While there, the company bridged the Sava River and allowed vehicles to cross that river for the first time since joint forces arrived in the area. It was and remains the longest ribbon bridge in history.

Jump Week culminates airborne training

By Susie H. Kim
Editorial assistant

As "Sergeant Airborne" shouts instructions the students shuffle to the door, the rhythmic clicks of D-rings sound off as they snap into place, Sergeant Airborne pushes the students from the safety of the C-130.

The frantic pace of leaving the airplane changed when the students began to leisurely descend to the dropzone.

Safety precautions were taken as the medics monitored the area and the NCO shouted instructions as the students float to the earth, preparing for their landing.

The students practiced for two weeks and finally put their lessons into use.

The Airborne students of 1st Battalion (Airborne), 507th Infantry, 11th Inf. Regiment are learning how to be paratroopers.

The Airborne School is a three week program geared to prepare soldiers to jump out of airplanes.

A unique part of the program is the range of students the course attracts, said Sgt 1st Class Patrick E. Reed, Operations and Training NCOIC. The students range from cadets, officers, junior enlisted, senior NCOs to members from other branches of the military.

The school initially starts with about 320 students per company and usually by Jump Week, only 280 remain.

According to Reed, physical training is one of the things that most students find challenging. The physical demand on their body, the strenuous exercises the students conduct and the average day starts around 5 a.m. and ends around 7 p.m. all contribute to the attrition rate.

The first two weeks of the school are geared toward the preparation of jump week said Sgt. 1st Class Robert M. Grooms, NCOIC Jump Branch.

The students are taught how to exit an airplane, shuffle, jump and conduct parachute landing falls.

"They are also taught methods of recovery," Grooms said. "This includes the procedures to follow after the landing."

Students must qualify on the 34-foot tower before advancing on to jump week.

In order to obtain the silver wings, students need to complete five required jumps at an altitude of 1250 ft above ground level.

The first jump is a "Hollywood" (no combat equipment). This means the student exits the door individually without wearing any combat equipment. Only eight people are allowed out of a door with maximum of 16 jumpers across the sky, Grooms said.

The second jump is combat equipped but still an individual exit.

The third and the fourth jump is a hollywood mass exit, which means 15 people jump out of the two doors with maximum of 30 jumpers across the sky.

The fifth and last jump before airborne qualification is the night jump. This is a mass exit jump with the students wearing combat equipment.

According to Grooms, safety is the primary concern for all the students and cadre.

There are certain conditions that have to be met in order for the students to jump.

The wind must not exceed 10 nautical miles per hour on the first jump and 13 nautical miles for the remaining jumps. The pilots must have 1750 feet of sky visibility for safety precautions. There are 16 cadre to oversee the jumps, four medics to handle any medical emergencies, and a malfunctions operator to handle any problems.

3rd Brigade arrives at NTC

Unit may spend more than month in desert

By Staff Sgt. Clifton Kershaw
Patriot staff writer

FORT IRWIN, Calif. — Soldiers from 3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division, arrived at Fort Irwin Aug. 2 for National Training Center Rotation 97-11.

The NTC is the Army's premier combat training facility. At the NTC, Soldiers, leaders and units can learn, train, improve fighting skills and tactics without casualties or actual loss of equipment.

"The National Training Center is the only place you can take an entire brigade combat team, and have them execute real wartime missions," said Col. John Garner, commander of 3rd Brigade.

Gardner elaborated on the goals of the brigade during its stay at Fort Irwin.

"I want to identify what we do well and what we need to work on," Garner said. "We want to use the experience gained here to improve our overall proficiency."

For many of the Soldiers, the NTC will be their first introduction to the desert. But whether it's the first, fifth, or 10th rotation to the NTC, it will always be a formidable and sometimes even hostile environment for training.

"We've gone through Hammer Focus, Marne Focus, two gunneries and a number of other missions to prepare us for this deployment," said Sgt. Mark Johnson, Company A, 1st Battalion, 15th Infantry. "I can't wait to get back, celebrate and go on leave."

The brigade began drawing vehicles and equipment Aug. 3 and deployed to the field Aug. 9. While in the field, 3rd Brigade soldiers will encounter the Krasnovian army and validate the days, weeks and months of training invested in the meeting.

Ranger School pushes students to extreme

By Susie H. Kim
Editorial assistant

With a boisterous shout, the ranger instructor rappels down the rope and drops into the water. The graduating students thunderous applause shows their support.

To the students, it was a change of pace as they watched their instructors demonstrate the tasks they had to accomplish during the grueling nine weeks.

The Rangers in Action is a demonstration provided by the Ranger Training Brigade to show the audience what the students must accomplish in order to obtain the ranger tab.

Not an easy task said Maj. Gerald D. Henderson, 4th Ranger Training Battalion Operations and Training officer.

"Each phase offers different challenges to the students," Henderson said. "During the first phase, it's just the initial shock of being in Ranger School, and typically the students are faced with greater challenges as weeks go on"

Ranger School is a nine-week program that is broken down into three phases. The initial phase starts at Fort Benning.

The first three weeks of training is devoted to introducing the ranger students to the basic survival skills used throughout the training. According to Henderson, those skills are communication, demolition, and small unit tactics.

The students are assessed by the instructors on their capabilities, such as physical performance, then the instructors physically and mentally condition the students for the next phase by training the students in many physical activities while the students lack food and sleep.

The second phase, dubbed Mountain Phase, is located in Dahlonega, Ga. During this three week phase, students are taught to rappel, buddy rappel, and basic mountaineering skills. Henderson believes that the mountain phase is more challenging to the students because they are in a more rugged terrain.

"The difference between here (Fort Benning) and there (Dahlonega) is the students are challenged more by the terrain and because the students are more isolated," Henderson said.

The third phase, also known as the Swamp Phase, is located at Eglin Air Force Base, Fla. During this phase, the students are taught water operations. Henderson said the students face a different level of stress as the students go through the final phase.

According to Henderson "The ranger students are in a different environment again and there is a stress of working in the swamp and learning water operations."

Although stress is a major factor in each of the three phases of the school, it also effects who will finish and who doesn't. The average class starts with around 170 to 200 students.

The attrition rate remains high with 50 percent, but the Ranger Training Brigade hope to obtain 70 percent in the near future.

For now the students aren't thinking about the failure rate. Instead the students are thinking of the success rate as they receive the black and gold Ranger tab.

Leaders set to visit Columbus

By Jennifer L. Smith
Bayonet Correspondent

Commanders and sergeants major are invited to attend "Leadership Benning," a new community orientation program sponsored by the Columbus and Phenix City Chambers of Commerce.

The goal is to introduce the new leadership to the surrounding community and to acquaint them with schools, local businesses, and recreational and cultural facilities.

The idea arose from an effort to make commanders familiar with what's outside the front gate, said Chuck Walls, garrison executive officer.

"All too often these commanders fail to realize what is available to them within the community," Walls said. "Commanders will be better able to take care of themselves, their families, and their troops with this information."

Packets about taxes, vehicle registration, and driver's licenses will be distributed to aid the commanders.

"The goal is twofold," said Jim Irvin with the Columbus Chamber of Commerce's military affairs committee. "To let incoming commanders and senior enlisted become familiar with the city and let them know we, as a city, are glad they're here."

According to Walls, Leadership Benning was planned to be a worthwhile and informative day for those involved.

The day begins with breakfast at the O'Club with the Commanding General.

From there the group will progress downtown to the government office for a tour and to meet the mayor and city council.

The events to follow include a tour of the Downtown Magnet School (a brand new elementary school), lunch at the River Club, and a brief performance by Paul Pierce at the Springer Opera House.

The event will conclude with a tour of Phenix City and return to Columbus for a tour of South Commons and Oxbow Meadows.

The event is scheduled for Aug. 28. The cost of the breakfast is $5.50. The uniform is BDU's.

Army prescribes new wear of SSI-FWTS

The Army Chief of Staff has authorized the wear of shoulder sleeve for former wartime service (SSI-FWTS)and overseas service bar (OSB) for those personnel who participated in El Salvador operations from Jan. 1, 1981 to Feb. 1, 1992.

Soldiers will wear as their SSI-FWTS the SSI of the Army unit in El Salvador to which they were assigned, attached, or under operational control.

Individual soldiers assigned, attached, or operational control (OPCON) to units not authorized a SSI and soldiers TDY, will wear the SSI of their respective commands.

One overseas service bar is authorized for each six months federal service as a member of U.S. service who participated in El Salvador operations from Jan. 1, 1981 to Feb. 1 1992.

Clinton defines workplace religious activities

By Rudi Williams
American Forces Press Service

WASHINGTON — President Clinton issued new guidelines Aug. 14 defining when federal employees can participate in religious activities in the workplace.

At first glance, the president's executive order doesn't apply to military personnel, but DoD's Chaplains Board is studying the guidelines to determine whether changes to regulations should be made. DoD regulations already permit expression of religious beliefs and allow the wearing of certain religious apparel.

DoD spokesman Kenneth H. Bacon said the president's executive order says that federal employees may engage in personal religious expression as long as it doesn't interfere with job performance or violate others' rights; that employers may not discriminate on the basis of religion; and that a federal agency must reasonably accommodate employees' religious practices.

"The Department of Defense has long had a regulation that says a basic principle of our nation is free exercise of religion," Bacon said, assistant secretary of defense for public affairs. "DoD places a high value on the rights of members of the armed forces to observe the tenets of their respective religions and then lays out how religious practices can be accommodated by the military."

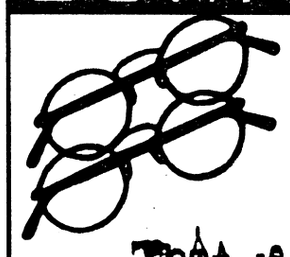
"The military has a wonderful history accommodating people of all faiths," said Navy Chaplain (Capt.) Mel Ferguson of the Armed Forces Chaplains Board.

Clinton said his guidelines "clarify and reinforce the right of religious expression in the federal workplace and ensure federal employees and employers will respect the rights of those who engage in religious speech as well as those who do not.

"No one can seriously question that it strengthens our young people to be able to pursue their own religious convictions and, thereby, gain values and strengths, hope and reassurance that come with faith," Clinton said.

The president instructed the Office of Personnel Management to distribute the guidelines to all civilian branch agencies and officials.

"We expect all employees to follow them carefully," Clinton said.



People of many different faiths have put down roots in America and pursued their beliefs freely, he noted.

"The churches, synagogues, mosques and other institutions of worship have built not only their own houses of worship, they have also quite frequently become centers of service, compassion and community life; and in so doing have made our entire nation stronger," Clinton said.

"Religious freedom is at the heart of what it means to be an American, and at the heart of our journey to become truly one America."

CO-OP students enjoy hands-on learning experience

By John L. Baggett
Director of Public Works

Several students in the Columbus State University (CSU) pre-engineering program are getting a head start on their careers by participation in the Cooperative Education Program (CO-OP).

The CO-OP program allows students to gain work experience in their chosen field while obtaining their formal education.

Three students who are participating in the program are Matt Wagner, Jason Powers and Frank Vital. Wagner and Powers are working with the Directorate of Public Works (DPW) and Vital is with the Columbus Water Works.

Each CO-OP participant has established a mutually agreeable work schedule with his respective employer. The schedules are flexible and allow the students to attend CSU classes and at the same time provide the employer with productive employees.

In addition to the pay check, the real pay off for the CO-OP student's is the advantage received by work experience. The students utilize knowledge they have obtained in the classroom in a real world setting, working side by side with successful professionals in the students' field of interest.

Since beginning his CO-OP position as student trainee with DPW in early January, Wagner has worked on several assignments including: relocation of activities from one facility to another, demolition of excess buildings, real property inventory for newly constructed barracks and bridge safety surveys as well as entering facilities data into the DPW information system.

He recently stated computer skills have tripled since being here. Wagner has been looking for a small campus type engineering school. He is considering enrolling in Southern Polytechnic State University in the fall to pursue a degree in Mechanical Engineering Technology, Wagner said.

His education and career goals, Wagner said, are to graduate with a bachelor's degree, work for four years and get his Professional Engineering License, and later get a master's degree.

Powers also began work with DPW in January and has had assignments which include land surveying, surveys of facilities for asbestos, relocation of two unrelated activities into one building and creating project documentation.

He views the CO-OP program as a way to get experience in his field and be ahead of others when he graduates. In Powers' words, "The CO-OP program helps me relate what I'm doing in school to what I'll be doing after graduation." Powers has already been accepted by Auburn University and will enroll in the fall to pursue a degree in Civil Engineering.

Powers said his goals are to obtain a bachelor's degree in Civil Engineering and then a master's in either Civil Engineering or Building Science. There is a definite possibility that, after he completes his education, Powers will enter the design and construction business with his father.

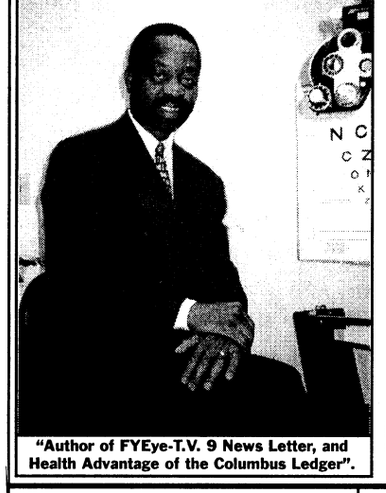
Richard Mize, Wagner and Power's supervisor, is very pleased with their performance.

"They both are very serious about their work. They follow through on assigned tasks and are highly reliable," Mize said.

Vital began working with the Columbus Water Works in June 1995. He has had varied work assignments including producing water and sewer maps on the Geographic Information System (GIS).

He conducted studies and produced drawings for future sewer projects totaling $50 million, designed and produced drawings for the Total Systems Panhandle Development, obtained bids and selected the provider to get the Water Works Engineering Department on the Internet and he developed procedures for digitizing as built drawings.

Vital sees the CO-OP program as an opportunity to obtain knowledge of the engineering field from engineers with real world experience.



"The CO-OP program allows you to see the big difference between the academic world of engineering and the real world of engineering," Vital said.

He plans to enroll this fall at Auburn University to pursue a degree in Mechanical Engineering. After graduation, he said he intends to enter the manufacturing and design fields and become a licensed Professional Engineer. Vital's supervisor, Mark Fuller, says the CO-OP program has provided him some highly motivated students who have become more competitive in the job market.

"Frank Vital has become a very integral part of our team in a very short time. I wish we had more workers like him," Fuller said.

More information on the CO-OP program may be obtained by contacting Christy Mitchell Dixon at the CSU Career Center, phone 569-3198

ACAP helps bridge military, civilian gap

Army Career and Alumni Program

The Fort Benning Army Career and Alumni Program announces upcoming events for separating Soldiers.

"The preseparation phase of a Soldier's end-of-career or end-of-commitment is critical to a smooth transition," said Chick Eagle, a job assistance counselor with ACAP's Job Assistance Center (JAC) in Soldiers' Plaza, Bldg. 2634.

Eagle strongly suggests, "start transition planning early, consistent with Army duties and missions, by attending one of the three-day ACAP Preseparation Briefings and Workshops. Soldiers and their spouses will receive valuable training, information and coaching by Fort Benning's functional area specialists in all aspects of the separation and relocation process.

"Aside from all the many actions required to leave active duty and transition to the status of Army Alumni, securing a good job is most important to Soldiers and their families," Eagle said.

The Fort Benning ACAP Job Assistance Center's mission is to help any and all Soldiers and spouses with their individual job search plans.

Counselors, computer systems and other resources are available in Soldiers' Plaza on a daily basis. The only day the JAC closes before 1700 is Thursday for In-service Training at 1500. Drop by or call 545-2308 for additional information.

Throughout the year the JAC will host special events for job seekers. And when appropriate, will publicize Job Fairs and events sponsored by other agencies.

Eagle points out that a great deal of effort goes into the planning, organizing and executing of these special events and he encourages maximum attendance.

"If you are a job seeker, one of the participating companies may be your next employer."

Honors + program

Area high school offers Columbus freshman accelerated learning

By Jennifer Harriman
Bayonet correspondent

Spencer High School offers a course of study to incoming freshmen known as The Honors Plus Program.

In its fifth year, The Honors Plus Program is an accelerated program in which students complete three credits of mathematics and English in two years.

"By using this schedule, students gain several advantages, all geared towards enhanced preparation for college," said Barbara Reese, program coordinator and English teacher.

Although The Honors Plus Program is only offered at Spencer High School, all freshmen attending Muscogee County High Schools may be eligible to apply.

Students must first have a minimum cumulative average of 3.0 in all English and mathematics courses, a minimum score of 80 percent on the Test of Achievement and Proficiency (TAP), and interview with the principle and instructors of The Honors Plus Program.

"Usually the top ten percent of the incoming ninth-graders are chosen to fill the sixty slots," Reese said.

The program offers students the opportunity to complete a regular year-long course in a twenty-four week time frame, and then move on to the next course within the same school year. For example, a student will complete a full year of Algebra I in a four six-weeks period, and then begin Geometry.

This is done by having a two-year period in which a three-hour block of time is slated specifically for the study of English and mathematics. Each subject is then taught for two hours every other day.

"Students who participate in the program benefit in a variety of ways," Reese said. "By tracking them through their senior year, the findings indicate higher standardized test and college entrance exam scores, increased scholarship opportunities, and more elective preparatory classes."

Although advanced mathematics and science are recommended, students have the option to choose other advanced placement classes in their area of interest.

Students benefit from a varied classroom environment and increased parental involvement, Reese said. The classes incorporate computer enhanced study programs, guest speakers, seminars, and specialized field trips.

"Other special events include Poetry Night, an annual picnic, and an Honors and Awards Day. We have had nothing but success from The Honors Plus Program," Reese said.

The most important element of The Honors Program Plus is the student body. According to teachers John Gillis and Reese the student participation and enthusiasm are high.

"Being in the Honors Plus Program helped me to realize my potential by working at a faster pace," said Jessica Macon, a 16-year-old junior. Jenny Chambers, another 16-year-old junior agreed.

"It's fun being with the same people every year," she said.

After a summer of hard work and preparation, the teachers of Spencer High School are ready to launch a new year of The Honors Plus Program, Reese said.

All Muscogee County High School freshmen may be eligible to enroll.

For more information on The Honors Plus Program, call Dr. J. Thomas at 685-7652.

Parental involvement improves child's success

By Elizabeth E. LaMonica
Special to The Bayonet©

When it comes to education, few would argue that a child's parents play an important role in their child's learning process.

But who would realize that parents could also have that same profound effect on other children's learning, the teachers' teaching and the schools' educational processes?

Parents involved in their child's school's Parent Teacher Organization have just that opportunity and the PTO presidents have ideas waiting to guide parents into more involvement in the education arena.

Dedicated to promoting learning opportunities for the children, the PTOs of Fort Benning strive to improve the educational environment with parent-teacher-child interaction, improved or additional teaching tools and increased parental support.

Different PTOs have different strategies for increasing parent involvement and fund raising. Several schools, like Stowers and White Elementary, have automatic free enrollment. Some, like Dexter and Loyd Elementary, have a nominal fee.

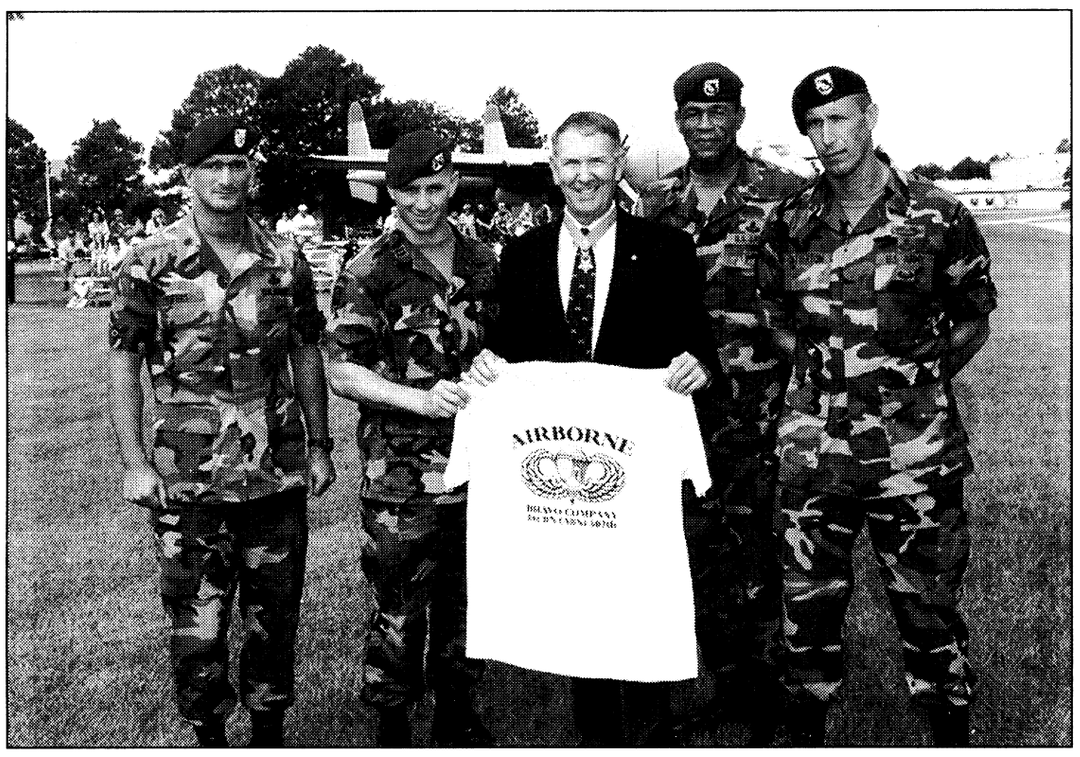
"I sent letters out to get parents involved," said Rosalind Ortega, Loyd Elementary's PTO president. "Our goals this year are to make sure the library gets more up to date books and to keep buying computer software."

But each PTO agrees that funds collected should be returned to the system to improve their children's opportunities.

"We had so much participation last year that I'd like to continue that and get even more parents and teachers involved," said Cynde Calix, PTO president for Stowers Elementary. "I'm really excited about our plans for the Freddie Stowers Memorial Garden and getting the children involved in that. I'm really adamant about the money we raise going right back into enriching projects for the kids to participate in and supporting our staff."

Once parents become PTO supporters, their time and energies may be focused into volunteering and fund-raising, with specific goals in mind for the individual school.

White Elementary PTO president Lt. Col. Steven Eldridge plans to ask teachers to formulate a wish list of children's computer software to be used in that school's computer lab.



Victoria Hegamin, PTO president at McBride Elementary, wants to try to get more software and promote the accelerated reading program by increasing the variety of books available to those students.

The money needed to support these goals can come from a variety of sources and while PTO dues and donations are one way to achieve those goals, many of the schools have plans to raise money in a way that will entertain, interest and, of course, promote learning.

Loyd Elementary families will be entertained with skate nights and a craft fair. Dexter Elementary PTO president Kyle Straights plans to have a fall festival to help fill teachers' wish lists for materials and supplies. Both White and Stowers Elementary plan to have book fairs to raise money to promote school projects. McBride is scheduled to have both a fall festival and a spring fling to fund its plans.

"It's all about educating the children of the Fort Benning community and the PTOs are dedicated to giving each child the best possible chance to succeed in school," Straights said.

Parents wishing to take an active role in their PTO should contact their child's school or their PTO president.

Grips & Grins

How do I get my photo on this page?

To meet customer needs and requests, The Bayonet added a Grips and Grins Page.

The newspaper receives many requests to run awards, promotions and other photos of this type, so the staff decided to designate a page just for that.

Because of the small size of our staff and the frequency and number of the events that generally produce grip-and-grin type photos, the newspaper's policy remains that we will not send a reporter to take these type of photos, but we will run those submitted by our readers.

Photos you may submit include those from events such as balls, teas, coffees, club and organizational meetings and elections, award presentations, check presentations, official parties, dinners, dining events, dances and group photos.

If you have a good-quality, black and white or color photo of an awards or promotion ceremony, sporting team, social event, etc., send it to The Bayonet, Grips and Grins Page, U.S. Army Infantry Center Public Affairs Office, Infantry Hall, Room 606, Fort Benning, Ga., 31905. No Polaroid shots please.

A guest receives her room key after checking into the hotel. All rooms have the card access system.

Orlando has been called the 'vacation capital of the world.' Service members ... in that direction ... to check out ...

Photos by Cpl. Marc G. Turchin

Hotel guests spend time at the swimming pools located on hotel property. The pool in the rear is in the shape of Mickey Mouse.

By Cpl. Marc G. Turchin
Bayonet staff writer

It's 8:30 a.m. and lines are beginning to form around the Magic Kingdom. Guests visiting the attractions may have traveled thousands of miles just to wait in these lines.

Getting to the lines is a game in itself. For some.

Long lines of traffic and the chance of getting lost can be factors for those new to the area or arriving for the first time. Just try and get to the parking lot around this time of day and watch traffic back-up for miles.

Military service members and their families can roll out of bed around 8:30 a.m. if they are staying at the military hotel close by. It's so close you can smell the popcorn and hear the music.

Shades of Green is the newest member in the military's arsenal of recreational facilities.

The hotel, which was once owned by Disney, is in the heart of Disney property. It sits only minutes from the Magic Kingdom and has its own pools and golf courses. Disney still maintains the golf courses , but the rest of the hotel is run by Department of Defense (DoD) civilian employees.

"There are many prior service employees working at the hotel," said James McCrindle, hotel general manager. "They consider it serving their country."

While the employees serve their country at the "happiest place on earth," McCrindle said service members and civilians both flock to the "vacation capital of the world."

"There is so much to do here," he said. "Fifty-one percent of people polled during a recent survey may not have come to Orlando without Shades of Green."

Disney World may be the reason service members come to Shades, but Shades offers an added bonus to all the magic. A discount.

Members of the Army, Navy, Air Force, Marine Corps and Coast Guard stay at the hotel for cheaper rates than almost anywhere else on Disney property.

E-1s 1 through E-5s, stay for only $57 a night. E-6s through E-9s, O-1s through O-3s, WO-1s through CW-3s pay $81 per night. Also included in that price are GS-1s through GS-10s and NF-1s through NF-3s.

O-4s through O-6s, CW4s through CW-5s, GS-11s through GS-15s and NF-4s through NF-5 check in for $89 a night.

O-7s through O-10s, foreign military members assigned to U.S. installations, retired DoD civilians and NF-6s are charged $98 each night. Shades of Green also offers discounted package plans to most local attractions for all military, whether they're staying at the hotel or not.

Although the rooms are pro-rated by rank, they have a lot of luxuries commonly found in four-star hotels.

Each room has two queen-size beds and a pull-out sofa. Rooms come with either a balcony, if on the second floor, or a patio on the ground floor. Guests can request either a pool view or a golf course view. All rooms have a table, chairs, cable television, and telephone. All the rooms will soon have blow dryers, coffee makers and other amenities. Shades is currently remodeling all 287 rooms.

"We really enjoyed ourselves," said Michael E. Neesmith, a Navy nuclear mechanic who stayed five days at the hotel with his fiance and son.

"It's a really nice place and very quiet," Neesmith said. "I can't believe how quiet it is considering how close to the Magic Kingdom we are," said Teri T. Dossett, Neesmith's finance. "We're already planning to come back next year."

Anyone who stays at the hotel has a variety of things to do, and places to eat at the hotel.

Shades has two restaurants — the Garden Gallery and Evergreens.

The gallery offers buffet-style breakfast and theme dinners. One night may be Italian night while another may be barbecue.

Evergreens is a casual sports bar, located directly across the main pool. The pool is in the shape of Mickey Mouse.

Inside is a bar, tables and a full menu. Look at the ceiling and guests can see a tennis match in process.

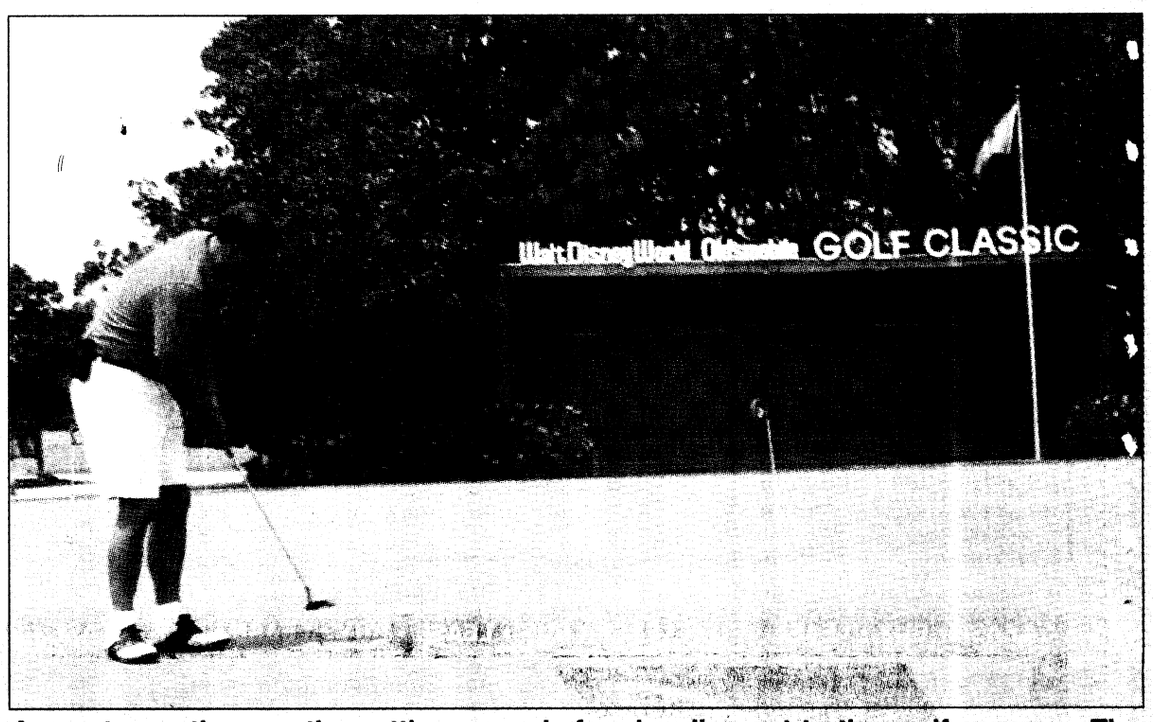
When guests aren't at the parks or attractions, they can golf on the championship Palm and Magnolia courses.

These courses are also used for the Walt Disney World Oldsmobile Golf Classic conducted every October. Tiger Woods is the reigning champion and is scheduled to return to defend his trophy Oct. 16-19.

Although Disney World is known for being a family-oriented place, McCrindle said those who don't have families won't find themselves bored.

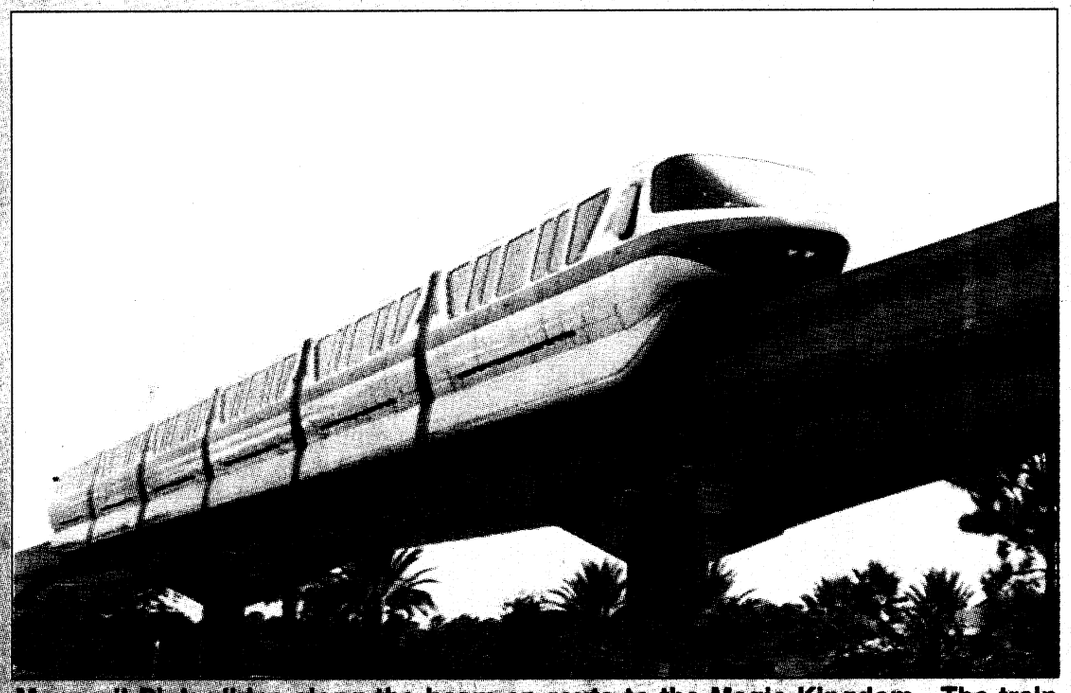
"This is a fine place for just adults," McCrindle said. "It's not just for families. There is lot to do at night," McCrindle said. The guests can go to Pleasure Island, an island of bars and dance clubs, including a country and western bar, a seventies dance club and techno-industrial club that has a 500-foot rotating dance floor.

McCrindle said Shades offers free transportation to almost anyplace on Disney property. But, this does not include Universal Studios or Sea World.



"The transportation is great," Neesmith said. "We didn't drive our vehicle once during our whole stay."

According to Mark Hendryx, director of Marketing and Sales, reservations should be made as early as possible.

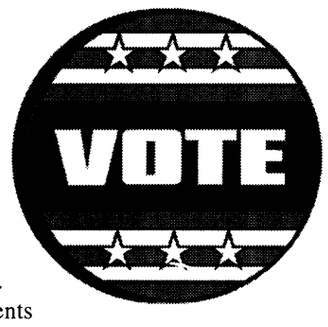


"We stay pretty full," he said. "But we do have cancellations, so we could have a room at anytime."

Hendryx said if reservations are made anywhere from four to six months out rooms are usually available.

For more information or to make reservations, call Shades at (407) 824-3600.

A guest practices on the putting green before heading out to the golf courses. The hotel's two courses are played by professionals during the annual Walt Disney World Oldsmobile Golf Classic.



Monorail Pink glides along the beam en route to the Magic Kingdom. The train operates within walking distance of the hotel.

Hotel guests enjoy breakfast inside the Garden Gallery. The restaurant offers a breakfast buffet and theme dinners.

ask the judge

By Jane M. Winand
Legal Assistance Division

Q: The other day a salesperson called my home and told me I was randomly selected to participate in their promotion. The salesperson said if I participated in the promotion, I would be able to receive subscriptions to 10 magazines at a very low cost. He also said all I needed to do was give him my checking account number so they could verify my identity and take the very low payment out of my checking account. Should I participate?

A: Participating in the promotion is up to you. However, agreeing to their payment method could be a bad decision. There is a new payment method called "demand draft," which is legal, but very dangerous. It works like this: You give the merchant your checking account number. The merchant, using your initial authorization, takes the money or monthly payment from the account without needing your signature every time he withdraws money from your account. The process appears very convenient. However, can you imagine how much it can cost you if the merchant is not honest?

Furthermore, never give your checking account number, or any other vital information, over the phone.

One of the current scams involves someone calling you to notify you that you have won a prize. The caller indicates that a credit card number and expiration date is required before you may claim your prize. Within weeks, you notice unauthorized charges on your credit card and you never received the prize. The law does protect you from unauthorized charges after the payment of an initial fee of $50. However, you are out the $50 and you've spent lots of time disputing the unauthorized charges.

Good credit is a valuable asset and must be protected. Be wary of all phone calls and mail offers indicating that you have been selected to receive a special promotion or prize. Most of the time you've been selected as the next victim of a scam.

If you have been made a victim, call the Legal Assistance Division at 545-3281 and make an appointment to speak with an attorney. We will explore the legal options with you to ascertain whether your damages can be minimized.

Q: Recently I left my car at a mechanic's shop for repairs. The repairs took about a week and when I went to pick up my car, I discovered that it had been broken into and the radio stolen. What can I do about this? Is the shop liable?

A: When you leave your car with a mechanic under these circumstances, you and the mechanic have entered into what is known as a bailment.

You have bailed your property to the mechanic, which gives rise to certain duties on the mechanic's part with respect to the care and safekeeping of the vehicle.

A person in receipt of bailed property is required to use "ordinary care and diligence" in keeping the property safe and secure while in his or her possession.

The definition of "ordinary care and diligence" is based on what a reasonable person would do or not do under the same circumstances. Thus, the duty of care will vary depending on the circumstances of each case.

For example, if you, as the mechanic, know from experience that the area in which your shop is located is subject to a lot of vandalism and theft, you probably would take more precautions to protect property than someone located in an area of low crime. However, bear in mind that no one can absolutely guarantee that theft or vandalism won't occur. All one can do is take reasonable precautions.

Before leaving valuable property in the care of another, it would be wise to inquire about the measures that will be taken to secure the item. Some shops will attempt to limit their liability by placing a disclaimer on work orders or other paperwork associated with the repair. You should ask about the shop's policy on covering loss from theft or vandalism. If you don't like what you hear, consider taking your vehicle elsewhere. If it is possible to remove valuable property from your vehicle before leaving it, do so.

If a theft does occur, make sure that a police report is made. Sometimes, the theft is an inside job, and you will want to know if a police investigation bears this out. Theft by an employee of the shop is not the "ordinary care and diligence" to which you are entitled.

If you have questions concerning this, call the Legal Assistance Division and make an appointment to meet with an attorney. The telephone number is 545-3281 or 545-3282.

Wearing seatbelts can prevent serious injury

By Lisa E. Stafford
American Forces Press Service

WASHINGTON — Joan Allen and a friend were driving to Pennsylvania when another driver from the opposite direction hit her car. Allen was not wearing a seat belt and was ejected from the car; the car then flipped over several times and landed on her.

Allen spent several years having operations to correct the damage to her spinal column and regaining the use of her legs. Her friend, who was wearing a seat belt, only received minor injuries. This is a true story.

It's also true President Bill Clinton signed an executive order April 16 that states federal workers, including service members, must wear seat belts at all times. Visitors driving personal vehicles must also follow these guidelines while driving through installations or on official business.

Clinton's order also states DoD must provide an annual report, which will include seat belt use, statistics of crashes and injuries and related costs involving federal employees on official business.

The administration has proposed legislation to provide strong financial incentives for states to increase seat belt usage and specifically to pass seat belt laws. The proposed legislation further states any state that does not achieve 85 percent belt usage or pass primary seat belt laws by October 2002 will have to transfer 1.5 percent of its federal highway construction funds to its highway safety programs.

Most Americans drive cars as their main transportation. But with all their advantages, motor vehicle accidents are the leading cause of deaths among persons ages 5 to 27. Officials say someone is injured in a traffic accident every 14 seconds and killed every 12 minutes.

According to the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration, motor vehicles accidents cost Americans $137.5 billion per year. In 1990, Americans paid $11.4 billion to cover crash costs and $3.7 billion for health care. Vehicle accidents have caused significant demands on America's health care system, from emergency room care to long-term care and rehabilitation. These incidents add approximately $14.2 billion to health care costs annually.

Although laws governing seat belt usage differ from state to state, it is the law in all but one state, the District of Columbia, Puerto Rico and U.S. territories for adults to wear seat belts and in all for children. Seat belts reduce the risk of fatal injury to front seat passenger occupants by 45 percent.

National Highway Traffic Safety Administration officials said "from 1982 through 1995, an estimated 75,087 lives were saved by seat belts, and 2,934 children were saved by using child restraints." When air bags are installed in vehicles, there are 11 percent fewer fatal incidents for infants under the age of one and 47 percent for toddlers ages one to four.

Most deaths are caused by ejection from vehicles, which accounted for 28 percent of all accidents. Seat belts provide the greatest protection against ejection. In 1995 only 2 percent of restrained passengers were ejected from vehicles. Nearly two-thirds, 65 percent, of passengers killed in traffic crashes in 1995 were unrestrained.

"The two riskiest periods of the year are the start of Memorial Day weekend through the end of Labor Day weekend and the day before Thanksgiving through New Year's Day. The Air Force identifies the first period as the 101 Critical Days of Summer and has built a traffic safety program on that theme every year since 1975," said an Air Force Safety Center official in a report.

The national strategy is to have more police officers enforcing state seat belt and child safety seat laws. The strategy seeks to expand public education programs and seek leadership and participation from mayors, councils, boards and other public officials to support traffic enforcement as an investment in public service and safety.

Many vehicles today are equipped with air bags. This does not mean people do not have to wear seat belts. Government officials recommend moving the driver and front passenger seats as far back as possible; infants in rear-facing child safety seats should never ride in front seats; children age 12 and under should ride in the back seat using child restraints, until the adult lap and shoulder restraint fits appropriately.

Summer has a magical way of making you want to do more outdoors. Just taking a leisurely drive on a sunny Sunday afternoon entices some people. Whatever activity you participate in, whether you're going to the beach, having a picnic, playing a field sport or driving to the corner store, ensure your summer is fun filled, memorable and safe. Remember to buckle up.

Love can heal a broken heart

By Chaplain (Capt.) Timothy H. Atkinson
317th Engineer Battalion

In suicide prevention classes, chaplains often teach how a very high percentage of people who commit suicide have lost a person they love. The broken heart, who can heal it? Some say time will. Jesus said that he came to heal the broken hearted (Luke 6: 18). It was one of his tasks on his mission essential task list because He cares about hurting humanity. Not only does he care because he is God, but he also cares because he has been there. He went through the battles of life and then died of a broken heart on the cruel Roman cross. What a great love God has for us!

Chaplains often show God's love as they listen and share with people who have lost a love one through death or divorce. When any person seeks to help an individual who is hurting, the person is making him or herself an open vessel for God's love to pour through.

In helping others we must not become "codependant" and fail to understand where our role ends. A good thing to keep in mind when helping people who are suffering emotional pain is the Serenity Prayer. It says, "God grant me the courage to change the things I can change. The serenity to accept the things I cannot change and the wisdom to know the difference."

In Jesus' parable of the Good Samaritan, a Samaritan finds a Jewish man, near death on the side of the road, and he provides what he needs. Unlike the two religious leaders, he poured wine and oil on his wounds and bandaged him, he put him on his donkey. He paid for his lodging at the local inn. The Good Samaritan encourages us to recognize that God's love goes beyond the prejudice and ministers to human need. Imagine how the injured man felt after the ministry of the Samaritan. This man, who was normally his enemy because of his race, helped him to live and took care of all of the expenses

By the Holy Spirit Jesus is still working in the people of God today. He still has compassion on those who are hurt and broken hearted. July 29 the chaplains and assistants at Fort Benning and around the world celebrated 222 years of ministry within the Chaplain Corps. Throughout that time they have ministered to those in need with hope and the love of God as their chief tools. They know that they are not the answer, but seek to point men to God and God to men through God's message.

People of all ages need to have love and nurture to heal. As we reach out to those who are hurting, we become instruments of Jesus and hearts are mended. We are blessed because God who is our source gets the glory.

As Jesus is still in the heart and life mending business let's let our prayer be that the Lord will help us receive his healing nurture and give it to others.

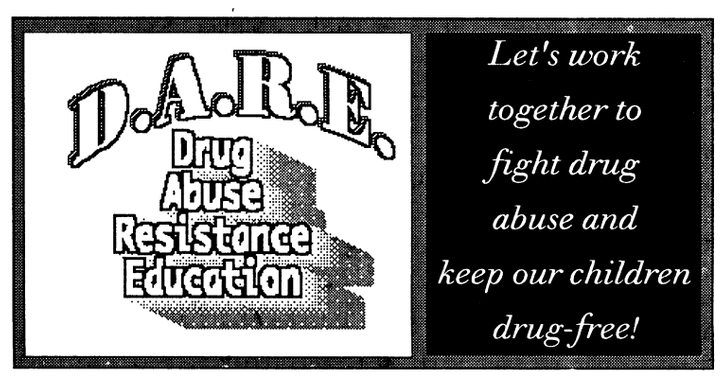
*Denotes Sunday School lesson

The Lord teaches lessons through the experiences of others

By Chaplain (Maj.) Andrew J. Bullard III
Martin Army Community Hospital

When I was a little boy, one of the Scripture passages that I was required to read at the dinner table was the third chapter of the Book of Ecclesiastes.



Ecclesiastes is still a very essential part of my life and ministry. Recently I reflected upon an excerpt of this passage while visiting with some of the patients in the hospital and it was very comforting to me and the patients.

It states, "To everything there is a season, and a time for purpose under the heavens. A time to get and a time to lose, a time to love and a time to hate, and a time to laugh and a time to cry."

As a hospital chaplain, I have learned to value people. I also thank God for the gift of time. Time is very precious, especially when it is in short supply. I visit with patients and family members who are undergoing a crisis and time becomes a precious commodity.

It is amazing how God encourages us through the suffering of other people. One of the required readings during my Clinical Pastoral Education training at Walter Reed Army Medical Center was Henri Nouwen's book, The Wounded Healer. Nouwen said we can only be effective as people when we are willing to expose our own hurts and pains. He further stated that only the wounded can heal.

Yet, the writer of Ecclesiastes reminds us there is a season and purpose for everything we do. During busy times like these, we need to look to God for guidance and strength. God can empower us to value both people and time.

OPTIMISM: The Bible offers scriptures that encourage positive thinking

By Chaplain (Ltc.) William C. Shelnutt, IX
3rd Brigade Chaplain

I read an article some time ago that perked my interest. A major medical study reported that a healthy outlook helps heal the heart and that pessimism can be a killer. The study identified optimism as a powerful aid in the recovery process.

A person's habitual way of thinking is a tremendous tool or weapon. The article stated that just as optimism encourages health, pessimism can do the opposite. Pessimism, always thinking the worst, can have a damaging long-term effect. An important part of health is a person's positive involvement with life and others.

Pessimistic people can have a change of heart. The Bible shows the results in Proverbs 17:22, "A merry heart does good like a medicine."

Over the years, I have collected some "one liners" that have helped me avoid what Zig Zigler refers to as "hardening of the attitudes." Take one a day as a mind-set for a healthier, more enjoyable life.

•Be a friend and you will have a friend.

•Practice spontaneous acts of kindness.

•Live your life now — enjoy the moments of each day.

•Stop worrying — it is self-torture.

•Set priorities and focus on the positive.

•Avoid people and situations that upset you.

•Don't worship the god of other people's opinions.

•Develop a purpose in your life and live your dreams.

•Learn to have joy in serving others.

•Be thankful for little things we often take for granted.

•Give your life to something that will outlive you.

•Be a forgiving person — that is a gift to yourself.

•Rediscover how to play — 4- and 5-year-olds are good teachers.

•Learn to live by the Serenity Prayer.

•Live life as if you can not fail, but forgive yourself if you do. Love people and use things, not the other way around.

•Leave a legacy of love.

•Add to your life a good sense of humor, a big dose of patience and a dash of humility, and you will be rewarded many-fold.

God gave us life to enjoy, not to fret over. Many passages of Scripture give us guidance in the "good medicine" department. The whole Sermon on the Mount in Matthew 5-7 prescribes some valuable capsules of truth for daily living. Each of the Beatitudes of chapter 5 tells us how to be blessed.

"Blessed" means more than happiness, it means experiencing hope and joy independent of outward circumstances.

Shooters take honors in smallbore rifle matches

By Paula J. Randall Pagán
USAMU Public Affairs Office

U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit international rifle shooters took top honors in the National Smallbore Rifle Matches conducted at Camp Perry, Ohio, July 23 to Aug. 1.

Stephen C. Goff won the National Smallbore Three-Position Championship as well as winning the Iron-Sight Three-Position Championship; and placed second in the Any-Sight Three-Position Championship and third in the National Smallbore Prone Championship.

According to Goff, experience gave him the edge over his competitors.

"I've been to Camp Perry more times than most of the shooters and have been shooting there for about 15 years," Goff said.

Jason A. Parker took second place in the Iron-Sight Three-Position Championship and USAMU teams took first and second place in both the Iron-Sight and Any-Sight Three Position team matches.

Because of their high scores in shooting the Iron-Sight Prone Match, Goff, Parker and 1996 Olympian Glenn A. Dubis were chosen to shoot on the U.S. Pershing Team match against the British and Canadians at Camp Perry, which is conducted every eight years. The top 10 American shooters beat the British Team by 3 points and the Canadians came in third.

Goff, Parker and Dubis, along with Thomas A. Tamas and Lance S. Hopper, were also selected to shoot for the U.S. Team in the Dewar International Match, in which the country's top 20 iron-sight prone shooters' scores go up against those of Great Britain to determine the winner.

Goff, who started shooting in 1973, was the World Rifle Champion, World Military Olympics Rifle Champion, an eight-time National Rifle Champion, a world-record setter and has won a Standard Rifle Team Gold Medal.

This year Goff also won the 300-Meter Free Rifle Three-Position National Championship and was selected to the World Military Championships Team. Last year he was inducted into the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit International Rifle Hall of Fame after winning a Silver Medal in the 300-Meter Rapid Fire at the Military World Championships and winning the 300-Meter Standard Rifle and Three-Position Any-Sight National Championships.

The USAMU International Rifle Team just completed the Championship of the Americas Team Selection Matches held at the Wolf Creek Olympic Shooting Site in Atlanta. The shooters selected for the CAT Team will compete at the Championship of the Americas in Buenos Aires, Argentina, Nov. 16 to 28. Dubis has also qualified to compete in the World Cup Final in Lugarno, Switzerland, Sept. 10-15, where he will shoot smallbore three-position.

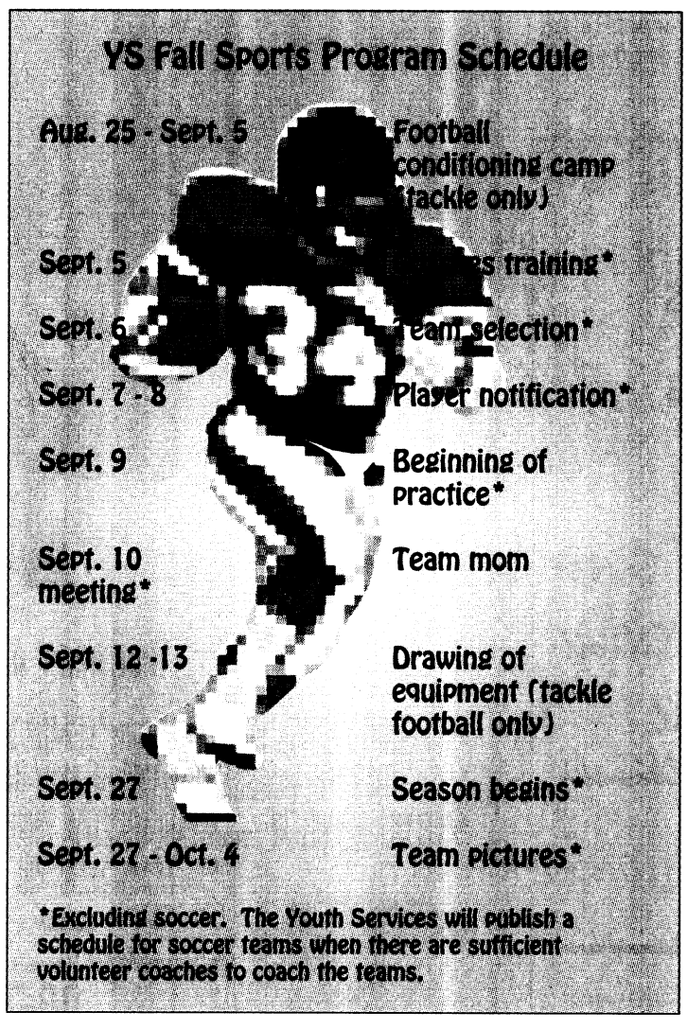
YS gears up for fall sports action

By John W. Peeler
Special to the Bayonet©

The Youth Services kicks off its annual fall sports programs beginning with a football conditioning camp Monday at Blue Field. The camp will be held daily from 6 to 7:30 p.m. and is mandatory for all tackle football players. The camp will run through Sept. 5 and will help prepare players for the mental and physical demands of full contact practice and games.

The program continues with coaches training for all football and cheerleading coaches Sept. 5 with team selection being conducted on Sept. 6 and coaches notifying team members of their team assignment Sept. 7 and 8.



Due to the absence of volunteer coaches, the Youth Services soccer season is delayed. The Youth Services is actively seeking volunteers to be coaches for the soccer league.

Although practice for all sports excluding soccer, begins Sept. 9 at locations around post, tackle football players will not draw their equipment until Sept. 12 and 13.

Beginning Sept. 10, there will be a meeting for all team moms. Team moms are representatives of the football, soccer and cheerleading teams and are normally responsible for the administrative functions of the team such as coordination of team pictures, trophies, snacks and drinks, used by the players during and after the game and act as a liaison between the coach, parents and the Youth Services.

The season officially kicks off Sept. 27 with football games on Blue Field.

Soccer games will be played on French Field when soccer season begins.

Summer Biathlon begins

By John W. Peeler
Special to The Bayonet©

The 1997 Summer Biathlon is just around the corner for competitors who want to test both their endurance and shooting skills.

This year's event, cosponsored by the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit and Directorate of Community Activities, Community Recreation Division, begins at 9 a.m. Sunday on English Range.

The competition, conducted in 10-year age groupings, consists of running a total of five kilometers (approximately three miles) with two competitors starting every two minutes on the first 1.5-kilometer course and shooting at 10 targets, five targets from the prone position and five targets from the standing position.

Registration is today through Sunday. Registration for the competition is conducted at the sports office in Miller Hall, Building 241. Registration cost is $18.

Prior to competing in the event, competitors must attend a shooting safety class conducted at English Range.

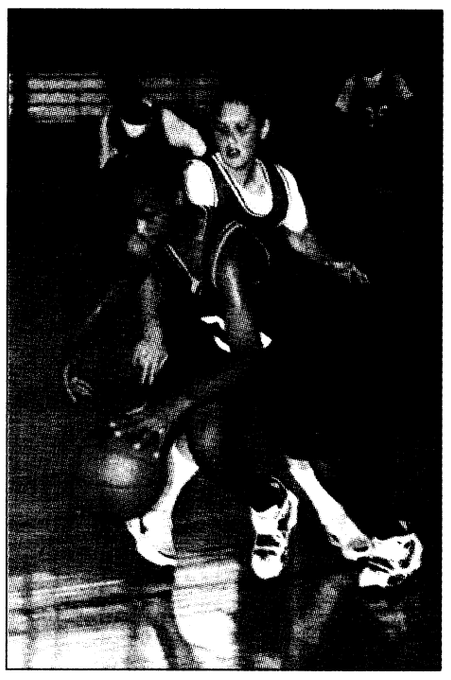
Warriors defeat Super Sonics 67-45

By John W. Peeler
Special to the Bayonet©

The Youth Services continued its summer basketball program Aug. 12-14 at the YS gym with four games being played.

In Aug. 14 action, the Supersonics went down in defeat to the Warriors 67-45 in the 12- to 15-year-old division.

The Warriors were led to victory with 15 points from Donzil Dickey, 10 points each from Brian McClay and Daniel Dempsey and 8 points from Juan Montalvo. The games leading scorer though was Supersonics' Nicholas Brown, who accounted for half of the Supersonics score with 27 points with teammate Efrain Trouche scoring 9 points.



In the evenings early game, the Wildcats defeated the Heat 24-15 in the 10- to 11-year-old division. Roosevelt Vickers and Xavier Raymond contributed 9 points each to the Wildcats win. Omar Tyler and Sinclair Brown led the scoring for the Heat with 4 points each.

In Aug. 13 action, the Supersonics slipped past the Dream Team 14-11 in the 8- to 9-year-old division on the shooting of Jonathan Cole and Terrance Mister who scored 4 points each in the victory. Joshua Vargas and Kevin Gray were the lone scorers for the Dream Team with 6 and 5 points respectively.

In the week's early game Aug. 12, the Magics defeated the Lakers 18-7 in the 6- to 7-year-old division. Teammates Kahlee Tyler and Alvon Howard combined for 14 points (8 and 6 points respectively) for the Magics with Cory Bush leading the way for the Lakers with 6 points.

The summer basketball program continues Tuesday with the Magics taking on the Lakers at 6 p.m., the Super Sonics seeing action against the Dream Team Wednesday at 6 p.m. and the Warriors taking on the Tarheels in the late game at 6:40 p.m. Thursday's action has the Heat taking on the Wildcats at 5:30 p.m. and the Super Sonics meeting the Tarheels at 6:40 p.m.

For more information on divisional games and times, call the Youth Services Gym at 545-3540.

Georgia state park offers guided canoe trip — Outdoor enthusiasts can explore Georgia's scenic waterways on guided canoe trips at High Falls and Panola Mountain State Parks.

Park staff will explain basic canoeing techniques and interpret natural surroundings while leading paddlers on day-long trips.

Participants can see beavers, otters, kingfishers, great blue herons, turtles and other wildlife.

Trips fill quickly, so pre-registration is required. To register, call the park.

The cost is $15 per person, which includes canoe, paddles and life preserver. Canoeists who bring their own equipment pay $10. A $2 park pass fee is charged per vehicle.

Eighteen of Georgia's state parks rent canoes so visitors can explore lakes and streams on their own

Prices are $3 to $5 for an hour, $8 to $15 for four hours and $12 to $20 for an entire day. For a free "Guide to Georgia State Parks and Historic Sites" or "1997 Events" brochure, call (404) 656-3530.

To reserve a campsite or fully equipped cottage, call (800) 864-7275.

WRD offers Outdoors-Woman workshop — The Department of Natural Resources, Wildlife Resources Division, is offering an Outdoors-Woman workshop Oct. 10-12.

The program will be conducted at the Future Farmers of America and Future Homemakers of America Camp in Covington, Ga.

Casting a flyrod, cooking a complete meal with one pot on a propane camp stove, shooting a rifle and paddling a canoe are some of the skills being taught at the workshop.

Women attending the workshop choose four outdoor activities in which to participate. Each activity session lasts approximately 3 1/2 hours and includes basic instruction and "how-to" information, as well as "hands-on" participation and practice with outdoor equipment.

The cost for the weekend is $135 before Oct. 1, which includes lodging, meals and use of equipment. The registration fee is $150 after Oct. 1.

The workshop is aimed primarily at women, but it is an ideal opportunity for anyone 18 years or older to learn or improve outdoor skills.

Registration for the workshop is open and is available on a first-come, first-served basis.

For a registration brochure, contact the Wildlife Resources Division at (770) 918-6400.

Hunter Safety Course changes requirements — The Georgia Hunter Safety Course recently changed.

The Georgia Hunter Safety Course increased from six hours to 10 hours because the course now includes two hours of home study and eight hours of classroom instruction.

Because of the increase in hours, the course will be given over a two day period. Students must pick up a Hunter Safety Book at Outdoor Recreation Building 1707, or at the Infantry Branch Safety Office, Building 18, prior to attending class.

Students must answer the questions at the end of each chapter and bring them to class.

Everyone born on or after Jan. 1, 1961 must attend an approved Hunter Safety Course in order to hunt on Fort Benning or in the State of Georgia.

The 10 hour Georgia Department of Natural Resources Hunter Safety Course will be 8 a.m. to 1 p.m. Saturday in Infantry Hall, Classroom 2.

Students must attend both sessions and need to bring their Social Security number.

Pro offers tips to find late summer suspended bass

By Earl Bentz & Steve Price
Outboard Marine Corporation

Suspended bass give many anglers fits, but Guido Hibdon and his son Dion figured a way to turn the tables and give those bass fits.

"Basically, what we do is drop big, eight- and 10-inch plastic worms down to them," said Hibdon, a former world bass fishing champion.

"We don't try to work the lures at all," he said. "We simply pitch the worms out and let them drop through the schools of fish. The bass hit them as they're falling."

Coming from an angler of Hibdon's credentials — he won the 1988 Bass Masters Classic as well as back to back BASS Angler of the Year titles in 1990 and 1991 — it sounds simple, and it is.

"Late in the summer before bass start moving to the creeks to feed, they often suspend off long, deep points or over deep ridges and humps," Hibdon said.

"What Dion and I do is rig a big plastic worm with a one-eighth- or possibly a one-fourth-ounce slip sinker and simply make a cast so the worm falls into the school of fish," he said. "You can locate the bass with depth finders because they tend to gather in big schools, but you don't fish them vertically because you can spook them."

The fishing pro said the light sinker allows the worm to fall slowly and probably gives the bass plenty of time to study it. The lure appears to be a meal too good to pass up, so a fish takes it.

"When we're fishing this way, we don't work the lure at all," Hibdon said. "We've tried a lot of different lures, including the smaller tube jigs and grubs that have a lot more action, but the big plastic worms get much better results if we simply let them fall naturally."

That means watching the line where it enters the water for a tell-tale twitch because the strikes may be light, according to the Missouri pro.

"This really seems to be one of the best ways I've ever tried to catch suspended bass," Hibdon said.

"The big schools of fish Dion and I were locating were intriguing to us, however, so we just kept experimenting with different lures and techniques until we found something that works.

"Actually, using the big worm was practically a last resort," he continued. "We'd tried nearly everything else in our tackle boxes without any success at all. For some reason, the bass like that lure."

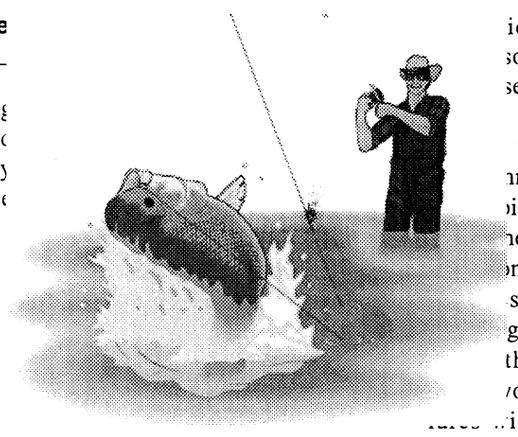
Bass pro suggests a top water lure for deepwater fishing

By David Hegel and Steve Price
Johnson® and Evinrude® Outboards

If you spend much time fishing deep, clear lakes like those found in Arkansas, Missouri and many other states, don't overlook the chance to use top-water lures.

That's the advice from professional bass fisherman Larry Nixon, a former world bass fishing champion. Nixon lives in Arkansas and fishes clear water often with surface plugs.

"The technique we use is to fish large jointed minnow-type plugs that wobble from side to side when you reel them slowly," said Nixon, "and we fish them out in wide open water that may be 50 or 100 feet deep, out in the middle of a cove or over a channel.



"All you do is cast out as far as you can and then start reeling back very slowly. Don't jerk your rod to make the lure jump or dive or anything. Just reel slowly and steadily so it wobbles back and forth.

"When you first try it, you'll swear no bass will ever come up to hit a lure from such deep water, but the first time a fish does, you'll become an instant believer," Nixon said.

The secret of making the technique work, explained the pro, is realizing what type of fish you're actually attracting.

"Basically, this is a technique for suspended bass, which on most lakes aren't any deeper than about 15 feet, no matter how deep the bottom may be," Nixon said. "It begins in late spring when post-spawn bass move out of the shallow flats and begin suspending, and on many lakes it will continue until early autumn when the fish move back into the tributary creeks.

"I believe it works best on deep, clear lakes because these types of lakes traditionally have less shallow cover available. The bass don't have any option except to suspend. That's why it works so well in places like Bull Shoals in Arkansas and Table Rock in Missouri and even Lake Lanier in Georgia."

Nixon remembers fishing the same technique years ago when he iding on Toledo Bend in so the technique also works ser extent on shallow lakes, way we really like to fish nique on Bull Shoals is to ig cove or bay and simply e wind drift us down it," n said. "You can use other s of top-water lures and g suspended bass up but the big, jointed minnow ou don't have to work the ith your rod. It's a much easier way to fish."

The same technique will occasionally work for striped bass, Nixon said, and in fact, may be how it started for largemouths. With stripers, however, some of the best top-water fishing takes place in fast moving water while for largemouths calmer conditions are best.

Sgt. 1st Class Larry Lane

Sgt. Laura Gargiulo, 423rd Military Police Company practices with the MK-19 before qualifying.

MPs prepare for overseas duty

By Sgt. 1st Class Larry Lane
USAIC Public Affairs Office, NCOIC

Four U.S. Army Reserve companies of military police are at Fort Benning's CONUS Replacement Center at Harmony Church processing and training up for deployment to Europe. Some of these Soldiers will eventually travel to locations in Hungary and Bosnia, while others may be used as backfill in Germany.

These Soldiers are undergoing the early stages of deployment processing, which includes medical and dental screenings and the common theater specific training all Soldiers must complete before deploying to Bosnia. They are learning how to run checkpoints, search vehicles and personnel, and answer questions from the media.

The four companies are: 351st Military Police Company, Ocala, Fla; 810th MP Co., Tampa, Fla.; 423rd MP Co., Uniondale, N.Y.; and 805th MP Co. from Raleigh, N.C. Each company has 183 soldiers. These Reserve Soldiers will replace active duty soldiers in October.

Also during this week of training, the MPs focused on zeroing and qualifying with several weapons, including the M-9 pistol, the M-16 rifle, the M-249 squad automatic weapon and the MK-19 grenade machine gun

For some soldiers the MK-19, a 40 mm grenade machine gun was a new experience. Most new gunners found the weapon easy to fire, whether mounted on the turret of a humvee or setup on a tripod.

Sgt. Simonette Waunsch, a MK-19 gunner with the 423rd MP Co. said she had no problem zeroing and qualifying with the weapon.

"I had a lot of control; it's a very big gun," Waunsch said. "This is the first time that I've used something that has to be mounted on the humvee. It's very different from the weapons that I'm used to, like the M-16 and the nine millimeter."

The heavy weapon was much easier to handle than she had imagined, she said.

"I handled it fine and I hit my targets, so I got a 'go'. For long range shooting, it's very useful and you don't have to be exact on your target because it has a wide kill zone."

Sgt. Isaac Delano of the 423rd

Post renovates site, sets-up for experiment

By Cpl. Marc G. Turchin
Bayonet staff writer

In the history of America in war, most conflicts were battled in jungles, on seas or in the air.

In the future, according to Infantry experts in the field, America's battles will be fought in cities, inside neighborhoods, across the street from markets, malls and playgrounds.

The Army is preparing for this, by redefining how it's Soldiers will use their equipment in this close combat environment, said Charles S. Thornton, chief, Dismounted Forces Division, Dismounted Battle Space Battlelab.

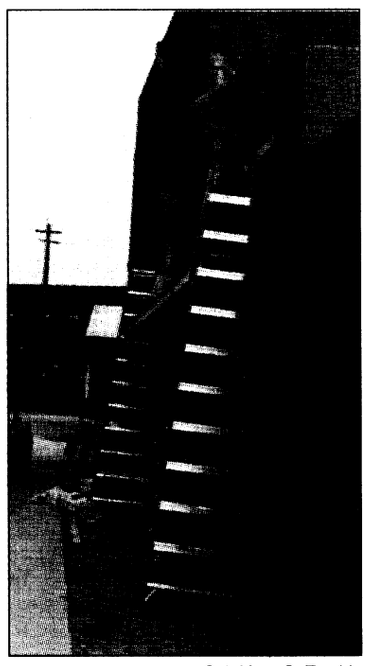
Thornton's division will soon begin experimentation with new equipment developed just for Military Operations on Urbanized Terrain (MOUT), warfare within cities or towns.

Within this experimentation is the Advance Concept Technology Demonstration. This demonstration, when fully completed, will give Soldiers the edge needed to win on this new battlefield, Thornton said.

He said the program is all about getting new equipment to the Soldiers.

"It is a Department of Defense (DoD) funded program to increase the capability of Soldiers and get things in the field as soon as possible," Thornton said.

The bottom line, Thornton said is to make Soldiers more lethal in the urban environment.



"We want to increase the Soldiers' capabilities to fight in cities," he said.

This experimentation also allows Soldiers to train in a near real-world situation.

Because of the experimentation, Fort Benning's own MOUT site has been undergoing renovations and will continue until June or July of 1998.

The site will include new buildings and a new market area.

Thornton said all the buildings inside the mock city will be labeled such as a city hall, an accounting office, a jail and a radio station.

Cpl. Marc G. Turchin

Workers attach lights to the side of a building at the McKenna MOUT site.

All of this is to make the testing as real as possible.

"Before (the renovations), there were dirt floors and no furniture," Thornton said. "That's not the real world. In the real world people live in these buildings and it needs to look like it."

Soon all the buildings will have electricity, concrete floors and furniture.

Soldiers were trained to enter the building and "hug the wall," Thornton explained, but if there's furniture in the apartment or home, the Soldiers are unable to do that.

This type of technicality brought veterans of urban conflicts to Fort Benning's McKenna MOUT site nearly two years ago to begin developing the testing program.

This group of people, who had seen action in Panama, Grenada and Somalia and included law

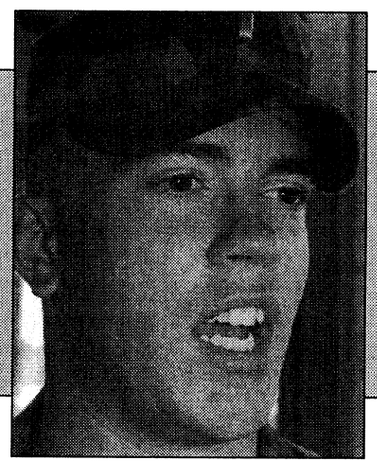
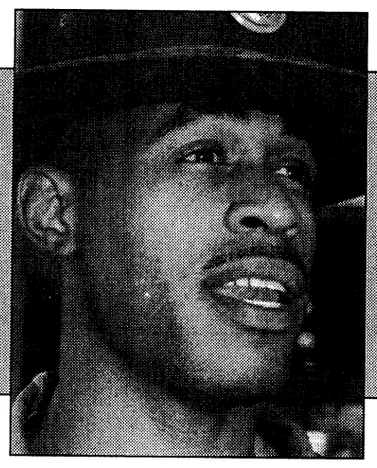
VARIOUS VOICES

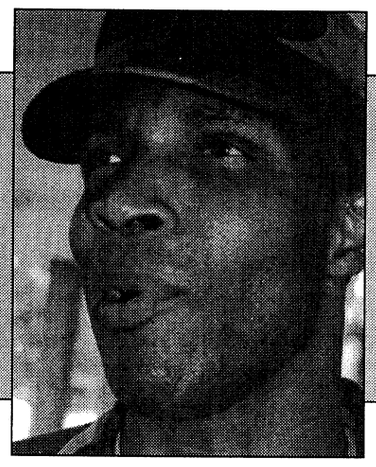


What person or school best helped you develop your leadership style?

Staff Sgt. Ronald Carter, Bradley Instructors Course, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment — "It started with the Primary Leadership Development Course. Then it goes back to your basic NCOs — your squad leader and platoon sergeant."



Staff Sgt. Christopher Wright, Company B, 1st Bn., 29th Inf. Regt. — "My first squad leader back when I was in the 10th Mountain Division. He showed me what I needed to do in order to progress."



2nd Lt. James D. Scrogin, 2nd Battalion, 17th Infantry Regiment, 2nd Infantry Division, Korea — "It was Basic Training for me. I learned how to work with people."

Sgt. Stephanie D. Britt, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 3rd Battalion (Officer Candidate School), 11th Infantry Regiment — "For me it was Staff Sgt. Latrice L. Ash. She showed me a female can lead as well as any male."

Staff Sgt. Darrell B. Hilton, Company D, 2nd Battalion, 19th Infantry Regiment (Mechanized) — " It was my section sergeant in Germany. He told when I got promoted I had to lead by example."

Master Sgt. Anthony H. Largie, Service Company, 1st Battalion, 10th Field Artillery Regiment, 3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division — "It's probably the Basic Noncommissioned Officers Course. You learn leadership skills and topics pertaining to your MOS."

Soldiers learn what it takes to become a leader

By Spc. Lisa M. Hibbert
Bayonet staff writer

More than just learning how to lead Soldiers, I learned about life when I attended the Henry A. Caro NCO Academy's Primary Leadership Development Course.

So what did I learn? Lots. Yeah, I learned the material that was in the course outline but that's just skimming the surface.

I figured out the answer to one of life's most philosophical questions: If a tree falls in a forest, and no one is there, does it make a sound?

Heck no, because when I got caught up in some concertina wire while doing the practice land navigation course, nobody heard me when I hollered!

And, oh, no! Was that really the Loch Ness monster coming through the woods over there? No, it was just a student who waded through the swamp while trying to find a point.

I think the hardest part of PLDC is learning how to conform. Most of the Soldiers enjoy certain levels of responsibility and freedom back at their units. After all, we're not privates so we are expected to know better. On the other hand, we're not NCOs yet so we are not held entirely accountable when we do screw up.

So imagine, your kinda chuggin' along just living your life. You reach that fork in the road and decide to take that left at Alberqurque to PLDC when wham! Somebody throws a monkey wrench at you and stops your whole game plan.

Spc. Lisa M. Hibbert is a graduate of PLDC class 7-97.

commentary

For 30 days you're living under the thumb. You have someone telling you when to sleep, when to eat, and you're even asking permission to use the latrines!

Add to that, you have students who are thrust into leadership positions. They're stressing out because they don't know what exactly they should be doing, but they have their classmates coming to them with questions on one end and the instructors barking out orders on the other.

After you decide to stop worrying over the unchangeables, you begin to focus on the things that are within your control, like the three written exams: Leadership I, Leadership II and Map Reading; your evaluations on marching troops, conducting PT and land navigation in addition to your performance during your student-leadership positions.

The course material was not difficult to me (not to be confused with me saying it was easy). If you don't read too much into the questions on the written test you'll be OK. Land navigation was my biggest worry but once I saw the swamps on the course and learned that there was a way I could avoid them, I learned terrain association real quick.

To me, the best thing about the course was when the instructors deviated from the course material.

My instructor, Staff Sgt. Warren N. Jones, often talked to us about investing our money which, unfortunately, I have never heard anyone discuss in such depth with lower-enlisted Soldiers.

Education, education, education was the song PLDC instructor Staff Sgt. Kenny F. Beaufort always sang. He stressed to the Soldiers the importance of getting an education — not just for promotion points, but in preparation for life outside the military.

First Sgt. Alvin Woodard Jr., the PLDC branch chief often gave us, what he called "motivational talks."

He would tell us almost daily that his nickname was "Break 'em down" Woodard and that this course was going to wear us out. But what he was doing was issuing a challenge to all who would accept, a challenge to not let the course get us down.

Although he didn't have to, Woodard spent a lot of time with our class. He told us about some of his experiences in the Army in hopes that we would avoid the same pitfalls that might have trapped him.

The course also taught me a valuable lesson about prejudice.

From the first moment my class met, we immediately began prejudging each other. My mother calls this the 10x10x10 rule. People judge others from how we look at 10 feet away, 10 inches away and by the first 10 words that come out of our mouths.

We put people into a different category according to their uniform appearance, their MOS and their gender. But the course forces you to spend a lot of time with your classmates by working as teams, and as you get to know each other, you learn that a lot of your preconceptions were misplaced.

By the end of the course, I learned combat Soldiers do not always lead the way and hopefully I, as well as the other females, proved that women are not a total drain on the Army, or at least not on the guys in my squad.

I also learned how to use a self-propelled lawn mower (man, was that cool!); how to edge without an edger (not so cool); how to balance on a buffer while my roommate buffed the floor; how not to get sick from inhaling fumes while I poured pine oil on everything; hot sauce and cheese really do make MREs taste better and that every real sentence must end with "hooah!" or as 1st Sgt. Woodard would say, "trackin'?"

Dial 545-Boss is the commander's action line for Soldiers, family members and civilians to call when they have problems or complaints that can't be resolved elsewhere.

While it is not a substitute for the chain of command or for agencies established to provide assistance, the line offers another means of communication between Fort Benning's community and commanders.

The Bayonet features some of the calls that may benefit other members of the Fort Benning community.

Call: The caller said he thought 10th Mountain Division Road was off limits to units to do physical training.

Directorate of Public Safety response:

The caller was informed to call or stop by the MP station whenever he witnesses individuals doing physical training on 10th Mtn. Div. Rd. An MP will be dispatched immediately to the location to take corrective action.

Call: The caller said she would like to know the policy for children left outside unsupervised.

Directorate of Public Safety response:

The caller was informed that United States Army Infantry Center Regulation 210-5 prohibits children under the age of 8 from being left unattended in parked cars and prohibits children under the age of 12 from being left unattended in family quarters.

The regulation also makes parents and sponsors responsible for family members at all times when on the installation, but does not specify that children of a particular age must be under supervision. There is also no provision in Georgia law that requires children of a particular age to be under constant supervision. Cases of child neglect based on lack of supervision by parents are handled on post by Social Work Services based on individual circumstances. In short, there is no hard and fast rule under State Law or Installation Regulation that requires direct (constant) supervision of children under a particular age.

Call: The caller said his family lives in a circle where there are no streetlights and there have been some POVs vandalized.

Directorate of Public Works response:

A check of the area revealed that there were no street lights in the circle. Three lights were installed by the Exterior Electric Section.

Call: The caller asks if Fort Benning can get the city to make arrangements for protection for Soldiers who have to wait until late at night at the bus station downtown to catch a bus to their next duty station. He said it's dangerous when they have to stand around outside after the station is closed.

Office of Public Affairs response:

Community Relations Officer contacted the Area District Manager for Greyhound Bus Lines in Atlanta who said one of two programs were being considered for implementation to alleviate the problems--they will either stay open longer so passengers will be allowed to stay inside the terminal until the last bus leaves; or they will hire a security guard. As of this date, an employee of the Bus Line remains on duty until the last bus leaves so that passengers can remain inside.

MPs: Train

MP Co. said he also felt comfortable firing the MK-19.

"The only thing that didn't surprise me was the weight," he said. "It's very heavy. But after awhile, you become accustomed to it and it gets lighter. You can feel the difference after firing the weapon. It seems easier."

Delano said he thought the MK-19 was an effective weapon, but only as good as the gunner's training.

"Training is very important to familiarize yourself with these weapons, before you have to use them," he said. "The round will pierce an armor vehicle, up to two inches of steel."

Next week, the MPs will be in their second phase of training, which will include what may be considered "law enforcement" training, said Master Sgt. Scott Ellis from the Readiness Group, Los Angeles, Calif. Ellis is one of the many observer controllers who will be shadowing the companies as they train.

"This mission is all MP doctrine, all related to military police operations," Ellis said. "We do have medics, communications, and NBC (nuclear, biological, chemical) personnel that are assigned to the units. Sure, they'll play a big role, but the mission itself is military police oriented."

Sgt. 1st Class Larry Lane

Soldiers wait their turn to qualify with the MK-19 at Ruth Range.

Some of the skills the MPs will work on will be riot control, setting up temporary checkpoints, escort duty and route reconnaissance.

"This is a crawl, walk, run method," he said. "We're taking them through all of the hands-on here, and then they'll do a tactical STX (situational training exercise) before they go to JRTC (Joint Readiness Training Center at Fort Polk, La.) where they will go through a Bosnia scenario."

While training up for JRTC, the MPs will train as squads and platoons. The JRTC exercise will test their ability to work as companies, Ellis said.

The military police generally work in smaller elements, two to four humvees at a time, Ellis said. Much of their work in Bosnia may be vehicle escort and checkpoint duty.

"There is a real concern with landmines. We're showing them what to look for and how to react when they're moving in a convoy."

Many of the Readiness Group observer controllers were selected because of their experience within Bosnia, said Master Sgt. Rick Pollard, Readiness Group, Oakland, Calif.

"Within the training task force, I would say about 50 percent of the people were chosen specifically because of their Bosnia experience," Pollard said. "Those individuals are able to give real experience to these soldiers and let them know what it will be like."

While in Bosnia, the military police will interact with the local population everyday. The residents have to pass through some of the checkpoints or drive the same roads the MPs will patrol.

"The important thing here is that they understand the basics of law enforcement and military police tactics," Pollard said "Once we instill that in them, we will move them up to the next level. We can put them in a scenario and see how they react."

Fort Benning rescue crew assists in finding drowning victim

By Spc. Lisa M. Hibbert
Bayonet staff writer

A teenager's body was found in Uchee Creek after a two-day search by crews from Fort Benning and Columbus emergency rescue units and the Department of Natural Resources Aug. 21.

The victim was identified as 17-year-old Jason Alexander Duncan of Norman Park, Ga., said Chattahoochee County Coroner Brenda Chancellor.

Sources said the search began Aug. 20 around noon after Duncan fell off a raft being towed by a pontoon boat. The driver of the boat was unable to return to Duncan before he fell under.

The search was temporarily suspended after Georgia Power began letting water through the dam upstream at Oliver Dam; however, game wardens continued to patrol the search area to see if the body would surface.

The body was later recovered not far from where it was reported missing at approximately 6:45 p.m. the next day.

US forces provide security for SFOR raids

By Linda D. Kozaryn
American Forces Press Service

WASHINGTON — U.S. Apache and Black Hawk helicopters provided overhead security Aug. 20 as NATO troops raided five civil police facilities in Banja Luka, Bosnia-Herzegovina, and netted up to 3,000 illegal weapons.

"The U.N. is both stunned and appalled by the enormous quantity of weapons being illegally held in Banja Luka police stations," said Liam McDowell of the U.N. International Police Task Force. "In one police station alone, the weapons cache included hundreds of fragmentation grenades, machine guns, rockets and rocket launchers, a large array of explosives and much more besides. These are not the tools of a democratic police force."

About 300 NATO Stabilization Force troops from the British sector met no resistance when they entered police headquarters, three police stations and the police academy at the request of the U.N. police task force. International authorities asked for NATO's help after acquiring evidence of widespread human rights violations, said Navy Capt. Mike Doubleday, Pentagon spokesman.

"This comes under the rubric of creating a secure environment and supporting the International Police Task Force," Doubleday said at a Pentagon briefing Aug. 21. "The basic goal of SFOR units is to create this secure environment that will enable civilian authorities to do the work they must do to ensure Bosnia can get on its feet as a country."

During the early morning raid, SFOR troops discovered assault and sniper rifles, machine guns, thousands of rounds of ammunition, mines and explosives. Some of the weapons are outlawed by the Dayton peace accord and others exceed amounts civil police are authorized to maintain, Doubleday said.

Some weapons confiscated were more likely to be found in a movie thriller or in the hands of terrorists, said Alex Ivanko of the International Police Task Force. SFOR troops found "a couple of items that actually belong more in a James Bond movie than in a police station — 12 booby-trapped pens, C4 plastic explosives and one U.N. license plate," he said.

Under the Dayton agreement, the U.N. task force oversees the restructuring, training and equipping of local police. It also investigates alleged human rights abuses by local police and recommends removal of abusive police. Task force members are unarmed.

In an investigation two days before the raid, task force authorities uncovered highly sophisticated listening equipment at a civil police station. Evidence indicated police were eavesdropping on local government officials, constitutional court judges and international agency officials, a U.N. official said. Hundreds of tapes were removed from the police station, according to U.N. representative Simon Haselock.

"The United Nations can confirm they have unequivocal evidence of serious criminal activity being conducted in the main Banja Luka police station," said task force representative McDowell. "This includes the bugging of the (Republic of Srpska) president's communications."

A week before the raid, about 12 U.S. helicopters — Apaches, Chinooks and Black Hawks — U.S. F-16 and United Kingdom Jaguar fighter jets participated in an air assault exercise about 100 kilometers north of Pale, Bosnia. SFOR troops practiced conducting airmobile assaults and inspecting weapon storage sites with local military and civilian officials. DoD officials said the exercise was one of four conducted in the last three months, and more are planned.

More than 8,200 U.S. forces are in Bosnia as part of Operation Joint Guard. About 4,000 more support the NATO mission from Croatia, Hungary and Italy. About 3,000 U.S. troops are currently deploying to replace troops scheduled to leave.

Some incoming troops will supplement existing forces during Bosnian municipal elections Sept. 13 and 14. Most deployments and redeployments will be frozen during September and will resume about Oct. 1, DoD officials said.

MOUT: Helps Soldiers train

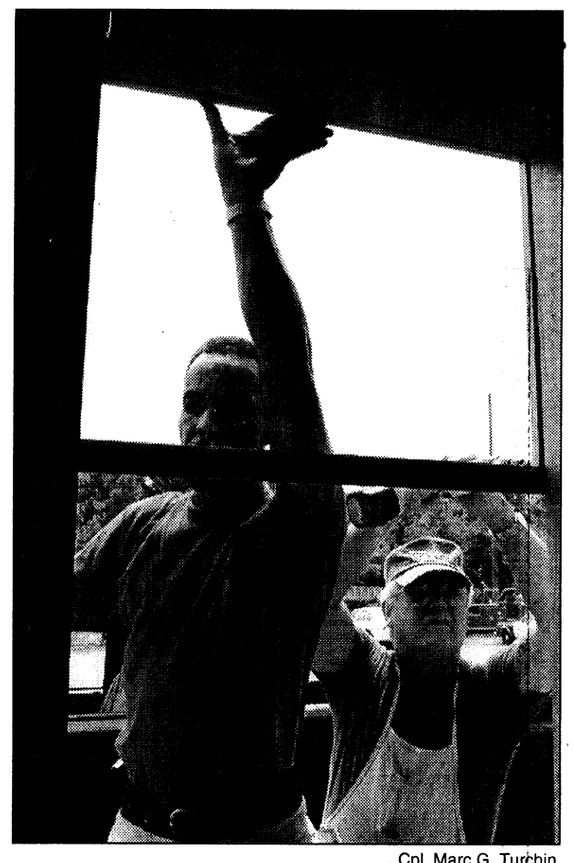
enforcement officials, spent three days at the MOUT site and came up with a list of problems with MOUT training, Thornton said.

Thornton said those problems are being addressed during the experimentation.

To be sure the Soldiers are handling each and every situation correctly, video cameras and other electronics are being added to help see how the equipment is working.



"The aim is to let the Soldiers go in and experiment with the equipment without having to send extra people in with them to monitor," Thornton said. "Nine times out of 10, they just get in the way anyway."

Other equipment planned is a computer system that allows each Soldier to be monitored on a computer screen. The screen will show where each individual is while experimenting in the city.

Although some of the cameras and renovations have already been put in place, construction and implementation of the new systems isn't scheduled to be completed until June or July of next year.

This experimentation is being done to better protect Soldiers in an urban environment, Thornton said.

This equipment, like the ones required when deployed to cold areas, in the jungle or in the desert, Thornton said, this new equipment will be given out when Soldiers are deployed to urban settings.

IOBC students volunteer time for Habitat

By 2nd Lt. Rob Gray
2nd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment

Soldiers from Company C, 2nd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment volunteered to assist Habitat For Humanity build homes Saturday.

The Soldiers helped local construction superintendent Gordon McDonald who works in conjunction with Habitat For Humanity, in laying the foundations for three houses.

As part of their Infantry Officer Basic Course, students are required to select a local community improvement project while at Fort Benning.

Volunteer efforts saved Habitat For Humanity roughly $500 per house according to Habitat staff personnel.

"By taking on this project, we can actually see the improvement in a neighborhood," said 2nd Lt. Eugene L. Martin.

"It puts things in perspective for you — makes you appreciate what you have. It's definitely something I'm going to stay involved with."

The work Habitat For Humanity does involves community improvement, more specifically, building homes for qualified, lower income families.

Those who qualify are required to invest a minimum of 500 hours labor into their future homes. This is known as "sweat equity."

Applicants go through a screening process and must be selected for housing. Mortgages for recipients are then kept below $300 per month. A less than one percent foreclosure rate attests to the project's success.

Habitat For Humanity was formed in Americus, Georgia in 1976.

"It is a Christian ministry dedicated to eliminating poverty housing worldwide," McDonald said.

They build approximately 1,000 houses a month and are the second largest home builder in America. Their efforts have helped to rebuild entire neighborhoods section by section, brick by brick.

To offset the cost of labor, volunteers from all walks of life assist in the building.

The framing of the three houses started Saturday will begin on Sept. 12. Anyone interested in volunteering their time to better the Columbus-Fort Benning area is welcome to come out and help.

For more information, call McDonald at 577-1877 or 327-2616.

1st Lt. Aaron Solich

A trainee from Company E, 2nd Battalion, 58th Infantry Regiment executes the thrust technique during rifle bayonet fighting training.

Soldiers train to kill with bayonets

2nd Battalion, 58th Infantry Regiment

Company E, 2nd Battalion, 58th Infantry Regiment conducted rifle bayonet fighting training (RBFT) at Sand Hill training sites July 25 - Aug. 11.

RBFT consists of six instructional periods that build upon themselves and culminate in a bayonet assault course.

During the first period of RBFT the trainees learn to fix and unfix bayonets, assume basic positions, and conduct basic movements.

The second period of instruction consists of learning the attack positions utilized when using a bayonet. The trainee then learns to perform defensive movements during the third period of instruction.

The fourth period of RBFT is very challenging and a time to foster a feeling of camaraderie between the trainees. This period of instruction consists of one-on-one bouts between trainees using pugil sticks that take the place of real rifles and the wearing of padded safety equipment.

The trainees are paired within their platoons and squads by weight class and the winners of each bout move up to fight against other squads or other platoons.

The fifth period of instruction is a review of all of the techniques that are learned in RBFT. Co. E, 2nd Bn., 58th Inf. concluded with the execution of the bayonet assault course located at Sand Hill Aug. 11. The course consists of obstacles and rubber targets that simulate a person with a weapon.

All of the obstacles and targets are labeled with what the obstacle is and what rifle bayonet technique to use on the target.

The trainees start out by climbing over a wall and start moving down a lane under the supervision of a drill sergeant. Once the first obstacle is cleared the trainees can hear battlefield sounds being played along with the firing of a pneumatic machine gun, artillery simulators exploding, and thick clouds of smoke from smoke grenades.

All of the trainees must successfully demonstrate the techniques learned during the previous five periods of instruction.

"It's tough, it's realistic, it develops war fighters," said Capt. James O. McLinnaham, commander of Co. E, 2nd Bn., 58th Inf.

"It teaches the soldier a second means of defense to fight, win, and survive on today's modern battlefield," Staff Sgt. Martin Lindvay, platoon sergeant of second platoon.

RBFT provides an important skill that all infantrymen must possess.

Once the training was completed, the trainees learned all of the rifle bayonet techniques and left the assault course with a new sense of confidence in themselves and their fellow trainees.

Reservists, active duty work together

By Cadet Andrew M. Crawford
D Co. 1/333, 1st Bde., 84th Div. (Tng.)

Conditions were typical the morning of Aug. 13 on Sand Hill. The heat was unfriendly, as were the drill sergeants. This morning was different though. The motivational cries of "KILL! KILL! KILL!" could be heard each time the privates lunged at each other with their practice bayonets. These war cries and the sawdust flying through the air drew the attention of visiting Training and Doctrine Command's Command Sgt. Maj. James McKinney.

He requested an unscheduled stop to the training areas of 1st Battalion, 19th Infantry Regiment.

Touring the sites with McKinney were Ft. Benning's command sergeant major, Command Sgt. Maj. Mack Vereen; Infantry Training Brigade command sergeant major, Command Sgt. Maj. Larry Durham and 1st Bn. 19th Inf. Regt. command sergeant major, Command Sgt. Maj. Efrain Hernandez.

Arriving on the scene, McKinney monitored the active and reserve cadre led training being conducted.

The quality of training, and the ability of the active and reserve components to work together seamlessly, inspired great confidence, McKinney said. The Total Army concept was alive and well on Sand Hill, building the foundation of the future Army, said 1st Lt. Hullinger, interim commander of Company D, 1st Bn., 19th Inf. Regt.

This was hand-to-hand period 4 defense against a weapon. Staff Sgt. Richard Hamm Co. E, 1st Bn., 19th Inf. Regt. and Staff Sgt. Patrick Newton Co. D, 1st Bn., 333rd Inf. Regt., 84th Division (Training) out of Flint, Michigan, were engaged in a spirited demonstration. These two NCOs work along side each other during the 1st Bn., 333rd Inf. Regt.'s annual training mission here at Fort Benning. During these two weeks, the active duty and reserve components work together. This common work experience allows for cohesion between the services that cannot be duplicated elsewhere in the Army, active nor reserve, Hullinger said.

Marines get navigation training at young ages

By Douglas J. Gilbert
American Forces Press Service

RANDOLPH AIR FORCE BASE, Texas — The youngest student in the current class of Marines was only 17 when he began learning to guide a Marine Corps C-130 aircraft. Now nearing graduation, he's attained the ripe old age of 18.

"Some of these Marines seem awfully young, but they're sharp and they learn fast," said Chief Warrant Officer David Bellow, deputy director of the Marine Aerial Navigation School here. The youthful students are a little intimidated by their Air Force and Navy counterparts across the street, who all are older and have college degrees. "That's one of the reasons we train separately," Bellow said.

The Marines use the same T-43A twin-engine jet aircraft and simulators used in Air Force-Navy joint undergraduate navigator training, but they have a different course syllabus. Since they'll serve exclusively on prop-driven C-130s, their course concentrates on celestial navigation used in those aircraft. After earning their navigator wings, they'll receive six months' additional training at Marine Corps Air Station Cherry Point, N.C. From there, they'll move to operational assignments in KC-130 aerial refuelers or with C-130 squadrons performing air drops of people and equipment and hauling cargo. It's choice duty for Marines, and only a handful pass muster.

"Marine enlisted navigation is a very small career field, with only about 80 personnel," said Bellow,

Eng Co returns after deployment

By 2nd Lt. John Tucker
1st Platoon, 63rd EN CO (CSE)

The 63rd Engineer Company (Combat Support Equipment) returned to Fort Benning Aug. 15, after a 30-day deployment to Fort Stewart, Ga., 60 days ahead of schedule.

The unit was operation control to the 92nd Engineer Combat Battalion Heavy and was tasked to assist in the upgrade of Red Cloud Golf Range, a Table VIII M-2 Bradley range. The upgrade will allow the 3rd Infantry Division to train their M-2 crews to a Table VIII standard, the highest level of qualification, which in turn will raise their overall wartime mission readiness.

The 63rd began construction July 15, upgrading 29 target positions, two moving target berms, two miles of road, assisting in the construction of four new target positions and opening and maintaining a borrow pit. The unit task organized its assets into five elements to accomplish the mission: a mover berm, a borrow pit team, a target position team, a road upgrade team and a dump truck team.

About 60,000 cubic yards of loose fill was used by the unit during this project. All target positions and mover berms were upgraded to produce a flat, horizontal surface 25 lateral feet long with 3 to 1 slopes maintaining a specific surveyed height. The 25 lateral feet were needed to keep the M-2 25 mm rounds from penetrating the berm and destroying the mechanism. The target positions averaged an overall width of 55 feet wide while the moving target berms were 1,310 and 740 feet in length respectively.

The critical construction assets for this project were the 6,000 gallon water distributors and the compaction equipment. The unit sprayed 440,000 gallons of water for compaction and dust control as a safety measure.

"This deployment presented excellent opportunities for the newer Soldiers in the 63rd to hone their skills as operators on the various types of equipment," said Capt. Melody Smith, commander of the 63rd.

"I have really gotten to know what I can do with this dozer," said Pvt. Matthew Smith, a D7G dozer operator. Smith was one of the operators instrumental in the upgrade of the target positions.

The 63rd's junior NCO's were given the opportunity to develop their leadership skills by spearheading each of the five different task organized elements of the project.

"These NCO's had to learn how to dynamically manage the engineer operations using the task organized assets (personnel and equipment) of two line platoons," said 1st. Sgt. Julio Sanchez.

One critical leadership task for Staff Sgt. Kelvin McGhee, the dump truck team NCOIC, was planning daily haul routes that did not conflict with the routes of the three other 92nd Engineer Combat Battalion Heavy companies on the 1,000 by 3,000 meter range.

The companies weekly schedule included five regular construction days and one maintenance day. "The maintenance day was the key to our success since conditions on the work site regularly produced loose bolts and mechanical failures," said Sgt. 1st Class David Blaeholder, the 63rd's motor sergeant.

"This gave the operators and the maintenance platoon the opportunity to diagnose problems that would not normally be caught by the daily PMCS procedures," Blaeholder said.

Daily work began with physical training formation at 6:20 a.m., breakfast formation at 8 a.m., arrival at the work site was at 9 a.m. and daily shut down of project operations at 9 p.m. Soldiers were given personal time after dinner to wash clothes, go to the PX or relax at the bowling alley.

The command granted one four-day pass after the first two weeks to allow Soldiers the opportunity to see their families and friends. On two other weekends, the unit had a bus that traveled to Tybee Island, in Savannah, Ga., to give Soldiers other opportunities for their time-off.

"This beach is a great place for the Soldiers to relax and wind down so they can get refocused for the mission," said Sgt. 1st Class Scott Dexter, the 63rd's operations sergeant.

The 63rd ended construction operations on the Aug. 13, and they started preparation for the convoy back to Fort Benning Aug. 15. The unit convoyed back 42 pieces of equipment on the 260 mile route to Fort Benning in four different serials. Commercial line haul support was required for 29 pieces of equipment.

Junior enlisted take first step in becoming NCOs at...

PLDC

By Spc. Lisa M. Hibbert
Bayonet staff writer

Training the Army's future leaders is the mission of the Primary Leadership Development Course conducted at the Henry Caro NCO Academy.

PLDC is the first of many schools that all enlisted Soldiers must attend in order to advance in rank. It is here that Soldiers receive an overview of what it really means to be a NCO.

"Here at PLDC, we give Soldiers the foundation upon which they can build and structure their competencies and leadership abilities," said Staff Sgt. Henry J. Stinson, PLDC instructor.

The 30-day course is divided into two phases — a garrison and a field phase.

While in the garrison phase, the Soldiers receive an abundance of information on subjects such as the proper wear of the military uniform, given the corresponding regulations and are taught how to use them.

Due to the fast pace of the course, students do not spend extensive amounts of time memorizing particular manuals but the goal of the course is to get the future NCO familiar with using the regulations.

"For a lot of these soldiers, this is their first time using these manuals," said Staff Sgt. Warren N. Jones, PLDC instructor. "This course is not designed for the students to memorize the regulations, our mission is to teach these Soldiers how to use these books so that they can know how to find the information they need."

In garrison, Soldiers are taught and evaluated on leadership and counseling, map reading, marching

Soldiers, conducting physical training, and on their performance while in a student-leadership positions.

Throughout the whole course, the students rotate through a variety of positions from team leaders to student first sergeants, providing them with first hand experience with leading troops.

"The good thing about PLDC is that the Soldiers are allowed to make mistakes while in leadership positions and it's OK," said 1st Sgt. Alvin Woodard Jr., PLDC Branch Chief. "There are no privates here. They can make mistakes, move on and develop confidence in their leadership abilities."

While the Soldiers do perform as leaders, selecting the leadership style to implement is strictly up to the individual.

"We teach the Soldiers the different ways to lead," said Staff Sgt. India Cook, PLDC instructor, "and allow them to make their own decisions. But I always tell them to lead by example. If you always set a good example you won't have anything to worry about."

"The Army needs good strong leaders so I try to teach my Soldiers that when in charge, take charge," said Staff Sgt. Mark A. O'Neal, PLDC instructor.

Evaluated twice, the students rotate through their leadership positions in both the garrison and the field setting.

In addition to grading the students on how well they keep their Soldiers informed, they are also evaluated on the movement of troops while engaged in enemy fire.

"The success or failure of the mission, meaning did all the Soldiers survive or did they achieve their goal of attacking or evading the other platoon is not a factor in the students evaluation," O'Neal said.

"We look at how well that student passed out information to his Soldiers and kept them informed."

In the field phase of the course, the students have the chance to use what they have learned in the classroom setting in a tactical environment.

"We teach training the force in the classroom," Cook said. "This is the practical exercise portion where students get to apply what they've learned."

Although the tactical exercises the Soldiers perform are conducted on an entry-phase level, the information is useful to the students because they will need to know how to train their own Soldiers, O'Neal said.

The students conduct a variety of missions during their four-day, three-night stay in the field which takes place during the last week of the course.

According to Spc. Raybon R. Smith Jr, 317th Battalion Engineer, 3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division (Mechanized), he learned a lot.

"The course gave me the opportunity to develop my leader-skills which will help me when I become an NCO, and throughout the rest of my military career," Smith said.

senior instructor for the class graduating Sept. 5.

"We hold three classes a year. For the next class, 30 applied, but only 15 were selected. Up to 30 percent will wash out before they earn their wings."

The Marines are first invited to volunteer for navigator training while undergoing technical training at the Marine Corps avionics school in Memphis, Tenn., or other schools. A few come from operational assignments. A board screens and selects those who will go on to Naval Air Station Pensacola, Fla., for five weeks of primary aviation training.

"We look for maturity and the ability to work independently and work with pilots," Bellow said of the screening process. For example, he said, a Marine lance corporal may be navigating for a full-colonel pilot. "He needs to be able to talk 'navigator to pilot,' not 'lance corporal to colonel'" he said.

At Randolph, students spend seven months learning navigation basics, including 14 flights in the T-43 flying classroom. To remind them they're Marines first, instructors lead them in physical training at least three times a week and involve them as a group in community projects and social activities.

One of their flying missions is to another base, where they spend a couple of days off from the rigorous training schedule.

"I took my current class to Puerto Rico, and we went scuba diving," Bellow said.

Lance Cpl. Thomas Smolenski was born in Poland but raised in West Chicago, Ill. After graduating from high school, he earned a degree in aviation management from Southern Illinois University, earned a private pilot license and worked as a flight instructor in Kentucky before joining the Marines. He wanted to be a pilot, but there were no openings; recruiters told him he'd have a better chance if he applied through the enlisted ranks.

Used to studying, he excelled at the Randolph school but admitted it was more intense than he thought it would be.

"Next week, we have three check rides to show what we've learned," he said. "That's a lot of testing for one week."

Smolenski said he hopes the Marines will select him for officer candidate school and aviator training in the near future, but if not, he'd like to launch his navigator career in Okinawa.

In the meantime, he's bonded with his fellow students and said he'll miss them when they graduate and head in different directions.

"Out here in Texas, the only family any of us has is each other," he said. "We depend on each other, hang together and help one another."

Like his fellow students, Smolenski takes pride in himself and the Marine Corps. In a few weeks, the pride, hard work and hanging together will produce 10 new members of the Marine Corps' elite group of enlisted navigators.

Digitized division scheduled for 2000

Fort Hood's 4th ID is first unit, taking it step by step

TRADOC News Service

FORT MONROE, Va. — The Army's Experimental Division will become the first digitized division by 2000.

The 4th Infantry Division at Fort Hood, Texas, is one of three divisions and a corps slated to be digitized, according to a recent Department of the Army announcement.

"The 4th ID's colors will be uncased as the first digital division in the year 2000," said Col. Al Turner, director of Training and Doctrine Command's Joint Venture office. "We've got just over two years to make that happen."

The first digitized corps will be III Corps, 4th ID's parent command.

In 2003 the 1st Cavalry Division, also at Fort Hood, will become the second digitized division.

By 2004, III Corps, parent command for the 4th ID and 1st Cavalry, will be digitized.

That includes the corps support command and other "corps slices." The 3rd Infantry Division, Fort Stewart, Ga., will be digitized as resources become available.

According to the Department of the Army announcement, fiscal constraints will permit only the cavalry squadron and one brigade in each division to be outfitted with embedded digitized ground maneuver systems — M1A2 Abrams tanks, Bradley Fighting Vehicles and selected enhancement programs. The other brigades' equipment will have applique digitized systems. As the divisions are being digitized, they will retain their warfighting responsibilities.

> "It is a new way of doing business and we in TRADOC are chartered with driving this process."
> — Brig. Gen. Robert Clark
> TRADOC deputy chief for combat developments

The 4th ID became the Army's Experimental Force in 1995. Its 1st Brigade became Task Force XXI, and was outfitted with digital communications systems, new equipment and new weapons systems.

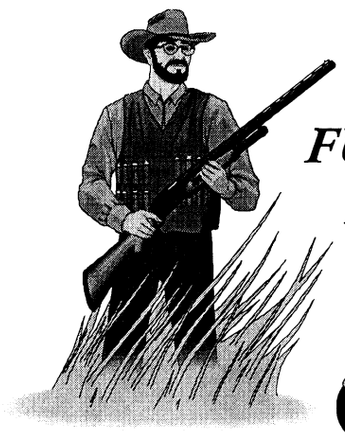
In March 1997, after training on the new equipment and new tactics, techniques and procedures, the 1st Brigade was tested in an advanced warfighting experiment at the National Training Center, Fort Irwin, Calif. Its success against NTC's opposing force was largely attributed to increased situational awareness made possible by digital communications.

Under normal development and acquisition practices, fielding such a force would have taken about seven years, according to Brig. Gen. Robert Clark, TRADOC's deputy chief of staff for combat developments, and former Fort Benning deputy commanding general.

It was made possible by the "spiral" development process devised at Fort Hood — a collaboration between contractors, Soldiers and Army systems program managers.

"It is a new way of doing business and we in TRADOC are chartered with driving this process ... so that we don't drift back toward the linear, sequential, time-consuming and costly way of doing business," he said.

The 4th will continue to be the developmental organization for the Army to test new concepts and technologies.



The division will take advantage of the infrastructure in existence at Fort Hood. The new divisions will also be reorganized similar to the "interim division design."

"I think we're going to end up with a design that's a little smaller. Somewhere in the neighborhood of 15,000 soldiers," said Gen. William W. Hartzog, TRADOC commander, who is tasked with overseeing the creation of Army XXI. That interim division design will be experimented within a computer simulation AWE at Fort Hood in November.

Hartzog said Army leadership feels the division will continue to be the primary warfighting organization.

"I think that in the upper end of the spectrum of conflict, in fights like Desert Storm, a division headquarters is very important," he said.

news from the front

By Chief Warrant Officer 2 J.D. Smith
498th Medical Company (AA)

News from the front this week is proof that if you stay in the Army long enough you will see old friends again.

Lt. Gen. John W. Hendrix, former Fort Benning Commanding General, now V Corps commander visited Guardian Base last week. He came to receive a command brief by the Medical Task Force, and Forward Support Battalion.

Maj. Tracy Wyatt, 498th commander, commented that it was great receiving some well deserved recognition in front of the entire task force.

It is not bragging if you can back it up.

If you recall in last week's article we complemented by Spc. Robert Hernandez for winning the "Big Wheel of the Month" competition.

Well, same competition, same result, same unit, different Soldier. This month the congratulations go out to Spc. Kim Dooley for her humvee maintenance. It is a great credit to the unit, Dooley and her chain of command (Sgt. 1st Class Earl Williams and Staff Sgt. David Campbell).

The competition for the award is pretty stiff, however the 498th keeps finding a way to show Guardian Base the quality Soldiering accomplished at Fort Benning.

The unit continues to prepare for the much anticipated redeployment, the closer it gets, the more meetings we have.

Prior to the redeployment we have to prepare for the up coming elections. The tension is mounting and we are preparing to provide evacuation of massive casualties if the need arises, but we would rather not use our services in that manner.

Recruiters, employers offer opportunities at job fairs

By Chick Eagle
Army Career and Alumni Program

"Get ready, get set and plan to go to the Job Fairs and Employer Days in September," said Betty Johnson, Fort Benning Job Assistance Center office manager. Johnson went on to describe the upcoming events for casual and serious job seekers.

"We are fortunate to have three job fairs in a two-week period in September and encourage as many Soldiers and family members to attend as possible to explore future career choices, meet real employers and recruiters and have an enjoyable experience," Johnson said.

First will be the Georgia Department of Labor sponsored Job Fair for Veterans and other job seekers 10 a.m. to 1 p.m. on Sept. 11 at the VFW Post 665 on Victory Drive in Columbus. Employers from the Columbus and Fort Benning area will be there to discuss a wide range of entry-level, supervisory, management, part-time and full-time job openings.

Second will be the Fall Southern Region Military Job Fair, 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. Sept. 16, at the Montgomery Civic Center in Montgomery, Ala. Employers from throughout the Southern region and beyond with interest in recruiting Military personnel for a wide range of jobs will be represented in one of the largest annual Job Fairs.

Third will be the ACAP Job Assistance Center September Employer Day 9 a.m. to noon Sept. 19 at the Job Assistance Center in Soldiers' Plaza, Building 2634.

Assorted recruiters from the Alabama-Georgia area have been invited to attend and will actively recruit Soldiers to fill a variety of job vacancies.

"All these events are free of charge to job seekers and we want as many Soldiers and family members to attend, as schedules permit, for the experience, opportunity and to also make it worthwhile for the employers and recruiters," Johnson said.

"In future Bayonet articles we will describe in more detail the employers attending and offer tips on how to make the best of your job fair experience. Please mark your September calendar for the upcoming Job Fairs," she added.

How do I get my photo on this page?

To meet customer needs and requests, The Bayonet provides a Grips and Grins Page.

The newspaper receives many requests to run awards, promotions and other photos of this type, so the staff decided to designate a page just for that.

Because of the small size of our staff and the frequency and number of the events that generally produce grip-and-grin type photos, the newspaper's policy remains that we will not send a reporter to take these type of photos, but we will run those submitted by our readers.

