Boom!

Soldiers from the 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment, fire a 120 mm mortar on Red Cloud Range March 10. Chief executives from Columbus took a tour of the post, which included an airborne demonstration.

Fort Benning wins

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Fort Benning learned this week that it is the best post in the Army and also the winner of the prestigious President's Quality Award — making it the best agency in the Federal Government.

This is the third time in four years, the post was named the best in the Army for the Army Communities of Excellence Award.

Army Chief of Staff Gen. Dennis J. Reimer made the announcement from the Pentagon Wednesday. Fort Benning beat out 15 other active duty installations for the coveted honor.

This is the first year Fort Benning entered the PQA competition.

"To win the first time out of the blocks in an unheard of feat," said Sara McLaney, Fort Benning's total quality manager.

The post began its road to excellence in 1993 when it was selected as the best large installation in the Army. It then won back-to-back best overall titles in 1994 and 1995, then won best large installation in 1996, before returning to best in the Army in 1997.

The Commander-in-Chief's Award will be presented in Washington, D.C. May 2.

The PQA will be presented in Washington July 11.

498th leaves post for Taszar, Hungary

By Brian R. Voller
Bayonet staff writer

The 498th Medical Company, Air Ambulance, 36th Engineer Group (Combat), said their goodbyes and loaded an aircraft headed for Taszar, Hungary, Tuesday at Lawson Army Airfield.

The 498th is deploying 103 Soldiers to the Bosnia region for a 179-day mission that could possibly extend to as much as 364 days if it is deemed necessary.

Maj. Tracy O. Wyatt, commander of the 498th, said his unit's morale is very high and it is prepared to go to the Bosnia region and provide emergency medical evacuation capabilities to the region.

Before the unit boarded the 747 aircraft, Brig. Gen. Walter Wojdakowski, deputy commanding general of Fort Benning, praised the 498th on its deployment.

"This has been a model deployment from the start, you all know that you've been here," Wojdakowski said. "You shipped your equipment and you got ready in just a few days. Before you know it you'll be in Hungary ready to serve."

Wojdakowski also stressed to the Soldiers that their families will be well taken care of while they are on deployment.

One of the Soldiers deploying with the 498th, Sgt. Jeffrey Eyer, said the company is ready and excited about going to Bosnia.

"The mission is a good mission and I think we are very prepared to go over there," Eyer said. "This is the first time I've been able to deploy with my entire unit, and I think it is a good opportunity to learn and a good chance to help people out."

Working in place of the 498th while it is deployed is the 832nd Medical Company, Air Ambulance, a National Guard unit from West Bend, Wis.

Pyramid scheme targets Soldiers

Staff Judge Advocate

A pyramid scheme is currently operating in Columbus and is also targeting Soldiers, civilians and family members at Fort Benning.

A group calling itself "Friends Helping Friends" is operating a pyramid scheme that brings in members at the bottom of the pyramid for $2,000.

The pyramid consists of four rows. The "chairperson" is at the top, the next descending row has two "presidents." Next are four "executive vice-presidents," followed by row four with eight "vice -presidents."

To enter the pyramid, $2,000 is given to the chairperson who assigns the participant to a position in the fourth row.

After the chairperson collects $2,000 from each person in the fourth row, he graduates and the next row splits into two groups, each with a chairperson.

Efforts are then made to recruit eight new "vice-presidents."

It quickly becomes evident how a person can stand to lose the $2,000 since there is a limited pool of people willing to pay $2,000 to "play the game."

As an officer with the Office of Staff Judge Advocate said, "Not only can people 'lose their shirts,' but it's illegal too."

"Friends Helping Friends" states in its brochure that this is not a pyramid scheme. However, the method the group uses is defined by Georgia law as a pyramid scheme and is illegal.

The law states that it is illegal to participate in, become a member of, affiliate with or solicit members or affiliates for any such group.

This law extends to those participating in the scheme on Fort Benning.

Soldiers who are affiliated with this scheme in any manner are subject to punishment under the Uniform Code of Military Justice or to adverse administrative action.

Department of Defense civilians are subject to the Georgia law and disciplinary action for violations of the Joint Ethics Regulation.

The Office of the Staff Judge Advocate urges anyone contacted by "Friends Helping Friends" to immediately call the Military Police at 545-5222 or the Criminal Investigation Division at 545-4989.

Soldiers head home, 9 mm show up

By Mark G. Turchin
Bayonet Staff writer

Two 9 mm pistols missing from the 3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division (Mechanized), since last week were recovered late Monday night following an anonymous tip.

Brigade Commander Col. Steven S. Schook made the announcement Tuesday at a press conference at Kelley Hill's Truscott Center after agents of Fort Benning's Resident Agency of the U.S. Army Criminal Investigation Command found the weapons on Kelley Hill.

The announcement brought the release of more than 500 soldiers of the 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor Regiment, who remained in place since the weapons were discovered missing. Soldiers, though not allowed to go home at night, were able to move about the barracks, motor pool and battalion area for the duration. Schook also said soldiers were able to call home and conduct business around Kelley Hill with noncommissioned officer escorts. Every day activities such as physical training and equipment maintenance went on as well, he said.

Schook said that the location of the weapons would not be released as the investigation is continuing, but said that the battalion had taken the proper measures to recover the weapons.

"Without keeping soldiers in place," he said, "the recovery of the weapons would not have been possible."

Schook added that when sensitive items such as weapons come up missing, the brigade takes it seriously. Immediately following the discovery, a 100 percent inventory of all sensitive items was accomplished.

"It's not normal that we lose weapons or that they're stolen amongst ourselves," he said. "What is normal is that when it does happen,

Riverside Easter egg hunt set for Saturday

By Lisa M. Hibbert
Bayonet staff writer

The annual Easter egg hunt and spring festival takes place Saturday from 10 a.m. to noon at Riverside, home of Commanding General Maj. Gen. Carl F. Ernst and his wife, Linda.

Children ages 18 months to 9 years of active duty and retired military personnel and Department of Defense civilian employees are encouraged to participate in planned activities.

Two prizes will be awarded to the children who collect the most eggs in each of the four age groups:

- 18 months to 2 years old,
- 3 years old to 4 years old,
- 5 years old to 6 years old and
- 7 years old to 9 years old.

The Easter bunny is planning to make a special appearance, as well as McGruff, the crime dog and Blinky, the talking car who plan to entertain and educate the children.

There will also be an "astro jump" and an "American Legion Train" for the children to ride.

Free soft drinks and cotton candy will also be available.

Pets are not allowed.

For more information, call 545-3070.

317th goes home, goggles not found

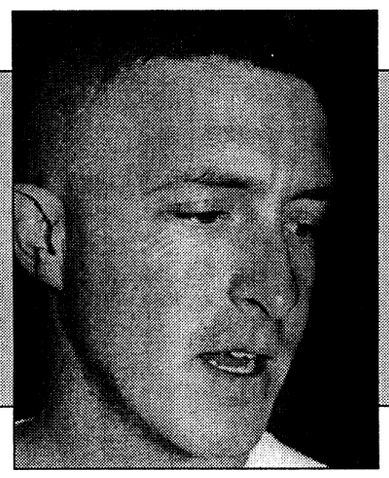
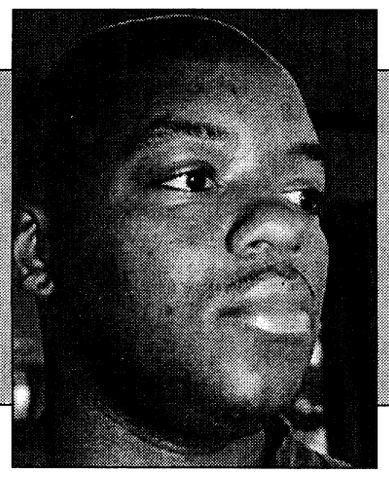
VARIOUS VOICES

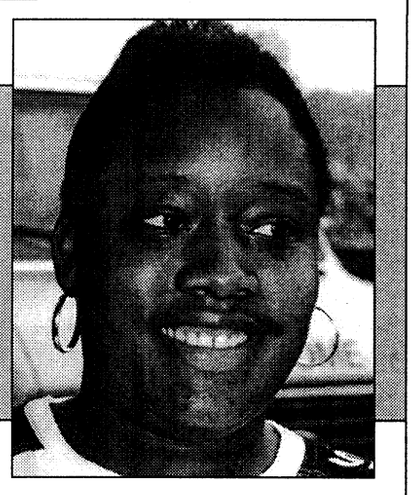


Why is it important for parents to look after their children?

Lt. Col. James W. Hutts, Headquarters Department of the Army, Office of the Deputy Chief of Staff of Personnel — "If children are raised with the right guidance, they will follow a good path. If the parents do the right things, the children will grow up in the proper way.



Spc. Ken C. Litoff, Battery F, 109th Field Artillery, Army National Guard, York, Pa. — "So they will behave themselves and not become brats."



Spc. Michael J. Weiman, Battery F, 109th Field Artillery, Army National Guard, York, Pa. — "Somebody needs to take care of them and make sure they are instilled with proper ideals."

Retired Sgt. 1st Class Mickey Webb, Columbus — "It is the parents' responsibility to account for their kids' time. Parents need to keep their kids out of trouble and be role models."

Spc. Clifton D. Evans, Battery A, 1st Battalion, 10th Field Artillery, 3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division (Mechanized) — "Anything could happen out there. It's very important for parents to protect their children."

Felicia G. Thomas, family member — "There is no telling what might happen. They could get in trouble and hang out with the wrong people."

Supervision

Parents need to watch their children when they play outdoors

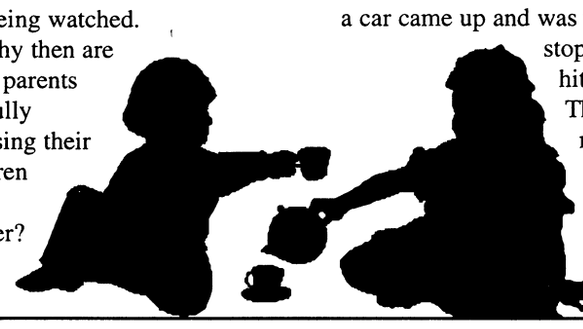
By Elizabeth LaMonica
Special to The Bayonet©

commentary

The injury or death of their child might be the most frightening thought many parents face.

Why then, do parents persist in allowing their children to roam unsupervised?

Elizabeth LaMonica says parents should be more mindful of their children.



I'm not sure what the Columbus laws are, but I do know about the laws on post.

According to U.S. Army Infantry Center Policy Memorandum 96-4, children under the age of 12 will not be left unattended by parents or guardians.

Why then do I find toys abandoned in my yard? Neighborhood children tote basketballs, tricycles, sidewalk chalk and large sticks through the neighborhood and leave them where ever they want.

Presumably, if these kids were being watched, the parents might stop them from cluttering up the neighborhood. That comes under common courtesy. So I can only guess the adults are rude and inconsiderate or the children are not being watched.

Why then are these parents willfully exposing their children to danger?

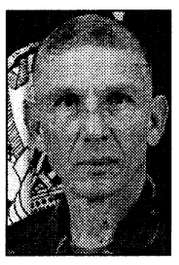
SAFETY FIRST
DON'T TAKE CHANCES

My next-door neighbor is a very conscientious lady who watches her 2-year-old carefully when they are outside. She never leaves him alone and when he steps near the curb, she pulls him back to the safety of the yard. She is a responsible parent.

One afternoon, we were chatting and watching her son romp around the yard. Within 30 minutes, I counted six children, ages ranging from approximately 2 to 7, running around completely unsupervised.

Worse, the 2-year-old was spending most of her time in the middle of our street. Sure enough, a car came up and was forced to stop to avoid hitting her. Then two more cars came. The little girl stood in the road waving her arms at this line of cars and shouted, "Go away!"

We got the girl off the road and out of the car's path. After the cars left, she went right back in the road and proceeded to walk up and down the middle of the street. Where were her parents?



Then, a few weeks ago at dusk, I rounded a corner in my subdivision and almost hit a young girl, no more than 7 years old. Had I not been traveling at 15 mph, I would have hit her. She seemed surprised that a car would be there. Where were her parents?

These problems happen off post, too. Recently I was traveling on a two-lane road posted at 45 mph. A toddler stumbled onto the road, plopped down in my lane of traffic and started to play with the loose pebbles. I stopped, hoping to use my car to stop the traffic behind me, but could not get out of my vehicle because of oncoming traffic.

I was afraid to honk to get the parent's attention in case I scared the child into the other lane. So I waited and hoped the parent would notice us soon. Several minutes later the mother ran out of her house, snatched her child out of the roadway and hurried inside. Where was she before?

Children have curious natures. They want to discover new things. Certainly they should be encouraged to explore their surroundings. They should definitely be allowed to play outdoors. But adults should act like parents and supervise their children carefully.

CG congratulates Fort Benning

Congratulations! We are proud to be the Army's recipient of the Army Communities of Excellence, Commander-in-Chief's Award for the third time in four years and a Chief of Staff, Army winner for the fifth consecutive year — truly a tradition of quality and excellence!

This award reflects the unparalleled teamwork, training, and esprit de corps of every Soldier, civilian, family member, retiree, and member of the tri-community that make Fort Benning the best installation in the world!

Thank you all for your hard work, dedication, spirit, professionalism, and commitment to excellence. I am proud of each of you! What you have done is a great accomplishment, made possible by men and women, civilian and military, working as a team for continuous improvement in every process at every level of the command.

This includes the great people in Columbus and Phenix City who also pulled together to help us win this coveted prize.

The Army Communities of Excellence recognizes installations for the accomplishment of exceptional customer focused standards. Your ability to sustain these standards while managing turmoil and resource reductions is a real testimony to the great work of the entire Fort Benning team. As we continue to shape the Army for the future, our commitment to excellence will remain the foundation for a quality, ready force.

We exist to fight and win the nation's wars. The American people told us what they wanted and we produced that and more, with improvements in the Infantry, such as the night vision lab, land warrior, and the digitized Soldier. These improvements were made in spite of the effects of downsizing and doing more with fewer dollars and people.

As the worldwide proponent for the Infantry, we provide the Army the best trained Soldiers, leaders, and training products by operating the world's premier warfighting school and facilities.

We provide our customers — Army units, leaders, and Soldiers — the best, clearest, and most timely warfighting doctrine in order to achieve decisive victory. We play a leading role in the design of Force XXI ensuring Infantry Soldiers and forces maintain an overwhelming overmatch in all future operational environments.

Using the Army's performance improvement criteria as the tool to constantly assess and improve these processes, as a team we will be able to strategically plan for future success in the battlefield, as well as here at home.

The Commander-in-Chief's Award is a distinguished award and it brings $500,000 to Fort Benning that will be used to make further improvements in our community. To be recognized as the best installation in the Army for three out of four years is a superb achievement! One that is not easily attainable. However, for this to be meaningful every individual at Fort Benning must believe that "we are the best!" To continue to face the challenge we must face every day, we must remain committed to continuous improvement and focused on our missions — training, readiness, and quality of life.

Again, congratulations to each of you. I am proud to be your commander!

— Maj. Gen. Carl F. Ernst
Commanding General

letter

In last week's Bayonet, Col. Lawrence K. White, chief of Staff, U.S. Army Infantry Center and Fort Benning, explained that an article in the Columbus Ledger Enquirer stating that Fort Benning was considering a ban on home marketing was in error. He further explained that the proposed policy would only limit active participation by Soldiers in one form of marketing, so called "multilevel marketing programs." Let me explain why commanders are concerned about multilevel programs.

The most successful MMPs evidence an ability by their members to recruit other people to join the organization. As more people join the organization and purchase the company's products, profits increase.

When profits increase, the monetary benefit realized from these profits are passed along to those in the recruiting chain. Thus, the more people who are recruited, the greater the financial reward to those involved.

Therefore MMPs pose potential problems in the context of a military organization. Aside from the potential for coercion or intimidation to join an MMP, which may be present in the superior or subordinate context unique to the military environment, intertwining financial relationships in a military organization has a significant potential to undermine morale, weaken the chain of command and dilute effective leadership.

Why is that so bad? Because decisions that are made on a daily basis by military leaders concerning promotion, schooling, deployment, etc., are subject to question if the people making the decision appear to have or have a financial interest tied to those decisions. This is becomes first and foremost a readiness issue.

A final decision has not been made on what policy, if any, will be published in regard to MMPs. However, the risk to readiness is not something that can be taken lightly. When tough decisions must be made, those decisions must be made based on what is the right for the Army without regard to personal financial reward.

Weapons: Return

we treat this as a very serious affair and that's why we approach it the way we do."

According to Schook, not only did remaining in place contribute to the recovery, but it was essential for public safety.

"Because of this, there are two weapons that did not make it downtown for other than proper use."

Furthermore, Schook added that "ensuring these weapons don't get in the wrong hands is part of our contract with the public who we exist to serve.

"It's part of the value system of the Army and Army units, as well," he said.

The Criminal Investigation Command, leading the investigation, had nine special agents conduct more than 200 interviews in the week leading up to the recovery. A $1,000 reward, which was offered for information about the loss of the weapons, will not be awarded until the investigation is complete, according to a CID agent. In the meantime, the investigation continues.

Goggles: Lost

The Soldiers, who were participating in field exercise Hammer Focus at the time, were originally scheduled to complete their mission earlier this week but remained in place to conduct the search.

Brigade Commander Col. Steven Schook explained the reason for having soldiers remain in place as long as necessary.

"Night vision goggles are considered sensitive items," Schook said, "and therefore, all efforts are made to recover them."

Schook pulled soldiers back in for several reasons.

"The unit is coming in, based upon the status of the investigation which indicates exhaustive efforts were made to recover the night vision goggles," Schook said.

Schook also said the decision was also based upon unit requirements and the completion of the mission and that all areas in question had been thoroughly searched.

The Fort Benning Resident Agency of the U.S. Arms Criminal Investigation Command will continue the investigation.

AER policy changes

Army Emergency Relief

Because of a recent change regarding Army Emergency Relief assistance to active duty Soldiers for funeral expenses, the following policy has been released from Headquarters, AER.

AER needs to be extremely sensitive to assistance requests for funeral expenses from active duty members who have lost a spouse, child or a dependent parent, as determined by Army Regulation 600-8-14 (ID Card Holder). Henceforth, up to $2,500 of any request for assistance for funeral expenses for a dependent of an active duty Soldier will be issued as a grant.

The $2,500 grant is not an automatic death gratuity. This assistance is intended to help initially stabilize the member and provide visible support and comfort during a particularly emotional period.

For more information regarding this change or any AER question, contact the installation AER office, Building 2643, between 8 a.m. and 5 p.m. Monday through Friday or call 545-2536, 545-4043 or 545-7517.

After duty hours, contact the U.S. Army Infantry Center staff duty officer at 545-2218.

AER provides financial assistance, helps Soldiers help their own

Army Emergency Relief

Eligibility for AER emergency financial assistance is limited to the following:

•Soldiers on extended active duty and their dependents.

•Army members of Reserve Components (U.S. Army Reserve and Army National Guard) on continuous active duty for a period in excess of 30 days, and their dependents.

•Soldiers who retired from active duty for longevity or by reason of physical disability or upon attaining age 60 (Reserve Components); and their dependents.

•Widows or widowers and orphans of Soldiers who died on active duty or after retirement.

Financial assistance is available from AER when the following occurs:

•Soldiers and their dependents have a valid emergency need.

•Widows or widowers and orphans of deceased Soldiers have emergency need.

•Unmarried dependent children need financial assistance for undergraduate level study.

AER emergency financial assistance is available wherever Army people may be — primary outlets are the 102 AER sections at Army installations worldwide.

AER assistance may also be obtained through: any local Red Cross chapter, any Navy-Marine Corps Relief Society, any Air Force Aid Society Section, or any Coast Guard Mutual Assistance Office.

MILITARY POLICE

Working to improve post safety

By Dov Schwartz
USAIC Public Affairs Office

A recent Saturday night started quietly for 1st Lt. Charles Lenoir of the 988th Military Police Company.

It was so quiet that the MP duty officer joked, "Everyone knew I was on, so they are keeping things down."

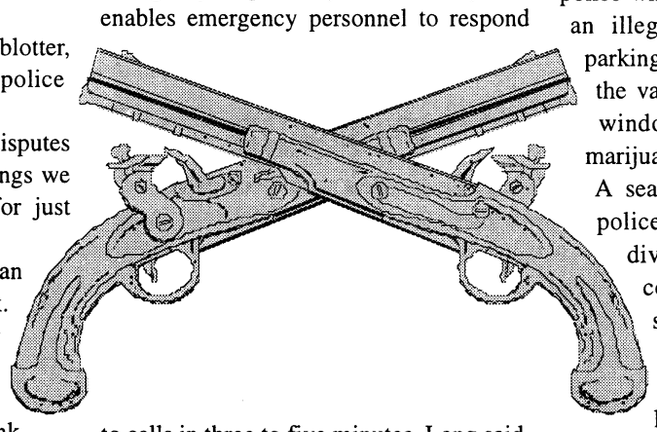
Lenoir's bravado aside, the evening's stillness would not last long.

On an average night, Lenoir's blotter, the chronological record of police activity, can run 25 pages.

"Traffic violations, domestic disputes and theft are some of the usual things we deal with, but we are prepared for just about anything," Lenoir said.

Maintaining high visibility is an important part of police work. During the overnight hours, Lenoir had more than a dozen vehicles on patrol.

"People see us and they think twice about doing something wrong," Lenoir said.



This night, it is Pfc. Amanda Molliere's job to see that no one at Martin Army Community Hospital does anything wrong. The Baytown, Texas, native also believes maintaining high visibility is an important part of her job.

Based in the small MP station, adjacent to the emergency room, Molliere combines her patrols of the hospital with visiting some of the patients.

"They are sometimes shocked to see an MP," she said. "And they often lower their voices when I walk by. But those (patients) I've gotten to know seem glad I'm here in case of an emergency."

Emergencies are Department of Defense Police Officer Donald Lang's responsibility. The retired Infantry first sergeant mans Fort Benning's state-of-the-art 911 Center.

Lang monitors the advanced emergency response system. The system enables emergency personnel to respond to calls in three to five minutes, Lang said.

According to Col. Thomas J. Cain, director of Public Safety, during February the 911 Center dispatched and monitored 1,760 police events, 374 fire-related incidents and 209 emergency medical service situations.

"Sometimes our EMS and fire people even help out Columbus. If we can get there faster, we go," he said

Well past midnight, Lenoir stood talking to a visitor in the military police's parking lot.

Suddenly, the static of Lenoir's hand-held radio pierced the air. One of his units requested he come to Afterhours, the junior enlisted club located on Main Post.

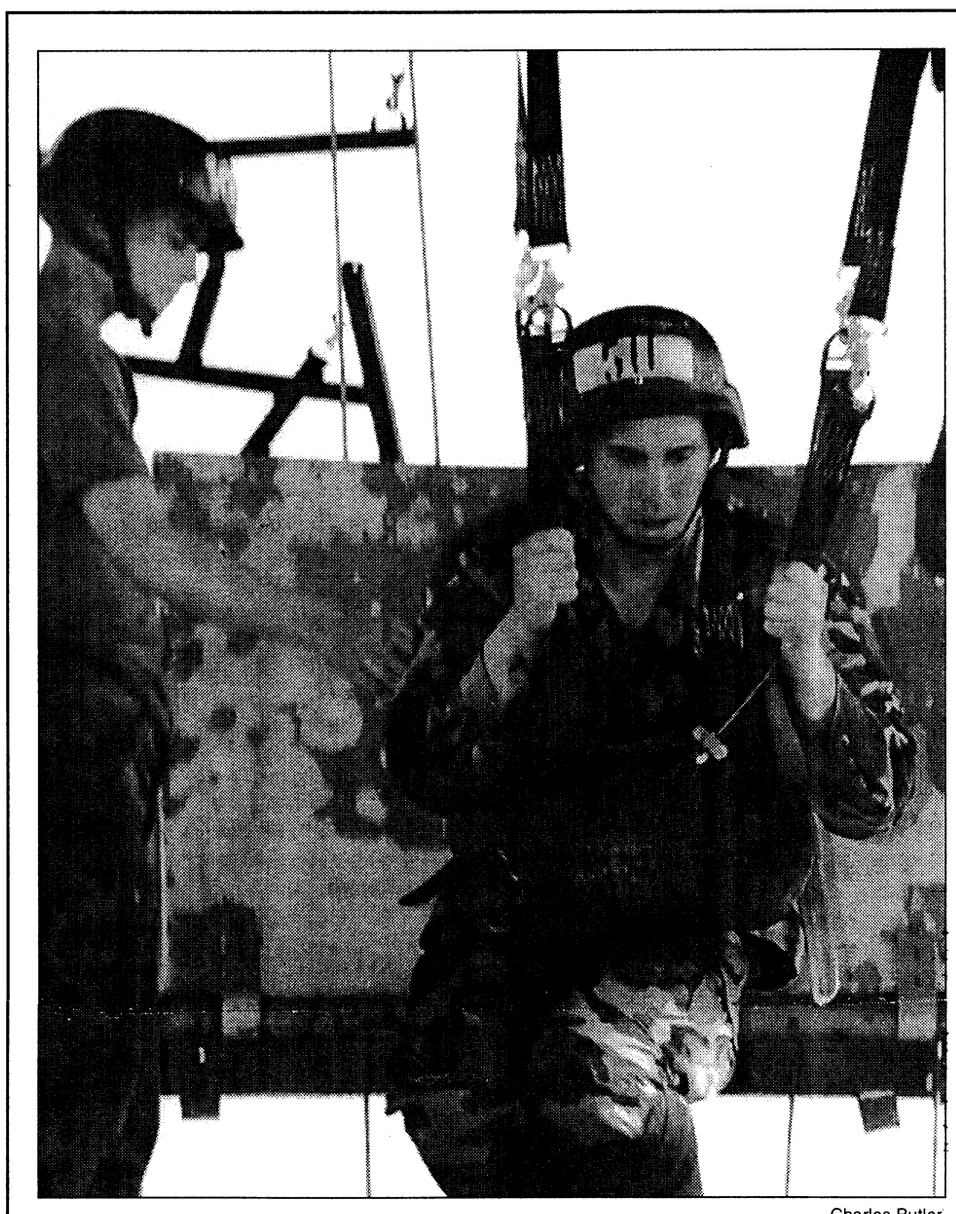
"I think we have a problem," he said.

Arriving on the scene, Lenoir was brought up to speed.

Four men had been arrested in the club parking lot for possession of about 15 grams of marijuana.

They were apprehended by military police who noticed the suspects sitting in an illegally parked van in the club parking lot. When the MP approached the van, the suspects rolled down the window and the MP smelled the marijuana.

A search of the vehicle by military police and criminal investigation division agents turned up the controlled substance and the suspects were taken into custody.



One of the suspects had an outstanding warrant and would later be turned over to the Columbus Police Department.

Drug arrests are not the norm on Fort Benning, Lenoir said.

One of the arresting MP's said in his two years on post, this had been his first drug-related activity.

Referring to the fact that three of the suspects came from off post, Lenoir said, "We are doing our best to keep that stuff (drugs) out of here."

Protecting the public, responding to emergencies and maintaining law and order, just an average night in the lives of the military police on Fort Benning.

911 Center provides help to community

By Elizabeth LaMonica
Special to The Bayonet©

Crises occur daily at the Emergency Communications Center on Fort Benning.

The operators, located in Nelson Building, Building 215, answer crisis calls and respond with the necessary help.

The center, which cost about $2 million, was completed in August 1993 and still receives support for its operating costs through a basic charge from each phone bill on post.

Since January 1995, fire emergency calls have been routed there, centralizing crisis calls. Previously, the fire station number had to be dialed directly.

For the month of February alone, the center received calls requiring 1,760 police units, 374 fire responses and 209 medical emergencies. The center also monitors arms rooms and fire alarms in buildings around post.

From the instant a person dials in, information such as the location of the call and the type of phone (residential or coin-operated) the call was made from is immediately available to the dispatchers.

> "Our system is clearly the best in the U.S. Army."
> — Col. Thomas J. Cain
> Director of Public Safety

The system also gives the dispatchers a list of pre-loaded questions, helping them to quickly understand the needs of the caller and to send the appropriate emergency vehicle.

"The system can give a history of the 911 calls made from a location previously," said Bessie Tucker, Emergency 911 System Administrator. "The computer also has a record of the building's composition and the location of the gas or electric cutoffs, both of which would be important in the case of a fire."

The computer also has the Intergraph Computer Graphic Overlay System. This system allows the computer to take the location information and project it on a map to ensure the emergency vehicles get to the scene as quickly as possible.

The dispatchers can also use the computer to check for any weapons that may be registered to the quarters, and the computer lists any unique abilities associated with any officers on duty. Given time, the dispatchers can send a Spanish-speaking police officer to a scene requiring those talents, Tucker said.

The computer is also used to chart the number of police officers needed so the Department of Public Safety can predict the need for units and schedule accordingly.

Col. Thomas J. Cain, director of public safety, is proud of the center and its abilities.

"Our system is clearly the best in the U.S. Army," Cain said.

"The 911 center is doing a great job!" Paul Leonard, captain of Fire Station 33 said.

Basic course students receive blue cords

Infantry Officer Basic Course

The officers of Company B, 2nd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment, Infantry Officer Basic Course, Class 1-97 conducted a traditional Blue Cord Ceremony March 6 at the Fort Benning Officer's Club.

The purpose of the Blue Cord Ceremony was to recognize the lieutenants who are about to graduate from IOBC as qualified platoon leaders and are now authorized to wear the symbol of the Infantry — the Blue Cord.

The Blue Cord tradition began in the 18th century when European armies used cords and aiguillettes to distinguish between service branches and officers and enlisted. Many of the first U.S. Continental Army units adopted this custom.

After the American revolution, the cords fell out of use. However, during the Mexican War, American officers once again wore short ropes on their shoulders. Mexican military leaders threatened to hang any U. S. officer captured with such cords.

The undaunted officers continued to wear their cords in defiance of the enemy's threat. Soon after, cords and aigrullenes officially reappeared to denote positions and awards and have remained with our Army.

Gen. George Washington was the first to select the color Blue for his Continental Army. For the next 120 years the color alternated between various shades of blue and white. In 1904 the Army officially adopted the blue we now know.

In 1951, during the Korean War Army leadership sought to recognize the Infantry Soldiers and their efforts. Soon after, the blue cord was authorized for only qualified infantrymen.

The 2nd Bn. 11th Inf. Regt., IOBC sergeant major, Sgt. Maj. Marion Dashiell was on hand to present blue cords to the company, platoon and international honor graduates of IOBC Class 1-97. The company honor graduate represents the student who is first in the class, based on academics and leadership. The international honor graduate represents the best of the allied countries' students who were in the class.

Company Honor Graduate, 2nd Lt. Matthew Hover, 25th Infantry Division, Hawaii

1st Platoon Honor Graduate, 2nd Lt. Jonathan Campbell, 1st Bn., 508th Infantry Regiment, Italy

2nd Platoon Honor Graduate, 2nd Lt. Andrew Harmon, 3rd Infantry Division, Fort Stewart, Ga.

4th Platoon Honor Graduate, 2nd Lt. Logan Stanton, 101st Airborne Division, Fort Campbell, Ky.

International Honor Graduate, 1st Lt. Leonas Lukosevicius, Lithuanian army.

Most other lieutenants in the company were presented with their blue cords by their individual noncommissioned officer platoon trainers.

After IOBC, the Company B graduates will report for a variety of follow-on courses before assuming their duties at their permanent assignments. These schools include Airborne School, Pathfinder School. The Bradley Leaders Course, Infantry Mortar Leaders' Course, and 86 will go directly to Ranger school.

63rd completes mission, returns home

By Eric Searcy
63rd Engineer Company (CSE)

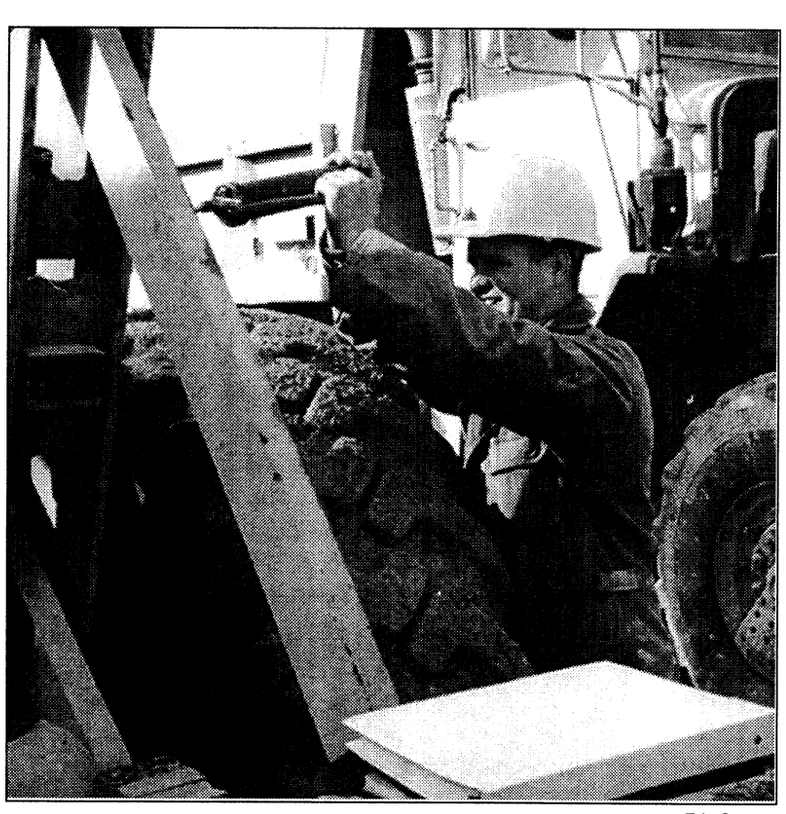
After two months of work, the 63rd Engineer Company (Combat Support Equipment) completed their mission in Fort Bliss, Texas.

The unit hit the ground in mid-January, with a mission to accomplish. The task was to build 9.6 kilometers of road to standard and upgrade two roads, totaling 11.2 kilometers of road construction on Fort Bliss.

The 63rd Engineer Company was a part of Roving Sands I. Reserve units such as the 844th Engineer Combat Battalion (Heavy) from Tennessee, the 926th Engineer Combat Battalion (Heavy) from Alabama, and the 285th Engineer Company (CSE) from Louisiana worked with the 63rd during their two week rotations.

The installation will use the road for Roving Sands II — the joint Air Defense Artillery exercise with participating units from the United States, Japan and Germany.

The soldiers worked 14-hour days



"Unit cohesion and unparalleled motivation were the driving forces behind a superior end product," 1st Sgt. Randy Dyson said.

When construction began, the unit placed large rocks to control loose sand called moon dust. The company then worked to bring the Site 10 Road to grade, with the nearest water, the key element for compaction, 30 to 45-minutes away. After bringing the road to grade, the final construction phase was completed by adding a wearing surface.

"This project saved Fort Bliss nearly $450,000 in construction costs and provided enormous training opportunities for our leadership and soldiers," Capt. Melody Smith, 63rd Eng. Co. Commander said.

During the training, soldiers logged over 17,145 manhours and 5,660 equipment hours. The company used 37,229 gallons of fuel and 2,560,000 gallons of water.

The 63rd Eng. Co. returned to Fort Benning March 14.

IOBC class 1-97 graduates course

Infantry Officer Basic Course

Company B, 2nd Battalion, 11 Infantry Regiment, Infantry Officer Basic Course, Class 1-97, graduated 160 second lieutenants March 7 in a ceremony at Marshall Auditorium in Infantry Hall.

This marks the completion of 17 weeks of IOBC training for Class 1-97 that began Oct. 27.

The guest speaker at the ceremony was Gen. David A. Bramlett, commander, U. S. Army Forces Command.

Bramlett traveled from Fort McPherson, Ga., to take part in the ceremony. Bramlett briefly recalled his days as a second lieutenant in Vietnam touching on what would be expected of a new second lieutenant and some of the difficulties faced by a second lieutenant in a smaller Army, that is forced to do more with less, across the globe.

Prior to the close of the ceremony. Fort Benning's Commanding General, Maj. Gen. Carl F. Ernst, presented Bramlett the Order of St. Maurice Medallion.

This award recognizes individuals who have contributed significantly to the promotion of the Infantry in ways that standout in the eyes of the recipients peers, subordinates and superiors.

Maurice was the commander of a ban legion in the year 287. Serving under Augustus Maximiam, he refused an unlawful order to sacrifice innocent civilians. At this refusal, Maurice and his legion were slaughtered. The Order of Maurice is sponsored by the National Infantryman's Association.

SMSU hall of fame inducts Soldier

By Brian R. Voller
Bayonet staff writer

The deputy commander of the U.S. Army Physical Fitness School, was honored Feb. 22, by being inducted into the Southwest Missouri State University athletic Hall of Fame.

Lt. Col. Chuck Hunsaker received the induction because of his work from 1972 to 1977 as the head track and cross country coach at the university.

Hunsaker said the letter he received announcing his induction came as a huge surprise.

"I was shocked really," Hunsaker said. "I had been gone for 20 years and I had never really even thought about the hall of fame. I knew it was something they had because a number of my runners had been inducted into it, but as far as my induction, I had never given it a whole lot of thought."

Hunsaker said he got his start with running when a coach approached him about joining the cross country team. Since that time, Hunsaker said track has played a significant roll in his life.

"I had never run competitively before but I tried, I did terrible, but I enjoyed getting out there and doing it," Hunsaker said. "So I came out the next year after running over the summer and I ended up becoming the number one man on the team ... I enjoyed it even when I wasn't good, but when I was successful, I really enjoyed it.

"That little beginning, just getting started running, has led to almost every good thing that has ever happened to me. Almost everything good that has happened to me has had something to do with running, or some association with track, I even met my wife at a track meet."

During his career as the coach of the SMS track and cross country teams, Hunsaker guided the teams to five Missouri Intercollegiate Athletics Association cross country championships and four finishes among the nation's top five teams in National Collegiate Athletics Association, Division II, cross country competition.

Hunsaker's teams earned a national championship in 1974, earned the national runner-up in Division II in 1973, finished first in 1974, took fourth in 1975, finished second in 1976 and were 11th in 1977.

Also during his tenure, his teams hosted the NCAA Division II national championship in Springfield in 1974 and 1976, and he produced 10 SMS NCAA Division II cross country All-Americans.

While he was a coach at SMS, Hunsaker received the district Coach of the Year award four times in cross country and once in track while receiving two national Coach of the Year selections in cross country.

WOMENS HISTORY MONTH

Principal talks about working women

By Lisa M. Hibbert
Bayonet staff writer

At a Women's History Month breakfast sponsored by the Infantry Training Brigade, Dr. Beth Middlemiss, principal of Faith Middle School, discussed being a working woman, a family member, an educator and a representative of the Fort Benning Schools.

The breakfast, coordinated by the Equal Opportunity Office as part of the post's observance of Women's History Month, was conducted Tuesday at the Sand Hill NCO Club.

In keeping with the Department of Defense theme, "A Fine and Long Tradition of Community Leadership," Middlemiss' theme was "The Journey Toward Yonder."

In Middlemiss' journey, she discussed two people that really influenced her life — a man named Mr. Charlie and a woman, Miss Bartie.

She related a story about how her family moved to Georgia from New Jersey during the last three weeks of first grade.

Her teacher was an elderly woman who wore long dresses with a either a broach or a big fake flower at the collar. She spoke with a heavy southern accent and Middlemiss, being from the north, couldn't understand her, nor could she understand Middlemiss.

Her class had a party and Middlemiss was looking for the refreshments and her teacher told her that they were "over yonder." Not knowing where or what yonder was, Middlemiss described how she cried because she searched for yonder and couldn't find it. Finally she saw Mr. Charlie and he took her to yonder, showing her where all the refreshments where.

Miss Bartie Fleming was Middlemiss's sixth-grade teacher. Although she is a person who greatly impacted her, Middlemiss said that initially, she did not want to be anywhere near this woman.

"When I found out that I was going to be in Miss Bartie's class, I cried and cried," Middlemiss said. "I begged my mother to get me out of that woman's class because I heard that she was very mean and very hard. My mother refused and told me to look at it as a challenge, so I did.

"Miss Bartie ended up being the best teacher I ever had," Middlemiss said. "She was hard but I learned a lot. She was the kind of person who never wasted a second of the day, we were always doing something. When I began to teach, I told myself that I would emulate Miss Bartie until I found someone better but so far I have not."

Middlemiss also talked about how she began teaching and what it is like to be an educator.

"My family and I moved to New Jersey when I was 21 and I got my first job since graduating college doing public relations for a company on Wall Street in New York City," Middlemiss said. "After about a year and a half, my family and I decided that we wanted to come south. The employment recruiter I saw in Atlanta told me the type of position I filled in New York would not be available to women for another 10 years and suggested that I substitute teach.

"The next day I found a job teaching fourth grade for the rest of the year," Middlemiss said. "I never meant to be a teacher, it was only supposed to be a temporary move, but I worked hard and I loved the children. I knew I didn't know enough to teach and I wanted to give the children more but whenever I got lost I would always ask myself, "how would Miss Bartie do it," and I'd do it that way."

Middlemiss has been employed with the Fort Benning School for 12 years and principal of Faith for three. Arriving on post, Middlemiss said she had her first encounter with military life. Although having to get used to a world filled with acronyms, Middlemiss said she really likes what she has found.

"My first day I had a captain talk to me about P.O.C.'s," Middlemiss said. I asked him what's a P.O.C.? But after I got used to the language here, I found in Fort Benning a community in which service and leadership abound," Middlemiss said.

Contest promotes reading

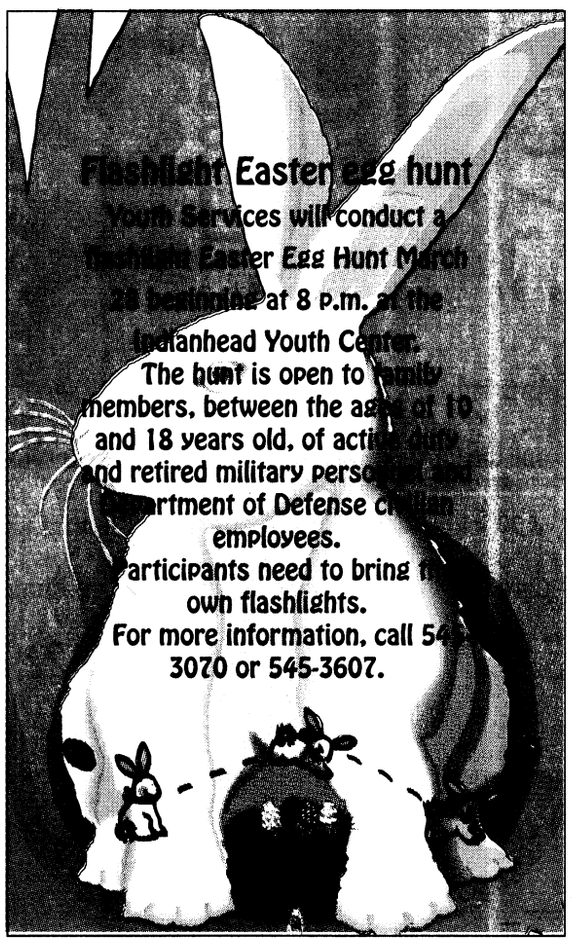
Fort Benning Schools

The Armed Services YMCA is conducting a reading initiative aimed at encouraging individual and family reading.

The Armed Services YMCA described its "Young Readers Project' as a worldwide effort to encourage reading among military family members." It is being conducted in conjunction with the annual celebration of the Month of the Military Child which is celebrated each April.

In order to strengthen an awareness of the importance of reading in the electronic age, the Armed Services YMCA will award U.S. Savings Bonds to students who submit winning essays. The contest is open to the children of all Department of Defense families, including active duty, reserve, and DoD civilian employees.

The high school student, who essay is selected, will receive a $1,000 bond. And $500 bonds each will be presented to a student in middle school, one at the fourth to sixth grade level. and a child in the pre-school to third grade level.



Essays submitted by e-mail for consideration in this contest will be on subjects that develop the theme of reading as a valuable and enjoyable activity. (Families that do not have access to email facilities may submit essays by regular mail.)

Essays must be received by electronic mail (or regular mail for families without e-mail access) at the National Headquarters of the Armed Services YMCA by April 30 to be considered. Winning entries will be announced in May.

Submissions should be sent to: asymca@erols.com

E-mail transmission letters should clearly indicate the student's name, age, grade and address, as well as parents' names and military unit affiliation, and the name and location of the school attended. Schools, libraries, family centers and other agencies on the installation with access to the internet are all contest entry points.

A panel of judges will make its selections based on originality, clarity of writing and on the impact that reading has on the student writing the essay. The panel is being selected by the YMCA of the USA Arts and Humanities Project office.

MACH to change retiree physicals — Martin Army Community Hospital wants every retiree's physical exam to be part of an overall wellness program. Therefore, retirees should schedule their physicals with their enrolled family doctor at either the Family Practice Clinic, Winder Family Clinic, Aviation Medicine Clinic or Victory Clinic.

The Physical Exam Section will no longer schedule retirees for annual physicals. Retirees that are not enrolled in one of these clinics should call (800) 444-5445 to choose a family doctor through Tricare Prime.

OWC offers donations — Any organization which is connected to the U.S. Military may apply for sums of money in the amount of $50 and up from the Officers' Wives' Club of Fort Benning, Boy Scout collecting clothes for badge — Mark Lugo, son of Lt. Col. Alberto Lugo of the U.S. Army Dental Activity and member of Fort Benning Boy Scout Troop 27, is conducting a clothing drive on Fort Benning. The drive is part of Lugo's Boy Scout Eagle Project and benefits the Columbus Salvation Army.

Flyers will be dropped off Sunday to all housing areas on Main Post and Scouts will come by to pick up old clothing March 29.

Clean clothing in any size and condition can be used. Torn clothing can be sold by the Salvation Army by weight.

For more information, call Lugo at 687-1309.

OWC is accepting scholarship applications — The Fort Benning Officers' Wives' Club is now taking applications for its annual merit scholarships presented to graduating high school seniors applying for either an academic scholarship or a vocational and technical scholarship.

The scholarships are also available to any military family member of both active duty and retired personnel, whose mother is a member of the OWC or the EWC.

The complete guidelines for applications are available at the Main Post Library, at the Fort Benning Officers' Club by the cash cage and from the high schools' guidance counselors.

All materials must be received or postmarked no later than today.

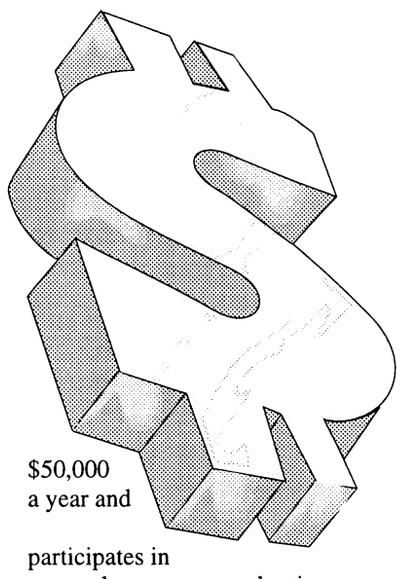
Retirement funds investment can pay off

News USA

During the past decade, Congress has made substantial changes to the once popular individual retirement account.

The Tax Reform Act of 1986 removed the tax deduction on contributions for many Americans. Also, the rules governing IRA withdrawals and spousal IRA contributions were changed on Jan. 1, 1997.



Answer the questions below to test your knowledge of current IRA rules:

1. How many IRA accounts can an individual have?
   d.) Unlimited number.

2. For the 1996 year, what is the total allowable IRA contribution for a couple when one spouse is employed and one spouse is not?
   a.) $2,000.
   b.) $2,250.
   c.) $2,500.
   d.) $4,000.

3. Starting in 1997, if you are under 59 1/2, under which one of the following conditions may you take funds from an IRA and not be subject to penalties?
   a.) To pay medical bills in excess of 7.5 percent of adjusted gross income.
   b.) To purchase a first home.
   c.) To pay off college loans.
   d.) To use as a gift, as long as the amount is under $10,000.

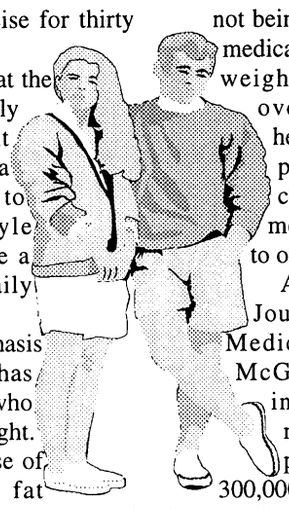
4. Can a person who earns

$50,000 a year and participates in an employer-sponsored retirement plan contribute to an IRA?
Yes. No.

5. Can a married couple earning $39,000 a year and participating in an employer-sponsored retirement plan get a full tax deduction on their IRA contributions?
Yes. No.

Answers: 1-d, 2-b, 3-a, 4-Yes, 5-Yes.

Manage your weight — don't let it manage you



Martin Army Community Hospital

Losing weight, losing fat and looking good are common themes that aren't going away. Month after month, magazines print articles on the easiest and fastest way to achieve the body and figure that you don't currently have. Unfortunately most people are willing to do anything but eat healthy and exercise to achieve it.

People become martyrs during their quest for their perfect weight or physique. Why do we become our own worst enemies when it comes to losing weight and keeping it off? Why can't we see the chronic medical problems that result from being overweight?

In a position paper presented by the American Dietetic Association (ADA), approximately 25 percent of all men and 45 percent of all women are trying to lose weight at any given time in America. These same Americans spend a minimum of $33 billion per year on weight control products and they still don't lose the weight.

There is no miracle drug or product that takes true weight and body fat off and keeps it off, but people don't want to hear, "Eat a healthy diet and exercise for thirty minutes each day."

The ADA insists that the only way to successfully lose weight to keep it off, is to adopt a lifelong commitment to healthy lifestyle behaviors that include a balanced diet and daily exercise.

The increased emphasis on low fat products has not helped all people who are trying to lose weight. People get a false sense of security with low fat products and tend to eat more of them, thus defeating the purpose because low fat does not always mean low calorie. And the bottom line is still calories. Your calorie intake must not exceed your calorie output, otherwise the excess calories will be stored in your body as fat and will register as an increase on the scale.

Aside from the vanity aspect of not being overweight, there are medical risks related to excess weight that can't be overlooked. Coronary heart disease, high blood pressure, and high cholesterol are just a few medical problems linked to obesity.

A study published in the Journal of the American Medical Association by McGinness and Fogue indicated that obesity-related medical problems result in 300,000 deaths per year, which is second only to smoking related causes of death

Maybe eating a diet balanced with high carbohydrate foods such as breads, pastas and cereals, followed by a variety of fruits and vegetables, with limited servings of meat, dairy products and fats is just too simple for people.

"All Foods Can Fit" is this year's American Dietetic Association theme for National Nutrition Month. You don't have to give up favorite foods if they don't fit perfectly within the food guide pyramid, but you do have to moderate or limit intake of a food that may be too high in fat or calories. Once you tell yourself you can't have something because you are on a diet, you blew it. Your diet has to coincide with your preferences and your lifestyle.

Adding a little more exercise on the day when you eat too much and monitoring your portion sizes is the key to success. Dietitians don't want or expect everyone to live on lettuce and diet soda. Dietitians work to develop achievable diet plans that meet patients' individual needs. If you need help with planning a healthy, balanced diet for you and your family, contact your local dietitian so that you can make all foods fit, while you are developing your other healthy lifestyle habits.

This outage will affect all of the 2700 Block, 2800 Block, buildings 4, 6, 17, 73, 75, 74, 76, 83 and 399, the NCO Club, Bowling Alley (heating only, hot water will not be affected in these buildings only), Sightseeing Chapel, Bernheim Dental Clinic (Bldg. 2818) and Directorate of Logistics Shop 1.

The outage will result in no domestic hot water, no heating and no steam for the duration of the outage. Outage is necessary to repair steam and condensate lines throughout Main Post.

Hot summer afternoons

As summer approaches, and before those long, hot Georgia summer afternoons are an everyday occurrence, we would like to take this opportunity to discuss the Fort Benning Energy Program.

Fort Benning's annual energy bill is roughly $17 million. This includes electricity, natural gas, propane gas and fuel oil. So you can see how important it is to manage this major part of our annual budget.

We must reduce our total energy consumption by 56 billion British thermal units per year. This is equal to 400,000 gallons of diesel fuel, enough fuel to heat the average house for 650 years.

Fort Benning has had an energy conservation program for many years. However, in 1994, by presidential executive order, Fort Benning was mandated that by the year 2005, it reduce its energy consumption by 30 percent from its 1985 usage amount. This is how we developed the 56 billion BTUs per year reduction amount.

Over the period 1985 through 1996, Fort Benning has had one of the most successful energy programs in the Department of Army. This success has shown a cost avoidance of roughly $5.5 million over this 10-year period.

Our goal at the Directorate of Public Works is to provide you, our customers, with the best possible utility service and still remain within budget to avoid an adverse impact to missions of the installation.

Efforts to reduce our energy consumption include the replacement of old, inefficient equipment (the Fort Benning Main Mall has a new air conditioning system and new high-efficiency chillers have been installed on Kelley Hill), and the remodeling of structures using energy-conserving materials (examples include a window replacement program and the installation of high-efficiency air conditioners in family housing units).

But, we still need your help to meet our energy conservation goal. Some good "cents" idea's include:

•Set your thermostats to 78 degrees. In the summer, every degree lower can add substantially to electrical consumption.

•If you're going to be away on vocation, it pays to turn the thermostat to a setting that's higher than you normally use.

•Don't block air registers or air grills with furniture, draperies or carpets.

•Run the bathroom exhaust fan only when showing or bathing and your kitchen exhaust fan only when cooking.

•Check air filters monthly. Dirty filters or items placed too near air flow vents make your system work harder.

•Wait until after 7 p.m. to cook, bathe, run your dishwasher or operate other appliances, which add heat and humidity.

This not only makes your air conditioner work harder, but electrical cost is substantially more expensive between the hours of 2 and 7 p.m.

•Keep the sunlight out by drawing drapes or blinds.

•Water your lawn early in the morning.

Energy Conservation should be a state of mind. Use what you really need but don't waste this valuable resource.

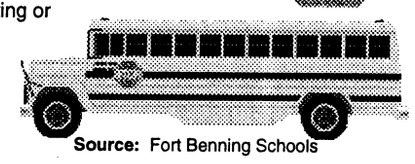
Yard waste pick up changes

All yard waste must be in paper biodegradable bags for pick up by the curbside recycling contractor effective Match 31.

Residents may use durable plastic or metal containers in addition or in lieu of paper waste bags. However, mark the plastic or metal containers "yard waste only." This will help ensure that your yard waste is picked up and not mistaken for trash.

You can pick up a supply of five bags per visit at the DPW, Self-Help (U-Do It) Center, Building 385. This change in the handling of yard waste will greatly improve the efficiency of our Recycling Program. For more information, call the Self-Help Center at 545-3963.

If you have questions or topics that you would like to be addressed in the DPW "Information Corner," call Glenn Todd, customer relations specialist, DPW, at 545-2117, or write to the Directorate of Public Works, Building 6, Room 409, ATTN: ATZB-PWM (Glenn Todd), Fort Benning, Ga., 31905.



Preserve our childlife

More than 1,000 children between the ages of 5 and 14 are killed annually as the result of pedestiran-motor vehicle accidents.

Stay alert for children going to and coming from school:

- Obey the speed limit (15 miles per hour) in school zones.
- Watch for children walking, skating or cycling.
- Stop for buses loading and unloading children.

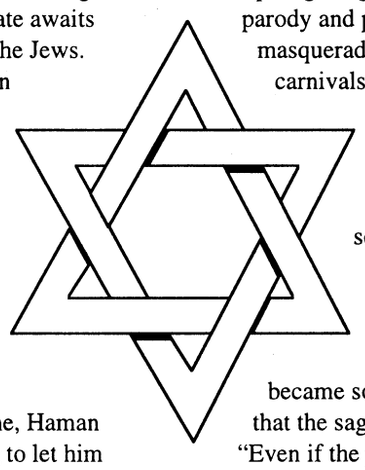
PURIM

Jews celebrate holiday

By Chana Timoner
USAIC Chaplain's Office

The Book of Esther expresses the mood of celebration and revelry which has characterized Purim — the Festival of Lots — for more than 2,500 years.

reflections



The story of Purim begins 25 centuries ago with the selection of a queen and the appointment of a viceroy by King Ahasuerus (Xerxes) of Persia. With these successive actions, the seeds of a great historic conflict are sown.

First, from among the beautiful women presented to him in the search for a successor to Queen Vashti, the king chooses Esther, a cousin of Mordecai, leader of the Jewish community in Shushan.

Then, he elevates a courtier, Haman, to the position of grand vizier and orders all the kingdom to bow down in Haman's presence.

When Mordecai refuses to do so, the furious Haman bribes the king to issue a decree to kill all of the Jews of Persia because "their laws are diverse from all the people, neither do they keep the King's laws." He cast lots (purim) to determine the genocidal date: Adar 13 was chosen. (This year, it coincides with March 23).

Mordecai puts on sackcloth and ashes as a sign of mourning and tells Esther what fate awaits her, as well as all the Jews. Planning to petition Ahasuerus on behalf of her people, Esther invites the king and Haman to two successive banquets at her private apartment in the palace.

At the same time, Haman persuades the king to let him erect a gallows 50 cubits high for the execution of Mordecai as an example to all.

At the second banquet, Ahasuerus offers Esther half of his kingdom. She pleads instead only that "my life be given me at my petition, and my people at my request."

Aware now of the extremity of Haman's vengeful bloodlust, the angry king orders the grand vizier to be hanged on the gallows meant for Mordecai. Allowed to defend themselves against the attacks unleashed on them Adar 13 and 14, the Jews are victorious.

Mordecai is appointed grand vizier in Haman's place. He and Esther circulate letters to the Jews throughout the empire establishing Purim as a festival to be celebrated yearly

Purim, a resounding tale of Jewish triumph over isolation, tyranny and genocide, has reverberated through the ages inspiring songs and drama, parody and pranks, pageants and masquerades, bonfires and carnivals lifting up the spirits of Jews who have had to confront and overcome the scourge of anti-semitism.

Because of the divine promise of freedom from oppression, Purim became so dear to the Jews that the sages have declared "Even if the prophetic books of the Bible were to be forgotten, the Book of Esther would be retained.

"Purim is as great a day as the day on which the Torah was given."

In the synagogue, the evening of March 22, and the morning of March 23, the Megillah (scroll) of Esther is read out loud preceded by three blessings. Each time Haman's name is read, children make a clamorous noise to blot it out. A popular noisemaker is the "grogger," a ratchet twirled around and around.

Army Guard chaplains deploy

By Dov Schwartz
USAIC Public Affairs Office

For the first time, the National Guard Bureau formed a unit composed solely of chaplains and chaplain's assistants.

The group, dubbed "the God squad," is deploying to Europe in support of Operation Joint Endeavor.

According to Chaplain (Lt. Col.) Richard Bower, two chaplains and their assistants will deploy to Bosnia. Bower and a chaplains assistant will deploy to Croatia. The remaining chaplains' and chaplains' assistants will backfill positions in Germany. Their tours are scheduled to last 270 days.

Bower, a twenty-year member of the New York National Guard, will be on his first overseas deployment. In civilian life, he is the pastor of the Elim Alliance Church of Valley Cottage, N.Y.

Bower said that his congregation is supportive of his military obligation.

"They see my military service as an extension of my ministry," he said.

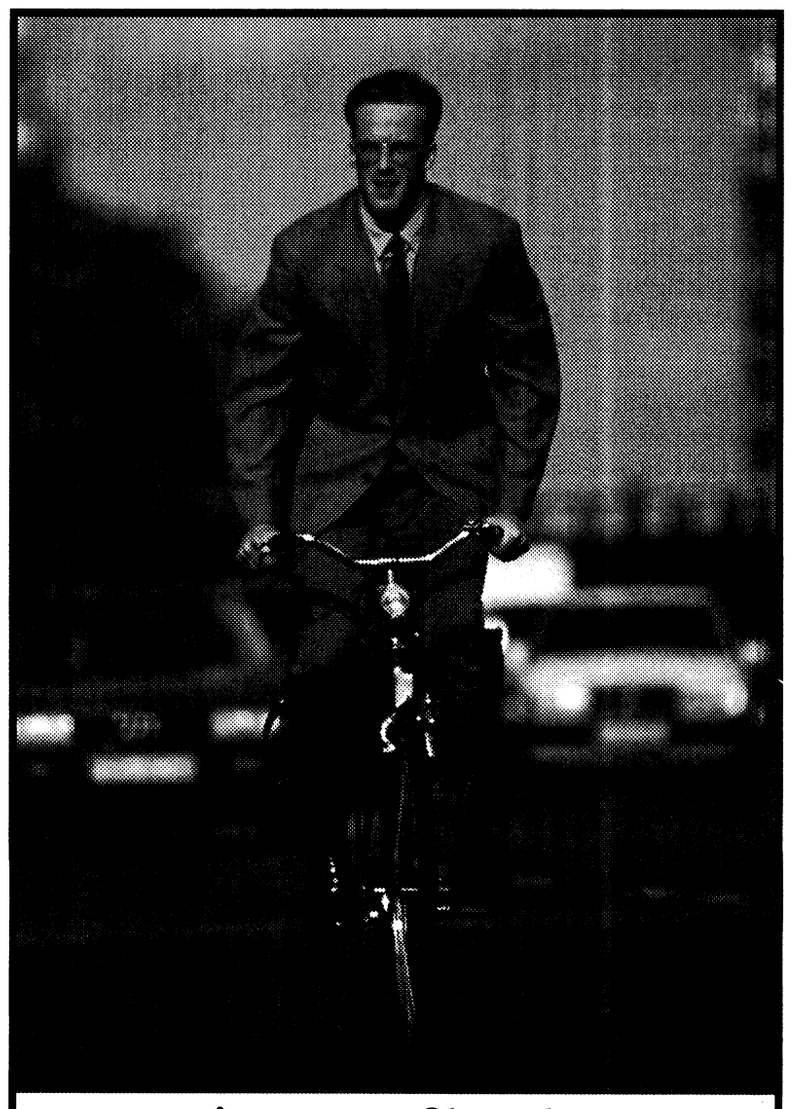
Bower sees his mission as one of encouraging faith and sustaining hope.

"There are no atheists in a foxhole," Bower noted.

In the opinion of Army National Guard Senior Chaplain (Brig. Gen.) Burney H. Enzor, Guard chaplains and chaplains' assistants are highly motivated and eager to participate in the mission.

According to Enzor, the mission is important for the morale for the Guard Chaplaincy.

"This deployment has given the Guard and the Guard Chaplaincy a little parity. It was like a cheer went up when they realized our chaplains were going to the big box," he said.



And no one cheered harder than Sgt. Prema Thomas, a chaplain's assistant. The grandmother of three from Albuquerque, N.M., refers to the chaplains' assistant military occupational speciality as an "MOS of calling."

Thomas said that deployed Soldiers attend worship services more often than continental U.S. based troops.

"In peacetime it is hard to get soldiers to participate in worship services. But let there be a sign of trouble and everyone's amen, here I am-pray for me."

How good and pleasant it is when brothers live together in unity!

Christians praise God on Palm Sunday

By Richard Moore
USAIS Chaplains Office

Palm Sunday was the one day Jesus allowed his disciples, along with the crowds of people, to pay homage to him as the king of Israel, Messiah.

reflections

He submitted to their robust joy, allowing full expression of their feelings for him. We get a running start to this royal day at Bethany, the home of Lazarus, Martha and Mary, in Chapter 12 of the Gospel of John.

God always prepares the way. To appreciate Palm Sunday, Christians need first to pass through the events before Bethany.

Jesus left Zacchaeus at Jericho walking for six hours to the little village of Bethany. He arrived early Sunday afternoon, the ninth of Nisan, by the Jewish calendar.

A dinner was served in Jesus' honor. Lazarus, whom Jesus raised from the dead, also is a guest shared the meal with Jesus while his sister, Martha, fulfilled her gift, of hospitality and served a sumptuous meal. (Remember the last meal when Jesus chided Martha that only one thing is needful?)

The people are happy and excited that Jesus stopped by to visit them and their local heroes, Lazarus, Martha and Mary. At a time early in the festivities, Mary paid Jesus an honor by anointing him. It was customary for guest to be anointed with fragrant oils on the Jewish feast days(Psalm 23:5).

Mary broke the neck of an alabaster bottle and poured nearly 12 ounces of very expensive fragrant oil on Jesus' feet. In addition, she let down her long hair and wiped his feet with it.

Then, Judas Iscariot, the embezzling treasurer of the group, complained about the wasted expense. His complaint was a pretext, coming from a heart boiling with discontent.

Judas was upset with how Jesus operated — low key, power in reserve, loving the little people.

Maybe the way Jesus loved and tolerated Judas is a herald for the forthcoming church — a church that should include those who express what others are thinking and those who love money.

To Judas' snide remark, Jesus gave a rebuke, intimating that "This day it's okay to honor me."

Enthusiasm was catching on like wildfire. This was the hour of royal manifestation which was hoped for by his mother (John 2:4) and demanded by his brothers (John 7:4).

Until now, public acclamation was refused by our Lord. During his three years of public ministry, the crowds surrounding Jesus and his small band of disciples wanted him to claim Messiahship and lead a popular movement.

However, Jesus intentionally repressed popularity during those years in Galilee, but not, Palm Sunday.

Jesus surrendered to the spontaneous joy and praise of God as he began the 30-minute journey up to Jerusalem. The royal advent now sounds, "Hosanna! Blessed is he who comes in the name of the Lord! Blessed is the king of Israel!"

The people knew this chant by heart because they use it at the Passover during the Paschal Supper. It's also repeated at the seven-day Feast of Tabernacles (Leviticus 23 :39) that occurs every year. Hosanna means save — I pray thee, an appropriate word for the reason of the hour.

Since today our Lord wished to accept this homage, he should not remain in the crowd of people.

Instead, he rode a donkey to Jerusalem. It's appropriate to the spiritual nature of this day because it fulfills Bible prophecy: "Do not be afraid, O Daughter of Zion; see, your king is coming, seated on a donkey's colt (Zechariah 9:9)."

The king of Israel came bringing peace and humility. Jesus also accepts palm branches to be placed on the path before him. This crown of leaves was an emblem of beauty and joy, but also of salvation.

The enthusiasm, joy and kingly ovations by these crowds of people walking beside the Lord to Jerusalem announced to the deaf ears and hard hearts of the national power brokers, "Behold, here is the king of Israel!"

Jesus teaches message of hope at last supper

By Tim Atkinson
USAIS Chaplains Office

"A new commandment I give you: love one another. As I have loved you, so you must love one another (John 13: 34)."

reflections

Holy Thursday, or Maundy Thursday, is a significant day in the church calendar because it was on this occasion that Jesus washed his disciples' feet and instituted the last supper. It also prepares the congregation for Good Friday.

The name Maundy comes from "mandatum," which is Latin for "commandment." Commandment is the first word for the anthem sung in the evening liturgical service. In most European countries, the day is called Holy Thursday as a part of the Holy Week observance of Christ's passion and sufferings

In the Gospel of John, the emphasis of the last supper was Christ washing the disciples' feet as a servant was accustomed to doing. Jesus said he had set an example in his servant role and that the disciples should do the same.

In John 13:17, he promised a blessing for those who would practice a servant leadership role. In the Roman Catholic liturgy, the "pedilavium," or feet washing ceremony, is still practiced. The celebrant washes the feet of 12 people to commemorate Christ's washing of his disciples' feet.

At the Promise Keepers Meeting for pastors last year, in front of 40,000 ministers, Coach Bill McCartney made a comment about his love for an African-American minister who was present. He said if he had water and a towel, he would wash his feet. Someone in the crowd accommodated him, and McCartney washed the man's feet.

This was a touching display of servant leadership, love and humility.

The leadership role of Christ on this holy and solemn Thursday was the example and role of the suffering servant of whom the prophet Isaiah prophesied (Isaiah 50:4-9; 52:13-Chapter 53). He was to become the Passover lamb to take away the world's sins.

Sunday he rode into Jerusalem on a donkey, then he washed his disciples' feet.

Good Friday, after being betrayed by Judas, forsaken by the his disciples, convicted of blasphemy by the Jewish Council, he faced the ridicule of Soldiers, a mock trial before Pilate and Herod and ultimately crucifixion (a criminal's death on a Roman cross).

Christ would be stripped of so much in the events ahead. The altar vestments are stripped and laid bare after this service. The worshippers leave in silence.

The Holy Thursday service and the traditional way of observing this day is to identify with Christ's suffering and to understand his great love for humanity.

The Apostle Paul best sums it up in his statement, "I want to know Christ and the power of his resurrection and the fellowship of his sufferings, becoming like him in his death, and so, somehow, to attain to the resurrection from the dead (Philippians 3:10-11)."

To live life with the love of Jesus Christ and to suffer for his sake in service to God and humanity is to live indeed. The Gospel of John records Jesus' words: "Greater love has no one than this, that he lay down his life for his friends (John 15:13)."

In England, a custom survives of giving "maundy pennies" to the poor. This recalls an earlier custom in which the sovereign washed the feet of the poor on Maundy Thursday.

Good deals available on airline tickets

Better Business Bureau

The vacation season is almost upon us. Never have travelers faced so many bargain offers: from the airlines, travel agents, travel clubs, tour and charter operators and consolidators.

For the vacation traveler who is looking for a bargain airline ticket, buying from a consolidator may be the best way to go. But, the Better Business Bureau advises that you understand all the conditions attached to the ticket and to do some comparison shopping before you buy.

A consolidator is an airline ticket wholesaler who buys tickets from airlines and resells the tickets to travel agents, ticket brokers or directly to the consumers at prices that are often below the airlines' published prices.

Consumers who are considering purchasing discount airfare tickets should be aware of possible limitations and conditions, such as:

•Flights and fares may not be confirmed and tickets may not arrive in a timely manner;

•Tickets may not be refundable, exchangeable, endorsable or transferable. If they are, stiff penalties may apply;

•Restrictions are developed by the airline or by guidelines in airline and consolidator contracts, not by a travel agent.

The travel agent can't be liable for performance failures of the airline or consolidator.

Savings on ticket prices will fluctuate, depending on competitive factors in the marketplace, such as pricing "wars" among airlines. Prices will also depend on how flexible you are with your travel dates, whether travel is during a busy season and how much time you have to shop for the lowest fare.

To protect yourself, pay for your ticket by credit card. If there is a problem, you can delay or halt credit card payments until the problem is resolved.

Finally, contact the BBB in the area where the consolidator is located for a reliability report before making a purchasing decision.

volunteer of the week

Name: Leslie Ann Smith
Hometown: Hinton, West Virginia

Volunteer job title: Company Family Support Group representative

Volunteer organizations:
Co. C, 1st Battalion, 30th Infantry, 3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division (Mechanized), Family Support Group

Why do you volunteer?
To help others and to ease our Soldier's concerns that someone will be there to care for their families when they are in need.

What do you like most about volunteering?
The satisfaction of being on a winning team.

What are your special interests and hobbies?
My family, reading and crafts.

What others have to say :
"We knew Leslie was the right person for the position when we found out she had been doing anonymous good deeds for the company since their arrival. She cares about both the wives and our Soldiers and chooses to give her time and energy for the benefit of the company and the support group instead of a paying job. She's really helped to build up morale and has proven she is a professional and an excellent leader. Charlie company is truly blessed to have her working and caring for us!"

—Jennifer Loffert
Family Support Group co-advisor
Co. C., 1st Bn, 30th Inf. Regt. , 3rd Bde, 3rd Inf. Div. (Mech)

"She's positive, helpful and a team player. Mrs. Smith is very dedicated and doesn't do things for the recognition, which is why I think it's great that we can publicly thank her for all her hard work."

—Lt. Col. Tom Heineken
Commander, 1st Bn, 30th Inf. Regt. , 3rd Bde, 3rd Inf. Div. (Mech)

INTRAMURAL BASKETBALL

203rd wins championship trophy

John W. Peeler

Players from the 203rd Forward Support Battalion defend their goal during the Intramural Basketball Championship game at the Kelley Hill Gym.

By John W. Peeler
Special to the Bayonet©

In the last game of the season, the 203rd Forward Support Battalion, 3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division (Mechanized), beat out Battery B, 1st Battalion, 10th Field Artillery, 3rd Infantry Division (Mechanized), 68-63 to win the Intramural Basketball Championship March 14 at the Kelley Hill Gym.

As the stands filled up with spectators, mostly from the 203rd FSB, excitement filled the air with the sights and sounds of big time basketball.

The public address system echoed the familiar sound "Are you ready to rumble" and with the introductions, playing of the National Anthem and 203rd FSB song, the game was underway.

In the first half of the game, both teams played tough defense. Btry. B played a more fleet-footed, quick-paced offense and the 203rd FSB controlled the boards, keeping the Btry. B team from scoring.

With 28 seconds left in the first half, the 203rd team lead 28-25. Btry. B took possession of the ball and moved the ball down court into the three-point scoring range. Trying to get the last shot in before expiration of the half, Btry. B slowed the game down eating up 25 seconds off the scoreboar clock before attempting the game tying shot. With three seconds left Btry. B took the shot, missing it as the buzzer sounded.

As the second half got underway, the 203rd team was much crisper than in the first half.

The 203rd put together a fast-breaking offense combined with pinpoint passing to take control of the game.

With a little more than seven minutes left in the game, Btry. B was down by five points. This would be the closest Btry. B would come to the championship as the 203rd team dominated the rest of the game and ultimately earned the right to be called the best intramural basketball team on post.

In the consolation game, 608th Ordinance Company, 36th Engineer Group (Combat), defeated the War Eagles from Headquarters and Service Company, 30th Adjutant General (Reception) Battalion, Infantry Training Brigade, 74-69 to take third place in the championship tournament.

In a hard fought game, the sometimes uncontested outside shooting of the 608th Ord. Co. ultimately proved to be the downfall for the War Eagles.

The War Eagles moved to within three points going into the first half break, and appeared to have the momentum as the second half began.

Poor shooting plagued the War Eagles and the 608th Ord. Co. team put together a tough zone defense keeping the War Eagle offense off balance.

The War Eagles were able to keep the game close going into the final 36 seconds of the game trailing 68-67 but a foul and subsequent successful free-throws put the game out of reach for the War Eagles.

The final 17 seconds clicked off the clock with the 608th Ord. Co. winning the game 74-69.

Armed Forces meet on post for volleyball trials, championships

By John W. Peeler
Special to the Bayonet©

Fort Benning conducts the All-Army Men and Womens Volleyball Trial Camp April 15 through May 4.

A breakfast to officially welcome the participants will be at the Officers' Club at 8 a.m. April 16.

More than 50 men and women from throughout the Army will participate in the trials with the field of athletes narrowed down to 12 men and 12 women by the end of the camp.

The training camp will provide Soldier athletes the opportunity to train and ultimately compete at the Armed Forces Championship and national level competition.

Training and practices for the camp will be conducted at the Audie Murphy and Santiago Fitness centers.

Following the camp, Fort Benning will conduct the Armed Forces Championships beginning May 5 and ending May 10.

The championships will bring together the best men and women volleyball players from the Army, Air Force, Navy and the Marine Corps.

The Army women's team will be defending their 1996 championship title with the Air Force defending the men's title.

The Army men's team, winners of the championship in 1994 and 1995 will try to regain the form that brought them two consecutive championships.

The championships will be conducted at the Kelley Hill Fitness Center, Building 9001.

The opening ceremony begins at 11 a.m. May 7 with the awards banquet being conducted at 7 p.m. May 10.

Following the awards banquet, members of the Armed Forces Volleyball team will be named.

For more information, call 545-4300.

MARKSMANSHIP UNIT

Pistol shooters claim victory in Black Mountain match

USAMU Public Affairs Office

International pistol shooters of the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit walked away with several victories in the Black Mountain Monthly Match conducted in San Diego, Calif., recently.

Eric G. Daniels won the Rapid Fire Match and came in third in the Centerfire Match with teammate Carl W. Trompeter winning first in the Centerfire Match and taking third place in the Air Pistol Match.

Travis A. Jorgenson was the winner in the Air Pistol Junior Division with Terry S. Bradley taking second place. Jorgenson also won first place in the Men's Division Sports Pistol Air Match and Shane E. Harreld won the Women's Division Sports Pistol Air Match.

USAMU wins Gold in Canada

Members of the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit's Running Target Team walked away with several Gold medals in the Crossman International Airgun Championships recently in Canada.

Armando R. Ayala finished in first place in the 30 plus 30 Running Target Match with Lance D. Dement taking third place in the event.

In the 10-Meter finals, Ayala won first place, attaining a score of 97.9, putting him at the world-class level with Dement finishing in third place.

The USAMU team of Ayala, Dement and Michael E. Moore also took first place in the Running Target Three-Man Team Championship with a score of 3, 259 out of a possible 3,600 points.

Shooters dominate in desert

U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit service pistol shooters won first place in five of nine international and service pistol matches recently at the Desert Mid-Winter Championships in Phoenix, Ariz.

Kimberly J. Kolb captured first place in the international Ladies Sport Pistol event with Steven M. King winning first place in the Centerfire event. King also took second place in the Individual Service Pistol and third place in the Standard Pistol event with Roger C. Jacobson taking first place in the .45-caliber event and third place in the Free Pistol event

King continued USAMU's dominance of the match by winning first place in the Individual Service Pistol Centerfire with Jacobson taking third place.

In the team matches, USAMU's Blue Team dominated all three service pistol team matches and the overall team event.

The Blue Team posted winning scores of 1,177 out of a possible 1200 points in the .22-caliber team match, 1,159 points in the centerfire match and 1,157 points in the .45-caliber team match. The team swept the overall team event with a winning aggregate score of 3,493 out of a possible 3,6000 points.

OUTDOORS

outdoor outlook

Georgia State Parks offer guided canoe trips — Outdoor enthusiasts can explore Georgia's scenic waterways on guided canoe trips at Hamburg High Falls and Panola Mountain State parks.

Park staff will explain basic canoeing techniques and interpret natural surroundings while leading paddlers on day-long trips.

Participants can see beaver, otters, kingfishers, great blue herons, turtles and other wildlife.

Trips fill quickly, so pre-registration is required. To register, call the park directly.

The cost is $15 per person, which includes canoe, paddles and life preserver. Canoers who bring their own equipment pay $10. A $2 park pass fee is charged per vehicle.

Eighteen of Georgia's state parks rent canoes so visitors can explore lakes and streams on their own.

Prices are $3 to $5 for an hour, $8 to $15 for four hours and $12 to $20 for an entire day. For a free "Guide to Georgia State Parks and Historic Sites" or "1997 Events" brochure, call (404) 656-3530.

To reserve a campsite or fully equipped cottage, call (800) 864-7275.

The parks that will offer canoe trips are:

•Hamburg State Park, Mitchell, April 5, 12, 19 and 26, 9:30 a.m. to 2 p.m.

This is an easy, 4.5-mile float down the Ogeechee River.

Call (912) 552-2393 to register.

•High Falls State Park, Jackson, second Saturday of each month, enjoy an easy trip down the Towaliga River, May 10, June 14, July 12, Sept. 13 and Oct. 11. Call (912) 993-3053 to register.

•Panola Mountain State Conservation Park, Stockbridge, May 17, 9 a.m. to 2 p.m.

This clean-up trip down the South River combines wildlife observation with litter pickup.

Sept. 27, 9 a.m. to 2 p.m. Explore three miles of the South River which forms the northern boundary of this park.

Nov. 15, 5:30 to 7:30 p.m. Adults may enjoy a sunset float on the park's 3.5-acre lake. Call (770) 389-7801 to register.

State parks post fishing tournaments — The arrival of spring means it is time to get out your favorite fishing pole and head off Georgia's state parks.

This year, the parks have planned a dozen fishing events where serious anglers can strut their stuff while beginning youngsters learn the basics. The tournaments are a great excuse for families to spend time together in the spring sunshine.

Most state parks have boat ramps and docks, and many rent boats and sell bait. For more information about a fishing tournament, call the host park.

Fishing tournaments are just some of the many events conducted by state parks and historic sites throughout the year.

All events are free and parking is $2.

A parent and child fishing tournament takes place April 12 from 6 a.m. to 6 p.m. at Mistletoe State Park.

Applying parents and grandparents may join younger family members for a day of fishing competition. Grand prize is two nights in one of Mistletoe's cottages.

The tournament is limited bank fishing only. There is no cost for the tournament. For more information, call (706) 541-0321.

A children's fishing rodeo occurs April 12 from 8:30 to 11 a.m. at John Tanner State Park, Carrollton.

Children 15 and younger can try their luck on two stocked lakes while competing for different prizes. The tournament is free.

For more information, call (770) 830-2222.

The junior fishing rodeo is May 3 at 7:30 a.m. at Noon Black Rock Mountain State Park, Mountain City.

Children 15 and younger can compete on a lake stocked with trout and catfish.

The tournament is free and there is no fishing license required.

For more information, call (706) 746-2141.

A kids' catfish rodeo takes place May 17 from 10 a.m. to 3 p.m. at Cloudland Canyon State Park, Rising Fawn.

Children 14 and younger can try their luck with a stocked pond. An adult must accompany each angler. The tournament is free.

For more information, call (706) 657-4050.

A fishing rodeo is May 24 from 8 to 11 a.m. at Reed Bingham State Park, Adel.

Children 14 and younger can compete for prizes. The tournament is free.

For more information, call (912) 896-3551.

The junior and senior catfish rodeo is May 24 at 9 a.m. at Victoria Bryant State Park, Royston.

Children under 16 and adults over 62 can compete in this fishing and casting contest.

Prizes will be awarded for categories such as largest fish, youngest fisherman and albino catfish catch.

For more information, call (706) 245-6270.

Seasonal trout streams open

Wildlife Resources Division

SOCIAL CIRCLE, Ga. — Trout anglers can organize their tackle boxes and get out their fishing vests. Seasonal trout streams open March 29 and remain open through Oct. 31, according to the Department of Natural Resources, Wildlife Resources Division.

Fishing is permitted 30 minutes before sunrise to 30 minutes after sunset. While Georgia has more than 4,000 miles of trout streams, not all of them are open year-round.

Trout fishing opportunities in Georgia range from heavily stocked, high-use streams to remote wilderness fishing. To meet the demands of more than 110,000 trout anglers, many of the streams are stocked with 9- to 11-inch trout by the Wildlife Resources Division, Fisheries Section.

Streams are stocked seasonally, monthly, or weekly depending on fishing pressure and the ability of the stream to support the fish population. Some streams and tributaries are considered wild and are not stocked.

Georgia anglers between the ages of 16 and 65 must have a trout stamp ($5) and a valid fishing license ($9) to fish in designated trout waters. Resident honorary license holders are not required to have a trout stamp, and landowners and their immediate families may fish without a license or trout stamp on their property.

WRD offers a new map this year to help trout anglers find the perfect fishing spot. The "Trout Streams of Georgia" map includes all streams designated as trout waters and lists recommended trout streams that are heavily stocked, infrequently stocked and wild. Lakes which are stocked with trout are also listed.

For a copy of the "Trout Streams of Georgia" map or for any of the other trout angling references offered by WRD, contact the Wildlife Resources Division, Fisheries Section, 2123 U.S. Highway, S.E., Social Circle, Ga., 30079, or call (770) 918-6418.

For fishing information in northwest Georgia, call (706) 629-1259. In northeast Georgia, call (706) 947-3112.

In addition, a toll-free line, (800) ASK-FISH, gives anglers the latest fishing predictions and answers commonly asked questions about sportfishing. Anglers can also purchase licenses over the toll-free line.

Post recognizes excellence

Officials plan pep rally to celebrate ACOE

By Elizabeth LaMonica
Special to The Bayonet©

Once again, Fort Benning was designated the best installation Army-wide by winning the Army Communities of Excellence Award.

"Fort Benning won the Commander-in-Chief's Award for the third time," Sarah C. McLaney, chief of Quality Management Division, Directorate of Resource Management, said Monday. "We also won the Chief of Staff of the Army Award for the fifth consecutive year from 1993 to 1997.

"No one has ever won five chief of staff awards back-to-back before. We are thrilled; we are excited; we are ecstatic."

The ACOE is a Department of the Army award recognizing installation excellence by the chief of staff of the Army.

The chief of staff of the Army ceremony will be conducted at the Pentagon May 1. The Department of Defense ceremony, scheduled for May 2, will honor representatives from the best Army, Air Force, Navy and Marine installations.

"That ceremony is so patriotic," McLaney said. "It really makes you stop and think what our services are all about."

The award also offers concrete benefits. Fort Benning will receive $500,000. The funds received will go to the community to benefit Soldiers, families and retirees. In the past, it has been spent on playground and gym equipment, Fort Benning's Riverwalk and other quality of life projects.

"ACOE pushed us to focus on quality when we started back in 1992, and we've gradually gotten better at looking for and implementing ways to satisfy the customer," McLaney said.

Fort Benning was nominated as the sole finalist of the 1997 Presidential Award for Quality which recognizes quality within the entire federal government. Final approval and designation of the award rests with the president who will announce his decision at the Federal Quality Conference which will occur in Washington, D.C., July 9 through 11.

"PQA is a fact-based program. We submit charts and graphs showing data and statistics for the past three to five years," McLaney said. "The biggest challenge was not to leave anyone out in only 70 pages."

"This will generate a lot of visitors to see what it is that we do," McLaney said. "In fact, this year's winner of the PQA will not be allowed to resubmit a nomination packet for the award until 2001 because the installation will be sharing best practices with visiting federal agencies trying to model themselves after the winner."

A celebration highlighting the excellence awards will be conducted in Marshall Auditorium at 2 p.m. April 2. Maj. Gen. Carl F. Ernst, post Commanding General, will use that time to thank the work force.

"These awards are a tribute to Fort Benning, our leaders, our people, and our community," McLaney said. "In spite of downsizing, we have come up with wonderful ways to pull our team together to continue to do the best we can every day."

MISSION COMPLETE

63rd returns from Texas

By Elizabeth LaMonica
Special to The Bayonet©

Neither rain, nor snow, nor hail, nor dark of night could stop Soldiers from the 63rd Engineer Company (Combat Support Equipment) from completing Operation Rio Bravo.

The 60-day mission to Fort Bliss, Texas, included completion of 9.6 kilometers of road and upgrading two kilometers of road to standard. The mission ended with the unloading of their vehicles at the Sand Hill Railhead March 20.

Although the 143 Soldiers returned March 14, they waited almost a week for the 39 rail cars carrying their equipment to return to Fort Benning.

The 104th Transportation Co., the 608th Ordnance Co., and the 598th Maintenance Co. all from the 13th Combat Support Battalion, and the 690th Medical Co. (Ground Ambulance) lent support to the 63rd's unloading process, which lasted about five hours.

The 63rd was the only active duty unit coordinating with several reserve units to prepare Fort Bliss for Operation Roving Sands.

The mix of active duty and reserve units posed a challenge to the 63rd Soldiers.

"It's especially hard to be an active duty unit when you come under control of a reserve unit or a guard unit," said Sgt. 1st Class Ronnie Craig, operations sergeant.

"The biggest challenge was that the reserve units came in for two week segments and left," Capt. Melody Smith, 63rd Eng. Co. commander, said. "But we were there to raise roads to standard and they were there for a quick fix to make the road passable."

Another challenge faced during the mission was the change of the command structure.

First Sgt. Randy C. Dyson transferred out of the 63rd during the mission and 1st Sgt. Julio Sanchez stepped in just prior to redeployment. He handled himself well, Smith said.

Nature posed other challenges.

"The dust was so fine you'd think water was splashing on the vehicle," Sgt. 1st Class Tony Williams said. "We had to check the vehicles' air filters twice daily for accumulated dust that could block them. We had rain, snow and hail, but that helped get needed water to the site to stabilize the road."

"At one point we thought we might go to Bosnia, but morale remained high and we finished four days ahead of schedule," Smith said. "We created a video of the mission and dedicated it to the Soldiers, because Rio Bravo couldn't have been a success without them."

Barracks residing Soldiers to get individual telephone service

By Jacqué Hill
Special to the Bayonet©

Individual phone lines are available for Soldiers living in enlisted barracks.

The service, made possible by a contract between the Army and Air Force Exchange Service and Sprint, gives Soldiers the opportunity to have their own phone lines, instead of relying on pay phones in recreation rooms and at the ends of halls for general use by everyone in the barracks.

A percentage of the revenue generated because of this contract is given to Fort Benning's Morale, Welfare and Recreation organization.

Because of a recent expansion, buildings 2807, 2808, 2809, 2810 and 2831 on Main Post and all buildings on Kelley Hill except 9013 and 9015 now have this service available. These buildings on Kelley Hill will soon have the Barracks Phone Service available also, according to Daniel Drugich, on-site representative with Select Switch Systems, Inc., a company contracted to perform customer service responsibilities on behalf of Sprint.

"Other areas on Main Post will be wired following that," he said.

For a $41 connection fee that can be prorated over three months and a $2.50 monthly recurring charge, Sprint will provide both local and long distance services to a Soldier's room. Along with these services, the customer will also receive unlimited local calling, voice mail, incoming collect call block, call waiting and a choice between a 15-cents-per-minute flat rate on all long distance calls within the United States and Puerto Rico or Sprint Sense long distance rates.

Each phone customer is assigned a personal identification code. A caller is required to key this access code in when making any type of toll call.

"The purpose of the personal access codes is to alleviate unauthorized callers from charging long distance calls to the owner's phone, which in turn protects the phone owner's credit," Spc. Michael James, former president, Better Opportunities for Single Soldiers Program, said.

Those people currently using Bell South may switch to Sprint without incurring a connection fee, Drugich said.

"If someone is currently using Bell South, there will be no connection fee — it's free," he said. Those Soldiers who previously had Bell South service and prefer not to switch to Sprint will not be forced to do so, according to Drugich.

"The 36th Group will be able to save 36th Group appropriated funds by having Soldiers currently using Bell South convert to this service before moving into their newly renovated barracks," Drugich said. He said the savings are possible because of the fact that it is free to convert from Bell South to Sprint and because Sprint does not charge a Soldier who moves to connect the phone line in his or her new room.

Soldiers who deploy or receive temporary duty orders requiring them to be absent for a substantial duration will have their monthly recurring charge waived, according to Drugich.

"If they have TDY orders or their unit is deploying or they go to training for 30 days or more, we'll waive their monthly recurring charge while they're gone," he said. Drugich also said Soldiers in these situations can still use their calling cards and voice mail services while they are gone.

Applications for barracks phone services are available at MWR and most AAFES locations.

Easter sunrise service set

By Dov Schwartz
USAIC Public Affairs Office

The Fort Benning community will celebrate Easter with a sunrise service at 7 a.m. on the Field of Four Chaplains, adjacent to The Infantry Center Chapel.

The service will feature the Infantry Band, traditional singing of Easter hymns, a rendition of "He's Alive," by Maj. Steve Russell and other spiritual events.

Following the service, a continental breakfast will be served in the Infantry Center Chapel Annex.

Chaplain (Col.) Marvin K. Vickers, 1st U.S. Army staff chaplain, will keynote the service.

Easter Sunrise Services for all denominations will be conducted March 30 at 7 a.m. on the Field of Four Chaplains. Worshippers are encouraged to bring a cushion or towel to sit on.

Regularly scheduled services will be conducted in all chapels.

Drivers

Motorists need to exercise caution, consideration

By Elizabeth LaMonica
Special to The Bayonet©

commentary

One thing that really irritates me is dangerous, inconsiderate driving.

I am amazed at what drivers do to one another on the road. Infrequent speeding and cutting off other cars inadvertently are facts of driving. Usually I can shrug and move on.

But then I see things that make me believe that periodic retesting for driver's licenses should be mandatory.

For instance, people who can't read street signs really bother me. Some drivers ignore yield signs, slow at stop signs, and stop at intersections with no signs whatsoever. Especially annoying are people who ignore one-way or do-not-enter signs.

Several weeks ago in my housing area, which has many one-ways and do-not-enters, I was almost hit by a car whose driver not only was blatantly ignoring these obvious signs, but also wasn't yielding to those of us who obeyed them.

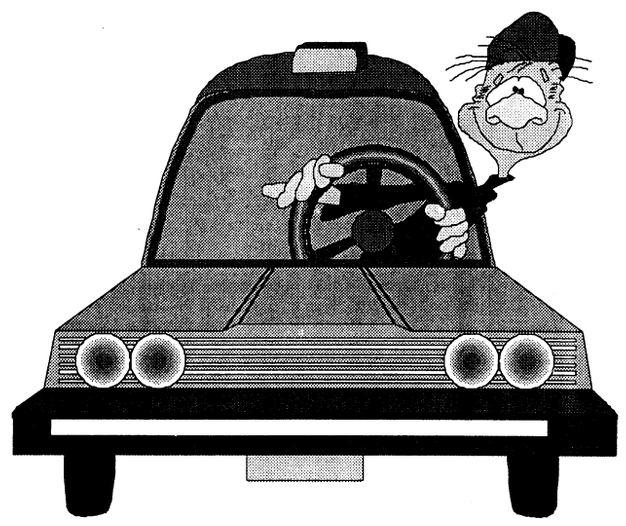
Recently, a neighbor left our housing area traveling the wrong way up our one-way street. And from where she lives it's not a matter of saving a few feet; it's actually farther to try to leave the wrong way than the legal way.

Elizabeth LaMonica says retesting for drivers license should be mandatory.

And what about turn signals? More specifically, people who don't use them. I refuse to believe that such a large majority of drivers out there have non-functioning blinkers. Yet I constantly seem to get behind drivers who turn unexpectedly.

What about when people pass you only to slow down? Worse, I have had people pass me to slow down and turn within a few hundred feet. What is the point of that?

With all of the construction happening on 185, I'm sure most of us can relate to how bad drivers can get as a result. People speed up to cut in when the road narrows to one lane. Then the traffic almost stops as the rest of us slam on our brakes to avoid hitting these morons.



Many of these instances seem to be merely annoying, but please remember that they are truly dangerous.

Last week, around 10 a.m., I was driving toward post on a semi-deserted stretch posted at 45 mph. I usually push the speed a few mph, and I don't know many who don't. But the car in front of me wanted to drive the speed limit.

There was oncoming traffic, so I sighed and tried not to follow too closely. Suddenly, a quickly approaching compact car came into my rear view mirror. Rather than yielding to the oncoming cars, the speed-demon whipped around me and began to pass.

Thinking to avert a wreck, I gave him plenty of space to pull over. (Although my instinct was to tailgate and force this idiot to retreat.)

This maniac refused the opportunity to return to his lane and decided to risk the four cars surrounding him. How many people could have been hurt or killed by his recklessness?

The oncoming traffic was forced to leave the roadway to avert a head-on-collision. It was like a case of a juvenile delinquent playing chicken.

I normally don't think of myself as a vindictive woman, but I was praying for an MP to be in the area as this car whipped onto post and sped off down the road. I think I would have jumped out of my car and asked the officer to check his headlights for accumulated dust, just for another reason to throw the book at this idiot.

"Let's see, does your horn work? No? Fifty-dollar fine, sir. That totals to $374, and have a nice day," the officer might say.

And I would applaud him.

Senior review panel comes to Fort Benning

USAIC Public Affairs Office

As a result of the sexual harassment allegations at Aberdeen Proving Grounds, Maryland, the Secretary of the Army has directed the establishment of a senior review panel and working group on sexual harassment. The senior review panel and working group is assessing the Army's sexual harassment climate by visiting various military installations.

The panel will be surveying or interviewing approximately 2,000 military and civilian personnel at Fort Benning from April 1 through 4.

Unit points of contact have been briefed on the panel's itinerary.

The following units will undergo a 100 percent survey:

•Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 317th Engineer Battalion, 3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division (Mechanized);

•Detachment D, 24th Personnel Support Battalion, 3rd Bde., 3rd Inf. Div. (Mech.);

•Battery D, 1st Bn. 10th Field Artillery Regt.;

•Co. A, 2nd Bn., 58th Inf. Regt.;

•Co. A, 1st Bn., 38th Inf. Regt.;

•Co. C, 3rd Bn., 75th Ranger Regt.;

•3rd Military Police Group, Criminal Investigation Command;

•89th Ordnance Detachment;

•Headquarters and Headquarters Detachment, 203rd Forward Support Bn., 3rd Bde., 3rd Inf. Div. (Mech.);

•Co. B, 2nd Bn., 58th Inf. Regt., Infantry Training Brigade;

•Co. B, 1st Bn., 19th Inf. Regt., ITB;

Soldiers who are assigned to one of the above companies but have not been notified, please contact your chain of command for more information.

The panel will also conduct focus groups and individual interviews. Participants in these activities will come from most units on post. Most subordinate command POCs have the names of individual participants.

In the event that you are not a designated participant and you have a sexual harassment related issue that has not been resolved through your chain of command or other on post agencies, you may contact someone from the visiting panel.

The panel can be contacted at 545-3452, Building 4, Classroom 51, or by contacting the Inspector's General office at 545-4780.

Soldiers are encouraged to first try your chain of command or local agencies to resolve the issues.

POC for additional information on the senior review panel working group on sexual harassment can be obtained by contacting Sgt. 1st Class Kathy Myrick at 545-4780.

CG declares Nutrition Month

March is designated by President William J. Clinton as National Nutrition Month.

This is a worthy effort to encourage all Americans to improve their knowledge for making healthy food choices. The health benefits of good nutrition are substantiated and well known.

The slogan for 1997 is "All Foods Can Fit," emphasizing that healthy eating is based on the overall pattern of food consumption and not any one type of food or meal.

The ongoing theme for National Nutrition Month is "Eat Right America." It is a call to action that challenges Americans to take charge of their nutritional habits.

I urge all Soldiers and civilians, family members and retirees to take advantage of the nutrition education opportunities that will be available during the month.

Dial 545-BOSS is the commander's action line for Soldiers, family members and civilians to call when they have problems or complaints that can't be resolved elsewhere.

While it is not a substitute for the chain of command or for agencies established to provide assistance, the line offers another means of communication between Fort Benning's community and commanders.

Department of Defense Schools response:

The administrative assistant to the superintendent of DOD Schools explained that post schools are governed by applicable laws, directives and regulation s, to include Public Law 874, 81st Congress, as amended, which states: for children to be eligible to attend on-post schools, they must be dependent children residing on the Fort Benning reservation."

Printing agency changes name thanks to customer service survey

Automated Printing Service

Change reflects on-going moves to faster, more efficient service to customers.

The Defense Printing Service, the newest member of the Defense Logistics Agency, has changed its name to Defense Automated Printing Service. A recent customer satisfaction survey conducted by DPS showed that customers rated the quality of the products and services extremely high.

However, the research also indicated that the customers wanted even quicker, simpler and more efficient processes to address their needs and expectations.

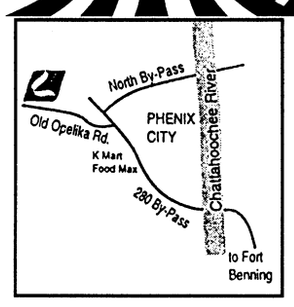
"We strongly believe that when our customers speak, we must listen — and get it right," said Michael J. Cocchiola, director, DAPS. "All other priorities are secondary.

"Our new name signals our customer-driven focus and commitment to delivering the highest quality products and services even faster and more efficiently to our customers through the use of automated technology and training. The addition of automated to our name says it all."

In addition, the customer satisfaction research study indicated that DAPS was a name that was well liked by the customers because it was short, easy to pronounce, communicated the benefit of increased technological automation and sounded like an action-orientated acronym.

"Notice how many people say 'Xerox it' for copying?" Cocchiola said. "Soon they will be saying 'Dap it' for automated printing and duplicating."

In November, DAPS celebrated 47 years of service. To commemorate this occasion, the DAPS activity conducted a Customer Appreciation Open House March 18 through 20.



For more information about DAPS and what it can do for you, contact the local DAPS director, John C. Davis, at 545-4967. The DAPS facilities are located in Building 130, Morrison Avenue.

INFANTRY

Soldiers train on Bayonet Assault Course

1st Battalion, 50th Infantry Regiment

The new Soldiers of Company C, 1st Battalion, 50th Infantry Regiment, Infantry Training Brigade, took a giant step March 14 toward becoming the force that will defend the United States in all battles foreign and domestic.

Throughout the first six weeks of basic training, the new Soldiers are drilled and taught individual as well as collective tasks all with the end result of being able to communicate and fight aggressively and competently on the battle field, said Sgt. 1st Class Robert White, the noncommissioned officer in charge of the course. The bayonet assault course gives new Soldiers an opportunity to demonstrate and refine those skills.

To reach the Ride Bayonet Course, each Soldier had to demonstrate competence in a myriad of skills, White said. These tasks include basic attack and defensive positions and movements, individual movement techniques, movement as a member of a squad, react to visual as well as verbal commands, as well as negotiating man-made and natural obstacles.

"Every possible effort is made to simulate the noise and sights of a battlefield," White said. "A pneumatic M-60 as well as two M-60 machine guns are fired to create the sounds of the battlefield. Screening and signaling smoke is also used to try to simulate the possible confusion and definite attention to communicating that will be critical for the success of these new Soldiers both on and off the battlefield."

White said the purpose of this exercise goes far past training the Soldiers on the use of a bayonet on the battlefield.

He said this exercise provides just one of thousands of disciplines and lessons the drill sergeant is tasked to inculcate into the Infantryman of tomorrow.

White said with their performance the young Soldiers are well on the way to developing the physical skills required for success as Infantrymen.

498th Medical Company

Following almost 50 days of pre-deployment equipment preparation, loading and shipping and Soldier specific training the 498th Medical Company (Air Ambulance), 36th Engineer Group (Combat) was validated as 100 percent trained and cleared for departure.

During the last few days prior to departure, the Soldiers from the 498th received a four-day break. Some of the Soldiers used the break to enjoy quiet personal time with their immediate families, while others gathered in reunion style at nearby locations such as Atlanta. During their four-day break, they were on a four-hour recall and required to phone in daily as they awaited transportation to Europe.

On the evening of March 18, a Trans World Airline 747 arrived at Lawson Army Airfield to transport the 498th to Frankfurt, Germany.

Following the loading of nearly 300 pieces of military luggage, the unit participated in a going away ceremony and a few tearful goodbyes.

The aircraft departed LAA on its long journey which included a short stop scheduled at JFK international airport, N.Y. Some of the Soldiers said they were looking forward to a few hours of sleep on the overnight flight.

The following day the company didn't call in when expected and it was determined that they must have been extremely busy with logistical problems — but it wasn't military logistical problems. The aircraft stopped at JFK, the cockpit crew said their good-byes and good luck and the next four hours were spent under lock down for security reasons while the Soldiers waited for the next TWA pilots to arrive.

Once in Frankfurt, the unit split into two separate groups. The aviation half moved to the Coleman Barracks in Mannheim, Germany, while the ground portion moved to Wiesbaden, Germany.

Through the weekend, the aircrews reassembled the 13 blackhawk helicopters which had begun their journey from Fort Benning one month ago. They had been wrapped in plastic, shipped across the Atlantic by the US Navy, floated down the Rhine river and pulled by truck for nearly 4 miles from the barge dock to the Coleman Barracks area.

Once reassembled, inspected and test flown, the aircrews were scheduled to fly the aircraft to the Initial Staging Base in Tazsar, Hungary, while the ground half, in Wiesbaden, ascended on the more than 220,000 metric tons of equipment preparing it for rail transit to the ISB.

Maj. Tracy Wyatt, commander of the 498th, communicates with the home base daily. He said the troops have good quarters, were received very professionally and aside from a few flu-like symptoms all is well and proceeding as planned.

He said everyone is safe, all the equipment preparation is proceeding as planned and the next stop is the ISB in Hungary for final checks prior to entering the theater of operations. No date has been set for their movement to the ISB.

Here on Fort Benning, the 832nd Medical Company (Air Ambulance) continues to perform the mission of the 498th.

Former enemy troops train with U.S. Army

By Dov Schwartz
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Not long ago, 1st Lt. Alexandru Voivodeanu spent 12 hours a day, six days a week in a Ukranian military academy, studying to defeat the forces of the American-led NATO.

Voivodeanu is still studying American military strategy and tactics. But the young officer from the Republic of Moldova is doing it at Fort Benning along side his former adversaries in the Infantry Officer Advanced Course.

The number of soldiers from former Warsaw Pact Countries training at Fort Benning has tripled since 1994. Today, Eastern European soldiers are enrolled in courses ranging from the Infantry Officer Basic Course and Infantry Officer Advanced Course to the Ranger Course.

The collapse of the Soviet Union in 1991 effectively freed 12 republics and the three Baltic states to pursue their own political destinies. The initial burst of freedom was welcomed by the people of the region.

"Freedom to us was like mother's milk. I dreamed about independence," Lithuanian Capt. and Ranger Course graduate Valdas Kibartas said.

But reality soon set in and the newly-independent states groped to maintain their military postures. According to Kibartas, the Russians took all of their equipment and went home.

According to Capt. Justin E. Pierce, commander of the International Student Training Detachment, many of the newly-independent states sought help through the U.S. government's Security Assistance Program. Currently, seven SAP-sponsored students from five Eastern European countries, Russia and two Baltic states are training at Fort Benning.

> "The professionalism of your NCO corps is so high. If there were no officers in the unit, the NCOs could run it."
> — 1st Lt. Alexandru Voivodeanu
> Republic of Moldova army

Training with American troops has drastically altered the view of Eastern European soldiers toward U.S. forces and gives new meaning to the phrase "new world order."

As young cadets in a Soviet style, Ukranian-based military academy, both Voivodeau and fellow Moldovan 1st. Lt. Igor Ivanov participated in war games where the "enemy" was U.S. troops.

Today, they candidly admit their admiration for their American counterparts.

"The Army we want to be like is the United States Army, of course," Ivanov said.

Their admiration for the U.S. military goes to the heart and soul of the U.S. Army—the Noncommissioned Officer Corps.

"I like your (U.S.) NCO Corps so much you cannot imagine," Voivodeanu said. "The professionalism of your NCO Corps is so high. If there were no officers in the unit, the NCOs could run it."

Eastern European students often find that military training is only part of their American experience.

In addition to a seven-month English language course at the Defense Language Institute, former Warsaw Pact troops have the opportunity, often for the first time, to experience the freedoms enjoyed in a democratic society.

"In the United States, I have seen for the first time in my life that if you are the average Joe or the president, you are both equal before the law," Voivodeanu said.

They also learn an important lesson regarding the separation between domestic politics and the military.

According to Voivodeanu, under the Soviet regime, an officer who did not fully support the policies of the regime could lose his commission.

Voivodeanu was surprised to learn an American officer can hold political views contrary to the party in power without it affecting his career.

This is a time of profound change for the soldiers of the former Warsaw Pact. Civilian control of the military and other structural changes are still a little hard for soldiers to swallow.

"For me, a civilian (Defense Minister) is something very new," Voivodeanu said. "I believed a general had a better understanding of the military. I accept it (civilian control) now, but it is still very new."

Force Protection Lanes trains deploying Soldiers

By Jack Pagano
326th Replacement Detachment

On a slippery slope of Georgia clay, Staff Sgt. Michael Lloyd of the 324th Combat Support Hospital, Miami, Fla., is slowly moving inch by inch through a mine field.

Stretched out on his stomach, the 11-year Army reserve and Gulf War veteran lightly but firmly probes into the dirt. Although no actual mines exist, the training exercise at Fort Benning's Harmony Church is real.

"I wish Soldiers had this training before going to the Gulf War seven years ago," Lloyd said as he flashed a smile in-between his probing operation.

"I was with the 807th Mobile Army Surgical Hospital Unit attached to the 1st Armored Division during the Gulf War end run against the Iraqi army. The mine injuries I treated from U.S. Soldiers could have been prevented if they had taken this training."

The pharmaceutical specialist said putting Soldiers in a mine field is an eye-opener.

It's all part of required Force Protection Lane's training — a three-day exercise Soldiers receive before deploying to the former Yugoslavia.

"It's a wake-up call — a reality check," said 1st Sgt. John Boffi, a noncommissioned officer from the 405th Combat Support Hospital, West Hartford, Conn.

He said his mission is to keep everyone safe during the unit's 270-day call up to Bosnia.

