company. They make up the backbone of it because they're the ones who pull the weight while you're gone."

One of the team's most recent trips involved jumping into a community in Tuskegee, Ala., that is battling drug use. When the team hit the ground, they gathered their parachutes, saluted their team leader, then spoke to the audience of children and young adults about drug abuse. Meeting and speaking to these and other children is one of the highlights of the Silver Wings experience.

"The kids at the schools love to see us jump," Elliott said. "They think that's the greatest thing since ice cream."

The next stop for the Silver Wings is the Boy Scout Jamboree at Fort A.P. Hill, Va. They will be jumping again in Georgia Aug. 31 at Clark University Stadium in Atlanta.

Gulf veterans may soon find out if they were exposed to low levels of nerve agents

Army News Service

Some Gulf War veterans currently serving under their commands may soon be receiving a letter explaining the Khamisiyah incident of March 10, 1991, and whether or not they may have been exposed to low levels of chemical nerve agents.

July 24, Dr. Bernard D. Rostker, special assistant for Gulf War illnesses, provided the national news media with an update on the March 10, 1991, destruction of 122-mm chemical rockets at the ammunition storage point in Khamisiyah, Iraq.

Preliminary results indicate no units were inside the area where death or incapacitation would occur, but some U.S. forces may have been exposed to extremely low levels of the nerve agents sarin and cyclosarin during the period from March 10 to 13, 1991. However, analysis shows the exposure levels would have been too low to activate chemical alarms or to cause any symptoms at the time.

Rostker announced that letters notifying some Soldiers of the results would be mailed immediately following the press conference. Potentially affected Soldiers will receive one of two letters which are identical except for one area.

One letter indicates the service member's unit was located in an area in which exposure to a very low concentration of chemical agent could have occurred. The second letter will be sent to service members previously contacted by Rostker and told they may have been exposed because of their unit's location, but will now be told their unit was not located where they would have been exposed.

Soldiers with health concerns possibly related to their service in the Gulf War are encouraged to enroll in the Department of Defense (DoD) comprehensive clinical evaluation program by calling (800) 796-9699.

Khamisiyah background

After the 1991 Gulf War, American troops destroyed a large munitions depot in southern Iraq at a place known as Khamisiyah. It was later learned that some Iraqi rockets stored at the depot contained a mixture of the chemical nerve agents sarin and cyclosarin.

During the demolition operations, and indeed, throughout the entire period of U.S. occupation at Khamisiyah, there were no reports of anyone experiencing symptoms consistent with exposure to a chemical agent.

During the last year, DoD and CIA modelers and analysts have worked to determine the nature of the chemical exposure and which troops may have been involved. Preliminary results make it possible that some troops were exposed to extremely low levels of the nerve agents sarin and cyclosarin, but no one was in an area where death or incapacitation would occur. These levels are well below the levels that cause noticeable health effects and that are detectable by chemical agent detection equipment.

Although little is known about long-term effects for a brief, low-level exposure to nerve agents, the current medical evidence indicated long-term health effects are unlikely. Because the scientific evidence is limited, the Department of Defense and the Department of Veterans Affairs are committed to gaining a better understanding of the potential health effects of brief, low nerve agent exposure and they have funded several projects to learn more.

Martin Army Community Hospital evaluates Gulf War veterans.

"The hospital goal is diagnosis," said 2nd Lt. Carlos Corredor, Preventive Medicine.

A secondary goal is that immediate treatment be initiated, but the long term treatment is performed by the veteran's primary care provider, Corredor said.

Thirdly, the collected data is forwarded to Falls Church, Va., where an epidemiologist looks for patterns of disease.

DoD standardizes in-service tuition aid

By Paul Stone
American Forces Press Service

WASHINGTON — All service members will be entitled to equal, uniform tuition assistance benefits under a new Department of Defense (DoD) policy.

The policy, approved in late May, is slated to go into effect in October 1998. Under it, all services will pay 75 percent of the cost of tuition for off-duty college and university courses up to a maximum of $187.50 per semester hour. Thus, for a typical three-semester-hour course that hits the $187.50 per hour limit, the military would pay $562.50 and the individual $187.50.

Implementation was delayed to give the services time to budget for the mandated funding levels. The policy, established by Fred Pang, assistant secretary of defense for force management, also includes a $3,500 per year tuition assistance cap per service member. Costs for high school equivalency programs will continue to be fully funded.

Each service currently uses its own formula for providing tuition assistance, according to Otto J. Thomas, DoD's chief of continuing education. In addition to deciding how much they pay, the services establish their own per-course and per-year limits and overseas funding rates, he said. Installation commanders in some cases can redirect tuition assistance funds to other local programs.

Thomas said the differences between services' benefits could vary by up to $300 per course.

"If four service members from the different branches were sitting in the same college classroom, it's very likely they all would have paid a different amount out of their pockets under the current system," he said. "This has created problems as the services have become more joint in their missions — even collocating."

Service members began comparing notes and voiced concerns about the unequal funding, he said. The discrepancies came to the forefront during several studies in the past few years, including a 1994 study by the Defense Science Board Task Force on Quality of Life. The study, as well as congressional interest in the issue, spurred the DoD effort to the current policy change.

Thomas said not everyone will gain under new policy — Air Force tuition benefits generally have been more liberal than other services', so the uniform payment policy may raise some airmen's expenses slightly. He emphasized a great deal of research went into reaching agreement on the new policy and said he believes most courses service members take will fall within the funding limits.

About 300,000 service members take advantage of post-secondary courses each year.

Airborne School trains the standard

By Staff Sgt. Richard Lambert
372nd Public Affairs Detachment

"Snap, snap, snap," as the airborne trainees fasten their D-rings to the jumptower lines, sounding like 100 seatbelts rhythmically snapping into place. It was "tower week," the second week of the U.S. Army Airborne School's training at Fort Benning.

"Five, four, three, two, one, OK ..." the trainees shouted the countdown for checking their equipment. The Soldiers looked like puppets hanging from rubber bands as they practiced mass exits from the mock airplane. Exiting the airplane is one of the goals of tower week. Another skill trainees practiced during tower week was activating their reserve chutes in the event of a partial malfunction.

The "rope man" dragged the harnesses back to the jumptower after every jump, looking like Soldiers trying to fly a kite on a windy day. The sweat of the harness pullers mixed with the wet, red Georgia clay.

"Do not 'hop' out of the door, 'walk' out of the door," barked Sgt. 1st Class Ricky Sparks, as he hustled the Soldiers out of the tower.

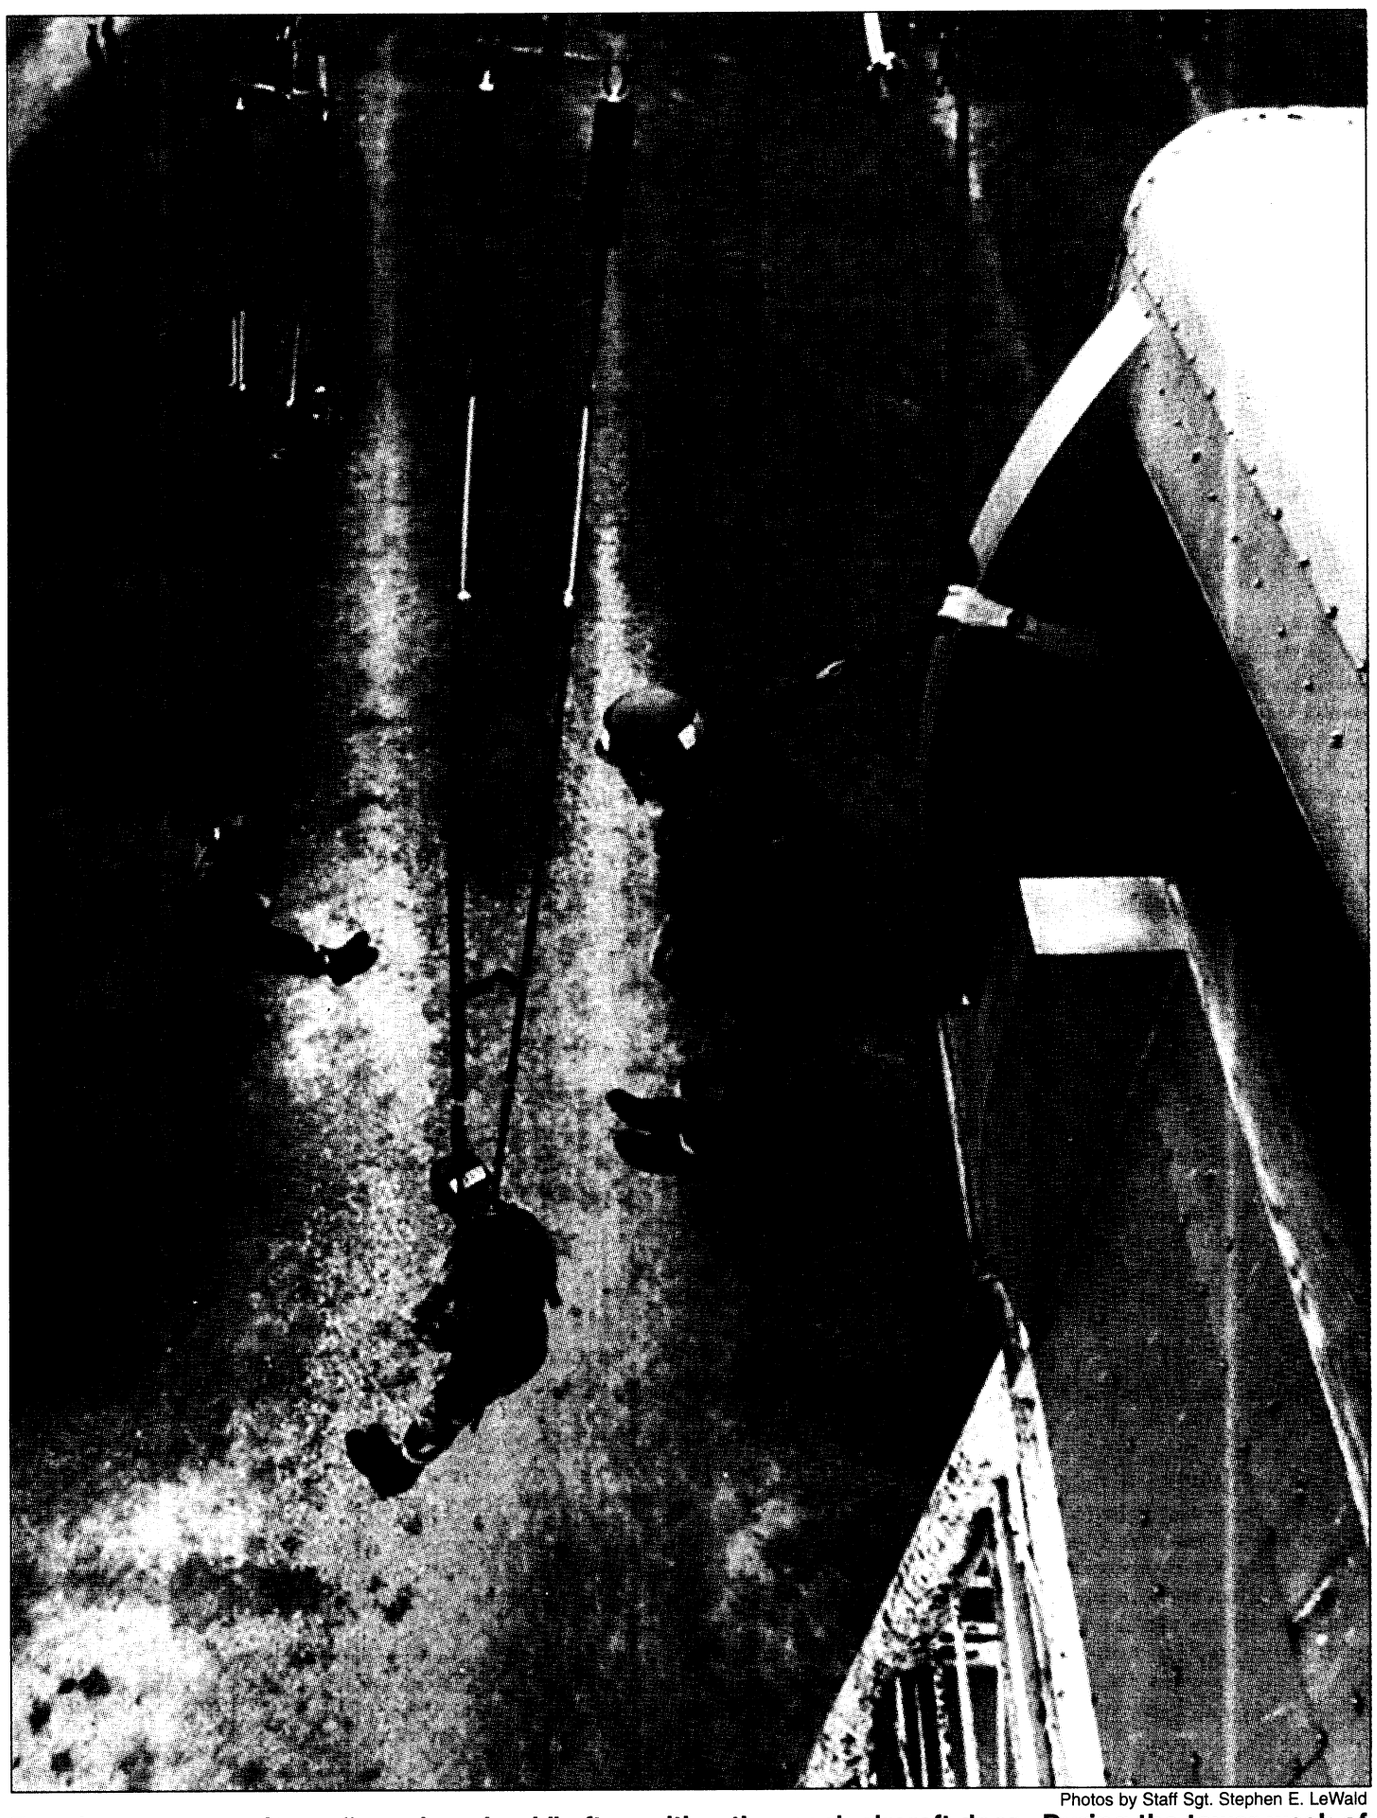
"It is a rush coming out of the tower. It is not as scary as you think, and I definitely feel safe with the harness on," said Reserve Officer Training Corps Cadet Brandon Bloodworth, Company C, Class 34-97.

"The training is extremely professional," he said.

"It is like bouncing around on a pogo stick," said Cadet Andrew Caine.

But tower week is not fun for all trainees.

"A student got so scared that you could see the fingernail marks on the side of the door," said instructor Sgt. Larynilsa Cruz, Company C, 1st Bn. (Airborne), 507th Inf., 11th Inf. Regt.



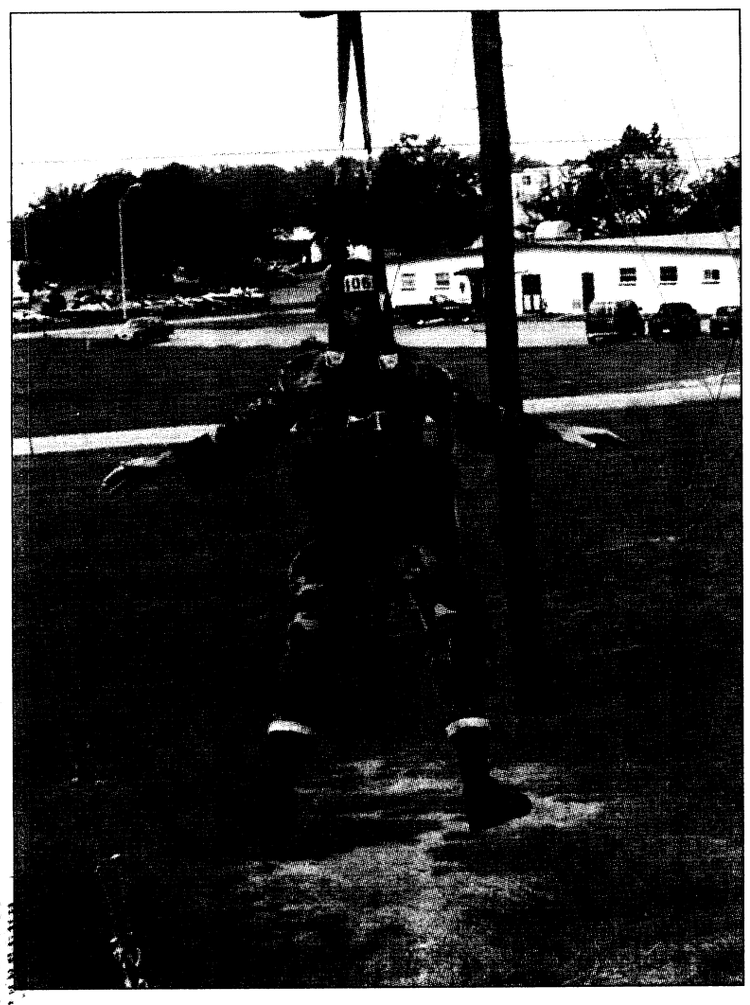
"Jumping for the first time is the most difficult, but it is just (like an amusement park) ride after that," she said. It is important to give trainees positive reinforcement, the instructor said.

"They (the trainees) need to hear in their critiques that they are good. You cannot just tell the whole group, you have to tell them individually," Cruz said.

"The worst thing that ever happens at the jumptowers was a riser on the harness knocking off a kevlar helmet," she said.

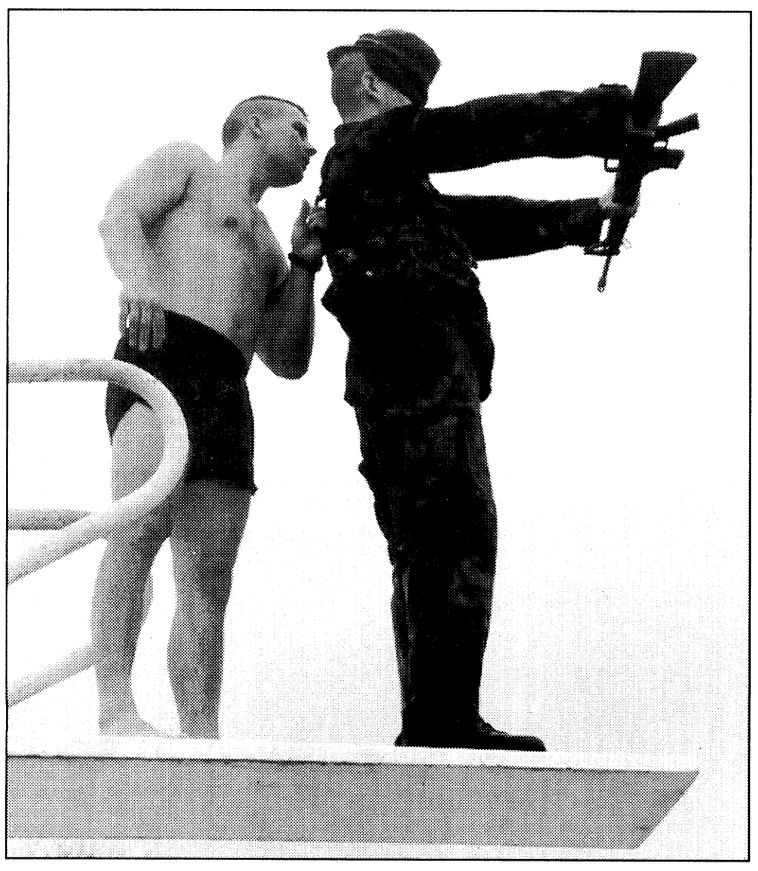
"The attrition rate is never the same," said Sgt. 1st Class Jonathan Doughman, branch chief of the tower branch. "Sometimes 300 out of 327 Soldiers will pass, and other times, only 60 percent will complete the course."

After completing tower week, the remaining trainees will be one step away from "jump week," when they will be one long step out of an airplane from earning their wings.



Photos by Staff Sgt. Stephen E. LeWald

Four jumpers experience "opening shock" after exiting the mock aircraft door. During the tower week of training, Soldiers learn to mass exit through the doors.



With all straps connected and pre-checks done, the airborne students are ready to jump from the tower.

After exiting the mock door, an airborne student positions himself to be caught by other students on the ground waiting for the Soldier's descent.

Sgt. Larynilsa Cruz (center), an instructor with Company C., 1st Battalion (Airborne), 507th Infantry, 11th Inf. Regiment, shows Soldiers the proper way to deploy their reserve parachute during the tower week of Airborne School training.

A Soldier gets the last bit of information before walking off the diving board at Carey Pool. This is part of the Ranger Indoctrination Program and is done to see how well the Soldiers handle themselves under pressure. All enlisted Soldiers go through the program before entering the 75th Ranger Regiment. The regiment has three battalions located inside the United States. The 1st Battalion is stationed at Fort Lewis, Wash; 2nd Bn., is located at Hunter Army Airfield, Ga.; and 3rd Bn. is at Fort Benning.

Soldiers get their feet wet during initial training

By Pfc. Todd L. Edwards
372nd Mobile Public Affairs

Sunlight warmed the air and the day gradually became hot and uncomfortable. Long blue busses plowed through the thick morning air as they moved toward Carey Pool on Main Post. The trainees disembarked in a hurry and formed up for their briefing.

"All right guys, get in there and get wet," an instructor barked, causing the Soldiers to double time into the shower room to soak themselves.

That scene was part of ranger training. The ranger aspirants, wearing their battle dress uniforms unbloused and buttoned up to the neck with no rank, stood in formation waiting to begin.

All ranger trainees are considered the same, said Sgt. 1st Class Ligmond D. Williams, an instructor at the Ranger School.

"E-4s and up are able to go, and waivers are available for lower-ranking trainees, but no trainee is allowed to pull rank on another trainee," Williams said.

The trainees moved toward a diving board and began strapping on load-bearing equipment and drawing M-16s.

For those Soldiers, Zero Week, a time of testing and physical challenges, was in its second day, and the three phases of the swimming test were underway.

"Zero Week is like a freebie for them," Williams said, framed by a backdrop of trainees struggling through the water under the weight of their gear.

To begin their ordeal, the trainees got into the water and then began to swim around the outer edge of the pool. The rating system was very simple, those who could not swim 15 meters while keeping all of their equipment on, failed. More than one M-16 was on the bottom of the pool around the 16-meter mark.

Those who can meet the 15-meter standard pass, but are considered weak swimmers unless they can swim 50 meters, at which point they are swimmers.

Past that, another mark at 75 meters denoted strong swimmers. Few of the trainees were strong swimmers.

The second station of the swim test was going into the water blindfolded and then finding the edge of the pool.

At the opposite end of the pool, an instructor was giving a trainee verbal instructions on his swimming technique; the trainee's face set in a hard stare while he stood at parade rest in chest-deep water.

Safety personnel float at strategic locations in the pool. Safety is a big factor in all phases of ranger training, said Staff Sgt. Mark W. Messerschmitt, an instructor at the U.S. Army Ranger School.

The last section of the swim test is one in which trainees jump into the deepest section of the pool and take off their gear at the bottom. As they break the surface of the water, gasping and choking, they are exhorted onward by their instructors.

Those who fail the tests will get another chance the following Monday, if they fail that, they are not allowed to go on with training and are sent back to their station, Messerschmitt said. Failure is not easy for one who wants to become a ranger, he said.

"It's definitely not something you want, to come down here and fail," Messerschmitt said. "Making it through the course says something about you, not making it says something about you, too."

The aversion to failure and the subsequent drive for success pushes the ranger trainee to his outer physical and mental limits, said Williams. However, the mental and emotional stresses are the most difficult to overcome, he said.

An unrelenting pace is set for the trainees, combining physical trials and exhaustion with the constant need for the trainee to dedicate himself to his instruction, Messerschmitt said.

A series of road marches were in store for the trainees on the following day; those would also help the training cadre assess the Soldiers' ability to succeed in the ranger course, said Williams.

The training and testing conducted during Zero Week does not count toward the training time at Fort Benning, which is 21 days long, not taking into account the Airborne School, which all ranger trainees must attend, said Messerschmitt.

With the completion of their swim test, the trainees moved off to the formation area against a backdrop of other groups of fresh-faced Soldiers beginning their swim test.

1st Lt. Scott P. Rollston
498 Med. Co. (Air Ambulance)

Members of the 498th Medical Company (Air Ambulance), 36th Engineer Group (Combat), report more than 1,000 flight hours supporting the sustaining force operations in the Balkans.

Major Tracy Wyatt, commander, 498th, said things are still going well.

"We're still on track, operating safely and focusing on bringing every Soldier home," Wyatt said.

"In addition to rigorous day-to-day operations, the unit is preparing for the most intensive inspection program the aviation system has to offer. An 11-person group, known as the Aviation Operations Readiness Safety and Standardization Evaluation Team, will take four days to look at every aspect of the company's procedures safety, training, leadership and equipment. They've done an outstanding job so far. Through an exhausting week of inspections and working toward completing the mission, there's no reason why the Soldiers shouldn't 'fly' through this requirement."

The unit was called upon during a recent gunshot wound to a pilot. Those taking part in the operation were Chief Warrant Officer 2, Ed Baker, Chief Warrant Officer 2 Robert Negron, Staff Sgt. Kenneth Hamilton and Staff Sgt. Joe Cevasco.

One Soldier also joined the unit recently — Staff Sgt. James Hamilton came aboard from Fort Benning's Directorate of Operations and Training Aviation Division.

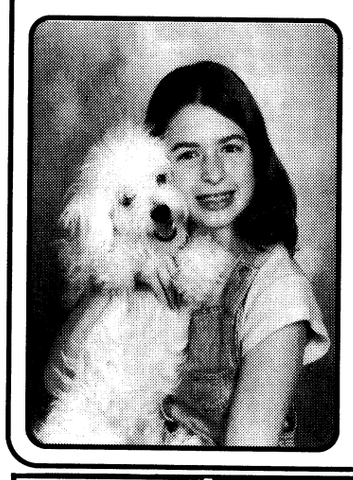
On a lighter note, Soldiers from the 498th are participating in a basketball tournament. This week's game is between the Guardian Base and Tuzula City.

The Forward Support Team (FST) in Hungary was given an additional mission tasking. Newly opened is the Tabor Flava Gunnery Range, now covered by our medical evacuation (medevac) crews. Due to the location of this Forward Support Team, the mission has been relatively nonexistent until now.

The team recently flew it's first actual medevac mission. It was the first mission for this location since June 1996. Remembering that hostilities may arise anywhere, especially in historically quiet locales, this team used its time training.

"FST2 (located in Croatia) is in the 'Box;' they receive a lot of missions, some transferred from the Blue Factory Base and some called in to them," Wyatt said. "When they're not flying evacuations or training flights, they are spending their time in the gym and smoking cigars on the makeshift patios by their tents. They're doing great, I just spent two days up there with them."

The Family Support Group will be traveling to Callaway Gardens Aug. 9 for a day of fun and relaxation by the beach. In order to facilitate transportation, the Family Support Group coordinator, Cackie Howe, looks forward to hearing from all of the family members desiring to participate.



Family members should look for the unit newsletter in their mailboxes and be sure to call the Rear Detachment if anything is needed.

Also back on post, Maj. Greg Frings is preparing to redeploy the 832nd Medical Company back to Wisconsin because of limits to National Guard units being on active duty.

New ICU opens, improves work conditions at Martin Army

By Susie H. Kim
Editorial assistant

The Martin Army Community Hospital Intensive Care Unit (ICU) officially opened July 25.

"ICU, the heartbeat of the hospital, opens today to take us to the next century of health care," said Col. Everett W. Newcomb III, commander, MACH.

Janet Newman, ICU nurse, said ICU is an important contributor to health-care. ICU provides care for patients who require a higher degree of nursing supervision. Examples include: a patient who has undergone surgery, a patient who is under medication to reduce high blood pressure and patients who have complications.

The patients who are admitted to the ICU are diverse, according to Newman. Patients can range from 18-year-old trainees to retiree and active duty military family members.

"It used to be active duty personnel that were mostly admitted, but not anymore," Newman said.

The staff consists of 14 ICU nurses, 14 telemetry nurses and doctors who are provided on a rotation basis. Telemetry is a step down from ICU. Although the telemetry patients require higher levels of nursing supervision than others, it is to a lesser degree than patients in ICU.

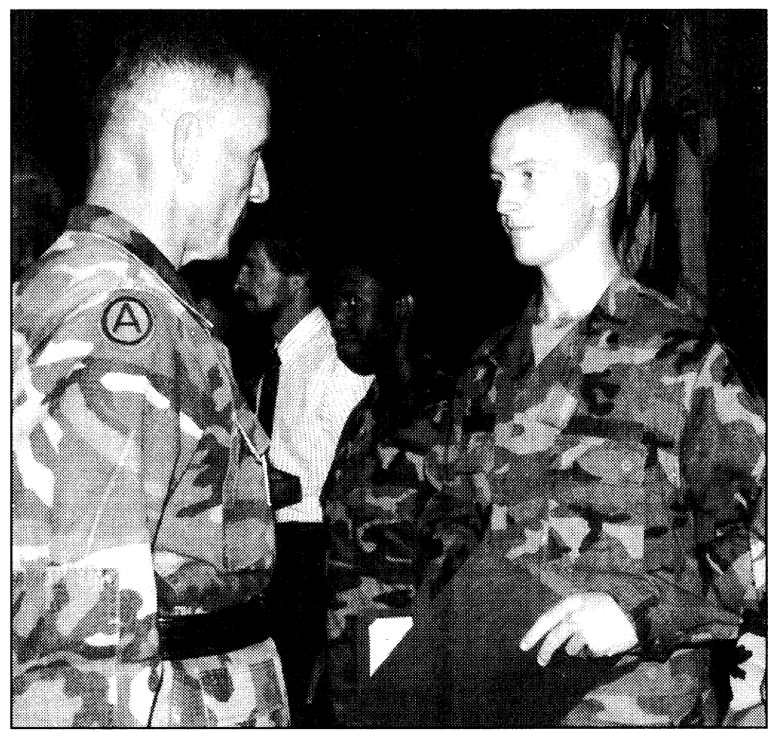
Newman said the new unit brings cohesion among the ICU medical staff team because ICU and telemetry are linked together to form a unit.

The unit holds up to seven ICU patients and four telemetry patients. Although that may seem like a very limited space, Newman said, in medical point of view, it's more than plenty.

The ICU medical unit team began the $300,000 project three years ago. In order for the idea to turn into reality, the funding had to be approved by the U.S. Army Medical Board. The plan was approved for fiscal 1995 and continued until it was completed in July.

The contractors, Bill Henderson and the Army Corps of Engineers completed the project in three and half months. The team completely demolished the old wing and started remodeling with bare concrete. Henderson and the Army Corps of Engineers brought the ward up to safety regulations by installing a sprinkler system and updating electrical and mechanical systems. The ICU staff decorated the unit when the remodeling was done.

Newman reported that the biggest difference between the old unit and the new one is the medical equipment. The equipment is user friendly, convenient and all attached to one machine, making it easier to monitor a patient's condition. The old unit had three to five screens per patient used to monitor the patients' conditions but the single attachments provide all the medical information in one screen.



Another difference is the breakaway doors. Breakaway doors are used during emergency situations and provide faster accessibility to patients.

Beside the medical equipment, other improvements have brightened the unit's appearance. According to Newman, lights shine brighter, room looks cozier, and the windows are larger.

Discourse program arrives at schools

By Jacqué Hill
Special to the Bayonet©

Beginning this year, the Fort Benning Schools will have something for students to get excited about.

The Discourse Program, a technology-based program that facilitates interaction between teachers and students, made its debut on the installation last year at Loyd Elementary School. Officials are planning to use the program at the rest of Fort Benning's schools by late September or early October.

Student-teacher interaction will be enhanced by the program, according to Jerry Christy, director of technology for Fort Benning Schools, by providing immediate feedback about students' comprehension of and creativity with subject matter.

"When a teacher asks a question, eight, nine, maybe even 10 hands go up," he said. "This means not all students are participating, which leaves a lot of untapped thought in the classrooms."

With the Discourse Program, he explained, each student will have a keyboard connected to a single classroom monitor that is used by the teacher. When the teacher presents a question or idea to the class, the students can type their answers or thoughts into their keyboards. This student-generated information is fed into the teacher's monitor so he or she can immediately know the students' responses.

By using this information, the teacher will automatically know "who's getting the idea, who's on track and who needs help," Christy said.

Kathy Einhorn director of curriculum, Fort Benning Schools, is excited about the program.

"I believe the real advantage is for students who are normally shy and aren't risk takers, the ones who don't want to give answers orally in class," she said. "This program is a wonderful solution for them because they can type their answers in, and a teacher can choose to display an individual answer anonymously to help boost a student's confidence level when his or her answer is correct."

With this program, the students can work at their own paces. If a teacher were to input an entire lesson plan into the computer, each student could cover the lesson at a rate appropriate for him or her, according to Christy. The teacher will then know by checking his or her monitor how well each student is grasping the concepts, and is in turn able to give extra attention and explanation to students who need it. Einhorn explained this concept.

"A teacher is able to further help those students who need special attention because the teacher is made aware of these needs by the monitor's information.

"The program offers an outlet to learning-disabled or at-risk students who are unwilling to give answers in class because the teachers can more easily direct them to correct answers or more readily let them know their answers are correct."

Christy pointed out that teachers will not be attached to their monitors, though. The Discourse Program allows them to move about the classrooms freely, checking the monitors' information occasionally to gather insight into the students' learning. Through this process, teachers are made aware of what lessons worked and which ones need more clarification, he said.

"The teacher has a real advantage with this program," Christy said. "He or she can answer: What lessons were successful? What do I need to reteach?"

Teachers can use the program to interface videos or cd roms, according to Christy.

"They can use and teach anything normally taught in classrooms," he said.

"It's cutting-edge technology in the education atmosphere.

"The program is not centered around the technology, though; it's centered around the interaction it provides between teachers and students."

Students today are much more aware of technology than students 20 years ago, so this program interests them, Christy said.

"Students are excited about this type of learning," he said. "It's not all text information; it's computers and videos, things they enjoy."

MILITARY POLICE

COPS serve community in friendlier, more accessible way

By Jacqué Hill
Special to the Bayonet©

Fort Benning's Military Police are more community oriented than they have been in the past. That's because of COPS, the Community-Oriented Police Squad.

COPS are based out of the Military Police Station and they work the community beat throughout the housing areas on post. Most often, these officers patrol on bicycles, making them more accessible to local residents than police in patrol cars.

From 4 p.m. to 8 a.m. everyday, these officers oversee the safety of every housing area. They do this by enforcing regulations, promoting safety, teaching children about their surroundings and serving in a public relations capacity, according to Staff Sgt. Cris Cox, COPS Platoon Sergeant.

"Some of the things we do in the community include serving as crossing guards at intersections in school zones, running radars in the housing areas to ensure community compliance with the posted speed limits and talking to kids," Cox said. "We make sure kids know how to lock up their bikes and look both ways before crossing a street and we tell them not to talk to strangers, things of that nature.

"We make people aware of what's going on at Fort Benning."

Cox believes COPS are viewed, especially by children, as more community oriented and less intimidating than other officers for several reasons.

"Being on bikes, it's easier for community members to stop us and ask questions," he said. "We get to know people better.

"Some kids even ride their bikes along with us, so I believe they see us as more community friendly than officers in patrol cars who are less accessible."

Because drivers need to slow down in school zones, the work COPS do in the community is more recognizable with school starting. People should be aware of the posted speed limits and obey them, Cox said, and COPS will ensure this happens.

"The speed limit in all housing areas and school zones is 15 mph, and that might be too fast," he said. "A lot of kids cut between cars, so housing occupants and all drivers need to be extra careful, especially at this time of year."

Depending on the amount of MP personnel and the weather, especially the heat, COPS may begin patrolling in the housing areas 24 hours a day soon after the school year begins, Cox said.

Vaccinating pets prevents risk of rabies

Veterinary Services

A rabid, wild gray fox was trapped on a Fort Benning playground in late June.

Prevention is the key in controlling rabies, especially in domestic animals. It is regulation on Fort Benning, in Columbus and Phenix City and the surrounding areas for dogs and cats to be vaccinated against rabies at 12 weeks of age. Any person bitten by an animal, whether it is a pet, domestic stray or wildlife, should be seen by a physician and the circumstances surrounding the incident will determine whether preventive rabies treatment is necessary.

In most cases, if the animal involved is a pet, the animal is quarantined for 10 days either at home or in a facility for observation and further action is based on observation.

Rabies is a natural viral disease occurring throughout the western hemisphere and found mainly in bats, dogs, foxes, skunks and raccoons (although all mammals, including man, are susceptible).

