Saturday morning's session of the Parent Academy set another tone for the parents who attended. Bossio's topics included parenting, the use of sarcasm, stress, the importance of laughter and the harm of indifference.

"Parenting is the one job you'll never finish," he said. "A parent is a friend who lasts forever — don't ever lose your passion for your children.

"We need to understand how our children are feeling, to remember what we felt when we were children. When your child drops his ice cream, it may not be the end of your world, but it may very will be the end of his."

Feelings are legitimate, Bossio said, the behavior may not be appropriate.

"The time you least feel like giving your child a hug is probably the time the child most needs it," he said.

"It is OK to get mad at your children, people aren't perfect, but don't teach your children to use their hands when they get angry."

Bossio illustrated this point by using an example of a school teacher putting a child in line, not asking the child to get back into line.

"Children model behavior, they model people they love. Why teach kids to use their hands when they're angry? Teach kids to use their minds," he said.

"Be careful of what you teach," he warned.

"Don't use sarcasm with children — they don't understand it, so when you tell your child it's just great that he colored the wall with marker, he'll think he's done something great."

Students cheer a relay race runner on from the grandstands during the third annual Spirit Day track and field day Oct. 10 at Doughboy Stadium.

Faith Middle School held it's third annual Spirit Day Oct. 10 at Doughboy Stadium. Sixth-, seventh- and eighth-graders competed against each other to win the Spirit Day Award.

John D. Ulferts, vice principal at Faith Middle School, said the day started off for the purpose of teaching the kids about the Atlanta Olympics, but turned into more of a field day.

He said it was a day to foster closer ties with peer relations, school spirit and bond with each other.

Mark Baker, an eighth-grader on the All-Stars team, had not yet competed in the 4x400 relay.

"I'm looking forward to the race, which is not about speed, but endurance," he said.

Leo T. Crawford, a sixth-grader on the Dazzlers, won first place in the 60-yard dash.

"I'm shocked that I won but it feels good," he said.

Derrick Powell, a sixth-grader, said the day was good because "I had the chance to meet a lot of new friends that I will be able to remain friends with throughout the school year."

The many events included 10 track and field events, 60 and 100 yard dashes, 4x100 relays, 4x200 relays, 4x400 relays, a 1600 meter run, a shot put and long jump event.

Each grade consisted of two teams and the team with the most points won the Spirit Award.

Kids decorated the school's halls and made a banner in the cafeteria to prepare for Spirit Day. The superintendent, assistant superintendent and the school board judged the decorations.

The sixth-graders won overall, the seventh-graders came in second, and the eighth graders third.

McBride class learns about safety

By Erin A. Nash
Special to the Bayonet©

McGruff the Crime Dog and Blinky the remote control police car visited prekindergarten students Oct. 17 at McBride Elementary School to teach the students about safety.

Accompanying McGruff and Blinky was Spc. Andrew Simko, a military police officer.

Simko started the program by introducing himself as not only a military police officer, but also as a father.

"I'm just like your daddy at home," he told the students. "My job is to make sure everybody's safe. I'm not here to be mean."

He showed the students the accessories he carries on his belt, which include a first aid kit, a two-way radio, an MP club, a bulletproof vest and handcuffs.

He explained the radio is so he can communicate with other military police officers, the club is not used to hit people but to hold them back if they are bigger than him and the handcuffs and vest are for his protection.

He asked the students several safety questions, including what they should do if their mom or dad is hurt, if there is a fire or if they are lost.

To all of these questions the children unanimously answered, "Call 911."

Simko also asked the students how many of them wore their seatbelts, and explained their importance.

Simko explained McGruff's role in the community to the 4-year-olds. He said McGruff is a watchdog on Fort Benning, and if he sees something wrong, he will call the military police.

After Simko was done with his program, each child was given the opportunity to hug McGruff and to touch Blinky, who would flash his lights and blare his siren when touched.

Ending the program the students were given a tour of the inside of a military police vehicle.

This week's article provides a safety hint when setting your clocks back for Eastern Standard Time and proper disposal method for leaves.

Replace batteries with time change

When you set your clock back Sunday for Eastern Standard Time take time to change the battery and clean the smoke detectors. Clean the detector by opening it up, removing the old battery and gently vacuuming the internal mechanism and inside of the lid to remove dust. Install a new battery. This five minutes of preventative maintenance could save a life.

Don't leave those leaves

Fall season is fast approaching and with it comes the annual task of collecting and disposing of fallen leaves. Following is a reminder for the Fort Benning community about disposing of your fall leaves.

Using rigid yard waste containers is the recommended method for collection of yard waste. If residents do not have rigid yard waste containers paper yard waste bags may be obtained at the DPW Self Help Store Building 385 Vibbert Avenue.

Bags are issued in generous quantities — 20 bags per day for single dwelling units and 10 bags per day for each resident of multiple dwelling units. Plastic bags cannot be used for collection and disposal of yard waste. If residents have mulching lawn mowers, this can help reduce the volume of leaves, number of bags and amount of time required.

Small limbs and branches should be broken up and placed in the containers or bags. Larger limbs and branches should be stacked on the curb for pick up.

All yard waste must be placed at the curb by 7:30 a.m. on Mondays. The contractor will pick up the yard waste and dispose of it at the Fort Benning composting facility.

The Fort Benning composting facility was developed to convert leaves grass clippings and small limbs to mulch and compost. All mulch and compost produced at our yard waste composting facility will be put to good use, to repair areas that have been damaged by erosion or need additional nutrients to support vegetative growth.

Do not place non-yard debris (such as bricks, car parts, dirty diapers, and household trash) in the yard debris containers or bags. Doing so defeats the purpose of the installation's effort to recycle yard debris.

For more information, call Walter Nichols, DPW Solid Waste Program manager, at 545-1007.

Adopt a drain program. Fall not only brings on fallen leaves but also more rain. Leaves and street drains don't mix too well. DPW will try to keep the gutters clear of leaves but we need your help. "Adopt" the gutter drain nearest your house and help keep it free of leaves. Fort Benning's storm sewer system is easily overwhelmed by fallen leaves and keeping the drains clear allows the rain water to run off much quicker.

Comments and questions

If you have questions or topics that you would like addressed in the DPW "Information Corner," contact Glenn Todd, DPW Customer Relations specialist at 545-2117 or write to the Directorate of Public Works Building 67 Room 409 ATTN: ATZB PWM (Glenn Todd), Fort Benning, Ga., 31905.

Children learn violence from parents

Family Advocacy Program

Violence is passed on from one generation to the next in homes where battering takes place. Children first learn about the adult world in their families. What are your children learning if you are a battered woman? They could be learning that:

•Violence in the home is a way to deal with conflict.

•Being a man means you can use physical force against a woman.

•Being a woman means being a victim or that discipline includes physically or verbally attacking another member of the family.

Children don't necessarily get the message that this is the way family life should be, but they may come away with the idea that this is how it is. There is no doubt that children suffer from battering relationships between adults in the home. Violence creates tension, fear, and uncertainty for all family members who are potential victims. Children sometimes are injured when they get in the middle of fights involving parents they try to protect. Children themselves may be abused by the battering man, or by the battered woman who cannot cope with her responsibility as a parent when she herself is a victim of abuse. In later life, children from violent or abusive homes are likely to pattern their own behavior, sometimes consciously or sometimes without meaning to, after their childhood experiences.

You need to know that abuse can have a lasting effect on the children who witness it. Even those who have never seen a violent act seem to sense their mother's pain and fear. Children in shelters — even very young, can remember in horrifying detail the violence against their mothers. They can be fearful, angry, or feel truly alone. Many children often experience low self-esteem and lose the ability to trust. They can have learning problems and behavior problems which can get worse as they older.

What effect does domestic violence have on children?

•In homes where domestic violence occurs, children are at high risk of suffering physical abuse themselves. Regardless of whether children are physically abused, the emotional effects of witnessing domestic violence are very similar to the psychological trauma associated with being a victim of child abuse.

•Children in homes where domestic violence occurs are physically abused or seriously neglected at a rate 1,500 percent higher than the national average of cases reported in the general population.

•Children may "indirectly" receive injuries when household items are thrown or weapons are used. Infants may by injured if being held by their mother when the batterer strikes out.

•Children from violent homes are at higher risk for alcohol and drug abuse and juvenile delinquency

Possible signs of a batterer

•A batterer's anger is frequently disproportionate to the problem that arises.

•The batterer's anger is often displaced and exaggerated, with the objects of violence often small animals and property as well as family members.

•The batterer often describes the alcohol abuse as the cause of the battering.

•The batterer blames the battered woman for the violence and the alcohol and other drug abuse.

•The batterer has ineffectively or not dealt with her or his abuse as a child.

•The batterer has hit or been abusive with a partner in the past.

Possible signs of a battered woman.

•She is frightened of her partner's temper.

•She is often compliant in order not to excite the batterer.

•She apologizes for her partner's behavior.

•She drinks heavily or uses other drugs to cope with the violent situation.

•She has visible bruises, or other temporary or permanent injuries without appropriate explanation.

If you or someone you know are involved in a domestic violence situation, please call for help. The violence rarely stops without outside intervention.

AFTB teach spouses about Army

Army Family Team Building

Have you ever wondered where to learn more about the role of a spouse in the Army community?

Now free multiphased skills training is taught through the Army Family Team Building (AFTB) Program.

This volunteer program is designed to teach spouses how to prepare for deployments and other day-to-day challenges that exists within the Army community.

AFTB teachers are volunteers who have been specially trained. They receive a specifically tailored job description and receive credit for their volunteer hours.

Through AFTB training, spouses receive the tools they need to function in any military life situation with minimal outside support.

As a result of this training, personal and family readiness will improve, and strengthen, the quality of life and Army readiness of an Army family, said Mary Allen of the AFTB Program.

AFTB training consists of three levels. Level I courses are targeted toward people new to the Army or anyone interested in updating personal skills or basic knowledge. Level II courses are targeted toward emerging leaders within the Army community. Level III courses offer training to enhance the professional growth and leadership development opportunities of family members, especially those who might assume advisory and mentoring roles within the community and unit.

There is no charge for any of the courses or materials. To register for any AFTB course, contact the AFTB office at 545-5377 or 545-2794, or Barbara Singleton at 689-7627.

The next Level I class is 6 to 9 p.m. Wednesday.

Academy: Focuses on family

Bossio talked about the importance of parents working with teachers and the school system. Don't blame the school — work with it, get involved in a child's education, he said.

Bossio talked about the power of expectations once again using his background as teacher to emphasize the point.

"If you expect a certain behavior, you'll get it," he said.

Before a field trip with school children, one of the parents went to Bossio and told him that his child wet the bed. For a week on this field trip, Bossio woke the boy up in the middle of the night and sent him to the bathroom. No problems all week and when they returned to the school, Bossio found out he was waking the child.

Children are children, no two are alike, each one is an individual, he said.

Bossio reinforces what we already know, said Sharon Martz, a second grade teacher at Wilson Elementary.

Bossio used a fishing story to press home the need of not confusing your perceptions for your children's.

He took his three boys fishing in a canoe all day long on a lake in New Hampshire. At the end of the day, not a fish was caught and Bossio thought the day was wasted. On the trip back to Massachusetts, he heard his boys talking about the awesome day they just spent with their father.

"Norm Bossio is very supportive of family values and how very important it is to stop and spend time with your children," Gindville said.

One thing both speakers emphasized was the need to spend time with children.

Brown said his 18-year-old son asked him to see a movie, Booty Call, not a movie he wanted to watch, but he went because his son asked him to go.

"When your child asks you to go fishing, watch a softball game or ride an amusement park ride, you do it, because they want to spend time with you," Brown said.

"I liked the focus on family time," said Capt. Stephon Calhoun, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor Regiment, 3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division (Mechanized).

The Parent Academy stressed family participation, Tangela Calhoun said.

"I just wish more people would have come."

Jews mark the New Year tonight with Simchat Torah

By Chaplain (Capt.) Chana Timoner
The Infantry Center Chapel

Tonight, Jews all over the world will gather for the greatest celebration of the New Year.

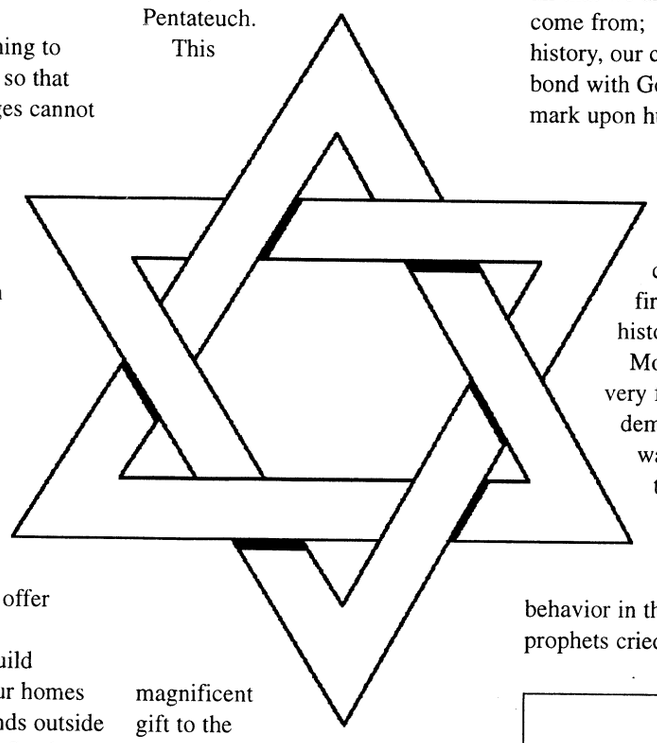
reflections

It is not the new year at December's finale, which is welcomed with raucous parties and bacchanalian feasts the world over. Rather, this festival of overwhelming joy and appreciation is in stark contrast to the Jewish new year, Rosh Hashanah, which was observed a brief two weeks ago.

The radical change in mood from somber introspection and deep repentance which characterizes the Jewish new year to tonight's festival, Simchat Torah, makes one sit up and take notice.

Are we to change our mood in such a short period of time? The Jewish calendar, now in the year 5758 starts us thinking about our inner personalities and spiritual selves back in August with the somber month called Av.

There is a long period of preparation to enter into God's presence with truly deep humility, having done our utmost to face our emotional and spiritual shortcomings.



There must be something to balance out our calendar so that Judaism and its great sages cannot be thought of as pouncing false joy upon us after 1/12 of the year is spent in sadness.

That something which eases us out of serious thinking into a more appreciative mood is the great pilgrimage festival of Succot. The eight-day festival is one of three in which Jews were commanded to go to the great Temple in Jerusalem and offer sacrifices.

During this time we build temporary huts outside our homes and synagogues. One stands outside the Regimental Chapel in Sand Hill, in which the Jewish congregation studies and has fellowship in remembrance of the forty years that the Israelites wandered the wilderness of Sinai.

It's roof is open so one can see the stars at night, and is graced with the natural leaves and vines which grow in the area.

The day immediately after the end of Succot is the special day in which Jews celebrate the greatest gift of all by God after life itself: the gift of the Torah (Five Books of Moses) or the Pentateuch.

This magnificent gift to the Jewish people through Moses has been a standard of Western civilization for about 5,000 years.

It is the basis of all Western law and many customs and traditions. Through the Hebrew Bible and the Israelite people, Christianity and Islam was born. With Judaism as their common heritage, all three religions can lovingly claim to be children of Abraham.

The celebration of the reading of this "book" (really a hand written scroll) is a mark of appreciation of all that we are and all that we have come from; an appreciation of our history, our culture, our ethics, our bond with God, and our indelible mark upon human civilization.

With the advent of Judaism as recorded in the Torah, some things came into being for the first time in human history.

Most notably, for the very first time God demanded that religion was and is inexorably tied with ethics; that behavior in the market place cannot contradict behavior in the Temple. The prophets cried out that people pray on the holy days, but cannot wait to rush to their stalls in the market place to cheat one another.

A second thing that the Torah brought into being which had never before existed was absolute human equality. Unequivocal equality regardless of race, culture, religion or gender. No excuses, no exception.

The foreigner who dwells among us will observe our laws, and will be treated with the same kindness as those who are us.

There will be different laws for the slave, the woman or child. How do we know that this is so? Because we have thousands of fragments of laws from different nations, and a nearly complete text of laws set down by a famous king Hammurabi.

The most fascinating and gruesome fact about these laws was that there was one set of laws for the wealthy, male land owner, and another, much more harsh set of laws for women, children, slaves and foreigners.

Hard to even imagine in present day America, yet it goes on in the form of racial, class and gender prejudice in America.

So, in the final analysis, the Torah is some five thousand years ahead of us to this very day. No wonder that we celebrate its reading with such great joy. No wonder Jews have survived for nearly five thousand years.

For more information on joining the Jewish community on Fort Benning in celebration, call Chaplain Timoner at 545-2050.

498th returns from Bosnian deployment

By Sgt. Marc G. Turchin
Bayonet assistant editor

Fort Benning's only air ambulance unit came home Tuesday night after spending more than seven months deployed overseas.

The 498th Medical Company (Air Ambulance) returned to Fort Benning and the U.S. after its deployment to Bosnia for seven months and 10 days.

"It feels excellent to be home," said Staff Sgt. Russell Van Benthuysen as he stood holding his three-year-old daughter Jessie in his left hand and his right arm hugging his wife Kathy; all three gleaming with smiles from cheek to cheek.

"It was a long, but comfortable ride home," Van Benthuysen said while Jessie tugged on his collar begging him to take her home.

It was 1 a.m. by the time the Van Benthuysens got a chance to greet and touch their loved one who had only been on the ground about 25 minutes. More than 100 Soldiers joined Van Benthuysen on the flight.

The few minutes they spent together in the crowded hangar at Lawson Army Airfield was just the beginning — both parents are looking forward to the next few weeks.

"We're going to relax," he said. "I can't wait to get used to being around the family again."

Family members showed up at the airfield as early as 9 p.m. waiting for the flight originally scheduled for 10:50 p.m. But the flight was delayed at Pope Air Force Base, N.C., unloading people and equipment. But, the hangar remained filled.

Waiting alongside the friends and family members were Col. A. Allen Rasper, commander of the 36th Engineer Group, and Brig. Gen. Walter Wojdakowski, post deputy commander.

"Thanks for a job exceptionally well done," Rasper said, after the Soldiers arrived. "We are proud of your accomplishments and the manner in which you represented Fort Benning, the 36th Engineer Group and the 56th Evacuation Battalion."

Wojdakowski told the 498th Soldiers they should think highly of their families who stayed behind.

"You ought be very proud of your families and spouses," he said. "They did you proud while you were gone and thanks to all the family members for supporting your husbands and wives while they were deployed doing this outstanding mission."

Supporting the deployed Soldiers was the responsibility of the rear detachment and the family support group (FSG).

Karen Barnes, wife of Capt. Steve Barnes, said if she ever needed anything, the rear detachment and the FSG was always there — even on Sundays.

"Lieutenant Scott Rollston came and fixed my toilet on a Sunday. He did a great job as the detachment commander. He went above and beyond the call of duty," Barnes said.

She added the FSG was a closely knit group of people.

"The women in our company are really close and we had a good network of support through the family support group meetings," Barnes said. "We'd watch each others' children so we'd have a break and we would do things together — go to movies, restaurants and things like that. It was hard with him being gone, but we had good friends."

With the spouses gone, some would think they are out of contact with them. It wasn't true in this case.

"They had free phone calls so we talked two or three times a week," Barnes said. "We had e-mail and we wrote letters every night."

Now that the 498th Soldiers are home, they are expected to get at least two weeks of block

AMU Soldier wins Athlete of the Year title

U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit Public Affairs Office

A U. S. Army Marksmanship Unit two-time Olympian won the title of 1997 Army Male Athlete of the Year.

USAMU shotgun shooter Staff Sgt. James Todd Graves is the Army Male Athlete for 1997. Spc. Miambi Dennis, a track and field triple jumper with the University of Texas ROTC is the Army Female Athlete of the Year.

Graves

They will be recognized at the Pride of the Nation Reception and Awards Presentation Banquet this January in Washington, D.C. Graves and Dennis now go on to compete for the Armed Forces Male and Female Athlete of the Year titles, which will be decided early in November.

"I was surprised; I didn't think I was going to win," Graves said. "This is quite an honor. I don't know what I did to deserve it; I just do my job."

So far this year, the two-time Olympian has racked up seven Gold, four Silver and five Bronze Medals in international, national and interservice competition.

"Based on his accomplishments, I thought he'd win this year; he deserves it," said fellow USAMU shotgun shooter Sgt. Theresa E. DeWitt, who was the 1996 Armed Forces Female Athlete of the Year.

DeWitt, who was a 1996 Olympian in double trap, said she is amazed Graves shoots all three Olympic shotgun sports —skeet, trap and double trap — and has won medals in all three.

"I can't imagine having to shoot all three well," DeWitt said

Army announces new standards for APFT

TRADOC News Service

The Army announced revised Army Physical Fitness Test standards that officials say will ensure soldiers earn equal points for equal effort.

Differences in performance scoring for men and women will narrow or disappear in some APFT events, according to the new standards.

The Army isn't changing its basic PT test or lowering its physical fitness standards, said Lt. Gen. William J. Bolt, deputy commanding general, accessions and initial entry training, U.S. Army Training and Doctrine Command, Fort Monroe, Va.

"We're using the same test today that we developed and adopted in 1984," Bolt said. "Things have changed in the Army since that time and the (overall) level of fitness among soldiers has improved. The new standards are tough, challenging, realistic and achievable."

Under the new standards, the average 32-year-old female soldier and the average 32-year-old male soldier will put forth the same amount of effort to earn the same number of points.

"All we ask is that both genders receive the same points for the same efforts," said Col. Stephen Cellucci, commandant of the U.S. Army Physical Fitness School at Fort Benning.

"There is now equity between the genders and among the age groups. We relaxed some maximum standards for both genders because they are simply not attainable. However, we relaxed no minimum standards."

The new APFT standards are the result of a five-year study, Cellucci said. In 1992, then-Army Chief of Staff Gen. Gordon R. Sullivan tasked TRADOC with reviewing the APFT to see if it was valid for the Army. The new standards will be effective beginning Oct. 1, 1998.

The three events of the APFT are push-ups, sit-ups and two-mile run. The minimum score required in each event is 60 points, and the maximum is 100.

Under the new standards, some age groups will have relaxed maximums compared with current standards. With each older male an

VARIOUS VOICES

What is your opinion of the new PT standards?

Pfc. Shanna Taunton, Company A, 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment — "I like the new standards. There were a lot of complaints, from male Soldiers about how females have it easier. Now we all have the same situp standards. That helps."

Sgt. 1st Class Harry Dukes, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, Division Issue and Support Maintenance Command, Fort Stewart, Ga. — "The changes are an improvement. It's a little more competitive now."

Sgt Maj. Calvin Fields, Infantry Training Brigade — "I believe in the ITB, everybody should be physically fit. By raising the standards, they give you a goal to shoot for. The Army wants everyone to be equal on the same basis, male and female."

Spc. Michelle Maddox, Company A, 203rd Forward Support Battalion, 3rd Brigade, 3rd ID (Mech) — "I don't think it will have much of an effect. We have to meet XVIII Airborne Corps standards as well. We have to do a four-mile run in 36 minutes."

Master Sgt. Kim Silcox, Co. A, 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment — "They're giving people until October 1998 and we're only talking about an increase of a few pushups and situps for the maximum. I don't think it's going to make a big impact."

Staff Sgt. Richard Brock, Company D, 1st Battalion, 507nd Infantry (Airborne), 11th Infantry Regiment— "I'm glad they increased the standards. A Soldier comes to Airborne School and can't run two miles in 18 minutes, there's something wrong."

New PT standards should make all Soldiers equal

By Dr. Louis F. Tomasi
U.S. Army Physical Fitness School

commentary

In the 1980s, selected physical performance experts were challenged to develop a new Army physical fitness test. The task was to establish a baseline level of fitness for all personnel and administered anywhere and with no equipment required. The basis of Army physical training is, when provided with healthy individuals, through frequent training, progressive development, and PT challenge, the Army leadership can train the Soldiers to meet and surpass the basic minimums. After all, the Army builds soldiers.

In the 1990s, as part of the Training and Doctrine Command initiative "Women in the Army," Gen. Fredrick Franks, Commanding General, and Maj. Gen. Carl F. Ernst, then-Deputy Chief Staff of Training, TRADOC directed the U.S. Army Physical Fitness School (APFS) to review the 1984 APFT standards. The fitness school cadre led an APFT Update Study Committee. Included were: the United States Army Research Institute of Environmental Medicine, Army Research Institute, Ft. Benning Office, The Office of the Surgeon General, and the APFS. The committee designed a scientifically sound testing procedures. APFS tested the fitness level of 2,588 Soldiers.

According to APFS officials, Soldiers, particularly the women, improved their performances since the 1984 APFT standards were established. Male performances increased slightly also, but the male improvement potential is not as great as the female improvement potential."

To pass the APFT now, the womens minimum aerobic ratings are poor to fair. The men require fair to good. Present Army womens standards are below physiological expectations reported in scientific research. "A 'Fair' rating for all Soldiers is ideal and it approximates an 'equal level of effort' by all ages and both genders," Cellucci said.

When reviewing the current requirements for the APFT, there is a disparity between the genders. The women's point standards on the 2-mile run and sit-up events are less demanding, i.e., less gender-specific physical effort, than purported in scientific literature. Conversely, the push-up event favors the males. The women's requirements for the push-up event are 44 percent that of the male soldier's demand. The sit-up event requirement for women is 93 percent, while the 2-mile run times are 81 percent that of the men. The 1998 APFT standards require women's upper body strength of 46-55 percent that of mens, sit-up event performance are 100 percent that of men, and the 2-mile run times are 84 percent those scores of men. These 1998 APFT standards approximate these expectations.

Army PT increased attention at the younger ages. While the fitness of career Soldiers (27 years old) appears satisfactory, the fitness of younger soldiers is not. These younger soldiers are failing the APFT at an alarming rate. It is reasonable to demand younger soldiers to be as fit as average civilians. This "average" level of fitness may not adequately prepare them for the stress of combat. This results in little improvement for battle focus physical training.

The repercussions of this investigation demonstrate that a rejuvenated significance on battle-focus physical training of soldiers is essential throughout the Army units and chain-of-command. Cellucci believes this initiative must be supported by improving leader education regarding physical fitness training for combat operations. Units must be required to begin and follow current physical fitness training doctrine according to FM 21-20. and use Master Fitness Trainers. Intelligent training and deepened command attention will correct the ineptitudes of our Soldiers' physical conditioning. The Army must not only train "harder," but intelligently. Cellucci says: "After all, the Army builds Soldiers."

Post commander names today Day of Excellence

Fort Benning continues to be recognized as the leader in the Army Improvement Criteria (APIC), Army Communities of Excellence (ACOE) process. This year we won it all — the prestigious Presidential Award for Quality, the Commander-in-Chief's (CINC) Award for Installation Excellence and the Chief of Staff, Army, Award for Installation Excellence.

To recognize the efforts of our military and civilian personnel who accomplish the complex missions of our installation, I am designating Oct. 31 as a Fort Benning Day of Excellence.

This day is dedicated to honoring our people for excellence. If essential training or critical events preclude participation on this day, commanders will designate an alternate date.

Commanders, directors and personal and special staff officers will plan and conduct recognition ceremonies within their organizations. The day will begin with the Two-Star Excellence Breakfast at 8 a.m. in the Fort Benning Officers' Club and end with the CG's Awards Ceremony at 11:30 in front of the Iron Mike statue at Infantry Hall.

For the remainder of the day, payday activities are authorized for our military personnel; supervisors are encouraged to use the 59-minute rule for our civilian personnel.

I am proud to be the Commander of an organization that permeates excellence in everything we do. I am especially grateful for the dedicated Soldiers and civilians who make up our Fort Benning family; for the enthusiasm, dedication, and quality-focused attitudes you deliver on a day-to-day basis.

These efforts continually enable us to aim higher, reach farther, and continually achieve greater levels of success.

Thank you for a job well done!

CG stresses importance of Native American Heritage Month

In recognition of Native American Indians and our nation's ethnic and national diversity, the period of 1-30 November is proclaimed Native American Heritage Month. The theme for this year is "Exploring Our Culture: Yesterday, Today and Tomorrow."

More than one million Americans trace their ancestry back to the Native American culture. Native Americans fought during the Civil War for both the Union and Confederate Armies. Some fought in special Indian units and others were mixed in with regular units. The most decorated Native American Soldier of the Vietnam War was Billy Walkabout, a Cherokee, who won the Distinguished Service Cross, five Silver Stars, five Bronze Stars, and was wounded on six occasions.

Today, Native Americans continue to contribute immensely in the pursuit of America's national goals and in the quest for freedom and opportunity. November offers an increase in national awareness for the History and contributions of our Native Americans. I encourage everyone to enjoy the activities at Fort Benning during Native American Heritage Month.

Army tests new equipment

By Sgt. 1st Class Larry Lane
USAIC Public Affairs Office NCOIC

The unmanned aerial vehicle prototype, the Cypher, was demonstrated this week at the McKenna Military Operation on Urbanized Terrain (MOUT) training site. The Cypher, a small, round-shaped aircraft being developed by Sikorsky Aircraft and the Dismounted Battlespace Battle Lab (DBBL), is capable of vertical take off and landings (VTOL) and is designed as a multi-mission platform.

During one of the demonstrations, the Cypher hovered over the field at about 150 feet, moved to a mock protest site and dropped smoke canisters. In other demonstrations, the Cypher hovered over the MOUT buildings to deliver smoke canisters and drop leaflets.

"There are a lot of applications for a platform with VTOL capabilities, particularly for the dismounted Soldier," said Mike Barnes, project officer with DBBL's Dismounted Forces Division. Barnes spent 20 years in the Army's military intelligence field. "It requires very little take off and landing space. You can launch it literally from anywhere. The ability for it to hover on station and provide surveillance is very important."

The Cypher contains a camera to supply visual displays of targets to its operators. The planned range for the final product is 30 kilometers, with a 50-pound payload and a three-hour flight endurance.

The prototype Cypher weighs about 265 pounds and is about six feet in diameter, but the final product may be downsized so it could be carried by one Soldier, Barnes said. The aircraft is made of graphite, a strong but lightweight composite material.

Dave Walsh, a Sikorsky flight test engineer with the development flight test center in West Palm, Fla., said the Cypher has been in research for about five years.

"So far, it's been all on the company's nickel, as far as development costs," Walsh said about the Cypher's history.

The inspiration for the Cypher began with another technology called the Battalion Targeting Aid (BTA), Walsh said. The BTA was designed to hover with cameras, laser range finders and other tools to gather information for the artillery. The program for the BTA was cancelled.

"We've done operations from airborne reconnaissance using infrared cameras, video cameras and laser range finders, to remote sentry operations where we mounted a camera on a tripod that sits on top of the aircraft," Walsh said.

The Cypher can fly precise grid patterns to search and map areas, Walsh said. The Cypher has been tested in searching for unexploded ordnance, map underground structures, and detect other ground features from the air. In these tests, the aircraft was able to transmit data back to a ground station in real-time.

Two Soldiers from the Military Police Company at Fort McClellan, Ala., participated as operators in the recent demonstrations. In about one week, the Soldiers were trained to program the Cypher for a mission.

"I think the Soldiers had an easy time learning the system. It was a matter of an hour or two to walk them through the controls. The display is a checklist kind of thing and it steps you through it," Walsh said. "There's a few things we had to show them, but it's pretty self-explanatory."

With a few computer mouse clicks, a Soldier can program the Cypher to take off, land and carry out programmed mission. Missions during the demonstrations were programmed and overseen by the Fort McClellan Soldiers back at a computer station in a van. While the Cypher can complete its missions autonomously, the operator maintains the ability to override the program and modify the mission.

Spec. Jacob Terrell and Pvt. 2 Brent Satterfield received about one week of training with the Cypher.

"It's like a computer game on a screen. Not hard at all," Terrell said. "It moved exactly the same way as I programmed it."

During a riot control demonstration, the Soldiers programmed the Cypher to drop smoke rounds to simulate CS gas rounds.

"There are many uses for it in the MP company. I'm amazed at what it can do," Terrell said. "We can use it for riot control and area reconnaissance. In the MOUT site, we can use it to look down on the buildings."

After one or two hours of initial training, the Soldiers were programming the aircraft, Satterfield said, and he expects other Soldiers will also have an easy time of learning how to operate the Cypher.

"Anybody can fly this. It's all done on the computer. You just click on a few things here and there and the machine flies itself," Satterfield said.

"When we get behind the controls and fly this thing, it's like a video game," he said. "You have the map layout and there's another window on the screen that gives us a downward view, so if we have to land it, we can see if there's something below us."

As Sikorsky Aircraft develops the Cypher, the developers plan to keep Soldiers involved in the testing stages, Walsh said. This supplies the developers with feedback from the Cypher's targeted users.

"We're looking for a customer to take us from this development vehicle to one we can actually put in the hands of the users," Walsh said.

Fort Benning remembers original ranger

By Erin A. Nash
Special to the Bayonet©

A memorial was held for retired Col. Francis W. "Bull" Dawson, a veteran of three wars and one of the original Darby's Rangers, Oct. 24 at the Ranger Memorial.

Funeral services were held Oct. 22 in his home state of North Carolina. Dawson was buried at Arlington National Cemetery.

Phil Piaza, one of Merrill's Marauders, spoke of Dawson.

"We will miss him greatly," he said. "He is one ranger we will never forget."

A history of Dawson's accomplishments was then read. His numerous accomplishments include serving as a platoon leader in the 5th Ranger Battalion in World War II.

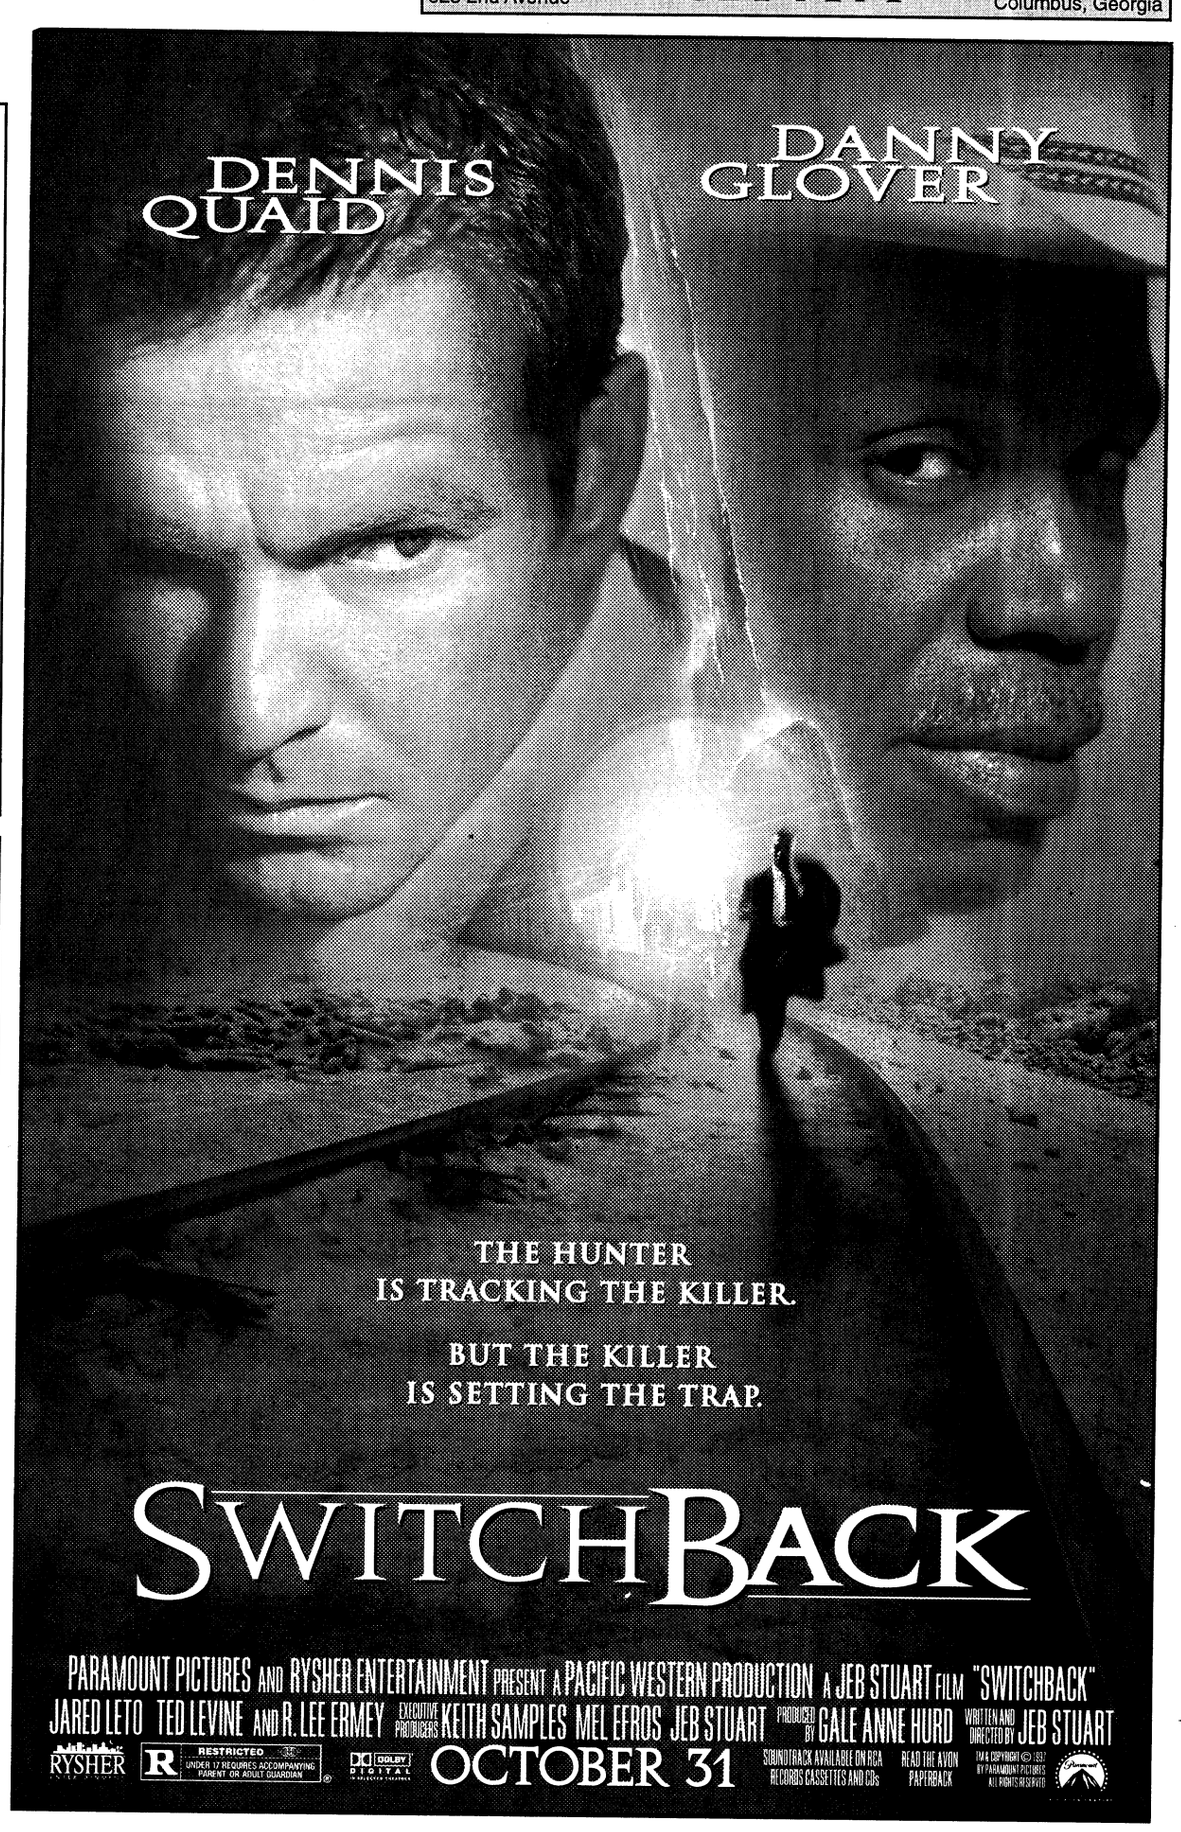
During this time, Dawson personally destroyed a machine gun position that was pinning a number of Soldiers in his battalion, cleared a number of bunkers and trenches, and captured a large number of German prisoners.

For this action, Dawson was awarded the Distinguished Service Cross.

Dawson again volunteered for the rangers during the Korean and Vietnam Wars.

Dawson's awards also include the Silver Star, Distinguished Service Cross, Bronze Star Medal with 2 oak leaf clusters, Purple Heart, Air Medal, Master Parachutist Badge, the Combat Infantrymans Badge with Star and the Ranger Tab.

Dawson was also an inaugural inductee into the 1992 Ranger Hall of Fame.



A wreath was then placed in the middle of Ranger Memorial and Taps was played to end the memorial service.

In attendance were current rangers from 3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment, Dawson's widow Elizabeth Crumbley Dawson of Columbia, S.C., and his daughter Brenda Dawson of Atlanta, Ga.

APFT: Changes in standards to be in place by Oct 98

female age group, some maximums increased a couple of repetitions while some decrease. These standards are better indicators of physical fitness in the Army.

"The Army is more physically fit as shown in the APFT study than in the early 1980s," Cellucci said. "Physical performance has improved, especially in career-soldier age groups. They know that performing well on the APFT is part of their physical discipline, professional ethic and it is good for the Army."

The study revealed that current point values are liberal for women in the sit-up and two-mile run events, while men are favored in the push-up event. Women were required to do fewer sit-ups to score the same number of points as men and were given more time to run two miles. Regular physical training over the past two decades has greatly increased women's performance, the study showed.

"Generally we found that sit-ups were equally challenging for women as they were for men," Cellucci said. "Under the revised standards, men and women will be required to do the same number of sit-ups across all age groups. For the first time, men and women will receive equal points for equal performance."

In some age groups men have to do fewer push-ups to achieve maximum scores. Women will do more push-ups for minimum qualification, but they will have to do fewer repetitions to reach maximum points.

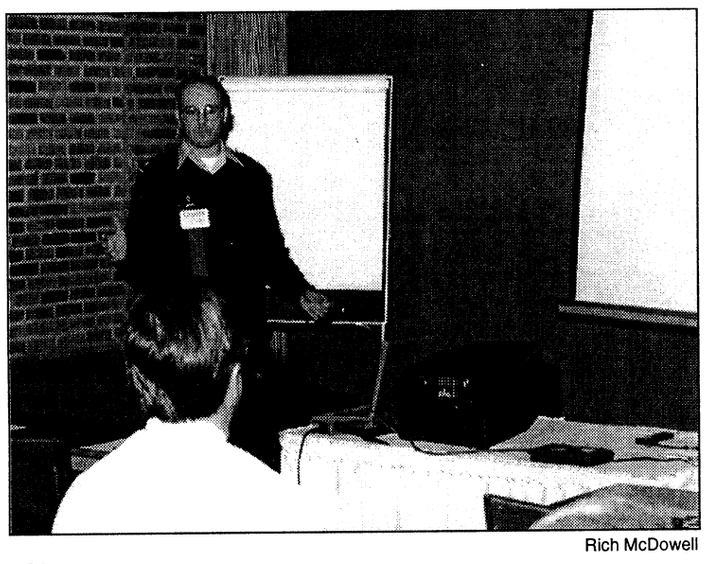
Some men and women will have to run two miles faster to achieve minimum and maximum scores. However, men will still be required to run the distance in less time than women because of physiological differences between men and women.

The U.S. Army Physical Fitness School led the study, with assistance from the U.S. Army Research Institute for Environmental Medicine, the Army Medical Department and the Army Research Institute.

The team studied 2,588 active duty, Reserve and National Guard Soldiers at 12 installations. There were 1,124 men and 1,464 women randomly selected by age and MOS.

"The new standards were derived through scientific methods, unlike the current standards," Cellucci said. "Current standards were not derived utilizing precise methodology."

Through the next year, Soldiers will still be tested under the current standards. However, they will be shown what their scores would be under the new system.



"During the one-year train-up period Soldiers can prepare themselves for the new standards," Cellucci said. "Commanders will have a better understanding of the fitness level in their units with these new standards."

The APFT does not measure a Soldier's ability to perform physical requirements of various MOS. Rather, it is an indication of physical fitness essential to every Soldier.

The only Soldiers who are permitted lower minimum scores are graduates of basic combat training. They can pass with at least 50 points in each event. However, by the time they graduate from advanced individual training or one station unit training following BCT, they are also required to score the minimum 60 points in each event.

Cellucci said the new APFT standards are aligned to the current capability of the force. They are adjusted for age and gender differences and acknowledge age limitations and decline in physical performance. The objective was to promote gender equity, "level the playing field," while providing a baseline measure of physical fitness required to wear the uniform.

Graves: Shoots to the top

"It's draining enough to put 100 percent into one sport. But when you have to put forth 300 percent effort for three sports, that's an incredible achievement."

But Graves said now he's going to concentrate on just shooting what he's best at — sheet. He is gearing up for the World Shotgun Championships to be conducted in Lima, Peru, Nov. 8 to 15, and the Championship of the Americas, which will be held in Buenos Aires, Argentina Nov. 16 to 28, where he will represent the United States as a member of the U. S. Skeet Team.

"The World Championships will be a good competition; most of the Olympic contenders will be there," USAMU Shotgun Team Coach Burl Burnham said. "I'm very pleased that he won the Army Athlete of the Year, and thrilled that we've won it two years in a row. I knew he deserved to win so we thought he would win it with all the accomplishments he has had this year."

According to USAMU trap shooter Sgt. 1st Class Bret E. Erickson, Graves is the best skeet shooter in the country and one of the top three in the world.

Erickson and Graves, who both competed in the 1992 and 1996 Olympics, have been shooting together at the Army Marksmanship Unit for more than a decade and are the best of friends.

"We are like one big happy family here," Graves said. "I feel like I owe everything to my Mom and Dad (Tommie and James H. Graves), who got me started, Burl who contributes a lot to my success, Bret who's always there for me when something goes wrong, my wife, Tracy, who is very supportive, and the Army, which gets most of the credit.

"If it wasn't for the Army, I couldn't have accomplished what I have," Graves continued. "I'm proud to wear the green uniform. It would have been really hard to make it to the Olympics without the Army."

Graves enlisted in the Army in January 1984 and was assigned to the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit after completing basic and infantry training at Fort Benning. In 1990, he was assigned as a team leader with the 20th Infantry Regiment in Korea and returned to the Marksmanship Unit in 1991.

The 34-year-old infantryman, who has been in the Army for nearly 14 years, said he's going to stay in "as long as they let me." When asked what his goals are for the future, Graves said, "All my goals have been fulfilled, except one — Olympic Gold. Not very many people get it, but as long as I can, I'll keep trying," he said. "I've been so close two times now. I figure, three times is a charm."

Dragon Challenge puts Airmen to test

Air Force personnel converge on post for yearly competition

By Sgt. Marc G. Turchin
Bayonet assistant editor

A competitor fires the 9 mm handgun during the competition.

Mother nature was the first obstacle. One of the coldest days in recent weeks greeted the Airmen as they began their four-day stint here. Later, the rain, heat and more cold would factor in as each one had the same mission on their mind — to win the 1997 Dragon Challenge.

The challenge is designed to test the abilities and knowledge of enlisted terminal attack controllers (ETACs).

Nine two-man teams challenged themselves to conquer the events — some physical, some mental — all pertinent to their MOS.

This MOS, which is limited to Air Force service members, has its members attached to Army Infantry units for close, direct air strikes. Wherever the Army units go, the Air Force members go with them, no matter what's involved.

"Everything they do, we do" said Air Force Master Sgt. Harry J. Oliver, operations superintendent for the 17th Air Support Operations Squadron (ASOS), located on Fort Benning.

They are all trained in some Infantry and Air Force only skills — Dragon Challenge tests some of each.

The teams went through the Sand Hill obstacle course, a 12-mile road march, a land navigation course, plus a marksmanship course of various types of guns and rifles and numerous field skills tests and job knowledge tests.

According to Oliver, the challenge lets the competitors know where they stand.

"It shows where you are against others in the same career field," Oliver said. "It also shows you where you need to improve."

"You get a lot of good training here," said Airman 1st Class Matthew R. Muse, a competitor from the 20th ASOS, attached with the 10th Mountain Division, Fort Drum, N.Y. "There's a lot of practical stuff — weapons, navigating, communications and career field knowledge. It's all good training."

Muse added the training was shared by all, but in a competitive way.

"We were all real nice and friendly with each other. A lot of us know each other," Muse said. "But at the same time, everyone wants to do better than their friend."

Dragon Challenge is normally used as a train-up before Lightning Challenge — the Air Force's worldwide testing of the ETACs. This competition, which is normally conducted at Hurlburt Field, Fla., was cancelled this year because of budget constraints and mission exercises.

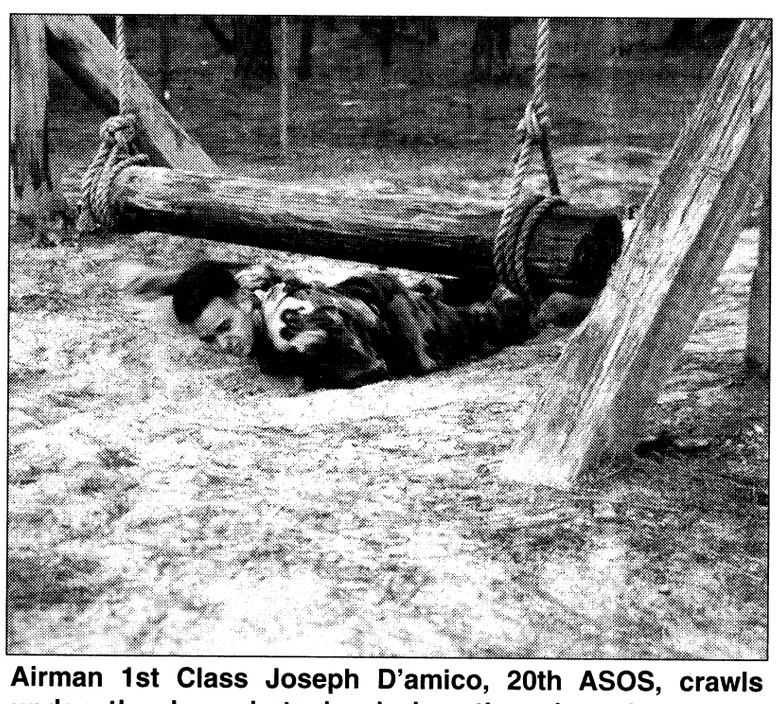
"This will probably be the only one held this year in the states," Oliver said.

Winning this year's competition was Staff Sgt. Craig D. Hillsman and Senior Airman Kale L. Huffman of Fort Benning's 17th ASOS. Hillsman is attached to the 3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division (Mechanized), and Huffman is with the 3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment.

Hillsman, who's only been an ETAC for two months, said the competition offered plenty to train for.

"The academics are tough in one sense because there so much information to study — it's to the point where you don't know what to study," he said. "But then again, the 12-mile road march was a killer — especially with the rolling hills on Fort Benning."

In attendance for the awards ceremony was the commander of the 9th Air Force and the U.S. Central Air Forces, Shaw Air Force Base, S.C., Lt. Gen. Carl Franklin.

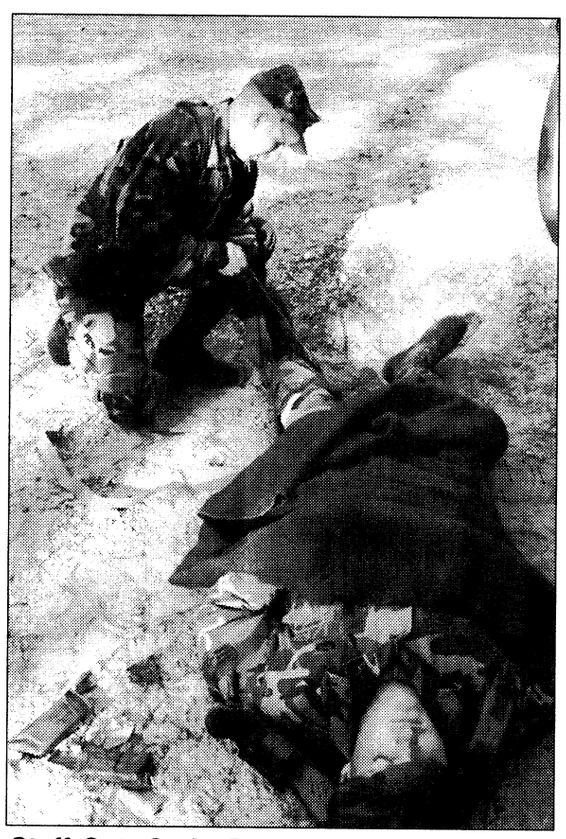


"Truly, what you do makes an awful lot of difference in our Air Force and for our Army," Franklin said. "What we're about here is combat capability. You guys bring that in the field to those of us that are serving in the air."

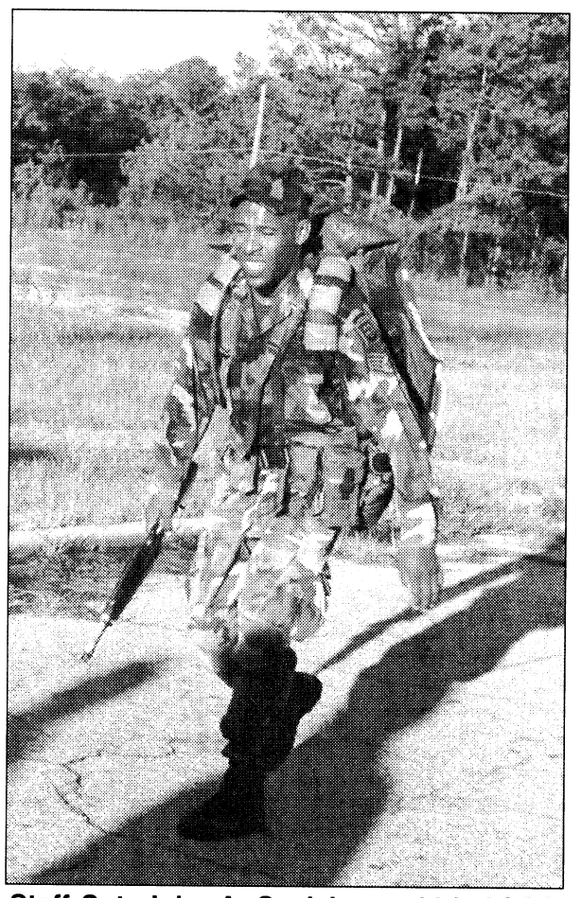
Franklin spoke to competitors who, in Hillsman's opinion, are the best of the best.

"I think anytime you get a career field together in a competition like this, they're probably the best guys the unit has," he said. "I don't think they would send anybody they didn't think weren't their best guys."

Following Huffman and Hillsman in second were Senior Airman Nathan K. Ferguson and Senior Airman Dennis P. Hay of the 17th ASOS. In third were Staff Sgt. John A. Saulsberry and Airman 1st Class Ryan M. Sharack of the 14th ASOS, attached to the 82nd Airborne Division, Fort Bragg, N.C.



In the individual competition, Senior Airman Nathan K. Ferguson, 17th ASOS walked away with top honors. Staff Sgt. Craig D. Hillsman, 17th ASOS followed in second and Staff Sgt. John A. Saulsberry, 14th ASOS, placed third.



Airman 1st Class Joseph D'amico, 20th ASOS, crawls under the log obstacle during the obstacle course competition.

Senor Airman Dennis P. Hay of 17th ASOS throws a hand-grenade. Master Sgt. Bruce Voight of the 17th was part of the grading team ensuring competitors followed the rules and finished all tasks during the Dragon Challenge.

Section evaluation looks at field artillery critical tasks

By Sgt. 1st Class Larry Lane
USAIC Public Affairs Office NCOIC

Several tons of 155 mm rounds were fired down range in the last couple of weeks as 3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division's 1st Battalion, 10th Field Artillery was back in the field for a section evaluation.

The 1st Bn., 10th FA undergoes two section evaluations each year. For sections to complete and pass the evaluation, the four-man teams have to earn at least 700 points out of 1,000. Points are accumulated from how well their section performs on the "big guns," the M-109 Paladin, and in a number of tasks considered critical to the artilleryman's job.

While the overall focus of training artillerymen remains the same, certain tasks may have received more attention this time around. The 1st of the 10th FA trained at the National Training Center at Fort Irwin, Calif., in August and during this section evaluation more focus was paid on the tasks associated with responding to nuclear, biological and chemical threats.

"I don't think we pay enough attention to NBC," Command Sgt. Maj. Ronnie Porter said. "I wanted to make sure we do a lot better in the area of NBC. I've always thought that was a critical area we should stay proficient in."

Porter said he noticed some of his Soldiers needed to improve in their reaction to an NBC alarm. During this evaluation Soldiers were tested on MOPP suit exchange and their ability to use NBC detection equipment.

The artillery recently received a new tool to assist in range-finding targets. The Mini Eyesafe Laser Infrared Observation Set, or MELIOS, is about the size of binoculars and uses a laser to estimate range. Using the MELIOS was also considered one of the critical tasks. When a Paladin section operates without the assistance of a fire support team (FIST), the crew has to determine its own range.

Paladin sections will usually operate in conjunction with a FIST and a fire direction center (FDC). The FIST determines the target's position and gives this data to the FDC who plots the target and relays firing instructions to the Paladin crew. The Paladin completes the fire mission and adjusts according on the FDC's direction.

"We are the artillery's eyes," Staff Sgt. David Ladner said about his job as a FIST crew member. "The FDC guys are the brain and the artillery is the muscle."

The FIST is headed up by a lieutenant and may use up to 10 personnel in jobs ranging from the driver to the radio telephone operator. The most lethal weapon the FIST carries is a M-249 squad automatic weapon. The FIST is expected to use a Bradley Fighting Vehicle version of a FIST vehicle in the future, Ladner said, improving the team's speed and survivability.

Other systems have been employed to accomplish the FIST job, Ladner said, but nothing can replace a Soldier with "eyes on the target" reporting to the FDC.

"They've come up with different systems. They have a little remote control airplane that flies around and it will give you a 10-digit grid coordinate, but they have to have someone forward to see. They can't just shoot anywhere. Observe fire is the only way you can kill targets."

While it is key to have a close working relationship between the FDC, FIST and Paladin crews, the gunners had the rare opportunity to operate on their own and see what a 155 mm round can do to a target during direct fire testing. Paladin crews generally fire from a great distance, for example, from 35,000 meters where they never see the damage they delivered. With direct fire, the team determines the range to a target they can see and destroys the target without FIST support or FDC direction.

"This weapon can do it all," said Staff Sgt. Lional Benton, Paladin crewman. "We don't need an FDC and you can go where you want to go without having to be guided into your position by our platoon sergeant."

With the Paladin, field artillery Soldiers have gained independence and have increased survivability. Soldiers do not have to exit the Paladin and be exposed to enemy fire when occupying a position as with the older M-109 Howitzers and other field artillery pieces.

The section evaluation affords the opportunity for the Soldiers to train-up on the new technology being introduced into the field artillery while refreshing their skills on the the tasks they need to always stay sharp on, Porter said.

"We put a lot of responsibility on that staff sergeant and say 'now it's up to you. We're going to train you and give you the tools you need, but now it's up to you,'" Porter said about the ongoing modernization of field artillery.

"Because of our increased mobility, Soldiers need to be independent and be able to know more about how to survive on the battlefield."

Future meets present in experiment

TRADOC News Service

Force XXI is a process of change that involves three complementary efforts. The redesign of the tactical Army is the centerpiece of the effort, however the redesign of the institutional Army and the integration of information age technologies into the force are key supporting initiatives. The product of this process of change will be Army XXI — the Army of the 21st century.

Part of that includes the Division Advanced Warfighting Experiment (DAWE).

The DAWE is a milestone in the continuing advanced warfighting experiment program and a key event in Force XXI process. The DAWE program will have periodic events to attempt of valid a hypothesis about digitized forces.

That hypothesis is:

If information age battle command capabilities and connectivity exist across all battlefield operating system functions, then increases in lethality and survivability and tempo will be achieved.

Even though the DAWE will be a command post exercise, it will not be conducted in the pristine environment of air-conditioned buildings.

Tactical operations centers for 4th ID, its brigades and artillery, will be placed in field settings. TOCs for III Corps, its corps support command and other corps elements will also be set up in the field.

Although action in the DAWE is simulated, commanders will experience similar stresses. The reason is they will be operating in their TOCs like they would at NTC or in actual combat.

Nearly 3,000 Soldiers will be involved in the DAWE in November. More than 2,000 will be in the field and about 600 will operate the battle simulation and provide transportation and other support.

The DAWE may be listed as a separate warfighting experiment, but the DAWE really began in March. That was when the Task Force XXI AWE was held at NTC.

The experiment's results will be used to design a digitized division and corps. The 4th Infantry Division at Fort Hood, Texas, became the Army's Experimental Force in 1995 and is slated to be the first digitized division in 2000. In 2003, 1st Cavalry Division, also at Fort Hood, will become the second digitized division. By 2004 III Corps, parent command for the 4th ID and 1st Cavalry, will become the Army's first digitized Corps.

ACAP can help show military accomplishments

Army Career and Alumni Program

"Transitioning Soldiers need to accurately document military experiences, qualifications, work history, training, education and achievements," said Chick Eagle, ACAP Counselor. "Preparation of a resume is the accepted way for a job seeker to present his or her professional history to potential employers. One very convenient source available free of charge to help with resume preparation is the DD Form 2586, Verification of Military Experience and Training (VMET),"

According to a VMET officer located in northern Virginia, the Department of Defense will issue to each separating Soldier a DD Form 2586, "VMET" report. Soldiers have numerous military training courses and job experiences, perhaps too many for some to recall easily for inclusion on resumes, job or college applications. The VMET report is created from automated records on file and includes military job assignments, significant training programs attended (after FY 85) with recommended college credits and civilian job titles that relate to specific MOS.

The Army requests a VMET on each Soldier 180 days before an established separation date. The document should be received no later than 120 days before separation. It is recommended that each separating soldier call the VMET office to check the status of the automatic system as early as possible during transition and update mailing address to insure receipt in time to be useful. CONUS based Army personnel call (800) 258-VMET (8638), 8 a.m. to 10 p.m. Eastern time, Monday through Friday except holidays. Short notice separations must call to request a VMET report, according to the VMET officer.

"Soldiers who have received their VMET are encouraged to bring it to ACAP Preseparation briefings, workshops, and counseling sessions. This useful tool is available to separating Soldiers as a valuable entitlement to help transition back to the civilian workforce," Eagle said.

For information about VMET and other ACAP services call the ACAP Center at 545-2308, 2309 in Soldiers' Plaza, Building 2634.

Technicians contribute to hospital professionalism

Martin Army Community Hospital

What's the difference between a radiographer and a mammographer? Or a nuclear medicine technologist and a sonographer? If you are like most people, these terms are as unfamiliar as a foreign language. Yet, many people entering the health care system come into contact with these practitioners everyday. They are radiologic technologists — the dedicated professionals who operate the imaging equipment that produces images of bone, tissues, organs, and vessels of the body to help physicians diagnose and treat diseases. As part of National Radiologic Technology Week, the staff of Martin Army Community Hospital (MACH) Radiology Department will be recognizing its radiologic technologists' dedication and commitment to learning and quality patient care Sunday through Nov. 8.

Today there are more than 220,000 registered radiologic science professionals working in hospitals, doctors' offices, clinics and imaging centers around the country. As key members of the health care team, radiologic technologists combine elements of a number of different fields, from hands-on patient care to working with computerized systems. The radiologic sciences help tie together all elements of the health care network.

At MACH, military and civilian radiologic technologists work together to perform more than 80,000 exams annually in diagnostic radiology, mammography, computerized tomography (CT), ultrasound (sonography) and nuclear medicine. Exams include everything from preoperative chest x-rays to digitized flouroscopic images, sterotactic breast biopsies and thallium heart studies to ultrasound exams of the carotid arteries. When a critically ill patient comes into the emergency room, technologists may do portable exams to diagnose fractures of the spine or perform a CT of the head. As highly trained and educated health care professionals, technologists are much more than the old "X-ray technician" title indicated in the 1950-60s.

National Radiologic Technology Week was started and trademarked by the American Society of Radiologic Technologists (ASRT) in 1980 to recognize the importance of professional technologists in medical imaging and the radiologic sciences, as well as enhance public awareness of the radiologic science profession. Fore more than 75 years, ASRT has helped to foster the professional and educational interest of radiologic technologists.

Ghosts and goblins prepare to haunt post housing areas tonight

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Fort Benning residents are preparing for ghosts and goblins haunting the housing areas tonight.

Halloween trick or treating, will be held from 6 to 8 p.m. today.

Trick or treat activities are limited to children under 13 years of age.

Preschool children must be accompanied by an older person (14 years or older).

Children should limit trick or treating to the housing area in which the participants reside and approach only residences with lighted entry ways.

Staff Sgt. Lori Egan

A child gets in the Halloween spirit Saturday while at the Dexter Elementary School Fall Festival. The children surrounding the table were choosing prizes they could redeem with the red tickets they received for playing various games at the Fall Festival.

Light-colored, fire resistant costumes, short enough to prevent tripping, should be worn by children.

Costumes can be marked with reflective tape or 'glow' spray paint so they can pick up auto headlights and other lights.

Observe all basic safety precautions. Use sidewalks and crosswalks; don't cut through yards. Look in all directions before walking across the street.

Ensure pet owners take measures to prevent pets from being a nuisance or a menace to children.

Caution children about the wrongs of vandalism and causing damage to the property of others.

Ensure children carry flashlights after dark and that every safety precaution is taken when crossing streets.

Motorists must be especially alert on Halloween during the hours of 6 p.m. to 8 p.m.

Parents should inspect all treats prior to their children eating them. Give your child a full meal before he or she goes trick or treating.

Martin Army Community Hospital Radiology department will X-ray candy from 6 to 8 p.m. for metal objects. For more information, call Master Sgt. Laurie Potter at 544-3409.

Spencer High School seeks involvement

By Col. Richard Rowe
29th Infantry Regiment

Recently parents should have received two important documents from their Spencer High School students. The first is the Public Law Form, which is required in order for the Muscogee School System to receive federal dollars to support our Fort Benning students.

Fill it in, sign and return to the school. If the form has been lost, call James Tanksley, the assistant principal at 685-7652, he will send you another form.

The second piece of paper is the Spencer High School Newsletter. It should have come home by Monday, ask your student to dig in his or her book bag.

The Spencer High School PTSA will pop popcorn at the Officers' Wives' Club Craft Fair Nov. 15 in Infantry Hall. There is nothing better than some popcorn chomping while you are checking out the great crafts in Building 4.

The Rev. Joseph Roberson, the PTSA Board president, encourages parents and students to volunteer to participate in the Spencer High School beautification project.

For more information, call Liz Matheny at 685-7652. She will direct volunteers to the coordinator for this project.

In the next couple of weeks, students will conduct a clothing drive for the Sarah Spano Clothing Bank to provide clean and in good shape clothing. This project helps needy local community school children who might otherwise lack good clothing for school.

The Spencer High School Parent Teacher Student Association (PTSA) Board met Oct. 22. PTSA membership is up this year to about 125 families and teachers.

There is still room for more families to join and support the school. Call the membership chairperson, Judith Markelz, to join or the military sponsorship representative from the 29th Infantry Regiment Command Sgt. Maj. Gregory O. Crockett at 544-6411.

Fort Benning sends more than 700 students to Spencer High School. Fort Benning young people serve throughout the school in key student leadership, activities and athletic programs.

Parents and military members are encouraged to support the High School's activities. The 29th Infantry Regiment commander and command sergeant major serve as the Fort Benning sponsor unit representatives for Spencer High School.

Book gives parents information on college costs

U.S. Department of Education

As more and more careers require education or technical training beyond high school, there's a growing need for students to prepare early to get into college and have the means to pay for it.

Getting Ready for College Early is a new handbook from the U.S. Department of Education to help parents of students in the middle and junior high school years make crucial decisions that could affect their children's lives in the years ahead.

As the new school year begins, this handbook may be particularly important to students in selecting or changing courses to get on track for preparing for college.

"A college education means more career opportunities, more money and a wealth of skills and knowledge that will last over a lifetime," said U.S Secretary of Education Richard W. Riley. "A decision with such enormous consequences certainly requires careful planning and can not be made at the 11th hour. This booklet provides concrete steps parents and grandparents can take to help their children realize their educational goals."

Riley said changes in the law will help meet college costs. President Clinton signed the Balanced Budget and Taxpayers Relief Acts of 1997 Aug. 5, which expanded post secondary educational opportunity in several areas including:

•A HOPE Scholarship of up to $1,500 for the first two years of college is geared to provide tax relief for working and middle-income families.

•Lifetime learning credit (20 percent tax credit for first $5,000 of tuition and fees through 2002 and for the first $10,000 thereafter) for college juniors, seniors, graduate students and working Americans pursuing additional education to upgrade their skills and other benefits including deductions for interest on student loans education IRAs and extending the tax-exempt status of employer-provided education benefits.

In addition, the administration's Fiscal Year 1998 budget calls for increased funding for the need-based Federal Pell Grant program to serve an additional 350,000 students and increase the maximum award to $3,000 a year, the largest increase

HOPE helps students

By Keri Brennan
Spencer High School

The seniors at Spencer High School are approaching the end of high school and are making decisions regarding their futures.

Some will jump right into the working world, some are joining a branch of the military and others are aiming for college.

For students who want to go to college, the HOPE Scholarship Program can help.

Spencer senior Charletha Micken plans on attending either Albany State or Georgia State University with help from the HOPE scholarship.

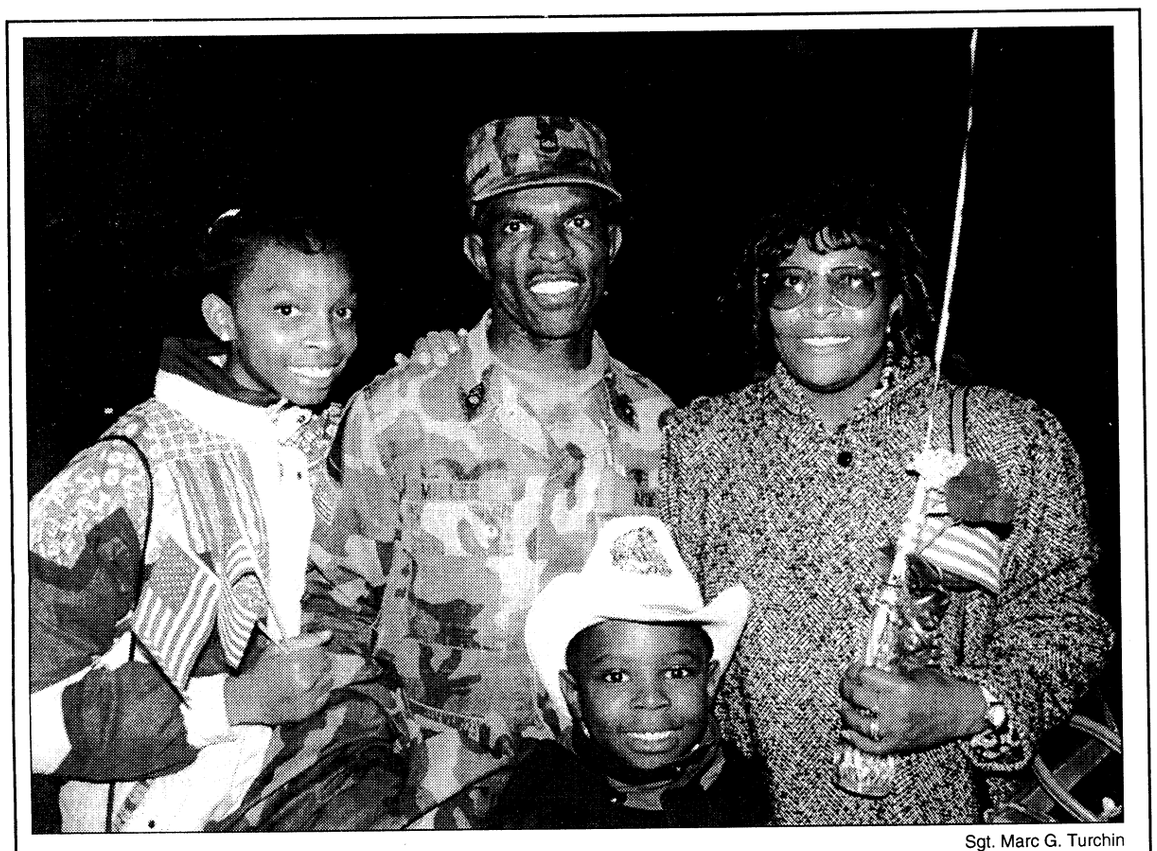
The HOPE scholarship gives a lot of students the opportunity to go to college, she said.

"It helps a lot of parents who aren't able to afford college for their children," she said.

A student with a 'B' average can receive free tuition plus mandatory fees and a book allowance at one of Georgia's public colleges.

The scholarship also provides $3,000 toward tuition to a private college in Georgia.

HOPE also offers free tuition plus mandatory fees and a book allowance to those more geared toward a Georgia public technical institute.



Since the HOPE Scholarship Program was established in September, 1993, more than 253,000 students received nearly $400 million in aid.

Of those students earning the scholarships, 99,606 attended public universities and colleges, 55,178 attended private Georgia colleges and 116,500 attended Georgia's public technical institutes.

More than 39,000 graduates were 1997 HOPE scholars.

Every year, the number of HOPE scholarship recipients increases.

"With the HOPE Scholarship Program and some individual hard work, students who might not have been able to afford college now can," said James Tanksley, assistant principal at Spencer High School. "HOPE scholarships gives hope for the future and those students who are the future.

MARTIN ARMY COMMUNITY HOSPITAL

Flu season nears, clinics offer shots

Martin Army Community Hospital

Influenza is the formal name for the flu. It is a contagious disease that is caused by a virus. It is spread by breathing in flu viruses.

When a person with the flu sneezes or talks, the virus is expelled into the air and can be inhaled by anyone close by. This is one reason why the flu season runs from late fall to early spring.

During the colder months, people crowd together indoors to escape the cold and rain. While they are crowded together, they have a better chance to spread the flu virus. It is the crowding together and not the actual cold temperature that increases one's risk to get the flu and other respiratory diseases.

The flu can also be spread by direct hand contact. The virus can live for hours on doorknobs, phones, and surfaces. From the hand, the virus can reach the mouth and be ingested. This is another reason why one should wash one's hands before eating.

The flu vaccine is very effective but it must be given each year in order to ensure protection. An annual vaccination is important because the viruses that cause the flu change from year to year.

Beneficiaries who are encouraged to receive the vaccine include:

•Adults age 65 and older

•Adults and children with chronic medical problems such as diabetes, respiratory and heart disease

•Persons who work in hospitals, outpatient clinics, or nursing homes.

Here are some commonly asked questions:

Q: Why does the Army require Soldiers to get flu shots?

A: Because flu shots keep Soldiers on the job. As reported in the New England Journal of Medicine (Vol. 33, No. 14), personnel who get flu shots in October and early November have 25 percent less episodes of respiratory illnesses than employees who do not get a flu shot. Civilians who get the flu shot take 43 percent fewer days of sick leave and make 44 percent fewer visits to the doctor's office for respiratory illnesses.

Conclusion: "Vaccination against influenza has substantial health and economic benefits for healthy, working adults ... All people who wish to avoid illnesses are encouraged to consider vaccination."

Q: What are the side effects of the flu shot?

A: The most common side effect is a sore arm. Less than one percent of people will have a mild fever of body aches for one to two days following the vaccine. This is likely an allergic reaction to the solution which carries the vaccine. The vaccine cannot cause the flu itself because it contains only non-infectious (killed) viruses.

Q: What can I do to lessen the side effects?

A: By taking acetaminophen before you feel the side effects, you can lessen or even prevent fever, body aches and sore arm.

Q: Who should not receive the vaccine?

A: Only those with a severe allergy to eggs or to the flu vaccine itself.

Q: Can pregnant women get the flu shot?

A: Influenza vaccination is considered safe at any stage of pregnancy. The 1997-98 flu season is approaching and flu shots will soon be available at Martin Army Community Hospital's Immunization Clinic as well as at all family practice and troop medical clinics.

Active duty service members: Coordination will be made through their supporting Troop Medical Clinic.

Active duty U.S. Army Medical Department Activity personnel — Monday will be a make up day for those who have not received their shot. Immunizations are also available on the 9th floor immunization clinic (see hours at the end of article).

Martin Army Hospital Family Practice Clinic enrollees — Beneficiaries may get vaccinated Monday to Friday 9 to 11 a.m. and 1 to 5 p.m. on a walk-in basis. If a beneficiary already has an established appointment, he or she may obtain an immunization at that time.

Aviation Clinic enrollees — Beneficiaries may get vaccinated every Tuesday and Thursday from 1 to 5 p.m. If a beneficiary already has an established appointment, he or she may obtain an immunization at that time.

Winder Clinic enrollees — Beneficiaries may get vaccinated every Tuesday and Thursday from 8 to noon and 1 to 4 p.m. on a walk-in basis. If a beneficiary already has an established appointment, he or she may obtain an immunization at that time.

Victory Clinic enrollees — Victory Clinic will offer flu shots on a walk-in basis on Wednesdays 9 to noon and 1 to 5 p.m., on Fridays 1 to 5 p.m. and 6 to 8 p.m., on Saturdays 9 a.m. to 12:30 p.m. If a beneficiary already has an established appointment, he or she may obtain an immunization at that time.

Beneficiaries not enrolled in a clinic — Beneficiaries not enrolled in a clinic or Department of the Army civilians may be vaccinated at the hospital's Immunization Clinic, Room 956 (no appointment required). Morning hours (except Wednesdays, 7:30 to 11:30 a.m. Afternoon hours (Monday, Tuesday and Thursday) 1 to 4:30 p.m. Department of the Army civilians who keep their occupational health records at Building 2630 (Occupational Health nursing) will pick up their occupational health records prior to reporting to the Immunization Clinic.

Special arrangements can be made for large groups of DA civilians to have their Occupational Health records forwarded to the immunization clinic.

Domestic abuse

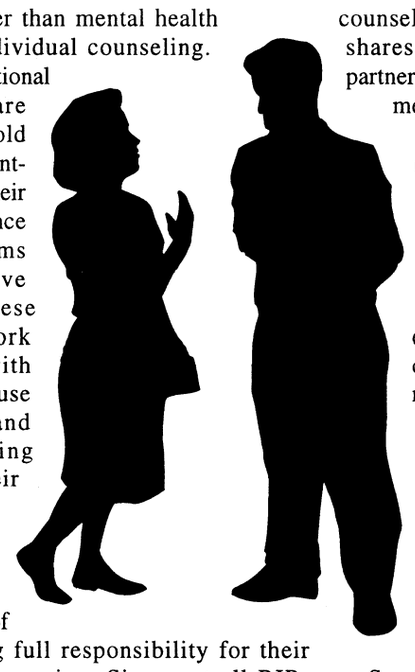
Family members seek advice, help in violent relationships

Family Advocacy Program

What about help for my partner?

Men who batter often do not accept full responsibility for their violent behavior, Rebecca S. Welch, Family Advocacy Program manager, said.

"Instead, they blame their partners, stress, alcohol, other drugs, anger, loss of control, an unhappy childhood, or someone or something else," she said. "But the fact is, lots of people are under stress, drink, use drugs, get angry or were abused as children. Yet most of these people do not choose to use violence and coercion in their intimate relationships."



Even when batterers get help, it doesn't mean the violence will stop, she said. Battering is about an individual man's decision to use violence and coercion as a way to control his partner.

Batterers can change. But it means giving up patterns of behavior attitudes and beliefs that they've probably had for a long time, Welch said. That kind of change doesn't come quickly or easily.

"Even when batterers say they want to stop and they get help, it doesn't guarantee that they will stop battering. So, even if your partner gets help, it is important to continue to plan for your own safety."

Welch said she is often asked about a batterers program. Most batterers who are in batterers intervention programs (BIPs) are there because the court ordered them to be there. Some men go voluntarily because they want to change. But many men promise to go in order to convince their partners to stay with them or to take them back, she said. Most of these men drop out of the program once they feel less worried about losing the relationship.

Although not available in all communities, BIPs are generally better sources of help for men who batter than mental health therapy or individual counseling. BIPs are educational groups that are designed to hold batterers accountable for both their physical violence and other forms of coercive behavior. These programs work exclusively with batterers because they understand that involving victims in their services is not only dangerous, but can interfere with the goal of men accepting full responsibility for their violence and coercion. Since not all BIPs operate in ways that make your safety a priority, ask your local domestic violence program for information about BIPs in your area.

While it may be a positive step for your partner to reach out for help from a BIP, it's not a guarantee that he will choose to stop his violent behavior or that you will be safe. Men stop being violent and abusive only when they decide they want to and they keep working at it. Many men who are attending or have attended a program continue to be violent and controlling.

What about marriage counseling? According to battered women who have been involved in marriage counseling, it not only doesn't work, it often makes things worse. One explanation for this is that going to counseling together suggests that a woman shares some of the responsibility for her partner's violence, a belief that many abusive men already have.

Whether your partner gets help or not, it's a good idea to plan for your own safety. Counseling can help batterers to justify blaming their partners, and give them even more excuses for being violent. A batterer's violence is his responsibility, no one else's. It is unlikely that he will change unless he accepts full responsibility for his actions.

Another concern about couples counseling is that it is often unsafe for battered women to express their feelings and discuss the violence or the relationship in front of their partners. Many women report being threatened or assaulted after couples counseling sessions for things they said or did during the session.

Services that require victims to participate in joint sessions with their partners, including mediation programs and alcohol or other drug family treatment programs, increase victims' risk of physical and emotional harm and are therefore not recommended for dealing with domestic violence.

What if he stops drinking or using drugs? Even when men who batter stop drinking or using drugs, their violence most often continues. In fact, many battered women say that the violence got worse during substance abuse recovery.

Alcohol and other drug abuse do not cause domestic violence, although batterers often use it as an excuse. Batterers who drink or use drugs have two separate problems — battering and substance abuse — that need to be dealt with separately.

FAP manager explains relationship risks

Family Advocacy Program

Why do battered women feel trapped?

According to Rebecca S. Welch, Family Advocacy Program manager, because they often have nowhere else to turn. That doesn't necessarily mean that there's no way out. But there are many obstacles to achieving safety or to ending a relationship with a violent partner and the choices women confront are not risk-free.

Welch noted some of the risks of seeking help or deciding to leave:

Physical violence and psychological harm

•Risk of escalated threats and physical violence, resulting in harm to victim, children, friends or family

•Risk that batterer will follow through on suicide threats and harm himself

•Risk of continued harassment, stalking, and verbal and emotional attacks, especially if batterer has ongoing contact (such as during court ordered visitation)

•Risk of serious physical harm or death

Children

•Continued risk to children of emotional and physical harm; possibility of increased risks to children if batterer has unsupervised visitation

•Risk of losing children by parental kidnapping or as the result of a legal custody decision

•Risk of negative impact on children as a result of breaking up the family

Financial

•Risk of reduced standard of living — possible loss of home, possessions, neighborhood

•Risk of losing income or job may lose partner's income, may have to quit a job in order to relocate or to fulfill the responsibilities of single parenthood, may be prevented from working because of threats and harassment

Relationship

•Risk of losing partner, losing the relationship

•Risk of losing help with children, transportation, household

•For elderly women or women with disabilities, risk of losing caretaker

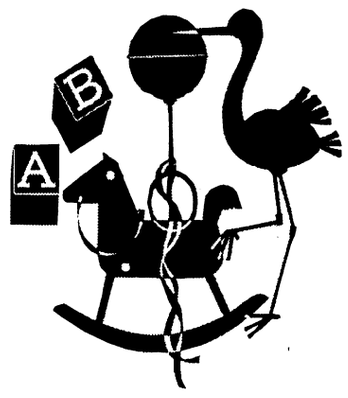
Responses from friends, family members and helping professionals

•Risk of not being believed or taken seriously, being blamed, being pressured to do something she's not ready or able to do

•Risk of being judged as a bad wife, partner or mother

•Risk of being pressured to maintain the relationship based on religious or cultural beliefs or because the children need a father

•Risk that actions of helpers may increase danger



Under the best of circumstances, it is difficult to end a relationship with an intimate partner, Welch said. Love, family, shared memories and a sense of commitment are bonds that are hard to break. Battered women face the additional risks of physical, emotional and psychological harm. In addition, many battered women want the violence to stop, but they don't want the relationship to end.

Seeking help, getting an order of protection, or deciding to leave only makes sense to a woman when, on balance, it reduces the overall risks that she and her children have to deal with.

There are risks attached to every decision a battered woman makes.

Safety planning is the process of evaluating the risks and benefits of different options and identifying ways to reduce the risks.

Reformation alters Christianity, selves

Chaplain (Maj.) Ronald L. Smith
36th Engineer Group

reflections

Change is always difficult, at any level. In the Army, change is a way of life.

Change can be good or bad, depending on the sacrifice and pain, and on the benefits gained by a person or organization.

To better ourselves and the organizations we are a part of, there must be a willingness to change. Personal change calls for us to honestly access what changes we need to make, and do it.

As an Army chaplain I am often asked the question, "So what kind of chaplain are you?" I will jokingly reply, "A good one, I hope." "No, I mean what flavor," is an often heard reply. I am a Protestant, is a clear answer for some, but to others it fogs the issue.

Most who ask the question are seeking the denomination, which can categorize and mark us. Knowing what we are is important to all of us, following our faith and traditions propels us to new levels of understanding and dedication.

Behind today's differences between Protestants and Catholics are the events that occurred 480 years ago, surrounding Martin Luther, a period in history known as the Reformation.

The emergence of the Protestant movement had its start in a thunderstorm in 1505, when a young Martin Luther was knocked to the ground by a bolt of lightning, and declaring to the Catholic patroness of miners: "St. Anne, save me! And I'll become a monk." Luther promptly followed through, entering the priesthood and diligently sought his place in the church.

Christianity was forever altered on October 31, 1517, as Martin Luther, an unhappy, vigilant, and motivated Catholic monk drew up 95 propositions, or theses and posted them on the Castle Door at Wittenberg, Germany. His protests against the Roman Catholic Church in Germany centered around four questions: Where does religious authority lie? How is a person saved? What is the church? And how should a Christian live?

Reform came with a fury. Martin Luther sounded the trumpet, but a host of others rallied to the cause.

Change takes place when people recognize that something is wrong, and in spite of the difficulty, are willing to face the adversity of change.

Reform can fly in the face of tradition, and the nay-sayers will warn us not to rock the boat. There is a price to pay for change, and those who believe strongly enough do not back away.

Reformation is defined as a change for the better, a movement that tries to improve a sociopolitical situation, or a moral improvement.

In the case of the church any reformation is slow and painful, but often necessary to improve some errors and defects.

Personally, reform can be equally painful, and met with great resistance by ourselves, and those who want us frozen in our circumstances.

Time and reformation of both Catholics and Protestants has erased most of the hostilities that names us as protesters. Thank God we can now work as one to bring good news and peace to our world. We see real reformation as being those changes in ourselves.

The word from Romans 12:2 brings a great challenge to our conformity, "Do not conform any longer to the pattern of this world, but be transformed by the renewing of your mind. Then you will be able to test and approve what God's will is—his good, pleasing and perfect will. Take the challenge and make a change for the better.

All Saints Day

Faithful remember with prayer of thanksgiving

By Chaplain (LTC) Robert Santry
Infantry Training Brigade

"As for us, we have this large crowd of witnesses around us. So then, let us rid ourselves of everything that gets in the way, and of the sin which holds to us so tightly, and let us run with determination the race that lies before us." (Hebrews 12:1, Christian Scriptures)

reflections

What do Princess Diana and Mother Theresa have in common? The former spouse of Prince Charles and the former Mother General of the Missionaries of Charity died in the same week.

The former is the Evita of the British. The latter is the unofficial canonized saint by the universal church.

The former extended dignity to the poor, to the common, and to the disenfranchised. The latter ministered to the sick, to the unborn, to the unwanted, to the dying, and to the hopeless.

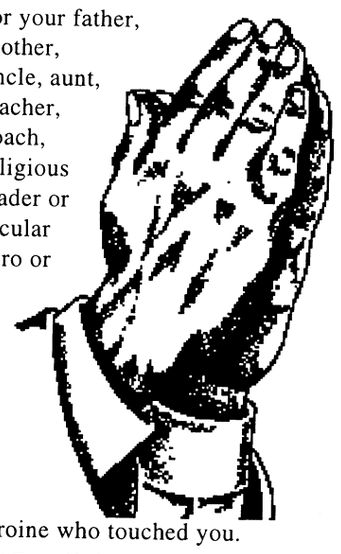
The former was tall, beautiful, young and rich. The latter was short, unattractive, old and poor.

Both were heroines and saints representing two levels of existence.

What do you want to be when you grow up? Rich, famous, powerful, influential, or somebody?

Some would answer, "I want to be rich, famous, powerful, influential and remembered by future generations."

Others would reply, "I want to be admired, honored and memorialized by my spouse, children, and co-workers."



A remnant will answer: "I want to be a saint!"

Nov. 1, All Saints Day, commemorates the remnant who opted for sainthood. Sainthood recognizes those who were walking sermons. The calendar recognizes many contestants: mothers, fathers, grandparents, spouses, members of Religious Orders or Secular Institutes and faithful clergy and lay people.

The honored saints commemorated on All Saints Day practiced love by thought, word, and deed.

We memorialize Princess Di as a commoner with royal status who witnessed compassion for her people. We memorialize Mother Theresa as a commoner (lay woman) who ministered to the dying of Calcutta.

All Saints memorializes our heroes and heroines who are not official canonized saints on the ecclesiastical calendar. On Nov. 1 pray a prayer of thanksgiving for your father, mother, uncle, aunt, teacher, coach, religious leader or secular hero or heroine who touched you.

"For all the saints who from their labors rest, Who thee by faith before the world confessed, Thy Name, O Jesus, be for ever blest: Alleluia, alleluia!

"Thou west their rock, their fortress and their might; Thou, Lord, their captain in the well-found fight; Thou in the darkness drear their one true light: Alleluia, alleluia!

O blessed communion, fellowship divine! We feebly struggle, they in glory shine; Yet are one in thee, for all are shine: Alleluia, alleluia!

But, lo, there breaks a yet more glorious day; The saints triumphant rise in bright array: The King of Glory passes on his way: Alleluia, alleluia!"

Directorate of Public Works

This week's article provides information on Veterans Day schedule changes and information about frozen water pipes as cold weather approaches.