"Probing for mines is a very serious and dangerous matter," he said. "One step off the road or an incorrect probe could be the difference between life and death. I left one family to take care of another family, and I hope we all return as one family."

Sustaining Force officials estimate there are six to eight million "live" mines throughout the region.

"We are learning teamwork," Sgt. Lauren Smith of the 405th said. The operating room technician found out what it's like to be engaged in the "Reaction to Indirect Fire" stage of the lane's training. The sergeant low crawled into a puddle of water and mud that formed from an overnight rain.

"This is my third tour to a country in need and I'm excited about going over and helping keep the peace," Smith said as the yellowish Georgia clay dripped off her boots and battle dress uniform.

Soldiers move through five scenarios each with a specific task to overcome. Project officer Capt. Bruce Davis said the half-a-mile-long lane (eight of them are at the site) provides a real world environment Soldiers may encounter as they perform their duty in Bosnia.

"We want to see how Soldiers will react and learn that staying on the road may save your life. They also experience training in debris pickup —if you didn't drop it, don't pick it up."

Lt. Col. Tim Nary, a dentist with the 405th, said the force protection lane put his deployment into perspective.

"We are serving our country to help enforce the peace. I left Pittsfield, Mass., and my practice because my unit needed me. This lane training is outstanding. I'm really learning a lot and I'm proud to help."

Nary is filling in for a fellow dentist who was set to deploy but a pregnant wife changed all that, sending Nary to Fort Benning and a trip overseas.

The road to Bosnia is one of commitment and sacrifice for these reservists. But before they encounter new customs, traditions and people of another land, they must overcome Fort Benning's Force Protection Lane — a training environment that will save lives.

Retire

11th Regiment CSM closes 30-year career

By Brian R. Voller
Bayonet staff writer

After spending 30 years serving his country, Command Sgt. Maj. Joe M. Heckard, 11th Infantry Regiment sergeant major, will retire Tuesday.

Looking back on his long career, Heckard said he didn't really have a deep motivation for joining the armed forces.

"My motivation for joining the Army was when I received that draft card," Heckard said. "So I went on down and signed up for the U.S. Army back in 1967, right around the high point of the Vietnam conflict."

Heckard said during his 30 years, he has seen a lot of things and he has seen a lot of changes made in the Army.

"You really can't compare the Army I first joined to the Army today," Heckard said. "The difference when I was coming up in the Army was that we were given a lot more hard-nosed discipline and standards. The discipline and standards of today's Army are not as hard as they were when I first joined.

"But the Soldiers of today are in a different category than we were when I came in. Today, the Soldiers have to be a little bit smarter than we were, and that means you have to make a change in discipline and standards."

Heckard also said the roll of the noncommissioned officer is changing. He said the noncommissioned officers need to be smarter to keep pace with the increased use of computers and technology and to match with the newer, smarter Soldiers who are coming into the service.

But Heckard also said some of the things an NCO does will never change, such as leading Soldiers and maintaining the standards of the Army.

During his career, Heckard said he had several things that he considers the most memorable times of his career.

"I think some of the finer moments in my career have been when I served with all three ranger battalions," Heckard said. "Also, I got a lot out of being a drill sergeant at Fort Jackson, S.C. and when I worked with the Special Operations Command."

After Heckard retires, he said he plans to spend a lot of time relaxing.

"I just want to sit back and enjoy life ... It's been a long 30 years, a tough 30 years. I've never had an easy assignment, so now it's time for me to sit back and enjoy life for a while."

VMET aids Soldier preparation of resume

By Chick Eagle
Army Career and Alumni Program

Transitioning Soldiers will need to document their experience, qualifications, work history, training, education and achievements on resumes.

Preparation of a resume is the accepted way of initially presenting your professional history to potential employers. One source available for resume preparation is DA Form 2586, Verification of Military Training and Experience. The Department of Defense will issue a VMET to each transitioning Soldier.

As a Soldier, you have had numerous training and job experiences, perhaps too many to recall easily and include on resumes, job or college applications. Your VMET is created from automated records on file and includes military job experience, training programs, recommended college credit information and civilian equivalent job titles for your military occupational specialty.

You should automatically receive your VMET no later than 120 days prior to your separation date. It is recommended that each transitioning Soldier call the VMET office to check the status of the automatic system as early as possible and update his or her mailing address to ensure receipt in a timely manner. Conus-based Army personnel can call (800) 258-VMET.

Soldiers who have received their VMET are encouraged to bring it to all pretransition training workshops and counseling sessions.

Frito-Lay, Inc., is recruiting Soldiers to be part of their snack food production and distribution expansion in the southeast. Frito-Lay has eight of the top 10 best-selling snack chip brands with annual sales of $13 billion.

Positions being recruited for are production team leader for 20 to 35 technicians, district sales leader supervising several sales routes and route business managers responsible for service and delivery to customers. Interested transitioning Soldiers should visit the Job Assistance Center in Soldiers' Plaza, Building 2634.

Resumes must be sent to Frito-Lay no later than Tuesday so that selected applicants can be interviewed April 15 when Frito-Lay's Human Resources representative returns to Fort Benning.

For more information, call the Job Assistance Center at 545-2308 or 545-2309.

The Glendale, Ariz., Police Department will be recruiting at Fort Benning for police officer trainees and police communication specialist trainees. Recruiters will be meeting with Soldiers interested in a career in law enforcement with the Glendale, Ariz., Police Department in the Job Assistance Center, Soldiers' Plaza , Bldg. 2634, from 11 a.m. to 4 p.m. April 8.

Arizona is one of the fastest growing states and this is creating a growth in police and public safety agencies.

For more information, call the Job Assistance Center at 545-2308 or 545-2309.

COMMUNITY

AROUND POST

Youth Services to conduct a kids yard sale — Youth Services conducts a kids yard sale April 19 at Youth Services, Building 1056, from 10 a.m. to noon.

The yard sale is open to children ages 5 through 12 and teens ages 13 through 18.

Tables will be rented for a fee to children who would like to participate in the yard sale.

Small tables will rent for $1 and large tables for $2.

For more information, call 545-3020.

Spring cleanup set — There will be a post-wide spring cleanup of the post cantonment and housing areas April 7 through 11. This includes yard maintenance and the moving of improperly parked personal vehicles. Area coordinators will offer assistance in facilitating pickup of large debris and any bulk recyclable aluminum or large scrap aluminum.

Area coordinators will conduct final inspections in each housing area April 11.

For more information, call Sgt. 1st Class Lawrence Davis, noncommissioned officer in charge of the Fort Benning Community Life Office, at 545-2910.

Post schools seek help — The Fort Benning School System is currently recruiting substitute teachers. Substitute teachers are utilized on an "as-needed" or "on-call" basis during the absences of classroom teachers. No prior experience is necessary, however, individuals must have a four-year college degree to qualify.

Applications may be obtained from the Fort Benning Schools Human Resources Office located at 201 Custer Rd., Room 17, from 7:30 a.m. to 4 p.m. Monday through Friday, excluding holidays.

For more information, call the Human Resources Office at 545-3123.

Commissary to close for the holiday — The Fort Benning Commissary will be closed Sunday in observance of Easter. The Commissary will reopen Tuesday at 1 p.m.

Good Friday services set — Religious services for Good Friday are scheduled for:

Protestant

•Noon at the Infantry Center Chapel

•4:30 p.m. at the Soldiers Chapel, Sand Hill

Catholic:

•4:30 p.m., at the Soldiers Chapel, Sand Hill

•7:00 p.m. at the Soldiers Chapel, Sand Hill

Community searches for Easter eggs at Riverside

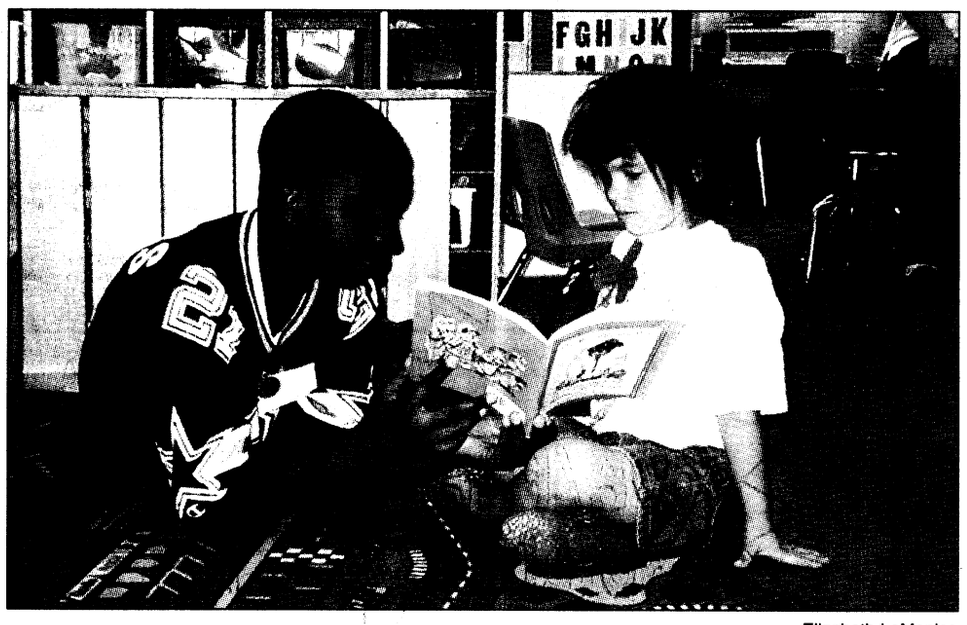
By Lisa M. Hibbert
Bayonet staff writer

More than 2,500 people strolled the lawn of Riverside, home of Commanding General Maj. Gen. Carl F. Ernst and his wife, Linda, Saturday for the post Easter egg hunt.

Post deputy commander, Brig. Gen. Walter Wodjakowski, gave remarks on behalf of Ernst who was unable to attend the day's festivities. The children and their families listened anxiously as Lamar Caldwell, director of Youth Services, gave the instructions for the hunt, and they waited for the signal to run into their designated areas and gather as many eggs as possible.

At the sound of the whistle, blown by Linda Ernst, the children swarmed the grounds and gathered more than 3,000 candy-filled plastic eggs and 4,000 candied eggs in less than 10 minutes.

Not only did the children who collected the most eggs get prizes, children who collected eggs with a prize message inside also received either a chocolate or stuffed bunny or an Easter basket.



After the hunt, family members waited in one of the many lines at Riverside for rides like the American Legion Train, a trolley caboose and car that circled the estate, pony rides and the Astro Jump.

Savoring free cotton candy and sipping free soft drinks, guests listened to the old-time jazzy tunes of the Infantry Band while they finger painted, played with Blinky the Clown, McGruff the Crime Dog and gazed at the many flowers.

The event was sponsored by TIC Federal Credit Union, Pioneer Military Lending, the Fort Benning Commissary, Military Benefits Association, Buffalo Rock Pepsi, Army Community Services and Youth Services.

Hundreds of people stood in one of the many lines for the cotton candy, soft drinks and rides. The lines stretched from the house to the street.

Students teach each other

Faith Middle School students introduced a new type of mentoring program to the pre-kindergartners at Dexter Elementary March 3.

The program, dubbed Reading Pals, encourages the young teenagers to reach out to the youngest children in the school system.

Peggy Gindville, the pre-K teacher at Dexter, serves as host to Alice Martin's eighth-grade students twice a week.

Martin brings her skills to Faith Middle students for a half-hour reading session.

The program focuses on developing the oral and language skills of both grades of children.

"This program also helps the eighth graders develop a sensitivity to our children," said Gindville.

She also noticed that the four year olds enjoyed the extra attention.

"We have about 22 kids here, and Ms. Martin brings over about 11 students," she said. "So the youngsters have more of a one-on-one relationship with their reading buddies."

The eighth graders also have noticed some changes.

"The kids respond more now after the third time," said Jillian Quarterman, daughter of Gloria and Master Sgt. Irvin Quarterman.

"They're not as shy now and can read books to us that we've read to them before," said Marshall Ford, son of Sgt. 1st Class Marshall Ford Senior "They're very intelligent."

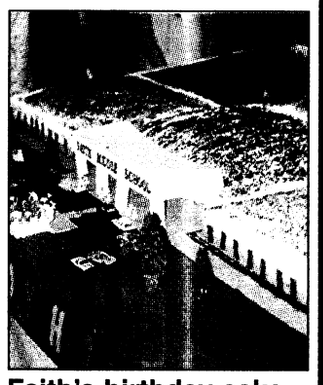
Martin, the mind behind the creation of the program, said the inspiration for the program came from several sources.

One source of inspiration was the President and Hillary Clinton's speeches about more community involvement.

"A big inspiration was the 'It takes a village' concept," she said.

Another inspiration for the development of the program was an assignment.

"My students were supposed to write children's stories," Martin said, "and I discovered that they didn't really understand what children's literature was supposed to be.



"My goal is for my students to eventually be writing their own children's stories and then reading their own stories to the pre-K children."

Meanwhile, the students are using some books from the pre-K classroom and others that Martin donated to the cause.

Daughter of school's namesake returns for Faith's 10th birthday

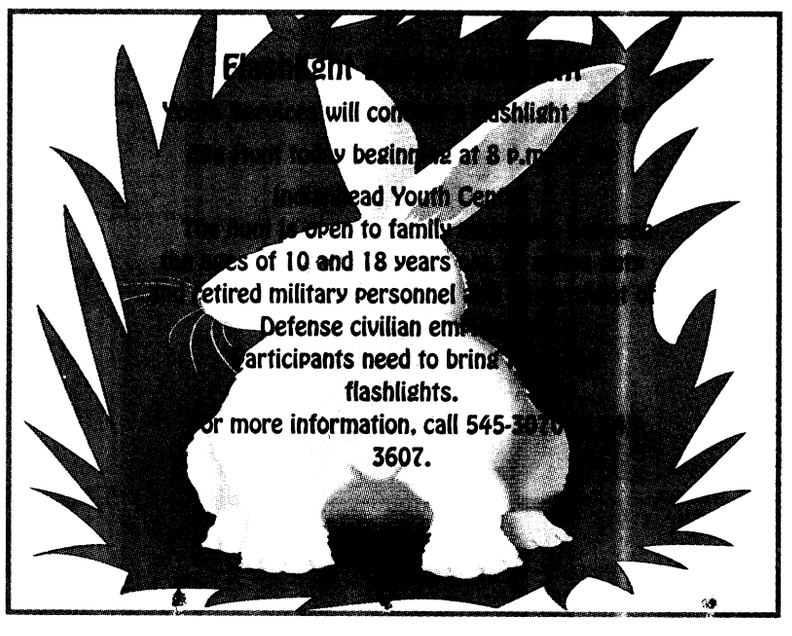
By Lisa M. Hibbert
Bayonet staff writer

Faith's birthday cake.

Faith Middle School celebrated its 10th year in its present location with a birthday celebration March 21.

The school invited several people who worked at Faith when it was in its previous location, what is now the Henry Caro Noncommissioned Officer Academy. The school's special guest and the guest speaker of the day was Barbara Ann Faith Broyles, daughter of the school's namesake Don C. Faith Jr.

Getting Broyles to Fort Benning for this program was a challenge for the faculty. Cindy Givens, the school's media specialist, was the person responsible for contacting Broyles.



"I searched for Broyles on the Internet," Givens said. "I knew her and her husband's name and I thought I knew where she lived. I searched in Monroe, La., and I found one Broyles who suggested that I look in Baton Rouge, La.

"When I finally found her, I called and left a message saying that if a Barbara Ann Faith Broyles lived there, would she please call the school," Givens said. "But when she returned my call and left a message on my answering machine as Bobbie Broyles, I thought I had the wrong person."

In her comments, Broyles also remarked on the appearance of Fort Benning.

"Fort Benning has not changed that much to me," Broyles said. "When I drive around the post and I look at the playgrounds, I think, 'Oh yeah, I used to play there.'"

Enlisted Wives' Club to meet — The Enlisted Wives' Club will have a meeting April 9 beginning at 11:30 a.m. The meeting will be conducted in Building 2626, Soldier's Plaza.

Child care is provided during meeting times. For more information, call Mamie Wells at 568-6303 or 545-2444.

Exploring Program meets — Explorer Post 699, sponsored by the American Red Cross and Martin Army Community Hospital, meets every last Thursday of the month at MACH. The exploring program gives students in the 9th through 11th grade an opportunity to view different careers in medicine which will hopefully make their career choice easier as they approach adulthood. All 9th through 11th grade students are invited to attend.

This month's meeting will be hosted by Dr. Gwen Holeman, a pathologist. Holeman will give a brief lecture and the students will be given the opportunity to tour the pathology lab.

For more information, call Scott Wacter at 327-2634 or 545-3216.

Boy Scouts seek assistance — The Fort Benning District of Boy Scouts of America is seeking assistance. Unit Commissioners are needed to work with the 20 Scouting programs on post, specifically in Scout advancement, training and registration.

To volunteer, call Scott Wacter at 545-3216 or 327-2634 or Howard Willis at 545-5741.

MACH helps with blood drive — Martin Army Community Hospital and Fort Knox Blood Donor Center will be participating jointly in a quarterly blood drive with the support of the 36th Engineer Group today at Audie Murphy Fitness Center.

The drive will take place between 8 a.m. and noon.

Blood is the gift of life, and because it is perishable and only good for 35 days after donation, the military hospitals need a constant supply.

For more information, call MACH, Department of Pathology, at 544-3326.

Pediatric clinic moves back to third floor — Construction is complete for the A-wing on the third floor of Martin Army Community Hospital. The Pediatric Clinic, now temporarily located in Ward B on the sixth floor, will be relocated back to Ward 3A. The move begins Monday. Patients will continue to be seen until noon today. For more information, call Mitchell Thompson at 544-4408.

Kelley Hill Recreation Center to conduct a book swap — The Kelley Hill Swap Library has books. The books are free but library users should bring in books to swap out.

The library hours are Thursday through Saturday, noon to 10 p.m. and Sunday 10 a.m. to 7 p.m.

For more information, call the Kelly Hill Recreation Center at 544-3079 or visit Building 9079.

MACH to change retiree physicals — Martin Army Community Hospital wants every retiree's physical exam to be part of an overall wellness program. Therefore, retirees should schedule their physicals with their enrolled family doctor at either the Family Practice Clinic, Winder Family Clinic, Aviation Medicine Clinic or Victory Clinic.

The Physical Exam Section will no longer schedule retirees for annual physicals. Retirees that are not enrolled in one of these clinics should call (800) 444-5445 to choose a family doctor through Tricare Prime.

OWC offers donations — Any organization which is connected to the U.S. Military may apply for sums of money in the amount of $50 and up from the Officers' Wives' Club of Fort Benning,

For more information, write to:

Officers' Wives' Club of Fort Benning, P.O. Box 51978, Fort Benning Ga. 31905-1978, attention: Cindy Kane.

For more information, call 687-0919.

Boy Scout collecting clothes for badge — Mark Lugo, son of Lt. Col. Alberto Lugo of the U.S. Army Dental Activity and member of Fort Benning Boy Scout Troop 27, is conducting a clothing drive on Fort Benning. The drive is part of Lugo's Boy Scout Eagle Project and benefits the Columbus Salvation Army.

Flyers were distributed Sunday to all housing areas on Main Post and Scouts will come by to pick up old clothing Sunday.

Clean clothing in any size and condition can be used. Torn clothing can be sold by the Salvation Army by weight.

For more information, call Lugo at 687-1309.

off post

Columbus State plans ROTC ball — Columbus State University is planning its 25th annual Reserve Officer Candidate Ball for May 10 at the Fort Benning Officers' Club. The program begins at 6:30 p.m. and the menu selection includes either prime rib or marinated chicken breast.

Tickets cost $20 per person, and reservations need to be made prior to April 18.

For more information, call 568-2058.

Early Intervention Services

Fort Benning program provides evaluation, treatment for children with developmental delays

By Jacqué Hill
Special to the Bayonet©

If your infant or toddler seems to be a bit behind others in the development of social, speech, motor or other crucial skills, there is help available to bring your child's skills up to par prior to beginninsg school.

Fort Benning's Early Intervention Program, sponsored by Martin Army Community Hospital, works in accordance with the Individuals with Disabilities Education Act and provides services to all infants and toddlers, from birth to 3 years, with disabilities who are entitled to medical care and education from the Department of Defense, according to Cindy Falk, manager, Early Intervention Services.

"Early Intervention Services is a program set up to provide evaluations, assessments and treatments to children with developmental delays or having high probabilities of developmental delays due to medical conditions," Falk said. "Through the program, we try to make sure the child is prepared to begin school, or at least to lessen the impact of beginning school."

A child can be referred to Early Intervention Services by a parent, physician, community health nurse, community member, off-post agency representative, or almost anyone, she said.

After the referral, a representative from Early Intervention Services contacts the child's parents to find out if they are interested in receiving help with their child's development. If the parents are interested in early intervention services, they participate in an intake process.

During this process, the parents exchange information with Early Intervention Services representatives, such as the family's and the child's history, family's needs, and the representative then explains what will be done for the family and child and the family's rights.

"This is a family-based service," Falk said. "It is family oriented and family directed."

After the initial exchange of information, the child undergoes a multidisciplinary evaluation. At least two representatives from different disciplines, including speech pathology, family therapy and early childhood special education, participate in the evaluation process and give their evaluation of the child's needs.

From this evaluation, an eligibility report, including the child's strengths and weaknesses and the representatives' recommendations, is given to the family.

The child's family can choose to participate in any or none of the services recommended for its child.

"All of the services are free," said Falk. "The family decides what service or services they want.

"They can refuse one service without jeopardizing getting another service."

Early Intervention Services offers help in the following areas: cognitive, speech and language, gross and fine motor skills, self help and social and emotional skills.

An individualized family service plan is implemented once the family decides which services it wants for its child, based upon the recommendations of those participating in the evaluation process. This plan serves as a contract between the family and Early Intervention Services.

To refer a child or family to Early Intervention Services, contact Cindy Falk or another service representative at 545-3835 or 545-6374.

ask the judge

By Michael H. Lane
Office of the Staff Judge Advocate

Q: I won a lawsuit in small claims court this month for $500. The suit was against a lady who owed me for child care.

She is married to a Soldier and my husband is a Soldier. Will the court make them pay me? Can the Army help?

A: One thing you cannot do in your case is get it collected through the Army. The judgment is against the wife of the Soldier, not the Soldier, so there is no authority to use the chain of command to help collect the money.

A husband is not automatically responsible for most debts of his spouse unless he has contractually obligated himself.

I know that it is hard to believe, but winning a lawsuit is just the first step in collecting money owed to you through the courts. The courts do not become involved in collecting the money that the judge said is owed.

As a result, the winner must do the work involved in collecting for him or herself, unless he or she employs someone to collect it.

In a recent magazine article, the author surveyed small claims courts in Hawaii and Ohio to determine how many of the people who won cases actually collected their money.

In Honolulu, 40 percent of the people got nothing after the suit. In Toledo, 44 percent did not recover. Large judgments may be even harder to collect. The person who is sued may file bankruptcy in such cases, and the money cannot be collected.

There are ways to approach collection of the debt. The secret, experts said, is perseverance.

Stephen Elias, a California attorney who has written self-help books, advises not to give up just because it may be complicated. Many people, he said, just give up because there are no easy ways to collect.

The first step is to lay the groundwork for collection. After waiting until the time for appeal of the judgment has expired, you must determine what assets the person has and where they are located. The law in Georgia allows you to call the defendant into court to answer questions about his assets, for example.

Once a person finds out where these assets are located, such as real estate or a car, he or she may secure a court order allowing him or her to seize the property or place a lien on it.

If there is no real estate or a car, one could look to a garnishment of wages. In Georgia, in most cases, 25 percent of disposable earnings may be garnished. If the person were a civilian employee of the U.S. government, a 1994 law makes garnishment possible there as well.

Remember, renew your rights to collect. Just because the person you sued has no job, no bank account and no property now, that does not mean in two years the same will be the case. A judgment may be renewed in many states for 20 years or more.

For general advice, the Legal Assistance Office, Building 5, is available to assist you in these and other matters by appointment. Office hours are 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. and the telephone number is 545-3282.

Frank R. Loyd Elementary School

All men were created equal • all men were created equal • all men were created equal

Celebrating the abilities of all children

By Lisa M. Hibbert
Bayonet staff writer

Loyd Elementary School and the Fort Benning Schools system celebrate the abilities of all children with their Special Education program and Exceptional Child Week celebration.

According to the Special Education teachers at Loyd, the post Special Education Program is designed to help children with learning disabilities, emotional or physical impairments, intellectual disabilities or speech and language disorders become contributing members of society. However, the learning styles the teachers use, and the additional life skills students in this program receive that the children in the mainstream programs do not, would be beneficial to all.

When you enter any of the three Special Education classrooms at Loyd you will find things like a washing machine, a stove, a sewing machine, and even a candy store.

"Our classes are set up for life skills," said Mable Wilson, kindergarten and first grade teacher. "We teach the children how to do things like making sandwiches because what if no one is around and they get hungry."

In Third, Fourth and Fifth Grade, Teacher Jean Anderson's class, the students learn how to wash clothes. Although these may be things that all children learn at home, the children enrolled in this program receive additional reinforcement.

But the program does not revolve around cooking and sewing, the children are mainstreamed as often as possible into science, math, English classes and more, said Evelyn K. Montgomery, second grade teacher. For those students who can't venture to the other classes, the teachers help them learn the same information but present it to the students in a different manner.

"Different children learn in different ways," Anderson said. "Some children may be auditory learners and may need to have a test read to them instead of reading it by themselves. Others may need to have the questions explained to them.

"Even though we do this for the child, the child is still taking the test and is still answering the questions," Anderson said. "We just gear things around that child's learning ability."

"I try to break things down to help the children understand and I teach them how to express themselves," Wilson said.

The impairments of the students in the classrooms range widely, so the teachers use different devices that help the students learn.

"I have one student who can't talk, can't walk, can't hold a pen and has limited use of his arms and my job is to help him learn," Montgomery said. "For him we use a device called "cheap talk" so that he can communicate with us."

Cheap talk looks like an electronic rectangular board game with five colored squares on two rows. Montgomery puts a symbol on each square representing things such as eating and using the bathroom. She then records her voice saying phrases to go along with the pictures like "I want something to eat." This way, when the student has something he wants to share, he pushes the corresponding symbol.

"Yes, the children in this program do learn differently, but don't all children learn things in different ways?" Montgomery asked. "The children are labeled exceptional children but aren't all children exceptional? The children are called special but aren't all children special?"

Another thing that children in this program receive differently is grades.

"I don't give grades, I give narratives on what objectives the students met," Montgomery said. "I set goals for my students and at the end of a quarter I evaluate whether or not they've met their goals. But even if they don't meet their goals, they still progress from where they were when they started.

"I base my worth on what's inside the character of a person," Montgomery said. "Not on their grades which really don't tell what they have learned, just what they made on their tests."

Currently, the children in Loyd's program are taking swimming lessons and some of the students are planning to compete in the swim competition during the Special Olympics which will be conducted April 4 at Kinnett Stadium in Columbus. Swimming isn't the only sport the children are competing in. They will participate in track and field events, motorized wheelchair competitions and more. While the teachers do not push any child to compete in the games if they don't want to, they do help the children train to meet their goals.

"The children love to go swimming," Wilson said. "Plus it's a life skill, they need to know how to swim because they need to know how not to drown."

The teachers at Loyd all agree the focus of their jobs is to motivate the children to perform at the peak of their ability.

"You have to push the children as far as they can go," Anderson said. "Often times you uncover things that you didn't know they could do that way."

All of the Special Education teachers at Loyd are dedicated to teaching special needs children and have no plans for switching over and teaching mainstream children.

"I knew I wanted to do this ever since I was eight years old," Montgomery said. "My mother and I visited a friend of hers who had a physically handicapped child. I knew then that I wanted to work with challenging children like that. This is a very rewarding job and there is never a dull moment.

"Part of my job is to prepare these students for the real world," Montgomery said. "This is the time to make demands on them. My main goal is to make them productive and contributing members of society."

Unlike Montgomery, Wilson did not plan to teach. "I actually went to school so that I could work in a mental institutional setting," Wilson said. "But when I graduated from college, I was a special education teacher.

Loyd Elementary school students stand with the medals they won at the Special Olympics Games.

"I am good at what I do, I like what I do and I do it because I like it."

Anderson is the only one of the three children who is the parent of a special needs child. She began teaching Special Education after she had a special needs child herself.

Anderson offers advice to parents of special needs children from the perspective of a person who has been there.

"It's easier if the child has an obvious handicap," Anderson said. "It's harder when you have a child whose disabilities manifest in behavior or conversations later.

"All parents should talk to their children and let them know that all children are different," Anderson said. "People are of different races, sizes and abilities. This will help their children interact with others.

"Kids are so easy and friendly," Anderson said. "They will walk up to each other and speak. It's usually the parent that is uncomfortable."

In the beginning, many parents believe that their children will grow out of special education programs but unfortunately many don't.

"Parents often go through a denial phase before they accept that their child is in special education," Montgomery said.

Staff Sgt. Robert Ealey, applauds his daughter Lisa after she won a gold medal in the wheelchair race during the Special Olympics.

"It's usually harder for parents who were in special education themselves to see their children being put in the special education program," Anderson said. "They worry about their child going through what they went through with the name calling and the stigmatism associated with being in special education.

"When you learn you are the parent of a special needs child, you need to continue to do what you can for the child," Anderson said. "Treat the child as if you would any other child. Get involved in a peer support group so that you can interact with other parents of special needs children.

"In the beginning I was so busy worrying about what my daughters life was going to be like," Anderson said. "I had to learn to enjoy my child instead of focusing on the what if's in her life."

Spring is here and your U-Do-It Center, Building 385, has yard maintenance supplies and equipment available for your convenience.

These items include: fertilizer, lime, topsoil, pine straw, summer grass seed, patio blocks, weed eaters, tillers, blowers, fertilizer spreaders and much more.

Starting about April 11 and running through May 3, bedding plants (flowers) will be available. Each Friday, a new shipment of plants well be delivered to the center. Each household can receive one flat of plants to enhance their yards.

Please understand, due to the large demand, we can only issue one flat of flowers for the season. If we see that the demand is not great, then we can issue an additional flat at a later date. The center also has yard equipment available for loan to assist in your yard chores.

Equipment is issued on a first-come, first-serve basis, so stop by and meet our friendly staff.

Yard items available

Units and activities, the U-Do-It Center also has yard items to enhance your surroundings, so stop by and check out the many items we have for you.

To help us better serve you, submit your pine straw and fertilizer needs on a DA Form 3161 to the Customer Service counter at the U-Do-It Center, Bldg. 385. This will assist us in ensuring that supplies are available for your convenience.

The store hours are 8:30 a.m. to 4 p.m. Tuesday through Saturday and closed Sunday, Monday and holidays.

For more information, call the U-Do-It Center at 545-1121.

Community Clean Up

Don't forget post-wide spring clean up is April 5 to 11.

Effective Monday, yard waste must be in paper biodegradable bags for pick up by our curbside recycling contractor.

Residents may use durable plastic or metal containers in addition or in lieu of paper waste bags. However, mark the plastic or metal containers yard waste only. This will help ensure your yard waste is picked up and not mistaken for trash.

You can pick up a supply of 10 bags per visit at the Directorate of Public Works, Self-Help (U-Do-It) Center, Building 385. This change in the handling of yard waste will greatly improve the efficiency of the Recycling Program.

If you have questions or topics that you would like to be addressed in the DPW "Information Corner," contact Glenn Todd, customer relations specialist, DPW, at 545-2117, or write to the Directorate of Public Works, Building 6, Room 409, ATTN: ATZB-PWM (Glenn Todd), Fort Benning, Ga., 31905.

FAITH: School celebrates birthday

Coninued from B-1

The program also featured poetry readings. The students were asked to write poems about Faith and the two top poetry writers from each grade read their poems to the audience.

The students were sixth graders Kimberly Burks and Emily Gorski; seventh graders Kiarri Andrews and Yolanda Neal; and eighth graders Samantha White and Jennifer Corriea.

Andrews also wrote the new school song, and read it for the audience at the birthday program.

The program concluded with the presentation of the cake — consisting of more than 10 sheet cakes made in a replica of the school.

The students decorated the cake themselves with the help of the school's art teacher, Gloria Loar.

Easter has historical importance

By Mark A. Zerger
29th Infantry Regiment

There are some people who think the central message of Easter is the Easter Bunny. That's like saying the main purpose of the Army is marching in parades. They miss the main point.

reflections

The central message of Easter is the resurrection of Jesus Christ. The resurrection is mentioned 104 times in the New Testament. Belief in the literal bodily resurrection of Jesus is essential for Christians.

Romans 10:9 states, "If you confess with your mouth Jesus is Lord, and believe in your heart that God raised him from the dead, you shall be saved."

The test for apostleship was that one must have been an eyewitness to the resurrected Lord (Acts 1:21-22). The central message of the apostles was that they had seen, heard, talked to and touched the risen Lord.

I Corinthians 15:6 states Christ appeared to more than 500 people at one time after he was resurrected.

In the 1932 World Series, the story is told how the legendary Babe Ruth did something unbelievable by today's baseball standards. The story says Ruth stood in the batter's box with bat on his shoulder and let the first pitch blaze by. Strike one was the call. He repeated this for strike two.

Ruth then pointed his bat toward left center field as if predicting his home run. The crowd grew silent in amazement.

On the third pitch, Ruth slugged the ball into the stands exactly where he had pointed. Is this a warm fuzzy story conjured up by Ruth fans? Not hardly. It's true because thousands of tough skeptical baseball fans saw it with their own eyes.

Suppose you only viewed the New Testament documents as reports and not the inspired work of God. This is what the experts said.

Professor Thomas Arnold, expert in authenticating historical records at Oxford University and noted author of the famous three-volume history of Rome, said, "The resurrection of Jesus Christ, in the New Testament documents overwhelmingly contain all the necessary elements for truthfulness and accuracy and should be accepted as a historical fact as well as any other historical event."

Dr. Simon Greenleaf, professor of law at Harvard University, said, "It is impossible that the apostles could have written independently documenting historical background, yet remain in agreement, unless they had all witnessed the same account of the resurrected Christ."

"There exists such overwhelming evidence, factual and circumstantial, that any intelligent unbiased jury would conclude the Jesus Christ did in fact rise from the dead," Lord Darling, chief justice of England, said.

"It is not too much to say that there is no historical incident better attested to than the resurrection of Jesus Christ," English scholar, Brooks Foss Westcott, said.

Attorney Frank Morrison set out to disprove the historical authenticity of the resurrection of Jesus. After a few years of study, he concluded that what he had set out to disprove had in fact been proven to his tough, skeptical mind and unwilling heart. He was converted and wrote the classic "Who Moved the Stone?"

R.A. Torrey, a preacher, was approached by a young attorney who told Torrey if he could accept the truth of the resurrection of Jesus with his head, then he would by faith receive Christ into his heart as Lord. Torrey gave him some books to read and told him to have an open mind.

A few months later, the young lawyer came to Torrey's office and said he no longer had any trouble opening up his mind but was having some trouble opening up his heart. They both prayed together for the young lawyer to open up his heart to the resurrected Christ.

I pray this Easter will be a time of decision for you, if you have not yet by faith opened up your heart to the risen Lord, Jesus Christ.

Easter Sunrise Service — All members of the Fort Benning community are invited to participate in the annual Fort Benning Easter Sunrise Service. The service will begin at 7:00 a.m. on the Field of Four Chaplains, adjacent to The Infantry Center Chapel.

The service will include congregational singing of the great Easter hymns, scripture readings, and special music which will enhance the community's rejoicing in the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead.

Chaplain (Col.) Marvin K. Vickers, First Army Staff Chaplain, will be the guest speaker. Since his military career began in 1967, he has had a variety of assignments from battalion through army, throughout the United States, Vietnam, Germany and Korea.

Following the worship service, a continental breakfast will be served in The Infantry Center Chapel Annex.

For additional information, call 545-2288-or 545-2050.

Protestant Women of the Chapel — April 3 will be a morning filled with music as special guest, Brenda Pace, joins us from Fort Bragg. The program will be from 9:30 a.m. until noon, and the theme will be "Sisters in Christ, Arise and Praise!" The last verse of the last Psalm, Psalm 150:6, says, "Let everything that has breath praise the Lord. Praise ye the Lord." Brenda will share exciting ways to praise the Lord, and will bless all who attend with her lovely voice.

There also will be refreshments. Even if you've never come to PWOC before, we think this program would be as much a blessing to you, as your presence would be to us!

Jesus Christ triumphant in death

By Len Kircher
11th Regimental Chaplain

I have a favorite picture I hang in my office. It's the 1940 Warner Sallman painting. It's the traditionalist view of Jesus that many Churches hang in their fellowship halls.

I'm not sure where I picked it up over the years but on the back of it someone wrote these words: "What is death to him?"

reflections

As a pastor and chaplain for a number of years, I have walked away from many fresh graves. The words of so many of those left behind is a constant.

"Pastor, death is so final." We can only imagine the total disappointment which gripped the hearts of the followers of Jesus that dark Friday when he was crucified.

Only those who have fumed from an open grave with the word's of the minister's committal ringing in their ears can imagine what they felt. If death is so final, then why did the women go back to the grave site?

How quickly the women reamed that whenever you go searching for Jesus of Nazareth, you can expect the incredible. They did not realize the magnitude of what would be before their eyes..

On that ugly Friday, death waved it's dark, ugly banner in triumph. Jesus cried, "It is finished," and walked through the valley of the Shadow of Death. But somewhere between the closing of the Jewish Sabbath and the rising of the sun, another empire struck back.

Jesus had been taken captive, but it was to lead captives free. He advanced upon his jailer in the world of darkness and snatched from him three keys; one to death, one to hell and one to the grave. His spirit mounted from Hades and entered that body they had only recently taken down from the cross. Suddenly, a body no longer subject to time or matter or gravity walked through the stone walls of a garden tomb.

Jesus hung there with his arms outstretched, we quietly and quickly pass by. How do we act on this? What meaning does this have for the world? For you? A martyrdom had reversed itself to become a triumph.

Preachers will state: "It's Friday, but Sunday's coming!" To me, the name "Good" Friday is more aptly stated"Triumphant" Friday. Thanks to Jesus, we no longer live under the law but grace. Thanks to Jesus, we are no longer subject to the forces of darkness but light. Thanks to Jesus, we no longer need fear those who would kill our body.

The one who triumphed over death and the grave has taken away from the enemy that power which he held over us. They can kill my body but never my soul. Because of Good Friday, I belong to another master — Jesus Christ.

He's here today because of what happened on Good Friday. Wherever humanity is heavy laden, wherever souls are sad, wherever bodies are burdened with sickness, wherever days are darkened, you will find him there.

I thank God everyday of my life for what happened on the cross of Calvary. "What is death to him?" becomes "What is death to me?"

Coins

Command Sgt. Maj. Kenneth Sponsler, 3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division (Mechanized), sergeant major presents Spc. Brian Stevenson, a 3rd Brigade military policeman, with a brigade coin at a recent ceremony. Stevenson and seven other 3rd Brigade MPs received coins and letters of appreciation for helping at an accident scene. The MPs, enroute to Fort Stewart, Ga., came upon a smoke cloud covering the road. A farmer was burning his field and the smoke was drifting across the road. The first MP van drove through the cloud while the second van stopped and then heard a collision. A pickup truck had stopped in the middle of the smoke, causing a car to rear end it. The MPs in the second van went to check on the people in the car while the MPs in the first van began to set up a traffic control point on one end of the smoke cloud. Seeing the drivers were okay, the MPs in the second vehicle then set up a traffic control point on the other end. Because the MPs had no radio, they had to stand in the middle of the cloud and use voice commands to direct traffic through the accident scene. After about an hour and a half, the local police arrived on the scene and took over.

Child Abuse Awareness

Army joins with community program to sponsor a symposium

Rebecca Welch
Family Advocacy Program

Professionals who work with victims of child abuse will participate in a three-day training conference April 28 to 30 at the Columbus Iron Works Convention and Trade Center.

The conference is sponsored by the Family Advocacy Program at Fort Benning in cooperation with the University of Georgia Cooperative Extension Service.

Opening ceremonies will feature Maj, Gen. Carl F. Ernst, Fort Benning Commanding General.

Joann Cavis, extension agent with the Cooperative Extension Service, and Becky Welch, manager of the Family Advocacy Program at Fort Benning, were the founders of the child abuse conference which originated in 1989, with the first conference in 1990. The first conference began with multi-disciplinary training for the purpose of developing an integrated community response model that would decrease system abuse of children.

"The foundation of effective child abuse prevention programming begins with training for professionals," Welch said.

Cavis credits Welch for her visionary leadership and resources of the Family Advocacy Program in the establishment of the bi-annual Child Abuse Conference.

"We probably would not have the Child Advocacy Center in Columbus today if it had not been for Becky and the Family Advocacy Program," Cavis said. "The Family Advocacy Program at Fort Benning is a model program and seeing how the program worked as a disciplinary approach, several members of the Columbus Chartered Council on Child Abuse and leaders in the community got together to visit another advocacy center in Huntsville, (Ala.)

"After looking at both facilities, it was decided that a Child Advocacy Center would greatly benefit the Columbus community."

Welch feels that as a child advocate, she deems it necessary to work with the tri-community, since so many families live on and off the installation. Welch currently serves on the board at the Columbus Regional Chartered Council on Child Abuse and the Columbus Child Advocacy Center.

Welch also stated that she wanted to provide this training to help professionals who work with the victims of child abuse be the best they can be, to better understand parents who are under stress and the dysfunctional family system, and to discover ways to help families through networking in order to prevent abuse from happening, but most importantly "To help the child."

This training is very important, Cavis said.

"Since Fort Benning has a Memorandum of Agreement with the Department of Family and Children Services and works closely with the Columbus Police Department and the Columbus Alliance for Battered Women, it is crucial for the civilian and military professionals who work together to have an understanding of the latest techniques, procedures and methods when working together on cases," Cavis said.

"Professionals who train together have greater understanding and can better help the children."

Growing concern about the many stresses families face, such as the downsizing of the military, economic slowdown and hardships for families prompted this positive prevention-of-the problem approach in Columbus.

"This conference is a model training program for the nation," Welch said. "By educating the professionals, we can find out ways to help families and identify areas in which we need to work."

The purpose of the training conference is to address child sexual abuse through an integrated community response, to better equip the professionals who deal with this difficult issue to do their jobs and to work together for the child's benefit.

Cavis and Welch organized a committee to help plan training this year to meet the needs of the agencies in the community.

Representatives from the Muscogee County Schools, District Attorney's Office, Columbus Police Department, Juvenile Court and others will participate in this training. Welch stated that any professional in the community is invited to attend.

Funds are short with all agencies. Where else can you attend a three-day seminar for $35? The training will be free to all Fort Benning professionals. Professionals targeted for this conference are social workers, teachers, principals, counselors, psychologists, physical and mental health professionals, police, prosecutors, custody and probation officers, child advocates, childcare workers, etc.

Professionals who attend the conference will be able to earn professional developmental credit under the auspices of the University of Georgia through the Continuing Education Division and the Cooperative Extension Service.

Welsh and Cavis both agree that it takes trust and partnerships, as a collaborative effort, to plan and implement a major training effort like this one.

"We have been very successful with the past three conferences. Becky and I look forward to working with and training together to help the many families and children of our community," Cavis said.

Nutritionist offers tips, advice on

Reading food labels

By Julie A. Del Rio
Martin Army Community Hospital

Fat free, high in calcium, low cholesterol, light — these phrases describe the amount of a nutrient in a food, but they don't tell exactly how much of it there is. They're called nutrient content claims.

Nutrient content claims appear on the front of food packages and can only be used if a food matches specific nutrition criteria set by the government. Here are some of the nutrient content claims and their definitions:

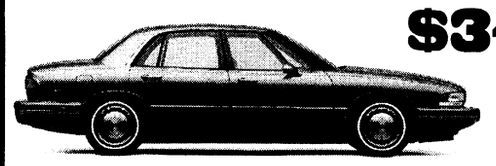
Nutrient content claims differ from nutrition facts which do list specific nutrient amounts. But, nutrient content claims on the front of labels provide quick information alerting the consumer to foods that have more of one dietary component or less of another.

Free, low, reduced — these signal foods low in calories, fat, cholesterol, sodium or other nutrients that most people need to moderate. Terms such as excellent source of and high refer to foods that have a lot of fiber, calcium iron and other nutrients that people may need more of.

Consider a can of kidneys beans. The claim might say high in fiber. The nutrition facts panel shows that one serving supplies 25 percent of the daily value for fiber or six grams of fiber per serving.

In order for a product to claim it is high in fiber or an excellent source of fiber, a food must provide at least 20 percent of the daily value for fiber or five grams of fiber per serving.

When using nutrient content claims in choosing foods, always check the other nutrients on the nutrition facts panel to compare one food with another and to see how the food fits into an overall healthful diet.



Read the nutrition information provided on food labels to make healthy food choices.

Remember, all foods can be incorporated into a healthy diet.

MARKSMANSHIP UNIT

Rifle team shoots in Europe

USAMU Public Affairs Office

Members of the International Rifle Section of the U.S Army Marksmanship Unit traveled to Europe for the Intershoot in the Netherlands and the 5th International Baltic Cup in Denmark. The Army shooters captured several top-place finishes in both of the matches.

"Both of the competitions are broken down into three-day matches," USAMU shooter Troy Bassham said. "At the end of the three-day match, the top eight shooters competed in the final match."

At the Intershoot match, there were 36 shouters representing 11 different countries throughout the world, Bassham said.

For each event, the shooter has 60 shots with a possible 10 points for each shot, women have 40 shots with the same scoring. The center shot, or bull's eye, is worth 10 points and then is broken down into larger rings from there, Bassham said.

The 10 ring is a total of half a millimeter in diameter and is placed 10 meters away from the shooter, Bassham said.

In the individual matches, USAMU shooters dominated the Intershoot, taking first and third places on day one and two, and in the team standings, swept first place all three days.

During day one of the individual matches, Bassham took first place with a total of 696.4 points and Glenn A. Dubis came in third with a total score of 690.4.

The second day of individual matches, Kenneth A. Johnson came in first place with a total score of 697.1 and Steven C. Goff took third, scoring 691.2 points.

"The remarkable thing about the competition is that the Americans had four people make it to the finals each day," Bassham said.

The scores for the team events are taken from the qualification scores of three shooters.

The first day, the USAMU team of Dubis, Johnson and Bassham took first place with a combined score of 1,767. The team of Goff, Johnson and Bassham took first with a combined score of 1,768 and 1,762 respectively the second and third day.

After the Intershoot competition came the Baltic Cup.with three USAMU shooters participating.

In the individual events, Dubis took first place the third day of competition with a score of 594 out of a possible 600.

Team standing put the U.S. team with a Gold Medal the first day with a score of 1,751 and two Silver medals with scores of 1,743 and 1,763, to finish the competition.

The U.S. team for the Baltic Cup competition was made up of Goff, Dubis and Timothy Manges.

Shooters make national team

U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit shooters were recently chosen to be on the 1997 U.S. National World Cup team.

The World Cup competition is the first opportunity where marksmen can shoot and qualify to compete in the 2000 Olympics.

Glenn A. Dubis, Kenneth A. Johnson and Troy A. Bassham made the team as international rifle shooters.

Shotgun shooters Shawn C. Dulohery, Bret E. Erikson, David R. Alcoriza, Joseph D. Buffa, James T. Graves, Joetta R. Novinski and Matthew T. DePuydt made the team and will compete for the U.S. team at the World Cup in Nicsa, Cyprus, April 7 to 14.

International pistol shooters Rhonda L. Bright, Daryl L. Szarenski and Travis A. Jorgenson will compete in the Munich and Milan World Cups. International pistol shooters will be selected after the World Cup Selection Match in Atlanta, April 11 to 13.

Armando R. Ayala, the 1996 Men's Interservice Running Target champion also made the team.

outdoor outlook

Georgia State Parks offer guided canoe trips — Outdoor enthusiasts can explore Georgia's scenic waterways on guided canoe trips at Hamburg High Falls and Panola Mountain State parks.

Park staff will explain basic canoeing techniques and interpret natural surroundings while leading paddlers on day-long trips.

Participants can see beavers, otters, kingfishers, great blue herons, turtles and other wildlife.

Trips fill quickly, so pre-registration is required. To register, call the park directly.

The cost is $15 per person, which includes canoe, paddles and life preserver. Canoers who bring their own equipment pay $10. A $2 park pass fee is charged per vehicle.

Eighteen of Georgia's state parks rent canoes so visitors can explore lakes and streams on their own.

Prices are $3 to $5 for an hour, $8 to $15 for four hours and $12 to $20 for an entire day. For a free "Guide to Georgia State Parks and Historic Sites" or "1997 Events" brochure, call (404) 656-3530.

To reserve a campsite or fully equipped cottage, call (800) 864-7275.

The parks that will offer canoe trips are:

•Hamburg State Park, Mitchell, Saturday, April 12, 19 and 26, 9:30 a.m. to 2 p.m.

This is an easy, 4.5-mile float down the Ogeechee River.

Call (912) 552-2393 to register.

•High Falls State Park, Jackson, second Saturday of each month, enjoy an easy trip down the Towaliga River, May 10, June 14, July 12, Sept. 13 and Oct. 11. Call (912) 993-3053 to register.

•Panola Mountain State Conservation Park, Stockbridge, May 17, 9 a.m. to 2 p.m.

This clean-up trip down the South River combines wildlife observation with litter pickup.

Sept. 27, 9 a.m. to 2 p.m. Explore three miles of the South River which forms the northern boundary of this park.

Nov. 15, 5:30 to 7:30 p.m. Adults may enjoy a sunset float on the park's 3.5-acre lake. Call (770) 389-7801 to register.

State parks post fishing tournaments — The arrival of spring means it is time to get out to your favorite fishing pole and head to Georgia's state parks.

This year, the parks have planned a dozen fishing events where serious anglers can strut their stuff while beginning youngsters learn the basics. The tournaments are a great excuse for families to spend time together in the spring sunshine.

Most state parks have boat ramps and docks, and many rent boats and sell bait. For more information about a fishing tournament, call the host park.

Fishing tournaments are just some of the many events conducted by state parks and historic sites throughout the year.

All events are free and parking is $2.

•A parent and child fishing tournament takes place April 12 from 6 a.m. to 6 p.m. at Mistletoe State Park.

Applying parents and grandparents may join younger family members for a day of fishing competition. Grand prize is two nights in one of Mistletoe's cottages.

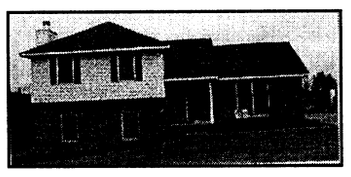
Where Critical Care and ER Mean Caring

Providing quality care in a fast-paced, high intensity environment demands expert professionals. At Gwinnett Medical Center, we foster an environment that promotes teamwork and a commitment to excellence. Our community is growing as well as our patient population, which has resulted in increased acuity requiring highly qualified, experienced R.N.'s.

We now offer a new salary structure and a $1,000 sign on bonus for joining our team.

Currently, we have opportunities for Critical Care and ER Nurses with Georgia licensure for our ICU/CCU and emergency department. Two years experience in area of specialty is required, and ACLS certification is preferred. Day, evening and night shifts are available.



We offer a new expanded benefits plan including certification educational bonus, matching tax annuity 403B, tax deferred healthcare and dependent care reimbursement accounts, retirement plan, tuition reimbursement and much more! Tax offices set for late filers

By Elizabeth LaMonica
Special to The Bayonet©

As April 15 approaches, many Soldiers rest secure knowing their taxes are done and their refunds are on their way.

Two offices were established to help Soldiers, their families and retirees fill out and file both their federal and state forms correctly. The tax centers also electronically file federal tax forms.

The staffing for the tax offices come from the units around Fort Benning. About 110 Soldiers were borrowed to serve as unit tax advisors. Each UTA completed training prior to being allowed to fill out federal forms and usually specialized in handling several states' forms.

According to Capt. Robert Magnuson, the installation tax officer, the tax offices are doing well.

From Jan. 31 through March 7, the offices served 4,404 clients, prepared 3,525 tax forms and electronically filed 2,756 cases.

"These offices saved the Soldiers approximately $352,500," Magnuson said. "The UTAs have been invaluable in helping the Soldiers save so much."

The tax offices are open 8:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. Monday through Friday. Individuals are seen on a walk-in basis and are encouraged to allow plenty of time for their tax preparation. Sometimes clients can be helped immediately, while at other times, the wait is about an hour plus preparation time.

To receive tax assistance, individuals need to bring their W-2s, 1099s and social security cards to one of the centers. The social security cards are especially important for those who have changed their names and for people of any age who were recently assigned a social security number.

If a Soldier does not have the time to let the tax offices prepare his or her taxes, he or she can still pick up the necessary forms. A spouse with a power of attorney may bring it and the other necessary forms to a tax office and a UTA will prepare the taxes.

Soldiers serving in a declared hazardous duty zone — Bosnia, Croatia and Macedonia — were given a special extension in support of the missions.

"When they return, these Soldiers have 180 days plus the time left in the tax season from when they were deployed to file," Magnuson said. "However, it is important to make sure the Soldier is deployed to a declared hazardous duty zone."

Electronic filing allows Soldiers to receive their refund checks in about two weeks compared with a one- to two-month turnaround with paper filing. Electronic filing ends April 8.

Even Soldiers who expect to owe money to either the Internal Revenue Service or a state are encouraged to come in early to avoid the last-minute rush. The offices will close April 15 at 4:30 p.m.

The Main Post Tax Office, located in Classroom 1, Infantry Hall, mostly serves Soldiers from Main Post. Another office was set up in Building 9025, Kelley Hill, to serve the 5,000 Soldiers in that area.

Post commander praises community during rally

By Elizabeth LaMonica
Special to The Bayonet©

Soldiers and civilians filled Marshall Auditorium Wednesday for a pep rally acknowledging Fort Benning's recent outstanding achievements.

The garrison commander's office sponsored the event to highlight excellence. The ceremony was conducted to recognize the key process champions who helped the installation win two Army Communities of Excellence awards.

The post received both the Commander in Chief's and the Chief of Staff of the Army awards. The CSA award recognized Fort Benning as the best large installation in the Army, and the CINC award recognized the post as the outstanding Army post overall.

"The pep rally acknowledges the hard work, dedication and the effort not just of winning the awards, but of continuing to keep Fort Benning as an ACOE champion," said Chuck Walls, garrison manager.

Post Commanding General, Maj. Gen. Carl F. Ernst keynoted the pep rally. The U.S. Army Infantry Band played the theme from the movie "Rocky" as Ernst entered, his arms upraised in that particular victorious salute.

"I can't tell you what an honor it is to be on this stage today for this purpose," Ernst said. "You get to do a lot of things as the Commanding General of Fort Benning ... but to be able to stand up in front of the folks who do the work to make us the best Army installation in the whole world is a real privilege and an honor."

Ernst then gave out special awards and coins to the key process teams of ACOE. He personally recognized representatives from the Infantry Training, Infantry Doctrine, Infantry Future, Force Projection and the Base Operations Key Process Teams, the last of which consists of the Quality of Life, Human Resources, Communication and Automation, Resource Management, and the Purchasing Teams.

"It's not the fact that we have a banner. It's not the fact that we have a sign by the interstate that says 'best installation in the Army,'" Ernst said. "What's really important here is that you believe this is the best installation in the Army, the Soldiers and families and those who work here believe (that) and the retirees who come here for service believe that.

"Everyday it's a pleasure to be your Commanding General .... Everyday you make Fort Benning a special place to work ... And you are the very, very best."

Soldiers train in new support role

By Robin Shawlinski
3rd Bde, 3rd Inf. Div. (Mech.)

Soldiers from Company D, 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor Regiment, put their deployment skills to the test during a joint exercise which sent them to Fort Bragg, N.C., March 20 through 21.

The training was the first time the 82nd Airborne Division integrated armor support from the 3rd Infantry Division (Mechanized) into an exercise scenario. The reason for this first was because of the scheduled inactivation of the 82nd's 3rd Battalion, 73rd Armor, and the retirement of the air-drop-capable Sheridan Tank, according to the 3rd ID Public Affairs Office.

"This was very realistic training," said Capt. Greg Anderson, 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor Regiment commander. "It was a whole learning experience for both sides (mechanized and light Infantry forces)."

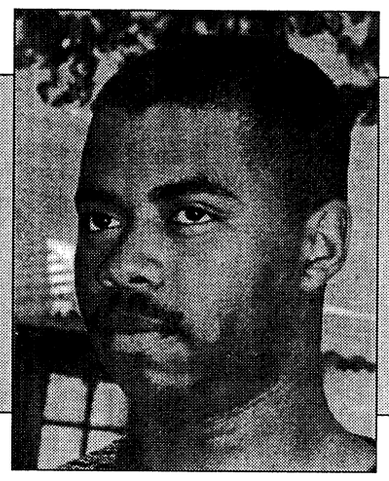
The exercise kicked off with the notification of the Immediate Ready Company March 20. The unit and support elements then went through the ready process which included among other things, accountability of troops and equipment.

Seven hours after notification, the company had loaded its M-1 Abrahms tanks, Bradley fighting vehicles and other vehicles onto a heavy equipment transporter and began marshaling them at Lawson Army Airfield.

Within 12 hours, the unit began loading C-17s with equipment and Soldiers and were ready to take off. Due to weather conditions, only three tanks and a high mobility multi-wheeled vehicle landed at Fort Bragg for the two-hour mission. Upon downloading, the tanks marshaled, linked up with forces on the ground and began their mission.

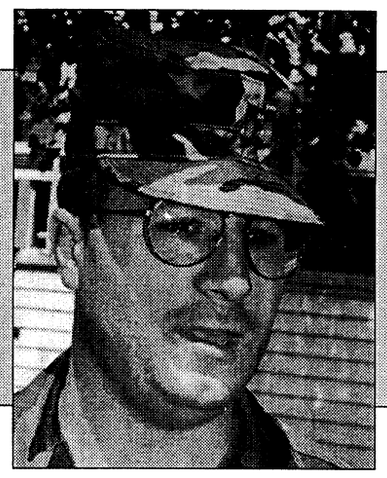
The exercise was a test of the battalion and it's support element ability to deploy rapidly and to practice command and control as well as refine tactics, techniques and procedures in these operations, Anderson said.

"This is just a start (for future training) ... we've hardly scratched the surface, but we got an opportunity to learn what our capabilities are," Anderson said.



Units providing support included Company A and Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 1st Battalion, 15th Infantry Regt.; HHC, 2nd Bn., 69th AR Regt., and support elements from the 203rd Support Battalion.

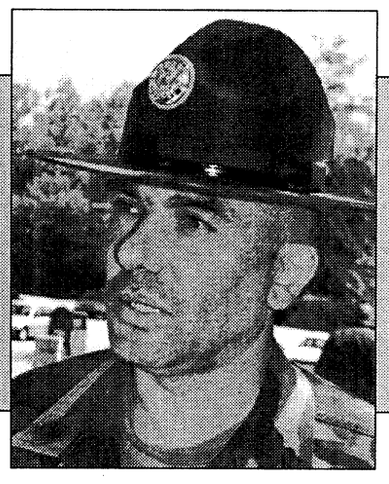
VARIOUS VOICES



What do you think about the Commanding General's Dial 545-BOSS line?

Pvt. Michael R. Henderson, Company B, 3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment — "I think the BOSS line is a good thing. When you call, they are quick about fixing problems."

Cpl. Jibade K. Johnson, Headquarters and Headquarters Battery, 1st Battalion, 10th Field Artillery — "The line is a nice way for people to get direct responses to their problems. It helps to take care of Soldiers needs."



Capt. Steve M. Kidwell, Corps of Engineers, Savannah District — "I have personal experience with the line and it is good. I called regarding housing policy and I got a quick reply from the Department of Public Works."

Spc. Jennifer M. Silver, Company B, 1st Battalion (Airborne), 507th Infantry, 11th Infantry Regiment, Airborne School — "People who can't get things through their chain of command can call and they get things done."

Pfc. Eric D. Settles, 1st Battalion, 325th Airborne Regiment, Fort Bragg, N.C. — "Sometimes there may be a problem with the chain of command, like sexual harassment issues, and people need to go out of the chain to solve them."

Sgt. 1st Class David Gonzales, Headquarters Service Company, Drill Sergeant School, Infantry Training Brigade — "The line is good for solving community problems. It enables the Commanding General to understand the needs of the community."

Multi-level marketing

Fort Benning policy, procedures nearing completion

By Lawrence K. White
USAIC Chief of Staff

I last published a piece in the March 14 issue of The Bayonet concerning multi-level marketing programs. This article reviews some background material and provides an update.

letter

Fort Benning has not issued a policy on multi-level marketing activity although we have spent a considerable amount of time determining what's the fair and correct thing to do. Our efforts have been to establish the procedural guidelines to allow Soldiers and military family members to continue these activities, while at the same time, ensuring necessary guidelines are in place for the maintenance of good order and discipline.

Some background: In late 1996, several senior commanders and command sergeants major at Fort Benning raised the issue of inappropriate practices engaged in by those involved in multi-level marketing programs. These same concerns had been separately identified by the Fort Benning Inspector General and Staff Judge Advocate.

In response to what commanders had identified as a potential readiness issue, the Commanding General asked the staff to develop options to deal with the problem. One of the options identified was prohibiting Soldiers from actively participating in multi-level marketing programs on Fort Benning. That proposal was rejected as too restrictive and unnecessary by the Commanding General, who wanted to establish a framework which was permissive within clearly articulated guidelines.

This is a gut leadership issue. Both sales and the recruitment of others to sell, the defining characteristics of multi-level marketing organizations, pose potential problems for those in military superior and subordinate relationships.

Leaders are empowered to make daily decisions in garrison, in the field, and in combat that may ultimately cost lives. The integrity of this responsibility cannot be tainted with even the appearance of financial or commercial interest. The interlocking relationships of a multi-level marketing organization simply cannot be allowed to interfere with the chain of command's ability to lead in a fair and impartial manner. If it did, it would seriously degrade readiness.

While our review of the policy proposal is not complete, I can tell you where it is headed. There will be a single policy dealing with outside employment and soliciting on Fort Benning. This puts multi-level marketing in the same category as all other commercial business activities on post and provides the necessary oversight to prevent abuse, while still enabling Soldiers and families to participate.

The rules will look something like this:

•If you are a Soldier, you must obtain written approval through the chain of command. The commander may disapprove the request if the business activity in question will detract from readiness or pose a security risk.

•You must apply to the Family Support Division, Directorate of Community Activities for permission to conduct business on the installation. This requirement applies to anyone (soldier, family member, DoD employee, private citizen) who wishes to conduct business on the installation.

•If you live on post and wish to conduct a home-based business, you must apply, in writing to the installation commander or his designee for permission to conduct business activities in your quarters. This request will be submitted to the Housing Division, Directorate of Public Works.

•If you are a Soldier, family member, or DoD civilian employee, you should review and become familiar with the joint Ethics Regulation and AR 210-7, Commercial Solicitation on Army Installations, of December 15, 1978. These two regulations address limitations on solicited sales on military installations and among members of the Department of Defense and their family members. For instance, the Joint Ethics Regulation, prohibits DoD employees from knowingly soliciting or making solicited sales to other DoD personnel who are junior in rank, grade, or position, or to their family members. This prohibition includes, but is not necessarily limited to: the sale of insurance, stocks, mutual funds, real estate, cosmetics, household supplies, vitamins, and other goods or services.

•In general, the Joint Ethics Regulation does not apply to the sale or lease of a DoD employee's non-commercial personal or real property or commercial sales solicited and made in an off post, or approved on-post retail establishment. In short, yard sales, the lemon lot, and other similar practices will continue as already laid out in official regulations.

•Similarly, any personal solicitations by the spouse or other household member of a DoD employee to those junior in grade, rank, or position to the DoD employee should be avoided because it looks like that person is using his or her office for personal gain. That is just not good for an organization that relies so heavily on the absolute integrity of its chain of command.

I would expect these rules to be formally approved and distributed within the next week or so.

Again, the effort here is to protect Soldiers and their families from abuse while still providing an opportunity to make some extra dollars.

Dial 545-BOSS is the commander's action line for Soldiers, family members and civilians to call when they have problems or complaints that can't be resolved elsewhere.

While it is not a substitute for the chain of command or for agencies established to provide assistance, the line offers another means of communication between Fort Benning's community and commanders.

Call: The caller said she is a Soldier who is married to a Soldier. She said they will have to leave her child in the care of someone else in another city when her husband is deployed for three weeks while she is attending 13 weeks of training.

The caller is concerned that in order to keep her child's place at the post day care, she will have to pay full price every week, even though the child is not there, plus pay for day care where he is staying.

Directorate of Community Activities response: The director, Child Development Center, explained to the caller that she would be allowed to use vacation leave credit for one week and that would necessitate her paying only for a two-week period when her son would not be in attendance at the post day care.

Current installation and Department of the Army policy allows for single or dual military families to retain child care spaces when they are going to be absent for an extended period of time. A written statement with a copy of orders needs to be furnished to the day care center.

A fee of 25 percent (total rounded to the nearest dollar) of the sponsor's normal monthly fee will be assessed for each month. This percentage fee is a part of the Department of Defense sliding scale fee that allows installations to charge a holding fee.

This ensures a slot is maintained for the child and the child cannot attend the center during this time or the fees will revert to the normal charges. The rates have not been increased since 1994.

CG declares Child Abuse Prevention Month

Child abuse prevention is a community problem and finding solutions depends on involvement among people throughout the community.

Statistics of children who are abused and neglected escalate each year.

The effects of child abuse are felt by whole communities, and need to be addressed by the entire community.

Effective child abuse prevention programs succeed because of partnerships created among social service agencies, schools, religious organizations, law enforcement agencies, and the business community.

Youth-serving prevention programs offer positive alternatives to young people and encourage youth to develop strong ties to their community.

All citizens should become more aware of child abuse and its prevention within the community and become involved in supporting parents to raise their children in a safe, nurturing environment.

Therefore, I proclaim April as Child Abuse Prevention Month at Fort Benning, Ga., and call upon all Soldiers, citizens, community agencies, religious organizations, medical facilities and businesses to increase their participation in our efforts to prevent child abuse, thereby strengthening the community in which we live.

Commanding General discusses AER

I recently received a message from Gen. Dennis J. Reimer, chief of staff, U.S. Army, that announced the date for the 1997 Army Emergency Relief Fund Campaign Drive and focused on AER's 55-year record of assistance and continuing importance to the Army. Additionally, he forwarded a memorandum addressed to all Soldiers and their families that expresses his support for the 1997 AER Fund Campaign.

As you know, AER exists solely to help the Army care for its own and epitomizes Army people helping other Army people. The annual campaign is the one time each year all Soldiers have the opportunity to help their fellow Soldiers through their contributions to their own organization — AER.

During the installation 1996 AER Fund Campaign Drive, $190,922.50 was contributed. The Fort Benning AER Section provided over $600,818.06 in loans and $85,565.57 in grants to Soldiers, retirees and their families during 1996. The requirements for AER help have not diminished as a result of downsizing and are not expected to decline in the future.

Your contributions help assure AER's capability to make required funds available for meeting the needs of Soldiers and their families when they are faced with financial emergencies.

I wholeheartedly support the 1997 AER Fund Campaign Drive and need your support and participation to achieve a realistic installation goal of $150,000.

3/3rd Soldiers find tax help close to work

By Robin Shawlinski
3rd Bde, 3rd Inf. Div. (Mech.)

This year, 3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division (Mechanized), Soldiers have had the convenience of having their 1996 taxes filed right on Kelley Hill.

The Fort Benning Staff Judge Advocate Office opened the tax office in Building 9025 Jan. 31.

"We looked at the number of Kelley Hill Soldiers who filed taxes on post last year and discovered they made up about one-third of our customers," said Capt. Robert Magnuson, installation tax officer. "We decided that because 3rd Brigade has a lot of missions, we wanted to accommodate the Soldiers by opening a tax office on Kelley Hill."

The tax office processed 496 personnel up to Feb. 22. The tax office has saved Kelley Hill Soldiers nearly $83,700 in preparation fees and $67,900 in electronic filing fees they would have paid if they would have filed through outside agencies.

The office is manned by unit tax advisors from the six battalions.

Before the opening of the tax office, each UTA went through a week-long course which taught them about tax laws and how to fill out the different forms.

Magnuson said the 3rd Brigade has done an excellent job supporting the effort.

"Overall, the support has been excellent. The command has really supported by providing the UTAs and allowing Soldiers to file during these hours," he said.

The Kelley Hill tax office is open Monday, Wednesday and Friday from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. and Thursdays from 1 to 6 p.m. It will remain open until April 15, but electronic filing will only be available until Tuesday. The tax office is open to Kelley Hill Soldiers and their family members as well as any other service member on Fort Benning.

Soldiers who have still not filed, before the Kelley Hill tax office closes, can have their taxes filed in Building 4, Classroom 1, Magnuson said.

Magnuson suggests that Soldiers use this service and use it early.

"This is an Army-sponsored program and part of the benefit package in the Army," he said. "File early so you don't have to wait. Do it now while the crowds are smaller."

Post construction underway

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Demoltion of the old Main Post Theater began Wednesday.

Building 90 is coming down as part of the Commanding General's effort to get rid of unnecessary facilities in his Footprint Reduction Program.

"The first brick fell at 3:30 (Wednesday) afternoon," said Wilmer Busby, DPW construction inspector in a telephonic interview Thursday.

The sidewalks and curbs immediately adjacent to the theater are blocked off for safety reasons. Additionally, a portion of the parking lot immediately behind the theater will be closed to foot and vehicular traffic. The project is expected to be completed in roughly 30 days.

Anyone experiencing problems is encouraged to contact Busby at 545-1568.

Busby said he appreciates Fort Benning residents' cooperation and patience.

Controlled Burning

Controlled burning of woodland areas will take place Saturday through April 13.

If weather permits the following compartments will be affected: A-9, A-18, C-1, C-2, D-14, D-17, F-1, G-7, J-3, K-3, K-16, K-18, M-3, 0-3, 0-15, P-1, R-2, V-1, W-2, Y-1, Y-3, Z-1, BB-1, BB-4 and Sand Hill.

Burning will occur in pine stands within these compartments to enhance endangered species habitat and training areas. People using these areas for recreational purposes must leave before 9:30 a.m. daily, between Saturday and April 13.

Training units using compartments adjacent to those listed above may experience drift or residual smoke and are reminded to exercise caution while traveling in these areas due to the potential for reduced visibility.

Units using ranges and training areas are reminded to remove flammable debris, such as, pinestraw, leaves, and trash from around structures in accordance with U.S. Army Infantry Center Regulation 210-4, Paragraph 5-22, Organizational Maintenance.

59-year-old NG pilot flies like eagle

By Jack Pagano
326th Replacement Detachment

As he buckles his chin strap on his flight helmet, Chief Warrant Officer William Popp is ready to fly like an eagle. He said he loves the freedom of the open skies and the very nature of his job-saving lives.

The National Guard UH1 air ambulance helicopter pilot is at Fort Benning in support of Operation Joint Guard. The 832nd Medical Company (Air Ambulance), West Bend, Wis. is replacing the 498th Medical Company (Air Ambulance). The 498th left for Bosnia in early March.

The Beaver Dam, Wis. tax specialist was excited when he got the call to mobilize the day before the Green Bay Packers won the Super Bowl.

With the Operation Joint Guard call-up, Popp became the oldest active duty aviator. At 59, Popp has been serving his country since January 1957 — 40 years of service and commitment.

"I enlisted as an Infantryman in 1957 and attained the rank of lieutenant colonel, but because I wanted to fly, I resigned my commission in 1982 and joined the warrant officer program," Popp said with wide eyes and a wide grin.

The reassuring smile told volumes of his love for flight. In August, Popp celebrates his 60th birthday in an assignment and location he thought would never happen. On Oct. 1, 1996, a new law permitted warrant officers the opportunity to serve to 62 years and two months. The grandfather of four small children with one on the way said he was delighted about the new law since it gave him one more chance to fly the skies in his UH1 bird.

"I love flying close to the terrain. I love the challenge of flying and our unit's meaningful mission. When you can save one life, it's worth it."

Jack Pagano

Chief Warrant Officer William Popp, 832nd Medical Company (Air Ambulance), goes through his pre-flight safety checks before lifting off.

As the safety officer, Popp is proud of the unit's safety record.

"Soldiers look up to Bill Popp," said commander Maj. Greg Frings. "We're the ambulance of the air. We're well trained, well prepared to step in and help Fort Benning."

Popp has flown close to five thousand accident-free hours. He said he'll fly between 135 to 150 hours annually in places like Fort McCoy, Wis., or anywhere the governor of Wisconsin feels the unit can be used.

While talking about his unit's outstanding cohesion and teamwork, Popp drifts back in time when he was a young officer training at Fort Benning.

"It's amazing, it seems like yesterday when I went through Infantry Officer Basic Course and Jump School at Fort Benning 37 years ago."

Although Popp did not serve in Vietnam or Desert Storm, his National Guard unit was involved back in Wisconsin with transport of teams to the rice paddies. He said he's grateful for a career that will finish on a high note.

"We have a great opportunity to show just how good we are as a unit. When (you're) flying, it's not just yourself but a crew of four and patients on board. It's a great responsibility, and a wonderful experience to participate."

Popp said he will stay in the national guard unit until he has to retire. For now, the chief warrant flies like an eagle watching, observing and keeping an eye out for his unit's welfare.

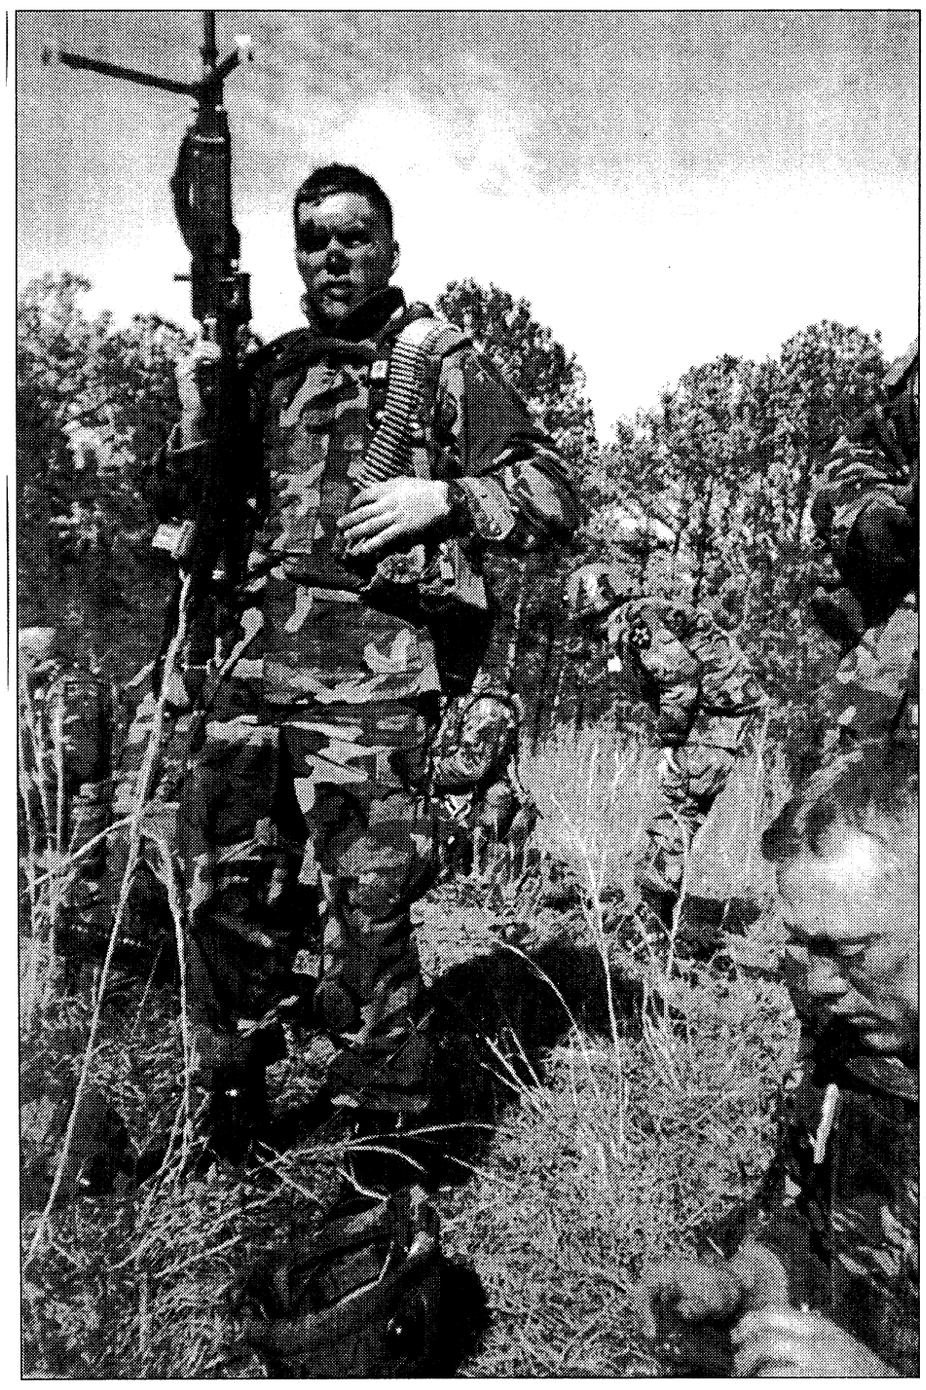
1/10 Field Artillery receives new commander

1st Bn., 10th FA Regt.

Lt. Col. Donald C. McGraw Jr. relinquished command of the 1st Battalion, 10th Field Artillery Regiment, 3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division (Mechanized), to Lt. Col. Thomas G. Torrance Wednesday on Dickman Field.



McGraw, who has commanded the battalion since March 31, 1995, will become the chief field artillery trainer at the Combat Maneuver Training Center at Hohenfels, Germany.

The incoming commander, Torrance, comes to Kelley Hill from the National Training Center, Fort Irwin, Calif., where he served as the brigade fire support trainer and as the deputy senior fire support trainer.

His previous assignments include battery commander, 2nd Battalion, 92nd Field Artillery, Giessen, Germany; brigade fire support officer, 3rd Battalion, 41st Field Artillery, Fort Stewart, Ga.; and the operations officer, 2nd Battalion, 82nd Field Artillery, Fort Hood, Texas.

Torrance is a graduate of the Field Artillery Basic and Advance Courses, the Command and Staff Service and Support School and the Canadian Forces Command and Staff College.

Torrance is accompanied by his wife, the former Ellen Provost of Monroe, Ga. They have two daughters, Leighann and Kelly.

news from the front

By Scott Rollston
498th Medical Detachment

After two weeks of plains, trains, trucks, training validation and equipment safety checks, the 498th Medical Company is in Bosnia.

Having successfully transitioned through the initial staging base in Taszar Hungary, the Soldiers have moved on to establish three bases of operations to form a theater-wide aeromedical evacuation system.

The main portion of the company, seven UH-60A air ambulance helicopters and approximately 75 Soldiers, have moved into the largest base area called "The Blue Factory" located near Tuzla, Bosnia-Herzegovina This portion of the company is called the "Area Support Team."

This team is comprised of the commander, personnel management, flight operations and the main body of Soldiers supporting aircraft maintenance, motor pool, parts and supplies. The area support team performs its own medical missions as well as supporting all pieces of the company by performing missions in other locations throughout the theater of operations.

In outlying areas, the 498th has two forward support teams consisting of three UH-60 air ambulance helicopters, and approximately 15 Soldiers. One FST, lead by 1st Lt. Scott Piecek, has been established at Capashulac Airfield in Hungary. The second FST, lead by Capt. Stephen Barnes, is located in Slovinski Brod, Croatia. The positioning of all three teams forms a strategic triangle of intra-theater evacuation supporting safe and effective emergency medical transportation of Soldiers, civilians, blood products and medical supplies.

All three locations are currently conducting hand-off training called the Right Seat Program.

During the next week, 498th Soldiers will work side by side with their counterparts from the 45th Medical Company, who have been performing the mission for the past six months. The 498th pilots are flying with their pilots to learn the safe routes and mission history.

Soldiers are busily unpacking the multitudes of cargo containers, setting up their living quarters and trying to get used to the cold. Maj. Tracy Wyatt, 498th commander, said it's a tight squeeze with two companies occupying the same location. Current plans are for the 498th to assume the mission April 8.

Although the phones are few and the lines long, Soldiers from the 498th are making a few calls home.

"The six-hour time difference adds to the frustration, but as with all new situations we work together to overcome.," one Soldier said. "Everyone is healthy and the mission continues as planned."

Fourth female drill sergeant comes to post

By Brian R. Voller
Bayonet staff writer

Every year, thousands of trainees come to the Infantry Training Brigade to become Infantry Soldiers. But aside from the large amount of troops that come to Fort Benning as trainees, there is also a large number that go to the ITB to learn how to train those Soldiers at the Fort Benning Drill Sergeant School.

Recently, the Drill Sergeant School took on a new instructor and she is only the fourth female drill sergeant to be stationed at Fort Benning.

Sgt. 1st Class Arlita Crawford, the senior drill sergeant leader at the Drill Sergeant School, first worked as a drill sergeant at Fort McClellan, Ala. from 1987 to 1989.

She said she had been off drill sergeant status for over nine years when she had a permanent change of station to Fort Benning.

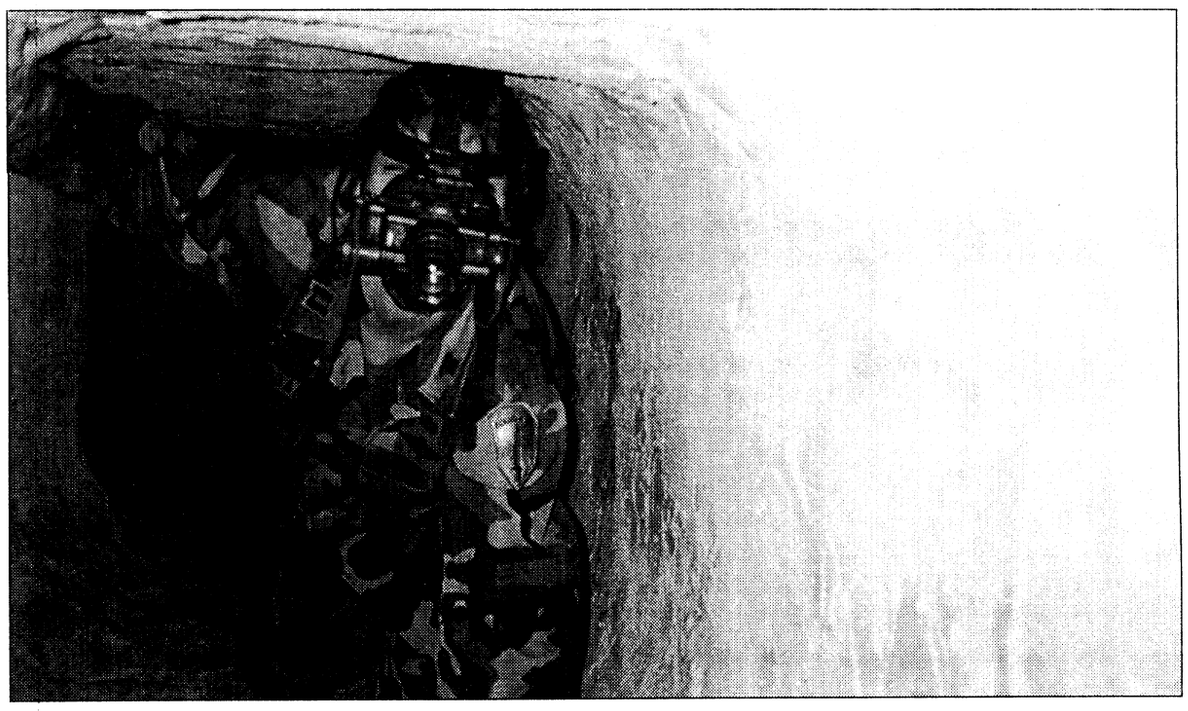
"When I first came to Fort Benning, the opportunity to work at the school was there so I took it," Crawford said. "I had to go through a recertification process to certify that I still met the requirements to be a drill sergeant, and now I work as the senior drill sergeant leader."

Crawford said being a drill sergeant training noncommissioned officers who are at the school as candidates requires that she maintain a high level of knowledge about being a drill sergeant.

"The candidates come here with a lot of knowledge and a lot of experiences and they already know a lot about how the Army operates," Crawford said. "Having to instruct these people means that I have to know everything that I'm teaching. These sergeants have been in the business and they are going to know if you don't know what your talking about."

Crawford also said being a female drill sergeant gives some of the male students and the cadre an opportunity they don't often receive.

"I know a lot of the males come to the school having never worked with a female before, so seeing and working with me or any of the female candidates or cadre is a new experience," Crawford said. "But there has been female cadre before and there is a female drill sergeant who has been working for the past 17 months, so if any of them have any problems working with a female, they haven't shown it."



Crawford said the classes for the most part are predominately male, but there have been as many as five females in a class. She said she sees the school's demographics changing in the future, but until then she will be available to offer assistance to any student regardless of whether they're male or female.

Battle Lab teaches Soldiers to see in dark

Photos by Elizabeth LaMonica

Capt. Mary Martindale, personnel officer of the Officer Candidate School, makes her way up the Night Fighting Experimentation Facility's climbing wall.

Martindale uses her hands and night vision goggles to help her maneuver through the NFEF's tunnel.

Special to The Bayonet©

Soldiers learn to see in the dark in the Night Fighting Experimentation Facility on Fort Benning.

The NFEF, located in Infantry Hall, is part of the Dismounted Battle Space Battle Lab. Dutch Waldheim, a training specialist with the two-year-old lab, said the facility experiments with various types of equipment, trying to make it better for Soldiers in the field. The NFEF creates new equipment and tests and modifies existing equipment that may be in use in the civilian world.

The NFEF is divided into three parts: a computer simulator section, a classroom and testing lanes.

The computers simulate what a Soldier might see through a thermal sight and teach him or her how to use vehicles' heat signatures to identify them and their positions.

The first necessary equipment for seeing at night is a set of night vision goggles.

Waldheim said the goggles transform ambient light into a green shadowy environment. In total darkness, an infrared light source mounted on the NVGs provides the necessary light.

NVGs require special equipment. Laser sights mounted on a weapon can create a pulsing infrared dot or a floodlight effect on a target, allowing accuracy.

Communications equipment also exists. Hand-held lasers can point out targets or put a floodlight on them. A modified bike light can pulse or remain steady to mark a boundary or meeting place. This equipment can be used for distances of 200 to 300 meters or even up to two or three kilometers.

The night firing lane allows for testing the accuracy of laser sights. The four terrain lanes simulate various nighttime environments for Soldiers to practice using their equipment.

Jerry Barricks, a systems technician, said the lanes allow Soldiers to become comfortable with their night vision goggles and get an idea of depth perception.

The lanes represent forest, jungle, desert and urban terrains, complete with sound effects and booby traps. The forest lane has tree trunks to crawl over or under and changes in the floor level.

The forest leads to a climbing wall that ends up in a bamboo jungle, complete with a pond. Barricks said the lane represents a triple-canopy jungle, such as the ones in Panama or Vietnam. At the end of this lane, a tunnel connects the jungle to the desert.

The tunnel design forces a Soldier to turn on his or her infrared light source, setting him up for a booby trap. If he leaves it on when he emerges into the desert lane, someone in the monitoring station activates a machine gun simulator, surprising the forgetful. The "stars" overhead provide enough light to see by.

After climbing a low wall at the end of the desert, a door leads into the urban lane made up of several rooms with several traps. This lane concentrates on using the goggles for intelligence gathering with newspapers, maps and radio transcripts. The traps? A hole in the wall is just that – a wall. Luminescent paint created a Looney Toons-style "gap."

A Soldier exits the lanes through a second-story window and can fast rope, go across a cable and down a phone pole or climb down a rope ladder.

Waldheim said the NFEF constantly works to improve equipment. One notable creation is a compass that fits on the NVGs, suggested by a Soldier at Fort Campbell. The "heads up" type display allows the Soldier to maneuver effectively and safely.

Drill Sgt. of the Year Staff Sgt. Sean Polwort gives instructions to a detail of "new" Soldiers in front of the Infantry Training Brigade headquarters.

ITB names Drill Sergeant of the Year

By Brian R. Voller
Bayonet Staff Writer

The Infantry Training Brigade recently selected the 1997 Fort Benning Drill Sergeant of the Year.

Staff Sgt. Sean Polwort, a drill sergeant with ITB headquarters, took the title over six other competitors during the three-day competition.

The 11-year veteran of the U.S. Army said when he first joined the Army, he didn't know that he wanted to be a drill sergeant.

"As a lower enlisted Soldier, it was never really a consideration or even a thought in my mind to become a drill sergeant," Polwort said. "But after I became an NCO (noncommissioned officer) and a leader of Soldiers, and I realized how much I like being around Soldiers, I became really interested in what it was like to make trainees transition from civilians to Soldiers."

Polwort said he was chosen to represent his battalion and to compete against other representatives from around the brigade during the three-day Drill Sergeant of the Year competition. He said the competition consisted of several events that tested the competitors both physically and mentally.

"The first day of competition began with a PT (Physical Training) test." Polwort said. "The second day included many performance-oriented, common-task tests that we were expected to know and then the third day was the formal board itself."

After the three days of competition were over, Polwort said the results were kept confidential until a luncheon was conducted and the winner was announced.

"When they announced the winner, at first I was relieved that the competition was finally over," Polwort said. "I still have a long road ahead of me, but I was very happy when I won."

Now that the competition is over, Polwort will move on to the Training and Doctrine Command competition June 16 where he will represent Fort Benning against other drill sergeants from around the country.

JAC helps Soldiers with civilian careers

Chick Eagle
Job Assistance Center

The Job Assistance Center, located in Soldiers' Plaza, assists Soldiers with making the transition from military to civilian life.

"Our mission is to provide Soldiers with the knowledge, skills and resources to conduct a successful career change," said Debbie Henshaw, a Fort Benning Job Assistance counselor. "I am personally rewarded when a Soldier or spouse finds a good job and they attribute their success to the services our program provides.

"Empowerment is what it's really all about. Job Assistance Services are designed to empower Soldiers with the tools needed to plan, organize and execute a successful job hunt."

She said success stories, not war stories, are what's talked about in the Job Assistance Center in Soldiers' Plaza. The following are a few of Henshaw's client success stories:

•A senior Infantry noncommissioned officer, at the insistence of his spouse, began to use JAC training, counseling and automated systems to secure the right job. He was hired as a Loss Prevention Officer for a local Columbus shopping area. He attributes much of his success to "the counseling I received at the JAC, my résumé and coaching on interviewing and networking."

•An NCO wheel vehicle mechanic used the resources in the JAC on an almost daily basis until he found the right job. He is now employed as a Cummins Diesel engine mechanic for a heavy truck rebuild company in Montgomery, Ala. He said, "the main factor that stood out with this company was my military training and experience which was documented in my résumé."

•A junior officer who first met an employer at one of the JAC hosted employer days, was hired as a manager trainee with a building materials company in Atlanta. He said, "the JAC was a great help and the primary reason for me finding employment. I would strongly encourage anyone getting out to use the JAC as much as possible to assist with job seeking, résumé preparation and interview preparation."

Henshaw is one of the seven full time and part time professionally trained counselors working with transitioning Soldiers and spouses in the JAC. For more information visit the JAC in Soldiers' Plaza, Bldg 2634 or call 545-2308 or 2309.

Equal opportunity complaint process

How to make a complaint

Make informal complaint or report inappropriate behavior without initiating a full investigation. This may be most appropriate for minor infractions where victim simply wants behavior stopped.

If you are the victim

Call the equal opportunity office hotline to clarify whether an incident or behavior qualifies as sexual harassment or discrimination.

Hotline number 545-3206

File a formal complaint (DA Form 7279-1-R) with any of the following people or agencies. Complaints must be filed within 60 days of incident — those filed may be pursued at commander's discretion.

Chain of command	EO Advisor	IG	Housing referral	JAG	Military Police	Chaplain	Medical Agency

Complaints, except those that have been filed with the Inspector General, must be acted upon in three calendar days. Complaints filed with an agency against a member of the chain of command will be referred to the next higher commander in the chain of command.

The commander or investigation officer appointed by the commander has 14 calendar days to investigate the allegations and meet with the victim to discuss the outcome and results. A 30-day extension may be granted from the next higher commander if circumstances require it. Further extensions can be approved only by the first general officer in the chain of command.

The complainant has several calendar days to appeal to the next higher commander if he or she is dissatisfied with the investigation results or actions taken. That commander has 14 days to complete the investigation. Final decisions on complaints rests with the general court martial convening authority.

30 days after the final decision on the complaint, an assessment is conducted by the equal opportunity advisor on all equal opportunity complaints (substantiated and unsubstantiated) to determine the effectiveness of any corrective actions taken and to detect and deter any incidents of reprisal, report and recommendation are submitted to commander on a DA form 7279-1-RNLT 45 days following final decision made on complaint.

1/38 receives new commanders

1st Battalion, 38th Infantry Regiment

The 1st Battalion, 38th Infantry Regiment conducted a change of command for Companies B and D in back-to-back ceremonies March 7 in the battalion area.

1st Lt. David A. Genrich assumed command of Co. B from Capt. Theodore Davis who is moving to Fort Jackson, S.C. Capt. William D. Goss assumed command of Co. D from Capt. Alan Deogracias II, who moved to the 5th Ranger Training Battalion, Dahlonega, Ga.

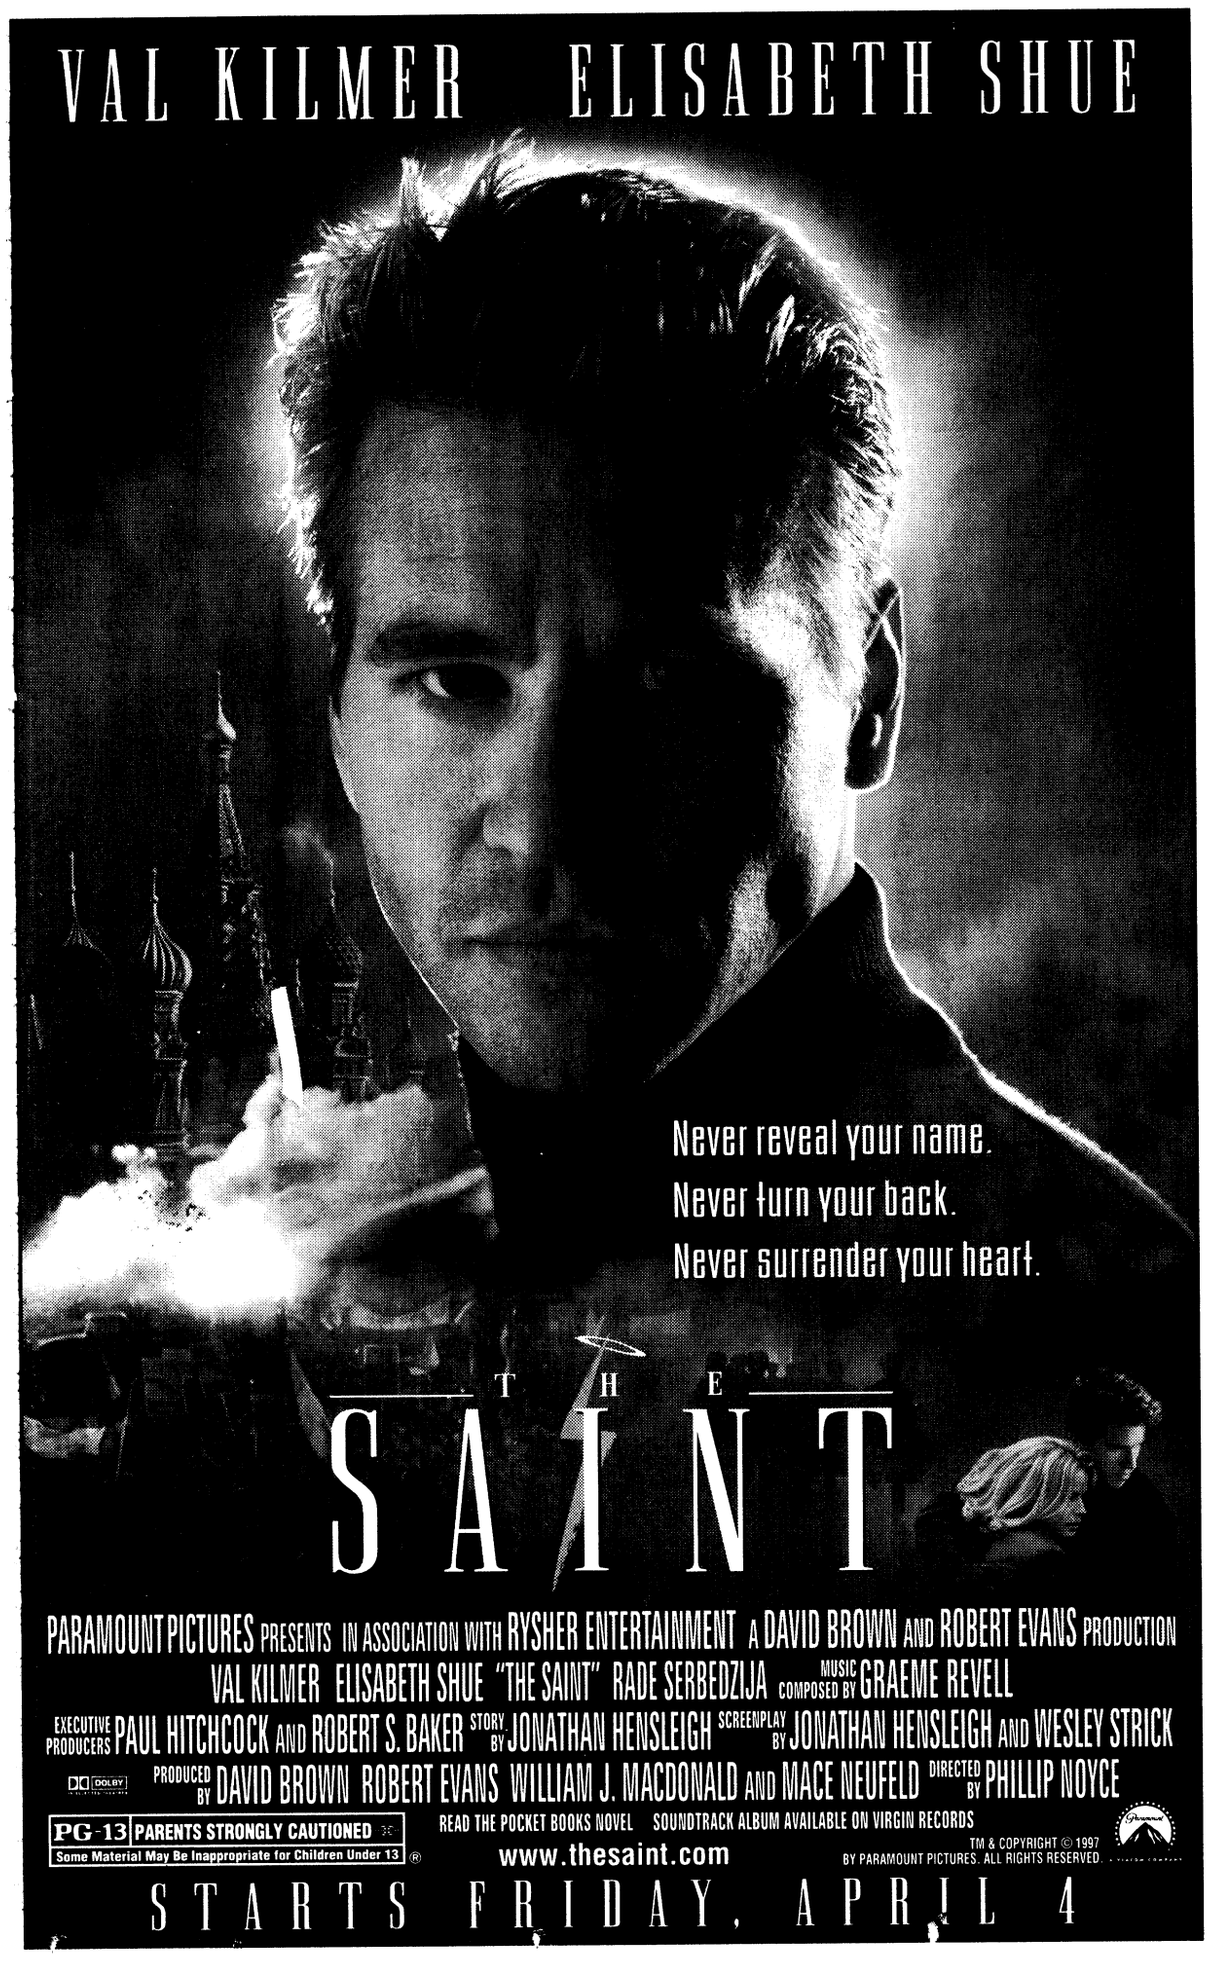
Genrich entered the Army in August 1984, attended college at the University of Georgia and received his commission in March 1993. He served with the 1st Bn., 75th Ranger Regt., and has also served as rifle platoon leader, heavy weapons platoon leader and support platoon leader with 3rd Bn., 325th Airborne Combat Team, Vicenza, Italy. His most recent assignment has been as the company executive officer in Co. D, 2nd Bn., 54th Inf. Regt.

Goss was commissioned from the U.S. Military Academy in 1992. He served three years with 2nd Bn., 502nd Inf. Regt., as a rifle platoon leader, company executive officer and anti-armor company executive officer. Goss is accompanied to Fort Benning by his wife, April.

Major General receives Order of Saint Maurice

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Fort Benning commander Maj. Gen. Carl F. Ernst presented Maj. Gen. Richard S. Siegfried the Order of Saint Maurice at a ceremony Wednesday at 4 p.m. in front of Infantry Hall.



Siegfried, a former 2nd Infantry Training Brigade and Training Center commander at Fort Benning, has been called out of retirement to chair the Sexual Harassment Senior Review Panel.

The Order of Saint Maurice recognizes individuals who have contributed significantly to the promotion of the Infantry in ways that stand out in the eyes of the recipient's seniors, subordinates and peers. Awardees must also demonstrate the highest standards of integrity and moral character, professional competence and serve the U.S. Army Infantry with distinction.

Siegfried entered the U.S. Army in 1961 with enlisted service until his graduation from Officer Candidate School in February 1963. He has held numerous command and staff positions, including two combat assignments in Vietnam. His most recent assignments include the Director of the Light Infantry Task Force at Fort Benning, the assistant division commander of the 5th Infantry Division, Fort Polk, La., the Commanding General of the U.S. Army Training Center, Fort Jackson, S.C. and the deputy Inspector General of the U.S. Army, Washington, D.C.

Family member gives all she has to others

By Lisa M. Hibbert
Bayonet staff writer

There are some people who would not even think about working for free and then there are others who really enjoy giving their time.

Being honored with the Soaring Eagle Award, the highest award presented for volunteerism in the U.S. Army Europe and Seventh Army, is Anne Streagle, wife of 1st Sgt. Merle Streagle, Company C, 1st Battalion, 30th Infantry Regiment, 3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division (Mechanized).

The memorandum that accompanies the award reads "Mrs. Anne Streagle, the wife of First Sergeant Merle Streagle is recognized for her remarkable and vast involvement within the Baumholder Community."

But according to Streagle, she doesn't think she did anything remarkable.

After all, during her four years in Germany, she only volunteered for the cub scouts, the boy scouts, the Parent-Teacher-Student organization, the Family Support Group for Company D, 3rd Battalion, 12th Infantry Division (Germany), Army Family Team Building, Army Community Services, American Womens Activities Germany and the National Military Family Association.

Streagle said she began volunteering nearly 15 years ago and has been doing it ever since.

"When I first started out as a volunteer I was really doing it for myself," Streagle said. "I knew that it was a way that I could get out of the house and meet people and ACS payed for the babysitting.

"I started out as a 'Hi neighbor,' Streagle said. "I went from door to door, greeting the new people that moved into the housing areas."

Since then, Streagle's interests have focused on the Army family and what she can do to help.

"I was lucky because I had a really supportive husband who encouraged me to learn all that I could about the Army," Streagle said.

Streagle does a lot of work with AFTB, in fact, she was among the first group to become master trainers in Germany.

"My goal with AFTB and FSG's is to help people become more self sufficient because most of our spouses are gone a lot," Streagle said. "You know, Hillary Clinton talks about how it takes a village to raise a child but I believe it takes a community to support a military family.

"Army regulations state that it is the Soldiers responsibility to maintain the readiness of the family," Streagle said. "But if a family member is able to take care of themselves, then the Soldier will be more focused at work and be more productive."

For the amount of hours that Streagle volunteers, she could get a full time job but she chooses not too because she said she finds volunteering rewarding.

"I really enjoy what I do," Streagle said. "Teaching adults Army family team building skills is very rewarding. Unlike teaching children, the adults are there because they want to be, not because they have to be."

Streagle said that she is very honored to receive the Soaring Eagle Award.

"I was flabbergasted when I found out about the award," Streagle said. "I knew that I was going to get an award but I didn't know that I was going to receive that one. I feel very honored to receive such a prestigious award."

Child Abuse Awareness

Post program offers tips on learning to recognize, prevent the cycle of violence

Family Advocacy Program

Since 1983, Child Abuse Prevention Month has become institutionalized nationwide.

The month of April has been established as the time of year when organizations, businesses, hospitals, schools, religious organizations and social service agencies join forces to promote public awareness of child abuse and its prevention.

According to Rebecca Welch, family Advocacy Program manager, every individual in the Fort Benning area has a special role to play in improving the welfare of our children. Whether or not you work directly with children, by combining your unique skills with a general knowledge of child abuse issues, you too can make a difference in the life of a child.

Education and public awareness is the key to prevention. The Army Community Service, Family Advocacy Program, hopes that you will find the following information valuable and will join the community in helping prevent child abuse and neglect.

What is child abuse?

The term "child abuse" can be defined as any behavior directed toward a child by a parent, guardian, caregiver, other family member, or other adult that endangers or impairs a child's physical or emotional health and development. Child abuse includes four major categories: physical abuse, sexual abuse, emotional abuse and neglect.

Signs of possible physical abuse

•Unexplained injuries, especially those located on parts of the body not usually affected by normal childhood activities, (e.g. eyes, mouth, back, thighs, buttocks, genital areas, etc.);

•Repeated injuries such as bruises, welts or burns, especially those where the shape of an object used to produce them is visible, (e.g. an electric cord, hair brush, belt buckle, board, cigarette, etc.);

•Unexplained fractures, (e.g. to nose, face, ribs, legs, arms, etc.);

•Denial on the part of parents that anything is wrong, unlikely explanations for the child's injuries, delay in obtaining medical care or inadequate care given, injuries which occur with increasing frequency or severity.

Signs of child neglect

Child neglect is the continued failure to provide a child with necessary care and protection, including adequate shelter, food, clothing, medical care, etc. Children left without appropriate supervision, especially young children, for extended periods of time are included in child neglect;

•Child appears poorly nourished or inadequately clothed;

•Child appears consistently tired or listless and always seems as though no one cares. Attendance at school may be inconsistent;

•Evidence shows a consistent lack of good hygiene or an obsession with cleanliness;

•Child is left alone regularly over long periods of time or in dangerous situations;

•Child shows evidence that medical needs are not being met.

Post school board members meet

By Lisa M. Hibbert
Bayonet staff writer

The Fort Benning School board conducted its March meeting Monday at the Schools Administrative Office.

Tommye Woods, director of Special Education, gave a presentation to the board members on the use of assistive technology with special education students as it related to the Department of Defense benchmark to increase student proficiency in technology.

One of the items Woods discussed was an enhanced hearing aid. The aid the students use looks similar to a walkman and has a large ear piece that fits behind the student's ear. The school prefers this device over the traditional hearing aids because this allows the level to be adjusted to the student's hearing level. Plus it helps drown out background noises and allows the student to focus on the teachers voice because the teacher wears a voice transmitter that sends his or her voice directly to the student's hearing device.

Woods also showed toys that were modified to meet the capabilities of a special needs child. She had a toy drum that instead of a child beating it with a drum stick, was attached to a tube. When the child either sucked or blew into the tube, the drum would beat.