Photos you may submit include those from events such as balls, teas, coffees, club and organizational meetings and elections, award presentations, check presentations, official parties, dinners, dining events, dances and group photos.

If you have a good-quality, black and white or color photo of an awards or promotion ceremony, sporting team, social event, etc., send it to The Bayonet, Grips and Grins Page, U.S. Army Infantry Center Public Affairs Office, Infantry Hall, Room 506, Fort Benning, Ga., 31905. Fort Benning annual bazaar needs crafters — Fort Benning's annual craft bazaar is looking for crafters to participate in the bazaar from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. Nov. 15.

The bazaar will take place at the Infantry Hall and spaces are available to the public starting at $30.

All the proceeds go to the Officers Wives' Club scholarship and welfare projects.

For more information or to request a crafter contract, call Judith Markelz at 687-7246 or Brenda Barger at 568-8921.

Stowers Elementary to conduct a New Parent orientation — Parents of students new to Stowers Elementary School are invited to attend a New Parent Orientation Friday.

The orientation will take place at 1 p.m. today in Room 105 at Stowers.

For more information, call 544-2312.

AUSA to raffle a new car or truck at its annual fish fry — A brand new truck or car will belong to some fortunate person Sept. 26.

The one dollar raffle tickets are being sold by representatives in all the major units from post at the Association of U.S. Army office in Infantry Hall, Room 601, and at the Main Mall each Saturday and Sunday.

Starting Monday, two of the vehicles will be on display, a Dakota Sport Pickup Truck at the 75th Ranger Regiment headquarters, and a Hyundai Elantra at Martin Army Community Hospital.

AUSA is conducting a car and truck raffle to raise money to send Soldiers to the national convention in Washington D.C. in October.

Other vehicles to choose from are a Honda Civic LX, Chevy S-10 pickup, Ford Escort ZX2, Isuzu pick-up, Toyota Tacoma pickup and Mazda SE5, Nissan pickup, or a Saturn SC-1 Coupe.

Each vehicle is valued at a minimum of $15,000 and the title and tag fees will also be paid for.

The winner need not be present to win, but then he or she will not have a chance to drive away from Uchee Creek with the vehicle of his or her choice.

Spouse orientation set — The next Fort Benning spouse orientation takes place at 8:45 a.m Sept. 12 in Building 359. All newly assigned personnel, especially those with spouses are encouraged to attend. This orientation provides information about all of the post services and facilities that are available to Soldiers and their family members.

Child-care is provided, however to access this service, family members are asked to make reservations by calling the Army Community Service Program at 545-4043.

For more information about the Spouse Orientation Program, call Army Community Service at 545-4043.

Fort Benning Schools

Board members meet, discuss new school year

By Spc. Lisa M. Hibbert
Bayonet staff writer

With the anticipation of the first day of school upon them, Fort Benning's school board members and staff met Monday for the August school board meeting.

Music greeted the board members as Cy Dietrick, music teacher at Loyd Elementary School performed a song that he wrote called "Children: Hungry and Thirsty," while Jannie Pride, kindergarten teacher of White Elementary School accompanied him on the keyboard.

Gail Wilson, director of staff development for Fort Benning Schools talked about the benchmarks of the School Improvement Process for teachers.

Already the school system has conducted many teacher-training sessions for the upcoming school year. One of the most recent ones was a workshop based on the book, "The Seven Habits of Highly Effective People."

Some of the benchmarks of the for teacher training are student achievement, safe schools, parental participation and organizational development.

Introduced at the meeting were the new principals in the system. Debra Mabrey, formerly the assistant principal at Stowers Elementary School is the new principal at Loyd Elementary School. The position she vacated is still present at this time. John Ulferts is the new assistant principal at Faith Middle School. Ulferts comes to the system from Germany and replaces Ann Justice who now works at Stowers as a fifth-grade social studies teacher.

Another presenter at this month's meeting was Kathy Eirnhorn, director of Curriculum and Testing, who discussed the criteria for testing gifted children.

In the superintendent's report, Dr. Dell McMullen remarked on the opening day activities that the system conducted for the teachers.

"The opening day for the teachers was the best ever based on the tremendous feedback from staff members," McMullen said. "Mrs. Ernst (wife of post Commanding General Maj. Gen. Carl F. Ernst) gave a wonderfully uplifting welcome back to the staff. We appreciate Col. (Randy) Buck and Lt. Col. (Dana) Chipman representing the school board at the opening."

On the progress of renovations taking place within the schools, McMullen gave an update to the board.

"The McBride Elementary School renovation is complete and classes will start in the new building on the first day of school," McMullen said. "The Faith addition is now on track and scheduled for completion in late October. The Wilson roof continues to be on track with completion also scheduled for October."

With technology being a benchmark of the Fort Benning School system, plans are being made to add more computers to the schools.

"We reported in the June meeting that we would be able to outfit one personal computer lab and one discourse electronic classroom in each of the seven school for the coming school year," McMullen said. "Hardware, software and furniture have been ordered and the contract to install hardware and networking is in place.

"Materials to establish a system to link all schools and the administrative office together and give schools access to the gateway has been ordered," McMullen said. "We are expecting to have the labs up and running by late October.

Board members voted to approve the June and July consolidated lunchroom fund statements. The monthly net income for June was a loss of $2,452, the current year-to-date income is $74,317 and the current fund equity is $187,353. The monthly net income for July was a loss of $5,571, the current year-to-date income is $68,747 and the current fund equity is $182,129.

Others present at the meeting include: Col. Michael Bingham, president and Faith Middle School representative; Staff Sgt. Reba Raymond, Stowers Elementary representative; 1st Sgt. Wesley Lee, Wilson Elementary School Representative; Ann Voigt, Dexter Elementary School Representative; Richard Skinner, assistant superintendent; Robbie Norris, Fort Benning Schools Human Resources site manager; Caroline Myers, president, Benning Education Association; and one visitor.

Good hygiene fights off childhood viruses

Egleston Children's Hospital

Back-to-school jitters may give your child an upset stomach or even make him sick for a day or two. Childhood illness experts at Egleston Children's Hospital at Emory University in Atlanta say what sometimes may look like a bad case of the summertime blues may actually be a virus that strikes particularly hard in late summer and early fall.

If your child complains of a sore throat, vomits more than once and has diarrhea or abdominal pain, he might have an enterovirus.

Enteroviruses are actually a family of more than 75 viral types that can cause anything from eye inflammation to stomach upset to viral meningitis, according to Egleston infectious disease specialist Harry Keyserling. The disease spreads by hands contaminated by human feces. Enterovirus is contagious and can affect all ages, but it seems most often to hit school-aged children or children who live or play in crowded conditions. Although your child can be infected by an enterovirus any time of year, it thrives in the summer and early fall months. No cure or vaccine exists for the disease. Symptoms last from three to four days.

Because so many different forms this virus exist, diagnosing whether your child contracts an enterovirus is tricky, said Corinne Taylor, a general pediatrician at Egleston. A culture of your child's stool or blood may be taken. If your child complains of a stiff neck and headache, a spinal tap may be done. Since some enterovirus strains develop into viral meningitis, the tap rules out bacterial meningitis.

Parents should note if their child seems unable to move his or her head easily.

Taylor offers these tips to help stop the spread:

- Wash your hands thoroughly with soap and water after going to the restroom or changing diapers. Until your children learn good hand washing habits, wash their hands with soap and water after they go to the bathroom.
- If your child attends day care, make sure the provider properly disinfects surfaces and uses gloves to change diapers.
- Clean toys and other surfaces regularly with soap and water.
- If your child complains of a headache and stiff neck, take him to your pediatrician immediately.

ask the judge

By Capt. Stephen Payne
Legal Assistance Attorney

Q: What obligations do Soldiers have to provide financial support to family members?

A: If you're married or have children, you probably owe your family members financial support, and Army Regulation 608-99, Family Support, Child Custody, and Paternity, imposes obligations on you and your commanders to make sure you're providing it.

The issue ordinarily arises when a Soldier has children from a previous marriage or becomes separated from his or her spouse. The amount of support is set by a court order, a written agreement between the parties, or, in the absence of either, by Army policy.

According to AR 608-99, Soldiers will comply with the financial support provisions of all court orders. For example, if your divorce decree (the order entered by the court to finalize your divorce), grants your ex-spouse a certain amount of alimony or child support (or says that you don't owe any), that is the amount the Army will require you to pay.

In many cases, spouses who are separating will enter into a written financial support agreement (with which Legal Assistance can help you) pending divorce. That agreement may terminate upon divorce or be incorporated into the divorce decree. If you enter into such an agreement, the Army will expect you to honor it by paying the amount of support that it specifies.

If you have neither a court order nor a written agreement, AR 608-99 sets the amount of support you owe. That amount depends on your pay grade, whether you're supporting one or more family units, and whether your family members are living in government quarters.

If you're supporting one family unit not residing in government quarters, you owe your family members the amount of your BAQ at the with-dependents rate, regardless of whether or not you're actually receiving BAQ. Thus, in the absence of a court order or agreement, an E-5 supporting a spouse and two children who live off-post owes them $469.20 per month.

If you're supporting one family unit residing in government quarters, you owe your family members the amount of the difference between your BAQ at the with-dependents rate and your BAQ at the without-dependents rate. In other words, an E-4 supporting a spouse who lives on post owes the spouse $408 - $285 = $123 per month.

Finally, if you're supporting multiple family units not residing in government quarters, you owe each family member a pro-rate share of the amount of your BAQ at the with-dependents rate. The pro-rate share is calculated by dividing your BAQ at the with-dependents rate by the total number of family members (not counting former spouses) you're supporting. For example, consider an 0-3 supporting his spouse, who is living off-post, and two children from a previous marriage, living elsewhere with their mother. No court orders or agreements are in effect. How much does he owe each of them?

His BAQ at the with-dependents rate amounts to $642.60. Divide that by three because he owes support to three family members, and the result is $214.20 each. That means that every month he should send $214.20 x 2 = $428.40 in child support to the mother of his two children and $214.20 to his wife.

That's a simplified version of the Army's family support requirements.

There are many more wrinkles, such as when both spouses involved are active-duty military members, and when you start mixing government quarters with off-post housing, or court-ordered amounts for some family members with Army-required amounts for others.

The important thing to remember is that the Army takes these obligations seriously, and requires its commanders to ensure that they're fulfilled. If you have questions about your obligations, or you or your children are military dependents who are not being supported, make an appointment to see a Legal Assistance attorney by calling 545-3281.

Post officials offer holiday driving tips

Infantry Branch Safety Office

Careful driving can be defined as the operation of a vehicle in such manner as to maintain control at all times, regardless of the traffic, weather, or road conditions. The following are a few driving hazards and safe driving practices to be aware of:

•Fit the seat belt properly.

•Driving for long periods during hot weather will increase driver fatigue. Adjust windows to maximum ventilation and stop frequently to rest.

•Drive at speeds that permit control of the vehicle at all times.

•Switch on your headlights at sundown; let the other person know you are there.

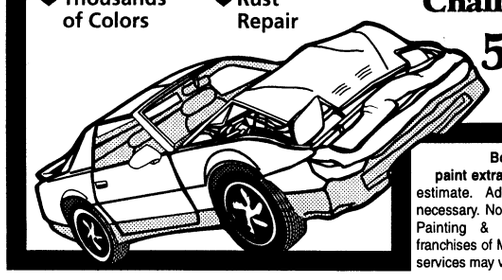
•When weather and road conditions are unfavorable, slow down, and if necessary, stop.

•If you have to stop, pull off the road onto the shoulder only after careful observation. Grass weeds may hide holes, stumps and other hazards. Don't walk into the roadway.

•Plan your trip to allow ample time.

•Watch for all drivers. They may be drunk, fatigued, sick or just plain careless.

•Remember that all roads are not the same when wet.



•Get your vehicle in good condition for summer driving. Check your steering, tires, brakes, lights, windshield wipers, cooling and exhaust system.

•Turn on your headlights in storms, as some vehicle colors have a tendency to blend in with the road and cannot be easily seen.

•Remember when you hold a steering wheel you hold your life, and the lives of others, in your hands.

New rules apply to Georgia tags

Georgia Department of Revenue

ATLANTA — Effective May 1, an important change in Georgia's motor vehicle laws stipulates all license plates ("tags") are now to remain with the original owner upon sale or transfer of a vehicle.

Previously in Georgia, only "special" license plates (e.g., Olympic, college, prestige, veterans tags) were transferable from one vehicle to another vehicle an owner purchased or acquired. But as of May 1, Georgia law now mandates all motor vehicle tags remain with the original tag owner for use on any subsequent vehicle he or she may own — as long as any subsequent vehicle requires the same tag classification and fee as the previously owned vehicle.

In the interest of providing Georgia motor vehicle owners with useful answers to frequently asked questions, the Department of Revenue's Motor Vehicle Division released the following motor vehicle questions and answers. As always, taxpayers who may have additional inquiries are encouraged to contact their County Tax Commissioner's Office.

Q. What is the main purpose of House Bill 205?

A. House Bill 205 provides that as of May 1, license plates will be issued to the applicant for registration of a vehicle and not to the vehicle. The individual will thereafter retain the license plate when the vehicle is transferred by sale or otherwise.

Q. What is the status of all currently registered vehicles and the attached plates?

A. By act of the new law, the ownership of the license plate of all currently registered vehicles is transferred to the owners of those vehicles.

Q. When a vehicle is sold, does the license plate stay on the vehicle?

A. No. The seller must remove the plate from the sold vehicle before transferring possession to the buyer (or dealer, in the case of a trade-in).

Q. If the seller doesn't remove the license plate, can the buyer keep the license plate and transfer the license plate and certificate of registration into the seller's name?

A. No. The license plate and certificate of registration cannot be transferred into the buyer s name. The new owner must either transfer a license plate and certificate of registration, which is already in his or her name or purchase a new license plate. The new owner must surrender the license plate left on the car by the previous owner to the county tax commissioner.

Q. Can a seller who forgets to remove the license plate when disposing of a vehicle get the license plate back from the tax commissioner or the Department of Revenue?

A. No. Either a replacement license plate and certificate of registration or a new license plate and certificate of registration must be applied for and applicable fees paid.

Q. Must the license plate from the sold vehicle be transferred to a new vehicle the seller acquires?

A. Generally, yes. The law contemplates that the tag from the sold vehicle will be immediately transferred to a new vehicle. There are circumstances where that may not be practical, however. The seller will have a reasonable time, the duration of which will be stipulated in regulations to be promulgated by the department, in which to transfer the registration to another subsequently acquired vehicle before having to surrender the plate to the county tax commissioner for cancellation.

Q. What if an individual purchases a new vehicle and does not sell the old vehicle? May they transfer the registration and plate from the old vehicle to the new one?

A. No. As long as a vehicle is owned, the registration may not be transferred to another vehicle. If the owner wants to retain the old vehicle, he or she must apply for a new registration and secure a new plate for the new vehicle.

Q. If the vehicle is given to another family member, can the plate be transferred to that person?

A. No. As of May 1, plates are personally owned by the person to whom they have been registered and they may not be transferred to another person. The plate must be removed from the vehicle when it is transferred to another family member, and that family member must then apply for a new registration and plate to be assigned to him or her.

Q. What documents must be provided by the seller to the buyer when a vehicle is transferred by sale or otherwise?

A. The seller must provide the buyer (or dealer in the case of a trade-in) with: either a certificate of title showing the assignment of the vehicle from the seller to the buyer if the vehicle is required to have a title; or a bill of sale evidencing the transfer if the vehicle is not required to have a title (for example, a vehicle 15 years old or older). The seller must also provide a copy of the seller's certificate of registration for the transferred vehicle.

Q. What documents must be provided by the buyer to the county tax commissioner to register the new vehicle in their name?

A. There are two scenarios as follows:

•The owner has a current plate and registration from a previously owned vehicle — MV-1Z tag and title application; either a certificate of title assignment from the seller if the vehicle is required to have a title a bill of sale if the vehicle is not required to have a title; proof, in counties having emissions requirements, the vehicle has passed an emissions test; proof of insurance, name of insurance company and policy number; $18 title application fee, if the vehicle is required to be titled, plus $5 transfer fee; and certificate of registration for the license plate the owner wishes to transfer to the new vehicle he or she just bought or other verification the tag he or she wishes to transfer was properly issued to him or her.

•The owner has no current plate to transfer and is seeking a new registration. The same information listed in the scenario above; and, if needed for verification of ad valorem tax payment, a copy of the seller's certificate of registration, if the vehicle was previously registered.

Q. Can an owner's license plate from a vehicle he or she has sold be transferred to any other type of vehicle he or she acquires?

A. In some cases, no. There are different registration fees for certain classes of vehicles and a license plate may only be transferred to a vehicle of the same class.

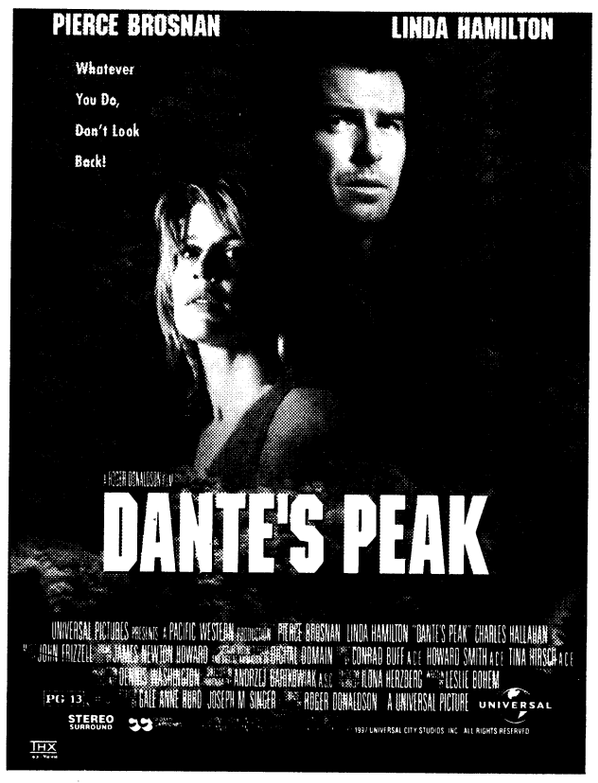
DHR helps elderly through sea of insurance claims

Ga. Department of Human Resources

"Medicare, Medigap, managed care — health insurance for seniors is getting more complicated every day," said Judy Hagebak, director of the Department of Human Resources (DHR), Division of Aging Services.

"A lot of people are paying more than they should because claims were incorrectly filed or they hold policies they don't really need," she said. "They may not understand what Medicare does and doesn't cover. They may feel overwhelmed by paperwork and not know where to get help. That's why we set up HICARE."

HICARE, or Health Insurance Counseling, Assistance and Referral for the Elderly, gives expert advice to older Georgians and their families about Medicare, supplemental insurance, long-term-care insurance, Medicaid, managed care and other health insurance issues.



Volunteer counselors help people understand their rights; compare and evaluate policies; sort through medical bills and learn to file claims.

HICARE is funded by a grant from the federal Health Care Financing Administration.

To get in touch with HICARE, call (800) 669-8387.

Labor Day

Soldiers celebrate a day of rest, reflection

By Chaplain (Lt. Col.) Robert A. Wildeman
The Infantry Center Chapel

Labor Day brings many different images to mind: the last summer holiday; school beginning again; and, the question, "Where has the summer gone?"

President Grover Cleveland, at the urging of the labor unions, signed a bill June 28, 1894, establishing the first Monday in September as Labor Day. The celebration intended to recognize the contributions of organized labor. Today, the day provides an opportunity for leisure and reflection on the victories won by the unions for their workers.

We spend a great deal of time and expend a great deal of energy working in one way or another. Whether raising our children, cleaning the house, going to the commissary or to the field, we seem to catch ourselves going and coming. Enough hours or days in the week do not exist. Then it seems as if no matter how hard we work and how much money we make, more month than money usually remains and as much work left undone as done.

So why work? Do we work just because we have to, or does work possess a deeper, more fulfilling meaning? Is it a job or a vocation? Do we work just to pay the bills and meet our physical needs? Or, does work provide a higher purpose and calling to our lives?

During the Protestant Reformation, two Christian leaders, Martin Luther and John Calvin, found that God intended all workers feel a sense of dignity about what they did, no matter how menial or great.

They used the word "vocation" to describe the work of any Christian. The word implies a divine calling that gives purpose to our work, a separateness enjoyed previously by those in religious works. The word implied that a divine calling, blessing and purpose applied to any job. Whether a farmer, servant, parent, soldier, merchant, teacher, priest or king, whatever you were and did had the same special recognition and blessing from God.

In I Corinthians 10:31, the Apostle Paul gives us the proper motivation for everything we do. He wrote, "So whether you eat or drink or whatever you do, do it all to the glory of God."

Our motivation requires that we do our best, no matter what we do, not so we get the credit, but that God will.

Whatever we do, we do with a sense of purpose, fulfillment and joy because we know that we have been called by God to do it. And because we know that God called us and gave us the ability to do our work and that we have a unique contribution to make in his kingdom, we take dignity and pride in all that we do. To use an Army phrase, our vocation is "not just a job; it's an adventure."

Do you see your work as a job or a vocation? If you see what you do as a calling from God that has a special place in his grand plan for his world, your work takes on a new and deeper meaning.

Protestant Women of the Chapel — The Protestant Women of the Chapel will begin the fall season 9:30 to 11:45 a.m. Sept. 4 at the Religious Education Center, Building. 2521. This will be a "first Thursday" meeting of prayer, Bible study, praise, singing and fellowship.

The theme for this year will be "Hear the Father's Heart, ... Love the Lord your God ... Love your neighbor as yourself," Matthew 23:37-39.

There will be four Bible studies: Becoming a Woman of Prayer by Cynthia Heald; Lord. Only You Can Change Me by Kay Arthur; When the Squeeze Is On by Martha Thacher; and Celebrating Life by Luci Swindoll.

PWOC consists of military family members and civilian women from various denominations.

Please join us every Thursday. Childcare is provided at no charge in Building. 2517.

For more information call Cackie Howe at 685-2217 or Robin Kennedy at 569-0890.

Proverbs 28:5

FATHER AND SON

Reflecting the image of God

By Chaplain (Capt.) Tom P. Wheatley
Ranger Training Brigade

Now that I have a son of my own, I can see more clearly what people mean when they say, "Like father-, like son." Many have told me that our 2-year old, Joshua, resembles me physically. He also likes to copy things that I do. In fact, it can be scary at times how much children imitate their parents. It makes me really think about what I do in front of Joshua. If I decide to eat a popsicle, he wants to eat a popsicle; if I make funny noises, he makes funny noises. He wants so much to be like his father, and I like the fact that he wants to be like me.

In the same way, our heavenly Father wants us to be like him. In the book of Leviticus, God tells his people, "I am the Lord who brought you up out of Egypt to be your God; therefore be holy, because I am holy." God desires that we know him, and that we be like him. After all, in the first chapter of Genesis, it says that we were created to be in God's image and likeness, his reflection. A reflection in a mirror has to be a copy of the original. It cannot be anything else.

God created us to be his witnesses here on earth — to reflect his nature. When we do a very good job of reflecting, we will shine with God's glory and splendor. This happened to Moses when he came down off of Mount Sinai with the Ten Commandments. His face was so brilliant the people were afraid to look at him. And Jesus was transfigured on the mount when Moses and Elijah appeared with him there. The Bible records that Jesus' face shone like the sun, and his clothes became as white as the light. (Matthew 17:1-8) God's word says that "God is light, and in Him is no darkness at all." (I John 1:5) So it stands to reason that when we are good reflections of the Father, we will shine too, reflecting only light in our lives.

Do we truly desire to be like God, our Father? Do we watch what he does, and then try to copy him? Do we love others unselfishly and forgive them of their faults? Do we desire only what is pure and good, and forsake anything which is evil or unholy? If we do these things, then we are being like the Father.

Do we look to Christ as the perfect reflection of the Father and strive to be Christlike ourselves? Jesus was the perfect Son, who stated, "I tell you the truth, the Son can do nothing by himself; he can do only what he sees his Father doing, because whatever the Father does the Son also does. For the Father loves the Son and shows him all he does." (John 5:19-20) Let us try to be like our heavenly Father in all of our thoughts and actions, through the life of Christ, the perfect Son. God truly wants all of his children to be like him, the way he created us to be. As we live this way, reflecting our true nature, we will prove the truth of this statement from (Ephesians 5:8-1(): "For you were once darkness, but now you are light in the Lord. Live as children of light (for the fruit of the light consists in all goodness, righteousness and truth) and find out what pleases the Lord."

Accountants explain tax ramifications for divorce settlements

Georgia Society of CPAs

Obtaining the most equitable divorce settlement requires more than simply dividing your property in half.

The Georgia Society of Certified Public Accountants points out there are income tax ramifications to virtually every financial decision made in connection with the divorce. Understanding the tax impact of your decisions will help you assess and obtain a fair divorce settlement.

Child support

Child support payments are not deductible for income tax purposes by the parent making the payments and, likewise, are not taxable income to the receiving parent. Accordingly, the payments have significant income tax implications if one parent is in a higher tax bracket than the other parent.

Alimony payments

Alimony payments are treated differently from child support. They are generally deductible by the payer and taxable to the recipient. To determine how much monthly support, if any, is due a spouse, courts consider the potential recipient's needs and earning power as well as the payer's income.

If you expect to be the payer of alimony, keep in mind that alimony payments needn't last your lifetime. Sometimes the amount and duration of alimony is dependent on the length of time a financially dependent spouse needs to become self-supporting. Such "rehabilitative alimony" may last only a few years.

To be considered alimony, payments must be made by cash or check and, like child support, must be paid under a decree of divorce, legal separation agreement or decree of support. Any additional payment provided voluntarily to your spouse or former spouse does not qualify as alimony for income tax purposes and cannot be deducted.

In general, divorced or legally separated parties may not live in the same household, and the spouse's liability to pay alimony must end on the death of the receiving spouse.

Sale of home

The largest asset of most couples is their home. In general, married couples can defer taxes on the sale of their residence if they purchase a new residence within two years before or two years after the sale date of the old residence.

If you both elect on a joint return to defer tax on the gain from the sale of your residence and then you divorce, the deferral rules apply separately to each ex-spouse. Tax law allows each former spouse to take advantage of this tax deferral, provided the new home costs at least as much as one spouse's portion of the adjusted sales price of the old home.

If you and your spouse are age 55 or over and the value of your home has appreciated, you may qualify for an even better tax break — an exclusion of up to $125,000 of the gain from taxes.

Here's the key: If you both retain ownership of the home after your divorce, you and your former spouse may each qualify for the $125,000 exclusion. On the other hand, if you sell the home before you are divorced, you would receive only one $125,000 tax exclusion on a jointly filed return.

Pensions, retirement funds

Normally, withdrawals from a pension plan are taxable, but in the case of divorce, you can roll over part or all of the funds to your spouse without paying taxes.

To divide a pension, a court must issue a Qualified Domestic Relations Order. This court order does not apply to Individual Retirement Accounts (IRAs). IRA funds can be transferred tax free by a written divorce decree or a document related to the divorce. The recipient must transfer the money to another IRA within 60 days or pay taxes on the amount.

Appreciated property

When transferring any assets, such as stocks, bonds or real estate, it's important to understand the tax basis of the property also changes hands. The basis — generally the amount originally paid for the property — is used to calculate gains and losses when the property is later sold.

Accordingly, if you receive appreciated property as part of a divorce settlement, you're responsible for paying tax on the appreciation that occurred before the transfer as well as after. Keep this in mind if you plan to sell property you receive as part of a divorce settlement.

Most divorce situations involve complex financial decisions that will impact your future financial security. For this reason, it's wise to have a team of legal and financial advisors, including CPAs, who can help to protect your interests.

Payday Golf Scramble set — The monthly Payday Golf Scramble is today at the Follow Me Golf Course.

The tournament format is a four-ball golf scramble.

The event is open to all golfers and costs $15 for course members, $21 for active duty staff sergeants and below, $25 for other eligible patrons. Entry fee includes carts.

The event is limited to the first 120 paid entrants.

For more information, call 687-1940.

Charity softball game set — A charity softball game between the sergeants majors and colonels is scheduled for 7 p.m. Oct. 18 on Gowdy Field.

Donations of $5 will be accepted for admission to the game.

Proceeds for the game will go towards buying new toys which will be donated to Santa's Castle.

For more information, call Sgt. Maj. Arthur VanAllen at 545-1500 or Sgt. Maj. Felix McNair at 545-6333.

NIA sponsors 10-kilometer run — The Audie Murphy Chapter of the National Infantryman's Association is sponsoring a 10-kilometer run at Fort Stewart Sept. 13. The race begins at 7:30 a.m. in front of Newman Gym located at Gulick Avenue and West Sixth Street.

The race is open to all military and civilian personnel and offers runners 14 and older a chance to participate in one of nine different age categories.

Runners can pre-register by calling (912) 767-4207. Pre-registration fee is $10 with race day registration costing $12. Registration occurs in front of Newman Gymnasium from 6 to 7 a.m. Sept. 13.

The first 500 runners registering receive an official 10K Run T-shirt and waterbottle featuring Rocky, the Marne Dog.

For more information, call 912-767-4207.

Army 10-mile qualifier set — Fort Benning conducts its Army 10-mile qualifier Sept. 7 beginning at 7:30 a.m. at the Santiago Fitness Center on Sand Hill.

All runners can attend; however, only the top active-duty finishers represent the post at the Army 10-miler Oct. 12 in Washington D.C.

Unit teams are encouraged to participate to find the best teams on post. Teams can be all male, all female or mixed.

Army service rifle shooters win big at Nationals

By David L. McMormack
U.S. Marksmanship Unit

CAMP PERRY, Ohio — One week after winning the Interservice Rifle Championships at Quantico, Va., members of the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit's Service Rifle Team again proved their mettle as they went head-to-head with more than 1,000 of America's best military and civilian competitive high-powered rifle shooters at the National Trophy Rifle Matches during the 1997 National Matches Aug. 4 to 9.

After the smoke cleared and all scores were tallied, the Army team, competing with accurized M-16A2 rifles, set a new national record in the National Trophy Team Rifle match. The Army team also won the National Trophy Infantry Team and Enlisted Men's Trophy Team match, the National Trophy Individual Rifle matches and captured several other individual trophy matches including Barry L. Coleman winning the prestigious National Service Rifle Championship.

David L. McMormack

U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit shooter Barry L. Coleman shows his winning form. Coleman won the National Service Rifle Championship at the Interservice Rifle Championships at Quantico, Va.

"The National Matches are the most important competition for service rifle shooters," U.S. Army shooter Coleman said. "The matches are held once a year and determine who the best of the best are in America."

Coleman, shooting the M-16A2, beat Marine Nelson Ocasio, who was shooting an M-14, by 3 points. USAMU's Grant L. Singley, last year's National Service Rifle Champion, came in third, 2 points behind Ocasio.

"I didn't know I was going to win," Coleman said. "I just shot day-to-day and didn't let the pressure get to me."

Coleman did not realize he won the match until Singley came over to congratulate him, minutes after they finished shooting the match.

"He (Singley) said 'You won it!' and I said 'No way,' at first I could not believe it," Coleman said.

Coleman has been shooting with the USAMU since 1993, previously shooting with the Illionois Hard Dogs, a junior rifle team.

"I kept telling myself all these years that someday I'd do it," Coleman said. "The camaraderie of the Service Rifle Team carried me through; they are the best bunch of guys I've ever been around. I'd like to thank the team and the Marksmanship Unit for their support."

Coleman said he also owes his victory to the confidence he had in his coaches and the outstanding work of the USAMU gunsmiths who accurized the M-16A2 he shot.

"It is the most accurate weapon I have ever shot," Coleman said. "We took a service weapon that did not shoot very well and turned it into a superior match rifle. This should give a lot of confidence to the Infantrymen in the field."

"We are very proud of Barry," Service Rifle Team coach Frank Briggs said. "He is a fabulous shooter and he worked very hard. I told him in February that this was going to be his year; I had the same feeling the year before about Singley."

In the team events, USAMU fielded two teams, "Team Remily" and "Team Jones," named after team coaches Richard M. Remily and Kenneth M. Jones Jr. In addition to the coach, each team consisted of a team captain and six firing members.

Runners, shooters compete in 1997 Summer Biathlon

By John W. Peeler
Special to the Bayonet©

More than 40 competitors gathered at English Range Sunday to test their endurance and shooting skills during the 1997 Summer Biathlon.

The competition kicked off with shooters attending a shooting safety class conducted at the range.

The competition, conducted in 10-year age groupings, consisted of running a total of five kilometers (approximately three miles) with two competitors starting every two minutes. This portion of the course tested the competiors endurance and ability to navigate an all-terrain course.

After the first installment of the running portion of the course, competitors engaged five targets in the prone position. Competitors then faced another running course and firing at five targets from the standing position.

When all was said and done, point totals were tallied and the winners announced.

Winners at the competition were:

Overal Men's Winners

1, Mamrin King, Fort Benning, 3 prone -2 standing, 17:40

2, Jeffrey Bernabe, Fort Benning, 4 prone -2 standing, 18:05

3, Dennis Bremser, Maxwell AFB, Ala., 4 prone -2 standing, 18:40

Overall Women's Winners:

1, Teresa Wenzel, College Station, Texas, 5 prone - 2 standing, 24:20

2, Alesa Ryals, Fort Deposit, Ala., 3 prone- 1 standing, 24:43

3, Suzanne Broussard, Woodstock, Ga., 3 prone - 1 standing, 25:32

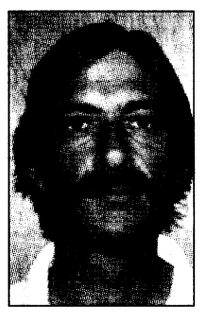
Buick Challenge to admit Soldiers free Oct. 3

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Callaway Gardens is gearing up to host the Buick Challenge and Fort Benning is gearing up to send Soldiers, family members, retirees and Department of the Army civilians there for free on Military Appreciation Day Oct. 3.

The Buick Challenge is one of the Professional Golf Association's premier fall events and annually features such top players as Larry Mize, Fred Couples, Fred Funk and Fuzzy Zoeller. Last year Greg Norman played and John Daly has been a regular at the tournament.



This will be the third year that Callaway Gardens and the Buick Challenge played host to the military. Last year the entire park was officially opened to this contingent so those who had seen enough golf could play on the Robin Lake Beach, or visit such other sites as the Butterfly Center.

Military Appreciation Day is sponsored by the Association of the United States Army and Fort Benning. Once again, AUSA plans to hold a drawing at the gardens to give away such gifts as savings bonds, bicycles and television sets.

Fort Benning will once again be providing bus transportation to Callaway for those who need a ride. Units are also planning to hold cookouts at the park and special events on the beach.

Army defends Armed Forces softball title

By Staff Sgt. Eric D. Beasley
Special to the American Forces Press Service

EGLIN AIR FORCE BASE, Fla. — The Army women's softball team repeated as the armed forces champions — for the 12th straight time — at the interservice tournament July 29-31.

The triple-round-robin contest matched the services in a head-to-head three-game series. Army finished 8-1. Air Force finished 6-3 for second place. Marines and Navy finished with 2-7 records, but the Marines earned third because they beat Navy twice.

The Army women came from behind with a seventh inning homer to beat Air Force to cap off Day 1, but they lost to Navy 6-4.

"Our victory over the Army was not an upset," Navy Coach Kent Harris said. "We practiced hard and were ready. To beat them, you have to play a near-perfect game for seven innings, and that's what we did. We didn't do anything different strategy wise. Everything just came together in that game for us. On any given day, any team at this level can beat any other team."

The setback rejuvenated Army, which punished the Air Force the next day 11-1. As the final day of play unfolded, Air Force shared its pain by drubbing both the Navy and Marines 15-3 in back-to-back games. Army's record, however, locked up the championship prior to the final game against Air Force.

With nothing but pride at stake in the final game, Air Force put the squeeze on early.

Air Force jumped out to a 11-0 lead after three innings. Air Force. Linda Hurry, Wendy Hansen, Cheryl Trapnell and Laura Stickle were major contributors.

Mary Clark started scoring for the Army in the fourth by sending a line drive up the middle to score Carolyn Ford. Quintina Donald added two RBIs as Army inched up on Air Force, closing to 11-7.

In the fifth, Ford stroked a double to the fence and later scored off a sacrifice fly, bringing Army to within two at 11-9. The teams each scored a run in the sixth.

With two outs, a runner on second and Ford at the plate, Air Force decided to pitch to Ford despite her tournament record of five homers and 14 RBIs. She upped those statistics with a two-run homer off the scoreboard, giving Army the lead for the first time in the game at 13-12.

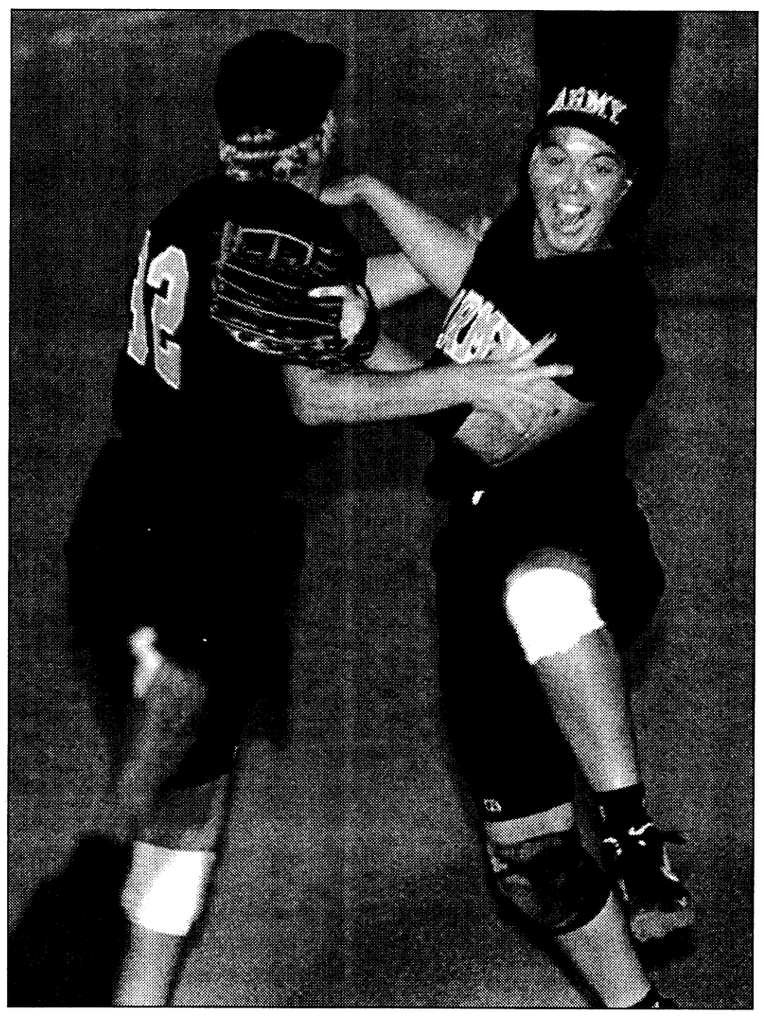
"My goal is not to hit home runs," Ford said later. "I go out to knock the cover off the ball. Now where it lands is where it lands, but I'm not looking for the home run."

The Air Force failed to simply go away. Base hits by Staff Sgt. Sue Saulnner and Hurry put the go-ahead run on base. Staff Sgt. Trisha Luiken's sacrifice fly advanced the runners to second and third with two outs, but another pop-up permanently grounded the Air Force 13-12.

"The Army has been a thorn in my side for a long time," said 14-year tournament veteran Air Force Cheryl Trapnell. "I've continued to come back because of my love of the game and the camaraderie between all of us. True, we focus on each team individually, but I was on the last Air Force team that won, and that was 1983. So it is a little more personal with me."

Eighteen players from the tournament were selected to attend the Armed Forces Women's Softball Training Camp here. Army led the way with seven all stars. Air Force followed with five, while Marines and Navy each contributed three.

Fifteen of the 18 advanced to the national championships in Kingman, Ariz., Aug. 15-17, as the All-Armed Forces Team. Army's Gerald Corcoran is the coach.



Soldiers selected were: Ford, Camp Stanley, Korea; Donald, Fort Shafter, Hawaii; Linda Delacruz, Fort Hood, Texas; Pamela Smith, Fort Campbell, Ky.; Mary King-Espinal, Fort Wainwright, Alaska; Jaymee Ross, Washington, D.C.; and Stacey Green, Fort Jackson, S.C.

Air Force members were: Trapnell, Hurlburt Field, Fla.; Stickle, Wright-Patterson Air Force Base, Ohio; Lori Doughty, Keesler Air Force Base, Miss.; Amy Dubose, McConnell Air Force Base, Kan.; and Wanda Graham, Spangdahlem Air Base, Germany.

Navy members selected were: Tami-Purcell Cowls, Keflavik, Iceland; Carrie Finch, Barbers Point, Hawaii; and Nicole Cote, San Diego.

Marines selected were: Reshanda Jennings, Albany, Ga.; Stephanie Minix, Okinawa, Japan; and Sarah Abigando, Quantico Va,

National Trophy Team Rifle Match, Army Team Remily won the prestigious National Trophy breaking the U.S. Marine Corps' 1996 record by 1 point. In addition to the trophy, Gold Medals were awarded to each of the team members.

"I think our team this year is not only the best competing team, the best shooting team and the best acting team on the firing line," Remily said, "but, they are overall the best group of Soldier-athletes I've had the pleasure to have worked with."

Not to be outdone, Army Team Jones also won Gold Medals during the National Trophy Infantry Team Rifle match by outshooting 48 teams with a 46 point lead over the second-place team.

Speaking on behalf of both Army teams, Jones said, "Our teams' performance this year has been outstanding. They have done everything we've asked them to do and have done well."

Jones also attributed the Army's ability to win on the field of competition to the quality of the Soldier-athletes and equipment support.

"We are privileged to have the highest quality of shooters," he said, "and the equipment support we've received from USAMU gunsmiths is second to none."

During the National Trophy Individual Rifle match, USAMU service rifle shooter Kevin B. McMahon outshot 1,208 individual competitors and captured the coveted Daniel Boone Trophy.

McMahon, who attributes his winnings to the quality of training and equipment support he received at USAMU, also cited the significance of the National Matches.

"The National Matches are the most prestigious event and the hightest level of competition that service rifle shooters can compete in," he said. "They've been going on for about 120 years."

In addition to winning the trophy, a Gold Medal and being named the 1997 National Champion, McMahon also earned the prestigious national titles of High Infantryman and High U.S. Army Competitor.

Other highlights during the National Trophy Rifle Matches included McMahon winning the 25th Infantry Division, Association of the U.S. Army and the Forces Command trophies while Coleman captured the Rattlesnake and Pershing trophies.

McMahon also won the 25th Infantry Division, Association of the U.S. Army and the Forces Command trophies while Coleman captured the Erdman, Rattlesnake and Pershing trophies and the Navy Cup. Tobie L. Tomlinson won the Crescent Cup and Scott Trophy in the Service Rifle Class, Rand D. Bentson won the Coast Guard Trophy and Christopher S. Hatcher won the Members Trophy.

The USAMU team, coached by Scott A. Boyd, captured the Roumanian Trophy, won for the first time by shooting the M-16A2 from the 1,000-yard line; the USAMU team, coached by Carl O. Dooley, won the Roumanian Trophy in the Any Rifle Category.

advantage oracle

The information age, just like the technologies that drive it, know no boundries-virtual, geographic, creative or otherwise. It is this type of "large scale" thinking that power Oracle people. We invite you to join the team that defines one of the largest and most recognized providers of enterprise-wide systems and productivity solutions in the world. The challenges are especially important with Oracle Consulting Services, where thinking large is business as usual. We are looking for consultants in Ohio, Michigan, Minnesota, Illinois & Indiana.

IT CONSULTANTS

... with experience in one or more of the following:
- ORACLE RDBMS: including database administration, replication TextServer, data warehousing and Express, project management and hardware/software architecture design.
- Data Warehousing, OLAP
- ORACLE development tools including Designer/2000, Developer/2000 (Oracle Forms & Reports)
- ORACLE CASE & other enterprise methodologies
- Sherpa PDM or Metaphase
- Internet/Intranet & WWW technologies
- ORACLE WebServer, HTML, Java, C++, object-oriented design and development
- PL/SQL, SQL*Plus, SQL*Net, SQL*Loader, PRO*C, PRO*Ada
- Rdb and Rally

(Successful candidates will have 3 or more years of functional and/or technical experience and a willingness to travel. A technical Bachelor's degree is preferred, as is previous consulting experience).

Our professionals enjoy a generous compensation and benefits program that includes an aggressive, performance-driven bonus plan. For consideration, forward your resume to: Ashley Holland, Oracle Corporation, 520 W. Summit Hill Dr., 10th Floor, Knoxville, TN 37902. Fax: 423-541-5157 . Email: a.h.resume@us.oracle.com

3rd ID returns from NTC

The 3rd Infantry Division (Mechanized) returns from a successful rotation at the National Training Center at Fort Irwin, Calif.

Above, family members hold signs welcoming back their loved ones as they await their arrival Aug. 29 at Lawson Army Airfield.

The Infantry Band and Commanding General Maj. Gen. Carl F. Ernst were among those gathered at the Kelley Hill Recreation Center to welcome home the first Soldiers returning to Fort Benning who were among the nearly 3,000 Soldiers who deployed to the desert.

Leadership Fort Benning

Incoming post leaders learn about Columbus, Phenix City

By Spc. Lisa M. Hibbert
Bayonet staff writer

Fort Benning commanders and sergeants major deployed to Columbus and Phenix City for a tour of the community Aug. 28.

A new event, "Leadership Fort Benning" was designed to familiarize Fort Benning's new leadership with the surrounding community said Chuck Walls, garrison executive officer.

"This tour was a great idea," said Command Sgt. Maj. James Boyett, 11th Infantry Regiment's sergeant major. "It was very informative and I was able to see a lot of the community that I have never seen before. I think it's important that, as leaders, you become familiar with the places your Soldiers live and shop."

Command Sgt. Maj. Mary Lebley, 30th Adjutant General Reception Battalion sergeant major agreed.

"I thought it was a very good tour that provided a lot of helpful information," Lebley said.

What kind of information did these leaders receive on this tour? The 50 member detachment received personal guided tours that provided the military leaders with information about the tricommunity area.

The day started with a breakfast with Fort Benning's Commanding General, Maj. Gen. Carl F. Ernst. From there, the group boarded buses and headed for the Greater Columbus Chamber of Commerce.

Biff Hadden, vice president of military affairs and commercial development at the Chamber of Commerce and Jim Irvin, a member of the Columbus Chamber of Commerce's military affairs committee, took the Soldiers on a whirlwind tour of Columbus.

The leaders were shown the Columbus historic district, the Columbus Iron Works Convention and Trade Center, and the Coca-Cola Space Challenger Center while en route to the government center where the city leaders awaited their arrival.

From there, the group visited the Downtown Magnet School, dined at the River Club, toured the Springer Opera House and the Columbus Museum before crossing over to Alabama.

After meeting with the Phenix City mayor and city officials , the group toured and attended orientations at South Commons softball Park and Oxbow Meadows Environmental Park.

The day concluded where it began, at the Fort Benning Officer's Club where the group was welcomed back by Walls.

"I am just really pleased with the way the tour went," Walls said. "and it's something we definitely want to do again. It is so important that the post's leadership visit the community because more than 50 percent of our Soldiers live outside of Fort Benning's gate and they need to know how their Soldiers live.

"This is all apart of helping the leaders take better care of their Soldiers," Walls said.

New FM 22-100 strives for excellence

By Jim Caldwell
TRADOC News Service

FORT LEAVENWORTH, Kan. — Striving for excellence in leadership is just as important as becoming proficient in warfighting doctrine and battlefield tactics.

"Excellence means doing things for the right reasons all the time, whether you're being watched or not," said Lt. Col. Cranson Butler, co-author of the new Field Manual 22-100, Army Leadership.

Leadership excellence is part of an extended discussion in the manual about the ideal character desired in Soldiers and Army civilian employees.

People come into the Army with different types of character, but the idea is that you sign up and subscribe to the Army values, Butler said.

Butler said that the version of FM 22-100 to be replaced also discusses the importance of character in leaders, but the topic was considered to be important enough to warrant greater emphasis in the new version.

Butler and co-author Lt. Col. Tim Challans are assigned to the Center for Army Leadership (CAL) at Fort Leavenworth.

They emphasize that the expanded discussion is not a result of recent sexual misconduct incidents in the Army and accusations of misconduct in other branches of the service.

The character development initiative began years before these incidents, Challans said. The Army value of respect, which forbids any sexual misconduct or sexual harassment, was in the works back at the beginning of the project.

The revised manual focuses on character because Army leaders have a tremendous moral

OCS graduates relieve past at 50 yr reunion

By Sgt. Marc G. Turchin
Bayonet staff writer

It was 50 years ago last March when 176 men gathered at Fort Benning for training as Officer Candidates. With World War II over, the need for officers was diminishing. But still, Soldiers were being sent here for training.

At the the end of the cycle, only 38 Soldiers successfully completed the course. This is believed to be the smallest class to graduate the Officer Candidate School (OCS) and had the smallest percentage of graduates.

Eight of those 38 returned to post Aug. 27 to see the post and tour the facilities used by today's candidates.

Their day began with a briefing about Fort Benning given by Russ Eno, editor of the Infantry Magazine. Following that, the veterans and their families moved to the OCS area where they watched and listened to what the school is doing today.

Throughout the briefing, given by the battalion executive officer Capt. Patrick Tennis, questions were asked pertaining to almost all facets of OCS training.

"What is the attrition rate," questioned one OCS graduate."

"It's about 10 percent now, but the average was around 50 percent back then," Tennis replied.

As the briefing went on, subjects such as demographics, the battalion's Mission Essential Task Training List (METL) and the school's admittance requirements were discussed.

No matter the subjects or who was speaking, the one common denominator was all were OCS graduates. This is what brought them here.

"It's a great opportunity to meet once again," said retired Brig. Gen. James Young. "There's a lot of memories that go along with the gentlemen in this room."

Young, who is a member of the OCS Hall of Fame, an elite club of graduates who reach at least the rank of colonel, went on to hold the highest position in his field — chief of the Medical Service Corps. He said he learned things at the school that helped him further his career.

"We learned the fundamentals of leadership and how to be responsible for others," Young said. "Accountability is paramount. There's a sense of personal discipline one takes from this experience."

He also said the school was quite demanding.

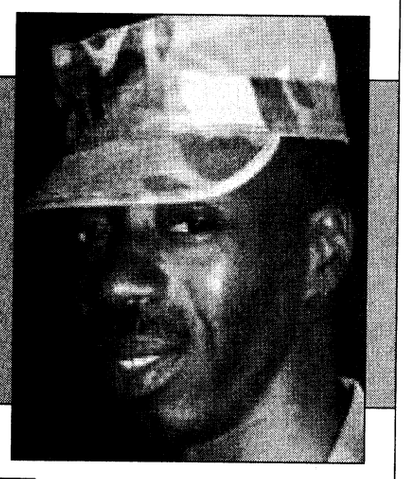
"It was physically tough," he said. "It was easy to quit, but it was harder to keep going."

No matter the hardships the candidates are put through, either back then or today, Young said, you can pick out an OCS graduate from other officers.

Young said during his military career he had to chance to pick junior officers for certain positions. He said if he could, he would try and pick OCS graduates.

"No question," Young said. "I could pick out OCS graduates among officers just by watching their work ethic.

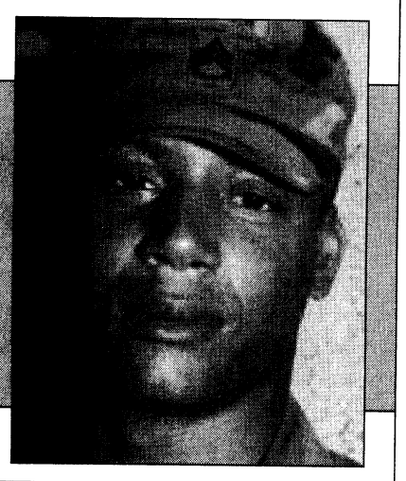
"The OCS graduates displayed the greater ability to interact with troops and handle leadership."



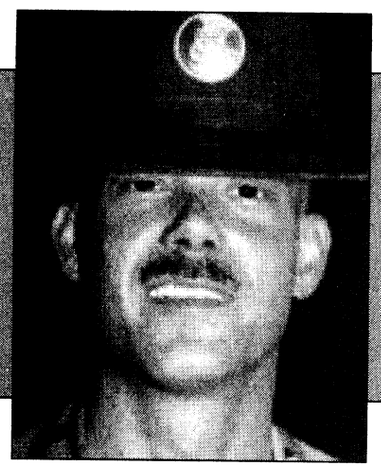
OCS will conduct this year's OCS Hall of Fame ceremony Sept. 12 at 11 a.m. inside Infantry Hall's Marshall Auditorium. Approximately 70 graduates are expected to be inducted. A reception is scheduled to follow the ceremony in Wigle Hall.

VARIOUS VOICES

How far should the media be allowed to go in pursuit of a photo?



Desonuia Wise, family member — "I think chasing a person down to take a photo is incredibly disrespectful. A celebrity is still entitled to privacy."

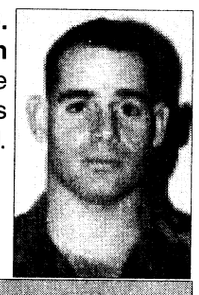


Chief Warrant Officer 3 Darrell Shelby, Company B, 203rd Forward Support Battalion, 3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division (Mechanized) — "I don't think they should be allowed to pursue people or take photos without consent."

Margrit Miller, family member — "The media should not chase people. What happened to Princess Diana shouldn't have happened. It was wrong."

Staff Sgt. Burundi Davis, U.S. Army Sniper School — "I think there should be certain boundaries for the media. High speed chases are unsafe and the paparazzi shouldn't be allowed to take private photos."

Sgt. 1st Class Robert Davis, Company E, 1st Battalion, 19th Infantry Regiment — "The media should be allowed to go to the point where they do not intrude on someone's privacy."



Shantell Miller, family member — "If people don't want their pictures taken, the media should leave them alone."

Photographers turned killers need to be stopped

By Sgt. Marc G. Turchin
Bayonet staff writer

Sgt. Marc G. Turchin believes the paparazzi is out of control.

commentary

As we all know by now, Princess Diana was killed in an ugly car accident along with her boyfriend and her chauffeur. Her bodyguard is still alive, but is in no condition to talk to the police or reporters about the accident that nearly took his life also.

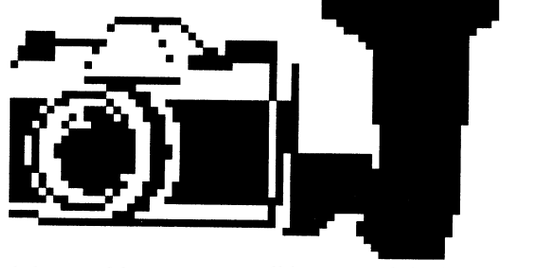
Such is the life of celebrities. There have been many accidental deaths for celebrities. James Dean, Buddy Holly, Sam Stevie Ray Vaughn are just a few. But this most recen tragedy, in my opinion, is no accident.

Life as a celebrity is like no other. They are constantly hounded by the press. The paparazzi do this for a living. Their only mission as a photographer is to get as many photos of celebrities as possible. These photos sell for thousand of dollars, some for millions.

Some people say the celebrities bring it on themselves.

The movie stars, the famous musicians, the rich and the royal love to be in the limelight. They expect whenever they go somewhere all cameras should be on them. It's true, sometimes when celebrities go places, their agent or public relations person calls and alerts the media. But the purpose is often done so the celebrity can be seen opening a restaurant or speaking on behalf of a cause.

Celebrities have tried to fight back.



John F. Kennedy Jr. tried to reason with them. Alec Baldwin, Woody Harrelson and Sean Penn assaulted them. George Clooney, Tom Cruise and countless others tried to go through the court system to get injunctions against them. Cruise said he was chased by the paparazzi in the same tunnel where the accident occurred. Nothing worked to stop these jerks from hounding these people so far.

The paparazzi's tricks and harassment have finally met with a drastic outcome.

Yes, the car Diana was traveling in was doing between 60 and 121 miles per hour. Yes, the person driving reportedly had been drinking and no, Diana and her boyfriend were not wearing their seat belts.

But all of that doesn't seem to weigh as much on my mind as for the reason they were speeding. Or in this case, escaping.

Some people say the paparazzi do what they do because the public need and want to know about the celebrities forced this situation.

They say this horrible accident happened because there is a need to know what these high profile people do in their spare time, who they are with or without, what they wear when walking in the confines of their home and any other tidbit of information. So it's the public's fault, right?

Who's fault is it? I place 90 percent of the blame on the paparazzi. The other 10 percent of blame goes to Diana and her entourage.

I think a law needs to be passed not allowing photos of anyone, not just anyone famous, to be taken without consent of that 'son. I take photos for a living and I understand the problems that would go along with this law, but every person is entitled to privacy.

The line has to be drawn somewhere.

There needs to be a line stating what is sworthy and what is not. Someone walking ıd the house with a newborn baby, as ɔnna was photographed doing, to me, is not worthy.

at's just it. That type of picture has become worthy. Why is it so important for readers iewers to see this picture? Is it any different ny other person holding a newborn and walking around the home? Madonna and any other star is entitled to privacy. Think of your own home being watched 24 hours a day, seven days a week. Would you appreciate it? I think not.

Just because they work in the public's eye, doesn't mean their work must follow them home. Celebrities work hard just like any of us. No one should be forced to take their work home. That includes royalty and the late Princess of Wales.

But, she did get in a car driven by someone who had too much to drink. She and everyone else in the car allowed this intoxicated person to speed through Paris and they chose not to wear their seatbelts. The question: if they weren't being harassed by the paparazzi, would they have been speeding to escape having their picture taken?

In my mind, human life is the richest and most sacred asset we have. Should we be so caught up in what everyone else is doing, wearing or saying? I think it boils down to what we care about.

Yes, the stars show us a life of money and fantasy by their profession. Yes, they may have more money than us and more glitter because of what they do. Yes, we idolize them when we see them on the big screen or watch as they attend all the best parties and mingle with our heroes. But underneath their characters, their titles and the showmanship is a person. And that person is entitled to the same things as us common folk — privacy and the pursuit of happiness.

AUSA raffling automobile at this month's fish fry

By Spc. Clyde Snively
Bayonet columnist

Did you know the Association of the U.S. Army right here at Fort Benning is giving away a car or truck — your choice?

All you've got to do is buy a ticket. And get this. The tickets are only a buck a piece.

And the chances of winning, with just one ticket are pretty darn good. Naturally it depends on how many tickets are sold, but figure, at the most, 75,000 tickets. You buy one, it's one chance in 75,000. Two and you double your chances. One chance in 37,000. Is that the way it works? I don't know, I don't do math, that's why I'm a journalist.

But I do recognize a good deal when it hits me between the eyes, so if you're into buying lottery tickets and are on a fixed budget, transfer your lottery ticket money to the raffle ticket account, at least for one week and who knows, you may be the winner.

What can you win? Well Mike Collins Nissan has an X-Cab pickup truck in the pot, Saturn of Columbus has put up an SC-1 Coupe; Bill Heard Chevrolet's vehicle is an S-10 pickup X-cab; Freeway Ford is in with an Escort; and Jay Toyota's vehicle is a Tacoma pickup.

Jay Mazda is providing an SE5 pickup while Carl Gregory Dodge and Carl Gregory Hyundai have a Dakota Sport pickup and an Elantra as possible prizes, with Gateway Isuzu in with its X-cab pickup.

The Izuzu will be on display at Kelley Hill next week and at the Main Mall this weekend.

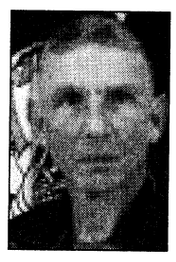
Each one of these vehicles is worth at least a cool $15,000. Additionally, AUSA will pay tax and title before they hand over the keys, so if you're the lucky one (it'll either be you or me) you drive off with a brand new vehicle with just a few concerns — don't speed and don't forget to register it.

So now you're wondering where you can get one of these highly desirable raffle tickets. A crew of AUSA volunteers mans a table at the Main Mall each weekend. Your unit's sergeant major has tickets and the Public Affairs Office has them.

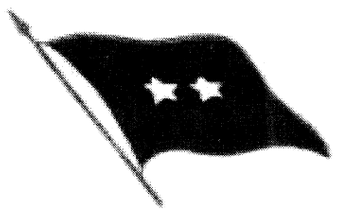
Man, I can just see me driving off behind the wheel of a brand new vehicle. I have never had a new car or truck. The Lemon Lot is where I do my car shopping and it ain't always been too successful.

If the vehicle starts, makes it around the block a couple of times, I think I've got me something. But before I know it, I'm adding a battery here, brakes there, a new muffler, maybe a fuel pump as I watch the money fly out of my wallet.

But man, a new vehicle with a WARRANTY. Oh yes, I want to win.



I also plan to see my sergeant major so I can buy a fish fry ticket — all the fish you can eat for $10 and fine liquid refreshment — for the big drawing on Sept. 26. I plan to be there when they draw my name. I plan to drive that sucka away from Uchee Creek. As for my old huppmobile — push it into the river. It'll make a good reef for the local fish.



And oh by the way, in case you're curious about what AUSA plans to do with all that money — that's the money they use to send Soldiers to the AUSA national convention in Washington in October. The more money they raise, the more Soldiers go to Washington.

The money is also used for sponsoring Soldier events on post — everything from plaques for top graduates, to dress blue uniforms for the Drill Sergeant of the Year.

See you at the fish fry.

CG thanks post for safe holiday

Commanders, leaders and Soldiers — taking care of Soldiers is what we're all about and when we get through a major four-day weekend without a major mishap, then we reap the benefits from all the hard work and effort we put into our safety program.

You did a bang up job of educating our Soldiers to the dangers of a four-day holiday.

Not one of our soldiers or family members was involved in a serious accident. This accident-free weekend did not just happen. It took a lot of effort on the part of commanders and leaders — effort at checking the safety of vehicles and effort at ensuring our Soldiers knew the pitfalls of the open road, of our waterways, and even of the back yard. When they left here Thursday, they were in tune with safety.

Commanders, leaders, you are commended for putting together an outstanding safety program. Soldiers, you are commended for executing the program to perfection.

But this is not the time to rest on our laurels.

We can never let down our guard. Remain vigilant and stay safe.

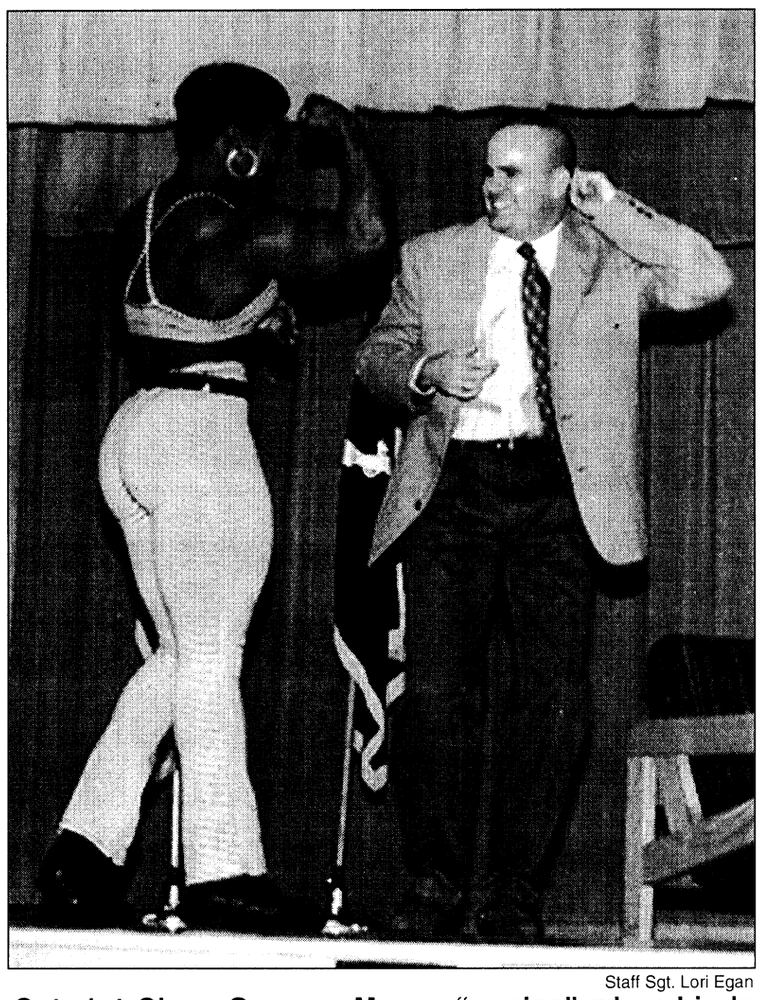
Post observes Women's Equality

By Staff Sgt. Lori Egan
Bayonet staff writer

"Kinder, Kuche, Kirche" is a German phrase for the proper places women could be in German society. With children, in the kitchen or at church — women have come a long way.

Women's roles in society continue to change as a skit presented by Infantry Training Brigade cadre and several local professional women demonstrated during the Fort Benning Women's Equality Program, "We're Still here and Striving " Aug. 22 at the Sand Hill Recreation Center.



Lt. Col. Nancy Johnson, commander of the 30th Adjutant General (Reception) Battalion, Infantry Training Brigade, was the guest speaker for the program. She said that women's equality is directly related to society's threshold of tolerance and acceptability.

"In less than than 30 years, the Army moved women from a status that might be described as second class citizens to the current point of total equality in terms of pay, professional development and opportunity," she said.

"There are those who say we have not gone far enough. In some circles there is criticism of the direct combat exclusion policy, which bars women from holding certain MOSs or being assigned to specific units. To those critics, I say that perhaps we as a society based on our culture and perspective are not ready to send America's daughters into combat with our enemies' sons."

Women's Equality Day celebrates the 77th anniversary of the 19th amendment, which gives women the right to vote.

"The right to vote is a precious privilege, which should not be taken lightly," said Sgt. 1st Class Terry Thomas, 11th Infantry Regiment Equal Opportunity advisor. "Women's Equality Day is an excellent opportunity for Soldiers and civilians at Fort Benning to recognize the continuing effort toward women's equality and equality for all Americans."

FM 22-100: Focuses on ethics

responsibility to the people they lead and to the American people they serve.

The ethical focus in the emerging doctrine is on taking care of people and the moral implications of deadly force, which are the heart of military ethics, he said.

In March 1995, then Army Chief of Staff Gen. Gordon R. Sullivan directed CAL to study existing leadership doctrine, and then to revise it so that it would have continued relevance into the 21st Century.

Gen. Sullivan had great vision and saw that, because of the advance in technology, we may find units separated by greater distances on the battlefield, Butler said.

"Leadership, despite all of this great technology, still remains the same — influencing and motivating people to get a job done," Butler said. "What we've done is taken existing leadership doctrine and looked into how we could improve it. Students of leadership will readily see the parts that are the same and the parts that are different."

The new manual will consolidate five current manuals and one Department of the Army pamphlet on various aspects and levels of leadership.

Including those publications will not significantly increase the size of the manual.

He said the genesis of current leadership doctrine was an Army pamphlet titled Leadership printed in 1948. The first FM 22-100 was created in 1951. There have been several updates since, with the latest done in 1990.

The draft of the new version has been reviewed throughout the Army.

"We are currently making revisions to bring the leadership doctrine into line with both the comments from the Army-wide staffing and the guidance from our strategic leaders," Butler said.

When the staffing process is completed, changes will be incorporated in time to meet a target 1998 publication.

The manual can be downloaded from ftp://160.149.109.31/cal/idd. Butler recommends using Microsoft Internet Explorer to read or download the document.

Suggestions may be e-mailed to /ddn (butlerc@leav.emh.army.mil).

"It's a Total Army leadership doctrine that applies to civilian as well as military people," Butler said. "It is for both active component and reserve component. And for the first time, Army leadership doctrine also includes Department of the Army civilian employees."

Hispanic American Heritage activities set

The Fort Benning Equal Opportunity Office is planning a Hispanic American Heritage luncheon at 11 a.m. Sept. 16 at the Officers' Club.

Command Sgt. Maj. Ricardo F. Layne from the School of the Americas will speak.

The menu for the luncheon is roast pork, yellow rice with gondulas and chicken, tossed salad, dinner rolls, tropical fruit and lemonade.

Tickets for the luncheon cost $7 and are available from an Equal Opportunity advisor or from the Equal Opportunity Office.

For more information, call Sgt. 1st. Class Terry Thomas at 545-3196 or 545-6665.

The opening ceremony for an art exhibit, sponsored by the Hispanic Employment Program committee, will be 11 a.m. Oct. 8 at the School of the Americas.

German SGM heading back to homeland

By Sgt. Marc G. Turchin
Bayonet staff writer

Being a member of the armed forces may require you to serve time overseas. You may not speak the native tongue, but at least in most cases you'll serve on a U.S. installation and can feel comfortable on post.

What if you had to serve in a foreign land and on another country's installation?

That's what Sgt. Maj. Karlheinz Nikolaus has been doing at Fort Benning since June 1992. Nikolaus is a member of the German army and has worked in its liaison office and with Fort Benning's Training and Doctrine Command's System Manager Soldier (TSM-Soldier).

Nikolaus, who's wife Claudia spent the entire time here with him, said the people had a big impact on him and his wife.

"I'll probably miss a bunch of people the most, " he said. "The people I've met here have become almost family."

Before arriving in the U.S., Nikolaus said he received a briefing about the Fort Benning area and the post.

"The one thing they told us was it was going to be hot," he said.

When the Nikolaus' first arrived here, they moved into a new house. The first Saturday morning, Nikolaus decided to cut the lawn. But after only an hour of work, he said the Georgia weather wore him out.

"I was totally smoked," he said. "It was like getting hit with a sledgehamer. The humidity was quite difficult to get used to."

But once he and his wife did get more comfortable, Nikolaus set out to do his job, he said. Part of his job included setting up the German Efficiency Badge Competition, a sort of olympic competition, for the first time. According to Nikolaus, this is one of the things he is most proud of.

"It was always fun for the troops," Nikolaus said. "It compares to the American Expert Infantrymans' Badge." But this was only one of many things Nikolaus was responsible for.

According to Col. Wolfgang Mettler, German liaison officer, Nikolaus set up visits here and in Germany, answered questions about the U.S. Army and asked questions for the German army.

"He's a good worker," Mettler said. "He's self-sufficient and shows initiative. He's the kind of Soldier who doesn't need to be pushed every day. He can look around and estimate what we need."

It may be that type of work ethic that landed Nikolaus's next job — working with combat development at the German Infantry School in Hammelburg, Germany.

Nikolaus will take back to his homeland the experience of working with the TSM-Soldier and the Land Warrior project and he will continue some of the teaching that has already begun in Germany.

"We have not come as far with the digital Soldier in Germany," Nikolaus said. "But we are moving quickly in that direction."

He said one of the things he learned at Fort Benning was about electronics and Soldiers.

"I've learned a lot about what Soldiers can and cannot do with electronic devices," he said. "If you don't keep the Soldier's load (what he or she is carrying) under a certain limit, you're not going to do that Soldier any good. That is just one of many things I learned that I will take with me."

Another aspect of America he'll take back with him is the memories of the 37 states he and his wife visited while here. Nikolaus said they traveled as much as possible.

He said one of the aspects of American life that caught his attention was the fact that some people have no use for modern technology, while on the other hand, he has worked with highly technical equipment.

"This country is so diverse," he said. During one trip to Florida, he said he got hooked on scuba diving.

When he came back from the trip, he signed up for a local class and is now certified.

"It's a great sport and I've had a lot of fun with it," he said.

Nikolaus said he has had a lot of fun in the U.S. and offers this advice to his replacement.

"Keep your head up," he said. "Try and stay flexible and don't take the job so seriously. Keep smiling — there's nothing you can do about it when it gets rough."

Nikolaus is replaced by Sgt. Maj. Michael Knoell. Knoell and his wife Gabriela, arrived on Fort Benning last year. They recently had a newcomer to the family, their first son, Kevin, was born seven weeks ago on post.

The Nikolaus do plan on returning for vacations.

Jim Shield checks the fluoride level being injected into the Fort Benning water system.

DPW monitors Fort Benning water supply

Directorate of Public Works

Did you know that each soldier, family member and employee at Fort Benning uses an average of 250 gallons of water each day?

This is 6.7 million gallons of water. In the hot summer months this quantity equates to 411 gallons per person.

This water is used to cook, drink, bathe, water lawns, wash cars, operate various on-post wash facilities, and provide mix-up water for central energy plants and the list goes on and on. To hold this 6.7 million gallons of water, a garden hose would have to be stretched back and forth across the United States 10 times.

To get all of this water Fort Benning has its own water plant located on Marne Road. The water plant is operated by the Directorate of Public Works with 12 employees. These men work around the clock to ensure that we have adequate water 24 hours per day, 365 days per year.

The plant pumps water from the Upatoi Creek, takes out the impurities, filters, disinfects and pumps the water into large storage tanks ready for our use.

Gauges, meters, strip charts and control switches are necessary for a 24 hour per day operation to ensure that the correct quantity and quality of water is being processed.

The state of Georgia has very strict quality requirements, which requires state certified operators and continuous testing and monitoring. The state also checks and double checks to ensure that Fort Benning has the very best water quality. The water plant must send monthly, quarterly, semiannually and annual water analysis to the state. In addition the state makes frequent unannounced inspections of the plant to check the water quality and the plant operations. The plant always meets these state requirements and receives praise for its quality operation.

Another quality measure is that fluoride is added to the water before it leaves the plant. This helps protect teeth, saving millions of dollars in dental bills.

Once this water is processed at the water plant it is stored in 10 large water tanks, both above ground and below ground with a total capacity of 5.7 million gallons of water. The water is then piped to houses and barracks through 232 miles of underground pipe. For a comparison, this amount of pipe placed end to end would extend from Fort Benning to Mobile, Ala.

Some of this piping has been in use since the early 1940's and has developed a slight mineral (calcium and iron) build-up on the inside. When the system experiences exceptionally high water flows, some of the minerals may come off and slightly discolor the water. This presents no health hazard and can usually be quickly cleared up by the DPW flushing the discolored water out of the system.

"Each morning when we get up we take it for granted that when we turn the faucet on we will have good clean water and we do. But there is a lot of effort by our water plant employees and our maintenance employees to ensure that our water quality is dependable and of the utmost quality," said Glenn Todd, DPW customer relations specialist.

IOBC helps build Columbus homes

2nd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment

Company C, 2nd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment Class 5-97 spent a Saturday digging foundations for Habitat For Humanity.

As part of their Infantry Officer Basic Course (IOBC), the students are required to select a local community improvement project while at Fort Benning.

"By taking on this project, we can actually see the improvement in a neighborhood," said 2nd Lt. Eugene L. Martin, one of the IOBC students.

Habitat For Humanity is a program designed for community improvement.

According to Gordon McDonald, construction supervisor, it involves building homes for qualified, lower income families. Applicants must go through a screening process and must be selected for housing.

The future home owner then invests a minimum of 500 hours of "sweat equity" into their new home.

Mortgages for recipients are then kept below $300 per month. A less than one-percent foreclosure rate attests to the project's success.

Habitat for Humanity formed in Americus, Ga., in 1976 and is a Christian ministry dedicated to eliminating poverty housing worldwide, McDonald said.

"They build approximately 1,000 houses a month and are the second largest home builder in America," McDonald said. "Their efforts have helped to rebuild entire neighborhoods, section by section, brick by brick."

To offset the cost of labor, volunteers from all walks of life assist in the building.

Anyone interested in volunteering their time to better the Columbus-Fort Benning area is welcome to come out and help.

The framing of the three houses begins Sept. 12.

"It puts things in perspective for you — makes you appreciate what you have. It's definitely something I'm going to stay involved with," Martin said.

For more information, call Gordon McDonald at 577-1877 or 327-2616.

Women's Memorial seeks veterans

By Rudi Williams
American Forces Press Service

WASHINGTON — Wilma L. Vaught is perplexed, disappointed and baffled by the meager number of women, particularly those on active duty, who have registered with the Women's Memorial.

"We thought at least 350,000 women would register, but it doesn't look like we'll have that many," said Vaught, president of the Women in Military Service for America Memorial Foundation, Inc. With the Oct. 18 dedication day looming, only about 11,000 of more than 200,000 women on active duty have registered, she said.

Registration by women veterans is also disappointing, Vaught said. There are 1.2 million women veterans in the nation, according to the Department of Veterans Affairs. Only 117,000 have registered, most from the World War II era. More than 1.8 million women have served in the armed forces, starting with the American Revolution.

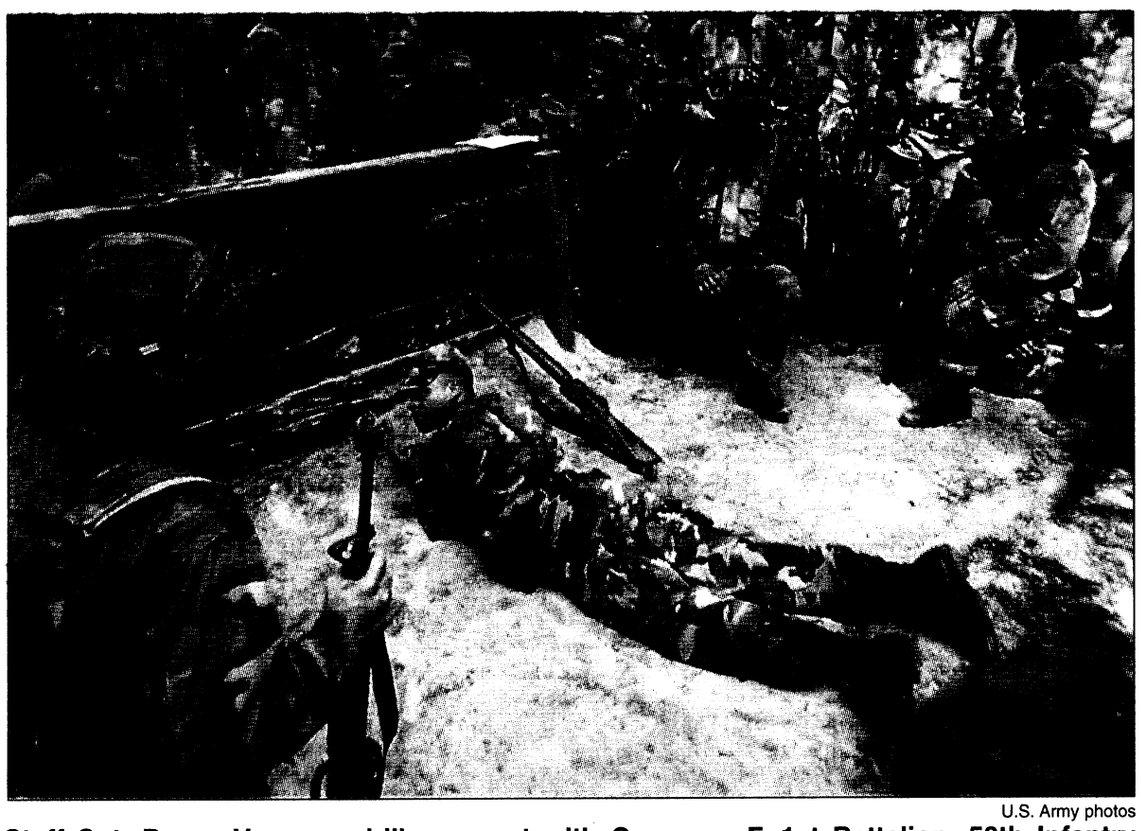
Registering is easy, said Vaught, a retired Air Force brigadier general. Eligible women — or their descendants or friends — can obtain registration forms by writing to:

The Women's Memorial
Dept. 560
Washington, DC 20042-0560.

For more information, call (800) 222-2294. Send e-mail requests for registration forms to wimsa@aol.com. The foundation's Internet web site address is: http://www.wimsa.org/pub/wimsa/.

The registration form requires the woman's name, date and place of birth, hometown, service branch, highest rank, military awards and decorations. The registrant also may include most memorable experiences and photographs.

Memorial officials request a $25 donation upon registration to help defray construction costs, but the tax-deductible donation isn't a prerequisite. The Women's Memorial is a Combined Federal Campaign beneficiary.



All women with military experience are eligible, including those on active or reserve component duty, veterans living and deceased and members of service auxiliaries (such as the Women's Auxiliary Army Corps during World War II and uniformed corps of the U.S. Public Health Service). Red Cross, USO and Special Service members who served overseas in direct support of the armed forces during conflicts are also eligible in the "We Also Served" category.

The memorial, at the gates of Arlington National Cemetery on the Virginia side of the Potomac River opposite the Lincoln Memorial, recognizes women who served in the armed forces. It documents their experiences and tells their stories of service, sacrifice and achievement, Vaught said.

New Soldiers learn Infantry skills during initial training

By 1st Lt. Jason M. Morwick
1st Battalion, 50th Infantry Regiment

The Soldiers of Company F, 1st Battalion, 50th Infantry Regiment, took the initial steps in learning the basic skills of the Infantry Soldier during their six-day individual tactics training (ITT) cycle.

The company of 230 Infantry Soldiers kicked off the ITT cycle July 24 by conducting a 10-Kilometer tactical road march and concluded the ITT period with the Infiltration Course at Young Range July 30. During ITT, the objective for the Soldiers was to learn how to effectively shoot, move, communicate and survive on the battlefield.

The ITT period of instruction covers tasks that set an Infantry Soldier apart from any other MOS. The young "grunts" are taught to camouflage self and equipment, use visual signals during movement, obtain and send a SALUTE report, move under direct and indirect fire, negotiate obstacles, tactical teamwork, five point safety check and the identification and employment of hand grenades.

An additional learning experience for the Soldiers was a live fire weapons effects demonstration. This is conducted with the guidance of company commander Capt. Mark Krumin.

"This lets the privates really see the damage an M16 bullet can do," Krumin said. An M16A2 is fired at various targets, including an ammo can, milk jug, BDU jacket, flak vest and a kevlar helmet, to demonstrate the effects. "What an M16 bullet will actually do is scary," said Pvt. Adam Borchik from Tampa, Fla. This segment is used to emphasize the importance of strict muzzle and trigger discipline to prevent fratricide.

"Without learning discipline in the company area you won't have it in the field. Discipline is what will keep you and your buddy alive in combat," Pvt. Gregory Thomas of Richmond, Va., said.

Sgt. 1st Class Robert White, a drill sergeant in Co. F, emphasized, "Learning to properly and effectively camouflage themselves and their equipment is paramount to staying alive. The whole idea of using cover and concealment at all times, not being visible to the enemy is the key to successfully accomplishing any mission."

Staff Sgt. Felix Stanziola added, "SALUTE reports are also important. Soldiers need to know how to gather and send information. On the modern battlefield, information is the key to success in order to win in combat. However, I feel that the most essential thing Soldiers will learn is proper individual movement techniques (IMT). Even if they do everything else wrong, Soldiers will survive if they can low crawl, high crawl, and conduct the three to five second rush correctly."

Staff Sgt. Joey Hutto, a drill sergeant for Co. F, agreed. "The Soldiers are learning the building blocks of basic soldering and field craft techniques. Once they understand these fundamentals they will progress to buddy tactical training (BTT), then to squad tactical training (STT), and finally to the six-day FTX, the culmination event for the soldiers."

"I feel that individual movement techniques are the most important things Soldiers will learn during this period," said Sgt. 1st Class Bobby Lane. "IMT will be reiterated throughout their cycle and will be used in whatever unit the Soldiers go to after basic training. It doesn't matter how 'high speed' the method of insertion onto the battlefield is or how much advanced technology the Soldier has over the enemy, if the Soldier can't conduct IMT correctly, then he will not be successful on the battlefield."

Rangers give family members opportunity to learn training, go through last phase of Ranger School

By Staff Sgt. Pat Miller
HHD, Ranger Training Brigade

The sun had barely risen when the battalion commander and his instructors began yet another day of training in the coastal swamps of Eglin Air Force Base, Fla.

The cadre of the 6th Ranger Training Battalion would lead their charges through a typical day of training. This would include a class on handling poisonous snakes, rappelling, weapons firing, rope bridges, boat movements and the requisite swamp movement. What would set this day apart from any other day however, is that the students would not be the typical rangers in training; rather they would be the wives or girlfriends of the cadre.

At 7:30 a.m. Aug. 23, fifty-seven wives, girlfriends and friends began their day of ranger training. Many of these women had little idea of what lay ahead of them. Several had participated in the past, but were tight-lipped when questioned by other women. They merely smiled smugly to themselves.

Lt. Col. William Kidd, commander of the 6RTB, welcomed the ladies to the Annual Ranger Wives Swamp Walk and their day of ranger training. Kidd explained the intent for the day was to acquaint the women with the type of training ranger students encountered while at Camp James E. Rudder.

None of the activities were required; however, all were encouraged to try all activities and give it their best effort. Further, Kidd stated this experience would permit the women to better understand what their husbands/boyfriends did for a living. The women were further challenged to have a good time and told to remember this was just for fun, no one would be intentionally subjected to the same pressures as the ranger students.

Sgt. 1st Class Douglas R. Maddi, chief handler of reptiles for 6RTB, began the day with an introduction to local reptiles. Maddi spoke on the characteristics and identification of indigenous reptiles; including an up-close view of both poisonous and non-poisonous snakes. The viewing was greeted by gasps and an occasional screech from the class of women. This session concluded with feeding of the camp mascot, an American alligator named "Big John."

Following the reptile class, the women were divided into small groups for the remainder of the day's training. The women participated in round-robin training of weapons familiarization and firing and rappelling. The rappelling caused many of the women to question what they had gotten themselves into, but all were successful in completing at least one rappel from the 60-foot-tower.

After a much-needed lunch, the women were told to fill their canteens and put on their camouflage paint for the remainder of the training. This created a stir since most believed this was only a ruse — it wasn't. Sgt's. 1st Class Gregory S. Foster and John D. Sanchez chided the women for whining and gently encouraged them to do what they were told.

With this out of the way, the women were loaded onto trucks and moved into the training area. Once they arrived at their destination, the women were given a few moments to collect their thoughts before they began to prepare themselves for what lie ahead.

The afternoon consisted crossing rivers by means of rope bridges, movement down river in rubber boats and moving through the many swamps that exist in the area. At their final destination, the women were again loaded onto trucks for the ride back to Camp Rudder. A brief period was allowed for the women to clean up and change their clothes. The women gathered in the battalion classroom for an outbriefing and presentation of awards from Lt. Col. Kidd. This completed, the group adjourned to the Gator Lounge for socializing and a well-deserved rest. Many of the women stated their desire to return for next years Swamp Walk and see what the cadre at Camp Rudder could put together for them.

13th CSB returns home after NTC rotation

By 1st Lt. Glenda A. Gill
13th Corps Support Battalion

The 13th Corps Support Battalion returned from the National Training Center, Fort Irwin, Calif., after completing a 30 day rotation in support of 3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division. Beginning 28 July, the 13th CSB deployed more than 330 soldiers and 155 pieces of equipment to Fort Irwin.

The 13th CSB served in the role of Main Support Battalion (MSB) and operated the Division Support Area (DSA). It provided all classes of supply, Direct Support maintenance, operated Retail and Bulk fuel operations. Units from Fort Stewart, Ga provided medical, Class I (subsistence), and fuel support. These units included the Division Materiel Management Center (DMMC), the 110th Quartermaster Company, the 703rd Main Support Battalion, and the 512th Quartermaster Battalion. Missions were executed both day and night under tactical conditions.

The 13th CSB established and operated a Field Ammunition Supply Point and maintained 100 percent accountability of Class V (ammunition). The unit was recognized as the only unit to draw Class V and establish the ASP in two days. According to the 13th CSB Commander, Lt. Col.. Michael G. Bettez,, "It was the quickest draw in the recent history of the National Training Center."

According to Maj. Steve Bayer, the battalion executive officer, the 13th CSB delivered 170,000 gallons of bulk fuel, over 120,000 gallons of water, over 1 million pounds of ice, 53,656 A-rations, 100,000 T-rations, and 168,000 MRE's to various locations in the training and cantonment area. The Battalion's transporters executed over 300 missions totaling 22,576 accident free miles,

The 13th CSB is a Combat Service Support organization and accomplishes a wide variety of missions. The 13th CSB consists of a Headquarters and Headquarters Detachment, the 104th Transportation Company, the 361st Trailer Transfer Detachment, the 233rd Heavy Equipment Transport Detachment, the 598th Maintenance Company, and the 608th Ordnance Company.

Army chief reflects on career, looks to future

By Paul Stone
American Forces Press Service

WASHINGTON — While diplomats struggle with the frustrations caused by Bosnians who don't agree on even the smallest details of the Dayton peace accords, America's top military leader says the success of the military mission there continues to impress him.

Gen. John M. Shalikashvili, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, just returned from Bosnia. He assessed the conditions there and the importance of the military mission during a wide-ranging, exclusive interview. He touched on several important issues that have impacted his role as chairman, such as the Quadrennial Defense Review, but it was Bosnia that dominated his thoughts as he prepares to retire at the end of September after nearly 40 years in the Army.

With former Bosnian military leaders still exercising strong influence over the political process and Bosnian political leaders bickering about everything from telephones to currency, the chairman acknowledged the peace process itself is not on track. He cited fair elections, improved return of refugees, continued building of political institutions and reconstruction as steps that must move forward to reduce the opportunity for the resumption of fighting.

"You can't go to Bosnia without being extraordinarily impressed by the professionalism of America's young men and women. I'm not sure they realize just how good they are," he said. "They make the difference. It is an American soldier, sailor, airman and Marines there on the spot that makes a difference."

Reflecting on the overall Bosnia mission, Shalikashvili said he has come to appreciate just how complex peacekeeping operations can be.

"It is impossible to look back over the last two years and still doubt the wisdom of our involvement there. Europe would be a very different Europe today if that fighting were still going on," he said.

He added that the Bosnian mission has helped set a strong relationship among the United States, Russia and NATO. "We are demonstrating to ourselves, to our European colleagues and certainly to the Russians, that when we put our minds to it, we can work together — side by side for common good," he said.

What happens in June 1998, when the current mission is scheduled to end, is uncertain, but one thing the chairman said he is certain about — the military can expect peacekeeping missions like Bosnia to occur for the foreseeable future.

He emphasized the requirement for peacekeeping missions stems from the collapse of previous security relationships and the U.S. stature as the only remaining superpower.

"The world has changed. It is no longer stable like it used to be during the Cold War. The instabilities, the uncertainties, the crises, all demand our attention," he said. "Our responsibilities are greater now than before ... to ensure that we so shape the environment that America's interests are protected and advanced."

While realistic about the need for U.S. involvement in world events, Shalikashvili indicated Bosnia and other operations in recent years have increased his sensitivity to the issues of operational tempo and readiness.

"We have to look at how we do business to reduce the amount of time we ask our men and women to be away from home," he said. "We have to look at every joint and service training exercise. We have to look at all the other events that cause us to take people away from home to make sure we do not have needless times away from home."

To this end, Shalikashvili said he has told Defense Secretary William Cohen that joint exercise tempo will be reduced gradually 25 percent by the year 2000 — a step he said he believes will help reduce the burden on the services and preserve readiness.

Accomplishing every mission, while scaling back resources and personnel without adversely impacting readiness, has been a key goal of the chairman and an achievement he said will look back on with pride.

While peacekeeping operations have dominated his term as chairman, Shalikashvili often touched on the theme of leader accountability, especially when discussing the recent Khobar Towers bombing decision and the sexual misconduct cases.

Although not advocating a "zero defects" mentality for the military, Shalikashvili emphasized leaders must be held "to a standard of what reasonably can be expected to be done under the circumstances."

Specifically addressing Cohen's decision to withhold the promotion of Air Force Brig. Gen. Terry J. Schwalier, the chairman said it was reasonable to expect someone of Schwalier's grade and experience to have had a workable plan to evacuate in case of danger, that an alarm system would be in place and that evacuations would be practiced.

"We owe that to the men and women we lead," he said. "If we wish to continue to lead men and women, often into harm's way, we cannot have a lesser standard than that."

Shalikashvili called the sexual harassment and misconduct cases "aberrations," which are not representative of day-to-day life in the military. But he was equally emphatic about the seriousness of the cases and said he hopes service members "recognize that we're dealing with them fairly, openly, quickly.

As he begins to make the transition to civilian life, Shalikashvili said he is confident and excited about the military's future, especially in the first decade of the 21st century. He said he is excited about the information-age technologies he believes will have a major impact on the battlefield, giving commanders the ability to use weapons more efficiently and effectively.

"The battlefield will be characterized by seeing things you never dreamed of seeing today and being able to get that information to whoever needs it, and then be able to do something from long distances very precisely," he said.

Shalikashvili said he is also confident quality of life issues such as housing, pay and medical care will continue to improve, especially with increased congressional interest in recent years.

Being a firm believer that nothing in the military is more important than people, Shalikashvili said it is the people -- the military family -- that he will miss most upon retiring.

"You only have to go to a place like Bosnia and talk to these young men and women to recognize just how terrific they are and how much pleasure you derive from being with them," he said. "I think it's what kept me in the service, and 39 years later this is what I will miss the most."

Changes could be on tap for basic training

By Jim Caldwell
TRADOC News Service

FORT MONROE, Va. — The Army will change recruit training by adding a week to initial entry training and strengthening the command structure of training organizations. What will not change are the standards and challenging training young men and women undergo to become Soldiers.

To help give company commanders more time to actively manage training activities, 110 executive officer positions will be restored to training companies. The positions had been cut during the Army s initial downsizing effort

Sensing sessions will be a new tool for company commanders to assess effectiveness of training and the climate within their commands. The sessions will be conducted with each platoon of trainees halfway through Basic Training (BCT). They will allow commanders to find and correct problems or to identify training which can be reinforced.

Previously, trainees critiqued their BCT experiences with letters or forms turned in at the end of their eight weeks.

The length of Individual Entry Training (IET) will be increased by one week. The additional time will be used for more in-depth training in human relations, Army values and ethics.

The Army leadership not only has no plans to ease the rigorous demands of BCT, but neither does it want to abandon gender integrated training.

"We have been doing gender integrated training for advanced training since 1973, and we've been doing it in basic training since 1993, said Gen. William W. Hartzog, commander of Training and Doctrine Command.

"I don t personally see anything that makes me believe that we need to go backward," he said. "In fact, it just doesn't t make good sense to me if we operate that way on the battlefield and we [wait to] start training people about how to do that until the day that we get to the battlefield," he said.

There is a perception that BCT has become soft, but it primarily belongs to people on the outside looking in, according to Sgt. 1st Class Carl Blakey, IET action officer in TRADOC's deputy chief of staff for training organization.

Such claims have been made recently in the news media. A writer for a national news magazine based his claim after watching a drill sergeant at Fort Leonard Wood, Mo., allow his trainees to walk the bayonet course on a hot day.

I understand the wet bulb reading was 90-plus degrees in the middle of the summer at Fort Leonard Wood, with no shade, Blakey said. There was certainly a reduced training effect in walking the course, but the risk of running the trainees on a hot day was not worth trying to get the desired training effect.

Blakey said that drill sergeants, just like all Army leaders, are urged to conduct risk assessments to ensure that risks are minimized, and that the value to be received from training activities outweighs those risks that remain.

"So the reported incident was an example of a leader acting responsibly," he said. Me, I want to walk through and have all of them alive at the other end, and then we can do it another day.

I'm sure that's what the parents of trainees want, too. That s a drill sergeant s primary duty," he said.

Blakey, a former drill sergeant, believes the feeling that BCT is soft is a result of the way things used to be. People who went through basic training 20 or 30 years ago tell stories about how their drill sergeants screamed and cursed all the time.

Tyrannical drill sergeants are very rare now, and trainees don't get yelled at during every waking minute.

"We certainly have not banned drill sergeants from yelling and screaming when they deem it appropriate," he said. "We haven't banned them from using motivational training techniques— push-ups, flutter kicks when they deem them to be appropriate.

But when you feel like you need to do those things, be smart about how you do it. The object is to get an individual s attention, not to humiliate or degrade the trainee," Blakey said.

Blakey is a strong proponent for retaining gender integrated training, just as is Hartzog. There are two BCT sites where gender integrated training is done — Fort Jackson, S.C., and Fort Leonard Wood. The reason women do not take BCT at other sites is a matter of numbers, Blakey said.

The Army Research Institute (ARI) studies done during the test phase of gender integrated training found the appropriate mix to be 70 percent males and 30 percent females, he said. We don't have enough females to get that mix at other BCT installations.

If we segregated training, if we created all female companies with all female drill sergeants, we would have to have an additional 183 female drill sergeants to just train the numbers of women we're training now in BCT, he said. If we took every qualified female noncommissioned officer right now in the ranks of staff sergeant and sergeant first class, which are the majority of our drill sergeant population, it is likely there would still not be enough to maintain the ongoing training mission.

To take enough female drill sergeants would also have two negative results. It would cause shortages of qualified female NCOs in the operational Army. And, to maintain the training base, duty tours for female drill sergeants would have to be extended beyond the current two-year limit.

Blakey feels the changes made to IET are positive steps. The additional executive officers will permit company commanders to have the time for such things as BCT mid-cycle sensing sessions, and more daily contact with the training platoons.

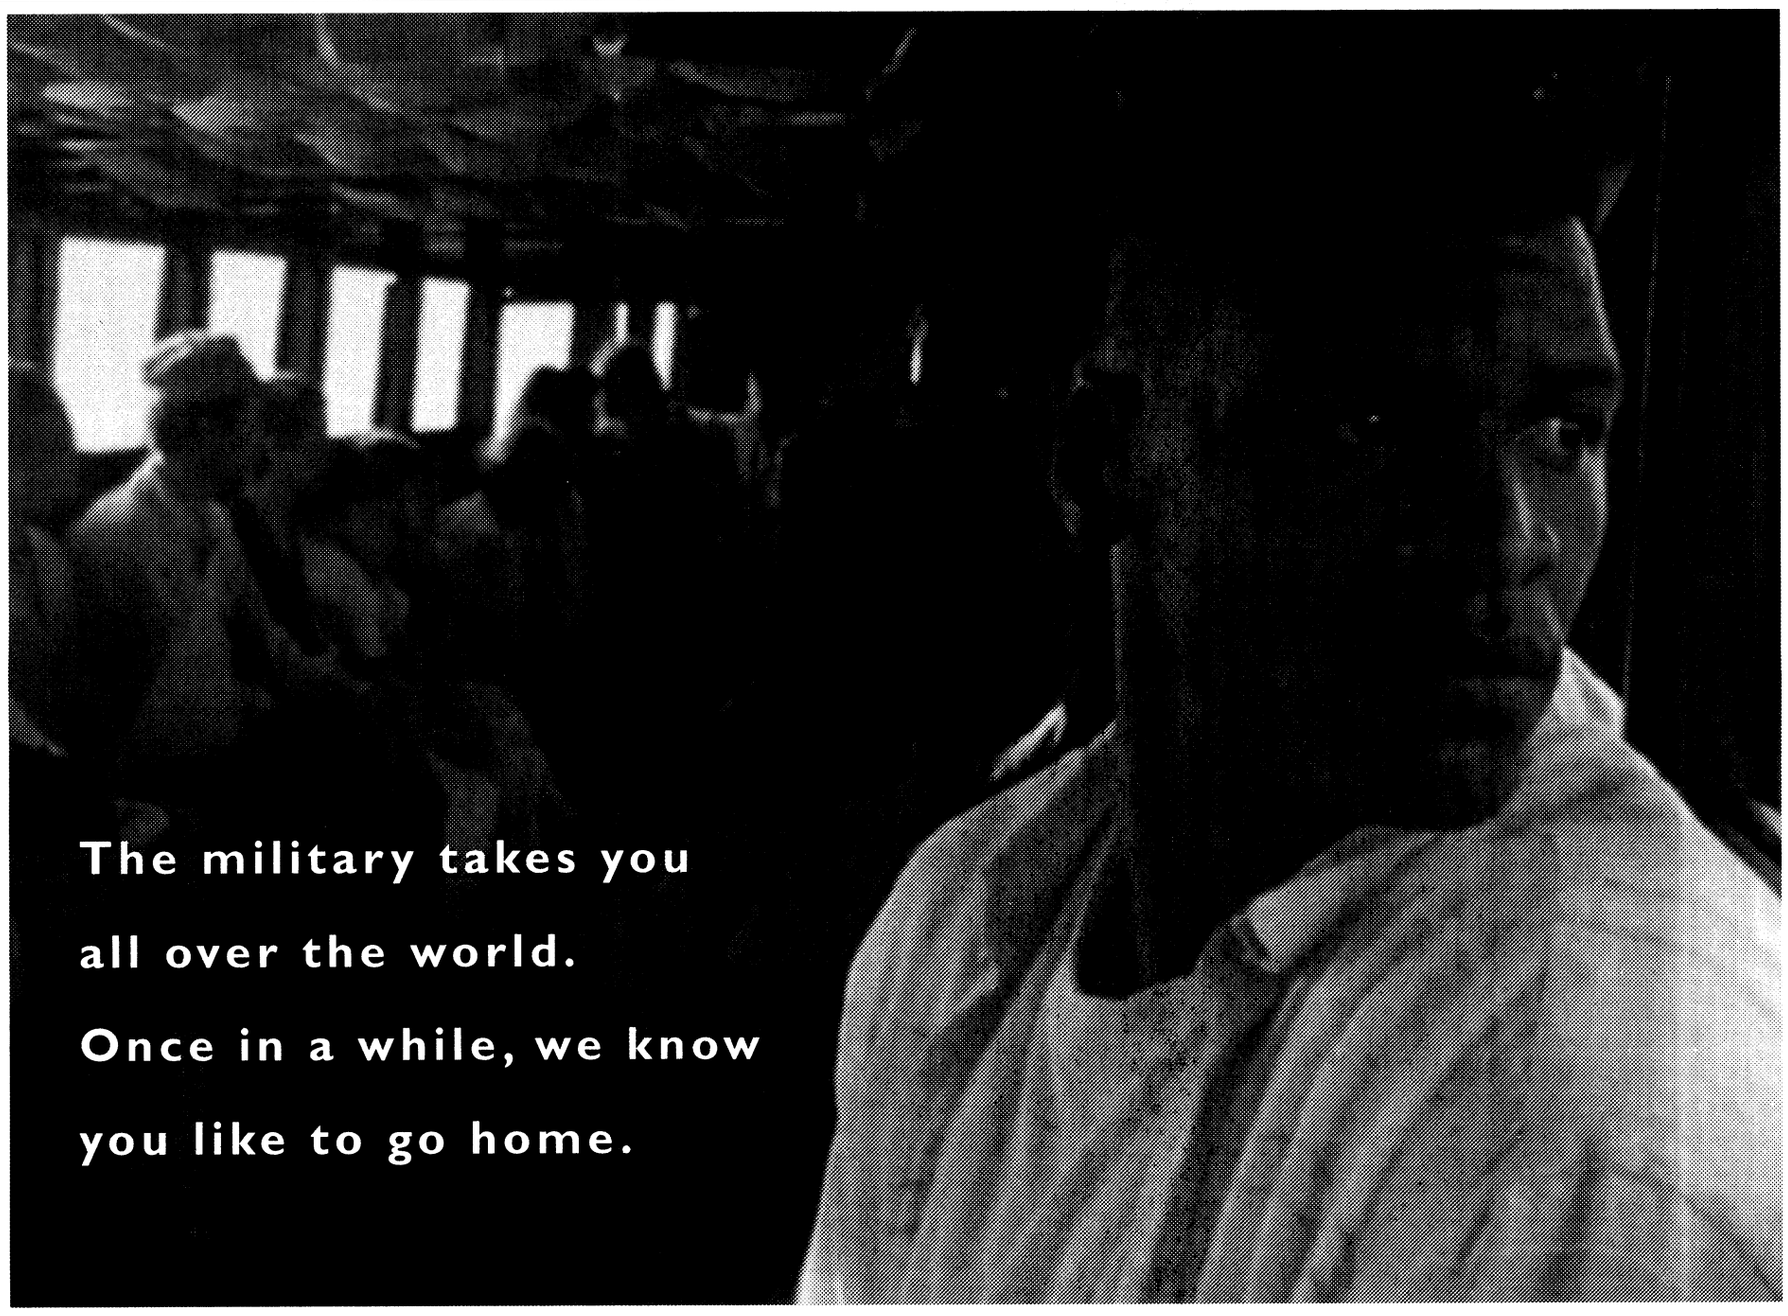
Fair offers job possibilities

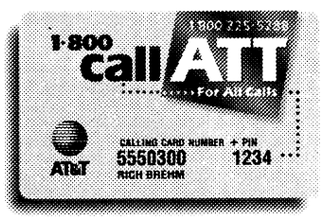
Army Career and Alumni Program

The Veterans Job Fair comes to Columbus from 10 a.m. to 1 p.m. Thursday at VFW Post 665 on Victory Drive.

Employers from the Columbus and Fort Benning area, the southern region and some with national interest will attend to discuss a wide range of entry-level, supervisory, management, part-time and full-time job openings.



"Each year the Georgia Department of Labor in conjunction with Military Veteran Organizations, such as the Veterans of Foreign Wars (VFW), sponsor Job Fairs for Veterans and other job seekers in towns across the state," said Jim Hunsinger, a Veterans Employment representative with the Columbus Office of the Georgia Department. of Labor.



"When attending job fairs, prepare yourself for a good first impression," said Chick Eagle, Job Assistance Center counselor.

"Be positive and polite when meeting and talking to employers. Introduce yourself and be prepared to explain your qualifications and experience. Ask questions about the number of employees hired annually, what skills are required or desired in employees, and forecast of future opportunities for growth and development."

"Your purpose at a job fair is to gather information and ideas about jobs, careers, and the employment process," Eagle said. "If you are close to your ETS date you should attend with copies of your resume to give employers that are most promising. However, even if you don't have your resume prepared you should attend and learn as much as possible about companies and the skills and experience they seek in new employees."

For more information and list of specific employers attending, please call the ACAP Job Assistance Center, 545-2308, or visit Building 2634 in Soldiers' Plaza.

Fort Benning annual bazaar needs crafters — Fort Benning's annual craft bazaar is looking for crafters to participate in the bazaar from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. Nov. 15.

The bazaar will take place at the Infantry Hall and spaces are available to the public starting at $30.

All the proceeds go to the Officerss' Wives' Club scholarship and welfare projects.

For more information or to request a crafter contract, call Judith Markelz at 687-7246 or Brenda Barger at 568-8921.

AUSA to raffle a new car or truck at its annual fish fry — A brand new truck or car will belong to some fortunate person Sept. 26, at the annual fish fry being conducted at Uchee Creek Camp Ground. The dinner starts at 6 p.m

The one dollar raffle tickets are being sold by AUSA representatives in all the major units from post at the Association of U.S. Army office in Infantry Hall, Room 601, and at the Main Mall each Saturday and Sunday. There is a $10 cost to attend the fish fry.

AUSA is conducting a car and truck raffle to raise money to send Soldiers to the national convention in Washington D.C. in October.

Other vehicles to choose from are a Honda Civic LX, Chevy S-10 pickup, Ford Escort ZX2, Isuzu pick-up, Toyota Tacoma pickup and Mazda SE5, Nissan pickup, or a Saturn SC-1 Coupe.

Each vehicle is valued at a minimum of $15,000 and the title and tag fees will also be paid for.

The winner need not be present to win, but then he or she will not have a chance to drive away from Uchee Creek with the vehicle of his or her choice.

Spouse orientation set — The next Fort Benning spouse orientation takes place at 8:45 a.m Friday in Building 359. All newly assigned personnel, especially those with spouses are encouraged to attend. This orientation provides information about all of the post services and facilities that are available to Soldiers and their family members.

Child-care is provided, however to access this service, family members are asked to make reservations by calling the Army Community Service Program at 545-4043.

For more information about the Spouse Orientation Program, call Army Community Service at 545-4043.

Early Intervention Services to conduct an open house — Early Intervention Services, a division of Martin Army Community Hospital, will conduct an open house from 2 to 4 p.m. Monday in Building 392. The Building is located on Bill Street behind the National Infantry Museum.

Schools in, drive safely

By Regis P. Beighley
Directorate of Public Safety

For the next nine months, our concern must be focused on the beginning of the school year for school children and the associated traffic problems.

The bright yellow bus laden with children will be a familiar sight in the area. It travels in the early morning, at mid-day and in the afternoon. We may even see the school bus during the hours of darkness. Whenever it travels, drivers must exercise special caution to protect the lives of its young passengers.

There are children walking to school or to the bus stop. Where sidewalks are not provided, youngsters will walk or ride their bikes on the streets.

Parents should ensure that their children wear at least one light colored article of clothing — anything to make the child more visible to drivers. Reflective tape can be placed on book covers or belts. If the child will be walking during darkness, he should carry a small flashlight with the light turned on.

Drivers have no time for carelessness or forgetfulness; they must be alert at all times and be prepared for the child who may wander into the path of a car.

