Best large Army installation in the United States

MPs guard entrances to ensure post security

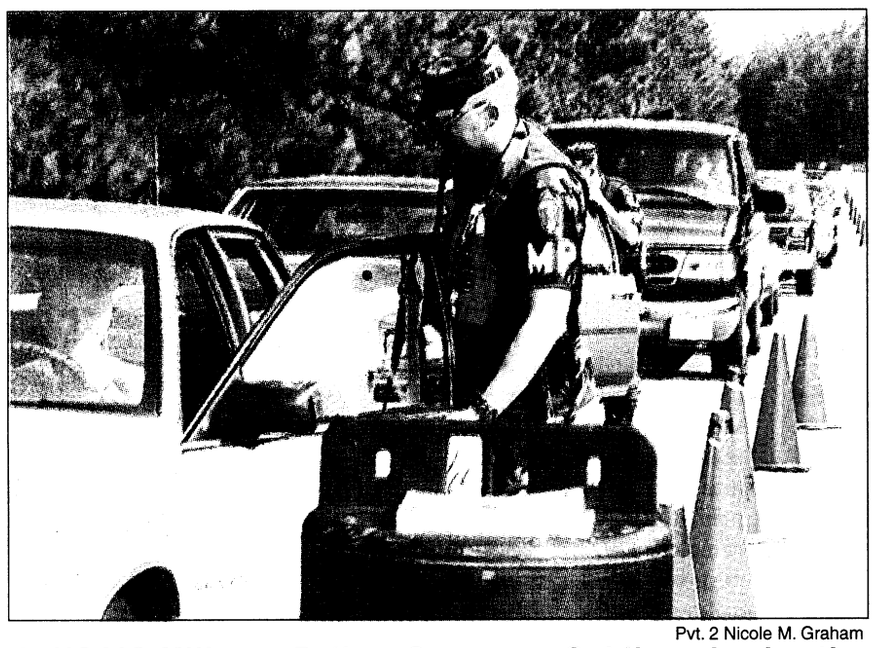
Pvt. 2 Nicole M. Graham
Bayonet staff writer

With a total of 11 checkpoints throughout the post, the joint efforts of the 988th Military Police Company and the U.S. Army Infantry Center (USAIC) Military Police Company keep the entrances to Fort Benning manned around the clock due to the Force Protection Plan that was recently implemented.

Six MPs are posted on the I-185 checkpoint at all times. The north end of Custer Road uses four MPs and the less traveled checkpoints have two MPs running checks.

The Sand Hill entrances all have posted checkpoints and the Torch Hill Road entrance has been permanently closed off.

Since the checkpoints have been initiated, the 988th MP Co., whose normal day-to-day missions include training, equipment maintenance and support, have ceased training. The company has sent 62 MPs to man all but the I-185 entrance.



The MPs from USAIC MP Co. guard the I-185 checkpoint in addition to conducting their normal community patrols, according to Master Sgt. John O'Hara, NCOIC for the Law Enforcement Division.

The Soldiers pull 12-hour shifts, and work an average of five days for every day off.

During the shifts, the MPs maintain a constant break rotation and have a sufficient supply of water on hand.

"We are MPs, so we are used to pulling 12-hour shifts," said Pfc. Amber Trevail, USAIC MP Co.

"The difficult part is standing in the sun for 12 hours, but it must be done to keep the post safe," she continued.

Pvt. 2 Nicole M. Graham

A USAIC Military Police Company Soldier checks the identification of a driver at the I-185 entrance to post Monday.

During each shift, the MPs look for vehicles with decals properly affixed to the windshield (top center of the windshield).

According to O'Hara, the MPs have had to confiscate decals that were affixed to three-by-five cards.

Decals must be affixed to the top center of the windshield. If the decal is confiscated, drivers must reregister their vehicle on post, he said.

The MPs also check for drivers license, military ID and the destination of civilians entering post.

The MPs encountered many vehicle violations since the checkpoints were initiated.

"We have been coming across vehicles with burned out lights, expired plates, drivers with no insurance, decals and persons driving under the influence of alcohol," Trevail said.

"Drivers must come through the checkpoints so, they can not get away with violations anymore," Trevail said.

The increased security measures seems to have increased compliance with post regulations. More than 2,000 cars have been registered on post since the Force Protection Plan was initiated.

"We see almost 1,000 cars within an hour during the morning," Trevail said. "Almost all of these cars have decals now."

"The plan ensures the public that the MPs are aware of outside traffic entering the post and acts as a deterrent for those who have no reason to be on the installation," Trevail said.

Contents of all commercial and rental trucks are searched and the contents are checked against the drivers shipping log.

"We are looking for anything out of the ordinary or anything not on the driver's log," said Sgt. Rose Hunt, 988th MP Co.

Although it may delay some drivers, the MPs say most of the people entering post are cooperative.

"If the checks are necessary, it is fine with me," said James E. Jackson, commercial driver. "I do not mind the delay when I come through every Monday."

The MPs also received support from local businesses who donated various items due to the hot and humid weather conditions.

Area vendors such as RC Cola, Sam's Club, Frito Lay, AAFES, Buffalo Rock, Tom's Snacks, Mid-State Distributors, Post Exchange Class Six, Vanderberg and Swift and Eckridge have donated everything from snacks to sodas.

According to O'Hara, the MPs have not been informed of when there may be an end to the increased security measures that have been initiated.

Memorial president speaks during equality luncheon

"A Story of Past Voices and Future Journey" was the theme of the annual Women's Equality Day luncheon held at the Officer's Club, Aug. 26.

Guest speaker Brig. Gen. Wilma L. Vaught, a retired Air Force officer and President of the Women in Military Service for America Memorial Foundation, spoke to 150 luncheon guest about women of the past and how their contributions impact women today.

"Vaught was chosen to speak at the luncheon because of her personal efforts to gain recognition for women in the military and the contributions of women in the service of their country," said Master Sgt. Jose Morales, NCOIC of the Equal Opportunity Office.

Vaught spoke about the 100-year anniversary of the Spanish-American War and the significance of the war to women in the services.

"During the war, the Army found it could not get enough nurses to take care of the sick and wounded. They went to the American Red Cross and hired 1,500 contract nurses and as a result, the Army Nurse Corps was established in 1901," Vaught said.

Vaught talked about the trials of great heroes such as Susan B. Anthony and her life-long fight for women's suffrage.

"Anthony spent 54 years of her life working on this issue and would not live to see the realization of her dream," Vaught said. "She was a woman of her word and a woman of great courage. We owe these pioneers a tremendous debt."

Today, Vaught travels around the country talking about her first love, The Women in Military Service Memorial located at the main gateway to Arlington National Cemetery.

"We have built a memorial that would tell the story of women in the services," Vaught said. "What we have tried to do is give something back to women like Susan B. Anthony who never had the opportunity to be proud of her accomplishments."

Memorial honors servicewomen

Michele E. Hanson
Special to the Bayonet©

The Women in Military Service for America Memorial (WIMSA) is the nations first major national memorial honoring all servicewomen of the past, present and future. The memorial is located at the main gateway to Arlington National Cemetery in Washington, D.C. The memorial was dedicated October 18, 1997 and honors the service of America's women in defense of the nation from the American Revolution to the present.

To date, only 250,000 of the 1.8 million women who have served in the military are registered at the memorial. According to the Women in Memorial Service for America Foundation (WIMSAF), in order for the memorial to tell the full and complete story of women's outstanding military service, more women must register.

The WIMSAF is seeking names, addresses, photos and memorable experiences of women who served to be included in the memorial's register. The register is an interactive computerized database available at the memorial. Descendants, families and friends of women who served, and all present, active duty servicewomen (Guard and Reserves) are encouraged to register with the foundation. The experiences of women today are of particular interest.

"My most gratifying achievement unquestionably is being a part of the memorial project. This type of opportunity are few and far between," said Brig. Gen. (Retired) Wilma Vaught, President of the WIMSAF. "It was great to be a part of honoring women in service of the past, present and future."

Total cost to build the Memorial was $21.5 million. The foundation has paid the bulk of construction costs and continues fundraising efforts to pay the balance.

Registration of servicewomen and donations can be sent to: Women in Military Service Memorial, Dept. 560, Washington, D.C. 20042-0560 or for more information call (800) 472-5883 or visit the Web site: http://www.wimsa.org/pub/wisma.

More than 100 Soldiers from the 608th Ordnance Company, 13th Corps Support Battalion, and four U.S. Army Reserve and National Guard Units are scheduled to return from duty in Hungary and Bosnia at 8:30 a.m. Tuesday.

3rd Brigade Soldiers take to field for annual exercise

Pfc. Amy L. Nyland
Bayonet staff writer

More than 3,700 Soldiers from the 3rd Brigade headed for the field to conduct Marne Focus, a training exercise that began Tuesday and is scheduled to end Sept. 18.

According to Capt. Nathan Haas, 3rd Brigade adjutant, Marne Focus is an annual event that emphasizes armored and mechanized training at company team levels.

Haas said 11 company teams which consist of 14 combat vehicles and around 100 Soldiers each comprise the exercise.

Over the next three weeks the teams will engage in a variety of combat scenarios which are called lanes. Teams will rotate through six lanes which consist of an assembly area lane, fire coordination exercise, deliberate attack, movement to contact, defense and a humanitarian assistance lane.

Haas said there is also task force and brigade level assistance, but emphasis will remain on company operations.

"The way this (Marne Focus) fits into our sequence of training is we start off with Hammer Focus which concentrates on platoon level operations," Haas said. "Marne Focus is just a step up. We concentrate on company level operations and also include task force operations," Haas said.

Haas said Marne Focus serves two important purposes — to get Soldiers ready for further training at the National Training Center in Fort Irwin Ca., and to prepare them for possible deployment.

"The 3rd Brigade is part of the of the 18th Airborne Corps," Haas said. "We are the only mechanized heavy force in the 18th Airborne. This is significant because if there is some kind of instant reaction conflict and they need ground forces, we could be among the first to go. This exercise just gives us some of the experience we need."

According to Sgt. Maj. William Grant, brigade operations sergeant major, Marne Focus is a vital opportunity for Soldiers to train at all different levels and fine tune their individual skills.

"Besides putting together the collective tasks they have learned, this exercise helps hone all of their skills to create a more confident and competent Soldier," Grant said.

One of the Soldiers participating in the exercise Sgt. Arron Cook, Company D, 1st Battalion, 15th Infantry Regiment, said the exercise benefits not only him but all of the Soldiers because it provides an opportunity for everyone to work together.

He said it gives them the chance to coordinate vehicle movement and engagement techniques with other units.

"This is a great opportunity for us because it teaches us how to coordinate with people we may not be used to working with," Cook said. "We also have a lot of new people and this just helps them come on board."

Cook said the next three weeks will entail a lot of hard work , but it will also be a good time.

"You get an adrenaline rush when you get down range and actually get to engage the enemy," Cook said. "I'm looking forward to getting out there and kicking the enemy's tail."

MPs man vehicle checkpoints despite heat, impatient people

Sgt. Michelle J. Davis
Bayonet assistant editor

commentary

Things always happen for a reason. At least, that's how I look at most of the challenges God has thrown my way (although I've still got a bone to pick with him about my ex-husband).

Anyway, this notion can be true for all of life's trivial matters from the big decisions like joining the Army to the small choices such as what route to take home or restaurant to patronize.

This philosophy has also helped me deal with certain things the Army does which at first appear not to make any sense. (I'm sure we all could come up with a few examples of this.)

While browsing through the Main Post Exchange one day last week, I overheard two shoppers talk of how it took them an extra 10 minutes to get onto post that morning.

"I don't know why they're out there," one said referring to checkpoints on post. "It's not like they're doing anything, but holding up traffic."

Not that I normally easedrop (OK, but only when it's juicy), but I froze in my tracks curious to hear the other's reaction. Well, they must have known they were being watched because the one twirled around to find me giving her my normal 'deer in the headlights' look and moved to another aisle.

I just stood there for a second and tried to come up with the reasons why the Military Police would disrupt the flow of traffic as they have these past few weeks.

Somehow, I don't think the MPs would willingly stand outside in the hot sun all day for no reason. I'm sure they enjoy sweating profusely and soaking up those ultraviolet rays, but think of all the cranky, impatient people they must deal with.

I have to give the MPs a lot of credit. These past two weeks, I swear I've driven onto post more than a gazillion times, yet I've never seen any of them act rude or abusive towards the passing motorists. I don't know, but I sure would've been tempted to say a few choice words the first time someone gave me a dirty look, honked their horn or blinded me with their brights.

Although I may get a little antsy when I see the cars start to line up before me, I never let the checkpoints bother me. In the past, I've only been stationed on military installations where you must pass through some sort of gate to enter, so dealing with the rush-hour jam is nothing new.

Besides, if the MPs' presence hinders anyone who has no business on post from entering, I'm all for it. Whether they're out there looking for some wannabe terrorists, burglars or out-right creepoids, I can say that I have felt a lot safer since the checks began.

Although we may want to appear to be the same as the next town, military communities will always be unique because of the special mission they serve. And it's nice to know that if our protection plan ever called for the MPs to completely seal off the entrances to post, we know that they are capable and ready to take on anything thrown at them as they have proved these past weeks.

Grass isn't always greener on other side

Michele E. Hanson
Special to the Bayonet©

commentary

I recently heard a group of young Soldiers speaking on the topic of life in the Army. Well, at one time or another we all seem to think the "grass is greener on the other side," but is it?

I had similar thoughts of an ideal job 16 years ago while crouched in a foxhole during a field training exercise at Ft. Bragg, N.C. Although I loved jumping from airplanes, being in an airborne combat support unit was not all I thought it would be. I never imagined waking at 5:30 a.m. for physical training (whether I felt like it or not), scrubbing stairwells with tooth brushes and living in barracks that were as sterile as a hospital and open to inspections at any time. We could be locked-in on weekends because a Soldier forgot to square away his wall locker.

When I became a civilian at the mature age of 22, I began to search for a job that would offer more than an Army career. To my surprise, there were few jobs that would pay more than minimum wage, work less hours, or give any time off when needed.

There were no 30-day vacations (annually or ever for that matter), no federal holidays observed, no life insurance, no health insurance and definitely no retirement!

I finally decided to attend college and get a four-year degree. After six years, I became a college graduate and entered the rat race of finding a good job.

My extensive job search landed my first "real" job (which, by the way, had nothing to do with my degree). I became a retail manager of a $10 million store in a $4.5 billion company. After a long journey, I had finally made it!

Over the next three years, I worked between 70 and 110 hours per week. My salary averaged out to be less then minimum wage per hour. I worked six days a week with no guarantees of a day off. Sometimes weeks would go by with no time off.

The hours were long and physically demanding, with an extremely high stress index. There were more standard operating procedures to follow, inspections, and deadlines I never imagined. Evaluations were not based on performance, but on opinion.

After two years of employment, I earned my first two weeks of vacation and it had to be taken during an off-season time. Yeah, vacation in February when my kids and husband could not go anywhere. Personal days, sick days and all holidays were seldom and far between.

After all this, I realized that the Army was not a bad place to be at all. In fact, it was and is still a great place to be. It may not be extravagant, but a living with full benefits, pay increases and opportunities that extend far beyond most careers. Promotion is earned and evaluated on performance and accomplishment. Since my departure from the Army 14 years ago, there have been many changes to improve the quality of life for Soldiers, making it an even better place to be.

The Army taught me about integrity, hard work, perseverance, teamwork, loyalty, pride and honor as a young adult. These principles have stayed with me and have helped me become a dedicated mother, supportive military spouse and better person. Of course, everything in life has its ups and downs, however, I now know that it is the attitude one possesses that makes a successful life, not the job, place or situation you happen to be in.

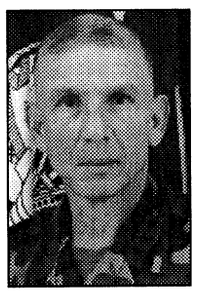
Community rallies behind man in need of liver

My son, Mike Tillis, needs a liver transplant. His family and friends are fund-raising in order to raise the necessary money to get him on a transplant list. Emory University Hospital in Atlanta requires a deposit of $180,000 for the surgery. However, after we have $100,000 on deposit, they will put him on the transplant list. This sounds like an impossible task, but we believe that we can do it, with the help of Columbus.

Fund raisers are essential in order to raise such a large amount of money and contributions of any amount help tremendously.



Contributions are tax deductible and can be mailed to: Columbus Liver Transplant Fund, 534 Southern Pines Drive, Columbus, GA 31907 (write "in honor of Mike Tillis" in the memo section).

Or they can be mailed directly to our national fund; Columbus Liver Transplant Fund and National Transplant Assistance Fund, 6 Bryn Mawr Ave., Bryn Mawr, Pa. 19010 (honor of Mike Tillis in memo section).

You are welcome to call them at (800) 642-8399 for verification of the fund and to ask any questions.

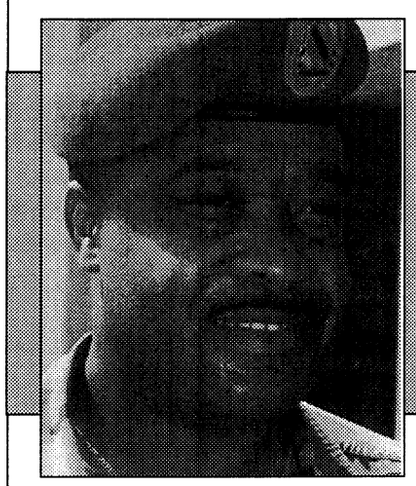
Labor Day brings Summer's end

Labor Day, our last holiday of the Summer; a national holiday; a signal that school is back in session; an end to the "Summer surge" in our courses here; etc.; etc. is now upon us.

Labor Day was set aside to recognize to the contribution and importance of the American worker — a Nation made great by an "idea," our Constitution; and the industry and productivity of her people. So it was, so it is, and so long as we adhere to the basic premise of our Constitution, so it will be.

Fort Benning continues to be a great place because of the pride and hard work of our Soldiers, civilian workers, involved family members, volunteers and retirees. A large team of teams working to a single end — to guarantee the greatness of America through a ready Army and to take care of all who call Fort Benning home in a manner which has become our hallmark — the best! To all on the team, and that's all of you ... Thanks!

I have scheduled today as a training holiday, giving us all a much-deserved four-day break. Please be safe. This year, four Soldiers have died in POV accidents. Please drive, boat, swim and play safely this weekend. Do enjoy your weekend and return safely.



We are the benchmark installation for the entire Defense Department. that is because of your hard work and teamwork. Thanks! Have a great Labor Day weekend.

Fabrication aids in training

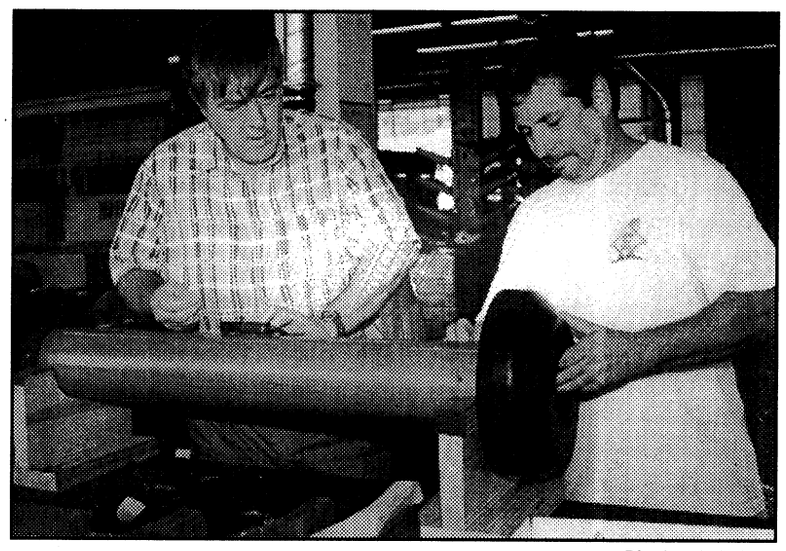
Pfc. Amy L. Nyland
Bayonet staff writer

Everyday on Fort Benning, Soldiers use some type of dummy device to carry out his or her mission. Even though these devices do not completely function as a real one would, they play a strategic role in the Soldiers training.

What most people probably do not know is that a small work force at the Device Fabrication Branch (DFB) under the Training Support Center on Fort Benning, is responsible for creating these devices and the illusions they present.

Headed by Lee Thomason, DFB supervisor, a group of seven people work daily to recreate the training devices, which includes everything from rifles and pistols to mines and missiles.

According to Thomason, by using wood, metal, plastic, foam and other combinations of materials, the DFB tries to create training devices that most closely resemble the real thing.



Thomason said the DFB has been tasked to create a slew of devices to be used not only by Fort Benning, but by other military installations and military services.

He said the DFB creates prototypes and devise plans to fulfill the specific requirements of a requested device.

"If there's a need out there, we try to meet it," Thomason said. Sometimes we can and sometimes we can't, it all depends on how extensive the project is."

Currently the DFB's biggest project is creating and developing dummy javelin missiles for the Army and the Marines.

The DFB was tasked by Red Stone Arsenal to create a prototype for the dummy javelinn missle. After Red Stone Arsenal approved the prototype, the DFB began producing the missiles.

The missiles are created as close as possible to the real missile by using plastic, foam and metals, and were developed to withstand heavy usage. The dummy missile can also be used repeatedly while the real ones are simply fired once.

The civilian contractor price of the missiles was approximately $11,000 per missile and the DFB was able to produce the missiles for around $3,000 each.

Thomason said the DFB has completed more than 500 missiles and is ready to ship 62 to the Marine Corps.

Another project the DFB is working on is a replication of the M-577 tank.

The DFB was once again able to beat out a civilian contractor by offering to produce nine simulated tanks for $75,000 rather than the quoted $300,000.

Even though the dummy tank does not operate as a real tank, it is constructed to resemble the M-577 and matches it in height, width and length. It is also much lighter than the original M-577.

Thomason said production on the individual devices varies depending on the specific project. The usual time to complete one dummy rifle is about one and a half hours each.

He added that the DFB just completed 100 rifles to be used by the 4th Ranger Training Battalion, 100 rifles for the Services Branch at Sand Hill and are currently working on another 100 rifles for the Infantry Training Brigade.

Thomason emphasized that the sole purpose of the DFB is to support the Soldiers and their training needs.

He said the DFB works to provide Soldiers with replicas that will most effectively enhance their training.

"Not only are dummy weapons a great way for a Soldier to get the feel of a device, they also save the Army a great deal of money," Thomason said. "If they break a plastic rifle, it is around $65 to replace, where as a real rifle cost more than $400."

Office tests new travel pay system

Rudi Williams
American Forces Press Service

DoD's new temporary duty travel pay system is faster than a speeding bullet and more gentle than a lamb compared to the old system, in the words of one enthusiastic agency budget officer.

DoD's POW and Missing Personnel Affairs Office was one of 29 organizations at 27 sites worldwide that recently tested DoD's re-engineered travel system.

Budget officer Angela M. Talaber praises that new system and believes most of her customers agree with her.

One such customer is office spokesman Larry Greer.

"I'm a customer who is old enough to remember the old system, where you had to type or press down on a seven-page claims voucher with a ball point pen," he said. I know what it was like standing in a long military pay line praying that someday, somebody would cut you a check.."

Greer said. "You need a system that's fast and easy to work to beat inbound credit card bills. This system beats it. You can get paid before your credit card bill comes."

Feedback from the 29 sites revealed a 65 percent decrease in administrative costs, a 31 percent decrease in payment cycle time and a 100 percent increase in customer satisfaction, according to Deputy Secretary of Defense John H. Hamre.

The team that rebuilt and streamlined DoD's $3 billion-per-year travel system introduced many private-sector business practices. The new system:

•Reduced complex travel regulations from 220 pages to 17.

•Simplified reimbursement regulations for meals and incidental expenses, and eliminated requirements for receipts for expenses less than $75, except for lodging.

•Established a travel card program to pay for most official business travel expenses — advances, lodging, transportation, rental cars, meals and other incidentals.

•Created one document to serve as the orders, itinerary, voucher and record of any changes.

Talaber said her office worked with the voucher claims part of the system, but not yet with the electronic travel order phase. She said she expects her management to approve the move soon.

"We'll cut costs and save time by using electronic orders instead of paper orders," she noted.

Talaber said. "I'd seen a couple of demonstrations of how the new system works. I knew it was something that worked well and management here said, 'OK, we'll try it.'

"So we went into the federal automated travel system in October 1996 as one of the test agencies," she continued.

"The first couple of vouchers were experiments. We got our feet wet with the little bitty baby vouchers, a couple of hundred dollars.

Then we realized, hey, they're actually being paid — fast!

"I've had folks who have filed a voucher at 7 a.m. and it was processed and paid the same day."

She said the only complaints about the new system have been from a few people who've had problems learning new computer software.

"Some of them say, 'I can't remember my password,'" Talaber said.

"I guess they perceive it as scary. You have to have a password to get into the system and a signature code password. If you don't use something daily, you can become afraid of it."

Vouchers are approved electronically and wired to the finance office at Bolling Air Force Base in Washington, where they're reviewed electronically. Then they're transmitted to the Defense Finance and Accounting Service center in Indianapolis for immediate payment, Talaber said.

"If finance pays the voucher in the afternoon, most times the money goes to the Federal Reserve Bank the next day," she said.

Within two days, the voucher is direct-deposited in the traveler's bank account. The traveler doesn't even have to go to the bank.

Under the new system, a DoD globetrotter's major currency is a government-contracted charge card.

Employees are expected to pay expenses with the card whenever possible and to use it in cash machines to draw pocket money when necessary.

On those occasions where there are no cash machine, the transaction is a simple electronic one.

"We send the paperwork electronically one day and the money is electronically posted in the traveler's checking account the next day," she said.

"Random audits are conducted on about 10 percent of vouchers over $2,500," Talaber said. "Those audited must provide receipts of expenses of $75 or more."

No matter where they send you, you'll never have to kiss us good-bye.

Researchers urge caution when using laser pointers

Wesley Marshall
Army News Service

Laser pointers have become affordable. Presentations seem more dynamic when key points can be identified with a flick of the wrist. Some are red, some are green in color.

But many are showing up in other places, such as children's playgrounds, sporting events, dances and dinner parties.

Printed on lasers, in letters small enough that a hand magnifier is needed, a warning states that these devices should not be pointed at the eyes of others. In even smaller letters, the label says that these are Class 3a devices. However, most people have no idea what that means, nor do they take the warning seriously.

Although there is little hazard from using these pointers as intended, laser pointers should not be used to annoy people. In the early days of laser safety, it was recommended that alignment lasers used in laser laboratories be less than one milliwatt. Handheld laser pointers generally now have an output power of four or five milliwatts.

In 1973, the American National Standard was first published on Laser Safety, ANSI Z136. Laser hazards were divided into classes, with Class 1 being the least hazardous. A limit of one milliwatt into the eye for an unintentional laser exposure (less than 0.25 second) was established as nonhazardous. Therefore, lasers with less than one milliwatt of output power were designated as hazard Class 2, since more than a momentary exposure would exceed the recommended exposure level.

This level was far in excess of previous guidance provided to U.S. Army personnel. Laboratory alignment lasers could therefore be used with few controls. Lasers that were found in excess of one milliwatt could be filtered to reduce the output below one milliwatt.

Shortly thereafter, laser use outdoors became popular in the construction industry. When visible lasers are used outdoors in bright sunlight, an output power of about five milliwatts was found necessary for clear visibility of the reflected energy. Most of the beams were large enough in diameter that no more than one milliwatt would actually enter a person's pupil.

Class 3, which was designated as an instantaneous direct beam hazard, was then split into two subcategories: Class 3a and Class 3b. The Food and Drug Product Performance Standard (21 CFR 1040) specifies that for exposure duration in excess of 0.38 milliseconds, the Class 3a limit for visible lasers is 5 milliwatts. However, it takes more than 150 milliseconds for an individual to react to a bright light. Although the recommended exposure level would be exceeded, it is unlikely that a person would receive permanent eye injury from a momentary exposure to a pointer.

Therefore, visible lasers less than five milliwatts are designated as Class 3a and are exempt from most of the more stringent safety requirements, except for a "Danger" warning label. A "Danger" warning label is supposed to elicit a more serious response than the "Caution" label required for Class 2 lasers.

One common outdoor use of laser pointers is laser sights for weapons. The exact aiming point may be verified by observing the position of a laser spot on a target before the trigger is fired on the actual weapon. Law enforcement officers often use these pointers to aim weapons.

The visibility of the laser spot also deters criminals from further action since they know that a bullet could hit the same place as the spot at any time. Since this use of laser-aiming devices can strike terror in the hearts of criminals, it can be considered assault for individuals to shine a laser on a law officer or other adult.

Laser pointers are more compact today than they were just a few short years ago. The new laser pointers use a laser diode to produce the laser light rather than bulky glass tubes and high-voltage transformers. The early diode pointers produced a wavelength (670 nanometers) that is much less visible than the older helium-neon lasers (633 nanometers) produced in the early 1970's.

Laser pointers can be used safely. They should not be taken to sporting events or pulled out during a dinner party. Shining a laser pointer at a vehicle at night could cause an accident due to visual interference. Laser pointers should not be given to children for game playing. They were never intended as toys. Unlike some recommendations on the Internet, lasers should not be used for pranks.

Hall visits public affairs Advanced NCO Course

Sgt. 1st Class Keith D. Butler
Army News Service

The Army's top enlisted Soldier visited initial entry Soldiers and senior noncommissioned officers, training in phases of public affairs Aug. 25 to spotlight the Soldiers' important communications role.

Sergeant Major of the Army Robert E. Hall spent the morning meeting with junior enlisted Soldiers learning journalism and broadcasting at the Defense Information School. Afterward, he stopped by the Signal Corps Regimental NCO Academy Detachment for a small-group, sit-down with senior, public affairs NCOs who were midway through the second week of the Advanced NCO Course.

At ANCOC, the sergeants first class learn common leader skills, from combat orders and platoon tactical operations to marching and conducting physical training. The students study areas in the second phase of the six-week course, including public affairs strategy, preparing command spokespersons and media relations.

A highlight of the course, Hall's frank discussion with the students covered various areas, including drawdown, pay and the role of public affairs.

Public affairs NCOs must focus on being the conduit for bringing home the key messages and information on issues throughout the Army, the Sergeant Major of the Army said. In 10 months, Hall visited approximately 30,000 of the 480,000 Soldiers in the Army. In their roles as broadcast station managers, media relations specialists, command information chiefs, the Sergeant Major of the Army tasked the public affairs NCOs to help spread the word to others Hall hasn't visited yet.

Answering concerns about the change In the Noncommissioned Officer Structure program, the Sergeant Major of the Army detailed misconceptions of massive cuts. Under CINCOS, the NCO strength drops from about 50 percent of the force to pre-1990 figures of 47.5 percent, Hall said. Personnel officials and local commands lowered grades for about 4,600 NCO slots.

The Sergeant Major of the Army said, he'll continue to be the "enlisted voice" and advocate for Soldiers at the top of the Army leadership. Pay, entitlements, housing, retention and medical care will be issues he'll keep on the front burner.

He then turned the challenge — of getting information out — back to the sergeants first class. "Public affairs helps tell the message — to our Soldiers and the American people," Hall said.

ITB creates history with training

Pfc. Amy L. Nyland

Soldiers of Company D, 1st Battalion, 54th Infantry Regiment, Infantry Training Brigade, are tested on their ability to put on their NBC equipment during a field training exercise Tuesday.

It has been more than 30 years since Sand Hill has seen anyone other than an Infantryman walk through it's training doors. However, one battalion will have helped create a small piece of history as it graduates its sixth and last cycle of Soldiers from across the entire spectrum of military service.

This summer the 2nd Battalion, 54th Infantry Regiment, Infantry Training Brigade, was tasked to conduct Basic Combat Training (BCT) for Soldiers of all MOSs, including National Guard, Reserve and split-option Soldiers.

"I think our battalion has helped create a little bit of history," said Maj. Michael J. Webb, executive officer, 2nd Bn., 54th Inf. Regt. "This is the first time since '67 or '68 that Fort Benning has trained BCT Soldiers. Otherwise it has always just been Infantry training."

Webb said the reason Fort Benning conducted the BCT was to help other posts handle the "summer surge."

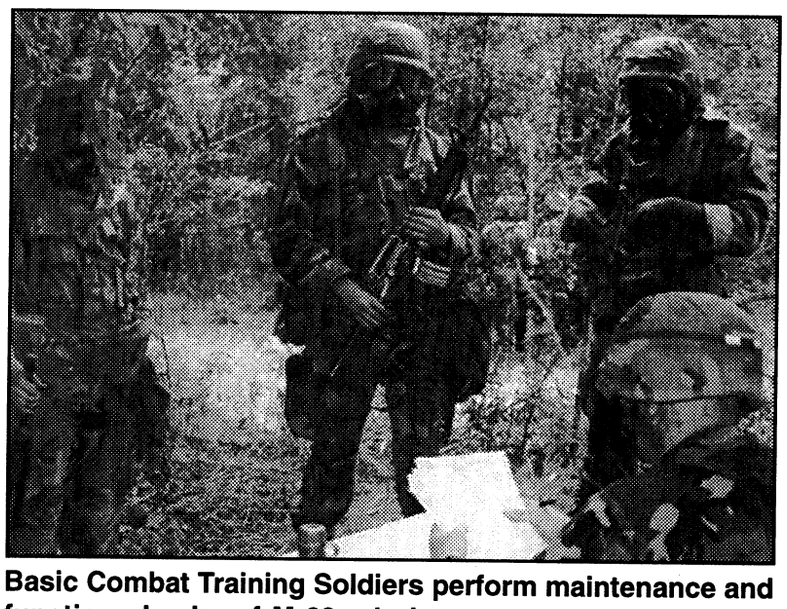
He said each summer there is an increase of Soldiers going through training because of graduation and the summer break.

"Fort Benning was asked to pick up the overflow from Fort Jackson and Fort Leonard Wood and that is the main reason for doing this," Webb said.

Receiving the news of the switch from One Station Unit Training (OSUT) to BCT in early May, the battalion began its first cycle May 22. Before the last class graduates Sept. 10, more than 1,200 Soldiers will have graduated from Sand Hill without the blue chord of an Infantryman.

Webb said the battalion adhered to the Program of Instruction (POI) for BCT. He said even though the POI for OSUT and BCT during the first eight weeks are fairly similar, there were still a few modifications in the training that had to be made.

He added that even with the adjustments in training the BCT Soldiers weren't treated any differently than an Infantryman.



"We didn't focus on the fact that these guys weren't Infantry Soldiers," Webb said. "Even with the slight modifications in training we still added that Infantry flavor and trained them just as hard."

Some of the additional training the Soldiers received included participating in the War Eagle Run, extended road marches, values training and rigorous physical training.

According to Battalion Commander Lt. Col. Joe Lowder, most of the Soldiers were initially apprehensive about training at an Infantry post. However, he said most took it upon themselves to overcome a challenge and came away motivated.

Staff Sgt. Heriberto Flores, drill sergeant with Company A, said most of the Soldiers seemed stunned that they were sent to an Infantry training post.

"In the beginning, a lot of them just had blind stares," Flores said. "Some of them asked why they had to be here if they weren't Infantry. By the time the eight weeks were over, a lot of them wanted change their MOS to Infantry."

Basic Combat Training Soldiers perform maintenance and function checks of M-60s during common task training. The Soldiers are among the first BCT Soldiers to be trained on Fort Benning in more than 30 years.