"You have some children who do not have enough muscle control to operate certain toys," Woods said. "This gives the child the opportunity to still play with the toys."

Also at the meeting, the board members approved the February consolidated income statement for the school lunchroom fund. The monthly net income for the month was $16,855, the current year to date income was $43,402 and the current fund equity is $154, 952.

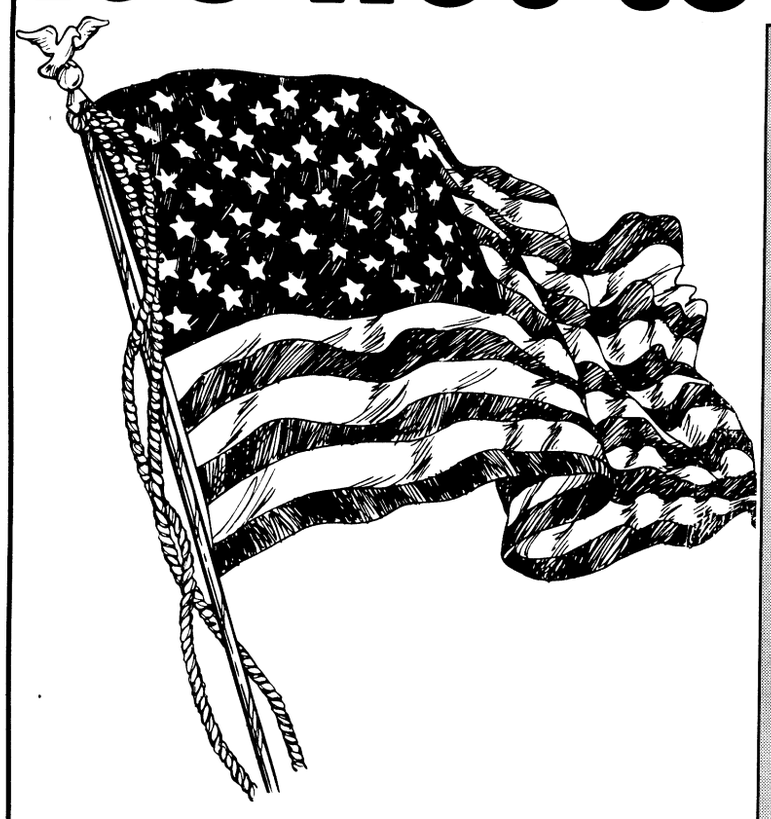
Dr. Dell McMullen, school's superintendent, presented her monthly report.

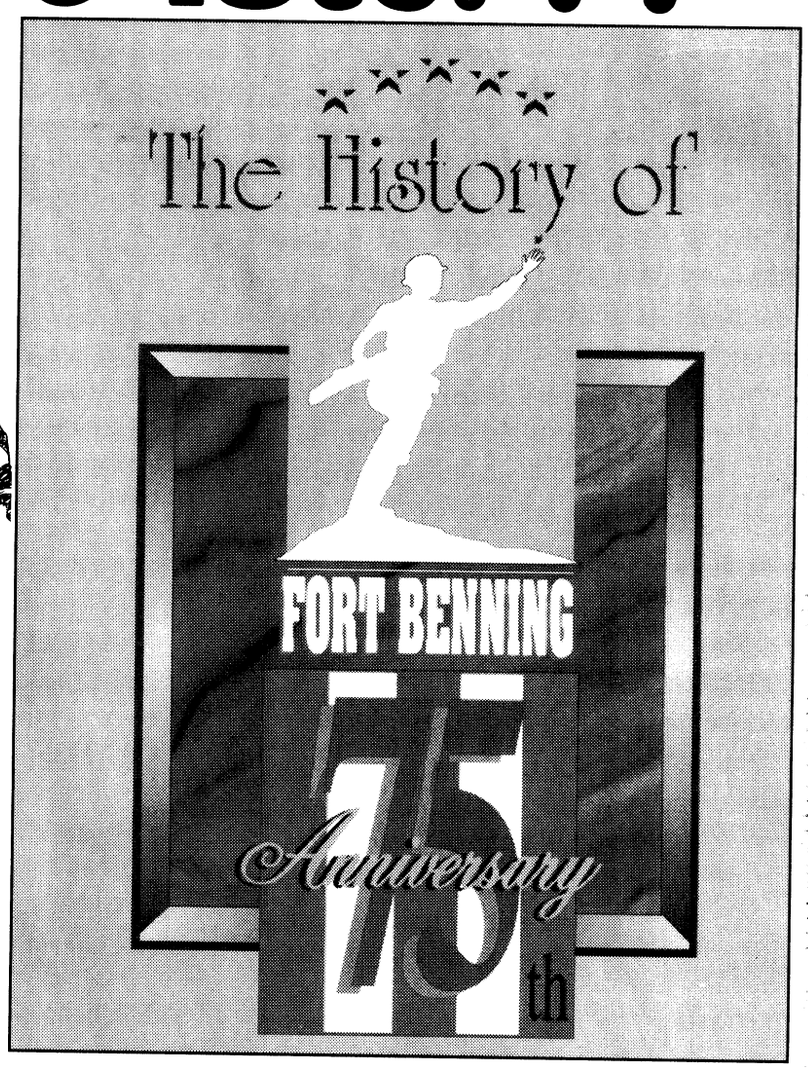
"In the February report I announced that Virginia Wilcox, third grade teacher at Dexter Elementary School won the Sixth District Science Teacher of the Year, with the State Science Teacher of the Year to be announced March 8," Dr. McMullen said. "We were delighted with the news that Virginia did win the state award, a very prestigious award.

"Technology 201, a database and spreadsheet class, was conducted for 20 teachers in March. Secretaries were involved in IBM training for an entire week and IBM training for central office personnel took place Tuesday."

At the meeting, Dr. McMullen thanked Rebecca Welch, Family Advocacy Program manager, for her help with the schools.

"Seventh graders from Faith attended the Drug Free You and Me conference at the Columbus Trade Center," Dr. McMullen said. "Reports from students and teachers are the conference was excellent again this year. We are grateful to Becky Welch for funding this opportunity for our students.





During the storm Sunday evening, Wilson Elementary School sustained some damage, Dr. McMullen said.

"The roof at Wilson did sustain quite a bit of storm damage but the contractor has been out there and everything will get back on track right away," Dr. McMullen said.

Parent activities for the month of March included Toast and Topics at White Elementary School, prekindergarten parenting at Dexter Elementary School, Lion's Pride at White Elementary school, VIP at Stowers and e-Club recognition in Atlanta for Dexter.

Attending the meeting were: Dr. Dell McMullen, superintendent,; Sgt. Joe Todd, Loyd representative; Rhonda Zerger, Dexter representative; Chaplain (Maj.) Robert Thompson, chaplain representative; Lt. Col. Stephanie Willson, attorney advisor; Richard Skinner, assistant superintendent; Alice Skinner, director of Logistics and Support Services; Sheila Long, Stowers representative; Tommye Woods, director of Special Education and Kathy Einhorn, assistant director of Special Education.

Emotional abuse is the most difficult form of child abuse to verify. It includes both verbal assaults and the withholding of positive emotional support.

Although the scars may be invisible to the naked eye, emotional abuse wounds the spirit, frequently leaving its marks for a lifetime. Victims of emotional child abuse are "hit" everyday with the power of words which are demeaning, shaming, threatening, blaming, intimidating, unfairly critical, or sarcastic in nature.

Signs of emotional abuse

•The child displays behavior that is extreme (e.g. may be involved in a pattern of lying, stealing, of fighting, or is overly aggressive, acts out inappropriately).

•Child may appear defensive, shy, or overly dependent; and •Child may be verbally abusive to others by using the same language and demeaning terms she or he has experienced.

Sexual abuse

Incest, sexual molestation, rape, sodomy, child pornography, exhibitionism and exploitation are terms most often used when describing child sexual abuse. Those who sexually victimize children suffer from an emotional or psychological dysfunction, usually as a result of their own previous sexual victimization.

They often have severe sexual problems and difficulty relating to adults. Many are adults with whom the child is familiar, and they may repeatedly abuse the same child. An adult who is a stranger to the child will often abuse that child only once but will continue to abuse other children.

The abuse can be:

•non-physical — for example, indecent exposure, obscene phone calls, or "peeping tom";

•physical — including genital or oral stimulation, fondling and intercourse; and violent abuse-rape and other forms of sexually violent behavior.

•Incidents may occur only once or be repeated many times, sometimes over a number of years.

•A single, seemingly minor incident (e.g. indecent exposure, fondling, or an obscene phone call) may cause temporary emotional disturbances such as embarrassment, fear, confusion, guilt, anxiety and a distrust of adults or strangers.

•A more severe incident (e.g. incest, rape, sodomy, exposure to pornographic activity or other forms of sexual violence) may have a lasting effect on the child.

•Behavioral problems such as withdrawal, difficulty at school, aggression, running away, nightmares, extreme depression or anxiety may result.

•Physical signs of sexual abuse may include genital swelling, cuts or bruises, venereal disease, pregnancy, etc. Symptoms resulting from emotional harm often do not surface until adulthood.

What to do

•First and foremost, do not deny the problem. Believe what the child tells you no matter how unbelievable it sounds.

•Control your emotions. Fear and anger on your part are natural reactions but may be frightening to the child. Let the child know that your feelings are not directed at him or her.

•Never blame, punish or embarrass the child.

•Reassure the child that she or he is safe and that it was right to tell you. Let the child ask questions, and then provide answers that can be understood.

•Find out as much as possible about the events leading up to, during and after the incident, but do so delicately. If the molester was a stranger, get a description of the face, clothes, location, car, etc.

•Immediately contact a physician for treatment of physical injuries and the police to report the abuse. Provide them with as much information as possible to better ensure their appropriate intervention.

•Seek counseling for both the child and yourself as soon as possible. Immediate intervention can help prevent long-term lingering effects of the abuse.

Keeping children safe is the responsibility of everyone. The more we know about the problem of child abuse the more we can do to prevent it. We all must do our part.

Continue to watch the newspaper this month for tips on preventing child abuse and resources available for families.

As everyone should know by now in Georgia, it is once again the time of year to obtain or renew your car registration. This article will explain some of the requirements concerning registration.

If you are an active duty service member assigned to Fort Benning, you have a choice — you can either register your vehicle in your state of permanent residence, or you can choose to register in the county in Georgia where you currently live.

If you choose to register in Georgia, under the Soldiers and Sailors Civil Relief Act, you are entitled to claim exemption from ad valorem taxation of your vehicle. Ad valorem taxes are taxes that a county or state imposes based on the value of personal property located in the state or county. The theory behind the SSCRA exemption is that because you had no choice in coming to your assignment, you ought not be required to pay this type of tax.

In order to claim the exemption, you must provide proof to the taxing authority (in this case, the tag office), that you are entitled to it. This is done by completing an SSCRA affidavit and providing proof of your state of legal residence. You can obtain the SSCRA affidavit at the public counter of the Legal Assistance Division in Building 5 on Main Post.

The affidavit must be notarized by one of the staff of the Legal Assistance Division, and you must bring a current leave and earnings statement with you in order to get the affidavit notarized. A current leave and earnings statement is one which is no more than 90-days old.

Once you have completed the affidavit, you then go to the tag office of the county where you live and finish the registration requirements for your vehicle. You should take with you the affidavit, your current title and registration of your vehicle, proof of insurance, your LES and the registration fee.

If you are registering the vehicle for the first time in Georgia, the fee is $38. This is because you are not only registering the vehicle, but are also applying to have a Georgia title issued on it. Subsequent registrations cost $20. You should take cash.

If you have questions concerning the registration process and the ad valorem exemption, you should call the Legal Assistance Division at 545-3281. The office hours are from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. Monday through Friday.

Yard waste

All curbside pick-up of yard waste must be in biodegradable paper bags or durable plastic or metal containers marked yard waste. As of Monday, yard waste in other types of containers will not be picked up.

Power outages

There will be an electrical power outage on Main Post (2800 Block) Saturday from 8 a.m. to 4 p.m.

The following facilities will be affected by the electrical power outage for eight hours: Battle Lab buildings 2864, 2866, 2867, 2868, 2870, 2871 and 2873; Audie Murphy Gym, building 2818; and Sightseeing Road Chapel, Building 2820. No living areas are affected by this outage.

Another electrical power outage takes place on Main Post Sunday from 8 a.m. to 1 p.m.

First Union Bank and the Main Post Mini Mall will be affected by the electrical power outage for five hours.

Tree and shrubs being planted on Main Post

During Hurricane Opal, hundreds of our old established trees were uprooted or severely damaged. As a result, the Training and Doctrine Command provided funding specifically earmarked for replacement of damaged trees and shrubs on Main Post. You have probably noticed the many trees being planted. This is a contract that was awarded at end of fiscal 1996 to plant over 600 trees and shrubs.

Living in the community

The following information is provided by the community home finding relocation referral services office to assist members of the Fort Benning community after deciding to rent a house, apartment, or trailer.

This may or may not be your first time renting, but it will be well worth your time to go over a few essential items. Keep copies of everything you have signed.

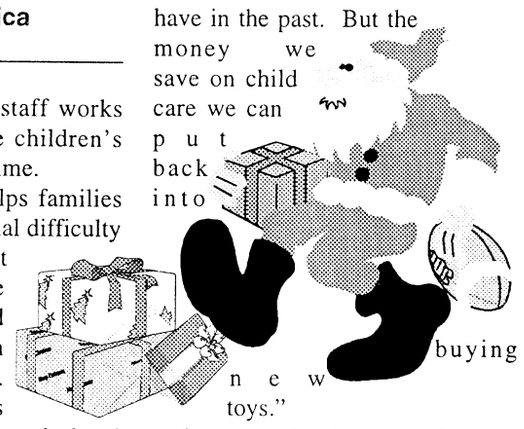
First and foremost is the lease, which provides details of your agreement. It should have the term of the lease (six months, one year, etc.), the amount of the rent and when it is due, late charges and dishonored check fees, repairs and default (what happens if you do not pay the rent). It may provide terms for early termination. If you sign a lease for six months, you are liable for six months rent.

Moving on post to government quarters is not cause for terminating your lease without penalty. Permanent change of station orders, and in some cases tour of duty orders, do allow you to terminate your lease with notice. Make sure you understand the terms of the lease before you sign it — it may save you a lot of grief later.

When you move in, you should be asked to complete a Move-in Inspection form. The sole purpose of this inspection is to establish the condition of the property when you occupied it. It is not a work order, but is important when you move out.

The information covered here is not legal advice but practical information based on the experience of the CHRRS office and is only general in nature. There are state laws that govern the relationship of landlord and tenant. If you have general questions, call Anna Wilson, CHRRS officer, at 545-3921 or 545-6610. If you have specific legal questions, you should contact the Legal Assistance Office at the Staff Judge Advocate.

If you have questions or topics that you would like to be addressed in the DPW "Information Corner" contact Glenn Todd, DPW customer relations specialist, at 545-2117, or write to the Directorate of Public Works, Building 6, Room 409, ATTN: ATZB-PWM (Glenn Todd), Fort Benning, Ga., 31905.



SANTA'S CASTLE

Working all year to ensure Christmas joy

By Elizabeth LaMonica
Special to The Bayonet©

The Santa's Castle staff works hard all year to ensure children's happiness at Christmastime.

The organization helps families cope with severe financial difficulty or emergencies at Christmas with the donation of toys and gifts for children from infancy to the age of 15. Last year, 375 families with 800 children were helped through the organization at a cost of $25 per child.

Santa's Castle, located in Soldiers' Plaza, Building 2639, is a nonprofit organization and relies on donations and volunteer efforts.

"Members of Santa's Castle pretty much do whatever needs to be done," Chris Hurley, chairperson for Santa's Castle, said. "Everybody helps one another regardless of his or her own job titles and responsibilities."

But, due to a lack of volunteer man hours, Santa's Castle changed one of their former collection tactics.

"Prior to this year we dealt with mostly used toys, which take a lot of hours to clean, repair, find parts for and quality check," Hurley said. "Our goal for this year is to transition from used toys into mostly new toys. This will require more fund raisers than we've had to have in the past. But the money we save on child care we can put back into buying new toys."

Santa's Castle pays for the volunteer's child care at Tot Town while the volunteer is helping at Santa's Castle.

"For volunteers with two or three children, that can add up to $5 to $7.50 per hour," Hurley said. "We had to restructure and come up with a better way of doing things."

Volunteers will still be needed for several tasks. Each toy must be inventoried and sorted, which generates a lot of paperwork. Closer to the holiday season, even more paperwork will need to be dealt with as the units submit their families in need. Also some volunteers will still be needed to help clean the few used toys that Santa's Castle will still accept.

"Santa's Castle will still accept used bicycles, books and stuffed animals in good condition," Hurley said. "Right now, those items and cash donations may be dropped off Mondays from 9 a.m. to 2 p.m. Closer to Christmas, we will be open more hours.

"If 10 people would buy an extra coloring book for Santa's Castle when buying one for their child, that would be 10 we wouldn't have to worry about," Hurley said. "When you have a meeting, consider having everyone bring a $5 toy for Santa's Castle. The only thing we ask is that units having fund raisers let us know so that we can help with ideas and some publicity."

Hurley has a list of toys appropriate for each age group and noted that, although there is a need for any type of new toy, there is a particular need for toys for elementary school age boys.

Meanwhile, the used toys already collected, cleaned and quality tested will be sold at a yard sale to be conducted at Santa's Castle April 12 from 8 a.m. to 1p.m. Cash only will be accepted for the items which range from 50¢ to $5 for the really large items like a Barbie house and electronic football game. Everyone is invited to go to building 2639 to take advantage of the sale.

"The money raised by the sale of the toys will be put back into buying toys for the 1997 season," Hurley said.

For more information about Santa's Castle, call 569-7343.

Learn how to give all to God

By William D. Smith
Martin Army Community Hospital

Jesus was once asked what is the greatest commandment in the Bible. Jesus answered, "Love the Lord your God with all your heart and love your neighbor as yourself (Matthew 22:37-39)." This responsibility seemed so simple, yet one rich young man found it impossible. This young man had come to Jesus to discover how he could earn eternal life (Matthew 19: 16). To the young man's surprise, Jesus told him to sell all that he had and give to the poor.

reflections

What is the point of this passage? By this act, this person could both show his love to God and to his neighbor. Is our loving God actually telling this young man to become a pauper and then God will love him and care for him? Even the disciples had a hard time with this possibility as evidenced by their question: "Who then can be saved? (Matthew 19:25)."

Jesus' response to the disciples presents the point of the passage: "With man, this is impossible, but with God, all things are possible (Matthew 19:26)." In other words, the young man could not understand that there was nothing he could do to earn eternal life. Jesus, therefore, cut through the chase and demonstrated that the young man was not willing to totally commit himself into the care of God.

Today we have the same problem. We keep thinking it is possible to go it alone. We strive for accomplishments. We want to know that we are ok. So we work until we are burnt out. We force time in our schedules for kids, family, and even God himself.

Yet, rather then feeling at peace with ourselves and others, we find frustration and a hurried life style. Saint Peter told us to cast our cares on him, for he cares for us (1 Peter 5:7), yet, like the rich young man, we walk away shaking our heads, for this too is an impossible task.

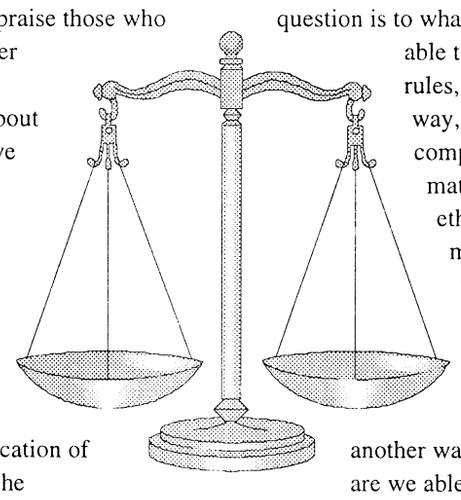
I like the Biblical story of the father whose son was demon possessed from childhood. The father hoped that Jesus could help, but was not sure and said, "If you can..., help us (Mark 9:22)." Jesus pointed out that the father need only believe. The father stated: "I do believe; help me overcome my unbelief! (Mark 9:24)." Jesus then cast the demon out of the boy.

Just as the father recognized that he did not have the ability to fully trust God, so we need to likewise come to that conclusion. We, like that father, need to ask God to enable us to trust him and do his will. For the Christian, this involves a daily recognition of God's love toward us in spite of our sin and inabilities. Accepting this grace, we can seek his enabling Spirit to help us accomplish those impossible tasks.

Exercising justice can make you stronger

By George W. Smawley
1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment

In recent months, the notion of "justice" has received tremendous attention in the popular media. As people of faith, we ought to take a moment and reflect upon its relationship to our lives and the way in which our religious convictions guide the way we exercise the precious rights of justice we enjoy in American society.



reflections

At every level, from disciplining unruly children to the complex realm of military justice, we are faced with difficult issues of truth, fairness, equity and for individuals of faith, the idea of morality.

Benjamin Franklin once wrote that "without justice, courage is weak." Those of us in the military understand that courage, especially moral courage, is critical to our success as leaders. But it is also important to our success as parents and spouses, as friends and members of the community. It is a part of everything we do.

Moses tells us "not to pervert justice or show partiality, and not to accept bribes for such blinds the eyes of the wise and twists the words of the righteous;... follow what is altogether just, that you may live and inherit the land which the Lord your God is giving you. (Deut. 16:1 9-20)."

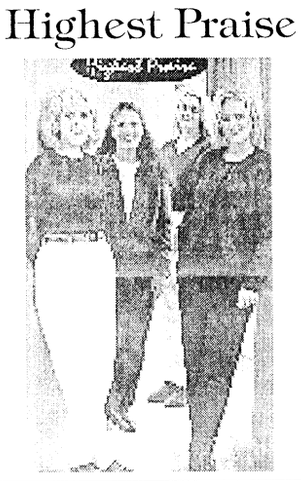
Paul writes that only wrongdoers need fear the authorities and that those who do good will receive praise for the same (Romans 13:2-3), and he even sets out principles for Christian living (Romans 12:1-15:3). Some have said that justice delayed is justice denied, and Peter writes of the need to punish evildoers and praise those who do good (I Peter 2:14).

But what about morality? If we presume that God's word is truth and that the principle of justice is non-negotiable, how do we mark the application of justice where the standards of justice seem mired in the haze of contradictions that so often characterize complex situation and the urgencies of time? Is a good Soldier who commits adultery still a good Soldier? Is a woman who steals from the government less culpable because there is no sympathetic victim? When do we know when the issue has moved from moral to legal, from morality to justice?

A young Soldier recently approached me and angrily told me that she felt that the Army "should get out of the dark ages," and lift the legal prohibitions on sodomy and adultery. "There is no justice in taking action against Soldiers for this kind of conduct," she said. I was able to explain that the prohibitions are a product of law, written by Congress and signed by the president. But should I also assert my moral view?

It is never easy. A common question is to what extent are we able to bend the rules, look the other way, or accept compromise in matters of law, ethics and morality even when it may appear politically prudent to do so. Put another way, at what point are we able to bargain away our standards, and at what cost?

For people of faith, this is made more difficult because it is nearly impossible to abdicate the values that underlie everything we do personally and professionally from the notion of justice.



Religious teaching asserts that we must never be afraid to act, to affirm ourselves in the thing. we think are right. Honest justice, that sheds totalitarian intolerance while redeeming the spirit and function of the principles that guide our lives, is an ideal which we should all fiercely embrace.

In his book "Pursuing Justice in a Sinful World", Stephen Monsma identifies the politics of our Lord as based upon servanthood and justice. "We should remember that, and remind ourselves that above all, justice depends upon the faithful adherence to the values that motivate our lives."

chapel notes

PWC welcomes all to meetings — Protestant Women of the Chapel will not meet Thursday because of Spring Break.

Other Thursdays during April, the group will meet from 9:30 to 11:45 a.m. for singing and praying, as well as Bible study which begins at 10:30 a.m. PWC will be continuing the study on God's amazing love, the way of agape.

All ladies are welcome to join the group at building 2521, located off Indianhead Road at Thorson Street. Child care is provided free in adjacent Bldg. 2517.

For more information, call Jean Fry at 689-6049 or Kristie Sickler at 685-4979.

Christian youth groups to meet — Children Living Under the Bible will meet tomorrow at the Religious Education Center, building 2522, at 11 a.m. and join with Personal Attitudes Relating to Youth at noon. These programs are for children from 5 years old through the sixth grade.

Everyone is invited to attend "PARTY" which includes Bible study, crafts, recreation, and refreshments. "CLUB" is designed for girls and is a program in which they receive instruction in homemaking skills and etiquette before joining the entire group at noon.

THE WRITTEN WORD

Bible explains the church's role

By Vince Burns
Infantry Training Brigade

The custom of the Jewish people was to come together to listen to the Scripture being read and explained to them.

Somehow they equated the word of God with the law by which they directed their lives. They saw a value in two very important practices: first, they thought it was valuable and necessary for them to come together as a community, and second, they thought it was important for them to listen to the word of God being proclaimed to them by the priest or scribe, and then clarified or interpreted for them by a prophet or someone who had become skilled in the Scripture passages.

In the first chapter of Luke, the author mentions a specific occasion when Jesus was in his home town of Nazareth and he went into the synagogue on the Sabbath and stood up to do the reading. Notice that Luke was trying to point out to us that this was not at all a rare occasion or a different experience. He specifically said Jesus was in the habit of doing this. He doesn't want us to miss that important point.

Luke writes that Jesus was handed the book of the prophet Isaiah, and he deliberately opened it to the passage that referred to the prophecy of the Messiah: "The Spirit of the Lord was upon me; therefore he has anointed me. He has sent me to bring glad tidings to the poor, to proclaim liberty to captives, recovery of sight to the blind and release to prisoners."

Try to imagine the impact that Christ made on them when he said, "Today this Scripture passage is fulfilled in your hearing." These are people who had known Christ since he was a boy. They had watched him grow up within their community and certainly, they knew his family. To them, he was the son of the local carpenter, and probably he would eventually become a carpenter himself.

They were used to hearing him proclaim the Scripture readings in the synagogue; this happened often. But to hear him identify himself as the Savior and the Messiah that God had promised through Isaiah and the other prophets — this was more than they could handle.

I think this event in the life of Christ answers some of the questions that we ask — questions asked particularly by young people who are trying to find a direction to their lives.

Why should I believe in Jesus? Because Jesus identifies himself as the one sent by God — the fulfillment of the prophecies — and he performs miracles for those who are reluctant to believe.

Why do I need to go to Church? Because there is the need to worship, the need to pray as community, the grace that we receive in connecting with God and to keep the Sabbath Day holy.

Why can't I pray alone? You can and should pray alone, but our tradition has tried to convince us of the need and value of praying with the community of believers.

Anyone who reads the Scripture will realize that God has always called the people together.

What can Christ do for me? He can put your life together, give meaning and purpose to your life, give you the grace and the guts to deal with the problems and pain that you experience.

What can the Church do for me? St. Paul best answers that question for us in his letter to the Corinthians when he speaks of us as the Body of Christ. Through Baptism we are all members of the Body of Christ connected with Christ and connected with one another.

When we gather for prayer wherever that happens to be, we are doing what our customs and tradition tell us to do. We are doing what Christ has invited us to do. And we do it because there is nothing on earth more powerful than the word of God that we hear in the Scripture. We do it because we believe it.

In my family, learning is everything.

Books don't just enlighten. They empower. Our children are growing up knowing this. A good education is one of the most important things we can give them. And we will, with the help of U.S. Savings Bonds.

Through the Payroll Savings Plan, we put aside something with every payday. And little by little, it will add up to college for our children.

U.S. Savings Bonds helped my parents put me through college. And next year, it's Michelle's turn. Sure, Savings Bonds have been important to our past, but they'll be even more important to our future. That's what makes our investment so valuable.

Ask your employer or banker about saving with U.S. Savings Bonds. For all the right reasons.

Volunteer organizations: HHC 2-69 AR Family Support Group, McBride Elementary, Red Cross, Youth Services soccer team mom

Why do you volunteer?
Helping educate people by referring them to agencies best suited for their needs. Also, making the Soldiers and family members' tour a pleasant experience while on the best post in the world, Fort Benning.

What do you like most about volunteering?
Educating people on availability of resources offered to them on Fort Benning.

What are your special interests and hobbies?
Planning family trips, ice skating in Gatlinburg, Tenn. or spending quality time with my five energetic girls and wonderful husband, Dennis.

What others have to say :
"Our battalion is extremely lucky to have volunteers like Jeannett McClung. She provides a communications link to the more than 200 families in our headquarters company and is constantly looking for ways to make our Family Support Group better. As the commander of a rapid deployment unit, I know that I can focus myself on the mission due to the efforts of Jeanette McClung."

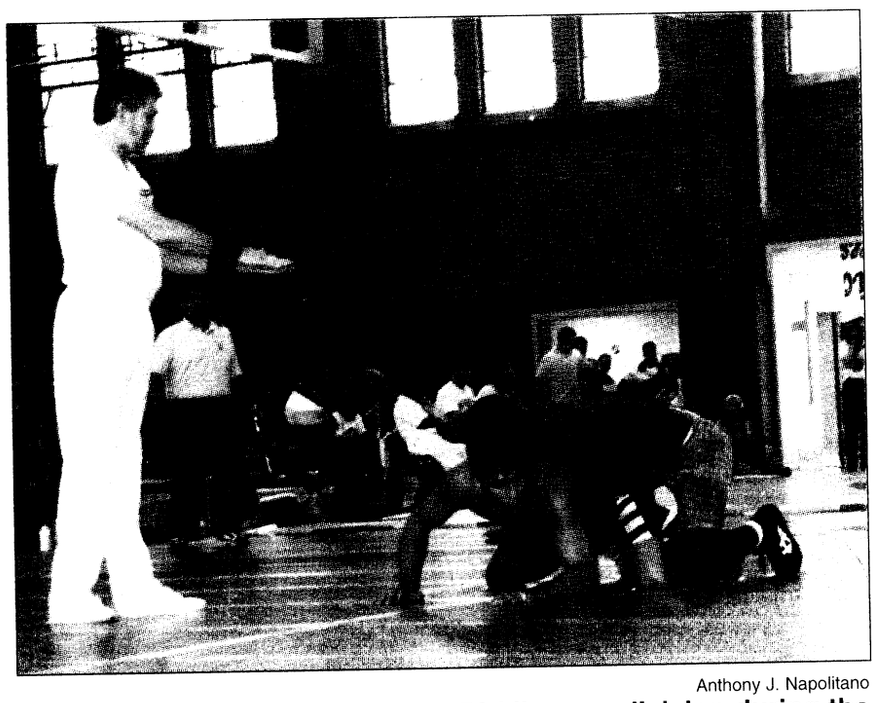
ALL-ARMY WRESTLING

Army captures eighth straight title

By Stephen Barrett
American Forces Press Service

WASHINGTON — The Army earned its eighth straight wrestling title at the 1997 Armed Forces Wrestling Championships conducted March 22 to 28 at Pensacola Naval Air Station, Fla.

The Army won five of six head-to-head team matches and claimed the most medals — including six individual titles. But, its six year dominance in the sport may be slipping as the other military services made major improvements.



The Army captured 14 of 48 available awards (six Gold medals, five Silver and three Bronze) this year and edged the Marine Corps by one award (6-3-4). Navy grapplers won 11 medals (3-4-4) in finishing third, while the Air Force finished fourth, taking 10 medals (1-4-5).

Last year, the Army won nearly a third of the 60 medals available and captured 11 of 20 individual titles.

Some service wrestling coaches said they believe the parity has to do with changes sanctioned by the amateur wrestling national governing body — USA Wrestling. Complying with USA Wrestling rules eliminated two weight classes and set new weight limits for the remaining eight. The shifts increased the number of eligible wrestlers in each weight class.

"Those changes helped us, the Navy and the Air Force," said Dan Mello, who coaches the Marine Corps team from Quantico, Va.

"The Army has dominated this competition over the past years. These changes narrow and strengthen the field, and allow us to maneuver our best wrestlers against theirs. The numbers at Pensacola showed we matched up pretty well."

Anthony J. Napolitano

Keith Sieracki participates in the 76 kilogram division during the Armed Forces Championships conducted in Pensacola, Fla.

The Greco-Roman discipline limits athletes to wrestling with their arms, hands and upper body. The event penalizes wrestlers for using their legs, knees and feet for take-downs and holds. Freestyle wrestlers have no such restrictions.

Last year, Army struggled through the freestyle competition, only to dominate the Greco-Roman events to earn its fifth straight armed services title. This year was a replay of 1996.

Army Greco-Roman wrestlers claimed four individual titles, two second-place finishes and a third while winning all three head-to-head team events.

Heading Army's Greco-Roman effort were returning armed forces champions Shon Lewis and Kenny Owens, who captured titles in new weight classes.

Lewis, winner of the 135.5 title last year, captured three decisions in battling to the 151.8 title. These victories included a pair of overtime wins — one a referee's decision after battling Marine Corps' Marcel Cooper of Quantico to a scoreless tie.

Under USA Wrestling rules, grapplers winning by decision must score at least two points to earn the win. Should neither score two points in regulation, they wrestle an additional two-minute overtime to decide the match. If no one scores enough points in the overtime, the officials judging the match will select a winner — often based on speed, skill, stamina and strength during the overtime period.

Owens, winner of the 180.5-pound title in 1996, earned three decisions in winning the 187-pound title. His closest bout came in a 4-3 decision over Marine Corps William Carr (Quantico).

Army's other two Greco-Roman Gold medals came from newcomers Herbert House and Dremiel Byers. House, also of Fort Benning, took two superiority decisions (victories by 10 or more points) in winning three matches and the 136.8-pound title. His closest was a 2-0 decision over Air Force Paul Gagich, the 1997 freestyle champion.

Byers, assigned at Fort Bragg, N.C., earned wrestling's heaviest weight class title by winning two decisions and a pinfall in the 275-pound division. One was a 4-1 decision over former Olympic Silver medalist Marine Corps' Greg Gibson of Quantico.

Army's two other titles came in freestyle competition. Miguel Spencer, the 1996 armed forces champion at 163 pounds, earned most valuable freestyle wrestling honors in winning the 187-

USAMU scores major victories at tournaments

USAMU Public Affairs Office

Even before the shooting season has gotten into full swing, shooters of the U. S Army Marksmanship Unit of Fort Benning, Ga., have scored some major victories in the past few months. The following results are just some of their recent accomplishments:

•Dixie Match, Jacksonville, Fla., March 8 and 9 — USAMU Service Pistol shooters Stephen M. King, Roger C. Jacobson, Aaron P. Schreiber and Fritz A. Ficke, representing the Army Blue Team, won the .22-caliber match. Schreiber won in the Centerfire Individuals Match and the Excellence in Competition Match and King took first place, shooting the match-grade 9 mm service pistol.

•Black Mountain Match, San Diego, Calif., March 8 and 9 — International pistol shooter Eric G. Daniels won the Rapid Fire Match. Carl W. Trompeter II was the winner in the Centerfire Match. Travis A. Jorgenson was the winner in the Junior Division of the Air Pistol and Sports Pistol Matches. Terry S. Bradley took second place in the Junior Division of the Air Pistol Match and Shane E. Harreld won the Women's Division of the Sports Pistol Match.

•Rocky Mountain Rifle Championships, U.S. Olympic Training Center, Colorado Springs, Colo., Feb. 25 to March 3 — International rifle shooter Troy A. Bassham was the grand aggregate winner and also won the Men's 10-Meter Air Rifle event. Lance S. Hopper won the Men's 50-Meter Prone event. Hopper, Bassham and Thomas A. Tamas of the USAMU Army Blue Team, won the 50-Meter Prone Match and the USAMU Army Gold Team of Stephen C. Goff, Glenn A. Dubis and Kenneth A. Johnson came in second. The 50-Meter Three-Position USAMU Army Blue Team of Dubis, Johnson and Bassham took first place and the USAMU Army Gold Team of Goff, Hopper and Tamas took third. In the 10-Meter Air Rifle Event, the winner was the USAMU Army Blue Team of Goff, Johnson and Bassham.

•Crosman International Airgun Championships, Toronto, Canada, Feb. 20 to 24 — Running Target shooter Armando R. Ayala won all of the individual matches and the championship and the USAMU team of Ayala, Lance D. Dement and Michael E. Moore took first place in the Running Target Three-Man Team Championship.

Golfers brave elements to compete in tourney

By John W. Peeler
Special to the Bayonet©

More than golf balls dropped from the sky Friday as golfers took to the greens during the 1st Battalion (Airborne), 507th Infantry, 11th Infantry Regiment, Airborne four-ball scramble at the Follow Me Golf Course.

Golfers played through, the sometimes rainy weather, and had to account for the windy conditions throughout the tournament.

Fortunately for the golfers, the course was in the best shape it has been in several years, golf pro George Cliff said.

"The course was getting in really bad condition due to maintenance and weather conditions," Cliff said.

"Last March, we hired a new superintendent and have started seeing improvements in the courses, especially since the November to December time-frame."

Cliff said the next scheduled tournament at the Follow Me Golf Course is today and is the first of several payday golf tournaments.

For more information, call George Cliff at 687-1940.

Winners of the Airborne Scramble were:

First place:
Paul Vanzandt, 62
Joe Araoso
Eric Correll
Jim Babbitt

Second place:
Steven Sifers, 62
Danny Wilson
Joe Heckard
Marshal Ford

Third place:
Jim Talbot, 62
Ronnie Harden
George Webb
Sam Hussey

Fourth place:
Dana Foley, 62
J.P. Girou
Ralph Jackson
Bob Wiese

Fifth place:
Scott Armbrister, 63
Abe Turner
Stephen Shenk
Micki Armbrister

Closest to the hole, Sifers, 5th green; Kevin O'Neill, 'th green; John Dale, 13th green; Ron Greene, 16th green.

Longest drive: Foley, 18th green.

CHAMPIONS: Wrestlers take top honors at Armed Forces Championship

pound title. Teammate Glenn Nieradka (Benning) grabbed the title at 151.8, taking three decisions.

The Pensacola tournament saw only two multiple gold medal winners — both Marines. Duaine Martin of Quantico — a freestyle gold medalist at 125.5 pounds last year — took both freestyle and Greco-Roman titles at 127.6. Three of Martin's six victories were by superior decision, while the toughest was a referee's decision over Army's Jason Tolbert (Benning).

Meanwhile, Quantico's Dan Hicks added two more gold medals to his 1996 freestyle title when he claimed both wrestling crowns at 213.4 pounds.

"The thing that's scary about Hicks is that he's just now learning to wrestle at the national level," Mello said. "He walked in last year with a lot of natural talent and did quite well at the Olympic trials. Now we are looking to build on that talent and get Dan ready for Sydney (site of the 2000 Summer Olympics)."

Marines claimed two other gold medals, both in freestyle competition. Quantico's Keith Wilson, a Greco-Roman bronze medalist last year at 163 pounds, captured the 176.2-pound freestyle title. He went on to take silver in Greco-Roman.

The other winner was Gibson, the 220-pound Greco-Roman silver medalist at the 1984 Summer Olympics in Los Angeles. Gibson captured the 275-pound freestyle title.

Navy took second place behind Army in the Greco-Roman competition, and Navy coach Rob Hermann said his team's performance in Greco-Roman shows Navy will have some good wrestlers in the future.

One is Nathaniel Jackson, named most valuable Greco-Roman wrestler in winning the 176.2 Greco-Roman championship. Jackson, assigned to the National Navy Medical Center in Bethesda, Md., won the 163-pound title last year and earned two decisions and a pinfall in this year's tournament to claim another armed forces title.

"Nate's category was one of the most competitive in the armed services, and he controlled all of his matches from the first whistle," said Hermann, the U.S. Greco-Roman coach at the 1996 Atlanta Olympics. "He came to camp ready to wrestle, and he probably wrestled the best meet of his career."

Navy wrestlers also took the two lightest weight categories, winning both freestyle and Greco-Roman titles at 118.8 pounds. In the freestyle competition, Erik Strunk of USS Briscoe captured the gold medal. One of his three wins was a 9-1 victory over Army Keith Idelburg (Benning), last year's 114.5-pound Greco-Roman champion.

The third Navy title went to Dustin Waugh of Pensacola. Waugh used three victories, including one referee's decision over Idelburg, to claim his first armed forces title.

While Air Force claimed only one championship, its freestyle team put the only blemish on Army's team title. Led by Gagich, Shayne Kiefer (Air Force Academy, Colorado Springs, Colo.) and Charley Carbaugh (Kadena Air Base, Japan), Air Force won the first three matches of its freestyle head-to-head with Army. It then held off a late Army surge to forge a 15-15 tie — the only match Army failed to win.

In winning his freestyle title, Gagich beat House, 4-0, then lost a 5-3 decision to Marine Dan Pantaleo (Quantico). He then earned the medal with a 10-0 superior decision over Navy's Michael Green (USS Nimitz). Gagich serves at Peterson Air Force Base, Colo.

All wrestling teams are now preparing for the 1997 U.S. National Wrestling Competition, slated for April 22 to 27 in Orlando, Fla.

outdoor outlook

Georgia State Parks offer guided canoe trips — Outdoor enthusiasts can explore Georgia's scenic waterways on guided canoe trips at Hamburg High Falls and Panola Mountain State parks.

Park staff will explain basic canoeing techniques and interpret natural surroundings while leading paddlers on day-long trips.

Participants can see beavers, otters, kingfishers, great blue herons, turtles and other wildlife.

Trips fill quickly, so pre-registration is required. To register, call the park directly.

The cost is $15 per person, which includes canoe, paddles and life preserver. Canoers who bring their own equipment pay $10. A $2 park pass fee is charged per vehicle.

Eighteen of Georgia's state parks rent canoes so visitors can explore lakes and streams on their own.

Prices are $3 to $5 for an hour, $8 to $15 for four hours and $12 to $20 for an entire day. For a free "Guide to Georgia State Parks and Historic Sites" or "1997 Events" brochure, call (404) 656-3530.

To reserve a campsite or fully equipped cottage, call (800) 864-7275.

The parks that will offer canoe trips are:

•Hamburg State Park, Mitchell, Saturday, April 12, 19 and 26, 9:30 a.m. to 2 p.m.

This is an easy, 4.5-mile float down the Ogeechee River.

Call (912) 552-2393 to register.

•High Falls State Park, Jackson, second Saturday of each month, enjoy an easy trip down the Towaliga River, May 10, June 14, July 12, Sept. 13 and Oct. 11. Call (912) 993-3053 to register.

•Panola Mountain State Conservation Park, Stockbridge, May 17, 9 a.m. to 2 p.m.

This clean-up trip down the South River combines wildlife observation with litter pickup.

Sept. 27, 9 a.m. to 2 p.m. Explore three miles of the South River which forms the northern boundary of this park.

Nov. 15, 5:30 to 7:30 p.m. Adults may enjoy a sunset float on the park's 3.5-acre lake. Call (770) 389-7801 to register.

State parks post fishing tournaments — The arrival of spring means it is time to get out to your favorite fishing pole and head to Georgia's state parks.

This year, the parks have planned a dozen fishing events where serious anglers can strut their stuff while beginning youngsters learn the basics. The tournaments are a great excuse for families to spend time together in the spring sunshine.

Most state parks have boat ramps and docks, and many rent boats and sell bait. For more information about a fishing tournament, call the host park.

Fishing tournaments are just some of the many events conducted by state parks and historic sites throughout the year.

All events are free and parking is $2.

•A parent and child fishing tournament takes place April 12 from 6 a.m. to 6 p.m. at Mistletoe State Park.

Experts predict excellent turkey season

Wildlife resources Division

SOCIAL CIRCLE, Ga. — Georgia's 1997 turkey population is estimated to be as high as last year's record high of 420,000 birds, according to the Department of Natural Resources, Wildlife Resources Division. Turkey hunters harvested an estimated 93,000 birds in 1996, the highest recorded harvest in the southeast.

The primary factor contributing to these high numbers is the turkey reproduction rate during the summers of 1993 to 1995. This resulted in an abundance of 1-, 2-, and 3-year-old gobblers in the 1996 season. Even with the high harvest during the '96 season, the 1997 population is estimated to be high because of the plentiful acorn crop.

Good acorn crops are especially important to hunters.

"During the years of high acorn production, turkey come through the winter in good condition and tend to gobble more during the spring mating season," Reggie Thackson, wildlife biologist, said.

"Georgia's Wildlife Management areas have good turkey populations," Thackston said. "Some of the mountain, piedmont and coastal plain WMAs will provide excellent hunting opportunities."

Turkey season runs to May 15. The season bag limit for turkey is three gobblers.

For more information on turkey hunting, contact the nearest Wildlife Resources Division, Game Mangement Office, or call (770) 918-6416.

Fort Benning's only authorized newspaper

Home of the Infantry

Vol. 55 | Published in the interest of the Fort Benning, Ga., community | No. 15

INSIDE THIS WEEK

Marc G. Turchin

Hail to the chiefs

President Jimmy Carter speaks with Fort Benning commander Maj. Gen. Carl F. Ernst and Maj. John K. Leighow, chief of the engineer branch, Combined Arms and Tactics Division, during his visit to Fort Benning's Leaders Reaction Course Wednesday. Carter came here with more than 50 students from the Atlanta-based Future Force, a youth group that teaches teens teamwork and leadership skills. This is the fourth year that the group visited the Leadership Reaction Course. Ten percent of the youths who come through the course later enlist in the Army.

GULF WAR SYNDROME

DoD team collects data

By Dov Schwartz
USAIC Public Affairs Office

A team from the U.S. Army Gulf War Declassification Project visited Fort Benning this week to search for Gulf War documents which might shed light on the health problems experienced by Persian Gulf War veterans.

Some Gulf War veterans claim they are suffering from chronic headaches, joint and muscle pain, skin rashes, fatigue and memory loss.

The Department of Veterans affairs reports some 9000 Persian Gulf Veterans have filed disability claims with the V.A.for ilnesses they believe are related to the Gulf War conflict.

Sgt. 1st Class John T. Jones, Company A, 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment served for nearly six months as a platoon sergant with the 4th Battalion, 7th Infantry Regiment, 3rd Infantry Division (Mechanized).

Jones said his unit was involved in heavy fighting against Iraqi Republican Guard units.

According to Jones, about a month after returning to Germany, he began experiencing skin rashes and headaches.

Jones sought medical help but was dissatisfied with the attention he received.

"I felt that my condition was as a result of my service in the Gulf and that it was a lot worse than they (the Army) were telling me," he said.

Jones still suffers from rashes and headaches, but he believes the Army is now taking measures to learn why he and his fellow Gulf War veterans are sick.

"It's taken a while, but I believe the Army is committed to finding out the extent of my illness and what I can do to get better," Jones said.

The three-member team, headed by GWDP director Col. James R. Nichols, is charged with locating all existing Gulf War operational records containing health-related information.

"We are looking for everything from battalion logs to operational orders, after action reviews ... to operational records so that we can analyze them to determine if they have any clues to Gulf War illness," Nichols said.

Department of Defense officials said the GWDP is specifically seeking daily staff journals, logs, situation reports, spot reports, incident reports, significant activity reports, personnel reports, intelligence reports, operations reports, nuclear, biological and chemical reports, logistic reports, unit medical records, memoranda and messages generated during the war.

Nichols said his team is trying to locate as much documentation as possible.

So far DoD officials said they have collected nearly 5.5 million documents, including nearly two million from the Army.

According to Nichols, the documents are reviewed by both internal DoD and external health care professionals.

"A lot of research is being put into Gulf War illness," Nichols said. "But to this point no solution has been found."

Nichols said his team "was here to serve Soldiers and to hopefully find something to help those who are ailing."

Veterans have variety of ways to get more information

By Dov Schwartz
USAIC Public Affairs Office

The Department of Defense established the GulfLINK internet site in 1995 to provide immediate on-line access to medical, operational and intelligence documents from the Gulf War that might provide better understanding into the nature of the illnesses being experienced by many veterans.

GulfLINK can be accessed at http://www.dtic.mil/gulflink/.

Any individual with knowledge of the whereabouts of Army records pertaining to the Persian Gulf War should contact the Directorate of Information Management or the Gulf War Declassification Project at (703) 681-4219, DSN: 761-4219, or FAX: 761-6556.

Gulf War veterans are also encouraged to register with DoD's Comprehensive Clinical Evaluation Program (CCEP.)

The program provides in-depth medical evaluations to Gulf War veterans who are currently in the active or reserve components, or retired. To register, call the DoD hotline at (800) 796-9699 or DSN: 878-3261.

The Veteran's Administration Persian Gulf Registry offers a free physical examination including basic laboratory studies to Gulf War veterans not on active duty.

Nearly 80,000 Persian Gulf War veterans have signed up with the VA and DoD for examinations.

Veterans should call (800) 749-8387 to schedule examinations.

Information is also available via the world wide web at http.//www.va.gov/.

The DoD Incident Reporting Line focuses on examining hazardous exposure incidents which may have occurred during the Gulf War.

Veterans who have information to offer may call (800) 427-6719 or DSN: 878-3261.

545-BOSS

By Dov Schwartz
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Established in 1984 by the Department of the Army, Dial 545-BOSS is the commander's action line for Soldiers, family members and civilians to call when they have problems or complaints that can't be resolved elsewhere.

While it is not a substitute for the chain of command or for agencies established to provide assistance, this line offers another means of communication between Fort Benning's community and commanders.

According to Secretary of General Staff Administrative Assistant Cora E. Wright, all Dial 545-BOSS calls are recorded on an answering machine.

"Each morning, we get calls from people with problems," Wright said. "What calling 545-BOSS does is to provide an alternative to personnel seeking help by assuring another means of communication among commanders, Soldiers, families and the community."

However, Wright stressed, the line does suffer abuses.

Several calls are received that could be handled quicker if the caller went through the chain of command or appropriate activity.

"Calls about plumbing, heating and other maintenance problems could be best handled by calling the Directorate of Public Works at 545-2135," Wright said.

Concerns about medical problems can best be handled by calling Patient Affairs at 544-2788.

Each morning, Wright transcribes the calls and sends them to the appropriate command or activity for action.

Responses are made directly to the caller within the required seven working days.

Serious problems are taken straight to the chief of staff or deputy chief of staff for immediate action.

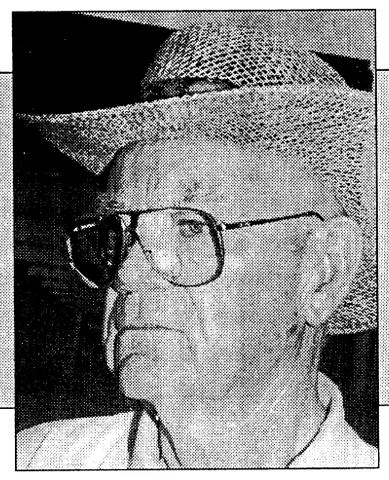
At the end of a month, a consolidated report of all 545-BOSS calls and actions taken are reviewed by the commanding general.

"The intent (of the 545-BOSS line) is to fix problems quickly in order to do our best for Soldiers, civilian employees and members of our community," said post chief of staff Col. Lawrence K. White.

According to Wright, most of the approximately 50 calls a month received by the 545-BOSS line are issues for the Directorate of Public Works or are calls of a community nature like parking or neighborhood disputes.

"We take a strong customer service orientation to the BOSS line," Wright said. "All of the activities respond as soon as possible."

VARIOUS VOICES



Why do you think it is important for people to volunteer?

Sgt. 1st Class Dywaine F. Robinson, Headquarters and Headquarters Detachment, Ranger Training Brigade — "Volunteering is necessary to insure hospital and youth services. Without volunteers, young people wouldn't be able to participate in activities."

Sharlena Green, family member — "Everybody needs to participate in their community to help each other out."

(Retired) Lt. Col. O.M. Hearn — "We can't pay for everything. Those who have a gift for volunteering are really needed."

Spc. Thomas J. Schmidt, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 3rd Brigade 3rd Infantry Division (Mechanized) — "People need help, so it is important for people to volunteer."

Spc. Amber D. Trailer, 803rd Supply Company, Opelika, Ala —"Volunteering gives people experiences in different things. It looks good on a resume."

Cynthia A. Casey, family member — "The post would not function without volunteers. They need to be recognized more."

Labels on a person's car tell a lot about him or her

By Lisa M. Hibbert
Bayonet staff writer

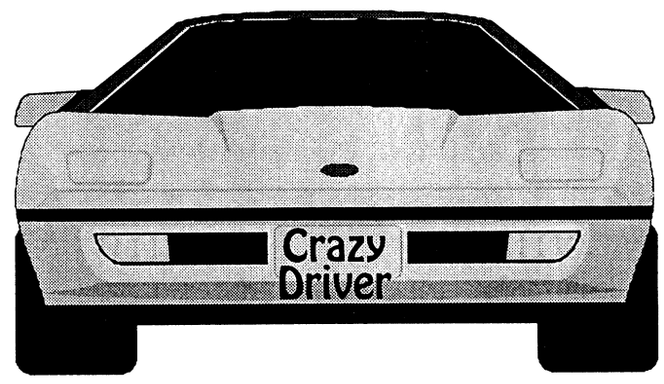
Lisa M. Hibbert says what on a car tells a lot about the owner

What people have on their cars tells a lot about them. But sometimes people put out too much information.

Like if I put all the symbols and bumper stickers that pertain to me on my car, I would have a Jamaican flag, an alumnus of North Carolina Central University sticker, the Christian sign of the fish symbol, an Eastern Star symbol, a Buffalo Bills fan bumper sticker and a baby on board sign.

commentary

If I did all of that, when I met people we would have absolutely nothing to talk about because they would already know everything about me! I know some people put things on their cars as conversation pieces, but with all that information, what else is there to talk about?



What about people who take it a step further and put their names on their cars? One of my friends had done that and when guys would honk and say "Hi Terry," she would always act surprised and wonder how they knew her name.

Terry was the same person who, as an excited freshman in college decided to put "NCCU 91" on her license plate because that was her anticipated graduation date. I remember when things got a little crazy her senior year and she almost didn't graduate on time her motivation came from thinking about the embarrassment of having that plate and being in school another year.

Even religious sayings don't always work on cars. I went out to eat with a minister from my church and she has 'Glory' on her front plate. So we're getting out of the car and this guy said, "Glory, is that your name?" and she said "No, that's glory as in glory to God."

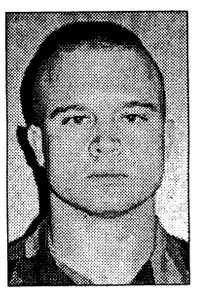
I think it's a bit extreme when you see people driving with a full row of masonic symbols on their car. Is it not understood if you just put out the highest level you've achieved, you had to pass through the other levels to get there?

Or what about people who go a little crazy when they pledge a fraternity or a sorority? I knew one guy who had an Alpha Phi Alpha front plate, a trim plate around his license plate, a window sticker and a hat in his rear window. When you looked at that car from any angle you knew that this man was an Alpha man.

Not long ago I saw somebody driving a car with "murder" on their front plate. So I'm thinking, "If I broke down in the middle of the night, and this car pulled up behind me, would I freak out or what?" That plate was something out of a horror movie!

It's bad enough that the type of car you drive already determines the way the police perceive you. A couple of weeks ago I drove my friend's Corvette around Columbus and it seemed like every military police and civilian police officer I passed turned and followed me. But what about the people who put things like 'speedy' on their car? I know they get all the attention on the highway.

Watching people driving around in the fall is always fun because people often put a variety of football memorabilia all over their cars. You can see cars with flags, streamers and bumper stickers zooming down the road.



I think the funniest thing about car details is when people don't know what they mean. This guy I know had brought a used car. He was a big manly-man who played football and was in a fraternity. Well, on his new car was a pink triangle sticker and a rectangular rainbow sticker — both gay pride stickers.

I tried to tell him what they meant, but he was real arrogant and had an I know everything personality so I think I waited about a week before I explained the significance of the stickers.

To be honest, I've done a few of the things that I mock. Hey, it was fun when I was school and I had my college sticker on my car. We would honk at the other people on the highway who went to my school or make faces at the people who didn't. But I'm reformed. The only thing I have in my car is a hat and that's only because it helps me find my car in the parking lot.

Soldier draws inspiration from veteran

By Charles Sellens
3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment

Charles Sellens says he finds inspiration in a former prisoner of war.

Although his service in the Army ended long before I was born, there is one person I believe symbolizes the values of duty, selfless service, loyalty and integrity. During the last years of World War II, a young private named Dean Banker was captured by the Germans.

commentary

He served the remainder of the war in a prisoner-of-war camp in northern Germany. Food was in short supply and Dean, small to begin with, lost 30 pounds. Throughout his time in captivity, Dean would bribe his way through the gate of his compound into the adjoining compound where the Russian prisoners were being kept.

He would trade American cigarettes for potatoes and then bring back the potatoes to share with his comrades. He would keep up their morale and liven their spirits by performing various comedy sketches with several other POWs.

The camp was liberated at the end of the war and Dean returned home to run the family business which has now been in the same building for over 100 years. The years have passed but Dean is still proud of his service in the Army.

Throughout the war, Dean remained loyal to his fellow prisoners, providing much needed food and morale at great risk to himself. His selfless service, sense of duty and integrity are an inspiration to me.

Democracy requires communication, compromise

By Karl Weisel
104th Area Support Group

While some might agree with Janis Joplin that freedom is just another word for nothing left to lose, the truth is freedom is a heavy responsibility. Communication and compromise are two vital elements of the democratic process that are often overlooked.

commentary

In places where communication breaks down and compromise vanishes altogether, armed conflicts flare and people distrust their government and neighbors.

Differences such as religion, ethnic backgrounds, economic opportunity or personal beliefs become insurmountable hurdles to finding common ground when people refuse to talk to one another. American peace keepers have seen the results of this inflexibility firsthand in Bosnia, Somalia, Rwanda and Iraq – the list is long and the effects have been devastating.

But even closer to home, some people seem to have lost the fine art of communication and compromise. In families, office settings, on radio talk shows, the Internet, the government and among special interest groups it has become ever more popular to shoot first and ask questions later. Name calling, half-truths and a basic inability to see things through another person's eyes have resulted in a society where violence is frequently used or threatened as a way of evening the score.

There's no excuse for that.

While all of us have been pushed over the edge occasionally by situations, harsh words or other unexpected events, most of us have the common sense to know that solutions can always be found. They often take time and creativity, but they are always worth the effort.

Ongoing feuds, constant sniping, back stabbing and intractability only lead to more of the same or worse.

Freedom doesn't mean living as if there's nothing left to lose, but working together to safeguard losing the very freedom we all so cherish.

Soldier voices opinion on wrongful solicitation

Since coming into the Army I have been solicited by several business and sales representatives. Be it naïveté or just bad luck, My fellow Soldiers and I were taken by a few of these solicitors.

The main point is if we as young, trusting Soldiers had been better briefed by the post or the unit as to the number and types of groups looking to "rip-off" a Soldier, we would be in better shape because of it.

Policies need to be established. Policies already established such as "no door-to-door solicitation is allowed on post" need to be made known and enforced. One policy — If a representative of the Army is coming to your quarters, you will receive a letter or flyer notifying you of such a visit at least one week prior, is very helpful if it is known.

It is policies such as this that are lacking in briefings for inprocessing of the post and units.

One policy that would be extra helpful is adopting a Black, White and Grey List (much like the Commander's Off Limits List). This would be an incentive for businesses near post to rethink their treatment of Soldiers, as well as a shield for Soldiers on post.

With the best interests of the Soldier in mind, something needs to change.

Around any U.S. military installation, there are those whose goal is to con Soldiers. The best defense for a Soldier is to be aware of such a threat.

Commanding General, Maj. Gen. Carl F. Ernst pins the Silver Star Medal on Annalise Knapp, widow of Staff Sgt. Martin C. Knapp. Knapp accepted the award more than 30 years after her husband was killed in Vietnam.

Post ceremony honors community members, bestows overdue award

By Marc G. Turchin
Bayonet editor

As the winner of this year's Commander in Chief's Award for Best Army Installation in the World, it's evident Fort Benning's quality of life is second to none.

Part of the reason why Fort Benning has been so successful in recent years is the tricommunity members. It is in their honor the retreat ceremonies are conducted. It gives the post commander, Maj. Gen. Carl F. Ernst, a chance to personally thank some of the many people who help Fort Benning complete its mission.

The latest retreat ceremony was conducted April 3 on York Field.

Ernst walked two lines of 23 people, presenting them with awards and hand shakes.

Some of the awardees included:

•Lt. Col. Robert C. Morris, commander, 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment, for his participation in the planning and execution of relief support to Rwanda, Eriterea and the United Nations from October 1995 to October 1996. Morris received the Defense Meritorious Service Medal.

•Bernice Smith, manager of After Hours Club. Smith was awarded the James A. Carrol Award for excellence in Army club management.

Perhaps the biggest award of the afternoon went to Annalise Knapp. She accepted the Silver Star posthumously for her husband which he earned while serving with Company D, 2nd Battalion, 7th Cavalry Regiment, 1st Cavalry Division (Air Mobile). His actions November 17, 1965, in the Ia Drang Valley in South Vietnam

Knapp's husband, Staff Sgt. Martin C. Knapp, was killed after exposing himself to enemy fire on numerous occasions and fighting shoulder to shoulder with his men until all were overrun by the enemy.

Ernst said this award is long overdue.

"We righted a wrong that's a long time in the coming," Ernst said. "About 32 years in the coming."

Ernst described a little of the fight that Knapp was killed in and said he acted as a leader.

"When it gets tough, the leaders go forward. In this particular fight, a sergeant went forward and paid for it with his life," Ernst said.

Ernst asked the crowd to join him a round of applause for Knapp's widow and she was given a standing ovation by everyone.

Later, Ernst talked about the different types of people who make Fort Benning so great.

"There was a potpourri that Fort Benning on the field today and it was a potpourri that makes us truly the best installation in the world. And it's just people," Ernst said, "people who are Soldiers, people who are civilians, people who are volunteers and people who think that this business is important enough to take care of Soldiers and families."

Kelley Hill construction underway

By Robin A. Shawlinski
3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division (Mech.)

3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division (Mechanized) continued to see changes occurring in living conditions on Kelley Hill.

In September 1996, the 3rd Brigade saw three levels of construction begin.

The first level was the groundbreaking of the $29.5 million 1994 and 1996 barracks construction projects. These projects will provide a consolidated dining facility, six barracks with more than 850 living spaces, a recreation facility and four company operation facilities.

The first groundbreaking was for the consolidated dining facility on Kelley Hill which is due to be completed in Fiscal Year 1997.

During the second phase, buildings 9008 and 9009 were completely leveled and construction was begun on the 1994 project. A few months later, buildings 9006 and 9007 were gutted to the frame and the 1996 project was started. The 1994 and the 1996 projects are due to be completed by January 1999.

In January 1997, the final phase of construction began when the 203rd Forward Support Battalion moved out of Buildings 9010, 9011 and 9017 and moved to Main Post to make way for the construction of the four company operation buildings.

The company operation facilities offer platoon control points, arms room, supply rooms, administration space and on-post shower facilities.

Aside from the contracted barracks project, the brigade command organized a U-Do-It project for the barracks not effected by the barracks projects.

"Because many of the Soldiers here on Kelley Hill will not reap the benefits of the new barracks, we had to find a way to bridge the gap between now and the completion of the barracks," said Lt. Col. Robert Leon, 3rd Brigade deputy commanding officer. "The brigade commander, (Col. Steven P. Schook) made that commitment and created the 3rd Brigade renovation team."

The renovation team, consisting of 60 Soldiers from the brigade, began renovation efforts in December 1996. The renovations include painting Soldiers' rooms, putting in new lights and ceiling fans, painting and applying seisel in the hallways and administration areas and providing Soldiers with mini-blinds and area rugs, said Lt. Thomas Carona, renovation project officer.

Currently, three barracks have been completed and a fourth has been started, Carona said.

The third level of construction is the contract work being done on Kelley Hill.

Since December, Soldiers have seen the appearance of the new Sledgehammer Sports Bar at the Kelley Hill Recreation Center, which allows Soldiers a place to relax and watch sporting events. This construction also includes a quartermaster laundry facility, a barber shop, an American Eatery at the Kelley Hill Shoppette and the installation of a Church's Chicken which will be in by September.

Other construction includes latrine renovations, the refurbishment of the heating and air conditioning systems in the barracks, various landscaping projects as well as the construction of the three basketball courts and a volleyball complex.

"We realize the frustration level for Soldiers is high, but our question was how do we give the near-term Soldiers a good quality of life. This is it," Leon said.

SHILOH

Battlefield serves as learning tool

By Dov Schwartz
USAIC Public Affairs Office

The battlefield is quiet now. As the trees quiver in the warm spring air you can almost make out the eerie whispers of those who fought and died here.

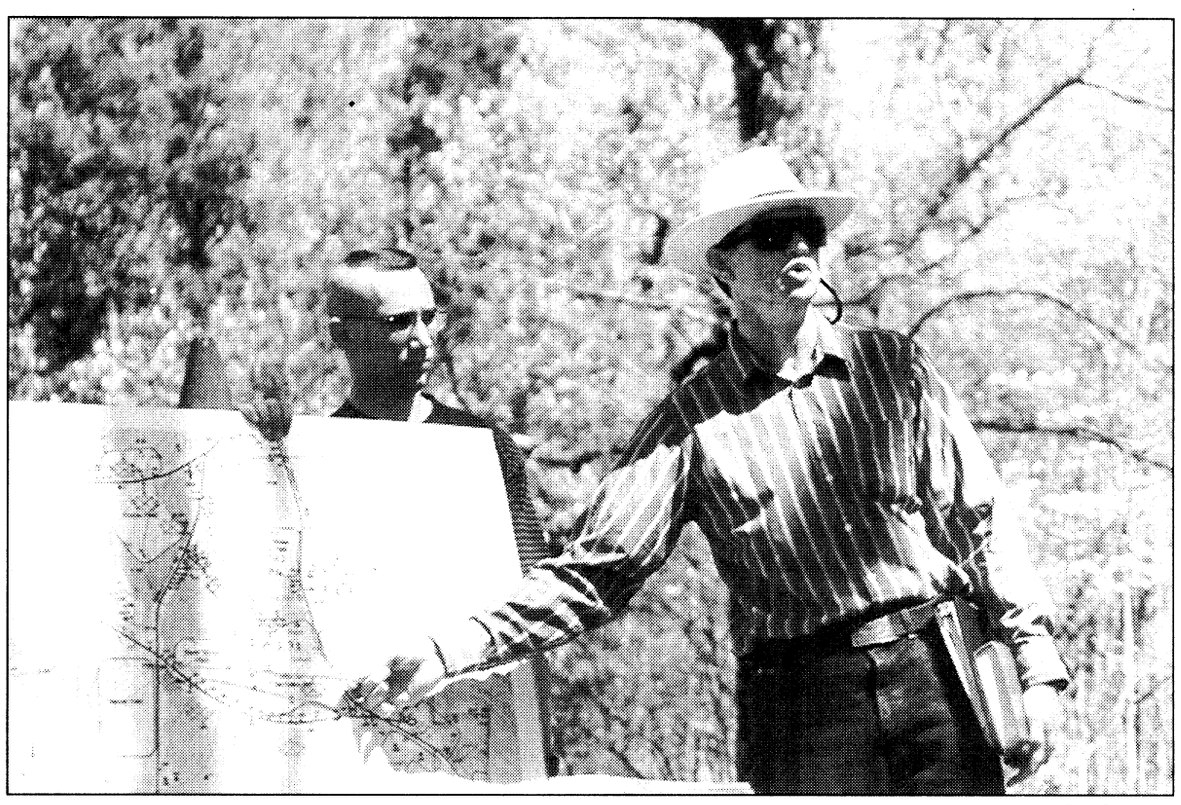
For two days, in the spring of 1862 the eyes of the nation were on this field near the small Methodist chapel called Shiloh.

April 6 and 7 of 1862, a combined 100,000 Soldiers from the Union and the Confederacy met on a 3 by 2.5-mile battlefield in what Gen. Ulysses S. Grant referred to as "the severest battle fought at the West during the (Civil) war."

On April 6, Confederate forces under the leadership of Gen. Albert Sidney Johnston attacked Union troops commanded by Grant.

By sundown, the Federal troops where nearly defeated. However, during the night, reinvigorated by reinforcements Union forces regrouped and pushed the Confederates back.

Fearing destruction, Confederate generals retreated to Corinth, Mississippi.



There were nearly 25,000 casualties including Johnston, the highest ranking officer to fall in the Civil War.

According to Post historian, Charles White, Phd the number of casualties at Shiloh totaled more than the Revolutionary War, the War of 1812 and the Mexican American War combined.

White also said, Shiloh forced Union commanders to realize that the war would not end with one major battle, as many hoped. But "We (the union) would have to occupy the South in order to win the war."

The lessons of Shiloh served as a "wake up call," White said.

The search for the lessons of Shiloh brought 16 members of the pre command course on a April 2 staff ride to the West Tenn. battlefield.

Dov Schwartz

Paul Roberts, training instructor, explains troop movements to the students in the pre-command course, while Pfc. Duane McCoy, 2nd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment holds the map.

According to the director of the Combined Arms and Tactics Directorate Col. Frank (Jim) Stone, the reason for the staff ride was to cause Soldiers to think about their role as commanders.

"We use this historical event, (the battle of Shiloh) to discuss current topics," he said.

In "The Staff Ride" William G. Robertson wrote the idea behind the staff ride "is to place students on an actual piece of terrain, confront them with an operational situation, and stimulate them to reach conclusions or derive lessons from the experience."

Stone said transition of command, situational awareness and intelligence preparation of the battlefield were among the many elements of the battle of Shiloh that are relevant to today's battlefield.

"We took them to the place where (Confederate General) Johnston was killed and we ask them what would you do?"

Stone stressed to the group the need to talk seriously with company and platoon leaders about the impact of a commanders death in battle.

Although lead elements of their armies were less than 1000 yards apart neither commander knew exactly where the enemy was located. (Grant thought Confederate troops were twenty miles away in Mississippi.) According to Stone, the difficulty in maintaining situational awareness at Shiloh is not that much different than today.

"Even with our technology we still don't know who is on the other side of the hill, he said. The fog of war at that time is no different that it is today."

Lt. Col. Joe Anderson, 2nd Battalion, 505th Infantry, 82 Airborne Division, Fort Bragg, N.C., said that the staff ride succeeded in that it encouraged "cross talk between peers" and the more relaxed environment "encouraged an exchange of ideas."

"It is important to learn from the mistakes of history," Maj. Chuck E. Holwerda of 1st Bn., 125th Infantry, 3rd Infantry Division Michigan National Guard, said. Walking the battlefield enabled him " to see it better" and to better focus on how he would "have fought the battle."

"You can only do so much in a classroom" said Training Instructor Paul Roberts. Only on the ground do you understand those were real people, real bullets and real blood," he said.

Soldier gears up for third deployment

By Jack Pagano
326th Replacement Center

As he waits for his order to be sent down range into Bosnia and Sarajevo, Staff Sgt. John "Archie" Lawhorne sits on a bunk in what was once a former German SS barracks in Babenhausen, Germany, with much anticipation of another tour of duty. Laehorne processed through Fort Benning's Harmony Church deploying station and is now sitting, waiting and wondering for the past few days when he'll get the word to head to Bosnia.

Lawhorne has been sitting, waiting and wondering for the past few days when he'll get the word to head to Bosnia .

Americans are in a quiet area south of Frankfurt to process Soldiers involved with Operation Joint Endeavor, Joint Guard.

The 50-year-old grandfather and Army reservist has been called once again to serve his country. His spirit of patriotism came out of the rice paddies 32 years ago in 1965.

"I grew up in Vietnam," he said proudly. "It made a boy into a man. I was 17 and I wanted to help, so I got permission from my mom and dad to enlist in the Army ... yes, I signed on the dotted line."

With a sparkle in both eyes, Lawhorne leaned over and described his military experience that spans three decades with pride and joy — the same pride and joy he exhibits when talking about his 17 grandchildren.

He talked about his two tours in Vietnam, the injuries, the fierce ambush battles, Desert Storm and now his trip into the Balkan abyss. His quick smile is infectious.

"Living in Natchitoches, La., keeps you happy," he said. "It's that small-town charm that rubs on you."

Just down the road in Manning, Lawhorne owns a legal and notary research company, and during the school year at Northwestern State University, he teaches ROTC tactics to future Army officers.

In Sarajevo, he'll support NATO troops as a supply sergeant. He knows the pace is about to accelerate and he's keenly aware of the millions of mines still active and ready to unleash deadly force.

On a night ambush patrol with the 173rd Airborne Brigade 32 years ago, Lawhorne stepped on a mine — a bouncing betty bopper — and the destruction still haunts him. For nine months, Lawhorne struggled to stay alive in a military hospital at Camp Zama, Japan, and he thought his life and military career was over.

"I'll never forget that day as long as I live," he said quietly. Glancing over to Staff Sgt. Horris Lindsey, a Vietnam vet from the foothills of Kileen, Texas, Lawhorne talks about the causalities of war. His voice now strained and tears beginning to flow, he recants how he was so scared in combat that he would crawl to a tree and cry.

"I learned the art of survival both mentally and physically," he said slowly and with much hesitation. "The 173rd Airborne Brigade never quit. My friends who didn't make it back are always with me."

The mine injury did not stop Lawhorne from joining the elite Special Forces and another Vietnam tour of duty in 1974. Twenty percent disabled, Lawhorne walked away from his tours in Vietnam with five Battle Stars, a Bronze Star, Purple Heart and memories he'll cherish the rest of his life.

He said the wind was at his back when he participated in Desert Storm. He was one of hundreds of thousands of reservists called up to help support the front line troops.

"I drove a supply truck up and down tapline road— the main supply line for the troops," he said. " I wanted to contribute and history speaks for itself. Logistics played a crucial role in Desert Storm and without reservists, we would have not won the war."

With a quick laugh, Lawhorne said there are no storms in his life now, only gentle breezes. He has survived three decades of service to his country with no regrets.

"Being a Soldier has been my life," he said. "When the Army says go, I go."

He has put on the uniform and fought for his country. In Vietnam, Lawhorne was an Infantryman, a dedicated Soldier who "always took the point." In Desert Storm, he supplied the troops moving forward into Iraq with equipment and supplies.

Now, he brings those experiences and his struggle to overcome adversity to Sarajevo. He hopes there is a gentle breeze in Bosnia.

He said, perhaps, a wise old grandfather can do some good.

news from the front

By Scott Rollston
498th Medical Detachment

The 498th Medical Company (Air Ambulance) has assumed the aeromedical evacuation role in the Balkans. In a recent phone brief with the commander, Maj. Tracy Wyatt, confirmation was received regarding the safety and security of all Soldiers and equipment now located in the Bosnia theater of operations.

Wyatt stated the Soldiers have just begun unpacking and moving into their make-shift quarters. Air crews continue to train on European flight routes, cold weather and mountain operations. Ground crews have successfully completed their first cross-country multi-vehicle convoy on a recent trip back to the Initial Staging Base in Tazsar Hungary.

Wyatt also thanked Shirley Reece and all of the Fort Benning Directorate of Logistics, for the prompt start of mail delivery. Boxes upon boxes of both aircraft and vehicle parts have successfully arrived in Bosnia which was a huge relief for both forward and rear commanders.

He said the weather has begun to slowly warm. The lines of communications have become significantly more reliable thereby increasing efficiency. Frequent communications with all three locations provides current updates and sets the stage for successful support of both the Soldiers in the field and the families carrying on at home.

Wyatt finished the conversation by saying the 498th has shown its cohesive might and will hold high the flags of the United States of American, the U.S. Army, Fort Benning and Forces Command.

Anyone may write to any Soldier who is in Bosnia at the following address:

Also, anyone wishing to donate books, games, video cassette recorder movies or other recreational items may bring them to the 498th Medical Company, Building 2489, Lawson Army Airfield, Fort Benning, Ga. or call 545-1040. Wyatt said the Soldiers are looking forward to hearing from home.

New IOBC students begin training

By R. R. Garey
Infantry Officer Basic Course

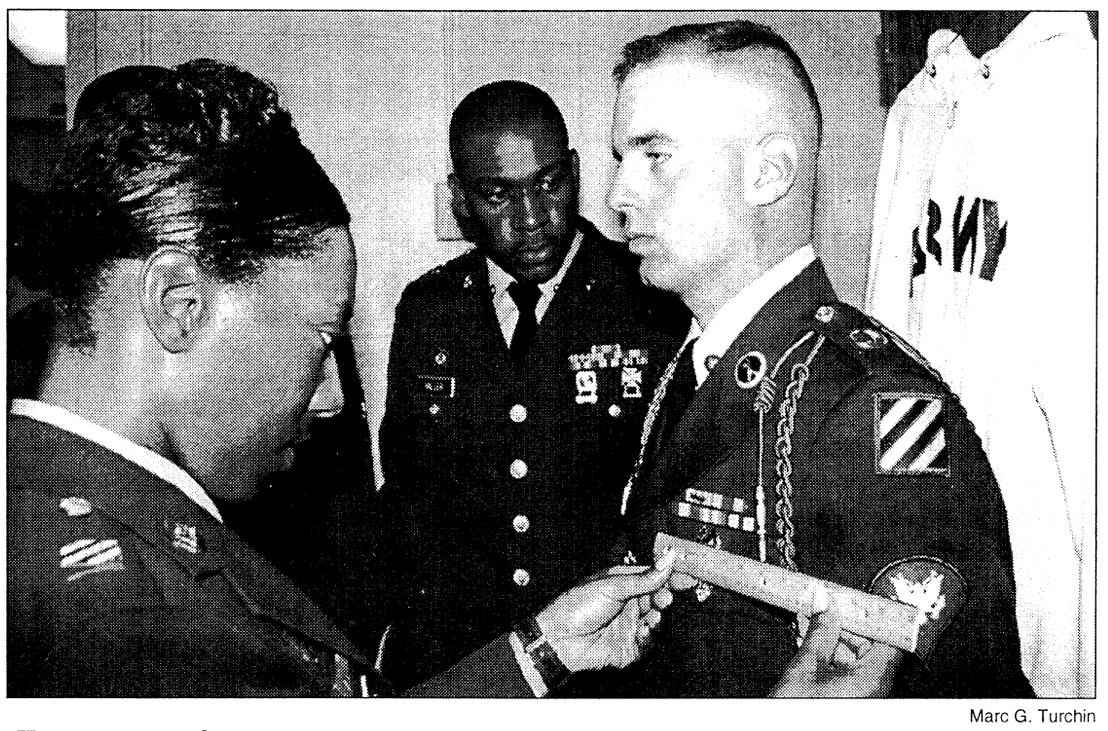
One hundred-ten students of Company B, 2nd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment, Infantry Officer Basic Course, Class 4-97, were welcomed to Fort Benning with their initial briefing from the company commander March 30 in Building 4.

The class is comprised of 32 state and federal Officer Candidate School lieutenants, 62 lieutenants from the Reserved Officer Training Corps and 16 international students from the countries of Saudi Arabia, Namibia, Thailand, Georgia Republic, Egypt, Lebanon, Hungary, Guinea-Bissau and Eritrea.

The international student from Eritrea is Col. Zerai Abed. Abed has 20 years Army service in his country and will be participating in all events of IOBC Class 4-97. He hopes to return to his country and establish a similar training program for new officers there.

The 17-week course develops these newly commissioned lieutenants to become proficient platoon leaders. The course begins with an Army physical fitness test and then focuses on the individual tasks of land navigation, marksmanship, physical training, communications, combat water survival, weapons familiarization and Army common task training.

The next part of the course is designed to build squad unity with a week-long squad-level field exercise and a variety of other tactical training and squad-level tasks.



Students then advance into platoon-level tactical operations. This phase has three week-long field exercises that concentrate on movement, security, offensive and defensive operations. The course concludes with a week-long company culmination field training exercise that includes three air assault missions and a military operations in urban terrain exercise.

Their tactical training includes lessons on fire support, demolitions, anti-armor tactics, chemical warfare, air defense, maintenance and engineering. In all, the students spend more than seven weeks of the course in a field environment.

In addition to the extensive tactical training in their course, the lieutenants are also trained in various other non-tactical subjects that include judicial matters, noncommissioned officer evaluation reports and NCO relationships, writing skills and briefings, formal events, logistics, counseling, military history, training and leadership.

The course also includes multiple guest speakers from World War II, Vietnam and the Gulf War.

The projected graduation date for IOBC Class 4-97 is July 25.

Transitioning Soldiers must cope with stress

Army Career and Alumni Program

Soldiers and families must cope with transition stress during a career change.

Transitioning to a civilian career can be one of the most stressful periods in a Soldier's life. Just ask someone who has been through the experience. Although each situation may be unique, stresses on the family and the Soldier will certainly be felt. Coping with the emotional and physical results of transition related stress is an item of special emphasis during the Pre-transition Program provided for Soldiers and spouses.

"I've been there, and the Army Career and Alumni Program program at Fort Benning provided outstanding support, training and assistance to help smooth the career change," said Chick Eagle, Job Assistance counselor and former military member. "I thought I had worked hard to prepare myself and my family for the move, but the stress was still there and it was real.

"Constant fatigue, headaches, trouble sleeping or sleeping too much, stomach problems and feeling nervous and irritable or unnecessarily angry are signs of excess stress. Also, stress may cause more frequent colds, inability to eat or eating too much, wanting to be alone and smoking or drinking more than usual," he said.

The following are some tips for successfully coping with transition related stress symptoms as suggested by thousands of service members now separated:

•Get going — It is your transition: take charge, focus on each task and just do it.

•Sell yourself — You are a great product and now is not the time to be modest about your accomplishments.

•Work at it — Work hard to plan and execute your transition but also take time off for yourself and your family.

•Keep your family involved — They may be feeling the same or more worries and uncertainties. Stress can be lessened by keeping them involved in your plan.

•Lighten up — This is important advice. Keep a sense of humor and a positive, upbeat, confident attitude about the adventure ahead.

Soldiers and families working hard with the services available through the ACAP program and other agencies will successfully complete their culminating Army mission, and transition to a promising new career, Eagle said.

Santiago sauna receives needed face lift

By Yvette Stewart, Laura Ortiz
Bayonet correspondents

The sauna at Santiago Gym was in desperate need of a face lift.

The old sauna was run down and had a lot of dangerous health violations, according to retired Command Sgt. Maj. Charles P. Thomas. The walls were peeling and nails were coming up from the floorboard and benches.

Thomas volunteered his time and carpentry and cabinet making experience to repair the sauna.

"When I started to tear down the old sauna, it was in pretty bad shape," Thomas said. "The wood had turned a dark brown — it was rotten."

The sauna needed some major work done to make it useable, according to retired Sgt. 1st Class Jorge Morales.

"I have been coming to Santiago Gym since 1988, and the old sauna was a mess," he said. "It was coming apart with the walls ready to fall. There was no way to clean the seat, nails were coming up from the floor, and you had to be careful where you walked."

After visiting the Audie Murphy Gym sauna to get the basic concept for the renovations, Thomas worked with the Directorate of Contracting Division who supplied the essential materials for the project, and the professional tools were borrowed from Sand Hill's Shop No. 5 at the Arts and Crafts Center.

Thomas' two weeks of labor saved the government money, said Maj. Walter L. McKee, Infantry Training Brigade logistics officer.

"It was cheaper for me to do it," he said. "Besides (the Directorate of Public Works) would not enjoy it as I did."

"I really enjoy working with my hands," Thomas said. "(DPW) would not put in the extra touches that make it special, such as the carved wooden sauna sign or the no shoes sign. We saved the government time and money with me redoing the sauna. Besides, I was here and I have done other jobs for the gym, fixing lockers and such."

"The sauna is great," McKee said.

"Sergeant Major Thomas did a really good job," Morales said. "You can say we have a brand new (sauna)."

Col. Abraham Turner, ITB commander, agreed.

This project was started after Turner made an initial assessment of the gym after taking command. After looking at the condition of the gym and the significance of it to the morale and welfare of those who use the facilities, it was determined some immediate changes were needed to bring the gym to an acceptable level. Some of Turner's concerns were a leaking roof, the painting of the basketball court walls and replacement of dressing room walls and rotting wood in the sauna.

Many different agencies came together to work on the project including the Directorate of Community Activities and the Directorate of Public Works.

The roof was repaired immediately and the sauna became a combined effort between DCA, DPW, ITB and Thomas.

In addition to the sauna being rebuilt, the officers assigned to ITB painted the basketball court area.

The gym is beginning to shape up partly because Thomas dedicated his time and effort to rebuilding the sauna making it "one of the best, if not the best on post," McKee said.

For Thomas' efforts, Turner will present Thomas with a plaque to go on the sauna wall.

Soldiers volunteer at Olympics

By April N. Olsen
USAIC Public Affairs Office

More than 30 students from Loyd Elementary School participated in the third annual Muscogee County Special Olympics at Kinnett Stadium in Columbus April 4.

Loyd students joined students from 30 other area schools for the event conducted by Fort Benning and the city of Columbus and sponsored by the Muscogee County Committee for the Special Olympics.

Mark Mills, the Family Member Employment Assistance Program manager, said the purpose of the event was enjoyment for the participants.

"The bottom line is let the kids have fun," said Mills, who helped organize the event.

Jean Anderson, a Loyd School teacher, said Fort Benning students look forward to the Special Olympics. She said participation in the olympics is important because Fort Benning does not have its own competition.

"We don't have enough children to compete at the Fort Benning level," Anderson said, "We'd be competing against ourselves."

Anderson said the children have been practicing not only for track and field events included in the Summer Games last week, but also in swimming, volleyball, bowling and indoor roller skating.

Many of those events, like the summer games, depend on volunteer support, Anderson said.

Most of the 350 volunteers at the summer games were Soldiers, Mills said. About half of those also volunteered at last year's games, he said.

"You get addicted to it," he said. "You see the kids smiling and you say 'gosh, this is great.'"

Anderson said she thinks Soldiers like to help out with programs like Special Olympics "out of the goodness of their hearts and their volunteer commitments."

"We've had tremendous support from Soldiers," Anderson said.

Many of the volunteers were from the Infantry Training Brigade; the Ranger Training Brigade; the 75th Ranger Regiment; 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment; 3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division (Mechanized); and the School of the Americas, Mills said.

Staff Sgt. Robert Smith, Company B, 1st Bn., 29th Inf. Regt., said he volunteered to help run the events even though he was on leave because he enjoys helping out at youth activities and giving children a positive role model.

"It showed the kids there are people who are willing to help," he said. "Soldiers like giving back to the community."

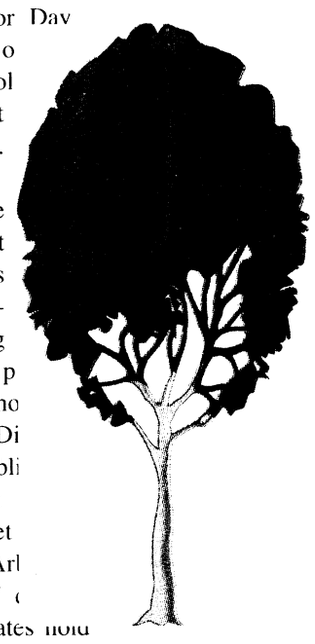
Smith said he thinks by volunteering at more than just on post activities shows the community there are Soldiers who want to make a positive impact on the local community while they're here at Fort Benning.

One Soldier who worked behind the scenes as "a roadie" to help organize this year agreed it's important for Soldiers to help out in the local community.

"While we're here in this joint community we get to simply participate in the things they do," Sgt. Willie Briskey said. "We interact and it creates peace and harmony ... this is one giant, humongous family."

Briskey, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment, said about 40 others from his battalion volunteered.

"It's great joy and satisfaction," Briskey said. "You meet a friend here today, you meet a friend for life."



Mills said top finishers from last week's county games will go on to compete in the area 10 games next month, which includes 11 counties, and then on to the Georgia State games.

White Elementary School students plant a tree, help environment

By Elizabeth LaMonica
Special to The Bayonet©

Edward A. White Elementary School, in conjunction with the Directorate of Public Works, will conduct its annual Arbor Day Cele-bratio on the school grounds at 10 a.m. April 18.

The annual event represents the continuing partnership of White scho and the Di torate of Publi

The last April is set National Arl Because of climates, states hold their own individual Arbor Days during the optimum time of their planting season.

Although Georgia's state Arbor Day is in cold February, the school elected to celebrate it in warmer April to increase student participation.

To bring attention to the event, White had a poem and essay contest highlighting Arbor Day. Winning students from each grade will read their submissions at the ceremony.

Col. Byron Greene, the post garrison commander, is scheduled to participate in the event and will give certificates to the winners. He will also help the students plant the tree.

White School invites the tricommunity to attend and support the event.

For more information, contact Lou Smith, mobilization plans specialist at DPW, at 545-2441.

CHILD ABUSE PREVENTION MONTH

Post agency offers parents tips on child rearing

Family Advocacy Program

The following are tips for parents to help their children stay safe:

•Build self-esteem — if children or teenagers feel good about themselves, they will not be as vulnerable. Children and teens with a strong sense of their own worth will not be as easily swayed or tricked by sexual abusers.

•Talk and listen — close parent-child relationships are an important aspect of protecting and supporting children. Often abusers gain the child's cooperation by warning the child no one will believe them if they tell.

•Children and teenagers need to hear a clear message early and often from the adults around them: "I care and I will listen to you. "

•Make a habit of talking regularly about ordinary activities and what sorts of things make your children and teens feel sad,, happy or angry.

Sharing stories of your own growing up experiences, both positive and negative, helps your children learn they are not alone in facing tough decisions.

•Sharing your experiences also helps children and teenagers to get to know their parents as real people.

•Supervise and plan — make sure that infants, toddlers and pre-schoolers are carefully supervised by parents, reliable family members or other appropriate caregivers at all times.

•Know where your older children and teens are and who they are with.

•Agree on plans for after school, going out with friends, inviting friends to the house. Be around their activities, alert to their behavior and aware of attitudes.

•Develo safety plan v y o u r children in tl e v e n t something unexpected happens outside of the home and you are n o t immediately available for help.

•Children can learn to be careful without being afraid of people.

•Rehearse and practice — encourage the development of problem-solving skills. Even young children can practice "what if" situations. Parents and children can rehearse what to do or say.

•Together parents and children can come up with different ways to handle real-life situations.

•Teach — children and teenagers need information that supports healthy sexuality. From toddlerhood to adolescence, parents and other caring adults can provide information on normal sexual behaviors, thoughts and feelings, in a way that makes children comfortable and aware of what is happening to them as they grow.

ing about sexuality and sex om parents gives parents the opportunity to stress important underlying values such as respect for self and others.

Children are naturally curious and very interested in their bodies. From an early age, along with learning the names of other body parts, they can be taught the correct terms for their private parts in conjunction with daily activities like bathing and toilet training.

•Teaching about all body parts in a matter-of-fact manner accomplishes two important tasks. It makes it clear to children that questions about their bodies and about sex are accepted and it also provides them with the words to use if someone has tried to touch them or hurt them.

•Take advantage of television, current events, and everyday occurrences to discuss family rules and expectations.

When parents provide ongoing information about sexual development and behavior they send a powerful message of support.

Children learn that their parents are aware of their growth and development and that sex is a topic that parents are willing to talk about.

Children and teenagers talk about sex anyway. It is better for them to get the correct information from a parent, rather than wrong information from someone else.

By providing opportunities to talk about sexual matters, parents may also be able to identify children and teens who are troubled about sex and arrange for help before problems occur.

Child abuse affects everyone and is the whole community's responsibility. The greatest protection we can give our children is to provide them with constant access to caring and trustworthy adults.

No parent can do it alone. It takes a community-wide commitment to caring. Parents should feel confident that others are working for their child's safety as much as they are.

There are many resources available to assist parents in their time of need. For more information, call the Army Community Service, Family Advocacy Program.

Volunteers needed to plant flowers for seniors — The Phenix City Housing Authority is planning a Flowers for Seniors program to benefit underprivileged senior citizens in the Phenix City area. The organization has already received donations of flowers and soil but volunteers are needed to plant the flowers.

The planting is scheduled for April 25.

For more information, call Gina Daniel at 298-7803.

Club presents a flower show — The federated Garden Club of Phenix City will present a standard flower show Saturday from 2:30 to 5:30 p.m. and Sunday from 1 to 4 p.m.

The show, which is free and open to the public, will take place at The Log Cabin, 1100 35th Street, Phenix City.

For more information, call Kimberly Beck at 291-1523.

Poetry contest launched on the Internet — The North American Open Amateur Poetry Contest, open to all poets, published or unpublished, offers a chance to win more than $8,000 in cash and prizes.

While the contest remains open to all, officials strongly encourage beginners to compete for the approximately 250 prizes. All entries may be published in a poetry anthology book.

The deadline for entry is April 30.

To enter, go to www.poetry.com or mail one original poem to The National Library of Poetry, 1 Poetry Plaza, Suite 1991, Owings Mills, Md. 21117-6282. Poet's name and street address must appear on entry.

Exchange program needs host families — The American International Youth Student Exchange Program, a non profit high school foreign exchange program in the United States, Europe and other parts of the world, seeks American host families.

Volunteers are needed to host 25 foreign students for the upcoming school year. Students will arrive in the United States in August, attend school, and will depart for home in June. The students, all fluent in English, have been screened by their school counselors in their home countries and will receive medical insurance and spending money.

All families hosting a student for the year can deduct $50 a month for income tax purposes.

AIYSEP is also seeking American high school students, between the ages of 15 and 19 years old, who are interested in spending a year with a European family or would like to participate in a 4- or 6-week family stay abroad program.

Candidates who have evidence of maturity, superior character and knowledge of English and foreign language can become AIYSEP students.

Students will be screened by AIYSEP school counselors and educators in the local schools.

For more information, contact the AIYSEP international headquarters at Office of the director, 200 Round Hill Road, Tiburon, Calif. 94920 or call (800) 347-7575.

CSU's music society plans a European cruise — The Patron of Music Society of the Columbus State University Schwob Department of Music, in conjunction with Fugazy International Travel and Holland America Line are planning a 12 day European Capitals Cruise with special guest, violinist Robert McDuffie.

A native of Macon, Ga., McDuffie will conduct private recitals for patrons as well as a public recital for all of the guests.

For a complete itinerary and a price list, call Fugazy at 322-6561 or 763-0234.

ask the judge

By Michael H. Lane
Staff Judge Advocate

Q: I had my purse stolen recently and I am worried about what may happen if the contents fall into the wrong hands. I saw a television program about people whose personal data fell into criminal's hands and ruined their lives. Am I in danger? What should I do to be sure?

A: Theft of a purse must be dealt with quickly. It is bad enough that a thief takes out the cash, but bigger problems may be on the way.

It is common for a thief to sell the credit cards and identification to other criminals who specialize in them. These criminals then may use the cards and identification to access your bank accounts, to buy items on your credit and open other accounts you know nothing about.

Because you are not liable for misuse of credit cards except for the first $50.00, many simply notify the credit card company and relax. However, you may find that the criminal has used the information in your purse to secure more information about you. He may be able to find out your social security number, bank account numbers, automatic teller machine card passwords, telephone calling cards and the like.

He may then use this information to impersonate you, spending as much money as possible before moving on to another victim.

This is "identity theft" and can complicate your life. Even though you do not have to pay the bills these criminals have made, you may find that you have a horrible credit report and cannot easily clear it. You may have difficulty writing checks, securing loans, renting an apartment or getting a job.

The Federal Trade Commission has published guidance in case of theft of a purse, and suggests the following action as a minimum:

•Notify police immediately, and get a report copy to use if necessary in dealing with your accounts.

•Cancel each credit and charge card and get new account numbers.

•Report missing cards to the major credit reporting agencies Equifax, (800) 525-6285, TRW, (800) 680-7289 and Trans Union, (800) 422-4879. Ask them to flag your accounts and add a victim's statement to the files.

•Report the loss to your bank. Cancel checking and savings accounts and open new ones. Stop payments on outstanding checks.

•Get a new ATM card, account number and personal code number.

•Call your utilities, including the telephone company. Tell then that someone may try to get new service using your identification.

•Report a missing driver's license to the motor vehicle department. Get a new number that is not your Social Security number.

•Change the locks on your home and car if keys were taken. An identity thief may get access to even more information.

This can happen to anyone, but you must take the responsibility for ensuring that the damage done is limited.

Q: As an active duty service member recently assigned to Fort Benning, what are the requirements concerning vehicle registration?

If you are an active duty service member assigned to Fort Benning, you have a choice — you can either register your vehicle in your state of permanent residence, or you can choose to register in the county in Georgia where you currently live.

If you choose to register in Georgia, under the Soldiers and Sailors Civil Relief Act, you are entitled to claim exemption from ad valorem taxation of your vehicle. Ad valorem taxes are taxes that a county or state imposes based on the value of personal property located in the state or county. The theory behind the SSCRA exemption is that because you had no choice in coming to your assignment, you ought not be required to pay this type of tax.

In order to claim the exemption, you must provide proof to the taxing authority (in this case, the tag office), that you are entitled to it. This is done by completing an SSCRA affidavit and providing proof of your state of legal residence. You can obtain the SSCRA affidavit at the public counter of the Legal Assistance Division in Building 5 on Main Post.

The affidavit must be notarized by one of the staff of the Legal Assistance Division, and you must bring a current leave and earnings statement with you in order to get the affidavit notarized. A current leave and earnings statement is one which is no more than 90-days old.

Once you have completed the affidavit, you then go to the tag office of the county where you live and finish the registration requirements for your vehicle. You should take with you the affidavit, your current title and registration of your vehicle, proof of insurance, your LES and the registration fee.

If you are registering the vehicle for the first time in Georgia, the fee is $38. This is because you are not only registering the vehicle, but are also applying to have a Georgia title issued on it. Subsequent registrations cost $20. You should take cash.

If you have questions concerning the registration process and the ad valorem exemption, or any other legal assistance matter, you should call the Legal Assistance Division at 545-3281. The office hours are from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. Monday through Friday.

Satellite dishes and storage buildings require permission

During the past several months, we have received numerous questions about the installation's policies on both satellite dishes and storage buildings. Hopefully, the following information will clarify the installation's policies before you make an investment in one or both of these items.

Residents can receive approval to install a satellite dish by stopping by the Family Housing Branch, DPW, Building 399, and completing a satellite dish application before installing the dish. If you have already installed a satellite dish without completing this application, it is very important that you stop by the Family Housing Branch as soon as possible.

The installation's policy is:

•The dish must be installed in the rear yard (non-road side for Austin and Miller Loop).

•The dish or associated equipment cannot be attached to buildings, privacy walls, garages or storage buildings.

•Cables must be buried or concealed to avoid a safety hazard.

•All evidence of the dish must be removed prior to leaving the installation.

•Existing cables are not to be removed or damaged.

•Provide a sketch of the location of the dish and the means of getting cables to television.

•Additional information can be obtained by calling 545-2990.

Approval to have a storage building can be obtained by stopping by the Family Housing Branch, DPW, Building 399, and completing a storage building application. If you have already installed a storage building without completing this application, it is very important that you do so as soon as possible.

The installation's policy is:

•You have written approval from the Family Housing Branch, DPW, to install a storage building

•Storage buildings must be installed in rear yards (non-road side for Austin and Miller Loops).

•Provide a sketch of the construction, size and proposed location of storage building to DPW.

•Applications for storage buildings in the Historic District must be accompanied by an approved environmental Form, FB form 144.

•The storage building is in proportion to the available area. Generally, 80 square feet is the maximum size allowable

•Nothing can be attached to government owned structures such as buildings, privacy walls, garages or storage buildings.

•No power can be supplied to the storage building.

•All evidence of the storage building must be removed prior to leaving Fort Benning.

•Additional information can be obtained by calling 545-2900.

Comments and Questions

If you have questions or topics that you would like to be addressed in the DPW "Information Corner," contact Glenn Todd, customer relations specialist, DPW, at 545-2117, or write to the Directorate of Public Works, Building 6 Room 409, ATTN: ATZB-PWM (Glenn Todd), Fort Benning, Ga., 31905.

MACH doctors volunteer time, assist local church members

Word of Truth Church of God in Christ

The Word of Truth Church of God in Christ located at 1112 Wynnton Rd. held its second annual health and fitness seminar under the direction of Elder Anias Hassell, the senior pastor.

A group of eight doctors from Martin Army Community Hospitals' Family Practice Clinic, the chief from the department of radiology, a nutritionist from MACH dining facility and a dental hygienist from Love Dental Clinic volunteered their time and knowledge to help Word of Truth enhance the community's health and fitness awareness.

Doctors Maj. Tom Garigan, Maj. William Humphrey, Capt. Shean Phelps, Capt. Mark Higdon, Capt. Dave Kramer, Capt. Jim Persson, Capt. Scott Kinkade and Capt. Mark Latzka conducted an open rap session where the men, women and teenage males and females actively participated in separate classes.

"Our residents were pleased to get the invitation and have the opportunity to talk with members of the community," Garigan said. "Initially, we wondered why no one had asked us before, then we realized that it's time to offer our services to community churches to help raise interest and awareness in health and medicine.

"The classes were as much of a learning experience for the physicians because they gave us an insight into the health concerns and questions of the community. Unfortunately we don't always take enough time to truly speak in detail with our patients."

A session on mammography and breast cancers was discussed by Col. Tom Anderson, the importance of good oral hygiene was presented by Jacqueline Jones and a class on nutrition was given by 1st Lt. Julie Del Rio.

There was also a class on stress management and hypertension given by Staff Sgt. Sidney Crawford of the Preventive Medicine Clinic. Free blood pressure checks were given to the attendees.

Yolanda Luster, a participant said, "A Change Of Season, a name fitting for the seminar, was definitely a refreshing and enlightening experience with much useful information, spiritually and physically."

The Health and Fitness Seminar took place during a period of three days, from March 31 to April 2, and was open to the public. Each session was preceded by aerobic exercise facilitated by Phillips, a master fitness trainer assigned to the Department of Radiology, MACH, as well as the coordinator of the Health and Fitness Unit at Word of Truth.

"Included in our ministerial vision for spiritual enhancement is physical awareness as well," Anias Hassel, senior pastor at Word of Truth said. "As a retired airborne Soldier of 21 years, I endeavor to be instrumental in building bridges between our military and civilian communities. Thanks to sister Charlotte Phillips and the rest of the congregation, those objectives are being accomplished.

"Much focus has been given to negative aspects of our military, therefore, exemplary acts of our guests reflected positive credit upon MACH, Fort Benning, and the Armed Services."

Food contents can be healthy

By Julie A. Del Rio
Martin Army Community Hospital

Fat free, high in calcium, low cholesterol, light — these phrases describe the amount of a nutrient in a food, but they don't tell exactly how much of it there is. They're called nutrient content claims.

Nutrient content claims appear on the front of food packages and can only be used if a food matches specific nutrition criteria set by the government. Here are some of the nutrient content claims and their definitions:

Nutrient content claims differ from nutrition facts which do list specific nutrient amounts. But, nutrient content claims on the front of labels provide quick information alerting the consumer to foods that have more of one dietary component or less of another.

Free, low, or reduced — these signal foods low in calories, fat, cholesterol, sodium or other nutrients that most people need to moderate. Terms such as excellent source of and high refer to foods that have a lot of fiber, calcium iron and other nutrients that people may need more of.

Consider a can of kidneys beans. The claim might say high in fiber. The nutrition facts panel shows that one serving supplies 25 percent of the daily value for fiber or six grams of fiber per serving.

In order for a product to claim it is high in fiber or an excellent source of fiber, a food must provide at least 20 percent of the daily value for fiber or five grams of fiber per serving.

When using nutrient content claims in choosing foods, always check the other nutrients on the nutrition facts panel to compare one food with another and to see how the food fits into an overall healthful diet.

Read the nutrition information provided on food labels to make healthy food choices.

Remember, all foods can be incorporated into a healthy diet.

Nutrient Content Claim	Definition (per serving)
Calorie free	Less than 5 calories
Light or Lite	1/3 fewer calories or 50% less fat
Fat free	Less than 0.5 gram fat
Reduced fat	At least 25% less fat
Low fat	3 grams or less fat
Cholesterol free	Less than 2 milligrams cholesterol and 2 grams or less saturated fat
Low cholesterol	20 milligrams or less cholesterol and 2 grams or less saturated fat
Light in sodium	50% less sodium
Low sodium	140 milligrams or less sodium
High, rich in, excellent source of	20% or more of Daily Value for that nutrient
High fiber	5 grams or more fiber

Hospital offers contraception alternative

By Kevin S. Henning
Martin Army Community Hospital

Did you know that a vasectomy is the safest, easiest form of permanent contraception?

Although a tubal ligation in a female is a more commonly performed operation, vasectomies are far simpler since they involve cutting the vas deferens tubes in a man's scrotum which is outside the body cavity. Physicians and others who are knowledgeable about both forms of sterilization tend to choose vasectomy.

The Family Practice Department at Martin Army Community Hospital performs vasectomies every week. The surgery is done on an outpatient basis under local anesthesia, sometimes with a mild oral sedative. The vas deferens tubes, which carry the sperm from each testicle to the outside are cut and a section is removed. The procedure is normally done on a Friday and takes from 30 minutes to one hour. After a weekend of rest most men can return to work on Monday with a profile for restricted physical training for about two weeks. Occasionally patients have mild swelling and discomfort for several days, but long-term side effects and more serious complications like bleeding are rare.

Although the procedure is intended for men who have fathered children, any man who is eligible for care at Martin Army may speak with a physician about the procedure. If you have completed your family and are interested in permanent contraception you should consider a vasectomy.

For more information, call 544-3065 to make an appointment with a family practice physician or see your own primary care doctor or physician's assistant for a referral.

Bible commands believers to witness their faith

By Richard Moore
USAIC Chaplains Office

Four things drove the early Christians out into the world to tell others the message of Jesus as Lord. Four things, even with the different circumstances of today, compel the duty of witness upon every person of faith.

First, there was the command of our Lord himself. "All authority in heaven and on earth has been given to me. Therefore, go and make disciples of all nations ..." (Matthew 28: 18,19).

reflections

This command encompasses the world outlook that characterized the life and teaching of Jesus from the beginning. According to Luke 24:47, when he gave his followers their missions, he added the words, "beginning at Jerusalem." This suggests that each person's witness to Christ is to start right on the very spot where one is living.

Jerusalem had been the scene of the disciples' failure and shameful desertion of the Lord in his hour of need. Now they had to stand and speak for him before the same community that rejected his words and worth.

This was their Lord's command, and they knew their fellowship with him would depend on their commitment to it .

Our Lord's intent is for Christians not to cluster and grow in , but to out grow and leaven the cultures of the earth with good news, the truth of Jesus, savior of the world. Some say, "Charity begins at home, why go crusading to the ends of the earth while there is so much to be done at home?"

This answer lies not only when religion is not scattering itself abroad, it dies on the vine, but also they are disoriented in attitude by imagining that this is in any sense open for debate.

His great commission is settled once and for all. Anyone who argues it is daring to correct Jesus Christ. It's his word and he means to be obeyed.

The second thing which sent the disciples out to witness to the world was a sense of urgency. They believed that the end of the world was at hand. It was to happen in their own lifetimes.

Were not Jesus' own words still impacting their hearts and minds — "I tell you the truth, this generation will certainly not pass away until all these things have happened" (Mark 13:30).

Clearly, no time should be lost if the whole world was to hear the message of salvation before the end came. People were blind to the truth and living in the shadow of death, hopeless, godless, lost and ruined. The disciples were driven to preach the good news.

The duty of witness lays upon their successors today. The chaos of soul demonstrated by men, women and children in every community — like ships on stormy seas, without rudder or compass force human hearts to reach out after anything that comes glittering along, false hopes amid slick presentations.

This is a day when every believer nourished and sustained by his life in ours and, led by the quiet voice of the Holy Spirit, must confront our communities with the reason, faith and fulfillment of faith in Jesus Christ.

The third thing that drove the disciples to speak to strangers about him was the reality of the message. There was the wonder of forgiveness, God's arms around the ugliest soul. The reality was joy—- joy to feel clean inside and the joy to reach out and love the unlovable.

They were the salt of the earth, making others thirsty to embrace Jesus.

The fourth thing which sent the disciples out was the conviction that Jesus is Lord. The first Christian sermon ended with the words, "God has made this same Jesus, whom you crucified, both Lord and Christ" (Acts 2:36). The lordship of Jesus was everything.