The following happens all too often. The school bus driver stopped the bus at one of her many designated stops. As usual, the driver activated the flashing lights and the caution sign to warn other vehicles to stop. Once the emergency equipment was activated and other vehicles had stopped, the driver motioned for the children to cross. As the children crossed to board the bus, a driver who was behind the bus became impatient and decided to pass. The school bus driver tried to motion for the children to stop by banging on the window and yelling. The passing vehicle quickly swerved to the right around the bus, nearly hitting the children who were still on the roadway. The driver of the passing vehicle continued on as if nothing had happened. Luckily, none of the children were hit.

This story should serve as a reminder to watch for and obey the warning signs on school buses. One moment of impatience can lead to a lifetime of regret. Children are our greatest asset and our future. Please stay mindful of their safety.

GREENWAVES plan an open house

Special to The Bayonet©

Spencer High School is sponsoring an Open House at 7 p.m. today. All parents and students are invited to attend.

The purpose of this event is to give both the parents and students an opportunity to get acquainted with the Spencer High School facilities, staff, and available programs.

Parents will be able to tour the school and meet with their children's teachers. There will be members of the Parent Teacher Student Association present to meet with the parents and students, answer questions, and enroll new members. The guest speaker, James A. Patrick, will give a speech about the city sales tax and what it means to the school' s budget for this year. In addition, Spencer High School principle Olivia Rutledge will be available to give an overview of the school's plans for the current year, and to answer questions.

For more information, call Spencer at 685-7652.

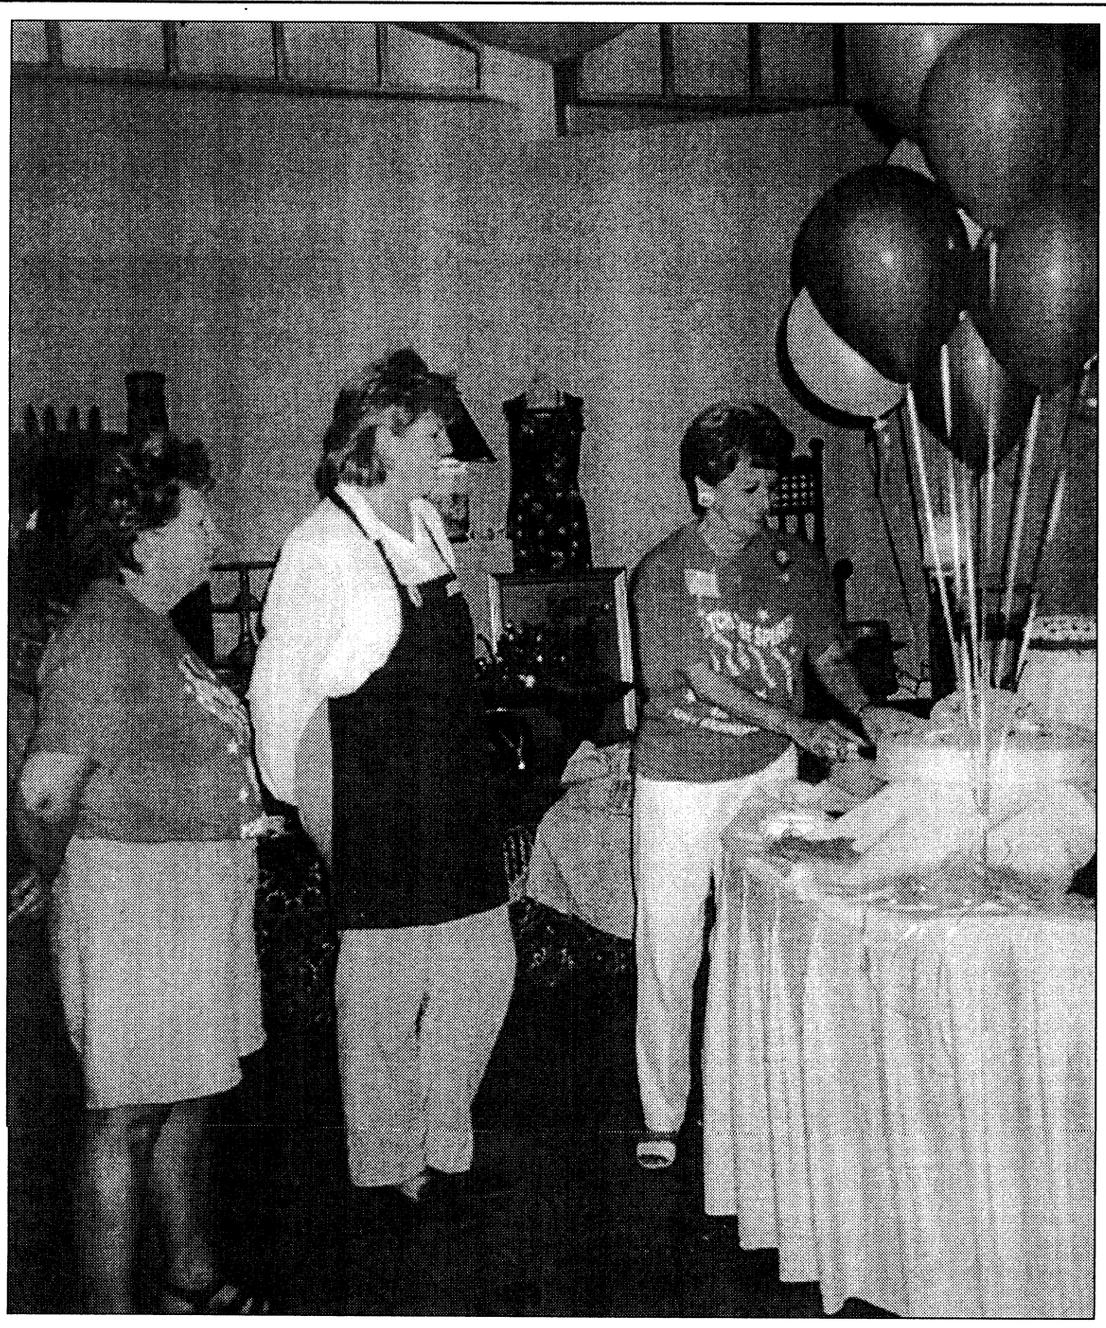
National Academic Funding has money available to lend

National Academic Funding Advisory

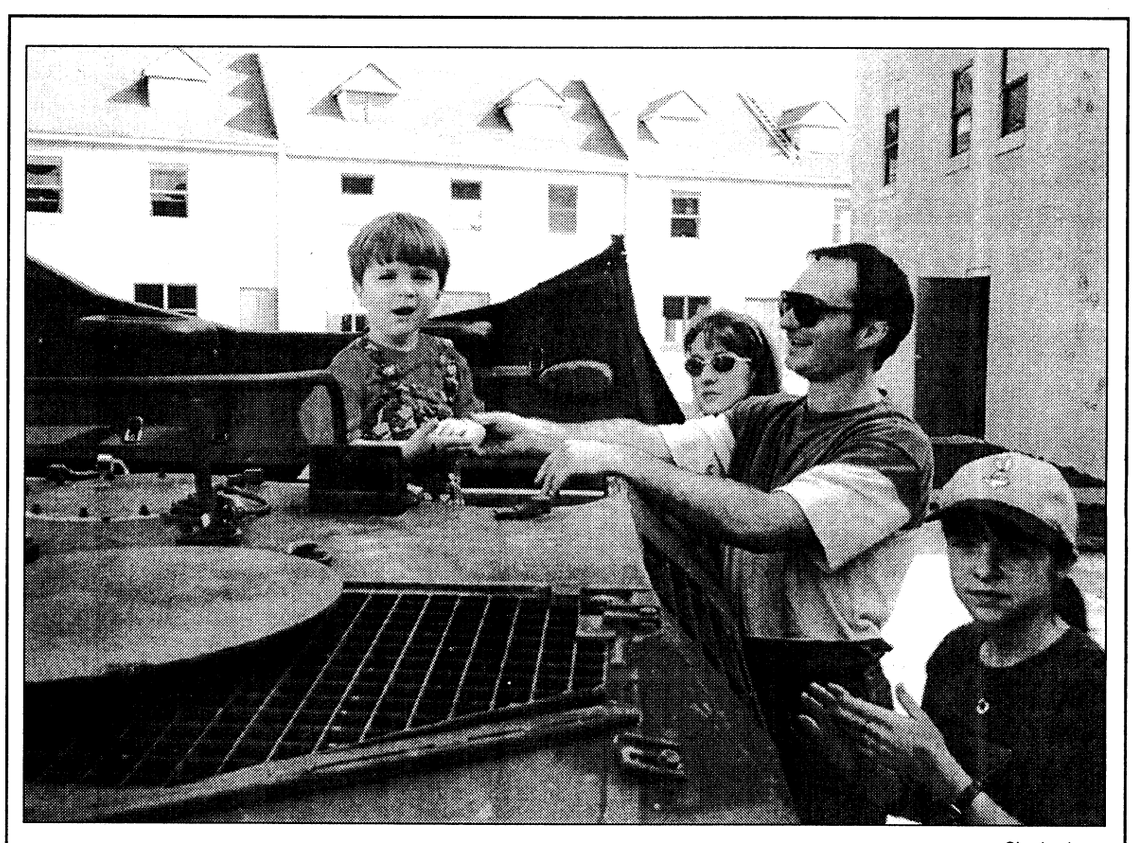


There is now exciting news for students and their families who need financial assistance to help pay for skyrocketing college education expenses. Initiatives such as federal tax breaks for families as proposed by President Clinton will start to ease some of the burden but more importantly, there are an increasing number of new scholarship and grant sources available to students who take the time to locate them.

Currently there are nearly 400,000 independent and private scholarship and grant sources available, which do not have to be paid back. More than 80 percent of these scholarships do not depend on family need or exceptional grades but are awarded based on factors such as the student's interests, hobbies, academic focus, age, heritage or parent's work or military service.

Unfortunately these sources remain largely unknown to most students because they are spread out nationally and not actively promoted. As a result many students miss out on available scholarship money because they are not aware that it exists and do not apply for it. Students who take the initiative to find out what sources they qualify for are usually successful in funding either part or all of their education.

The U. S. Department of Education and financial experts agree that the sooner families search out financial sources, the more chance they will receive financial aid. It is vitally important for students who are now seniors in high school to start gathering information to identify sources that can assist them. According to Kalman A. Chaney of Campus Consultants in a recent article in the Wall Street Journal, students "can increase their chances of getting financial aid simply by understanding how the process works. This means filling out the required forms, turning them in on time, and knowing how the information is evaluated."



Now, through the resources of the National Academic Funding Advisory (NAFA), an updated publication for 1997-98 is available which provides important detailed information to students seeking financial aid. For information on how to receive scholarship money for college, trade school or graduate school send a No. 10 self addressed double stamped business envelope, plus $2.00 to cover handling, to NAFA 700 Greenland Road-Left, Dept. The week's article provides a look at the installation's natural resources and upcoming schedule changes for refuse and recycling collection.

Preserving the installation's natural resources

Fort Benning has many unique plant and animal communities including the old growth longleaf pine forest, which provides habitat for the endangered red-cockaded woodpecker, the scrub oak and longleaf pine, which are home to the gopher tortoise, and the extensive hardwood bottom land and river system which provides habitat for endangered plants (trillium) and bald eagles.

We also actively manage the installation's game and nongame wildlife including wild turkey, deer, wood ducks, and bluebirds.

The focus of both forestry and wildlife management programs is to maintain or restore these natural communities. Collectively, these communities may be termed an ecosystem. Maintaining or restoring the various ecosystems became the new management example. Within the last 5 years, all federal agencies enhanced their land stewardship programs to better manage their forests and wildlife. Likewise, Fort Benning contracted with the Nature Conservancy to develop a management plan called the Integrated Natural Resources Management Plan (INRMP). Our overall objective is to an ecosystem approach to land management with no net loss in the capability of the land to support our training mission. Development of the plan will include input from numerous individuals with expertise in a variety of fields: ecology, wildlife, botany and forestry.

Military personnel will provide input regarding the compatibility of proposed land management with their mission requirements. The long-term goal of the INRMP is to bring together all management activities in a way that sustains, enhances, or restores the health and integrity of the natural communities while continuing to better opportunities for the future.

Refuse and recycling collection dates to change

Indianhead Terrace: Effective Sept. 15, refuse and recycle collection for all residents in Indianhead Terrace will be changed from Tuesdays to Mondays. Yard waste collection will remain on Mondays.

Lower Davis Hills: (Kawamura, Port and Fernandez Streets only). Effective Sept. 15, refuse and recycle collection for all residents in Lower Davis Hills, will be changed from Thursdays to Mondays. Yard waste collection will remain on Mondays. These changes have become necessary since the Fort Benning landfill was closed June 1 and refuse now is hauled off post to a facility with different operational hours. For more information call Richard Chancey, 545-4749.

Hazardous materials pose daily threats

Ga. Emergency Management Agency

ATLANTA — The same technologies that have spawned a wealth of conveniences, cost savings and cures have also created some hazards that can pose serious threats to health and safety.

There are thousands of chemicals and substances in existence, which are used in manufacturing, industry, agriculture, medicine and research, as well as in the home. While their use is often taken for granted, their accidental release or misuse can be potentially lethal.

The unintended release of a hazardous substance can occur where the material is being stored or used, or while it is being shipped.

Georgia Emergency Management Agency (GEMA) Director Gary W. McConnell said the efforts to educate emergency responders on how to identify hazardous materials and to better prepare them to minimize their effects have been upgraded in recent years.

McConnell said vehicles carrying hazardous materials are marked with placards indicating what is on board. Emergency response guidebooks have also been provided to law enforcement officers, firefighters and emergency medical technicians, who are often the first on the scene of a leak or spill.

McConnell said anyone who comes in contact with a hazardous-material leak or spill should remain upwind; avoid inhaling fumes, vapors or smoke; avoid stepping in spilled materials; and evacuate the area if ordered to do so.

Household chemicals also present potential dangers. Use the following guidelines to promote safety:

•Mixing certain cleaning agents can be dangerous.

•Keep household chemicals clearly labeled and properly stored.

•Read labels carefully before using household chemicals.

•Keep the phone number of the nearest poison control center handy.

•Report chemical spills immediately by calling 911.

If you live near a facility where chemicals are used or stored, or near a transportation route over which potentially hazardous materials are carried, be alert for emergency warnings and be prepared to leave the area, if necessary.

For more information on chemical hazards, call (800) 424-9300.

Post chapels to observe Religious Education Month

By Bill Putman
USAIC Chaplain's Office

September is observed as Religious Education month throughout the military. Education, as a separate but distinct part of religion, began many years ago. Many people today look upon religious education as an hour of Sunday school or Confraternity of Christian Doctrine once a week, however, religious education began in the home, and the home must still play a major role in it for it to succeed.

While Moses was instructing the Israelites for preparing for the Exodus, he told them to observe this feast throughout all generations. "And when your children ask you, 'What do you mean by this observance?' you shall say, 'It is the passover sacrifice to the Lord, for he passed over the houses of the Israelites in Egypt." (Exodus 12:26-27 NRSV)

In the New Testament, there are references to people going to the Temple to hear the Scriptures read and discussed. Jesus participated in the listening and discussing part of this as a child, and later as a teacher.

Modern Sunday school grew from a movement in England to teach poor children who could not attend school during the week, to read and write.

This was started in 1780 in Gloucester, by Robert Raikes. Initially, he was criticized for desecrating the Sabbath, but later he gained support from some of the chief leaders of the church, and by the time of his death in 1811, there were thousands of Sunday schools in England.

By 1785, the Sunday school movement had spread to America, and it grew quickly. Less and less Bible instruction was given in the public schools, and more was given in Sunday schools.

As stated earlier, parents in the home are the key to good religious education, since one hour an Sunday is insufficient for anyone to master any subject.

However, religious education activities sponsored by the U.S. Army Infantry Center staff chaplain give a basis for further and more detailed study.

Moreover, we should get over the idea that religious education is just for children. We are never too old to learn, and Fort Benning offers many activities and study groups for adults as well as for children.

There are unit Bible studies for military offered by unit chaplains. There are home Bible studies, women's groups, and youth groups.

The schedule of religious activities on this page lists many opportunities for study.

For additional ones, contact your unit chaplain, or call 545-2050 or 545-4715 for Protestants or 545-5508 for Catholics.

Redleg Open scheduled — The 1st Battalion, 10th Field Artillery Regiment hosts its annual Redleg Open golf tournament beginning at 9 a.m. Sept. 26 at the Follow Me Golf Course.

Proceeds from the tournament will be presented to Santa's Castle, which provides gifts to needy children during the holiday season.

The format is a four-man team scramble play with a shotgun start.

Entry fee, which includes a golf cart, is $15 for Follow Me Golf Club members and $23 for non-members.

For more information, call Andrew Lane at 544-1977 or 544-1354.

Charity softball game set — A charity softball game between the sergeants majors and colonels is scheduled for 7 p.m. Oct. 18 on Gowdy Field.

Donations of $5 will be accepted for admission to the game.

Proceeds for the game will go toward buying new toys, which will be donated to Santa's Castle.

For more information, call Sgt. Maj. Arthur VanAllen at 545-1500 or Sgt. Maj. Felix McNair at 545-6333.

Army 10-mile qualifier begins — Fort Benning conducts its Army 10-mile qualifier Sunday beginning at 7:30 a.m. at the Santiago Fitness Center on Sand Hill.

All runners can attend; however, only the top active-duty finishers represent the post at the Army 10-miler Oct. 12 in Washington, D.C.

Unit teams are encouraged to participate to find the best teams on post. Teams can be all male, all female or mixed.

For more information, call Hazel Henry at 544-9595 or 544-9486.

Rally For A Cure golf tournament set — The staff of the Follow Me Golf Course conducts a closest-to-the-pin contest beginning at 9 a.m. Sept. 9 as part of the Rally with Golf for Women Magazine For a Cure program.

The Rally for a Cure is an awareness and early detection campaign that benefits the Susan G. Komen Breast Cancer Foundation.

Titleist golf balls carrying the pink ribbon breast cancer awareness symbol will be awarded to every player who manages to hit the green.

For more information, call (800) 327-6811.

Buick Challenge

Officials look for volunteer marshals and placard holders

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Two of the best deals in golfing are available to the people of Fort Benning as well as retirees, reservists and all others serving on active duty.

Deal number one is Military Appreciation Day at the Buick Challenge Oct. 3. Anyone with a valid Department of Defense identification card can attend Friday's golf tournament free.

Your ID card gets you into Callaway Gardens and onto the golf course free. You can also sign up for a drawing that, in the past, included such items as bicycles, television sets, stereos and savings bonds.

Additionally various units will be sponsoring picnics at various sites in the Gardens, offering food and games to unit members. Those not wanting to watch golf are free to visit the rest of Callaway Gardens.

Callaway Gardens and the Association of the U.S. Army are sponsoring this day-long event. Buses will be provided for those needing transportation. A bus schedule will be published at a later date.

Deal number two is the chance to either marshal or be a placard bearer during the tournament.

Fifty placard bearers are needed on Thursday and Friday. Placard bearers will receive a T-shirt and hat and free admission to the tournament on the day they sign up for. Those volunteering to be placard bearers need to contact the 11th Infantry Regiment operations office at 545-6017 or 545-7033

Marshals are needed for the 11th hole everyday of the week except Tuesday. Marshals will need to purchase their uniforms — windbreaker, golf shirt and hat — for $51.

While $51 sounds steep, the price is about half the retail cost.

Marshals also receive free parking for all days of the tournament, badges for access to all days of the tournament, admission to the gardens and greens fees to play one of the three courses once the tournament is over.

The greens fees themselves are worth up to $55 while admission to the gardens is another $10.

Those wishing to be marshals should call Rich McDowell at 545-2211. He will need your money by Sept. 19. Also, the earlier people sign up, the wider their choice is — tee box, greens, landing area and crossing guard.

Staff Sgt. Lori Egan

Football bound!

Chris Stallings participates in the 40-yard dash during the football conditioning camp held Aug. 25 to 29 at Blue Field. Stallings was one of more than 100 potential football players to participate in the week long camp. The camp was designed to get players mentally and physically prepared to start full-contact drills and included stations to test agility, pass catching, speed and endurance. Football officially begins Saturday with team selection at the Youth Services. Players will be notified of team assignments beginning Saturday.

Georgia state park offers guided canoe trips — Outdoor enthusiasts can explore Georgia's scenic waterways on guided canoe trips at High Falls and Panola Mountain State Parks.

Park staff will explain basic canoeing techniques and interpret natural surroundings while leading paddlers on day-long trips.

Participants can see beavers, otters, kingfishers, great blue herons, turtles and other wildlife.

Trips fill quickly, so pre-registration is required. To register, call the park.

The cost is $15 per person, which includes canoe, paddles and life preserver. Canoeists who bring their own equipment pay $10. A $2 park pass fee is charged per vehicle.

Eighteen of Georgia's state parks rent canoes so visitors can explore lakes and streams on their own.

Prices are $3 to $5 for an hour, $8 to $15 for four hours and $12 to $20 for an entire day. For a free "Guide to Georgia State Parks and Historic Sites" or "1997 Events" brochure, call (404) 656-3530.

To reserve a campsite or fully equipped cottage, call (800) 864-7275.

WRD offers outdoors-woman work-shop — The Department of Natural Resources, Wildlife Resources Division, is offering an outdoors-woman workshop Oct. 10-12.

The program will be conducted at the Future Farmers of America and Future Homemakers of America Camp in Covington, Ga.

Casting a flyrod, cooking a complete meal with one pot on a propane camp stove, shooting a rifle and paddling a canoe are some of the skills being taught at the workshop.

Women attending the workshop choose four outdoor activities in which to participate. Each activity session lasts approximately 3 1/2 hours and includes basic instruction and "how-to" information, as well as "hands-on" participation and practice with outdoor equipment.

The cost for the weekend is $135 before Oct. 1, which includes lodging, meals and use of equipment. The registration fee is $150 after Oct. 1.

The workshop is aimed primarily at women, but it is an ideal opportunity for anyone 18 years or older to learn or improve outdoor skills.

Registration for the workshop is open and is available on a first-come, first-served basis.

For a registration brochure, contact the Wildlife Resources Division at (770) 918-6400.

Over-sized plastic worms work well for bass in summer

By David Hegel and Steve Price
Johnson® and Evinrude® Outboards

One compartment in Charlie Reed's tackle box is twice as large as the others. That's because the lures he puts in it are twice as big as normal lures.

"When the weather turns warm, I really like to fish big 10- and 12-inch plastic worms instead of the normal 4-, 5- and 6-inch varieties," said Reed, winner of the 1986 Bass Masters Classic™ world championship.

"I'm not sure just what the bass must think an over-sized plastic worm represents, but they really hit it. It's especially effective for larger trophy-class bass, too."

Reed fishes the big plastic worms several different ways, including rigged as a regular worm with a slip sinker, on a long leader as part of a Carolina rig and without any weight as a surface lure.

"You don't have to rig a big plastic worm with a heavy sinker," Reed said. "In fact, sometimes a lighter sinker like 1/4 ounce is better. Big plastic worms sink pretty slowly and I believe that may be one of their attractions.

"I like to crawl it around heavy cover the same way I fish a shorter worm, and when you rig it weedless with the hook imbedded into the worm, you can throw it right into the cover. Other times, a slow hopping retrieve works better. It just depends on the mood of the bass."

The pro said there are some lakes, such as Santee Cooper in South Carolina, where large plastic worms seem to work better than shorter worms.

"I believe Florida is where the oversized worms first gained notoriety because some manufacturers there were making worms over a foot long," Reed said. "From there, their popularity spread."

In many Florida lakes and in other states where lakes have heavy vegetation, Reed often fishes the big plastic worms as surface lures, crawling them through the greenery.

"I use a 5/0 or 6/0 hook and rig it weedless," he said. "Then I just swim it very slowly over the surface. This is one technique that often brings strikes from huge bass, and it works around other cover besides grass. Stumpfields, standing timber and even brush piles are excellent places to fish a big worm this way."

When he's fishing a little deeper cover and structure, Reed may use big plastic worms on Carolina rigs.

"One of the main reasons for using this technique is to give the bass something new and different to look at," he said. "Many anglers fish points, sunken roadbeds or channel breaks with plastic lizards and they do quite well. After a while, however, I think the fish may become accustomed to seeing those types of lures and be a little more reluctant to strike.

"That's when I put on one of these huge worms and usually start catching bass again."

Base-camp camping offers convenience

Wildlife Resources Division

For some people there is no other way to camp except in a fully loaded campground. For others, camping means getting away from even the most primitive campgrounds.

There is definitely a big difference between "car" camping, and backcountry camping — hiking into remote, roadless destinations. It certainly gets you away from it all. But for those who seek a balance, you can enjoy the solitude of a tucked-away campsite without sacrificing all of the campground conveniences.

"When people think of backpacking, they picture a trip that goes from point A to point B in the wilderness, setting up camp along the way each night," said Linda Grebe, an outdoors marketing manager. She also said there is another option.

"Instead of hiking all day and setting up a new campsite every night, you can hike in, establish a 'base-camp', and plan your activities from there," Grebe said. "Base-camp backpacking allows you more options for planning your day and limits the time you spend hiking; whereas through-hikers typically hike all day, and sometimes have to hike longer than they wish to reach a suitable campsite before nightfall."

Kids especially need flexibility in their activities to stay interested and avoid getting overly tired. A hike from the camp can be a leisurely day of exploring the surrounding area, carrying only a daypack for essentials. You can hike to a nearby pond or stream for a day of solitary fishing or exploring the water's ridge.

Find an open field and fly a kite, then return to camp and relax with a good book or a game of cards. Establishing a base camp in mountainous regions allows you to travel more lightly up and down the summits, and cover more ground in less time.

Because you don't have to hike as long and far to a base camp, weight is not as much a factor, and you carry in more "luxury" items—a small cooler, a lantern, compact camping chairs, or extra fishing equipment.

Freeze-dried food, the staple of through-hikers, is not necessary for base-camp backpackers. Fresh fruits, vegetables and meats, if you have a place to keep them cold, can be packed into a base camp easily.

Pack a loaf of French bread or a bottle of wine into the side pocket of your backpack to enjoy with a hearty pasta dish. Try new ways to cook outdoors, and experiment with old recipes. Or, partially prepare some meals at home for quick meals at camp. Secure water bottles in a fast flowing stream all day, and serve cold with dinner. Remember to purify any water that comes from a stream or pond before drinking it.

With the freedom and solitude of backcountry camping, also come responsibilities. Conveniences such as running water, waste facilities and trash containers are not accessible. Backcountry campers are responsible for carrying out their trash and practicing low-impact camping. Some wilderness areas do not allow campfires, so you will need a cooking stove. Others do not allow camping within 200 feet of the trail or on fragile alpine areas.

The variety of activities are just as available in the backcountry as they are in campgrounds. Discover new wilderness areas, and you may just give up car camping for good.

SOCIAL DRINKING

How much is too much?

In Georgia, drivers 18 and older are legally drunk when their blood-alcohol content (BAC) reaches 0.08.

The number of drinks it takes to become legally drunk in 2 hours: *

WEIGHT	NUMBER OF DRINKS
100	1.6
120	1.7
160	2.3
180	2.5
200	3.2

OTHER BLOOD-ALCOHOL LEVELS:
0.08 - Presumed drunk; additional evidence needed for prosecution
0.05 to 0.08 - No presumption; driver can be convicted in there is other evidence of intoxication.
Below 0.05 - Presumed sober.
Drivers 17 years of age or younger are legally drunk if their BAC reaches 0.06.

 A drink is 12 ounces of beer, 5 ounces of wine, or 1.5 ounces of liquor.
Rate of metabolism, sex, tolerance for alcohol, and amount of food in stomach can make BAC levels vary greatly among individuals.

Army to re-emphasize leadership principles, improve human relations

By Gerry J. Gilmore
Army News Service

WASHINGTON — Acting upon recommendations of two reports provided to its top civilian, the Army announced Thursday it will reemphasize the importance of active leadership to improve human relations, revamp recruit Soldierization training and the drill sergeant selection process, and provide commanders with improved methods to prevent sexual harassment and other inappropriate treatment of Soldiers.

Secretary of the Army Togo D. West Jr. in November directed the formation of the Senior Review Panel on Sexual Harassment and the Army Inspector General's "Special Inspection of Initial Entry Training Equal Opportunity and Sexual Harassment Policies and Procedures."

West took the actions shortly after alleged sexual harassment and misconduct incidents at Aberdeen Proving Ground, Md., were made public by the Army Nov. 7 last year.

The Army Human Relations Action Plan addresses the findings and recommendations of both reports, ongoing actions and actions to be taken, with dates for completion, to make the Army a better place for soldiers. Accompanied by Army Chief of Staff Gen. Dennis J. Reimer, West announced Thursday key findings of the reports and ongoing and planned actions to address the issues raised during the eight-month-long study.

Key findings are:

•Sexual harassment exists throughout the Army, crossing gender, rank and racial lines; gender discrimination is more common than is sexual harassment.

•Army leaders are the critical factor in creating, maintaining and enforcing an environment of respect and dignity in the Army; too many leaders have failed to gain the trust of their Soldiers.

•The Army lacks institutional commitment to the Equal Opportunity (EO) program and Soldiers distrust the EO complaint system.

•The overwhelming majority of drill sergeants and instructors perform competently and well, but respect as an Army

NATIONAL TRAINING CENTER

3rd Brigade returns from training

By Sgt. Marc G. Turchin
Bayonet staff writer

For the past several weeks, the 3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division (Mechanized) Soldiers trained in the Mojave Desert at the National Training Center (NTC), Fort Irwin, Calif.

Each year the brigade spends time in the desert improving every Soldier's basic task skills at the brigade level.

The first week is spent issuing and maintaining equipment and conducting Reception Staging Onward Movement and Integration Procedures. The next two weeks are used to execute tactical missions. Included in this period are force-on-force and live-fire exercises. Cleaning and turning in equipment and preparing for the return back to Fort Benning encompasses the last week at NTC.

"NTC is really the only place you can exercise all components of the brigade," said brigade commander Col. Jack Gardner.

Although the Soldiers deploy as a brigade, the exercises evaluates every Soldier at every level.

"You deploy as a brigade, you fight as a brigade and then each one of the battalion's underneath executes it's piece of the mission," Gardner said.

When it was done, Gardner said the units did a great job and every one of the missions was completed. According to Gardner some things went very well and some things need to be improved.

"The things that did not go well did not really surprise us," he said.

"At each level, there are only a handful of things you really have to be good at and NTC helped refine our focus," Gardner said.

A 3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division M-1A1 Abrams tank manuevers at NTC.

To ensure the brigade can accomplish it's goals, Gardner said, units must continue to practice each of their core skills. "The deployment gives them the chance to practice their individual and collective skills and see how they relate to the overall brigade," he said. It also gives the Soldiers a chance to go through the deployment process and operate in adverse conditions," Gardner said.

He said he is not excluded from having to practice and become proficient at individual skills. He said he had to constantly drive the planning process, give everyone at every level planning time and tracked the battle effectively enough to make correct decisions.

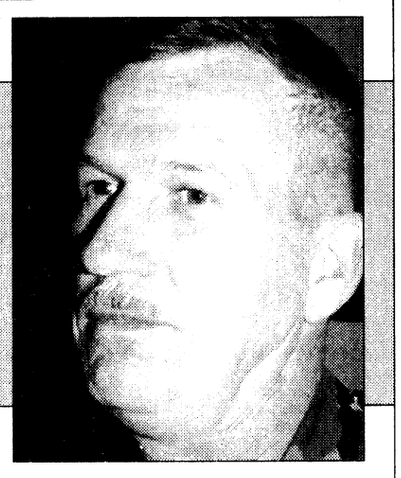
The NTC shifted focus from task force to brigade operations several years ago and is a productive exercise because of what the brigade learns about itself, Gardner said.

A lot of the knowledge learned comes from the Observation Controllers (OCs).

After every exercise, at almost every level, the OCs, who are stationed at NTC and see all the units who come through there, conduct After Action Reviews to get feedback.

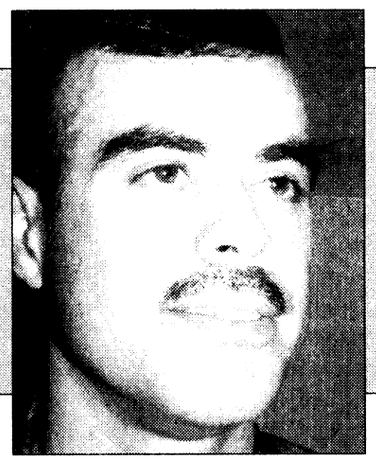
"They tell you what you did well and where you need to improve," Gardner said.

Now that the brigade has returned, they are training in the areas they need to improve and are preparing for future missions.



The near future for the brigade includes the brigade going on Division Ready Brigade with a requirement to be able to deploy in 18 hours.

VARIOUS VOICES



What should be done to change the PCS or ETS process?

Sgt. 1st Class Edwin F. Nieves, 30th Adjutant General Detachment — "Fort Benning has the best system. You get appointments here as opposed to getting a piece of paper telling you where to go at other places."

Sgt. 1st Class John H. Ohrt, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment — "Soldiers with families need more advanced notification."

Sgt. 1st Class Victor Negron, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 11th Infantry Regiment — "I'm getting ready to PCS to Korea and I was notified with plenty of time."

Master Sgt. Gregory J. Newer, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 11th Infantry Regiment — "I've never had any problems with PCS moves. I've always taken advantage of the sponsorship program available at the new installation."

Spc. Michael T. Johnson, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 11th Infantry Regiment — "The ACAP class I went to at Fort Carson, Col., had problems. It didn't give enough information about writing resumes."

Sgt. 1st Class Benjamin McArthur, Company A, 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment — "Everyone has problems clearing the Central Issue Facility. FORSCOM units should not be looked at so clearly because the equipment is used more often."

GENDER-INTEGRATED TRAINING

More problems arise than it's worth

By Sgt. K. Allen Whiteacre
Fort Gordon Public Affairs Office

Male-chauvinist pig? Okay, I plead guilty, but give me the opportunity to bring up a few ideas.

Gender-integrated basic training is not an effective way to train soldiers. It may work in the Air Force or the Navy, but the Army's unique mission is not served by mixed basic training. Gender-integrated training in the Army is contrary to the Army battle cry of "Train as we fight."

To date, the Army does not allow women to serve in direct-combat roles. Basic training consists of eight weeks of direct-combat-oriented training, including digging foxholes, marksmanship training and squad tactics. In the Army we are soldiers first, and that is what we learn first. Unless there is a major change in policy, there will only be one gender in the foxhole when we fight. If we want to train as we fight, then basic should be segregated.

There really is no hard statistical information on the effectiveness of mixed training.

Throughout history there are examples of women fighting in the military.

There are several stories about brave and competent women winning the day, but women in the military is a given. Army officials have stated the military would not be able to operate without women. However, that doesn't mean they need the same training.

commentary

Presently, the only people who go to airborne school are those who have a need for it. If that is the case, why should women have the same basic training as men when their combat roles will be different?

Basic training is also about leadership. How to lead, how to be led — all taught the Army way. According to Dr. Pat Heim, author of "Breaking the Glass Ceiling" and an expert in gender-integration in the workplace, men and women respond differently to leadership. So while learning about combat leadership in basic, the actual training is even less realistic because of the influence and adjustment of gender-integration.

Okay, what about sex? Is there anyone who actually believes that in a gender-integrated basic-training environment there aren't distractions based on sex? Basic training should be a complete immersion in military ways in a protected environment. It should not be a social experiment to see what works and what doesn't.

Psychologists believe people often bond when placed in stressful situations. City blackouts, hostage situations and the like have often led to relationships which otherwise would not have occurred. Does the Army, which creates a stressful situation in basic, want men and women getting involved when they otherwise wouldn't?

A 17-year-old away from home for the first time faced with the pressures of basic won't become involved with the opposite sex? That is not what the research says. The Army surveyed integrated basic training in 1995 and determined soldiers did better on the Army Physical Fitness Test in a mixed environment, than previous classes that trained separately.

Well, that's great news. But, basic is about more than physical fitness. It's about unit cohesion, teamwork and espirit de corps. Why did the soldiers do better? Were they trying to impress each other? Was it about competition? Does competition between the sexes promote teamwork? I don't think so.

Separate-but-equal basic training gives men and women a chance to learn good teamwork and leadership skills without the distraction of unnecessary sexual tension. That is something we owe all recruits. Fully integrated Advanced Individual Training allows men and women to interact in their roles, but after they have been indoctrinated into the military.

Basic training is teamwork in its purest form. Unit members eat together, sleep together, even shower together — except in integrated training units, they don't shower or sleep together, do they? So, how do you create that intense unit cohesion if 25 percent of the unit spends one-third of the day somewhere else? Integrated basic isn't building unit cohesion, it is diluting the training process through separation.

Training and Doctrine Command created the gender-integrated training steering committee to examine the conduct of Basic Combat Training and to recommend whether, and how, training policies should be altered to assure the successful long-term implementation of gender-integrated Basic Combat Training. Yet, even with those precautions, sexual harassment occurred in a mixed environment. Maybe the only fix is to separate trainees in basic. If that is true and saying it makes me a male chauvinist pig, well then, so be it.

Co-ed training can be beneficial for both genders

By Staff Sgt. Kathleen T. Ollander
Fort Gordon Public Affairs Office

Train as you fight — one of the most basic tenants of American military doctrine.

Why, then, is there so much hullaballoo about co-ed basic training?

With the repeal of combat-exclusion laws in 1994, this country will never again be faced with sending its "boys off to war" while women stay home and keep the home fires burning.

True, women don't serve in ground-combat units (yet), but on the modern battlefield, the line between "combat" and "combat-support" jobs is a thin line indeed.

That said, knowing we will fight in gender-integrated units, why on earth would we even consider training in non-gender-integrated units?

The military should face this issue the same way it faced the racial-integration issue. Define the ground rules and punish those that break them. Granted, it was a long and difficult process; but no one said gender-integration was going to be easy, either.

To say men and women will always have sex when in close proximity to each other is ludicrous. The issue is discipline, not sex. Leadership needs to be strong enough to make examples of those disregarding the rules.

To say gender-integrated training is the cause of sexual harassment is equally ludicrous. Same deal -- punish those breaking the rules.

commentary

We need to make recruits understand that a "boys-will-be-boys attitude" won't be tolerated at any level. The best way to do this is start building a foundation of understanding and acceptance at the earliest level — for us, that's basic training.

Several years ago, I deployed to Macedonia with an infantry task force. This was within months of the repeal of the combat exclusion laws that allowed women to serve in support positions in combat units. The men I served with had never trained or worked with women.

Frankly, they didn't know how to treat me, so when they did deal with me, it was while walking on eggshells.

One example of this was sleeping arrangements on observation posts. When I was required to spend the night on an observation post, instead of just letting me throw my sleeping bag where I could find room and going to sleep, the command required the soldiers to clear out a CONEX (a small temporary building) for me to sleep in.

The soldiers assigned to the OPs were already sleeping four to a CONEX. Making room for me meant doubling up for them. That built a lot of resentment among the men in the unit — not a very happy way to spend six months.

But was I at fault for just wanting to do my job? Or was it a lack of understanding that I was just a soldier like them — tired?

On deployments with military intelligence, military police and signal units — units commonly having higher percentages of women — sleeping arrangements are not an issue. Folks throw their cots and sleeping bags where they fall and sleep — mindless of the gender of the person sleeping next to them. Everyone is just smart enough not to undress with a person of the opposite sex in the tent.

Even during long field exercises, sleeping arrangements aren't an issue.

Women aren't going away in the military, and the best way to make integration as smooth and effective as possible, and eliminate sexual-harassment in the process, is to start right from the beginning ... when a soldier is inducted.

It's time we all wake up and realize the future is here and that "Soldier" is a gender-neutral word.

Responsibility for one's actions is a thing of the past

By Paul Stone
American Forces Press Service

Accountability. It's a word that doesn't echo enough in our society and one that deserves examination.

We have, during the past 20 or so years, become a nation of blamers — always looking to someone or something beyond our control to explain our professional inadequacies, personal tragedies and moral deficiencies.

We can barely pick up a paper or watch the news without hearing about some politician, professional athlete or celebrity who has taken a wrong turn.

Yet inevitably, from infidelity to drug abuse to petty crimes to personal injuries to something as simple as a traffic ticket, it wasn't their fault.

commentary

We blame racism, sexism, ageism, the schools, our parents, our spouses, our siblings, our co-workers, our supervisors, our doctors, our neighbors, our pets, our wealth and our poverty.

We blame too much alcohol, too much marijuana, too much cocaine, too much sugar or too much caffeine.

We blame the government, the credit card companies, the courts, the police, the corporate giants, the media, the church, the environment, the weather, the traffic, the alignment of the planets and the chemical imbalance in our bodies, etc., ad nausea.

We blame everyone but ourselves, shrinking from everything except lawsuits.

This does not mean it is never appropriate to look outside ourselves for answers, but looking only outside is convenient.

Searching inside is tortuous but a more worthwhile journey, because understanding occurs in the quiet of one's mind, with the solemnity of sober reflection.

Looking inside, we see the events of our lives, good and bad, are not individual and separate in time and space, but truly part of a web of choices and decisions we have made.

Looking inside, in short, encourages accountability.

Whether we are responsible for a squad, company, brigade, flight, wing, fleet or just ourselves, we need to be personally and professionally accountable.

Just as we enthusiastically accept credit for the pleasurable events in our lives, so too we must accept responsibility for those which bring us pain.

SOA plans open house, parade, Cena Tipica

By Capt. Kevin McIver
SOA Public Affairs Office

It's all about music, dancing, good food and new friends. It's knowing there's more to America than the U.S.A.

It's the School of the Americas'annual Open House, Parade of Nations and Cena Tipica, Sept. 18 and 19.

The SOA Open House is a cultural exposition, given by all the Latin American countries and territories represented at SOA. Classes of school children, as well as the general public of the Columbus area, are welcome to see the 19 booths displaying folk art maps and treasures of Latin America.

Practice your Spanish or let one of SOA's many escorts translate as you learn from the various foreign students and instructors about their homes.

The Open House will run from 8:30 a.m. to 2 p.m. to Sept 18 at the Faith Middle School gymnasium, on Fort Benning.

For more information, call Cecilia Alexander at 545-1285.

The Cena Tipica is a Latin American dinner at the South Hall of the Columbus Convention and Trade Center — the Ironworks, Sept. 19. Attendance requires a ticket.

Kicking off the dinner is the Parade of Nations, which gives SOA's 19 nationalities a chance to show off their traditional dances.

The Parade of Nations will run 7 to 8 p.m. Sept 19.

The number of tickets to the Cena Tipica is limited. SOA personnel, their families and distinguished military and civilian supporters of the school will have first chance at buying the $25 tickets.

For ticket information, call Major Roger Barros at 545-7840.

AUSA to sponsor fish fry Sept 26

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Just two weeks remain before the annual Association of the U.S. Army Fish Fry at Uchee Creek and the drawing for a brand new truck or car.

The $10 fish fry tickets are being sold by unit representatives along with the $1 raffle tickets that will purchase the chance to win a new car or truck valued at $15,000.

While the lucky ticket holder need not be present to win, he or she will miss out on a lot of fellowship, fish and liquid refreshments.

The fish fry is being catered by Captain Tom's and Bill Heard is helping sponsor it.

Those who cannot track down a unit representative to buy a raffle ticket can also get them at the Main Mall on weekends or in Room 601 of Infantry Hall during normal business hours.

Starting Monday, Carl Gregory Honda will have it's Civic LX four-door on display at the 36th Engineer Group and Jay Mazda will have its SE5 pickup truck available for view at the NCO Academy.

Other vehicles that are being offered as prizes include a Dakota Sport Pickup Truck, and Hyundai Elantra, both from Carl Gregory.

AUSA is conducting the car or truck raffle to raise money to send Soldiers to this year's national convention in Washington, D.C. in October.

Other vehicles to chose from are a Chevy S-10 pickup, Bill Heard Chevrolet; Ford Escort ZX2, Freeway Ford; Isuzu Pickup, Gateway Isuzu; Toyota Tacoma Pickup, Jay Toyota; Nissan Pickup, X-cab, Mike Collins Nissan; or Saturn SC-1 Coupe, Saturn of Columbus.

In addition to the minimum $15,000 price tag, title and tag fees will also be paid for.

Army Marksmanship Unit changes command

By Paula J. Randall Pagan
USAMU Public Affairs Office

The new commander of the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit of Fort Benning, Ga., and his family have come home.

Col. Archibald V. Arnold III, an Infantryman and former Infantry battalion commander with Fort Benning's 197th Infantry Brigade, assumed command of the Army Marksmanship Unit in a ceremony conducted Sept. 3 at the Pool International Shooting Complex on Fort Benning.

The ceremony's host and guest speaker was Brig. Gen. Evan R. Gaddis, commander of the U.S. Army Community and Family Support Center in Arlington, Va., the major command of the USAMU.

Gaddis described Arnold as a champion during his remarks.

"We are welcoming another champion to your ranks — your new commander, Col. Archibald Vincent Arnold III.

"I can tell you first hand that he is one of the finest. He's first an Infantryman and he's a champion among leaders," Gaddis continued. "Colonel Arnold was chosen to lead this great unit, to honor its traditions, to ensure its welcome as a member of the Fort Benning family and to promote the Army's credentials — and our credentials are our soldiers."

In his remarks, Arnold said, "We're absolutely delighted to once again be stationed at Fort Benning and the Columbus-Phenix City area. It's great to be back at the Home of the Infantry and it's just great to be back home again. More importantly, it's a very special privilege to be assigned to the Army Marksmanship Unit, a truly outstanding outfit."

Arnold thanked Fort Benning Commanding General Maj. Gen. Carl F. Ernst and the Infantry School and Center staff for being present at the ceremony, adding, "You can count on the AMU to likewise honor the privilege of being quartered on the Army's finest installation. I promise that we will d our fair share to keep it that way."

In one of the highlights of the ceremony, the members of the Marksmanship Unit awarded Arnold the coveted Black Hat — USAMU's symbol of a champion. USAMU soldiers earn the Black Hat by completing the Instructor Training Course, scoring at least a 225 on the Army Physical Fitness Test and by achieving shooting success at a match.

USAMU International Rifle Team Coach William E. Krilling, a retired master sergeant and recipient of the Distinguished Service Cross, presented the Black Hat with its certificate to Arnold. The unit also presented a bouquet of yellow roses to Mrs. Arnold.

Arnold addressed the soldiers of the USAMU, "My pledge is that I will change that - that I will, as you have, earn the privilege of wearing this hat by doing my best to help produce individuals and teams who will be winners in national, international, and most importantly, Olympic competition."

Army: To re-emphasize leadership principles core value is not well institutionalized in the initial entry training process.

"We can solve the challenges of sexual harassment and sexual mistrust," West said. "The first thing we must do is respect the contributions and patriotism of every one of our Soldiers and inspire in them a similar consideration for one another."

The action plan will establish an Army environment where Soldiers treat one another with dignity and respect and combine individual talents for team success. A successful human relations climate is one that:

•Maximizes the Soldiers' awareness of how their individual actions affect others;

•Emphasizes respect between and for Soldiers of all races, creeds, gender, or national and ethnic heritage;

•Enables Soldiers to clearly understand the linkage between their actions toward others, and their unit's ability to accomplish the mission.

"Plain and simple," said Reimer, "this is a leadership issue and it will be addressed as such. Our leaders understand that our soldiers are our most precious assets and each soldier in the Army must be treated with dignity and respect so that they can make the greatest possible contribution to the entire Army team."

Both the IG and senior review teams said the Army's Soldiers are trained and ready to perform any assigned mission, effectively and efficiently, anywhere in the world, West said during today's Pentagon press conference. He noted, however, that leaders need to do more "to create and maintain an environment wherein America's young men and women can achieve their own highest potential ... to be all they can be."

The Army is taking initiatives designed to combat sexual harassment and gender discrimination, West said. The initiatives, according to West, are "designed to again, put the Army out front in promoting and building a team consistent with our core values."

The Secretary of the Army and Chief of Staff will receive periodic updates on the status of implementing the changes. The Assistant Secretary of the Army for Manpower and Reserve Affairs will have an updated study for review in about 12-18 months.

West formed the seven-member review panel and named retired Maj. Gen. Richard S. Siegfried, the former Deputy Inspector General of the U.S. Army as chairman. From January through May 1997, the panel members visited 59 stateside and overseas installations and locations to conduct an in depth, comprehensive review of the Army's policies on sexual harassment and current processes. Thirty-thousand respondents participated in the effort, the largest and most comprehensive of its kind ever undertaken by the Army.

West also directed Army Inspector General Lt. Gen. Jared L. Bates to assess current sexual harassment policies and procedures at all basic and advanced individual training installations, and throughout the Army's training base. IG teams visited training installations across the Army, including Aberdeen, from December 1996 through March 1997.

Both reports stressed proactive leadership is key in preventing sexual harassment, gender discrimination and other inappropriate behavior. Reimer, the Army's top military officer, is active in refocusing all leaders on their personal leadership responsibilities to promote an Army environment where all Soldiers are provided due respect and proper treatment.

Reimer has introduced a 'Living Army Values' video and Ethical Climate Assessment Survey to senior Army leaders, reinforced Character Development and Consideration of Others programs, published a 'Leadership and Change in a Values-Based Army' pamphlet and distributed a four-page memorandum to all Army leaders highlighting their responsibility in leading the Army through change. In January, a Sexual Harassment Chain Teaching program was conducted in units worldwide.

Field Manual 22-100, Army Leadership, is being revised to emphasize professional values. In addition, Army values and ethics are specifically addressed in the new Officer Evaluation Report due out Oct. 1 for the active component. The Noncommissioned Officer Evaluation Report will also undergo a review to align its values with those in the leadership doctrine.

"We will continue to stress three fundamental principles," said Reimer, "teamwork, discipline and values. We have first-class leaders and a superb Army. The magnificent performance of our soldiers around the world is testimony to that — they are our credentials."

Army offers 'battle plan' for combating sexual harassment, discrimination

USAIC Public Affairs Office

WASHINGTON — The Army Human Relations Action Plan released today addresses findings from reports submitted to the Secretary of the Army by the Senior Review Panel on Sexual Harassment and the Inspector General Task Force which investigated initial entry training.

Based on the plan, initiatives the Army plans to take to combat sexual harassment and discrimination include:

•The Army Chief of Staff has appointed the Deputy Chief of Staff for Personnel as the Army's staff agency with responsibility for leadership, leader development and human relations. The Secretary of the Army has given oversight responsibility to the Assistant Secretary of the Army for Manpower and Reserve Affairs.

•A brigadier general has been named director of the Army's Human Resources Directorate. He is supported by two colonels in positions on the Human Relations Task Force.

AR 600-20, Army Command Policy, is being rewritten to strengthen human relations areas and require that commanders conduct climate assessments within 90 days of assuming command (180 days for Reserve Component). The assessment examines a command's morale, teamwork and communication.

•The Chief of Staff instituted the Character Development XXI program, which refocuses the Army on its institutional values of honor, duty, integrity, loyalty, courage, selfless service and respect. FM 22-100, Army Leadership, is being revised to emphasize the Army's core values.

•Fielded the Living Army Values Video, which discusses the history of Army values and current societal and organizational conditions that warrant renewed emphasis on Army values.

•The Secretary of the Army has approved increased staffing for Human Relations and Equal Opportunity positions at Army, MACOM, Corps, Division, Brigade and Installations.

•Equal Opportunity complaint procedures were completely revised to establish a more effective timeline. Whistleblower protection was also revised to ensure protection of complainants against retribution. The revisions will be included in the new AR 600-20.

•Chief of Staff tasked U.S. Army Training and Doctrine Command to add an additional week to Initial Entry Training to allow for more intense and rigorous Soldierization.

•Implemented a new drill sergeant program of instruction in March 1997, which includes 10.5 additional hours in Human Relations training.

•Assign a three-star deputy commanding general to U.S. Army Training and Doctrine Command at Fort Monroe, Va. To serve as a watchdog over the Army's training centers.

•Toughen the drill sergeant selection process to include a personnel records review, requirement that a Lt. Col. or above personally certify candidates meet selection criteria and demonstrate requisite leadership potential, and require mental evaluations for both volunteer and nonvolunteer drill sergeant selectees.

•Implement follow-on human relations training for advanced individual training that is longer than eight weeks, where students require more refresher training than do those in shorter-length AITs.

•Continue to publish command information addressing the intensive ongoing Army efforts to eliminate sexual harassment to support equal opportunity.

Hispanic American Heritage activities set

The Fort Benning Equal Opportunity Office is planning a Hispanic American Heritage luncheon at 11 a.m. Tuesday at the Officers' Club.

Command Sgt. Maj. Ricardo F. Layne from the School of the Americas will speak.

The menu for the luncheon is roast pork, yellow rice with gondulas and chicken, tossed salad, dinner rolls, tropical fruit and lemonade.

Tickets for the luncheon cost $7 and are available from an Equal Opportunity advisor or from the Equal Opportunity Office.

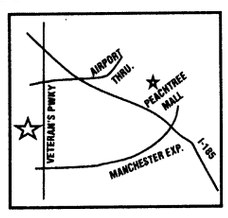
For more information, call Sgt. 1st. Class Terry Thomas at 545-3196 or 545-6665.

Claims deadline set

The Office of the Staff Judge Advocate, Claims Office, has announced that Wednesday is the last day claims may be paid during fiscal year 1997.

Claims submitted prior to Wednesday are still being processed and will not be payable until funds are approved for fiscal year 1998.

The Claims Office expect funds to be available Oct. 1997.



Claims ready for submission after Wednesday should still be submitted, but will take longer to process for payment.

Ranger School: Changes in instruction bring more realism, added training

By Sgt. Marc G. Turchin
Bayonet staff writer

It's an ordinary afternoon in Harmony Church. The Georgia heat is sweltering and black clouds are moving in from the northwest.

The daily duties of the Ranger Training Brigade continue; training Soldiers to be rangers.

In a break room right around the corner from the brigade commander's office a television is on. A civilian employee is filling her black ranger coffee mug with fresh coffee when a news flash comes across the screen.

She turns her head quickly to find out what's going on.

"This is Fox News ... a U.S. military advisor to the island country of Cortina has been executed." The employee gasps in disbelief. The People's National Revolutionary Movement (PNRM) executed the advisor to get back at the U.S. for supporting the country's government.

The news report goes to a video from the island country.

An American Soldier is shown being taken out of an in-ground holding cell.

"I've done nothing wrong," screams the Soldier. "I stand for the principles of democracy," howls the prisoner as he is dragged to an unspecific sight and is executed.

This television scenario is what new ranger students will see and follow as their mission until graduation.

The fictional storyline provides the students a real-world aspect as they train to be rangers, said Lt. Col. Eric D. Hutchings, 4th Ranger Training Battalion (RTB) Commander.

"The enemy the students will operate against is introduced by the television scenario," Hutchings said.

In each part of the school, starting with the Fort Benning phase, the students will see media updates about this situation. Those intelligence updates will set up the conditions for subsequent student actions in the field training exercise.

Students have always had intelligence reports leading them through the school, but the new changes make the training more realistic.

"The intelligence scenario that drives the three-phase course is a solid framework. We are just hanging more panels on that framework and further elaborating," Hutchings said.

During the Fort Benning phase, the students stop the PNRM movement just prior to them overtaking the host government of Cortina. The students will spend the rest of the phases pursuing the PNRM extremists in outlying areas.

But this is not the only addition to the Ranger School.

Ranger instructors and cadre members spent the last few months constructing nine new objectives.

The objectives are custom-built for the Ranger School.

One objective includes an air defense station and another is a radio free PNRM radio station. All objectives have trenches, tunnels, concertina wire and are accessible from almost any direction — something the instructors had trouble with when using the old objectives.

"The objectives are more geared towards Third World countries," said Sgt. 1st Class Matthew J. Donahue, platoon sergeant with Co. A, 4th RTB. "It really adds to the student training."

The objectives also give the cadre an enhanced way of training the students.

"They are real-world target templates," said Sgt. 1st Class Clark H. Swedberg, platoon sergeant for Merrill's Platoon — an opposing force that acts as the enemy for the ranger students.

When the old objectives were in use, Swedberg said, the platoon used certain tactics.

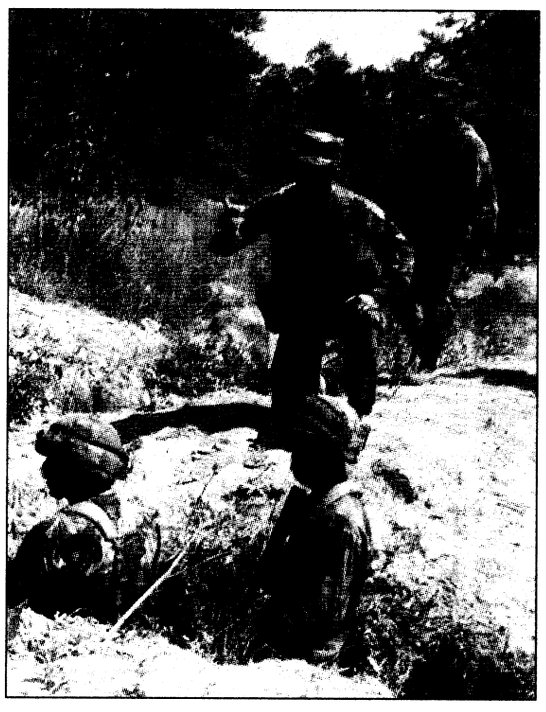
"The new design of the school allows the cadre in Merrill's Platoon to fight the students like in the real world," Swedberg said. "This helps the students and the opposing force cadre."

The objectives have been carefully planned out, Donahue said.

"If the students don't do everything properly, they'll miss something," he said. "There's hidden checkpoints and underground munition dumps. It's all very real."

The realism of the training is the heart of the revisions being conducted at the RTB, Hutchings said.

"The improved realism is a base to implement some of the new changes," he said.



Other new aspects of the period of instruction include the addition of boxing training, the bayonet assault course and urban training at McKenna's military operation on urban terrain site.

Hutchings said these changes, along with the new objectives, are part of planned changes.

"This will be the Ranger School of the 21st Century," he said.

Ranger students leave the area after clearing an objective.

Sgt. 1st Class John K. Farley, ranger instructor, tells the students the correct way to move while in the trenches.

Members of Merrill's platoon, the opposing force to the students, scramble to protect the objective while being attacked by ranger students.

Engineers deploy in support of NTC rotation

By 2nd Lt. Doyle A. Fontenot
63rd Eng. Co. (Combat Support Equipment), 36th Eng. Grp (Combat)

Mission accomplished, job well done the 16 Soldiers of First Platoon, 63rd Engineer Company returned to Fort Benning Aug. 30 from the Nation Training Center (NTC), Fort Irwin, Calif.

The detachment included a four dozer dig team (consisting of Cat D7G dozers and haul assets) one from each of the 586th Assault Float Bridge and the 608th Ordinance Company, and a maintenance contact team, all of the 36th Engineer Group (Combat).

The 63rd Engineer Company (Combat Support Equipment), 36th Engineer Group (Combat), finally reunited Aug. 30 after being separated for more than eight weeks.

The detachment, appropriately named the "Buffalo Blade Team" was attached to the 317th Engineer Battalion, the "Buffalo Battalion," for the NTC Rotation 97-11, which had more than 3,600 participants.

"Water and ice became a hot commodity immediately," said Staff Sgt. Bainay Apuya, the detachment NCOIC of the Blade team.

The detachments mission was to provide survivability and countermobility battle positions for the Task Forces of the 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor Regiment and 1st Battalion, 15th Infantry Regiment, 3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division (Mechanized).

The 63rd received and prepared equipment from NTC and then jumped into the 'Buffalo Battalions' convoy to battle.

"The Opposing forces were tough and skilled, but were no match for the Buffalo Blade Team," said Spc. Ruben Leiva.

The team placed more than 4.5 kilometer of anti-tank ditch, seven company team vehicle fighting positions (more than 70 positions), and survivability positions for two brigade support area tactical operations centers.

"The team was the most motivated and dug to the highest standards that I have ever seen," said Master Sgt. John Prude (Sidewinder 25), an observer controller.

"Consistently, we would recover the battlefield and move to the next mission while maintaining an operational readiness rate of well over 96 percent," said Sgt. Edgar Ruiz-Lopez.

"The 63rd always gets construction projects, but the opportunity to do combat stuff is not very likely," Ruiz-Lopez said.

During the NTC rotation, several soldiers were selected as "heroes" by the NTC observer controllers. Those soldiers are Apuya, Sgt. Paul Vedros, and Leiva.

After returning the equipment to NTC and eating one more MRE (meal ready to eat), the Buffalo Blade Team returned home.

"This will be the first time that all of the 63d Engineer Company will be together since April," said Sgt. David Smith and continued to say,

"In combat the 63rd motto is applicable, Skill to Build."

news from the front

498th Medical Company (AA)

We have another week behind us and approximately seven in front of us before the troops come home.

You have probably heard about the incident in Slovinski Brod (Slov Brod) involving Croatian civilians and U.S. troops.

I am pleased to report none of the injuries were serious, and no one from the 498th was injured.

The Soldier injured was in engineer, who received minor injuries to his eye.

The 498th, always on the ready, evacuated the Soldier to the "Blue Factory" which provides a higher level of medical care than Slov Brod.

So, don't worry, all is well. I know it is easier said then done.

Even though things are still going on over there we need to prepare for their return.

The family support group scheduled a welcome home meeting with children's activities Thursday at the Family Unit Network (FUN) Center, Building. 359.

There were arts and crafts for the children to make cards and signs for their returning loved ones.

For the grown ups there will be a meeting on Sept. 23 for coping with the stresses involved with returning spouses, with the time to be announced later.

MACH lab gets recognition

By Patti Flesher
Martin Army Community Hospital

The laboratory at Martin Army Community Hospital at Fort Benning was awarded a two-year accreditation by the Commission on Laboratory Accreditation of the College of American Pathologists (CAP), based on the results of a recent on-site inspection.

The laboratory's director was advised of this national recognition and congratulated for the "excellence of the services being provided." The laboratory at Martin Army Community Hospital is one of the more than 5,000 CAP-accredited laboratories nationwide.

The CAP Laboratory Accreditation Program, begun in the early 1960s, is recognized by the federal government as being equal to or more stringent than the government's own inspection program.

Inspectors examine the records and quality control of the laboratory for the preceding two years, as well as the education and qualifications of the total staff, the adequacy of the facilities, the equipment, laboratory safety, and laboratory management to determine how well the laboratory is serving the patient.

The College of American Pathologists is a medical society serving more than 14,500 physician members and the laboratory community throughout the world. It is the world's largest association composed exclusively of pathologists and is widely considered the leader in laboratory quality assurance. The CAP is an advocate for high-quality and cost-effective medical care.

Dentists graduate from year long course

By Susie H. Kim
Editorial assistant

Eight captains received Certificates of Achievement Aug. 22, as they completed the Advanced Education in General Dentistry.

It took 30 years to obtain this status Lt. Col. Donald E. Fanning, Assistant Director of Advanced Education in General Dentistry said.

The One Year Advanced Education Program in General Dentistry is a post doctoral program offered to selected officers during their first year of active duty.

According to Col. Marshall L. Asher, Dental Education Committee director, the students are handpicked by a competitive board selection. The students are chosen while they are still in dental school. The process begins with an application submitted by the students. Then Personnel Command in Alexandria, Va., looks over each applicant and selects the students for the program.

The program is 12 months long and is designed to develop the students into an officer while providing a higher level of dental training: making correct diagnosis and treatment of patients, patients management such as patient interaction and scheduling efficiency, and planning of and using correct technologies to treat the patients, Asher said.

"The program was designed to provide the military with the best health care provider that the nation produces and to give an opportunity to explore in a professional environment," said Col. Jon B. Rampton, guest speaker of the program.

The 30-year program has come a long way from what it is today according to Asher. In the beginning of Army Dentistry, the dentistry field was more isolated. The program began to provide a broader spectrum of dentistry to the Army community.

Because of this, the eight selected students are taught by 10 instructors each specializing in a major area of dentistry.

The training includes: about 20 percent classroom training and 80 percent clinical training. The students must complete a research paper, attend a convention and pass clinical training in order to graduate from the program.

The students admired the trainers and the training in the program. Capt. Cynthia P. Hall, a recent graduate said, "as far as the mentors and the training, I think we have the finest quality for a program like this.

The graduates are: Capt. Terry E. Callison, Capt. Charles L. Clark, Capt. Mark W. Fagan, Capt. Kurt B. Fleckenstein, Capt. Paul W. Guevara, Capt. Cynthia P. Hall, Capt. Todd S. Kimura, and Capt. Tristanne M. Spottswood.

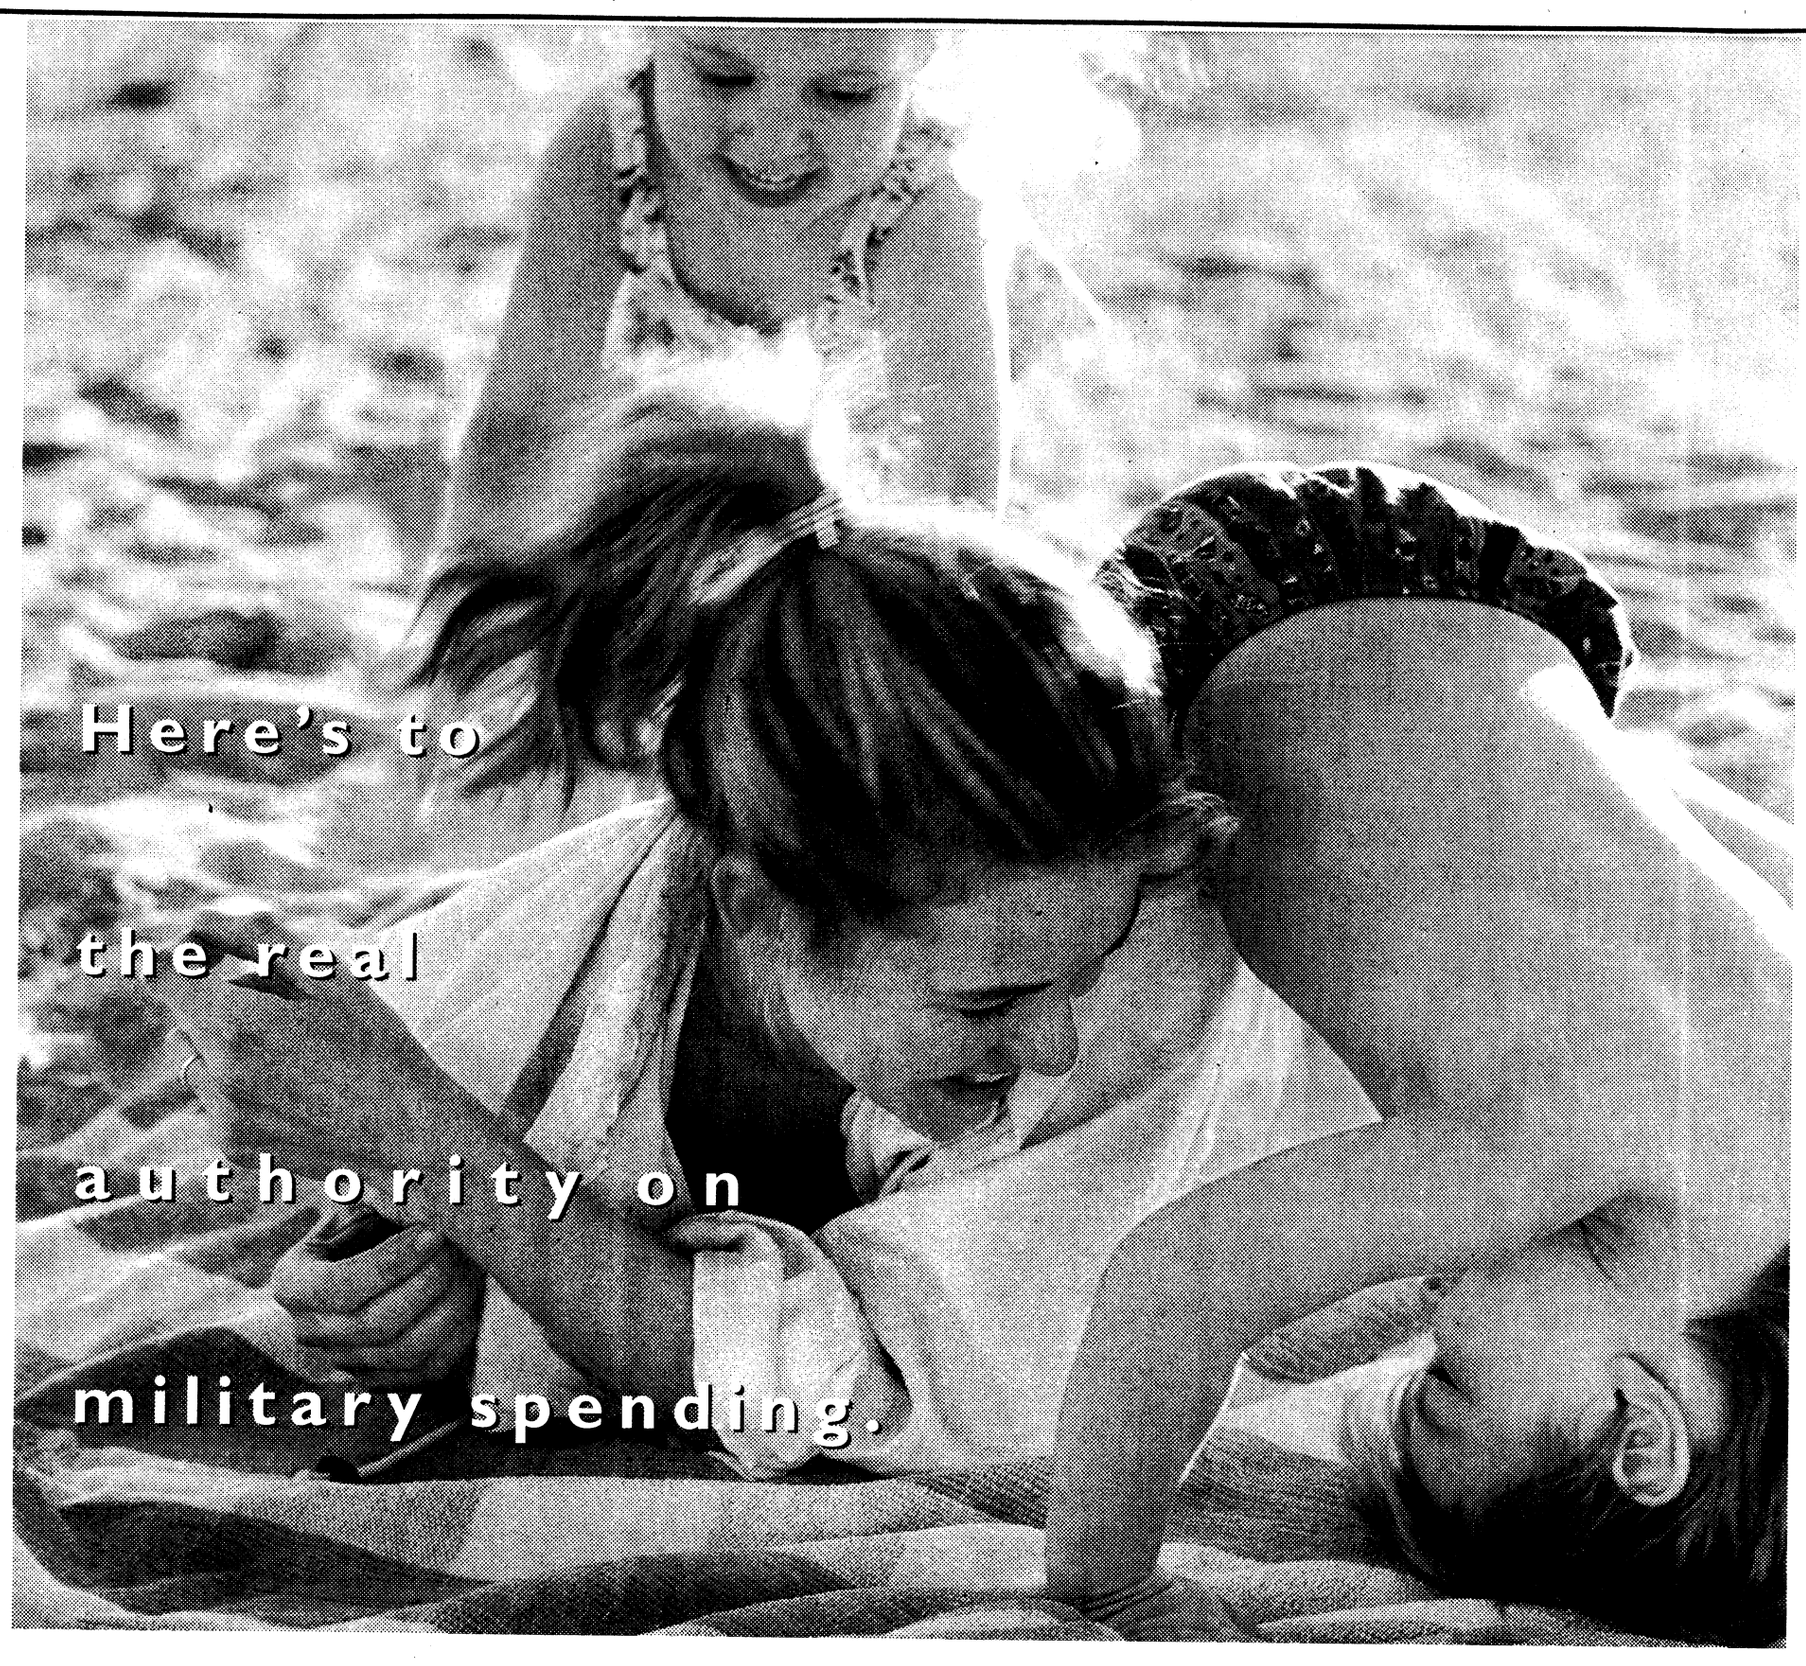
This year's dental graduates are (not shown in order) Capt. Terry E. Callison, Capt. Charles L. Clark, Capt. Mark W. Fagan, Capt. Kurt B. Fleckenstein, Capt. Paul W. Guevara, Capt. Cynthia D. Hall, Capt. Todd S. Kimura and Capt. Tristanne M. Spottswood.

Job Assistance Center sponsors Employer Day

By Chick Eagle
Army Career and Alumni Program

"Fort Benning's Job Assistance Center (JAC) in Soldiers' Plaza is hosting another Employer Day to give separating Soldiers and family members an opportunity to meet employers from around the local area and beyond," said Cynthia Anderson, JAC counselor assistant and Employer Day organizer.



"An important part of our job assistance mission is to offer frequent opportunities for employers and soldiers to come together for mutual benefit," she said. "Employers consistently tell us that many of their top employees are former Soldiers."

Employers who will attend is not firm but the following is a tentative list:

Home Depot, Publix, City of Columbus, Immersion Graphics, Pony Express, GreenPoint Mortgage, MetLife, SunTrust Bank, United Insurance Co. of America, Chamber of Commerce (Thomasville GA), Teleservices Resources, Quad Graphics, Tenneco Packaging, Onsight Sourcing, Burch-Lowe, Inc, Athens Clarke Co, and Bradley-Morris.

"Your purpose at a job fair is to gather information and ideas about jobs, careers, and the employment process, Anderson said. If you are close to your ETS date you should attend with copies of your resume to give promising employers. However, even if you don't have your resume prepared you should attend and learn as much as possible about companies and the skills and experience they seek in new employees," Anderson said.

For more information please call the ACAP Job Assistance Center, 545-2308, or visit Building 2634 in Soldiers Plaza.

Fort Benning Schools receive good grade

By Staff Sgt. Lori Egan
Bayonet editor

Fort Benning Schools' students, parents and teachers have a reason to celebrate — not only is school back in session but the scores on the Iowa Test of Basic Skills (ITBS) are in and Fort Benning students scores were above average.

The ITBS tests children from the first to the eighth grade in areas from reading comprehension, language usage and expression to problem solving, science and math computation.

The majority of the Fort Benning students' scores are above the 50th percentile, said Kathy Einhorn, director of Curriculum at Fort Benning Schools.

One of Fort Benning strengths remains problem-solving skills.

Students across all grade levels are skilled at applying basic skills knowledge to solve problems, Einhorn said.

"The continued emphasis on math problem solving in support of our 1996-97 Department of Defense Education Activity benchmarks clearly resulted in improved performance in this area," Einhorn said.

A reason for the improvement in problem solving is the advanced training the teachers received last year in workshops on Activities in Math and Science (AIMS) and Full-Option Science System (FOSS).

AIMS is designed to help teachers prepare and manage hands-on activities that emphasize learning and enhance critical thinking and problem-solving skills, said Gail Wilson, director of Staff Development.

FOSS makes the teaching of science easy for elementary teachers, Wilson said. It offers developmentally appropriate activities for teachers to teach science concepts.

"A lot of our teachers went through the AIMS training and I do think it made a difference," Einhorn said.

The teachers also provide traditional instruction and use technology to enhance critical-thinking skills, Einhorn said.

Benchmarks for this year's schools improvement plans include an emphasis on reading and language arts while continuing work in math and science to maintain improve.

Overall our schools are comparable in performance Muscogee county comparable to the surrounding community, Einhorn said.

Schools discuss use of technology

By Erin A. Nash
Special to the Bayonet©

The Fort Benning school system's Staff Development Committee met Wednesday to discuss technology and it's application in the current school year.

Representatives from Fort Benning's six elementary schools and one middle school were on hand to hear Betty Smith discuss the Georgia Youth Science and Technology Center (GYSTC), it's programs and how it can benefit teachers in the classroom.

Smith is the regional coordinator for the Chattahoochee-Flint center.

She discussed several programs available to Fort Benning teachers.

One such program available for teachers of kindergarten, first and second grade is Science Through The Seasons, which will provide ideas for integrating science activities using Johnny Appleseed, pumpkins, and popcorn.

It will be held at Blackshear Trail Elementary School, Coredele, Ga., from 4 to 6:30 p.m. Oct. 27, Nov. 3, 10 and 17.

Mind Over Matter will be offered at Fort Benning. Teachers from grades three to five can participate in hands-on activities, all relating to states of matter. Activities will include using materials such as grow creatures, fortune fish and slime.

It will be held from 4:30 to 6:30 p.m. Sept 26 and from 8 a.m. to 3:30 p.m. Sept. 27 at the Administrative Office Training Center, 201 Custer Rd.

Special holiday programs include Pumpkins, Bats, Ghosts and More!, Science with the Pilgrims and Native Americans, and Science 'Round the Christmas Tree!.

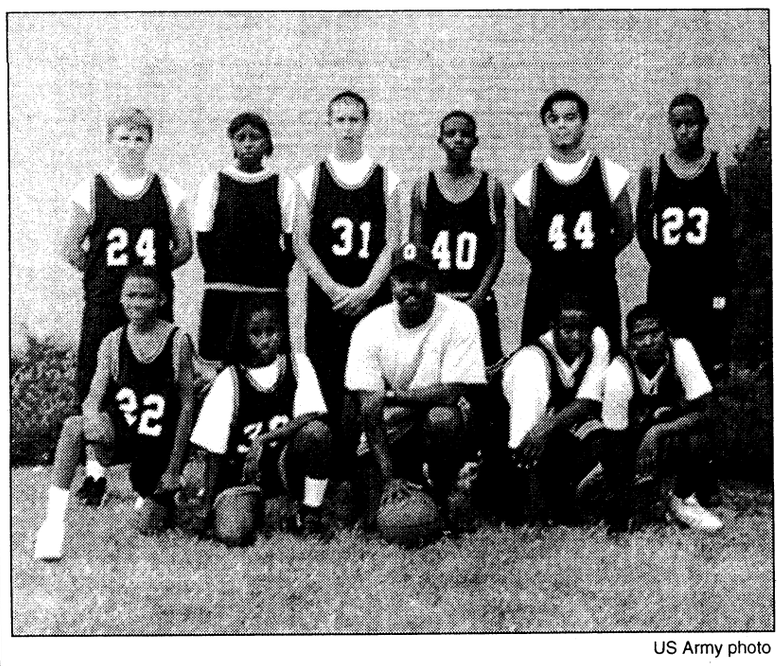
These programs will take place from 4:30 to 6 p.m, Oct. 7, Oct. 28, and Nov. 19, respectively at South Georgia Tech., in Americus, Ga.

The programs are open to Fort Benning schools.



For more information, call Smith at (912) 931-2863 or Gail Wilson at 545-8245.

Grips & Grins

How do I get my photo on this page?

To meet customer needs and requests, The Bayonet provides a Grips and Grins Page.

The newspaper receives many requests to run awards, promotions and other photos of this type, so the staff decided to designate a page just for that.

Because of the small size of our staff and the frequency and number of the events that generally produce grip-and-grin type photos, the newspaper's policy remains that we will not send a reporter to take these type of photos, but we will run those submitted by our readers.

Photos you may submit include those from events such as balls, teas, coffees, club and organizational meetings and elections, award presentations, check presentations, official parties, dinners, dining events, dances and group photos.

If you have a good-quality, black and white or color photo of an awards or promotion ceremony, sporting team, social event, etc., send it to The Bayonet, Grips and Grins Page, U.S. Army Infantry Center Public Affairs Office, Infantry Hall, Room 606, Fort Benning, Ga., 31905. No Polaroid shots please.

Bell South offers other payment locale — Tel-Tech Paging, South Lumpkin Road, accepts payments for BellSouth telephone bills. Tel-Tech is located in the Piggly Wiggly Shopping Plaza, 1807 South Lumpkin Road.

Tel-Tech is directly linked to BellSouth, so payments are immediately input into the system. If paying a regular monthly bill, the statement should be brought to Tel-Tech.

If paying a final bill, the bill can be obtained in the Utility Coordination Center, Building 2633, Soldiers Plaza, to take with you to Tel-Tech. Any questions may be directed to UCC staff at 687-9446 or 687-9447.

Debt management assistance is available — There are two non-profit agencies in Columbus that offer debt management assistance.

They will each make an evaluation of your financial status and work with your creditors, if your financial status allows. They can work with creditors to adjust payments. Soldiers can make one payment to them, and they will disburse the negotiated amount to each creditor.

•Alternative Financial Resolutions provides free debt management assistance to all clients. They can take information from you in person, by phone, or by mail. After they have made an evaluation of your financial status, they will be able to determine if you have the resources to do a debt management plan.

They will then work with your creditors to adjust payments to fit within your income and meet creditor approval. You can make one payment to them, and they will disburse the negotiated payment amounts.

You can reach Alternative Financial Resolutions by calling 323-2108, or by writing to them at Post Office Box 9364, Columbus, Ga 31908-9364.

•Consumer Credit Counseling Service (CCCS) is a department of Columbus Family Counseling Center, located at 1350 15th Avenue, across from the side of Red Lobster Restaurant.

They also negotiate with creditors, accept one payment from you, and disburse the negotiated payment amount to the creditors. The monthly fee for their service is $15. You can make an appointment with the CCCS by calling 327-3239.

CCCS evaluates your financial status to determine if you have the resources to do a debt management plan.

PRESERVE OUR CHILDLIFE

More than 1,000 children between the ages of 5 and 14 are killed annually as the result of pedestrian-motor vehicle accidents. Stay alert for children going to and coming from school this fall:

•Obey the speed limit (15 MPH on post) in school zones.

•Watch for children walking, skating or cycling.

•Stop for buses loading and unloading children.

Specialist offers lawn care tips

By Karen S. Weber
Professional Lawn Care Association of America

Fall is the time of year to fertilize your lawn, prepare for winter and get a head start on spring.

"If you want a healthy turf in the spring, you need to feed your lawn's root system in the fall," said Michael Gaffney, certified turfgrass specialist with the Professional Lawn Care Association of America.

For some turfgrasses, growth slows in the fall but the roots continue to grow even in very cold weather. The root system will thicken to provide a denser, healthier lawn in spring.

"As a general rule, feed a lawn about a month before it goes dormant," Gaffney said. "Fertilize at the right time and in the right amounts. Improper fertilization can weaken the root system." For fertilizer rates and recommendations, contact your local lawn care professional or your cooperative county extension agent.

Fertilizer provides nitrogen, phosphorus, potassium and certain key elements like iron. The root absorbs these nutrients along with air and water. Sunlight helps turn these nutrients into sugars, which are used to fuel plant processes such as maintenance and growth. Excess sugars are stored in the root system to stimulate root development during the dormant period and fuel regrowth in the spring. It's also important to regularly remove leaves from your lawn during the fall to keep the plants exposed to the sun's rays.

Gaffney said aerating the soil of cool-season turfgrasses in the fall.

Warm-season turfgrasses should be aerated during the summer when they are in their most vigorous growth period, especially if the soil seems hard and compacted.

"Healthy roots require not only water and nutrients, but oxygen as well," he said. "Aerating the soil helps break up the thatch layer and allows the roots to breathe."

Do your part for the environment, invest in a healthy, well-maintained lawn this fall. A healthy turf filters groundwater, retards the spread of fire, and absorbs pollutants, dust and pollen.

The week's article provides information on proper fluorescent tube management and upcoming schedule changes for refuse and recycling collection.

Fluorescent tube management

As we learn more about our environment and how we are adversely impacting the quality of this environment, there has been a growing concern over the proper method to dispose of fluorescent tubes. Most fluorescent tubes on the market contain mercury, a substance that can cause damage to the nervous system as well as birth defects. For this reason, care must be taken in the handling and disposal of these bulbs.

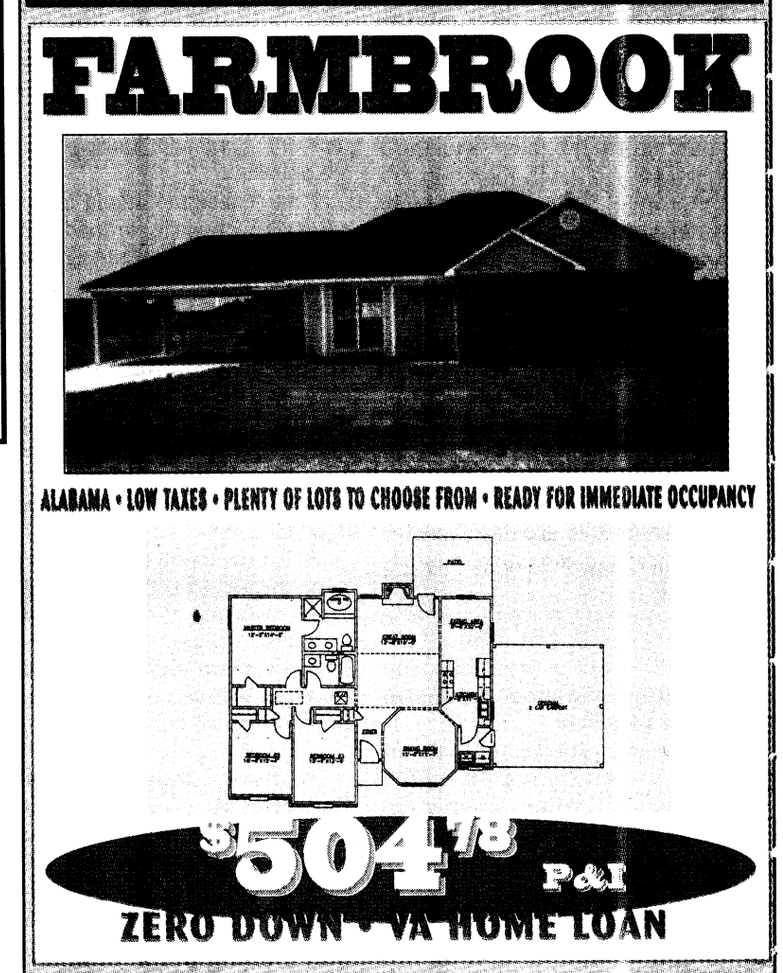
Breaking fluorescent tubes can be quite dangerous as it releases mercury into the air and poses an environmental and health hazard. If you accidentally break a fluorescent tube, ventilate the room immediately by opening a window and turning on a fan. Leave the room until all vapors have been exhausted outside. Wearing gloves, carefully sweep up broken glass and place it in a plastic bag for disposal. Any food exposed to the vapors should be thrown away. Wash your hands thoroughly with soap and water after cleaning up the glass.

Fluorescent tubes used in your home may be placed on the curb for disposal in the landfill. If possible tubes should be carefully packaged in the original packing containers to avoid breakage until they are safely in the garbage truck. Tubes should not be placed outside until just before pickup so that children will not be tempted to play with them.

More stringent rules apply to tubes generated at our work place. At work, fluorescent tubes must be managed as a hazardous waste. Tubes used at your worksite cannot be placed in dumpsters. The local DRMO sends Fort Benning's fluorescent tubes to an off-post recycler where the mercury and other chemicals are reclaimed. Fluorescent tubes should be packaged in their original container, carefully labeled with a yellow hazardous waste label, and taken to the DRMO through normal turn-in procedures. All rules pertaining to hazardous waste management apply to waste fluorescent tubes. Workers who place fluorescent tubes in dumpsters are violating the law and could be subject to criminal prosecution.

Recently, Phillips Lighting began manufacturing tubes with a low-mercury content that are not hazardous waste when they go bad. These tubes have a green cap on the end of them, making them easy to identify DPW Self Help has begun stocking these tubes for issue on-post. The ability to dispose of these "green" tubes in the normal trash and the added safety of the lower mercury content make them an attractive replacement to other fluorescent tubes.

Additional information on fluorescent tube management by military and civilian units can be obtained from the Environmental Management Division of DPW. For more information, call Deborah Gamble or Michael Nuckols at 545-4766.



Refuse and recycling collection date change

Indianhead Terrace: Effective Sept. 15, refuse and recycle collection for all residents in Indianhead Terrace will be changed from Tuesdays to Mondays. Yard waste collection will remain Mondays. Lower Davis Hills: (Kawamura, Port and Fernandez Streets only). Effective Sept. 15, refuse and recycle collection for all residents in Lower Davis Hills will be changed from Thursdays to Mondays. Yard waste collection will remain Mondays. These changes are necessary since the Fort Benning landfill closed June 1 and refuse is now hauled off post to a facility with different operational hours. For more information, call Richard Chancey, 545-4749.

Comments and questions

If you have questions or topics that you would like to be addressed in the DPW Information Corner, please contact Glenn Todd, DPW Customer Relations Specialist, 545-2117, or write to the Directorate of Public Works, Building 6, Room 409, ATTN ATZB-PMW (Glenn Todd), Fort Benning, GA 31905.

God heals heavy hearts

Chaplain (Maj.) Vance P. Theodore
School of the Americas

As I was walking to work a few weeks ago, I noticed some trees that had been damaged by a recent storm.

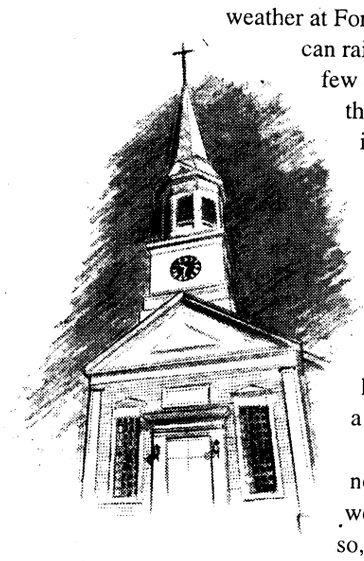
Of particular interest to me was a huge tree, which fell because of the raging winds. I passed the tree and wondered at the force that blew it down.

After walking past it, I returned to examine the break.

The inside of the tree was filled with a sawdust-like material. It looked like termites had eaten away the heart of the tree, leaving it vulnerable to the forces of nature.

On examining the tree from the outside, it looked healthy and strong; however, from the inside it was weak and failing.

Like the tree, we can appear strong on the outside, but on the inside what is our make up? Samuel 16:7 says that man looks at the outward appearance, but the Lord looks at the heart.



Are our hearts strong enough to take the raging storms of life?

Are they shielded by the armor of God? Do we believe and have faith, and hope that we can conquer life's difficulties?

I remember a particular first sergeant who constantly gave me grief. Upon my entering his office, he would, in rather strong words, invite me to leave. This happened weekly. However, I was convinced that there was something besides his gruff exterior.

After a period of a year, he began to show his other side. Here was a man affected by war, hurt by relationships, and afraid of retirement. His heart was good; however, his exterior was rough and callused.

The storms in our lives sometimes appear like the weather at Fort Benning, where it can rain in torrents for a few minutes and then the sun can shine as if nothing had happened.

However, life, though like the storms we experience, usually affects how we feel and how we perform on a daily basis.

Concerns that normally would not weaken us, can do so, when we are not prepared or when we give in to despair. Though our exterior may appear rough, the heart is what keeps us going.

The Lord understands our hearts. If our hearts are turned because of bitterness and hurt, they need to be cleansed.

If we appear strong on the outside and weak on the inside, we need that assurance greater than ourselves that we can be helped.

The Savior said, "Come unto me all ye that labor and are heavy laden and I will give you rest.

Take my yoke upon you and learn of me: for I am meek and lowly in heart: and ye shall find rest unto your souls. For my yoke is easy, and my burden is light." (Matthew 11:29-30)

Someday, I expect to see another tree growing in the place of the huge tree that was blown down by the raging storm. Its amazing what a tree can teach you.

Week focuses on prostate cancer

By Alfreta Gibson
Martin Army Community Hospital

Prostate cancer is now the most common form of cancer diagnosed in American men, yet many of them are not undergoing regular screenings for the disease.

For this reason, performer Harry Belafonte joined the fight against prostate cancer as a spokesman this year for Prostate Cancer Awareness Week. A recent prostate cancer survivor himself, Belafonte is encouraging men to take advantage of free or low-cost prostate cancer screening tests during the week of Sept. 22 to 28.

The American Cancer Society and the Prostate Cancer Education Council (PCEC), which sponsors the week, recommend that all men between the ages of 50 and 70 be tested annually for prostate cancer.

African-American men, who have the highest prostate cancer incidence rate in the world, should start annual screening at agc 35, as should men with a family history of prostate cancer.

The Prostate Health Council and American Foundation for Urologic Disease (AFUD) support the efforts of the testing program.

"I was fortunate to be diagnosed while the disease was still in its early stages," Belafonte said. "I want to educate both men and women about the importance of early detection."

Belafonte's wife, Julie, also has joined the Prostate Cancer Awareness Week campaign to encourage women to take an active role in getting men screened for the disease. "Men and women need to join together to combat this serious disease that is afflicting too many men at too late a stage to be cured," she said.

Free early detection screening tests will be offered at MACH, Urology Clinic, one of more than 500 sites across the country conducting screenings during Prostate Cancer Awareness Week.

To schedule an exam, call 544-2292.

The screenings consist of two exams that take about one minute each to perform. The combination of the two tests, a digital rectal examination (DXE) and a prostate specific antigen (PSA) blood test, can detect prostate cancer at an early stage.

"Because we have no cure for advanced prostate cancer, early diagnosis and treatment are essential," said E. David Crawford, MD, associate director for clinical activities at the University of Colorado Cancer Center and co-chairman of the PCEC. "The survival rate for early stage prostate cancer is high, so men who take the time to be screened regularly may benefit not only from broader treatment options, they could be saving their own lives."

Approximately 334,500 men in the United States will be diagnosed with prostate cancer this year. Prostate cancer also has become the second leading cause of cancer death for American men; 41,800 deaths are expected this year. Although more than 500,000 men are expected to be screened during Prostate Cancer Awareness Week 1997, this number represents only 1.5 percent of American males over age 50, all of whom should be regularly screened for the disease.

There are usually no symptoms in early prostate cancer, which is extremely difficult to detect without testing. In fact, screenings have proven to be the only reliable method of identifying the disease in its curable stages. However, typical indications of a serious prostate problem may include: weak or interrupted urine flow, inability to urinate or difficulty stopping or starting the urine flow, the need to urinate frequently, especially at night, blood in the urine or semen, burning or pain on urination, and continuing pain in the lower back, pelvis or upper thighs.

Since the first series of mass screenings was undertaken in 1989, researchers have noted an increase in the number of prostate cancer cases that have been detected early. Currently, 58 percent of all prostate cancer cases are being detected while the cancer is still localized. Patients who are diagnosed at this early stage have a 99 percent chance of surviving five years or more.

Screenings during Prostate Cancer Awareness Week also provided important research results over the years. For example, the program demonstrates that conducting the DRE and the PSA blood test together allows for more accurate prediction of prostate cancer than conducting either of these tests alone.

Yearly changes in individuals' PSA levels will be monitored by researchers to help determine which changes are part of the normal aging process and which may signify a problem. A better understanding of this question would improve the accuracy of the PSA blood test and help decrease the number of false-negative and false-positive results.

The PCEC, formed in 1989, is a partnership of physicians, health educators and patient support groups dedicated to increasing prostate cancer awareness among men and women in their lives. The AFUD is a not-for-profit organization committed to prostate cancer research and education.

The University of Colorado Cancer Center is one of 55 National Cancer institute-designated centers actively engaged in multidisciplinary research efforts to reduce cancer incidence, morbidity and mortality. Housed primarily at the CU Health Sciences Center, the CU Cancer Center conducts both basic and clinical research and education, prevention and early detection programs.

Spencer PTSA meets, solicits new members

By Jennifer Harriman
Special to the Bayonet©

The Spencer High School Parent Teacher Student Association (PTSA) is gearing up for increased membership and new activities for the 1997-98 school year.

The PTSA offers a liaison between the teachers and staff, and the parents and students of Spencer High School. It provides a means of distributing information about school activities, funding, and community events that affect the school.

"We are having good results with our membership efforts so far this year," said Deborah Gambles, a Spencer parent and PTSA communications Chairperson. "We generated a lot of interest during the Aug. 12 membership drive."

The PTSA consists of an 18-member executive board, with a faculty, student and administration representative. The general membership is open to all parents, students, teachers, and members of the community.

The PTSA was originally implemented to get parents involved in the decision-making process and to encourage greater participation in outside events that affected the school, said Gambles.

Support for the principal, chaperones for special occasions, and fund-raising were some of the functions the PTSA provided.

This year, however, the PTSA is getting ready to do all of these things and more.

"Our number one project this year is campus beautification — things like painting, picking up trash, and planting flowers," said Gambles. "If the kids have something to look forward to it will boost morale and school spirit."

There will also be fund-raisers in the form of yard sales, spaghetti dinners, and the sale of Spencer High School paraphernalia, such as T-shirts and baseball hats.

"Both parents and students can benefit by being apart of the PTSA," said Gambles.

"Parents benefit by being informed about school activities and changes," she said. "They can keep up to date on issues like academic requirements, discipline, and dress codes.

"They also have a chance to voice their concerns to the principal and an opportunity to change something they don't like," Gambles said.

"Every parent should be involved, be active, and know what's going on in their child's life," she said.

"Students have a chance to voice their opinions and interact with their teachers and parents outside of the classroom setting," said Gambles. "This helps them to feel more comfortable in the class itself."

The PTSA meets once a month in the Spencer High School auditorium.

A one-time membership fee of $4 is charged. All volunteers are welcomed.

For more information, call Deborah Gambles, PTSA communication chairperson, at 687-7677 or Judith Markell, PTSA membership chairperson, at 687-7246.

29th sponsors fishing tourney for Santa's Castle

By Jennifer Harriman
Special to the Bayonet©

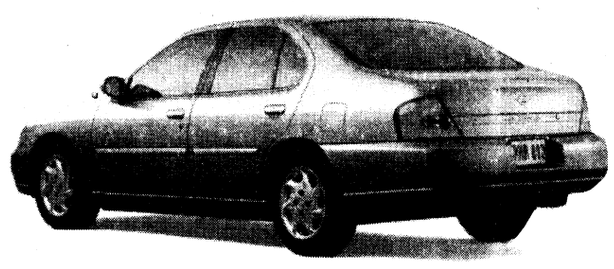
A fishing tournament to benefit Santa's Castle was held Sept. 5 at Uchee Pines Marina. It was sponsored by the 2nd Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment.

Participants from all over the tricommunity area gathered at Uchee to show support for this local charity.

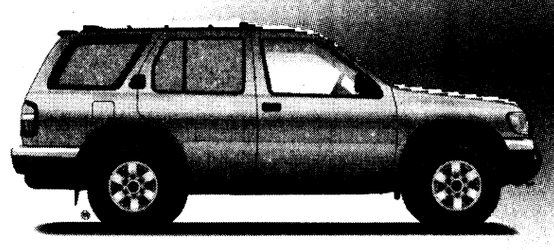
A portion of the entry fee totaling $350 was donated directly to Santa's Castle. Participants in the tournament competed for the largest fish and greatest total weight. Door prizes were also awarded to some entrants.

"It was a great success. I was glad that we could do this," said Command Sgt. Maj. Gregory Crockett, who was part of the event.

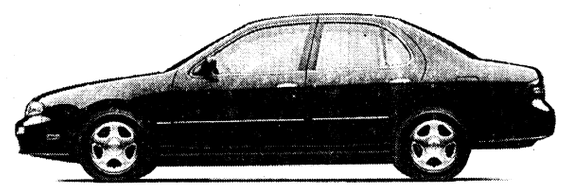
Santa's Castle is an organization on post set up to help underprivileged military children and their families obtain whatever they may need in order to have a happy Christmas, Crockett said.



"This is a great example of how the military community takes care of its own," said Crockett. "Fishing is a popular sport in Georgia, and this was a way to combine a fun activity with a worthy cause," he said.



Santa's Castle accepts cash donations, as well as donations of new or used toys, clothing, and volunteers to assemble, clean or repair these items.



"This is something the whole community can support," said Crockett.

To make a donation to Santa's Castle or to find out more information, call 545-1233.

ARMY 10-MILER

Runners qualify for race in Washington

John W. Peeler

The men's top qualifier, John Detro, navigates a steep incline during the 10-mile qualifier at Sand Hill Sept. 7.

By John W. Peeler
Special to The Bayonet©

Time trials for selection to the Fort Benning 10-miler team concluded Sept. 7 at the Santiago Fitness Center on Sand Hill with 30 competitors vying for slots to compete in the 13th annual Army 10-Miler.

The Army 10-Miler, billed as the largest 10-mile race in America, takes place at 8 a.m. Oct. 12 in Washington, D.C. The race, originally designed to promote a positive image of the U.S. Army through its commitment to physical fitness, esprit de corps and organizational excellence, donates the proceeds to Soldier and family programs.

This year's top Fort Benning runner is John Detro. He finished in first place in the qualifier posting a time of 52:47.

Detro's time in the race was more than one minute slower from the time he posted in last year's 10-miler race.

"I'm really not in my best shape," Detro said. "I just returned from 30 days at the National Training Center in California and was not able to train for the qualifier as much."

Fort Benning's top qualifier last year, Samuel Bobbitt, is currently in Korea. Bobbitt finished fourth overall in the Washington race.

"Someone is going to have to step up into the top position now," Detro said. "We also need a real strong fourth person to give us a good shot at winning."

Lt. Col. Charles Hunsaker, deputy commandant, U.S. Army Physical Fitness School is coaching the team again this year.

Detro, along with Jeffrey Tiegs, Marvin King, Stephen Redmon and Anthony Benitez qualified for the men's team with Benitez making the team as the alternate.

Kathy Towers was the top female qualifier at 1:13:51 followed by Cristina Hunt at 1:16:18, Carolyn Belveal with a time of 1:17:33 and Parrisha Scott finishing at 2:09:16.

Three unit teams competed in the men's team competition with the 2nd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment, coming in first place, the 75th Ranger Regiment coming in second and the 29th Infantry Regiment coming in third place.

In the mixed team competition, the U.S. Army Physical Fitness School came in first place and the 3rd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment finishing in second place.

Complete results for the qualifier were:

1, John Detro, 52:47
2, Jeffrey Tiegs, 54:27
3, Marvin King, 54:42
4, Stephen Redmon, 56:54
5, Anthony Benitez, 58:41
6, Thomas Goldner, 59:57
7, Peter Kranenburg, 1:00:07
8, Robert Carty, 1:01:14
9, Gerardo Medina, 1:02:36

Buick Challenge needs golf tournament volunteers

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Fort Benning is looking for people who want to have a good time, for free, Oct. 3.

That's the date for Military Appreciation Day at Callaway Gardens. Soldiers, family members, Department of Defense Civilians, reservists and guardsmen, are invited to enjoy Callaway Gardens, unit picnics and the Buick Challenge thanks to the Association of the U.S. Army, Callaway Gardens and the Buick Challenge.

All that is needed is a valid identification card.

For those from Fort Benning who need transportation, there will be a bus shuttle service. Those interested should contact their units for the schedule and to see if their units are sponsoring picnics and if so, where.

If the excitement of professional golf, the beauty of the gardens and the allure of a unit picnic aren't enough to get you to the gardens, then how about prizes. AUSA will be conducting a drawing at the golf tournament for such items as bicycles, television sets, stereo equipment and savings bonds.

For those wishing to get more involved in the tournament, placard bearers and marshals are needed.

The 11th Infantry Regiment at 545-6017 needs placard bearers for Oct. 2 and 3. Placard bearers follow the pros around with signs bearing the pro's name and score. They will receive free T-shirts and hats.

Marshals are needed for the 11th hole for each day of the tournament, plus the two pro-ams on Monday and Wednesday.

For a $51 investment, marshals receive preferred parking passes, free daily admission to the tournament, a windbreaker, golf shirt, hat, and a one time pass to Callaway Gardens and greens fees after the tournament.

Marshals are only required to work one full day or two half days to qualify for the admission and greens fees, but can volunteer to work more days.

They will help maintain crowd control at the T-boxes, on the fairway and on the greens.

Those interested should contact the Public Affairs Office at 545-2211.

Air Force beats Army to capture 1997 Armed Forces golf crown

By Krista Newman
Special to the American Forces Press Service

VANDENBERG AIR FORCE BASE, Calif. — Air Force played better in the wind Aug. 22 to beat runner-up Army by 38 strokes at the 1997 Armed Forces Golf Tournament.

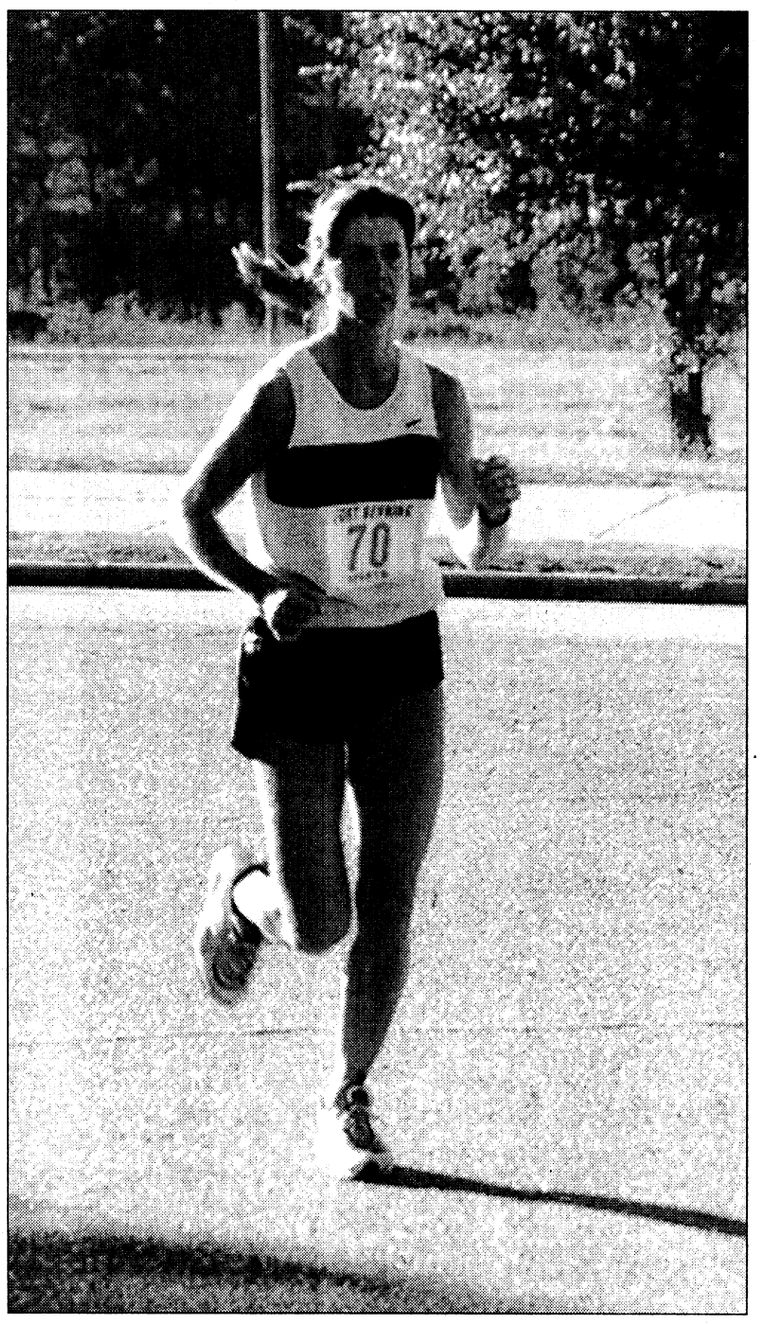
Army's Mark Johnson, San Antonio, Texas, took open division honors with a four-day total of 301. Kelly Trahan, stationed at Moody Air Force Base, Ga., took the women's crown with a 325. Air Force Tommy Sweigart, Randolph Air Force Base, Texas, took the senior title with a 306.