Lowder said most of the Soldiers seemed inspired and he accredits their motivation and success to the drill sergeants.

"Everything that the Soldiers accomplish just goes towards the quality of our drill sergeants," Lowder said.

Webb said that he feels the BCT Soldiers who graduate from Sand Hill will have a greater sense of accomplishment.

"Before the Soldiers graduate, we make reference to the fact that they have met the standards of an Infantrymen," Webb said. "I think they leave here with a great sense of pride knowing what they have accomplished."

Flores said that adjusting to the new training was a challenge, but well worth it when he watches his Soldiers graduate.

"The end product is always something you carry in your heart," Flores said. "Whether these Soldiers are Infantry or not you know you've done your job when they walk across the graduation field and family members can see the difference in their children."

IOBC students aid academy

2nd Lt. Frank Cho
Infantry Officer Basic Course

Soldiers from Company C, 2nd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment (IOBC), together with a group of civilians from the Phenix City and Columbus areas joined forces to clean and repair Faith Christian Academy Aug. 8.

The non-denominational Christian school, had acquired the facility from a local businessman earlier in the year, but required work before it would be ready for the first day of school Aug. 26.

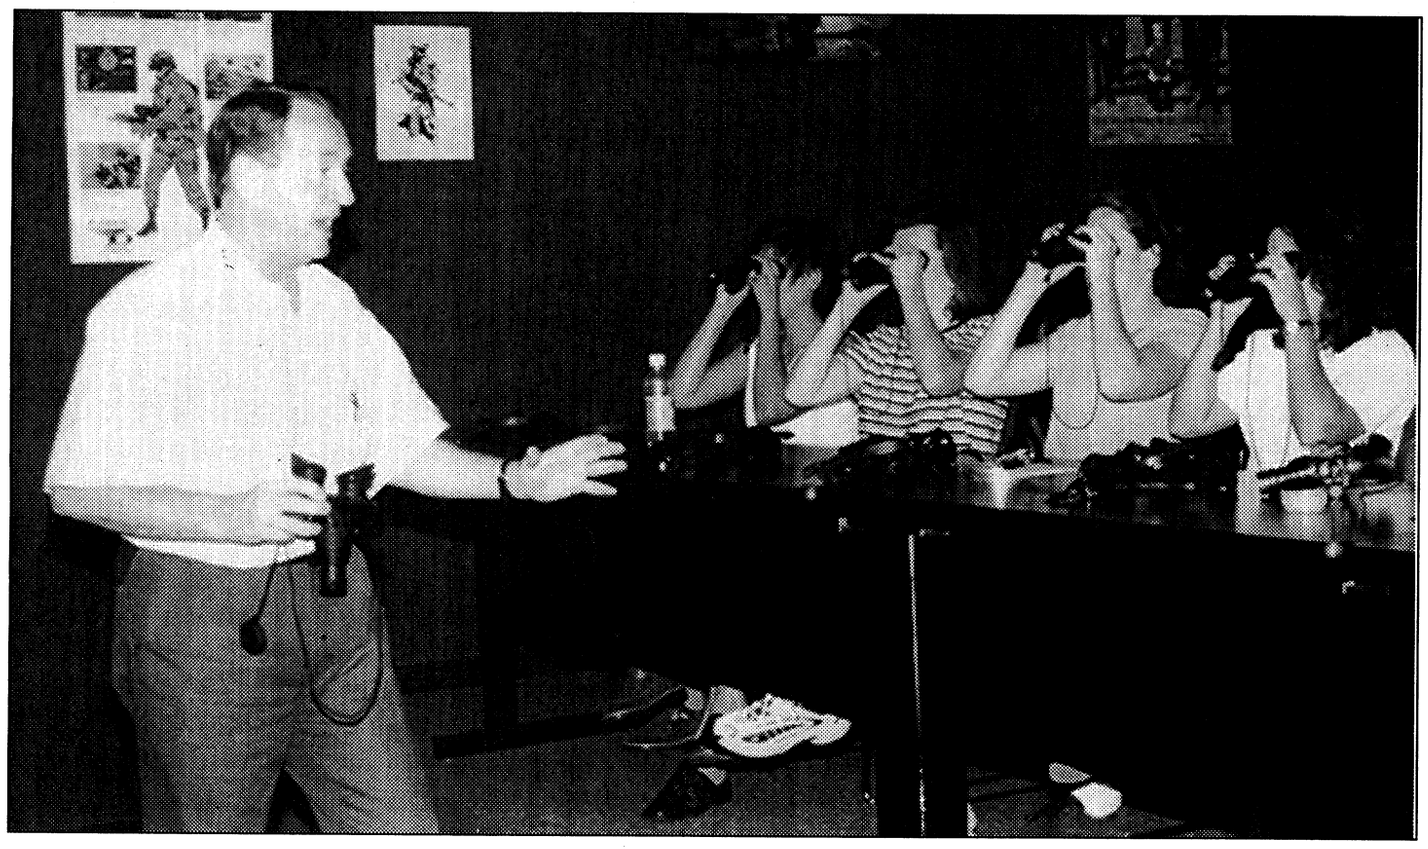
Soldiers began their work on the 15-acre campus, fixing overgrown bushes, rusting swing sets and mildewing walls.

With some 20 classrooms, a gymnasium and football field, the new campus is expected to attract about 130 students from K-12 for the upcoming school year, up from 45 students a year ago.

The problem that the school faced was there was not much money and even less help to get the campus ready for its first day of class.

Many of the Soldiers said they were not sure what they were getting into when they volunteered for the project, but that did not dampen their enthusiasm, according to 2nd Lt. Niall Donohue, community service representative for the company.

"Days off are few and far between when a student is in IOBC, but the turnout was great," said Donohue.



While the school supplied lunch and the tools, the Fort Benning Soldiers provided the time and enthusiasm.

"This was good for us to give something back to the community," said 2nd Lt. Jim Collier, project member.

A former enlisted Infantryman, Collier said working on a community project is a great way units can build teamwork among their Soldiers.

"I know how a lot of locals have felt about the military and it was not very positive," Dukes said. But community service projects like these go a long way toward raising the awareness of what the military can contribute to the community.

"I am sure that other community organizations could certainly benefit from programs like this," he continued.

After being trained with several models of night vision goggles, the women negotiated special "urban," "desert," "jungle" and "forest" test lanes while wearing the goggles. The wives took part in the class to experience what their husband's experience during night field missions.

Christie Cates, wife of 2Lt. Brandon Cates, said her husband encouraged her to take part in the mock training.

"Our husbands said it would be a neat thing to do," she said.

Military academy offers admission to Soldiers

Army Education Center

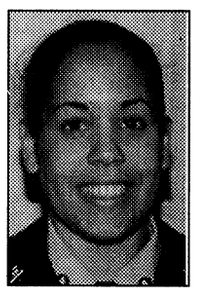
Each year, more than 200 regular Army Soldiers are offered admission to the U.S. Military Academy at West Point or the U.S. Military Academy Prepatory School at Fort Monmouth, NJ.

Although some Soldiers are offered direct admission to West Point, the majority attend the prepatory school. The prep school provides the appropriate academic, military and physical instruction to qualify.

The prep school curriculum prepares Soldiers for success at West Point through an intensive curriculum focused on both English and mathematics. Interested Soldiers must be U.S. citizens, unmarried, with no legal obligation to support dependents, a high school graduate, less than 23 years of age prior to July 1 of the year entering the Military Academy, be of high moral character and have a sincere interest in attending West Point and becoming an Army Officer.

Capt. Rob Young from the West Point admissions office will be at Fort Benning Sept. 23 to give an admissions brief to all Soldiers who are in the process of applying to the academies.

Soldiers should contact their chain of command for the time of the briefing to be held in Infantry Hall, Classroom 6.



All interested Soldiers are encouraged to attend regardless of high school academic performance.

This is a great opportunity for Soldiers who desire a first rate college education and officer's commission.

All application requirements must be met by Apr. 1, 1999 to be considered for an appointment to West Point or the prep school in July 1999.

Interested Soldiers should contact Young to request an application by telephone DSN 688-5780 or (914) 938-5780, or E-mail: tr9618@westpoint-emh2.army.mil.

I chose this MOS, because I would have the opportunity to experience different branches of the Army and train as they do.

Local employers to visit annual job fair

Army Career and Alumni Program

The Georgia Department of Labor, Veterans of Foreign Wars Post #665, The American Legion Post #35 and Disabled American Veterans Chapters 7 and 56 will sponsor the annual Job Fair from 9 a.m. to 1 p.m. Sept. 10.

More than 30 employers from the local area will discuss a wide range of job openings in the VFW Post #665 location on Victory Drive. The fair is open to any Soldier (active duty, retired or separated), civilian employees, family members and others interested in the job search.

"It is highly recommended that personnel in the ACAP process or nearing a separation point attend this event," said Debbie Henshaw, counselor at the Fort Benning ACAP Center.

"Many advantages can be gained by job seekers attending job fairs," said Chick Eagle, counselor at the Fort Benning ACAP Center.

The first advantage is the opportunity to gather information about a wide range of potential employers and potential civilian careers. By talking with recruiters from many companies and agencies, job seekers can compare their skill with the requirements of the positions available.

Second, the fair is an opportunity to practice interviewing skills. All attendees should look sharp in their duty uniform or appropriate civilian professional dress. Blue jeans and t–shirts are not professional.

Attendees should practice describing and selling their skills and experience when asked about their professional background. For those who have attended the ACAP job search workshop, review some of the interviewing material to better prepare.

Third, in regard to submission of resumes and the completion of applications, it is important to remember there will be opportunities to do that at the job fair. Copies of resumes are not mandatory for attendance, but will be helpful to give to selected employers or to help with completing job applications. It should also be remembered that resumes work best when targeted. It might be wiser to gather job specifics, company data, names and addresses of the points-of-contact and mail cover letters and targeted resumes after the fair.

Attendance at the job fair is one of the steps in the job search process. Soldiers gain confidence when they find employers interested in their skills, training and experience. The next step, follow-up action, becomes easier from a position of confidence. Many separating Soldiers have found excellent jobs with companies they first met at a job fair.

For more information about the job fair and job strategies, contact the ACAP Center at 545-2308 or 545-2309.

USARSA graduates 18 from operations course

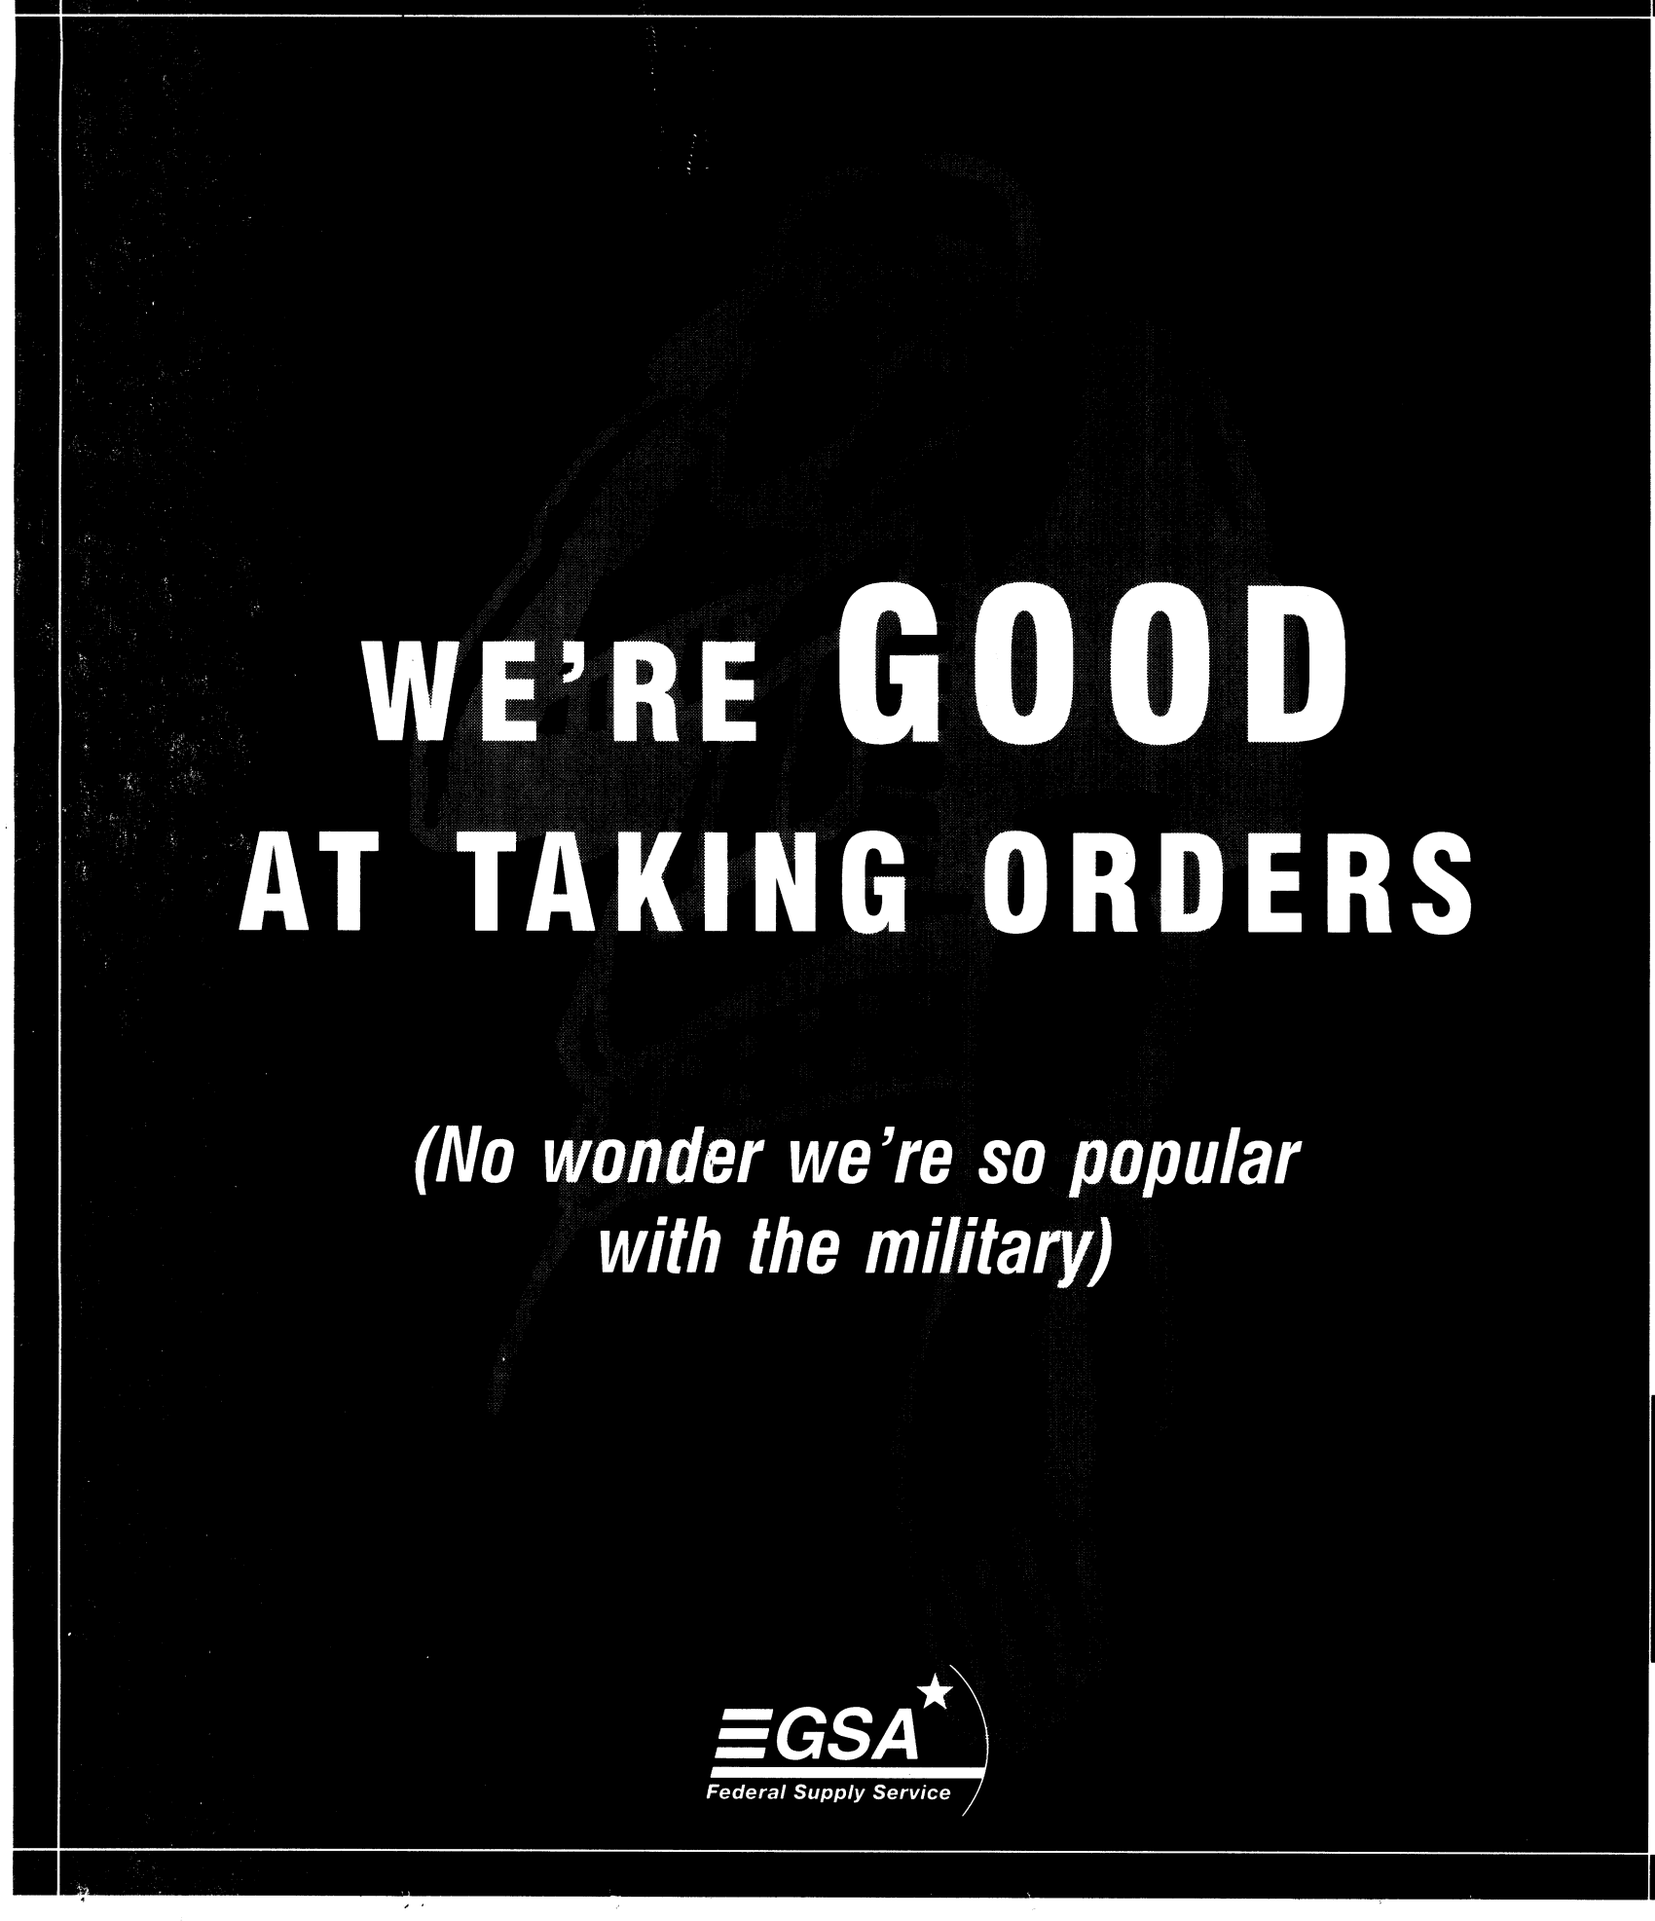
Sgt. Alberto Betancourt
U.S. Army School of the Americas

Representing eight different countries, 18 students graduated from the U.S. Army School of the Americas' Civil Military Operations Course at Pratt Hall inside Ridgeway Hall, Aug. 19.

The guest speaker for the ceremony was Brig. Gen. Michael W. Beasley, commander of the 350th Civil Affairs Command (Provisional) from Pensacola, Fla.

"In the breadth, intensity and relevance of our civil-military work, the America's are leading the world in expanding civil-military doctrine and accomplishments into the 21st Century," he said. "Every year, we are breaking new ground in exploring the opportunities for optimizing our services in critical areas of our nation's national security, prosperity and freedom under the governing principles of democracy and human rights."

During the five-week course, the students from Bolivia, Colombia, Costa Rica, El Salvador, Paraguay, Peru, Dominican Republic and Uruguay, were introduced to U.S. foreign policy initiatives and U.S. Army training strategies. The students also trained in planning and executing disaster relief programs, civic action planning with civilian counterparts and human rights issues which affect military operations.



"We need to do more bilateral and regional exercises along lines of Fuerzas Aliadas in Central and South America, to be more sophisticated with international organizations, non-governmental organizations and each other," Beasley said. "That is our primary challenge for the future and I will tackle that challenge with you."

Schools implement new literacy program

Fort Benning students began another school year last week, and they also started a new language arts program called Literacy Place by Scholastic Network.

Teachers participated in workshops Aug. 19 and 20 for an introduction to Literacy Place and a general overview. The workshops were held at Stowers and were presented by Kathy Einhorn, director of curriculum and Debbie McDonald, a representative from Scholastic.

A Principal's Breakfast on Aug. 19 was followed by a general overview of Literacy Place for teachers, and then an overview for principals for grades one and two in the afternoon.

During the overview, Einhorn talked about how the language arts committee met for two days and previewed the materials and were excited about them.

An overview for principals for grades kindegarten and thrird through six th grade was held through Aug. 20.

Einhorn also talked about Terra Nova testing and how the reading and writing test results were an eye opener.

"We believe all children can learn — we go in expecting there is some spot of genius in there," Einhorn said.

Einhorn went on to explain that throughout every unit in Literacy Place, there are ideas for teachers and tools to help them.

McDonald spoke, and told the teachers how 9 out of 10 classrooms in the U.S. and abroad use Scholastic.

"Literacy Place is filled with books, videos, music, art, and child and adult writing," she said. "A Literacy Place school is a museum, a publishing house, a computer lab, etc."

Stowers Principal Glenn Hughes had the chance to speak to teachers throughout Aug. 19 and 20, and heard "how elated they are about the many possibilities this new series will afford them as classroom teachers. Classroom teachers, special education teachers, Art, Music, Physical Education, everyone is excited about the new language arts materials.

"The professional training today challenges and encourages each teacher," Hughes explained. "The materials are excellent, modern and current to today's teaching demands. The series is designed to present information and lessons which deal with science, mathematics and social studies in addition to lessons which are currently balanced."

That exact sentiment was echoed by Wilson first-grade teacher Kim Crowell.

"We use Literacy Place every day, and it takes a large block of time, because it integrates all language arts areas — spelling, listening, speaking and phonics."

The core materials of Literacy Place include student anthologies, teacher's editions, mentor videos, workshops and projects and technology.

"The kids love it," Crowell said. "The activities are real enjoyable. They're excited about the books — it's real engaging to the students."

Darlene Warden, a Stowers fifth-grade teacher said, "Utilizing the materials in this program will enable our students to become more proficient readers and writers. Personally, I am excited about the new materials and the many teaching strategies that are incorporated in the program."

FSG helps maintain legacy of WWII Rangers

The WWII Ranger Memorial, located at Sacrifice Field on Baltzell Ave. across from the National Infantry Museum, bares the names of every fallen comrade from the six ranger battalions during WWII.

Last spring, James Alteieri, general chairman of the WWII Remembrance Society, contacted the 75th Ranger Regiment with a proposal that would keep the WWII Memorial well maintained.

The 75th Ranger Regiment family support group (FSG) accepted his maintenance proposal and as a result, a unique fundraiser was born.

Every Saturday morning, rain or shine, members of the 75th Regiment FSG gather at the memorial to complete their maintenance mission. Armed with hoses, weed eaters, lawn mowers, scrub brushes and trash bags, the team works diligently to beautify the monument. The FSG team works several hours cleaning the granite monument, mowing, weeding and watering. Periodically, bigger projects are required such as, installing new edging or adding new flowers and mulch.

"We take great pride in doing something special for WWII Rangers," said Anne McChrystal, FSG leader for the 75th Ranger Regiment. "Responsibilities for maintaining the memorial are assigned to different sections of the FSG each week. This fundraiser is a lot of fun and has become a family event."

"Although the Ranger Memorial represents all rangers ... past, present and future, the WWII Ranger monument is very personal for the WWII Rangers. There is a real connection between the members of the Ranger Infantry Battalion Association and the FSG wives because of the personal care they have taken with the monument," said Maj. Buck James, 75th Ranger Regiment public affairs officer.

Summer reading program enriches, entertains children

Sgt. Alberto Bentancourt
U.S. Army School of the Americas

From Pocahontas to Kikiriki, Fort Benning children enriched themselves in literature and film during the John B. Amos Children's Summer Program sponsored by the U.S. Army School of the Americas.

"This program not only entertained us with good films and books, it also helped us learn English," said Gracia Maria Silva, a 15-year old Salvadoran student who not only participated in the program, but also helped read several books to the younger children.

Silva said having the opportunity to attend the summer program prepared her for her 10 th grade attendance at Spencer High School.

"It was extremely helpful," she said. "Having this inside the John B. Amos Library was convenient because when the program finished, I was able to stay and read other books in English."

Everyone involved with the project felt content with the results.

"The program was a complete success," said Nicolas Sandoval, library technician. "We always had a group of children for both the storyteller and the film."

Sandoval said this was the second year the library sponsored the summer program and he hoped to add more incentives next year.

"Next year we're going to have drawing contests to challenge the children," he said.

Melissa Cuzcano, a 15-year old Peruvian student, also benefited this summer.

"My English was very weak," she said. "I feel a lot more confident now as I get ready to enter the American school system."

Cuzcano said she not only enjoyed the books and films, but also the camaraderie between the children.

"I've made a lot of new friends," she said.

FORT BENNING, GEORGIA 31905

ask the judge

Rick Parker
Office of the Staff Judge Advocate

Q. I am a resident of California assigned here at Fort Benning. I am confused about registering my car. Where and when do I have to do this? I understand that I may not have to pay any kind of tax on my car. Can you explain?

A. If you are on active duty and are assigned to Fort Benning, you have a choice: you can either register your vehicle in your state of permanent residence, or you can choose to register in the county in Georgia where you currently live. Under the Soldiers and Sailors Civil Relief Act (SSCRA), you are entitled to claim exemption from ad valorem taxation of your vehicle provided you satisfy the following requirements:

•You are on active duty with the Armed Forces of the U.S.;

•You are not a legal resident of the state of Georgia;

•You are stationed in Georgia pursuant to military orders;

•The vehicle is only in your name, or is also in another person's name (jointly titled), the other person is also on active duty in the military and not a legal resident of Georgia.

In order to claim the exemption, you must provide proof to the taxing authority (in this case,the tag office), that you are entitled to it. This is done by completing an SSCRA affidavit and providing proof of your state of legal residence. You can obtain the SSCRA affidavit at the Legal Assistance Division and bring a current leave and earnings statement (LES) with you in order to get the affidavit notarized. A current LES is one which is no more than 90 days old. Once you have completed the affidavit, you then go to the tag office of the county where you live and finish the registration requirements for your vehicle. You should take with you the affidavit, your current title and registration on your vehicle, proof of insurance, your LES and the registration fee. If you are registering the vehicle for the first time in Georgia, the fee is $38. This is because you are not only registering the vehicle, but are also applying to have Georgia title issued on it. Subsequent registrations cost $20. You should take cash.

Spouses of active duty servicemembers can complete the registration process, provided that they have a valid power of attorney (either a general power or a special power for registration), as well as the other documents normally required to register. This includes a copy of a current LES.

Georgia uses a system based on the owner's birthday of the vehicle (if the vehicle is jointly owned, use the birthday of the first listed owner). Application for registration should be made in the 30-day period immediately before the owner's birthday. For persons who have registered in previous years, there is no guarantee that any kind of renewal notice from the tag office will be issued.

For questions concerning the registration process and the ad valorem exemption, call the Legal Assistance Division at 545-3281. Remember, the necessary SSCRA exemption affidavits are obtained at the Legal Assistance Division in Building 5 on main post. Office hours are 8 a.m. to 5 p.m., Monday through Friday.

Group accepts scholarship nominations

Educational Tours

Nominations are now being accepted for the EF Global Citizen Awards — a new scholarship program offered by student travel operator EF Educational Tours. Based on student essays, EF will offer scholarships to twelve seniors — ten from the U.S. and two from Canada. Each student will receive $1,000 toward their college tuition and a 10-day expenses-paid educational tour of Europe.

The scholarship program was established to inspire students to think about their evolving roles in our increasingly global community. Applicants must be nominated through their schools and are asked to write about what they feel it means to be a global citizen. In addition to receiving funds for college, scholarship recipients will travel together in July on an expenses-paid educational tour of London, Paris and Rome. The dual nature of the scholarship award reflects EF's belief in the importance of experiential learning and in the lasting value of a global perspective.

Each high school in the U.S. and Canada is invited to nominate one candidate for the awards. Students who seek nomination are asked to contact their school's guidance or career development office for information. Educators can request nomination forms by mail: Global Citizen Program, EF Educational Tours, One Education Street, Cambridge, MA 02141, by e-mail: scholarships@ef.com or on the Internet at www.eftours.com. The application deadline is Feb. 15, 1999.

EF Educational Tours is a group travel organization dedicated to providing teachers and their students with opportunities to expand their classrooms and broaden their horizons through worldwide travel. A division of EF Education, the world's largest private educational organization, EF Educational Tours draw on more than 30 years of involvement in the fields of language instruction, educational travel and intercultural exchange.

Pablo knew in a couple of years he would be ready for college. He also knew it would be tough to afford. He even thought about dealing drugs to pay for it. DoD launches campaign to combat breast cancer

Douglas J. Gillert
American Forces Press Service

More than 2.2 million women in the Department of Defense (DoD) family are up against a deadly enemy. National statistics warn that 250,000 of these uniformed women and family members may succumb to this killer.

No bullets or missiles can be launched against this foe. No tanks or bombers can stop it. And unlike a lot of modern skirmishes that are intense but short-lived, the women are in a protracted battle against time and a tireless enemy.

The enemy is cancer — breast cancer — the number two killer of women over age 40. According to the American Cancer Society, the enemy is winning.

In the 1970s, one in 20 women over 40 were at risk of contracting breast cancer. Today, one in eight are susceptible.

For the past three years, DoD has waged a vigorous battle against breast cancer. Its weapons are education, early detection and prevention. Congress authorized — in fact, demanded — the battle, approving $25 million each of the last three fiscal years for DoD to wage a war against the disease.

An interdisciplinary team of representatives from each of the service medical corps and DoD health affairs oversees the battle plan. The plan concentrated first on improving access to medical care.

"Someone had recognized a problem with access, particularly to mammography," said Army Col. Doris Browne, deputy for medical research and development at the Army's Medical Research and Material Command, Fort Detrick, Md. She recalled hearing reports from women who said they waited a year or more for a breast cancer screening. So the triservice working group concentrated initially on getting women into clinics.

Access standards established under TRICARE, DoD's managed health care plan, eliminated long waiting periods for mammograms and other health care appointments, Browne said. In addition, different TRICARE regions and medical facilities established new programs to enhance breast cancer diagnosis and treatment.

For example, the TRICARE Pacific staff at Tripler Army Medical Center, Hawaii, developed a centralized tumor board. Each month, physicians at distant Pacific bases sit down at video-teleconferencing facilities with mammograms in hand and get screenings and advice from pathologists in Hawaii. This slashes the need for expensive, time-consuming medical evacuations and speeds up care to the patients, Browne said.

In Southern California, Naval Medical Center San Diego set up a breast cancer center that networks regional Air Force, Army and Navy facilities. Nurses manage cases, and a coordinator makes sure everyone gets the same level of education.

With programs like these improving access to care, the breast cancer working group launched the next phase of its battle plan — educating patients and providers. Results have been spectacular, Browne said.

To help patients, TRICARE Region 6 in San Antonio produced an educational CD-ROM for patients. "It's fantastic," Browne said. "It helps patients maneuver through the health care system."

The battle plan also aimed educational efforts at primary care managers — the medics patients first see and who refer patients to specialty care. The medics aren't necessarily educated beyond the basics about breast care, Browne said. Last year, the working group contracted with the American Medical Women's Association, which has since provided more than 6,000 primary care managers with more breast care knowledge.

This year, DoD expanded the training program, selecting a master faculty cadre for each TRICARE region to conduct regional training and education programs. "Next year, we'll move to a Web-based or video-teleconferencing platform," Browne said.

Browne is particularly proud of the assistance provided to smaller clinics without staff oncologists. "Through another contract, we're able to send radiation and medical oncologists to these facilities to conduct tumor boards," she said. Without the boards, patients would have to be referred to distant medical centers or civilian specialists.

Yet another contract agreement will produce a comparison of DoD programs with external programs and help DoD develop breast care policy guidelines, Browne said.

This year, DoD has continued regional plans and, where possible, exported them to other locations. For example, the Texas-produced patient CD-ROMs were shipped to all TRICARE regions, where they will be distributed by breast cancer centers, occupational medicine clinics and other places women go for health care.

Other new and ongoing breast care initiatives in DoD include mammography tracking systems, technician recertification, genetic testing and counseling.

Short periods of vomiting and diarrhea can be caused by germs. Most often the germ is a virus and the illness can last anywhere from two to eight days.

Dehydration from vomiting and diarrhea can occur quickly and is a major concern. In children, signs of dehydration include:

- •Not urinating as often as usual
- •Sunken eyes
- •No tears when crying
- •Urine that is darker than usual
- •Weight loss
- •Dry mouth

Fluids that have been lost must be replaced very slowly. Fluids should contain the right mixture of salt, sugar and potassium. These are referred to as Oral Rehydration Solutions (ORS) such as Pedialyte, Ricelyte and Osmolite. These should be used full strength and should be given in small sips or by dropper.

Babies who are breastfeeding may continue to breast feed while adding the ORS. Babies who use formula may have less diarrhea if a formula that contains no lactose is used. Lactose is the sugar in milk and may make the diarrhea continue longer. Some doctors recommend adding Pedialyte to the formulas with lactose to decrease the diarrhea.

Children may return to eating food after one or two days of ORS. Avoid foods with a lot of fat or sugar for about a week. The BRATS diet of bananas, rice, applesauce (not apple juice), toast and saltines may help since these are constipating foods.

Call the doctor if the child has signs of dehydration, blood in the vomit or stool, is unusually sleepy, has severe abdominal pain, has green-yellow looking vomit or is less than 6 months old with vomiting and diarrhea.

The best way to prevent these infections is thorough hand washing after changing diapers or teaching children to wash hands after using the bathroom and before eating. The germ is passed from the stool to the mouth.

Work becomes essential for living

Chaplain (Lt. Col.) Richard Roggia
Chaplains' Family Life Training Program

One of the first declarations of God to man is that he should earn his bread by the sweat of his brow.

reflections

God is interested in our work. The word "work" is used 1,040 times in the Bible, second only to "love." God knew that work, or labor, is essential to our emotional, social, spiritual and physical well being.