The earliest creed of a of a Christian was the simple confession "Jesus is Lord." By this title, they meant that their friend with whom they walked and talked was one day to be the judge of all mankind.

To apply "Jesus is Lord" involves the total sovereignty of Jesus over every aspect of the believer's life and then over all of life.

"Therefore," wrote Paul, summing up in that word the whole story of Jesus' sufferings and resurrection power, "therefore, God exalted him to the highest place, and gave him the name above every name, that at the name of Jesus every knee should bow, in heaven and on earth, and under the earth, and every tongue confess that Jesus Christ is Lord to the glory of God the father" (Philippians 2:9,10,11).

This encompasses everything that motivated the disciples to proclaim the message of Jesus to their world. We have the same confession and the same mission in our world.

chapel notes

P W C welcomes all to meetings

Protestant Women of the Chapel meet Thursdays from 9:30 to 11:45 a.m. for singing and praying, as well as Bible study which begins at 10:30 a.m. PWC will be continuing the study on God's amazing love, the way of agape.

All ladies are welcome to join the group at building 2521, located off Indianhead Road at Thorson Street. Child care is provided free in adjacent Bldg. 2517.

For more information, call Jean Fry at 689-6049 or Kristie Sickler at 685-4979.

Chaplains offer new Bible study class — The Adult I Sunday School Class is beginning a new study on the creation. The study will include an overview of creation in the Book of Genesis, the age of the Earth, dinosaurs and the Bible, Job and Leviathan, the theory of evolution and the Bible and the impact of the flood.

The class begins at 9:30 a.m. each Sunday in Building 2521 and is ends at 10:30 a.m. Everyone is invited to attend this class and participate in the discussions.

The class will be based on video tapes by Dr. Kent Hovind of Pensacola, Fla., who is the president of Creation Ministries. Outlines of the classes will be provided.

Omnipresent: Seeing is not necessary when it comes to God

By Robert W. Thompson
Chaplain Family Life Center

The Pacific Northwest is known for its rains that fall steadily for days (or weeks) and for clouds that hug the earth, shrouding the landscape in a gentle gloom. Just a few miles in from the coast rise the Cascade Mountains and spectacular among them is Mount Baker.

reflections

I wrote in my journal:

"For weeks, I've driven my highway 60 miles north in the morning, then south again at the end of the day. The mountains are clearly marked on the map, but they might as well not exist, lost as they are in clouds, obscured by drizzle, fog and haze.

"Then, one morning unexpectedly, a strong air from the sea will lick away the fog and allow the sun to shine cleanly. Mount Baker, towering magnificently beyond the foothills, unbelievably high above the other mountains, will be seen as what it has been all along — immense, serene, unmovable, its dazzling snow-draped profile cut clear against a sky of jewel blue.

"Today it happened. The mountain 'came out!' Wanting to be overwhelmed again and again, I kept turning my eyes from the highway to look once more at its splendor. It is heartstopping. I can't get enough of it. And I can never take it for granted — I may not see it again for weeks.

"It's God, showing me a metaphor of himself. I mean he's there, whether I see him or not. It's almost as if he's lying in wait to surprise me.

"And the wind is like the Spirit, sweeping away my foggy doubt, opening my eyes, revealing the reality of God. Annie Dillard's words say it for me: 'It was less like seeing than being for the first time seen, knocked breathless by a powerful glance...'" *

God showed himself through the mountain. Traditionally, this showing is accompanied by light; we need light in order to see what is being shown us. Light is something that every human heart longs for and responds to.

Day holds all the clarity of brilliance and vision — a certainty, where night brings blindness in the unknowing dark.

Jesus himself was personified as the sun of righteousness. Even in our diurnal rhythms — day, night, day — sunset is a figure of chill, aging and death, while the appearance of the morning sun over the horizon's blackness speaks of warm hope.

This response is so universal that when God explains himself to us in scripture, as light — the "true Light that lightens everyone" — we recognize the glory and joy of the image.

In these weeks following Easter, may each of us "see the mountain." May the spirit of our resurrected Lord blow away the fog of our doubt and discouragement. May we be knocked breathless by the powerful glance from our undefeated father in heaven.

Learn how to center things around the Lord

By James Blount
1st Bn., 38th Inf. Regt., ITB

Wouldn't it be just wonderful if everything we did in our families centered around Christ and Christ alone? Wouldn't it be great if Mom and Dad and the kids all prayed together?

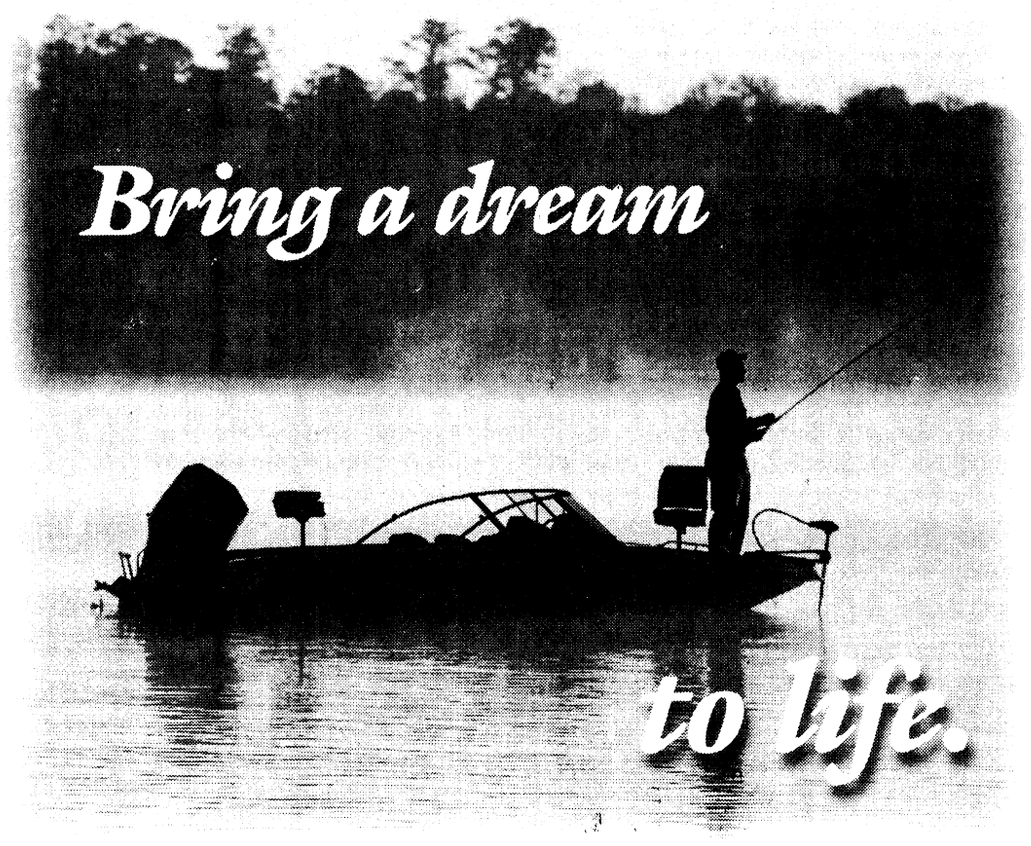
reflections

Wouldn't it be super if Dad and Mom sat down with the kids and shared the Scriptures with them? Wouldn't it be a great blessing to the families that discovered the best kind of family quality time is time spent at church?

If only we had the faith to model our families after Ephesians, chapters 5 and 6. If only Dad would treat Mom like Christ treats the church. If only Mom would treat Dad like the church treats Christ.

If only we, as parents, would bring our children up m the training and admonition of the Lord. We wish and wonder what if and procrastinate and fail and ultimately, sin against God. We need to quit thinking about how blessed our families would be if they were Christ centered, and we need to do something.

I'm speaking these strong words of conviction not only to you readers, but also to myself.



Faith should lead us to action, and action should strengthen our faith. By faith, which comes from God, we pray and study the Scriptures more fervently; we attend Church services and activities more regularly.

As we do these things, then our faith grows stronger. Why? Because we act out and exercise our faith in God and see his promises come true and his blessings bestowed upon us, then we are overwhelmed by his faithfulness to us.

Out of love then, we are ever faithful to him. Faith and action empower each other infinitely, but one without the other yields nothing.

Let us all agree that we need to get our priorities in order if we wish to have Christ-centered family. We need to find time each day to nurture our spouses and children according to God's holy word in Ephesians, chapters 5 and 6.

Fitness Center receives new equipment

By Elizabeth LaMonica
Special to The Bayonet©

Elizabeth LaMonica
Fort Benning Officers' Club Fitness Center's new Cybex equipment promotes exercise.

Workout buffs rejoice!

The fitness center, Building 117, received its state-of-the-art Cybex exercise equipment March 31.

The $75,000 equipment replaces the Nautilus machines the center formerly used. The Capital Purchases Minor Construction project provided the funds.

"Cybex was designed to be used primarily as rehabilitation equipment and is therefore biomechanically correct," said Kim Jenks, manager of the fitness center, "It adjusts to everybody and their size which is great.

"The Nautilus was designed for an average sized person and that excluded many people because it couldn't adjust to everyone."

Unlike the other gyms on post, the fitness center, is a non-appropriated funds facility and is not controlled by the post sports director. Although the other gyms are converting to Cybex as well, the fitness center has some different pieces.

"Our cardiovascular equipment is different," Jenks said. "We also have crunch and oblique machines, free climbers, recumbent bicycles, and power pacers. The athletes who train here for triathlons seem to like the diversity."

The fitness center is available to any military personnel for a fee. The fee is included in the Officers' Club membership costs and is $12 per month for enlisted people.

The fitness center also offers other services for an additional fee. Classes for aerobics, body sculpting and karate are scheduled weekly. Personal trainers are available by appointment. The center also has tanning facilities and massage therapy.

"Participation in the classes would probably increase if we had on-site child care," Jenks said. "Some off-post gyms offer that service to parents who want to work out which encourages participation. But we're working on changing that."

Those who have used the new Cybex are enthusiastic about the changes.

The old stuff was made for big Army men and needed complicated adjustments," said Lorie MacMullen, a gym user. "The Cybex is user-friendly and can be easily switched to anyone."

The Nautilus machines will be sold at auction in Bldg. 1704 May 13. More information about the auction may be obtained by calling 545-2348.

Funds raised from the auction will be put back into non-appropriated funds.

For more information about the fitness center, call 687-0871.

volunteer of the week

Name: Alice M. Rzeszutko
Hometown: South Holland, Ill.

Volunteer job title: Family Support Group leader

Volunteer organizations: Company B, 203rd Forward Support Group; 1st vice-president of the Parent Teacher Organization; Dexter Elementary School, 4th grade Contraternity of Catholic Doctrine teacher

Why do you volunteer?
I volunteer because I feel that I am providing a vital service to my family, friends, the community and to all those who are involved with the military.

What do you like most about volunteering?
To know that I am helping others.

What are your special interests and hobbies?
I like to bake, cook, swim and go on walks with my family.

What others have to say:
"Alice has been an integral part of our company. Her support, through her volunteer work has helped the readiness of our unit tremendously. She helps teach spouses of the military to help themselves. This allows the deploying family member to keep his or her mind on their job so he or she can best carry out any mission."

CSU conducts road race — The Columbus State University Alumni Association, in conjunction with the Columbus Track Club, is sponsoring a one-mile Fun Run and Walk and a five-kilometer road race Saturday at Columbus State University's Bradley Turner Education Center.

The event is open to all age groups with participants receiving t-shirts with the entry fee.

Registration fees are $10 for the Fun Run and Walk and $12 for the five-kilometer run.

For more information, call Steve Carmichael at 568-2058.

Officials schedule clinic — The Tri-county Sports Officials' Association will conduct their softball clinic for officials Saturday at 9 a.m. on Gowdy Field.

All officials are encouraged to participate in the clinic.

The clinic will cover rules and regulations for the 1997 Intramural Softball season.

For more information, call Robert Trimble at 689-3785.

Club plans pistol and rifle matches — The Fort Benning Rifle and Pistol Club will conduct a Tactical Rifle Match Sunday beginning at 1 p.m. on English Range.

The cost for the match is $15 if paid by noon Saturday and $20 afterwards.

Eight separate shooting categories are offered for the event.

For more information, call 689-3371.

Society sponsors run — The American Cancer Society will conduct its annual Relay for Life Run May 2 at the Hughston Sports Medicine Center, 6262 Veterans Parkway.

Participants may form teams of 10 to 15 competitors with each member running in 30-minute intervals for two hours.

For more information, call Wren Gilliam at 324-5614.

Youth Services basketball camp set — Youth Services will conduct a basketball camp for ages 6 to 15 April 28 through May 23 at the Youth Services Gym, Building 1055, from 8 a.m. to 4:30 p.m.

Registration for the camp is $30. All participants are required to have a Youth Services card to sign up. Youth Services cards can be purchased at the Youth Services administration office, Building 1056.

For more information, call 545-3070.

Rifle and Pistol Club prepare for GSSF match

By John W. Peeler
Special to the Bayonet©

The Fort Benning Rifle and Pistol Club conducted their annual preparation match for the Glock Sport Shooting Foundation Saturday at English Range with more than 55 participants entering the match.

Among the competitors were 10 Soldiers from the 101st Airborne Division's Air Assault School at Fort Campbell, Ky., who were preparing for the annual Best Ranger Competition May 2 through 4.

Chris Robishaw, a member of the team, said the match was being used as a warm-up for the upcoming competition.

"We did a road march earlier this morning and this gives us a warm-up on the shooting aspect," Robishaw said.

Unfortunately for the rangers, the hot pistol for the day in the military class belonged to Carlos Pená who shot an aggregate score of 206 with an unprecedented 5.686 hit factor.

"Pená has really worked hard to do this well," resident expert Jim Graham said. "Pená uses a stock Glock 21, .45-cal., and as you can tell by the scores, he did as well as the competitor class people with the more expensive pistols.

"You don't have to have the most expensive and exotic pistol to shoot well, but you do have to train hard," Graham said. Pená has done just that."

Graham said the competitors shot at the same type of targets they will see in May at the GSSF match and that the Rifle and Pistol Club match encompassed two-thirds of what is included in the Glock match.

Registration for the GSSF match may be accomplished any time up to one week before the match.

"I strongly encourage pre-registration," Graham said.

For more information on the GSSF match, call Graham at 689-3371.

Golf season kicks off with first payday tournament

By John W. Peeler
Special to the Bayonet©

The 3rd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment, (Officer Candidate School) kicked off the Payday Golf Tournament series April 4 at the Follow Me Golf Course fielding 87 players on the Pineside Course.

The tournament was the first of eight payday tournaments that will be conducted this year.

Resident golf pro George Cliff said the course is in the best shape it has been in for a long while and expects the tournaments to be very successful.

The team of Darryl Madison, Fernando Pedrozo, Fran Brown and Steven Clark fired a 60 to take first place squeaking past the team of Scott Armbrister, Willie Wells, Bill Middleton and Eric Massey who shot a 61 on the course.

Mike Cullivane, John Sego, Nick Fuller and Jeff Silno shot a 62 to take third place with the team of Jim Collier, John Dale, Matt Taylor and Bob Breedon shooting a 62 to capture fourth place.

Finishing in fifth place were Harry Inker, Nick Berear, Chas Wilbourne and John Rudd with a 63 and Harry Linsenbigler, Walter Wojdakowski, Mark Henniger and Firmen Sowers in sixth place with a 63.

Finishing closest to the hole were Al River on the fifth hole, Bill Powell on the seventh hole, Jim Collier on the 13th hole and Bill Cullinane on the 16th hole.

Josh Rudd won the longest drive competition on the 18th hole.

The next payday tournament is scheduled for May 2 at the Follow Me Golf Course with a 1 p.m. tee time.

For more information, call George Cliff at 687-1940.

U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit shooters win at sport pistol match

By Anna O'Leska
USAMU Public Affairs Office

U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit international pistol shooters won the Men's Free Pistol Match and Women's Sport Pistol Match conducted recently in Atlanta.

Daryl L. Szarenski captured first place in the Men's Free Pistol Match and Rhonda L. Bright won second place in the Women's Sport Pistol event.

The Free Pistol Match is open to men only with competitors coming from all around the country to participate.

Competitors fire a 60-shot precision course at 50 meters and 10-shot finals. The Women's Sport Pistol Match is a 60-shot course of fire, 30-shot precision fire, 30-shot rapid fire and 10-shot precision finals.

On the first day of competition, Szarenski won with a score of 556 points and 98.4 points in the final for a total score of 654.4 points. Szarenski went on to place first on the second day with a score of 547 points and 96.8 points in the final for a total score of 643.8 points. In the final day of competition Szarenski scored 549 points and 98.7 points for a total winning score that day of 647.7 points. Szarenski also took first place in the overall finals with a score of 98.3 points.

Bright won second place in the Women's Sport Pistol event on the first day with a score of 574 points and 97.4 points in the final for a total score that day of 671.4 points. Bright went on to place second on the second day with a score of 568 points and 97.6 points totaling 665.6 in the final. Bright again captured first place on the third day with a score of 575 points and 99.2 points in the final for a total of 674.2 points, then took second place in the overall final with a score of 97.2 points.

"I'm happy and proud to start off the season in such a great way," Szarenski said, "and since all my training is done at the USAMU, the unit is very important to my performance at this time."

"This match is good training for our shooters for the Olympics," USAMU International Pistol Team Coach Rounie D. Boles said, "in both women's sport pistol and men's free pistol."

outdoor outlook

Georgia State Parks offer guided canoe trips — Outdoor enthusiasts can explore Georgia's scenic waterways on guided canoe trips at Hamburg High Falls and Panola Mountain State parks.

Park staff will explain basic canoeing techniques and interpret natural surroundings while leading paddlers on day-long trips.

Participants can see beavers, otters, kingfishers, great blue herons, turtles and other wildlife.

Trips fill quickly, so pre-registration is required. To register, call the park directly.

The cost is $15 per person, which includes canoe, paddles and life preserver. Canoers who bring their own equipment pay $10. A $2 park pass fee is charged per vehicle.

Eighteen of Georgia's state parks rent canoes so visitors can explore lakes and streams on their own.

Prices are $3 to $5 for an hour, $8 to $15 for four hours and $12 to $20 for an entire day. For a free "Guide to Georgia State Parks and Historic Sites" or "1997 Events" brochure, call (404) 656-3530.

To reserve a campsite or fully equipped cottage, call (800) 864-7275.

The parks that will offer canoe trips are:

•Hamburg State Park, Mitchell, Saturday, April 19 and 26, 9:30 a.m. to 2 p.m.

This is an easy, 4.5-mile float down the Ogeechee River.

Call (912) 552-2393 to register.

•High Falls State Park, Jackson, second Saturday of each month, enjoy an easy trip down the Towaliga River, May 10, June 14, July 12, Sept. 13 and Oct. 11. Call (912) 993-3053 to register.

•Panola Mountain State Conservation Park, Stockbridge, May 17, 9 a.m. to 2 p.m.

This clean-up trip down the South River combines wildlife observation with litter pickup.

Sept. 27, 9 a.m. to 2 p.m. Explore three miles of the South River which forms the northern boundary of this park.

Nov. 15, 5:30 to 7:30 p.m. Adults may enjoy a sunset float on the park's 3.5-acre lake. Call (770) 389-7801 to register.

State parks post fishing tournaments — The arrival of spring means it is time to get out to your favorite fishing pole and head to Georgia's state parks.

This year, the parks have planned a dozen fishing events where serious anglers can strut their stuff while beginning youngsters learn the basics. The tournaments are a great excuse for families to spend time together in the spring sunshine.

Most state parks have boat ramps and docks, and many rent boats and sell bait. For more information about a fishing tournament, call the host park.

Fishing tournaments are just some of the many events conducted by state parks and historic sites throughout the year.

All events are free and parking is $2.

•A parent and child fishing tournament takes place Saturday from 6 a.m. to 6 p.m. at Mistletoe State Park.

Applying parents and grandparents may join younger family members for a day of fishing competition. Grand prize is two nights in one of Mistletoe's cottages.

The tournament is limited bank fishing only. There is no cost for the tournament. For more information, call 541-0321.

•A children's fishing rodeo occurs Saturday from 8:30 to 11 a.m. at John Tanner State Park, Carrollton.

Children 15 and younger can try their luck on two stocked lakes while competing for different prizes. The tournament is free.

For more information, call (770) 830-2222.

•The junior fishing rodeo is May 3 at 7:30 a.m. at Noon Black Rock Mountain State Park, Mountain City.

Children 15 and younger can compete on a lake stocked with trout and catfish.

The tournament is free and there is no fishing license required.

For more information, call 746-2141.

•A kids' catfish rodeo takes place May 17 from 10 a.m. to 3 p.m. at Cloudland Canyon State Park, Rising Fawn.

Children 14 and younger can try their luck with a stocked pond. An adult must accompany each angler. The tournament is free.

For more information, call 657-4050.

•A fishing rodeo is May 24 from 8 to 11 a.m. at Reed Bingham State Park, Adel.

Children 14 and younger can compete for prizes. The tournament is free.

For more information, call (912) 896-3551.

•The junior and senior catfish rodeo is May 24 at 9 a.m. at Victoria Bryant State Park, Royston.

Children under 16 and adults over 62 can compete in this fishing and casting contest.

Prizes will be awarded for categories such as largest fish, youngest fisherman and albino catfish catch.

There is no charge for the tournament.

For more information, call 245-6270.

•Children's fishing rodeo takes place June 7 from 9 a.m. to noon at James H. Floyd State Park, Summerville.

The long-awaited reopening of the 16-acre lake finally arrives.

Anglers 14 and younger can compete for prizes. Hotdogs and hamburgers will be served after the rodeo.

Bring your own fishing gear and bait (no minnows). There is no charge for the tournament.

For more information, call 857-0826.

•Children's fishing rodeo is June 7 at 8:30 a.m. until noon at Magnolia Springs State Park, Millen.

Children 15 and younger can try their luck on three stocked lakes while competing for various prizes. Pre-registration required. The tournament is free.

Bass pro recommends topwater lures, spinnerbaits for bass

By Earl Bentz and Steve Price
Outboard Marine Corporation

When professional bass tournament angler Larry Nixon goes fishing in April, he usually travels light.

"That's because top water lures and spinnerbaits will catch a lot of bass this time of year," Nixon said. "If I take a third rod, it will probably have a Carolina rig on it, but overall, the key is fishing shallow water close to deep water.

"The reason is because in most lakes the bass have completed spawning by late May and early June, but the fish have not necessarily completed their movement back out to summer structure," he said.

"The bass move shallow during the night to feed, so I'll start each day by fishing a topwater popper or chugger over points, submerged islands close to the surface, or along the edges of treelines," Nixon said.

"The topwater action may not last very long, and it usually ends very abruptly, too, especially if the weather has been warm and the day is clear," he said. "Once the sun has been up about an hour, the bass stop feeding and begin moving toward deeper water, but if the day is cloudy, the topwater bite may last much longer."

When the topwater action does end, Nixon changes to one of his favorite spinnerbaits, a 3/4-ounce shad-colored model with a Colorado and willow leaf blade combination.

"This weight and blade combination is the only one I've found that allows me to fish the spinnerbait either fast and shallow or slow and deep and still have good vibration," the professional angler said. If he's fishing deeper water in the 15-to-20 foot range, Nixon changes to a Carolina rig with a six to seven inch plastic worm because it allows him to cover the water more quickly. He works the outside edges of cover.

"This can be something as simple as an underwater hump that falls off sharply on the sides, a long point, or perhaps even a creek channel. It all depends on what's available for the bass."

The first significant channels that have deeper water, or the outermost cover away from the flats are primary areas to fish.

Building up ... and tearing down

1st Sgt. Randall J. Branham, standing, HHC, 1st Bn. (Airborne),Inf., 507th Inf. Regt. and Sgt. Maj. William A. Cox, 11th Inf. Regt's sergeant major, conduct rifle physical training on York Field April 10 led by Fort Benning's Sergeant Major, Command Sgt. Maj. Mack Vereen. This was the first session of new monthly physical training for senior non-commissioned officers. The training is intended to build a cohesive and fit senior NCO corps, increase strength throughout the post commands and teach current physical fitness doctrine and exercise techniques.

The Main Post theater begins its demise as the long-time post structure is demolished as part of the Commanding General's Footprint Reduction Plan. In its prime, the theater showed first-run movies and plays for the Fort Benning community. The post's Wynnsong 10 now shows first-run movies.

Post closes road in hopes of stopping illegal dumping, hunting

By Elizabeth LaMonica
Special to The Bayonet©

Effective today, the Garrison Commander's Office is closing Cartledge Road where it leads onto Main Post., from west Macon Road.

A result of a continued problem with illegal dumping, this closing is the first in a series of expected road closings to be announced by the Garrison Commander's Office.

The biggest concern is the dumping of hazardous waste items such as freon, toxic solvents, paints and petroleum products. Left alone, these chemicals could spell disaster.

"We call this stuff orphan waste, because no one wants to claim it," Walls said, "not the city, not Fort Benning and not the units that have to police it.

> "Our first step is to close certain roads to curtail dumping. The next step is to apprehend an illegal dumper."
> — Chuck Walls
> Garrison manager

"Sometimes even contractors are responsible for this dumping problem," said Chuck Walls, garrison manager. "They find that it's cheaper to dump it on Fort Benning than to take care of it properly.

"I don't want to target contractors," Walls said, "but obviously it had to be one by the sheer volume and nature of the waste.

At a glance

What: Closing of Cartledge Road

When: Today

Where: West of Macon Road

Information: Call 545-1500

"We've identified all of the dump areas of the installation, and are determining which roads need to be closed to restrict access."

Some of these areas contain annoyance trash while others have potential hazardous waste.

"A big concern is that we want to do the right thing and restrict access to people who are dumping," Walls said, "but not to people who have bona fide reasons for being on post."

Another benefit of the road closings is illegal hunters will find it more difficult to break the law, Walls said. Hunters who come on post the normal way where they check in before beginning to hunt will not be affected.

"Our first step is to close certain roads to curtail dumping. The next step is to apprehend an illegal dumper.

"Safety is the first priority," Walls said. "Also maintenance (of Fort Benning is an issue.) We're a great installation and we don't want to be a dumping ground."

The road closings will be a deliberate process with plenty of advanced warning, Walls said.

36th Engineer Group opens new dining facility

By Linwood Buford
13th Corps Support Battalion

Soldiers and civilians waited patiently, anticipating the ribbon cutting ceremony and the first special meal Wednesday at the new 13th Corps Support Battalion Dining Facility.

Sponsored by the 36th Engineer Group (Combat), this meal marked the official opening of the 13th CSB's newly-constructed Dining Facility. Soldiers and officers from the 36th Eng. Grp. (Combat), 13th CSB, 203rd Forward Support Battalion, and the post food service office attended the ribbon cutting ceremony.

After months of wondering when the new DFAC would open, the ribbon was cut for daily operations.

Col. Thomas L. Bailey, commander, 36th Eng. Grp. (Combat), keynoted the ceremony. He touched on the past successes of the 13th CSB Dining Facility, as well as the significance of the new dining facility.

"This is a beautiful facility, and we've waited for it for a long time," Bailey said. "I think the Soldiers will really enjoy it."

This new Dining Facility has inherited a legacy of success. Awards and recognition have come to the 13th CSB DFAC since 1980.

In its younger days, the Dining Facility fell under a different flag, the 67th Maintenance Battalion. Under that command, in the summer of 1980, the DFAC supported a youth summer camp for Columbus.

The following years added many other awards. Under the command flag of the 13th CSB, the Dining Facility continued its tradition of excellence. In addition to placing runner-up and finalist in the 12th and 13th Phillip A. Connelly Competitions respectively, the 13th CSB DFAC has earned other honors.

From fiscal 1994 to fiscal 1996, the Dining Facility was a finalist for the Training and Doctrine Command, Commanding General's Best DFAC Awards Program for Excellence in Army Food Service. Now, the tradition of excellence continues with a new building.

Lt. Col Gerald Bates Jr., commander of the 13TH CSB, was very pleased with opening of the new facility.

"Our cooks have always been first class, and now they have a first-class facility to work in," he said.

The new Dining Facility features twice the seating capacity of its predecessor, while offering up-to-date cooking equipment.

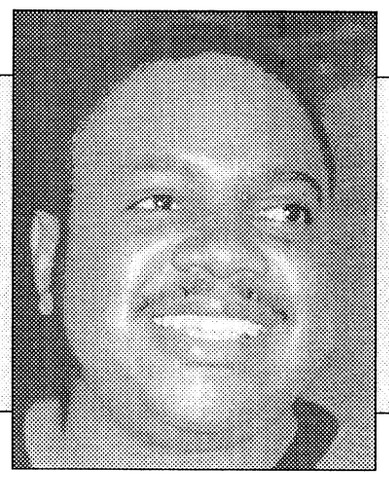
"This equipment is like the equipment at the Food Service Advanced Individual Training," said Sgt. 1st Class Pamela Hardnett, 13th CSB Dining Facility manager. "The younger cooks have the opportunity to work on the equipment they have trained with, while the more seasoned cooks can sharpen their skills on newer equipment."

In addition to offering better equipment, the new Dining Facility offers more storage space for refrigerated items as well as dry goods. The Soldiers dining in the new facility have more room to eat and a more pleasant atmosphere.

"On average, we would feed about 800 Soldiers daily in the old DFAC," Hardnett said. "In this building, we could feed almost twice that many, while allowing the Soldiers the opportunity to eat in an atmosphere similar to a Ryan's Steak House, Western Sizzlin or a restaurant of that caliber."

VARIOUS VOICES

What can be done to stop or prevent child abuse?



Staff Sgt. Harold W. Dennis, Company C, 3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment — "We need to teach parents to be more effective communicators with their children."

Chris Smith, family member — "Parents need to exercise patience and understand where their child is developmentally to relate to the child on that level."

Lois Walding, family member — "We need education of the parents, the children and the general public."

Petty Officer 3rd Class Yusuf Mustafaa, naval reservist — "Everyone needs to spend more time with children and have a good rapport with other adults and children in the neighborhood."

Spc. Mary Ann King, Detachment D, 24th Personnel Support Battalion, 3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division (Mechanized) — "We need to provide education so that people know how to identify and prevent child abuse."

Sonia Mustafaa, family member — "Society needs to pay more attention to kids. Also, teachers, baby sitters and family members need to understand they have roles in prevention."

CHILD ABUSE PREVENTION MONTH

Let children know you value them

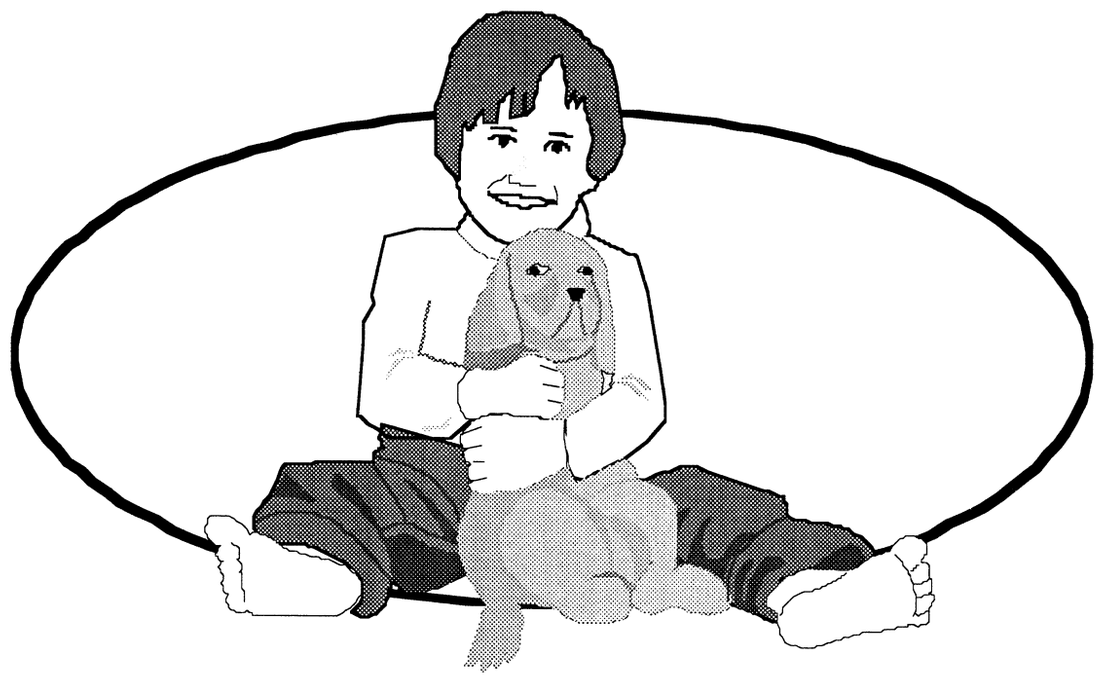
Army Community Services

Your children first begin forming opinions of themselves by the manner in which you talk to them.

commentary

How they feel about themselves affects all aspects of their lives.

Is much of what they hear from you positive or negative?



The following are some tips for successfully raising children:

•Make ordinary, everyday experiences pleasurable ones for your child.

•Set aside special times with each of your children. Allow them to choose an activity they would like to do.

•Catch your child being good. Move physically closer to your children when you talk with them. Hold them.

•For a heart-to-heart talk, go to the child's room or to a quiet place. Encourage your children to express their feelings — both positive and negative ones.

•When you talk with your children or when they talk with you, stop what you are doing and look into their eyes.

•Remember they are their own persons and may do things differently than you.

•Respond to your child with patience and understanding. Scolding or criticizing your child in front of others demonstrates a lack of sensitivity and respect.

•Share your positive feelings with your child often.

•Comments such as "That's no big deal," or, "You shouldn't feel that way," make your children believe that their feelings are not important to you.

•Help your child focus upon other people's strengths, developing tolerance for those with different values and backgrounds.

•Through your daily words and actions, let your children know that they can't be replaced — that each is very special to you and you love and value them.

Some golfers should be flogged

By Clyde Snively
Bayonet columnist

commentary

Singapore is not the only place flogging is permitted. I should know. I flog every time I step onto the Follow Me Flog, er Golf Course.

All I can say is golf is a four-letter word.

I'il admit it. I play Infantry golf. I spend my time in the woods. Wait-a-minute vines snare my clothes and hidden branches poke my eyes.

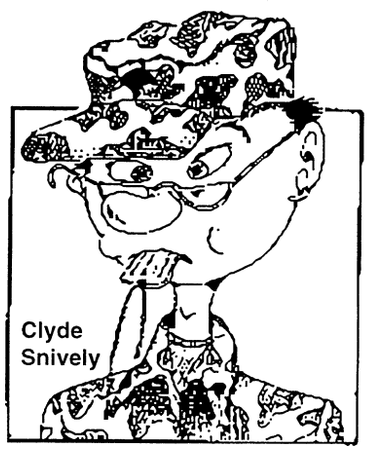
Fairways are what I read about in golf magazines. I hear they consist of grass and are free of rocks, branches and other obstructions.

Unfortunately, just like my milieu, the deep woods, they aren't litter free.

Too many people use golfing as an excuse to go on a drinking binge — "How many beers can I consume over an 18-hole period?"

They abuse the golf carts and the golf course. They toss their styrofoam cups and beer cans wherever they may be when the container reaches empty.

Even paper drinking cups at the water points lie strewn about the trash receptacles. It's hard to imagine why these keen-eyed, sure-handed, highly-coordinated golfers can't manage to ring the basket with their cups. But granted the occasional miss, what prevents them from bending over, picking up their trash and putting it in the basket?



I often marvel at the manners of some of our golfers. I've noted that some of them do not think rules pertain to them. They drive their carts on fairways they aren't supposed to be on. Some even practically park on the greens despite signs that tell them "no carts."

They forget, or don't care, there are other golfers on the course — often other golfers who would like a modicum of silence while they are trying to strike the ball. Yes, voices, especially command voices, carry quite nicely on the golf course.

Some golfers either don't care or don't realize that they should allow faster groups to play through when they begin to lag more than a hole behind the group in front of them.

You know those marks your balls make on the greens, there's a special tool designed to repair them. If you don't own one, a tee will serve the same purpose.

Oh yes, guess what. Just because range balls go onto the fairway, or get hit beyond the fence and lie along the road, doesn't mean they now become common property. They still belong to the golf course and taking them is stealing. That even includes walkers, joggers and bicyclists who stop along First Division Road to help themselves to the balls.

Speaking of stealing, it's also stealing to pay cart fees for one person then have two ride. Don't beat up the marshal or starter who catches you. Instead, hang your head in shame and pay up or leave the course.

Golf is a great activity. It can be enjoyed by the duffer just as much as by the low handicapper, but only as long as we show some considerations to the other golfers and take care of our course.

Chief of staff congratulates post

Congratulations to the Fort Benning community as the Army Chief of Staff Commander-in-Chief winner in this year's very demanding Baldrige-based Army Communities of Excellence awards competition.

Your community's commitment to provide professional services in excellent facilities embodies the essence of the ACOE program — dedicated support to the men and women of America's Army. Your hard work has created an environment in which Soldiers, civilians and their families can attain their highest aspirations for personal and professional growth.

Please convey to every member of the Fort Benning community my enormous pride in your collective accomplishment. It has truly been a team effort, and I thank you for a job well done.

—Gen. Dennis J. Reimer
Chief of Staff, U.S. Army

Commanding General declares May a month for recognition

May is proclaimed as Asian, Pacific-Islander American Heritage Month in recognition of Asian, Pacific-Islander Americans and our nation's ethnic and national diversity. The theme for this year's observance is "Asian, Pacific Americans United — One Vision, One Mission, One Voice."

More than 10 million Americans trace their ancestry to Asia or the Pacific Islands. Their's is a history of proud accomplishments with numerous contributions to the arts, literature, science, agriculture industry, commerce and the armed forces of the United States.

The 442nd Regimental Combat Team and the 100th Infantry Battalion, in particular, contributed significantly to ultimate victory in Europe during World War II through their unmatched gallantry and courage on the battlefield. Today, Asian and Pacific-Islander Americans continue to contribute immensely in the pursuit of America's national goals and in the quest for freedom and opportunity.

May fosters an increased national awareness of the history and contributions of Asian, Pacific-Islander Americans. I encourage everyone to enjoy activities at Fort Benning during Asian, Pacific-Islander American Heritage Month.

NCO found guilty in general court martial

By April N. Olsen
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Sgt. 1st Class Lowell McGee, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 75th Ranger Regiment, was convicted in a general court martial March 18 of attempted murder, attempted conspiracy to commit murder and solicitation to commit murder.

McGee was sentenced to reduction to E- 1, forfeiture of all pay and allowances, confinement for 20 years and a dishonorable discharge.

Fort Benning's Criminal Investigation Division began investigating the case when an individual in the 75th Ranger Regiment reported that he had been approached by McGee with an offer of $7,500 to kill McGee's ex-wife, a civilian living in Columbus.

"Every year in the Army, we have one or two cases where a guy tries to kill his wife to solve marital problems," Maj. Charles Walters, the chief of the Criminal Law Division, said.

"Some people think violence is the solution to family strife," Walters said. "It's going to lead to prosecution in the military."

He said that these cases also occur in other services and that the cases are not prevalent at any one installation or with any specific rank.

Walters said typically, the couple have been divorced for some time and one spouse is holding a grudge. Sometimes, a new relationship is in the picture, he said.

Evidence revealed in the McGee trial pointed out that not only was there a new girlfriend, but McGee was also interested in receiving life insurance money.

"The evidence showed that the motive for the killing was receipt of insurance proceeds," Walters said.

Capt. Scott Frost, a trial counsel in the Staff Judge Advocate's office, was the prosecutor in the two-day trial.

Frost said that when the informant came to CID last October, agents decided to run a sting operation. Agents tried for about a month to set up meetings, but McGee would not meet with the alleged hitman until he had money for a down payment.

"When he got his re-enlistment bonus," Frost said, "he had money to put down a payment."

It wasn't until McGee was ready to provide payment that the informant introduced a CID agent as the alleged hitman to McGee.

In that meeting, McGee gave $1,000 to the CID agent as an up front payment on the hit, Frost said.

McGee was arrested in late November and held in pre-trial confinement until the trial began.

Because CID conducted such extensive surveillance throughout the investigation, the prosecution was able to present audio tapes and pictures at trial, Frost said.

"This is a deterrent," Walters said. "You have to let Soldiers know they're not above the law."

"No matter how bad you fear problems are, seeking violence is not the way to go," Walters said, "Luckily, through the actions of the informant, we saved the life of this woman."

Although the McGee case does not represent the routine type of cases at Fort Benning, it is not unusual to see otherwise exemplary Soldiers get into trouble, Frost said.

"You do see good Soldiers throw their careers away over one stupid thing," Frost said, noting that McGee had "no blemishes on his record" before the November arrest.

According to Walters, McGee had an extensive career in the military until this senseless incident.

"He was a great Soldier," Walters said, "but this one act of stupidity ruined his entire career and life."

TEAM LEADERS

Rangers complete combat training course

75th Ranger Regiment

Thirty Ranger team leaders completed three days of non-stop information jamming, trying to absorb as completely and quickly as possible the Ranger Regiment's policies, standing operating procedures and special techniques for leading rangers into combat.

The three-day course is designed specifically to cover duties and responsibilities of non-commissioned officers, corrective training and the Uniform Code of Military Justice, counseling, training management, maintenance and other skills required at the team-leader level in the ranger battalion.

The course stresses initiative, loyalty, cooperation and dedication. The goal is for participants to complete the course with a higher level of tactical and technical knowledge and exceptional personal and professional skills.

The Ranger Team Leader Course was designed by Command Sgt. Maj. Ralph Beam last year as a way of ensuring the junior NCOs within the battalion were operating within the guidelines of the regimental commander. Beam decided the ranger NCOs should take the initiative and design a course that would fill in the leadership gaps many young NCOs have.

Beam designed the curriculum, with the help of the battalion first sergeants, to address ranger standards of readiness, individual leadership traits, as well as any skills seen as deficient across the board.

Thirty rangers from the Team Leaders Course train with weapons during the three-day course.

The team leaders take a final exam, and if they pass, participate in a class A graduation to receive a certificate of training. Their next step is to return to their team, some to the Primary Leadership Development Course, enroute where many graduates appear on the Commandant's List, to carry on the tradition of rangers leading the way.

Successful graduates of the course include:

Three SOA students receive recognition

By Judith O'Toole
School of the Americas

Three graduates from the School of the Americas have been selected by the international military journal, "Military Review; Hispano-American," for publication into a recent issue.

The students are graduates of SOA's Command and General Staff Officers' Course. As part of the 47-week course, students of the CGSOC were required to write an article about a specific aspect of military leadership for publication, said Dr. Russell Ramsey, CGSOC instructor.

Ramsey said he and a group of SOA instructors picked, in their view, the top five articles from the 51 students and then submitted those five to "Military Review" for possible publication.

Of the five submissions, the magazine chose three of the student's work. U.S. Army Maj. Orlando Izquierdo's, Honduran Maj. Concepcion Jimenez, and Argentinian Maj. Pedro Jorge Zucco's articles were published in the November to December 1996 issue of the magazine.

Ramsey said this was very exciting to see three of his students being published in one edition of the magazine.

"There were only nine total articles in that issue, and one-third were from recent SOA graduates," Ramsey said.

After graduating from SOA's CGSOC, Izquierdo earned a Department of the Army staff position; Jimenez returned to Honduras, where he trains parachutists; and Zucco remained at the School of the Americas, where he will continue to serve for two years as a guest instructor for SOA's Department of Joint and Combined Operations.

news from the front

By Scott Rollston
498th Medical Company (Air Ambulance)

During the first full mission posture, the 498th has begun to settle in. In recent days, air crews have flown three missions to transport blood products, one evacuation mission and have had a couple missions aborted during the planning stage. In addition to medical requirements, teams have participated in displays for visiting senators and congressmen while personnel participated in support for the pope's visit to Sarajevo.

Spring has sprung and the temperature is creeping up towards the mid-60s. The only weather complaint seems to be the constant wind. Morale is high and since things remain generally quiet, many Soldiers of the 498th are taking advantage of several satellite college programs available.

Though the unit is split into three locations, the school opportunities are available at each area. Different levels of morale, welfare and recreation are enjoyed at each location. The outlying forward support teams will most likely return bulked up from all the gym time.

The Area Support Team and the remainder of the company located in Tuzula recently enjoyed an evening of Def Comedy Jam, a pool tournament, ping pong and card games. Maj. Tracy Wyatt, 498th company commander, said they enjoy access to a small Post Exchange and a cappuccino stand as well.

Communications remain the most stubborn difficulty. A new communications company is moving in and sometimes the phones ring where they are supposed to while on other days they ring at some new place. It seems as though the Internet has been the most effective means of passing information. A few of the family and friends at home are enjoying successful electronic mail transmissions almost daily. The Family Support Group met this week to exchange information and stories from their Soldiers abroad. The group is planning new gatherings and outings for the children and a yellow ribbon campaign for display on the Soldiers' homes.

Wyatt said all are healthy and safe in Bosnia and here at home. The mission continues to go as planned, Wyatt said.

Ranger takes top honors

75th Ranger Regiment

A Fort Benning Soldier accomplished quite a bit at a course he attended.

Sgt. Francis J. Scarcello, the assistant manager for the 3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment, Dining Facility, recently graduated from the U.S. Army Food Specialist Basic Noncommissioned Officer Course at Fort Lee, Va., with every award presented to his class and as the only student to make the Commandant's List.

Scarcello was awarded the National Defense Preparedness Award for academic and physical fitness excellence.

"My experience in the Ranger Regiment has given me the skills to perform above my peers both in my field and in the field," Scarcello said.

Scarcello was also awarded a Letter of Commendation from the Reserve officer processes Soldiers for deployment

By Jack Pagano
326th Replacement Detachment

Thousands of Soldiers and hundreds of units have processed through Harmony Church since 1995, and it all begins with an Army Reserve lieutenant colonel called to support Operation Joint Guard and the mobilization staff at the Emergency Operations Center.

Inside Fort Benning's Infantry Hall Emergency Operations Center, Lt. Col. John New answers phone call after phone call.

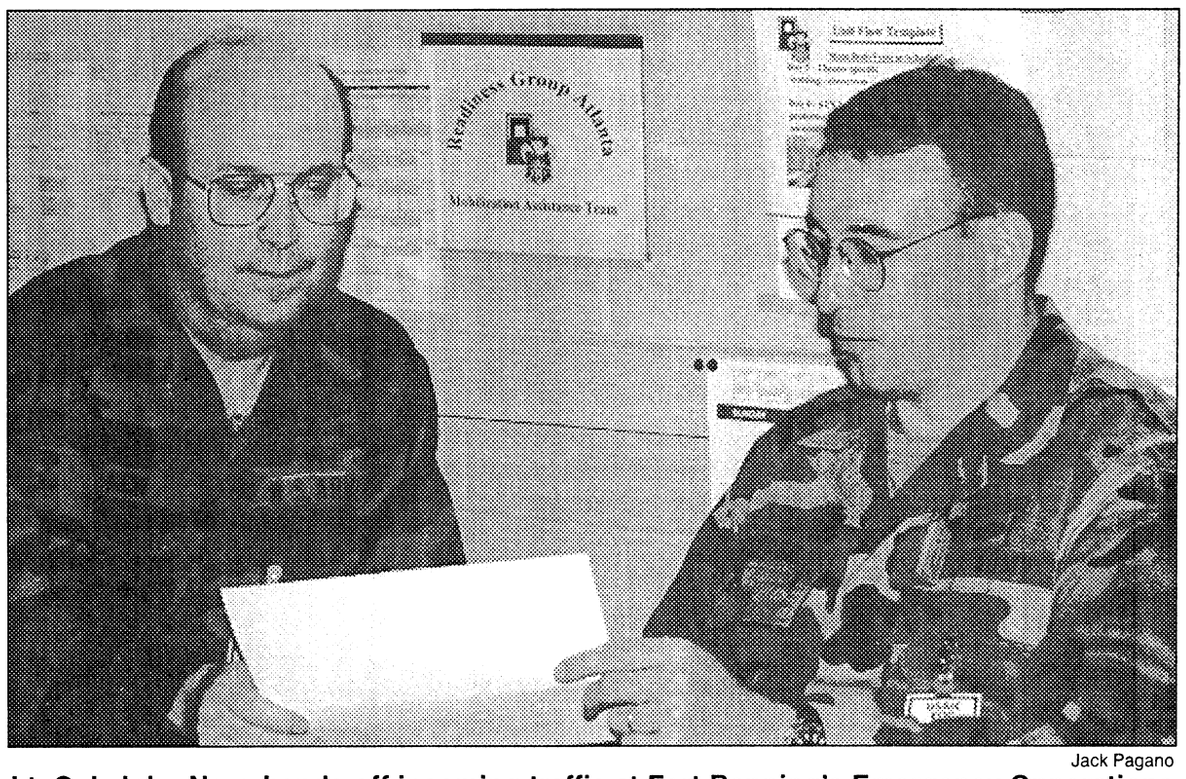
"We work some days 12 to 16 hours — coordinating and processing individual Soldiers and units heading to Bosnia, Germany and Hungary," New said as he juggled phone calls, messages and incoming traffic.

"The EOC is a vibrant, active and, most important of all, a caring shop that is challenged everyday."

New knows all about being challenged. Thirty years ago in Vietnam as a draftee, New was wounded in combat. He received a Bronze Star and Purple Heart for his commitment in the jungle. His voice is strained and low key as if he doesn't want to talk about his two tours in Vietnam, his service with the 173 Airborne Brigade, or his nagging Vietnam back and leg injuries that still bother him.

Modest about his accomplishments as an Infantryman in Vietnam, New changes the subject and talks about how the EOC in a maze of chaos gets the job done.

"War is chaos and the American Army practices chaos on a daily basis," he said.. "The EOC at Benning reacts to chaos in a positive way by trying to make mobilized reserve Soldiers and deploying active duty Soldiers lives easier by filtering out that chaos."



New points out that every minute he and the unsung hero of the EOC, Earl Brown, wage a battle against chaos.

"Mobilization chief Earl Brown brings compassion and concern to the EOC daily."

New said Brown is the driving force in mobilizing Soldiers at Fort Benning.

"With dozens of actions occurring simultaneously, the EOC is not a place for the timid," New said. When New arrived last January for his six-month tour, he had no idea that the EOC would present such an enormous challenge.

"I found out in a hurry the EOC is a very stressful place full of daily crises, but it's extremely challenging and rewarding. What we do in the Emergency Center will directly impact the Soldier who heads downrange."

Jack Pagano

Lt. Col. John New hands off incoming traffic at Fort Benning's Emergency Opperations Center to Maj. Rick Gordan of Readiness Group Atlanta.

Rewards sometimes go unnoticed but, New said with a sparkle in his eyes, the EOC's Theater Specific Training for deploying Soldiers is a big success. Implemented two months ago, Soldiers are now validated at Fort Benning.

"Right here at Fort Benning, Soldiers receive valuable hands-on training in mine awareness, first aid and force protection skills that will save lives. That is an achievement everyone is proud of," New said.

New plans to advise Earl Brown until the summer when his tour of active duty is up. Then he'll head back to his civilian job as a special agent for the Office of Investigations, U.S. Customs Service, in Mobile, Ala.

His trip to the Gulf shore may be delayed since he's been nominated to attend the National Defense University in Washington, D.C. No matter where he ends up, he said he's learned a great deal at Fort Benning and that he is proud to serve his country and contribute.

Organization's ex-POWs distribute daisies

By Elizabeth LaMonica
Special to The Bayonet©

Fifty-five years ago, the wives of two men captured by the Japanese in the Fall of Bataan began the first support organization for prisoners of war.

Today that organization lives on as the American Ex-Prisoners of War Organization. Its motto, "We exist to help those who cannot help themselves," is the inspiration behind the organization's efforts to help American POWs, veterans and their families.

To kick off their annual fund raising drive, ex-POWs presented a daisy to Commanding General Maj. Gen. Carl F. Ernst in his office April 9. That date, the anniversary of the Fall of Bataan, has been designated as POW Recognition Day by the U.S. Congress.

Members of the Valley Chapter also appeared at several Fort Benning locations and distributed daisies to the public while collecting donations.

Current treasurer of the chapter, retired Lt. Col. Rex Ellis, said the drive went well.

"We collected about $3,100 those two days," Ellis said, "and we only had 10 volunteers."

Ellis, a former POW himself, served his country for 24 years, starting as an Army pilot and graduating to the Air Force when it was formed.

Ellis was shot down over Berlin in 1944 and spent more than a year in a German POW camp. Despite that experience, he continued his service, flying in the Berlin Airlift and in the Korean War.

At 77, he is committed to the organization's goal to establish a POW museum at the Andersonville National Historic Site.

Andersonville, known for its Civil War POW camp, will soon be the site of the National POW Memorial Museum.

"The museum will exhibit POW life from the Revolutionary War to the present," Ellis said. "It's scheduled for completion in July 1998, but I'm betting it'll be done before that."

Although the museum was authorized by Congress, it required the POW organization to raise the initial $2.5 million. Congress also cut short funding that was to go for operations and maintenance of the museum.

Now the AEPOW has a new mission, to raise the money necessary for maintaining the museum.

The Valley Chapter has been the nation's top fund raiser for the museum.

"The people of Fort Benning, have been generous," Ellis said, "and we appreciate their continued support."

The Valley Chapter meets for a noon lunch and a business meeting the second Tuesday of each month at Fort Benning's Officers' Club.

For more information about the organization, including tax-deductible donations and membership information, call Rex Ellis at 324-3097.

IOBC begins training

By Eric Barlow
Infantry Officer Basic Course

It was another cloudless spring day as Company B, 2nd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment, Infantry Officer Basic Course, Class 4-97, conducted a four-mile road march to Pierce Range for an Individual Movement Technique Live-Fire Exercise.

The training was done to test the Soldiers' physical fitness and their abilities to move under direct fire and engage targets successfully. The training was organized into four stages, starting with zeroing multiple integrated laser engagement system equipment, conducting a practice dry fire, completing the lane with blank ammunition and, finally, executing the lane with live rounds.

The concept of live-fire training is that it must incorporate force-on-force training. Each compliments the other with different aspects of combat realism. Conducting force-on-force training with MILES reinforces realistic actions during LFXs, according to range safety officers. Live-fire training teaches Soldiers how to properly move, shoot and communicate on a simulated battlefield.

After Co. B broke in their boots and finished the road march, they ate a hot breakfast at the range. Before going on the range, the men had to ensure their MILES was properly zeroed. Once everyone was ready, they were briefed by range cadre.

A LFX is not the same as "going to the rifle range." During this exercise, multiple groups move simultaneously down range with live rounds. The number one concern during this, as in all training, is safety, range safety officers said.

To the booming sound of artillery simulators, two camouflaged faces low crawled, high crawled and executed three second buddy rushes through smoke, over ditches and under barbed wire.

The key to success was speed, proper individual movement techniques, using the terrain to locate adequate protective firing positions and strong communication, range safety officers said.

quartermaster general for achieving a score of 290 points on his Army Physical Fitness Test.

"When you stay within the standards of the regiment and live by the Ranger Creed, something like physical fitness is just a basic part of maintaining a high state of readiness," he said.

As a result of his performance in receiving these awards in addition to making the Commandant's List, the commandant presented Scarcello a special coin from the Basic Noncommissioned Officer School, Scarcello said.

"All I wanted to do was provide my peers and my subordinates with a good mentor. Everybody has to be willing to shoulder more than his or her share of the task, whatever it might be," he said.

Scarcello hails from Des Moines, Iowa, where he entered the service through the Army Reserves in April 1989. He came to active duty in July 1992 as a food service specialist and intends to continue his career in the Special Operations Community.

He is married to Michelle Scarcello and has a son, Ranger Joe Scarcello.

AGRD Infantry Soldiers brush up gunnery skills

AG Replacement Detachment

The Soldiers of the Adjutant General Replacement Detachment got a chance to try their hands at mounted land navigation in the M-2 Bradley fighting vehicle as well as brush up on their gunnery skills during sergeants' time April 10 thanks to the Fort Benning Battle Simulation Center.

The computers at the Battle Simulation Center provide Soldiers with the opportunity to conduct realistic training in a simulated environment.

The large-scale Simulation Networking is an advanced research project sponsored by the Defense Advanced Research Projects Agency and the U.S. Army. Its goal is to create a force-on-force combat world where large teams fight in networked simulators.

The SIMNET Project is still in development, but it currently provides a simulated environment that takes into account all manners of terrain and topography to include different stream depths that may alter a desired direction of movement. The combat simulators contain all the functions and controls found in the M-2 and M-3 Bradley fighting vehicles that are needed to fight.

The Soldiers of the AGRD became acquainted with the different functions and controls during the first portion of their training; mounted land navigation. Using the grid azimuth button on the commander's Integrated Site Unit, the Soldiers were able to determine their grid location while also searching for targets and terrain features using the eight-channel computer image generator. The commander, the gunner and the driver each have a different array of vision blocks which allow them to search, move in formation and identify targets.

After familiarizing themselves with the various systems of the SIMNET M-2 and M-3 simulator, the Soldiers of AGRD moved on to the gunnery course exercises. Here they had the chance to engage enemy targets and maneuver their M-2 Bradleys on the battlefield.

The AGRD commander commented on the training.

"Many of the Soldiers of AGRD admitted the challenge of managing the various functions and systems during their SIMNET experience," said 1st Lt. Bart D. Stewart, AGRD commander, "but a good time and good training was had by all."

Equal opportunity complaint process

How to make a complaint

Make informal complaint or report inappropriate behavior without initiating a full investigation. This may be most appropriate for minor infractions where victim simply wants behavior stopped.

If you are the victim

Call the equal opportunity office hotline to clarify whether an incident or behavior qualifies as sexual harassment or discrimination.

Hotline number 545-3206

File a formal complaint (DA Form 7279-1-R) with any of the following people or agencies. Complaints must be filed within 60 days of incident — those filed after may be pursued at commander's discretion.

Chain of command	EO Advisor	IG	Housing referral	JAG	Military Police	Chaplain	Medical Agency

Complaints, except those that have been filed with the Inspector General, must be acted upon in three calendar days. Complaints filed with an agency against a member of the chain of command will be referred to the next higher commander in the chain of command.

The commander or investigation officer appointed by the commander has 14 calendar days to investigate the allegations and meet with the victim to discuss the outcome and results. A 30-day extension may be granted from the next higher commander if circumstances require it. Further extensions can be approved only by the first general officer in the chain of command.

The complainant has seven calendar days to appeal to the next higher commander if he or she is dissatisfied with the investigation results or actions taken. That commander has 14 days to complete the investigation. Final decisions on complaints rests with the general court martial convening authority.

30 days after the final decision on the complaint, an assessment is conducted by the equal opportunity advisor on all equal opportunity complaints (substantiated and unsubstantiated) to determine the effectiveness of any corrective actions taken and to detect and deter any incidents of reprisal, report and recommendation are submitted to commander on a DA form 7279-1-RNLT 45 days following final decision made on complaint.

DORS assists with job finding

Army Career and Alumni Program

"The Defense Outplacement and Referral System is an innovative tool that transitioning Soldiers and their spouses can use to get their names in front of thousands of employers nationwide," Chick Eagle, Job Assistance counselor, said.

DORS is a computerized on-line resume service for private sector employers. By dialing a toll-free number, employers can receive copies of mini-resumes of separating Soldiers and spouses whose skills and training match the employer's needs.

The system also allows Public and Community Service employers to receive the same information. The PACS registry is used by non-profit, public and community service organizations such as schools, hospitals, law enforcement agencies and social service agencies.

According to Eagle, "It is a very simple process and the preparation and transmission of a Soldier's mini-resume is accomplished as a part of Job Assistance Counseling services. Soldiers get individual training and assistance on how to complete the electronically transmitted resume."

The DORS and PACS computer program requires name, address and phone data, job category and location preferences, a summary of job skills and experience and the exact date when available to begin work.

"The system really works," Eagle said. "Employers request resumes from the DoD (Department of Defense) Transition Assistance Office in California and then call or write Soldiers to see if they are interested in working for them. Many transitioning Soldiers have told us they were called by a company they did not know, but the company had received their mini-resume.

"This is a valuable tool for job seekers and we recommend that each transitioning Soldier take advantage of this unique service.

"Job Assistance is provided for any separating Soldier and his or her spouse as an entree on the ACAP menu of services. Try it, you'll like it," Eagle said.

Students get new options when applying for Financial aid

Department of Education

Current and prospective college students have enough to worry about — applying for federal student aid should be as easy as possible.

That's why the U.S. Department of Education introduced FAFSA Express, the Department's electronic financial aid application. Anyone with access to a computer with Windows 3.1 or higher and a modem can use FAFSA Express to apply for federal student aid.

FAFSA Express can be downloaded free of charge in just minutes from the World Wide Web at www.ed.gov/offices/OPE/express.html. Also, many computer labs, libraries, post-secondary schools, job development centers and high schools have FAFSA Express on their own computers for public use.

On a computer screen, FAFSA Express looks similar to the paper Free Application for Federal Student Aid. Introductory screens describe the application process and list what is needed to complete the application.

Then, easy-to-answer questions guide the user through the various sections of the application, collecting all the information needed to determine a student's eligibility for federal student aid. If the student wishes to stop before the entire application is completed, he or she can save it to disk at any time and return to it later.

FAFSA Express also double-checks the user's application to be sure the information is accurate. Fewer than 1 percent of all FAFSA Express applications are rejected. FAFSA Express automatically checks the data entered and flags possible mistakes.

These edits ensure that the most accurate data is given the first time the application is submitted, cutting down on corrections and shortening the time between applying for aid and actually receiving it.

FAFSA Express guards against processing errors, too, because the data is input directly by the applicant, not by a processing contractor key entering what the student has written on the paper form. FAFSA Express eliminates the chance that the student's data will be read incorrectly, or entered incorrectly.

Not only is FAFSA Express easy, it's fast. As soon as a user is finished, the software automatically transmits the data to the federal processor. Schools the user lists on the application will receive results from processed data electronically within 72 hours.

Shortly thereafter, the user will receive a Student Aid Report, summarizing the application data.

Teens from Atlanta's FutureForce program visit Fort Benning's Leaders Reaction Course April 9. The youths were here for a leadership retreat sponsored by Forces Command, Fort McPherson, Ga. Many of the teens who participated are former gang members and teen parents. The organization operates on the idea that all young people, even those exhibiting negative behaviors, can become outstanding leaders if given the proper training and opportunity.

Military police crack down on post's youth curfew regulations

By Lisa M. Hibbert
Bayonet staff writer

Its 10 p.m., do you know where your children are? Well, if you don't, the Fort Benning Military Police may help you find them.

According to U.S. Army Infantry Center Regulation 210-5, "All dependents under the age of 18 years are required to be in their quarters after 10 p.m. each night except when accompanied by a parent of guardian."

According to Sgt. 1st Class Mike Snapp, noncommissioned officer in charge of the Military Police Investigations, assisting parents in maintaining control of their children are the main functions of Fort Benning's policies on curfew and the supervision of children.

"Parents need to know what their children are up to at all times," Snapp, said. "If a child is staying away from the home all night, then the parent has lost control. Having a (post) curfew helps to give control back to the parent."

If unaccompanied children are seen or if there appears to be an absence of a guardian on post after the curfew hours, they will be taken to the MP station.

"If we see a child and we question them, if they are on their way home from a friend's house, we'll let continue on or we'll escort them home," Snapp said. "But if there are a group of kids just hanging out, we will take them to the station and call their parents. The parent will have to come and sign for the child and the incident will be reported on the Military Police blotter.

"We also verify to see that a guardian is legitimate," Snapp said. "If we see a group of kids (under the age of 18) out with someone in their twenties who is claiming to be their guardian, we will call the parents to verify."

In addition to USAIC Reg. 210-5, the military police are also enforcing a USAIC Policy Memorandum 96-4.

According to USAIC Policy Memorandum 96-4, children under the age of 12 will not be left unattended by parents or guardians at any time.

"When community members see children unattended, they have a responsibility to report it," Snapp said. "Sometimes people are afraid to call in a report because they are afraid of retaliation but the callers identification remains anonymous."

Although Soldiers and their family members are briefed on what the post policies are pertaining to their dependents upon moving into quarters, Snapp said that he wanted to remind parents of the policy.

"There is this misconception out there that the military police are the bad guys and we're out to get into peoples business," Snapp said. "But we're a reporting agency, meaning our job is to report information to the commanders, via the military police blotter, and it is up to them to enforce the law."

Fort Benning teens examine higher learning during a tour of Columbus State

By Lisa M. Hibbert
Bayonet staff writer

When some people think about spring break, they picture beaches, sunshine far from the halls of academia. Not so for Fort Benning teens because more than 45 youths spent a day of their spring break touring Columbus State University April 10.

The group, comprised of Fort Benning's Teen Youth Council members and 10th-, 11th- and 12th-grade students affiliated with Fort Benning, was sponsored by Youth Services.

Upon arrival on the campus, the students were escorted to the school's library by the school's tour guide. There the students received information on what types of services the library provides. From there, the students toured academic buildings and several members of the school's faculty talked to the students about the differences in being a college student versus a high school student.

Justine Boone, manager of the Indianhead Youth Center, coordinated the trip, along with Cynthia Walker, the staff assistant at CSU at Fort Benning.

"Sometimes kids don't realize what resources they have at home," Boone said. "It can be cheeper to go to school here at home and CSU has a lot of good resources. It is a reputable university. I know that we're a recreation center, but we have to point the kids toward education.

"We try to teach the kids life skills and that education is the key," Boone said. "The kids and I are always talking about school and how important it is to go to college."

"I thought the tour was a good experience because it taught me what I need to know to go to college," said Shameka Woods, daughter of Shelia and Staff Sgt Lamont Woods and an 11th- grade student at Spencer High School.

Thaddeus Paulk, 12th-grader at Spencer and son of Carolyn and Staff Sgt. Guss Paulk, said he wanted to go on the tour to see what CSU was like.

"I plan to attend college in the fall and Columbus State is one of my choices, so I wanted to tour the campus," Paulk said.

This is the second time the post has offered this to Fort Benning teens and plans are to continue taking the students to visit colleges, Boone said.

The students also had the opportunity to tour the Coca-Cola Space and Science Center where the students took a close up look at the comet Hale-Bopp.

The day concluded with a cook-out lunch for the teens at Indianhead Center.

Directorate of Public Works

One of our major environmental concerns is the pollution of our nation's water, both above ground and underground.

We at Fort Benning have been very concerned with and have taken many steps to ensure we are not the cause of any contamination of our water resources, especially our drinking water. We do our best to comply with both federal and state environmental laws and take great pride in applying many common sense policies to prevent even the accidental discharge of a pollutants into our water.

One area in which each of us can make a difference is in the washing of our vehicles, both military and privately owned.

All of our operational motor pools have been designed to meet all environmental requirements, so it is important that we practice good management and apply sound judgment when washing tactical and commercial vehicles. A properly-working vehicle washing facility consists of the following:

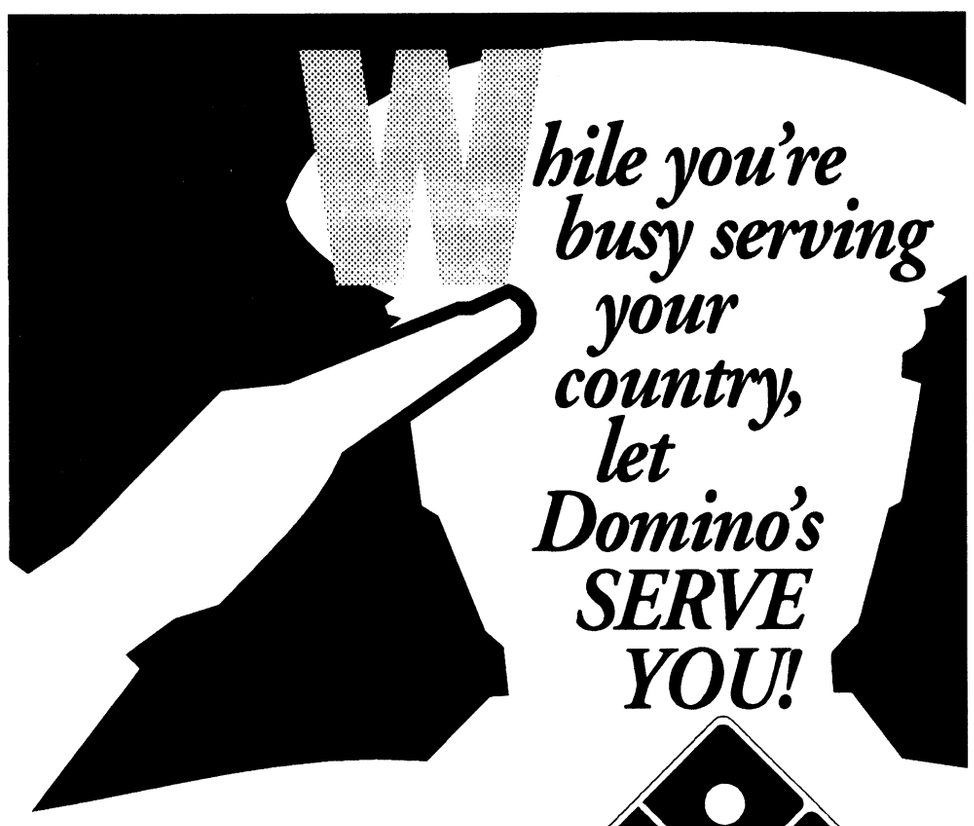
•a wash pad large enough to hold the vehicle(s) being washed;

•a drainage system that flows into a grit chamber where mud and dirt is collected; and

•an oil and water separator where engine fluids are trapped that is connected to the sanitary sewer where the washwater ends up.

This water is processed through our sewage plant before it is released into the environment. The washing of vehicles, especially engine compartments, at any other type of facility will allow the contaminated washwater to drain into our stormwater system which returns it directly back into our environment.

To help meet our environmental goals, we are implementing and will begin enforcing a policy to eliminate the needless discharge of contaminated water into our environment.



One of the worst things we can do is use one of the many commercial products available to clean engines. These normally are applied to an engine and then hosed off, and it is then wastewater that carries off the contaminants. Unless done at an environmentally safe vehicle wash facility, this wastewater will end up in someone's drinking water.

Whenever we change the oil or clean our vehicles, boats or lawn mower engines, we need to do it in a safe method. The safest way is to do it at one of the auto craft shops. Another way is to collect the used oil and turn it in at one of the drop off points, such as the Auto Craft Shop and Recycling Facility, Building 4000.

As hard as this is to believe, we still have incidents reported of persons dumping used engine fluids on the ground or into the stone sewer. These are actions that hurt all of us and that carry over into our children's futures.

Although the Directorate of Community Activities commercial car waste facilities on post are in compliance for washing POVs and other civilian-type vehicles, the washing of tactical vehicles at these facilities is prohibited. The reason is that the girt chambers at both facilities are designed to handle only normal highway-use dirt. They are not capable of handling the large amount of mud normally collected on tactical vehicles during field training.

volunteer of the week

Name: Josephine Bowman
Hometown: Huntington Station, N.Y.

Volunteer job title: Family Support Group leader, 1st Battalion, 10th Field Artillery, 3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division (Mechanized)

Volunteer organizations: 1st Battalion, 10th Field Artillery, Family Support Group; vice-mayor of East Main Post; Dexter Elementary School Parent Teacher Organization secretary; room mother and classroom volunteer; Youth Services baseball and soccer team mother; Confraternity of Catholic Doctrine (Catholic Sunday School); Red Cross and Officers' Wives' Club

Why do you volunteer?
I enjoy working with people and sharing the experiences I have had over the past 14 years since my husband has been in the Army.

What do you like most about volunteering?
I especially like volunteering in my children's schools and being a team mom because I am spending time with my children and also taking part in their school day and sports activities.

What are your special interests and hobbies?
Running, cooking and shopping — the most important thing is spending time with my husband, Michael, and our three children, Philip, Nicholas and Jessica.

What others have to say :
"As the Battalion Family Support Group leader, Josephine has structured, planned and coordinated all activities that have made our Battalion Family Support Group an efficient volunteer group. Her hard work allows the chain of concern to provide family members with the information critical for mission success and to enjoy the benefits provided by the tricommunity. Josephine's volunteer work at the schools provides the critical link between parents, their children and teachers, ensuring our children receive the best possible education."

—Lt. Col. Thomas G. Torrance
Commander,
1st Battalion, 10th Field Artillery,
3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division (Mechanized)

ask the judge

By Rick Parker
Office of the Staff Judge Advocate

Q: I understand I have the right to decide whether or not I want to be put on life support if I am terminally ill. I believe that this is called a living will. Is this correct? How can I get one?

A: Everybody has the right to control their medical treatment. As long as you are alert and able to communicate, you have the right to tell your doctor what you want or don't want and your doctor must abide by your desires.

However, if you ever get into a condition where you can't communicate your desires and give directions concerning your medical treatment, then the doctor must do whatever he or she can to keep you alive. Many people find this objectionable.

They feel that if they have irreversible conditions, like a permanent coma or a vegetative state ("brain-dead"), they would simply rather be allowed to die than to live on in such a state. It is in cases like this that a living will comes into play.

A living will is an example of what we call an "advance medical directive." It is a set of written instructions setting out what you want in the way of medical treatment under certain circumstances, assuming that you have gotten to the point where you can no longer communicate your desires.

Living wills almost always deal with instructions concerning treatment where the patient is terminally ill, in a permanent coma, or in a brain-dead state and where there is no hope of recovery. Almost every state has provision for a living will, and they can and do differ in their scope.

Another type of advance medical directive is the Durable Power of Attorney for Health Care. This is a special power of attorney in which you can give another person the authority to make medical decisions for you, including decisions about when and under what circumstances to either withdraw or withhold life sustaining procedures.

Typically, such powers of attorney offer more flexibility than living wills and are preferred by most physicians because of that flexibility. Needless to say, you ought to be able to trust the person you name would make the kinds of treatment decision you would make if you were able.

Issues surrounding death and dying are uncomfortable for many people to talk about. These are important issues and ignoring them can cause confusion and uncertainty near time of death. It is important that your wishes are understood to remove this difficult burden from your family.

You may have heard of advance directive living wills but never had one or discussed them. Now Martin Army Community Hospital and the Office of the Staff of the Judge Advocate General offer exciting solutions.

The Legal Assistance Division and the Martin Army Community Hospital Department of Family Practice are jointly sponsoring a free two-hour evening seminar with information on Living Wills and Advance Medical Directives.

In this course, you will learn about living wills from a physician and an attorney. Legal and medical issues will be discussed.

At the conclusion, a team of attorneys will be available to assist those who wish to prepare advance directives. You are encouraged to discuss these issues with your family before the course.

The next seminar will be May 7 at 7 p.m. in the Connelly Conference Room of the Family Practice Department of MACH. If you wish to attend, call 544-3065 to register. You may also want to contact the Legal Assistance Division at 545-3281 if you are interested in obtaining more information on this subject.

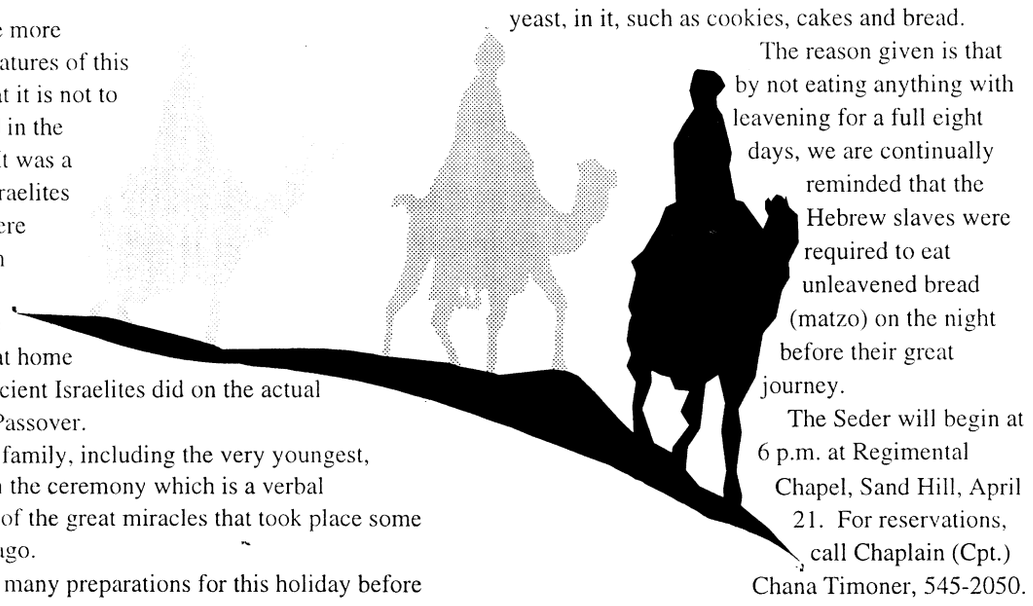
Passover

Holy period celebrates salvation from Egypt

By Chana Timoner
The Infantry Center Chapel

Passover, the great feast of freedom, will be celebrated April 21. This is the time for all Jews to gather in family groups and recount the story of our great salvation by God from the horrors of Egyptian slavery.



reflections

One of the more interesting features of this holiday is that it is not to be celebrated in the synagogue. It was a time when Israelites of all ages were released from bondage. We celebrate this holiday at home just as the ancient Israelites did on the actual night of the Passover.

All of the family, including the very youngest, participate in the ceremony which is a verbal reenactment of the great miracles that took place some 4,500 years ago.

There are many preparations for this holiday before the Seder, or ritual meal, begins. All traces of any foods that are not allowed on Passover are to be cleaned out of the home. An inspection is made by the family, including the children, on the afternoon before the Seder, the Passover meal. Usually some crumbs of food will be left in an obvious place for the children to find and clean up, using a feather.

Then these crumbs are burned as a sign that there is no inappropriate food left in the home. The book of Exodus, which tells the story of the great slavery and miracles, also details the foods which may not be eaten. These foods include anything which has leavening, yeast, in it, such as cookies, cakes and bread.

The reason given is that by not eating anything with leavening for a full eight days, we are continually reminded that the Hebrew slaves were required to eat unleavened bread (matzo) on the night before their great journey.

The Seder will begin at 6 p.m. at Regimental Chapel, Sand Hill, April 21. For reservations, call Chaplain (Cpt.) Chana Timoner, 545-2050.

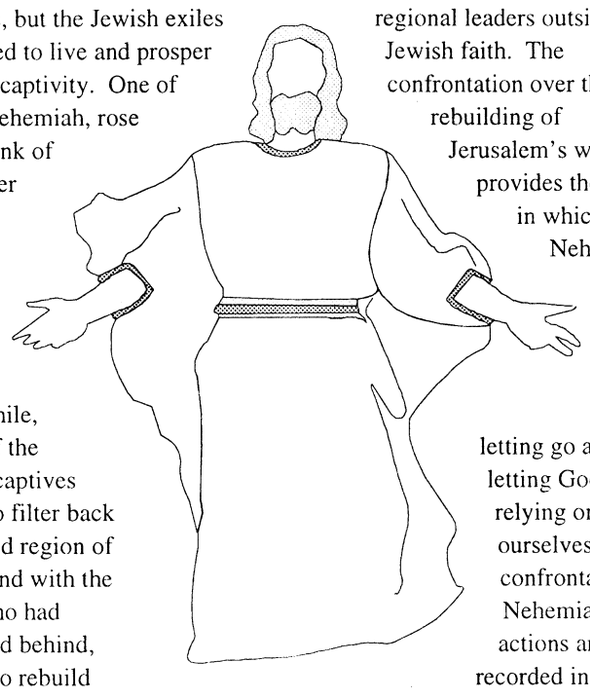
Believers need to let God take authority of their lives

By Chip Huey
2nd Battalion, 58th Infantry Regiment

reflections

We've all seen the bumper stickers, "Let go and let God." The message is to stop trying to do things your way and let God do things his way through you. This is a passive approach to living out Christianity.



On the other hand, we've all heard the saying, "The Lord helps those who help themselves." The message is to take the initiative in life and God will help you along. This is a very active approach to living out Christianity.

See the tension here? Which is it? Do you sit back, trust God and wait for him to move in your life? Or do you take the bull by the horns, live your life and expect God to help you along?

Most of us experience this tension in our lives. Do you maintain a laid-back approach to your work and trust God to bring about your promotion? On the contrary, do you rely upon your own efforts, work like crazy and trust God to help out here and there in order to be promoted? In living the Christian life, do you rely on God or own your own efforts?

The Bible contains the story of a man whose day-to-day living provides an example of the answer to this dilemma. Nehemiah was one of the top servants to the king of Persia. His country, Judah, the southern portion of the old kingdom of David and Solomon, had been conquered years earlier by the Babylonian Empire. The cream of society in Judah was carried into captivity in Babylonia.

Years later, the Babylonian Empire was taken over by the Persians, but the Jewish exiles continued to live and prosper there in captivity. One of them, Nehemiah, rose to the rank of cupbearer to the king.

Meanwhile, many of the Jewish captives began to filter back to the old region of Israel, and with the Jews who had remained behind, started to rebuild their country and its capital.

Nehemiah returned to Jerusalem to lead the effort to rebuild the walls of the city. Nehemiah and his people faced severe opposition from regional leaders outside the Jewish faith. The confrontation over the rebuilding of Jerusalem's walls provides the setting in which Nehemiah shows how to balance letting go and letting God versus relying on ourselves. The confrontation and Nehemiah's actions are recorded in the book of Nehemiah in the Bible.

Upon hearing of an imminent attack, Nehemiah and his people first sought God in prayer. They then acted by placing guards on the partly-constructed walls day and night (Verse 9). Nehemiah placed his guards at the low points of the unfinished wall. He also placed them with their families so they would be more apt to stay alert and to fight more stubbornly. Nehemiah devised a plan for his people to rally on a bugle call that was to be blown whenever and wherever the walls might be breached.

Throughout the construction and defuse of the walls, Nehemiah encouraged his people to trust God to fight for them. There lies the answer to our dilemma. Nehemiah and his people first sought God in prayer regarding their problem. They then took the necessary measures to deal with their situation. Throughout the taking of those measures, their faith was in God to fight and provide for them.

This is the model for believers. Living as a Christian is grounded first in faith in God — faith in Christ for salvation and faith in him that he is in control of all.

Faith in God is exhibited by seeking him in prayer first as you love life and face dilemmas. This doesn't mean a formal on-the knees session necessarily. Rather, prayer can be an ongoing communion with God.

You then act. Take the measures that are appropriate to your situation without violating Biblical standards. All the while, your confidence must be resting in God, even as you act. Depending on God as you live is the answer to the "let go and let God" versus "the Lord helps those who help themselves" pickle.

Salvation, mercy, grace available to all

reflections

Tom Papania was the number three man in the Gambino crime family. He grew up in a home that was harsh and cold.

His father never did things with him like most other fathers. He never paid any attention to Papania except to beat him when he did something wrong.

At the age of 10, Papania decided that if his father wouldn't show him any love, then he would not show his father any tears. So he learned to take the beatings without ever crying, but only laughing.

At the age of 15, he joined the Mafia because he hated his father and wanted to hurt him. There he learned how to make money without working. He quickly moved up the ranks because of his intense loyalty and ruthlessness in protecting the Gambinos' interests. He was known as the most violent and cold-hearted man in the family. He had no weaknesses.

At the age of 39, he was making millions of dollars a year, was powerful, was able to do anything he wanted. He was feared by all who knew him and was afraid of nothing.

A business associate invited Papania to church but he went to only show God that he didn't need him. In fact, he was so enraged at the sermon and the minister that he went back to kill the minister.

Yet God showed his love to Papania and transformed his life. God used the same minister that Papania went to kill to bring him to salvation.

Within a few months, he quit the Gambino family, gave away everything he owned, started earning money with a real job and began telling others about his new life in Christ.

No one can deny the power of God to transform a life.

Nathan is a Soldier like many others. Although a hard-charging, dedicated young Soldier on duty, who served himself, living life for his own pleasure, apart from the love of God.

He picked up some negative habits since coming into the Army. He used foul language, drank too much and slept with his girlfriend.

Yet God showed his love to Nathan and transformed his life. Now he has dedicated himself to serving God. He is going to church, is excited about how God has cleaned up his language and his drinking and he's even stopped sleeping with his girlfriend.

No one can deny the power of God to transform a life.

Mike and Linda had a marriage on the rocks. They hadn't married to be miserable, but that's where they were — arguing, not talking, drifting apart, living separate lives. They hadn't planned it that way, but it happened.

They were tired of hanging on and ready to end their marriage and seek happiness somewhere else, with someone else.

Yet God showed his love to them and transformed their lives. Now they are learning to love each other again. They are seeking to rebuild their lives and their relationship on the foundations of God's word. They are committed to each other and to their home.

No one can deny the power of God to transform a life.

These are true stories and real people. As I met these people and heard their stories, the one thought that captured me was the undeniable power of God to transform a life.

You may be able to resist it, but no one can deny it. The best news is it's available to all who will open themselves to it.

Hospital unveils remodeled Labor and Delivery Ward

By Jalesia M. Griffin
Martin Army Community Hospital

Striving to make delivery more comfortable and convenient, Martin Army Community Hospital unveiled its remodeled Labor and Delivery Ward April 8.

During the official opening ceremony, Linda Ernst, wife of Commanding General Maj. Gen. Carl F. Ernst, and Col. Everett W. Newcomb III, Martin Army Community Hospital commander, cut the ribbon symbolizing the opening of the hospital's newly renovated wards.

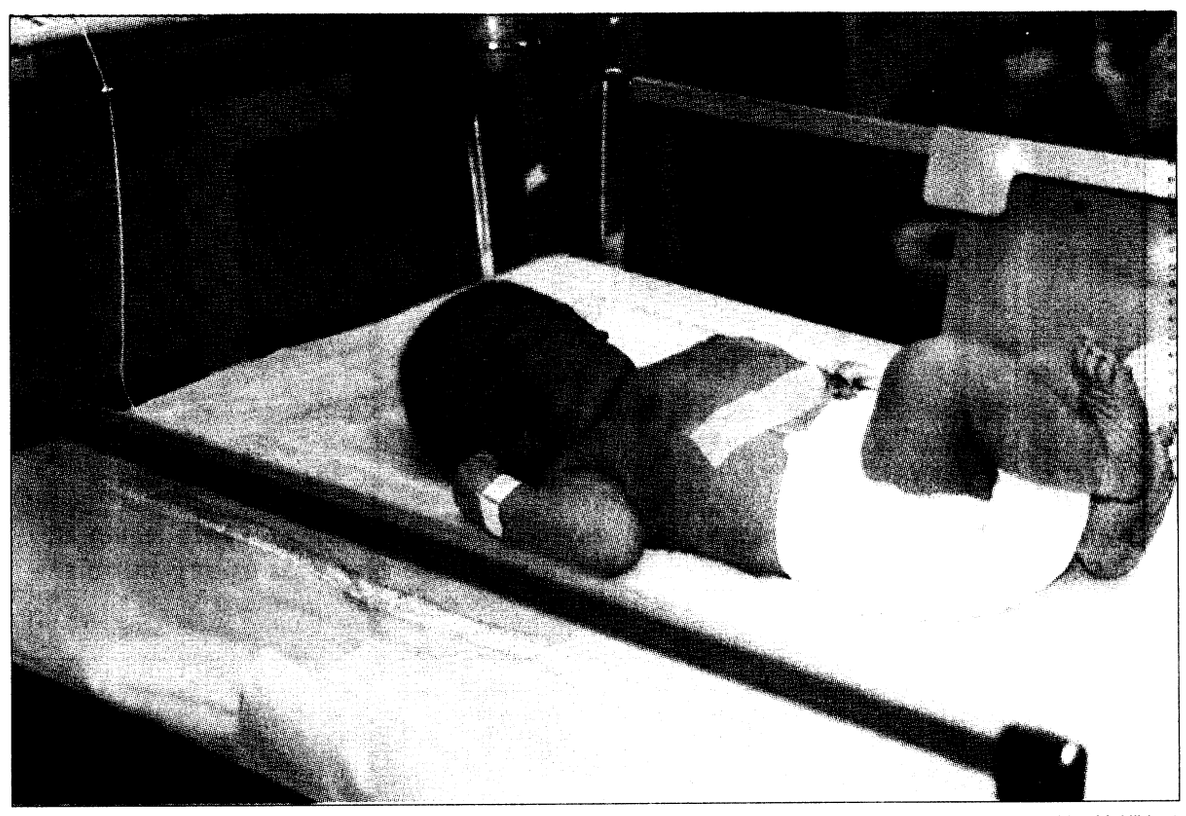
These include the Labor and Delivery Suite, Neonatal Nursery and Mother-Baby Unit (Perinatal units). Expectant mothers no longer need to move from the labor room to the delivery room at MACH. After years of traditional pregnancy care, MACH now operates modernized Perinatal units. Mothers labor and deliver in the same room, and are reunited with their babies shortly after delivery.

In October, MACH began a Life Safety Upgrade construction project throughout the hospital. MACH officials decided to renovate the Perinatal units in addition to the Life Safety Upgrade construction the units received.

The Perinatal units temporarily relocated to the second and fifth floors of the hospital during the construction in order to remain fully functional. The move proved challenging for the nursing staff, but occurred without incidence or a decline in quality care for the patients, according to the chief of Perinatal and Psych Nursing at MACH.

"Since our Labor and Delivery and Newborn Nursery moved to the second floor and the Postpartum Ward (now the Mother-Baby Unit) moved to the fifth floor, there was an obvious challenge in transporting babies," Lt. Col. Nicole Nater, chief of Perinatal and Psych Nursing, said. "But we worked through it with minimal inconvenience to the patient."

Communication also had to increase between the two floors. The nursing staff implemented a cross-training program to ease the conversion of the Postpartum Ward into a Mother-Baby Unit.



Instead of the babies staying in the nursery for the entire hospital stay, after a short transition time, the babies join the mothers. Prior to the renovation, mothers did not have this option. The rooms are now private to semi-private.

March 6, the contractors completed the renovations and April 1, the Perinatal units opened for business.

Tactical rifle series kicks off

By John W. Peeler
Special to the Bayonet©

More than 30 shooters from across the tricommunity area descended on English Range Sunday to test their skills against each other and nature in the first in a series of nine tactical rifle matches.

Rifles, from the standard hunting rifle to sniper, bolt action and military style semi-automatic, were fired in the event.

Firers shot a total of 30 rounds from a prone-supported position, attempting to place 10 shots in the bulls' eye at 100, 200 and 300 yards.

Chris Pappas said he came out to the match first for the comradarie and second for the competition.

Not all shooters found their competitors to be the adversary. The elements played a contributing factor in the tournament.

With a brisk wind blowing, placing 10 shots in the bulls' eye proved to be more of a challenge than your everyday shooting event with shooters having to adjust their fire after every shot.

Pappas said he felt the competition was more him against himself and the weather than against the other competitors.

In the competition, shooters have to adjust their fire after every shot without the aid of a spotter accounting for the elements such as wind.

Eight more matches at Fort Benning and Eufaula, Ala., are scheduled in the summer tactical rifle series in which two Remmington bolt action rifles will ultimately be awarded in an invitational match in September.

For more information on the tactical rifle series, call Jim Graham at 689-3371.

MARKSMANSHIP UNIT

Shooters win Gold at World Cup match

By Paula J. Randall Pagán
USAMU Public Affairs Office

The U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit walked away with two medals from the World Cup in Nicosia, Cyprus, conducted April 10 to Sunday.

James Todd Graves, a two-time Olympian, won the Gold Medal in Skeet, edging out 1996 Olympic Gold and Bronze medalists Ennio Falco and Andrea Benelli, both of Italy. After the two-day match, Graves, Falco and Benelli were tied with scores of 146 out of a possible 150. The Gold, Silver and Bronze medals were decided by a sudden-death shoot off, which Graves won by 1 point; Falco took the Silver and Benelli got the Bronze.

The USA Team, made up of Graves, Shawn C. Dulohery, a U.S. National Shooting Team member since 1991, and Joseph D. Buffa, the 1996 national skeet champion, won the team Silver Medal; Italy captured the Gold Medal and Cyprus received the Bronze.

"I think it's outstanding that Todd won the Gold Medal; he's capable of winning any match he shoots," USAMU Shotgun Team coach Burl Branham said. "It's great that he won over the Italians who are the best in the world — they're the ones to beat."

Because of his win, Graves will now get an invitation to compete in the World Cup Skeet Final in the fall, which, according to Branham, is for the 12 best skeet shooters in the world.

Besides Graves, Dulohery and Buffa, U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit shotgun shooters who made the 1997 U.S. National World Cup Team were: Bret E. Erickson, a two-time Olympian; David R. Alcoriza, a member of the 1996 U.S. Olympic Shooting Team; Joetta R. Novinski, the 1996 National Women's Trap and Double Trap Champion; and Matthew T. DePuydt, a 1995 Junior Olympic and World Championship Shotgun Team member.

The world cups are the first opportunity where the marksmen can shoot a qualifying score to compete in the 2000 Olympics. The shotgunners will also shoot for the U.S. Team at the World Cup in Lonato, Italy, through Sunday.

Raised in Laurel, Miss., Graves graduated from West Jones High School in 1982. He enlisted in the Army in 1984 and was assigned to the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit after completing basic and infantry training at Fort Benning.

U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit

U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit shooter James Graves, a two-time Olympian, shows the winning form that earned him a Gold Medal in the World Cup Competition at Nicosia, Cyprus.

In 1990, he was assigned as a team leader with the 20th Infantry Regiment in Korea and returned to the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit in 1991.

Graves, who began shooting in 1973, has a long list of shooting accomplishments. In 1996, besides shooting skeet in the Olympics, he also won a Gold Medal in the National Skeet Shooting Association World Championships and Silver medals in Skeet in the North American and Interservice Championships.

In 1995, he won a Gold Medal in Trap and a Silver Medal in Double Trap at the Interservice Championships; he was also the Skeet Champion of the Golden Bear Regionals and the Trap Champion of the Tall Pines Match.

Graves won Bronze medals in Trap at the Cairo World Cup and in Double Trap and Skeet at the U.S. National Championships in 1994. In 1993, he was the Double Trap and Skeet National Champion, won a Gold Medal in Trap at Interservice and Silver medals in Skeet at the U.S. World Cup and in Trap at the Nationals.

He was a member 1992 U.S. Olympic Shooting Team in Trap and Skeet and that year, won Gold medals in Skeet at the Suhl, Germany, World Cup, in Double Trap at the Cairo World Cup and in Trap at Interservice.

In 1991, he won a Silver Medal in Trap and a Bronze Medal in Skeet at the U.S. Championships and was a member of the Pan American Games U.S. Team. Graves won a Gold Medal in Trap and a Silver Medal in Skeet at the U.S. Grand Prix and a Bronze Medal in Skeet in the National Championships in 1989.

Benning bowler competes at Armed Forces Championships

American Forces Press Service

Fort Benning bowler Patricia Nance finished 20th overall in the Armed Forces Women's Bowling Championships recently at McChord Air Force Base, Wash., posting a total pin count of 1,099 and averaging 177.3.

Although the Army took first place in the women's individual competition, Nance and five other Army bowlers were not able to overcome the 3.55 average deficit to the Air Force who finished in first place with a 191.83 average.

Winning the men's and women's armed forces bowling titles at McChord Air Force Base turned out to be a "major" accomplishment though for two officers.

Army Maj. Deb Riefflin and Air Force Maj. Mark Seifert captured individual overall titles at the Armed Services Championships April 7 to 10.

The Air Force captured both men's and women's team honors during the four-day tournament. Army finished second, followed by the Navy and Marine Corps.

Riefflin, assigned at the Pentagon, posted a 221.04 average over four days in claiming the women's combined title. Her 5,305 pins were 365 better than the Navy's Linda Muth of Tampa, Fla.

A trio of Air Force bowlers grabbed the next three positions, with Muriel Howell of Nellis Air Force Base, Nev., taking third. Christine Coy of Ramstein Air Base, Germany, and Catherine Faber of Offutt Air Force Base, Neb., finished fourth and fifth respectively.

Besides the overall title, Riefflin also captured the one-day singles event, defeating Air Force's Darlene McGill of Scott Air Force Base, Ill., by 80 pins. Coy took third.

Riefflin also combined with Army's Elaine Riggs of Columbus, Ohio, to win the women's doubles title. The two combined for 2,522 total pins (210.2 average), defeating Muth and Navy's Sylvia Nagy of Norfolk Naval Base, Va., by 38 pins. Third place went to Air Force's Howell and McGill.

Meanwhile, Seifert successfully defended his 1996 men's title and led a top-three Air Force sweep of the men's overall championship. The Scott officer's 227.33 average was three pins-per-game better than Charlie Hall of Lackland Air Force Base, Texas. Chuck Carroll of Sheppard Air Force Base, Texas, finished third.

Army's Tony Szeluga of Camp Casey, Korea, took fourth, while Marine Corps' Michael Boyd of Camp Lejeune, N.C. — winner of the men's one-day singles title — grabbed fifth overall.

Seifert teamed with Hall to capture the men's doubles crown. The two rolled a combined 2,852 (237.7 average) in defeating Carroll and Mark Zamora (Offutt) by 178 pins. Szeluga and Army's Scott Huther of Fort Leavenworth, Kan., finished third, 212 pins behind the leaders.

Seifert also finished third in the men's one-day tournament, finishing 53 pins behind Boyd and 30 pins behind Carroll.

Coy and Carroll gave Air Force the top spot in mixed doubles competition. Their 12-game 2,603 total was 55 pins better than Marine's Faye Witt of Iwakuni, Japan and Sgt. Fred Riano of Camp Pendleton, Calif. Howell and Hall finished third, 71 pins off the pace.

Both Air Force men's and women's teams captured first place in the one-day team competition April 7. The Air Force men — Hall, Seifert, Carroll, Zamora, Steve Sayward of McChord and Martin Beford of RAF Mildenhall, United Kingdom — knocked down 7,544 pins in claiming first place. That was 201 pins better than second place Army. Marine Corps took third, followed by Navy.

Howell, McGill, Coy, Faber, Bobbi Boutwell of Whiteman Air Force Base, Mo. and Karin Bagley of Malmstrom Air Force Base, Mont., rolled Air Force to a 176-pin victory over Army in the women's single-day team competition. Navy finished third, followed by Marine Corps.

AMU hosts 82nd Airborne Division Association

By Anna O'Leska

USAMU Public Affairs Office

Fort Benning conducted a reunion for members of the 82nd Airborne Division Association from all around the country during a week-long visit to Fort Benning, April 1 through 4.

"We have a history of the airborne right here this week and right now," Marvin A. Hodges of Miami, a former corporal with Company K, 504th Airborne Infantry Regiment, 82nd Airborne Division, said. "This is my first time back since graduation from jump school 50 years ago this week," Hodges said, "and the same 1947 graduating class was the first class to jump 100 percent, all five jumps, out of a C-82."

These kinds of memories were shared among member retirees attending the reunion.

Some 20 members of the South Florida Chapter of the 82nd Airborne Division Association visited the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit April 1.

Their tour of the USAMU began with a brief overview of the history and operations of the unit with a question-and-answer period given by Lt. Col. Richard W. Lake, the unit's operations officer.

Participants toured the Custom Firearms Shop where they observed weapons used in various competitions. Group members estimated the weight and balance of different weapons, checking how they worked and any modifications made on them by the latest technology available to the gunsmiths.

The group traveled to the Easley Firing Range where they were given a hands-on M-16 rifle demonstration by USAMU's service rifle marksmen. Shooters fired the Infantry Trophy Course of fire shooting 3X shots per shooter in 50 seconds with the modified M-16A2 rifle. Then shooters worked with the veteran retirees to let them fire the modified M-16 on the firing line.

The group from South Florida, also known as the "Silver Bennings," is made up of all airborne Infantry veterans, said organizer of the chapter Irv Weinsoff, a former corporal and sniper.

Twins Harold J. of Akron, Ohio and Gerald Kenney of Orlando, Fla., said this was the fourth consecutive reunion of the 82nd Airborne they've attended. The twins fought the Battle of the Bulge in Europe during World War II and at 74 are the oldest members of the South Florida Chapter.

"We like to participate and be here," Gerald Kenney, who still does 50 pushups everyday, said. "Being an airborne Soldier has made me a better Soldier because there is an esprit de corps there. Although we are the oldest members in the chapter, we still have a good relationship with the others."

Other areas on post visited by the South Florida Chapter were the National Infantry Museum, the School of the Americas, various ranges and training units, an airborne demonstration and graduation and a Ranger demonstration.

outdoor outlook

Georgia State Parks offer guided canoe trips — Outdoor enthusiasts can explore Georgia's scenic waterways on guided canoe trips at Hamburg High Falls and Panola Mountain State parks.

Park staff will explain basic canoeing techniques and interpret natural surroundings while leading paddlers on day-long trips.

Participants can see beavers, otters, kingfishers, great blue herons, turtles and other wildlife.

Trips fill quickly, so pre-registration is required. To register, call the park directly.

The cost is $15 per person, which includes canoe, paddles and life preserver. Canoers who bring their own equipment pay $10. A $2 park pass fee is charged per vehicle.

Eighteen of Georgia's state parks rent canoes so visitors can explore lakes and streams on their own.

Prices are $3 to $5 for an hour, $8 to $15 for four hours and $12 to $20 for an entire day. For a free "Guide to Georgia State Parks and Historic Sites" or "1997 Events" brochure, call (404) 656-3530.

To reserve a campsite or fully equipped cottage, call (800) 864-7275.

The parks that will offer canoe trips are:

•Hamburg State Park, Mitchell, Saturday, April 26, 9:30 a.m. to 2 p.m.

This is an easy, 4.5-mile float down the Ogeechee River.

Call (912) 552-2393 to register.

•High Falls State Park, Jackson, second Saturday of each month, enjoy an easy trip down the Towaliga River, May 10, June 14, July 12, Sept. 13 and Oct. 11. Call (912) 993-3053 to register.

•Panola Mountain State Conservation Park, Stockbridge, May 17, 9 a.m. to 2 p.m.

This clean-up trip down the South River combines wildlife observation with litter pickup.

Sept. 27, 9 a.m. to 2 p.m. Explore three miles of the South River which forms the northern boundary of this park.

Nov. 15, 5:30 to 7:30 p.m. Adults may enjoy a sunset float on the park's 3.5-acre lake. Call (770) 389-7801 to register.

State parks post fishing tournaments — The arrival of spring means it is time to get out to your favorite fishing pole and head to Georgia's state parks.

This year, the parks have planned a dozen fishing events where serious anglers can strut their stuff while beginning youngsters learn the basics. The tournaments are a great excuse for families to spend time together in the spring sunshine.

Most state parks have boat ramps and docks, and many rent boats and sell bait. For more information about a fishing tournament, call the host park.

Fishing tournaments are just some of the many events conducted by state parks and historic sites throughout the year.

All events are free and parking is $2.

•The junior fishing rodeo is May 3 at 7:30 a.m. at Noon Black Rock Mountain State Park, Mountain City.

Children 15 and younger can compete on a lake stocked with trout and catfish.

The tournament is free and there is no fishing license required.

For more information, call 746-2141.

•A kids' catfish rodeo takes place May 17 from 10 a.m. to 3 p.m. at Cloudland Canyon State Park, Rising Fawn.

Children 14 and younger can try their luck with a stocked pond. An adult must accompany each angler. The tournament is free.

For more information, call 657-4050.

•A fishing rodeo is May 24 from 8 to 11 a.m. at Reed Bingham State Park, Adel.

Children 14 and younger can compete for prizes. The tournament is free.

For more information, call (912) 896-3551.

•The junior and senior catfish rodeo is May 24 at 9 a.m. at Victoria Bryant State Park, Royston.

Children 16 and younger and adults 62 and older can compete in this fishing and casting contest.

Prizes will be awarded for categories such as largest fish, youngest fisherman and albino catfish catch.

There is no charge for the tournament.

For more information, call 245-6270.

•Children's fishing rodeo takes place June 7 from 9 a.m. to noon at James H. Floyd State Park, Summerville.

The long-awaited reopening of the 16-acre lake finally arrives.

Anglers 14 and younger can compete for prizes. Hotdogs and hamburgers will be served after the rodeo.

Bring your own fishing gear and bait (no minnows). There is no charge for the tournament.

For more information, call 857-0826.

•Children's fishing rodeo is June 7 at 8:30 a.m. until noon at Magnolia Springs State Park, Millen.

Children 15 and younger can try their luck on three stocked lakes while competing for various prizes. Pre-registration required. The tournament is free.

For more information, call (912) 982-1660.

•A youth fishing derby occurs June 7 from 8 to 11 a.m. at Seminole State Park, Donalsonville.

Children 13 and younger can compete for largest fish, most fish and other contests. There is no charge for the tournament.

For more information, call (912) 861-3137.

•The junior and senior fishing rodeo is June 14 with 9 a.m. registration at Moccasin Creek State Park, Clarkesville.

Children 11 or younger and adults 65 or older can compete on a trout-stocked stream.

The tournament is free.

For more information, call 947-3194.

•A fishing rodeo is July 5 from 8 to 11 a.m. at Reed Bingham State Park, Adel.

Cooler days ahead for some

Directorate of Public Works

With the passing of each spring day, we move toward another Georgia summer.

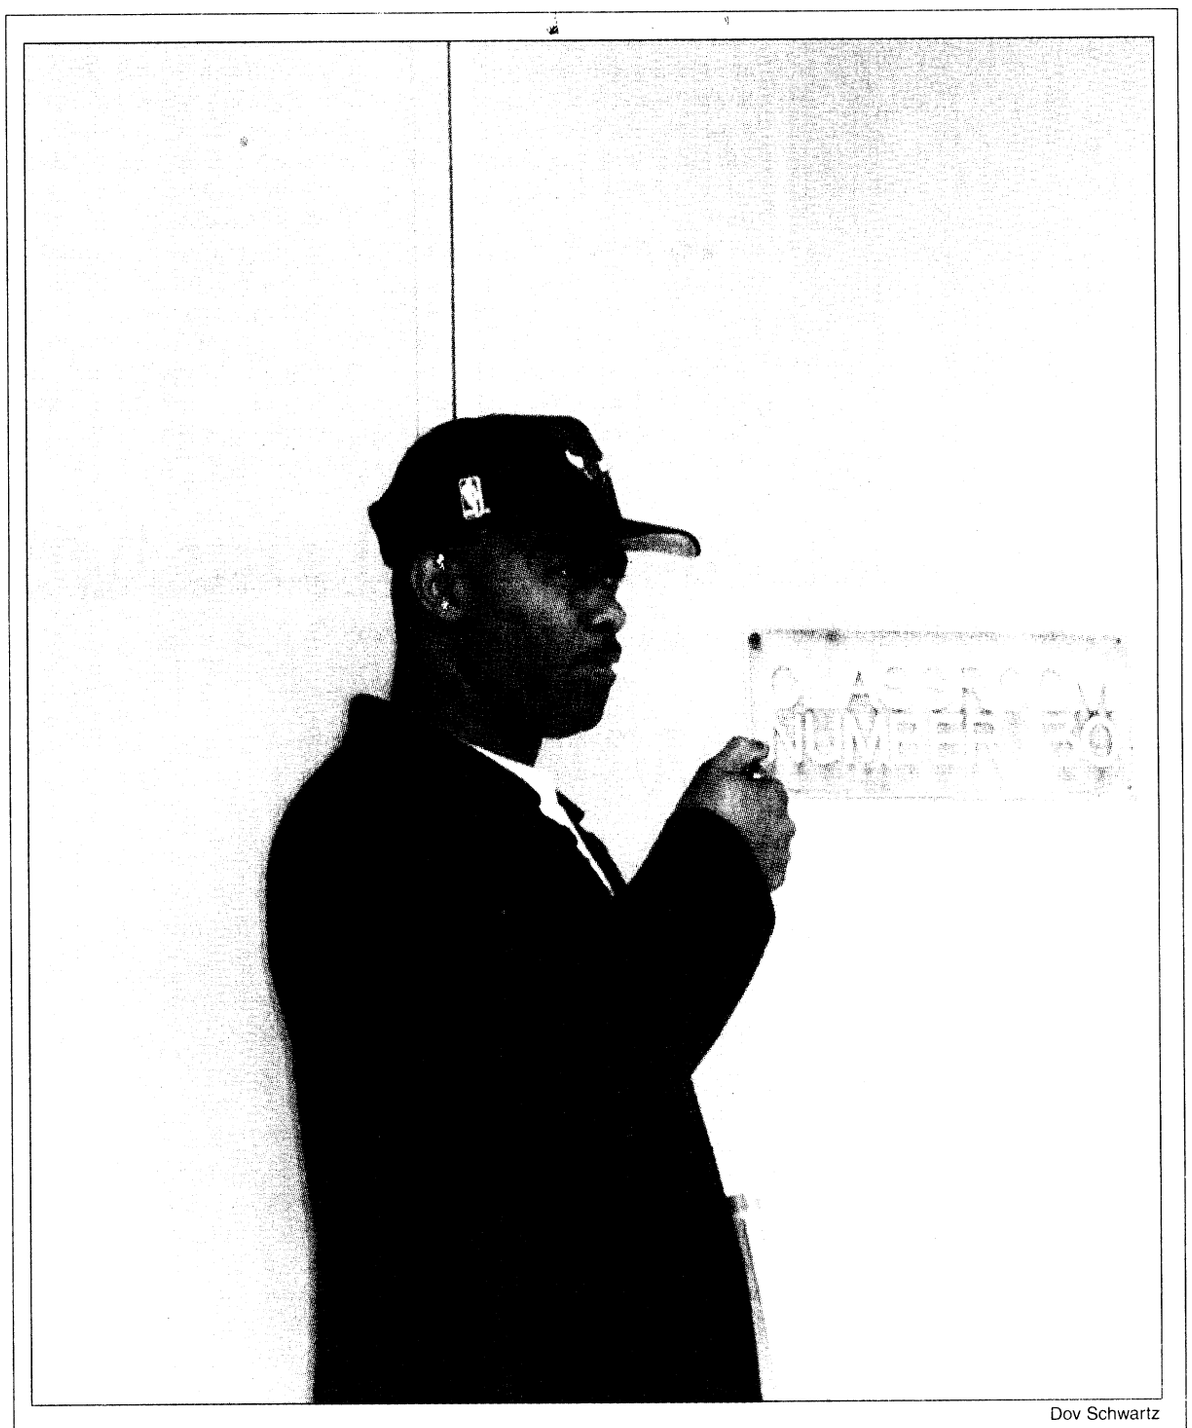
"For those who wait in anticipation of the post policy on summer air conditioning, it is good news for the Best Army Installation in the World," said Mark Fincher, chief, Energy Management Branch, Directorate of Public Works. "Historically, we have begun spending the $2 million it costs us annually for air conditioning in the second or third week in May. This year, air conditioning will be started earlier in three phases."