The competition was held at Marshallia Ranch. High winds kept scores well above par. The Navy placed third and the Marine Corps team last.

Johnson won the individual title with a first-hole birdie in a sudden death playoff against Army Randy Block, Navy Sonny Kirkwood and Air Force Mark Gardiner.

"This is the closest I've seen the interservice tournament," said Johnson, a three-time Army champion.

Trahan called the competition stressful and physically painful. "Conditions really dictate how well you play," she said.



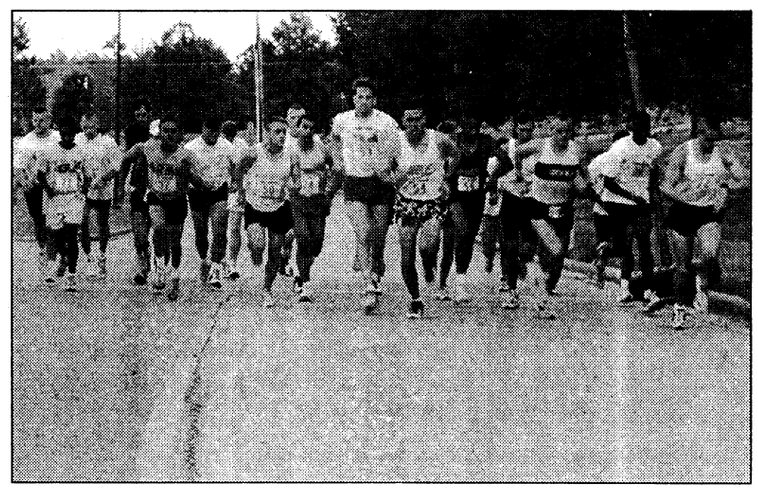
The first day of the competition became very windy as the day progressed, making it difficult for players to control direction of the ball.

"This is a lot of work. It's mentally draining," Johnson said .

"Hitting the balls is the easy part. It's the mental concentration that drains you."

The top finshers represented the American military at a regional Counseil International du Sport Militaire competition at the Royal Canadian Air Base, Trenton, Ontario. Those making up the team were Open Division: Johnson, Block, Kirkwood, Gardiner, Marine Corps Ryan Buytenhuys and Army Troy Ferguson.

Women's Division: Trahan, Air Force Susan Dillard, Navy Misty Hatley and Air Force Vera Tu. Seniors Division: Sweigart, Air Force William Connors, Marine Corps Pat Wills and Army Willia Hickson.



Cristina Hunt finished as the top female runner at 1:16:19.

Qualifier: Runners advance to race in Washington D.C.

Pool tournament benefits Santa's Castle, crowns champion

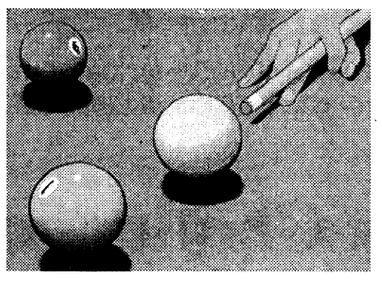
By Sgt. Jason Ruby
Better Opportunities for Single Soldiers

The evening of Aug. 14 kicked off the first 8-ball pool tournament and the crowning of champion of Fort Benning.

More than 30 entrants from all over Fort Benning competed in the tournament.

"It was a good turn out for the first year," said John Lantosh, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment.

All entrants paid a $5 entrance fee that was donated to Santa's Castle, a Fort Benning charity that helps less fortunate families during the holiday season.



The event was held at Jimmy Jack's Billiards Center and was sponsored by Jimmy Jack's owner Jimmy Sanford and Cars Unlimited owner Hudge Singletary.

Standard 8-ball ball-in-hand rules applied to the tournament.

The contest was a single elimination event giving those individuals losing their first match an opportunity to buy back into the second round and stay in the running for a trophy.

After the initial brief the shooters began the first of what was to be 32 matches. The first two rounds were played out Aug. 15 leaving just eight competitors to battle it out for the title of Champion of Fort Benning.

Those who played in the semi-final round were: Brian Keever,

U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit; Larry Overbee, Company B, 1st Bn., 29th Infantry Regiment.; D. MacFarland Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 2nd Bn., 11th Infantry Regiment.; D.C. Cotton, Company A, 1st Battalion., 11th Infantry Regiment; John Wells, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 1st. Battalion, 15th Infantry Regiment; John Lantosh, Headquarters Company, 1st Battalion., 29th Infantry Regiment; John Schmitt, 36th Engineer Group; Brian Bauer, 36th Eng. Grp., and William Kagee, 36th Eng. Grp.

All of the final matches were played on a single table one game at a time so as to limit the distractions to the shooters.

When all the smoke cleared, those left congratulated each other and agreed that all had a good time and played well and with the best of sportsmanship.

Those that took home trophies and bragging rights were: D.C. Cotton, — fourth place; Larry Overbee — third place; Brian Keever, USAMU — second place; and William Kagee, 36th Eng. Grp., was crowned the champion of Fort Benning, taking first place.

During the awards ceremony all finalists were presented a trophy by Singletary of Cars Unlimited.

The installation Command Sergeant Major Command Sgt. Maj. Mack Vereen accepted a check in the amount of $300 from Singletary on behalf of Santa's Castle.

ITB to execute changes

By Staff Sgt. Lori Egan
Bayonet editor

Fort Benning's Infantry Training Brigade plans to implement the changes recommended by the Senior Review Panel on Sexual Harassment and the Inspector General Task Force.

Based on the plan, initiatives the Army plans to take to combat sexual harassment and discrimination include:

•lengthening basic training by a week;

•strengthening AIT;

•establishing a deputy commanding general at Training and Doctrine Command;

•enhancing leadership;

•completing more thorough background checks on drill sergeant candidates;

•implementing psychological evaluations for drill sergeant candidates.

Psychological evaluations to help screen drill sergeant candidates began at the Fort Benning Drill Sergeant School in August.

"We at the Infantry Training Brigade feel that drill sergeants are our credentials," said Col. Abraham Turner, ITB commander.

OCS inducts 77 into Hall of Fame

By Erin A. Nash
Special to the Bayonet©

Seventy-seven men were inducted into the Officer Candidate School (OCS) Hall of Fame Sept. 12 at Marshall Auditorium in Infantry Hall.

To receive this honor, inductees must have attained the rank of colonel, exemplified themselves in civilian careers, or received the Medal of Honor.

Among those recognized was 1st Lt. Robert T. Waugh, whose sister accepted for him. Waugh received the Medal of Honor posthumously after being killed in World War II.

The guest speaker was Gen. Johnnie E. Wilson, the Commanding General of the U.S. Army Materiel Command, who graduated from OCS in 1967.

"For me it seems like only yesterday that I found myself being rustled out of bed at O-dark-30 in the morning."

He talked of the Army as a continually changing environment, saying it is the nature of the profession.

He also spoke of today's young Soldiers, saying they have seen suffering firsthand.

"They are just as passionate for freedom and justice as their forefathers."

After Wilson spoke, each inductee was introduced to the audience of family and friends and their military and civilian careers highlighted.

Carl Patrick, a graduate of OCS Class 17-42, has his World War II uniform, complete with bullet holes, on display at the National Infantry Museum.

3rd Brigade Soldier pleads guilty to making false official statements

By DeWayne Kyles
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Pfc. Steven L. Hill pleaded guilty Monday in a general courts martial to conspiracy to commit fraud and larceny, attempted larceny, attempted fraud, damage to government property and making false official statements.

Hill, 23, assigned to Headquarters Battery, 1st Battalion, 10th Field Artillery, was charged after the Criminal Investigation Command investigated and determined that he and another service member assigned to the same unit fabricated a story of missing stereo equipment and reporting racial slurs painted in Hill's room.

It was later determined through his own admission that he had tried to gain fraudulent government reimbursement for the missing equipment.

Hill was sentenced to 16 months confinement at Fort Knox, Ky., forfeiture of all pay and benefits, reduction to E-1 and a bad conduct discharge.

COMBINED FEDERAL CAMPAIGN

Kick-off heightens awareness of program

By Sgt. Marc G. Turchin
Bayonet staff writer

Every year federal employees and Soldiers are given an opportunity to donate money to charities and organizations that desperately need funds to continue to support communities both locally and nationally.

The annual Combined Federal Campaign (CFC) will kick-off Oct. 10 in conjunction with a Bosses Night at the Supper Club, of the post's Officers' Club. The campaign will run until Nov. 21.

"Everyone has a way of contributing," said Col. Byron Greene, garrison commander. "You can give according to your own conscience," he said.

The campaign is designed to allow federal employees an easy way to give to charities of their choice, said Chuck Walls, garrison executive officer.

Each unit will have a representative responsible for collecting the donations from it's Soldiers. The same goes for Department of Defense civilians — one person will be the key person to accept donations.

As in past years, a booklet will accompany the donation form explaining how CFC works and the charities accepting donations.

Fort Benning's number code, like last year, is 9001.

The 9001 fund puts money back into the post through the Fort Benning Soldier and Family Support Association.

Organizations on post that benefit from this fund include Santa's Castle, Army Community Service and the post's Red Cross.

"This fund keeps us doing the great things we do here all year," Walls said.

But this year's campaign offers a variety of organizations in the local area to give to. The numbers 9001 to 9045 are all local charities. They include The United Way; Urban League; Big Brothers, Big Sisters and Food Bank.

Community members can donate to any of these or any national organization by check, payroll deduction or by cash contribution.

This year's goal is the same as last year's — $500,000.

Walls is confident the post will exceed the $500,00 goal.

"We want to promote participation, not just the dollar amount," he said.

By doing that, Greene said it gives community members a sense of pride.

"Doing good things has a reward for those who do that. Those who don't will never know what that feels like," Greene said.

The kick-off begins at 4 p.m. Oct. 10 at the Officers' Club.

Memories: Past experiences with former unit leaves one Soldier better prepared

By 1st Lt. April N. Olsen
USAIC Public Affairs Office

1st Lt. April N. Olsen will miss the 586th but remembers lessons learned from NCOs and Soldiers.

commentary

1st Lt. April N. Olsen

Bridge crew members of the 586th take apart a float bridge on the Chattahoochee River.

For young officers, a prevailing impression of the Army and it's Soldiers is formed by the men and women they first come in contact with.

For me, it was no different. As a second lieutenant in the Corps of Engineers, I was assigned as a platoon leader in the 586th Engineer Company (Assault Float Bridge).

I took my responsibilities to my Soldiers seriously because I came into the Army believing, and still do, that a leader's main responsibility is to take care of the men and women in his or her charge.

So throughout college ROTC, I recited the Cadet Creed countless times, "mission first and people always" along with my peers. At the time, I thought I understood what it meant.

Graduating college and earning my commission, I took an oath to take care of America's Soldiers. At 21, I could barely take care of myself (I realize now) and yet the U.S. Army entrusted me with the duties and responsibilities of leading and caring for a platoon-size element.

What I found was that no eloquently written creed and no formal training could prepare me for the lessons I was to learn from my Soldiers.

I owe the majority of those lessons to the men and women of the 586th.

With bridge trucks and bays turned in and the motor pool inspected, Soldiers of the 586th will furl their guidon for the last time today during an inactivation ceremony at 9 a.m. on Engineer Field.

Like for many others, it will be a sad day for me.

In my fantasized view of my military career, I hoped one day to return to Fort Benning and command the company that taught me so much and meant so much to me. I guess it was not meant to happen.

But my memories of the 586th will be with me throughout my career.

The company has a proud history of supporting humanitarian missions and deployments, but many will remember the company more for it's participation in Operation Joint Endeavor in late-1995 and early-1996.

That's when two AFB companies, one of which was the 586th, built the two bridges across the Sava River at the onset of the operation that opened up roads for NATO forces into Bosnia.

A company out of Germany built the first one, with considerable difficulty, thanks to Mother Nature. The delays and wash-outs were aired on CNN extensively.

Soon after, the 586th built a similar bridge during night hours with little trouble and no fanfare from television cameras and news crews.

But the Soldiers of the 586th deployed to do their job. They didn't seek publicity and sound-bites on the 6 o'clock news.

From my experience, that has been what the 586th is all about — being good Soldiers.

From my time in the 586th, I remember Soldiers and leaders dedicated to being Soldiers. I remember a platoon of men that followed me even though, for many of them, I was half their age.

I remember a platoon of men who didn't care that I was a female. And I remember a platoon of men that respected me for my commitment to them and dedication to their well-being.

Back then, the company had not yet received it's first female 12 Charlies (bridge crew members). But there were female officers and support personnel.

I went to the company with no bridge experience, only construction experience from repairing buildings on post and pouring more concrete pads than I care to remember.

But the NCOs and enlisted men in the 586th knew that I wanted to learn their jobs and they taught me enthusiastically — not only about bridging skills, but also about Soldier skills.

Those skills don't come written down in officer manuals and can't be taught in classrooms.

I'm referring to taking care of Soldiers. It's a popular phrase nowadays. But I don't think a lot of officers and NCOs really understand it.

Self-sacrifice and selfless service are more than being willing to do what you ask your Soldiers to do. They mean wanting to do it.

Commitment and dedication means putting Soldiers' concerns above your own.

NCOs in the 586th, more than in any other unit I've been in or seen, knew how to take care of Soldiers and train officers.

To them, it wasn't about who had more stripes or who stood at the head of the formation.

To them, it was about taking care of each other and getting the job done.

I respected them then and still do. Although most of them, like me, have moved on to other assignments, their legacy continues in the well-trained men and women of the 586th.

Soldiers in the 586th taught me leaders exist for the Soldiers, not the other way around.

I knew those men could and would do their job without me if it came to that. And I knew they would follow me without hesitation into a "real-world" mission if the call came.

Knowing that is the highest reward for being an officer.

To those NCOs who helped me to become a better officer, thank you for your guidance and expertise.

I also thank those Soldiers who taught me the true meaning of "mission first and people always."

I have a "desk job" now, and while I'll miss the people I work with when I head off to my Officer Advanced Course, I look forward to leading Soldiers again.

The gratification of knowing men and women count on you and trust you to take care of them is one of the most rewarding experiences I've ever known.

That's what being an officer and leader really means.

I thank the men and women I served with in the 586th for teaching me that lesson.

River Rats, I salute you. No bridge ... too far!

President Clinton proclaims national POW-MIA Recognition Day Sept 19

Throughout our Nation's history, the men and women of America's Armed Forces have preserved our freedom, protected our security, and upheld our democratic values.

From the battles of the American Revolution through the crucible of two world wars to the challenging peacekeeping and humanitarian missions of today's post-Cold War era, our men and women in uniform have stood proudly in defense of the United States and in the cause of liberty. In the two centuries since our Nation's birth, more than a million have paid the price of that liberty with their lives.

Joining the ranks of these heroes are the thousands who have been held as prisoners of war or whose fate has never been resolved. Many have been lost in the chaos of battle, the grief of their loss made more acute for their families and their fellow Americans because of the inability to determine whether they perished or survived. Captive Americans, cruelly stripped of their freedom, treated with contempt and brutality, or used as pawns by their captors in a larger political struggle, have fought long, lonely battles against despair, physical and psychological torture, and the ultimate fear of being forgotten.

But Americans will never forget those who have borne the indignities and sufferings of captivity in service to our country, those missing in action, or those who died as prisoners of war, far from home and family.

On National POW-MIA Recognition Day, we reaffirm our commitment to those still missing and renew our pledge to make every effort to obtain the answers to their fate. We can do no less for these American heroes and for their families, who have endured such profound loss and whose suffering continues as long as their loved ones' fate remains unknown.

Sept. 19, the flag of the National League of Families of American Prisoners of War and Missing in Southeast Asia will be flown over the White House, the U.S. Capitol, the Departments of State, Defense, and Veterans Affairs, the Selective Service System Headquarters, the Vietnam Veterans Memorial, the Korean War Veterans Memorial, and national cemeteries across our country. This black and white banner, symbolizing America's missing, is a stark and powerful reminder to people around the world that our Nation will keep faith with those who have served and sacrificed; that we will not rest until we receive the fullest possible accounting of every American missing in service to our country.

Clinton signs proclamation

Now, therefore, I, William J. Clinton, by virtue of the authority vested in me by the Constitution and laws of the United States, do hereby proclaim Sept. 19, 1997, as National POW-MIA Recognition Day. I ask all Americans to join me in honoring former American prisoners of war and those whose fate is still undetermined. I also encourage the American people to remember with special sympathy and concern the courageous families who maintain their steadfast vigil and who persevere in their search for answers and for the peace that comes only with certainty. Finally, I call upon State and local officials and private organizations to observe this day with appropriate ceremonies and activities.

In witness where of, I have hereunto set my hand this sixteenth day of September, in the year of our Lord nineteen hundred and ninety-seven, and of the Independence of the United States of America the two hundred and twenty-second.

Post begins to celebrate National Hispanic Heritage month

By Erin A. Nash
Special to the Bayonet©

A luncheon sponsored by the Equal Opportunity Office to recognize Hispanic Heritage month was held Sept. 16 at the Officer's Club.

Hispanic Heritage Month was made public law in 1968, and in 1989 Congress voted to extend it for one month. This year's theme is "Educational Excellence: Building Opportunities for our Youth."

After Tawana Tyler sang the Star Spangled Banner, guests lined up to dine on roast pork, yellow rice with gondulas and chicken, tossed salad, dinner rolls, tropical fruit and lemonade.

Guest speaker Command Sgt. Maj. Ricardo F. Layne of the School of Americas spoke of past dignitaries and how amazed they would be if they returned to the modern world to observe children and the quality of education today.

He said Benjamin Franklin would like to attend a science class and Samuel Adams might like to attend a social studies class.

"Is this what they expected, is this what they had in mind," he said, referring to today's educational system, and what Franklin, Adams and Thomas Jefferson would think of it.

"I think they would be amazed and pleased to see the wide variety of children of so many races and nationalities and ethnic cultures all thrown together, learning and growing," Layne said.

Following Layne's speech was a display of Hispanic dancing, including the merengue.

Sgt. 1st Class Terry J. Thomas, the equal opportunity advisor for 11th Infantry Regiment said, "The kickoff luncheon truly exemplified the significant contributions made by Hispanic Americans throughout the history of our country. It was an excellent event with superb command support."

Thomas then handed out door prizes, including a personal stereo donated by Army Air Force Exchange Service and free bowling for two donated by Morale, Welfare and Recreation.

An art exhibit commemorating Hispanic Heritage Month will take place 11 a.m. to 3 p.m. Oct. 8 and Oct. 9 at the School of the Americas. The event, sponsored by the Hispanic Employment Program Committee will start with an opening ceremony 11 a.m. Oct. 8.

The exhibit is free to the civilian and military work force on Fort Benning.

Artists wishing to submit their original work may contact Julio Rivera at 545-1872 or Cecilia Alexander at 545-1285.

Sgt. 1st Class Danny Barker

Belkis Gonzalez, 8 and Wilma Leon, 17, an exchange student from Ecuador, perform a Puerto Rican dance at the luncheon.

AUSA to raffle car at annual fish fry

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Need transportation? Jalopy on its last legs?

For a dollar donation you can get a chance to win a new car or truck and you will know by Sept. 26 if you are the lucky winner.

The Association of the U.S. Army is holding the raffle to send Soldiers to the national convention in Washington, D.C., next month. Funds will also be used to continue providing awards to top Soldiers such as Soldier of the Year, Instructor of the Year, and top graduates of the various courses.

The association hopes to sell about 50,000 tickets. Great odds when a person considers chances of winning the lottery.

Each vehicle being offered as a prize is worth at least $15,000 and title and tag fees are included.

Those interested in buying raffle tickets should check with their units or stop by the Main Mall Post Exchange this weekend. The tickets are also available where ever one of the vehicles is parked.

The drawing will be conducted at the AUSA Fish Fry at 6:30 p.m. at Uchee Creek. The $10, all-you-can-eat fish fry tickets, are available from unit representatives or the Public Affairs Office, Room 601, Infantry Hall.

Raffle tickets will also be available Friday. The winner need not be present to win.

The fish fry is being catered by Captain Tom's and Bill Heard is helping sponsor it.

Car dealers and the vehicles they are offering as prizes are: Carl Gregory Honda, Dodge, Hyundai, Civic LX four-door, Dakota Sport Pickup Truck, and Hyundai Elantra; Jay Mazda, Toyota, Mazda SE5 and Tacoma pickup trucks; Bill Heard Chevrolet, Chevy S-10 pickup truck; Freeway Ford, Ford Escort ZX2; Gateway Isuzu, Isuzu pickup truck; Mike Collins Nissan, Nissan pickup, X-cab; and Saturn of Columbus, Saturn SC-1 Coupe.

cadre, NCOs and officers are in compliance with the values and expectations of moms and dads and other leaders," Turner said.

Turner said the ITB leaders received an overwhelming vote of confidence from the Soldiers trained by the brigade.

Starting at the beginning of a Soldier's Army career and teaching ethics and values will help provide the equal opportunity the Army believes in, which in turn will help prevent sexual harassment.

Leadership is the key that ties the Army's plan to combat sexual harassment and discrimination, Secretary of the Army Togo West said during a press conference Sept. 11 at the Pentagon.

Good leadership is not the problem, Fort Benning Chief of Staff Col. Larry White said, it is when leadership fails that problems arise.

The focus of the improvements is on leadership, Turner said.

"We need to ensure that the correct leadership is available for our young Soldiers and to ensure that the American moms and dads can trust us to take care of their sons and daughters."

Callaway offers Soldiers free admission to gardens for Military Appreciation Day

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Military Appreciation Days at Callaway Gardens' Buick Challenge was a big event in the past, but this year's event is shaping up to be the biggest and the best.

First, more Soldiers are expected. The Infantry Training Brigade alone could match previous years' totals.

Also, the fact that it's open to Reservists, Guardsmen, retirees and Department of Defense civilians is catching on and more of these people are attending.

And finally, most major units are talking about having picnics on or near Robin Lake.

This ties in with the fact that the entire gardens is open for visiting, whether or not a person attends the golf tournament.

In addition to the picnics, the units are scheduling bus transportation who have no way to get to the gardens.

On top of this, the Association of the U.S. Army which is helping sponsor Military Appreciation Day along with Callaway Gardens and Buick, is rounding up prizes to be presented that afternoon.

Past prizes have included bikes, television sets, and savings bonds.

Rangers field new machine gun

By Sgt. 1st Class Larry Lane
Public Affairs Office NCOIC

Replace the M-60 machine gun? "Impossible," some Soldiers might think, to replace the crew-served weapon that supported the Infantry for more than 40 years.

But the Army has started the process of replacing the old workhorse with the new M-240B medium machine gun, an equally effective weapon that delivers 7.62 mm rounds at the cyclic rate of fire of 650-950 rounds per minute.

"This is one of the most reliable small arms that we have fielded in history," said Col. John Latimer, chief of staff, U.S. Army Infantry School, Fort Benning. The 3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment became the first unit fielded with the new weapon during a Sept. 12 ceremony at Infantry Hall. Other Infantry, armor, combat engineer, and special operations units will be fielded with the M-240B through February 1998.

In head-to-head competition, the M-240B out-gunned the M-60 for reliability. Three M-240B weapons fired a total of 165,000 rounds with only three failed parts. These failed parts did not stop the weapon from firing and were only noticed during routine maintenance.

The M-240B is the modified version of the coaxial machine gun available on the M-1 Abrams tank and armored personnel carriers like the Bradley Fighting Vehicle.

The M-240B was transferred into a ground weapon by installing the "Infantry Modification Kit." This kit includes a flash suppressor, front sight, butt stock, pistol grip, bipod, rear sight assembly, feed tray cover with optical rail, a protective heat shield for the barrel and a handle for carrying the barrel.

The 27.6-pound weapon has a maximum effective range of 800 meters on point targets and 1,800 meters on area targets. The maximum range is 3,725 meters. The sustained rate of fire is 100 rounds per minute and the rapid rate of fire is 200 rounds per minute.

Sgt. 1st Class Larry Lane

Col. John Latimer passes the new M-240B machine gun to Soldiers from 3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment.

"What our guys did was take the coaxial machine gun off of the tanks and Bradleys and modify it to fulfill a ground role," Latimer said. "This weapon is four pounds heavier than the previous weapon (the M-60), but the gained capability is significant. This will be a good addition to our units."

The M-240B features a "Picatinny rail system" (as in the arsenal in New Jersey) on which thermal sights and other add-ons may be mounted.

The M-240B is manufactured by Fabrique National, the company that produces the M-249 squad automatic weapon. For more information, call the director of Combat Developments at the U.S. Army Infantry School at DSN 835-1078, commercial 545-1078.

29th Inf Regt Assoc plans reunion

By Erin A. Nash
Special to the Bayonet©

A reunion for all members of the 29th Infantry Regimental Association and all active duty Soldiers assigned to the 29th Inf. Regt. is planned for Sept. 26-28.

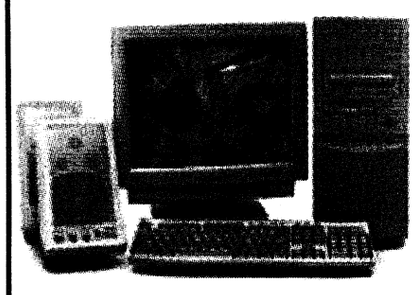
A reunion is held every two years. Retired Command Sgt. Maj. Frank C. Plass, president of the association since 1988, said the reunion is about comradeship and fellowship among veterans from World War II, Korea and active duty Soldiers.

Plass, the honorary Sgt. Maj. of the Regiment, said the reunions are held every two years because it is very expensive and people come from all around the world.

The events planned include: a Rangers-in-Action demonstration at Victory Pond, a Silver Wings demonstration, a capabilities exercise, which is designed to show the capabilities of several weapon systems through a live fire demonstration at Red Cloud Range, elections of association officers, a tour of the Little White House followed by shopping in Warm Springs Village and a river cruise.

Also, at 9:30 a.m. Sept.28, a memorial service for members who have passed away since last reunion will be held at Main Post Cemetery.

Elections are for president, vice president, secretary, chaplain, etc. The elections are the link in between reunions. The association sends out a quarterly newsletter to keep in touch.



For more information, call Capt. David L. Harris at 544-6490.

IOBC: Students 'navigate' through Fort Benning's terrain

By 2nd Lt. Matt Handley
Infantry Officer Basic Course

Soldiers of Company B, 2nd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment, Infantry Officer Basic Course Class 7-97 deployed to the area surrounding Fort Benning's land navigation testing facility last week to practice and test their land navigation skills.

The land navigation portion of IOBC began with a two-hour block of instruction from the cadre Sept. 5 at Infantry Hall . They taught land navigation topics such as plotting points, four- and eight-digit grid coordinates, intersection, determining an unknown point using two known azimuths, and resection, that is, determining a location using two known points.

The Soldiers deployed to the Fuhrman Road practice range, each platoon and their platoon trainers began training the basics of land navigation, like pace counts, where each Soldier determined his natural pace count on a measured 100 meter distance. This was checked twice, and then a running pace count was also determined.

The platoon trainers conducted terrain orientation walks to highlight some of the basic fundamentals of using terrain association to navigate. This also gave trainers the opportunity to see how well Soldiers could find points on the practice range.

In addition, they observed the various methods a Soldier used, like dead reckoning, terrain association, point attacks or a combination of all three methods.

Developing one's technique, one that works, is essential, said Sgt. 1st Class Phillip Beard, platoon trainer for 2nd Platoon, B Co., 11 Inf. Regt.

"The cadre's input on the proper techniques of land navigation is important, but actually getting on the ground and doing it is what is essential." Refining that technique began with buddy teams.

After the terrain orientation, buddy teams paired up to practice the day course. To pass on the day navigation course an IOBC student had to find six-out-of-nine points correct in a three-hour time period. The buddy teams paired up again that evening to tackle the night course where they were expected to find three-out-of five points correct to pass.

Each practice run was administered like the actual test, where plotting points and developing a strategy was included in a three-hour time limit.

"At this stage of training, it is more important to find your points, using good land navigation techniques," said Capt. David Christensen, 2nd Plt. platoon trainer. "I am more concerned with a soldier finding four-out-of four correct points then going out and finding nine points and having three or four points wrong."

The second day of training was the first time soldiers went out on the course solo and results from this practice test indicated how a Soldier was doing by comparing his score to what he and his buddy did the day before.

If there was a drastic change, it indicated that while in the buddy team he may have relied on his buddy to navigate. With a couple of days left before the actual test, trainers had ample time to identify and retrain Soldiers who were having difficulty.

With one day of practice left before moving to Yankee Road and testing on the south side of the land navigation course, the Soldiers perfected and refined their abilities. Marking and punching the scorecard correctly was important. After navigating through hundreds of meters of Georgia bush, streams and "wait-a-minute vines," a Soldier had to keep a clear head to make sure he got it right.

The students had good weather Friday, the morning of the test. At about 9 a.m., 186 IOBC students were broken up into groups and began testing. They completed the course at the Lighting Road location then conducted the night test from Lighting Road back to Yankee Road where the final results were tabulated. At about 1 p.m., the day results were in and the Soldiers were successful in the daytime land navigation.

After some cool down time, the platoons conducted some light training, then waited until dark to attack the night portion. This completed the week's exercise. About midnight, the results were in with 80 percent first-time go's.

According to Capt. Christensen, failures can usually be attributed to poor route planning or underestimating the time it takes to cross certain areas of the course. Maj. Thomas MacDonald, Company B, commander, was pleased with the outcome.

Company B, "Bushmasters," are in the fourth week of IOBC which lasts 16 weeks.

Sgt. Jerry Parisella

Sgt. Jeff Miller of the 498th Medical Co. (Air Ambulance), left, assists Turkish soldiers during a medevac training exercise in this central Bosnian city. The 498th, based at Fort Benning, is currently deployed in support of Operation Joint Guard.

498th trains with foreign militaries

By Sgt. Jerry Parisella
362nd Mobile Public Affairs Detachment

ZENICA, Bosnia and Herzegovina — A Soldier lies wounded, his comrades frantically applying first aid in an effort to stabilize him.

Then a loud thundering noise and swirling winds appear, as a UH-60 Blackhawk helicopter descends from the deep-blue sky, signaling that professional medical aid is only seconds away.

Those manning the Blackhawk and preparing to render first aid are members of the 498th Medical Company (Air Ambulance) who are currently deployed in support of Operation Joint Guard.

This particular mission did not involve an actual casualty, but provided training to Turkish, Romanian and U.S. Soldiers in proper medevac procedures at the Turkish Brigade headquarters in this central Bosnian city.

The crew on this flight was Capt. Robert Howe, a Blackhawk pilot and operations officer for the 498th, Chief Warrant Officer Steven Scott; also a pilot; Sgt. Jeff Miller, a flight medic and Spc. Jack Sturgill, crew chief.

Despite the fact this mission was not an actual emergency, those involved took the training very seriously, knowing that time is a critical factor when performing a medevac procedure.

Because Operation Joint Guard is a multi-national operation, it is vital that all Stabilization Force soldiers work well together, Howe said.

"By working with such a diverse group of Soldiers we've learned so much about how NATO forces operate," Howe said. "That training is invaluable; you can't get that at home."

The training is also vital to ensure patients receive the best care possible in the quickest time.

Capt. Yalcin Ozdemir, a general surgeon in the Turkish Army, said a Turkish soldier was severely burned recently and had to be medevaced, but the soldiers who assisted had not yet received the training that was conducted this day.

"We know something about this system in my country but we hadn't done it before (with U.S. Soldiers). Now we know how to do it and there will be no place for mistakes," he said.

Howe said the 498th's mission in Bosnia is to provide medical care and evacuation by air to the sick and injured. The Soldiers are ready to fly on a moment's notice, receiving the call by a variety of methods including phone calls, beeper messages, or a wake up call at their bunk.

When the call comes, the troops jump into action.

"Crews muster, almost like a fire drill," Howe said.

"The blood really gets pumping and we move with a sense of urgency, but we never cut corners. Safety is paramount.

"Normally, when we receive a mission we know someone is gravely ill," Howe said. "So, although we are excited, knowing someone is hurt tempers the feelings."

Miller, the flight medic, also feels the excitement when it comes time to perform a mission.

"When we get the call we are running at 100 percent and the adrenaline is pumping because we want to help our comrades," Miller said.

Although there is excitement as they prepare to fly, the medical team also gathers as much information as possible to assist them as they scurry to the helicopter, ready to render aid as soon as they hit the ground.

"We always try to get the status of the patient so we can mentally prepare for what we are going to do," Miller said.

The 498th is based at Guardian Base, or commonly referred to as the Blue Factory, but their missions can take them all over Bosnia.

Bosnia's roads are narrow and the country is quite hilly, so the medevac helicopter can arrive at a site in minutes where a ground ambulance would take much longer. This quick response can be vital to ensuring a patient makes it to the hospital in a timely manner and can literally mean the difference between life and death, Miller said.

"When a patient is really sick, who are you going to call? Us, because we are good at what we do and can get their fast," Miller said.

Working in Bosnia has also provided the 498th with an opportunity to perform some unique missions.

For example, they have trained with a Swedish team that can rescue a victim in a minefield. The Swedes and mine-detecting dog are lowered by a high-performance hoist to clear the area of mines, then a U.S. medic provides first aid.

"If you had told me I would be lowering dogs I would have probably just laughed. That's not a normal function at Fort Benning," Howe said. "But it has been good training. Fortunately we haven't had to use it in a real-life situation."

By hearing the excitement in their voices as they describe their jobs, it is clear these Soldiers enjoy their work.

"If I could fly everyday I would," Miller said. "It's a gas."

Soldiers now have nonlethal capabilities in Bosnia

By Linda D. Kozaryn
American Forces Press Service

WASHINGTON — Some U.S. troops in Bosnia now carry sponge grenades and dye-marking kits — nonlethal weapons designed to control crowds.

"I want to be very clear ... these weapons are to supplement their normal lethal weapons that they would carry — M-16s and other weapons," Pentagon spokesman Ken Bacon. "They are not in place of those weapons."

The decision to issue nonlethal weapons to U.S. forces followed an incident in Brcko, where Bosnian civilians attacked American Soldiers with rocks and two-by-fours. Military officials were also preparing to provide security during municipal elections slated Sept. 13 and 14.

During the elections, the NATO Stabilization Force helped international officials ensure freedom of movement, move ballot boxes and other election materials and deliver voting equipment to polling places. Once the votes are in, they will also secure storage sites to prevent tampering with election results.

Military units received 40-mm sponge grenades designed to knock down a person hit in the chest or abdomen up to 30 meters away, Bacon said. Soldiers load and fire the grenades from M-203 grenade launchers.

U.S. troops also got dye-marking kits, which look like water balloons, that can be thrown at crowd leaders and agitators so they can be later identified by law enforcement authorities, he said.

These items "expand the range of options available to any commander on the scene to allow him to call for the use of nonlethal weapons, if necessary, just as the commander recently used tear gas at Udrigovo," Bacon said.

American troops participating in NATO's Stabilization Force mission in Bosnia are trained in riot control procedures, Bacon noted. That training was recently called into play.

About 1,000 Bosnian Serbs attacked about 350 U.S. troops with rocks, Molotov cocktails and two-by-fours Aug. 28 in Brcko. At the time, the Stabilization Force troops were supporting the U.N. International Police Task Force attempt to examine a local police station. U.S. troops fired several warning shots and used tear gas to

The 498th would like to welcome the 812th Medevac Detachment onboard. The 812th is comprised of 36 guardsman form Louisiana and Oklahoma, and a pet alligator "Gaston Alley."

The 498th Family Support Group had a meeting to discuss the return of the deployed loved ones Sept. 11. The meeting went very well as 1st Lt. Scott Rollston read an e-mail message from Maj. Tracy Wyatt, 498th company commander. The message contains information about events that had not occurred by the time this article had been submitted. (Technology allows us to talk about the future as if it were the past). For all who could not attend, here is the message from Maj. Wyatt:

"We are all doing great over here, but everyone of us misses home and we are greatly anticipating redeployment. Right now we are completely engaged in "The Super Bowl," of why we are here. The Bosnian elections. As you know they take place Saturday and Sunday (Sept. 13-14). We are ready for anything and hoping for nothing. Our situational awareness, force protection, accountability, risk management and safety awareness is at an all time high. Once we successfully complete the task if supporting the elections we will focus on our transition with our replacements, the 159th Medical Company from Wiesbaden Germany, and then safely bring everybody home. Our current window of return is Oct. 30-Nov. 2. I have asked to move that up twice, but have not gotten an answer from my second request. Don't plan on us being home before the second and you will be safe. Don't buy tickets until you all hear from me again either. I intend on giving the unit 14 days block leave or two 4-day passes for those who don't have or need to take leave. Some of you want to take the leave you have over the holidays and I support that. We will be required to quickly assume the mission from the 812th, but will do that thoroughly and the right way. Our mission does not end until we have assumed the mission at Fort Benning and recovered everything. I truly appreciate the support all of you have given this company, the rear detachment and me. You have taken care of each other and dealt with the family issues, without having to pull us from this extremely important mission. Thank you so much. That is all for now, we will see you all soon and God Bless! Maj. Tracy Wyatt."

As the events in the letter above unfold we will keep you informed. As you can see there is much to be done before we can all be together again. Look to your mailbox for the next family support group flyer that will set our final two meeting gates, at least one more family fun day and a "Welcome Home," banner making, pizza party to be held at the hanger. Don't forget the wives only shopping trip to Macon Mall on Sept. 27. Call Cackie Howe and reserve your seat in the van, before they are all gone.

Commander speaks on perspective for ITB

By Yvette Stewart
Infantry Training Brigade

Col. Abraham J. Turner, commander, Infantry Training Brigade (ITB) conducted his State of Brigade Address Aug. 19 at the Sand Hill Theater. With more than 600 attendees, Turner shared his view of the ITB since he assumed command Dec. 16.

Turner outlined his command philosophy — the vision of the ITB working together as a committed team to training Infantrymen to enter the 21st century.

"A well-rounded Infantryman would be well trained for the uncertainties of a world in which there is only one superpower, the U.S," Turner said.

"The ITB is producing the best-trained, most physically fit Infantrymen yet to walk across the graduation fields at Fort Benning."

In the nine months since Turner has become the commander, he said he saw exactly what he was looking for.

"The vision of officers, NCOs, lower enlisted Soldiers and civilians working together as a committed team and the goal of producing the best Infantryman is a reality," he said. "All of this is being credited to the can-do attitude and the winning spirit each and everyone connected to the brigade has," he added.

"We will continue to do and see great things here at the ITB, because of the staff we have." We can and have made this happen."

He noted the achievements of training more than 13,000 new Infantrymen for Infantry units around the world. "The Soldiers who walk through our doors get trained and go on to do great things in other units," Turner said. "Our Infantrymen's training is intense. Sand Hill is alive and moving everyday."

One Station Unit Training (OSUT) graduations are conducted on Sand Hill once a week. Turner said he was proud to see the look on the Soldiers' faces when they walk across the field.

The State of Brigade Address was recorded for everyone who could not attend.

He described the civilians as "Part of the family."

"Thank you for your caring support and for showing that this is your brigade and these are your Soldiers as well as ours. Without you, we would not have a complete family," Turner said. "You celebrate when we celebrate and mourn when we mourn. A family is what I think of when I think of the ITB and we could not be one without our civilians."

"It is nice that Col. Turner included the civilians in his State of Brigade Address. I am glad to know what we are doing as a whole and where we stand," said Erma Thompson, chief, Personal Affairs Branch, 30th Adjutant General Reception Battalion.

"We are an intricate part of the brigade and need to know what is going on. With the constant rotation of the military, the civilians keep the continuity. We bridge that gap when the new commander comes aboard."

The AUSA 10-mile run in Washington, D.C. Oct. 12, which ITB will send two teams. The ITB has been tasked by the Training and Doctrine Command to take charge of the Exodus 1997 for all training centers on the east coast which starts around Dec. 18.

disperse the crowd. Two American sergeants were injured during the civil unrest.

Another incident occurred Sept. 2 when U.S. troops, on NATO orders, seized a television broadcast tower at Udrigovo. Bosnian Serbs protested, and again, U.S. troops used tear gas to disperse the crowd.

"It's clear that the mob that appeared at Udrigovo was not a spontaneous group of people who just happened to be walking by and gathered around the broadcast tower," Bacon said. "They came in buses. Their leaders were carrying hand-held radios and communicating with each other. So this seemed to be organized opposition to what SFOR is trying to do over there."

Bacon discounted a news account which said U.S. troops used hand-made clubs to fend off civilians during the incident. Reporters probably saw troops digging in on the hill and assumed the Americans were using the tools as weapons, Bacon said. "They were not armed with clubs. These were just the tools they were issued."

U.S. forces returned the tower to Bosnian Serb control after Serb radio and television agreed to refrain from inflammatory reporting against the Stabilization Force and international organizations supporting the Dayton peace agreement.

Reservists serve worldwide on total Army team

Reservists role continues to change

By Gerry J. Gilmore
Army News Service

WASHINGTON — Today's Army Reserve Soldiers routinely deploy worldwide to serve alongside their active-duty counterparts and also play a big role in training the force.

Army Reserve Deputy Chief Brig. Gen. James R. Helmly discussed the Reserve's missions in the post-Cold War era with Soldiers and Radio and Television Network reporter Staff Sgt. Angele Ringo during a recent Washington Report interview.

"The role of the Army Reserve has changed in the last several years," Helmly said. "(During the Cold War) ... the Reserve would be mobilized and come to an operation later than the active-Army.

"In the world we live in today ... our Army Reserve Soldiers perform tasks, under mobilization and other types of orders, that augment the (active) Army (during deployments) and enable it to undertake its primary core competency missions."

Reservists in civil affairs, medical, psychological operations, public affairs, military police, postal, transportation, supply, communications, intelligence, and other combat service and-combat service support specialties deployed with active elements to support post-Cold War operations in Somalia and Haiti, Helmly said. Reservists were also sent to Bosnia in support of Operation Joint Endeavor.

Many reservists continue to serve in the Balkans and other parts of Europe in support of Operation Joint Guard.

Army reservists routinely perform their missions throughout the continental United States, Alaska, Hawaii, and overseas, Helmly said.

"Reservists who live and work overseas are primarily the husbands and wives of active-duty Soldiers, or civilian employees of U.S. firms or the U.S. government," he said.

"We have reservists in Germany, Hungary, Bosnia, Italy and Korea. Reservists are also stationed in Guam and other Pacific locations."

About 2,900 Army reservists are now under mobilization orders in support of peacekeeping operations in Bosnia, which include deployments to Germany and Hungary, Helmly said.

To date, he said, approximately 9,600 reservists were called up to support Operations Joint Endeavor and Joint Guard and subsequently demobilized when their tours of duty were completed.

"We're a very busy force, performing daily missions in the Balkans, and many other locations around the globe," Helmly said. "So, we're not strictly a reserve force; we're more like an auxiliary force.

"I was asked a question recently: 'Can you tell us what the Army Reserve is doing to integrate itself with the regular (active) Army. My response was, 'If we get much more integrated, I won't know who we are.'"

Today, Army Reserve drill sergeants routinely instruct initial entry trainees, Helmly said.

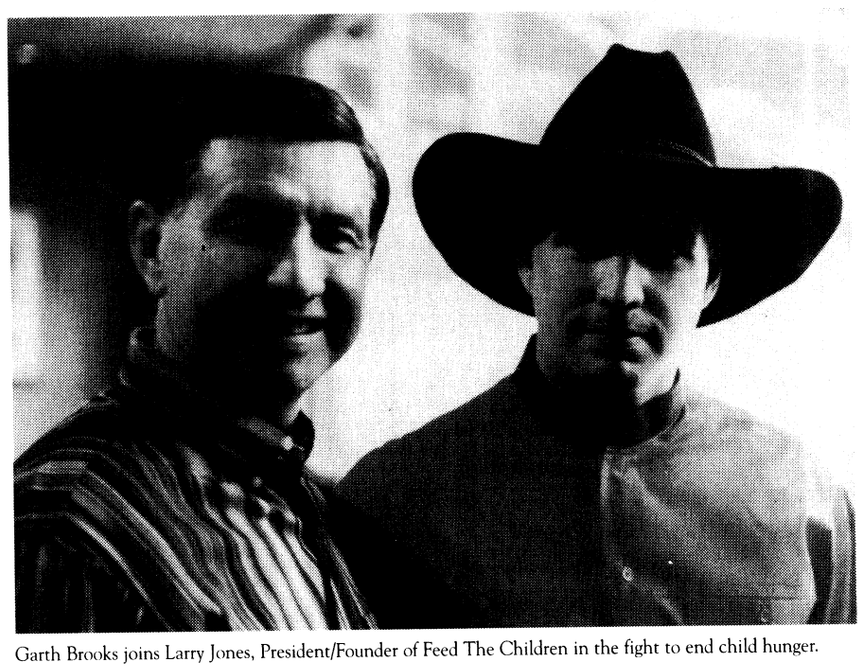
"Last year, we helped (U.S. Army) Training and Doctrine Command train some 6,900 recruits," he said. "Those Soldiers went on to active, guard and reserve units."

During a wartime mobilization, reserve drill sergeants would provide refresher training to Individual Ready Reservists, who afterward would be sent to replace battlefield casualties, Helmly said. Army Reserve instructors are heavily-involved in the training of Reserve Officer Training Corps cadets at the annual summer camps."

This fall, reserve Soldiers will begin teaching ROTC at three different "test bed" universities, Helmly said.

"We have every belief that test will result in an expanded daily ROTC mission," he said.

Reservists are also involved in other aspects of Army training.



"They perform (training) exercise support for National Guard, Army Reserve combat support, combat service support units around the country using simulations, models, wargames and conducting lanes training to enable combat training to proceed according to schedule and standard," Helmly said.

"Our reserve Soldiers, like the active-Army's, are our credentials. We're very proud of them."

Soldiers can get ACAP help via Internet

By Debbie Henshaw
Army Career and Alumni Placement

"The Internet computer in the Job Assistance Center (JAC) is a valuable job search tool as separating Soldiers and family members begin the transition process," said Diane Ermi, JAC counselor and long-time internet surfer. "A good place to start is the ACAP home page. It provides helpful job search links which can be used to explore open jobs, research companies, obtain basic job search information and transmit electronic resumes," said Diane Ermi, JAC counselor and long-time Internet surfer.

"The America's Job Bank is one of the best Internet sources for pursuing open jobs within the United States," said Michelle Berndt, a separating Soldier. "I recently spent several hours in the America's Job Bank locating administrative jobs within the State of Missouri. With each job opening are instructions on how to apply and where to send letters and resumes. This has really helped my long-range job search," she said.

"The Internet is an invaluable research tool," said Terrance Lewis, a recently separated Soldier. "I used it to research a company in LaGrange, Ga., and used the information in the interview. This information gave me the confidence to knock their socks off. The interviewers were surprised and asked me how I knew certain information. I responded that I had done my homework and wanted to work for the best company in this industry. I landed the job."

"The Internet can be used to supplement the job search by providing information on careers, professional organizations, relocation, networking, job fairs, interviewing and other career planning resources," said Edward Hendricks, another separating Soldier. "With the help of my counselor, I keyed in Atlanta, Ga., in a search engine and found the Atlanta home page and discovered a wealth of job information."

A job seeker can post a resume or complete an application using the Internet. Separating Soldier Mike Chavis used the Internet to post his resume for computer-related positions. Other JAC clients located on-line applications for Enterprise Rent-A-Car and AFLAC and posted resumes to many more companies. Soldiers can receive help at the Job Assistance Center with completing on-line applications and developing effective electronic resumes, Ermi said.

"Internet training sessions are available as part of Job Assistance Center services to separating Soldiers and spouses. Call the Fort Benning JAC in Soldiers' Plaza, Building 2634, 545-2308 or 545-2309 for more information and appointments or e-mail to jobsacap@leo.infi.net," says Ermi.

Fort Benning Schools offer Study tips

Sgt. Marc G. Turchin

Seventh-graders at Faith Middle School work on assignments during class.

By Jennifer Harriman
Special to the Bayonet©

Starting a new school year may be a difficult adjustment, but with a few common sense tips and some patience, students and parents can make the transition easier.

The time necessary to complete homework varies according to the grade the child is in and the difficulty of the subject matter. For middle school students, the recommended amount of time is approximately 45 minutes to an hour for 6th-graders, one hour to an hour and a half for 7th-graders, and for 8th-graders an hour and a half, according to John Ulferts, the assistant principal for Faith Middle School.

"Getting organized and staying with it are the key ingredients for effective study time," Ulferts said.

To get started, Ulferts recommends setting aside a certain time each day specifically for homework.

"Some students like to tackle their homework as soon as they get home from school," he said. "This would be drudgery for others who would rather have a snack or play outside first. It is really up to the child to figure out what works best for them. This should ideally be in a place where distractions are at a minimum and a parent is available to help."

"Being available for help and setting a good example are the best things a parent can do," said Ulferts. Spot-checking homework is a good idea.

Parents can also help their child by looking for opportunities to apply school lessons in their everyday life — at the bank or doing taxes, for example. Rewarding good work or effort through praise is a powerful motivational tool that parents can utilize.

Students in high school this year can use and build on these tips for their work.

"Organization is a crucial skill for efficient studying," Ulferts said. "Have your child make an assignment sheet with all of their homework on it, and check off items as they are completed. Also, I think getting a notebook and a separate folder for each subject is a great way to get and stay organized."

Other specific tips offered by Ulferts deal with reading and improving note-taking skills.

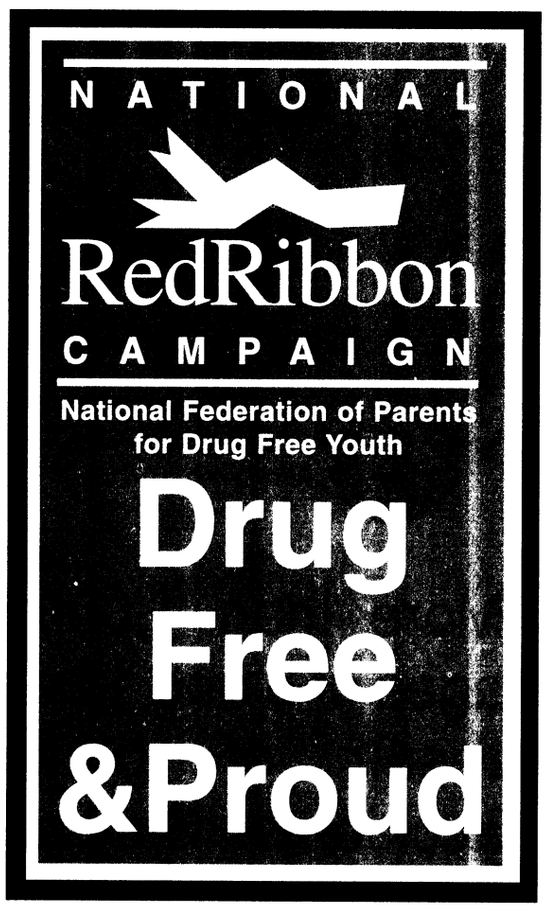
"If there is no written work assigned, take that time to re-read the chapter. Also, look over graded work and correct the missed items. The student could even read ahead through the next chapter and get prepared for the next day's lesson," he said. "Usually the topic sentence is the first sentence in the paragraph. By going through the material and reading the topic sentences, they can get a good idea of what the chapter is about."

While students are reading, taking clear notes will help them retain the material. Ulferts recommends highlighting important points and using the subtitles to make an outline of the chapter. It is absolutely necessary to learn all of the vocabulary in the material and make notes of any new or difficult words, said Ulferts.

According to Greg Campbell, guidance director for Spencer High School, the main element in a student's success is their own personal motivation.

"A child has to want to learn and see the rewards of it," he said. "If they don't see this for themselves, the parents need to help motivate their child. Parents can set up a reward system, be supportive, and help with scheduling difficulties. Take away television or privileges if necessary.

"Consistency is the key," Campbell said. "Once there is an established formula for success, make it a habit. Know that it is a fact of life," he said. Monitoring that homework is done, without becoming too involved, is a handy tip for parents.



Something else parents can always do is make sure the child's basic needs are met. Proper diet, exercise, adequate sleep, and health maintenance do not decrease in importance when a child grows older.

"Knowing that their needs will be met makes it easier for a student to concentrate on their studies," Campbell said.

Students at all levels can practice and improve on their note-taking skills. "Taking notes keeps a student focused and involved with the material," said Campbell. "Those who don't may be really paying attention elsewhere," he said. Campbell noted that students can always practice improving the structure of their notes. Abbreviations and shorthand can especially help a student become more efficient.

Campbell recommends an average of two hours of study time a night for high schoolers. This time can be used to review graded papers, fill in notes, or work on memorization tasks.

"It is important to study enough, but it is also important not to get bogged down. If a student is feeling stressed out, it's a good idea to take a break. Refresh your mind. Stretch, walk around outside, do something to break the monotony. Then review your work and begin again," said Campbell.

RED RIBBON WEEK

Post plans activities

By Staff Sgt. Lori Egan
Bayonet editor

Columbus and Phenix City residents will conduct a red-ribbon, border-tying ceremony at 3 p.m. Oct. 27 at the grand staircase of the Riverwalk. This is a cooperative effort between the two cities to promote a safe and drug-free lifestyle, said Dr. Carolyn Gates, Safe and Drug Free Schools coordinator.

The Red Ribbon Campaign is Oct. 23-31. The National Family Partnership sponsors Red Ribbon Week.

The goal of the week is education and drug prevention, said Sgt. 1st Class Darryel M. Johnson, education coordinator, Alcohol Drug Control Office, Directorate of Community Activities.

The Red Ribbon Week evolved after federal agent Enrique Camarena underwent torture and murder by drug traffickers in 1985. The red ribbon became the symbol to reduce the demand for drugs and to stop the illegal use of drugs.

Ideas to commemorate the week include:

•Display Red Ribbon banners throughout post.

•Sign a "no use" contract and receive a red ribbon.

•Decorate the community with red ribbons, which includes making and distributing red bows to display on doors.

•Conduct drug awareness education sessions.

These are just a few of the ideas the community is considering when planning for Red Ribbon Week, Johnson said.

"Each of us has a responsibility to our families and our community to create conditions that promote the well being of people," Johnson said. "We must be willing to act to achieve those values and conditions we cherish.

Supporting the Georgia Red Ribbon Campaign and it's goals can promote healthy lifestyles and being drug free, Johnson said. If there are other suggestions and ideas for commemorating Red Ribbon Week, call Johnson at 545-1138.

Red Cross youth volunteer program benefits hospital

By Cackie Howe

The halls of Faith Middle School and local area high schools have filled with kids returning from summer vacation. Many of them are telling stories of long days at the pool, shopping at the mall and vacations they took to fill their hot summer days.

There are a select few, however, who have different stories to tell — stories of assisting patients get to their appointments on time, organizing medical records, answering phones during a busy clinic morning.

These are the stories of the youth who participated in this summer's American Red Cross Youth Volunteer Program at Martin Army Community Hospital (MACH).

The Red Cross Office at MACH provides a youth volunteer program each summer for the youth of Fort Benning Soldiers and civilian workers.

This year there was a selection process which included an application, an interview, behavior guidelines and a dress code.

Forty-two 13 to 17-year-olds were selected to participate and each one made the grade.

The youth worked for two to three days a week for six weeks and each gave from 30 to 175 hours individually.

The evaluations of these young volunteers reflected their initiative, reliability, maturity and caring, said Judith Markelz, Red Cross volunteer coordinator. Many were asked to complete tasks with little supervision. More than 2,800 hours were volunteered at the hospital benefiting the patients, physicians and administrators and assisted in meeting the hospital's mission of patient care.

The youth who participated in this summer's American Red Cross Youth Volunteer program are of the highest caliber and those of us who worked with them have a positive feeling that our future is in good hands with kids like these taking the initiative and giving their time, Markelz said.

Bell South offers other payment locale — Tel-Tech Paging, South Lumpkin Road, accepts payments for BellSouth telephone bills. Tel-Tech is located in the Piggly Wiggly Shopping Plaza, 1807 South Lumpkin Road.

Tel-Tech is directly linked to BellSouth, so payments are immediately input into the system. If paying a regular monthly bill, the statement should be brought to Tel-Tech.

If paying a final bill, the bill can be obtained in the Utility Coordination Center, Building 2633, Soldiers Plaza, to take with you to Tel-Tech. Any questions may be directed to UCC staff at 687-9446 or 687-9447.

Debt management assistance is available — There are two non-profit agencies in Columbus that offer debt management assistance.

They will each make an evaluation of your financial status and work with your creditors, if your financial status allows. They can work with creditors to adjust payments. Soldiers can make one payment to them, and they will disburse the negotiated amount to each creditor.

•Alternative Financial Resolutions provides free debt management assistance to all clients. They can take information from you in person, by phone, or by mail. After they have made an evaluation of your financial status, they will be able to determine if you have the resources to do a debt management plan.

They will then work with your creditors to adjust payments to fit within your income and meet creditor approval. You can make one payment to them, and they will disburse the negotiated payment amounts.

You can reach Alternative Financial Resolutions by calling 323-2108, or by writing to them at Post Office Box 9364, Columbus, Ga 31908-9364.

•Consumer Credit Counseling Service (CCCS) is a department of Columbus Family Counseling Center, located at 1350 15th Avenue, across from the side of Red Lobster Restaurant.

They also negotiate with creditors, accept one payment from you, and disburse the negotiated payment amount to the creditors. The monthly fee for their service is $15. You can make an appointment with the CCCS by calling 327-3239.

CCCS evaluates your financial status to determine if you have the resources to do a debt management plan.

Humane Society recycles cans for operating funds — The Muscogee County Humane Society will accept aluminum cans through Nov. 30.

It is participating in Paws to Recycle, the only nationwide aluminum can recycling program that benefits animal shelters. The shelter will earn operating funds and free pet food for its participation and compete with other shelters across the country for one of the five $3,000 grand prizes.

The Muscogee County Humane Society will accept aluminum cans 11 a.m. to 3 p.m. Wednesday to Saturday and 1 to 4 p.m. Sunday.

Contributions to The NRA Foundation support a wide range of firearm–related educational and public interest activities of the National Rifle Association of America and other organizations that defend and foster our Second Amendment rights.

NRA's Eddie Eagle Gun Safety Program teaches children how to avoid gun accidents. Introduced to more than 9 million children nationwide, it's helped reduce accidental firearm fatality rates to the lowest on record.

Refuse To Be A Victim gives women the practical, proven personal safety techniques and strategies they need to avoid dangerous situations and, failing that, to avoid victimization.

Law Enforcement Activities provides grants to acquire or improve education, training, equipment and related needs for law enforcement agencies throughout America.

Shooting Services for the Physically Disabled help give physically–disabled shooters two chances to enjoy firearm ownership, by both working with coaches and physical therapists to develop adaptive equipment for these individuals and working with rehabilitation centers to incorporate target shooting into their physical therapy programs.

Youth Programs work in cooperation with the Boy Scouts of America, Girl Scouts of the United States of America, 4–H, and The American Legion, to continue our proud tradition of recreational hunting and shooting.

The Environment, Conservation and Hunting Outreach (ECHO) program in cooperation with federal, state, and private agencies such as FFA – defend and promote regulated hunting as a shooting sport, works to advance conservation and responsible use of our wildlife resources and encourages hunter safety and ethics.

Qualifying Educational Range Development and Improvment Projects supported by The NRA Foundation benefit many organized youth and school groups, law enforcement agencies, and others seeking instruction in firearms and safety training .

The Youth Education Summit brings together high school students from across the country to learn leadership and public speaking skills, acquire an understanding and appreciation of the U.S. Constitution and the Bill of Rights, develop an awareness of our firearms heritage and learn about our legislative process.

Directorate of Public Works Information Corner 'Essayons'

Directorate of Public Works

This weeks article provides information on plans to contract maintenance responsibilities in McGraw Manor and Perkins Place and installation policy for Family Housing residents wanting to install a fence.

McGraw Manor, Perkins Place residents

DPW is in the process of negotiating with BSI, for Davis Hills and Bouton Heights contractor to assume maintenance responsibilities for these areas. The target date for transfer to BSI is Oct. 1. These negotiations are still on-going and will be finalized, hopefully by Sept. 26. We will keep the affected residents informed as more information becomes available.

Installation, removal of resident-owned fences

Over the past several months, DPW has received numerous questions about the installations policies on the Family Housing residents installing fences. This installation's standard operating procedure (SOP) for fences is shown below for your convenience.

Authorized types of fences

The following fence types may be approved.

•Chain-Link (two-inch mesh), commercially installed, not to exceed four feet in height including top with finished top fencing (no sharp points or exposed edges).

•Redwood or treated pine fencing will be used only as privacy screening, installed either privately or commercially, not to exceed six feet in height plumbed and securely set to insure a neat and attractive appearance; having no exposed sharp edges or hazardous extrusions and stained brown in a compatible manner with the installation of excellence. Privacy screening will not enclose an area. Only a single side or "L" shaped fence is allowed.

•Photographed examples of approved fencing are on display at the Family Housing Office, Olson Hall, Building 399.

•All fences will have a minimum of one gate exit to allow free passage from the yard without going through the quarters. This gate will be constructed in a manner compatible with the surrounding fence.

Several points should be seriously considered by the resident prior to installing an authorized fence in the family housing area. All fencing will be inspected prior to final approval. Fencing is expensive to purchase, install and remove. Restoration of the area is very difficult. Commercially installed chain-link fence is considered to be an improvement and becomes a permanent part of the quarters. Other privacy fencing that would cause excessive damage upon removal may also be declared a fixed part of the property and so claimed by the government. Upon termination of occupancy, unless declared fixed property, all fencing must be removed and the yard area restored to its original condition prior to final clearance of quarters.

Families residing in multiple dwelling unit (four to eight complexes) must be especially cognizant of common use items (e.g. outside hose bibs, equipment rooms, etc.) when considering installation of fencing.

No fencing of any type will be permitted in the front yards or street sides of any quarters on post. Approved fencing to the immediate rear yard area must not restrict free access across open public areas. Construction of fencing will be such that free passage will not be impeded in the event that rapid evacuation of quarters becomes necessary, and that access and passage of maintenance vehicles, mowers and other fire-fighting equipment is available.

Fencing will not extend more than 50 feet to the rear of quarters. Where chain-link fence has been installed within 50 feet of the rear of quarters, permission may be granted to connect to existing fencing.

The family housing manager or his authorized representative will review each application based on the merit of each case. For housing units in the Historic District (Old Main Post area), the family housing manager will ensure appropriate coordination with the Georgia State Historic Preservation Officer (SHPO) prior to granting approval. No fencing of any kind will be installed prior to approval.

Violators will have their application disapproved and subsequent forced removal of fencing at no expense to the government. The family housing manager will inform the resident in writing of approval or disapproval and whether the structure is considered permanently fixed property. Written resident concurrence will be required and made a part of Housing records.

The family housing manager reserves the right to approve or deny permission IAW aforementioned requirement.

Upon receipt of approval (and written tenant acknowledgment of the terms), the applicant may install the fencing he or she has indicated and will inform the family housing branch within five days after completion.

Within 30 days after receipt of notification of completion, family housing will make an inspection to ensure compliance; after which all related subject matter will be made an official part of the resident's housing record.

Thereafter, maintenance, upkeep and appearance of the fencing becomes the responsibility of the resident. Failure to comply with prescribed standards will result in immediate removal of fence at the resident's expense.

Comments and questions

If you have questions or topics that you would like to be addressed in the DPW "Information Corner" please contact Glenn Todd, DPW Customer Relations Specialist, 545-2117, or write to the Directorate of Public Works, Building 6, Room 409, ATTN: ATZB-PWM (Glenn Todd), Fort Benning, Ga 31905.

Army Family Team Building offers classes about Army life

By Mary Allen
Army Family Team Building

Have you ever wondered how you could learn more about the role of a spouse in the Army community?

Now free multiphased skills training is taught through the Army Family Team Building Program (AFTB).

This volunteer program is designed to teach personal and professional development courses to spouses. Some of the courses offered will provide knowledge on how to prepare for deployments and other day-to-day challenges that exists within the Army community.

The AFTB teachers are volunteers who have been specially trained. They receive a specifically tailored job description and receive credit for their volunteer hours.

Through AFTB training, spouses receive the tools they need to function in any military life situation with minimal outside support, said Barbara Singleton, program director. As a result of this training, personal and family readiness will improve and overall strengthen the quality of life and Army readiness within the Army family.

AFTB training consists of three levels:

•Level I courses are targeted toward people new to the Army or anyone interested in updating personal skills or basic knowledge.

•Level II courses are targeted toward emerging leaders within the Army community.

•Level III courses offer training to enhance the professional growth and leadership development opportunities of family members, especially those who might assume advisory and mentoring roles within the community and unit.

There is no charge for any of the courses or materials.

Come join us for a series of Level I classes starting Sept. 23 and continuing through Jan. 27, 1998.

Courses will be offered at AFTB Building 2624, Soldiers' Plaza. Dates of Level I classes are listed below:

Sept. 23 — 9 a.m. to 1:30 p.m..
Oct. 28 — 6 p.m to 10 p.m.
Nov. 18 — 9 a.m. to 1:30 p.m.
Jan. 27 — 9 a.m. to 1:30 p.m.

For course topics or to register for any AFTB Level I course, call Shirley Sellers at 545-5377, Ext. 2794, or Singleton at 689-7627.

Did You Bring Recycling Home?

Win or lose, spirituality never leaves us 'down for the count'

By Chaplain (Maj) David R. Kirk
1st Battalion, 15th Infantry Regiment

Smaller high schools usually have fewer sports teams for the students to participate in.

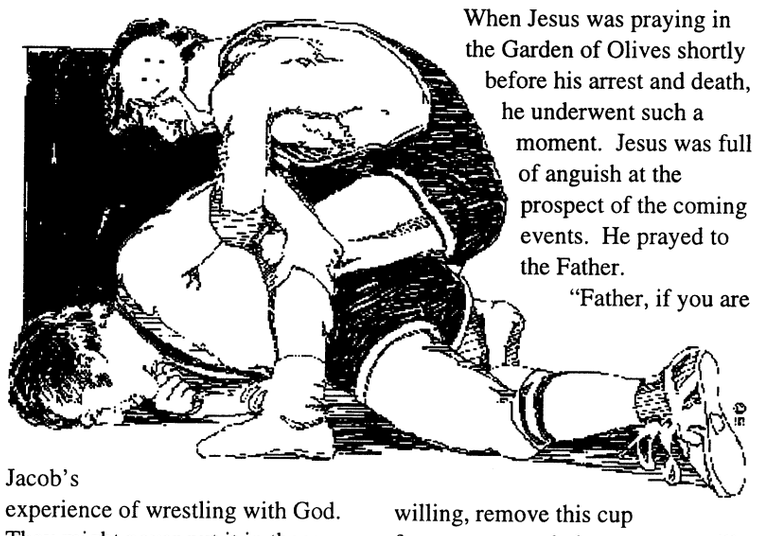
They usually try to have a football or soccer team. Usually boys and girls basketball, track, baseball, softball and tennis fill out the teams. Another program which can be found in many places is the wrestling program.

Wrestling generates a lot of enthusiasm and a good following in many places. It is exciting to see a close match won by the hometown favorite. It can be the talk-of-the-town

Unlike professional wrestling found on television, the high school meet can be likened to a part of our spiritual journey.

All people at one time or another have experiences similar to the high-school wrestler.

They are like the wrestling matches in the Bible. Take Jacob's in Genesis for instance.



We read in the Book of Genesis: "A man wrestled with Jacob until the break of day. When the man saw that he did not prevail against Jacob, he touched the hollow of Jacob's thigh, and Jacob's thigh was put out of joint as he wrestled with the man." (Gen. 32: 24b-25)

Sometimes we win. Other times it is a draw. Perhaps we lose the match. We might even be pinned.

Losing can be a let-down, a set-back. It can be downright discouraging. We work so hard at trying to do what is right and just. When things start to unravel in our lives, we want to take the easy way out. Our focus changes. The big picture now becomes smaller. We look only to ourselves.

Jacob, however, stayed focused and came out the better for it.

Most adults who believe in the words of sacred Scripture had Jacob's experience of wrestling with God. They might never put it in those exact terms, but it is a real experience.

Faith and trust in God seem easy until we encounter life's tragedies and temptations.

We all face sickness, death, human deceit, disappointments and cruelty.

Faith grows or withers in the face of such events.

When Jesus was praying in the Garden of Olives shortly before his arrest and death, he underwent such a moment. Jesus was full of anguish at the prospect of the coming events. He prayed to the Father.

"Father, if you are willing, remove this cup from me, nevertheless, not my will, but yours be done." (Luke 22: 42, 45)

Jesus entertained doubts. He struggled with the meaning of it all. He wrestled with his Father, his God. Jesus resigned himself to the Father's will. Jesus wrestled with his God.

Jesus won. He came to a deeper trust in the ways and will of the Father.

St. Peter also wrestled. We see that his initial outcome was different. We know that Peter denies Jesus three times in the high priest's courtyard. The unfolding events caused Peter's faith to wither at the moment. Peter was not lost, though. Peter lost this round, this particular match, but Peter was given other opportunities to express his deep faith and love of God. Jesus says to Simon Peter three times in John 21: 1 5b- 17; "Simon, Son of John, do you love me?" Peter answered a resounding "You know I love you!"

We, too are asked this question. We, too are faced with temptations, tragedies, and situations that give us cause to question. We might ask "Where is God in all this?" "Does God really care about me and my situation?" "How can God allow this to happen?"

In the face of the many situations of life, we wrestle with God. We find out if our faith is only for sunny days and good times or if it endures come what may. Some days we get pinned to the mat. Other times we draw. In the end it is the whole match, the whole contest that counts. It isn't only one match. It is the series that make up the whole, just like a wrestling meet.

Whatever challenges we face each day, God faces them with us. When we realize that God is actually on the same team as us, we stop wrestling against him. We see him not as our opponent but our teammate. He is seen as one who helps us through these events. We are like the hometown favorite.

We are the winners in the end because we have deepened our faith. We, too, like Jacob and Peter can say I have wrestled with my doubts, fears and temptations and I have won.

Sunday school classes to move — Effective Sept. 21, the Protestant Sunday school will meet in Edward A. White School on First Division Road.

The times remain the same, 9:30-10:30 a.m. All students should enter the school through the front entrance, and will then be shown to their new classes.

There will continue to be classes for all ages from two-year olds through adults.

Child care for children younger than two years whose parents are either teaching or attending Sunday School, will be at The Infantry Center Chapel Annex.

Buses will maintain the same routes as now, but will bring riders to White School, and will pick them up there for the return trip home.

Individuals needing transportation to Sunday School, should call the Religious Education Center at 545-4715.

REC begins Sunday school year — Sunday school meets from 9:30 until 10:30 a.m. every Sunday morning at the Religious Education Center, Building 2517.

There are classes for all ages from two year olds through adults.

For more information, call 545-4715.

CCD classes to start again — Confraternity of Christian Doctrine Classes for Catholics will begin at 10:10 a.m. Sept. 14 in Dexter School.

Classes are conducted for students from pre-school, three years old, through adults.

For more information, call 545-5508.

Pharmacy offers tips concerning prescriptions

Martin Army Community Hospital

Did you ever notice the little colored stickers on the side of your medicine bottles? These little stickers usually remind you to take the medicine with food or milk or to avoid certain foods.

The pharmacist will highlight these precautions as you pick up your medicine. But if you take more than one medicine, it gets confusing.

These precautions have a technical, but important term to remember — food-drug interactions.

Some foods and beverages impact on how well a medicine will work, as well as having the potential to cause physiological distress. This distress can include such side effects as constipation, gastrointestinal distress, nausea, vomiting and diarrhea.

The time of day you take your medication can also affect how well it works and how it makes you feel. Certain foods and beverages can also make the drug ineffective or decrease absorption of other nutrients.

Inpatients who are discharged with medicine that has any potential food-drug interactions, are instructed on the precautions prior to discharge by either the physicians, nurses or dietitians.

Outpatients who receive prescriptions for medicines that have potential food-drug interactions, can receive their education from the prescribing physician in the clinic, the pharmacist filling the prescription or may refer themselves to the Nutrition Clinic for additional education.

Martin Army Community Hospital completes approximately 1,200 new outpatient prescriptions daily.

"We hope to provide continuous education on food-drug interactions, highlighting a different class of drugs each time," said Gilda Smith, Pharmacy Service.

Smith said patients are always welcome to refer themselves to the Nutrition Clinic for more information.

OWC gives back to community with scholarships, donations

By Judy Rasper
Officers' Wives' Club

Fort Benning's Officers' Wives' Club (OWC) is a charitable organization that gives back to its community.

Over the years, the OWC has given out scholarships and donations to many private, non-profit organizations.

To receive a donation, requests need to be submitted and approved by the OWC board of directors.

This year the majority of our donations will be disbursed during our January and April OWC board of directors' meetings.

Requests for the January and April disbursements must be received no later than Dec. 1 and March 13, respectively. If a specific donation is needed before January 1998, please note on the request.

Should your organization wish to submit a request, please include the following information:

- the amount of money requested
- the total amount of money needed
- specific purpose of money requested
- fund-raising efforts
- other organizations you are requesting funds from
- number of military affected
- the name and phone number of your point of contact

Submit requests to: Officers' Wives' Club of Fort Benning, P.O. Box 51978 Fort Benning, GA, 31905.

For more information, call Judy Rasper at 689-4530.

Bodybuilding

Championships seek best bodies on the installation

By John W. Peeler
Special to the Bayonet©

Fort Benning kicks-off its annual Body Building Championships at the Main NCO Club, Building 2784 Oct. 18.

The event is open to civilians, active duty personnel, family members, civilians, Department of Defense personnel and retirees.

Although the competition is open to the general public, only Fort Benning assigned personnel can win the Mr. and Ms. Fort Benning titles.

Weigh-ins take place at the NCO Club between 9 and 11 a.m. Oct. 18. Prejudging begins at noon for the women's categories and 12:30 p.m. for the men's categories.

Registration is $35 for a single category and $10 for each additional crossover.

Checks should be made out to the Morale, Welfare and Recreation Fund and mailed to DCA, CRD, Sports Branch, Building 241, Fort Benning, Ga., 31905.

Cost for the event is $2 for the prejudging show and $5 for the evening show, which begins at 7:30 p.m.

Awards will be provided to Mr. and Ms. Fort Benning winners, the top three in each category, plus the top two in the 35 and over age group.

For more information, call Lulu Mitchenor at 545-1435, Christopher Winterman at 545-5777 or Leon Johnson at 685-9555.

Last year's male winner, Randy Watson, excited the crowd with his performance to win his second straight Mr. Fort Benning title.

Powerlifters gear up for post championships

By John W. Peeler
Special to the Bayonet©

Some of the strongest men and women on post are gearing up for the Fort Benning Powerlifting Championships set to begin Sept. 27 at the Audie Murphy Fitness Center.

Weigh-in for the event is from 4-6 p.m. Sept. 26 and from 8:30-9 a.m. Sept. 27.

This year's events for the competition include the squat, bench press and deadlift.

Separate individual weight classes are set for the competition with men competing in 114-, 123-, 132, 148-, 165-, 181-, 198-, 220-, 242-, and 242-plus pound weight classes.

Women's competition weight classes are 97-, 104-, 114-, 123-, 132-, 148-, 165-, and 165-plus pound weight classes.

The event, sponsored by the Sports Branch, Community Recreation Division, is open to active duty personnel, family members, Department of Defense personnel and retirees and is governed by the U.S. Powerlifting Federation.

Winners in each weight class are determined by combined total lifts in each of the three competition categories. Last year's best total lift was 1,410 pounds by Eusa Bright.

The Ranger Training Brigade, who walked away with the first place team trophy last year, will defend its team trophy title against the 29th Infantry Regiment who placed second in last year's competition.

Trophies will be awarded for the top finishers in each weight category and team trophies given out to the top three finishers.

Other awards include the best squat, best bench press, best deadlift and best overall lifter.

For more information on the competition, call Carol Gearheart at 545-4592 or 545-1940 or stop by your local fitness center.

11th Inf Regt looking for volunteers

USAIC Public Affairs Office

If you have ever wanted to attend a major golf tournament, but have not been in a location sponsoring an event or just haven't had the time nor money, you are in luck.

The Buick Challenge and the 11th Infantry Regiment needs you.

The 11th Infantry Regiment is recruiting volunteers to help out at the Buick Challenge Golf Tournament at Callaway Gardens Oct. 2 and 3.

The volunteers will carry placards with a pro's name on it and his score. The volunteers will get free Buick Challenge T-shirts and hats, plus lunch.

Some may even pickup some air-time on ESPN as the TV network pans the field then focuses on a placard bearer.

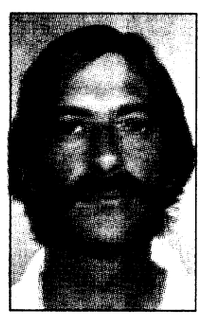
Those interested in volunteering for either of the two days, should call the operations office at the regiment at 545-7033 or 545-6017.

Today is also the last day to sign up to be a marshal on the 11th hole. There are still a limited number of positions at both the Larry Mize and Aflac Pro-ams Sept. 29 and Oct. 1; plus some positions during the four-day tournament, Oct. 2 to 5.

Needed are people to tend the T-box, landing area, crossing area and green.

Because of the TV-coverage, marshals need to be in uniform. The cost for the Buick Challenge windbreaker, golf shirt and hat or visor is $51.

Marshals will also receive preferred parking for each day of the event, free admission for each day plus admittance to Callaway Gardens and free greens fees once the tournament is over. This alone is a $65 value.



Marshals will also be fed.

To be a marshal, call 545-2211, or come to Room 608 in Infantry Hall.

All volunteers are invited to the volunteer party at the conclusion of the tournament. The party includes refreshments and a live band.

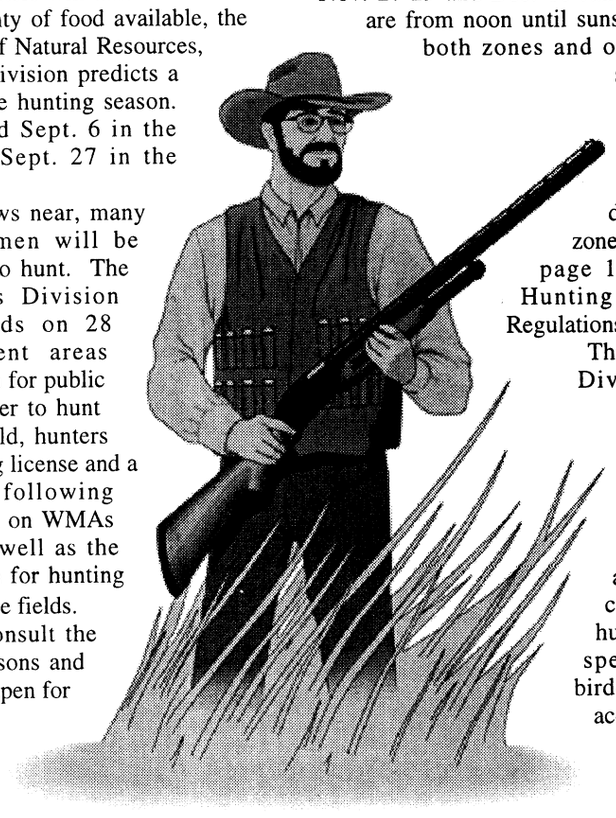
OUTDOORS

Dove season opens soon for southern zone



Wildlife Resources Division

SOCIAL CIRCLE, Ga. — Fall marks the opening of hunting season in Georgia, and more than 125,000 dove hunters will take to the fields in September. With plenty of food available, the Georgia Department of Natural Resources, Wildlife Resources Division predicts a good outlook for dove hunting season. Dove season opened Sept. 6 in the northern zone and Sept. 27 in the southern zone.

As the season draws near, many sportsmen and women will be searching for places to hunt. The Wildlife Resources Division manages dove fields on 28 wildlife management areas (WMAs) that are open for public dove hunting. In order to hunt doves on a WMA field, hunters must possess a hunting license and a WMA stamp. The following chart lists information on WMAs with dove fields as well as the number of acres open for hunting and the condition of the fields.

Hunters should consult the 1997-98 Hunting Seasons and Regulations for days open for hunting on WMA fields, quota and check-in regulations, and directions to each WMA. These regulations are available at all Wildlife Resources Division offices or wherever hunting licenses are sold.

The season runs from Sept. 6-Oct. 5., Nov. 27-29, and Dec. 10-Jan. 15 in the northern zone. In the southern zone, the opening day for dove hunters is Sept. 27, and the season runs from Sept. 27-Oct. 6., Nov. 27-29 and Dec. 10-Jan. 15. Shooting hours are from noon until sunset on opening day in both zones and one-half hour before sunrise to sunset for the remainder of the season. The daily bag limit is 12 birds per hunter. A description of the dove zone line can be found on page 16 of the 1997 - 98 Hunting Seasons and Regulations.

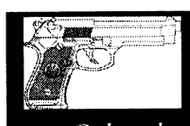
The Wildlife Resources Division reminds dove hunters they must have the free Harvest Information Program (HIP) participation stamp affixed to their license carrier card before hunting dove and other species of migratory birds. The stamp can be acquired by filling out a HIP questionnaire at any license dealer.

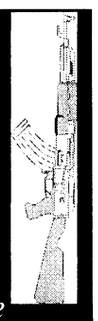
For more information on dove hunting in Georgia, contact the Wildlife Resources Division. Game Management office nearest you or call (770) 918-6416.

HIP stamp helps set migratory bird limits

Wildlife Resources Division

SOCIAL CIRCLE, Ga.—Dove season opened Sept. 6 in the northern zone and will open Sept. 27 in the southern zone. Harvest Information Program (HIP) participation stamps are required for hunters who hunt migratory bird such as doves, ducks, geese, rail, and other species.





HIP is a collaborative effort between the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service and state wildlife agencies, such as the Wildlife Resources Division. Current estimates show that approximately 125,000 Georgia hunters harvest over 1.8 million dove annually. HIP will provide more reliable estimates of the number of migratory game birds harvested throughout the country. These estimates will give wildlife managers information needed to make decisions on hunting seasons, bag limits and population management for migratory game birds.

"As the concern for migratory bird populations continues to increase, it is essential for wildlife managers to gather the best information possible about factors affecting these populations,'' said David Waller, Director of the Wildlife Resources Division. "With the cooperation of hunters, HIP will provide biologists with the information they need to ensure healthy migratory bird populations for future generations of hunters."

To participate in HIP in Georgia, hunters must fill out a short questionnaire on a HIP card. This questionnaire provides the hunter's harvest information from last year's hunting season. After the questionnaire is complete, the hunter is given a free Georgia Migratory Bird Stamp. HIP card questionnaires will be sent to the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service (USFWS). A sample of the nationwide HIP participants will be asked to complete a more detailed national harvest information survey about the species they hunted.

The national harvest information will be used to develop reliable estimates of the total harvest of all migratory birds throughout the country. While the USFWS and state wildlife agencies have conducted migratory bird surveys for decades, the methods used to collect harvest data vary a great deal from state to state making it difficult to compare the results. Through HIP the USFWS will have a standard method to compare harvest information.

The HIP card questionnaire and free Georgia Migratory Bird Stamp is available at all license dealers. For more information on HIP, contact your nearest Wildlife Resources Division, Game Management Office or call (770) 918-6416.

Hunting season brings best of outdoors cooking

Escape to the Outdoors

With fall and winter hunting seasons beginning, freezers all over the country will soon be filled with stocks of flavorful deer, elk and antelope meat.

The folks at a major spice manufacturing plant suggest this is the perfect time to schedule a party where your guests can assemble and cook their own venison kebobs. To help all your wild game meals be as good as they can be, use specially packaged marinades.

Choose from mesquite with lime juice, herb & garlic with lemon juice, seasoned marinade with a hint of hickory smoke or teriyaki with pineapple juice. All come in 5-ounce foil packs that travel well, need no refrigeration and are just the right size for a meal.

The marinades (seasoned salt, lemon pepper and garlic pepper) come in a handy fanny pack size and are available exclusively at outdoor retailers.

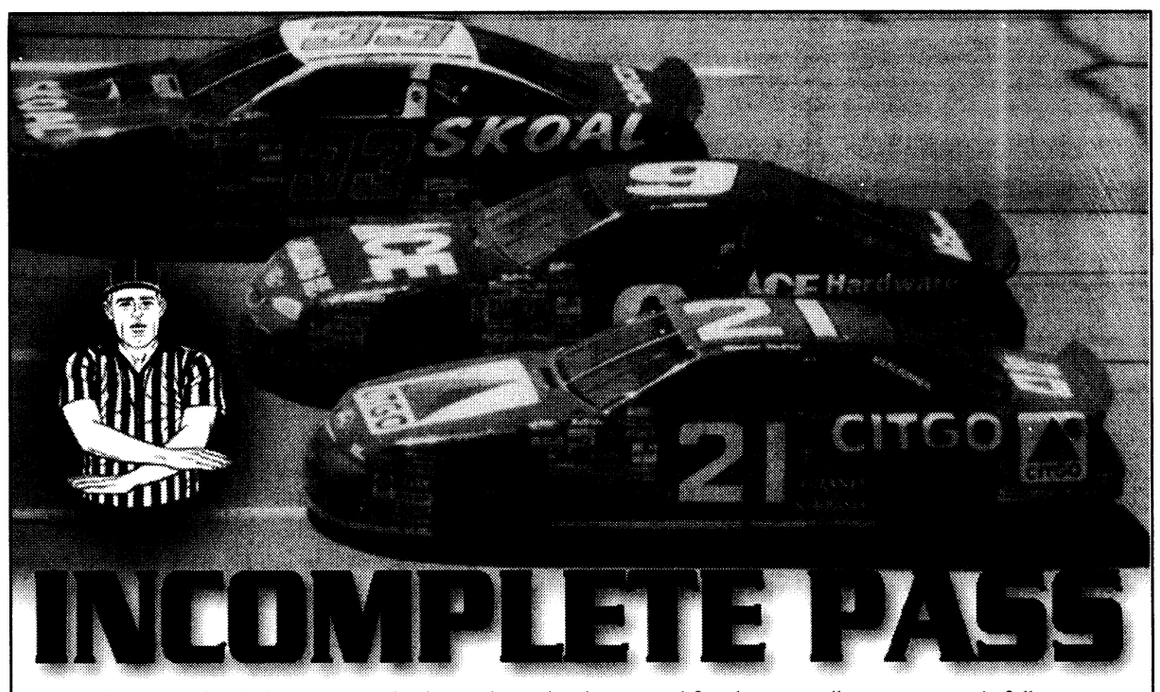
If your favorite sporting goods store doesn't stock the marinades and spices, ask them to call the major spice manufacturers for ordering information.

Venison kebobs

Great party recipe! Cut deer, elk or antelope steaks or roasts into bite sized pieces — about one-inch cubed.

Place the meat in a resealable plastic bag and add a 5-ounce foil pack of a marinade — teriyaki, mesquite or seasoned marinade; all work well. Perhaps you could make up a bag of each and let your guests make their own choice. Refrigerate the meat for at least two hours — overnight is okay.

When the grill is ready, equip each guest with two skewers and let them build their own kebobs, alternating veggies and meat, choosing from a selection of ingredients arrayed in separate bowls. Try cherry tomatoes, ripe olives, two-inch bacon strips, onion pieces, canned green chilis, mushrooms, bell pepper strips, pineapple chunks — or anything else your imagination can add. The flavor created in a piece of venison surrounded by pineapple on one side and green chili on the other is unique!



Hang a small name tag on each skewer to avoid arguments at the grill and let each guest cook their own, using some marinade to baste often. Some seasoned salt and garlic pepper adds a great touch too. While the first skewer cooks, they build the second and it cooks while they eat the first. Nobody has just one!

INCOMPLETE PASS
Dramatic lead changes, packed stands and split-second finishes are all a sure sign it's fall in Alabama. But this year, the track is going to be as hot as the gridiron as White Knuckle Weekend roars into October at Talladega Superspeedway.
It all kicks off Thursday, October 9 with ARCA practice and pole qualifying. Then, on Friday, October 10 it's LCI Qualifying Day featuring Winston Cup Busch Pole qualifying. On Saturday, October 11 ARCA's best drivers try to tackle the most unpredictable track on the ARCA Bondo/Mar-Hyde Series in the Winn Dixie 500k. And on Sunday, October 12 the blitz is on as the DieHard 500 celebrates its 29th birthday!

GPS devices add to gear

Escape to the Outdoors

With fall hunting seasons just getting underway, many sportsmen are making their annual checklist of gear they need to take along.

This year, in addition to the usual items such as guns, ammunition, binoculars and clothing, many hunters are adding a good set of topographical maps, a compass and a GPS or global positioning system receiver to their list.

Lightweight and portable, these handy GPS devices let you record your position, the location of your hunting camp, treestands or where you parked your truck.

With these locations stored in the memory bank of your GPS, it will guide you back to these locations any time of the day or night in any kind of weather. By using a GPS satellite navigator, hunters can now safely explore new territory and increase their odds for success by venturing further afield.

If you're new to GPS navigation this fall, here are some tips from the experts at a major GPS manufacturer.

•Pre-season scouting — If time still permits, take a few weekends to do some scouting ahead of time. Use your GPS to mark game trails, potential treestand sites, feed plots and bedding areas. Also mark the location where you see any game. The GPS will keep track of the time so you can plot game activity and movement.

•Keep a log of key locations — Once in the field, always remember to record the locations of your camp, trail heads, treestands, game trails and other important sites in a written log. Better yet, write them down on your topographical map. That way you'll never lose them, and they'll be readily at hand for future trips.

•Take the best route — Sometimes the easiest way to your treestand or area you want to hunt isn't the best way to go. By avoiding active game trail and feeding areas you can increase your odds for success. With your GPS you can create a route that takes you in through the "back door" before daylight or back home after dusk without fear of getting lost.

•Make your own map — Use the plotter screen on your GPS to make your own map. By plotting the locations of ridges, saddles, creeks and other landmarks, you can tell at a glance where you are without referring to your topo map. Because the plotter will actually draw a picture of your predetermined route and the course you're following, you'll know how far you've traveled and the distance to your destination.

•After the hunt — Getting your trophy back to camp can be a chore, particularly if you take your game late in the day. After field dressing your game, mark the location and come back the next morning. A GPS will also show you the shortest, most direct route back to camp or your vehicle.

The new generation of inexpensive GPS receivers are about the size of the TV remote and weigh only 10 ounces. These systems provide the typical position location information, the direction and distance to the destination along with the speed at which you're traveling

Location information is provided in latitude and longitude or UTM map coordinates, as well as altitude readings, making the GPS ideal for use with maps. Most will store 200 locations and up to five routes with 20 legs each. The realtime plotter screen constantly updates your progress and lets you zoom in for greater detail or out for the "big picture."

Advanced navigation features let the user determine location coordinates by map projection and triangulation. In addition, an odometer keeps track of distance covered and you can determine sunrise and sunset times to make sure you're in the field early or headed home before dark.

When the hunting seasons are over, don't put away your GPS. It's ideal for a variety of winter activities such as snowmobiling and cross-country skiing. No matter how the trail twists and winds, you'll always be able to get to your starting point.

Black powder: Modern technology adds to old-age muzzleloading tradition

Escape to the Outdoors

Black powder shooting is one of the fastest growing sports in America today for many reasons. Many states have special black powder or muzzleloader seasons for big game, and those permits are usually easier to draw, since there are fewer applicants. Some shooters simply enjoy the process of the age-old tradition of muzzleloading.

Vast advances have been made in muzzleloading technology resulting in guns that shoot accurately and reliably out to 200 yards. Flintlock guns require a steady hand and eye — these guns have a delay between pulling the trigger and the gun firing. The newer caplock guns use percussion caps that result in immediate detonation, more like a modern center fire cartridge.

Although the law of supply and demand has seen to it that there are many companies making very accurate and advanced muzzleloaders, there are still accessories that black powder shooters need — stuff you don't take along if you're shooting a centerfire firearm.

Several manufacturers have made it easy for beginners by providing a black powder starter kit, which has just about everything a newcomer to the sport will need to get going. The kit includes a Short Starter with brass tips, a powder measure, capper, ball puller, a supply of pre-lubed patches and a camouflaged belt bag to carry it all.

Keeping a firearm clean is the number one way of assuring its accuracy, and this is even more true for a black powder gun. For the best accuracy, a muzzleloader barrel should be swabbed after every shot.

Muzzleloader shooters can't afford to be lazy. If you don't clean your weapon thoroughly after every outing, the result can be rust and corrosion that will ruin the gun.

For really serious cleaning, a black out flush cleaning system thoroughly cleans the barrel from muzzle to nipple.

Hunters are always worrying about smells and unnatural odors, especially if hunting conditions require you to take shots at close range. It's difficult to sneak up on wary prey, no matter how stealthy you are, if the scent or petroleum is preceding you. An all-natural lube is perfect for muzzleloader hunters because it is made of all natural ingredients that provide a natural cover scent for the gun and the hunter.

Although this may sound like a lot of stuff to carry around with you in the field, the components are actually very compact. Those buckskin "purses" you see in the pictures of early American settlers are actually "possibles" bags where the shooters kept their ammunition, powder, patches, etc.

Modern technology has made some improvement over the traditional buckskin construction. These bags are made from camouflage fleece to be extra quiet, and has a weather-resistant interior to keep your powder and other equipment dry. It has enough space for everything you could "possibly" need, and is adjustable at both the shoulder strap and on the flap buckle.

Some belt bags have two zippered pouches to hold your gear and a fast-release elastic holsters for those fast follow-up shots. These bags are also made from camouflaged fleece with a weather-resistant lining.

KNOW YOUR BUILDER

George Woodruff III

Julie Quigley

The Woodruff name has been associated with the home building industry in Columbus for the past 40 years. Our company represents the same high standard instilled by George's grandfather many years ago, in providing people from all walks of life the opportunity of owning a quality home.

It is not our company's goal to build the most homes in a year. It is, however, our goal to deal fairly with our customers and provide them with the best possible house for their money.

We believe one of the miracles of the construction industry is that workers, each skilled in different areas, can work together to create a dream born from a set of blueprints. Our job is to insure that this is done smoothly.

We provide a wide range of services such as mortgage assistance, custom designs and plans, selection of your homesite, decorating assistance and much more. We hope that you will allow us the opportunity of making your dream come true.

Sincerely,

George Woodruff, III Julie R. Quigley

ALL RIGHT ALREADY, so a U.S. Savings Bond isn't the most exciting thing in the world. GOOD FOR YOU! After all, this is your hard-earned money we're talking about.
Do you really want your investments to be thrilling? Breathtaking? NO WAY. Wouldn't you rather have an investment that's guaranteed to grow, one that's backed by the full faith and credit of the United States government?
Sure you would. U.S. Savings Bonds.
Yawn all the way to the bank!

36th bids farewell to bridge company

By Sgt. Marc G. Turchin
Bayonet staff writer

The 1990s have not been the best of times for the military. With base closings, downsizings and doing more with less, service members are never certain of what mission their units may be called upon to do.

While training in Oklahoma earlier this year, members of the 586th Engineer Company (Assault Float Bridge) found out they would complete a mission many never imagined — the inactivation of their unit.

That mission came to an end Sept. 19 on Engineer Field as Soldiers, families and friends joined the Soldiers of the 36th Engineer Group to say goodbye to the 586th.

Most of the unit's Soldiers sat in the bleachers and watched as the company first sergeant, 1st Sgt. Gregory Watkins passed the guidon to Col. A. Allen Rasper, 36th Engineer Group commander, who in turn passed the guidon to company commander Capt. Gregory Bone. Bone then passed it back to Watkins for casing.

Rasper said the unit's Soldiers handled the inactivation with professionalism.

"River Rats, you were provided the leadership, the guidance, the support and the resources — but ultimately it was you who made the inactivation happen," Rasper said.

Bone told the unit's Soldiers to apply what they learned to their next assignment.

"Take the lessons that we've learned here and remember the reward for doing a job well done is the opportunity to do more," he said.

The unit's former Soldiers will move on to different units around the world, as will some of the unit's equipment. Some Soldiers are even joining units on Fort Benning. But according to one Soldier, things will never be the same.

"There's a lot of sorrow because the unit has been through so much," said Sgt. 1st Class Jeff L. Kline, a four-year veteran of the unit and operations sergeant. "They participated in operations in Somalia, Haiti and Bosnia and to be inactivated like this just leaves you guessing."

The unit received the Meritorious Unit Citation for its performance at the port of Jacksonville, Fla., during Operations Desert Shield and Storm in 1990 and 1991. The company helped provide disaster relief for victims of Hurricane Andrew in Miami in 1992. From September to October 1994, the 586th participated in Operation Uphold Democracy in Haiti. From December 1995 to June 1996, the "River Rats" were in Croatia and Bosnia for Operation Joint Endeavor.

During this period, the unit constructed the longest assault float bridge in military history across the Sava River.

It was this experience that found the unit in Oklahoma training with National Guard Soldiers and allowed them to overcome the shock of knowing the unit was scheduled to inactivate.

"It kind of caught everyone off guard when we heard about it," Kline said. "Then the commander talked to us and we realized it was going to happen anyway, the morale picked back up."

Once the unit returned from Oklahoma, in June, the unit continued to train for its wartime mission. But, Kline said, the time finally came when the training stopped.

"Around August we were told to stop training," Kline said. "Any squad size or team training was stopped. We then concentrated on individual training."

Kline said he'll miss the training missions and the deployments he went through with the 586th. But he said his heart belongs to Soldiers he shared the last four years with.

"The closeness I gathered when we were deployed to those different places — that's what I'm going to miss the most," he said.

The inactivation of the 586th, according to Rasper, is just another piece of a bigger pie.

"Today marks the end of another chapter in the history of this distinguished engineer group," Rasper said. "The chapter ends not as we like it to end, rather, we are experiencing change that mirrors the rest of the Army. That change involves force structure realignment and downsizing — the inactivation of the 586th Engineer Company."

Repairs

for McGraw Manor, Perkins Place to be contracted out

By Staff Sgt. Lori Egan
Bayonet editor

Sink stopped up? Toilet doesn't flush? Air conditioner won't cool? Most Fort Benning residents know who to call when they have problems in their quarters — the Directorate of Public Works work order phone number.

Now that number will change for more than 1,100 Fort Benning families.

Residents of McGraw Manor and Perkins Place will no longer call the DPW work order section when they experience household problems. They will call Building Service International of New York, Inc., (BSI) beginning Wednesday.

BSI, the company that maintains the Bouton Heights-Davis Hill housing areas, received the contract to manage the maintenance and repair of Perkins Place and McGraw Manor because of a smaller DPW work force.

"The in-house DPW work force is getting smaller and smaller," said Ron Smith, chief of Family Housing, DPW. "We can no longer effectively provide the service out there with our in-house work force so we had to look for alternative methods."

The change should be invisible to the customer, said Richard Chancey, chief, Inspection Branch. DPW. The only difference should be the number the customer calls.

BSI will fix the routine carpentry, electrical, plumbing, heating and air conditioning problems, Smith said.

However, pest control remains a DPW in-house function.

Nat'l Guard units fill in for 498th

By Sgt. Marc G. Turchin
Bayonet staff writer

Today's Army continues to be deployed around the world. With units in nearly 100 countries at any given time, voids are left on installations across the Army.

Reserve or National Guard units are mandated to come on active duty and support the installation's hole when the active duty unit is deployed.

Just such an instance happened not once, but twice recently on Fort Benning.

The 832nd Medical Company (Air Ambulance) replaced the deployed 498th Medical Company (Air Ambulance) in February when the unit deployed to Bosnia. Now it is time for the 832nd to be replaced.

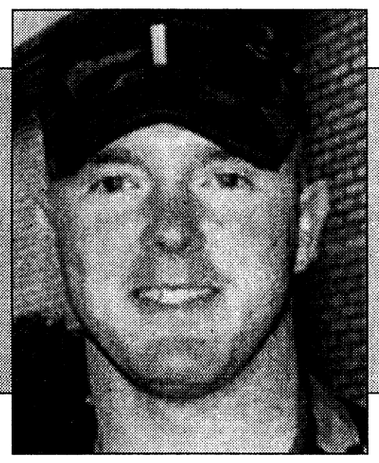
The 832nd is being replaced by the 812th Medical Company (Air Ambulance). Both are National Guard units.

The 832nd, which hails from West Bend, Wis., has continued the mission of the 498th for the past seven months. The company includes 101 Soldiers and 13 helicopters.

"We don't just haul victims back, we provide medical care en route," said Capt. Russell J. Sweet, platoon leader for the 832nd. "That's probably our primary goal."

The air ambulance unit on Fort Benning does more than just support the post.

The normal mission of covering the ranger camps at Eglin Air Force Base and Dahlonega, Ga., were not given to the 832nd because of the type of helicopters the unit flies. The 832nd and the 812th both fly UH-V or "hueys."



According to Sweet, the mission of covering the camps involves UH-60 Blackhawk helicopters.

"That mission wound up being given to a unit at Fort Bragg," Sweet said. The unit is the 56th Medical

APFT: "PT slugs" come out of the woodwork for second time this year

By Sgt. 1st Class Larry Lane
Public Affairs Office NCOIC

Sgt. 1st Class Larry Lane thinks physical training should be consistent year-round, not just near APFT time.

commentary

It must be fall because the "PT slugs" are back. About one month before a record Army Physical Fitness Test, the "physical training slugs" return to the Staff Sgt. Jimmy G. Stewart Field to prepare for the test. They can be seen dragging around the track, huffing and puffing, waking up their confused skin pores with sweat (perspiration, if you want to be polite).

Twice a year, in the spring and fall, usually in October and April, the Army holds the APFT. After my 12 years of service, this ritual hasn't changed. Yet, there are Soldiers out there, young and old, who have not figured out that it is easier to stay in shape all year around than to try and erase five months of fat and muscle atrophy in one month of working out.

I'm sure Main Post Soldiers have seen the PT slugs clogging the track in the past couple of weeks. I traveled to St. Augustine, Fla., a couple of weeks ago and thought hitting every love bug in the panhandle was irritating, but when the PT slug comes out of hibernation, it's a more troublesome sight. I can clean my windshield but I can't police the entire one-mile track as I try to "earn my money."

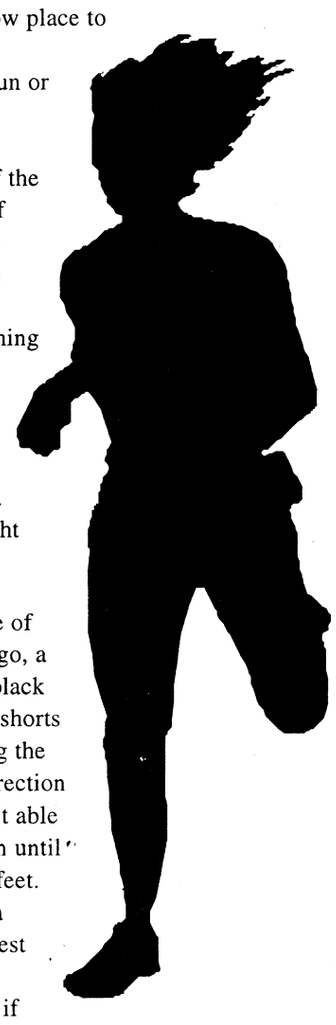
Some runners think it's boring to run the track; there's no hills and the scenery doesn't change. Fine. More room for me. My knees, ankles and back feel much better after running on the dirt track, compared to pounding the hard road.

Sure, I miss running up Cardiac Hill, but I don't miss the potholes and cracks I trip over during a formation run.

Several hundred runners were out on the track the other morning and I'm happy to see them working out but where were they months prior to their upcoming APFT? With the recent PT slug migration to the track, my morning run became more exciting, kind of a combat run where I bob and weave through a number of obstacles.

Perhaps I'll earn some kind of badge after a few weeks of running this way.

For those Soldiers who finally rolled out of bed long enough to put on their running shoes, here are some "don'ts" to keep all of the Soldiers using the track happy.



•Don't try and march a formation of Soldiers across the track into the center field. The chances are good that you won't be able to get the platoon across the field without slowing up or blocking runners, some of whom may be in the middle of their APFT.

•Don't form your platoon on the edge of the track then step backwards onto the track in an attempt to center yourself on your formation. What you've done is walk blindly into the busiest part of the track. What happens next is not a pretty sight and you'll have the opportunity to learn a few new colorful words.

•Don't immediately stop and start walking on the track after completing your sprint to the end of the two-mile run. Someone behind you is doing the same thing, maybe from your formation or another unit. This is especially hazardous around the turns when a group of graders may obscure a runner's ability to forewarn an obstacle.

•Don't run on the inside of the track if you're a slow runner or have a walking profile. This area is traditionally used by those who really want to break some personal records. If you're just out there to "pass another test" or "make minimum," get out of the way.

•Don't walk three or four Soldiers beside each other in a line. This can block about half of the track or more, especially if you're with a pack of really wide Soldiers. I veered around a group of six or seven Soldiers walking side by side, more of a meander or a stroll than a walk. The line funneled runners into a narrow place to pass.

•Don't run or walk in the opposite direction of the majority. If there is any question on what is the correct running direction, face the track with Iron Mike behind you. Column right and begin running.

A couple of mornings ago, a Soldier in black T-shirt and shorts was running the opposite direction and I wasn't able to seem him until the last 30 feet.

He had a reflective vest on, but that only works if lights are shining right at it. Each time we met, it was like playing chicken to see who would move out of the way first.

These are just a few of the trouble spots on the track, but it could be worse if these Soldiers were using the track every morning.

I'm not sure if Soldiers are not observing the five days a week PT schedule or just meeting somewhere else, but Tuesday and Thursday are the clearest days of the week for both the track and the Infantry Hall fitness center.

When it comes to using the track, the old Soldier saying still applies: lead, follow or get out of my way. Or, if you're in my way, sorry about the running shoe on your back.

Different rules apply for golf fans, spectators

By Spc. Clyde Snively
Bayonet columnist

commentary

Military Appreciation Day at the Buick Challenge is just a week away.

Spell that free admission to a big time golf tournament thanks to The Association of the U.S. Army, Buick and Callaway Gardens.

Many of you will be attending your first golf tournament ever. Some because you heard of such great names as Davis Love III, Freddie Couples and Payne Stewart will be playing and you want to see them up close and personal.

Others will be going because your unit will be there passing out free chow.

Whatever your reason for going, you need to bear in mind that watching golf is not the same as watching other spectator sports.

Cominsky Park fans need not apply.

In baseball, basketball and football you're expected to be noisy and raucous from the time the first ball is in play until the last out is made or time runs out.

Ain't so in golf. In golf, silence is golden and cheering is allowed at only the appropriate moment, like after the golfer hits a smashing drive or sinks a long, twisting, miraculous putt.

Laughing or jeering at a bad shot is frowned upon and will probably bring you a firm, yet polite invitation to leave.

So, just because you're in a grandstand, surrounded by thousands of others, don't think you have license to act the fool.

For you neophytes, here's some tips for enjoying the tournament plus a few no-no's to avoid.

There are five basic ways to watch a tournament.

• Spend your entire time on the tee box watching the pros hit 300 yard drives.

• Spend your entire time on the green watching the pros sink long, miraculous putts, while missing some inside 12 inches.

• Stand along the fairway hoping an errant shot will land by you so you will get an up-close and personal encounter with the pro. But do not try to talk to him or get an autograph. The only time to do this is at the end of the day after he turns in his score.

• Pick out a favorite pro and follow him around. When you're finished following him, pick up another pro.

• A combination of all of the above.

If you plan on following one or more pros it's a good idea to get a program (they're free) or clip the pairings and tee times from the local newspaper.

This way you will know when your pro is teeing off and if he's teeing off from the front or back first.

If you plan to wander about visiting greens and tee boxes, hopscotching from one pro to another, always be aware of what is taking place on the course.

You do not want to be talking and or walking while a pro is preparing to make his shot. It can be embarrassing when a pro backs away from his ball to ask you to stop moving or stop talking.

Items that cannot be brought onto the course include cameras and coolers.

Also, dress for the weather. Normally it's cool in the mornings and will warm up in the afternoons. Also if it looks like rain, it probably will. Umbrellas are always a good idea.

Keep your eye on what other spectators are doing and take your cues from them and the marshals.

Finally, don't pick up a golf ball just because it's by itself in the woods or buried in a deep rough.

Just as you touch it, you can be assured that some pro will come by looking for it.

Bottom line. Take advantage of this training holiday. Go to Callaway Gardens and watch some golf.

If you get tired of the golf see what Callaway Gardens has to offer—it's open for your inspection and pleasure.

Retiree Open House set for Oct 24-25, activities include health exams, demos

By Erin Nash
Special to the Bayonet©

Retired military and family members from all branches of the military are invited to an open house set for Oct. 24 -25.