"No man needs sympathy because he has to work," said Theodore Roosevelt. "Far and away the best prize that life offers is the chance to work hard at work worth doing. Work then is its own reward, is an end as well as a means and is noble when it is honest."

There is no progress without work. Without it, no cities would have been built, no medicines discovered, no food produced. Labor is greater than genius, because without work, all the best ideas in the world would be wishes.

James A. May said, "Honest labor is the mother of good luck, the brother of fame and the handmaiden to success. One of the ironies of labor is the fact that those who need it most sometimes do it least. But idleness has not, does not and will not produce happiness. It does breed stagnation, boredom, emptiness and disinterest."

The truth is, everything we do involves work. When you eat a spoonful of honey, you probably have little idea as to the amount of work necessary to produce it. To make a pound of clover honey, bees must take nectar from 62,000 clover blossoms. To do this requires 2,750,000 visits to the blossoms by the bees.

Then think of how far these bees sometimes have to fly in search of these clover fields. Yet the bee never complains; the fruit of its labor is the fulfillment of its life. It is labor which provides fulfillment. Even God has labored and will continue to labor to bring to pass the eternal development of his children.

This should be our motto: "Something attempted, something done, some task accomplished, some battle won, some goal arrived at before the setting of the sun."

On Sept. 14, the Fort Benning's "Follow Me" Recycling Program will initiate a policy to increase safety and efficiency of the Family Housing Curbside Recycling Program. A few residents are placing inappropriate materials and items in the brown recycling bins that cause collection, processing and marketing problems. Beginning Sept. 14, recycle bins containing trash, garbage, non-recyclables and other such items (used oil, batteries, etc.) will not be picked up.

Most residents of family housing perform a commendable job supporting the recycling program. Most residents are also doing a good job of ensuring only items on the Fort Benning Curbside Recycling list are placed in the brown bin. It is very important that all residents become familiar with the recycling requirements.

Fort Benning's Army Family Housing recycling efforts have allowed Fort Benning to greatly increase the amount of material it recycles and have greatly reduced the amount of waste that is placed in a landfill. More than 20 thousand tons of material per year have been diverted from landfills by the extra effort taken by comprehensive efforts to reduce waste and recycle.

Tax dollars are being saved by reducing landfill cost, and thousands of dollars are being put back into Fort Benning's Morale, Welfare and Recreation (MWR) programs from revenues from sale of recyclable items. By reducing our dependency on land to depose of our garbage we are reducing future environmental problems and associated cost, as well as being a better steward of our resources.

Recently, flyers, door hangers, news articles and recycling guides have been prepared and delivered to family housing residents that specify current items on the acceptable curbside recycling list. Only items on the acceptable list are to be placed in the brown recycling bin. Bins containing non-approved items will not be picked up or sorted.

Placing unacceptable items in the recycling bin decreases program efficiency. Public health, safety and appearance of the housing areas are also affected. We must all do our part to insure that the program continues to improve and not create problems and eyesores in the community.

If you have questions, problems or comments about curbside recycling, call Walter Nichols, DPW Solid Waste Program Manager, at 545-1007, or the recycling hotline at 545-2108.

Labor Day Yard Waste Refuse and Recycle Collection Schedules

Yard Waste: There will be no yard waste picked up on Monday. The next scheduled yard waste pick up will be on Sept. 14.

Refuse, garbage, and trash and recycle pick up schedule: There will be no refuse, trash, garbage or recycle pick-ups on Monday.

The affected areas are Port, Kawamura, Fernandez Streets and Indianhead Terrace. Residents in these areas will have their refuse, trash and garbage and recycle items picked up on Tuesday.

Refuse, trash, garbage and recycle collection in the remaining family housing areas for Tuesday through Sept.11 will be picked up as normally scheduled. For more information, call Wilmer Busby, 545-1568.

Holiday schedule for the Self Help (U-DO-IT) Center

BBB offers tips to start business

Better Business Bureau

Perhaps there are dreams of starting a business, but prospective business owners are not quite sure where to start. Getting a new business up and running requires certain management skills and personality traits.

Before considering the development of a new business, the following questions should be considered:

•Do I have expertise in the business I want to start?

•Do I know how to find my particular niche in the market and how to identify my customers?

•Can I obtain the capital I will need to start and keep the business running without getting into cash flow problems?

If you answered yes to the majority of these questions, you may have what it takes to be successful in starting you own business.

In getting started, your first step should be to develop a business plan. A successful business plan is realistic, factual and objective, presenting your goals in measurable and attainable terms. It will help you to focus on critical issues and questions to help your business thrive and grow.

Ask lots of questions and be sure to come up with satisfactory answers, such as, what type of business do you want to own? Who are the principal competitors? What are their strengths and weaknesses? Where will the business be located? Who are the potential customers for the product or service? How will the business target potential customers?

Find and consult with qualified professionals—real estate agents, lawyers, accountants, public relations experts and consultants—to help make the best decisions. Ask other business owners for referrals. Contact the Better Business Bureau for a reliability report on any company. Good advice may be the difference between success and failure.

Most business owners need to invest some of their own money into the business. However, there are other sources that can provide some help, such as banks, the Small Business Administration, venture capitalist and private individuals.

Before applying for financing, carefully prepare a thorough, well-thought-out loan proposal. Write out detailed figures on the capital needed and be sure to include a salary and sufficient funds to cover start-up costs. Be wary of any advertisements or loan brokers charging advance fees for the mere promise of a loan. Check the company out with the Better Business Bureau, before doing business.

For tax and legal issues, it should be decide what form your business will take. Generally, all businesses fall into of these broad categories: sole proprietorship, partnership, corporation, S corporation or limited liability corporation. Before you decide what form you will use for your business, consult with an attorney or an accountant.

Fort Benning Archery Range

Rangers, MWR open archery range on post

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Bow hunters have no excuse for missing the "big one" now that they have a place to practice on post.

A newly-built archery range, co-sponsored by the 4th Ranger Training Brigade and Morale, Welfare and Recreation, features a six-point zero range from 10 to 60 yards, a 17-point walking range of more than 1,200 meters and an archery clubhouse with a 16-yard indoor range and target storage.

The range, which is located on the corner of Aldrich and Hourglass Roads in Harmony Church, is expected to open Tuesday in time for this year's bow season, said Lt. Col. Eric Hutchings, 4th RTB commander, with a 3-D range ready for competitions in the spring.

According to Staff Sgt. Cliff Hughes, the project manager and NCOIC of the archery range, this facility should be one of the finest in the Army.

"The range was built by bow hunters for bow hunters," he said. "Our goal is to promote archery as a sport and family hobby."

As interest grows, Hughes plans to conduct archery workshops for those interested in learning the art of archery.

Bow hunters of all ages will be able to access the range during daylight hours year round. Initially, the clubhouse will have limited hours.

The clubhouse, located in Building 4966 on Ware St., will be open 11 a.m. to 7 p.m. Tuesday through Sept. 12 and 15-19. The club will also be open 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. Sept. 13 and 14 and 11 a.m. to 3 p.m. Sept. 20-23.

Work on the range is still underway with the help of 4th RTB cadre, but most of the lane clearing is completed. Hughes credits the earthmoving to the U.S. Army Reserve's 718th Engineer Detachment, which came in with bulldozers and smoothed lanes and built safety berms.

"It takes a group effort and participation to maintain a range like this," Hughes said. At one time, Fort Benning had an archery range, but it was loosely managed and fell into disrepair.

This range was built with safety in mind, Hughes said. Rules will be posted at the zero range and bow hunters will be required to wear orange vests while on the walking range.

According to Hutchings, this range was built to last.

"A lot of resources and hard work have been invested in the new range," Hutchings said. "Fort Benning will have a quality archery program worthy of its Soldiers and family members."

An initial post-wide membership meeting will be held at 6 p.m. Tuesday at the 4th RTB Headquarters, Building 5000, to disseminate general information about the range and solicit ideas.

The meeting will be followed by a walk-through on the archery range at the Alrich Road site.

Plyometric training enhances muscle tolerance

Ed Thomas
Troy State University-Fort Benning

Plyometric training is a form of explosive physical training (PT) pioneered by the Soviets in the early 1960s. American athletes of all levels have used plyometrics for decades, and it has now reached the mainstream. The basic concepts upon which it is built have been known for centuries.

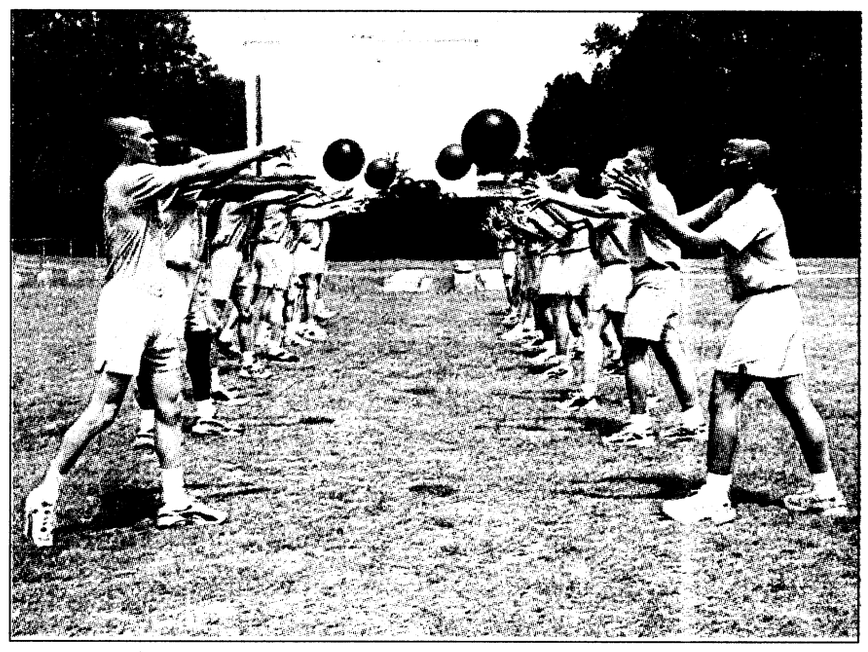
As with many of today's fitness innovations, researchers at the U. S. Army Physical Fitness School (USAPFS) are not surprised to find plyometrics principles employed throughout Army PT doctrine.

"The battlefield has always demanded the right relationship between strength and speed," said USAPFS Commandant Col. Steve Cellucci. "The medicine ball, for instance, was used by Soldiers over a century ago. Today it is a popular plyometric tool, and technology has created a better ball."

USAPFS Chief of Doctrine, Frank Palkoska explained that plyometrics training enhances the tolerance of the muscle for increased stretch load and improves the efficiency of muscle action in the stretch-shortening cycle.

"When you run, jump or perform some other ballistic movement, the muscles go through a stretch and then a contraction phase," Palkoska said. "Plyometric training can shorten the cycle time between these two phases, and that allows for maximum energy transfer. Simply stated, plyometrics train the muscle to efficiently generate maximum explosive power."

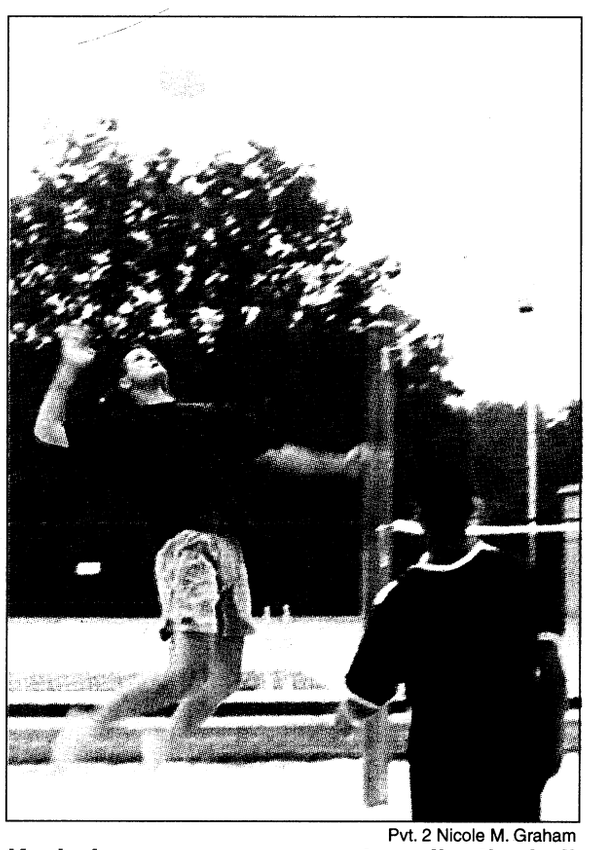
Palkoska added that the ballistic nature of plyometric training requires an adequate physical fitness level including good posture, strength and well developed motor skills.



"Our main concern with plyometrics is safety," said USAPFS physical therapist Capt. Danny McMillian. "Low demand training like rope jumping and medicine balls should be mastered before moderate and high stress work like depth jumping is attempted."

Training demand and intensity should be assigned after carefully considering numerous factors, McMillian said.

"Body weight and motor ability are important considerations," he added. "Horizontal displacement like leaping over a ditch is less stressful than vertical displacement such as jumping from an obstacle."



Other considerations include limb involvement. Single leg jumps, for instance, are more stressful than double leg. "Volume, intensity, external loading, speed of execution, age and strength should also be

The Kelley Hill Community Recreation Center hosted the sand volleyball double elimination, best two of three match tournament Saturday.

Ben Rinker, Company A, 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment, Kevin Ingwersen, Bunthy Thap, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 1st Bn., 11th Inf. Regt. and James Kaup, Ranger Training Brigade, walked away from the four-hour tournament with the first place trophy.

"We were undefeated until the championship game," Thap said. "We lost the first match 10-12 then we came back in the second match with a 12-5 win."

"The heat got to the members of the other team, and we won by a forfeit," he continued.

"We were confident," Thap said." We practice every weekend and have played for about two years."

While the teams consisted of up to five players, the second place team from the 1st Battalion (Airborne), 507th Infantry, 11th Inf. Regt., consisted of only Brian Picket and John Garands.

They fought off the competition spiking their way into the championship game.

"I used to play at Fort Bragg," Picket said. "I wanted to come out and see if I could whip these Fort Benning boys."

Third place went to the team from Company B, 2nd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment. The team consisted of John Ciccarello, Randy Laylo, Conor Miller, Joe Geraci and Ben Srebold.

The sand volleyball tournaments, which are free to enter, are held in June and then again in August. The tournaments for 1999 will require preregistration.

Team makes bid for World Series

Sgt. Alberto Betancourt
U.S. Army School of the Americas

Motivational fire stirred up the Government Center Aug. 7. Mayor Bobby Peters presented the City of Columbus' flag to the Pioneers Fast-pitch 11- and 12-year-old Girl's Little League Softball Team prior to departing for Jefferson Town, Ky.

"Hold this flag up high so everyone can see that Columbus, Georgia is behind you 100 percent," he told the cheering team.

The Georgia State Champions just returned from a successful tournament in Tennessee Aug. 3-6, where they rallied together becoming the Southeast Division II Champions.

Their trip to Kentucky Aug. 9-13, for the Southern Regional Finals, put the girls one tournament away from the Girl's Fastpitch World Series in Portland, Ore.

"I think our chances of making it to the World Series are pretty good," said Aileen Morales, during the celebration with the mayor. "We're a good team. We practice a lot and we don't give up."

She said one of the key ingredients to the team's success was that they all got along.

"If we do have any problems, we have to put it aside and concentrate on the game," she said.

Although the spirit, drive and motivation were there, the Pioneers couldn't get past last year's defending World Series Champions from Waco, Texas, in the first game of the regional finals. They eventually lost their second game against Florida in the double-elimination tournament.

"It was a successful ride and we are all very proud of their accomplishments," said Reynaldo Morales, assistant coach and non-commissioned officer in charge of the Command Group section of the U.S. Army School of the Americas. "We'll be back next year."

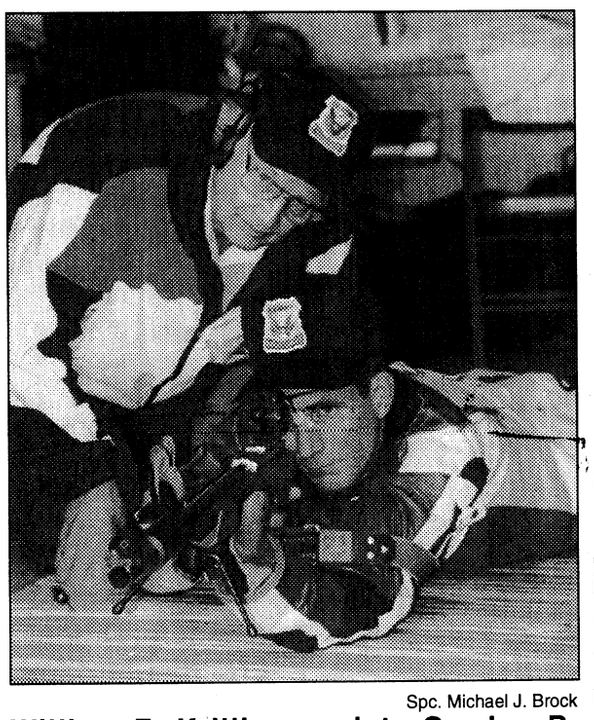
USAMU coach wins national award

Paula J. Randall Pagan
U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit

The coach of the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit's International Rifle Team was named as the U.S. Olympic Committee National Coach of the Year in shooting.

William E. Krilling, a highly decorated war veteran and member of the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit Hall of Fame, won the top Olympic coach title from a field of hundreds of national shooting coaches across the U.S.



The Marksmanship Unit coach will be honored at the USOC Coach of the Year Recognition Weekend and Awards Banquet Sept. 17 – 19 in Houston.

The 71-year-old shooting coach won the honor for the outstanding accomplishments of his team this year, which included placing six out of a possible seven shooters on the World Championship Team, winning five individual and team championships, nine individual and team national championships, setting two world records and tying one world record.

The rifle team also set a new national team record that was two points over the world record and earning two Olympic quota slots for the United States for the year 2000.

Jason A. Parker, who won the Gold Medal and set two air rifle world records at the 1998 Munich World Cup, said he owed much of his success to Krilling.

"Krilling has really helped me develop my technique," Parker said. "We now have so many strong air rifle shooters on our team pushing the scores higher and higher that my expectations have raised just to keep pace with them."

Spc. Michael J. Brock

Krilling, who has been shooting since 1952, won six national championship titles and set a national record of 3,200 points on the National Rifle Association outdoor prone course of fire, which existed for 50 years before it was matched. He won four Gold Medals, one Silver Medals and two Bronze Medal in international competitions and was a member of two world record setting teams.

Tourney needs help

USAIC Public Affairs Office

The Buick Challenge golf tournament at Callaway Gardens looms on the horizon and volunteers are needed to man the 11th hole.

Rich McDowell, hole captain, said he needs people for each day of the week, Sept. 28 through Oct. 1, except Sept. 29.

"I need people to man the T-boxes, fairways, greens and crossing areas," he said.

Volunteers will need to pay $24 for a shirt, but if they work either two half days or one full day, they will receive free admission to the tournament, free parking and volunteer party.

After the tournament, the volunteers will have their admission to the garden and their green fees waived, or receive a round of golf at any of the three Callaway courses.

"They're getting a $100 plus package for the price of a shirt that normally sells for about $32, in addition they'll see some of the top golfers in the world," McDowell said.

He noted that windshirts and rain parkas will also be available for purchase.

Anyone interested in volunteering should stop by the public affairs office, Room 608, Infantry Hall.

"It's a first come, first served basis. If you want to get a special spot on a special day, you need to come in early. The last day to sign up is Sept. 18," he said.

Fitness: gains popularity

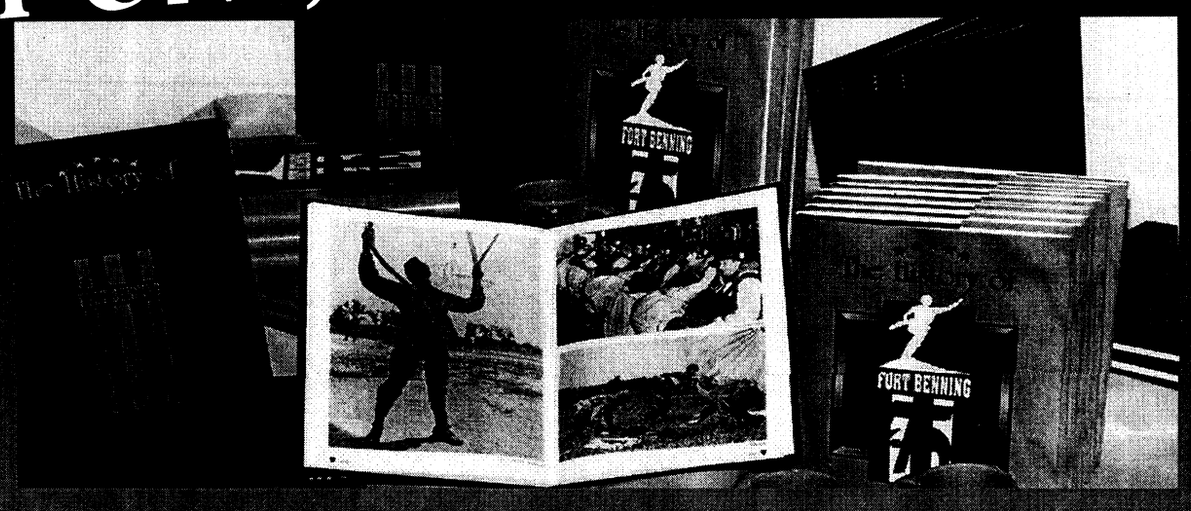
"For developing arm and upper body explosiveness, the medicine ball is hard to beat," said Steve Camp, USAPFS instructor and writer. "There are dozens of individual and partner movements, and some medicine balls even bounce and float in water."

Plyometric running and leaping can include high steps, high skips, bounding, springing and numerous other maneuvers. Cellucci recommends that commanders first familiarize themselves and their master fitness trainers with the principles of plyometrics before they begin training at the unit level.

"Poorly executed ballistic training led to its disfavor in the 1980s. The growing popularity of plyometrics gives us a second chance to get it right," Cellucci said. "Tomorrow's fast and lethal battlefields will be even more uncomfortable for Soldiers who lack explosive power. Plyometric training can and should be used to prepare them, but it must not exceed, in its demands, the Soldier's capability."

"To get the most from plyometrics, commanders should encourage Soldiers to develop good posture," Van Camp said. "Mechanical efficiency must precede strength development for the body to tolerate the ballistic demands of plyometrics."

"There is certainly a place for plyometrics in future doctrine," Cellucci added. "If we do not train for explosive power, we will not have it when the need arises."



"Current PT doctrine can provide the tools necessary to promote good posture and build the strength base necessary to start a low-intensity plyometrics program," Palkoska said. "All you need then is rational training discipline, committment and common sense."

For more information on plyometrics, contact McMillian at 545-6386.

The bombings of the U.S. embassies in Kenya and Tanzania two weeks ago provided yet another deadly reminder that terrorist activity can occur at any time and place.
While Fort Benning recently began exercising additional security measures around post, Al Harvey, acting director of Threat and Security, said community members can do their part to ensure safety by taking certain protective measures.
Harvey said one thing both military and civilian personnel can watch out for is suspicious individuals.
"This may be someone who is carrying some type of container or package that looks out of place. It could also be someone taking photos of places you don't normally take photos of or taking them at a strange time of day," he said.
Harvey added that a suspicious individual can also be someone walking very slowly along fence lines or buildings as if pacing or counting steps to measure distance.
"All of these are things should be key you as being suspicious and may some alarms off or make you think something may not be right," he said. "Usually, if you think it's not right, than it's probably not and may warrant some type of reporting."
Harvey said Soldiers who witness a suspicious act or person should notify their supervisor or the Military Police at 545-5222.
While abandoned containers and suspicious automobiles and personnel should alert community members, Harvey added that terrorists could also send explosive devices and other hazards through the mail.
Harvey said certain indicators of suspicious mail include improper spelling of common names, places, or titles; generic or incorrect titles; leaks, stains, or protruding wires, string, tape; no return address or nonsensical return address or foreign writing, addresses or postage.
"Excess postage on small packages indicates the object was not weighed by the Post Office," he said. "Normally, a bomber does not want to mail a parcel over the counter and deal face-to-face with a window clerk."
If anyone suspects a package may be a hazard, Harvey said the best precaution is to isolate the parcel,

DPW to demolish Soldiers' Plaza

Pfc. Amy L. Nyland
Bayonet staff writer

For most people, Soldiers' Plaza marks the beginning or the end of their time at Fort Benning. For years, "Splinter Village" provided Soldiers with a convenient and centrally located way to process in and out of post.

Seated along Dixie Road, the white buildings symbolize not only a transition for Soldiers but a rich history that dates back to World War II.

However, some of the history that encompasses the buildings may be lost over the next couple years as Soldiers' Plaza is slowly torn down.

In what the government calls "winning the infrastructure war" the Department of Defense and Department of Army decided to tear down WWII buildings on military installations, said John Machovec, project coordinator for the Department of Public Works.

Fort Benning began the mandated endeavor in 1997 and hopes to complete it by the year 2003, making Soldiers' Plaza one of its projects.

By the end of October, the entire back row of buildings at Soldiers' Plaza will be demolished with the rest of Soldiers' Plaza to follow later in the future.

"The Army made the decision to tear down WWII buildings because they are a liability rather than an asset," Machovec said. "It costs an estimated $2.50 a square foot each year to maintain the buildings, whereas it will cost around $2 a square foot to tear them down. So the pay back within two years will save the government a tremendous amount of money."

Machovec said because of the convenience provided by Soldiers' Plaza, the decision was made to not completely tear it down until a suitable replacement facility could be provided. In the meantime, DPW and residents of Soldiers' Plaza collaborated to find possible relocation sites for some of the elements within Soldiers' Plaza.

The buildings that house organizations such as the International Wives Club and Santa's Castle were among those identified. He said fortunately these elements were all located in the back row of Soldiers' Plaza and were fairly easy to move to other locations.

Machovec said although there is not a set date for when the demolition will begin, the back row of Soldiers' Plaza is scheduled to be torn down by Oct. 30.

The buildings of Soldiers' Plaza, which were built around 1941 or 1942, were instrumental in training Soldiers during WWII, the Korean War and the Vietnam War, said Frank Hanner, director of the National Infantry Museum.

Most of the buildings that make up Soldiers' Plaza were moved from different locations on post and once were everything from barracks and supply rooms to dining facilities.

Hanner said the buildings have a rich history and served Fort Benning well through three major conflicts.

"These buildings symbolize the WWII Soldier — the 'brown boot Army,'" Hanner said. "When we see these buildings being torn down, that's a part of our history. Fortunately the command group has seen fit to preserve a WWII company street (behind the Infantry museum) so we can remember the thousands and thousands of Soldiers who were trained here during the three major conflicts of the 21st century."

TRADOC commander prepares to step down

Jim Caldwell
Army News Service

U.S. Army Training and Doctrine Commander Gen. William W. Hartzog will wrap up more than 35 years of service commanding the organization that he says is responsible for major changes in the Army over the past 25 years.

"If you ask me, from a parochial basis, I'd have to say that when the Training and Doctrine Command was developed (in 1973) it was in and of itself a major breakthrough," he said. "I don't think we would have had many of the major improvements in the Army were it not for many generations of great Soldiers and civilians and families that work in the Training and Doctrine Command."

Hartzog will hand over command to Gen. John N. Abrams, currently deputy commanding general of TRADOC, in a ceremony Monday at Fort Monroe.

Recently Hartzog talked about the changes he has witnessed in the Army, and reflected on what his career means to him personally.

He was commissioned in 1963 after graduating from The Citadel. In a short time, he served in Vietnam as an Infantry company commander.

Following the Vietnam War, the Army, as he knew it then, began to change.

"We had a lot of Soldiers on active duty, but not all of them were as well trained or with as much education or of as high quality as you would like to have," Hartzog said.

"So we drew down the Army into a smaller Army of volunteers and generated a recruiting process and a recruiting command to maintain a volunteer Army force."

Then TRADOC began a "revolution" in individual and unit training.

"For the first part of my service we trained as well as we knew how to, which was not all that great because we didn't have codified training tasks and standards," Hartzog said.

TRADOC developed training that was based on tasks, conditions and standards, along with after action reviews.

"We built a new theory of training that involved not only knowing what you were trying to do, but also self-criticism at the end of the process," Hartzog said.

The unit training revolution came when the combat training centers were built at Fort Irwin, Calif.; Hohenfels, Germany; and Fort Polk, La.

"We also built a noncommissioned officer evaluation and education system in which noncommissioned officers of our Army, who are unique in the world in their responsibility and their ability to do things, would be trained incrementally just as the officers are in most armies. I think that was a crucial thing," he said.

Most recently, TRADOC led the Army effort to develop a heavy division for the 21st century. Similar work is ongoing for light forces.

To Hartzog, the new division design was an "out-product" of new technology and the "spiral development" process.

Spiral development involves letting Soldiers try out new organizations, new doctrine and new equipment in field conditions.

Contractors and Army developers gather Soldiers' inputs and make rapid corrections.

"Take an idea, a piece of equipment, a concept, a practice, a tactic, a technique, a procedure. Throw it out with the troops. See what they tell you about it. And then if it's not quite right, take the lesson and try it again," Hartzog said.

"The second piece of what's come out of all this is the understanding about information and how to use information technology and how powerful it is and how vulnerable it can be unless you protect it and educate yourself in how to use it. I think information is a new frontier. It's the U.S. Army Infantry School (USAIS) Sergeant Major Command Sgt. Maj. Clifford R. West welcomed his replacement, Command Sgt. Maj. David J. Liebersat in a ceremony Wednesday held in front of Infantry Hall.

The Infantry School went without a command sergeant major for several months before West arrived 15 months ago, and according to USAIS Assistant Commandant Brig. Gen. Walter Wojdakowski, West brought many improvements to Fort Benning.

"Sgt. Maj. West made significant improvements to the facilities that support training for Soldiers," Wojdakowski said.

Wojdakowski praised West and explained how well he performed in his position.

"Everyday Sgt. Maj. West visited Soldiers in training," Wojdakowski said, "Sgt. Maj. West has seen everything through the eyes of a private.

"Sgt. Maj. West did more than anybody to make this position what it ought to be," Wojdakowski said, "So we had to find the right man to replace him and we have."

Wojdakowski expressed much gratitude to West when he said, "We owe Sgt. Maj. West a great debt for getting us headed in the right direction.

"It has been a great 15 months of performance for Sgt. Maj. West," Wojdakowski said.

During the ceremony, West was presented the Order of St. Maurice and West's wife Shirley received the Shield of Sparta.

West also honored his wife of 26 years. who has been married to him since he was a private.

After thanking many people and certain units on post, West said he was completely confident in his replacement.

"As Shirley and I depart Fort Benning, we leave the Infantry School in the hands of Sgt. Maj. Liebersat," West said. "They are more than capable of riding this boat and keeping it sailing."

The new Infantry School sergeant major said he was honored to accept the position and looks forward to his tenure.

"I pledge to you (Fort Benning) to do my best in enforcing standards and discipline," Liebersat said.

Field trip spurs school memories

Pvt. 2 Nicole M. Graham
Bayonet staff writer

Last week I was on an assignment at White Elementary School. While I waited outside the main office, I could hear a classroom of children singing.

commentary

As I looked down the hall trying to figure out which classroom it was coming from, I found myself staring at the small yellow and red lunch boxes that were lined up under the coat hooks outside a classroom door.

I started to think back on my elementary school days.

Although I think it would be neat to go back and relive my grade school years, knowing what experiences were to follow the joys of elementary school tend to change my mind.

My elementary school was nothing short of huge. Franklin Elementary was a true brick monster — four floors of what seemed to be endless hallways. Although the sight of the institution may have been overwhelming, my grade school experience was truly memorable.

I can remember carrying my Dukes of Hazard lunchbox up to the front door and playing "alligator in the swamp" while we waited for the teachers to open the doors. I looked forward to all the coloring contests and math games my teachers played to make learning fun. I regret not getting the chance to finish elementary school there due to my dad's military move.

The enthusiasm for school gradually faded and I started to dread going.

My teenage years were full of awkwardness and unsureness. Acne, first date jitters and trying to find someone to sit with during lunch filled my days with anxiety. I wish I could have skipped puberty the first time around.

I had a lot of fond memories of my school years, but would I go back and do it again. The answer is a simple one. No.

I was awakened out of my day dream by a student leaving the classroom. I sat there and wondered if he would be prepared for what experiences lie ahead.

Everyone has memories of their joy and tears , but as we grow and have children of our own, all we can do is hope their experiences are happy ones and that they cherish each of them.

Leadership depends on those who follow

Chaplain (Lt. Col.) Kenneth Brown
Fort Knox, Ky., Protestant Pastor

General Dwight Eisenhower used to demonstrate the art of leadership with a simple piece of string. He'd put it on a table and say:

commentary

"Pull it, and it will follow wherever you wish. Push it and it will go nowhere at all."

It's just that way when it comes to leading people.

Leadership depends on followers. If people do not follow a leader voluntarily — if they always have to be forced — that person is not a good leader.

What do you think the "job" of leadership really is? Is it to tell those who work for you exactly what you want done, and to stay on top of them until they do it? If that's how you see your job, you don't have the viewpoint it takes to lead successfully. Leadership depends on the ability to make people want to follow — voluntarily.

Do you think most employees need to be goaded and prodded to do what you want or threatened or reprimanded, if necessary? People who are successful leaders do not think that way. They work to inspire people, to make them want to cooperate. Leaders who prod rather than lead rarely get the best out of those who work for them, because people who work for prodders have little incentive to do more than just get by. All they want to do is keep such a "boss" off their backs.

Effective leaders know that they get the best efforts out of people by working with them, by helping them to do their best, and by showing them how to be more productive.

Most people want to do a good job as long as someone appreciates their efforts and encourages them. That is where good leaders put their greatest effort to show people that their work is valuable and appreciated.

Leadership requires faith that the associates will always do their best. And if some of them don't seem to be trying hard enough, the smartest thing is to investigate, find the reason why and then try to overcome whatever it is that is preventing them from doing the most they can.

There may always be a few people who have to be watched and occasionally reminded to get on the ball. But the fewer the better. The need for too much pushing usually indicates too little leadership.

"Among heathen it is their kings who lord it over them, and their rulers are given the title of 'benefactors.' But it must not be so with you! Your greatest man must become like a junior and your leader must be servant. Who is the greater, the man who sits down to dinner or the man who serves him? Obviously, the man who sits down to dinner — yet I am the one who is the servant among you" (Luke 22:25-27).

Surely, our best example of leadership is most closely aligned to servanthood. The best leaders lead by example — always!

Educating youth requires community involvement

The President of the United States, the Secretary of Defense, the Secretary of the Army and the Chief of Staff of the Army have established and supported programs designed to make our schools better through the involvement of teachers, parents and the community in the education process.

America Goes Back to School is a nationwide program sponsored by the Department of Education, while the School Home Partnership is aimed specifically at the Department of Defense Education Activity Schools located on our post.

Our children represent the future of our country and their education is a matter of the greatest concern in a free society. It is not enough that we simply provide schools and hire teachers.

Educating our youth is a community responsibility that requires the involvement not only of the schools, but of parents and other community members as well, if it is to be successful.

The programs that have been established are not prescriptive, but encourage the cooperative development of goals and methods within individual schools. That cooperative development requires the active participation of all our Soldiers and family members.