In the first phase, air conditioning of community facilities and other money-making operations, such as the clubs and post exchanges, will be provided at the discretion of the facility managers. This has already been implemented.

In the second phase, family housing, air conditioning capability also already exists. The radio-controlled switches are now turned on to allow residents the use of their housing air conditioning as needed.

Money for air conditioning and all other family housing utilities comes from its own account. The Family Housing Business Occupancy Program account has sufficient funds to pay the additional $98,000 it is going to cost for beginning air conditioning early. Additionally, the business occupancy program has sufficient funds to buy through the times of extremely high-cost electrical energy this summer.

If your Family Housing air conditioning will not work now, call in a service order to 545-2135 (689-5400 in Davis Hill and Bouton Heights).



For the third phase, the DPW mechanics are now busy shutting down heating systems and preparing the large central air conditioning plants which serve administrative buildings, chapels, barracks and other miscellaneous facilities. This third phase is well under way and will be completed by the time hot weather arrives.

Air conditioning for all areas will be turned on when the outside temperature reaches 84 degrees or higher for three consecutive days. In any event, air conditioning will be turned on for all areas by April 30.

Also, since the installation is providing funds to buy through the high electrical cost times, there are no plans for air conditioning curtailments this summer. This applies to both troop and family housing.

In unoccupied administrative spaces, the DPW will continue turning off air conditioning at night and on weekends. However, there are no plans to curtail air conditioning in administrative spaces and classrooms during duty hours.

"These actions are being taken to provide comfortable living and working conditions for Fort Benning's valuable Soldiers, families and civilians," Fincher said.

Rangers gear up for competition

By Brian R. Voller
Bayonet staff writer

As many as 34 two-man ranger teams from all around the Army are heading to Fort Benning to participate in the 15th annual David E. Grange Jr. Best Ranger Competition scheduled for May 2 through 5.

Col. Dorian Anderson, commander of the Ranger Training Brigade, said the competition is designed to test the physical and mental capabilities of the ranger qualified participants.

As with last year's competition Anderson said the events of the Best Ranger Competition will not be published until the day of the event. He said the only information the RTB put out about the events is that all of them require running, jumping, swimming, marching and shooting.

Anderson said the Best Ranger Competition was originally started to test the skills of ranger instructors in the RTB. In 1984, the competition was expanded to include the Ranger Regiment, the Special Forces and the Light Infantry units. Since then the competition has changed to include any individual who has a ranger tab.

Teams competing in this year's competition are expected to begin arriving on post Wednesday to begin training and to become acclimated to the area.

A special Rangers-in-Action Demonstration is scheduled for May 5 at 9:30 a.m. at Victory Pond, followed by the awards ceremony at 10:30 a.m.

Gen. Henry H. Shelton, the Commanding General for Special Operations Command, based at MacDill Air Force Base in Florida, is the guest speaker.

Weather sirens help community

By Marc G. Turchin
Bayonet editor

Within the past two weeks, Fort Benning has been struck by at least two strong storms, causing vehicular and post-wide agricultural damage.

But to help the post community, Fort Benning has a siren alert system already in place. The Air Force weather flight is responsible for issuing tornado warnings and the post staff duty officer physically sounds the alarm.

Air Force Capt. Curtis M. Winstead, weather flight commander with the 17th Air Support Operations Squadron, C-Flight, said the system helps the post community in case of a tornado.

Winstead said the siren is sounded when a tornado shows up on the unit's Doppler Radar or it is actually sighted.

"We don't use any mile radius," Winstead said. As long as there is a chance a tornado will hit the post, the sirens are sounded. The sirens are sounded in a very definite manner.

The first time the sirens are sounded in a steady five-minute tone. According to Winstead, this tone is a warning the chance of a tornado hitting the post is high. The second set of sirens are three, two-minute steady tones separated by one minute of silence, meaning the post is out of danger.

The sirens were sounded Tuesday evening as a thunderstorm rolled through the post.

Winstead said the unit was tracking a tornado on radar about 15 or 20 miles to the southwest of post.

"It (the tornado) was headed directly for Fort Benning," Winstead said.

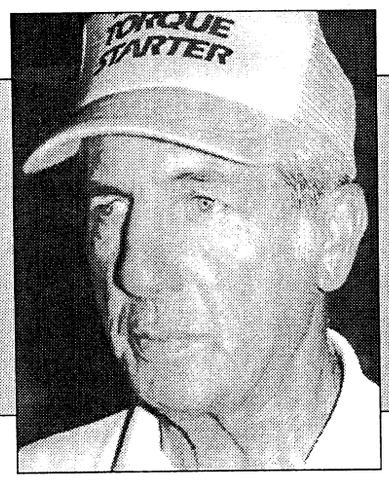
The last time a tornado was seen on post was June 4, 1991. A funnel cloud was reported somewhere on the installation.

Winstead added people need to take the sirens seriously. He said when when the sirens are heard, get or stay inside.

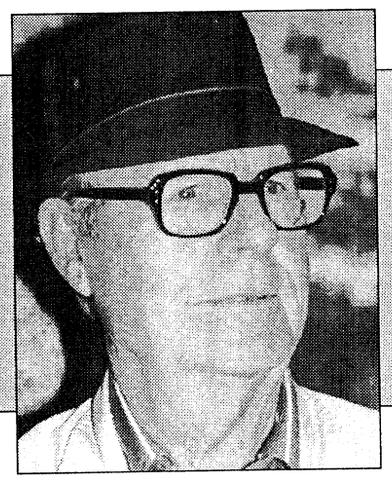
"We don't take sounding the sirens lightly at all," Winstead said.

VARIOUS VOICES

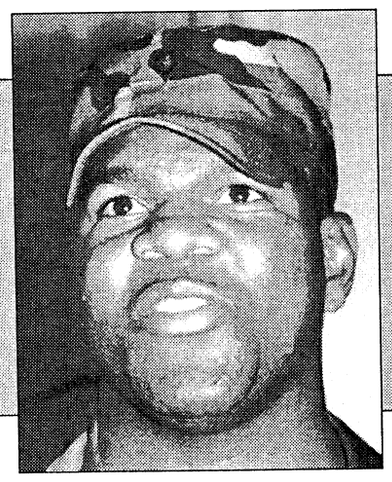
What do you think about specifically-designated outdoor smoking areas?



Staff Sgt. Robert Wiley Jr., Atlanta Recruiting Battalion — "They should have an area protected from the elements but away from non-smokers."



Sylvia Livingston, family member— "It's not right that we should have to go outside in bad weather. There should be an area inside, perhaps with a ventilation fan."



Staff Sgt. Patrick Fowler, Atlanta Recruiting Battalion— "I think they should be far enough away from a building so that no one has to inhale second-hand smoke."

Bob Ferrell, partial carry out attendant — "I think it's a good idea because of the people who do not smoke."

Retired Maj. Jack Sherwood —"If people are going to smoke, they should smoke outside. Keeping them outside prevents health problems for those of us who don't smoke."

Spc. Charles Salem, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment — "All smokers should have a place to smoke where it will not interfere with non-smokers."

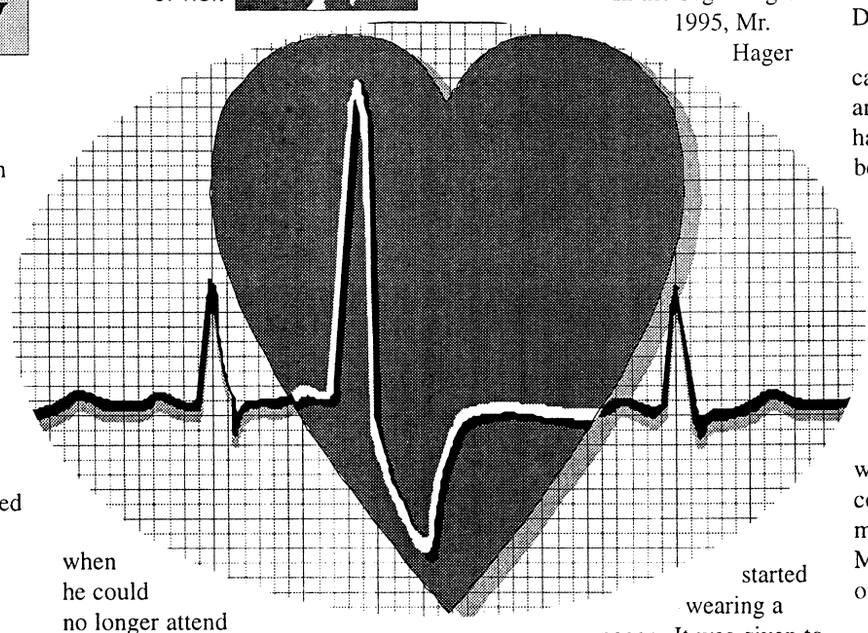
Donating organs helps the entire family, not just the organ recipient



By Lisa M. Hibbert
Bayonet staff writer

I saw a man die because he needed a kidney transplant and it changed my life forever.

commentary

Spc. Lisa M. Hibbert feels organ donation can heal the recipient and help all those who know him or her.

For the four-plus years that I knew Mr. Hager, he struggled with diabetes and high blood pressure. He was a big man who loved a good meal and was not too keen on monitoring his diet the way he should have, although his family was constantly nagging him about it.

When Mr. Hager was hospitalized in 1992 because his sugar level had dropped dangerously low, his family vowed to try harder to help him stick to his diet. His wife and four sons also proclaimed they would take better care of themselves as they were all at risk for this disease.

About a year later, he was back in the hospital and things began to look pretty bad. This 6-foot, 5-inch man with the prosperous pot-belly and the elegantly-trimmed mustache and beard slimmed down drastically but in a sickly manner. Mr. Hager's once-tailored suits no longer molded his body but hung on him.

A one-time teacher, principal and director of community education in Kings Mountain, N.C., Mr. Hager was once very active in his church, community and fraternity. His sickness made it difficult for him to maintain the pace he once kept. It hurt him when he could no longer attend all of the functions he once did.

His youngest son, Darian, took these changes poorly and instead of rushing to Mr. Hager's side, stayed away from him because Darian didn't like to see him that way. I think it was hardest for him because Mr. Hager was still the sharp man he always was — he just didn't look the same.

Mr. Hager began giving himself daily insulin injections but instead of improving, the condition deteriorated and led to a host of troubles — from poor circulation and vision to severe kidney trouble.

In 1994, the news came that Mr. Hager needed to have a kidney transplant. Darian offered his father one of his own kidneys, but Mr. Hager refused because, he said, since he was suffering with diabetes, there was a high probability that Darian might have the same problems when he reached his age.

In the beginning of 1995, Mr. Hager started wearing a pager. It was given to him by the hospital so it could reach him if a kidney was located for him. He wore it everywhere he went.

I remember when he talked to me about his illness. He looked at me over his wire-rimmed glasses and told me about the daily treatments that he had to give himself. I remember thinking at the time that he knew he was dying. We even talked about death and his hopes for his family, particularly his son Darian, after he was gone. He asked me to look after Darian and to make sure he watched his diet so that he might avoid developing diabetes.

The last time I saw Mr. Hager was Labor Day weekend, 1995. I was about one month pregnant. He lectured Darian and me about parenthood. He told me parenting was hard but I was a smart girl so I would be alright. He predicted I was going to have a girl, and he died before I gave birth to my son, Daniel.

In October of 1995, Darian called me. The page Mr. Hager so anxiously awaited never came. He had died at home in his king-size bed with his wife and granddaughter.

After the funeral, I began contemplating if maybe I could have done something.

Although I was not a relative, maybe my kidney would have been a match.

I reflected on my friend Tina's life. She was diagnosed with leukemia when we were in college, but she received a bone marrow transplant and is OK now. Maybe things could have worked out that way for Mr. Hager.

I debated in my mind the survival-of-the-fittest theory versus organ donation — can I let someone die when I know I can help? I decided to become an organ donor but only upon my death. I hope to one day donate while I am living but to be honest, I have not overcome my selfishness yet.

I know many people fear organ donation, but I fear what will happen if I don't donate. I saw how distraught the Hager family was. No, I don't want to change the world and I know I can't help everybody, but as the old gospel song goes, "If I can help somebody as I travel along the way then my living shall not be in vain."

Anatomical gifts help those who need them

By Brian R. Voller
Bayonet staff writer

When I first received my driver's license I was very intrigued by the little legal document on the back of it.

It reads "This is a legal document under the uniform anatomical gift act or similar laws. I herby make anatomical gift, effective upon my death."

At the time, I was only 16 and it took me a little while to figure out exactly what an anatomical gift was. I finally gave up trying to figure it out on my own and I asked someone. They told me an anatomical gift is organ donation and I decided I wanted to get involved.

I went to my parents and I asked them what they thought about it. Unfortunately, they weren't very helpful. They told me some old wives' tale about how the hospitals don't try very hard to save your life if you've filled out one of these documents.

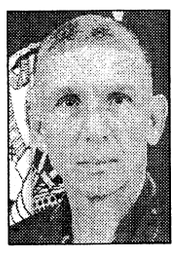
Initially, this made a lot of sense and I decided against organ donation, and that was the opinion I kept for a few years after my initial curiosity. But right around the time I turned 19, a friend of the family became very ill and was in desperate need of a heart transplant.

Spc. Brian R. Voller learned from a friend how valuable organ donation can be.

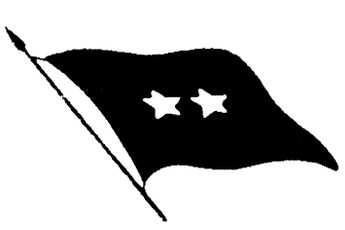
commentary

His condition got so bad he was unable to get out of bed without experiencing massive chest pains and weakness. The doctors said he wouldn't last more than a month without a heart transplant.

Well, he got the transplant and it saved his life. Within the next year he looked better than he ever had and he seemed happier than ever.



Unfortunately, he died recently of complications with his heart. But he managed to live for almost four additional years thanks to the gift of the young boy who donated his heart. Without that heart transplant, he would not have made it to see his next birthday, or the marriage of his son.



It was around the point when he first received his heart transplant that I started reevaluating my position on organ donation.

I started giving blood whenever I could and when I renewed my driver's license, I filled out the back of it and decided I wanted to be an organ donor. My wife has also decided to be a donor. We had a long talk about it and we both feel it is very important to at least try to give someone else a chance if it is our time to go.

I've seen first-hand how big of a difference organ donation can make. If I can give someone else at least a couple of extra years when I can no longer be saved there's no question. Why should two people die?

CG declares Law Day USA

May 1 is Law Day U.S.A., and the United States has been the citadel of individual liberty and a beacon of hope and opportunity for more than 200 years to many millions who have sought our shores.

The foundation of individual freedom and liberty is the body of law that governs us.

The Constitution of the United States and the Bill of Rights are the heart of that body of law, which guarantees us many freedoms — including, among others, freedom of religious belief, freedom to have and hold property inviolate, freedom of assembly, freedom of speech, freedom of press, freedom of petition and due process of the law.

This year marks the 40th annual nation-wide observance of Law Day, and the U.S. Congress and the President, by official proclamation, have set aside May 1 as a special day for recognition of the place of law in American life.

I, as Commanding General of Fort Benning, do hereby designate May 1, as Law Day U.S.A. and call upon all Soldiers, civilian employees, military retirees and family members to commemorate the role of law in our lives.

Post workers graduate from fitness school

By Elizabeth LaMonica
Special to The Bayonet©

Physical fitness has always been a requirement the Army placed on its Soldiers. Now it offers the same opportunity to its civilians.

Follow Me to Fitness 2001 is an Army program designed to promote the physical fitness of installation employees.

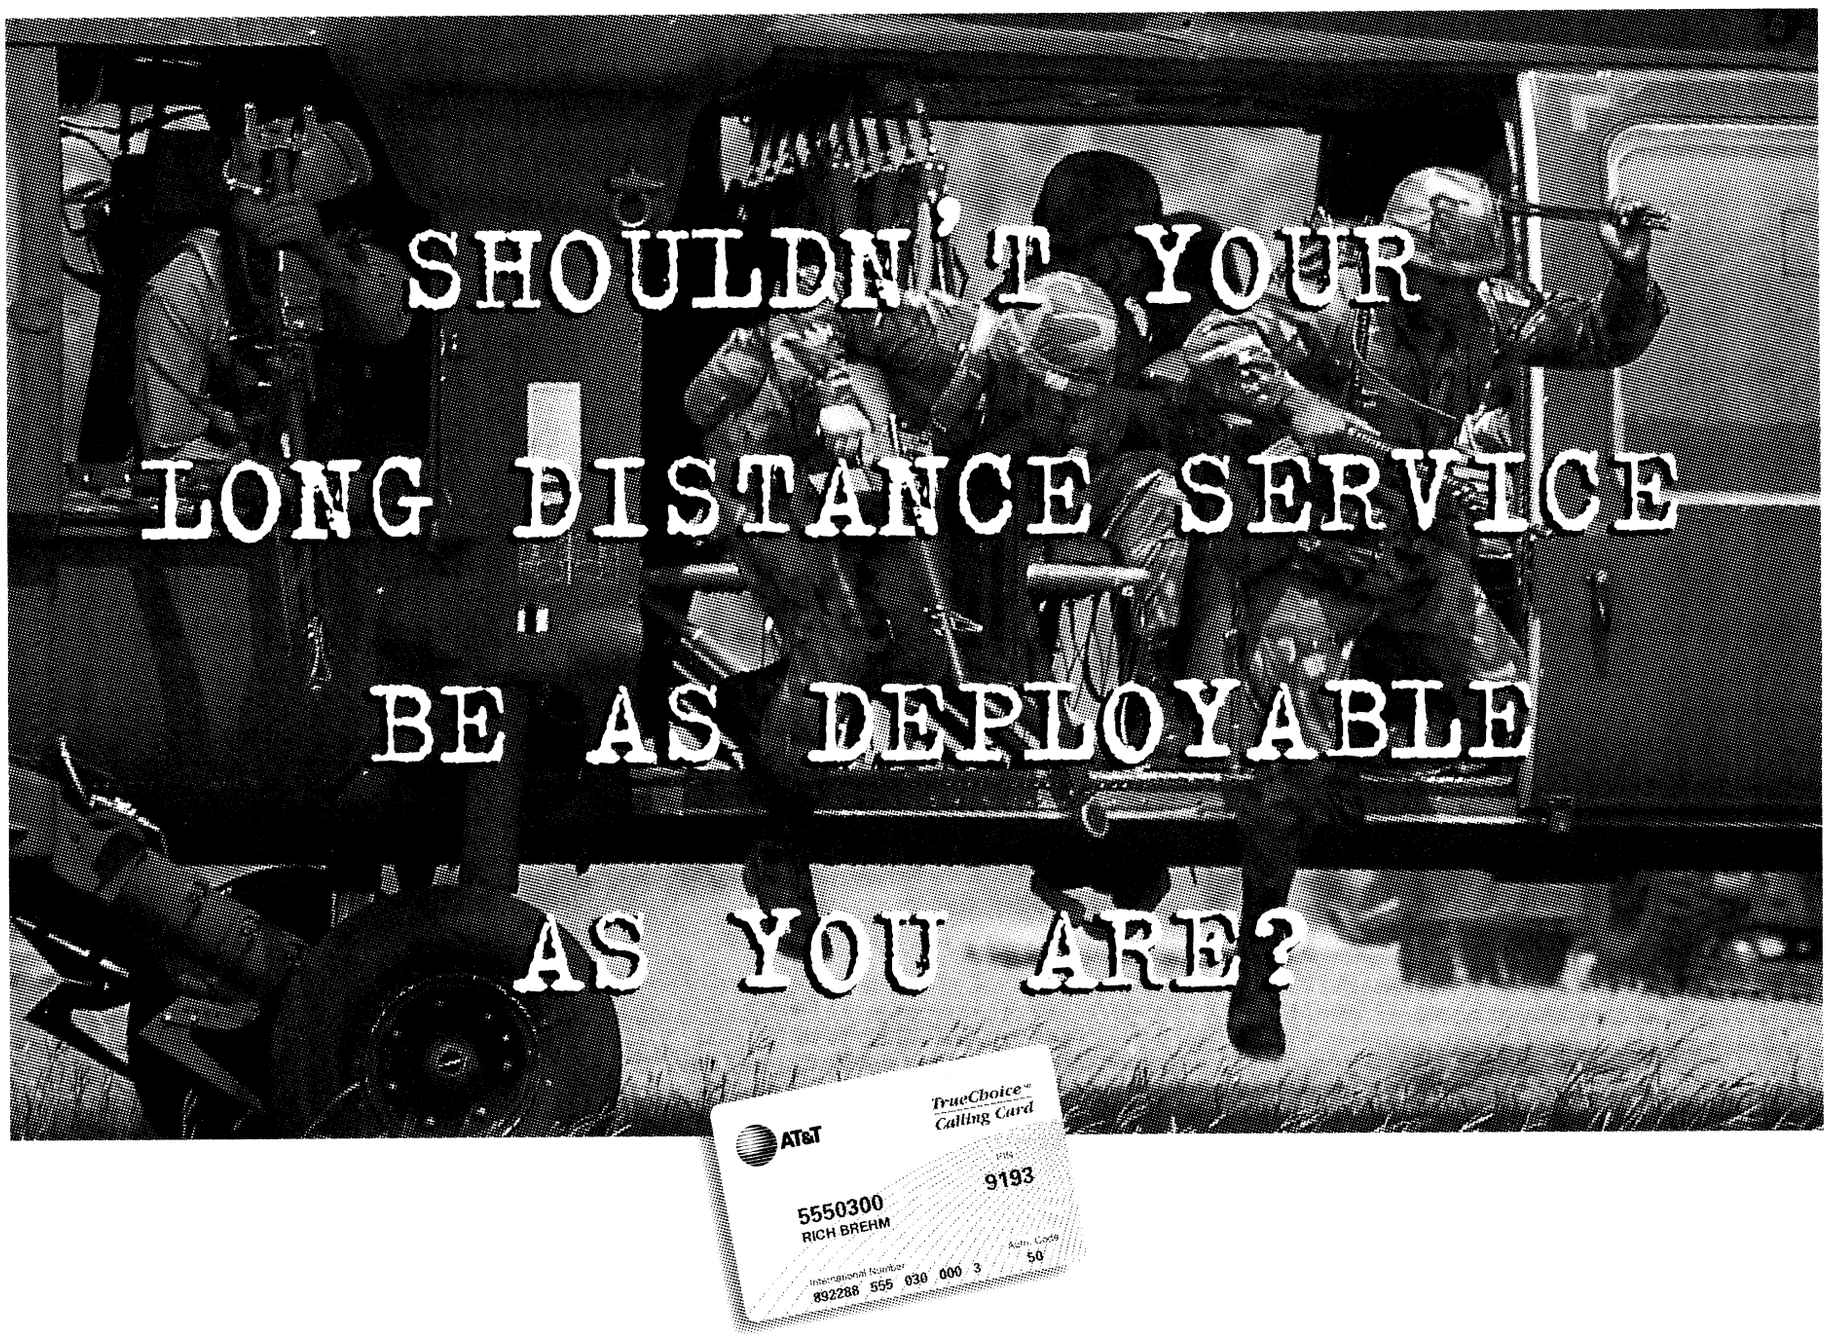
The six month course begins and ends with an assessment of a student's abilities so that progress can be measured.

Participants are allowed to work out during work hours no more than three times a week. During the course, students are required to sign in at any post gym to confirm their participation in the program. For more motivation, students can attend group workouts and health education classes.

Installation employees can either request to be selected to participate in the program or be nominated by their supervisors. Only 50 slots are available for each class.

For more information, contact the Physical Fitness School at 545-6380.

Group one completed the course Feb. 18. Graduates are Marga Carrero, Kathlene Davis, Linda Davis, Susan Gause, Wendy Jones, Olive Jordon, Michael Lane, Brenda Lawrence, Angelina Ramos, Dwight Reynolds, Margret Rice, Judy Selle, Joyce Silver, Brenda Webb, Mamie Wooden and Lydia Woods.



Group two completed the course March 18. Graduates are Steven Alexander, Lula Archie, Deborah Donald, Laverne Grooms, Tammy Holdinghausen, Sidney Hubbard, Dorthy Johnson, Karen Jones, Dana Larkins, Patricia Lewis, Nathaniel Long, Rebecca Morris, Katherine Price, John Przenkop, Larry Sommers, Lillian Stuckey, Henry Thorton, Willie Walker, Charles White and Mayola Woodson.

Group three completed the course April 22. Graduates are Forrestene Buford, Virginia Dickerson, Gloria Dozier, Samuel French, John Grantham, Alma Harrison, Judy Johnson, Pamela King, Gil Mead, Steve Miller, Sallie Nelson, Verdis Parks, Sandra Robensen, Lyenda Sasser, Yvonne Simpler and Peggy Thorton.

Students prepare for careers

By Elizabeth LaMonica
Special to The Bayonet©

Training tomorrow's Army leaders is the goal of Spencer High School's Junior Reserve Officer Training Corps.

JROTC is an elective class available to students from ninth through 12th grades.

One hundred eighteen students chose to be a part of the program this year. Of those cadets, about 60% are from a military background, which approximately corresponds with the overall breakdown of Spencer students.

Another interesting fact about this year's program is that the female cadets outnumber the male cadets.

"Students join for various reasons. Some join because they want to, others because their parents want them to," said Ret. 1st Sgt. Odell Hardimon, a nine-year JROTC teacher at Spencer. "Mostly they enjoy belonging to a team. This is an area they can belong to."

The students earn ranks and rise in rank by grades, drills and participation in class. Not only are the students observed in JROTC class, but also in their other classes throughout the day. Both teachers and other students observe the cadets. The results of those observations can affect their grades.

"Their conduct is a big part of it," Hardimon said. "A cadet can't just be nice in JROTC and be a devil in the rest of his classes."

Many lessons are taught in the JROTC classroom including leadership, first aid, communication skills, American military history, map reading and drug abuse prevention. The cadets also must meet physical requirements and participate in a Cadet Challenge which test their abilities.

"They learn self-discipline and how to become better citizens," Hardimon said. "We stress the concepts of no drugs and no cigarettes. I quit smoking after 20 years and Lt. Col. Thomas Fluker doesn't smoke either. We lead by example."

Another benefit of the program is that the cadets have more pride and self-esteem than other students, Hardimon said.

JROTC includes several different subprograms to keep the cadets involved. Students can be a part of the drill team, the rifle team, color guard and the Raiders.

The Raiders consist of 16 volunteers, including four female students. They meet outside of class and conduct physical training as a group. These cadets are also allowed to wear Battle Dress Uniforms on Wednesdays.

All JROTC cadets wear class A uniforms on Thursday. Uniform day provides the students an opportunity to learn the requirements of the dress code and conduct inspections based on those requirements. The students actually conduct the inspections while the teachers oversee the process.

"You can see a difference between civilian clothes days and uniform day," Hardimon said. "On those days they're not as loud. The discipline is there when they wear uniform."

The uniforms are provided to the cadets at no cost. Currently only the men wear garrison caps, but as soon as the supply center gets enough for the female cadets, they will begin wearing them also.

The rank system is the same as it is in the Army with a lieutenant colonel as the current high ranking officer of Spencer. The seven Muscogee County High School JROTC programs come under the leadership of one student who holds the rank of colonel and is the brigade commander.

Future events of Spencer JROTC include a Leadership Challenge and a leadership development course. The Raiders will participate in the challenge which will be held on Fort Benning May 10. The leadership development course will be held in Fort Stewart, Ga. June 23 through 28. Fifteen second and third year students from each JROTC program will be selected to go to this summer camp for advanced leadership training.

And how do the cadets feel about the program? Just ask Capt. Leroy Mars, a fourth year cadet and a Raider.

"I'm planning to go to Columbus State and get involved in Senior ROTC," Mars said. "Then I'd like to go to Virginia Military Institute. JROTC has definitely helped me in my career path.

"Our ROTC is up and rising. We get a chance to expand, get new learning experiences and delegate authority. We also go out on the drill field and show new cadets things. It's like an after school sport, yet it's a class also."

Qualified personnel to receive awards

USAIC Public Affairs Office

The Joint Staff has announced approval of the Humanitarian Service Medal for those personnel who provided humanitarian assistance during Operation Combined Joint Task Force Marathon Pacific from June 13 to Oct. 17, 1995, and Joint Task Force Assured Response, Liberia, from April 8 to Aug. 12, 1996.

In accordance with the latest Department of Defense change in HSM processing, determination of individual eligibility is delegated to commanders colonel or above at the operational level. A name list or similar record is encouraged as a means to determine individual award eligibility of the approved HSM.

For more information, call Cora Upshaw at 545-5640 or 545-5648, Adjutant General Records Section, Building 2620, Soldiers' Plaza.

Also, the Southern Command Network and the U.S. Army Headquarters Commandant, participating units sharing in the award of the Joint Meritorious Unit Award with Headquarters U.S. Southern Command during the period Feb. 1, 1994, to Oct. 15, 1995, have been approved.

Only those members of the Armed Forces of the United States who were present at the time and directly participated in the service or achievement for 30 days or more, or for the period cited if less than 30 days, are authorized to wear the JMUA ribbon.

Personnel must be assigned or attached by official orders to the joint unit or task force receiving the JMUA, either as individuals or as members of an assigned or attached unit. Local commanders may waive, on an individual basis, the 30-day minimum time requirement for individuals (Reserve personnel on active duty, Temporary Duty or Temporary Active Duty), who, in the purview of the commander contributed directly to the achievement cited, and were assigned on official orders to the awarded unit during the approved time frames.

For more information, call AG Personnel Operations and Services Division, Records Section, at 545-3341 or 545-4702.

news from the front

By Moses A. McIntosh Jr.
498th Medical Company (Air Ambulance)

Completing its third weekend of mission support, the 498th Medical Company (Air Ambulance) is fully settled in. Thankfully for all Soldiers in Bosnia, things have been quiet and there has not been a great need for air-medical evacuation missions.

But for the medical evacuation air crews, it means the days are long and very slow. This lull in time is giving the troops time to complete some important training and get ahead on critical aircraft and vehicle maintenance.

The weather never takes a day off and can't seem to make up its mind; what seemed to be the start of spring has turned into an unexpected snowfall that has lasted for three days. Despite the snow and the lull time, morale remains high and many of the Soldiers are working hard as part-time college students.

The unit remains split into three locations. The crews are rotating from the rear forward, giving all personnel some "forward time." The poor weather has curtailed most of the flight training but the unit did participate in a mass casualty exercise with the 61st Ambulance Company that went very well and has another mass casualty exercise scheduled with the Norwegian medical forces. They also have plans to conduct a mine field extraction exercise with the Swedish Explosive Ordnance Team.

Communications remain difficult but the new communications company is slowly getting all the problems resolved. The unit has been using the Internet for passing information but the system has been down for a couple of days. A few family and friends at Fort Benning are actively using the Internet to send electronic mail transmissions daily. The rear detachment remains busy providing support to the deployed troops and their families here at Fort Benning.

MAT, EOC staff provides assistance to aid Soldiers deploying overseas

By Jack Pagano
326th Replacement Detachment

For the first time since December 1995, units and Soldiers deploying to Bosnia through Fort Benning's Harmony Church have slowed to a trickle.

No one is complaining at the Emergency Operations Center, the nerve center for all units heading overseas, especially Sgt. 1st Class Edgar Belmon and Maj. Rick Gordon of the Readiness Group Atlanta Mobilization Team. This one week respite provides the Atlanta MAT a chance to look back at how they performed during the past 16 months.

"We're finishing up the fourth rotation to Bosnia with the fifth deployment in the door. We are the mobilization experts." said Belmon, MAT team training and operations supervisor.

For the past 20 years Belmon has served in a variety of Infantry units. He said he's always been ready to serve his country in a time of need but was never deployed during a crisis. During the Gulf War, Belmon guarded and patrolled the Alaskan pipelines and pump stations in minus 65 degree weather. Now he has an opportunity to be involved in a mobilization, even if it's from the sidelines.

"I'm retiring in a few months and I can't be happier in my swan song of tours to get a chance to help with mobilization. We go that extra mile in helping units with hands-on training that will send them off to Bosnia, Germany and Hungary qualified and ready."

Belmon, who looks like a linebacker, spoke volumes about how the MAT team and EOC staff coordinate specific training.

"We had a postal unit deploying and they requested forklift training. We coordinated that training. We had a firefighter team that was going to Bosnia and needed jaws of life training. We set them up with a firefighter unit at Fort Benning.

"Whenever units need our assistance we're there to help."

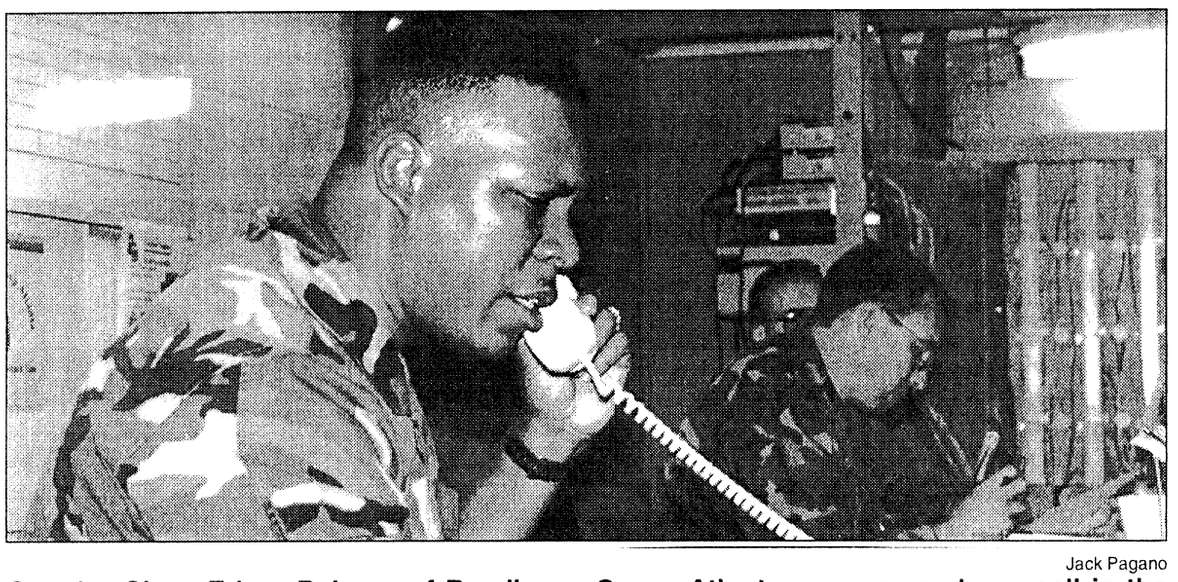
Answering phone calls next to Belmon is Gordon, who points out the MAT team's primary role is to provide assistance.

"We're the training oversight watchdogs. We're here to insure that before a unit deploys they have met all the training requirements. We're the final check in that process."

As the MAT team chief, Gordon said the mobilization process is an evolving situation that constantly changes and shifts.

"What we're doing now is different than what we did during the first rotation way back in December 1995 and January 1996.

"We're better now and much more efficient thanks in part to Mobilization Chief Earl Brown and his EOC staff. During those first days of mobilization, the EOC and MAT team deployed close to 1,000 Soldiers."



Gordon said it was those valuable lessons learned from deploying so many Soldiers so quickly that have made the mobilization story a huge success.

"Right now the mobilization process is running as smoothly as it could."

Brown agrees with Gordon as the EOC and MAT team prepare for the fifth and sixth rotations.

"The MAT team provides a valuable asset in our power projection platform mission of deploying units overseas," Brown said.

As long as units and Soldiers mobilize, the Atlanta Readiness MAT team will be there ready to help.

JAC assists spouses with job hunt

Army Career and Alumni Program

Spouses of separating Soldiers can also use job assistance services.

Spouses are reminded that they can take advantage of the job assistance services offered to transitioning service members.

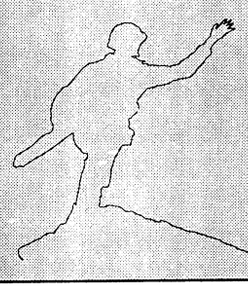
"We recommend participation by spouses begin with attendance at the service member's three-s day Army Career and Alumni Program Preseparation Briefing and Workshop," Chick Eagle, Job Assistance Counselor said.

"The third day of this valuable three-day program is a workshop presented by Fort Benning Job Assistance counselors and details the requirements for a successful job search. Spouses who have never entered the job market or who want to re-enter the work force will find this workshop as beneficial as it is to the service member," Eagle said.

Individual counseling sessions are also available for spouses at the Job Assistance Center in Soldiers' Plaza, Building 2634.

Located in the Job Assistance Center are all the job search tools used by separating Soldiers and spouses for researching career objectives, preparing resumes and cover letters, finding employers and job vacancies and much more.

"Individual job or career development counseling for spouses helps identify and assess employment skills, establish goals and identify potential employment opportunities," Eagle said.



Separating Army families are provided many services to assist with the transition back to civilian life and the civilian job market. Spouses interested in finding out more about their job assistance benefits can call the Job Assistance Center at 545-2308 or 545-2309.

AER campaign still in full swing

By Elizabeth LaMonica
Special to The Bayonet©

Fifty-five years ago, Army Emergency Relief began offering immediate financial assistance to Soldiers in need.

In order to continue this service, AER launched their annual fund campaign March 1. Fort Benning's AER, located in Soldiers' Plaza, Building 2643, is attempting to raise $150,000 by May 15, the end of the campaign efforts.

As of the seventh week of the campaign, AER had raised $55,000 which constitutes only 37 percent of their goal.

Forty-five project officers, selected from the major subordinate commands and post directorates, attended a workshop, received information, a briefing packet and training on how to collect and process donations.

Although raising money is one goal of the campaign, other objectives exist.

"We would like to increase awareness of AER," said retired Sgt. Maj. Al Deane, installation AER officer. "Also, we would like to publicize procedures on how to process for AER assistance and direct people to other aid agencies should they be away from Fort Benning."

Other aid agencies include: the Air Force Aid Society, Navy and Marine Corps Relief Society, Coast Guard Mutual Assistance Agency and any chapter of the Red Cross.

According to Deane, AER will consider applications for emergency financial aid in the following categories: travel expenses, funeral expenses, medical or dental expenses, vehicle repair, food, rent, utilities and essential needs when pay is delayed or stolen.

If warranted, AER assistance will be awarded in one of three ways: an interest-free loan, an outright grant or a combination of the two, based on the clients' financial need and the ability to repay the loan.

Although this list is not an exclusive list, AER will not consider assistance in most cases in the following categories: to pay for nonessential items, ordinary leave, fines or legal expenses, to help liquidate or consolidate debt, assist with a house purchase or home improvements, help purchase, rent or lease a vehicle, and to cover bad checks or pay credit card bills, according to AER publications.

"Our primary mission is to provide financial assistance to eligible clients," Deane said. "A secondary mission is our educational program."

AER has a need-based scholarship program dedicated to the dependent children of Soldiers and retirees.

The Army organization offers aid to active duty Soldiers, retirees, members of the National Guard and the Army Reserve who have been placed on active duty status for at least 30 days and their qualifying family members, including widows and orphans of these groups.

AER also helps members of any service branch assigned to Fort Benning fill out and process the application forms for aid. Although AER acts as the agency supplying the immediate aid, the other branches' emergency financial assistance organizations reimburse AER from their funds.

Another important note, an AER official can be reached at any time. During non-duty hours, including weekends and holidays, either a Soldier or his or her command can call the post's staff duty officer at 545-2218 who will contact the AER representative on duty. The only restriction is that the Soldier must already be placed on emergency leave status or, if on ordinary leave, have the Red Cross message substantiating the emergency need status.

"We try to work with the clients and try not to become an obstacle in getting them out of here," Deane said.

"Many myths about AER exist," Deane said. "The truth is clients can be married, single, officers, enlisted, living either on or off post and still receive aid."

For more information, call AER at 545-4043, -2536 or -7517.

Red Cross emergency leave funds due to end

By Elizabeth LaMonica
Special to The Bayonet©

Many Soldiers would wonder how to pay for sudden emergency travel costs. In the past, Soldiers have turned to the American Red Cross to loan or grant them the necessary money.

That's about to change.

The ARC plans to stop issuing grants for emergency leave funding July 1 and to stop loaning money for that purpose January 1.

Effective on those dates, Soldiers requiring aid will need to contact Army Emergency Relief for any assistance.

To help relieve AER's financial burden, the Fort Benning Noncommissioned Officers' Association is considering ways to help assume some of those costs.

Final approval of the plan awaits a decision by the post staff judge advocate and the NCOA chapter chairman.

Current plans include the possibility of NCOA getting involved by mid-summer and offering loans, not grants, to eligible Soldiers.

Miniblind replacement underway

By Jacqué Hill
Special to the Bayonet©

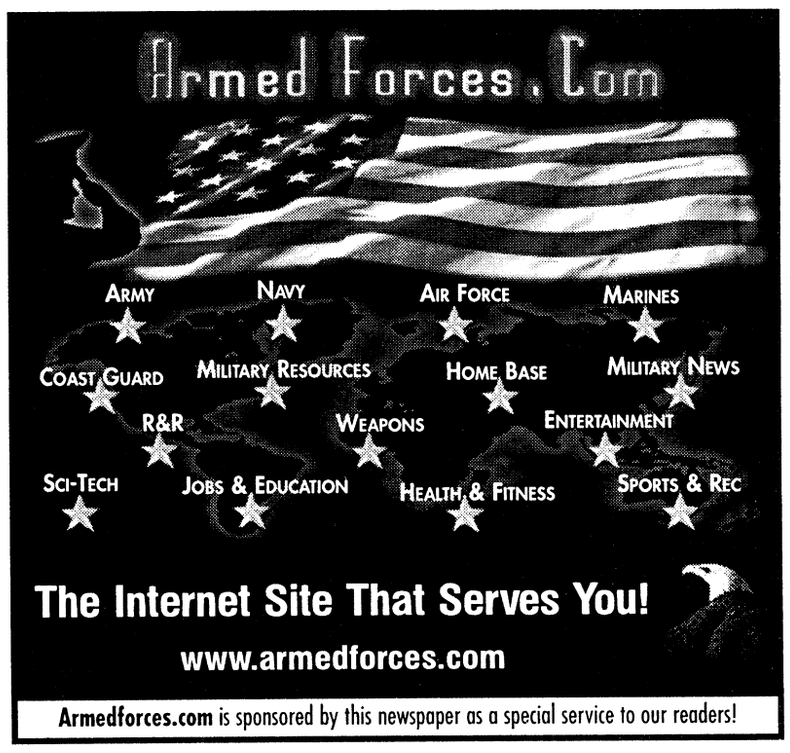
Directorate of Public Works officials, along with the Directorate of Public Safety, Martin Army Community Hospital and personnel of the Office of the Staff Judge Advocate, began implementing a plan to remove a potential threat of lead exposure to community members by replacing the vinyl miniblinds currently hanging in government quarters.

DPW has a team dedicated to replacing the blinds and it began the process in February in the Custer Terrace housing area. This area was chosen as a starting point for miniblind replacement because of the number of children 6 and under located there, according to Glenn Todd, customer relations specialist, DPW.

"They're targeting the areas that would traditionally have the target group of children 6 years and younger first," he said.

Children 6 years old and younger are more prone to lead exposure from the vinyl miniblinds than any other age group, according to Richard Townsend, Industrial Hygiene manager for Fort Benning.

"The only way this can be a hazard is if the blind dust is ingested somehow," he said. Because younger children more often tend to touch the blinds and then place their fingers inside their mouths, they are more at risk than other people, he said.



"Do not use a vacuum to clean away the dust from these blinds — lead dust is so fine that it is not trapped by a vacuum," he said. "This can possibly be hazardous to breathe, but is not a problem otherwise."

According to the plan, the team will replace miniblinds in the following housing areas respectively — Custer Terrace, McGraw Manor, Indianhead Terrace, Austin Loop, Norton and Ragan courts, Perkins Place, Rainbow and Miller loops, Iron Triangle and then, all other housing areas.

To replace the blinds in a set of quarters generally takes between one and one and a half hours, Todd said, and more than 4,000 residences need to have the blinds replaced.

"The team is dedicated to installing the miniblinds in occupied family housing," Todd said. "Other DPW staff members are installing blinds in residences that are vacated."

The Davis Hill and Bouton Heights areas' blinds are being replaced by the Davis Hill and Bouton Heights contractor, Todd said.

If you want her to have a shot at reaching the stars, she needs to get her baby shots now.

Every child deserves the best opportunities life has to offer. Especially yours.

The odds of her becoming an astronaut and reaching the stars are out of this world. But the chances are more than 1 in 4 that your baby isn't protected against childhood diseases like polio, measles, chicken pox, tetanus and others.

So, even if you're sure your child is up to date and on schedule with her baby shots, ask your doctor at every visit. It couldn't hurt.

In fact, it could give her the chance to grow up to be whatever she wants to be.

Even if it's something out of this world.

Arbor Day

White School students enhance Fort Benning, celebrate the environment

Lisa M. Hibbert

Col. Byron Greene, Fort Benning garrison commander, helps White Elementary School students plant a tree in honor of Arbor Day April 17. The students assisting Greene wrote the top essays for their grades. The students are Nathan Norris, first grade; Shaun Berger, second grade; Robin Buck, third grade; Nathan Recta, fourth grade; and Mike Kingston, fifth grade.

By Lisa M. Hibbert
Bayonet staff writer

Students from White Elementary School celebrated Arbor Day with a tree planting ceremony April 17.

To commemorate the day, the students wrote poems and essays about trees and the environment. Dr. Dell McMullen, superintendent of the Fort Benning schools, introduced the top essay writers in each grade. Nathan Norris, first grade; Shaun Berger, second grade; Robin Buck, third grade; Nathan Recta, fourth grade; and Mike Kingston, fifth grade, all took to the podium and read their stories to the crowd.

Col. Byron Greene, garrison commander, assisted the five students with the planting of a red maple tree which is located to the left of the school.

In his comments, he told the gathering of parents and students that while the tree may not look like much now, it will one day be as big as any other tree on Fort Benning. He explained to the children how important planting trees is to the environment and he encouraged the children to feel proud they took part in the ceremony.

Post provides services to increase awareness about

Child Abuse

Army Community Service

The Army Community Service Family Advocacy Program will be sponsoring several events during the month of April in observance of Child Abuse Prevention Month and the Month of the Military Child. Mark your calendar for the following events.

•Through April 30 — A display will be set up in Army Community Service, Building 2643, Soldiers' Plaza. Families can drop by to pick up brochures and other literature that will provide helpful tips on parenting and discipline. Promotional items will be available for the children.

•Through April 30 — Blue Ribbon Campaign, blue ribbons will be distributed on post and adults are asked to wear blue ribbons throughout the month to symbolize the fight against child abuse and neglect.

In the spring of 1989, Bonnie Finney, a Norfolk, Va., grandmother, took a stand against child abuse when she tied a symbolic blue ribbon around her van. It was a signal to her community of her personal commitment to involve everyone in the battle to stop child abuse. Bonnie's own grandson, Michael Wayne "Bubba" Dickenson, was a tragic, young victim of child abuse. His death gave her blue ribbon its own inspiring message.

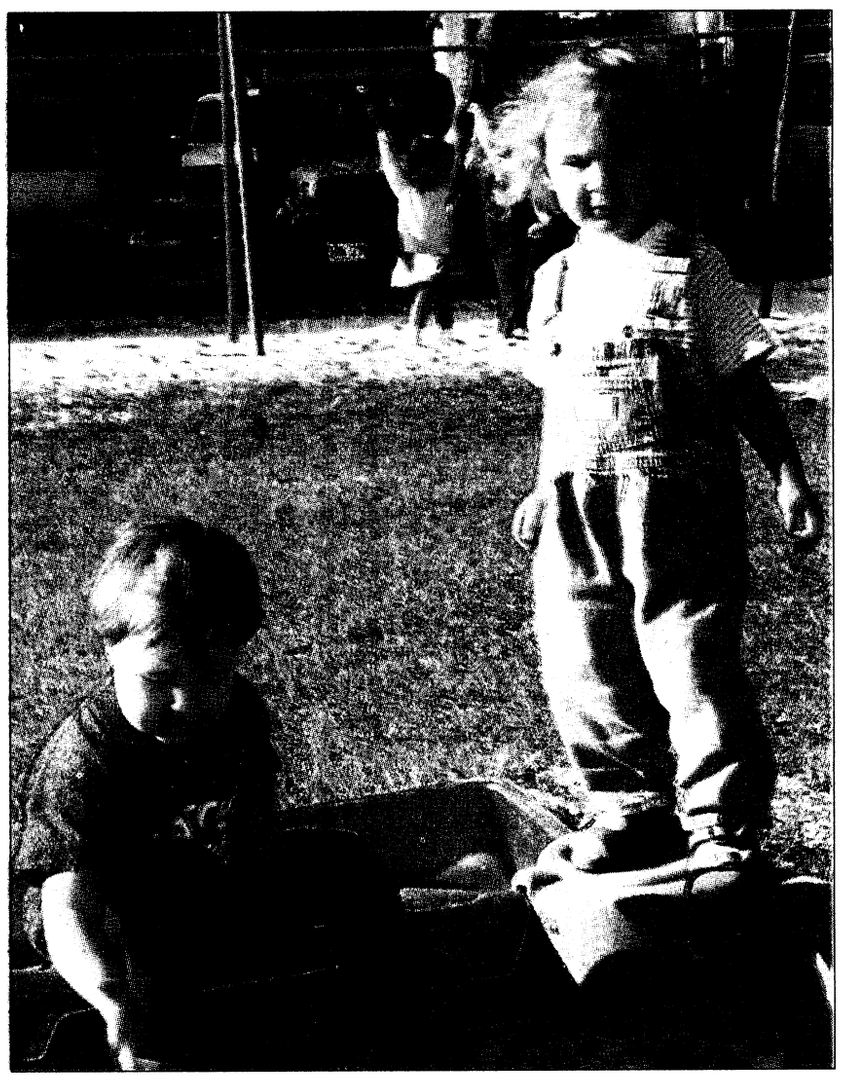
Can one person make a difference? Bonnie Finney did. According to Rebecca Welch, Family Advocacy Program manager, Bonnie Finney had a great message she was trying to get across to the public. The blue ribbon serves as a constant reminder to fight for the protection for all our children.

We must protect our most precious gift of all our children. Wear a blue ribbon in April to show your concern for our children. Put one on your car, give them to friends and tell them what it means.

You may save a child's life. The blue ribbons have been made by the children in our community. Welch visited several of the schools in March at Fort Benning and in Columbus to help the children make the blue ribbons.

Blue ribbons can be picked up at the following locations during the month of April:

•Family Advocacy Program, Bldg. 2643, Soldiers' Plaza, 545-334 or 545-5516;



•Columbus Regional Chartered Council on Child Abuse, 208 11th St., Columbus, 323-8384;

•Columbus Child Advocacy Center, 303 11th St., Columbus, 327-9612; and •Family Advocacy First Steps Program, Martin Army Hospital, 3rd Floor.

For more information on Child Abuse Prevention Month and the Blue Ribbon Campaign, call Welch at 545-3344 or 545-5516.

Patchwork

Prekindergarteners and their parents gather at Patch Preschool for an open house April 17.
The children and their families played in the sand, swung on the swings and dined on hotdogs, potato chips and icecream.
Parents received personal guided tours of the classrooms from their children and were able to meet with the teachers of Patch.

Post students take the 'write' way through legal system

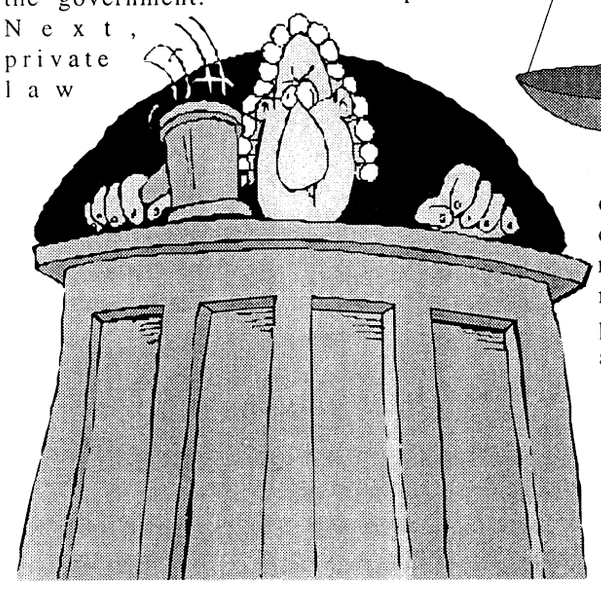
Fort Benning Schools conducts Law Day essay contest

By Cassandra Kline
8th Grade, Faith Middle School

If we did not have the First Amendment, would most of us be here today? The answer is no.

The First Amendment prohibits Congress from restricting freedom of religion, freedom of speech and freedom of the press. Freedom, the people who fought for freedom and the law we need to uphold is what Law Day is all about.

Freedom is our own responsibility. As children, we have our parents to protect us from harm, teach us values and slowly increase our freedom. Then as teenagers, we try to test our freedom. Most of us are able to keep our freedom because of our respect for the law and from the values we are raised with.

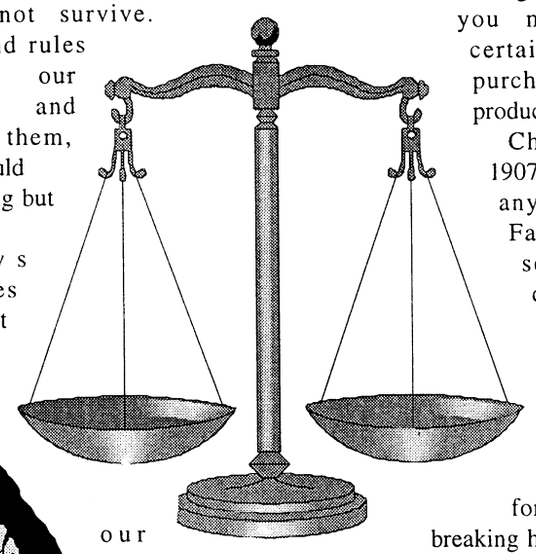


Unfortunately, freedom becomes a prison cell or juvenile home for some teenagers who are unable to abide by the law. For adults, the law seems easier to understand and uphold. Freedom needs to be modeled through adults to help children grow responsibly.

Abraham Lincoln and Martin Luther King Jr. believed in freedom and the law. Abraham Lincoln hated war because of all the suffering it brought. However, he knew that the war had to be fought to end slavery. He believed all people had the right to be free.

Martin Luther King Jr. had similar beliefs. For example, he put his life on the line to stand up for equal rights, freedom and fair law. Freedom is what he thought was right. If they had not fought for our freedom, we would not be where we are today.

Without the understanding of law, our freedom would not be protected. Law can be defined as a system of standards and rules of a civil society. There are two types of law.



Public law relates to the structures, powers and operations of the government. Next, private law provides rules to be applied when one person claims that another has injured themselves, property, or failed to carry out a valid legal obligation. Under-standing and respecting our law leads to a future of freedom.

Law Day is a time to reflect on our past and remember those who fought for our freedom. Freedom is a gift we all can receive.

By Ashley Hanson
Fifth Grade, Dexter Elementary School

Having laws protects the rights of those who listen. If there were no laws and rules, the weak would not survive. Laws and rules protect our society and without them, there would be nothing but chaos.

Laws and rules protect our civil rights. Laws and rules also guide people to act in appropriate manners. Laws and rules promote our freedom and equality.

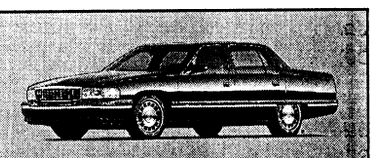
Laws and rules give freedoms like the freedom of speech, the freedom to have any job and the freedom to be an unique individual. Laws and rules protect us in many ways. For example, you must be a certain age to drive and you must be a certain age to purchase harmful products.

Children in 1907 did not have any freedom. Families were so poor that children were forced to work in large and very dangerous factories for long, back-breaking hours. People called this abuse child slavery. People fought for nine long years against child slavery.

Finally, in 1916, President Theodore Roosevelt passed the child labor law which gave children in America freedom. Now the children could be children. They would be free to attend school and play with their friends.

Laws and rules also promote success. I am thankful for these laws that give me my freedom. Without my freedom, I could be a victim of child slavery.

Laws and rules are the heart and soul of our wonderful country — a country of opportunity and a country of freedom. The laws protect the good and the bad.



I wish all the children of the world could have the freedom I have. I wish that the children in cities like Detroit, Mich., could go outside without the risk of being hurt, kidnapped or even killed by people who disobey the laws and abuse their freedom.

I am honored that my father is a Soldier, along with many other men and women in the armed forces of America who fight to maintain our freedom and the freedom of others who are less fortunate.

Freedom is a great privilege — a privilege many have earned for us and one I am honored to have.

Editor's Note — Essays published are the first-place essays from the post-wide Law Day essay contest. These essays, as well as the second- and third-place finishers' are on display in the Office of the Staff Judge Advocate, Building 5. Students also designed posters.

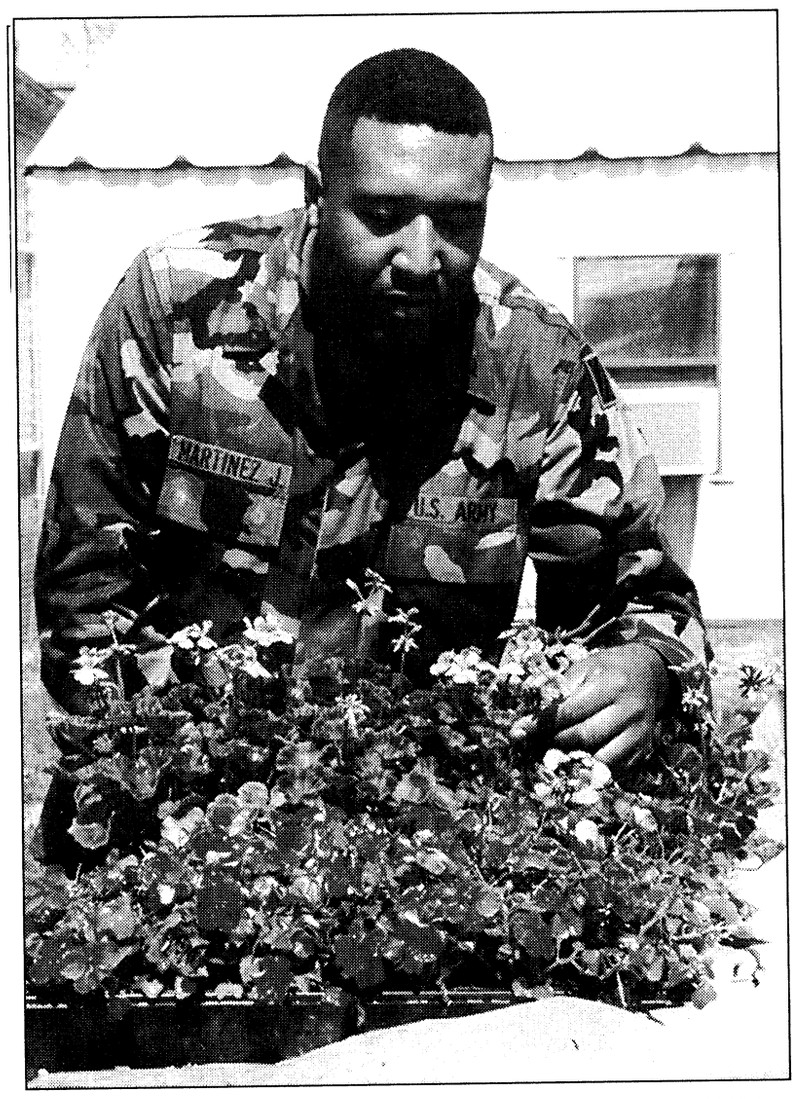
Yard waste reminder

All curbside pick-up of yard waste must be in biodegradable paper bags or durable plastic or metal containers marked yard waste. Yard waste in other type containers will not be picked up. Paper bags are available at the U-Do-It Self-Help Center, Bldg. 385.

Smoke detectors being installed

Bill Strong Enterprises, Inc., will be replacing smoke detectors in family housing. Work is scheduled to take place May 1 through September. All work will be performed Monday through Saturday from 8 a.m to 6:30 p.m.



Since entry to your home will be required, it is necessary for you or your representative to be present while the work is being done. The contractor will notify you five days prior to the time work will begin and will arrange a mutually convenient time with you.

This work is required to accomplish in order to comply with new housing laws. Our goals is to minimize inconvenience to you, but it is imperative that this work be completed at this time. If you have questions or comments regarding this project, contact Conealious Ford at 545-4749.

Historic homes get window survey

Technician Engineering, Inc., has been contracted by the Directorate of Public Works to design a project to repair windows in some of our historic houses on Main Post. Representatives of Technicon Engineering, Inc., will be conducting a survey of the houses listed below to ascertain current site conditions. These surveys, which began in February, are scheduled to be completed in July. Each representative of Technicon Engineering has a Letter of Introduction and identification for your review upon request.

Fresh bedding plants arrive each week

The U-Do-It, Self-Help Center will offer residents a second flat of bedding plants beginning April 25. If you have not received your flat or need a second flat of bedding plants, stop by the U-Do-It, Self-Help Center, Building 385. Operating hours are 8:30 a.m. to 4 p.m Tuesday through Saturday, closed Sunday, Monday, and holidays.

Benning Bulletin correction

Paragraph 8 of the Benning Bulletin number 16, dated April 18, stated that the guest houses and garages located on Miller Loop were to be demolished. This was in error in that only the garages (Buildings 864, 865 and 866) are scheduled for demolition. The guest houses are not included in the Footprint Reduction Program. We apologize for the confusion.

However, anyone with articles stored in the garages must vacate them no later than June 1. Articles remaining after that date will either become government property or be included in the demolition action.

Planning that garden patch out back

As you get ready to plant your pea patch, we would like to take the opportunity to familiarize our readers with the installation's guidelines on vegetable gardens (USAIC Regulation, 210-5).

No area of the lawn will be destroyed for vegetable gardens.

Vegetable gardens may be planted where flower beds are normally placed, adjacent to the building.

Residents may cultivate common use areas (open areas) which are at least 150 feet from the building. Garden plots in these areas will not exceed 150 square feet.

A resident utilizing the common use area will obtain approval from the chief of the housing division, through submission of a letter or memorandum along with sketch or a map indicating location and size of area.

Residents desiring to cultivate large garden plots must obtain an area from their major command.

Major commands can obtain areas upon request to DPW, Building and Grounds Division. A sketch or map including location and size of area will accompany the request.

Comments and questions

People need Jesus Christ

By Terry W. Austin
USAIC Chaplain Office

This week, I heard of a man in California selling land on the moon.

Imagine that! Some guy believes he owns the moon and further more, he is selling it.

reflections

I laughed out loud when I heard the story. It seems that ocean-front property in Arizona is not the biggest joke anymore and swamp land in Florida does not seem like such a bad deal after all.

The most unique aspect of the story is the man has buyers. He has sold several plots and has hired a staff to keep up with his success. People believe him and are willing to invest some of their money to own a piece of the "big rock."

About 2,000 years ago, a man was offering people a permanent place in heaven. All they had to do was trust him and they could live there forever. No money involved, no secret connections, no memberships; only trust in the person making the offer.

Well, they not only laughed at him, they killed him. His works were all good and blessed the people of his day. He did nothing wrong. He did not steal anyone's life's savings or cause anyone to do something they were not sure about.

Yet, the world back then decided he was worthy of death. Therefore, he was crucified by his society.

His name: Jesus Christ. Why is it so hard to believe that God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten son to die for our sins? It seems since the existence of man, many beliefs and strange doctrines have come about.

One truth that has stood since the beginning of time, however, is God's love for us. It was his plan to send his son, Jesus Christ, to make heaven available to us. There was no charge because we could not afford it. It was not of good works because we could not earn it. It is available simply and only because of who you know: Jesus Christ.

So why is that so hard to believe in such a world we live in? Could it be our lack of faith in God that he will do what he has promised. I hope not. God is faithful, true, just and loving.

He only desires good for us. He has offered us heaven.

I do not intend to buy any property on the moon. That sounds very silly to me.

However, I do intend to be in heaven when I pass from this world. I know that may sound silly, even old fashioned to some, but it is because of God's love for me that I can have that assurance.

I hope you have that assurance. Heaven sounds like a great place to be for eternity. I am sure you will not want to miss it. You will not need a space suit or any other special item to live there. You will not even need a property deed, only Jesus Christ.

Americans should give up self-centered culture

By Stephen Fry
36th Engineer Group

"I Want It All, and I Want It Now" was a song that was very popular some time ago. These lyrics illustrate the self-centeredness in our culture.

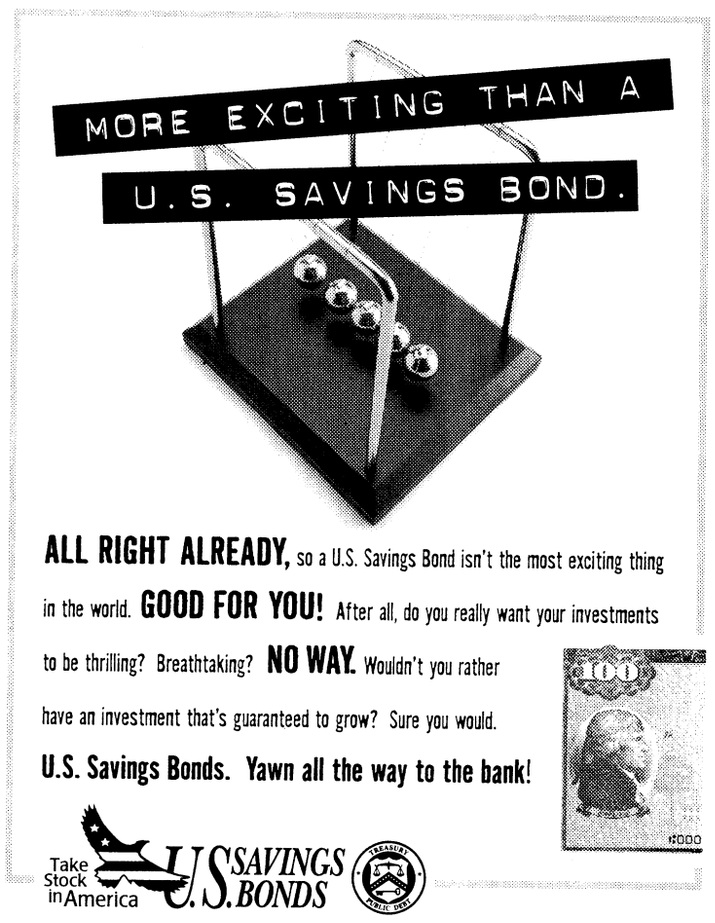
reflections

Recently, one of the TV talk show's host was interviewing married couples who were living the swinging lifestyle. The translation of this means that they were both openly committing adultery and doing it in the presence of each other.

These couples are living a contradictory lifestyle. They have chosen to disregard their marriage vows. This is the wrong example to set for their children, because it teaches that there are no standards or values. Ultimately, these actions weaken our society because they tell others it is all right to do anything you wish.

We want our young people to be responsible and productive citizens. The way this is done is through education and learning a job skill. This takes time and commitment. One succeeds in the civilian world or in the military by hard work, commitment and dedication.

Now, we are told that the way to achieve success is by playing basketball at midnight. After the games, there will be classes and help for acquiring work skills and job placement.



How can an individual be productive after staying out all night? It is only when an individual is willing to sacrifice fun for hard work that he or she will obtain his or her potential. Fun and games must be secondary to hard work and education.

We are saddened to read about innocent children being killed in drive-by shootings because they were in the path of a bullet. These killings are often caused by self-centered individuals who want their vengeance or want their "honor" defended at all costs. They do not care about innocent people who may die as a result of their criminal behavior. These individuals are not willing to wait in order to work out their problems.

The words of Jesus come true when he said, "Whoever wishes to save his life shall lose it (Mark 8:35)." This shows the futility of being self-centered. The way to an enjoyable life is not by disobeying the law or getting all that you want. The biblical principle states that it is by giving to others that one receives.

It is by keeping marriage vows that the stability of the home is transferred to future generations. It is through work that there comes self-respect and provisions for one's family and their future. Safer neighborhoods occur when we obey the moral and judicial laws of our society.

A return to the biblical principles of giving to others and working for the future will allow us to enjoy our God-given life.

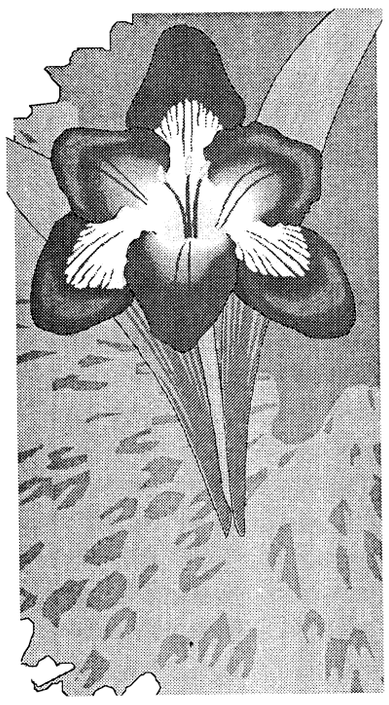
Experts offer gardening tips, advice on Lawn care

National Gardening Association

The average American homeowner uses between 5.3 pounds and 10.6 pounds of pesticide per acre on his or her lawn, according to the National Academy of Sciences.

That's many times the amount used by most farmers. While lush, green lawns and thriving plants will always be popular, more and more gardeners are avoiding the potentially harmful effects of chemical-based lawn and garden products by choosing to care for their lawns and gardens naturally.

"Natural gardening is a 'back-to-the basics' approach that builds a strong ecosystem in which plants and grass can thrive," said Tim Sellew, executive vice president of Earthgro, Inc., a leading producer of natural and organic horticultural products.



"Synthetic chemicals disturb the normal biological processes that nature has designed to keep plants healthy. Natural gardening methods help nature's own processes by keeping essential elements — soil, microorganisms, fertilizer, water and insects — in proper balance, and that leads to strong and vigorous lawns and gardens."

As more home gardeners look for natural solutions to gardening problems, organic horticultural products have become one of the fastest-growing segments of the booming $22.2 billion lawn and garden industry. Home gardeners now can find a wide variety of natural and organic products at local garden centers, hardware and department stores and even the supermarket.

The most effective of these products are made from compost, nature's humus and one of the most frequently recommended materials for creating properly balanced healthy soil. Compost can be used for both fertilizing plants and conditioning soil.

Compost-based products work naturally to provide benefits like greater capacity for holding water and nutrients, an increased resistance to erosion from wind and water and a natural capacity to resist disease, weed growth and pests.

Healthy lawns not only look good, but they have environmental benefits as well — they produce oxygen, control erosion and cool the air by releasing moisture and reflecting the sun's rays.

"Your house is one of the biggest investments you make, so it makes sense to spend time and effort to create an attractive lawn and garden," said Sellew. "With natural gardening, you not only get colorful flowers and green grass, but also the peace of mind you need to enjoy it."

Post to remember victims of the Holocaust

Equal Opportunity Office

Fort Benning will commemorate the National Days of Remembrance for Victims of the Holocaust May 4 to 11. There will be a post-wide moment of silence May 5 at 9 a.m.

The theme for this year's commemoration is "From Holocaust to New Life."

The Holocaust was an event contemporaneous in large part with Would War II — but separate from it. In fact, Nazi plans for "extermination" and genocide often took precedence over the war effort — as trains, personnel and materials needed at the front were not allowed to be diverted from the death camps assignments.

In 1979, a presidential commission described the Holocaust as, "the systemic, bureaucratic annihilation of six million Jews by the Nazis and their collaborators as a central act of state during the second world war, as night descended, millions of other people were swept into this net of death."

National efforts to remember the Holocaust can be traced back to the actions of Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower, supreme commander of the allies forces in Europe. When his troops liberated the death camps, he vowed the memories of the horror he and his Soldiers witnessed would not be forgotten.

His writings show he first forced himself to visit the camps, in order to be in position to give first-hand evidence of these things if ever, in the future, there developed a tendency to charge these allegations merely to "propaganda."

Taking a stand against this possibility, Eisenhower requested that members of Congress and leading American newspaper editors come to Europe to see the "indescribable horror" for themselves.

The United States' efforts to remember the Holocaust can be seen as a continuation of these early efforts. The United States Holocaust Memorial Council, established in 1980 by Public Law 96-388, coordinates local commemorative programs and ceremonies throughout the country.

In 1984, the secretary of defense encouraged the military services to create appropriate annual observances as part of the national effort. Soldiers were reminded of the fact that it was their nation's military forces which witnessed evidence of the Holocaust as they liberated the camps. Observances were conducted cognizant of the fact that members of the nation's military must remember both the dreams Americans stand for and the nightmares we stand against.

Since that time, observances have been conducted on ships and installations throughout the world during this annual eight-day period. May 5 at 9 a.m., community members may participate in Fort Benning's observance by taking a moment of silence.

Fort Benning honors the contributions of volunteers

Officials praise those who donate time, help others

By Lisa M. Hibbert
Bayonet staff writer

More than 300 Soldiers and community members watched as Fort Benning volunteers received honors at the post's 1997 Volunteer Recognition Reception April 17.

The 24 volunteers that received special recognition were nominated by the units or agencies they work with, said Michelle Aldridge, the Fort Benning volunteer coordinator. Overall, the post has more than 2,000 volunteers.

Celebrated in conjunction with National Volunteer Week, the program's theme was Volunteers — Heroes in Action.

Aldridge presented Brig. Gen. Walter Wojdakowski, post Deputy Commanding General, with a symbolic check for $2 million. The sum symbolizes the amount of money volunteers saved Fort Benning during 1996.

After accepting the check, Wojdakowski made comments to the gathering before moving on the present the awards.

"There is a national trend that volunteerism is on the upswing and I'm proud to say that Fort Benning is on track with that trend," Wojdakowski said. "Volunteers are a credit to all and I would like to say thank you for your efforts. You embody a special kind of selflessness."

Recognizing her many volunteer efforts in the community, Aldridge presented Linda Ernst, wife of Commanding General Maj. Gen. Carl F. Ernst, with a bouquet of flowers.

Linda Ernst, wife of Commanding General Maj. Gen. Carl F. Ernst, presents an award to Terrence Thorn.

In her remarks, Ernst thanked Aldridge for the flowers and for coordinating the program which Ernst called a success. She also acknowledged the many contributions of the volunteer leaders.

"I know that many of you out there don't want any recognition for the work that you do, but I think you deserve a big applause," Ernst said.

Ernst assisted Wojdakowski in presenting awards to the top volunteers of the year.

The volunteers received certificates of appreciation as well as free movie passes, discount coupons and more.

But the volunteers called to the stage were not the only ones to receive awards. Canvas tote bags, pens, key chains and an Army Air Force Exchange discount coupon were given to all of the Fort Benning volunteers.

Additionally, door prizes were given out. Volunteers also received videotapes, a barbeque grill, and a two-night stay at Destin Army Recreation Center and at Uchee Creek Army Campground and Marina.

Volunteers recognized ranged in age and status from high school students to retirees. The volunteers recognized at the 1997 volunteer recognition reception luncheon were:

The 1st Battalion, 15th Infantry Regiment, continued their dominance in track and field events April 16 and 17 at Doughboy Stadium winning five of the 10 men's events and setting a new post record in the discus event.

The 1st Bn., 15th Inf. Regt., won outright the shot put, discus, 800-, 400- and 1500-meter runs, giving it the lead in the chase for the track and field crown with one meet to go. The final meet will be conducted June 4 during Military Appreciation Week.

Marvitis Dupree continued his dominance in the discus and shot put, besting his throw of 136 feet from the first meet in March tossing the saucer shaped object for 139 feet, two inches, eclipsing the post record set last year. Dupree also won the shot put event throwing the 12-pound ball for 43 feet, eight inches, which was two feet, seven inches shorter than the distance thrown in the March meet.

In the male 100-meter dash, Kelley Edwards set a new post record with a time of 10.65, beating out the second-place finisher Greg Meghoo. Meghoo, a 1984 U.S. Olympic relay team member, set the post record during the track and field meet last year.

In the women's events, the 13th Corps Support Battalion, 36th Engineer Group (Combat), dominated the meet, winning all events. Hilda Burgos from the 36th Eng. Grp. (Combat) was the only female athlete able to stop a complete sweep by 13th CSB by taking second place in the 800-meter run.

The track and field season culminates June 4 during Military Appreciation Week with the third and final meet and the crowing of the post track and field champion.

Winners of the track and field meet were:

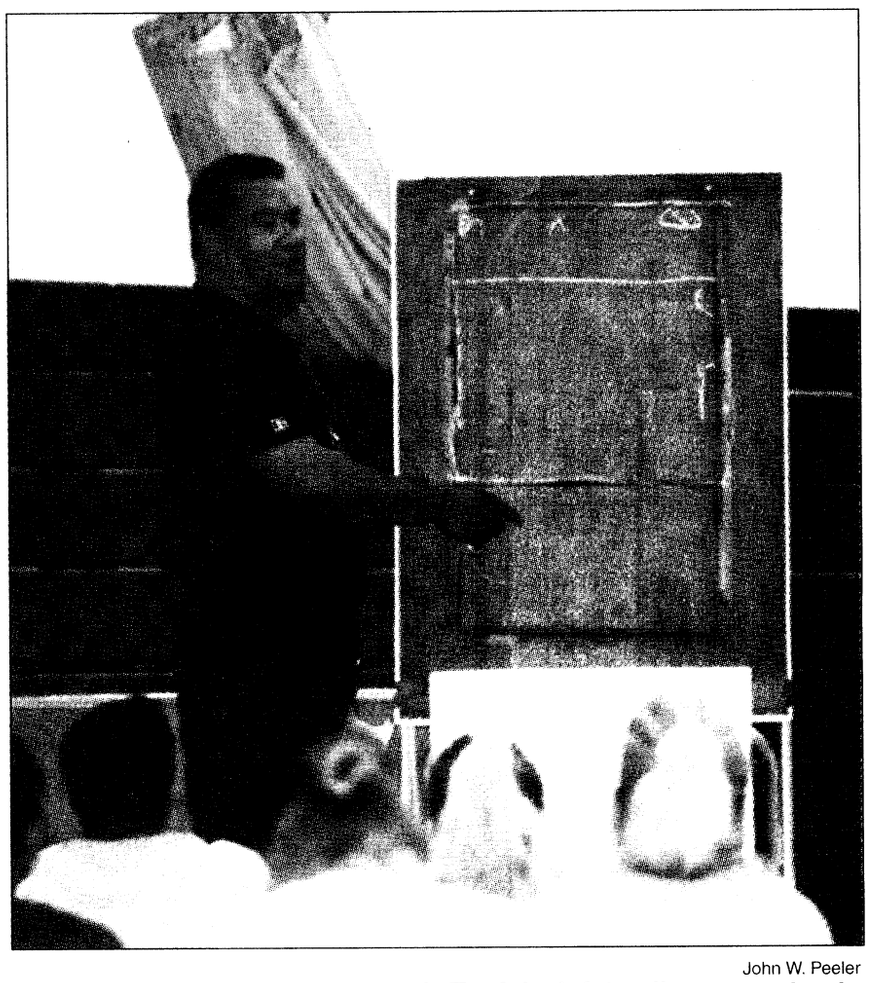
Athletes arrive for All-Army Volleyball Trials

By John W. Peeler
Special to the Bayonet©

The search for players for the All-Army Volleyball Team began April 17 at the Sand Hill Non-commissioned Officers' Club with a welcome breakfast for athletes from across military installations worldwide coming to Fort Benning to try to make the team.



Infantry Training Brigade Commander Col. Abraham Turner welcomed the athletes and pledged to the participants his full support in their endeavors.

"We are used to winning at Fort Benning and we will do whatever it takes to support you in winning," Turner said.

All-Army Volleyball Team coach Toafala Iafeta introduced the coaching staff and players attending the trial camp which will run through May 4.

Others on hand at the welcoming breakfast were Post Sergeant Major, Command Sgt. Maj. Mack H. Vereen; ITB Sergeant Major, Command Sgt. Maj. Larry Durham; Commander, Headquarters and Service Company, ITB, Capt. Thomas Dye; HSC, ITB, 1st Sergeant, 1st Sgt. Walter Mitchell; Director of Community Activities, Alan F. Stewart, and Sports Director Jim Brown.

Immediately following the breakfast, Iafeta and the team moved to the Santiago Fitness Center where Iafeta began discussing basic volleyball fundamentals.

Georgia state parks offer guided canoe trips — Outdoor enthusiasts can explore Georgia's scenic waterways on guided canoe trips at Hamburg High Falls and Panola Mountain State parks.

Park staff will explain basic canoeing techniques and interpret natural surroundings while leading paddlers on day-long trips.

Participants can see beavers, otters, kingfishers, great blue herons, turtles and other wildlife.

Trips fill quickly, so pre-registration is required. To register, call the park directly.

The cost is $15 per person, which includes canoe, paddles and life preserver. Canoers who bring their own equipment pay $10. A $2 park pass fee is charged per vehicle.

Eighteen of Georgia's state parks rent canoes so visitors can explore lakes and streams on their own.

Prices are $3 to $5 for an hour, $8 to $15 for four hours and $12 to $20 for an entire day. For a free "Guide to Georgia State Parks and Historic Sites" or "1997 Events" brochure, call (404) 656-3530.

To reserve a campsite or fully equipped cottage, call (800) 864-7275.

The parks that will offer canoe trips are:

•Hamburg State Park, Mitchell, Saturday, 9:30 a.m. to 2 p.m.

This is an easy, 4.5-mile float down the Ogeechee River.

Call (912) 552-2393 to register.

•High Falls State Park, Jackson, second Saturday of each month, enjoy an easy trip down the Towaliga River, May 10, June 14, July 12, Sept. 13 and Oct. 11. Call (912) 993-3053 to register.

•Panola Mountain State Conservation Park, Stockbridge, May 17, 9 a.m. to 2 p.m.

This clean-up trip down the South River combines wildlife observation with litter pickup.

Sept. 27, 9 a.m. to 2 p.m. Explore three miles of the South River which forms the northern boundary of this park.

Nov. 15, 5:30 to 7:30 p.m. Adults may enjoy a sunset float on the park's 3.5-acre lake. Call (770) 389-7801 to register.

State parks post fishing tournaments — The arrival of spring means it is time to get out your favorite fishing pole and head to Georgia's state parks.

This year, the parks have planned a dozen fishing events where serious anglers can strut their stuff while beginning youngsters learn the basics. The tournaments are a great excuse for families to spend time together in the spring sunshine.

Most state parks have boat ramps and docks, and many rent boats and sell bait. For more information about a fishing tournament, call the host park.

Fishing tournaments are just some of the many events conducted by state parks and historic sites throughout the year.

All events are free and parking is $2.

•The junior fishing rodeo is May 3 at 7:30 a.m. at Noon Black Rock Mountain State Park, Mountain City.

Children 15 and younger can compete on a lake stocked with trout and catfish.

The tournament is free and there is no fishing license required.

For more information, call 746-2141.

•A kids' catfish rodeo takes place May 17 from 10 a.m. to 3 p.m. at Cloudland Canyon State Park, Rising Fawn.

Children 14 and younger can try their luck with a stocked pond. An adult must accompany each angler. The tournament is free.

For more information, call 657-4050.

•A fishing rodeo is May 24 from 8 to 11 a.m. at Reed Bingham State Park, Adel.

Children 14 and younger can compete for prizes. The tournament is free.

For more information, call (912) 896-3551.

•The junior and senior catfish rodeo is May 24 at 9 a.m. at Victoria Bryant State Park, Royston.

Children 16 and younger and adults 62 and older can compete in this fishing and casting contest.

Prizes will be awarded for categories such as largest fish, youngest fisherman and albino catfish catch.

There is no charge for the tournament.

For more information, call 245-6270.

•Children's fishing rodeo takes place June 7 from 9 a.m. to noon at James H. Floyd State Park, Summerville.

The long-awaited reopening of the 16-acre lake finally arrives.

Anglers 14 and younger can compete for prizes. Hotdogs and hamburgers will be served after the rodeo.

Bring your own fishing gear and bait (no minnows). There is no charge for the tournament.

For more information, call 857-0826.

•Children's fishing rodeo is June 7 at 8:30 a.m. until noon at Magnolia Springs State Park, Millen.

Children 15 and younger can try their luck on three stocked lakes while competing for various prizes. Pre-registration required. The tournament is free.

For more information, call (912) 982-1660.

•A youth fishing derby occurs June 7 from 8 to 11 a.m. at Seminole State Park, Donalsonville.

Children 13 and younger can compete for largest fish, most fish and other contests. There is no charge for the tournament.

For more information, call (912) 861-3137.

•The junior and senior fishing rodeo is June 14 with 9 a.m. registration at Moccasin Creek State Park, Clarkesville.

Children 11 or younger and adults 65 or older can compete on a trout-stocked stream.

Fort Benning team departs for Pentagon

By 1st Lt. April N. Olsen
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Soldiers, civilians and tri-community leaders joined Commanding General, Maj. Gen. Carl F. Ernst in Washington, D.C. this week to accept installation awards for excellence.

As the 1997 winner of the Army Communities of Excellence Commander-in Chief's Award for the Best Army Installation in the World and the chief of Staff of the Army's Award for the Best Large Army Installation, Ernst will accept the awards on behalf of Fort Benning during separate ceremonies at the Pentagon.

"We're taking a large delegation of Soldiers, civilians and community leaders to represent Fort Benning," Sarah McLaney, the chief of the Quality Management Division of the Directorate of Resource Management, said.

McLaney said the group, consisting of Fort Benning Soldiers and civilians, represents various ranks and levels from units and directorates. She said it is important to Ernst that the post be well represented at the ceremonies when he accepts the awards.

"Because it is an installation award, the award belongs to everyone," McLaney said, "We wouldn't have won the award without the team effort."

"Our people are key to winning this award," McLaney said, "And having some of those people at the ceremonies says that we are a team working

The Javelin Missile System heads down range to engage its target.

Javelin exercise tests missile system's lethality

By Dov Schwartz
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Gunners from the 3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment, fired five Javelin antitank missiles at Griswold Range April 17.

The live-fire exercise tested a lower-cost version of the world's first man-portable "fire and forget" missile weapon system.

Officials said six Javelin launches were scheduled; however, one missile did not launch and is currently being analyzed.

One missile successfully destroyed a bunker. Although not the intended target, video showed the missile flew exactly where the gunner aimed it. The other four missiles successfully killed their intended targets.

"The Javelin is the best antitank weapon in the world," said Staff Sgt. Anthony E. Morish, Company A, 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment, whose 10 Javelin firings are more than anyone else in the military.

The missile firing was part of a broad range of tests which are being conducted to confirm that a cost reduction program forecast to save the Army $1.3 billion had not affected the reliability or performance of the system, said Lt. Col. David M. Dorman, Training and Doctrine Command Systems Manager, Antitank Missiles, Javelin.

Test and Experimentation Command Military Test Plans analyst Jack Ashcraft said the new system features hardware changes to the missile, improved manufacturing processes and an increased use of modular design to the target acquisition component of the missile, known as the Command Launch Unit.

"When you're in the Infantry," Morish said, "you think something needs to be heavy and have a lot of gadgets to work. The Javelin is not like that. It worked just great."

Ashcraft also said the Javelin launches were successful and the system met the Army's reliability requirements.

The Javelin is the Army's light-weight, medium-range antitank weapon system with a range of 2,500 meters.

According to Morish, who was the first person to test fire the Javelin, the system is easy to learn.

"It was just like playing the video game Space Invaders," he said.

The Javelin missile uses its fire-and-forget technology which allows the missile to fly to a target without requiring the gunner to do any tracking. The system's soft launch capability enables Soldiers to fire from positions with overhead cover or from inside of a building. This feature, along with a small blast or launch signature makes the gunner more survivable, Dorman said.

Dorman said the Javelin has enhanced lethality over other antitank systems because of its top attack. Instead of attacking the front of a target, where the armor is thickest, the Javelin attacks from the top, swooping down on the turret, killing the tank where the armor is thinnest.

"The Javelin gives the light Infantryman the same lethality as an M-1 Abrams tank," Dorman said.

Three ranger battalions are currently equipped with the Javelin system. The 82nd Airborne Division began fielding the system during the last week of April.

Rangers gear up for competition

By Spc. Brian R. Voller
Bayonet staff writer

As many as 34 two-man ranger teams from all around the Army are heading to Fort Benning to participate in the 15th annual David E. Grange Jr. Best Ranger Competition scheduled for today through Monday.

Col. Dorian Anderson, commander of the Ranger Training Brigade, said the competition is designed to test the physical and mental capabilities of the ranger qualified participants.

As with last year's competition, Anderson said the events of the Best Ranger Competition will not be published until the day of the event. He said the only information the RTB put out about the events is that all of them require running, jumping, swimming, marching and shooting.

Anderson said the Best Ranger Competition was originally started to test the skills of ranger instructors in the Ranger Training Brigade. In 1984, the competition was expanded to include the Ranger Regiment, the Special Forces and the Light Infantry units. Since then, the competition has changed to include any individual who has a ranger tab.

Teams competing in this year's competition were expected to begin arriving on post Wednesday to begin training and to become acclimated to the area.

A special Rangers-in-Action Demonstration is scheduled for Monday at 9:30 a.m. at Victory Pond, followed by the awards ceremony at 10:30 a.m.

Gen. Henry H. Shelton, Commanding General for Special Operations Command, based at MacDill Air Force Base in Florida, is the guest speaker.

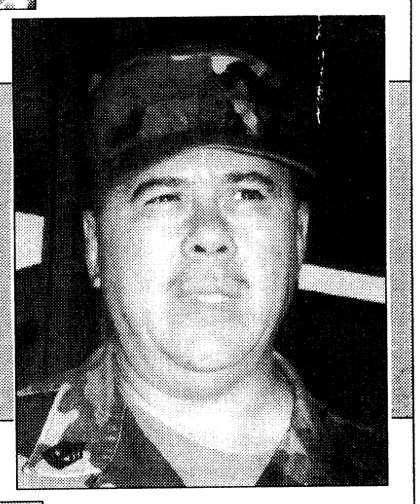
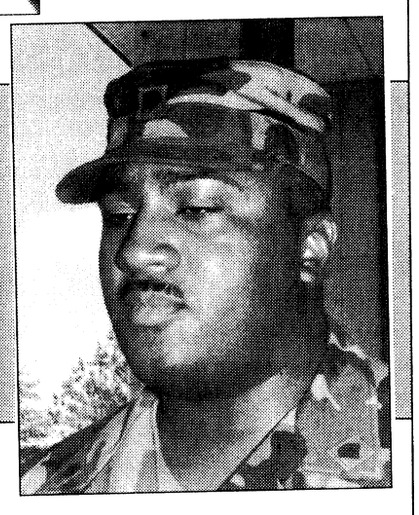
VARIOUS VOICES

As an American citizen, which constitutionally granted freedom do you cherish the most?



Pfc. Bernard Aderhold, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 2nd Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment — "The freedom from discrimination is important because everyone needs to learn to live together and stop hating one another."

Staff Sgt. Raymond Lewis, Company A, 30th Adjutant General Reception Battalion, Infantry Training Brigade — "Freedom of speech — I like to express myself and that gives me the ability to do so."



Christa Dyer, family member — "The freedom to vote, to say what you want, unlike communist countries where that is restricted."

1st Sgt. Steven Peckinpaugh, U.S. Army Reservist — "It's hard to distinguish. If you don't cherish all of them, you will lose them. The right to vote is especially important. So many places don't let people have an opinion about elected officials."

Anne Harvey, family member — "Freedom of speech is probably the most important. It helped lead women to vote and can kick corrupt politicians out of office. Without freedom of speech, we can't have a free country."

Spc. Dwight Jacobs, Company A, 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment — "Freedom of speech — I can give my opinion without consequences unlike some countries I've seen. Since I've been in the military and been to other countries, I've cherished it more."

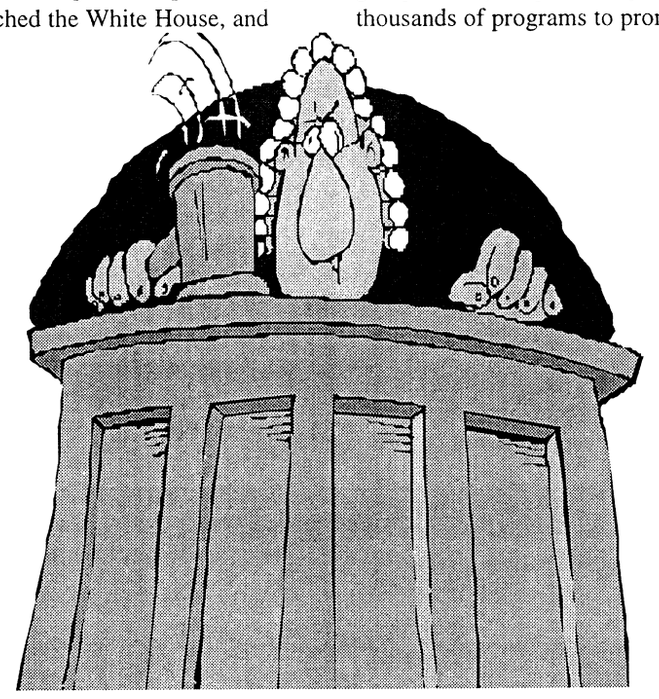
Law Day

Nation celebrates observance of 40th anniversary

By Capt. John R. Doolittle
Staff Judge Advocate

Thursday marked the 40th anniversary of our national celebration and observation of Law Day.

commentary



This past week across our great nation, American citizens celebrated and commemorated Law Day U.S.A. by recognizing the valued importance of the many constitutionally-granted freedoms we, as a nation, have held dear since the founding of our country.

This year, American citizens nationwide took a moment to reflect and appreciate those freedoms granted to us by our nation's forefathers. Freedoms so ingrained in the fabric, body and soul of our legal system, our national heritage and our American way of life, that throughout the years, generations of Americans have chosen to protect those freedoms through military service to our nation.

In order to protect and pass on those freedoms to future Americans, many brave Americans made the ultimate sacrifice so generations of new Americans might participate and share in the "Blessings of Liberty" as called for in the Preamble to the U. S. Constitution, of which our constitutionally-granted freedoms promote.

Historically, the idea of setting up a special day to commemorate the role of law in our society and to honor our legal system was the vision in 1957 of Charles S. Rhyne, a Washington, D.C., attorney, then president of the American Bar Association.

By 1958, the importance of establishing such a special day had reached the White House, and President Dwight D. Eisenhower officially established Law Day U.S.A. to strengthen the principles of liberty, justice and equality under law which form the foundation of our legal system and our national heritage.

In 1961, the Congress of the United States designated May 1 as the official date for celebrating and commemorating Law Day U.S.A. Although May 1 remains the official date for celebrating Law Day U.S.A., throughout its history and in certain areas of our country, Law Day U.S.A. has evolved into a week-long event.

Federal, state and local organizations including, but not limited to, bar associations, businesses, schools and other civic groups each year plan and produce thousands of programs to promote a further understanding of the rule of law in our society and the constitutional democracy by which we live.

As this week draws to a close, please take a moment to reflect on the many freedoms we as Americans enjoy. Look to other countries throughout the world and compare our legal system and our way of life to our neighbors of the world. We are a nation of law, freedom and justice.

As we celebrate our many freedoms this year, always remember that the freedoms we as Americans enjoy, such as the freedom of religion, freedom of speech, freedom of assembly, freedom of press, freedom of petition, freedom to have and to hold property inviolate, are constitutionally-granted freedoms which form the basis of our legal system and our American way of life.

As Soldiers and civilian employees of the United States, the commemoration and celebration of Law Day U.S.A. should have special meaning since all of us have taken an oath to support and defend the Constitution of the United States, one of the greatest documents ever drafted and the resting place of the freedoms we as a nation hold so dear.

As Soldiers and civilian employees of the United States, let us end this week with renewed energy, spirit, determination, and the knowledge that we are a people truly blessed with many freedoms others do not have and may never have.

We should all be thankful for the opportunity we have to serve our nation and celebrate our many freedoms. We should all be proud of our collective and individual roles in supporting the furtherance of law in our society.

SOA improves military relations

By Spc. Judith O'Toole
School of the Americas

The longer I remain at Fort Benning, the more amazed I am of questions that are constantly asked of me while in uniform.

In short, they concern the patch I wear on my shoulder.

commentary

For close to three years now, I have been assigned to the U. S. Army School of the Americas as a journalist for the school's public affairs office. I came to the school straight out of basic training and advanced individual training and had no idea what SOA was about.

What I have found over these past few years has been amazing. After my first six months, I was able to offer more than just a basic mission-type statement about what we do at the School of the Americas.

The simple answer is that we train Latin American Soldiers in U.S. Army doctrine. What I myself was finding, even with all of the controversy that surrounds the school, was that a lot of Soldiers in other units on post either didn't know much about the school or had a low and very uninformed opinion of SOA.

As a U.S. Army school SOA does what all of the other TRADOC schools do, except more.

Sometimes I get the feeling that even some of the Soldiers assigned to SOA don't altogether realize the importance of the role the school plays in the United States' policy to Latin America.

It is here that SOA does more than other TRADOC schools. By providing courses in Spanish, the school gives the men and women of Latin America's military benefits they would otherwise not have. Although without the school, some Latin American senior military officers would probably still come to the United States for other TRADOC courses, the majority of the school's graduates would probably not have the opportunity because of the language barrier.

To me, this is the most important aspect of SOA. The school trains a great number of officers and enlisted Soldiers. In addition to the senior officer courses, such as the Command and General Staff Officer's Course, the school also trains the Soldiers who are actually pounding the ground and the junior officers who lead them. It is imperative that all of the troops have the benefit of U.S. Army training. The fact is these troops will be trained by someone. It's better for the United States that they are trained by us, rather than by, say, Iran or North Korea.

The training received at SOA is extensive in several ways. First, students are trained in the same doctrine that is used in the other U.S. Army schools, with language being the only real difference.

Second, in addition to the course work, students receive extensive human rights training at SOA. Third, students are given a first-hand look at democracy in action through both their stay at Fort Benning and through civic programs sponsored by the school.

These programs include visits to local government agencies, where students learn about such topics as election and voting procedures, and emergency management and city police departments.

One of the nice things about being assigned to SOA has been being able to learn so much about a part of the world of which I knew so little. I have met and worked with guest instructors from 16 Latin American nations. I have had the opportunity to hear ambassadors and other dignitaries when they come to SOA to speak with the students. Culturally, I have learned about many of the different Latin American customs.

I see the School of the Americas as a great learning experience for both the U.S. Soldiers assigned to it and the students who come to learn from the U.S. Army and from the American people.

It is my hope for our post community to see the students of SOA and welcome them as we would hope to be welcomed if we were studying in a foreign land.

As far as asking me about my patch, I rather enjoy it. I have pride in my unit and don't mind answering any questions that are asked.

545-boss

Dial 545-BOSS is the commander's action line for Soldiers, family members and civilians to call when they have problems or complaints that can't be resolved elsewhere.

While it is not a substitute for the chain of command or for agencies established to provide assistance, the line offers another means of communication between Fort Benning's community and commanders.

Call: The caller recalled that March 13, when the tornados hit downtown in Columbus, the sirens sounded. He said he lives within a quarter mile of the fire station on post but he did not hear the siren go off in his neighborhood. The caller said he would like to know why Fort Benning did not sound the siren and can the problem be corrected?

Director of Threat and Security response:

The Director of Threat and Security contacted the caller and explained to him that the installation's tornado sirens were not sounded because Fort Benning was not endangered from the the tornado in Columbus. He informed the caller the conditions that produced the tornado had already passed, and the weather team was focussing on a second band of storms moving in from the South.

The sirens are only sounded during "code black" and the post was under a tornado watch "code green" which was disseminated through the Adverse Weather Delivery System and the phone tree.

Voluntary leave sought — Laura Williams, a civilian legal clerk with the 29th Infantry Regiment, has been hospitalized for four months. She has exhausted all of her annual and sick leave and is seeking leave donations.

If you would like to donate leave under the Leave and Transfer Program, submit form (FB) 17 to Willie D. Varner, Directorate of Civilian Personnel chief, Management and Employee Relations, Training and Development.

For more information, contact Debra Bertacini at 545-6008.

U.S. Army CID seeks individual — The Criminal Investigation Command is seeking information about a black male with a muscular build, approximately 58 inches tall, reportedly wearing a purple shirt, dark blue jeans and hiking boots. The individual was last seen in the vicinity of the physical training track adjacent to Building 4 April 18 between 7:30 and 8 p.m.

Anyone with information should contact CID Special Agent Karen Cooper at 545-5237 or the Military Police desk at 545-5222.

Card section provides services — If your military identification card is missing, stolen, mutilated or confiscated, call the ID Card Section, located in Building 2618, at 545-4068 or 545-1411. Walk-ins are welcome, but appointments are encouraged.

All Soldiers assigned to Kelley Hill must report to Apache Hall for their ID cards. This facility now has automated cards.

ITB sponsors spring formal — The Infantry Training Brigade will conduct its Spring Formal May 17 at 6 p.m. at the Columbus Convention and Trade Center.

Entertainment will be provided by the band RADAR.

For more information, call 544-9590 or 544-9407.

Post residents to file storm damage claims — Storm damage to Army personnel's property or privately-owned vehicles while located at assigned government quarters may be payable based on the individual circumstances in accordance with Army Regulation 27-20 and Department of the Army Pamphlet 27-162.

For more information, contact the Claims Division, Office of the Staff Judge Advocate, at 545-2285.

Controlled burning set — Saturday and Sunday, if weather permits, the following compartments will be affected by controlled burning: A-9, A-18, C-1, C-2, F-1, G-7. J-3, K-3, M-3, P-1, R-2, T-1, T-2, W-2, Y-1, Y-3, Z-1, BB 1, BB-4, BB-5 and Sand Hill.

Burning will occur in pine stands within these compartments to enhance endangered species' habitat and training areas.

Personnel proposing to use these areas for recreational purposes must vacate these areas prior to 9:30 a.m. daily.

Training units using compartments adjacent to those listed above may experience drift or residual smoke and are reminded to exercise caution while traveling in these areas because of the potential for reduced visibility.

Units utilizing ranges and training areas are reminded to remove flammable debris, such as, pine straw, leaves and trash, from around structures in accordance with USAIC Regulation 210-4, Paragraphs-22, Organizational Maintenance.

For more information, contact Jack Greenlee, Natural Resources Management Branch, at 544-6120.

Red Cross wants volunteers — Applications will be available through May 23 for children ages 13 to 17 wanting to volunteer at Martin Army Community Hospital or with the Red Cross during the summer.

Applications should be returned to the Red Cross, located in Building 1699. For more information, call 687-7246.

Volunteers will answer questions and give out information about pets.

Water safety saves lives

By Col. Thomas Cain
Director of Public Safety

May 18 to 24, the U.S. Coast Guard is sponsoring National Safe Boating Week. Produced by the National Safety Council, its theme is "Life Jackets — They Float, You Don't."

Every year, more than 800 people die in boating-related accidents; and recent reports estimate there are more than 6,900 recreational boating accidents every year.

"Three out of four of the drowning victims were not wearing their life jackets," said Jerry Scannell, president of the National Safety Council.

Here are some tips for using life jackets:

•Buy your own personal life jacket and use it. One size does not fit all. Look at the label; it will provide weight and size information.

•Try it on to check the fit. Once the straps and buckles are secured, it should slip over your head or come above your ears.

•Never use water toys in place of a U.S. Coast Guard-approved life jacket.

•Throw away a life jacket if you find air leakage, mildew or rot.

•Never alter a life jacket. It could lose its effectiveness.

•Check your life jackets yearly for floatation and fit.

•Wear a life jacket to set an example for children while increasing your chances of survival.

Life jackets are not the only aspect of safe boating to consider while on the water. Boating under the influence of alcohol or drugs, operator inattentiveness or carelessness, speeding and passenger carelessness are the leading causes of fatal boating accidents.

Soldiers who intend to spend time boating or fishing should take the time to familiarize themselves with their boast and the areas they intend to use. Great care should also be taken to watch obstacles and people in the water around them.

"The key to safety on the water is operator knowledge and experience," said Scannell. "The best way to get that is by taking a safe boating course."

Seventy-four percent of boating accidents in 1994 involved an operator with no boating instruction.

For information on boating safety classes, call (800) 336-BOAT.