Free physical examinations at Martin Army Community Hospital's Physical Examination Section, Building 323, are available for both men and women beginning at 8 a.m. Oct. 24.

Participants can also visit Hurley Hill to watch a Rangers-in-Action demonstration at 10 a.m.

After the demonstration, retirees and family are invited to dine with the rangers for a small fee of $3 to $4, according to Frieda McDonald, chief of Retirement Services.

Later that evening from 6 to 9 p.m. is what McDonald calls, "an icebreaker," at the National Infantry Museum.

This gives retirees a chance to meet fellow Soldiers and families and share histories and memories.

Breakfast is at 7 to 8:30 a.m. Oct. 25 in Infantry Hall cafeteria, followed immediately by registration at Marshall Auditorium.

Retired Col. Biff Hadden will introduce Post Commanding General Maj. Gen. Carl F. Ernst, who will present the Retirement Services Volunteer of the Year Award and recognize three veterans from WWII, Korea, and Vietnam and in turn will introduce retired Maj. Gen. Jim C. Pennington at 10:30 a.m. Maj. Gen. Pennington will speak about military benefits, the loss and reduction of those benefits and the importance of a strong national defense.

At 11:15 a.m. a health fair sponsored by Preventive Maintenance Care Section of Martin Army Community Hospital will be available to update retirees on health care and benefits.

Preregistration is going on now. For more information, retirees can call Staff Sgt. William Boynton, Retirement Services, at 545-2541.

Human rights leaders visit SOA

By Spc. Alberto Betancourt
SOA Public Affairs

Two leaders in international human rights visited the U. S. Army School of the Americas Sept. 19.

Swiss Maj. Gen. Louis Geiger, counselor to the International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC) on training for armed forces, said during his visit he wanted to share with the school the ICRC's commitment to human rights.

Accompanying Geiger was Delegate General of the ICRC for the Americas, Francis Amar, also from Switzerland.

Geiger said one of the ICRC's goal was to inform future military leaders about the mandate of the ICRC, its capacities and its challenges.

He said it takes a certain ethic to be a Soldier in today's and tomorrow's armed forces because the Soldier must be able to help and reconstruct, not only destroy and kill.

"What I observed today is that the SOA's curriculum is exactly this way," he said. "You integrate human rights, peace keeping efforts and how to assist civilians. I was very impressed."

Geiger said he respected the school's teaching of human rights in the classroom and during field exercises.

"That is the right way to do it," he said. "Human rights is very important. You train the students well. They are the future leading generation on human rights. When they leave here, they'll understand their commitment to human rights."

Amar agreed. "Your emphasis on human rights is very positive," he said. "If there were ever any dark clouds — there's nothing but blue skies now."

832nd: Air Ambulance Company prepares for departure

Company (Air Ambulance).

But, the 832nd wasn't just sitting around by any means.

While they weren't responsible for the ranger camps, they did have a detachment of Soldiers at Fort Stewart, Ga., and helped out the city of Columbus when called upon.

While here the unit flew more than 95 medical missions without incident and logged in 2,000 flight hours.

"There is nothing reserve about this unit," said 1st Lt. Scott Rollston, 498th rear detachment commander. "They held high the standards of aeromedical evacuation supporting Fort Stewart, Fort Benning and the surrounding communities," Rollston said.

During the unit's time on post, it also performed 540 missions at the Joint Readiness Training Center, Fort Polk, La., According to Rollston, 24 of them were "real world" type missions.

"They received the Hero of the Battle Award for being the first air ambulance company to have zero aircraft shot down (simulated) or personnel captured during their whole training period," Rollston said.

With all that accomplished, the 812th has some big shoes to fill. But the 812th has played this role before.

In the last five years, the 812nd, which is based in Louisiana and has a detachment in Oklahoma, deployed to Operation Desert Storm, to Haiti and to Belize in support of a Louisiana National Guard operation.

Actually, the unit found out it was being deployed again while in Belize.

"We thought we were going to Bosnia," said Capt. Patrick R. Bossetta, operations officer for the 812th. "Then it got changed to Fort Lewis, Wash., and finally to Fort Benning," Bossetta said.

Bossetta, who is a lawyer when not wearing his flight suit, said the 812th Soldiers began the schooling necessary to be deployed to Fort Lewis when the orders changed to Fort Benning.

"We had people enrolled in the High Altitude Training School when the new orders came down," Bossetta said. The school teaches pilots the differences in handling the helicopter in high altitude.

One major difference in this deployment from those in the unit's past is the amount of Soldiers deployed.

The 812th only has 36 people and eight helicopters here.

"This is the smallest number of people we've ever deployed for this type of mission," he said. "It's not going to be easy, but we'll organize the best we can."

Bossetta said at any given time he has five of his seven crews committed to a mission. The 812th continues to support Fort Stewart and is also helping the CONUS Replacement Center by providing support to the lane training.

"Our readiness level remains very high and morale is extremely high," Bossetta said. "It should carry us through."

The unit is scheduled to be here until December. They hope to be home before Christmas, Bossetta said, but he added the unit is prepared to stay.

"We're ready to stay until February if necessary," he said.

With the possibility of staying longer than expected, Bossetta said the 832nd helped out with the transition of taking over the air ambulance mission.

"The 832nd has been terrific," Bossetta said. "All the NCOs, officers and Soldiers made our life easy when we got here as far as the mission goes." The 812th also has received some help from the 36th Engineer Group. The group has sent 11 Soldiers to the 812th to help them because of the shortage of Soldiers they came here with.

Coming on to active duty has been quite an experience for both units.

Both men said getting used to being on active duty took some time. Both companies participate in physical training at least three days a week. Both now have accountability formations and Soldiers from the 832nd even went to the ranges and qualified on the M-16 and played in the post softball league.

One of the things both also agreed on was the pay cuts.

Both men said many of the Soldiers in their units took major pay cuts to be here. Within both units many Soldiers are employed as teachers, corporate leaders, computer managers, business owners and pilots.

"The motivation is extremely high though," Bossetta said. "They don't mind it as much because they're glad to be here."

Sweet said the same about his unit.

"It's a tribute to the professionalism of the Soldiers in our unit," Sweet said.

While the 812th continues the mission the air ambulance unit on post, Soldiers from the 832nd look forward to going home.

"Most really miss their families," Sweet said. " We're going to include the families in the first couple of drills to show them they are a part of us," he said.

The 832nd is scheduled to leave Tuesday.

AUSA Fish Fry set for tonight

USAIC Public Affairs Office

"And the winner is . . ."

Tonight, at the annual Association of the U.S. Army Fish Fry at Uchee Creek some lucky person will win a brand new truck or car.

The $10 fish fry tickets are being sold by unit representatives along with the $1 raffle tickets that will purchase the chance to win a new car or truck valued at $15,000. Tickets are also available at Uchee Creek.

While the lucky ticket holder need not be present to win, he or she will miss out on a lot of fellowship, fish and liquid refreshments.

The fish fry is being catered by Captain Tom's. Bill Heard is helping sponsor it.

All vehicles are valued at a minimum of $15,000, tag and title will also be paid for.

AUSA is conducting the car or truck raffle to raise money to send Soldiers to this year's national convention in Washington D.C., in October.

DPW: Lets contract

Buck, director of Public Works, said the procedures for placing a work order with BSI will be exactly the same as the DPW in-house procedures except BSI will be the day-to-day point of contact.

"For example, when a Soldier gets orders to PCS, he needs to call BSI immediately to report every deficiency in his house to be repaired," Smith said. "Because we want all that work done before the occupant's final inspection."

The deficiency report needs to be made at least 30 days out for BSI to have time to respond, Chancey said.

"If he hasn't reported any of the deficiencies, the policy is we don't clear the Soldier until he gets the things fixed," Smith said.

If the needed repairs are reported 30 days out and BSI has material on order, the Soldier won't be penalized. DPW will go ahead and clear the Soldier as long as the work orders are on record called in, Smith said.

It is very important for the quarter's occupant to log a work order number when the needed repair is called in, Chancey said.

Regardless of the problem, McGraw Manor and Perkins Place residents will call BSI to initiate repairs.

According to Charles Sanders, Construction Inspection Branch, DPW, BSI doesn't have a backlog of work orders in the Bouton Heights-Davis Hill housing areas. Typically, BSI responds within 24 hours to routine calls.

BSI installed a phone number for just McGraw Manor and Perkins Place residents to call. The number is 689-1773.

The telephone number for residents in Bouton Heights and Davis Hill has not changed, Chancey said.

The level and quality of service won't change, Chancey said, and residents shouldn't experience any change except for who to call when there is a problem.

Customer comment cards will be available for feedback. Buck said BSI is viewed as a DPW employee.

With BSI taking over the maintenance and repair of McGraw Manor and Perkins Place, the smaller DPW work force will be able to better serve the remaining Fort Benning housing areas, Buck said.

For answers to specific questions, call Sanders, at 545-4740.

Infantry students learn while in field

By 2nd Lt. Mark C. Andre
Infantry Officers Basic Course

It was 6:45 a.m. when M-60 fire split the quiet morning air at the McKenna Military Operations on Urban Terrain (MOUT) site as Soldiers of Company C, 2nd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment, began their assault to clear the village of the deadly guerrillas known as the Crimson Tigers.

This company, however, is a bit different from other light Infantry companies because the Soldiers are all second lieutenants. This assault marked the beginning of their four-day long field training exercise (FTX).

The mission of the 2nd Bn., 11th Inf. Regt., is to prepare and train Infantry lieutenants to lead platoons in combat.

This mission is what the 16-week Infantry Officer Basic Course (IOBC) is all about: lieutenants learning the capabilities of a light Infantry platoon and challenges that go along with the position of platoon leader.

Most of the FTX action occurred on the objective with M-60 machine guns blazing, teams clearing rooms and smoke everywhere. The focus of the training was on the preparation, planning and field leadership that each lieutenant was expected to demonstrate in several field and garrison leadership skills.

The lieutenants served in positions ranging from rifleman to company commander, training from the bottom up.

The concept involved the new officers learning how to employ all the weapon systems and personnel in his platoon by using them himself.

First, individual skills were trained and honed, then small unit (team and squad level) tactics were drilled into the students. Next, several platoon level FTXs introduced the student to platoon offensive and defensive operations.

"The training and FTXs show you just how difficult it is to be a platoon leader and how much we still have to learn," said 2nd Lt. Benjamin Rost, IOBC student.

In the final FTX, the student company operated in sustained tactical operations together for the first time.

The FTX began with an air mobile operation, followed by a night movement and then a deliberate attack to seize a village held by the rebel opposing force.

After the MOUT attack, the company went into a search-and-attack mission and completed an eight-mile road march to their patrol base. At the base, the company chain of command prepared for the final mission — a deliberate attack on the main base camp of the fictitious guerrillas.

After the attack, the company conducted another air mobile mission to the rear to conduct recovery operations.

"This FTX was a smoker," said 2nd Lt. Curt Rowland. "It was a lot of fun. I learned a lot about my chosen profession."

First Lt. Abdulvahap Ozkul, an international student from Turkey, said, "The FTX gave us the opportunity to combine all our learned skills into one mission. We learned how to endure mentally and physically in a sustained operation."

"The birds (UH-60 Blackhawk helicopters) really motivated us, they were lots of fun," Ozkul said.

Second Lt. Arthur Bengue, from the Central African Republic said, "The course gave me good exposure to how other armies train and the high caliber of your Army's NCO Corps is."

In more than a week, the newly graduated lieutenants will attend other schools such as Airborne, Bradley Leaders Course, Mortar Leaders Course and Ranger School.

After these schools, the new platoon leaders will move to their first platoons and will be expected to successfully lead their Soldiers.

The lieutenants are exposed to many types of Infantry operations while at IOBC — giving them the basics of how the Infantry fights and wins in the battlefield.

When the new lieutenants finally reach their blue cord ceremony two days before graduation, they know they have experienced some of the best leadership training that the Army has to offer.

They also know they have the knowledge to go to any assignment and lead Soldiers.

news from the front

498th Medical Company (AA)

More than six months passed since the company welcomed the 832nd Medical Company (AA) to Fort Benning.

In that short time this superbly talented team of Soldiers has flown close to 2000 flight hours and 96 medical missions without incident, said 1st Lt. Scott Rollston, rear detachment commander.

"They were unbelievable at their rotation to the Joint Readiness Training Center (JRTC) in Louisiana, where they flew 540 missions of which 24 were real world," he said.

They received the "Hero of the Battle," award for being the first air ambulance company to have zero aircraft shot down (simulated) or personnel captured during their entire training period.

This truly professional group give new meaning to the term "Reserve Component," Rollston said. "There is nothing reserve about this company. Their team spirit is their forte. They left their homes, jobs and families to come here with a vigor second to none. We don't have to say it to be nice, they showed us in everything they did," Rollston said.

More often than not, weekends and personal time were spent working around the company area on beautification projects.

The Soldiers landscaped the grounds in front of the flight operations building, laid new carpeting, completely rebuilt the aviation support facility, renovated the motor pool and left their mark of espirit de corps on the hangar floor in the form of a Green Bay Packers emblem.

When they weren't working to improve the 498th's home, according to Rollston, they were found barbecuing near their barracks, watching the Packer's games at Coaches Corner or playing softball. They finished second in the post softball tournament.

Representing the forward deployed 498th, Rollston said he'd like to thank Maj. Greg Frings and every Soldier of the 832nd Medical Company (AA) for their professionalism, focus, commitment and sacrifice.

"You have held high the standards of aeromedical evacuation supporting Fort Stewart, Fort Benning and the surrounding communities," Rollston said.

"You are the best. Thank you!"

IOBC Soldiers spend week training for, conduct live fire

By 2nd Lt. Zac Vann
Infantry Officer Basic Course

The first week of real training for the new lieutenants of Company B, 2nd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment, IOBC, culminated with a buddy team live-fire exercise at Pierce Range. The live-fire exercise required the lieutenants to use skills learned earlier in the week and provided the students with the basic fundamentals for future and more complex exercises.

After a week of inprocessing, the lieutenants welcomed the transition to what they regarded as the beginning of "real training."

The first part of the week was spent working on the basic fundamentals of rifle marksmanship. Then each lieutenant zeroed his weapon and went to the M-16A2 qualification range.

The qualification range proved to be deceptively hard for many of the lieutenants who hadn't had the opportunity to shoot on qualification range in quite some time.

The day of the live-fire exercise turned out to be more physically exhausting than most of the lieutenants originally anticipated.

The day started early with a pre-dawn road march to Pierce Range. Upon reaching the range, the students ate a hot breakfast and got prepared for training. The skills being taught were important for the students because they are the same skills they will use on future battlefields.

Students practiced the movement techniques that buddy teams would use in an assault. Students were taught how to use individual movement techniques such as the high crawl, the low crawl, the rush, negotiating wire obstacles and how to engage enemy targets.

At first glance, the range did not look particularly hard to most of the lieutenants, but by the end of the day, they changed their tune.

The range showed how difficult movement can be when loaded down with a flak jacket and other equipment. Afterwards everyone looked at each other, covered head to foot with dirt and sweat, and laughed about how "little Pierce Range," turned out to be harder than it first looked.

MP companies undergo ordnance training

By Sgt. 1st Class Larry Lane
Public Affairs Office NCOIC

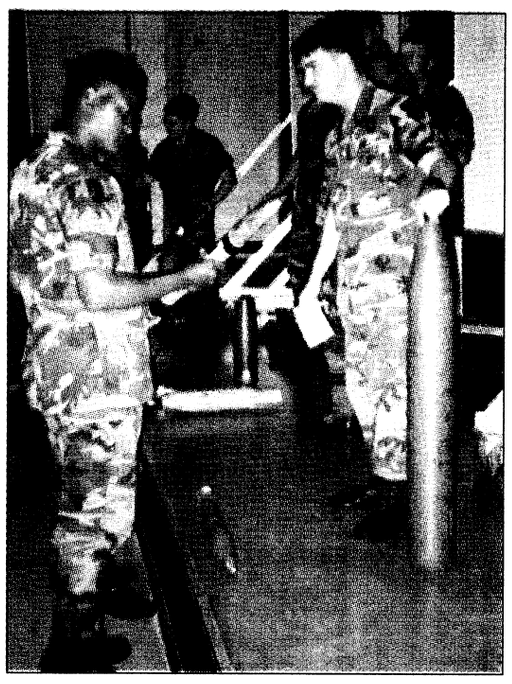
There may come a day when all of the landmines implanted throughout Bosnia and all of the unexploded ordnance (UXO) is accounted for or rendered safe.

The former Yugoslavia region was known to be one of the largest producers of landmines during its peaceful days.

The factions are cooperating with the Stabilization Force (SFOR) by identifying and removing some of the known threats.

But with between three and six million mines to account for, it may be years before Bosnia is "rendered safe."

Leaders from four Reserve companies of military police, who will be deploying to Bosnia, recently received training in UXO identification at Fort Benning. The training was conducted by Soldiers from the post's 789th Ordnance Company and Soldiers from the 203rd Military Intelligence Battalion, Aberdeen Proving Ground, Md.



The course was designed to teach explosive ordnance reconnaissance skills, said 1st Sgt. Robert Trueman of the 789th.

"These are common tasks skills that all Soldiers are supposed to know," Trueman said about the training.

"It's also designed to keep Soldiers from touching something they shouldn't and to teach them to report a UXO properly so we can have an idea of what we're responding to. This should be part of any Soldier's task."

The MPs may be traveling through the Bosnian countryside in the mission of vehicle escort, patrolling and checkpoint guards.

Soldiers in Bosnia come into contact with UXOs, whether when traveling or when clearing an area where Soldiers live or work.

Sgt. 1st Class Larry Lane

Sgt. Willie Snell of the 789th Ordnance Company explains some of the ordnance hazards Soldiers may experience in Bosnia.

"It's the learning experiences over there that teaches us that Soldiers need to have this kind of training," Trueman said.

"If Soldiers come across a piece of ordnance and they don't know exactly what it is and what they're dealing with, they should just leave it alone and back away from it," said Staff Sgt. Richard Methena, 203rd MI Bn.

The one thing Soldiers should remember from the training, Methena said, is to not handle a UXO problem themselves.

"Report it, mark it and go on with your mission," Methena added. "We already had one Soldier over there who decided he was going to go ahead and disobey orders and try and disarm an antipersonnel mine." This Soldier was killed during his effort.

"That's not something we need. That's a needless casualty and that's what we're trying to prevent."

Soldiers of the 203rd MI Bn. gave the MPs an unclassified briefing on their support in the military intelligence mission within Bosnia.

One of the missions for the MPs will be to inspect cantonment areas of weapons and ammunition, said Chief Warrant Officer 2 Herman Hoffman, the battalion's ammunition technician.

"These are established sites with equipment that has been gathered. We inventory it to make sure the quantities stay the same," Hoffman explained.

"The 203rd is the only unit in the Army of its kind," Hoffman said about his unit. "This is the only technical intelligence (TECHINT) battalion that does our mission. We collect and analyze data and equipment, sometimes first-seen (never seen before) equipment. We analyze it in-depth."

The TECHINT unit is made up of specialists in military intelligence, ammunition, armor personnel, combat engineers and other fields.

In Bosnia, initial inspections and re-inspections are compared to determine usage of monitored items. With the wide-spread interaction the MPs have in Bosnia, they will be able to help stay on top of the MI task.

Expert Infantryman Badge Testing

The 11th Infantry Regiment in conjunction with 3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division (Mechanized), the Infantry Training Brigade, the Ranger Training Brigade and the 29th Infantry Regiment will conduct testing for the Expert Infantryman Badge Oct. 6 through 30 at Burroughs Range. For more information, contact your unit's first sergeant.

Officers spend down time learning squad tactics during school

By 2nd Lt. Matt Handley
Infantry Officer Basic Course

During the land navigation training there was considerable "down time" between practice runs on the course.

This time was used to begin introducing new second lieutenants to platoon and squad tactics known as the battle drill. The battle drill is the key to squad tactics, according to Field Manual 7-8. The battle drill is defined as "a collective action rapidly executed without applying a deliberate decision process."

Each platoon trainer worked with his platoon to begin teaching these essential Infantry skills.

Using the crawl, walk, run technique of training, the cadre walked through the exercise, then squads practiced on their own and finally executed drills against opposition forces with an actual blank fire exercise.

Platoon trainers conducted an After Action Review following each iteration. It's all part of managing training time to get the best training possible during IOBC.

Korean officer heads home after tour in states

By Susie H. Kim
Editorial assistant

Have you ever thought of living in another country and working with another country's military? That is what Lt. Col. Sung Ho Na of the Republic of Korea (ROK) Army had to do everyday for the past two and a half years.

Sung is a Liaison Officer working on Fort Benning to improve interaction with South Korean and U.S. Army.

Sung began his military career by attending Korean Military Academy.

The Korean Military Academy has a reputation equal to United States Military Academy according to Sung.

As an Infantry officer, Sung served as platoon leader, company commander, and a Training and Education Officer in the 15th Infantry Division.

He then served as a Domestic Education Officer in Army Headquarters, a battalion commander in the 53rd Infantry Division and his last assignment in Korea was to serve as a division level administrative officer, and administrative officer.

His next assignment took him and his wife, Kyoung Sook, and two children, Hyeun Min and Hyeun Jeung, across the Pacific to the United States.

It was a drastic change and a culture shock according to Sung.

The children had a difficult time adjusting to school because of the language barrier and they had to adapt to a different culture Sung said, but after two years, the children have almost become Americanized, he said with a smile.

Sung was also very surprised and pleased with how friendly people were. He felt very welcomed and appreciative of the help people offered.

Aside from personal life, Sung found that a few things the U.S. Army had to offer were quite impressive.

The concept Sung now strongly supports that the U.S. Army uses is the small group instruction (SGI), which means instructions are provided for approximately 15 students per instructor.

He believes that this provides a better training and interaction among the soldiers.

Sung hopes that the ROK Army will soon resort to the same concept. Now the Soldiers are taught in mass numbers rather than in small groups.

He was also very impressed with the drill instructors at the Infantry Training Brigade.

"I admire the instructors for their dedication in teaching these Soldiers and spending many hours to actually conduct activities with these Soldiers," Sung said.

There are only five Korean Liaison officers stationed here in the United States.

The five Korean Liaison officers are the link to the ROK and the U.S. Army, Sung said.

Their function is not only to provide a military link, but also to promote a cultural awareness.

ACAP consolidates to be more efficient

By Chick Eagle
Army Career and Alumni Program

The Fort Benning Army Career and Alumni Program (ACAP) and Job assistance services will be consolidated under one roof starting Sept. 29.

"This streamlined operation will allow separating Soldiers and spouses a single location for all ACAP transition assistance program information and Services," said Harold Ericksen, ACAP center manager.

"The ACAP program continues and is basically unchanged as it will support the needs of Soldiers with preseparation and job assistance counseling and workshops, service provider briefings and referrals," Ericksen, said.

Dwayne Wright is the Fort Benning Transition Services manager. He coordinates the installation's policies for transition and ACAP services that are executed by Ericksen's team in the ACAP center.

Soldiers, Unit PACs and S-1's and service providers are advised to contact the ACAP office located in Building 2634, which is the old Job Assistance Center location. Just call or visit the Fort Benning ACAP center in Soldiers' Plaza, Building 2634, 55-2308 or 545-2309 for information and appointments.

Education 2000 Team to visit post

By Staff Sgt. Lori Egan
Bayonet editor

Fort Benning is the first installation to receive a visit from the Education 2000 Team. The visit is Oct. 7-8.

The Education 2000 Team's purpose is to examine the issues that military children deal with in the school year.

According to a memorandum Gen. Dennis J. Reimer, Army chief of staff, is concerned with the educational challenges military children must deal with during their school-age years.

Because of this concern, he formed a team to visit selected installations to meet with students, parents, teachers and other professionals in the educational field to discuss ways to help resolve transition issues for military students.

Six work groups will meet for one and a half days to discuss general topics including school curriculum, transfer issues and social and emotional adjustment.

The work groups will decide their biggest concerns under each topic and what they would like to see done to help transitioning students, said Rebecca L. Carroll, chief, Family Support Division, Directorate of Community Activities.

The work groups will then present their results with the Education 2000 Team and the community.

The Education 2000 Team includes Mary Jo Reimer; David White, Family Liaison Office; P.K. Tomlinson, a representative from Community and Family Support Center; and Capt. Brenda Hickey, special assistant, Office of the Chief of Staff of the Army.

After the Education 2000 Team visits eight to 10 installations, the results of their visits will be analyzed at Headquarters, Department of the Army.

The objective of the visits is to identify core factors that predict overall wellness and promote academic success for Army children. Suggestions made during the workshops will be submitted to the next Army Family Action Plan for possible implementation.

Fort Benning Schools present Parent Academy Oct 17-18

Fort Benning Schools

The Parent Academy, a weekend seminar for Fort Benning parents, will take place at Faith Middle School Oct. 17-18.

This event promises to be a fun-filled learning experience designed around a variety of parenting topics, said Gail Wilson, director of Staff Development.

The two speakers will talk about societal pressures, solutions to problems, and parenting skills, Wilson said.

Lt. Cmdr. Drew Brown III, U.S. Navy Reserves, a former U.S. Navy jet attack pilot, best-selling author and nationally known motivational speaker, will bring his hard-hitting message — education plus hard work minus drugs equals success and the American dream to Faith 7 p.m. Oct. 17.

Another speaker is Norm Bossio. He is a former classroom teacher, principal and school superintendent whose message to parents focuses on a variety of parenting skills to include: communications, the importance of listening, being heard without raising your voice, discipline and sibling rivalry. He will present these topics at 8:30 p.m. Oct. 18.

Over the past five years, Bossio averaged more than 270 speaking engagements annually. His audiences include clients ranging from President Bill Clinton to Stephen King.

The Parent Academy is free and is open to all Fort Benning parents and personnel. Free child care will also be provided for children aged six weeks to 11 years of age. Space in the Parent Academy will be limited. Reservations will be required. These reservations will be taken on a first-come, first served basis.

Registration forms and information will be sent home with all Fort Benning Schools' students Monday. Parents interested in attending the Parent Academy can either return the registration form with their child or come to any registration site to register. Registration will also take place at all Fort Benning Schools and at the Fort Benning Schools Administrative Office, 201 Custer Road.

Those wishing to register who do not have a child in the Fort Benning Schools can pick up registration forms and materials at any registration site beginning Monday. Registration will continue through Oct. 10.

For additional information, call Wilson at 545-8245.

Fourth-graders focus on Constitution Week at Loyd Elementary

By Jennifer Harriman
Special to the Bayonet©

Last week students and teachers at Loyd Elementary School celebrated Constitution Week.

This yearly event, since 1986, lasted all week with activities and lessons focused on learning more about the Constitution of the United States and what it means.

Shelly Moore's fourth-graders had a busy week in her social studies class. They studied what it means to be a good citizen and why it is important.

They learned about the history and the making of the Constitution. Students learned about American symbols, such as the bald eagle, the Liberty Bell, the flag and others.

Students made and then displayed booklets "A Salute to America's Symbols," that dealt with the symbols and what those symbols represent.

"They loved making the booklets," Moore said.

Using wall maps and computers, they were able to travel to historic landmarks, such as Ellis Island and the Statue of Liberty. Students pretended to be the signers of the Constitution.

"They really love technology. It is very exciting for them to be able to use the computers." she said. "This multisensory approach keeps their attention focused. All of the different activities absorbs their concentration."

"You have to try to make social studies interesting," Moore said. "If they learn these lessons now and value them, they are prepared to become the responsible citizens and leaders of the future."

FAITH MIDDLE SCHOOL

Students practice kindness

By Jennifer Harriman
Special to the Bayonet©

What is the first thing you think of when your child is called to the principal's office? If you are like most parents, trouble is the first thing to pop in your head. However, if your child attends Faith Middle School, getting called to the principal's office can mean good news.

The Kindness Club is a new program that rewards students for acts of kindness and consideration. It is designed to encourage students to be kind to one another and at the same time teach them the importance of kindness and good behavior. It is also a way to give positive, individualized attention to those students who might not otherwise see the inside of a principal's office.

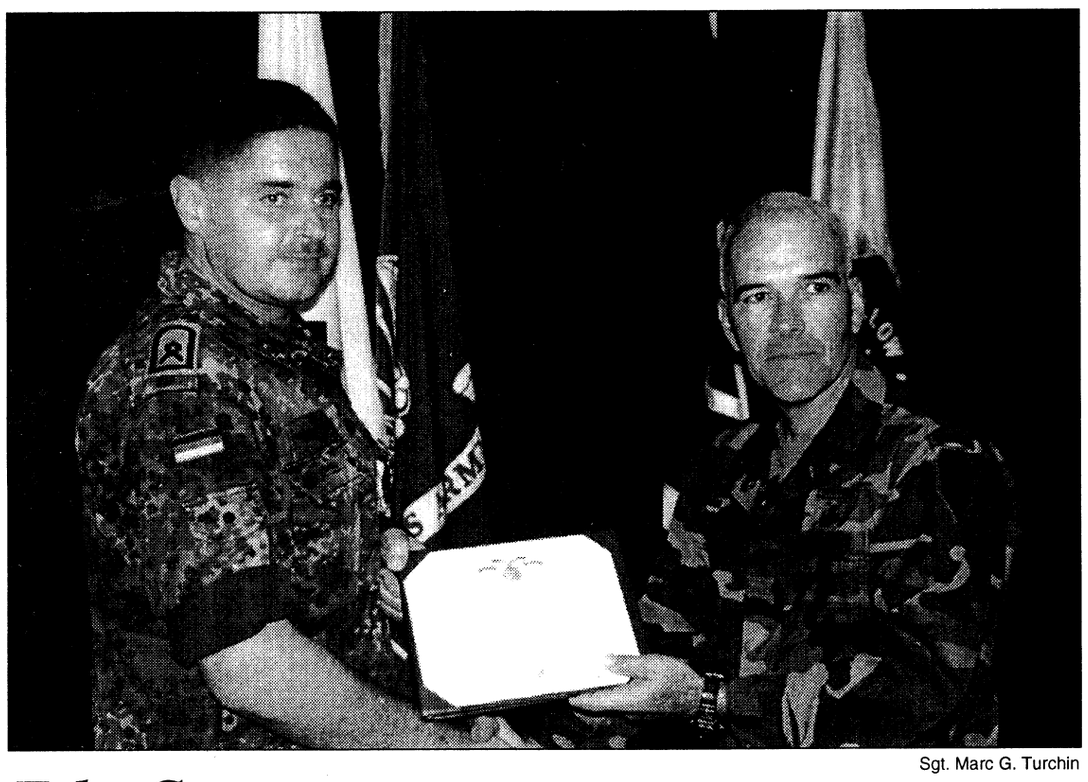
"It seems like we are always rewarding the students who misbehave with all the attention," said John Ulferts, assistant principal. "This is a way to compensate and reward kids for their good behavior. This is to teach the students that one person really can make a difference in making their school and their community a better place."

This program begins with a voluntary act of kindness, which is noted by a teacher. The teacher then writes a referral slip that is sent to the office of the assistant principal.

Next, the student is called to the office. Here they register in the Random Acts of Kindness book and receive a Certificate of Appreciation to take home and a letter to post on a Kindness Board in the cafeteria.

Phone calls to parents follow exceptional kindness acts. After the Kindness Board is full of letters, a reception with the principals is held in honor of these students. Parents are invited to attend.

"We are just thrilled with the program," said Dr. Elizabeth Middlemiss, Faith Middle School principal. "We have always had rewards for students who achieve academic excellence. It is nice to have special recognition for anyone who goes out of their way to be kind to someone else."

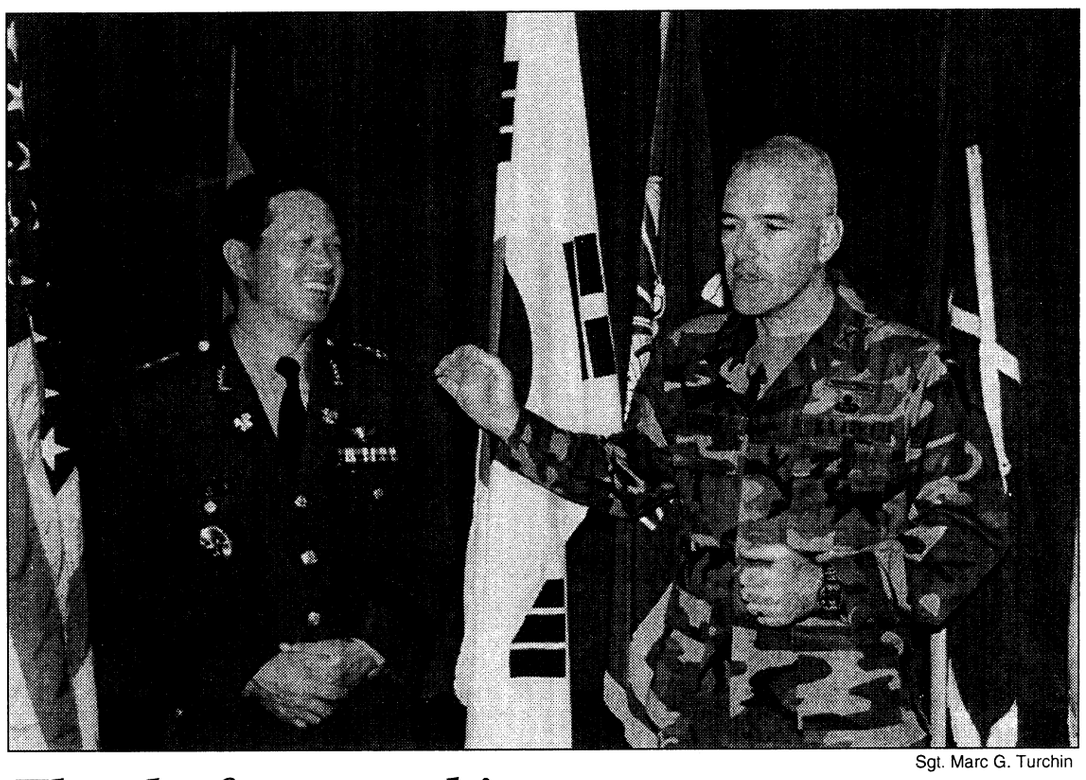


Some kind acts recorded on the Kindness Board include returning money, cleaning up classrooms, translating a test from Spanish to English and helping a student who is on crutches.

To date, there are 40 to 45 names on the Kindness Board, with more being turned in every day. Responses have been fairly evenly distributed among the three grades.

"With a student body of 675 and only two weeks into the school year, this is a great response," Middlemiss said. "We are very excited about this program. Mr. Ulferts is doing a wonderful job with it."

"We have averaged about five names being turned in a day, which is pretty impressive," Ulferts said. "I really enjoy this because it gives me a chance to get acquainted with kids who are not getting into trouble. It is important to give them this kind of praise and attention."



The first reception for the Kindness Club is at 2:25 p.m. today in the cafeteria. Cookies and punch will be served. Parents are encouraged to attend.

This week's article provides information on a construction notice for McGraw Manor residents and environmental planning.

McGraw Manor residents

DPW awarded a contract to Step Inc., of Oak Ridge, Tenn., to replace or slip line main sewers and laterals in the McGraw Manor housing area.

This contract is scheduled to begin in late October. Current plans are for the contractor to begin on Brostrom, Magrath and McGraw streets but residents will be notified by Step Inc., when their laterals will be replaced.

Representatives of Step Inc., will have identification authorizing them to be in the areas. This identification will be available for your review upon request. If you have questions, call the Construction Inspection Branch at 545-4749.

Environmental planning

Fort Benning is noted for its clean air and water, abundant wildlife and unique archeological sites. It is also noted for its excellent training, quick readiness capability, above-average family housing and abundant recreational opportunities.

Balancing the need to protect our natural resources with mission requirements, while complying with all laws, can be difficult. Nonetheless, Fort Benning's environmental staff meet the challenge through careful environmental planning. There are hundreds of federal and state environmental laws on the books today. They range from require-ments to monitor drinking water to the protection of endangered species to the control of lead-based paint. Trying to apply each of these laws to the hundreds of units and activities on Fort Benning may seem impossible. However, the environmental staff developed procedures to help everyone on post obey environ-mental laws.

A basic tool the office uses for environmental analysis is the Record of Environmental Con-sideration, documented on Fort Benning Form 144. Everyone on Fort Benning must complete a Form 144 in order to begin any project, training exercise or other significant activity on the installation.

A description of the proposed action, where it will occur, points of contact and other important information is required on this form. The environmental staff reviews the Form 144 to see if the proposed action will break any environmental laws, harm the environment or threaten human health. Hazardous waste specialists ensure that Upatoi Creek, and other bodies of water remain clean. The historic architect comments on methods to preserve the architecture and historic landmarks.

Should the proposed action harm any of these resources, the environ-mental office instructs the unit on the steps they must take to obey the law and minimize impacts to the environment.

Completion of the 144 process usually takes one to three weeks. Under special circumstances, large projects may require environmental impact statements that can take much longer to complete. The completion of the record of environmental consideration is required by law. Federal facilities must consider the environment in every action taken.

If you have a project that you will be initiating in the near future, stop by the environmental office and complete a 144 for the action.

The environmental staff will review the document and provide you with valuable information on how to operate within the confines of the law and how to protect our environment. For more infor-mation, call Patrick Chauvey or Felix Seda at 545-4211.

Comments and Questions

If you have questions or topics that you would like to be addressed in the DPW "Information Corner," call Glenn Todd, DPW Customer Relations Specialist, at 545-2117.

ask the judge

By Capt. Lucile B. Hester
Office of the Staff Judge Advocate

Q. I was recently the victim of a house fire at my government quarters and many of my personal belongings were destroyed. I was not at fault in starting the fire, and it appears the fire will be labeled accidental.

Will the Army pay me to replace my property since the fire was located on Fort Benning? Would the answer be different if I was living off post?

A. The Personnel Claims Act authorizes payment for claims from military personnel (and civilian employees in certain instances) for loss, damage or destruction of personal property incident to their service.

Under the Personnel Claims Act, some coverage is provided for losses occurring in assigned government quarters as a result of fire, flood, hurricanes or other unusual occurrences, or for theft or vandalism because this loss is considered incident to service.

There is no coverage under the Personal Claims Act for damages occurring in quarters other than assigned quarters. This includes the apartments at Battle Park, which are not assigned quarters even though they are located on Fort Benning. It is important for Soldiers to know that the Personnel Claims Act is a gratuitous statute, not an entitlement and it is not intended to be a substitute for private insurance.

The coverage provided by the Personnel Claims Act is often insufficient to fully reimburse Soldiers for their losses. For example, lost or destroyed property is subject to annual depreciation rates, which can run as high as 30 percent the first year for clothing, 20 percent per year for household linens and 10 percent per year for electronic equipment. The maximum depreciation rate is 75 percent for many items.

This means the government may pay as little as 25 percent of the cost to replace an item. In addition, Soldiers are often asked to sub-stantiate the existence or the quality of an item, especially if the item is substantially more expensive than the average cost for similar items. For this reason, it's a good idea to keep all of your receipts. While the tragedy of a substantial loss due to fire, flood, burglary or other unusual occurrence is impossible to predict, Soldiers can plan ahead and protect themselves against such losses for a nominal amount by purchasing a renters insurance policy.

Claims examiners with the Staff Judge Advocate Claims Division have routinely found individuals with this added protection receive greater compensation for their loss. Consequently, the Claims Office recommends that Soldiers consider purchasing this insurance from a private insurance company, especially if the Soldier owns high-dollar or hard-to-replace items like expensive electronics or expensive antiques.

For more information, call the Claims Office, Office of the Staff Judge Advocate at 545-2285.

Jewish Days of Awe bring repentance, atonement

By Chaplain (Capt.) Chana Timoner
The Infantry Center Chapel

The High Holy days, properly called the "Days of Awe" in Hebrew, are fast approaching. They consist of two days of the Rosh Hashanah (Head of the Year), an 11-day period of sincere introspection and culminate in Yom Kippur, the Day of Atonement.

This year the first evening service for Rosh Hashanah is Wednesday. The themes for the Jewish High Holy days are of repentance, judgment and atonement.

This period is a time for each Jew to look seriously into his or her own heart to see what he or she might have done better in the past year, and what could be done better in the coming year.

reflections

It is always a very difficult task to try to look into one's own forest to discern the diseased trees.

We need to become cognizant of the ways that we have failed — failed others, failed God and failed ourselves.

This introspection is meant to lead to remorse for the harm we have done, to attempts at restitution when possible and to turning away from our past selves to better selves who will act differently in the coming year.

We are meant to renew ourselves, not just to make empty resolutions that we will never keep. We are not to be the same old self one year older and less wise.

This process of change is a difficult one; therefore, the rabbis begin it well in advance of Yom Kippur, so as to leave plenty of time to accomplish it.

During the month of Elul, which began Sept. 2, we examine our lives and our relationships. Rosh Hashanah comes with its blast of the shofar (Ram's horn) meant to awaken our slumbering soul to the passage of time, not only to what we have done, but more importantly, to what we could do with our lives.

The new year gives us a chance to renew our individual covenants with God, with the Jewish people and with our dear ones.

All this preparation is aimed toward the nadir of this time period, Yom Kippur.

That is the day on which we almost ceaselessly pray for forgiveness of our transgression, for renewal of our souls and for the bond with the Holy One.

The tradition uses the image of a contest — one of life and death for the Yom Kippur liturgy.

That is, all human beings will be judged as to "who shall live and who shall die" in the coming year.

Schedule of Jewish Services During the High Holy Days

Wednesday	(Rosh Hashanah eve)	Oct. 1 7:30 p.m.
Thursday	(Rosh Hashanah)	Oct. 2 10 a.m.
Friday	(Yom Kippur eve)	Oct. 10 7:30 p.m.
Saturday	(Yom Kippur)	Oct. 11 10 a.m.
Saturday	(Memorial Service)	Oct. 11 noon
Saturday	(Mernoon service)	Oct. 11 5:30 p.m.
Saturday	(Break the Fast)	Oct. 11 7:30 p.m.

Some see this imagery as symbolic, the more traditional see it as literal.

In any case, these images confront us with our mortality and warn us that the time for (teshuvah) repentance is now.

This process of repentance hopefully will culminate in forgiveness — our forgiving those who have hurt us, others forgiving us; and finally, God forgiving us.

It is literally the process of atoning for our sins that allows us to become at-one with God and the rest of humanity.

chapel notes

Sunday school classes to move — The Protestant Sunday school meets from 9:30 to 10:30 a.m. in Edward A. White School on First Division Road.

All students should enter the school through the front entrance.

There are classes for all ages from two-year olds through adults.

Child-care for children younger than two years whose parents are either teaching or attending Sunday School is at The Infantry Center Chapel Annex.

Buses will maintain the same routes as now, but will bring riders to White School, and will pick them up there for the return trip home.

Individuals needing transportation to Sunday School should call the Religious Education Center at 545-4715.

REC begins Sunday school year — Sunday school meets from 9:30 until 10:30 a.m. every Sunday morning at the Religious Education Center, Building 2517.

There are classes for all ages from two year olds through adults.

For more information, call 545-4715.

PARTY resumes meetings — The children's group called "Personal Attitudes Related To You " will resume its meetings from 10 a.m. until noon Oct. 4 in the Religious Education Center, Building. 2522. Activities for this group include Bible study, music, recreation and refreshments. All students ages five years through 14 are eligible and invited to attend.

English language classes set

There are free English language classes for those for whom English is a second language at the Religious Education Center, Building 2522. These classes are from 9:30 to 11:30 a.m. each Thursday during the school year. Students are requested to buy their books, which are available at the classes. Child-care is provided at the Religious Education Center.

For additional information, call 545-4715.

Protestant Women of the Chapel

Protestant Women of the Chapel will hold a special "First Thursday" program Oct. 2. Guest speakers will be Eric and Robin Kennedy, Fort Benning representatives of The Navigators. They will speak on "Hear the Father's Heart through his Word." This topic will include the importance of hiding God's word in your heart, and scripture memorization techniques for you and your children.

We invite all military and civilian ladies to join us as we laugh, talk, listen, pray, and study the Bible together. Child-care is provided in the same area during meetings at no charge to the parents. There is a special program on first Thursdays of each month, and meetings begin at 9:30 a.m. every Thursday. Other Thursdays there are Bible studies in addition to prayer and praise.

Pre-marriage seminar

There will be a pre-marriage seminar for those planning to be married in the Catholic Church. The seminar will take place at 1p.m., Oct. 5 at the Religious Education Center, Building. 2522. To register, call 545-5508.

Group offers students chance for European tour

By Brian Dill
EF Educational Tours

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. — Students who wish to see the world — and who have a plan to improve it — are invited to apply for the fifth annual EF Ambassador Scholarship.

Sixty-two students will be selected to receive the award, an 11-day expenses-paid tour of Europe set to depart in July 1998.

Sponsored by EF Educational Tours of Cambridge, Mass., the scholarship was established to encourage students to think about changes they would like to make to their world.

Based on their proposals for change, one qualified student from each U.S. state and each Canadian province and territory will be selected to participate in the 1998 EF Ambassador Tour.

Scholarship recipients will travel to New York, London, Canterbury, Paris, Geneva and Lucerne on a unique journey of discovery and learning.

Traveling together through Europe, students will have the opportunity to discuss their ideas for change with similarly motivated peers, further reinforcing their ambitions.

The itinerary will highlight sites of cultural, historical and political significance, serving to broaden each participant's world view.

The scholarship award includes round-trip airfare, accommodations, breakfast and dinner daily, transportation, professionally led sightseeing, visits to special attractions and the services of a full-time bilingual tour director. It is a once-in-a-lifetime opportunity for students to explore the world together.

The EF Ambassador Scholarship application deadline is Jan. 31, 1998. U.S. and Canadian students in grades nine through 12 are eligible to apply, and should request applications by mail to Ambassador Scholarship Program, EF Educational Tours, EF Center Boston, One Education Street, Cambridge, MA 02141-1883; by e-mail to scholarships@ef.com; or on the Internet at www.eftours .com.

BBB offers tips to avoid slamming

Better Business Bureau

Slamming is the illegal switching of long distance service without permission.

To avoid the consequences of being slammed, the Better Business Bureau offers the following tips:

•Read your monthly bill carefully to make sure that your long distance is your own long distance company. You can verify your long distance phone company by calling 1-700-555-4141 from your home or business phone.

•Notify the company that slammed you, within 90 days, to switch you back.

•Put a Primary Interexchange Carrier freeze on your phone with your original company, which allows only you to change your long distance service.

•Investigate the long distance carrier that solicits your business with the Public Utilities Commission.

•Make sure if you accept a gift, a check, a contest entry form or an opinion survey from a soliciting company, you are not obligating yourself to switch.

•Say "no" if you do not want to switch and say that you will report them to the Public Utilities Commission and the Federal Trade Commission.

•Do not give personal information, i.e., social security number, driver license number, to any telemarketer.

•Make sure the long distance company puts information in writing in the same language in which they speak to you.

If you are slammed, call your local phone company — ask to be returned to your original long distance company and not to be charged for this change.

Call your original long distance company and state that you were slammed by another company and want to be returned to their service.

Call the long distance company listed on the phone bill. Tell them you did not give them permission to switch and you want to be returned to your original company and you want your bill recalculated.

Youths compete in NFL punt, pass

By John W. Peeler
Special to the Bayonet©

With the heat index on the field topping more than 100 degrees, entrants in the National Football League's punt, pass and kick competition had more than just other competitors to battle in their quest to advance to the section finals in Moultrie, Ga.

For the second consecutive year, the Youth Services offered the opportunity for children to participate in the National Football League's punt, pass and kick Saturday at Blue Field and, along with it, a chance to compete in sectional, team and national finals.

John Elway, Jim Kelly, Drew Bledsoe and Cordell Stewart all started their quest for National Football League stardom in the NFL punt, pass and kick just as the more than 20 "stars to be" who gathered for this year's competition.

The competition, open to boys and girls ages 8-15, tested the competitors' ability in both accuracy and distance with points being deducted for lack of accuracy.

Scores were determined from the point where the participants' punt, pass or kick first makes contact with the ground, measured from the start point, for distance, and from the center line, for accuracy.

First, second and third place ribbons were awarded to the contestants in four separate age groups. The winners proceed to the section finals at Mack Tharpe Stadium in Moultrie, Ga., Oct.18 with the opportunity to go to the team championships and, ultimately, participate in the national championships set for one of the American Football Conference playoff games.

Winners of the local competition were:

8- to 9-year-old boy's division
Marcus Valentine, 235 feet, 1 inch
Dominique Love, 178 feet, 2 inches
Tyrone Valentine, 95 feet, 4 inches

10- to 11-year-old boy's division
Roosevelt Vickers, 253 feet, 3 inches
Ozzie Smith, 210 feet
Derrick Powell, 200 feet, 2 inches

12- to 13-year-old boy's division
David Douglas, 233 feet
Marcus Abner, 219 feet, 2 inches
Darnell Love, 201 feet, 3 inches

12- to 13-year-old girl's division
Heather Beard, 204 feet, 9 inches

14- to 15-year-old boy's division
Cedric Abner, 309 feet, 5 inches
Charles Douglas, 269 feet, 9 inches

Heather Beard gets her foot into the ball during the kicking competition at Blue Field Sept. 20 at Blue Field. Beard won the 12- to 13-year-old girl's division in the NFL punt, pass and kick competition with a combined total of 204 feet, 4 inches.

Officials offer free admission to Buick Challenge

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Callaway Gardens officials are expecting a sea of short haircuts Oct. 3 when soldiers take advantage of Military Appreciation Day at the Buick Challenge.

Soldiers, family members, retirees, reservists, guardsmen and Department of Defense civilians are all invited to a free day at the golf tournament and the gardens.

Units, such as the 11th Infantry Regiment, have declared Oct. 3 "organization day" and are planning picnics on the beach. Food and drinks are free to unit members.

In addition to fun and games, the Association of the U.S. Army is sponsoring a drawing for those who attend. Those wishing to enter the drawing need only fill out a form and drop it off in a box on one of the buses or at the Fort Benning command post at the gardens.

Past prizes included bicycles, stereo equipment, televisions and savings bonds.

Anyone wanting to get even more immersed in golf can volunteer to be a placard bearer on Thursday or Friday.

Placard bearers receive a free T-shirt and golf hat and will carry a pro's standard with his name and score. To volunteer, call 545-6017.

Shooters selected to compete in CAT games

USAMU Public Affairs Office

Members of the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit have been named to the U.S. Championships of the Americas Team, which will compete at the CAT Games in Buenos, Aires, Argentina, Nov. 16-28.

The CAT Games, Campeonato de Tiro de las Americas, is the shooting championships for the Western Hemisphere, which is conducted every four years. The CAT Games is one of four big international matches — along with the Olympics, World Championships and Pan American Games — where shooters can win medals and set world records.

Soldiers selected from the USAMU were:

• International rifle shooters are eight-time National Champion Stephen C. Goff, three-time Olympian Glenn A. Dubis, 1992 Olympian Thomas A. Tamas and two-time Junior Olympic Champion Jason A. Parker who just joined the USAMU this year.

•International pistol shooters include Interservice Champion Rhonda L. Bright, National Team member Eric G. Daniels, National Champion

CAT: Shooters make team

Daryl L. Szarenski and Terry S. Bradley who joined the unit in November and Travis A. Jorgenson who joined in February.

•Running target National Champion Lance D. Dement and Interservice Champion Armando R. Ayala.

•Shotgun shooters include two-time Olympians Bret E. Erickson and James T. Graves, Interservice Champion Shawn C. Dulohery, 1996 Olympian David R. Alcoriza, 1996 National Champions Joseph D. Buffa and Joetta R. Novinski and Junior Olympian Matthew T. DePuydt.

"The CAT is a UIT (International Shooting Union) sanctioned match and it's a pretty good size match," USAMU Shotgun Team Coach Burl Branham said.

"We hope to win some medals, which will bring good credit to the Army and America. The Games are important because we have a chance to set a world record and shooters can get internationally distinguished."

Running target National Champion Lance D. Dement was one of the many USAMU shooters to qualify for the Championships of the Americas Team, which will compete at the CAT Games in Buenos Aires, Argentina, Nov. 16-28.

"We'll do very well," USAMU International Rifle Team Coach William E. Krilling said. "If our guys shoot to their ability, we'll do well in the medal count."

World class boxers compete in police boxing championships

U.S. Military Academy Public Affairs Office

ALEXANDRIA, Va. — The Army's top boxers, many who are members of the Army World Class Athlete Program, will compete in the U.S. National Police Athletic League Boxing Championship, Oct. 6-11, in St. Louis, Mo.

More than 100 of the top Olympic-style boxers will converge for six days of competition.

Slated to compete are:
Bradley Martinez, 106 lbs.
John Medina, 112 lbs.
Hong Gu, 125 lbs.
James Webb, 139 lbs.
Steven Vandewalle,147 lbs.
Shaheed Shakir, 156 lbs.
Michael Coker, 156 lbs.
Julius Fogle, 165 lbs.
All are assigned to Fort Carson.
Team coaches are Byron Moore and Harry Washington.

A minimum of six boxers from the championship will be selected for the Copenhagen Cup in Denmark, in November.

For more information on the championships, call Lt. Col. Richard Machamer, director at DSN: 688-2006 or 688-4261 or commercial (914) 938-2006 or 938-4261.

Tennis great addresses players

Armed Forces Press Service

ALEXANDRIA, Va. — Former Army tennis great Stan Smith, a Soldier when he won the U.S. Open and Wimbledon, is expected to be a special guest at the 1997 Armed Forces Men's and Women's Tennis Championships, at Fort Eustis, Va.

Smith will be keynote speaker and present awards to the top male and female Armed Forces tennis players.

The tournament finishes play today. The competition consisted of four divisions; men's open, junior veteran (age 32-39), seniors (age 40 and up) and women. Each service could have a maximum of 10 players per team.

The winners, team and individual, will be crowned Armed Forces Champions. The top four male open players will also represent the Armed Forces at the World Military (CISM) Championship Monday Oct. 5, in Rome, Italy.

Smith served two years in the Army. While on active duty, he played some of his best tennis, winning the U.S. Open in 1971 and Wimbledon in 1972. During that time he was also the number-one-ranked player in the world.

This year marks Smith's second appearance at the Armed Forces Championships. In 1995 he also presented awards to the winners.

Registration underway for 10-Miler

The U.S. Army Military District of Washington Public Affairs Office

WASHINGTON, D.C. – Registration is underway for America's largest 10-mile road race, the Army 10-Miler. Attracting 381 teams and nearly 9,000 runners last year, organizers of the race are predicting another record setting event for this year's race Oct. 12.

Starting and ending at the Pentagon in Washington D.C., the scenic 10-mile course runs along the Potomac, through national park land, and past many of our nation's monuments. Sanctioned by the U.S.A. Track and Field Association, the race will be supported by first aid stations every half mile and water stations every two miles.

As in the past, runners may register as an individual or with a team. Teams can have four to eight runners. The top four times determine a team's score,

Race brochures and entry forms are available at most Army recreation centers, or by sending a stamped, self-addressed business-size envelope to U.S. Army MDW, Army 10-Miler 103 Third Ave., Building 48, Room 101, Fort McNair, D.C. 20319-5058.

There is a one kilometer Junior 10-Miler for children. The entry fee is only $5 and each participant will receive a T-shirt.

The Army 10-Miler entry fee is $20 per person if postmarked by September 26, 1997. Late registration at the Double Tree Hotel in Arlington, Va. is $25. The thirteenth annual Army Ten-Miler is co-hosted by the U.S. Army Military District of Washington and the Association of the United States Army.

Each installation must make an independent determination as to the availability and appropriateness of using Army appropriations for travel and per diem expenses incurred by participants in the Army 10-Miler.

Golf classic set — The National Multiple Sclerosis Society Georgia Chapter is proud to announce a partnership with Cap Gemini, an international consulting firm with its southeastern U.S. divisional offices in Atlanta.

The first annual Cap Gemini Classic Golf Classic is scheduled for Oct. 20 at Eagle's Landing Country Club in McDonough, Ga., Eagle's Landing is heralded as one of the best golf courses in Georgia. All tournament proceeds will benefit the research and programs of the National Multiple Sclerosis Society.

The tournament begins with a shotgun start at 12:30 p.m. and ends with a reception and awards ceremony at 7 p.m. Player slots begin at $250 per player, and corporate sponsorships are available. Hole sponsorships are also being solicited.

The National Multiple Sclerosis Society is dedicated to ending the devastating effects of multiple sclerosis. Multiple sclerosis is a chronic disease of the central nervous system. Over 30,000 Georgians are affected by multiple sclerosis. There is no known cause or cure, but there is hope through the MS Society's research.

For information about the Cap Gemini Golf Classic at Eagle's Landing, call Terri Pendergast at 770-984-9080 or 1-800-822-3379 toll free.

Course offers xpress cars — Georgia's state park golf courses have increased accessibility by purchasing "Golf Xpress" cars for physically challenged golfers. The Xpress cars are designed for a single golfer, providing club and accessory storage, direct access to the green and most sand traps, and independence for the user.

The six cars were purchased for $3,500 each — less than the cost of a traditional two passenger cart — from Electric Mobility Corporation in New Jersey and will be located at Victoria Bryant, Gordonia-Alatamaha, Hard Labor Creek, George T. Bagby, Georgia Veterans and Laura S. Walker state parks.

Charges for the Xpress cars are the same rental rate as the regular cars.

Cottonmouths open website — Columbus Cottonmouths Hockey fans on the web are invited to surf over to the Cottonmouths' web site at www.cottonmouths.com for the latest information on the Snakes. Fans are encouraged to send email to cottonmouths@mindspring.com

The web site, constructed by Edutrain — a Columbus based training and web design company — includes the 1997-98 schedule, press releases, ticket information and will include comprehensive player information once training camp gets underway. Once the l997-98 season begins, links will be established to websites of other teams around the Central Hockey League.

For more information call Dan Edutrain at 569-7287.

Cottonmouths report to camp — Cottonmouth players will report to Columbus for training camp Oct. 4.

The Cottonmouths will play an exhibition to benefit the United Way at the Snake Pit versus the Macon Whoopee Oct. 10.

Tickets are $8 for the game with one dollar from each ticket going to the United Way.

The regular season begins at 7:30 p.m. Oct. 17 inside the Snake Pit versus the defending Eastern Division Champion Memphis RiverKings. Season tickets are on sale now while individual game tickets go on sale Oct. 1. For ticket information, call the Cottonmouths office at 571-0086.

Army seeks Spirit videos — It's that time of year again — time for the annual Army and Navy football classic. This year the two teams will meet on Dec. 6, at Giants Stadium (Meadowlands, East Rutherford, New Jersey).

Once again, the Armed Forces Press Service is asking for support in providing "Go Army — Beat Navy" spirit videos.

The videos will be used for national broadcast and by the Corps of Cadets during the Army and Navy Spirit Week activities. Videos should be 10-20 seconds on 3/4 inch or Beta Cam tape. Be sure to identify your unit and location; the more action, the better. All videos must be received by Nov. 10.

If you have any further questions, call Mike D'Aquino, at DSN 688-2006 or commercial (914) 938-2006.

Dramatic lead changes, packed stands and split-second finishes are all a sure sign it's fall in Alabama. But this year, the track is going to be as hot as the gridiron as White Knuckle Weekend roars into October at Talladega Superspeedway.

It all kicks off Thursday, October 9 with ARCA practice and pole qualifying. Then, on Friday, October 10 it's LCI Qualifying Day featuring Winston Cup Busch Pole qualifying. On Saturday, October 11 ARCA's best drivers try to tackle the most unpredictable track on the ARCA Bondo/Mar-Hyde Series in the Winn Dixie 500k. And on Sunday, October 12 the blitz is on as the DieHard 500 celebrates its 29th birthday!

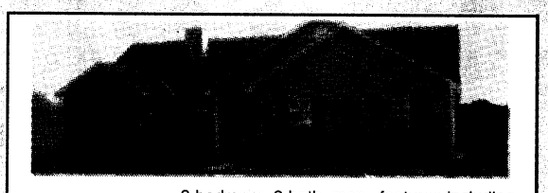
KNOW YOUR BUILDER

The Woodruff name has been associated with the home building industry in Columbus for the past 40 years. Our company represents the same high standard instilled by George's grandfather many years ago, in providing people from all walks of life the opportunity of owning a quality home.

It is not our company's goal to build the most homes in a year. It is, however, our goal to deal fairly with our customers and provide them with the best possible house for their money.



We believe one of the miracles of the construction industry is that workers, each skilled in different areas, can work together to create a dream born from a set of blueprints. Our job is to insure that this is done smoothly.

We provide a wide range of services such as mortgage assistance, custom designs and plans, selection of your homesite, decorating assistance and much more. We hope that you will allow us the opportunity of making your dream come true.

Sincerely,

George Woodruff, III

MISSION CRITICAL:
SOLVING THE YEAR 2000 CRISIS
It's the single largest technological dilemma facing American business today: the millenium problem. When the year 2000 rolls around, many legacy systems won't know it. Instead, they'll think it's 1900. The result: billions of dollars of vital information will suddenly be lost or misplaced.
At CHC, we're building elite teams who can help leading businesses avoid this impending catastrophe. With your military technical experience, you can play a key role in providing unique Signature 2000 solutions and moving legacy systems safely into the next millenium—all while offering clients opportunities to upgrade or enhance their technology. Right now, we're looking for highly skilled team members with a military background and fluency in the following:
• COBOL • PL/1 • ADABASE/NATURAL
• ASSEMBLER • IMS • SAS • FOCUS • IDMS
• AS400 COBOL • AS400 RPG • CICS • DB2
So use the skills you've gained in the military to help our prestigious clients smoothly and successfully enter the next century. We offer professional development potential and one of the best compensation packages in the business, including competitive salaries, company matched 401-K, comprehensive insurance, advanced training, and more.
Since the Year 2000 Crisis is at the mission critical phase, send your resume ASAP to: Mr. John Paul, Recruiting Manager, Department MP, COMPUTER HORIZONS CORP., 49 Old Bloomfield Avenue, Mountain Lakes, NJ 07046-1495. USED CARS AND USED TRUCKS TO BE SOLD AS LOW AS $88

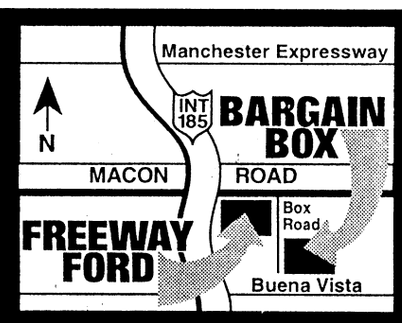
Saturday & Sunday — September 27th & 28th

Used cars to be sold for $88 dollars! One of the Southeast's largest Ford retailers has been ordered to conduct a Massive Used Car "Super Slasher Sale" Extravaganza featuring Used Cars as low as $88 Dollars!
Massive "Super Slasher" Sales Event this Saturday & Sunday, Sept. 27th and 28th-1997...

COLUMBUS, GEORGIA — The Corporate Office of Freeway Ford has ordered Mike Long, General Manager of Freeway Ford, to conduct an $88 Dollar Used Car "Super Slasher Sales Extravaganza" this Saturday and Sunday, September 27th and 28th, 1997.

Access to all $88 Dollar Used Cars and Super Slasher Prices will be made available to the public directly in front of the Used Car Lot at 2025 Box Road at 9:00AM on Saturday and 1:00PM on Sunday. The entire used car inventory will be open for immediate inspection for a one hour period. Each vehicle will display the normal retail selling price. Don't worry because when the sale begins you will be sitting behind the wheel of the vehicle of your choice. The normal retail selling price will be slashed and you will have the first right to buy the car.

Over 250 new and used cars, trucks, mini-vans, and sport utility vehicles will be on hand for this tremendous event. Mike Long states that due to the heavy increase in leasing over the past two years, Freeway Ford has experienced an abundance of lease returns. "Our lot is bursting at the seams with factory lease returns, demonstrators, and freshly traded automobiles that are waiting to be slashed," said Mike Long. "Customers can see for themselves, first hand, that Super Slasher prices are very close to–or in some cases below–wholesale auction pricing." The reason: Auction bidding will more than likely inflate the true value of a car which means you pay more. At a Super Slasher sales event, every car is on sale–first come, first served–and NO auction bidding.



In other words, "now's" the time to buy a quality used car as low as 60% off original M.S.R.P. including cars for only $88 dollars!

Mr. Long has requested representatives from a variety of lending institutions to be on hand with the lowest possible % rates. Even if you have experienced past credit problems, there will also be secondary lenders present that have the ability to lend due to your special situation.

Mike says "Please let everyone know that this is a Two-Day Sale, this Saturday and Sunday. Be sure to be there early because when our excess inventory is sold-off, we will remove every super slasher price and proceed with normal business operations."

Over the years, Freeway Ford has always taken pride in supporting the local community. Mike is a big advocate of conducting a sale like this in order to give back to the community. He further states that this is a prime opportunity for everyone seeking a quality pre-owned car, truck, mini-van or sport utility with the best deals in the state of Georgia. All in all, it's a win-win situation for the Customer, Community and Dealer. Instead of spending needless dollars on transportation costs and auction fees to dealer auctions, Freeway Ford can deliver those additional savings to the public. Any questions can be directed to (706) 563-3023.

McKinney case moves to new level

Army News Service

WASHINGTON — The appointing authority in the case involving Sgt. Maj. of the Army Gene C. McKinney completed its review of the Article 32 investigation Thursday and sent its recommendations to the general court-martial convening authority.

Col. Owen C. Powell forwarded his recommendations to Maj. Gen. Robert F. Foley, commanding general of the U.S. Army Military District of Washington, after reviewing the Article 32 investigation.

Powell is garrison commander of the Fort Myer, Va., military community, and appointing authority in the McKinney case.

McKinney faces 22 charges of misconduct stemming from allegations made by six present or former servicewomen. If he is court-martialed and convicted of all charges, he could be sentenced to 57.5 years in prison.

On Public Eye Thursday night, McKinney told interviewer Bryant Gumbel that "he was not pleading guilty to anything."

"I continue to tell you that I am innocent of all these allegations and charges, " McKinney said. "If the Army chooses to get rid of the charges in a different fashion (from a court-martial), then if that comes before me, then I will discuss those with my lawyers and make a decision from there."

Foley will review Powell's recommendations and the testimony and evidence developed

AUSA serves as host for annual Fish Fry

By Sgt. Marc G. Turchin
Bayonet assistant editor

Around these parts, people get accustomed to certain annual events — the Best Ranger Competition, Military Appreciation Week and the Association of the U.S. Army's (AUSA) annual Fish Fry, which was conducted Sept. 26 at Uchee Creek Camp Grounds.

What once started as a general meeting for the local chapter, has turned into an event that both active duty and retired military wait for each year. This year's feast included what some called the best gimmick to date — the giving away of a car or truck.

The fish fry was kicked-off with what most came for — the food. Columbus' Captain Toms catered the event, which included catfish, hushpuppies and breaded fish fillets along with french fries and all the toppings. Liquid refreshments ranged from iced tea to wine.

To start the nightly festivities, outgoing chapter president Wayne Andrews gave incoming president Jerry White the pin of service for the acting chapter president. White later gave Andrews a pin for his accomplishments during the past year as president.

Each year a Department of Defense civilian is awarded the George Heberling Award for his or her contributions to the Army and the local AUSA chapter.

This year's recipient was Ed Hilton of the Directorate of Logistics.

Along the same lines is the Cliff Livingston Award given to an organization that supports the AUSA and the functions it sponsors.

This year's recipient, given his award by last year's winner, Paul Voorhees, owner of Ranger Joe's, was Jim Irving of Geico Insurance.

Also given out that night was the AUSA-Troy State Scholarship. This year's winner was Pvt. Hadajar Zelena of the 24th Finance Detachment.

Fort Benning goes for another title

By Staff Sgt. Lori Egan
Bayonet editor

Fort Benning is once again recognized for excellence. The post is one of three finalists in the 1998 Army Communities of Excellence competition.

According to Sarah McLaney, Quality Management chief, Directorate of Resource Management, Commanding General Maj. Gen. Carl F. Ernst received a call from Maj. Gen. James J. Cravens, Training and Doctrine Command (TRADOC) chief of Staff Monday afternoon informing him of the status of Fort Benning's packet.

"We are once again a Headquarters, Department of the Army (DA) finalist in the 1998 ACOE competition," she said.

"Our packet is one of three that will represent TRADOC in the DA competition this year," McLaney said. "Our packet was submitted Aug. 30, scored and evaluated in September by TRADOC examiners, and is now at the DA level for the final thrust."

The other finalists representing TRADOC are Fort Knox, Ky., and Fort Bliss, Texas.

McLaney said the DA Evaluation Team will visit the installation sometime in December or January to clarify and verify the contents of the post's packet.

"The Directorate of Information Management will place our packet on the internal Fort Benning e-mail system, the Intranet, no later than Oct. 15," McLaney said.

"Remember, we are the champions — our goal is to win the chief of staff, Army, award again in 1998 for the sixth consecutive year," McLaney said in an e-mail message to Fort Benning personnel. "With your continued support, we will win. Thank you for your support, and hard work."

Fort Benning won the Best Large Installation in the Army award every year since 1993 and the Commander-in-Chief award in 1993, 1994, 1995 and 1997.

Because of a recent rule change, Fort Benning cannot compete for the CINC award this year.

The post also won the Presidential Award for Quality this year in its first submission.

CHAPLAIN FAMILY LIFE CENTER

Program offers Soldiers counseling

By Erin A. Nash
Bayonet staff writer©

For some couples, military life can be stressful. Sometimes stress can lead to problems in a marriage. What a lot of couples don't know is that there is help readily available, help that is free. This help is available through the Chaplains Family Life Center (CFLC).

Chaplain (Maj.) Frederick M. Rupel, director of the CFLC, said the center is for couples experiencing some difficulty in their marriage.

"I don't look at the CFLC as being the last step before they go into divorce," Rupel said. "I look at it as being the first step to saving a marriage.

"I believe couples have what it takes in themselves to solve any problems they may have."

Rupel said that most couples have a problem with communication. They tend to talk at each other, not to each other.

The CFLC teaches couples better communication skills and how to apply those skills to their marriage and their everyday life.

Couples can go directly to CFLC, or can be referred by unit chaplains, commanders, social work services, hospitals or word of mouth.

An average couple will attend approximately 10-15 sessions, spread out over a couple months, unless more or less counseling is needed. After that time, it is a mutual decision on behalf of the couple and the chaplain to end the counseling.

Rupel said the CFLC assists couples who have any type of problem, ranging from infidelity to couples with children from other marriages and the difficulties encountered with the blending of the family.

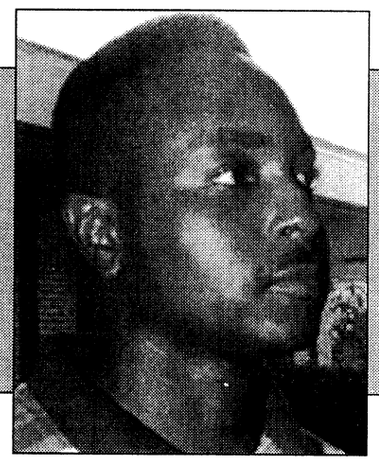
In addition to counseling, the CFLC is offering various programs during the fall.

Systematic Training for Effective Parenting will be from 11:30 a.m. to 1 p.m. every Tuesday starting Oct.14 to Dec. 9. This program is for parents who have children in any age range, who want to learn better parenting skills.

A Journey to Co-commitment (Recovering from Co-dependency) will be from 11:30 a.m. to 1 p.m. every Wednesday starting Oct. 15 to Dec. 10. This program is designed to help the co-dependent be more assertive, not aggressive.

Adult Survivors of Child Abuse will be from 11:30 a.m. to 1 p.m. every Thursday starting Oct. 16 to Dec. 11.

Also, for every couple planning to get married in a chapel on Fort Benning, the program "So You're Getting Married" is required, but any engaged couple may attend. The first program offered will be from 6:30 to 8:30 p.m. every Thursday Oct. 16 to Nov. 6. The second will be from 6:30 to 8:30 p.m. every Thursday Nov. 13 to Dec. 11.

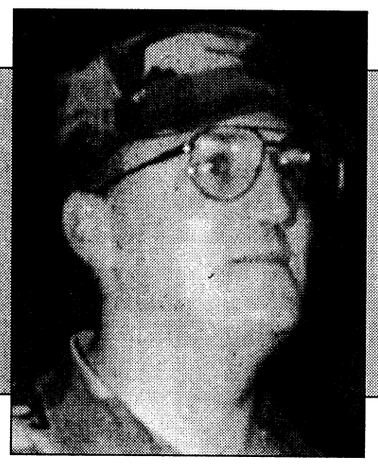


Active duty military, family members and retirees and their family members having an I.D. and all Department of Defense civilians may attend these programs.

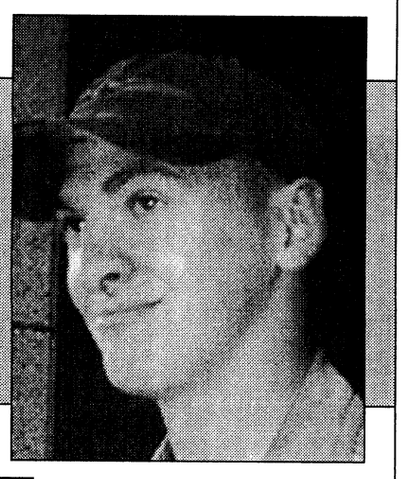
All programs will be in the CFLC, Building 2606 in Soldier's Plaza. Space is limited, so register early. ◆

For more information, call the Chaplains Family Life Center at 545-1760.

VARIOUS VOICES

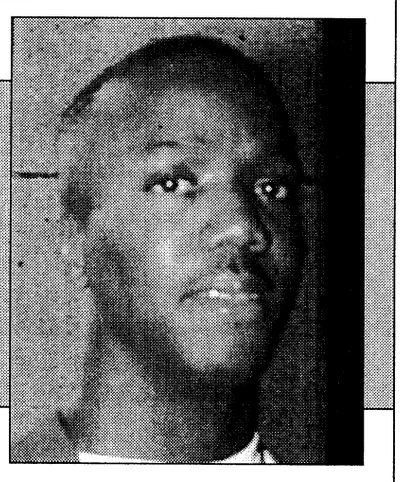


What do you think is effective discipline for children?



Staff Sgt. Shaun T. Allen, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 1st Battalion, 30th Infantry Regiment — "Talk to them and tell them what they did wrong."

Janetta Griffin, family member — "Talking to kids in a firm voice works. I believe in spanking, not beating."



Sgt. 1st Class Vernon F. Humphrey, U.S. Army Medical Department Activity — "Use a stern and fair approach and consistency."

Pvt. 2 Justin F. Keithan, Company D, 1st Battalion, 19th Infantry Regiment — "Grounding works well and tell them why they're grounded.

Linda W. Norris, medical maintenance, Martin Army Community Hospital — "Initially, taking things away from them that they value. If that's not effective, spanking, not beating. You do it with love, not with anger."

Spc. Kelvin O. Graves, Headquarters and Headquarters Battery, 1st Battalion, 10th Field Artillery — "Punishment works. Don't spare the rod."

Discipline: One parent looks at how adults treat their children

By Jennifer Harriman
Special to the Bayonet©

Picture this: A loud, crowded grocery store, a frazzled mom. A whiny preschooler is having a temper tantrum. Maybe it is a child who has reached her own age-appropriate limits and is fussy, tired, bored or thirsty. Mom yells at the child to sit down and be quiet, "stop this crying now" and slaps the child. We have all seen it or been a part of it at some time.

Obviously the child needs to be dealt with somehow. But is spanking or slapping good discipline? Does hitting a child or threatening a child with a spanking ever make the child calm down and stop crying?

If you were upset and at the end of your rope, would that help you to calm down? Of course not. What you want in a situation like this is results, and you want them fast. If there was a better way to get those results, wouldn't it be worth a try?

Hitting children is not about trying to enforce good behavior or applying discipline. It is really about parents' frustration and not knowing a better way to handle an unruly child. The added pressure of being embarrassed in public only makes the situation worse.

Unfortunately, spanking is the only discipline many of us were raised with and consequently the only method many of us know. It is a situation that calls for some creative thinking and the courage to ask around for help. After all, when a parent loses control, how can one expect a child to learn self-control?

Since I hold no early child development degrees, I cannot claim to be an expert in this field. However, I do have two children of my own, ages 4 and almost 2, and a wealth of life experience in caring for other people's children. Allow me, then, to offer you not theories and rules cooked up in a laboratory by a Ph.D. with no children, but some common sense, real-life, and field-tested suggestions that I have found to work for most kids, most of the time.

The most important thing to remember is — what is normal behavior for a child of any age. Reaching and exploring are normal actions for children younger than the age of one. It is how they learn. If you have something that is not safe for a child to handle, do yourself and the child a favor by putting it out of reach. Spanking hands and yelling just doesn't work. It teaches a child to be afraid and stunts their natural curiosity. Children need a safe environment for exploration and stimulation. Punishing a child for doing what comes naturally is not just useless as discipline, it is actually harmful to the child.

The next suggestion I would like every parent and care-giver to heed is — there is never any excuse to strike a child. It is the most damaging thing one can do as a parent. Spanking creates pain, fear and humiliation, none of which are good long-term teaching tools.

It teaches the child that the world is dangerous and who ever is the biggest gets to be right. It fills a child with rage and fright, two powerful emotions that must find some outlet for release. Many children who are spanked go on to consistently hit or fight with other children. Some just become too frightened and depressed to deal with any kind of new situation. Even if the damage is not immediately obvious, some children just learn to avoid misbehavior from fear, instead of developing a healthy level of self-control.

Of course no child is going to behave all the time, but simple preventative measures can go a long way in avoiding conflicts.

Make sure a child's needs are met — things like enough sleep, exercise and attention. Tell them what kind of behavior you expect and encourage them to show you what big girls and boys they are. Don't go shopping without taking something to keep your child occupied or distracted. I always take little board books, toys and sometimes crackers. My purse might be heavy, but at least my mind's at ease.

Remember that a child has a shorter attention span than you do and a lower threshold for stimulation. Be mindful of what your individual child can reasonably handle.

If you use these tips and your child still has a meltdown, and children do sometimes, try giving the child — time-out. One minute per year of age is adequate. Tell her exactly what she did wrong, and why, and the consequences of the action. Do this even if you think the child is too young to understand — it sinks in. Make the time-out place separate from where all the action is, but without putting the child in total isolation. If you are in a public place and this is not feasible, go outside. Go to the car. Tell the child that you can continue the activity when she is ready to follow the rules. If you haven't used this before, it may not work at first. But used consistently, with patience, it will work. I have had excellent results with some especially spoiled 2- and 3-year-old kids. They just need limits that make sense to them and consequences that fit the crime.

Another important suggestion — reward good behavior. Not as in, "If you behave, I'll buy you an ice cream." That is bribery and not the same thing. The best reward you can give your child is your genuine praise and undivided attention. Children love nothing more than knowing they are pleasing to you, and they will literally jump through hoops to earn your praise.

If these ideas sound like wishful thinking to you, that's OK. I encourage anyone to take a leap of faith and try them anyway. I also encourage everyone to be creative and think of different ways to handle a tense situation without lashing out at a defenseless and terrified child. There are certainly a multitude of ideas that I haven't mentioned and unique aspects to every child.

Parenting is a hard job. It can be frustrating, exhausting, time-consuming and thankless. We parents need all the tools available to us to help us do the best job possible in raising our kids. If you have a good idea, tell a friend. If you need advice, ask. Remember why you had kids in the first place — they are the greatest gift that life can offer.

545-boss

Dial 545-BOSS is the commanders' action line for soldiers, family members and civilians to call when they have problems or complaints that can't be resolved elsewhere.

While it is not a substitute for the chain of command or for agencies established to provide assistance, the line offers another means of communication between Fort Benning's community and commanders.

The Bayonet features some of the calls that may benefit other members of the Fort Benning community.

Call: Callers said that deplorable conditions exist in Battle Park Housing area – grass needs to be cut, trash and roaches are everywhere, and they are bothered by loud music. They said the residents would like to see it cleaned up.

Directorate of Public Works response: A representative from the Savannah District Corps of Engineers conducted an inspection of Battle Park Housing (which is required annually) with the Chief, Family Housing Branch.

The Battle Park mowing contractor was on-site mowing grass during the inspection. Their contract requires the grass be cut twice a month.

Units are scheduled to have pest control applied once a month unless residents specifically request this not to be done. Repeat calls are scheduled for the third and fourth Fridays of the month.

Battle Park officials have requested the support of Community Life NCOs in policing the area and monitoring such complaints as loud music.

The Housing Office is coordinating with Community Life to provide support, which will remedy trash problems and will require the area to be policed by the residents at all times.

The problem is not Battle Park's, but the residents are not policing their areas and are causing the conditions noted.

Call: A Soldier said he does not understand the housing policy for assigning quarters and their policy for turning down quarters.

DPW response: The chief, Family Housing, spoke with the Soldier concerning his wait for quarters. When the Soldier applied, his projected waiting time was 30 days, but rose to 45 days due to longer maintenance time because of the large number of quarters being painted.

The policy of removing names from the waiting list for turning down quarters was also explained.

Because funds are earned by means of the Business Occupancy Program, only one offer of quarters is made. If deficiencies are noted, an inspector then reinspects the quarters. If the quarters are found to be unacceptable, another set of quarters is offered.

Call: Two callers expressed concern about the Army Physical Fitness Test being given on Stewart-Watson Field based on track as a 1-mile track. They have been told the track is more than 1-mile from start to finish. They feel this is unfair to Soldiers trying to pass a PT test to go to Army schools.

U.S. Army Physical Fitness School response: The Chief of Doctrine, PFS, measured the track using a calibrated measurement wheel.

The measurement was taken from approximately three feet from the inside edge of the track walking the full circumference of the track.

The measurement was conducted two time to reduce error. The track was found to be one mile in length. The track was also measured on several other occasions, most recently in preparation to conduct the APFT Standards Update at Fort Benning.

Of the 12 installations that participated in the study, Fort Benning was the only installation whose running track was not short in distance.

Call: The caller said he thought 10th Mountain Road was off-limits to units to do physical training.

Directorate of Public Safety response: The caller was informed to call or stop by the military police station whenever he witnesses individuals doing physical training on 10th Mountain Road. An MP will be dispatched immediately to the location to take corrective action.

Call: The caller said she would like to know what the policy is for children left outside unsupervised.

DPS response: The caller was informed that U.S. Army Infantry Center Regulation 210-5 prohibits children under the age of 8 from being left unattended in parked cars, and prohibits children under the age of 12 from being left unattended in family quarters.

The regulation also makes parents and sponsors responsible for family members at all times when on the installation, but does not specify that children of a particular age must be under supervision.

There is also no provision in Georgia law that requires children of a particular age to be under constant supervision.

Cases of child neglect based on fact of supervision by parents are handled on post by Social Work Services based on individual circumstances.

In short, there is no hard and fast rule under State Law or Installation Regulation that requires direct (constant) supervision of children of a particular age.

Benning children learn fire safety

By Staff Sgt. Lori Egan
Bayonet editor

Every year 1,200 children age 14 and younger die because of home fires in the United States, according to Hollis Brown, fire prevention specialist, Fort Benning Fire Department, Directorate of Public Safety.

Monday through Oct. 11, Fort Benning children will learn about fires, how to prevent them and how to react when faced with a fire.

Fort Benning firefighters will show the school children their fire trucks and offer them fire safety advice.

During Fire Prevention Week firefighters teach children how to react in a fire, what to do if their clothes catch on fire and begin to burn.

"Getting children involved in fire prevention works because they remind their parents," Brown said. "Families need to practice fire safety because most home fires happen during the night when people are sleeping."

Brown offered the following advice for preventing home fires:

•Install smoke detectors. Place the detectors outside every sleeping area and on every level of the home, including the basement.

•Test the smoke detectors monthly and replace the batteries at least once a year and even better, twice. A good reminder for replacing the batteries is to do it when the time changes in the spring and fall. Replace the smoke detector if it is more than 10 years old.

Brown said most people will sleep through a fire. The poisonous gases and smoke produced by a fire can numb the senses and put you in a deeper sleep.

•Develop an escape plan. Practice EDITH — exit drill in the home. Plan your escape, draw a floor plan, indicate the primary and alternate escape routes from each room and have a fire drill every six months.

Families need useable exits from bedrooms — a window and the door. Upstairs bedrooms need to be equipped with a chain ladder. Store the ladders under the beds.

•Choose a safe meeting place outside. And once outside, stay outside. Never go back in the house for any reason.

Awareness of safety precautions prevent fires from becoming tragedies, Brown said.

Most fires occur between 11 p.m. and 6 a.m. A fire doubles in size every two minutes, Regis Beighley, Infantry Branch Safety Office safety manger, said.

Everyone needs to remember to stop, drop and roll to put the flames out, he said.

All residents should have a 2 1/2 pound ABC fire extinguisher, which is capable of putting out many types of home fires, Beighley said.

The one thing that can't be overemphasized is the need for working fire alarms, he said. Electric alarms should have a battery back up. Alarms should be placed on every floor of the house in strategic locations.

A good time to check fire alarms is when you reset clocks for daylight saving time in the fall and spring. Clean detectors at least once a month.

For more information, call the Fire Department Fire Prevention Office at 544-4613.

Medicare Subvention key factor in retirees obtaining health benefits

By Jennifer Harriman
Special to the Bayonet©

Medicare Subvention is a demonstration process, which is designed to give Medicare-eligible retirees and their family members expanded options for obtaining health care services at military treatment facilities.

It is a key factor in determining whether funding for Medicare-eligible retirees and spouses 65 years old and older will be made available to military health care facilities.

Under the current system, they can receive their health care at military treatment facilities or through Tricare until they reach age 65. At this point, Medicare takes over. Like Tricare, Medicare does not always cover 100 percent of the cost of services.

The Health Care Financing Administration (HCFA), who pays the bill for Medicare, does not reimburse the military for treating Medicare patients. Cost for Medicare eligible beneficiaries is covered by the hospital's base funding. Therefore, some military hospitals may be unable to provide care to these patients due to financial and space available limitations.

"In the past, there has been some confusion among consumers about where Civilian Health And Medical Program of the Uniformed Services (CHAMPUS), and now Tricare, benefits end and Medicare begin," said Dale Raines, Tricare Project Manager for MACH. "Many believed that they were entitled to life-long care at military treatment facilities. In fact, the system has always been set up for them to receive CHAMPUS until they reach the age of 65. Tricare is really just an expanded, updated version of CHAMPUS and it too is designed to handle beneficiaries until the reach age 65," she said.

Medicare Subvention seeks to provide a more streamlined and comprehensive health-care plan for this customer base. With Medicare Subvention, the HCFA reimburses the military facility for the services provided to the Medicare eligible patient. This funding will apply to civilian as well as military care provided. For patients who wish to receive care at a military hospital, Medicare Subvention means that they can obtain Tricare Prime privileges.

"Martin Army Community Hospital is committed to taking care of our Medicare-eligible retirees at the historical level we've always provided," Raines said. "We hope that with Medicare Subvention we will be able to continue to provide services at the current level for these patients."

"Medicare beneficiaries currently have the option of combining health care from the civilian sector with services provided by the military," said Susan Kent, Alternate Contracting Officer, Technical Representative. "For instance, our Medicare-eligible patients might be referred for a procedure not offered here. They could then come back to MACH to have prescriptions filled, X-rays, or laboratory work performed. This is a good way for a patient to get quality health care and save money,"

There are currently six locations where this project is proposed. Fort Benning is not one of the proposed sites. If it proves successful, Congress is expected to implement Medicare Subvention nationwide and to all military treatment facilities.

29th Inf Soldiers meet during reunion

By Erin A. Nash
Special to the Bayonet©

Current and former Soldiers from the 29th Infantry Regiment came together to view today's weapons when the 29th conducted a capabilities exercise at Red Cloud Range Sept. 26.

Soldiers showcased the weapons they use now, which includes the SAW (squad automatic weapon), and the machine guns M-60, M-2 and M-240B for the 29th Infantry Regimental Association Reunion.

Following the demonstration, former Soldiers were invited to view each weapon up close and ask questions of the current Soldiers.

Don Peffley of Groton, Conn., said the difference in weapons now and then was, "Ours were like dinosaurs, like pop guns."

This was one of many reunions he has attended throughout the years. Peffley was part of the Regimental Combat Team of 3rd Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment in Okinawa. Peffley has recently retired from his job of 25 years, building submarines.

James Yeager, who was with Headquarters, 3rd Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment, was a prisoner during the Korean War for 87 days. Yeager said they lost 313 people. One hundred were captured, himself included. Yeager marched to Seoul, where he was on a train for five days. On the fifth evening, Korean troops came to get them. Yeager survived because he said, "They thought I was dead."

Neal Vance and John Kirby, also with 3rd Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment, said the only way they survived was because "We swam the river and outfoxed the Koreans." They recalled being under fire and sharing foxholes. They both said they had no combat experience.

After returning to the U.S., Vance and Kirby lost touch. They searched for years, and after 43 long years, finally found each other. They got together and "sat for 24 hours and talked; no food or anything." They still keep in touch and call each other regularly.

This was the first reunion attended by Staff Sgt. James E. Smith, a current Soldier with Company C, 2nd Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment. Smith provided information on the M-240B.

"It's always good to listen to their experiences. I feel proud to be part of a unit with a real good history."

Peffley expressed what most of the retired Soldiers were feeling.

"We really appreciate the military today," he said.

Also included in the schedule was a trip to Warm Springs to visit the Little White House, a boat trip on the Chattahoochee River, and a memorial service honoring past Soldiers.

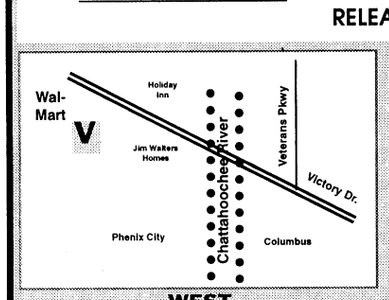
70th ID plans monument dedication

By Erin A. Nash
Special to the Bayonet©

A monument honoring veterans from the 70th Infantry Division will be dedicated at 1:30 p.m. Monday at Sacrifice Field in front of the National Infantry Museum.

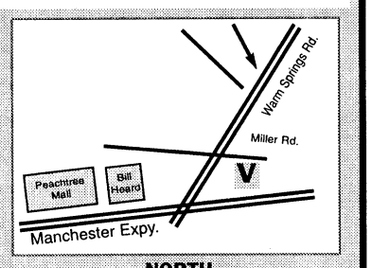
The 70th Division was activated in July 1943 at Camp Adair, Ore. and later at Fort Leonard Wood, Mo. Three regiments of the 70th were organized as Task Force Herren under Assistant Division Commander Thomas Herren and were shipped to France, landing first in Marseilles in Dec. 1944.

By mid Jan. 1945, the remainder of the division arrived. They broke through the Siegfried Line and opened the way to the east. Never before in the history of Europe had any Army successfully attacked through the Vosges mountains.



The monument will be dedicated to the former Soldiers as part of their WWII combat actions.

The guest speaker will be Ret. Gen. George S. Blanchard. Blanchard commanded Company C of the division's 274th Infantry Regiment.



Those planning on attending include veterans from 26 states and their families, Third U.S. Army Commander Lt. Gen. Tommy Ray Franks, who will also represent the Secretary of the Army, Commanding General Maj. Gen. Carl F. Ernst, who will accept the monument on behalf of Fort Benning, and Lt. Col. Jean-Philipe Girou who will represent the Embassy of France.

SOA Exhibit explores role of Hispanics in America's independence

By Spc. Alberto Betancourt
SOA Public Affairs

A revolutionary journey into the past disclosing Hispanic contributions to the independence of America is on display at the U.S. Army School of the Americas' John B. Amos Library through Oct. 15.

The exhibit, which has been on display since Sept. 15 for Hispanic Heritage Month, is a compilation of documents, photos, books and periodicals dating back to the early 1700's.

Adalbelio Garcia, founder of the exhibit, said it's taken him a lifetime to collect and organize the documents. Garcia works in the archives department at Columbus State University. His quest led him to Spain, the Canary Islands and many other locations around the world.

"Behind the conduct of every man exists a certain motivation," he said. "My family, who was always very interested in historical processes, was the key motivation in my many years of research on this project."

Garcia explained that many people think the independence of America was only supported by the French. However, the Cuban native said Hispanic contributions are never mentioned, although their efforts in the independence struggle was as important as the French.

He said Hispanics played a key role in the Battle of Pensacola — a battle Garcia said pivoted the events of the war and allowed the Continental Army an opening toward the South, where the British headquarters was located.

Garcia added that Hispanic contributions led by legions of Mexicans, Cubans, Puerto Ricans and many others was not only limited to battle support but also economic support.

Referring to one of the documents in the exhibit, Garcia explained that when the Continental Army lacked funds and the Soldiers' morale was at its lowest, money was collected in Havana, which supported the Continental Army's attack toward the South.

"This exhibit gives justice to the impact Hispanics made in America's independence," he said.

"Those who get the opportunity to visit the exhibit will witness the documents that support this historical feat."

To Garcia, his exhibit is priceless. Yet the man offered it for cultural education at many locations, including the University of Alabama.

"I chose the School of the Americas for my exhibit because this institute is envied for its greatness," he said. "During the past few years that I've lived here in Columbus, I've seen the moral strength that binds this school. There's no better place in the world for this exhibit to be shown."

Furthermore, Garcia said by having the exhibit here, Latin American students get the opportunity to see the many historical contributions of their ancestors.

Even more important, he said, Americans have the chance to understand and learn another part of their great history.

In the end, Garcia said he hopes his exhibit, which he dedicated to the memory of John Amos, shares an untold version of Hispanic culture that can shed light on the old myth that the French were the only ones supporting America's independence.

"The areas we now call New Orleans, Pensacola, Mississippi and many other southern regions have all been fertilized by the blood of thousands of Hispanics who gave their lives in support of this country's independence," he said. "There has always been a silence when referring to Hispanic contributions. There is silence no more."

Since 1946, the U.S. Army School of the Americas trained nearly 59,000 Latin American military, policemen and civilians from 22 nations.

School TV station visits post

By Erin A. Nash
Special to the Bayonet©

Channel One, a daily news program shown via satellite in schools around the country, visited Fort Benning's Airborne School Sept. 22-26 to highlight women and their changing roles in the military and in combat.

Channel One is free to any school, and also provides a satellite dish, two VCR's, a 19-inch color television and all wiring.

The daily 12-minute program is geared towards middle-and-high school students, and covers both breaking and feature news.

The producer, Jessica Falcon, and anchor, Monica Novotny, covered the story.

They first interviewed Pvt. 2 Belinda Goff, originally from Hendersonville, N.C., now one of the few females left in her class after entering Airborne School three days earlier.

Goff said Airborne School is fun but kind of intimidating.

During the interview, Novotny asked her if she thought she would be treated differently if she were a male, to which Goff answered no. When asked if the rules changed, would she go to combat. Without hesitating, Goff answered yes.

Goff said they had started out with approximately 30 females, and three days later there were approximately 15 left. She said the other females would have been better prepared had they worked harder at running before entering Airborne School. As long as she can do the physical training, Goff said she is not worried about getting through Airborne School.

Novotny next interviewed Sgt. Varunee Sellers, a Black Hat instructor. Sellers said that when she went through Airborne School in 1991, there were no female instructors, and only 6 out of 48 females from her class graduated.

Sellers believes that men and women should be held to the same standards and females would have a harder time being accepted by males if the standards were different.

"Just like anywhere, you have to prove yourself, male or female," Sellers said. "A Soldier is a Soldier, male or female."

The interview took Falcon and Novotny well over an hour, yet Falcon said the program would only be about 10 minutes total, in a two part series.

Both Falcon and Novotny expressed their like for their job. Falcon said,"To be able to do stuff like this and get paid for it is great." Novotny said it is her dream job.

Falcon and Novotny had started their day covering physical training at 5:30 a.m. and were ending the day with an airplane ride.

Fish Fry: Raises money for AUSA, Soldiers

The award recipients received their recognition in front of a crowd of more than 500 people. Some of the commanders in attendance included Garrison Commander Col. Byron Greene; Ranger Training Brigade Commander Col. Dorian Anderson; 29th Infantry Regiment Commander Col. Richard Rowe; Deputy Commanding General Brig. Gen. Walter Wojdakowski and Commanding General Maj. Gen. Carl F. Ernst.

Ernst said AUSA does what Soldiers can't do for themselves.

"AUSA does things for the Army the Constitution does not allow Soldiers to do," Ernst said. "They (AUSA) speak on our behalf and try to get things done for us."

Ernst also said AUSA helps Soldiers locally.

"When it's time to send Soldiers to Washington for the AUSA Convention, AUSA is there so Soldiers don't have to pay for their trips out of their pocket.

"We can't go to Washington being the best in the world, the best in training and the best in community service and not have a great showing — we're going first class," Ernst said.

After Ernst finished, the food line was closed and almost all the awards were given out, the time had come for the biggest award of the night.

Nearly 33,000 tickets were sold in support of the last award of the evening — the giving away of a car or truck.

Because Uchee Creek is in Alabama, and lottery and raffle tickets are illegal there, the barrel of tickets was brought to a pontoon boat located in Georgia.

There, small unit AUSA Queen, Staff Sgt. Gail Toney pulled the winning ticket out of the barrel.

The winner was retired 1st Sgt. Andres Gonzales. Gonzales was not present when his name was drawn, but showed up Saturday with his family at Jay Toyota in Columbus to claim his new 1997 Toyota Tacoma truck.

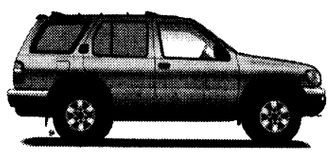
Foley's options are to dismiss the charges and take no further action; dismiss the charges and initiate nonjudicial or administrative action; refer the charges for trial by courtmartial; or return the case to the appointing authority for disposition at his level.

There is no established time line for Foley to act on Powell's recommendations. He will take the time necessary to review the investigation and take the action he deems appropriate.

The Article 32 investigating officer, Col. Robert L. Jarvis, made his recommendations to Owen Sept. 18. Jarvis, MDW's deputy chief of staff for logistics, presided over the Article 32 "pretrial" hearing on Fort McNair, Wash., D.C., on charges preferred against the Army's highest-ranking enlisted soldier.



The 27-day hearing, similar to a civilian grand jury proceeding, began June 25 and featured more than 50 witnesses. Jarvis reviewed more than 6,000 pages of testimony and evidence in deciding his recommendations.

Ambulance and MACH staff listen to one of the hospital's doctors prior to pulling a crash victim from the ambulance.

A victim receives oxygen in the ER.

Team members of the decontamination team tend to a simulated victim inside one of the decontamination tents.

Part of the decontamination team carries a victim from the decontamination area to the ER entrance while other team members prepare for the next patient.

By Sgt. Marc G. Turchin
Bayonet assistant editor

The scene begins with a crash. One airplane crashes carrying 140 people onboard. Next is an explosion and passengers are thrown from the aircraft.

When medical and firefighting personnel arrive, the victims' screams deafen their ears. The passengers are badly burned; some are still on fire. Others are soaked in gasoline, oil or other liquid solvents.

By the time the first ambulance arrives at Martin Army Community Hospital (MACH), nearly 20 hospital staff members stand ready at the door to the emergency room (ER).

The staff is broken down into teams — a litter team, triage teams and a decontamination team.

The first victim is barely breathing. The medic who drove to the hospital with him tells the MACH staff he stopped breathing twice while en route. Three-quarters of his skin is badly burned. It's time for quick decisions.

Cardiopulmonary resuscitation was administered when the medics found him. He goes into cardiac arrest again. The MACH staff acts quickly. Commands are heard from every direction and people are moving in and out of the ER with equipment.

But in the end, the victim's time has come. The staff sends for the morgue team and moves on to the next victim being brought through the swinging doors of the ER.

This was the scenario Sept. 25 at MACH when the hospital conducted a mass casualty exercise.

"This exercise is to test our Emergency Preparedness Plan (EPP)," said Lt. Col. David L. Maness, deputy commander for clinical services.

"Our goal in this exercise is to test our entire hospital staff and its response to an emergency," he said.

The EPP is the plan the hospital follows during emergencies such as the one practiced recently.

"We take our EPP apart, see what our problem areas are, modify them as necessary so we are ready for that real-life emergency," Maness said.

He said this kind of training is done twice a year, but this was one of the biggest exercises in quite a while.

"Each mass casualty is going to be a little different," said Maj. David Schroeder, chief, Emergency Department at MACH.

For the exercise, Schroeder was responsible for making sure the patients were getting the right treatment and answering questions about patients.

He was just one of many outside the ER — only he was answering calls concerning patients. He spent his time in and out of the ER with a remote phone attached to his hip and a ear piece on his head.

The entrance to the ER was scattered with hospital staff members, ambulances, a decontamination section, litters, administrative specialists and local media covering the event. Despite having many people in one area, staff members were still able to clue into who is who.

"We know who the hospital staff are and we come out as soon as the ambulances arrive," said Sgt. Arthur Scott, shift leader in the Emergency Department.

"Even our real-world patients get direction of where to go," he said. "They have to get treated as soon as possible."

The simulated patients, some who were contaminated with who knows what, were taken a different route before entering the hospital.

A tent city of white tents was set up as a decontamination area.

Victims, ambulance medics and anyone else thought to be contaminated went through the tents. Inside the tents, victims were washed and scrubbed to remove whatever liquid they were covered with.

Once decontaminated, a "D" was marked on the patient's forehead telling hospital staff the victim was cleaned.

"Before we can touch them, they have to go through the decontamination process," Thomas said.

But, with all that is going on, the staff members feel the adrenaline.

"The stress levels rise about 110 percent," said Sgt. 1st Class Marlon Thomas, NCOIC of the Emergency Department.

"The staff gets so involved and they want to do real well and still take care of the real patients," Thomas said. "It kind of overwhelms them."

The idea is to overwhelm them, Maness said.

"You have to have a good EPP to respond to an emergency," Maness said. "That's what we're trying to do here."

Engineer company shows off for veterans

Wartime Soldiers, family members return to catch glimpse of today's Army

By 2nd Lt. Eric Searcy
63rd Engineer Company

Sept. 12, the 63rd Engineer Company conducted a motorpool tour and equipment display for World War II veterans of the 20th Engineer Regiment. The visit was sponsored by the US Army Infantry Center and supported by the 36th Engineer Group. Approximately 85 veterans and family members participated in the tour.

The purpose of the tour and equipment display was to show the advancement of the Army Corps of Engineers since World War II.

It was an opportunity for present and past engineers to socialize and compare knowledge about their experiences as Engineers.

"It was a big experience for me to have met engineers who actually played a part in World War II," said Pfc. Dean Wilcox.

"I really enjoyed the conversations that took place," said Spc. John Roberts. "Just by listening to the various war stories made me proud of being part of the Corps of Engineers," he said.

During the tour, veterans were introduced to the current maintenance procedures that take place during everyday operations. They had the opportunity to tour the various shops of the Maintenance Platoon in the 63rd. They also had an opportunity to see Soldiers in action conducting maintenance operations.

During the equipment display, the veterans were amazed with the equipment the 63rd displayed. Included were a CAT D-7G bulldozer, a CAT 621-B scraper, a CAT 130-G grader, a M-917 20- ton dump truck, a Small Emplacement Excavator and a M-998 humvee. The equipment displayed included NBC apparel, load bearing equipment and weapons.

The 36th Engineer Group displayed its Topographical Van from the Design Management Section and the 317th Engineer Battalion supported the effort by displaying an armored personnel carrier.

The visitors, assisted by the operators of the equipment, had an opportunity to climb on the various equipment.

"I really enjoyed the visit and watching the veterans helping themselves to the equipment on display," said Spc. Jami L. Schwickerath. "It is amazing to see these guys are very energetic, motivated and interested in what we have offered them today," he said.

A Soldier begins the first graduation of 2nd Battalion, 19th Infantry Regiment with an Infantry demonstration Sept. 11 on Kanell Field. This was the first class to graduate from the newly reactivated battalion. The battalion is now fully functional training more than 700 Soldiers. The Infantry Training Brigade now operates seven battalions.

New Soldiers test Infantry skills

By 2nd Lt. Chris Ballard
11th Infantry Regiment

Company B, 2nd Battalion (Infantry Officer Basic Course),11th Infantry Regiment was tested Sept. 25 on skills common to the Infantry Soldier and leader. Known as Military Stakes, the Expert Infantryman Badge (EIB)-style test is intended to measure the lieutenants' proficiency in weapon systems, their employment and maintenance.

Each of the series of tasks is graded to EIB standards, with a failure resulting in a retest at the end of the training day.

The train-up to the test began the previous week, as the lieutenants were given familiarization training on the M-60, M-249 SAW, and M-2 machine guns. Concurrent training was also conducted with anti-tank and anti-personnel mines during training on the M-203 grenade launcher later in the week.

The class was given a pre-test the day prior to the actual test, after which the lieutenants were given the opportunity to retrain on those stations with which they were uncomfortable or felt that they needed more training.

The day of the actual test, began at 5:15 a.m. with a six-mile tactical road march to Sandy Patch Range, where the test was conducted. At 8 a.m., the company was split into nine sections and sent to the various stations to perform tasks such as assembling and disassembling machine guns, employing a claymore and completing a range card for the M-60 machine gun.

Finally, at the end of the day, the Soldiers turned in their rain-soaked and tattered score sheets, retested if necessary and went away with a sense of confidence in their abilities. "The rain is a good thing," said 2nd Lt. Art Garffer, an Officer Candidate School graduate from Puerto Rico. "If you can break down an M-60 covered with oil with pruned-up hands, in the rain, then you know you can do it pretty much any time."

After testing was completed, the company then moved back to the company area for recovery of equipment and preparation for their upcoming field problem. The class is in their fifth week of the 16-week course.

Airborne School announces new top instructor for 1997

By Jennifer Harriman
Special to the Bayonet©

The title of Blackhat of the Year was awarded Sept. 16 to the top airborne instructor in the U.S. Army Airborne School.

Staff Sgt. Christopher J. Lynch of Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 1st Battalion (Airborne), 507th Infantry Regiment was presented with this honor after defeating the final five competitors.

"The Blackhat of the Year competition takes previously selected airborne instructors from each of the companies. These blackhats then compete in five different areas for points," Lynch said.

The first phase of the competition is an Army Physical Fitness Test. Next comes the Jumpmaster Primary Inspection test, in which the parachute rigs are checked for deficiencies with a time limit of five minutes. After this, the jumpmasters give a class on one element of Airborne School. The final test is a formal board, similar to the E-5 or E-6 promotion board. The final tally of the points determines the winner.

"I was surprised that I got the chance to compete, because I'm leaving in January but I was thrilled. It was an honor to be able to compete with such a talented group of people," Lynch said.

With 10 years in service, Lynch served in Korea, the 82nd Airborne Division and the 5th Infantry Division. In Jan. 1998, he will begin his new assignment as a recruiter in Boston, Mass.

Future aspirations for Lynch include completing his bachelor's degree in political science or business administration.

"I would like to apply for Officer Candidate School after I get my degree. Eventually I would like to come back to work right here," Lynch said.

"Getting this award means so much to me. I really enjoy the recognition of my peers as the top guy," Lynch said.

"It hasn't been easy. I wanted to be an attorney from the time I was 17. My family did all they could but they just didn't have the resources...it takes a lot. That's why I'll always be grateful to the National Hispanic Scholarship Fund. They were there when I needed them."

Perry

to receive AUSA's Marshall Medal

Association of the U.S. Army

The Association of the United States Army has selected Dr. William J. Perry, former secretary of defense to receive its highest award, the George Catlett Marshall Medal, for "selfless service to the United States of America."

Recognized as an educator, entrepreneur, public servant and Soldier, Perry is cited by the Association for his "wisdom, honor and valor," and for the many contributions he made to the nation as the 19th defense secretary "in the tradition of that great American public servant whose memory is perpetuated by this award," Gen. George Catlett Marshall.

Born in Vandergrift, Penn., Oct. 11, 1927, Perry received a bachelor's degree and master's degree in mathematics from Stanford University, and later a doctorate in mathematics from Pennsylvania State University.

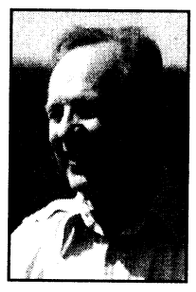
In 1946, Perry began serving his country as a private in the U.S. Army with the Army Corps of Engineers in Okinawa. Two years later, he joined the Reserve Officers Training Program, was commissioned as a second lieutenant and served in the U.S. Army Reserve until 1955.

In the private sector, Perry held key management positions in several companies, and in 1964, he was one of the founders of ESL, Inc., serving as its president until 1977.

That year, Perry began his civilian service with the government as the under secretary of defense for research and engineering until 1981. He served as the defense secretary's principal adviser on technology, communications, intelligence and atomic energy and was responsible for weapon systems procurement.

Following a tour at Stanford University, Perry joined the Clinton administration March 5, 1993, as deputy secretary of defense, and later, Feb. 3, 1994, he was sworn in as the Defense Department's secretary, a post he held until Jan. 24.