The virus is transmitted through the saliva of an infected animal, usually by means of a bite or, rarely, by aerosol in the lab or in heavily bat-infested caves.

In 1996, according to the Columbus and Russell County, Ala., health departments, seven wild animals tested by the counties were positive for rabies (five raccoons and two bats). In 1995-96, three people in the United States died from rabies exposure (one in Alabama, one in Montana and one in Kentucky).

Rabid animals of all species exhibit typical signs, with minor variations, starting with behavioral changes (over one to three days) that may be difficult to distinguish from minor injury or illness such as photophobia (fear of light) or being more easily startled than usual.

The next stage can take two different paths — "furious" rabies or "dumb" (paralytic) rabies.

A better-known example of furious rabies is the movie Cujo: the animal becomes irrational and viciously aggressive. Dogs with this form of rabies will roam, often biting any object and swallowing foreign objects, such as sticks and stones. Dogs rarely live 10 days once signs set in.

Dumb rabies is characterized by paralysis of the throat and jaw muscles, which causes severe salivation and inability to swallow. These animals are not vicious and often die within a few hours of symptoms becoming apparent.

Diagnosis in the clinic is difficult as the rabies symptoms often mimic symptoms of other disease or illness. For example, the inability to swallow may be caused by obstruction in the throat, and aggressive behavior may be related to a painful injury or territorial disputes. The only definitive diagnosis is a laboratory test of brain tissue.

Rabies is a preventable disease when precautions are used. Vaccinating pets, reporting abnormal behavior in wild animals, not handling unfamiliar animals and seeking the advice of a physician when bitten can eliminate the possibility of contracting this fatal disease.

ask the judge

Office of the Staff Judge Advocate

Q. I recently applied for a credit card and the company said it needs to look at my credit report before it approves my loan. What is a credit report and what can I do to be sure it is accurate? Can credit repair agencies really help me improve my credit rating?

A. A credit report contains information about you — where you work, where you live and your bill-paying habits. It will list if you have filed for bankruptcy, if you have pending legal actions against you, total outstanding balances, payment histories, foreclosures, tax liens, garnishments and much more.

Companies called credit reporting agencies compile these reports and sell the reports to businesses, which use the reports to evaluate applications for credit, insurance and employment. It is important this information be accurate; if it's not, a business may deny your application based on the information in the report.

It is smart to review your credit report every several years, as well as prior to making a major purchase.

There are three major reporting agencies: Equifax, TransUnion and Experian (formerly TRW). Each agency gathers its own information, and therefore, it is necessary to ensure all three have correct information. If you are denied credit, insurance or employment based on the information in a report, then the report recipient must give you the name and address of the agency that supplied the information.

The Fair Credit Reporting Act requires the agency to give you a free copy of your credit report if you request a copy within 30 days of denial. If you have not been denied credit, then you may request a copy of your credit report for a small fee. However, if you are a resident of Georgia, a recent law allows you two free reports a year.

When contacting a credit agency, be sure to include the following information: your full name, birthdate, Social Security number, current address, former addresses of the last five years, a photocopy of driver's license showing current address, a photocopy of your Social Security card and they may also request a copy of a utility bill that links your name to your current address.

If you find an error in your credit report, then you have the right under the Fair Credit Reporting Act to dispute the information in the report. When the agency receives a dispute, they must research the disputed item.

If they can not verify a disputed item, then they must delete it. If the creditor stands by the disputed debt, you may request the credit agency put a statement of dispute in your report. This statement may be up to 100 words and will be sent to anyone requesting a report.

The agency is also required to update any information in your report. If the report states you are late paying a bill that you have since paid, it must show the payments are now current. If the agency sent out an erroneous report, they must send out a correction to anyone who checked your report in the past six months.

However, if the information is accurate, it may be difficult to remove. By law, a credit agency can keep negative information on a report for up to seven years and a bankruptcy for up to 10 years.

When registering a dispute, be sure to clearly identify the disputed item, explain why you are disputing it and request deletion or correction of the item. Be sure to state all the facts and include copies of any proof you may have to support your position, such as canceled checks.

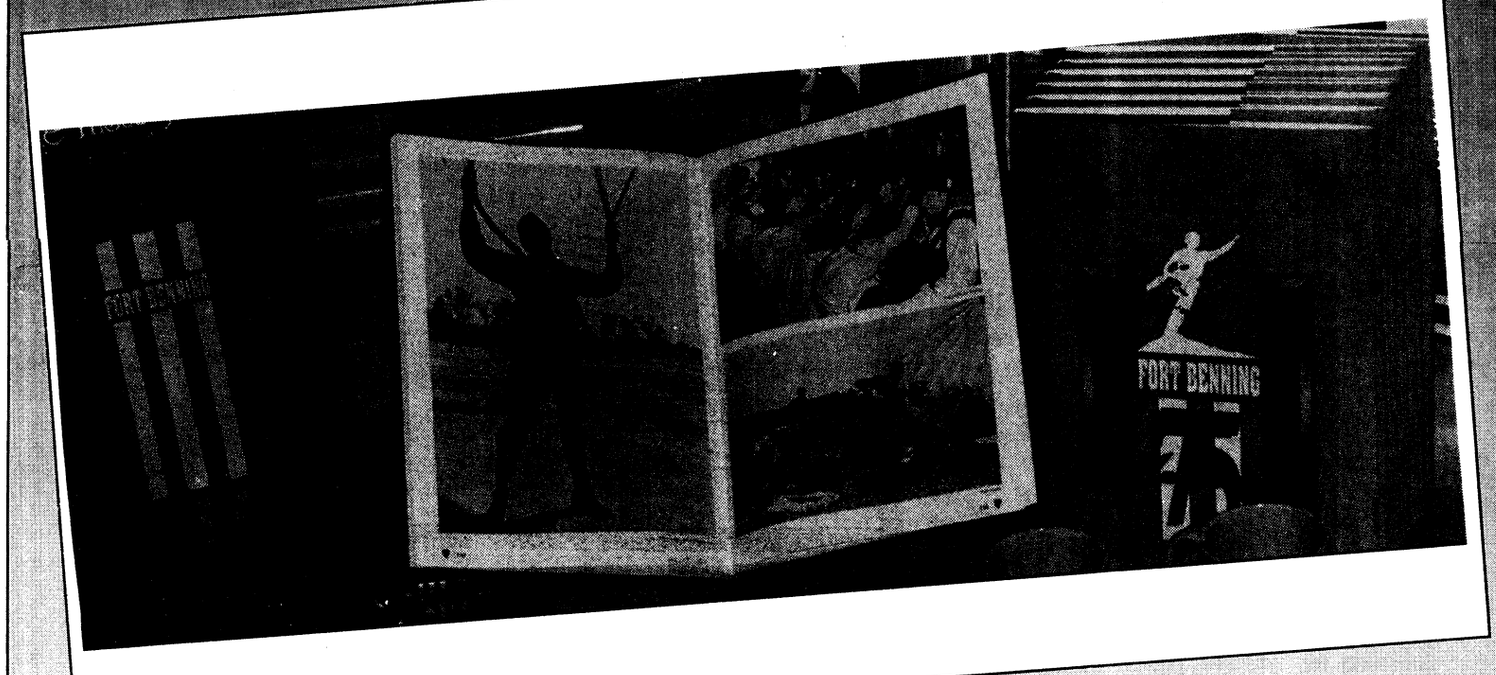
If you are denied credit based on having an insufficient credit file or no credit file and you have accounts with creditors that are not appearing on your file, you can then request the credit agencies add this information to your future reports. The agencies addresses and telephone numbers are:

•Equifax
P.O. Box 740241
Atlanta, GA 30374-0241
(800) 548-4548

•Trans Union
P.O. Box 390
Springfield, PA 19064
(800) 682-7654

•Experian
P.O. Box 2104
Allen, TX 75013-2104
(800) 643-3334

In addition, the advertisements you may have read guaranteeing the company can improve your credit are most likely filled with false promises. There is nothing those companies can do for you that you are not able to do yourself or with some help from the Legal Assistance Division, Office of the Staff Judge Advocate.



If you need more information or assistance in correcting your credit report, call the Legal Assistance Office at 545-3281.

Tricare members need to re-enroll

Humana Health Services

Tricare Prime members, other than active duty military members, who enrolled in the program last summer should watch their mailboxes for an important letter from Humana Military Healthcare Services.

Each year, Tricare Prime members must review their enrollment information and confirm their wish to continue Tricare Prime membership. In order to ensure continued Tricare Prime coverage, it is vitally important that Tricare Prime members respond immediately to the letter they will receive from Humana Military Healthcare Services.

Tricare Prime members will receive their re-enrollment notification letter approximately 45 days prior to the end of their first full year of Tricare Prime enrollment. Even if Tricare Prime members do not owe any enrollment fees or need to make any changes to their enrollment information, they must respond to this letter to ensure continued coverage for the coming year.

Members who do not respond will be disenrolled and health-care coverage will revert to the higher cost shares of the Tricare Standard or Extra plans.

Here's how the process works:

Members receive a notification letter approximately 45 days prior to the end of the current enrollment period. The letter offers the opportunity to update family information, as well as to pay any applicable annual or quarterly enrollment fees. A copy of the current enrollment information will be included with the letter. The letter will indicate the specific date that the response is due. Members are asked to verify their existing record and respond immediately using an enclosed envelope.

Upon receipt of the member's correspondence, Humana Military Healthcare Services will update records and process any applicable payments to ensure uninterrupted Tricare Prime coverage. Beneficiaries may continue to use their current unexpired Tricare Prime identification cards, as new cards will not be issued.

It is essential to the re-enrollment process that members keep their address record current with Humana Military Healthcare Services throughout the year.

For further information about this process, additional renewal sheets or assistance at any time throughout the year concerning Tricare Prime enrollment, call (800) 444-5445 or visit the local Tricare Service Center, Building 9204, Room 104 (next to Martin Army Community Hospital).

The Energy Policy Act of 1992 and Executive Order 12902 establish energy reduction goals for government agencies, as well as procedures to help activities reach these goals.

This executive order requires that energy consumption be reduced by 30 percent by the year 2005 on a building's square-footage basis compared to 1985 energy usage. To accomplish this goal, Congress has approved the development and use of Energy Savings Performance Contracting (ESPC).

By using the ESPC program, energy saving-type projects are not funded up front. The ESPC contractor designs funds, constructs, operates and maintains energy-related systems. The ESPC contractor receives reimbursement based on the saving merit of the project.

The Department of Army designated the Army Engineering and Support Center. Huntsville, Ala., has the Technical Center of Expertise for ESPC to develop and expand the program. In the performance of this mission, the Army Engineering and Support Center awarded two contracts in November 1995.

These are requirements-type contracts in which the contractor surveys installations and submits energy conservation proposals to the government. If acceptable, the proposals are incorporated into the ESPC contract by task order and implemented with the contractor and government sharing in the savings generated by the project.

Fort Benning began to take advantage of this program. One of the ESPC contractors has conducted a site visit to identify possible energy saving projects. This new flexibility in contracting will assist the contracting efforts in providing Fort Benning residents more efficient facilities.

EQUAL HOUSING OPPORTUNITY

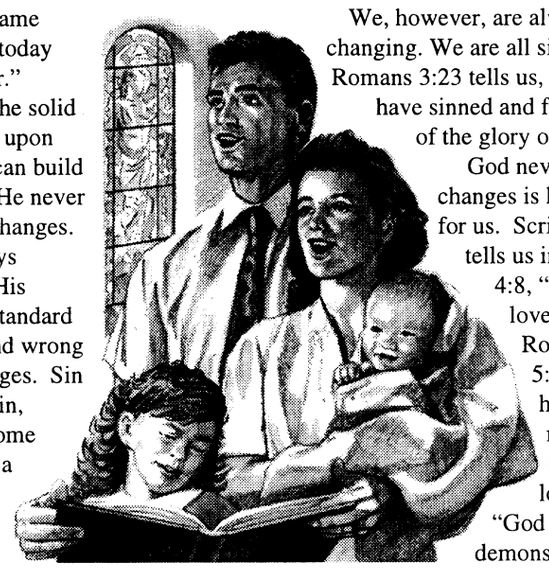
God's love remains constant in changing times

By Chaplain (Capt.) Steve Bounds
1st Battalion, 30th Infantry Regiment

Everything seems to be changing around us. Now that summer is here, many are packing to move on to other assignments. The moving vans are moving neighbors in and out.



One moving van took down my television cable leaving me with the minor inconvenience of watching only local channels for a couple of days. It was a small price to pay since I now have a wonderful young family living in the other half of my duplex.

I attended a Hail and Farewell for all of the chaplains and chaplain assistants on Fort Benning a few weeks ago. As I looked around the room, I realized that by the end of the summer, only one other chaplain will have been here as long as I. So now I am the old timer. I hate to think of myself as old anything.

These times bring sadness, as we watch close friends we've learned to love move away. They also give us opportunities to develop new relationships. Just remember that a stranger is a friend you haven't met. We will eventually move on ourselves to new communities and maybe to new jobs or careers.

Throughout all this change, we can trust in the one who never changes. Jesus told us in his word, "I am the same yesterday, today and forever."

God is the solid foundation upon which we can build our lives. He never moves or changes. He is always constant. His righteous standard for right and wrong never changes. Sin is always sin, although some may call it a mistake or an alternate lifestyle.

We, however, are always changing. We are all sinners. Romans 3:23 tells us, "For all have sinned and fall short of the glory of God."

God never changes is his love for us. Scripture tells us in 1 John 4:8, "God is love." Romans 5:8 tells us how much God loves us: "God demonstrates his own love toward us, in that while we were still sinners, Christ died for us."

Jesus died on the cross to pay the price for our sins and buy us eternal life. Romans 6:23 states, "For the wages of sin is death, but the gift of God is eternal life in Christ Jesus our Lord." John 3:16 communicated the same thought with different words: "For God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten son, that whoever believes in him should not perish but have everlasting life."

If we will place our faith in Jesus Christ as our Lord and savior, then we shall receive God's gift of eternal life.

Some will say they will change before they will come to God. They want to clean up their lives. That is about as sensible as saying, "I am going to clean up before I take a bath."

God wants us to come to him just as we are — humble, repentant sinners — and trust Jesus as our Lord as savior. The Holy Spirit moves into our lives and begins to cleanse us.

2 Corinthians 5:17 states, "Therefore, if anyone is in Christ, he is a new creation; old things have passed away; behold, all things have become new." God changes us from the inside out.

Give your soul into his safekeeping and you will always have the constant care of the unchanging, eternal God.

Fort Benning gets new chaplain

By Elizabeth E. LaMonica
Special to The Bayonet

After 37 years of marriage, 27 years of Army service and 27 household moves, most people would agree that Chaplain (Col.) Henry E. Wake has seen much of this world.

But with three years to go until retirement, Wake was sent to an installation he'd never been before to become its senior chaplain.

He arrived at Fort Benning July 7 from Heidelberg, Germany, where he was the 7th Army Command Chaplain and responsible for 200 chaplains and 200 chaplain's assistants.

"The chief of chaplains wanted my wife and me to be on a post with young chaplains and assistants," Wake said. "This is a unique post where a lot of young Soldiers are looking forward to the future. There are dozens of excellent programs going on here and I hope to build on what's already here."

Wake began his personal spiritual walk in 1959 and studied to become a minister. He was enlisted in the Michigan National Guard. Upon the advice of a friend, he looked into the Army's chaplaincy programs and came on active duty in 1970. One of his earliest assignments was serving as a unit chaplain with the 101st Airborne in Vietnam. He remembers that assignment as one of his proudest accomplishments, but he also remembers that the chaplain he replaced was killed on Easter Sunday.

"To me (Vietnam) was the crucible," he said. "To see men die and see men wounded and to see the courage of the American Soldier at a time when our nation didn't always support us."

He continued on and was sent to Texas, Germany, Massachusetts, Kansas, the Pentagon and other destinations to fulfill the chaplain's mission: support Soldiers and help them in their faith journey.

"One of the challenges for the Army is to ensure the religious needs of all of our troops are covered," he said. "That's a challenge for the chaplaincy of the future."

The Army recognizes more than 220 different religious groups and Wake wants to make sure that each Soldier can grow in his or her own spiritual walk.

"We're here to open doors for them," the chaplain said, "to make sure they have religious freedom and that anything they need is there."

He mentioned the importance of the chaplains' participation in their unit's activities.

"The Soldiers need to see the chaplains and their assistants with them in the mud and the chow line. The strength of the chaplaincy is the ministry of presence," Wake said. "Being there for the Soldiers when they're happy or sad, for weddings or for funerals.

"Our chaplains want the best for their folks," he said. "The whole command structure emphasizes 'we want to take care of these people.'

"Just the big emphasis on Communities of Excellence that drive is to say we want the best here on this post. These are outward manifestations of that caring."

The new installation chaplain does have goals he'd like to implement concerning the installation chaplaincy, including involving the chaplains who are in the National Guard or an Army Reserve unit; bring the chaplains into the 21st century as far as automation and computers; and to capitalize on the role of the chaplain's assistants making them a more utilized part of the ministry.

Despite the Army-wide draw down, Wake said that the service is in pretty good shape for chaplains, other than a lack of Catholic priests. "There is a real emphasis from the chief of chaplains on supporting Catholics interested in the priesthood," he said.

Becoming an Army chaplain is not for the fainthearted. A chaplain must meet several requisites including a minimum of seven years of post high school education, be a fully qualified member of the clergy of his or her religious faith group, meet age requirements, be physically qualified and meet a number of other requirements. Wake seems to think it's worth it.

"For me it's been a progression of widening responsibilities to help others," he said.

One week after his arrival on post Wake received news of something else to be proud about. His son, David, was accepted to become an Army chaplain and is scheduled to enter those ranks in November at Fort Carson, Colo.

"To me, if you want to serve, why not serve those who are serving others?"

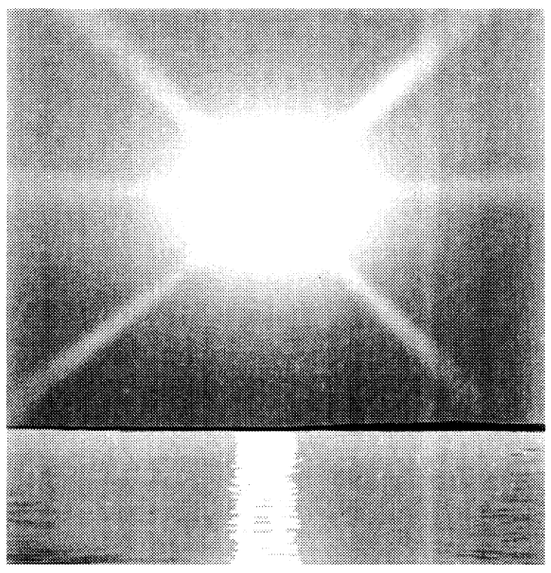
Bayonet Classifieds Really Work!

God lights the way, we reflect his glory

By Chaplain (Capt.) David Kirk
3rd Brigade, 3rd Inf. Div. (Mech.)

There is a certain place on the coast of Ireland that is extremely craggy and rough. It is so dangerous that it has necessitated the building of not one but two lighthouses in the same area.



These two lighthouses, which guide seafarers, are named "The Sun" and "The Moon."

The larger one, The Sun, has a very bright light on top. This lighthouse has two purposes. It shines brightly to alert all those traversing those waters that the craggy shoreline is close by. Its second purpose is to be the light for The Moon.

The smaller lighthouse has no light source of its own. It does however, have a large mirror that catches the light from the beacon in the larger one. Both of these lighthouses work together to alert those going by of the ever-present dangerous rocks. They also guide sailors to a safe passageway.

One of the duties of the light keeper is to polish the mirror in the smaller lighthouse. Much attention is given to this duty. For it is by this means that the reflection coming off the mirror is as bright as possible.

The keeper also makes sure this mirror is positioned properly to catch the light. The sailors using this shipping lane count on these lightbeams to bring them safely home.

Christ can be likened to the larger lighthouse. He is the source of light. In John 8:12, we read Jesus saying, "I am the light of the world; one who follows me will not walk in darkness, but will have the light of life".

We, then, are like the smaller lighthouse. We merely reflect the light of Christ. Just as the lightkeeper polishes the mirror, we try to keep ourselves holy. We polish "the mirror," our life, and focus on Christ. We absorb and reflect his light. How blessed is one who allows this light to be the guiding and focal point of his or her life.

Luke 10:33 states, "No one, after lighting a lamp, puts it in a cellar or under a bushel, but on a stand, that those who enter may see the light."

When we allow God's goodness to be a part of our lives, we do shine forth — in the call to holiness, we are called to shine out. Our acts of charity, our kindnesses, our presence to others.

Sometimes, however, we distort and do not reflect this light. We do hide it under the bushel basket. It is times like these that we prevent others from seeing Christ in us. Our selfishness, hatred, indifference causes us to lose track of the light. Not living in the light of Christ, we cannot reflect it to others.

We are called to take a look at ourselves. What can we do to ensure "the mirror" is polished? 2 Corinthians 4:6 states, "For it is the God who said 'Let light shine out of darkness, who has shone in our hearts to give the light of the knowledge of the glory of God in the face of Christ.'"

We are called to be that keeper. We are also the sailors who sometimes come upon the rocks of sin and discouragement. We look for the safe harbor, the safety and brightness of the light.

We can only be the reflected light from the smaller lighthouse. It is God who is the light which shines our way. We reflect the light that shines in our hearts. God does use that light, however, to bring others safely to him.

Are you allowing him to do that through you? If so, you can say you are helping be a light to guide others to Christ.

SOFTBALL

1/10th makes gallant run in city competition

By John W. Peeler
Special to The Bayonet©

Appropriately named "Steel," Soldiers who normally shoot steel projectiles down range to destroy targets put together a combined team to take on the city of Columbus in softball competition in the Commercial League, Division II.

Soldiers' from the 1st Battalion, 10th Field Artillery, 3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division (Mechanized), dreams of a city championship ended as they lost to South Phoenix Mill 8-1 at the South Commons Field 1 Monday.

Steel got to the city tournament by posting a division and league leading 18-1 record.

"We hit for power and we hit for averages," said coach Richard Young. "We just had a great team this year."

Steel got to the final six in the city tournament by beating Columbus Bank and Trust 18-1 in the first round of the tournament.

Steel and South Phoenix Mill opened up the game with South Phoenix going three up and three down in the first inning. Steel fared only a little better in the inning, sending four batters to the plate with one batter reaching base on an error.

South Phoenix got on the scoreboard first in the second inning with three singles that scored one run followed by a three-run homerun blast.

Steel got some hits in the second inning, but did not push across any runs, stranding two potential runs on base.

The Steel defense shut down South Phoenix in the top of the third inning, allowing only one hit.

Steel catcher C. Valintine, who hit .428 during the regular season, led off the bottom of the third inning with a solo home run, but Steel didn't capitalize on the momentum, grounding out on two consecutive at bats and ending the inning on a fly out.

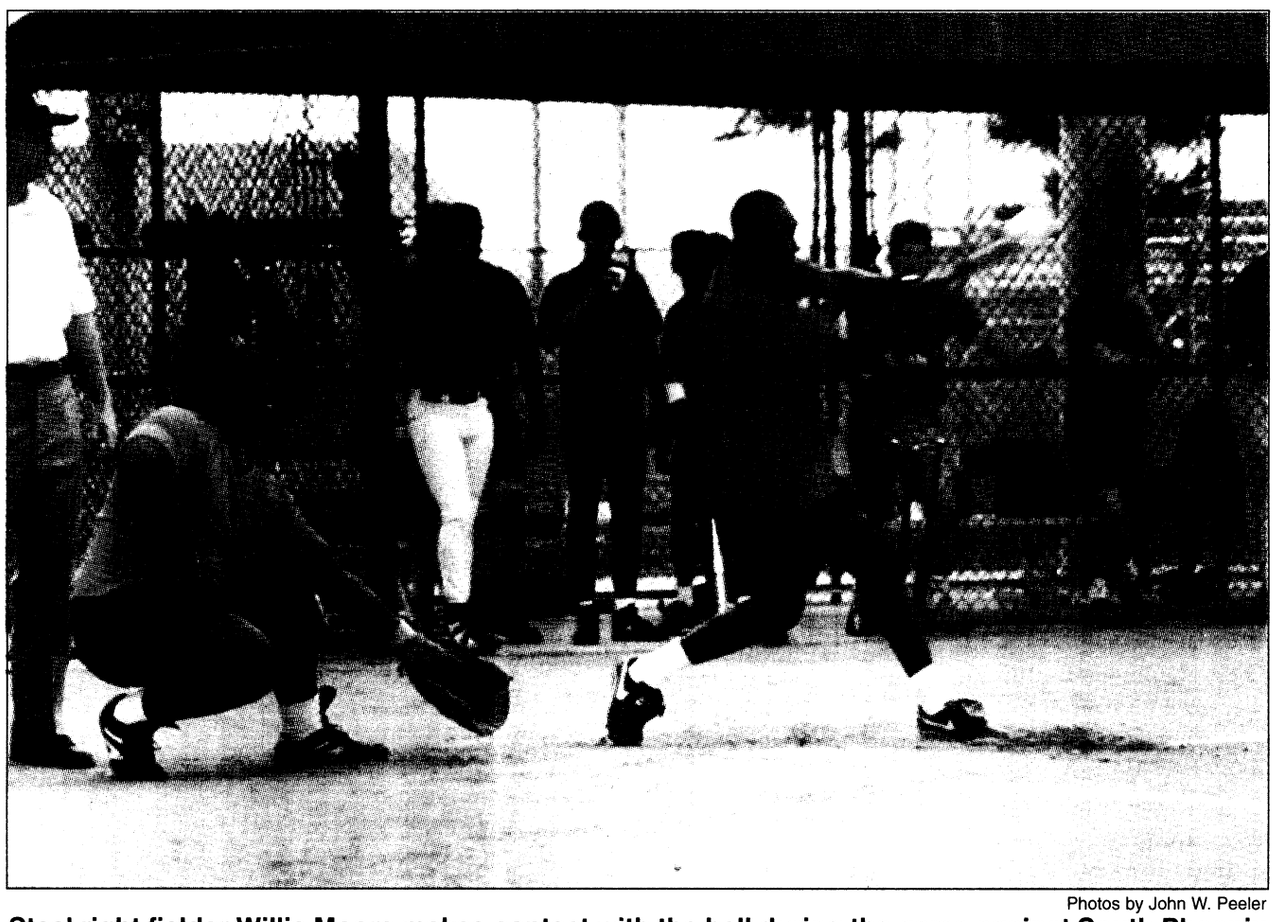
Both team defenses continued to dominate the game until the seventh inning when South Phoenix put together a four-run inning to lead Steel 8-1.

Steel was not able to overcome the deficit in the final inning and the game ended in an 8-1 Steel loss.

Steel finished the season with a league best 19-2 record.

Young credited the team's success to the cooperation of the Columbus Recreation Department and support from Hobbs Automotive and the fans who came to watch the games.

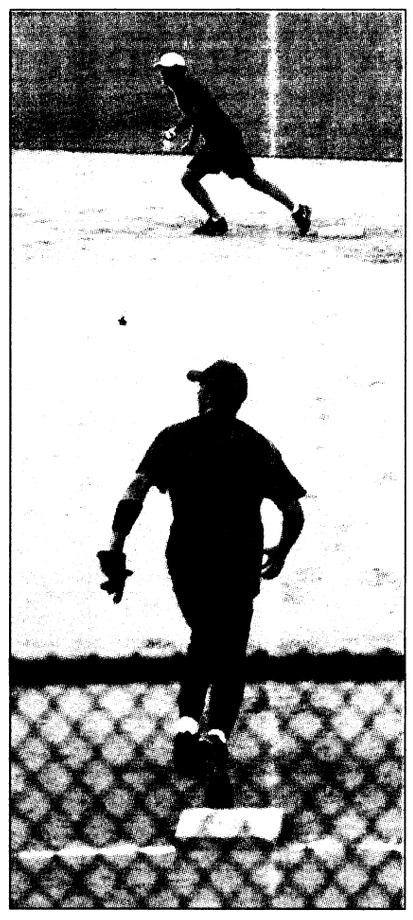
"The Columbus Recreation Department was real helpful," Young said. "They worked really hard to accommodate our schedule and blocked out a month for us when we deployed during Marne Focus."



"We played double headers before and after we returned from the exercise to make up the games," Young said.

Tuesday the team gathered one final time at the Main NCO Club to hand out trophies and other awards.

The Division II championship trophy was presented to Lt. Col. Thomas G. Torrance and Command Sgt. Maj. Ronnie Porter with a duplicate trophy being presented to Hobbs Automotive.



"Without their (Hobbs) support, we could not have done it," Young said. "They purchased the uniforms and trophies and supported us the entire season."

The ceremony concluded with presentation of individual trophies, all-star trophies and momentos to all the fans.

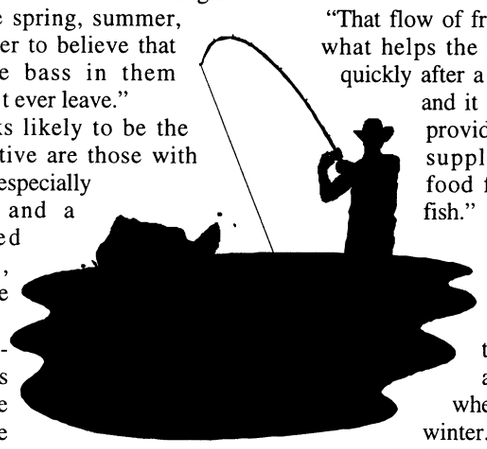
Winter months pose challenges for bass fishermen



By D. Hegal and S. Price
Johnson® and Evinrude® Outboards

Most bass fishermen agree the most difficult of all bass fishing occurs when the water is both cold and muddy, as it frequently is during the winter months. There isn't much an angler can do about water temperature except wait for spring, but there is a way to locate clear water.

"When I'm looking for clear water on a lake, I go to the very backs of the tributary creeks," said angler Davy Hite. "Creeks are the first places that turn muddy when it's raining, but they're also the first places that clear again."

Hite, who finished second in the 1996 Bass Masters Classic™ world bass fishing championship, adds that clear tributary creeks are also among the better places to look for winter bass.

"I believe the larger, major tributaries on most big lakes have a resident population of fish that probably don't ever leave that creek," he said. "These may not be the largest fish in the lake and the entire population may not be that numerous, but I have fished enough creeks in the spring, summer, fall and winter to believe that some of the bass in them probably don't ever leave."

The creeks likely to be the most productive are those with heavy cover, especially vegetation, and a well-defined channel, continued the pro.

"Vegetation helps clear the water," Hite said, "but probably more importantly, it provides food and cover for bait fish. Even in the winter when the vegetation is at its lowest, it still offers that benefit.

"The importance of a well-defined channel is also critical in holding bass year round. The channel means that creek has a constant flow of fresh water moving through it; otherwise it will become silted in and the bass will not remain there.

"That flow of fresh water is what helps the creek clear quickly after a winter rain, and it is what also provides a steady supply of fresh food for the bait fish."

Hite advises anglers to look for these characteristics when fishing in winter. Generally, the largest tributaries on the lower end of an impoundment will be most productive this time of year.

"The actual water conditions you encounter will often determine your lure choice," the South Carolina angler said. "Jigs are always good lures in winter because they can be fished slowly near the bottom, but spinner baits and crank baits will also catch fish. Jigging spoons are used by many anglers, too.

"The thing you don't want to have to do is fish cold and muddy water if you can help it. If the water is still muddying, you may be able to stay ahead of the mud by fishing on the main lake, but once it starts to clear, head straight to the major tributaries because they will clear the quickest and that's where the bass will be biting best."

Jerk baits offer change for bass this time of year

By D. Hegal and S. Price
Johnson® and Evinrude® Outboards

If you're looking for a lure to fish this summer that bass probably won't see very often, consider using a shallow-diving, suspending jerk bait.

"It isn't a lure many anglers consider using this time of year," said Clark Wendlandt, a former guide, "but that may be one of the reasons it catches a lot of fish. The bass haven't become accustomed to it the way they have to spinner baits."

Wendlandt prefers large jerk baits that quickly dive several feet deep and then suspend at that depth when he stops retrieving. He fishes the lure very slowly and with frequent pauses, which is when bass seem to hit it most often.

"I really discovered how effective jerk baits can be in early spring purely by accident," the Texas pro said. "I was using a jerk bait while competing in a tournament on Kentucky Lake, but I must have been fishing it too fast because I wasn't getting strikes.

"On one retrieve, however, I stopped reeling and put the rod down and stepped back to take off my jacket. When I picked the rod back up, I had a 5-pounder on. After that, I made sure I had plenty of pauses on each retrieve, and I caught bass the rest of the day. It's been one of my favorite techniques ever since."

Wendlandt usually begins fishing main lake points where the bottom slopes steeply, keeping his boat about 20 feet off the bank. He does not like flat banks. Although he may be sitting in water as deep as 30 feet, he casts right to the shoreline and works the lure back in a series of jerks and pauses.

"I believe the bass may be suspending in the deeper water and come up to hit," the pro said. "If you really pay attention to your line, you can occasionally see exactly when the fish strikes."

From the main lake points, Wendlandt gradually fishes his way into major tributary creeks, but he only fishes about a third of the way into the creeks.

"The best conditions for this technique are when the water temperature ranges from the low 40s to mid-50s," he said, "and when you have at least three feet of visibility. It will last well into the spring when water temperatures climb into the 60s."

Wendlandt fishes jerk baits on 10- or 12-pound test line and with a medium action 6-foot rod. He isn't particularly concerned about lure color and uses either silver or gray hues.

"The same lure and technique has long been considered a favorite tactic for windy banks and points later in the year," Wendlandt said, "but it also works very well in the summer.

"Anytime you can offer the fish something different, especially if you can fish it slow enough to stay in the strike zone, you improve your changes for catching bass, and a suspending jerk bait does just that."

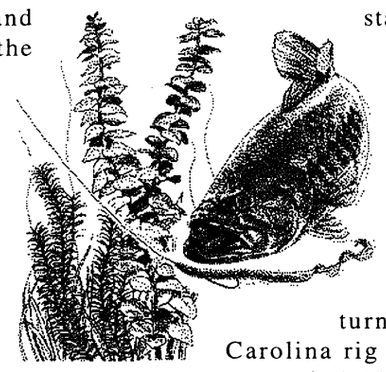
Experimenting with different lures can produce big catches

By D. Hegal and S. Price
Johnson® and Evinrude® Outboards

If any bass fisherman could have just one wish granted, chances are it would be for a lure that "finds" bass.

"Actually," said professional bass tournament angler, Larry Nixon, "there are certain lures available that do find bass. Much depends, of course, on how you fish them, but some lures are definitely better suited for locating bass than others."



Nixon, a winner of 13 national bass tournaments, said one of the favorite fish-finding lures among the tournament pros is a swimming, vibrating, imitation minnow.

"There's just something about this type of lure that draws bass to it," Nixon said. "I don't believe it is any single factor, but rather a combination of how the lure looks, vibrates and sounds. Basically, all you do with these lures is cast them out and wind them back in.

"It's one of those last-ditch lures, too, when it's late in the day and you still need to catch some fish for a full limit. We just start running a shoreline and casting and winding as fast as we can."

Nixon also likes to use diving crank baits as fish-finding lures, although he admits they aren't quite as effective as the vibrating imitation minnows.

"The whole idea behind a fish-finding lure is that you can use it to cover a lot of water quickly and efficiently," the pro said. "The lures are best used with a fairly fast retrieve and they work different depths.

"Diving crank baits can be used this way, but the deeper plugs are tiring to retrieve cast after cast, and sometimes the best retrieve with them is a slow one. Still, in the hands of a skillful crank baits angler, they'll definitely find bass."

Another lure many pros have started to rely on more and more, Nixon said, is a plastic lizard or worm on a Carolina rig.

"By using a lighter sinker and a shorter leader, you can turn a deep water Carolina rig into a shallow water rig," Nixon said, "and still fish it fast. You can rig it weedless so it works well in cover, and just the slightest rod tip movement makes the lure dart and swim erratically.

"Carolina rigs are definitely effective because while you're looking for bass, you can feel the sinker working along the bottom so it tells you what type of cover you're in. The lure looks pretty natural out away from the sinker, too, which is why bass are attracted to it."

Some anglers use top-water buzz baits to find bass, especially when fishing in acres of flooded timber and heavy brush.

"One of the things a buzz bait seems to do is 'call' bass to it, whether they actually strike or not," the Arkansas pro said. "It makes a lot of noise so bass definitely hear it and swim out to investigate.

"One of the things I really like to do with a buzz bait is make several casts through timber with it, then follow with a plastic worm or jig into the very same spot. It's amazing how many times that lure will get a hit even when the buzz bait didn't."