Our Fort Benning community, as responsible citizens, must have an active role in the installation's schools.

In that spirit of involvement, commanders, commandants and directors will fully support both the America Goes Back to School and the School Home Partnership Programs. Mission permitting, military personnel interested in volunteering in a Department of Defense Education Activity School or local elementary or secondary school may be excused from duty for up to one hour per week.

Civilian employees may be excused without being charged leave for up to 59 minutes per week, so long as no other excused absences during the week are approved.

Excused absences for these volunteer activities are limited to situations where the volunteer's work place and the employee's regular duty hours coincide. In all cases, arrangements must be made in advance with the educational activity and the volunteer's supervisor must approve the time off.

Hartzog: Retires

unknown."

Information provided through digitized communications systems gives a combat commander immediate battlefield situational awareness. That enables him to direct efforts where it's most needed with more confidence.

Asked to rate the health of the command, Hartzog said TRADOC's "readiness status is lower than I would like it to be" in terms of budget and personnel.

TRADOC's annual budget is now at about $2.7 billion, a level that Hartzog said must be maintained for the command just to continue it's primary missions of training, combat developments, doctrine development and equipment development.

"The one resource we are wealthy in is the talent of our leaders and the talent of our followers," Hartzog said. "I've asked and they have responded in a tremendous fashion with their talents for leadership and creativity and that's how we're getting the job done."

But what disturbs Hartzog the most is the loss of civilian employees.

"TRADOC is very dependent upon its civilian workforce because it brings stability and experience that you can't hire in the young Soldier," he said.

One constant throughout his career, however, has been the quality of the American Soldier.

"I'm very much heartened by the fact that the youngsters we have today and the youngsters who were in my company in Vietnam are All-Americans who, if given the right training and the right education and the right equipment, can do whatever is asked of them," Hartzog said.

Soldiers and the conditions in which they served are distilled in mental pictures for the general.

"There're always the pictures of combat that stick with you. I don't talk about them often, but I remember people from that. A medic and a driver, a platoon leader. I remember the people who didn't come home who, if I had been better at my business, might have."

One Soldier he remembers is Lt. Gen. Joseph W. Kinzer. Kinzer was an Officer Candidate School student when Hartzog was an OCS tactical officer. Hartzog commissioned the general and on Aug. 31, he presided over Kinzer's retirement ceremony at Fort Myer, Va.

"Now that's a little picture that gives me a great deal of good feeling and richness because he's given 30-plus years of service to our country," Hartzog said.

In August Hartzog received a call from retired Command Sgt. Maj. Clarence Wise, who now works for the Postal Service in Aloha, Ore. Wise was the command sergeant major of the first battalion that Hartzog commanded and he wanted to be present at the general's retirement ceremony.

"I don't know of any other profession that creates that kind of camaraderie and closeness of feeling," Hartzog said. "If there is, I'm going to look for it and see if I can get a job after I finish this.

Secretary gauges readiness

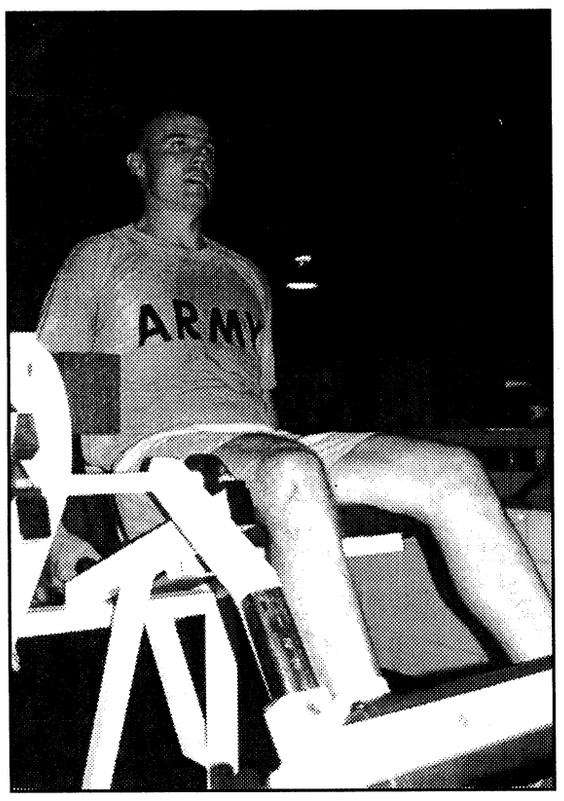
Army News Service

Secretary of Defense William S. Cohen visited Fort Drum, N.Y., Wednesday as part of his ongoing mission to gauge military readiness.

He came to the right place. "I expected to see a ready force, and I did see a ready force," Cohen said.

Accompanied by Secretary of the Army Louis Caldera and Sergeant Major of the Army Robert Hall, Cohen got an up-close look at the 10th Mountain Division (Light Infantry), one of the service's most frequently deployed divisions.

After a briefing from Maj. Gen. Lawson W. Magruder III, 10th Mountain Division and Fort Drum commander, Cohen flew to the field to visit troops participating in exercise Mountain Peak. About 6,200 light fighters and support Soldiers were involved in the exercise, which was designed to prepare a brigade task force for maneuvers at the Joint Readiness Training Center at Fort Polk, La.



First, Cohen addressed about 130 Soldiers who had just ended an all-night battle in a simulated village. Later, he dined with troops in a brigade support area and visited an artillery battery.

In opening remarks at his first stop, the division's Military Operations in Urban Terrain training site, Cohen cited three goals of the United States military. He said they are to shape the political environment wherever the military goes, to respond to all types of threats, and to know how to prepare for the future.

Cohen noted that no one can compete with the United States in conventional warfare, but warned that the potential for chemical or biological attacks poses challenges for the future.

Senior enlisted test bodies during farewell workout

Bayonet staff writer

Command Sgt. Maj. Clifford R. West's departure physical fitness session was held at Briant Wells field house Wednesday as Post Command Sergeant Major Command Sgt. Maj. Mack Vereen led the way in Sergeant Major Physical Fitness Training (PFT).

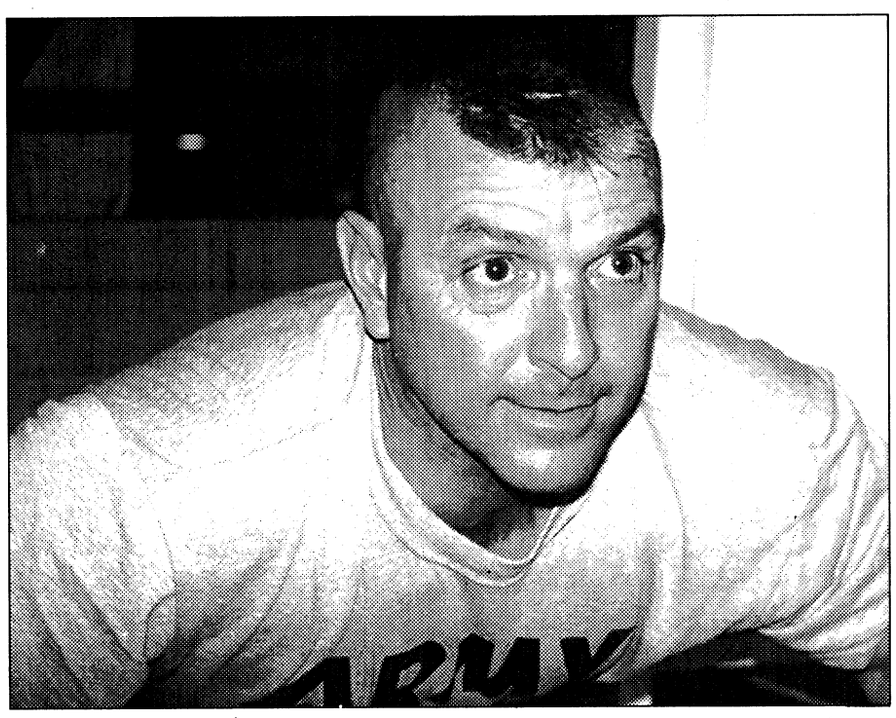
Senior enlisted Soldiers from various units around post met at 6 a.m. to put their bodies and physical well being to the test.

The Sergeant Major PFT is held every month as an educational team building event for the senior enlisted Soldiers, said Vereen.

During this month's session the Soldiers conducted a muscular endurance workout using elastic technique. The PFT session was conducted using 15 different stations on Nautilus weight equipment.

The Soldiers were paired into partners of the same height and weight then participated in two circuits.

In the first circuit they completed the exercise using isotonic muscular contraction. They conducted the first exercise for 15 seconds then adjusted the weight to half of the total poundage for 30 additional seconds.



This physiologically enhances the lifter's strength out-put, through recruiting or using motor units at the same time, enhancing the firing of motor units more rapidly, Vereen said.

The spotting partner then repeated the exercise for the second circuit.

On Vereen's command the group added more weight, rotated machines and dropped for push-ups, getting a workout with equipment that was designed to strengthen a particular or group of muscles.

According to Vereen, the desired results of the exercise was to increase physical fitness knowledge and to burn 400 calories, deter skeletal muscular deterioration, enhance the nervous system control the muscle during contraction and improve the human electrical system (from the brain through nerve to muscle.)

"This was a very good workout,"

Sgt. Maj. Herbert Thompson, Infantry Training Brigade operations sergeant major, completes a set of push-ups.

said Command Sgt. Maj. Edmond Singleton, garrison command sergeant major. "I used muscles I have never used before."

Although they workout together on a monthly basis, these senior enlisted conduct physical training daily which helps to keep them physically fit.

"I do training similar to this on my own during the week, but this was a good workout session," said Command Sgt. Maj. Rafael Colondres, 4th Ranger Training Battalion.

"A superb physical fitness session for Command Sgt. Maj. West's departure and welcoming Sgt. Maj. Thompson to the Sergeant Major Corp," Vereen said.

USARSA

Students conduct orientation trip

U.S. Army School of Americas

The 52 students of the 1998 United States Army School of the Americas' (USARSA) Command and General Officers Course (CGSOC) recently conducted a Central America Regional Orientation trip to Panama, Costa Rica and Honduras, August 16 thru 21.

After visiting the traditional commands of United States Army South at Fort Clayton, Panama and Joint Task Force Bravo at Soto Cano Air Base, Honduras, the students had the distinct opportunity of being USARSA'S first CGSOC to visit the University for Peace and the InterAmerica Institute for Human Rights in San Jose, Costa Rica.

Created by the United Nations General Assembly on December 5 1980, the University for Peace offers master's programs in democratic sustainment. The three hour seminar at the University for Peace focused on presentations given by the university's director, Dr. Francisco Barahona, and two other university academic coordinators. The presentations were followed by a lively discussion on democratic sustainment not only in Central America, but in Latin America as a whole. The CGSOC students left the institution with a better understanding of the efforts being committed to building consensus and negotiation in the region.

Maj. Roger Barros, CGSOC course director, said "in an era where military officers must be just as knowledgeable about peace operations involving humanitarian assistance, demining and similar operations as they are in warfighting, visits to institutions such as the University for Peace and the InterAmerican Institute for Human Rights are very germane. The fundamental concept is to impart to the CGSOC students, which consist of U.S. and Latin American officers from 12 different countries, the varying roles of the military operating under the control of a civilian democratic nation-state."

Both Barros and Dr. Russell Ramsey, USARSA's resident Latin American Affairs Specialist, are currently working on a project to incorporate a guest instructor program involving members from both of the institutions to not only participate in the Human Rights and Peacekeeping blocks of instruction of the CGSOC, but in USARSA's six week long Democratic Sustainment Course and five week long Peace Operations Course.

Re-enlistment policy allows NCOs to stay in indefinitely

Gerry J. Gilmore
Army News Service

Qualified career NCOs will be able to skip re-enlistment paperwork and stay in "indefinitely" until retirement thanks to a personnel regulation change effective Oct. 1.

The Army's Indefinite Re-enlistment Program will affect Regular Army staff sergeants and above with more than 10 years of active federal service, said Sgt. Maj. Jerry L. Pionk, chief of the Department of the Army's retention policy proponent, Office of the Deputy Chief for Personnel.

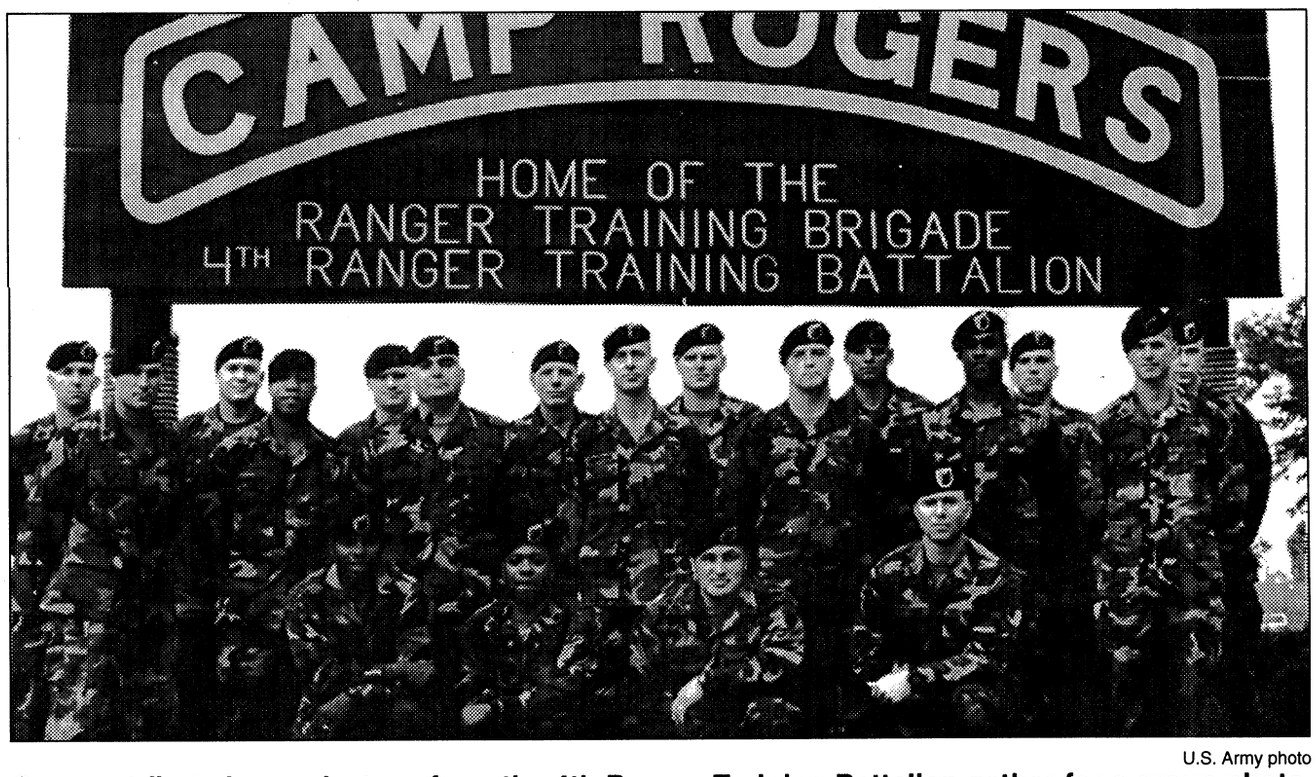
The indefinite re-enlistment program, in the works for five years and made possible by a change in federal law, is a "win-win" situation for Soldiers and Army planners, Pionk said.

"It allows the Army to predict with increased accuracy, without having to rely on (monitoring) re-enlistment contracts, how many (enlisted) careerists will be deployable and ready to move should the Army need them," Pionk said. "Soldiers attend their career (training) programs, get promoted through the ranks, and never have to worry about the re-enlistment process again," he said.

As the Army's premier trainers and mentors of the force, career NCOs have earned the right to a career without periodic and sometimes disruptive "re-ups," Pionk said.

"It is just a 'makes-sense' program," he said. "If NCOs keep their noses clean and do what the Army asks of them, we're charging them now, as career noncommissioned officers, to take charge of their own careers."

Master Sgt. Lois M. Barber, a 19-year Army veteran, who is married with a daughter, said the indefinite re-enlistment program would add stability in her life.



"It gives me a secure feeling," said Barber, who works with Pionk in the retention branch. "Right now, my ETS is January 2000. To stay in longer under the old system, I'd have to go in and set up my re-enlistment paperwork and ceremony."

Although career NCOs will be provided more responsibility in managing their careers, the Army's 'up-or-out' promotion policy remains in effect, as represented by retention control points, Pionk said. Staff sergeants can stay in for 20 years (Army retirement); sergeants first class, 22 years; master sergeants or first sergeants, 24 years; sergeants major, 30 years, with some exceptions for 35 years of service, Pionk said.

Under the new program, as the current one, career NCOs will be able to apply for separation from the service for reasons such as financial hardship, Pionk said. However, with current career re-enlistment rates averaging 93 percent, Pionk said he doesn't expect many NCOs would petition to get out under the new program.

It will take "a few years" for everybody to be on the (indefinite re-enlistment) program, Pionk said, who added that response from the field has been overwhelmingly favorable.

"The program was very well received by groups of Soldiers I talked to in Europe, notably in Germany, Bosnia and Belgium," Pionk said. "In fact, I got some phone calls from soldiers saying, 'It is about time senior NCOs are given the type of prestige and status commensurate with their duties and responsibilities.'"

Rangers lead way to promotions

Capt. Sam Joyner
4th Ranger Training Battalion

Twenty-nine staff sergeants from the 4th Ranger Training Battalion have been selected for promotion to sergeant first class by a selection board that met this spring.

"This is the highest number of staff sergeants from a single battalion at Fort Benning and possibly the entire Army," said Command Sgt. Maj. Rafael Colondres, 4th Ranger Training Battalion command sergeant major.

According to Colondres, 30 percent of the staff sergeants within the battalion were selected during this board.

While the battalion hosts many of the Army's best NCOs, Lt. Col. Eric D. Hutchings, 4th Ranger Training Battalion commander, said the high promotion rate is unprecedented.

"This high selection rate is truly indicative of the extremely professional standards demanded and expected by the NCOs of the Ranger community," he said.

AER scholarships are available for students

Army Emergency Relief

Soldiers with college-age children often wonder how they can afford education costs. Many people don't realize that part of the answer may be found from Army Emergency Relief (AER).

The AER provides financial assistance through scholarships. This relatively little-known resource can make college possible for many people. To qualify for financial assistance through AER, students must be enrolled, accepted or pending acceptance as a full-time student for the entire academic year .

Scholarships are available through AER. To be eligible a student must be: unmarried, a U.S. citizen or permanent U.S. resident, under the age of 22 on June 1, preceding the beginning of the school year for which the scholarship is requested and an authorized dependent of an active duty, retired or deceased Soldier. Scholarships are awarded based on financial need, academic achievement and individual accomplishment.

Students who are awarded scholarships must reapply each year. Students must be in good academic standing, with a minimum cumulative GPA of 2.0 to receive scholarships. The application is simple. By requiring students to reapply each year, AER can monitor the progress they are making.

Students must submit a family financial analysis and essay describing their goals and accomplishments. Applications must be submitted by March 1 for the upcoming academic year. Initial applications and request forms will be available Nov. 1 for the school year 1999-00, at AER, located in Building 2643, Soldiers' Plaza, 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. Monday through Friday. Applications can also be accessed via website: http/www.aerhq.org. Letters to students are mailed in mid-May, from AER informing them whether they have been awarded a scholarship, and if so, how much money they will receive.

Students learn valuable lessons in Girl Scouts

Nicole Longstreath

Nicole Longstreath

Jeanne Bower and her daughter, Alexandra, sign up for Girl Scouts at Faith Middle School Sept. 2. Young ladies and adults can sign up to volunteer any time of year.

It's September and children across Fort Benning will embark on yet another year of education.

Although some of Fort Benning's young ladies may not be excited about once again giving up their summer days to basic studies in school, perhaps there may be something they have to look forward to outside of a regular day of education.

The Concharty Council of Girl Scouts offers girls and their parents on Fort Benning opportunities to get involved in the community and learn things not taught in school.

Barbara Singleton, troop leader and co-director for the Fort Benning Girl Scout program, explained that the activities the girls participate in broadens horizons.

"We try to include activities that will help them wherever they are in life," Singleton said.

Besides earning patches that require the girls to learn about other countries, Singleton said the girls also take part in "Thinking Day."

"On Thinking Day, the girls are required to find a country that participates in Girl Scouting and learn as much as they can about that country," Singleton said.

In addition to learning about other cultures, Singleton said Fort Benning Girl Scouts have collected canned goods for the Army Community Service food locker and made tray favors for patients in the hospital.

According to troop mother Andrea Graham, her daughter Alesha has received an opportunity to learn valuable lessons in life.

"This gives her experiences she wouldn't get in school," Graham said. "Being involved with Girl Scouts has helped her learn to work better in a group."

Eight-year-old Alesha, however, was more interested in making new friends and conquering confidence courses.

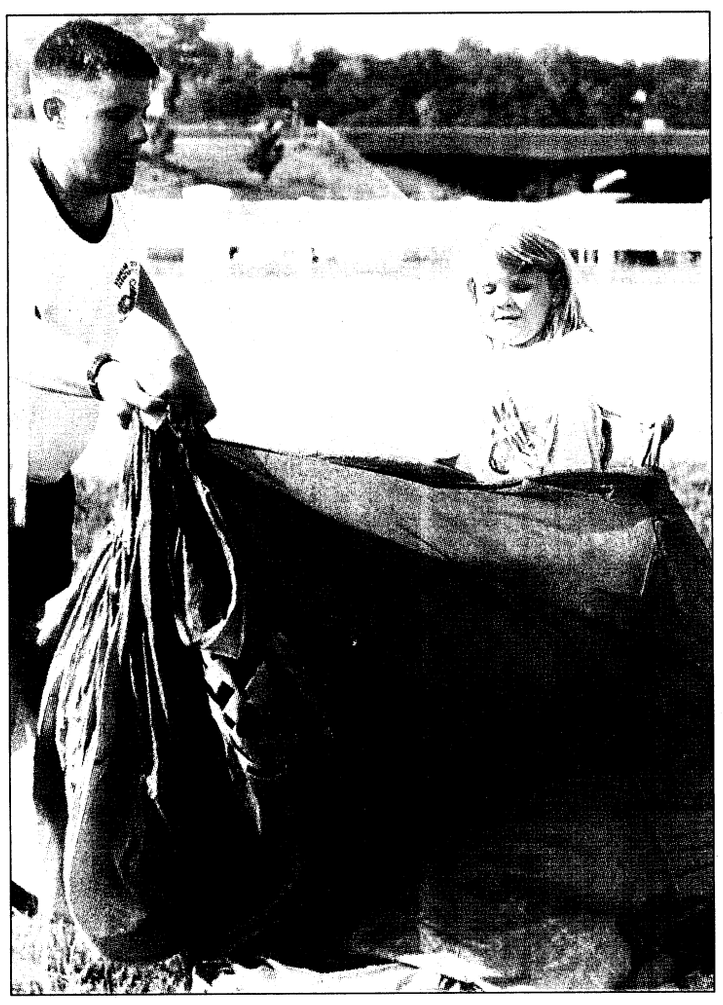
"I enjoyed the confidence course," Graham said, "It felt good that I accomplished something."

Graham explained that it was essential for her daughter to learn things besides the mandatory reading and math.

"Being involved in these things makes it easier for her to choose what she wants to do later in life," Graham said. "This helps her decide where she can donate her time."

Donating time and getting involved, Graham said, was something parents should be a part of.

"(By getting involved with the Girl Scouts) the parents can go and experience what their daughters are experiencing," Graham said.



Graham explained there was opportunity for everyone in Girl Scouts, even fathers.

A father of a Girl Scout can become a "Green Knight" by registering himself with a troop leader.

Singleton said it is important for the entire family to support the girl involved with Girl Scouts, but unfortunately, not enough parents have volunteered to get involved.

"Our hardest thing is to get parents involved," Singleton said. "If we can get the parents involved, we will have a better program.

To get involved and volunteer, a sign-up will be held at 6:30 p.m. Tuesday at Building 1796, on Ingersol Street. The cost to register is $7.

Fort Benning Schools

Teacher wins top honors

Erin A. Nash
Special to the Bayonet©

Person

Fort Benning Schools added another award to their list of accomplishments this past summer when Dr. Wanda Person, media specialist at Wilson Elementary, was named Fort Benning Teacher of the Year by the Department of Defense Educational Activity.

This is the first year Fort Benning has participated in the Teacher of the Year Program.

Person, who has been a teacher in the Fort Benning school system for eighteen years and five previous in a private school, was also a fifth-grade teacher at White and a teacher at Faith. This is her fourth year as a media specialist.

Person was nominated for the award by her fellow colleagues at Wilson last year. She then received a packet to fill out pertaining to her philosophy and educational background. Her colleagues also had to write letters of recommendation for her.

"I was honored to be nominated. We don't have academy awards or nobel prizes, so any recognition for teachers is good," Person said. "Recognition for any teacher anywhere is recognition for all of us."

It wasn't until the middle of July that Person received a letter from Washington D.C. telling her she had won Teacher of the Year.

"I'm honored. I was pretty excited, well, maybe beyond that," Person said.

"We are all so excited — she is a great asset to Wilson," said Phyllis Parker, principal at Wilson. "She is involved with all our programs and a huge contribution to the education of the children of Indianhead Terrace."

Person said she wanted to be a teacher because of the major things that changed in her own life, because of her teachers.

She recalled her sixth-grade teacher who helped her over her shyness of public speaking.

"I was very shy at speaking, and my teachers along the way helped with that."

About her teaching philosophy, Person said,"Every child needs something different. They come to us wanting to do a good job, wanting to do the right thing, wanting to succeed. They want to find the same acceptance here with us as they do at home with their parents."

Person also said her fellow colleagues have been very generous in their congratulatory remarks and very supportive.

"It's a wonderful feeling — at the same time, there are so many wonderful teachers here — it could have just as easily been someone else.

Person now has to wait until later this month to find out if she has been named Department of Defense Dependent Schools and Department of Defense Domestic Dependent Elementary and Secondary Schools Teacher of the Year.

Post set to conduct family planning symposium

Family Life Network

The Army Family Action Planning (AFAP) symposium will be held from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. Sept. 29 at the Officers' Club.

Interested members of the Fort Benning Army family to include Soldiers, family members, retirees, Department of the Army Civilians and reservists are encouraged to complete an AFAP issue sheet.

The local AFAP symposium provides an opportunity for installation leaders to meet with members of the Army family.

Valid issues are forwarded to specific work groups for discussion and possible resolution.

Issues must have a measurable end result and impact the total Army family or a particular category of the Army family. Personal issues are not considered valid issues.

The AFAP is not a forum to address personal complaints, but rather to identify those issues that concern and impact the total or majority of the Army family.

Issues to be addressed can be submitted on a sheet of paper and should include:

•Issue Title — (Make the title as short as possible, simple and clear to anyone who may not be familiar with the issue. Do not provide a detailed description.

•Scope — Use complete sentences and write in paragraph form. The scope must contain the following: the problem and why it is considered a problem.

•Recommendation — This portion of the issue sheet should be simple, clear and concise. Persons should be very specific in terms of what should be done.

The issue sheet should be returned by noon Sept. 18 to the Family Unit Network Center, located in Building 359 or contact the AFAP coordinator at 545-3016.

SSCRA ensures financial obligation

Capt. R. Stuart Phillips
Army News Service

An e-mail message is circulating throughout the Army claiming that federal law requires creditors to lower the interest rate charged to Soldiers who re-enlist.

Unfortunately, this is not true.

The Soldiers' and Sailors' Civil Relief Act (SSCRA) is a federal law designed to ensure that military service does not interfere with a Soldier's ability to meet his or her financial or legal obligations. The SSCRA contains many provisions, including an interest rate cap of six percent on any debt incurred prior to entering military service.

However, the e-mail message falsely claims that the SSCRA also applies to debts incurred during a Soldier's enlistment and may be invoked upon reenlistment.

Quite simply, that is wrong.

Courts that have addressed the applicability of the SSCRA in various cases have focused on one determiner — the status of the servicemember at the time the obligation arose.

Therefore, when determining whether or not a debt is "pre-service," the crux of the matter is the servicemember's status at the time the debt was incurred.

Because the servicemember is already on active duty prior to reenlisting, any debt incurred during that previous enlistment is not "pre-service" and not eligible for the interest rate cap.

Additionally, the law allows the creditor to avoid the interest rate cap by showing that the Soldier's military service does not have a "material effect" on his or her ability to pay the debt.

The mere fact that the Soldier re-enlisted can hardly be said to have a material effect on his or her finances. If anything, re-enlistment often actually improves finances. Therefore, in a court contest between a servicemember and a creditor, the creditor would very likely prevail on this basis. Should the creditor prevail, the servicemember may have additional worries.

Many contracts provide that, in the event that court action is necessary to enforce the contract, the prevailing party is awarded attorney's fees. This means that a servicemember who unsuccessfully argues for the interest rate reduction may well be liable for thousands of dollars in attorney's fees in addition to the amount owed through the original obligation.

Now that you know

Moreover, a Soldier who seeks an interest rate reduction knowing that the SSCRA does not apply may be subject to criminal prosecution under the Uniform Code of Military Justice (UCMJ).

Article 134 of the UCMJ makes it a crime to obtain services by means of false pretenses. Penalties range from six months confinement and a bad conduct discharge to five years and a dishonorable discharge, depending on the value of the services wrongfully obtained.

While there may be some creditors who will accept a Soldier's request for the interest rate cap at face value, you should be very careful, and make sure that you qualify under the law before sending your request.

The SSCRA was enacted to provide some relief to servicemembers so that they would not suffer financially merely because they joined the military. Obviously, this rationale does not apply to debts that the servicemember has voluntarily incurred during service.

If you have questions about whether the SSCRA applies to you, or if you need assistance in asserting your rights under the Act, contact the Legal Assistance Office at our number.

Veterans Affairs provide benefits

Department of Veterans Service

As the nation's veteran population continues to age, Georgia Commissioner of Veterans Affairs (VA), Pete Wheeler, reminds veterans and their families that the U.S. Department of Veterans Affairs provides a variety of burial benefits.

"Veterans and their family member should acquaint themselves beforehand with the burial benefits a veteran might be entitled to upon his or her death. They should not wait until the benefit is needed because something could easily be overlooked during that very traumatic time," the Commissioner warned.

Veterans who were discharged or separated from active duty under conditions other than dishonorable and who completed their required period of service are eligible for burial in a VA national cemetery. Spouses and minor children of eligible veterans may also be buried in a national cemetery. However, individuals cannot reserve a gravesite in a national cemetery.

A 1997 law prohibits a veteran of a federal or state crime from being buried or memorialized in a VA national cemetery or in Arlington National Cemetery.

The VA will provide a headstone or marker for the unmarked grave of a veteran anywhere in the world. Headstones or markers are also provided for veterans and eligible dependents of veterans buried in national, state veteran or military post cemeteries.

When the burial takes place in a national, state veteran or military post cemetery, the headstone or marker is ordered through the cemetery, which will place it on the grave.

When a veteran's burial occurs in a private or civilian cemetery, the headstone or marker must be applied for from the VA.

The VA provides an American flag to drape the casket of a veteran or reservist who is entitled to retired military pay. After the service, the flag may be given to the next of kin or a close associate. Flags can be obtained from the nearest VA Regional Office, national cemeteries or a U.S. Post Office.

If a death is service connected, the VA will pay a burial allowance of up to $1,500.

The VA will pay a $300 burial allowance for veterans who, at time of death, were entitled to receive pension or compensation or would have been entitled to compensation but for receipt of military retirement pay. Eligibility for this payment is also established when death occurs in a VA facility, a nursing home under VA contract or a state nursing home.

Immunizations prevent disease

Family Practice Clinic

Everyone knows that immunizations are important ways to prevent disease, especially in children. However, many of us, forget that immunizations are still just as vital to remaining healthy and preventing unnecessary, often deadly diseases. An example of such necessary adult immunizations is the Td (Tetanus and Diptheria toxoid).

Tetanus is a neurological disease caused by toxins produced by the soil bacteria Clostridium tetanti. It lives in all climates and is a normal bacteria found in the intestinal tract of humans and animals. In other words, it is found everywhere. It is long lived in nature because of its ability to form spores and remain dormant for extended periods of time. Exposure comes from a break in the skin, such as a soil contaminated wound or deep puncture from an object containing bacteria on its surface.

Animal bites and seemingly harmless cuts (obtained while gardening or mowing the lawn) have been sources of infection. Cases of tetanus have even been seen in surgical wounds of non-immunized patients' wounds they obtained in a sterile operating room. The Centers for Disease Control (CDC) receives annually, reports of between 60 and 100 cases of tetanus. More than 50 percent of these cases are fatal.

The disease is rapidly progressive starting with muscle spasms and proceeding to paralysis and death in one to three weeks. Since the disease is caused by a toxin, antibiotics against the bacteria are often "too little, too late" in treating the disease. The most effective treatment is proper immunization.

Diptheria is a respiratory illness that carries historical significance because of its devastating iµpact years ago. Outbreaks killed thousands of people in the 1920s but the development of effective immunization have made this disease rare.

It is primarily seen now in third world countries and in children immigrating here, but there are reported outbreaks of cases in children and adults in developed countries. About 10 cases of this disease in adults are reported to the CDC annually. A recent outbreak in Sweden in 1990 refocused medical attention on the risks to adults and children who often are inadequately immunized against diptheria.

The tetanus and diptheria toxoid is given five times during childhood (the DTaP) to build a primary immunity. This immunity is lost with time, however, and regular booster immunizations (Td), given every 10 years for life, are required for proper protection. Many people do not think about their immunization status until they get a cut that is severe enough to require a trip to the doctor.

There are many minor cuts, scrapes, insect bites and other insults to our skin for which seeing a doctor is unnecessary. All of these seemingly harmless breaks in the skins' protective barrier provide an opportunity for infection, so maintaining an active immunity with regular boosters is especially important.

Current opinion by experts in infectious diseases at the CDC and other organizations is that both tetanus and diptheria are "100 percent preventable" diseases. Routine Td vaccination has been performed since the 1940s and the number of annual cases has fallen dramatically. Cases still occur, but exclusively in patients whose immunity has lapsed or was initially inadequate.

Physicians often remind people to maintain current Td boosters, but sometimes such routine health concerns can be overlooked.

All persons are encouraged to check their medical records and those of their children to ensure the Td boosters are received to ensure protection against tetanus and diptheria.

Moral courage grows from beliefs

Chaplain (Maj.) Ronald L. Smith
36th Engineer Group (Construction)

Courage is often associated with acts of heroism, such as the young father who lifts a burning car off his child or the teenage girl that rescues her younger brother from drowning in swift water.

reflections

These acts of heroism are deserving of praise and attention and are publicized with fanfare and often causes embarrassment for the heroes. There is also our moral courage — the courage to stand fast by our convictions. This is the courage that grows out of our belief in doing what is right.

Our integrity is tested daily. Doing the right thing for the right reasons is not easy. In Reflections of a Warrior by Medal of Honor recipient Sgt. Maj. Franklin D. Miler, the author recounts his heroism as doing the courageous thing, because it was the right thing to do. Miller and a handful of troops, all critically injured, held off a regiment of North Vietnamese in the scant shelter of a bomb crater; after he, himself was seriously wounded, and had physically dragged them there to await evacuation. His account is laced with not only the "can do attitude," but more importantly doing the right thing and not the easy way out.