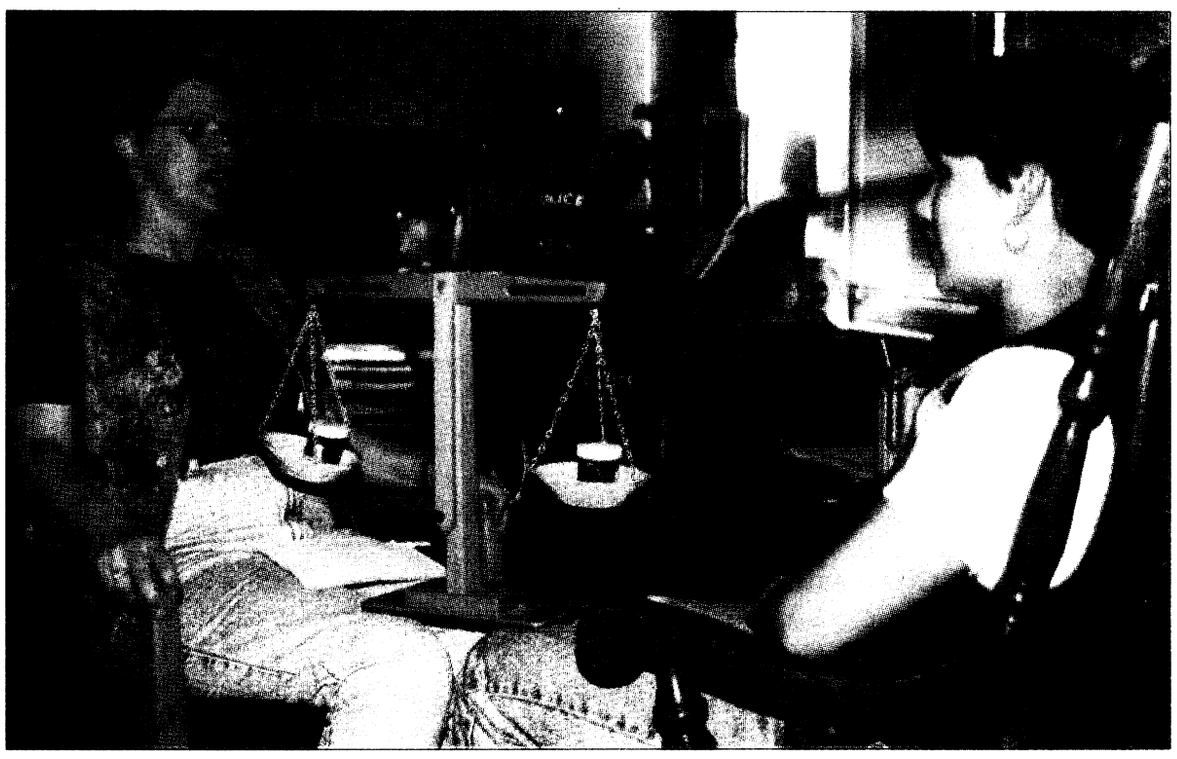
toward improvement and it takes everyone."

McLaney said Ernst also invited local community leaders from Columbus and Phenix City in appreciation of their continuous support.

Among those attending the ceremonies in Washington is Paul Alexander, the executive director of Phenix 2000.

In addition to the award ceremonies, McLaney said members of the Fort Benning contingent will attend a reception in their honor co-hosted by Congressmen Sanford Bishop and Mac Collins.



"The reception is the Congressmen's way of saying 'Congratulations' and they're proud of Fort Benning," McLaney said.

Bishop and Collins will also attend the ceremonies as a way of showing support for not only the installation, but also for the people who strive to make Fort Benning shine, McLaney said.

"They do this every year as a way of showing support," she said, "They are just as proud as we are that Fort Benning is winning."

TERRORISM

SRT conducts training

By Spc. Brian R. Voller
Bayonet staff writer

Fort Benning's Loyd Elementary School fell victim to terrorism April 20 when a parent, upset with the school's principal, took several members of the school's faculty hostage.

The Fort Benning Military Police were called and a hostage negotiator from the Criminal Investigation Command came in to control the situation. After the terrorist killed several hostages and all attempts to negotiate failed, the Commanding General authorized the use of the Special Reaction Team which seized the school and rescued the hostages, but not before the terrorist took his own life.

This scenario was actually a training exercise conducted by the Special Reaction Team in conjunction with the Fort Benning Fire Department, Martin Army Community Hospital, the Military Police, the Fort Benning School System, the Explosive Ordnance Division and the Criminal Investigation Command.

The exercise began when a teacher from the school made a 911 phone call saying only the word "help." Within minutes, several MP cars pulled up to the front door of the school with the Fire Department behind them.

When a member of the Fire Department attempted to get close to the front door, the terrorist role player shot him, forcing the MPs to pull back and call for emergency assistance. Paramedics from MACH arrived on the scene to aid the wounded firefighter. The MPs called CID which immediately dispatched two hostage negotiators who arrived on the scene to discuss the terrorist's demands.

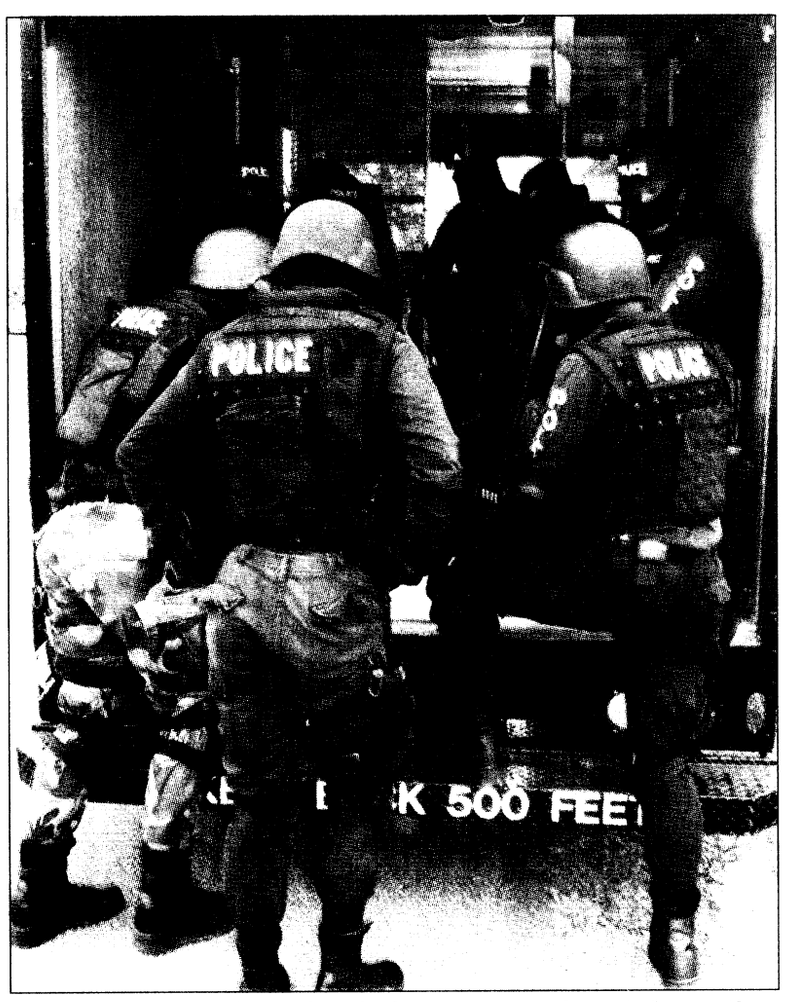
The terrorist demanded an aircraft, one million dollars and safe passage to Lawson Army Airfield. He told the negotiator that he had 10 minutes to comply with his demands or he would begin killing hostages.

Sticking to his schedule, the terrorist became angry when his demands were not met. He grabbed one of the students and shot him. He then told the negotiator that he had another 10 minutes to meet his demands or he would kill another hostage.

After it became clear to the negotiator and members of the Military Police that the terrorist would not surrender unless taken by force, the use of the SRT was authorized.

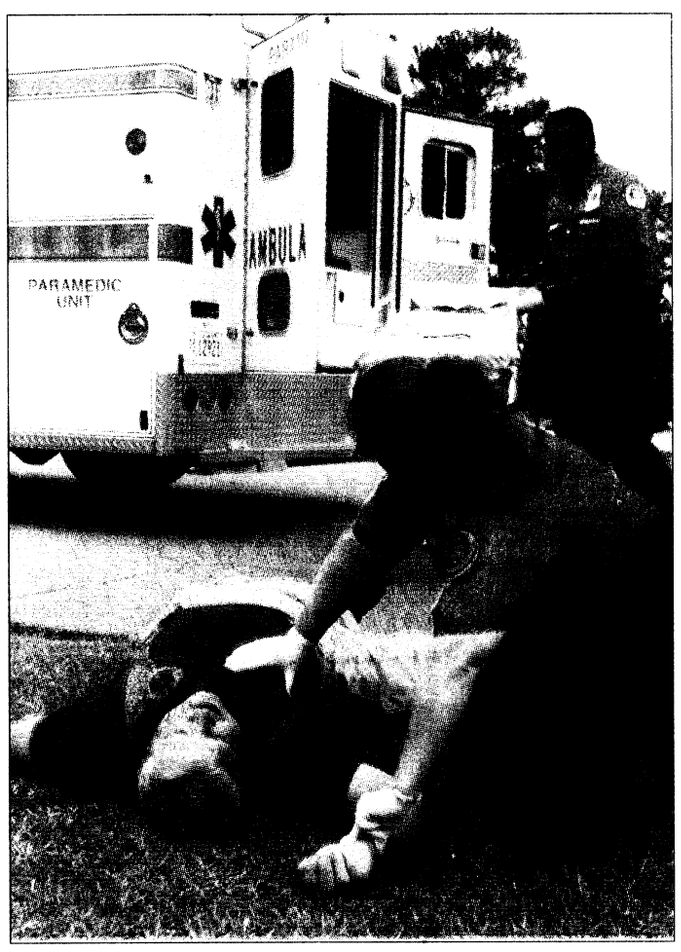
Moving together, the SRT slowly and silently cleared each room in the school, finding two hostages strapped to a make-shift bomb and eventually coming upon the terrorist and the final two hostages. The SRT stormed the room and within seconds, the terrorist had taken his own life and the two hostages were removed from the room safely.

Capt. Michael Nason, commander of the SRT, said the training went well and gave the SRT a chance to experience a situation in a different building.



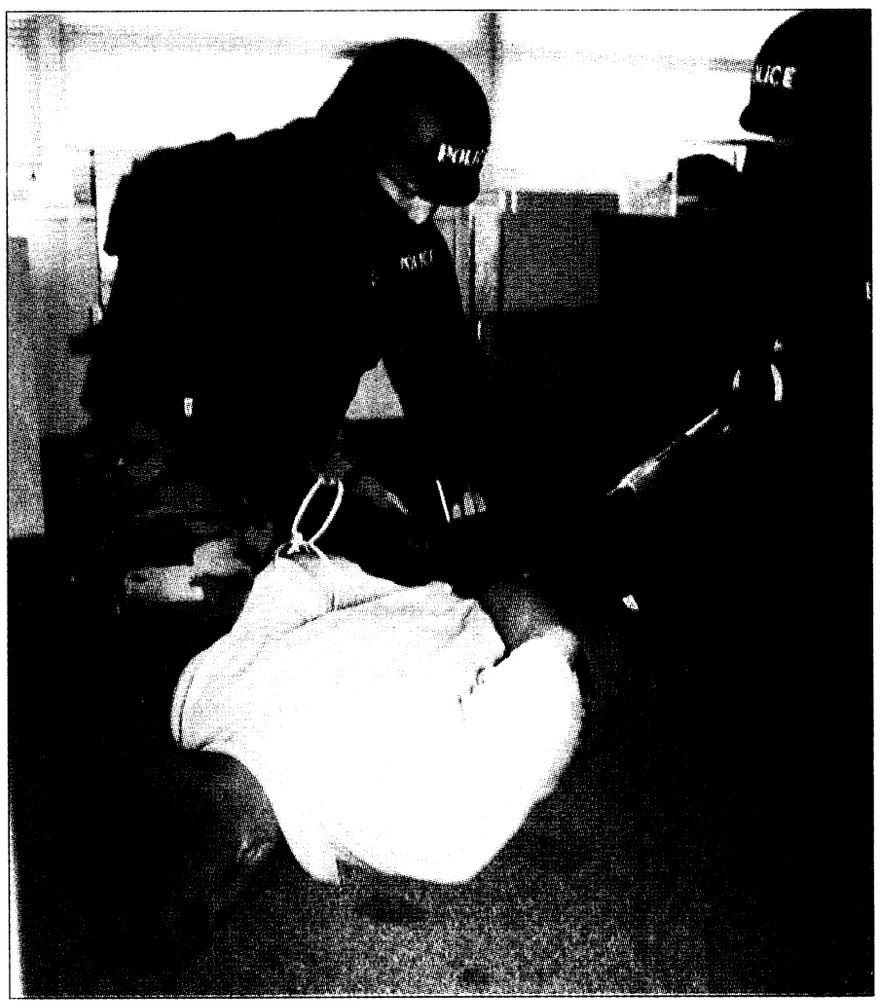
"We've never trained in a school before," Nason said. "We don't expect problems like this to occur in the schools here, but you never can tell what to expect. This was good training, having the teachers role playing came in handy, and the team liked being able to experience a situation in a building like a school."

Dr. Judy Gilliam, principal of Loyd School, who also role played as a hostage, said the exercise was well organized and impressive, but it was also frightening.



"In today's world, it is not totally outrageous that a situation such as this could occur," Gilliam said. "They (the SRT) were no nonsense and completely professional in doing what they had to do. It makes me feel better knowing the SRT is here."

Gilliam also said the exercise raised some interesting questions about how the teachers should conduct themselves in a situation like the one the SRT completed.



"It seemed to me the best option for me in a situation like that would be to try to escape. I would like it if Nason could come and talk to the teachers to tell them what is the best action in a situation like this one because it could happen," Gilliam said. "I learned that when the SRT is sent in, they do not negotiate."

Before entering the school, the team receives information about the terrorist, the hostages and the building layout.

Martin Army Community Hospital paramedics, Meredith Lintner and Charlie Kegler, tend to a role-playing firefighter who was shot by the terrorist.

IOBC conducts land nav

By Dan Kidd
Co. B, 2nd Bn., 11th Inf. Regt., IOBC

"There I was, three kilometers behind enemy lines, with movement to all sides. Armed with my Gerber pocket tool, compass and a sharpened protractor, I shot an azimuth and marched on toward a certain death."

This may be a little exaggerated, but to the Infantry Officers' Basic Course students of Company B, 2nd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment, land navigation was no walk in the woods.

Classroom instruction, followed by two days of continuous practical field exercises, prepared the students for final day- and night-phase testing.

Practice days included four-day events and two night events.

Soldiers traveled over a variety of terrain to learn many skills. Having become familiar with the practice terrain, the students became apprehensive to learn the test would be conducted in a different area.

April 17, all anxieties were put aside as the testing phase began. Trainers from the 2nd Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment, conducted the course on Yankee South land navigation site.

Dan Kidd

Students verify their land navigation point.

The IOBC lieutenants were required to reach six points in the day phase, and three out of five points in the night phase.

Completion of the night phase brought relief to the weary Soldiers. In reflection, the Soldiers walked away with an understanding of the importance of land navigation skills.

IOBC, Class 4-97, will graduate July 25 and apply these newly-sharpened skills as Infantry platoon leaders.

Seventh biennial LRS conference set

4th Ranger Training Battalion

Leaders from every active duty and reserve Long Range Surveillance Unit in the Army are coming to Fort Benning from locations all over the world to participate in the seventh biennial Long Range Surveillance Conference. The conference will be at Fort Benning Tuesday through Thursday.

Since the first conference in 1985, Company D, 4th Ranger Training Battalion, has conducted the event. Company D conducts the Long Range Surveillance Leaders Course, graduating approximately 250 students each year.

This company is also the doctrinal proponent for Long Range Surveillance in the U.S. Army. In this capacity, the company is responsible for establishing current tactics techniques and procedures that LRS units employ. The company commander is anxious to hear what others in the LRS community have to say about their LRS operations.

"We have an excellent chance here to trouble shoot LRS training and come up with some solutions that will work for everyone," said Capt. David P. Anders, company commander "It only happens every two years, so we need to take advantage of this opportunity."

This year's conference will be conducted at the post headquarters building starting at 8 a.m. Tuesday with opening remarks by the commander of the Ranger Training Brigade, Col. Dorian T. Anderson.

During the three-day conference, attendees will hear from a diverse group of speakers, all with one goal in mind — how to best man, equip, prepare and train today's Long Range Surveillance Units for missions in the 21st Century. Speakers include representatives from the Department of the Army; the International Long Range Reconnaissance and Patrol School in Weingarten, Germany; Joint Task Force; the Joint Readiness Training Center; III Corps; the 82nd Airborne Division's Intelligence Officers and the Military Intelligence School at Fort Huachuca, Ariz. Additionally, representatives from Harris and Racal Communications and Litton and Hughes Corporations will be displaying their latest communications and optics equipment for the conference attendees.

The conference will conclude Thursday with closing remarks by Lt. Col. Eric Hutching, commander of the 4th Ranger Training Battalion.

news from the front

By Scott Rollston
498th Medical Company

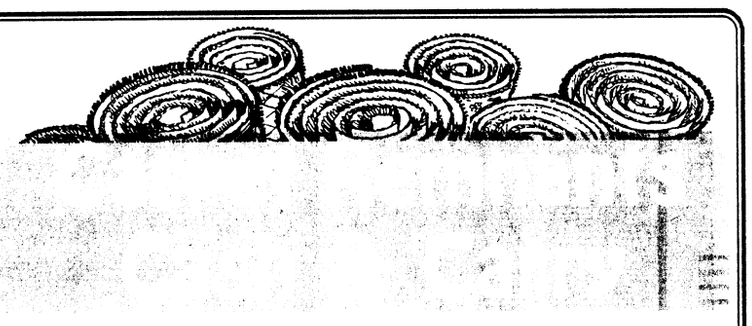
In recent communications with the forward commander, Maj. Tracy Wyatt, it was learned that the 498th Medical Company, Air Ambulance has been working closely with the "NORMEDCOY," which is the term for the Norwegian Ambulance Company located in Blue Factory, Bosnia, Herzegovina.

The Norwegian Ambulance Company is the ground ambulance counterpart operating an armored wheeled vehicle and working together with the 498th on every mission.

Wyatt said their commander has been in the theater for over nine months and will remain in place through October 1997. The two companies are getting along well while providing the most "awesome evacuation team Bosnia has ever seen," Wyatt said.

It was thought that spring had arrived — that was until it snowed for several days last week. The maintenance section took along a new prototype de-icing system, donated by Aircraft Research and Development at Fort Rucker just for this occasion.

Aside from the mission, the troops are doing well. Wyatt said it seems as though the contractor Brown and Root has been successful in creating a livable home away from home. In their off time, the 498th has been involved in "colossal" volleyball with their Norwegian friends. Wyatt said they are secretly putting together a "ringer team" to crush the competition.



Both forward team leaders, 1st Lt. Scott Piecek and 1st Lt. Eric Halvorsen agree to be located with the home team at Blue Factory has its benefits, but they don't want to leave their outposts. It seems as though a once-per-week visit to the Blue Factory for command continuity is just enough.

The rear detachment continues to receive the utmost professional response across Fort Benning in support of the deployed 498th, Wyatt said.

Job Assistance Center sponsors Employer Day

Job Assistance Center

The Job Assistance Center in Soldiers' Plaza will sponsor another Employer Day May 16 from 9 a.m. to noon for the benefit of Soldiers, spouses and other personnel interested in exploring careers in law enforcement, corrections and fire fighting.

"There is a high level of client interest to enter these career fields and an equally strong interest on the part of these employers to recruit Soldiers," Cynthia Anderson, counselor assistant and Employer Day organizer, said.

"Soldiers in many military occupational specialties have the skills, training and experience that may qualify them for employment with public safety departments and organizations," Anderson said. "Our Soldiers belong to the greatest security force in the world and as such, have conducted patrolling, physical security, personnel escort, identity checks, communications, weapons employment, equipment maintenance and accountability.

"Soldiers usually have no problems passing the strict background checks, polygraph tests, psychological and physical evaluations required by these agencies.

"Soldiers have also been placed in difficult situations where they must make quick, accurate evaluations and take action to resolve potentially life-threatening situations. Experience and training have prepared Soldiers to meet the challenges of police and corrections officers and fire fighters," she said.

Representatives from police departments, corrections and fire departments will be in the Job Assistance Center to discuss career opportunities, entrance requirements, training programs, benefits packages and respond to questions.

Attendees should wear duty uniforms or appropriate civilian dress and bring copies of resumes, if they are available.

For more information, contact the Job Assistance Center at 545-2308 or 545-2309.

Community plans events for heritage month

USAIC Public Affairs Office

May is designated as Asian, Pacific Islander American Heritage Month and this year's theme for this observance is "From Small Beginnings Come Great Things."

The Fort Benning community has several events planned to observe these cultures. Some of these events are listed below:

•The post's observance of Asian, Pacific Islander heritage will take place May 7 in Marshall Auditorium, Infantry Hall. A program is scheduled for 11:30 a.m. which includes guest speaker Frederick Pang, assistant secretary for Defense Management Policies, followed by a sampling of cultural foods in Room 20, Infantry Hall.

•A sampling of cultural foods takes place today in the 1st Battalion, 38th Infantry Regiment's, Dining Facility.

•May 16 at 11:30 a.m., a luncheon is scheduled to occur at the 1st Battalion, 19th Infantry Regiment, Infantry Training Brigade's, Dining Facility. Dom Mantio, will be the guest speaker.

Sgt. 1st Class Phillip Epperson, Equal Opportunity advisor, Ranger Training Brigade, believes more people should get involved in ethnic observances.

"All of these observances are important, but we as people aren't willing to accept them for what they are — cultural awareness," he said.

Epperson also stressed the importance of commanders having Soldiers attend ethnic observances.

"It's a matter of trying to bring awareness and understanding to individuals, with Soldiers and civilians," he said. "Having Soldiers attend these observances is important because they help them better understand their fellow Soldiers.

"They help eliminate animosity through understanding of one another."

courts martial

By Charles S. Walters
Criminal Law Division, CID

va q&a

Department of Veterans Affairs

Following are representative questions answered daily by Veterans Affairs counselors. Full information is available at any VA office.

Q. I am insured under Veterans Mortgage Life Insurance. At what age will my coverage end?

A. Regulations mandate that coverage cease when you reach age 70.

Q. May a veteran obtain a VA loan for the purchase of property in a foreign country if the veteran has permanently moved overseas?

A. No. VA-guaranteed loans may only be approved for property located in the United States, but that does include property in U.S. territories and possessions.

Q. I received a certificate of eligibility for a VA home loan. Does this mean that I have a guarantee of approval?

A. No. While VA guarantees part of a home loan, the veteran must still find a willing private lender who is required to take into consideration the applicant's credit history and income.

Q. Does VA's guarantee on a property mean the government is satisfied the house is structurally sound? We have found cracks in the foundation of the older home we bought last year and are concerned this could lead to future problems.

A. No. VA's guarantee of the home loan is based on an appraisal, but the appraiser's job is not the same as a home inspector. VA affixes warning statements to this effect on the VA certificate of reasonable value. In new construction loans, VA inspectors ensure the construction conforms to the contract specifications. Home purchasers should make their own arrangements for professional structural inspection if desired.

Q. I am in the process of obtaining a divorce. Can my divorced spouse require me by court order to maintain her as a beneficiary of my VA life insurance policy?

A. Under your government life insurance contract, you have the right to designate or change a beneficiary at any time. You can do this without the knowledge or consent of your designated beneficiary or beneficiaries. However, all change requests must be provided to the VA in writing.

Q. Can premiums on my National Service Life Insurance policy be waived if I become totally disabled?

A. Yes. NSLI policy holders who become totally disabled before their 65th birthday and are likely to remain so for six or more months are entitled to waiver of premiums. You may contact VA toll-free at 800-669-8477 for an application and additional information. You may still file a claim if you are older than age 65, but the total disability must have started before reaching age 65.

Q. I cashed in my VA insurance and now I would like to have it reinstated. Is this possible?

A. No. Once a VA insurance policy is surrendered, it cannot be reinstated.

Q. What is the maximum amount of loan value of my VA insurance?

A. You may borrow up to 94 percent of the cash value of your policy.

Q. If I die, how does my spouse go about collecting on my Veterans Group Life Insurance Policy?

A. The beneficiary should notify the Office of Service member's Group Life Insurance by calling its toll-free number, 800-419-1473, to get instructions on filing a claim and the documentation needed, such as a death certificate.

Post schools celebrate the military child

A mini Army swarmed the field beside White Elementary School Tuesday as the post celebrated the Month of the Military Child.

The students, many dressed in their parents' uniforms, went through a round-robin of activity stations. The students received instruction on physical training, map and compass reading, drill and ceremony and ammunition safety.

"So many of the children are fascinated by the Army," Evelyn Branan, a teacher at White Elementary School said. "The students know their parents are in the Army, but a lot of them don't understand what it is their parents really do all day."

McGruff, the crime dog, assisted by Cpl. Wendell Watts, who spoke on McGruff's behalf, offered the children a variety of safety tips.

"The family is an important part of the Soldiers' lives and our role is to ensure their safety," McGruff said.

But from the students' perspective, they said that it was just a fun day.

"I thought it was cool the way the dogs attacked the trainers during the dog show," said 10-year-old White student Jack Gray. "And I liked it when the rangers taught me how to do an elbow smash."

Although being a military child can be difficult, 11-year-old Renee Jones said she enjoys it.

"It's hard making new friends, but I have cousins whose parents aren't in the military and I think I have more fun."

White Elementary School students prepare to obtain their pace count as part of their land navigation training.

School board officials meet

By Spc. Lisa M. Hibbert
Bayonet staff writer

Fort Benning School Board officials met Monday to discuss current happenings in the system.

The month opened with examples of the use of technological advances in the system. Alice Skinner and Elaine Perkins gave a presentation to the board on the improvement of resource management, and record keeping throughout the school system will be presented to the board. They showed the computer equipment that is helping to improve the lives of the employees of the Fort Benning Schools System.

Dr. Dell McMullen, schools superintendent, presented a briefing to the members.

"As you recall, the Fort Benning Schools were the first stateside school to undergo Department of Defense monitoring in special education," McMullen said. "Dr. Carl Grube, chairman of the team, stated that we were the first system in 10 years that met all of the standards."

While at Fort Benning, the evaluation team conducted 46 interviews and looked at 46 files over a four-day period. Out of the 200 monitoring standards, the schools had only one area partially met.

The schools did receive an exemplary citation for Child Find efforts and the post was commended for establishing and maintaining positive and collaborative relationships with the Exceptional Family Member Program.

McMullen highlighted events that happened during the month of April.

"This has been an exciting month in the schools as we have celebrated the Month of the Military Child and Law Day," McMullen said. "Activities celebrating the military child included a family night supper at Wilson Elementary School, Derby Day at Stowers Elementary School, Arbor Day at White Elementary School, a Soldiers' breakfast at Loyd Elementary School, Active Parenting at Stowers, a Sock Hop and family night at Dexter Elementary School and a family picnic at White."

Speaking about Law Day, McMullen thanked members of the Staff Judge Advocate's Office for their support.

"We had great participation from both elementary and middle school students; in fact, the essays from Faith Elementary School were the best in memory," McMullen said. "Winning essays and posters received savings bonds for their work."

Vickie Rogers, principal of Dexter, attended a meeting in Baltimore, Md., representing the Department of Defense Education Activity as the National Distinguished Principal of the Year.

School board officials approved the March consolidated lunchroom fund statement.

The monthly net income was $15,564, the current year-to-date income is $56,966 and the current fund equity is $170,866.

Board members attending the meeting were: Col. Michael Bingham, school board president; Chaplain (Maj.) Robert Thompson, chaplain representative; Lt. Col. Stephanie Wilson, attorney advisor; Rhonda Zerger, Dexter School representative; Sgt. Joe Todd, Loyd School representative; Dr. Dell McMullen, superintendent and school board secretary; Alice Skinner, Director of Logistics and Support Services.

Child abuse awareness

Conference gives professionals ways to help

By Spc. Lisa M. Hibbert
Bayonet staff writer

Hundreds of professionals that deal with victims of child abuse attended a training conference, Partners in Prevention and Intervention: Abuse and Neglect — A Systems Perspective, at the Columbus Iron Works and Convention and Trade Center Monday through Wednesday.

The program was sponsored by the Fort Benning Family Advocacy Program and coordinated by the University of Georgia Cooperative Extension Service.

Conducted in the Columbus Iron Works, facilitators at the program offered tips and strategies to a variety of professionals in the community that deal with victims of child abuse.

Session topics ranged from identifying gang involvement, effective interventions with batterers, the shaken-baby syndrome and raising children in a socially toxic environment.

Rebecca S. Welch, FAP manager, and Joann Cavis of the Cooperative Extension Service founded this conference in 1989.

Fort Benning Management Association to discuss stress.— Fort Benning Management Association's regular monthly lunch and meeting will take place Thursday at 11:30 a.m. in the Corregidor Room of the Fort Benning Officer's Club.

The guest speaker will be Yvonne Wilbanks of the Directorate of Community Activities' Alcohol and Drug Abuse Prevention and Control Program. She will discuss stress management.

The meeting is open to members and non- members.

For more information, contact Judy Hodder at 545-4016 or John Machovec at 545-1775.

Reward money available for information — The U.S. Army is offering a $400 reward for information leading to the apprehension and conviction of the person(s) responsible for the larceny of one Epson 3600T notebook computer and one IBM Thinkpad 350C notebook computer.

The theft occurred between 6:15 p.m. March 21 and 7:30 a.m. March 24. Persons unknown removed the property belonging to Ward 4A, Martin Army Community Hospital.

Anyone with information should call Special Agent Karen Cooper at 545-5237 or the Military Police desk at 545-5222.

The reward expires Oct. 1.

AER gets on the net — Headquarters, Army Emergency Relief, now has a website for public information and awareness. AER can be reached at http://www.aerhq.org.

For additional information, contact the installation AER office at Building 2643, Soldiers' Plaza, or call 545-2536 Monday through Friday from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m.

Post schools seek help — The Fort Benning Schools System is currently recruiting substitute teachers. Substitute teachers are utilized on an as-needed or on-call basis during the absences of classroom teachers. No prior experience is necessary, however, individuals must have a four-year college degree to qualify.

Applications may be obtained from the Fort Benning Schools Human Resources Office located at 201 Custer Rd., Room 17, from 7:30 a.m. to 4 p.m. Monday through Friday, excluding holidays.

For more information, call the Human Resources Office at 545-3123.

Job assistance has availabilities — Job opportunities are now available with Carmike Theaters. Needed are managers, concession workers, game operators, cashiers and custodial workers.

Jobs will be filled quickly to staff for the new Family Fun Center being constructed off Bradley Park Drive in North Columbus. The entertainment mall is to be called the Hollywood Connection and house many forms of entertainment and recreation under one roof.

For more information about job availabilities, visit the Job Assistance Center, Soldiers' Plaza, Building 2634, or call JAC at 545-2308 or 545-2309.

ARMY FAMILY ACTION PLAN
ISSUE SHEET

Do you have ideas on how Fort Benning can improve the quality of life for the Army family (soldiers, family members, retirees, Department of the Army civilians and reservists)? If so, complete this form and return to the Family Unit Network Center, Bldg 359. ATTN: AFAP Coordinator, or call 545-5602. Forms must be complete by May 5.

Our local AFAP Symposium provides an opportunity for installation leaders to meet with members of the Army family and will be held May 13. Valid issues are forwarded to specific work groups for discussion and possible resolution. Issues must have a measurable end result and impact the total Army family or a particular category of the Army family. Personal issues are not considered valid issues. The AFAP is not a forum to address personal complaints, but rather to identify those issues that concern and impact the total or majority of the Army family

ISSUE TITLE

Post recognizes gifts of nurses

Martin Army Community Hospital

The following events are planned for Nurses' Week Monday through Thursday at Martin Army Community Hospital. The theme for this year is "Caring From the Heart."

•Tuesday — Nursing staff ice cream social,

•Wednesday — Visits to Fort Benning elementary schools,

•Wednesday — Nursing staff breakfast,

•Thursday — Nurses' Week reception and

•All week — Nursing memorabilia and elementary school artwork displays in the MACH's Main Lobby and the Dining Facility.

The Department of Nursing Nurses' Week Committee will conduct a series of activities to celebrate National Nurses' Week.

Wednesday, nursing representatives from MACH will visit the Fort Benning elementary schools to talk about nursing with second-grade students. Several members of the nursing staff dressed in various nursing uniforms will visit the classes to talk with the students.

Each student will receive a nurse-theme coloring book. The students have been asked to draw pictures of "what nurses do" to be displayed in the hospital during Nurses' Week.

The Nurses' Week reception will be Thursday at 2:30 p.m. in the hospital dining facility. The program will include a guest speaker, and awards will be presented for nursing excellence and for the Nurses' Week t-shirt design contest.

For additional information on Nurses' Week activities, contact Maj. Maria Rivera at 544-1621.

Lawyers offer tips on will preparation, disposition of property

State Bar of Georgia

The following information is intended to inform people about the necessity of wills, but not to advise on any specific legal matter. Individuals should consult their attorneys for more specific information.

Who needs a will?

Everyone owning property who wishes to exercise control over the property's disposition after death should have a will regardless of the property's value. Of course, the larger the estate, the greater the need for expert estate planning and a valid, up-to-date will.

With a will, you decide how your property will be distributed. You may make any disposition of your property not inconsistent with the laws or contrary to the policy of the state of Georgia. If you die without a valid will, your assets will be distributed according to a rigid statutory formula which makes no allowances for your personal wishes.

In some cases, the state statute will not direct that your property be distributed as you would have distributed it under a will.

A well-prepared will often reduces your estate taxes. After death, however, relatively little can be done to alter the tax status of an estate. Tax consequences depend, of course, upon the individual case and you should discuss them with your lawyer or financial advisor.

Subject to certain limitations, you can choose the individual, bank or trust company to serve as executor or co-executors of your estate, to manage and settle your estate according to the law and the terms of your will. Without a will, a court-appointed administrator would serve.

A will enables you to eliminate unnecessary expenses and court costs involved in the administration of an estate without a will. For instance, bond premiums can be avoided by simply stating in your will that your executor need not give bond. In addition, real estate and other assets may be sold without court proceedings if your will authorizes it.

Trusts can be established to lower taxes and to provide for financial management for the benefit of your family or others with the use of a will.

You can make gifts to charity through your will.

Dying without a will

As mentioned above, if you fail to make a will, Georgia's inheritance statute will determine who gets your property.

For example, the property of a husband who dies survived by a wife and three children will be divided in four equal shares for each of his heirs. The property of a person who dies without a spouse or descendants will be divided among his or her parents and siblings.

In addition, the court will appoint an administrator, from persons designated by law, to manage and settle your estate. This cost of administering your estate is often far greater than if you had paid for the cost of a well-prepared will. When there is no will, the administration of an estate is often complex and costly.

Formal requirements

A will is the legal declaration of a person's intention for the disposition of his or her property after his or her death. The laws of each state set forth the formal requirements for a legal will. In Georgia:

•You, the maker of the will (called the testator), must be at least 14-years-old.

•You must be of sufficient mind and memory to realize you are making a will disposing of your property.

•The will must be in writing (for only in extreme instances during the last stages of illness does Georgia law provide for an oral will).

•A valid will must be witnessed by at least two witnesses in the special manner provided by law.

•It is necessary to follow exactly the technical formalities required for the execution of a will.

Disposition of property

A testator, by his or her will, may make any disposition of his or her property not inconsistent with the laws or contrary to the policy of the state of Georgia. Except for certain restrictions which apply to charitable gifts only, in Georgia, a testator may bequeath his or her entire estate to strangers, to the exclusion of his or her spouse and children.

In such cases, however, the spouse, on behalf of herself or himself and any minor children, may apply to the court for the part of the decedent's estate sufficient to support her or him and the minor children for 12 months.

While any real or personal property may be transferred by a will, there are some particular interests in property which may not be transferred because the right of the owner terminates automatically upon his or her death. A life estate and property owned in joint tenancy with right of survivorship are two examples.

Probate expenses

Unlike some states, in Georgia, there is no need to avoid probate. Court costs are low and procedures are simple. In fact, a will reduces expenses.

Lawyers usually set their fees based on hourly rates. The amount of time needed to prepare a will depends on the complexity of each case.

Validity

One's will does not become final until death and may be changed or amended by signing a new will or "codicil," which is simply an amendment executed with the same formalities as a will.

A will's terms cannot be changed by writing something in or crossing something out after it has been executed.

Under Georgia law, unless the will specifically states otherwise: a child born or adopted after the will has been made revokes your will, divorce revokes your will and marriage revokes your will. All changes in the circumstances of a testator require a careful reconsideration of all provisions of the will and may make a change advisable.

Life insurance

Life insurance is only one kind of property that a person may own. A will is still needed to dispose of the rest of one's property to the intended beneficiaries.

Moreover, if the life insurance policy is payable to the estate of the insured, the disposition of the proceeds may be directed by will. (If a policy is payable to an individual, however, the will of the insured has no effect on the proceeds.) Also, life insurance proceeds are generally subject to estate taxes.

Joint ownership

While joint ownership in some cases is a useful legal device, it is not a substitute for a will. Besides causing adverse tax consequences, a joint tenancy does not provide for the distribution of the joint property in the event of a common disaster.

Drafting a will

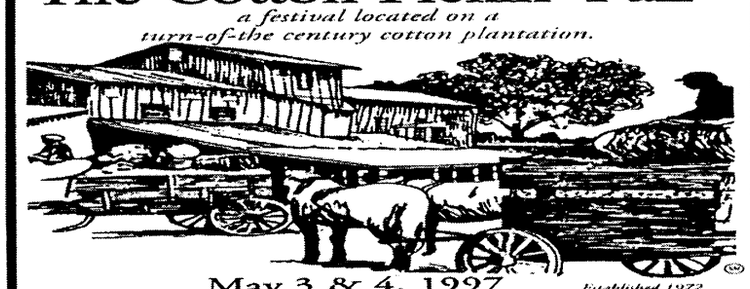
Drafting a will involves making decisions requiring professional judgment which can be obtained only by years of training, experience and study. Only the practicing lawyer can avoid the innumerable pitfalls and advise the course best suited for each situation.

You should avoid using do-it-yourself wills as they may create many problems.

Living wills

The State of Georgia recognizes the right of a competent adult to make a written directive, known as a living will, instructing his or her physician to withhold or withdraw life-sustaining procedures in the event of a terminal condition.

There are certain specific limitations on the contents, execution and witnessing of a living will and you should consult attorney if you wish to have one prepared.



Suggestions

A will signed in another state will usually be valid in Georgia. However, if you have moved here from another state, it is wise to have your will reviewed by a Georgia lawyer in order to ensure that it is properly executed according to Georgia laws and that your executor is qualified to serve in this state.

An improperly executed will may be void. Thus, be sure that you sign your will in the presence of your attorney who knows exactly how the will should be signed.

The Tax Reform Act of 1981 and subsequent tax laws made sweeping changes in the federal estate and gift tax laws. If your present will has not been reviewed by your attorney since 1981, it should be reviewed as soon as possible to determine what, if any, action should be taken in light of the new laws.

Flouride facts

Fort Benning, like most other communities, introduces fluoride into its water system during the purification process.

The benefits of adding fluoride to one's water system and the prevention of tooth decay has been well documented throughout the 20th century. Fluoridation has been determined to be the most cost-effective method of providing protection and has the benefit of reaching all segments of a population, regardless of age.

Hopefully, the information listed below will help you, our customer, understand the need for the Directorate of Public Works to provide this service.

Q: Is tooth decay a problem in America?

A: Yes, tooth decay continues to be a significant oral health problem which is preventable in most cases, according to the American Dental Association. Tooth decay is, by far, the most prevalent and costly of oral health problems among all age groups.

It is also the principle cause of tooth loss from early childhood through middle age when tooth loss from periodontal disease is also a major concern.

Q: Can adults benefit from fluoridation?

A: Yes, research has shown that the tooth decay preventive effects of fluoride are not limited to children but adults obtain substantial benefits, also.

Q: Can fluoridation provide long-term benefits?

A: Yes, studies over the past 50 years show fluoridation plays a protective role against dental decay throughout life.

One example of the benefits was documented in New York where 16 year olds who had been exposed to fluoridated water for six years had 41 percent fewer decayed teeth than those in a nearby non-fluoridated community.

It does not matter how you get fluoride, whether it's through your drinking water, supplements, toothpaste, mouth rinse or your health care professional. You can be confident DPW is making it easier as we help you fight tooth decay by providing fluoride in the installation's drinking water.

Post physician takes top field level honor

By Lt. Col. Ken Franklin
Martin Army Community Hospital

A family physician at Martin Army Community Hospital to receive the 1997 Parke-Davis Teacher Development Award.

Cpt. J. Eddie Needham, a physician at the Aviation Family Practice Clinic, was one of 12 recipients selected from a pool of 42 applicants from family medicine programs across the country.

The annual award is given to family physicians in full-time clinical practice, recently graduated from residencies, who give significant portions of their time to teaching activities. Selection was made by a special subcommittee of the American Academy of Family Physicians Foundation.

The award which includes a $2,000 cash grant, will be officially presented at the Fellowship Convocation Ceremony of the 1997 AAFP Annual Assembly in Chicago this September.

Saying I do

Couples need counseling before getting married

By Robert R. Davidson
Family Life Chaplain Training Program

Are you planning to get married or remarried soon? Then you might find premarital or remarital counseling helpful while you prepare for that big event.

Recent data shows 60 percent of couples have some form of premarital counseling.

Clergy provide most premarital counseling. Fort Benning policy requires a minimum of four hours of counseling for couples wanting a wedding on post.

A chaplain does not have to do the counseling. There are other counselors equally qualified to help you prepare for your marriage. Chaplains believe that premarital counseling is of value to all couples. The chaplain or pastor conducting your wedding may require additional sessions with you.

Attending the sessions will not prevent future conflict or possible divorce. That is impossible. However, the prewedding sessions make couples aware of their interactional pattern and the dynamics in their relationship.

Premarital and remarital counseling described in metaphorical terms can be helpful. Each couple is different, therefore, it is like two rivers merging. It is an endeavor to help the couple navigate the river's course. It helps them prepare to negotiate the dams and sandbars.

Goals

There are several goals in premarital and remarital counseling. The order of importance differs with each couple's needs and strengths.

It is important that each partner be able to clarify and establish the "I" position. Can each speak for him or herself?

As the sessions progress, each person learns to express his or her thoughts, feelings, beliefs and fantasies. For a successful marriage, it is imperative for each partner to have a separate identity. This enables him or her to respect and recognize appropriate flexible boundaries.

As the counseling process helps each person clarify who he or she is, the partner gains a clearer picture of his or her perspective mate. This helps each mate to understand the uniqueness of the other's personality.

Reducing anxiety

Often as couples move toward the wedding, their anxiety level climbs. They may have questions whether the marriage will work. It might turn out like other marriages they have seen — both successful and unsuccessful.

The counseling process can help the couple gain some skills that will aid the relationship's growth and development.

There are at least four types or models of marriages. Some couples find it exciting to explore the various models. Some models tend to be more successful than others and the counselor can help the couple while they explore.

Communication

We know that a marriage will succeed or fail based on the ability to communicate effectively or negatively. Sixty-five percent of failure or success of marriages depends on the communication process.

The counseling process helps the couples awareness of their thoughts, feelings,\ and behavior a. they communicate. Each couple has a unique communication process and the counseling can help them refine and develop it together.

Many couples have areas that they know they need or want to talk about, but just don't seem to do it. The most helpful aspect of the counseling process is that it enables the couple to discuss those areas which they could not or have not talked about.

Prediction

At no time is it the role of the counselor to predict the couples marital success. However, he or she can be extremely helpful by making observations about particular patterns or dynamics in the relationship that may be areas of potential conflict. She or he can recommend appropriate times to go for marital therapy.

When couples have serious unresolved conflict, it may be a warning signal of a high risk for further conflict or divorce. The counselor may urge delay or suggest reconsideration. However, at no time is it the role of the counselor to decide for the couple.

Through the counseling process, couples will be able to clarify and evaluate their own levels of commitment toward their relationship.

This is an important goal because commitment helps couples deal with difficulties, trials, stressors and traumatic life experiences. It is the one area that helps couples and families survive the turbulent waters during life's experiences.

Spirituality

Most couples have some religious background and traditions. The counselor helps the couple examine what values and traditions they want as they join in marriage.

Paradoxically, chaplains find that many individuals run away from their family traditions, but attempt to re-establish them in some form or other, after they are married. It is a good and healthy practice to discuss or deal with this area before the wedding.

We find that some couples can discuss and work through these areas on their own. However, the trained counselor or chaplain can help the couple be more productive with their time and energy.

If you go to premarital or remarital counseling, it is your time. The individual that you seek is there for you. He or she will help you do what you want to do, but do it more effectively.

You will be a step ahead of others who normally seek a Justice of the Peace.

Youth groups to meet — Members of Positive Attitudes Relating to You and Children Living Under the Bible are reminded these two groups will meet at their regular times tomorrow.

New members are always welcome.

CLUB is for girls ages 5 years through the sixth grade, and special homemaking skills are taught. The group meets at 11 a.m. in Building 2521 and joins PARTY, which is for boys and girls ages five years through sixth grade, at noon in Building 2522.

The program includes bible study, music crafts, recreation and refreshments.

Church offers counseling seminar — There will be a pre-marriage seminar for couples planning to be married in the Catholic church. The seminar will be May 18 at 1 p.m. in the Religious Education Center, Building 2522.

To register, call 545-5508.

Post offers a new bible study class — The Adult I Sunday School Class is beginning a new study on the creation. The study will include an overview of creation in the Book of Genesis, the age of the Earth, dinosaurs and the Bible, Job and Leviathan, the theory of evolution and the Bible and the impact of the flood.

The class begins at 9:30 a.m. each Sunday in Building 2521 and is ends at 10:30 a.m. Everyone is invited to attend this class and participate in the discussions.

The class will be based on video tapes by Dr. Kent Hovind of Pensacola, Fla., who is the president of Creation Ministries. Outlines of the classes will be provided.

For more information, call 545-4715.

DEPRESSION

The light gives power to overcome

By Xuan Ngoc Tran
1st Battalion, 10th Field Artillery

The word depression can mean different things to different people. Some use it so commonly they relate it to being disappointed or hurt or discouraged, often by minor problems.

A good working definition of depression would be a feeling of sadness and dejection, resulting in an increasingly pessimistic outlook on life. It is usually accompanied by such symptoms as social withdrawal, decreased motivation, sleep disorders, increased anxiety and critical thoughts.

If you are a depressed person, proceed with hope to find freedom from depression. We can find solutions for our depression in an imperfect and fallen world.

Elijah, the prophet of God, was depressed on a long journey when running for his life. He was a man subject to like passions as we. Yet, in time of despair and sadness, he found strength and hope in God.

I Kings states that Elijah met Ahab, the king, without fear and faced the 450 prophets of Baal and stood alone on Mount Carmel. He called fire down, and it consumed the burnt sacrifice, the wood, the stones, the dust and the water in the trench around the altar. He thought surely this demonstration on Carmel would end idolatry, but instead, he found Jezebel plotting against his life.

She sent messengers to Elijah with an oath declaring that within 24 hours, she would have him killed to avenge the slaughter of her priests.

The Bible says he arose and ran for his life. When he came to Beersheba, he went a day's journey into the desert. Then he prayed to God that he may die.

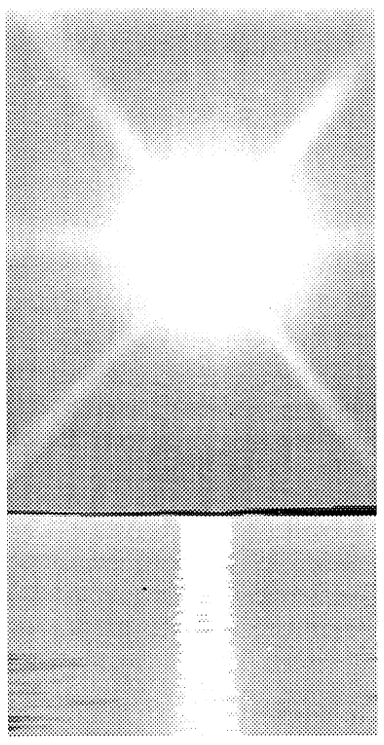
"It is enough! Now, O Lord, take my life, for I am no better than my father!"

This is the language of disappointment, discouragement and defeat. When faith dies, every good and noble thing dies with it. In Elijah, we see man at his best.

Here is humanity at its best, and yet, how poor and weak it is. We can never thoroughly understand the feelings of a man unless we take into account the sources and the occasions which generate them, and try to put ourselves in his place.

To cope with depression best, we must remember life on this earth was never intended always to be easy and simple. However, what we do know is that we can trust in God during our worst moments, and it is to him we must turn in time of depression.

The Bible states that an angel touched him. The angel watched and protected Elijah while he was sleeping. His impatience and faithlessness did not diminish the loving care and tenderness of God. The merciful God answered the prophet's prayer in the form of physical refreshment.



God's provision for the prophet — the sleep that came over him, as over a tired child, and the food that was prepared by angel's hands — "A cake baked on the coals."

Elijah's prayer was evidently uttered under the influence of physical exhaustion and discomfort. He not only had a long journey and exposure to the sun, but also he lacked food and drink.

In these times, God alone is our comfort and strength. Even when we are too weak to fight, we can lean on him. It is often when we recognize our weakness that God's greatest strength becomes available.

God knows our frailties, takes pity on us and makes provisions for our bodies. The refreshment which Elijah received was from a supernatural source. The bread and water came to him with the word and touch of the angel.

Elijah went on a 40-day journey to Horeb, on the strength of that refreshment. He heard the "still small voice" of almighty God that gave him peace, comfort and hope to live and serve God. We too, are journeying to Horeb, the mount of God, and the journey is too great for us.

Without divine help, without supernatural foods, we will faint by the way.

Are you feeling depressed today? There is hope for you to find freedom from depression. Jesus Christ can set you free from all sadness, despair, disappointment and fear.

He invites you to come to him to find rest and peace in the midst of your depression.

Learn how to praise the Lord through it all

By Tim Atkinson
203rd Forward Support Battalion

"Praise is a weapon that no amount of depression, selfpity, or bitterness can withstand. When practiced daily to glorify God, it dispels all powers of darkness," said Sharon Roberts. I've found as I take time to give praise to God, his power heals me emotionally, strengthens me physically and builds me up spiritually.

The scriptures exhort us, "Through him then, let us continually offer up a sacrifice of praise to God, that I , the fruit of our lips that give thanks to His name," (Hebrews 1.3:15). I remember the first time I started practicing the power of praise in my life. My car had just broken down. I remember taking time to praise God as I stood beside my broken down Fiat. The problem of the car wasn't what motivated me to praise God. I wasn't happy it had broken down. It was the knowledge that God was faithful.

My decision to praise him in spite of the problem was my inspiration. Sometimes praise is a sacrifice. It is not always easy. This reference as well as Psalm 34 stated to continually let his praises be in our mouths.

When I was in airborne training getting ready to jump, my temptation was to pray fearful prayers on the one-way trip, Instead, I've found once I've asked God for his help, my prayer should change to prayers of thanks and praise that he has heard me. Praise is the language of faith.

"Praise you Father, for a safe jump," I muttered each time I was tempted to fear. "Without faith it is impossible to please God," (Hebrews 11:6). Praise gets our minds off the problems and helps us focus on the answer to our problems.

Acts 17 tells the account of Paul and Silas' imprisonment for preaching the good news of Jesus. They had been beaten and chained. At midnight, instead of Silas complaining and blaming Paul and God for their trouble, they prayed and sang hymns of praise to God. The foundations of the prison shook with an earthquake and the chains of Paul and Silas as well as the rest of the prisoners, fell off.

Our deliverance may not always be quite so dramatic, but the power of praise will work for us as well. Not only did God deliver them, but the rest of the prisoners had an opportunity to see God's deliverance. The jailer became a believer in Jesus. They baptized him, as well as his whole household, that very night.

Brother Lawrence practiced the presence of God as he washed the pots and pans. It wasn't that he worked in a high position — he often found himself on kitchen police duty, as well as other menial chores. It was his joyful spirit and not the ordained ministers who changed the whole atmosphere of the monastery. This lowly monk made the difference.

An attitude of praise is contagious. Let's make a quality decision to use our mouths to praise God. It will be a blessing to us as well as being a good witness to others.

If you need some material to help you along in your praise journey, try the book of Psalms.

Catholics celebrate the Lord's ASCENSION

By Vincent deP Burns
Infantry Training Brigade

"So then the Lord Jesus, after he had spoken to them, was taken up into heaven, and sat down at the right hand of God (Mark 16:19)."

Where was Jesus during the 40 days after Easter, when he appeared to his disciples? The human mind is curious and wants to know.

Was he someplace in Palestine and did he come from that specific place to be with his disciples? The Catholic tradition teaches that Jesus was with the father. It was from there he made himself visible and tangible to those whom he especially loved among his followers.

Did Jesus then ascend to heaven at the moment of his resurrection? Consider his meeting with Mary Magdalene on Easter morning. Jesus tells Mary not to cling to him. Things are not the way they used to be. There is no longer the ordinary intimacy and affection of earth. Jesus' place is now with the father.

He spoke to Mary Magdalene of his ascension.

"I have not yet ascended. Go to my brothers and say to them: I am ascending to my father and your father, to my God and your God (John 20:17)."

There are probably various explanations of this, but the central message is clear. Resurrection implies being with the father.

In St. Luke's account, our Lord does not suddenly disappear. He ascends on high.

The story of the ascension is very simple. There is no fanfare or fireworks or angelic music, but only a modest indication of where Jesus was going: to the father. He ascended for a short while until a cloud hid him from sight. The cloud signifies the presence of God (Luke 9:34 - 35).

The message of the gospel is not that Jesus, after being hidden by the cloud, went on up through the atmosphere until he finally came to the father. Christ's glorified humanity does not pass through distances as we do.

The father, or heaven, is not "above." The notion of "above" was chosen because heaven, with its light, its unlimited space and its freedom, is an accurate symbol of the place of God. But the father to whom Jesus went is not bound to any place (John 4:24).

So, we must leave aside our concepts of space, as difficult as that is. What we know is that Jesus as man is with the father. We do not know what is the nature of this existence.

We can only be satisfied with the scriptural expression, "sitting at the right hand of the father." Even this is a metaphor. The father has no "right hand." But we understand the glory that is indicated by this expression.

The ascension tells us only this, that Jesus is with the father, and so will be those who follow him.

Doing more than the minimum challenges

By Lt. Col.Vincent de P. Burns
Infantry Training Brigade

The Beatitudes (Matthew 5:1-12) were spoken to a people who lived by the law.

There was nothing more important to them than to keep God's commandments, to do what God wanted them to do and not to do whatever God did not want them to do.

This is what it took to be a good person and gain eternal life in heaven and to avoid eternal punishment in hell. That was the minimum.

That mentality upset Christ.

What is the minimum effort that has to be put forth? What can I get away with before my action becomes a sin? This is always a favorite question of young people who are exploring their sexuality. A common mentality among Christians who have a shallow relationship with Christ is "all I have to do is to avoid serious sin."

How do you know when you are missing the point of the Beatitudes? I think it is when you ask the question, "Why do I have to come to church?," instead of asking yourself, "What can I do to get more out of church?" It is when you ask, "How often do I have to pray?" instead of "How can I pray better?"

I think you are missing the point when you ask questions like:

• "Is premarital or extra-marital sex a sin?" instead of asking, "How can I use my power to love and my own gift of sexuality in accordance with God's plan?"

• "Why do I need the church?" instead of, "What is the mission of the church and what is my part in that mission?"

• "What else can I buy to wear to make myself look better?" instead of "What can I do to make some poor person warm?"

• "What can I buy to make my house look better?" instead of, "What can I give away so that someone else might have a home?"

• "What can I do to be more comfortable?" instead of, "What can I do to get food and medicine to those who need it?"

When Christ preached the Beatitudes, he was consciously contradicting the religious mentality of the people. He knew what he was saying and he knew what kind of a reaction he would get. He was saying to the people, "Yes, you have kept the commandments. Yes, you have been faithful to the law. And certainly, God rewards you for the good that you do, and God loves you because you are his people."

But that isn't enough. There's more. There's much more. If you do only the minimum, you will never grow up. You will always be spiritually immature. You will never really know God; you will know only his law. You will never really feel God's life and God's love within you; you will see God only as one who judges your behavior and either rewards you or punishes you.

The message of the Beatitudes hasn't changed, and I'm not sure that the religious mentality of God's people has changed much either. For lots of people, there is still the mentality God is the judge of my sins rather than God is my father and mother who loves me in spite of sins. There is still the mentality of doing only the minimum, to get by with as little as possible. Tell me how much I have to do, and that is as far as I will go.

The Beatitudes challenge that and call us to something more, something greater, something deeper and more costly in the sense of commitment.

The disciples didn't always want to hear what Christ was saying because he was asking them to make deeper commitments. He was asking them to go beyond just keeping the law. When they missed the point, when they misunderstood the message, Jesus was frustrated. He had something great to give them, and they would not accept it.

The message of this particular part of Scripture, the message of the Beatitudes, is really the key to understanding Christ and Christianity. If you want to get to heaven at the end of this life, then keep the commandments. If you want to know this person, Jesus Christ, if you want to share in the mission of the church, if you want to feel the presence of God in your heart, if you want to know what this human life is all about, then practice the Beatitudes. It really is that simple.

RISEN: He sits on the right

The Psalmist goes from the depths of despair to statements of his faith in almighty God. This ancient song book for the Jews can still be an inspiration in our times of need.

Also a song of inspiration can be very helpful in praising God. The Israelite King Jehoshaphat sought the Lord in his time of need. As he faced an attack from Moab and Ammon, God instructed him to send the priests out before the Army and to instruct them to sing about God's everlasting mercy. As they obeyed the Lord, God caused confusion in the enemies' camp. They did not even have to fight the battle that day because of their willingness to praise God.

Let me encourage you to "put on the garments of praise for the spirit of heaviness." God loves you and will meet you at the point of your need. Instead of singing "Gloom, Despair and Agony on Me," we have the invitation to sing praise to God and watch and see the Lord fight our battles.

One last suggestion, listen to praise music to get your spiritual engine revved up. At your Christian book store, there are several selections of praise tapes or compact disks to help.

In conclusion, practice the presence of God in the hard times as well as during times of celebration. God inhabits the praises of his people (Psalms 22:3). If you praise him you will never be the same, and others, too, will be blessed.

God gives believers power to achieve, not fear

By Capt. Timothy S. Mallard
1st Battalion,3rd Infantry Regiment

What is it you fear about having a relationships with God? Perhaps you are surprised that I use the term fear, but that is precisely the emotion that guides most people in their relationships with God

You may think you have nothing to do with him, but whether you choose to recognize it, God is there; and by avoiding him, all you do is make the relationship unworkable

Let's return, however, to that term, fear. Why do I specifically choose that word?

Most of us find comfort in stability, because we know that with stability will come peace; and all of us are, I think, most in need of peace. So in a world as disjointed as ours, we search and long for some element to attach ourselves to that which will meet our need for stability.

Some create a false sense of stability in a job or career, but as too many of us have learned in the last decade or so, both the Army and corporate America are in downsizing modes, and so professional relationships that we thought would last are often cut from underneath us, and we have no peace.

Some create a false sense of stability in a marriage, but as some painfully learn, marriage is a devalued institution in our society, and if a marriage is the only thing in which you place your hope, what happens when a spouse suddenly dies or decides to divorce, and we then have no peace?

Some create a false sense of stability in children, but as any parent will tell you, a child's years seem to go speeding by in a blur which ends in graduations, new jobs and new families, leaving us wondering why our children did not return to us the love and energy we placed into them, and we are left with no peace.

Some of us even create a false sense of stability in church, where it becomes all too easy to confuse devotion for God with frenetic participation in choirs, boards, committees and the like, and even here, we have no peace.

Now none of the venerated institutions which I've mentioned seem likely candidates for places in which we might incorrectly seek stability, and thus find peace. We see some options, such as television, movies, magazines or the Internet and know in media such as these, many do create a false sense of stability, for despite the good they do, we realize that too often the equivocal or immoral values these media transmit are no place to find stability, so still we have no peace.

Even worse, we look at some options, such as alcohol, drugs, extra-marital affairs, premarital sex, love of money, etc., and we see friends around us wrecked by trying to find stability in these options and we know from experience that no peace can come from these. What are we to do, then, if around us we cannot seem to find peace anywhere we look?

I can offer you these verses I recently read. Paul wrote in Colossians 1:1 3-14, "He has delivered us from the dominion of darkness and transferred us to the kingdom of his beloved son, in whom we have redemption, the forgiveness of sins."

Paul's words sum up precisely where true peace is only found, in the certain knowledge of our redemption from sin and in our placement within the kingdom of heaven through faith in Christ, God's only son. When we have accepted Christ as our savior and have activated our relationship with God through him, then we realize that nothing else could have ever satisfied.

No career, no wife or husband, no child, no television or radio, no dollar or coin can ever give us true peace. In and of themselves, these things are gifts to be enjoyed, but only after we have first given our lives back to God because then they are placed in proper perspective and are seen only as temporary pleasures designed to prepare us for eternal life, a life we have first committed to God through Christ.

Which brings me back to fear. Why fear? Because the hardest step in the world to take is the step toward Christ, and away from anything and everything else. Most of us, then, before we accept him, fear him, because the journey of finding God means losing ourselves, a prospect which frightens us.

We can have no peace, however, until we have been, as Paul wrote, "transferred to the kingdom of his beloved son." Take this first step in faith today.

No eye has seen, no ear has heard, no mind has conceived what God has prepared for those who love him

Galactic Rock n' Bowl

Post enthusiasts offer 'glowing' praise, find cosmic experience right up their alley

By Elizabeth LaMonica
Special to The Bayonet©

Elizabeth LaMonica

Galactic bowling features a three-dimensional cosmic backdrop, smoke filled lanes, illuminated pins and contemporary background music for bowlers to test their skills.

Is it a firefly? A shooting star? The Hale-Bopp Comet?

No, it's Galactic Rock n' Bowl and it's arrived at Fort Benning!

Appearing at the Mall Bowling Center, Building 9232, Galactic Bowling uses a combination of day-glow and iridescent paints, lights and music to add a contemporary twist on everyday bowling.

"It's probably a take-off from Moonlight bowling, that they used to have years ago," Jim Cantrell, bowling manager said. "All lane lights were off, just the pin lights were on, and you bowled completely in the dark."

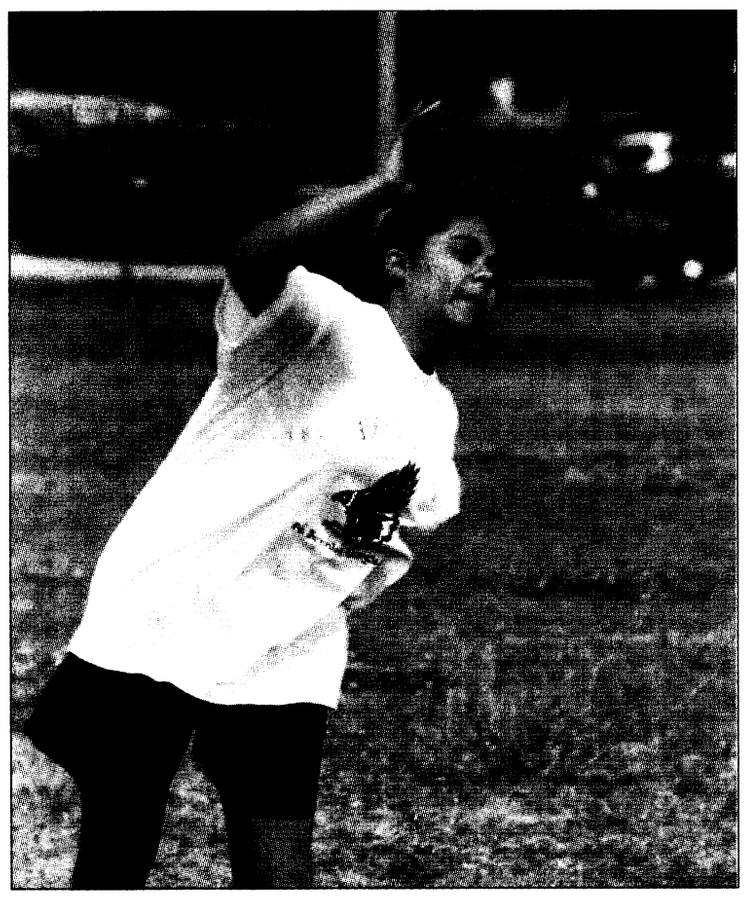
The new $45,000 Galactic experience is much more than a few lights out. An airbrush artist was hired to paint cosmic scenes throughout the center. Special paint was then applied that, under blacklight, intensifies the scenes and gives the pictures a three-dimensional appearance.

"If (the airbrush artist) hadn't done the detail work and what he did as well as he did, it would not have turned out nearly as well," Cantrell said.

Among other things, the artist painted the walls, ceilings and gutter dividers. He painted the ball returns to look like stylized motorcycles, aircraft cockpits and a variety of other pieces of equipment.

"The ceiling especially gives you the impression you're outside," Cantrell said.

Cantrell also painted the lanes with a bluish iridescent paint which makes the marks and the balls easier to see. Also, special bowling balls which glow in the blacklight environment are for sale in the pro shop.



Aside from the paints, special lighting equipment, a new sound system and new bowling pins were purchased.

"We had to buy a new set of $5,500 bowling pins that glow," Cantrell said, "Or you wouldn't have seen anything down there."

The music currently being played on Friday and Saturday nights is a mix of top-40 tunes, rhythm and blues, country and some oldies.

"The way we determine (what music to play) is what gets people moving and makes them have a good time," Cantrell said. "We watch the crowd. If they're having a good time, they will come back. And it's been very well received.

•USA Shooting National 300-Meter Championships, Fort Benning, April 11 to 14 —USAMU international rifle shooters won three national championships. Stephen C. Goff won the Free Rifle Three-Position match, Glenn A. Dubis came in first in the Standard Rifle Three-Position event and Thomas A. Tamas won the Free Rifle Prone championship, •Area 2 Championships, San Diego, Calif., April 11 to 13 — The Action Shooting Team participated in the championships in which there were 300 competitors, and Harold A. Christy Jr. won the Standard Class Match.

Marksmen take honors in shooting championships

By Anna O'Leska
USAMU Public Affairs Office

U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit international rifle shooters took top honors in the 1997 Shooting National 300-Meter Championships recently at Fort Benning.

During the individual events, Thomas A. Tamas scored first place in the Free Prone event.

Glenn A. Dubis won first place in the Standard Rifle Three Position event and Stephen C. Goff took second place.

In the Free Rifle Three Position event, Goff won first place while Tamas scored second place and Dubis placed third.

Tamas, Dubis and Goff are now the three national champions according to international rifle coach William E. Krilling.

During the team events, the first-place winner in the Free Rifle Prone event was the USAMU Gold Team comprised of USAMU members Lance S. Mopper, Kenneth A. Johnson and pick-up shooter Boyd Goldsby. Goldsby, a former member of USAMU, is currently assigned to Fort Carson, Colo. The USAMU Blue Team, comprised of Tamas, Dubis and Goff, took second place.

In the Free Rifle Three Position event, the USAMU Blue Team, composed of Johnson, Dubis and Goff, won first place and the USAMU Gold Team, comprised of Hopper, Tamas and Timothy R. Manges, took second place.

Finally, in the Standard Rifle event, the USAMU Blue Team, comprised of Tamas, Dubis and Goff, won first place and the USAMU Gold Team, comprised of Hopper, Manges and Johnson, placed second.

The 300-Meter Championships, sponsored by USA Shooting, the national governing body for competitive shooting, serves as the selection match for the U.S. team and individual competitors in the 300-meter discipline for the USA National Shooting Championships and for the international match of the Championship of the Americas, better known as the CAT Games.

The USA National Shooting Championships will be conducted in Chino, Calif., June 20 to 29 and the CAT Games, which occur every four years, will take place in Buenos Aires, Argentina, Nov. 16 to 24.

The 300-meter match is open to the military and public from anywhere in the country. Participants in this year's 300-meter match included six USAMU shooters, an active Army pick-up shooter, three Army Reservists and three civilians.

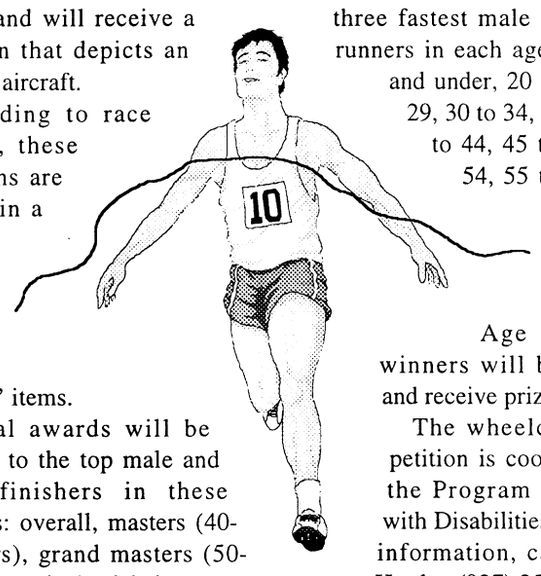
First-place winners of the USA Shooting National 300-Meter Championships will be awarded Gold Medal at the USA Shooting National Championships in June.

There will be another CAT selection match in the small bore rifle and the air rifle in Atlanta Aug. 13 to 24.

Air Force run offers veteran runners challenging course

American Forces Press Service

The Air Force is making a run at celebrating its first 50 years at the birthplace of aviation. The service's first marathon takes place Sept. 20 at Wright-Patterson Air Force Base, Ohio.



For years, the Air Force has been the only military service without an official marathon. That will change with the run at Dayton Ohio, birthplace of the Wright Brothers.

"If you're a veteran of the long run — if you've cruised up Heartbreak Hill in Boston, sped past the monuments in the Marine Corps Marathon (in Washington, D.C.) and conquered the five bridges in New York — you definitely want to add the Air Force Marathon to your 'been there, done that' list," said Kenneth E. Eickmann, commander of the Aeronautical Systems Center.

"If you think your service, your base and your unit are the best around, come out Sept. 20 and prove it," Eickmann said.

"We're looking for individuals, teams and relay teams who have what it takes to go the distance. I'd like to see every U.S. military installation represented at this inaugural event, making the Air Force Marathon a true joint-service experience."

All those who finish the marathon will be considered winners and will receive a medallion that depicts an Air Force aircraft.

According to race officials, these medallions are the first in a series and collectors' items.

Special awards will be presented to the top male and female finishers in these categories: overall, masters (40-plus years), grand masters (50-plus years) and wheelchair.

Awards will be given for the three fastest male and female runners in each age group: 19 and under, 20 to 24, 25 to 29, 30 to 34, 35 to 39, 40 to 44, 45 to 49, 50 to 54, 55 to 59, 60 to 64, 65 to 69 and 70 and over.

Age group winners will be notified and receive prizes by mail.

The wheelchair competition is coordinated by the Program for People with Disabilities. For more information, call Tommy Hurd at (937) 257-5617.

Entries received by Sept. 1 will receive a written confirmation. Confirmations will be mailed starting Aug. 1.

There will also be team competition. Teams will consist of five members, and the first three finishing times within each team will be scored. A team registration form must accompany the fee, along with the team name, captain and individual team members' completed applications. The entire team application package must be received by Sept. 1. Team members are eligible for marathon age group awards.

For more information or to register for the Air Force Marathon, click on "Register Now!" on the marathon home page at http://afmarathon.wpafb.af.mil or call 2nd Lt. Kimberly E. Devereux at (937) 255-2725.

GALACTIC: Bowlers roll to cosmic sights and sounds

We get every age group you can imagine, teenagers and a lot of older people come in."

Future plans include Galactic Rock n' Bowl leagues and perhaps nights featuring different music, like a salsa music night and an oldies but goodies night, Cantrell said.

People who have tried Galactic Bowling are enthusiastic about the new style.

"I like the music and the lights. You're doing a little bit of both dancing and bowling," said Charlotte Parker, bowling center patron. "The prices are cheaper here."

"We haven't bowled in about ten years," said ret. 1st Sgt. Robert Hixson. "It's great for the price and it got us out of the house."

"We're coming back," said Shari Hixson, family member and bowling patron.

"I think this is a coming thing for most of your military installations," Cantrell said. "I've had quite a few calls from different Army installations asking how it was set up."

The three weekly Galactic Rock n' Bowl sessions take place Friday evening from 10 p.m. to 1 a.m. and Saturday evening from 7 p.m. to 10 p.m. and 11 p.m. to 2 a.m. The three hour session costs $8 per person. For those who want to bowl a couple of games, but not the full session, the cost is $2 per game.

"Galactic is just a special thing," Cantrell said. "We are in here to entertain for three hours. We have got an opportunity here with two houses on base to give people a choice on Friday and Saturday nights. If they don't want to do this, they still have a dollar a game at the Main Post Bowling Center."

Reservations are encouraged to ensure that bowlers have a lane. Galactic Bowling's popularity has increased turnout for the sessions. The Main Post Bowling center has also seen an increase in turnout since Galactic Rock n' Bowl was implemented.

For more information, call the Mall Bowling center at 544-2233.

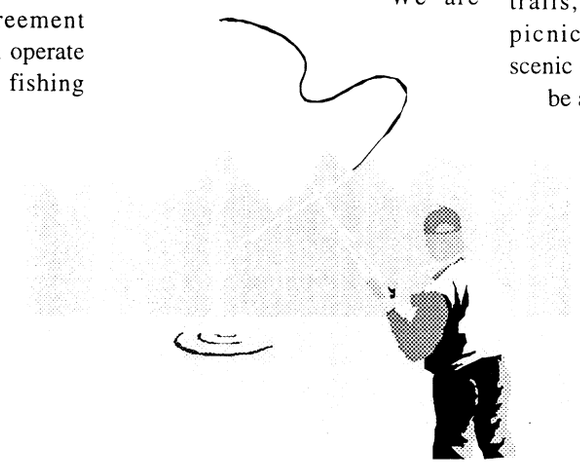
Recreation area to offer fishing, outdoor enjoyment

Wildlife Resource Center

ROME, Ga. — Anglers and outdoor enthusiasts in northwest Georgia will soon have a new recreation area to enjoy. The Rocky Mountain Recreation and Public Fishing Area, located in Floyd County about 10 miles northwest of Rome, Ga., will open May 20.



The Georgia Department of Natural Resources, (Wildlife Resources Division,) and Oglethorpe Power Corporation have entered into an agreement under which the WRD will operate the recreation and public fishing area of Oglethorpe Power's Rocky Mountain Hydroelectric Plant. The facility will include fishing, boating, hiking, camping and other activities.

"People have been asking us for months when Rocky Mountain will open," WRD chief of fisheries Mike Gennings said. "This area is a great addition to our public fishing area program, and the agreement with OPC makes it all possible.

"The agreement provides that the quality recreational opportunities resulting from the construction of the Rocky Mountain Hydroelectric Plant will be made available to the public under the management of WRD without any construction cost to the public or any state funding. This facility is a prime example of how public and private partnerships can work together to provide outdoor recreation and educational opportunities to the public."

The Rocky Mountain Plant is a pumped storage facility encompassing 5,000 acres. It is majority-owned and operated by Atlanta-based Oglethorpe Power Corporation which provides wholesale electricity to 39 of Georgia's 42 customer-owned Electric Membership Corporations.

Under the agreement, Oglethorpe Power will provide the operating funds for personnel and other operating expenses for the 3,000 acres of recreational space to the public.

"We are pleased to support this impressive recreational facility," said James A. Messersmith, manager of the Rocky Mountain Hydroelectric Plant. "We know that the people of northwest Georgia and throughout the region will enjoy its benefits for many years to come."

Two lakes at the Rocky Mountain PFA will be open year-round for fishing from sunrise to sunset. These lakes, measuring 202 and 357 acres respectively, have been stocked with channel catfish and hybrid bass; however, largemouth bass, bluegill, crappie and other species also inhabit the lakes.

There are three boat ramps, several fishing jetties and a handicapped-accessible fishing pier, to provide additional fishing opportunities. Although there is no horsepower limitation on outboard motors, all boats are limited to idle-speed only.

Anglers are not the only outdoor enthusiasts who will benefit from the opening of Rocky Mountain Recreation and Public Fishing Area. Other facilities include a visitor's center, six miles of hiking trails, a seasonal beach, group picnic shelters, restrooms and scenic overlooks. Hunting also will be available on the area.

In addition, there are tent pads with fire pits and picnic tables, full-service recreational vehicle hookups with water and electricity and a camper's comfort station with hot and cold water. The camping facilities will be available on a first-come, first-serve basis.

All visitors will be required to purchase a $2 daily parking permit or a $25 annual parking permit. This parking permit is not the same as the Park Pass which is valid at all state parks. Anglers are not required to have a wildlife management area stamp to fish; however, they must have a valid fishing license.

Fees for the camping facilities are $6 per night for the tent pads and $12 per night for the full service areas.

For more information on the Rocky Mountain Recreation and Public Fishing Area, call the Calhoun Fisheries Management office at 802-5087.

outdoor outlook

Georgia state parks offer guided canoe trips — Outdoor enthusiasts can explore Georgia's scenic waterways on guided canoe trips at High Falls and Panola Mountain State parks.

Park staff will explain basic canoeing techniques and interpret natural surroundings while leading paddlers on day-long trips.

Participants can see beavers, otters, kingfishers, great blue herons, turtles and other wildlife.

Trips fill quickly, so pre-registration is required. To register, call the park directly.

The cost is $15 per person, which includes canoe, paddles and life preserver. Canoers who bring their own equipment pay $10. A $2 park pass fee is charged per vehicle.

Eighteen of Georgia's state parks rent canoes so visitors can explore lakes and streams on their own.

Prices are $3 to $5 for an hour, $8 to $15 for four hours and $12 to $20 for an entire day. For a free "Guide to Georgia State Parks and Historic Sites" or "1997 Events" brochure, call (404) 656-3530.

To reserve a campsite or fully equipped cottage, call (800) 864-7275.

The parks that will offer canoe trips are:

May 10

High Falls State Park, Jackson, second Saturday of each month, enjoy an easy trip down the Towaliga River.

Call (912) 993-3053 to register.

May 17

This clean-up trip down the South River combines wildlife observation with litter pickup.

Call (770) 389-7801 to register.

June 14

High Falls State Park, Jackson, second Saturday of each month, enjoy an easy trip down the Towaliga River.

Call (912) 993-3053 to register.

State parks post fishing tournaments — The arrival of spring means it is time to get out your favorite fishing pole and head to Georgia's state parks.

This year, the parks have planned a dozen fishing events where serious anglers can strut their stuff while beginning youngsters learn the basics. The tournaments are a great excuse for families to spend time together in the spring sunshine.

Most state parks have boat ramps and docks, and many rent boats and sell bait. For more information about a fishing tournament, call the host park.

Fishing tournaments are just some of the many events conducted by state parks and historic sites throughout the year.

All events are free and parking is $2.

May 3

The junior fishing rodeo is May 3 at 7:30 a.m. at Noon Black Rock Mountain State Park, Mountain City.

Children 15 and younger can compete on a lake stocked with trout and catfish.

The tournament is free and there is no fishing license required.

For more information, call 746-2141.

May 17

A kids' catfish rodeo takes place May 17 from 10 a.m. to 3 p.m. at Cloudland Canyon State Park, Rising Fawn.

Children 14 and younger can try their luck with a stocked pond. An adult must accompany each angler. The tournament is free.

For more information, call 657-4050.

May 24

A fishing rodeo is May 24 from 8 to 11 a.m. at Reed Bingham State Park, Adel.

Children 14 and younger can compete for prizes. The tournament is free.

For more information, call (912) 896-3551.

The junior and senior catfish rodeo is May 24 at 9 a.m. at Victoria Bryant State Park, Royston.

Children 16 and younger and adults 62 and older can compete in this fishing and casting contest.

Prizes will be awarded for categories such as largest fish, youngest fisherman and albino catfish catch.

June 7

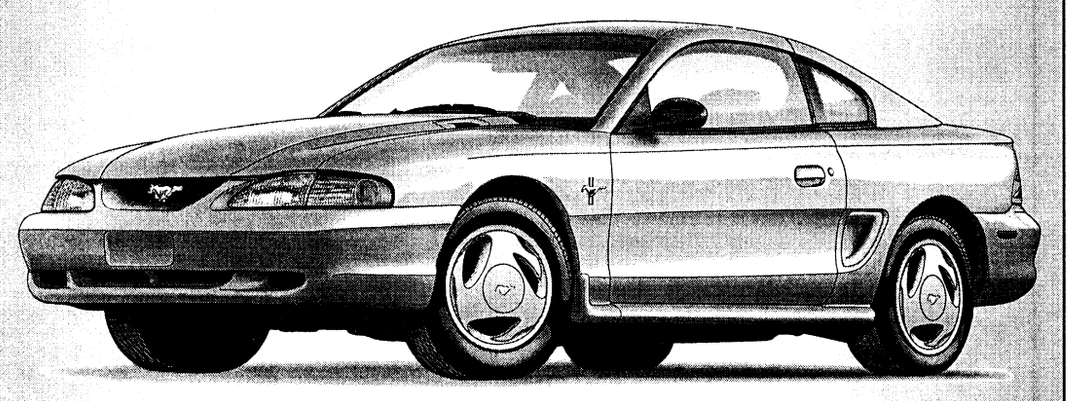
Children's fishing rodeo takes place June 7 from 9 a.m. to noon at James H. Floyd State Park, Summerville.

The long-awaited reopening of the 16-acre lake finally arrives.

Anglers 14 and younger can compete for prizes. Hotdogs and hamburgers will be served after the rodeo.

Bring your own fishing gear and bait (no minnows). There is no charge for the tournament.

For more information, call 857-0826.



Children's fishing rodeo is June 7 at 8:30 a.m. until noon at Magnolia Springs State Park, Millen.

Children 15 and younger can try their luck on three stocked lakes while competing for various prizes. Pre-registration required. The tournament is free.

For more information, call (912) 982-1660.

VICTORY AND EXCELLENCE

Post picks up third CINC award

By 1st Lt. April N. Olsen
USAIC Public Affairs Officer

Fort Benning was honored at two ceremonies conducted at the Pentagon last week for outstanding accomplishments, in the Army Communities of Excellence competition and the Commander-in-Chief's Installation Excellence program.

Fort Benning's Commanding General, Maj. Gen. Carl F. Ernst, took a contingent of Fort Benning Soldiers and civilian employees, as well as representatives from the local communities, to help accept the awards.

In a May 1 ceremony, Ernst accepted the trophy for the ACOE chief of staff, Army Award for Installation Excellence from the Chief of Staff of the Army, Gen. Dennis J. Reimer. Fort Benning has won the award six years running.

"This is a special ceremony because it recognizes special people," Reimer said.

Ernst said the awards are important because they recognize the places where our Soldiers live, work and train, and that running those bases is important as well.

Reimer quoted former Chief of Staff of the Army Gen. Creighton Abrams, saying, "The Army is not made up of people — the Army is people."

Reimer said understanding the importance of taking care of people has become more important in the post-drawdown years, when the operational tempo is up 300 percent but troop numbers and resources continue to decline.

"It's the people aspect that has gotten us through the enormous challenge in the last 10 years," Reimer said.

He said the installations represented at the ceremony knew the importance of teamwork and taking care of people.

"Team effort is made possible by Soldiers and Department of the Army civilians," Reimer said.

He congratulated the award winners on their commitment to quality service and their recognition that quality of life is most important, partly because more than 60 percent of Army personnel are married.

"My challenge to you is to continue to lead the pack and continue to share good ideas," Reimer said. "I want them to understand that we understand the magnitude of their accomplishments and the depth of their commitment."

Ernst said Fort Benning is a microcosm of the Army. He said out the Home of the Infantry is also home to the 75th Ranger Regiment; 3rd Brigade of the 3rd Infantry Division (Mechanized); the 36th Engineer Group (Combat); the Army Marksmanship Unit, the Ranger School; the Airborne School; the School of the Americas; and the Physical Fitness School.

"We are a snapshot of the greatness of our Army," Ernst said.

Citing that Fort Benning units have been involved in every major deployment of U.S. forces in the last decade, Ernst said while the installation's primary mission is to train our Army's Infantrymen, we must also assist in the readiness of those units that must be prepared to deploy to any location in the world within 18 hours.

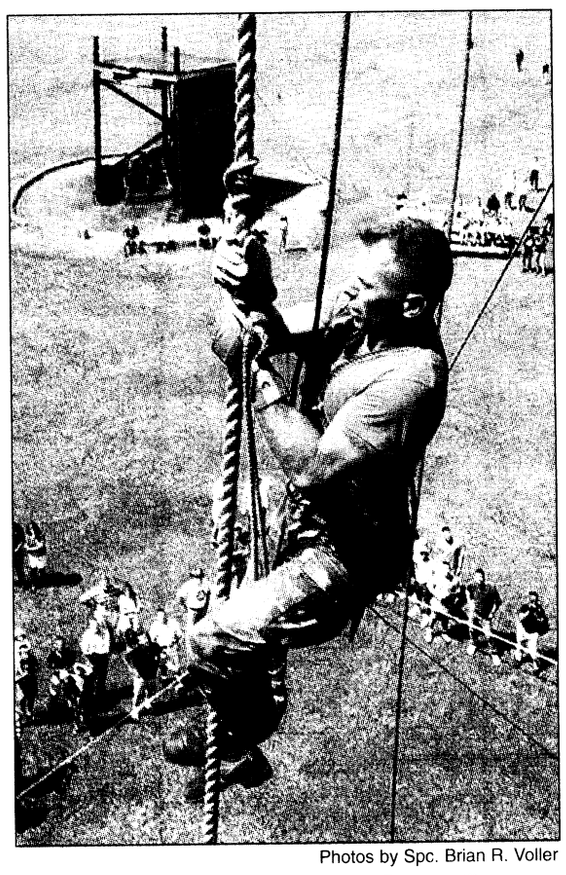
"We think we provide the Army with another thing," Ernst said. "It's represented by a lone statue that stands in front of Infantry Hall."

Referring to the statue of Iron Mike, which embodies the Infantry phrase "Follow Me," Ernst has said the hard work and dedication to quality that exists at Fort Benning comes down to the reason Fort Benning exists — the Infantryman on the battlefield.

"We bring the Army one more thing, and that's the 'Hooah factor,'" Ernst said, inciting the Fort Benning contingent to fill the Pentagon courtyard with screams of "Hooah."



That evening, more 'Hooah' came as the Fort Benning group attended a reception conducted by Georgia Congressmen Mac Collins and Sanford Bishop. Ernst said he knows he can pick up the phone, ask for support and get it because "they understand what Fort Benning is all about."

Ernst credited much of Fort Benning's success to the people of Columbus and Phenix City and to support from elected officials.

THE BEST RANGER COMPETITION

Thirty-one ranger teams from around the Army gathered on Fort Benning May 2 through Monday to test their skills and push their mental and physical capabilities to the limit during the 15th annual David E. Grange Best Ranger Competition. See page A-4 for the complete story.

Accident prevention important

By 1st Lt. Jodi R. Workman
Infantry Branch Safety Office

Many of the accidents that result in physical injury on Fort Benning occur because of Soldiers' lack safety awareness. In most cases, accidents can be prevented by following simple rules.

Giving these real-life examples of accidents to Soldiers makes the lessons learned a little more difficult to ignore.

Safety problem — Two Soldiers found an unexploded grenade simulator during a training exercise. One Soldier cut the simulator open with his knife and poured the powder onto a log while the second Soldier used his lighter to light the powder. The powder then blew up in their faces, causing severe burns to each Soldier.

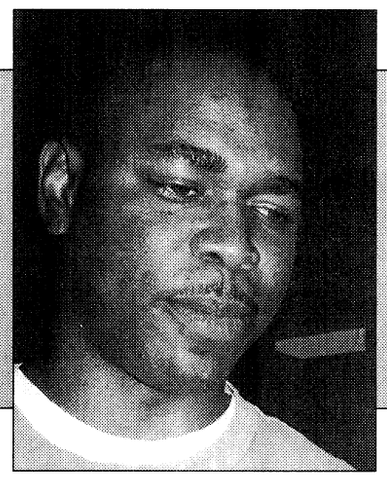
TLC focuses on Force XXI

USAIC Public Affairs Office

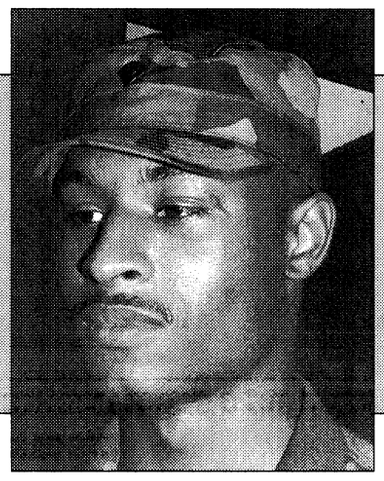
Fort Benning and Force XXI will be the focus of a show on the Learning Channel Sunday.

Beginning at 9 p.m, the channel will show "Cyber Warriors — Digital Battle" which will focus on the land warrior.



That show will be followed at 10 p.m. with "Cyber Warriors — Info Warriors" which will focus on the Infantry gear of the future.

Filming was done on Fort Benning last September.



The Learning Channel is channel 37 on post with Time Warner Cable, channel 41 in Columbus with TCI Cable and channel 42 in Phenix City with Phenix City cable.

VARIOUS VOICES

What is the best advice your mother has ever given you?

Staff Sgt. Michael Oliver, U.S. Army Infantry Center Military Police Company— "To marry my wife. We've been married 10 years now. I listened to my mother because she always gives me good advice."

Spc. Kenneth Jackson, Germany — "Stay away from drugs and alcohol because that's what usually destroys people's lives."

Babeth Capinia, family member — "Not to spoil my son and buy him anything he wants."

Sgt. Sonia Nieves, Medical Department Activities — "Make sure you get a good education because people can take everything away from you, but they can't take away your education."

Staff Sgt. (retired) Alvin York, Phenix City — "The best advice was to work hard and stay out of trouble."

Michele McDonald, family member — "Finish meals, don't cross the street without looking and go to church."

Mother's Day

As time goes by, the importance of a mother becomes apparent

By Spc. Brian R. Voller
Bayonet staff writer

When I was growing up I don't think there was a person on this planet I got along with worse than my mother.

commentary

At the time, I was convinced that the problems between us were entirely her fault. Now that I've gotten a little older, and perhaps a little wiser, I think back and realize how wrong I was most of the time.

She may not agree with me, but I consider myself a nightmare of a son. Almost anything that could cause a parent to have a sleepless night, I probably did at some time or another. As a matter of fact, there were several things I did intentionally just to cause some more problems in her life.

I spent most of my high school years and even a couple years after that torturing my mother. The two of us could not be in the same room together for more than a couple of minutes without trying to bite each other's heads off. It got so bad that at one point my father and my brother said they wanted a divorce from the two of us. They figured it would be better to skip town before we killed each other.

Spc. Brian R. Voller says there is nothing more important than Mother's Day.

But now things have changed pretty dramatically in my life and I see things a lot differently.

Just recently I figured out that all three of them should have wanted a divorce from me, which is ironic considering I was convinced that they were wrong and I was substantially smarter than they were. Now I realize I was being a jerk and I should have shut my mouth and listened. My mother has done many wonderful things for me, and I'm sure many more that I don't know about.

Where would I be without my mother? The answer is quite simple, nowhere. My mother has had a profound influence on my life, I'm able to admit that now. Without her there is no telling what I might me doing right now. Being a journalist, I spend a lot of time reading and watching the news. When I see all of the robberies and the rapes and the murders, it really helps me understand how well my mother raised me. She taught me values, she showed me right from wrong, she taught me lessons that I didn't even know I was learning, she showed me love when I know I didn't deserve it. But most of all, no matter how bad I was, she always forgave me. She did all those things just because she is my mother and because she is my friend.

Until this year, I considerd Mother's Day to be just another excuse for Hallmark to make a few extra dollars selling cards. It was a rare occasion that I would remember Mother's Day, and when I did, I usually got some gift I knew she would like but there was never feeling behind it.

This year I'm sending my mother a gift, (on time), to tell her how much I appreciate all that she has done for me. For the first time in my life I understand how important it is to recognize mothers everywhere. Without mothers there would never be a shoulder to cry on, a comforting word or a sympathetic ear.

Mothers are too important to be forgotten.

A TRIBUTE TO MOTHERS

It takes more than one to raise a child

By Spc. Lisa M. Hibbert
Bayonet staff writer

I've encountered many nurturing women who taught me how to be a mother, long before I ever had a child.

As Hillary Clinton says in her book, 'It takes a village to raise a child,' to raise a woman in this society, especially one as uh, shall I say special, as myself, requires a lot of help.

I come from a family of women. I have one sister and out of the eight grandchildren, seven are female. Not to mention my aunts, second cousins and friends of the family that are so close you call them your aunt even though they're really not. We all have strong personalities which makes for interesting conversation when we get together.

I love my family. To me, they were the best role models any woman could ask for and I feel so bad that I did not always appreciate that.

When I was growing up, I never heard the women in my family utter a profane word in my direction. I never saw them drunk or hanging out all night in a club. They always maintained their appearance. Not only have I watched them work hard, I've seen them accelerate in their career fields. I watched them raise children, cook meals (occasionally) and spend time with their husbands.

I've received lots of advice from my family.

Spc. Lisa M. Hibbert feels that many women, as well as her mother, have helped to shape who she is.

commentary

From how to put on mascara without poking my eye out, to which fork to eat my salad with I am grateful for the etiquette skills but its the life-shaping advice I am most grateful for.

The women I came into contact with taught me those intricate skills, like how to compose myself when I get embarrassed, how to conduct myself when on a date, how to be a friend and how to make friends.

I think the most important lessons I learned from my role models were unspoken — how to give and how to love.

I watched all of them give of their time and their energy to help others. While I was never forced to follow suit, it became something I wanted to do.

They taught me how to love. Because they were strong enough to shower love upon me, I am able to share that gift with others.

To be honest, my mother and I have not always been the best of friends, but I think everybody goes through a phase like that. But I am glad to say things are much better now. In fact, I am really glad my mother is my friend.

People strive to be someone their mother would be proud of, but when you finally know you have achieved that goal, it is an awesome feeling.

I was talking to one of the guests at my sister's wedding when my mother walked up. When I introduced them, the guest said to my mother, "You have some lovely girls, did you know that?" My mother looked at her and said, "I know, I 'm very proud of my daughters."

I've always known my mother would be there for me but I just chalked that up to a thing that mommies do. This was different. Especially when you know that there are so many things that you could have done better in your life and you still have your mother say she's proud of you.

Today, one of my favorite things is when my relatives and I all get together and do nothing but talk. From them I get my strength.

I think every once in a while we all need a fix of that motherly love.

Dial 545-BOSS is the commander's action line for Soldiers, family members and civilians to call when they have problems or complaints that can't be resolved elsewhere.

While it is not a substitute for the chain of command or for agencies established to provide assistance, the line offers another means of communication between Fort Benning's community and commanders.

Call: The caller said a berm is being installed at 300 yards on English Range. He said since the range doesn't have woodpeckers on it, and even if it did, why wasn't this done 5 or 6 years back. The caller said presently shooting is at 700 yards. He said membership has greatly increased due to the long-range shooting, and even some units train on the range. The caller asked why can't the berm be put in at 750 yards or 800 yards and still serve the same purpose.

Department of Public Works Response:

The DPW Natural Resources Management Division contacted the caller and explained to him that the berm is part of the Installation's compliance with the Jeopardy Biological Opinion issued in 1994 for the Red Cockaded Woodpecker at Fort Benning. The JBO requires DPW evaluate impacts of small arms fire on RCW clusters and the adjacent foraging habitat. The English Range area is considered important for berm construction because an active RCW cluster is located approximately 100 meters southwest of the range. This cluster is below the minimum requirements for training habitat (a lack of large diameter pine stems). Within the A4 compartment alone, there are 3 RCW clusters.

A berm placed at 300 meters will protect approximately 11 acres of potential RCW foraging habitat. After berm construction, the area beyond the berm win be planted in longleaf pine to improve RCW habitat. Moving the berm back to 700 or 800 meters would defeat the purpose. Although existing fire from the English Range is not creating a major impact, Range Division has indicated this range could be converted back to a field fire range in the future. Also, unlike many other small arms ranges, this range fires into training compartment A4, not the A20 impact area. DPW can better manage the RCWs within training compartments like A4 than in impact areas.

Call: The caller said the post theater advertised in the newspaper that tickets for all seats start at $3.50 before 5:30 p.m., but there are no movies showing before 6 p.m., so how can he get the discount rate?

AAFES response:

The caller was informed by the Services Business Manager, Army and Air Force Exchange Service, that movies start on Saturday and Sunday at approximately 1 p.m.

CINC: Post brings home crown

"We have great support from our local communities," he said.

While Ernst thanked the civilian community and the elected officials for their support, many of them thanked Fort Benning for their hard work.

"I've never seen the community spirit that exists at Fort Benning, Columbus, and Phenix City at any other place anywhere," Collins said. "We know as an installation you've done tremendous things."

Senators Paul Coverdell and Max Cleland also congratulated the Fort Benning contingent at the reception.

"All of us in Georgia have known about the outstanding work at Fort Benning for many, many years," Cleland said.

"Thank you for your sweat, thank you for your effort, thank you for your dedication of a lifetime."

The following afternoon, the contingent once again let out "Hooahs" as Ernst accepted the Commander in Chief's Award for the Best Army Installation in the World from Dr. John B. Goodman, the Deputy Under Secretary of Defense for Industrial Affairs and Installations.

This year marks the third time in four years Fort Benning has won the title.

Winning the prestigious award brings national attention to Fort Benning, but also brings a challenge to continue to set the standard for other Army installations, Sarah McLaney said.

McLaney, the Chief of the Quality Management Division of the Directorate of Resource Management, echoed Ernst's remarks that Fort Benning is a reflection of the best in the Army.

In a time when the importance of new technologically advanced equipment sometimes overshadows the importance of Soldiers on the battlefield, Ernst put the development of equipment and the dedication to taking care of Soldiers into perspective.

"It's not about ships, tanks and airplanes," he said, "It's about great young Americans."

SAFETY: Solutions are available to counsel Soldiers on the importance of being aware of duds found on ranges and in the training areas. Unexploded ammunition needs to be left in place and reported to the Explosive Ordnance Divison.

Safety problem — While traveling down the highway, a Soldier left the roadway and struck a utility pole. The Soldier suffered severe head trauma and spent many days in the hospital.

It was determined that the driver fell asleep at the wheel. It is very fortunate that no one else was involved in the accident. This Soldier made an improper decision to drive while fatigued.

Corrective action — It cannot be stressed enough about the dangers of driver fatigue. Leaders need to stress to Soldiers the increased awareness of the possible consequences that may result from operating a motor vehicle while fatigued.

Safety problem — A Soldier was chopping wood for the winter behind his quarters when the log he split sent small fragments flying into the air. These fragments pierced his eye. The Soldier lost partial sight in his eye.

In a related incident, a Soldier was sawing wood when the corner of the board, which was not stabilized at the time, lurched up, striking the Soldier in the eye.

Corrective Action — Protective gear is not limited to work. Remind Soldiers and family members alike to wear personal protective equipment, to include safety glasses, hearing protection, gloves and shoes, when working around the house.

Safety problem — While carrying a bucket of water down a flight of stairs, a Soldier slipped and fell, breaking his leg. Due to improper attention of the Soldier as he was descending the stairs, the water from the bucket spilled onto the stairs, causing the Soldier to slip.

Corrective action — Soldiers need to be reminded to use handrails when walking down steps, and to ensure that their foot gear and steps are dry.

Safety problem — A group of Soldiers were running during physical training when one of the Soldiers failed to look where he was stepping. As a result, the Soldier stepped in a hole and twisted his knee.

Another incident involved a Soldier during a road march. While walking, he tripped and fell on the side of the road. As he fell, he tried to catch himself with his right hand which resulted in the Soldier breaking his thumb.

Corrective action — Emphasize to Soldiers to be more careful when they run and to watch where they step.

The majority of accidents can be avoided through proper counseling, Soldiers' awareness to potential hazards and common sense.

Female commander takes charge

By Staff Sgt. Robin Shawlinski
3rd Bde., 3rd Inf. Div. (Mech.)

When Capt. Paige McCormick attended the University of Tennessee at Chattanooga about 10 years ago, her goal was to receive a Bachelor's degree in Environmental Engineering.

Little did she know that she would be the first female to command a combat arms company in the 317th Engineer Battalion, 3rd Brigade Combat Team, and the first woman in the 3rd Engineer Brigade to command a headquarters company.

To some it may not seem like an incredible feat, but until two years ago, women were not permitted to command a combat mechanized unit, according to Lt. Col. David Kingston, 317th Engineer Battalion commander.

The Alabama native and daughter of a retired Air Force pilot never considered entering the military until her junior year of college. At the time, she knew she needed money to pay for school and joining the U.S. Army reserves and trying for a Reserve Officer Training Corps scholarship would give her that money.

Once she received the scholarship, her goals began to change. By her senior year, she decided to go active duty and she wanted to work in the engineer branch.

"I knew that eventually I wanted to work with the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers in the environmental area, so I requested the engineer branch," she said.

Since then her career has progressed to where she is today.

This opportunity first came to her in early 1996 when she found out her husband, Chief Warrant Officer Tony McCormick, received orders to Fort Benning. At that time she knew she had to find a job. So in mid-1996 she found out about the commander position at Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 317th Eng. Bn., opening up and she interviewed for it. By fall, she became the first female commander of a mechanized engineer headquarters company. And she doesn't take that responsibility lightly.

"I feel honored and fortunate enough to be given this responsibility," she said. "This was a big step for me having not dealt with tanks before."

While she understands the importance of being the first female commander, she doesn't use that fact to benefit herself, rather to benefit her Soldiers.

"It's my job to set the example for other females, and I feel Soldiers really need that," She said. "The Army is a great place for women, if it's what they want to do."

McCormick attest a lot of her success to the support of her fellow commanders and the support of Kingston.

"My fellow commanders have supported me 100 percent and Colonel Kingston had helped me a lot," she said.

Kingston said he thinks McCormick has done great things for the battalion.

"She's done great. The best thing that has happened in the battalion are the, now two, female officers, Captain McCormick and Captain Erikson (the battalion personnel officer). They know what the standards are and there's more of a conduit for officers to report to me on issues effecting females in my battalion."

While McCormick still has more than 12 months left to command she looks forward to doing all she can for her Soldiers and to eventually move on and be selected to work in the environmental area in the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers.

JAC sponsors employers day

Job Assistance Center

The Job Assistance Center in Soldiers' Plaza will sponsor another Employer Day May 16, from 9 a.m. to noon for the benefit of Soldiers, spouses and other personnel interested in exploring careers in law enforcement, corrections and firefighting.

"There is a high level of client interest to enter these career fields and an equally strong interest on the part of these employers to recruit Soldiers," Cynthia Anderson, counselor assistant and Employer Day organizer, said.

"Soldiers in many military occupational specialties have the skills, training and experience that may qualify them for employment with public safety departments and organizations," Anderson said. "Our Soldiers belong to the greatest security force in the world and as such, have conduct patrolling, physical security, personnel escort, identity checks, communications, weapons employment, equipment maintenance and accountability.

"Soldiers usually have no problems passing the strict background checks, polygraph tests, psychological and physical evaluations required by these agencies.

"Soldiers have also been placed in difficult situations where they must make quick, accurate evaluations and take action to resolve potentially life-threatening situations. Experience and training have prepared Soldiers to meet the challenges of police and corrections officers and firefighters," she said.

Representatives from police departments, corrections and fire departments will be in the Job Assistance Center to discuss career opportunities, entrance requirements, training programs, benefits packages and respond to questions.

Attendees should wear duty uniforms or appropriate civilian dress and bring copies of resumes, if they are available.

For more information, contact the Job Assistance Center at 545-2308 or 2309.

Rangers earn 'best' title

By Spc. Brian R. Voller
Bayonet Staff Writer

Last year, they were the runners up, second best. Now, after a year of having to stomach second place, they came back with a mission, to be number one, and now they are the Best Rangers.

2nd Lts. Christopher Robishaw and Jay Hansen, 101st Airborne Division, Fort Campbell, Ky., took the top spot in the 15th annual David E. Grange Best Ranger Competition.

The competition began early May 2 when the competitors were sent on a five-mile run. Not long after the run, they completed the Malvesti obstacle course and a spot jump and litter carry. As teams finished the spot jump and litter carry, they packed up their ruck sacks and took off on a 1.8-mile buddy run to the Malone ranges where they qualified with a multitude of weapons. As the day came to an end, each team again grabbed their rucks and took off on a 22-mile foot march.

After the first day of competition, Robishaw said the events were beginning to affect the different teams.

"The last day and a half of events have really started to take their toll," he said. "You can see guys kind of wobbling around, babying their feet a little bit. The road march last night, obviously, knocked out two thirds of the competition. It's been rough."

The road march turned out to be the last event for 21 of the teams. But for those who remained, May 3 began with the night stakes and was followed with a tactical pistol qualification. A short rain delay gave the competitors a couple hours of rest, but when the skies cleared, they went right back to work.

After the pistol match was completed, the day's action moved to Todd Field were the skill levels of the rangers where put to the test again with the day ranger stakes. Here they moved from station to station, being tested on tasks all rangers are required to know, including the Prusik climb. As night fell, the rangers moved out on the night land navigation where competitors had to find six out of 11 points.

Hansen said the night land navigation turned out to be more difficult than they expected because of some unwanted company.

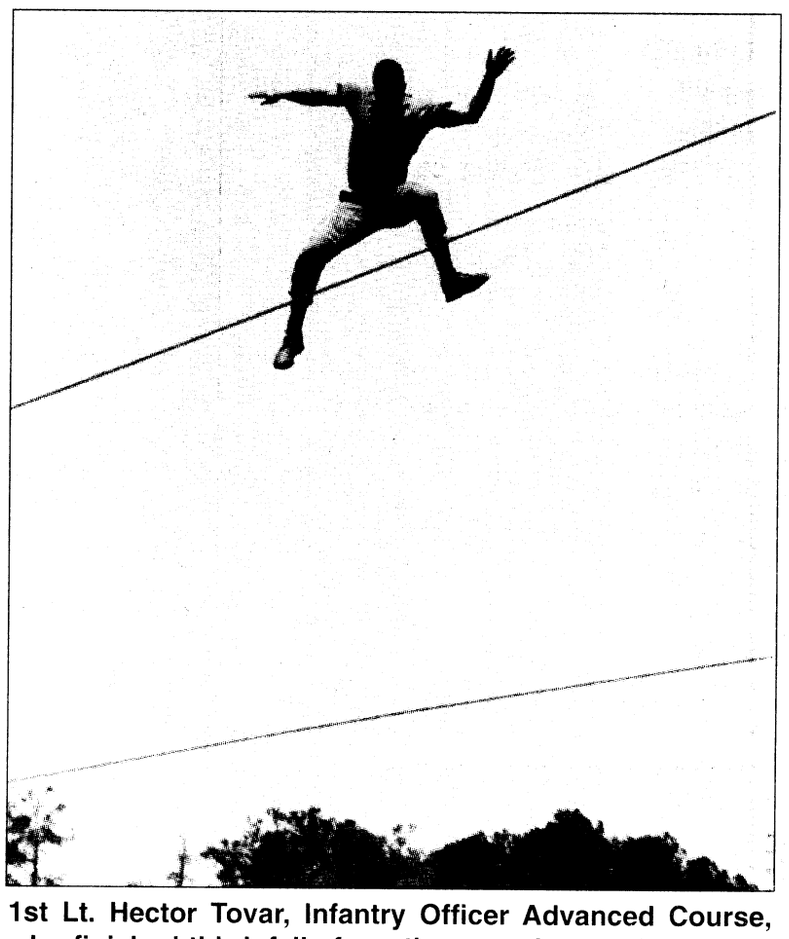
"We got chased the whole way," he said. "We had to move out quickly, and we ended up being out for about six and a half hours. We found 11 points total with Camp Darby being the twelfth.

"We managed to get some sleep last night, so we're feeling pretty good today."

The Darby Queen obstacle course was the first challenge of the day May 4, followed by the water confidence test on Victory Pond. Also this year, a Zodiac boat race was added to the schedule. The final event turned out to be the deciding event with only a few points separating the top three teams. Hansen and Robishaw crossed the finish line in the right place and with the right time to earn the coveted title of Best Ranger.

After crossing the finish line, both Hansen and Robishaw said the victory hadn't set in yet.

"It's not going to hit us until we sit down and have some time alone," Robishaw said. "This is something he's (Hansen) been dreaming about for five years, and I've been dreaming about for two years. There hasn't been a day that has gone by in the past two years when we haven't talked about this competition. Once we have time to sit back and think about it, I'm sure we're going to pass out."



Hansen and Robishaw will return to Fort Campbell to celebrate their victory. Neither competitor plans to compete again, but both said they may be back as coaches in the years to come.