Rocks, dams, retaining walls house big bass

By D. Hegal and S. Price
Johnson® and Evinrude® Outboards

While many bass fishermen spend their spring casting weedy shorelines for big bass, Florida pro Steve Daniel fishes rocks.

"I like to fish riprap around bridges and dams and retaining walls," said the Lake Okeechobee guide. "I've caught a lot of big bass right at the ends of dams where the rocks actually stop."

Daniel, a veteran tournament competitor, said bass will make beds and spawn wherever conditions are suitable for them, and he thinks the rocks and riprap may simply be used by bass that live nearby.

"Another reason may be the fact the bottom is usually hard in those places. In addition to the rocks, there may be gravel or sand that has washed in along with vegetation that is growing there," he said.

Depending on the shoreline configuration, the rocks may also offer protection from wind and waves.

"In spring, the best places are always at the ends of the riprap, not necessarily anywhere along it as they may be at other times of the year," he said.

"I know that on some lakes with a lot of flooded timber bass will actually build their nests on the limbs of the trees, but I haven't seen that many beds actually made on big rocks, unless those rocks happen to be covered by a layer of sand. The bass locate right at the edge of the rocks."

On the other hand, Daniel said bass may be anywhere along a stone or concrete retaining wall, although they tend to locate close to other types of nearby cover, such as brush piles, piers and boat docks.

"With long retaining walls, I don't believe the wall itself is the determining factor in where bass construct a spawning nest," he said. "Wherever you do have retaining walls to stop soil erosion, you generally have boathouses, piers and other structures, and the fish will locate themselves where they can take advantage of both."

When he's fishing riprap around a bridge or dam, the pro likes to pitch a jig right to the rocks and work it out over the edge, but when he is fishing a long retaining wall, he may use a lizard or even a spinner bait.

"I'll make a parallel cast along the wall and retrieve the lure as close to the wall as I can," he said.

Daniel believes riprap and rocks attract bass throughout the year because the algae that grows on the rocks attracts minnows that in turn bring bass.

"A lot of little creatures can and do live in the cracks between the rocks," he said, "so the bass have a readily available food supply. Around dams, deep water is also very near, so the fish have that to escape to whenever they need it."

The Florida pro seldom sees other anglers fishing riprap in the spring and that suits him just fine.

"On some lakes, you practically have to wait in line to fish a particular shoreline," he said. "I'd much rather take my chances with the riprap because I generally have it to myself."

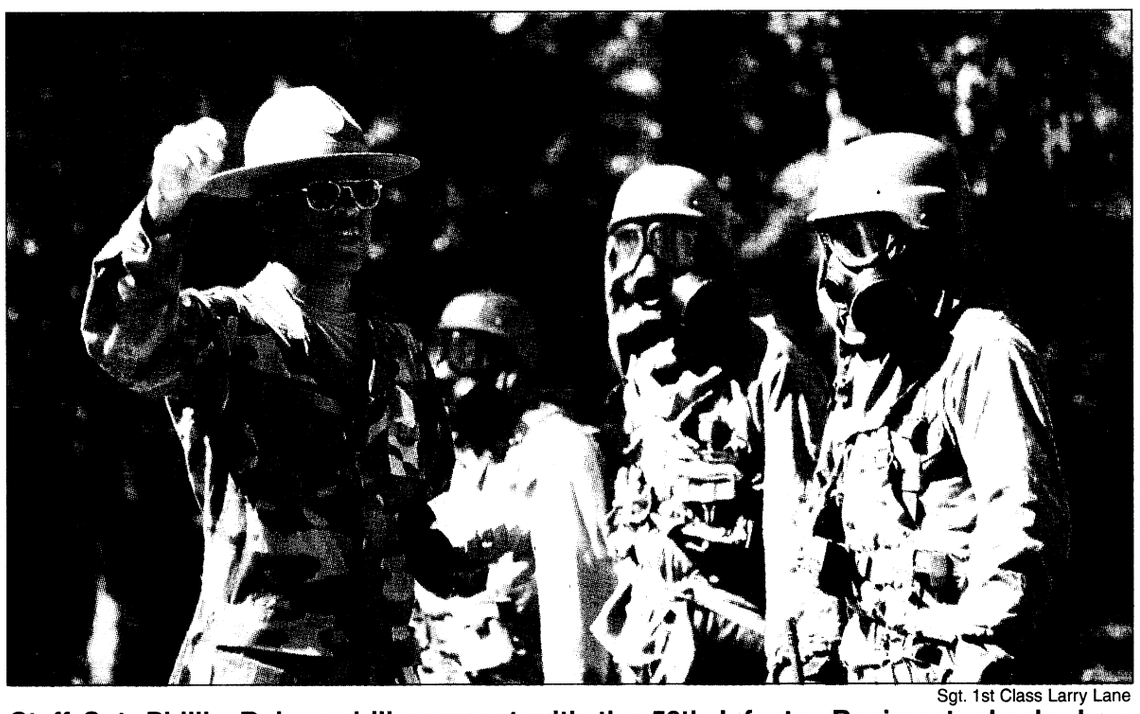
DRILL SERGEANT SCHOOL

Candidates undergo screening

By Jim Caldwell
TRADOC News Service

FORT MONROE, Va. — Fort Benning's U.S. Army Infantry Center initiated a new state-of-the-art program for screening U.S. Army drill sergeant candidates.



"These NCOs affect so many trainees and influence their lives that we need to look at ways in which we can really select the best NCOs for the job," said Capt. Mark Baggett, a clinical psychologist with the Infantry Center.

Army leadership studied the drill sergeant selection process and training program following a series of incidents of sexual misconduct involving male drill sergeants and female trainees at Aberdeen Proving Ground, Md., and other Army training centers.

"I think there are probably some changes that are necessary in how we select all instructors," said Gen. William W. Hartzog, commander of the Training and Doctrine Command.

"We have very high standards for selecting people to be drill sergeants, but they may not be good enough. We may need to do some sort of psychological testing to determine whether there's a base line of personal skills that makes them amenable to this kind of work," he said.

The Army has three schools to train active duty drill sergeants. They are at Fort Benning, Fort Jackson, S.C., and Fort Leonard Wood, Mo. The responsibility for the program of instruction (POI) at the schools comes under Col. Sam Barlotta, the director of plans, training and mobilization for the U.S. Army Training Center at Fort Jackson.

Sgt. 1st Class Larry Lane

Staff Sgt. Phillip Ruiz, a drill sergeant with the 58th Infantry Regiment, checks how Soldiers have donned their MOPP gear.

"Psychological testing is part of a bigger picture," Barlotta said. "There is a task force reviewing the POI and requirements of drill sergeant training. We will review several courses of action, and psychological testing is one of them."

The screening program is based on psychological testing already being done in the Army, according to Baggett. The Special Forces Assessment and Selection (SFAS) program at Fort Bragg, N.C., uses a psychological test, as does the Ranger Assessment and Selection Program (RASP) for all officers and enlistees. In fact, results of the test may be compared to the GT, Baggett said.

The second part is a personality measure that could be a predictor of potential behavior problems. The last part is a test of normal personality features.

The testing takes four to six hours, and is followed by the interview, which is about an hour long.

"The results are discussed with the candidates," Baggett said. "They're given a chance to respond to all the questions, and are certainly interviewed in depth."

There is no mandatory set of desired personality traits for drill sergeants, Baggett said. Psychological testing will reveal strengths and possible weaknesses of drill sergeant candidates.

The decision to eliminate a person from training will be made by a board of NCOs and the commandant of the drill sergeants school. Board members will base their decisions on summaries of the results of the written tests and the interview.

Being dropped from drill sergeant training because of the psychological testing process will not negatively effect a soldier's career, according to Baggett. Results will not be made part of a soldier's personnel or medical files.

"It's an important distinction that

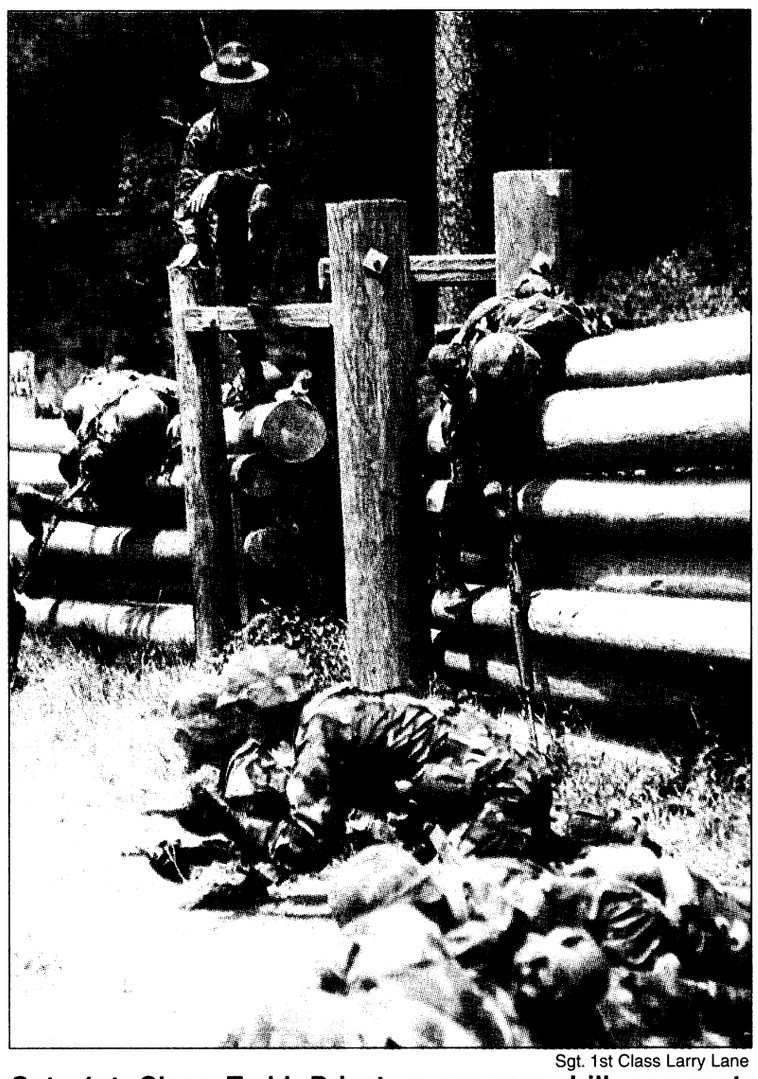
Drill sergeant duty continues to enhance careers

By Sgt. 1st Class Larry Lane
Public Affairs Office NCOIC



Soldiers don't seem to sleep much past 5 a.m. at Sand Hill. That's when basic trainees secure their wall lockers and align their "highly shined" boots under their bunks before marching off to physical fitness training. Jody calls rock the barracks as drill sergeants lead trainees to physical fitness training at 5:30 a.m., singing cadences about airborne rangers, drill sergeants and three-day passes.

Long before the trainees wake up, the drill sergeant is there to assure everything is prepared for the day of training. Each day there's a different task to teach — basic rifle marksmanship, drill and ceremony, the "spirit of the Bayonet" — and the drill sergeant is the expert of all these tasks.

Long after the trainee finishes shining his boots and "hits the rack" for the night, the drill sergeant is there to help those trainees who may need additional instruction. It's a long-standing relationship, the drill sergeant and the trainee, with the goal of producing the Army's finest Soldiers.

It's no easy task to turn civilians into Soldiers, Soldiers into Infantryman, and Soldiers into drill sergeants, and it all happens on Sand Hill everyday.

The driving force behind this machine are the Infantry Training Brigade's drill sergeants who, whether selected by the Department of the Army or have volunteered their service, are the mentors and shapers of each Soldier. Each drill sergeant has his or her reason why it's still a great career decision to spend some time "on the trail" training Soldiers, about 20,000 trainees every year at Fort Benning.

After spending all of his Army years with Infantry units, Staff Sgt. Stacey Teube, a drill sergeant with Company A, 2nd Battalion, 58th Infantry Regiment, decided to become a drill sergeant to see if he could produce a better Soldier and Infantryman, one better prepared than the Soldiers who were showing up at his unit.

Fort Benning conducts one station unit training (OSUT), where trainees learn how to be both Soldiers and Infantrymen. With this process, Teube is able to see the Soldier develop from beginning to end.

"We were getting quality Soldiers, but some didn't seem quite ready to be at the Forces Command

Soldier gets 6 years with plea bargain

A Fort Benning sergeant was found guilty Tuesday during a general court martial for aggravated assault, disobeying a lawful order and adultery.

Sgt. Robin Bellamy, 29, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment, tested HIV-positive in 1996. He was accused of having unprotected sex with three women after he knew he had the virus. Since his initial diagnosis, Bellamy was ordered by commanders and a military doctor to tell prospective partners that he was HIV-positive.

Bellamy, who was separated from his wife for more than three years, pleaded guilty to the charges.

After a day-long trial and a short deliberation, he was sentenced to 10 years in prison, reduction to the lowest enlisted rank, forfeiture of pay and benefits and a dishonorable discharge from the Army.

Because of a pre-trial agreement in which Bellamy pleaded guilty, his prison term was reduced to six years.

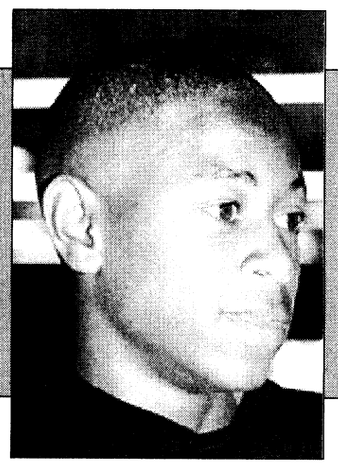
Bellamy, of Grooklet, Ga., has been in the Army for more than 10 years.

Typically, HIV positive Soldiers can continue to serve in the Army as long as they do not pose a threat to other Soldiers, are not in a deployable unit and can perform their duties.

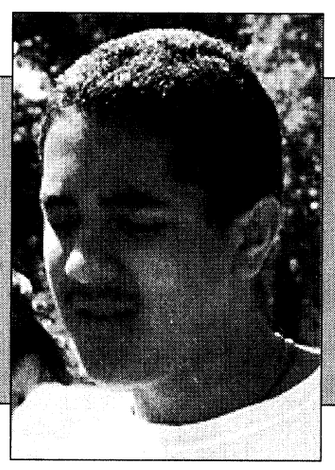
VARIOUS VOICES

What is your view on school dress codes?

Joseph Kegler, 14, family member — "I don't think we should have dress codes. They stifle our creativity."



Jeremy Farr, 14, family member — "I don't like them. Schools shouldn't judge us and hold against us what we want to wear."



Lawrence Swan, 15, family member — "I don't like the idea. When schools don't allow book bags, it makes it harder to participate in school."

Paige Kimbrough, 13, family member — "A dress code is OK. If those are the rules, they should be followed."

Montrell McMillan, 13, family member — "They're all right. I usually go ahead and tuck my shirt in anyway."

Mariano Ortiz, 14, family member — "I don't like them. We should be allowed to dress the way we want to dress."

School dress codes scheduled to start at post schools this fall

By 1st Lt. April N. Olsen
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Faith Middle School has a dress code. I say "hooray!" I consider discipline more important than fashion and do not see the enforcement of dress codes at post schools as an infringement on personal freedoms.

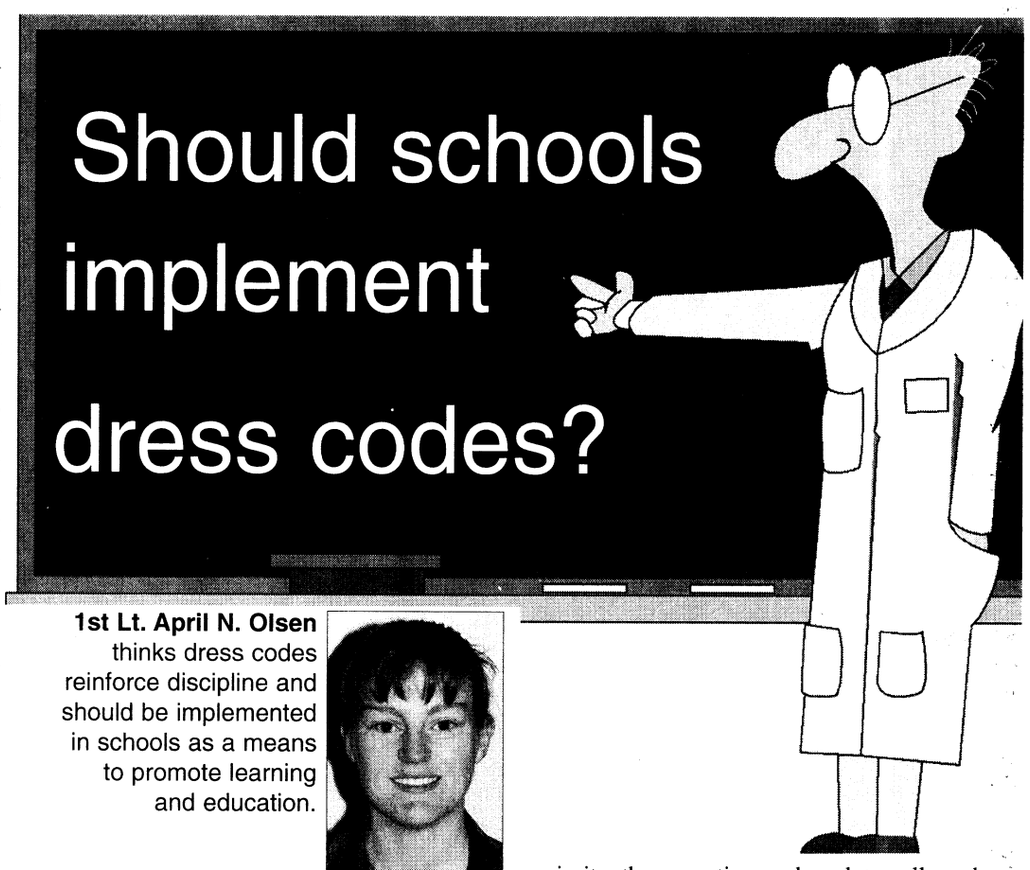
The Army enforces certain rules and regulations for the good order and discipline of the force. Sometimes personal preferences must fall to the side for the good of the whole.

This is a basic principle by which those of us in uniform live and work by. Expecting our families to abide by that principle is not unreasonable.

Service members join the Army knowing there will be things they have to do even when they don't agree. When they choose to live on post and put their children in post schools, they understand their children will be expected to follow certain rules. I think it's a fair trade for the quality education they receive.

I agree that not allowing children to express themselves through their choice of attire can be detrimental to their individuality and development as a responsible, mature adult capable of making their own decisions.

However, the dress code being enforced on post is hardly stifling. A school uniform is not being imposed. The school board and post officials are simply saying that good taste and decorum will be the norm so that students can concentrate on academics and not be distracted by Jill's or John's rear end hanging out of her or his pants.



I understand some view dress codes as what a small group of people in charge deem appropriate attire for school.

This is not proper justification for military family members to complain about it.

Every Soldier in every unit in the Army has a specific chain of command that makes choices and decisions for Soldiers under their commands.

If a Soldier brings his or her family on post he or she should expect them to follow the rules set up by those in charge.

Parents, if you want to allow your kids to dress in baggy pants and clothes that may give others the wrong impression, let them express their personal choice on their time. While attending school to learn, they must follow the rules. Consider it a lesson in respecting authority and learning discipline.

1st Lt. April N. Olsen thinks dress codes reinforce discipline and should be implemented in schools as a means to promote learning and education.

commentary

In civilian society, parents may fight a policy they believe to be unfair. I applaud their efforts to teach children that it is important to stand up for what you believe in.

However, in the military, to fight a policy because it threatens a child's ability to dress fashionably is ridiculous and reinforces disobedience and disrespect for authority. This is irresponsible of parents, especially military parents.

As parents, we must be aware of the lesson we teach when we challenge authority for unjustifiable or petty reasons.

As military parents, it's important to remember that if we show disloyalty to our chain of command without good reasons, our families will not respect us or our chosen profession.

The Army is more demanding than your average career and therefore, we service members must involve our families in it as much as possible.

We should let them know our job responsibilities and, while our family is a top priority, there are times when duty calls and we can't be there.

We do this not because we care more about our jobs than our families, but because we believe some things are worth personal sacrifices.

Teaching military kids that duty and responsibility call for personal sacrifices reinforces those qualities in their own behavior.

Parents should be thankful that we live on an installation where commanders and the school board are interested in a community atmosphere.

It's great that commanders want to be involved in school policy and expect parents to be involved in the education of children.

In return, parents should be more concerned with developing a child into a responsible person than worrying about silly little matters of no baggy pants or short skirts in school.

Parents cannot demand a free, quality education for their kids and then not give support when decisions are made and rules enforced to promote discipline in the schools.

I guess I'm out of style, but I believe the overall growth and development of the next generation is more important than their freedom to wear a particular outfit to school.

Soldier urges training realism

By Spc. Clyde Snively
Bayonet columnist

Whenever Old Sarge and airborne Charlie get to talking in the Bayonet office, you-know-what really gets deep.

This week they were talking about an article Sgt. 1st Class Larry Lane was writing on drill sergeants.

He quotes one drill sergeant as saying the reason he became a drill sergeant was to whip Infantrymen into shape before sending them out to the combat Infantry units.

"The guy's dreaming if he thinks he can take a civilian from our society and turn him into a ranger hard-body in 13 weeks," Old Sarge laughed.

"Yeah, we got a nation of cream puffs," Airborne Charlie smirked. "Kids might have great hand and eye coordination for playing computer games, but just try playing catch with them. Ha. My two-year-old grandson would stand a better chance of catching a ball than one of them."

"Oh, catch ain't nothin'," Old Sarge said. "I once had a wannabe Soldier who didn't know how to run. Picture Kramer in your platoon and you have this guy. He didn't know how to pick up his legs, point his toes and move out in a straight line at any pace faster than a shuffle."

commentary

"I'll tell you somethin' else," Airborne said, "I think the Army made a major mistake when they dumbed down the PT test to three events. What does being able to do pushups, situps and run two miles got to do with being able to perform in combat?"

"I'll betcha most healthy soldiers can pass the PT test without even studyin' for it. Now they might be stiff and sore the next day, but hey they passed."

"What we need to do is have branch PT tests. Like the Infantry, theirs would be a 20-mile forced march in three hours with 75 pound rucks, followed by a bayonet assault course then a two-mile run with weapon and LBE."

"Yeah, I like that," Airborne said.

"Tankers could be made to push an Abrams tank down a tank trail, and cannon cockers would have a shuttle relay, carry a 155-mm round 50 yards, drop it off, race back, pickup another until their gun had a full load."

"Cooool," I piped up, "and journalists would be tested on how fast they could write an article under deadline."

I was immediately fixed with a cold stare before they turned their backs on me and went back to solving the Army's problems.

I'd never let them know I valued their opinions, they're pretty much out of it, but just maybe there is some merit to having customized PT tests based on the job you do.

Like how fast can you roll your parachute, jam it into your B-bag and race a mile off the drop zone.

Or how fast can you change six tires on a five-ton truck, or carry mailbags full of Christmas packages.

Maybe, once in a while, it wouldn't hurt for the Army to call in some of these retirees and get their views on life.

As I see it, the more we rely on technology, the more we need training on field expedient means of doing things.

It's been my experience that under the best of conditions technology can let us down and if there's a bad guy out there with plans to screw up your high-tech equipment, Snively bets he succeeds.

More of us need to be reminded of the spirit of the bayonet. Ain't nuthin' gonna stand up to a well-trained Infantryman with courage in his heart and a bayonet at the end of this M-16.

MPs perform safety checks on post

By Elizabeth E. LaMonica
Special to The Bayonet©

It could happen at any time. You could be driving to or from work. You could be alone in the car or have passengers. But suddenly there is a line of orange cones ahead of you and a policeman is flagging you down.

He waves you off the road and you wonder what you were doing wrong. Another officer motions you to join a line of cars.

"What is going on?" you wonder.

Just then another member of the law enforcement team approaches your window and introduces himself.

"I'm with the Fort Benning Police Department and we're doing safety checks today.

Since their inception in September 1996, approximately 15,000 vehicles on Fort Benning have been monitored, resulting in more than 3,500 inspections. The drivers are expected to produce their licenses and proofs of insurance during the check and their cars must meet installation safety standards.

"The main purpose for being out here is basically what it says — safety," said Staff Sgt. Cris Cox, U.S. Army Infantry Center Military Police Company. "We check for seat belt violators, child restraints, make sure all the lights work, make sure all the drivers are carrying their drivers licenses, proofs of insurance and are just basically being safe."

The safety checkpoints usually last one to two hours and members of the Community Oriented Police Squad (COPS) conduct the checks. Post Commanding General Maj. Gen. Carl F. Ernst requires that a safety checkpoint occurs every week.

"There is no set time," Cox said. "We can have one from 2 to 4 in the morning or from 4 to 6 in the afternoon or from 5 to 7 o'clock in the morning. We're trying not to get a set time."

Drivers without violations can expect to spend the least amount of time at a checkpoint, especially if they're prepared.

"It makes it easier for a driver if he comes through with all his ducks in a row," Cox said. "If everything is right and checks out OK, he'll be in and out of here in under five minutes."

If there are problems, the wait may be a little longer. However, the officers usually try to work with some violators, especially if it concerns defective equipment.

"We're not out here to harass people, we're here to help them out," Cox said. "If the problem can't be corrected on the spot and they work on Fort Benning, we give them an armed forces ticket and give them 72 hours to get the problem corrected. Then they must come to the MP station and have an officer come out and reinspect the vehicle. If they do that, the ticket is gone."

A distinction is made for people who live or work on Fort Benning because the officers can ensure that the offender will correct the problem and get reinspected. Off-post violators usually receive a fine.

"I think it's a good idea having spot checks," said Spc. Paul Boothe, 598th Maintenance Company, 36th Engineer Group (Combat). "We do the exact same thing for Soldiers in our platoon each month. It's just about safety."

Boothe's platoon is following the policy established by the Commanding General requiring that all Soldiers' vehicles receive safety checks by those Soldiers' chains of command at least once a month.

"What's bad about the checkpoints is that even though that policy exists, we're still finding no post decals, lights out, they're not carrying their proofs of insurance and other violations," Cox said.

But the safety checks are still having a positive effect on the Fort Benning community.

"People seem to be getting better," said Spc. Jeff Hawthorne, USAIC MP Co. "I see more post decals and people wearing their seat belts."

Their goal, however. is to see all drivers pass the safety check. Until that goal is met, drivers on the installation can expect to see COPS out there, enforcing the standards.

Screening: Starts

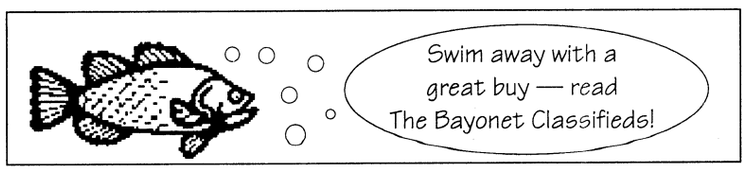
we have a board process so that I am not the ultimate authority over who stays or goes," he said.



The screening program will be administered to approximately 400 candidates for fiscal 1998 at Fort Benning's Drill Sergeant School. Classes 9-97 and 10-97 will begin psychological testing and evaluation Saturday during their first weekend at school. There will be approximately 40 candidates in each class.

"The ultimate goal is to have the screening process before the school starts," Baggett said. "But the training schedule is so tight that the only time we have are the weekends."

He views the psychological evaluation similar to other requirements candidates must pass to complete drill sergeant school. Failing any of the tests could result in elimination from the program.

"If this program is successful, one of the major issues will be allocating the resources and manpower to conduct the program at all three drill sergeant schools," Baggett said.

"We're looking right now at outcome measures," he said. "I think the best outcome is just going to be seeing the quality of people that we produce. Its effectiveness has already been demonstrated in the SFAS and RASP processes."

Duty: Drill sergeant status develops careers

side of the house," Teube said. Several years ago, his platoon sergeant told Teube if he thought he could do a better job at something, then he should try it, but he shouldn't complain without knowing both sides of the issue.

"The basic Soldier we were getting had good Soldier knowledge, but we had Soldiers who had problems with the physical aspects of being in the Infantry," Teube, a former rifle squad leader, said. "I'm down here on a mission. I'm here to see how it all happens."

Teube is also one of many Soldiers who see drill sergeant duty as something that will help him stand out among his peers when it comes time for promotion.

"I wanted to develop my career and better myself, go back to the basics and relearn," Teube said. "I wanted to see the new training techniques the Army has come up with."

Sgt. 1st Class Matthew Walker, a drill sergeant with Co. A, 2nd Bn., 58th Inf. Regt., believed drill sergeant duty was in line with a progression of leadership positions. Walker served in a variety of positions including platoon sergeant and operations sergeant.

"I felt like I needed to do something to separate myself from my peers," Walker said. "I want to make first sergeant. With the competitiveness in the Army these days, I felt this was the best way.

"I felt there was nothing more for an E-7, but to go back down and take a platoon again. I figured I would see what this duty is all about. I see these guys with the drill sergeant patch, I hear the stories, I see the privates come out of basic. Let me see if I can produce a better product," Walker explained his decision.

Above all, Walker wanted to remain with the Infantry at Fort Benning instead of being assigned to other basic training locations, like Fort Leonard Wood, Mo. or Fort Jackson, S. C.

"I've been 11-bravo my whole career," Walker said. "I felt I could benefit the Army more by training Infantry Soldiers than to be a 'sidewalk drill' marching Soldiers from classroom to classroom. I thought it would be better to be here at Fort Benning to train future Infantrymen."

This last year has not been kind to the drill sergeant image, with charges of fraternization and sexual abuse associated with drill sergeants. Although none of this happened at Fort Benning and involved an insignificant percent of the drill sergeant community, some drill sergeants believe these incidences may have damaged their image.

"There's a lot of things that happened to tarnish the drill sergeant badge, but there's more drill sergeants out there who are doing the right thing," Walker said. "They're setting the good example and producing quality soldiers. They're trying to morally and ethically produce good Americans and good Soldiers."

First Sgt. David Laster, the first sergeant for Co. D, 2nd Bn., 58th Inf. Reg., a former drill sergeant himself, said the negative attention has been distracting but the drill sergeants continue to focus on their mission of training Soldiers.

"I've seen all of the problems and have experienced some different problems back during my drill sergeant time," Laster said. "We're dealing with humans. We're susceptible to error."

Laster said drill sergeants should not lose sight of their responsibility to the Army, the Infantry and to the trainees they are entrusted with.

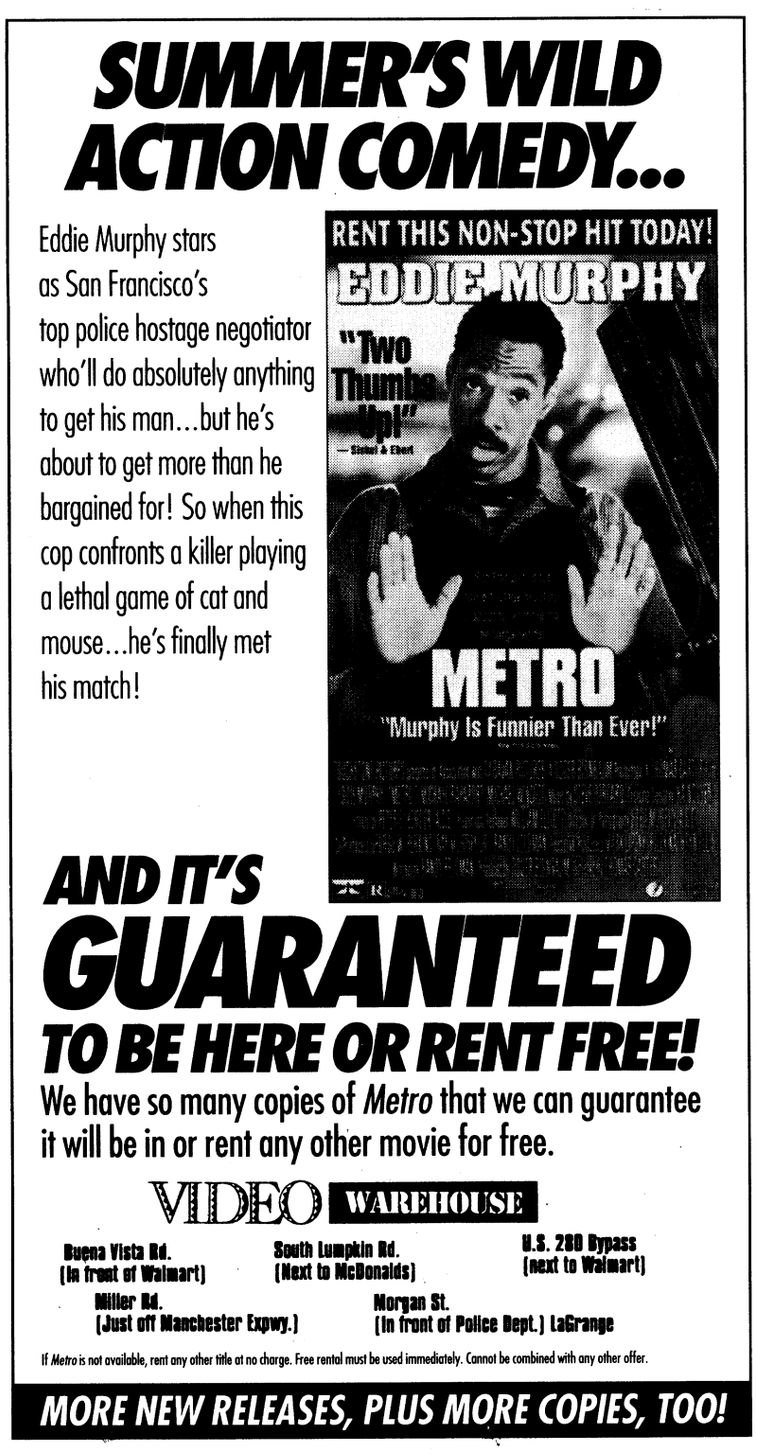
"At Fort Benning, we still lead the way and lead by example. The drill sergeants have shown the American people that we were able to perform our jobs even when all of those problems were going on," Laster said.

"The good sergeants know where they are in their hearts and within themselves and they continue to drive on."