As secretary, he inherited a military and defense establishment that was undergoing the most drastic reduction in forces in 50 years and a post-Cold War environment that posed diverse and difficult problems — from nationalistic conflicts to humanitarian disasters, from the erosion of the nuclear arms race to the deployments of U.S. troops throughout the world in some 30 successful operations.



"Through it all," the medal's citation reads, "he continually demonstrated exceptional leadership and vision."

Perry's tenure is also marked with many achievements including: the reduction in nuclear weapons, the creation of new security structures in Europe, an extensive restructuring of the armed forces and the defense establishment and the implementation of new defense and national security strategies.

Most importantly, according to Association officials, Perry ensured that the quality of life for the members of the armed forces and their families was the highest priority and his agenda dealt with improving the well-being of those who served by protecting pay and benefits and upgrading family and bachelor housing, child-care facilities and health care.

Perry will receive the Marshall Medal at the George Catlett Marshall Memorial Dinner, the final event at the AUSA annual convention, which is Oct. 13-16, at the Sheraton Washington Hotel, in the nation's capital.

William J. Perry is the recipient of this year's George Catlett Marshall Medal.

ACAP helps Soldiers deal with transition stress

By Chick Eagle
Army Career and Alumni Program

Soldiers and families must cope with "transition stress" during a career change.

When it is time, transitioning out of the Army and into a civilian career can be one of the most stressful periods in a Soldier's life. Just ask someone who has been through the experience.

Although each situation may be unique, stresses on the family and the Soldier will certainly be felt. Coping with the emotional and physical results of transition related stress is an item of "special emphasis" during the Army Career and Alumni Program provided to separating and retiring Soldiers and spouses.

"I've been there, and the ACAP program at Fort Benning provided outstanding support, training and assistance to help smooth the career change. I thought I had worked hard to prepare myself and my family for the move, but the stress was still there and it was real," said Chick Eagle, Job Assistance Counselor and former military member.

"Constant fatigue, headaches, trouble sleeping or sleeping too much, stomach problems, feeling nervous and irritable or unnecessarily angry, are signs of excess stress.

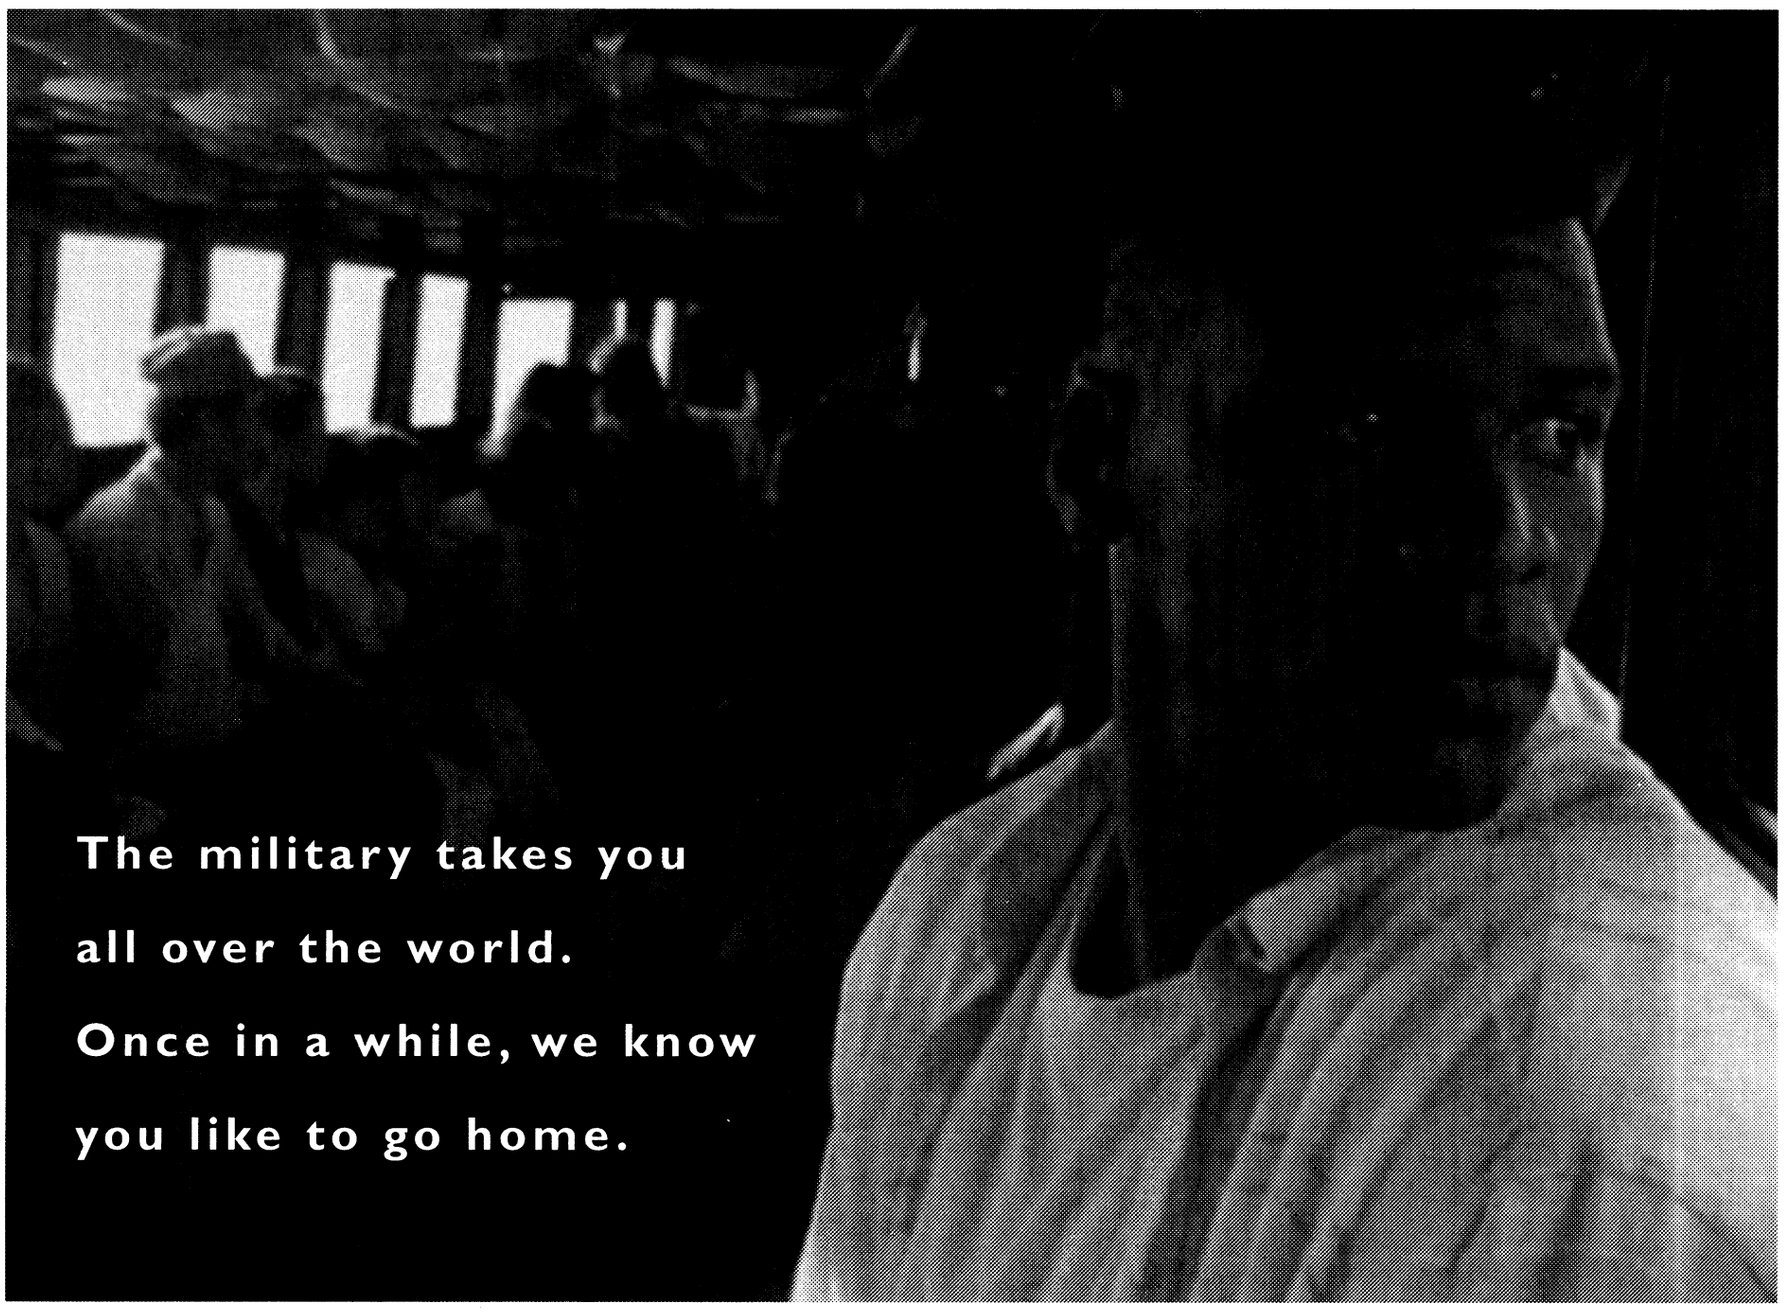
"Also, stress may cause more frequent colds, inability to eat or eating too much, wanting to be alone, and smoking or drinking more than usual," Eagle said.

The following are some tips for successfully coping with transition related stress symptoms as suggested by thousands of service members now separated:

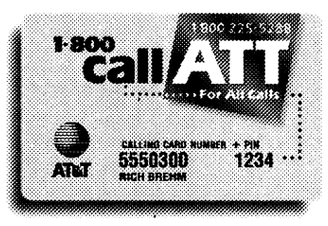
•Get going - It is your transition, take charge, focus on each task and just do it.

•Sell yourself - You are a great product and now is not the time to be modest about your accomplishments.

•Work at it - Work hard to plan and execute your transition but also take time off for yourself and your family.



•Keep your family involved - They may be feeling the same or more worries and uncertainties than you. Stress can be lessened by keeping them involved in your plan.



•Lighten up - This is important advice. Keep a sense of humor and a positive, upbeat, confident attitude about the adventure ahead.

Soldiers and families working hard with the services available through the ACAP program and other agencies will successfully complete their transition to a new career.

School board visits schools

By Staff Sgt. Lori Egan
Bayonet editor

In an unusual Monday morning twist school board members boarded a school bus to go back to school — not to start over academically but for a tour of the Fort Benning schools.

Fort Benning Schools Superintendent Dr. Dell McMullen arranged the tour so that school board members would have a better idea of how each school functions, where it fits into the Fort Benning School System and what programs are offered.

The tour started at the administration building where board members looked at the Fort Benning home page on the world wide web.

Technology was the buzz word as the members visited the individual schools.

At Wilson Elementary School, Principal Phyllis Parker greeted the visitors with information about how the school uses the internet to enhance students knowledge of geography, weather and language arts. The example she used was students who are pen pals with students in Japan. The program is translated through the program at World School Japan.

After the stop at Wilson, board members travelled to Faith Middle School. They were greeted by members of the student council and shown the video Faith students made to welcome new students.

Dr. Beth Middlemiss, principal, told the board members how Faith Middle School now offers high school credit for geometry and algebra classes. Middlemiss said that eighth-graders have been ahead of national projections in technology completing electronic portfolios for the last two years, which should be done nationally by 2000.

Staff Sgt. Lori Egan

Dale Rowe, OWC representative; Dell McMullen, Fort Benning Schools superintendent; and 1st Sgt. Wesley Lee, Wilson Elementary School representative, look at the books students at Wilson made last year.

Del Hicks, the principal at McBride Elementary School, told the board members about the accelerated reading program and how students read more than 10,000 books last year using computers to accomplish this feat.

"Technology is a tool to help us produce good and productive citizens who are capable and flexible," Hicks said. "That is our goal for our students."

The tour was a good idea, said Sgt.` Joe Todd, Loyd Elementary School representative.

Other board members agreed.

"I got a better feel for all the schools and where each one fits into the Fort Benning School system," said Lt. Col. Dana Chipman, legal advisor for the school board.

Post prepares for Halloween

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Halloween "trick or treating," will be held from 6 to 8 p.m. Oct. 31, in post housing areas. "Trick or treat" activities are limited to children under 13 years of age. Preschool children must be accompanied by an older person (14 years or older). Limit "trick or treating," only to the housing area in which the participants reside, and approach only residences with lighted entry ways.

Light-colored, fire resistant costumes, short enough to prevent tripping, should be worn by children. Costumes can be marked with reflective tape or 'glow' spray paint so they can pick up auto headlights and other lights.

Observe all basic safety precautions. Use sidewalks and crosswalks; don't cut through yards. Look in all directions before walking across the street. Ensure pet owners take measures to prevent pets from being a nuisance or a menace to children.

Caution children about the wrongs of vandalism and causing damage to the property of others. Ensure children carry flashlights after dark and that every safety precaution is taken when crossing streets. Motorists must be alert on Halloween during the hours of 6 to 8 p.m. Parents should inspect all "treats" prior to their children eating them. Give your child a full meal before he or she goes "trick or treating."

Schools present Parent Academy

Fort Benning Schools

The Parent Academy, a weekend seminar for Fort Benning parents will take place at Faith Middle School Oct. 17-18.

The Parent Academy is free and is open to all Fort Benning parents and personnel. Free child care will also be provided for children aged six weeks to 11 years of age. Space in the Parent Academy will be limited. Reservations will be required. These reservations will be taken on a first-come, first served basis.

For more information, call Gail Wilson, director of Staff Development at 545-8245.

School bus safety

Officials outline rules for motorists, students

By Jennifer Harriman
Special to the Bayonet©

School days are here again, and along with it come safety concerns for children riding the school bus. There are guidelines that motorists, parents, and students can follow to help maintain a safe environment for everyone who shares the road.

Motorists in a hurry to pass a school bus pose an especially dangerous risk to children loading or unloading. All motorists are required by Georgia law to stop when the bus stops.

"In an ideal situation, a driver will activate the yellow flashing lights 150 feet before the stop. Then, the mechanism that opens the door also turns on the red lights, and the crossing arm comes down," said Bob Ouimette, contract manager for the Fort Benning school buses.

"When drivers are too careless or in too big of a hurry and try to pass the bus, they are creating a very dangerous situation," Ouimette said. "They are breaking the law and I think that anyone who witnesses this should feel a personal obligation to report it."

Bus drivers carry a specific form for reporting motor violators. These forms are faxed to the military police.

"The more people we have to report offenders, the more credibility it gives to the bus drivers' reports," Ouimette said.

If the police have more than one complaint filed all showing the same tag numbers, it is more likely that person will get a visit. Reporting has made a big difference this year, he said.

Parents of students who ride the school bus can take specific steps to ensure a safe and pleasant ride for everyone.

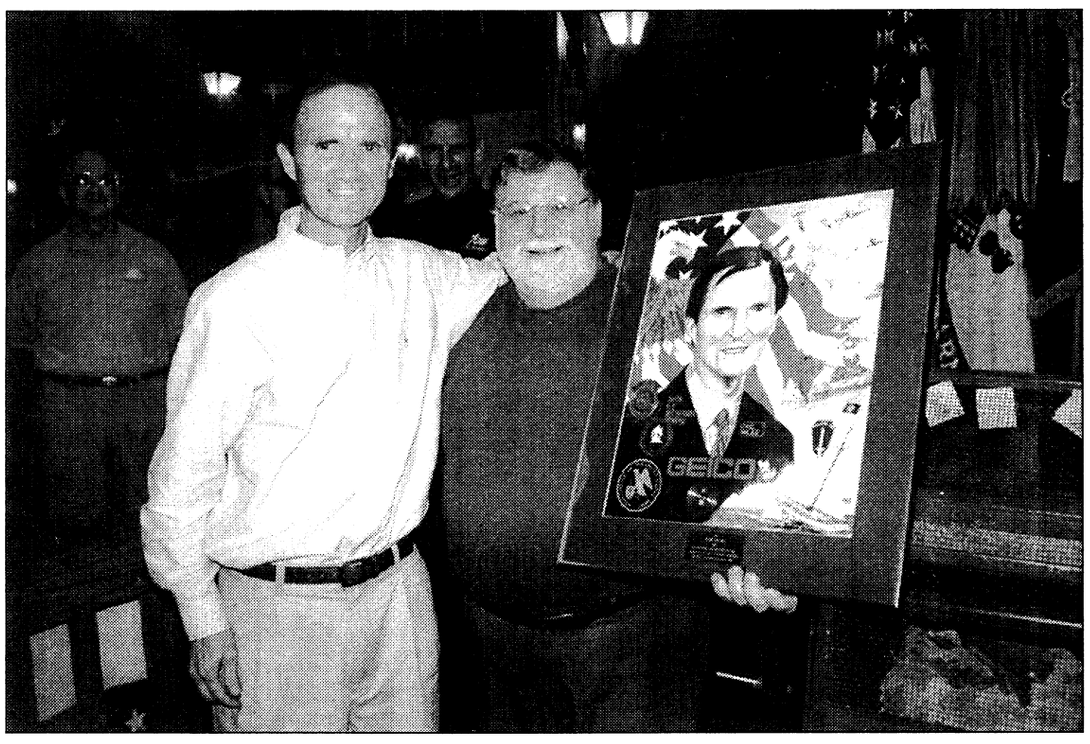
"The best thing parents can do is explain the bus safety rules and why they are important," said Donna Ford, support services specialist. "Especially with young children, they may not understand why they need to remain seated. They don't understand that jumping around can be dangerous, and we really rely on the parents to remind the children."

A copy of the school bus regulations is sent home to the parents at the beginning of the school year.

"These are mainly common sense rules, easy to understand," Ford said. "We recommend that parents keep a copy of the rules handy so they can show the child and help them remember. The key is soliciting parental support."

There is also a copy of the rules posted in the school bus at all times. These rules include: no fighting, remain seated, keep arms and head inside the bus, no eating, and be courteous. The bus driver is allowed to assign seats at his or her discretion.

When students misbehave, the driver can make verbal corrections. If the problem persists, the driver will submit a behavior referral, to be sent home and signed by the parent.



"All our reports are safety related," Ford said. "We just want parents to remind their children of the rules. This makes bus safety enforcement a team effort."

Severe or persistent problems are referred directly to the principal or assistant principal with a conduct report. The principal or assistant principal may decide the punishment, ranging from a counseling session to suspension from the bus to suspension from school.

Additional video cameras have been ordered for the buses to assist the drivers with discipline. All buses are equipped with telephones for emergencies.

"Our first objective is safety on the bus," Ford said.

"If everyone stays aware and does their part, we can make it a safe school year," Ouimette said.

Debt management assistance is available — There are two non-profit agencies in Columbus that offer debt management assistance.

They will each make an evaluation of your financial status and work with your creditors, if your financial status allows. They can work with creditors to adjust payments. Soldiers can make one payment to them, and they will disburse the negotiated amount to each creditor.

•Alternative Financial Resolutions provides free debt management assistance to all clients. They can take information from you in person, by phone, or by mail. After they have made an evaluation of your financial status, they will be able to determine if you have the resources to do a debt management plan.

They will then work with your creditors to adjust payments to fit within your income and meet creditor approval. You can make one payment to them, and they will disburse the negotiated payment amounts.

You can reach Alternative Financial Resolutions by calling 323-2108, or by writing to them at Post Office Box 9364, Columbus, Ga 31908-9364.

•Consumer Credit Counseling Service (CCCS) is a department of Columbus Family Counseling Center, located at 1350 15th Avenue, across from the side of Red Lobster Restaurant.

They also negotiate with creditors, accept one payment from you, and disburse the negotiated payment amount to the creditors. The monthly fee for their service is $15. You can make an appointment with the CCCS by calling 327-3239.

CCCS evaluates your financial status to determine if you have the resources to do a debt management plan.

Humane Society recycles cans for operating funds — The Muscogee County Humane Society will accept aluminum cans through Nov. 30.

It is participating in Paws to Recycle, the only nationwide aluminum can recycling program that benefits animal shelters. The shelter will earn operating funds and free pet food for its participation and compete with other shelters across the country for one of the five $3,000 grand prizes.

The Muscogee County Humane Society will accept aluminum cans 11 a.m. to 3 p.m. Wednesday to Saturday and 1 to 4 p.m. Sunday.

Hotline to answer health and fitness questions – Physical therapists will answer questions on a "Healthy Living" hotline from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. (Pacific time) Oct. 17-18.

Directorate of Public Works

This week's article provides information on Columbus Day schedule changes and closings and information on several upcoming contracts in Family Housing.

Columbus Day trash collection schedule changes

•Yard waste: There will be no yard waste picked up Oct. 13. The next scheduled yard waste pick up will be Oct. 20 for all family housing areas.

•Refuse and recycle holiday schedule changes for Columbus Day, Oct. 13 for Lower Davis Hills — Port, Kawamura and Fernandez streets and Indianhead Terrace will be picked up Oct. 14 instead of Oct. 13. All other areas will be picked up as normally scheduled Oct. 14-17.

Holiday schedule for the Self Help U-DO-IT Center

In observance of Columbus Day, the Self Help Center, Loan Equipment Section, Venetian Blind and Shade Shop will be closed Oct. 11-13. The shops will reopen for business 8:30 a.m. Oct. 14.

McGraw Manor residents

DPW has awarded a contract to Step Inc. of Oak Ridge, Tenn., to replace or slip line main sewers and laterals in the McGraw Manor housing area. This contract is scheduled to begin in late October. Current plans are for the contractor to begin on Brostrom, Magrath and McGraw streets but residents will be notified by Step Inc. when their lateral will be replaced.

Representatives of Step Inc. will have identification authorizing them to be in the housing areas.

This identification will be available for your review upon request. If you have questions, call the Construction Inspection Branch at 545-4749

Bathtub and fixture replacement in Family Housing

DPW recently awarded a contract to replace bathtubs in certain family housing units throughout the installation over the next 12 months.

Plans are to have this contract underway by Monday.

The contractor for this project is Continental Flooring Company.

A representative of Continental Flooring will notify residents in advance to coordinate a convenient time for work to occur. Work normally takes about three days.

Upon being notified that your bathtub will be replaced, you will be given a date and requested to remove all personal items from the bathroom to avoid damage and to expedite repairs.

The contractor has been instructed to ensure that residents have a working bathroom at the end of each day.

Representatives of Continental Floor Company will have identification authorizing them to coordinate this work with residents.

This identification will he available for your review upon request. If you have questions, call Martha Lyles, Family Housing Branch, at 545-2981

Comments and questions

If you have questions or topics that you would like to be addressed in the DPW "Information Corner," please contact Glenn Todd, DPW Customer Relations Specialist, 545-2117, or write to the Directorate of Public Works. Building 6, Room 409, ATTN: ATZB-PMW (Glenn Todd), Fort Benning, GA 31905.

Scouts begin annual recruiting campaign

By Jill Hatfield
Boy Scouts of America

With school starting, the Fort Benning Boy Scout district begins its annual recruiting campaign.

The Boy Scouts will be visiting the schools, hosting major events, camping trips and other activities that further the goals and mission of Scouting.

The Boy Scouts of America have a long and productive history of "maturing" boys into young men with strong ideals founded upon duty to God, family and country, according to Scoutmaster Howard Willis.

This year's theme is "Character Counts," and we of scouting believe this is of critical importance for the future of our country.

Our point of contact for this recruiting drive is Tom or Debbie Lytle at 569-9100 or Jill Hatfield at 327-2634.

Fort Benning and Boy Scouting have a long history of partnership. Troop 27, located at Russ Pond, was founded in 1927.

It is one of the oldest continuously active troops in the nation. Currently, there are more than 1,000 active Boy Scouts and adult volunteer leaders participating in Scouting at Fort Benning.

The Eagle Medal is the highest award in Boy Scouting.

There are several events planned for this fall. The first event is the Fall Camporee of the Fort Benning-Pataula District. The camporee will be held at the Uchee Creek Boy Scout reservation Oct. 17-19, 1997.

For more information on this event, call Charles (Woody) Woodson, the Camporee director, at 569-8682, 327-7668 or 576-8384.

Another event is "Scouting for Food," the annual food drive to help the needy in the area. This begins Nov. 18, and lasts throughout the month. Beginning Nov. 29, Boy Scouts will sell Christmas Trees at the Fort Benning Main Mall Post Exchange.

Throughout the Fort Benning District's history, Boy Scouting has been staffed by volunteers. Volunteers are still needed. For more information call Col. Willis at 545-5741.

Benning communities elect mayors

By Staff Sgt. Lori Egan
Bayonet editor

The Fort Benning community elected mayors and vice mayors during a two-day electoral process Sept. 18-19.

According to Jennifer Morgan, the Directorate of Community Activities' Community Life officer, community participation in the election was good.

The mayors for the next year are:

Indianhead Terrace — Dorothy White, 222 Garrett Street, 687-4524. The vice mayor position is vacant.

East Main Post — Yolanda Valentine, 108 Austin Loop, 689-9823. The vice mayor position is vacant.

West Main Post — April Strawser, 936-C Kilgore Street, 682-3840. The vice mayor position is vacant.

Custer and Upatoi Terrace — Andrea Gronau, 530-D North Valdez Court, 682-1734. The vice Mayor is Cori Fullman, 532-B North Valdez Court, 687-2721.

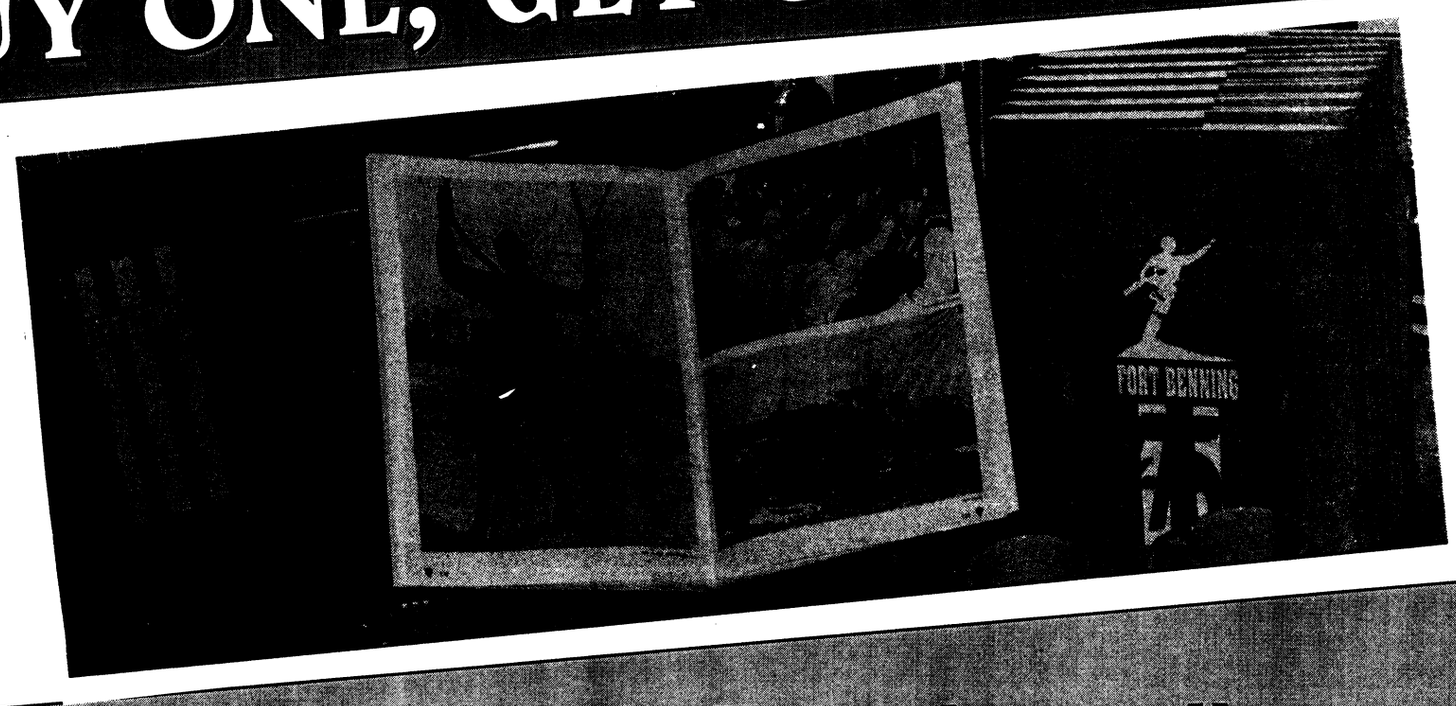
McGraw Manor — Linda Young, 151-H Magrath Street, 682-0526. The vice mayor is Laurie Siegel, 138-G Magrath Street, 682-4871.

The Bouton Heights-Davis Hill mayor and vice mayor positions remain vacant.

One of the concerns for past mayors and for a new mayor is speeding through the housing areas.

Young, the McGraw Manor mayor, plans a proactive approach to the problem in her housing area.

"Neighbors getting after neighbors will make the difference," she said. "I stop speeders on Magrath Street. I let them know what the speed limit is.



"I volunteered for this position because I want to make sure all enlisted people get taken care of.

"I want to be a voice for the community, to put my 20-year Army career experience to work for the community — to be a liaison for the community and the Army. "

The mayor program is strictly a quality of life program, Morgan said. The mayors are volunteers who represent their housing areas to enhance quality of life for the residents.

The mayors meet monthly with the garrison command to discuss community-related issues and provide solutions for the Fort Benning community.

The mayors and vice mayors will be installed 2 p.m. Oct. 9 at the Fort Benning Officers' Club.

Christians celebrate World Communion Sunday, oneness with Jesus Christ

By Chaplain (Capt.) Terry W. Austin
USAIC Chaplain's Office

reflections

Sunday is World Communion Sunday. It is a Christian's special day of observance set aside to recognize our communion with Jesus Christ as a world-wide body of believers.

It is that aspect of our faith in which we declare our own sinfulness and Jesus Christ's righteousness, that time in our lives when we personally acknowledge Him as Lord and begin a communion with God through his son, Jesus Christ.

This special day has two aspects or qualifications of communion.

The first aspect or qualification is personal. Each person must have a personal communion with God.

Communion is communication. When we partake of communion in worship services we openly express our relationship with Jesus Christ.

The elements, the bread and juice or wine, are used in worship. However, one great truth about communion is revealed in Mark 14:22-25.

Jesus said he would not partake in this sacred act again until we are with Him in the kingdom of God. He is waiting for us to be joined with Him.

Each person who expresses their faith in Him will have the great privilege of being with Him in heaven.

The second aspect of communion is global. Believers all over the world are able to join together as a unified body of believers to celebrate their personal communion with God. What a celebration — millions of people throughout the world celebrating communion with our Lord looking on.

I cannot help but believe that He is pleased by such an event as this. And just think, one day all the believers from all ages will celebrate the Lord's Supper with him in heaven. That is a great truth.

Christianity is unique among other world religions. Christians believe in the resurrection of their founder, physically, bodily, after his death.

No other religion can claim such a truth as this. This supernatural, historical event was witnessed by approximately 500 people. Some of them were believers and some nonbelievers.

Indeed, the Christian faith is personal and yet, it is global. Regardless of where we may find ourselves in this world, there are folks who believe a common truth: The resurrection of Jesus Christ.

This is what World Communion Sunday is all about. Millions of Christians celebrating their communion in Jesus Christ.

Though we are different in many ways, we share together the truth of Jesus Christ.

Mark 14:22-25 explains communion:

"And as they did eat, Jesus took bread, and blessed, and brake it, and gave to them, and said, Take, eat: this is my body.

"And he took the cup, and when he had given thanks, he gave it to them: and they drank of it.

"And he said unto them, This is my blood of the new testament, which is shed for many.

"Verily I say unto you, I will drink no more of the fruit of the vine, until that day that I drink it new in the kingdom of God."

I want to encourage you to personally grow in the faith and knowledge of Jesus Christ.

Take time for your personal faith and celebrate your oneness in the body of Christ by attending chapel this Sunday.

You will be part of the world-wide celebration of Christians enjoying their communion with God through his son, Jesus Christ.

FAP helps prevent child, spouse abuse

Family Advocacy Program

The Army Family Advocacy Program (FAP) is a specialized program designed to prevent child and spouse maltreatment.

Rebecca Welch, program manager, said the main focus of FAP is to develop prevention programs that contribute to a healthy life for the Soldiers and their families.

She said a lot of people believe that the program is out to punish the Soldiers and their families if an incident is reported or if a call is received for help or child and spouse abuse. This is a misconception.

"We provide training to help educate the families and direct them to services that will assist them in meeting their needs before an incident occurs or a problem arises," Welch said. "We are available to help the families solve their problems, not to create a problem for the families."

Services are provided to families who are vulnerable to the kinds of stress that can lead to abuse. When families seek help or a problem is identified, referrals are made to other treatment programs on and off the installation that provide services for Soldiers and their families involved in family violence.

"In order to strengthen the families and prevent the recurrence of abuse, we encourage voluntary self-referral through education and awareness programs," Welch said.

Listed below are programs that are designed to help prevent child and spouse abuse.

•Violence intervention — The FAP manager may provide crisis intervention to Soldiers or family members in emergency situations. Cases involving family violence intervention that need long-term treatment and follow-up are referred to Social Work Services.

•Parent education — It has been assumed that parenting is instinctive and that people "just know" how to take care of and raise children. It now seems clear that parenting is a learned behavior, influenced by personal history and experience, as well as the opportunity to observe and practice specific skills.

Parent support programs help parents get off to a good start, they learn to interact more effectively with their children and to create and maintain a safe home environment. This program also teaches parents basic skills in physical care, supervision and psychological nurturing, appropriate to a child's age and stage of development.

Classes are offered through the Chaplains' Family Life Center. Call 545-1760. Families who need child care while enrolled in day-time classes can receive free child care through Family Advocacy.

•Troop education — Classes are mandatory and are provided on an annual basis for all military personnel on the dynamics of spouse and child abuse, the availability of treatment services and the Army's policies regarding family violence. Units can schedule briefings by calling the FAP manager at 545-6969.

•First Steps Program — The First Steps Program provides emotional support, parenting education, referrals to community resources and follow-up contact to parents with newborns, thereby helping to develop healthy family relationships and reduce the risk of child abuse and neglect.

The FAP funds the First Steps Program, located at Martin Army Community Hospital. Each first-time mom receives a tote bag filled with educational materials including: a First Steps Calendar, nursery rhyme cassette tape for baby, tub tester, "101 Ways to Praise Your Child" magnet, etc. First Steps volunteers are assigned to work with new parents for up to one year after the baby is born.

•Respite child care — Respite care is temporary child care for the purpose of relieving parental stress and providing a nurturing and developmentally appropriate environment. Respite care can be provided for families when both Soldier and spouse attend parenting classes or counseling. Respite care will not be used in place of foster care or abandoned children. This program is designed to provide child care relief for families who are stressed because of a family problem and who are participating in treatment programs.

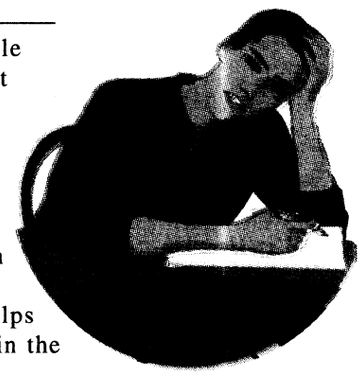
•Safety education for children — The FAP has developed a post-wide safety education program that offers sensible guidance on personal safety and child sexual abuse prevention for children, their parents and youth and child care staff.

This program emphasizes the important supervisory and protective roles of adults and community members who interact with children.

•Community education — Education for the community regarding family violence, the extent and nature of child abuse or neglect and spouse abuse, reporting mechanisms and available services is provided by the FAP. Military community education involves making FAP services known, accessible and attractive to those who can best use the services to improve their family functioning.

This program is designed to promote military community support and to encourage early referral.

•Command education program — Commanders are briefed at all levels on the nature of spouse and child abuse and the means to prevent domestic violence. Information is also provided to the commanders on FAP policies, procedures, available resources, command responsibilities in the areas of identification, reporting, coordination, rehabilitation and administrative or judicial options. Installation commanders will receive a briefing within 45 days of assuming command.



•Foster care — Foster care is a voluntary or court-mandated program for abused and neglected children. It provides 24-hour care and supportive services in a family home or group facility for children who cannot be cared for by their own families and need substitute care. The FAP has a Memorandum of Agreement with the Department of Family and Children Services to provide Foster Care. Families interested in becoming foster care parents may contact their local Department of Family and Child Services.

•Spouse abuse shelters — The FAP contracts with the Russell County Shelter and the Columbus Alliance for Battered Women to provide a 24-hour residential facility or temporary accommodation to ensure there is a safe, temporary place to stay, with emotional and material support to victims of spouse abuse and their children. The shelters also offer counseling, transportation and community services, including legal, medical and financial help to spouses. Individuals may contact the shelters directly — Phenix City at 297-4401 or Columbus at 324-3850 for placement.

Domestic Violence Awareness month begins

Family Advocacy Program

October is Domestic Violence Awareness Month Army-wide. The theme for this year is: "The Power to Prevent Domestic Violence Begins with Me."

According to Rebecca Welch, Family Advocacy Program Manager, if just half of the following statements apply to your personal life then you are abused.

•I am afraid of my partner.

•I cannot express my opinion or my feelings without being afraid of my partner's reaction.

•I always ask my partner for permission to see family or friends, to spend money or buy something.

•I constantly make my children, my environment and myself into what my partner wants to avoid pain.

•I try and try to please my partner only to be criticized again.

•I sometimes feel like I am living with two different people, a Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde.

•I am confused about the difference in the way my partner sees our relationship and the way I see it.

•I am beginning to believe all the terrible things my partner accuses me of and says about me. Sometimes I'm not sure what is real anymore.

"The truth is not always pretty," Welch said. "But the outcome of facing yourself in the light will make you stronger and happier, and mean that you and your family can have a more fulfilling life. Once you face the truth, you can begin to make changes in the way you see yourself and in the way you live."

Welch said that each person in the military community has the responsibility to help make the community safe and to ensure that family members live in a violence-free home. This is a year-round task. October is the launching point for a sustained year-round campaign to end spouse abuse and ensure child abuse and to assure the protection of victims.

"Our emphasis," Welch said, "must be on the prevention of domestic violence and on encouraging family members to seek appropriate supportive and rehabilitative services."

New studies show that domestic violence is not confined to spouse battering.

Children in violent homes are also victims, both of direct abuse and injury and of psychological battering that comes from witnessing violent acts.

"What should awaken all of us is that acts of domestic violence are carried out by the very people who should be making sure that their loved ones are safe and secure," Welch said. "This is a chilling thought, but we should realize that something can be done to turn the tide and end the violence. Each of us can and must take positive action."

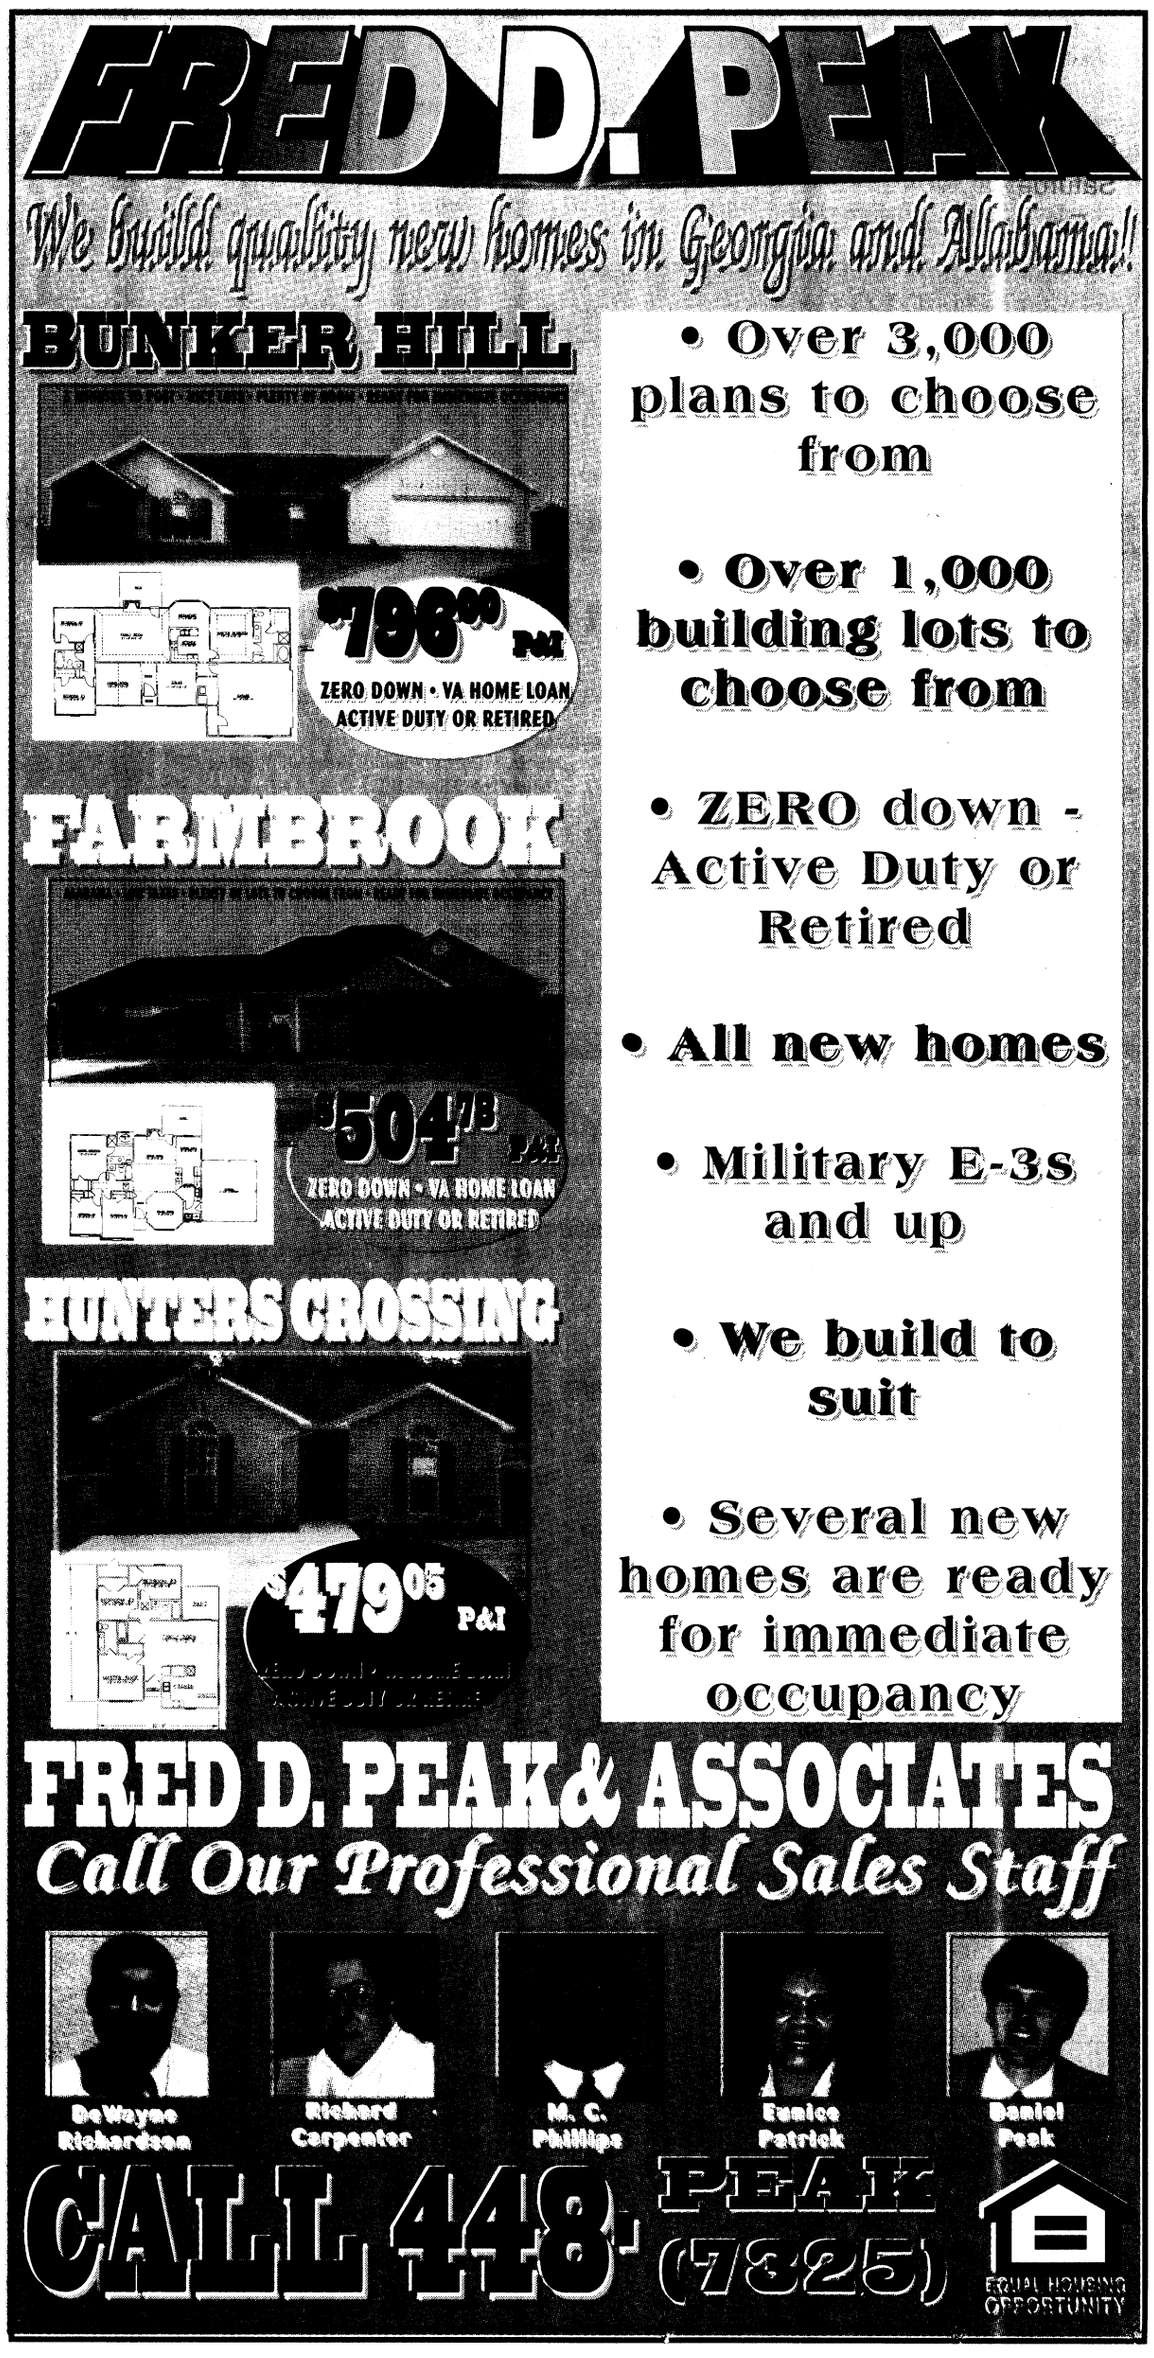
The first step is to take personal responsibility for the safety and security of ourselves and of our loved ones, Welch said.

"Each of us is capable of making our own households violence-free, but personal responsibility extends beyond the walls of our homes, and reaches out to our streets, our shopping centers and our jobs.

"In the military, domestic violence undermines the mission of readiness. In society at large, it undermines the fabric of our communities and of our lives."

Welch said that prevention can happen everywhere, not just at home. It can happen in the media, in the workplace, and in the neighborhoods. All of us need to make the message clear: domestic violence is not tolerated; everyone deserves to be safe and secure. Couples and individuals need to understand that there are options to violence.

"In the military, we have long-standing programs that put special emphasis on domestic violence prevention and intervention," she said. "Here at Fort Benning, we have services available for individuals and couples — Social Work Services and the Chaplains' Family Life Center."



To find out about these services and the Family Advocacy Program as a whole, call Welch at 545-3344.

The Youth Services kicked off its annual football season under rainy skies Sept. 27 at Blue Field with six games in flag and tackle football.

In the 11- to 13-year-old tackle football division, the Steelers started their season with an opening day victory over the Browns 16-0.

The game, played in rain-soaked weather, went into halftime knotted in a scoreless tie, but as the second half opened the Steelers began moving the ball against a tough Browns defense. The Steelers were able to put together two scoring drives capitalizing on Browns mistakes and played solid defense throughout the game to take the victory 16-0.

In the other 11- to 13-year-old divisional game the Cowboys defeated the Vikings 12-0 scoring a touchdown in the first and second half for the victory.

In the 9- to 10-year-old tackle division, the Lions put together a powerful offense and shut the Panthers down on defense en route to a 20-6 victory over the Panthers.

In other 9- to 10-year-old division action the Cowboys put together two scoring drives to outscore the Jaguars 16-6.

In the flag football division, the Packers blanked the Vikings 19-0 and the Cowboys slipped past the Bulldogs 8-0 in a defense dominated game.

The Youth Services continues its fall football schedule Saturday with six games scheduled on Blue Field beginning at 9 a.m.

Soccer season is also underway at French Field with a complete schedule of games beginning at 9 a.m.

For more information on this week's football and soccer schedule, call 545-3070.

Young shooters zero in on bullseye in 22-caliber match

By John W. Peeler
Special to the Bayonet©

Young shooters from the tricommunity area gathered at English Range Sept. 28 to participate in a shooting event designed to be fun and allow young shooting enthusiasts an opportunity to compete against their peers.

In all, more than 15 competitors shot in both iron sight and scope events during the competition.

Eight-year-old John Bass, son of long-time Fort Benning Rifle and Pistol Club member R.A. Bass said his dad had a lot to do with his training and interest in the sport.

"I guess I learned how to shoot at about 3 years old," Bass said.

"My dad comes here a lot and I come with him sometimes."

Bass said this was the first tournament he competed in but would like to see more of this type of tournament for children.

"Competing in tournaments gives me a chance to practice what my dad teaches me," Bass said. "To be safe and respect guns."

Winners at the competition were:

Iron sights 8 years old and younger
Paul White, 90, 1X

Iron sights 9- to 12-years-old
Jep Pound, 129, 1X
Seth Pound, 99, 1X
Andrew Champion, 91, 0X

Golf classic set — The National Multiple Sclerosis Society Georgia Chapter announces a partnership with Cap Gemini, an international consulting firm with its southeastern U.S. divisional offices in Atlanta.

The first annual Cap Gemini Classic Golf Classic is scheduled for Oct. 20 at Eagle's Landing Country Club in McDonough, Ga.,

All tournament proceeds will benefit the research and programs of the National Multiple Sclerosis Society.

The tournament begins with a shotgun start at 12:30 p.m. and ends with a reception and awards ceremony at 7 p.m. Player slots begin at $250 per player, and corporate sponsor-ships are available. Hole sponsorships are also being solicited.

The National Multiple Sclerosis Society works to end the effects of multiple sclerosis. Multiple sclerosis is a chronic disease of the central nervous system. More than 30,000 Georgians are affected by multiple sclerosis. There is no known cause or cure, but there is hope through the MS Society's research.

For information about the Cap Gemini Golf Classic at Eagle's Landing, call Terri Pendergast at (770)-984-9080 or (800)-822-3379 toll free.

Course offers Xpress cars — Georgia's state park golf courses have increased accessibility by purchasing "Golf Xpress" cars for physically challenged golfers. The Xpress cars are designed for a single golfer, providing club and accessory storage, direct access to the green and most sand traps and independence for the user.

The six cars were purchased for $3,500 each — less than the cost of a traditional two passenger cart — from Electric Mobility Corporation in New Jersey and will be located at Victoria Bryant, Gordonia-Alatamaha, Hard Labor Creek, George T. Bagby, Georgia Veterans and Laura S. Walker state parks.

Charges for the Xpress cars are the same rental rate as the regular cars.

Cottonmouths open website — Columbus Cotton-mouths Hockey fans on the web are invited to surf over to the Cottonmouths' web site at www.cottonmouths.com for the latest information on the Snakes. Fans are encouraged to send e-mail to cottonmouths@mindspring.com.

The web site, constructed by Edutrain — a Columbus based training and web design company — includes the 1997-98 schedule, press releases, ticket information and will include comprehensive player information once training camp gets underway. Once the I997-98 season begins, links will be established to websites of other teams around the Central Hockey League.

For more information, call Dan Edutrain at 569-7287.

Cottonmouths report to camp — Cottonmouth players will report to Columbus for training camp Saturday.

The Cottonmouths will play an exhibition to benefit the United Way at the Snake Pit vs. the Macon Whoopee Oct. 10.

Tickets are $8 for the game with one dollar from each ticket going to the United Way.

The regular season begins at 7:30 p.m. Oct. 17 inside the Snake Pit vs. the defending Eastern Division Champion Memphis RiverKings. Season and individual game tickets are on sale now. For ticket information, call the Cottonmouths office at 571-0086.

Army seeks Spirit videos — It's that time of year again — time for the annual Army and Navy football classic. This year the two teams will meet on Dec. 6, at Giants Stadium (Meadowlands, East Rutherford, New Jersey).

Once again, the Armed Forces Press Service is asking for support in providing "Go Army — Beat Navy" spirit videos.

The videos will be used for national broadcast and by the Corps of Cadets during the Army and Navy Spirit Week activities. Videos should be 10-20 seconds on 3/4 inch or Beta Cam tape. Be sure to identify your unit and location; the more action, the better. All videos must be received by Nov. 10.

KNOW YOUR BUILDER

George Woodruff III

Julie Quigley

The Woodruff name has been associated with the home building industry in Columbus for the past 40 years. Our company represents the same high standard instilled by George's grandfather many years ago, in providing people from all walks of life the opportunity of owning a quality home.

It is not our company's goal to build the most homes in a year. It is, however, our goal to deal fairly with our customers and provide them with the best possible house for their money.

We believe one of the miracles of the construction industry is that workers, each skilled in different areas, can work together to create a dream born from a set of blueprints. Our job is to insure that this is done smoothly.

We provide a wide range of services such as mortgage assistance, custom designs and plans, selection of your homesite, decorating assistance and much more. We hope that you will allow us the opportunity of making your dream come true.

Sincerely,

George Woodruff, III

Callaway Gardens welcomes military for Buick Challenge

By Sgt. Marc G. Turchin
Bayonet assistant editor

Soldiers and civilians from across Fort Benning spent Oct. 3 at Callaway Gardens enjoying Military Appreciation Day and various activities within the vacation resort.

The biggest event was the annual Buick Challenge Golf Tournament.

Professional golfers from around the world converged on Callaway as Soldiers took part in and watched.

Soldiers from the Infantry Training Brigade could be seen at almost every hole wearing their Class "B" uniforms. Other Soldiers worked as placard carriers, security and drivers.

Near the garden's beach, units had picnics with hamburgers, hot dogs and chicken. Some Soldiers played beach volleyball and frisbee football while others relaxed and read books on the sands and grass nearby.

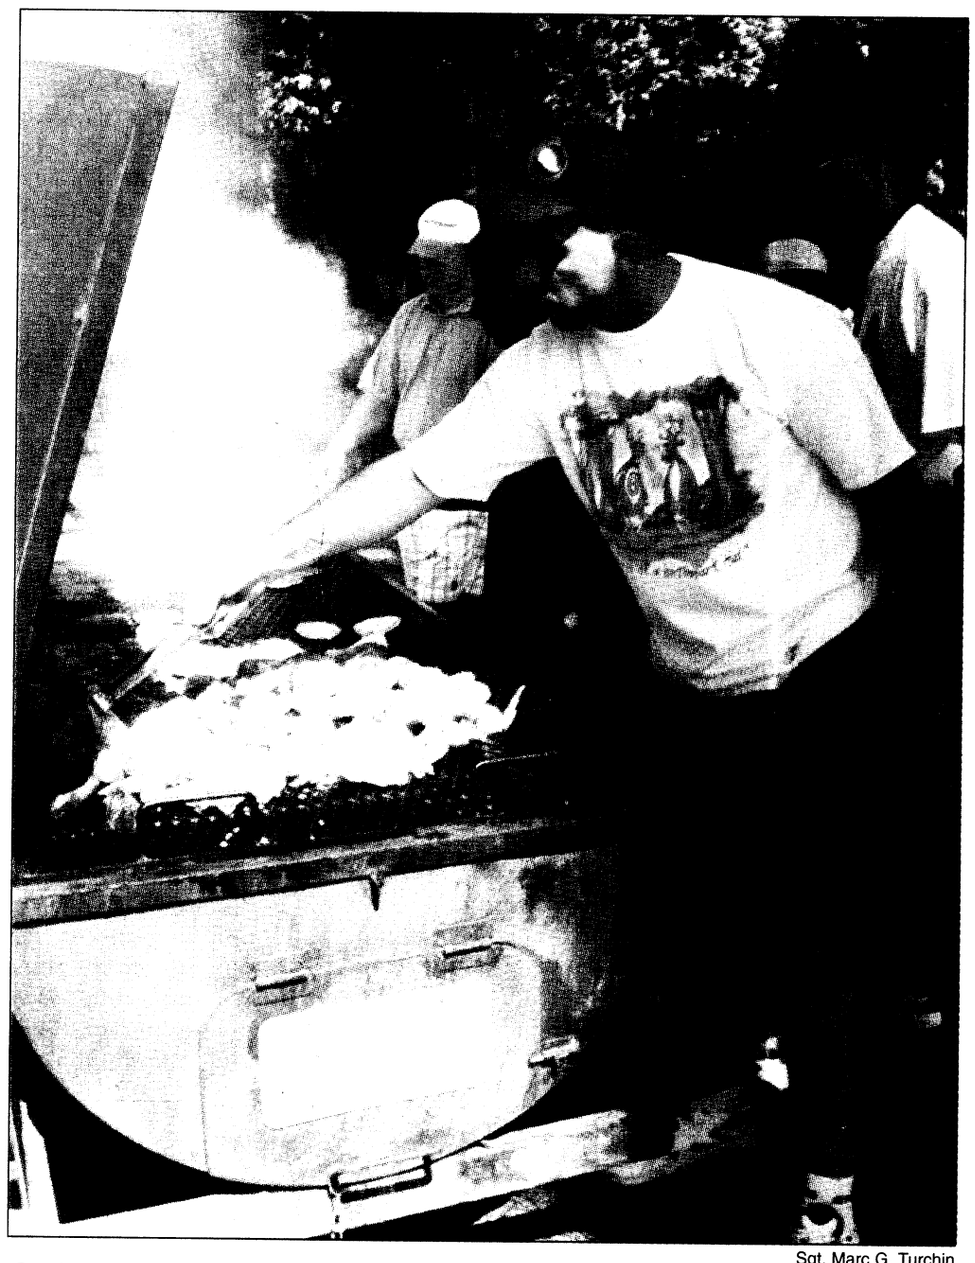
The Association of the U.S. Army conducted a giveaway and Soldiers went home with a variety of prizes.

•Shelby Derby and Kris Leeder won a five-day, four-night Florida vacation.

•Reggie Williams won a two-night cabin rental at Uchee Creek Campgrounds.

•Lou Kapp took home a two-night motel stay at Fort Benning's Destin Recreational Facilities.

•Ben Ford won a $200 savings bond



•Custer Williams and Jason Keough won a Jane's Combat Simulation CD-ROM.

•T. Aliiua won a three-month membership to the Follow Me Golf Course.

•Curtis Williams took home a $100 savings bond.

Garrison Commander Col. Byron Greene pulled the winners names out of the box.

Davis Love III won the tournament with a score of -21 under par.

CFC kicks off

By Sgt. Marc G. Turchin
Bayonet assistant editor

Every year federal employees and Soldiers are given an opportunity to donate money to charities and organizations that desperately need funds to continue to support communities both locally and nationally.

The annual Combined Federal Campaign (CFC) kick-off begins at 4 p.m. today at the Officers' Club in conjunction with a Bosses Night at the Supper Club, of the post's Officers' Club. The campaign runs until Nov. 21.

The campaign is designed to allow federal employees an easy way to give to charities of their choice, said Chuck Walls, garrison executive officer.

Each unit will have a representative responsible for collecting the donations from it's Soldiers. The same goes for Department of Defense civilians — one person will be the key person to accept donations.

As in past years, a booklet will accompany the donation form explaining how CFC works and the charities accepting donations.

Fort Benning's number code, like last year, is 9001.

The 9001 fund puts money back into the post through the Fort Benning Soldier and Family Support Association.

Organizations on post that benefit from this fund include Santa's Castle, Army Community Service and the post's Red Cross.

"This fund keeps us doing the great things we do here all year," Walls said.

This year's campaign also offers a variety of organizations in the local area to give to. The numbers 9001 to 9045 are all local charities. They include The United Way, Urban League, Big Brothers, Big Sisters and Food Bank.

Community members can donate to any of these or any national organization by check, payroll deduction or by cash contribution.

This year's goal is the same as last year's — $500,000.

Walls is confident the post will exceed the $500,000 goal.

"We want to promote participation, not just the dollar amount," he said.

Army to court-martial McKinney

Army News Service

WASHINGTON — The sexual-misconduct case of the Army's highest-ranking enlisted man was referred for court martial by the commanding general of the U.S. Army Military District of Washington, Thursday.

In referring the case of Sgt. Maj. of the Army Gene C. McKinney to trial, Maj. Gen. Robert F. Foley dismissed two of three specifications.

McKinney now faces 20 specifications resulting from allegations made by six female service members. He faces a maximum of 56 years confinement if convicted of all charges.

According to MDW officials, Foley reviewed the Article 32 report of investigation and received recommendations from the investigating officer, the appointing authority and MDW's staff judge advocate.

The appointing authority, Col. Owen C. Powell, made his recommendations to Foley Oct. 1, after reviewing the Article 32 investigation. Powell is the garrison commander at Fort Myer, Va. In May, Powell appointed Col. Robert L. Jarvis, MDW's deputy chief of staff for logistics, to preside over the Article 32 "pretrial" investigation of the charges.

Jarvis' investigation included a 27-day hearing that began June 25 and featured more than 50 witnesses. Jarvis reviewed more than 6,000 pages of testimony and evidence in deciding his recommendations.

The two specifications dismissed by Foley involved retired Sgt. Maj. Brenda Hoster's allegation that McKinney hit her with a pillow during a trip to Fort Bragg, N.C. Dismissal was based on recommendation of Powell and Jarvis, who said there is not enough evidence to support the charges.

Hoster's more serious allegation of indecent assault by McKinney during a TDY trip in Hawaii remains among the charges against him.

Respect: Soldiers esteem for one another could be better

By Spc. Clyde Snively
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Rodney Dangerfield gets no respect. I wonder why. Perhaps because respect needs to be earned.

commentary

A Soldier will respect the stripes an NCO wears, the bars, leaves and stars officers wear, but if the person under those stripes, bars, leaves and stars doesn't live up to that Soldier's expectations, then the Soldier will not respect him or her.

How does one earn respect.

Leaders earn respect by walking a mile in their Soldiers' combat boots.

Leaders need to experience the cold, the mud, the heat, the deprivation of their Soldiers. They need to be just as proficient at a task as the Soldier.

The Bradley Fighting Vehicle commander who can't perform a pre-ops check on his vehicle isn't going to get his track driver's respect and more than likely the driver won't perform the checks because he'll know his commander won't know the difference.

Soon the commander has a disabled track and a battle is lost — "for want of a nail a shoe was lost, for want of a shoe a horse was lost ..."

However, a leader can do all of the above and still get no respect.

Respect is a two-way street.

A leader must respect his Soldiers. Respect them as Soldiers and respect them as human beings.

An NCO or officer who constantly berates and belittles Soldiers under him is sending a clear message: he doesn't respect them, has no use for them.

Guess where that leader will be when the hot breath of battle is blowing in his face. He'll be alone because no Soldier is going to want to follow him.

Sure, it's the duty of leaders to correct and counsel subordinates when they go astray. But they can do it with dignity and equanimity.

A leader who thinks the way to motivate Soldiers is to constantly swear at them may get some short term results, but in the long run he'll lose not only the Soldier he is cussing out, but the others who witness it.

Swearers are just like Rodney Dangerfield, they get no respect.

Instead, the leader should heed the old adage: "praise in public, counsel in private."

And when he's counseling, he needs to understand that it's another human being, another Soldier, just like him, who he's talking to.

Pursuing higher learning could pay off in long run

By Dov Schwartz
USAIC Public Affairs Office

The sergeant first class waited eagerly for the E-8 list to be published. He had climbed the NCO ranks quickly and was confident of promotion.

commentary

He was wrong.

Despite high marks for his soldiering ability, his career ended because he did not have the higher education the Army looks for in its senior NCOs.

Having higher education on one's record is worthwhile. It makes Soldiers more competitive for promotion and increases one's lifetime income-earning potential.

Soldiers receive up to 100 promotion points during their careers on a one-point for-one-semester hour basis. Soldiers not only benefit from increased knowledge and the feeling of accomplishment that comes with completing a course, but they can get promoted faster too.

Higher education can also help when a Soldier leaves the Army and enters the civilian job market.

Employers appreciate military experience and know-how. However, better jobs often require at least a bachelor's degree. An education specialist said, an academic degree along with the experience and maturity level gained from life in the military will give an applicant a leg-up on job placement.

Even though education is stressed throughout the Army because of how it helps Soldiers earn promotion points and in their after-Army careers, many Soldiers are not pursuing higher education.

The Army and posts' learning centers are determined to turn that around.

The Army offers many traditional and nontraditional ways for active-duty Soldiers to get an education.

Traditionally, Soldiers went to classes in the evenings, during lunch and on the weekends to get their degrees.

But lack of time, class cost and a perceived lack of benefit in pursuing additional education has kept the number of participating Soldiers down.

The Army understands with early morning physical training and jobs that run late, it is difficult to find the time to go to class.

Because of Soldiers' tight schedules, the Army has invested a lot of money into nontraditional educational programs, including correspondence courses and courses taken over the Internet. These programs go a long way toward accommodating Soldiers' busy schedules by enabling them to "attend class" when they want.

Soldiers who are hesitant about taking classes because of frequent deployments or an upcoming PCS can literally take the classes on the road with them and do their school work from anywhere in the world. Or, they can apply for an extension until they are able to complete the course when they return.

Soldiers can also receive at least 15 college credits for their MOS training. That's one-quarter of the way toward an associate's degree without entering a classroom.

In addition, the Army offers Soldiers the opportunity to take tests for academic credit based on what they learned through life experience.

All of these programs are time-flexible and enable Soldiers to earn college credit without setting foot in a college classroom.

The average class takes about six months to complete. It usually takes four years to earn an associate's degree. A bachelor's degree could take eight years. But completion time depends on how many credits a Soldier qualifies for based on his MOS and life experience and how many courses a semester a Soldier wants to take. For many Soldiers, an associate's degree might be right around the corner.

The Department of Defense spent more than $100 million in tuition assistance for service members last year. Tuition assistance pays up to 75 percent of a course cost, not including books. Pursuing higher education while in the service might be the best bargain you ever receive.

To those of you pursuing higher education, I say a resounding Hooah!! To those Soldiers who are not, I strongly urge you to explore higher education through nontraditional means by stopping by the Learning Center located at 2602 Soldier's Plaza or by calling 545-6105 for an appointment.

letter

Not a week goes by that an Infantry School instructor doesn't ask me to give his students a "good ride," in my UH-60 helicopter.

His definition of a "good ride," is one where the students get off the aircraft covered in their own buddies' vomit.

Most people don't realize how dangerous it is to encourage an aviator to demonstrate the extent of his flying skills or lack thereof.

Most aviators I know are disciplined enough to politely refuse the request, but there are some who will take it as a personal challenge. Unfortunately, a slight miscalculation can have disastrous and everlasting consequences.

I suspect that may have been the case in the recent UH-60 accident at another installation. While the results of the accident investigation board have not yet been released, the September Flightfax printed this synopsis: "Aircraft was seen flying low and fast into a hard, right, banking turn prior to striking trees. Eight fatalities."

Was the pilot hot dogging? We may never know for sure. What we do know is 80 percent of all aviation mishaps are caused by human error.

We also know there are many good Soldiers dead today because a pilot exceeded his limitations and crashed his aircraft. The next time you ask a pilot for a "good ride," be sure you know what you're asking for. I'm sure the passengers of the blackhawk were having a great time up until the point where they hit the trees and crashed.

545-boss

Dial 545-Boss is the commander's action line for Soldiers, family members and civilians to call when they have problems or complaints that can't be resolved elsewhere.

While it is not a substitute for the chain of command or for agencies established to provide assistance, the line offers another means of communication between Fort Benning's community and commanders.

The Bayonet features some of the calls that may benefit other members of the Fort Benning community.

Call: The caller would like to see the traffic lights at the intersections of Anderson Avenue and Martin Street, Wold Avenue, and Ingersoll and Custer Roads, and Benning Drive adjusted. He said the light for left turn should not come on if no one is in the lane.

Directorate of Public Works response: The chief, Utilities Branch, DPW, informed the caller that the Electrical Shop investigated the problems at the intersections identified and discovered the traffic sensors in the pavement were damaged and didn't properly detect the presence of vehicles. The sensors were replaced and are operational.

Veterans dedicate monument

Col. Charles Moldenhauer, senior Army advisor, 70th Regional Support Command, Fort Lawton, Wash., addresses the audience during the monument dedication on Sacrifice Field Monday.

The 70th Division saw 86 consecutive days of combat, liberated 58 cities in France and captured hundreds of prisoners while attacking through the Czar land.

A monument was dedicated to these Soldiers of the 70th Infantry Division Monday at Sacrifice Field.

"The 70th Division earned it's place in history through courage, determination, and a willingness to sacrifice," said Lt. Gen. Tommy Lee Franks, commander of the 3rd Army. "I think it's appropriate and entirely fitting that we dedicate this memorial on Sacrifice Field."

He said to the former Soldiers, "You grew up in the midst of the worst depression in history. Hard times and uncertainties were the staples of your youth. As young men you faced a war to decide the fate of humanity. There was no doubt then as to the justice of your cause. The war you represent here today was totaled. It was unbelievably violent; in fact, it was winner take all."

Gen. George S. Blanchard, who was Commander of Company C, 274th Infantry Division during World War II, said the 70th Division played an important part in Hitler's "Last Gasp."

"The Germans created a large gap in the Allied lines and were pouring through. They had to be stopped. We were available. We should all be extremely proud of our combat services."

He spoke of the dedication ceremony at Spicheren Heights in France, where the original monument is located. It was given to the 70th Division by the people of France.

"It was 1995 and I was privileged to attend. This lady said 'You, sir, have no idea of the tremendous impact of your Trailblazers, of your Soldiers here. They saved my life, that of my family, those of my villagers and my country.' Is it any wonder that you and I are so proud to be Trailblazers?"

Charles Kelly, monument project chairman, and Frank Ellis, publicity chairman, then dedicated the monument to the Department of the Army and Post Commanding General Maj. Gen. Carl F. Ernst, who accepted the monument.

Ernst said, "Let me tell you what this monument means to Fort Benning — 3,945 casualties of this division over it's 86 days of combat — 3,945, 835 died in action. All of you have scars, either on your body or in your mind and in your heart. That trail, which you blazed, will forever be a pathway for the Infantrymen who follow you. All of the Infantry who pass through Fort Benning will be inspired by your trail. I thank you for the honor you have bestowed on this installation."

Ernst then presented Blanchard with the Order of St. Maurice on behalf of the Infantry Association.

A wreath was then laid on the monument, and the echo of Taps and the Division song was played.

Henry Clarke, who was with the Anti-tank of the 274th Infantry Division, said the dedication was "wonderful, just special. It's a great camaraderie of everybody. It's like visiting cousins."

HAMMER AWARD

Post marches toward excellence

By Staff Sgt. Lori Egan
Bayonet editor

In an attempt to recognize improvement in the way government does business, Vice President Al Gore established the Hammer Award.

The Hammer Award was developed in response to the time when government spent $600 for a hammer, according to Janie Herring, management assistant, Directorate of Resource Management.

The purpose of the award is to recognize organizations that have made significant contributions in support of the president's National Performance Review (NPR) principles.

The principles of the award are putting customers first, cutting red tape, empowering employees and getting back to basics, Herring said.

The award recognizes new standards of excellence achieved by teams — not individuals helping to reinvent government, she said.

The award consists of a $6 hammer, a little ribbon and a card from the vice president — all in an aluminum frame.

According to Herring, NPR presented 722 awards since 1994. The Department of Defense received 148 and the Department of the Army received 35.

The first award went to the Veterans Administration's New York Regional Office in March 1994. Employees in the office were recognized for streamlining the benefits office and improving how they process veterans' claims.

There is no limited, annual window of opportunity for nominations, Herring said.

Fort Benning recipients of the Hammer Award will be presented with the award at the quarterly Commanding General's Two-Star Excellence Breakfast, Herring said.

Nominations can be submitted to the Directorate of Resource Management, Quality Management Division.

Uptown Jam set

By Erin A. Nash
Special to the Bayonet©

The Uptown Jam is coming to Columbus. The event is Saturday and Sunday in uptown Columbus, from the Riverwalk area to First Avenue.

According to Peggy Griswold, marketing director for the Uptown Jam, the Jam is one of the biggest music festivals in the region.

There are more than 70 acts scheduled to appear, including the Commodores and Diamond Rio, who won vocal group of the year at the recent Country Music Awards.

There will also be performances by regional and area bands.

For those wanting to take a break from the music, Bama Sports Marketing is sponsoring a sports bar venue, where one can sit and watch college and professional football games.

The Ronald McDonald House is sponsoring a duck race on the Chattahoochee at 4:00 p.m. Oct. 12.

The race is a quarter-mile long with approximately 10,000 rubber ducks competing for prizes. A donation of $5 adopts a duck. First prize is a 1997 Ford Mustang.

A fireworks show is planned Saturday to start about 10 p.m., followed by the Commodores.

Tickets are $7 for a weekend pass and $5 per day. Those with a military identification card receive $1 off admission. Children under 12 are admitted free.

Tickets may be purchased at the gate or at local Spectrum stores.

For more information, call the Uptown Columbus office at 596-0111.

SMA: Court-martial set

Until he was suspended from his duties Feb. 10, McKinney was senior enlisted advisor to Army Chief of Staff Gen. Dennis Reimer. Reimer suspended McKinney shortly after the allegations were made.

The court-martial will be held at Fort Belvoir, Va., an Army installation under the command of the U.S. Army Military District of Washington.

A date has not been set for McKinney's court-martial. Officials indicated trial counsel will request that a pretrial session be held immediately for the purpose of conducting an arraignment.

Retiree Open House set for Oct 24-25

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Retired military and family members from all branches of the military are invited to an Open House Oct. 24-25.

Physical examinations at Martin Army Community Hospital's Physical Examination Section, Building 323, are available for both men and women beginning at 8 a.m. Oct. 24.

Breakfast is from 7 to 8:30 a.m. Oct. 25 in the Infantry Hall cafeteria, followed by registration at Marshall Auditorium.

A health fair, sponsored by Preventive Maintenance Care Section of Martin Army Community Hospital update retirees on health care and benefits at 11:15 a.m.

Preregistration is going on now. For more information, call Staff Sgt. William Boynton at Retirement Services at 545-2541.

Clinton authorizes federal pay raise

By Douglas J. Gillert
American Forces Press Service

WASHINGTON — President Clinton authorized a 2.3 percent federal pay raise nationwide and an average locality increase of .5 percent.

Civil Service employees under the General Schedule pay system will receive at least a 2.3 percent pay raise Jan. 1. Depending on where they work, they may receive an additional locality pay adjustment.

Executive Schedule, Senior Executive Service and Federal Wage System employees receive increases based on other provisions of law, according to the Office of Personnel Management. Decisions on 1998 pay increases for those plans will be made later this year.

By law, General Schedule employees could have received a higher locality adjustment. However, Title 5 of the U.S. Code, which authorizes locality adjustments, also allows the president to present Congress an alternative plan consistent with budget constraints and "economic conditions affecting the general welfare."

Thirty-one metropolitan areas in the United States qualify for locality increases designed to narrow the gap between federal pay and salaries paid by private sector employers in those areas. Two areas, Hartford, Conn., and Orlando, Fla., were added this year.

More information on civilian pay can be found on the Office of Personnel Management's home page at http://www.opm.gov.

Latin American cadets leave US with Soldier knowledge

By Spc. Alberto Betancourt
SOA Public Affairs Office

Moving at a frantic pace from the moment they got off the plane, 136 Chilean cadets completed the U.S. Army School of the Americas' (SOA) Cadet Combined Arms Course, Oct. 1.

"There was no crawl-walk phase; its been running all the way," Capt. Fernando Rodriguez, commander of SOA's Detachment 1, Company B said, describing the course, which started Sept. 21. "They only got eight hours of freedom during the entire 10-day course."

He said the course's goal was for the cadets to get a better feeling of American technology and doctrine.

"In speaking with their cadre, lieutenants and cadets, they now have a better appreciation of what it takes and what we are able to do," he said.

The cadets encountered many training tasks including weapons familiarization, land navigation, demolition, patrolling techniques, air mobile operations, the Leadership Reaction Course (LRC) and a 24-hour field training exercise, with limited or no rest, that ended with a four-and-a-half-mile road march.

The cadets also visited several of Fort Benning's battle simulation centers that feature night fighting, mounted and dismounted tactics.

"My NCO's made this fast-paced course a success," Rodriguez said. "Their initiative, forethought, planning and execution made it all happen."

One of the most challenging tasks the cadets encountered during the course was the two-day LRC.

Staff Sgt. Anthony Lugo, NCOIC at the course, said the LRC developed the cadets' leadership skills through obstacles that challenged their creativity, while sharpening their coordination and reconnaissance skills. He said there were 10 stations consisting of everything from a prisoner of war camp to water obstacles.

"Each cadet squad had three minutes, after receiving their mission, at their specific obstacle to inspect their equipment and figure out how they were going to negotiate the obstacle successfully," Lugo said. "At the end of the three minutes, they were given 12 minutes to accomplish the obstacle."

Because of poor weather, the cadets only tackled eight obstacles. However, the limitation did not hinder the motivational teamwork the Chileans showed as they cheered each other on.

"They did exceptionally well," Lugo said. "For a group like this who said they do more classroom work than tactical, they did great. It was very impressive to see them work as a team."

For the Chileans, the course not only provided good training opportunities, but also a chance to interact with other Latin American countries' servicemen.

"The course was very interesting," said Capt. Sergio Ahumada, company commander, Military Academy of Chile. "It was tailored for what these fourth-year cadets needed. It enhanced their military experience. However, it was also a phenomenal opportunity for them to share ideas with American and Latin American service members."

"I'm very pleased with the training we received, especially with the short time allotted to give it," Ahumada said. "It was very thorough. I was especially impressed with the technological familiarization, because we don't have that ability in Chile."

Most of the cadets agreed the technology they witnessed during the course was their favorite part of the training.

"I really liked the Bradley Fighting Vehicle and tank simulators," Ricardo Kaiser, one of the 136 cadets said. "This simulator is an excellent training tool."

He said the training provided everything they expected and more. "The multiple integrated laser engagement system (MILES) was very impressive," Kaiser said. "We didn't expect to actually train with this high-tech equipment. It was also an excellent training tool."

The MILES gear simulates bullets by using a laser system.

He said all the training left a lasting imprint they would take back to Chile. However, the one thing he was never going to forget was Georgia's heat.

"We don't have this kind of hot humidity in Chile," he said. "It took me a few days to adjust to this weather."

Kaiser said he and the other cadets were very pleased with the treatment they received while attending the course. "It was a lot of fun," he said.

Since 1946, the U.S. Army School of the Americas has trained nearly 59,000 Latin American military, policemen and civilians from 22 nations. Its doctrine mirrors other U.S. Army curricula, but all instruction is provided in Spanish.

IOBC: New officers learn,conduct Infantry survival tactics

"Incoming" seemed to be the word the new Soldiers of Company B, 2nd Battalion (Infantry Officers' Basic Course), (IOBC) 11th Infantry Regiment, heard the as they participated in their second field problem at Garnsey Range.

The purpose of this field exercise was to test and evaluate the new Soldiers on their ability to write and execute a squad situational training exercise (STX) as well as conduct an after action review (AAR).

Before heading out to the field, the students received a block of instruction that covered the writing and importance of a STX. After the block of instruction the students were required to write their own STX and fill out a safety matrix for the respective lane they would evaluate.

In order to write a STX, the students became familiar with the manuals of their trade, which include reviewing the Army Training and Evaluation Program (ARTEP) requirements. From these manuals the students listed the individual, collective and leadership tasks on which each student evaluator determined his squad needed to train.

The students traveled to Garnsey Range, where they got the opportunity to put what they learned into practice.

Upon arrival, the students moved to the lane they would evaluate. There they were briefed by their evaluators on how their respective lanes would be run.

The next day, the lieutenants broke down into squads and moved to their first lane. The students rotated, round robin style, through nine different stations, which included a live-fire squad battle drill attack and point ambush, react to contact and break contact, react to ambush, cross a danger area, knock out a bunker, breach a wire mined obstacle and clear a trench. Each squad rotated through three to four stations each day.

"It's important that the lieutenants take this training seriously," said one of the range officials. "Things that they thought was funny out here can get people killed once they get to their platoons."

Once a squad arrived at a lane, the student platoon leader designated a squad leader to conduct the mission. The platoon leader briefed his squad leaders on the upcoming mission. The platoon leader then evaluated the squad on the tasks he had designated as those most critical to the mission.

After the mission, the platoon leader conducted an after action review and simultaneously evaluated himself on how he conducted the review.

"The three things I would like to see lieutenants take away from the STX are the proper procedures for writing and executing an STX, battle drills and understanding and knowing the importance of an after action review," said another range official.

Upon completing their final lane, students conducted a police call and moved back to their respective assembly areas. The next day they cleaned weapons and conducted recovery operations then moved back to the company area. Company B is in their sixth week of training.

Golden Knights retain world championship

Army team extends record to 12 straight years as top freefall team in the world

By Staff Sgts. Ken Kassens and Keith Richardson
Army News Service

FORT BRAGG, N.C. — Things to do: 1) Break four world records; 2) Capture the gold medal; 3) Win the world championship for a sixth consecutive time. This is a laundry list for success, Golden-Knight style.

Members of the U.S. Army Parachute Team, The Golden Knights, placed first at the World Formation Skydiving Championships Sept. 14-19 in Efes, Turkey.

Representing the United States, the Golden Knights Free-Fall Formation Team beat out teams from Russia, France, Germany and several other European nations to capture the gold medal in the biennial event. The victory makes the Knights the reigning world champions for an unprecedented 12 years.

"I had complete confidence in my team going into this meet," said 27-year-old Sgt. 1st Class John Hoover. "I was not really nervous about losing. I wanted to make the Army look as good as possible."

The quest for the Knight's sixth world championship began two years ago, when the team replaced several veteran team members.

Sgt. 1st Class Charles Brown, 37, the assistant team leader, said every team eventually needs new members to rejuvenate the program. Soldiers selected to join the team are held to high standards, Brown said, and high standards are the reason for the Knight's success.

Team members average 800 jumps a year while undergoing a comprehensive training program tailored for skydiving that is designed to keep them in top physical condition.

This year, the Knights parlayed a mixture of old and new "blood" and experience into a championship.

The Knights set a new world record for points in competition with 224, outscoring their closest competitor, the Russian team, by 53 points. The Knights earned the best average for 10 rounds of competition with 22.40 and they broke their own world record of 25, which they set in 1995, by scoring 30 points in the fourth round. Later, in round eight, the Knights did themselves one point better, scoring 31 points.

Staff Sgt. Carey Mills, 29, said he initially had "butterflies" going into the first round. After that, he said, his confidence returned.

"You train all year hoping it will come together at this meet, and it did," Mills said. "Everyone on our team skydived better (during the competition) than they have during their entire lives. It all came together.

"The great thing about this meet was we were competing against ourselves, and we did it."

In formation skydiving, eight jumpers exit the aircraft simultaneously with a free-fall videographer filming movements and formations from above. The skydivers form geometric formations by holding grips sewn into the sides of their jumpsuits. Once one formation has been completed, they release the grips and arrange the next formation.

The skydivers have less than a minute to complete the predetermined formations. After four or five pre-determined formations have been formed, they return to the first formation and repeat the cycle. One point is awarded for every successfully completed formation.

Formation skydiving has grown considerably in popularity in recent years among skydivers, especially those in European countries.

Although not as well-recognized to the public as sky surfing or freestyle, formation skydiving has gained huge interest. Teams from 38 countries entered this year's competition.

The Golden Knights will travel to Perris, Calif., to defend their national title at the U.S. National Skydiving Championship, which is Monday through Oct. 17.

New program allows service members more air time

By Douglas J. Gillert
American Forces Press Service

RANDOLPH AIR FORCE BASE, Texas — Navy Lt. Dave Huntley guided the Air Force T-43A twin-engine jet 35,000 feet above the New Mexico desert. With nearly a dozen navigators aft, there was no chance he'd get lost.

"They sometimes give me the wrong coordinates or ask me to make a wrong turn, but we know this route by heart, anyway," Huntley said. Relaxed, he likened his part in the Joint Undergraduate Navigator Training mission to driving a bus. "But it's good duty, especially for naval officers," he quickly added.

Seven Navy and 28 Air Force pilots share the task of taking aloft navigator students from the Air Force, Navy and Marine Corps. Experienced instructors, also a mix from the different services, let the students make mistakes and even allow the mission to veer off course. As a result, Huntley and the other pilots sometimes fly in zigzag patterns.

Up to 12 students sit at identical navigator stations in the aircrafts main cabin. Three have real responsibility for directing the flight path, while the others just try to chart the flight. During the four- to five-hour missions, the T-43A is literally a classroom in the sky.

Besides U.S. students, the program also trains international students, mostly from NATO countries, explained Lt. Col. Tom Andersen, 562nd Flying Training Squadron commander. Those who graduate from the difficult, challenging school serve as navigators or naval flight officers aboard multi-engine aircraft.

Each class of some 210 students spends five to six months with the 562nd, the middle leg of navigator training. Before arriving here, they complete primary training at Naval Air Station Pensacola, Fla. After winning their wings at Randolph, they head to various locations for additional training on the type of aircraft they will navigate. All told, they've been in training some 18 months by the time they're mission-qualified.

Adjacent to the Air Force-Navy squadron, the Marine Aerial Navigation School prepares enlisted Marines for navigator duty on the Corps' C-130 aircraft. The Marines use Air Force equipment but have their own course syllabus.

Although they're training for flight positions, navigator students spend most of their time here simulating the experience.

"Seventy percent of training is done in simulators," Andersen said. "We take them up in the T-43 mostly to give them 'air sense,' so they know the feeling of flight and the movements they cause by the directions they give the pilot."

The simulators have the advantage of giving each student total control of a mission. On the downside, Andersen said, the conditions simulated are too perfect.

"The aircraft provides a lot of situational awareness they don't get on the simulator," he said.

Navigator training hasn't changed much over the years, Andersen said. The T-43, a modified Boeing 737 transport, has been in use since 1973. The students still learn both instrument and celestial navigation. And the instructors continue to be at the core of successful training.

"We have only a two percent wash-out rate here, compared to 8 percent in other programs," Andersen said. "A lot of that is due to the quality of our instructors, who can take even a marginal student and produce a good navigator."

Soldiers conduct mortar fire missions at Coolridge Range as part of BNCOC.

NCOs tackle mortars at school

By Sgt. 1st Class Larry Lane
USAIC Public Affairs Office NCOIC

A loud and thunderous boom shook Coolridge Range as the 81 mm mortar fired and went down range on a high arc. The round struck near armored vehicle targets, sending smoke and dust up in a cloud. Not close enough, the Soldiers knew and the fire direction control (FDC) gave the team adjustments for elevation.

The team fired another mortar, this time landing in the middle of the clustered targets. Fragments might have damaged the vehicles and if dismounted troops were outside the tracks, they wouldn't have been very happy.

"Three rounds. Fire for effect," the FDC ordered and the team sent three more rounds raining down on the targets in the same zeroed-in spot. The team had five rounds to hit the target. As part of the NCO Academy's BNCOC, this mortar fire training familiarizes indirect fire Infantryman with the job of the FDC.

From appearances, the mortar hasn't changed much in design over the years and it is still an effective weapon system, said Sgt. 1st Class Robert Jackson, senior instructor.

The weapon's killing radius and maximum range increased, he said, and a computer is used instead of a plotting board. In BNCOC, Soldiers still learn how to use the plotting board, an essential tool that's not dependent on a power supply in order to function.

"In the classroom, we prepare them for skill level three tasks, to be section sergeants and platoon sergeants," Jackson said. "At this level here, we go right through the basics of what they should be showing their Soldiers in their squads."

On a regular fire mission, a forward observer (FO) will identify a potential target and relay this information to the FDC. The FDC will compute the information and plot a position to be hit with mortars. This information is passed to the gunners who make the appropriate adjustments and fire a round at the target. The FO sends the results back to the FDC who gives feedback to the gunners. The gunners adjust again until they are on target. This process of firing should take less than three minutes.

"The big thing for us is to learn how to use the plotting board," said Sgt. Michael Bocanegra, 82nd Airborne, Fort Bragg, N.C. "If the computers go down, its what you have to use, but we generally don't get much hands on training with that. That's where you're plotting the rounds, where they're supposed to be landing. There's a lot more responsibility."

Bocanegra, a section sergeant back at Fort Bragg, said his squad works with the lighter 60 mm mortar system and he hadn't used the 81 mm in about five years. The 60 mm is generally jumped in and carried compared to the 81mm which is airdropped as a door bundle and loaded into a humvee.

Sgt. Charles Brandon, a mortar section sergeant with the 82nd Airborne Division, learned about the role of the FDC and how to use the plotting board.

"A lot of us younger guys who are fast-tracking don't have the opportunity to get trained on it (the plotting board)," Brandon said. "Sometimes, the senior guys want to keep the knowledge to themselves. I've picked up a lot of techniques from different guys. Some of them work better, others don't."

Learning range estimation was a tough task for Sgt. Donald Cowin, 325th Airborne Infantry Regiment, Fort Bragg.

"The squad leader is the range estimation; it's always different, the terrain fluctuates," Cowin said. "It's pretty much range guesstimation. If you guess wrong on the range, it can mess the whole mission up."

The mortar system is also capable of lighting up the battlefield with illumination rounds. Cowin said the mortar is a flexible weapon, complementing artillery units on the battlefield.

"Mortars shoot at a high angle and artillery shoots straight. We can fire in cities between tall buildings. We can fire on slopes and hills."

The teams train to the standards of the Army Training and Evaluation Program (ARTEP), which is five rounds to hit the target, said Sgt. John Trowbridge, a section sergeant at Fort Drum, N.Y.

"It's two minutes for the initial round and 30 seconds thereafter for adjustments, as few rounds as possible," Trowbridge said. "Army standard is five rounds, but good gunners can do it in three."

Schools: Aviators get off ground

four years before coming to the schoolhouse, Andersen said. Here, they go through preparatory training and check rides before qualifying to teach. It's choice duty, said Cmdr. Ed O'Callaghan, squadron operations officer. He rattled off benefits such as regular duty hours, more time with family and the chance to earn advanced degrees as some reasons many volunteer for the three-year assignment.

But the students are also a big reason for coming here to teach, O'Callaghan added.

"The students are very enthusiastic, and we have a chance not only to prepare them to be good navigators but good officers, as well.

"All the instructors here, from the commander on down, are accessible to the students," he said. "They can come to us anytime, and we will talk to them about our experiences in uniform and what they can expect after they leave here. We really have a great chance to shape them."

The students learn about six weeks before graduation where they'll first serve as full-fledged navigators.

"They have choices," he said. "The school receives lists of openings from the services, from which students select the aircraft they want to serve on and assignment

"Most students are able to get the aircraft and mission they want, but sometimes they have to make an alternate selection. That's when we award selection based on academic order of merit," O'Callaghan said.

From the day they arrive at Randolph, student navigators walk daily past a plaque in a squadron hallway.

Rows of shiny Air Force silver and Navy gold wings with a student's name under each wing adorn the plaque. The Marines have a similar plaque in their training area.

"Seeing their name under a set of wings is an incentive to excel and a reminder of why they're here," O'Callaghan said. "It helps them keep focused and get through the tough times."

"The school was more difficult than I thought it would be," said 1st Lt. Glenn King, a day before his Aug. 15 graduation ceremony. King can look back on 105 training days at Randolph, during which he completed 336 academic hours of training and education, more than 20 simulator missions and 14 flights.

Along the way, he had to pass timed tests to show he'd learned such navigation basics as weather tracking and avoidance, computer operations, radar procedures and global navigation.

With all that behind him now, he looked forward to rejoining his Tennessee Air National Guard unit, the 118th Airlift Wing in Nashville.

"I'm excited about getting to the unit and doing missions," King said. "We have aircraft and crews all over the world, and for the first couple of years, I will fly a lot."

Before he gets to Nashville, however, King has to complete C-130 navigator training at Little Rock Air Force Base, Ark. But now, he'll have his wings.

Former Soldiers leave legacy in unit

By Capt David L. Harris
29th Infantry Regiment

During the 29th Infantry Regimental Association Reunion, Harold Gamble and Gordon Delashmet, were recognized and awarded the "Distinguished Members of the 29th Infantry Regiment."

Gamble, a former staff sergeant, entered the Navy during World War II and served as Marine Corps medic during the Okinawa Campaign. Gamble continued his military service as an Army medic in the 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment.

When the regiment deployed from Okinawa to Korea, Gamble became the senior enlisted medic in the battalion.

Gamble's combat experience included action at China Pass, Hill 803 and the Nam River. Most notable was his gallantry Aug. 2, 1950 at China Pass, near Chungam-Ni, South Korea.

Gamble improvised a forward aid station to shelter and protect the wounded and prepare them to move to the battalion aid station. He defended this aid station with rifle fire for several hours, despite being wounded and saved the lives of at least nine men.

Gamble was awarded the Silver Star and Purple Heart for his actions that day. One month later, he was awarded another Silver Star and Purple Heart for his action at Hill 803.

Gamble has continued his service to the regiment by becoming the unit historian.

For many years, his research and personal records have contributed to constructing an accurate account of the 29th Infantry Regiment's role in the Korean War.

"His record of heroism and outstanding service to the 29th Infantry Regiment have led him to be awarded the distinction of being a "Distinguished Member of the 29th Infantry Regiment," said retired Command Sgt. Maj. Frank C. Plass.

The same could be said about Delashmet.

He graduated as a Distinguished Military Graduate from the University of Mississippi in 1950 and began his active duty service as a second lieutenant. His first assignment was as a platoon leader in Company G, 29th Infantry Regiment in Okinawa.

When the regiment deployed to Korea in July 1950, Delashmet volunteered for duty and was assigned to the 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment.

One of his first assignments was to cover the withdrawal of the 25th Infantry Division back into the Pusan Perimeter. During this time, he served as the acting company commander when the main body was cut off by the enemy.

In November 1950, during the breakout of the Pusan Perimeter, Delashmet was involved in the heavy fighting near the Yalu River. He was captured by the Chinese Nov. 28, 1950.

He was held as a prisoner of war (POW) for nearly three years, before being released in September 1953.

After extensive hospitalization, he returned to the United States and was stationed at Fort Benning.

He was assigned as a staff officer and later as the aide de camp to the deputy commanding general. Delashmet was discharged from the Army in December 1954.

After leaving the Army, he began a career in the paper products industry. He has served in numerous management and senior executive positions.

He continued his service to the community through his active membership and leadership in the American Paper Institute, Sigma Chi National Fraternity, the POW Association, the 29th Infantry Regimental Association and a number of other professional and service organizations.

He has been listed in Who's Who in America. Who's Who in Finance and Industry and Who's Who in the world.

Delashmet's service to the nation in both peace and war has brought great credit to both himself and the 29th Infantry Regiment, according to Plass.

In recognition of his many accomplishments, he has earned the distinction of being a "Distinguished Member of the 29th Infantry Regiment."

Post puts money where Soldiers live, work

Directorate of Resource Management

Oct. 1 marked the beginning of the new fiscal year for the government.

During the month of September, various agencies around Fort Benning were actively engaged in closing out the last fiscal year accounts and preparing for the new year.

Despite occasional reports about wasteful government spending at year end or that the rush to close the books at year end leads to inefficiencies. This is not the case at Fort Benning, according to David L. Flo, director Resource Management.

He said year-end guidance was to use the funds to fix the Fort Benning infrastructure.

As a result of this guidance, Fort Benning applied $5.4 million to various barracks projects and critical structure repairs across post.

These projects were: replace drain lines in the reception station at Sand Hill, Building 3025 dining facility; replace shower pans in the reception station barracks and Starship barracks on Sand Hill, Buildings 3035 and 3245; replace plumbing in Main Post barracks, Buildings 2761 and 2755; replace heating ventilation air conditioning systems in Main Post barracks and Kelley Hill barracks, Buildings 2836, 2837, 2838 and 9057; repair latrines in Starship barracks, Sand Hill, and maintenance facility, Kelley Hill, Buildings 3245 and 9101; replace roof on Physical Fitness Center, Kelley Hill, maintenance facility, Main Post and Santiago Gym, Sand Hill; repair drainlines and culverts on Benning Boulevard and Hurley Hill and install streetlights on Sand Hill.

"We have a very old installation that requires a lot of repair," Flo said. "The commanding general is committed to ensuring we remain focused on the living and working conditions of our Soldiers and that any available funds be wisely spent to improve these conditions."

Lucky number 44 unlocks new truck for retiree

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Forty four is retired first sergeant Andres Gonzales' lucky number.

His social security number ends in 44, this year he's 44 years old and when he can, he wears 44 on his team uniforms.

But luck, at least in the car department, had been avoiding him. Both his cars were in the shop, undergoing major repair work.

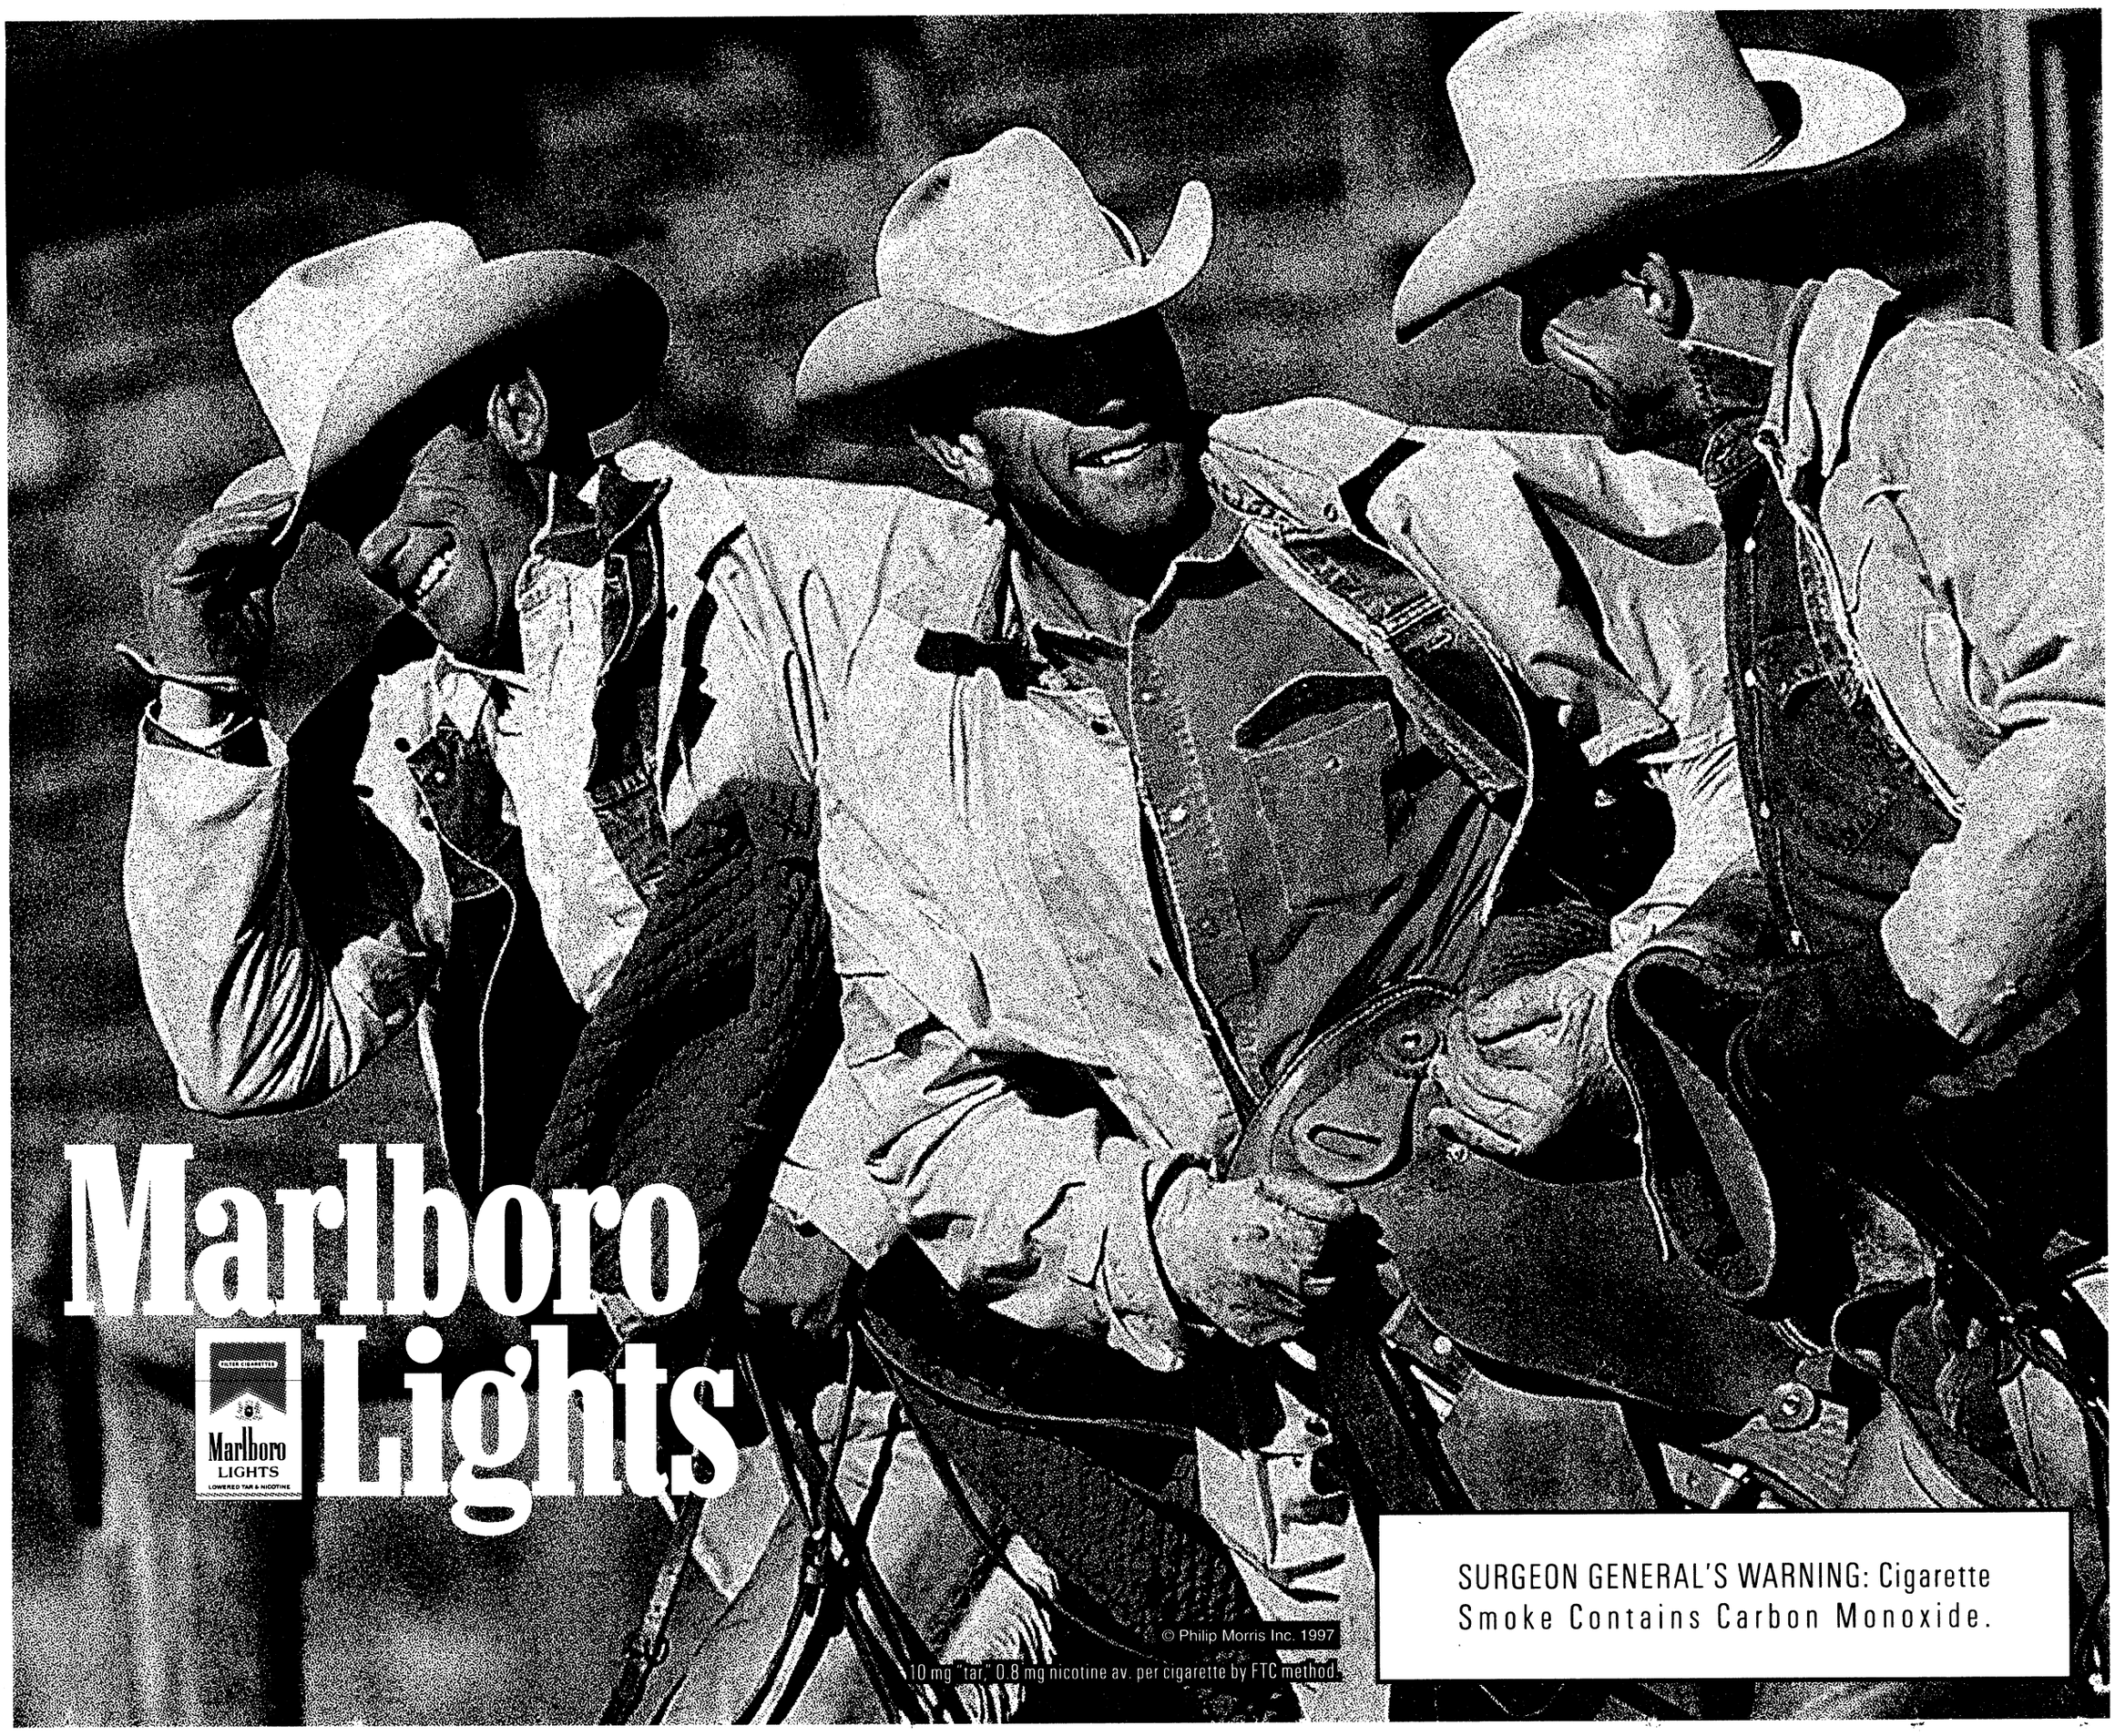
Maj. Gen. Carl Ernst, post commander, ended the first sergeant's string of bad auto luck Sept. 26 when he called Gonzales from Uchee Creek, site of the annual Association of the U.S. Army fish fry.