Courage demands risking some aspect of ourselves, whether it is our pride, our personal comfort or even our livelihood. Moral courage gives us the strength to tell the truth at the risk of losing something. Moral courage keeps us moving in the same direction, without bowing to our fears or temptation's. With moral courage we can take the truth and run with poise and strength.

Without moral courage born out of our integrity, we are lost. How do we tell the truth? Or even more critical, how do we know the truth?

Real courage born out of truth makes it possible to do what is right for the right reasons. It is an important aspect of our religious faith. Godly individuals do the right thing out of love and obedience to God and love for their neighbors, not because they are afraid of unpleasant consequences.

As we act upon this courage born out of faith, we gain integrity. Doing the right thing, we live with a clear conscience. This frees us of guilt and the fear of getting caught. When we are honest with others, reliable, fair and compassionate, we have no fear of being exposed as a liar or cheat. This kind of courage comes from our convictions.

Each of us is responsible for our acts of courage. These include admitting our mistakes and imperfections, showing compassion for people, being accountable for ourselves and not trying to blame others, showing respect and admiration for others and keeping our discipline and bearing.

Faith and trust in a sovereign almighty God can be the anchor which gives courage in the face of great difficulty.

It takes courage to do the right thing; to speak when truth is not popular. Courage is not hidden in our character, like something we can bring out when needed, but is a constant part of all our actions. Acting on our convictions allows us to maintain our freedom and do what is right. You do have a choice. Make the right one.

ask the judge

Q: I need to buy furniture, but I don't have a lot of money. My friend bought furniture from a rent-to-own store and it looks great. He said his monthly payment is really low. I think this sounds like a great deal. Is it too good to be true?

A: Rent-to-own purchases are attractive because they offer low monthly payments. However, these transactions should be approached with caution. Full term rent-to-own prices are often two to five times the retail price. A 17-state survey conducted by the U.S. Public Interest Group found that the average effective annual percentage rate on rent-to-own merchandise was 100 percent with some stores charging up to 275 percent These charges are usually legal because they are not the type of "interest" that is limited by law. In fact, long-term, rent-to-own contracts are so much more expensive than retail installment contracts that you could rent an item, pay several payments, return the item, purchase it on a retail installment program and still come out ahead.

There are additional complaints about the rent-to-own industry. Consumers claim that used items are sometimes portrayed as new items. Also, some stores engage in aggressive collection practices. For instance, if you cannot pay the monthly bill, the rent-to-own store can repossess your furniture. Some consumers have reported that rent-to-own stores repossessed their property forcibly, sometimes taking the wrong property.

Here are some things to ask yourself before you sign a contract with a rent-to-own business:

•Do you really need to buy the item right now? Can you save money and buy it with cash, or make a down payment on an installment plan? If you need it right away, can you buy it at a secondhand store or garage sale?

•Have you considered all of your credit options, such as borrowing from a bank, credit union or small loan company?

If you decide to purchase an item from a rent-to-own store, be sure to consider the following:

•What is the total cost of the item? You can determine this amount by multiplying the amount due each month by the number of payments

Make sure to include all the extra fees, such as finance, repair, handling or balloon payments at the end of the contract.

•Ask if you are allowed to purchase the item before the end of the contract. If so, how will that cost be calculated? Will you get credit for all of the payments you made up to that point?

•What is the repair policy? Will you get a replacement for the item during a repair? Who will pay for transporting the item to and from repair?

•Will the property be repossessed if a payment is late? If you return the property before the end of the contract, will you have to pay a penalty?

Make sure you:

•Shop around to find the best deal.

•Read the contract very carefully and make sure you understand all of the terms. All promises should be in writing.

•Check the Better Business Bureau and local and state consumer protection agencies for complaints against the business. The address for the Better Business Bureau in Columbus is 208 13th St., Columbus, Ga 31901–2137. The phone number is (706) 324-0712. The phone number for the Governor's Office of Consumer Affairs is (800) 869-1123.

Should you wish to discuss a legal problem involving a rent-to-own contract, you may make an appointment to speak with an attorney at the Legal Assistance Division by calling 545-3281.

Proper food preparation prevents disease

Sgt. Richard Stith
South Texas District Veterinary Command

Even though we are almost through summer, people continue to have barbecues. Often, along with them comes something many people don't think about — food poisoning.

The following is a list of common food borne diseases and ways to outsmart them.

Staphylococcus aureus is associated with moist meat dishes, meat salads, sliced meats, potato salad and cream-filled foods, such as eclairs, cream puffs and cake fillings.

It is found in the nasal passages of humans and animals, and on the skin, especially the face and hands. Staph, as it is commonly known, causes nausea, vomiting, severe cramping and diarrhea within 3 to 8 hours after ingestion.

Ways to outsmart Staph aureus:

•wash hands before handling food

•wear gloves to handle food if you have an infected cut on your hands

•clean utensils and countertops with hot soapy water and cook foods thoroughly

Salmonella is associated with raw meats, poultry, eggs, milk and the products made from them. It can be found on humans, pets, insects and rodents. It usually causes severe abdominal cramps, diarrhea and vomiting within 12 to 36 hours after eating contaminated food.

Ways to outsmart salmonella:

•cook foods thoroughly

•keep hot foods hot

•keep cooking utensils and food preparation surfaces clean

•refrigerate or freeze foods promptly

•reheat leftovers thoroughly to at least 160 degrees F

•wash hands before eating and after handling raw foods

E. Coli is associated with ground meat and raw milk. It is commonly found in people, animals and water. It can cause severe abdominal cramps, water and or bloody diarrhea and can lead to kidney failure and blood clots in the brain. Symptoms appear 2 to 9 days after eating contaminated food.

Ways to outsmart E. Coli:

•cook meat thoroughly

•wash hands before handling meat

•avoid cross-contamination, for example, do not handle raw pork items and switch to beef without washing hands first

Clostridium perfringens is associated with high protein foods like meat, poultry and eggs. It can be found in the soil, sewage, dust, crops, meat and poultry. It causes nausea, diarrhea, and gas pains 8 to 24 hours after eating contaminated foods.

Ways to outsmart clostridium:

•cook high protein food thoroughly

•keep hot foods hot

•keep cold foods cold and refrigerate foods in shallow containers.

Keep these food safety tips in mind when you are out there enjoying that good old barbecue and you will avoid unnecessary pain and discomfort.

Rangers lead way with combatives training

Ed Thomas
Troy State University-Fort Benning

Hand-to-hand fighting has been an integral part of ranger doctrine since 1756. The Ranger Training Brigade currently writes FM 21-150 Combatives, and the ranger community has a long tradition of preparing warriors to fight and win in any situation.

In 1995, the rangers launched a new chapter in the evolution of their hand-to-hand doctrine when they began to experiment with grappling-based innovations that have since expanded into a refined and structured system.

Staff Sgt. Matt Larsen, combatives NCOIC and instructor for the 75th Ranger Regiment, explained that the purpose of hand-to-hand combat reaches beyond the obvious fighting skills.

"This training also instills intangible qualities like confidence, mental and physical toughness, aggressiveness and physical fitness," he said.

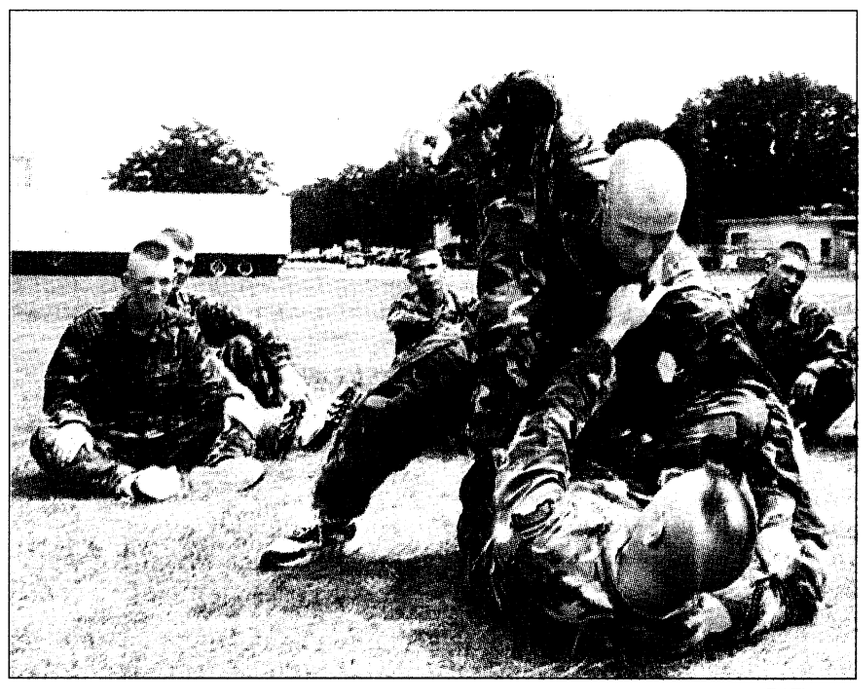
The ranger system draws primarily from Brazilian jiu jitsu as taught by Rorion and Royce Gracie. Wrestling, judo, Russian Sombo other martial arts of both sport and combat nature are also employed.

"Sombo, for instance, is a fighting system first developed by the Soviets in the early 1900s," Larsen said. "Sombo is an acronym that translates into self-protection without weapons. It was developed from at least 25 different Russian fighting styles and numerous Asian influences."

"We used the current combatives doctrine defined in FM 21-150 as our foundation," Staff Sgt. Jason Biel said. "From there we evaluated other martial arts and created a hand-to-hand concept that will carry us into the 21st Century."

There are nine core moves that comprise the basis for the ranger system. These include takedowns, escapes, offensive and defensive positions, chokes and jointlocks. From this base, rangers then practice strikes and kicks, advanced ground grappling, takedowns, pressure points and joint manipulations.

"There are a variety of ways to break or dislocate joints," Biel said . "We train to attack the shoulder, elbow, wrist, knee, ankle and other vulnerable areas."



"There are three principles underlying all of our combatives techniques," Larsen said. "We stress suppleness, a good base and correct body position."

Ranger combatives represent the best of many fighting methods, he added. By assimilating effective principles and techniques from numerous systems, rangers can develop efficient fighting skills according to their own body types and unique capabilities.

"This initiative has succeeded because leadership including Regimental Command Sgt. Maj. Michael Hall and Regimental Commander Col. Stanley McChrystal give us the freedom to think outside the box," Larsen said. "We are training students in the Ranger Indoctrination Program, Ranger Orientation Program and every ranger participates in combatives on a weekly basis. We train at all levels from squad and team to company."

The primary focus is on drills, but rangers also test their efficiency in controlled competition.

"Most of our practical application is on the ground. This avoids injury and creates a proficient fighter in a short time.

Ed Thomas

Staff Sgt. Jason Biel and Staff Sgt. Matt Larsen, both of the 75th Ranger Regiment, demonstrate attack and defense positions.

We also test our throwing skills at tournaments inside and outside the ranger community," Biel said. "Hand-to-hand training is a process that is never complete, and we stress the importance of continued improvement."

"Rangers have always led the way in physical training and combatives," said U. S. Army Physical Fitness School (USAPFS) Instructional Systems Specialist Steve Van Camp. "They stay on the cutting edge because they are always evaluating and perfecting their doctrine."

There was a time in the not-to-distant past when hand-to-hand combat was considered relatively unimportant by many commanders, Van Camp added. "The rangers have once again brought us back to reality. Hand-to-hand training is fundamental, and the rest of the Army should be paying attention to its value," he said.

"Hand-to-hand is a fundamental fighting skill," Larsen said. "It instills a basic intuitive understanding of human movement and how to respond to infinite combinations of mechanical forces. It is as close to an aggressor as you can get. Nothing can take its place for shaping an effective fighter."

For more information on the 75th Ranger Regiment's hand-to-hand program, call Larsen at 545-3805.

USAMU rifle team dominate national matches

Spc. Michael J. Brock
U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit

The U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit's Service Rifle Team dominated the service rifle portion of the National Matches at Camp Perry, Ohio Aug. 4 through 19.

Grant L. Singley won the Service Rifle National Championship for the second time in three years breaking the old record by three points and 13 Xs with a score of 2, 372 points and 111 Xs. An X is a center shot used in tie-breaking.

"There have been several people who have won the championship more than once," Singley said. "I just wanted to go out there and do my best."

This time, his best was good enough as Singley went home with several individual match trophies and even more team trophies.

The Service Rifle Team took home the National Team Trophy, Enlisted Men's Trophy and the Roumanian Team Trophy for the 1,000-Yard Rifle Match.

"This was my first year coaching the team," said Rand D. Bentson, coach. "Last year I was shooting on these winning teams."

The team also tied the score for the winning team in the Rochester National Defense Club Trophy Team Match.

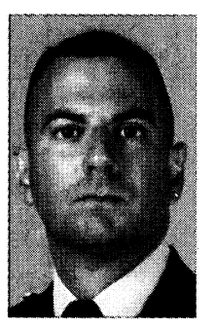
Other results include Christopher S. Hatcher who won the Members Trophy again with a score of 199 points and 10 Xs. Singley placed second in the Vandenber Cup Match with a score of 795 points and 38 Xs and Norman L. Anderson won the Navy Cup Match with a score of 197 points and 6 Xs.

"We didn't win as many team matches this year as we did last year," Singley said. "But, we did win more individual matches."

With any shooting match, the weather plays a big factor in how well the scores will be, Bentson added.

"The first week, the weather was really bad and it rained almost everyday," Singley said. "But the second week was great."

But if it wasn't for the gunsmiths, the shooters could not accomplish what they do, said Erik A. Burge.



"We have some of the best gunsmiths in the world," Burge said. "And that's what keeps us winning."

Designation 9000

CFC begins Sept. 25

Michele Hanson
Special to the Bayonet©

For those who want to invest some money into a safe market that will yield a positive result or simply use their hard-earned dollars in a beneficial way, the Combined Federal Campaign (CFC) may provide the answer.

According to Chuck Walls, Fort Benning's garrison manager, the annual CFC drive, which will begin Sept. 25 and run through Nov. 6, is the one time of year when federal workplace contributions have a significant role in touching millions of people through various charity organizations.

"The CFC drive is a wonderful opportunity for federal employees to pick a charity near and dear to their hearts and make a contribution directly to it," Walls said.

According to Walls, something tragic happens at one time or another.

A friend, family member or loved one might be directly affected by disease, illness or accident and need the aid rendered by charitable organizations. Knowing someone who has suffered from an ailment or infliction may guide people towards certain types of charities.

"For some people it may be heart disease, for others cancer or Lupus, but none of us are ever untouched," said Walls. "That is why it is important for people to take time and consider giving to a charity organization."

Designation 9000, "Communities that care" is one aspect of the campaign that will receive special attention this year. In previous years, there were two local designation funds, a Fort Benning fund and a Columbus fund.

"Having two competing funds seemed counterproductive because we all live in one big community (Fort Benning, Columbus and Phenix City)," Walls said. "More than half of our Soldiers and family members who live off-post utilize many of the activities provided by the United Way and charity organizations."

This year, the 9000 fund will keep it simple by forming a partnership that will benefit the entire community. The 9000 designation will support the United Way, which includes organizations such as Battered Women, Boys' Club, Girls' Club, Easter Seals, Red Cross and the Salvation Army.

Fort Benning organizations that benefit from 9000 include: Community Life, Patch Preschool Program, Santa's Castle, Boy Scouts, Girl Scouts, Youth Activities, Army Community Service and the Red Cross.

"When we solicit money this year, we will tell people to please give to their favorite organization, but at the same time consider keeping a little bit of money in our community," Walls said. "The United Way did some research and found that Soldiers and family members get a lot of mileage out of local organizations that benefit from the CFC drive. It makes good sense to keep contributions local and help the entire community."

Walls added that contributors may also pick out a specific local charity organization by indicating a certain designation on the form.

A unit key person training session will be held at 9:30 a.m. today in classroom 7, Infantry Hall. CFC key people will be located at each activity on post to assist federal employees with their donations or questions.

The CFC will officially kick off at 4 p.m. Sept.25 at the Officers' Club.

"Last year local federal employees contributed $475,000, obtaining 95 percent of the 1997 CFC goal. The 1998 CFC goal is an obtainable $500,000 with possibilities of surpassing that goal," said Walls.

For more information about CFC, call Capt. Erik Berdy at 545-1500.

Post welcomes new AC during ceremony

Pvt. 2 Nicole M. Graham
Bayonet staff writer

Fort Benning said farewell to Brig. Gen. Walter Wojdakowski and welcomed Brig. Gen. Russel L. Honore` during Wednesday's Honor Bayonet ceremony at Infantry Hall.

Wojdakowski served as assistant commandant of the U.S. Army Infantry School and Deputy Commanding General of Fort Benning since Jan. 21, 1997.

"He (Wojdakowski) has done very well in running the Infantry school," Post Commanding General Maj. Gen. Carl F. Ernst said. "Wojdakowski made sure the Infantry School ran well and to a very high standard."

During his tour here, Wojdakowski improved upon the training of the Soldiers in USAIS by continuing such programs as the Infantry travel team.

"The Infantry Travel Team is an extremely important program," Wojdakowski said. "We get feedback about how the units in the field are doing."

"It also provides units with accurate information and updates on events happening at USAIS to these units," he explained.

Wojdakowski's next mission assignment is Chief of Military Operations in Kuwait.

"Wojdakowski has the credentials of a heavy force commander," Ernst said. "He is also a distinguished mechanized Infantryman and grunt. It is no accident he is going to Kuwait."

Ernst noted that Wojdakowski will live in the same area he helped liberate as a battalion commander during the Gulf War, Kuwait City.

Wojdakowski will complete such duties in Kuwait as U.S. senior defense representative, principal advisor to the Kuwaiti armed forces, security assistance officer and coordinator responsibilities for force protection.

"I look forward to working with the embassy and the Kuwaitis. They are great allies," Wojdakowski said.

With Wojdakowski's departure, Fort Benning receives incoming assistant commandant Honore`, who was described by Ernst as a perfect match to replace Wojdakowski.

Abrams takes command of TRADOC

Army News Service

Gen. John N. Abrams became the tenth commanding general of Training and Doctrine Command in a ceremony at Fort Monroe, Va., Monday.

He assumed command from Gen. William W. Hartzog, who is retiring after 35 years of Army service.

"When you have someone like John Abrams to take Bill Hartzog's place it makes the departure a little bit easier to handle," said Gen. Dennis J. Reimer, Army chief of staff, who hosted the change of command and retirement ceremony.

"You see, he's cut from the same cloth. You look at his bio ... you see he has served in peace and war. He's a muddy boots Soldier."

Reimer pointed out that Abrams', father, Gen. Creighton W. Abrams, was Army chief of staff when TRADOC was created in 1973. "Now (his son) will help lead it into the next century," the Army leader said.

Reimer noted that Hartzog is the first ever alumnus of The Citadel in South Carolina to become a four-star general. Then he spoke of some of Hartzog's accomplishments during 35 years.

"He's a Soldier through and through, but he's a very special Soldier. His legacy as the Army architect will live forever.

"He was the J-3 of SouthCom (Southern Command). He put together and executed the brilliant campaign plan that we refer to as Just Cause," Reimer said. "We study that today because that was an extraordinary achievement.

"Bill Hartzog is a builder. Anyone who has seen the recent history of the Army advanced experimentation at Fort Hood (Texas) ... and the division redesign we went through knows that these were daunting challenges," Reimer said.

Hartzog said he fell in love with Soldiering in 1959 when he visited The Citadel on a recruiting weekend.

"It was guns and drums and uniforms and it began a love affair at that instant that has yet to dampen in any way in my heart," he said.

He mentioned the people who were special to him at nearly every one of his assignments. Many of them, like himself, attained leadership positions in the Army.

Hartzog said he has come full circle from four years earlier. He told of going into his new office after becoming TRADOC commander and finding a letter in the desk addressed to him from his predecessor, Gen. Frederick M. Franks Jr.

"He said the United States Army cannot be without the valiant service of Training and Doctrine Command. John, there's a letter in the desk for you," Hartzog told Abrams.

Abrams said in his remarks that he had three duties. "First is to tell the troops 'hooah.' It's hot and I understand," he said of the warm Virginia morning.

"Second, to the commanders. All of the orders that we've got, that Gen. Hartzog and I've been committed to on behalf of the Army and the Soldiers of the Army over the ... last year remain in effect," Abrams said.

"Third one is to tell you that Ceil (Mrs. Abrams) and I are fired up about this," he said. "And, most importantly, we look forward to representing you ... and you can count on us."

Checkout the Newcomer's Guide in this week's issue for information on Fort Benning services and activities.

The post wide yard sale will be held 8 a.m. to 2 p.m. Sept. 26. All Fort Benning housing residents are encouraged to participate.

For more information, call Chuck Walls at 545-1500.

Organized sports teach life-long lessons

Michele Hanson
Special to the Bayonet©

Participation in organized sports facilitates a host of useful experiences and interactions that play an important role in the social development of our children.

commentary

I have been involved with organized sports most of my life. During the past 13 years, I became an athletic trainer, employed as a coach for various sports and most importantly a mother of three sports- minded children. I have experienced the sports world from all aspects, if you include a 15-year marriage to an ex-professional athlete with an extreme case of sports addiction.

Through out the years I have witnessed parents acting in ways they would never think of, while watching their child play sports ("Sideline Parent Syndrome"), to include over-zealous coaches obsessed with winning and the stacking of children's teams just to win. However, not many people comment on the positive aspects of organized sports.

Organized sports teach positive interactions between people. Every time I coach a new team, I start with 15 unique individuals, each possessing different weaknesses and strengths. With practice and time, the individuals transform into a team; each child contributing experiences and expertise that add to the success of the team. Through interaction and guidance, the children learn to be friendly, respectful, and cooperative. Each player becomes a team player whether he likes his teammates or not, in order to complete the mission successfully.

Learning to be a team player is beneficial in this highly competitive society. No one wants to work with a "me first" individual, who only looks out for number one.

I remember watching a football team a few years ago run lap after lap for the punishment of a lazy teammate. Why punish the entire team, I thought? When asked, the coach explained that one player's problem is the entire team's problem because they are a "Team" and must learn to work together.

In addition to learning teamwork, organized sports offers an environment where children can learn the basic principles of democracy. It is here where the rules of the game must be followed. Children learn that bucking the rules results in a negative outcome for them and their teammates. Players become responsible for their own actions. They learn that their actions are not only a reflection of them, but also have a direct impact on the entire team.

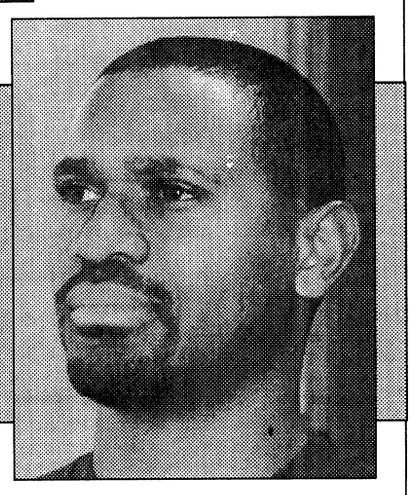
After watching countless games, I realize that children learn about discipline, but not in the same sense, as an adult would view discipline. The first year my son played basketball, he diligently practiced shooting everyday after school. I didn't ask him to practice; he practiced because he wanted to get better. If he improved his shot, he might be able to make a positive contribution to the team. If a child always strikes out or misses the shot, he may practice very hard until the skill is mastered or at least improved. Children in this way, learn the value of hard work regardless of the outcome. My son is no Michael Jordan, but he has learned, inadvertently, about hard work, discipline and sacrifice.

Participation in sports also accentuates a healthy life-style and is the primary way to introduce the concept of physical fitness to children. There is nothing better for a child's growing body than proper nutrition and exercise.

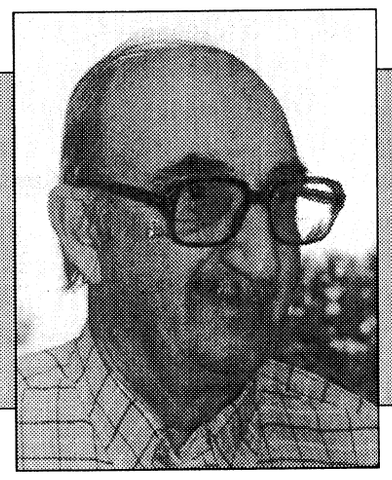
Children who participate in sports develop a healthier life style attitude; feel good about themselves and this ultimately raises self esteem. As healthier adults leading active lives, there is less illness, better self-images and more positive energy.

As a trainer, coach and mother I feel there are many positive factors to organized sports. If we see organized sports as a means rather than an end, we can use it as a way to help our children meet challenges, face adversities and become healthier. Even if a child has no athletic ability, the exercise is great and the child receives the opportunity to make new friends and learn positive life experiences.

Children in sports experience competitive settings and face, at times "real" world challenges. They learn to overcome hardships along the way, and how to accept success or defeat gracefully. These challenges early in life may help prepare them for competition in business and between co-workers in our highly competitive society.



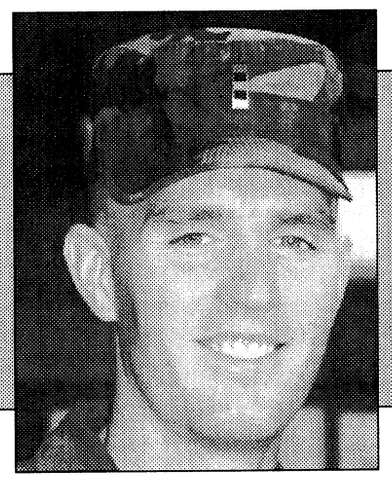
VARIOUS VOICES

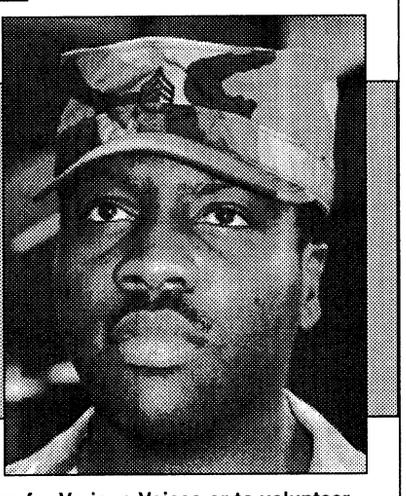


What do you think children get from organized sports?

Laura Stafford, family member — "I feel organized sports gives children a way to positively occupy their free time. It also teaches them team work and self esteem."

Sgt. Shawn R. Wimbush, Fort Campbell, Ky. — " Organized sports gives kids a sense of competitiveness, but it also teaches them how to be a team player."





Retired Master Sgt. Eugene Munz, Phenix City, Ala. — "Sports teach children how to have fun at playing a game even when you do not win."

Angela Mathews, visitor — "Children get a sense of discipline from sports. They also learn sportsmanship, which will help them everyday in life."

Chief Warrant Officer 2 Travis B. Haley, 498th Medical Company (Air Ambulance), 36th Engineer Group (Construction) — "Children can learn the value of leadership, how to work as a team and the value of discipline."

Staff Sgt. Lance J. Sibley, Bradley New Equipment Training Team, 29th Infantry Regiment — "Organized sports encourage children to interact with different types of children and exposes them to different sports. They also learn how to be fair."

545-BOSS

Dial 545-BOSS is the commander's action line for Soldiers, family members and civilians to call when they have problems or complaints that can't be resolved elsewhere.

While it is not a substitute for the chain of command or for agencies established to provide assistance, the line offers another means of communication between Fort Benning's community and commanders.

The Bayonet features some of the calls that may benefit other members of the Fort Benning community.

Call: Caller is concerned about shortage of child care on post. She wanted to know if the Army has ever subsidized slots off post.

Directorate of Community Activities response:

The child care coordinator explained that in order to serve more families, DCA will increase the number of child care homes and add full-day infant slots at Tot Town in October 1998. It was explained that the Army has the option of contracting with off-post centers that meet the military criteria. However, regulations do not permit the military to subsidize private business operations.

Call: Several callers interested in what they can do to keep the Main Post Craft Shop open.

Directorate of Community Activities response:

The director of Arts and Crafts Branch informed the callers that the post is in the process of soliciting for contracts to operate the frame shop, ceramic shop and trophy & t-shirt shop. They are doing all they can to prevent the closing of the craft shop.

Call: The caller was concerned about vehicle registration decal placement on vehicles.

Directorate of Public Safety response:

The motor vehicles that are owned or operated by a person who resides, performs duty and or is employed and or frequently visits on the post will be registered within 10 working days of arrival on post. At time of registration, POV owners are informed of the proper placement of registration decals. Since the commencement of the MP checkpoint, DPS has confiscated 108 decals that were not affixed IAW instructions issued at the time of registration.

Call: McGraw Manor residents expressed concern about inadequate parking in the housing area and wonder why they are not assigned designated parking.

Directorate of Public Works:

A project to add 12 spaces is scheduled to be completed by mid-September in the area of the caller's quarters. Designated parking in McGraw Manor has been evaluated and found not to be a solution for inadequate parking. DPW has targeted selected areas which have a significant deficiency in parking for the number of families living in the area. The first phase of the project will add 60 spaces in the 800 block of Arrowhead. Plans are to add 120 more spaces when funding is available.

Fort Benning boasts customer-oriented post

With the passing of the Labor Day weekend, we also mark the end of summer.

That means most permanent change of station moves are over, Soldiers are establishing themselves into their new jobs and children are getting acquainted with new friends and teachers.

To help our newcomers and reacquaint our old timers, The Bayonet is publishing a special supplement. It can be a valuable tool and I encourage you to put it in a handy location to use as a quick reference guide to the many services and activities that are available to our Soldiers and family members.

You will find abbreviated "rules of the road" that can be attached to your refrigerator. This is a good way to acquaint you with some of the "dos" and "don'ts" we have at Fort Benning to make the post a more enjoyable and safer community in which to live and work.

Also provided is information about the locations and hours of various Morale, Welfare and Recreation facilities, such as the auto craft shop, bowling centers and stores on post.

As newcomers, you will find Fort Benning a customer-oriented post. If you see something that needs changing, something that we are doing that doesn't make sense, let us know.

There are comment cards in the various offices you will visit and the 545-BOSS line is open 24 hours a day.

You are welcome additions to Fort Benning and we want to do everything possible to assist you in your transition from your last duty station to Fort Benning, the "Best Installation in the Army."

Ask your help in ensuring we are the best in training; taking care of Soldiers and families; taking care of civilian employees and our retirees and being good neighbors in the Chattahoochee Valley.

DTS project officers receive recognition

Pvt. 2 Nicole M. Graham
Bayonet staff writer

Two of Fort Benning's project officers from the Directorate of Threat and Security were recently recognized for operating one of the best anti-terrorism programs in the Department of Defense.

Felipe A. Mojica, project officer and Sgt. Kassia Smith, military intelligence analyst, received Honorable Mention and Best in the Army awards for their work in training Soldiers, family members and civilians concerning anti-terrorism.

"Between the two of us, we have had a lot of success training more than 2,500 Soldiers," Majica said. "We give classes to the Navy, Air Force, Marines, Department of Defense, Military Police, and civilians. We even presented an anti-terrorism class to a group of high school kids going to Russia."

Classes are offered to anyone who leaves the Continental United States (CONUS).

Keeping family members informed of potential threats is just as important as informing the service member, Mojica said.

"We have seen a change in the mindset of Soldiers and their family members who are going overseas," Mojica said.

According to Mojica, family members are more aware of the importance of the class, and they see more involvement of families.

Along with training people to deal with terrorist situations, they also stay informed of situations that happen around the world.

The two project officers have been called upon to provide on-the-spot special reports to those who depart for overseas operations.

"I maintain a database that I keep terrorist incidents around the world logged into," Smith said. "It is a huge job. There is always something going on in the world."

"We also maintain contact with a liaison with the FBI and other organizations to stay on top of current threats," Mojica said.

Being recognized as Best in the Army has brought awards and recognition to Smith and Mojica. They have received DoD plaques, Commander's Coins, and letters of recognition from the commander.

Smith was awarded the Army Commendation Medal and Mojica was awarded the Civilian Achievement Medal.

"It feels great (to receive this honor)," Smith said. "I feels great to be recognized. Although, without the work of the team it would not have been possible to receive this award."

Next year they are hoping to beat this year's first place winner, Sigonella Navel Base, Italy.

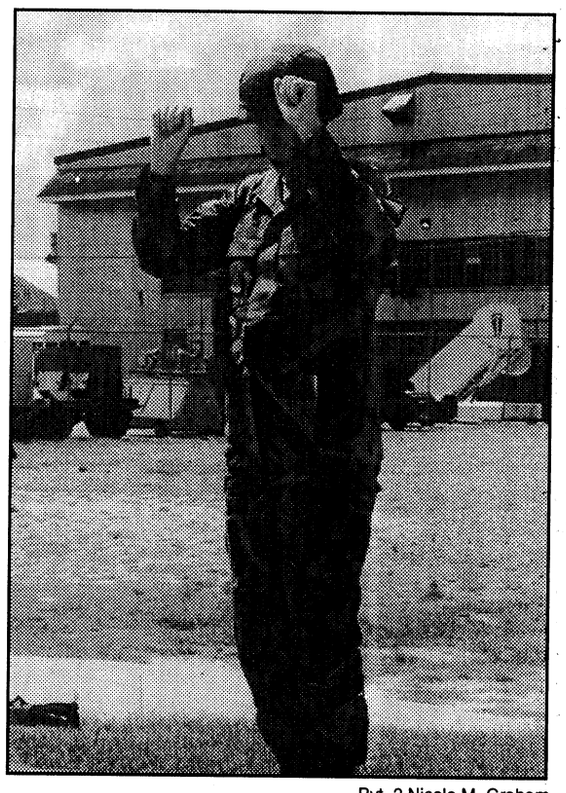
Ernst said this is the second time Honore' follows Wojdakowski in an assignment, the last time replacing Wojdakowski as the senior mechanized Infantry trainer "Scorpion 7" at the National Training Center at Fort Irwin, Calif.

Honore' was also a battalion commander during Desert Storm and commanded the 1st Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division at Fort Stewart.

His most recent assignment was the Assistant Division Commander for Support for the 1st Cavalry Division at Fort Hood, Texas. He prepared the unit for its deployment to Bosnia.



On coming to Fort Benning, Honore' said he was glad to be back where high standards of training are set.

"When I went to refresher jump training, Sergeant Airborne asked my aide how long it had been since he had jumped. The aide told him a year and the Black hat said that wouldn't be a problem. Then he turned to the new Infantry School Command Sergeant Major, and asked him. The sergeant major responded with 11 years. Then it was my turn. I told him '27 years,' and the Blackhat said he wasn't asking my age." Honore' said.

"But you know, it all came back to me. When you are taught by sergeants, you don't forget, and I want to make sure that tradition continues," he continued. "I am glad to be in a place where people understand the meaning of Hooah."

A few words of friendly advice were given by Wojdakowski to Honore' on the mission ahead.

"The colonels and everyone Honore' will work with are top notch professionals," Wojdakowski said. "Trust in their judgment and everything will run just fine."

General receives nomination

Army News Service

Gen. Eric K. Shinseki has been nominated for assignment as Vice Chief of Staff, U.S. Army by President Clinton. Shinseki is currently the commanding general, U.S. Army Europe and Seventh Army, Germany, a position he has held since Aug. 5, 1997. Shinseki also serves as the commander of the Stabilization Force (SFOR) in Bosnia-Herzegovina since July 30, 1997.