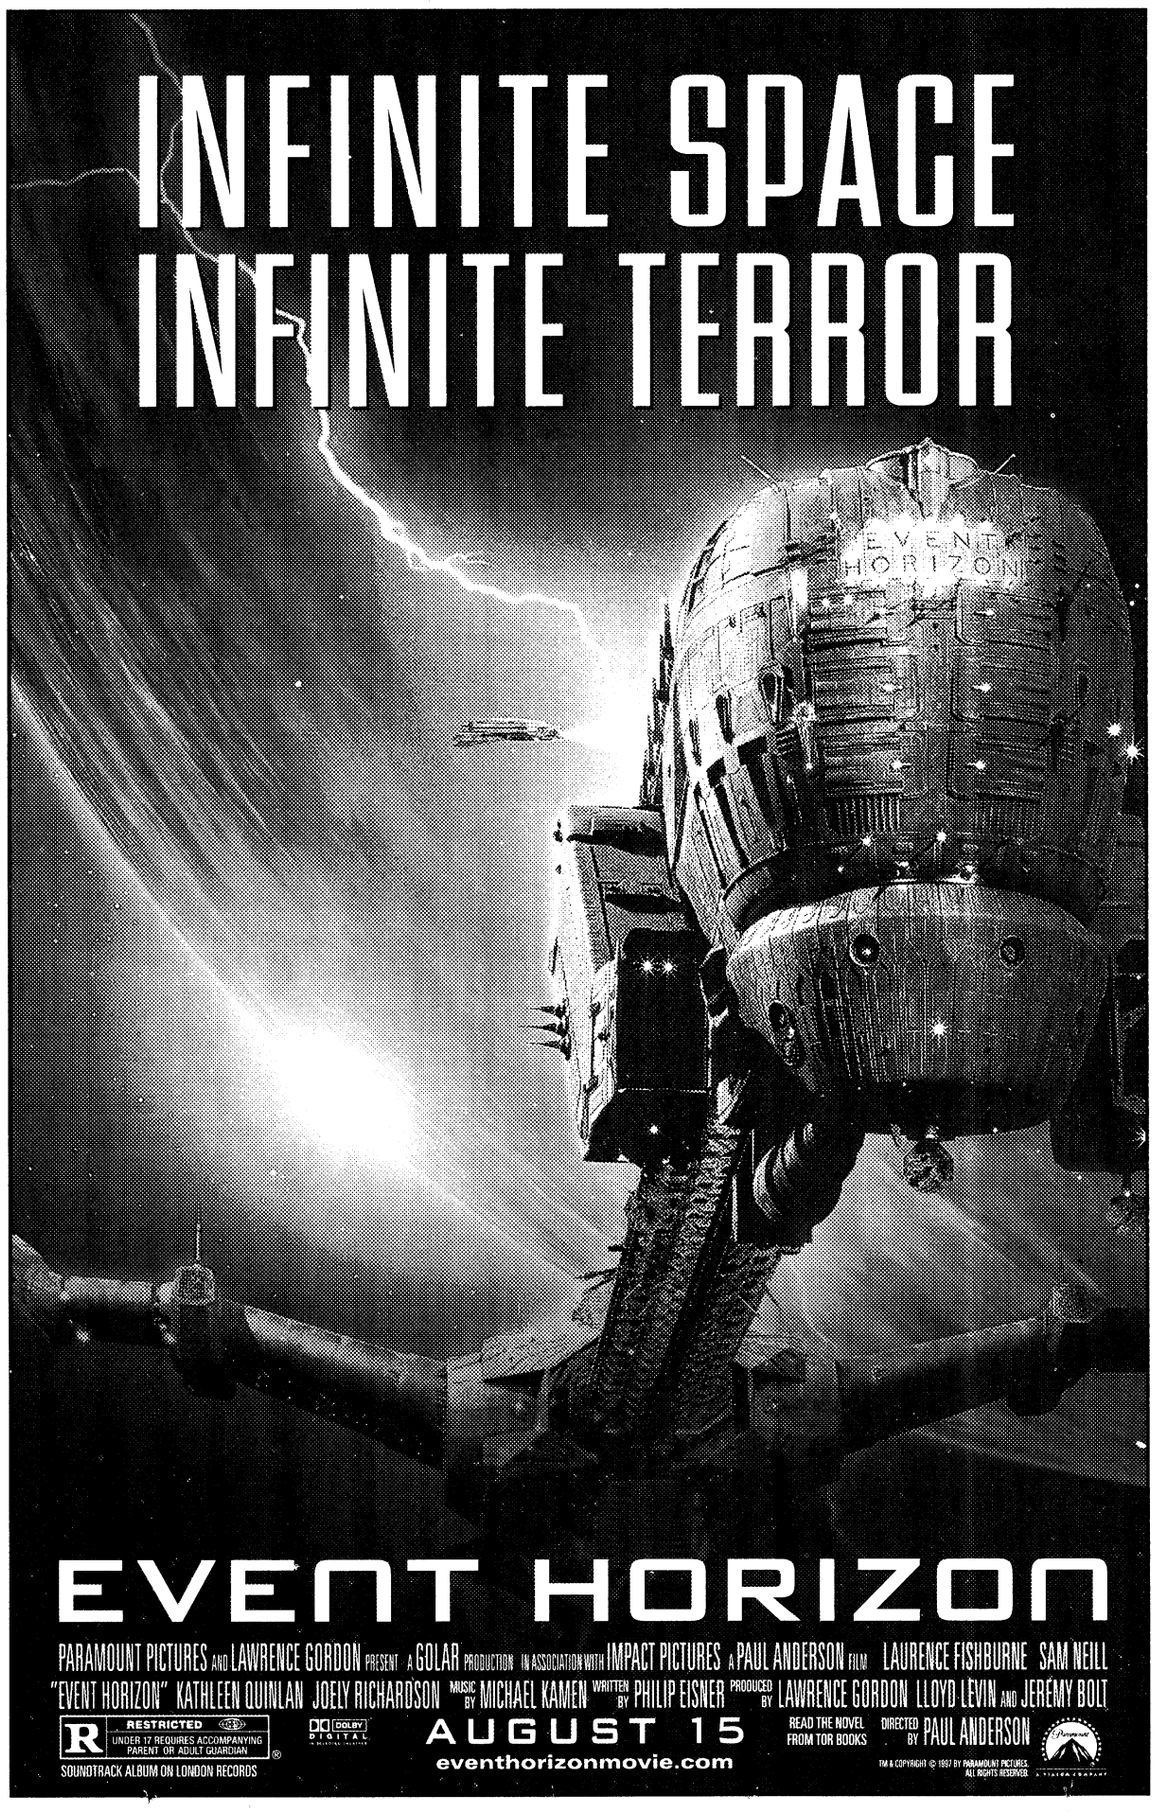
Retirees wait for dental plan

By Douglas J. Gillert
American Forces Press Service

WASHINGTON —Military retirees will have to wait a little longer for a dental plan.



Responding to concerns from the dental care industry, Congress wants the Department of Defense (DoD) to consider changing from a single national premium to a local or regional rate schedule.



Because the program was designed to be fully supported by premiums and member cost-shares, DoD health officials consider the industry concern fair and supportable.

"It's probably a good way to go," said Jean Storck, principal deputy for Health Services Financing. "Our only concern is that we're going to delay offering the benefit for several months."

Storck said it's impossible to know how much premiums will be or how much they will vary across

Army leadership reviews Senior Review Panel, IG reports

By Gerry J. Gilmore
Army News Service

WASHINGTON — The Senior Review Panel and inspector general (IG) reports on sexual misconduct in the Army are now complete and are expected to be released after Congress returns from summer recess.

"The Army's leadership is reviewing the findings and recommendations of both reports," said Army chief of Public Affairs Brig. Gen. John G. Meyer Jr., "and finishing plans for implementation.

"It's anticipated this will occur sometime in mid-September."

Since there is "considerable Congressional interest in the findings and recommendations," Meyer said, the Army leadership does not want to release the findings until Congress returns.

"This is the largest and most comprehensive study of its kind the Army ever conducted," Meyer said. "We will release the findings and recommendations to our Soldiers and the American people after we have in place a carefully developed plan for implementation.

"Comprehensive findings without corresponding actions do not serve the Army or the American people."

Last fall, Secretary of the Army Togo D. West Jr. directed the formation of the Senior Review Panel to take a comprehensive look at Army policies on sexual harassment and current processes. West took his action in the wake of allegations of sexual misconduct and abuses of authority at Aberdeen Proving Ground, Md., and other installations.

West also directed the Army inspector general to investigate and assess current sexual harassment policies and procedures at all basic and advanced individual training installations and throughout the Army's training base.

From January through April, the Senior Review Panel visited 59 stateside and overseas installations and locations. The IG teams visited training installations across the Army, to include Aberdeen, from December through March.

Army officials are examining the findings of both groups.

There is desire at the highest levels to fully evaluate and make the best use of all information provided by the reports, Meyer said.

"We owe the American people and our Soldiers a complete product, not a rushed product," he said.

Plan: Waits for contract bidders the nation.

"We're waiting for the contract bidders to tell us," she said. She said she doesn't foresee any other changes to the previously announced plan.

Under the plan, military retirees and their families will gain access to low-cost dental insurance similar in scope to the active duty family dental plan. The plan will offer three enrollment options: single, two-party and family. Unremarried spouses of deceased retirees and some other limited categories of enrollment also will be offered.

The premiums will cover one basic examination and one cleaning per enrollment year. New members will be required to pay the first four months' premiums when they enroll and must enroll for two years. Excluding exams and cleanings, they must pay a $50 annual deductible before cost-share payments kick in. After paying the deductible, they will be billed 20 percent of cost for restorative care and sealants and 40 percent of cost for other services.

The company selected to provide the services will send information and enrollment forms to prospective members. Enrollees will receive a listing of participating dentists.

Storck said DoD will announce additional details, including the start-up date, once the contract is awarded.

DoD standardizes tuition aid for services

By Paul Stone
American Forces Press Service

WASHINGTON — All service members will be entitled to equal, uniform tuition assistance benefits under a new Department of Defense (DOD) policy.

The policy, approved in late May, is slated to go into effect in October 1998. Under it, all services will pay 75 percent of the cost of tuition for off-duty college and university courses up to a maximum of $187.50 per semester hour. Thus, for a typical, three-semester-hour course that hits the $187.50 per hour limit, the military would pay $562.50 and the individual $187.50.

Implementation was delayed to give the services time to budget for the mandated funding levels. The policy, established by Fred Pang, assistant secretary of defense for force management, also includes a $3,500 per year tuition assistance cap per service member. Costs for high school equivalency programs will continue to be fully funded.

Each service currently uses its own formula for providing tuition assistance, according to Otto J. Thomas, DoD's chief of continuing education. In addition to deciding how much they pay, the services establish their own per-course and per-year limits and overseas funding rates, he said. Installation commanders in some cases can redirect tuition assistance funds to other local programs.

Thomas said the differences between services' benefits could vary by up to $300 per course.

"If four service members from the different branches were sitting in the same college classroom, it's very likely they all would have paid a different amount out of their pockets under the current system," he said. "This has created problems as the services have become more joint in their missions — even collocating."

Service members began comparing notes and voiced concerns about the unequal funding, he said. The discrepancies came to the forefront during several studies in the past few years, including a 1994 study by the Defense Science Board Task Force on Quality of Life. The study, as well as congressional interest in the issue, spurred the DoD effort to the current policy change.

Thomas said not everyone will gain under new policy — Air Force tuition benefits generally have been more liberal than other services', so the uniform payment policy may raise some airmen's expenses slightly. He emphasized a great deal of research went into reaching agreement on the new policy and said he believes most courses service members take will fall within the funding limits.

About 300,000 service members take advantage of post-secondary courses each year.

Course qualifies pathfinder candidates

Pathfinders lead the way in Army's land, air cargo operations

Pathfinder candidates prepare a sand table as part of their training.

A pathfinder candidate directs a helicopter to a drop zone during recent training at the Fort Benning Pathfinder School.

Pathfinder candidates prepared some final missions before qualification, with sand tables arranged with twigs and grass and nearby drop zones laid out with marking panels.

Inspecting cargo tie-downs and laying out helicopter landing zones, pathfinders lead the way in Army land and air cargo operations.

Many perceive pathfinders as some kind of trailblazing crew, but their actual job is to ensure the proper transportation of cargo and directing aircraft and airborne Soldiers to landing areas.

"We teach basic pathfinder skills, inspection of the rigging of air items, sling-loading, as well as establishing drop zones and helicopter landing zones," said Staff Sgt. William T. Sigmon, a Pathfinder School instructor.

These are not the only classes taught at the three-week course.

"The first two weeks of the course deal a lot in academics," Sigmon said. "We teach air traffic controlling, air medevac and inspection of cargo.

"The last week of the course involves a lot of hands-on activities and a field training exercise," he said.

Many of the students in the course were previously involved in preparing drop zones and performing many of the activities of a pathfinder.

"I've been running drop zones for years," said Staff Sgt. Brian A. Arabinko, a student at the Pathfinder School. "This course has taught me more expedient ways of preparing the zones and how to do it to Army standard."

The course is also open to the other branches of the armed forces and to members of foreign military organizations.

"I wanted to take the course because it helps me set up drop zones and helicopter landing zones for the Army unit I am with and when I return to an Air Force base," said Air Force Staff Sgt. Don Garrett, assigned to the 75th Ranger Regiment.

"I found it interesting that Air Force regulations are used a lot for the pathfinders," he said.

Above all, the course teaches safety and the standards to the pathfinder candidates, Arabinko said.

"Doing it the easy way may not be the right way or the safe way for that matter.

"I used to think that having done this for years I knew it all, but I was humbled by this course."

These pathfinder candidates now lead the way for transportation of Soldiers and equipment and the preparation of landing and drop zones throughout the Army, Sigmon said.

Reserve unit drills trainees

Infantry Training Brigade

Would you, could you, stop working a full-time civilian job to put on a Battle Dress Uniform (BDU), to train, run, sweat and essentially go through basic training all over again?

The Soldiers of the 1st Brigade, 330th Infantry Regiment, 84th Division, do just that in two-week intervals every year.

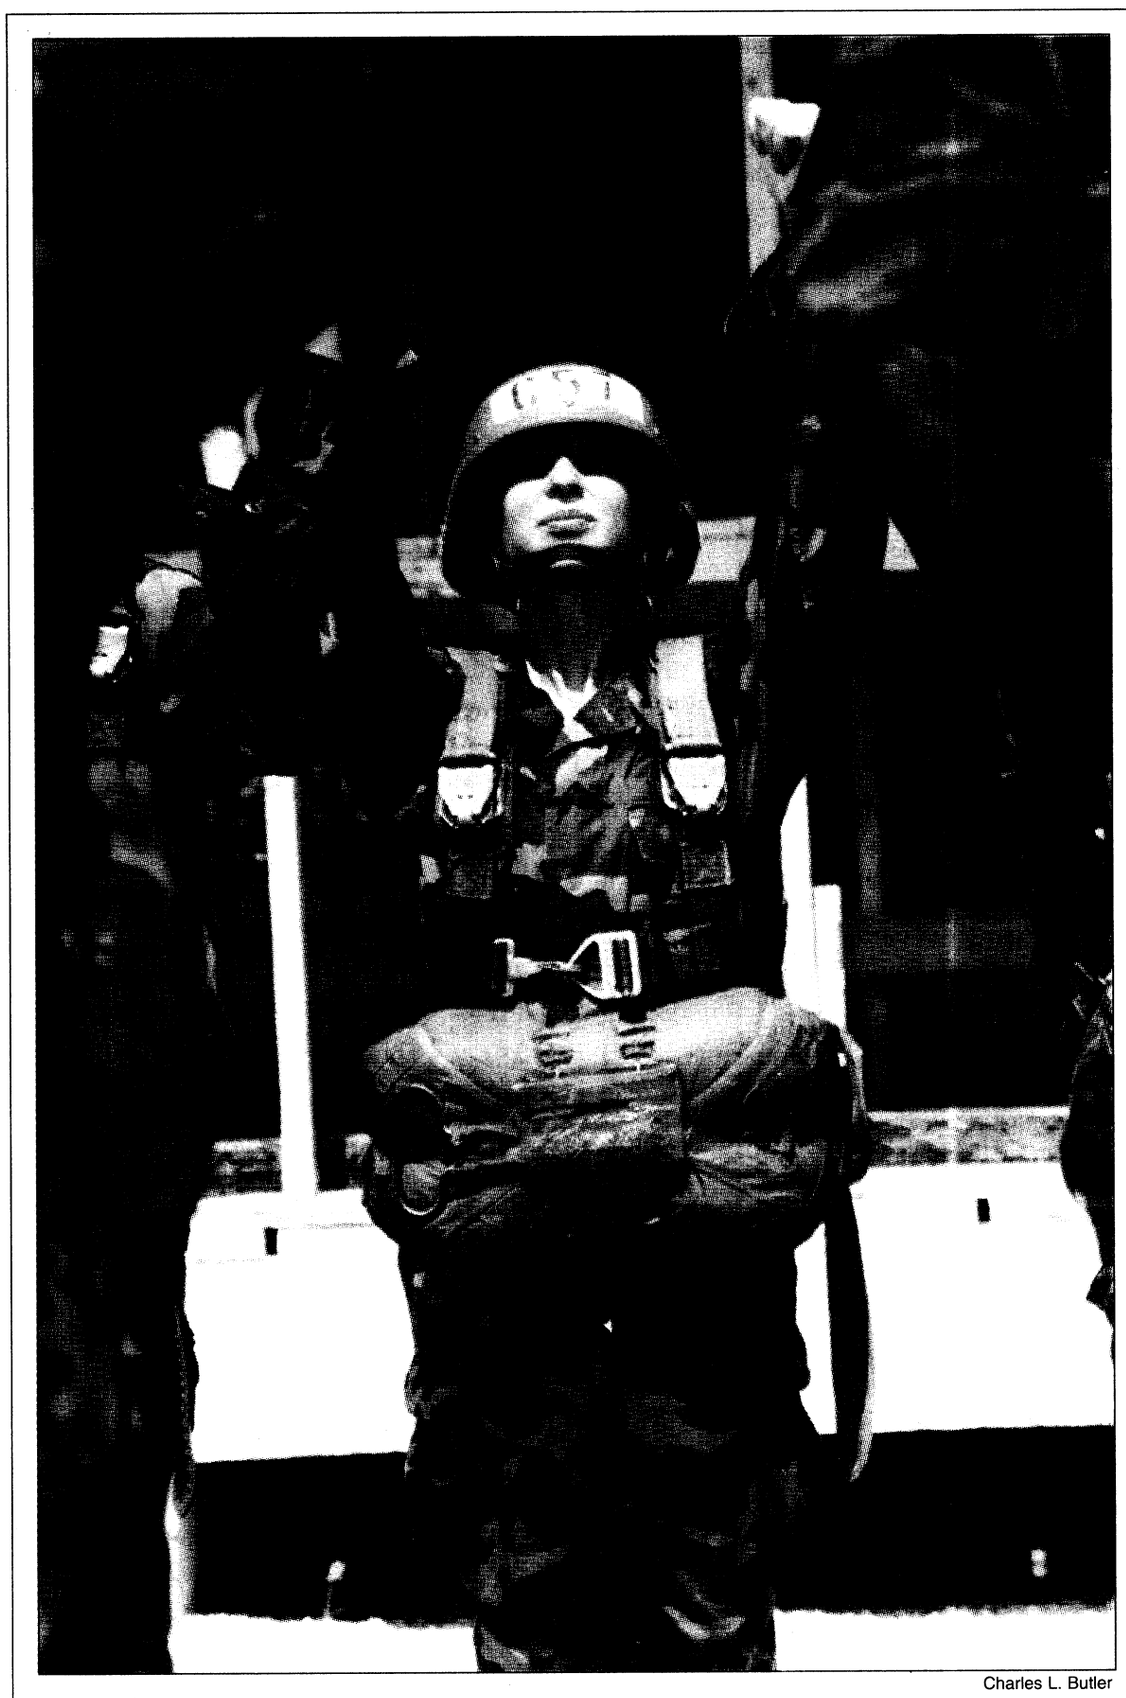
These Soldiers are drill sergeants and they come to Fort Benning for two weeks to train initial entry Soldiers.

"(This is) based on old system, like the plower leaving his field to fight and then coming right back to plowing," said Captain Roger F. Cavazos, Company E commander, 1st Battalion, 19th Infantry Regiment. "The drill sergeants are a large part of the total Army. For the Reserves, they work full time jobs and they leave them in order to be Soldiers."

"The drill sergeants all have full time jobs," said Col. David M. Herring, 1st Brigade, 330th Inf. Regt., 84th Div., commander. "They take the challenge of being a full time drill sergeant for their rotation. It takes a unique individual to accomplish this and they are unique individuals."

The drill sergeants are from the Michigan and Indiana area. The 1st Battalion, 19th Inf. Regt., on Sand Hill housed the drill sergeants during their stay.

"The reserve unit does the same work as the active duty, they are looked upon as part of a team," said Capt. Kirn A. Chapman, a company commander with the 84th. "They get no special treatment. The trainees are in the middle of week four and training continues with no interruption."



"The third and fourth week of training is the most critical time," Reserve 1st Sgt. Petronilo Delagarza, Company E first sergeant said. "Young kids are transitioning into young men. The drill sergeants assist the whole way, in all aspects.

"We had one Soldier who was so scared of shooting a gun that he would shoot in the air," Delagarza said.

"We are the only Infantry (one station unit training) in the Army Reserves," Herring said. "The downsizing of the 70th Division went from five brigades to one and joined the 84th. We are responsible for a broad range of training including initial entry training and basic course training.

"The drill sergeants fold right in with the active duty drill sergeants. The only difference is the shoulder patch."

"The ITB and the 84th have a tremendous relationship," said Lt. Col. Mark A. Stevens, 1st Bn., 19th Inf. Regt., commander. "Both are committed to providing the most highly qualified drill sergeants in the world. The challenges are the same for both active duty and reserve drill sergeants. The difference is the reserve have full time jobs and that is a challenge in itself."

63rd Engineer Co returns from deployment in Calif

By 1st Lt. William J. Brown
63rd Engineer Company

Twenty-six Soldiers from 3rd Platoon, 63rd Engineer Company (CSE), and two medics from 690th Medical Company returned to Fort Benning July 28 after completing a road construction project in the San Ysidro Mountains in San Diego County, Calif.

Road construction completed by the unit enhances the ability of the U.S. Border Patrol to combat drug smugglers and illegal border crossings in the area, said Dave Brown, a border patrol agent for Brownfield Station.

Soldiers from the 63rd Eng. Co. worked with Company A, 181st Eng. Battalion, from Massachusetts Army National Guard and Company C, 206th Eng. Bn., from Kentucky Army National Guard in Operation OTAY-97 under Task Force Southwest Border and Joint Task Force Six (JTF-6).

The operation was responsible for the completion of more than 30 kilometers of road improvements on federal lands west of San Diego along the border with Mexico.

> "Our heavy equipment operators gained enormous amounts of confidence in their ability and were rewarded with a real-world use for their hard work."
> — Staff Sgt. Harriet Shaw
> Squad leader, 63rd Engineer Co.

During their three-week deployment, 63rd Soldiers completed more than two kilometers of road surfacing and 16 kilometers of road maintenance.

The Soldiers of the 63rd battled mountainous terrain in order to complete their mission. In many areas, the winding roads are only 12 feet wide with a rock wall on one side and a shear drop of up to 1,000 feet on the other side, creating a high-risk training environment.

"This was a unique opportunity for Soldiers," said Staff Sgt. Harriet Shaw, a squad leader with the 63rd. "Our heavy equipment operators gained enormous amounts of confidence in their ability and were rewarded with a real-world use for their hard work."

Through intensive supervision of seasoned NCOs, all Soldiers returned to Fort Benning without injury.

Since road construction took place in an environmentally sensitive area, special construction methods were used to protect surrounding habitats. Ammonium lignon sulfinate (ALS), a byproduct of paper production, was used to bind gravel together to form an all-weather road.

"It's essentially sap from trees, but when it's applied to the road properly, it gives the appearance of a paved road," said Platoon Sergeant Sgt. 1st Class Tony Williams. "ALS is also water soluble, so it has no impact on the environment."

The 63rd's adherence to environmental protection measures protected the tecate cypress trees in work areas. This forest of tecate cypress is one of four left in the world.

Overall planning for the project was completed by the California Army National Guard's Task Force Southwest Border. JTF-6 provides training missions for all branches of the military in support of law enforcement agencies .

news from the front

By Chief Warrant Officer J.D. Smith
498th Rear Detachment

The 498th prepared for the aviation's inspection team visit. As anticipated, the unit displayed it's best. There were many praises given out commending the Soldiers on a job well done.

The team effort is worthy of praise, but a few stood out above and beyond, including Chief Warrant Officer 3 Steve Scott, the safety officer. It helps everyone at home to sleep easier knowing that safety is the top priority.

Other Soldiers who were recognized were in the Petroleum, Oils and Lubricants (POL) section. They were Staff Sgt. William Coates, Staff Sgt. Steve Campbell, Spc. Kim Dooley and Spc. Latrice Love. The POL section deserves a big pat on the back for a job well done because without them, we could not stay in the air.

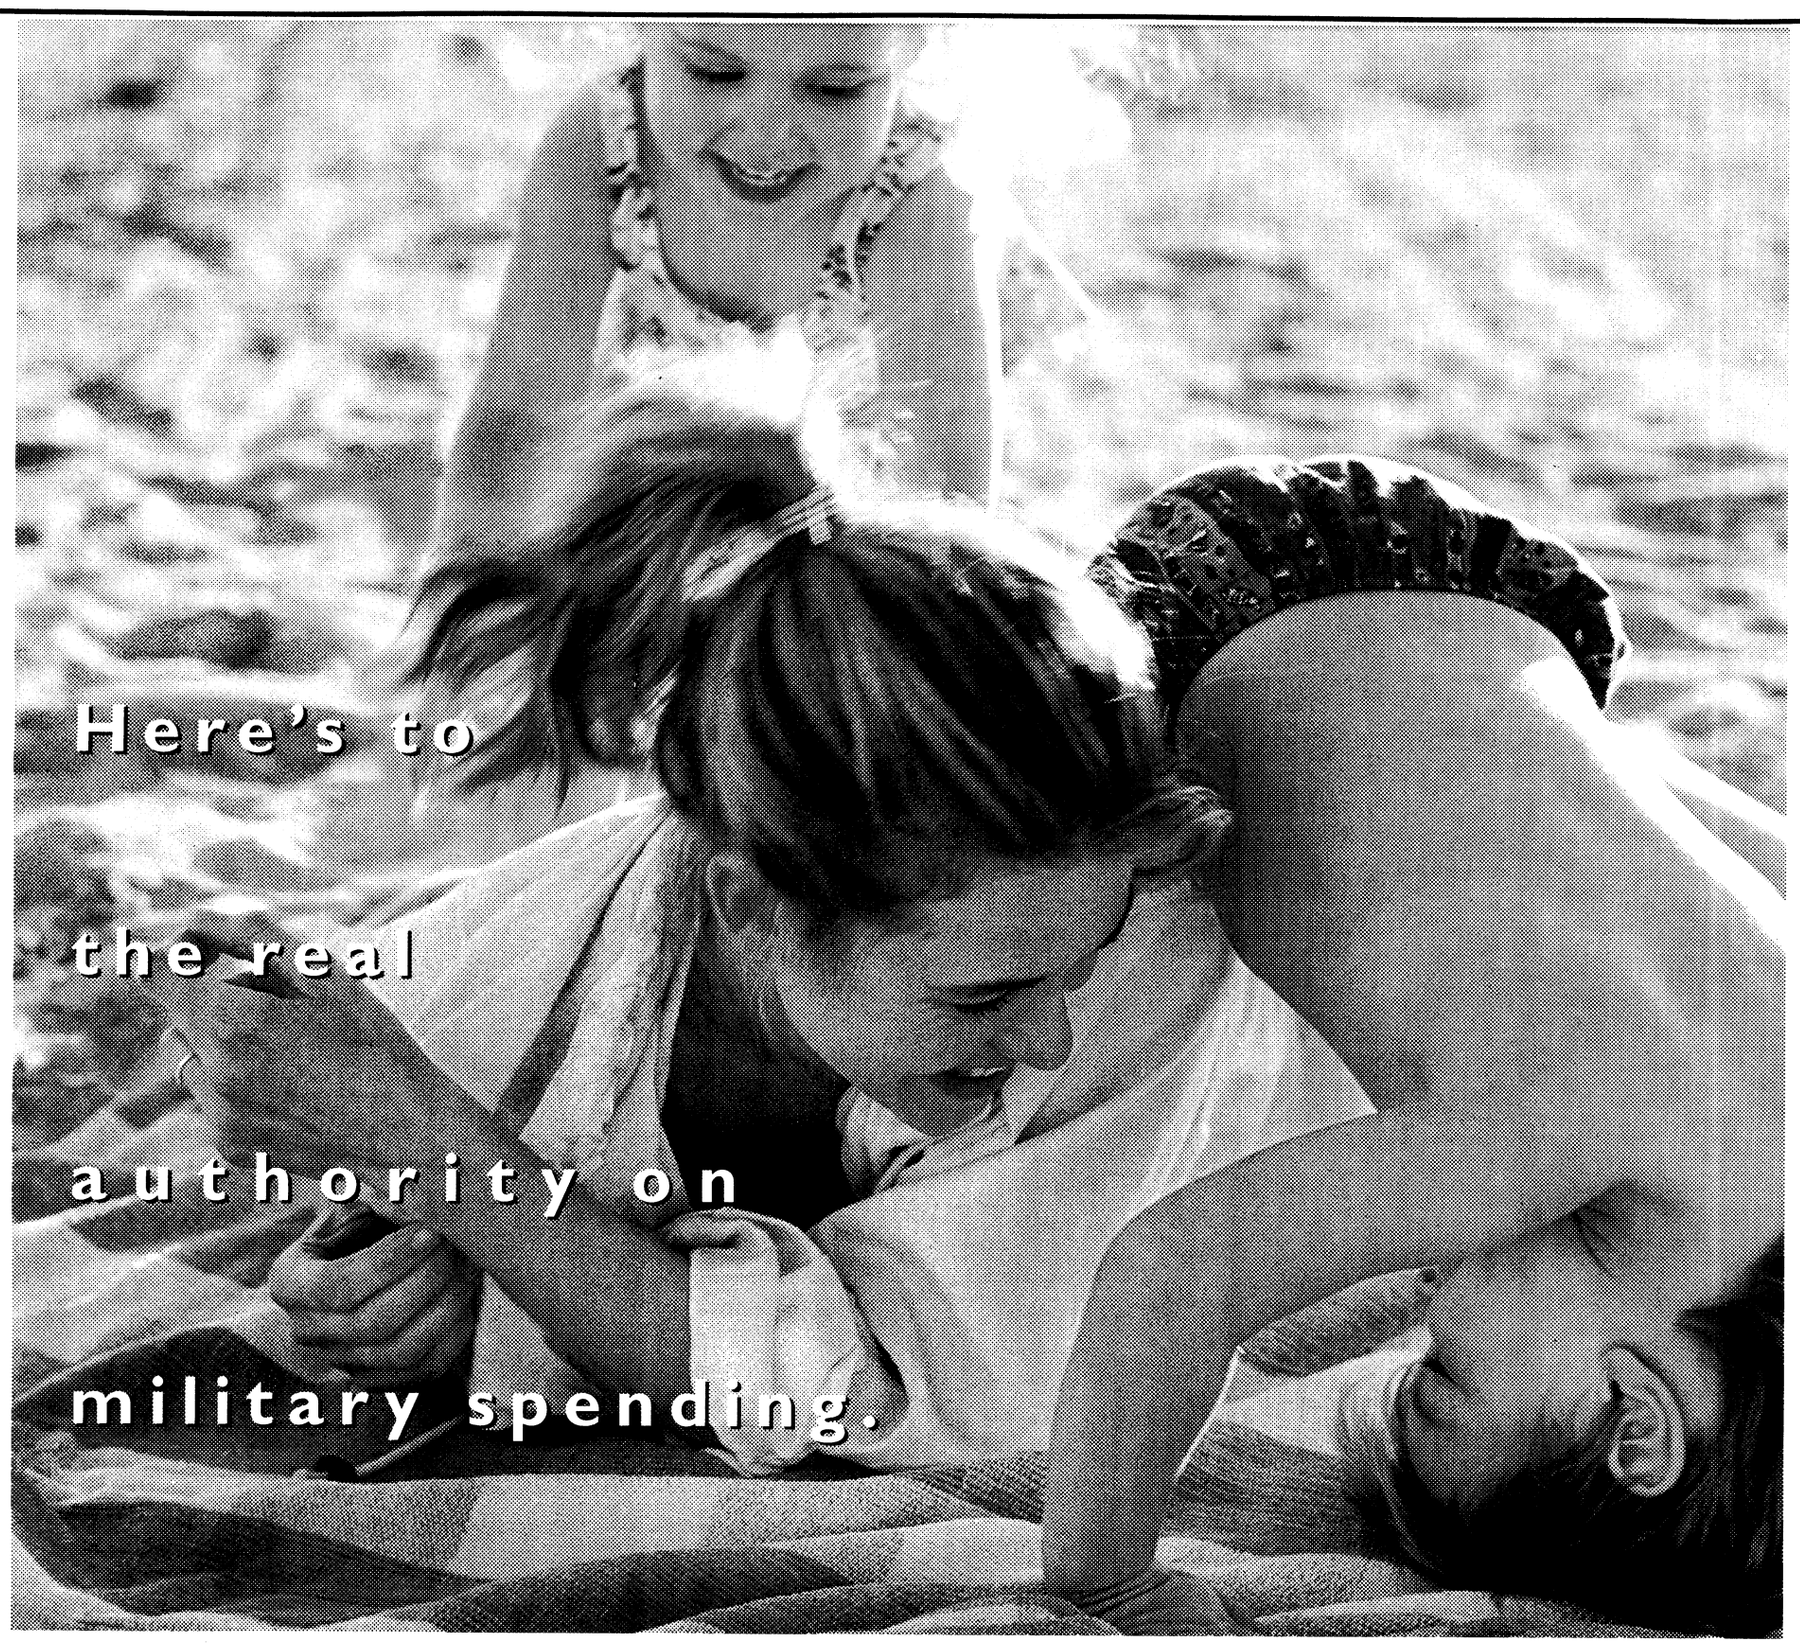
The Aviation Ground Support Equipment team, headed by Staff Sgt. Rozelene Wilson and Sgt. Kathleen Idelbery, are working hard and getting well-deserved recognition.

Maj. Tracy Wyatt awarded the entire unit with the new unit coin for their success with the Aviation Operation Readiness Safety and Standardization Evaluation.

The coins were designed by 1st Lt. Scott Rollston, the Rear Detachment commander, and sponsored by the 36th Engineer Group.

The 498th excelled in other areas as well. Sgt. Romona McCoy won NCO of the month last month. What a demonstration of self motivation and professionalism in adverse conditions.

Another example of 498th perseverance is Spc. Robert Hernandez having the best preventive maintenance checked and serviced (PMCS) vehicle last month. The vehicle he accomplished this with was a five ton, one of the largest vehicles in the Army inventory.



Let's see how well he PMCSes his newborn, the smallest piece of equipment in the Army inventory.

This past week, Stabilization Force II, the next rotation inbound, was at the Blue Factory. There was a lot of information passed between the 159th (a unit from Germany) and 498th.

The advance party will begin to arrive in September, with the main body arriving in early October.

"The focus remains on safe operations, but I can see the light at the end of the tunnel," Wyatt said.

Red Cross dental program trains volunteers as dental assistants

By Susie H. Kim
Editorial assistant

Deborah Waylon dreamed of being a dental assistant since she was a child. She put aside her dreams to raise her two children and morally support her husband, Sgt. 1st Class Kenneth Waylon.

July 30, a look of triumph crossed her face as she received her certificate as a dental assistant. She finally achieved her dream because of the American Red Cross Dental Assistant Program.

The story is fairly common, according to Paula Winn, dental assistant. Many of the students are either military spouses or family members who use the program as an opportunity to jump-start their own careers. Many are homemakers who need new directions and come to gain valuable work experience.

The American Red Cross Dental Assistant Program is a three-and-a half-week program designed to introduce the students into the field of dentistry. There is no set criteria for admittance to the program. The program seeks motivated individuals, Lugo said.

The students go through rigorous training, which consists of 60 percent classroom training and 40 percent hands-on training. The students learn how to pass, sterilize and handle the instruments.

According Lt. Col. Alberto Lugo, preventive dentistry officer, the most critical part of training is learning how to "work the chair." Working the chair means assisting the dentist with the patients.

The students are encouraged to serve 300 additional hours each as a volunteer after graduation. Lugo believes that by that time, the students will have acquired enough experience to become effective assistants.

The U.S. Army and the Red Cross have a memorandum of agreement that allows the students the access to a military facility.

Because of this, Lugo said the students are held to the same standards as the military personnel. The students are required to go through cardiopulmonary resuscitation training, infection control training, and have their immunizations up to date.

This year, the program had 15 students begin and July 30 they finished with all 15. This was not a small feat, according to Winn.

"The students have worked very hard on this, I am very enthused about what they have done," Winn said.

Lugo believes besides helping the military family members, this program links the military and the community together. The program allows both sides to cooperate to build a better relationship.

"I think this is the best thing that can happen for the community," Lugo said, "I think this is the best thing that can happen for the government, because they provide assistance to give better care to our soldiers and the students get a skill they can apply later on."

The graduates are: Kathy Williamson, Nadine Manning, Danielle Lewis, Gwendolyn Scott, Deborah Wayland, Shadon McDonell, Dildas Aikens, Sharron Turner, Katherine Smith, Jane Baxter-lane, Marjorie McIntosh, Deborah West, Deborah Yates, Moraima Detro, and Kathy Mickey.

Faith Middle School to enforce dress code

By Jacqué Hill
Special to the Bayonet©

No more sagging, baggy pants and no hats or sunglasses will be seen in the halls of Faith Middle School this year. For the first time, Faith's staff is enforcing a dress code for its students.

Because clothes are an important social aspect for teen-agers and sometimes become disruptive to the educational process, teachers at Faith suggested this dress code, according to Ann Justice, assistant principal at Faith.

"I think the sagging pants are what people at Faith find disruptive and distasteful, even the parents," Justice said. "We've even had a couple of incidents where someone's pants have actually fallen down.

"The students can't fully concentrate and develop their skills when holding their pants up."

Justice explained that not all of the students have worn sagging pants in the past, but it has been enough to disrupt the educational process.

"Only a few of the students were wearing their pants that way, but they jeopardized their learning in the process," she said. "For instance, I've seen some students with sagging pants dribble a basketball with one hand while holding their pants up with the other hand.

"That's not conducive to developing good motor skills or to a good education."

Lucinda Spinelli, a Faith parent of Nick, eighth grade, and Michael, sixth grade, and wife of Lt. Col. Jim Spinelli, chief of Psychiatry, Martin Army Community Hospital, also agrees with the teachers' decision to enforce a dress code.