The message: to tell him he was the lucky winner of one of 10 vehicles local car dealers had agreed to offer up as prizes.

The number of the winning ticket — 44.

Gonzales said he was a long time supporter of AUSA and when he saw Staff Sgt. Gail Toney, the small unit AUSA queen, selling tickets in front of Martin Army Community Hospital, he decided to support the campaign and buy three tickets.

Quiet persuasion on the part of Toney got him to part with a fourth dollar, his last dollar, "that was to be my lunch money."



That ticket, which Toney told Gonzales was probably the winning ticket — turned out to be just that.

Gonzales brought his wife Ana, daughter Baneza and son, Andres, Jr. to Jay Toyota Saturday in a rental car to claim the black Toyota Tacoma pickup truck.

Stan Skaife, who chaired the raffle drive, said about 33,000 tickets were sold during the two month campaign. He said the money will be used to send Fort Benning Soldiers to the AUSA national convention in Washington D.C., later this month.

Other vehicles that were offered as prizes were a Dakota Sport Pickup Truck, Honda Civic and Hyundai Elantra, from Carl Gregory; SE5 Pickup from Jay Mazda; Chevy S-10 from Bill Heard; Ford Escort ZX2, from Freeway Ford; Isuzu Pickup, Gateway Isuzu; Nissan Pickup, X-cab, Mike Collins Nissan; and Saturn SC-1 Coupe, Saturn of Columbus.

All vehicles were valued at a minimum of $15,000, tag and title will also be paid for.

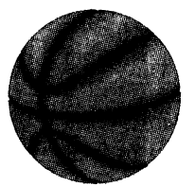
Charity softball game set — A charity softball game between the sergeants majors and colonels is scheduled for 1 p.m. Oct. 18 on Gowdy Field.

Donations of $5 will be accepted for admission to the game.

Proceeds for the game will go toward buying new toys, which will be donated to Santa's Castle.

For more information, call Sgt. Maj. Arthur VanAllen at 545-1500 or Sgt. Maj. Felix McNair at 545-6333.



Spencer posts weekly game schedules — Spencer High School recently announced its upcoming sports schedule.

In football action, Spencer takes on Jordan High School at 7:30 p.m. Saturday at Kinnett Stadium.

Spencer is forming a girl's soccer team to compete locally and regionally.

For more information, call 685-7652.

Fitness center changes hours — The Santiago Fitness Center changed its operating hours.

The new hours are 5:30 a.m. to 8 p.m. Mon. through Fri. and 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. weekends and holidays.

The new hours are effective Oct. 18.

For more information, call Hazel Henry at 544-9595 or 544-9486.

Army seeks Spirit videos — It's that time of year again — time for the annual Army and Navy football classic. This year the two teams will meet on Dec. 6 at Giants Stadium (Meadowlands, East Rutherford, New Jersey).

Once again, the Armed Forces Press Service is asking for support in providing "Go Army — Beat Navy" spirit videos.

The videos will be used for national broadcast and by the Corps of Cadets during the Army and Navy Spirit Week activities. Videos should be 10-20 seconds on 3/4 inch or Beta Cam tape. Be sure to identify your unit and location; the more action, the better. All videos must be received by Nov. 10.

For more information, call Mike D'Aquino at DSN 688-2006 or commercial (914) 938-2006.

BUICK CHALLENGE

Atlanta native wins tournament

Picnics, beach volleyball, horseshoes and of course golf were the order of the day for those who attended the Buick Challenge Oct. 3 during Military Appreciation Day at Callaway Gardens.

While some were in to the more leisure activities at Callaway, Davis Love III was playing golf and ultimately won the Buick Challenge finishing with a 21-under-par total of 267.

Just one week prior to the Buick Challenge, Love and his teammates were dealt a bitter defeat in the Ryder Cup, but Love returned home Sunday with his second victory of the season — he won the PGA Championship eight weeks ago.

With the win, Love, who grew up in Atlanta and lives in Sea Island, moved into the number three spot on the PGA Tour money list.

Professional golfer Spike McRoy makes a shot out of the bunker at the 10th green.

Stewart Cink, a Georgia native, was three shots back in second after shooting 70 in the final round.

Love's four-under-par 68 Sunday was his highest score. Love almost holed a bunker shot for eagle at the par 5 second hole Sunday and went on to make four more birdies while dropping just one shot to par to win the tournament.

Cink closed the gap on Love to one when he rolled in a 10-footer for birdie on the fifth hole, but Love got that back on the seventh hole and later opened a four-shot lead when he two-putted for birdie on the 11th hole and Cink made bogey.

Final scores and earnings Sunday of the $1.2 million Buick Challenge, PGA Tour tournament played on the 7,057-yard, par-72 Mountain Course at the Callaway Gardens Resort were:

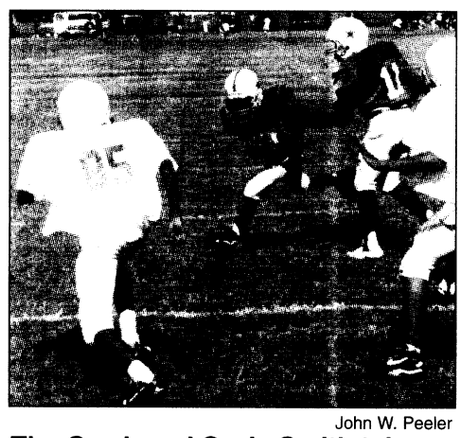
Vikings defeat Cowboys 34-0 in flag football

By John W. Peeler
Special to the Bayonet©

The Youth Services continued its football program Oct. 4 with six games in the flag and tackle leagues.

In the 6- to 8-year old flag football league the Vikings rolled past the Cowboys 34-0. The Viking offense controlled the tempo of the game while the defense shut down the Cowboys on each of the Cowboy possessions. In the late game, the Packers managed to score two touchdowns to defeat the Bulldogs 12-0.

In the 9- to 10-year-old tackle football league, the Jaguars scored four touchdowns and converted two of their four two-point conversions to defeat the Panthers 28-0. In the late game the Cowboys rolled past the Lions 30-0.



In the 11- to 13-year-old league, the Vikings and Steelers battled to a stalemate until the final two minutes of the game when Viking linebacker Bryant Butler picked off a Steeler pass and raced 40 yards for the score and a 6-0 Viking win.

In the late game the Cowboys scored touchdowns in the second and fourth quarters to defeat the Browns 16-0.

The Youth Services continues its fall football schedule Saturday with six games scheduled on Blue Field beginning at 9 a.m.

Soccer season also continues at French Field with a complete schedule of games beginning at 9 a.m.

For more information on this week's football and soccer schedule, call 545-3070.

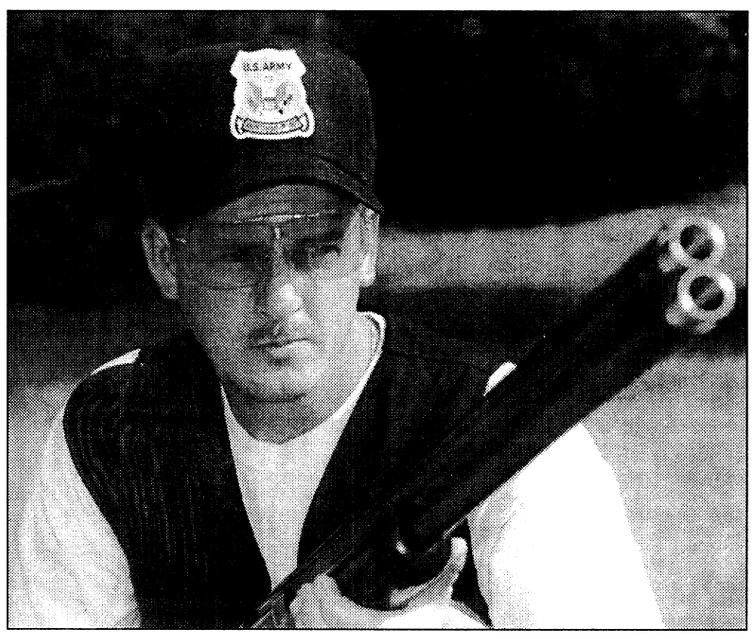
USAMU NCO wins Silver Medal in World Cup final

By Paula J. Randall Pagán
USAMU Public Affairs Office



A Soldier with the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit of Fort Benning, won the Silver Medal at the Shotgun World Cup Final in Montecatini, Italy, Sept 21.

Two-time Olympian Staff Sgt. James Todd Graves won the Silver Medal in the Skeet Competition with a final score of 145 points out of a possible 150 points. After the match, Graves and 1996 Olympic Bronze Medalist Andrea Benelli of Italy were tied at 121 points, and after shooting the finals, Benelli won the Gold Medal with a final score of 146 points. 1996 Olympic Gold Medalist Ennio Falco of Italy took the Bronze Medal with a score of 144 points.

Graves also won two medals at the World Cup in Nicosia, Cyprus, in April. He won the Gold Medal in Skeet edging out Falco and Benelli. After that two-day match, Graves, Falco and Benelli all were tied at 146 points. The Gold, Silver and Bronze medals were decided by a sudden death shoot-off, which Graves won by 1 point; Falco took the Silver and Benelli got the Bronze. Graves also was awarded a Team Silver Medal for being a member of the second-place three-man U.S. Skeet Team. Graves also won the Bronze Medal in Skeet at the World Cup in Lonato, Italy in April.

Because of those wins, Graves received the invitation to compete in the World Cup Skeet Final in Montecatini, which was for the 12 best skeet shooters in the world. The world cups are the first opportunity where marksmen can shoot a qualifying score to compete in the 2000 Olympics in Sydney, Australia.

Graves is now gearing up for the Shotgun World Championships to be conducted in Lima, Peru Nov. 8 to 15 and the Championship of the Americas, which will be held in Buenos Aires, Argentina Nov. 16 to 28, where he will represent the United States as a member of the U.S. Skeet Team.

USAMU shotgun shooter James T. Graves won the Silver Medal in the Shotgun World Cup Final in Montecatini, Italy.

Graves enlisted in the Army in 1984 and was assigned to the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit after completing basic and Infantry training at Fort Benning. In 1990, he was assigned as a team leader with the 20th Infantry Regiment in Korea and returned to the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit in 1991.

Graves, who began shooting in 1973, has a long list of shooting accomplishments. In 1996, besides shooting skeet in the Olympics, he also won a Gold Medal in the National Skeet Shooting Association World Championships and Silver Medals in Skeet in the North American and Interservice Championships.

In 1995, he won a Gold Medal in Trap and a Silver Medal in Double Trap at the Interservice Championships; he was also the Skeet Champion of the Golden Bear Regionals and the Trap Champion of the Tall Pines Match.

Graves won Bronze Medals in Trap at the Cairo World Cup and in Double Trap and Skeet at the U.S. National Championships in 1994. In 1993, he was the Double Trap and Skeet National Champion, won a Gold Medal in Trap at Interservice, and Silver Medals in Skeet at the U.S. World Cup and in Trap at the Nationals.

He was a member 1992 U.S. Olympic Shooting Team in Trap and Skeet and that year won Gold Medals in Skeet at the Suhl, Germany, World Cup, in Double Trap, at the Cairo World Cup and in Trap at Interservice.

In 1991, he won a Silver Medal in Trap and a Bronze Medal in Skeet at the U.S. Championships and was a member of the Pan American Games U.S. Team. Graves won a Gold Medal in Trap and a Silver Medal in Skeet at the U.S. Grand Prix and a Bronze Medal in Skeet in the National Championships in 1989.

The Yellow Jackets attempt to move the ball past the Wildcats during a 4- to 5-year-old Youth Services soccer league game Oct. 4 at French Field. The Wildcats won the game 5-0.

for the record

In the Oct. 3 issue on page C-1, the score of the flag football game between the Vikings and the Packers was reported as 19-0 in favor of the Packers. The correct score of the game was 26-19 in favor of the Vikings.

On page C-2 of the Oct. 3 issue, the players name in the in the soccer photo was misspelled. The correct spelling of the player in the photo is Man So.

Golf classic set — The National Multiple Sclerosis Society Georgia Chapter announces a partnership with Cap Gemini, an international consulting firm with its southeastern U.S. divisional offices in Atlanta.

The first annual Cap Gemini Classic Golf Classic is scheduled for Oct. 20 at Eagle's Landing Country Club in McDonough, Ga.

All tournament proceeds will benefit the research and programs of the National Multiple Sclerosis Society.

The tournament begins with a shotgun start at 12:30 p.m. and ends with a reception and awards ceremony at 7 p.m. Player slots begin at $250 per player, and corporate sponsorships are available. Hole sponsorships are also being solicited.

The National Multiple Sclerosis Society works to end the effects of multiple sclerosis. Multiple sclerosis is a chronic disease of the central nervous system. More than 30,000 Georgians are affected by multiple sclerosis. There is no known cause or cure, but there is hope through the MS Society's research.

For information about the Cap Gemini Golf Classic at Eagle's Landing, call Terri Pendergast at (770) 984-9080 or (800) 822-3379 toll free.

"The Power of Work"
It's about having a chance, not charity.
It's about feeding one's family with money that's earned.
It's about having a job. It's about the self respect that comes with a paycheck.
It's about lowering crime by raising job skills.
It's about helping children by hiring their parents.
It's about reducing welfare rolls by increasing job training, for jobs that pay real wages to support and strengthen real families.
Yeah, it's about job training and that's what we're all about.
Goodwill Industries believes in the power of work.

Fire safety

By Ann E. Moore and Chris Garrett
Fort Lee Fire Department

You have to admit it. Sometimes people take it all for granted.

Matches and lighters, electricity and even cooking dinner. Quite simply, these things are basic elements of everyday life but, unfortunately, they can all cause fires.

Do you know what to do if a fire breaks out in your home? Following the Exit Drills in the Home guidelines can help make sure you and your family survive.

All schools and many workplaces have a fire escape plan. Why should your family be any different? It doesn't take long to set up an escape plan, it would be a great family project and one that could possibly save a life.

The best way to start is by drawing a floor plan of your home on graph paper. Draw arrows to show the best ways out of the structure. Talk about obstacles and the best way to deal with them.

This discussion may be a good way to get the kids to clean their rooms, especially when they learn it is safer and easier to exit a room in an emergency situation when there is a clear path.

Drawing up the plan is a good start, but it is not enough; you must practice your plan. During a fire, that familiar home suddenly changes.

You may not be able to see and it is very easy to become disoriented.

The more you practice your escape plan, the easier it will be to safely escape in a real emergency.

Here are some things you want to incorporate in your EDITH plan.

•Draw a floor plan of your home.

•Know two ways out of every room.

•Agree on a meeting place outside — a tree, a neighbor's front porch.

•Practice the plan.

•Feel doors before you open them; if they're hot find another way out.

•Get out fast and stay out; don't go back inside.

•Crawl low under smoke.

•Call for help from a neighbor's home.

•Make sure all family members know how to use 911 or your local emergency phone number.

•Have a working smoke detector in your home.

•Don't hide from the fire in a closet, bathtub or under a bed.

•Know how to "stop, drop and roll" if your clothes catch fire.

These are 12 steps that could save a life. So take the time with — and for — your family. Know what to do if your home catches on fire.

Faith Middle School plans fund-raising

Faith Middle School

Last year, the Faith Middle School Parent Teacher Organization (PTO) conducted a variety of fund-raisers to purchase a data projector for the school.

For 1997-98, the PTO decided to raise money for a popcorn popper and a new sound-lighting system in the auditorium to be used by the students and faculty at Faith Middle School.

To help raise the needed money, local students at Faith Middle School are involved in a unique program designed by General Mills' maker of popular cereals like Cheerios and Wheaties, snacks like "Fruit by the Foot," Nature Valley Granola Bars, Golden Graham Treats' Sweet Rewards and Yoplait Yogurt multipack products.

It's called Big G Box Tops for Education.

For every qualifying General Mills cereal box top collected, the school will receive $.15, and for every qualifying General Mills snacks and Yoplait Yogurt multipack product box top collected, the school will receive $.10.

A qualifying box top is the top flap (on the side panel of Yoplait Yogurt products) of any General Mills product that has the 1997-1998 "Big G Box Tops for Education," symbol.

The program has already begun and runs through March 31.

Family members, neighbors and any interested groups or individuals are asked to help collect box tops.

Anyone interested in donating box tops can bring them by the Faith Middle School or call Margaret Kerchief at 888-0321 or Lucinda Spinelli at 682-4701.

Spencer High School plans Spanish Heritage program

By Staff Sgt. Lori Egan
Bayonet editor

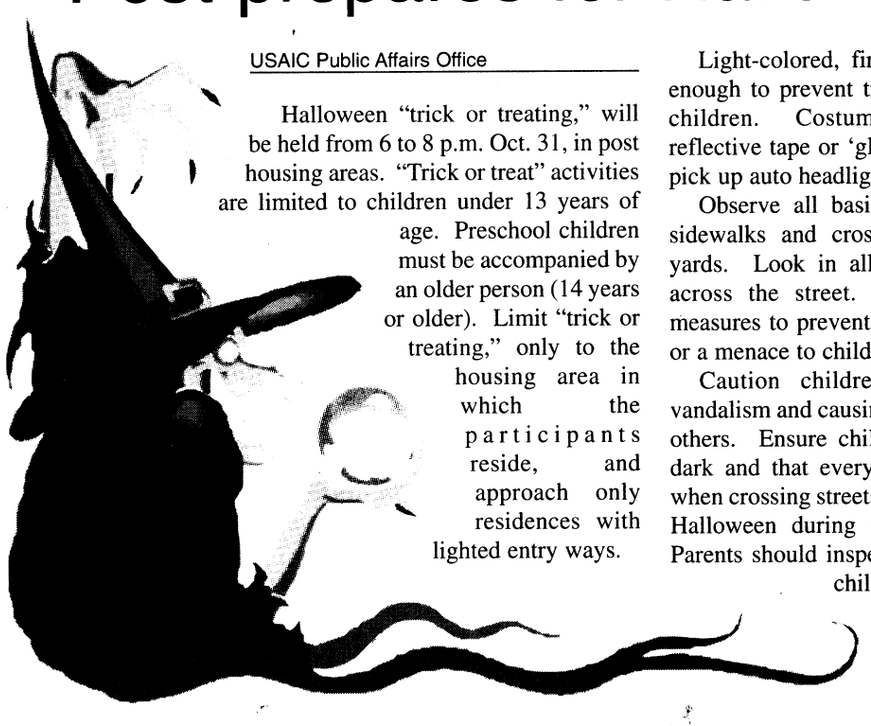
Student experience and a new teacher's enthusiasm combine during preparations for the Spencer High School Spanish Heritage Program.

The new teacher is Oscar Morzan, a Spanish teacher at Spencer High School. As the facilitator of the program, his job is to mesh all Hispanic heritage into a two-hour program.

"I want to inform the audience about the background of all Spanish people, not just one Hispanic country," Morzan said.

Helping Morzan reign in his enthusiasm is the experience of Noelia Ramos, one of his four coordinators. Ramos, 17-year-old daughter of Evelyn and Sgt. 1st Class Noel Ramos, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 1st Battalion (Airborne), 507th Infantry Regiment, 11th Infantry Regiment, participated in the program for the past three years.

This year's program includes dances, pinatas and the display of flags from Hispanic countries. The flags and pinatas are being built by the students.



"I want this program to be a learning experience for the students — those performing and those watching," Morzan said.

"The show this year will represent the good qualities about the various Hispanic countries," Ramos said. "We are performing several countries dances, including the tango. There is a lot of energy — this is a lot of fun."

Morzan said teamwork will make the program successful.

The Spanish Heritage Program is Oct. 17; however, this performance is just for the students. Parents are invited to the dress rehearsal at 7 p.m. Oct. 15.

Post prepares for Halloween

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Halloween "trick or treating," will be held from 6 to 8 p.m. Oct. 31, in post housing areas. "Trick or treat" activities are limited to children under 13 years of age. Preschool children must be accompanied by an older person (14 years or older). Limit "trick or treating," only to the housing area in which the participants reside, and approach only residences with lighted entry ways.

Light-colored, fire resistant costumes, short enough to prevent tripping, should be worn by children. Costumes can be marked with reflective tape or 'glow' spray paint so they can pick up auto headlights and other lights.

Observe all basic safety precautions. Use sidewalks and crosswalks; don't cut through yards. Look in all directions before walking across the street. Ensure pet owners take measures to prevent pets from being a nuisance or a menace to children.

Caution children about the wrongs of vandalism and causing damage to the property of others. Ensure children carry flashlights after dark and that every safety precaution is taken when crossing streets. Motorists must be alert on Halloween during the hours of 6 to 8 p.m. Parents should inspect all "treats" prior to their children eating them. Give your child a full meal before he or she goes "trick or treating."

Schools present Parent Academy

Fort Benning Schools

The Parent Academy, a weekend seminar for Fort Benning parents, will take place at Faith Middle School Oct. 17-18.

The Parent Academy is free and is open to all Fort Benning parents and personnel.

Free child care will also be provided for children aged six weeks to 11 years of age. Space in the Parent Academy will be limited. .

Reservations will be required. These reservations will be taken on a first-come, first served basis.

For more information, call Gail Wilson, director of Staff Development at 545-8245.

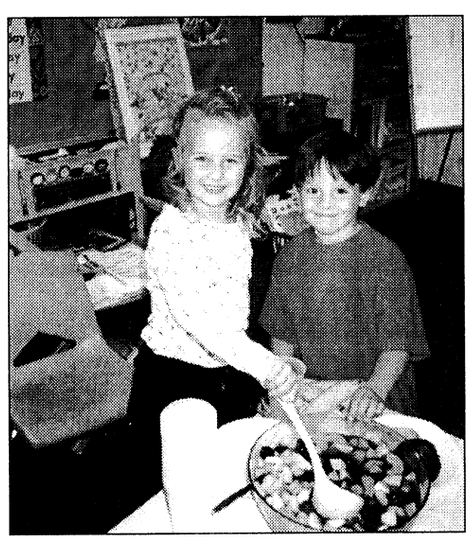
Congratulations



Andres Gonzales sits inside his new Toyota Tocoma pick-up truck while his wife, Ana stands next to him. The retired first sergeant won the truck during the Association of the U.S. Army raffle drawing at the AUSA Fish Fry Sept. 26. More than 30,000 tickets were sold for the raffle and Gonzales said the truck could not have come at a better time since both of his cars were broken down.

Yvette Stewart

For your service

Col. Dorian Anderson, commander Ranger Training Brigade pins on an award on Staff Sgt. Reno Washington of Company A, 2nd Battalion, 19th Infantry Regiment. Anderson was the Drill Sergeant of the Cycle for the first class to graduate the newly activated battalion. The battalion was activated due to the increased amount of Infantry Soldiers expected to come to Fort Benning in the future.

Stirring to learn

Sharese Hendricks and Edward Sisco stir the fruit salad during the culminating activity for their class on shapes and colors. Both are kindergartners in Carolyn Phillip's class at White Elementary School. The fruit acts as a learning tools since there are many shapes and colors associated with fruit.

This week's article provides information about Columbus Day schedule changes and closings, an upcoming meeting of the Commanding General's Natural Resources Advisory Board and an update on the Cardboard Recycling Program

Columbus Day trash collection schedule changes

•Yard Waste: There will be no yard waste picked up Monday. The next scheduled yard waste pick up will be Oct. 20 for all family housing areas.

•Refuse and recycle holiday schedule changes for Monday for Lower Davis Hills — Port, Kawamura and Fernandez streets and Indianhead Terrace will be picked up Tuesday instead of Monday. All other areas will be picked up as normally scheduled Tuesday through Oct. 17.

Holiday schedule for Self Help (U-Do-It) Center

In observance of Columbus Day, the Self Help Center, Loan Equipment Section, Venetian Blind, and Shade Shop will be closed Saturday through Monday. The shops will reopen for business Tuesday at 8:30 a.m.

Open meeting of CGs Natural Resources Advisory Board

The annual open meeting of the Commanding General's Natural Resources Advisory Board will be 7 p.m. Wednesday, Infantry Hall, Classroom 7.

The program will address Game and Fish Program issues. An account of the fiscal year revenues and expenditures will be presented as well as a summary of management activities and deer and turkey harvest.

The majority of the meeting will focus on recent initiatives to restructure and revitalize the program to provide better hunting and fishing opportunities.

Other topics include hiring of a game and fish technician, increased fall planting, an electronic hunter control check-in or check-out system and enhanced law enforcement. Presentations by the new chairman of the advisory board, Natural Resources Management Branch, Outdoor Recreation, will be followed by a question and answer period. The Fort Benning community is invited to attend

FAP warns about types of abuse

Family Advocacy Program

Abuse is scary. You know that physical abuse includes actions including being hit. But did you know that lots of other things can be abuse?

Have any of the following happened to you?

•threatened
•humiliated in public
•continually criticized
•called derogatory names
•had your thoughts and feeling continually ignored
•had valuable property destroyed
•your children have been abused to punish you
•prevented from seeking work
•locked out of the house
•accused unjustly of having affairs or flirting
•isolated from friends and family
•abandoned in dangerous places
•denied affection as punishment
•manipulated with lies and contradictions

According to Rebecca Welch, Family Advocacy Program manager, the above situations are not "normal." All of these are abuse. You may not be beaten, but if you have experienced any of these, you are abused.

There really isn't a "better" or "worse" form of abuse.

Severe injuries can occur as a result of simply being pushed. Remember, even if only one or two incidents of physical abuse have occurred in your relationship, you have cause for alarm. Studies show that if a mate physically abuses you just two times, it is likely that person will continue to abuse you.

October is Domestic Violence Awareness Month Army-wide. The theme for this year is: "The Power to Prevent Domestic Violence Begins with Me."

What some women have said about being a victim of spousal abuse

"My kids and I spent so many nights in the car. About once a week, I'd put the kids in the car and drive off to avoid a beating. It seems crazy now, but for a while it was a way of life."

Jean S., former battered woman

"I didn't want to admit that I was a battered woman, that these terrible things were really going on in my home. I felt dirty and ashamed, like I had done something wrong.

When I did face it... I found that there was help available and that the people who really cared for me did not turn away from me. I felt like now I've faced what's really wrong and I can begin to do something about it."

Anonymous

"He told me over and over again that I was fat and ugly, that I smelled and that I was sexually undesirable. When I look into the mirror, I see someone who is fat and ugly (I am 5'6" and 123 pounds). I dieted constantly and took aerobics. I lost weight but it didn't make any difference. He still called me fat.

When someone tells me I am attractive, I think they must be kidding!"

Janet, former victim

"He beat me because dinner wasn't ready when he came home, so I made sure it was on the table at the minute he came through the door. He threw the food on the floor and beat me anyway."

Paula M., former victim

"For so long, I've felt like I was living under a huge shadow. I never knew whether he would come home in a good mood or walk in swinging. I drove myself crazy trying to figure out what to do. No matter what I did or said, it got worse and worse. I lived my life in fear, torn by my feelings for him and my terror that he would beat me again. And all the while everyone was saying, "Why do you stay?" I didn't have an answer really. It just seemed like I could never get out from under the shadow."

COLUMBUS DAY

Journey continues because of faith

By Chaplain (Capt.) Len Kircher
11th Infantry Regiment

reflections

Columbus Day is not too far away and many people are thankful for the day off. But I'm sure a lot of people wonder why we'd have that day off anyway in light of the fact that Christopher Columbus wasn't the first person to set foot in the Americas (Norsemen? Native Americans?). What was so special?

Somebody once told me that Columbus was wrong ... the earth is flat, you've just got to keep on sailing. And that's just what Columbus did. When everyone else was preaching there were great monsters and a point on the earth that they would eventually fall off, Columbus just sailed on.

History has been written and re-written many times regarding his journeys to the Americas and people either love him or hate him. Some say he helped destroy the new-found country and others say he saved it. But he followed his dream and kept on.

Not long after his heroic first journey, Columbus confessed commercial, imperial and colonial interests were of only minor concern to him. He challenged the common wisdom and sailed across the seas. Few know, however, of his first and great desire in his journeys. He wrote in his journal:

"It was the Lord who put in me to sail from here to the Indies. The fact that the Gospel must be preached to so many lands — that is what convinced me. Charting the seas is but a necessary requisite for the fulfillment of the great commission of our glorious savior."

No one ever taught me that in grade school when I was trying so hard to remember the date he came over here. Later he wrote:

"For this was the alpha and omega of the enterprise (sailing the seas), that it should be for the increase and glory of the Christian religion."

He told the royalty his desire was to be sent to the regions of the Indies to see the disposition of them all and of the manner which their conversion to the Christian Faith may be properly undertaken. While it is obvious that Columbus was not morally perfect, he was perfectly moral.

He had a lively faith typified by the long and venerable reformed traditions of the Church through the ages. He was a man who knew from whence his salvation came.

However you view Christopher Columbus, there is a lesson in his life. There were an untold number of people opposing him. Greedy conquistadors, cowardly seamen, even nature and the sea came against him. But he was always with God. He kept on sailing.

Do that in your life, too. You'll spend 20-30 years in the Army and the rest of your life outside it.

I've been at the beds of an untold number of people when they died and not one ever wished they'd spent more time at their jobs.

Frankly, I'd prefer the world to be flat. Some people's lives become a daze and they drive on but only in circles, never stopping to take into account what really matters in this life. Wouldn't it be great if you sailed on and on — experiencing new and wonderful adventures every day?

You can jump on that ship right now. Let Christ become the captain of your ship. Drawing closer to God gives you the vision and the desire to drive on when the going gets tough and the people even tougher.

Chief of Staff chooses SMA

Army News Service

WASHINGTON — Command Sgt. Maj. Robert E. Hall was named the 11th sergeant major of the Army Monday.

Army Chief of Staff Gen. Dennis J. Reimer announced Hall's selection during the Sergeants Major Conference at the 1997 annual meeting of the Association of the U.S. Army.

Hall told about 100 NCOs gathered for the conference the chief of staff has upheld the NCO corps as the backbone of the Army.

"He expressed great confidence in the ability of NCOs to do that," Hall said. "I promise to dedicate 100 percent of my time, effort, energy and prayers for you and for the Soldiers in the Army.

"I'm absolutely humbled by this opportunity. I ask you in the next few days to seek me out, tell me what your concerns are. We'll work this together ... that's the way I intend to work it, I haven't forgotten where I come from."

Hall succeeds Command Sgt. Maj. Gene C. McKinney, recently reassigned to the Military District of Washington.

In announcing Hall's selection, Reimer said the number of NCOs qualified for the assignment made the decision a difficult one, saying, "That's a tribute to the quality of the NCO Corps."

The chief also thanked Command Sgts. Maj. Jerry T. Alley Jr., U.S. Army Forces Command, and James C. McKinney, U.S. Army Training and Doctrine Command, for standing in as acting SMA over the last eight months.

"This is not a part-time job," Reimer said, adding that he "cannot be more pleased by the performance of both NCOs."

Hall will be Reimer's personal advisor on all enlisted-related matters, particularly in areas affecting Soldier training and quality of life. As the Army's senior enlisted representative, he will be an extension of Reimer's eyes and ears and will provide him an enlisted perspective on issues.

The SMA devotes the majority of his time travelling throughout the Army observing training, and talking to Soldiers and their families. He sits on a wide variety of councils and boards that make decisions affecting enlisted Soldiers and their families and is routinely invited to testify before Congress.

Reimer said the overriding factor in his decision to appoint a new Sergeant Major of the Army at this time is the well-being of Soldiers.

"The Soldiers of the United States Army deserve a full-time sergeant major of the Army who can forcefully serve as an advocate for their interests," Reimer said, "and advise Army leadership on all matters pertaining to enlisted Soldiers."

For the past three years, Hall was the command sergeant major for the U.S. Central Command at MacDill Air Force Base in Florida. He is a 29-year veteran and a graduate of the U.S. Army Sergeants Major Academy's class 26 at Fort Bliss, Texas.

Included in his awards and decorations are the Legion of Merit with oak leaf cluster, the Bronze Star Medal and the Meritorious Service Medal with five oak leaf clusters.

Hall and his wife, Carole, have three children, Apra Rose of Hinesville, Ga., Rea and Jason.

ACS plans for downsizing

By Erin A. Nash and John W. Peeler
Special to the Bayonet©

Department of Defense civilians will not be the only ones affected by the Reduction in Force (RIF). Soldiers using the programs of Army Community Services (ACS) may have to wait a little longer or may be referred to outside agencies because of the reduction.

The Army Community Services (ACS) downsized its staff beginning Oct. 1.

Some of the ACS programs affected by the RIF were budget counseling and Army Emergency Relief (AER).

One of the major effects of the downsizing will be the lack of budget counseling, Ann P. Pratcher, program manager of ACS, said. Budget counseling enabled Soldiers to receive professional, one-on-one advice on their finances allowing them to get a handle on their finances and find ways to better balance their budget.

Since this service is no longer available, ACS refers Soldiers to two off-post agencies, Consumer Credit Counseling Service and Alternative Financial Resolutions, one of which is free and one that requires a fee.

Alternative Financial Resolutions charges $15 for evaluation, then $15 per month for the service regardless of rank or income, Pratcher said.

According to Pratcher, to minimize the affect of the downsizing, ACS is also trying to start a program titled Command

608th leaves Taszar, Hungary

By Tanya Holt-Wagner
Special to the Bayonet©

Communication and the importance of keeping communication channels open was the message Tuesday as the 608th Ordnance Company, 36th Engineer Group (Combat), prepared to leave Fort Benning for the next six to 12 months.

The company will call Taszar, Hungary its home while supporting the Operation Joint Guard mission.

"The Company will supply ammunition to all the units inside the (Bosnian) theater," said Capt. Kathy Graef, company commander.

According to Graef, between 75 and 80 Soldiers will travel to Eastern Europe, and while the Soldiers are expected back next June, they are prepared to stay longer.

"June is just an estimate of when the Soldiers will be back, they are, however, totally prepared to stay longer," Graef said.

The Soldiers are not the only ones who are prepared for the mission. Their loved ones are also ready for the deployment.

"We've known for about six weeks, (my husband) went on leave last month for two weeks to be with us," said Teana Shambaugh, wife of Chief Warrant 2 Michael Shambaugh.

Shambaugh said the hardest part about deploying is lost time with his two young daughters. But he and his wife came up with ways to make the time separated go by faster.

"I've tried to explain to them why I have to go," he said. "We've done this before, and you just have to learn to deal with it if there are children involved, so

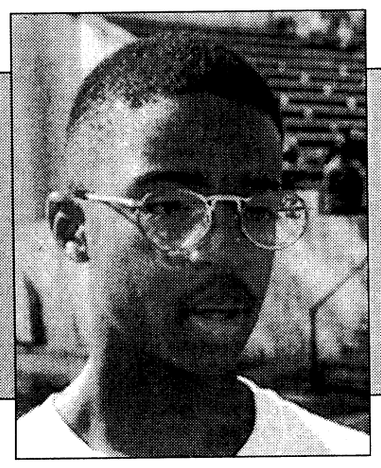
VARIOUS VOICES



What role does leadership play in everyday life?

Spc. Andrew McDaniel III, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment — "Leaders should lead by example. It also determines how far you will go in life, in and outside of the military."

Pfc. Jurl B. Phillips III, 690th Medical Company (Ground Ambulance), 36th Engineer Group (Combat) — "Leadership in the past year and a half has done nothing but hold me back."

Mark T. Baker, student representative, School Improvement Team, Faith Middle School — "Leadership is important with friends and the way you deal with them. If they're really your friends, you want to take care of them."

Patti A. Herron, family support group coordinator — "If parents are not a good role model, they won't have good children."

Susan W. Emerson, Physical Education teacher, Faith Middle School — "Children really have a chance to develop leadership through organized teams."

Staff Sgt. Darlene Adams, U.S. Army Medical Department Activity — "It plays an important role because I believe in leading. My leadership never stops, from work to home."

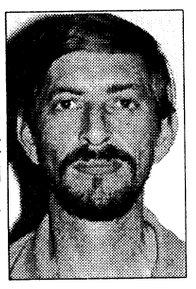
The other day I was out at Doughboy Stadium watching the Faith Middle School students participating in Olympic style track and field events.

commentary



As I wandered around the stadium, children, some I knew, some I didn't, came up to me and like all kids, wanted me to take their picture and put them in the paper.

I had the chance to talk to some of them so I took the opportunity to speak with them about leadership and what they thought leadership was.

I was thoroughly surprised to find a diverse description of what leadership meant to them.

Some students had a firm grasp on what leadership was; then there were some who, even though they had the right idea, could not as easily define the term.

As I mentally wandered back in time to when I was a child, I tried to recall if I really ever heard the word — leadership — before I entered the Army.

John W. Peeler thinks leadership is more than just a natural tendency.

I couldn't recall, but I did remember I always wanted to be the captain of any team I played on and I always wanted to be the one who made the rules.

I saw some of these same type of children in the stadium.

Is leadership a natural born quality or is it a learned trait?

There are good arguments on both sides of the coin; however, my vote would lean more towards it being a natural born trait with mentors and teachers along the way refining those natural born leadership tendencies.

From the time a child is old enough to play with other children, those leadership qualities become apparent.

There are those who are always the captains and there are those who always wait on the side and are the last ones chosen.

"Lead, follow or get out of the way" is one popular saying that comes to mind.

There are always leaders and there are always followers.

There is nothing wrong with being a follower because not everyone can be a leader.

That is why it is important as a parent, teacher, coach or mentor that good leadership qualities are taught to our would-be leaders of tomorrow.

After all, we use leadership everyday in our lives and children pick up on how leadership is used in handling everyday life.

That is how they learn to handle daily situations.

After all, has your child ever been in the room when the phone has rang and heard one of their parents say "If it is for me, tell them I am not home?"

What exactly has that just taught the child? To lie!

Honesty, integrity, perseverance and playing by the rules are just a few of the qualities would-be leaders learn from their mentors.

Without these teachings, lying becomes a way of life along with giving up in tough situations and lawlessness without fear of consequences.

Leadership is more than just being in charge like many see it as being.

Leadership, in words put by many of my former leaders, is taking the hard right over the easy wrong.

Tough decisions are the breakfast of true leaders.

Winning against all odds is the fuel that keeps the fire burning in a true leader and seeing a youngster grow into a good leader is the reward for the true leader.

Parents, teachers, coaches and mentors all have a responsibility to teach the children they come in contact with good leadership traits.

Think about it — we all get old someday.

Eventually one of the children you come in contact with may become a leader that is in charge of your local parent-teacher association, school board, city council or even the President of the United States.

Have you done your part in teaching or mentoring good leadership traits?

Are you willing to bet your future on it?

US role in world affairs continues to change

By Paul Stone
American Forces Press Service

If it seems like the world is smaller than it used to be, perhaps it's because we're going a lot more places nowadays and carrying out previously unfamiliar missions — Somalia, Liberia, Zaire, Bosnia, to name just a few.

commentary

Our increased operations tempo and varied missions inevitably have resulted in public debate about the proper role of the military in the post-Cold War world.

One analyst even referred to current operations as "meals-on-wheels"-type missions.

This denies the historical context necessary to understand why we're going where we're going and doing what we're doing.

During the Cold War, the issues were pretty simple and clear. We were the good guys and the Soviet Union was the "evil empire."

The rules changed in 1989. Stabilizing security arrangements disappeared seemingly overnight.

Today, as Joint Chiefs of Staff Chairman Army Gen. John M. Shalikashvili said, the United States, as the sole remaining superpower, has an increased role to play in world affairs to ensure its interests are protected and advanced.

He emphasized the missions are not the result of which party holds the White House, rather the collapse of pre-existing security relationships and the forging of new ones.

The noises we hear from the east today are not the rumbling of Soviet tanks or the boom of artillery, but the equally disturbing sounds of economic collapse almost inevitably followed by the thunder of political chaos, similar to what we heard prior to the Cold War.

One need not look far to recognize the role desperate economic circumstances played in Hitler's rise to power or the birth of the Soviet Union.

The Berlin Airlift in 1948 is perhaps the most famous example of military humanitarian support.

Political chaos propelled by overwhelming economic conditions and capitalized on by charismatic, opportunistic political leaders offering salvation was the biggest threat to regional security prior to the Cold War, and it is the biggest threat today.

We see this being played out in a dangerous minuet between North Korea and its southern counterpart.

Prior to World War II, we didn't have the national will, technology, logistical network or resources to deploy forces for the missions undertaken in recent years.

Nor did we have the intelligence network and instant communications allowing us to intervene before events become out of control.

History tells us it is wise to provide relief, albeit temporary, in the form of supplies, patrols, training or yes, even meals on occasion, before security relationships are threatened or an economic collapse deepens into a military crisis.

On many current missions, our guns may be silent and a "see the hill, seize the hill," mentality may not apply. But that doesn't detract from their importance.

We are indeed providing meals in many instances, but the "meals-on-wheels" analogy ignores the depth and long-term importance of our missions.

After seeing hundreds of television images of people we've helped in recent years, if we must borrow other people's titles to describe these missions, perhaps "touched by an angel" would be more appropriate.

545-BOSS

Dial 545-Boss is the commander's action line for Soldiers, family members and civilians to call when they have problems or complaints that can't be resolved elsewhere.

While it is not a substitute for the chain of command or for agencies established to provide assistance, the line offers another means of communication between Fort Benning's community and commanders.

The Bayonet features some of the calls that may benefit other members of the Fort Benning community.

Call: The caller asks if Fort Benning can get the city to make arrangements for protection for Soldiers who have to wait until late night at the bus station downtown to catch a bus to their next duty station. He said it's dangerous when they have to stand around outside after the station is closed.

Directorate of Public Works response: Community Relations Officer contacted the Area District Manager for Greyhound Bus Lines in Atlanta who said one of two programs were being considered for implementation to alleviate the problems--they will either stay open longer hours so that passengers will be allowed to stay inside the terminal until the last bus leaves; or they will hire a security guard. As of this date, an employee of the Bus Line remains on duty until the last bus leaves so that passengers can remain inside.

Call: A Soldier received word that Fort Benning is going to discontinue sale of class B clothing. He said he believes this would be a great injustice, especially to the young Soldier who gets a break from paying the full cost of uniforms.

Directorate of Logistics response: The caller was advised that although the managed sales by DOL will terminate, involvement by Army and Air Force Exchange Service would increase. AAFES will provide the clothing items at 50 percent of the acquisition cost.

Call: The caller said they live in a circle where there are no streetlights and there have been some POVs vandalized.

Directorate of Public Works response: A check of the area revealed that there were no street lights in the circle. Three lights were installed by the Exterior Electric Section.

Soldiers support annual classic

By Tanya Holt-Wagner
Special to the Bayonet©

The past and present came together Oct. 11 as Fort Benning Soldiers joined forces with the Tuskegee Airmen to celebrate the annual Tuskegee, Moorehouse Classic.

Five Fort Benning humvees provided transportation to the Airmen as they rode through the streets of uptown Columbus in the annual pregame parade.

This year's parade was the first to involve the airmen, who made history during World War II for their flights over Europe.

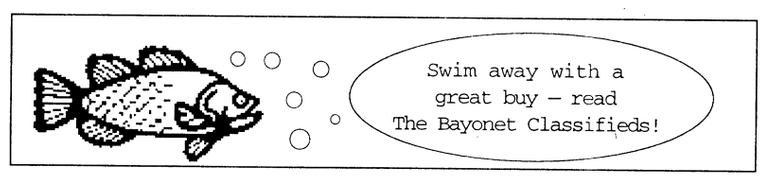
"This is pretty important . . . (the airmen) are living history and it's an honor that we'll be carrying the Tuskegee Airmen in our vehicles today," 1st Lt. Bruce Foxx, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment, said about his involvement with the airmen.

Not only was it an honor for the Soldiers, but the airmen felt honored as well.

"I think it's great. I'm glad for the recognition and honor really, I'm really excited," Tuskegee Airman and retired Maj. Carrol S. Woods said.

The parade gave the Soldiers a chance to meet a part of history, and it allowed them to give something back to their community.

"The community does a lot of things for our Soldiers and in return we should do things for our community," Foxx said.



"We don't do things like this a lot, but I feel it's a privilege to be involved with something of this nature," said Sgt. 1st Class Reginald French, HHC, 1st Bn., 29th Inf. Regt.

"Not only are we giving back to the community, but it's an opportunity for us to meet some of the comrades from the old days. Forty years down the line I'll be telling my grandkids how I met the Tuskegee Airmen," French said.

Fort Benning's involvement in one of Columbus' largest annual events is just one of the ways the post gives back to the community.

Staff Sgt. Pat Gray HHC, 1st Bn., 29th Inf. Regt., said being involved with the community is not Fort Benning's focus, it's simply something that comes naturally.

"I think in some way or the other Fort Benning is pretty involved in everything Columbus does. It's an important part of living in this area," Gray said.

what we've done is given the girls (Nicole, 10 and Amber 6), certain responsibilities while I'm gone to make the time go faster."

Shambaugh will have plenty to do to make his time go by faster. He will be working as a technical adviser at the ammunition supply point. When he does have spare time he will probably be traveling the "information superhighway."

To keep the channels of communication open at home, the Shambaughs have decided to go 'on-line,' to stay in touch — It's just one of the many ways Soldiers' families can keep in touch.

Col. A. Allen Rasper, commander of the 36th Engineer Group, said that correspondence with friends and family would be an important factor in the success of this mission.

"They will cherish that which you provide for them from the home front. Every card, every letter, every box of goodies will be a reminder of what is waiting for them," Rasper said.

While Rasper stressed the importance of communication, he made it clear what the most important aspect of the mission is.

"Key is for each and everyone of you to return home in the same condition you are leaving," Rasper said.

With this sentence the departure ceremony concluded and the 608th left to complete its mission.

ACS: Copes with smaller staff

program's intent is to intensively train volunteers to give classes due to the lack of ACS staff available to give classes.

"The program is now only in the planning phases and is not a done deal," Pratcher said.

"The program involves training battalion level representatives in depth on financial counseling and stabilizing them to give the unit their own financial specialists."

Pratcher is now the only person available to give classes, which are held in groups, and see clients.

Because of the downsizing, it would take individual units longer to get classes scheduled.

"Right now we only see those clients applying for hardship rates for child care and Army Emergency Relief (AER) referrals," Pratcher said.

Other areas of the budget counseling program no longer available are financial planning for transition, PCSing, retirement and home buying.

Another ACS program feeling the effect of the downsizing is Army Emergency Relief (AER).

AER, a private organization, lost two civilian jobs, which leaves the AER officer, Alfonso J. Deane and one NCO, Sgt. 1st Class Terry Smith, the assistant loan officer as the only available loan officers to see clients.

Deane said the only visible change at AER is that it might take an extra day or so to get an appointment. He said that usually the number of appointments varies with the time of the month and year.

"It (downsizing) will make the military family more self-reliant," Roy B. Burns, Chief of ACS, said. Burns retired Oct. 1, and said his position will probably remain vacant for a year.

Fort Benning's Equal opportunity complaint process

How to make a complaint

Make informal complaint or report inappropriate behavior without initiating a full investigation. This may be most appropriate for minor infractions where the victim simply wants the behavior stopped.

If you are the victim

Call the equal opportunity office hotline to clarify whether an incident or behavior qualifies as sexual harassment or discrimination.

File a formal complaint (DA Form 7279-1-R) with any of the following people or agencies. Complaints must be filed within 60 days of incident — those filed after may be pursued at commander's discretion.

Hotline number 545-3206

Chain of command	EO Advisor	IG	Housing referral	JAG	Military Police	Chaplain	Medical Agency

Complaints, except those that have been filed with the Inspector General, must be acted upon in three calendar days. Complaints filed with an agency against a member of the chain of command will be referred to the next higher commander in the chain of command.

The commander or investigation officer appointed by the commander has 14 calendar days to investigate the allegations and meed with the victim to discuss the outcome and results. A 30-day extension may be granted from the next higher commander if circumstances require it. Further extensions can be approved only by the first general officer in the chain of command.

The complainant has seven calendar days to appeal to the next higher commander if he or she is dissatisfied with the investigation results or actions taken. That commander has 14 days to complete the investigation. Final decisions on complaints rests with the general court martial convening authority.

30 days after the final decision on the complaint, an assessment is conducted by the equal opportunity advisor on all equal opportunity complaints (substantiated and unsubstantiated) to determine the effectiveness of any corrective actions taken and to detect and deter any incidents of reprisal, report and recommendation are submitted to commander on a DA form 7279-1-RNLT 45 days following final decision made on complaint.

Red Ribbon week set to begin

By Sgt. 1st Class Darreyl Johnson
Alcohol and Drug Prevention Office

Each year, Red Ribbon Week provides us with an opportunity to renew our commitment to a healthy and drug-free lifestyle and show our dedication to education and prevention efforts in our schools, workplaces and communities. Red Ribbon Week allows educators, parents, community groups, students and others to focus on the work being done to stop the spread of drugs and draw attention to the growing millions who have pledged to live drug-free.

The Red Ribbons we wear during this celebration are a symbol of unity against the illegal use of drugs. This public display came about in response to the tragic 1985 murder of Federal Drug Enforcement Administration Agent Enrique Comarena while he was investigating Mexican drug traffickers.

The Red Ribbon Celebration has grown as a positive influence, impacting more than 120 million people to live a healthy, drug-free life. Nurturing full potential and promoting a healthy, drug-free lifestyle for our youth is encouraged 365 days a year. Across the nation healthy, drug-free lives are celebrated one week of the year during the Red Ribbon Celebration.

This year the Columbus and Phenix City community will conduct it's annual Red Ribbon border-tying ceremony at the grand staircase of the Riverwalk, at 3 p.m. Oct. 27. The public is cordially invited.

The Fort Benning community can show it's involvement by displaying a Red Ribbon on your front door, mailbox, trees, road signs and cars. For more information on Red Ribbon activities contact Sgt 1st Class Darreyl Johnson, education coordinator, alcohol drug control office at 545-4993 or 545-1138.

Post Office to issue new stamp

By Rudi Williams
American Forces Press Service

WASHINGTON — The U.S. Postal Service will officially issue a stamp honoring military women Oct. 18, at Arlington (Va.) National Cemetery the same day the Women in Military Service for America Memorial is dedicated at the gateway to the cemetery.

The 32-cent stamp honors the nearly 2 million women who have served and are serving in the armed forces, postal officials said.

"The Postal Service is proud to honor the women, past and present, who have served our country with such dedication, courage and patriotism in times of conflict and in times of peace for the past 220 years," said Postmaster General Marvin T. Runyon. "We hope that as these stamps appear on envelopes and cards across the country and around the world, they will serve as a reminder of the immeasurable contribution American women in military service have made and continue to make to the cause of protecting the freedom that we enjoy."

The Postal Service is printing 37 million stamps featuring uniformed women of the five armed services.

"Women in Military Service" appears in white on a blue background at the top of the stamp with five white stars beneath the phrase. The five services — Army, Marines, Navy, Air Force and Coast Guard — are printed across the bottom of the stamp in black, each separated by a star.

Customers have 30 days to obtain the first day issue postmark by mail.

They may purchase the new stamps at their local post office, affix the stamps to envelopes of their choice, address the envelopes (to themselves or others) and place them in a larger envelope addressed to:

Women in Military Service Stamp
Postmaster
900 Brentwood Rd, NW
Washington DC 20066-9991

After applying the first day of issue postmark, the postal service will return envelopes at no charge. All orders must be postmarked by Nov. 17, 1997.

The Philatelic Fulfillment Service Center also offers first day covers for new stamp issues and postal stationery items postmarked with the official first day of issue cancellation. Each item has an individual catalog number and is offered in the quarterly USA Philatelic catalog. Customers may request a free catalog by writing to:

Information Fulfillment
US Postal Service, Dept. 6270
PO Box 419014
Kansas City, MO 64141-6014, or by telephoning (800) stamp-24.

First day covers remain on sale for at least one year after the stamps' issuance.

Changes 'climbing' their way through Ranger School

By Sgt. Marc G. Turchin
Bayonet assistant editor

The U.S. Army Ranger School has been called one of the hardest, if not the hardest, Infantry training in the military. For years the school has been the measure against other small element training schools inside the Army, as well within the Navy and Marine Corps.

But as the years passed, ranger training saw small changes in the way students are trained to complete their missions.

Ranger students are pushed to mental and physical limits during the three-phase, 61-day school.

It begins with phase one at Fort Benning where students learn small group and squad tactics that now include a real-life scenario, bayonet training and boxing.

During the second phase of the school, students face what many call the toughest, most rigorous, physically demanding portion of becoming a ranger — not the mission, not the lack of food or sleep, but the terrain.

The students spend the second half of Ranger School at Camp Frank D. Merrill in Dahlonega, Ga. This camp is situated at the foothills of the Blue Ridge Mountains and serves one purpose — to ensure ranger students who leave here can overcome almost any mountainous obstacle.

The mountain portion of the school is undergoing two major changes — the students now wear new advanced body equipment and are taught updated mountaineering techniques using more versatile ropes and knots. The other change involves how the students progress from Fort Benning to Camp Merrill.

"The Commanding General allowed me to buy new ropes, new harnesses and new apparatus for teaching current mountaineering techniques," said Ranger Training Brigade Commander Col. Dorian Anderson. "That has really jump started us."

Anderson, along with others at the brigade and battalion level, said the new equipment and techniques add another dimension to the students' training.

"We're trying to expose the ranger students to as many techniques as we can," said Sgt. 1st Class Gregory S. Baker, senior mountaineering instructor, 5th Ranger Training Battalion (RTB) Dahlonega, Ga. "We do this because the conditions change. The ranger never knows what technique fits the condition he finds himself in."

Baker led the battalion through the upgrade of equipment and techniques.

One vital piece of the replaced equipment is the ropes.

The battalion now uses a Kernmantle Rope. This rope has a tensile strength of 5,160 pounds and a longer lifetime. The old nylon ropes became unsafe for using after approximately three to five months, Baker said. The new ropes in use for 14 months are still holding strong, and, according to Baker, it's more cost-effective.

The ropes are purchased in 600-foot spools while the old nylon ropes were bought in 120-foot length.

"The ropes we have now have already outlived three nylon ropes," he said.

Baker said the ropes and the new body harness helps prevent injuries.

The old ropes would be tied around the student's waist and abdominal section. If he were to fall, the rope would squeeze around the student — possibly injuring his ribs or injuring his lower back.

Since the implementation of the new equipment, there has been a drastic turnaround injuries.

"We've never had an injury resulting from fall due to the equipment," Baker said. "The shock is felt throughout the whole body — it's more dispersed and secure."

According to Baker, ranger students are now getting some of the best training available.

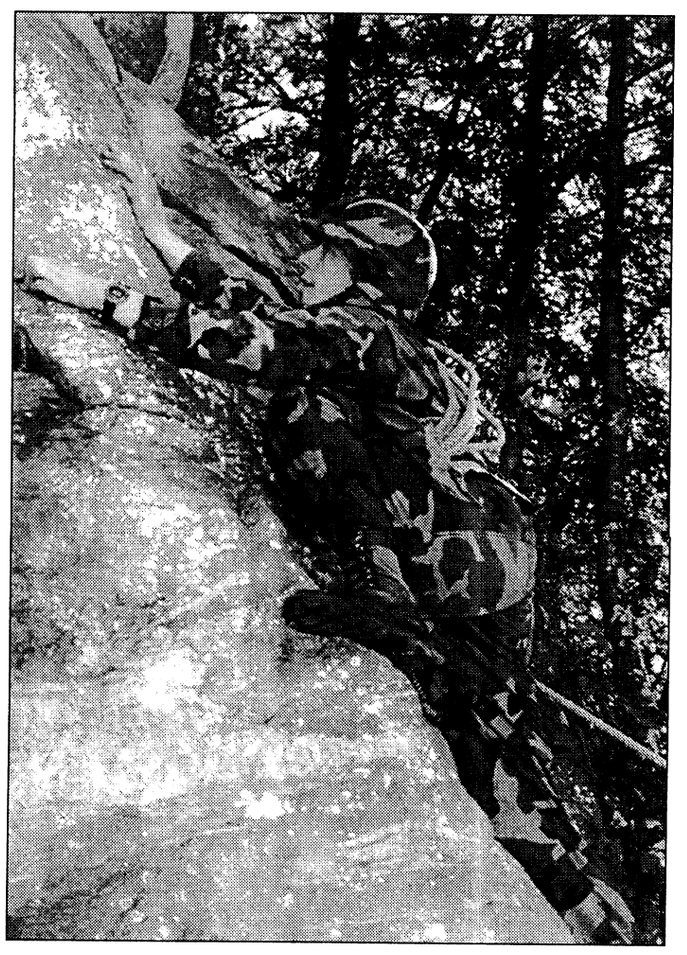
"He can now do pretty much anything he needs to do," Baker said. "The ranger student now has some tools in his pocket so he can overcome that mountain obstacle — he doesn't have to bypass it."

The students get their first glimpse of that obstacle when they arrive — in the middle of the night.

Students arrive at Camp Merrill through a night air assault operation. They are picked up at Fort Benning and conduct an air assault in the middle of the night onto a drop zone. The students then move tactically for about six miles into the camp.

"They get a quick appreciation for the terrain on that day one infiltration," said Lt. Col. Alfred E. Dochnal, 5th RTB commander. "It gets everyone focused on what ranger school is all about — developing the world's finest combat leader."

What used to be an administrative drop off, now is another day of training for the students.



"It's done to keep their head in the game," Anderson said. "It's not the most difficult terrain, but it causes them to use their land navigation skills because of the mountains — they have to walk up and down and around the mountains."

These are just some of the changes instituted recently at the Ranger School. More changes will be implemented, but in the end, it's still ranger school.

"We wanted a course that's aggressive, we wanted a course that would give the student a lot of different experiences and we wanted a course that did not change the standards," Anderson said. "We thought the standard was pretty good. But we also wanted a course that could modernize and I think that's what we have."

Sgt. 1st Class Gregory S. Baker, senior mountaineering instructor at 5th RTB demonstrates how some of the ropes are hooked up during a retraining session.

Sgt. Keith Marceau practices climbing while wearing the nylon ropes the battalion had at one time issued to the students. Because of where the rope was worn on the student, the risk of injury due to equipment was higher compared to the body harness worn today.

Staff Sgt. Gerald Ecker, a medic with 5th RTB, prepares to go down the wall with the litter while Spc. Phillip Searcy and Spc. Dean Herman assist him.

One of the medics ties a knot to hold himself in while training on the wall. The Kernmantle Rope is now being used by the battalion. The rope is a stronger, more versatile rope and is easier to tie knots with.

Mortar school has long history

Course dates back to 1962, taught officers only

By Sgt. 1st Class Orlando Valentin
2nd Battalion 29th Infantry Regiment

Sgt. 1st Class Larry Lane

Soldiers fire 81 mm Mortars at Coolridge Range.

The Infantry Mortar Leader Course (IMLC) dates back prior to Sept. 1962 when the instruction was for the Davy Crockett officers course, and the heavy weapon course was 16 weeks.

This course was given by the Infantry school geared strictly for NCO's. The course covered M-31 machine gun, light and heavy, 106 recoilless rifle, 75 mm recoilless rifle, 81 mm mortar, 4.2 inch mortar, and survey techniques.

In May 1966, the course was revised as the Infantry Mortar Platoon Leader Course. This course was designed to train officers to command, supervise and direct the fire of heavy mortar platoon, or 81 mm section in support of the infantry combat elements to fill requisitions for assignment to Vietnam. In June 1967, the course was revised and the Infantry mortar platoon NCO course was added. In Dec. 1968, the course was combined to officers and NCO's, and was named the Infantry Mortar Platoon Course.

Until June of 1971, the course had two separate committees — 81 mm mortar and the 4.2 inch mortar sub committee. The 81 mm mortar sub committee gave instruction about mechanical training and fire direction procedures (FDC). They also instructed the Officer Candidate School, the Infantry Officer Basic Course and ANCOC. The subcommittee gave instruction on mechanical training, forward observer procedures and FDC using the artillery firing chart as the primary means of fire control and the M-16 plotting boards as the back up tactical employment of mortars.

In the summer of 1971, the 81mm mortar and the 4.2 inch mortar subcommittee merged and moved to Eiler Hall, named after 1st Lt. Richard Oliver Eiler who was killed in action Sept. 5, 1950 while serving as a member of Company D, 8th Engineer Combat Battalion near Kasan, Korea.

During the existence of the mortar course, the course had gone through many training changes.

In 1978, the fire observers that were part of the mortar platoon shifted to the field artillery. The fire observer procedures were then instructed by the Combined Arms and Tactics Division (CATD). The IMLC became part of the 29th Regiment in 1984. In 1986, the mortar ballistic computer (MBC) replaced the artillery chart that was used for the previous two decades.

One transformation was the replacement of the 81 mm mortar (M-29). This mortar supported Infantry Soldiers during Vietnam. The 81 mm mortar (M-252) replaced the M-29 mortar in 1992.

Another transformation was the replacement of the 4.2 inch mortar with the 120 mm mortar in 1995. Also in the same year the Sabot Training Device was replaced with the M-880 Short Range Training Device and the M-303 insert which allowed the 12 mm mortar to fire 81 mm mortar ammunition.

The new digitized force of the future will place the mortars into a new era.

The new improved mortar ballistic computer (IMBC) will allow us to communicate digitally. It is scheduled to be fielded next year. Another breakthrough for the mortars is the Mortar Fire Control System (MFCS).

The MFCS will provide improvements in the communication and control of mortar fires and the speed of employment, accuracy and survivability of mortars.

The MFCS is a platoon level, digitally integrated fire control system consisting of position and navigation, weapon pointing, ballistic computation, digital communications and situational awareness capabilities.

The MFCS is an add-on system to fielded mortar systems and FDS vehicles. The IMLC is currently implementing this new equipment for the course. The IMLC has been relocated from Eiler Hall to the Infantry Hall.

ACAP offers transition assistance

Army Career and Alumni Program

The Congress of the United States enacted legislation during the past 10 years, which mandated the establishment of Transition Assistance Programs that Soldiers and families enjoy today.

"ACAP is the Army's program designed to be a focal point for information, briefings, workshops and referrals to all available transition services," said Chick Eagle, one of the ACAP Center Counselors.

"Services such as pre-separation briefings, workshops, counseling, civilian job search assistance, verification of MOS skills, military education and training (VMET), and relocation information were not specifically mandated before 1990," Eagle said.

"Before ACAP, Soldiers and their families were pretty much on their own and services varied from installation to installation depending upon available resources.

"A recent Army decision has combined the ACAP office and Job Assistance center into the ACAP Center and all services will continue to be available for retiring, separating Soldiers and their families," Eagle said.

To get maximum benefit from these transition and relocation services, a Soldier should try to start preparing as early as 180 days from ETS. Congress has established 90 days out as the minimum acceptable.

Preparation of a highly personalized Individual Transition Plan (ITP) is key to a successful career and location change, Eagle said. Transition services continue to be available for 90 days after separation.

The ACAP process begins with attendance (spouses encouraged to attend) at the three day preseparation benefits briefing and workshops currently being held weekly in Infantry Hall, Classroom 30.

The agenda includes completion of the preseparation checklist and overview of all available benefits detailed service provider briefings and job assistance workshops.

Begin to "ACAP" early to give yourself and your family the best chance for a positive transition experience. See your servicing Personnel and Adminstration Center to schedule your ACAP briefings and workshops.

For scheduling information call the ACAP Center in Soldiers' Plaza, Building 2634 at 545-2308 or 2309.

Interest-free loans available for some

Army News Service

ALEXANDRIA, Va. — Approximately 1,000 students will receive $3,000 interest-free loans from The Retired Officers Association (TROA) Educational Assistance Program for the 1998-99 school year. Of those, about 400 students will be first time recipients.

The loans are awarded annually for up to five years of undergraduate study to dependent children of TROA members and their surviving spouses. Membership in TROA is open to all men and women who are or have ever been commissioned or warrant officers. Dependent children of enlisted service members are also eligible. Awardees must be high school graduating seniors or full-time students working toward their first undergraduate degree. They must be under the age of 24 and unmarried.

Qualified students with a grade point average of 3.0 or better on a 4.0 scale are selected on their scholastic ability, potential, character qualities, participation in extracurricular and community activities as well as financial need.

"Competition is tough, because students can obtain up to $15,000 of interest-free support for five years of undergraduate study and not have to begin repaying until after graduation," said Jan Engler, administrator of the Educational Assistance Program.

In addition to the 1,000 interest-free loans TROA will award 40 grants to seniors who were previously enrolled in the Program. This year each grant will be $3,000 plus another 220 students will receive $500 grants with their interest-free loan.

"Furthermore, TROA will award fifty $5,000 grants to commemorate the 50th Anniversary of the Educational Assistance Program," said Colleen Blevins, development officer of the Program.

The TROA Educational Assistance Program was established in 1948. Since then, about 5,000 students have received interest-free loans, totaling more than $16.5 million.

TROA Educational Assistance applications for the 1998-99 school year will be available Nov. 1. Applications must be requested, completed and postmarked before March 1.

For applications and more information, visit the TROA web site at www.troa.org, e-mail edassist@troa.org, write to TROA Educational Assistance Program, 201 N. Washington St., Alexandria, VA 22314-2539 or call 1-800-245-TROA(8762) Ext. 146.

Former NCO wins officer awards, honors

By Gerry J. Gilmore
Army News Service

WASHINGTON —What kind of 'Sargent' wears golden bars of rank instead of stripes?

Just ask 2nd Lt. Jeffrey Sargent, a 30-year-old officer and former NCO who was named the Army top ROTC graduate for 1996. In 1993, Sargent swapped his staff sergeant chevrons for an opportunity to earn lieutenant's bars through the ROTC Green-to-Gold program.

Sargent enlisted in the Army in 1986. Six years later he applied for a Green-to-Gold scholarship, was accepted and attended the University of Tampa (UT) in Florida. Green-to-Gold provides qualified enlisted members an opportunity to obtain a commission.

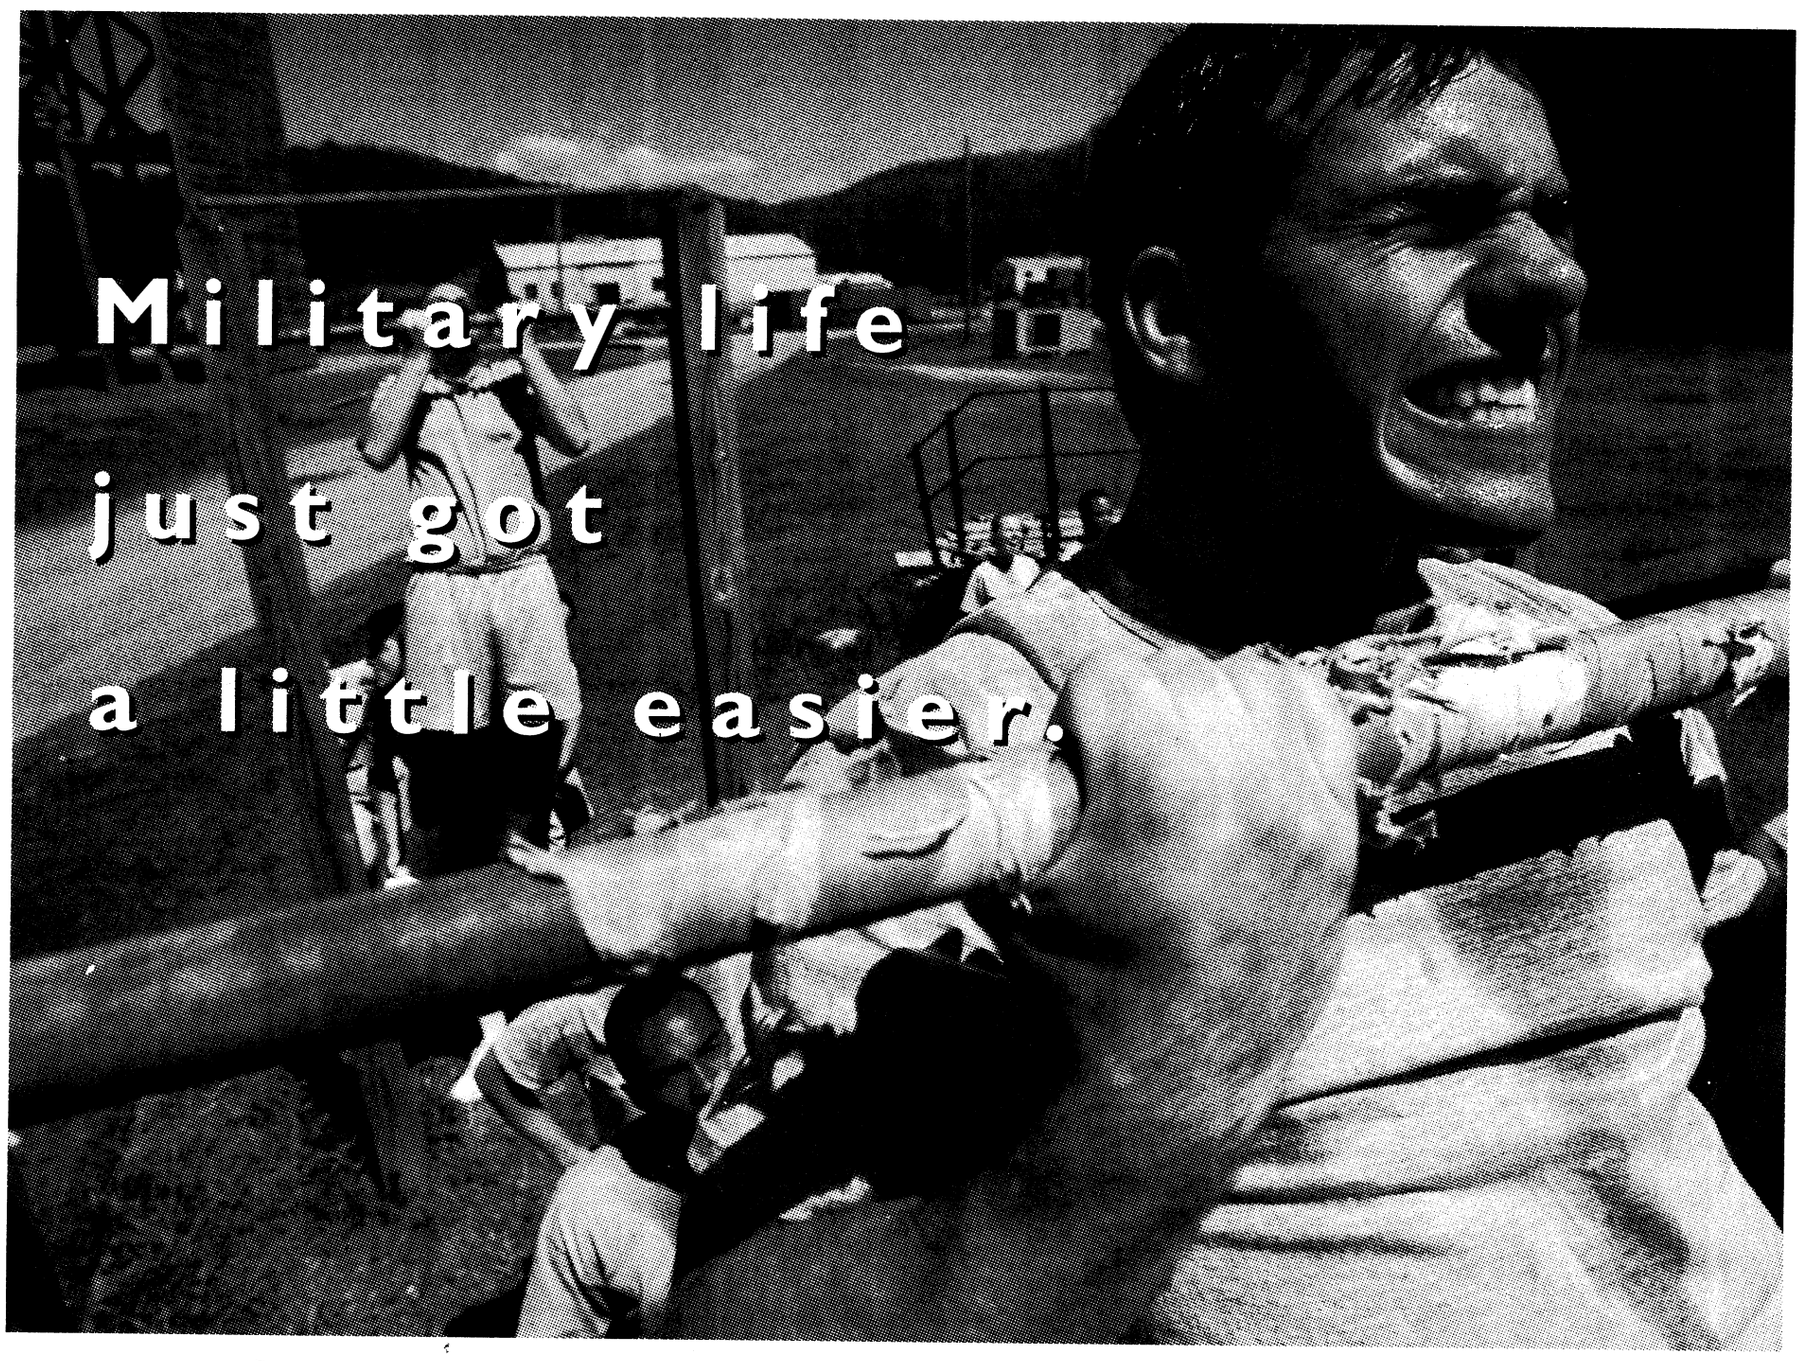
Sargent received the Hughes Trophy Award from Lt. Gen. Frederick E. Vollrath, the Deputy Chief of Staff for personnel, during an Oct. 3 Pentagon ceremony. The trophy is presented annually to the previous year's outstanding Army ROTC commissioned graduate for academic achievements.

During the ceremony, Sargent recounted how he and his wife, Christine, had discussed his dream of attending college and becoming a commissioned officer when he was stationed at Fort Campbell, Ky.

"I wanted to accomplish more and I thought I could have a greater influence on the things around me as an officer," Sargent said. "If you want to get ahead, you have to set goals and use perseverance to achieve them."

Sargent persevered in ROTC. He compiled a 4.0 grade-point average at UT and was highlighted in "Who's Who in American Colleges" for two straight years. Sargent also garnered the Joe Barr award for achieving the highest APFT score at advanced camp in 1995. He also earned the George C. Marshall award as the most outstanding cadet at Tampa for 1995-96.

Vollrath said Sargent is a young man of "extraordinary ability and achievement," adding that he was "truly impressed" with the junior officer. While helping to support his wife and four children, Sargent worked a full-time job as he earned a physical education degree and an active-Army commission.



Sargent plans to stay in the Army "until retirement," he said. His varied interests, he said, cause him to wish he had "three lifetimes."

"I'd like to study law, teach at West Point (and) be a foreign area officer, maybe in China," he said.

Sargent offered some advice to soldiers and NCOs who'd like to emulate his achievements.

"There's no reason why you can't do what I did," he said. "With me, it was a 'sink or swim' situation."

"I don't think I've known anybody who works as hard as Jeffrey," Christine Sargent said of her husband. "When he decides he is going to make something happen, he just works out a plan and does it."

Fort Benning Schools present the Parent Academy — The Parent Academy, a weekend seminar for Fort Benning parents, will take place at Faith Middle School Friday night and Saturday.

The Parent Academy is free and is open to all Fort Benning parents and personnel.

Free child care will also be provided for children aged six weeks to 11 years of age. Space in the Parent Academy will be limited.

Reservations will be required. These reservations will be taken on a first-come, first served basis.

For more information, call Gail Wilson, director of Staff Development, at 545-8245.

Fort Benning Girl Scouts to collect toys — The Fort Benning Girl Scouts will collect new or almost new stuffed toys for Santa's Castle Nov. 2-8.

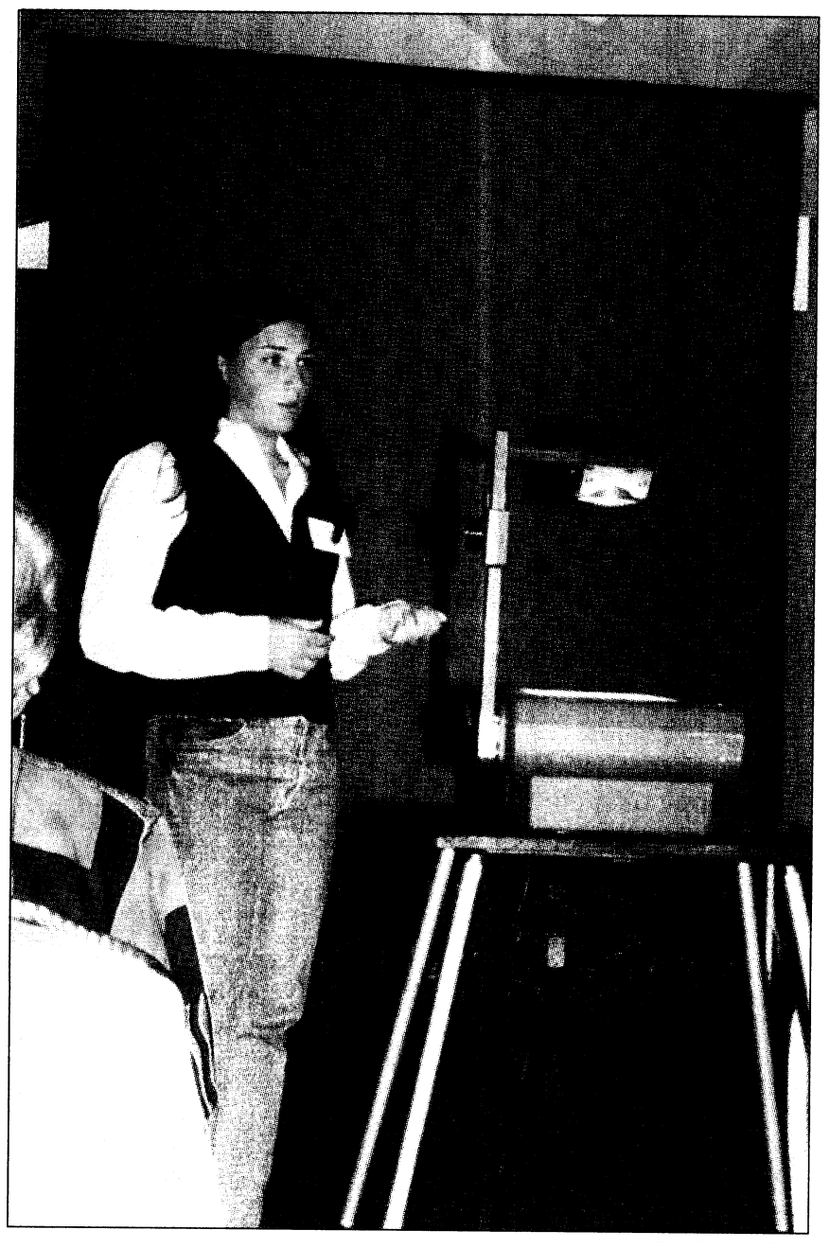
For more information, call Cindy Lefler at 682-3913.

Fort Benning annual bazaar needs crafters — Fort Benning's annual craft bazaar is 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. Nov. 15. in Infantry Hall.

All the proceeds go to the Officers' Wives' Club scholarship and welfare projects.

For more information or to request a crafter contract, call Judith Markelz at 687-7246 or Brenda Barger at 568-8921.

Post prepares for Halloween — Halloween "trick or treating," will be from 6 to 8 p.m. Oct. 31, in post housing areas. "Trick or treat" activities are limited to children under 13 years of age. Preschool children must be accompanied by an older person (14 years or older). Residents should limit "trick or treating" only to the housing area in which the participants reside, and approach only residences with lighted entry ways.



Light-colored, fire resistant costumes, short enough to prevent tripping, should be worn by children. Costumes can be marked with reflective tape or 'glow' spray paint so they can pick up auto headlights and other lights.

Observe all basic safety precautions. Use sidewalks and crosswalks; don't cut through yards. Look in all directions before walking across the street. Ensure pet owners take measures to prevent pets from being a nuisance or a menace to children.

Caution children about the wrongs of vandalism and causing damage to the property of others. Ensure children carry flashlights after dark and that every safety precaution is taken when crossing streets. Motorists must be alert on Halloween during the hours of 6 to 8 p.m. Parents should inspect all "treats" prior to their children eating them. Give your child a full meal before he or she goes "trick or treating."

Education 2000 Team visit collects ideas

Staff Sgt. Lori Egan

Meghan Ferriter, a student at Columbus High School, presents the high school group's issues and recommendations for the Education 2000 Team symposium Oct. 8 at the Fort Benning Officers' Club.

By Staff Sgt. Lori Egan
Bayonet editor

"Children are always the only future the human race has — teach them well," said Commanding General Maj. Gen. Carl F. Ernst.

With this dictum in mind, educators, parents and students met to discuss the educational requirements of Army children during the Education 2000 Team visit and symposium Oct.7-8.

The mission of the symposium was to find out what issues military children deal with during their school age years.

The Education 2000 Team mission is to identify the core factors that predict overall wellness and promote academic success for Army youths in grades K through 12, said Capt. Brenda Hickey, special assistant, Office of the Chief of Staff of the Army.

The team, which included Mary Jo Reimer, David White, Family Liaison Office; P.K. Tomlinson, a representative from Community and Family Support Center; and Hickey visited Fort Benning on a fact-finding mission.

"After the team goes to three or four more installations, we hope to assimilate all the information," Hickey said. "We believe there will be similar patterns. The final report will be disseminated through Department of Defense Education Activity and Department of Defense Dependent Schools to the Army course of Action who handles educational issues we hope to make the issue of transitioning students more visible."

More than 80 people from the tricommunity of Fort Benning, Columbus and Phenix City were divided into six groups and asked to brainstorm concerns related to the military child and then present their ideas and recommendations to the Education 2000 Team. (See the box below.)

According to Mary Parker, the facilitator for the parents of gifted students, an additional purpose was to develop systems and processes.

"This would help resolve transition issues for military students that we can share with state governors, Department of Defense schools and other school districts," she said.

"Military children are in transition more often than a lot of the population but they aren't the only students in transition. Hopefully this information can be applied to a wider group."

The six groups were: parents of high school students, high school students, parents of middle school students, parents of exceptional family members, parents of gifted students and professionals.

Ernst said the symposium's mission is an appropriate task and fits in well with the president's initiative on education.

Reimer asked that the issues from the symposium be brought up through the Army Family Action Plan process, beginning on the local level.

"We have never had many educational issues that surfaced from our AFAP program," she said. "(The AFAP was) able to change congressional law — that takes a long time to do but these are not quick fixes. We are willing to begin to work on changing the necessary laws.

"Somethings can be done right here at Fort Benning. Some of these are not easy fixes but they need to come up through the AFAP process because then they are accountable and are reviewed by the General Officers Steering Committee in Washington twice a year."

Issues and recommendations from the Education 2000 team symposium

HIGH SCHOOL STUDENTS

Lack of School Information
- •School packet and web page
  - Course, graduation requirements
  - Course outlines
  - Extracurricular activities
  - Student handbook, floor plan and map of whole campus
- •Alternative assignments for transfer students
  - Supply supplemental materials for students

Inefficiency of school counselors
- •Establish contact and continue relationships throughout high school careers
  - Recognize struggling students
  - Available during posted hours
  - Resolve scheduling conflicts
- •Understanding problems of military students
  - Recognize emotional and academic problems
- •Increase ratio of counselors to students

Student involvement
- •Student hospitality committee, big brother and big sister program, student guide
- •New student orientation and video
- •Flow of information
  - General information bulletin board
  - Flyers
  - Notices posted in classrooms
  - Teacher announcements

HIGH SCHOOL PARENTS

Universal graduation requirements
- •Waive state specific requirements, i.e. state history, P.E.
- •Liaison between post and school districts. School board voting and non-voting member
- •Establish an agreement between the state Department of Education that rising seniors are allowed to graduate with prior school requirements if not possible to meet standards of new school.
- •Universal exit exams

Transfer issue
- •Liaison between post and school districts
- •Establish an exception to policy for entrance into honors and magnet programs
- •Parents must be advocates for their children
- •Spencer send representative to new spouses orientation

Emotional and social issue
- •Liaison between post and school districts
- •Establish web page and chat room
- •Schools would set up sponsorship programs
- •Informal post and school get-togethers for all grade levels

Command support
- •Liaison between post and school districts
- •Annual Army Family action Plan educational conferences and follow up
- •Command supporting parental involvement (PTA meetings, parent conferences, mentoring programs)

EFMP

Graduation requirements
- •Standardize graduation requirements in Conus and Overseas
  - Provide appropriate modifications for special education students
  - Standardized requirements in place by 2000
  - Appoint a committee made up of regular educators, special educators, parents and students to develop those requirements

Maintain and expand communication
- •Continue to maintain parent and school communication, which is going well
  - Implement informal parent support groups (to include command support) to improve awareness and understanding of family needs
  - Designate a liaison at the medical end EFMP to network with parents, educators and commanders

Transfer issues
- •Improve transfer procedures for special education records and curriculum offerings
  - Establish a procedure so that the receiving school has a copy of the current IEP and eligibility report from the student's first day of attendance.
  - Establish interstate agreements to accept similar course credits Eliminate mid-year PCS moves for families with special education students

PROFESSIONALS

Integrate students into a new system
- •Identify a key person in each school system serving military children as a liaison and advocate for the student
- •Avoid mid-year moves
- •Align curricula towards national standards

Lack of consistent reliable means of providing information to transferring students
- •Develop a school transition program for students
- •Establish a national information office (800-INTERNET)
- •Create checklist for in and out processing
- •Expand sponsorship program, including family members

Transferring causes anxiety for children
- •Establish a "buddy system" in schools to acclimate new students
- •Promote parental involvement through command support
- •Reduce number of mid year moves for families with school age children

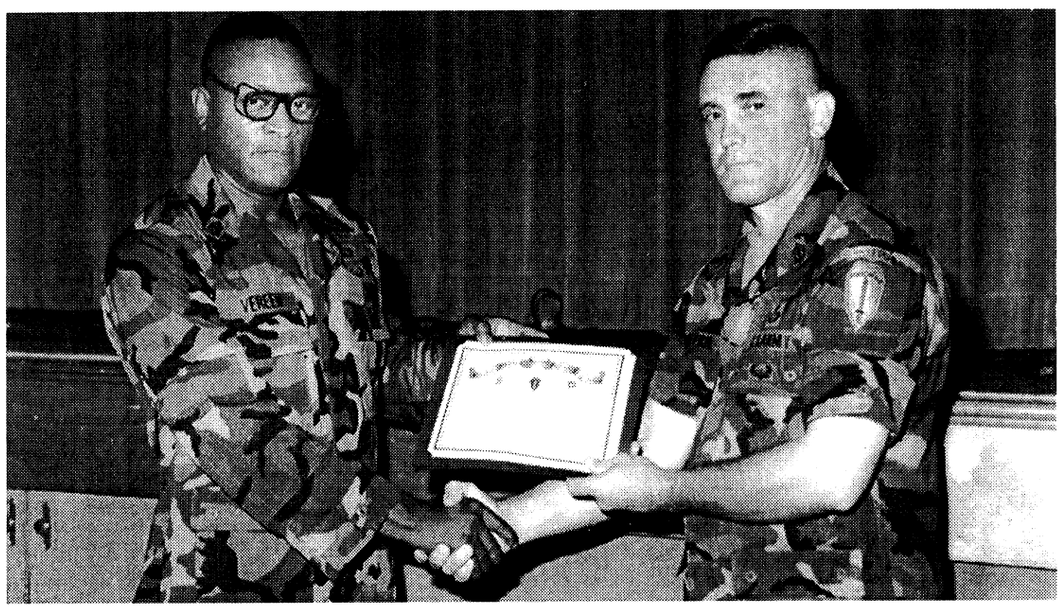
PARENTS OF GIFTED STUDENTS

Transition of gifted students
- •National eligibility criteria for gifted
- •Multiple criteria should include achievement, ability, creativity and motivation

Gifted curriculum for K-2 students
- •For k-2, provide resource model "pull out" based on teacher recommendation and or classroom performance.
- •Provide self contained classroom for upper elementary students
- •Provide honor and AP classes for middle and high school

Parents not aware of gifted education details
- •Provide parent orientation
- •Advertise the criteria prior to registration
- •Provide qualifying testing prior to the start of classes.

MIDDLE SCHOOL PARENTS

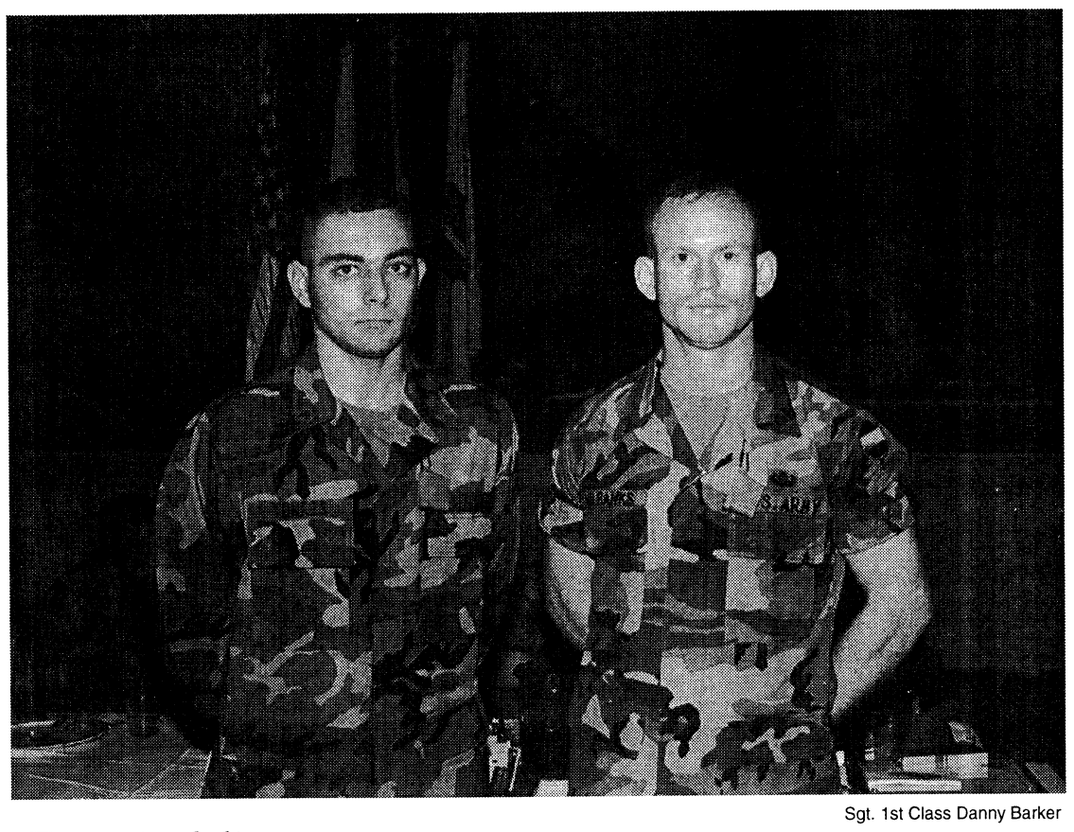


Placement and curriculum continuity
- •Develop universal student's portfolio (samples of school work and test)
- •Accept tests and recommendations from other schools
- •Administer placement test before school starts
- •Encourage schools to acknowledge parent input in placement
- •Establish standard grading scales

Transfer student information
- •Develop and use interactive schools' web pages to include comprehensive information for incoming students
- •Provide orientation for new students and assign sponsors
- •Establish a more timely and accurate notification of pinpoint assignments
- •Target housing assignments more effectively to identify school

Need for stability in school years
- •Maximize use of deferments for children's educational needs on a case by case basis
- •Minimize mid-year transfers to provide educational stability

Social and emotional needs
- •Establish support groups for children and caregivers with absent parents
- •Broaden local exposure to surrounding culture to facilitate familiarization, overall sense of belonging and acceptance
- •Establish student exchange between local schools and establish peer counselor groups
- •Develop school uniform policy to reduce isolation and encourage blending of student body
- •Promote awareness of resources available in military and civilian communities



Off post families
- •Establish policies allowing military families residing off post to use post schools, day care and latch key programs
- •Provide transportation for extra curricular activities.

FAMILY ADVOCACY PROGRAM

FAP answers questions about domestic violence

Family Advocacy Program

October is Domestic Violence Awareness Month Army-wide. The theme for this year is: "The Power to Prevent Domestic Violence Begins with Me."

Rebecca S. Welch, Family Advocacy Program manager, Army Community Services, provides answers to some commonly asked questions about domestic abuse

Is domestic violence really such a big problem?

In this country, a woman is more likely to be assaulted, injured, raped, or killed by a male partner than by any other type of assailant. Domestic violence is believed to be the most common yet least reported crime in our nation. An estimated three to four million American women are beaten each year by their husbands or partners. The U.S. Surgeon General identified domestic violence as a major health problem to women.

Wife-beating results in more injuries requiring medical treatment than rape, auto accidents, and muggings combined. Each year, more than 1,000 women-or about four women per day-are killed by their husbands or partners. Domestic violence is indeed a serious national problem that affects not only individual victims, but the entire community as well.

Isn't domestic violence mostly a low-income or minority issue?

Domestic violence occurs among all sectors of society. It happens to people of all racial, economic, and religious groups. However, low income battered women are more likely to seek assistance from public agencies, such as shelters and hospital emergency rooms, because they have fewer private resources than middle- and upper-income women. They are therefore more likely to be counted in official reporting statistics.

Aren't husbands and wives equally violent?

In about five percent of reported domestic assaults, the offender is the male victim's wife or female partner. It is known women generally resort to physical force in self-defense. Also, it is known that men who batter deny and minimize their acts of violence. Moreover, more than 80 percent of violent crimes that occur outside the home are committed by males. Why would women be so violent in the home, yet generally peaceful outside of it?

Don't most women ask for it?

No one wants to be emotionally or physically abused by her partner. Staying in the relationship has much more to do with emotional ties, traditional values about marriage and parenthood, fear, money or the lack of it, and religion.

Choosing not to leave an abusive partner does not mean you are stupid, weak, or naive. It does not mean that you are asking for anything, except to have a loving, fulfilling relationship with someone you care about and chose as a partner.

If the abuse is so bad, why do women stay in these relationships?

Actually, many women do leave their abusers. In one study of 205 battered women, more than 50 percent left the relationship. Moreover, we will never know about the countless number of divorced women who choose not to identify abuse as the reason they ended their marriages.

Battered women, in general, do not passively endure physical abuse, but actively seek assistance in ending the violence from a variety of sources, including police, lawyers, health care personnel, family members and the clergy. Frequently, it is the failure of these individuals and systems to provide adequate support which traps women in violent relationships. A study of more than 6,000 battered women in Texas found that on average, the women had contacted five different sources of help prior to leaving the home and becoming residents of battered women's shelters.

Certainly, many battered women also suffer in silence and endure physical abuse for a variety of reasons:

•A battered woman frequently faces the most physical danger when she attempts to leave. She may be threatened with violence and death or attacked if she tries to flee. She fears for her safety, her children's safety, and the safety of those who help her.

•For many women, leaving may not be an alternative. There may be nowhere to go and little or no resources in the community to help battered women.

Because of religious, cultural, or socially learned beliefs, a woman may feel it is her duty to keep the marriage at all costs.

•Many women want the violence, not the relationship to end. They may take many steps to try to stop the abuse: leaving the home may be their last resort.

•Some women will endure physical and emotional abuse to keep the family together for the children's sake. Very often, it is when the violence is directed at her children that she will take them and leave. More than half of the children whose mothers are battered also are victims of physical abuse.

•A woman may be financially dependent on her husband. She will probably face severe economic hardship if she chooses to support herself and her children on her own.

Aren't battered women's shelters just band-aids for the problem?

Battered women's shelters are not "band-aid" solutions to domestic violence, but important life-saving responses to the problem, just as ambulances and hospital emergency rooms respond to medical crises. Shelters are a critical component of the community's efforts to ensure the safety and protection of victims. Making available safe havens for battered women and their children is essential to ensure such protection, particularly for low-income women who may lack the resources to find safety elsewhere. Shelters not only offer women refuge, but other essential supportive services, including legal, economic, housing, and medical advocacy; court accompaniment; employment and job training assistance; support groups for residents and nonresidents; and child care and special children's counseling programs.

Beyond performing crisis intervention and providing essential victim services, shelters are important grassroots efforts towards effecting the social change that is necessary to prevent and ultimately end domestic violence. For example, advocates for battered women, working through shelter programs, have worked to pass important state and federal legislation on domestic violence. In addition, shelters are focal points for educating the community about critical issues, training of law enforcement, and other professionals who often confront domestic violence in their work, and for establishing and monitoring counseling and education programs for abusers.

Will the abuse happen again?

You may wonder what will happen if you confront your abuser. Sometimes the batterer will try to use excuses to rationalize his behavior. He may try to trick you by a sorrowful attitude. Or, he may "hook you" by convincing you that you are the only person who can help him change his behavior.

Have you ever thought to yourself, "He promised me that he would never hurt me again?" The batterer may truly believe he will never beat his lover again. He may believe he will be able to control himself in the future. He may believe he has taught his partner enough of a lesson so that she doesn't "tempt" him into violence. He may try to control you by appearing vulnerable, needy, and pitiful. Since women are great at nurturing, they usually respond to the weak, emotional sides of their batterer.

You may want to believe the excuses — he is sorry and will change, his workload or his drinking is to blame, his children need him, that he needs help to change. Sometimes you may begin to assume responsibility for any punishment the batterer receives. You may see yourself as the one who must stay by your partner while he gets the help he needs so desperately. You need to remind yourself, you are not responsible.

For more information on domestic violence, call the Family Advocacy Program at 545-3344.

Self-examination key in breast cancer detection

Martin Army Community Hospital

Oct. 19, 1993 was proclaimed the first National Mammography Day in history by the President of the United States because too many women were dying from breast cancer detected late. The objective then, as it is today, is to encourage women to protect themselves against breast cancer by getting regularly scheduled mammograms, practicing monthly breast self-examination (BSE), and having annual clinical breast examinations — what is known as the "triad of techniques" recommended by the American Cancer Society.

Mammography alone, however, is not always enough. Almost 10 percent of all breast cancers are not detectable by a mammogram, so the practice of breast self-examination and clinical exams in concert with screening is crucial.

The Radiology Department of Martin Army Community Hospital (MACH) joins the National Breast Cancer Awareness Month Board of Sponsors urging women to ask their health care providers how to properly practice BSE — something easily demonstrated during a clinical exam or mammogram — and about the appropriate timing of screening mammography. Experts agree regular screening mammograms are the most effective means of finding breast cancer early.

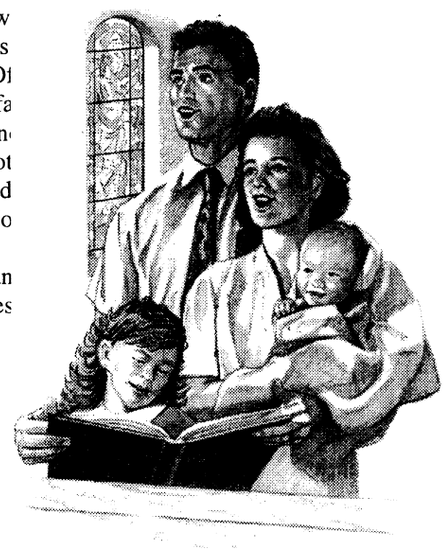
Materialism can keep us from enjoying what we have

By Chaplain (Capt.) Steve Bounds
3rd Bde. 3rd Inf. Div. (Mech)



There seems to be a lot of concern today about things. Materialism takes a strong grip on our society.

reflections

We always feel that we must have the best and the newest of whatever comes out. We work more and more for things that we want to enjoy. We think we need a second or third job to pay for them. Then we spend so much time working that we don't have time to enjoy our things. Before we know it, our things begin to possess us rather than our possessing them.

There's also the temptation to keep up with the proverbial "Jones family." Our neighbors buy something really nice because one of their friends has one. Now we think that we must have one because they do. Someone once said, "We often spend money we don't have to buy things we don't really need in order to impress people we don't even like."

Before we know it, all this begins to affect our family lives. The spouse decides to get a job to help pay the bills. Then we pay someone else to provide child-care w both parents working. Of course the fa must buy an car since bot parents need transportatio work.

Newer an nicer clothes become a necessity because everyone wants to dress as nice as those with whom we work.

Since both parents are working there is little time to prepare meals so we spend two to three times as much for groceries.

Then the bank statement and bills come. We scratch our heads as we try to figure out why we're deeper in debt since taking the second job. The discussion turns into arguments as each one blames the other.

Perhaps the best thing we could do is simplify our lives.

As I think back to my childhood, I remember how happy our family was. We were never in poverty, but we didn't have all the newest things. We were country people. Our black and white television could only pick up one channel.

Our air conditioning system was a window fan. My brother and I would get into trouble for shooting peas and watching them ricochet off the blades and through the house.

Dad always had a good job and Mom wanted to stay at home with the kids.

He would buy a new car with only standard features. We would plant a big garden every summer which kept us all busy chopping the weeds out with a hoe. We also had our own milk cow.

We always had plenty of fresh vegetables from the garden, fruit from our trees, meat that we grew and slaughtered, honey from our bee hives, as well as fresh milk and homemade butter. Oh — let's not forget the homemade ice cream.

We didn't have all things that we do today, but we were happy. We always had enough to meet our needs. Most important, we had time to spend together as a family.

We worked together at our chores. We played together through athletic sports as well as fishing and hunting. In the evenings we would gather for family time at the supper table and afterwards would pull out a table game, sing around the piano or listen to Dad read his Bible.

We watched very little TV, but we did enjoy watching Gunsmoke and Bonanza. I enjoyed trying to beat the bad guys to the draw with my toy six-gun. Sunday church services were also an important part of our lives.

Perhaps our lives would be healthier and happier today if we would return to a simpler way of living.

Maybe we should spend less time accumulating things and more time enjoying our families.

Time keeps moving, we keep getting older and our children keep growing up. Before we know it, they will be grown and on their own. We need to enjoy the time we have together and prepare them for the future.

Most importantly, we need to spend time with God and teach our children to do the same. If we will seek after God and learn to love and live for Him, then He will take care of all of our needs and will give us a truly blessed life.

Matthew 6:31 & 33 tells us: "Therefore take no thought, saying, What shall we eat? or, What shall we drink? or Wherewithal shall we be clothed? ... But seek ye first the kingdom of God, and his righteousness; and all these things shall be added unto you."

Directorate of Public Works Information Corner 'Essayons'

Directorate of Public Works

This week's article provides information on setting clocks back to Eastern Standard Time, Fort Benning's Hazardous Material Control Center, fluorescent tube containers and bathtub and fixture replacement in family housing areas.

Replace smoke detector battery with time change

When you set your clock back Oct. 26 for EST take time to change the battery and clean your smoke detector. It could save your life.

Hazardous and non-hazardous waste turn-in

One of most time-consuming tasks in environmental management for military and civilian activities is the turn-in of hazardous and non-hazardous waste. During staff assistance visits, the Environmental Quality Control Committee (EQCC), and the courtesy inspections conducted by the hazardous waste program managers, this topic always comes up.

The Environmental Programs Management Branch worked to find a solution to the problems encountered by units and activities regarding turn-in of hazardous waste. Fort Benning was chosen by the Army Environmental Center (AEC) as one of the test sites for the implementation of the Hazardous Substance management System (HSMS). This software system will be used to track hazardous materials at the new Hazardous Material Control Center (HMCC), to be opened later this year. Use of this system opened the door for funding and implementation assistance from the AEC. TRADOC endorsed the concept of a HMCC at Fort Benning and is offering their assistance. Because of all the support available from these agencies the opening of the HMCC is on the near-horizon.

The HMCC will operate with both a supply function and a waste function. The intent is to reduce the amount of excess hazardous material throughout the installation and thus reduce the amount of hazardous waste generated. There will be a system for turn-in of excess material which will allow another activity to withdraw that material. For example, units will be able to bring in partial cans of paint or excess paint which will then be made available to anyone needing that type of paint.

DPW and DOL have been working to iron out all the details for the start-up of the HMCC. The HMCC, located on Main Post at Building 377, will become the point for turn-in of hazardous and non-hazardous wastes and excess materials.

The HMCC will accept all waste generated by units and activities, and the HMCC personnel will then complete the turn-in documentation and actual turn-in to the DRMO. The waste portion of the HMCC will be opened first since this is where the need seems to be most critical; units and activities will be phased in one at a time.

During the phase-in of units and activities for waste turn-in, the supply side of the HMCC will begin gearing up for full operation. In the final version of the HMCC you will have essentially "one stop shopping," for supply of hazardous materials and waste turn-in. Stand by for upcoming announcements regarding start-up dates and the phase-in of units and activities.

Disposal containers for fluorescent tubes

DPW frequently receives questions from units and activities on the proper way to package expired fluorescent tubes for turn-in to the DRMO as hazardous waste.

In general, the original packing containers should be used for turn-in of the tubes. These containers should be carefully taped up and labeled with a yellow hazardous waste label (taped on, as the stickers do not stick well to cardboard).

If the original packing containers are unavailable, and containers cannot be fabricated from excess cardboard, packing containers may be purchased from New Pig Manufacturing using the government credit card. The phone number is (800) hot-hogs.

These containers are made of fiber board and hold the tubes in place, preventing breakage. In the coming months, we will begin working with DPW Supply Division to have them begin carrying a few of these containers, though none are currently on-hand (we'll keep you posted). In addition, we are still looking for additional sources of packing cartons for tubes. Nonetheless, the best thing to use is your original carton, as it is free If you have any questions, call Mike Nuckols at 545-7570.

Bathtub and fixture replacement in family housing

DPW awarded a contract to replace unserviceable bathtubs in the following family housing areas during the next 12 months: Indianhead Terrace, McGraw Manor, Davis Hills-Bouton Heights, Custer Terrace, Upatoi Terrace and Perkins Place. The contractor for this project is Continental Flooring company. A representative of Continental Flooring will notify residents that will be impacted in advance to coordinate a convenient time for work to occur, which normally takes about three working days. Upon being notified that your bathtub will be replaced you will be given a date and requested to remove all personal items from the bathroom to avoid damage and to expedite repairs.

The contractor has been instructed to ensure that residents have a working bathroom at the end of each day. Representatives of Continental Flooring will have identification authorizing them to coordinate this work with residents. This identification will be available for your review upon request.

Bathtubs in other housing areas of the installation are not programmed to be replaced at this time. However, residents may contact the phone number below to have their tubs resurfaced.

Residents that feel their bathtub is unserviceable or needs to be resurfaced, call Martha Lyles, Family Housing Branch, at 545-2981 to set up an appointment to have your tub inspected.

Comments and questions

If you have questions or topics that you would like to be addressed in the DPW "Information Corner," please contact Glenn Todd, DPW customer relations specialist, 545-2117, or write to the Directorate of Public Works, Building 6, room 409, Attn: ATZB-PWM (Glenn Todd), Fort Benning, GA 31905.

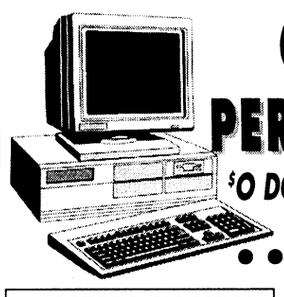
Eating healthy helps lower cancer risk

Georgia Department of Human Resources

Medical experts urge Americans to lower their risk for cancer by eating at least five servings of fruits and vegetables a day. One problem is that many people think they don't have time for healthy eating, according to Vera Green, 5 a Day coordinator for the Georgia Department of Human Resources (DHR) Office of Nutrition.

"The truth is, fruits and vegetables are some of the most convenient foods, even for people on the go," Green said. "For a snack or a fast meal, you can buy 100 percent juice, dried fruit, packages of prewashed and cut foods like carrots, and canned or frozen fruit and vegetables. At a restaurant, choose a salad, a baked potato or another vegetable instead of fries or chips."



Five servings sounds like a lot of food, but Green said that's not true. "When nutritionists talk about 'servings,' we mean just a half cup of cooked or canned vegetables, fruit, or cooked dried beans, or one cup of raw leafy vegetables. Three quarters of a cup of fruit or vegetable juice is one serving."

Green said there are many advantages to the 5 a Day diet.

"It's an important part of any weight control program," Green said, "because if you eat five fruits or vegetables a day, you'll be eating fewer fatty, high-calorie foods. You'll also have more fiber in your diet, as well as other nutrients that protect against certain kinds of cancer. And five is just a minimum. The more you substitute fruits and vegetables for other foods, the better."