Veterans Day garbage collection schedule — there will be no refuse and recycle collection Nov. 11. Those areas normally scheduled for Tuesday pick-up will be picked up Nov. 10. Refuse and recycle normally scheduled for pick up on Monday, Wednesday Thursday, or Friday will not be affected.

Yard waste pick-up — there will be no yard waste pick-ups Nov. 10. This service will resume normal schedule Nov. 17.

Holiday schedule for the Self Help (U-DO-IT) Center — In observance of Veterans Day (Nov. 1) the Self Help Center, Loan Equipment Section, Venetian Blind and Shade Shop will be closed. The Self Help (U-DO-IT) Center will also be closed Nov. 10, which is the normally scheduled day off. The center will reopen for business 8:30 a.m. Nov.12.

Prepare for cold weather — Frozen pipes aren't just an inconvenience. A quarter-million families have their homes ruined and their lives disrupted each winter because of water pipes that freeze and burst.

By taking a few simple precautions you can save yourself the mess, money and aggravation frozen pipes cause. Here are a few simple steps to prevent frozen pipes.

•Call in service orders to identify pipes that are not insulated. Exposed pipes are most susceptible to freezing.

•Ask your preventative maintenance mechanic to seal leaks that allow cold air inside near where pipes are located. Look for air leaks around electrical wiring, dryer vents and pipes.

•Disconnect garden hoses. Connected hoses are a major cause of exterior faucets freezing.

•Close exterior laundry room doors.

•If you're away set your thermostat to no lower than 55 degrees.

•Ask a friend or neighbor to check your quarters daily during periods when temperatures are below 32 degrees.

Knowing where to shut off the water to your residence is also very important. Take the time now to familiarize yourself with its location.

During the 1984 Christmas holidays, more than 1,000 Fort Benning families had water damage from frozen water pipes.

This damage ranged from minor to ruining everything these residents owned including personal items that could not be replaced. If you have no idea where the shut off valve is located, ask your area preventative maintenance mechanic for assistance.

In December when the outside temperature is 15 degrees and you get up ready for that hot shower and you find your water will not come on, you'll know to do the following:

•Turn off your main shut off valve.

•Call DPW Work Order Section or BSI Work Order Section immediately.

•A reminder for all you "Tim the Tool Man Folks:" never try to thaw out water pipes with a torch or open flame

These hints will help you avoid any damage from frozen water pipes this winter. If you have questions, call 545-2118.

Comments and Questions — If you have questions or topics that you would like addressed in the DPW "Information Corner" contact Glenn Todd, DPW Customer Relations Specialist 545-2117 or write to the Directorate of Public Works Building 6, Room 409, ATTN: ATZB-PMW (Glenn Todd), Fort Benning Ga. 31905

College: Book offers parents information on costs

in the program's history.

To help parents understand more fully why a college education in today's world is increasingly important, Getting Ready for College Early describes the economic and career benefits of a college education and offers a list of many jobs that require college preparation. Because almost all parents want their children to go to college, it is important to know what classes to take in middle and junior high school, and this booklet includes a section on that subject. It also includes a discussion on Advanced Placement and Tech-Prep courses available at the high school level that provide credit at many colleges and that could help families save on tuition.

The handbook includes two sections on paying for college and provides a chart showing the varying college costs between public and private 2-year and 4-year schools. It offers a concise, complete explanation of the many sources of federal and other financial aid available for a higher education. The booklet describes the financial help that is available to ensure that a college education is within reach.

Riley said he was especially pleased that La Opinion, one of the nation's largest circulation Spanish language daily newspapers, plans to print and distribute 200,000 Spanish language copies of the booklet in the greater Los Angeles region. To make it possible for other communities to benefit from the Spanish language version of Getting Ready for College Early, La Opinion is also making the camera-ready materials available for reproduction.

Getting Ready for College Early and Families' Guide to the 1997 Education Tax Cuts, an explanation of how to save for and finance higher education. are available free by calling (800) USA-LEARN.

Families' guide to the 1997 education tax cuts.

Many new tax benefits for adults who want to return to school and for parents who are sending or planning to send their children to college will be available due to the balanced budget signed into law in August 1997. These changes are the largest investment in higher education since the passage of the G.I. Bill in 1945.

These tax cuts essentially make the first two years of college universally available, and they will give many more working Americans the financial means to go back to school if they want to choose a new career or upgrade their skills. When fully phased in, 12.9 million students are expected to benefit from the $5.8 million under the HOPE Scholarship tax credit, and $7.1 million claiming the Lifetime Learning tax credit.

The HOPE Scholarship tax credit helps make the first two years of college universally available. Students will receive a tax credit of 100 percent on the first $1,000 of tuition and required fees and 50 percent on the second $1,000. This tax credit will be available for payments after Dec. 31, 1997 for college enrollment after that date. This credit is available for tuition and required fees less grants, scholarships, and other tax-free educational assistance. A high school senior going into his or her freshman year of college in September 1998, for example, could be eligible for as much as a $1,500 tax credit.

A married couple with an adjusted gross income of $60,000 and two children in college at least half-time, one at a community college with a tuition of $2,000 and the other a sophomore at a private college with $11,000 tuition, would have their taxes cut by as much as $3,000.

This credit is phased out for joint filers between $80,000 and $100,000 of adjusted gross income, and for single filers between $40,000 and $50,000. The credit can be claimed in two taxable years for students who are in their first two years of college or vocational school and who are enrolled on at least a half-time basis for any portion of the year.

The Lifetime Learning tax credit

This tax credit is targeted to adults who want to go back to school to upgrade their skills and to college juniors, seniors, graduate and professional students, mid-career changers and those who want to take a course or two. A family will receive a 20 percent tax credit for the first $5,000 of tuition and required fees paid each year through 2002, and for the first $10,000 thereafter. The lifetime learning tax credit is available for tuition and required fees less grants, scholarships and other tax-free educational assistance, just like the HOPE tax credit, for amounts paid on or after July 1, 1998 for post-secondary enrollment beginning on or after July 1, 1998. The credit is available on a per-taxpayer (family) basis, and is phased out at the same income levels as the HOPE Scholarship tax credit throughout their lifetime. Families will be able to claim the lifetime learning tax credit for some members of their family and the HOPE Scholarship tax credit for others who qualify.

Returning to school full-time to become a teacher: a homemaker, whose family has an adjusted gross income of $70,000, wants to attend a graduate teacher training program at a public university after being out of college for 20 years ($3,500 tuition). Her family's income taxes would be cut by as much as $700.

Automobile mechanic: A married man, whose wife works part-time, has two grown children and an adjusted gross income of $32,000 is going back to a local technical college to take some computer classes with a tuition of $1,200. This family would have their taxes cut by as much as $240.

Create education IRAs, make penalty-free withdrawals

Beginning Jan. 1, 1998, taxpayers may withdraw funds from an IRA, without penalty, for the higher education expenses of the taxpayer, a spouse, a child and even a grandchild. For each child under age 18, families may also deposit $500 per year into an Education IRA in the child's name. Earnings will accumulate tax-free and no taxes will be due upon withdrawal for post-secondary expenses for tuition and required fees (less grants, scholarships, and other tax-free educational assistance), books, equipment, and eligible room and board if used before the age of 30.

A taxpayer's ability to contribute to an Education IRA is phased out when the taxpayer has adjusted gross income between $150,000 and $160,000 for joint filers, and for single filers between $95,000 and $110,000. There are a few restrictions. A taxpayer, for example, who uses the tax-free distributions from an Education IRA may not, in the same year, benefit from the HOPE Scholarship or Lifetime Learning Credit.

Expanded benefits for qualified state tuition plans

This provision allows qualified state-sponsored tuition plans — the earnings from which are not taxed until the time of withdrawal as a result of a law passed last year — to include savings for certain room and board expenses for students who attend on at least a half-time basis. Withdrawals are eligible for the HOPE Scholarship tax credit and Lifetime Learning tax credit.

Paying back student loans at less cost

For many college graduates, one of their first financial obligations is to pay off their student loans, which average about $13,500. This provision will reduce the burden of this obligation by allowing students or their families to take a tax deduction for interest paid in the first 60 months of repayment on student loans.

A senior graduates from college and finds a job paying $25,000 a year (and has no other income). The student has a total student debt of $13,500 and is in the 15 percent federal income tax bracket. The monthly payment for this student's loans is $166. The total amounts of payments for the year is $1,992, over half of which is interest ($1,080) which can be deducted under the new law. The student's maximum tax benefit can be calculated by multiplying $1,080 by 15 percent — for a savings of $162 (for years after 1998).

The maximum deduction is $1,000 in 1998, $1,500 in 1999, $2,000 in 2000, and $2,500 in 2001 and beyond. It is phased out for joint filers with adjusted gross income between $60,000 and $75,000, and single filers between $40,000 and $55,000. The deduction is also available for all educational loans, such as student, parent, federal and non-federal loans, made before August of 1997 when the tax cuts became law but only to the extent that the loan is within the first 60 months of repayment.

Going to school while you work

The tax relief bill extends Section 127 of the tax code for three years for undergraduate education (for courses beginning prior to June 1, 2000). This provision allows workers to exclude up to $5,250 of employer-provided education benefits from their income. This provision will enable many Americans to pursue their goals of lifelong learning.

Community service loan forgiveness

This provision excludes from income student loan amounts forgiven by non-profit, tax-exempt charitable or educational institutions for borrowers who take community-service jobs that address unmet needs.

Defense dominates offense in Vikings, Steelers rematch

By John W. Peeler
Special to the Bayonet©

The Youth Services continued its football program Oct. 25 with six games in the flag and tackle leagues.

In the 11- to 13-year-old tackle football league, the Vikings slipped past the Steelers 6-0. Both teams played the game close to the best as neither team's offense was able to move the ball for most of the game. The difference in the game came in the third quarter with a 35 yard touchdown scramble by Viking quarterback Bryant Butler. In the late 11- to 13-year-old game, the Browns overcame a one touchdown deficit in the fourth quarter to tie the Cowboys 8-8.

In the 9- to 11-year-old tackle football league, the Jaguars scored three touchdowns to overtake the Panthers 18-12. In the divisions other game, the Cowboys went on a scoring rampage with the defense shutting out the Lions offense in a 32-0 Cowboy victory.

In the 6- to 8-year-old flag football league, the Vikings rebounded from last week's loss defeating the Cowboys 32-0. In the other 6- to 8-year-old divisional game, the Bulldogs overcame a tenacious Packer team to defeat the Packers 25-12.

Youth Services continues its fall football schedule Saturday with four games scheduled in the 6- to 8-year-old flag and 9- to 11-year-old tackle leagues on Blue Field beginning at 9 a.m. Games scheduled for the 11- to 13-year-old tackle football league were cancelled and will be rescheduled at a later date. Soccer season also continues at French Field with a complete schedule of games beginning at 9 a.m.

Boyhood interest, destiny lands USAMU shooter

Army Athlete of the Year

By Paula J. Randall Pagán
U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit Public Affairs Office

A U. S. Army Marksmanship shotgun shooter James Todd Graves started shooting when he was just a small boy growing up in Laurel, Miss., with his father, James, and his mother, Tommie.

One day when he was about 10 years old, he and his father saw a group of people shooting a trap tournament in a field near their home. At his youngster's request, the father let little Todd shoot in the match. When the boy took third place, little did he know it would start him in a career that would make him a two-time Olympian, an international Gold Medal winner and now the Army Male Athlete of the Year.

Graves went on to coach trap shooting and had an off-shore rigger job after he graduated from West Jones High School of Laurel in 1982. Because of his shooting ability, he made a name for himself in the shotgun shooting community. After he beat out one of the USAMU shooters at his father's gun club, he was approached by the Marksmanship Unit about joining the Army. One day, he missed the boat to his off-shore rigger job, he decided it was fate, and left his rigger's position behind to join the Army's elite shooting team.

Since he enlisted in January 1984, Graves has had quite an impressive shooting career.

He won a Silver Medal at the Skeet World Cup Final in Montecatini, Italy, Sept. 21, coming in second to 1996 Olympic Bronze Medalist Andrea Benelli of Italy; 1996 Olympic Gold Medalist Ennio Falco of Italy took the Bronze Medal in that match.

Graves also won two medals at the World Cup in Nicosia, Cyprus, in April. He won the Gold Medal in Skeet edging out falco and Benelli, who took the Silver and Bronze respectively; Graves was also awarded a Team Silver Medal for being a member of the second-place three-man U.S. Skeet Team. He also won a Bronze Medal in Skeet at the World Cup in Lonato, Italy, in April, behind Benelli who won the Gold and Falco who won the Silver.

Because of those wins, Graves received the invitation to compete in the world Cup Skeet Final in Montecatini, which was for the 12 best skeet shooters in the world. The world cups are the first opportunity where marksmen can shoot a qualifying score to compete in the 2000 Olympics in Sydney, Australia.

In 1996, besides shooting skeet in the Olympics, he also won a Gold Medal in the National Skeet Shooting Association World Championships and Silver Medals in Skeet in the North American

Bass Pro's join hunters in Hunters for the Hungry program

SOCIAL CIRCLE, Ga. — Bass Pro Shops will join the fifth annual Hunters for the Hungry program by sponsoring a collection location for hunters to donate harvested deer in addition to six other drop-off sites throughout the state. The sites will accept deer Nov. 8-9 and Nov. 29-30.

Hunters for the Hungry is sponsored by the Georgia Department of Natural Resources, Wildlife Resources Division (WRD), the Georgia Department of Corrections (DOC), the Georgia Department of Agriculture (GDA), the Greater Atlanta Chapter of the Safari Club International and the Georgia Wildlife Federation.

Hunters for the Hungry is a program that aims to feed hungry people throughout the state by collecting deer harvested by hunters. Last year, hunters donated 356 deer, totaling approximately 11,000 pounds of ground venison, during the two designated Hunters for the Hungry weekends. The venison fed thousands of Georgians statewide during the holiday season.

"The Hunters for the Hungry program gives Georgia's hunters an opportunity to focus on the positive aspects of hunting, while providing much needed food for those who are less fortunate," said David Waller, Director of Wildlife Resources Division.

"Every year we are seeing more and more hunters donate deer to this program and Bass Pro Shops is an excellent additional drop-off point for hunters since it is located in such a well traveled area and is easily accessible."

Hunters can donate field-dressed deer at the following locations:

•Bass Pro Shops, Shackleford Road, exit 39A off I-85 Social Circle: Exit 48 off I-20 at Hwy. 278.

•Lexington, Oglethorpe County Farmer's Market on Hwy. 78.

•Locust Grove, Locust Grove exit off I-75, east side of interstate.

•Cedar Creek WMA and B.F. Grant WMA check stations — Saturday Only.

•Gainesville, Jesse Jewel Parkway at I-985.

At the end of each collection weekend, the deer are transported in refrigerated trucks to the DOC meat processing facility near Gainesville. Prisoners process the deer into venison and pack it into tubes labeled with the Hunters for the Hungry logo, under guidelines provided by the GDA.

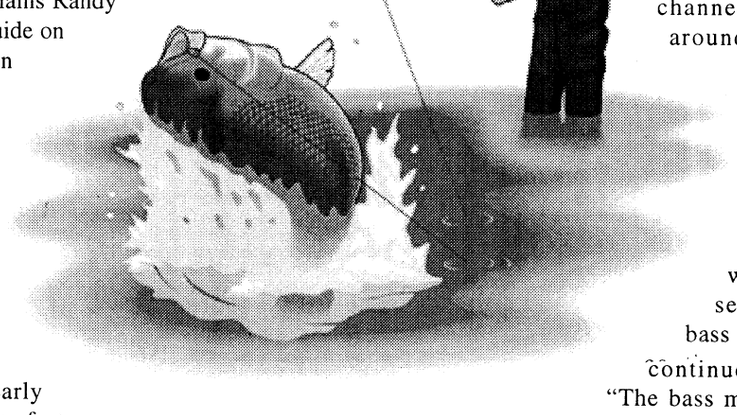
The Northeast Georgia Food Bank in Athens picks up the venison and distributes it through the Second Harvest Food Banks located in Albany, Athens, Atlanta, Augusta, Columbus, Macon and Savannah.

Hunters should look for the blaze orange Hunters for the Hungry banners at each collection location. Deer will be accepted from 9 a.m. - 8 p.m. The Georgia Wildlife Federation provides a free Hunters for the Hungry hat to hunters who donate deer to the program.

For more information on the Hunters for the Hungry program, contact the WRD at (770) 918-6400.

Changing water conditions affect angling decisions

By David Hegel and Steve Price
Johnson® & Evenrude® Outboards



If there is one thing bass fishermen everywhere have in common, it is having to deal with the problem of changing water levels, either rising water or falling water. Sometimes tournament pros face both in the same contest.

"In the course of a tournament season, it's actually pretty rare to have an event on a lake where the water has been stable at one level for several weeks," explains Randy Dearman, a longtime guide on Lake Livingston in Texas.

"This past February we fished a tournament on Sam Rayburn Reservoir in Texas where the water had been as much as 15 feet low, but in the month before our tournament the lake level rose nearly 10 feet, and four of those feet came in the days immediately before the tournament.

"Normally, rising water moves bass into the newly-flooded shoreline cover, regardless of the time of year. Spinnerbaits and sometimes top water lures are excellent lure choices under these conditions.

"At Rayburn, however, the rapid rise left the shallow water filled with floating grass that quickly clogged spinnerbaits. Some anglers fished Carolina rigs and others tried weedless plastic worms, just to keep from snagging so much vegetation. If you wanted to use a spinnerbait, you had to use a lighter model and downsize the blades."

The pro would rather fish rising water, but has certainly had his experiences with falling water as well.

"Falling water moves bass out to deeper water," explains Dearman, "but you never know how far out they're going to move. Finding them under those conditions is much more difficult than finding them in rising water."

Dearman suggests anglers start looking for falling water bass by fishing points. That way they can gradually fish from shallow to deep along the same piece of structure until they locate fish.

Other places to look for fish when the water is falling are around underwater islands or humps, the edges of deeper creek and river channels, and also around the first available deeper cover closest to the shoreline.

"Falling water also seems to make bass very spooky," continues Dearman. "The bass must be able to sense immediately when water levels start falling and they get nervous. If you're fishing visible cover where they might be holding, you have to make quiet lure presentations and usually cast from further away.

"When I'm fishing falling water, I also generally change from fast-moving active lures to more passive ones like jigs or plastic worms and lizards."

Wildlife Resources Division offers conservation program to landowners

SOCIAL CIRCLE — Landowners can sign up for the 16th Conservation Reserve Program (CRP) through Nov. 14, according to the Georgia Department of Natural Resources, Wildlife Resources Division (WRD). Landowners can apply to the CRP at any United States Department of Agriculture (USDA) Service Center, either with the Natural Resources Conservation Service (NRCS) or the Farm Service Agency (FSA).

"The sign-up provides an opportunity for landowners to participate in a cost-effective voluntary program to improve natural resources on their land," Todd Holbrook, WRD Chief of Game Management said.

"Many landowners were unaware of the wildlife habitat improvement opportunities available through CRP in the past, now they will have another chance to enroll their land."

The CRP is highly competitive and a new Environmental Benefits Index (EBI) is used to score all CRP applications and then rank them with all other offers. The EBI formula has changed so that wildlife habitat development has a much bigger influence on the overall score assigned to individual offers.

"I encourage applicants to find out about the EBI well in advance of Nov. 14 and to consult with WRD, NRCS or FSA staff on steps to take to maximize EBI points," Holbrook said.

"Landowners who take advantage of the opportunity to maximize wildlife habitat have a higher likelihood that their acreage will be accepted." For example, the EBI's wildlife habitat factor has been revised to recognize the benefits attributed to plantings which address the habitat needs of specific wildlife species.

Under the general sign-up, many practices are available to landowners to help them improve conditions for wildlife, including planting native grasses and trees, establishing permanent wildlife habitat, creating shallow water areas for wildlife and managing grasses already established. Other practices, such as developing filter strips and managing established pine stands, will provide valuable early succession habitat. Bobwhite quail, rabbits and various songbirds are dependent upon this type of habitat for continued survival, and many of these species are experiencing long-term population declines.

Landowners may offer land that has not been enrolled in CRP before, land that was not accepted during the 15th sign-up, land with contracts that expired Sept. 30 and land with CRP contracts that are due to expire Sept. 30, 1998. In order for land to be eligible for enrollment it must meet one of the following criteria:

•It must be considered highly erodible land according to conservation compliance provisions.

•It must be considered a farmed wetland.

•It must be subject to scour erosion.

•It must be located within a CRP priority area.

•It must be cropland associated with, or surrounding, non-cropped wetlands or,

•It must be devoted to a highly beneficial environmental practice.

Interested landowners should contact the local FSA office. For CRP enrollment information or information on improving wildlife habitat on your land, contact your local WRD game management office or call (770) 918-6416.

Post plans to remember 66th Infantry today

By Erin A. Nash
Bayonet staff writer©

A dedication ceremony is set for today to honor the 802 Soldiers of the 66th Infantry Division who perished at sea Dec. 24, 1944.

On that night, 2,235 Soldiers of the 66th Division were crossing the English Channel aboard the S.S. Leopoldville, a Belgian troop ship, as reinforcements for the Battle of the Bulge. The ship was five and a half miles off the coast of Cherbourg, France, when it was torpedoed by a German U-Boat and sunk.

The monument will be dedicated on Sacrifice Field, in front of the National Infantry Museum. The Leopoldville Memorial Association decided Fort Benning would be the most appropriate place because it is "Home of the Infantry."

The driving force behind this monument was the late Robert M. Hesse Sr. of Linden, N.J, and Vincent Codianni of Waterbury, Conn.

In January of 1996, Codianni requested financial assistance from the Waterbury Veterans Memorial Committee to construct a memorial to the victims of the Leopoldville tragedy.

The committee unanimously agreed. A nonprofit organization named the Leopoldville Memorial Association was formed with Codianni the president.

The monument will include the names and home states of victims and include a short history of the disaster. Also, below a bronze eagle, the monument has a large seal designed by Codianni depicting a sinking ship and a single head bobbing above the water.

Codianni worked on the monument as a tribute for more than 50 years.

OFFICERS' WIVES' CLUB

Craft extravaganza set for Nov 15

Officers' Wives' Club

More than 100 craft vendors are lined up to participate in the Officers' Wives' Club (OWC) bazaar, which is 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. Nov. 15 in Infantry Hall.

This is the club's only fund raising during the year, according to Judith Markelz, bazaar chairperson. All proceeds go to the club's scholarship and welfare projects.

"Last year the club donated $36,000 to these funds," Markelz said.

In addition to the hourly door prizes, activities for children are planned, she said.

Food booths will be set up.

"Last year baked goods — cookies, cakes and cupcakes were a hit with the shoppers," she said.

For the past several years, the bazaar was at Faith Middle School. This year the bazaar is at Infantry Hall to allow for maximum tricommunity participation, Markelz said.

Margaret Walters, author of Once I Cooked ... Now I Quilt, will autograph copies of her book, which will be sold during the bazaar. Walters was an Army wife for 30 years and her book offers more than 350 recipes and tips on how to avoid holiday stress when entertaining, said Jennifer Lewis, a member of the OWC.

The admission to the bazaar is a $1 donation.

Veterans Day ceremonies are planned at the following locations:

The National Infantry Museum at 1o and 11 a.m., at the Eternal Flame in front of the Government Center on Ninth Street in downtown Columbus at 11 a.m. and at the Columbus State University Clock Tower at 10:45 a.m.

Military sorts out gun law amendment

USAIC Public Affairs Office

An interim Department of Defense policy makes it a felony for anyone who has been convicted of a misdemeanor crime of domestic violence to ship, transport, possess or receive firearms or ammunition.

The policy also makes it a felony for any person to sell or give a firearm to a person convicted of domestic violence.

The policy is the result of the Lautenberg Amendment to the 1968 Gun Control Act. The amendment was passed in September 1996. The interim policy went into effect Oct. 22, 1997.

The law applies to anyone who has been convicted of a misdemeanor crime of domestic violence, to include active duty and reserve component military personnel and DoD civilian personnel, both appropriated and nonappropriated fund.

Since service members routinely carry weapons in the performance of their duties, including during training and on deployments, the Department of Defense has been working with the Treasury Department and the Department of Justice to resolve a number of complex issues so the law can be applied fully, fairly, and consistently throughout the services.

The interim policy for military personnel achieves those goals without detracting from readiness or impinging on individual rights.

The policy for military personnel is effective immediately. A similar implementation policy for DoD civilians was conveyed as required to labor unions having national consultation rights and will be issued after those consultations.

Domestic violence plagues American society as a whole. The Department of Defense is committed to the prevention of domestic violence and has taken a leadership role in that critical area.

Through the family advocacy program, the military provides a host of prevention, support, counseling and treatment programs for domestic violence.

The policy issued Oct. 22 further enhances the DoD's efforts to prevent domestic violence.

Key features of the DoD interim policy for military personnel are:

•Commanders and supervisors must take immediate steps to retrieve weapons and ammunition from any service member who was convicted of a misdemeanor crime of domestic violence.

•Major military weapons systems such as tanks and crew-served weapons are not considered firearms within the meaning of the law.

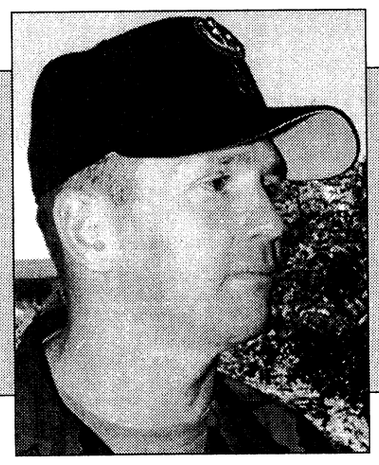
•Permanent adverse personnel actions, including discharges and separations, may not be taken against service members based solely on a misdemeanor conviction for domestic violence committed on or before Sept. 30, 1996, the day the legislation was enacted.

Conviction of a "misdemeanor crime of domestic violence" does not include a summary court-martial conviction or imposition of nonjudicial punishment (article 15, Uniform Code of Military Justice) or deferred prosecutions or similar alternative dispositions in a civilian court.

•Service members with qualifying convictions for acts of domestic violence occurring after Sept. 30, 1996, may be discharged or separated if a basis for discharge or separation exists under applicable existing regulations and directives.

•Commanders may take actions, such as reclassifications, reassignments, and temporary details, to ensure the best use of military personnel discovered to have qualifying convictions.

•The amendment will be construed to apply outside United States territory as a matter of DoD policy.



•The policy includes a disclosure form for service members to complete and sign. Completion of the form is voluntary, but failure to complete the form may result in the revocation of an individual's authority to transfer, possess or receive firearms and ammunition.

•Furnishing false information may result in criminal or administrative proceedings and

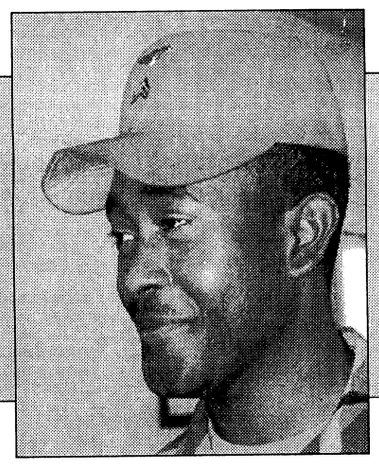
What does Veterans Day mean to you?



Sgt 1st Class Ralph Jackson, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 1st Battalion, 507th Infantry (Airborne), 11th Infantry Regiment — "Veterans Day is still a great way to show respect for a fallen comrade. My uncle retired after 23 years of service and was in Korea and Vietnam."

Sgt. Maxime Harewood, Company E, 1st Battalion (Airborne), 507th Infantry, 11th Infantry Regiment — "I think we should remember what has happened in the past. It's showing gratitude for what has been done by so many and what is still being done."

Randy Harris, Safety Office, Directorate of Public Safety — "I think the origins of Veterans Day comes from World War I, so there's a lot of history with the holiday. Veterans Day is important because it recognizes the service veterans have given to their country."

Capt. Jose Boria, HHC, 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment — "It's a great tribute to our military personnel that they gave their lives to defend our democracy, our freedom. On that day I think of my father because he is a veteran of Korean War."

Service is more than wearing a uniform

By John C. LeBlanc
Army News Service

commentary

As Soldiers, we are taught many things. We are taught that we must use our individual talents for the collective good. We are taught that we are only as strong as our weakest link. We are also taught that no one person is bigger than this Army. It has been around for more than 222 years and will still be here long after we have left this earth.

The Army has taught us much and still has much to teach. But how much of those teachings really sink in? From our earliest days of basic training, we are introduced to time-honored traditions and values that have endured the test of time. One of the most sacred of these is the rendering of honors to our flag.

As a boy, I recall standing on the side of the road during a Fourth of July parade with my grandfather. Each time the American Flag passed, he stood up, removed his hat and placed it over his heart. When the flag had passed, he sat back down.

My grandfather is a quiet man, but when it came time to honor his country, he was the first to stand up and be counted. After about the third time I just looked at him with wonderment and a bit of curiosity. He looked down at me and his words still ring in my ears as if he just spoke them.

"That flag represents everything good about this country — the greatest country in the world. Never forget the price that was paid so you and I could be here today. Never forget boy. Never forget."

And the most ironic thing about my grandfather was that he never served in the armed forces. An injury to his knee and back kept him out of battle. But in his heart and soul he kept alive his loyalty, commitment and honor to this nation.

It amazes me that a man who never wore a uniform, never went to basic training and never had any formal military education could totally outclass many of today's Soldiers. Just because you wear a uniform doesn't mean you automatically have honor.

Honoring our nation's flag is our biggest privilege. When I see Soldiers (or civilians) ducking into buildings or not leaving a building in the afternoon because they are afraid they may have to participate in retreat and to the colors, it makes me question not only the type of Soldier they are, but the type of person they are. These are people who have no honor, no character and is certainly no leader.

I've seen senior NCOs walking out from the PX or Shoppette area and rush to their cars because they don't want "to get caught in the open while the music is playing," conduct physical training indoors because they would have to salute during reveille. These men and women are not Soldiers — they are salespeople with rank. So-called leaders of the Army who only want to know when their paycheck got deposited.

To put it simply — if you don't want to take part in the Army's customs and traditions, then maybe you better rethink why you're in the Army in the first place. The days of the draft have come and gone. Nobody forced you to sign the contract. Nobody made you get on that plane. You decided all by yourself to be in the Army — to be a Soldier.

I've been in the Army three and one-half years and have the opportunity to see many things. At the handful of duty stations I have been, it amazes me how many of our leaders seem to duck out on basic responsibility.

Maybe you joined the Army for the college money. Maybe you joined because you lost a bet. Maybe you joined because, like me, you had nothing going for yourself and you needed some discipline and guidance. Who knows why any of us joined the Army. And frankly, who cares. The point is we're here.

Now it's time for all of us to take a good look at who we are and what we stand for.

Veterans' sacrifices shape our country today

Since the end of World War I, America has set aside this day to celebrate the men and women who served so proudly in the defense of the United States. Throughout our history, veterans played a key role in the growth of the nation. They explored the wilderness, helped build the canals and railroads that knit the country together, and guarded the frontier. And on a thousand battlefields, on land, at sea and in the air, they fought the great battles that decided our fate as a people and a country.

Today we enjoy the blessings of peace, a peace earned by the valor and sacrifice of millions of veterans whose ranks are filled with heroes, spanning every conflict of this century from the Great War to Desert Storm. Through a long and bitter Cold War, and in countless places stricken by war and famine, they brought help and hope and a chance for peace. In every town and city, in churches and schools and businesses across the land, their selfless service strengthens and inspires our great Nation. What would America be without its veterans?

The men and women of our armed forces join the Joint Chiefs and me in saluting our veterans on this sacred day. Your example of courage and duty is alive and well in the hearts of every Soldier, sailor, airman and Marine in the force. May each of you take pride in your service, and in the proud legacy you left for those of us who still wear the uniform.

— Gen. Henry H. Shelton
Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff

Freedom Isn't Free

I watched the flag pass by one day.
It fluttered in the breeze
A young Soldier saluted it, and then
He stood at ease.
I looked at him in uniform
So young, so tall, so proud
With hair cut square and eyes alert
He'd stand out in any crowd.
I thought how many men like him
Had fallen through the years.
How many died on foreign soil?
How many mothers' tears?
How many pilots' planes shot down?
How many foxholes were Soldiers' graves?
No Freedom isn't free
I heard the sound of Taps one night,
When everything was still.
I listened to the bugler play
And felt a sudden chill.
I wondered just how many times
That Taps had meant "Amen"
When a flag had draped a coffin of a brother or a friend.
I thought of all the children,
Of the mothers and the wives,
Of fathers, sons and husbands
With interrupted lives.
I thought about a graveyard at the bottom of the sea
Of unmarked graves in Arlington.....
No — Freedom isn't free!!

Soldiers continue to fight for freedom throughout the times

On Veterans Day we honor the service and sacrifice of the men and women who have proudly worn the uniform of the United States military.

Since the Revolutionary War, in times of peace and in times of conflict, more than 42 million of America's sons and daughters have served in our Armed Forces. Through their unflagging efforts, our Nation remains the world's strongest force for peace, freedom, and democracy.

This year marks the 50th Anniversary of the Marshall Plan, perhaps the greatest strategy of preventive defense in modern history. Conceived by a Soldier, Gen. George C. Marshall Jr., the Marshall Plan rekindled hope for reconciliation and reconstruction in post-World War II Europe.

In the wake of devastation, the commitment of the United States to help Europeans help themselves provided a noble foundation for peace and prosperity that we continue to build on today.

With the end of the Cold War and the fall of the Berlin Wall, America is again offered opportunities of engagement in bolstering democratic institutions and extending the circle of security. The individuals who make up the United States Army will continue to play a key and historic role in that effort.

For 222 years, our military has defended the interests and furthered the ideals of our "Great Experiment," the United States of America. The global arena has changed greatly during the last two centuries, and our Armed Forces have changed with it.

In the face of change, however, one constant remains-the unfailing valor, dignity, and courage of our patriots in uniform.

From Valley Forge to Desert Storm, from San Juan Hill to Operation Joint Guard, the spirit and selfless service of the American Soldier shine brightly in the annals of history.

— The Honorable Togo D. West
Secretary of the Army

CG encourages safety during veterans holiday

Veterans Day is set aside to remember those who fought for our country. It is also a time to concentrate on protecting today's Soldiers and civilian employees from accidental injury. We must alert our personnel to a very real threat of motor vehicle accidents and instill in them a general sense of safety awareness.

My goal is to continue our outstanding efforts to ensure Fort Benning significantly reduces vehicle fatalities. To emphasize the dangers of privately owned vehicles (POVs), leaders should inspect POVs and brief Soldiers concerning POV safety. Emphasis should be placed on the most common causes of traffic fatalities which are: speeding, not wearing seat belts, driving after drinking beer or other alcoholic beverages and fatigue.

I want your wholehearted support to prevent traffic accidents.

Retirees meet, discuss benefits

By Erin A. Nash
Special to the Bayonet©

The 15th Annual Retiree Open House was held Oct. 24-25 for retirees, veterans and their family members from all branches of the military.

The open house started off with free physical exams Oct. 24, followed by a Rangers in Action demonstration and dining with rangers after. That night retirees had the chance to socialize with others at an "icebreaker" held at the National Infantry Museum.

Oct. 25 started with breakfast in the Infantry Hall cafeteria, followed immediately by presentations in Marshall Auditorium.

Retired Col. Biff Haden commenced the presentation. He first introduced Commanding General Maj. Gen. Carl F. Ernst. Ernst awarded the Retirement Services Volunteer of the Year Award and recognized nine three-war veterans.

He then welcomed the retirees.

"You put tradition in our books," Ernst said. "You are a part of our team. It is important for young Soldiers to see we take care of our alumni. Welcome home."

Two short films were then shown, one called "The Hooah Factor" and one which showed the community of Fort Benning.

Ernst then introduced Col. Everett Newcomb III, commander of Martin Army Community Hospital (MACH).

Newcomb covered the general topics of Tricare, Medicare, hospital renovations, a pharmacy update, and army medicine.

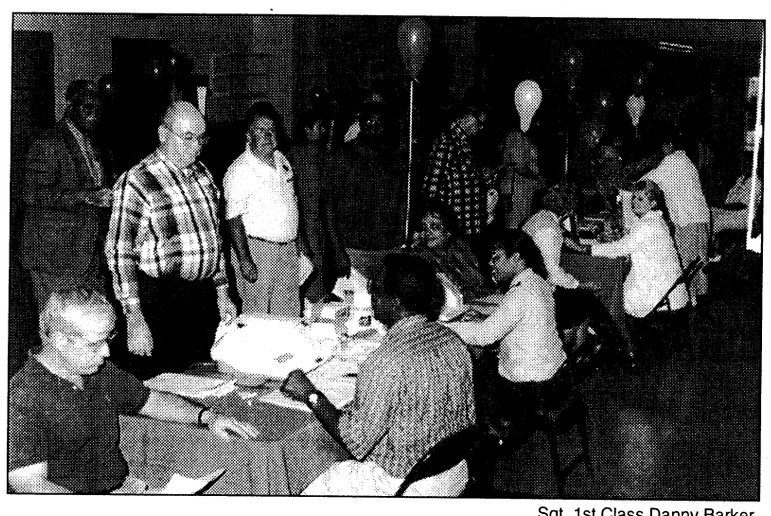
Renovations include a new high-speed CT scanner and a cutting edge mammography unit.

Newcomb also explained that the budget for MACH will be determined by how many people enroll in Tricare Prime, and urged the retirees to enroll.

Following a short break, Haden introduced Congressman Michael "Mac" Collins.

Collins started by saying it was very humbling for him to be here on Fort Benning. He said on his way into the open house, he had the chance to speak to a group of Soldiers who had just returned from Bosnia. He asked them when they thought we would get out of Bosnia.

"We won't ," they replied.



"Our troops, our Soldiers are doing their job. That is the reason you don't hear about Bosnia," Collins said.

Collins said the current 105th Congress is dedicated to seeing promises made are promises kept.

The 105th Congress proposed a balanced budget, a tax relief bill, and to extend Medicare for another 10 years, all which President Clinton signed.

Collins also said Congress has a lot of work to do in the next 5 to 6 years with Medicare and Social Security.

"We appreciate you. We welcome your input. We do not know what is on your minds," he said.

Sgt. 1st Class Danny Barker

Retirees pick up information at the Retiree Open House.

Immediately following Collins, retired Maj. Gen. Homer Smith spoke on behalf of the National Association for Uniformed Services (NAUS).

He explained that NAUS is a non-profit, aggressive, pro-active organization that lobbies on behalf of the military family, whether it be active, retired or veterans.

Smith said the make up of Congress has changed dramatically. Compared to years before, only one-third has military service, and five percent of their staffs.

Smith also said there is a need to mobilize retirees and veterans.

"We need to turn them into a vocal and effective voting block," he said. "We need your efforts. We live in a participatory republic; you need to participate."

Following his speech, Ernst presented Smith with an Infantry coin and a plaque explaining the history of Fort Benning. A raffle was then held, with prizes ranging from tents to grills to television sets.

Following the presentation, MACH held a health fair with more than 30 tables offering retirees services ranging from information on insurance to free flu shots.

Master Sgt. Willie O. Sims represented the MACH pharmacy.

He said they had received a good response. He was available to retirees to answer questions and could even access information from MACH on a patient to review their prescription drugs.

Sims talked of the problem of waiting times at the MACH pharmacy. He said the problem is they are never at full staff, but the problem should be resolved when they will be at 100-percent staffing by March.

"We try to accommodate the public the best way we can," he said.

Retired Sgt. 1st Class Kenneth E. Railey of LaGrange, Ga,. said he came to Fort Benning to "take care of business and socialize." It was Railey's first time to an open house.

Staff Sgt. William Boynton approximated 415 retirees attended the open house. He said the weekend went well and even the rain couldn't dampen spirits.

Delta Dental wins bid for military retiree dental plan

Delta Dental Plan

SAN FRANCISCO — The Tricare Support Office of the Department of Defense announced yesterday that Delta Dental Plan of California has won a five-year dental contract to offer dental benefits to the nation's 4.2 million military retirees and their family members.

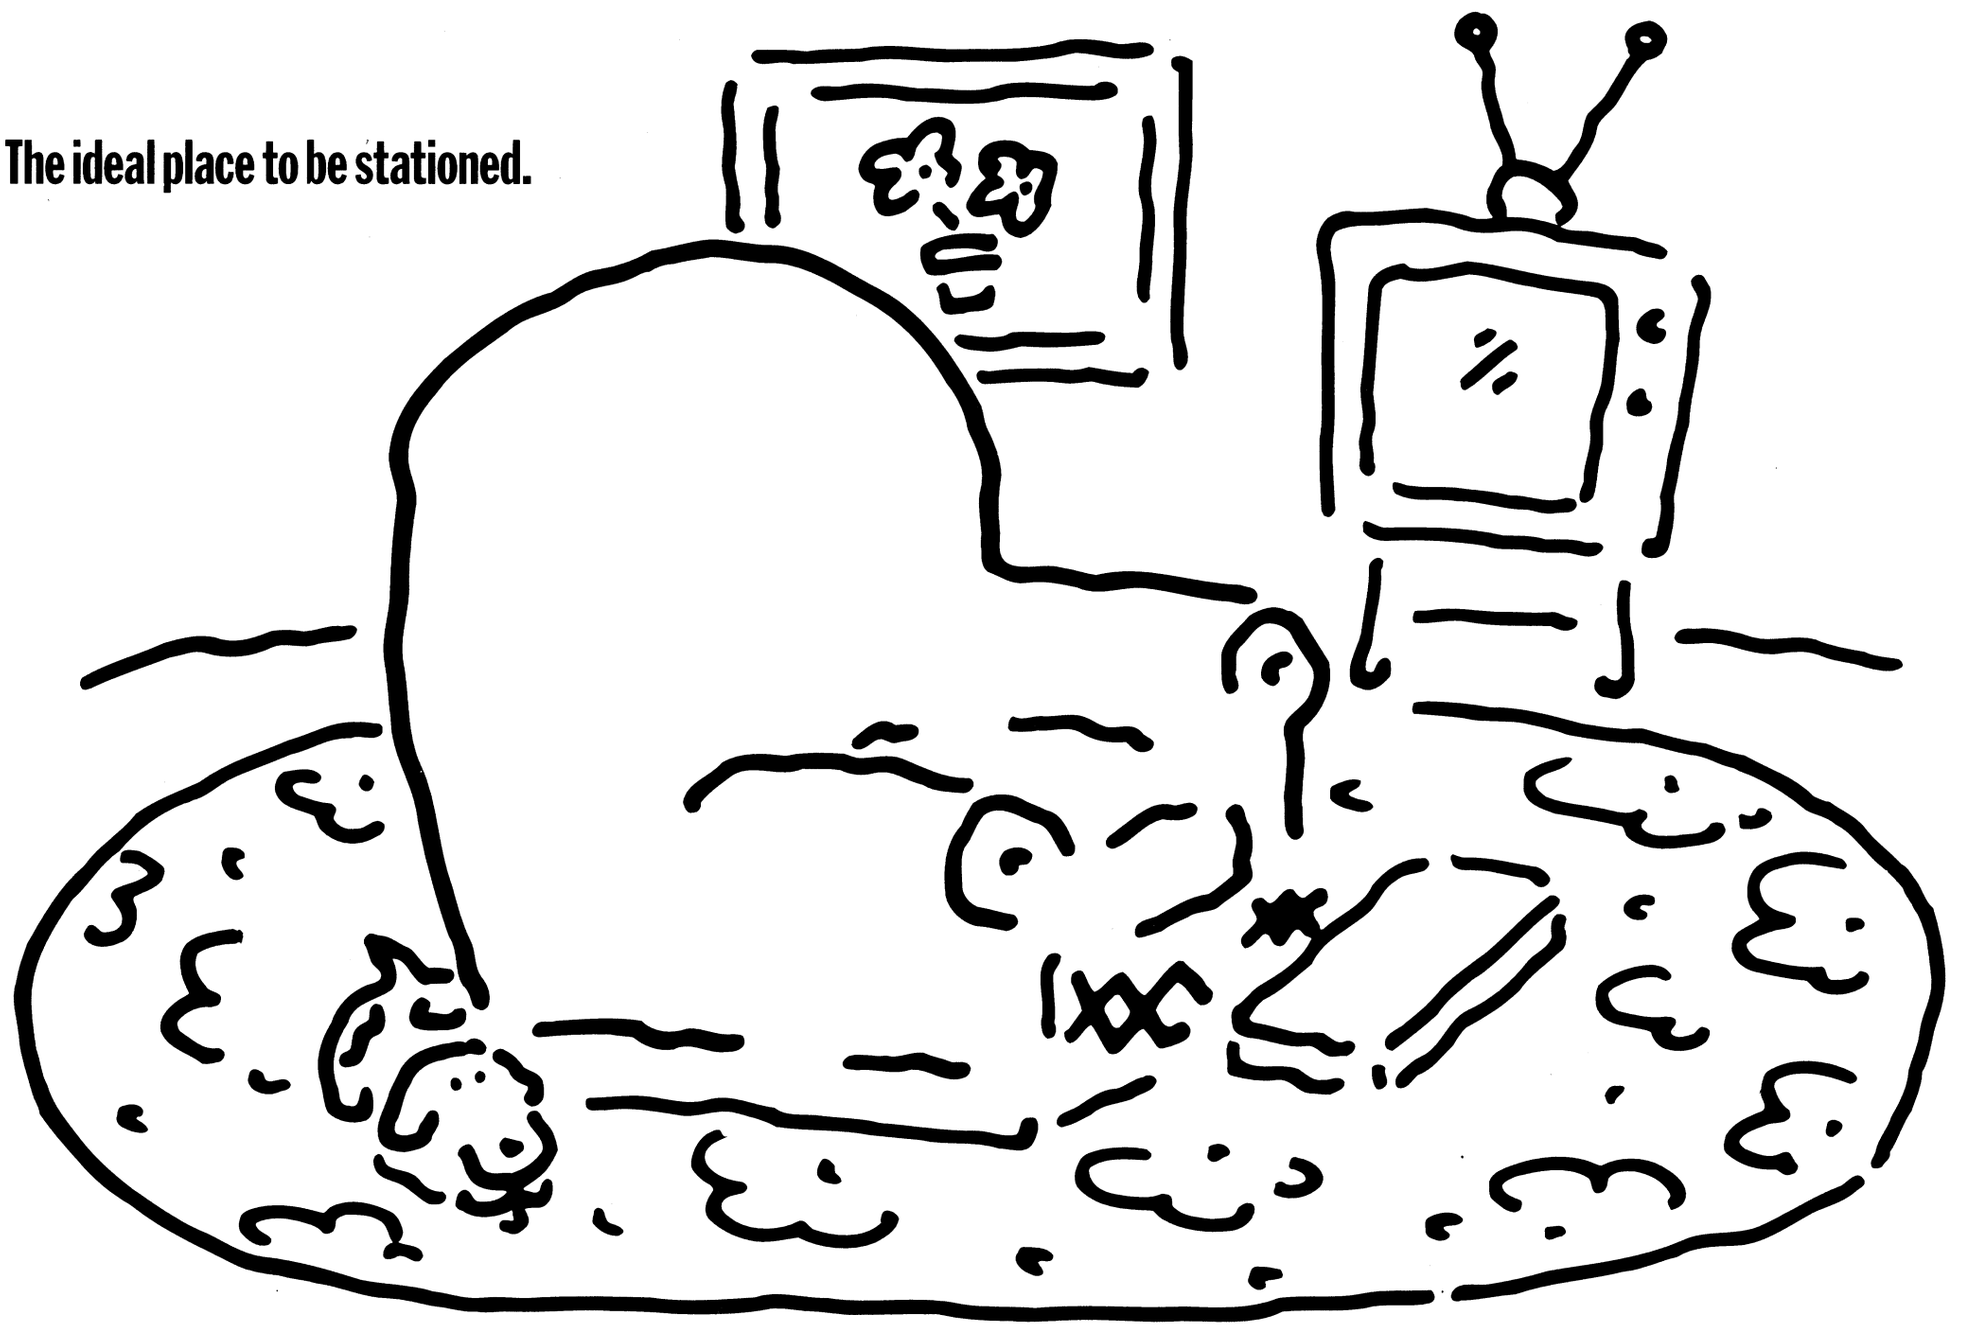
The enrollee-paid dental program, effective on Feb. 1, 1998, is valued at up to $1.5 billion. Delta officials, however, conservatively project a 10- to 20-percent enrollment of all eligible retirees, resulting in revenues of about $230 million over the life of the contract.

"Even the most conservative estimates for this contract give us 400,000 new enrollees next year, and that will make the Department of Defense our second largest client," said William T. Ward, Delta's president and chief executive officer. "Naturally, we are delighted with the news, and we plan to deliver a quality program with outstanding customer service."

The five-year contract includes one base year, plus four optional years ending Jan. 31, 2003.

To help handle the new account, Delta's Sacramento government operations center plans to create 20 to 40 new claims auditors, customer service phone operators and field representative positions.

The new military retiree dental program will be a national, preferred provider program that will offer participating retirees access to any licensed dentist in all 50 states, plus District of Columbia, Puerto Rico, Guam, the U.S. Virgin Islands, American Samoa, the Northern Mariana Islands and Canada. Optimal benefits under the program will be available to those retirees and their family members who choose a participating dentist from a special network of dentists.



The program has a $50 deductible and a $1,000 annual cap, against which preventive and diagnostic services are not counted.

After a retiree enrolls, premiums will be deducted from his or her retiree pay, and will range in price depending on geographic region and the number of dependents. Single coverage premiums will range from $9.41 to $15.08 per month; two-person coverage from $18.32 to $29.25 per month; and multiple dependent coverage will cost from $30.53 to $48.02 per month.

Delta: To cover up 4 million retirees

Eligible retirees who do not receive retiree pay will be billed directly by Delta. The scope of benefits includes:

•100 percent coverage for all preventative and diagnostic services, except for sealants and space maintainers, which are covered at 80 percent.

•100 percent coverage for all emergency services.

•80 percent for basic, restorative services.

•60 percent coverage for endodontic, periodontic and oral surgery services.

•60 percent coverage for all post-surgical services.

Enrollee dental benefits for military retirees and their families were approved by Congress as part of the National Defense Authorization Act for fiscal 1997. Eligible military retirees will be contacted through mail and other outreach activities, and offered a chance to enroll after Jan. 1, 1998.

For San Francisco-based Delta Dental Plan of California, the contract award marks a significant new addition in both membership and revenues. The nonprofit, dental service corporation currently boasts membership of 11.6 million Americans and more than $2.15 billion in revenues, not including the new contract. Company officials say 1997 has been a banner sales year in which more than half a million new enrollees were added.

Delta Dental Plan of California is a member of the national Delta Dental Plans Association, which collectively covers approximately 33 million Americans in about 33,000 groups.

New TRADOC deputy CG plans to visit IET training

By Jim Caldwell
TRADOC News Service

FORT MONROE, Va. — The new Training and Doctrine deputy commanding general for initial entry training will become a familiar figure at training installations as he works to ensure that uniform training standards and zero tolerance for sexual harassment are enforced.

"I certainly hope I have a positive impact on prevention of sexual harassment and sexual misconduct and, concurrently, improve the overall level of initial entry training," said Lt. Gen. William J. Bolt. "I clearly believe that we can reduce sexual harassment and have a zero tolerance for sexual harassment within the training base through better training, the emphasis on Army values and vigilance and awareness by the chain of command.

"Will there be instances of misconduct? I don't think I'm so naive to say that it will never happen, but I think we can ensure that there are good training and viable reporting procedures, and that the chain of command is aware of the danger signs and warnings."

Bolt is the first TRADOC deputy commanding general for training since 1990. However, he is the first general whose mission is to specifically deal with the initial entry training program for new soldiers. IET includes basic combat training, advanced individual training and one station unit training. In addition, he oversees the training of IET unit commanders, drill sergeants and instructors.

Establishing his position was one of the recommendations of the studies conducted by Department of Defense, Department of the Army and TRADOC following widely publicized cases of sexual misconduct by drill sergeants at several training installations.

IET will be expanded to put more emphasis on Army values and improve the quality of training. There will be 54 hours added to BCT and 16 to AIT. In BCT, 27 hours of human relations training will focus on prevention of sexual misconduct.

The U.S. Army Infantry School at Fort Benning is also conducting a pilot program for psychologically testing drill sergeant candidates.

"It's being tested to check the effectiveness, to look at the impact and to see what kind of data that comes out of it," Bolt said. "I think probably it will become a reality at some point in time."

Bolt moves to TRADOC headquarters after commanding the U.S. Army Training Center at Fort Jackson, S.C., since 1994. Fort Jackson and Fort Leonard Wood, Mo., are the only two sites in TRADOC where basic training is gender integrated.

Bolt pointed out that women and men trained in separate BCT companies when he first arrived at Fort Jackson.

"Whenever I would talk to a group of men Soldiers, they would tell me that women trainees 'are getting over'" he said. "There was a perception ... that those women were not going through the same basic training experience and were not as hard, committed or tough as the men.

"Since gender integrated training started I have not heard those comments one time."

The general said Army studies show women benefited from the mixed gender BCT, scoring higher on physical training and marksmanship than before.

"And men's standards don't suffer," he said.

Bolt said that efforts would be made to ensure drill sergeants' morale is kept high.

He related a conversation he had with a group of drill sergeants at Fort Jackson. They had complained that the bad reports about drill sergeants' sexual misconduct in the news media was detrimental to them.

"I said, well we did have bad drill sergeants and we're having bad stories written about them," he said. "If you are a good drill sergeant, should that make you feel really bad? Well, it might. But if you want to see how good you are, look at your product," he told them.

"The fact remains that we are in a tough, critical job that requires tough, critical analysis of what we do.

Commanders and drill sergeants have to hold themselves accountable to those standards, and there are lots of rules and policies to help them."

Bolt said he won't be an "inspector general" of initial entry training, but he will visit training centers frequently.

That will allow him to see for himself the quality of training, to make sure that standards are the same everywhere, and that they are being met.

He plans to address every class at the precommand course for training brigade and battalion commanders and sergeants major at Fort Jackson. He will also try to talk to every class at the three drill sergeants schools in TRADOC. His talks will give the officers and NCOs the TRADOC perspective on IET.

Bolt said his presence at TRADOC and his interaction with the staff will ensure that the needs of IET will get a hearing.

"I clearly can be a voice so that we're getting the right policies and the right resources," he said.

AIT classroom instructors and other training cadre will certainly be "part of the soldierization process" of IET. Bolt said that the same rules and regulations that apply on the drill field will be in effect for the classroom.

"I will also tell you that I don't think we're irretrievably broke," Bolt said. "There are great, great NCOs doing what great noncommissioned always do, train Soldiers.

"If you look over the last five or six years, the Soldiers that we have in the Gulf and Bosnia have performed great. The proof of the pudding is that we put good Soldiers in the field," he said.

GA's license suspension law targets child support delinquents

Ga. Dept. of Human Resources

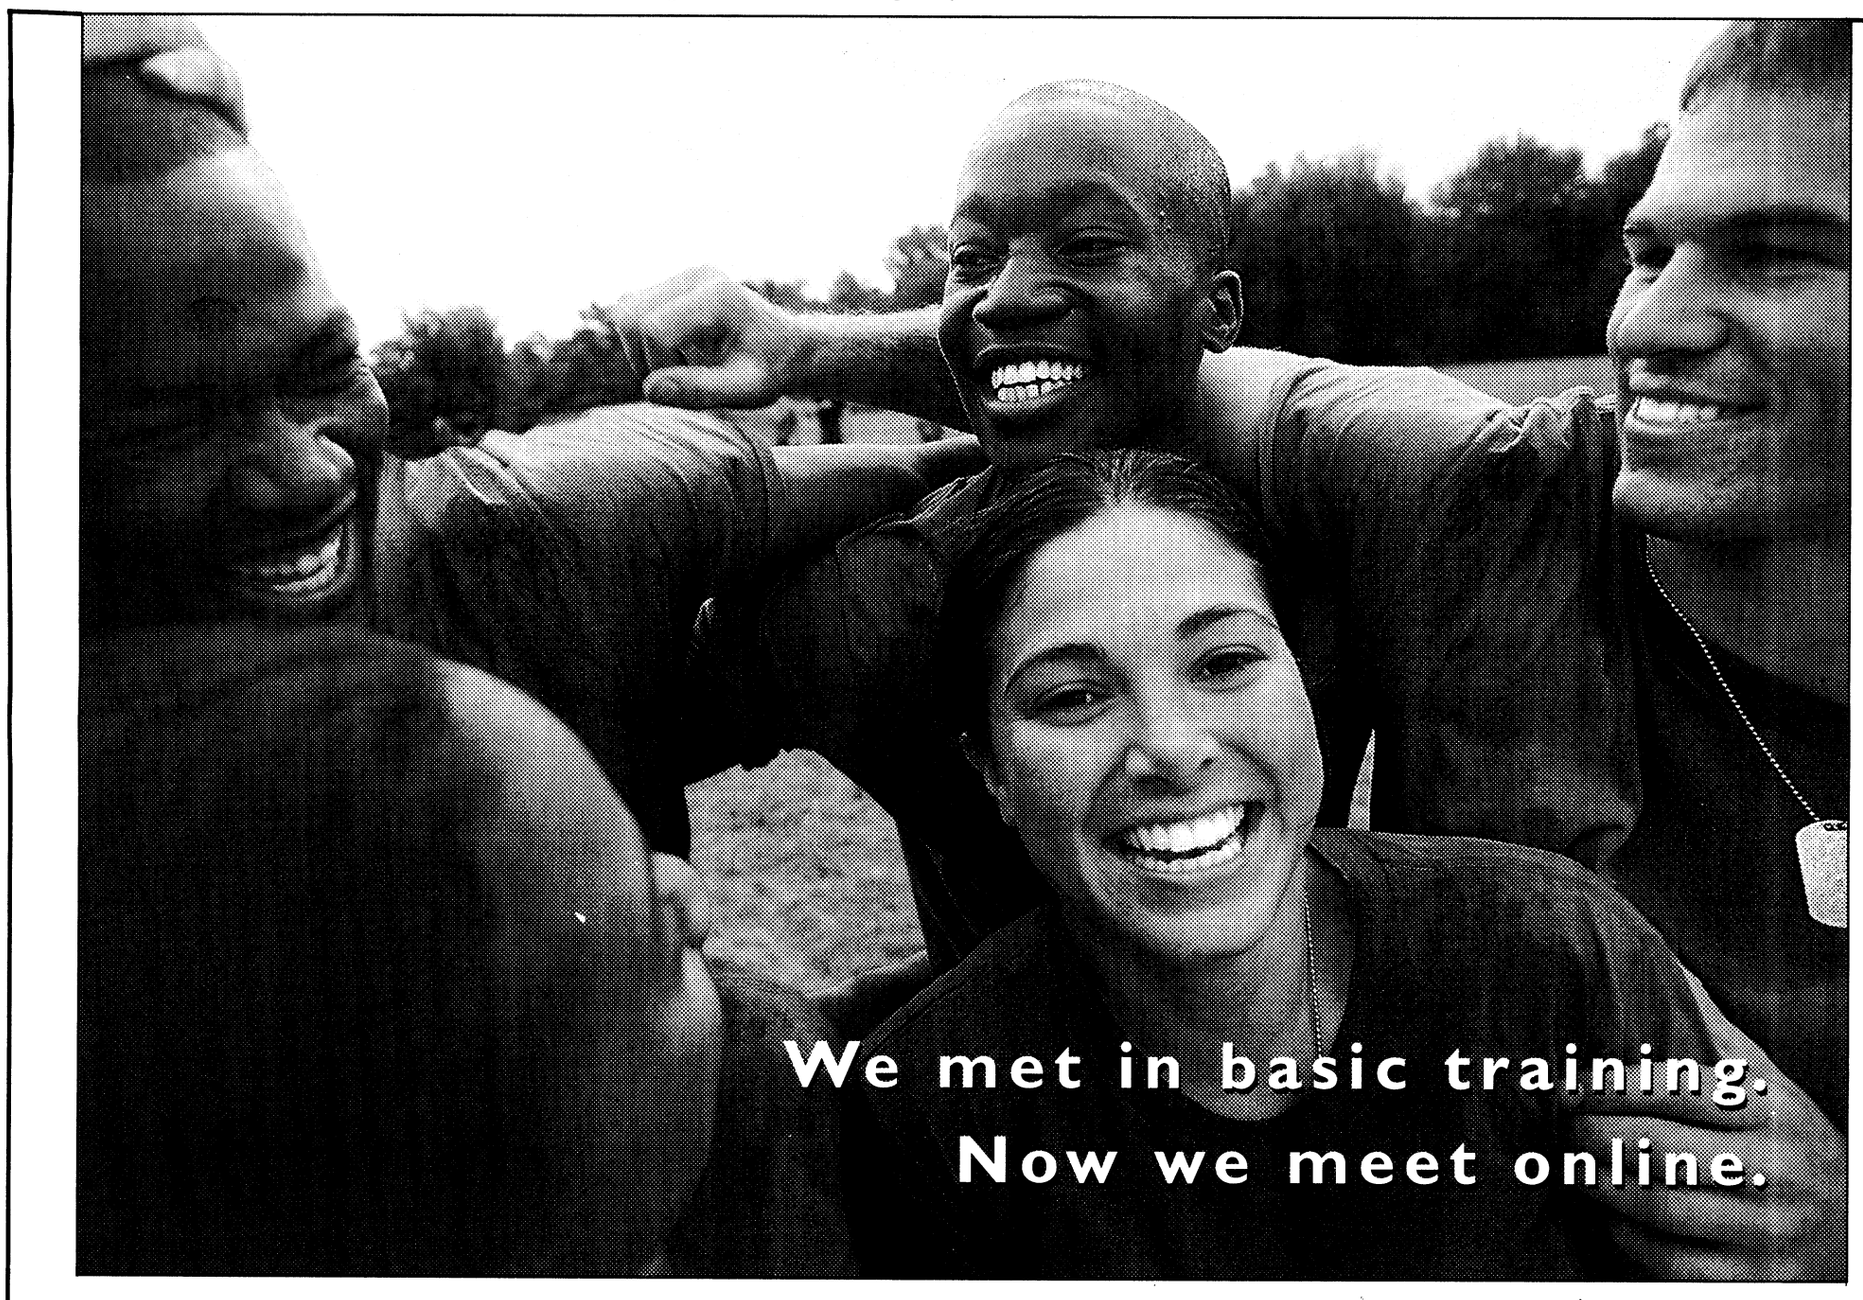
More than $1.5 million in back child support was collected during the year since Georgia's license suspension law went into effect last October.

The law allows the state to suspend or deny driver's licenses and professional occupation licenses of noncustodial parents who are at least two months behind in child support payments and have not made any payment arrangement.

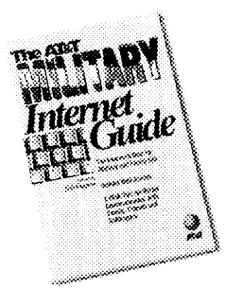
Robert Riddle, director of the Georgia Department of Human Resources Child Support Enforcement office (CSE), said CSE has been able to collect on 968 cases as a result of the legislation.

"It is an attention-getter that's becoming a very effective tool for child support collection," Riddle said. "Our goal is not to suspend licenses, but to make parents understand that paying their child support should be their first responsibility."

To recognize the suspension laws' first anniversary and to promote its continued success, CSE is distributing 3,000 posters illustrating that Georgia drivers could lose their license if they fail to pay child support.



The posters will be displayed in county licensing offices, county DFCS offices, courthouses, health departments and libraries. Currently, 478,232 child support cases are assigned to Georgia's 600 CSE case managers.



Parents who owe child support may check the status of their case by contacting their county DHR Child Support Enforcement office.

For more information regarding the law and its enforcement, call CSE's information line at (800) 217-3964.

Man's best friend helps fight crime

By Sgt. Marc G. Turchin
Bayonet assistant editor

Military Police (MP) officers are charged with the task of keeping the installation safe for its community members. Whether they patrol the streets in cars, on bikes or by walking, their job remains the same.

Some members of the military police have partners that at one time would have seemed unusual — but are now common.

These partners are the MP's working dogs.

The dogs can be seen normally riding in the back seat of the MP's sport utility vehicle and at times seem to bark louder than most dogs. These canines help with the security of the installation as much as anyone.

"Our mission is to support Fort Benning and the surrounding areas with law enforcement, security, drug enforcement and explosive detection," said Staff Sgt. John A. Lang Jr., kennel master for the USAIC MP Company.

With so many different taskings, the dogs are normally used at night — mainly because they are more effective then, Lang said.

"Their senses are much better than ours," Lang said. "The dogs can hear, smell and see better at night. These dogs can find anyone at night."

Outside of their senses, Lang said just their presence is enough to scare some.

"Dogs are huge deterrents," he said. "Just the mere sight of one of these animals makes a criminal think twice."

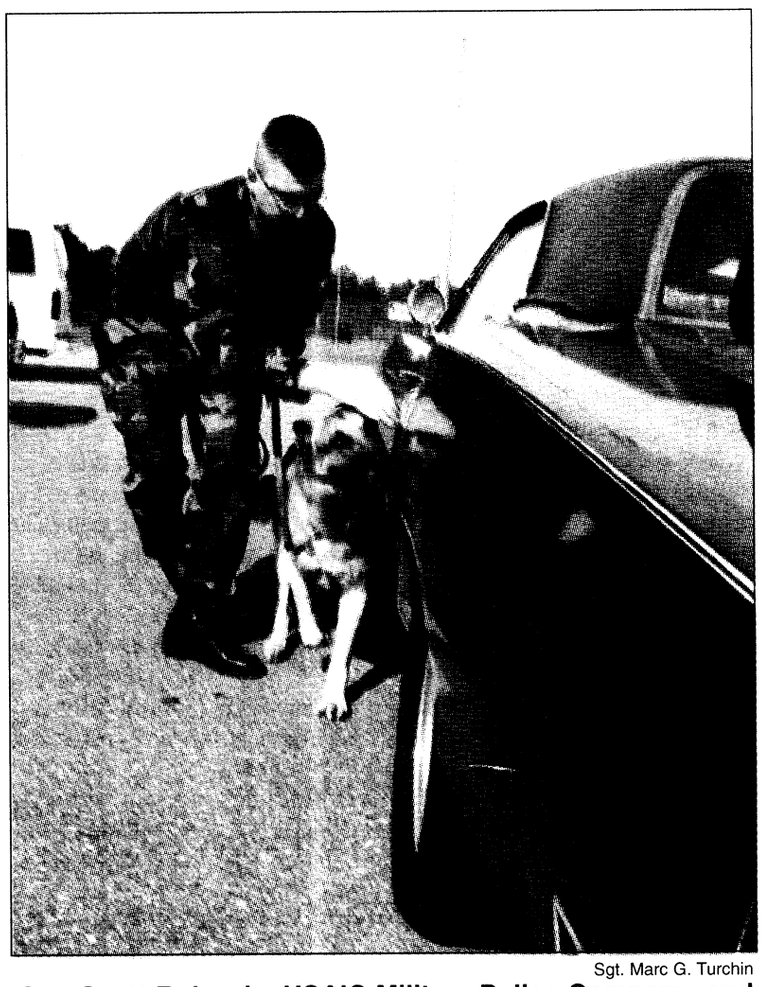
In July, the dogs along with their human counterparts began patrolling the housing areas and parking lots on foot. Since then, the number of certain criminal acts on post has dropped. Lang credits the drop to the dogs being out and about.

"The dogs can smell out human odor just as well as drug odors. It makes sense to use them on the streets."

Fort Benning currently has 12 dogs working on post. The training never stops for the dogs and their handlers.

When it comes to training for drug detection, the dogs are put to the test using actual narcotics.

Drugs of different types and sizes are hidden in rooms. The dog only has a certain amount of time to find the drug. Lang said the average time is about 30 minutes for a warehouse-sized facility and from two to five minutes for a barracks sized room.



This type of training only covers one facet of the canine's mission here. Another is working with the explosive ordnance disposal (EOD) company on post.

"We're normally on a site before EOD gets there," Lang said. "Our job is to find and pinpoint the ordnance, not dispose of it. EOD takes care of that."

Whether it drugs or explosives, Lang said the dogs must do their job or others may suffer the consequences.

"If you miss drugs, you miss a case and I don't want to miss a case. But if you miss explosives, someone is going to die."

To be a dog handler, MPs go to Lackland Air Force Base, Texas for 13 weeks of training. They return to their installation for more training and are then put on duty. Before volunteering to become a handler, according to Lang, the volunteers must show good common sense, are not afraid of dogs and are screened by the local authorities and the MPs for a criminal background or drug arrests.

Sgt. Marc G. Turchin

Sgt. Scott R. Lewis, USAIC Military Police Company, and his partner Bodie, a five year old German Shepard, search the exterior of a vehicle for drugs.

One handler said he wanted to become a dog handler because he loves animals.

"I love dogs and thought it would be interesting," said Sgt. Antonio L. Cox, dog handler with USAIC MP Company. "It's great to see a dog used to its fullest potential."

As a handler, Cox and the other officers are required to groom, feed, train, maintain its health and keep a good rapport with the dog. This rapport, according to Cox, is a necessity.

"Dogs have bad days too," Cox said. "Each one has a different way of telling you and some will try and bite you. But as long as you have a good rapport with the dog, you don't have too much to worry about."

Having a good rapport and taking commands is part of the test dogs go through to become MP working dogs.

Lang said almost any dog weighing more than 65 pounds and can pass the tests can become law enforcers.

Dogs need to be able to take minimal commands and bite and smell on direction at first. Then the instructors at Lackland put the dogs through a stress test. Included in this test is reacting to gunfire to see if the dog will cower.

Most dogs used are German Shepards and Belgian Malinois. Those breeds plus a Dutch Malinois are used on post.

No matter what type of dog the MPs use, most agree when it comes to keeping the security of the post, the dogs fear nothing.

"No matter what the situation is, the dog is trained to respond," Cox said. You can get in any kind of situation and your backup partner may be scared for whatever reason. The dog knows no fear."

Students live-fire used for learning

By 2nd Lt. Chad E. Hetman
2nd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment

Last week., Soldiers of Company B, 2nd Battalion, (Infantry Officer Basic Course), 11th Infantry Regiment (IOBC), class honed their Soldier and leadership skills as they lead their peers through platoon live-fire exercises and negotiated an advanced land navigation course.

After establishing their patrol bases, platoons went out and prepared for their live-fire mission. Assigned platoon leaders wrote operation orders for the platoon attack while other students told the warning order to their peers. When the plan was completed and the men were briefed, they rehearsed and executed using the crawl, walk, run method. A day was spent on each phase.

"In the past, I wasn't used to the crawl, walk, run method, just executing," said 2nd Lt. Christian D. Knutzen, "but I saw the light when live rounds were headed my way. Spotting and correcting mistakes that may get someone shot and working better as a team makes the mission successful."

On the third day, platoons could be seen operating at full speed, ripping through the objective with weapons firing and conducting actions on the objective. Opposition force prisoners of war screamed and struggled as they were searched and bounded while casualties were collected and treated and situation reports were called in. Despite the intensity of the live-fire, the lieutenants said they benefited most from individual platoon night operations and the advanced land navigation test.

"This was the best training we had yet because it was the hardest," said 2nd Lt. Greg D. Holt. "I learned to cope with the challenge of operating in a platoon at night and without sleep, there wasn't any breaks. After a live-fire, running four miles and then conducting an ambush that extended into the next day, you learn more than techniques and tactics, you learn about yourself and your people," he said. 2nd Lt. Dennis F. Hathaway agrees about the difficulty of maneuvering at night.

"It's not easy, not even with night vision devices," Hathaway said.

Platoons also executed reconnaissance missions, link ups and patrols through the terrain of Ft. Benning at night, while they learned to make field expedient antennas, send reconnaissance sketches over the radio, techniques of the mechanized Infantry and conducted after action reviews of their missions during the day.

The best, they said, was saved for last. Cold air and heavy rains marked the beginning of the advanced land navigation test — lasting 17 hours and stretched up to 11 kilometers in length. Buddy teams were required to correctly plot their starting point and find three of the five points without being compromised by "enemy patrols" through the dark hours of the course.

2nd Lt. Timothy J. Koester said the test "was really challenging, it definitely was more realistic having to avoid the opposing force, carry a weapon and a rucksack and not just bee-bob down the road," Koester said. "It was the biggest challenge I've had at IOBC, I enjoyed it."

While some gained insight on challenges they will have to face in the future, 2nd Lt. Steve M. Lyles looked back to when he went through Ranger School.

He said he believes his peers discovered new strengths and weaknesses in themselves helping them to overcome problems they will have to face.

"I wished it would have rained harder, I wish it would have sucked more," Lyles said. "That's when people are trained the most, when factors like a sunny day aren't there and friction is applied — it makes you reach deep down inside; that's good training."

IOBC class reaches midway

By 2nd Lt. Zac Vann
2nd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment

Oct. 17 marked the halfway point for the lieutenants in the Infantry Officer Basic Course (IOBC) class 7-97. With eight weeks of training complete and eight more to go, the lieutenants celebrated the day with an eight-mile road march in the early morning hours and a dining-in that evening.

The IOBC students were not the only people on hand to celebrate the cycle's halfway point; the company cadre were also in attendance. The 2nd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment Commander Lt. Col. David Brown, and the 11th Infantry Regiment Commander Col. Victor Bero were also available for the festivities.

Bero was the evening's featured speaker and stressed to the new lieutenants the importance of a commitment to standards and of a commitment that all leaders should make to their Soldiers' welfare.

Brown was also featured during the evening but not as a speaker. The battalion commander was the subject of one of the many skits prepared by the platoons to cap off the evening.

The skits transitioned the evening from a formal atmosphere to a more relaxed atmosphere. The skits marked some funny highlights of the first eight weeks. No one was safe either, from the student lieutenant through the company and battalion commander, anyone who did something to be famous or infamous found themselves a highlight of platoon skit.

The company dining-in allowed the lieutenants of Company B to look back on the first eight weeks of training and realize how fast the course has gone.

SOA Soldiers tackle mountainous terrain

By Spc. Alberto Betancourt
SOA, Public Affairs Office

Battling large thorny shrubs, high altitude and a treacherous terrain, 24 multinational students attending the U.S. Army School of the Americas' Commando Course tackled the mountain phase of their program at Camp Frank D. Merrill in Dahlonega, Ga., Oct. 12-24.

The main reason the students train at Camp Merrill is to learn how to do various types of combat patrols in mountainous terrain, and to understand that each terrain requires different patrolling techniques, according to Staff Sgt. Javier Martinez, SOA's Company B, and one of the primary instructors for the students during the mountain phase.

"They have the basic U.S. doctrine on reconnaissance down," said Martinez. "We want to see how they employ it in the mountains."

After several days of training in the low ground, the students began preparations for their first reconnaissance patrol in the steep Appalachian Mountains, Oct. 15.

Scrambling to meet the timeline given by Martinez, the students from Mexico, Bolivia, Uruguay, the Dominican Republic, Chile and Colombia rehearsed their plan for their evening mission. They came up with internal call signs, made a map on the ground using tree branches and other materials to illustrate the path they were going to take, and made sure all the weapons and sensitive equipment were operational and accounted for.

"Although they are a multi-nation platoon, they work very well together," said Martinez. "If it wasn't for a lot of these guys helping out the platoon leader during his planning phase in the morning, he would've probably received a no-go."

Martinez emphasized that during the reconnaissance mission, the student's goal was to avoid enemy contact. He also said if the enemy was confronted, he would evaluate the group on how it reacted.

After a long bumpy ride in the back of a 2-1/2-ton truck, the students arrived at their starting point.

Carrying a 70-pound rucksack on their back. One-by-one they began the upward climb into the mountains they would call home until the end of the training Oct. 24.

As darkness crept upon the commandos, fighting off the thorny shrubs covering the mountainside became more and more difficult. However, they had mild weather instead of the predicted cold front.

The giant silver moon played games with the students, as it would momentarily creep over the clouds like a flare burning a path in the mountains, forcing them to constantly take cover.

Meanwhile, Martinez barked commands to keep the unit on their toes and motivated. His effort forced the commandos to forget about failure and concentrate on triumph.

It had been close to nine hours of trudging the mountainside when the students reached their objective and completed their mission by accurately reporting proper information on the enemy without getting compromised.

Capt. Eric D'India, commander of SOA's Detachment 2 and observer controller during the first mission, said the reconnaissance patrol was fair, with plenty of room for improvement.

"They have to learn how to use the terrain to their advantage. Otherwise they're going to find that movements are much slower, noisier, as well as a lot more draining on them," said D'India.

He said the commandos must continue working as a platoon element while practicing the collective leadership tasks they're supposed to demonstrate throughout the course.

D'India said they were getting better at working as a team and executing their leadership responsibilities now that they were able to recognize what those responsibilities were.

"One of the main benefits of having the School of the Americas, what a lot of people don't understand on the outside, is the fact that it gives foreign military the time to work together and learn each other's strengths and weaknesses, as well as develop personal relationships," he said.

D'India admitted that it takes a while to develop this cohesiveness.

"When they come here they're not familiar with each other, and they stand off a little bit," he said. "However, there is a team dynamic that occurs after they've been through some physical hardship together. That's what we started seeing during the mountain phase."

The Commando Course is a 10-week course that emphasizes patrolling small-unit tactics and allows the students to encounter everything from a water confidence course to troop leading procedures, said Capt. James Daniels, course director.

"As every year with this course there's a little difficulty," he said. "It's a very compressed course designed to put the students under stress. However, it is designed like that to teach them to deal with it and how to lead in spite of it, instead of being intimidated by the stress."

Daniels said the commandos will now enter their final phase of training on Fort Benning, consisting of water-borne instructions, close-quarter combat and military operations in urban terrain. The students will graduate Nov. 19.

Since 1946, the U.S. Army School of the Americas has trained nearly 59,000 Latin American military, policemen and civilians from 22 nations. Its doctrine mirrors other U.S. Army curricula, but all instruction is provided in Spanish.

ACAP offers transitioning Soldiers resume service

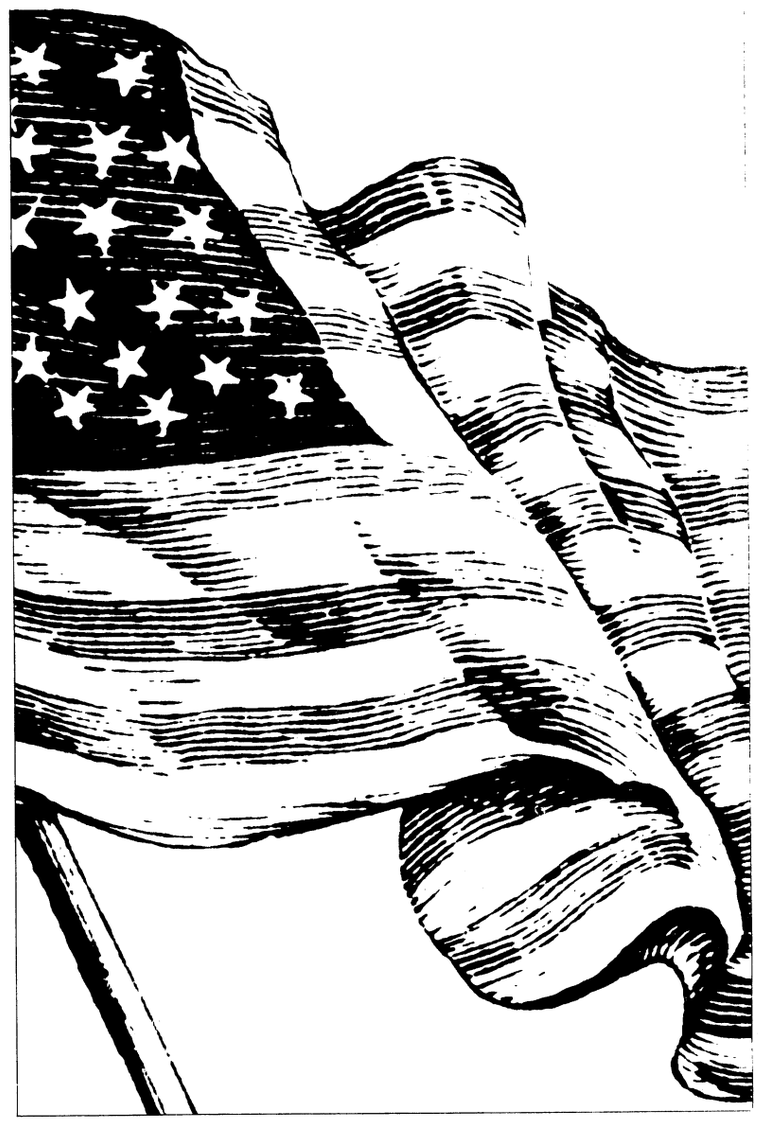
Army Career and Alumni Program

"DORS is the Defense Outplacement and Referral System and is an innovative tool that transitioning Soldiers can use to get their names and mini-resumes in front of employers nationwide," said Betty Johnson, office automation specialist with the Fort Benning ACAP Center in Soldiers' Plaza.

"DORS is a computerized on-line referral service provided for private sector employers," Johnson said. "By dialing a toll-free number, employers can receive copies of mini-resumes of separating Soldiers who have skills and training that match employer needs. The system also supports the public sector or PACS (Public and Community Service) employers. PACS is mandatory for Soldiers retiring with less than 20 years service. PACS employers include schools, hospitals, law enforcement and social service agencies.

"It is a very simple process and almost all ACAPing Soldiers have prepared and transmitted mini-resumes as one of the Job Assistance services at the ACAP Center," Johnson said. "Soldiers get individual training and assistance on how to complete and transmit DORS-PACS resumes. The process requires the Soldier's name, mailing address with phone numbers, desired job category, work location preferences, summary of job skills and experience, and the exact date available to start work.

"The system is used continuously by employers who request mini-resumes and then contact Soldiers with employment opportunities. Statistics for 1997 show that 248,874 Soldiers were referred to employers of the 327,533 submitting resumes. That's about a 75 percent referral rate. In fact, many Soldiers have reported to ACAP that they were contacted by a company or placement firm they did not know, but the employer had received a copy of the mini-resume from the DORS-PACS system.



"This is a valuable tool for job seekers and it is recommended that each transitioning Soldier take advantage of this unique service. DORS-PACS mini-resume service is available to separating Soldiers, spouses and civil service workers when participating in ACAP. The mini-resume can be submitted as early as 180 days before separation date."

For more information and ACAP scheduling, visit or call your ACAP Center in building 2634, Soldiers' Plaza, 545-2308 or 545-2309.

Law: Prohibits waivers for people convicted of domestic violence

•Members who have questions or concerns can consult with an attorney before completing the form.

•Individuals convicted of domestic violence offenses will not be granted waivers for entrance into military service.

•A joint-service working group will be established to resolve associated personnel policy issues, to include those concerning assignments, recruiting, retention, and training and develop a final DoD policy.

Bottom line — the Department of Defense is complying with the law and DoD officials said they expect the policy to have little impact on recruiting, readiness or the workload of commanders.

Officials note that domestic violence is a problem in American society as a whole and the Defense Department is committed to the prevention of domestic violence, and has taken a leadership role in that critical area.

A spokesman said that through the family advocacy program, the military provides a host of prevention, support, counseling and treatment programs for domestic violence.

DoD officials said the reason it took more than a year to implement the interim policy was to fully and fairly comply with the legislation.

There were complex issues involved that required study and coordination. For example, firearms and ammunition are broadly defined in the legislation. The amendment didn't contain language addressing military weapon systems like tanks and crew-served weapons.

The Defense Department has been working with the Treasury Department and the Department of Justice to resolve issues.

Since service members routinely carry weapons in the performance of their duties, during training and on deployments, more than most agencies DoD had to work through personnel policy issues such as definitions, duty assignments, recruiting, retention, and training.

Because these policy determinations might impact on readiness and involve issues such as fairness to service members and families, DoD wanted to give the services and other DoD agencies the opportunity to comment.

Officials said they wanted to ensure that the policy applied the law uniformly, consistently and fairly across the services. They said they wanted to ensure that the civilian personnel policy was, insofar as possible, consistent with the military policy.

That policy is being sent to the national labor unions for comment.

In answering concerns of soldiers who have these misdemeanor convictions, officials are saying commanders and supervisors are being told to refrain from taking permanent adverse personnel actions, including discharges and separations, against service members based solely on a misdemeanor conviction for acts of domestic violence committed on or before Sept. 30, 1996 (the day the legislation was enacted and became law).

Service members with qualifying convictions for acts of domestic violence occurring after Sept. 30, 1996, may be discharged or separated if a basis for discharge or separation exists under applicable existing regulations and directives.

The policy also states: "Commanders and supervisors shall, however, grant service members reasonable time prior to separation to obtain expungements or pardons or to gather information to determine whether they have a qualifying conviction.

Steps may be taken to ensure the best use of military personnel discovered to have qualifying convictions, such as reclassifications, reassignments, and temporary details."

The policy is not expected to have a big impact on recruiting because the majority of potential recruits are young, single and never married.

DoD officials declined to speculate how many Soldiers this law might apply to until after the Defense Departments military personnel are queried.

School Board meets, discusses technology, new standardized test

By Staff Sgt. Lori Egan
Bayonet editor

The Fort Benning School Board received a technology update, learned about the new standardized test measure and discussed the school home partnership in an Oct. 27 meeting. In an executive session the board re-elected Col. Michael Bingham the school board president.

There are educational technologists (ETs) in every Fort Benning school now, Jerry Christy, director of Technology, told the board members.

"ETs are certified teachers who will peer teach and co-teach to facilitate integration of technology into the curriculum," he said.

Christy also said the collaboration with Columbus State University where Fort Benning teachers use the Educational Training Center is going well. The ETs were the first group trained and have received more than 60 training hours.

All of the schools' computer labs should be operational by Nov. 10. Christy explained each school was equipped with a new 30-station computer lab, which the ETs would oversee.

The schools purchased software to support the language arts emphasis as well as other academic areas, he said.

Each elementary school will be equipped with a 28-station Discourse lab for use in all subject areas. Faith Middle School will have a 32-station lab.

The discourse lab is designed so that all children may participate in a lesson, even children who have difficulties with speaking in class, Christy told the board members.

"Discourse is a unique groupware product that helps every student participate in every element of every lesson through direct interface with the teacher's workstation."

Through this direct link to the teacher, the teacher is able to immediately see who is understanding or having difficulties with the course material, he said.

Work is continuing on the Discourse labs, which should be operational by the end of November, he said.

In keeping with Fort Benning benchmarks, the Faith classroom addition of a presentation lab is nearing completion. Christy said the lab is equipped with tiered seating and it will enable students to develop and practice real-world presentation skills.

Christy concluded his remarks by talking about skills for the future.

"Communication, collaboration, creativity, use of numbers and data, processing information, technological fluency and life-long learning are the skills our students need to possess. The challenge to educators is to design, develop and deliver the relevant curriculum."

After Christy detailed the skills students need to possess for their futures, Kathy Einhorn, director of curriculum, told the board members how the children would be tested for this knowledge.

Fort Benning Schools are going to test students this spring with Terra Nova, a new standardized test measure, she said.

"Terra Nova is designed to test children the way we teach them — through multiple assessments. There isn't a separate test for reading and vocabulary. This test integrates the skills.

This move is in line with suggestions that came from the Education 2000 Team visit and symposium, which suggested standardized tests. All Department of Defense Elementary and Secondary Schools will be given this test, she said. The test replaces the Iowa Test.

Einhorn said "Lunch and Learn" meetings will be scheduled for teachers and parents so that everyone involved in the child's education will be given information concerning Terra Nova.

When board members expressed concern about how the test scores would be interpreted, Einhorn said the first year scores would most likely be used as baseline data, not directly compared to last years ITBS.

"Our goal is to test our children in the way they are taught," she said.

"The test will drive changes in instruction because real-world examples are used, which encourages children to problem solve rather than to simply memorize facts."

For example, instead of inventing a region to test geographical skills a map of the equatorial region is used instead.

This is a performanced-based test that is in line with the curriculum so it should

Cottonmouth players visit Wilson Elementary School

By Erin A. Nash
Special to the Bayonet©

The Columbus Cottonmouths, a semi-professional hockey team, visited Wilson Elementary Oct. 30 to show students where hard work and dedication can take them in life.

The four Cottonmouths in attendance were Kevin Plager, Marcel "Magic" Richard, Trevor Jobe and Jerome "Boom Boom" Bechard.

Matt Musgrove, director of public relations for the Cottonmouths, talked to the students about the Cottonmouths schedule and how their own hard work got them where they are today.

He explained how a college degree is very important, even to play professional sports.

"It takes a lot of practice, a lot of serious dedication to be a professional player," he said. "Michael Jordan has his college degree. You have to stay on course and not do drugs."

Musgrove then chose a student, Donald Francis, to be dressed by the players in the gear they wear while practicing and for games.

They dressed him in socks, knee pads, shoulder pads, and a jersey and pants. Musgrove said the whole gear weighed approximately 25-30 pounds.

Students were then given the chance to ask the Cottonmouths questions. The questions ranged from "How many teeth have you lost and how many stitches have you gotten?" to "What does it feel like to get checked?"

Bechard obligingly removed three false teeth to the delight of the crowd. He was the only one who had lost teeth.

Bechard said how much he enjoys visiting schools.

"It's priceless to come out here and see how you don't have to do much to put a smile on a kid's face. It's amazing."

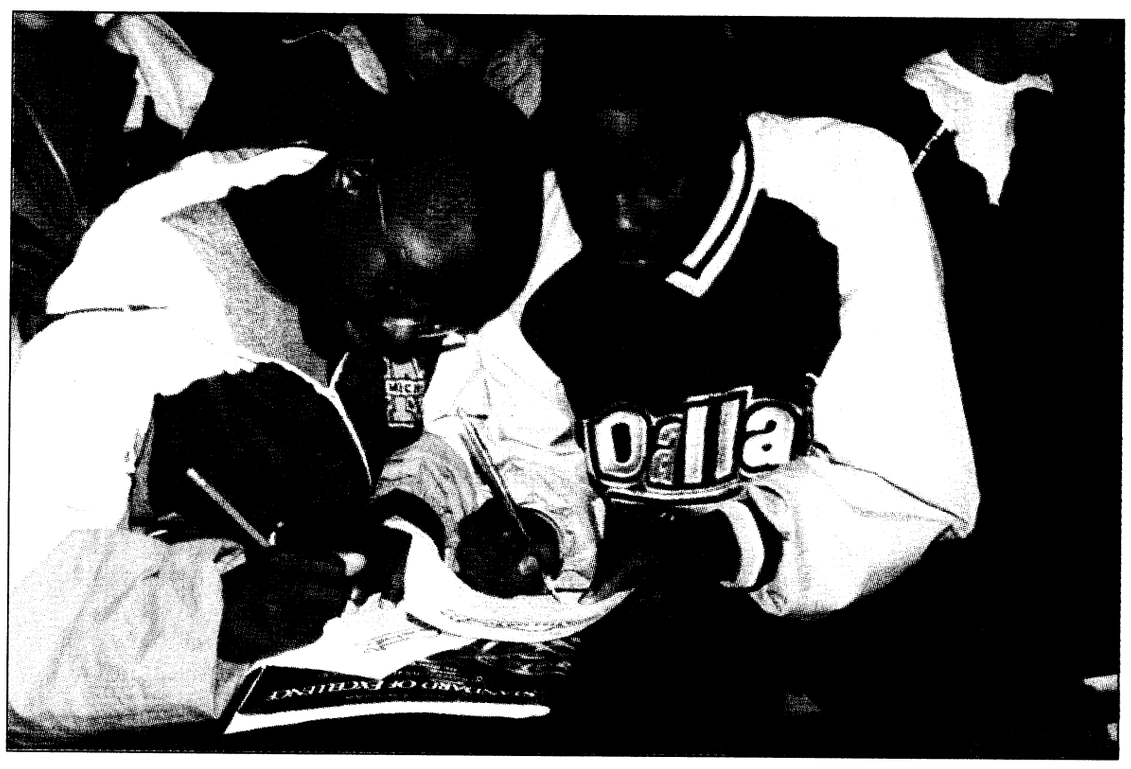
Post observes Red Ribbon Week

By Staff Sgt. Lori Egan
Bayonet editor

"Don't do drugs," a class of 12- and 13-year-olds shouted in unison during a drug awareness program at Faith Middle School Tuesday.