"I think it's great," she said. "I saw some really strange things last year. It was almost like a contest to see who could wear the baggiest, lowest pants.

"I know that's normal for teens, but they need to do it at home, not at school. At school, they need to be concentrating on education rather than clothes."

Faith's dress code includes other bans, too. These clothing rules apply to boys and girls:

•Pants must be worn at waist level. Sagging is not permitted.

•No muscle shirts or see-through shirts may be worn.

•Hats and sunglasses are not permitted, unless at the direction of a teacher in physical education or industrial arts. In these special circumstances, the hats and sunglasses will be stored in gym lockers or in the industrial arts classroom.

Girls must follow some additional dressing rules. They are:

•Dresses, shorts and skirts must be at an appropriate length. Nothing shorter than approximate fingertip level may be worn.

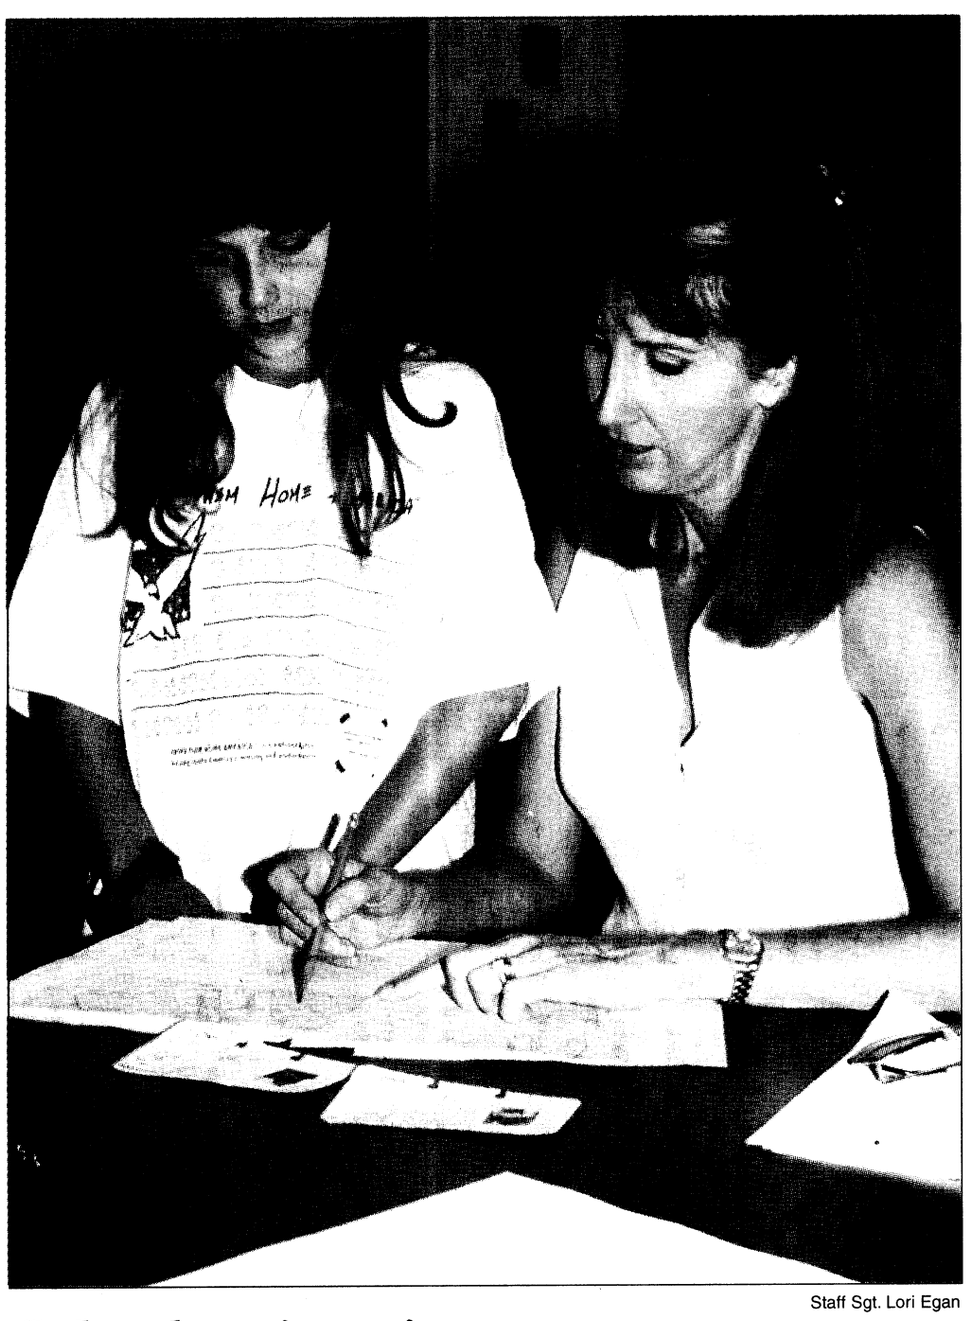
•Bare midriffs are not permitted.

•No tank tops may be worn.

Boys at Faith must tuck their shirts in to comply with the dress code. Michael Spinelli is not fond of this rule.

"I think the rules are good, but I don't like to tuck my shirt in," he said.

Any clothing deemed disruptive to the learning environment, such as gang-related or immodest clothing, will be changed. Parents of students wearing this type of clothing will be called and asked to bring more appropriate clothes to the school.



Justice said Faith's staff hopes this dress code will help the students to achieve better educations.

"We want them (the students) to be totally emerged in education and to enjoy school," she said. "Hopefully, this dress code will help them do that."

Fort Benning to waive age requirement for younger students

By Jacqué Hill
Special to the Bayonet©

In the past, Fort Benning Schools have not allowed children not meeting the age requirements to enroll in pre-kindergarten, kindergarten or first-grade classes, as outlined by Georgia state guidelines.

But beginning this year, the school system will comply with the Domestic Dependent Elementary and Secondary Schools' (DDESS) policy to waive this age requirement when a child has been attending an accredited school.

Georgia state guidelines require children to be 5 on or before Sept. 1 to enter kindergarten and 4 on or before this date to enter pre-K classes. According to the DDESS policy, this requirement may be waived for children who have completed a year of education at a lower grade level than the one they are entering. This year of education must have been provided by an accredited institution.

Kathy Einhorn, director of Curriculum, Fort Benning Schools, explained accrediting.

"A day care center or preschool program must follow educational guidelines set out by the state to be accredited," Einhorn said.

Parents must provide proof their children have successfully completed the next lower level of education. Acceptable proof of this may include report cards, student evaluations or other documentation proving the institution provided a structured educational program and attainment of age-appropriate educational goals and objectives.

For children coming to the Fort Benning Schools from out of state, the institutions they attended must be accredited in their respective state, Einhorn said.

"For those from out of state, we may have to call the center to be assured it is accredited by that state," she said.

To receive a waiver of the age requirement, a parent must make an appointment with the principal of the school his or her child will enroll in and take their documentation. The principal will decide whether to give the child a waiver or not based on information provided by the parent.

Any child registered in the Fort Benning Schools under exception to the age requirement will be placed in a class appropriate to his or her educational level. Also, according to the policy, any child experiencing difficulty with learning or appropriate social and emotional adjustment may be moved to a lower-level class. This replacement will be done only after other options for resolving the child's problems have been tried and have failed, and only after education officials have discussed the child's problems and options with his or her parents.

Fort Benning is not the only installation to adopt this policy, Einhorn said.

"This will be practiced throughout the DDESS system," she said.

SOA library offers storyteller, movies during children's program

By Aubrey Reed
School of the Americas

If your kids have a love for books, bring them to the John B. Amos Library at the School of the Americas for the Children's Summer Program.

The program, which began earlier this summer, comes in two parts. The first is a one-hour reading session, held from 1 to 3 p.m. every other Thursday. A storyteller reads tales in both Spanish and English for the children.

The second part, also from 1 to 3 p.m. on alternate Thursdays, is the movie program. This consists of showing G-rated movies, such as The Mighty Ducks, The Lion King and The Big Green.

The programs are for children 6 to 12 years old. Children younger than 6 may attend only if accompanied by an adult.

This is the third year of the library's program. It began after SOA librarian Yamill Collazo spoke to a guest instructor whose children didn't speak English. Collazo said he wanted to find a way to help them learn English and to help other area children who wanted to learn Spanish.

"We just wanted to provide a good learning atmosphere for the children and to let them know the library is a cool place to be," he said.

The storyteller reads to the children for the first hour of the program. After the formal storytelling, refreshments are served and the children are asked what they want to do next.

"The kids can read books, watch movies or just hang out and have a good time," Collazo said.

There is no specific time that parents should arrive to pick up their children, he said. If a parent needs extra time, the children are welcome to stay past 3 p.m. However, the librarian pointed out, this is not a baby-sitting service.

For more information, contact Nicholas Sandoval at the the John B. Amos Library by calling 545-4631.

The green containers community members began using in June to recycle cardboard have been a huge success.

Over the past two months, the installation's amount of recycled cardboard has increased by 55 percent. For those community members not yet taking advantage of the program, it is an easy way to recycle a product that has a use rather than taking up expensive landfill space. Here is a refresher on the program:

•These containers are marked on the front with white lettering stating "Recycle Cardboard Only." These containers provide a convenient alternative for units and activities to dispose of cardboard rather than making trips to the recycling center.

•These containers are designed to accept only boxes that have been flattened. Flattening the boxes will allow much more actual material to be stored in the containers, thereby greatly increasing efficiency.

•A narrow slot near the top allows the users to place the cardboard in the container. The top doors of the container are not to be opened by the user. Attempts to open the doors will cause damage to the container.

•To optimize the system, do not put any material in the green containers except corrugated cardboard. Corrugated cardboard is two layers of dense paper (usually brown) with a fluted inner layer.

•Other forms of paperboard are not to be placed in the green containers. These include cardboard coated with plastic or wax or grossly contaminated with oil or food. This form of cardboard should be flattened and placed in refuse containers for disposal.

•These containers are also a good tool for commanders to assist the installation in meeting the Army's goal to recover and recycle solid waste to the greatest extent possible.

•Most of all, by recycling cardboard, Fort Benning has a direct cost avoidance for every pound that is not transported off the installation to a landfill. After the first three weeks of use, Fort Benning diverted almost 136 tons of corrugated cardboard from its waste stream.

For more information about the green cardboard containers, call Walter Nichols, Solid Waste Program manager, Directorate of Public Works, at 545-1007.

Summertime precautions lead to fun

Georgia Insurance Information Service

ATLANTA — There are many ways to enjoy the summer, but safety should always comes first, according to members of the Georgia Insurance Information Service (GIIS).

The service reminds all Georgians that summer fun should include safety precautions for all activities.

Driving safety

Biking is what children do, but they don't always think about their own safety. According to a study by the Insurance Institute for Highway Safety, riding out into traffic from a driveway or a side street without slowing down or looking is the most common cause of accidents among children riding bikes. These accidents prove fatal for more school-age children than any other age group and boys are seven times more likely to be killed than girls.

"Both drivers and those responsible for the children should be very cautious," said David Colmans of the GIIS. "Drivers should always be on the lookout for children riding bikes and even playing on sidewalks, and parents and guardians should do their best to remind children about not darting out into traffic."

The GIIS also reminds motorists that summertime is a high-risk driving season because there are so many families and others on the road to and from their vacations. Use all the defensive-driving skills and be prepared for problems.

"Most importantly," Colmans said, "don't drink and drive. Remember that vacation fun and hot summer days are no excuse for driving after drinking."

Weather

Summertime means thunderstorms and high winds developing quickly and potential hail damage.

"No matter if you are at home or at a vacation location, think about weather safety," Colmans said. He noted about 3,000 hailstorms pelt the United States every year. Damage can occur to both property and people.

"Think about this," Colmans said, "a large hailstone at least 1.5 inches in diameter (about the size of a golf ball) can hit the Earth at 80 miles per hour. This is about the same energy as a one-pound object dropped from a height of 44 feet."

High winds from a thunderstorm can flip over light airplanes, push over large trucks on highways and push over trees onto roadways, parked vehicles and buildings. The other major threat is from lightening.

"If a thunderstorm approaches, get inside a vehicle or into a building," Colmans said. Lightening can strike if a person is outside, especially under or near a tree or other tall object like a tower or a clothesline. If you are caught outside, crouch down as low as possible and don't move until the threat has passed.

Boating

The use of life preservers is important. Individuals in boats should wear their life preservers at all times.

The GIIS also reminds boaters that the drinking and boating rules are just as important as those that prohibit drinking and driving. Safe operation of a boat and safe conduct of the boat's occupants can make the difference between a safe and enjoyable summer and one that is tragic.

Parks and recreation

Children using swings, either in the back yard or at a playground or park, should be supervised. Colmans tells parents there should be a soft landing zone around a swing set.

Usually sand or bark chips are used, but the size of the landing zone is also important. It should be twice as wide as the distance from the center post of the swing set to the outer limit of the swings in both directions.

Avoid using hard swings, such as wooden or rigid plastic, in favor of soft swings, such as canvas, to avoid the potential injuries of the child being hit in the head or face.

BAYONET CLASSIFIEDS REALLY WORK!

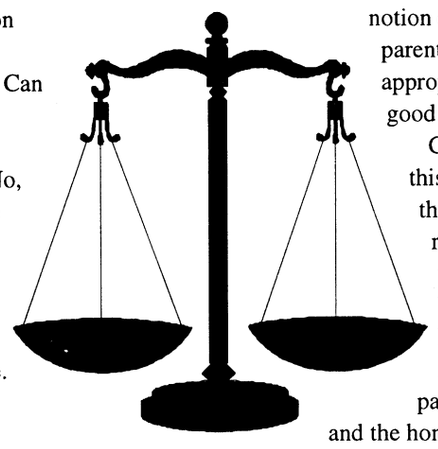
Respect for authority keeps society healthy

By Chaplain (Capt.) Vern E. Jordin II
30th AG Battalion (Reception)

"You can't legislate morality" is a statement I've heard many times in my experience with "shop talk."

If by that statement it is meant that legislation is unable to make persons moral people or that legislation cannot change a person's heart, then maybe you can't legislate morality.

The problem I have with the statement is the attitude promoted by it: we have no business trying to make laws to govern moral behaviors. Are the Ten Commandments simply a nice religious code for religious people?



The Apostle Paul wrote, "For when the Gentiles, which have not the law, do by nature the things contained in the law, these, having not the law, are a law unto themselves: Which show the work of the law written in their hearts (Romans 2: 14-15, KJV)."

I learned in sociology class that every culture has a set of mores, which govern community members. Interestingly, nearly all of these follow a pattern much like the Ten Commandments. Could it be that everyone knows it's wrong to lie, steal, murder, commit adultery or dishonor parents?

Granted the first four commandments are directed toward a religious theme of honoring God as the sole deity. I embrace this whole-heartedly for personal religious reasons. I believe there is a benefit to society as well.

God represents the ultimate in authority. To deny God or to resist submission to his authority is to declare oneself the authority, at least for one's own life.

I think this is at the root of every sin. I am sure that declaring oneself as the ultimate authority will meet with objection from the community. Can we legislate respect for authority? No, but we make laws that punish those who do not respect authority (i.e. contempt of court laws).

Honoring parents is similar to honoring God. Parents represent the first experience of authority in our lives. I believe the nation that does not honor parents is doomed for destruction.

When parents and God are not honored as authority, then what authority is worthy of honor? Can we expect children in such cases will respect law enforcement officers? Certainly there are examples of bad parenting, but the notion of honoring parents and their appropriate authority is good for a people.

Can we legislate this? We make laws that hold parents responsible for their children's behavior. Doesn't this imply the need for parental authority and the honoring of parents?

We also have laws against murder, rape, lying and stealing. These help to keep order in our society when we enforce them and punish violators.

Can we stop people from sinning because we make something against the law? No. Speeding is against the law, yet people still speed everyday. I see lots of people speeding on I-185 — until they reach post. Why is that?

We do need to hold moral standards high. We do need to take action to punish, discipline or admonish violators. If our law enforcement officers were only allowed to stop people and yell at them for speeding, but never give a fine, there would be more chaos on our highways and more deaths because of increased accident rates.

The word of God states that sexual immorality was to be punished by death (Leviticus 20). God certainly takes it more seriously than we do. The woman caught in adultery was not condemned to die, that's true (John 8). But, her accusers were not trying to uphold the law. They wanted to destroy Jesus. Jesus commanded her to stop sinning. She suffered public humiliation. Jesus held up the moral standard.

We've seen enough traffic accidents to know laws governing speed are necessary. Haven't we seen enough immorality to know we need to do something to help limit it? How many families have to break apart destroying children's faith and security? How many spouses have to suffer the emotional and social pain of infidelity for us to say, "Enough is enough!"

Recent months have brought an emphasis on preventing sexual harassment in the work place. We've seen top leaders accused of adultery. Some have taken these things seriously (I think most have), but some have not.

Maybe punishing harassers is like giving a speeding ticket that helps prevent worse things from happening. We won't stop it completely, but we can limit it significantly.

Moral standards are important for the social health of our nation. We must hold the standards high. If not, we send a message to the next generation that morals aren't important. I believe the result would be anarchy.

Day of fasting helps us remember faith in God

By Chaplain (Capt) Chana Timoner
The Infantry Center Chapel

The ninth day of Av in the Hebrew calendar is a singularly sad day in the annals of Jewish history.

It is a major fast day, the only full 24-hour fast day, other than Yom Kippur. All other fast days in Judaism are less than 24 hours. The fast begins at sundown Monday and continues until sundown Tuesday.

It is a date on which a number of terrible tragedies befell the Jewish people. Most notably, it is the date upon which both great temples were destroyed. The first temple was destroyed by the Babylonians in 586 B.C. and the second was destroyed by the Romans in 76 C.E.

The Book of Job and parts of Jeremiah are studied because they refer to the destruction of the second temple and speak to the sorrows that befall all peoples.

In the desert, the people began to weep and to complain about being taken from their secure place in Egypt. God said, "Because you wept without cause, I will therefore make this day an eternal day of mourning for you."

God later ordered the destruction of the temple that day and condemned the entire generation of Israelites who left slavery to die in the desert.

The only exceptions were the two spies, Caleb and Joshua, who came back from Canaan with a favorable report, thereby confirming the people's faith in the protection of God.

Even Miriam, Moses and Aaron, the people's leaders, died in the Sinai wilderness, unable to go into the land of Israel.

Bayonet Classifieds Really Work!

ask the judge

By 1st Lt. Stephen Payne
Office of the Staff Judge Advocate

Q: I don't know anything about cars except how to drive them. How do I keep from being ripped off when I take my car in for repairs?

A: Not many things are as potentially frustrating as car repairs. If you happen to stumble upon a dishonest mechanic, be ready for some trying times, that is, a lot of time, expense and hassle, no matter how sagaciously you deal with him or her after initially authorizing some work.

There are a few steps you can take to minimize your headaches. Think of it as a three-step process: picking your repair shop, negotiating for and authorizing the work to be done and dealing with problems after it's finished.

The best way to pick a repair shop is to go to one that other people recommend. I'm always interested in where the people who know something about cars take theirs. I become especially curious when those people tell me their mechanics sometimes tell them that no work needs to be done. Those are the mechanics of my dreams.

So get a sense of the mechanic scene from your friends and family and other people whose judgment you trust. Then give the Better Business Bureau a call to see if they have gotten any negative reports on the specific shops you are considering.

Negotiating for particular repair work to be done for a particular price can be tricky. I feel about as comfortable telling my mechanic what work needs to be done on my car as I do telling my doctor what work needs to be done on my body. I didn't go to medical school.

But I do have the same safeguard available to me in both situations: other experts. You should always get a detailed written estimate and then a second opinion.

Did you take your car into Willy's because a coworker said they treated her right? Remember how your uncle told you he takes his car to Charlie's? Have Charlie check Willy.

If you're sure the work Willy wants to do needs to be done, then maybe Charlie can give you an opinion on the cost over the phone — for free, since he wants your business, too.

If you're not sure about the work, you can even take the car over to Charlie's to have him check it out. The shops shouldn't mind much; it's no different from what many insurance companies require before they'll pay on a claim.

When you're sure you're getting a fair deal, go ahead and authorize the work, but do it precisely and have the shop note on the work order that the mechanic will call you before performing any work not covered by the estimate. Also get in writing a firm date when the car will be ready, and if time is of the essence for you, make sure you write that into the paperwork.

After the mechanic has performed the work, look your car over before accepting it. Despite your lack of expertise, you can notice obvious deficiencies, especially in body work. Point them out right away to see if the mechanic will take care of them. Negotiating for a friendly resolution at the time is easier than trying to take care of it later.

Be advised, however, that if the shop has worked on your car, you won't get it back until you pay. If you pay with a credit card, you may be able to stop payment by notifying your credit card company that you're disputing the bill.

If you can't resolve a dispute on the spot or don't notice anything is wrong with the shop's work until you get the car home, there are several steps you should take to try to get satisfaction.

You should contact the manager of the shop to try to work things out. If that doesn't work, you can make an appointment with a legal assistance attorney who can try to negotiate for you. If he or she is unsuccessful, you might want to file a claim in magistrate' court (small claims court) for money damages to cover fixing the car at another shop.

You could also file complaints with the Better Business Bureau, the Governor's Office of Consumer Affairs and the Armed Forces Disciplinary Control Board, which decides whether to place businesses off limits to military members.

The most important step in the entire process, however, is finding a good shop in the first place.

BBB advises caution when accepting collect phone calls

Better Business Bureau

The Better Business Bureau has been alerted to deceptive collect calls being made to individuals in the guise of a charitable donation.

According to call recipients, individuals are asked if they would accept a collect call from "Jennifer" (sometimes "John" is used). If they agree, they then hear a prerecorded message that informs them they have just made an $8 donation to a specified missing children's charity.

The BBB offers the following tips in dealing with such calls:

•Don't accept a collect call from someone you don't know. If you can, verify the full name of any collect caller before agreeing to accept the charges.

•If you accept a deceptive collect call in error, listen carefully to the message and note any information that might be helpful in filing a complaint (i.e., the exact name of the charity, its location, the name of the long distance carrier, etc.).

•Contact the BBB in your area so they can alert others in your community about the ruse.

•Inform your local phone carrier about the problem. However, they might not be able to provide immediate assistance without the name of the long distance carrier that placed the collect call.

•Look at your next phone bill carefully. It should identify the deceptive collect call charge and the long distance carrier that placed the call. Make a copy of this bill and send it along with a complaint letter to your local phone carrier, with a copy also being sent to:

Breastmilk offers protection against infections

By Jennifer Ledwick
Columbus La Leche League

Imagine a perfect food for your baby. A food you don't have to go to the store to get. A food loaded with nutrients that change as baby's needs change. A food that takes no time to prepare and is free.

Too good to be true? It's not. It's breastmilk.

Human milk is the best food a mother can offer her baby because nature has made it especially for human babies. Breastmilk contains antibodies that protect babies against some infections and diseases. Recent studies indicate that breastfeeding may also give some protection against sudden infant death syndrome.

Breastfeeding does help protect babies against ear infections, juvenile diabetes, colds, asthma and allergies, which means less trips to the health clinic. How you choose to feed your baby may also protect them against childhood cancers and can help protect mothers against breast and ovarian cancer as well as osteoporosis.

It has been estimated that in the United States, 5,000 lives would be saved each year if breastfeeding was practiced by all. The U.S. Department of Health and Human Services has included breastfeeding promotion as a goal for Healthy People 2000.

By the year 2000, the goal of our nation is to have 75 percent of all mothers breastfeeding their newborn babies. The American Academy of Pediatrics recommends breastfeeding for at least the first year of life.

In the past, women have had close family members and friends who breastfed. As society has moved away from extended families, women have lost this kind of support in breastfeeding. Therefore, a breastfeeding support group takes the place of the community and is very helpful in the education and support to women. This group is for all pregnant and nursing mothers (or any woman in support of breastfeeding) who would like to meet and share knowledge.

The Columbus La Leche League (breastfeeding support group) has resumed meetings the first Thursday of each month at 7 p.m. these meetings take place at Aldersgate United Methodist Church, located off I-185 at Exit 4.

If you are interested in attending, contact Capt. Lisa Leazenby at 545-4041 or Jennifer Ledwick at 689-2166.

Children at risk when left in hot car

Ga. Department of Human Resources

Temperatures are in the 90s, and you're shopping with the kids. You figure you just have to dash into that store for a minute, so it's easier to leave the kids in the car — wrong!

Temperatures in a car can rise rapidly to more than 160 degrees on a hot and humid day, even if the windows are partially open. Your children's lives could be in danger within a few minutes.

"Every summer, we hear of tragic deaths caused by leaving a child in a parked car," said Patrick J. Meehan, M.D., director of the Georgia Department of Human Resources, Division of Public Health. "People don't realize that children don't have as much resistance to heat as adults do. It's never a good idea to leave your child alone in a car, but it's especially dangerous in hot weather."

Heat stroke, a life-threatening emergency, can occur in temperatures as low as 80 degrees, depending on the humidity. When temperatures rise, people can lose their ability to cool themselves. Body temperatures higher than 105 degrees can cause permanent damage or even death.

"Other ways to protect children from heat illness include dressing them in light, loose clothing and making sure they drink plenty of water, even if they don't say they're thirsty," Meehan said. "That's good advice for adults, too."

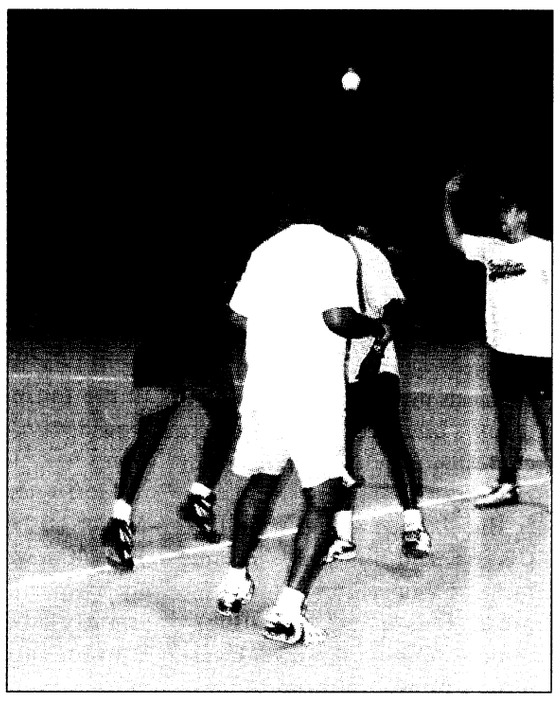
Post team captures city industrial crown

By John W. Peeler
Special to The Bayonet©

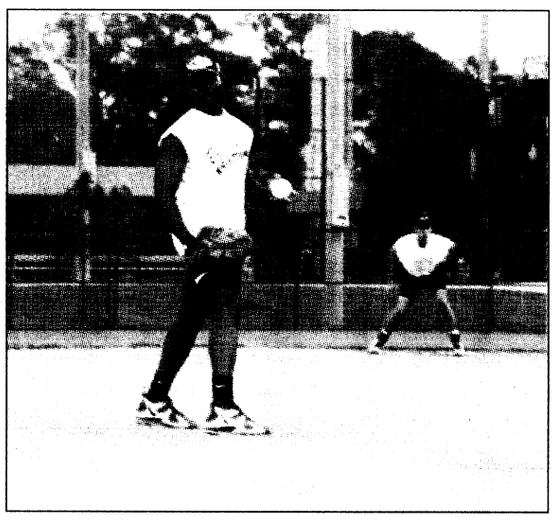
Making it to the championship game of the Columbus Recreation Department city tournament is the goal of all teams striving to be crowned the city softball champions, but to the post softball team, it is a familiar place.

For the last three out of four years, one of the teams representing Fort Benning has made it to the big dance.



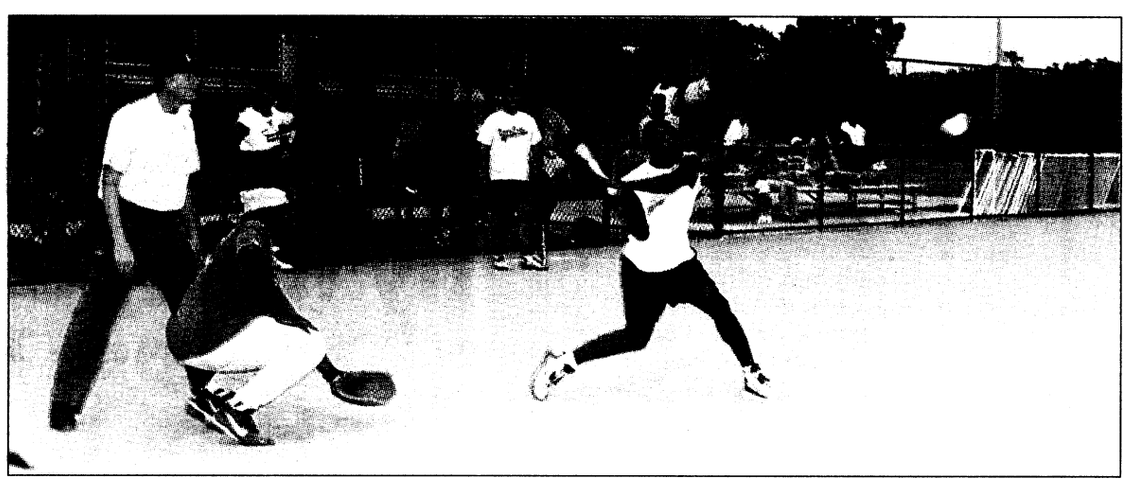
Since 1993, retired 1st Sgt. Jimmy Armstrong, coach of the post team, has taken his team to the championships, finishing as champions twice and runner up once.

"We have a really strong team and this year we get to play the championship game in the new South Commons Stadium," Armstrong said.



The team, playing in the industrial division of the league, made it to the championship game by defeating the Grocery Supply Company team 11-3.

The team, consisting of Earl Barnes, Mike Haugen, David Kelly, William Lendof, Hector Navarro, Arthur O'Neal, Thomas Sons, Noah McClinton, Vinvente Andrews, Joseph Buffa, Marshall Johnson, Jeffrey Vogel, Jose Carlbone and Andrew McDonald collected 17 hits in the game while allowing three runs on 12 hits to the Grocery Supply team.



In the championship game at South Commons Stadium Monday, Armstrong's team demolished the Pepsi team 26-6 to win the city industrial championship title.

The post team's right center fielder Thomas Sons prepares to hit a ball during the semi-final game against Grocery Supply Company. The post team won the game 11-3.

The post team started their drubbing of the Pepsi team in the first inning scoring six runs on six hits. The high point of the inning was home runs by Barnes and Buffa.

In the bottom half of the first inning, Johnson's pitching and solid team defense shut the Pepsi team down without allowing a runner on base.

The Pepsi team came alive in the second inning and shut the post team down without allowing a hit. The Pepsi team was able to pick up two runs in the second inning, but stranded three runners on base to end the inning.

The Post team scored one run in the top of the third inning on a solo blast by right fielder Buffa and took a 7-2 lead into the bottom of the inning.

Once again, team defense was the key for the post team in the bottom of the third inning. Pepsi sent four batters to the plate with the post team allowing one batter to reach base on error.

In the top of the fourth inning, the post team showed why they were in the championship game. The team came within four batters of batting around the order twice. The post team scored 12 runs on 11 hits and collected three home runs in the process.

Son started the home run derby with a two-run shot followed by a two-run blast from Barnes, his second of the game, and a two-run shot by Tuggle.

The Pepsi team left the field slowly after the offensive onslaught from the post team to take their turn at bat.

Pepsi was no match though for the Post team's defense, but did collect four runs in the bottom half of the fourth inning to make the score 19-6.

The post team kept the pressure on in the fifth inning, scoring three runs on four hits. The post team was aided by an error from the Pepsi third baseman and two walks by the pitcher.

Team defense was the key for the post team in the bottom of the fifth inning as the team allowed only one hit from four Pepsi batters.

With the score 22-6, the post team needed to score four more runs and not allow any from the Pepsi team for the 20-run rule to take effect.

The post team offense did its part by scoring the four runs it needed to make the score 26-6 going into the bottom of the sixth inning.

As the post team defense took the field, players talked among themselves about what had to happen to clinch the championship title. Four batters later, the reality of being the champions set in as the last Pepsi batter hit the ball to the shortstop. With a flip of the ball to the second baseman, the final out was recorded and with it the title of Columbus Recreation Division Industrial League softball champions.

Wildcats slip past Heat 25-24 in YS basketball

By John W. Peeler
Special to the Bayonet©

The Youth Services continued its summer basketball program July 29-31 with action in three of the four age divisions played at the Youth Service Gym.

The closest game of the week came in the 10- to 11-year-old division July 31 as the Heat took the Wildcats down to the final buzzer in a narrow 25-24 victory. Both teams played strong defense, which ultimately decided the game. Leading the scoring for the Heat was Derrick Powell with 10 points with Xavier Raymond leading the Wildcats in scoring with 9 points.

July 29 action pitted the Lakers against the Magics, with the potent Magics' offense putting up an impressive scoring flurry, resulting in an overwhelming 21-5 win.

Alvon Howard scored 11 points in the victory for the Magics with Joshua Bailey putting on a one-man show, scoring all 5 Lakers' points.

In the 12- to 15-year-old division, a last-period offensive push by the Warriors sent the Tarheels down in defeat 50-38.

The Tarheels led for most of the game with the Warriors keeping it close until the fourth period. With four minutes left in the game, the Warriors' defense took control of the game, shutting down the Tarheels' offense to secure the victory. Michael Registe, who fouled out late in the fourth period, led the scoring for the game with 20 points in the Tarheels' loss. Tim Hardcastle scored 10 points and Montrell McMillian scored 9 points in the Warriors' win.

USAMU Service Pistol Team wins at nationals

By Paula J. Randall Pagán
USAMU Public Affairs Office

Service pistol shooters of the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit went up against the best shooters in the country and walked away with several victories at the National Pistol Matches conducted at Camp Perry, Ohio, July 17-21.

The USAMU Service Pistol Team of Steven M. King, Roger C. Jacobson, Aaron P. Schreiber and Fritz A. Ficke won the Center Fire Team Championship, took third place in the .22-Caliber Championship and finished fourth in the .45-Caliber Championship.

"The matches have gone well. The team has worked very hard this year," USAMU Service Pistol Team Coach Ray Arredondo said. "They've been real close point wise to the other teams. I'm pleased with the progress that they've made."

Arredondo said it was a proud moment when the four members of the USAMU Team walked up on the stage to accept their U.S. National Center Fire Team Champion Award from none other than USAMU Hall of Famer William B. Blankenship Jr.

In the Center Fire Match, the USAMU Team won with a score of 1,143 points out of a possible 1,200 points. In the .22-Caliber Match, the team placed third with a score of 1,167 points out of a possible 1,200, just 7 points away from the winner, and in the .45-Caliber Match, the USAMU Team came in fourth with 1,143 points out of a possible 1,200.

"The National Championships turned out to be an excellent competition," said Michael A. Lane, NCO in charge of the Service Pistol Team. "The best part of this competition was competing against the best teams in the country."

According to Lane, the USAMU Team shot well throughout the championships, and the team members did it in all types of weather. One match was shot in very windy conditions, another was conducted in heavy rain, while other matches were held in high heat and humidity. When the

Wildlife activities remain popular past time

Wildlife Resources Division

FORSYTH, Ga. — According to a recent report, Americans spent $104 billion on wildlife-related recreation during 1996, representing 1.4 percent of the nation's Gross Domestic Product, the Department of Natural Resources, Wildlife Resources Division (WRD), announced.

In addition, the survey confirmed that wildlife continues to be a significant mechanism for economic growth and job creation. These findings were published in the preliminary results of the 1996 National Survey of Fishing, Hunting and Wildlife-associated Recreation conducted by the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service.

These findings show the continued importance and value of fish and wildlife resources to the American people. In 1996, more than 77 million people actively participated in fishing, hunting and wildlife watching recreation both around their homes and on trips.

According to the survey, more than 35 million anglers spent $38 billion pursuing their sport in 1996 while 14 million hunters spent an additional $20.9 billion. In addition, nearly 63 million people spent $31 billion observing, feeding and photographing wildlife.

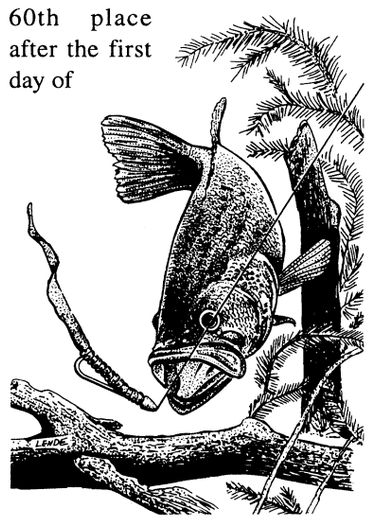
Among watchable wildlife enthusiasts, feeding birds and other wildlife was the most popular reported activity, with 54.1 million participants.