Shinseki, a 33-year Army veteran who served in several Armor officer positions during his career, was born in Lihue on the island of Kauai, Hawaii, in November 1942. He graduated from West Point in 1965 and holds a Master of Arts degree in English Literature from Duke University.

"During a grueling year, he balanced the unprecedented command requirements as commanding general, U.S. Army Europe and the commander, Stabilization Force, Bosnia," said Army Chief of Staff Gen. Dennis J. Reimer of Shinseki. "He consistently demonstrated the characteristics of both a great warfighter and the type of senior leader we need to manage the diverse structure of the Army through its current challenges into a trained and ready landforce for the new century."

Lt. Gen. Montgomery C. Meigs has been nominated for appointment to full general and assignment to replace Shinseki as U.S. Army Europe commanding general. Since August 1997, Meigs has served as the commanding general, U.S. Army Combined Arms Center, Fort Leavenworth, Kan.

Soldiers tackle wartime scenarios during exercise

Bayonet staff writer

Medics from the 690th Medical Company (Ground Ambulance), 36th Engineer Group (Construction), found themselves on Pierce Range as they participated in the company's first maneuver live-fire exercise Sept. 10.

According to Capt. Tony Tidwell, commander of the 690th Medical Company, the maneuver live-fire exercise took lessons learned from previous threat engagements and incorporated them into a scenario to train the medics.

Working together, the 75 Soldiers set out to accomplish a very important goal — save another Soldier's life.

Tidwell said the scenario had six- Soldier teams working together to evacuate a casualty while reacting to enemy threat.

The exercise began when the Soldiers received an operational order and were briefed about the mission at hand. They went on to conduct a training rehearsal and pre-combat check before finally making their way to the objective rally point (ORP). At the ORP, the medics picked up the casualty and began the scenario.

Scrambling together down firing lanes, four of the six Soldiers carried a litter, while the other two became the front of the operation as they ahead to provide cover for the others.

Tidwell said the Soldiers were required to rotate through the positions and provide suppressive fire while negotiating obstacles and protecting the casualty from enemy threat.

Before the day ended, the Soldiers had completed three iterations of the scenario. The iterations included a number of dry runs, blank runs and finally the live-fire portion of the exercise.

Tidwell said the exercise helps prepare medics for what they may encounter on the battlefield and gives them the skills they need to be successful in the face of enemy threat.

He said it is very important for Soldiers to participate in exercises like this because a day may come when they are doing it for real.

"Since we fall under the 18th Airborne Corps, there's no telling when we may be called upon to support a contingency mission," Tidwell said. "At least by receiving this training we will be better prepared to perform our duties when the time comes."

According to Sgt. Judy Hobson, squad leader, 690th Medical Company, the exercise prepares Soldiers for combat by improving their coordinating movement and communication skills.

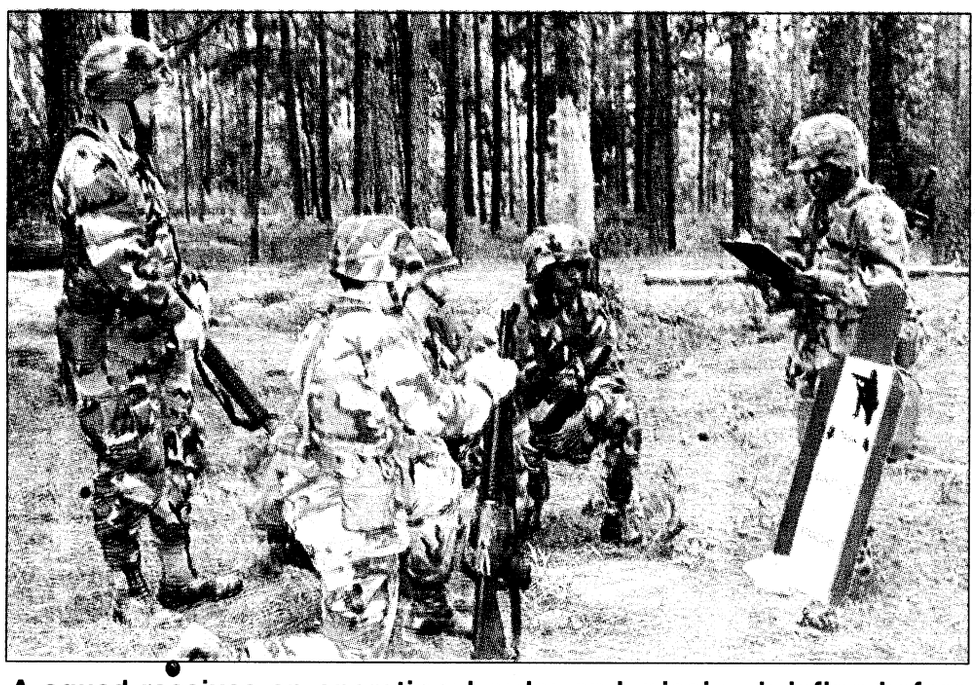
"One of the most important things we worked on is effective communication," Hobson said. "It's vital to know the right communication signs and signals to get from point A to point B without getting wounded or killed. It is also important to know how to properly coordinate movement so that Soldiers will not cause further injury to the casualty."

Hobson said the Soldiers learned that teamwork is the key element of the exercise and success depends upon how well everyone works together.

She added that the exercise was demanding but essential for the medics because it is not often that they get to practice for a combat mission.

"We rarely get to pick up our weapons or participate in something like this because of the demands of our job," Hobson said. "But it's definitely good for us to get out, practice and have a little fun."

Spc. Terrance Montgomery, 690th Medical Company, said the exercise was a challenge, but excellent training for everyone.



"This kind of training gets us ready for real war time deployments," Montgomery said. "The training involved a lot of teamwork and that's what why we did it — to learn to help each other out at any cost."

Tidwell went on to say that everyone was pleased with the results of the exercise and agreed that it was a success.

He said there are plans to continue the live-fire training at least once a year and hopefully break it down into platoon level and conduct similar exercises once a quarter.

Sgt. Judy Hobson points to a model on a sand table during the briefing portion of the exercise.

OCS completes class 5-98 project

Senior Officer Candidate Hope Hanten
3rd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment (OCS)

Candidates from the Officer Candidate School, Class 5-98 completed their community project on Saturday by working in conjunction with Habitat for Humanity to bring several home sites closer to completion.

The majority of candidates had no prior homebuilding experience, but fortunately the Habitat facilitators were able to utilize a couple of skills with which the candidates have become familiar over the past 13 weeks — shoveling dirt and policing trash. Candidates more proficient in homebuilding worked on roofing.

Every OCS class selects a project to work on, which benefits the Columbus community.

Habitat for Humanity is a non-profit organization, which builds homes for low-income families, through the use of contributions of time, money, and building goods.

"We chose to work for Habitat for Humanity because contributing to the construction of a home afforded us the opportunity to make a lasting contribution to not only the homeowners, but also to the Columbus community," said Senior Officer Candidate Wayne Ludwig, class representative for the project .

Senior officer candidates from OCS Class 5-98 spread dirt during a community project Saturday in Columbus. The class chose to work with Habitat for Humanity.

Although the projects candidates participate in are a part of the curriculum at OCS, the experience gives candidates the opportunity to experience the feeling of selfless service in knowing they are helping others without personal gain.

"Owning a home is a long term goal for many, but only a dream for others, which makes the work we have done very fulfilling," Senior Officer Candidate Tia Benning said.

"Doing something beneficial to help someone in need have a better home, is just as rewarding for me, as it is for them," said Senior Officer Candidate Kenneth Pitre.

The candidates had a great time working as a team and accomplishing something beneficial for the community.

Reserve unit renovates javelin range

Pvt. 2 Nicole M. Graham
Bayonet staff writer

Soldiers from the U.S. Army Reserves' 1st Battalion (Engineer), 108th Division from Fort Jackson S.C., began renovations Sept. 7 on Monar Range.

"This was the opportunity to reciprocate and provide mutual support," said Project Coordinator Sgt. Daniel Duval, Company B, 2nd Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment. "Monar gave the unit a place to train and we cleared the range for the Soldiers of Fort Benning."

The construction also provided the engineers with an area where they can conduct their annual two week training exercise.

The 35 Soldiers arrived at Fort Benning to restore the javelin gunnery range, which will be used to train Company B, 2nd Bn., 29th Inf. Regt. Soldiers using the javelin, a medium anti-tank weapons system which requires a suitable training area for Fort Benning Soldiers.

Training operations that took place on Monar were relocated to other ranges around post and the training on Monar ceased in 1981.

The Fort Jackson unit, which visits Fort Benning once a year for training, was contacted by Fort Benning Range Control and notified of the condition of the range. They were then tasked to coordinate efforts to clear the range.

Trees, bushes and weather eroded roads needed to be cleared and improved upon before training could begin taking place. The Soldiers then went to work to improve the condition of the range.

"The range was in poor condition on our arrival," said Master Sgt. Wreco Reese, an instructor with 1st Bn., (Eng.), 108th Div. "We are removing all undergrowth and trees, building up all existing roads, ditching, crowning, which provides drainage to avoid erosion and filling all existing holes on the range."

"Soldiers were not able to effectively train on the ranges here with certain types of missions," Duval said. "Another range was available, but it offered only 850 meters of training area which could not provide effective training due to the limited space. Monar Range spans 500 meters wide and 1,200 meters long, providing twice the amount of area of the other available range.

"We are having this range cleared so the Soldiers will have an area large enough when it is needed, where they can train properly," Duval said.

The improvements on the range have also opened the doors to give the unit the opportunity to train and qualify 20 Fort Jackson Soldiers as heavy equipment operators.

The Soldier had to learn to operate and qualify on motorgraters, bulldozers, front-end scoop loaders and pan trucks by the end of the two weeks.

Spc. Joel Landing, a Soldier with the reserve unit, learned how to operate the bulldozer.

"The bulldozers allow us to knock down trees and push all debris off the range so someone can come through and cut all of the high grass and weeds down," Landing said.

The Fort Jackson Soldiers received instructions on operating motorgraters. They were shown how to create a v-ditch.

V-ditches help in water drainage and protect roads from water erosion, according to instructor Sgt. 1st Class Walter Freeman.

"The students are doing real well," said Master Sgt. Walter H. Anderson, an instructor. "This is very good training for them."

"The curriculum being taught is the same no matter if the students are active duty or reserve. This is the Total Army School System concept," said battalion commander Lt. Col. Mike Marchand. "The skills the students acquire can be transferred into an active duty, reserve, National Guard and civilian workforce.

The students are set to graduate in conjunction with the unit's completion of the work today.

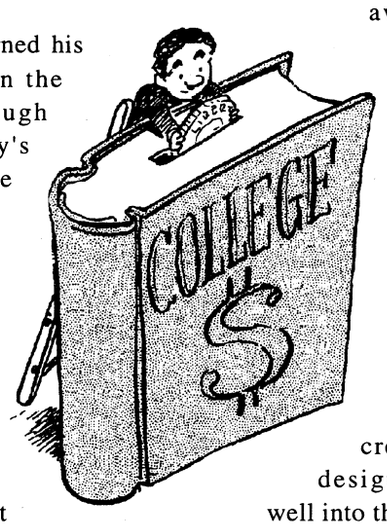
Military college awards ROTC scholarship



Army News Service

The U.S. Army Cadet Command announced Sept. 9 the establishment of the Gen. William W. Hartzog ROTC Scholarship at the Military College of South Carolina, The Citadel, in Charleston, S.C.

Hartzog, a Citadel graduate, retires from the Army Sept. 14 as commander of the U.S. Army Training and Doctrine Command at Fort Monroe, Virginia. He has served more than 35 years on active duty.

The four-year scholarship is the first and only one of its kind among the more than 9,000 ROTC scholarships in effect.

It will provide the recipient up to $64,000 toward tuition, an annual book allowance of $450 and a stipend of up to $1,500 each year. The U.S. Army Cadet Command, which operates the Army's ROTC program, will administer the scholarship.

Hartzog earned his commission in the Infantry through the Army's Reserve Officers' Training Corps program at The Citadel.

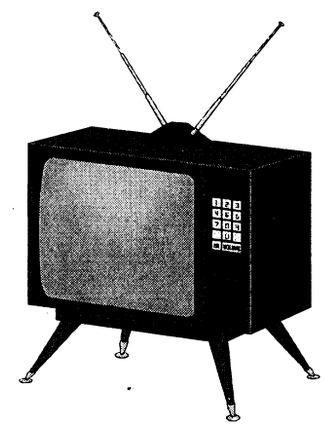
He also earned a Master's degree in psychology at Appalachian State University and is a graduate of the Infantry School, the Marine Corps Command and Staff College and the Army War College.

In an era of downsizing, Hartzog led the U.S. Army away from Cold War structures and doctrines to a smaller, modernized, and more lethal fighting force.

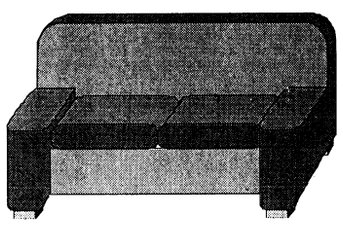
Additionally, Hartzog's leadership at TRADOC was instrumental in the design and creation of a force designed to perform well into the 21st Century.

Cadet Command will award the Gen. William W. Hartzog Scholarship annually to a freshman cadet entering The Citadel.

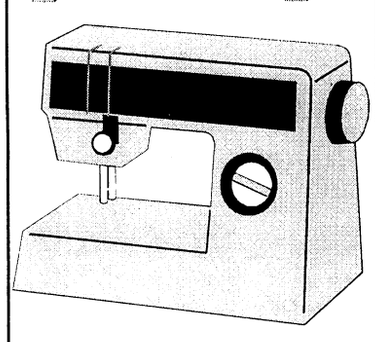
The scholarship recipient will be the student who best exemplifies the ethics, values, intelligence, and caring leadership for which Hartzog is noted.



The scholarship will be awarded annually on a competitive basis.



Selection criteria will include academic excellence, proven leadership ability, participation in extracurricular activities and the desire to serve as an Army officer.



Each recipient will also receive an individual plaque commemorating his or her selection as a Hartzog Scholarship winner.

Government makes new, 'tough-to-copy' $20 bill

American Forces Press Service

WASHINGTON — The government rolls out its new redesigned high-tech, tough-to-copy $20 bill worldwide Sept. 24.

Revamped $50 and $100 notes are already in circulation. The $20 bill, though, is key to thwarting counterfeiters, because it's the most widely circulated "big bill" and the most counterfeited, Secret Service spokeswoman Chaun Yount said. The Secret Service — the organization that guards the president is the Treasury Department unit that oversees counterfeiting issues.

Both sides of the redesigned $20 bills include numerous anti-counterfeiting measures, she said. Security features include embedded threads with micro-printing; a watermark; a large, off-center portrait of President Andrew Jackson with micro-printed words and hard-to-copy engraved details; the Federal Reserve seal; and color-shifting ink.

Yount said people are the first line of defense against counterfeiting. People need to be familiar with the new twenties because they'll be seeing a lot of them, she said. According to U.S. Treasury figures, the mints print $20 notes in numbers second only to $1 notes.

"We always have $20 bills in our pocket, if we're lucky," she noted. "The general public pays little attention to the $20 bill because it's the most commonly used note. Counterfeiters look at that as an opportunity. They like twenties because of their 'nice profit margin' – they have the highest face value that doesn't draw most people's attention, and passable fake twenties cost no more to make than fake fives and tens.

"People who are passing counterfeit money are looking for a high volume of cash," she said. "They target people who are rushed and don't take time to authenticate the bills," she said.

Military people are not typical targets of counterfeiters. However, the Treasury Department has been working with possible targets, such as the military exchange services, to train employees on the look and security features of the new $20 bill.

In 1995, $231 million worth of counterfeit U.S. money was seized worldwide, Yount noted.

That dropped to $64 million in 1996 and 1997 after the similarly redesigned $100 and $50 notes were introduced.

She said the new notes will spread as fast as financial institutions order $20 bills and circulate them.

"So for some time, the old and new $20 bills will circulate at the same time," she noted. "As the old $20 bills wear out, they'll be replaced with the new ones. The life of a $20 bill is about two years."

The backside of the new $20 note contains fine-line printing patterns; an easy-to-read large $20 numeral; and an embedded

Faith hosts annual open house

Erin A. Nash
Special to the Bayonet©

They were hurriedly dashing through the corridors, schedules in hand, trying to find their next class. No, it wasn't the first day of school, it was open house for parents at Faith Middle School, held Monday.

The evening began with the welcoming of parents by Gail Wilson, Fort Benning Schools Director of staff development and interim principal.

"Let me say that it has been a real treat to share in the beginning of this school year," Wilson said. "In just this short time, I can tell you a couple of things for sure. First, your children are absolutely wonderful and secondly, I'm confident that there is no finer group of educators anywhere than the ones here at Faith."

Wilson went on to give parents a brief synopsis of what is expected of both students and parents this school year.

"The first day of school I had the privilege of meeting with all students here at Faith. I want to share with you a couple of words that seem to run throughout everything I said and those two words were 'high expectations.' I want you to know that we have very high expectations for our students here.

"It is extremely important that students see their parents and educators as members of the same team — a team that is dedicated to making sure that they learn the skills necessary for a successful future," Wilson said.

Wilson then introduced Philomena Mubangu, vice president of fund raising for the Parent Teacher Organization (PTO).

Mubangu stressed that the PTO is not just about fund raising.

"You're all members of the PTO by virtue of being parents. We are not a fund-raising group, but participants in education. We can make it great if we all participate," Mubangu said.

Wilson then recognized Dr. Dell McMullen, superintendent of Fort Benning Schools and introduced the school's new vice-principal Rose Brooks.

The entire faculty and support staff were also introduced to the parents.

A short video describing Faith and it's school days and the various clubs and activities that happen throughout the school year was shown.

Language arts teacher Libby Kurinec talks with Philomena Mubangu and her daughter Anuarite during Faith's open house.

Parents then proceeded to the their child's first-period class and each consecutive class thereafter, getting the opportunity to listen to each teacher describe the class and to ask those teachers questions.

Eighth-grade history and earth science teacher David Bunt said open house is important because it's the first opportunity to meet with parents.

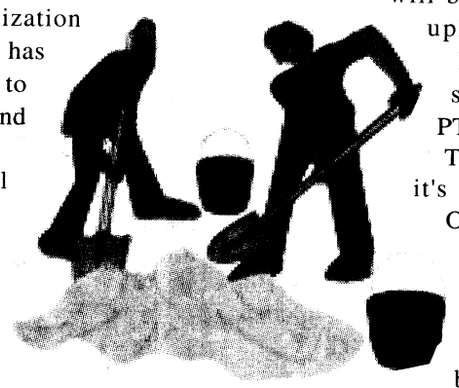
"It's an opportunity to tell them what it's all about and to let them know what is expected," Bunt said.

Mubangu discussed why it was important to attend her sixth-grade daughter Anuarite's open house.

"I like to be involved in every aspect of her education," Mubangu said.

Her daughter Anuarite said, "I like seeing her run around (like I did my first day.)"

Wilson was most impressed with the large turnout.



"It's incredible, huge. The number of parents indicates the tremendous participation."

STOWERS ELEMENTARY

School builds garden to honor hero

Nicole Longstreath
Special to the Bayonet©

The Parent Teacher Organization (PTO) at Stowers Elementary has given their students something to remind them to be honorable and make the right decisions.

The Stowers Memorial Garden, according to principal, Glenn Hughes, serves as a reminder of the good character of Cpl. Freddie Stowers. Stowers was the first black recipient of the Medal of Honor during World War I who gave his life on Sept. 28, 1918 while serving as a squad leader.

"Here at school we talk about Cpl. Stowers being a role model for our children to look up to," Hughes said. "We wanted to build a garden to be a living memorial which would remind the children daily of good character and making the right decisions."

Instilling good character in the students was not the only motive for building the garden, said assistant principal, Mike Starrett.

"One of the things we are emphasizing this year is responsibility," Starrett said.

Although the garden is not quite complete, the students are already demonstrating how responsible they are. One student is tasked daily to remove a $100 water pump from the garden's fountain and replace it each morning," Hughes said.

"Once the garden is complete, the students will be responsible for the upkeep of the garden, likely by grade level," said Cynthia Calix, PTO president.

The garden, will have it's opening ceremony in October. So far, the garden has cost Stowers $2,000. The garden is complete with a birdhouse, several park benches and a water fountain. The money to build the garden has come from the school's PTO fund and the costs of upkeep will be provided by contributors who purchase memorial or honor plaques that will hang in an area adjacent to the garden.

The garden will be open to the public, and any person or organization with $25 can purchase a plaque to honor anyone living or deceased. In fact, Hughes said he will honor his daughter with a plaque.

Donations are accepted, and according to Hughes, several contributors have provided assistance.Plaques will be available for sale until Sept. 30.

Anyone who wishes to honor someone and contribute to the maintenance of the memorial garden can pick up a donation form in the office of Stowers Elementary.

Hospital offers free health evaluations

St. Francis Hospital

Mental health professionals from The Bradley Center of St. Francis and The Pastoral Institute will offer local residents the opportunity to learn about the signs and symptoms of depression and to participate in a free screening as part of National Depression Screening Day from 11 a.m. to 7 p.m. Oct. 8.

The free program will be held at Health Matters in Peachtree Mall. Registration is not required, but further information may be obtained by calling Ask-A-Nurse at 596-4170.

Common symptoms of depression include feelings of hopelessness, worthlessness, restlessness and irritability, changes in sleep and appetite, loss of energy and thoughts of death or suicide.

Participants in the Health Matters Screening Day will complete an anonymous written screening test for depression and have the opportunity to discuss the results with a mental health professional. Individuals will also see a brief video on the causes, symptoms and treatments of depression.

National Depression Screening Day, held each year during Mental Illness Awareness Week, was developed by Harvard psychiatrist Dr. Douglas Jacobs. Last year, more than 85,000 people attended screenings at 2,800 sites nationwide. National Depression Screening Day inaugurated the concept of screening for a mental illness when it began eight years ago.

Depression strikes more than 17 million Americans each year, according to figures from the National Institute of Mental health. Fewer than half of them, however, actually seek treatment even though treatment can help 80 percent of those affected.

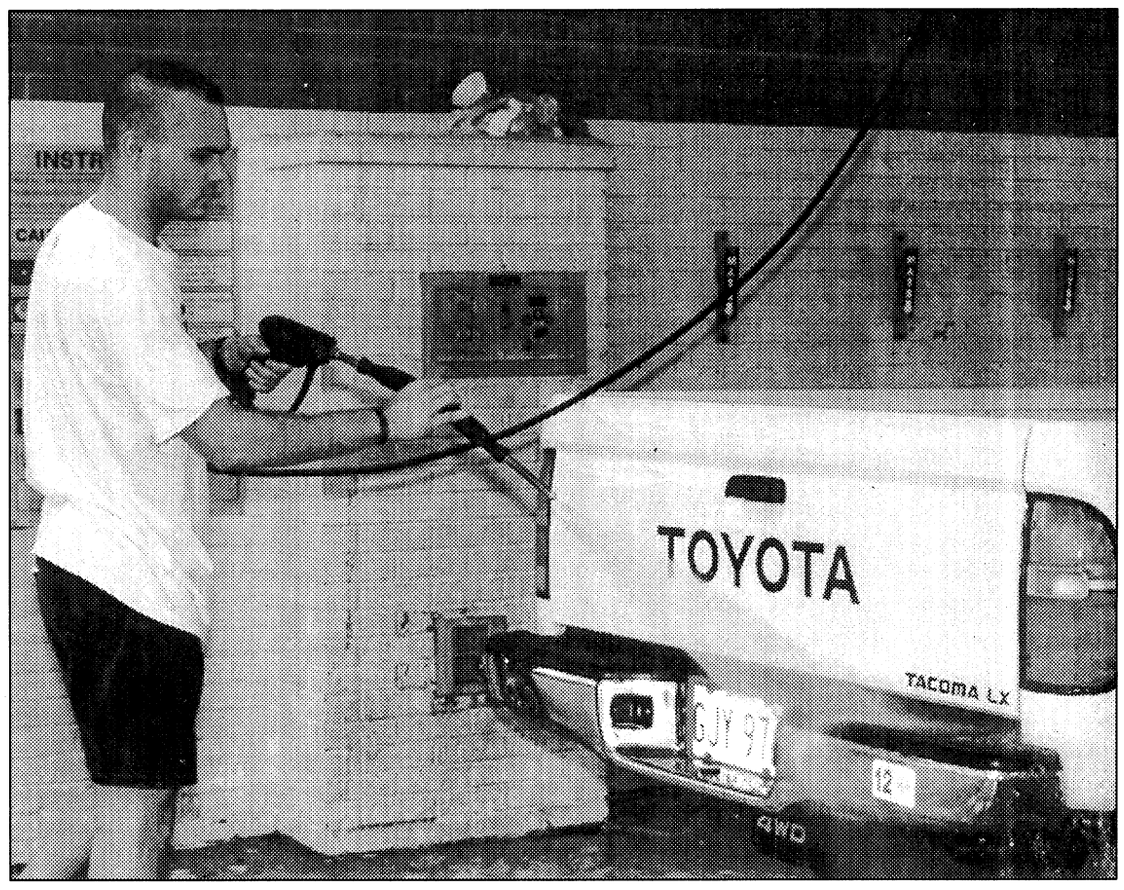
Better Business Bureau

Clubs educate investors

Better Business Bureau

If you are interested in learning more about stocks and bonds in a social setting that can be fun, educational and profitable, an investment club may be the answer.

Typically, investment clubs are groups of 10 to 20 who may work together, belong to the same professional organization or know each other socially. The group meets once a month and each member contributes a set amount, $20, $25, $30 per month toward the purchase of stocks. Each month a new stock is purchased and a member or members must do extensive research into that stock before the club will agree to buy.



Although there are thousands of investment clubs in the U.S., the turnover rate for members is very small and all clubs limit their size. Often, the best option for interested investors is to begin a new club.

Before starting an investment club and plunging into possible financial troubles, it is important to establish some basic rules by which the club will operate. Limit membership to a set number. These people should be compatible socially as well as in their investment philosophy. They should realize it is not a "get-rich-quick" scheme, but rather a long-term commitment to growth.

Set goals for the growth of investments, but be reasonable. It is important to plan to invest a set amount each month, regardless of overall market conditions and plan to reinvest dividends immediately. Also, plan to have a diversified portfolio. Investing in companies in different fields will protect against swings in certain segments of the economy.

Before the club officially forms, seek guidance from brokers, business advisers and business publications. The amount of research done prior to starting the club can directly affect its success.

Club members will want to select a stockbroker, preferably one who is familiar with the needs and goals of investment clubs. Then draw up a written agreement that outlines the clubs policies: who will deal with the broker; monthly contributions; selection of officers and what happens when a member leaves the club and wants to be paid his or her shares.

Seniors receive TRICARE Prime option

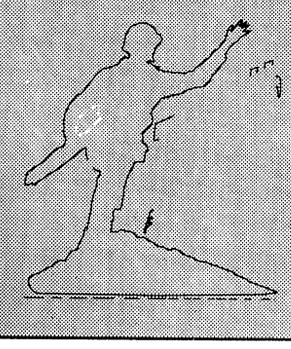
Martin Army Community Hospital

In the past, many beneficiaries have used space available care at Martin Army Community Hospital (MACH) to meet all of their health care needs. Space available care is rapidly dwindling due to increases in TRICARE Prime enrollment.

The good news for patients age 64 and younger is that they have the opportunity to enroll in the TRICARE Prime program to maintain their access to the hospital. TRICARE Prime offers a great value for the money. However, for patients approaching, or over, 65 years of age, they should prepare for a future without space available care and elect Medicare Part B when offered.

Elect Medicare Part B when it is offered. Medicare benefits include Part A, premium free hospital insurance and Part B, supplemental medical insurance that may be elected for purchase. The premium paid for Part B insurance covers doctor visits, outpatient services and certain medical equipment. When beneficiaries receive their initial Medicare entitlement card, shortly before their 65th birthday, they are eligible for both Part A and Part B. The Social Security Administration allows them the option of declining the Part B coverage by notifying them in writing of their wish to decline the coverage. However, unless they have private medical insurance, declining this coverage has very important effects for their medical benefits. The TRICARE entitlement ends at age 65, at which time they become relegated to space available care. Unfortunately, this coincides with a time in life when most people begin to need more health care rather than less.

In the past, many beneficiaries have elected to decline Part B because care was available at MACH. It is much less available now and is decreasing more every day. If one declines Part B coverage, they may elect to begin it at a later date with a substantial reoccurring monthly penalty. The penalty is presently an additional 10 percent of the monthly premium for every year that signing up is delayed. For example, deciding at age 67 to sign up for Part B, they would be paying 20 percent (10 percent times 2 years) more for the same coverage than your 67-year-old neighbor who began coverage at age 65 when first offered. If they wait until age 75, they would be paying twice what you would have been paying. For more information on starting Part B coverage, contact the Social Security Administration at (800) 772-1213. There are other potential benefits to having Medicare Part B.



There has been a much publicized effort underway in the Department of Defense to provide care to beneficiaries age 65 and older within the framework of the TRICARE program. Formerly known as Medicare Subvention, TRICARE Senior is being tested in a few locations with MACH currently excluded. TRICARE Senior allows Medicare eligible beneficiaries to be seen at military hospitals and clinics just like any other Prime patient.

Finally, effective Oct. 1, all care received in the civilian sector by Medicare and non-Prime beneficiaries will become the full responsibility of the individual patient. Formerly, MACH paid for some of this care. Without the subsidization, it will require the beneficiary to pay the appropriate deductible and co-payment. Fort those non-Prime beneficiaries under age 65, one hospitalization can exceed the $460 cost of one year's coverage for a whole family under TRICARE Prime. With the variety of payment options available, the non-Prime beneficiary can afford to invest in their future health.

This information is provided to help beneficiaries make informed decisions when dealing with health care. For those who would like to receive more information on TRICARE Prime, visit the Martin Army TRICARE Service Center or call (800) 444-5445.

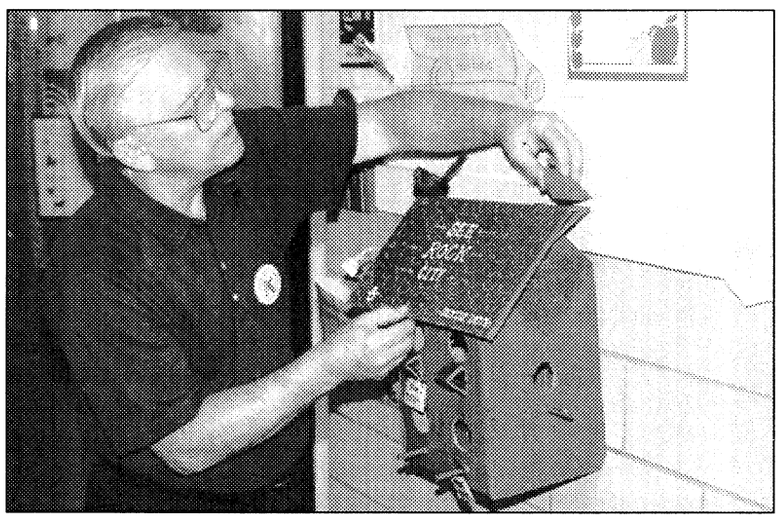
"Wee Deliver"

Specially designed mailboxes enhance postal program

Michele Hanson
Special to the Bayonet©

The NASA Space Station, a John Deer tractor, steam engine, juke box and stage coach are some of the 62 mail boxes that line the halls of Dexter and Loyd Elementary Schools. Both schools participate in the U.S. Postal Service program "Wee Deliver" designed to give children a working knowledge of how the postal system operates.



What makes the program extra special for the children is the creative genius of Cy Dietrich, music teacher at Dexter and Loyd Elementary Schools. Dietrich has been teaching since 1960 and has spent the last 20 years teaching at Fort Benning.

The 62 mailboxes were handcrafted by Dietrich and designed to reflect each teacher's interests or personality.

"When the program started at Loyd Elementary, the teachers did not have the time to make a mailbox, so I volunteered," Dietrich said. "Little did I know how many I would create over the next few months."

The mailboxes are carefully designed with every detail covered. They have moving parts, mail slots, addresses and a distinctive flag to indicate mail to go.

"The average time to make a box is about five hours," Dietrich said. "My favorite mailbox is the Dexter Eagle which hangs with a nest outside the office door. It took a lot of time but I am proud of the way it turned out."

Cy Dietrich, music teacher at Dexter and Loyd Schools inspects a mailbox that is used as part of the "Wee Deliver" program. The birdhouse mailbox is just one of the 62 variations of mailboxes that are used by both schools to support the "Wee Deliver" postal program.

"We are very fortunate to have talented teachers like Mr. Dietrich to work with our students," said Vicki Rogers, principal at Dexter Elementary School. "His influence can be seen not only with the design of Wee Deliver mailboxes, but also in the production of our weekly WDEX television show, the K-Club (Kindness Club), and the upper grade musicals."

MACH offers prostate screenings

Martin Army Community Hospital

The sooner cancer is detected, the smaller the cancer tends to be and the greater the chance a patient can be cured of this disease. Unfortunately, when patients develop symptoms from prostate cancer it is often too late to remove or treat that cancer completely.

Each year, many urologists and the American Cancer Society promote Prostate Cancer Screening. This year, Martin Army Community Hospital will set aside appointments on Sept. 21 and 23 for prostate cancer screening for eligible patrons.

Appointments can be set up by calling the Urology Clinic at 544-2292. Columbus will hold a screening day at St. James AME Church from 1:30 to 4 p.m. Sept. 20. The American Cancer Society will provide more information by calling (800) ACS-2345. For more information about prostate cancer or other health screening issues, contact the Health Promotions Center on Fort Benning at 545-1987.

Prostate cancer remains a major health issue facing men. Often considered a disease of older men, prostate cancer represents the most common cancer of men after skin cancer in the U.S. and is expected to kill nearly 40,000 men in 1998. Almost 200,000 men will be diagnosed with this cancer this year.

Holiday marks start of Jewish New Year

Rabbi Arthur Rutberg
Shearith Israel Synagogue

Repentance, prayer and charity avert the harsh judgment." Thus the special prayerbook that is used on the Jewish High Holidays expresses the necessary actions required to achieve atonement. The High Holidays of Rosh Hashanah and Yom Kippur, which begin this year on Sunday evening, causes us to reflect on our past year's actions and repent.

reflections

These holidays, first decreed by God in the book of Leviticus, have become the most important ones in the Jewish calendar. Rosh Hashanah not only marks the beginning of the Ten Days of Repentance but it is also the first day of the Jewish year. This year will be 5759 calculated by the rabbis of the first century to be the number of years since Adam and Eve. In contrast to the secular New Year, we do not have all night parties.

The Jewish New Year is a joyous time but it also a solemn time. Acknowledging that another year has past, we look back at the previous year and ask through introspection, if we have behaved properly. No adult can say that they have behaved perfectly in the past year. We are all guilty of some wrongdoing. Consequently, we begin to repent and pray for forgiveness.

It is traditional to spend the Ten Days of Repentance from Rosh Hashanah to Yom Kippur approaching people you may have wronged during the year and asking for their forgiveness. Repentance can not simply be a passive function; it must be an active one. Once we have performed those acts of repentance, only then can we approach God on Yom Kippur and pray for forgiveness. Forgiveness is not guaranteed. It must be earned through sincere repentance and prayer.

Perhaps the best way to achieve atonement is through charity. In Judaism, charity is not given out of a sense of pity or compassion for the poor. Charity is a commandment from God. It is given because it is just and right for all people to have food to eat and a place to sleep. This year we are participating in a nationwide program called "The Corners of Our Fields" to provide food and money to aid the homeless.