The drug abuse awareness program is part of the National Red Ribbon Week, which ended Oct. 31.

Sgt. 1st Class Darryel Johnson is the education officer, Alcohol Drug Control Office, Directorate of Community Activities. He spoke to six classes, warning them of the dangers of drug and alcohol addiction.



"In our society today most of the problems evolve from young people making bad choices and bad decisions," he said. "In a military environment, particularly these kids, they need to understand that they are not immune to the problems we face. Drugs are equally as accessible in a military environment as they are in the surrounding communities."

"Drugfree and proud" pledges were signed by the Faith Middle Schoolers, which were sent to the Commanding General.

After watching a video on drug use, the students and Johnson discussed the pitfalls of addiction, prevention and healthy lifestyles.

In a question and answer session students said drug and alcohol abuse could ruin minds and destroy bodies, cause poor performance in school, contribute to delinquency and crime, lower inhibitions and contribute to teenage pregnancy and contribute to suicide.

When talking about preventing drug and alcohol use, the children said laws, education, counseling and caring parents were instrumental in keeping children away from risky behavior.

James Poe, Headquarter and Headquarters Company, 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor Regiment, 3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division (Mechanized), sign drug free pledges Tuesday at Faith Middle School.

Red Ribbon Week evolved after federal agent Enrique Camarena underwent torture and murder by drug traffickers in 1985. The red ribbon became the symbol to reduce the demand for drugs and to stop the illegal use of drugs.

Col. Thomas J. Cain, provost marshall, and John Ulferts, assistant principal at Faith Middle School, spoke during the ceremony and Johnson set up a display table with red ribbons and other anti-drug items.

Pregnant women at risk for gum disease complications

Academy of General Dentistry

Pregnant women, already susceptible to developing red, irritated gums, or gingivitis, also have a five percent chance of getting pregnancy dental tumors — inflammatory, benign growths that develop when swollen gums become irritated. reports General Dentistry, the peer-reviewed, clinical journal of the Academy of General Dentistry.

Because of the higher level of estrogen and progesterone being produced during the last two trimesters, most women frequently experience increased plaque, oral sensitivity and suffer gum inflammation, because of elevated hormonal changes. This is also when the majority of pregnancy dental tumors appear on the patient's gums.

Ranging from several millimeters to several centimeters in size, pregnancy dental tumors cause discomfort, are sensitive when touched or brushed and frequently bleed on contact. When pregnancy dental tumors develop, dentists associate the common cause with poor oral hygiene, high hormone levels during pregnancy, a delay in seeking treatment and constant gum irritation.

Preventative measures and treatments for these tumors involve improving the patient's oral hygiene routine, placing the patient on a plaque control method, which will reduce gum irritation and diminish tumor development or removing the tumor.

Since pregnant patients are at higher risk for not only pregnancy dental tumors, but also increased oral sensitivity and inflammation of the gums, they are urged to visit the dentist more frequently to prevent such oral health problems.

Board: Gets feedback on Parent Academy match teaching styles, Einhorn said. The schools' technological thrust teaches children to think this way.

Einhorn informed the board about the school home partnership, "where parents take an active role in their children's education," she said.

Examples include parents spending the lunch hour with a student doing physical training or learning about verb tenses in English.

The idea is to involve the parent in the child's education. That way there are no surprises at report card time.

Parents taking a more active role in children's education was also a suggestion from the Education 2000 Team visit and symposium.

In the superintendent's report, Dr. Dell McMullen said the Education 2000 Team visit feedback was positive.

"Both Mrs. (Mary Jo) Reimer and Mrs. (Linda) Ernst made us very proud with their praise, specifically, caring and enthusiastic adults, warm school environments, well maintained facilities, strong academic programs and well-behaved children," McMullen said.

"The integration of technology is a primary goal this year as you can tell from Jerry Christy's presentation," she said.

McMullen told the board members of her plans to visit each of the schools in November to see how the schools are integrating technology. She would give the board feedback in January.

When speaking of the Parent Academy, which was Oct. 17-18, McMullen said it was a success based on feedback from the participants and her own observations. However, she was disappointed in the lack of participation by Fort Benning parents.

During the facilities update, she said Faith School moved into the new wing and the contract for the heating, ventilation and air conditioning (HVAC) was awarded. Work will begin Thanksgiving and be completed by school opening in August 1998. Also funded are designs for a playground at Loyd Elementary School, HVAC and roof at Stowers Elementary School, roof at Faith, renovation at Dexter and Wilson Elementary Schools and replacement windows at McBride Elementary School for a total expenditure of $.5 million.

Those who attended the board meeting were: Bingham, board president and Faith representative; Ann Voigt, Dexter representative, Sgt. Joe Todd, Loyd representative; Staff Sgt. Dennis McClung, McBride representative; Staff Sgt. Reba Raymond, Stowers representative; Col. R.O. Buck, White representative; 1st Sgt. Wesley Lee, Wilson representative; McMullen; Richard Skinner, assistant superintendent; Alice Skinner, director of Logistics and Support Services; Einhorn; Christy; Robbie Norris, labor relations specialist; Diane Hilt, vice president, Benning Education Association; Stephanie Davis, president, American Federation of Government Employees; and, Linda Hobby, administrative assistant.

Legal Assistance Division offers advice, answers questions

By Erin A. Nash
Special to the Bayonet©

Soldiers and family members seeking help for child support and marriage separation questions need not look any further. Help is available at the Fort Benning Legal Assistance Division, Office of the Staff Judge Advocate.

Supplying that help is Sabrina Randall, family support officer. Randall has been the family support officer for five years.

"It's fun. I like it." she said.

One of the two areas Randall works with is child support. It is her job to contact commanders when a Soldier doesn't meet his obligations with child support. She works hand in hand with child support enforcement agencies in every state.

Randall can help reduce a child support payment for a Soldier, for example one who might have previously held a higher paying job before entering the military and can no longer afford the payment. She can go back through the Child Support Enforcement Agency (CSEA) in that state to request a modification.

"I like when that happens because they're like really, really glad. They're like 'Oh my god, I finally have some money now.' So for them it works out well."

Randall said she has a very good rapport with the CSEA in Columbus. She said they never know when they might need help from one another.

The other area Randall deals with is marriage separation.

"I explain to them financially most of them can't afford it. They need to take into consideration they're living together and they're struggling anyway. The struggle is going to be that much more, probably more so for the Soldier than the spouse. The Soldier is drawing basic allowance for quarters for the spouse, so he can't live in the barracks, so where's he going to live?"

"It would be better financially if they sought counseling, maybe took a couple of days apart, go do something to try to get that old feeling back. I do explain to them that from a financial aspect they need to think about that because they're depriving their children, depriving themselves by doing it in such a way that no one wins."

Before scheduling an appointment with Randall, the spouse seeking a separation must attend a separation briefing given once weekly.

The briefing program was started this summer. Randall said it cuts down on the number of people she sees because it answers general questions.

"It gives them a broader picture so if they're still adamant about doing this after the briefing, then of course, they can."

Randall then guides them through the drawing up of the separation agreement, which details child support payments, visits for the noncustodial parent, debt payments, even retirement benefits.

Randall is only allowed to see the spouse who is obtaining the separation agreement. The other spouse has the right to accept or reject the agreement.

Divorces must be done in Columbus and the Office of the Staff Judge Advocate has a book of available of attorneys. They do not recommend any certain attorney.

Randall said she does what she can to help both the Soldier and the family member.

"It is limited to what I can do, but I will do what I can and get them some help if I can."

This week's article provides information on Veterans Day schedule changes and how you can help reduce poisonous chemicals in your home.

Veterans Day garbage collection schedule

There will be no refuse or recycle collection Tuesday. Those areas normally scheduled for Tuesday pick-up will be picked up Monday. Refuse and recycle normally scheduled for pick up on Monday, Wednesday, Thursday, or Friday will not be affected

Yard waste pick-up

There will be no yard waste pick up Monday. This service will resume normal schedule November 17.

Holiday Schedule for the Self Help (U-DO-IT) Center

In observance of Veterans Day, the Self Help Center Loan Equipment Section Venetian Blind and Shade Shop will be closed. The Self Help (U-DO-IT) Center will also be closed Monday, which is the normally scheduled off day. The center will reopen for business Tuesday at 8:30 a.m.

Do you have poisonous chemicals in your home or at work?

These chemicals can harm your health, kill wildlife and destroy valuable natural resources. The Environmental Management Division (EMD) of the Directorate of Public Works staff can assist in preventing chemicals from being released into the environment. The staff is in the process of implementing a Pollution Prevention Plan, which is expected to reduce the amount of hazardous waste by 50 percent before 1999. Currently, more than 300,000 pounds of hazardous waste are generated in a year. The ultimate goal is to reduce this number to zero. But residents need to help. Here are some hints that will help to achieve the goal, but most of all this will help the environment

•Buy only latex paints instead of oil-based. Oil-based paints are flammable and are regulated upon disposal. Latex paints are water-based, clean up easily and pose few hazards

•Buy only chemicals you need and no more. Too often, we buy more chemicals than we will ever use. In most cases, disposal of even a small quantity of these chemicals can cost hundreds of dollars

Approximately 85 percent of the hazardous waste that we dispose of is a result of purchasing more chemicals than we use.

•Avoid buying aerosol cans. They contain propellants that are flammable and contribute to air pollution. Instead, buy products with hand-pumps. If you do have chemicals that you can no longer use, don't put them in the closet. If someone else can use the product, give it to them. Otherwise, take the time to dispose of chemicals properly. If you have questions call your:

a. Unit and activities environmental coordinator or the DPW at 545-4766

b. Family Housing residents can call at 545-4766.

•Make sure that all containers are labeled properly and completely. At work sites, maintain a file of the material safety data sheets for all chemicals you use.

•Chemicals should be used for their intended purpose and used up completely. Never pour excess chemicals down the drain just because it is easier this is illegal.

•Keep containers closed. Keep them out of the reach of children. Remember open containers result in air pollution.

Listed below are some methods to reduce chemicals around the home:

•Replace glass cleaner with a mixture of one tablespoon of vinegar or lemon juice in one quart of water. Spray on and use newspaper to wipe dry.

•Replace mothballs with cedar chips, lavender flowers, rosemary, mint or white peppercorns

•Replace furniture polish with one teaspoon of lemon juice in one pint of mineral or vegetable oil.

•If you store a homemade mixture, make sure it is properly labeled and do not store in a container that could be mistaken for a food or beverage.

•When preparing alternatives, mix only what is needed for the job at hand and mix in a clean container.

AFTB teaches about Army life

Army Family Team Building

Have you ever wondered where to learn more about the role of a spouse in the Army community?

Now free multiphased skills training is taught through the Army Family Team Building (AFTB) Program.

This volunteer program is designed to teach spouses how to prepare for deployments and other day-to-day challenges that exists within the Army community.

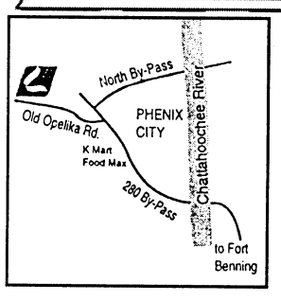
AFTB teachers are volunteers who have been specially trained.

They receive a specifically tailored job description and receive credit for their volunteer hours.

Through AFTB training, spouses receive the tools they need to function in any military life situation with minimal outside support.

"As a result of this training, personal and family readiness can improve and overall strengthen the quality of life and Army readiness within the Army family," said Mary Allen of the AFTB Program.

AFTB training consists of three levels: Level I courses are targeted toward people new to the Army or anyone interested in updating personal skills or basic knowledge.



Level II courses are targeted toward emerging leaders within the Army community.

Level III courses offer training to enhance the professional growth and leadership development opportunities of family members, especially those who might assume advisory and mentoring roles within the community and unit.

There is no charge for any of the courses or materials. To register for any AFTB course, call the AFTB office at 545-5377 or 545-2794 or Barbara Singleton at 689-7627.

Classes are given at the AFTB Building 2624, Soldiers Plaza.

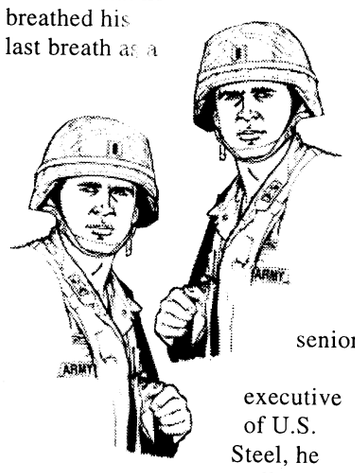
Soldier remembers, prays for veterans on Veterans Day

By Chaplain (Capt.) Garet Aldrige Jr.
1st Battalion, 30th Infantry Regiment

"Praise to the Lord my Rock, who trains my hands for war, my fingers for battle. He is my loving God and my fortress, stronghold and my deliverer, my shield in whom I take refuge who subdues peoples under me." Psalm 144: 1 - 2

Veterans Day is coming. For most of us, it will mean a day off to mow the lawn or to hit the latest sales down at the mall.



But, at least for me, this day means something. For me it is a day to remember my forebears.

For me, it is a day to be proud of all the men and women who have given their last full measure of devotion to insure the government of the people and by the people and for the people shall not perish from this earth. These are the veterans. I hope they make you proud too.

That was a very hard winter, I am told, at Valley Forge with George Washington. An ancestor of mine, Asa Waterman, was there. I expect that he had no idea what kind of country it was going to be. He did know that the tree of Liberty must occasionally be watered by the blood of patriots. But that's what it takes to make a veteran. It makes me proud.

Everybody said that this particular 4th of July in 1863 was unusually hot — as hot as anybody could remember. Whether the name was VanAntwerp fighting under the "Stars and Bars" at Vicksburg or Aldridge fighting under the same flag at Little Round Top or Plummer fighting under the "Stars and Stripes" on that same hill just south of that sleepy little Pennsylvania town, they were still veterans; still men who fought and died for what they believed. They make me proud: Rebel and Yankee alike. They are veterans.

Grandfather Plumb lost his arm at the Marne. He also got a face full of poison gas. Now there is no doubt that he could have whined that it was not fair and lived out his life as an invalid. But he was a warrior. At the moment that he breathed his last breath as a senior executive of U.S. Steel, he proudly wore his Purple Heart pin in his lapel. I have it now and tears come to my eyes as I turn it over in my hand. And, I also recall great-uncle Dan VanAntwerp whose African-American Soldiers so terrorized the defending Germans that one hysterical prisoner told him, "We shoot and shoot until they turn black in the face and still they come!" You see, they make me proud. They are veterans.

He is very old and very frail now, my father, but as a young man, he proved himself as a warrior. He fought his way across the 1940's; first against the U-boat menace in the Atlantic, and then the kamikaze in the Pacific. His mine squadron cleared Inchon Harbor. His tiny destroyer helped bring the world back from the edge of nuclear holocaust at Cuba. He tells me that he is nothing more than crab-bait, now. I know better. He is a veteran, and he makes me proud.

If you need me on the eleventh hour of the eleventh day of the eleventh month, I shall be on my knees in prayer and should not be disturbed. I shall be busy thanking my God above for all brave men and women who have stood between my land and those who would destroy it. I shall be busy thanking my precious Lord that as first, he made me a warrior; he has now recreated me to be a priest to warriors. And, as my beloved son picks up his heavy rucksack of responsibility that should be the duty of every person in a free society, I shall be praying that someday he too, will be brave enough and strong enough to earn the title of veteran. He has always made me proud before. I think he will make me proud again.

Office of the Staff Judge Advocate

A recent column dealt with strategies a young couple could use to be savvy consumers. The best consumer weapons are information and education.

This column offers information and sources of self-education for the savvy consumer available at no cost from various government agencies. Armed with information, it is often possible to avoid costly mistakes and fraudulent schemes.

The Office of Consumer Affairs publishes a comprehensive guide called the "Consumer's Resource Handbook."

This 125-page manual contains information all consumers can use, and is divided into parts for easy reference.

Part I is called "Buying Smart." It discusses tips on how to make the most of your money, how to complain about poor products or service, and even contains advice on writing a complaint letter. An important part of this section of the book is a series of articles about consumer topics, including automobiles, mail order, telemarketing, door to door sales, home financing, travel scams, product safety, and even nutritional labeling.

Part II of this manual is a "Consumer Assistance Directory." It lists names, addresses and telephone numbers of organizations that can assist you with particular consumer issues. Headings in this valuable resource include national consumer organizations, Better Business Bureaus, corporate consumer contacts, car manufacturers, trade associations, and directories for selected federal, state, and city agencies that can assist the consumer. Even the military commissary and exchange offices are listed there.

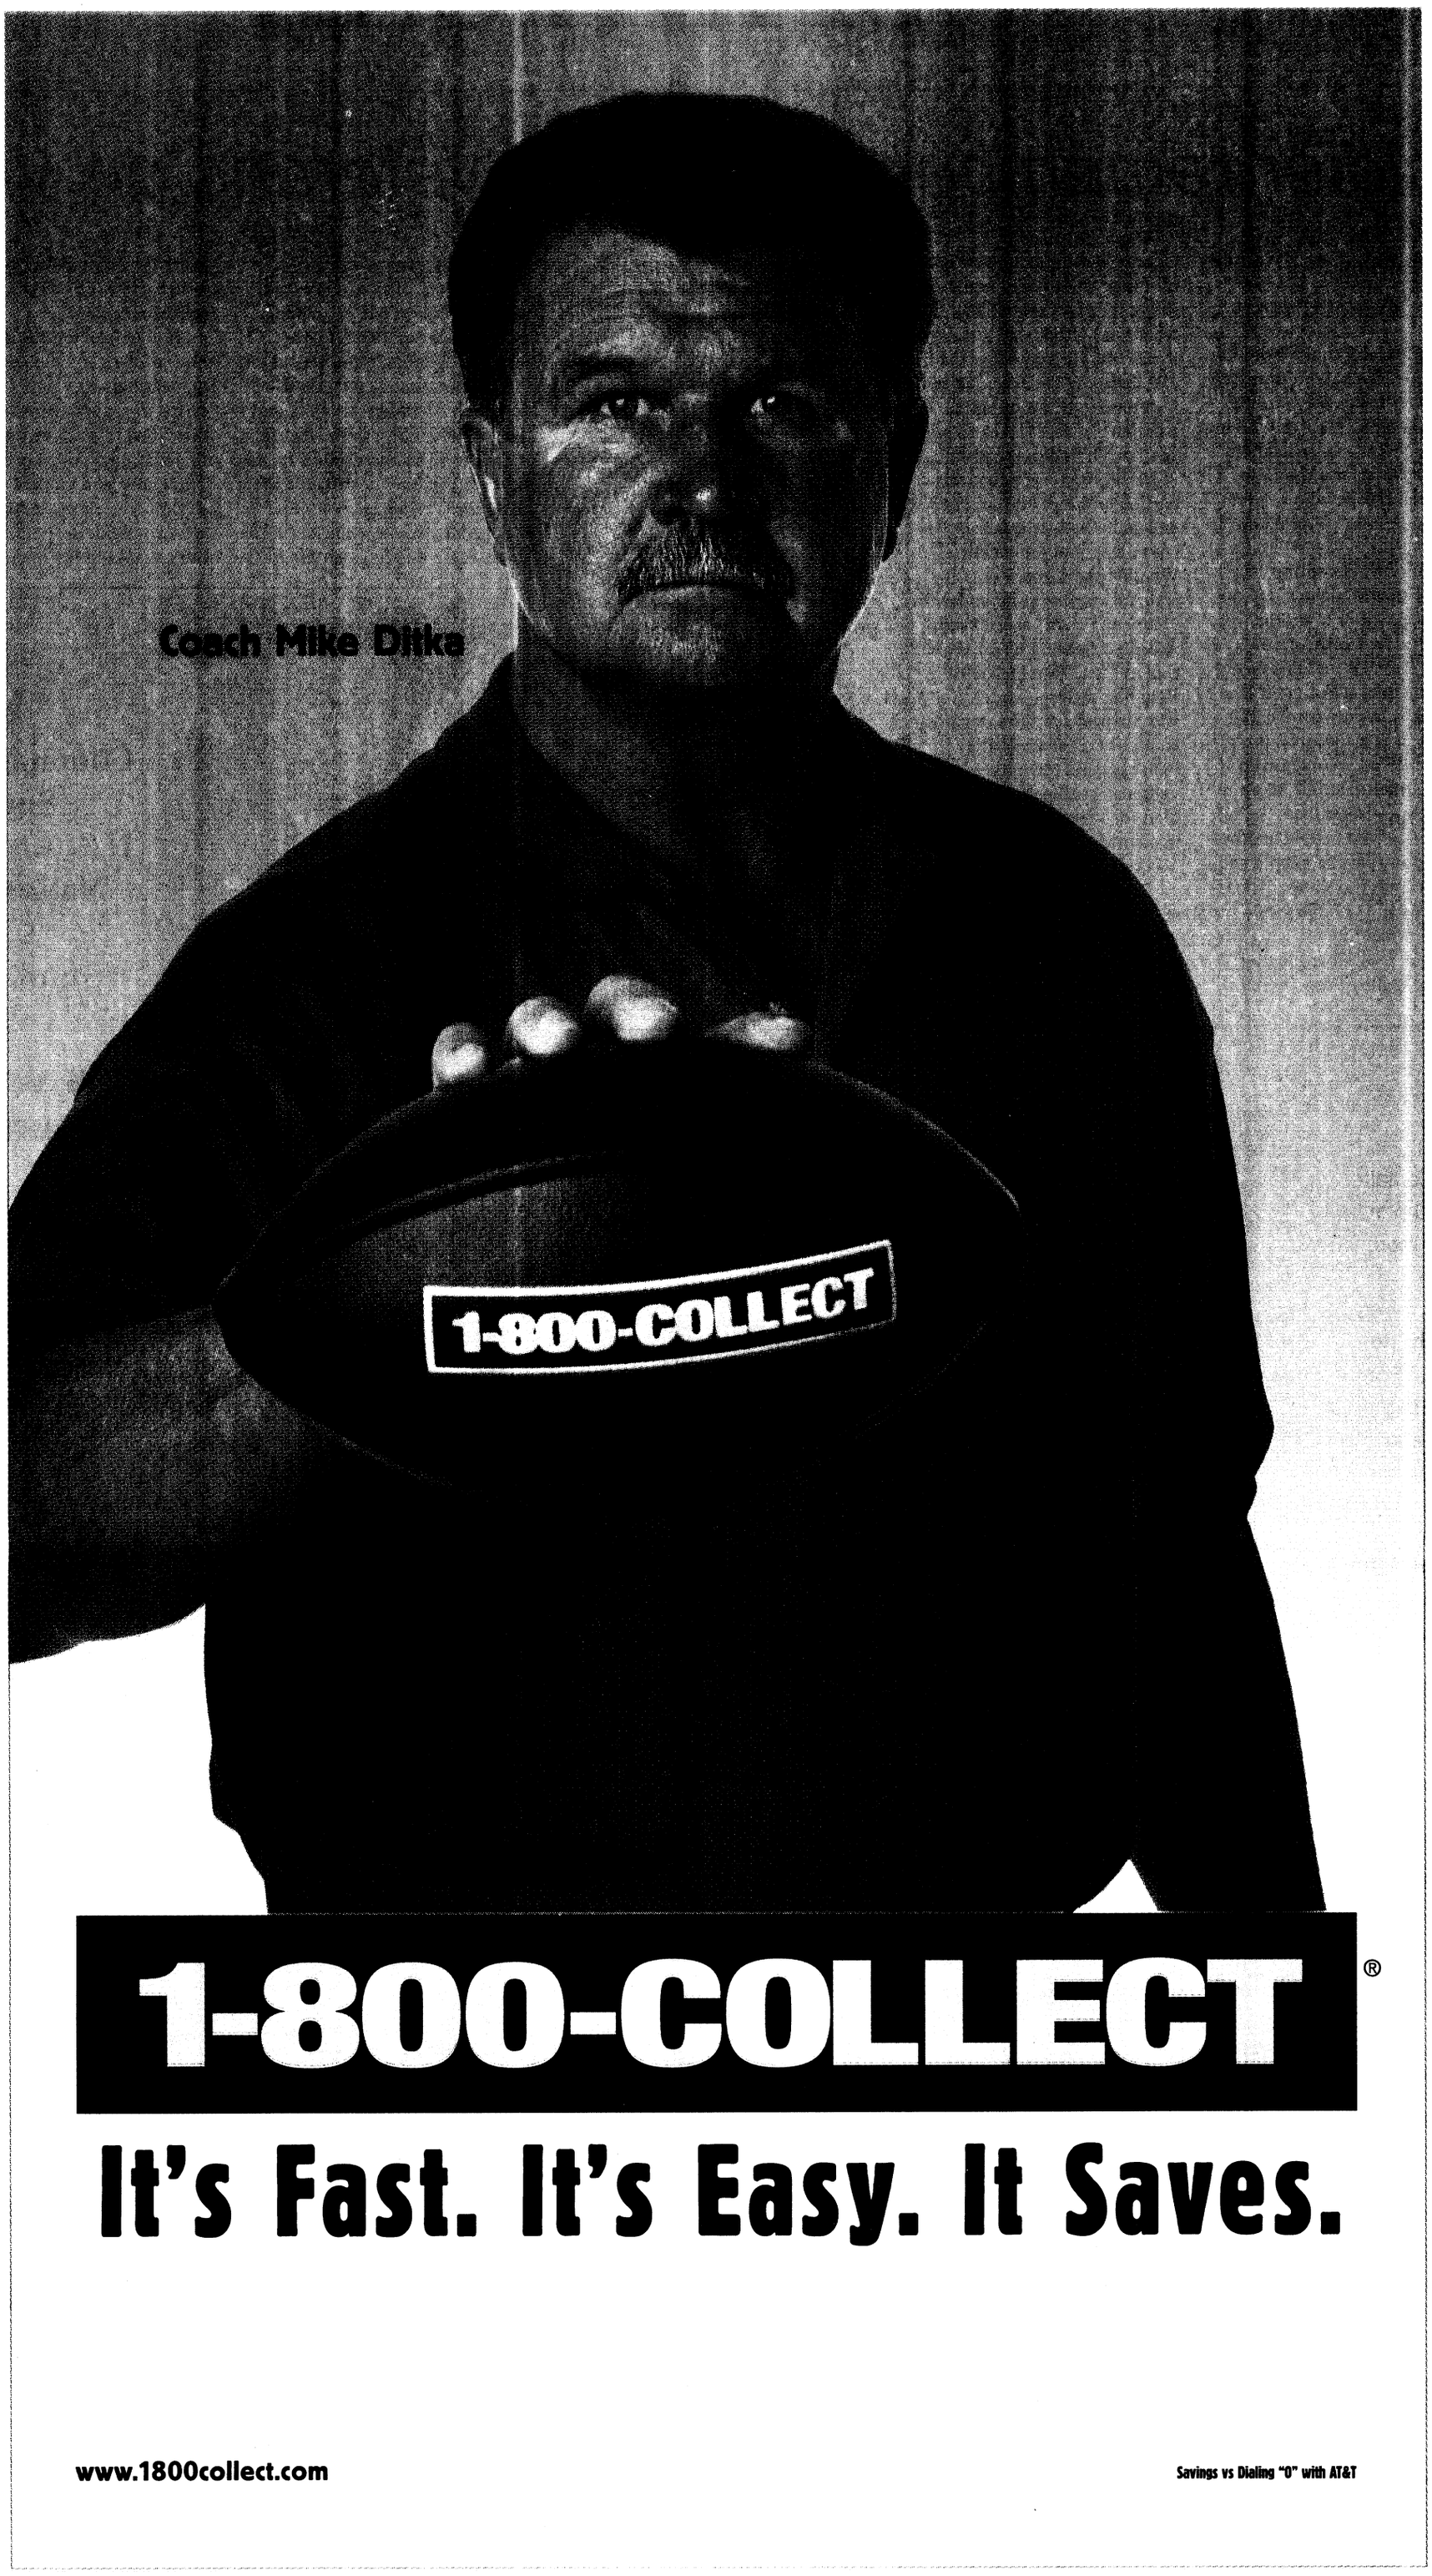
This publication is a must for any savvy consumer. It is free (one copy only) by writing to: Handbook, U.S. Office of Consumer Affairs, 750 17th Street, NW, Washington DC 20006.

More than 200 free or low-cost federal booklets are listed in the Consumer Information Catalog, a publication of the General Services Administration. It may be ordered by writing to: Catalog, Consumer Information Center, Pueblo CO 81009, or by calling (719) 948-4000.

Typically, the booklets offer brief and easy to understand advice about a number of consumer issues, including careers, financial planning, food and nutrition, health, small business and the environment.

Legal enforcement of federal consumer protection laws is largely within the jurisdiction of the Federal Trade Commission.

This agency also publishes a number of publications for consumers, on topics that overlap some of those in the Consumer's Resource Handbook.



A complete list of consumer publications from that agency is available free. For a copy of "Best Sellers," write: Public Reference, Federal Trade Commission, Washington DC 20580.

Finally, a wide variety of information is available in your local post library, and it will often include free use of the Internet to access sources of information.

Remember, no one can protect you like you can protect yourself. To paraphrase, "constant vigilance is the price of pay protection."

To discuss the legal aspects of this or other topics, contact the Legal Assistance Office, Building 5, at 545-3282 for an appointment.

Mean Machine defeats Eaters in SOA annual classic

By Spc. Alberto Betancourt
School of the Americas

After trailing most of the game, the Mean Machine, made up of students from the Command and General Staff Officer Course, mounted a second half comeback toppling the 0-3 Eaters of the U.S. Army School of America, 27-20 in the classic annual football game Oct. 30.

The Eaters, made up of SOA's staff and instructors won the toss and immediately Mark Burger, coach and quarterback, inspired his players with the team's goal, "Winning is everything."

Spc. Alberto Betancourt

Mean Machine quarterback Mark Burger rolls out looking to throw the ball during the 27-20 win over the Eaters.

Like gladiators fighting for honor, the Eaters marched through the stunned Mean Machine defense. The scoring drive ended with a 40-yard gallop by Burger for the early 6-0 lead.

Still mesmerized by the Eaters' offensive prowess, the Mean Machine stuttered momentarily on their first possession. But the confident Rod Peralta, quarterback for the team, scrambled out of the pocket and found a wide open Juan Arcocha deep for a long gain. Peralta kept the drive going, hitting Tom Desrosier and setting up a first and goal.

It seemed like the Eaters' red zone defense was going to hold the Mean Machine without scoring. With fourth and goal, Peralta scrambled left, then right and finally hit Roberto Andujar in the end zone for the touchdown. After the extra point, the Mean Machine led 7-6.

The Eaters came back through the air with Burger hitting Salvador Gomez and Valmore Lugo several times for long gains. However, the Mean Machine held them without a score.

A more confident Mean Machine offense began penetrating through the Eater's defense until Burger stepped in front of a Peralta pass for an interception. This set up a Burger to Lugo score. Burger connected with Gomez for the two point conversion regaining the lead 14-7

With the momentum going their way, the Eaters applied the defensive pressure downs, causing the Mean Machine's offense to stutter and

Army News Service

ALEXANDRIA, Va. — The Army's Tuffield (Tuffy) Latour along with civilian brakeman Randy Jones, finished in second place in the first of two qualifying bobsled races in Park City, Utah. Latour, a native of Schenectady, NY, finished 8th in World Cup standings last year.

Four-man competition took place Oct. 28 and 29. Latour, assigned to Vermont National guard, is a member of the Army World Class Athlete Program.

Other Army World Class Athlete Personnel competing in this competition are driver Bill Tavares (two-man) currently in 7th place; (brakemen) Darrin Steele, Dan Steele and Garret Hines. Hines, who pushes for No. one driver, (civilian) Brian Shimer, drew a bye for these trials. The others will push in the four-man competition.

Wrestlers win at championships

Army News Service

ALEXANDRIA, Va. — Five Soldiers brought home gold, silver and bronze medals, helping to clinch the Armed Forces Wrestling team championship at the Sunkist International Wrestling Championships in Phoenix, Ariz., Oct. 24-26.

Team coach Anatonly Nazarenko said his team wrestled well. The host Sunkist team placed second and the New York Athletic Club was third behind the Armed Forces team.

Other Army members who placed were: Anthony Wilkes, 4th, (54 kilos); Dave Nieradka, 4th, (63 kilos); Edward Mitchell, 4th, (heavy weight); and Kenneth Owens, 6th, (85 kilos).

cough up the ball.

It wasn't any better for the Eaters' offense who also gave up the ball

Peralta refused to go down without a fight, hitting Andujar long to set up excellent position for the Mean Machine. On fourth down, Peralta hit Juan Arcocha, who valiantly leaped in front of several defensive players and caught the ball inches from the goal line where the Eaters took over.

On the first play the center muffled the hike into the end zone giving the Mean Machine a safety and ending the first half with the Eaters leading 14-9.

The Mean Machine opened the second half plagued with mistakes allowing the Eaters control of the ball and another score extending their lead 20-9.

Peralta couldn't find his rhythm giving up two more interceptions. The Eaters didn't capitalize from the mistakes.

This gave the Mean Machine the opportunity they hungered for the entire game.

Burger's first pass went for an interception setting up a Mean Machine score. With the two point conversion they trailed 20-17.

After the wake-up call, Burger led the Eaters down the field with several screen passes and good runs but failed to score.

Peralta quickly hit Arcocha for a long gain, then hit Desrosier in the flat for a score. With the extra point good, the Mean Machine regained the lead 24-20.

Both teams' defenses slowed down and played outstanding football late in the game, not allowing either side's offense to get back on track.

However, it was the Mean Machine's offense who pushed a little harder setting up a 25-yard field goal attempt by Carlos Fiordelmondo, which spread the uprights taking control of the lead 27-20.

As time ticked off the clock, the desperate Eaters saw their first half lead slip into the sunset allowing the Mean Machine a courageous 27-20 comeback victory.

"Winning isn't everything — brotherhood is everything," said Arcocha, celebrating with his teammates as they took a victory lap around Doughboy Stadium's track. "We're a team made up of players from 13 countries who came together and played their hearts out. That's what it's all about."

Experts offer advice for choosing handguns

Feature Outdoors

With a growing number of states adopting legislation that allows citizens to carry concealed weapons, more people are enrolling in firearm training and safety classes.

While the crime prevention benefits of concealed carry permits is widely debated, one fact is clear: more people than ever before now know how to safely handle firearms and they have discovered the sport of recreational shooting.

Selecting a handgun that's right for you, whether it's for personal protection or to take to the range on weekends, requires some time and consideration.

Experts suggest you consider these basic questions before visiting a dealer:

•What is the primary intended use of the handgun? For personal protection and concealed carry? Home security and an occasional trip to the local range? Small or large game hunting?

•What type of handgun are you most comfortable with? Revolvers have long been a popular choice with recreational shooters because they are simple to operate, highly reliable and relatively inexpensive. Pistols gained acceptance as law enforcement agencies transitioned from revolvers to pistols and recreational shooters followed suit, discovering along the way that quality, crafted pistols are reliable and fun to shoot.

•What is the best caliber?

The caliber or diameter of the bullet should fit your primary intended use. Recreational shooters who will be putting a lot of rounds down range should consider ammunition cost and availability of reloading components. Hunters will want to match the caliber to the game they intend to pursue.

Ammunition manufacturers have developed defense rounds for most popular handgun calibers and your local dealer should be able to recommend several options to fit your need. One of America's favorite calibers is the venerable .45 ACP. This rugged yet affordable pistol packs a lot of value into a compact package.

Regardless of the type or caliber of gun you choose, experts recommend that you:

•Deal with a knowledgeable, reputable retailer.

•Purchase a high-quality handgun that is backed by a lifetime service policy to ensure years of safe, reliable service.

•Enroll in a certified handgun safety course.

•Familiarize yourself with applicable local and state laws.

•Store your handgun securely and secure the ammunition separately.

Georgia has a concealed carry law; however, Fort Benning is a federal installation and does not honor the concealed carry permit.

For more information on the concealed carry law, contact the local police.

Successful anglers start with area search

By David Hegel and Steve Price

Johnson® & Evenrude® Outboards

When professional bass tournament angler Guy Eaker looks for bass, he first looks for a place those bass might be, a spot he calls a "confidence area."

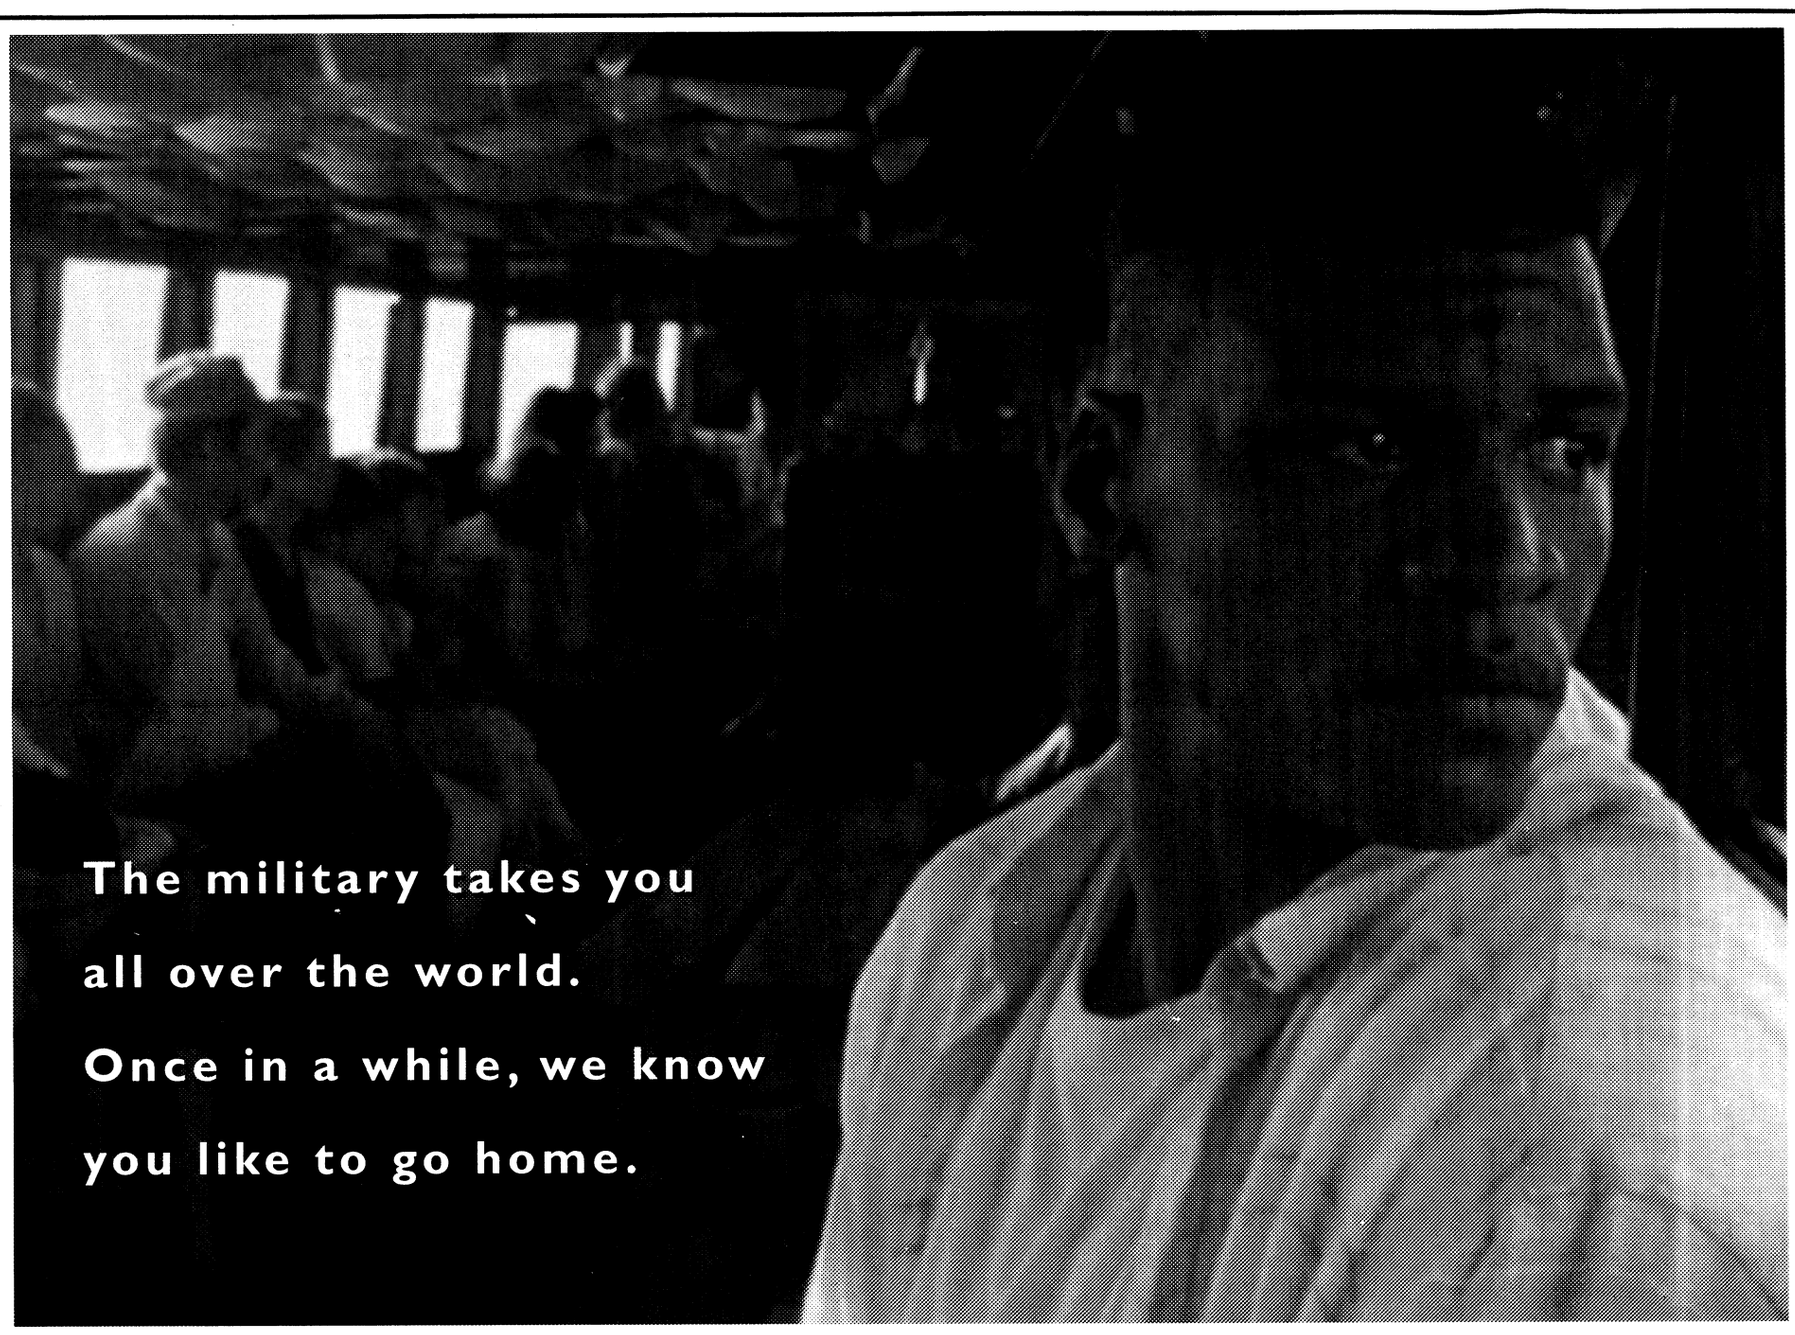
"When we're practicing for a tournament and looking for bass, we don't have time to cover the entire 75,000 or even 100,000 acres of the lake," explained Eaker, a veteran competitor.

"Instead, we look for a small part of the lake that has all the right ingredients that we personally want to fish.

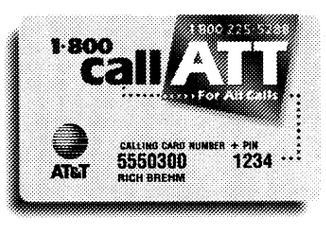
"That's our 'confidence area,' and it may be where we spend the entire tournament. It might be an entire tributary creek or perhaps only a small portion of the tributary, but basically it has everything the rest of the lake has, only it's contained in a much smaller area."

Eaker begins his confidence area search by first studying a good lake map. A detailed map will show stump fields, flooded timber, the shoreline configuration, underwater humps and roadbeds, and of course, depth variations. Eaker likes maps that have a contour interval of five feet because they show the most detail.

"Three of the main things I think about when I'm searching for a confidence area are water clarity, vegetation, and the lake's history of producing fish," the pro said. "On a clear water lake, for example, I'll search the far upper end because that water will more off-color so the bass will be more shallow.



"If the lake is filled with vegetation, then I have to look for something different within the vegetation itself. This might be stumps, a creek channel, or major lake points.



"Finally, I pay close attention to the quality of the fishery itself. If the lake has a history of producing low catches, then I'll look for an area that has the heaviest cover available, because that area will be the most attractive to bass. If the lake produces a lot of bass, then I'll investigate the spots where those bass historically come from."

Another thing Eaker does when searching for a confidence area is look for a place that allows him to use his favorite lure, a spinnerbait. This is important because of the confidence he has in the lure.

"As tournament fishing becomes more competitive, I think it's important to at least consider choosing an area that allows me to fish the way I want to fish," Eaker said. "I think I perform better if I'm fishing water with my favorite lure or technique."

After marking prospective areas on his map, Eaker then locates them by boat on the water and starts fishing. Some, of course, get eliminated, but others produce enough fish to become true confidence areas, and if they don't, they at least show him the type of water he can look for to find another spot just like it.

Try To Buy Beer. Underage? Lose License. Hard To Look Cool On A Date...

...Hitching A Ride From Dad.

A new law in Georgia prohibits minors under the age of 21 from trying to buy alcohol. That's right. Even attempting to buy beer could cause you to lose your driver's license for six months. Is it worth the risk? If you're underage, don't try it. Or you could be hitching a ride from Dad.

Georgia House Bill 250 Was Passed Into Law In 1997.

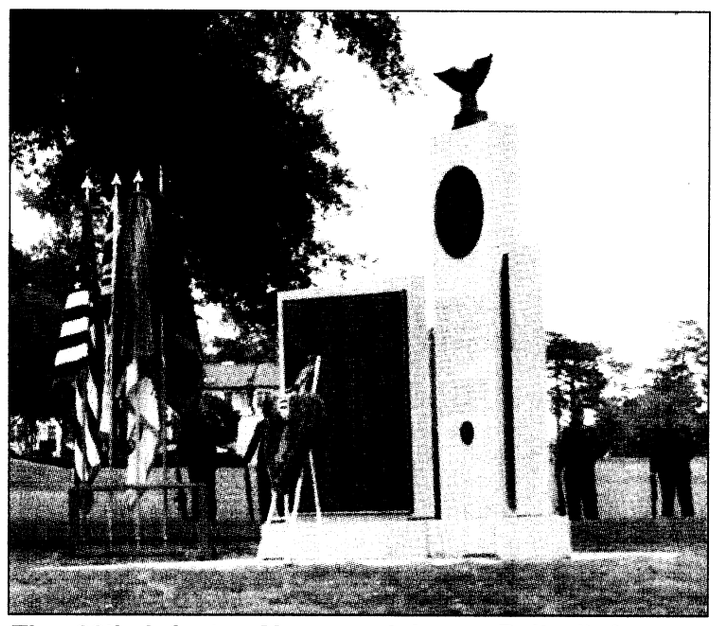
Veterans from the 66th Infantry Division received the recognition they were denied 53 years ago Nov. 7 on Sacrifice Field. There, veteran Vincent Codianni finally realized his dream of having a monument erected for the 802 Soldiers who died Dec. 24, 1944.

The S.S. Leopoldville, named for a city in the Belgian Congo, was crossing the English Channel when it was torpedoed by a German U-boat. More than 800 Soldiers, most between 18 and 20 years old, died and 493 Soldiers were never found.

Col. Lawrence K. White Jr., chief of staff of the U.S. Army Infantry Center, accepted the monument for the post.

"Sacrifice Field is the ideal place for this monument, where Soldiers old and brand new come to recognize the commitment and sacrifice of those who have gone before us."



White also said how the mission was classified as secret and therefore never publicized.

"We weren't there and were it not for those of you here present, we would not know what happened."

White then related the story about Codianni, president of the Leopoldville Memorial Association.

"Vincent Codianni was on board that night. 'The ship was almost gone and I walked right off the boat. The water was up to my waist and I was swimming like hell. I didn't get very far, however.' Within seconds of his escape, the ship

Craft bazaar fund raiser set for Saturday

By Erin A. Nash
Special to the Bayonet©

The Officer's Wives Club (OWC) craft bazaar will be this Saturday. It is the only fund raiser this year held by the OWC.

All proceeds from the bazaar will go to the general welfare and scholarship fund.

Proceeds include the $1 donation at the door and the tables rented by crafters, either $30 for a single booth or $45 for a double booth. All sales of the crafts goes to the crafter.

"Twice a year, organizations from the tricounty area submit requests to the OWC for needs not met through the Army," said Brenda Barger, a member of OWC.

These include the Girl Scouts, Boy Scouts, Valley Rescue Mission, women's shelters, Santa's Castle, Martin Army Community Hospital, Patch Preschool and the Red Cross.

"This money is used to purchase items such as books, decorations and playground equipment," Barger said.

OWC also regularly donates funds to the Army Community Services food locker.

Besides donations, the OWC awards merit scholarships to graduating high school seniors, graduate students and military wives going back to college.

According to Barger, OWC gives between six and 15 scholarships, decided upon by a scholarship committee for up

SOA Watch protest continues

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Protesters who want to see the School of Americas (SOA) closed are once again lined up at Fort Benning's front gate singing, chanting and disrupting traffic.

Known as SOA Watch, this group, whose members are almost all from out of town, is here to protest the killing of six Jesuits and two women co-workers in El Salvador nearly a decade ago by El Salvadoran soldiers, some of whom were SOA graduates.

This is the same group of people who vandalized the SOA building seven years ago by throwing blood on the building's walls and who recently pried letters off the Fort Benning welcome sign doing $4,500 in damages.

The protectors have signatures of people they claim support their position that SOA should be closed.

They plan to march onto Fort Benning sometime Sunday afternoon carrying coffins with the signatures inside.

If they do so, they will be committing a civil act of disobedience because Fort Benning is not a public forum for political debate or political protests.

In the interests in the safety of Fort Benning's Soldiers, family members and civilians, as well as the protectors themselves, certain roads to post are blocked off to prevent unnecessary and perhaps dangerous congestion.

The impact will be mainly around the SOA headquarters and drivers who would normally use Benning Blvd. to leave post or to return to post, should use I-185.

Soldiers and others are also discouraged from taunting or heckling the protectors, according to Col. Lawrence K. White Jr., Fort Benning chief of staff. White said that as long as the protectors abide by the permit issued by the City of Columbus, and stay on the Columbus side of Benning Boulevard, they have every right to carry out their protests.

"Leave the protectors alone," he said. "As long as they abide by the specifics of their permit to demonstrate of post, they are exercising their legal right to do so. If they decide to come on post, that's another matter. But let the authorities on post handle that if it happens. Just leave them alone."

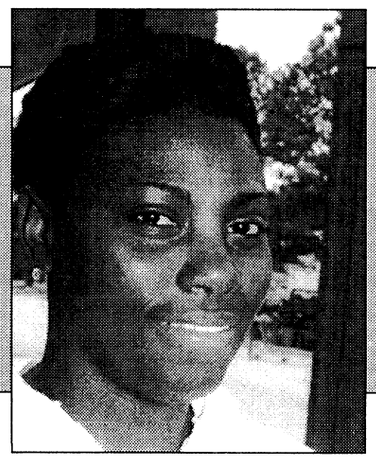
CFC kicks into overdrive

By Erin A. Nash
Special to the Bayonet©

The Combined Federal Campaign (CFC) is in its last week and Soldiers are urged to donate to the campaign.

Chuck Walls, garrison manager, said the $500,000 goal is attainable, but will take a lot of work in the next week.

"My goal is to go out and shake the tree. There are probably some Soldiers who either haven't been approached or in fact may have been noncommittal the first time, and it's okay to go back to them and say, 'Would you reconsider?'"



Walls said that a lot of Soldiers have no idea what they're actually giving to. Walls emphasizes codes 9000 and 9001. Code 9000 supports the Columbus area, such as Salvation Army and battered women's

The Bayonet: Long hours, staff shortages lead to help wanted

By Staff Sgt. Lori Egan
Bayonet editor

commentary

I'm the editor of The Bayonet and I like my job. The reasons why I like my job are many.

I like hard work. Working for a newspaper with a small staff means just that — hard work.

The Bayonet on average contains more than 26,000 words, which should make up comprehensive and understandable stories of interest to the many different audiences on Fort Benning.

Often times articles that run in The Bayonet are submitted by stringers, people who want to highlight their unit or activity — to publicize upcoming events or to inform readers of a new way to train for gunnery qualifications.

I love it when we get articles from people who are excited about the information they are putting in The Bayonet.

One of my jobs as editor is to put these stories into "newspaperese."

This means local style, and yes, The Bayonet has a consistent, week-to-week style, regardless of the vicious rumors to the contrary spread by a person who shall remain nameless, but his initials are M.G.T. and he works in this office.

As editor of The Bayonet, I am responsible for ensuring command information is released in a timely, coherent and visually pleasing manner — The Bayonet. (In case I need help with this mission, the public affairs officer and deputy PAO offer guidance.)

Staff Sgt. Lori Egan is the editor of The Bayonet and loves to work hard.

To do this, I work long hours. My neighbor told me she thought public affairs was a sham job. She was going to encourage her niece to enlist for a public affairs job until she actually tallied up the hours I work.

I am not alone in working long hours — the entire Public Affairs Office is understaffed. This kind of surprises me because the Army really needs to tell its good news stories in light of all the negative ones we see on television and read in the papers.

When I arrived at Fort Benning and started to work at The Bayonet in June, 1995, I was one of six Soldiers, one civilian editor and three contract writers who worked 40 plus hours a week to publish the Bayonet.

Today I am one of three Soldiers and two contract writers who work who-knows-how-many hours to make sure The Bayonet is on the front step or in the front yard of every house on Fort Benning and other distribution points every Friday morning.

Of the Soldiers I included as part of the staff, is Sgt. 1st Class Larry Lane, Public Affairs NCOIC. So in addition to doing his job, he also contributes weekly to The Bayonet by writing movie reviews, covering stories and building pages.

The other Soldier, besides myself and Lane, is Sgt. Marc G. Turchin, the assistant editor. In addition to working for the paper — writing stories, taking great pictures and page building, he is the NCOIC of the television and radio section of Command Information. (Another office that is unstaffed at the moment.)

So I'm the only actual full-time Bayonet Soldier, meaning my primary job is making sure The Bayonet meets all of its deadlines.

When I first arrived at Fort Benning, I was one of seven staff writers. I wrote a lot of different stories.

My very first assignment was to interview a man who worked for the Directorate of Public Works for a very, very long time and was retiring. I showed up at the interview nervous and excited. He declined to be interviewed — a last minute change of heart. Yikes! I knew the editor was going to fire me immediately when she heard about my inability to conduct an interview. (She didn't.)

My second stab at an interview outside the confines of the Defense Information School was with Master Sgt. Eddie Cosby, then NCOIC of Law Enforcement, U.S. Army Infantry Center Military Police Company about enforcing the loud music policy on Fort Benning.

He didn't want to be interviewed either. I was doomed. I begged and pleaded as only a newbie would do, but I got the story.

That is another perk of this job. I am a fountain of information about the USAIC policies and regulations that govern the post.

Another reason why I like my job is I love to cover stories about how we, Soldiers and civilians, teachers and students, Fort Benning policy makers, make a positive difference in each others' lives. I get to do that.

Most recently I listened to the Commanding General address the Faith Middle School student body.

He didn't have to go and talk to a bunch of middle-schoolers, but he did because he wanted to tell them he was proud of the jobs their parents do on Fort Benning.

Another thing he told the student body was to take responsibility for their actions', that life is about making choices.

I think it's neat that he took time out of his day to talk to the students and I get to inform Fort Benning about it.

But in spite of the hard work and long hours I put in to make sure the public affairs side of the house is ready by the Thursday noon deadline, is the fact that I get to go home every night and read a bedtime story to my five-year old.

So I have the best of both worlds — a challenging job that keeps me really busy and a daughter to remind me of what is really important in the giant scheme of things.

545-BOSS

Dial 545-Boss is the commander's action line for Soldiers, family members and civilians to call when they have problems or complaints that can't be resolved elsewhere.

While it is not a substitute for the chain of command or for agencies established to provide assistance, the line offers another means of communication between Fort Benning's community and commanders.

The Bayonet features some of the calls that may benefit other members of the Fort Benning community.

Call: The caller suggests a sidewalk be built on Marne Road from the hospital to connect somehow with 10th Mountain Division Road because runners are running along that road and it is dangerous. She said it will also provide a place for people to walk and ride their bikes.

Directorate of Public Works response: The caller was advised that the road construction of a sidewalk or jogging path along Marne Road from First Calvary Division Road (entrance to Bouton Heights subdivison) to link up with existing "riverwalk" trail at 10th Division Road is included in the existing Fort Benning Outdoor Recreation Plan (ORP).

The caller was informed the ORP will be modified to extend it from First Calvary Division Road to Martin Army Community Hospital.

All major Army Family Housing Improvement projects, when submitted to Congress for funding, include in their scope of work either the expansion of or tie-in to the existing trail system as well as the construction of new sidewalks as needed.

Call: The caller said the hunter board at Buena Vista Road is never posted by 9 a.m. with information for hunting areas to use the next day, as it is supposed to be.

Directorate of Operations and Training response: Beginning Oct. 13, Range Division began to publish and distribute the hunting and fishing information two days prior. This enables the timely posting of hunting and fishing information. The DPW is working on a revision of USAIC-Reg 210-2 for the current hunting and fishing season. The hour for open area posting will change from 9 a.m. to noon, allowing agencies involved to complete their assignments. This will give hunters ample time to plan next day activities.

Call: The caller said he had a scheduled appointment in the Podiatry Clinic, Martin Army Community Hospital (MACH), and was not seen for two hours.

Podiatry Clinic, MACH response: The Podiatry Clinic often receives urgent walk-in patients from training sites such as Fryar Drop Zone. When this occurs, patients with scheduled appointments often must wait. This is unfortunate, but unavoidable. A sign will be posted that directs patients to check in with the clinic clerk whenever they have waited more than 30 minutes.

This will give the patient an opportunity to decide to either wait or reschedule. In addition, the clinic appointments template will be modified to help prevent patient overflow situations. Continuous quality improvement will keep these situations at a minimum.

Veterans insurance hoax, scam resurfaces on Internet

Army News Service

WASHINGTON — False information sent via letter or appearing on the Internet promising dividend payments is causing confusion among people who have veterans' insurance policies.

These announcements, which declare that Congress has recently passed a bill entitling veterans and service persons to a dividend based upon their prior years of service, is part of a recurring problem of misinformation that dates back to 1965.

Unfortunately, this misinformation unnecessarily raises the expectations of veterans and service personnel and detracts from Veterans Affairs' and DFAS's ability to service customers.

For example, a letter was recently found circulating at DFAS's Honolulu Operating Location that has to do with a dividend on Servicemembers' Group Life Insurance.

The letter asks the reader, a military veteran, to send a copy of his or her DD214 form, an official record of military service, to the Veteran's Center in Philadelphia to apply for the dividend. The letter is a hoax.

The Department of Veterans Affairs office in Honolulu confirms they have no such offer of an SGLI dividend.

Do not respond to this offer. Personal information on the DD214 form, like social security numbers and addresses, could be used to obtain personal records such as bank accounts, etc.

The dividend "hoax" has its origins in a special dividend that the Department of Veterans Affairs, then known as the Veterans Administration, did pay to World War II veterans who had National Service Life Insurance policies. Approximately $2.7 billion was paid in 1950 to more than 16 million of these veterans under the "1948 special dividend."

In 1965, the special dividend news announcements of 15 years earlier resurfaced and were mistakenly published by several newspapers. The special dividend had already been paid out to virtually all eligible government life insurance policyholders and there was no new special dividend. VA moved quickly to educate the news media, but some well-meaning individuals and organizations began to publish the announcements in smaller publications, newsletters, and flyers.

The actual scope of the original dividend became fictionalized and some publications declared the dividend available to all veterans (not just World War II) and even to those who never carried government life insurance while in the service.

The latest rumor is that active service persons, reservists and personnel separated within the last few years, are eligible. The 1948 special dividend program required veterans to apply for the payment.

Over the years the dividend story has prompted hundreds of thousands of veterans to write and "apply" for this benefit. Although the amount of letters has fluctuated, the VA has received as many as 15-20,000 inquiries per week about this dividend in the past.

Because of the volume of these requests for a nonexistent benefit, Congress passed a law in 1970 that prohibited payment of any special dividend declared prior to 1952 unless the application was received before 1954. There has been no recent legislation authorizing any "special" dividends.

Dividends are not payable to current service members insured under Serviceman's Group Life Insurance or Veterans' Group Life Insurance.

SGLI and VGLI are group policies and therefore, do not pay dividends. For your information, VA continues to pay routine dividends on several policy series, but only to veterans who have kept their policies in force. These veterans receive their dividends automatically on the anniversary date of their individual policy. They do not have to apply.

Veterans are also being instructed by mimeographed fliers or articles in locally-distributed publications to apply for SGLI dividends, even on lapsed policies. The fliers did not originate with the VA and do not reflect VA policies. The VA does not pay dividends on lapsed SGLI policies. VA's actual policy on SGLI dividends is described below:

Dividend payments are automatic to those veterans who have participating policies and who continue to pay premiums. The dividend is usually paid on the anniversary date of the policy and no application is needed.

Some recent versions of the hoax have included offers to assist veterans in obtaining the "dividend" for a small fee.

Since there is no such dividend, veterans should not give any money to individuals who make this offer. Those approached with such an offer should immediately report it to Veterans Affairs Office of the Inspector General, providing all available information, such as name, address, and telephone number.

Although the insurance hoax is not generally accompanied by the offer to obtain the dividend for a fee, it is still harmful because it unnecessarily raises the hopes of individuals who could use the money. Furthermore, various sections of the VA have to expend valuable resources in responding to individuals who follow the instructions on the hoax flier in an attempt to collect what they believe is a legitimate dividend.

Walls also pointed out there is a booklet containing approximately 500 other charities, such as diabetes, AIDS, etc.

Soldiers who have not yet given can see their keyperson, or their chain of command. Their keyperson will have the booklet of the different charities.

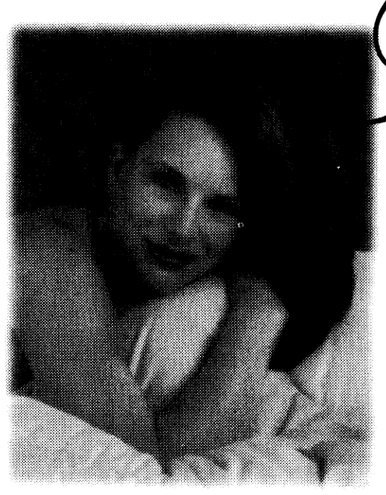
Additionally Soldiers can compete and win a Green-to-Gold scholarship worth up to $51,200.

If the winners choose Embry-Riddle or Stetson Universities, room and board scholarships worth between $4,000-$5,000 a year are also available. The grand total is between $17,000-$20,000 a year.

College credits aren't required for Soldiers who wish to apply for a four-year scholarship at Embry-Riddle or Stetson Universities. Other universities' Green to Gold Scholarships require at least one year (30 semester hours) of college

The Green to Gold scholarship program runs from January to March, 1998.

Applications for a two-, three-, or four-year scholarship are based on the number of semester hours you have now.



Soldiers with less than two years of college and competing for a three or four-year scholarship should take the SAT or ACT as soon as possible.

The SAT or ACT is required for acceptance into most universities, unless the Soldier is applying as a transfer student.

Soldiers learn about leadership at PLDC

By Sgt. Marc G. Turchin
Bayonet assistant editor

A classroom filled with Soldiers sitting behind desks is alive with chatter. The Soldiers sit behind desks surrounding two chairs. Two Soldiers sit down in the chairs and the room's noise settles to a hush.

"I've noticed some problems in your work ethic lately Johnson," one Soldier says. "Really, Sarge," the other Soldier rattles off in a sarcastic tone.

"What seems to be the problem?" asks the first Soldier. "Why do you care, Sarge? All you worry about is yourself," says the second Soldier.

The instructor interrupts the conversation and asks the class what type of attitude the second Soldier is displaying?

A conversation begins among the students and different ways of handling the problem are brought up for discussion.

This role-playing is used to test future squad leaders and team leaders to see how they will handle a variety of situations as part of the Primary Leadership Development Course (PLDC) at Fort Benning, Ga.

This leadership course allows students to test and hone their leadership skills. At PLDC, Soldiers can make mistakes and learn the correct way to lead before returning to their units.

"What the school does is give a Soldier a foundation," said Command Sgt. Maj. Willie G. Wells, commandant of the Henry Caro NCO Academy at Fort Benning, Ga. "We try to teach the students how the Army should operate by the book," Wells said.

Teaching the students "by the book" is left to the responsibility of Branch Chief, 1st Sgt. Alvin Woodard Jr., and a handful of chosen NCOs.

"They need to come to a school like this because they get 30 days away from their unit and can concentrate on learning with no distractions. I think that's what makes us successful," Woodard said.

What he and his cadre teach the students are the fundamentals of leadership, Woodard said. These fundamentals range from drill and ceremony and physical training instruction, to how to solve everyday Soldiers' problems.

"The biggest thing is to build confidence," Woodard said. "This is the place where they can make mistakes and we correct them."

The four-week course is broken down into two, two-week phases. The first two weeks is the garrison phase. During this phase, students take classes in such subjects as counseling, map reading, maintenance checks and supply.

The last two weeks is the field phase which begins with land navigation and ends with a four-day field training exercise.

To graduate, students must pass a physical fitness test, three written tests with a grade of 70 or higher, successfully give a physical training block of instruction, navigate students through several drill and ceremony commands, write two outlines for common training task classes and pass leadership evaluations both in garrison and during the FTX.

With Soldiers coming to Fort Benning's PLDC from across the local region, there are a variety of military occupational specialties represented.

"They get a chance to see what everybody else is doing. They see why certain MOSs do it this way or certain units do it that way," Woodard said. Spc. Tabitha S. Guion, a computer operator and analyst with Company A, U.S. Army Garrison, Fort McPherson, Ga., had never been "in charge" of Soldiers before and the counseling techniques taught were brand new to her.

"The (counseling) techniques will be the most influential and helpful to me," she said.

Students agreed the course moves along at a steady pace and there is enough time to learn what was taught in the classroom. During the first two weeks, the students spend between five and seven hours in the classroom, with breaks given once every hour.

Although the instructors are subject matter experts, classroom discussion is encouraged.

"We don't treat Soldiers like they're in basic training. This is a leadership school," said Staff Sgt. Samuel L. Ramsey, a three-year small group instructor at the school.

"We treat them in a manner that's conducive to learning. We try to make it light enough where they won't be tense, but not so light where they don't take it serious," Ramsey said.

According to Ramsey, taking the school seriously and then using what the students learned at their own unit is the key to becoming the best NCO possible.

"If a Soldier leaves PLDC, ready to go back to his or her unit, and leads Soldiers and teaches what's right for Soldiers, then we've accomplished our mission," Ramsey said.

Guion said the cadre can only teach the right way to do things, but in the end, it's up to each person.

"I don't think the point is to make it hard. The point is to prepare future leaders, and I think (PLDC) is doing that. It's up to the individual to take the skills learned back home and apply them."

The students apply what they learned in the classroom when the garrison portion ends. The last aspect of the garrison phase is the map reading exam. The field section begins with land navigation. Cadre and students agreed the two days of land navigation can be very stressful.

Those most stressed are the ones who never experienced land navigation. On average, this makes up one-third of a PLDC class.

The students received hands-on training when they are walked through the land navigation process. Each student walked a path of 100 meters twice to establish a pace count.

After that, students in squad size elements walked together to a couple of points, each at a different distance.

Later that day, the students put what they learned to test with a practice exercise. All students were required to find at least three out of four points within three hours; just like the test given the next day.

PLDC uses Fort Benning's Wendy Field for both the land navigation and FTX.

The area is filled with a variety of terrain features and one very unpleasant feature to most — a swamp.

"That swamp ain't no joke," said Spc. Barry L. Ragin, a nuclear, biological and chemical specialist with the 11th Chemical Company, 84th Chemical Battalion, Fort McClellan, Ala.

"Once you get the hang of it, it's fun. I'm a lot more confident now that I've been through it," Guion said.

After the two days of land navigation the Soldiers spent the next four days giving CTT classes to each other.

All of these classes are meant as preparation for the FTX.

For some students, the FTX is the first time they've been to the field outside of basic training or advanced individual training. Students spent the first day setting up an operation area and learning how to conduct different types of field operations.

That night, they conducted a night land navigation exercise in groups of four or five. Again, they were expected to find at least three out of four points.

The rest of the FTX focused on movement to contact, raids, assaults and defenses. The students interchanged leadership roles throughout the exercise, spending time as either a team leader or squad leader.

The students were put into squads early in the course based on military occupational specialties. Therefore, each squad, if possible, includes one Infantryman.

For some male students, this course was the first chance to work with female Soldiers. Both genders said it was quite different.

Spc. Kevin D. Humpries, a ranger-qualified Infantryman from 3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment, Fort Benning, Ga., said females lack the skills of an Infantryman.

"You can't expect females to do what you might expect males to do when it comes to running and rucking (road marching)."

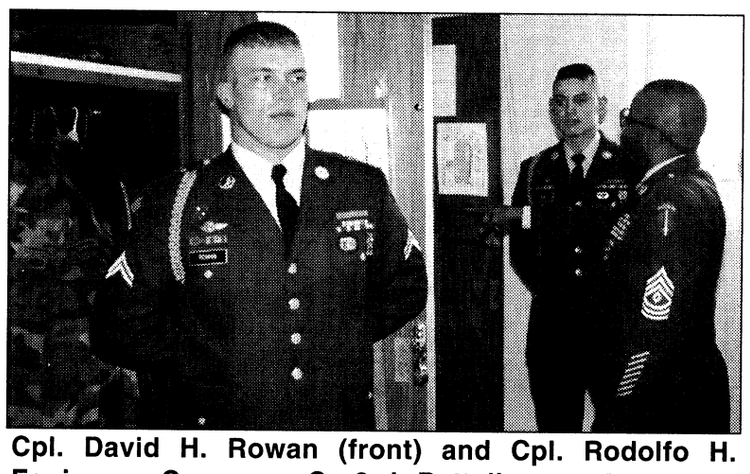
Guion said this was the first time she had been around Soldiers who had never worked with females.

"I never knew there were Soldiers who never worked with females," she said.

"They seemed to have a hard time taking orders or instruction from females. They thought we were trying to be their mothers when we talked to them."

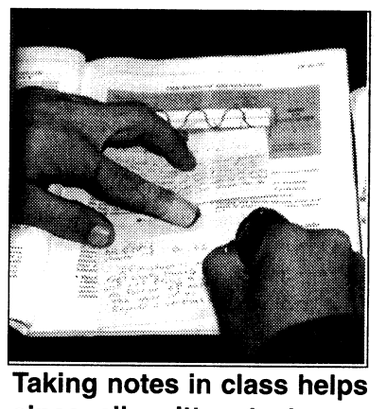
Some of that changed during land navigation, Guion said. It gave the Infantrymen an opportunity to teach and assist all students, male and female, and Guion believed this helped them drop their guard.

By the time the FTX came around, Guion said, everything was fine. "We had a common ground going into the FTX. Land navigation brought everybody together."



Just a few days after the FTX was graduation. But according to the commandant, the learning never ends.

"You don't learn everything in this profession at one school or in one day. It comes with time," Wells said. "The students continue to train me, believe it or not. It works both ways — that's one thing about the course, I hope they're learning from each other."



PLDC is only the first step in learning to become a noncommissioned officer. The NCOES is around so the Soldiers of today and tomorrow are taken care of. One day it will be that leader's turn to take care of Soldiers. But before that Soldier pins on the stripes of leadership, PLDC will be there to guide him "by the book."

Spc. Michael J. Harris, Company B, 1st Battalion, 15th Infantry Regiment and Spc. Joseph J. Boller, 248th Medical Detachment, Fort Jackson, S.C., work through the swamp at Wendy Field during land navigation.

Cpl. David H. Rowan (front) and Cpl. Rodolfo H. Espinoza, Company C, 3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment are inspected by 1st Sgt. Alvin Woodard, branch chief, during the Class A and locker inspection.

Taking notes in class helps since all written tests are open-note exams.

Infantry NCOs headed for post

By Sgt. Marc G. Turchin
Bayonet assistant editor

For years Infantrymen have been sent to a variety of installations to meet the Army's requirements for promotions and schooling.

As of Oct. 1, Infantry NCOs will join other branches of the Army, by having one site for all NCO Infantry specific training for their Basic and Advanced Noncommissioned Officer Course (BNCOC) (ANCOC) — what's considered the "home of the Infantry" — Fort Benning, Ga.

"This has been a long time coming," said Command Sgt. Maj. Willie G. Wells, commandant of the Henry Caro NCO Academy, Fort Benning, Ga. "I've been working on it for at least three years."

Although academies in Hawaii and Alaska will remain open until October 1998, the reason behind the consolidation is cost.

According to Wells it was too costly to keep nine NCO academies open. It would save time and money by sending the Infantrymen to one place. Besides cost, Wells said the consolidation allows today's students to get the same training as the student who comes here in the future.

"No two schools are exactly the same," Wells said. "But if the students are all coming to the same place, they should all leave with the same knowledge."

Knowledge is something the students come to BNCOC with and also gain before graduating.

The seven-week, three-day course is not a course about learning to be a leader, but it teaches more about being an Infantrymen, said Sgt. 1st Class Benjamin L. Lugo, a mechanized Infantry instructor at the academy.

"We spend the first three weeks solely working on common tasks," Lugo said. "The last part of the school is spent divided into each MOS."

Within the Infantry are four MOSs.

- 11M — Mechanized Infantry
- 11C — Mortarmen
- 11B — Dismounted Infantry
- 11H — Tube-launched, optically-tracked, wire.guided; heavy antitank missile specialists.

Also during the first three weeks, students are given two written tests and are evaluated giving Physical Training (PT) and outlining a PT program.

The students are broken down into squads and platoons and take classes together.

"By having all the MOSs together the students get a greater appreciation for what the other MOSs do," Lugo said. "It also gives them a chance to come up with better ways of working together in the field."

The field is where the students spend most of the latter part of BNCOC.

The students are broken down into groups by MOS. Each group will under go a Situational Training Exercise (STX).

"It's in the field where the students learn more about their specific MOS," Lugo said.

By graduation, Lugo said, the graduates are ready to apply what they have learned back at their units.

"What we give here at BNCOC are the tools to go back and be successful," Lugo said.

Sgt. 1st Class Larry Lane

Two students fire the M-60 machine gun during BNCOC's Situation Training Exercise.

Success is what Wells is hoping for when the first consolidated class graduates in December. In order for the consolidation to become a reality, steps had to be taken to ensure the students were taken care of.

Additional living space had to be located, Wells said.

He said students with the School of the Americas (SOA) had been using rooms belonging to the academy at one time. Those 74 rooms were no longer needed by SOA; the academy cleaned the rooms up and they are being used by current students now.

The number of students being housed increased meant the class size increased. In this case, the number almost doubled.

Before the consolidation, the average class size in BNCOC was 87 Soldiers. Now classes will reach as high as 147 students, Wells said. He also said there may be two classes running at the same time, but beginning at different times. When this happens, there could be a total of 280 students going through BNCOC at one time. That number doesn't include the Soldiers who will go through the Primary Leadership Development Course (PLDC) or ANCOC.

Wells admits the academy will be busy, but the most important factor is the student.

"We'll keep working at it until we get it right," Wells said. "We owe the the students the best education they can get."

ANCOC continues education, training for Soldiers

By Marc G. Turchin
Bayonet assistant editor

The Advanced Noncommissioned Officer Course (ANCOC) is exactly what it's called — an advanced leadership school. This school, like the Primary Leadership Development Course and the Basic Noncommissioned Officer Course, reinforces the leadership principles of the NCO. Only in this case, it gets even more detailed and teaches the students training management.

ANCOC is taught on the platoon level and by military occupational speciality.

Fort Benning is the home of the Henry Caro Noncommissioned Officer Academy and the Infantry ANCOC.

"When an ANCOC graduate walks away from this academy, he should be able to lead an Infantry platoon," said Command Sgt. Maj. Willie G. Wells, commandant of the academy. "The training he gets is the same training lieutenants get at the Infantry Officer Basic Course."

The enlisted course is a little more than 10 weeks long and is spent mostly in the classroom, according to Sgt. 1st Class Bill J. Dunbar, a three-year instructor at the academy. Only the last week of the course is spent in the field.

The first two weeks is the common leader portion. This period is the same throughout the Army. "It allows the academy to find out what level of leadership each Soldier is at," said 1st Sgt. Rickey D. Thomas, branch chief of the course. Thomas said Soldiers go through a relearning process to get all students on the same "sheet of music." This also includes organizing physical training programs. Each student is required to prepare one, although he may not get the chance to use it.

The next four weeks are spent on common Infantry skills such as communications, maintenance and land navigation. Again, most of the teachings are done in the classroom, but in a discussion format.

"We want the students to take the ball and run with it," Dunbar said. "When you come right down to it, the classes are group discussions," said Sgt. 1st Class Danny Barker, a senior small group instructor who has been with the school for more than a year. Students talk about past experiences and what has and has not worked for them during their military careers.

"By the time NCOs reach ANCOC, they should know the right way of doing things," Dunbar said.

ANCOC classes range from only 80 soldiers to the maximum number of 256.

There are only four classes a year. "As promotions decrease, the number of Soldiers attending decrease also," Thomas said.

Although the class size may change, the subjects studied remain the same.

The course focuses on training management.

"You have to know what your people can do and how to manage them," Barker said. "We're not in the trenches per se — we're into management of our Soldiers."

The management of Soldiers is a little different when it comes to breaking the Infantry down by MOS. Each MOS's mission is a little different, as are the requirements to graduate.

The 11Bs, or dismounted Infantrymen, have to pass 11 exams. Bradley Fighting Vehicle Infantrymen, 11Ms, Mortarmen, or 11Cs and Tube-Launched Optically-Tracked Wire Command-Linked Guided Vehicle infantrymen, 11Hs, have to pass 13 exams. The Infantrymen who ride in vehicles have extra duties and are tested on those responsibilities.

"Soldiers learn to become tactical experts," Wells said. This knowledge comes from the classroom and is tested during the final week of field time.

Students are put through Situation Training Exercises which pertain to each MOS. The exercises are supported by the 29th Infantry Regiment's Soldiers and vehicles.

The exercises, combined with the classroom training, make up the Infantry ANCOC.

"Most students who come here are qualified to be platoon sergeants," Thomas said. "Some are already ready to run a company. They just need more management skills, and we provide that."

SF Soldier saves victim after shot to head

By Maj. Tom McCollum
Army News Service

FORT BRAGG, N.C. — The skills and tenacity of a 7th Special Forces Group (Airborne) medic recently saved the life of a Paraguayan Soldier who was shot in the head and given up for dead.

Staff Sgt. Daniel Carlson, who has been a Special Forces medic for one year, is a member of Operational Detachment Alpha 793. An ODA is commonly referred to as an "A-Team." Carlson's team is stationed in Panama with Company C, 3rd Battalion, 7th SFG (A). They were training with the Paraguayan Army in a Joint Combined Exercise for Training near Asuncion, the capital of Paraguay.

"We had just finished training when I heard the shot," Carlson said. "I grabbed my aid bag and got to the barracks as fast as possible."

The unidentified Paraguayan Soldier was shot when another Soldier was trying to clear his 9 mm Uzzi sub-machine gun. The Soldier with the weapon fired a burst of rounds, one of which struck the other Soldier in the temple behind the left eye. The bullet passed through his head and exited through the right side.

"I did what I could with the limited supplies I had in the aid bag," Carlson said. "It wasn't much but I was able to stop most of the bleeding and start to stabilize him."

Chief Warrant Officer Jeffrey D. Dahlby, a fellow Special Forces Soldier, assisted Carlson. Carlson, Dahlby and two other Soldiers from their Special Forces team accompanied the wounded Paraguayan Soldier to the local hospital.

"We were surprised to find out there were no doctors available when we got to the hospital," Dahlby said. "The ones there were involved in a knee operation."

"We waited in the emergency room for 15 minutes before a doctor was available to look at the Soldier," Carlson said. "Actually two doctors looked at him and both said there was nothing they could do. The hospital was old and in the process of moving to a new facility. The new hospital wasn't operational yet."

"It took about an hour before the hospital was able to move the Soldier into the operating room," Dahlby said. "All this time Carlson kept him stable and supervised what medications the hospital could give. When our medications ran out, he had our guys go to a local pharmacy and buy what he needed."

"At times I had to stop the nurse on-duty from administering morphine to the Soldier," Carlson added. "I knew morphine would slow the Soldier's body processes down which would do more harm than good. "Once we were able to get the guy into the operating room, I was able to assist the doctors."

Carlson, like most other Special Forces Soldiers assigned to 7th SFG (A), speaks fluent Spanish. His language ability, cultural training, medical training, and experiences working in Central and South America helped him work under the pressure of the operating room and with unfamiliar doctors.

"We were able to further stabilize the Soldier which is amazing due to the conditions of the closing hospital," Carlson said. "Because of the previous operation and the limited supplies, there was a lack of infection control measures."

The next day the Soldier was transported to Asuncion. After several days he regained consciousness. He is able to move all of his extremities and talk, but he is blind in both eyes.

"Without a doubt the Soldier would have died if it weren't for Carlson's efforts," Dahlby said.

The American ambassador to Paraguay, Robert Service, heard of Carlson's actions, and through military channels, awarded him the U.S. Army Commendation Medal.

"I wish there was more I could have done for the guy," Carlson said, "but I was only able to intervene so far."

WASHINGTON — Different military commands received recognition for actions in helping combat drugs. Jan Lodal, principal deputy undersecretary of defense for policy, presented the annual Drug Awareness Awards at the Pentagon Oct. 28.

The Army Reserve 63rd Regional Support Command of Los Alamitos, Calif., won for its Youth Demand Reduction Program. It began in 1994 as a DoD pilot outreach program and continues as a voluntary undertaking of the 63rd. The program's wide variety of activities support schools and other community groups.

Marine Corps Base Camp Pendleton, Calif., won for its Community Substance Abuse Outreach Program. The program was cited for linking efforts of the military community, DoD civilians and local community resources to reduce drug abuse at Pendleton and neighboring communities.

The Naval and Marine Corps Reserve Center in New Orleans took home honors for its Campaign Drug Free. A voluntary community education program, the campaign emphasizes the dangers of youth drug use and the need for a drug-free society.

The St. Clair County Youth Mentoring Program run by Scott Air Force Base, Ill., took home honors for drug demand reduction. Working with the county school's Drug Education Project, the program matches youth with volunteer mentors based on the youth's needs.

The Florida National Guard won for its High School Classroom Drug Awareness Program. The program supports the No. 1 goal of the President's 1997 National Drug Control Strategy: to educate and enable America's youth to reject illegal drugs.

disappeared beneath the sea, and a giant suction pulled him back towards the boat and under the water. Codianni was wearing a life jacket but he was being churned in a giant washing machine, tumbling upside down and running out of air. 'I don't know how I got out of there. I just swam like hell.'

When he popped to the surface, Codianni was missing his front teeth and his tongue was split in half right down the middle. 'I came right up and I thought my head was going to explode. Hot water was coming out of my ears and all around me were bodies and guys were screaming.'"

White then introduced Codianni.

"This monument fulfills the promise that I made. I promised myself that our buddies and their sacrifices would not be forgotten."

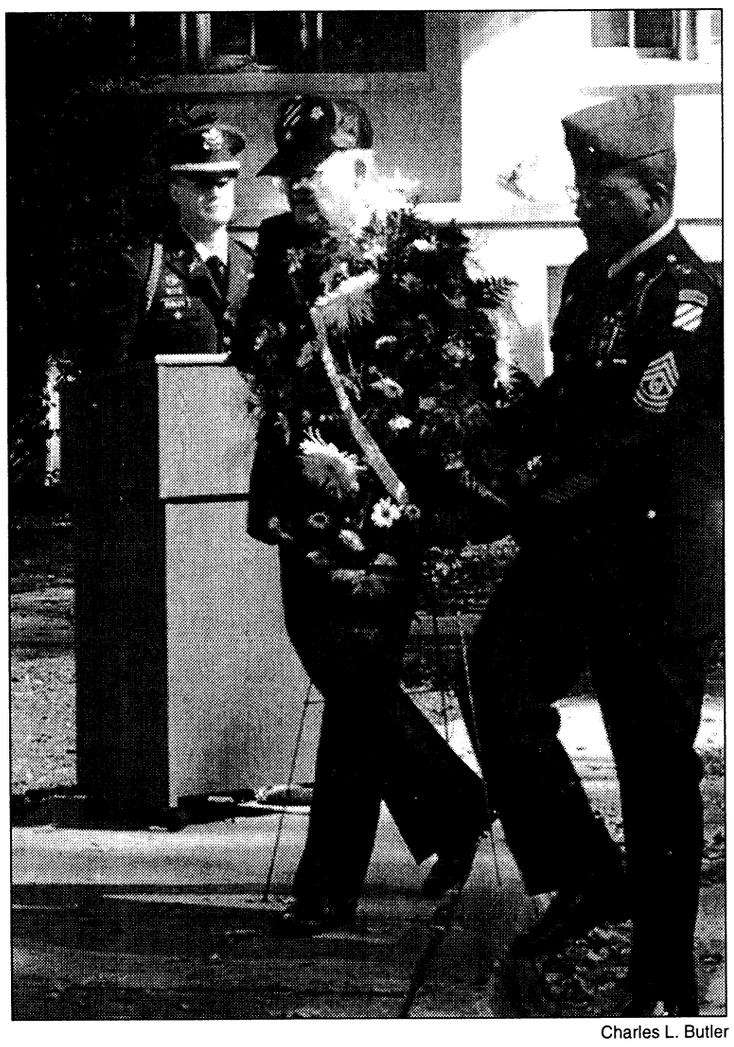
Following Codianni, Peter Marshall, British Consul general, spoke.

"It's entirely appropriate that those who perished in this terrible incident should be remembered both collectively and individually. These were brave young men who gave their lives in the fight for freedom against tyranny."

A wreath was then placed on the monument by Florence Herbert, national president of the Gold Star Wives, Florence Capello Granison, who lost her brother on the boat, and Ruth and Linda Hesse, daughters of the late Robert M. Hesse, who along with Codianni, were instrumental in the effort to see the monument made.

Taps was then played by the Infantry Band along with the Infantry and Army songs to end the dedication.

Norm Levin of Philadelphia, Penn., was one of the 2,235 Soldiers aboard the Leopoldville.



"I still have bad memories," he said.

Levin's wife, Dee, said the family and neighbors hear the story every Christmas Eve, although it was hard for him to first talk about it.

"For 25 years we've heard the story. Everyone would hear the story.

"He remembers seeing crushed bodies and body parts floating all around him during the 20-25 minutes he was in the water. The next thing he remembered was a hand coming off the raft and hooking him out of the water. He remembers looking up and saying thank you, and then he woke up in the hospital."

White ended by saying, "I, for one, will never pass by this monument or spend another Christmas Eve without thinking of those Soldiers from the 66th Infantry Division who gave their lives and went unrecognized for what they have given this country. It is an honor for Fort Benning to have this monument on it's field."

FORT BENNING HISTORY BOOK

published to commemorate

FORT BENNING'S 75th ANNIVERSARY

Fort Benning recently celebrated its 75th Anniversary, and The Bayonet published a special edition to coincide with the celebration. Soon after the special edition of the paper was published, we began looking at the information about Fort Benning that we had collected and decided that it was simply too good to leave it just in newspaper form.

We knew the book would be interesting and informative. The next step was to make it as attractive as possible. An experienced layout and design firm was hired, and they have done an absolutely superb job. You will enjoy thumbing through its pages for years to come. You will also be proud to put in a prominent place at home for friends to enjoy, or at work for your customers to see. And, if you're looking for gift for a retiree, or a friend who served at Fort Benning and is no longer here, there's no better way to remind them of your lasting friendship.

Published by the contract printer of Fort Benning's authorized newspaper, The Bayonet, the hardcover book, protected by a beautiful full-color dust cover, has 168 pages and is filled with more than 200 photos. The book includes detailed timelines of significant events that have shaped Fort Benning, an overview of the post's involvement in World War II, Korea, Viet Nam, and Desert Shield/Storm, detailed information on the current major units, and a variety of stories that round out the post's interesting history.

It is the perfect "coffee table book" and is a 'must have' for anyone who has been stationed at Fort Benning. It's a book that will be a lasting memento of Fort Benning, recognized year after year as. . .

"The Best Army Installation in the World!"

Arctic explorer speaks to Stowers Elementary

By Erin A. Nash
Bayonet staff writer©

Julie Hignell-Hanson visited Stowers Elementary Nov. 3 to tell the students about her dog-sledding trip across the Arctic tundra.