The survey, which has been conducted every five years since 1955, was conducted for the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service by the Census Bureau. As part of the survey, the Census Bureau initially screened 80,000 households. From this number, the bureau chose 28,000 sportsmen and women and 14,400 wildlife enthusiasts 16 years and older for surveys throughout the year. Additional information, including state-by-state results, will be available beginning in November.

Present comes early for bass pro

By David Hegel and Steve Price
Johnson® and Evinrude® Outboards

Professional bass angler Davy Hite's birthday present this year came a day early — the coveted BASS Angler of the Year title that signifies the number-one ranking at the end of the long and demanding Bassmaster Tournament Trail.



The day after he won the event — at the season-ending tournament on Alabama's Lake Neely Henry where he finished sixth — Hite celebrated his 32nd birthday.

"It certainly was the birthday present I wanted," Hite, a full-time pro for only five years, said, "and it's been a dream of mine for a long time. It was just a question of believing I could do it and then working toward it."

Hite's dream began in 1986 in Chattanooga, Tenn., where he sat in the stands as a spectator watching another pro, Charlie Reed, win the Bass Masters Classic™ world championship. In his hands that day, Hite held a cap many of the tournament's contestants had autographed for him.

Hite finished second in the 1996 Classic, and this year's resume includes a runner-up finish in the prestigious BASS MegaBucks contest. During the seven-event season, the pro never ranked lower than sixth in the Angler of the Year standings, but he nearly let it slip away from him at Lake Neely Henry.

"My original pattern didn't work," said Hite, who stood in 60th place after the first day of competition, then fell to 73rd after the second day and actually lost the Angler of the Year lead.

"Then, the last day, I started flipping a tube jig and things just worked out. I caught all the fish that bit, and fortunately they were all quality keepers."

"If I had started flipping earlier in the tournament, it probably would have saved me a lot of worry."

Most veteran pros consider the Angler of the Year title the most difficult to win because it signifies consistency throughout the entire year in what always turns out to be a wide variety of water and weather conditions.

The South Carolina pro thus immediately becomes one of the favorites entering the world championship, set for early August in the lake immediately downriver from Neely Henry, Logan Martin.

"I hope I can figure Logan Martin out this year," Hite said. "I finished 23rd there in 1994, but I was a long way behind David Fritts, who won, and I know he'll be tough there again."

Throughout his career, Hite has emphasized the importance of self-confidence and always encouraged others to follow their dreams wherever they may lead.

"If you believe you can do it, you can," has been his motto.

It may take years for those dreams to come true, he added, but sometimes they make pretty nice birthday presents.

Registration for women's outdoor workshop begins

Wildlife Resources Division

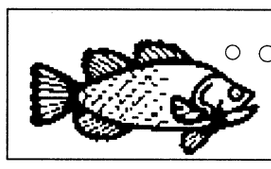
SOCIAL CIRCLE, Ga. —Casting a flyrod, cooking a complete meal with one pot on a propane camp stove, shooting a rifle, paddling a canoe — all of these skills and more will be taught at the fourth annual Becoming an Outdoors-Woman workshop scheduled Oct. 10-12.

The Department of Natural Resources, Wildlife Resources Division (WRD), is offering this weekend program at the Future Farmers of America and Future Homemakers of America Camp in Covington, Ga., which will teach both beginners and those with outdoor experience the skills needed to participate in a wide array of outdoor activities.

"Last year we had an overwhelming response from Georgia's women wanting to participate," workshop coordinator Beth Brown said. "This workshop gives them a chance to experience outdoor activities first-hand in a non-threatening environment."

Women attending the workshop choose four outdoor activities in which to participate. Each activity session lasts approximately 3 1/2 hours and includes basic instruction and "how-to" information, as well as "hands-on" participation and practice with outdoor equipment.

Some of the courses offered include backpacking, fishing, rifle marksmanship, archery, outdoor cooking, backyard wildlife and birdwatching. With more than 20 different activities to choose from, there is a wide variety of activities for everyone including several classes, such as aquatic education and showing women how to teach children about the outdoors.



Becoming an Outdoors-Woman was developed by Dr. Christine Thomas of the University of Wisconsin-Stevens Point. Designed to encourage female participation in outdoor activities, it offers educational sessions in a fun, non-competitive, non-threatening atmosphere. To date, workshops have been held in 34 states and two Canadian provinces.

The cost for the weekend is $135 before Oct. 1, which includes lodging, meals and use of equipment. The registration fee is $150 after Oct. 1.

The workshop is aimed primarily at women, but it is an ideal opportunity for anyone 18 years or older to learn or improve outdoor skills.

Registration for the workshop is now open and is available on a first-come, first-served basis. This weekend fills quickly, so register early.

Quest: Leaders meet to plan for Fort Benning's future

By 1st Lt. April N. Olsen
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Commanding General Maj. Gen. Carl F. Ernst met with members of the command group, major subordinate commanders and directorate chiefs this week in a Quality Executive Steering Team (QUEST) conference to develop measurable objectives for Fort Benning goals through the year 2018.

During two days of briefings and group discussions at Uchee Creek, the key leadership of the installation re-examined the installation's mission, vision, goals and values in order to map out Fort Benning's strategic plan to reach it's goal of continuous improvement into the next century.

It's all about "continuous improvement and systematically assessing where we are, where we want to go and how are we going to get there," Sarah McLaney, the Chief of the Quality Management Division, said.

She said the conference allowed the Commanding General and other post officials to develop short-, mid- and long-term goals and measurements for the installation.

Post officials are faced with the challenge of meeting current and future requirements in operations and quality of life while maintaining efficiency, effectiveness and customer satisfaction, she said. Officials hope to accomplish this by using key process teams to develop and continue to refine Fort Benning's strategic plan.

For the conference, senior post leaders were assigned to a key process team in one of five major areas considered to be Fort Benning's key processes: Infantry Doctrine, Infantry Training, Infantry Future, Base Operations and Force Projection, McLaney said.

"Our Base Operations Key Process Team has four additional Functional teams," McLaney said, "They are the Human Resource Team, Quality of Life Team, Communications and Automation Team and Purchasing Team."

Part of the overall strategic plan is to have quantifiable objectives to measure progress in each of Fort Benning's five key processes. For example, a quantifiable measurement of Infantry Training would be a certain percentage of basic trainees meeting standard graduation requirements.

Post Chief of Staff Col. Larry White said team building was a major function of the conference since many of the team members this year are new because of recent changes of command in major subordinate units on post.

Ernst said last fall's QUEST conference was geared toward preparing for visits from evaluation teams from the Army Communities of Excellence and President's Quality Award competitions.

When those evaluation teams visited the post they were impressed with our focus on the customer, Ernst said. Fort Benning's focus down to individual Soldiers, family members, retirees, civilians and community partners is why the post was so successful in competitions, he said.

"The real competition when you're at the top is yourself," Ernst said.

The challenge now is to maintain that focus of caring for people while accomplishing the mission, Ernst said.

"That's what it's all about," he said, "That when the smoke clears, when the dust settles, the Soldiers, family members and retirees think this is the best place I've ever been."

NCOs...

who want to become drill sergeants now have to undergo new testing for 'on the trail' duty

By Staff Sgt. Lori Egan
Bayonet staff writer

Fifty-nine potential drill sergeants underwent psychological evaluations as part of a Fort Benning initiative to help in the screening and qualification of future drill sergeants.

According to Capt. Mark Baggett, Fort Benning's command psychologist, the reason for this initiative is to better train the trainers and pick the right people for these critical positions.

"This program is the result of Fort Benning wanting to improve the way we select the NCOs for high risk training."

Psychological assessment adds an additional view of the Soldier, within the total Soldier concept, Baggett said.

The Fort Benning initiative is based on psychological screening programs already in place in the Special Forces Assessment and Selection program at Fort Bragg, N.C., and the 75th Ranger Regiment's Ranger Assessment and Selection Program.

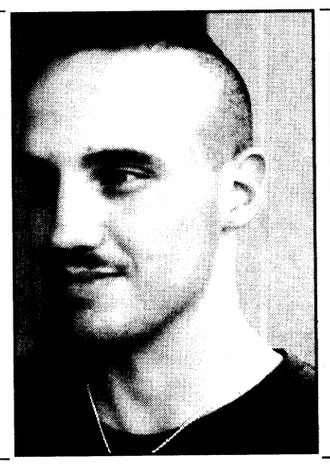
The psychological evaluation is made up of three tests — an intellectual screening measure; which is partly multiple choice and partly fill in the blank; a true false test that looks at areas of potential vulnerabilities; and a test that looks at normal personality features. This test has a true, false or an undecided option to look at the normal ranges of personality to give a better assessment of a person.

The data from the three tests and an interview is integrated and put together in a report that summarizes an individual's strengths and weaknesses.

The results of the evaluation may be used as another indicator to determine drill sergeant selection.

"We will determine the validity of this evaluation after closely analyzing the results of the pilot program. At that point we can properly apply the results.

"We put a great deal of faith in our NCO trainers at Fort Benning," Baggett said. "Because of this, we are trying to improve upon the methods by which we select these trainers.



"We need to continue to select the best trainer that we can select. We have to make sure that the NCOs we give the stressful jobs to, such as drill sergeants, ranger and airborne instructors, conduct themselves in the best possible way and to the highest moral standard."

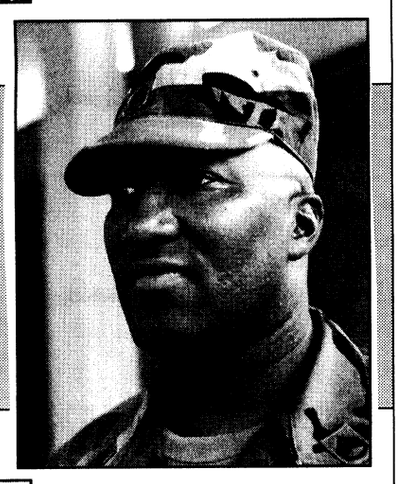
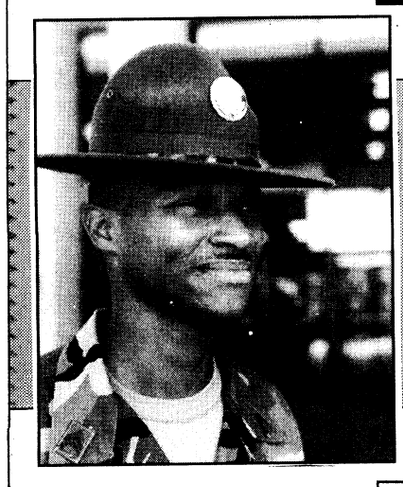
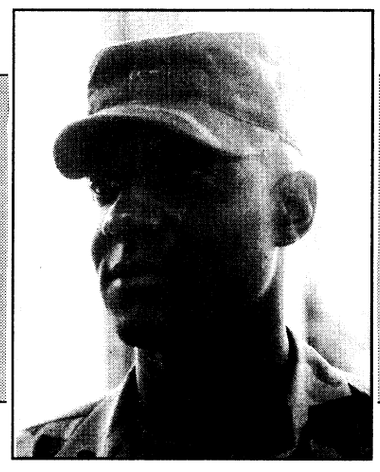
What do you think of Fort Benning's policy concerning the wear of BDUs off-post?



Sgt. Costabele Rizzo, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 317th Engineer Battalion, 3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division (Mechanized) — "The BDU policy should not be enforced during non duty hours."



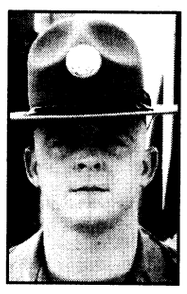
Sgt. Lance W. Gilbert, Company D, 1st Battalion, 30th Infantry Regiment, 3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division (Mechanized) — "It's not right to hang around in (BDUs), but I think it's OK to stop for gas or quick groceries."



Staff Sgt. Tamanee C. Mundy, Company A , 2nd Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment — "If you are not doing official business, you shouldn't be wearing BDUs."

Staff Sgt. Michael High, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 1st Battalion, 15th Infantry Regiment, 3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division (Mechanized) — "If you have to go to medical facility or an emergency, I think you should be able to wear it."

Staff Sgt. Craig T. Cooper, Company A, 2nd Battalion, 19th Infantry Regiment, Infantry Training Brigade — "Although I don't have a problem with the policy myself, it affects a lot of people. I don't think it's a necessary policy."



Officer Candidate Steven S. Hill, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 3rd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment — "The policy isn't necessary in an emergency but you shouldn't wear BDUs if it isn't an emergency."

Battle Dress Uniforms

Proper wear shows respect for Army, other Soldiers

By Staff Sgt. Sean Polwort
Infantry Training Brigade

Staff Sgt. Sean Polwort believes Soldiers should wear BDUs correctly and enforce the code when they see violations.

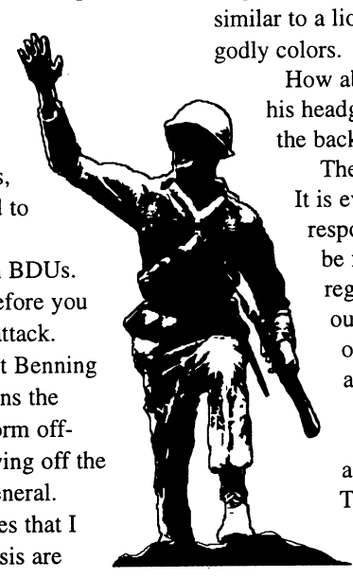
commentary

Has the leadership in the Army disappeared or is this just the Army's future?

I am very discouraged with the leadership the Army has produced in the modern Army in regards to minor infractions to Army Regulation 670-1 (Wear and appearance of Army uniforms and insignia).

Are we just simply overlooking regulations that guide military members to wear their uniforms correctly or are there a select few NCO's and officers afraid to make an on-the-spot correction to a Soldier due to the Soldier's race or sex?

Too many times, countless times, I see various Soldiers, regardless of rank, violating the proper wear of the uniform.



What makes it so bad is that their supervisors allow this to happen.

Just recently I made an on-the-spot correction toward a sergeant first class who was pumping gas without headgear at a local gas station off post.

This individual is a senior NCO in the U.S. Army who is supposed to lead by example.

Another example that aggravates me is individuals that eat at establishments off-post with dirty boots. Don't these individuals realize they directly represent their installation and the Army when they are off-post?

And for all you Wal-Mart, Kmart and Peachtree Mall battle dress uniform shoppers, it is unauthorized to be at such establishments in BDUs. So stop it now before you give me a heart attack.

There is a Fort Benning policy that governs the wear of the uniform off-post so quit blowing off the Commanding General.

Other examples that I see on a daily basis are as follows: rolled or blocked headgear; trousers incorrectly bloused; T-shirts worn backwards because individuals are too cheap to replace worn out shirts; faddish, slicky-doo haircuts; faddish sunglasses worn indoors; "cook white" BDUs; and fingernails with the length of those similar to a lion and painted ungodly colors.

How about the Soldier with his headgear kicked back to the back of their head?

The bottom line is this. It is every leader's responsibility to not only be familiar with the regulations that govern our conduct and wear of the uniform but to also enforce them.

It is time for the Army to wake up and smell the coffee. The Army is a professional organization that cannot afford to develop lazy Soldiers who lack self-discipline and motivation.

Today's Soldier is tomorrow's future so it is time to get back to the basics of Soldiering.

545-BOSS

Dial 545-BOSS is the commander's action line for Soldiers, family members and civilians to call when they have problems or complaints that can't be resolved elsewhere.

While it is not a substitute for the chain of command or for agencies established to provide assistance, the line offers another means of communication between Fort Benning's community and commanders.

The Bayonet features some of the calls that may benefit other members of the Fort Benning community.

Call: The caller said he tried to take his father to a gym on post with him and was told his father was not allowed to go in. He said he would like to know why.

Directorate of Community Activities response: The Sports director, DCA, apologized to the caller and told him there is a guest policy which authorizes legitimate house guests coming from outside a 50-mile radius of Fort Benning to use fitness facilities on post.

Call: The caller said her daughter was attacked by a dog that was tied up and the attack took place outside the owner's property line. She said it should be mandatory that dogs be kept inside a fence instead of just on a leash.

Directorate of Public Safety response: The Law Enforcement Division informed the caller that both U.S. Army Infantry Center Regulations 210-5 and 40-905 require dog owners to keep their dogs in a fenced area or on a leash. In this case, the dog was on a leash.

However, the leash was too long and it allowed the dog access to areas outside the yard, which resulted in the dog biting her child. The owner was titled by the Military Police for failure to control his pet and the animal was taken to the post Veterinary Services Clinic for quarantine.

Call: The caller feels that because of the size of her family, she needs larger quarters.

Directorate of Public Works response: The Family Housing Branch, explained the criteria used to determine the number of authorized bedrooms is in accordance with Army Regulation 210-50 on housing management. The family's current composition (three male children, ages 5, 3 and 5 months; and one female child, age 1) does not meet the requirements for four-bedroom quarters. One child would have to be 10 years old or else one would have to be 6 and the other three of opposite sex in order for her family to meet the four-bedroom requirements.

Call: The caller would like to know if consideration is being given to putting sidewalks along Custer Road leading to the Main Mall and Martin Army Community Hospital to accommodate children who ride their bikes on Custer Road.

DPW response: DPW said there are no plans at this time to construct such a sidewalk.

A sidewalk of this magnitude would require it to cross Upatoi Creek and run adjacent to I-185. Additionally, the cost would be prohibitive, and currently, the post has a funding backlog in family housing for maintenance and repair of quarters.

Call: The caller said residents in the housing areas are parking anywhere they want to. The caller said people can't even park in their own spaces.

DPW response: The Family Housing Branch, DPW, said the garrison commander recently approved the marking of parking spaces as a community self-help project by the residents. DPW's only involvement would be to provide some materials through the U-DO-IT Center for use by residents desiring to identify parking spaces.

The garrison commander's guidance was that all residents, in a particular area, had to be in agreement and that enforcement of the policy would be executed by the residents with assistance from the Community Life NCOs.

Call: The caller wanted to know why she couldn't donate her sick leave to someone if she wanted to.

DCP response: The caller was informed that under current requirements of the leave transfer program, which is outlined in 5 CFR 630, accrued annual leave may be donated to another employee who needs leave because of a medical emergency. To change the existing program to allow employees the option of donating sick leave will require Congressional approval.

Regiment Soldiers quality of life set to improve

$44 million barracks project includes the construction of seven new barracks and a dining facility

By Elizabeth E. LaMonica
Special to The Bayonet©

Members of the 75th Ranger Regiment will be moving to a new home.

As part of an Army- and post-wide effort to improve the quality of life for all Fort Benning Soldiers, the 75th Ranger Regiment and the 3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment will be moving into new barracks within the next few years.

A $44 million barracks project is part of Fort Benning's fiscal 1997 military construction (MILCON) appropriations.

The project includes the construction of seven barracks and an 800 capacity dining facility for the rangers. Another part of the project will construct five company operations facilities to support the 36th Engineer Group.

Construction support for the rangers will continue during fiscal 1998 with a U.S. Army Special Operations Command funded project costing $9.8 million. New battalion headquarters with a classroom and sensitive compartmented information facility and six company operations facilities are scheduled to be funded and built beginning in fiscal 1998 by this project.

The 1997 barracks project advertised for bids July 21 with a bid opening scheduled for Aug. 29.

"We hope within 30 days of bid opening to have a contract awarded and within another 30 days to start construction," said Ken Holloway, master planner, Directorate the of Public Works. "We anticipate 810 days (27 months) for the construction and completion of this complex."

Both the '97 and '98 projects represent the cooperation of TRADOC headquarters and USASOC. Base operations facilities, such as barracks, are usually funded through the MILCON channel by the host MACOM. In an effort to complete the rangers' complex sooner, TRADOC headquarters agreed to support the 75th barracks project in '97 if USASOC would seek separate MILCON funding to build the operations facilities.

A separate USASOC funding initiative still remains, regimental headquarters building for fiscal 2001 or 2002. Design for this structure is 35 percent complete.

The new location for the rangers' complex will be just south of their current home and includes a new road network.

Since the new barracks will be built on one of the rangers training areas, a replacement training field will be built adjacent to the new location.

The building site was chosen only after extensive testing was done to determine the suitability of the soil for construction. One of the first sites considered had a plastic type soil condition called Eutaw shale, which is unsuitable for construction. Over time, a building built on land with Eutaw shale could slide horizontally causing structural damage.

The old barracks will not be torn down, but will be used, possibly as a replacement location for the reservists undergoing annual training in the Harmony Church World War II facilities.

"The 75th's current buildings are in decent shape," Holloway said, "due to USASOC's monetary investment in building maintenance and repair over the past few years."

The new barracks are needed because the old ones do not meet current Department of the Army quality of life standards.

"Ninety percent of the sleeping rooms are supported by gang latrines," Holloway said. "Also, the Soldiers have to use wall lockers instead of closets."

The new construction will offer 544 spaces to house the ranger units. The new two-person modules will have more floor space, walk-in closets and a small kitchenette.

Author visits Fort Benning to research new book, movie

By Paula J. Randall Pagán
USAMU Public Affairs Office

Hercules became a hero when he saved the world in Disney's latest movie. The hero in Disney's next movie will also save the day by using some shooting savoir-faire he learned from the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit.

Richard P. Henrick, the author of Crimson Tide, and collaborator on the movie Air Force One, visited the Army Marksmanship Unit at Fort Benning Aug. 6. The author of 16 novels, he is gathering information for a novel for Avon Books and a Disney movie to be called "Night Watch."

According to Henrick, the movie is about a Special Forces Soldier who gets out of the Army and becomes an Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms agent who has to save the vice president and his family taken hostage in the Ozarks by a militia group. To save the day, he's got to do some fancy shooting and that's where the Marksmanship Unit comes in.

USAMU Deputy Commander Robert Aylward gave Henrick a tour of the unit including the USAMU Hall of Fame, the Custom Firearms Shop and the Shotgun and Action Shooting ranges.

Wearing combat boots and a battle dress uniform with a "U.S. Author" patch, Henrick was taught the fine art of shooting by some of USAMU's top marksmen. At Phillips Range, USAMU action pistol shooters Capt. Harold A. Christy Jr. and Spc. Julie A. Goloski demonstrated some action shooting techniques and allowed him to shoot. When Henrick saw their demonstration, he said, "I can use this. This will be the opening of my movie."

According to Al Blanchard, of the Fort Benning Public Affairs Office, who was Henrick's escort, the author was developing his storyline for the movie as he visited different units on post and he liked what he saw at Fort Benning.

"His hero is going to be an action shooter. He said the movie will start off with an action shooting championship and end with his saving the day using those shooting techniques," Blanchard added.

"We're very eager to educate people on the fun, exciting and safe sport of action shooting," Christy said. "He (Henrick) obviously ended up loving it."

After observing a shotgun shooting demonstration at Hook Range, Staff Sgt. Shawn C. Dulohery, the 1997 Interservice Skeet Champion, gave Henrick a skeet lesson. During the lesson, Henrick, a St. Louis, Mo., native, found that he had a lot in common with Dulohery, who was raised in Lee's Summit, Mo. Henrick said he enjoyed the skeet shooting so much that he would probably start shooting at the local range when he got back to Missouri.

Aylward and Master Sgt. David E. Sams, USAMU master pistol gunsmith, gave Henrick a tour of the Custom Firearms Shop where Henrick learned about the accurization of the M-16A2 rifle and the M-9 pistol.

The author primarily came to Fort Benning to study the Airborne School and Ranger School for the airborne assault and Infantry small unit tactics action in the movie. Besides visiting the USAMU and Airborne School, Henrick also visited the Ranger School, 988th Military Police Company and the 3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment. He is also touring Fort McClellan, Ala., Fort Leonard Wood, Mo., and Fort Bragg, N.C.

Henrick said he would like to return to Fort Benning and the USAMU, and added that he wants to bring some of Disney's executives out to see the action shooting team — Disney's next hero."

Agency seeks more Gulf War operational records

Army News Service

WASHINGTON — The Department of Defense (DoD) continues to seek all information relevant to health problems experienced by veterans of the Persian Gulf War.

The U.S. Army Gulf War Declassification Project (GWDP), Falls Church, Va., was tasked by DoD to locate and declassify all existing Gulf War operational records containing health-related information.

To date, approximately 5.4 million pages of DoD Gulf War records have been collected and reviewed by GWDP. This total includes about two million pages of Army records, which account for most corps and division records. Information is still needed about the location, storage, shipment, or destruction of operational records from Operations Desert Shield and Storm down through battalion and separate company levels.

As long as there is a possibility that more records may be found, the search will continue, according to GWDP officials.

Specifically sought are daily staff journals, logs, situation reports, spot reports, incident reports, significant activity reports, personnel reports, intelligence reports, operations reports, Nuclear, Biological and Chemical reports, logistic reports, unit medical records (no personal records), memoranda, and messages generated during the Persian Gulf War.

People with knowledge of the whereabouts or disposition of these types of records, can contact the GWDP with the following information:

•Individual's name, unit address, duty phone number, and e-mail address;

•General description, type, location, and quantity of records;

•Any information concerning the disposition of operational records (date, location, and place last observed).

The GWDP's address is: U.S. Army Gulf War Declassification Project, 5111 Leesburg Pike, Suite 401, Falls Church, VA 22041-3206, DSN 761-4219, commercial (703) 681-4219, fax-6556, or e-mail: pgwrecords@cmh-gwdp.army.mil.

Information received will be reviewed by GWDP personnel. Those in possession of operational records will either be asked to take them to unit/organization postal clerks for mailing to GWDP, or will be provided with other disposition instructions. Units should make copies of any records required for historical or other purposes and forward originals to GWDP.

Records collection and declassification efforts are in concert with a presidential directive to leave no stone unturned in searching for a possible cause for Gulf War illnesses.

DoD reviews homosexual policy

By Linda D. Kozaryn
American Forces Press Service

WASHINGTON — Defense officials are reviewing DoD's policy on homosexuals in the military.

Under the direction of Fred Pang, principal deputy undersecretary of defense for personnel and readiness, officials are looking at two major policy elements, Pentagon spokesman Ken Bacon said here recently.

The first element is the number of people discharged every year because they've either announced they are homosexuals or because officials discovered they are homosexuals, Bacon said.

"That number has risen over the last several years, and we want to understand why it's risen."

The second part of the study is looking at specific charges made by the Servicemembers Legal Defense Network and other groups about inappropriate investigations, Bacon said. "We want to find out if those allegations are correct or not."

The study's goal is to determine if the "don't ask, don't tell, don't pursue" policy is clearly understood by enlisted members and officers — particularly commanders — and whether it's being consistently and fairly enforced throughout the military, Bacon said.

Defense Secretary William S. Cohen directed officials to conduct the review now that the law has been in effect for about three years and data are available, Bacon said. The intent is not to change the law, he said, but to see how well it's understood and implemented.

About 850 service members were discharged for homosexuality in fiscal 1996, according to DoD officials. Junior enlisted (E-1 to E-4) made up 90 percent of the separations. Of those discharged, about 76 percent left after admitting they are homosexuals. About 23 percent were discharged for committing a homosexual act. About 83 percent had less than five years in service, and 93 percent were younger than 30.

Section 654 of 10 U.S. Code, enacted in November 1993, states "the presence in the armed forces of persons who demonstrate a propensity or intent to engage in homosexual acts would create an unacceptable risk to the high standards of morale, good order and discipline, and unit cohesion that are the essence of military capability."

The law requires discharge of service members who engage in homosexual conduct, which includes homosexual acts, statements demonstrating a propensity or intent to engage in such acts, or homosexual marriage or attempted marriage, DoD officials said.

The law prohibits inquiries or investigations solely to determine a service member's sexual orientation. A commander must initiate an investigation, however, upon receipt of credible information that a service member has engaged in homosexual conduct.

The policy review, expected to be completed by the end of the year, is one of three ongoing reviews regarding sexual conduct in the military. DoD officials are reviewing mixed-gender training, provisions governing good order and discipline, and rules governing adultery.

Teaching new Soldiers about the Army life is the job of noncommissioned officers who are trained to the standard at...

The Drill Sergeant School

Photos by Sgt. 1st Class Larry Lane

Drill Sergeant School candidates march off from a practice field after a class in drill and ceremony where students learn each movement by the numbers.

By Sgt. 1st Class Larry Lane
Public Affairs Office NCOIC

Why would a Soldier like Staff Sgt. Da-Mon Montague leave the comfort of his motor sergeant job, pack his life "into a wall locker" and undergo six weeks of basic training for drill sergeants?

This is the same question many Soldiers ask themselves every year when they show up at the doors of the Fort Benning Drill Sergeant School. After many years of Soldiering, these future leaders begin the process of learning all over again when they pursue the drill sergeant badge.

"I feel I have something to contribute," Montague explained his reason for his volunteering for drill sergeant duty. "It hasn't been easy, but I feel I have what it takes to be a good drill sergeant."

When Montague completes his training, he will return to Fort Jackson, S.C. where he will be a drill sergeant for basic and advanced individual training Soldiers. Fort Jackson trains light-wheel vehicle mechanics, Montague's specialty.

"What better way to get rated than by a peer, someone who is a staff sergeant like you?" Montague asked. "They are drill sergeants, true, that's their jobs, but they are also my peers."

Candidates, Department of the Army selected and volunteers, come from a variety of military occupational specialties (MOS). Though Fort Benning is considered the "Home of Infantry," females represent a significant number of candidates. The year is not over but so far 383 students have graduated out of the 447 students who began the Drill Sergeant School. Thirty-eight of these graduates are females.

The candidates must first pass an Army physical fitness test before beginning their drill sergeant specific training. While some Soldiers are sent home early from APFT failure, most continue on to the academic portion of the course.

The toughest hurdle for most candidates is called "modulation," the memorization of tasks using step-by-step instructions or learning "by the numbers." These modules cover everything from physical fitness training to drill and ceremony. There are seven sets of modules to remember, some with several pages of steps. Not learning the modules is one of the main reasons for academic drops, said Sgt. 1st Class Russell Mccray, a former chief instructor.

"We teach them how to teach a person who has no idea how to stand at the position of attention," Mccray described how basic the information can be. "It's a memorization process and that is why it is the hardest part and why we get so many releases."

For example, when teaching a rear march, the cadre drill sergeant will demonstrate each step using other cadre members.

When the instruction moves on, trainees learn each facing movement and each marching step of the rear march by pausing and waiting for the command of execution given by the cadre, literally a step-by-step process. After the platoon learns the movement, the platoon runs through the entire rear march at a normal cadence.

This step-by-step process may seem extreme to an older Soldier who has been marching for years, but that same future drill sergeant will eventually be responsible for instructing a trainee who will also need to learn "by the numbers," said 1st Sgt. Todd Robinson, the chief instructor for the Drill Sergeant School.

"Everything we do here at the school is designed to make a drill sergeant aware of what he may encounter in the initial entry training environment," he said.

"As a drill sergeant, you are the first form of the Army that a Soldier experiences. You develop the foundation," he said. "If a drill sergeant doesn't have the conviction and doesn't live by the Drill Sergeant Creed, it will only be a matter of time before he self-destructs."

Robinson attended a recent drill sergeant conference at Fort Jackson, S.C. where two new programs of instruction (POI) were introduced to all of the drill sergeant schools in the Training and Doctrine Command.

One POI covers extremist, or "hate" groups and explains how a drill sergeant may identify a Soldier involved in an extremist group.

"We have some handouts that identify some of the tattoos and markings a drill sergeant may recognize as indicators of extremist group participation," Robinson said.

During an investigation of an incident involving extremist group activity at Fort Bragg, N.C., it was noted that some of the Soldiers involved had particular tattoos and certain symbols used to identify the group.

A basic training platoon can be a close-knit group, Robinson said, and a Soldier of an extremist group may adversely influence or effect the performance of other Soldiers.

A second POI covers human relations, especially, what is considered an improper relationship between leaders and followers.

"We are trying to broaden a candidate's understanding of what is acceptable and what is not," Robinson said. "By the time a Soldier gets here, he's got about 10 to 12 years in the Army and has been taught sexual harassment. This is not about sexual harassment. It's about human relations — the relationship one Soldier has with another Soldier of the opposite gender. If you are doing the right thing — using the Army ethics and morals, treating the Soldier with respect — there aren't any problems."

When teaching courses in human relations and explaining appropriate relationships between drill sergeants and trainees, the recent problems of sexual harassment at Aberdeen Proving Ground, Md. has become a topic for class discussion.

"We use 'downrange feedback' experiences you go through as a drill sergeant," said Sgt. 1st Class Arlita Crawford, the school's senior drill sergeant.

"We also use the things that have gone on in the media to relate it to the drill sergeant candidate, just to keep them abreast of what's going on," she said.

"This let's them know what they're going to be faced with once they complete the course."

There are several male Soldiers, Crawford said, who have never worked with females before but as a drill sergeant may be sent to a gender integrated training environment.

"We're teaching the basics of being a drill sergeant, whether you are a combat arms or administrative drill sergeant," she said.

Staff Sgt. Paula Evans said she thought about the trials that drill sergeants had been through lately, but that did not stop her from volunteering for drill sergeant duty.

"I liked the professionalism of what I saw in the drill sergeants at basic training. I like the structure," said Evans, a chemical operations specialist. After graduation, she will return to Fort McClellan, Ala.

Drill sergeants inspect the arm swing and step of candidates while they practice drill and ceremony movements.

When reviewing her MOS career map at an education center, drill sergeant duty was considered a good way to accelerate her career. She also recalled her basic training days and how good it felt to her when she graduated.

"Like in basic training, when I was a private, when I finished, I was proud," Evans said.

"I look at all of those Soldiers I can change, from raw material into a Soldier and I'll be proud of that. I think this will payoff in the long run."

Army taking steps to go digital by 2000

TRADOC News Service

FORT MONROE, Va. — The Army's Experimental Division will become the first digitized division by 2000.

The 4th Infantry Division at Fort Hood, Texas, is one of three divisions and a corps slated to be digitized, according to a recent Department of the Army announcement.

"4th ID's colors will be uncased as the first digital division in the year 2000," said Col. Al Turner, director of Training and Doctrine Command's Joint Venture office. "We've got just over two years to make that happen."

The first digitized corps will be III Corps, 4th ID's parent command. In 2003 the 1st Cavalry Division, also at Fort Hood, will become the second digitized division.

By 2004 III Corps, parent command for the 4th ID and 1st Cavalry, will be digitized. That includes the corps support command and other "corps slices." The 3rd Infantry Division, Fort Stewart, Ga., will be digitized as resources become available.

According to the Department of the Army announcement, fiscal constraints will permit only the cavalry squadron and one brigade in each division to be outfitted with embedded digitized ground maneuver systems — M1A2 Abrams tanks, Bradley Fighting Vehicles and selected enhancement programs. The other brigades' equipment will have applique digitized systems. As the divisions are being digitized, they will retain their war fighting responsibilities.

The 4th ID became the Army's Experimental Force in 1995. Its 1st Brigade became Task Force XXI, and was outfitted with digital communications systems, new equipment and new weapons systems.

In March 1997, after training on the new equipment and new tactics, techniques and procedures, the 1st Brigade was tested in an advanced war fighting experiment at the National Training Center, Fort Irwin, Calif. Its success against NTC's opposing force was largely attributed to increased situational awareness made possible by digital communications.

Under normal development and acquisition practices, fielding such a force would have taken about seven years, according to Brig. Gen. Robert Clark, TRADOC's deputy chief of staff for combat developments. It was made possible by the "spiral" development process devised at Fort Hood — a collaboration between contractors, Soldiers and Army systems program managers.

"It is a new way of doing business and we in TRADOC are chartered with driving this process ... so that we don't drift back toward the linear, sequential, time-consuming and costly way of doing business," he said.

The 4th will continue to be the developmental organization for the Army to test new concepts and technologies. The division will take advantage of the infrastructure in existence at Fort Hood. The new divisions will also be reorganized similar to the "interim division design."

"I think we're going to end up with a design that's a little smaller. Somewhere in the neighborhood of 15,000 soldiers," said Gen. William W. Hartzog, TRADOC commander, who is tasked with overseeing the creation of Army XXI. That interim division design will be experimented within a computer simulation Army Warfighting Experiment at Fort Hood in November.

Hartzog said Army leadership feels the division will continue to be the primary war fighting organization.

"I think that in the upper end of the spectrum of conflict, in fights like Desert Storm, a division headquarters is very important," he said. "I think for some functional areas, a division headquarters is important — airspace management and fires coordination."

New system for OERs to use 3 forms

Personnel Services Division

The Army's new Officer Evaluation Reporting System becomes effective for reports beginning Oct. 1.