As we begin the Jewish New Year of 5759 on Sunday evening, we are startled into awareness by the blast of the shofar (ram's horn). We are awakened from our slumber and forced to confront our wrongful ways. We sit up with a jolt and realize the New Year is upon us; the Days of Repentance have begun and we must begin the process of introspection and ask forgiveness for our sins.

It is time for us to repent, pray and perform acts of kindness and charity to avoid a harsh judgment. We ask God to judge us favorably and write us in the Book of Life for a good year. May God grant to all of us a New Year filled with health and happiness, love, long life and peace.

Families in trouble can receive helping hand

Chaplain (Maj.) Frederick M. Rupel
Chaplain Family Life Ministries

My heart ached along with a distraught couple as they poured their hearts out during a counseling session.

reflections

Their 17-year-old daughter informed them the night before that she was pregnant. The weeping mother sobbed, "Where did we go wrong with Angie?" The father was incredulous, "If I ever get my hand on the boy who did this to my little girl, I'll teach him a lesson about responsibility!"

Unfortunately, Angie had no idea who the father was.

This scene is played out far too often and many a parent berates themselves for the mistakes of a child. Parents, whether to the benefit or detriment, are the primary source of influence on their children.

I believe there is help. Parents, you are not left alone in this challenge or raising children. May I suggest that parents seek out those in the helping community that are there to help in these times. Chaplains, family counselors, school counselors, family and friends can offer troubled parents a wealth of understanding, encouragement, guidance and practical helps.

In the following months I spent with Angie and her parents, I witnessed a family come together in the midst of a trial instead of being torn apart because they decided to reach out to those who were willing to help them.

Maybe you need some help in becoming a more effective parent. The Chaplain Family Life Ministries Center can help. For more information, call 545-1760.

DPW helps preserve multitudes of historical sites

Department of Public Works

The term "cultural resource" refers to archeological sites and historical structures which are eligible or potentially eligible for the National Register of Historic Places.

The National Register of Historic Places is a list of historic structures, archeological sites, landscapes, objects, etc., which meet one or more of the Secretary of Interior's four criteria for eligibility. The Secretary's criteria include:

Association with events that have made significant contributions to the broad patterns of American history; association with the lives of individuals significant to American society; embodiment of distinctive characteristics of a type, period, or method of construction, or representative of the work of a master, or that represent a significant distinguishable entity whose components may lack individual distinction; and having yielded, or likely to yield, information important in prehistory or history.

Working with the State Historic Preservation Officers of both Alabama and Georgia, as well as with eight Native American tribes with interests in this area, the Historic Architect and Archeologist of Fort Benning seek to assist in achieving a proper balance between present and future military needs and historic preservation.

There are more than 690 historic structures in the Main Post Historic District. The most imposing structures are the Cuartels. Brick and stucco constructions built as barracks, they remain the core of an historic district surrounded by administrative buildings and family housing, including Riverside, the Commanding General's residence.

Built just after the turn of the century and currently on the National Register, Riverside remains a center piece for Fort Benning. The National Infantry Museum, part of the old Hospital complex built in the 1930s, is an historic structure and is eligible for the National Register.

More than 2,600 archeological sites, some perhaps 8,000 years old or more, and one of which has been designated a National Landmark, are recorded on Fort Benning. More than 1,000 more sites are expected to be located by the time surveys are completed in 2002.

Sites include those created by the Muscogee (Creek) tribe, the Yuchi (Euchee) tribe, and their predecessors. After the removal of most Native Americans from the region to Oklahoma in the mid-1830s, archeological sites were created by European and African Americans in settlements such as Eelbeck, Jamestown and others.

The preservation of these important cultural resources is an ever-present consideration as DPW maintains and seeks to enhance the high standard of our quality of life at Fort Benning.

For more information about the installation's cultural resources, call Dr. Christopher Hamilton at 545-2377.

Local rugby club kicks off fall season

Columbus-Fort Benning Rugby Club

The Columbus-Fort Benning Rugby Club gave last season's champions from Atlanta a run for their money Saturday before falling in the waning minutes 45-35.

In an evenly contested match, Atlanta opened the scoring quickly with a penalty kick.

The local boys rallied back to take the lead 10-3 on two tries set up by backline play and aggressive forward support.

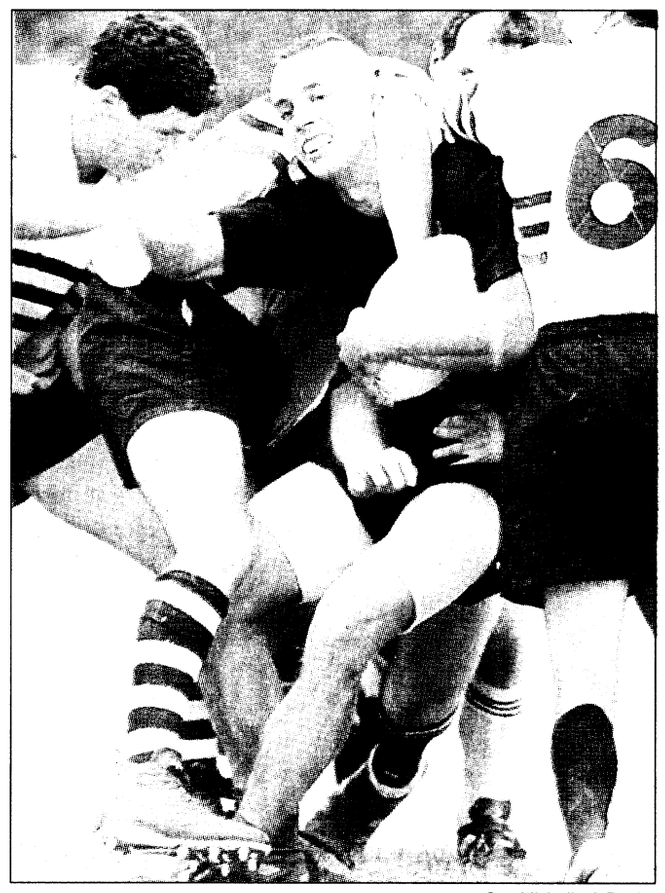
Atlanta fought back to regain the lead, but the Cruise-A-Matics stayed in close contact, countering each of Atlanta's scores.

Trailing 28-31 with 20 minutes left in the match, the Columbus-Fort Benning team attacked from deep in their own territory and caught Atlanta's defense playing soft.

The Cruise-A-Matics scored on the 70-yard play to take the lead 35-31, but Atlanta persevered in the end 45-35.

Team members recognized for their performance were Bill Breen, Mike Higgerson, Sean Cook and Jason Daffin.

The club's next match is scheduled for Sept. 26 in Huntsville, Ala. The team's next home game is at 2 p.m. Oct. 3 at the rugby grounds behind Dolly Madison.



Under the direction of new coach Dave Allen from Australia, the Cruise-A-Matics hope to make a break for the league championship.

Training sessions are held at the rugby grounds behind Dolly Madison on Blanchard Industrial Blvd. All interested athletes are welcome to participate.

The Cruise-A-Matics season is scheduled to run through the end of November.

For more information on training and matches, call Mike Glancy at 689-9625.

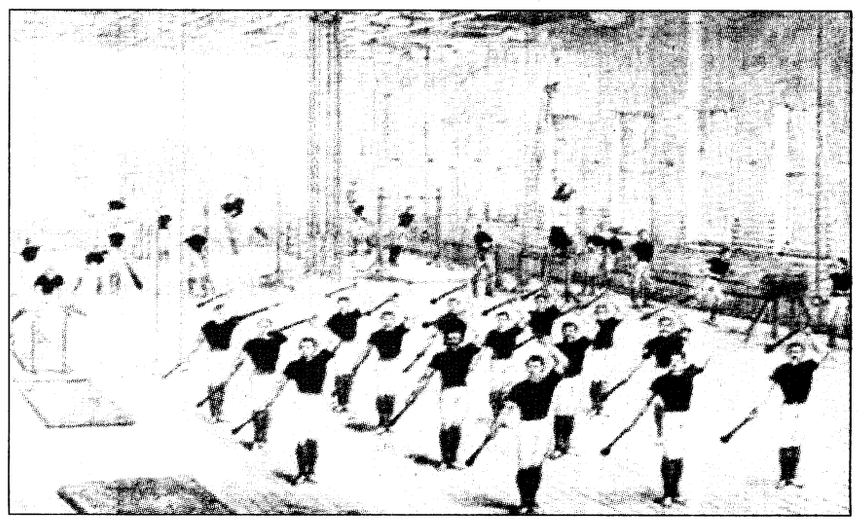
Functional fitness tops fitness school's goals

Ed Thomas
Troy State University-Fort Benning

Experts do not always agree on the definition of combat physical readiness, but they generally concur that it is at least, the ability to endure physical hardship, withstand stress and carry on under difficult and demanding situations. It also includes the ability to perform arduous, complex and often explosive physical tasks not often demanded during peacetime.

Push-ups, sit-ups and a two-mile run are the Army's current measure of baseline physical readiness, but the U. S. Army Physical Fitness School (USAPFS) wants Soldiers to realize that functional fitness is the final goal.



"The Army physical fitness test (APFT) measures some basic and isolated components of fitness," said USAPFS Commandant Col. Steve Cellucci. "But the final standard for combat physical readiness is functional fitness."

"Functional fitness for Soldiers includes agility, balance, coordination and numerous other movement-related factors that evolve out of motor skills and translate into the METL (mission essential task list)," said USAPFS Instructor Staff Sgt. Richard Holladay. "The APFT does not measure one's ability to move well on the battlefield. Good motor skills are the key. If a Soldier can move efficiently, functional battlefield fitness is within reach."

Since the early 1950s, experts in the human movement field have been concerned that far too many Americans have poor motor skills. Bad posture and muscular imbalance are associated with the problem, and it is epidemic, Cellucci said.

The Army stressed good military bearing during the 1950s, but the effort has long since faded and correct posture is rarely demanded today, said USAPFS Physical Therapist Capt. Danny McMillian. "Many Soldiers do physical training (PT) in the morning and then forget about how they are moving their bodies for the rest of the day," he said.

Cellucci explained that general motor skills training requires attention to detail and rational progression. "Leaping, climbing, crawling, tumbling, balancing and other motor skills must be thoroughly mastered if they are to reshape a body and become a learned response," he said. "We must all become better teachers if any great leaps forward in the area of functional fitness are to be realized."

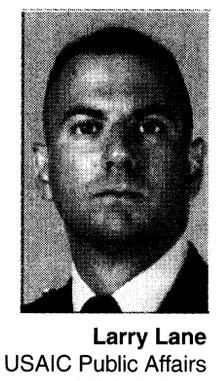
A drawing depicts a turn of the century gymnasium filled with motor skill and functional fitness innovations.

Instructional Systems Specialist Steve Van Camp has been with the USAPFS for more than fifteen years. "We have not given motor skills and functional fitness the attention they deserve," he said. "Col. Cellucci's unique background in gymnastics and his combat orientation have steered us toward a more rational doctrine and encouraged us to build functional fitness back into the PT."



Motor skills training was highly developed in Army physical training

Trends: Climbing is essential motor skill

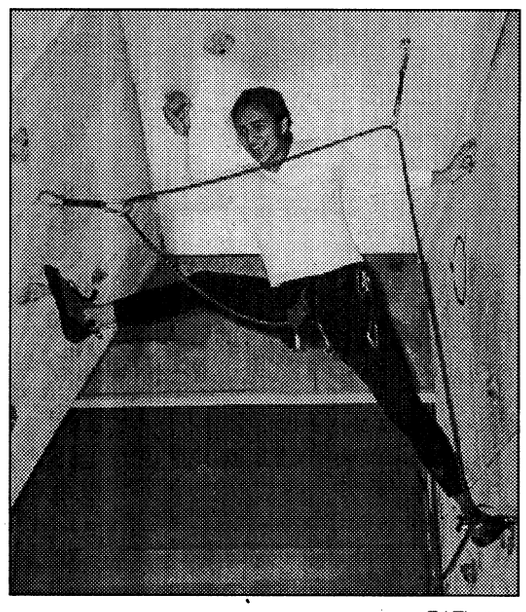
Van Camp added. "A gymnasium built at the turn of the century was in many ways superior to our modern facilities," he said. "Almost everything we do in our gyms today is on the ground. The older fitness paradigm included ropes, ladders, grids, vaulting platforms and many other simple and often ingenious devices designed to teach complex motor skills."



"Motor skills were sacrificed to sports and games around 1920," Cellucci said. "When it became apparent in the 1950s that America was growing clumsy and imbalanced, there was an initial phase of denial and a fairly slow and weak response to the crisis. Only in the last few years have we begun to turn the corner."

"Climbing is an essential motor skill. Obstacle courses and climbing walls are excellent training devices," said Holladay. "Troy State University, the USAPFS and the Directorate of Operations and Training have built a first-class climbing facility in Infantry Hall, and the command has recently constructed another outdoor obstacle course on post.

"We still lack an indoor motor skills training facility, but hopefully we'll build one in the near future."

"An indoor combat PT facility is a must if we hope to shape motor skills and functional fitness for the future," Van Camp said. "Basketball courts and weight rooms will not be enough to carry us into the next century. We are on the right road by recognizing the importance of motor skills and functional fitness, but knowing must be brought to life by doing."

For more information concerning the Infantry Hall climbing facility, call Holladay at 545-6333 or Van Camp at 545-6336.

USAMU to host selection matches

U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit

The U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit will host the first of two U.S. Team Selection Matches for the 1999 Pan American Games Sept. 23-30 at Pool Range.

The Pan Am Games, which are conducted every four years, is one of the four big international matches — along with the Olympics, World Championships and the Campeonato de Tiro de las Americas (CAT Games) — where shooters can win medals and set world records.

The 1999 Pan Am Games, which will be held next summer in Winnipeg, Canada, is also the last opportunity for nations to win quota slots for the 2000 Olympic Games in Sydney, Australia.

Next week's Pan Am Selection Matches will be for the international rifle Olympic shooting discipline.

USAMU competitors will include three-time Olympian Glenn A. Dubis, World Champion Thomas A. Tamas and world-record holder Jason A. Parker.

The competition schedule is as follows:

•Sept. 23-24 — Training days.

•Sept. 25 — Men's Air Rifle and Women's Three-Position Rifle matches.

•Sept. 26 — Men's Air Rifle and Women's Three-Position Rifle matches, finals and award ceremonies.

•Sept. 27 —Men's Prone and Women's Air Rifle matches.

•Sept. 28 — Men's Prone and Women's Air Rifle matches, finals and award ceremonies.

•Sept. 29 — Men's Three-Position Match.

•Sept. 30 — Men's Three-Position Match, finals and award ceremony.

The starting time for all matches is at 9 a.m. Finals will be conducted for the top eight shooters approximately 30 minutes after the conclusion of the match.

The award ceremonies will be held immediately after the finals.

The matches are free and open to the public.

Secretary of the Army Louis Caldera talks with Col. Glenn Weidner, commandant of the U.S. Army School of the Americas, during the secretary's Tuesday visit to Fort Benning.

Army Secretary visits post, USARSA

Sgt. Alberto Betancourt
U.S. Army School of the Americas

Secretary of the Army Louis Caldera visited Fort Benning Tuesday promising to fight for Soldiers' quality of life and urging continued support for the U.S. Army School of the Americas (USARSA).

"It would be grievously wrong for our country to disengage from the leadership role in our nation, and not have an institution like the U.S. Army School of the Americas that challenges the militaries of other countries to be even stronger and better democracies than they are today," Caldera said.

After a brief welcome at the U.S. Army Infantry Center, Caldera spent most of his visit at USARSA, where he was briefed on the school's history, mission, curriculum, training and human rights' program. He also toured the facilities, observed classroom and field training and spoke with students, staff and faculty.

Sworn into office July 2, Caldera is the 17th Secretary of the Army. As the Secretary, he has statutory responsibility for all matters relating to manpower, personnel, reserve affairs, installations, environmental issues, weapon systems, equipment acquisition, communications and financial management. Previously, he served as Managing Director and Chief Operating Officer for the Corporation for National Service.

He said the U.S. has a tremendous responsibility to provide leadership in the world. This included being engaged in with the countries of Latin and South America, where together the countries must fight the scourge of drugs which threatens the youth of the country and in many cases threatens to topple hard-fought-hard-won democracies of those countries.

"It is important for us to be engaged right here in our hemisphere and USARSA is doing a tremendous job in that respect," he said.

He said the school allows the Latin American students to experience the American way including the high standard of living, multi-cultural society, quality of opportunity; respect for human rights and see how the civilian control of the military works.

"This school has made tremendous efforts to make sure human rights are part of every course of instruction," Caldera said. "It should be that way because it is an important principal for our nation. It is a principal we seek to share with the nations throughout the world, not just Latin and South America."

He made it clear that if human rights abuses exist "it's in spite of what's gone on here — not because of what goes on here."

The Secretary said he was very pleased to see that more people were supportive of USARSA during the recent vote in Congress.

"We're going to continue to talk to members of Congress to make sure they know how important this school is, especially with respect to fighting drugs which is such a tremendous menace to our own country and to the governments of Latin and South America," Caldera said.

Aside from USARSA, the Secretary spoke about readiness and Soldiers' quality of life.

"We're taking a very hard look at readiness," he said. "And readiness comes as much more than just the amount of training and number of force structures in the field and the high op-tempo."

He said it also included quality of life, "How we're taking care of our Soldiers."

He said the last 13 years have been very difficult because the Army's budget has constantly been declining. Because of this, a very careful process of balancing the needs for current readiness and modernization, which is future readiness — investment in the future and keeping the contact with Soldiers regarding quality of life has taken place.

"I think we're at a point where we need to stop and digest some of the changes in the past," Caldera said. "Everyone is looking very hard at that — the president, secretary of defense, the joint chiefs, service secretaries. We're all working very hard right now to look at that because it is clear that we are showing a little bit of strain from all of the cuts that we've taken over the last 13 years."

However, he said the Army can fulfill this mission today under the military strategy. But, under the Balanced Budget Agreement, he said the Army would be in a declining buying power through the year 2002.

"It is difficult to see how we could do that and still meet all of our obligations," he said.

Caldera was confident that the Defense Appropriation Bill has a chance of getting passed before Congress adjourns.

"If it doesn't, they will typically go into a continuing resolution type scenario — passing stop-gap-pay measures until there is a final budget," Caldera said. "So, we don't think it will disrupt our operations here at Fort Benning or anywhere else in the world."

ITB sets $200,000 CFC goal

Michele E. Hanson
Special to the Bayonet©

Civil service employees, to include Soldiers and civilian employees from the Infantry Training Brigade (ITB) contributed $147,000 to the Combined Federal Campaign (CFC) last year and is gearing up to surpass that, with a goal of $200,000 for this year's drive. The CFC drive begins today and runs through Nov. 6.

"Part of the command philosophy is to ensure that ITB is integrated into everything Fort Benning does by supporting all sponsored programs including Army Emergency Relief, Santa's Castle for the kids and the CFC drive," said Col. Abraham J. Turner, ITB commander. "It is about being part of an organization with a portion of its focus on the opportunity to help people in need."

According to Turner, the command has a responsibility to reach out and explain to Soldiers that organizations listed under CFC help Soldiers, family members and civilians. This is accomplished by using a strategy of support, which provides factual information to Soldiers so they can make an educated choice.

"Our Soldiers first understand the meaning of CFC and the importance of this particular campaign, because it ties the entire community together," Turner said. "Secondly, when a Soldier elects a designation, that is his option, however, if he chooses Designation 9000 his contribution will benefit the local community," Turner added.

"CFC is an opportunity for me to contribute locally and give something back to people less fortunate than myself," said Lt. Col. Thomas Hayden, ITB deputy commander.

"It is great for us to focus on local needs, because this is where we live and where our children grow up. We should sponsor organizations that put something back into family development for the military and civilian communities," Turner said.

"The essence of what we are trying to do is show Soldiers that campaigns like the CFC take care of people and contributing is a selfless way to show that we care," Turner said. "Soldiers out here feel good about contributing to CFC and I am proud of their contributions."

For more information about the CFC drive, call Capt. Erik Berdy at 545-1500.

Pet owners beware

Common substance kills pets

Sgt. Michelle J. Davis
Bayonet assistant editor

The loss of a pet can be traumatic and perhaps even more so when the circumstances surrounding the death are sudden or unnatural.

After her dog died recently from ingesting poison, Dawn Johnson, a resident of McGraw Manor, set out on a crusade to make sure this would not happen to anyone else.

"It was horrible to watch," she said of how her one-year-old Dalmatian, Freckles, lost his sight and stumbled around before experiencing kidney failure. "After the vet convinced us he would only suffer seizures and convulsions, we decided to euthanize him and save him from a more painful death."

After receiving the news that her pet died of Ethylene Glycol poisoning, Johnson was convinced her dog was purposely fed the poison, which is mainly found in automobile antifreeze and transmission fluid.

"Freckles was mainly an indoor dog and I have neither of these toxins on my premises," she said.

With 200 reward flyers in hand, Johnson traveled up and down her neighborhood spreading the word of her dog's demise and warning residents of the deadly poisons.

Within minutes, Johnson said neighbors began calling telling her of other pets which had disappeared or died mysteriously.

"One lady said she had four cats disappear within the past eight months and a neighbor's dog is said to have also died of Ethylene Glycol poisoning," she said.

According to Lannette Jones, a receptionist at the Fort Benning Veterinary Clinic, the clinic also received calls over the past three weeks inquiring about missing pets and poisonings.

"All we have to go on is what we are hearing from community members who call us," she said. "Right now, we are just asking residents to keep a closer eye on their pets until we know for sure what is going on."

Jones said that in addition to watching pets more closely, owners may also want to consider keeping animals inside while they are not home and ensure the gate to fencing is secured.

"We really hope someone is not out there

Heritage makes families unique

Pfc. Amy L. Nyland
Bayonet staff writer

I think I'm one of those people who may be classified as a "mutt." That's not saying that I like to play fetch and drink out of the toilet; it just means I am composed of different nationalities.

commentary

On one side, I have the stereotypical midwestern Scandanavian blood, while the other side houses a very noticeable French influence.

When I was growing up, I identified more with my Scandinavian side because I was submersed in it.

Even though I didn't know it at the time, I have come to realize that my heritage had an impact on how I grew up.

One thing that played a huge factor in my life was family. A big emphasis was placed on staying close no matter how far away you were. I can remember clear as day the countless times I called my grandma from a thousand miles away so I could hear her say, "You'll always be my ugliest granddaughter." (I can't explain this one, so just go with me).

Probably the greatest thing I love and miss about being back home are the routine holiday family get-togethers. I mean, what could be better than a few hundred of your closest relatives (including an aunt with five boys) packed into one tiny farm house?

Besides a fine selection of Norwegian and Finnish jokes continually supplied by my grandmother, there was always a mutant-sized turkey and enough fix-ins to keep you bloated for a week. There also never failed to be at least one pickled item I would kindly refuse.

Along with the reminders of my heritage, there were also plenty of traditions my family seemed to enjoy at almost every get-together.

Planted firmly in front of the television, the men of the family would almost always be found watching whatever game was on. The women, on the other hand, would retreat to whatever place the men weren't to catch up on the latest happenings.

When they finally came together, it was usually to engage in some family game or friendly gambling. The night always ended with either someone losing the title to their car or more "catching up."

Being in the military, I can't exactly just pack up and go home to be a part of the traditions and closeness that I have become so used to.

However, I realize that just because I can't go home, that doesn't mean I shouldn't continue with my traditions or share them with someone else.

The Army is one big family made up of tons of different heritages and traditions. We have an advantage because we live so close to one another and that makes it easier to share our differences with each other. In my opinion, we are all better when we can experience something unique about someone else.

So the next time you get together to celebrate something or partakė in some kind of tradition, think about inviting someone you know. Not only will you give that person a little piece of home, you may also broaden their horizons, which never really hurt anyone.

Hispanic cultures influence armed forces

U.S. Army School of Americas

In October, we celebrate Hispanic Heritage, enjoyed by 22 million U.S. citizens. The Hispanic contribution to the U.S. Armed Forces is huge. If we put the highest decorations for combat heroism in the numerator, and ethnic origin of the heroes who won them in the denominator, Hispanic Soldiers are the most decorated sector in the U.S. Army. They are also the cultural link to the armed forces for all Hispanic nations.

commentary

The Hispanic Hall of Heroes in the Pentagon features the names, photographs and the supporting statistics behind the valorous deeds of our Hispanic Soldiers. So why is there no Hispanic "John Wayne" character in films, no "Zorro" in U.S. Army combat fatigues? Why is the contemptible "Sergeant Garcia," the overweight comic figure in the "Zorro" film series, the only Hispanic military character ever seen by most U.S. citizens?

Here is a better question, closer to home. More than 6,000 Hispanic U.S. Soldiers have taught military doctrine in Spanish to about 60,000 of their Latin American comrades-in-arms at the U.S. Army School of Americas (USARSA). Why are well-known persons in government, religion, journalism and higher education so easily deceived into believing that these 6,000 would teach their fellow Latinos in uniform to murder and torture their own citizens back home?

Are we to believe that Hispanic Americans are heroes who defend democracy in wartime and teachers of killing-for-hire in peacetime? From 1470 until 1832, if you were a Soldier in any country of the world, you measured your ability against the Spanish man-at-arms. His skill in weapons, tactics, logistics, leadership and battlefield valor were the world's standard of military excellence. His allies and his enemies all knew it.

In World War II, the Army took on the Soldier-teacher role with our Latin American allies. Did you know that young men from the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico from Panama and from Mexico all volunteered for combat service against the Axis powers at the same rate or higher as U.S. males from the then 48 states? Did you know that a Brazilian Division fought as part of the 8th U.S. Army in Italy? That a Mexican P-38 fighter squadron fought the Japanese "Zero" aces over the Philippines?

Hispanic American Soldiers have been heroes in World War II, the Korea and Vietnam war and vital force members at the invasions of Grenada, Panama and Operation Desert Storm. Hispanic Soldiers have also served in numerous United Nations operations and served as Soldier-teachers of their Hispanic brothers in military missions and as faculty members of USARSA, the U.S. Air Force Inter-American Air Force Academy and U.S. Navy Smallcraft Operations School.

It is long past time to credit Hispanic American men and women in uniform with their magnificent achievements at home and abroad. It is long past time to identify the protest against those efforts, symbolized by ludicrous allegations against USARSA.

By the year 2020, U.S. trade with Latin America will be our biggest overseas component. Continued U.S. engagement with Latin American countries will help consolidate democratic institutions. Soldiers of Hispanic heritage in the U.S. Armed Forces are a major part of that successful work.

Editors Note: Ramsey is a retired lieutenant colonel and currently a professor of Latin America Affairs at the U.S. Army School of Americas.

Post set to recognize Hispanic heritage

In recognition of Hispanic Americans and our nation's ethnic and national diversity, the period of Sept. 15 to Oct. 15 is proclaimed National Hispanic Heritage Month. This year's theme is "Hispanics! Challenging the Future!"

The military and civilian contributions of Hispanic Americans reflect a deep commitment to the principles of freedom and democracy, which are the strengths of the U.S.

The Hispanic community has given us generals, admirals, philosophers, statesmen, musicians, athletes and Nobel prize-winning scientists.

Members of the Hispanic community continue to make significant contributions to our society. The various Hispanic cultures continue to contribute significantly to our American society.

I encourage all personnel on Fort Benning and in surrounding communities to participate in this observance through the planned activities by units, staffs and other agencies.

— Maj. Gen. Carl F. Ernst
Commanding General

Secretary encourages participation in activities

Hispanic Heritage Month, which runs from Sept. 15 to Oct. 15, provides us with an opportunity to recognize the many contributions of Hispanic Americans to the U.S. Army and the nation. I encourage military installations around the world to commemorate and celebrate these important achievements along with recognizing the important role Hispanic American Soldiers and civilians continue to play in the success of our Army.

We have a rich legacy of Hispanic American service in the Army. Hispanic American Soldiers have fought in all of our nation's conflicts, including on both sides in the Civil War. Thirty-seven have earned the Medal of Honor, including eight during the Korean conflict and 13 during the war in Vietnam.

The story of Hispanic American Soldiers demonstrates the tremendous opportunities the Army provides to all Americans. Their numbers in our enlisted ranks have doubled during the past twenty years, and there are more than three times as many Hispanic American officers as there were two decades ago. Like all Soldiers, they have become stronger and better citizens who continue to serve the Nation in and out of uniform. Our strength as an Army and pre-eminence in the world reflect the quality and diversity of our people.

Pets: clinic cautions residents intentionally doing this (poisoning and abducting) to pets, but it's better to be safe than sorry," she added.

Sgt. 1st Class Dan Downs, NCOIC of the Military Police Investigations, said the MPs are aware of the situation, but have little information to go on.

"Right now there is no open investigation, but we are keeping our ears to the ground," Downs said. "We have a close working relationship with Vet Services and with the exception of this case, we have had no other complaints of this type."

Downs said all other similar type incidents have been investigated and closed with no subject having been identified.

While intentional poisoning is something most would not want to think possible, Kim Malone, a veterinary technician with the post vet clinic, said pets can also poison themselves by lapping up pools of antifreeze sitting in the driveway.

"Antifreeze is very sweet tasting. Animals can walk through a puddle of antifreeze and ingest the poison by licking the substance off the pads of their feet," she said.

Malone said one way community members can keep animals safe is by reporting those who work on their vehicles in the housing area.

"Post regulations prohibit car maintenance from being performed on post outside designated areas," she said.

Malone also said many antifreeze manufacturers produce animal-friendly versions of the substance.

According to Malone, symptoms look for include excessive thirst and urination, loss of coordination, weakness, nausea, vomiting, rapid breathing, diarrhea and paralysis.

If a pet does come into contact with a toxin, Jones said to immediately take the dog to an emergency care facility since the post vet clinic isn't set up to receive emergency cases.

"The sooner you get your pet in to get help, the better chances it has for survival," she said.

Malone noted that the amount of poison ingested will affect animals differently.

"Some animals can ingest only a small amount of the poison and die, while it may take more for larger animals,' Malone said.

Whether local pets have been intentionally or accidentally poisoned, Johnson said she'll be happy if she saves just one animal from the painful death her dog suffered by telling her story.

"No animal deserves to suffer like that," she said. "But if someone is out there, we're going to find him (or her) and make sure he gets the punishment he deserves.

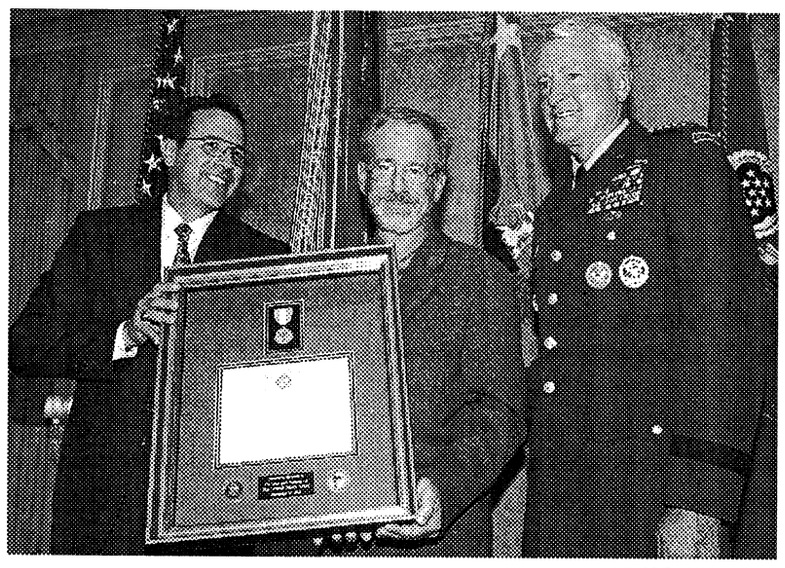
Army honors Spielberg for movie



Gary Sheftick
Army News Service

Film director Steven Spielberg said it was one of his proudest and "most amazing evenings ever" when he accepted the Army's highest award for public service from Secretary of the Army Louis Caldera Thursday.

Spielberg said the Distinguished Civilian Service Award was for him a "validation" after struggling with personal anxieties during the making of Saving Private Ryan.

"Privately I wondered, and collectively all of my collaborators wondered, if what we were trying to accomplish would gain approval of those veterans of D-Day, as well as the veterans of Korea, Vietnam, and all the violent struggles ... that have engaged this nation throughout the course of the 20th century," Spielberg said.

Caldera said the film provides an "unprecedented view to combat" and makes Americans "stop and think what it means to sacrifice for one's country." He told Spielberg the award represents the gratitude of more than a million Soldiers in the total Army today and millions who served before, because the film tells the story of their fortitude, courage and sacrifices.

World War II veteran Joe Varghi said the film brought back memories of a sort. He was a young ensign beachmaster on D-Day when his landing craft hit the shore at "Easy Red" sector 7:30 a.m., June 6, 1944. Varghi said the movie was realistic, and he was "waiting for all the purple smoke" which shrouded the beach during the actual landing because demolition teams were blowing up obstacles and mines.

Army Chief of Staff Gen. Dennis J. Reimer said it "was not a movie about saving Private Ryan. It was a movie about a generation who sacrificed and saved our world." He pointed out that some of the actual heroes of the movie — World War II veterans — were in the ballroom of the Pentagon City Ritz-Carlton where the award was presented.

Spielberg, after hearing veterans speak and receiving the Distinguished Civilian Service Award, said he felt "the gratitude of the armed services right through to my bones.""

Unified commanders warn President of "nosedive"

Douglas J. Gillert
American Forces Information Service

Defense Secretary William Cohen, Joint Chiefs of Staff Chairman Gen. Henry Shelton, the service chiefs of staff and heads of the unified commands met with President Clinton Sept. 15 to warn of a potential "nose-dive" in military readiness.

Although the national news media speculated the group would ask Clinton for more money, Department of Defense (DOD) spokesman Kenneth Bacon said they would not directly address budget increases.

"It's a meeting about the readiness of U.S. forces today and their ability to do not only their assignments now, but the challenges they might face in the future," Bacon told reporters at the Pentagon.

Cohen and the military leaders believe "forces at the tip of the spear, those who are forward deployed in Korea or Bosnia or Prince Sultan Air Base in Saudi Arabia are well prepared, well led and ready to do their job," Bacon said. But they're concerned, he said, about readiness strains in follow-on forces.

"The way (Shelton) has put it is that, in the last year or so, readiness trends have nosed down," Bacon said. "We want to pull up on the stick before there's a nosedive." The leaders' objective was to lay out those trends and challenges for the president, he said.

Although the meeting wasn't about money, Bacon said, the current budget has forced DoD and the services to spend less on quality-of-life programs and infrastructure in order to fund readiness programs. Bacon said a primary purpose of last year's Quadrennial Defense Review was to find the right spending balance to meet future needs.

"For a long while the military services have been making a choice between readiness on the one hand and procurement, quality of life (and) infrastructure on the other," Bacon said.

"Secretary Cohen set out to change that balance because he wants to look 10, 20 years down the road and make sure that we're buying the weapons we need to face the challenges of the future."

The challenge now is finding the right balance and not overlooking retention issues like military pay and retirement benefits, Bacon said. A larger budget may be necessary, he said, but greater efficiency is also necessary.

In the past year and, most recently, with Cohen's visits to Moody Air Force Base, Ga., and Fort Drum, N.Y., DoD leaders have looked at ways they can better manage training and deployments to reduce stresses on service members and their families.