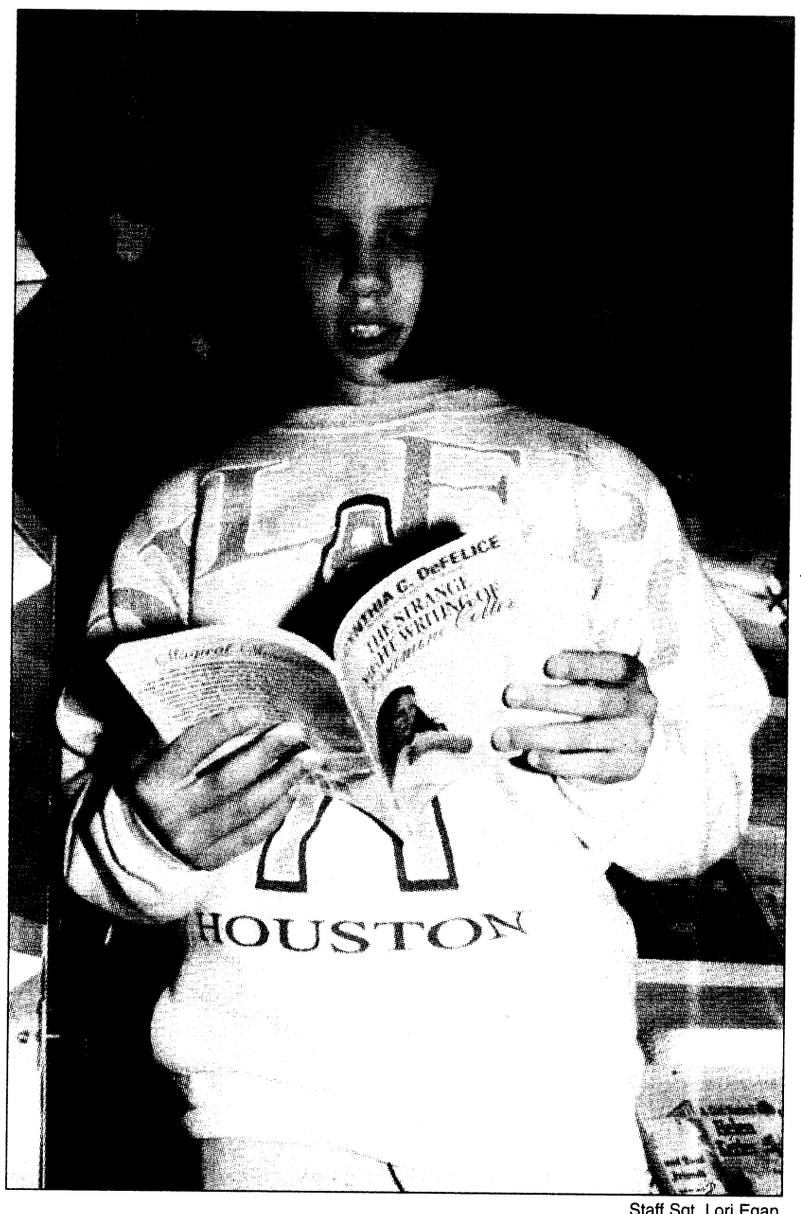
In 1996 Hanson-Hignell made a four-month long journey from Churchill, Manitoba, Canada, along the Arctic coast to the Inuit village Kugluktuk with her husband Martin. They were joined by a sled team consisting of 11 dogs.

"This was an opportunity of a life time," she said. It was a lifelong dream of Hignell-Hanson's to make an Arctic trip.

"It was a fabulous experience," Hignell-Hanson said. "I got to meet a lot of interesting people, and see the way people live, how they live close to the land."

Everyone learns to hunt and fish, she said. The Inuits's relationship with the land is an integral part of life.

Hanson-Hignell, a former teacher from Minnesota, showed the children slides of her trip and a map showing the path of her journey and also answered the students' questions.

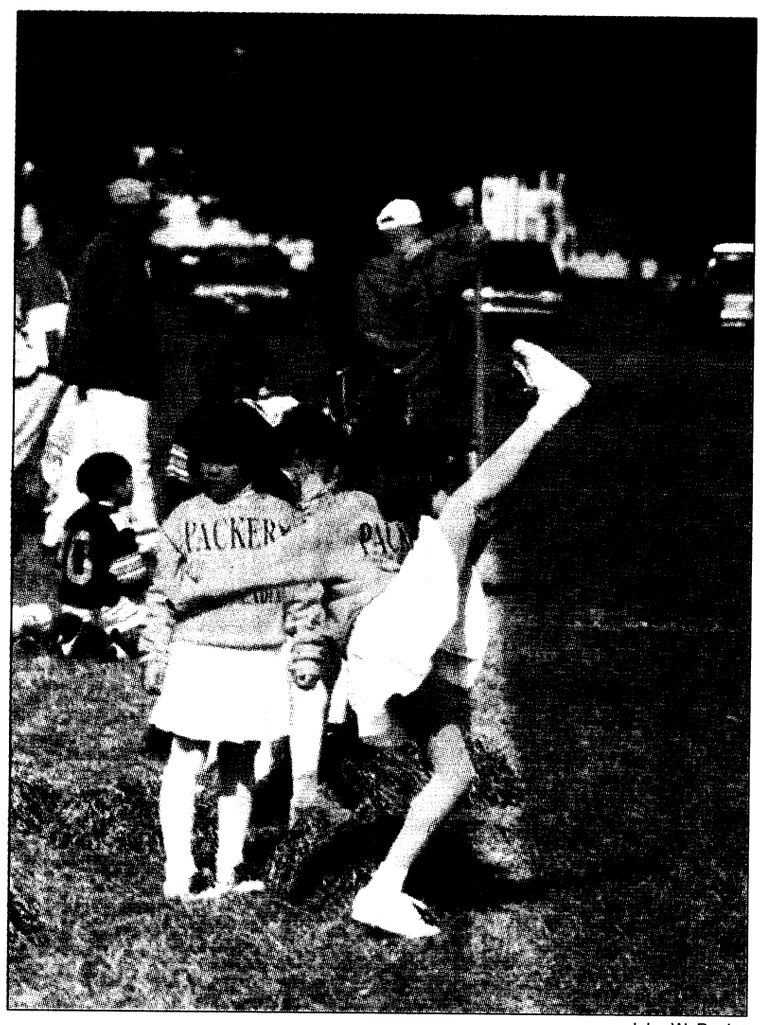


"We purchased food and supplies in advance and sent them to the communities we would stop," she said.

"We could take five-weeks worth of food at a time." The only trouble Hanson-Hignell ran into was when one of the communication satellites they were using broke down and never started back up.

Besides that, Hanson-Hignell said the only trouble was large chunks of ice on the Hudson River and the danger of bears.

Hanson-Hignell started training for the trip in 1993 and took two short trips to prepare for the 1996 trip.



Hanson-Hignell and her husband financed the trip themselves.

Seatbelt usage required by law, can save lives

Sixty-percent of people killed in auto accidents didn't wear a seatbelt

GA Insurance Information Service

Even before you put your vehicle in gear, make sure that everyone is wearing a seat belt or other restraint.

According to Georgia state law, not only are seatbelts required in the front seat, but all children under three years of age must be properly buckled into their car seats.

The fine is $50 for the first violation and $100 for a second or subsequent violations when children under three are involved.

Children between three and four years old must wear a seat belt.

Between five and 17 years, seat belts must be worn but the fine is lower. Those 18 or older must wear a seat belt in the front seat.

The Georgia Insurance Information Service (GIIS) advises that everyone in a motor vehicle should wear a restraint and children in car seats should be in the back seat of passenger cars or mini vans.

In human terms, here is a way to view this tragic situation.

At least 33 people died in traffic accidents just in the 10-county Atlanta-metro area in September of this year, according to the Atlanta constitution.

Of those accidents, approximately eight were either pedestrians or motorcycle fatalities and the rest involved car or truck crashes.

In the remaining 25 car crashes at least eight where known to involve individuals who were not wearing seat belts.

That is roughly one-third of the car crashes in and around Atlanta in just one month.

Nationally, lack of restraints in motor vehicles is much worse. More than 60 percent of occupants killed in fatal crashes were not wearing seat belts or children were not in properly installed car seats.

"An effective way to make sure everyone in the car is buckled up is to remember one, two, three," said David Colmans, GIIS executive director. "Follow these steps every time you prepare to start your vehicle:

•The driver should buckle up first, both to set an example and to show others that the driver expects no less from everyone else in the car.

•Small children should be safely buckled up in their car seats. Just as important, it is vital to make sure that the child's car seat is properly installed in the vehicle.

•All larger children and every other adult in a vehicle should be properly buckled up.

The National Highway Traffic Safety Administration officials said that seat belts and child car seats are estimated to save nearly 10,000 lives a year.

The Georgia Insurance Information Service is a non-profit consumer and media information organization sponsored by major property and casualty insurance companies doing business in the state. GIIS member companies represent more than 70 percent of the automobile and homeowners insurance premiums in Georgia.

SJA offers motor vehicle registration rules for Georgia

Office of the Staff Judge Advocate

A Soldier stationed at Fort Benning has the option of registering his vehicle either in his home state or here in Georgia. If the Soldier opts for a Georgia registration, he must be aware of several requirements. Some of these requirements have just taken effect and will adversely impact upon Soldiers already stationed at Fort Benning.

Ad valorem tax

All vehicles registered in Georgia are subject to an annual ad valorem tax based upon the value of the vehicle. As of Jan. 1, 1998, this tax is assessed on the 30th day prior to the date of the owner's birthday and is paid at the time of registration.

Soldiers who own or are purchasing a vehicle and are not residents of Georgia are exempted from this tax by the Soldiers' and Sailors' Civil Relief Act. However, Soldiers who are leasing motor vehicles must pay the ad valorem tax as the Soldiers' and Sailors' Civil Relief Act does not exempt leased vehicles from such taxation.

Soldiers desiring to claim the exemption must come to the Legal Assistance Division, Office of the Staff Judge Advocate, Building 5, on the corner of Vibbert and Sigerfoos Streets on Main Post and complete an ad valorem exemption affidavit. Each Soldier must bring a Leave and Earnings Statement dated within the past three months showing the Soldier's state of residence as something other than Georgia, proof of insurance and a valid military identification card. The completed ad valorem exemption form is then given to the Division of Motor Vehicles at the time of registration.

Jointly owned vehicles

The biggest change concerns the taxation of vehicles jointly owned by a Soldier and nonmilitary spouse.

Prior to May 1, 1997, the Tax Commissioners of Muscogee and Chattahoochee Counties granted the exemption to a Soldier that owned a vehicle solely or with another person, typically the spouse. However, as of May 1, 1997, Muscogee and Chattahoochee Counties are no longer exempting the jointly owned vehicles if one or more of the owners is a non-military member.

To avoid the tax for the 1998 tax year, the Soldier may either retitle the car solely in the Soldier's name before the 30th day prior to the owner's birthday and then register it in Georgia, or register the car in the Soldier's home state.

A car owner should consider carefully all issues before removing non-military members from the title. There is a fee of $18 to retitle a vehicle in Georgia. In addition, there may be problems if a vehicle is solely titled in the Soldier's name and the Soldier and spouse divorce or the Soldier dies.

Furthermore, if there is a loan on the vehicle, the loan company must agree to the change in the title. The loan company may require the vehicle be refinanced at an additional cost when the title is changed.

New registration periods

Georgia will begin a new system of registration Jan. 1, 1998. Vehicles will come due for registration 30 days prior to the owner's birth date. During the 1997 registration, each owner was asked to provide the birth date on the current form. There is a 30-day period, ending on the owner's birth date, in which to register the vehicle.

Any vehicle not registered within the 30 days will be subject to a late registration fee.

Ad valorem tax on used vehicles

Under Georgia law, the ad valorem tax is levied on every vehicle owned by a Georgia resident on the 30th day prior to the owner's birthday. This tax is levied on the vehicle and becomes the responsibility of anyone who purchases it.

Thus, if a Soldier purchases a used vehicle from a Georgia resident who did not bother to register it and pay the taxes on it for the year, the Soldier must pay the tax before the vehicle may be registered.

Each Soldier contemplating the purchase of a used vehicle would be well-advised to obtain proof that all outstanding ad valorem taxes have been paid. The best proof would be a copy of the prior registration, showing payment of the taxes. The next best method would be to obtain an affidavit from the seller and his or her agreement to reimburse if taxes are due.

If the tax has not been paid, the Soldier ought to insist on an adjustment of the purchase price to cover the unpaid taxes.

Of course, if the seller was exempt from the taxes because he or she was a nonresident service member, the purchasing Soldier should obtain a signed ad valorem exemption form from the seller. This will enable the purchasing Soldier to obtain exemption from the tax.

Where to Register

A Soldier who opts to register his vehicle in Georgia must do so in the county in which he resides. A Soldier living in Columbus must register in Muscogee County. All Soldiers living on post in housing areas or billets north of the Upatoi Creek live in Muscogee. This includes all units in Sand Hill and all residents of McGraw Manor, Custer Terrace, Battle Park and Old Officer's Capehart.

All other Fort Benning residents and units are located in Chattahoochee County. For Muscogee County, Soldiers may register in the Government Center located between First and Second Avenues and Ninth and 10th Streets. For Chattahoochee County, registration is at the Chattahoochee County Courthouse on Highway 520 (Business) in Cusseta.

Registration fees

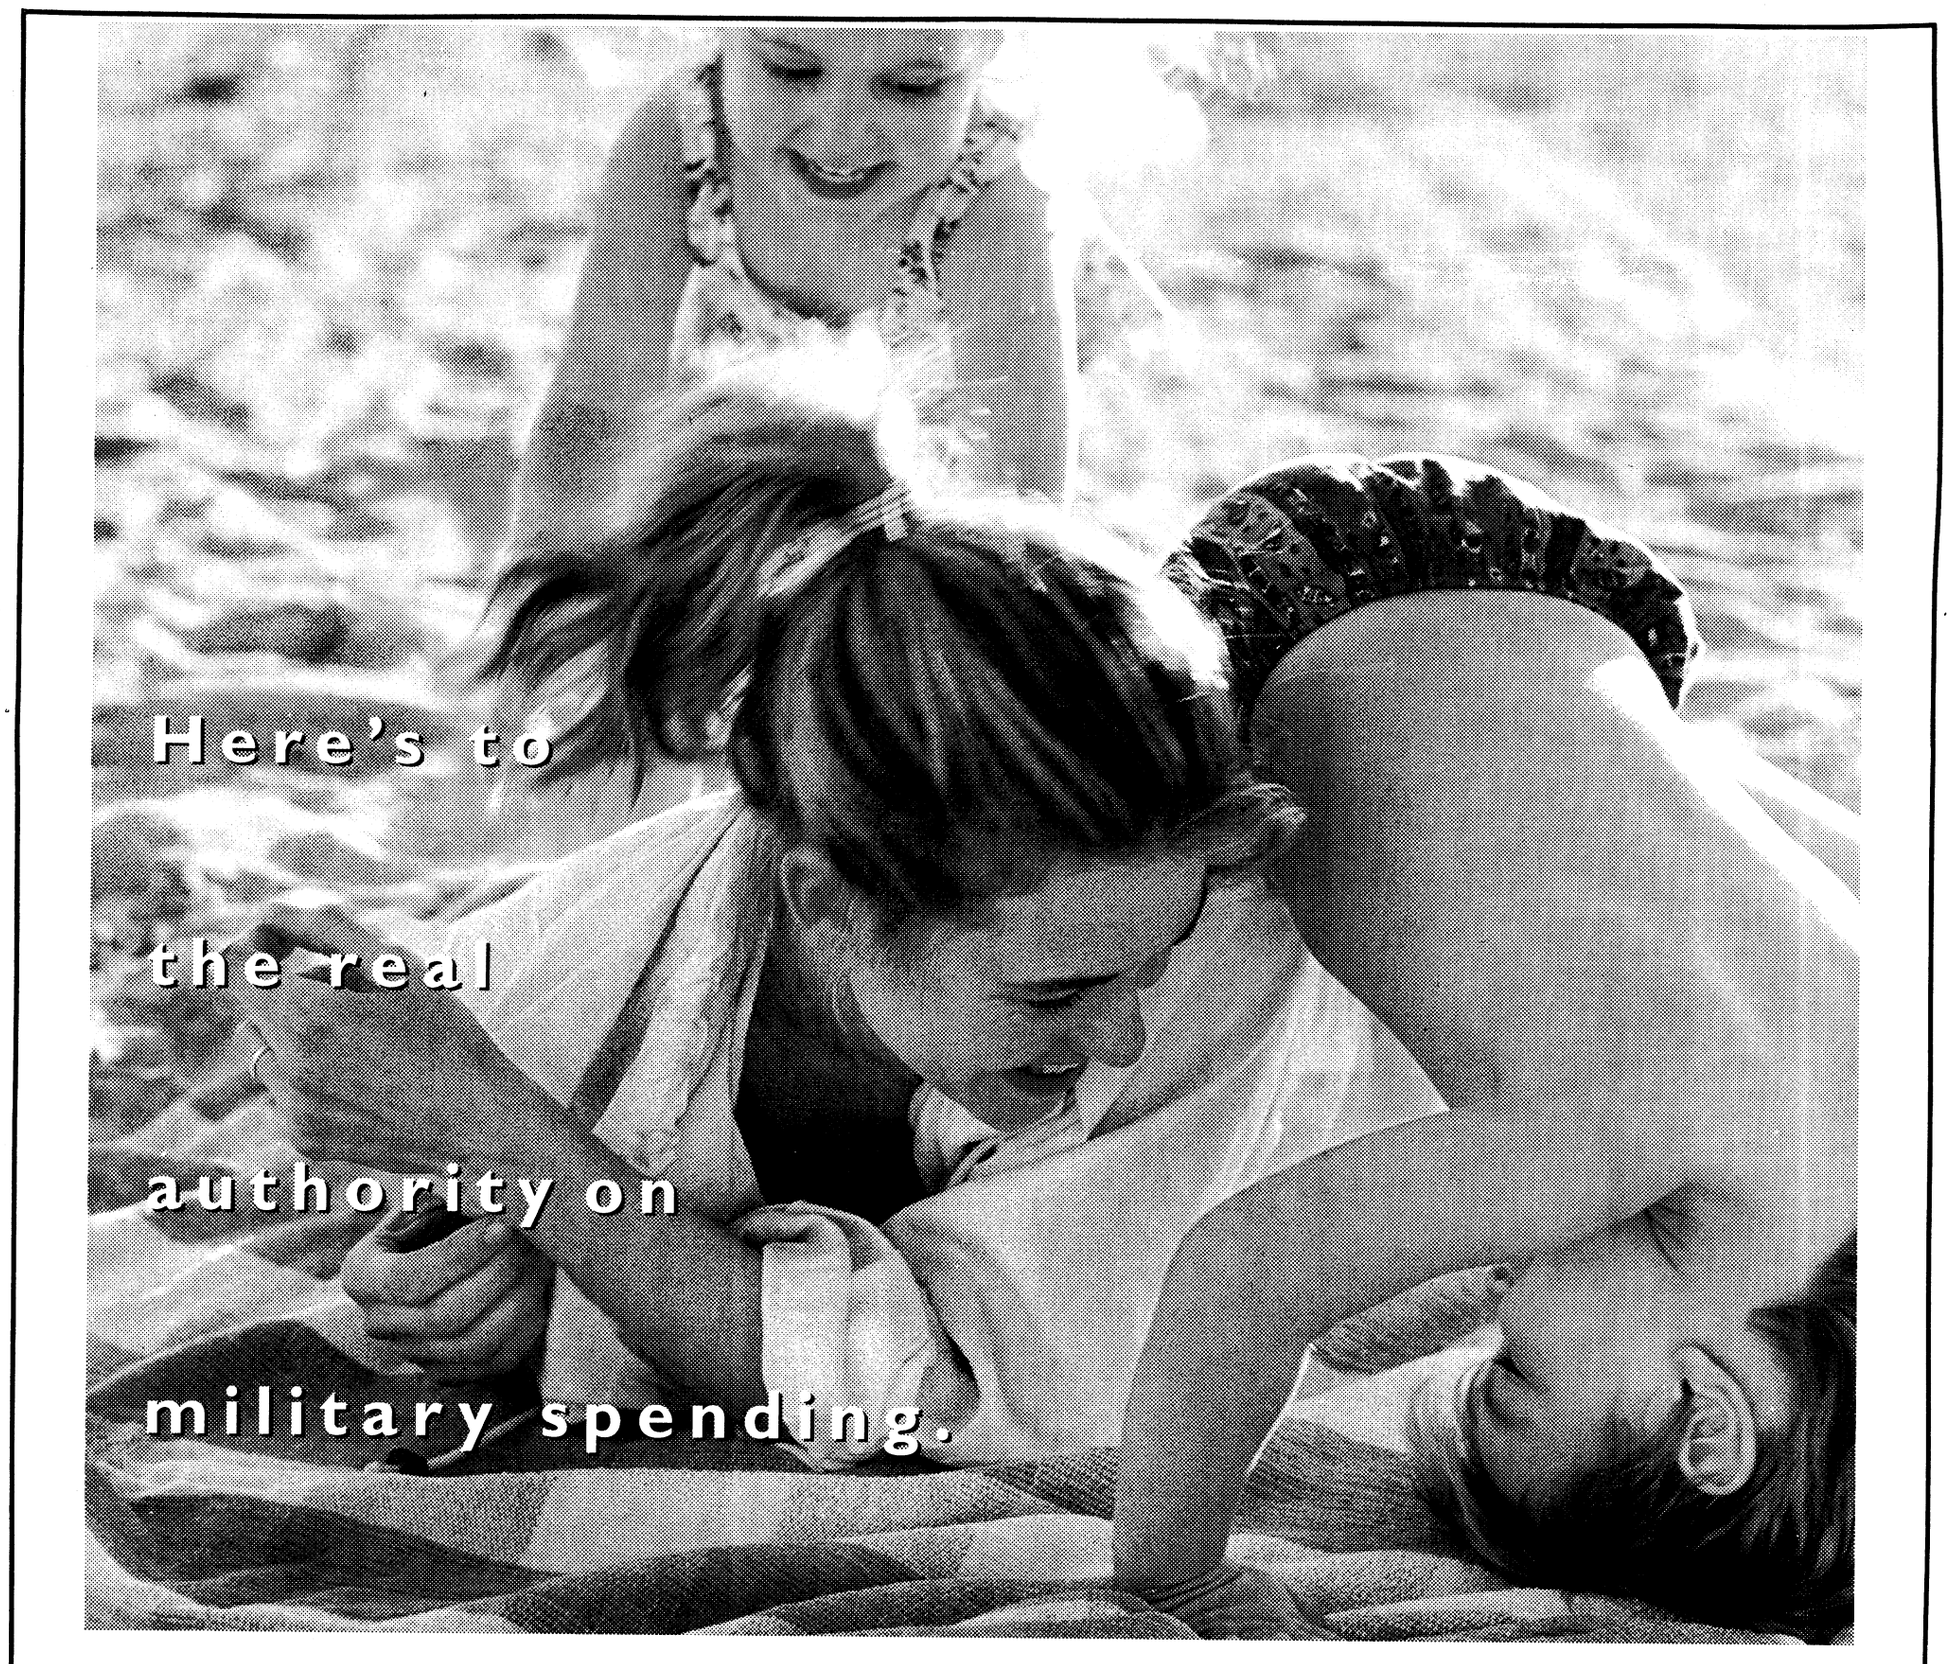
There are charges assessed for the registration of a vehicle in Georgia. The registration fee is $20. An additional $18 charge is assessed for first time registrants. The ad valorem tax, which is based on the value of the vehicle, may be $300 or more for new vehicles. Chattahoochee County accepts only cash and money orders as payment. Chattahoochee County does not accept personal checks. Muscogee County accepts personal checks drawn on a local bank as well as cash and money orders.

Documentation needed for registration

A Soldier registering a vehicle in Georgia must bring to the Tax Office in the county in which the Soldier resides the following: current registration paperwork, written proof of insurance, the ad valorem exemption form completed by the Legal Assistance Division of the Office of the Staff Judge Advocate, a Leave and Earnings Statement dated within the past three months and a military identification card.

Those persons using a power of attorney to register a vehicle for a Soldier must bring the original power of attorney from the Soldier.

Sales tax on new vehicles



New vehicles purchased in this state, as well as some new vehicles purchased in other states are being registered for the first time in Georgia, are subject to a one-time sales tax. There is no exemption from the sales tax under the Soldiers' and Sailors' Civil Relief Act.

The current tax for Muscogee County is six percent of the value of the vehicle. Persons registering their vehicles for the first time will be given a credit for any sales tax already paid if proof of payment is shown.

For example, if a Soldier purchases a vehicle in a state that charges a four percent sales tax, that Soldier will be given a credit for the four percent paid and will be responsible for payment of the additional two percent to the local County Tax Commissioner. This sales tax is not to be confused with the ad valorem tax.

Expectations impact on actual experience

Jesus Christ's actions cause John the Baptist to question

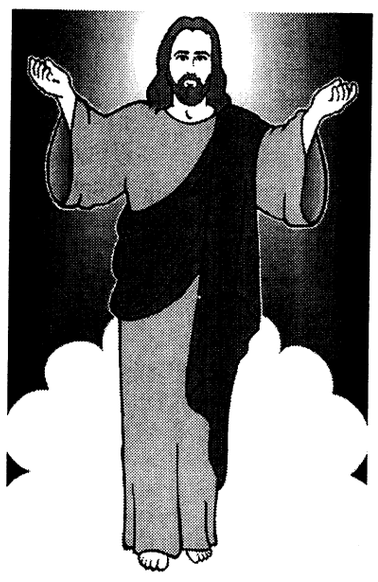
By Chaplain (Maj.) Tom Wheatley
Ranger Training Brigade Chaplain

Our expectations about things has a great impact on what and how we actually experience those things.

In fact, we can actually miss out on some great opportunities if they do not present themselves in accordance with our preconceived ideas.

reflections

"Paradigm" is a word that illustrates this phenomenon — it means a model, an example, or a pattern of how something should be. If something does not fit our paradigm then we may not recognize it.



For example, back in the 1940's the Swiss had 80 percent of the world market on watches. Then one of their own, a Swiss watch-maker, presented a model of a digital watch.

The other Swiss watch-makers immediately rejected the digital model because it did not have hands and gears that all watches were supposed to have, in other words, this new watch did not fit their paradigm of a watch.

Because of their inability to see beyond their own narrow ideas for their product, two other companies, one American and one Japanese, bought the rights to produce the digital watch. By the next decade, the Swiss had lost their corner on the market for watches. Today, 80 percent of the watches sold are digital watches.

When I read Matthew, Chapter 11, I see the same thing happening over the appearance of Jesus Christ.

Jesus did not fit the paradigm of how the Messiah was supposed to appear. In this chapter of Matthew, we even find John the Baptist questioning Jesus from prison to see if he really is the one they had all been waiting for.

Now John the Baptist is the one who had been sent to prepare the way for the Messiah and he himself already announced that Jesus was the Messiah.

During his stay in prison John probably had a lot of time to think. He began to review all of the things that Jesus was doing and maybe compared it to the descriptions of the Messiah from the Old Testament.

Jesus was not exactly fitting the description of a hero-king or conquering warrior who would defeat all of the enemies and restore the former glory of the kingdom. So now even John the Baptist had become discouraged, and wanted to check once more if Jesus was the one prophesied.

He asked, "Are you the one who was to come, or should we expect someone else?" (Luke 11:3)

All of us have questioned God and his ways of doing things at some point in our lives.

We might wonder what God could possibly have in mind by bringing about certain results. Or we might miss out on all of God's blessings right as hand because these blessings or opportunities do not appear as we expected.

Perhaps we need to keep an open mind and recognize that God can do anything God wants to do. That he will often appear in the most unexpected way. God certainly fooled most everyone when Jesus first arrived on the scene.

But what continued to convince everyone was the amazing works that he performed in support of his unusual words.

When Jesus was asked this question of John, he responded in a way that was to prove he was working in accordance with Old Testament prophesy: "Go back and report to John what you hear and see. The blind receive sight, the lame walk, those who have leprosy are cured, the deaf hear, the dead are raised, and the good news is preached to the poor. Blessed is the man who does not fall away on account of me." (Luke 11:4-6)

The thing that will continue to convince us that God is God, an all-powerful, all-loving and ever-present God, is that he will continue to do amazing things in our lives and the lives of others.

It will not always be what we deserve. It will certainly not always be what we expect.

I do not believe there is one human paradigm that can contain God, no matter how hard we try to fit God and his ways into a certain preconceived pattern or mold.

Let's just try to expect great and wonderful things from him and the more we expect to see him in our day to day activities and in the people around us, the more we will see him at work, right at hand.

Fort Benning, along with many other communities, is doing a great job in recycling. However, to keep recycling working, we all have to buy products that are made with or packaged in recycled-content materials. You can find these products easily when shopping for groceries, hardware, auto parts, office supplies and more. Celebrate America Recycles Day Saturday by pledging to recycle and shop for recycled products. People can enter a random drawing to win the "American Green Dream House" — a three bedroom, 2 1/2 bath home built with recycled materials. This contest is sponsored by (just to name a few) the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency, U.S. Steel, Whirlpool, Dow Corning, The Home Depot, and the National Association of Home Builders. There are two ways to enter:

•On the World Wide Web at www.americarecycleday.org; or

•Hand print your complete name and address on a 3" x 5" scrap piece of paper and mail to: (Entries must be post marked by Nov. 15)

American Recycles Day Contest
c/o National Recycling Coalition
1727 King Street Suite 105
Alexandria, VA 22314-2720

Here are 10 great ways to celebrate American Recycles Day:

•Commit to "buy recycled" at home and at work.
•Think before you buy. Reduce, reuse, recycle.
•Support the installation's recycling program at work, school and at home.
•Call the installation recycling coordinator at 545-1007 with ideas on better ways to recycle materials.
•Tell local retailers to stock more products made with recycled materials.
•Encourage the use of recycled content products.
•Leave grass clippings on the lawn as a fertilizer.
•Support the installation's compost site with yard trimmings.
•Visit the installation Recycling Facility. To set up a tour, call Tom Moore at 544-6142.
•Recycle used motor oil and oil filters at an approved collection center and buy re-refined oil for your next oil change.

Participate in recycling during the holiday season by helping others with your unwanted or outgrown clothing. As colder weather approaches, all of the valley's charitable organizations need warm clothing, coats, and sweaters. This is an excellent opportunity to clean out your closets and help those less fortunate and you will also be recycling.

For more information on recycling, call Walter Nichols at 545-1007. For more information about the contest, call (800) YES-1-CAN.

Remember — you make Fort Benning the first in training, the first in readiness and the first in quality of life.

ask the judge

By Capt. David Barrett
Legal Assistance Attorney

Q. My family and I just arrived at Fort Benning and there is no on-post housing available. We would like to move on-post and we were told that housing may be available in several months. We need to rent an apartment off-post, but do not believe that many places will offer short term leases. What are the consequences of "breaking" a lease before the lease has expired?

A. Often this problem can be avoided if you coordinate your lease with the Housing office.

If there is any possibility that you may need to terminate your lease, special precautions are needed in your search for housing.

Before signing a lease under these circumstances, attempt to negotiate terms that coincide with your housing needs. Try to decide how long you are likely to be in the apartment. Unless there is no other choice, do not sign a lease for a time period greater than you actually need the apartment. When you sign a contract you have a legal and moral obligation to comply with its terms. When you do not meet the terms of the contract the landlord can collect damages as discussed below. Some landlords may be willing to negotiate the term of the lease if they feel that you will not rent from them without such a clause. You may also try to negotiate for a clause that permits you to terminate the lease immediately upon notification that on-post housing is available. Most apartment complexes do not afford you the opportunity to negotiate such lease terms. However, you will not get favorable clauses unless you ask.

Another strategy is to offer to pay additional rent in consideration for a shorter rental term. One of our clients paid extra for a six month rental term and was able to negotiate that the extra rent he paid would be credited to future rent if he decided to stay in the apartment for a second term of six months. Remember, just because the lease is on a pre-printed form does not mean there is no room for negotiation. As with any purchase, it is important to be willing to shop around to find the terms that meet your situation.

What are the consequences of breaking a lease? What if you have signed a six-month lease for your new apartment and shortly after you receive notification that on-post housing is available for you in one month? You must understand that the lease you signed is a contract that is legally enforceable. If you wish to break the lease, there will be financial damages.

Is it worth it to move on-post? Before deciding, balance the savings of moving on-post with the cost of terminating the lease. This includes such items as the loss of BAQ versus the amount saved on additional rent that you may be paying off-post, utilities and commuting expenses. You may also want to consider such factors such as the inconvenience of a move and changing schools for the children.

Georgia law will allow collection of any damages specified in the contract, plus any damages to the apartment. If the lease does not specify the amount of damages for breaking a lease, a tenant may be liable to pay rent for a reasonable period until the landlord can rent the apartment. If you decide that living on-post makes sense, and decide to break your lease, notify the landlord. It is not wise to wait or to try to sneak out of the complex unnoticed.

Being honest with the landlord may help to minimize the amount you will eventually pay. It may also help you when you negotiate the amount of damages the landlord claims.

If you have any questions concerning your lease or other landlord-tenant matters contact the Legal Assistance Division for an appointment at 545-3281.

Sergeants major defeat colonels 9-1 in charity softball game

By John W. Peeler
Special to the Bayonet©

Santa's elves, disguised as sergeants major and colonels, were hard at work — or play depending on how you look at it Nov. 7 at Doughboy Stadium.

While it may have looked like a softball game was in progress, these elves were hard at work earning money for Santa's Castle and, of course, a 9-1 win for the sergeants major over the colonels.

The game included everything from an oversized softball to bowling-ball type pitches, laughter and yes, an actual softball game.

After the National Anthem, Linda Ernst threw out the first pitch to begin the game. The sergeants major team took the field and immediately shut down the colonels team. The colonels responded in the bottom of the inning by shutting down the sergeants major team. That was the last time the colonels would be able to hold the more effective sergeants major team.

The sergeants major team picked up one run in the second inning while holding the colonels scoreless on solid fielding by the defense.

From the second inning on, the sergeants major team completely dominated the colonels in all aspects of the game en route to a 9-1 victory. Adjutant General command sergeant major Charles Collier contributed an in-the-park home run to seal the victory for the sergeants major team.

Following the game, Ernst was presented a check in the amount of $2,000 from the sergeants major and colonels team as a donation for Santa's Castle. Following the game, post command sergeant major Mack Vereen pledged his support for the sergeants major and colonels teams to future endeavors of Santa's Castle.

A losers team plaque was also presented to the U.S. Army Infantry School Chief of Staff John Latimer, which will be displayed in his office until the sergeants major and colonels meet again on the softball diamond

A rematch is planned as the opening event during Military Appreciation Week next year.

"The colonels will need a lot of practice," sergeants major team coach Clifford West said. "But I would like to thank them for their support for a good cause."

Army tennis team takes honors

Armed Forces Press Service

FORT EUSTIS, Va. — The Army team won four of eight divisions and the Risely Bowl at the annual Armed Forces Tennis Championships recently. The Air Force won three divisions and the Navy took one.

Former Wimbledon and U.S. Open Champion Stan Smith presented awards and worked out with many of the Armed Forces players during the tournament. Smith said he came because the Army experience for him was great, and the Army allowed him to play tennis. Smith won the U.S. Open and Wimbledon while he was in the Army.

Army's Jamie Malakoff of Fort Hood, Texas defended his Armed Forces Men's Open title and retained the Riseley Bowl with a (6-1, 6-3) victory over Dave Brummitt of the Air Force.

The Riseley Bowl "Challenge Cup" originated in 1945 after World War II. The trophy was presented to the U.S. Lawn Tennis Association by A.H. Riseley, chairman of the executive committee of the Wimbledon All-English Lawn Tennis Club men's singles competition. The Riseley Bowl was thereafter awarded to the winner of the Armed Forces Tournament open division singles champion. Other military winners include Arthur Ashe and Stan Smith.

Malakoff said the difference this year was "that I was able to train for this championship, I knew what to expect." Prior to the military championship, Malakoff prepared by playing in several tournaments. "My unit encouraged me to train so that really helped to have the command support," the Texas native said.

In the men's junior veterans division (ages 32-39), Bob Beckvall won his first gold medal. The Phoenix

Tennis: Army captures win, Risely Bowl

Ariz., native tried out "for the Army team back in 1987 but couldn't make it. I've made the team the last three years. Playing in this tournament is a highlight for me" the Fort Carson, Colo., Soldier said.

Many team members feel Beckvall is the team motivator. Beckvall, a generator operator, agrees.

"I haven't missed a match in three years," he said. "I think the other teams are jealous because the Army team is so much like a family."

Beckvall said he plans to give his gold medal to his grandmother who lives in a nursing home.

In the men's senior division (age 40 plus), Stan Morris of Gibelstadt, Germany, teamed with Bob Richards of Fort Myer, Va., for the double's victory. Following the victory Morris said, "We lost a close three setter earlier in team tennis competition, we talked about it, and today we came to play." For Morris, a dentist, this was his fourth doubles Armed Forces title.

In women's doubles, Fort Hood, Texas' Kristen Argus teamed with Schofield Barracks, Hawaii's Hannah Chang to take the crown in a three-set match.

"This was my first year on the team and it was great," Chang, a battalion signal officer said. "The team is full of pride and full of energy."

"This was the first time Hannah and I ever played doubles together even though we were team mates for four years at West Point," said Argus, who won the doubles title last year. The Army team won the first and third set winning the third, 7-5. "We did not want to play a tie breaker in the third set, it would be too much pressure. I got back from Honduras three weeks ago so I had to hit the courts hard to prepare for this tournament," she said.

Malakoff now leads the U.S. Armed Forces team into the World Military (Council of International Sports Military) Tennis Championships set for Rome, Italy.

SOA Watch protesters demonstrate, trespass, leave Fort Benning

By Staff Sgt. Lori Egan
Bayonet editor

Three SOA Watch protesters were sentenced to six months in jail and a $3,010 fine Wednesday in U.S. Magistrates Court.

The 601 SOA Watch protesters were detained when they walked through the main gates of Fort Benning Sunday.

The protesters were loaded onto buses and driven to the holding station next to the Military Police where they were given dinner while being processed.

First time offenders were issued post ejection orders. Letters barring them from coming back on post are being mailed to them. There were 28 multiple offenders, who were charged with criminal trespassing and violation of an exclusion order.

Nearly 1,000 people demonstrated outside the main gates Sunday, which was the culmination of a four-day protest by people from as far away as Minnesota, New York and North Carolina.

The protesters marched onto the Fort Benning military reservation in a funeral-like procession, carrying empty black plywood coffins and white crosses.

Department of Defense police officers arrested the protesters after they walked approximately a quarter of a mile up Benning Boulevard.

The law enforcement officials loaded the crosses into the coffins before the protesters loaded the buses.

SOA Watch staged the demonstrations in remembrance of six Jesuit priests and two women co-workers killed in El Salvador Nov. 16, 1989. The protesters want the School of the Americas (SOA) closed.

Col. Roy Trumble, SOA commandant, said closing SOA wasn't a logical step for protesting the priests' murders.

"The School of the Americas can't be held accountable for the conduct of a few graduates," he said. "Bad things happen in spite of the training at the school. It's like calling for the close of Harvard's Engineering School because letter-bomber Theodore Kaczynski went there. It's not logical.

"According to Amnesty International and Washington Office on Latin America, Latin America has fewer human rights violations than any other region of the world. We believe SOA has had a positive effect on Latin America."

Post prepares holiday feast for Thanksgiving

USAIC Public Affairs

Fort Benning dining facilities are once again preparing for the Thanksgiving meal.

The preparations include 2,700 pounds of turkey, 2,000 pounds of ham, 1,000 pounds of beef, 800 pounds of shrimp and mixed nuts and 1,800 pounds of assorted fruits, according to Ed Hilton, Food Services chief, Directorate of Logistics.

The traditional holiday menu includes shrimp cocktail, roast turkey, baked smoked ham, steamship round, bread dressing and giblet gravy, and two types of potatoes — mashed and sweet. The vegetables to be served are green beans and corn.

Hilton said five different types of salads would be available — three-bean, potato, jellied fruit and chef's salad and a salad bar with cottage cheese and tomatoes.

For dessert pumpkin, pecan and mince meat pies will tempt those who aren't quite full, Hilton said.

On Thanksgiving Day, all retired and active-duty service members are invited to eat at the Follow Me Dining Facility, Building 73. It will be open from 11:30 a.m. to 2:30 p.m. The cost is $5.20 per person for E-5s and above and their families and $3.90 per person for E-4s and below and their families. For reservations, call Hilton at 545-3750, 545-7504 or 545-5053.

Soldiers given guidance on off-post BDU policy

By Mollie Herman
Bayonet correspondent

Because many Soldiers are unaware of the policy concerning wearing the BDU off post, Soldiers need to review the policy, according to Sgt. Maj. Arthur Van Allen, Garrison sergeant major.

"We need to clarify a lot of myths or assumptions about the policy and reinstate the procedures of what is proper attire for downtown," Van Allen said .

According to Army Regulation 670-1, Soldiers can wear the Class A, B or dress uniforms off post at any time. The Class A or B uniform is appropriate for off-post meetings and military or personal business.

Most Soldiers understand the regulation concerning the Class A, B or dress uniform, Van Allen said. It is in the wear of the BDUs that most Soldiers have questions.

Soldiers can only wear BDUs off post to conduct quick, personal business, like stopping for gas or convenience stores, according to U.S. Army Infantry Center Policy Memorandum 97-25. Further, Soldiers can wear BDUs to off-post activities, like farewell luncheons, but under no circumstances can the Soldiers drink alcohol while wearing BDUs.

"We have seen many Soldiers wearing BDUs out to dinner, shopping in the mall or to social gatherings," Van Allen said, "but the Soldiers are wrong to do so. The memorandum clearly prohibits Soldiers from wearing BDUs for any long term or after duty activities."

The memorandum also gives guidance for the Physical Fitness Uniform (PFU).

Soldiers are to wear the PFU for physical fitness training, organized sports or routine ground maintenance, such as grass cutting. Soldiers should never wear the PFU in places like the Post Exchange, commissary, Burger King or any other post convenience centers.

"Most assuredly, the PFU is never worn off post," Van Allen said.

Soldiers can wear the PFU only en route to and from quarters and the physical training site.

The regulation prohibits Soldiers from wearing any part of the PFU off duty, as casual wear.

Protesters: Words of wisdom from NCO who has seen one too many

By Sgt. 1st Class Larry Lane
USAIC Public Affairs Office NCOIC

Sgt. 1st Class Larry Lane has advice to those who insist on protesting.

Sunday was a good day to demonstrate at Fort Benning.

The sun was shining, the leaves were changing colors and the road was clear from Southgate to the Welcome Center. a clear path for the 601 protesters who were arrested for trespassing.

commentary

Some of the demonstrators were members of the SOA Watch, the group that would like to see the school closed.

I've been assigned in the Washington, D.C., area several times, so I consider myself well-schooled in how demonstrations work. After all, D.C. is the protest capitol of the U.S.

If you want to publicize your propaganda, your side of the story, your cause, just about every variety of media is headquartered in our nation's capital, waiting with an open ear and checkbook.

Of course, D.C. is both the center for all demonstrations and one of the most visited tourist spots in the U.S. next to Disney world.

This made it a lot of fun when friends and family wanted me to play personal tour guide the same weekend a rally was held for "the supporters of left-handed gay marsupials" or some other special interest.

I've seen just about every sex, sect and subset of our country pick up a banner and walk up Pennsylvania Avenue to wave accusing fingers at those working in the Capitol building or the White House, depending on who or what the demonstrators want to blame.

Whatever is bad surely must originate from "those people on the hill" or "those people in that building," some demonstrators will contend.

Sometimes a specific person is targeted and becomes the cause's pinata. But most often the bad guy is a faceless or nameless organization.

Which brings me to the "Idiot's Guide to Weekend Protests," my little freedom of speech aerobics.

This information can be used by demonstrators, spectators, organizers and anyone who has 10 minutes to read this or a bird cage in need of fresh lining.

•Protester should pack a lunch with energy bars and water. While most organizations are good at prying dollars from your pocket, there are no free lunches.

The waiting, marching and thrusting your fist in the air burns a lot of calories.

Of course, Fort Benning was nice enough to provide free chow for those protesters as they were processed and released back into the wild.

•Organizers should stop inviting movie stars to march. Actors do not not lend credibility to the cause. Haven't you seen the celebrity version of the "Wheel of Fortune" game show where the actor asks for a letter already on the board or can't pronounce the two-syllable word that is completely spelled out?

•If you're a spectator and suddenly want to become a protester, keep in mind there are a lot of cameras out there.

Will your grandmother at home watching CNN think you're dating that person marching beside you with your arm over his or her shoulder?

You know, that nongender specific person with red and purple dreadlocks, crucifix nose-piercings and tattoo of Yosemite Sam on the neck? Whatever, it's your scrapbook.

•When the sales person says the "donation" for the bumper sticker, button or T-shirt is going to the "legal defense fund," that doesn't mean the organizers are going to bail you out for "expressing your emotions." Bring bail money or don't buy a round-trip ticket if you plan on getting arrested.

•If a group, for example SOA Watch, has a homepage, that doesn't mean the group has a big support base or is supported by anyone other than the person who created the homepage.

Some groups use a homepage as an element that lends credibility or status to the group. Homepages are easy to construct and the information doesn't have to be founded in truth.

No one has the time to monitor all of the homepages on the Web so much of this information goes unchallenged. Term paper writers, are you listening? How do you know your source is credible?

•If a demonstration is held every year and after several years, only a handful of supporters return to march again, there's a good chance your cause is not valid.

For example, last weekend's demonstration had only 28 repeat performers. Hmm ... using my rudimentary math skills, 28 supporters subtracted from the rest of the world leaves a whole bunch of people.

•If a demonstration is held on a weekday or if the weather is cold and rainy, there's a good chance organizers, protesters and demonstrators won't show up.

I've always believed if protesters really want to show support, then they should spend a day of leave and show up on a weekday. Too many protesters look through the paper and decide "Hmm ... Ghostbusters V or protest for llama rights? What's closest to that good coffee place?"

The beautiful thing about America, is that we live in a democracy where anyone can write and say darned near anything he or she wants and rarely be held accountable for that opinion.

Sure, it's a two-edged sword because along with the good can come a bunch of bad, but it generally balances out.

There are a bunch of countries that don't let their people practice an American-like democracy, and the School of the Americas is one way the U.S. can share its philosophy with other countries that are building democracies with their people.

To seek the closure of the SOA because of some past graduates is an extremist perspective, like closing a police academy because one of its graduates was convicted of brutality.

Demonstrators give wrong impression on community

By Rich McDowell
USAIC Public Affairs Officer

"The truth is out there," according to the X-Files. About 1,000 truth seekers descended on Fort Benning Sunday.

But unlike Scully and Mulder who dig for the truth, these people came and listened to a rhetoric of lies and half-truths about why the School of the Americas should be closed.

commentary

It's interesting how nearly all of them were from out of town north of the Mason-Dixon Line.

I guess we backwoods Bubbas ain't smart enough to tell the difference between good and evil, we've got to be shown by outsiders.

And I must say the outsiders' propaganda machine is effective. Their books and intense pictures of torture and mayhem place all responsibility for all the ills in Latin America squarely at the door of the School of the Americas.

Church groups, Congress and half the population of Minnesota and Wisconsin seem to be falling for this gibberish.

The United States is not guiltless in the plight of the people of Latin America. One need only go back to 1954 to see the role the United Fruit Company played in getting the U.S. government to assist in the overthrow of the government of Guatemala, an action that the School of the Americas played no part in.

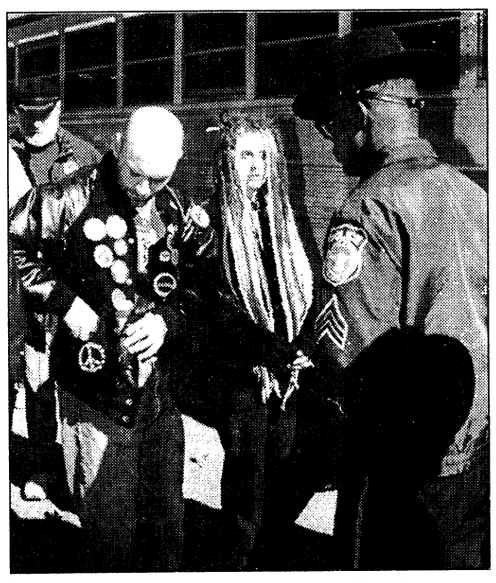
Nor can the tortures and murders perpetuated by Latinos on one another in the name of liberty, democracy, communism and religion be blamed on what was taught at the School of the Americas, whether the school was in Panama or the U.S. The arguments the prosecutors use for closing the school are outdated, never valid or specious. Yet it makes no difference to them. Instead, like so many cattle they get in their cars or chartered buses and come to Columbus to enlighten the locals to the evils of SOA.

They think they are on a holy crusade.

I followed one lady out of church last week. She stopped by the priest and proudly announced, "I'm from New York, and I'm here to protest."

Much to her visible disappointment the priest nodded and turned to the next parishioner.

Motel owners and restaurateurs may have been pleased by the extra business they received, but if the actions of the prosecutors in the restaurant I was in are indicative of what took place in other restaurants, then I'm sure the staff wasn't disappointed to see them leave.



It was like these Yankees were superior beings, bringing enlightenment and culture to our backwater town as they bossed the poor waiter about with their many demands.

New York can have people like that. Keep me ignorant. PLEASE!

Did they gain any converts? Probably not. Did we change anyone's mind with our arguments? Not likely.

But the demonstration was not a total washout.

Our military and Department of Defense police officers did win converts for the military.

Sgt. 1st Class Larry Lane

A Department of Defense policeman takes two demonstrators into custody.

These outstanding men and women did a noble job in handling the situation. In fact they did their job so well that this office received calls from throughout the country; from media and private citizens who marveled at the way the prosecutors were treated.

One man from New York even wants to organize his American Legion Post to raise money to support the National Infantry Museum; a sentiment he would certainly not have had, had he been roughed up.

American citizens have the right to protest — but not on a federal installation. Soldiers are sworn to uphold that right and enforce the laws. Our post police officers did both, nobly.

NCOA sergeant major retires

By Sgt. Marc G. Turchin
Bayonet assistant editor

Another era at Fort Benning came to end earlier this week when one of the most recognized leaders among those at Fort Benning retired after more than 27 years in the Army.

Command Sgt. Maj. Willie G. Wells stepped down and relinquished command of the Henry Caro Noncommissioned Officer Academy to Command Sgt. Maj. George R. Monk after being at the helm of the academy for more than three years.

The guest speaker at the ceremony was post Commanding General Maj. Gen. Carl F. Ernst. He said Wells defined the word professional.

"The words of the NCO creed, 'no one is more professional than I,' truly reflect Willie Wells," Ernst said. "He is a pro — in every sense of the word, he is a pro."

The Bayonet* got a chance to sit down with Wells and discuss his career and his thoughts on the future of the Army and the NCO.

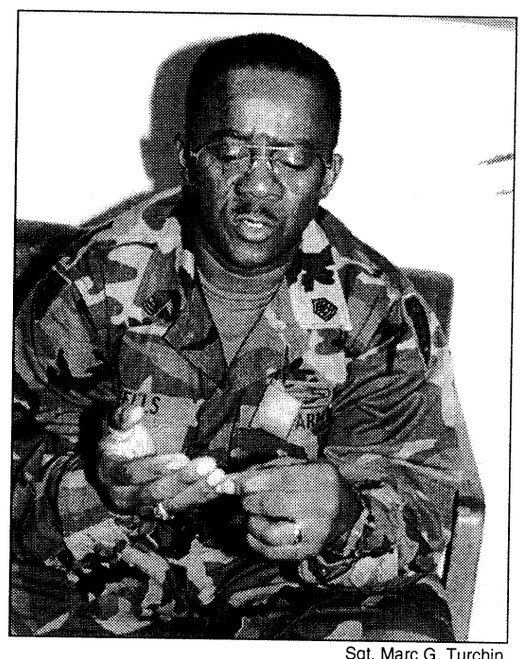
Wells entered the Army after being drafted in 1970. He spent a tour in Vietnam with the 1st Battalion, 52nd Infantry Regiment, 23rd Infantry Division at Chu Lai. After serving in Vietnam, Wells returned to the states and soon after was told to go to his first leadership school.



In a twist of fate, he said he got an article 15 and reenlisted on the very same day.

"I was supposed to go to the Basic Leadership Course (BLC) but I didn't want to and this is one of the reasons I got an article 15. The commander wanted me to go and told me I needed to go but at that time I didn't want to be a Soldier. I was drafted. When the first day of school came, I didn't show. The commander called me into his office. He first gave me the article 15 and a few hours later I reenlisted for six years. The next week, I was at BLC. To be honest with you, that is where I developed a hunger for knowledge. After that school, I took every opportunity to go to every military school I could. In my spare time, when the mission would allow, I took college courses and that's how I earned my masters degree."

What have been some of the best places you have been?

"That's difficult, because I have memories from all of my assignments. I really cherish the times I spent with the cadets at the University of Michigan. I am still in contact with many of them now. I really cherish my first battalion as a battalion sergeant major in Germany. If I really had to say there was one place where I came close to having a family, it was here at this academy.

"It's like I'm always with my family. When I go home I'm with my family and when I come to work I'm with my family. So I have the best of both worlds. I've got more than 100 instructors and I know them all. I know their kids and their spouses — you sort of get attached to them.

Sgt. Marc G. Turchin

Command Sgt. Maj. Willie Wells emphasizes a point.

Right now, I am closer to the academy and its people than anyone.

What's the biggest change you've see in the Army since you joined in 1970?

"In 1970 you had folks around who were drafted. Initially they had no direction in their life — didn't know what they wanted. Some of them were down right dirty. They had a choice — either you join the Army or go to jail. So you had people who didn't want to be in the Army.

Post postal service due to improve

By Kimberly Lester
Bayonet correspondent

Fort Benning residents are seeking answers to the recent problem concerning their mail.

Some residents have complained about mail being delivered as late as 5 p.m. and on some occasions returned as late as two weeks.

The Columbus Postmaster, Jerome Brown, said the problems are caused by the combination of territory, which demanded some route changes, due to their bargaining and seniority system.

"Fort Benning is not considered to be the best route," Brown said. "Senior carriers tend to bid on easier routes, leaving Fort Benning to less experienced carriers."

Regular route inspections look at each carrier's mail load. They try to adjust each mail load to eight hours in order to get carriers back by 5 p.m. The average time so far is 5:08 p.m.

When routes change and new carriers take over, there is a "learning curve" for new carriers to get into the routine. This learning process often results in later delivery. According to Brown, this procedure took longer than expected — but he said things are back to normal.

There are U.S. Postal Service Consumer Service Cards at the Fort Benning Post Office. Complete the number coded cards; include your city, state, zip code, and mail. Customer carbon copies are attached. Postal complaints can be directed to the Central Post Office during business hours from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. at 562-1760.

Post begins heritage month celebration

By Erin A. Nash
Special to the Bayonet©

Fort Benning kicked off its observation of Native American and Indian Heritage Month with a luncheon Nov. 4 at the Main NCO Club. This year's theme is "Exploring our Culture: Yesterday, Today and Tomorrow."

The luncheon started with a tribute by three active duty Native American Soldiers. Each read lines about Native Americans, such as "Like many of my brothers and sisters, we are called to service by name" and "I am a scout and platoon sharpshooter for Merrill's Marauders, a ranger unit in the China, Burma and India campaign."

Col. John C. Latimer, U.S. Army Infantry School, chief of staff said in his introduction of the guest speaker, "We all realize that we're all different but we're all the same. As long as we understand that we're all different and we all bring different capabilities to the table, we can work with each other effectively."

Latimer introduced guest speaker Joe Belt, a local artist. Belt's pencil drawings, his work in pastels, charcoal and watercolors have been featured on movie posters, book covers, album jackets and architectural murals.

Belt is originally from Lubbock, Texas and as a child spent a lot of time in New Mexico.

"I wanted my parents to leave me there, I felt so comfortable, like I belonged there. I wanted my parents to adopt an Indian baby," he said.

Belt went on to dispel myths typical of Native Americans.

"Their fighting skills came from hunting. They are not a warring people. Young Indians are sent into the woods to decide what they're destiny is. It's what's called a "vision quest." They have a fasting period, and after that time, probably from hunger, they hallucinate and have visions of anything from cougars to bears to eagles, which is how they get their Indian name."

Belt also explained the feathers Indians wear are earned for bravery, the paint they wear on their face is meaningful and that both Native American and Indian is politically correct.

After Belt spoke, Chiefie Roy, Vicki Standingdeer and Micah Swimmer danced the traditional Intertribal dance.

The artwork of Belt and various Indian memorabilia were available for viewing after the luncheon.

Sgt. 1st Class Ernest Jett, an Equal Opportunity advisor, said it was important to have such a luncheon "because it promotes cultural awareness. We can be sensitive of things they do and their contribution to our Armed Forces."

Wells: Retires, looks back on Army career

"After Vietnam, when I became a NCO, all the old-timers can tell you, NCOs, not taking anything from them, but I feel weren't as tactically and technically proficient as we should have been. The officers at the time could see that. That's really why we have the noncommissioned officers education system now. Because we identified that as being a problem and so what the Army did was formalize the training on the NCO side of the house and that's why they created institutions like this academy.

"The idea was to take young Soldiers at different times in their career and put them in the right school to prepare them for that next position.

"Young Soldiers coming into the Army today are very intelligent.

"When I was coming up as a young Soldier and someone would tell me to do something, I just did it. If you tell that to young Soldier now, he wants to know why. The NCO would tell you, 'what do you mean why?' You knew to just get out of there.

"But now you have to take time to explain to all the young NCOs why we do the things we do and that's a good thing. The only time it's bad is when young Soldiers don't understand there isn't enough time at that very moment to tell someone why you're doing something. But I'm a strong believer that when the opportunity does present itself, that you tell the Soldier why you have to do something.

Where do you see the Army going in the future?

"Everybody worries about changes that we go through. I'll be honest with you, the Army is like a rollercoaster — you're going to have good times and bad times. But we'll always find a way to rise to the occasion. We'll continue to do that. This is a good Army. Its been my career now for 27 years and its been good to me and I'll tell any young Soldier just starting out to stick with it. It's going to be a good career. There will be bumps in the road. But if you hang in there, the Army will take care of you.

"Today's Army is moving fast. A lot of people worry about downsizing, but hey, technology is here and it's here to stay. That's what I like about young Soldiers — they're ready for it and can easily grasp those things we need them to learn.

"In some cases, technology is beginning to replace certain Soldiers. Now I strongly believe you'll never replace the Infantrymen on the ground. You always have to have somebody to face the enemy — stand toe-to-toe and face-to-face. The 'spirit of the bayonet,' so to speak, will never go away.

"But how we fight, is going to change. There may be a time where maybe you'd take a platoon to complete a mission where in the future you may only take a squad because of the technology and weapons that they may have."

What would you say to Soldiers in the Army who think the Army owes them promotions?

"You have to have a system that's fair. What I mean by that is a young Soldier has to be able to say if I do these things, then my chances of being promoted are good. If you have a system where the Soldier does these things and still can't get promoted, then we need to go back and look at the system because something is wrong.

"What I tell all Soldiers is don't compete against your peers, compete against your standards. If you do this, you shouldn't have any problems getting promoted. When I was coming up in the ranks, I never worried about other guys on my left and guys on my right.

"When I was a young buck sergeant I knew I had to go to the Basic Noncommissioned Officers Course (BNCOC). I knew I had to take correspondence courses. I knew I had to get good ratings on my NCOERs. I knew I had to go to school at night and get a civilian education.

I did those things because I felt like it was going to give me what I call a competitive edge. I said to myself, 'If I do those things that other people are not doing, then it increases my chances of getting promoted.' In the end, the system will promote you."

In your opinion, what changes could be made to the promotion system so if nothing else, Soldiers would know why they aren't getting promoted?

"I'll be honest. If I was smart enough to do that, it would probably be implemented tomorrow.

The promotion system we have right now is good and it's fair. But it's numbers game.

"The problem is the Soldiers understand what it takes to get promoted and are doing those things and still aren't getting promoted. It's the system now. We've got to find a way to foresee the needs of the future.

"Until we get a system that's doing the things we want it to do, it's going to continue to create problems for the young Soldier."

Do you think the role of the command sergeant major is going to change and how important is the role of the sergeant major in the NCO support channel?

"It's very important. But I'm not saying that just because I'm a sergeant major. He has a historical presence as the senior enlisted advisor to a battalion commander and he's the one who supposed to go out and talk to the Soldiers. He is now the master trainer in a battalion also. But, he's basically the guy the enlisted Soldiers are supposed to be able to look up to know that he's there for them. He's one who stands toe-to-toe with the colonel and say, 'hey sir, we're not taking care of Soldiers.'

"We're lucky because once you make E-9, that's it. We don't mind telling people what we think and exactly how we feel. Believe it or not, all the commanders I've worked for them and that's really what they want. They want you to tell them. I'm not saying we're going to agree. But they want you to tell them. Hopefully you'll agree on some things, but you won't agree on everything. My job a lot of the times was to make recommendations to the commander and he'll make a decision. Once I make my recommendation, hey, my job is done. If he didn't do it, a lot of times I tried to go back and try and persuade him to see things my way.

"The role of the sergeant major I don't think will ever go away. If anything, I see the sergeants major getting an increase of responsibilities.

"If you don't think the role of the sergeant major is increasing look at the position I'm in — the commandant of the NCO Academy. Years ago an officer sat here and commanded the academy. It was then when someone said, 'hey, a sergeant major can do that."

As the Army continues to downsize, more and more responsibility is being placed on the NCO. With training being an NCO's business, will there ever be a time where the NCO will be over burdened with responsibility?

"Without a doubt no. We love responsibility. You cannot give us more than we can handle. I used to tell folks, 'you can work me long, but you can't work me hard.' What I mean by that is the more work you give a NCO, he'll always find a way to get it done.

"We could continue to downsize and create too many tasks for an individual to perform — that I don't want to see happen. But as far as giving an NCO more responsibility, I think it's going to increase."

Do you think female Soldiers will ever be allowed to enter the Infantry?

"I'm a strong believer that gender shouldn't be a major factor in determining what job you can perform. The factors I look at is the ability to do the job.

"If there are females out there who can out walk Willie Wells, can shoot straighter than Willie Wells and can carry a heavier load than Willie Wells, then why can't that female be an Infantry Soldier? That's the bottom line.

"Right now, we are at a point where the Army doesn't think the females, because of their build or structure as a whole, can perform in the Infantry under Wells.

"But I know as well as anyone there are females that can run faster than I can and carry heavier loads than I can. But that's not the 'norm.'

"If you look at the Army, career fields continue to open up for females.

I can remember talking with the former commander of the U.S. Army Physical Fitness School Col. Jeannie Picariello and hearing her talk about how the fitness level of females has increased. If that continues to happen, then yes, maybe one day you will see women in the Infantry."

Do you see any future changes in the Noncommissioned Officer Education System (NCOES)?

"First of all the NCOES is here to stay. If you look at all the key leaders — chief of staff of the Army, the Training and Doctrine Command commander even the Commanding General of this installation — they will tell you they totally support the NCOES.

"This academy is growing. In January, Command Sgt. Maj. George Monk will have 700 students going through the school at one time because of the BNCOC consolidation. Plus, ANCOC numbers will be near 200 and the PLDC students will add to that number.

"We demonstrated that we had the credentials and ability to train all the Infantry BNCOC Soldiers throughout the Army. The Army listened to us and decided it was a good idea. We are going to balance that course right now.

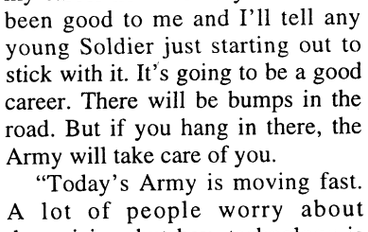
"We have Soldiers in the classroom receiving instruction from Fort Bliss, Texas. That is the future. People don't want to admit it but there's going to come a time where an instructor will be teaching to more than one classroom at a time. That's going to happen right here in this academy because we're getting ready to go to classroom XXI and there's a lot of things you can do. A lot of folks say that's not good, but I say if technology is going to make it better, you might as well get on the bandwagon."

What are your plans for retirement?

"I'm going to take off the uniform and put on another uniform. Probably a business suit and I'm going to be working downtown Columbus.

I'm looking forward to that. I'm retiring, but I'm really not — I'm just changing careers. I'll be honest with you. Its been a long 20 years. A lot of folks have asked me as I leave what do I want to be remembered for.

I tell everyone, 'you want to remember me, just say I loved Soldiers.' I'm a people person. My word is my bond. If I say I'm going to help you, trust me, you can take it to the bank."



for the record

Last week's Bayonet incorrectly reported the Officers' Wives' Club earned $36,000 through the Craft Bazaar last year.

It should have read they gave away $36,000 to the club scholarships and welfare projects last year.

Riggers battle for 'best' title

By Sgt. Marc G. Turchin
Bayonet assistant editor

Proficiency is the key to being a skilled worker. It demonstrates a person's ability to complete a task.

A Soldier's proficiency is shown by how good a person is at their job. No matter what the job is, a Soldier is a better Soldier if his or her job is performed effectively and efficiently.

Recently, members of Company E, 1st Battalion (Airborne), 507th Infantry, 11th Infantry Regiment, found out who are the best at their jobs.

These Soldiers, riggers — ensure parachutes are packed properly and open without problem. Many Soldiers depend on them for their lives.

Packing parachutes is not a one-step process and this competition, the "Rigger Rodeo," encompassed almost the entire spectrum of the MOS.

Besides finding out who is the best rigger, the competition has another reason for being conducted.

"This competition builds esprit de corps and harnesses unit cohesion," said Chief Warrant Officer 2 Marsha L. Billodeaux, air drop systems technician.

The competition also has a team competition. Eighteen teams competed this year with each team consisting of three members — one NCO and two E-4s and below. In the end, awards are given out to the best individual and team.

Before any awards were given out, riggers had to go through eight stations. Each station had a maximum score of 100 points.

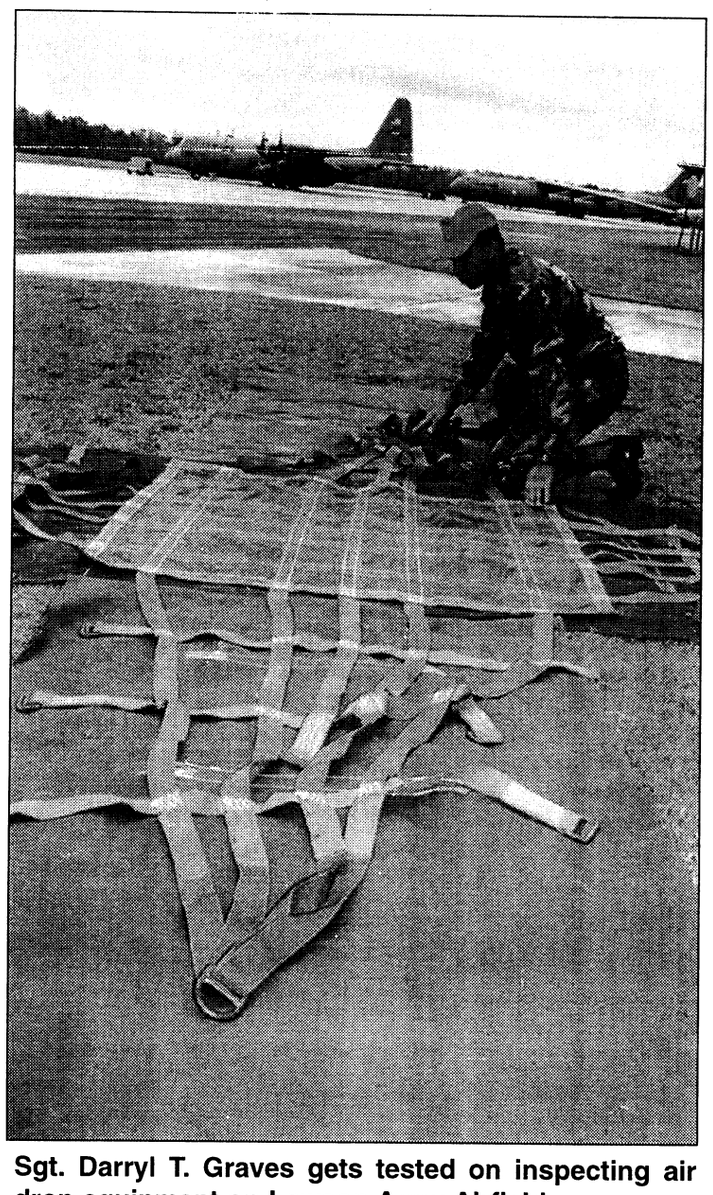
The stations included rigging an A-22 container, a bundle, which can be dropped from an airplane; inspecting air drop equipment; packing a T-10C parachute; conducting a technical rigger inspection on a T-10 reserve parachute and a MC1-1C parachute; sewing a patch on a parachute; recovering a G-12 cargo parachute; a written exam covering all areas of the rigger field and an Army Physical Fitness Test (APFT).

"I had a pretty good time doing it," said Spc. Kenneth N. Coley. "We got to do things we don't get to do a lot."

While Coley thought the competition was a good time, others said it broke up a routine.

"The competition gave us some time away from the monotony of the everyday thing," said Pfc. Joseph H. Mussie. "Plus, I didn't get to compete in last year's competition."

The three-day competition was completed last week except for the APFT test which was taken back in October. The competition was judged solely by the section and platoon sergeants.



Billodeaux said some Soldiers found the competition harder than others.

"It varies for each individual," Billodeaux said. "Packing is pretty easy for them because that's what they do, but sewing the patch, as far as the scores show, was the hardest station."

Each station had a time limit, so the faster the Soldiers finished, the better the score. But during inspections, the Soldiers were required to find things wrong with the equipment. This was also added into the final calculations.

When it was done, Sgt. Patricia A. Burdette was awarded best rigger for the second year in the row. Following Burdette was Sgt. Scott G. Bockelman in second and Sgt. Byron D. Fry in third.

In the team competition, the team of Burdette and Spc. Jerome M. Cramer and Spc. Richard L. Riffe took top honors.

Post unit 'engineers' training with SOA

By Spc. Alberto Betancourt
SOA Public Affairs Office

Honduran cadets attending the U.S. Army School of the Americas' Engineer Course witnessed how the big boys tackle the battlefield during a training exercise with the 317th Engineer Battalion (Mechanized) Nov. 5.

1st Sgt. Oscar Holness, Company C, 317th Eng. Bn., said this was the second time the battalion and the school coordinated together for training.

"These training exercises give our Soldiers the opportunity to talk and collaborate with soldiers from other countries," he said. "We share with them what the mechanized engineer's concept is all about."

Holness said the cadets visited the battalion's motor pool and saw several maintenance operations. At Training Area BB-4, they received familiarization and some hands-on training with the M-9 Armored Combat Earth Mover, Volcano Mine Dispenser, Mine Clearing Line Charge and the M-60 Armored Vehicle Launch Bridge (AVLB).

They also saw a video showing the 317th's recent maneuvers at the National Training Center, located at Fort Irwin, Calif.

"We're here to help each other out," said Holness. "This was great for us and for the School of the Americas."

The SOA Engineer Course is a four-week program consisting of classroom studies and field exercises. It exposes the cadets to the Army engineers' mission on the battlefield — mobility, countermobility and survivability.

"What we teach at SOA is U.S. doctrine," said Staff Sgt. Carlos Montalvo, Sapper instructor, SOA's Company A. "During this exercise we tried to familiarize the cadets with the equipment and capabilities of an American mechanized engineer element."

He said the exercise was a success because the cadets saw how the engineers operate on the battlefield. For some of the cadets, the training exercise was a dream come true.

"I've always been very interested in the engineer field," said Wilmer Salgado, one of the Honduran cadets. "We don't have this type of equipment in Honduras. Because of our terrain, it would be excellent for us to have a mobile bridge like the AVLB."

Salgado said the entire engineer course was very beneficial; and when he returns to Honduras, he plans to use all the instruction he received.

Since 1946, the U.S. Army School of the Americas has trained nearly 59,000 Latin American military, policemen and civilians from 22 nations. Its doctrine mirrors other U.S. Army curricula, but all instruction is provided in Spanish.

Virtual reality adds to readiness

By Lt. Col. Tim Mishkofski
TISM - Bradley

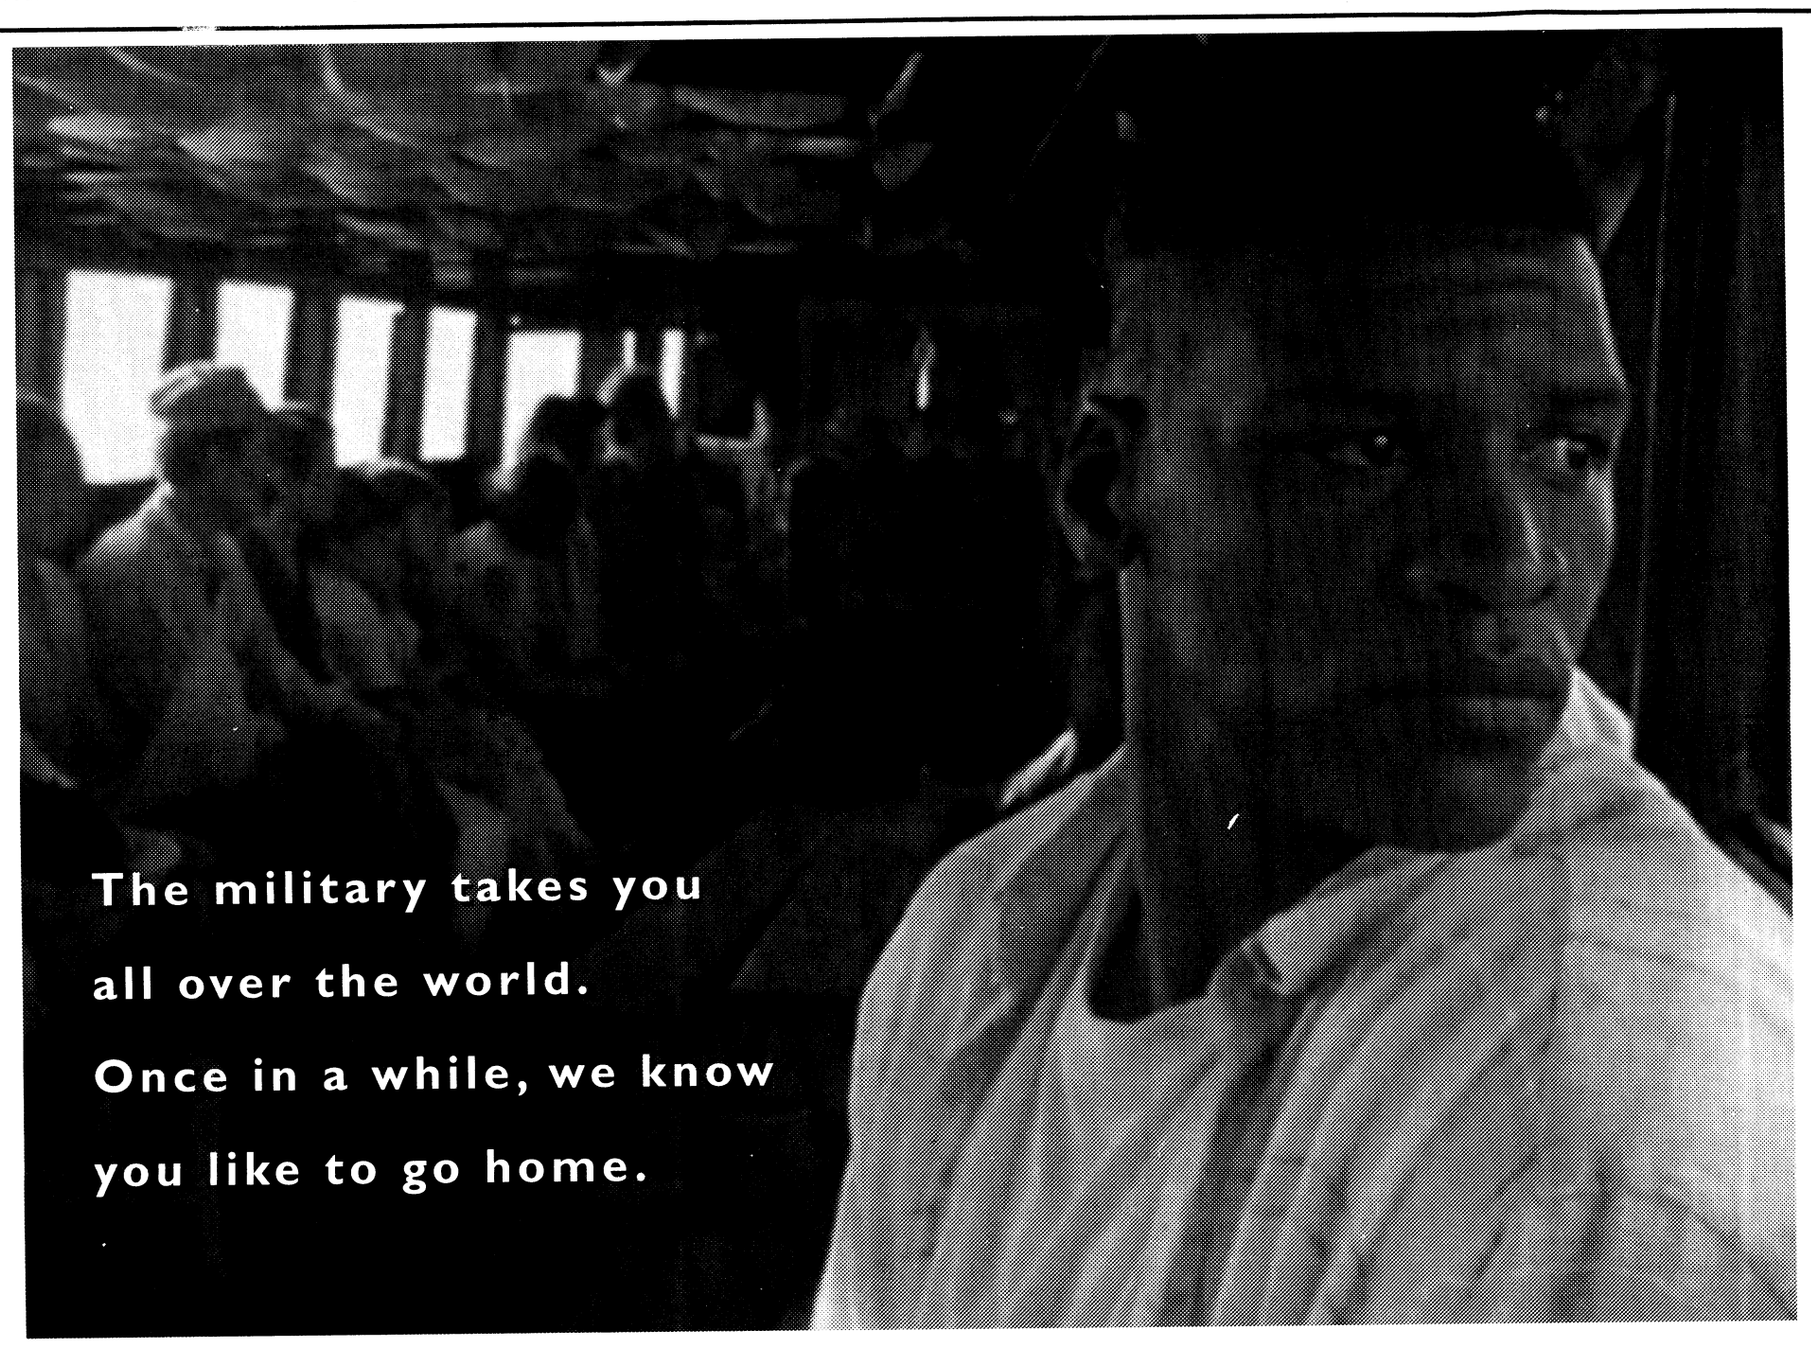
Gunnery for the digitized A-3 model Bradley Fighting Vehicle has entered the world of virtual reality via the Bradley Advanced Training System (BATS), recently installed at the 29th Infantry Regiment's Collins Training Center at Fort Benning.

"People have walked up to me and said, "What the heck is BATS?" said Staff Sgt. Mark Andrews, Bradley Master Gunner. "And I have to tell them it's a whole new thing, not just a Conduct of Fire Trainer (COFT) like earlier Bradleys had."

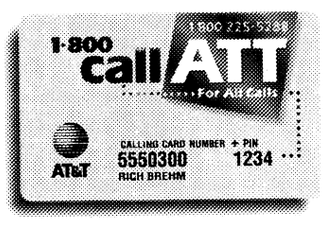
BATS is more than a virtual battlefield.

"BATS comes out of the Combat Simulation Integration Laboratory (CSIL) at United Defense LP in San Jose, Calif. In the same manner that Boeing built the 777 jetliner — in a virtual world first — and only later bending aluminum — United Defense and the Infantry Center are developing the A-3 Bradley," said Lt. Col. Ted Johnson, project manager.

"We've taken the gunnery slice out of a larger virtual world and deployed it to Fort Benning in the form of BATS and the Bradley Desktop Trainer (BDT)," Johnson said. "With the help of master gunners from the Infantry and Armor schools, we were able to deliver BATS nearly two years ahead of schedule. It will not only support gunnery for Limited User Test 1 (LUT 1) on post this December, but also a virtual live-fire Thursday. This "virtual" live-fire enabled STRICOM, the simulation developer, to learn more about what we need to fight on the digitized battlefield."



From appearances, the BATS area at the Collins Training Center looks like a Bradley turret mock-up surrounded by 12 or so Silicon Graphics video displays.



"The digitization embedded in the A-3 decreases decision times for engagements. The second generation FLIR suite, including the Commander's Independent Viewer (CIV) vastly extends the individual crew's battlespace. As a result, the BATS simulation has to show the 300-400 percent more target detections provided by the A-3. Then, it's up to the crew to deal with those targets," said Sgt. 1st Class George Moore, Chief of the Bradley Proponency Office (BPO) at the 29th Infantry Regiment.

The BATS at Fort Benning features an exact digitized replica of the terrain found at the National Training Center, Fort Irwin, Calif. It is envisioned that Soldiers preparing to deploy anywhere in the world may one day simply call up the digitized record of where they're deploying to — and "fight" again and again on the "terrain" they're about to land on.

The Bradley Desktop Trainer (BDT) is a further extension of the Silicon Valley laboratory. The BDTs provide a standard, off the shelf hardware package for training on the digitized A-3 Bradley. While it has a mouse and a keyboard, it also takes commands from an A-3 gunner's handstation. It has touch screen graphics that simulate the inside of the turret, enabling crews, working in a suite of BDTs, to not only fire at targets, but practice digitized navigation and command and control procedures. The BDTs compliment and support the virtual laboratory afforded by BATS.

"In all, we plan to issue BATS on a basis of one per battalion. Because it's digitized, it's probable we will be able to adjust the simulation to compliment tactics, techniques, and procedures required for different METT-T conditions. For instance, a Military Operations in Urban Terrain (MOUT) scenario, featuring Bradleys combined with digitized "Land Warrior" type dismounts, can be written and trained hundreds of times while we develop the concept for that type of warfare," Moore said.

Family members benefit from ACAP

By Chick Eagle
Army Career and Alumni Program

Army Career and Alumni Program (ACAP) services are also available for spouses of separating Soldiers.

"Spouses of separating Soldiers are reminded and encouraged to participate in ACAP transition services and events," said Chick Eagle, ACAP and Job Assistance Counselor.

"It is recommended that spouses begin at the same starting point as their sponsors by attending the three-day ACAP separation benefits and services briefings and transition workshops. Spouses of retiring Soldiers should attend to fully understand Survivor Benefit Plan (SBP) options," Eagle said.

The ACAP presentations and workshops begin Monday at 7:30 a.m. in Classroom 30, Infantry Hall every week that does not have a holiday. Presentations are modified for retiring service members and spouses the second week of the month. Call the ACAP Center at 545-2308 or 545-2309 to confirm dates and times.

"The last day of the three-day ACAP presentation details the requirements for a successful job search. Spouses who have never entered the job market or who want to re-enter the work force will find this workshop as beneficial as it is to the service member," Eagle said.

Individual counseling sessions are also available for spouses at the ACAP center in Soldiers' Plaza, Building 2634. Individual job or career counseling for spouses helps identify and assess employment skills, establish goals and identify potential employment opportunities.

Separating Army families are provided many services to assist with transition to civilian life and the civilian job market. Spouses interested in finding out more about their ACAP job assistance benefit can call the Fort Benning ACAP Center at 545-2308 or 545-2309.

IOBC teaches lessons about Army, training

By Kelly Twedell
Infantry Officers Basic Course

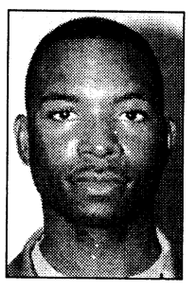
Sure, all Army posts have family support programs, but Fort Benning took it a step further for the wives of Infantry Officer Basic Course (IOBC) Soldiers. In Company A, 2nd Battalion (IOBC), 11th Infantry Regiment, the 6-97 graduating class had a total of 10 wives that participated in some of the training exercises.

During this rare opportunity, the wives had a chance to fire both the M-249 SAW and the M-60 machine gun, go through the obstacle and confidence courses, jump out of the 34-foot jump towers, don battle dress uniforms (BDU), go through the Combat Water Survival Swim Test and clear rooms at the McKenna Military Operation on Urban Terrain site.

"Being out there we were hit with the realization of how hard our husbands work," said Sandra Comte, wife of one of the students. "I respect their job even more knowing what they go through."

Not only was IOBC a time of learning for second lieutenants, but for their wives as well.

"It was exciting to watch my prior-enlisted husband being molded into an officer," said Gretchen Mayfield. Suzy Ellerson, wife of Maj. Geoffrey Ellerson, commander, Company A, initially hosted an informal meeting for the ladies to give them basic information about what Fort Benning had to offer and how to get involved. Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 1st Bn., 11th Inf. Regt., offered leadership seminars for the wives to learn the importance of the role a platoon leader's wife can play. Army Family Team Building (AFTB) gave a class that was an introduction to the basics of Army life and how to take advantage of the benefits it offers.



Jennifer Lewis, wife of Capt. Russell Lewis, a Platoon trainer for Co. A, hosted a customs and courtesies class in her home to give the wives some insight on etiquette and military functions.

Using their newfound skills, the ladies hosted their first formal at the home of post deputy Commanding Brig. Gen. Walter Wojdakowski. Although formals do not occur frequently, the ladies learned military etiquette through writing invitations, making name tags, giving the welcome address with introductions and preparing food for such an event.

Initially, the spouses were unsure of what to 'chat' about with these ladies, but the wife of Commanding General Maj. Gen. Carl F. Ernst, Linda Ernst, put everyone at ease with her spirit and humorous Army stories. The 'seasoned' wives provided numerous tips on coping with problems that may arise with moving, maintaining a career and family and the politics of the Army.

As the students move on to their units, their spouses can follow with confidence — having gained a better understanding of what Army life will entail for their families.

Wilson students learn about other cultures

By Erin A. Nash
Special to the Bayonet©

Students from Margaret Koger's second-grade class at Wilson Elementary School are participating in 'World School,' an international educational program in which participating schools, classrooms and other youth organizations from all over the world are connected via computer networks such as the Internet.

Koger's class communicated through e-mail with the island of Woleai in the nation of Yap, which is a part of Micronesia, an island group in the western Pacific Ocean east of the Philippines. Woleai is about the same size as Fort Benning.

Japan brought its technology to Yap, enabling them to communicate with Koger's students in a month-long project, Koger said. Most of the correspondence was asking and answering questions.

"You get to learn about what they do and how they have fun," said Alexandria Kellum, daughter of Carmen and Cpl. Doyle Adams, 1st Battalion, 10th Field Artillery Regiment.

The second-graders learned that the differences between their lives and that of Yap students is very different.

"They learned there are only three cars on the island and most people don't wear shoes. The amount of electricity is regulated and the main mode of transportation is canoes," Koger said.

"People keep pigs as pets and climb coconut trees for the fruit," said Wren Fleming, son of Maria and David Runyon.

Erin A. Nash

DeShawn Bennett, left, son of Sgt. 1st Class Agnes Bennett, NCOA; Kazue Takemoto, center, daughter of Josefina and Cpl. Shignmi Takemoto, 2nd Battalion, 69th Infantry (Armored); and, A.J. Smith, right, son of Tracee and Staff Sgt. Ronald Smith, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division (Mechanized); look at pictures of the nation of Yap on a cd-rom in the media center. They are studying Yap as part of a World School project.

The Yap students ranged in age from elementary school to teenagers and were very interested in the effects of World War II. Their islands were devastated by the war, Koger said. Older students at Wilson will correspond with the children, since they are studying the war.

Koger's students are planning a Yapese celebration instead of a traditional Thanksgiving holiday. They are going to eat traditional Yapese food, sing songs and dance, have a weaving activity and a thu-tying contest (traditional outfit of a Yap man). Everything the citizens of Yap eat is from the ocean or grown.

Students are collecting books they will package and send to Woleai along with a videotape of their celebration. They are making a treasure chest of Georgia items to send to the students, Koger said.

Koger also said students are no longer able to e-mail the Yap students, since Japan took its technology to Siberia for another project. The children are now communicating through mail.

Army Emergency Relief

Offers scholarships for needy college students

Army Emergency Relief

Soldiers with college-age children often wonder how they can afford education costs.

Many people don't realize part of the answer may be found from Army Emergence Relief (AER).

The AER provides financial assistance through scholarships.

This relatively little-known resource can make college possible for many people, according to Al Deane, Army Emergency Relief officer.

To qualify for financial assistance through AER, students must be enrolled, accepted or pending acceptance as a full time student for the entire academic year in a post-secondary educational institution approved by the U.S. Department of Education.

Scholarships are available through AER. To be eligible, a student must be: unmarried, a U.S. citizen or permanent U.S. resident, under the age of 22 on June 1, preceeding the beginning of the school year for which the scholarship is requested and an authorized family member of an active duty, retired, or deceased Soldier.

Scholarships are awarded based on financial need, academic achievement and individual accomplishments.

Students who are awarded scholarships must reapply each year. Students must be in good academic standing and have a minimum cumulative grade point average of 2.0 to receive scholarships.

By requiring students to reapply each year, AER can monitor the progress they are making.

As part of the application, students must submit a family financial analysis and an essay describing their goals and accomplishments.

Applications must be submitted by March 1, for the upcoming academic year. Initial applications and request forms are available at AER, Building 2643, Soldiers' Plaza, 8 a.m. - 5 p.m. Monday through Friday. Scholarship letters detailing if the applicant has been accepted and how much money they will receive will be mailed in mid-May, from Headquarters, AER.

CG speaks about choices at Faith Middle School

By Staff Sgt. Lori Egan
Bayonet editor

The Faith Middle School student body received an unprecedented visit from the Commanding General of Fort Benning recently.

Maj. Gen. Carl F. Ernst visited the school to encourage the students to make "the right choices."