The new system will use three forms, Department of the Army 67-9, the actual evaluation form; DA 67-9 1, the OER Support Form; and DA 67-9-1A, the Junior Officer Developmental Support Form for lieutenants and warrant officers.

The electronic forms are expected to be available through the Personnel Command web site in late August or early September.

The first change of rater or duty evaluations using the new form will be January 1998 and the first annual reports will come due October 1998.

The only exceptions will be relief for cause and overseas-short tour evaluations.

With the inception of the new evaluation system a closeout is required as described in MILPER Message NR 97-099.

All officers will receive a final evaluation report under the current system.

Officers must receive a close out report if they began a new rating period on or before Aug. 2, do not receive a due course report prior to Sept. 30 and have at least 60 rated days. The through date will be Sept. 30. Part 1H of these reports will contain code "97" and "closeout."

The only exceptions are officers in school or in the hospital Sept. 30. These officers will not receive an evaluation closeout report and the time will be counted as non-rated time. Any non-rated time will not show up on future OERs.

Officers who started a new rating period after Aug. 2 and have not received a closeout report will be eligible for an optional report based on the discretion of the rating official. The minimum rating requirement of 60 days is waived for these reports and the through date will be Sept. 30.

For more information, call Marie Cobb at 545-5646 or 545-2602 or Janie Seldon at 545-3666 or 545-7218.

Program honors military members for community service

GEICO Communications Dept.

WASHINGTON — The GEICO Philanthropic Foundation kicked off the 10th annual GEICO Military Service Awards program. The program is looking for individuals who meet the eligibility requirements.

The program honors one enlisted member from each of the five military services and one enlisted member from the selected Reserve components for outstanding service to the military or civilian community.

"Too often, enlisted military members make outstanding contributions to the public good that go unrecognized beyond the bounce of their immediate environment," said Richard Kidd, director of Military Services at GEICO.

"When we honor these six enlisted members for their valuable contributions to the community, we honor all enlisted members whose dedicated service on and off the job helps keep our country strong."

Through each service's and the Department of Defense (DoD) Reserve Affairs' established procedures, each unit, base, post and activity may nominate military enlisted personnel who have provided outstanding service to the military or civilian community in one of the fields recognized by the awards. Nominations are due to each service and DoD Reserve Affairs no later than Nov. 1.

Awards are presented in three categories. They are: drug and alcohol abuse prevention, fire safety and fire prevention and traffic safety and accident prevention.

Each winner will receive a $2,500 cash award, a plaque commemorating his or her accomplishments and an all-expense-paid trip to Washington, D.C., for the awards ceremony to be held April 27.

For more information, call Jim Irwin at 689-2787.

Physicians complete MACH residency program

By Lt. Col. Steven Reissman
Martin Army Community Hospital

Nine physicians recently completed a three-year Family Practice Residency Program at Martin Army Community Hospital. The residency program, begun in 1972, is the Army's oldest Family Practice Program.

The residency is accredited by the Residency Review Committee of the Accreditation Council for Graduate Medical Education, and has graduated 179 family physicians since its inception.

The education required to become a family physician includes four years of college, followed by four years of medical school, and then three years of training in an accredited family practice training program.

After completion of residency training, family physicians are eligible to take an intensive board certification exam given by the American Board of Family Practice.

After becoming certified, they must be re-examined every seven years to retain their board certification status, and must meet state medical licensing standards.

The graduates join the nation's 55,000 practicing family physicians in providing comprehensive care to patients of all ages. Family physicians are trained to practice in all major areas of medicine and can treat the majority of medical problems people might have.

A unique component of the family physician's specialized training is a focus on prevention: the art and science of maintaining a family's lifelong health, from the care of pregnant women, infants and children, through adulthood, to geriatric medicine.

These Army physicians will now be assigned to sites such as Germany, Korea and throughout the U.S.

MACH leads health care industry

Martin Army Community Hospital

Martin Army Community Hospital (MACH) once again shows it is the leader in all realms of health care. Last week the Hospital Commander and the DCA attended a TRICARE conference in Washington D.C. A program that TRICARE services has initiated is a survey that is sent out throughout all of the regions. MACH is concerned with patient care; in addition, the hospital is very concerned with customer satisfaction. Both of these areas are evaluated in the survey that is sent out. Martin Army Community Hospital finished within the top five of all DoD health facilities.

Ms. Val Bell was awarded the CG's Coin of Excellence on Aug. 5. The coin was presented by Col. Rafielli for all of the hard work and dedication that she has put into the Soldier readiness process. The SRP site was established in November and will continue to operate as long as there is a need. It services soldiers from all over the world. Since the tents went operational, over 5,000 soldiers have been processed through the site.

Army installations earn awards for energy conservation

By Gerry J. Gilmore
Army News Service

WASHINGTON — Ten Army installations, recognized for being outstanding energy savers during the past year, received trophies and certificates at a July 30 Pentagon ceremony.

Deputy Assistant Secretary of the Army (Logistics) Eric A. Orsini presented the Secretary of the Army Energy Conservation Awards.

The Army established its energy conservation awards program in 1978 to encourage the wise use of scarce and costly energy, Orsini said.

This year's winners, by category, are:

"With dwindling budgets and downsizing, we must work hard to keep our emphasis on energy conservation," said James Campbell, the Army energy conservation program administrator in the Pentagon. "Energy conservation not only saves money, but it helps protect our environment and conserve our natural resources."

For example, Campbell said, Aberdeen Proving Ground implemented projects that saved the Army more than $2 million. Some of the projects included retrofitting older, inefficient boilers with new, more efficient systems and using a compressed natural gas fuel station.

From 1985 to 2005, the Army's goal is to cut its energy consumption by 30 percent, Orsini said. Up to now, conservation efforts have saved the Army more than $1.5 billion in energy costs.

"By 2005, we'll have saved $3 billion. We know we will make it. Today, we recognize those who contribute," Orsini said.

Major commands nominate installations for Secretary of the Army Energy Awards based on conservation accomplishments during the previous fiscal year. The Army Energy Steering Committee conducts on-site assessments of each nominee to choose the best programs.

Army at 'strategic crossroads' according to top officer

By Gerry J. Gilmore
Army News Service

WASHINGTON — The Army is at "a strategic crossroads" after undergoing "unprecedented change" as part of its march toward the 21st century, said the Army's top officer at a quality management conference recently in Washington, D.C.

The Army of the Future began with the collapse of the "Iron Curtain," said Chief of Staff Gen. Dennis J. Reimer. Since then, the Army has changed from a force primarily-designed to meet a Soviet threat, to today's multi-faceted, capabilities-based force.

"For us, the 21st century began in 1989," Reimer said. "That's when the (Berlin) Wall came down, (and) the Army has changed physically and culturally since then. Physically, it's easy to quantify that; we've taken out more than 600,000 people (to include) active-component, U.S. Army Reserve, Army National Guard Soldiers (and) Department of the Army civilians. We've closed more than 700 bases, most of them have been in Europe, but many have been in the United States. Large bases and small kasernes.

"The net effect of closing all of those bases in Europe has been equivalent to closing 12 major installations here in the United States. Installations like Fort Hood (Texas) or Fort Carson (Colo.) or Fort Bragg (N.C.)."

The Army's doctrine has changed, too, Reimer said. After helping defeat Iraqi forces during the Persian Gulf War, America's Army has been increasingly deployed on peacekeeping and humanitarian missions to places like the Balkans, Haiti and Somalia. Army troops are currently stationed in 100 countries.

"This has been unprecedented change," Reimer said. "It's not just the magnitude of change, but it's the rate of change ... that much change in less than eight years. It's a tremendous accomplishment. People were terribly important when we managed that change and people continue to be important as we continue to manage change in the future.

"Today I would say that the U.S. military is at a strategic crossroads. We have an opportunity to fundamentally reshape for the 21st century. That's what the Quadrennial Defense Review was all about ... what we tried to do with the QDR is to project ourselves out in the time frame 2010-2020 (then) look back and see what we need to get there.

"I think when you get to 2020 you'll find that peace and democracy are flourishing across the globe," he said. "You'll find that the United States remains a superpower, economically, morally, politically and militarily ...it's very important that we continue to be a superpower in all of those areas."

Reimer said the QDR contains three pillars of strategy, as U.S. forces will be required to be able to respond, shape and prepare.

"When we talk about responding, we're talking about being able to move combat capabilities anywhere in the world, whenever they're needed," he said. "To be able to respond to a crisis whether it occurs in Bosnia, Haiti, Korea or Southwest Asia.

"When we're talking about shaping, we're talking about shaping the world of the 21st century, the environment we live in. In my words, making the world safer for our children and grandchildren. When you stop and think about it, that is a noble cause. If we can pull that off, what a great gift we'd give to humanity.

"When we talk about prepare, we're talking about being able to prepare the force (of) today (to become) the force we'll need in the 2020 time frame. In order to do that, we'll need the right kind of military forces and be able to provide the support they'll need through the installations. We must evolve them over time; that's what this change is all about."

Reimer told the Total Army Quality managers that people's ideas and support are needed for successful change.

"First of all, I'd say it's important to empower people," he said. "Be able to harvest the good ideas that are out there. The good ideas at your installations ... They're at all levels ... I've visited you at different places, I've talked to the workforce and I know of the great ideas that exist out there. What we've got to do is bring them together and make them work for us."

To bring together tomorrow's technology with today's forces, the Army has conducted several Advanced Warfighting Experiments, Reimer said. Such experiments are helping to produce the Army of tomorrow.

"We've got to be able to experiment ... as we did during the Advanced Warfighting Experiments at Fort Hood and the National Training Center (Fort Irwin, Calif.) ... and be able to learn from that process and develop the force that we need," he said. "Army XXI is basically a product-improved version of today's force ... (it has) Information Age capabilities.

"Army XXI will evolve into The Army After Next, a totally different force. It's the force that'll be needed after the 2020 time frame."

The Department of the Army is using the Army Strategic Management Plan "to synchronize, focus and integrate the long- and short-term planning objectives we have established," Reimer said.

"We must use it to apply resources, time, energy and ideas. We must make that Strategic Management Plan work for us," he said. "We do that by developing long-term goals, with which we've developed short-term objectives. We review those on a periodic basis and we determine what action we need in order to fine-tune (planning).

"I think the Army Strategic Management Plan goes hand-in-hand with the strategic change process. We're going to build Army XXI and the Army After Next through that process."

The Army demonstrates its capabilities "almost on a daily basis," Reimer said.

"I'm talking about to be able to deter war, to be able to compel an adversary ... to be able to provide military support to civilian authorities, and to be able to reassure our allies and friends," he said. "We've done all of those last year. My guess is we'll do all of those again this year."

The Army now needs to implement expensive high-technology for the next century's force, but defense budgets have been reduced since the end of the Cold War. It's a time, Reimer told the Total Army Quality managers, "in which we need to make every dollar count."

"I would tell you the challenge we face is that we must be able to get the maximum readiness out of a finite amount of resources," Reimer said. "In order to do that we must leverage your good ideas and make them work for us."

Setting a new national record by scoring 300 points out of a possible 325 points, 1996 Olympian Terri DeWitt won the Women's Single Trap Championship followed by 1996 Women's Trap and Double Trap Champion Joetta R. Novinski in second place with a score of 295.

Two-time Olympian and 1997 World Cup Gold Medalist James T. Graves came in third in the Men's Single Trap Championship and Junior Olympic Shotgun Team member Matthew T. DePuydt took third in the Junior Division of the Men's Single Trap Championship.

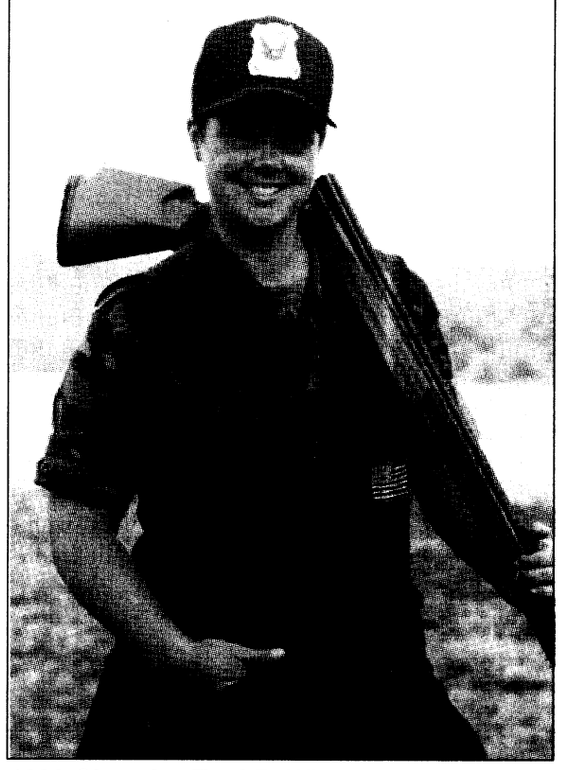
The USAMU Team of Graves, two-time Olympian and 1997 World Cup Bronze Medalist Bret E. Erickson and 1996 Olympian David R. Alcoriza won the Team Trap Championship and Graves, Erickson, DeWitt and Novinski made the U.S. National Trap Team.

Erickson won the Men's Double Trap Championship, set a new national record and became the first person to ever hit 100 targets in a row. Alcoriza took second in the Men's Double Trap Championship, DePuydt finished third in the Junior Division and DeWitt placed third in the Women's Double Trap Championship.

The USAMU Team of Erickson, Graves and Alcoriza finished in second place in the Team Double Trap Championship and the USAMU Team of DePuydt, Walter B. Keever and William H. Keever took third place. Erickson, Alcoriza, DeWitt, Novinski and DePuydt also made the U.S. National Double Trap Team.

Graves came in third, just one point away from the winner, in the National Skeet Championship and he and 1997 Interservice Skeet Champion Shawn C. Dulohery made the U.S. National, Skeet Team.

"The matches were well run and went fine," USAMU Shotgun Team coach Burl Branham said. "Bret and Terri broke national records and we won 14 slots on the national team."



Erickson will shoot double trap and Graves will shoot skeet against the best shooters in the world at the World Cup Finals to be held in September in Montecatini, Italy.

The USAMU Shotgun Team is now gearing up for the World Shotgun Championships to be conducted in Lima, Peru, and the Championships of the Americas in Buenos Aires, Argentina, in November, where the U.S. Team will be able to win quota slots for the 2000 Olympics.

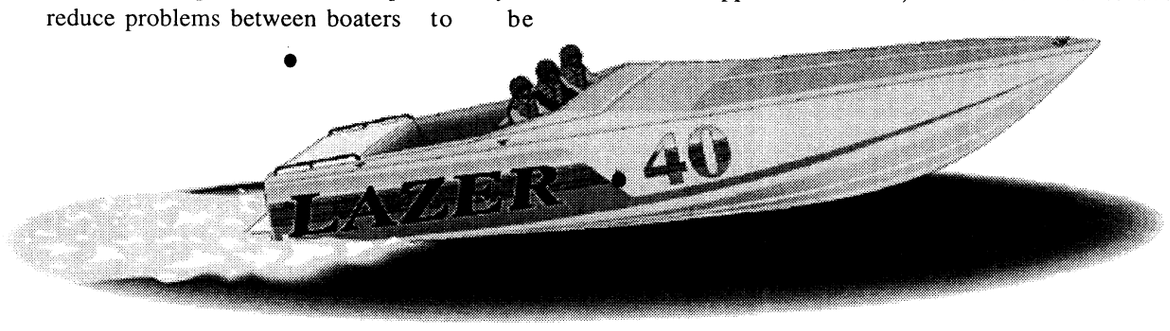
Operating a boat responsibly helps avoid user conflicts



Department of Natural Resources

SOCIAL CIRCLE, Ga. — From high-speed motor boats and personal watercraft (such as Jet Skis and Ski Doos) to john boats and canoes, more and more boat operators are enjoying Georgia's waters each year.

With many different types boats and watercraft availab today, it is important for all use to know the rules and respe other boat operators when on the water. While all boaters have a right to be on the water, they should be careful not to disturb or endanger other boaters.

For example, personal watercraft users should avoid operating in coves where anglers are fishing. Not only can a personal watercraft disturb a quiet fishing hole, it can endanger anglers by creating a wake that could swamp a small fishing boat. In addition, personal watercraft operators on reservoirs should avoid staying in one area for too long to reduce the chance of offending other boaters or homeowners in the area.

Other examples which can help reduce problems between boaters always choose a safe area in which to operate. Do not pull skiers across areas that are crowded with other moving boats or located near docks or shorelines.

•In addition, Georgia law requires that an observer be on board to watch the skier. In this way, the boat operator can concentrate on driving the boat and keeping the skier in safe areas, while the observer can watch the skier.

•If you see a boat that appears to be anchored or is not moving, stay as far away from it as possible. There is a good chance that swimmers are in the water, and either your boat or the wake that your boat creates could put them in danger.

•Do not attempt to jump the wake of another boat, especially on a personal watercraft. Not only can this endanger the people on your vessel, but it could create a serious accident if the other boat turns in your path.

•Remember that boats without motors, such as sailboats and canoes, do not have the ability to change direction or move quickly. Sailboats under sail and other non-motorized vessels always have the right of way over a motorized vessel. Motorized boats, such as motor boats and personal watercraft, should keep a safe distance from sailboats, canoes, and other small craft when on the water.

According to the U.S. Coast Guard, 78 percent of all of the boating accidents which occurred in 1993 were caused by factors that were controllable by the boat operator, such as improper lookout, carelessness and violations of the rules of the water. The Wildlife Resources Division urges all boat operators to respect other boaters who are on the water by knowing and following the rules of the water.

The U.S. Coast Guard Auxiliary, U.S. Power Squadrons and other organizations frequently offer boating safety courses for boaters of all ages and experience levels. To find out the date and location of the next course in your area, call (800) 368-5647. For more information on boating safety, contact the Wildlife Resources Division, Law Enforcement Office, nearest you or call (770) 918-6408.

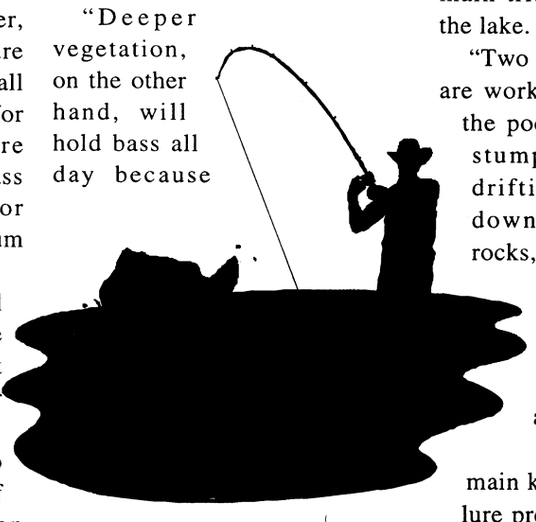
Bass fishermen shoot for cooler water or current

By David Hegel and Steve Price
Johnson® and Evinrude® Outboards

In the winter months, bass fishermen look for warmer water. In the summer, they look for cooler water.



"To many people, it probably looks like we're never satisfied with where we have to fish," said veteran angler Guy Eaker, "but in truth, water temperature is one of the most critical of all factors when we're looking for fish. Water temperature determines how active the bass will be, so we look for temperature as close to optimum as we can."

Eaker, a professional tournament angler for more than 20 years, said finding that optimum temperature is easier in summer than in winter.

"Two of the best places to fish for bass in the heat of summer are around deep vegetation or in the upper part of a lake where current may be present," he said. "The vegetation provides cover as well as oxygen, while moving water is always better oxygenated and usually cooler."

Shallow vegetation often produces good fishing early in the morning and again late in the afternoon, but it usually won't be as dependable during the middle of the day, according to the pro. This is because if the vegetation is too thick for sunlight to penetrate to the water below, decaying algae and plants will use up the oxygen and produce carbon dioxide, which will force the bass to re-locate.

"Deeper vegetation, on the other hand, will hold bass all day because conditions are more agreeable to them," Eaker said. "When I'm fishing deep grass, I either use a heavy 3/4-ounce jig and fish along the edge of the vegetation, or I slow-roll a heavy spinnerbait right over the top.

"Most of the time, these are the two places bass hold on this type of cover, and when you do locate them, you can catch some awesome stringers. I've seen plenty of 20- and 25-pound catches under these conditions."

Eaker's own preference for summer fishing is to travel to the far upper end of a lake where he can fish in moving water. This often means motoring into the main tributary river that feeds the lake.

"Two techniques I like to use are working crankbaits through the pockets behind rocks and stumps in the current and drifting a plastic worm downstream around the rocks," Eaker said.

"If there is a lot of fairly shallow shoreline cover present, I may also use a spinnerbait.

"I think one of the main keys to fishing current is lure presentation. I always try to have my lures moving downstream with the current so they appear more natural. This generally means holding my boat in the current and casting upstream, then guiding the lure around the rocks and into the different little pockets as the current washes the lure downstream.

Light tackle brings more strikes

By Earl Bentz and Steve Price
Outboard Marine Corporation

It's the opinion of former world champion bass fisherman Guido Hibdon, generally regarded as one of the top light-line, small-lure anglers in professional tournament bass fishing, light tackle has its good points.

"Light tackle is not a cure all, but in most cases it does bring more strikes," he said.

Hibdon's definition of light tackle includes lures ranging in weight from 1/8 down to 1/32 ounce and lines testing between six and 10 pounds. He uses these with open-face spinning reels and sensitive rods with fast tips.

"I've been using tackle like this for more than 35 years, so I'm comfortable with it," the Missouri pro said, "but a lot of fishermen have trouble using light tackle. It's a lot different from ordinary bait-casting equipment so it takes some practice before you feel comfortable using it.

"The primary difference between light and heavy tackle," he said, "is how much more active lures are when fished on lighter lines.

"This is the true key to light tackle fishing. Even 1/8-ounce lures work much better on six- or eight-pound test line than on 10-pound test line. The heavier the line, the stiffer it is, and the stiffer it is, the less a lure can move."

At the same time, the pro said, there is also a big difference between a lure weighing 1/8 ounce and one weighing 3/16 ounce.

"The real difference is in the rate of fall," Hibdon said. "Naturally, a heavier lure falls faster than a lighter one, but because the rate of fall is really critical in light tackle, you have to learn to distinguish between the two lures, and that just takes a lot of practice.

"In light tackle fishing, in which the majority of lures are jig-type baits, most strikes come as the lure is falling, so the best way to fish such a lure is by creating multiple falls," Hibdon said.

"Thus hopping or jigging these lures up off the bottom is normally more effective than crawling them along the bottom. I don't work my lures very much, but I do try to create multiple falls."

Many anglers associate light tackle with unusually short rods, often less than five feet in length. Hibdon, however, does not like short rods and certainly doesn't believe they're necessary for light lines and lures.

"I prefer a spinning rod just over six feet in length," he said. "To me, having a fast, sensitive tip is the most important part of a light tackle rod. That tip is what allows you to cast a light lure, feel a barely detectable strike, and then set the hook."

"Going from heavier tackle to such light equipment is a hard transition," he said, "but once they gain confidence in it, most anglers really enjoy it. The lures work better and generate more strikes, and that's what fishing is all about."

Personal watercraft accidents on the rise

Wildlife Resources Division

SOCIAL CIRCLE, Ga. — In spite of education efforts aimed at encouraging personal watercraft operators to slow down and obey the rules of the water, personal watercraft accidents are on the rise, according to the Georgia Department of Natural Resources, Wildlife Resources Division.

Statewide, more than 30 personal watercraft accidents have been recorded so far this year, and three of those accidents have resulted in fatalities.

"These unfortunate accidents indicate the need for personal watercraft operators to slow down, to follow the boating safety laws and to use common sense," said Col. Joel Brown, chief of Law Enforcement. "In the most recent personal watercraft accident which resulted in a fatality, two personal watercraft laws were violated.

"First of all, the accident occurred at 9:30 p.m., well after the legal operating hours of after sunrise and before sunset for personal watercraft. In addition, neither the operator nor the passenger were wearing the required life jackets. When the operator fell off the personal watercraft and could not be assisted by the passenger, the result was a drowning."

The number of personal watercraft on the water has more than doubled since 1994. In 1994, there were 10,287 personal watercraft in Georgia. Today, 24,124 personal watercraft are registered in the state.

While personal watercraft only account for about eight percent of the registered boats in the state, they are involved in 46 percent of the boating accidents. Last year, there were 62 personal watercraft accidents in Georgia. The last personal watercraft accident which resulted in a fatality prior to this boating season occurred in 1993.

"While personal watercraft may be fun, they are not toys and people need to be careful. There is no room for horseplay on personal watercraft," Brown said. "A recent survey of Georgia boaters showed that a strong majority (82 percent) of boaters want the Wildlife Resources Division to strictly regulate personal watercraft.

"Conservation rangers will be responding to the public's concern by watching for reckless actions and strictly enforcing personal watercraft laws this summer."

For more information on personal watercraft safety or other boating laws, contact the Wildlife Resources Division, Law Enforcement Office, nearest you or call (770) 918-6408.

Georgia state park offers guided canoe trip — Outdoor enthusiasts can explore Georgia's scenic waterways on guided canoe trips at High Falls and Panola Mountain State Parks.

Park staff will explain basic canoeing techniques and interpret natural surroundings while leading paddlers on day-long trips.

Participants can see beavers, otters, kingfishers, great blue herons, turtles and other wildlife.

Trips fill quickly, so pre-registration is required. To register, call the park directly.

The cost is $15 per person, which includes canoe, paddles and life preserver. Canoeists who bring their own equipment pay $10. A $2 park pass fee is charged per vehicle.

Eighteen of Georgia's state parks rent canoes so visitors can explore lakes and streams on their own.

Prices are $3 to $5 for an hour, $8 to $15 for four hours and $12 to $20 for an entire day. For a free "Guide to Georgia State Parks and Historic Sites" or "1997 Events" brochure, call (404) 656-3530.

The program will be conducted at the Future Farmers of America and Future Homemakers of America Camp in Covington, Ga.

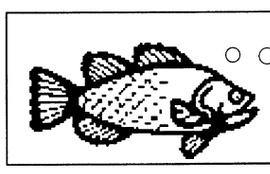
Hunter Safety Course changes requirements — The Georgia Hunter Safety Course recently changed.

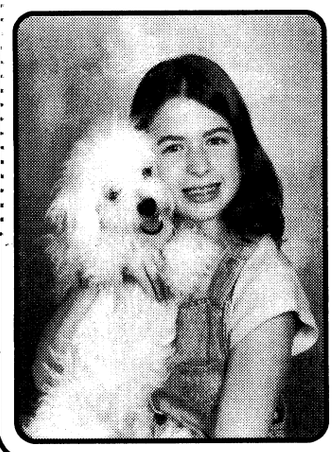
The Georgia Hunter Safety Course increased from six hours to 10 hours because the course now includes two hours of home study and eight hours of classroom instruction.



Because of the increase in hours, the course will be given over a two day period. Students must pick up a Hunter Safety Book at Outdoor Recreation Building 1707, or at the Infantry Branch Safety Office, Building 18, prior to attending class.

Students must answer the questions at the end of each chapter and bring them to class.

Everyone born on or after Jan. 1, 1961 must attend an approved Hunter Safety Course in order to hunt on Fort Benning or in the State of Georgia.



The 10 hour Georgia Department of Natural Resources Hunter Safety Course will be 6 to 9 p.m. Aug 21 and 8 a.m. to 1 p.m. Aug. 23 in Infantry Hall, Classroom 2.

Students must attend both sessions and need to bring their Social Security number.

Volunteers support Fort Benning Schools

By Elizabeth E. LaMonica
Special to The Bayonet©

As summer vacation draws to a close, many Fort Benning parents might look forward to the first day of school when their children will spend half of their time and energy in a building besides their home.

Then again, some parents might be looking forward to joining their children at their schools as volunteers.

Last year, 370 parents gave their time and energy to Fort Benning's one middle and six elementary schools, volunteering to fill a variety of positions.

"The fact that the parents volunteer sends a very important message to their children," said Gail Wilson, director of Staff Development, Fort Benning Schools, "and that is their parents value education."

Volunteers should be high school graduates, but an exception is made for high school students who volunteer to fulfill their service requirements.

Many of the schools have similar needs for parent volunteers. Several have special requirements or offer training to their volunteers. Each principal recognizes the important impact volunteers have on the classroom.

"We encourage parents to come in and volunteer. We know that when they do it makes a tremendous difference," said Glenn Hughes, principal of Freddie Stowers Elementary School and interim principal of Frank R. Loyd Elementary School. "Volunteers are so critical and essential for the child. The parents are the first and the most important teacher their children will ever have."

The following lists some of the specific needs each of the installation's seven schools has for parent volunteers. If you have a specific talent you would like to share with your child's school, call the school with that information.

"We have a lot of flexibility in the types of support we need," said Wilson.

Schools offer curriculum information

Fort Benning Schools

THE ABC's of post schools

As the 1997-98 school year begins, parents may want to know some additional information about the superintendent, principals and schools that will help educate their children.

The following information will help parents gain a better understanding of the people and institutions involved in the Fort Benning students' learning atmospheres.

McMullen

•Dr. Dell W. McMullen is the superintendent for Fort Benning Schools. She has been in this position since 1994.

She began teaching math and science at the elementary level in 1973 in Columbus. Besides teaching, McMullen has served the Muscogee County School District as the coordinator for the Health Improvement Program and as principal at Blanchard Elementary School.

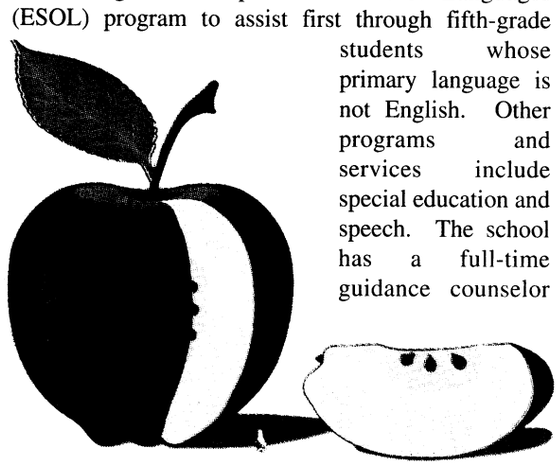
In 1988, she became principal of Loyd Elementary School on Fort Benning and in 1990, she assumed the role of assistant superintendent at Fort Benning Schools.

She received a master's of Education degree from Columbus College, her specialist's in Education from Georgia State University and her doctorate in Education from Auburn University.

McMullen's awards include: the Girls Scouts' Woman of Achievement in 1993, Soroptimist Club's Woman of Distinction in 1995 and the Mayor's Distinguished Citizen Award for Outstanding Achievement in Education and Civic Leadership in 1995.

•White Elementary School students range from pre-K to the fifth grade. The school is located on First Division Road and the students who reside in the north and center Main Post areas and fourth- and fifth-graders from McGraw Manor.

The staff conducts planning and assessment to ensure the needs of individual students are met. The school and community work together to build upon and improve the high quality of education provided to students.



Archer

Dr. Judy Archer is serving in her second year as the principal of White Elementary School. She earned her doctorate degree in Educational Administration and Instructional Supervision from the University of Kentucky. Prior to serving as principal, Archer served as curriculum coordinator with the Fort Benning Schools for six years.

In addition to the basic subject areas, White School places emphasis on critical thinking skills, math problem-solving, writing and composition, hands-on science, and technology.

The school has an active Safety Patrol Program for 5th grade students and an Awards Program for all students, which recognizes and rewards exceptional effort, citizenship and achievement of students.

White School is concerned about meeting the academic challenge for all students and has programs available to students with special needs. The school offers English for Speakers of Other Languages (ESOL) program to assist first through fifth-grade students whose primary language is not English. Other programs and services include special education and speech. The school has a full-time guidance counselor and is accredited by the Southern Association of Colleges and Schools.

Middlemiss

•Dr. Beth Middlemiss begins her fourth year as a principal of Faith Middle School and her 13th year as a member of Fort Benning Schools' administrative team. Prior to coming to Faith she served as Fort Benning Schools' director of Staff Development. Before coming to Fort Benning, Middlemiss served in Georgia schools as elementary principal, high school assistant principal, high school counselor, junior high school social studies teacher and teacher of fourth grade.

Middlemiss holds a Ph.D. in educational administration, an educational specialist's degree in educational administration, a master's degree in guidance and counseling, and a bachelor's degree in history.

•Dexter Elementary School is located on Yeager Avenue and continues to educate all who attend.

Dexter was named a Georgia School of Excellence. Dexter teacher Virginia Wilcox was named Georgia's Elementary Science Teacher of the Year. Kindergarten teacher Earnestine Ezekiel was named Educator of the Year by the Department of Interior, Georgia Clean and Beautiful Commission for her leadership in ecology and was also named Educator of the Year by the Keep Columbus Clean and Beautiful.

Dexter's Kindergarten Ecology Club (e-Club) was named second in the state for their ecology projects.

Before School Fitness offers aerobics, jump rope, juggling and dance from 8:10-8:30 a.m.

WDEX In-house television production is a program for 5th Graders. The students produce a weekly TV show featuring curriculum highlights from classrooms; news and weather; healthy snacks from the student "La Chef." There's also the Ecology Club for kindergartners and Green Thumbs (Upper grades, after school) and Greenhouse Complex. Dexter offers ambassadors to serve as student hosts at school events. Other clubs are the Sign Language Club, a popular activity across grade levels and the K-Club (Kindness Club) for all grade levels, promoting good character traits and rewarding random acts of kindness. The Library Media Center programs such as Accelerated Reader Program, Discuss Books, CD Rom books and encyclopedias, countless software programs to coordinate with curriculum areas, multimedia technology and telecommunication and on-line programs and projects.

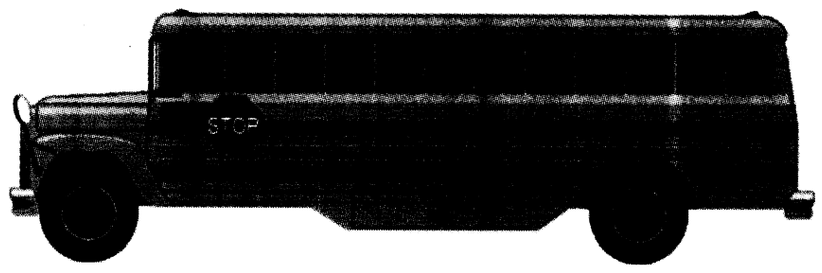
The Galaxy Classroom Distance Learning program offers math, science and language arts programs.

"This program has been very successful. It provides students the opportunity to interact with other students around the country on math, science and language arts topics," said Vicki Rogers, principal of Dexter. "Our students' writings and achievements have been published on the Galaxy Network and featured on Galaxy's nationally televised program. This program is offered in our first, fourth and fifth grades, and students interact via fax machines," she said.

The School Improvement Plan will focus on initiatives in the areas of language arts, technology, safe schools and School-Home Partnership. Dexter will be implementing the WEE DELIVER Postal Program this year, which is a nationwide U.S. Postal Service program. WEE DELIVER sets up a simulated Post Office in the school, with a postmaster, sorters, facers, nixie clerks, and letter carriers.

Rogers

Rogers was named 1996 National Distinguished Principal for her ability to bring all stakeholders into a collaborative planning process and articulate a common vision through outstanding communications.



Rogers was named DoDEA's National Distinguished Principal of the Year by the National Association of Elementary Principals and DoDEA (Department of Defense Education Activity). She was a Graduate of the 1997 Leadership Columbus Class. Rogers was also honored as Principal of the Year at DoDEA's Spirit of Excellence Awards Celebration, at the Worldwide Principals' Meeting in Baltimore, Maryland, March 1997.

She earned an education degree from the University of Georgia and a master's in education and bachelor's of science from Georgia Southwestern University.

Rogers has been the principal at Dexter from 1990 to present.

•McBride Elementary School is located at 700 Custer Road. It houses pre-K through the third grade. The school building underwent a total renovation beginning in the fall of 1996, requiring major changes in the facility. The students' educational program was relocated in 28 portable classrooms for the remainder of the year.

The curriculum provides an academic program for elementary students and includes special instruction in music art and physical education. The school's library media program is available to the staff and students to enhance instruction and learning. A science lab for hands on instruction, a discourse lab, and computer lab are part of daily instruction.

Reading opportunities include a special reading program for students needing extra help. An Accelerated Reading Program is provided to increase student interest in reading which combines children's literature with technology. After reading a book and passing a computerized test, students can earn points based on the length and difficulty of the volume. The points are redeemed for school supplies.

A monthly program called "Sharing Of Success" (S.O.S.) has also been added to the McBride program. The S.O.S. program features a guest speaker talking about ways for students to become successful.