First-place finisher, 2nd Lt. Christopher Robishaw, 101st Airborne Division, Fort Campbell, Ky., slides down one of the obstacles on the Darby Queen.

Staff Sgt. John Fox drops into the water during the water confidence test.

1st Lt. Hector Tovar, Infantry Officer Advanced Course, who finished third, falls from the rope drop and prepares to enter the water.

Show horses

Janie Pride, a prekindergarten teacher at White Elementary School, brings her quarter horse, Bubba, to a gallop on the lawn behind the school as a group of fifth-graders watch Tuesday. Pride brought Bubba and her thoroughbred Brio, both show horses, to school for Math and Science Day which centered around a Kentucky Derby theme. The students watched professional three-day event rider Mark Coombs and Dr. Judy Archer, principal of White, ride Brio and gallop Bubba. Pride also treated the students to a dressage demonstration.

Post schools begin preregistration for fall

Fort Benning Schools

The Fort Benning Schools will conduct preregistration for entering prekindergarten students May19 and 20 from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m. Students must reside on post and be 4 years old on or before Sept. 1 to be eligible.

A part-time prekindergarten program is offered in each of the elementary schools on post. Students either attend a morning or an afternoon session for two and a half hours each day (one hour and forty-five minutes Saturday). The program, which emphasizes developmentally-appropriate learning within the framework of the high-scope curriculum, engages students in a variety of readiness activities.

School assignment is based on either the housing area or the child care arrangement. Parents whose children are eligible to attend the program during the upcoming school year should take the completed registration forms, their child's birth certificate and proof of residence to their neighborhood school on registration day. School and session assignments will be given to parents during verification of registration in August. The Fort Benning Schools will attempt to honor parents' preferences for session time while also balancing class size.

Parents who are unable to register their child at this time should attend regular registration in August. Parents with questions about the prekindergarten program should contact their neighborhood school or Kathy Einhorn, the pre-K coordinator, at 545-8254.

Helping others

Faith Middle School students make toys, donate them to FAP and local shelters

Faith Middle School

Eighth-grade industrial arts students at Faith Middle School, in the tradition of Henry Ford, have been busy at work on an assembly line. They are mass producing Model "T" cars (the toy variety), using the very procedures set up by Ford nearly a century ago. Though the primary purpose of the assignment was to allow experiences in the simulation of an assembly line, another goal of the class was to build a product to be contributed to battered womens' shelters through the Family Advocacy Center according to Rebecca S. Welch, Family Advocacy program manager, Army Community Services.

After completing more than 50 toy "Tin Lizzie" cars, each student was allowed en to take home their toys and the others were donated to the shelter with high hopes of brightening the day of a child in need.

In an effort to encourage full-class participation and responsibility, the teacher, Anne Shaw, stepped aside as the students elected their own student shop foremen. The dedicated foremen, Debbie Hernandez, Chris Humphries, Bill McAtee and Wendy Wayland, provided support, responded to questions, encouraged frustrated workers, repaired saws, assigned tasks and generally provided for a smooth-running line.

"I like this. It's fast and fun!" line worker Erin Reilly said.

Even though the speed at which the cars were produced was impressive, other students noted concerns associated with this method of manufacturing. Comments about the monotony of repetitive tasks were Fort Benning's U.S. Army Medical Department Activity's Quality of Life Program for Single Soldiers is recognized as the winner of the first quarter 1997 Commanding General's Best Single Soldier Living Community Trophy as determined by the Fort Benning Better Opportunities for Single Soldiers Program.

Spc. James Pittman, the unit Better Opportunities for Single Soldiers representative, is recognized for his outstanding achievement in the BOSS program at the USA MEDDAC.

The USA MEDDAC Quality of Life Program for Single Soldiers Program consists of more than 88 Soldiers, to include 13 U.S. Army Dental Activity Soldiers and 51 Soldiers' rooms.

The USA MEDDAC spent more than $28,000 to improve the barracks and day room. The improvements to each room include: painting by a civilian contractor, ceiling fans, microwave ovens and new area carpets in assorted colors.

Other improvements included bulletin boards for each hallway, the purchase of five new vacuum cleaners for Soldiers' use and new washers and dryers. In addition, the day room was remodeled to include: plush carpeting, mini blinds, living room furniture, end tables, a big-screen television and video cassette recorder and video game equipment.

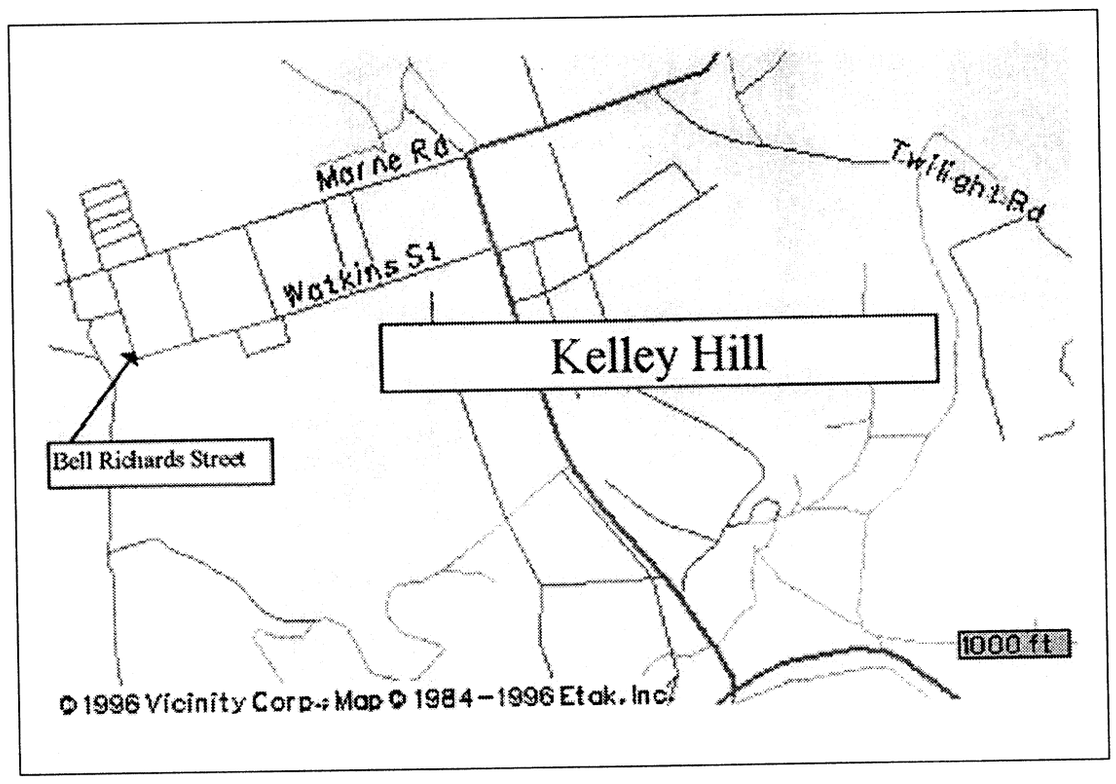
Watkins Street on Kelley Hill will be restricted to one-lane traffic at the intersection of Bell Richards Street from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. Tuesday.

This traffic restriction is necessary to install a water main across Watkins Street in association with the Whole Barracks Renewal Project at Kelley Hill.

For more information, call Richard Chancey at 545-4749.

Some projects currently planned on Fort Benning follow:



•Two major construction projects for Fort Benning, totaling $53 million, are in the final stages of design.

One of these will improve barracks quality of life for our Soldiers in the 75th Ranger Regiment, and the other will enhance the installation's Force Projection Platform.

•A project at the 75th Ranger Regiment and 36th Engineer Group consists of seven new barrack buildings, two new Soldier community buildings and a new dining facility for the 75th Ranger Regiment and 3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment.

Three company operations buildings, housing five companies of the 36th Engineer Group, were also funded as part of this project. Funding, appropriated by Congress, is $44,000,000.

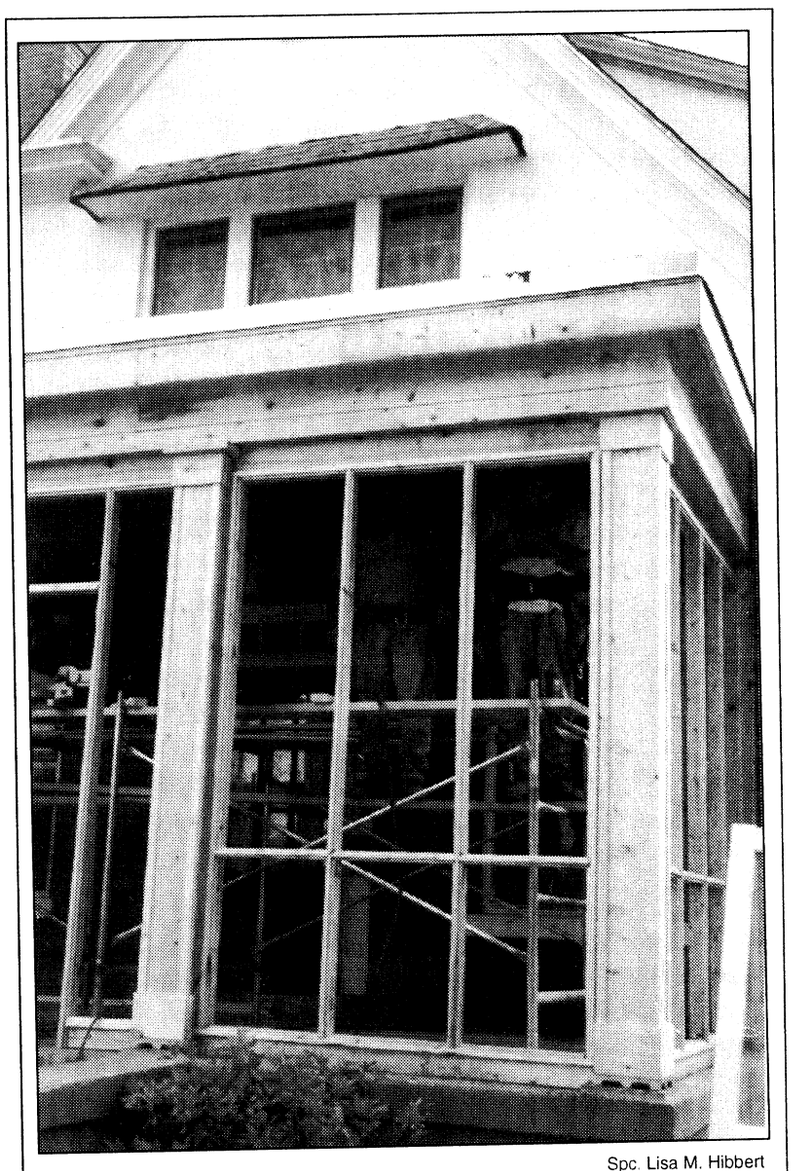
The new barracks will conform to the new Department of the Army Standard Design, which includes individual sleeping rooms, semi-private baths and kitchenette areas.

Total billeting capacity of the seven new barracks is 504. The dining facility will have the capacity to serve 800 personnel.

The barracks and dining facility are sited south of the existing barracks occupied by the 75th Ranger Regt. and west of Sightseeing Road. The company operations buildings will be constructed adjacent to the recently completed 36th Engineer Group barracks and company operations building in the 2800 block area.

Construction is scheduled to begin in early fall.

•The Force Projection Platform project replaces the existing rail loading facilities, which are not owned by the government, in the Sand Hill training area.



The new rail loading facility will be located where First Division Road crosses Ochillee Creek in Harmony Church. Funding, appropriated by Congress, is $9,100,000.

Also to be constructed is a new five-mile tank trail from Kelley Hill to the new rail site, including a track vehicle bridge across U.S. Highway 27 and 280.

The rail loading facility will consist of railroad spurs with concrete end ramps to be built off of the Norfolk Southern tracks at Ochillee Junction.

This project was funded in order to provide the necessary, adequate rail loading capability for Fort Benning's current missions, as well as deployment, mobilization and direct tank trail access not only from Kelley Hill to the rail loading site, but to the ranges and maneuver areas beyond. Construction is scheduled to begin in early fall.

If you have questions or topics that you would like to be addressed in the DPW "Information Corner" contact Glenn Todd, DPW customer relations specialist, at 545-2117, or write to the Directorate of Public Works, Building 6, Room 409, ATTN: ATZB-PWM (Glenn Todd), Fort Benning, Ga., 31905.

TRICARE

Program offers much to Soldiers

Tricare

Under Tricare, the cost of diagnostic services (lab work and x-ray) can vary according to several factors including 1. the Tricare benefit plan that you have selected, 2. who performs the lab work and 3. the type of diagnostic service it is. Keep in mind that laboratory tests and x-rays can also be performed in the Military Treatment Facility (if available) at no cost to the beneficiary.

As an example, under Tricare Prime, when lab and x-ray services are performed as part of an office visit for which a copayment is collected, there is no additional cost for the diagnostic services. If lab and x-ray services are performed by a separate provider, an additional copayment is charged.

No additional copayment is collected when diagnostic services are provided as part of the Tricare Prime Clinical Preventive Service Benefit. These Tricare Prime Clinical Preventive Services include select screening procedures to detect disease, such as Pap smear testing, and preventive measures to protect or restore health, such as immunizations.

The contracted network lab for the Tricare Southeast and GulfSouth regions is SmithKline-Beecham. When Tricare Prime members have their lab work performed by SmithKline-Beecham, they pay only a low copayment for diagnostic services. Tricare Standard beneficiaries who use SmithKline-Beecham for their lab work receive cost savings and no balance billing. Non-Prime beneficiaries who use other Champus-certified labs receive the Standard benefit, which costs a bit more.

The copayments for diagnostic services are described on the above chart:

Laboratory and x-ray costs

	E1 - E4 eligible family member	E5 - above eligible family members	Retirees and their eligible family members
Tricare Prime
With office visit	No additional cost	No additional cost	No additional cost
Clinical Preventative Services Benefit	No additional cost	No additional cost	No additional cost
From SmithKline	$6 per visit	$12 per visit	$12 per visit
Tricare Extra
From SmithKline	15 percent of the reduced negotiated rate after the deductible has been satisfied	15 percent of the reduced negotiated rate after the deductible has been satisfied	20 percent of the reduced negotiated rate after the deductible has been satisfied
Tricare Standard
From non-contracted lab	20 percent of CMAC* after the deductible has been satisfied. Balance billing may occur	20 percent of CMAC* after the deductible has been satisfied. Balance billing may occur	25 percent of CMAC* after the deductible has been satisfied. Balance billing may occur

*Champus Maximum Allowable Charge
From SmithKline means drawn at a SmithKline Lab. Blood drawn within an office visit and sent to SmithKline does not require an additional copayment
Note: Laboratory tests and x-rays can also be performed in the Military Treatment Facility (if available) at no cost to the beneficiary.

'Honor thy mother and father'

Capt. James Walton Blount
1st Battalion, 38th Infantry Regiment

We owe a great debt of gratitude to all mothers who have taken it upon themselves to raise God's children as he would want them raised up according to his holy word found in the Bible.

Because, you see, children are not really ours, but they belong to God. God holds us responsible to be good stewards in raising up these children to become godly men and women who will pass on that holy torch of salvation to their children. Mother's who take the stewardship seriously and faithfully are a great blessing from God for our nation and the world.

What an opportunity a mother has to be the very first person to share the love of God, which is Jesus Christ, with that young child God has placed in her care. What a privilege that is. What an honor that is. What a blessing that is.

Our nation and our world today are so full of immorality that one wonders if there is any hope. There is hope if one has faith in God. There is the good news. Blessed are the mothers who impart this faith and the good news to their children.

The nation will change and our world will change, one person at a time, as people come to know the Lord. That process begins at home with Mom and Dad. That process begins when, during those early critical years of the child, Mom reads Bible stories to the children.

That process begins when Mom sings "Jesus Loves Me" to her child at bedtime, or mealtimes come and Mom teaches her children how to pray. That process begins when mom takes her children to church.

God can and does change our nation and world through mothers. God, in fact, is establishing his kingdom through mothers. God bless Mom.

Let us not forget to show our love and deep appreciation to all mothers everywhere for their sacrifices and dedication in raising America's sons and daughters. The blessings which this great country has received are due, in no small part, to mothers who have opened up their lives to be used by God.

A challenge now goes out to all the new mothers, and soon-to-be mothers, that they be responsible and dedicated stewards of the little ones God has put in their care. What a very special honor it is to raise God's children.

Is there any other job on the face of this earth more important? I think not.

Congratulations on a job well done, Mom. God bless you.

PARENTING

Bible offers tips on child rearing

By Capt. William D. Smith
US Army Medical Department Activity

The Bible is not a psychological book on child rearing, nor was it intended to be. Yet, we find principles in Scripture that address this issue.

One of the most read passages on this subject is found in Proverbs 22:6: "Train up a child in the way he should go and when he is old, he will not depart from it."

The significance of this passage has been debated by a number of pastors. Those who have reared children with little or minimal difficulties find in this verse their claim to godly parenting. Those who have experienced heartbreak with wayward children stumble over this passage.

Let's take another look at Proverbs 22:6 and seek to find a little more about this Old Testament concept of child rearing. The Hebrew word translated "train" means to "create a taste for." This suggests that the parents seek to create a taste for wise living in the heart of the child.

The phrase "in the way he should go" in Hebrew literally means "in accordance to who he is." This indicates the parent needs to know the personality of each child and work with him or her accordingly.

The word "old" does not mean "aged" but "mature" or "independent."

Thus the idea of Proverbs 22:6 is that parents create a taste in the child for wise living in accordance to the child's unique personality so when the child is on his or her own he or she will not depart from those standards.

Moses in Deuteronomy 6:6-9 presents an Old Testament application of this principle. Hebrew parents were to diligently teach their children the principles of Scripture. The method the parents were to use was very practical, yet profound. It involved their speech, their actions and their relationships.

Biblical principles were to govern the Hebrew parents' speech in every setting of their lives. Furthermore, Biblical principles were to govern their actions — whatever they did with their hands or saw with their eyes. Finally, their relationships, whether in the home or in the community, were to be guided by Biblical principles.

As one can see, the parents were to teach their children by their own lives. There were to be no double standards in this regard. The father, for example, disclosed his love for God by how he talked even when he was angry. He also displayed his relationship with God by the type of relationship he had with his own family and the community.

The problem with these passages in Deuteronomy and Proverbs is parents are human. We find that we fall short of setting perfect examples.

Four things can be said for this. First, recognize you are not perfect. Admit when you are wrong. Children need to see how to handle it when they are wrong, so set the example. They will forgive us if we are forgiving of them.

Second, although God sets a perfect standard (what else would you expect?), he recognizes none are perfect. He expects, however, that the parent faithfully does the best he or she can (1 Cor. 4:2).

We also need to ask for God's help. He made us. He knows us. He can enable us as we seek to set the best examples before our children.

Finally, since we are not perfect, we must ultimately trust God for the outcome. This last point may be the hardest for some of us parents. We want to control that outcome to ensure our children do not get hurt like we have been. This, however, tends to boomerang, since children tend to hate too much control.

We must remember that God is loving and caring. He wants the best for our children, so let's trust him.

'METT—T'

God gives us missions

By Capt. Leon G. Kircher
11th Infantry Regiment

The widow of Master Sgt. Gary Gorden, Medal of Honor winner who was killed in Mogadishu, wrote her children a letter about responsibility. She stated:

"I hope that in the final moments of your father's life, his last thoughts were not of us.

"As he lay dying, I wanted him to think only of the mission to which he pledged himself. As you grow older, if I can only show you the love and responsibility he felt for his family, you will understand my feelings. I did not want him to think of me or of you because I did not want his heart to break ... for your father there were no hard choices in life.

"Once he committed to something the way was clear. He chose to be a husband and a father, and never wavered in those roles. He chose the military, and 'I shall not fail those with whom I serve,' became his simple religion.

"Choose your own responsibilities in life. But always, always follow your heart. Your dad will be watching over you, just as he always did. Love, Mom"

Be they job concerns, deployments, long hours, money, spouses or children, those life issues inevitably lead us to the undertaking of accountability and responsibility. For the majority, it seems, people clear with their life issues in diverse ways. Some appear to assume their situation in life and frolic merrily along, lost in the wonder of a great and heavenly land. Others wallow in the mire of their own despair and question why it all happens to them. The rest of us wander in that region between the extremes, thankful that another day has come and gone and we are still sane, healthy and somewhat whole.

So many of life's problems and concerns come our way and we wonder who is responsible? Who are we accountable to? It is all, I believe, captured in the world of responsibility, and ultimately, accountability. Why do we do what we do and what for?

A great number of our world's citizens do what they do today simply to survive. Why? They have to plow the fields and work the factories. They cook their daily meals and wash their loads of clothes. They pray for rain. When there's too much rain, they pray it will stop.

Northerners love the winter scenery but long for the summer, sometimes even escaping midwinter for a trip down south. Soldiers talk about their best assignment as being "...the last one and the next one." Everyone wishes that there was more out there. What more can I do? How can I get ahead?"

Spiritual responsibility for me lies in the Army's much discussed mission acronym "METT-T." Mission, Enemy, Troops, Terrain and Time. In order to carry out a successful military mission, commander's are urged to look at all facets of the operations; past, present and future. Thereby, they hope to understand their present strengths by examining themselves (who are they fighting with), what they're up against and what will be the outcome.

The mission is to be accountable to God, under which falls everything that has life and breath. God is not number 1 and this or that number 2, etc. How poorly we attempt to place on a scale what God is and has done! God is in everything!

To be responsible means to understand that whatever you do, however you do it, and for whatever reason you do so is inherently holy, otherwise we do not have an all-powerful God. It's the choices we make that make evil.

Our mission is to make a difference in our little corner of the world. The small transactions of individuals working to make this world a better place add up to great acts of betterment. The individual who exercises this responsibility will make this world a better place.

The enemy is usually thought of as a God who is far out there and could care less what happens to us. To some its the devil waiting at every corner to destroy our lives. Sometimes the enemy is our desire to lay blame for what's happening to us on someone else. Usually, the greatest enemy is ourselves.

God gave you the ability to make the choices. The blame line usually rests on the one in the mirror — the one who can really make a difference.

The time you have is now, although most of us choose to live in the past and hope things will get better in the future. Maybe its time to stop being a victim and start being a victor.

The terrain is the world we live in with all its faults. We are responsible to love and cherish this world as much as God loved and cherished this world when he decided to create it. We must be careful to analyze our place in life and to whom we are ultimately responsible to.

The troops are your family, friends and co-workers. But ultimately, we are responsible to every human being that God so lovingly created and in which he placed the spark of the divine.

What are you responsible for? To whom are you responsible? Who is ultimately accountable? In America today, we are accountable and responsible to many entities. We are ultimately accountable to God. We are accountable to our country. We are accountable to our families. We are accountable to our fellow human beings. How we choose to live that accountability is the choice we make.

By Capt. John W. Wilson Jr.
USAIC Chaplains Office

During my last nine years spent as an Army chaplain, a recurrent theme has emerged from my counseling experiences. The theme centers around the issue of forgiveness, better yet, not forgiving.

I remember some scenes from when I was a small child. When I did something wrong, I recall feeling as if my mother had withdrawn her love. I just did not feel right. I searched for something — anything I could do that would make the relationship right. I'd clean the floors, vacuum the carpet, wash the windows, do anything in order to feel right and be accepted again.

There were three words I needed to hear to make life right again and to help me stop cleaning the house. These words were "I forgive you."

In broken relationships, both in the home and in the work place, there is a need for the gift of forgiveness. I say gift because it is all too easy to withhold forgiveness.

When one party is offended by another, there is often some kind of pain transmitted and received. When we hurt, we often make demands of the person who offended us in order to bring restitution; however, we don't let go of the incident.

The trouble is that the incident is stored away in our thoughts and is subject to recall. Almost anything brings the incident back into the present. It could be a song on the radio, a scene in a movie, or a story that reminds us of our hurt. Sometimes it seems like these thoughts get the best of us, occupying every moment of our life. As a result of carrying our hurt, several scenarios are set in motion.

One of these is to withhold love. When we don't offer forgiveness, we not only deprive the other person of love, but we also deprive ourselves.

A story is told about the space agency conducting an experiment on chimpanzees. The experimenters wanted to see if a chimp would let go of food or an object after having seen or touched it. A chimp was shown a jar that contained a cookie lying on the bottom of it. The opening of the jar permitted the chimp just enough room to get his hand in it if he twisted it just right. There was not enough space for the chimp to get his hand and the cookie out of the jar at the same time, and he was not about to let go of either the jar or the cookie.

He deprived himself of both the cookie and the freedom to do anything else. It also impacted his relationships by making it hard for him to shake hands. Therefore, when we withhold forgiveness, we not only deprive others, but ourselves as well.

The Bible gives us some effective strategies to deal with unforgiveness. First, we must develop an attitude of forgiveness. Luke 17:1-10 suggests that none of us are immune from making mistakes in this lifetime.

At least, we need to understand that problems, misunderstandings and hurt are a part of our lot in life and they are bound to come. An attitude of forgiveness can begin to point us in the direction of resolution.

Second, make forgiveness an act of the will. There is the old saying, "I can forgive, but I will never be able to forget." This is a powerful truth. The mind retains every past thought somewhere. Separating emotion and thought can be very difficult. It takes a determined effort to release someone from a fault. It takes an even greater effort never to hold an offense against someone when we have the opportunity. Forgetting means to make a determined effort not to use a past offense against an offender.

Third, go to the offender in an effort to forgive and seek resolution. This could be difficult. You may have good intentions, but the other person may not respond. Don't give up.

You must control your own feelings about any situation. You cannot control anyone's behavior but your own. Do what is right for you.

Finally, you will know when you have forgiven someone; you will be able to ask God to bless them or you may be able to wish them the very best that life has to offer.

Army wins three medals, team title at nationals

World Class Athlete Program

LAKE BUENA VISTA, Fla. — The Army received Gold-, Silver- and Bronze-Medal performances from three Soldiers, qualified 11 for the U.S. World Team Trials and led the Armed Forces to their fifth consecutive Greco-Roman National team title. The Marine Corps garnered one Silver and two Bronze medals and the Navy won a Silver.

Miguel Spencer won his first national championship in the 167.5-pound division. in a thrilling 7-4 finish over Matt Lindland, the 1996 World Cup champ, from Lincoln, Neb. Fort Benning's warrior beat the number one seed in his weight class.

"Spencer went through the tournament without making a mistake. Coach Anatoly Nazarenko and I put together a game plan for Spencer and it worked," Army coach Derrick Waldroup said.

The last time Spencer and Lindland met, Lindland, won in a "street fight," Waldroup said.

"We told Miguel that he (Lindland) would follow the same pattern which won the previous match and to just be patient. We knew his opponents mental pattern."

Spencer's wife, Tori, also qualified for the World Team Trials by placing sixth in the 166.25-pound division.

Camp Humphrey, Korea's, Anthony Wilkes, with four months Greco-Roman experience, won a Silver Medal in his first national tournament.

"This is great. I have a Silver Medal from these nationals, a Gold from the University Nationals and I qualified for the World Team Trials," Wilkes said.

Wilkes, a flight operations specialist, said, "My coach (Derrick Waldroup) told me to just go out and have fun before the match.

"I knew I didn't have much experience (as my opponent), so I just had to keep pushing."

Wilkes' opponent, Mark Yanagihara, an Olympic Training Center resident, competing in his fifth national championship, and a fifth-place finisher in the 1996 World Cup, won by a score of 10-7.

"Winning today was a matter of experience, next time it will be Wilkes' turn," Waldroup said.

Wilkes, who grew up in Fort Wayne, Ind., said, "I joined the Army to better myself, for schooling and the discipline. My job as a flight operations specialist will help me. Whether I stay in the Army or take a civilian job. I can find work."

Thirty year-old Shon Lewis (138.75-pound division), the defending National champ, won the Bronze, 4-2, over his 20-year-old teammate Herb House. Both wrestlers are from Fort Benning.

Lewis dislocated his big toe in the semifinals, losing a 10-2 semifinal match against Jeremy McVige of the New York Athletic Club. McVige won the Gold.

Following the tournament, Coach Waldroup, a 1996 Olympian said, "We are on line for Team 2000. We qualified 11 for the World Team Trials and placed eight in the semifinals. The Army has never had that many in the semis before. We need more experience because we'll compete against the Russians and several other European countries next month, then move to the next level."

The top eight place finishers of each weight class (eight) will qualify for the U.S. World Team Trials in Minneapolis, Minn., June 26 through 28. The World Championships are in Warsaw, Poland, Sept. 10 through 13.

Armed Forces place finishers were:

Shooters win at World Cup competition

By Paula J. Randall Pagán
USAMU Public Affairs Office

The U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit walked away with two medals from the World Cup in Lonato, Italy, conducted April 16 to 19.

James Todd Graves, a two-time Olympian, who won the Gold Medal in Skeet at the Nicosia, Cyprus, World Cup April 13, took home the Bronze Medal in Skeet in Italy April 19. 1996 Olympic Gold and Bronze medalists Ennio Falco and Andrea Benelli, both of Italy, whom Graves beat in the Cyprus World Cup, took the Gold and Silver medals in Lonato.

Two-time Olympian Bret E. Erickson won the Bronze Medal in Lonato in Men's Double Trap; Italy won the Gold and Silver.

According to USAMU Shotgun Team coach Burl Branham, "The Italians, who are the best in the world, are the ones to beat."

Graves will now compete in the World Cup Skeet Final in the fall, which is a competition for the 12-best skeet shooters in the world. The world cups are the first opportunity where the marksmen can shoot a qualifying score to compete in the 2000 Olympics.

Besides Graves and Erickson, U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit shotgun shooters who make the 1997 U.S. National World Cup Team were: Shawn C. Dulohery, a U.S. National Shooting Team member since 1991; Joseph D. Buffa, the 1996 National Skeet Champion; David R. Alcoriza, a member of the 1996 U.S. Olympic Shooting Team; Joetta R. Novinski, the 1996 National Women's Trap and Double Trap Champion; and Matthew T. DePuydt, a 1995 Junior Olympic and World Championship Shotgun Team member.

Besides being a 1996 and 1992 member of the U.S. Olympic Shooting Team, Graves also won a Gold Medal in the National Skeet Shooting Association World Championships in 1996. In 1995, he won a Gold Medal in Trap at the Interservice Championships, and in 1993, he was the Double Trap and Skeet National Champion and won a Gold Medal in Trap at the Interservice Championships.

State parks post fishing tournaments —

The arrival of spring means it is time to get out your favorite fishing pole and head to Georgia's state parks.

This year, the parks have planned a dozen fishing events where serious anglers can strut their stuff while beginning youngsters learn the basics. The tournaments are a great excuse for families to spend time together in the spring sunshine.

Most state parks have boat ramps and docks, and many rent boats and sell bait. For more information about a fishing tournament, call the host park.

Fishing tournaments are just some of the many events conducted by state parks and historic sites throughout the year.

All events are free and parking is $2.

May 17

A kids' catfish rodeo takes place May 17 from 10 a.m. to 3 p.m. at Cloudland Canyon State Park, Rising Fawn.

Children 14 and younger can try their luck with a stocked pond. An adult must accompany each angler. The tournament is free.

For more information, call 657-4050.

May 24

A fishing rodeo is May 24 from 8 to 11 a.m. at Reed Bingham State Park, Adel.

Children 14 and younger can compete for prizes. The tournament is free.

For more information, call (912) 896-3551.

The junior and senior catfish rodeo is May 24 at 9 a.m. at Victoria Bryant State Park, Royston.

Children 16 and younger and adults 62 and older can compete in this fishing and casting contest.

Prizes will be awarded for categories such as largest fish, youngest fisherman and albino catfish catch.

There is no charge for the tournament.

For more information, call 245-6270.

June 7

Children's fishing rodeo takes place June 7 from 9 a.m. to noon at James H. Floyd State Park, Summerville.

The long-awaited reopening of the 16-acre lake finally arrives.

Anglers 14 and younger can compete for prizes. Hotdogs and hamburgers will be served after the rodeo.

Bring your own fishing gear and bait (no minnows). There is no charge for the tournament.

For more information, call 857-0826.

Children's fishing rodeo is June 7 at 8:30 a.m. until noon at Magnolia Springs State Park, Millen.

Top water lures catch big bass

By Earl Bentz and Steve Price
Outboard Marine Corporation

As a veteran guide on Florida's Lake Okeechobee, Steve Daniel has led his clients to plenty of big bass over the years, but only with a few lures.

"If I were limited to one type of lure for really big bass, I would choose a top water," said Daniel, a member of the Johnson Outboards Pro Staff who also competes in national bass tournaments throughout the United States.

"Day in and day out, trophy-class bass seem to hit top water lures more consistently than any other type. You don't always get as many strikes with a surface lure, but the strikes you do get are ones you usually remember."

Daniel's most memorable strike came from an 11-pound, 10 ounce giant that hit a top water lure around the edge of a grass line. That's his largest bass ever, but he also remembers one day this past December when he caught nine bass over seven pounds, including two over 10 pounds. All came on a surface lure.

"I caught every one of those fish on a buzz bait," Daniel said, "which is certainly one of the best top water lures available. It was a clear, calm day and it seemed like every bass that hit was a giant."

The Johnson pro says the two keys to most top water fishing success are to fish the lures near heavy cover, such as vegetation; and to work the lure as slowly as possible.

"I believe a top water lure represents either a threat to a bass, or an easy meal," Daniel said. "When you fish the lure near heavy cover, you're putting it right where big bass live, and when you fish it slowly, you really tantalize the fish into hitting.

"Something that moves slowly is easy to catch, so the bass just takes advantage of the situation."

Daniel said he prefers to fish around the edges of grass rather than over the top of vegetation if he can.

"The edge of the grass line presents two different conditions for bass, open water with depth as well as heavy cover with protection," he said. "Bass often roam back and forth along the edge of the vegetation searching for food, so when a lure comes past, they're ready to grab it."

Daniel prefers top water lures with propellers, usually known as "prop baits" to bass fishermen, because they draw strikes in both calm and choppy water.

"When the water is calm, you make your retrieve even more slowly than normal," he said. "But when the water is choppy, you can still get the attention of the fish because the lure makes so much commotion."

Anchoring techniques increase holding power

Evinrude Outboard Motors

According to the makers of CrabClaw Anchors, three factors are important for an anchor's holding power: (1) Having the right kind of anchor for your boat and the lake bottom; (2) Having enough line for the water depth; and (3) Knowing how to deploy the anchor so it holds fast in any wind or wave condition.

Design affects holding power

All anchors are designed to tip over, or "upset," and dig into the bottom and hold. They are intended for lakes with soft bottoms made of sand, silt or gravel, have flukes which dig in and resist sideways movement. Common examples include the Danforth anchor, the Navy anchor, the Mushroom anchor, and CrabClaw's anchor .

Let out more line

Any anchor can hold more effectively if you let out enough line. With more line, the pull on the anchor becomes more horizontal and the anchor digs in and holds. When done correctly, any anchor's resistance will be many times its actual weight.

A general rule is to let out three to five feet of line for every foot of water depth. If you're anchoring in 20 feet of water, you should let out 60 to 100 feet of line to prevent drifting.

Don't just drop the anchor

To anchor over a reef on a windy day, motor about 100 feet upwind of the reef, lower the anchor to the bottom and play out the line until you drift back over the reef. Let the boat take a strain on the line and you should feel the anchor dig in and hold. A second, smaller anchor off the back of the boat will keep the boat from swinging as the wind oscillates left and right.

To retrieve an anchor, motor slowly toward the anchor as you pull in line. Cut power when you are directly over the anchor and then lift it off the bottom. When done like this, retrieving the anchor involves a minimum of effort.

Soldier loses life in boating accident

USAIC PUblic Affairs Office

A Fort Benning Soldier died Saturday when he fell from a pontoon boat on the Chattahoochee River.

Pfc. Michael F. Wallerich, 24, of Wabasha, Minn., had just finished his first week of Airborne School when he and six of his friends rented a boat from the Uchee Creek Recreation Center.

The alcohol-related accident occurred about 7 p.m. near Rigdon Park when the boat's operator stopped the boat. According to witnesses, the change in momentum apparently caused Wallerich to lose his balance and fall into the river.

While two of the Soldiers dove into the muddy river, the others called for help.

Divers from Columbus' Emergency Medical Team looked for the body for two hours before calling off the search for the night. They returned Sunday, discovering the body around 1:30 p.m.

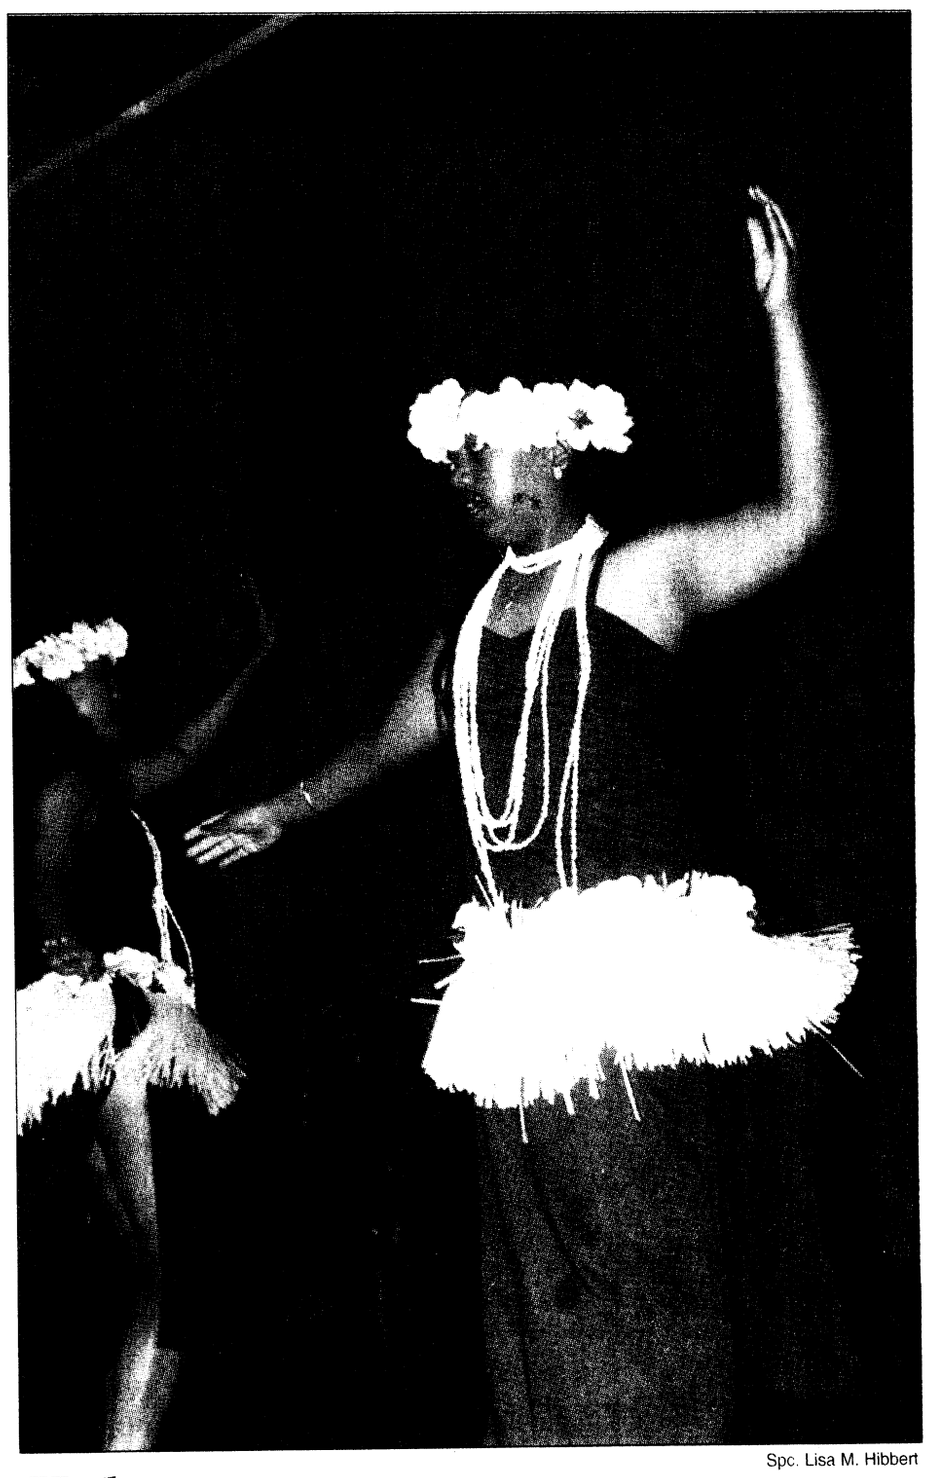
A memorial service at the Airborne Walk was conducted Wednesday.

Top NCO faces sexual misconduct

Army News Service

FORT MYER, Va. - Criminal charges were filed against Sergeant Major of the Army Gene C. McKinney recently under the Uniform Code of Military Justice.

McKinney has been charged with maltreatment of Soldiers (four specifications), assault (two specifications), adultery (one specification), communicating a threat (two specifications), indecent assault (four specifications) and solicitation of adultery (three specifications).



The charges and specifications involve three female Soldiers and one female sailor and allegedly occurred between October 1994 and March 1997.

These charges are allegations and McKinney is presumed innocent until proven guilty.

A colonel has been appointed to conduct an investigation into the charges and specifications as prescribed by Article 32 of the Uniform Code of Military Justice.

McKinney denied all charges of sexual misconduct.

Post remembers the past with Airborne Awards Festival

By Dov Schwartz
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Representatives of nearly every airborne unit that served in a combat operation gathered at Fort Benning May 8 as part of the 20th annual Airborne Awards Festival.

The day's events included an Airborne in Action Demonstration by the 1st Battalion (Airborne), 507th Infantry, 11th Infantry Regiment; a memorial service to those airborne Soldiers who paid the ultimate price; and an airborne operation at Fryar Drop Zone.

Col. John P. Lewis, commander of the 11th Inf. Regt., saluted the nearly 350 paratroopers from five countries for their "personal sacrifices and heroism."

Lewis acknowledged the great distances and diverse backgrounds of those in attendance.

"This elite gathering of airborne troops represents the finest chapter in American, British, French, Canadian and Belgian airborne histories."

Reflecting on the bond between airborne Soldiers of different countries, James Rizzuto, whose 1944 jump into occupied Holland landed him in a prisoner of war camp, said, "We are all jumpers."

It is that bond that brought so many to the Airborne Awards Festival, Don Lassen said. According to Lassen, who jumped into Normandy with the 505th Parachute Unit, "The bond between two paratroopers is stronger than the bond between brothers."

Patriotism is a strong factor in motivating airborne Soldiers, Lassen said.

"They have proven they have the courage to step out of an airplane into a sky full of nothing. They do it because they love their country and they will do what they can to preserve the freedom in this country."

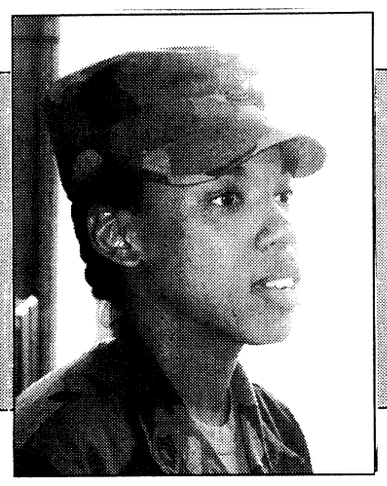
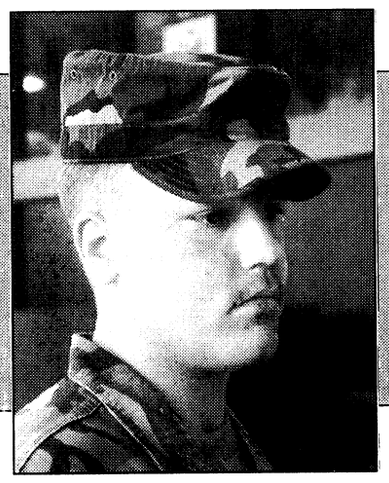
VARIOUS VOICES

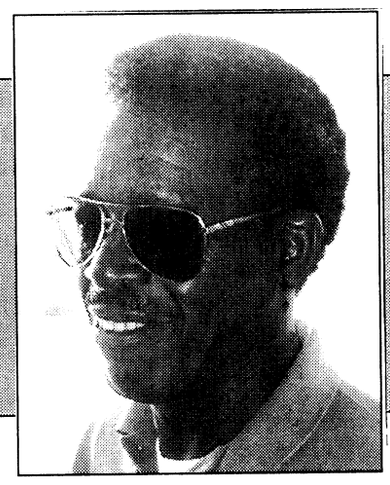


Armed Forces Day is May 17. Why are you proud to be associated with the Armed Services?

(Retired) Staff Sgt. Pedro Rodriguez — "Because this is the only country that is keeping up with the 21st century to support the global democracy."



1st Lt. Matt Brown, Company C, 1st Battalion (Airborne), 507th Infantry, 11th Infantry Regiment — "As an attorney, it gives me the opportunity to work in the public interest. I get to help the troops when they have problems and serve my country."



Sgt. 1st Class Tamanee Mundy, Company A, 2nd Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment — "It's my patriotic duty to serve my country. It's a good experience."

Sgt. 1st Class Tracy Lewis, Company A, 2nd Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment — "It gives me the opportunity to give back to humanity, the community and my country."

Spc. William Benzing, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 2nd Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment — "I take a lot of pride in serving my country. It is a part of my family heritage."

(Retired) Sgt. Maj. Elbert E. Smith — "I'm proud because I was able to serve my country and, at the same time, I matured. I'm also sure I touched some lives and helped them in a positive manner."

Armed Forces Day

Honors those who serve our country, our way of life

By Elizabeth E. LaMonica
Special to The Bayonet©

Elizabeth E. LaMonica thinks more people should take pride in our nation's Armed Forces.

commentary

I'm proud of you.

Chances are, if you are reading this, you are either a family member or a member of the U.S. Armed Forces.

Tomorrow is your day.

When I was in college, I was always amazed at students (mostly my female friends) who swore they would never date a military man. Why not? A man who serves his country is somehow not worthy? Dishonorable?

Some of my male friends surprised me with their attitudes about the military, especially my friends who had come from a military tradition. They swore they would never join the military in any way. Not the National Guard, not a Reserve unit, nothing. Why not?

They probably wanted to date some of those anti-military women.

What they did not understand is what an honor-filled tradition the military is.

I know not all Soldiers join for patriotic reasons. I know Soldiers who joined for college money. I know Soldiers who joined because their parents wanted them to. I know Soldiers who joined because they were at a loss with what to do with their lives after graduation.

But I also know Soldiers who are serving because they felt they should do something to give back to their country. I also know Soldiers who joined because it was a family tradition. I also know Soldiers who signed up because of the sheer adventure of it.

I'm proud of all of these Soldiers. These members of the Armed Services are examples of answering our country's call in times of war and peace.

These Soldiers choose to make sacrifices serving our country. These sacrifices may be so large as to cost the Soldier his or her life, or they may be the small sacrifices made every day.

These Soldiers join knowing they will be on call 24 hours a day, seven days a week. They will be subject to long absences from their loved ones and the comforts of home. During these times, they may miss important family events and struggles. To top it all off, when they go in to work, they face unpredictable work places with its daily challenges.

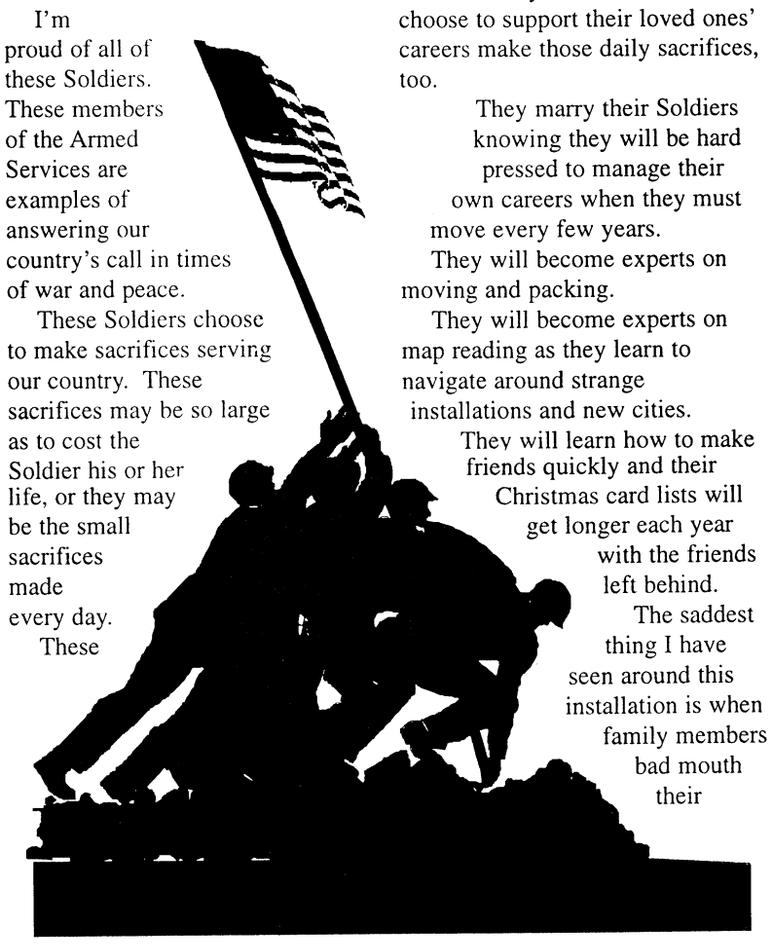
But they aren't the only ones who make sacrifices.

The family members who choose to support their loved ones' careers make those daily sacrifices, too.

They marry their Soldiers knowing they will be hard pressed to manage their own careers when they must move every few years.

They will become experts on moving and packing.

They will become experts on map reading as they learn to navigate around strange installations and new cities.



They will learn how to make friends quickly and their Christmas card lists will get longer each year with the friends left behind.

The saddest thing I have seen around this installation is when family members bad mouth their Soldiers' jobs. What a struggle it must be for a Soldier to work in an uncertain environment and return home to an unsupportive environment.

I cannot stress how proud I am of my husband for serving. I am equally proud of both his parents for serving in the Navy and Army. I also owe my respect to my father, my uncles, my cousin and my grandfather for serving our country in the Army, the Air Force and the Navy during several wars. I am proud of my friends who joined knowing the current downsizing mode. I am especially respectful of any Soldier who continues to serve despite adversity.

What courage and honor it must take to continue to serve after being a prisoner of war. But I met a man who did just that. He was a pilot who was shot down over Berlin during World War II and spent a year in a German POW camp. Yet after the war, when our country was participating in the Berlin Airlift to take food to the cut-off city, this hero flew back to the city where he lost his freedom for a time to help ensure its freedom.

If we didn't have the military to go for us, we couldn't enjoy the freedom and peace their services bring to our society. Members of our Armed Forces fill the gap between our security and the tyranny of the world.

Wilson Elementary faculty and staff thank parent volunteers

The entire faculty and staff of Wilson Elementary School would like to thank our parent volunteers for their many expressions of kindness shown to us during Teacher Appreciation Week.

These dedicated parents worked diligently the entire year to enhance the teaching and learning environment of our school. From popping popcorn each week for "Popcorn Wednesday" to sponsoring carnivals, dances and family night suppers, their amount of commitment is most commendable.

Their support didn't stop there, however. Each day this week, our parents worked hard to make us know how much they appreciate the work we do with their children. Upon our arrival Monday, our staff found our classrooms and office areas decorated with balloons, flowers and banners. Throughout the week, other expressions of appreciation arrived in the form of flowers, baskets of baked goods and even home-cooked meals to share with our families after work.

The amount of support, assistance and encouragement we receive from the parents of Wilson Elementary School is phenomenal. They are truly an extraordinary group of individuals. Together with their children and our staff, we make a dynamic team.

— Phyllis Parker, principal

Retiree thanks Martin Army Community Hospital

With all the uproar about Tricare and its negative publicity, I feel it's important not to forget how truly blessed we are to have a military hospital like Martin Army Community Hospital.

I retired from the military in April 1958. During my military years, I taught at the Transportation School, ran the Tuskegee Army Air Force Motorpool during World War II and worked at the Pentagon. Since 1960, I've worked as a real estate agent in Columbus. I have seen it all. I'm still amazed at how well I was treated at Martin Army.

To cite a specific example, I needed minor surgery and went to Victory Clinic for an examination. The doctor was prompt and professional and set up an appointment for my surgery.

When I arrived for my appointment, the doctor and nurse were on time, well equipped and worked together as a team. Both were genuinely interested in my well being and went beyond the call of duty in being courteous to me. I received what I felt was a VIP treatment.

The whole experience impressed me greatly. It means a lot for the older population to be treated with respect and to see dedicated professionals who truly care.

I just wanted to express my opinion about Martin Army's service to the retired community. Good medical treatment is hard to find in a lot of places. I think we need to give credit where credit is due. Martin Army Community Hospital is doing an outstanding job in maintaining a friendly, courteous and professional atmosphere in the hospital. Good medical treatment keeps us going.

— George Rowell
Retired Master Sergeant

Dial 545-BOSS is the commander's action line for Soldiers, family members and civilians to call when they have problems or complaints that can't be resolved elsewhere.

While it is not a substitute for the chain of command or for agencies established to provide assistance, the line offers another means of communication between Fort Benning's community and commanders.

Call:

The caller expressed concern about the Regimental Road Chapel being torn down. He would like reconsideration since there is a lot of history surrounding this chapel. He attended chapel there as a young airborne student and again while attending Officer Candidate School.

Department of Public Works Response:

The Space Utilization Officer, DPW, informed the caller that the Regimental Road Chapel was deferred from demolition. However, it will be relocated to the WW II site at the National Infantry Museum once funding becomes available. Until that time the Chapel will remain operational at its present site.

Call:

The caller said she went to Martin Army Hospital one night and it was packed with patients and only two doctors were on duty. The caller felt there were not a sufficient number of physicians available to care for the number of patients in the emergency room.

Martin Army Community Hospital response:

A patient representative explained that the emergency room is staffed for the normal or approximate number of patients that might be present for emergency treatment. After midnight, the physicians and ancillary staff are reduced since the number of patients presenting for care is usually minimal. Where there is a large influx of patients or the total time for care exceeds three hours, additional staff are called in to assist with patient care. Patients are treated in the ER based on the severity of their illness.

McKinney: Faces charges

"I am not answering to any of these charges because I have not done anything that I've been charged with," McKinney said later at a press conference outside his lawyer's office in Alexandria, Va.

Retired Sgt. Maj. Brenda Hoster, McKinney's former public affairs advisor, accused him of making lewd remarks, propositioning her and assaulting her during a temporary duty trip in 1996. He was suspended from his duties as sergeant major of the Army in February.

"The charges are allegations," said Kim Walz, a spokeswoman for the U.S. Army Military District of Washington. "Sgt. Maj of the Army McKinney is presumed innocent unless and until proven guilty."

McKinney has been assigned to the MDW pending the outcome of his case. A colonel has been appointed to conduct an investigation into the charges. That investigation, similar to a grand jury hearing in the civilian courts, is prescribed by Article 32 of the Uniform Code of Military Justice.

At his press conference, his first public response to the allegations, McKinney said, "I want the American people to know, and I certainly want the American Soldier, Soldiers of America's Army, to know that I have done no wrong in these charges. I am still a Soldier, a sergeant, and I still believe in human rights, dignity and respect for people. I continue to believe that way, I was raised that way, and I will die that way because that is the way I have lived and was raised to be. So I want the American people to know again that I have not done any of these things that my accusers have charged me with or alleged that I have done."

AAFES offers best prices and customer service

By Elizabeth E. LaMonica
Special to The Bayonet©

Who would have thought that a Soldier could save money and increase his benefits at the same time?

That's exactly what happens when Soldiers choose to shop at any of Fort Benning's Army and Air Force Exchange Service locations.

With $70 million in sales last year, the post's AAFES system is the third largest in the southeast region.

AAFES includes the main mall stores (except the commissary, pharmacy, First Union bank and Carlson Wagonlit Travel agency), the shoppettes around post, the class six stores, the gas stations and the Burger King. Also, some post facilities are concessionaires of AAFES.

"The Best Price Program has always been our policy," said William Nieves, general manager, Fort Benning Exchange. "AAFES does everything to be the best price in town. In the long run you're going to save between 20 and 25 percent."

"When we find something that we have that's more expensive than a competitor, we'll reduce it to the nearest nickel," Nieves said, "and the customer still saves 6 percent."

A portion of every dollar spent at the PX goes back into Morale Welfare and Recreation funds and therefore back to the Soldiers.

"Last year it averaged out to be about $240 per Soldier for each Soldier in the Army," Nieves said.

AAFES is also an important part of the Fort Benning community.

"Maybe we don't toot our horn enough," Nieves said. "We provide gifts, certificates and discount coupons for the Soldier of the Month, Soldier of the Quarter, Non Commissioned Officer of the Year and Drill Sergeant of the Year."

AAFES was also responsible for donating the bicycles awarded to the two top finishers from each graduating class of the United States Army Physical Fitness School's Follow Me to Fitness 2001 program.

AAFES also offers check cashing, lay away, special order program, the Deferred Payment Plan and has a personal shopper on staff to assist with customers' shopping needs. Other new services available are on line shopping and the AAFES website.

Not content to rest on their past accomplishments, plans are in the works to expand and renovate the main mall PX.

"If all works well, we're looking to begin construction in September," Nieves said. "All the funds for the expansion will come from AAFES earnings."

The plan to add almost 27,000 square feet to the store will increase the apparel and electronics sections and the garden shop. Plans are also being made to include a Taco Bell and a Church's Chicken in the food court.

"During (construction), there will be some inconveniences, but we will stay open," Nieves said. "We're there, we care and we want to help you as much as possible to ensure that your shopping experience is the most pleasant one around."

INFANTRY: Soldiers from ITB improve FTX, implement M-880 training rounds

By Spc. Lisa M. Hibbert
Bayonet staff writer

Leading the way in training advancements, Soldiers from Company D, 1st Battalion, 19th Infantry Regiment, Infantry Training Brigade, became the first basic training company to use the M-880 mortar short range training rounds. This new experience took place during a field training exercise conducted May 6 - 10.

Soldiers training to become mortar specialists worked the M-880 in the past, but only at the Malone Range Complex. There, the Soldiers received instruction on the 60mm, 81mm and 120mm as well as the M-880 short-range training round which has replaced the M-1 Sabot round.

After the Soldiers completed these two weeks of training, they were unable to implement any of this knowledge during their FTX due to the high cost of live ammunition. While the Soldiers do have the opportunity to fire two live rounds from each category, the firings were at set areas with no need for adjustments, said Sgt. 1st Class Larry J. Smith, noncommissioned officer in charge of Malone Range 25.

Traditionally, drill sergeants transported a mortar system to the FTX site and the Soldiers practiced dry fire crew drills.

"When I was a drill sergeant, it was difficult to keep the Soldiers interested in the mortar training received during the FTX because they couldn't fire the weapons," said Sgt. 1st Class Orlando Ballentin, Doctrine and Literature manager for mortar systems Army-wide.

Because of the M-880, and an innovation on the part of a drill sergeant, mortar training became more realistic.

Previously an instructor at the Mortar Leaders Course, Sgt. 1st Class Michael Wischnewski, said he thought the mortar training his Soldiers were receiving could have been better. With that in mind, he went to his commander, Capt. Timothy Bennett, for support.

"There are NCOs in units that have not received the type of training that our Soldiers are receiving right now," Bennett said.

"Using the M-880 in the field is hands on with actual live fire. Plus, this helps the unit better evaluate how much training the Soldiers have retained," Ballentin said. "I hope the other companies start to do this type of field training."

Pvt. 2 Noshua Robins, a Soldier in Co. D, agreed with Ballentin.

"While you're at the range, you just fire your rounds off and go," he said. "This is more hands on."

Soldiers learned how to operate a fire direction center, act as a forward observer and how to send indirect fire. Although the M-1 has been used during training before, the M-880 simulates the M-81 better.

"The M-880 is a cleaner round with a lower misfire rate," Wischnewski said. "It's very accurate, fires fewer duds and keeps the cannon cleaner than the M-1 Sabot."

The cadre were not the only ones excited about this new advancement. The trainees said they liked the training they were receiving.

"The training is bringing everything that we learned so far together," Pvt. 2 Douglas Pool said.

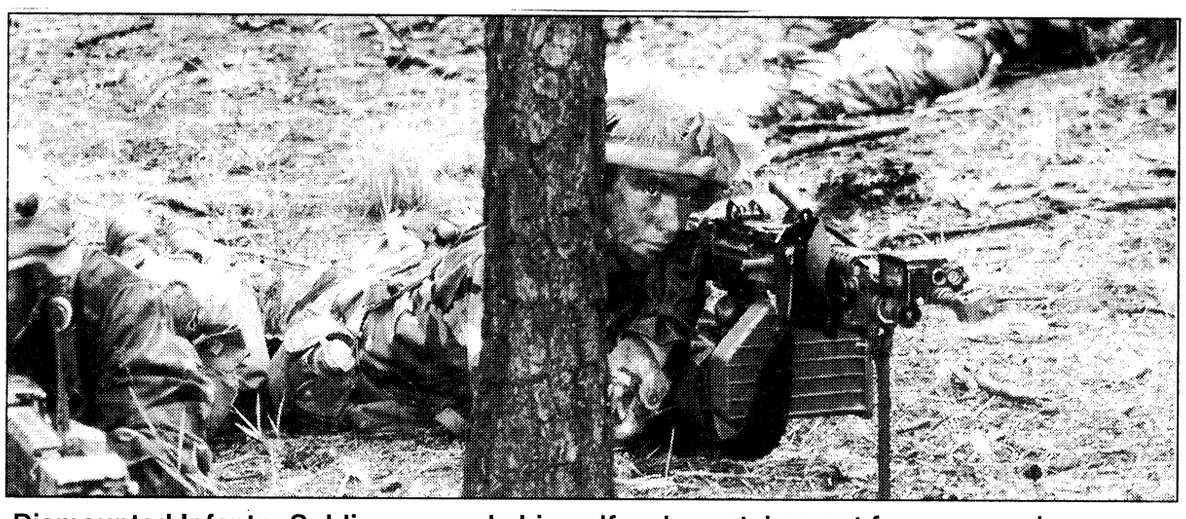
"Up until now, it seemed like we learned things out of step," Pvt. Jonah Smith said. "Now it all makes sense."

The mortarmen are not the only ones benefiting from this training, the dismounted Infantry Soldiers are benefitting by conducting joint training exercises with them, just as they would in a line unit.

"I'm really pleased with this training," Bennett said. "We worked really hard to pull this off but I think it was worth it."

The Soldiers also trained with the 60mm mortar supporting patrolling operations at night.

"The privates we're going to ship out to the units will be better prepared because of the M-880," said Lt. Col. Mark Stevens, battalion commander, 1st Bn., 19th Inf. Regt.



ITB Commander, Col. Abraham Turner, said that he was pleased the training the Soldiers received.

"This is the sort of lead-the-way training that puts ITB on the cutting edge," Turner said.

Medical personnel return home from deployment

By Maj. Jack Pagano
Bayonet staff writer

More than 100 Army Reserve medical personnel came home earlier this week after participating in Operations Joint Endeavor and Guard. The doctors nurses, and medical technicians who served in Bosnia, Hungary and Germany, are now at Harmony Church for three to five days of redeployment outprocessing and a well-earned trip home.

No one seemed happier to be on American soil than Lt. Col. Larry Plumb. While filling out redeployment forms in a dimly lit gymnasium well past midnight, the family physician from the small town of Hamburg, N.Y., a suburb west of Buffalo, reflected back on his tour of duty.

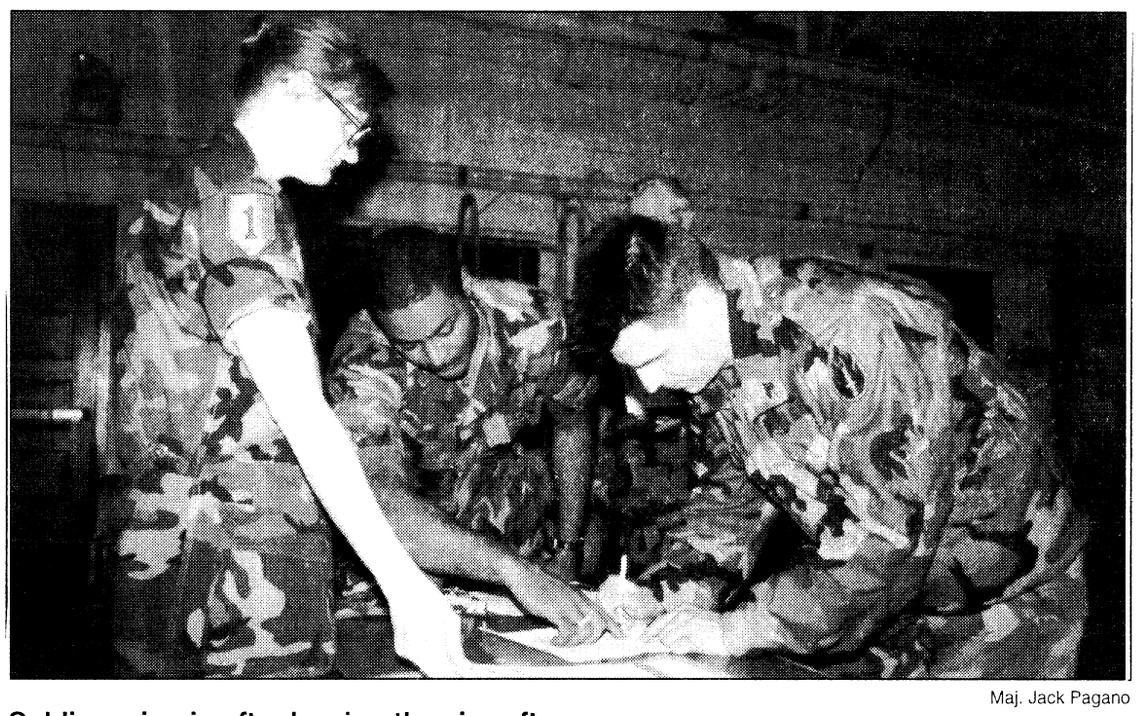
During his 149-day call up, Plumb medically outprocessed Soldiers in Bosnia and Taszar, Hungary.

"It was tough leaving family and friends and my business back in Hamburg, but I knew when it was time to serve I would help. I have no complaints on my part," the upbeat doctor said.

With a big smile on his face, the doctor joked about how he left the Buffalo area during last winter in pursuit of a cooler climate and less snow. Yet, his contribution in war-torn Bosnia was in the middle of Europe's big chill. He said everyone got used to the cold and having American Soldiers pitching in.

"I can't believe we're going to leave this place next year," Plumb said. Stabilization Force officials say all American Soldiers will be out of Bosnia by June 1998. "We're preventing the start of a major war. This mission is well worth it."

Lt. Col. Plumb is out of Bosnia but his memories paint a vivid image of Soldiers helping keep the peace. For the next 72 to 96 hours, Plumb and other redeploying Soldiers will march through a well-orchestrated plan to get them home.



The physical examination, equipment turn in, finance, DD214 paperwork — this reverse outprocessing will spell success if completed in three to five days.

Lt. Col. William McCorkle, commander of the 3397 Garrison Support Unit, Chattanooga, Tenn., is spreading the good word at the gymnasium. Loudly and confidently, McCorkle said, "our staff is here to serve you."

The Tennessee Valley Authority Nuclear Power Plant supervisor will be in charge of outprocessing units during the next eight months.

Listening to McCorkle and his team explain the fast pace redeployment chain of events was Col. Paul Washburn. The optometrist from Placerville, Calif., summed up his 270-day trip into the Joint Endeavor Joint Guard experience as a Soldier standing tall.

As if he was reciting the "Pledge of Allegiance" or the "Star Spangled Banner," Washburn firmly said, "When a Soldier is called — you stand up and be counted and you do what you're trained to do until they don't need you anymore."

2/58 Soldiers set new record for qualification

By 1st Lt. Joseph Means
2nd Battalion, 58th Infantry Regiment

Company B, 2nd Battalion, 58th Infantry Regiment, recently set a new record for the mortar gunnery exam. A platoon of one station unit training 11C (indirect fire Infantry) Soldiers broke the old record of 99.1 percent with a near-perfect 99.4 percent.

The mortar gunners test their speed and accuracy in laying a 81mm mortar as part of a three-man team. Every 11C goes through about 40 hours of training before the test to meet the standard. To set a new record, the drill sergeants spent hours each night after regular training refining the trainees' new skills.

According to platoon sergeant Sgt. 1st Class Bryan Voisard, an average mortar section in a line unit only scores about 95 percent. This makes a 99.4 percent all the more remarkable, coming from trainees with only 10 weeks in the Army.

The trainees did everything they would be expected to do in a line unit, including running the fire direction center, normally a task for an experienced noncommissioned officer.

Trainees complete final training exercise

By Jason M. Morwick
Infantry Training Brigade

The new Soldiers of Company D, 1st Battalion, 50th Infantry Regiment, took a step closer to graduation April 9 by completing their six-day, final field training exercise.

The company, which trained over 120 Infantry Soldiers during its current one station unit training cycle, deployed to the field April 4 and concluded the FTX with a 25-kilometer tactical road march back to garrison. The FTX incorporated all the skills the Soldiers learned in the past 13 weeks and focused on training Soldiers how to operate under conditions of limited visibility.

"The company spent a considerable amount of time conducting night operations during this FTX," company commander Capt. Mark Krumin said. "We try to make the FTX as realistic as possible, and the privates learn very quickly that any 'simple' task or mission during daylight hours becomes much more challenging in the dark.

"The drill sergeants did an absolutely outstanding job of training the privates," Krumin said. "Especially considering the fact that two or three drill sergeants may have had to control as many as 40 or more privates."

Sgt. 1st Class Michael McCoy said training went well, even at night.

"Although illumination at night during this FTX only ranged from zero to four percent, we were still able to train the Soldiers to standard," McCoy, a drill sergeant in the company, said. "I wish I had this opportunity when I went through basic training years ago."

Another drill sergeant put safety first.

"Safety was my main concern," Staff Sgt. John Bennett, said. "We were able to effectively balance safety with realistic training."

Drill sergeant Staff Sgt. Byron Veasy believed the Soldiers learned important lessons such as accountability for their equipment and teamwork.

"The Soldiers quickly realized the field craft they take for granted during the day is not as easy during the night," he said. "Teamwork becomes especially important because they need to work together to successfully move in the darkness."

"Teamwork is the most important thing I've learned during the FTX," Pvt. Ryan Seymour from Augusta, Ga., said.

Spc. Justin Grabanski, the company honor graduate for the cycle, added that he learned important lessons about attention to detail and communication.

"If we did not pay attention to our surroundings or communicate well with one another, we would be lost during the night movements," he said.

"Teamwork and communication go hand in hand," Drill sergeant Sgt. Robert Varela said. "They are vital in order to effectively shoot, move and communicate under conditions of limited visibility."

Upon completion of the FTX, the Soldiers completed the 25-kilometer road march, one of their last requirements for the cycle, and were awarded the blue Infantry cord.

IOBC conducts MILSTAKES

By 2nd Lt. Eric Barlow
Infantry Officer Basic Course

Company B, 2nd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment, Infantry Officers' Basic Course, Class 4-97, began their fifth week of training and testing with military stakes.

MILSTAKES is the collection of common tasks each lieutenant must correctly pass to graduate IOBC. The training was organized into a round-robin format with nine stations and split into two days.

Stations included loading, firing, performing immediate actions and unloading the M-60 machine gun and the M-249 squad automatic weapon; assembling, disassembling and performing a functions check on the M-16, M-60 and SAW; firing and misfiring procedures for the AT4 anti-tank weapon; installing and recovering the M-211 anti-tank mine, emplacing and recovering the M-18A1 Claymore anti-personnel mine; and finally, preparing a range card for the M-60.

Upon completion of all the stations, training was concluded as the Soldiers of Co. B marched once more for a two-mile tactical road march back to their company area.

Class 4-97 is scheduled to graduate July 25.

Spanish helicopter school changes commanders

School of the Americas

Officials and friends from Georgia and Alabama came to the Army Aviation Museum, Fort Rucker, Ala., May 6 for the passing of the guidon of the Spanish Helicopter School Battalion from Lt. Col. Keith R. Donnelly to Lt. Col. Jan P. Ithier.

Under looming aircraft, amidst scenes of past wars, they gathered in a tradition as old as the military itself: to observe the transfer of a unit's command.

The battalion is assigned to the U.S. Army School of the Americas at Fort Benning, but is attached to Fort Rucker's Aviation Training Brigade, "to standardize its training and take advantage of the resources at the Aviation Center," said Col. Michael Mulvenon, the commander of Fort Rucker's Aviation Training Brigade, describing the SHSB.

Mulvenon pointed out that SHSB is unique.

"It is the only aviation unit in the U.S. Army which trains and qualifies Latin American pilots and maintainers, using Spanish as the primary language," he said.

The brigade commander praised Ithier, saying he has "strong credentials and a super reputation. I'm confident he will be able to meet all the challenges with great success and will continue to improve upon an already outstanding situation."

Ithier will be building on the laurels Donnelly has garnered in the past two years, which include nearly 8,000 hours of unit flying time without an accident.

SHSB developed the first Aviation Safety Course and Maintenance Test Pilot Course for its Latin American students and developed an exchange of U.S. and Chilean experts in aviation doctrine.

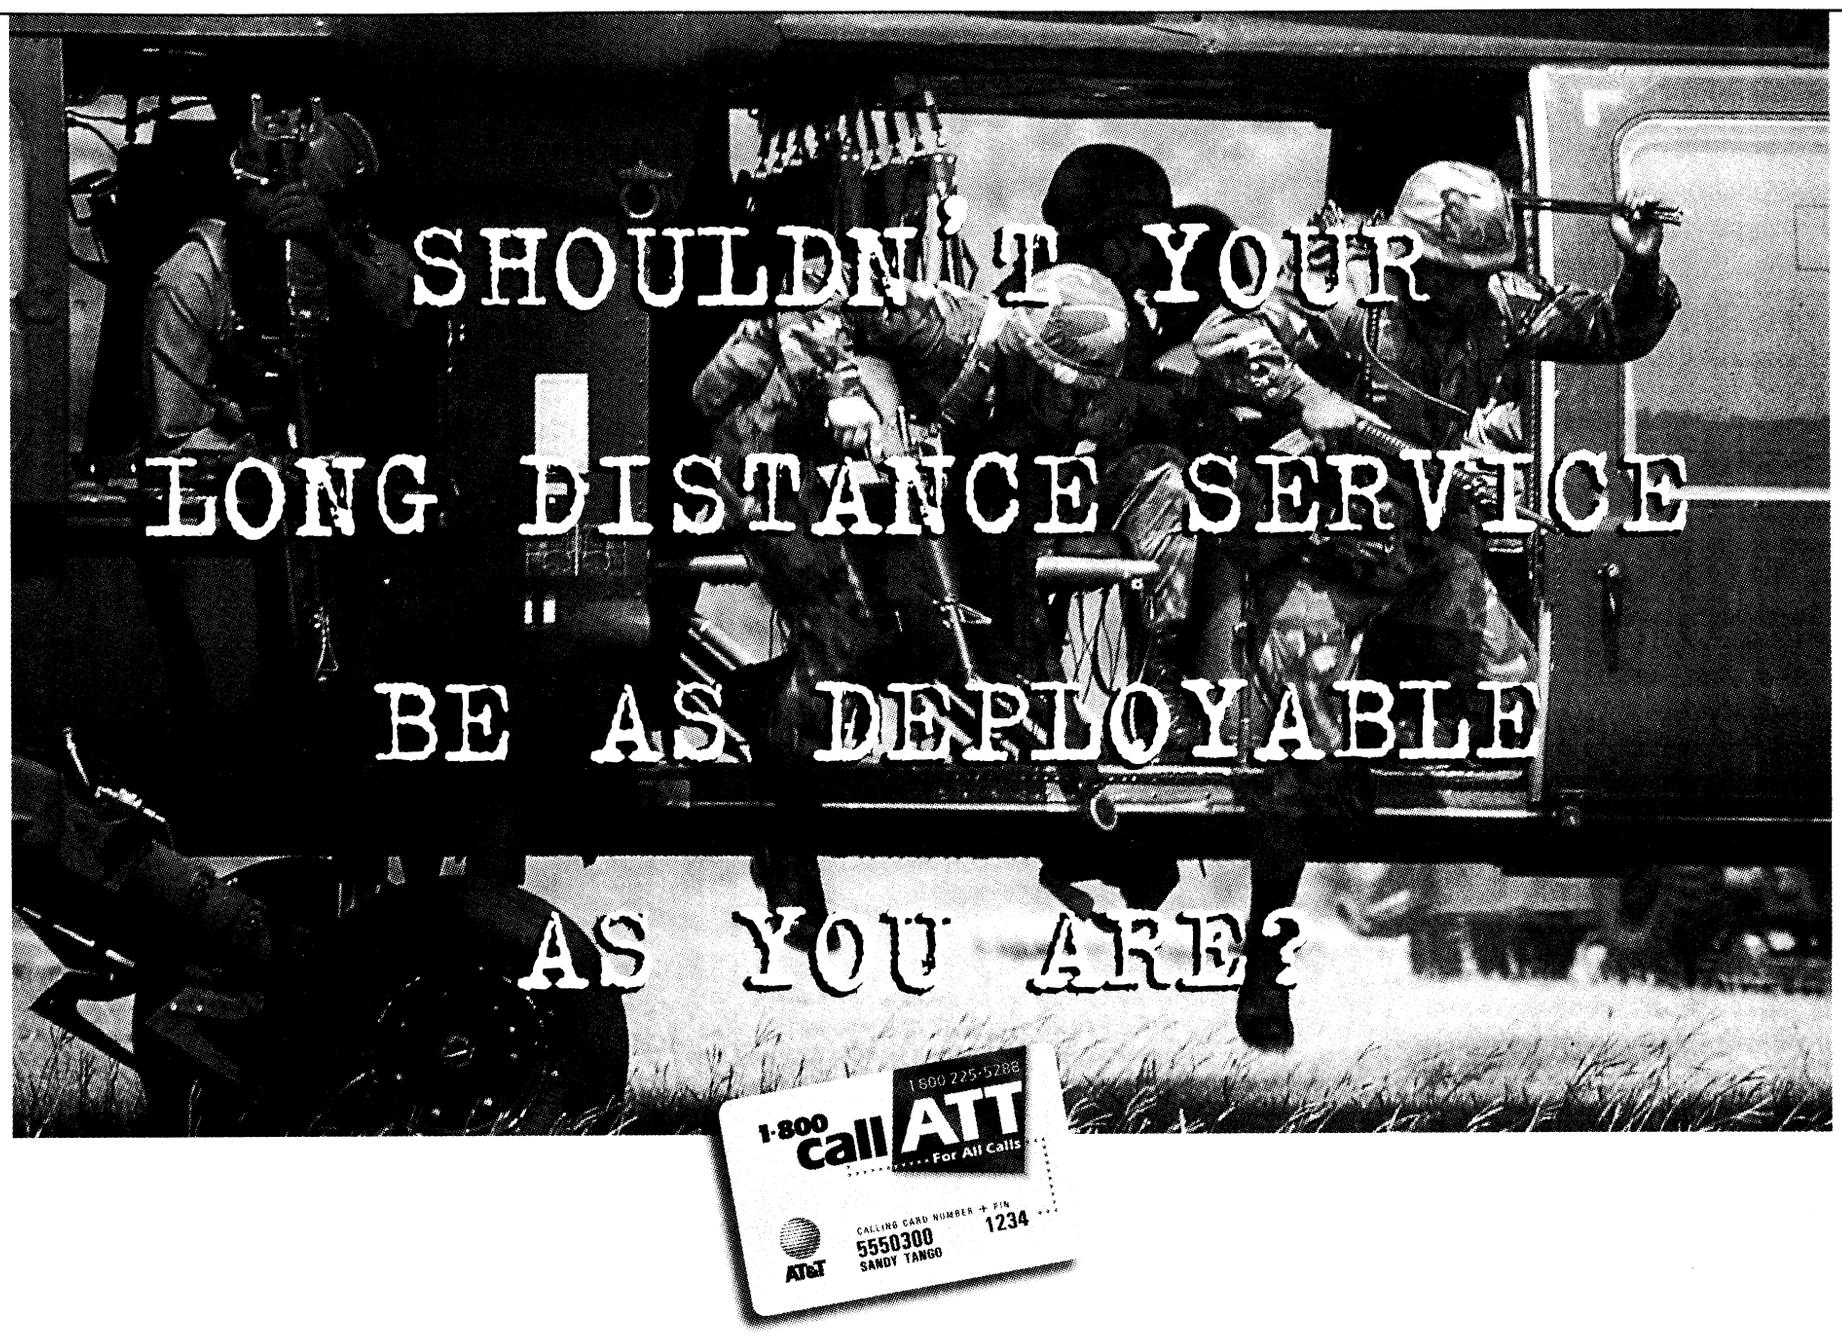
"The influence that this small school has is incredible," Donnelly said in his farewell. "Because of the geography of South America, the helicopter is the fundamental and primary weapon system in the war on narcotics and narco-terrorism.

"I witnessed very brave and dedicated airmen risking their lives to stop the flow of illegal drugs simply because some Americans lack the discipline to reject that hideous lifestyle," he said.

"In the major drug-producing nations, the bulk of the rotary-wing airmen and mechanics were trained here by the Spanish Helicopter School Battalion. Their success is a by-product of the battalion's success."

Ithier professed it to be an honor to command this singular unit.

"I will endeavor to maintain the level of excellence you have established and the good relationships with our Latin American friends," he said.



The new battalion commander was born in Puerto Rico and was commissioned an armor officer upon graduating from the University of Puerto Rico in 1978. He attended flight school in 1981 and is a graduate of the Armor Officer Basic Course, Aviation Officer Advanced Course and the Command and General Staff College.

Ithier's assignments include two tours in Germany as an armored cavalry platoon leader and as squadron intelligence officer; company commander, operations officer and executive officer for 1st Battalion, 14th Aviation Battalion, Fort Rucker; deputy air operations officers for the U.S. Army Special Operations Command, and group operations officer and battalion executive officer for the 229th Attack Aviation Regiment, Fort Bragg, N.C.; and commander of the U.S. Army Apache Technical Assistance Field Team, Abu Dhabi, United Arab Emirates.

His awards and decorations include the Senior Aviator Badge, Parachutist Badge, Air Assault Badge, Army Meritorious Service Medal, Army Commendation Medal and Army Achievement Medal.

Ithier is married to the former Daniela Sickinger and they have two sons, Jan Paul and Dominic.

New CSM receives War Eagle

By Dov Schwartz
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Command Sgt. Maj. Larry D. Durham was passed the War Eagle Bayonet May 7 as he was officially welcomed as the Infantry Training Brigade's new command sergeant major.

Durham replaced Command Sgt. Maj. Gary Hurley who retired.

Durham is a native of Macon, Ga. He joined the Army in 1975 after serving four years in the U.S. Marine Corps.

Prior to becoming ITB command sergeant major, Durham served as the command sergeant. major for the 1st Battalion, 50th Infantry Regiment. He also served as command sergeant major of the 3rd Brigade, 25th Infantry Division (Light).

Durham's schools include Air Assault School, Airborne School, Ranger School and the U.S. Army Sergeants Major Academy.

In his remarks during the Kanell Field ceremony, Durham said the Soldiers training with ITB today were the future of the Army.

"The Soldiers we are training are the NCOs of Force XXI," Durham said.

Col. Abraham J. Turner, commander of the Infantry Training Brigade, reminded the crowd of the central role that sergeants major play in ITB.

"Command Sgt. Maj. Durham is our sergeant major," Turner said.

"The passing of the bayonet ceremony reminds us of the significance, trust and respect we have for the position of sergeant major."

JAC offers tips for Soldiers

Army Career and Alumni Program

"Separating Soldiers and spouses will find the more they study, learn and know about the job search process, the more organized and productive they will be," said Chick Eagle, Fort Benning Job Assistance counselor.

Eagle offers the following job search tips that seem to hold true for the vast majority of transitioning Soldiers:

• Soldiers who have researched occupational choices and inventoried their skills, training and experience are better able to organize and focus their searches. This is an important first step because it establishes job objectives.

• Learning the skills of resume and cover letter preparation is the basic load of ammunition for the Soldier's job search rifle. The process prepares him or her to organize experiences and skills into a solid self-marketing presentation. Not all occupations require resumes, but many require it as part of the applicant screening process.

• Jobs are out there and the good job seekers use all avenues to dig up the best opportunities. Making an "all fronts" attack yields the best results. Go to job fairs, read classified ads in newspapers, visit the labor department and chamber of commerce, surf the Internet, check the Army Career and Alumni Program hot leads, and best of all — use your information network of friends, family, other former Soldiers and any acquaintance who is willing to discuss job opportunities. What we call "networking" really works.

• Filling out employment applications should be done with great care. Applications require details not normally found in resumes and therefore it is recommended that job seekers get a practice sample application and fill in all the information to make sure they are ready to quickly and correctly complete an application for an actual job. Detailed information about references, former supervisors and past salary received can create problems unless job seekers are fully prepared.

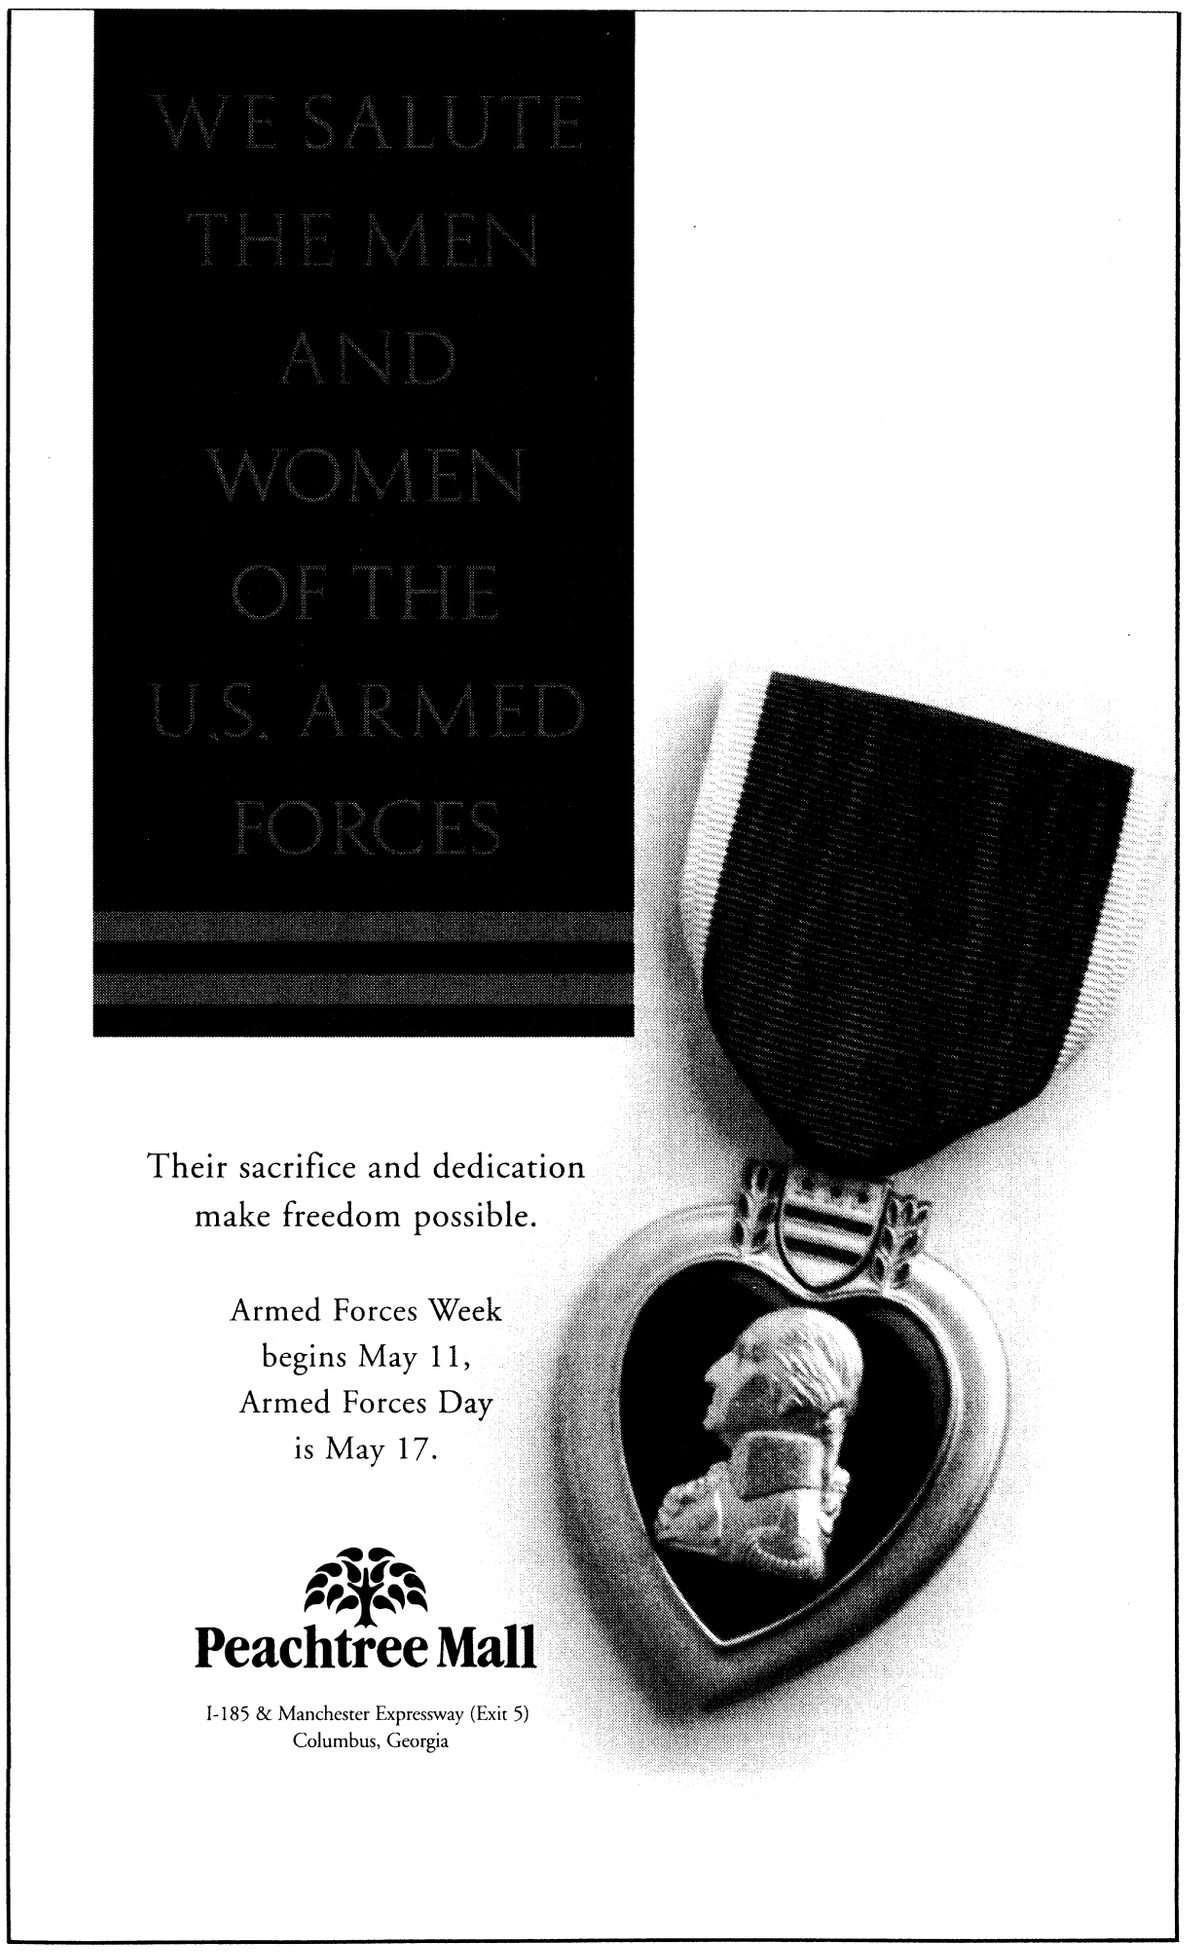
• Interview preparation and rehearsal should be done as if it is going to be the final exam, because in many ways, it is your final exam. Successfully making it through the interview process will mean your employment potential is very high. Fail the interview and there will not be a job offer.

• Finally, you should work even harder at keeping the job you get than you did to get it. Your goal going into that new job should be to perform better than expected. Start to build your reputation as a superior employee.

news from the front

By 1st Lt. Scott Rollston
498th Medical Company

"We flew our first land mine incident mission. It was a civilian who was working in the field about 80 kilometers from our location. We launched two aircraft, as is our standing operating procedure for missions in the 'zone of separation,' or when we fly at night, said Maj. Tracy M. Wyatt, commander of the 498th Medical Company (AA) currently deployed to Bosnia.



"We saved his life, he lost his foot but he will live and is actually doing well. The first aircraft was piloted by Chief Warrant Officer Paul Kahler and Chief Warrant Officer Steven Scott with crew chief Spc. Matthew Beale and medic Sgt. Jeff Miller. The second aircraft was piloted by Chief Warrant Officer Timothy Brown and myself (Wyatt), with our flight crew.

"Although we've had some blood missions, this was the first true medical evacuation mission. It takes a lot of coordination to do a mission like this. We must alert both crews, a Norwegian 'scene controller,' a doctor and nurse team and for mine incidents a Swedish explosive ordnance detachment team consisting of four members plus a dog. Once everyone is notified, we must meet to coordinate security and airspace, formation light planning and obtain approval from the division chief of staff when a civilian is involved. We don't just blast out of here without detailed preparations, which we complete as fast as possible.

"Once we arrive on the scene, the back aircraft drops the mine clearing team nearby so they can clear a safe path to the injured person. If there is no such place to safely land the helicopter, the team and dog are lowered via a hoist. Everyone has trained on this and we are at the run stage for these missions. It's awesome!

"Talk about multi-national. I am truly working, training and socializing with the world's greatest nations and assets. The Norwegians, the Danish, the Swedish, the Polish and the Russian counterparts. Wow! They are all truly great. What a mission!

"The Soldiers and company are doing great. Morale remains high and I can't say enough about the great Soldiers of the 498th. They are kicking, well, you know. I am the luckiest commander there is."

Proper boating requires being safe

Safety Office

It's been estimated that the use of alcohol is involved in at least half of all boating accidents. This includes not only the spectacular collisions but the lone fisherman who drowns after falling out of his boat on a lake.

The consumption of alcoholic beverages and leisure times activities such as fishing and boating have often been associated with one another. Until recently, not much attention was paid to this relationship and what bearing it might have on accidents.

Within the last several years, however, it's been shown that alcohol has the same undesirable effects as it does for the driver on the highway, plus a few more. Here is a summary of those specific effects on the boater or fisherman:

•Balance — Most people who die in boating accidents fall out of the craft, which may or may not have capsized in the process. Balance is one of the first things impaired by even one mixed drink or can of beer. You may not notice this decrease, but your body will, and a 14-foot fishing boat is not the most stable platform on which to debate the point.

•Coordination — As the alcohol level in your body increases, your ability to coordinate leg and arm movements diminishes. An inebriated boater will have extreme difficulty in trying to swim or reach a lifesaving device, despite his or her sober abilities.

•Vision — Vision is also affected by alcohol. A couple of beers and the average person reduces the eye fixations of the surroundings by as much as half those of the sober state. Add the "tunnel vision" effect induced in glare recovery time (also induced by alcohol) and you have effectively put blinders on the boat operator, thus setting the stage for a collision accident.

•Judgement and risk taking — The average person will lose his or her ability to reason after a couple of drinks. A warm toddy or two may apparently make your nautical skills second only to the experts, but you may fail to spot an oncoming storm or lean over the side too far to land a fish, either of which could spell trouble.

•Hypothermia (exposure) — Contrary to popular belief, a couple of shots of brandy doesn't keep you warm on a cold day. Instead, it increases blood flow near the skin (only making you feel warmer) and accelerates the heat loss to the air or water. Cold water is dangerous enough without the addition of alcohol to decrease survival time even further.

With a little common sense, boating and fishing are two of the safest pastimes in our way of life. It's up to you, however, to apply that common sense to your consumption of alcohol when you engage in these activities. Give yourself a break. Remember, you can't walk away from a boating accident.

The following are recommendations for boating safety at Uchee Creek:

1. Complete a water safety course before renting a boat.
2. Read safe boating rules before renting a boat.
3. Wear a personal floatation device while in a boat.
4. Beware of the local boating rules and regulations.
5. Employ defensive driving techniques.
6. Designate a driver who is not drinking alcoholic beverages.
7. Always carry safety equipment.
8. Encourage others to follow boating safety procedures.

New reservation number aids traveling Soldiers

Army News Service

Traveling soon? Going on temporary duty? Permanent change of station with leave en route? Need to make room reservations?

Whether you're stationed in the United States or overseas, on official or unofficial travel, booking your rooms is as easy as dialing (800) GO-ARMY-1.

That number connects you to the Army Central Reservation Center at Redstone Arsenal, Ala. Operated by Army Lodging, ACRC is a program of the Hospitality Directorate, at the Alexandria, Va., based U.S. Army Community and Family Support Center.

ACRC is not a new service, but it has been expanded and improved. The original toll-free reservation service began in 1994. It allowed travelers on official business to make reservations at on-post billeting and guest houses.

In October 1994, ACRC absorbed the Lodging Success Program, which gives travelers the opportunity to make reservations at conveniently-located, high quality, economically-priced commercial (off post) hotels in the National Capital Region.

Rooms contracted under the LSP program cost travelers on average 30 percent less the local per diem allows and save the Army around $4 million annually.

Until recently, callers could only use the 800 number to make reservations for lodging while on official travel.

Now, the toll-free lodging reservation line lets travelers make vacation reservations at the most popular commercial hotels and motels in the United States through Carlson Wagonlit Travel.

Here's how it works: when you call the toll-free number you'll hear two choices:

•Press 1 to make reservations for on-post lodging in a temporary duty or permanent change of station status, to make Lodging Success Program reservations, to obtain information about on-post leisure accommodations, or to make reservations for Armed Forces Recreation Center hotel in Europe.

•Press 2 to make leisure travel (vacation) reservations at commercial hotels off post anywhere in the United States through Carlson Wagonlit Travel. (A percentage of the Carlson Wagonlit Travel commission from room bookings is returned to Army Morale Welfare and Recreation for reinvestment in Soldier and family programs.)

While ACRC agents do not make hotel reservations at the Armed Forces Recreation Center Shades of Green at Walt Disney World Resort, the recorded message gives the Shades of Green reservation telephone number in Orlando, Fla.

Once you make your choice, you are connected to a reservation agent ready to help you book your rooms. As an added bonus, the staff can provide you with room rates, directions, a list of amenities, room-type availability and answer other general lodging questions.

Who can use this toll-free reservation service?

•Military personnel and Department of Defense civilians on official travel;

•Soldiers and families on permanent change of station orders;

•Soldiers and families traveling space available to Army installations;

•Army Reservists and families; and •Military retirees and families.

ACRC reservation agents answer more than 100 calls an hour and book as many as 275 reservations a day. An in-house call monitoring system ensures quality service.

Agents are on duty 6 a.m. to 9 p.m. Monday - Friday; 8 a.m. to 6 p.m. Saturdays, Sundays and holidays Eastern Standard or Daylight Time.

Travelers from outside the continental United States can use ACRC by dialing DSN 779-2790.

Asian, Pacific-Islander American

Post celebrates diversity of cultures that comprise Army

By Spc. Lisa M. Hibbert
Bayonet staff writer

Celebrating the diverse mixture that comprises the United States and its Army, Fort Benning conducted an Asian, Pacific-Islander American Heritage Month celebration May 7.

The program opened with a prayer from Chaplain (Capt.) Xuan Tran of the 1st Battalion, 10th Field Artillery Regiment, 3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division (Mechanized).

Sgt. 1st Class Phillip Epperson, equal opportunity advisor for the Ranger Training Brigade, welcomed the audience to the program.

"There are more than 10 million Americans who trace their ancestry to Asia or to the Pacific Islands," Epperson said. "Theirs is a history of proud accomplishments. The 100th Infantry Battalion and the 442 Regimental Combat Team in particular, (all Japanese-American units) contributed significantly to the victory of Europe during World War II. Today, they continue to contribute to society and to pursue America's national goals in the quest for freedom and opportunity."

Narrating the program was Lu Lusano, Doctrine and Literature manager for the 2nd Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment. President of the Asian Pacific Alliance, Lusano introduced the entertainment and spoke briefly on his heritage.

"When I first came in the military, I was classified as 'other'," Lusano said. "As time went along, I was classified as Malaysian, but finally someone came up with Asian, Pacific Islander which is more fitting."

Marshall Auditorium was still as the dancers entered the stage. The group of Filipino elders, the women clad in long, flowing skirts and the men in bright-colored chiffon shirts, clinked their castanets as they danced with fluid movements that appeared regal and reminiscent of a time gone by.

Next came young women who danced with flowing hips and arms, accompanied by young men who danced with strength. The audience was transported from the Philippines to Hawaii and finally, to Thailand.

Col. John P. Lewis, commander of the 11th Infantry Regiment, introduced the guest speaker for the day and provided remarks on behalf of post Commanding General Maj. Gen. Carl F. Ernst.

"Many people, upon first visiting the United States, believe that its strength is in its wealth, financial power, military and government," Lewis said. "In my opinion, it's greatness lies in it's diversity of people, cultures and backgrounds."

Frederick Pang, assistant secretary of defense for Force Management Policy was the featured speaker for the day.

"The United States was founded by descendants of immigrants," Pang said. "At the same time, we are proud of our roots. We do it in a variety of ways, from St. Patrick's Day to Chinese New Year.

"Although we may lose touch with the old country, everybody still maintains a few of the old traditions," Pang said.

Pang discussed the vast amount of support that Asian, Pacific Islanders gave to the United States, beginning as gold mine and pineapple plantation workers in the mid-1800s.

Like Lusano, Pang also talked about the title, Asian, Pacific Islander.

"I know that saying Asian, Pacific-Islander American is long, but its shorter than saying Chinese, Filipino, Japanese, Korean, Vietnamese, Asian, Indian, Laotian, Cambodian, Hmong, Thai, Native Hawaiians, Pakistani, Samoan and Guamanian American," Pang said.

"No matter what the prefix is — African, Native, Hispanic, European or Asian, Pacific Islander, we're all lucky to be Americans."

BBBOnLine checks the Internet

Better Business Bureau

The Better Business Bureau serving West Georgia and East Alabama announced its participation in a new national BBB program, BBBOnLine.

The program takes advantage of Internet technology to provide information at the "right time and right place" to the more than 50 million people who are wired to the Internet.

Under development since the concept was first unveiled by the Better Business Bureau system in 1996, BBBOnLine is now operational and was premiered at a Congressional briefing in Washington, D.C., April 30.

Qualified companies that commit to the high BBBOnLine program standards will be authorized by the BBB to display a unique BBBOnLine seal at their web sites and in their online advertising.

Consumers who spot the seal and "click to check" will have the confidence of knowing the company has provided the BBB with substantial information regarding its ownership and management and has agreed to adhere to truthful and accurate advertising claims and to resolve, quickly and fairly, any complaints that may arise as a result of online advertising or transactions.

"All companies should share an interest in demonstrating to consumers, regulatory authorities and the public that the business community can effectively self-regulate this new marketplace," said Ted Short, who chairs the Better Business Bureau Board of Directors. "If honest competitors do not quickly demonstrate that the online market is reliable, many consumers could be reluctant to try this new technology and the lost business opportunities could be staggering."

Start-up cost to develop and implement BBBOnLine are being met by a group of founding sponsor companies, which now includes Ameritech, AT&T, Eastman Kodak Company, GTE, Hewlett Packard, Netscape Communications Corporation, Road Runner, a Time Warner service, Sony Electronics, U.S. WEST Media Group, VISA U.S.A. and Xerox.

Additional information about BBBOnLine is available at the BBBOnLine web site (http://www.bbbonline.org).

SJA conducts Andersonville reenactment

Office of the Staff Judge Advocate

The Office of the Staff Judge Advocate wrapped-up a series of activities in celebration of 1997 Law Day U.S.A. with a presentation on the Civil War story of the Andersonville Prison Camp.

Several attorneys from the OSJA re-enacted a portion of a famous Civil War era criminal trial. The show was presented to students of IOBC and IOAC, candidates of OCS and other interested personnel.

"The purpose of Law Day is to commemorate the role of law in our lives. We wanted to talk to our military community about laws that affect them uniquely, like the law of war," said Capt. Malcolm Schaefer, this year's Fort Benning Law Day Chairman.

Andersonville, Georgia, just a one-hour drive from Fort Benning, is the site of a Civil War Confederate prison camp. Several books, and even a recent movie by Turner Network, "Andersonville," depict the horrible conditions of disease, starvation and maltreatment suffered by Union prisoners at Andersonville.

The prison camp commander, Capt. Henry Wirz, was charged with war crimes after the war ended. He was convicted of multiple acts of cruelty toward prisoners and even for murder of prisoners. Wirz is the only person ever tried, convicted and executed for war crimes in the United States.

"At his trial, Captain Wirz argued that he was only following orders in the way he ran the prison camp," said Schaefer, "and we wanted to teach the lessons found in the history of that trial."

Capt. Bill McHugh, legal instructor for the U.S. Army Infantry School, gave a brief lecture about the history behind Wirz's trial. Then several other members of Fort Benning's legal office re-enacted the cross-examination of Captain Wirz.

Fort Benning's presiding Military Judge, Col. Larry Dean, was well-suited to play the role of Maj. Gen. Lew Wallace, the Union judge who presided over the trial of Wirz. Capts. Clay Schuett and Perry Wadsworth played the roles of the prosecuting Judge Advocate and defense attorney, respectively. Taking the stand in his own defense was Fort Benning Legal Assistance Attorney Rick Parker, as the prison camp commander, Captain Wirz.

Schaefer explained, "Captain Wirz's execution has been hotly debated. Many people believed that he was a scapegoat Confederate war criminal. Several accounts have depicted harsh treatment at Union prison camps, too. But the evidence of Wirz's war crimes was fairly overwhelming and the real question was whether he could evade responsibility through his claim that he was only following orders. This trial answered that question, and the answer is 'No.' A soldier cannot follow orders that require him to commit a war crime."

Other trials have tested the same issue that was tested by Wirz. After World War II, during the famous Nuremburg War Crimes Tribunal, many of the Nazi officers asserted the defense of following Hitler's orders.

On every occasion, the answer has been the same. If a Soldier receives an order that he believes is unlawful, the Soldier must approach the superior to clarify the meaning of the order. In most cases, the superior never intended his order to be understood in the manner it was received and clarification cures the problem.