"The choices you make between now and the next five, six years are instrumental in determining the future," he said.

"Make sure your choices keep you on the path to your goals.

"I'm calling you 'young adults,' not 'children,' because you are at a critical point — middle school, which is the bridge to high school. High school is the stepping stone to the rest of your life."

Ernst told the young adults no one could make the choices for them that are instrumental in determining their future.

"You will make those choices. No one will make them for you — not your parents, not your friends — you."

Ernst told the students to use the "proud test" when making decisions.

The proud test is "Will the action I'm about to take make my parents proud? My teachers? My grandparents?" If not, then don't do it, he said.

After telling the students about choices, goals and how the two help determine a youth's future, Ernst answered the students questions.

The questions ranged from Fort Benning's BB gun and pet policy to the size of quarters, pay for privates and why Soldiers are being sent to Bosnia.

When answering the questions, Ernst told the students how proud he was of their parents.

"Your parents who are Soldiers are deploying at a higher rate than we've ever had in our Army and they have my upmost respect and admiration," Ernst said.

"The killing and dying stopped in Bosnia when the U.S. Army appeared. That is what your parents and other Soldiers do everyday. I'm very proud of your parents and I hope you are too."

Dr. Beth Middlemiss, principal, said it was the first time the commanding general ever came to Faith to speak to the students.

"It is a first for a commanding general to come and impart what he thinks, to encourage the children and to really listen to the children and answer their questions," she said.

"General Ernst sent a message to most of the students that we need to set our goals before we go and do something wrong," said seventh-grader Chris Adams, son of Leslie and Capt. Bernard Ethridge, Headquarters and Headquarters Battery, 1st Battalion, 10th Field Artillery Regiment.

"He taught me a lot about what I need to do to set my goals."

Before speaking to the students, the "Hooah tape" was shown to the student body. As Soldiers fast-roped out of

Family housing holiday decoration policy

With the approach of the holidays, many wish to decorate their quarters in celebration of the season. Doing so requires prudence in the interest of safety, facility upkeep, and energy conservation. Holiday decorations will conform to the following:

Exterior

•Roofs — no decorations, lighted or unlighted, are allowed on quarters roofs, as their installation can be dangerous to individuals and cause damage to roofs.

•Elsewhere — decorations may be affixed to quarters walls, the underside of eaves, and displayed elsewhere in adjoining yards. When attaching decorations to the quarters, use the smallest possible fasteners (staples are a good device). Use only Underwriter's Laboratory (UL) electrical decorations.

Interior

Do not overload electrical circuits. Do not leave tree lights and candles unattended while burning.

Given our ever-diminishing funding resources, energy conservation is important. Be judicious in your use of electrical decorations.

Do not turn on outside electrical decorations until dusk and turn them off prior to midnight. Moderation in the use of electrical decorations will allow everyone to enjoy the holiday season.

Thanksgiving Day garbage schedule

There will be no refuse or recycle collection Thursday.

Those areas normally scheduled for Thursday pick-up will be picked up Dec. 1. Refuse and recycle normally scheduled for pick up on Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday, or Friday will not be affected.

Q: I see a lot of 1-800 numbers posted in area free papers for loans. Are these legitimate businesses?

A: If you ever look at the classified ads in the various free newspapers that circulate around the area, you have probably noted numerous ads, all listing 1-800 numbers, which offer fantastic deals on guaranteed loans.

You need to be aware that many of these are traps for the unwary.

A common 1-800 ad scam being operated right now is the "advance fee loan" scam. In this scam, the consumer is attracted to an ad offering guaranteed financing.

Usually, the consumer has had credit problems and is looking either to reestablish credit or for a loan to consolidate all those debts into one single payment.

When the consumer makes the call, he or she is told that certain fees will have to be paid in advance in order to place the loan or to cover administrative costs in setting up the loan.

These fees have ranged anywhere from $150 to $350. If possible, the "lender" will try to get payment on the consumer's credit card or by getting the consumer to authorize a direct debit from a checking or savings account.

Of course, once they get the money, there is no loan for the consumer.

The Federal Trade Commission does work at investigating and prosecuting these cases; however, the individuals who run these scams move from state to state and form company after company in order to keep ahead of the law.

So what can you do?

First, know the person or business with whom you are dealing. This means staying out of the classifieds altogether, your safest bet.

Not surprisingly, most businesses which practice consumer fraud never target consumers who are located in the state where the business is located.

Thus, try to do business with local companies (obviously, there are a number of highly reputable national business concerns with whom you can safely do business, but they rarely advertise in the classifieds).

If you're dealing with a 1-800 classified ad company, get information about their identity before doing business. Check with the Better Business Bureau in that area.

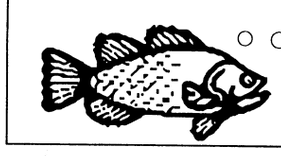
Second, if you must call a 1-800 classified ad, never give the other party any banking or credit information.

Some of these individuals will do and say anything to get that information out of you.

They will tell you that they need it for credit verification purposes and that no charges will be made to your account.

Don't believe it. Insist that before you give them any such information, they will have to send you hard information on the product or service they're offering, including the financial terms of the sale.

Third, don't agree to pay in advance for anything, especially if it involves services, such as loans, credit repair, and the like.



Be aware that sometimes, especially with services, there are other, less expensive ways of obtaining them.

For example, there are a number of 1-800 ads which offer information about government auctions of automobiles — for a price.

Most of this information is publicly available, especially on the internet. Most auctions of such property are also advertised in the legal section of the classifieds. Why pay for what you can get free?

If you feel that you have been the victim of a 1-800 classified ad scam, call the Legal Assistance Division for an appointment with one of our attorneys.

At the very least, we need to know about fraud being practiced on Soldiers and family members in this area. The telephone number is 545-3281.

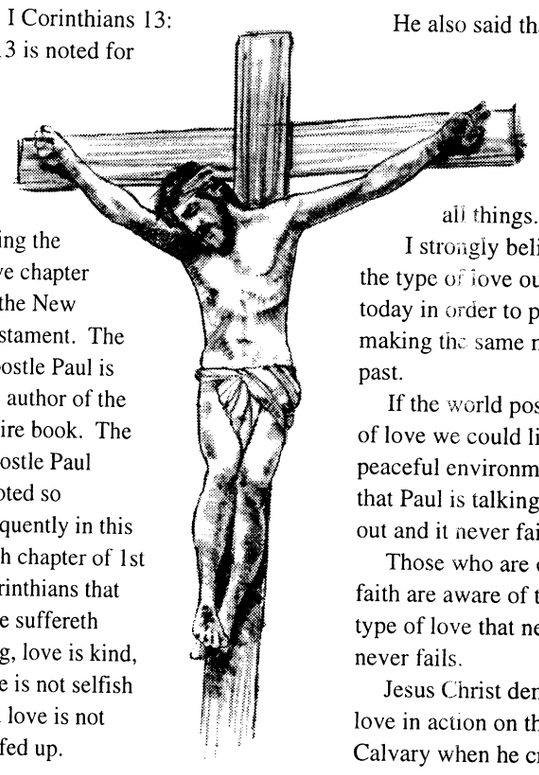
God teaches through apostles love never fails for all

By Chaplain (Maj.) Andrew J. Bullard III
Martin Army Community Hospital

reflections



As I personally reflect upon the month of November, two important dates stand out in my mind. The dates are Veterans Day and Thanksgiving.

It is amazing that these two very crucial events occurred in the same month.

Are we suppose to thank God for all the lives that were lost in wars past or are we to be grateful for those who sacrificed their lives in preservation of world peace?

Well, I believe that love has a lot to do with both of these questions.

I Corinthians 13: 1-13 is noted for being the love chapter in the New Testament. The Apostle Paul is the author of the entire book. The Apostle Paul quoted so eloquently in this 13th chapter of 1st Corinthians that love suffereth long, love is kind, love is not selfish and love is not puffed up.

He also said that love beareth all things, believeth all things, hopeth all things and love endureth all things.

I strongly believe that this is the type of love our world needs today in order to prevent us from making the same mistakes of the past.

If the world possessed this type of love we could live together in a peaceful environment. This love that Paul is talking about never runs out and it never fails.

Those who are of the Christian faith are aware of the source of this type of love that never runs out and never fails.

Jesus Christ demonstrated this love in action on the cross of Calvary when he cried out to his Father to forgive his persecutors.

Is it possible to possess such a love in one's heart? I believe that the weapon of love is more powerful than an M-16 or a tank. What we really need to use in our society today is not an M-16, but John 3:16.

Yes, it might seem childish and simple, but I think that it wouldn't hurt anyone to practice living John 3:16.

"For God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whoever believeth in him shall not perish, but have everlasting life."

This type of love will never run out. This type of love will never fail us.

BBB warns to investigate before investing

Georgia Better Business Bureau

The Better Business Bureau (BBB) joined with the Federal Trade Commission (FTC) in launching a consumer education initiative on investment fraud.

"If we can alert more consumers to the tell-tale signs of fraudulent investments, we will help to reduce the power of unscrupulous operators who prey on gullible investors," said Lou Marcotte, BBB president. "The age-old message — to investigate before you invest — remains as relevant as ever, no matter who's peddling the get-rich-quick message or how the fraudulent investment is being touted."

Over the years, BBBs have assisted millions of consumers and businesses looking for information on investment-related businesses and recent statistics indicate investment fraud may be on the increase. In 1996, BBBs nationwide received 327,000 investment-related inquiries, a 31 percent increase over the prior year. The number of complaints filed with BBBs against various investment-related businesses rose 46 percent between 1995 to 1996.

While many investment offers are legitimate, the BBB advises consumers to take the time to carefully examine each one before committing to anything. To help investors avoid investment-related frauds and scams, the BBB offers the following advice:

•Be wary of unsolicited phone calls, letters, e-mail messages or personal visits from strangers offering quick-profit schemes that require an immediate investment.

•Don't fall for promises that you can "double your money" or expect spectacularly high returns on your investment within a short period of time.

•Turn down investment opportunities claiming that time is of the essence and "tomorrow will be too late."

•Always demand written information about the organization behind the investment plan and its track record. Bear in mind, though, that slick brochures and upscale marketing materials can be utterly false.

•Be suspicious of claims of "inside information," hot tips and rumors that supposedly will give you a big advantage over other, less knowledgeable investors.

•Ask for a prospectus, financial statement or similar document before you consider investing. Then read the small print carefully and make sure you understand the terms thoroughly before signing any kind of contract. If you don't understand the investment, don't buy it.

•Contact your state securities agency to find out if the promoter and investment are properly registered in your state.

•Contact your Better Business Bureau to determine whether there have been any previous inquiries or complaints about the company. Request a reliability report on the firm. Whenever possible, deal with established businesses whose reputations are known and respected in their communities.

As part of the Better Business Bureaus' continuing efforts to educate consumers on investment issues, the Council of Better Business Bureaus and the North American Securities Administrators Association are publishing a book for consumers entitled "How to be an Informed Investor." Available in late August, the book will alert consumers to the workings and warning signs of investment fraud and provides the informational tools needed to make wise investment decisions.

The guidebook will also provide descriptions of different types of investment schemes, both old and new.

The BBB also offers "Tips On" — booklets for consumers on a variety of investment-related topics, including financial planners; multi-level marketing; and work-at-home schemes. To order a booklet, contact your local Better Business Bureau.

CPAs advise planning for retirement

Georgia Society of CPAs

With the number of years people are spending in retirement increasing, it's become more important than ever to plan your retirement budget carefully. If you're not sure how much you'll need to finance your leisure years, read what the Georgia Society of Certified Public Accountants has to say about developing a retirement budget.

Lifestyle decision

CPAs say you'll need 70 to 80 percent of your preretirement income to maintain your standard of living in retirement. However, the exact amount depends on the type of retirement you have in mind. For example, some retirees who have traveled extensively on business may look forward to spending their retirement years close to home. Others have long dreamed of a retirement filled with trips to exotic destinations. The more expensive your hobbies, interests and leisure time activities, the more money you'll need in retirement.

Assessing your expenses

While some of your expenses will remain the same in your retirement years, others may not. Take the time before you reach retirement to estimate these expenses so that you can anticipate how much retirement income you'll need. For example, you can count on spending less on work-related expenses, such as business clothing, dry cleaning, lunches out and commuting costs. If your mortgage will be paid off by the time you retire, you won't need to send that monthly check to the bank, but keep in mind that there's no getting away from property taxes, homeowners insurance and maintenance expenses, all of which are likely to increase over time. And remember, when you're in the house more often, you can expect to pay more for heat, air conditioning, electric and other utilities.

Taxes are another area where you should see expenses drop. At least part of your Social Security benefits will be tax free, and since the tax rules don't consider pension payments earned income, you won't pay Social Security taxes on your monthly pension. Your total income is likely to be less in retirement than it was while you were working, which means you'll pay less income tax.

One expense you're likely to significantly increase after retirement is the cost of health care. As employers cut back on health care coverage for retirees, more retirees are faced with the expense of buying health insurance on their own. Add the cost of out of pocket medical expenses, like prescription drugs, which are not covered by some plans and health care becomes a major budget item.

When planning your retirement budget keep in mind that you'll need to factor in inflation to account for the gradual increase in the cost or living. According to The Wall Street Journal, inflation has averaged 4 percent in the United States since 1926. If you need help determining how inflation impacts your retirement budget, you might want to consult with a CPA.

Stretching your retirement dollars

If you're concerned about outliving your retirement funds, don't despair. There are some ways you can extend your retirement nest egg.

Here are a few suggestions.

•Make a move. If your current home is bigger than you need, consider selling it and relocating to an area where the cost of living is lower or to a smaller home with lower taxes.

•Consider a reverse mortgage. If you choose to stay put, a reverse mortgage can help you tap into the equity in your home. Essentially, you borrow against your home's value and you receive the proceeds in the form of regular monthly payments, as a lump sum, a line of credit or some combination of the above. However, CPAs recommend that you take the time to understand the financial implications of reverse mortgages before entering into such arrangements.

•Rent out a room. If your children have moved out of the nest and you live near colleges or universities, consider renting a room in your home to a student.

•Get a post-job job. The economic reality of today is that many retirees will need to work at least part-time in retirement. Your employment income will help pay some of your living expenses and postpone the time when you need to dip into your retirement funds.

If you're among those who plan to work during retirement, build your contacts before you actually retire and make your wishes known. This task will help to ensure that more business and opportunities come your way.

Remember, planning for your retirement requires as much foresight as it does math skills. CPAs can help you put your financial house in order and assist you in planning for your future financial well-being, but only you can make the vision of your retirement years a reality through disciplined savings.

CPSC offers advice about trampolines

By 1st Lt. Jodi Workman
Infantry Branch Safety Office

The U.S. Consumer Product Safety Commission wants you and your family to be safe when using trampolines.

The CPSC estimates that in 1996 there were more than 83,000 hospital emergency room treated injuries associated with trampolines.

About 75 percent of the victims were under 15 years of age and 10 percent were under five years of age. Since 1990, CPSC has received reports of six deaths involving trampolines.

Injuries and deaths were caused by: colliding with another person on the trampoline, landing improperly while jumping or doing stunts on the trampoline, falling or jumping off the trampoline or falling on the trampoline springs or frame.

Almost all of the trampolines associated with injuries were at private homes, usually in backyards. Most of the injuries occurred on full-size trampolines.

Here are the steps to take to help prevent serious trampoline injuries, especially sprains, fractures, scrapes, bruises and cuts:

•Always supervise children who use a trampoline.

•Allow only one person on the trampoline at a time.

•Do not attempt or allow somersaults.

•Do not allow the trampoline to be used without shock-absorbing pads that completely cover the springs, hooks and the frame.

•Place the trampoline away from structures, roads and other play areas.

•Do not use a ladder with the trampoline because it provides unsupervised access by small children. No child younger than six years of age should use a full-size trampoline.

•Ensure the trampoline is in a fenced-in area to prevent unauthorized access and ensure the trampoline is a safe distance away from the fence.

Successful sports programs require parent involvement

By John W. Peeler
Special to the Bayonet©

John W. Peeler believes players and coaches deserve 100 percent parent involvement in sports programs.

Almost every day on a field or in a youth gym you can find children around post participating in one of the many Youth Services' sports program.

As a coach, there's nothing I find more disturbing than to see parents enroll their children in sports programs, then not support the child or their team.

commentary

Some drop their child off at practice, then forget about them until it's time for them to be picked up. In some cases, players don't make practice at all.

Sure, there are always reasons why a parent doesn't stay and watch their child learning a sport and even more reasons why their child can't make practice.

Then, when game time comes, those same parents, the ones who don't bring their child to practice or drop them off and and leave faster than a drive-by shooting, wonder why the team is not doing well and try and place all the blame on the coach.

After six years of coaching, I find those types of parents are usually the ones who always complain about the coach or the program in general.

I'm not the only one who feels most parents don't give 100 percent. Several of my colleagues expressed the same concerns to me.

Parents have a responsibility to the child, the team and the coach when they sign their child up to participate in a sports program.

The last time I checked, coaches are not free babysitters, nor do they get paid for the volunteer work they do. Most coaches I know hope that out of all of the children they coach, at least one child will become a better athlete and person.

The Youth Services' sports programs are designed to teach a child about the sport; to teach teamwork and fair play; to increase self esteem and to teach responsibility to self and team.

Coaches strive to impress responsibility upon a child; responsibility about their position on the team, the importance of their position and how the "team" suffers when the child does not do their part.

Believe it or not, the children take that responsibility seriously and really give it their all; some of the parents however, do not.

How can a child learn responsibility to self and team when the parent doesn't show that same responsibility?

It is far to easy too "do as I say, not as I do." Still, it is hard to understand why a parent would sign their child up for a sport, spend the money, then not take their child to practice or to be constantly late.

That type of attitude towards the sports programs puts a lot of pressure on both the child and the coach.

The child is expected to perform without the practice and the coach is expected to make the rest of the team suffer by being required to play a child that has either missed practice or has been late and is behind the rest of the team.

In most cases, the coach plays the child not because he has to, but because he knows it's not the child's fault he or she missed practice. Trust me, the coach knows where the fault lies.

Coaches are expected to, and do, support the parents when a parent "benches" a child for grades, attitude or conduct. Why doesn't that same support go both ways?

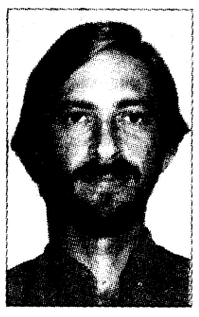
In defense of those "good" parents who are not always able to be at practice or sometimes have difficulties getting their child to practice, my experience is that they make up for it in other ways. These "good" parents are always there to volunteer their services to the team when they can. They also realize that a coach can only be as good as the parent support they get.

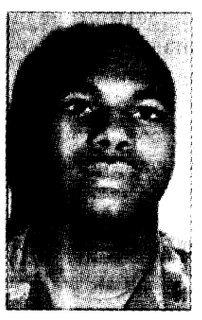
It is those "good" parents who do their part that makes coaching worthwhile.

Of course, from my perspective, making a positive impact on just one player a season makes it worth it for me.

Children learn a lot about life in athletic programs. They learn even more at home.

Are you the type of parent who is teaching your child athlete to be responsible or are you teaching him or her selfishness and irresponsibility?





Think about it before you commit yourself and your child to participate in a sports program.

If you cannot, or will not give the team and coach 100 percent, do yourself and your child a favor — don't sign them up.

There are far too many children who will benefit from having one less player on the team to worry about — and one more deserving player and parent who will benefit from the extra time.

Mike Barnes and a Schiebel technician prepare the camcopter for a mission.

Using a smoke producing device attached by a cable, the Camcopter delivers a thick blanket of smoke to conceal a target area.

Camcopter

gives Soldiers an eye in sky

By Sgt. 1st Class Larry Lane
Public Affairs Office NCOIC

The Camcopter, an unmanned aerial vehicle (UAV) system, was put through a series of tests last week at the McKenna Military Operation on Urbanized Terrain (MOUT) site. The Camcopter is one of several UAVs the Dismounted Battlespace Battle Lab is experimenting with to determine its ability to support the dismounted Soldier.

The 90-inch Camcopter is capable of a vertical take off and landing. The targeted payload for the vehicle is about 60 pounds. The flight endurance time will be between six and seven hours, depending on the weight of the payload. The vehicle is powered by an Italian hang glider engine which uses 93-octane fuel, the same type of fuel from just about any gas pump. The frame is made of titanium and carbon fiber.

By using a computer, a Soldier can program the Camcopter to lift off, carry out a mission, return home and land. Through joystick-like controls, a Soldier can also control every action of the Camcopter when needed.

"We're looking at these unmanned aerial vehicles to support the battalion and company commanders," Mike Barnes of the Dismounted Forces Division said. "We found this system very easy to operate. Anyone who can play a video game with a degree of competence can fly this aircraft. It's really user friendly."

In one experiment last week, the Camcopter dropped about 20 pounds of leaflets from about a 1,000 foot height covering a large area. During a wartime or humanitarian assistance operation, leaflets may be used to explain that American forces are in the area to help, announce a weapons for money turn in program or map out where medical assistance may be obtained.

In another demonstration, the Camcopter blanketed a street with caltrops, small metal spiked objects that can deflate a tire. The Camcopter also showed its ability to deliver riot control agent within the confined streets of the MOUT site.

Spc. Jacob Terrell and Pfc. Brent Satterfield works the controls of the Camcopter.

"This is the second in a series of vertical take off and landing aircraft we experimented with and I was fortunate to get the same two Soldiers I used in a previous experiment," Barnes said. Two Fort McClellan Soldiers performed as operators in an experiment with the Cypher, a round UAV built by Sikorsky aircraft. The same two Soldiers operated the Camcopter, which is produced by Schiebel Technology, Inc., a Vienna, Austria, company specializing in mine detection technology.

"We may be able to do some comparison studies after all of the data has been collected," Barnes said.

The Camcopter has been in production for about two years, said Hans Schiebel, one of the developers.

"The inspiration was to create an autonomous aerial vehicle, which is very easy to fly," Schiebel said. "We have Soldiers operating it everyday. It doesn't need any more than a half day of training to have the skills to operate the vehicle."

Organization gets help from Soldier

By Sgt. Marc G. Turchin
Bayonet assistant editor

Statistics show the number of American children growing up with only one parent continues to rise.

Big Brothers, Big Sisters is an organization, which benefits from the Combined Federal Campaign. It helps one-parent families by providing a companion and role model for those who don't have anywhere else to turn.

Those who provide the time with the children do so on a volunteer basis. One such person is Maj. Bob L. Popowski, chief, Inspections Branch, Office of the Inspector General.

He has been involved with the local program since September 1996 when he put in his application to become a big brother.

"All it takes is a good person to do it," Popowski said. "It doesn't take superman or anyone extraordinary — just a consistent commitment to a child."

That commitment doesn't even amount to that much time, according to Popowski. But, he said, "it's the quality time you spend that makes it worthwhile."

Popowski's little brother is 10-year-old Gregory Nolan who lives in Columbus. He visits Nolan around once a week from three to five hours each time. Sometimes he visits on the weekends and the two of them do different activities.

One weekend they traveled to the civil war prison camp in Andersonville. Another time they went to see Walt Disney's Aladdin on Ice at the Columbus Civic Center and still another weekend visited a U.S. Air Force museum near Warner Robbins Air Force Base.

Popowski said he enjoys the activities as much as Nolan.

"I love spending time with kids," he said. "Since I'm not married and don't have any kids of my own, it's my chance to give back to the community."

When the two aren't traveling, they spend a lot of their time going to and renting movies or building models.

A few months ago, Nolan and Popowski took what many believe is the first step toward adulthood — removing the training wheels from the bicycle.

Popowski said it happened in the

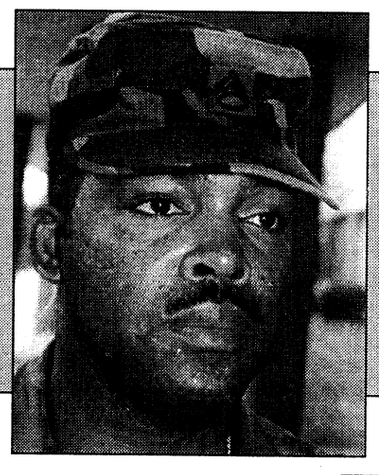
The Combined Federal Campaign (CFC) was extended for two weeks in order to give everyone an opportunity to donate to the CFC.

Chuck Walls, garrison manager, said the extra time will be used to tie up loose ends and to provide more breathing room to meet the goal.

"We still have Soldiers coming into Infantry Training Brigade and of course other units. It's a chance for everybody to make a contribution. Some units have done a great job in going out and making sure all their people were canvassed, but there's still some areas out there that we're talking to," Walls said.

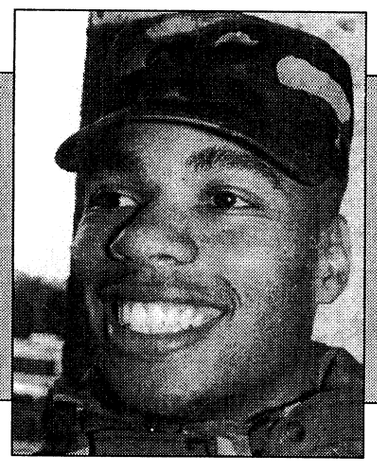
The campaign is at about 75 percent complete, with collections still coming in everyday.

Walls wants to be sure everyone has been approached. He said it's also okay to go back to people who were not originally interested.



Walls also stressed CFC Codes 9000 and 9001, the codes for Columbus and Fort Benning. All money going to these codes stays within Columbus or Fort Benning.

"I think by now everybody or most everybody is on the bandwagon. They know about the campaign, they're out there collecting money, they're talking to people. That's another reason to extend CFC, because rather than just stop it dead, I think a lot of units have a lot of momentum going in the campaign and to me that would be grossly unfair to cut it off now," Walls said.



Soldiers who have not yet given but want to should see their chain of command.

Don't forget the little things when giving thanks

By Paula J. Randall Pagán
USAMU Public Affairs Office

commentary

Paula J. Randall Pagán is thankful for the little things in life.

This is the time of year when we give thanks for our blessings.

Of course we're all thankful for our health, the love and support of our family and our jobs.

But now is the time to be thankful for the little things we never think about or the black clouds that really may have a silver lining.

During this Thanksgiving season, why not thank some of the people who make our lives so much better by the little things they do.

Tell your children you're grateful for their help around the house. Show your spouse some appreciation for that great meal he or she prepared or the way he or she does such a good job with your laundry. Call your parents and thank them for taking care of you and for the love and support they still give you.

Praise your co-workers for the great job they do. Acknowledge the work your subordinates do that makes you look good. And don't overlook your supervisors; after all they're the ones who look out for you every day.

Take time for a cheery hello for the person who bags your groceries, or hands you that burger and fries across the lunch counter. And what about the person who delivers your mail on time in all kinds of weather, who probably never hears from you unless it's a complaint.

Don't forget the child-care providers who take time every day to make your children feel special, or your neighbors who are always ready to loan you their lawn mower or a cup of sugar.

Instead of grumbling that you don't make enough money, be thankful you have the great job that you do; after all, you do work on the best Army installation in the world. Quit complaining about how you have less than you'd like; luckily the Army has taught us how to do more with less. Instead of complaining about the frustrating situation you're in, be thankful for what you do have and set goals with a plan on how to achieve them in the future.

This year, why not give thanks for the unlucky things that happened that were really a blessing in disguise. And in the future when something unfortunate happens, instead of sulking about it, think about the good that might come of it.

There's an old saying that states when God closes a door, he opens a window. So, we should resolve that instead of fussing over a slammed door in our faces, we should be thankful for the window out of which we will learn to fly and soar to our designated potential.

American Soldier has history of being away for holidays

The celebration of Thanksgiving is older than our nation. In our homes, public gatherings and on military installations around the world, U.S. Soldiers and their families will once again gather to give thanks for the blessings of the past year, to hope for continued security and prosperity in the year to come.

As we prepare to celebrate Thanksgiving, we must include in our thoughts and prayers those Soldiers deployed around the world and particularly their families here at home.

Our great nation was made free and kept so by the courage and sacrifice of the armed forces.

Holidays away from home are nothing new so American Soldiers, from the bitter winter at Valley Forge until today's deployments to Bosnia, American men and women have spent countless holidays away from homes and families to defend the frontiers of freedom.

Across our great nation, empty seats at the table continue to symbolize our citizens' commitment to freedom and its defense. For the past year's bounty, we should also include our deepest thanks for the spirit, self-sacrifice and patriotism of the Soldiers. Americans from all walks of life step forward when they are needed and place themselves — often at great peril — where they can best serve the cause of freedom.

For more than three-quarters of a century Fort Benning has been home to hundreds of thousands of Infantrymen and their families and has served as a secure support base while Infantrymen have gone forth to fight and win our nation's wars.

As the home of the U.S. Infantry, Fort Benning also offered hope to the oppressed throughout most of this century.

The American Infantryman shared the burden and hardships of preserving freedom around the world.

This Thanksgiving holiday season the Fort Benning community takes pride in its accomplishments and joins me in giving thanks for our nation and for the U.S. Soldiers who are at work at posts large and small around the world ensuring a bright tomorrow.

Happy Thanksgiving.

letter to the editor

Resident writes about bus stop beating

My daughter Brittany, 9, was assaulted at her bus stop by two other students Oct. 29.

One of them tried to burn her with a cigarette lighter while the other student physically assaulted her with several body blows to the stomach.

Shortly after arriving at school, my daughter phoned me and told me about the incident.

After talking with the principal at White Elementary School, I was told that no action could be taken against these children, even though there were witnesses because the incident didn't occur on the bus or school grounds.

I was not satisfied with this and I went to the military police station and talked with MP investigator Michael E. Goodwin.

He told me there is nothing they can do because these children are under the age of 13. He told me he would look into it but I should really take this problem to my Community Life NCO.

Community Life told me they would contact the parents but basically all they can do is tell them to keep an eye on their children.

That is not acceptable. There is a safety issue here. My child does not feel safe and that is my problem. These children have no right whatsoever to violate my daughter's space.

I'm told these children could have criminal action taken against them if they were 13 years old. Unfortunately they are not — they are 10 and 11. So then where does the responsibility lie?

As many of us know there are parents who refuse to believe their child can do wrong to another person.

All parents on this post need to know about the laws on this post. Any sponsor who has a child on this post who is inflicting bodily harm toward others should receive more than a "tell your child not to do that anymore."

This is a major problem on this post. The laws regarding my situation and others like this should be looked into more seriously.

The parents of these children causing problems should have to deal with the consequences of their children's actions.

No child should ever have to fear another child.

— Camille Hood
Fort Benning

Garrison Office response

At the direction of the Garrison Commander, Col. Byron Greene, this case was investigated by both the Military Police and the Community Life Office. Hood is correct, no child should have to fear another child.

There are numerous means to solve these type of incidents. The most frequent and most successful is the arbitration panel, which involves the parents of the offenders. These are arranged by the Community Life officer and afford all parties the opportunity to fix the problem. More serious incidents require the involvement of the Military Police and the Staff Judge Advocate and could include either a warning letter or exclusion letter from the Garrison commander. Again, the preferred course of action is parental involvement before resorting to more severe means of resolution.

In this case, the appropriate actions were taken to resolve this incident.

Garrison manager

Military due thanks, praise from world

When we look around the world, we see how much America has to be thankful for.

The end of the Cold War has not ended the threat to our country, but we are far better off thanks to the strides toward freedom the world has made.

As we all know, democracy is winning converts throughout the world — from Latin America to the republics of the former Soviet Union.

One important reason the world is making this progress is because of you — the men and women of America's Armed Forces. Without your strong presence, we would not have won the Cold War. Your willingness to serve, sometimes at great sacrifice, has made this a safer world.

Wherever you serve, your professionalism, your can-do attitude and your commitment have shown the best of the American character, and solidified our position of both moral and military leadership in the world.

The citizens and nations of the world are thankful for you.

On this Thanksgiving holiday, I wish you happiness and peace, and I thank you and your families for your service and sacrifice.

parking lot of Building 4.

"It took him a while," he said. "Believe me, there were quite a few high anxiety moments on my part. But once he got it, we rode down the riverwalk."

Popowski said he didn't have any anxiety about getting involved with the organization.

He learned about the organization while stationed at Fort Polk, La. But because he was a company commander, he didn't have the time outside of his mission requirements to get involved.

Once he moved to here, he got involved almost immediately.

He sees himself as a role model and companion, not as a second parent. He said it is very clear to him that "what the parent says is how it goes." No matter what he thinks. "I just go along with what the parent's decision is," he said. "I'm not in the parent position."

The Big Brother, Big Sister motto is "take a little time to make a big difference." Popowski said to him that means it doesn't take much to touch someone.

"All you need is commitment," he said. "Eighty-percent of the time all you have to do is listen to what they say. But you do spend 100 percent of the time focused on the child."

He added that the organization is answering one of society's needs.

"It's really a neat program that addresses a real problem in society. A lot of times single parents can compensate for the missing parent with another relative — an aunt, uncle or grandparent. But there are times when they cannot and Big Brothers, Big Sisters is helping."

Camcopter: Increases Soldier's abilities way points on a computer screen. The information on the screen includes an area map and critical vehicle information like altitude and speed.

"It's essentially a cursor in the sky," Schiebel said. "It's as easy to operate the air vehicle as it is to move the cursor over your computer screen. You can use the joystick to direct it, but if you don't direct it, the vehicle will stop and hover in that one position."

The Schiebel company began developing UAVs to assist in finding mines from the air. Through infrared cameras and other equipment, landmines may be detected by their temperature signature. Since the Camcopter's development, the Night Vision and Electronic Sensors Directorate in Fort Belvoir, Va., has purchased a complete system, Schiebel said.

Spc. Jacob Terrell and Pfc. Brent Satterfield served as Camcopter operators. The two Soldiers are from the Military Police Company at Fort McClellan, Ala. The Soldiers flew 12 missions, day and night.

"The best part about this system is the joystick controls," Terrell said. "We can manually fly this system ourselves if we need to. We don't have to program anything into the computer."

The ability to manually operate the vehicle was essential during one of the night time missions, Terrell said.

The Soldiers were given a mission to find hostile groups within the MOUT site. In the scenario, a group of hostile forces had pushed American forces out of the village. The Soldiers would have to locate and identify the hostile forces, then deliver a riot control agent to disperse the crowds.

"We flew straight into the center of the city and took it up to about 250 feet so we could see the entire city using the camera," Terrell said. This Camcopter model did not have the infrared capability and the Soldiers only used a normal view of the situation to locate the targets, identified by burning torches. "Once we saw where the torches were, we flew to each spot and dropped smoke on them. I was amazed at how well we did."

Each mission is recorded for the Soldiers to review.

The Camcopter gives the Soldiers more independence and responsibility, Satterfield said.

"We actually plan out the mission ourselves," Satterfield said. "They just tell us to plan our mission — fly over there, make some hits and come back home. We figure out what will be the best approach route, where we think we should hover and where we're going to make our drops."

During a typical day-time mission, the Soldiers were asked to drop smoke on a target. Using the computer they programmed the Camcopter to fly to the location where they would drop the smoke. At the target, the Soldiers switched over to manual operation to better maneuver around the target using the camera for guidance. They dropped smoke to determine the wind direction, then dropped the rest of the smoke to provide a good coverage. After the drop, they switched back to a programmed flight plan to guide the Camcopter home.

"This equipment is easy to understand and use. The hardest thing is to plan which route to take and how we want to make our drop," Satterfield said.

The Camcopter will be nominated as part of the Technical Assessment Program, a format for validating the system.

"A Soldier can walk in with very little training, take over mission planning, take over flight operations and be able to deliver munitions with almost pinpoint accuracy," Barnes said.

Internet new site for rumor spreading

By Michelle R. Smith
Bayonet correspondent

When rumors fly, it's as if it were duck season with every hunter trying to get in on the action. Unfortunately, rumors are just that. They aren't supported by facts, just word of mouth or in this case, the Internet.

Recently, rumor has spread around Fort Benning about 5-5-5.

"Rumors fly fast enough, but now with the Internet they go triple as fast and reach so many more people," said Kathleen Kenna, the Director of Civilian Personnel Advisory Center (CPAC)

The rumor Kenna is referring to promises three points.

The rumor was developed shortly after the introduction of a bill that was put before President Clinton on Open Season. Open Season would have allowed federal employees to switch their retirement plans from Civil Service Retirement System (CSRS) to the Federal Employee's Retirement System (FERS). This bill was line item vetoed by President Clinton due to the fact that it would have been to expensive.

First, it will add five years towards retirement.

Second, it adds five years to your age. For example, it would add five years to a fifty- year-old person to make them eligible for retirement.

The third point offers a bonus of $5,000 to 1 percent per year. Plans from CSRS to FERS stay with the old which has now escalated to an impressive $50,000.

In addition to these three points, there was also a promise of an Early Retirement Penalty reduction from the now standard 2 percent per year to 1 percent per year.

All of this just to switch retirement plans from CSRS to FERS. However, according to rumor, those who stay with the old system would be forced into the new system.

The rumor was traced back to a civilian in Orlando at the Naval Air Welfare Center.

"The Internet is a great tool, but unfortunately, it is also a great tool for people who want to spread rumors," Kenna said.

"This rumor has been circulating on post. Don't trust rumors," Kenna said. "I would like people to know that if they do hear rumors like this one let us know."

If there are any questions or concerns, please contact the Civilian Personnel Advisory Center and ask for clarification.

Checkpoints ensure roadways stay safe

By April Strawser
Bayonet correspondent

Military police conduct random safety checkpoints to help make the Fort Benning community a safer place to drive.

Military police select vehicles randomly and physically inspect the vehicle, said Sgt. Maj. Arthur Van Allen, Garrison sergeant major.

The MPs also check to make sure the driver of the vehicle is not driving on a suspended or revoked license, he said.

The driver needs a valid driver's license, a state registration card and proof of insurance.

If the driver is in the military, then a military I.D. card is checked and the vehicle is checked for the post vehicle registration.

The MPs will check the vehicle for working headlights, taillights, brake lights and directional signals. All persons in the vehicle must be wearing a seat belt if available, said Sgt. 1st Class Daniel Downs, Military Police Activity Operations NCOIC.

"An unsafe vehicle can cause a problem for you or your neighbor, not just the driver of the vehicle," Downs said.

"Since September 1996 more than 20,600 vehicles have been monitored, out of those, 5, 100 have been inspected. After inspection 1,700 were issued citations, six of those citations were issued for driving under the influence (DUI)," he said.

According to Downs, more than 700 citations were issued for seat belt violations and 37 citations for children under the age of four not in a safety seat during the safety check.

Safety checkpoints are conducted weekly on random days and hours all over post with 12 to 15 MPs working the checkpoint specifically, he said.

"The MPs are spot checking to insure everyone has the right credentials and that the vehicle is safe, which I think is a great service to the Fort Benning community," Van Allen said.

Medics test skills in field

14th Field Hospital

Any training exercise requires in-depth coordination from all levels. The 14th Field Hospital established a hospital on Leyte Heliport to the southwest of McKenna Military Operation on Urban Terrain (MOUT) site for two attempts of the Professional Filler System (PROFIS) personnel to perform three days of continuous operations per group. The majority of the Soldiers came from Martin Army Community Hospital but Fort Stewart and Fort Rucker also sent Soldiers.

Beginning Oct. 21, the cadre of the 14th began the establishment of the hospital site with an advance party securing the heliport, ensuring the area was chemically clean, begin staking out the hospital layout.

After the site was secured, vans began arriving carrying the bulk of the hospital. Cranes were used to download the equipment from the trucks and to set the hospital up.

"If the equipment was misaligned by more than three inches, the hospital will not fit together," said Staff Sgt. Raymond Miller, operations NCO for the 14th.

Miller was one of the NCOs responsible for staking out the hospital layout.

Soldiers from the 14th were busy erecting Temper Tents. Martin Army Community Hospital sent about 40 Soldiers to assist in the set up and speed up the process.

The 14th's staff was tested during the exercise with not only patients coming through the hospital, but tracking the battle in the operations center, inprocessing all of the personnel, issuing weapons and MILES gear and working out the kinks in the communication section.

"Field time is the best way to solve problems internally before the bullets start flying," said Maj. Michael Moore, commander of the 14th.

The opposing force kept the personnel on their toes with constant sniper attacks and probing exercises. Several new battle drills were added into the hospital's tactical Standard Operating Procedure (SOP) based on the outcomes from this exercise.

The two groups that came out to the field site had to perform 72 hours of continuous operations, treating patients, reacting to attacks and also working in an NBC atmosphere many times throughout the exercise. Nightly staff meetings included brainstorming sessions on how to make things run more effectively.

Input was received from all levels and acted on accordingly. The 690th Medical Company also had a platoon at each rotation and they were kept busy responding to medical evacuation requests in the area. Several logistical runs were processed through the Hospital Operations Center with the convoy commander receiving the latest updates on enemy activity and which routes were safe to travel. Every facet of the hospital was put to the test including the cooks being thrown off their schedules while under an NBC attack.

The field exercise was accomplished through the efforts of other support units including the 812th Medical Company (Air Ambulance) for a generator and aerial photos, the 63rd Engineer Company for gravel equipment and guidance, the 926th Preventive Medicine Detachment for night guidance, the 104th Transportation Company for flatbed trucks, the 608th Ordnance Company for cranes and assistance with the ammunition supply point, design management for the graphic designs, 690th for the field kitchens, field trucks, communication equipment and participating in the exercise and Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 36th Engineer Group for the opposing force, MILES equipment and other personnel.

Officers train with pugil sticks

By 2nd Lt. Matt Handley
Infantry Officer Basic Course

With light drizzle falling on the field at Doughboy Stadium, Company B, 2nd Battalion, (Infantry Officer Basic Course), 11th Infantry Regiment (IOBC) began a training exercise that calls to the heart of every warrior — the pugil stick competition.

The fundamentals of bayonet combat were covered the day before and were put into practice in the ring.

Each platoon separated into a circle and competitors were paired off. Protective gear consisted of a football helmet, a chest pad, hockey gloves and a protective cup for the groin area. The pugil stick is about four-feet long and is padded at each end with additional padding in the center. There are spaces at each end for your hands. The grip is similar to what is used in wielding a weapon with a fixed bayonet. The stance is relaxed and comfortable, with one foot leading the other and knees slightly bent to keep good balance.

A competitor must score three successful contacts to win the match. A good contact is either a blow to the head or padded chest area. A whistle initiates the match and subsequent whistles stop action or signals points scored. It can be either a thrust, butt stroke, or slash.

"Aggressiveness is the key," said Capt. Dave Christensen, platoon trainer. "Don't just sit back and block."

Cheers of encouragement and strategy erupted with each match. Numerous techniques were used but most found sticking to the fundamentals was key in scoring points. Second Lt. Rick Hansen preferred an initial aggressive thrust to the head that not only throws the opponent off guard, but off balance.

"A quick thrust to the head scores a point and surprises your enemy." After each platoon finished its competition, they selected their contender to fight in the company ring.

ITB celebrates heritage month

By Yvette Stewart
Infantry Training Brigade

The Infantry Training Brigade is known for celebrating events and Native American Heritage Month is no exception.

The brigade conducted its celebration Nov. 13 at the Sand Hill Recreation Center.

Opening remarks were made by Staff Sgt. Karlin Postoak, drill sergeant with 2nd Battalion, 19th Infantry Regiment who is also a Native American. Corey Loomis, Boy Scout leader for Troop 24, entertained the audience during the celebration with traditional Native American dress and dance.

Tina D. Rebidue, a teacher from a downtown elementary school and Roxanne Campbell from the Mayor's Commission on Diversity were the guest speakers.

"Native Americans are in all aspects of careers, we did not just sit, we got involved as doctors, lawyers, teachers," Rebidue said.

She spoke about her heritage and her dress. Native Americans in her tribe did not dress as she had, they wore tattoos and loin cloths. Her dress was made of deer skin and fringe.

Campbell spoke about heritage. Although she is not Native American, she can relate to the unity all cultures have.

"Look around you, there is evidence that Native Americans are all around us," Campbell said. "Education helps us to bridge the gap to come together."

The Columbus Cottonmouths hockey team came out to participate and enjoy the ceremony also. They presented Col. Abraham Turner, commander ITB, with a jersey and a hockey stick.

In turn, Jerome "Boom Boom" Bechard was presented with a certificate of appreciation for the team for coming out.

"The ceremony was outstanding," Turner said. "I appreciate all the effort all have made to put this together. Sergeant 1st Class Paul Horton, you continue to outdo yourself. *The Cottonmouths, I know you are a busy group and for taking time out of your busy schedule to come here I say thank you to Rebidue, Campbell, and Loomis. Thank you for your contribution to the ceremony."

Parental involvement

Programs help students, parents learn together

By Erin A. Nash
Special to the Bayonet©

Loyd and Stowers Elementary Schools are both involved in programs designed to foster better teacher, student and parent relationships. Loyd Elementary's program is called Parents Involved in Education (PIE), and Stowers program is Very Involved Parents (VIP).

PIE was integrated into Loyd's educational system in October. Debra Mabry, principal of Loyd, said the purpose of the program is to encourage and nurture positive ongoing relationships among teachers, students and parents.

Loyd has an open-door policy for all parents. The atmosphere is friendly and parents are made to feel welcomed and not intimidated, Mabry said.

"Parents are always wanting to know what's going on in the schools, and PIE gives them the opportunity to understand what a teaching objective is," Mabry said.

Cathy Ross, a fifth-grade teacher at Loyd, was planning a family feast for her PIE project Friday. The students participated in pilgrim trivia.

"It gets parents involved in the education of the children. The kids love it," said Ross.

It was Jan Carolan's first time to a PIE program in her daughter's fourth-grade class.

"I enjoyed it a lot," she said. "It gives me the chance to see what they're doing and what the teachers are doing."

Breanna Carolan, daughter of Jan and Staff Sgt. Gerard Carolan, said she likes her mom coming in because "it lets her see how we act and what we're doing."

Staff Sgt. Kelly Price has four children and has been to the PIE program before. He said his unit is very flexible in giving him the time to attend the program.

"I can see what they're learning and better help them at home. It is an excellent program," Price said.

Ellen Smith, a fourth-grade teacher, said she has received an enthusiastic response from both parents and children. She also said the children try harder when their moms and dads are there.

"The kids appreciate having their parents in school and put forth a great effort to do good," Smith said.

Erin A. Nash

Parents and students at Loyd Elementary applaud the students' presentation for Thanksgiving. The presentation was part of Loyd's PIE program.

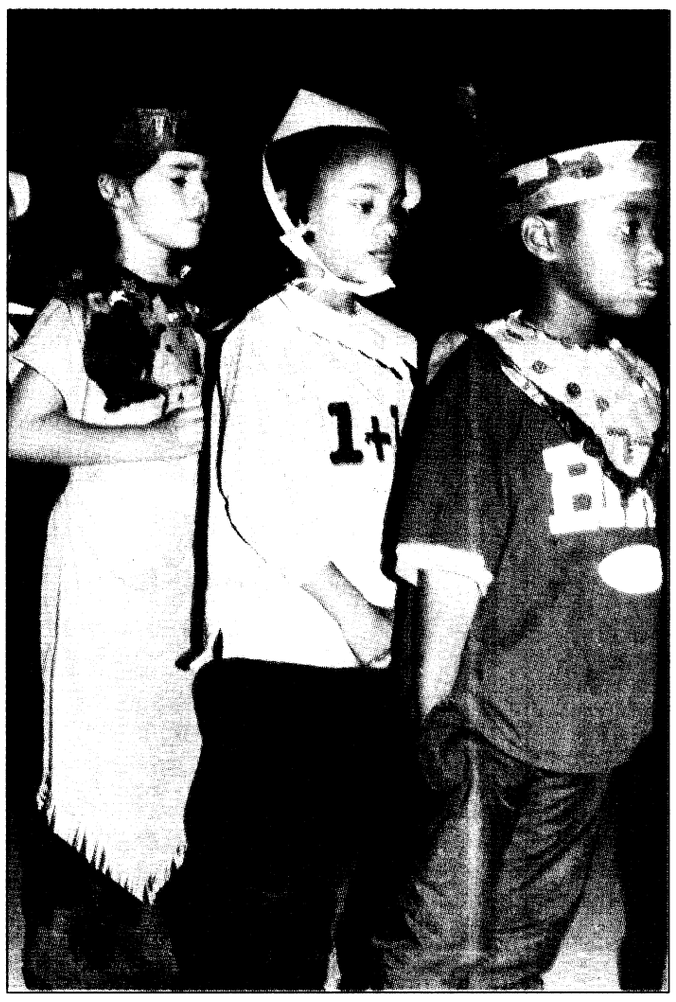
Each program lasts from 20-30 minutes and parents and teachers co-teach in all areas. The teacher will start the project and a parent will end up teaching the rest of the program.

The VIP program has been at Stowers Elementary since it's opening five years ago.

"VIP is designed for teachers to plan opportunities for parents to come into the classroom each month in which they would be involved in an activity with their child," said Glenn Hughes, principal of Stowers Elementary.

"At the same time, teachers are modeling lessons, they are teaching strategies or whatever learning environment or learning activity is going on at the time. That's what the teacher does and it gives the parent the chance to be active."

Hughes said the results of VIP have been great and the number of volunteer hours are greatly improved.



"We also find during the VIP time for the children whose parents aren't there, the parents that do come help other children out and get involved with the children around them. It builds the self-esteem of the child and also builds the self-esteem of the parent," Hughes said.

Jenita Thomas, mother of Stanley, a first-grader, said she attends the program all the time.

"I love it. It's a great program to get parents involved in the learning process. He (Stanley) loves it," Thomas said.

Tonya Phelps, mother of Corey, a first-grader, said she also attends the program all the time.

"It helps with him at home. It let's me know what he's doing at school. They can teach us sometimes, too," Phelps said.

Schools plan for new testing, prepare community

By Staff Sgt. Lori Egan
Bayonet editor

Fort Benning Schools will break new ground this spring with Terra Nova, a new standardized test measure that all Department of Defense Elementary and Secondary Schools will give students. The test replaces the Iowa Test of Basic Skills.

Kathy Einhorn, director of curriculum, told teachers from White and Stowers Elementary schools Terra Nova is not a skills-oriented test but an application-oriented test with knowledge of skills integrated throughout the main content areas of reading and language arts, math, science and social studies.

"Terra Nova involves a lot of application of those skills," she said. "It is very different from a basic skills test, which involves a lot of memorization.

"There is a balance between knowledge and application with heavy emphasis on application."

The entire test booklet is consumable, Einhorn said. Students will not only mark an answer for some questions but also write in the booklet, drawing graphs or explaining an answer.

According to Einhorn, Terra Nova uses selected response answers like multiple choice and also constructed response answers for the questions. Constructed response items require students to use higher-level thinking to defend a response or provide a thorough explanation.

The test includes a variety of multicultural perspectives with a broad range of experiences, she said.

With this test, a student's ability to think is tested — not the ability to memorize material.

"Thinking skills are tested and while memorization of certain facts is important it is not as important as it used to be," she said. "There is a much greater need for students to find information, to use that information, to analyze it, to generate their own ideas and to synthesize. These are pretty high-level skills."

The reading and language arts section of the test doesn't separately test vocabulary or spelling but tests them together. However, two separate test scores are given. The reading and language arts test is thematically organized and the section includes sentence combining and editing skills, Einhorn said.

The math section uses manipulatives at every level and calculators are used in one part of the test starting with the third grade. Einhorn said the problems are multi-step and multi-leveled. Writing about math exists on the constructed response items.

The science and social studies items are presented in thematic units and some technology concepts and vocabulary are included. The constructed response items deal with sorting and categorizing, Einhorn said.

"The students will provide a rationale for why they sorted as they did."

Einhorn said language mechanics, such as spelling and punctuation, are only scored in the language arts section of the test, not on other constructed responses.

"This is not a test children can cram for," she said. "They need to be taught to think this way and in January there will be a staff development session to talk about performance-based instruction."

The test will be given March 23-27.

TRICARE

MACH offers class, wellness book

By Capt. Kareece Larry
Martin Army Community Hospital

As a member of Tricare Prime, you belong to a health-care plan that provides enhanced wellness coverage.

Tricare Prime places emphasis on preventive health wellness. With Prime enrollment, you receive several wellness benefits, including Putting Prevention Into Practice guide, the Taking Care newsletter and the Take Care of Yourself manual.

In addition, Prime enrollees have access to a Health-Care Information Line (HCIL) which provides phone access to registered nurses for answers to health-care questions. The nurses are on staff with the Center for Corporate Health through Humana Military Health-Care Services and are available 24 hours a day. To reach the HCIL, call (800) 333-5331.

The Take Care of Yourself manual contains information on health, including how to decide when you really need to see a doctor. If you have a manual in your possession, keep it in a handy place. Use it and your common sense as your family's first line of defense against health problems.

This manual was originally developed in 1976 and is continually updated. It is now in its sixth edition.

Most people find it to be a dependable, medically sound resource for providing high quality care at home and for helping to get the most out of professional visits.

One of the added features of the manual in the local region is an insert of Martin Army Community Hospital's health-care system.

Follow along with the information:

•Read all of the general information in the section.

•Go through the decision chart (pictorial).

•If there is a number in boldface print, flip to that section for related information.

•Follow the treatment indicated by the decision chart.

•Follow the appropriate recommended action: see doctor now, see doctor today, make appointment with doctor, call doctor, call doctor now or use home treatment.

The next class is 1 p.m. Dec. 10 for the Tricare brief and 3 p.m. for the TCY class.

All briefings and classes will be held in the Baugh Conference room at Martin Army Community Hospital.

The briefings are for any interested CHAMPUS or Tricare eligible beneficiary; the classes are for Tricare Prime enrollees.

For more information concerning the Taking Care of Yourself manual call 545-4041 or 545-1391. This manual is not intended to replace any health visit or recommendations of your primary care manager. If at any time the manual is incongruent with the advice of your primary care manager, always follow the advice of your primary care manager.

ask the judge

By Capt. David Barrett
Legal Assistance Division

Beware — the Legal Assistance Division was made aware of scams involving Gulf War Veterans.

Soldiers and their families are favorite targets of scam artists and questionable solicitations.

Often these opportunities arise through phone solicitation, door-to-door sales or offers mailed to your home. The most recent scams target Gulf War Veterans. The scam artist attempts to prey on the feelings of veterans in order to get them to participate. In the letter that was recently mailed to some Soldiers, the writer claims that there are billions of dollars waiting for those who fax their bank account numbers to a given office.

Q. What precautions should I take in order to protect myself from mail fraud?

A: The United States Office of Consumer Affairs urges consumers to be aware of certain "red flags" that indicate fraud. Toss out the mail or hang up the phone if you hear:

•Sign now or the price will increase;

•You have been specifically selected;

•All we need is your credit card, bank account, or Social Security number for identification"

•Be your own Boss! Just send in $50 for your supplies.

•A new car, a free vacation...Absolutely free! Just take a look at ...

Remember a smart consumer always finds out the total price before signing his or her name.

It is also wise to check out the company and product before buying. You should ask others what their experience has been with a given company or product. Check with the Better Business Bureau (324-0712 in Columbus). Never rely on a salesperson's promises. Get everything in writing. Be aware of telemarketers or letters requesting you send money, ask for permission to automatically withdrawal money from your account or get payment in advance.

There are other scams in the local area. First, there are businesses who say they can repair your credit rating. However, there is nothing those companies can do that you can not do on your own. Next are door-to-door salespeople who attempt to sell photography packages, encyclopedias or household items, such as vacuum cleaners. Remember, in a door-to-door sale you have a right to rescind the contract within three business days.

Although some of these products seem attractive, take the following steps to ensure you are making a wise decision:

Have others (especially a Legal Assistance Attorney) review the contract before you sign it.

Take a few days to make a decision — don't give in to high pressure sales techniques.

Look at the bottom line. Remember you are often being asked to buy these products at a very high interest rate, usually between 18-24 percent.

The Legal Assistance Division is concerned about these types of activities on post and in the local community.

Soliciting on-post is illegal unless permission is obtained from the commanding general. If a person comes to your door to solicit, ask to see documentation that permits them to be on post. If they fail to show you such proof, call the military police.

If you have a question about a contract, or any type of phone, mail, or door-to-door solicitation, or would like an attorney to review a contract before you sign, please call the Legal Assistance Division at 545-3281 and make an appointment to meet with an attorney.

American Heart Association warns women at risk of heart disease, stroke

More women die of cardiovascular problems than men since 1984

By Lisa E. Stafford
American Forces Press Service

WASHINGTON — Each year, numerous American women have strokes and heart attacks. And each year many of them die. The American Heart Association launched the National Women's Heart Disease and Stroke Campaign to combat the rising numbers.

Heart attacks, strokes and other cardiovascular diseases have killed more women than men every year since 1984. The 1995 statistics show 455,000 men died compared to 505,000 women. Even more alarming, the 505,000 figure is 10 times the number of women who died of breast cancer in 1995 and the number of those who died from all other kinds of cancer, AIDS and accidents.

According to a survey of women by the American Heart Association, 31 percent mention heart disease or heart attacks as a leading cause for women's health problems. Only about 8 percent actually believe heart disease, heart attack and stroke are some of the greatest health problems facing women today. Only 30 percent have discussed heart disease with their doctors.

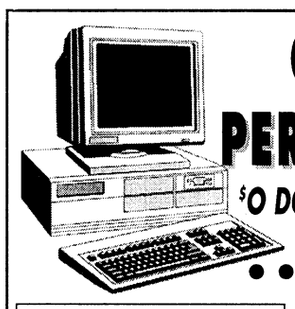
If you have symptoms such as heart palpitations, an accelerated heart rate, mild chest pain or an elevated blood pressure, speak with your doctor, who will be able to address these concerns and, if necessary, refer you to a specialist.

Most doctors attribute high cholesterol levels to heart disease. These high levels can clog the artery walls, causing the formation of a hard, thick substance called cholesterol plaque. This plaque thickens the artery walls and narrows the arteries, a process called atherosclerosis.

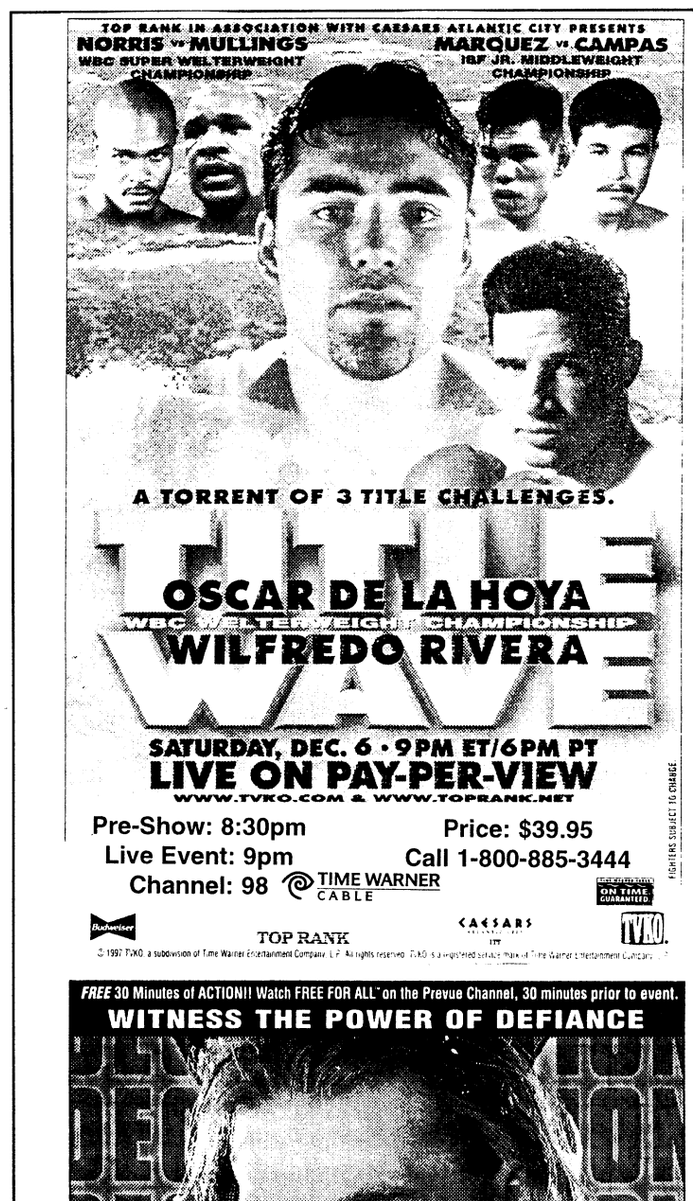
Cholesterol is found mainly in foods that come from animals, including meat, poultry, fish and dairy products. Organ meats, such as liver, are especially high in cholesterol. Vegetables contain no cholesterol.

Individuals older than age 20 should have their blood cholesterol levels tested every five years. The chance of developing heart disease increases in proportion to the degree of cholesterol elevation.

Additionally, if you have a family history of early coronary heart disease, are diabetic or have high blood pressure, you should monitor your cholesterol levels.



The National Cholesterol Education Program classifies total blood cholesterol level as desirable (less than 200); borderline (200-239); and high (240 or higher).



Studies also show individuals who already have a high cholesterol level can benefit from using one of a group of medications called statin drugs. Other effective means of lowering your blood cholesterol levels are changing your life style and eating habits, losing weight, stopping smoking and exercising regularly. Clinical trials show a 1 percent decrease in cholesterol level results in a 2 percent reduction in heart attack risk.

The National Heart Association has a two-year educational program called "Each One, Reach One" geared to reach women one by one to make them more aware of the growing problem. To get more information, call 888-MY-HEART (888-694-3278).

Remember, take wellness to heart and take charge of your health.

Holiday season

Thanksgiving allows celebration of God's gifts

By Chaplain (1st Lt.) Michael Neufeld
Infantry Training Brigade

As the shadows of autumn lengthen into winter, we find ourselves approaching a season of gifts: gifts given, gifts received and gifts hoped for. Favorite foods are prepared, pies baked and the shopping frenzy begins to creep up on us.

reflections

We can easily become caught up in the merely surface expressions of the coming holiday season.

Every year it seems the voices of clergy or counselors try to call us back to a quieter and deeper appreciation of the meaning behind our celebrations until we wish that they would just leave us to the inevitable: a season that carries us away in its own whirlwind of frantic activity.

We would rather not be made to feel guilty about just enjoying our Thanksgiving football games and good dinners or our preparations for Christmas, Hanukkah, New Year or other winter feasts.

However, we need not feel guilty or frustrated. Celebration and enjoyment are gifts we should all be able to rejoice in and share. If we are called to ponder for a moment the deeper implications of the holiday season, it is only so that we may also deepen our joy.

This is a season of gifts: gifts given, gifts received and gifts hoped for. Gifts are expressions of the love and care that we have for one another. The meal lovingly prepared, the pie baked and served with pride, that special item picked out carefully with attention to the recipient's hopes and wishes, the stories remembered and the memories created are all gifts we share out of love.

Yet it is not only our own love for each other that we celebrate, for the source of all love is the living God who has created us and loves us more than we can imagine.

Thanksgiving calls us to remember that we are gifted and to express our gratitude for the many gifts we have received.

Our lives are not merely the products of our own hard work and effort, but also the result of the grace of God and of the nurture, encouragement and shared effort of all who touch our lives or whose lives we have touched.

The peace and plenty we enjoy are gifts of a loving God and the sacrifices of those who have given their lives to ensure our freedom and security. Gathering around a table to share a feast is an act of remembering all this and the enjoyment of our many gifts is in itself an expression of appreciation to the giver — for a gift received and rejoiced in is the great source of joy and satisfaction for the one who gives.

Gifts given and received begin as gifts hoped for. We offer hints and fish for clues hoping that our gifts and presents will be "just right." Hope is not a fashionable virtue in an age of instant gratification, but it greatly enhances the giving and receiving of gifts.

Waiting heightens anticipation and sharpens the excitement of the gift. We light candles and count the days until the great moment arrives when we can rip off the shining ribbons and open the magical boxes. What could be inside? Almost anything — and won't it be wonderful to find out.

All these expressions of love have their beginnings and ultimate meaning in the living God who is the source of all gifts.

The time before Christmas has its own special gift; Advent is a special time of anticipation and hope for the fulfillment of our deepest longing: the coming of God's love into our hearts and lives.

We wait in remembrance of the waiting of the human race for the coming of a savior, of the waiting of Israel for the messiah, the anointed one of God. Our waiting through the time of Advent is not just an excuse for more shopping days, but an activity of entering into the meaning of hope: the sharpening of longing which opens our hearts to the gift of God's love and prepares a welcome for Him in our lives.

Our lives, our love and sharing, our very existence in a wondrous and magnificent universe — are only possible because our loving father has poured out his many gifts in an overflow of generosity.

Indeed, it was not enough for God merely to create us — he has also come into our world in the person of Jesus Christ and deeply into our lives in the presence of the Holy Spirit. To experience and know this reality is to be filled with a gift of love beyond our own imagining. Share the gift and rejoice in the giver.

This week's article provides information on Christmas lighting and schedule changes during the holidays.

Family housing holiday decoration policy

With the approach of the holidays, many wish to decorate their quarters in celebration of the season. Doing so requires prudence in the interest of safety, facility upkeep and energy conservation. Holiday decorations will conform to the following:

Exterior

•Roofs — no decorations, lighted or unlighted, are allowed on quarters roofs, because the installation can be dangerous to individuals and cause damage to roofs.

•Elsewhere — decorations may be affixed to quarters walls, the underside of eaves, and displayed elsewhere in adjoining yards. When attaching decorations to the quarters, use the smallest possible fasteners (staples are a good device). Use only Underwriter's Laboratory (UL) electrical decorations.

Interior

Do not overload electrical circuits. Do not leave tree lights and candles unattended while burning.

Given our ever-diminishing funding resources, energy conservation is important. Be judicious in your use of electrical decorations.

Do not turn on outside electrical decorations until dusk and turn them off prior to midnight. Moderation in the use of electrical decorations will allow everyone to enjoy the holiday season.

Thanksgiving Day garbage schedule

There will be no refuse or recycle collection Thursday.

Those areas normally scheduled for Thursday pick-up will be picked up Monday. Refuse and recycle normally scheduled for pick up on Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday or Friday will not be affected.

Yard waste pick-up

There will be no yard waste pick-up Dec. 1. This service will resume normal schedule Dec. 8.

Holiday schedule for Self Help (U-Do-It) Center

In observance of Thanksgiving, the Self Help Center, Loan Equipment Section, Venetian Blind and Shade Shop will be closed. The Self Help (U-Do-It) Center will be open Friday and Saturday.

DPW Supply and Equipment Division (Warehouse 466) will be closed for normal business Friday. For more information, call Gary Glenn at 545-3705.

Comments and questions

If you have questions or topics that you would like to be addressed in the DPW "Information Corner," call Glenn Todd, DPW Customer Relations specialist, at 545-2117, or write to the Directorate of Public Works, Building 6, Room 409, ATTN: ATZB-PWM (Glenn Todd), Fort Benning, GA 31905.

Safety precautions

Thinking before acting can make holidays better

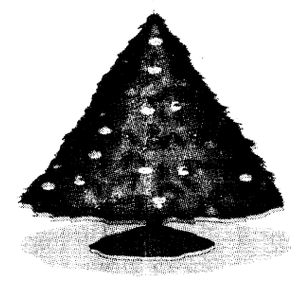
Infantry Branch Safety Office

"Family of five dies in home fire — short circuit in Christmas tree lights blamed."

Every year headlines like this appear in newspapers during the Christmas season. Often the hazards common to the season are remembered only after reading the headlines.

Fire is a great destroyer of life and possessions. Here are some tips to avoid a home fire.

Christmas trees



Fresh Christmas trees do not catch fire as easily as do dry ones.

Christmas trees will not dry out as readily if the cut end is kept in a container of water.

Christmas trees should not be placed near heating units or fireplaces.

Lighted candles, matches and other "open" flames should be kept away from Christmas trees.

Indoor Christmas tree lights should be turned off before going to bed or leaving the house unattended, even for short periods of time.

Christmas lights

Before using, inspect Christmas lights carefully for short circuits, broken insulation and exposed wires.

Avoid overloading circuits when hooking up your Christmas lights.

Do not use metal foil under burned out light bulbs hooked in series to keep others burning.

Christmas tree lights should be approved by Underwriters' Laboratories for the use intended. Outdoor lights should not be used inside; nor should inside lights be used outdoors.

Wrapping paper

Tissue gift wrapping papers catch fire readily. Gift wrapping paper and wrapped parcels should be kept away from open flames.Used gift wrappings and other paper materials should be discarded as soon as possible. Accumulated waste paper invites a fire in the home.

Protect the family during the holidays.

Plan ahead to prevent a home fire before buying and decorating the Christmas tree and celebrating the holiday season.

PRESERVE OUR CHILDLIFE

More than 1,000 children between the ages of 5 and 14 are killed annually as the result of pedestrian-motor vehicle accidents. Stay alert for children going to and coming from school:

•Obey the speed limit (15 MPH on post) in school zones.

•Watch for children walking, skating or cycling.

•Stop for buses loading and unloading children.

HHB 1/10th wins 'all steel' championship

The HHB, 1st Bn., 10th FA Regt., defensive line takes an inside rush on the Battery B, 1st Bn., 10th FA Regt., offense on an up-the-middle run during the post flag football championship game Nov. 20 at Essebagger Field.

By John W. Peeler
Special to the Bayonet©

Twenty-nine teams came, saw, participated and went away empty-handed, while two teams weathered the storm and made it to the Post Intramural Flag Football Championships.

Ironically, on an installation that boasts the 'Queen of Battle,' it was the 'King of Battle' that not only won the championship, but placed the two best teams on post into the championships.

It an 'all steel' finale, the team from Headquarters and Headquarters Battery, 1st Battalion, 10th Field Artillery Regiment, 3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division (Mechanized), scored early in the first half and held on to beat the inter-unit rival team from Battery B, 1st Bn., 10th FA Regt., 3rd Bde., 3rd Inf. Div. (Mech.), 6-0 in the post flag football championships Nov. 20 at Essebagger Field.

The HHB team mixed a balanced run and pass offense throughout the game confusing the Battery B defense while the defense shut down the Battery B offense allowing only one substantial drive during the game.

The win capped a 13-2 championship season for the HHB, 1st Bn., 10th FA Regt., team.

HHB, 1st Bn., 10th FA running back Michael Milton attempts to break through the Battery B, 1st Bn., 10th FA Regt., defensive line with defenders grasping at his flags during the Post Intramural Flag Football Championships. HHB, 1st Bn., 10th FA Regt., won the championship 6-0.

HHB, 1st Bn., 10th FA Regt., Quarter-back Stevie Pringle attempts to run through the Battery B, 1st Bn., 10th FA, defense.

At the U.S. Practical Shooting Association Limited Nationals in Fredericksburg, Va., Oct. 24. Goloski was the Class C winner, and at the USPSA Open Nationals in Berry, Ill., Sept. 15 to 20, was fourth in the Ladies Invitational Competition.

Goloski finished second in the Women's Division at many major competition this year, including the Safariland Classic West Coast Championships in Norco, Calif., the Area 4 Championships in Texarkana, Texas, the Area 6 Championships in Anderson, S.C., the Area 7 Championships in Harvard, Mass., the Area 8 Championships in Fredericksburg, Va., the Florida Invitational in Titusville, Fla., and the Georgia State Championships in Conyers, Ga.

She was a member of the second-place team at the indoor Conventional Pistol Sectional at Fort Benning, and won the High Lady Title at the Alabama State Championships in San Diego, Calif., and the Area 3 Championships in Rolla, Mo. She won the High Lady Title at the 1996 Tennessee State Championship and was the high Lady and High Junior at the Eastern Lakes Sectionals in both 1994 and 1995.

"Julie is dedicated, highly motivated and always strives for excellence. She is always searching for a better technique and has a never-quit attitude," said USAMU Action Shooting Team Coach Ray Arredondo.

Julie Goloski is ranked as one of the top three women action pistol shooters in the country.

Goloski, who started shooting in 1991 with her father Peter Goloski, joined the Army marksmanship Unit right after graduating from Mynderse Academy of Seneca Falls, N.Y., in 1995. After she completed Basic Training and Military Police School, she joined the USAMU's Action Shooting Team.

"I've seen a lot of growth in her the last two years," Arrendondo said. "When she came here, she was a good shooter, but now she's an excellent shooter working toward becoming the Women's National Champion."

"The Army has allowed me to train the amount of time necessary to become a champion," Goloski said. "Traveling to so many tournaments has given me match experience and it gives me great pride to wear Army colors when I compete."

Goloski was featured on MTV's Prime Time show Feb. 16 and appeared on the American Shooter show on ESPN and the Action Shooters show on the Outdoor Channel. El Panama America Deportes newspaper of Panama ran a photo and story on Goloski and the Action Shooting Team in February. She was pictured on the front cover and the Action Shooting Team was featured in an article in the November and December issue of Front Sight, the official journal of the U.S. Practical Shooting Association.

"There are only a very few women her age who can shoot as well as she does and I expect to see her keep improving," Arrendondo said. "The chances are very good that she'll be the Women's National Champion in the next year or two."

DNR

rescues, releases alligator snapping turtle into Chattahoochee River

Department of Public Works

Some people continue to think the Chattahoochee River bordering Fort Benning has nothing to offer anyone. Tell that to the newest member of Fort Benning — a 59-pound male alligator snapping turtle.

Georgia Department of Natural Resources (DNR) wildlife biologist John Jensen recently released the turtle into the Chattahoochee River.

This part of the river was chosen as the release site because it has other alligator snapping turtles and because the turtle originally came from Lake Eufaula, said Monika Day, Natural Resources Management Branch (NRMB), Environmental Management Division, Directorate of Public Works (DPW).

Jensen confiscated the animal in August from the Pine Mountain Animal Park where it had been maintained in an inadequate shallow cement pond enclosure for the past two years without the proper permit from DNR.

After a two-month stay at the Noah's Ark animal rehabilitation facility, the turtle is back in its natural habitat.

Alligator snapping turtles are the largest freshwater turtles in North America, sometimes reaching 28 inches long at the longest point on the upper shell and may grow to weigh more than 200 pounds. Turtles this big may be older than 100 years old and some have lived for more than 50 years in captivity.

These long-lived turtles are usually 11 to 13 years old before reaching reproductive size. Females produce an average of only 26 eggs per nest and may only lay one clutch of eggs every other year. Females are much smaller than males and usually leave the water only to lay eggs, which hatch in about 90 days.

According to Day, alligator snapping turtles can be distinguished from common snapping turtles by three rows of prominent ridges on the dark brown or black upper shell and the extremely large triangular head with a prominently hooked beak and eyes that cannot be seen from above.

Alligator snapping turtles are protected in Alabama and Georgia and may not be captured or killed without obtaining a special permit. Over-harvesting by commercial fishermen drastically decreased the number of turtles in the wild and led to the protective measures taken by both states.

There are probably fewer alligator snapping turtles in the Chattahoochee River now than there used to be, she said.

These secretive turtles live in deep holes in rivers, sluggish streams, oxbows and sloughs from northern Florida to Texas and as far north as Illinois and Iowa, Day said.

CENTCOM CO considers Saddam still a threat

By Jim Garamone
American Forces Press Service

WASHINGTON — If the situation in Iraq warrants military action, it will not be a pinprick, Central Command Commander Marine Corps Gen. Anthony Zinni said Nov. 26.

Zinni, speaking at a Pentagon news conference, said Saddam Hussein remains a grave threat, and while the United States hopes diplomatic efforts will work, the allies in the gulf region are prepared to deliver devastating attacks.

The Iraqi president's refusal to allow U.S. inspectors to participate in U.N. weapons inspections and his threat to shoot down U.S. U-2 spy planes precipitated the crisis. He has since allowed the U.N. teams to resume work.

Zinni said no further U.S. forces are set to deploy to the region.

"We do have forces that are ... 'earmarked' should certain ... trigger events occur," he said.

Central Command would move those forces to the region if they are needed, but right now the forces are adequate for the missions Central Command officials foresee.

Zinni said any strike against Iraq would be targeted at things that mean the most to Hussein. "The Iran-Iraq war, the Gulf War, all the other things indicate that he doesn't much care if you strike a unit, a surface-to-air missile site, a division," he said. "What means most to him are things like the special Republican Guard and other Republican Guard units that keep him in power, his own infrastructure and command and control systems."

Zinni said Iraq's forces have been greatly reduced since the Gulf War — but also streamlined. He called the Iraqi air force "capable" and the air defense system "pretty robust."

Chemical and biological weapons concern him, he said.

Faster than a speeding bullet ...

Loaded 45 arrives for the holidays

By Sgt. Marc G. Turchin
Bayonet assistant editor

The holidays are known for a lot of things — getting together with families, eating more than is necessary, spending money for gifts and the time when people are most likely to get into a car drunk and crash.

The Army recognizes this time period as the Loaded 45. The 45 days between Thanksgiving and New Years holidays are the deadliest for being on the road.

This year's 45 days are underway beginning Nov. 21 and ending Jan. 4.

Regis P. Beighley, Safety Manager, Directorate of Public Safety (DPS), said the number of accidents always goes up during this time of the year. Already 12 people have been killed in Alabama and Georgia.

"The fatality rate goes up dramatically during this time period," Beighley said. "People are traveling long distances, at times on roads they are unfamiliar with, in adverse weather. Even worse, occasionally, some people may have a drink or two before they drive," he said.

During this time period last year, there were no reported deaths in the tricommunity, but there were 12 injuries and 77 arrests.

As in years past, Beighley said, DPS is taking action to prevent as many accidents as possible.

"We try a double-edged sword tactic," he said. "We try and stop people from drinking and driving, but if we can't stop them, we try and catch them before they injure themselves or others.

What Beighley means by trying to stop people from breaking the law is by educating the community members.

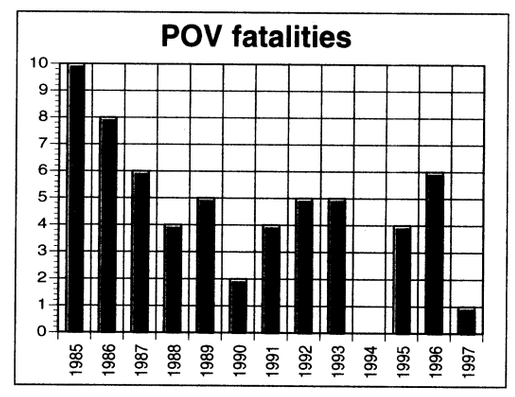
He said Safety Cab posters will be posted in the post's clubs and around the units' common areas.

The military police will conduct road blocks, day and night, looking for drunken drivers.

Beighley reminds everyone to make sure the driver has a driver's license, vehicle registration and proof of insurance in the car at all times. The car can be impounded if the driver does not have any of the above.

But, if someone is caught drinking and driving, the penalty can be harsh.

According to officials with the military police, a first time conviction of Driving Under the Influence (DUI) carries with it a mandatory court appearance; a fine of no less than $300, but no more than $1,000; possible imprisonment of no less than 10 days, but no more than 12 months (which can be probated); no less than 40 hours of community service and suspension of their driving license for at least a year.



A second DUI conviction has fines ranging from $600 to $1,000; possible imprisonment of no less than 90 days, but no more than 12 months (which can be probated) and no less than 80 hours of community service.

A third conviction has more of the same with higher fines and longer imprisonment and community service terms.

Beighley said one reason more people are prone to drink and drive is because of the amount of parties during this time period.

"People at work want to have a party, you have friends over for a party and your family gets together for a party — there's a lot more exposure during this time."

Beighley said there are things people who host parties can do to help keep friends and family members from driving intoxicated.

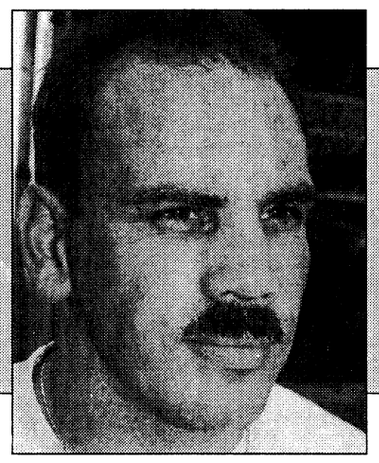
- Serve food first;
- measure the alcohol content in the drinks;
- have nonalcoholic drinks available;
- watch for people wanting to leave while intoxicated.

If a situation does come around where someone is too drunk to drive, another outlet is the Safety Cab.

This free ride home is available from8 p.m. to 2 a.m. Wednesday through Jan. 1. Anyone in the tricommunity can use the ride, but the cab ride will only take people home — not to other parties or clubs. Safety Cab is co-sponsored by AUSA. Safety Cab's number is 660-6069.

Georgia state law requires all passengers in the vehicle wear a seat belt. The driver can be stopped and fined $25 for not wearing a seat belt.

Two more facts to remember while driving this holiday season:



•Eight out of 10 accidents occur when the vehicle is traveling slower than 40 miles per hour

•Seventy percent of accidents occur within 25 miles of home.

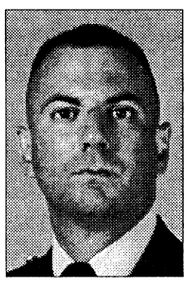
Catalogs: Using phone-in, charge-it system has good, bad side to holiday shopping

By Sgt. 1st Class Larry Lane
Public Affairs Office NCOIC

I think Christmas is coming, but I could be wrong. I get confused when the stores simultaneously sell discount Halloween candy, turkey, and Christmas ornaments. The Valentine's Day cards will probably be on the racks soon.



commentary

I know it's Christmas by the mean looks my mail person gives me. He's a nice guy, I just happen to receive an enormous collection of catalogs, so many the mail person has to wear one of those big back braces used by piano movers.

This mountain of mail wasn't a problem during the rest of the year when the companies send their monthly catalogs that seem to scream, "buy me, you need me." But when the Christmas season comes around — which seems like a couple of days after the last day of summer — the catalogs increase in size and frequency.

The L.L. Bean Christmas catalog, my favorite, is thicker than most towns' phone books and just about everything in it can be found cheaper somewhere else and without the "exclusive" Bean seal of approval. Somehow I think I can find a better source for a multitool Leatherman. Military Clothing and Sales, perhaps?

A friend told me if I buy one thing with a catalog, I make the "list," the one that's sold and resold to companies who sell similar products. This explains a lot.

I bought one shirt from a hunting catalog and received eight catalogs from different companies the next week. If I knew something about fishing or crossbow hunting, then I could get some use out of the catalogs, but I was really only after a good flannel shirt.

There are a growing number of consumers who would rather buy over the phone or go malling on the Internet, than to actually walk into a store. I've been using a bunch of catalogs lately to buy books, clothes and photo equipment I can't seem to find in this neck of the woods. I've discovered some benefits and drawbacks about ordering through catalogs.

•I don't have to stand in long checkout lines because there's home delivery. This a good way to avoid the Christmas crush of shoppers.

•There's unlimited access to specialty stuff unavailable in local stores. Like a catalog that sells products for left-handed people.

•I can send wrapped Christmas gifts to friends and blame the company later if the package arrived late.

•It's a nice feeling to come home and find a package on your doorstep, a real piece of mail instead of the usual junk mail, bill or another catalog.

Like a Christmas or birthday present to yourself.

•I'm bad at keeping track of what I've charged over the phone and what I've charged at the store. What's worse: I forget both of these transactions will eventually show up on the same charge card bill, unless I use different cards, complicating the tracking to a new level.

•Returns. If the item doesn't seem to be exactly what I want, the wrong size or broken, then I have to ship it back to the company, creating the hassle I was trying to avoid by using a catalog. Of course, this is worse if I've mailed this problem to a relative or a friend.

•The easiest way to shop with a catalog is to pay with a credit card. It's quicker than a money order or a check, and the item can be there the next day. Of course it seems you have to buy more than you need to get a break on the shipping costs.

I'm not trying to sway shoppers from doing their Christmas shopping from home with phone and credit card in hand, but if you use the "order now and pay later" philosophy, you may not be able to dig out of debt until spring, maybe summer, maybe never. Why sacrifice the rest of your year after a weekend's worth of buying?

I'm trying to break myself from the shop at home habit, but the catalogs just keep coming to tempt me with pretty photos of items I can't find anywhere else. It sure is relaxing sitting on the couch, thumbing through a catalog.

And then there's always the after Christmas sales to look forward to, when everything is half price, in the catalogs and the mall. That's the best time of the year, when shoppers use the philosophy of spending money to save money.

"I got this at 45 percent off," said one proud shopper. "I didn't need it. I have three already, but it was so cheap, I had to get it."

I think the best way to control spending while Christmas shopping is to go to the mall, leave the credit cards at home and pay for everything with — I know this sounds strange — cash. You know what I mean, that green stuff you find in your wallet mixed in with receipts. When I buy something with cash, I understand the difference between what I can buy and what I can afford. I can buy anything with a credit card, but that doesn't mean I can afford it.

And then there are those pesky monthly reminders that you owe somebody something. But after several months of paying off the debt at a 17 percent interest rate, these bills will eventually go away, right?

There're 19 more days of shopping left, so sharpen your elbows for the toy store. As ever, that one toy you've been looking to buy your kid is probably sold out. Maybe its one of those talking dolls with a 10,000-word vocabulary. But you can probably find it in a catalog somewhere. It's a toll free number. Don't worry if it's not in your budget. They'll take a credit card and you have a lifetime to pay.

letter to the editor

Writer protests protesters

As the wife of a military retiree, I am every mindful of the wonderful time I spent living on Fort Benning. I would not trade those memories for all the gold in the world. I feel a sense of pride every time I enter the gates to Benning and I feel the deep spirit of the Indian warriors who lived there before today's warriors.

My ancestors gave up their farm for Fort Benning and several are buried on the post.

I was saddened to see the protesters who came recently and destroyed the entrance sign protesting the School of the Americas. How misguided these poor ignorant souls are and how unfortunate their leader is. He is so twisted and filled with such hate and yet calls himself a man of God. I support the School of the Americas and all the fine instructors and the sponsors who invite the families from the various countries into their homes.

Stand firm and know there are many of us here ready, willing and able to take a stand, to be verbal and write letters if needed. I have already e-mailed my comments to several congressmen and senators. Keep up the good fight and know that the old Soldiers support you and are proud of all you do.

Holiday shopping offers tendency to overspend

Paul Stone
American Forces Press Service

If past years are any predictor, millions of Americans will rack up more than a billion dollars worth of credit expenditures this holiday season — usually money they can't afford to owe.

commentary

Will you be one of them?

The temptation to participate in this holiday tradition is admittedly, well, tempting — especially with the inviting atmosphere of the stores during this time of year. Then there is the advertising.

We can't get through a day without being bombarded by ads telling us to spend, spend, spend. No cash? No problem. All major credit cards accepted. Even the information highway has exit ramps to in-home shopping malls. The advertisers inevitably proclaim how much money you save by buying this sweater or that stereo. Realistically, you're not saving a penny unless you don't spend the money in the first place.

Then there is the pressure from our children, our siblings and other relatives, all whose happiness somehow hinges on receiving that new VCR, computer, suit, video game or myriad other gifts.

With this pressure to spend, spend, spend, it's not surprising we so often turn to plastic, plastic, plastic, especially when it's so simple and so available. Indeed, even as few as 10 years ago, it would have been hard to imagine the current availability of credit. Even high school students now receive legitimate credit card offers from banks that believe hooking students on their cards early will make them credit junkies for life.

Now is the time to decide your holiday expenses — not by looking at your credit limit, but by looking at your savings account. There are hundreds, if not thousands, of ways to give during the holidays without breaking your budget. Thinking about it now could save you hundreds, if not thousands, after the holidays.

Don't have a savings account? That's a whole other problem and you should make an appointment to see your unit or installation financial counselor — now!

Credit cards were originally intended for emergency purposes. We've long forgotten that, however, and we're paying the price for it every day. And what a price it is. Let's say you owe $3,500 on a typical high-interest credit card. Let's say you decide to never use it again and to pay it off with the minimum monthly payments. It will take you a whopping 40 years to pay it off! And it will have cost you about $13,000 when you're done!

Think about it.

Then think about this: What do you really need?

US forces to stay in Gulf

By Paul Stone
American Forces Press Service

WASHINGTON — It's not quite business as usual, but U-2 reconnaissance flights are continuing over Iraq and U.N. inspectors there are back to work after a nearly month-long standoff with Saddam Hussein's government.

Meanwhile, Defense Secretary William Cohen said built-up U.S. forces will remain in the Persian Gulf region as long as necessary to ensure Iraqi compliance with U.N. inspection teams. Speaking Nov. 23 on NBC's "Meet the Press," Cohen said inspectors must have access to "all of the sites where they suspect there may be illegal activity taking place.

"The U.N. inspectors must go in, they must go in unfettered, and the person who's on parole can't tell the warden what the terms of the parole are going to be," Cohen said.

U.S. forces in the region now total about 30,000 after the recent deployment of an air expeditionary force and the arrival of the aircraft carrier USS George Washington in the gulf.

The air force consists of 12 F-15C fighters from Eglin Air Force Base, Fla., 12 F-16Cs from Moody Air Force Base, Ga., six F-16C/Js from Shaw Air Force Base, S.C., two B-1 bombers from Ellsworth Air Force Base, S.D., and four KC-135Rs from Fairchild Air Force Base, Wash. Additionally, elements of a Patriot Battery from the 3rd Battalion, 43rd Air Defense Artillery Regiment, from Fort Bliss, Texas, are being sent to Bahrain to provide ground defense for the expeditionary force.

The USS George Washington arrived on station Nov. 21 carrying 50 combat aircraft and about 25 other planes. The carrier arrived with a cruiser and was followed by the remainder of the battle group, including a destroyer, submarine and supply ship.

The U.S. presence in the gulf region now includes approximately 281 aircraft, 22 ships and 30,000 personnel. A combat-ready force of about 18,000 has been maintained there in recent years.

U.N. arms inspectors returned to Iraq Nov. 21 after Iraq abruptly reversed itself and allowed the inspectors, including U.S. members, back into the country. The standoff began in late October when Iraq said it would no longer allow U.S. members to participate in the U.N. inspection teams.

The goal of the teams is to ensure Hussein does not rekindle his programs to build chemical, biological and nuclear weapons. Inspections resumed Nov. 22 without incident as U.N. teams visited sites near Baghdad.

Still to be resolved, however, is access to so-called "presidential sites." At issue are sites Hussein claims are official presidential "villas" or "palaces." U.N. officials have long suspected Iraq is using the sites to hide materials related to missiles or past production of poison gases and germ warfare.

Speaking on three major U.S. television networks Nov. 23, Iraqi Ambassador to the United Nations Nizar Hamdoon reiterated Iraq's position that U.N. teams will not be allowed into the presidential sites and he warned of another showdown if the inspectors try to visit one.

Hamdoon's comments came despite a Nov. 22 U.N. Commission advisory group statement calling for immediate, unconditional and unrestricted access to any sites in Iraq and a rejection of Russia's recommendation that sanctions imposed against Iraq after the 1991 Gulf War be eased.