"The staff at McBride believes in educating all students with quality curriculum resulting in high levels of academic performance," said Del Hicks "Teachers' goals are students' mastery of core skills and exhibition of positive social emotional behaviors and attitudes. The school is organized in accordance with the belief that all students can learn essential skills and the students themselves have adopted the slogan 'I can and I will do my very best.'

"The staff at McBride also believes that parent participation has a very positive impact on student achievement. Parents are encouraged to take an active interest in their child's school. This can be done by volunteering for classroom and school activities, participating in the PTO and visiting the school to observe how the school functions. Parents are encouraged to call the school for reservations and eat lunch with their children whenever possible."

Grips & Grins

How do I get my photo on this page?

To meet customer needs and requests, The Bayonet added a Grips and Grins Page.

The newspaper receives many requests to run awards, promotions and other photos of this type, so the staff decided to designate a page just for that.

Because of the small size of our staff and the frequency and number of the events that generally produce grip-and-grin type photos, the newspaper's policy remains that we will not send a reporter to take these type of photos, but we will run those submitted by our readers.

Photos you may submit include those from events such as balls, teas, coffees, club and organizational meetings and elections, award presentations, check presentations, official parties, dinners, dining events, dances and group photos.

If you have a good-quality, black and white or color photo of an awards or promotion ceremony, sporting team, social event, etc., send it to The Bayonet, Grips and Grins Page, U.S. Army Infantry Center Public Affairs Office, Infantry Hall, Room 606, Fort Benning, Ga., 31905. No Polaroid shots please.

Volunteers: Time well spent at post schools

Herbert J. Dexter Elementary

According to Vicki Rogers, principal, Dexter's volunteer program is an organized component of its School-Home Partnership Program.

"Our mission of educating our children is a joint effort of all stakeholders: parents, school staff and students," said Rogers.

Parents share their talents and expertise in a variety of ways through Dexter's program, which focuses on volunteers as co-teachers and learners. Volunteers work in the library media center, computer labs and classrooms.

Dexter also plans to start a training program designed to teach parent volunteers to assist in the computer lab.

To volunteer at Dexter, call the school at 545-3424.

Don C. Faith Middle

Faith's volunteer force is especially active in the media center, but parents are needed throughout the school, said Dr. Beth Middlemiss, principal.

Parents help with homeroom activities, provide baked goods for fund raisers, and help with parties or specialized activities. Some parents help students with advanced projects.

"They do so many things to support us on an everyday basis with routine tasks and specialized tasks when they bring in special abilities," Middlemiss said.

Faith offers a training program about computer usage to train parents to work with students in the labs and the classroom. The class is scheduled for 8:30 to 10:30 a.m. Oct. 2. More volunteer opportunities will be published in the first school newsletter.

To volunteer at Faith, call the office at 545-5524.

Frank R. Loyd Elementary

Loyd's very involved parent population is already actively volunteering. Several parents began the year by assisting other parents during registration and signing up parents for the Parent Teacher Organization, Hughes said.

Parents are needed to assist in the classrooms, media center and cafeteria.

"We welcome parents to volunteer in their children's classroom or in any other area that they have an interest," Hughes said.

To volunteer at Loyd, call 544-3432.

Morris R. McBride Elementary

According to Dell Hicks, principal, an active parent volunteer program at McBride is a top priority.

"Parents have so much to offer," said Hicks, "in fact, many do not give themselves enough credit. I would encourage every parent to spend some time volunteering."

Parents are needed to volunteer in the learning resource center, discourse learning lab, computer lab, science lab and in the classrooms.

To volunteer at McBride, call the school at 544-9411.

William H. Spencer High

Spencer needs several volunteers to work in the media center, according to Olivia Rutledge, principal.

"I will be working with the 29th Regiment and the Parent, Teacher, Student Association after school starts to determine our other volunteer needs," she said.

Training will be provided by the media specialists for the parents who volunteer to help in the media center.

To volunteer at Spencer, call the main office at 685-7652.

Freddie Stowers Elementary

Stowers has several unique programs that encourage parent participation and volunteering in school, said Hughes.

Teachers needing assistance can turn activities into a special room dedicated to parent volunteers. Parents can help teachers with their needs and network with other parents at the same time.

The very involved parent program is another program to encourage parent involvement. Teachers plan two activities a month that parents are invited to the school to participate in with their child and a few other students. These activities can be further expanded at home, further involving the parent.

"We want school to be an extension of what they have at home,"said Hughes. "We need parents whatever area of interest they have."

Room mothers are needed for the beginning of the year, as well as volunteers for the media center, computer lab or cafeteria.

To volunteer at Stowers, call the office at 544-2312.

Edward A. White Elementary

With more than 5,000 hours last year, White boasts the most parent volunteer hours, according to Dr. Judy Archer, principal.

"Many of our programs are made possible by volunteers," she said. "Parents are really our partners in the educational process of our children at all levels."

White has an open door policy: parents are welcome at any time during the day. Volunteers are needed in many ways that enhance the educational experiences of the students.

White also offers volunteer training through a program that teaches parents how to teach children to read.

To volunteer at White, call 545-4623.

Richard G. Wilson Elementary

Volunteers are essential at Wilson, said Phyllis Parker, principal.

Parents work with the children directly in the media center and by helping the teachers in the classroom. Wilson also relies on volunteers to work in the school store, as room mothers and for help during field day, the fall festival and Santa's Workshop.

"Extra adults in the room have positive effects," Parker said. "The more adult role models we have, the better off the children are going to be."

To volunteer at Wilson, call the school at 545-5723.

To become a volunteer for any of the Fort Benning Schools, a parent may sign up at the school he or she wishes to help.

A person wishing to volunteer who is not a parent may call Gail Wilson at 545-8245 to receive more information about volunteering.

Do you have poisonous chemicals in your home or work?

These chemicals can harm your health, kill wildlife and destroy our valuable natural resources.

The Environmental Manage-ment Division (EMD) of DPW has a staff of experts to assist in preventing chemicals from being released into our environment. This staff is in the process of implementing a Pollution Prevention Plan.

This plan is expected to reduce the amount of hazardous waste we generate by 50 percent before 1999. Currently, we generate more than 300,000 pounds of hazardous waste a year. The ultimate goal is to reduce this number to zero. Yes, zero — we can do it. But we need your help. Here are some hints that will help us achieve this goal, but most of all we will be saving our environment.

•Buy only latex paints instead of oil-based. Oil-based paints are flammable and are regulated upon disposal. Latex paints are water based, clean up easily and pose few hazards.

•Buy only chemicals you need and no more. Too often we buy more chemicals than we will ever use. In most cases, disposal of even a small quantity of these chemicals can cost hundreds of dollars. Approximately 85 percent of the hazardous waste that we dispose of is a result of purchasing, more chemicals than we use.

•Avoid buying aerosol cans. They contain propellants that are flammable and contribute to air pollution. Instead, buy products with hand-pumps.

•If you do have chemicals that you can no longer use, don't put them in the closet in the hope they will go away. They won't. If someone else can use the product, give it to them. Otherwise take the time to dispose of chemicals properly.

If you have questions call your Unit and activities environmental coordinator or the DPW at 545-4766, or Family Housing residents can call at 545-4766.

•Make sure that all containers are labeled properly and completely. At work sites maintain a file of the material safety data sheets for all chemicals you use.

•Chemicals should be used for their intended purpose and used up completely. Never pour excess chemicals down the drain just because it is easier. This is illegal.

•Keep containers closed. Keep them out of the reach of children. Remember open containers result in air pollution.

Listed below are some methods to reduce chemicals around the home:

•Replace glass cleaner with a mixture of one tablespoon of vinegar or lemon juice in one quart of water. Spray on and use newspaper to wipe dry. Replace mothballs with cedar chips, lavender flowers, rosemary, mint or white peppercorns;

•Replace furniture polish with one teaspoon of lemon juice in one pint of mineral or vegetable oil;

•If you store a homemade mixture make sure it is properly labeled and do not store in a container that could be mistaken for a food or beverage;

•When preparing alternatives, mix only what is needed for the job at hand and mix in a clean container.

Comments and Questions

If you have questions or topics that you would like to be addressed in the DPW "Information Corner" please contact Glenn Todd, DPW Customer Relations specialist, 545-2117, or write to the Directorate of Public Works, Building 6, Room 409; ATTN: ATZB-PWM (Glenn Todd) Fort Benning, GA 31905.

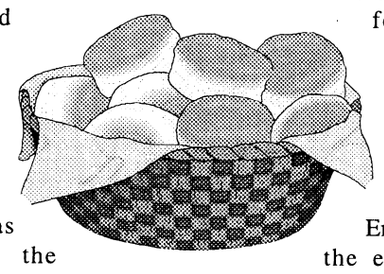
The Feast of the Assumption celebrates Mary's passage into heaven



By Philip J. Reilly
USAIC Chaplains' Office

The Feast of the Assumption celebrates Mary's passage to heaven at the end of her life. It is a divine recognition of her fidelity and her role as mother of the Son of God.

The idea that Mary enjoyed an assumption is not affirmed in any direct way by the New Testament, or in the most primitive tradition, but rather developed gradually out of the Catholic Church's life of prayer, biblical reflection and sacraments.

Praying to Mary is attested from very early times. But the first public festival connected with her seems to have begun in the fifth century in Jerusalem at the site where Mary was thought to have rested on her way from Jerusalem to Bethlehem.

This was the feast of the Theotokos, also known as God bearer or Mother of God celebrated Aug. 15.

Later in the century, the feast was transferred to the basilica where Mary's tomb was venerated.

Gradually, the August feast of the Theotokos came to focus on the Dormition, "Falling Asleep" of Mary, and this title was made universal by Emporer Maurice at the end of the sixth century.

Rome accepted the Feast of the Dormition during the seventh century.

In the next century it became known as the Assumption, a name that calls attention to the manner of the way Mary was taken up fully into heaven.

The idea that Mary was assumed is connected to her standing in the presence of God through the angel of the annunciation.

The Holy Spirit descended to her and she became pregnant with Jesus who is the eternal word.

But the principle theological reason for the Assumption is that she is the Mother of Jesus, who is the Son of God.

Because she was conceived sinless, was a virgin-mother and spared the birth pains that are punishment of sin, (Gen. 3:16) she was exempt from death but accepted it in order to be one with her Divine Son.

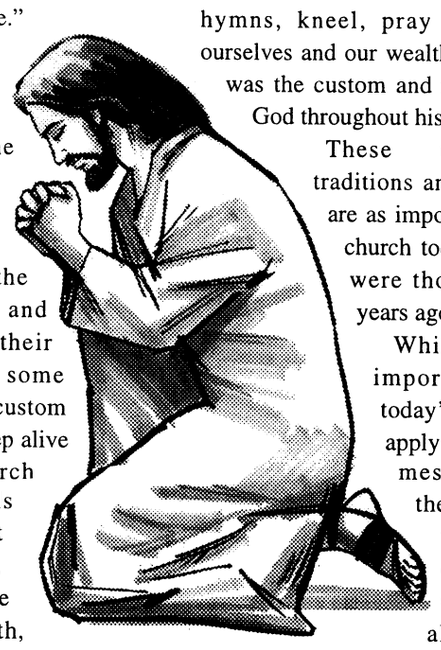
Traditions pull people back to God

By Chaplain (Capt.) Len Kircher
11th Infantry Regiment

It was 1973 and I was a young enlisted soldier at Fort Meade, Md. At a potluck dinner after Sunday chapel, Chaplain (Col.) Holland Hope, a legend in the Chaplain's Corps, came to speak to Soldiers.

He was sharing stories about his ministry in the military. He served in Korea and was noted as one of the last "combatant" chaplains, having led a squad of Soldiers to take an enemy position.

Later he served in Vietnam as chaplain to Gen. William Westmoreland.



During the dinner, he talked about how much he loved Soldiers and especially the Army itself.

In particular, he was impressed with the traditions of the Army. The playing of taps, the "long gray line," reveille, and especially the flag.

All of these traditions served to remind him of the proud history of the military.

What he said next has stuck with me to this day — he loved the Army so much he stated, that "my blood is O.D. Green and my heart pumps to a cadence."

The traditions found within the Army serve to remind us of the great sacrifices of those who have gone before us.

Most of the ceremonies and traditions have their background in some historic event or custom that we seek to keep alive today. The Church also has symbols and traditions that serve to keep alive, within the community of faith, certain events that are important to believers.

When Christians celebrate communion, they recall the death of Jesus Christ. The cup and bread serve as visible and physical reminders of what God did for humanity.

When a person is baptized, the presence of the water helps to remind us of the cleansing that takes place in our spirit.

When we attend church we sing hymns, kneel, pray and offer ourselves and our wealth to God as was the custom and mandate of God throughout history.

These teachings, traditions and symbols are as important to the church today as they were thousands of years ago.

While it is important that today's believers apply the ancient message of their faith to the needs of people today, it is also very important that we not forget where we came from. We must be "anchored to the rock, but geared to the times."

As the traditions and customs of the Army serve to remind us of the sacrifices of those who've gone before us, the teachings and traditions of the Church also pull us back to our roots in God.

They serve as real and constant reminders of what God has done for us throughout history.

Schools: Post administrators, teachers continue to educate

Hicks

Hicks is in his ninth year as principal of McBride School. Hicks holds a bachelor's degree and a master's degree from Northern Illinois University and an Educational Specialist's degree from Troy State University.

•Stowers Elementary School is located off 1st Cavalry Division Road on Stowers Drive.

Hughes

"The faculty and staff of Stowers are very excited about the new programs that we will be offering this year," said principal Glenn Hughes. "The new technology lab consisting of state of the art equipment will enable an entire classroom to work with the computers and enhance the students' technology capabilities. The new discourse classroom is another technology based classroom in which lessons will be taught and enhanced using technology," he said.

Another addition to the curriculum at Stowers is the character education materials, which will become a central focus for the school students and staff this year.

"The beginning of school is a very exciting time for educators," Hughes said. "To see the excitement in the eyes of a child at the beginning of school is uplifting. We, as educators, need to capture those twinkles in the eye and keep the children excited and challenged throughout the year. Education is the best profession in the world. The very foundations for a child's life are set first by their parents. Then the school and home work together to prepare each child for their future," he said.

Hughes begins his fourth year as principal of Freddie Stowers Elementary School. He has ten years teaching experience and eight years in administration. Hughes holds a bachelor's degree in elementary education, a master's degree in administration from Columbus State University and an educational specialist's degree in administration from Troy State.

•Wilson Elementary School serves the children and families of the Indianhead Terrace housing area. Located at 112 Lavoie Avenue, it is the home of the Wilson Wildcats with an enrollment of approximately 417 students from pre-K through fifth grade. The mission of "developing minds - reaching possibilities" is addressed through curriculum, a strong parent-school relationship and a positive learning environment.

Included in the curriculum are special instruction in music, art, physical education, a library and media, guidance and a special education program. The services of a full time counselor, special education resource teacher, and speech and language pathologist are available. Opportunities are also available for students to participate in extracurricular activities such as student counsel, chorus and technology club.

With technology at the forefront of the curriculum, students are afforded opportunities to work with CD-ROMs, computers, modems, QuickTake cameras, and the Internet.

Believing a strong school-home relationship is vital, a number of opportunities are provided to build and strengthen this alliance. Parents can be seen throughout the building on a daily basis working with students in classrooms, the media center, school store or working on a variety of PTO related projects. Parent luncheons are scheduled twice curing the school year as well as a Fall Festival and an end-of-year celebration.

Phyllis Parker begins her eighth year as principal at Wilson. Prior to coming to Wilson, she was a classroom teacher and an assistant principal in the Fort Benning School system. Parker holds a bachelor's degree from Albany State University, a master's degree from Valdosta State University and an educational specialist's degree from Troy State University.

"At Wilson, we believe that our children are our most valued and treasured resource", Parker said. "We've dedicated ourselves to providing them with the best education possible."

Spencer High School focuses on improving the student's aptitude test scores, said principal Olivia T. Rutledge.

The school, which 70 percent of the student body comes from Fort Benning, offers many programs.

Rutledge

It has the Honors Plus Program. This accelerated program pairs a language with a math class and allows underclassmen to receive three credits of English in two years. The Business Program teaches students about different types of business careers such as marketing and computers.

Rutledge has been with the Muscogee County School District for 23 years, beginning as a teacher. She has also worked as a middle school counselor.

Before coming to Spencer, Rutledge served as the assistant principal for curriculum and instruction at Carver High School.

She has specialist's and master's degrees in School Counseling, Mental Retardation and Administration.

Fire!

Post firemen offer home safety tips

By Elizabeth E. LaMonica
Special to The Bayonet©

Elizabeth E. LaMonica

A recent quarters fire destroyed this Fort Benning home. The cause of the fire is under investigation.

Thousands of residences and other government buildings on this installation depend on the Fort Benning Fire Department to respond quickly to crisis situations and to keep Soldiers, civilians and family members safe from harm.

What many people don't know is that the fire department is also committed to preventing as many of these emergencies as possible through fire prevention education and inspections.

"For the past seven months, we have had an average of 2.4 quarters fires per month," said Fire Chief Arthur Simmons. "Most are kitchen fires or kids playing with lighters or matches."

Sometimes, however, the spark causing the fire is not as obvious. That's where Fire Prevention Officer Hollis Brown steps in.

"I'm here to serve our military families," Brown said. "They are my main concern.

"I ensure occupied government buildings, military units and business buildings are inspected on an annual basis. Quarters are inspected on a call basis only. If residents want their quarters inspected, they should call us and we will do a courtesy inspection for them."

It takes less than one hour to conduct an inspection, according to Brown. If the home has a fixed fire suppression system, found above the stove in many Fort Benning kitchens, the resident will receive a quick tutorial on how it operates.

Brown also inspects the vent pipes of gas appliances to ensure they are properly affixed, preventing a carbon monoxide leak. He checks smoke detectors and points out violations and safety hazards.

Some of the most common violations are improper storage, unattended cooking and overloaded electrical circuits.

"We look at how and where residents are storing things," Simmons said. "We had fires caused by people storing combustibles right up against their hot water heaters."

Residents who are maintaining a swimming pool must be particularly careful with those chemicals.

"Chlorine and other chemicals used in association with pools will explode if they are mixed with petroleum products," Brown said.

Although smoke detectors are required to be installed in government housing there is no such requirement for fire extinguishers or carbon monoxide detectors.

"We highly recommend that (residents) have their own personal fire extinguisher," Brown said. "It should be a multiple purpose, ABC five or 10-pound fire extinguisher."

Smoke detector maintenance is also recommended. Cleaning the smoke detector should be done every six months.

"People should change the batteries in their smoke detectors when they change their clocks for daylight savings time," Brown said.

If, despite all precautions, a fire does occur, Soldiers and family members should have a plan for a quick and safe evacuation of their home. If someone is trapped, he or she should know how to respond to that situation.

"During Fire Prevention Week we teach people how to check for heat through a closed door," Brown said.

"In the event they are trapped, they can raise the window, yell for help and wave something outside the window to draw attention and assistance."

In the United States, more people died in fires last year than at any time since 1990, the National Fire Protection Association reported.

Nearly 4,990 people in 1996 were killed by fires, making the U.S. fire death rate the highest in the industrialized world outside the former Soviet bloc.

Fire Prevention Week is Oct. 5 through 10 and during this time, Brown will visit post schools to teach children the basics of fire safety.

To schedule a quarters safety inspection, call 545-9235.

EOO plans Women's Equality Day program

By Elizabeth E. LaMonica
Special to The Bayonet©

Fort Benning's Equal Opportunity Office honors women's accomplishments with a Women's Equality Program at 11:30 a.m. today in Building. 3308 on Sand Hill.

The theme for the program is "We're still here and striving," which celebrates the trials, tribulations and triumphs already achieved in the women's equality movement while recognizing the need for further strides in equal treatment.

"I think it would be good for all the Soldiers and people on Fort Benning to come out just to see that, along with mainstream society, the military is also moving forward with the enhancement of females in the workplace," said Sgt. 1st Class Terry Thomas, Equal Opportunity Advisor (EOA), 11th Infantry Regt.

The program celebrates the 76th anniversary of women achieving the right to vote and will feature Lt. Col. Nancy Johnson, commander, 30th Adjutant General (Reception) Battalion, Infantry Training Brigade, as the guest speaker.

"This is the World Series of equal opportunity programs," said Sgt. 1st Class Paul Horton, EOA, ITB. "I think this will be the best program that Fort Benning has evei seen.

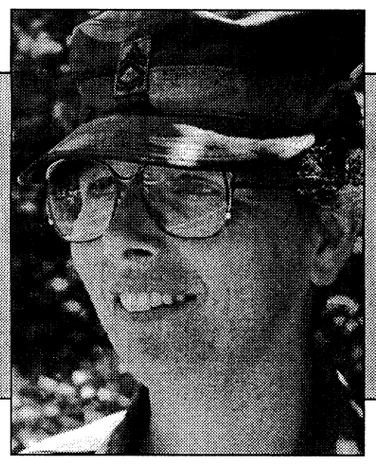
"This program is not just for females. It's an awareness program and open to men and women."

The program is free, includes a skit about the progress made in the women's equality movement and a raffle. Refreshments will be served and the public is invited to attend.

For more information about this event, call 545-6665.

VARIOUS VOICES

How do you think your life is different from your grandmother's because of the women's equality movement?



Doris Logan, Department of Defense employee — "I have opportunities now they didn't have, both with education and jobs. We have more mobility now. Some barriers have been diminished or depleted."

Staff Sgt. Stacie Thornhill, Headquarters Service Company, Infantry Training Brigade — "We've gotten away from the housekeeper or mother only persona. Now, we're able to pursue the career of our choice, which our grandmothers couldn't."

Sgt. Sharion German, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 1st Battalion, 38th Infantry Regiment, Infantry Training Brigade — "Work was the family and now we have the choice of what to do. We also have the right to vote."

Sgt. 1st Class Cindy Holland, Headquarters, 2nd Battalion, 54th Infantry Regiment, Infantry Training Brigade — "Today we have more educational and occupational choices and opportunities to further ourselves in a corporation or as an entrepreneur."

Staff Sgt. Sharon Ross, Headquarters, 2nd Battalion, 19th Infantry Regiment, Infantry Training Brigade — "It has changed drastically. We have a choice in careers. The career I have my grandmother couldn't have had. We still have a long way to go, though."

Brenda Thompson, Federal Women's Program representative for the Infantry Training Brigade — "Women have more power in the political field now as a direct result of the 19th Amendment. This has opened the doors to different occupational choices."

Gender equality

Discrimination in any form should not be tolerated

By Elizabeth E. LaMonica
Special to The Bayonet

Elizabeth E. LaMonica thinks while the concept is worthy, there is a limit to what can be done in the name of equality.

commentary

Women's Equality Day recognizes the 19th Amendment, which stated that the right to vote should not be denied on the basis of gender. In other words, women could vote.

What does that really mean to me, though? I am proud that I have the right to express my opinion as a fully functioning member of our society.

My predecessors in the women's equality movement fought for and won the right for females to be whatever we want to be and to choose whatever careers we want to choose. That's good.

But it's not enough.

I think that this constitutional amendment should reach into other aspects of our American society and should mean that no one, man or woman, should be discriminated against because of gender.

I think the playing field for jobs, college scholarships or loans should be completely level and not in my favor because of gender.

Gender discrimination still occurs, though, but sometimes in unexpected ways.

I recently listened to a debate about our government's policy to promote minority-owned businesses with special loans. The issue seemed to be that Caucasian women were now eligible for these loans, which left Caucasian males as the only excluded group.

How is this fair? To me, it seems as if that's a case of double discrimination, color and gender.

That's not fair.

I would hate to be considered for a job because of my gender. If I were hired not because I was qualified to fill that position, but because I made some company's demographics look good, what would that prove?

I think it would prove that discrimination still exists.

I think it does.

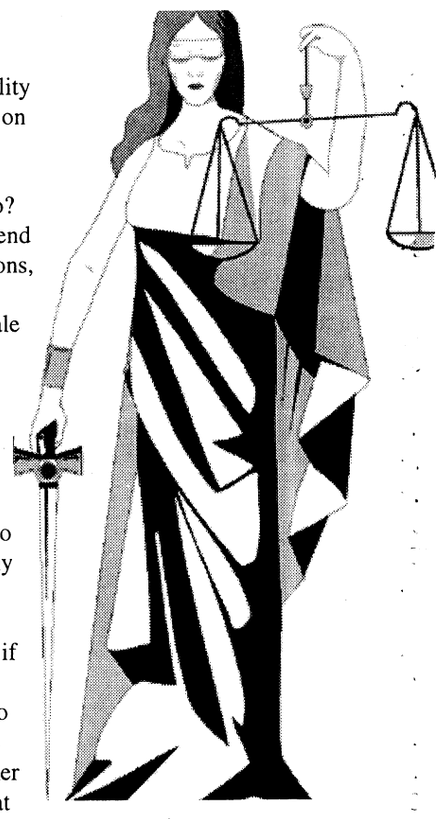
Furthermore, I don't think it can ever be eliminated.

I also think policies such as affirmative action do not provide equal, but rather preferential treatment.

I think the concept of equality should extend to hiring based on qualifications, not quotas.

If a person is capable, why shouldn't she or he get the job?

I think this also should extend to traditionally male occupations, even military ones.



My husband is in an all male unit, but if a female were to join his unit, I could accept that — as long as I knew the standards were not lowered and exceptions were not made for her gender.

In other words, women who want to be Navy SEALs, Army Rangers or Green Berets should be able to meet the requirements already in place if they want true equality.

I also think any person who wants to devote his or her life to being a parent or homemaker should not be ridiculed for that decision. I have seen the sneers on both sides of that issue.

I'm not sure how present-day society is any better than my grandmother's due to the women's equality movement. Then, half of society was not allowed to vote. Now, half of society chooses not to. This is improvement?

I'm not sure gender discrimination can ever be completely eliminated. Our society trains us to evaluate current situations based on our past experiences. As a result, we all have discriminated on the basis of a name, a hair color, a skin color or a gender.

Perhaps we should consider a human equality day?

Women's Equality Day spirit should be daily occurrence

By Yvette Stewart
Infantry Training Brigade

We celebrate Women's Equality Day Aug. 26. We do not get the day off, we do not win a prize. What we get is recognition. I have a deep sense of appreciation for the fact that we are recognized.

commentary

In 1973 the president of the United States proclaimed Aug. 26 a day for women to be recognized as equals.

The 19th Amendment of the Constitution gives women the right to vote. When women exercise the right to vote it should remind each and every woman how far we have come and how far we still have to go in order to be equal.

As a young girl I had a lot of dreams of what I wanted to be. One of those dreams was being a writer. It is one of the things that I love to do.

As a woman I've experienced the many different stereotypes people have about women.

When I worked on Wall Street, the impression I received was women needed to be good to look at and brains were not required.

Speaking my mind was one of the problems I encountered. I've never had a problem with expressing my opinion. An attitude goes a long way and, believe me, I have one.

Although not common in most work settings, the willingness to learn everything connected to your work environment makes you eligible for many things.

I believe if women got together, we would become a power so strong, it would be a force to be reckoned with.

As a woman, I challenge all women to get together, help each other and let everyone know that we are equals, not just one day out of the year but everyday.

Editor's note: The Equal Opportunity Office sponsors a program today at 11:30 a.m. in Building 3308, Sand Hill.

Yvette Stewart is a secretary at the Infantry Training Brigade training and operations office.

Women's Equality Day celebrates right to equal treatment

Aug. 26, 1973, the president of the United States designated Women's Equality Day, denoting the ratification of the 19th Amendment to the U.S. Constitution, giving women the right to vote. Our annual celebration reminds us of women's continuing efforts toward equality in all spheres of our society.

From its radical beginning in 1848, during the Women's Rights Convention in Seneca Falls, the suffrage movement was a long, uphill battle for courageous women like Elizabeth Cady Stanton who drafted the Declaration of Sentiments. The declaration listed the legal disadvantages of women and became the catalyst for future suffrage conventions.

From 1870 to 1910, there were 480 attempts across the nation to pass legislation, resulting in only 27 state votes, of which only two were successful. Then, Aug. 26, 1920, Tennessee became the 36th state to ratify the 19th Amendment, making it a constitutional right for women to vote.

Since then, the 19th Amendment provided everyone a chance to honor the work of Stanton and others who worked so hard to gain the right to vote. By observing this celebration and casting our vote, we ensure the fight for equality continues.

This year, Women's Equality Day celebrates the 77th anniversary of the 19th Amendment.

The right to vote is a precious privilege which should not be taken lightly. The entire governmental process is enhanced by men and women who cast their votes.

Women's Equality Day is an excellent opportunity for Soldiers and civilians at Fort Benning to acknowledge their responsibilities to vote and to recognize the continuing efforts toward women's equality and equality for all Americans.

Soldiers should plan ahead to ensure a safe Labor Day weekend

Every Labor Day weekend the highways are crowded with people enjoying the last summer holiday of the year.

Many families will plan extended weekends and travel great distances to be with relatives. Unfortunately, traffic accidents reach their peak during this holiday.

Our goal is for Fort Benning to be accident free. This can only be achieved if everyone is involved in the prevention effort. I need your help to achieve this goal. I want you to do the following as you make plans for this long, summer weekend:

Check vehicle and conduct a good PMCS to ensure that it runs properly.

Check the weather forecast for the area to be traveled.

Take frequent breaks (at least every two hours) on long trips.

Drive and boat defensively, sober and alert.

Always wear safety belts in vehicles and personal floatation devices in boats.

Only swim in areas with lifeguards present.

Take the extra time and THINK SAFETY and act safely during this holiday. Have fun and enjoy a safe holiday.

Engineer unit conducts last exercise, set for inactivation

By 2nd Lt. Thomas McDonough
586th Engineer Company (AFB)

The 586th Engineer Company (Assault Float Bridge) recently deployed on a two-week long exercise to Camp Gruber, Okla.

The operation was the last major exercise before the 586th inactivates Sept. 19.

While there, the company provided and bridged 705 feet of the 1,018-foot-wide Greenleaf Lake. The remaining measure was provided by Company E, 113th Engineer Battalion, a Reservist unit out of Gary, Ind., and 1438th Engineer Company, a National Guard unit out of Rolla, Mo., which the 586th trained and supervised.

Before the deployment, the 586th loaded all vehicles onto the railhead at Sand Hill for shipment to Fort Chaffee, Ark.

From there, they were driven to Camp Gruber by the company's Soldiers, who rode buses out to the site. For most of the members of the company this was the first experience with railhead operations. However, the load-up went very smoothly.

There was a different opinion when the Soldiers picked up their vehicles at Fort Chaffee. It appeared that some of the bridges and trees over the tracks on the 500-mile journey were too low for the huge boats and bay sections mounted on five-ton trucks. The damage to the vehicles was significant; however, most were repaired to fully mission-capable status.

Once the exercise began, the weather helped make things more difficult.

"It was even hotter than in Georgia," said Pvt. 2 Maria Yanez of the 586th. "It rained harder too, but the training was great; it was very interesting working with the Reservist units. It put a new twist on training."

The first night in the field was put to an abrupt halt by the "horizontal" rain. The company found out how quickly the weather could change the following morning as the Oklahoma air passed the 100-degree mark.

Back in Georgia, the rear detachment had their share of work also.

Approximately 50 Soldiers were assigned to the rear at one time or another during the deployment; most due to coming down on orders that required them to begin outprocessing before the company's return.

Before that, the rear detachment prepared much of the company area for signing over to another unit in September.

An entire floor of the barracks, some 60 rooms, were cleaned and locked up. An old dining facility and shower area, known to the Soldiers as the "Hammerhead," was cleared of the supplies stored there. Finally, the rear detachment prepped the motor pool for the company's return, painting and assuring nothing obstructed the company when they returned.

Upon return, the 586th immediately started operations to return vehicles and equipment to pre-field conditions.

This five-day operation included 100 percent accountability of sensitive items (weapons, protective masks, night vision devices, etc.), cleaning and maintenance of all equipment, and accounting for and replacing lost equipment.

But the extra step in this process was bringing the equipment to a standard that was acceptable for transfer to another unit.

As for inactivation, the process of relocating equipment and personnel has already begun. Many of the Soldiers already received levy for Korea, location of one of the few remaining Assault Float Bridge units. Others who have not served on Fort Benning for one year will be absorbed into the post for other duties and responsibilities. Most Soldiers in the company were more bitter than sweet about the inactivation.

"I am really going to hate to see the company go," said Sgt. Mark Hobbs of Cincinnati, Ohio. "I love Fort Benning and I stayed in the Army this long because I knew I would always eventually come back here."

Dealing with the vehicles will take up a big chunk of the inactivation.

First, the vehicle transfer standard must be defined. While prepping these vehicles for transfer, serviceability and cleanliness were stressed to the limit.

Soldiers were reminded the vehicles may go into combat the day they give them up, and that same Soldier, after reassignment, just might be sitting behind the wheel.

Next was soliciting the equipment within the 586th's parent unit, the 36th Engineer Group (Construction), for accepting transfer.

The commander's inventory was next, then the Department of Logistics inspection and finally transfer of vehicles and equipment.

Other factors in the inactivation checklist included processing the majority of the Soldiers for noncommissioned officer evaluation reports and awards, closure of the arms room, postal redirection and keeping the family support group abreast of the situation.

The company also insured weapons and physical training qualifications were current, due promotions executed and slots for schools were filled.

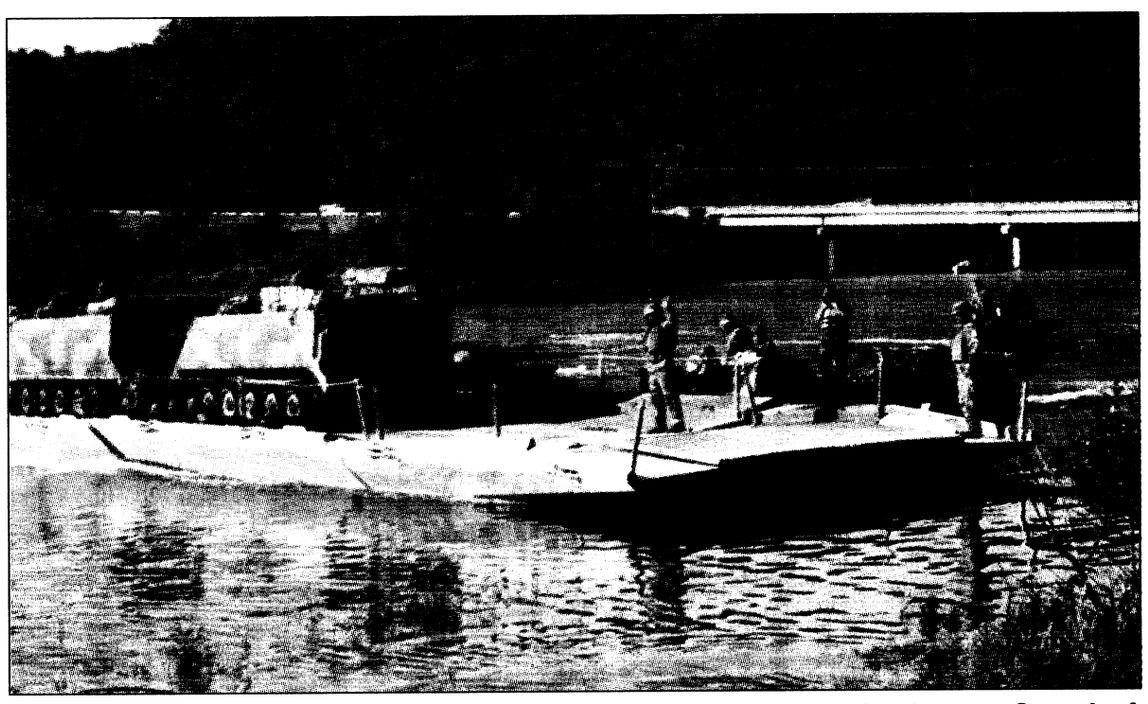
Finally, the company prepared for the inactivation ceremony, 9 a.m. Sept. 19 on York Field, with the guidon roll-up signifying the last full action for the active unit.

The 586th was first constituted Sept. 12, 1945, in mainland China and inactivated following the end of World War II., Nov. 30, 1946. The company resurfaced in Austria only to be inactivated once again in 1949.

Dec. 19, 1951, the 586th was activated and retained that status to this day. The company was designated at Fort Belvoir, Va. and moved to its current location at Fort Benning in 1972.

The unit deployed to Jacksonville, Fla., during Operation Desert Storm and received the Meritorious Unit Citation for its efforts.

The company again deployed to Florida in September 1992 to provide disaster relief for victims of Hurricane Andrew, and received the Humanitarian Service Ribbon for its assistance.



In September 1994, the 586th deployed to Haiti for two months, and most recently the company deployed to Bosnia to support Operation Joint Endeavor.