According to the National Cancer Institute, the message seems to be reaching Americans. A United States Department of Agriculture study found that our average consumption of fruits and vegetables rose to about 4.4 servings in 1994, up from 3.9 at the start of the '90s.

For more information about the 5 a Day diet and other tips for healthy eating, call the NCI's Cancer Information service at (800) 4-CANCER.

Spencer posts weekly game schedule — Spencer High School recently announced its upcoming sports schedule.

In football action, Spencer takes on Dougherty High School at 7:30 p.m. tonight at Memorial Stadium.

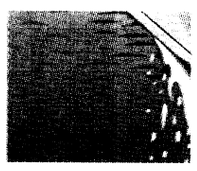
For more information, call 685-7652.

Fitness center changes hours — The Santiago Fitness Center changed its operating hours.

The new hours are 5:30 a.m. to 8 p.m. Mon. through Fri. and 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. weekends and holidays.

The new hours are effective Saturday.

For more information, call Hazel Henry at 544-9595 or 544-9486.



Army seeks spirit videos — It's that time of year again — time for the annual Army and Navy football classic. This year the two teams will meet on Dec. 6 at Giants Stadium (Meadowlands, East Rutherford, New Jersey).

Once again, the Armed Forces Press Service is asking for support in providing "Go Army — Beat Navy" spirit videos.

The videos will be used for national broadcast and by the Corps of Cadets during the Army and Navy Spirit Week activities. Videos should be 10-20 seconds on 3/4 inch or Beta Cam tape. Be sure to identify your unit and location; the more action, the better. All videos must be received by Nov. 10.

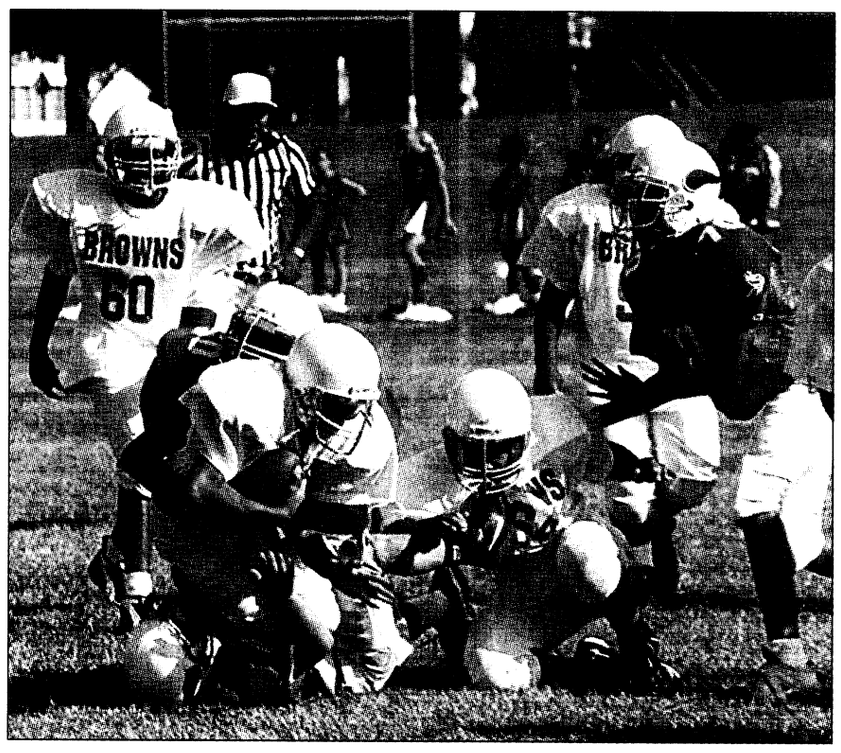
For more information, call Mike D'Aquino at DSN 688-2006 or commercial (914) 938-2006.

1/10th conducts tournament — The 1st Battalion, 10th Field Artillery, 3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division, will conduct a bass fishing tournament from 7 a.m. to 3 p.m. Oct. 25 at the Uchee Creek Recreation Area.

Cost for the tournament is $50 per team with a payout of 30 percent for first place, 15 percent for second play and 10 percent for third place.

An additional 45 percent of the proceeds will be donated to Santa's Castle.

For more information, call 544-2656.



Basketball registration set — The Youth Services begins basketball registration Oct. 27 at Youth Services, Building 1056. Registration ends Nov. 7.

Registration is open to family members ages 6-15 of active duty, retired military and Department of Defense civilian personnel.

Coaches are also needed for the upcoming season.

For more information, call 545-3070.

Vikings players take down a Browns ball carrier Oct. 11 during a 11- to 13-year-old Youth Services tackle football game on Blue Field. The Vikings won the game 12-0.

Jaguars roll over Lions 26-0 in Youth Services football

By John W. Peeler
Special to the Bayonet©

The Youth Services continued its football program Oct. 11 with six games in the flag and tackle leagues.

In the 9- to 11-year-old tackle football league, the Jaguars bolted past the Lions 26-0. The Jaguars offense went in to a scoring frenzy while the defense held the Lions offense scoreless and playing in their end of the field for most of the game. In the late 9- to 11-year-old game, the Cowboys performed a similar feat to Oct. 4 by shutting out the Panthers 32-0.

In the 11- to 13-year-old tackle football league, the Vikings defeated the Browns 12-0. For the Vikings, quarterback Bryant Butler scored on a long run in the first half and running back Leo Crawford added a 40-yard touchdown run in the second half for the victory. In the early game, the Cowboys squeaked past the Steelers 12-6 to remain unbeaten.

In the 6- to 8-year-old flag football league, the Vikings remained unbeaten by defeating the Bulldogs 19-6 and Packers easily defeated the Cowboys 21-0.

Youth Services continues its fall football schedule Saturday with six games scheduled on Blue Field beginning at 9 a.m.

Soccer season also continues at French Field with a complete schedule of games beginning at 9 a.m.

For more information on this week's football and soccer schedule, call 545-3070.

Benning's best bodies compete in bodybuilding championships

By John W. Peeler
Special to the Bayonet©

Bodybuilders from the tricommunity area compete Saturday for the 14th annual Fort Benning Bodybuilding Championships Oct. 18 at the Main NCO Club, Building 2784.

The competition will crown Mr. and Ms. Fort Benning with awards presented in individuals categories as well.

The event is open to active duty personnel, family members, civilians, Department of Defense personnel and retirees.

Weigh-ins take place at the Main NCO Club from 9 to 11 a.m. Saturday with prejudging beginning at noon for the women's categories and 12:30 p.m. for the men's categories.

Final competition begins at 7:30 p.m..

Registration is $35 for a single category and $10 for each additional crossover. Registration will continue until 11 a.m. Saturday.

Checks should be made out to the Morale, Welfare and Recreation Fund and mailed to Directorate of Community Activities, Community Recreation Division, Sports Branch, Building 241, Fort Benning, GA., 31905.

Cost for the event is $2 for the prejudging show and $5 for the evening show, which begins at 7:30 p.m.

Awards will be provided to the top three in each category, plus the top two in the 35 and over age group.

Shooters win matches

USAMU Public Affairs Office

Shooters of the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit of Fort Benning have scored some major victories in the past few weeks. The following results are some of their recent accomplishments:

•National Rifle Team Selection Matches, Atlanta, Oct. 11 and 12 — Kenneth A. Johnson not only was the overall winner of the Air Rifle Match, he also tied the Wolf Creek Olympic Shooting Complex record with a score of 596 points in the Oct. 12 rifle match; Jason A. Parker finished in second place and Timothy R. Manges was third. Glenn A. Dubis won the Prone and Three-position matches with Stephen C. Goff in third place in both matches.

•International Monthly Pistol Match, Atlanta, Oct. 10 to 12 — Eric G. Daniels won both the Rapid Fire and the Center Fire matches and Carl W. Trompeter II finished second in the Rapid Fire Match and third in the Center Fire Match after Stephen M. King who was second. Daryl L. Szarenski won the Standard and Free Pistol matches followed by King in second place and Travis A. Jorgenson in third. Jorgenson won the Junior Men's Sport Pistol Competition followed by Terry S. Bradley in second place. Rhonda L. Bright finished in third place in the Women's Air Pistol Match.

Military honored at Winston Cup race

Atlanta Motor Speedway

With the NAPA 500, the season-ending NASCAR Winston Cup championship showdown, once again scheduled the same week as Veterans' Day, the Atlanta Motor Speedway will continue its tradition of honoring all military personnel and veterans.

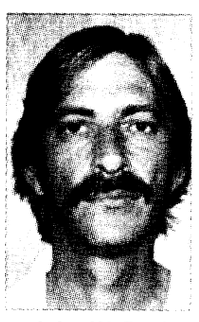
All active duty military personnel and veterans will be the special guests of Atlanta Motor Speedway for NAPA 500 Pole Day Nov. 14 and will be admitted free. Atlanta Motor Speedway is also offering military personnel and veterans tickets to the ARCA 400 Nov. 15 for $15, half of the regular admission price at the gate.

Atlanta Motor Speedway's invitation for free admission on NAPA 500 Pole Day and the special $15 ticket for the ARCA 400 is extended to all active duty, retired or former military personnel.

NAPA 500 Pole Day will mark the first day of competition on the reconfigured 1.54-mile Atlanta Motor Speedway quad-oval. Military guests who wish to take advantage of this special offer should report to any gate numbered 12-15 at Atlanta Motor Speedway Nov. 14 for NAPA 500 Pole Day or to the special military and veterans window at Gate 13 for the ARCA 400 Nov. 15 with a valid photo identification and one of four forms of military identification:

•Laminated green card — active duty or reserve personnel;

•Laminated blue card — retired personnel;



•Laminated red card — inactive reserve personnel; or

•Honorable discharge — all other former military personnel.

Fans without military experience who wish to attend NAPA 500 Pole Day, the ARCA 400 or the NAPA 500 can purchase tickets in advance by calling the Atlanta Motor Speedway Ticket Office at (770) 946-4211.

Army lieutenants place first in male, female categories during 10-Miler

By Gerry J. Gilmore
Army News Service

WASHINGTON — Two active-duty Army lieutenants, one male, one female, placed first overall in their respective categories Sunday at the 13th Annual Army Ten-Miler "Run the River Bridges" race.

Although Fort Benning did not place any runners in the top 10 individual finishers, the Follow Me men's team finished in 8th place, two ITB teams finished in 22nd and 24th place and the women's team finished in 12th place in team competition.

Two other notable teams with Fort Benning roots, the 1st Ranger Battalion team A and the 1st Ranger Battalion team B, finished the team competition in 15th and 28th place respectively.

The Men's Division and overall winner was the Army's Dan Browne, 22, Fort Lee, Va., who crossed the finish line at 47:44, a new course record. At last year's 10-Miler, Michael Bernstein, 53rd Quartermaster Company, 13th Corps Support Command, Fort Hood, Texas, placed first with a 47:59 time. This year, the 24-year-old Bernstein, placed second behind Browne with a 48:00 time.

"The race was very close," said Browne, who graduated from the U.S. Military Academy at West Point, N.Y., in June. He is currently attending the Officer Basic Course at the Quartermaster School. "We [Browne and Bernstein] were locked side-by-side from about four miles until eight miles [during the race].

"At about the eight-mile mark, I put in a couple of surges. On the third one, I was able to break away and that was the difference."

Christine Udovich, 31, a registered Army nurse stationed at Fort Lewis, Wash., was the first female runner to cross the finish line at 56:58. Udovich, who works at Madigan Army Medical Center, also took the Women's Division top slot at last year's 10-Miler, with a 58:35 time. This year, Donna Moore from Kensington, Md., placed second after Udovich in the Women's Division with a 58:19 time.

"I've been training pretty hard; [and] I was able to cut 1:40 off [last year's] time," Udovich said. "I love running. It takes a lot of dedication and discipline. It also takes patience because it takes time to get good."

Although this was his first Army 10-Miler, Browne has competed in long-distance races "since high school," he said.

"I wasn't worried about specific strategy, I just wanted to run relaxed at the beginning of the race [and] stay in contact with the leaders," Browne said. "I had sort of planned to see what the people out front were made of at about two miles to go in the race."

This year's Ten-Miler featured a total of 11,035 runners, 2,000 more than last year, who competed in several categories. The race began at the Pentagon at 8 a.m., and it took five minutes for all of the participants to cross the starting line.

The route ran over Memorial Bridge to Independence Avenue and Ohio Drive circling around East Potomac Park and Hains Point, continuing past the new Franklin D. Roosevelt Memorial, across the 14th Street Bridge and back to the Pentagon for the finish.

Top finishers at the Army 10-Miler were:

Golf classic set — The National Multiple Sclerosis (MS) Society Georgia Chapter announces a partnership with Cap Gemini, an international consulting firm with its southeastern U.S. divisional offices in Atlanta.

The first annual Cap Gemini Classic Golf Classic is scheduled for Monday at Eagle's Landing Country Club in McDonough, Ga.

All tournament proceeds will benefit the research and programs of the National Society.

The tournament begins with a shotgun start at 12:30 p.m. and ends with a reception and awards ceremony at 7 p.m. Player slots begin at $250 per player, and corporate sponsorships are available. Hole sponsorships are also being solicited.

The National Society works to end the effects of multiple sclerosis. Multiple sclerosis is a chronic disease of the central nervous system. More than 30,000 Georgians are affected by multiple sclerosis. There is no known cause or cure, but there is hope through the MS Society's research.

For information about the Cap Gemini Golf Classic at Eagle's Landing, call Terri Pendergast at (770) 984-9080 or (800) 822-3379 toll free.

Hunter zero day begins — The U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit Service Rifle Team conducts a hunter zero day from 9 a.m. to 2 p.m. Saturday at English Range on Dixie Road.

Hunter zero day prepares hunters for the opening of deer season, which is Oct. 25 this year.

Members of the USAMU Service Rifle Team will help hunters zero their weapons and gunsmiths of the USAMU Custom Firearms Shop will inspect weapons to ensure their safety.

For more information, call the Service Rifle Team a 545-3853.

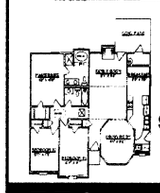
KNOW YOUR BUILDER

The Woodruff name has been associated with the home building industry in Columbus for the past 40 years. Our company represents the same high standard instilled by George's grandfather many years ago, in providing people from all walks of life the opportunity of owning a quality home.

It is not our company's goal to build the most homes in a year. It is, however, our goal to deal fairly with our customers and provide them with the best possible house for their money.

We believe one of the miracles of the construction industry is that workers, each skilled in different areas, can work together to create a dream born from a set of blueprints. Our job is to insure that this is done smoothly.

We provide a wide range of services such as mortgage assistance, custom designs and plans, selection of your homesite, decorating assistance and much more. We hope that you will allow us the opportunity of making your dream come true.



Sincerely,
George Woodruff, III

Retiree Open House set

By Erin A. Nash
Special to the Bayonet©

Retired military and family members from all branches of the military are invited to an open house today and Saturday.

Free physical examinations at Martin Army Community Hospital's Physical Examination Section, Building 323, are available for both men and women beginning at 8 a.m. today.

Participants can also visit Hurley Hill to watch a Rangers-in-Action demonstration beginning at 10 a.m.

After the demonstration, retirees and family are invited to dine with the rangers, for a small fee of $3 to $4, according to Freida McDonald, chief of Retirement Services.

Later that evening from 6 to 9 p.m. is what McDonald calls, "an icebreaker" at the National Infantry Museum. This gives retirees a chance to meet fellow soldiers and families and share histories and memories.

Breakfast is 7 to 8:30 a.m. Saturday in the Infantry Hall cafeteria, followed immediately by registration at Marshall Auditorium. Retired Col. Biff Hadden will introduce Commanding General Maj. Gen. Carl F. Ernst, who will present the Retirement Services Volunteer of the Year award and recognize nine three-war veterans of WWII, Korea, and Vietnam at 10:30 a.m. Retired Maj. Gen. Homer Smith will speak about military benefits, the loss and reduction of those benefits, and the importance of a strong national defense.

At 11:15 a.m. a health fair sponsored by the Preventive Maintenance Care Section of Martin Army Community Hospital will be available to update retirees on health care and benefits.

Pre-registration is going on now. For more information, retirees can call Staff Sgt. William Boynton at Retirement Services at 545-2541.

Trial begins Jan 6

By Sgt. 1st Class Lisa Hunter
Army News Service

FORT BELVOIR, Va. — A week after he was formally reassigned from his duties as the Sergeant Major of the Army, Command Sgt. Maj. Gene C. McKinney was arraigned Oct. 16 at Fort Belvoir, Va., where a military judge set his court-martial date for Jan. 6.

McKinney faces 20 specifications resulting from allegations made by six female service members, and a maximum of 56 years confinement if convicted of all charges.

The military judge, Col. Ferdinand Clervi, presided over the Oct. 16 arraignment and will preside over the court martial. Clervi met with the members of the prosecution and defense privately prior to the arraignment "to discuss administrative matters in the case."

Clervi set dates to hear motions of discovery prior to the beginning of the court martial. Clervi is chief circuit court judge for the 3rd Judicial Circuit, U.S. Army Trial Judiciary, Fort Hood, Texas. He is

SMA talks with Soldiers at conference

By Sgt. 1st Class Bill Costlow
Army News Service

WASHINGTON — He returned from the Middle East on Friday, spoke to Army Chief of Staff Dennis J. Reimer on Sunday and became the 11th Sergeant Major of the Army on Monday.

That's when Sgt. Major of the Army Robert E. Hall joined Chief of Staff Gen. Dennis J. Reimer at breakfast to make the announcement to NCOs attending this year's Association of the U.S. Army meeting here.

Since then, Hall has talked with virtually every Soldier and NCO of the Year from every command in the Army, most of the Army's sergeants major, and hundreds of others anxious to voice their hopes and concerns about the Army and its future. He shared his initial impressions today in a brief interview with the Army News Service.

"If I could say just one thing to Soldiers, it's "keep faith in the Army," he said. "We can read between the headlines of the newspapers and maybe think that the Army's going to hell in a hand basket — it's not."

"We'll have some troubled times ahead and it'll be busy, but, in almost 30 years in the Army, I don't remember a time when it hasn't been busy and there haven't been challenges."

Sgt. Maj. of the Army Robert E. Hall plans to continue to take care of Soldiers, something he's done since 1969.

Hall spoke of the NCOs and soldiers he met at AUSA's "Conference with Outstanding Soldiers," a scheduled meeting for him with staff sergeants and below, Tuesday morning.

"It was reassuring to me because those young Soldiers and noncommissioned officers have faith in the Army, and faith in their senior leadership," he said. "Those Soldiers are ready to take on any mission and they are looking for reassurances that senior leadership is looking out for the Army as well. What do I intend to do? The same thing that I've done since first becoming a sergeant in 1969: take care of Soldiers and families."

Hall, the Army's 1979 Drill Sergeant of the Year and member of the Sergeant Morales and Sergeant Audie Murphy Clubs, has a wealth of joint experience that makes him unique from his predecessors.

"All of our operations in the future are going to be joint," he said. "It does take a total force to make operations work.

"Now I'm coming back to the mainstream U.S. Army," he said, "and I'll work with command sergeants major, not just to ensure Soldiers pay and benefits, but to make sure the promotion opportunities, the schooling opportunities and all those other areas happen as well."

The charter given to Hall by Reimer during their hour-long conversation Sunday is to forcefully advocate the Soldiers' interest, something Hall plans to devote the rest of his career to.

"When I was with those 300 outstanding Soldiers Tuesday, that wasn't an opportunity for me to speak, it was an opportunity for me to listen," he said. "I heard the pride in their voices and I understand their concerns — and we'll work those concerns.

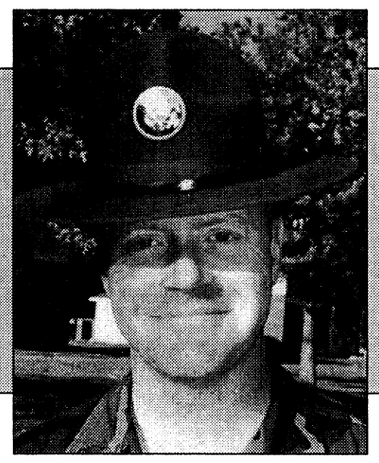
"My basic belief is the same as everybody's in the Army, that standards and the basic fundamentals of Soldiering are what's going to get us through the tough times that are coming down the road," Hall said.

SMA takes oath of office

Army News Service

WASHINGTON — Sergeant Major of the Army Robert E. Hall was sworn in Tuesday as the Army's top enlisted soldier in a brief Pentagon ceremony.

Army Chief of Staff Gen. Dennis J. Reimer administered the oath.

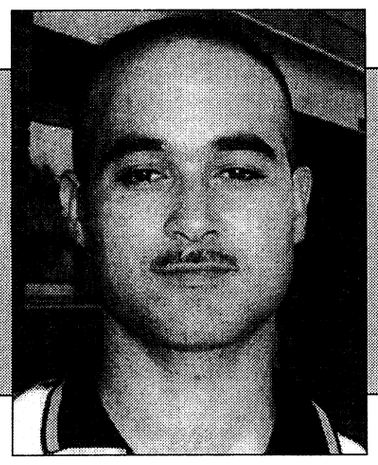


"The Sergeant Major of the Army is the Sergeant Major of the Total Army," said Reimer. "We're talking about Active, Army National Guard and the United States Army Reserve ... all those Soldiers. The Sergeant Major of the Army is a representative of them -and advisor to the Secretary and myself."

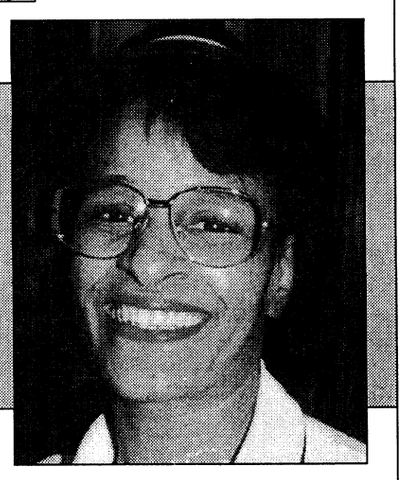
Reimer charged Hall with the responsibility of being with Soldiers, to get to know them, see what their concerns are and represent those concerns to Army leadership.

"We can't do a lot about making yesterday perfect," he said. "But we can do an awful lot about making tomorrow better."

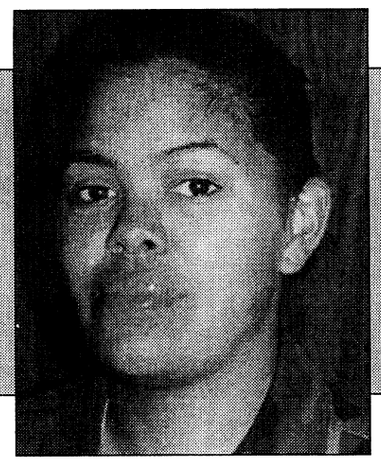
VARIOUS VOICES



What's the importance of charities in today's society?



Staff Sgt. John H. Stebbins, Company D, 1st Battalion, 19th Infantry Regiment — "Since the government can do less for the private citizen, it is up to us to give a little to get a lot. We all need some charity sometime or at least wanted it."



Vicki Driggers, nursing assistant at Dexter Elementary School, — "How else would those in need receive necessary help? For those who have plenty and are well off, it is their duty to help others."

Sgt. Ramon Rojas, Company A, 1st Battalion, 30th Infantry Regiment — "Charities are important because they help a segment of the population that is sometimes overlooked."

Angela Gray, family member — "I think the importance of charities is to help alleviate some of the burden of the city or state. It helps bring people and communities together — to show compassion towards others."

Sgt. Lynnette Brown, Company A, 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment — "To help the less fortunate. You have a good feeling when you're helping people. There is always somebody who needs help."

Rhonda Nicholson, family member — "There are needy people and children here in the U.S. We need to help and support and that's what charities help do."

Community's contributions cause cognizance

By Spc.Clyde Snively
Bayonet columnist

Describe the word "needy." Are you needy when you want a pack of smokes but can only come up with 50 cents?

commentary

Are you needy when you want to buy a JVC 32-inch television but can only afford a 17-inch Gold Star? Are you needy when you want a Jeep Cherokee but can only afford a used Neon?

You might be needy when your '86 Ford Tempo is in the local transmission shop, you're a month behind on the rent and your wife just got back from the hospital with, guess what, twins, and you're a specialist.

You might be needy if your father's run out on you, your mother spends her welfare checks on booze and drugs and you and your four siblings rely on neighbors for leftovers and handouts.

Or you might be needy if you're a North Korean five-year old who's had nothing to eat but bark and roots for 18 months.

I can't vouch for the first three categories, but chances are, United Way and the Combined Federal Campaign have got the last three covered. That is, if people like you and me, who are not needy come up with some shekels for CFC.

If you've ever sat through a sermon in church where money was the subject, you'll probably remember the preacher saying something about "giving until it hurts," or "give from your needs, not your excess."

I'm not necessarily advocating that line of thought, but I do believe that everyone should give something.

The permanent post population is about 25,000 soldiers and civilians. If each of these fine men and women contributed $20, we would easily reach our goal of $500,000.

"Twenty dollars!" you scream. "I don't have $20 to fork over to some charity. I need that money to buy groceries (cigarettes, gas for the car, rent videos, hit the local bar, shoot pool, play golf) and other essentials."

Okay, if a one-time donation of $20 is too much, maybe you can afford a measly $2 twice a month, or even once a month. Either way, you exceed the goal, Fort Benning exceeds its goal and all the local charities get their fair share of the money to meet next year's budgets.

I'm certainly glad I'll never be down on my luck, out of a job, hurting for money, and need of some kind of help, like food or shelter or money.

But just in case, I'm going to hedge my bets and contribute in my small and meager way to CFC — it's like carrying an umbrella when the weather man says 10 percent chance of rain. Better to be prepared even if there's a 90 percent chance it won't rain.

So how do you decide which charities are worthy of your largesse? That's a personal decision. Maybe you know of someone who died of lung cancer and want to contribute to cancer research, or you have an elderly friend in a nursing home and you think charities that take care of old folks need help.

I normally go through the list of organizations and see which ones spend less than 5 percent on themselves — promotional activities, salaries, etc. and if they and I have a common interest, then I'll put them down on the slip.

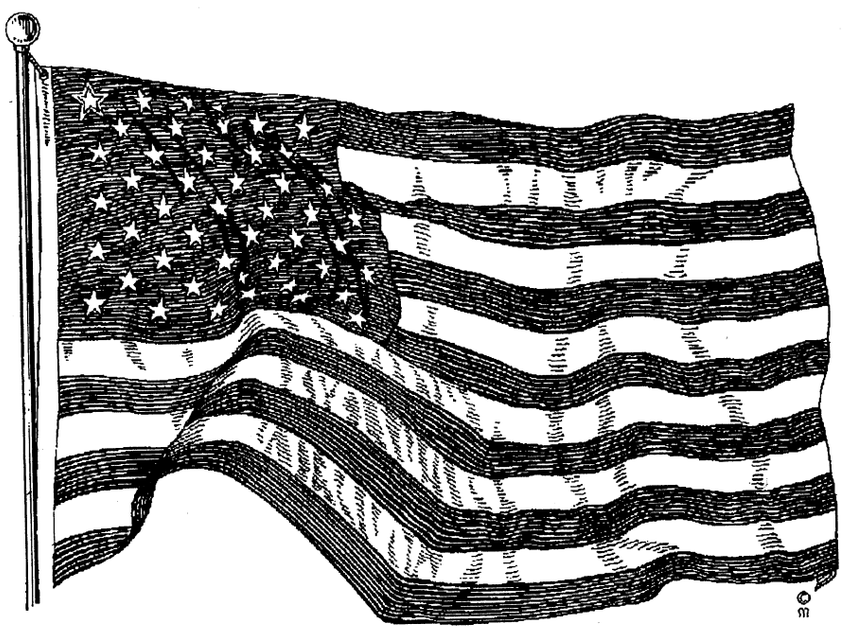
The politicians on Election Day will tell you they don't care who you vote for (hah!); just vote. Well, CFC and United Way don't care how you come up with your recipients and which ones they are, but they certainly urge you to at least give something, anything. Just do it.

American Flag deserves respect it commands

By Paul Stone
American Forces Press Service

They are seen on almost any installation at home and abroad — military personnel and civilians hiding just inside the door as the bugle signals the beginning of the daily retreat ceremony.

commentary



They wait impatiently for the ceremony to end, unwilling to participate. Perhaps worse are those already outdoors who seem oblivious to the obvious and continue on, pretending not to hear the music or the cannon.

Within this behavior lies basic disrespect for the history and heritage of this ceremony — our heritage. Beyond it lies a more fundamental appreciation for the American flag.

What are we avoiding? Are we afraid to display our pride, our patriotism, our emotional attachment to what the flag represents? Or have we forgotten the voices no longer heard?

The flag is an army sitting in rags and freezing at Valley Forge. It is the eloquence of Lincoln after the carnage at Gettysburg.

It is a Soldier in the fields of France waiting in fearful silence for the next bullet to whiz by or the next exploding mustard gas canister. It is a Marine landing on the blood-soaked sands of Iwo Jima and a sailor firing from the deck of a PT boat as water sprays his already drenched clothes.

It is a Soldier racing down a Korean hillside, carrying a wounded buddy on his shoulders while dodging enemy fire. It is a captured Air Force pilot in a Vietnamese POW camp — hungry, shivering and starving, and wondering if anyone remembers. It is a tank driver maneuvering through the scorching Saudi Arabian desert and a Soldier tearfully watching a chopper whisk his fallen comrade to safety.

It is a dead American Soldier shamefully dragged through the streets of Somalia and a doctor ignoring his own wounds to treat others at Khobar Towers.

It is an Air Force cargo plane delivering desperately needed supplies to starving Rwandans and a Soldier pulling guard duty in the snow-covered Bosnian hills.

It is the father we never knew, the sister whose bed remains empty, the uncle still listed as missing in action and the cousin whose name is etched on The Wall.

It is our past, our present and our promise for the future.

It is us and we are it.

545-BOSS

Dial 545-Boss is the commander's action line for Soldiers, family members and civilians to call when they have problems or complaints that can't be resolved elsewhere.

While it is not a substitute for the chain of command or for agencies established to provide assistance, the line offers another means of communication between Fort Benning's community and commanders.

The Bayonet features some of the calls that may benefit other members of the Fort Benning community.

Call: Caller said he heard the budget counseling class run by ACS will be discontinued. He feels this class provides a great service to the community and would like the closing reconsidered.

Directorate of Community Activities response: The caller was advised that as soon as it is approved, volunteers for financial counseling will be recruited and it will be recommended to commanders to establish a unit financial counselor program. There are also the United Way non-profit downtown agencies that deal with debt liquidation and counseling. These actions will increase the availability of financial counseling to the community.

Call: A Soldier said he made a DITY move from Fort Bragg, N.C. to Fort Benning and was informed by the Fort Bragg officials he would be reimbursed $14.80 per 100 pounds, plus the cost of the truck rental and storage.

Directorate of Logistics response: The Soldier was provided erroneous information. Individuals are only authorized one incentive per PCS DITY move. Storage costs and delivery to residence is a continuation of the original DITY and does not authorize additional incentive.

Trial: Not guilty says McKinney

the most senior trial judge in the Army

During an arraignment, the government publicly reads the charges, the judge calls on the accused to plead and may set a court date.

McKinney's attorneys waived the reading of the charges. As Clervi explained McKinney is not required to enter a plea until all mo ons are heard, McKinney stood and said "not guilty," although it was not entered as his formal plea.

McKinney is expected to enter a formal plea on the first day of the court martial.

In the courtroom at Fort Belvoir, about 12 miles south of Washington, D.C., McKinney appeared relaxed as he listened to the soft-spoken Clervi. McKinney's wife, Wilhemina, sat directly behind him, in the front row of the gallery, surrounded by journalists and a handful of spectators during the 40-minute proceeding.

Clervi explained to McKinney that he has three options concerning who would hear his case:

Trial by military judge, during which the judge hears the case, determines the defendant's guilt or innocence and passes sentence; trial by a panel of at least five military officers; or a trial by a panel composed of two-thirds officers and one-third enlisted Soldiers.

McKinney chose trial by panel to include enlisted Soldiers. The enlisted Soldiers must be in the grade of E-9 and senior to McKinney by date of rank. This does not rule out retired NCOs, members of the Reserve forces or NCOs in other branches of service, according to Capt. Steven Levin of the Government Appellate Division in Falls Church, Va.

In a trial by panel, members vote by secret, written ballot to determine the verdict on each charge. A two-thirds majority is required for a guilty verdict on a charge, and a vote is taken only once.

If the panel members vote on a sentence of more than 10 years confinement, three-quarters of the panel members must agree. If McKinney is convicted of all charges against him, he could face up to 56 years confinement. The trial is expected to last between three and six weeks.

Allegations against McKinney came to light in February after he was appointed to a panel investigating sexual harassment in the Army. A former enlisted assistant to McKinney came forward to allege the sergeant major had committed acts of sexual misconduct against her. By spring other witnesses came forward with similar allegations.

An Article 32 investigation included a 27-day hearing, the longest in Army history. It featured more than 50 witnesses and more than 6,000 pages of testimony and evidence related to the charges. Military District of Washington Commander Maj. Gen. Robert F. Foley referred charges to trial by general court martial on Oct. 8. McKinney was reassigned from his duties as Sergeant Major of the Army the next day.

498th plans to return Monday

498th Medical Co. (Air Ambulance)

The 498th Medical Company (Air Ambulance) should arrive at Fort Benning's Lawson Army Airfield Monday after a seven month deployment to Bosnia.

The final week is bringing much awaited anxiety and joy for the family and friends of the 498th, said 1st Lt. Scott Rollston, rear detachment commander.

It has been a long seven months, he said.

The Family Support Group had a banner making pizza party in the 498th hangar Oct. 18 while rear detachment Soldiers worked on the final stages of a unit facilities makeover program.

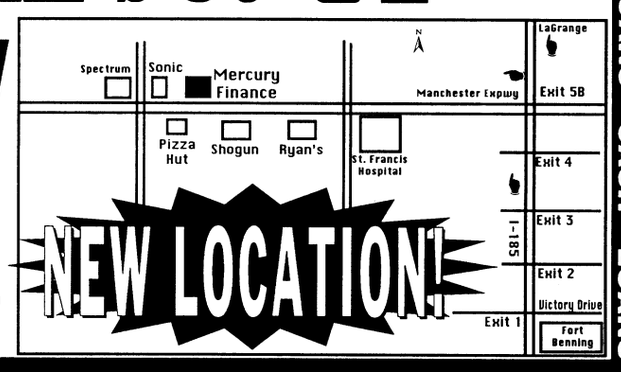
Collectively, the paint was flying, the brushes swirling and smiles abounded.

The children were full of excitement, he said, painting faces and welcome home signs.

In a call received from Maj. Tracy Wyatt, 498th commander, the rear detachment and family members learned the Soldiers were some two days ahead of schedule in preparing the equipment and helicopters for their return voyage on the cargo ship.

Capt. Robert Howe, Operations officer, and Capt. Steve Barnes, flight platoon leader, were in Hiedleberg, Germany, working with the Movements Division for the earliest possible flight home for the unit.

The final group of Soldiers from the Blue Factory Base in Bosnia completed their individual out-processing through the Initial Staging Base in Taszar, Hungary Oct. 22.



They made the 12-hour bus trip to Coleman Barracks (Mannheim, Germany) to meet up with the aviation maintenance personnel who were folding the blades and plastic wrapping for the helicopters.

The unit will move toward Ramstein, Germany, Sunday. A specific flight wasn't identified yet, Rollston said, but the fly day is looking like Monday.

The toll-free mission information line was re-established so friends and family could call to hear information on the flight home, Rollston said. The number is (800) 675-0383. It will be updated each day around 6:30 p.m. from now until the flight arrives.

A reception ceremony in a hanger on Lawson Airfield is planned for when the 498th returns. The public is invited. Information will be included on the toll-free line message as the flight arrival time is known.

Soldiers rock at Uptown Jam

By Spc. Alberto Betancourt
School of the Americas PAO

Blasting Caribbean sounds with conga drums and a horn section, a local band made up of mostly Fort Benning Soldiers entrances people, forcing them to get up and shake their bodies.

Since it officially began playing in 1991, the band has changed its name and members many times. However, when Staff Sgt. Carlos Rodriguez, of the School of the Americas' (SOA) academic records arrived here from Germany in 1993, Orquesta La Nativa was born.

"I played with a salsa-merengue band in Germany and I wanted to play with a band here on Fort Benning," said Rodriguez. "I heard there was a local band called La Creacion, which had formed in 1991 and was breaking up because some of their members were going to another post.

I took this opportunity and began recruiting new members. That's how Orquesta La Nativa got formed."

Recently, during the Uptown Jam, the band had the local community on its feet dancing salsa and merengue in the downtown streets of Columbus.

"It's very rare to find a Latin band like this in Columbus," said Sgt. German Vazquez, Company A, SOA, after dancing with his partner to a salsa number.

"They sound pretty good. I hope they stay together."

Although most of the 10 band members are Hispanic, key players who make up the heart of the band are from the United States.

"It's been wild ever since I've been playing with this band," said Sgt. Travis Brown, of the Infantry Band. He's played bass with Orquesta La Nativa since 1995.

"Their style of music is so different from what I'm used to playing. It's been very hard for me because of the beats."

Brown said although it's been difficult keeping up with the fast-paced Caribbean beat, being able to play with the band has expanded his musical horizon.

"I'm not locked up into one or two styles of music anymore," said Brown, a native of Spring Lake, N.C. "Whenever I venture into other rhythms, I become a better musician all around."

Like Brown, Sgt. Ross King is with the Infantry Band and plays piano for Orquesta La Nativa.

"I fell in love with the music the first time I played the piano for them two years ago," said King, a native of Superior, Wis. "I've been playing with them ever since."

King described his venture with the band as fun and challenging. "It's a lot like jazz with a whole lot more rhythm," he said.

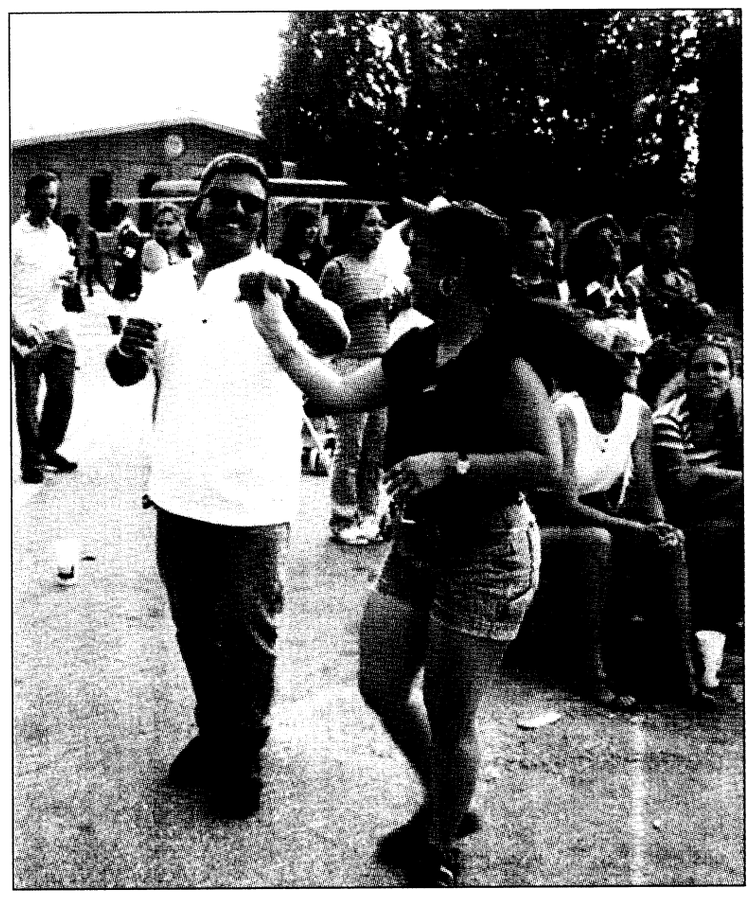
The spirit of the music has caused some band members to continue playing even after retiring from the Army.

"I'm proud the spirit of the band continues forward," said retired Staff Sgt. Jose Fernandez, an original member of La Creacion and percussionist with Orquesta La Nativa.

"We may be playing under another name, but the music is still alive. I'm very proud of this band."

Staff Sgt. Ricardo Andino, of SOA's Combat Support Detachment, SOA, and singer for the band, said Orquesta La Nativa represented a different culture with new roots for the local music scene.

"The Latin community is here and we want to showcase our musical talents," he said. "'This band will help the community understand our roots."



Rodriguez said the current band members have been playing together for a couple months. He hopes they can stay together and continue giving a good show.

"We need all the support we can get from our community," he said.

Charter ranger dies, memorial set for post

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Services for retired Col. Francis Walwin "Bull" Dawson, 78, U.S. Army retired, were Oct. 22 at Bethel United Methodist Church in Columbia, S.C. and burial was held at Arlington National Cemetery.

He entered active military duty in 1942 at Fort Benning. In 1944 he joined Company D, 5th Ranger Battalion.

On D-Day, June 6, 1944, he led a group of rangers (29th Division) across Normandy's Omaha Beach. In 1953, he commanded the Army Search and Rescue Unit in Korea.

In 1962, he commanded a team that advised the Vietnamese Special Forces High Command.

He then became the Deputy Chief of Staff for Operations and Intelligence for Special Forces in Vietnam.

In 1964, he became the Deputy Group Commander of the 1st Special Forces Group (Airborne).

Col. Dawson served as a Battalion Commander at Fort Jackson in 1965 and later as Deputy Chief of Staff for Intelligence.

He retired in 1968 after serving his country in three wars, during which he repeatedly volunteered for hazardous assignments in elite forces.

Col. Dawson is depicted in a "Rangers Lead the Way" print, which hangs in the Pentagon.

He was an inaugural inductee in the Ranger Hall of Fame in 1992.

A memorial service is set for 5 p.m. Friday at the Ranger Memorial.

The breakfast begins "Fort Benning's Day of Excellence," a day dedicated to honoring and recognizing military and civilian personnel for accomplishing Fort Benning's complex missions.

Maximum participation at the breakfast is encouraged.

The breakfast buffet consists of scrambled eggs, bacon, sausage, french toast sticks, grits, biscuits, coffee and juice. The cost is $5.50 per person. Tickets will be available from the Quality Management Division (QMD), DRM, Building 66, through today.

Prior to purchasing tickets, please provide the QMD the number of personnel in your organization who will attend the breakfast (to include honorees).

For more information, call Pat Porter, QMD, 545-4729.

OCS selection board set

U.S. Army Personnel Command (PERSCOM) announced the next Officer Candidate School Selection Board is scheduled for March 17-21. Cutoff date for applications to arrive at PERSCOM is Feb. 13.

The Adjutant General Personnel Operations and Services Division (POSD) set up two local boards to accommodate Fort Benning Soldiers for the Department of the Army's March board. The local boards are scheduled for Jan. 5-9, and Jan. 12-16. Applications must arrive in POSD no later than Dec. 19.

For more information, call Lynnesia Thomas, AG Personnel Operations and Services Divisions at 545-3341 or 545-4702.

ITAM upgrading tank crossing

Range Division, under the Integrated Training Area Management program, is in the process of upgrading the tank crossing site at the intersection of Buena Vista and Cactus roads. Upgrading is scheduled to begin the first week in November and will require approximately 60 days to complete.

During the period of upgrading, Buena Vista Road will be limited to one lane traffic.

Personnel using the road during this time frame should watch for heavy equipment moving in and around the construction site and obey all posted warning signs.

For more information, call Johnny Markham, ITAM coordinator, at 545-9428.

SF briefings continue on post

The Special Forces recruiting office conducts briefings at 6 p.m. every Tuesday and 10 a.m. and 2 p.m. every Wednesday in McVeigh Hall, Building 75B, Room 408. For more information, call Sgt. 1st Class David Boyer at 545-3079.

Regulations require proper PT uniform

Post regulations require that Soldiers wear the standard Army physical fitness training uniform for PT from 6 to 7:30 a.m. on duty days, whether units organize PT or Soldiers conduct it on their own. Reflective vests are required.

The only approved exceptions are the School of the Americas, the Ranger Training Brigade and the 75th Ranger Regiment. These units have an exception to wear a different uniform, but they must remain uniform.

Post to observe Italian Memorial Day

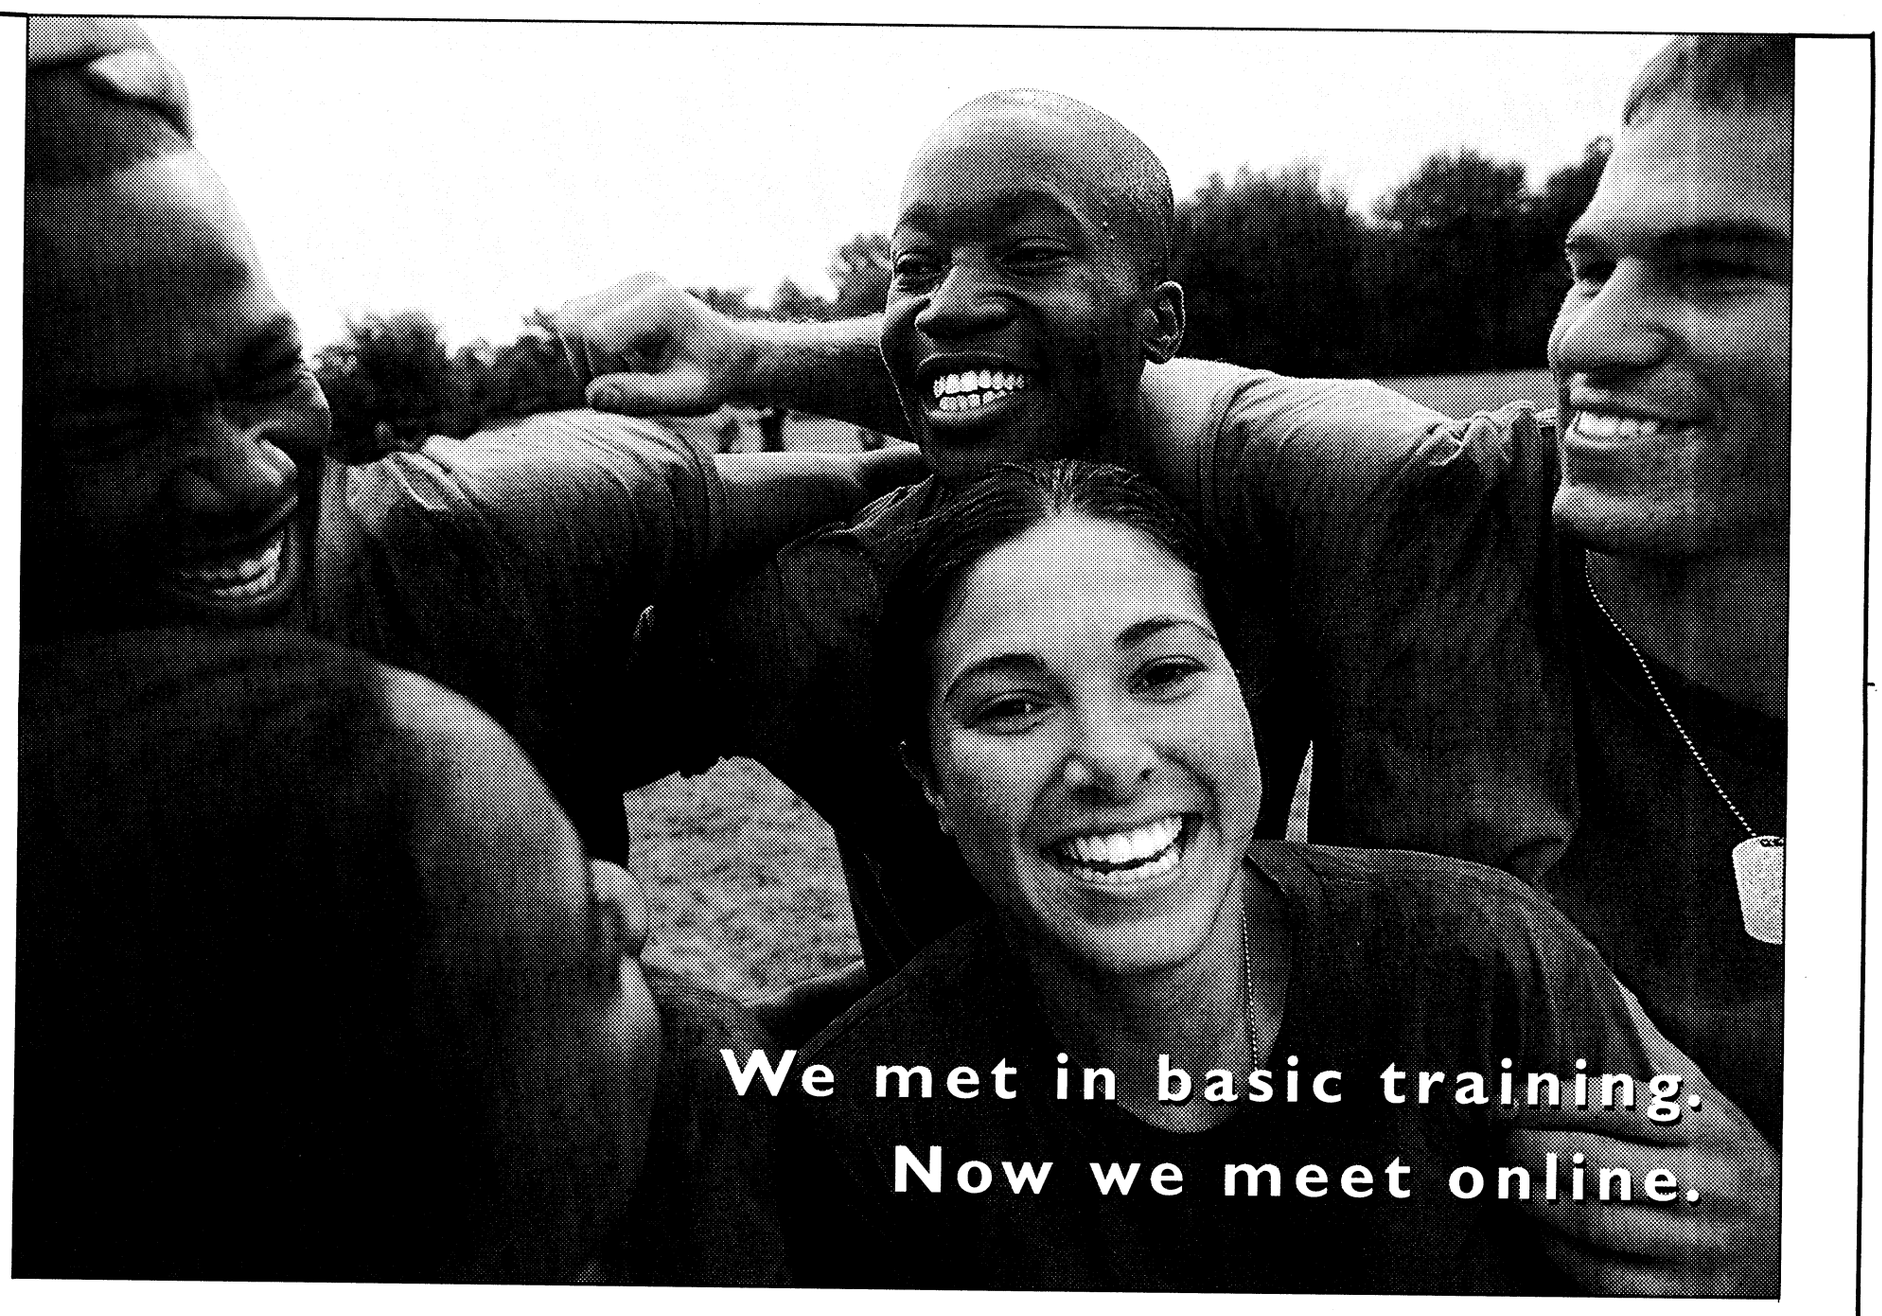
Italian Memorial Day will be observed with a ceremony at 11 a.m., Nov. 9 at the Fort Benning Post Cemetery.

A wreath laying ceremony will memorialize the Italian Soldiers who rest in the cemetery. These Soldiers were prisoners of war who died in the United States during World War II.

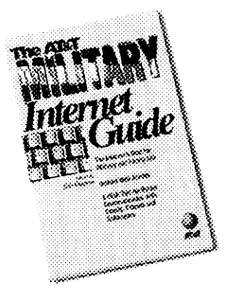
The public is invited to attend.

Fort Benning to test tornado sirens

Fort Benning will test the tornado sirens at noon, the first Saturday of every month. The test will not occur in the event of bad weather.



Post tax office needs volunteers



Volunteers are needed to work in the tax office Jan. 31 to April 15.

The Internal Revenue Service will conduct a week-long class for everyone interested in assisting in the free preparation of income tax returns. The class will be Jan. 12-16.

For more information, call Kathy Uriarte or Ann Pratcher, Army Community Services, at 545-7517 or 545-4043.

SOA helps human rights in Paraguay

By Spc. Alberto Betancourt
SOA, Public Affairs Office

The U.S. Army School of the Americas helped the Paraguayan armed forces adopt a human rights training program.

According to Capt. Patrick Garcia, judge advocate and chairman for SOA's Human Rights Committee, in February 1997, SOA personnel, including the Paraguayan guest instructor on SOA's staff, met with U.S. Southern Command officials and the Paraguayan military leadership in order to design an effective military-to-military engagement plan.

He said SOA designed five events including a human rights subject matter expert exchange so the Paraguayans could develop a tailored human rights program to be implemented within their professional military education.

"The purpose of the human rights subject matter exchange was to exchange ideas and information on human rights issues and expose the Paraguayan instructor personnel to U.S. procedures and techniques of presenting human rights instruction," he said.

Phase one of the two-phased initiative began when 12 Paraguayan armed forces instructors traveled to SOA and received a complete orientation on human rights and effective training processes July 13-18. The officers returned to Paraguay with the mission to design a comparable human rights training program patterned after SOA's Human Rights Train the Trainer Course.

Phase two was completed when SOA sent a team of human rights experts, including Garcia, to assess and observe the newly implemented human rights training in Paraguay, Aug. 17-22.

"Paraguay was challenged to develop a human rights block of instruction tailored to the laws of Paraguay," he said. "Special emphasis was provided so that the Paraguayan National Constitution was used as part of the instruction.

"The Universal Declaration of Human Rights was used to make a greater impact on their Soldiers," he said.

Additionally, it was recommended that they incorporate instruction on the American Convention on Human Rights, commonly referred to as the Pacto de San Jose de Costa Rica. The treaty is a ratification of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights of 1948.

The three SOA officers who traveled to Paraguay met with each component of the country's armed forces. Garcia said he met Ernesto Velazquez, dean of the law school, Universidad Catolica Nuestra Senora de la Asuncion, Facultad de Ciencias Juridicas y Diplomaticas, and Max Narvaez, law school professor and president of "Fundacion Justicia Para Todos," a non-governmental organization.

He said the law school was ready and willing to assist the Paraguayan armed forces with implementing human rights instruction if they requested it.

"The Paraguayan armed forces are committed to incorporating human rights education as a permanent part of their curriculum," Garcia said. "SOA's highly regarded human rights training program is now a permanent part of their service member's educational professionalization."

Since 1946, the U.S. Army School of the Americas has trained nearly 59,000 Latin American military, policemen and civilians from 22 nations. Its doctrine mirrors other U.S. Army curricula, with all instruction in Spanish.

ACAP plans new program, reaching more people

By Chick Eagle
Army Career and Alumni Program

Increasing customer knowledge about transition services is key to Army Career and Alumni Program (ACAP) success.

"Fort Benning's ACAP has been highly successful since its inception in 1991, but we must continuously market the important advantages gained by this program," said Dwayne Wight, Fort Benning's Transition Services Manager (TSM).

"We have developed a diversified ACAP marketing plan for the new fiscal year which will support our overall quality emphasis to continuously improve transition services to all our customers," Wight said. ACAP customers are not limited to separating Soldiers, spouses and civil service employees, but also include key leadership and first-line supervisors, community leaders, on and off post service providers and the many employers who offer good jobs to Army alumni.

Wright said the plan has more than one goal.

"The first specific goal we hope to address by this marketing effort is to significantly reduce the number of priority 1 (less than 90 days until separation date) customers reporting for initial ACAP services," he said. Additionally we want to improve follow-on scheduling effectiveness for individual ACAP and job assistance counseling sessions," Wight said.

"ACAP counselors have received approval to hit the road and offer informational briefings to key leadership and supervisors," he said. "We want to have a closer relationship with the chain of command to insure we support their mission responsibilities as well as those of separating personnel. Command support has been excellent over the years. We simply want to improve upon a great program."

To inquire about services and informational briefings, contact the ACAP Center at 545-2308 or 545-2309 in Soldiers' Plaza, Building 2634.

Physical assistants needed to fill slots

Two-year program teaches variety of medical subjects

By Ron Joy
Army News Service

FORT BLISS, Texas — Did you know the U.S. Army's health-care team serves more than three million beneficiaries? In addition, on any given day the team sees 53,000 patients, gives 9,000 immunizations, delivers 84 babies, completes 45,000 X-ray procedures, dispenses 81,000 prescriptions and does more than a half million laboratory procedures.

So how does the Army and civilian medical centers and facilities deal with this massive workload? Certainly doctors, nurses and technicians are major players, however, patient care would be lacking in many ways if it wasn't for the men and women who make up the physician assistant profession.

Dr. Eugene Stead Jr. launched the first physicians assistants (PA) program at Duke University more than three decades ago after seeing a massive shortage of health-care providers. Then, in 1965, Dr. Stead invited four ex-military corpsmen to be university-trained as assistants to primary-care physicians. Today, approximately 2,100 PAs graduate annually.

The PA profession is listed as one of the top 15 career choices in the nation. Employment trends indicate there are 7.5 positions available for every new graduate. In addition, the U.S. Department of Labor anticipates a 56.7 percent increase in the number of PA positions by the year 2000. Salaries for new graduate PAs are between $35,000 and $55,000 a year. Professionals with five to 10 years of experience can earn salaries of $70,000 and higher.

There are more than 85 accredited PA training programs in the United States. The largest is at the Army Medical Department Center and School at Fort Sam Houston, Texas. The military PA training program is two years long. Students are officer candidates and are commissioned as second lieutenants upon graduation. Students incur five- to eight-year duty obligations after graduation, depending upon which program they are listed under.

PA students, including those who will become members of the Army Medical Specialist Corps, must first complete prerequisite classes including zoology, microbiology, anatomy, physiology, chemistry, statistics and psychology. These prerequisites vary from college to college.

During training, students take courses like biochemistry, anatomy and human physiology, as well as topic courses in surgery, emergency medicine and pediatrics.

The second year of training normally includes clinical rotations in areas like internal medicine, surgery, obstetrics and gynecology, pediatrics, psychiatry and primary care.

Once a person completes an accredited program and is certified, work in the medical field begins.

A normal work setting could have the PA doing medical histories on patients, performing physical exams, ordering laboratory studies and X-ray exams, interpreting diagnostic studies and, in 39 states and the Army, prescribing most medications.

PAs may assist physicians in surgery, manage the preoperative and postoperative care of patients, conduct medical rounds, write medical orders and dictate discharge orders.

For example, at William Beaumont Army Medical Center, Fort Bliss, Texas, seven civilian PAs work in areas like the emergency room, primary care and pathology. PAs also work in the consolidated troop medical clinic and with Air Defense Artillery units on Fort Bliss.

Dr. Anita Larson, WBAMC's chief of urgent care, said that PAs are truly physician extenders. She also said that with many staffing changes made as the Army downsizes and reorganizes, the clinics would have been "dead in the water" without the PAs' help.

To apply for the military PA program, interested Soldiers must be enlisted and have completed 60 semester hours of undergraduate work at an accredited college or university.

People may also be eligible for a direct appointment as an Army PA if they are less than 33 years old, hold at least a baccalaureate degree, have completed an accredited PA program and have been certified by the National Commission on Certification of Physician Assistants. More information is available from Army Health-Care Recruiters.

Infantrymen shoot, move, communicate, assemble, throw, plot, to earn badge

By Sgt. Marc G. Turchin
Bayonet assistant editor

For Infantrymen, there is one award that separates the elite from the rest. It remains the standard that all Infantrymen are compared to. Earning this award will push competitors to their Infantry limits. All this, for the Expert Infantryman Badge (EIB).

"It's designed for Infantrymen to show expertise in the field of Infantry," said Sgt. Maj. Jack T. McCain, NCOIC of the EIB site.

"This competition allows Infantrymen to go one step higher than just being Infantrymen," he said.

Going one step higher may not be easy for some.

The Soldiers competing for the badge must pass different tasks at 36 stations; complete a 12-mile road march wearing combat equipment in under three hours; find three out of four points during a day land navigation course and two out of three points during a night land navigation course; score at least 70 percent on each of the three events in the Army Physical Fitness Test; and qualify as an expert on the M-16 firing.

The 36 stations consist of common, weapons, technical and Soldier survival skills.

They include assembling and disassembling the M-249 squad automatic weapon and M-16 rifle; using the SINCGARS Radio and Plugger systems; applying basic first aid; estimating range of fire; map reading; employing the Claymore mine; moving under direct fire and proper camouflaging techniques.

McCain said the badge is more than something worn on your chest.

"It shows everybody what their abilities and capabilities are," he said.

McCain also said besides distinguishing a Soldier among others, it is needed for upper rank progress in a shrinking Army.

"Fewer slots means less promotions," McCain said. "When it comes to promotion boards, it's a big plus and it's almost a necessity for the senior grades to make promotions."

This year's EIB competition, being conducted at Burroughs Range, is in two separate groups.

The first group used the site to practice for six days, then spent the next five days testing. A second group will follow the first with the same schedule.

McCain said the Soldiers were allowed to train as much as they wanted before coming to the site. But the Soldiers were given an allotted time of training to get used to the site set-up.

"Some Soldiers, especially new privates, may not have seen these tasks set up this way before," he said.

Those days of training allowed the stations NCOICs time to help competing Soldiers.

"Regardless of whether or not they get the EIB, it benefits the Soldiers to come out and train," said Sgt. Michael A. Curnutt, an assistant NCOIC at one of the stations, from the 6th Ranger Training Battalion at Eglin Air Force Base, Fla.

"The testing is several small tasks that are simple — but when you put them together, it can be overwhelming."

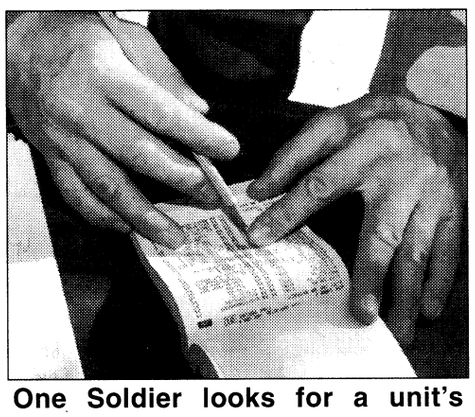
Soldiers from across post competed and helped run the site.

Units with Soldiers competing included the 11th Infantry Regiment, 29th Infantry Regiment, Infantry Training Brigade, Ranger Training Brigade and 3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division.

According to McCain the second group may also include Soldiers from Reserve and National Guard components.

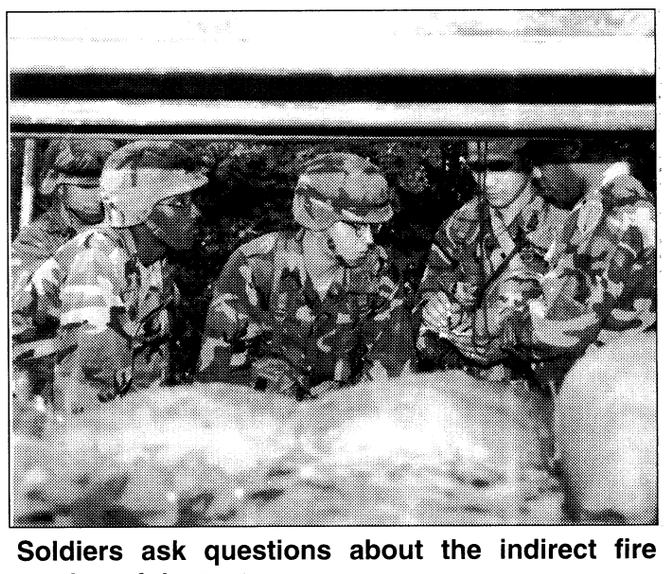
Before anyone could begin testing, the EIB Board had to certify the site. The board is made up of 18 Infantry sergeants major from Fort Benning. USAIC Command Sergeant Major, Command Sgt. Maj. Mack Vereen presides over the board.

Board members watched as testers evaluated each other to ensure they could complete the tasks themselves. They also approved the tasks, conditions and standards being tested.



After everything that went into making the site, some still want the badge for the prestige.

"It's just an award I want to have," said Spc. Ryan Terry, Company A, 1st Battalion, 15th Infantry Regiment. "It shows you know your job and you know what you're doing."



With the first week of training completed and more than 150 Soldiers going for the EIB, only 36 earned the badge. Testing begins again Monday with 275 Soldiers scheduled to compete. The awards ceremony is scheduled for 3 p.m. Oct. 31 at Burroughs Range.

Soldiers listen as they are instructed about the testing for the Pluggers — the Army's global positioning system. This is the first year the system has been tested in the EIB competition.

One Soldier looks for a unit's communications frequency during SINCGARS system testing.

Crewmen roll through challenges of Bradley Leaders Course

By Sgt. 1st Class Larry Lane
USAIC Public Affairs Office NCOIC

The control tower personnel at Carmouche Range selected a combination of targets through their computer stations and supplied the Bradley Fighting Vehicle crew with fresh targets.

In the distance, a puff of smoke and a boom from a simulator marked the spot where the armored vehicle silhouette popped up. About 30 ground troop targets simultaneously popped up about 100 meters in front of the vehicle.

In moments, the Bradley crew determined which targets posed the greatest threats. The Bradley positioned itself and engaged the armored vehicle as it moved across the field.

After several 25 mm rounds pierced the silhouette, the control tower personnel announced, "Kill, kill, kill," over the radio. The crew turned its attention to the ground troops, riddling them with 7.62 mm rounds from the Bradley's M-240C machine gun.

The Soviet-styled armored personnel carrier and the ground troops were both registered as kills on the range control computer monitors.

The live-fire exercise was part of the instruction in the Bradley Leaders Course operated by the Bradley Instructional Company, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment.

The course is designed to give advanced training to Soldiers, predominantly captains, lieutenants and sergeants, who are either already assigned or are headed to a mechanized unit.

The course trains captains and lieutenants who will eventually become platoon leaders and commanders. As a platoon leader, an officer will have a better knowledge on how to deploy the four Bradleys that make up his platoon. A company commander would be responsible for 14 Bradleys.

The sergeants, a small percentage of the students, become the experts within their crews, whether operating as a gunner, driver or crew member.

The seven-week course is held seven times each year at Fort Benning. Each class can handle up to 80 Soldiers.

Instruction includes plenty of hands on training and written tests in such skills as combat vehicle identification, communications, maintenance and gunnery.

The gunnery can be one of the toughest parts of the course, said Master Sgt. Milton Fields, branch chief of the course.

Staff Sgt. Johnny Lovell instructs Capt. Curtis Buzzard during the Bradley Leaders Course.

"The gunnery skills testing consists of 14 different taskings," Fields said. "They only have one week to train up and then they have to pass all 14 tasks on a 'no' or 'no go' basis."

The gunnery skills include installing and removal of the 25 mm main gun, upload and download of the weapon, perform misfire drills and installing the coaxial machine gun.

"It's kind of hard to teach them everything in the field manual in the short period of time we have," Fields said. "We teach them everything using the field manual and hands on."

For a Soldier like Sgt. Timothy Meade, the Bradley Leaders Course is one of his first steps to changing careers, from the Stinger and Avenger air defense systems to the Bradley.

After four years as part of the opposition force at the National Training Center at Fort Irwin, Calif., Meade has more experience knocking out Bradleys than operating the system.

"I know what they're doing wrong," Meade said of the Bradley operators he has met and beaten at the NTC. "Now that I'm going to be a Bradley commander, I'll also be able to implement the training I received at the NTC as OPFOR."

A Bradley crew should use dismounted troops to provide defense at night, Meade said as a tip to Soldiers of future NTC rotations.

"When they halt at night, they forget about security because they feel safe and secure in the rear. The enemy uses a lot of scouts and can strike these guys quickly. They'll knock on the turret and throw a grenade in when they open up their door."

While attending the course, all of the Soldiers have the opportunity to work in all the key positions of gunner, driver and commander.

"I love being a driver and most everyone here likes being a gunner," said Capt. Kevin Neisler, a Soldier headed to his new assignment at the NTC. "You get to shoot the 'big bullets' down range. The biggest round most of us from the light Infantry have shot is the 7.62 mm."

Neisler said some Soldiers have a difficult time with enemy vehicle identification, remembering the names, weapons and characteristics of each vehicle.

He credited the instructors for their ability to teach a complex weapon system.

"Having never dealt with the Bradley, it's kind of overwhelming when you first look at it," he said. "They get you down into the nuts and bolts of it and I now think it's not as big of a monster as I originally thought."

Students celebrate initial training

By 2nd Lt. Zac Vann
2nd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment

Oct.17 marked the halfway point for the lieutenants in the Infantry Officer Basic Course (IOBC) class 7-97.

With eight weeks of training complete and eight more to go, the students celebrated with an eight-mile road march in the early morning hours and a dining-in during late hours of the evening.

The students were not the only people on hand to celebrate the cycle's halfway point; the company cadre were also in attendance. The 2nd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment Commander Lt. Col. David Brown and the 11th Inf. Regt. Commander Col. Victor Bero were also there for the festivities. Bero was the evening's featured speaker. He stressed to the students the importance of a commitment to standards.

Brown was featured during the evening, but not as a speaker. The battalion commander was the subject of one of many skits prepared by the platoons to cap off the evening. The skits transitioned the evening from a formal atmosphere to a more relaxed one. The skits marked some funny highlights of the first eight weeks. No one was safe either, from the student lieutenant through the company and battalion commander. Anyone who did something to be famous or infamous found themselves a highlight of a platoon skit.

The company dining-in allowed the lieutenants of Co. B to look back on the first eight weeks of training and realize how fast the course has gone.

TDY charge card debt, abuse ruins careers

By Gerry J. Gilmore
Army News Service

WASHINGTON — A growing number of Soldiers and civilians are jeopardizing their careers and their personal credit ratings by not paying the balances on their government-sponsored travel charge cards.

Such Army travelers are also jeopardizing the benefits the travel charge card provides to them, their units and the Department of Defense, according to William M. Harris, the assistant director for Management Control and Travel Charge Card Programs.

The Government Travel Charge Card Program provides convenience to the traveler, reduces paperwork, reduces DoD's cost of doing business, and generates funds for the Army, Harris said. Money saved through efficiencies like the travel card can by used be the budget-strapped Army to finance other important needs.

In addition, American Express gives the Army rebates based on the volume of charges by their cardholders — almost $13 million in rebates has gone to Army commands since 1993, said Harris, who works with the Office of the Deputy Assistant Secretary of the Army (Financial Operations) at the Pentagon.

Four years ago, Harris said, American Express won the current General Services Administration contract to provide travel card services to the entire federal government, to include DoD and its military and civilian travelers. Within the Army, however, the rate of delinquent cardholder accounts has reached a level that is unacceptable, both to the Army and to American Express. As of July 31, Army cardholders are delinquent (that is, 60 or more days past due) on more than $14 million owed to American Express.

"Almost a quarter of the total money owed by Army cardholders is considered delinquent," Harris said.

About 250,000 American Express cards have been issued to Army travelers, Harris said, and about half of these are used often and are considered "active" by American Express. The agreement with American Express requires cardholders to pay off their account balances promptly.

Yet, more and more cardholders aren't paying off their travel card debts, Harris said. As of July 31, 12.5 percent of all active cardholder accounts were delinquent. These delinquencies have serious consequences.

American Express will suspend or cancel travel charge cards held by Soldiers and civilians in arrears. Those relieved of their travel charge cards will have more difficulty obtaining funds for temporary duty trips. Their personal credit ratings will also be affected, as the adverse information is reported by American Express to the three national credit bureaus.

If the delinquency rate cannot be reduced or curtailed, Harris said, the Army may have difficulty convincing charge-card contractors to provide this service in the future, or it may be required to pay a premium it cannot afford. Harris said many delinquencies occur because cardholders are making unauthorized cash withdrawals or personal purchases with their government cards.

"Abuse of the travel card, especially the ATM cash privilege, is almost invariably a precursor of delinquency problems down the road," Harris said. "We had one case a couple of years ago, where a cardholder ran up $1,000 in ATM cash advances during their first month with the card. The reports from American Express clearly indicated that these withdrawals and numerous other withdrawals and charges had nothing to do with official travel."

Within four months, Harris said, the cardholder had used their card to charge more than $13,000, most of it for unauthorized cash withdrawals and personal purchases. The cardholder made no payments on their account and their card was canceled at 120 days past due.

"The really sad part is that it would have been so easy to head this off, if only someone in the chain of command had looked at the monthly reports and counseled this cardholder right up front," Harris said.

The Government Travel Charge Card Program is administered and monitored by 1,500 program coordinators at the unit level throughout the Army, Harris said. Each month, American Express provides each coordinator with reports that summarize the charges by their cardholders. These reports will clearly highlight cases of card misuse and list cardholders who are delinquent in paying their account balances.

Harris said commanders and supervisors need to work closely with their program coordinators to identify travel charge card abusers and cardholders within their commands who are in arrears.

"Program coordinators are sometimes not given the support they need — the time they need — to train their cardholders, to identify abusers and those in debt, and to manage the program," Harris said. "And, all too often, commanders and supervisors don't take the time to deal with problem cardholders.

"The tools to manage this program — to spot cash abuse and card misuse — are right there. You just have to take the time to do it, to manage. If you just stop the abuse of ATM cash (withdrawals), if you just let people know that their misuse of the card is visible to the chain of command, you are going to head off a lot of delinquency," he concluded.

Dedication set for Leopoldville monument at Sacrifice Field

By Erin A. Nash
Bayonet staff writer©

A dedication ceremony is set for Nov. 7 to honor the 802 Soldiers of the 66th Infantry Division who perished at sea Dec. 24, 1944.

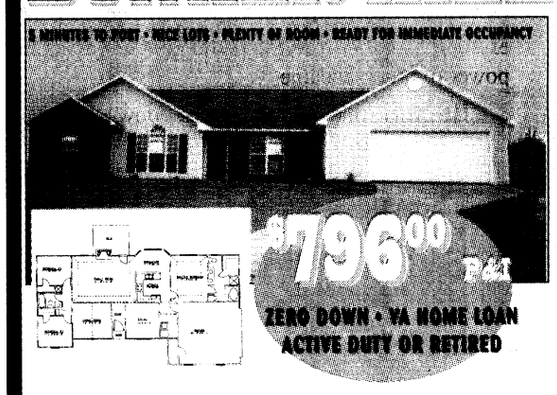
On that night, 2,235 Soldiers of the 66th Division were crossing the English Channel aboard the S.S. Leopoldville, a Belgian troop ship, as reinforcements for the Battle of the Bulge. The ship was five and a half miles off the coast of Cherbourg, France when it was torpedoed by a German U-Boat and sunk.

The monument will be dedicated on Sacrifice Field, in front of the National Infantry Museum. The Leopoldville Memorial Association decided Fort Benning would be the most appropriate place because it is the "Home of the Infantry."

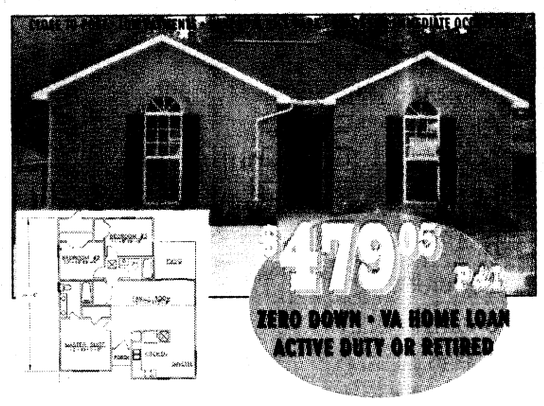
The driving force behind this monument was the late Robert M. Hesse Sr. of Linden, N.J. and Vincent Codianni of Waterbury, Conn.

In January 1996, Codianni requested financial assistance from the Waterbury Veterans Memorial Committee to construct a memorial to the victims of the Leopoldville tragedy.

The committee unanimously agreed. A nonprofit organization named the Leopoldville Memorial Association was formed with Codianni the president.



The monument will include the names and home states of victims and include a short history of the disaster. Also, below a bronze eagle, the monument has a large seal designed by Codianni depicting a sinking ship and a single head bobbing above the water.



Codianni worked on the monument as a tribute for more than 50 years.

Soldier wins third straight Mr. Fort Benning title

Just as Sherlock Holmes had his steady pillar of strength protégé Dr. Watson, Fort Benning has its own pillar and coincidentally his last name is Watson.

Randy Watson is not a doctor, but he is a pillar of strength and he proved it Oct. 18 when he won the Mr. Fort Benning bodybuilding title and the men's middleweight division for the third consecutive year.

Watson completed his dominance in the competition by capturing the men's master division as well.

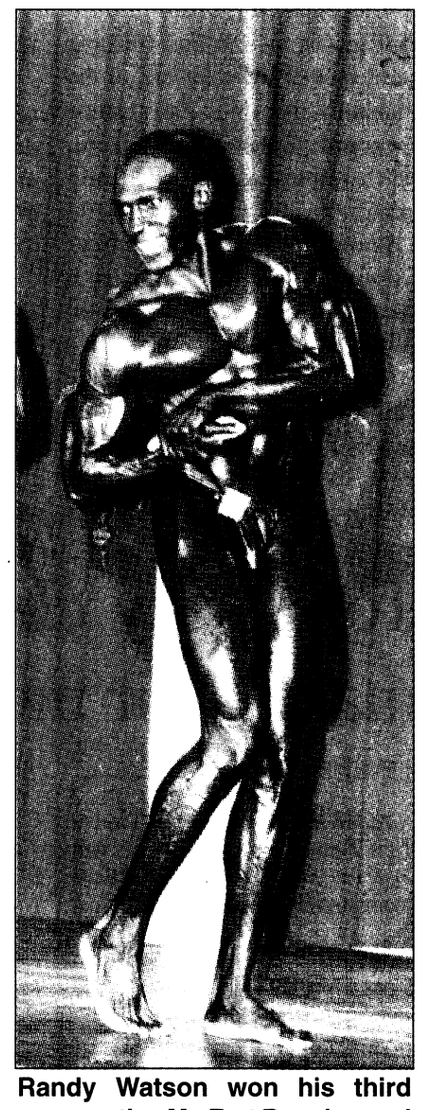
In the women's division, Patricia Tudor was crowned as the new Ms. Fort Benning. Tudor competed in the women's lightweight division taking first place in the division as well as the women's open title.

In the other divisions, Diego Valazquez took first place in the men's lightweight division with James Easley taking second place and Darrel Shelby taking third. All the men's lightweight are from Fort Benning.

In the men's middleweight division, Lerone Erwin of Atlanta took second place and Kim Newman of Fort Benning took third.

Fort Benning's Todd Gaunt took first place in the heavyweight division with Tony Rastah and Robert Harrison, both of Fort Stewart, took second and third place respectively.

In the women's lightweight division, Stephanie Thrift of Lanett, Ala. finished second behind Tudor.



Kim Witherspoon of New York captured first place in the women's heavyweight division with Mary Roslonowshi of Fort Benning taking second place and Laura Johnson of Fort Stewart taking third.

The evening provided more bodybuilding for the hard-body enthusiast with the former Ms. Olympia, Lenda Murray giving a demonstration for the crowd.

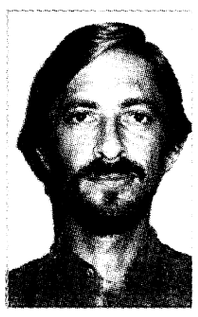
The Youth Services continued its football program Oct. 18 with six games in the flag and tackle leagues.

In the 9- to 11-year-old tackle football league, the Jaguars slipped past the Cowboys 8-6. The entire game was a defensive struggle for both teams with the difference in the game being a successful two-point conversion by the Jaguars. In the early 9- to 11-year-old game, the Panthers out performed the Lions winning the game 24-13.

In the 11- to 13-year-old tackle football league, the Vikings and the Cowboys defenses dominated the game as the teams played to a 0-0 tie. In the late game, the Browns took an 8-6 lead into halftime against the Steelers only to have the Steelers to come back and win the game 12-8.



In the 6- to 8-year-old flag football league, the Vikings lost their first game of the season going down in defeat to the Packers 2-0 and the Cowboys outscored the Bulldogs 12-6.

Youth Services continues its fall football schedule Saturday with six games scheduled on Blue Field beginning at 9 a.m. Soccer season also continues at French Field with a complete schedule of games beginning at 9 a.m.

Television discovers Benning units

By Michael J. Brock
USAMU Public Affairs Office

The Discovery Channel made their second visit to Fort Benning to do another show for one of the channel's most popular science programs, Discover Magazine, which will air late winter or early spring.

Powderhouse Productions of Somerville, Mass., is producing a Discover Magazine program on the science of guns.

The focus of the story is on the Sniper School, and what is required to produce a sniper, as well as the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit and the science of shooting.

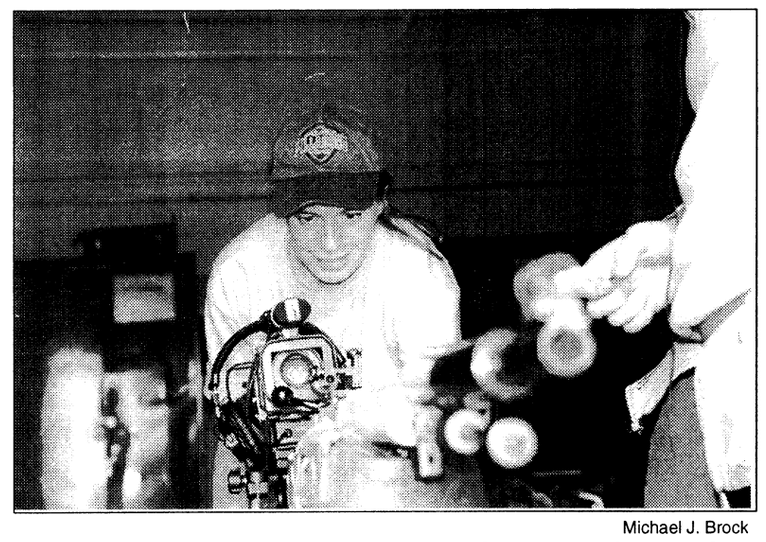
On their second of two trips, the production crew spent several days with the Sniper School and USAMU .

The first trip was in late August of this year. The crew spent one day with USAMU filming everything from an accurized M-16A2 test fire to an Infantry Trophy Match at Easley Range.

"I am really interested in the science of shooting," said Phillipa "Pip" Gilmour, associate producer for Powderhouse Productions.

The crew also filmed the first week of training for the students at the Sniper School following them all the way through graduation.

"We got to see all the students at the beginning of class and came back for the final week to find that over half of the students made it," Gilmour said.



On the second trip, the production crew came back to visit the Sniper School and to meet with members of USAMU to conduct interviews.

The crew filmed Harold A. Christy Jr. and Julie A. Goloski from the Action Shooting section firing vector rounds down range in the rain. A vector round is similar to a tracer round except it does not give off heat.

Next was the bread and butter of the day, filming the M-24 sniper weapon being assembled and a static shot of the weapon in a vise.

"This is one of the most important parts of the day," Gilmour said. "We want to do a time lapsed part with Mark T. Palmer of the Custom Firearms Shop at the USAMU, assembling the M24 and try to get a static shot of the M-24 and make it look attractive."

The day ended with an interview with USAMU Shotgun Coach Burl Branham. Branham was a sniper, first sergeant and instructor for the 23rd Infantry Division Sniper School in Vietnam.

Michael J. Brock

Phillipa "Pip" Gilmour, associate producer for Powderhouse Productions, video tapes through the sight of a .22-caliber rifle.

"It takes a special type of person to become a sniper," Branham said. "No one will ever know if they will make it as a sniper until they actually have to do it."

Top Army chess players make their moves

Armed Forces Press Service

ALEXANDRIA, Va. — Twelve of the Army's top chess players will play in the 1997 Army Chess Championship set for Oct. 31- Nov. 7.

Sosa Recreation Center, Fort Belvoir, Va. is the site of the United States Chess Federation-rated event, an Army Morale, Welfare, and Recreation activity sponsored by the U.S. Army Community and Family Support Center.

First through sixth place winners will make up the Army Chess Team that competes against other military chess teams at the International Military Chess Tournament scheduled for Nov. 8-15 in Vaucluse, France, near Marseilles.

The Soldiers are selected by an independent UCSF-certified tournament director from applications listing their tournament experience and United States Chess Federation rating.

Selected players must hold USCF ratings of 1800 or above. Expert ratings start at 2000; six of the 12 players are rated over 1900.

Six Soldiers are returnees from last year's championship. David Hater, who placed second, also won the 1996 Armed Forces Chess Championship held at the U.S. Chess Center in Washington, D.C.

U.S. Army Europe's Jeffrey McAleer placed third, and Andres Hortillosa, Fort Carson, Colo. took fourth. Other veterans are Virgilio Carter, Aberdeen Proving Ground, Md.; Charles Costales, also of Fort Carson, and George Stefurak, USAREUR.

The selectees are:

Army Materiel Command

Michael D. Cerezo, AMC-Europe
Virgilio R. Carter, Aberdeen Proving Ground, Md.
Jerome L. Sanford, Aberdeen Proving Ground, Md.

U.S. Army Forces Command

GA can help 'bettor' your chances of overcoming addiction

By Erin A. Nash
Special to the Bayonet©

With football season already in high gear, people are placing bets left and right. Whether it be just five dollars or thousands of dollars, gambling is a large part of the season, as with any sport.

To some, it's a harmless bet. To others, it's a livelihood. A loss could mean the rent is late again or a win could mean more betting with higher stakes. Compulsive gambling is a serious disease, one that is just as serious but not as talked about as other addictions.

Dan started his gambling career in high school. He would bet on sports events, card games, etc. This eventually progressed to all sports and horse racing. Dan emphasized the word "action" — what a gambler is always looking for.

"In a gambler's life, the most important person is the bookmaker. If you can't pay the bookmaker, you can't bet, and there's no action, " Dan said. "In a gambler's life, the bookmaker is paid first for bets lost, then rent, food and bills."

Dan was single for most of his gambling years. He married Joan eleven years ago. Joan realized he had a problem during their first year of marriage when Dan spent more than $100,00 on gambling. Joan's first thought was he was having an affair. The time spent away from home and the money gone led her to believe this. She said that is most wive's first thought. The real mistress is gambling. Now both middle-aged, both are very knowledgeable on the subject.

After Joan realized Dan had a serious addiction, she threatened to leave him and even had her bags packed unless he sought help. That is when he turned to Gambler's Anonymous (GA), a worldwide organization.

"When I realized I had absolutely 'hit rock bottom,' had nobody left, family or friendwise to borrow from, I decided I needed help," Dan said.

GA is a "fellowship." It is the same as any other 12 step program, most typically Alcoholics Anonymous. There are no fees or dues; it is not a religious organization, but members believe in a "higher power." Step No. 2 states, "Came to believe that a power greater than ourselves could restore us to sanity."

Dan said the belief in a higher power and weekly meetings are the two most important things in a GA member's life.

Dan has been actively involved with GA for nine and a half years. He meets with people from every walk of life. His meetings have included people whose lives have been destroyed by gambling. He has met people who lost their homes, their jobs, even families.

Dan said gamblers are always craving to be in action. This action is what eventually leads to a gambler's downfall. Dan said gamblers are the very best of liars.

"They will lie to anybody to get more money to get back into the action. They will steal from spouses, employers, even children's tuition funds," Dan said.

As football season progresses, many more lives will be affected by this addiction. Help is readily available for those who think they or a loved one's life is affected.

The national hotline number for GA is (800) 313-0170. They will get in touch with a sponsor in the area who will call the gambler themselves.

Columbus meetings are held at 8 p.m. every Wednesday at the Pastoral Institute on 2022 15th Ave. Each meeting is closed by everybody holding hands and reciting "The Serenity Prayer." It reads, "God grant me the serenity to accept the things I cannot change, the courage to change the things I can, and the wisdom to know the difference."

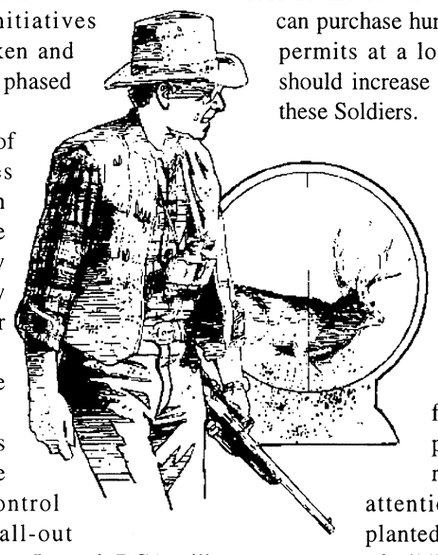
Wildlife branch restructures game and fish programs

By Pete Swiderek
Natural Resources Management Branch

Since the mid-1980s, there were many changes to the game and fish program at Fort Benning due to manpower and budget cuts.

Things are about to change again. There is a new vision for the game and fish program.

The vision is to provide a safe, quality hunting and fishing experience consistent with mission requirements and sound land management practices that will be a model for other game and fish programs.



This new program will focus on providing the customer with improved hunting and fishing opportunities.

To find out what the customers wanted, a survey was conducted earlier this year to help guide management decisions. The survey showed that about half of hunters and fishermen are active duty Soldiers, about a quarter are Department of Defense civilians, 20 percent are retirees, and about 9 percent are family members.

The survey also showed that about 62 percent hunted deer as their first choice followed by turkey (11 percent). Seventy percent described their deer hunting experience as good or excellent. Of those hunters who hunted other military installations, 91 percent indicated hunting opportunities on Fort Benning were average or above average.

Hunting permits on Fort Benning cost $9 and fishing permits are $6. Most survey participants reported they were willing to pay from $27-$59 for a hunting permit and $10-$19 for a fishing permit for improved hunting and fishing opportunities.

Several meetings planned this year laid the groundwork for a new, restructured game and fish program. The garrison commander chaired the process action team and included members from Natural Resources Management Branch, Directorate of Public Works; Outdoor Recreation Directorate of Community Activites; Staff Judge Advocate, Law Enforcement Division and IBSO, Directorate of Public Safety; and the chairman of the Commanding General's Advisory Board on Natural Resources.

Several initiatives were undertaken and others will be phased in.

The focus of the initiatives are on improving the opportunity and the quality of the outdoor experience.

Some of the initiatives are:

•Soldiers will not operate the hunter control call-in, call-out system this year. Instead, DCA will be purchasing a computer that will handle the hunter control phone calls electronically.

•A reinvention initiative was forwarded to Department of the Army that requests scaled permit fees so the lower enlisted Soldiers can purchase hunting and fishing permits at a lower rate. This should increase participation for these Soldiers.

•A reduction in dove fields and a corresponding increase in fall plantings of oats, wheat, and clover. Dove fields that are planted will receive more attention and will be planted with a variety of wildlife foods.

•With approval of the Commanding General, increased hunting and fishing permit fees will be put into effect to hire a game and fish technician to improve game and fish management activities.

Other initiatives will be incorporated into the program over the next couple of years to develop the long term quality of the program within the training mission requirements.

Outdoor Recreation is also supporting the new hunting and fishing program in several ways.

For starters, there will be a big deer contest this year with prizes for the buck with most points, heaviest buck and heaviest doe.

Tickets are $5 and can be purchased at Outdoor Recreation (Building 1707). Prizes include a Browning A-bolt 30-06 rifle, a deer shoulder mount from Master Taxidermy and a Magellan Global Positioning System. Eventually there will also be fishing contests and various kinds of raffles.

The goal is to improve the hunting and fishing opportunities on Fort Benning and increase participation in these outdoor activities.

According to Natural Resources Management Branch officials, last year almost 2,000 hunting permits were sold and more than 1,300 fishing permits, but there is a potential pool of more than 100,000 active duty Soldiers, DA civilians, retirees, and dependents associated with Fort Benning.

Officials hope that increased participation will increase revenues resulting in better management of the wildlife resulting in greater, healthier game and fish populations and increased hunting and fishing opportunities.

Also, remember to obey game and fish laws, be courteous to other outdoorsman, be safe, and help support two great longstanding American traditions of hunting and fishing.

Casting out performs jigging in winter months

By David Hegel, Steve Price
Johnson® and Evinrude® Outboards

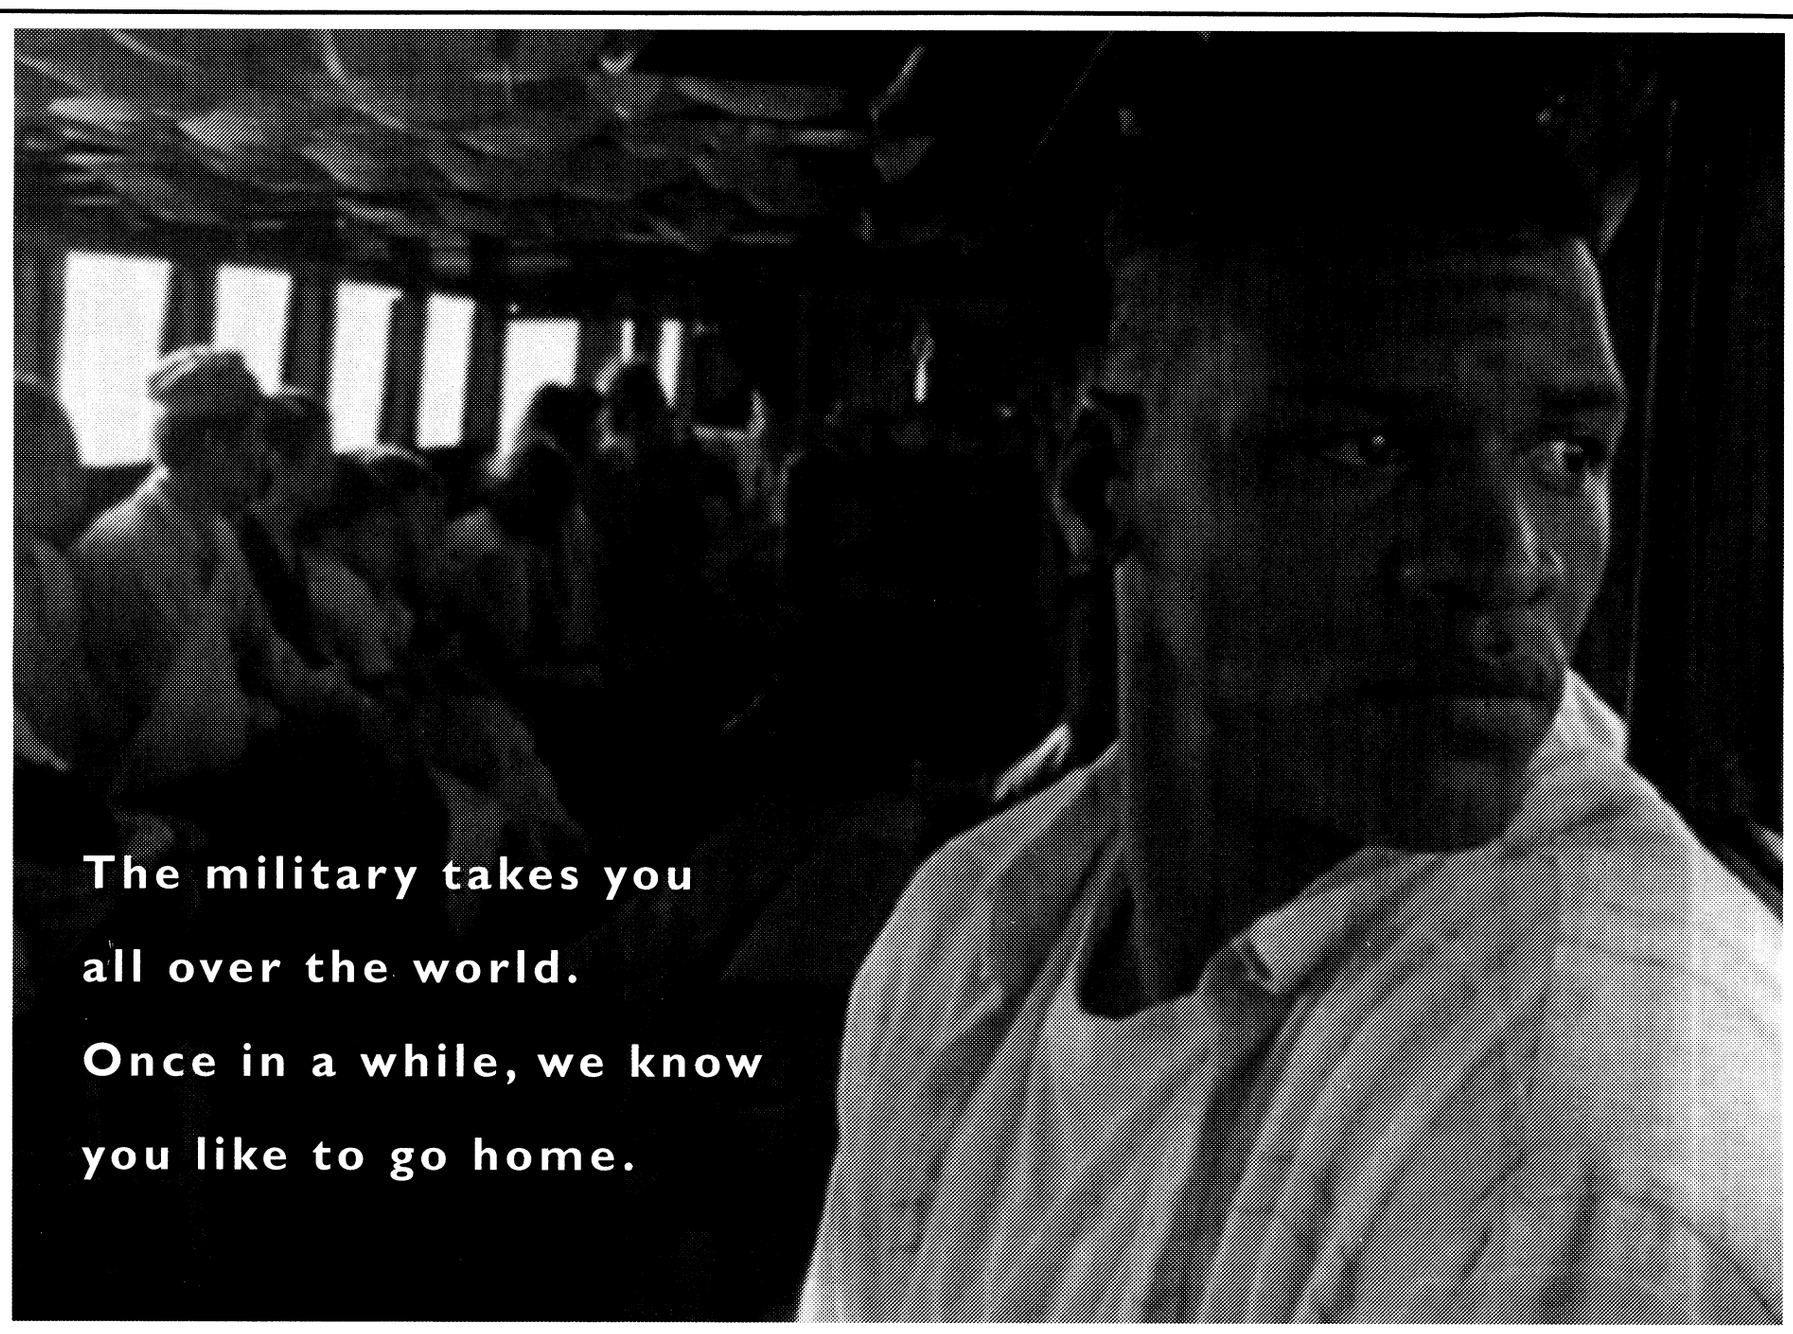
It's a cold winter day on Lake Fork in East Texas and guide Richard McCarty is doing what many of the lake's guides are doing that day with their clients: fishing jigging spoons in about 22 feet of water in hope of catching one of the lake's truly big bass.

McCarty, however, is casting his spoon, not jigging it, and in less than half an hour of fishing, he has already caught one six pounder and several smaller bass.

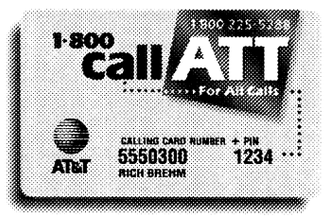
"Casting a jigging spoon allows you to work the lure an entirely different way and cover a lot more water," said the angler. "Working a jigging spoon vertically only attracts those bass very near the boat, but when I cast, I attract bass all the way in with my retrieve."

In the winter, McCarty looks for bass on underwater humps or high spots, and the best spots seem to be those edged by creeks where the water depth may drop to 30 or 40 feet. The presence of stumps and old trees will make such a high spot even more attractive to bass.

"When I cast and begin retrieving, I keep my rod tip low and work the lure with the reel. I let the spoon sink to the bottom, then I'll crank the reel handle really fast for three or four turns. This makes the spoon rise off the bottom like it's swimming.



Because he uses his reel to control the spoon, the pro can keep his rod tip pointed low at the water. This way when a bass does hit, he has plenty of room to set the hook.



"One of the problems with working a spoon up and down with your rod tip is when a fish hits with your rod tip high, you can't set the hook very well," McCarty said.

"Winter bass often strike very lightly, too, so you don't always know when they take the spoon. Much of the time, they're simply there. You have to be ready to set the hook at any time, and with the possibility of a big bass, you have to make certain you get a solid hook set the first time."

"When you cast a spoon and retrieve it the way I do, it turns the lure into a type of crank bait and jig combination," he said, "but it still has the visual appeal and action of a spoon that imitates a bait fish very well.

"By casting the spoon instead of jigging it right beside the boat, you also cover a lot more water. It's a fun way to fish, and it's also very r oductive."

KNOW YOUR BUILDER

The Woodruff name has been associated with the home building industry in Columbus for the past 40 years. Our company represents the same high standard instilled by George's grandfather many years ago, in providing people from all walks of life the opportunity of owning a quality home.

It is not our company's goal to build the most homes in a year. It is, however, our goal to deal fairly with our customers and provide them with the best possible house for their money.

We believe one of the miracles of the construction industry is that workers, each skilled in different areas, can work together to create a dream born from a set of blueprints. Our job is to insure that this is done smoothly.

We provide a wide range of services such as mortgage assistance, custom designs and plans, selection of your homesite, decorating assistance and much more. We hope that you will allow us the opportunity of making your dream come true.

Sincerely,
George Woodruff, III

COMMUNITY

SECTION B

around post

Dexter Elementary Fall Festival is Saturday — The Dexter Fall Festival is 1 to 4 p.m. Saturday on the school grounds.

The planned activities include a spacewalk and cakewalk, games, prizes, clowns, McGruff the Crime Dog, Blinky the car and a Fort Benning firetruck.

Tickets are $.50 and the public is invited to attend. Participants may wear costumes.

Dexter Elementary is located at 99 Yeager Ave.

Youth Services to sponsor turkey walk for ACS Food Locker — The Youth Services is sponsoring a 5-mile turkey walk at 8 a.m. Nov. 1 on the Riverwalk. The starting point is YS, Building 1056, Baltzell Ave.

Walkers will solicit canned good pledges for each completed mile, which will be donated to the Army Community Services Food Locker in time for the holidays.

The walk is open to children age 6 to 18. Sign up is at YS. Pledge sheets are available there.

For more information, call 545-7945.

Fort Benning Girl Scouts to collect toys — The Fort Benning Girl Scouts will collect new or almost new stuffed toys for Santa's Castle Nov. 2-8.

For more information, call Cindy Lefler at 682-3913.

Fort Benning annual bazaar set for Nov. 15 — Fort Benning's annual craft bazaar is 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. Nov. 15 in Infantry Hall. More than 80 crafters are scheduled; bake goods and other food items will be available for sale. Door prizes hourly, activities are planned for children, including decorating gingerbread men. A quilt will be raffled. The tickets cost $1.

All the proceeds go to the Officers' Wives' Club scholarship and welfare projects.

For more information, call Judith Markelz at 687-7246 or Brenda Barger at 568-8921.

Post prepares for Halloween — Halloween "trick or treating," will be from 6 to 8 p.m. Oct. 31, in post housing areas. "Trick or treat" activities are limited to children under 13 years of age. Preschool children must be accompanied by an older person (14 years or older). Residents should limit "trick or treating" only to the housing area in which the participants reside, and approach only residences with lighted entry ways.

Light-colored, fire resistant costumes, short enough to prevent tripping, should be worn by children. Costumes can be marked with reflective tape or 'glow' spray paint so they can pick up auto headlights and other lights.

Observe all basic safety precautions. Use sidewalks and crosswalks; don't cut through yards. Look in all directions before walking across the street.

Ensure children carry flashlights after dark and that every safety precaution is taken when crossing streets. Motorists must be alert on Halloween during the hours of 6 to 8 p.m. Parents should inspect all "treats" prior to their children eating them. Give your child a full meal before he or she goes "trick or treating."

Post schools invite nationally known speakers to the Parent Academy

Drew Brown asks a question during the Parent Academy Oct. 17.

Fort Benning Schools presented the Parent Academy Oct. 17 and Saturday at Faith Middle School.

"Parents are their children's educators," said Gail Wilson, director of Staff Development, Fort Benning Schools. "Education is very important.

"The more parents know and understand about the various stages children go through, the better parents they become. The Parent Academy is designed to provide information and the opportunity for parents to be the best parents they can be."

The Parent Academy featured two speakers, Naval Reserve Lt. Comdr. Drew Brown and Norm Bossio, a former classroom teacher, principal and school superintendent.

Brown spoke to Fort Benning third-graders and older during the week and to parents Oct. 17. His message, "education plus hard work minus drugs equals the American dream," is also the subtitle of his book, You Gotta Believe!

Brown spoke about the mixed messages society gives to children on drugs, sex, gangs and education.

He said a football player who makes $58,000 a week was busted for cocaine use and received a 10-day suspension. But everyday people, including people in the military, lose everything, even careers through drug use.

Children aren't old enough to fly cocaine into this country, Brown said, but adults are.

Marion Berry, mayor of Washington, D.C., was an example Brown used when talking about the addictive power of crack cocaine.

"He was one of the most powerful men in Washington, D.C. — a man who had everything, education, money, family. He lost it all because of crack cocaine."

Brown's message also included straight talk about sex. He told the Parent Academy audience what he told the children he spoke to earlier in the week.

"I asked them 'how many of you would have sex with somebody infected with AIDS even though you use a condom?' They all said no. Yet we are telling them about safe sex.

"It's a lie — a condom is 80 percent effective. It only works 80 percent of the time," Brown said.

"If I gave you a bullet-proof vest and told you it worked only 80 percent of the time — would you let me shoot you?" he asked.

"We are lying to these children. The only safe sex is no sex. I told the young ladies 'you are too young to open up your legs' and the young men 'they were too young to have their zippers down.' End of sex education."

Another example of a mixed message society gives children is about gangs.

Children need to belong somewhere; it's up to the adults to show them the right gangs to belong to. Examples of the right kind of gangs are Harvard, Yale, U.S. military, etc., Brown said.

When he called the Commanding General a big-time gang leader, the audience laughed.

Brown and the audience became serious again, however, when he started to talk about education.

"The worst mixed message we give these poor kids is education," Brown said.

He illustrated his point by talking about the "haves" and the "have nots" and a two-class system.

The "haves" have an education and the "have nots" don't, he said.

"What do President Bill Clinton, former President George Bush, Senator Bob Dole, Jessie Jackson, Anita Hill, Clarence Thomas, every doctor, lawyer, architect have in common? A college education.

"What do 90 percent of the people on welfare, 90 percent of the people who are homeless and 95 percent of the people in a penitentiary all have in common?

"Lack of education is what keeps men enslaved.

"Education is our way away from welfare, from poverty, from crime and drug use."

Brown asked the audience if they told their children to respect their teachers and then said society doesn't respect teachers.

To prove his point, he talked about the differences in lifestyles.

"Football players, drug dealers and lawyers all drive Mercedes Benzes. Teachers carpool."

One way to improve the educational system in America, Brown said, is double teachers' salaries and them hold them accountable.

"All kids need to go to college," he said. "When people say all kids can't go to college, they aren't talking about their own. We give children the most important decision they'll ever make, and that's whether they will continue their education, at the most stupidest time of their lives (when they think they know everything) and we want to know why there is a drop out problem."

Brown stressed the importance of education, which I agree with, said Peggy Gindville, the prekindergarten teacher at Dexter Elementary School.