Clinton signs Authorization Act, pay raise approved

By Jim Garamone
American Forces Press Service

WASHINGTON — Service members will get a 2.8 percent pay raise beginning Jan. 1 as part of the fiscal 1998 Defense Authorization Act President Clinton signed Nov. 18.

In addition, the legislation creates a single basic allowance for housing, revising the basic allowance for quarters, the variable housing allowance and the overseas housing allowance. Department of Defense (DoD) is working on details of the effects on service members.

End strength for active duty personnel is set at 1,431,379 for fiscal 1998. This is a drop of 26,039 service members from the fiscal 1997 figure. Reserve components will see a 15,471-member drop to 895,259 at the end of fiscal 1998.

The act establishes the Commission on Military Training and Gender-related Issues. This commission will review requirements and restrictions regarding relationships among members of the armed forces and review service basic training programs.

The authorization act kills the Ready Reserve Mobilization Income Insurance Program. Under the program, reservists bought insurance to cover income losses if they were involuntarily mobilized. The act ensures those enrolled reservists currently mobilized or on orders for mobilization continue to receive insurance benefits.

The act established two Joint Staff positions: assistant to the chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff for National Guard matters and assistant to the chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff for Reserve matters. Both will be two-star positions.

The basic allowance for subsistence will change. The act ties it to the Agriculture Department's food plan indexes. The allowance will be adjusted to the new levels over a period of time beginning Jan. 1.

A total of 25,000 positions in the defense acquisition work force will be eliminated during fiscal 1998, according to the act.

Included in the act is a sense of Congress resolution that U.S. ground forces not participate in a follow-on force in Bosnia after June 1998, when the NATO Stabilization Force mission is scheduled to end. For U.S. troops to stay, the president must certify their continued presence is in U.S. national security interests.

The act authorizes more money to the National Missile Defense program and other missile defense programs. These include the Army's Theater High-Altitude Area Defense program and the Navy's Upper Tier Theater Missile Defense program.

The act provides $600 million to destroy the U.S. unitary chemical agents munitions stockpile. This is in accordance with the Chemical Weapons Convention.

Another portion of the act directs the president to report to Congress on counterterrorism and anti-terrorism programs. Further, the act calls for the defense secretary to report that U.S. forces participating in peacekeeping operations have the necessary equipment to protect against terrorist attack.

The act also:

•Authorizes $331.2 million for procurement of additional B-2 aircraft or for modification and repair of the existing fleet;

•Authorizes $382 million for the Cooperative Threat Reduction program;

•Approves multiyear procurements for medium tactical vehicles and Apache Longbow fire control radars;

•Authorizes procurement of 20 F/A-18E/F aircraft;

•Authorizes seven V-22 tilt-rotor aircraft;

•Accelerates NATO Joint STARS alliance ground surveillance system;

•Provides $2.6 billion for the procurement of the lead ship of a new class of nuclear attack submarines;

•Approves $1.6 billion for refueling overhauls of Nimitz-class carriers.

•Sets $2.8 billion for four Arleigh Burke-class destroyers;

•Approves $50 million to accelerate advance procurement and construction of components for the next nuclear aircraft carrier, CVN-77.

Fort Benning's Equal Employment Office wins 2 TRADOC awards for excellence

By Erin A. Nash
Special to the Bayonet©

Fort Benning's Equal Employment Opportunity (EEO) office recently won two TRADOC awards, the Outstanding EEO Program Award and the Best EEO Complaint Management Program.

This is a large accomplishment for EEO, considering the staff of four, compared with other installations, who have an average of six to seven, said Ellis Dandy, Equal Employment manager.

Dandy said the EEO office has the largest civilian population and the smallest staff out of the 18 installations in TRADOC.

"It's a tremendous honor for me to receive these awards. It kind of suggests that we are among the best in the Army, if not the best," said Dandy.

The EEO office has won the Best EEO Complaint Management Program award three out of four times. The awards have been given every two years since 1988.

"The Outstanding Program encompasses everything," Dandy said.

"It encompasses the complaints management, the affirmative employment initiatives and education and training programs," said Dandy.

"The awards also include the involvement of folks at all levels; the commanders, the directors, managers, because these are the folks that make these things happen. Without the involvement, without the direct involvement and the help, the initiatives taken by managers and the commander, we would do little. It's not just an award for the EEO office, it's really an award for the installation," Dandy said.

The awards were presented to the EEO office at the CG breakfast Oct. 31.

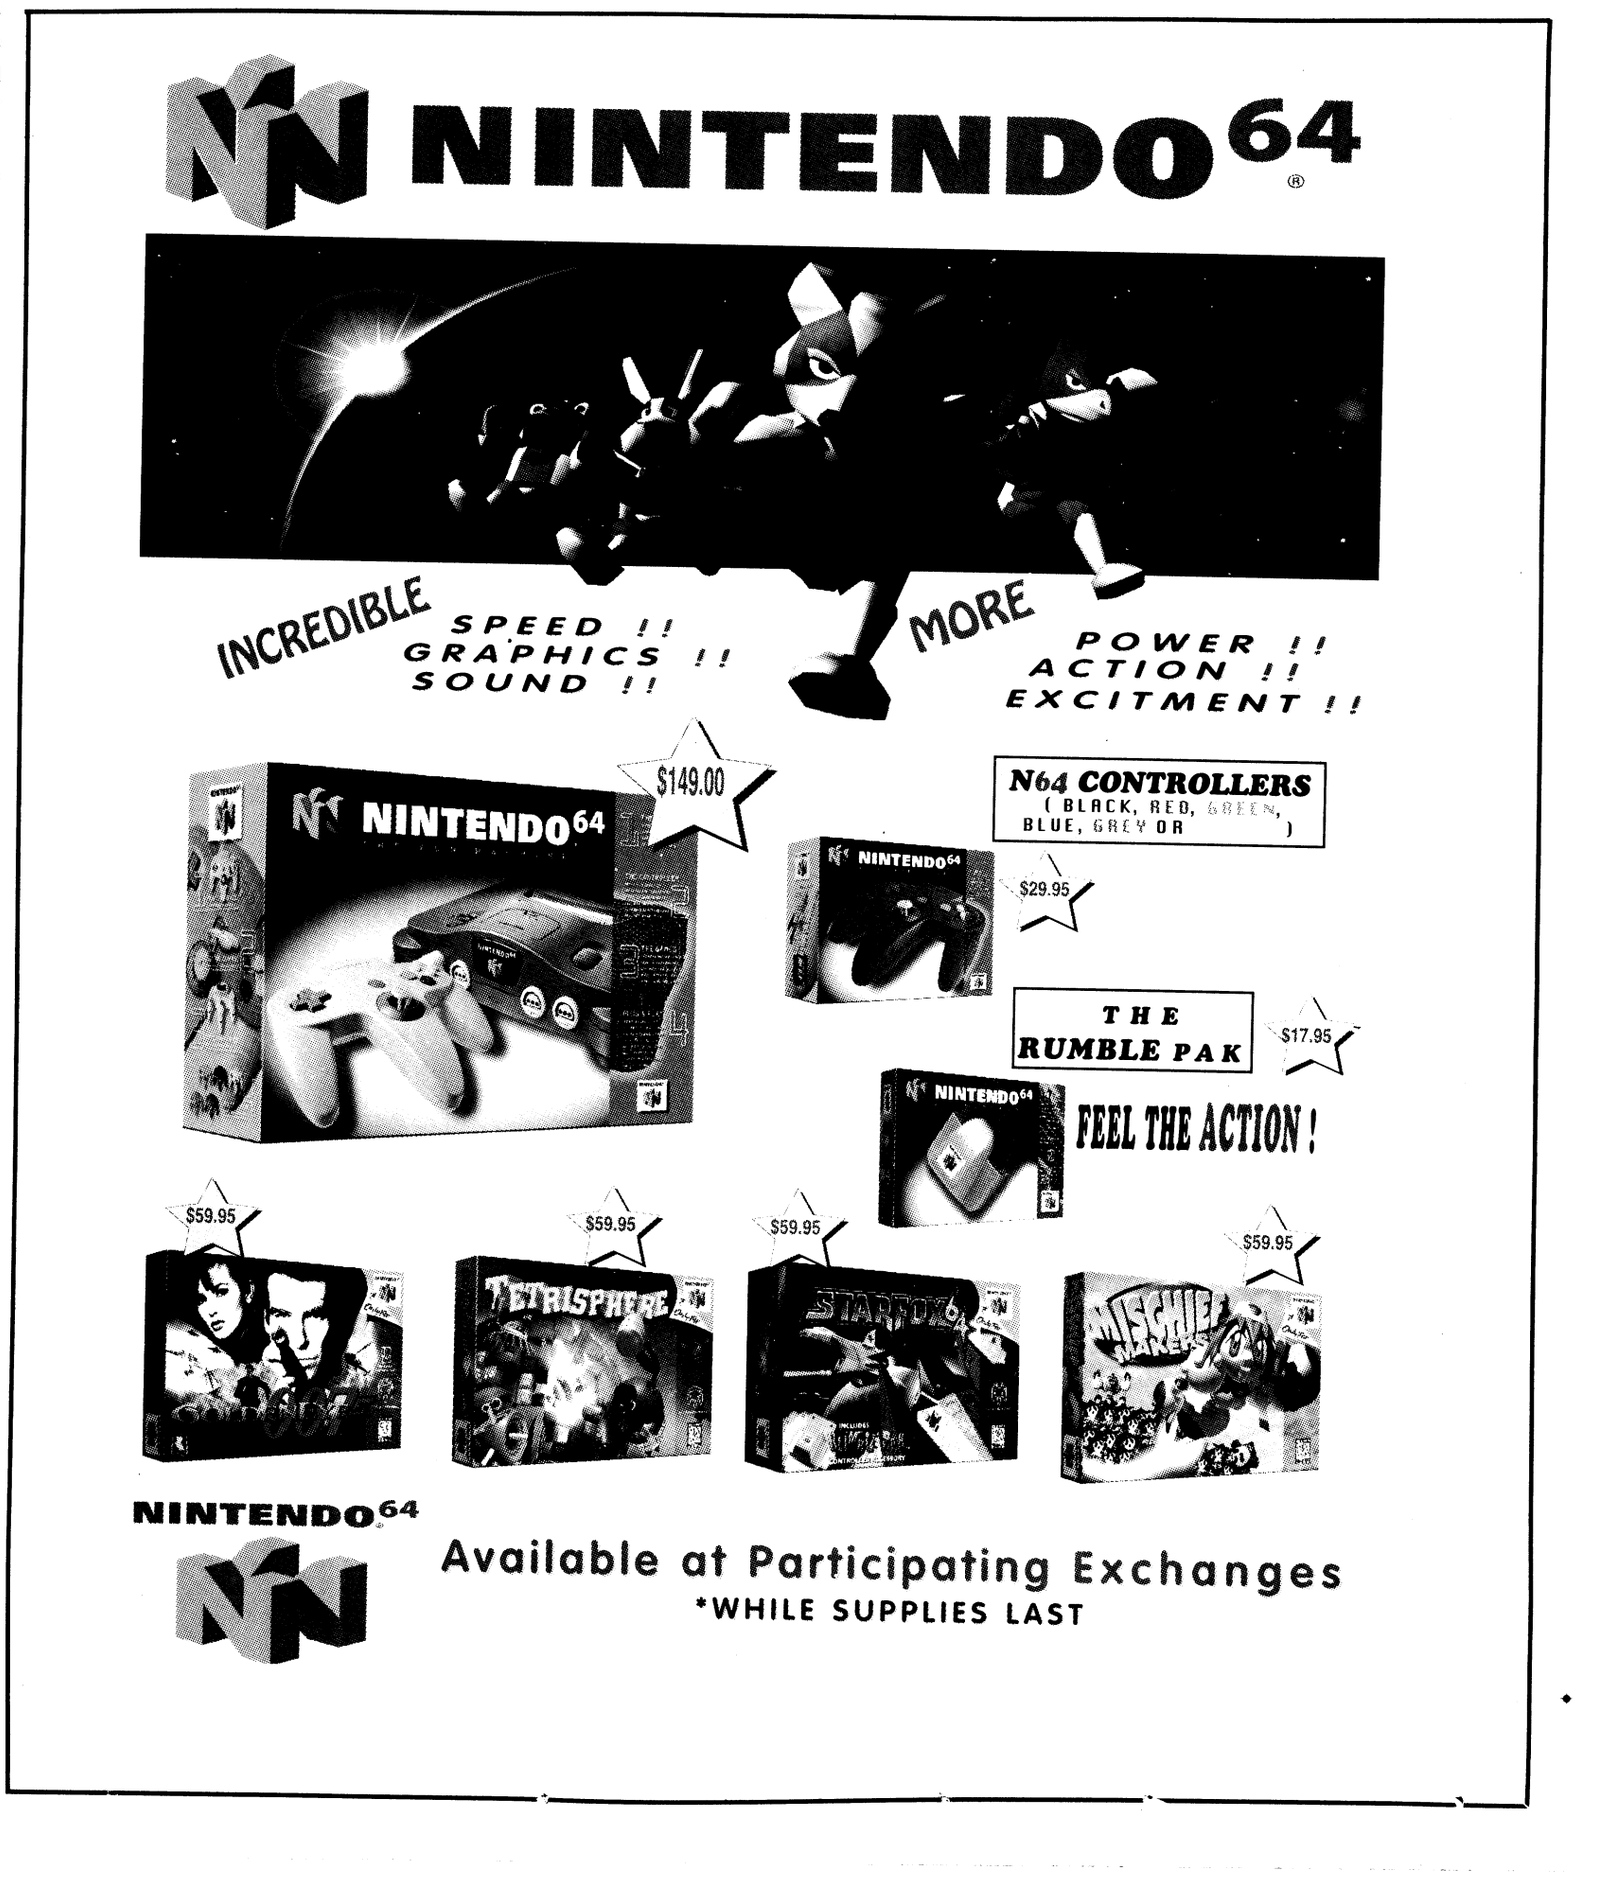
Georgia staggered motor registration begins in January

Georgia Department of Revenue

ATLANTA — In 1998, Georgia will begin its "staggered system" for registration of motor vehicles, with the applicable registration period now tied to the owner's birthday.

The Motor Vehicle Division of the Georgia Department of Revenue completed printing all registration prebills for the month of January 1998 and forwarded them to the counties for mailing.

"Throughout 1998, motor vehicle owners will receive their registration prebills approximately 30 days before their registration period — when payment of registration renewal fees and ad valorem taxes are due," Milton W. Dufford, deputy commissioner for Motor Vehicles, said. "We intend to expedite delivery of all prebills each month in 1998, except for the 57 counties that will print their own prebills, so that the staggered registration process in this first year is as easy as possible for Georgia motor vehicle owners."



Registration prebills printed for January 1998 include motor vehicle owners with birthdays occurring in that month, as well as business or company names beginning with the letter "A" or "B".

Some special category registrations such as vehicles with a gross vehicle weight over 26,000 pounds, including the International Registration Plan and trailers with permanent trailer tags, must be renewed between now and Feb. 15. Prebills for these vehicles have also been delivered to the counties.

Dufford said prebills have also been printed and delivered to the 14 Georgia counties who will continue to register their vehicles from Jan. 2 through April 30, including Talbot County taxpayers with birthdays in January, February or March and businesses whose names begin with the letter "A," "B," "C," or "D".

Taxpayers and businesses who do not receive a prebill within two weeks of their expiration date should contact the County Tax Commissioner's Office.

Halogen lamps cause fires, death

Infantry Branch Safety Office

That nifty floor lamp you bought could be a potential fire hazard.

The U.S. Consumer Product Safety Commission (CPSC) reports that since 1992 torchiere style halogen floor lamps have been linked to at least 189 fires and 11 deaths nationwide.

"Many people don't realize that these tubular halogen lamps operate at temperatures much hotter than the incandescent bulbs we are all used to," said CPSC Chairman Ann Brown. "We want people to know about the difference between regular bulbs and tubular halogen bulbs so they can handle lamps with these hotter bulbs safely and prevent injuries or fires."

These lamps first became available in the United States around 1983. The most popular model is the six- to seven-foot high lamp, which is distributed by numerous retail stores.

It is estimated that U.S. consumers have purchased 35 to 40 million of these types of lamps. Tests conducted by the CPSC showed that these lamps contain tubular halogen bulbs of 250, 300 and 500 watts that could start a fire if placed too close to combustible materials.

The surface temperature of bulbs in these lamps may reach 1,000 degrees Fahrenheit. Inside the lamp's open top sits the very bright tubular halogen bulb with a thin glass guard over it.

The inverted lamp shade acts as a funnel and channels everything downward if the glass shield is broken. Flammable items can get trapped in the bowl-like top of the lamp shade next to the bulb.

The CPSC received reports of halogen bulbs overheating and exploding. In one case a lamp fell over onto a sofa, which caught fire. On numerous occasions, drapes have caught fire because of being located too close to the lamps.

In perhaps the most famous incident, the apartment of legendary jazz musician Lionel Hampton caught fire when intense heat generated by a halogen lamp ignited combustible material placed too close to the lamp. The subsequent five-alarm fire destroyed everything Hampton had collected from his distinguished music career.

Although the manufacturers place safety warning labels on the lamps, they vary in language, size and locations in which they are placed on the lamps.

Underwriters Laboratories (UL), the leading product safety testing organization will now require that these lamps bear additional warning labels, which will be more prominently displayed on the lamps.

To correct the problem the CPSC and manufactures of the lamps are offering consumers free kits for the lamps. These kits feature a wire mesh guard that owners can place over the lamp fixture to keep flammable materials away from the bulb.

For a list of participating stores or to leave your name and address for a free repair kit, call toll free (800) 985-2220.

For more information or to report a dangerous product, call toll free (800) 638-2772 or (800) 638-8270. Concerned consumers may also visit the U. S. Consumer Product Safety Commission home page on the Internet @ www.cpsc.gov.

CPSC recommends the following safety precautions

Infantry Branch Safety Office

The purpose of this safety alert is to inform all personnel on the danger of halogen lamps and to provide safe operating procedures.

The U.S. Consumer Product Safety Commission (CPSC) declared halogen torch lamps a hazard. Since 1992, there have been at least 189 fires and 11 deaths involving halogen lamps. The most popular model is the six- to seven-foot high torch style lamp. The surface temperature of bulbs in these types of lamps can approach 1,000 degrees Fahrenheit.

The CPSC has received reports of halogen bulbs overheating and exploding.

In order to reduce the risk of fire and personal injury, follow these precautions:

•Never allow torch halogen lamps to be placed where the bulb could come in contact with curtains or other combustible material.

•Never leave a torch halogen lamp on when you leave the room or are not at home.

•Unplug the halogen lamp if not in use for a long period of time. Check the electrical cord for cracks, frays, nicks, or cuts.

•Never drape clothes or other cloths over a torch halogen lamp.

•For halogen lamps equipped with a dimmer switch, set the lamp at a lower setting whenever possible.

•Do not place a torch halogen lamp in a high traffic area where it could be toppled.

For more information or questions about torch halogen lamps, contact the U.S. Consumer Product Safety Commission at (800)-638-2772, Internet home page: www.cpsc.gov.

Turtle: Moves to Chattahoochee

"They are virtually never seen basking and they spend most of their time lying on the bottom," she said.

"Juvenile turtles often lay motionless on the bottom with their mouths gaped open and they wiggle the worm-like tips of their tongues to attract fish. They display extreme patience in waiting until a small fish is within their mouth before snapping shut. Adults also eat mollusks, smaller turtles, birds, beaver, small alligators, water snakes, carrion and plant material such as acorns and palmetto fruits."

Jensen said many turtles die on trotlines from drowning or are killed to make hook removal easier.

"According to Fort Benning and Georgia state fishing regulations you must check trotlines daily," Jensen said. "Check at least once a day and cut the leaders if removing the hooks is not possible."

While fishermen should be cautious when releasing turtles, it is not necessary to kill them.

NRMB is responsible for monitoring and protecting Fort Benning's federal and state listed species and habitats.

Fort Benning has seven birds, four mammals, four amphibians, nine reptiles, eight fish and 26 plant species that are threatened, endangered, or rare species of special concern.

"The release of the snapping turtle by Georgia DNR is an example of the cooperative efforts of NRMB personnel and their federal and state counterparts," Day said.

The public can help in the effort to protect these plants and animals by learning more about these species and their habitats. Call NRMB at 544-7319 for more information.

Iraq: Uses chemical weapons

"I spent seven months in northern Iraq. I went into the Kurdish villages that (Saddam) gassed ... He used (chemical weapons) in the Iran-Iraq War. He's used them against the marsh Arabs (Shiite muslims living in southern Iraq).

"So he's used chemical weapons against brother Arabs and brother Muslims. If he has them, it's clear he will use them."

Zinni said the potential exists for Iraq to launch chemical strikes into neighboring countries. Protecting U.S. and coalition forces in the region — and the civilian populations of the neighboring countries — becomes an important mission for the coalition. He said Central Command will respond to Saddam's capabilities and not his intentions.

"I could not predict Saddam Hussein's actions and would never intend to do so," he said. "I think we have to fully expect that it could be a possibility that (a military confrontation) could occur. I am not sure how desperate he is. He is a man who doesn't act rationally. I have seen the results of his handiwork. It's sickening, and it seems to me he has little value for human life. And if it's a question of being in power, I think he'd resort to any act."

Lieutenants train in urban scenario

By Lt. Will Parker
Infantry Officer Basic Course

Company B, 2nd Battalion, (Infantry Officer Basic Course) (IOBC) 11th Infantry Regiment, recently completed its fifth field problem at McKenna Military Operations on Urban Terrain (MOUT) site. The company trained on individual and team skills necessary for survival in urban or built up areas.

The MOUT scenario is a mission the U.S. Army is increasingly finding itself accomplishing as its doctrine.

"The purpose of this field problem is to train these future platoon leaders on the individual and collective tasks to train their platoons," Staff Sgt. James Collier, NCOIC of the site said.

The company arrived at McKenna at 10 a.m. Nov. 25 and received blocks of instruction on individual tasks such as stance and target interrogation. The lieutenants also received blocks of instruction on team movement inside buildings and techniques for clearing rooms.

Once the lieutenants had practiced their new skills, they practiced various techniques for entering buildings. Among the techniques were the use of grappling hooks, two-man lift and buddy lift.

Later in the evening the future platoon leaders were given the opportunity to put everything they learned earlier that day into practice.

Each squad practiced approaching, entering and clearing buildings with their fellow platoon members playing the opposing force.

Later that evening a few of the students had the opportunity to be opposing forces for a practice mission for Soldiers from 3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment.

The exercise was witnessed by distinguished visitors including Post Commander Maj. Gen. Carl F. Ernst. The lieutenants who had the opportunity to participate in exercise were very impressed with the skills the rangers displayed.

"The ranger exercise was a great opportunity for the lieutenants to see what it takes to conduct a battalion size exercise," Collier said.

The next day Co. B put these skills into practice once again but at the platoon level and with different rules of engagement (ROE).

During one such operation, the platoon was required simply to clear the building. However, during the second operation the platoon was required to extract friendly personnel with hostile forces present. Therefore the rules of engagement were much stricter than in the first exercise. The lieutenants were placed in a situation were they must identify their targets before they fired.

"It's hard to enter a room knowing that there might be someone in there that wants to kill you and wait to pull the trigger." one of the participants in the exercise, 2nd Lieutenant Kenneth Reed said.

After training was completed later that morning, the lieutenants conducted recovery operations and moved back to the company area.

"Overall I believe they (the lieutenants) saw the basics they need to emphasize once they get to their platoons," Collier said.

Co. B is in its 13th week of training. Class 7-97 graduates in December.

U.S. forces continue to help abroad

By Linda D. Kozaryn
American Forces Press Service

WASHINGTON — U.S. service members will help Kazakhstan's military in the year ahead to be all it can be.

U.S. Army Gen. Hugh Shelton, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff and Colonel-General Muhktar Altnybayev, defense minister of the former Soviet republic, signed a military contact plan in mid-November calling for more than 40 events and exchanges.

Department of Defense's fiscal 1998 budget includes about $550,000 in international military education and training funds for training in Kazakhstan and for Kazakhstani officers to train in the United States, Pentagon officials said. About $1.5 million in foreign military financing is allocated to help Kazakhstan buy nonlethal equipment.

The increased military contact is part of a defense cooperation agreement signed Nov. 17 by U.S. Defense Secretary William S. Cohen and Kazakhstan President Nursultan Nazarbayev.

"The United States and Kazakhstan share a determination to work for peace and stability in Central Asia," Cohen said. "Our countries are successfully reducing the threat from weapons of mass destruction. Through the Nunn-Lugar Cooperative Threat Reduction Program, we have supported Kazakhstan's visionary decision to dismantle its nuclear arsenal and to become nuclear free."

The United States and Kazakhstan also work together through the Partnership for Peace program aimed at building new security structures for regional stability, Cohen said.

In September, about 1,400 troops from Kazakhstan, Uzbekistan, Kyrgyzstan, Russia, Georgia, Turkey, and the United States participated in CENTRAZBAT 97, the Central Asian peacekeeping battalion's first exercise.

Made up of troops from Kazakhstan, Uzbekistan and Kyrgyzstan, the battalion formed in 1996 to create a regional security cooperation structure focused on peacekeeping and humanitarian assistance.

At present, Kazakhstan has no border disputes, Nazarbayev said. Its goals in furthering defense cooperation with the United States are to preserve its territorial integrity and to help maintain regional stability, he said.

"Our country is a peaceful country. Nevertheless, our major goal, and it's a very important goal, is to have very educated, highly professional military forces," he said. "I think in this respect, we can take advantage of the great expertise of the United States of America."

Digitalization helps Army readiness

By Jim Caldwell
TRADOC News Service

FORT HOOD, Texas —Sometimes new developments serve to underscore the truth of proverbial observations. The maxim best defined by the Army's digital communications systems is "knowledge is power."

Digital communications will give commanders and Soldiers a view of the battlefield never before experienced.

"It's combat situational awareness," said Gen. William W. Hartzog, commander of Training and Doctrine Command. "It generates a different pace on the battlefield. It generates a different ability to disperse on the battlefield. And that allows you to synchronize the impacts of the weapons."

Digitized communications will be crucial in the conduct of the Division Advanced Warfighting Experiment being conducted at Fort Hood.

Probably the most important information to warfighting commanders, according to Hartzog, is the precise answer to three questions — where you are, where other friendly forces are and the location of the enemy.

Digitized communications systems, which nearly instantaneously links satellites, scouts, sensors and other intelligence systems to the commanders, answers those questions.

"Digitization isn't going to make tanks go faster, or enable them to move across terrain that's impossible for them go over," said Col. Al Turner, director of TRADOC's Joint Venture office.

"But what it will enable us to do is apply decisive power across a much wider area. Since we know where the enemy is, we can separate forces and not be concerned about him being on our flanks. That's one reason why we have always maneuvered with our forces massed," he said.

Digitization has led to computerizing the tactical operations center, where the commander controls battles. That permits the combat leaders to have a clear picture of operations plans, according to Col. Joe Leigh, commander of the digital force coordination cell at Fort Hood.

"The commander inputs the battle plans into a computer and you go through a wargaming process that takes you through the conduct of the battle," he said. "Everyone understands that war game as opposed to, if you have 14 guys in the room, having 14 different mental pictures."

The commander of the 4th Infantry Division, Maj. Gen. William S. Wallace, has also demonstrated another capability of the digitized TOC, Leigh said.

"In our doctrine today we talk about the close fight, the deep fight and the rear fight," he said. "General Wallace and his staff are dividing the battlefield into the 'now' fight and the 'next' fight."

That concept was developed during simulation exercises in which division leaders trained to use digitized systems.

"The brigades are setting the fight right now, but the division commander is not," Leigh said. "He has assumed his brigades are going to be successful and he's beginning to shape the battlefield for the next fight."

That consists of using the wargaming tool, and having artillery and Air Force bombers begin hitting the area of the battlefield where the next fight will be. The commander tracks the progress of his brigades and knows what they will need after they have won the current battle. Combat support and combat service support forces are ready to resupply and service the warfighters.

"We are just now getting to the point where we're beginning to understand the real potential of digitization," Leigh said.

Personnel work jointly during exercise

By Staff Sgt. Dee Ann Poole
9th AEW PAO

Wiping the sleep out of her eyes after a 5 a.m. wake-up, Airman Sebrina Gonzalez prepares for another long day of welcoming and processing hundreds of Soldiers, sailors, Marines and airmen participating in Bright Star 1997.

Gonzalez works in the Joint Reception Center (JRC) where she helps control accountability for the nearly 15,000 people who will eventually be in the area of responsibility.

"This is the first time Bright Star has incorporated a JRC into the plan," said Air Force Maj. Bill West, JRC chief. Before this, service members processed through their separate services.

However, the purple color of Bright Star demands the Air Force and Army learn how to work together. Thus, the JRC is staffed by 14 Air Force and 11 Army personnel experts.

West said they volunteered to increase their personnel expertise in contingency operations.

"The only way to be good at accountability is to practice," West said. "Working at a bare base creates a challenging environment for us and makes us more prepared for wartime contingencies."

He said his team must overcome communication irregularities, the time change between Egypt and the states, and the constant challenge of keeping pace with people who are highly mobile.

To increase the JRC's support of Bright Star participants, two American Red Cross (ARC) members and an Air Force casualty expert are part of the team.

West said the ARC duo has helped lessen the stress for newcomers. For example, a captain talked to the ARC representatives to let them know his wife is 8 1/2 months pregnant. "This helps us know who he is and how to get in touch with him when we need to," West said.

"The casualty expert is also an important part of the JRC staff. If you don't know how to work casualty, it's difficult," he said. Our expert, Staff Sgt. Randy Hatem, has worked them for the past five years. If we had a casualty, he'd talk to his co-workers," West explained.

West is thankful for the learning curve Bright Star is providing junior Air Force members who are part of his team. Gonzalez, who joined the Air Force 15 months ago, is just one example.

"I'm glad I'm learning the other side of my job," she said. At Barksdale, AFB, La., Gonzalez is responsible for customer service, records and ID cards.

"This exercise has shown me how serious my job is and how it affects the customer, unit and possibly that person's family. When I go back to Barksdale, Ill., certainly be a better asset for my unit," she said.

Air Force Staff Sgt. Brian Sapp, a nine-year veteran stationed at Nellis AFB, Nev., is also pleased with what heís learning here.

"The interaction between the Air Force and Army is key to a successful operation," Sapp said. "I'm learning how the Army transportation and logistics systems work because I'm learning their procedures and acronyms. Knowing how things work can only put me ahead of the game for next time," she said.

Air Force staffing for the JRC is provided by Shaw AFB, S.C., Langley AFB, Va., Davis-Monthan AFB, Ariz., Wright-Patterson AFB, Ohio, Randolph AFB, Texas, Barksdale and Nellis.

Military still finding qualified volunteers to join

American Forces Press Service

WASHINGTON — Despite tough goals, military recruiters came through, announced Fred Pang, assistant defense secretary for force management policy.

"To support today's high-tech, volunteer force, we must recruit the best, most capable young men and women," Pang said. "The armed forces have again enlisted the right quantity and quality of new recruits from throughout American society to meet personnel requirements."

In fiscal 1997, 94 percent of the services' 188,609 first-time enlistees held high school diplomas and 69 percent scored above average on the Armed Forces Qualification Test. In addition, 8,472 individuals with previous military experience re-entered service.

Department of Defense (DoD) quality benchmarks require 90 percent high school graduates and 60 percent above average on the enlistment test. Most prior-service recruits were high school graduates with above average test scores.

New recruit demographics show diversity in the ranks. The proportion of black and Hispanic recruits rose 1 percent each to 20 percent and 10 percent, respectively. The percentage of women recruits stayed at 19 percent.

"Recruiting has been challenging over the past several years," Pang said. "With the Defense Department drawdown, there was a corresponding drop in recruiting resources. Money for advertising, education benefits and enlistment bonuses declined, and the number of recruiters declined."

Pang said the reductions led to a drop in youth interest. In response, Congress provided advertising resources to counter the perception "we weren't hiring" by promoting the opportunities and benefits of military service.

"The department will continue to emphasize recruiting top quality men and women into the force; keeping them ready by providing rigorous, realistic training; and retaining them," Pang said, adding service benefits should be equal to the sacrifices military personnel make.

Soldiers learn new skills in Egyptian exercise

By Spc. Stephanie D. Morton
Fort Lee Public Affairs Office

As Army Pfc. Jason Homesley carefully drove a high mobility multi wheeled vehicle down the ramp of the USS Antares and onto steady ground at the Port of Dukhaylah, he knew Bright Star would soon begin.

Though troops arrived in the country as early as July to begin preparing for the exercise, it was the arrival of the third and final naval vessel loaded with an array of battle equipment which filled the Egyptian air with anticipation of something to come.

These naval ships contained such equipment as Paladins, Bradleys and Abrams were unloaded at the Port of Dukhaylah and then hauled off to their final destination.

Homesley, 123rd Signal Battalion, Fort Stewart, Ga., is enthusiastic about his contributions at the port.

He was tasked to help Task Force 7 in unloading equipment from naval ships for Bright Star.

"I'm a field communications specialist," Homesley said, "I didn't even know this MOS existed. I think it would be a cool job to travel all over the world unloading ships."

It's not a new situation for Army Capt. Mark Russell, Military Traffic Management Command-Europe, port operations officer. He said that journeying to Egypt and working at a port is pretty routine in his job.

"We're training the way that we fight," said Russell. "It's working extremely well."

Stevedores and transportation specialists started with the upper deck and worked their way down as they unloaded the naval ships.

"These guys of the 416th Transportation Company, Fort Stewart, Ga., have done an outstanding job, as well as the whole of Task Force 7," said Army Capt. Charles Thompson, Task Force 7, Battalion operations officer, 10th Transportation, Bn., Fort Eustis, Va.

Reserve units will join in the effort when it's time to redeploy the equipment. Soldiers from the 302nd and 49th Terminal Service Companies from Fort Eustis, Va., and Jacksonville, Fla., will load the three naval ships with all the equipment once the exercise is over, Thompson said.

He also explained the operation will flip-flop, so that the third ship to be unloaded is the first ship to be loaded for redeployment to the states, and Soldiers will load the equipment onto the lower deck and work their way up.

Soldiers from the 155th Transportation Bn., Fort Eustis, Va., assisted in unloading vehicles from the ships. They broke the chains holding them in place, drove some off the ship and lowered others down with cranes, said Army Sgt. Mike Sutphin, 155th Transportation Bn., Fort Eustis, Va. "It's good training," he said.

"We unload all the humvees and wheeled vehicles from the ship and then drive them down to the marshalling area," said Army Sgt. Eric Reynolds, 123rd Signal Bn., Fort Stewart, Ga. "That's a parking area where we assemble vehicles to the right trailers and from there, they deploy to the battle sites."

"This is a first for all of us," said Army Pfc. Anand Mahangu, also of 123rd Signal Bn.

"It's the best, and most exciting, field experience I've had in the Army so far," Homesley said.

With so many different units working together, port operations at Dukhaylah is a unique opportunity for the Soldiers to learn new skills as well as meet other service members.

New policy directs commanders for post's security

By Jim Caldwell
TRADOC News Service

FORT MONROE, Va. — Force protection measures installation commanders must take to ensure the security and safety of Soldiers, family members and civilian employees are spelled out in a new Training and Doctrine Command regulation.

Publication of TRADOC Regulation 525-13, "Force Protection Program," is tentatively set for December, according to Floyd Reneau, TRADOC's force protection officer and program manager.

"The reg advises installation commanders how to use their security resources to protect the Soldiers, civilian employees and family members who live and work on the installation, regardless of the type of threat," Reneau said.

"It's the commander's responsibility to provide a safe and secure environment on the installation."

Threats military installations may face are listed under four broad categories — terrorists, criminals, subversives and protesters.

Terrorists pose a larger threat for Americans overseas, Reneau said, but the possibility of terrorism in the United States can't be ignored.

Militia groups as well as gangs and thieves are part of the criminal category.

"They'll try to get someone from the inside to steal weapons and other sensitive items for them," he said. "They'll try to acquire government property for resale or for personal use."

Subversives pose the threat that spies and saboteurs have always held for the American military. Demonstrators are included because of the possibility of peaceful demonstrations turning violent, Reneau said.

The regulation directs commanders to form force protection committees. Members should be from operations, engineering, resource management, security and law enforcement. Local civilian law enforcement leaders should also be on the committee.

"The force protection committee is the eyes and ears for the commander in this area," Reneau said.

The regulation identifies four levels of force protection training available to Army members.

•Level 1 — train personnel who are going overseas to make them aware of threats and protective measures.

•Level 2 — educate selected personnel so they can conduct training at their home stations.

•Levels 3 and 4 — train junior and senior Army leaders, respectively, during professional military courses.

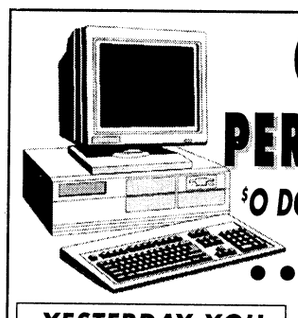
"Force protection doctrine has been put into lesson plans for everyone beginning with basic trainees," Reneau said.

People who live and work on an Army post are vital to force protection, similar to civilian neighborhood community watch programs.

Awareness and self-protection training is available for the Soldier, their family members, and civilian employees.

Force protection is a Department of Defense program, but it has to be tailored to specific military installations.

"The threat that involves other Army installations may not be applicable to TRADOC installations," he said. "Nor will all TRADOC installations be exposed to the same kind of threat.



Fort Bliss at El Paso, Texas, which sits right on the Mexican border may have threats altogether different than Fort Lee in Petersburg, Va."

TRADOC installations also differ from other Army posts in that most of them are "open posts." People can normally drive through the gates without being stopped for identification checks.

In 1998 DoD teams will begin making site visits to about 19 military installations. Four TRADOC installations are on their schedule — Fort Bliss, Texas, Fort Huachuca, Ariz., Fort Knox, Ky., and Fort Leonard Wood, Mo.

Members of the interservice teams will represent law enforcement, intelligence, operations, structural engineers, and other specialties. After a week-long assessment of facilities, the team will brief the commander on possible vulnerable areas.

"That's when we bring in the concept of risk management," Reneau said. "Nobody has enough money to protect themselves against all possible threats."

Iraq featured in new DoD report

By Steve Hara
American Forces Press Service

WASHINGTON — Iraq's Saddam Hussein lost in his recent tiff over U.N. weapons inspections, and he'll keep losing until he complies fully with U.N. provisions, Defense Secretary William Cohen said Nov. 25.

Reporters quickly and totally focused attention on the Iraq-U.N. faceoff at a Pentagon press conference announcing the release of DoD's updated "Proliferation: Threat and Response" booklet. At issue in the dispute was an Iraqi demand that U.S. members be cut from U.N. weapons inspection teams.

"Saddam lost. This time he gained three weeks' delay, but look back. That's been the pattern for six years," Cohen said. The United Nations made no concessions and held sanctions in place, he said. More importantly, Saddam lost before the world.

"People are now aware why it's so important U.N. inspectors needed to be in there. Now they know that a small bit of anthrax can kill you in five days," he said, holding up two pinched fingers. "(Saddam) succeeded in enlightening the world to the problem. This is not Iraq vs. the United States, but (Iraq vs.) the United Nations and the world."

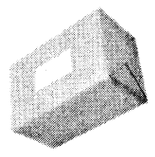
The U.S. effort to deal with the Iraqi proliferation problem is not short-term, Cohen said; it will go on for some time. Saddam has done everything possible to thwart the United Nations, he said. U.S. responses include consulting with allies and possibly seeking even tighter U.N. controls.

"Military force is always an option, but the last one, not first," Cohen said. "If military force is necessary, you can be reasonably assured it will not be a pinprick."

Iraq is prominently featured in the 1997 DoD proliferation report, which assesses regional threats from the spread of nuclear, biological and chemical weapons. Other proliferants reviewed include North Korea, China, India, Pakistan and Iran.

All have missiles and weapons of mass destruction that can threaten regional neighbors, many of which are U.S. friends, according to the report.

"The front lines are no longer overseas. They are anywhere," Cohen said. He called nerve and chemical weapons "a poor man's atom bomb" and said they're no longer just a potential threat.



"They are a clear and present danger today," he said.

ACAP assists Soldiers with post-Army plans

Army Career and Alumni Program

The Army Career and Alumni Program (ACAP) Center helps separating Soldiers package their skills, experience, training and work habits for future employment.

The Fort Benning ACAP Center is in business to help separating Soldiers better understand benefits and facilitate a smooth transition to civilian life whether voluntary or involuntary, said Chick Eagle, ACAP counselor. A majority of the ACAP counseling is devoted to helping Soldiers prepare job search plans and resumes.

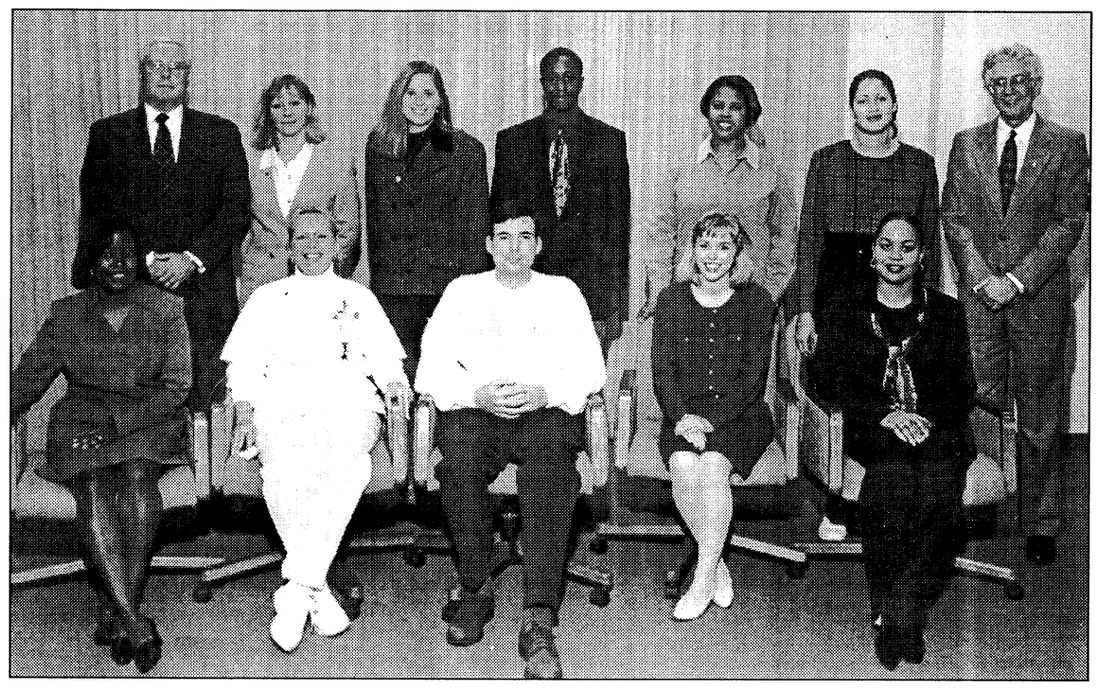
"I enjoy my work helping fulfill a promise made to many Soldiers when they enlisted that the skills, experience, training and work habits gained in the Army would enhance future employability," Eagle said. "ACAP has assisted thousands of Soldiers land excellent jobs after the Army."

Employers have said they like to hire Soldiers because of the following:

Calendar of upcoming events

Date, time, location	Event	Job type
Tuesday 9 a.m. to 3 p.m. Soldiers Plaza, Building 2634	Recruiter Vinnell Corp.	Military trainers Saudi Arabia
Thursday 9 a.m. to 2 p.m. Soldiers Plaza, Building 2634	Recruiter Sears	Mechanics Sears Tire Group

•Soldiers have a proven record of performance, dedication, teamwork and documented success in challenging work situations.



•Soldiers are reliable, disciplined, trainable with excellent skills, ability and experience.

•Soldiers know how to supervise, motivate, teach and evaluate other team members.

•Soldiers work until the job is done with quality and timeliness.

"When the decision has been made to separate from the Army, the ACAP counselors are trained and experienced to help Soldiers package their work history and find success in the job market," Eagle said. "Just this past month I heard from Soldiers now employed with security firms, police departments, automotive maintenance firms, the Boy Scouts of America, metal fabrication firms and there are many, many more success stories across the Army."

For more information call or visit Building 2634 in Soldiers' Plaza, or call 545-2308 or 545-2309.

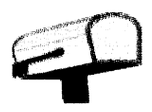
JAG tips:

How to prevent legal problems



If you live off post, be suspicious of door-to-door salespeople; don't buy into "education programs," encyclopedias or buying services. Most of them are very expensive, have terrible financing terms, and go out-of-date quickly. Door-to-door soliciting is not permitted on post, and you should call the MPs if you see any.

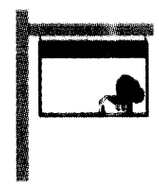
Don't buy a car or finance any purchase without shopping around for the best price and interest rate. Research the fair market price at the library or online (www.edmunds.com)

Support your family members; even if you aren't receiving BAQ. You owe them the amount of BAQ or an amount set by court order or agreement. See Army Regulation 608-99.

Don't rely on oral promises; correspond in writing by certified mail, and keep all your records.

Don't sign anything without reading it carefully or having it reviewed by a Legal Assistance Attorney. There is no three-day cooling-off period for most purchases.

Don't take on more debt than you can afford. Look at the total cost of a purchase, not just whether you can make the monthly payments.



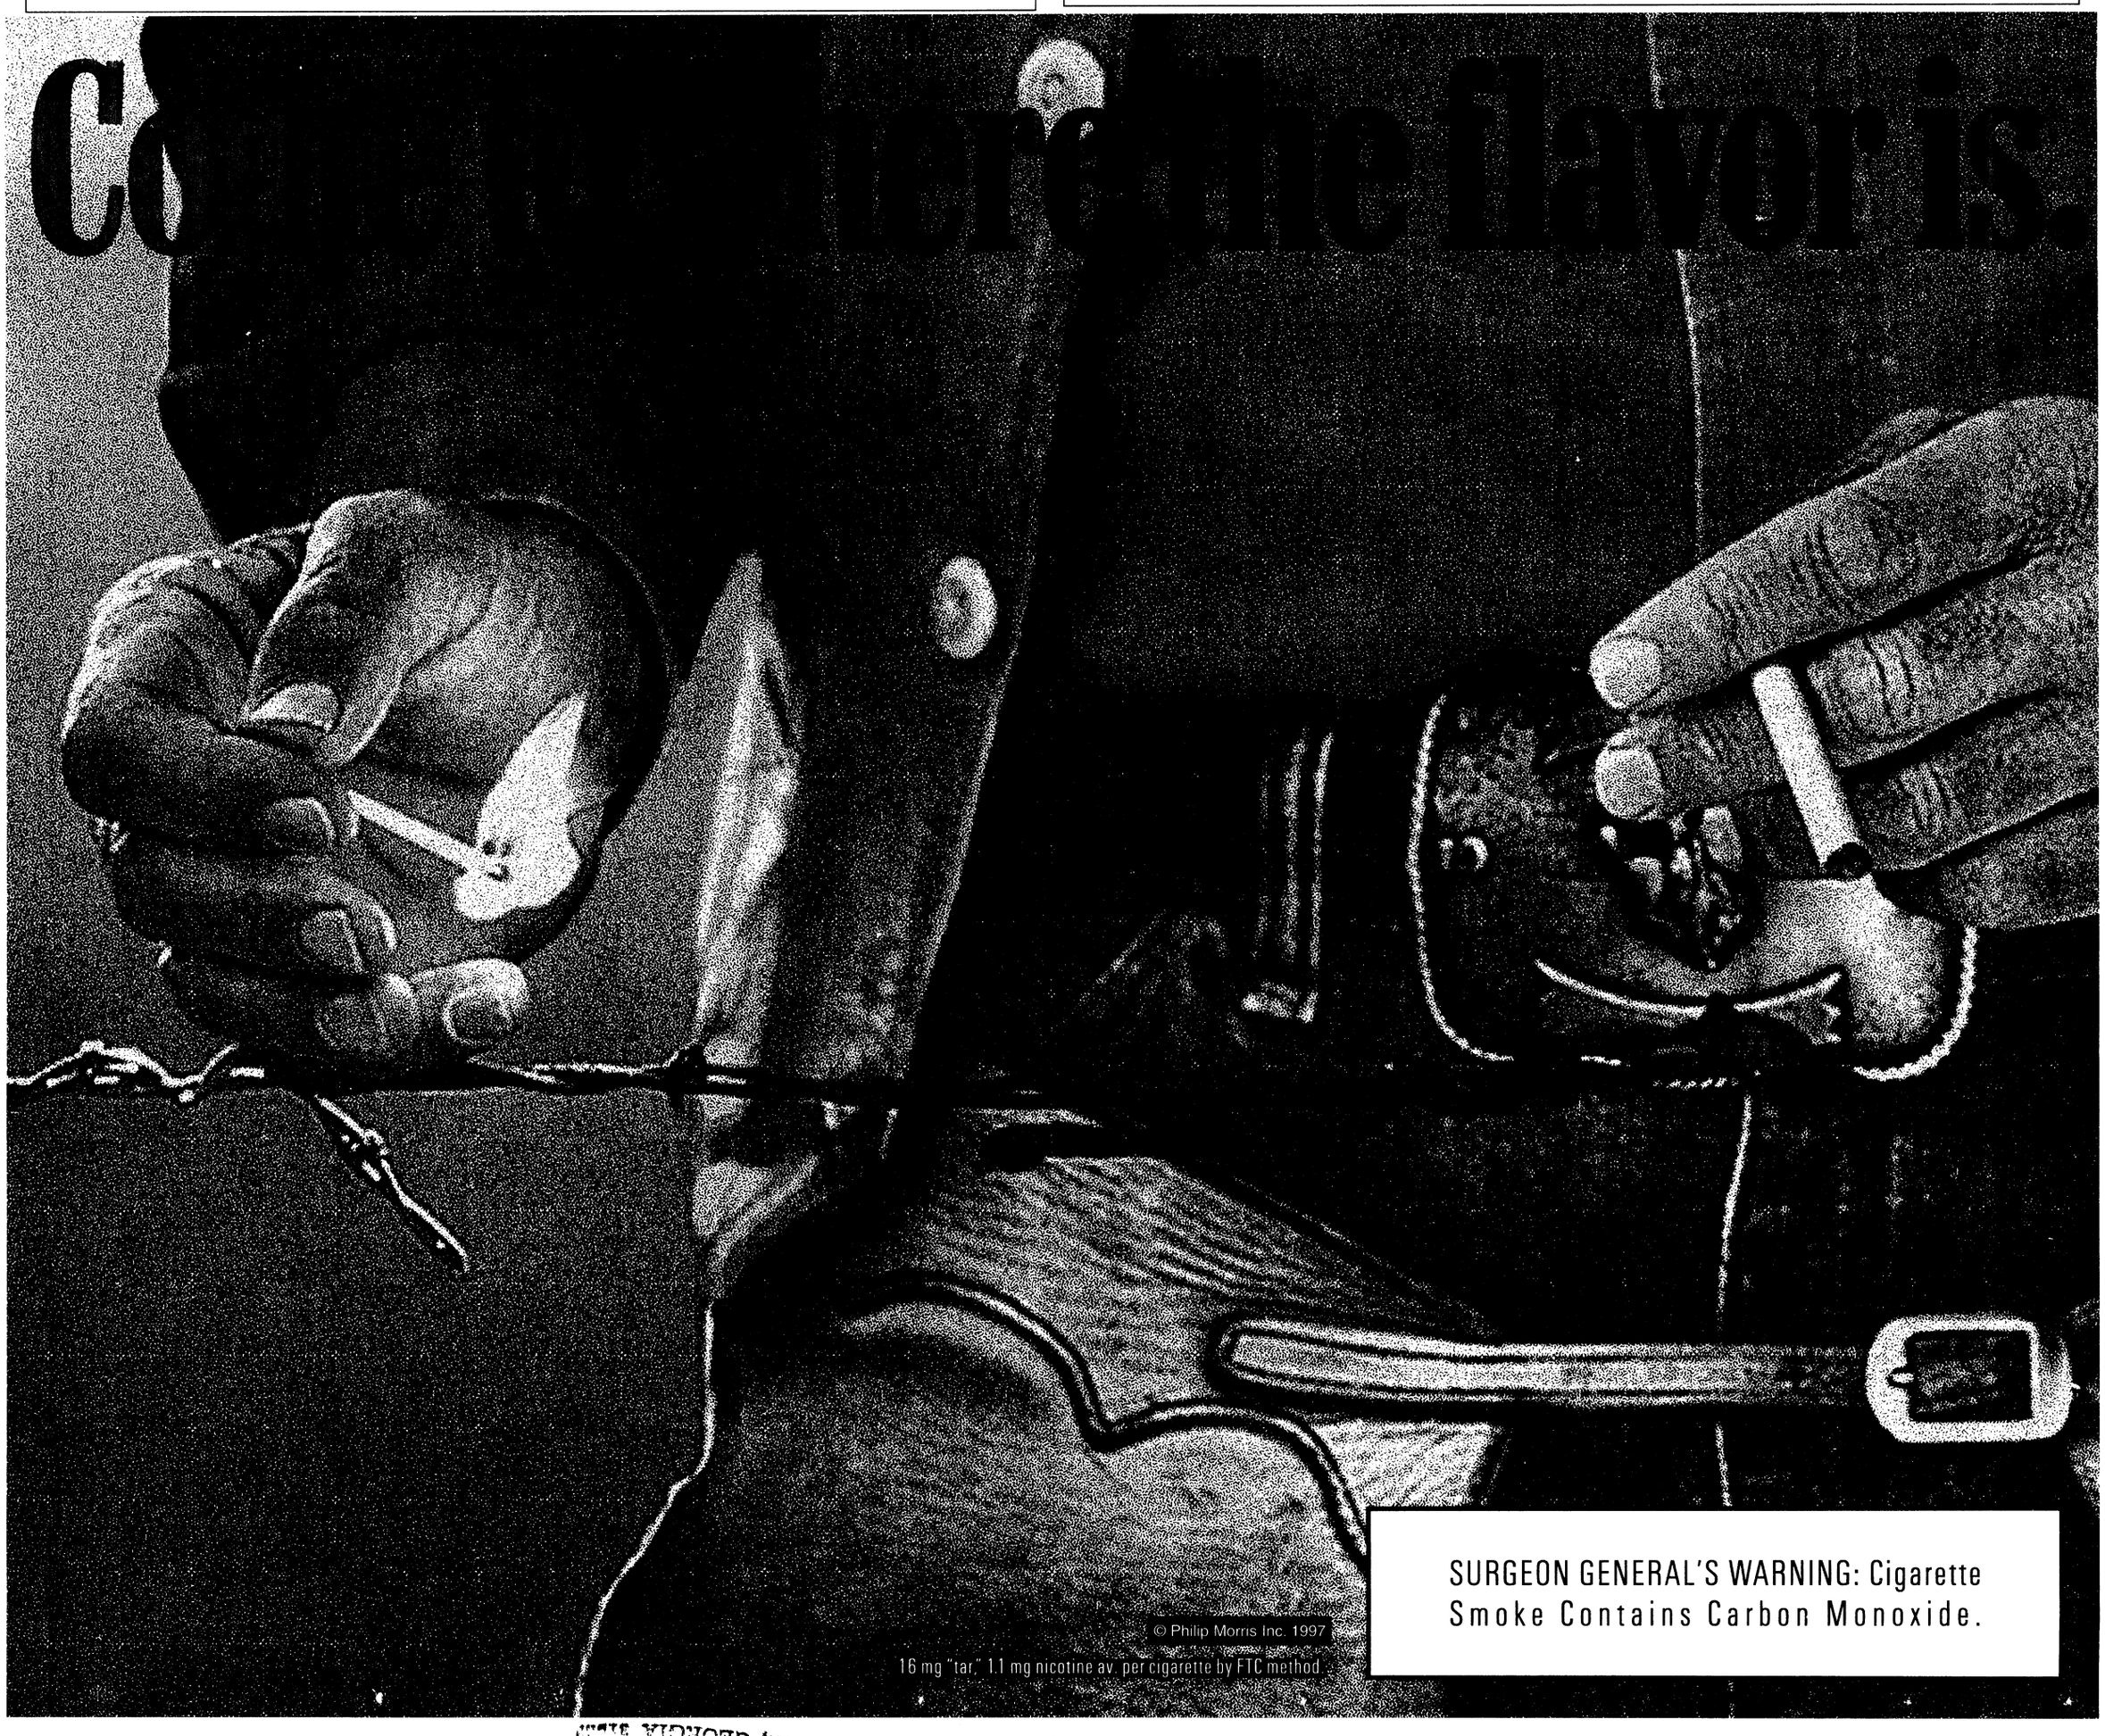
Ask around to find a reputable repair shop before taking your car in for repairs; always get a written estimate and a second opinion.

Try to get your affairs in order well in advance of deployment. Visit the JAG office to fill out powers-of-attorney and make an appointment to get a will.

Have a Legal Assistance Attorney put your agreements in writing, even if they're with friends or family members, so that they'll be enforceable in court.

Have your lease reviewed by a Legal Assistance Attorney. Make sure that you go over all preexisting damage with your landlord and put it in writing. Georgia law allows military terminations. If after signing a lease you get PCS orders or TDY orders for a period longer than three months, immediately give your landlord a copy of them with written notice that you will be leaving. You will owe rent for a period of 30 days after you give notice and will still be responsible for any damage that you have caused.

Only Soldiers don't have to pay the ad valorem tax on vehicles. If you own a vehicle jointly with your civilian spouse, that vehicle is not exempt. You're also protected only for vehicles you own, not for those that you lease.



If you're not sure how best to protect your legal interests in any kind of transaction or situation, talk to an attorney before you proceed. Call the Legal Assistance Division of the Office of the Staff Judge Advocate at 545-3281 or 545-3282 to make an appointment.

Kindergartners share the holiday spirit

Special to the Bayonet©

Carolyn Phillips' kindergarten class at E.A. White Elementary School showed their ability to share in the holiday spirit Nov. 25 when they gave less fortunate children dressed-up teddy bears.

The children were given the bears by the Salvation Army in Columbus in early November to take home and dress in new or handmade clothes.

"It's good that other kids will get them," said Lauren Pool, daughter of Jamie and Chief Warrant Officer 2 John Pool, 498th Medical Company.

"The kids were really good about it," said Phillips. "They handed them over with smiling faces. None of them wanted to keep them. That was the purpose, to teach them sharing."

The class dressed and gave back a total of 36 bears.

Capt. Anna Mitchell, associate officer of the Salvation Army, thanked the students for giving the bears to less fortunate children.

More than 700 families signed up for Christmas assistance and more than 750 bears will be given away Dec. 20, she said.

"One of the outfits is from Kmart and one is from home,"said Kristin Wilson, daughter of Deborah and Capt. Daniel Wilson, 2nd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment. "I'm sad to see them go because I like them. It feels good they're going to kids. It makes you feel good about it, giving things to people."

As the teddy bears left, the children cried in unison "Goodbye teddy bears!"

School board meets, discusses budget shortfalls

By Staff Sgt. Lori Egan
Bayonet editor

A second-grade teacher and two students from Wilson Elementary presented information about the island of Yap during the November school board meeting.

Margaret Koger and students Devon Walker and Kazue Takemoto told the board members how the class corresponded with the people of Yap via the Internet.

The main goal of the project, Koger said, started out as a writing activity for the students, but in the process, the students learned about technology and geography. The students also collected picture books, which will be boxed and mailed to the Yapese students today during the second-graders Yap Day celebration at Wilson Elementary School.

In other board news, Alice Skinner, director of Logistics and Support Services, told the board members the Consolidated School Room Fund experienced a net loss of $10,200 for the month of October. The loss brought the current fund equity to $150,942.

"We are at a point where we don't need to make a lot of profit, but the goal is not to go below the 'break even' point," she said.

The reason for the loss is a slow start to the school lunch program, Skinner said. In response to the loss, the schools are operating very conservatively for November to help turn the loss around.

She said the schools made adjustments to the menus to make maximum use of the surplus commodities, such as turkeys, frozen fruits and vegetables, eggs and cheese.

Skinner told board members the U.S. Department of Agriculture has scheduled a review for March and preparations for the review have begun.

"This review happens about once every three years," she said. "It is a very important audit."

The budget update was given by Richard Skinner, assistant superintendent. The 1998 projected budget is $21,625,000 and the funded budget $20,932,000. This means there is an anticipated shortage of $693,000.

The budget breaks down into three categories:

•Pay and benefits. The 1998 projected budget is $18,598,000 and the funded budget is $18,109,000. This is a shortfall of $489,000.

•Other, which includes travel, school bus service, contracts and post support. The 1998 projected budget is $2,043,000 and the funded budget is $1,839,000. This is a shortfall of $204,000.

•Supplies and equipment. The 1998 projected budget is $984,000 and the funded budget is $984,000 There is no anticipated shortfall.

For fiscal 1998, the pay and benefits are determined by the fiscal 1997 pay and benefits, which was $17,153,000. This number is divided by the fiscal 1997 work years of 339.96, which equals the average salary of $50,456. (A work year constitutes one person working 2087 hours per year, Skinner explained.) Next, the average salary is multiplied by a three percent pay raise for an average 1998 salary of $51,970. The 1998 average salary is then multiplied by the 1998 work years of 348.45 to get the 1998 funded amount of $18,109,000.

Salaries went up more than three percent because in addition to the three percent increase, most employees received a within grade step increase, something the Office of the Secretary of Defense didn't figure into the 1998 funded budget, Skinner said.

The other category items were projected and funded based on a 2.1 percent increase.

The supplies and equipment budget for the school system was determined by allocating $300 per student.

The Fort Benning Schools plan is to submit an unfunded requirement in the pay and benefit and other categories if these numbers don't change for the better, Skinner said.

In the superintendent's report, Dr. Dell McMullen said, "The American Education Week programs in the schools were wonderful." Parent-Teacher Organizations honored school staffs; Dexter and Loyd Elementary Schools had Lunch and Learns; and the students of Faith Middle School gave tours of the school to various community groups.

McMullen said Congressman Mac Collins visit to Wilson to celebrate Veterans Day was a great success.

Terra Nova is the new standardized test measure that is being administered this spring throughout the Department of Defense schools. Training is being given by Kathy Einhorn, Curriculum director; Vicki Rogers, Dexter Elementary School principal; and Del Hicks, McBride Elementary School principal, in each of the schools, she said.

Fifth-graders throughout the system participated in Tar Wars, Martin Army Community Hospital's effort to teach children about the dangers of nicotine.

McMullen said she and Jerry Christy, director of Technology, are in the process of speaking with every teacher in the school system about how technology is being incorporated into the curriculum. She plans to report back to the board during the January meeting.

Those who also attended the board meeting were: Col. Michael Bingham, board president and Faith representative; Staff Sgt. Dennis McClung, McBride representative; Staff Sgt. Reba Raymond, Stowers representative; Col. R.O. Buck, White representative; Lt. Col. Dana Chipman, attorney advisor; Phyllis Parker, Wilson's principal; Robbie Norris, labor relations specialist; Diane Hilt, vice president, Benning Education Association; and Linda Hobby, administrative assistant.

Col. Richard Rowe
29th Infantry Regiment

Spencer High School Parents Teachers Student Association (PTSA) met Nov. 19. One of the items discussed was college scholarship opportunities.

Lillie Bell, the senior class counselor, told the board members of the tremendous range of opportunities for college scholarships now available to Spencer High School students. However, students need to fill the forms out correctly to obtain scholarships.

Bell provides the forms to students and can assist in checking preparation.

She also publishes updated announcements of scholarship offers on a regular basis. Seniors can find the announcements posted in home rooms and on the senior bulletin board in the lunch room.

For more information about available scholarships, parents can call Bell at 685-7652.

Bell said students need to sign up now for ACT and SAT tests. The media center has the Stanford SAT Success Program to assist in student preparation for testing.

During the meeting, there was Spencer High School book bag policy was discussed. Security and safety requirements set the current no tote or back pack policy. In the spring, Olivia Rutledge, principal, intends to review all policies.

Also discussed was the beautification program. More parent volunteers are needed.

In other business, the board commended the sophomore class for contributing more than 20 bags of good clothing to the Sara Spano Clothing Bank in support of Muscogee County Schools children..

The Reverend Joseph Roberson, PTSA board president, asked for a volunteer to join the board as the fund raising chairperson. To volunteer, call Roberson at 689-5094.

Finally, the PTSA board sent out the alert to all Fort Benning parents to come to the December general membership meeting scheduled for Dec. 18 at the high school. The student band and choir will entertain.

The next PTSA meeting is 7 p.m. Wednesday. Parents and students are invited.

By Capt. David Barrett
Legal Assistance Attorney

Q: I was married in January 1997 and had a child in October 1997. I want to claim my child and spouse as dependents on my 1997 tax return. Does my child need a social security number? How does my spouse change her name on her Social Security Card?

A: You must provide the Social Security Number (SSN) of any person you claim as a dependent regardless of the dependent's age.

This is a change from prior years where there was a waiver for a child born in December.

If you are recently married you must update your Social Security records to indicate your change of name. It is important to ensure that the name on your Social Security card is the same name you use on your tax forms. Failure to put the correct information on your tax form will delay your refund. To ensure a quick refund, the Fort Benning Tax Office personnel will ask to see a copy of your Social Security card.

If you need to replace a lost Social Security card, change the name shown on your card, or request a new card, you need to complete Form SS-5, which is available at the local office of the Social Security Administration or you can download the form on the Internet at www.ssa.gov. The local office is located at 1520 Third Avenue in Columbus and is open 8:30 am to 3:30 p.m. Monday through Friday. The phone number is 649-7823.

In addition to completing Form SS-5 you will need to furnish the following identification:

GEICO suggests winter checklist for your automobile

GEICO, Communications Department

Gently falling snow looks lovely on greeting cards and advertisements, but put a layer of it between you and someplace you need to go in your car, and it's amazing how quickly that picturesque panorama becomes a dangerous driving dilemma. The coming foul weather, however, will be less of a worry if you make sure your car is ready now for winter driving conditions.

"Cars, like most people, prefer warm weather," said Richard Kidd, military market director for Government Employees Insurance Company (GEICO), "but you can help your car—and yourself—survive the winter. Keep minor problems from turning into major ones by preparing your car for the demands of winter driving."

Kidd suggested the following steps to ensure safe driving during the winter months.

•Have your car's engine properly tuned. An out-of-tune engine won't start easily and stalls frequently on those chilly winter mornings.

•Make sure your car's tires meet your state's requirements for driving during snow emergencies. Your state police can tell you whether all-weather radials or snow tires are needed.

•Check your radiator fluid. If you haven't changed it recently, test it to make sure it will still protect your car on the coldest days. Check your owner's manual and the anti-freeze container to be sure you use the proper mixture of anti-freeze and water.

•Check your battery and charging system. They may not get you through the winter unless they're in good working condition.

•Have de-icer available outside your car in case your locks freeze up. You won't have to worry about driving in bad weather if you can't get into your car.

•Prepare yourself to handle winter driving. Your state police should have resource material available. Studying and practicing winter driving techniques can help assure a safe trip every time you get behind the wheel.

"Take some time before the temperature drops any further to make sure you and your car are prepared for winter driving," Kidd said. "Remember, prior preparation prevents poor performance."

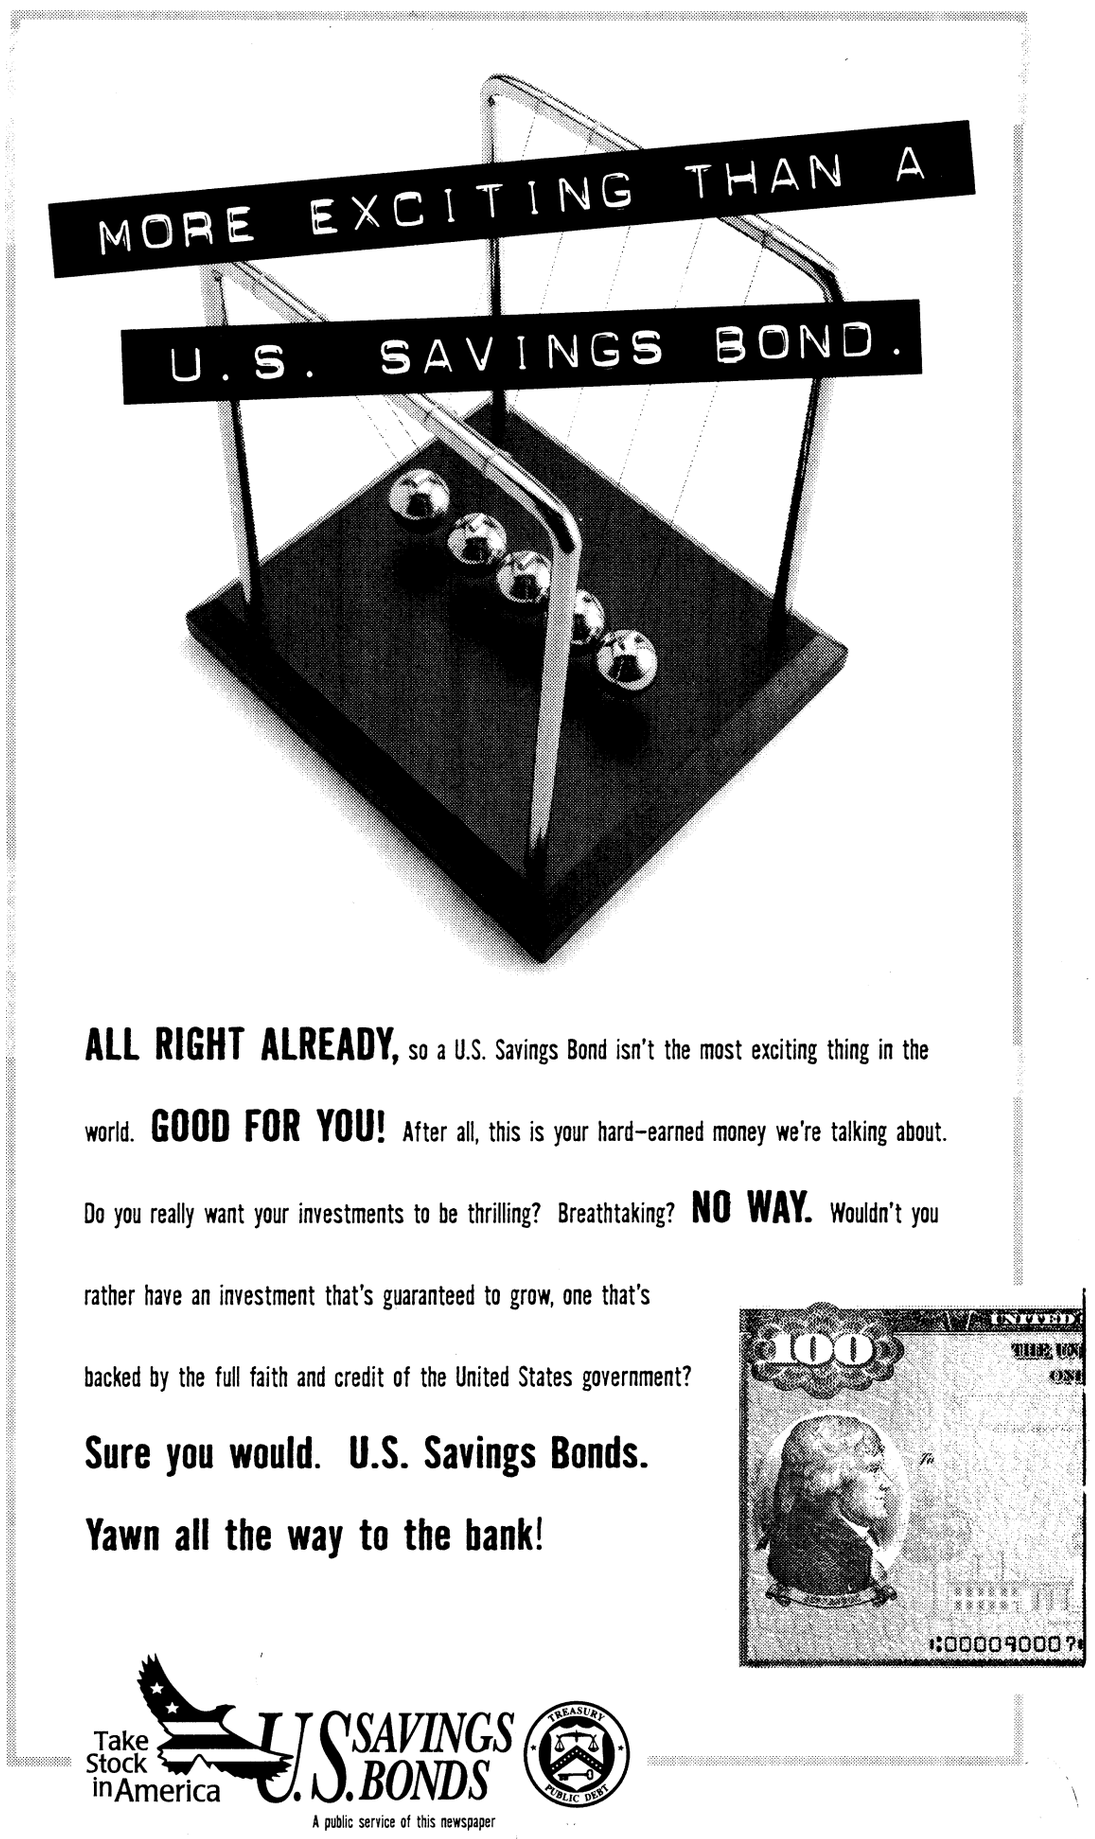
Blood donations historically drop severely during the winter holidays, causing critical blood shortages. The decline normally begins the week of Thanksgiving when people begin holiday shopping and traveling. The American Red Cross is urging donors to please give blood during the holidays to ensure there is enough blood for people with emergencies, surgeries or routine transfusion therapy.



"Donating a small amount of time and blood will help save someone's life and can be the best gift a person gives this year," said Beth V. Greenberg, chief operating officer of the American Red Cross Blood Services, Southern Region. "In the last few years, blood donations have been extremely low during the holiday forcing us to make an urgent appeal for blood. We need people to donate blood now, before the blood supply drops to a critical level."

When the supply reaches a critical level, the Red Cross is only able to supply blood to hospitals for emergencies. Patients who need blood have to wait until blood becomes available for their transfusions. The Red Cross needs 900 to 1,000 people to give blood each weekday just to meet patient needs at area hospitals. All blood types are needed, but especially Type O-negative. The Red Cross has been consistently low on Type O-negative blood, the type used in emergencies when there isn't time to type a person's blood.

Most healthy people age 17 and older, who weigh at least 100 pounds, can give blood. Each blood donation is used to help three or four patients by splitting it into blood components. Donating blood takes about an hour and is completely safe. A person cannot get AIDS or any other disease by giving blood. The needles, bags and tubing are used only once and then destroyed.

The American Red Cross Blood Services, Southern Region provides products and services to 130 hospitals and health care facilities in 85 Georgia counties. The Red Cross supplies more than half the nation's blood supply with the help of the American people voluntarily donating blood across the country. For more information about donating blood or blood drive locations, call the Red Cross at (800) GIVE-LIFE (448-3543).

Immaculate Conception gives Mary state of grace

By Chaplain (Capt.) David R. Kirk
1st Battalion, 15th Infantry Regiment

When a person hears the words, Immaculate Conception, the conception of Jesus many times comes to mind. However, this is not what the Catholic Church is referring to.

reflections

The Catholic Church proclaims this about Mary, the mother of Jesus, who is God.

This is a special privilege and grace or gift that God bestowed upon the Blessed Virgin Mary to preserve her from original sin and its effects by infusing into her soul the special gift of sanctifying grace from the very moment of her being conceived in the womb of her mother, St. Anne.

Through this, Mary, who was to be the Blessed Mother of the Son of God, was conceived in the state of holiness and justice.

It is this state that God denied for all peoples for all times. It was through the sin of Adam and Eve that this special gift was lost. God, in His love and mercy, desires for us to be saved. God also has chosen to use people to be His instruments in carrying this out.

The Book of Isaiah states: " The Lord himself will give you a sign: a young woman who is pregnant will have a son and will name him 'Immanuel'." (IS 7:14).

So as to be the holy instrument of God, Mary was given this gift as an act of God. This resulted in her being free of the consequences of original sin, such as slavery to the devil and his empty promises, subjection to lust and darkness of our intellect.

Mary was also not subject to the law of suffering and death, which are penalties of the sin of human nature. Even though she knew this, she experienced them and endured them for our sake.

The dogma, or teaching of the Immaculate Conception was defined for the Universal Catholic Church's belief by Pope Pius IX, Dec. 8, 1854, as follows: "We declare, announce and define the doctrine which states the Blessed Virgin Mary was preserved, in the first instant of her conception, by a singular grace and privilege of God Omnipotent and because of the merits of Jesus Christ the Saviour of the human race, free from all stain of original sin, is remedied by God and must be believed firmly and with constancy by all the faithful."

This statement proclaimed for Mary is found in Genesis 3:15 where the Blessed Mother is referred to typically and more directly as "virgin" in the prophetic statement in Isaiah 7:14, as well as in the angelic salutation recorded in Luke 1:28.

In 1858 in Lourdes, France, Mary appeared to St. Bernadette and declared herself to be the Immaculate Conception.

The Catholic Church in the United States is dedicated to her patronage under this title. The Church's celebration of this takes place every year Dec. 8. It is a special day of obligation for Catholics to attend Mass on this occasion.

Christians believe salvation comes to us through Jesus. We believe that Jesus came and lived among us as a man.

Mary was chosen and created by God for this task. It is her response to this invitation, her "yes" to God, that helped this come about.

There is a saying: "Who we are is God's gift to us. What we do with our life is our gift to God."

Mary's "yes" is her gift to God and to us. The Immaculate Conception — a gift from God to Mary and to all of us.

This week's article provides installation policy on Christmas decorations and safety tips in relation to decorating for the holidays.

With the approach of the holidays, many wish to decorate their quarters in celebration of the season. Doing so requires prudence in the interest of safety, facility upkeep and energy conservation. Holiday decorations will conform to the following:

Family Housing

•Roofs. No decorations, lighted or unlighted, are allowed on quarters roofs. Installation can be dangerous to individuals and cause damage to roofs.

•Elsewhere. Decorations may be affixed to quarters walls, the underside of eaves and displayed elsewhere in adjoining yards. When attaching decorations to the quarters, use the smallest possible fasteners (staples are a good device). Use only Underwriter's Laboratory (UL) electrical decorations.

Do not overload electrical circuits. Do not leave tree lights and candles unattended while burning.

Barracks

Exterior lighting is not permitted.

Do not overload electrical circuits inside. Do not leave tree lights and candles unattended while burning.

Administrative areas

Non-electric decorations will be used in office and operational facilities throughout the installation.

Given the ever-diminishing funding resources, energy conservation is important. Be judicious in family housing and barrack areas when using electrical decorations. In family housing, do not turn outside electrical decorations on until dusk and turn them off prior to midnight. Moderation in the use of electrical decorations will allow everyone to enjoy the holiday season.

Holiday safety tips

Today's Christmas lights use energy efficiently and still provide enough light output to brighten the season but, be ever mindful of safety. Here are some safety tips that will hopefully make this a safer holiday period:

•If you're purchasing a light set make sure it has been approved by Underwriters Laboratories. Also, make sure you get the right set — for indoor use, outdoor use or both.

•Do not overload your electrical circuit. Maximum capacity of a 15-amp circuit is 1,800 watts and a 20 amp circuit is 2,400 watts. You can determine this by simply checking your breaker or fuse controlling the circuit. To figure out your holiday lighting load multiply the number of bulbs by the number of watts per bulb. Be sure to include house lamps, appliances, and other electrical equipment on the same circuit.

•Before you decorate, check lights for frayed wires, damaged sockets or cracked insulation. If you find defects, replace the entire set.

•Hot bulbs can ignite dry branches. Avoid fire by keeping your natural tree well watered and keeping extension cords and light sets away from the water. Light the tree when you are at home and awake to enjoy it. Keep a fire extinguisher handy.

•Avoid short-circuiting from rain by covering outdoor plugs and connector joints with plastic wrap and sealing the ends with electrical tape.

•For outdoor lighting, use a ground fault circuit interrupter on each circuit. If current leaks through frayed or damaged wires, the interrupter shuts it off. Interrupters cost about $7 to $10.

•Don't use more than one extension cord per outlet and never hide cords under carpets or rugs.

•If you buy a cut tree, ensure it is fresh. If the needles are already falling off, the tree is too dry and should not be purchased. Leave your tree outside until you are ready to decorate. It is a good idea to trim at least a one inch piece from the bottom of the tree. This increases the tree's ability to absorb water. Keep your live tree watered. Trees commonly use up to, depending on size, a gallon of water every day.

•Never use candles to decorate a Christmas tree.

•Keep Christmas trees away from fireplaces, radiators, heating registers, space heaters;

•Always unplug your Christmas tree when you're not at home;

•Keep a working smoke detector in the room above your Christmas tree;

•Consider purchasing a "tree-detector." This is a smoke and heat detector that looks like a Christmas ornament that actually hangs in the tree;

•Remember holly, mistletoe and poinsettias are all poisonous plants to people and pets;

•Be careful of ornaments and decorations that include ribbons or garlands that can easily become snagged on a passing child. This alone could cause a full-sized tree to fall on a child.

Comments and questions

If you have questions or topics that you would like to be addressed in the DPW "Information Corner" call Glenn Todd, DPW Customer Relations Specialist, 545-2117, or write to the Directorate of Public Works, Building 6, Room 409, ATTN: ATZB-PWM (Glenn Todd), Fort Benning, GA 31905.

AAFES listens to shoppers, offers lower prices

Army and Air Force Exchange Service

The Fort Benning Exchange facilities have been lowering prices and returning savings directly to service members and their families, according to Gary Greene, general manager. This is done with a major reduction in pricing called "4 Ways to Save."

These four promotion programs are:

•weekly sale merchandise;

•special buys procured as one time bargain offers;

•extra values — everyday opening price points;

•one hot price items mark down at 25-80 percent reductions.

"A survey told us that customers wanted lower prices," Greene said. "Our younger military shoppers told us that low prices usually determine where they shop. We understand that we have to have the right prices if we want them to stay shopping with us."

"Our objective is to give our customers the best value in town with excellent, friendly service," Greene said. "Everyone appreciates saving money. Under the "4 Ways to Save" promotion program, our attractive pricing has become even more visible. Weekly sales and extra value selections have been expanded. Special buys add the 'extra' to the regular stock assortment.

AAFES aims to give customers sharper price decreases through an expanded Extra Value program, Greene said. Extra Value items will be available in all categories of merchandise and offer customers significant savings as regular stock."

One hot price will feature high-demand weekly merchandise with price savings of at least 25 percent. Most one hot price items will represent a 40-60 percent savings.

Special buys offer products bargain priced to supplement everyday product lines that are only available for a short time. Often these are only available at the exchange.

"Weekly sales are always everyone's favorite," he said. "Now we offer selections every week, seven days a week.

"We are really excited about getting these great values out to Fort Benning shoppers," Greene said. "These are tremendous values in the truest sense and will create real customer excitement and demand."

Tips help animals enjoy holidays

By Capt. Christopher J. Lanier
Veterinary Service

The holidays are upon us again and it's a busy time for everyone, including our four-legged friends. Here are a few tips on how to make their holiday season a fun and safe one:

•For outside pets, provide a dry, insulated shelter out of the wind and rain. If the wind chill or other weather conditions become severe, bring pets inside. Keep indoor pets, particularly older animals, in warm, dry areas free of drafts.

•Holiday treats such as "spiked" eggnog, chocolates and poultry, pork and fish bones can be harmful or toxic to pets. The best plan is to keep your pet on the regular diet, no matter how much they beg.

•Holiday paraphernalia (i.e. electrical cords, glass ornaments, ribbons, plastic or foil wrappings) can be attractive and dangerous to pets so limit their access to these items. Many plants, including Christmas rose, holly, mistletoe and philodendrons, are toxic and should be kept out of pets' reach.

•Remove ice or caked-on mud from animals' paws and coats immediately to lessen the chance for frostbite. Frostbitten skin may turn reddish, white or gray and may be scaly or slough (fall) off. Call a veterinarian immediately if you suspect frostbite.

•Cats and kittens like to nap on warm car engines in cold weather. Knock on the hood, honk the horn and wait a moment before starting the car.

•Beware of winterizing the car: antifreeze has a sweet taste and animals will drink it after it has been flushed from radiators. Drinking even a small amount can lead to kidney failure and death. Keep the animals away. If they do drink antifreeze, call a veterinarian immediately.

Keeping these ideas in mind with your pets can make the holiday season an enjoyable and healthy one for the entire family.

ITB honors Hawks basketball coach

By Yvette Stewart
Infantry Training Brigade

The Atlanta Hawks played the Charlotte Nov. 29 and the Infantry Training Brigade (ITB) was there.

More than 7,000 cadre, Soldiers and family members of the Fort Benning community witnessed the great event.

Col. Abraham J. Turner, commander, ITB, presented Lenny Wilkens, a former soldier and current Atlanta Hawks basketball coach, with a drill sergeant statue and shadow box along with an enlarged citation to induct him as an honorary member of the brigade.

The award, presented on behalf of Fort Benning, was to show the appreciation ITB has for Wilkens coming to the Black History Month celebration on Sand Hill last February.

"His speech on values, pride and setting goals were things that hit home," Turner said. "We would like to invite him back to speak to our Soldiers."

The ITB has plans to attend the Falcons game in Atlanta Dec. 14, if all goes well.

"The ITB would like to show the civilian community and the professional teams that they have support from us," Turner said. "If ITB personnel are available and would like to participate, they are all welcome. I had a great time at the game, and the Hawks won."

"Coach Wilkens has a winning team, I expect to see their team in the championship game," Turner said. "If their team stays healthy they will be there and win."

"Sgt. 1st Class Paul D. Horton made the coordination for the game in order to get everyone there," Turner said. "His contacts with the coach made it possible."

A combination of Soldiers from the seven battalions on Sand Hill made up the color guard. Spc. John W. Shermer, Officer Candidate School (OCS) from 1st Battalion, 19th Infantry Regiment sang the National Anthem.

According to Horton, Wilkens was very excited about Soldiers from Fort Benning being there.

> "It felt good to see people I knew from Fort Benning on the floor doing the presentation, it gave me chills."
> — Staff Sgt. Gerhart Lewis
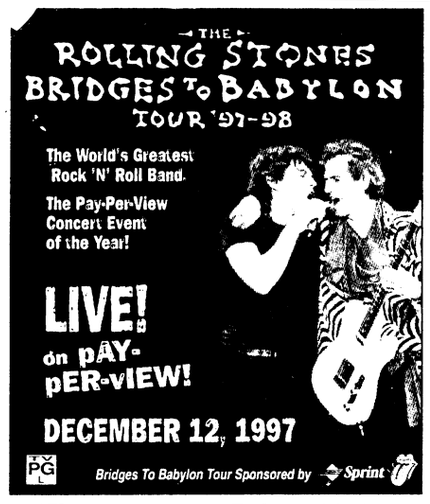
> 29th Infantry Regiment

"He wanted to have Fort Benning Soldiers come out on a weekend he knew would be more convenient for them," Horton said. "He wanted them to come out early in the season and plans to invite them back for the playoffs."

"Colonel Turner, Command Sergeant Major Larry Durham, ITB Command Sergeant Major, drill sergeant of the year Staff Sgt. Sean Polwort and myself decided to do something to show appreciation for the coach," Horton said. "We thought this was the best way to do it."

Wilkens speaking engagements range from $10,000 to $15,000 per engagement. Wilkens waived the fee when he spoke at Sand Hill.



"I am taking this award home," Wilkens said. "This award is very special to me and it will hang in my house." Wilkens is the first honorary civilian to be inducted into the brigade.

"It felt good to see people I knew from Fort Benning on the floor doing the presentation. It gave me chills," said Staff Sgt. Gerhart Lewis, 29th Infantry Regiment.

"When Colonel Turner spoke and announced that at the count of three for everyone to say 'Hooah,' the crowd was electrifying and for that second, it felt as though we were one," Horton said.

Tidal flows influence fishing strategy

By Earl Bentz and Steve Price
Outboard Marine Corporation

Of all the challenges professional bass tournament anglers face in a year of fishing, competing on rivers influenced by tidal flow ranks as one of the toughest.

"Tides change the water depth, which in turn changes the location of the fish, so you have to plan your strategy according to the tides more than the bass themselves," said veteran fisherman Guy Eaker.

Eaker said he normally prefers to fish falling or outgoing tides, since these tend to draw baitfish out of protective cover and cause bass to become more active. Slack tide can also provide good fishing before the incoming tide starts.

"Several weeks ago, I fished a national tournament on the Potomac River near Waldorf, Maryland," Eaker said. "The difference between high and low tide water levels was more than two feet. That is a huge volume of water to deal with, and if you don't catch fish at just the right time, you're lost for the day.

"It's not that the bass necessarily move very far when the tide changes, but rather, they just stop biting. During that tournament on the Potomac, two competitors were fishing a spot that looked like it should have bass everywhere, but they never had a hit.

"Then the tide changed and they caught three bass over five pounds in less than 15 minutes without ever moving their boat."

Eaker said outgoing tides present another problem, which is that it can strand a fisherman in a shallow creek or bay.

"That has happened to a lot of bass fisherman," Eaker said. "We get so engrossed in the area we're fishing, especially if the bass are biting, that we stay too long. When that happens, you either have to get out and push your boat back to deeper water, or simply wait six hours until the tide changes again."

One of the techniques Eaker and his fellow competitors often use is to run with a tide. They may work their way downstream with an outgoing tide, or fish upstream by staying just ahead of an incoming tide.

"Either way, you have to do some careful planning," he said. "The prime time for a particular area seldom lasts very long, so you have to be there when it does occur."

Bass pro recommends erratic retrievals, varying selection of lures to catch fish

By Earl Bentz and Steve Price
Outboard Marine Corporation

Professional bass tournament angler Ken Cook has won a fishing world championship as well as a lot of money just by doing something different after he makes a cast.

It's the way he retrieves his lures that sets the angler apart. He tries to make each retrieve different so his lures act more erratic than normal.

"Most fishermen will stop and start their retrieves for a few minutes, then revert back to a straight retrieve," Cook said, a former fisheries biologist. "I try to do something different every time and I do it with all my lures."

Erratic retrieves with spinner baits are perhaps the most widely practiced, and, in fact, that's how Cook won the Bass Masters Classic world championship in 1991. He ran his spinner bait into clumps of vegetation, then let the lure flitter down into the greenery rather than skim over the top of it.

Cook also practices his erratic retrieves with crankbaits, and it involves more than the simple stop-and-go most fishermen use.

"One of the retrieves I like, especially when I'm using a crankbait in deep water," Cook said, "is to reel the lure down so it hits the bottom, then stop my retrieve and start shaking my rod.

"The lure stops but instead of rising straight up, it acts crazy and jumps around in different directions. Then, after a couple of seconds, I start reeling again and that's when the strikes most often happen."