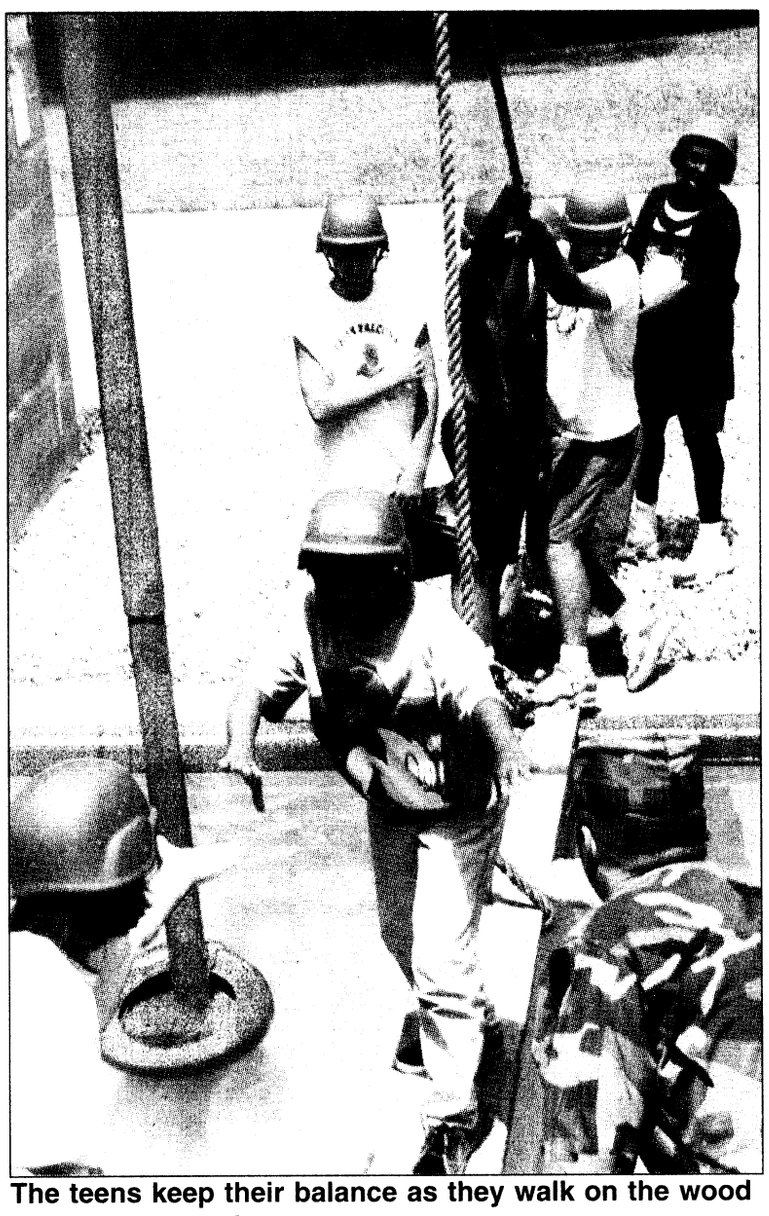
Future leaders form at Teen Discovery

By Spc. Lisa M. Hibbert
Bayonet staff writer

Fort Benning teens gathered for a weekend of activities culminating in the selection of the 1997 teen delegate at Uchee Creek May 9 - Sunday during Teen Discovery Weekend.

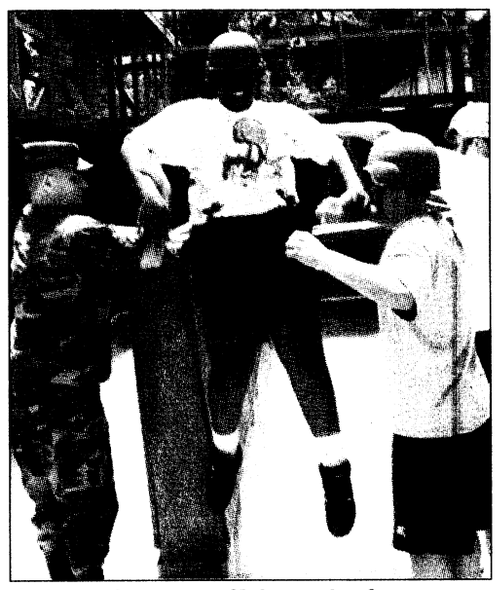
Upon arrival, the teens were briefed on why they were brought together.

"The teens were hear to discuss teen issues relevant to Fort Benning and the Army Family Action Plan, which will later be presented during the Army Teen Discovery in Columbiana, Ala.," Quintella Thorn, one of the facilitators who helped to coordinate the trip, said.



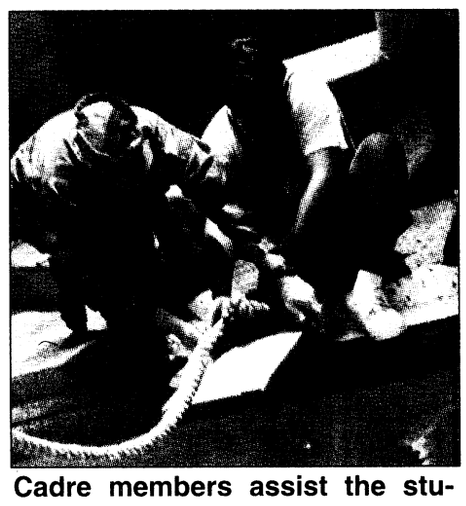
Broken into three groups, the 40 teens came up with six issues, which were narrowed down to three. The top Fort Benning teen concerns are teen involvement in youth services, peer pressure and racism and sexism in sports.

Aisha Barbet, daughter of Sharon and Sgt. Maj. Ricardo Barbet and an 11th-grader at Spencer High School, is the new teen delegate. She will be representing the post in Alabama.



The teens did more than just talk about issues, they also refined their leadership skills at the Leaders Reaction Course. They participated in games that not only forced the teens to introduce themselves, but to remember the names of the other teens there.

"The weekend was a lot of fun and I am really excited about being a delegate," Barbet said. "But even though I am the delegate, I don't want to do just what I want, this is for everybody."



Three alternate delegates were also selected: Sven Coffee, Nathaniel Sanderson III and Lawrence Swan.

The teens keep their balance as they walk on the wood planks to cross the water.

Community members meet for AFAP symposium, strive to make post better

Spc. Lisa M. Hibbert
Bayonet staff writer

Trying to make the best Army installation in the world even better was the mission of the Soldiers, family members and community leaders who gathered at the Fort Benning Officers' Club Tuesday for the Army Family Action Plan Symposium.

More than 50 individuals were separated into groups by topics of discussions. Group titles ranged from housing to family support groups and the group members looked at the impact on Fort Benning, the Army and the Department of Defense.

Each group was responsible for choosing the five most valuable items, the three least valuable and three issues with solutions pertinent to Fort Benning. To accomplish this, the members brainstormed — throwing out a variety of ideas until they could come up with what they felt to be the strongest issues, said Michelle Aldridge, Army Family Action Plan coordinator and post volunteer coordinator.

The group titles and their causes were —

Faith's PTO gives money for technology

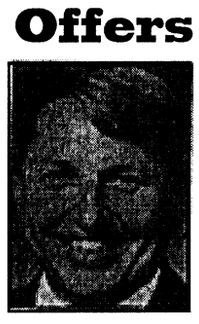
Faith Middle School

The Faith Middle School Parent Teacher Organization has made a major contribution to the technological advancement of the school. Monday, PTO board members signed the order for a data projector to will be used in the new technology room when Faith's new wing is completed in August.

The Faith Middle School PTO contributed $6,700 and Monday, purchased a data projection system which is state-of-the-art equipment not even available for delivery until June.

This projection system will allow computer-generated data from student or teacher presentations, videos and distance learning communication with sites throughout the world to be projected onto a 6-foot by 6-foot projection screen. Rather than watching a presentation on a television screen or a having a few students gather around a computer screen, the presentation can now be viewed by an entire class.

The technology room, with its new projection system, will also be useful for training adult staff members and parents when it is not in use by students.



Funds for this projection system were raised by Faith Middle School parents through the PTO's fund raising efforts this year. Wishing to make a lasting contribution to the school, the PTO board worked with the Faith Middle School Technology Committee, with Technology Committee chairperson Cindy Givens and with principal Dr. Beth Middlemiss to select a special item that would be of lasting and significant service to the school.

PTO board members for the 1996-97 school year are: Col. David Gorski, president; Cindy Lefler, vice-president of programs; Marla Jewel, vice-president of fund raising; Master Sgt. Beverly Riley, secretary; Lucinda Spinelli, treasurer; and Michelle Terry, staff appreciation coordinator.

"Their leadership of parent efforts has made this special technology purchase a reality for Faith students, Faith staff, Fort Benning School' staff and Faith Middle School parents in the years to come," said Middlemiss.

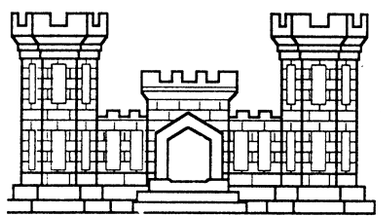
Directorate of Public Works Information Corner 'Essayons'

Directorate of Public Works



Effective June 1, Fort Benning will close its sanitary landfill in the Harmony Church area. On this date all refuse generated on the installation will be transported by contractor to a privately-owned solid waste transfer station. This waste will then be transferred to a state-approved disposal facility off of the installation. For the most part, this change will be invisible to the Fort Benning community.

Closure of the Fort Benning Sanitary Landfill and changes to Fort Benning's Solid Waste Program are necessary to comply with Department of Army policy to obtain solid waste collection and disposal service from municipal or private waste management companies.

Family Housing residents will continue with the same disposal schedule. One improvement is that our contractor will now pick up all of your cardboard items.

As a reminder for family housing yard waste collection, all leaves and grass clippings must either be placed in durable metal or plastic containers that will be emptied into the collection vehicle by the waste handler or by placing the yard waste in special paper yard waste bags provided by the Department of Public Works Self-Help Store, Building 385. Use of the durable containers is the preferred method.

Units and activities will continue to use the existing dumpsters for most non-recyclable materials. These dumpsters will be serviced as on the old contract. If occasions arise requiring changes, the unit or activity will be notified prior to any changes in service.

Our contractor will be placing special green dumpsters for cardboard collection for units and activities that generate a large amount of cardboard. Rather than a normal door on the side of the dumpster, there will be a narrow loading slot on the front of the dumpster. Cardboard must be flattened prior to placement in the container. Only cardboard is to be placed in these dumpsters. Proper use of the green cardboard dumpsters will greatly reduce the amount of waste that must be transported off the installation for disposal.

DPW will have the capability to provide large, open-top, roll-off type dumpsters to those units which become involved in collecting large amounts of debris, construction waste, etc. DPW has, initially, established two roll-off dumpster sites on main post (Defense Reutilization and Market Office and Building 262) and has the contractual option to provide additional sites for short- and long-term support of our mission requirements, such as construction and U-DO-IT projects.

If your unit becomes engaged in an activity that requires one of these dumpsters, contact Wilmer Busby at 545-4749. Material that should be recycled at either the Recycling Center, building 4000, or the Fort Benning Directorate of Resource Management Office are not to be placed in the solid waste roll-offs.

For your convenience, the Recycling Center, building 4000, located at Harmony Church, provides a drop-off for the following items and materials.

1. White Office Paper
2. Newspaper
3. Corrugated Paperboard, (Cardboard)
4. Mixed Paper (books, magazines, bags, non-corrugated paperboard boxes)
5. Food and Beverage Cans
6. Glass Containers
7. Wood Warehouse Pallets
8. Used Automotive Oil and
9. Plastic Food and Beverage Containers.

For more information, call Walter Nichols, Solid Waste Program manager, at 545-1007.

Renovation and Construction Company will be replacing roofs in the following areas:

- Lumpkin Road
- Eames Avenue
- Sigerfoos Road
- Miller Loop and
- Austin Loop

Trash Collection Schedule for May 26, 1997

There will be no refuse, recycle or yard waste pick ups on May 26.

The next scheduled yard waste pick-up for Family Housing will be June 2.

Refuse and recycle collection scheduled for Family Housing areas on May 27-30 will not be affected. For additional information, call Wilmer Busby at 545-4749.

Holiday Closing

In observance of the Memorial Day holiday, the Self-Help Store, Loan Equipment Section and Venetian Blind and Shade Shop will be closed May 24 and will reopen for normal business hours at 8:30 a.m., May 27. For more information, call Dominick DeCarlo at 545-1121.

Comments and Questions

If you have questions or topics you would like addressed in the DPW "Information Corner" contact Glenn Todd, DPW customer relations specialist, at 545-2117, or write to the Directorate of Public Works, building 6, Room 409, ATTN: ATZB-PWM (Glenn Todd), Fort Benning, Ga., 31905.

Matthew 5:10

Fort Benning celebrates Armed Forces Day

By William C. Shelnut IX
3rd Brigade, 3rd Inf. Div. (Mech.)

On a hill far away and many years ago, Jesus said, "Blessed are the peacemakers" yet, only eight percent of the time since the beginning of recorded history has the world been entirely at peace.

In more than 3,100 years, only 286 have been warless and more than 8,000 treaties have been broken in this time.

As our nation celebrates this Armed Forces Day, let us remember how the U.S. Armed Forces helped defeat the forces of aggression and oppression during World War II and helped restore peace. Now we are globally deployed to checkmate perpetrators of evil when they presume to conquer good; the bullies of this world who would attempt to place weaker nations in bondage; and terrorists who rain terror upon the innocent.

It is altogether fitting at this time that we especially remember the dedication, courage, spirit and patriotism of our forces as they protect and present peace at home and abroad.

"God grants liberty only to those who love it and are always ready to guard and defend it," Daniel Webster said. Americans love peace and because of that love, they have become the peace police of the world.

The words of Jesus are still true. In his longest recorded sermon, he sets forth the traits he is looking for in his followers. He calls those who demonstrate these traits blessed because God has something special in store for them. All things considered, there is not a more blessed nation in the world than the United States of America.

Without question, those who make peace are much blessed.

In reality, Jesus meant the word peace to be an attitude. Even more than an attitude, he meant it to be a way of life. His peace would guide our thoughts and practices. Even in the midst of conflict, the inner desire of a person would gravitate towards peace and not retribution and vengeance.

An old proverb states, "A person who seeks vengeance needs to dig two graves; one for his or her enemy and one for him or herself."

We can not and we must not be directed by destructive pursuits of vengeance. To do so would be to exchange and forfeit the blessings of God for the empty satisfaction of returning evil for evil.

Our marching orders are clear and precise — be peacemakers.

As we remember our armed forces, let us never forget we also are in the Lord's armed forces. We are Soldiers of a higher order called to be peacemakers, empowered to be peacemakers, destined to change the face of the world because we are peacemakers.

Pentecost spreads God's word to all

By Robert Blessing
2nd Bn., 69th Armor Regiment

Most of us have grown up in a church in which English was spoken. We were used to and loved the Elizabethan language of the King James Version of the Bible.

Because we were used to the language of the King James Bible, we thought it was the norm, the standard, and compared everything else to it. Many of us have been brought up in a church which translated the meaning of its words to us, because none of us spoke or wrote that kind of English except in church.

It was already a dead language — not quite as dead as Latin and far from dead in reality. But, we were used to it. It was the language of the church.

The Revised Version of the Bible, in the late 40s and early 50s, was followed by other later translations and we began to hear a different kind of English read in church.

It was not as elegant an English, not as beautiful in sound, but one which could be understood much more — maybe also because the meaning was clearer, it was less comfortable to live with.

We don't easily change the way we worship or the language in which we worship. They are both part of our culture, whether we think of them that way or not.

Along the parallel line, we have grown up with a set of customs and habits we usually identify as "the way things are done."

For example, we have adopted for Christmas and Christianized the Yule log which was originally used "to keep the sun from dying" on the shortest day of the year. We have adopted and Christianized the Christmas tree, which customarily, incidentally, was brought to England from Germany by Queen Victoria's husband, Prince Albert.

What would our Christmas be without the creche which came to us from the Italy of St. Francis.

Our hymns come from every part of European history and geography over more than the last thousand years.

All these influences, together with all the others we have inherited, have become "the way we do things."

Add to these the clothes the clergy and servers wear in church. In origin, some of these are even older than our music.

Altogether, these have become our religious culture, or, at least, the outward shape and form of it. Because we have grown up with these forms of prayer and worship and the language that went with them, they are comfortable and familiar to us and we have forgotten where they came from, if we ever knew.

Consequently, being human, we think, "this is the way it ought to be done." Without thinking, we expect others to worship and pray our way, with our language, because it is the "right" way to worship and pray.

No one in the early church would recognize most of what we consider to be "normal" and essential to good worship and prayer.

In the first place, the earliest Christians read the Bible in Hebrew or Greek, slowly got the letters of Paul and the four Gospels in Greek and worshiped not in churches but in synagogues and the temple, until they were thrown out as heretics.

Nor were the first Christians of one culture or language. They all started as Jewish, but they quickly included others. Within not much more than a century, the Western church began teaching, preaching and praying in Latin because that was the language most common in the West.

Nowhere do I remember Jesus saying, "Go to all the European-Americans who are middle class and moderately well educated and preach the Gospel." That is what we make him say when we set our cultural frames and our ways of doing things as the "right way" which others need to learn.

He said, "Go into all the world and preach the Gospel...."

None of this will be any easier for us than it has been for those who came before us. But, just as the Holy Spirit gave the Apostles the power to "(tell) in our own tongues the mighty works of God," so he will guide and inspire and empower us to do the same, not only to our children whose culture is already different from ours, but also, to all those who are among us from other cultures of the world.

Demanding they conform to our ways is not to spread the Gospel, but to spread our ways. The only way we can hope to fulfill the call to "go preach the Gospel" is by the power and grace of God. We must be as willing as the early Christians to open ourselves to the power of the Holy Spirit, by prayer, reading and meditating on Scripture, by continuing in the Apostles' teaching and fellowship, in breaking bread and in prayers.

Pentecost is the time of the Holy Spirit's coming into our world and giving us power and gifts to minister to all people in all languages and cultures. Christians are not solitaries, we are members one of another and we are called to work together as the body of Christ, using our different gifts so those who hear the Gospel through us can also say, "we hear them telling in our own tongues the mighty works of God."

Air Force men, Army women repeat as volleyball champions

By John W. Peeler
Special to the Bayonet©

Air Force men and Army women repeated their performances of a year ago by capturing the 1997 Armed Forces Volleyball Championships May 7 - 10 at Fort Benning.

It took Air Force men (5-1) five games to slip past Navy (2-4) the first day of competition, but no team would come close to upsetting the defending champion until the last day of the tournament when Army (4-2) defeated Air Force with a 15-12, 13-15, 16-14, 15-5 victory. Air Force had already clinched the title day three of the tournament with a 15-6, 15-12, 15-8 victory over the Marine Corps (1-5).

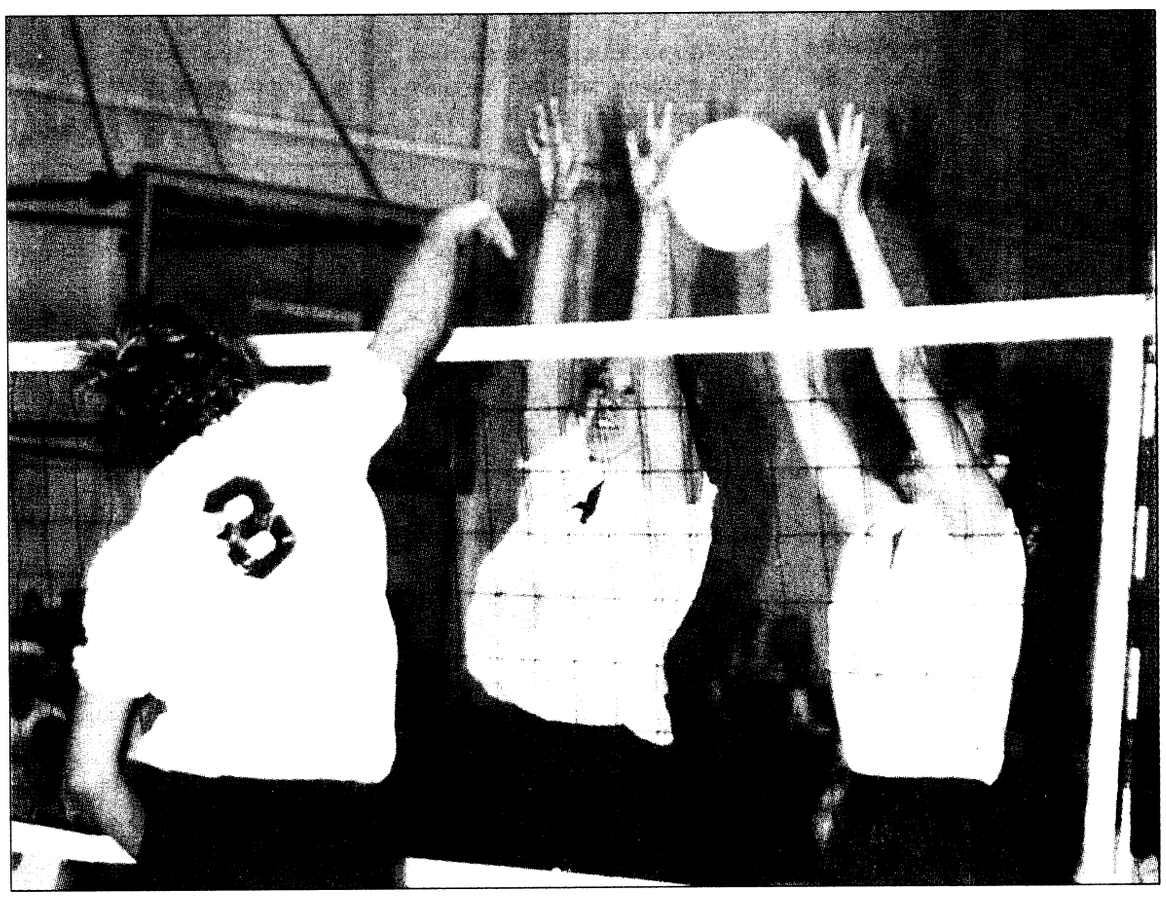
"It's a good feeling to win again," Air Force coach Dale Grupe said. "We basically came back this year with the same men's team we had last year, but our women's team had a lot of new people on it."

Army came in second place, finishing at 4-2 for the second consecutive year. Navy finished third at 3-4 and the Marine Corps finished at 1-5.

"We were very flat at the beginning," Army Coach Toafala Lafeta said. "I just told our players to relax and play for pride."

In the women's competition, Army (6-0) started with a day one victory over Marine Corps (0-6) 15-7, 15-3, 15-5 before being seriously challenged the last day of the tournament by Air Force (3-3). Army's 6-15, 15-9, 5-15, 15-8, 15-4 victory forced a best-two-out-of-three tie breaker between Air Force and Navy to determine second place, which Air Force won in two straight games 15-13 and 15-8.

Air Force finished in second place at 4-3. Navy, finished third at 3-4, while Marine Corps women ended at 0-6.



After the tournament, the All-Armed Forces Team was announced with Air Force men tplacing five players on the team.

Earning positions on the men's team were Marc Anderson (Tinker Air Force Base, Okla.), John Napier (Los Angeles Air Force Base, Los Angeles), Kelly Bronson (Kadena Air Base, Japan), Paul Larger (Peterson Air Force Base, Colo.), John Kara (Mountain Air Force Base, Idaho).

Air Force head coach Dale Grupe and Master Sgt. Kliengsak Nimpchaimanatham (Nellis Air Force Base, Nev.) earned coaching spots on the All-Armed Forces Team.

Soldiers earning berths, on the All-Armed Forces Team were Lee Bettie (Fort Buckman, Okinawa, Winning Navy All-Armed Forces honors were Petty Officer 1st Class John Blondin (USS Milius, San Diego, Calif.), Petty Officer 1st Class Jeffrey Ersberger (USS George Washington, Diamond, Ohio), HN Jason Alexandridas (NMC, San Diego). Also named to the team as trainer was HM2 Steven George, (Naval Hospital, Millington, Tenn.).

Army women's team placed the most players on the All-Armed Forces Team with five players earning spots followed by Air Force and Navy with three players each and Marine Corps with two players earning spots on the team.

Soldiers earning spots were 2nd Lt. Sunny Barse (Fort Shaffer, Hawaii), 2nd Lt. DeAnn Machlan (Fort Campbell, Ky.), Sgt. Kristie Dean (Kaiserslautern, Germany), Spc. Trina Skinner (Fort Belvoir, Va.) and Spc. Ramona Sualua (Fort Riley, Kan.).

Air Force players making the team were 1st Lt. Christine Eiler (Los Angeles Air Force Base, Los Angeles), 1st Lt. Lisa Harrigan (Brooks Air Force Base, Calif.) and 2nd Lt. Billeye Juarez (Maxwell Air Force Base, Ala.).

Navy players earning positions were Lt. j.g. Lauren Nilsen (Naval Hospital, Rota, Spain), Petty Officer 2nd Class Demaris Brown (ACUS, Camp Pendleton, Calif.) and SN Stephanie Stuck (Afloat TGP, San Diego).

Marine Corps players making the squad were Sgt. Danielle Dillard (I-I, Westover) and Sgt. Sgt. Charissa Howard (I-I Anacostia, Washington D.C.).

Army coach Toafala Lafeta (Phoenix) and Chief Warrant Office Leroy Latshaw (Wheeler Army Airfield, Hawaii) were selected to coach the All-Armed Forces women's team.

The All-Armed Forces Team is currently at Fort Benning practicing for the Volleyball Nationals to be conducted in Kansas City May 24 to 27.

USAMU Service Rifle Team dominate Snowbird Open

Michael J. Brock
USAMU Public Affairs Office

The U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit's Service Rifle Section dominated the Snowbird Open in Stark, Fla., by competing with the weather to sweep most of the matches.

The Service Rifle team started off the competitive season with an impressive win by sweeping all but two of the events.

The aggregate winner for the match was Lewis A. Tippie with a score of 788 points with 31 Xs. An X is a center shot used in tie breakers. Second place went to Rand D. Bentson with a score of 784 points and 28 Xs, and third place went to Tobie L. Tomlinson with a score of 782 points and 27 Xs.

"There was a lot of luck involved in winning this competition," Tippie said. "I had a really good rapid fire. I was the only one to clean the event."

Other events included in the competition were the 200-yard rapid fire, 300-yard rapid fire, 600-yard slow fire, 200-yard standing and various team events.

The team took first and second place in the 200-yard rapid fire event. Class Daniel R. Herman took first place with a score of 200 points and 11 Xs while Tippie was close behind with a score of 200 points and 10 Xs. All individual matches are scored out of a possible 200 points and 20 Xs.

Army shooters swept the 300-yard rapid fire event with Tippie scoring the only 200 with 11 Xs. Herman and Tomlinson came in second and third places with scores of 199 points and 9 X s.

In the 600-yard slow fire, Tippie came in second place with a score of 198 points and 8 Xs while Bentson took third with a score of 197 points and 11 Xs.

The USAMU shooters also dominated the 200-yard standing category, sweeping first through third places. Grant L Singley took first place with a score of 195 points and 9 Xs. Carl O. Dooley came in second with a score of 193 points and 3 Xs while Bentson took third with a score of 192 points and 5 Xs.

In the team events of two-man and four-man competition, USAMU shooters dominated by second-place finishes, taking all first- and second-place finishes.

In the long-range rifle any sight category, the team of John O. Chubb and Charles E. Coffey took first place with a score of 797 points and 52 Xs and the team of Bentson and Kyle A. Ward took second with the same score; the winner was determined was from match rules.

In the category of long-range iron sights, the team of Tippie and Singley took first with a score of 777 points and 27 Xs. The team of Charles W. Herlth Jr. and Steven C. Young came in second with a score of 763 points and 18 Xs.

The USAMU teams took first through third places in the four-man team match. In first place was the team of Coffey, Tomlinson, Bentson and Bruce A. McCauley with a score of 1,951 points and 65 Xs. The team of Dooley Singley, Tippie and Chubb took second with a score of 1,946 points and 66 Xs, and finishing third with a score of 1,875 points and 37 Xs was the team of Herman, Herlth, Young and Ward.

This was the first trip of the season Tippie said.

"It was a good trip to work out all the bugs with the equipment. I think overall, the team did real well."

Marine Corps Marathon Sets 16,000 Runner Limit

By Stephen Barrett
American Forces Press Service

The "People's Marathon" will limit the field to 16,000 runners this year.

Marine Corps Marathon officials in Quantico, Va., said the limit for the Oct. 26 race will help ensure a safe race and reduce congestion at the start and finish lines.

Because of the limit, marathon officials encourage early registration. All runners must register by Sept. 18; applications are available by calling (800) RUN-USMC or by downloading the application through the marathon web site (http://issb-www1.mqg.usmc.mil/marathon).

"It's important for our runners to have access to the course and be able to run their personal best," Marine Robert Bieri, the race's senior enlisted adviser, said. "A runner's finishing time is important, and we need to make sure they fight the clock without having to fight traffic and other runners."

Participation has grown in all but two of the marathon's 21 years.

Last year, over 19,000 runners competed — an amount race coordinator Rick Nealis said "stretched our logistic and support capabilities."

Nealis, a veteran marathon runner, has guided daily preparations for the nation's fourth largest marathon. Only New York, Los Angeles and Honolulu are bigger.

"We're encouraged by the growing number of people who share our commitment to physical fitness," he said. "My biggest concern is for the safety of our runners. We have to be able to provide enough fluid replenishment, medical services and general course support for all our runners. I want to make it safe, and I want to make it fun."

The Marine Corps Marathon starts near the Marine Corps (Iwo Jima) Memorial in Arlington, Va. The 26.2-mile course weaves through Arlington's Crystal City area, past Arlington National Cemetery, then across the Key Bridge into Washington's historic Georgetown district.

Athletes then run past Washington's historic monuments, around Capitol Hill and past the Lincoln and Jefferson memorials before crossing back into Virginia and returning to the Iwo Jima Memorial.

Using buoys, fan casting can help catch more fish

By D. Hegel and S. Price
Johnson® and Evinrude® Outboards

Professional bass tournament angler Guy Eaker thinks one of the most overlooked tools in bass fishing has to be one of its most simple items: the marker buoy.

"I really don't see very many anglers ever use them," Eaker, a 20-year veteran of competitive fishing, said, "but I keep several under the console in my boat where I can grab them quickly when I want to mark something."

Eaker uses buoys to mark two primary targets, underwater structure or cover an actual fish.

"The main reason for marking something is to provide a reference for casting," he said. "On the surface, everything looks the same, so if your boat drifts a few yards to one side or the other, you probably won't notice it, but your casts will be that much further off target.

"In bass fishing, as most anglers realize, missing your target by several feet is rarely going to bring many strikes."

After Eaker drops a floating buoy, he backs away and then begins casting, but not every cast is directed right at the marker.

"I use a technique commonly known as fan casting," the pro said. "Fan casting is simply making a series of casts in a broad arc around the buoy. If you drew them on paper, the casting pattern would look like the shape of a fan, which is how the technique was named.

"For example, my first cast would be at the buoy. My second might be about five feet to the right, the next one maybe 10 feet to the right and so on. Then I'd do the same pattern to the left of the buoy."

The reason fan casting like this is important is because the depth finder screen only shows a small portion of the bottom; and the deeper the bottom, the smaller the portion shown. Rather than risk spooking any bass present by continually criss-crossing the area with the boat to see all of the bottom, tournament anglers like Eaker use buoys and fan casting.

"In effect, we let our lures explore the bottom for us," Eaker said. "I don't know where bass may be on the point, but I sure don't want to move my boat into shallow water and risk frightening the fish if that's where they are.

"Instead, I'll keep my boat in deeper water and fan cast the shallow water. I won't even put out a buoy unless it's to mark my position with the boat. After I make my series of casts, I'll move the boat and start fan casting a different area."

Eaker advises anglers who may decide to purchase buoys this spring to make certain the markers are brightly colored for easier visibility on the water, and before using them, to check the string attaching each buoy to its lead weight.

"Each of your buoys should have at least 50 feet of string so you can use them in deep water," he said.

Consider plastic lizards for spring bass

By D. Hegel and S. Price
Johnson® and Evinrude® Outboards

This spring when professional tournament angler Guy Eaker reaches into his tackle box for a lure, chances are he's going to get a plastic lizard.

"A lot of heavy stringers and big bass are caught each spring on lizards," Eaker, a veteran tournament competitor, said. "It's not a secret lure among the pros, but not very many want to talk about how good it really is."

Overall, he said, it's the one lure every angler should consider using this time of year.

"I believe plastic lizards are effective for several reasons," he said. "They certainly look like something alive and natural in the water, although I don't really think bass actually distinguish them from crawfish or other bottom creatures. When you add rattles or beads and an attractive scent, the lure becomes almost irresistible.

Eaker likes to fish plastic lizards three different ways, depending on the type of water he's in. When he's in shallow water and fishing grass, he usually floats the lizard on the surface. When bass are in heavy, shallow cover, he usually flips the lure; and when bass are in deeper water, he likes to use the lizard on a Carolina rig.

"The floating lizard is really one of my favorite techniques," the pro said, "because bass just ease up under the lure and sip it in. I rig a six-inch lizard with a 1/0 hook and use 10-pound test line with spinning tackle. All I do is twitch it and let it fall a few inches, then twitch it again.

"It really looks like it's swimming."

For Carolina rigging, Eaker uses either a 1/2- or 3/4-ounce sinker, two individual rattles and a three-foot leader. In deep grass, he may use a longer, four- to five-foot leader, while in dingy or murky water, he changes to a shorter, 18-inch leader.

"One of the keys to feeling the light strikes with a Carolina rig is to move the lure with a sideways pull of the rod," he said. "Don't try to move the lure by raising your rod because the bass will feel you and let go. For some reason, if you pull your rod to one side, the bass hold on better and you'll feel them."

Georgia state parks offer guided canoe trips

— Outdoor enthusiasts can explore Georgia's scenic waterways on guided canoe trips at High Falls and Panola Mountain State parks.

Park staff will explain basic canoeing techniques and interpret natural surroundings while leading paddlers on day-long trips.

Participants can see beavers, otters, kingfishers, great blue herons, turtles and other wildlife.

Trips fill quickly, so pre-registration is required. To register, call the park directly.

The cost is $15 per person, which includes canoe, paddles and life preserver. Canoers who bring their own equipment pay $10. A $2 park pass fee is charged per vehicle.

Eighteen of Georgia's state parks rent canoes so visitors can explore lakes and streams on their own.

Prices are $3 - $5 for an hour, $8 - $15 for four hours and $12 - $20 for an entire day. For a free "Guide to Georgia State Parks and Historic Sites" or "1997 Events" brochure, call (404) 656-3530.

To reserve a campsite or fully equipped cottage, call (800) 864-7275.

The parks that will offer canoe trips are:

High Falls State Park

June 14

Enjoy an easy trip down the Towaliga River in Jackson, Ga., the second Saturday of each month.

Call (912) 993-3053 to register.

Panola Mountain State Conservation Park

Panola Mountain State Conservation park offers a variety of outdoor excursions for the entire family.

For reservations and information, call (770) 389-7801.

Scheduled events and dates are:

May 17

This clean-up trip down the South River combines wildlife observation with litter pickup from 9 a.m. - 2 p.m.

Sept. 27

Explore three miles of the South River which forms the northern boundary of this park from 9 a.m. - 2 p.m.

Nov. 15

Adults may enjoy a sunset float on the park's 3.5-acre lake from 5:30 - 7:30 p.m.

State parks post fishing tournaments —

The arrival of spring means it is time to get out your favorite fishing pole and head to Georgia's state parks.

This year, the parks have planned a dozen fishing events where serious anglers can strut their stuff while beginning youngsters learn the basics. The tournaments are a great excuse for families to spend time together in the spring sunshine.

Most state parks have boat ramps and docks, and many rent boats and sell bait. For more information about a fishing tournament, call the host park.

Fishing tournaments are just some of the many events conducted by state parks and historic sites throughout the year.

All events are free and parking is $2.

May 17

A kids' catfish rodeo takes place from 10 a.m. - 3 p.m. on May 17 at Cloudland Canyon State Park, Rising Fawn.

Children 14 and younger can try their luck with a stocked pond. An adult must accompany each angler. The tournament is free.

For more information, call 657-4050.

May 24

A fishing rodeo is 8 - 11 a.m. on May 24 at Reed Bingham State Park, Adel.

Children 14 and younger can compete for prizes. The tournament is free.

For more information, call (912) 896-3551.

The junior and senior catfish rodeo is at 9 a.m. on May 24 at Victoria Bryant State Park, Royston.

Children 16 and younger and adults 62 and older can compete in this fishing and casting contest.

Prizes will be awarded for categories such as largest fish, youngest fisherman and albino catfish catch.

There is no charge for the tournament.

For more information, call 245-6270.

June 7

A children's fishing rodeo takes place from 9 a.m. - noon on June 7 at James H. Floyd State Park, Summerville.

The long-awaited reopening of the 16-acre lake finally arrives.

Anglers 14 and younger can compete for prizes. Hotdogs and hamburgers will be served after the rodeo.

Bring your own fishing gear and bait (no minnows). There is no charge for the tournament.

For more information, call 857-0826.

A children's fishing rodeo is from 8:30 a.m. - noon on June 7 at Magnolia Springs State Park, Millen.

Children 15 and younger can try their luck on three stocked lakes while competing for various prizes. Pre-registration required. The tournament is free.

For more information, call (912) 982-1660.

DOUGHBOY

General receives top Infantry honor

By Sgt. 1st Class Larry Lane
Public Affair Office NCOIC

When retired Gen. William B. Rosson jumped onto Fryar Drop Zone to earn his master parachutist badge in 1964, he remembered his landing as being hard. Since the time when Rosson hit the ground, many Soldiers have followed in his jump boots.

Rosson returned to Fort Benning May 30 to pass on some advice to current and future Infantry leaders and to receive the Doughboy Award, an annual award used to recognize the contributions past Soldiers have made to the Infantry.

Rosson, who retired in 1975 after 35 years of continued service, praised the Soldiers, both officers and noncommissioned officers, who "exerted positive influences" on the retired general during his Infantry upbringing.

"Above all, it was the outstanding service of the Infantrymen who were under my command or supervision who made success possible for me," Rosson said to a collection of leaders at a ceremony in front of the Iron Mike statue at Infantry Hall.

"You hear some people say, 'My abilities are superior. I can do this myself.' Forget it. You are only as good as the people under you. I never forgot that and I suggest none of you forget it."

Rosson was commissioned as a second lieutenant in 1940, and after three years, took command of an Infantry battalion in Europe as a lieutenant colonel. He fought 10 campaigns with the 3rd Infantry Division in 1942 and earned the Distinguished Service Cross at Anzio, Italy, in 1942.

While in Italy, Rosson had a chance meeting along the northern coast of Sicily with his first battalion commander, Lt. Col. Dwight D. Eisenhower, the future U. S. president.

Sgt. 1st Class Larry Lane

Fort Benning's Commanding General Maj. Gen. Carl F. Ernst presents retired Gen. William B. Rosson with the Doughboy Award in front of Infantry Hall May 30.

"Our corps commander, General Omar Bradley, came by our advance regimental CP (command post), which was on a jeep hood beside the road, to obtain information on the latest situation. I was the regimental S-3 (operations officer). I briefed him (Ike) from my map board," Rosson recalled.

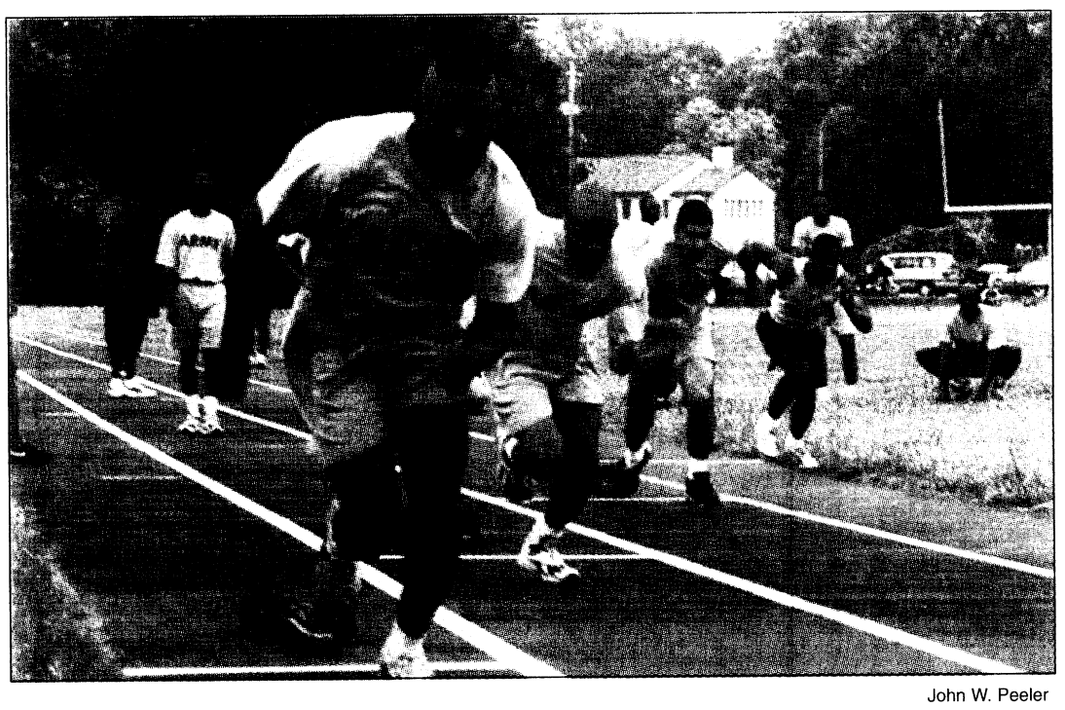
"When I finished, he patted me on my back and said I had given him what he needed to know. Believe me, I can feel that pat today. It was with me all of my service."

Rosson returned to Fort Benning throughout his career, he said, one time for CG4 glider training. This was in 1947, after the gliders made their mark during the D-Day invasion when gliders landed troops in Normandy, France. After this training, he said, the gliders were dropped from the Army battle plan.

"As an old Soldier and an old doughboy, I have seen the art and science of warfare undergo several re-evaluations and changes over the years and we are better for it," Rosson said.

"In this time of change, the one thing that most certainly cannot change is the requirement for tough, demanding, combat realistic, performance-oriented, standards-tested, Infantry and individual and unit training. Simulation can help and reinforce, but cannot substitute or replace this kind of close combat training."

Rosson said "self-development" was key to the overall development of leadership ability and he urged officers and noncommissioned officers to pursue this through the professional reading of Infantry doctrine. He added "taking care of the troops" was one trait leaders needed to foster and maintain.



"You will devote a substantial portion of your career to taking care of those under you," he said.

"Sometimes you will think it's a thankless job, but you do it anyway because of the leadership ethic, and then someday, without you having done anything to bring this about, you'll discover they are taking care of you. When that has happened, you have survived and your success will be assured."

Along with the Doughboy Award, Rosson received the Order of Saint Maurice, An Award named in honor of the patron saint of the Infantry.

Retired Command Sgt. Maj. Frank C. Plass, another recipient of this year's Doughboy Award, was present at the ceremony but will receive his award Wednesday at the Infantry Ball.

Plass is the Honorary Sergeant Major of the 29th Infantry Regiment. He began his 33-year career during World War II. During his service, he was a sergeant major for six battalions, three brigades, two corps and the Infantry School.

Rangers gear up for Rendezvous

By Elizabeth E. LaMonica
Special to The Bayonet©

Rangers of the past and present will congregate on Fort Benning for four days in June to conduct ceremonies, reunions and demonstrate current rangers' skills, capabilities and training.

Ranger Rendezvous 1997, sponsored by both the 75th Ranger Regiment and the 4th Ranger Training Brigade, will kick off with an airborne assault on Fryar Drop Zone June 17.

As many as 3,500 people will attend the rendezvous, including members of various ranger associations and current rangers from Fort Benning; Fort Lewis, Wash.; and Hunter Army Airfield, Fort Stewart, Ga.

During the Rendezvous, the associations will have meetings to re-elect board members and vote on specific issues within their groups, according to Capt. James Johnson, public affairs officer, 75th Ranger Regiment.

According to Johndson, the visiting rangers will be staying at a starship at Sand Hill.

"It's a camaraderie-building event for past rangers and current members of the regiment."

The annual event will continue the next day with regimental physical training and the Ranger Stakes. The stakes give representative squads from each units the opportunity to compete in nine events designed to test their endurance and military skills, according to Johnson.

RTB will take over the following morning with

Post prepares for annual Infantry Conference

By Cpl. Marc G. Turchin
Bayonet staff writer

The 1997 Infantry Conference will be conducted Tuesday through Thursday inside Infantry Hall.

This annual conference brings Infantry leaders from around the Army to Fort Benning to get a glimpse of what the Infantry School is currently teaching and what's on tap for the future of the Infantry.

The chief of the Infantry Maj. Gen. Carl F. Ernst will give the State of the Infantry address Wednesday inside Infantry Hall's Classroom 6. His presentation will touch on this year's theme,

Unauthorized cab drivers plan protest

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Cab drivers not authorized to pickup fares on post will protest this arrangement by picketing outside the main entrance to post Sunday.

Col. Lawrence White, chief of staff, responded to a two-page news release sent out by the cab drivers.

He noted the first contract was made with American Cab Company and Independent Cab Company in January 1992 to answer complaints from Soldiers about price gouging and the condition of cabs. American Cab became the sole operator on post in August 1994.

White said limiting the number of companies doing business on post made it easier to enforce compliance with the post's taxi regulations.

VARIOUS VOICES

How has the reduction in military forces affected your life?

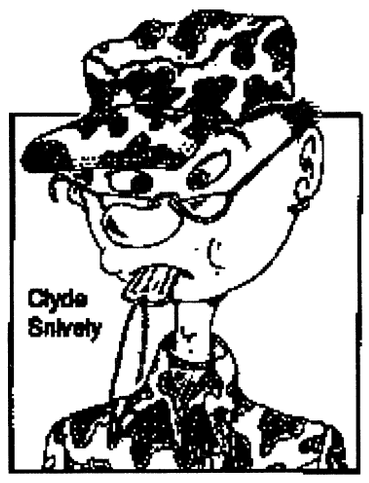
Cristina Jones, family member — "They're really cutting back in housing. Things aren't getting done because of a lack of personnel. You can really see it at the hospital, too."

Pfc. Michael Robison, Service Battery, 1st Battalion, 10th Field Artillery Regiment, 3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division (Mechanized) — "I don't really see too much of a difference. My unit seems to be doing fine."

Spc. Cheryl Knight, 14th Field Hospital, 36th Engineer Group (Combat) — "Military occupational specialties are combining, causing a heavier workload."

Capt. Daniel L. Davis, 21st Theater Army Area Command — "I think it has reduced the overall capability of the Army while asking us to do the same jobs with less, thereby putting us in danger."

Cpl. Quintin Gildon, Headquarters and Headquarters Detachment, 326th Replacement Battalion — "It makes it harder on everybody because there aren't as many to help out. One person is doing the job of three people, making it harder to focus."



Jackie Blalock, Department of Defense employee — "When they closed the naval base in Charleston, I was transferred here. It not only affects the military and the civil service members, but the economy of the community surrounding the installation."

Sergeants

Some NCOs forget what they learn in school

By Spc. Clyde Snively
USAIC Public Affairs Office

commentary

Specialists are pretty sure they have all the answers to the world's problems.

I'm talking about Soldiers and the rank of specialist, not doctors who specialize in nuclear medicine or lawyers who specialize in tort cases or mortgage lenders who specialize in VA loans.

Nope, I'm talking about people of my ilk, the real backbone of the Army, the lower grade, the all but disappearing enlisted Soldier.

The other day, we were hanging around the Bayonet office helping The Hib prepare for her sergeant's board (we can't believe she wants to leave our lowly ranks).

Talk was about some noncommissioned officers we know, "Yeah, I know him. He'd be out of his depth in a parking lot puddle," or, "Oh, her? No, she certainly is not so much as a has been, but more of a definitely won't be."

About one NCO, we were unanimous, "Sure, his Soldiers will follow him anywhere, but only out of curiosity."

Our gripe with these particular NCOs centered around the fact these three had stopped acting like NCOs. Rather, it seemed to us, they'd forgotten everything they'd been taught about leadership and professionalism as soon as they graduated from basic noncommissioned officers course or advanced noncommissioned officers course.

It was like they'd put their learning on hold and the Army and all its advancements had passed them by. They were proud of the fact they didn't know how to fire up a computer, "Don't give me that talk, I'm a stubby pencil man."

Or some of them forgot the basic tenants for the care and feeding of enlisted Soldiers. It seemed like it was OK to work the troops to death, but don't you dare visit an enlisted Soldier ... you might get cooties, doncha know.

But The Hib was undaunted.

She said she already knew her troop leading procedures, clearly understood "mission first, Soldiers always," and now just wanted to get on with preparing for her board.

"Hey, piece of cake," Spc. LeMon, who'd never been to a board in his life, said.

"When someone tells me it's easy, I get distrustful," I said, having just spent 20 minutes trying to remove an "easy peel" wrapper from my store-bought tuna fish sandwich.

"You got it," The Hib said. "Nothing worth having is easy and sergeants' stripes are worth having."

I like The Hib's attitude. I think she'll make a darn good NCO. She's smart, she's not afraid of hard work and I know she'll take good care of her Soldiers, and hopefully if she becomes my supervisor, she'll let me go out on assignment instead of sitting at the computer screen designing newspaper pages all day.

Training NCO thanks drill sergeants

I am the training noncommissioned officer for Company C, 2nd Battalion, 58th Infantry Regiment.

One of my responsibilities is to ensure the trainees who come through our company every cycle receive their mail on a daily basis. I separate the mail to make it easier and more efficient for the drill sergeants to hand out to each trainee. I often notice there are several pieces of mail addressed to the cadre.

I asked the drill sergeants if they ever get any mail from the Soldiers of previous cycles. They tell me many of the graduates write often and give the cadre feedback.

This makes me feel really good knowing my fellow NCOs make such a strong impression on these individuals in such a short period of time. I can honestly say I felt good whenever I received letters from the Soldiers I trained. It is rewarding when fellow cadre members tell me the majority of the feedback is pretty much the same.

The Soldiers say all the lessons they learned here and the advice given to them was true, and we are all leaders — even if the only person we lead is ourself.

We all make command decisions on a daily basis — even if the decisions are: will I get up on time, will I make formation, will I listen to my first-line supervisor and those appointed over me, will I be a team player, will I shine my boots, will I have a nice uniform, etc.

It is a good feeling knowing the same supportive and caring atmosphere I experienced and was exposed to when I went through basic training is still alive today. After all, every cadre member of the Infantry Training Brigade has the same mission. We produce highly efficient Infantrymen who are competent in all aspects of their duty descriptions and who can also represent the Army and be outstanding members of our society.

It is very impressive that the cadre of this brigade can reach out and touch the melting pot of our society, and in doing that, afford them every opportunity to excel in the Initial Entry Training environment.

I was very fortunate to be able to experience all the Infantry Training Brigade had to offer, and to have touched so many lives myself.

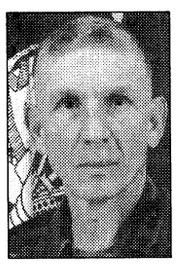
Employee complains about unnecessary destruction

For several weeks now, the personnel who use the west rear entrance to Infantry Hall have enjoyed watching a swallow build her nest over a light fixture and anticipated the arrival of young swallows.

After the nest was completed, we knew her eggs had arrived because she now sat quietly and watched us pass by without flying out like she previously had done.



After lunch we were greeted with the sight of a broken nest and five broken eggs on the walkway. Someone maliciously and deliberately poked the nest, breaking the side out and causing the eggs to tumble to the concrete.

The balance of nature has grown so fragile that even the tiniest miracles, like these eggs, should not be taken lightly. The fact that someone would cause such thoughtless vandalism is very disheartening and disappointing.

These birds only needed the space for a short time. Why couldn't we share? Where do we draw the line on our right to fool with Mother Nature and how long will she let us get away with it?

CG thanks post for safe Memorial Day

Congratulations, Fort Benning, and thanks!

Once again, you demonstrated why you are the best Army post in the world. This time you did it by concluding the four-day Memorial Day weekend without any serious accidents; no small feat, considering the fact we have more than 21,000 Soldiers, 6,500 civilians and 20,000 family members as part of our Army community.

What this tells us is leaders did their jobs by raising the safety awareness and everyone did his and her part by playing it smart.

The Memorial Day weekend also kicked off summer and the many perils associated with it — swimming, boating, long car trips and other outdoor adventures. So, while this is a great time to have fun, I ask that you be smart, be safe and responsible enough to protect yourself, your friends and families from harm and grief.

Dial 545-BOSS is the commander's action line for Soldiers, family members and civilians to call when they have problems or complaints that can't be resolved elsewhere.

While it is not a substitute for the chain of command or for agencies established to provide assistance, the line offers another means of communication between Fort Benning's community and commanders.

Directorate of Public Works:
The chief, Grounds Section, explained the tree was a healthy large oak that had some dead wood and needed trimming. The dead wood was removed and lower limbs trimmed.

The caller was advised that the post policies on removal of trees in the historic district is to only remove trees that are dead, diseased, dying or leaning in such a manner that high winds could topple them.

Call: The caller said he notices many POVs on post do not have the post registration decals. He said he feels it may help cut down on crime on post if everyone was registered.

Directorate of Public Safety:
The chief, Law Enforcement Division, explained registration of POVs is not required by Headquarters, Department of the Army. Installations decide whether or not to require registration and are responsible for funding the program if desired. It is Fort Benning's policy that vehicles be registered within 10 days (U.S. Army Infantry Center Reg. 190-5). Violators are issued an armed forces traffic ticket. The second or subsequent violation for not registering a vehicle may result in suspension of on-post driving privileges for six months or less, or revocation for one year or less. One measure of enforcing vehicle registration policy is weekly safety check points conducted by the military police at Fort Benning.

AAFES implements lower prices with pricing strategy

Army and Air Force Exchange Service

Service members will save millions because of the Army and Air Force Exchange Service's new Four Ways to Save pricing strategy.

"In recent surveys, many customers told us our prices need to be lower," said Air Force Maj. Gen. Doug Burger, exchange service commander. "This point was driven home by our younger military shoppers who tell us price most often determines where they shop.

The Four Ways to Save plan includes two major programs: oneHOTprice and Extra Value. Sale items will be clearly marked and are in addition to weekly sales and special buy promotions.

OneHOTprice will feature high-demand merchandise with price savings of at least 25 percent. Most oneHOTprice items will represent 40 percent to 60 percent savings.

Extra Value items will be available in all categories of merchandise. For example, the everyday price on diapers will drop as much as 33 percent, and there's a two-head videotape recorder priced at $99. These are permanent price reductions.

The new pricing program is possible because of effective cost-cutting strategies, improved sales and enhanced revenues in 1996, Bunger said. He described 1996 as an outstanding year with dividends to morale, welfare and recreation programs of $224 million, which amounted to $239 for every Soldier and airman — the highest per capital dividend in AAFES history.

CALL offers Army lessons

USAIC Public Affairs Office

CALL home: the life you save may be your own.

That's CALL, as in the Center for Army Lessons Learned, and "home" is the center's home page.

Since Vietnam, the Army used the lessons-learned process to successfully rebuild itself — applying lessons learned from the National Training Center, Fort Irwin, Calif., which aided in its success during Desert Storm.

Even corporate America is impressed with the Army's process, drawing rave reviews from both the Harvard Business School and Boston University's School of Management.

During the Vietnam War, each unit tended to learn the same lessons as the previous unit, mainly because of the rotation policy. Thus, instead of a nine-year war, there were nine one-year wars.

To avoid falling into that trap again, the Army invented the lessons-learned process, and in 1985, founded CALL at Fort Leavenworth, Ks., where a small group of seasoned officers collected the lessons, codified and distributed them.

Now, whenever the Army goes into a new area of operation, lessons learned will be quickly generated for follow-on forces.

For instance, after the 1994 invasion of Haiti, CALL collected information from Soldiers and developed 26 training scenarios for use by replacement units. In the next six months, units actually encountered 23 of them.

In Bosnia, lessons were forwarded to CALL and the best ones were e-mailed to all units. Every 72 hours, a new batch was distributed — the result, a low incident rate.

The key to all of this is leaders need to know these lessons are available. They need to access the home page and learn what is there, because once deployed, it could be too late.

Gen. Dennis Reimer, Army chief of staff, directed his chief of staff for operations to determine if the information was getting to the field and if it was being used.

Gen. William Hartzog, commanding general of Training and Doctrine Command (TRADOC), recently recognized Fort Benning for its efforts to educate leaders to CALL's capabilities. He noted that CALL operates an outstanding Internet home page that provides users with access to a vast database of collected experiences from units, combat training center rotations and operational deployments.

Users can access training quarterlies, branch journals and can easily connect to other Internet sites. One such site is TRADOC's Army training digital library where users can download the latest Army and joint doctrine and training manuals. CALL also provides the capability for users to submit their own valuable lessons learned directly to CALL through an on-line format.

Want to CALL home? Fort Benning users of the Internet can access it through the Fort Benning home page or by going directly to HTTP://CALL.ARMY.MIL:1100/call.html. The e-mail address is CALL@LEAVEMH1.ARMY.MI.

"Winning the Close Fight."

More than 300 Soldiers are expected to attend the conference including Gen. David Bramlett, Forces Command commander and Gen. William W. Hartzog, Training and Doctrine Command commander.

Some of the topics due to be discussed are the survey of Infantry doctrine, discussion of the Infantry branch, training, equipment and manning the force. An advanced concept technology demonstration will also be included during the conference. This demonstration will show attendees military operation in urban terrain and the rapid force projective initiative.

Equipment and weapons' manufacturers will have booths set up in the hall ways of Infantry Hall displaying prototype examples for conference attendees and anyone else to look at. More than 75 businesses are scheduled to set up displays including Hughes Aircraft, Lockheed Martin, Texas Instruments and General Dynamics.

Thursday there is an optional airborne jump onto Fryar Drop Zone and a live-fire exercise at Red Cloud Range.

These regulations include posting of rates in the cabs and monthly safety inspections.

White said the upshot of all this was improved service to Soldiers.

"They get point-to-point service, instead of pickup point-to-drop-off point service and they know what it will cost them per person to ride anywhere on post."

White said the contract does not prevent other cab companies from bringing fares onto post. They just can't pick fares up while on post.

He also noted the Morale Welfare and Recreation fund benefits from the fees charged to the cab companies to operate on post.

That afternoon, the regiment will honor 10 people chosen as distinguished and honorary members of the regiment at a ceremony conducted in Marshall Auditorium, Infantry Hall. Shortly after the conclusion of this ceremony, RTB and the 75th will move outside to the nearby Ranger Memorial to induct 14 candidates into the Ranger Hall of Fame. RTB will conduct the Hall of Fame plaque unveiling ceremony the next day at its headquarters.

Col. William J. Leszczynski will relinquish command of the 75th to Col. Stanley A. McChrystal the final day of the rendezvous.

Many of the events will be open to the public.

PREPARATION

Pre-Ranger Course prepares Infantrymen

By Sgt. Michael Sparks
Fort Bragg, N.C.

Only America's best Soldiers are eligible to attend the combat skills-focused ranger course. Even fewer actually finish i. One fourth of the 2,400 students that attend each year don't make it to graduation.

To get through Ranger School and earn the ranger tab requires much preparation. This preparation begins with the individual but can be greatly helped by a little-known "Pre-Ranger" Course operated from the third floor of Building 3245 at the Infantry Training Brigade on Sand Hill.

To ensure and ready the latest generation of combat arms leaders for Ranger School, the U.S. Army National Guard Bureau has formed the two-week Pre-Ranger Course (PRC) staffed by National Guard cadre that are Ranger School graduates and veterans with the 75th Ranger Regiment and Ranger Training Brigade.

The Pre-Ranger Course is conducted six times a year and is open to all qualified Soldiers from authorized sending units, active and reserve components and sister services. Soldiers scheduled on the Army Training Requirements and Resources System (ATRRS) to go to Ranger School can be enrolled to go to the PRC as final preparation.

The course consists of two phases. The first phase simulates week one of Ranger School, to include the Army Physical Fitness Test and Combat Water Survival Test, a five-mile run, land navigation and road marches.

The second phase is a week-long field training exercise that includes cadre-led and graded patrols. Each patrol has an after-action review to further emphasize student learning and knowledge.

A Pre-Ranger Course student remains in a well-camouflaged position with his M-249 light machine gun.

Second Lt. Anthony Poole, a leader in a long range surveillance unit in the Georgia Army National Guard and a former PRC student, spoke of what it takes to be a ranger:

"Ranger School is not about building character or developing a Soldier into some superhero," he said. "Ranger School teaches a Soldier to test his 'metal' and beat insurmountable odds when faced with them. It is the avowed and essential object of a Soldier to arrive at Ranger School mentally and physically prepared."

The first day begins with the APFT, followed by a short drive to the Briant Wells Pool for the Combat Water Survival Test. In full battle dress uniforms, load bearing equipment (LBE) and with rubber training M-16 rifle, students must swim 15 meters without touching the bottom or side of the pool. Another test has the student fall backwards into the pool with his weapon and LBE, which he must shed in the water without panic.

Later, classes on mission planning, tactics and land navigation are given in the classroom with visual aids directly related to the upcoming Ranger School curriculum. PRC students spend a of couple days negotiating land navigation courses in which they must successfully find a set number of points in a specified time.

Another day led to Cole Range for joint training with the 75th Ranger Regiment's Pre-Ranger students instruction in operations orders (OPORDs) culminates in five days of patrolling, ambushes and raids the students themselves plan and execute.

PRC cadre instructors assist PRC students at every step of patrol preparation with one-on-one help using their experiences with actual ranger patrols. The PRC cadre ask the students questions if an area of the operation is unclear or not considered to prompt the students to anticipate problems that can take place during the patrol.

An extensive after-action review takes place after each patrol to share insights and lessons learned observed by the PRC cadre and the other students.

After the week of field training, the PRC students go to Camp Rogers for the actual APFT and CWST. If they pass these tests, they proceed to actual Ranger School after a weekend break to rest and buy needed supplies. The hectic two weeks end with an official PRC graduation Sunday.

If you are interested in attending PRC or Ranger School, contact the PRC cadre for an information packet. The ATRRS school code is 964, the course number is Pre-Ranger and course title is ARNG Pre-Ranger Course.

If you are a Ranger School graduate and are interested in an ADSW short tour as a PRC instructor, contact the PRC cadre.

SOA officers visit Central America as part of course

By Spc. Judith O'Toole
School of the Americas

Let's face it. Learning entirely through textbooks can get kind of boring. It's important to get out of the classroom and personally experience some of the lessons taught.

That's one of the reasons the School of the Americas' (SOA) Command and General Staff Officer's Course (CGSOC) recently visited Central America.

The CGSOC is accredited by the Department of the Army and is the equivalent to the Command and General Staff College at Fort Leavenworth, Ks. U.S. Army and Air Force officers, as well as Latin American officers, attend the course at SOA.

CGSOC students and faculty of the year-long course visited U.S. and Honduran military facilities in both Panama and Honduras.

The first stop for the group was Panama. There they were briefed by members of the U.S. Army Southern Command staff, U.S. Army South and Rodman Naval Station. The students also visited Fort Sherman, Panama, home of the Jungle Operations Training Battalion; and the locks of the Panama Canal.

While at Southern Command (SOUTHCOM), the CGSOC held discussions about the complete U.S. withdrawal from Panama in 1999; SOUTHCOM's role in supporting counternarcotics operation in Latin America; as well as the other missions of SOUTHCOM.

The group flew by helicopter to visit the remote Fort Sherman. There, they were briefed by members of the Jungle Operations Training Battalion before being given a tour of the area. One of the places visited was a small, outdoor area where animals native to the jungle are housed.

On the third day of the trip, SOA's CGSOC students boarded a C-130 and flew to Soto Cano, Honduras, where Joint Task Force Bravo is located.

JTF-Bravo was established in 1984, by the U.S. Department of Defense, to support military operations and provide assistance to six Central American nations.

While in Honduras, the group visited a wide variety of Honduran units. They visited the Honduran National Defense College, where they listened to a three-man panel discussion which included the Honduran minister of defense. One student remarked afterwards this was the most beneficial briefing of the entire trip.

They also visited with students from the Honduran Command and General Staff College, the Honduran Premier Engineering School and the Honduran Infantry School.

U.S. Marine Corps Maj. Mark A. Burger, SOA's CGSOC director, said trips like these help military-to-military relations with SOUTHCOM, as well as help the Latin American students to further understand SOUTHCOM's mission and their role in the region.

In addition, Burger said the trip was beneficial to his students because they not only got to meet with students from other nations, as they did in Honduras, but they also got a first-hand look at another country's culture. This helps both the U.S. and Latin American officers in the course.

One of the advantages of the School of the Americas is in addition to regular course work, students from Latin America are able to get a first-hand view of the United States and the way the American people live under a true democracy.

At the end of June, the course will take their second and final trip of the year. This time they will be concentrating on U.S. military history and will visit Fort Bragg, N.C.; Washington, D.C.; Gettysburg, Penn.; and Norfolk, Va.

Rangers react, save lives

Quick reaction and proper evaluation of emergency medical situations can mean the difference between life and death for those entrusting their lives to an Army medic.

Fortunately for three Fort Stewart, Ga., Soldiers, the medics of the Ranger Training Brigade must have listened and learned well during their training.

The Savannah Ga. Soldiers, Pfc. Lepapa Amuimuia, Spc. Barbara Hardin and Sgt. Daniel Vlad, were in the third semi-trailer of a convoy hauling water to a field training exercise. Amuimuia, the driver, attempted to turn from Jamestown Road onto Hourglass Road without slowing down and lost control of the vehicle. The truck rolled over and slid off the road, ejecting Hardin from the vehicle, pinning Amuimuia underneath the vehicle and knocking Vlad unconscious.

Staff Sgt. Richard Swain, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 4th Ranger Training Brigade, witnessed this accident from the seat of his motorcycle as he was leaving RTB that morning.

A trained medic, Swain raced to the scene and began offering assistance, sending the victims' comrades to the nearby aid station to retrieve his aid bag and more help.

"One of the guys trapped inside was screaming," Swain said. "I couldn't get them out by myself, so I tried calming that guy down for a couple of minutes until the other guys came down with the equipment."

The other medics, Staff Sgt. Leo Gosselin, Company D, 4th RTB, and Sgt. 1st Class Fredell Wilkes, Staff Sgt. Carlos Gomez and Spc. Brian Mikkelsen, all of HHC, 4th RTB, rushed to the scene.

Wilkes shuttled backboards and support equipment to the scene and coordinated with the military police for the medical evacuation, while the others began assessing the victims.

"I had enough time to do a primary and secondary assessment (of Hardin) before the MPs got there," Mikkelsen said.

Swain felt time pass slowly.

"It was only 10 minutes, but it seemed like forever," Swain said. "Some guys from 3rd Ranger Battalion showed up shortly after the accident and helped us with whatever we needed."

None of the victims were wearing either seat belts or kevlar helmets. The helmets could have helped prevent some of the injuries the Soldiers received, according to the rescuers.

Compounding the injuries to the victims was the danger of the wrecked vehicle.

Acid from the battery was spilling into the cab on one of the victims, according to both Gomez and Mikkelsen. Not only could the acids burn the Soldier, but the battery could possibly explode.

"That was one of the reasons why I wanted to get that one guy out," Swain said. "(The truck) was up on a hill. We didn't know if it was going to roll over or catch on fire or what."

Several of the rescuers feared the vehicle would roll onto one of the victims.

"Hardin was thrown downhill of the vehicle. If the vehicle had rolled, she would have been crushed," Mikkelsen said. "When the Fort Benning fire department showed up, they shored up (stabilized) the vehicle."

Wilkes said the rescuers remained calm under pressure.

"The good thing is that these guys were able to take care of patients in trauma," Wilkes said. "Even though these guys aren't able to practice, they handled the situation very well."

Despite their actions, these men don't consider themselves heroes.

"We're all medics," Swain said. "It's what we were trained to do."

The men agreed that they were just doing what came naturally to them because of their training.

"I think we expect it of ourselves," Gomez said.

The fire department had to use the Jaws of Life to free the pinned man. Fortunately, all three victims were treated and have since been released.

PT program keeps new moms in shape

Pregnancy physical training (PPT) at Fort Benning designed to help pregnant Soldiers stay physically fit throughout their pregnancies. Currently, there are 42 Soldiers from the post enrolled.

These Soldiers perform various physical activities within the program, including step aerobics, water aerobics, weight training and two-and-a-half-mile walks. These activities are part of the PPT curriculum Monday, Wednesday and Friday of each week.

Tuesday is set aside for educational classes. Several organizations on post and in the community, including Martin Army Community Hospital, Childcare Services and the Chaplains Office.

Classes are taught about many subjects ranging from breastfeeding and positive discipline to budgeting, dulas, which are labor coaches, and the labor process. Capt. Lisa Leazenby, PPT program director, said PPT organizers try to encompass a lot with the Tuesday classes.

"We try to teach the Soldiers in the program about every aspect childrearing can possibly impact within a family," she said. Leazenby explained it is impossible to teach program participants not only about childbirth but also about childrearing, and family life.

"A woman spends nine months learning tools to help her through labor and delivery. But it is important to also focus on the changes a baby will create for a family."

ITB activates new training battalion

By Cpl. Marc G. Turchin
Bayonet staff writer

With summer just around the corner, the Infantry Training Brigade (ITB) expects an influx of new Soldiers to train.

This year, the brigade has taken steps to alleviate the demand on the drill sergeants training the new Soldiers by activating the 2nd Battalion, 19th Infantry Regiment, within the ITB during a ceremony May 28.

The ITB commander, Col. Abraham Turner, said the addition of the battalion keeps the trainees-to-drill sergeant ratio at the right level.

"The optimum drill sergeant-to-trainee ratio is one drill sergeant to 20 Soldiers. Without an additional battalion to train this summer, that ratio would have gone up to the neighborhood of one drill sergeant to 27 or 28 Soldiers," Turner said.

The drill sergeant-to-trainee ratio is a common worry every summer, and Turner said this new battalion will continue to help in years to come.

"We don't see this as a temporary activation at all," Turner said. "This battalion will be manned and equipped to train as all the other battalions are on a permanent basis."

Company A gets its first Soldiers later this month, companies B and C receive recruits in July and companies D and E will begin their first cycles in August.

Heading up the battalion is Maj. Andrew J. Preston who came to the battalion from one of the brigade's sister battalions, 1st Bn., 50th Inf. Regt.

The 2nd Bn., 19th Inf. Regt., will be housed in Building 3305, Kinsman Barracks, on Sand Hill.

participating in the PPT program as soon as they find out about their pregnancies, according to Krystal McGee, PPT instructor from the U.S. Army Physical Fitness School.

"The minute a Soldier finds out she is pregnant, her unit commander should send her to us," she said.

Leazenby explained why she believes sending a Soldier to the PPT program that soon is important.

"Our objective is to teach pregnant Soldiers how to exercise safely throughout pregnancy and to maintain her health and the health of the baby," she said. "A secondary goal is to help these Soldiers with labor and delivery by concentrating throughout the program on the muscle groups used during delivery."

There are many benefits to Soldiers and the Army that come from this program, McGee said.

"It can benefit Soldiers by making labor easier, relieving fatigue, reducing morning sickness, improving self-esteem and confidence levels and reducing the risk of hypertension, among other things," she said.

"The Army and individual units can benefit from the program because it increases the postpartum fitness of pregnant Soldiers and helps transition a Soldier back to a ready level of fitness more quickly after delivery."

The PPT program at Fort Benning began as a pilot program for other installations. Now, according to McGee, the Center of Health Promotion and Preventive Medicine, Aberdeen Proving Ground, Md., is using it as a model for designing a program to initiate at all Army installations.

Some units, such as the 36th Engineer Group and 203rd Forward Support Battalion, have made the PPT program mandatory for pregnant Soldiers. Other units leave the option of participating up to individual pregnant Soldiers.

For more information about the PPT program, call Leazenby at 545-4041 or McGee at 545-6335.

GDL aids Soldiers with civilian job hunt

Army Career and Alumni Program

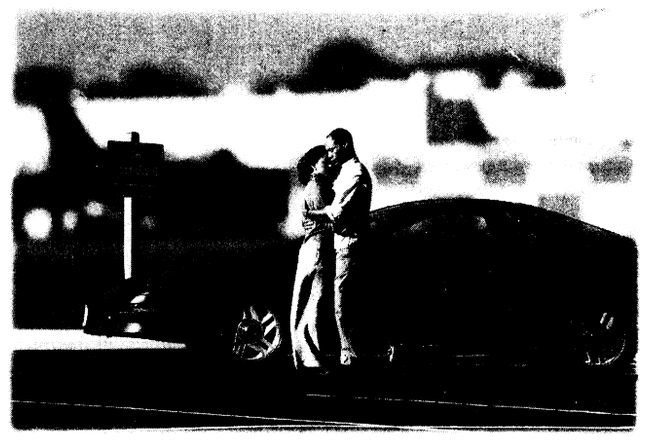
All Soldiers who transition from the U.S. Army and who are going to stay in Georgia are encouraged to visit the Georgia Department of Labor for the specific purpose of taking advantage of the services offered by the Veterans representative located there.

Those Soldiers who are planning to relocate to other states should visit the Veterans representative located in Department of Labor offices in those states. These visits will allow Soldiers to take advantage of specific benefits available in the job search.

These benefits include case management services, vocational guidance, counseling, referral to supportive service agencies, job referrals and local office contracts.

In particular, the Veterans representative establishes employment plans for Soldiers by discussing interests, past experience, education and labor market possibilities. In regard to labor market possibilities, all Soldiers should know an initial referral for a job opportunity at many Columbus businesses can only be accomplished through the Georgia Department of Labor.

"Without a doubt," Carl Hopp, a Fort Benning counselor, said, "this referral process is a winner for both Soldiers and businesses, and has resulted in many job offers to Soldiers in the Columbus area."



The Georgia Department of Labor is located at 700 Veterans Parkway, Columbus, and is open 8 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. Monday through Friday. Soldiers visiting the Georgia Department of Labor should arrive no later than 2 p.m. so their needs can be completely met before closing.

FEMA offers tips for hurricane season

Federal Emergency Management Agency

Faced with the prospect of another active hurricane season, the nation's top emergency manager called on residents of hurricane-prone coastal areas to stay alert to the potential danger posed by these killer storms and to begin early preparations for safeguarding life and property.

"Hurricane Fran last year showed us how devastating these storms can be and the awesome risks that come with being unprepared," James Lee Witt, director of the Federal Emergency Management Agency (FEMA), said in marking the opening of the 1997 hurricane season Sunday.

"Our experience also shows us that those who remain alert and plan ahead have the best chances of surviving with the least amount of loss."

In preparing for the coming season, FEMA offered the following basic safety tips to help reduce hurricane risks:

•Recheck your supply of boards, tools, batteries, non-perishable foods and other equipment you will need if the hurricane strikes your area. Remain alert for official National Weather Service hurricane watches and warnings.

•When you are under a hurricane watch, continue normal activities, but stay tuned to radio or television for all National Weather Service advisories.

•Remember a hurricane watch means possible danger. If the danger materializes, a hurricane warning will be issued. Meanwhile, keep alert. Follow official instructions from local and state authorities.

When your area receives a hurricane warning, you should:

•Plan your time before the storm arrives and avoid the last-minute hurry that might leave you marooned or unprepared.

•When directed by local emergency officials, leave low-lying areas that may be swept by high tides or storm waves.

•Move your boat to security before the storm arrives, or evacuate it to a designated safe area.

•Board up windows or protect them with storm shutters.

•Secure outdoor objects that might be blown away. Harmless items hurled by high wind become missiles of destruction.

•Store drinking water in clean bathtubs, jugs, bottles and cooking utensils. Your water supply may be cut off by a power loss or contaminated by flooding.

•Check battery-powered equipment and flashlights — and emergency cooking facilities.

•Keep car gas tanks at least half full since gasoline pumps will not be working if the electricity has been cut off.

If the calm storm center passes directly overhead, be aware there will be a lull in the wind lasting from a few minutes to a half-hour or more. But also remember that the winds at the other side of the storm's eye rise very rapidly to hurricane force, coming from the opposite direction.

Firework safety necessary for a happy Fourth of July

By Regis Beighley
Infantry Branch Safety Office

It has been recognized for some years that fireworks, for all their patriotic associations, present a very serious safety hazard, particularly for children.

Deaths, blindness, amputations and severe burns have been all too often the result of Fourth of July celebrations.

It has been estimated that some 6,500 victims are treated in hospital emergency rooms each year for fireworks-related injuries; two-thirds of the victims are under 15 years of age. While some of these accidents are caused by banned fireworks that had been illegally sold, the majority were linked to legal fireworks.

Fireworks should be used only with extreme caution. Used carelessly, they can cause painful, possibly severe injuries. To help use fireworks more safely, the following recommendations are offered:

•Remember that fireworks are not toys for children. The sparkler, considered by many the ideal "safe" firework for the young, burns at very high temperatures and can easily ignite clothing. Do not allow younger children to play with fireworks under any circumstances. They cannot appreciate the danger involved and cannot act correctly in case of an emergency.

•If you permit older children to use fireworks, be sure they use them only under close adult supervision. Do not allow any running or horse play while they are being used.

•Before using any firework, read and follow all warning instructions printed on the label.

•The sale, storage, possession, or use of fireworks of any description on an Army reservation or property, including Army-owned housing areas, is prohibited. Rockets, signal flares and similar pyrotechnic devices which are officially used by the Army will be handled and stored in accordance with pertinent directives and Army regulations.

•Attendance at the post fireworks display on the Fourth of July is encouraged by post officials and supervised by professional personnel as well as the Fort Benning Fire Department. Through this public celebration, people have the opportunity to enjoy the fireworks display on post rather than breaking the law and possibly injuring themselves and others.

FEMA warns against fraud

Federal Emergency Management Agency

With the coming of the 1997 hurricane season, the Federal Emergency Management Agency (FEMA) warned aggressive action will be taken against any criminal attempt to defraud the federal government in connection with disaster aid for hurricane victims.

According to Paul J. Lillis, assistant inspector general for the Investigations Division of FEMA's Office of the Inspector General, the vast majority of people seeking disaster aid are legally entitled to apply for it. However, he noted that 48 individuals were either arrested or convicted over the last 20 months for disaster-related fraud resulting in more than $19 million in fines, restitution and other federal savings.

"As another hurricane season begins, we find these criminal actions particularly significant because they serve as a remainder that the federal government will arrest and prosecute anyone who attempts to gain illegally from other people's tragic losses," Lillis said.

He emphasized that theft of government property or claiming false hurricane losses are felony charges and carry a maximum five-year prison term and a possible $250,000 fine.

Lillis noted that two ongoing federal investigative task forces in Puerto Rico and the U.S. Virgin Islands are expected to produce additional indictments and arrests. The task forces formed to pursue fraud in connection with Hurricane Hugo in 1989 and Hurricane Marilyn in 1995 already have led to several successful prosecutions, Lillis said.

FEMA's OIG is responsible for investigating agency programs and operations, including fraudulent applications for presidentially declared disaster assistance. Prosecution of fraud cases is brought by the U.S. Department of Justice.

Lillis said that anyone who is aware of criminal activity regarding FEMA disaster assistance can anonymously report the information directly to the OIG by calling the toll-free hotline at (800) 323-8603. The hotline is in operation 24 hours a day, seven days a week.

Chess players compete — The 1997 U.S. Army Infantry Center Military Chess Tournament will be at the Kelley Hill Recreation Center, Building 9079, at 10 a.m. June 21.

The tournament is restricted to active duty military personnel only, acting as a lead up to the All-Army Chess Championships to be conducted at Fort Belvoir, Va.

To be eligible for the All-Army competition, a U.S. Chess Federation rating of 1,800 or higher must be achieved.

For more information about this tournament or a more leisurely game of chess, contact the Kelley Hill Recreation Center at 544-3079 or call Chris Winterman, chief, Recreation Centers Branch, Community Recreation Division, at 544-9324.

Basketball tournament to take place — Youth Services will conduct a Father and Son Two-on-Two Basketball Tournament from 1 to 2:30 p.m. June 14 for youth family members ages 9 to 12.

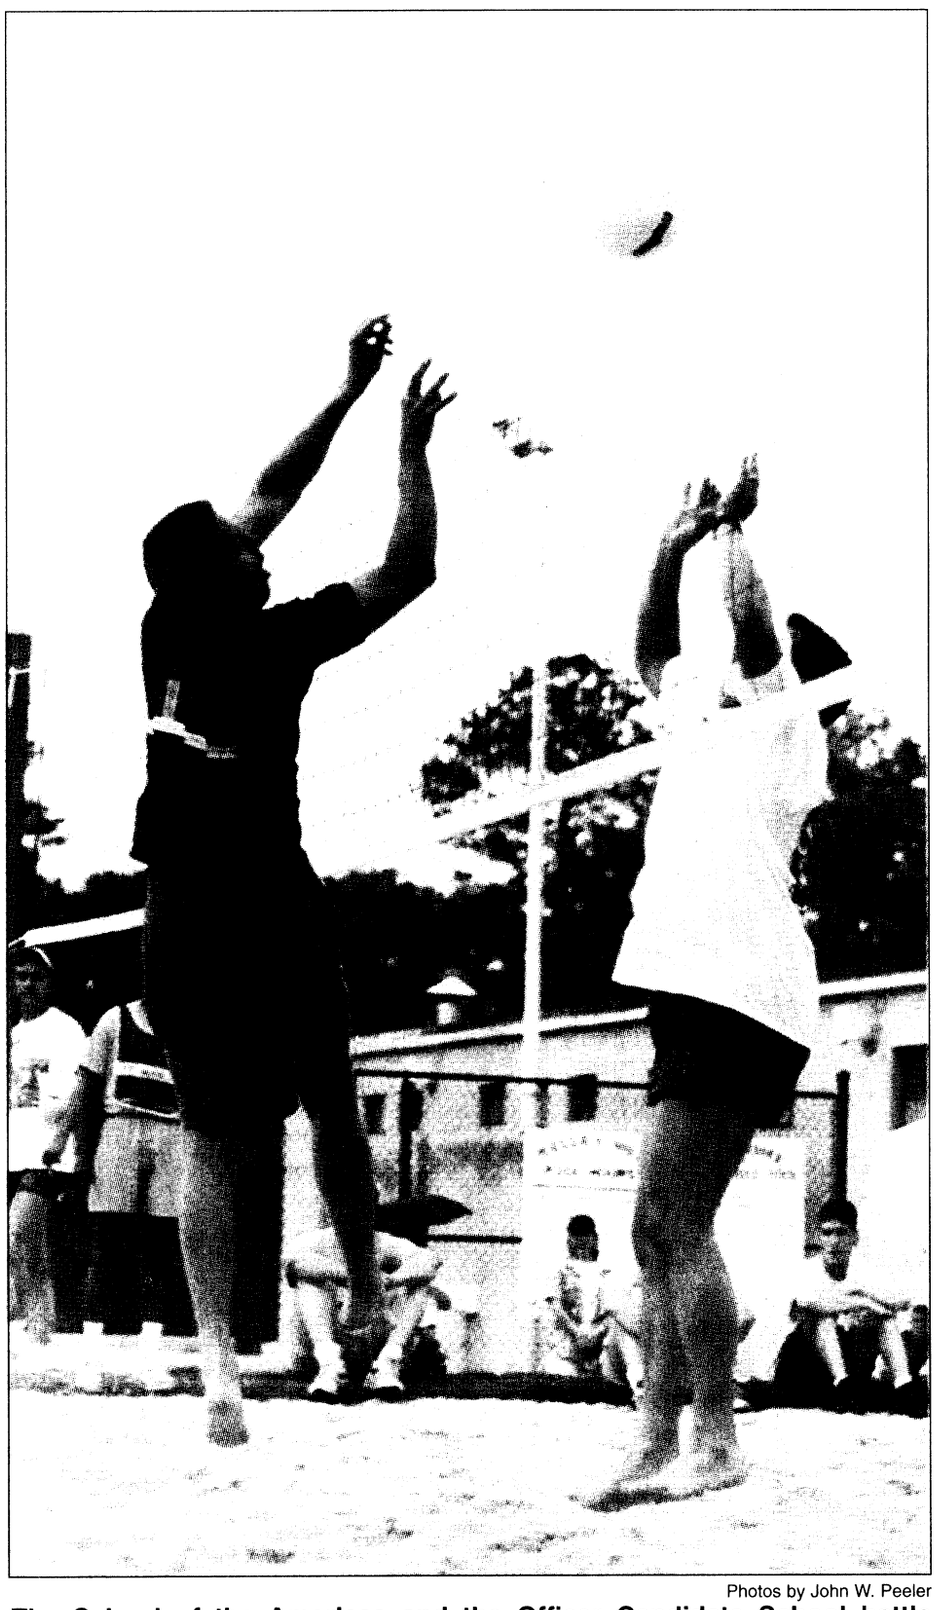
Another tournament will take place from 4 to 5:30 p.m. for teenagers 13 to 18.

Play will be at the Youth Services Main Gym, Building 1055.

Dependents golf tourney set — The military stopped calling family members "dependents" long ago, but next week, Fort Benning will play host to the Dependents' Golf Tournament.

Women dependents from all the services and throughout the globe will assemble at Fort Benning beginning Sunday to find out who the best dependent golfer is.

For the past two years, that person has been Jane Cook, an Army dependent. Cook dethroned Patty Moore in 1995, but Moore, a Marine Corps dependent, who won in 1988, 1990, 1991 and 1994, will be back to reclaim the title of "Best Dependent Golfer."



They will be competing against 158 women, all determined to win.

The women will spend Sunday and Monday getting to know Fort Benning's Follow Me Pineside course. The 54-hole tournament begins Tuesday and concludes Thursday.

The winners will be recognized at an awards banquet at the Officers' Club Thursday.

The tournament celebrates its 35th anniversary this year. It was founded by Col. Gerhard Schriever and his wife Zada because country clubs in the vicinity of our nation's capitol did not welcome military wives at their tournaments.

The Dependents' Golf Tournament takes place each year, with a different installation sponsoring the tournament. This is the second time Fort Benning has sponsored the event. The Fort Benning Women's Golf Association is this year's sponsor, along with club professional George Cliff.

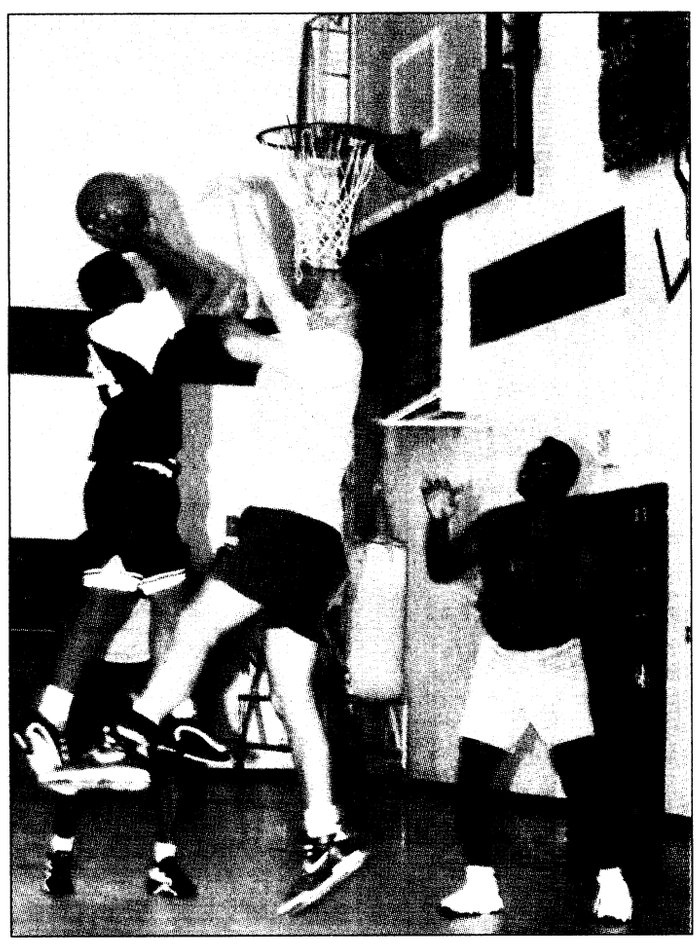
Military Appreciation Week, initially threatened by bad weather, got into full swing Monday with a full range of athletic events at various locations around Fort Benning.

The week's athletic events culminate today with a family picnic beginning at 11 a.m. at York Field. Following the picnic, an awards ceremony will be conducted to present the Commander's Trophy, "Follow Me" Cup and the Benning Team Cup.

Two major events left in the competition are the "Burn the General Run," which starts today at 7:30 a.m. at York Field, and the "Fit to Win" events that begin at 11 a.m. at Doughboy Stadium.



The "Burn the General Run" will start and finsh at York Field. The Commanding General will start 30 meters in front of the participants with the object of the run being to beat the general on the three-mile course.

Every runner in the event will receive a certificate at the finsh.

Event's in the "Fit to Win" competition include the 100-meter dash preliminaries at 11 a.m., push ups at 11:45 a.m., one-mile run at 1 p.m., tug o' war at 1:30 p.m. and the 100-meter finals at 2:30 p.m.

Entrants for the competition should report one hour prior to the event starting time.

The top prize, the Commander's Trophy, will be awarded to the overall unit winner at the awards ceremony scheduled for 4 p.m. today.

Hall of famer conducts autograph session at Fort Benning

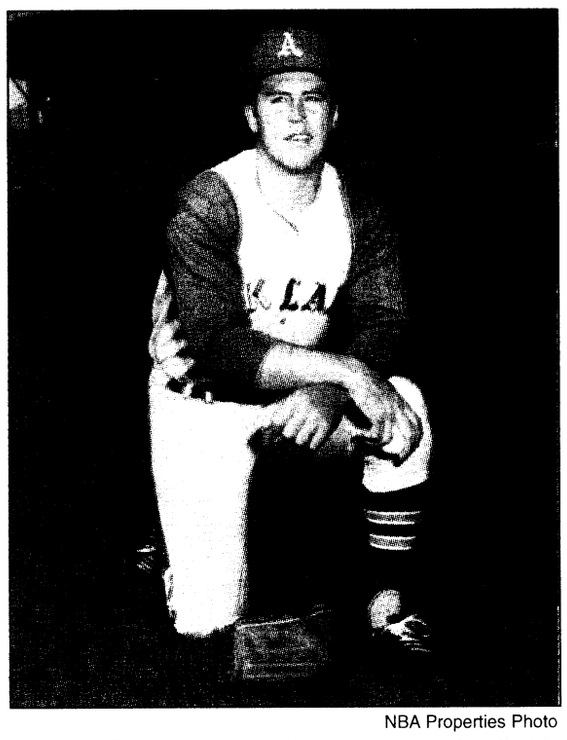
Major League Baseball Players Alumni

PITTSBURGH — Hall of Fame baseball great Jim "Catfish" Hunter, a key member of the A's and Yankees' pitching staffs of the World Series teams of the mid-1970s, will sign autographs Tuesday from 10 a.m. to 1 p.m. at the Fort Benning Commissary.

The bigger the game, the better he pitched. That is what is inscribed on Catfish Hunter's Hall of Fame plaque. Nicknamed Catfish for effect by A's owner Charles O. Finley, he immediately went to the major leagues from high school. May 8, 1968, against Minnesota, he pitched the American League's first regular-season perfect game in 46 years.

In 1970, Hunter tied for the American League lead with 40 starts. He then won 21 games each season from 1971 to 1973, and his .750 winning percentage in 1972 and .808 in 1973 led the American League. In 1974, he won the Cy Young Award; his 25 wins tied him for the American League lead, and his 2.49 ERA stood alone at the top. In each of those four seasons, Oakland won their division, and three times were World Champions. Hunter was 4-0 with one save in seven World Series games with the A's.

In 1975 with the Yankees, Hunter went 23-14, tying him once again for the American League lead. He led the Yankees to back-to-back World Series victories in 1977 and 1978.



He holds Oakland's all-time top spots in wins (161), starts (340), innings (2,456), shutouts (31) and strikeouts (1,520).

The autograph session is part of the Campbell's Legends of Baseball Tour Sweepstakes. Hunter, an eight-time All-Star who pitched a perfect game in 1968, is joining 14 other Major League Baseball greats who will tour more than 60 military bases throughout the United States, Europe and Asia during the months of June and July as part of the Legends of Baseball Tour.

In addition to obtaining autographs from some of the greatest players in Major League Baseball history, the tour provides military personnel and their families an opportunity to register for a vacation for four to the Baseball Hall of Fame in Cooperstown, N.Y. The sweepstakes is open only to authorized military patrons and their immediate family members.

A total of seven family vacations will be awarded during the sweepstakes. Each winning family will be hosted by two Major League Baseball legends.

"The baseball legends autograph sessions provide unique opportunities for our players to meet their fans, up close and personal," Brooks Robinson, president of the Major League Baseball Players Alumni Association, said.

Bass pro develops new spinner bait

By D. Hegel and S. Price
Johnson® and Evinrude® Outboards

Professional bass tournament angler Guy Eaker is reinventing the wheel — after it's been re-invented practically on an annual basis for the past 40 years.

In other words, Eaker is designing a new spinner bait.

"It's tough," the veteran angler said, "but believe it or not, no one has ever really made a spinner bait the way I want it, not even the companies I've designed lures for.

"This time, it's going to be produced just the way I want it, and I believe bass fishermen will notice the difference."

Eaker's expertise with blade baits is well-known, and his new lure will feature several noticeable changes from past spinner baits.

"The first things I designed into the lure were two special grooves along the bottom of the head that will add stability to the spinner bait, especially as you fish it through brush," he said. "This is where many spinner baits will flip over and you'll lose strike opportunities.

"I fish spinner baits through brush all the time and many of my strikes come just as the lure breaks free of the limbs, but a lot of the spinner baits now on the market will roll over after they nick a branch because they aren't very stable as slow speeds."

Another design change the pro has incorporated in his new lure is offset blades. The hole through which each blade is attached to the blade wire is slightly off-center, which results in better vibration. Because the blades are off-set differently, Eaker has also created a spinner bait in which the two blades spin in opposite directions.

"Another thing I've done is insist the manufacturer use .035-diameter wire, which, when combined with the off-set blades, creates even more vibration," Eaker said. "The entire lure vibrates, not just the blades."

Eaker has also designed the lure with a slightly longer head wire, which permits the lure to be fished extremely fast without rolling.

"Spinner baits are among the most versatile of all bass lures," the North Carolina angler said, "but they're versatile only if they're properly designed. Just small changes in different parts of the lure really do effect that versatility, too.

"I'm trying to make my spinner bait as versatile as possible."

Eaker plans to have the spinner bait produced in 1/4-, 3/8-, and 1/2- ounce sizes. These are his favorite sizes and are also the three sizes most often used by the tournament pros. The new spinner bait should be available by early spring.

Georgia state parks offer guided canoe trips

— Outdoor enthusiasts can explore Georgia's scenic waterways on guided canoe trips at High Falls and Panola Mountain State Parks.

Park staff will explain basic canoeing techniques and interpret natural surroundings while leading paddlers on day-long trips.

Participants can see beavers, otters, kingfishers, great blue herons, turtles and other wildlife.

Trips fill quickly, so pre-registration is required. To register, call the park directly.

The cost is $15 per person, which includes canoe, paddles and life preserver. Canoers who bring their own equipment pay $10. A $2 park pass fee is charged per vehicle.

Eighteen of Georgia's state parks rent canoes so visitors can explore lakes and streams on their own.

Prices are $3 to $5 for an hour, $8 to $15 for four hours and $12 to $20 for an entire day. For a free "Guide to Georgia State Parks and Historic Sites" or "1997 Events" brochure, call (404) 656-3530.

To reserve a campsite or fully equipped cottage, call (800) 864-7275.

The parks that offer canoe trips are:

High Falls State Park

June 14

Enjoy an easy trip down the Towaliga River in Jackson, Ga., the second Saturday of each month.

Call (912) 993-3053 to register.

Panola Mountain State Conservation Park

Panola Mountain State Conservation park offers a variety of outdoor excursions for the entire family.

For reservations and information, call (770) 389-7801.

Scheduled events and dates are:

Sept. 27

Explore three miles of the South River which forms the northern boundary of this park from 9 a.m. to 2 p.m.

Nov. 15

Adults may enjoy a sunset float on the park's 3.5-acre lake from 5:30 to 7:30 p.m.

State parks post fishing tournaments —

The arrival of spring means it is time to get out your favorite fishing pole and head to Georgia's state parks.

This year, the parks have planned a dozen fishing events where serious anglers can strut their stuff while beginning youngsters learn the basics. The tournaments are a great excuse for families to spend time together in the spring sunshine.

Most state parks have boat ramps and docks, and many rent boats and sell bait. For more information about a fishing tournament, call the host park.

Fishing tournaments are just some of the many events conducted by state parks and historic sites throughout the year.

All events are free and parking is $2.

June 7

A children's fishing rodeo takes place from 9 a.m. to noon Saturday at James H. Floyd State Park, Summerville.

The long-awaited reopening of the 16-acre lake finally arrives.

Anglers 14 and younger can compete for prizes. Hotdogs and hamburgers will be served after the rodeo.

Bring your own fishing gear and bait (no minnows). There is no charge for the tournament.

For more information, call 857-0826.

A children's fishing rodeo is from 8:30 a.m. to noon Saturday at Magnolia Springs State Park, Millen.

Children 15 and younger can try their luck on three stocked lakes while competing for various prizes. Pre-registration required. The tournament is free.

For more information, call (912) 982-1660.

Tips for financing education

The Georgia Society of CPAs

Ready or not, here come those tuition bills. In the next few months, millions of parents of college-bound students will b making the inevitable switch fi saving for college to paying for coll

If your child didn't qualify for based financial aid or if what he or wasn't enough, the Georgia Society Public Accountants suggests you c following last-minute strategies college bills:

•If you haven't already done so, time to review all possible sources o and scholarships. By now, most athletic and academic scholarships h been spoken for, so you'll need to more creative.

•Check with your employer. Many companies have scholarship programs open to children of their employees. There are also many private scholarships available that are not based on need but, rather, on personal, occupational and education background, as well as organizational affiliation, talent, ethnic origin and other factors.

•You can find a number of catalogs and directories that provide comprehensive lists of potential grant and scholarship sources. Or, you can do your search electronically, by checking out the enormous amount of scholarship information available on the Internet.

However, if you still find yourself coming up short, borrowing may be your only option.

•The government offers several non-need-based loan programs at rates that are generally lower than you would get elsewhere. The government lends to students under the Stafford Loan program, and parents can borrow through the Parent Loans for Undergraduate Students) program. Any student who is enrolled in an eligible program of study at least half-time qualifies for an unsubsidized Stafford Loan.

Freshman students can borrow up to $2,625, sophomores can get up to $3,500 and $5,500 is available for each of the two remaining undergraduate years. The Stafford Loan's variable rate, adjusted each year July 1, is capped at 8.25 percent. However, the student must pay an origination fee of four percent of the amount borrowed, which is deducted from the loan amount.

Interest on unsubsidized Stafford Loans begins to accrue following the first disbursement. Students pay the interest while they are in school or can choose to defer interest payments until six months after graduation at which time the accrued interest due is added to the loan balance. Students have up to 10 years to epay Stafford Loans.

Depending on the college, the lent may arrange for a Stafford either through a bank or through ge's financial aid office.

s with good credit histories also or a PLUS loan to pay the education child who is enrolled at least half- ıe PLUS program, parents may t of the child's tuition less any other ild receives.

your child's cost of attendance is or she receives $2,000 in other ou may be able to borrow up to ıe Stafford Loan, the interest rate is l is adjusted each year July 1. at 9 percent, the cap on PLUS is slightly higher than that of ord loans.

Also, since PLUS Loans do not have a grace period, parents must begin repayment of both principal and interest while their child is still in school. The repayment period is usually 10 years.

•Some families may not realize they have resources of their own from which they can borrow. For example, by applying for a home equity loan or line of credit, you may be able to use the equity you have built up in your home to pay for tuition.

In most cases, interest on up to $100,000 of a home equity loan is fully deductible. However, borrowing against the equity in your home puts your home at risk if you default on the payments.

•Your 401(k) retirement plan provides another source of funds, although it should be used only as a last resort. Most plans allow you to borrow half of your vested balance, up to a maximum loan of $550,000. The loan must be paid back within five years.

If you quit or lose your job with the loan outstanding, the debt is considered a distribution from the plan. That means the money is treated as taxable income to you and, if you're under age 55, is subject to a 10 percent penalty.

•Finally, you also may want to encourage grandparents or other relatives who were planning to make large gifts to your children to do so sooner rather than later to help pay the cost of college. By making such gifts, they'll also be able to reduce their taxable estate.

Georgia offers students HOPE

Army News Service

Georgia residents, service members and family members assigned to one of the state's Army, Air Force, Navy or Marine Corps installations may be eligible to obtain HOPE scholarships.

The HOPE Scholarship Program is the state of Georgia's scholarship program that provides financial assistance for degree, diploma or certificate programs at eligible public or private colleges, universities or technical institutes.

The HOPE scholarships or grants at public colleges or technical institutes cover the cost of tuitions, mandatory fees and $100 per quarter book allowances. At private schools, the scholarship provides up to $3,000 in tuition assistance per academic year.

To be eligible for financial assistance through the HOPE program, a student must be classified as a legal Georgia resident and a graduate of a Georgia high school. However, exceptions have been made for military personnel and their families.

Dependents of military personnel stationed outside the state but classified as legal residents of Georgia at the time of their graduation from out-of-state high schools may receive HOPE scholarships in degree programs if they have a 3.0 cumulative grade point averages meeting the college preparatory curriculum track, or meeting any curriculum track.

Dependents of military personnel who are not legal residents of Georgia but are stationed in Georgia may receive HOPE scholarships in degree producing programs if they graduate from Georgia high schools with 3.0 cumulative grade point averages meeting the college preparatory curriculum track, or 3.2 meeting any curriculum track and receive out-of-state tuition waivers from the Georgia University System, if attending public institutions.

Military personnel and their dependents attending public technical institutes in certificate or diploma programs may receive assistance, if they are classified as legal residents of Georgia. Nonresident military personnel and their dependents must physically live in the state of Georgia and be granted out-of-state tuition waivers by the institutes.

For more information, call (770) 414-3085 or (800) 546-HOPE

(Editor's note: This article is from a Georgia Military Affairs Committee news release.)

Scholarships available for paying college tuition

U.S. Commission for Scholarship Assistance

A conservative estimate of college costs for a full-time student runs from $10,000 to $30,000; high-cost colleges can run from $40,000 to $100,000.

Most parents and students think scholarships are only for the students with excellent grades, low-income families or the athletically inclined.

A small example of the numerous scholarships available to students include: handicapped student scholarships, members of a church scholarships, scholarships for "C" students, veterans' children scholarships, scholarships for minorities and much, much more.

Though the majority of scholarships are from the federal government and are merit or need based, billions of dollars are available to students from private sector scholarships. Much of private sector financial aid goes unused because the parents and students do not know how or where to apply for it.

There are organizations that have spent hundreds of hours in research locating scholarship sources.

The U.S. Commission for Scholastic Assistance — College Bound is such an organization and supplies the public with more than 700 different private scholarships sources. The scholarship list includes the scholarship names, addresses, application deadlines, summaries about the scholarships and the amount the scholarship will pay each child.

Many scholarships pay the entire tuition; others can be applied towards tuition, living expenses, or other fees. Most scholarships can be used at junior colleges, career and vocational schools, four-year colleges, graduate schools, medical and law schools.

For information on obtaining these scholarship lists, send a self-addressed, stamped, business-sized envelope to: The U.S. Commission for Scholastic Assistance, P.O. Box 668, O'Fallon, Ill. 62269.

Office of the Staff Judge Advocate

Q: My spouse and I are considering buying a house. We don't know yet if it will be a new home or one previously owned. Is there anything from a legal standpoint we need to be watching out for?

A: First and foremost, if and when you find the house you want to buy or build, make sure that you enter into a written contract with the seller that contains all of the promises of the parties. In Georgia, as in most states, a contract dealing with real estate must be in writing to be enforceable.

Second, make sure the contract contains all of the promises. If it's a previously owned home and the seller is allowing you to keep appliances (like a refrigerator), light fixtures (like a dining room chandelier) or window treatments (like blinds or curtains), it should be in the contract. These items are not normally considered to be part of the house.

If it's a home you're having built, make sure that the contract contains all of the specifications of the new construction. For example, the type and amount of insulation to be installed, the number of light fixtures and electrical outlets, the grade of appliances, carpet and the like to be installed, all should be specified.

Many times in new construction, the builder will give you an allowance or an amount of money allowed out of the purchase price that will be used to buy appliances, light fixtures, carpet and the like. This should be spelled out in the written contract.

Third, make sure you allow yourself a way of getting out of the contract if certain events do not occur. For example, most real estate contracts are contingent on the buyer being able to get a mortgage to buy the house. These provisions usually state the buyer will not be required to go through with the sale unless he or she can get a mortgage of a specified amount, at a specified minimum interest rate with a minimum amount of discount points.

As a result, if, after giving it your best shot, you don't succeed in getting a mortgage, you get to walk away from the contract with your earnest money.

Sometimes, the contract will contain a privilege of having the home thoroughly inspected (this is very important with previously owned homes) and allow the buyer to have the option of insisting the seller pay for the necessary repairs or the buyer be allowed to walk away from the deal.

If this is your first time buying a home, you should definitely consider letting an attorney look at the contract before you sign it. Even if it is not your first time, an attorney review is a good idea.

Remember, a home is a substantial investment of money, energy and emotion. With so much at stake, you should be cautious.

You can contact the Legal Assistance Division at 545-3281 for an appointment with an attorney to help you with a real estate contract.

BBB offers tips on prepaid phone cards

Better Business Bureau

The use of prepaid phone cards is a growing trend in the United States, according to the U.S. Telecard Association. If you do not have a phone or if you are a traveler who expects to make brief long-distance calls on the road, the prepaid phone card may be useful and valuable.

Most prepaid phone cards have toll-free numbers and personal identification codes that, when dialed, start a meter running on a telephone network computer somewhere. The cards are usually countable in $5, $10 and $20 denominations. But be careful of hidden gimmicks that could increase the cost for unwary consumers. Make certain the card you purchase indicates how much calling time it provides.

There are two types of cards: disposable (known as the "talk and toss" card) and those that can be "recharged," usually over the phone and billed to your credit card. Often times, the package will tell you nothing about the number of minutes you are buying, but sometimes it will state a number of "units" (typically the same as minutes).

If you plan to use the card, the Better Business Bureau of West Georgia, Southwest Georgia and East Alabama suggests you try to locate the issuer. The issuer's name and the name of the carrier should be posted on the package, in the store or on the vending machine. If there is no name, it's probably not a card you want to use.

Ask about the cost per minute. Also ask if the rates are the same across the country. If you plan to call abroad, ask if the card allows that and if so, what the rate is.

Find out if there is an activation fee. Although this is not common, some issuers require a one-time fee of $10 or more for rechargeable cards.

Ask when the meter starts running on a call. Some cards begin counting only when the party you are calling answers. Others begin counting when you start dialing.

Finally, if the carrier is a company you've never heard of, buy a small denomination card first to see if you like the service.

If you think you've been defrauded, check with your state utility regulators and your Better Business Bureau. You might also want to call the U.S. Telecard Association at (800) 333-3513 to report a problem.

Each year, Americans generate millions of tons of trash in the form of wrappings, bottles, boxes, cans, grass clippings, furniture, clothing, phone books and much more.

Over the years, we have gotten used to "throwing it away," so it's easy to understand why now there's too much trash and not enough acceptable places to put it.

In America over the last 30 years, durable goods (tires, appliances, furniture) and nondurable goods (paper, certain disposable products, clothing) in the solid waste stream have nearly tripled. These now account for about 75 million tons of garbage per year.

At the same time, container and packaging waste rose to almost 57 million tons per year, making packaging the number one component of the nation's waste stream. Container and packaging material includes glass, aluminum, plastics, steel and other metals and paper and paperboard.

Yard trimmings such as grass clippings and tree limbs are also a substantial part of what we throw away.

In addition, many relatively small components of the national solid waste stream add up to millions of tons. For example, every one percent of the nation's waste stream amounts to almost two million tons of trash each year.

As a nation, we are starting to realize that we can't solve the solid waste problem just by finding new places to put trash. Across the country, many individuals, communities and businesses have found creative ways to reduce and better manage their trash through a coordinated mix of practices that includes source reduction programs.

Simply put, source reduction is waste prevention. It includes many actions that reduce the overall amount or toxicity of waste created. Source reduction can conserve resources, reduce pollution and help cut waste disposal and handling costs (it avoids the costs of recycling, composting and landfilling).

Source reduction is a basic solution to the garbage glut: less waste means less of a waste problem. Because source reduction actually prevents the generation of waste in the first place, it comes before other management options that deal with trash after it is already generated.

After source reduction, recycling and composting are the preferred waste management options because they reduce the amount of waste going to landfills and conserve resources.

Fort Benning began taking all trash to a site off the installation Sunday. For more information on how you can help the installation reduce its waste stream, call Walter Nichols at 545-1007.