According to Cook, in most deep cranking, every key piece of structure usually has some type of cover on it, such as stumps, rocks, or even vegetation. This is what he's trying to hit with his crankbait when he reels down and then starts his rod shaking.

"Bass feed on baitfish that are injured or that get separated from the school," Cook said, "and anything a fisherman can do to make his lure act differently from other lures will be to his advantage.

"I honestly believe with all the fishermen on the water these days that bass are becoming familiar with certain lures, or at least with the sound waves those lures present.

"Whenever you change your retrieve to make your lure do something different, you're altering that sound wave pattern and it helps get the attention of the fish."

Cook said erratic retrieves can be made with any lure, and that the angler's imagination is the only limit as to what can be done on a retrieve.

"At times, a really fast retrieve works with a topwater lure," Cook said. "I've seen times when simply letting a spoon sit in the water and an unwinding line drew strikes.

"We never know exactly what triggers a bass to strike, but I am convinced that fish definitely like something erratic," Cook said.

ACOE preparations lead to visit

By Sgt. Marc G. Turchin
Bayonet assistant editor

Fort Benning is going through some of the best times it has known. If compared to sports teams, the post's streak of wins and championships would be called a dynasty. Fort Benning has been recognized for almost every award conceivable in honor of it's commitment to excellence and the well being of the community.

Last year was the biggest year ever as the post, in it's first attempt, won the highest award obtainable by a federal government agency — the Presidential Award for Quality (PQA). The post also took home the Commander in Chief's Award (CINC) for Installation Excellence — naming the post the best installation in the world for an unprecedented third time in four years and the Chief of Staff of the Army (CSA) Award — naming Fort Benning the best installation in the continental United States for the fifth year in a row.

So, with such a winning tradition in the post's past, Fort Benning goes into 1998's Army Communities of Excellence (ACOE) competition with plenty of confidence. The goal for 1998 can only be to become better.

"It's really all about continuous improvement," said Sarah McLaney, Chief, Quality Management Division, Directorate of Resource Management. "It's a proactive competition. It's looking at where we are and trying to improve instead of waiting for things to happen."

Being proactive has led the post to many of it's awards and again Fort Benning is in the running for the 1998 Chief of Staff Award for Best Installation in the Continental United States. New rules will keep the post from competing for the CINC award and PQA award this year because of winning both awards last year — installations are no longer allowed to win the CINC award two years in a row. As for the PQA, agencies may only apply for this award every four years. So the highest award Fort Benning can walk away with in 1998 is the Chief of Staff Award.

McLaney said Fort Benning's past accomplishments have happened due to a combination of things.

"It's the competitiveness, it's the leadership involvement and the post's team effort," McLaney said. "Collectively when you work as a team and are recognized, it has an effect on the community."

In past competitions, Fort Benning would have to compete in a Training and Doctrine Command (TRADOC) competition before moving on to the Department of Army level. The TRADOC competition is no longer a requirement, McLaney said.

"TRADOC selected three installations based on the packets sent in," McLaney said. "TRADOC was given a quota of three and we (Fort Benning) were one of them."

The other TRADOC installations in the competition are Fort Bliss, Texas and Fort Knox, Ky.

All installations are evaluated by a team that will conduct on-site visits. Evaluators will be at Fort Benning Jan. 11-17. While here, the team will be looking for proof the installation meets the requirements for being nominated and for the improvements outlined in the post's ACOE packet. The criteria consists of seven goals for each installation. Listed below are excerpts of the criteria:

•Leadership — Identify the extent to which senior leaders are personally involved in establishing the direction of organization and demonstrating the expressed values.

Examine the extent to which senior leaders have direct and frequent contact with customers, employees and suppliers.

•Strategic planing — Describe how operating plans and long-term strategic plans are developed.

Explain how customers, suppliers and employees have input into annual and long-term plans.

•Customer and market focus — How does the installation continuously evaluate

OPERATION HOLIDAY

AUSA plans kickoff ceremony

By Erin A. Nash
Special to the Bayonet©

The Chattahoochee Valley-Fort Benning Chapter of the Association of the U.S. Army (AUSA) will kickoff the 18th annual Operation Holiday at 11 a.m. Dec. 19 at the Government Center in Columbus.

Scheduled to speak at the opening ceremony are Columbus Mayor Bobby Peters and Phenix City Mayor Sammy Howard, Post Chief of Staff Col. Lawrence White and Congressman Mac Collins. Miss Columbus Amy Swanson will also sing holiday songs.

Operation Holiday began in 1980 at the request of the Commanding General of Fort Benning. It was originally designed for basic trainees but was changed to provide activities for single Soldiers and unaccompanied married Soldiers who are away from their families this holiday season, said Master Sgt. Rodney Tiller, Community Relations NCO.

"For most Soldiers who are away from home, it makes them feel like they are at home during the Christmas season," Tiller said. "It makes a stress-free environment for the Soldiers."

Activities include Atlanta Hawks basketball in Atlanta Dec. 19 and 22, the Columbus Cottonmouths vs. the Huntsville Channel Cats at 7:30 p.m. Dec. 23, the Blue and Grey game in Montgomery, Ala., at noon Dec. 25, the Cottonmouths vs. the Nashville Ice Flyers at 7:30 p.m. Dec. 26, a trip to the Hollywood Connection Dec. 29, the Cottonmouths vs. the Fayetteville Force at 7:30 p.m. Dec. 30, the Cottonmouths vs. the Memphis River Kings at 7:30 p.m. Dec. 31 and the Peach Bowl (Clemson vs. Auburn) at the Georgia Dome at 3 p.m. Jan. 2.

AUSA will also sponsor a bowling tournament at 1 p.m. Dec. 22-23 at the Main Post Bowling Center.

Post plans for exodus, return

By Yvette Stewart
Infantry Training Brigade

The holiday season is a busy time for a lot of people and the Infantry Training Brigade (ITB) is no exception.

Every year for the past 21 years, ITB conducts an exodus and return for it's Soldiers, except for during Desert Storm and Desert Shield when it was canceled.

This is a Christmas operation that gets more than 3,000 trainees home for the holidays.

The holiday period begins Thursday and extends through Jan. 2, 1998.

Planning began in July for the Christmas holiday.

The operation ensures Soldiers enjoy the holiday with their families, said David E. Christensen, scheduling technician with Directorate of Operations and Training.

There are special plans made for Soldiers from Puerto Rico and the Caribbean celebrating "El Dia del Los Reyes" (King's Day) Jan. 6 and will return Jan. 7.

The transportation for the Soldiers include air service, direct destination service and commercial buses, which will be used to transport Soldiers to the Atlanta airport, Christensen said.

"We've scheduled 40 to 50 buses for exodus," Christensen said. "POVs and taxis may also be used but are not encouraged."

The Infantry Training Brigade makes coordination with various agencies on and off post.

The 1st Battalion, 50th Infantry Regiment, is tasked with providing at least two drill sergeants to be posted at the Atlanta Greyhound Depot for

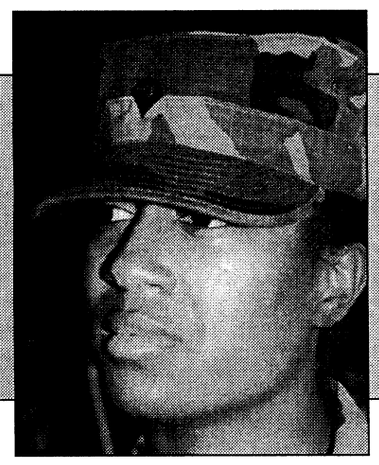
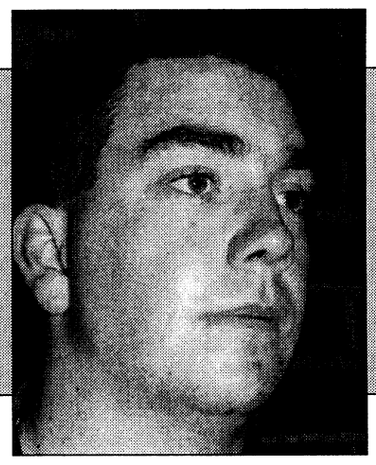
What can be done to improve sick-call procedures?



Staff Sgt. Alphonso Paulk, Company C, 2nd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment — "Sick call is already running pretty good due to the influx of Soldiers. Extra physician assistants would help expedite the Soldiers getting out quicker."



Sgt. 1st Class Lewis Jefferson, Company D, 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor Regiment — "They should have plenty of time to go to sick call because Soldiers get sick."

Cpl. D. Malone, Company A, 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment — "The service is slow. Maybe it would be better if they had more physician assistants and extended the sick-call hours."

Spc. Tamara M. Tyson, 203rd Forward Support Battalion, 3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division (Mechanized) — "The patients shouldn't be seen in order of rank, they should be seen by seriousness of illness."

Pvt. 2 Travis J. Jones, Company D, 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor Regiment — "The Troop Medical Clinic should have a little bit friendlier atmosphere."

Pvt. 1 James P. Sherrer, Company B, 2nd Battalion, 58th Infantry Regiment — "It's just fine the way it is. Everyone was really nice to me."

Job search can be easier with help of aides

By Spc. Judith O'Toole
Pentagram staff writer

"Attention military spouses. We need self-starting, highly motivated individuals for positions ASAP. Earn big bucks. No experience necessary. Child care provided.

Make up to $1,000 per week. Call Jimbo at 555-5555."

Does this look familiar? At one time or another, most people have seen these ads on the big, seemingly endless job search. The trick is to be organized, motivated, to have a good plan, and to not let ads like these get you down.

commentary

You can't spend the day watching Oprah expecting prospective employers to bang your door down trying to hire you. It would be nice if it worked that way, but it doesn't.

Helpful to the military spouse who is looking for a job, is good reference material. Jobs And The Military Spouse, by Janet I. Farley, provides a good starting point for the spouse who is starting a job search.

Although Farley is herself a military spouse and a self-professed military brat, her book has at times a patronizing tone. Still, this book offers some good job-searching ideas that just about anyone could use — military spouse or not.

The first few chapters are really the only ones that refer to the military to any great extent.

There are references to Army Community Service's Family Member Employment Assistance Program and the Job Assistance Centers, with an extensive phone list for these programs at installations all around the country.

Farley also spends some time familiarizing the reader with military information. Most of this is so simplistic and obvious one would think even the spouse of a private who had only been in basic training for a week would already know. And, of course, being one herself, Farley doesn't let us forget the tired cliché about the military spouse being the hardest-working person in the military.

For someone who doesn't enjoy reading a piece of reference material that talks down to you like a kindergartner, I had to force myself to keep reading through the muck. I'm glad I did.

The book actually has a lot of good ideas once I got past the first few chapters. Some was a little too basic, but it might help someone who does not have many job experiences.

Farley went into great detail about identifying where you want your job search to take you and planning for success, but only touched on using different job-search tools, such as developing networking skills and creating a personal sales pitch.

The book instructs the reader in detail on the rights and wrongs of creating a resume, pointing out mistakes that are commonly made. Also very interesting was Farley's advice on the interviewing process, along with her suggestions for negotiating and evaluating job offers.

These are the things the book should have had more of — information that could actually help a person find a job — instead of telling the reader that most military spouses work outside the home because the income is needed for the family to survive — like that's supposed to come as a surprise?

If you're a military spouse, or for that matter, anyone looking for a job, I would still suggest reading Jobs And The Military Spouse. However, use it as a starting point to get your job search underway.

Finding a job, as Farley said in the book, is a full-time job in itself, if done correctly.

Hotels can be dangerous for toddlers if parents aren't careful

By Lisa E. Stafford
American Forces Press Service

Any time you check into a hotel with a toddler, make a safe environment your first priority.

Being a toddler is a wonderful time. There are so many new things to touch, explore — and immediately stick into your mouth. So toddlin' time can also be very dangerous, especially when youngsters are in a new environment.

To make your hotel stay more pleasurable and safe, here are 10 tips:

•Remove all potential hazards such as drinking glasses and ashtrays.

•Keep matches and plants out of reach.

•Remove mixed nuts and small pieces of candy. Small children can quickly put them into their mouths and choke.

•Inspect carpeting and run hands along furniture to remove any small objects the toddler possibly could ingest.

•Cover all sharp edges. Move or cover with towels any furniture that has sharp edges.

•Lock all windows and sliding glass doors. Keep all drapery cords and electrical cords out of reach.

•Make it a rule that the balcony is off limits unless there is adult supervision.

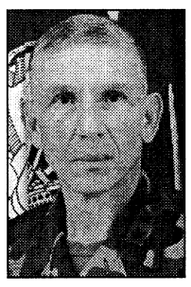
•Use pillows or books to protect toddlers from floor-level heating grills.

•Keep suitcases out of the way and out of reach. Wobbly legged toddlers may be injured if they trip over luggage or if they're holding on as it tips or falls.

•Store all toiletries far back on the bathroom sink or dresser, or place them on a high shelf.

CG wants all to be safe

"Loaded 45" symbolizes the number of highest risk days for traffic accidents (Nov. 21 through Jan. 4).



In conjunction with this campaign, every driver is asked to turn their "Lights on for Life" Friday, Dec. 19 to call attention to the tragedies caused by impaired driving.

During this time, follow these guidelines to ensure your safety while driving:

•Use a sober and reliable designated driver, or call Safety Cab at 660-6069.

•Wear a seat belt.

•Reduce your speed during periods of adverse weather or traffic.

•Inspect your vehicle to ensure it is in safe operating condition.

Have an enjoyable, relaxing holiday season and a safe return. Follow Me, Safely.

545-BOSS

Dial 545-BOSS is the commander's action line for Soldiers, family members and civilians to call when they have problems or complaints that can't be resolved elsewhere.

While it is not a substitute for the chain of command or for agencies established to provide assistance, the line offers another means of communication between Fort Benning's community and commanders.

The Bayonet features some of the calls that may benefit other members of the Fort Benning community.

Call: Caller said the automated Hunter Control System was not working Nov. 1 when he called and he could not get the hunting information he needed.

Directorate of Community Activities Response: The chief, Outdoor Recreation, said the automated hunter control system has been in operation for only two weeks. There were some problems in the 4 to 6 a.m. time Nov. 1 frame, but the backup recorder was operational and working. At 6 a.m., the system was in full operation with staff members on location. All hunters who called in were logged into the system. No one was deprived the opportunity to hunt. The hunter control system did not exist any place until Oct. 19 and went on line Oct. 25. Time was not sufficient for proper testing and refinement. Since Nov. 1, the system has operated flawlessly and safeguards are in place.

Call: The caller said the dining facilities on Kelley Hill should stay open later in the evenings for the single Soldiers.

Directorate of Logistics Response: The DOL said the hours for the evening meal were changed (last three months) based on commanders' requirements. If hours need to be modified to accommodate the single Soldiers, they should contact their BOSS representative. Changing hours is not a problem, but without specifics from the chain of command on Kelley Hill, hours cannot be arbitrarily changed.

Call: Caller said she did not hear the tornado warning on Nov. 1.

Directorate of Threat and Security Response: The Director of Threat and Security informed the caller that the staff duty NCO tried to initiate the tornado warning sirens Nov. 1, but the system failed. All commands were notified via the Automated Weather Distribution System and confirmed by phone. DPW and Motorola representatives were called in to repair the system. DTS said a power outage during the storm caused the logic circuits in the system to fail which prevented the activation signal from being sent. DPW will install uninterrupted power source units to the system that will minimize future failures.

Ranger take down

During a Rangers in Action demonstration, 1st Sgt. Ron Grenier, Ranger Training Brigade (RTB) displays the hand-to-hand combat expertise he developed during his 27 years as a Soldier and ranger.

Grenier went head to head with Staff Sgt. Jay R. Carter of Company C, 4th Ranger Training Battalion during a demonstration on how to take a knife away from an enemy.

Grenier used a variety of techniques to disarm Carter who was either knocked down or flipped in the process.

The demonstration was part of a graduation ceremony held Dec. 5 at the Victory Pond. Later that day, a retirement ceremony was held for Grenier, the former RTB first sergeant.

Courtmartial begins for former SMA

By Gerry J. Gilmore
Army News Service

FORT BELVOIR, Va. — Military judge Col. Ferdinand D. Clervi presided in a Fort Belvoir, Va., courtroom Wednesday as defense and prosecution attorneys presented their viewpoints on several issues pertinent to the Jan. 6 courtmartial of former Sergeant Major of the Army Gene C. McKinney.

McKinney, now a sergeant major after being reassigned from his duties Oct. 9 as the Army's top enlisted person, faces trial for 20 specifications of misconduct as the result of allegations made by six female service members. If convicted of all charges, McKinney faces a maximum of 56 years confinement.

Clervi, the chief circuit judge, 3rd Judicial Circuit, Fort Hood, Texas, will preside over McKinney's court-martial at Belvoir. He also presided over a Nov. 5-6 pretrial motions hearing at Belvoir.

The hearing, which began Dec. 10 is expected to last several days, according to Army legal officials. On that day Clervi heard motions or requests from defense and prosecuting attorneys for rulings on various administrative issues prior to the start of the court-martial. These included defense requests to personally interview one of McKinney's accusers at her present location and to convene a new Article 32 or grand jury hearing.

Charles Gittins, McKinney's lead defense counsel, wanted to personally interview one of McKinney's female accusers, an Army staff sergeant who was moved to an undisclosed location as the result of alleged threats made to her by persons yet unknown. Army prosecutor Lt. Col. Michael Child said the female service member couldn't be personally interviewed at her current work place, because of national security concerns.

Clervi suggested that a list of questions be mailed to the service member's commander, so that she and other potential witnesses who worked with her could provide answers in that way. Defense and prosecuting counsels agreed to this idea.

Gittins brought up the motion for a new Article 32 hearing. He questioned the communication between the investigating officer, Col. Robert L. Jarvis, and his legal advisor. Jarvis presided over the Article 32 investigation, which began June 25 at Fort McNair, Washington, D.C. The 27-day hearing produced more than 6,000 pages of testimony documents and featured more than 50 witnesses.

Local area honors veterans with memorial

By Mollie M. Herman
Special to the Bayonet©

Veterans, active-duty Soldiers, family members and friends braved the cold on Monday to honor Soldiers at the Phenix City-Russell County War Memorial.

Just a few of the people on hand to assist in the dedication were Master of Ceremonies Chuck Leonard from WTVM Channel 9 News and President of the War Memorial Association Gary Ledbetter. Also in attendance to address the group was Phenix City Mayor Sammy Howard and former U.S. Senator Sam Nunn.

The dedication began with the acknowledgements of honor for the 206 names of the fallen Alabama Soldiers that appear on various parts of the monuments.

These Soldiers fought in the last five major wars: World Wars I and II, the Korean War, the Vietnam War and the Persian Gulf War. The reason for the memorial is, Leonard said, to let the families of those killed in battle know that loved ones have not died in vain.

Annie Ruth McDuffie, Shirley Isaacs and Gloria Smith pause for a moment after laying a wreath.

The idea for a War Memorial began in 1993, but its start was rocky. It often looked as though it would never become a reality. Then in late 1996, the community decided that it was time to revitalize the area, Ledbettter said.

"The monument you see here today is the final culmination of those revitalized efforts," Ledbetter said.

When Nunn took the podium, he spoke of the sacrifices the Soldiers of past and present make for this country.

"It's because of them we are free each day to taste life," he said.

"The best memorial, is to make this community a living monument to what they fought to preserve."

The ceremony came to a close as a wreath was laid in its place of honor next to the monument's Eternal Flame.

The Phenix City- Russell County War Memorial Monument is located at the corner of Summerville and Airport Roads, next to Garrett Stadium in Phenix City.

Residents need to know yard sale rules

By Erin A. Nash
Special to the Bayonet©

Have some unwanted junk taking up space in your house? PCSing and don't want to take it all with you?

For most people, this means the inevitable — a yard sale. It is a fast and easy way to make some quick money and lighten a load. However, if you live on post, there are certain rules you must abide by.

People wishing to have a yard sale must have a permit. These permits are available at all community life centers and the community life office. Residents must show their identification card and then read the rules about yard sales. The community life NCO will then issue a permit for the days specified. Yard sales may only take place on Saturdays, Sundays and federal holidays.

"A lot of people come from different posts and don't know that we require a permit," said Jennifer Morgan, Community Life Officer.

"The biggest problem we have is with people leaving their advertising signs up for longer than the yard sale," said Sgt. Maj. Michael R. Pflanz of Directorate of Community Activities.

Signs need to be taken down before the end of the day and cannot be placed on telephone or utility poles, trees, street signs, fences or buildings.

Other rules include: Sales will not begin prior to 8 a.m. and will not end later than 6 p.m.; sales will not interfere with the normal flow of traffic and sales will not be used as a business venture; only to dispose of unwanted or extra stuff around the house.

For more information about yard sales, call the Community Life Center in your housing area or the Community Life Office at 545-2910 or 545-2830.

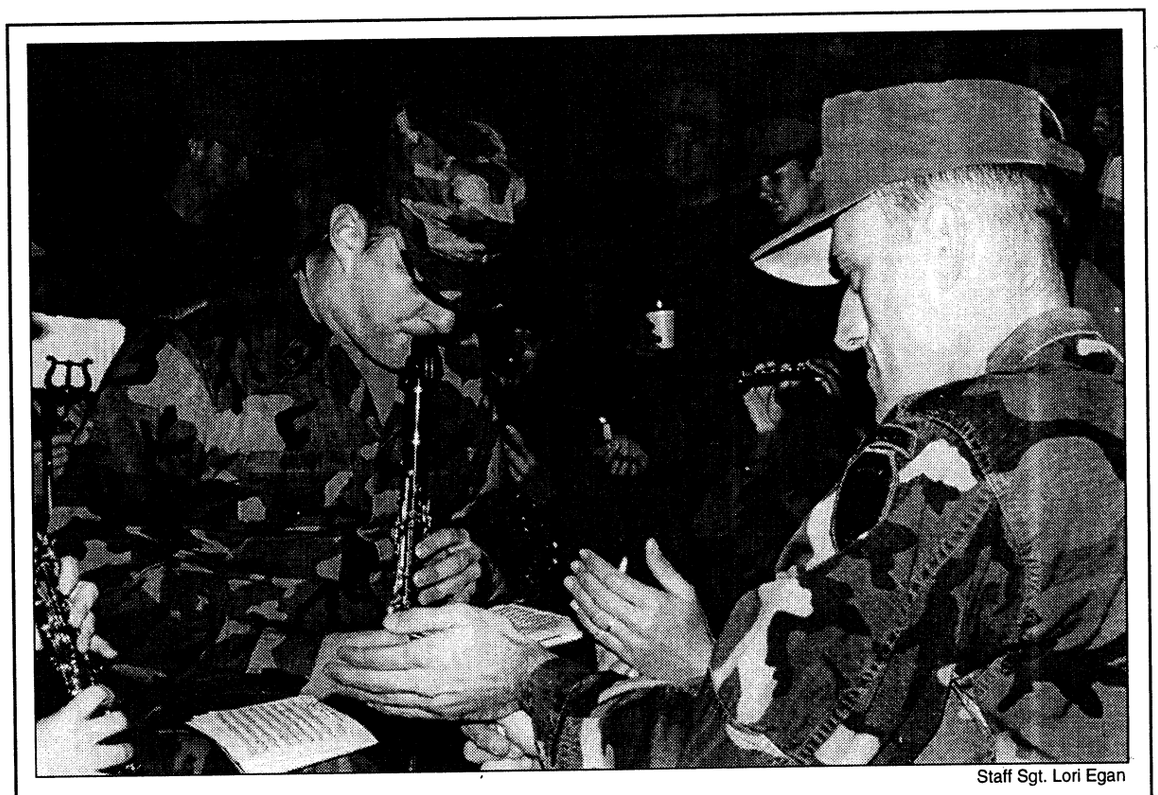
The coordination for the exodus and return involves other installations including Fort Jackson, S.C., transportation, Fort Gordon Training Process, Fort McClellan, and the USO in Atlanta, Hartsfield operations.

Fort Benning has command and control of the total military movement through Hartsfield International Airport this holiday period with support personnel attached from Fort Gordon, Ga., Fort Jackson, S.C., and Fort McClellan, Ala.



The overall movement through Atlanta will ensure that 11,000 Soldiers will depart and return on holiday leave. In addition, another 2,500 Soldiers will complete training and depart on PCS orders at the same time.

The Atlanta operation will be from Dec. 16-19 for exodus and Jan. 1-4 for return.

The southeast regional headquarters office for the USO is located at the Atlanta terminal.

Marylou Austin is the regional director and coordinator. She coordinates and assists the planning of the exodus and return every year.

"The USO helps support our Soldiers through the holidays by establishing warm and friendly atmosphere."

Ranger school teaches bayonet, pugil skills

By Erin A. Nash
Special to the Bayonet©

Soldiers going through Ranger School now have another obstacle to overcome, one testing them both physically and mentally. Fourth Ranger Training Battalion (RTB), or Darby, the first phase of the 63-day school, reactivated the bayonet assault course.

The course closed in 1988 because of a training accident. Earlier this year Col. Dorian Anderson, Ranger Training Brigade Commander said he wanted the assault course started back up.

Capt. Christopher Voso, Company C Commander, said most of the credit goes to Staff Sgt. Sandon Fletcher, who with the Department of Public Works (DPW) and Directorate of Operations of Training (DOT), built the course. The course was designed by Fletcher, who put the course together — building obstacles and painting them. DPW and DOT personnel assisted in down gravel and cutting down trees.

Before students arrive at the bayonet assault course, they have three different training procedures to go through.

The first training is Rifle Bayonet Fighting Techniques (RBFT), in which the students learn thrusts, butt strokes, parries, slashes and blocks — the procedures when attacking with a bayonet. Voso said it's basically a reiteration of basic training. The RBFT training lasts about four hours.

The second training is with pugil sticks. Students practice the moves they have learned at RBFT with the sticks with their companies. Each company selecting their best pugil stick fighter to compete in king of the pit — the culmination of pugil stick training. The basic instruction of the pugil sticks lasts about three hours.

The final training is the actual bayonet assault course.

Students first do a dry run through the 300-meter, horseshoe-shaped course, said Capt. Christopher C. Cerniauskas, personnel officer for RTB. After successfully completing the dry run, students receive the bayonet and do a live run.

During the live run, which includes low-crawling through mud under barbed wire, to practice butt strokes to the kidney on tires, the students get the chance to put together everything they learned during previous training.

Sgt. 1st Class Brian K. Salvi was part of the planning process of the course. He said he prepared the outline of the course by reading books on combatics and that the actual effort for the course was a consolidated one.

"Captain (Leo) Crawford intially started the effort, Staff Sergeant Fletcher built the course, and Sergeant 1st Class (Eric) White runs the pugil sticks. He designed the outline and executes the training," Salvi said.

Salvi said the main purpose of the bayonet assault course is to build aggressiveness.

"The students like the course; it's motivating," Salvi said.

"They like the feeling of accomplishing something. They feel like they have the spirit of the bayonet in them." He also said the course runs very smoothly and it is very controlled.

"The course is physically rigorous and a tough workout," said Lt. Col. Eric D. Hutchings, commander of 4th RTB. "It gives us a chance to see who's in shape, who's aggressive."

Hutchings said physical combat is horrific and he wants rangers to be prepared.

"Americans train their kids to be polite, but the world is bad," Hutchings said.

"We want rangers to be aggressive because there are bad folks out there.

"The effort on the part of my Soldiers was outstanding," Hutchings said. "They started in July, and could only work the one week between classes until they finished in September.

"It is the best bayonet assault course in the U.S. It melds technology of the 21st century by showing the physical rigors of the battlefield. It is very safe. We assess each obstacle — always depends on weather conditions.

"The students give all their effort. We want to push them beyond where they've been. They feel confident in what they're doing," Hutchings said.

Soldiers use tomorrow's equipment during exercise

By Sgt. 1st Class Jim Ward
Army News Service

FORT HUNTER LIGGETT, Calif. — The sun-soaked hillsides of Fort Hunter Liggett formed the backdrop for what 319th Signal Battalion members called the most elaborate annual-training exercise in the unit's history.

The unit made its way from the Sacramento and San Jose, Calif., areas in early July to install a major communications system supporting 63rd Regional Support Command's annual base-cluster exercise. The exercise, conducted throughout California's Central Valley, also featured an active partnership between reserve- and active-component forces.

Dubbed Wild Boar '97, the two-week training event gave Signal Soldiers with the battalion, and those assigned to 86th Signal Battalion, the chance to work together to hone skills each unit needs if they're called on to work together to support a joint task force or major warfighting commander-in-chief. That's because the two units are part of an elaborate system of training affiliations designed to add more Signal muscle to force packages around the world.

In the case of Wild Boar '97, the two units were able to link up forces that stretched along a thousand-mile front extending from Camp Parks, near San Jose, Calif., to Fort Huachuca, located in the high desert southeast of Tucson, Ariz.

The network employed by this "signal task force" connected several units critical to the exercise's success.

Those units included 6045th General Support Unit, which serves as 319th's next higher headquarters.

This feat was accomplished through a well-placed grouping of communication assemblages that added immeasurably to 319th's trove of knowledge and experience, said Maj. Tom Cole, 39th executive officer. In a nutshell, the network provided to exercise players the kind of connectivity that kept them linked together both seamlessly and redundantly, he said.

"What we did was ask 86th Signal Battalion to come in and bring several pieces of their cutting-edge equipment," said Cole. "This gave our Soldiers a first-hand look at the kinds of systems being used by 86th, which is one of the top echelons-above-corps units in the Army today."

When 86th Soldiers arrived, they brought with them three critical information systems that served to demonstrate their capacity for foxhole-to-fort communications. These systems included the mobile gateway van, triband terminal and troposcatter equipment that helped tie these systems together.

"We were very excited to get this equipment on the ground and give our Soldiers a chance to see it and work with some of the 86th Soldiers. We know MGV and triband are state-of-the-art and that it's important for our troops to work closely with our training affiliate," Cole said.

Sgt. 1st Class William Gunning of Company A watched over some of the communications equipment's most important components. Without good air conditioning, he said, systems in the training area would be down and inoperable. He and his Soldiers spent countless hours ensuring each MGV was cool enough to allow its systems to function. That meant generators and air conditioning had to be operational.

It also meant computer cards and power processors needed to function flawlessly or transmissions went down — fast.

"Fortunately, I have the Soldiers who can respond and who were actually out in the training area making routine 'van calls' just to check in on the users. What people we have are doing a great job," Gunning said.

NG banker helps handle Soldiers money

By Master Sgt. Bob Haskell
Army News Service

TUZLA, Bosnia — Wall Street would not wake up for another 29 hours. It was Sunday and financial institutions across America would be closed except for the impersonal transactions at automated teller machines.

No matter. The Tuzla Bank and Trust— officially known as the 39th Finance Battalion — was open for business as usual on the November morning in northern Bosnia. Jeff Bingham, who is a banker from Victoria, Texas, and a major in the Texas Army National Guard, was on hand to make sure the customers were satisfied.

His desk in a nondescript cement, single-story building was fashioned from two-by-four studs and unpainted plywood. A vault behind him consisted of a half-dozen olive drab safes stacked against a wall and secured with a heavy chain. The shoulder holster strapped over his camouflage shirt held a 9-mm automatic.

The trappings may be considerably more spartan than his office at the South Texas Bank back in coastal Victoria where he is an investment counselor. But the job is essentially the same for this man who is as tuned in to finance as other Army officers are attuned to firepower.

"We think only about the customers. We make sure the Soldier's finances are straight," Bingham said, 39, of the 21-member team that caters to a large but exclusive clientele — the thousands of U.S. Soldiers and independent contractors involved in the Joint Guard peacekeeping mission who work out of Eagle Base, the U.S. sector's headquarters.

Bingham is the executive officer of the Texas Army Guard's 49th Finance Battalion from Austin. Sixty-nine members of that battalion are working behind the scenes with the active Army's 39th Finance Battalion until next spring to keep their customer's pay and other financial benefits in order.

Finance and food, he acknowledged, are critical for any army's morale.

"Knowing that their money is going to their banks and that their families are being taken care of still has a great effect on Soldiers," said Bingham who has been in banking for 22 years, since taking his bachelors degree in finance from Sam Houston State.

He is also a husband and father of two young sons in Texas. Families, he knows, need to feel financially secure even if dad or mom can't be home for Christmas.

"There are more similarities than there are differences," Bingham said. The computer technology that drives commercial banking these days works equally well for the military finance system.

"I can do the same work here that I do back home in Victoria," he said.

The differences, however, are significant.

Rolling over certificates of deposit, calculating the quarterly interest for savings accounts and dealing with expired credit cards and bounced checks are not the major items on this financial institution's plate.

Basic pay, allotments to people back home, the $150 per month hazardous duty pay, foreign duty pay based on each Soldier's rank and combat zone tax exemptions are the issues that keep these Army bean counters busy, Bingham said.

The focus is on the Soldiers who spend long months in Bosnia separated from but still responsible for their families in the United States and Germany.

"When the 7,000 Soldiers from the 1st Infantry Division moved out and the 1st Armored Division moved back in last October, we were really working for two or three weeks," said Bingham. "We had to make sure those Soldiers coming in were taken care of."

That the vast majority brought no finance problems with them indicates the units are taking care of the Soldiers, he added.

Editor's note: Haskell is with the Joint Guard National Guard Bureau in Tuzla, Bosnia.

Honored MP horseman ends career

By Pfc. D. Stewart Howell
Fort McClellan News

The mounted Infantrymen of the 17th and 18th century were not a critical ingredient to the success of the military mission as much as the rallying point behind which the many key Soldiers and cavalrymen united to find courage and lead units to victory.

The horseman, dressed in the traditional Revolutionary War uniform, armed lightly with a steel saber and displaying the colors of the Military Police Corps, is recognized as a Dragoon — a warrior whose personal battle is matched today against the indomitable hands of the clock and the racing passage of time. Sitting proudly on his mighty white steed, the Dragoon stands as both a living legacy of the nation's past and as a monument to the rich and proud history behind the MP Regiment.

Dozens of spectators were on hand Oct. 1 to witness retired Army Staff Sgt. Richard L. Knight, Military Police Corps Dragoon, as he rode in on horseback to offer one final salute as the symbolic warrior. In an awards presentation which highlighted his role and retirement as a intricate participant in MP Regimental Review ceremonies, Knight was awarded with the Commander's Award for Excellence by Lt. Col. Robert W. Gee, commander, 701st MP Battalion, Fort McClellan, Ala., and presented with tokens of appreciation from several of the Corps' members.

"My retirement papers say I have more than 41 years federal service, and it's about time I stepped down from the saddle," Knight said. "Even though I'm leaving the riding to the young folks these days, if I can be of benefit to any of the services now they need only call."

During his four-year service as the Dragoon, spanning from 1994 to 1997, Knight's mission was to cross the bridge of the past for the MP Corps and bridge that gap for today's young Soldiers. With his historic mark of bearing and tradition etched permanently in the annals Corps history, Knight's legacy will certainly be remembered long after he is gone.

"Whether he served us at regimental reviews or special ceremonies, he's always done this on his own and at his own expense," Gee said. "As the MP Regiment moves into the 21st Century, Soldiers will continue to remember the support they received from a dedicated Soldier who gave of himself for others."

A renowned horse trainer, Knight spent more than 20 years in the last horse Cavalry the Army has ever seen— the 820th Constabulary Military Police Battalion, Stuttgart, Germany. Since joining the Army during World War II, he is one of the few Soldiers in that unit still alive.

"We were not a regular MP unit," Knight said. "In our unit we had the last 12 horses the entire Army still had on active duty."

"We weren't ever allowed to ride the horses of course," Knight joked. "But we fed them, brushed them, shoed them, dressed them up in full military dress and walked them five miles every single day.

Knight was born on a Texas ranch in Feb. 1927 and has taken care of horses since he was a boy. It was this passion for horses that brought him back into the military after his first 18-month tour was up. This love of horses also landed him in the movies.

"When I first enlisted, it didn't take me long to decide that I had all the Army I could take," Knight said. "It's funny ... when I got out after a year-and-a-half, people would yell at me when I was riding my horse and say, 'Slow that horse down, what do you think it is, a jeep?' And when I reenlisted and drove my jeep, people would ask me if I thought I was racing a horse? Until I was assigned to the 820th, I couldn't win either way."

Though Knight said it doesn't take a jockey to recognize the difference between a four-legged animal and four-wheel drive, it was his expertise of horsemanship that landed him and his steed, Eclipse, with riding parts in several Civil War motion pictures. His film credits include the 1982 movie "Rebel Walls," and the critically acclaimed mini-series, "North and South."

Knight exercises his love of acting and expert knowledge of military history by participating in yearly Civil War reenactment events with the 51st Alabama Cavalry Regiment Partisan Rangers. This organization has its roots in the Confederate Service of 1862, but survives today to provide a unique education to Americans about the rich history of the nation's first and only civil war. Their last event was held in October when Knight and the Cavalry, in full Confederate dress, paraded through the small town of Dalton, Ala., escorting the last remaining widow of the Confederate States of the Civil War.

While the years have been kind to Knight, offering him a chance to do the things he loves and share them with others, he said even though time may have bowed his shoulders and slowed his pace, his spirit hasn't been affected and he's still going strong.

"I've been doing this for a long time, but it is time for me to step down off the horse," Knight said. "I've decided to let the young men go off and play cowboys and Indians, I have a new hobby I'm going to master — cooking."

Soldiers help educate youth offenders

By Pfc. Katina N. Ingram
Fort McClellan News

Fort McClellan is unique for its advanced training facilities and programs. One specific program is the Rehabilitation Training Instructors' Course (RTIC).

The RTIC program was implemented in 1991 to assist with the National Drug Control Strategy. It provides instructor training to federal, state and local civilian correctional agencies that have incorporated juvenile boot camps into their penal system. Currently the RTIC program is the only training program of its kind in the United States.

Fort McClellan's RTIC staff consists of retired Command Sgt. Maj. Joshua Perry, the program manager, four active duty drill instructors and one retired drill instructor.

During the two-week course, drill instructors strive to provide civilian correctional officers with the knowledge and skills required to rehabilitate young drug offenders. These youths are confined in juvenile boot camps or 'shock incarceration' facilities.

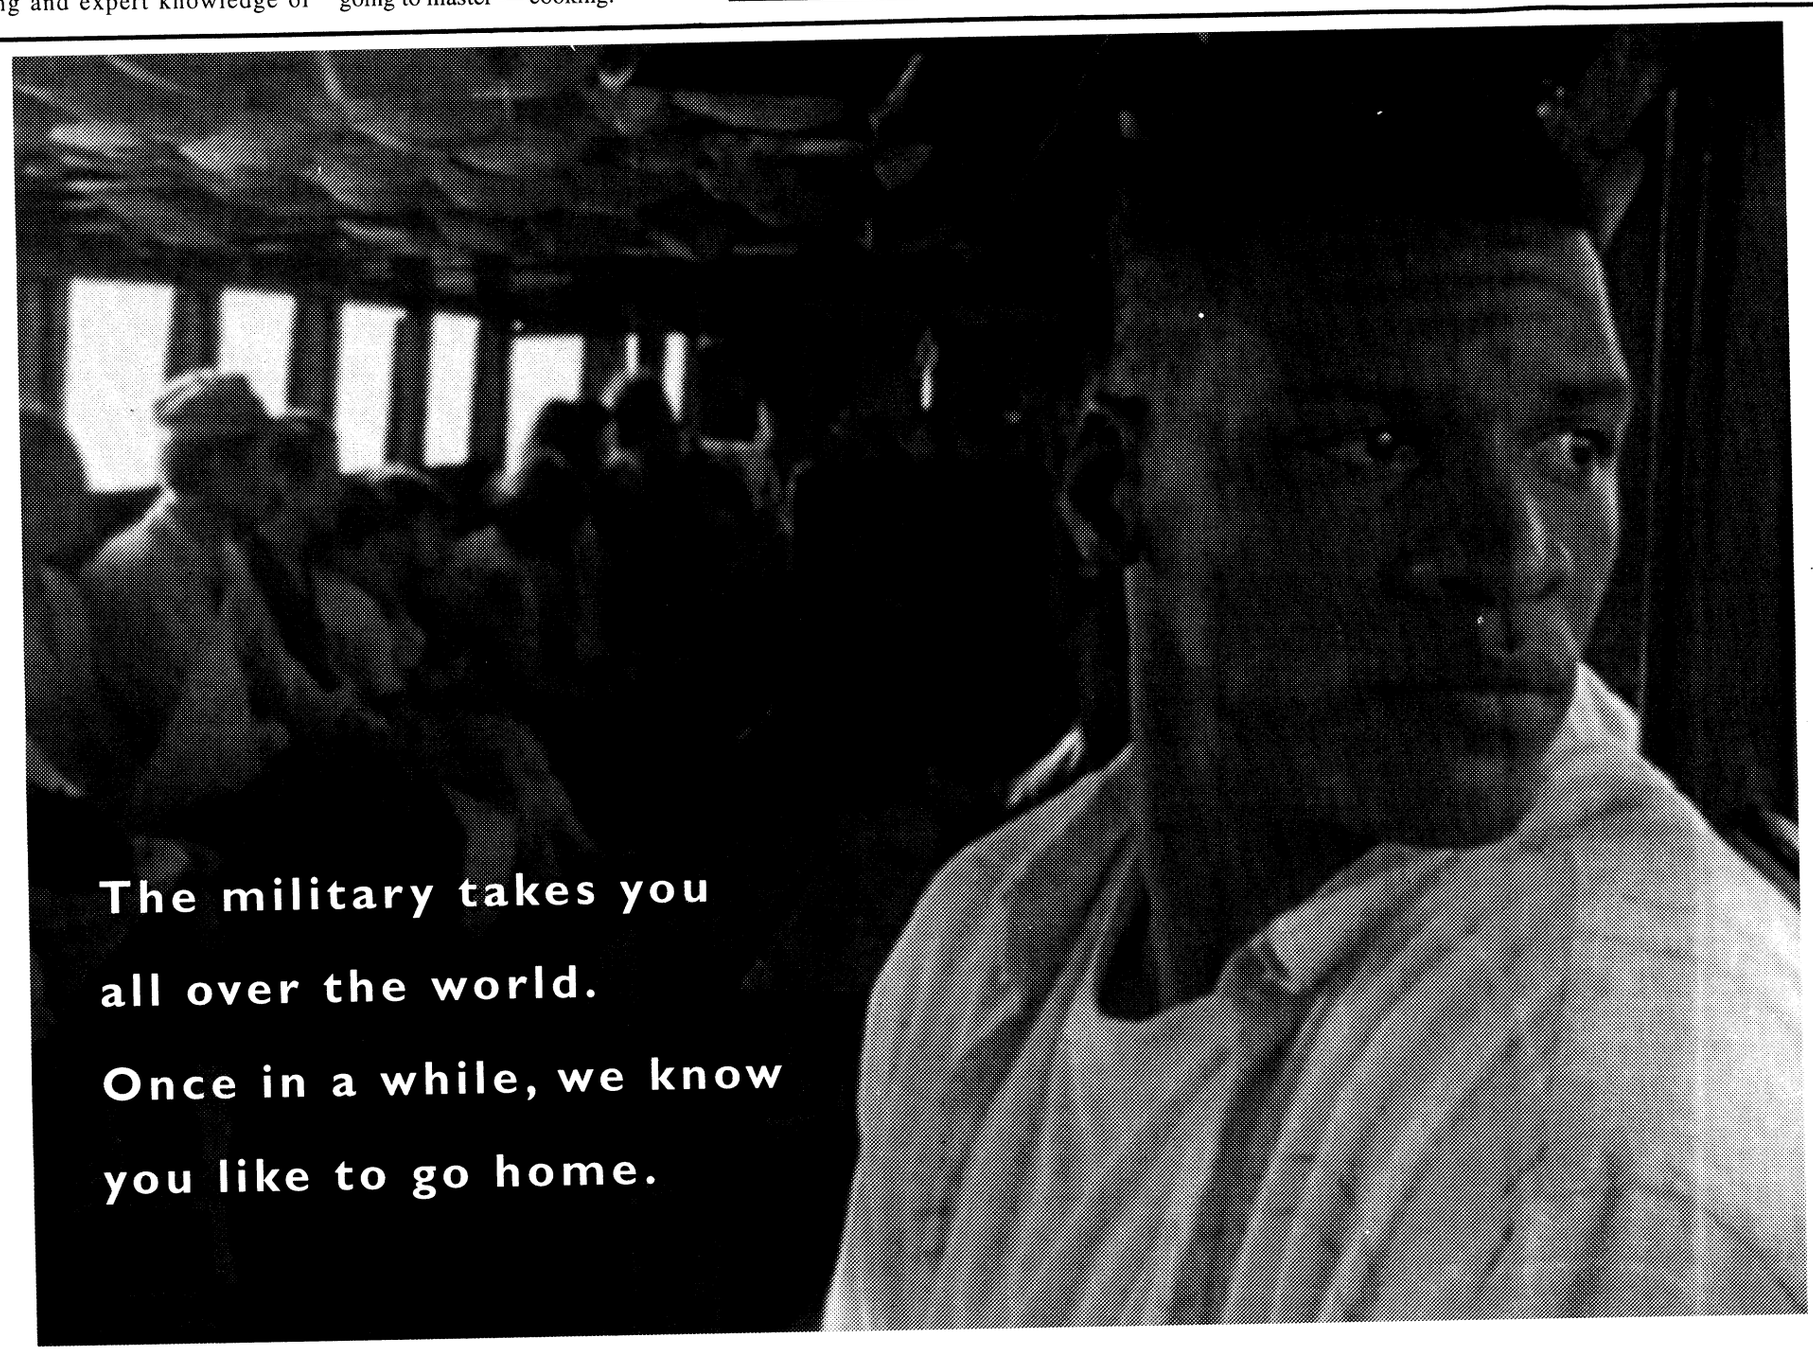
"The military style training that we do has proven to be very effective," Perry said. "It promotes discipline and leadership abilities that are helpful when it comes to establishing authority with the youth."

The RTIC program can boast the graduation of corrections officers from all over the country. Though there are only 16 classes held a year.

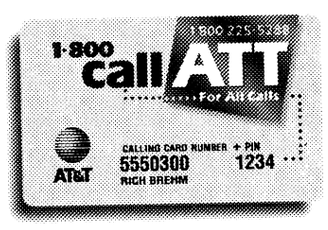
Correctional officers are trained in physical conditioning, drill and ceremony, leader development assessment, professional sensitivity and awareness and counseling techniques.

In addition, officers learn the fundamentals of effective instructional techniques with the use of training aids.

"It is very important for the youths to be able to see the instructors at their best," said Sgt. 1st Class J.O. Godwin, drill instructor, RTIC.



"We attempt to teach the instructors professionalism and how to lead by example because the youths need guidance."



Upon completing the segments of instruction, the correctional officers are expected to be proficient in designing effective physical fitness programs, conducting physical training, teaching marching and facing movements and leading by example.

They will also be able to identify signs of stress, know how to deal with drug abuse problems of the young inmates and identify gang signs and symbols, Godwin said.

Some might argue it is impossible to fully train correctional instructors to go out into juvenile boot camps and be completely prepared to deal with today's youth. However, the structure of RTIC attempts to prepare correctional officers with a foundation of the basics.

"Each of the drill instructors are drill sergeant qualified and have a military background in corrections," Godwin said. "We teach the corrections officers how to verbally supervise the youth and get results. We also teach them how to be professional and to control their emotions ... because the youth will try you."

ACAP offers Soldiers benefit information

Army Career and Alumni Program

The Army Alumni and Career Program (ACAP) announces pre-separation briefing and workshop schedule for 1998.

"Prior to their separation from the military, Soldiers are required to receive briefings information and assistance as necessary to understand and take full advantage of their earned benefits and entitlements," said Harold Ericksen, Fort Benning's ACAP Center manager. This process should begin with the three-day ACAP session and then be followed shortly with individual counseling sessions as necessary with service providers and ACAP Center counselors.

The three-day program of briefings and workshops is presented in Classroom 30, Infantry Hall by ACAP Center personnel, Georgia Department of Labor, Local Veteran Employment Representative and Fort Benning service providers (Retirement Services, Veterans Administration, Finance, Reserve Component and Tricare). "Successful participation in this program empowers Soldiers and their families to begin transitioning to civilian life with dignity and pride," said Ericksen

Because there are major differences in the benefits available to retirees there are special sessions designed to address retirement issues and may not be appropriate for those separating on ETS dates or for other reasons.

For additional information, please call 545-2308 or 545-2309 or visit Building 2634 in Soldiers' Plaza.

Green to Gold Opportunities available

Florida Institute of Technology ROTC

You have learned to follow and now you want to lead. Step out and take charge. You want to go from Green To Gold. Florida Institute of Technology (FIT) and the United States Army would like to help you attain your goal in a challenging environment along the Space Coast of East-Central Florida. A U.S. Army Green to Gold scholarship at FIT could provide you with an opportunity to earn a bachelors degree, become an Army officer and launch your future.

Florida Institute of Technology, also known as Florida Tech, is located in Melbourne, Florida, 35 miles south of Kennedy Space Center and 40 miles east of Orlando. Florida Tech's campus is just three miles west of the Atlantic Ocean and the beaches. Student enrollment is about 2,300 undergraduate students and 2,500 graduate students. This allows for a student to faculty ratio of 12 to one.

Programs of study offered at Florida Tech include: College of Engineering (almost all engineer specialties and Computer Science), School of Aeronautics (with and without night options and Aviation Computer Science), School of Business, School of Psychology, and the College of Science and Liberal Arts (Marine Biology, Communication, Humanities, Pre-Med, Physics, Chemistry, Computer Education, Aquaculture, math, and science to name a few).

In 1995, the FIT ROTC department won the Douglas MacArthur Leadership Award for excellence, which was based on the outstanding cadet performance at the ROTC Advanced Camp. The Florida Tech Panther Battalion is currently ranked in the top 8 percent of all ROTC programs in the nation. Our cadets are highly respected on campus and hold key leadership positions in many academic and social organizations. The program also offers opportunities to serve in the Ranger Club, Drill Team, and Color Guard. In fact, the Drill Team and Color Guard participates at Mardi Gras in New Orleans every year.

Florida Tech is consistently awarded many summer training opportunities. Cadets have attended airborne, air assault, northern warfare, and mountain warfare schools. Cadets also have the opportunity to travel to active duty posts, and experience the life of a second lieutenant for three weeks, in programs like Cadet Troop Leadership Training or Drill Cadet Leadership Training. Cadets have traveled to Germany, Korea, Hawaii, Maryland, the Pentagon, Fort Knox, Ky., and Fort Sill, Okla.

A U.S. Army Green To Gold scholarship provides financial assistance toward college tuition and educational fees up to $16,000 a year. Additionally, a flat rate of $450 per year is provided to purchase textbooks.

E-Club teaches children respect for the environment

Tidy Tour Team members show the e-Club the scrub coats and clipboards the team will wear and carry during Dexter Elementary common area inspections. The members for this inspection are Tammie Spencer, (left), Bo Toni Wooldridge, Matthew Walmsley, Ben Crossno and Brianna Moia.

Picking up trash, sorting and counting recyclable plastic bags, weighing paper and collecting plastic lids aren't the usual way of teaching children math and science or responsibility, but that is just what the kindergartners at Dexter Elementary are learning at e-Club.

E-Club teaches the children about responsibility to Mother Earth, said Earnestine Ezekiel, the kindergarten teacher who started the club in 1994.

Members of the e-Club learn about ecology and responsibility for the environment through activities like the Recycling Marathon, the Campus Watch, the Recycling Center, Gardening Year Round and most recently, the Tidy Tour Team.

According to Tammie Spencer, paraprofessional, the Tidy Tour Team was designed to heighten the awareness of conserving resources and keeping the common areas of the school clean and to be respectful of the common areas and to pick up after themselves.

"The principal told me about a problem some of the older children were having in keeping the rest rooms clean," Ezekiel said. "This is one way to teach them while they are young about the importance of cleanliness and hopefully with the tour, the older children will take responsibility for their common areas."

The Tidy Tour Team inspects the common areas of the school once a week and keeps track of how well the classes are keeping the areas clean.

During the inspection, team members wear white scrub coats, made by Ezekiel, and hats and carry clipboards to mark the results of the tour and to keep others from using the bathroom while the tour is inspecting the area.

A Too Clean Award will be presented to the class or classes with the best monthly record and at the end of the year a party will be given for the class or classes receiving the most Too Clean Awards, Ezekiel said.

All e-Club members will have an opportunity to be part of the Tidy Tour Team, Ezekiel said.

One of the first team members was 5-year-old Ben Crossno.

"We're looking to see if the floors are clean and if the paper is in the trash," he said.

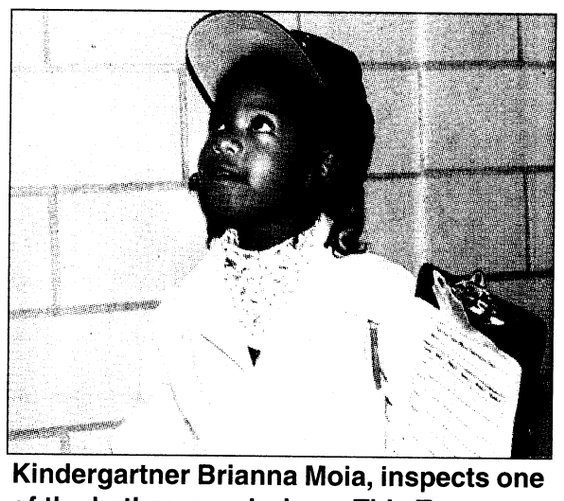
The cleanest common areas will get a happy face, which is what 5-year-old Brianna Moia likes about the being on the team.

"Writing happy faces is the best," she said. "We had two sad faces." The sad faces are for the bathrooms that aren't clean.

"We wanted to reach the whole school with this program," Ezekiel said. "To develop a program that would help the students develop pride and ownership and respect for these areas and address the health and resource management issues. Hopefully the program will change the behavior and keep these kids on the right road as far as using the common areas of the school.

Other ways the e-Club helps Dexter is through the Campus Watch Program. This is done during the last 15 minutes of play ground time every Friday. The purpose of this activity is make the children aware of how important it is to put litter in its place, Ezekiel said.

The Recycling Center is an ongoing operation that recycles newspapers, plastic bags and lids.



"The purpose is multifold," Ezekiel said. "Children learn math and science skills hands on and to save the environment. They sort the plastic bags by size, color and vendor. The bags are counted and a record is kept.

"The plastic lids are sorted by size and color. We use the information to make graphs as well as teaching other math concepts.

"The newspapers are sorted, bundled and weighed before the recycling center people pick the papers up. We use the information to make comparisons and we also use some of the paper for class projects."

During the last 45 days of school, the e-Club conducts a plastic cap recycling marathon.

Kindergartners and first-graders who bring a plastic cap to school every day for the 45 days receive a gold medal with their name, school and year engraved on it. Last year 54 children received the medals, Ezekiel said. This activity helps the children develop responsibility, perseverance, commitment and pride while at the same time recycling materials to help save the earth.

The e-Club also has a garden that teaches the students earth science skills and develops science concepts through a hands-on approach, she said. A project Gardening Year Round (GYR) hopes to receive funding for is to build five more landscaping boxes behind the school. One of the boxes would be used as a compost pit, Ezekiel said. Parent volunteers are needed to help build the planters.

Ezekiel also writes a play for the e-Club members to perform each year. The drama is designed to help young children develop skill in creative expression while learning about the importance of taking care of the environment. This year's play is called The Martian comes to Mother Earth University. The play will be cast after the holidays.

Teaching young children now will help keep the environment clean because young children have no problem getting on there parents and family to keep things picked up, Ezekiel said.

Fifth-graders participate in Tar Wars program

By Capt. Dana K. Renta
Martin Army Community Hospital

For the past month, while students across America continue to hone their math and science skills, fifth-grade students at Fort Benning schools were learning how to battle the tobacco industry and to "say no to Joe Camel." The war against tobacco is called Tar Wars.

Tar Wars is an in-school lesson, conducted locally by Fort Benning Family Physicians and other volunteers.

The lessons teach the long-term effects of tobacco use, refusal skills and understanding tobacco advertising.

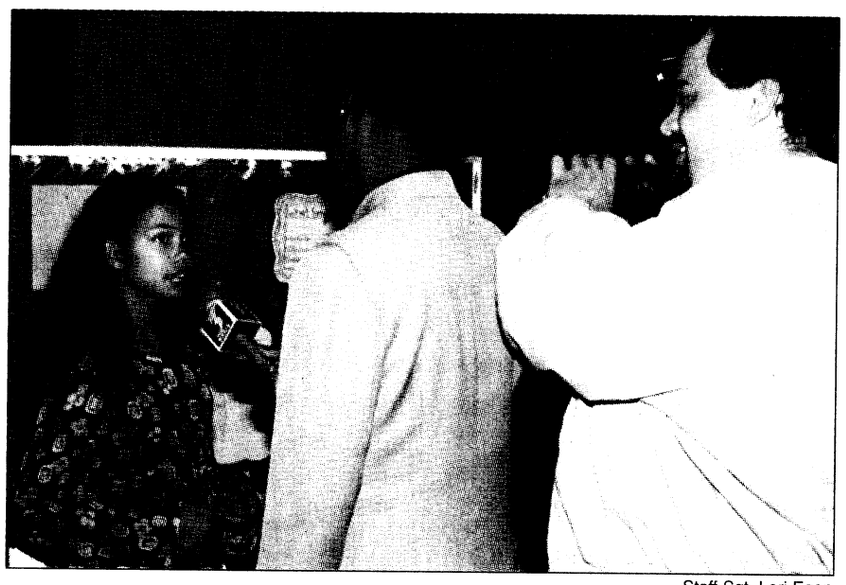
It includes discussions and activities that focus on the reasons why people smoke and the benefits of not smoking, such as saving money for education and healthier living.

Tar Wars is a nationally based program, founded in 1988, which promotes pro-health tobacco education and has received awards from the American Medical Association and the World Health Organization.

Through efforts at Fort Benning, more than 2,000 students to date have received instruction.

This number includes a mentorship program which teams Columbus High School with Martin Army Community Hospital's (MACH) Family Practice Physicians, teaching more than 500 fifth-grade students within this community.

"The Tar Wars Program provides needed education to children at a time when they are most vulnerable," said Col. Everett W. Newcomb III, MACH commander. "The best way to prevent tobacco-related death and disease is to never start smoking."



The battle is not simple, Maj. Karen Kerle, MACH family physician and co-coordinator for Tar Wars. The weapons chosen by the tobacco industry include clever advertisement on highway billboards, racing cars' and T-shirts. Children are bombarded with protobacco images in the movies and magazines.

According to Morbidity and Morality, a weekly medical report, about 90 percent of people who start smoking tobacco are younger than 18 and the number is increasing.

By the age of 10, 30 to 50 percent of children will have experimented with tobacco products and approximately 20 to 24 percent of 15 year-old children smoke regularly.

Tobacco companies realize the trend, targeting nearly $4 billion dollars annually on advertising to children. Children below the age of 12 are more likely to become chronic heavy smokers.

The school visit is completed with a poster contest. Students are asked to convey the message of Tar Wars. Judges for this year's event were Newcomb and Dr. Dell McCullen, Fort Benning Schools superintendent.

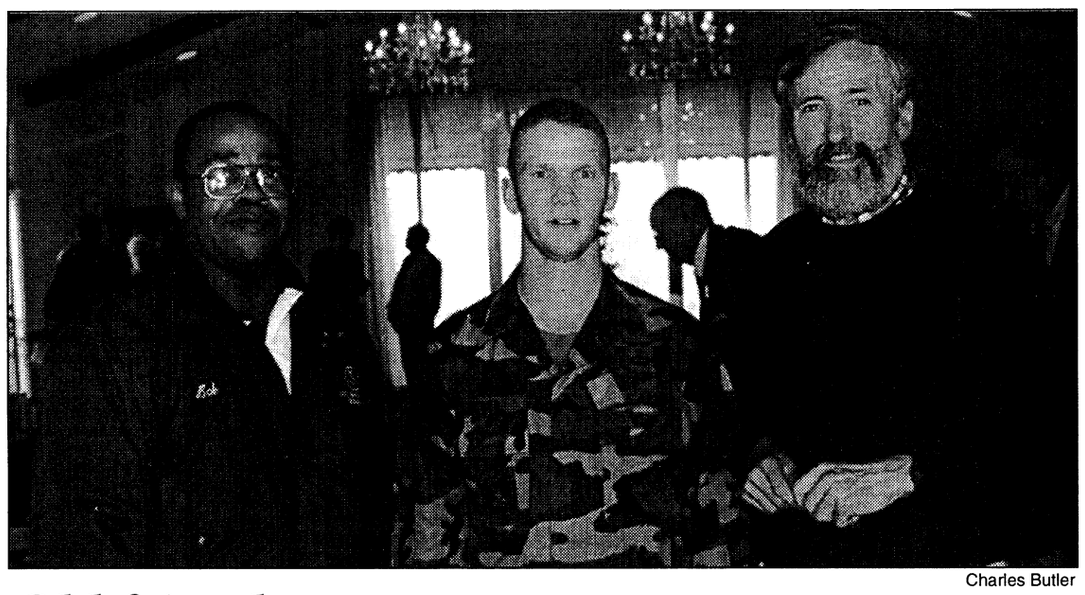
WRBL Channel 3's Semone Doughton and Alex Puch interview White Elementary fifth-grader Nicole Kagee for her second place finish in the Tar Wars poster contest.

This year's winner is Edward Brosinski from White Elementary School whose message was "tobacco kills."



Other winners include second-place winner Nicole Kagee from White Elementary School and third-place winner Chris Moore from Wilson Elementary School.

Honorable mentions go to Maria Landivar from White Elementary School and Casi Sisk and Natasha Howard from Stowers Elementary School.

Prizes were donated from the Main Mall Post Exchange.

The winner will compete in the USAFP Annual Scientific Assembly this Spring, vying for a chance to compete in the National Tar Wars Competition. ◆

Q: I got a Home Owner's Warranty (HOW) on my house when I bought it in 1993. I thought that it was an added bonus to ensure that I would have some coverage for any problems with my house. I just got a notice in the mail indicating that the HOW Corporation is in receivership. What does this mean for my coverage? I don't have any problems with my house yet will my HOW really pay out for defects?

A: Three companies, Home Warranty Corporation, Home Owners Warranty Corporation and HOW Insurance Company, a Risk Retention Group, provided a majority of the Home Owner's Warranties, particularly in this area. It became apparent these companies did not have sufficient financial assets from which to pay claims. Rather than permitting these companies to file for bankruptcy, leaving homeowners with no coverage, the United States District Court placed the companies into receivership. This simply means the court appointed a person, the "receiver," to run the companies until the financial status of the companies improves. The idea is to try to build up the cash reserves of the companies to ensure that sufficient funds are available to pay on future claims.

Your policy is still good. However, to keep from further worsening the finances of the companies, the receiver is only paying 50 percent of authorized claims. Furthermore, the claims are prioritized in this litigation with home owners falling within class four. Thus, funds must be made available to pay the claims of all members of classes one through three before individual home owners will be paid. Finally, there is no benefit to filing a claim early since all claims in each particular class will be paid the same percentage at the same time.

Many people misunderstand the coverage of a typical HOW. A standard HOW provides for claims for builder default coverage in the event a builder refuses to correct defects caused during the construction. The HOW usually covers major structural defects as well. There are specific time periods during which claims for various defects must be made. The major complaint about such warranties is the list of covered defects rarely includes something that actually goes bad during the period of coverage.

For example, most HOWs pay claims of a "major structural defect" when there is proof of actual physical damage to specifically named load-bearing portions of the home that causes the home to become unsafe, unsanitary or otherwise unlivable. Thus, if the beams in your house are somehow defective and the structure begins to fall in, there would be coverage. However, damage resulting from the failure of non-load bearing portions of a home such as the roof would not be covered.

Usually a HOW is included with a house as an added "bonus." If the HOW cost you nothing, then you've lost nothing.

However, if you are contracting for the construction of a home and the builder is attempting to include such a warranty at an additional cost, think carefully before agreeing to purchase such coverage. Study the documents and make sure that you know what defects will or will not be covered.

Many consumer groups indicate that you may be wiser to take the money that you would have used to purchase the warranty and invest it for use if and when a defect surfaces.

If you have questions concerning homeowner's warranties, call the Legal Assistance Division at 545-3281 or 545-3282.

Chitlin cookers need to practice caution

Georgia Dept. of Human Resources

Families cooking chitlins for the holidays should take special care with raw chitlins so their children will not get sick, said Carol Snype Crawford, director of the Georgia Department of Human Resources Office of Minority Health.

"Raw chitlins contain bacteria that can cause severe diarrhea, especially in children," Crawford said. "It takes a long time to prepare chitlins, so these bacteria can grow and spread, even in the refrigerator. The easiest way to prevent infection is to preboil the raw chitlins for five minutes as soon as you get them in the house."

During December in Georgia, hospitals report an increase in cases of severe diarrhea caused by Yersinia enterocolitica (YE) which is found in the intestines of pigs. Most of the cases are in children under age five who have been in a kitchen where raw chitlins were being prepared.

"Most older cooks know to be very careful about disinfecting anything that has touched raw chitlins," she said. "Boiling the chitlins for five minutes before cleaning them kills all the bacteria. While the chitlins are boiling, clean the kitchen and your hands with hot water and bleach powder, then clean the chitlins as usual. Finally, cook and season them according to your traditional recipe. The preboiling cuts the cleaning process in half and they taste just as good."

During November and December this year, DHR's Division of Public Health is distributing fliers, brochures and grocery store displays about how to prepare chitlins safely, Crawford said. This will continue a public awareness campaign begun last year when Public Health staff gathered information on safe chitlin preparation and cooking from experienced cooks in the community and tested the results scientifically to confirm the effectiveness of preboiling and other prevention measures.

Anyone wishing information on how to avoid YE infection through safe chitlin preparation can call the county health department.

Reminders help prevent fires

Infantry Branch Safety Office

Almost 6,500 people die each year as a result of fires. Most home fire fatalities occur between 10 p.m. and 6 a.m. and are caused by human error.

The following are reminders to help prevent fires:

•Never leave cooking unattended, even for just a few minutes.

•Check that all cooking appliances are turned off before going to bed.

•Use only electrical appliances with a testing laboratory seal.

•Use proper size fuses and avoid octopus outlets.

•Extinguish all smoking materials properly before discarding; never smoke in bed. Do not leave matches or lighters lying around where children can get them.

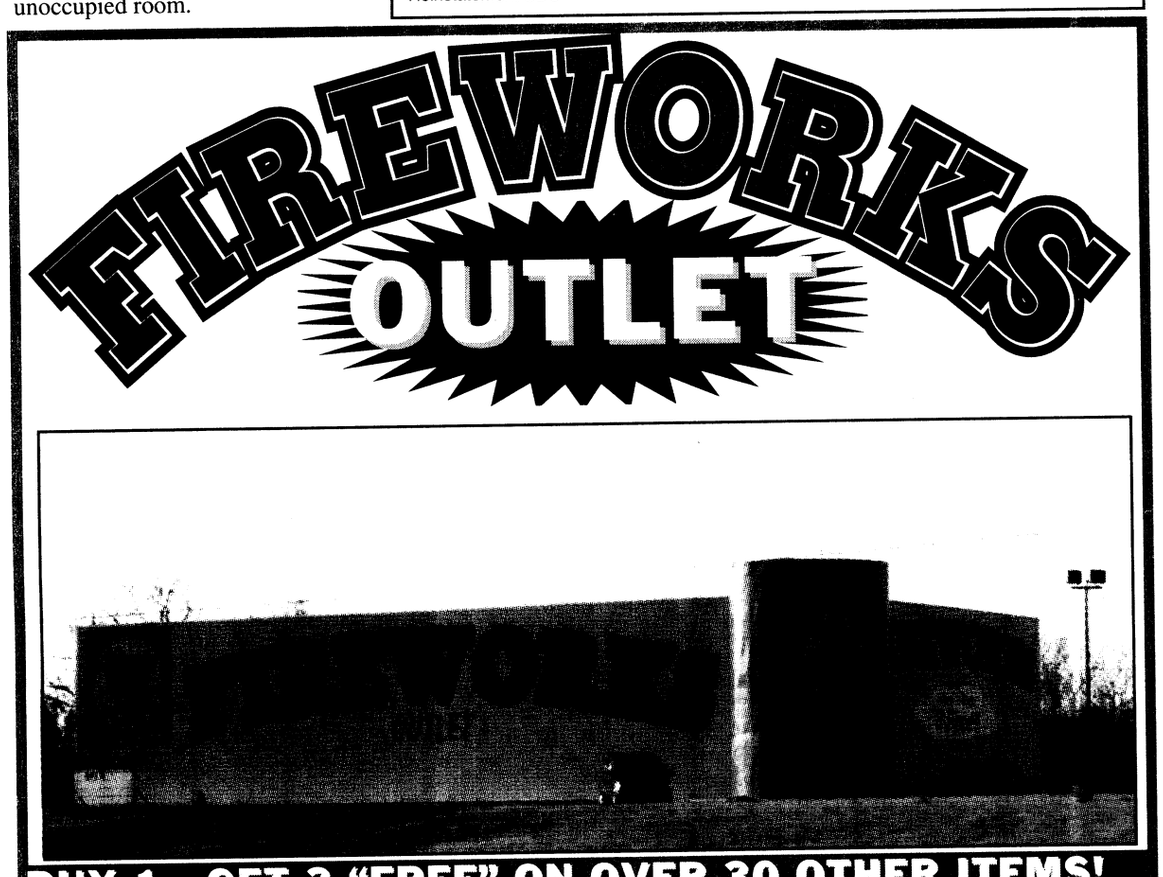
•Remove old papers, rags, and other combustible materials from closets, attic, basement, or garage.

•Store gasoline, kerosene, and other flammable liquids outdoors; never leave a burning candle in an unoccupied room.

•Check smoke or fire detectors.

•Have your chimney checked before using a fireplace this winter.

•Train children to follow an escape route in case of fire. Plan two escape routes and devise a method to alert each member of the family. Have a place to meet outside, so you can make sure everyone is out of the house. Never leave small children unsupervised. Instruct the baby sitter on fire escape routes and make sure she or he knows the fire emergency phone number.



Dial 911 from housing areas for all emergencies.

Use this checklist monthly.

Prayer offers chance to communicate with God

By Chaplain (Maj.) Vance P. Theodore
School of the Americas

Why do we pray? Why is it so difficult to pray? If the Lord wants us to constantly pray, what keeps us from doing it? These are all meaningful questions. However, let's focus on the importance of prayer.

Prayer, on a daily basis, is one of the most important things that we do. Prayer keeps us focused on God and centered on his Gospel. As it says in the scriptures, "Watch and pray always, lest ye enter into temptation." (Matt. 26:41, Mark 13:33, 14:38, Luke 21-36, 22:4)

The other day as I was sitting, listening to a talk about prayer, the individual expressed that we should start each day asking guidance from God and end the day giving thanks for the many blessings that we have received.

So simple, yet how many times have I forgotten this easy advice. Unfortunately, in my own life, and in the lives of others, prayers sometimes seem to be centered on our own selfish desires and not what we really need, "a contrite spirit and a broken heart."

Mostly, prayers tend to center around what I like to call the "Gimme syndrome." If you do this, then I will do that: "Please Lord, I need...," or in our greatest hour of want after we have constantly forgotten him, we turn to the Lord for help.

I remember how popular prayer was before Desert Storm. Before the battle, Soldiers were constantly praying, asking for scriptures and wanting assurance that everything would be all right.

The Lord was on their minds. Prayers were said. Religious services were widely attended and many tears were shed. Those who thought that perhaps they might be in harm's way, eagerly turned to the Lord.

However, after the threat was gone, it was amazing how things returned to "status quo." The faithful who always attended services were there, and those who attended because of the war, found other things to do.

Unfortunately, this is quite common. I find myself constantly forgetting the Lord and have to strive to stay connected with him.

Prayer offers us the opportunity to talk with God and to center our lives on him. A song that I like appropriately sums up this concept of prayer:

"Prayer is the soul's sincere desire, Uttered or unexpressed, The motion of a hidden fire that trembles in the breast. Prayer is the burden of a sigh, The falling of a tear, The upward glancing of an eye When none but God is near. Prayer is the simplest form of speech that infant lips can try; Prayer, the sublimest strains that reach the Majesty on High. Prayer is the contrite sinner's voice Returning from his ways, While angels in their songs rejoice and cry, 'Behold, he prays!' " (James Montgomery, 1771-l854)

Perhaps it is our nature to forget God. However, by praying we remain connected to him and can receive the guidance and help that we so desperately need in our daily lives.

Therefore, let us not forget to pray. If prayer is indeed the soul's sincere desire and if it does connect us with God let us start and end each day with prayer. It will make us better Soldiers, better people and better children of God.

CPAs outline deduction essentials

The Georgia Society of CPAs

One way to express your thanks at this time of year is to donate to charity. But you shouldn't make such donations haphazardly. The Georgia Society of CPAs points out that many donations may qualify for a tax deduction, meaning that you can stretch your purse strings further in making charitable gifts.

What to deduct

As long as you itemize on your tax return, you may deduct gifts to religious or charitable organizations, such as churches and synagogues and groups like the Boy Scouts, Red Cross, and YMCA and YWCA. You also may deduct contributions made to scientific, literary and educational organizations, as well as to organizations devoted to the prevention of cruelty to children or animals or those that foster amateur sports competitions.

Deductible gifts to charity can take many forms. You can deduct cash contributions equal to 50 percent of your adjusted gross income (AGI), and any excess contributions can be carried forward for up to five years. You also can make donations of property, from used clothing, to furniture, to computer equipment and earn tax deductions. When you donate property, your deduction is generally equal to the fair market value of the property at the time you give it, not its original cost.

To make the most of your charitable contributions, consider donating appreciated capital gains property that you've owned for 18 months, such as shares of stock or a mutual fund. When you donate long-term property that has appreciated in value, you generally earn a deduction for the property's fair market value and never have to pay capital gains tax on its appreciation. Contributions of appreciated capital gains and property are generally limited to 30 percent of your adjusted gross income.

What not to deduct

Generally, gifts to individuals are not deductible. You also cannot claim a deduction for political contributions, gifts to labor unions, donations to homeowners, associations or gifts used for tuition.

Payments made partly as a contribution and partly in consideration for goods or services furnished to the donor by the charity, referred to as quid pro quo contributions, are not fully deductible. For example, if you buy a $100 ticket to a charity concert performance and the equivalent ticket normally costs $40, you can deduct only $60. If you choose not to attend the event and return the ticket to the charity to be resold, however, you may deduct the full $100.

When to contribute

To qualify for a deduction in a given tax year, you must make your gift by Dec. 31. That includes checks or properly endorsed stock certificates mailed by New Year's Eve or a gift charged to a bank credit card by that day.

Document contribution

Canceled checks are sufficient documentation for cash donations under $250 but you'll need more proof of your generosity if you donate $250 or more. The rules require that you have a receipt, letter or other statement from the charitable organization listing the amount of the cash donation, or for contributed property, a description of the property donated. In addition, the receipt must state whether or not the charity provided any goods or services in exchange for the cash or property. Where a charitable organization provides goods or services in exchange for contributions over $75, the organization must provide the donor with a good-faith estimate of the value of the goods or services provided.

CPAs recommend that you make sure that you have adequate receipts and other documentation for your charitable gifts.

Establishing trusts protects your wealth, children's financial future

The Georgia Society of CPAs

If the word "trusts" brings to mind an opulent lifestyle and exorbitant wealth, think again. Although establishing a trust can cost anywhere from $500 to $2,000, more and more parents are viewing trusts as valuable tools for protecting and distributing assets to their children, reported the Georgia Society of CPAs.

When your will leaves property outright to your beneficiaries, you have no control over how that property is used. Trusts, on the other hand, provide a means for ensuring that children receive the benefits of your estate in accordance with your wishes.

How does a trust work?

A trust is simply a legal written document that allows you to transfer your property and to dictate how and when the funds will be used and distributed to your beneficiaries. You decide what property will be included in the trust and who will manage and spend the trust's assets. The trustee, the one responsible for managing the trust fund, may be yourself (until your death), the guardian you choose to care for your children, a different individual, or even an institution such as a bank.

One of the simplest types of trust is the 2503c Minors Trust. You can contribute as much as you want to this type of trust, but contributions over $10,000 will trigger the gift tax. One way to stay within the annual gift tax limit is to put $10,000 worth of a growth stock into the trust. When the trust terminates, your child will get the current value of the stock, which presumably is more than you paid. Keep in mind that assets put in a Minor's Trust must be saved for the minor's benefit.

One drawback to a Minor's Trust is that the child must have the option to withdraw the trust's assets when he or she is 21.

If you're not confident that. at age 21, your child will have the maturity to handle the trust's assets, there are other options available to you. Trust agreements are not boilerplate documents, they come in all shapes and sizes and can be custom tailored to meet your unique objectives.

Trust distribution

With a trust, you can select the ages at which your children will ultimately get the trust's assets, as well as whether they will get them all at once or in installments over several years, or even over several decades. You might decide to give your son one-third of his inheritance at age 25 when he is beginning a career, another third at age 30 when he is married and looking to buy a house, and the final third at age 45 to help pay for his children's college education.

Another more flexible option is to give the trustee the authority to pay out the trust's assets based on the beneficiaries' ability to handle money.

Equal or not equal

During their lifetimes, most parents love their children equally, but take care of them based on their individual needs. If you spent $5,000 on braces for your daughter, you probably wouldn't find it necessary to spend an equal amount on your son if he didn't have such a need. Yet, when it comes time to divvy up your assets into trusts, most parents feel compelled to create a separate, equal trust for each child.

In many cases, children are better served with a sprinkling trust, which empowers the trustee to distribute income and principal as needed among the beneficiaries, even if this means that the children might end up receiving unequal amounts. With a sprinkling trust, if one beneficiary needs more income than the others, as might be the case if a child was to become severely disabled, the trustee can, sprinkle, the benefits around rather than be forced to follow a strict formula.

Tax considerations

In terms of taxes, the federal government views a Minor's Trust and other irrevocable trusts as separate tax entities with their own tax identification numbers and filing requirements.

Unless the income earned in the trust is distributed to the beneficiaries, that income is taxed at the trust's tax rates, which arc significantly higher than regular income tax rates.

CPAs can assist with these tax issues as well as help you decide on the most effective method to share your wealth with your heirs.

Runners 'chill out' during annual holiday race

By John W. Peeler
Special to the Bayonet©

Dressed in everything from shorts to sweat pants, more than 330 novice, intermediate and experienced runners turned out Dec. 6 at Faith Middle School to compete in the 19th Annual Faith School Holiday Race.

Starting at 8:30 a.m., the race began in the coldest part of the morning with a one-mile run for boys and girls through age 14 culminating in the five-mile run for all ages.

No new course records were set, but there were plenty of red, rosy cheeks to attest to the low temperatures and a strong wind chill factor.

Battling the cold weather and finishing in first place in the five-mile event was Fort Benning runner and Army 10-Miler team member John Detro.

Detro, an accomplished runner, was the first to come across the finish line in the five-mile race finishing the course with a time of 26:33.

Two five-mile wheelchair participants were veteran James Chapman from Waverly Hall, Ga., and newcomer to the division, Barrie Norton from Americus, Ga.,

"Barrie is not a newcomer to the sport of road racing," Faith School Physical Education teacher Susan Emmerson said.

"Barrie has been involved for many years running all distances up to and including the marathon," Emmerson said.

Norton finished second in the wheelchair competition while her daughter, Claudia Norton, was busy finishing in first place in the women's open division.

Plans are already underway for the 20th Annual Faith Holiday Race and is tentatively set for the first Saturday of next December.

Results from the race were:

The Last Hundred Yards
The NCO's Contribution to Warfare

Bruce Gudmundsson, coauthor of On Infantry, calls this "the best book on ground tactics ... in the last 50 years." Infantry leaders, learn how to: (1) add surprise to standard U.S. tactics, (2) conduct maneuver warfare at the small-unit level, and (3) enjoy training to the threat. There will be no front lines in the next war, so support personnel will need this one too. It contains the collective common sense of 1200 infantry NCO's, reads like an action novel, and has 250 illustrations. Great for gifts. Save lives, send $22.75 to Posterity Press, P.O. Bass fishermen shoot for cooler water or current

By David Hegel and Steve Price
Johnson® and Evinrude® Outboards

In the winter months, bass fishermen look for warmer water. In the summer, they look for cooler water.

"To many people, it probably looks like we're never satisfied with where we have to fish," said veteran angler Guy Eaker, "but in truth, water temperature is one of the most critical of all factors when we're looking for fish. Water temperature determines how active the bass will be, so we look for temperature as close to optimum as we can."

Eaker, a professional tournament angler for more than 20 years, said finding that optimum temperature is easier in summer than in winter.

"Two of the best places to fish for bass in the heat of summer are around deep vegetation or in the upper part of a lake where current may be present," he said. "The vegetation provides cover as well as oxygen, while moving water is always better oxygenated and usually cooler."

Shallow vegetation often produces good fishing early in the morning and again late in the afternoon, but it usually won't be as dependable during the middle of the day, according to the pro. This is because if the vegetation is too thick for sunlight to penetrate to the water below, decaying algae and plants will use up the oxygen and produce carbon dioxide, which will force the bass to re-locate.

"Deeper vegetation, on the other hand, will hold bass all day because conditions are more agreeable to them," Eaker said. "When I'm fishing deep grass, I either use a heavy 3/4-ounce jig and fish along the edge of the vegetation or I slow-roll a heavy spinnerbait right over the top.

"Most of the time, these are the two places bass hold on this type of cover, and when you do locate them, you can catch some awesome stringers. I've seen plenty of 20- and 25-pound catches under these conditions."

Eaker's own preference for summer fishing is to travel to the far upper end of a lake where he can fish in moving water. This often means motoring into the main tributary river that feeds the lake.

"Two techniques I like to use are working crankbaits through the pockets behind rocks and stumps in the current and drifting a plastic worm downstream around the rocks," Eaker said.

"If there is a lot of fairly shallow shoreline cover present, I may also use a spinnerbait.

"I think one of the main keys to fishing current is lure presentation. I always try to have my lures moving downstream with the current so they appear more natural. This generally means holding my boat in the current and casting upstream, then guiding the lure around the rocks and into the different little pockets as the current washes the lure downstream."

Light tackle brings more strikes

By Earl Bentz & Steve Price
Outboard Marine Corporation

"Light tackle is not a cure-all, but in most cases it does bring more strikes," said world class bass fisherman Guido Hibdon.

Hibdon's definition of light tackle includes lures ranging in weight from one-eighth down to one-thirty-second ounce and lines testing between six and 10 pounds. He uses these with open face spinning reels and sensitive rods with fast tips.

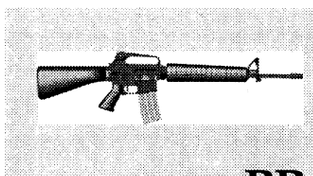
"I've been using tackle like this for more than 35 years, so I'm comfortable with it," said the Missouri pro, "but a lot of fishermen have trouble using light tackle. It's a lot different from ordinary bait-casting equipment so it takes some practice before you feel comfortable using it.

"The primary difference between light and heavy tackle," Hibdon said, "is how much more active lures are when fished on lighter lines.

"This is the true key to light tackle fishing," he said. "Even one-eighth ounce lures work much better on six or eight pound test line than on 10 pound test line. The heavier the line, the stiffer it is, and the stiffer it is, the less a lure can move."

At the same time, the pro said, there is also a big difference between a lure weighing one-eighth ounce and one weighing three-sixteenths ounce.

"The real difference is in the rate of fall," Hibdon said. "Naturally, a heavier lure falls faster than a lighter one, but because the rate of fall is really critical in light tackle, you have to learn to distinguish between the two lures, and that just takes a lot of practice.



"In light tackle fishing, in which the majority of lures are jig-type baits, most strikes come as the lure is falling, so the best way to fish such a lure is by creating multiple falls," Hibdon said.

"Thus, hopping or jigging these lures up off the bottom is normally more effective than crawling them along the bottom. I don't work my lures very much, but I do try to create multiple falls."

Many anglers associate light tackle with unusually short rods, often less than five feet in length. Hibdon, however, does not like short rods and certainly doesn't believe they're necessary for light lines and lures.

"I prefer a spinning rod a little more than six feet in length," he said. "To me, having a fast, sensitive tip is the most important part of a light tackle rod. That tip is what allows you to cast a light lure, feel a barely detectable strike, and then set the hook."

"Going from heavier tackle to such light equipment is a hard transition," he said, "but once they gain confidence in it, most anglers really enjoy it. The lures work better and generate more strikes, and that's what fishing is all about."

Pentagon plans anthrax vaccinations

By Douglas J. Gillert
American Forces Press Service

WASHINGTON — All active duty and Selected Reserve service members will be vaccinated against anthrax bacteria, Department of Defense (DoD) officials announced Dec. 15.

Slated to begin summer 1998, the shots will mark the first time DoD routinely inoculates U.S. troops against a germ warfare agent.

Initially, DoD will inoculate some 100,000 service members and mission-essential civilians either assigned to or scheduled to deploy to the Persian Gulf and South Korea. After several years' studies, military medical and force protection specialists concluded the vaccination program is the safest and surest way of protecting highly mobile U.S. forces. Anthrax, they said, is 99 percent lethal to unprotected individuals, but the vaccination would protect all but about 5 percent of warfighters if anthrax was released into the air over a battlefield.

"This is a force protection issue," Secretary of Defense William Cohen said in a statement. "To be effective, medical force protection must be comprehensive, well documented and consistent. I have instructed the military to put Post Commander Maj. Gen. Carl F. Ernst announced this week that Fort Benning's Chief of Staff Col. Lawrence K. White Jr. will retire in February. A replacement for White has not been announced.

White's last day is scheduled for Feb. 20.

"I don't consider this retirement," White said. "It's just a PCS to another duty station. It just happens to be as a civilian."

His family will remain in the tricommunity area until his youngest daughter, Dagny, graduates from Columbus High School in June, White said.

"I am looking forward to beginning a new career in the wholesale electric business in Atlanta," White said. He begins work Feb. 23.

White ends a 28-year career as an Infantryman that started when he left West Point as a second lieutenant in 1970. His career includes tours in CONUS, Vietnam, Germany, Korea and Belgium.

This was his fourth tour of duty at Fort Benning and he said, "it's been the best assignment an Infantry colonel could ask for."

Safety Cab offers ride home

By Sgt. Marc G. Turchin

As a reminder to those staying in the tricommunity area for the holidays, Safety Cab is here to help.

From now until Jan. 1, Safety Cab will work as a free, safe ride home for anyone in the tricommunity area. The cab ride operates from 8 p.m. to 2 a.m. seven days a week. The free ride is cosponsored by the Association of the U.S. Army. The number for Safety Cab is 660-6069.

Statistics show more people die from drinking and driving accidents during this part of the year any other time of the year, said Regis Beighley, Safety Manager, Directorate of Public Safety.

Beighley promised military police officers will be on patrol across post using road blocks during the day and night time hours to prevent drunk driving.

"We try and stop people from drinking and driving, but if we can't stop them, we try to catch them before they injure themselves or others," Beighley said.

He also said to make sure all drivers have the necessary information in the car with them in case they get stopped or have to go through a road block.

This information includes a drivers' license, vehicle registration and proof of insurance.

During this time last year, there were no reported deaths in the tricommunity area, but there were 12 injuries and 77 arrests.

Again, Beighley stressed if you go out and are drinking, don't try and drive — call Safety Cab at 660-6069.

Holiday kicks off

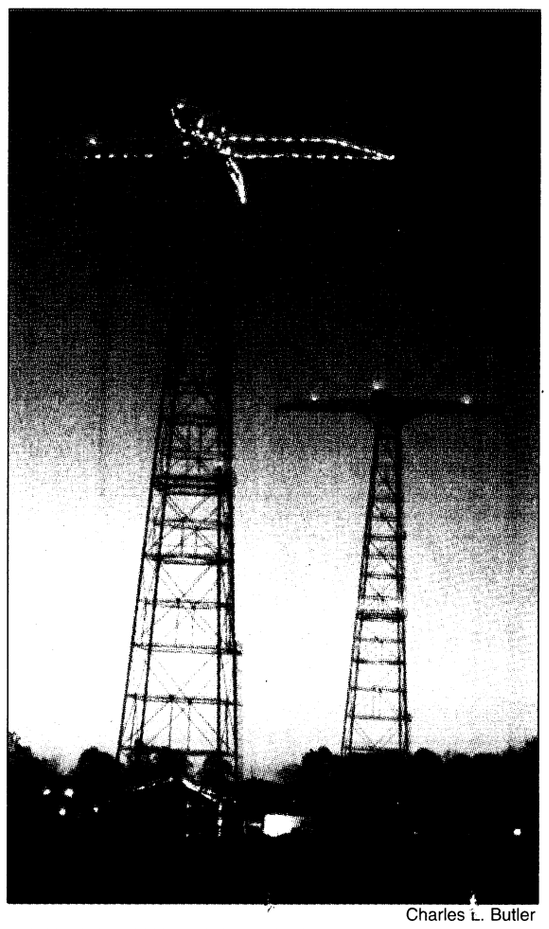
Not able to get home for the holidays? Does your unit's status require you be on Fort Benning?

Opportunities are available for single and unaccompanied Soldiers this holiday season to attend basketball and hockey games, compete in bowling tournaments and many other events.



These opportunities are part of Operation Holiday which will kickoff today at 11 a.m. at the Government Center in Columbus.

Whether you spent too much money on presents to buy an airplane ticket or your relatives will be here for a few days, many Soldiers will remain on post.

"I spent too much money to go home," said Spec. Bunthy Thap, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment. "I'm going to try to get some friends together to go to a Cottonmouths game. It's a good opportunity to get out of the barracks and off

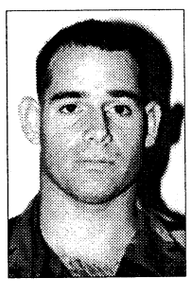
Sick call: Time spent at medical facilities keep Soldiers from mission

By Sgt. Marc G. Turchin
Bayonet assistant editor

We have all been sick from time to time. We have all injured ourselves playing sports or doing things we weren't supposed to and that's part of life. As Soldiers, most of us are more active than the normal person of whatever age we are so we tend to catch colds, pull muscles or break legs more than most.



commentary

But when it comes to getting the health care we deserve, it's easier said than done.

One Soldier in my building has been coming to work and hacking away with this obnoxious cough for nearly a month. I asked, "Why don't you just go to sick call?" The reply was "I can't afford to spend my morning waiting to be seen; I have work to do."

The way it's supposed to work is with a sick-call slip in hand, you go to the Troop Medical Clinic (TMC) that you are assigned to. Once checked in, they get your blood pressure temperature and pulse.

After that, the physician's assistant (PA) looks at the symptoms and decides what is best for you — profile, going to Martin Army Community Hospital for tests, being put on quarters or whatever.

Sgt. Marc G. Turchin thinks something needs to be done about sick-call procedures.

It sounds like an easy process, yet almost everyone I've talked to hates going. Why? In most cases, it's because of the many hours most patients wait to be seen and then don't get a real answer about what ails them.

I am of the opinion that the people working at the TMCs are only partially at fault.

First, those who have been to the TMC during sick-call hours lately have seen the amount of people showing up for treatment. I don't blame the weather either — the numbers seem to be the same no matter if it's January, July or December.

I'm not trying to say the people who show up don't have legitimate reasons for being there, but the number of people showing up on any given day is staggering.

When you have one NCO, three or four junior enlisted Soldiers, a couple of civilians and only one PA on duty, how can the 50 or 60 patients be treated in an efficient way?

When I was at the TMC recently, it took nearly three hours just to be seen by the PA. When he did see me, it took him only five to 10 minutes to say I needed X-rays and send the X-ray request to MACH via computer. I then spent the next hour and a half driving to and from MACH and getting my X-rays. After I got my X-ray, I returned to the TMC, as told, to continue my treatment. Most of the same sick-call people were still there waiting to be seen.

I blame both the system and the personnel. How can anyone expect one PA to see so many patients in one day? I really feel for the staffs of the TMC. They try to get things done as fast as possible, but they are fighting a losing battle. Think about it; that's one PA for every 50 or 60 Soldiers, maybe even more, each day. Would any other family practitioner have that kind of ratio?

The NCO Academy teaches students using 15 to 18 students to teacher ratio. The Infantry Officer Basic and Advanced Courses, when broken down into classes are taught at almost the same ratio. Even clinics at MACH have more than one doctor seeing patients at all clinics. Why are the TMCs left out in the cold?

When this happens, it becomes a readiness and morale problem. Those who aren't sick or injured are back at their jobs disgruntled because they have to pull more of the work load that day or even longer.

Maybe an answer is having certain days for certain illnesses.

Monday could be colds and flu symptoms. Tuesday, Soldiers with fractures would be seen. Pregnancy tests could be administered Wednesday and so on. Would that make the system better? Of course not.

Until something is done to correct the problem, Soldiers will continue to miss work or sit sick or injured because the system is not working. Those who end up at sick call will continue to miss work and those who refuse to go to the TMC will remain injured or ill.

I say thanks to the overworked staffs of the post TMCs. You work under a lot of pressure, you are constantly harassed and ridiculed by the Soldiers needing your help and most likely never get a thank you. It's not entirely your fault, but most who visit your facilities don't take that into consideration.

I plead to anyone who can do something about the sick-call system. It's definitely not accomplishing what it's supposed to in the time it's supposed to. More and more, I see Soldiers sick and injured who stay that way because they refuse to go to sick call. I feel for them as much as I do for the TMC staffs.

What the post needs is a sick-call system that is efficient and takes care of the Soldiers in need of healthcare. It shouldn't take half a work day to go to the TMC for cold medicine or anything else.

TMCs serve Soldiers as quickly as possible

By Lt. Col. Karl Kerchief
Martin Army Community Hospital

Sick call is an age-old tradition line units used in the past to keep accountability of their Soldiers and to make the most efficient use of the time of those who are not sick.

commentary

Priority at the Troop Medical Clinic (TMC) during sick call is based on the severity level of the individual patient and on the unit commander's guidance as to individuals who are involved in time-sensitive training.

It is an unrealistic expectation to have 40 to 60 individuals all show up at almost exactly the same time and expect them to simultaneously be seen and triaged. We all know it is impossible. However, common sense tells us not every Soldier has to wait two to three hours to be seen. Somebody has to be in the door first to be taken care of, and then can be on their way quickly.

An effort is made to make sure the sickest folks do not sit around suffering and infecting all those who follow. It is not the easiest job to sort through folks this way. Many Soldiers feel their problem is more important or more serious than another Soldier's problem, and feel they should be seen on a high priority. Others would actually enjoy not being seen quickly, so they can catch a few minutes of time to themselves.

It is the job of the medic and the medical officer to triage through all the individuals who do arrive at the TMC and to treat or evaluate the sickest Soldiers first to get them over to the hospital for additional studies if needed. This is accomplished not only by the medical officer who is the TMC OIC (usually a physician assistant) but also by the medics who use their screening protocols.

One must count these medic-screeners in the overall picture of providing health care since they do log complaints and symptoms and treat uncomplicated problems via official protocols and under the direct supervision of the PA.

The two to three medics at each TMC now add to the total picture of health care provided for our Soldiers' and bring the "ratio" exactly into line with the accompanying article's mentioned "NCO Academy ratio" of 15 to18 Soldiers per individual providing some level of care — although providing health care and doing training are not exactly comparable items.

There are many ways to decrease the congestion of sick call first thing in the day. Some of these medical requirements, like profile renewals, specific profile re-evaluations, shaving profiles and medication refills are all things that can be moved away from routine sick call. We do those types of things at Fort Benning. This allows for the folks with a new medical problem to have their evaluation first thing in the morning.

Staggered unit sick call is something some posts have and appointed sick call for senior enlisted and officers is also a consideration. Units with their own organic medical assets who successfully do their own battalion aid station sick call also allow for more efficient morning sick call practices.

No system is perfect. Each method of seeing individuals has multiple pro and con arguments. Attempting to fit the method of sick call that works best for the units being served is our goal at Martin Army Community Hospital.

We have recently reviewed reasons Soldiers had to go to the hospital for medications and added some medications to the usual stockage at the TMCs to decrease the amount of time a Soldier is away from training.

If a particular commander of a unit we support has a suggestion that can improve the unit support, we would be happy to entertain it. The unit commander should call the TMC OIC and discuss the proposal. Each TMC has to support multiple units, so an improvement we provide to care for one unit at the expense of another unit would obviously cause some consternation. The overall picture of health care for the entire post has to be kept in focus so we can keep the maximum number of Soldiers training at their places of duty and help them stay fit to train.

Teaching, demonstrating courtesy could help society

By Staff Sgt. Lori Egan

I love the holidays — the snowflakes wafting through the air, the crisp crunch of the snow on the cobblestones while walking to the Christkindlemarkt to shop and sample the gluewein — bundled up in mittens, scarf and a ski parka, skating on thin ice that forms from the shallow puddles of melted snow from yesterday's heat wave. Oh wait — this is Georgia not Germany. Well, the skating on thin ice still applies.

One of the things that amazes me the most about the holidays is how short-tempered people become.

Sure, the stores are crowded and the parking lots are full, but that happens year round. If one of the Disney characters is visiting the mall, parking is impossible by 10 a.m.

Staff Sgt. Lori Egan thinks people should be more courteous and loves the holidays.

commentary

This is supposed to be the season of goodwill toward people and peace on earth.

But, the news on the radio and TV is anything but full of goodwill and peace on earth.

A teacher's classroom was broken into and the coloring books and crayons she planned to give to her students during the holiday party were stolen.

Then there's the 36-year-old mother who attacked the prosecutor because she didn't like the life plus prison sentence her 19-year-old son received for murdering a couple of people in a pool hall.

There's the guy in Florida who kept two children as hostages in a police standoff. He's dead and the reporters said the two children are fine.

My question is this: How can two children be fine when they went through two days of a horrible situation and then the man supposedly taking care of them is shot dead near them?

Regardless of religious preference some of the principles of all religions remain the same:

•Treat people with respect.

•Don't kill, steal or lie.

My mom always said to treat people the way you want to be treated.

Where is the holiday spirit? Do people only share it with family and friends?

What happened to asking nicely for information when calling about the advertised price of a camera or computer?

What about holding a door open for the soda man with the cart full of soda?

What happened to greeting the people you work with with a friendly "hi," and not just "hello."

What happened to please and thank you? These were some of the first words our parents taught us. How can they be forgotten so easily?

Courtesy and kindness should be common throughout the year, but if you are a novice, then it is probably best to start out slow and practice during the holidays.

Holiday: Offers things to do

Fort Benning."

This is the 18th annual Operation Holiday, which is sponsored by the Chattahoochee Valley-Fort Benning Chapter of the Association of the U.S. Army (AUSA).

Scheduled to speak at the opening ceremony are Columbus Mayor Bobby Peters and Phenix City Mayor Sammy Howard, Post Chief of Staff Col. Lawrence K. White Jr. and Congressman Mac Collins. Miss Columbus Amy Swanson will also sing holiday songs.

Operation Holiday began in 1980 at the request of the Commanding General of Fort Benning. It was originally designed for basic trainees but was changed to provide activities for single Soldiers and unaccompanied married Soldiers who are away from their families this holiday season, said Master Sgt. Rodney Tiller, Community Relations NCOIC.

"For most Soldiers who are away from home, it makes them feel like they are at home during the Christmas season," Tiller said. "It makes a stress-free environment for the Soldiers."

Activities include: Atlanta Hawks basketball in Atlanta today and Monday, the Columbus Cottonmouths vs. the Huntsville Channel Cats at 7:30 p.m. Tuesday, the Blue and Grey game in Montgomery, Ala. at noon Thursday, the Cottonmouths vs. the Nashville Ice Flyers at 7:30 Dec. 26, a trip to the Hollywood Connection Dec. 29, the Cottonmouths vs. the Fayetteville Force at 7:30 Dec. 30, the Cottonmouths vs. the Memphis River Kings at 7:30 Dec. 31 and the Peach Bowl (Clemson vs. Auburn) at the Georgia Dome at 3 p.m. Jan. 2.

AUSA will also sponsor a bowling tournament at 1 p.m. Tuesday and Wednesday at the Main Post Bowling Center.

All of these events are free for Soldiers. Soldiers interested in participating in these events should contact their unit's first sergeant.

Operation Holiday will run until Jan. 2.

DITY moves will soon offer movers more money

By Gerry J. Gilmore
Army News Service

The Army would like more Soldiers to move themselves during stateside to stateside permanent change of station moves and it is willing to pay them more to do so.

In January, the Army is starting a pilot program that increases the do-it-yourself (DITY) moving allowance now available to Soldiers by 15 percent. The pilot program will be run through transportation offices Department of Defense-wide until March 1999 for Soldiers on permanent change of station orders who want to make a DITY move.

Changes made in the Joint Federal Travels Regulations authorize the Army to increase the DITY allowance from the current 80 percent of what it would cost the government to move household goods by contractor to 95 percent.

The DITY move increase under the pilot program is a win-win situation for the individual Soldier and the Army, said Brig. Gen. Boyd E. King, the Army's Director for Transportation, Energy and Troop Support within the Office of the Deputy Chief of Staff for Logistics.

"(The DITY move) is one of the options we offer our Soldiers to move their household goods from one duty station to another," King said. "Soldiers go out and make the arrangements to rent a truck, load their furniture and move to a new duty station themselves without the Army going out and contracting with movers or packers.

"The advantage for Soldiers is they (move) according to their schedules and pack items the way they want to. For the Army, liability is reduced; Soldiers accept the responsibility for any damages (that may occur during DITY moves)."

DITY moves can also save government dollars by avoiding storage costs and additional charges required by many moving companies, King said.

"For instance, if you're moving into a townhouse that has three floors, that extra floor is an extra charge, because the normal charge is for two floors," he said. "Or, if you have something that is very heavy, like a piano, there is an extra charge for that. None of these (costs to the government) are in effect (during DITY moves) because the Soldier is providing the labor.

"DITY moves are better (financially) for the government, but it is a good deal for the Soldier, too."

Spc. Aaron Kerr, formerly of 3rd Ranger Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment, and his wife Kate made a DITY move in October. Kerr is en route to Korea, and Kate decided to move out of their government quarters to live with her parents in Smiths, Ala.

"If I had to do it again, I would probably just have the military do it," she said. "We have a new baby and I'm going to school full-time, so it would have made it easier for someone else to do it.

But I do think the increase to 95 percent is really good for those people who have the time to do it themselves."

"We are expecting the number of DITY moves to increase," said Linda Kelley, supervisor of the shipment unit, Transportation, Fort Benning. "We know the increase will be made sometime in January, but so far nothing is in concrete. Right now we have two briefings daily for people doing DITY moves and the briefings are at capacity or near capacity."

Last year, Soldiers made about 13,000 DITY moves in conjunction with permanent change of station orders, compared to around 200,000 government-contracted moves completed during the same period, King said, who added that DITY moves aren't for everyone.

"If you have 10 crates or 18,000 pounds of household goods, then a DITY move probably isn't the way to go," he said. "But, for Soldiers who are just starting out with their families, it makes an attractive package."

Soldiers who choose to make DITY moves enjoy more control in the moving process, King said, and after the first of the year, they will also receive a financial incentive under the pilot program. It all adds up to improved quality of life.

"We're excited about giving Soldiers more options," King said. "A Soldier may have considered doing a DITY move that was funded at 80 percent and said 'I can't afford to do this.' Starting in January, that same Soldier may be able to afford it.

"On the back end, the Army will save money on storage costs and (damage) claims. And, a happy Soldier is more productive."

Test data from the pilot DITY program will be used by the Army and other services to determine benefits to service members, cost savings and feasibility of permanent implementation.

"The pilot program has every chance of being permanently adopted," King said. "As we gather our data, I think we're going to be able to demonstrate just how good this is for the Soldier, and cost-neutral or somewhat less expensive for the Army."

Area middle school students visit SOA

By Spc. Alberto Betancourt
School of Americas

Armed with questions, 40 students from Blackmon Road Middle School in Columbus visited the U.S. Army School of the Americas Dec. 8.

Joyce Gosha, a teacher with the middle school's gifted student program, said the field trip was taken because her students had recently read a lot of controversy regarding SOA in the local newspaper. They wanted to see what is taught here.

"They wanted to know if SOA was really responsible for some of the terrorism in Latin America," she said. "They, as well as their parents, had many concerns."

Gosha felt the students needed first hand information in order to clarify many of the myths they've read about.

"We're very fortunate to have a school of such magnitude right in our area," she said. "I wanted the students, who are very bright themselves, to come to the school, ask questions and form their opinion on facts, not fear."

Nicole Marshall, a 13-year-old seventh-grader, said she was interested in learning about who attended the school and what they were being taught.

"I learned that students attending SOA come from different Latin American countries to learn U.S. Army doctrine," she said. "I understand now what they learn here really helps them when they return to their country."

One of the reasons for the trip was an editorial written by one of the students for the middle school newspaper.

"My mother works at SOA," said Alan Alexander, 14-year-old eighth-grader at Blackmon Road Middle School. "I wanted my fellow students to know that the school does not teach students to become assassins. They teach what the Army teaches, not all that stuff the SOA Watch tells everybody."

Alexander said he was content with the trip because he's sure his classmates now have a better understanding as to what the school really teaches and they no longer have to doubt its integrity.

"I think this was a great opportunity for the students and parents to visit SOA and learn what it's all about," said Kathleen Dean, one of three parents accompanying the students on the field trip.

Dean said the SOA representatives were very cooperative and answered all the questions they were asked.

"I'm glad I came today," she said. "I now understand why America supports the school's program."

Anthrax: Army to vaccinate Soldiers

such a program into effect."

The vaccinations will begin only after the Pentagon is convinced of the safety, potency and purity of anthrax vaccination stockpiles and after the Army, as executive agent, sets up an effective personnel tracking system. Cohen also appointed Dr. Gerald Burrow of Yale University to review and assess the plan before implementation.

"We owe it to our people to move ahead with this immunization plan, but we also want to make sure that our overall immunization program is safe and effective," Cohen said.

Widely used in the United States since the early 1970s by livestock workers and veterinarians, the anthrax vaccine is FDA-licensed and exhibits fewer side effects than flu or typhoid vaccines, senior DoD officials said. The military currently immunizes people working in at-risk jobs and some 3,000 personnel assigned to special operations units, the Army Technical Escort Unit and the Marine Chemical-Biological Initial Response Force.

Anthrax immunizations consist of a series of six inoculations over an 18-month period, followed by annual boosters. Although protection levels increase as shots in the series are given, full protection requires the entire six-shot series, officials said.

"This is an important new dimension to overall force protection," Deputy Secretary of Defense John Hamre said. "The anthrax vaccination will join other immunizations we already give everyone in the military."

Programs available for the holiday blues

By Susie Kim
Editorial assistant

For many people, the holiday season is happy and joyous. But, for some, the holidays are a time of sadness and depression.

This depression, commonly known as the "holiday blues," is not a clinical depression but an increased awareness of depression that existed before the holidays, said Lt. Col. James L. Spinelli, chief of Psychiatry for Martin Army Community Hospital.

Because of the emphasis placed on the holidays and happiness that is associated with it, the unhappiness becomes more apparent, Spinelli said.

"It is not an indication of serious mental illness nor does the holiday blues happen spontaneously," Spinelli said, "But it is a real entity that should be treated accordingly."

According to Spinelli, some of the symptoms of the holiday blues are lack of concentration, lack of interest, and forgetfulness caused by distractive mind.

Holiday blues are caused by the stress that comes with the holidays, said Chaplain (Maj.) Bud Rupel, chief of Chaplain Family Life Ministries Center. People tend to focus on the wrong things and forget the real reason for celebrating the holidays.

"Make the holidays more simplistic," Rupel said. "Instead of concentrating on what you are going to get, or what you are going to give, focus on the real reason for the holidays."

According to Rupel, the suicide rate does not increase during the holidays. Holiday blues does not increase the suicide, but it can be the cause for it, said Rupel.

In a military environment, most Soldiers are away from their home for the first time or are deployed elsewhere and can't spend the holidays with family members, said Rupel.

Rupel, himself, was away from his family during the holidays when he was deployed for the Desert Storm and felt the loneliness of being away from his family.

As Rupel spent his Christmas in the desert, the battalion held a Christmas service for the Soldiers. Rupel felt the cohesion of the battalion as he watched the Soldiers sing "Silent Night" and saw tears that coursed down their cheeks.

Rupel encourages unit activities during the holidays and "Adopt a Soldier Program," which allows single Soldiers to spend time with Soldiers with families.

If a Soldier is away from home, Rupel suggests that Soldiers bring personal items such as pictures, cards, and things that remind them of home. He also encourages families to send Soldiers "care packets."

But it is not only the Soldiers who experience the holiday blues. Family members can also experience it. Rupel encourages other families to invite these family members into their own holiday celebration.

"Although the holidays are a time for the family to get together and it is difficult to invite a whole family," Rupel said, "extend that family a hand and make your family bigger for that day."

People who are battling the holiday blues or any kind of depression can also get support from the Chaplain Family Life Ministries Center, said Rupel.

Rupel also encourages Soldiers who are battling the holiday blues to talk to their chaplain.

The Center offers counseling by Army Chaplains and Counseling interns. There are also group programs available at the center.

2nd Lt. Craig Childs takes aim at a defender as students from Company B, 2nd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment execute a culmination attack.

Students complete final exercise

By 2nd Lt. Chris Ballard
2nd Battalion, 11th Infantry REgiment

The second lieutenants of Company B, 2nd Battalion, (Infantry Officer Basic Course) (IOBC) 11th Infantry Regiment, completed their final field exercise Dec. 12, and now begin preparations for graduation from IOBC. The four-day field exercise focused on continuous operations culminating in a company-sized attack on the McKenna Military Operation on Urban Terrain (MOUT) site.

"This field exercise is designed to teach you how to lead troops when you're tired, hungry and miserable," Capt. Dan Wilson, platoon trainer for first platoon and officer in charge of the culmination exercise told his students. The students generally ate on the move as the opportunity arose and slept two to four hours each night. The weather also did its part to add to the general misery, with rain and temperatures at times reaching the low 30s.

Each day of the exercise brought one or two new missions, each with a new student chain of command for the lieutenants to learn and practice their leadership techniques. Missions included defense from battle positions, movements to contact, ambushes, raids and deliberate attacks.

On the third day of the exercise, the new officers were transported by helicopter to an assembly area, where they were given the operations order for the culmination attack on the MOUT site. After a few hours of rehearsal and preparation, the company conducted a tactical road march to an objective rally point (ORP), where the student platoon leaders conducted their reconnaissance of the MOUT objective.

Meanwhile, the other students waited in the perimeter of the ORP, pulling security and trying their best to stay somewhat warm. Looking down the line at his students, Wilson smiled. "It's a beautiful thing," he said, "to see them doing push ups on the perimeter to stay warm. This is perfect weather for a culmination exercise."

Around midnight Dec. 12th, the company launched their attack. The cadre of Company B tried to make the training as realistic as possible by assessing casualty cards and priority of medical evacuation to the simulated wounded. After the battle, the students were transported by helicopter once more back to the company area, where they did a final weapons cleaning and recovery, and started preparations for their graduation.

The majority of students will be attending follow-on schools such as ranger, airborne, and the Bradley Leader's Course in the coming months following their graduation from IOBC.

Master Fitness School students stretchout after going through battle focus physical training at Doughboy Stadium Dec. 17.

Course teaching Army to stay in shape

By Susie Kim
Editorial assistant

Trying to teach the Army about physical fitness and health can be overwhelming for the 13 instructors for the Master Fitness Program.

Despite the limited number of instructors available and the time allowed to train students, the program is well efficient and growing continuously, said Stephen Van Camp, master fitness trainer course director.

The Master Fitness Program is a two-week course designed to teach students how to effectively plan, organize and execute a physical fitness program, Van Camp said.

"The master fitness program trainer course is to help NCO's and officer's in leadership positions to plan fitness program geared toward their mission," Van Camp said. "The school looks at how the unit is going to apply physical fitness into their training and prepare the unit for the worse case scenario, such as deployment or war.

According to Van Camp, the requirement students have to meet are high. This assures only the best quality students attend the course.

The students must have at least a 240 physical training average, with 70 percent in each event, and at least 110 GT score. The students are expected to meet the high standards from the start of the program.

During the two weeks, the students are graded on their physical performance and are evaluated on their leadership skills, Van Camp said.

The students are also taught the definition of physical fitness and then apply that definition to implement a physical fitness program. The students must present a fitness program and are evaluated on the ability to organize and lead the physical training program.

"First they are evaluated on their physical fitness ability, then the students are evaluated on their ability to lead and their knowledge based on the final exam," Van Camp said.

According to Van Camp, the program is expanding rapidly throughout the Army despite the limited number of instructors available. The instructors travel from base to base and teach the master fitness program to the Soldiers that can not attend the one at Fort Benning.

The Master Fitness program is also looking toward the Internet as a mean to reach more soldiers. According to Van Camp, the program's goal to have at least one Soldier per company to attend the master fitness program is far from reaching its goal, but hopes to reach its goal by the next decade.

Study supports unison training

Army News Service

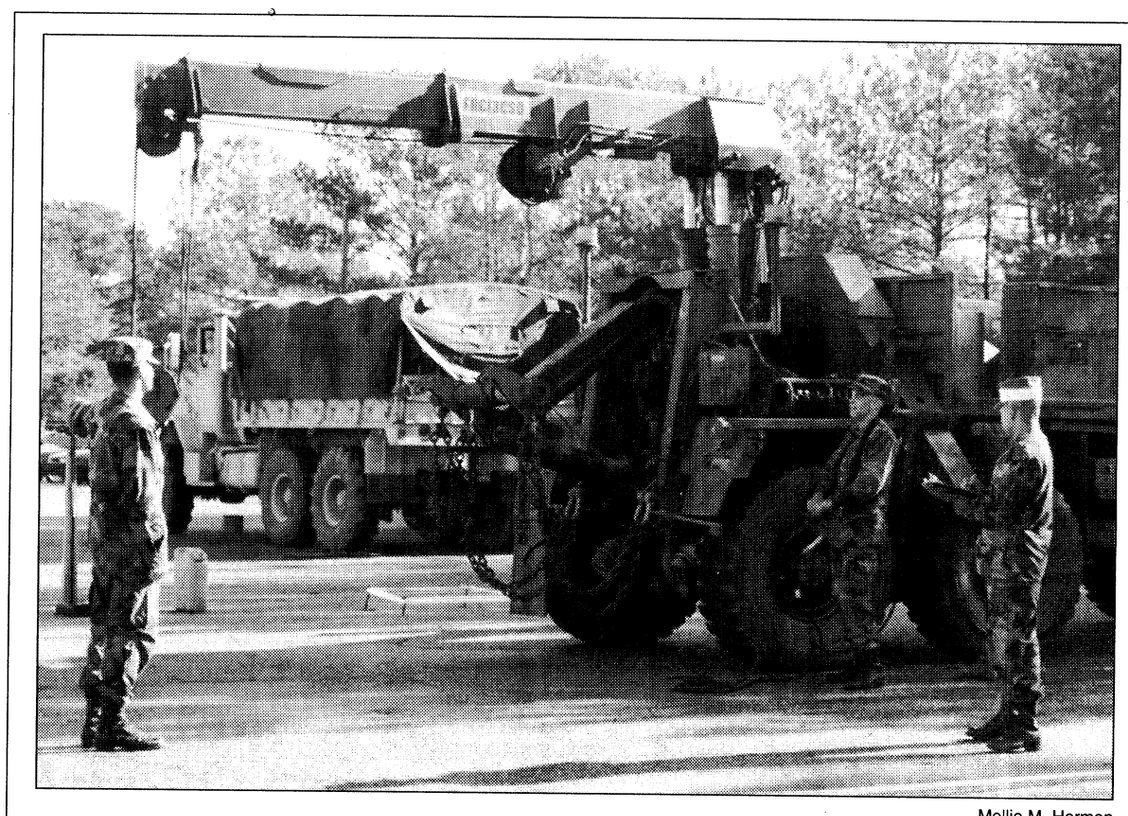
WASHINGTON — Secretary of Defense William S. Cohen instructed the military services to assess proposals to strengthen entry level and advanced training. The recommendations, submitted by the Federal Advisory Committee on Gender-Integrated Training and Related Issues, are designed to improve the effectiveness of military training. The panel was chaired by retired Senator Nancy Kassebaum Baker.

"It is clear from the report that the panel shares my determination to make sure that military training is fair, demanding and effective," Cohen said.

The panel's report strongly supports today's gender-integrated force.

In its six-month review, the panel assessed basic and advance training programs to insure that they are producing an effective, disciplined and ready force. The panel emphasized the need to continue gender-integrated training, but it found several areas in which training for male and female recruits could be improved.

Cohen asked the military services to "review these recommendations and report back to me within 90 days with their assessment, to include the manpower and personnel implications and the costs that might be associated with their implementation."



The panel studied the full training cycle, including recruiting, basic training and advanced skills training. Its recommendations cover the training cadre, housing of recruits, fitness programs and follow-on advanced training.

Among the several recommendations made for recruiting, the panel proposed better preparing recruits mentally and physically for basic training. It also recommended ways to improve the training cadre. It recommended that physical training requirements be toughened and made more uniform throughout the services. The panel also suggested that emphasis on discipline be carried over from basic to advanced training. The panel recommended that values training be incorporated into all initial entry training programs and that training get more resources.

During visits to training installations, the panel concluded that men and women should be housed in separate barracks and train separately at the operational unit level-the Army platoon, Navy division, Air Force flight. In the Marine Corps men and women live, eat and train separately. In the Army, Navy and the Air Force, men and women live in separate floors or bays of the same barracks and train together at all levels.

The panel believes that in integrated barracks a higher rate of disciplinary problems reduces training effectiveness. The panel also found that integration at the operational unit level is not working effectively.

The panel recommended that gender-integrated training continue for field training, technical training and academic classroom work. This would happen at the Army company level or by pairing two Navy divisions or Air Force flights.

Soldiers get tested during the Truck Rodeo Dec. 10.

Rodeo tests unit's driving skills

By Mollie M. Herman
Special to the Bayonet©

Soldiers from the 104th Transportation Company put their skills to the test Dec. 10 in a "truck rodeo."

"The truck rodeo is a way of bringing all of the Soldiers together for a little friendly competition on a level playing field," said 2nd Lt. Delrick Whitehorn, who acted as an evaluator for the competition.

Soldiers are selected to compete in the rodeo one of two ways, either chosen by their chain of command or they are the winner of platoon practice competitions.

"Soldiers are always bragging that they are the best driver in their platoon and this gives them a chance to come out and really show their stuff," Whitehorn said.

There is a total of nine events in which the Soldiers compete. A few include the Serpentine Course, which is described as the most challenging.

"The Soldier must drive the truck, with the attached trailer and weave it through three barrels, ending up centered between two pylons," Whitehorn said.

Another event is parallel parking, where Soldiers maneuver their trucks into parking spots without hitting curbs. Other skills tested were truck clearance in tight spots, docking ability for loading and unloading and identification of maintenance problems.

The scoring is determined by the actual tasks of each event. For example, if the event calls for backing the truck through a designated area, points will be deducted for any pylon hit, any time the Soldier must pull forward to realign his truck or if he goes over the allotted time limit.

There is a winner in each of the nine events, based on the highest score obtained. These winners received a battalion Certificate Of Achievement, signed by the battalion Commander Lt. Col. Michael G. Bettez. There is one overall winner of the competition, the Soldier with the highest combined score. This Soldier received a certificate, a four-day pass and a battalion coin.

The Soldiers in attendance enjoyed the day.

"I think it's a challenging way to test our skills," said Spec. Tyronnia White, a competitor in the rodeo.

This year the competition was battalion-wide. "Next year we hope to expand and make it brigade-wide," Whitehorn said.

NBC training hasn't lost importance

By Pfc. Carrier L. Fortner
McClellan News

For decades the threat of nuclear, biological and chemical warfare has been in existence; and the Army has trained Chemical Corps Soldiers ready and willing to defend its personnel against this threat.

Soldiers who enlist in the Chemical Corps are trained for 18 rigorous weeks. During One Station Unit Training (OSUT), Soldiers learn a myriad of crucial tasks including decontamination, reconnaissance and smoke employment.

As part of their decontamination training, these Soldiers learn how to perform decon on both personnel and equipment. This training is particularly important to protect Soldiers from chemical agents which could result in injury and possibly death.

"The use of chemical weapons is very likely on today's battlefield," said 1st Sgt. William J. Pass, Co. C, 82nd Chemical Battalion.

"Our Soldiers must be prepared to perform decontamination because of this reality."

In the case of contamination by chemical agents, a Soldier will go to what is known as Mission Oriented Protective Posture (MOPP) — special gear created to protect the individual from these harmful agents.

"MOPP gear can reduce a Soldier's effectiveness in combat," said Capt. Douglas W. Wishart, commander, Co. C, 82nd Chem. Bn. "Decontamination is key to ensuring Soldiers do not become casualties and that their combat effectiveness is restored as soon as possible."

Soldiers are taught two separate types of decontamination.

The first, called operational decontamination, allows Soldiers and vehicles to be decontaminated; however, Soldiers must remain in MOPP gear because a chance exists that chemical agents are lingering.

Thorough decontamination is the second, and is performed when the traces of chemical agents are gone from the air.

New division design scheduled to unveil in February

By John Grady
Army News Service

EL PASO, Texas —The Army expects the modern battlefield to more resemble a checkerboard than a chessboard where flexibility is the key to success where "space is a key adjunct." Gen. William Hartzog, the commanding general of the Army's Training and Doctrine Command, told a special space and missile defense symposium meeting the Army expects to unveil its new division design in February that will pay close attention to air defense.

"Deep, close and near are relative terms," he told the 400 attendees at the Association of the United States Army gathering. Hartzog said he expects the battlefield of 2025 to more resemble a kaleidoscope. He was citing results from two Advanced Warfighting experiments conducted by the Army this year and also some of the insights gained in the war games of the Army After Next.

He describes today's Army as the "Army of excellence" and expects the Army by 2010 to be a mentally agile armed force enjoying information dominance and by 2025 it will need to be as physically agile as it is mentally.

Specifically, "logistics, the supply and sustaining systems have got to be a lot better than they are today," he said.

In the warfighting experiments, "we built a force that doesn't look like anything else." The Army found in the Task Force XXI experiment in March in the National Training Center in particular the "picture (received from communications satellites and sensors) was so clear that a 40-year-old's reaction was 'that can't be true' and time was lost." Additionally, all the experiments and games showed the information system could be based in space told "us what worked, what didn't work and where we need to go." As an example of what didn't work and how it was fixed through partnering with industry,

Hartzog offered the example of radios designed to transmit both digital data and voice. Everything worked fine under laboratory conditions; in the field, the 10-second delay between switching over from digital to voice was devastating.

By working closely with industry, that delay was cut to one second, "the time it takes you to pick up the phone and all 1,000 radios were fixed in five weeks and one day," he said.

Summing up the lessons from the desert, situational awareness is a force multiplier, 85 percent of the equipment worked better or as expected and about another 10 percent have been adapted. Additionally, organization design worked well. The answers to those questions mean that about 3,000 Soldiers can come out of the present 18,000 in heavy armored divisions.

In the Division Advanced Warfighting Experiment at Fort Hood in November, "we matured to the point that we have 2010 command and control at division level."

The Army hopes to field its Division XXI by 2000 and its redesigned corps, which will be III Corps, by 2004.

The Army After Next war games are testing a concept of using "quick striking 5,000-Soldier task forces that are far more agile than what we have now and able to sustain themselves." While service distinctions and pride will remain in 2025, Hartzog said the relationship "may be interdependence rather than jointness with the other services."

Hartzog said the Army and the other services have to forge "a consensus on doctrine that is joint and multinational in nature and interagency as well, to do that we have to get past all the discussion and budget gnawing over resources to be joint."

He added internet training "with up to 40 different stations working together to do training will be a new way to develop leaders. That's distance learning. The technology is not a challenge to the youth of today."

For the Army as a whole, "we need to invigorate the schoolhouse. We're starting on this. We offered courses to Soldiers in the Sinai, Bosnia and the Pacific. We did this through space."

By using space-based systems, the Army can "sustain the quality of training in the schoolhouse with fewer people and fewer resources." Hartzog cited the success in the 4th Infantry Division, the Army's Experimental Force, in linking simulation to field training to company training.

Does all this mean the United States will be fielding a cyber Soldier?

Hartzog said "the answer is clearly and unequivocally 'no.' There are limits to information warfare. We saw this in the experiment at the NTC when the forces came in contact. But information warfare can work with the warrior ethic? There are no bayonet studs on a computer."

Adding, "none of this new technology would work if the individual Soldier doesn't say 'I want it.' The generation of Soldiers dealing with this change are more aggressive than those of leading the change. They are pressing us."

The theme of the symposium, held in cooperation with the Army's Space and Missile Defense Command is "Supporting the Warfighter, Today and Tomorrow."

Technology's future combat role may make battlefields more expanded

By John Grady
Army News Service

EL PASO, Texas — The senior officer in charge of looking at the Army's needs in the immediate future sees a battlefield covering 500 by 250 kilometers and a place "where what matters is to enable a commander to stay ahead of the enemy and one fight ahead of the enemy" on that battlefield.

Maj. Gen. William S. Wallace, commanding general of the 4th Infantry Division, the Army's Experimental Force, told 400 attendees at a symposium on space supporting warfighters that while "digital technology provides situational awareness. It doesn't necessarily provide situational understanding."

Additionally, every new capability brings new vulnerabilities. "Overreliance on JSTARS and UAVs (airborne intelligence gathering) over human intelligence was quickly known by the Opposing Force and exploited." These were some of the lessons the Experimental Force learned in advanced Warfighting Experiments at the National Training Center and at Fort Hood in 1997.

Challenges will be to provide supplies to fast-moving forces and to "maintain command and control on the move is essential," Wallace said. This means being able to quickly position and reposition forces. It also means there needs to be collaborative efforts between all services on this non-linear battlefield. "You've got to expect the fight in the rear area (and vulnerable to attack) will be non-linear as well."

The Army will need reliable, mobile, secure communications capable of handling high-volumes over wide band widths; multi-source intelligence providing a clear picture of enemy capability and intent and increasing Soldier survivability by predicting enemy missile launches.

Editor's note: Grady is the director of communications with the Association of the U.S. Army.

MACH wins award for helping community

By Capt. Mark A. James
Martin Army Community Hospital

The staff of the Physical Therapy Section, Martin Army Community Hospital (MACH), was recently awarded first place for their presentation at the 8th U.S. Army Health Promotion Conference for their contribution to lowering the propensity for musculoskeletal injuries in the Infantry Training Brigade (ITB) and the 3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division (Mechanized) at Fort Benning.

Capt. William Maggart, MACH physical therapist, was tasked to formulate a commanders' guide to training injury prevention for the Fort Benning Precommand and First Sergeants Courses.

Conducting two separate studies over a total of 11 months, he collected data through sick-call sign-in sheets at troop medical clinics (TMC) and then processed the information through a spreadsheet that he had created.

Injuries with the highest rates were targeted for command intervention.

Enlisting the aid of the AMEDD's Center for Health Promotion and Preventive Medicine and (CHPPM), Maggart contacted Lt. Col. Shirley Newcomb, CHPPM's consultant at Fort McPherson, Ga.

She organized a formal medical records review and site visits by CHPPM epidemiology staff at the ITB in Feb. 1997. The records review and the data collected for the previous 11 months correlated nicely.

In a June 1997 meeting between staff from CHPPM, the ITB, MACH and the U.S. Army Physical Fitness School (USPFS), the goal of reducing these injuries and a plan to meet the goal were developed.

Col. Everett Newcomb, commander of MACH, formed a committee including Col. Jeanne Picariello, USPFS commandant; Newcomb; Maj. Craig Seto, Primary Care Sports Medicine physician; Maj. Patrick Fernicoloa, Orthopedic surgeon; Maj. Carol Hobbs, physical therapist; Maj. Scott Hampton, ITB; and, Capt. Julie Ferguson, occupational therapist.

The committee developed the following four-pronged approach:

•Prevention tactics that include education and modification of training regimens. These include menus of physical training activities, which compliment training events planned for later in the day that will reduce overuse injuries;

•A positive profile form that will be easy for sick-call personnel to use and will provide drill sergeants with specific exercises injured Soldiers can do to maintain maximum fitness during their period of recovery;

•An algorithm or clinical pathway for primary care providers, which will provide guidance for and expedite the referral of injured soldiers for specialty care; and

•A surveillance instrument was developed that units can use to track injuries and that will provide commanders hard data on injury rates and injury prone training activities.

The four major elements of the program were implemented at the ITB between September and November 1997.

Early 1998, Maggart said he and the CHPPM staff will repeat the data collection process to determine if any change occurred in the rates of physical training injuries to determine the effectiveness of the intervention.

Maggart said if the program provides a positive reduction in injuries, the model will be implemented in other units on Fort Benning. The final goal is to export the program to other training posts Army-wide, reducing physical training injuries and maximizing the readiness of the fighting force.

ACAP ends another year assisting Soldiers leaving Army

Army Career and ALumni Program

"Thousands of separating Soldiers have been assisted by an experienced Army Career and Alumni Program (ACAP) Center staff during 1997 and have successfully transitioned to civilian life and civilian jobs," said Harold Ericksen, Fort Benning's ACAP Center manager.

ACAP opened its door in October 1991 and continues today with a staff of seven. The ACAP Center offers a centralized location in Soldiers' Plaza for separation information, services and assistance.

Counseling duties are performed by Frank Casey, Chick Eagle, Debbie Henshaw, Diane Ermi and Mary Reardon. Office management and administration are performed by Betty Johnson and Cynthia Anderson.

"Your Fort Benning ACAP Center pledges to provide excellent customer service to each separating Soldier during 1998 and to continuously improve on an outstanding record of performance," Ericksen said.

For ACAP information, please visit Building 2634 in Soldiers' Plaza or call 545-2308 or 545-2309.

7th graders write holiday stories for kindergartners

By Staff Sgt. Lori Egan
Bayonet editor

"T'was the night ..."

"No that lead's been taken," an anguished seventh-grader said to the coauthor. "We need something with punch, something to grab attention, something that shouts 'This is for you.'"

This might have been the scenario recently when Faith Middle School seventh-graders learned to write for beginning readers with an English class project.

The assignment for the seventh-graders was to interview and then personalize a holiday story for kindergartners at Dexter Elementary School.

Anne Trawick has given the assignment every year for the past 10 years.

"Each year I swear it will be the last time," she said. "But the students really get a lot out of the assignment."

Trawick's students agreed.

"The class learned about responsibility with this project," Kari Eldridge said, "because we had kindergartners expecting the books. The project was very time-consuming, but a lot of fun. We probably made five different drafts. We had to keep going over and over the story to make sure we got our grammar right. We kept editing the story."

"I wanted to teach the class to develop their editing skills, their proof-reading skills, their storytelling skills," Trawick said. "I started to assign the big books because it is an authentic way for the children to use their writing skills — not something contrived by the teacher.

"It is an awesome task to reach the deadlines. With deadlines there is a lot of pressure. The students have small children counting on them."

Juanita Patrick also assigned the project to her seventh-grade English class. She said her goals for the students with the assignment included incorporating literary elements into a well-written story.

"I wanted them to learn the importance of writing a well-organized story and using the editing process correctly. I wanted the students to learn to use the writing process, the hands-on experience in being able to incorporate technology at the same time," Juanita Patrick said, "while identifying the literary elements such as the characters, theme, plot, setting and types of conflict."

Trawick said the literary elements of a story remain the same, regardless of writing or reading it.

"The elements of a story are the same no matter whether writing it or reading it," Trawick said. "You still have to cover those elements — these stories had to have conflict."

"My story was about a young child by the name of Darryl and he's going to the North Pole to help Santa deliver all of the toys," said seventh-grader Michael Drigger.

Writing the books helped the seventh-graders learn grammar and punctuation and how to use computers, Drigger said.

"We had to do the grammar — the commas, the punctuation, and then we had to come up with the story," Drigger said.

When the big books were presented to the kindergartners Tuesday, both age groups were appreciative of the effort the project took to complete.

Staff Sgt. Lori Egan
Austin Patterson looks at Camille Garcia's big book Tuesday.

"We had to write the story," Adrienne Howell explained to six-year-old Doneshia Williams. "Then we made the pictures and then we colored the pictures."

Trawick said the project became more involved than the students expected.

"When the class started the project, they thought it would be a breeze, two-weeks of sheer fun," Trawick said. "The students learned the project was actually very time-consuming and included the need to change the words for the audience."

Part of the difficulty in the assignment was making sure the children would understand the words, Madison Kniskern said.

"We gained self-confidence from the assignment," Drigger said. "We can write a book with a minimum amount of errors and we learned most mistakes can be fixed."

Another thing the students learned, Patrick said, was that good writers go back and rewrite in order to produce a perfect piece of writing.

MCBRIDE ELEMENTARY SCHOOL

Children present Elves tale

By Mollie M. Herman
Special to the Bayonet©

The Christmas holiday was in full swing Tuesday night at McBride Elementary School.

Peggy Anders, McBride's music teacher of eight years, helped to put on the annual Christmas pageant. Parents, teachers and friends gathered this year to see the the second and third grade music classes perform their production of The Elve's Impersonator.

"It's a play that includes a lot of exciting music from the 1950's that really gets you into the holiday spirit." Anders said.

The story is short and simple but it carries a lesson about the differences in people and the need to accept these differences to exist peacefully.

The play begins with an elf named Elfis, played by Michael Mullens, who impersonates rock-n-roll legend Elvis Presley. Elfis acts like him, talks like him and even sings like him. The other elves find this behavior odd and soon begin to tease Elfis.

Santa and Mrs. Claus, along with a herd of reindeer, explain to the elves how wrong it is to tease others just because they are a little bit different. As the elves begin to see the error of their way, they apologize to Elfis and in a big celebration of song and dance, he becomes a special part of their elf family.

Anders said a lot of work goes into the preparation of a Christmas pageant. Practice began in late October. The children who had singing parts practiced twice a week during their music period, while the children who had speaking parts devoted practice time after school.

"The children have worked very hard, but they really enjoy it," Anders said. "You can get a feeling of Christmas spirit just by looking at the expressions on their faces."

Parents are also help during the preparation of school events. Denise Glenn, volunteer and mother, helps out whenever needed in school events such as the Fall Festival, classroom parties and the Christmas pageant.

This year the Christmas pageant is extra special for Glenn because her daughter Alisha is playing the role of one of the elves.

"The kids really have a great time. They picked up on their lines rather quickly and even when they aren't practicing, you can catch them singing or dancing around," Glenn said.

Parents lend hand in making gingerbread men, education

By Susie Kim
Editorial assistant

Sgt. Marcus Hood stood out in his green and black BDU's against the bright colored walls decorated with pictures and alphabets.

Hood and his wife Camille were two of the seven parents participating and helping create a gingerbread man out of felt cloth, an activity planned for 25 kindergartners by Velinda Hickey at McBride Elementary School.

Hood believes that it is important for parents to participate in the child's school activities.

"It's important to let the children know that you are interested in their school activities," Hood said. "It helps children interact better in school and also helps out the teacher."

By knowing what the students are learning, parents can reinforce what the children learned during the day and help with the troubled part, Hickey said.

It's also exciting for the children to see their parents in the classroom, she said, because the children know the parents are making time for them.

Hickey said she is aware most parents have jobs and cannot make it to these planned activities, but encourages participation at home.

She advises parents to ask the children what they have learned that day, to check book bags for letters sent home from the school, to build a relationship with a teacher and to make an effort to communicate with the teacher.

This is important in early child education, she said.

"Early child education has made a drastic improvement," Hickey said. "It has become more academically challenging. The students are learning how to use the computer, to type on the keyboard, and even learning how to spell gingerbread man."

According to Hickey, she uses what is called thematic teaching to teach the students, which incorporates all the school subjects into one lesson.

"We tie in the science with the gingerbread such as smelling, touching and seeing the gingerbread, Hickey said, "and tie in the math with counting the gingerbread."

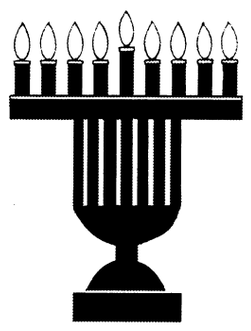
Holiday celebrates triumphs of freedom

By Chaplain (Capt.) Chana Timoner
The Infantry Center Chapel

Hanukkah is one of only a handful of holy days for which we have a clear historical grasp.

reflections

It is famous to the military community as the first recorded guerrilla war in history. Hanukkah leads back to a priestly Hasmonean family and their struggles to be freed from the religious tyranny of the Syrian branch of Alexander the Great's empire. It wasn't the ruler that so irritated the Jews who were living in Judea, but the fact that their king Anticochus Epiphanes declared that all local religions were to be stamped out.



Not to be denied their rights to practice their religion, one man from the town of Modin, with his five sons and a growing band of unhappy dissenters went to live in the Judean caves. Living so close to Jerusalem enabled them to hide well during daylight hours, then to strike at close range at night, earning the name the Maccabees, which means "the hammer" in Hebrew. Some Jews (people from Judea) welcomed the Hellenization and considered it to be an advancement. Those people cooperated with their oppressors.

There are many lessons to be learned here. First, there are always those amongst us who would cooperate with the enemy.

The power of guerrilla warfare was grossly underestimated by the Syrians. The Jews were vastly outnumbered in terms of Soldiers and supplies, yet in the end they were successful.

The Judean inhabitants didn't really care who ruled over them as long as they got their religious freedom.

Today in our country, there is a struggle going on between those who would have prayer in the schools and religious clubs and those who would not. There are constant, ongoing discussions, sometimes heated debates over whether this country was to become a Christian country in the mind of the early colonists. Early letters and sermons show this struggle was because of the oppression of Reformed Christians, Protestants, Jews and Catholics in the Old World. Many of those folks who endured extreme difficulties in coming to this land of opportunity, came precisely because of the need for religious freedom. There are letters and essays written in the early days of this country by people with both sets of opinions.

As is usual in the human condition, sometimes those who fought the hardest against religious oppression in their native land came to America and began colonies with strict religious rules that either excluded or oppressed people of other faiths.

The lessons learned are always discussed after a military action of any type. If only the Syrians had left the Jews to their own religious worship, they could have controlled the politics of the land in peace for a very long time. We have words for this tolerance today. These words are tolerance, respect, inclusion, and sensitivity to those who are not in the majority religion.

The holiday of Hanukkah begins by lighting the first candle on the night of Dec. 23.

Because of Christmas exodus on Sand Hill, there will be a pre-Hanukkah breakfast served Sunday at the Regimental Chapel on Sand Hill. For reservations, call Timoner at 545-2050.

Goodwill, peace are relative with Christmas

By Chaplain (Lt. Col.) William C. Shelnutt IX
Pastor, The Infantry Center Chapel

Christmas was first celebrated in the year 98. Forty years later, it was adopted as a Christian festival.

reflections

It was not until the fifth century that Dec. 25 and Christmas were permanently joined. Before this time, Christmas was celebrated in December, in April, in May, and most frequently in January.

Throughout history, Christmas has been an extraordinary day. Charlemagne was crowned Emperor of the Holy Roman Empire in the Cathedral of Aix-la-Chapelle Christmas Day.

William the Conqueror was crowned King of England Christmas Day in 1066. It is significant that no great battles were fought on Christmas Day.

For centuries, hostile armies ceased their war cries Christmas Day, the anniversary of the advent of Peace on Earth.

The announcement on that first Christmas Day was for peace and goodwill; peace with God, yourself and others and goodwill to all. Yet, from all appearances, this is the busiest time of the year for most. There is so much to do and so little time. The peace of Christmas has been renounced for crowded schedules and frantic paces.

What about goodwill? The next time you are in the Mall, watch peoples' attitudes. You might even see a little pushing and shoving or the rage exhibited over a person who stole another's parking space.

Quick as a flash when the last present is opened and the turkey has been devoured, all attentions turn toward the New Year and change that hated but redeeming word. Hopefully, the right words will cause a change to happen that will correct bad habits and bolster sinking morale over so many things left undone and life out-of-control.

Bring in the New Year with a clean slate and lots of motivation to search for some meaningful encounters with life and its priorities.

Take a few moments and work out a plan with God ensuring your success in the human race. The following ideas can help you focus your mind on the things that really matter. They are: the value of time; the success of perseverance; the pleasure of working; the dignity of simplicity; the worth of character; the power of kindness; the influence of example; the obligation of duty; the wisdom of economy; the virtue of patience; the improvement of talent and the joy of originating.

Epiphany remembers the magi's visit

By Chaplain (Capt.) Jonathan C. Gibbs III
HHC Co., 1st Bn., 11th Inf. Regt.

The feast of Epiphany, celebrated Jan. 6 or on a Sunday between the 2nd and 8th of January, is a Christian festival, which commemorates the visit of the wise men or "magi" to the infant Jesus.

reflections

The word epiphany comes from a Greek word meaning "manifestation."

Contrary to our modern practice of Christmas, which places emphasis solely on the birth of Christ, in the early Church greater attention was paid to the mystery of the Incarnation in a more inclusive sense.

Originally the feast reflected this larger emphasis by commemorating his birth, baptism, the visitation and the working of his first miracle as events which all focused on the revelation and manifestation of the divinity of Christ in his humanity: that God had become a man in the person of Jesus.

By the end of the fourth century as the celebration of Christ's birth came to be observed on December 25, the focus of Epiphany was placed more upon Christ's manifestation to the gentiles as symbolized by the magi.

In sixth century Europe, the 12-day period between Christmas and Epiphany came to be known as the "12 Days of Christmas" and Epiphany came to be commonly called the Feast of the Three Kings.

The eve of the feast day marked the end of the holiday season and was an occasion for celebration.

The bible's account, contained in Matthew 2: 1-12, tells us little about who the magi actually were. The most commonly accepted understanding is that they belonged to a class of counselors and royal advisors found in Persia who specialized in astrology, medicine and natural science.

The idea that they were kings comes from several verses found in the Old Testament (Psalms 71 :10, Isaiah 60:36) but these do not specifically address the context of the magi's visit as it is found in the New Testament.

Similarly, the tradition that there were three of them is only an inference drawn from the fact that they presented the Christ child with three gifts: gold, frankincense and myrrh.

In fact, the Scriptures are silent as to their actual status and number.

What it does tell us is what they did and that is what should concern us most.

When they arrived in Jerusalem they asked:

"Where is he who has been born King of the Jews? For we saw his star in the east, and have come to worship him ... And they came into the house and saw the child with Mary his mother, and they fell down and worshiped him..." (Mathew 2:2,11)

Much modern-day discussion has surrounded the nature of the star they followed.

Was it really a star or a comet? Was it a super-nova? Can it be identified today?

Epiphany should remind us that far more important than questions about the nature of the star is the question of what we do regarding the one to whom the star led.

Epiphany commemorates the promise of God that a Savior has come who will be "for all the nations", for all who will believe and trust in him.

The magi worshiped him.

Do we? Perhaps that's the real reason they've always been called "wise men."

Martial arts master teaches Soldiers self defense

By John W. Peeler
Special to the Bayonet©

Many people say education is a beneficial form of self enhancement. At Troy State University-Fort Benning, the Department of Kinesiology and Health Promotion is taking education one step further by incorporating physical fitness and close range self defense into its curriculum.

The course, conducted on two consecutive weekends, awards five quarter hours for successful completion.

As a part of the course, martial arts master Nak Jun Kim recently served as a guest instructor teaching students a special course in close range martial arts. Kim, a seventh degree black belt in Judo and a sixth degree black belt in Taekwondo is the current Masters National Judo Champion.

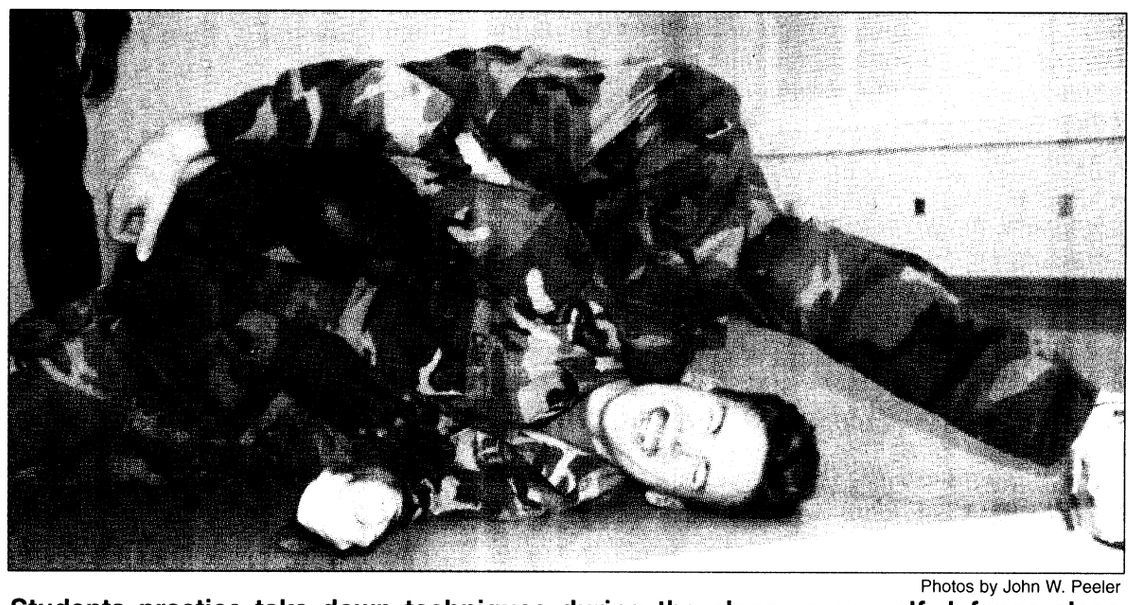
The 40-hour block of instruction in the "Combat for Credit" course included throws, chokes, joint-locks and grappling techniques designed for the combat Soldier.

As a train-the-trainer course, Dr. Ed Thomas, chairman of the Department of Kinesiology and Health Promotion at Troy State University-Fort Benning, said the focus of the course is on basic skills and how to teach them in a mass training environment.

Thomas, also trained in martial arts and physical education, said martial arts helps to maintain the body, mind and emotions and is an important part today's warrior Soldier.

"It is a very pliable and devastating art," Thomas said.

Thomas said not only are these types of classes good for self defense, but they also help in the individual overall physical conditioning program.



Physical education relies on restorative training (training that brings the body to a state of balance and harmony), martial training (techniques that teach offensive and defensive responses to external aggression) and pedagogical training (dealing with individual comfort, health and physical gratification), Thomas said.

"Martial arts is only one of the three major parts of physical education," Thomas said.

Thomas wrote several articles on the subject for Taekwondo Times and related publications.

Thomas said courses like the close range self defense class are taught throughout the year and routinely use guest instructors.

For more information, call 685-9555 or visit the Troy State University Fitness Leadership Office at Building 2614 in Soldiers Plaza.

U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit to be featured on Discovery Channel

USAMU Public Affairs Office

The U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit will be featured on The Discovery Channel's Discover Magazine television program in January. USAMU's Service Rifle Team, the Action Shooting Team, the Custom Firearms Shop and Shotgun Team Coach Burl Branham will be featured, as well as Fort Benning's Sniper School.

The show, called "The Science of Guns," will air at 9 p.m. Jan. 14. at 1 a.m. Jan. 15 and at 5 p.m. Jan. 17.

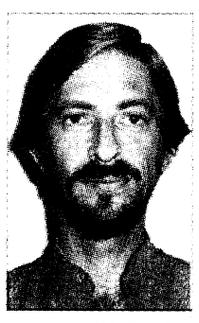
Powderhouse Productions of Somerville, Mass., which produced the Discover Magazine program, visited Fort Benning in August and September. The focus of the story is on the Sniper School and what is required to produce a sniper, as well as featuring the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit for the science of shooting.

"I am really interested in the science of shooting," said Phillipa "Pip" Gilmour, associate producer for Powderhouse Productions to the Soldiers when she was here.

While here, the contracted crew spent several days with the Sniper School and USAMU on two separate trips. On the first trip in August, the crew spent one day with the USAMU filming everything from an accurized M-16A2 test fire to an Infantry Trophy Match at Easley Range. The crew also filmed the first week of training for the students at the Sniper School and followed them through graduation on the second visit.

"We got to see all the students at the beginning of class and come hack for the final week to see that over half of the students made it," Gilmour said.

The second time the crew visited was not just for the Sniper School, it was also for the meat of the interviews with the USAMU. The crew filmed Harold A. Christy Jr. and Julie A. Goloski from the Action Shooting section fire vector rounds down range in the rain. A vector round is similar to a tracer round except it does not give off heat. Next was tile bread and butter of the day, filming the M-24 sniper weapon being assembled and a static shot of the weapon in a vice.



"This is one of the most important parts of the day." Gilmour said. 'We wanted to do a time-lapsed part with Mark T. Palmer with the Custom Firearms Shop at the USAMU, assembling the M-24 and try to pet a static shot of the M-24 and make it look attractive."

The last part of the day was an interview with Branham, who was a sniper, first sergeant and instructor for the 23rd Infantry Division Sniper School in Vietnam..

"It takes a special type of person to become a sniper." Branham said. "No one will ever know if they will make it as a sniper until they actually have to do it."

Shooting sharpens hunting skills, supplements field experience

National Shooting Sports Foundation

In hunting, good marksmanship extends not only to personal pride but also ethics and conservation.

Unfortunately, opportunities to obtain sufficient field experience don't come often enough for most hunters to fine tune their marksmanship skills. That's where target shooting comes in — especially the kind designed to duplicate the shots that hunters most likely encounter in the field.

The following suggested activities increase hunting marksmanship. When practicing, try to use the same ammunition, clothing and equipment that is used in the field.

Sporting clays and other clay target games, skeet and trap, offer excellent shotgun hunting practice. Sporting clays in particular hone hunting skills by simulating a wide variety of field scenarios — including shots at running game, such as rabbit and wing-shooting for decoying mallards, springing teal, flushing grouse and darting doves. Targets fly at all angles, elevations and speeds that simulate the real thing, which is why sporting clays provide highly realistic practice for the shotgun hunter.

Combination trap and skeet fields provide useful practice for long-range crossing shots such as those at high-flying dove or ducks. It is possible to learn to avoid the natural tendency to begin "tracking" a target instead of quickly swinging ahead and pulling the trigger. Try shooting at the trap targets from skeet stations one through seven. On a standard trap-only field, set up stakes approximately where the skeet stations should be.

Rifle hunters rehearse field shots by firing at hanging pie plates set out at 100 yards. To begin, practice rapidly mounting the rifle in one fluid motion. Is the plate fully visible in the scope the instant it is mounted on the gun? If not, the scope is likely mounted too far away or too close to the eye. Shooting offhand, fire 10 shots in two minutes or less. If all 10 shots are in the pie plate, consider trying out for the Olympics.

If there are two or three misses, according to the experts, that is exceptionally fine shooting. Even if five or six shots are in the target, that is better than the average rifle shooter. If a score is below 50 percent, more training is needed. Generally a person who shoots well offhand, can attain hits from other positions.

Equipment maintenance is another important part of every ethical hunter's field preparations. Firearms to be used should be thoroughly cleaned, carefully examined for signs of wear that could indicate needed repairs and sighted-in for accuracy. Shotguns should be pattern-tested with the same ammunition to be used afield. A qualified gunsmith should perform any necessary repair work and be consulted before modifications or alterations are made to any firearm.

Select guns with care to ensure adequate and appropriate power for the game sought. When called for, wear blaze orange clothing to ensure field safety, but these garments can fade over time. Replace them if necessary. Also, remember to wear ear and eye protection.

Hunting well serves as a synonym for good hunting. By following the above guidelines, every hunter is assured of a valued experience each time they take to the field. The true measure of the hunt is revealed in the richness of its memories rather than the number of shots fired or the amount of game taken.

How good of a shot are you?

National Shooting Sports Foundation

Can you shoot as well as the average hunter? How about better?

To find out, the National Shooting Sports Foundation selected a random group of hunters and had them shoot a series of regulation rifle, shotgun and handgun events.

The shotgun events included trap and skeet. For the pistol and rifle test, participants fired at standard competition targets.

Since none of the hunters had ever shot at these regulation events before, their scores provide a good indication of the average hunter's ability.

To find out how they scored and where you stand with your fellow hunters, send for the free booklet, "Something To Shoot For," from the National Shooting Sports Foundation, 11 Mile Hill Road, Newtown, Conn., 06470-2359.

Experts recommend winterizing boat trailers

ShoreLand'r Trailers

Depending upon where a person lives in the United States, the transition into fall possibly means one of two things for fishermen and boaters — it's time to winterize the boat or the fishing and boating begins to improve.

In either case, now seems the best time to winterize or service your boat trailer to make sure of its readiness, whether your next boating trip takes place next week or next spring.

Usually, only simple maintenance is required. Trailer experts offer these simple, do-it-yourself tips for trailer owners.

•Lubricate the wheel bearings. This remains one of the most important items to include on your winterization list.

If a trailer contains bearing protectors, which replace the hub's dust cover with a grease fitting and reservoir, just pump new marine grease into the bearing until the springloaded piston reaches approximately 1/8 inch from its seated position. Otherwise, lubricating standard bearings requires that you jack up the trailer, remove the wheels and tire.

Next, take off the hub's dust cap and remove the cotter key and axle nut. The bearings can now be removed, cleaned in a solvent and inspected for wear or damage. Perform the same actions for the bearing races inside the hub. To finish, pack the bearings with marine grease and reassemble.

•Check the tires. While working at road level, inspect the tire tread for excessive or uneven wear. If less than a quarter-inch of tread remains, replace the tires.

•Inspect the frame. This step requires taking a close look at the frame. Look for rust or cracks. A few rust spots remain easy to fix.

Check the springs for broken leaves. Depending upon the size of your trailer, two to five leaves possibly exist. If any are found broken, take the trailer to a dealer for competent repair or replacement.

•Inspect the bunks and rollers. Not often do the bunks or rollers need replacement, but a quick inspection shows any problems.

•Check the lights and electrical wiring. Hook up the trailer to a truck or car and make sure all the lights work — both running lights and turn signals. Check the lenses for cracks and breaks and replace them, if necessary.

•Check the winch and straps. Lubricate the winch mechanism if required and play out the entire length of the winch strap. Inspect for frayed edges or cuts and replace, if necessary.

Now is a good time to make sure of proper winding onto the winch spool.

If hooking up to a boat and heading for warmer water seems like a good idea, just take off.

Booklet offers simple tips to keep hunters safe, warm

Escape to the Outdoors

This year, an estimated 15 million licensed deer and duck hunters are expected to be in the fields fields nationwide, according to the U.S. Fish & Wildlife Service.

Of course, part of the hunting experience is the camping experience, as hunters head to cabins, tents, trucks, campers, RVs and other enclosures, to camp at their favorite sites. Keep warm and safe this hunting season by following these tips:

•Wear layers of clothing instead of one piece. The air between the layers acts as insulation and keeps you warmer.

•Keep your head covered. Wear a ski cap to bed.

•Use sleeping bags designed for sub-freezing temperatures. Use a waterproof bivouac sack to keep more heat inside. Place your sleeping bag on a foam mat.

•Carry a backpack with essentials like a first-aid kit, extra socks, gloves and high- energy food snacks and bottled water.

•Keep food and water from freezing by packing clothing around them and keeping them close to your back in the backpack.

•Make sure to keep dry— bring extra clothing.

•Be a safe hunter. Always use caution when handling firearms around camp and in the woods and fields.

•Alcohol is not a remedy for the cold. Alcohol lowers the core body temperature. Plus, alcohol and firearms are a dangerous combination.

•Consider using a portable radiant gas heater. Use the heater in open areas in a tree stand or duck blind, under a fly, or with some models, to cook on. Since these heaters are fired by liquid propane gas (LP), make sure to only use them outside, in open, ventilated spaces. Inside use could place hunters and campers at high risk for carbon monoxide poisoning.

•Be aware of the signs of carbon monoxide poisoning. Some hunters have used gas-fired products inside enclosures to cook and sleep and have suffered from carbon monoxide poisoning. Do not use these devices in a tent, truck, camper, RV or other enclosure. Never sleep in any enclosure with an operating portable radiant gas heater. Carbon monoxide poisoning can be fatal.

Signs of carbon monoxide poisoning include:

•Headache, dizziness and drowsiness.

•Nausea, vomiting, extreme sleepiness.

•Heart flutter, shortness of breath.

Action to take:

•Get the victim to fresh air.

•If the victim isn't breathing, give mouth-to-mouth resuscitation.

•Get medical help.

For more information about safe camping, a Camp Safe, Camp Warm brochure is available from the Portable Radiant Heater Safety News Bureau, P.O. Box 45002-0002, Cleveland, Ohio 44145, or call toll-free (888) CAMPHTR (226-7487).

Fishing pro explains basic fishing tackle

Feature Outdoors

Getting started in fishing is as easy as pushing a button, the casting button of a spincast reel that is. Choosing from the massive array of fishing gear is not as difficult as it might appear to a beginner, if you can keep a few basic things in mind.

Most anglers start out with a Spincast also called a "closed-face," reel. And for good reason. Spincast reels are easy to use and perform well.

A tangle-free reel is an excellent choice for beginners. It has a unique drag system that eliminates line twist and tangles that can result when you're first learning to cast. Like many Spincast reels, the tangle-free series are pre-spooled with line so it's ready to fish. The model you choose depends largely on what you plan to fish for.

A spincast reel is also easy for kids to learn fishing.

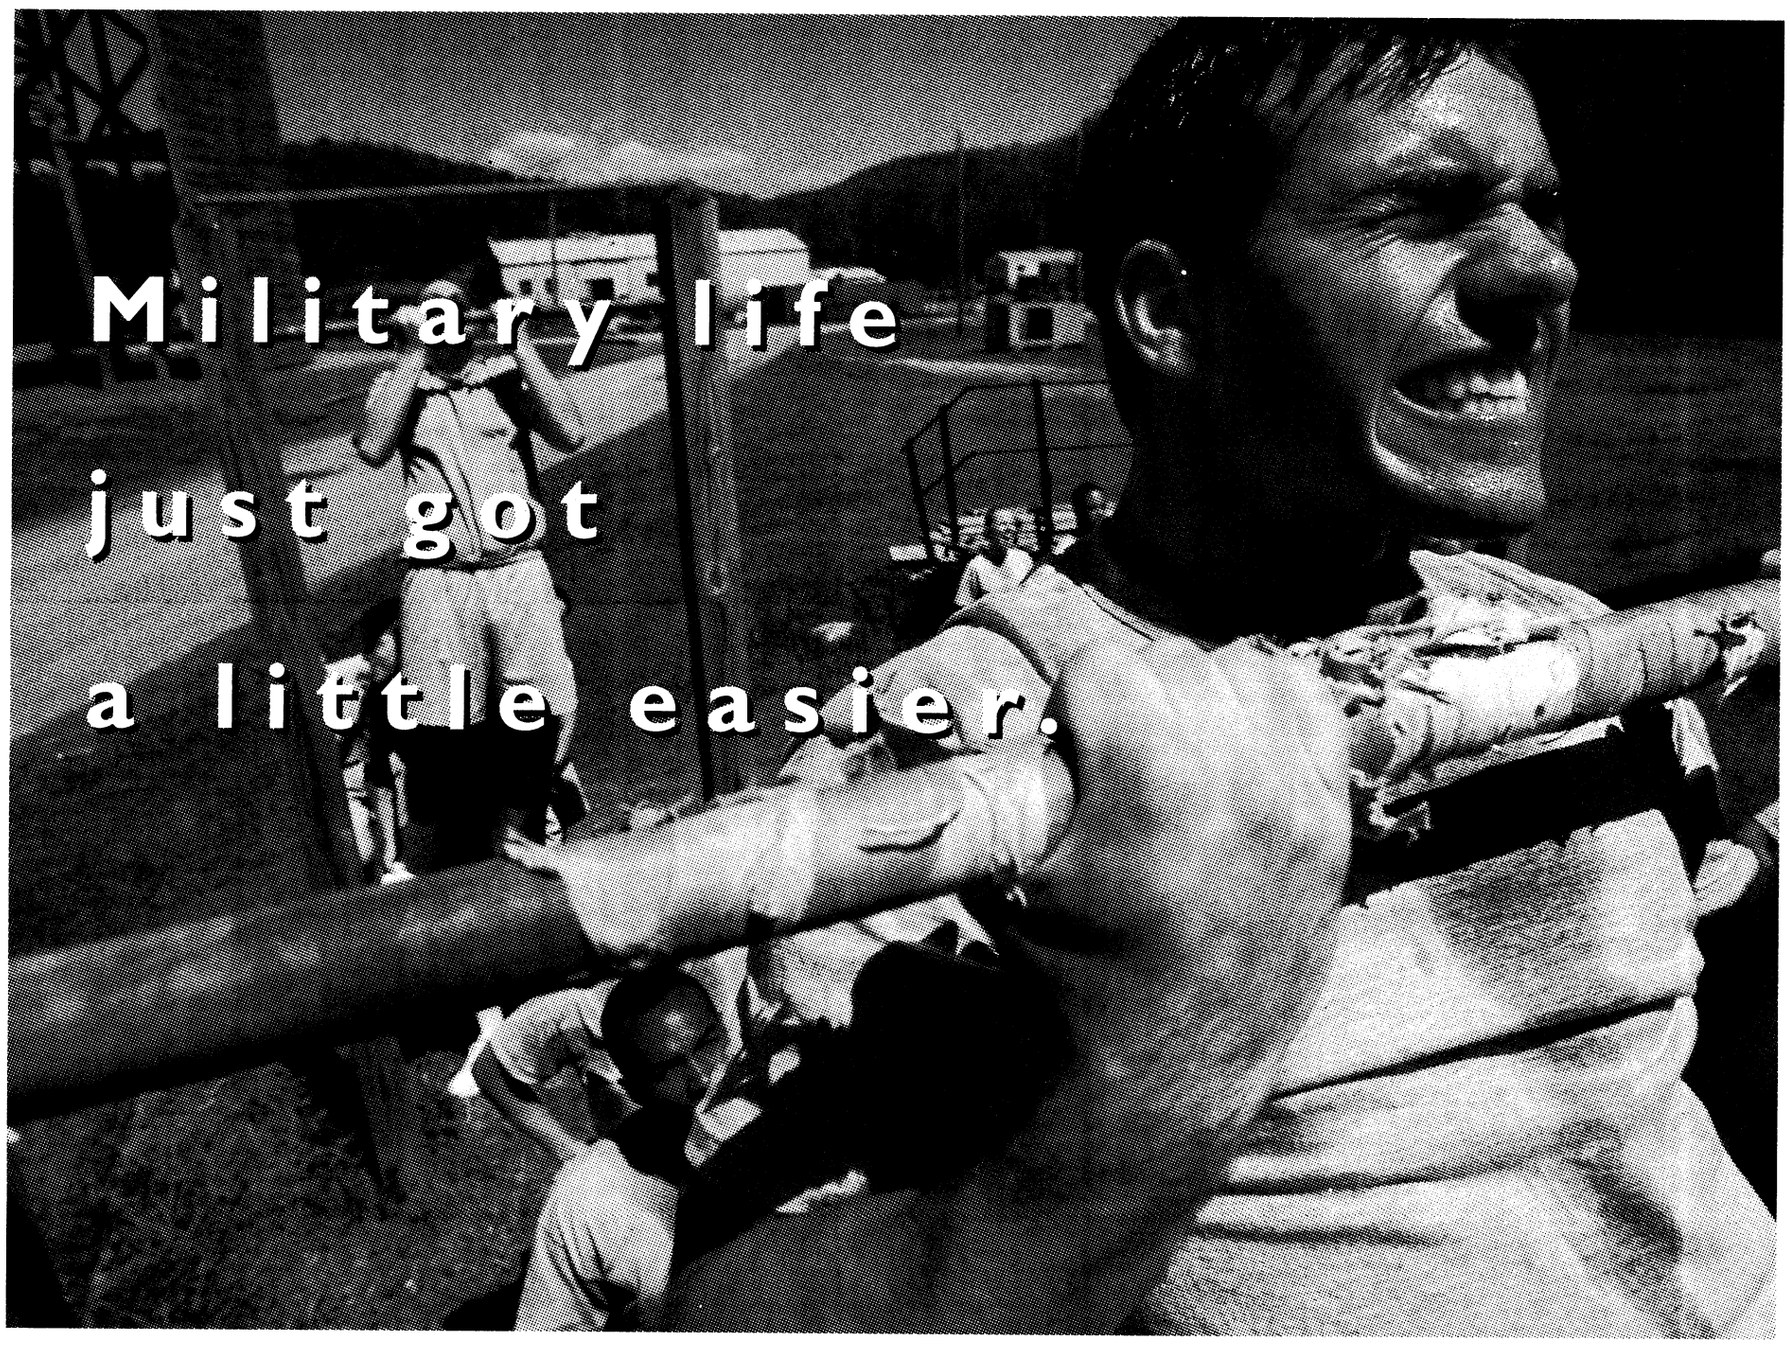
"In general, the bigger the fish, the heavier the gear you'll want to use, with 8- or 12-pound-test line and on up" said Steve Vogts. "For smaller fish, you'll want lighter gear, and lighter line, 4- to 6-pound test."

The tangle-free 8-pound test line is a good medium choice for beginners because it's light enough for fishing smaller fish, like crappie, yet strong enough for bass and walleye.

The next step is to match the right rod to your reel. You can purchase a pre-packaged combo that has been matched for you, or choose a rod that "balances" with the size of your reel.

Smaller reels balance best with light-action rods; medium-sized reels with medium-action rods; and large reels with medium-heavy or heavy-action rods.

The rod's action refers to its weight and stiffness and is stamped on the rod near the handle. Light-action rods are best fished with 2- to 6-pound test line; medium-action rods with 6- to 12-pound test; and heavy-action rods with 12- to 20-pound test. Use a light-action rod if you plan to fish exclusively for pan fish, and a medium-action if you'll mix in some walleye or bass angling.



Rods also come in different lengths, ranging from four to 10-feet. Shorter rods give you better control while longer rods allow you to cast farther. An ideal starter rod is five to six feet long, which is short enough to give you plenty of control, yet long enough to provide a fair amount of casting distance.

Rods and reels are a little less intimidating than all the other fishing tackle. There are a tremendous amount of lures on the market. How do you know which lures are necessary?

For an all-around good lure, it's hard to beat a spinnerbait like the Beetle Spin. It imitates the flash of a minnow, and a leech or worm body, and it comes in a variety of sizes and colors to match the conditions and feeding habits of the fish you're after.

In general, choose dark colors for clear water and cloudy days, and bright colors for dark water and sunny days. Chartreuse, pumpkin, pearl, bright neons, black and purple are a good colors to have on hand. Small lures generally work better in early Spring when fish are spawning and not as hungry, while bigger lures are more productive later in the season. Keep handy an assortment of grubs, worms, curly tails, and waxworm plastic bodies, some spinnerbaits, small jigging spoons, a few bobbers, split shots and number four or number six hooks.

Don't be intimidated by all the gear you see and fishing "know how" you hear. All you need is a good rod and reel that's easy to cast, a common bait, a shoreline to fish from and some hungry fish, and you're on your way to great fun.

The Last Hundred Yards
The NCO's Contribution to Warfare

Bruce Gudmundsson, coauthor of On Infantry, calls this "the best book on ground tactics ... in the last 50 years." Infantry leaders, learn how to: (1) add surprise to standard U.S. tactics, (2) conduct maneuver warfare at the small-unit level, and (3) enjoy training to the threat. There will be no front lines in the next war, so support personnel will need this one too. It contains the collective common sense of 1200 infantry NCO's, reads like an action novel, and has 250 illustrations. Great for gifts. Save lives, send $22.75 to Posterity Press, P.O. Box 5360, Emerald Isle, NC 28594 today!

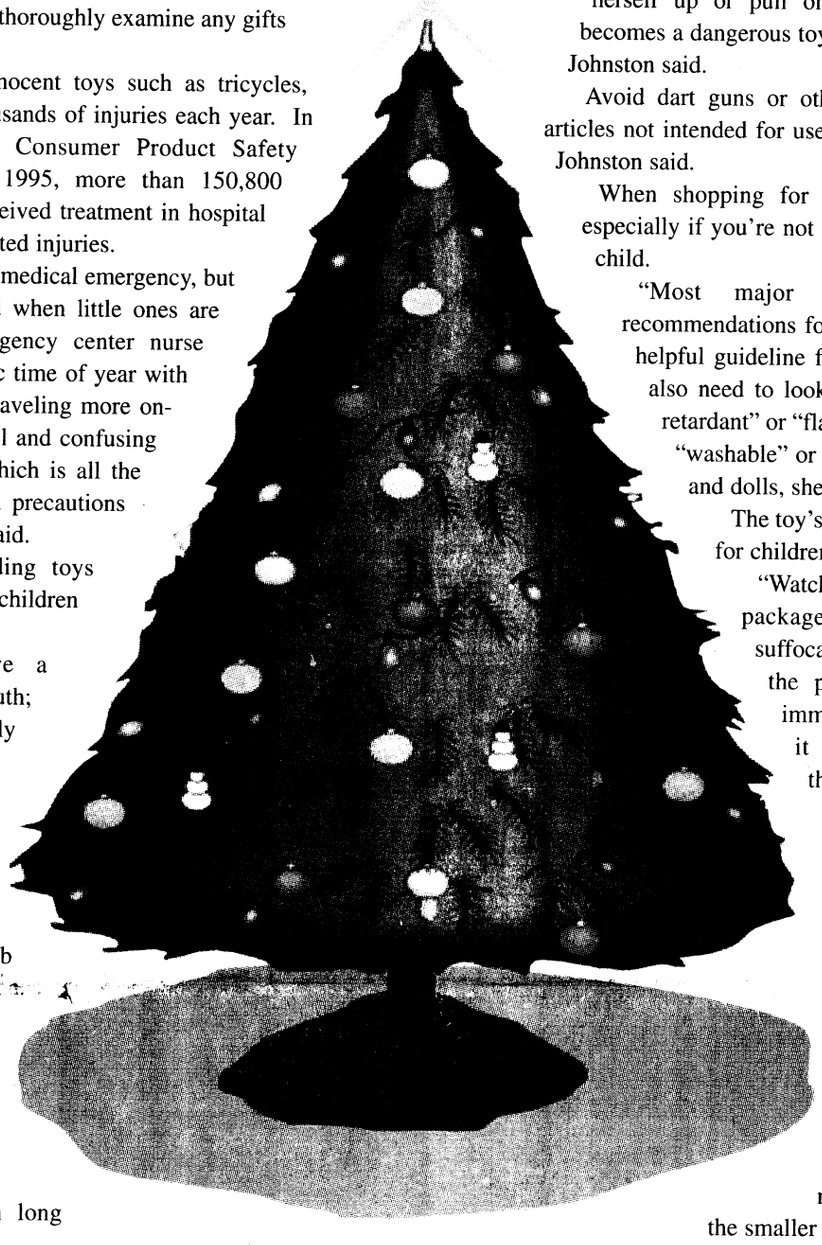
Examine children's gifts for dangerous parts

Egleston Children's Hospital

The child safety experts with Egleston Children's Hospital at Emory University encourage all parents to take extra time this holiday season to thoroughly examine any gifts purchased for children.



Sadly enough, seemingly innocent toys such as tricycles, marbles and balloons cause thousands of injuries each year. In fact, statistics from the U.S. Consumer Product Safety Commission estimate that in 1995, more than 150,800 children under the age of 15 received treatment in hospital emergency rooms due to toy-related injuries.

"No time is a good time for a medical emergency, but the holidays are especially hard when little ones are involved," said Egleston emergency center nurse Maryann Johnston. "It's a hectic time of year with many distractions. People are traveling more on-the-road. It makes for a stressful and confusing time of year for many of us, which is all the more reason to take those extra precautions with children's gifts," Johnston said.

Johnston recommends avoiding toys with small, removable parts for children younger than the age of 4.

"Infants and toddlers have a tendency to put things in their mouth; toys with small parts can easily become lodged in a young child's throat," Johnston said.

Other recommended tips — parents should watch out for toys with sharp points or edges since they could enable a child to unintentionally stab himself or herself or another person. The item needs to be free of glass or metal edges. Toys that require electricity remain best suited for children 8 years and older, and parents of infants and toddlers need to take precaution with toys with long strings or cords such as necklaces and child mobiles because they often cause strangulation.

"Once an infant is strong enough to pull himself or herself up or pull on the hanging objects, the mobile becomes a dangerous toy that the child could get tangled in," Johnston said.

Avoid dart guns or other toys possibly capable of firing articles not intended for use in the toy, such as pencils or nails, Johnston said.

When shopping for toys, always read the packaging, especially if you're not quite sure if the toy is suited for the child.

"Most major toy manufacturers give age recommendations for the use of the toy, which can be a helpful guideline for parents," Johnston said. Parents also need to look for safety labels including "flame retardant" or "flame resistant" on fabric products and "washable" or "hygienic materials" on stuffed toys and dolls, she added.

The toy's packaging can also be hazardous for children.

"Watch for large plastic bags the toy is packaged in because they could be a suffocation device," she said. "Always tie the plastic in a knot and dispose of immediately so children don't play with it and accidentally smother themselves."

If there is an older sibling, parents need to make sure they separate the toys. A safe toy for a 7-year-old isn't safe for a 2-year-old.

"Explain to the older sibling why his toy might be dangerous for his little brother or sister and make sure the toy is always put away after they have played with it," Johnston said. "If possible, encourage the child not to play with the toy in front of the smaller sibling."

Safety Cab offers free ride home

By Sgt. Marc G. Turchin
Bayonet assistant editor

As a reminder to those staying in the tricommunity area for the holidays, Safety Cab is here to help.

From now until Jan. 1, Safety Cab will work as a free, safe ride home for anyone in the tricommunity area. The cab ride operates from 8 p.m. to 2 a.m. seven days a week. The free ride is cosponsored by the Association of the U.S. Army. The number for Safety Cab is 660-6069.

Statistics show more people die from drinking and driving accidents during this part of the year any other time of the year, said Regis Beighley, Safety Manager, Directorate of Public Safety.

Beighley promised military police officers will be on patrol across post using road blocks during the day and night time hours to prevent drunk driving.

"We try and stop people from drinking and driving, but if we can't stop them, we try to catch them before they injure themselves or others," Beighley said.

He also said to make sure all drivers have the necessary information in the car with them in case they get stopped or have to go through a road block.

This information includes a drivers' license, vehicle registration and proof of insurance.

During this time last year, there were no reported deaths in the tricommunity area, but there were 12 injuries and 77 arrests.

Again, Beighley stressed if you go out and are drinking, don't try and drive — call Safety Cab at 660-6069.

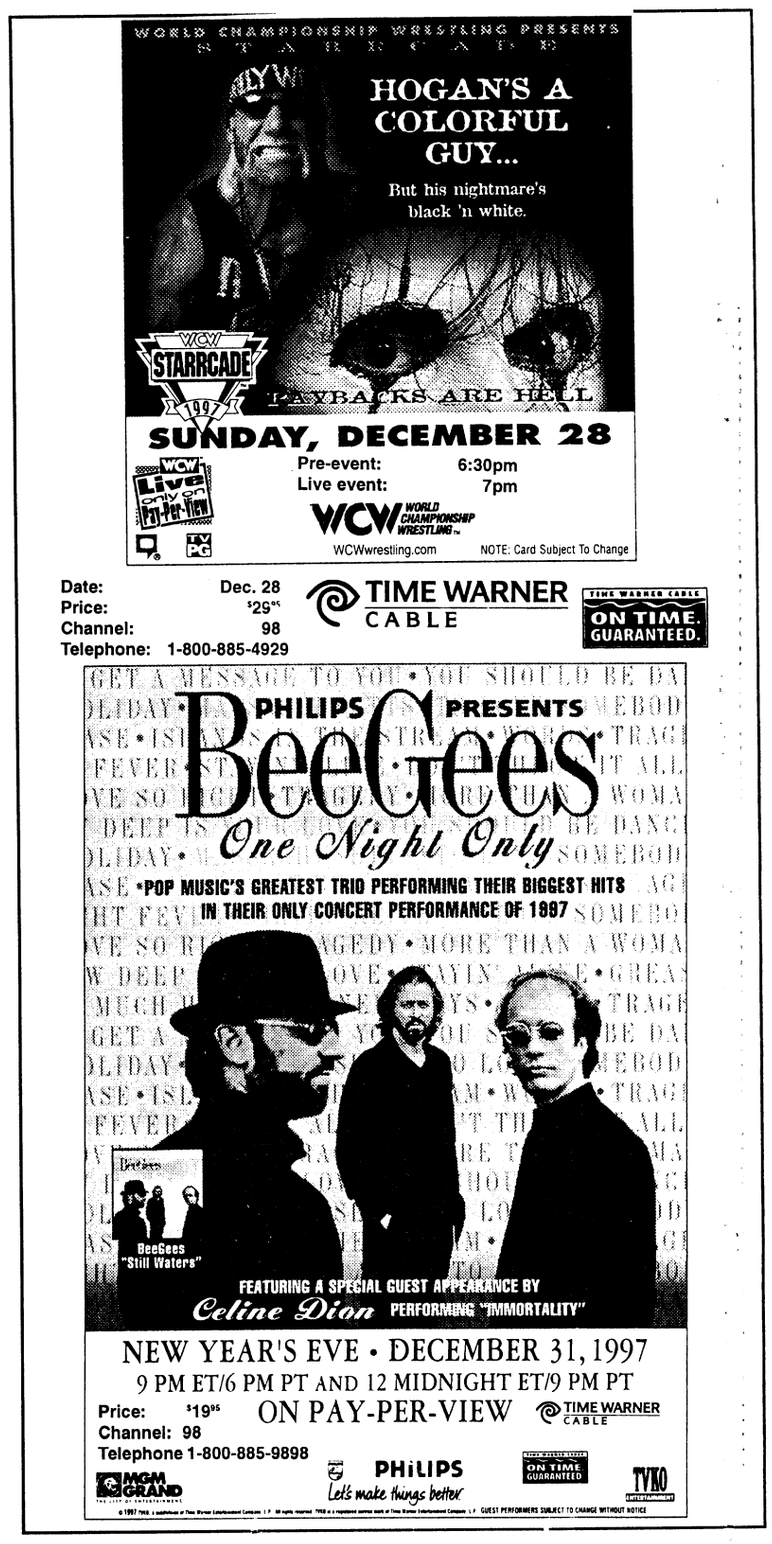
The Last Hundred Yards



The NCO's Contribution to Warfare

Bruce Gudmundsson, coauthor of On Infantry, calls this "the best book on ground tactics ... in the last 50 years." Infantry leaders, learn how to: (1) add surprise to standard U.S. tactics, (2) conduct maneuver warfare at the small-unit level, and (3) enjoy training to the threat. There will be no front lines in the next war, so support personnel will need this one too. It contains the collective common sense of 1200 infantry NCO's, reads like an action novel, and has 250 illustrations. Great for gifts. Save lives, send $22.75 to Posterity Press, P.O. Box 5360, Emerald Isle, NC 28594 today!

Enjoy the Christmas season by noticing life's little treasures

By Robert Thompson
Family Life Center

A flock of birds flew over my head. They were small black ones, maybe about 40 of them, although I didn't try to count.

I was crossing the street in my neighborhood when I noticed them. They were coming my way. If I had climbed up on my roof, I think I could have touched them. They were so low that I could hear the wind whistling through their beating wings.

Because I was still crossing the street, I checked it again: all clear. Three junior high boys were shooting baskets on the driveway next door. The metal backboard clanged out to the neighborhood the boys' every attempt to be Larry Bird or Michael Jordan.

Exciting basketball memories from former days — Wilt Chamberlain and others — filed past my mind's eye.

But the birds! They were directly overhead, and the sound of their wings beating the air had wrestled my attention from the basketball championship next door. I reached the curb and stopped, gazing up at those little sleek creatures.

The backboard next door called to me, so I turned my head in answer. But something in my mind said, "Bird wings! When have you ever heard the beating of bird wings?" A quick memory search turned up nothing.

They were past me but still close enough to hear. I turned up my ears as loud as they would go. I wanted to absorb and capture that sound. It was a kind of whirring hum, but not a noisy kind. It was soft, yet strong. Because the birds seemed to be flapping in unison, the hum had a steady, pulsing rhythm to it, like the loping of a cold engine which needs throttled up a bit.

With the birds still fairly close, the hum faded, but I could still see their wings, moving up and down in quiet rhythm. I wished I could join them, to savor their special music. Scarcely 10 seconds had elapsed since I first saw them. I was glad I had laid aside my basketball fantasies long enough to enjoy this spontaneous treat.

I went into our house and noticed the decorations. Our Christmas tree stood across the room, sporting its festive garb, which our son had proudly arranged. Candles, bells, stockings and evergreen trimmed the hearth and end tables. The setting was exciting. It stirred up holiday memories.

Only the night before, Mary, Joseph and the baby looked down from above the fireplace on my family and me. We lit an Advent candle and read ancient words of promise and hope. In the background, we heard "Silent Night" on the stereo. My wife suggested that we ponder the ceramic manger family for a moment. We gazed upon the Bethlehem trio with the soft beating of the music in our ears. All else faded into the background.

The manger scene, the birds, a Christmas song, a whirring hum — somethings in life are rare; some are common. Somethings are here and then gone; others are around us in season. What do we see and hear?

Sometimes, I have as much trouble seeing and hearing the message of Christmas as I do noticing the gift of birds in flight. I can be distracted by basketballs and Christmas bells. Yet, the bounty of both the rare and the common waits patiently but eagerly for us.

The reward of paying attention, of watching and listening, is the quiet, strong joy of discovering all that we have been given.