Cohen has proposed other economies as well, principally additional base closures. The secretary "believes that we still need to grasp tens of billions of dollars in savings that would be available over time from two future rounds of base closures," Bacon said. "We need to reduce excess and costly infrastructure."

Cohen would channel these savings into procurement, readiness and other areas, Bacon said. "Should we not be able to generate enough savings and relieve enough pressure through management reform, then one of the things we will have to look at is whether the top line is enough. But that is something that will emerge in the course of the budget process."

DoD's immediate financial needs are for $1.9 billion to cover the cost of Bosnia operations and additional funding to cover the proposed 3.6 percent fiscal 1999 military pay raise, which is one-half percent higher than the original 3.1 percent proposal.

"The budgetary process is under way and there are a number of decisions to be made," Bacon said. "Right now, there is a balanced budget agreement. On the other hand, we do face readiness demands, and those are the demands that the secretary is determined to meet — to keep readiness trends from changing from a nose-down to a nose-dive. The secretary is committed to making sure the military is adequately funded to carry out its mission today and in the future."

Drill sergeants experience faster promotion rates

Gerry J. Gilmore
Army News Service

Soldiers with drill sergeant experience under their belts are being promoted at a faster rate to senior noncommissioned officer rank than troops with no time "on the trail."

In order to enhance the drill sergeant program, senior Army leadership has directed that drill sergeants receive more recognition for serving in demanding positions as the Army's premier trainers, said Maj. Marlon K. Beck, Enlisted Personnel Division, Office of the Deputy Chief of Staff for Personnel.

"We look at it as tough duty. NCOs with successful drill sergeant experience are some of the best Soldiers the Army has and should be recognized as such and promoted accordingly," Beck said.

Besides sponsoring a drill sergeant duty pay increase to $275 per month, which took place in December 1997, senior officials have also directed Department of the Army Centralized Enlisted Promotion Board members to be more aware of candidates with drill sergeant experience, Beck said. Centralized boards consider Soldiers for promotion to senior NCO ranks of sergeant first class, master sergeant or first sergeant, and sergeant major.

The results from the June Sergeant First Class Centralized Promotion board held at Fort Benjamin Harrison, Ind., indicate that the boards are receiving the message, Beck said.

The sergeants first class list came out August 4, Beck said, which shows an overall selection rate of 26.7 percent for promotion to sergeant first class. Soldiers with drill sergeant experience were promoted to sergeant first class at a 39.7 percent selection rate, he said.

"We've analyzed how drill sergeants do (in promotions) versus the entire (Army) population," Beck said. "Drill sergeants in the past always had a little higher (promotion) selection rate than the rest of the population. But, for this particular promotion board, practically without exception, Soldiers with drill sergeant experience had a higher selection rate."

February's Master Sergeant board also promoted Soldiers with drill sergeant experience at a higher rate, Beck said.

"The overall selection rate for master sergeant was 15.7 percent and drill sergeants had a selection rate of 19 percent," he said.

Current and former drill sergeants seem to getting promoted quicker "across all Army career management fields," Beck said.

"For example, in CMF 11 (Infantry), light and heavy units, the overall selection rate for sergeant first class was 21 percent, while individuals with drill sergeant experience were promoted at a 32 percent rate," Beck said. "Looking at a combat support function, CMF 92 (Supply), the overall selection rate to sergeant first class was 23 percent.

"CMF 92 Soldiers with drill sergeant experience had a sergeant first class selection rate of 51 percent," he said.

Soldiers with drill sergeant experience selected for promotion to sergeant first class or master sergeant had successfully completed a tour or two of drill sergeant duty, Beck said, or were rated as successful in their current drill sergeant duties.

It is not unfair if troops with time "on the trail" are getting promoted ahead of others lacking such experience, Beck said. Rather, he said, drill sergeants are being rewarded for taking on an important and often-arduous duty.

"Drill sergeant duty is a demanding and challenging job and we have highlighted this to board members during the centralized promotion boards," Beck said.

Promotion board members are also made aware that drill sergeant duty "is outside regular career management fields," Beck said.

Like recruiters and equal opportunity noncommissioned officers who serve outside their specialty for two to four years, Soldiers who successfully perform and complete drill sergeant duty have demonstrated intelligence, toughness and flexibility, he said.

These are professional attributes that any Army in the world would want its NCOs to have, Beck said.

Soldiers who volunteer or are selected for special assignments like drill sergeant duty, recruiting and other duties "have always received an increased promotion potential, because the Army recognizes the difficulty of doing those duties successfully," said Sgt. Maj. William T. Hursh, enlisted promotion proponent, ODCSPER.

Explaining the importance of drill sergeant duty to promotion boards "is a re-emphasis," Hursh said, which reminds Soldiers rewards await those who successfully perform the Army's toughest jobs.

"When you are put out there doing one of these special duties such as drill sergeant duty, and you're able to do it successfully, it shows your potential as an NCO," he said. "This demonstrates flexibility and an ability to do something outside of your field.

"We always tell Soldiers to seek tough, challenging, leadership positions. Drill sergeant duty is a very challenging leadership position. And, leadership is very important to promotion, and to the Army as a whole," Hursh said.

3rd Brigade conducts humanitarian relief

Sgt. 1st Class James B. Merkel
3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division (Mechanized)

The villagers of Vlasenica, suffering from starvation and disease brought on by a summer drought, were awaiting a shipment of vital food and medical supplies from the United Nations. A convoy was organized and sent to bring the humanitarian relief, protected by American forces.

The route required the convoy to cross at a Krasnovian border control checkpoint, and move through territory disputed by the governments of Krasvnovia and Parumphia. At the village, the Soldiers and UN workers would distribute the stores brought through to the people of Vlasenica, in the country of Mojavia.

This was the premise behind a recent training exercise conducted by 3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division (Mechanized) Soldiers. Known as Operations Other Than War (OOTW), this was the first time the Soldiers from Kelly Hill had conducted a Bosnia-style mission locally.

The units were task organized into company teams, consisting of two infantry platoons in Bradley Fighting Vehicle and one tank platoon in M1A1 Abrams Main Battle Tanks.

The 3rd Brigade, scheduled to deploy to the National Training Center at Fort Irwin, Calif., will experience these types of missions during the early part of its deployment.

The operation began with the Soldiers conducting a link-up with the U.N. convoy of relief supplies and stopping at the Krasnovian border checkpoint.

The American Soldiers, responsible for the safe passage of the convoy, were faced with a potentially hostile force which did not speak English (Spanish speaking Soldiers were used as the border guards).

This part of the exercise tested the ability of the unit leaders to respond to a dangerous situation peacefully, and to communicate their intentions regardless of the language barrier.

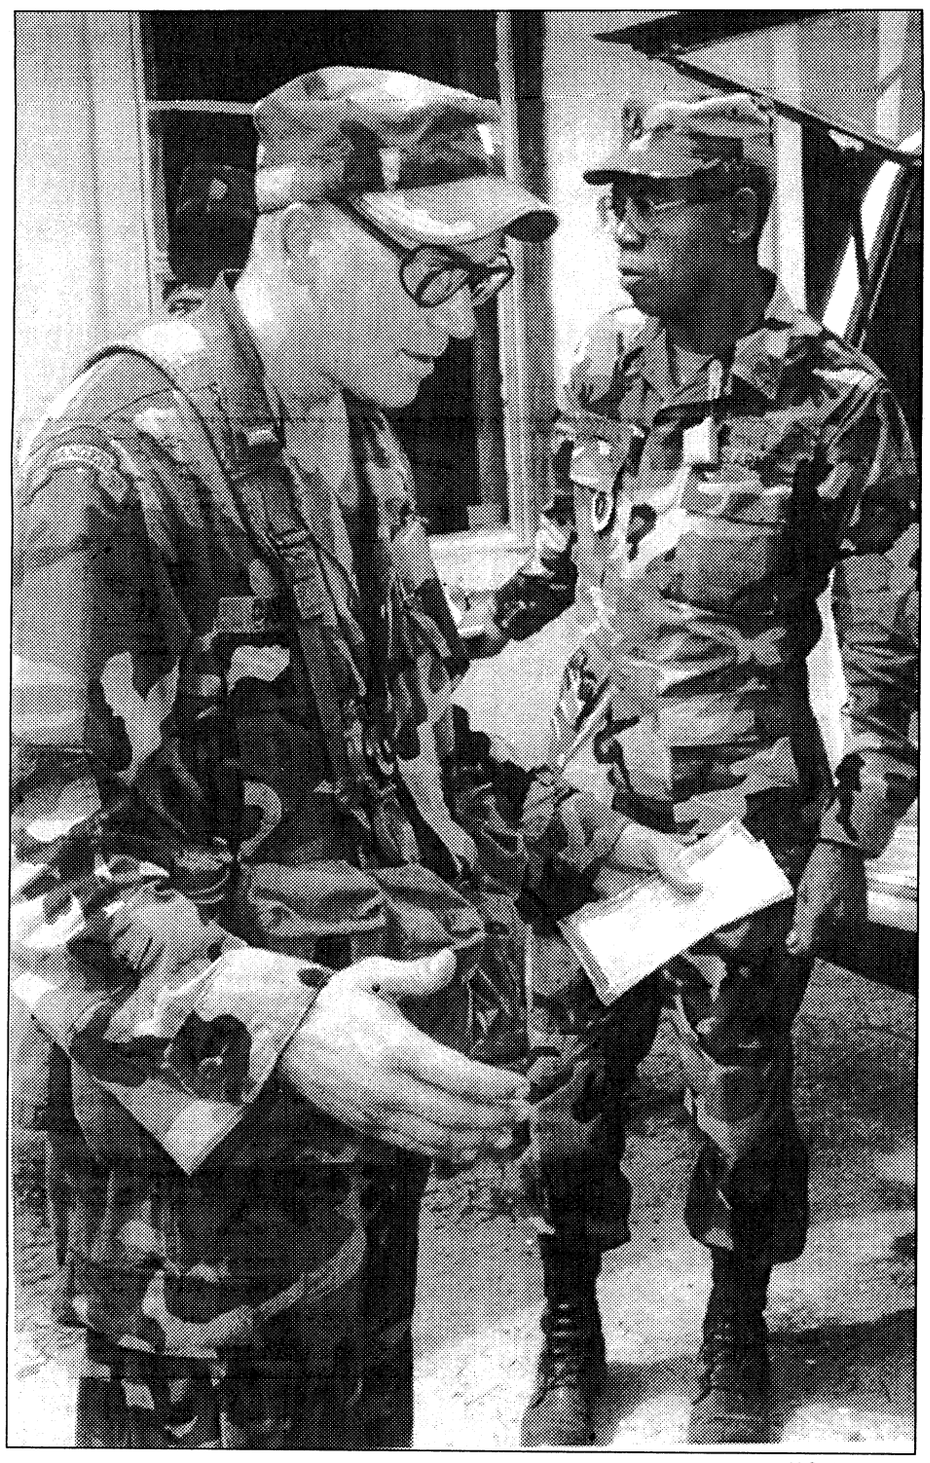
After the border checkpoint, the convoy moved through disputed territory, and the possibility of ambush. As the convoy neared a bridge, a force of "guerrillas" fired on the convoy with the intent of stopping the relief effort.

The final phase of the mission was to meet with the senior official in Vlasenica for coordination concerning the relief effort.

The people of Vlasenica, thought to be neutral concerning the political strife within their region, had shown a distrust of foreigners in the past. This portion of the exercise tested the unit's ability to negotiate with host nation authorities and to provide humanitarian assistance, by distributing the food and medicine without alarming the local villagers.

Overall, use of the established rules of engagement, which dictate when and why a Soldier is authorized to use deadly force, were vital part of the operation.

Sgt. 1st Class James B. Merkel



Soldiers from the 3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division (Mechanized) conduct Operations Other Than War (OOTW) with Bradley Fighting Vehicles.

Rules of engagement give Soldiers operating in potentially hostile territory a baseline to determine what is aggressive and threatening acts and what is the force necessary to deal with the threat.

The 3rd Brigade is part of the 3rd Inf. Div. (Mech.), headquartered at Fort Stewart, Ga. The division is a unit assigned to the XVIII Airborne Corps, the largest ground element of America's Rapid Deployment Force.

The Brigade at Kelly Hill is on alert cycle directed by the National Command Authority to react to threats to American interest overseas.

Deployment to places like Kuwait in the Middle East, and other "hot spots" of the world have seen common place for Soldiers.

Infantry unit heads west for JRTC rotation

Pvt. 2 Nicole M. Graham
Bayonet staff writer

Soldiers from Company B, 1st Battalion, 30th Infantry Regiment, 3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division (Mechanized) will depart for Fort Polk, La., to the Joint Readiness Training Center (JRTC) for a month-long training exercise at the beginning of October.

During the deployment, they will combine training efforts with Soldiers from the 10th Mountain Division, Fort Drum, N.Y. The brigade will join light Infantry forces from Fort Drum to train in conjunction with heavy Infantry forces in a realistic low-intensity conflict scenario, said Capt. Jay Migone, the company's commander.

The company was chosen to accompany the 10th Mtn. Div. during October's training as an attachment.

The Soldiers recently completed a two-week training mission with the 10th Mtn. Div. during training exercise, Mountain Peak at Fort Drum, N.Y., in preparation for the JRTC.

When the Soldiers arrive at the training center, they will conduct two phases of training while away. During the first phase, Soldiers will conduct a series of live-fires. As they move into the second phase of training, they will provide support for the light Infantry along with mechanized support. They will also clear primary roads, mines and obstacles out of the path so the light Infantry Soldiers may advance to complete whatever mission lies ahead.

The Soldiers will enter Military Operations on Urban Terrain (MOUT) sites that will be staged with civilians acting as village members.

"The villages are very realistic," said 1st Lt. Eddie Eldridge, executive officer of Co. B, 1st Bn., 30 Inf. Regt., 3rd Bde., 3rd Inf. Div. (Mech.).

"The buildings are furnished with everything and there is even running water," he continued.

The dedicated opposing force (OPFOR) at JRTC will play one role as insurgents as combat units attempt to take over the fictitious country.

Soldiers will have to react correctly to various scenarios, to include civilians on the battlefield and media intervention. Following the rules of engagement while accomplishing the mission is a key learning point, said Migone.

While in the village, the Soldiers will provide light Infantry Soldiers with additional heavy fire and maneuverability.

"The Soldiers will learn better utilization of assets and will be able to perform more effectively in situations where Soldiers both mechanized and light work together," Eldridge said.

"After every event, the Soldiers will receive an after action review that will provide us with valuable feedback," Migone said.

"We take the feedback and make improvements for our next mission," he said.

At the end of the exercise "lessons learned" will be integrated into future training back at the home station.

OSUT Soldiers receive basic marksmanship instruction

1st Lt. Darryl Stewart
1st Bn., 19th Inf. Regt., ITB

The Soldiers of Company A, 1st Battalion, 19th Infantry Regiment, Infantry Training Brigade (ITB) conducted Basic Rifle Marksmanship (BRM) training from Sept. 1 14.

BRM is divided into 10 periods of instruction. Co. A, a 227-man one station unit training company, concluded M-16A2 rifle qualification on Sept. 1-14.

The Soldiers are introduced to the M-16A2 rifle and all its components during the first two periods of instruction.

Soldiers are introduced to the Weaponeer device, which displays a 300-meter zero target and the Soldier must hit five out of six shots in two consecutive shot groups.

"This exercise introduces Soldiers to their weapon, and how it functions before they go through a live-fire," said Capt. Jason M. Morwick, Co. A, 1st Bn., 19th Inf. Regt. commander.

"Most Soldiers have never fired a weapon before, so it is a leadership challenge for the cadre to get them qualified."

BRM periods three through five confirm the accuracy of the weapon by allowing the Soldier to zero his M-16A2 rifle.

The Soldiers confirm their zero by hitting at least five out of six shots in two consecutive three round shot groups within a three centimeter circle.

"Confirming the zero on a Soldier's weapon is the most important event during BRM training," explained Staff Sgt. Anthony Cooper, a drill sergeant with 1st Bn., 19th Inf. Regt, ITB.

"This assures the Soldier that he can hit what he aims at, whether it is a pop-up target or the opposing force."

The Soldiers receive practical exercises firing the M-16A2 rifle during BRM periods six through nine.

The Soldiers put rounds down range and receive feedback from the scores they obtain during practice qualification.

"Practice record fire is where the Soldiers find out if their zero is confirmed," said Staff Sgt. Terry Vaughn, a drill sergeant with 1st Bn., 19th Inf. Regt, ITB.

"The more chances they get to fire that weapon, the easier it is for Soldiers to qualify."

Qualification time is the culmination of all training the Soldier received during the first nine periods of instruction.

Soldiers do not receive any assistance from their drill sergeants, it's just the Soldier, his weapon and the targets in front of him. In order for the Soldier to qualify, he must receive a total of 23 hits out of 40 targets exposures.

The Soldiers who hit 23 to 29 targets qualify as marksman, 30 to 35 targets qualify as sharpshooters and 36 to 40 qualify as experts.

The road to becoming an Infantryman and receiving the coveted blue cord goes through BRM qualification.

"If you cannot hit what you shoot at, then you cannot be an Infantryman," said Pvt. 2 Rick Grebe from South Bend, Ind.

Newspapers help Soldiers find jobs in new areas

Debbie Henshaw
Army Career and Alumni Program

The newspaper can be a good source of information for separating Soldiers and their families.

Wherever a transitioning Soldier relocates, the Soldier can find out about the job market, economic trends, business growth, people on the move and housing by reading the local paper, according to Diane Ermi, ACAP counselor.

"Sunday's paper has the most complete classified employment section because employers know it is more widely read by job seekers," Ermi said.

"The Sunday paper also has special sections that may describe one or more successful business. The employment outlook can also give biographical information about successful employers,"she continued.

"Along with actual job ads are campaigns in the classified section of the paper," she continued

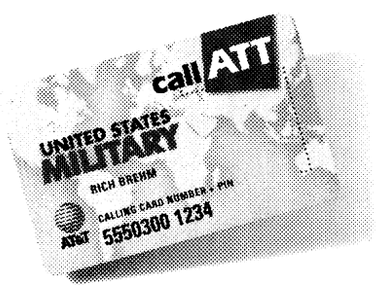
Soldiers are able to match their professional Army skills, training and experience with the requirements found in newspaper classified ads.

ACAP also offers benefit briefings and job assistance workshops to help transitioning Soldiers.

"ACAP instructors will teach Soldiers how to network, use job databases on the Internet, access ACAP Hot Leads, use the transition bulletin board, prepare for job fairs and employer days," Ermi said.

"Soldiers can also learn to effectively use placement firms and use the newspaper in a job search," she continued.

National and international newspapers may be accessed in the ACAP Center through the Fort Benning ACAP home page or by using the home page address.



The ACAP home page may be accessed through http://www.benning.army.mil/fbhome/ACAP/acapweb1.html.

"This information source may help you locate a job, and it will certainly make you better prepared with local news which can help you at the interview," Ermi said.

For ACAP eligibility, scheduling and information, call or visit Building 2634 in Soldiers' Plaza at 545-2308 or 545-2309.

During the open house, parents were able to meet with all of their children's teachers and find out how well their children were doing in each class.

Before the open house, the PTA also conducted its first membership meeting of the year. During the meeting, PTA missions and goals for the year were discussed. SAT testing

Spencer school encourages students to prepare for future

Pfc. Amy L. Nyland
Bayonet staff writer

School is back in session and teenagers have returned to the daily adventures of academics and extracurricular activities. As high school students begin concentrating on how they are going to spend their free time, they may want to begin thinking about something that is going to affect their future — the Scholastic Aptitude Test (SAT).

The SAT is a standardized test that helps colleges access a student's reasoning abilities and academic strengths compared to other students who take the test. Many colleges and secondary institutions require the SAT test for admission. Often times, institutions have minimum SAT score requirements for admission.

According to Spencer High School's Assistant Principal James E. Tanksley, the SAT is a stepping stone in a student's academic career and it is important for both students and parents to plan and prepare in advance, to ensure the greatest potential for success.

"It is never too early to begin preparing for the SAT test," Tanksley said. "Students and parents can prepare even before entering high school."

Tanksley said an exceptional SAT score may help ensure a students academic and professional future.

He said it could not only give students a variety of colleges to choose from, but also recognition and scholarship opportunities as well.

"We try to get parents to think of the SAT from an economical stand point," Tanksley said. "They are going to save themselves money if their child is able to receive scholarships."

If college is in a student's future they can begin long term planning for the SAT by choosing college preparatory courses, said Greg Campbell, guidance counselor at Spencer.

Campbell said this is especially important in the areas of math and science.

He said the big picture requires parents to be supportive of their children and make sure he or she is working hard and doing the right things to ready themselves for the SAT.

Some of the preparations include encouraging children to take the Pre-SAT during their sophomore year of high school. It can also mean taking the SAT as soon as possible to give a student plenty of opportunities to re-take the test if they are not satisfied with the results. There is no limit to the number of times the SAT can be taken.

For students at Spencer who are preparing to take the test within the next year, the school offers several resources designed to prepare them for the test.

According to Terry McGhee, media specialist, the library offers verbal and mathematics practical test booklets that can be checked out along with software that can be downloaded to a student's home computer.

A workshop is also conducted by the school before the SAT testing date. McGhee said the workshop works to boost student's confidence by providing them with helpful hints about the test.

"All of the resources we offer to students help them to identify their strong and weak areas on the test," McGhee said. "When they find the areas they are not so good in they, can work harder in that area."

Throughout the year a total of seven SAT exams will be given. The first exam is scheduled for Oct. 10 and the others will be held Nov. 7, Dec. 5, Jan. 23, March 20, May 1 and June 5.

Deadline for registration for the Nov. 7 test is Oct. 2 and early registration is encouraged.

Students and parents can receive more information about the SAT exam and registration details by contacting the school's guidance counselors.

Festival of the Americas

Community unites during cultural celebration

Sgt. Alberto Betancourt
U.S Army School of the Americas

Music, food and cultural artifacts helped unite the community during the Festival of the America's celebration which began Sept. 17 and ended Sept. 19.

The annual event, which was sponsored by the U.S. Army School of the Americas, kicked off the three-day celebration with an Open House at Faith Middle School Sept. 17.

Amidst leather goods, handmade ceramics, colorful hats and coffee beans, thousands of local students traveled through 18 nations during the exposition.

Victoria Martin, whose daughter participates in the Spanish Club at Wilson Elementary, said an exposition like this was wonderful for adults and children alike because it gave them a taste of the Hispanic culture.

"The kids really loved it," she said. "This was something new for a lot of the children."

Martin's 7-year-old daughter, Tanika, was especially impressed with a particular flag. "That's my daddy's flag," she said pointing to the Puerto Rican flag."

Whether they were presenting flags, interesting flutes or coffee mugs, each country provided a part of their culture that helped to entertain everyone.

"I learned a lot more about my own country and new things about other countries," said Carlos Badillo, a 16-year-old Spencer High School student and native of Puerto Rico.

"An event like this brings all the Latin American countries together," he said. "It makes me proud to be Hispanic."

Kim Crowell and Maria Mercado, co-sponsors of "Los Tigeritos" Spanish Club at Wilson Elementary said the event helped with their students' project.

"Our students made flags for the Latin American nations," Crowell said. "During this expo they saw the countries that went with the flags and learned about the culture."

The festivities continued with the "Bocadillos" inside Ridgway Hall Sept. 18. During this event, each country offered a food sampling and a native drink for guests to enjoy.

The gala community event culminated with the Parade of Nations at the Ironworks and Community Center Sept 19..

An array of colorful costumes mixed with tropical beats kept the audience clapping in support of a variety of dance performances. One of this year's favorite performances was the United State's dance group which featured rock-n-roll, disco, country and Michael Jackson. The dancers ended their routine with a rendition of the Village People's YMCA and received help from the audience with the hand signals that made the song popular.

"It was a spectacular show," said Mimi Woodson, Columbus council woman.

After the Parade of Nations, everyone enjoyed a traditional Latin American buffet which included such things as paella (seafood mixed with yellow

Post urges safety while hunting

Directorate of Public Works

Fall is finally here, and although it's still hot outside, some hunters have taken to the woods and fields to hunt squirrel and dove.

Squirrel season began Aug. 15 and dove season started Sept. 5. Bow season for deer opened Sept. 19 and the gun deer season will open Oct. 24. Other popular species hunted on Fort Benning during the fall and winter include quail, rabbit, raccoon and waterfowl.

Hunting regulations are contained in USAIC Circular 210-4 (Hunting Seasons and Bag Limits) and USAIC Regulation 210-2 (Hunting and Fishing Regulation). There are a few changes this year that hunters should keep in mind. Fluorescent orange must be worn throughout the gun deer season, ending Jan. 31 for both Georgia and Alabama.

However, hunters are encouraged to wear fluorescent orange during the entire hunting season. Likewise, hunter control call-in and call-out is mandatory beginning with the gun deer season and ending Jan. 31.

There will be a bonus feral swine (wild hog) hunt on the Georgia side of the installation from Jan. 10 until Jan. 31. Also, feral swine can be hunted all year with bow and arrow in any compartment that is open for hunting. Permanent deer stands are still legal on Fort Benning.

The restructuring and revitalization of the game and fish program started by Commanding General Maj. Gen. Carl F. Ernst is making progress. His guidance was to make it a safe, active program based on customer needs. It should include increased hunting and fishing opportunities, elimination of Special Duty (SD) Soldiers from the program and creating a program that is self supporting. Some of these initiatives have occurred or are in progress.

SD Soldiers have been removed from hunter control and have been replaced by an electronic call-in and call-out system. A game and fish technician should be hired soon and will concentrate on habitat improvement to improve hunting and fishing opportunities.

Future fish pond project: This project will include weed control, fertilization, stocking and brush control along pond banks. There will be improved wildlife planting for both dove fields and fall openings. Conservation organizations such as Ducks Unlimited and Quality Deer Management Association will be contacted in an effort to develop joint projects to improve hunting and fishing opportunities.

Presently under consideration is a fishing permit fee increase that will make the program self-sufficient and provide more income to complete projects. The game and fish technician will also coordinate the efforts of volunteers to help with wildlife habitat improvement and census work. The ultimate goal of these improvements is to provide a safe, quality hunting and fishing experience consistent with mission requirements and sound land management practices that will be a model for other game and fish programs.

Fall is the time to enjoy the coolness and colors of the fall, participate in an American tradition and take time out to relax and return to nature. Hunting also provides an opportunity for Soldiers to sharpen their Infantry fighting skills. There are no sharper eyes in the woods than the wild turkey and few species can match the deer for hearing. Hunting enhances skills such as marksmanship, tracking, land navigation, camouflage and movement techniques.

Remember however, that safety is always first and the quality of the experience is more important than what's in the game bag.

Q: I hear a lot of people say that having a will is important. Is it, and if so, why?

A: Having a will may or may not be important, depending on a person's individual circumstances, but for everyone, estate planning is important.

One fact of life is that we all will die someday. Most of us, during the course of our lives, obtain jobs, own property of some sort or another (land, investments, cash, cars, personal property or the clothes on our backs) and get into debt. Some of us have children. To engage in estate planning is to take a look at our property, our debt and our children and to make some decisions about how these things will be handled when we die. The goal is to make sure that there is an orderly disposition of our affairs.

When a person dies, the property they still own at the time of their death becomes the property of their estate — what we call the probate estate. The probate estate is subject to claims of creditors of the deceased. The disposition of property in the estate is controlled by a will, if the person had one, and if not, by state law which determines the identity of the heirs of the deceased. Depending on the type of property left in the probate estate, legal proceeding to either probate the will or to administer the estate may be necessary in order transfer property from the estate to the person or persons who are supposed to receive it.

It is possible, however, to set up many kinds of property so that it automatically passes to a beneficiary or group of beneficiaries upon death, and thus, never becomes a part of the probate estate. Life insurance is a good example of this process. On an insurance policy, you name a person or group of people who are to receive the proceeds and you are done. It is also possible to set up IRAs, stocks, mutual funds and other types of investment accounts to automatically pass to a death beneficiary.

Real estate can be set up to pass automatically at time of death by setting up the title of the property in what is known as a joint tenancy with right of survivorship. To set up the title to the house or the land requires special documentation. Just putting the land or house in both names does not mean that the survivor of the two will automatically get it. Because of a new law effective July 1, 1998 in Georgia, it is now possible to have joint title with survivorship on motor vehicles.

The use of these estate planning tools can make the process of transferring property upon death easier and more orderly, merely by taking property out of the probate estate. However, a will may still be important, even with the use of survivorship tools. For example, if a person is married and has minor children, a will can establish who will take over parenting duties for the children in the absence of a parent , and can be very important in establishing how property and money will be handled for the children. Even if an adult has property set up to pass automatically to a spouse, a will may still be important to establish who takes the property if one spouse does not survive the other.

The point is that persons should spend some time thinking through personal situations and make some decisions about how affairs should be handled. Contact the Legal Assistance Division for an appointment with one of the attorneys to discuss an estate, and the various tools available to help plan for disposition of it. For more information, call 545-3281.

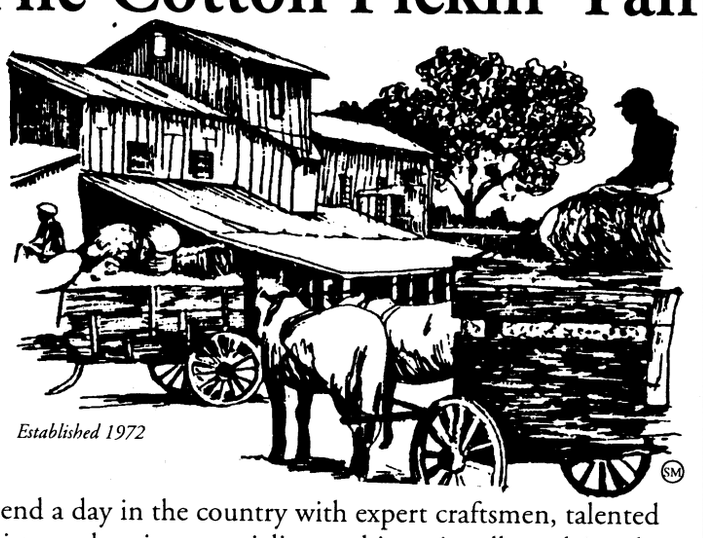
Early cancer detection saves lives

Dr. Virginia Yates
Martin Army Community Hospital

Breast cancer is the most commonly diagnosed cancer in women and is the leading cause of cancer deaths for women ages 15 to 54. Breast cancer is a readiness issue for the Armed Forces with the total number of women in the military now near 400,000. In a lifetime, one in every eight women will develop breast cancer.

The most effective way to decrease breast cancer deaths and devastating effects is early detection. This is done by educating doctors and nurses in breast exam techniques, making screening mammograms available to all military beneficiaries, educating patients on the importance of monthly breast self-examinations and providing state-of-the-art diagnosis and treatment modalities.

Congress gave the Department of Defense (DoD) a budget in 1996-1998 to improve early diagnosis, education and prevention of breast cancer for all female beneficiaries of the Military Health System. With this money, facilities like Martin Army Community Hospital (MACH) developed a mammogram tracking system using a nurse case manager who assures women with abnormal mammograms when they are notified. Also, the radiology department increased the number of hours mammograms are offered to decrease waiting time after a mammogram has been ordered. Doctors and nurses were required to attend education classes to update skills on breast examinations. Soon, MACH will have a learning resource center where patients will be able to use patient education computers to learn about breast cancer and general wellness topics.



Other changes that have come about thanks to this DoD initiative include the availability of internet access to cancer specialists for physicians in isolated military treatment facilities, training programs to teach mammography technicians and mobile screening and education vehicles for those assigned to remote locations.

In conjunction with the National Cancer Institute, the DoD has developed genetic testing, counseling studies and has increased access for cancer patients to enter clinical trials for state-of-the-art cancer treatments.

Additional information regarding these programs can be found on the World Wide Web at www.ha.osd.mil.

Yom Kippur seals repentance

Rabbi Arthur Rutberg
Shearith Israel Synagogue

On Rosh Hashanah, it is written; "on Yom Kippur, it is sealed." Our fate hangs in the balance on these Ten Days of Repentance. On the 10th day of the New Year of 5759, we worship in the synagogue, we abstain from eating and drinking and other pleasurable activities. We then ask for forgiveness and pray for atonement. This 10th day, the Day of Atonement, is called Yom Kippur in Hebrew. It falls on Wednesday this year.

reflections

The Talmud, a compendium of rabbinic laws compiled in the sixth century, tells us to remember three things and we will not suffer. We must remember that above us there is a seeing eye and all of our deeds are recorded in a book. Jewish tradition calls this heaven-centered book , The Book of Life. We imagine that on Rosh Hashanah, at the beginning of the Days of Repentance, our past deeds are reviewed.

On that day, God judges us. If our deeds of the past year merit a favorable judgment, then we are written in for a good year in the Book of Life. If our deeds do not meet with God's approval, then we are not.

Thankfully, God does not write in indelible ink. Our repentance, our sincere contrition, our fervent prayers, our deeds of charity and righteousness during the ten days until Yom Kippur can swing the scales in our favor.

The day begins with the haunting prayer of Kol Nidre. With Kol Nidre, we ask God to absolve us of the sin caused by harsh words we uttered and by promises and vows we have made and not fulfilled. It is far easier to recall our deeds than our words. For the next twenty-four hours, we do not eat or drink, put on perfumes or colognes, engage in sexual activity or wear leather shoes. The intent is to make us feel humble. Humble because we are hungry and uncomfortable, humble because we can not have any pleasure, humble because we do not demonstrate our dominion over animals by wearing their skins under our feet. This seemingly grueling ritual is our form of obeisance and self-sacrifice to God in the hope of gaining forgiveness and atonement.

Up to the very last moment of Yom Kippur, as the sun is setting, the gates of heaven are open to receive our sincere repentance. Just as we blow the shofar (ram's horn) on Rosh Hashanah to remind ourselves and God that we are the people of Abraham, we are the people who stood at the foot of Mount Sinai and received the Ten Commandments,we blow the shofar at the last second of Yom Kippur. This blowing of the shofar expresses the hope that even if our prayers, our repentance, our giving to those in need, our suffering through self-sacrifice has not been sufficient to merit God's favor, then perhaps God will forgive us and grant us atonement because of the merit of our ancestors.

In those final moments of Yom Kippur, as the shadows lengthen and the synagogue begins to darken, we hope and pray that whatever God wrote in the Book of Life during the Ten Days of Repentance grants us a good year. When Yom Kippur is complete, the Book is sealed. As we leave the synagogue we say to each other, "L'shana tova tikateyvu v'tikhateymu" — may you be written and sealed for a good year. Have a very happy and healthy New Year of 5759.

Family Ministries offer help to couples

Chaplain (Maj.) Frederick Rupel
Chaplain Family Life Ministries Center

Conflict. Expect it in every marriage.

reflections

However, when many people think about a disagreement with their spouse, it often brings up uncomfortable feelings — yelling, name calling, throwing objects and even hitting. One husband told me, "I avoid conflict at any cost."

Avoiding conflict can only lead to more conflict because the tough issues are never addressed, let alone resolved. There are far too many couples who fail to work out their problems just because they are afraid of conflict.

The good news is that it does not have to be that way. There are those couples who have learned to fight successfully simply by following some simple rules:

•Listen as well as talk.

•Give and take.

•Look for solutions not a personal victory.

•Paraphrase what your spouse is telling you to let them know you have heard them correctly.

•Call a time out when things get heated or you become stuck.

•No verbal, emotional or physical abuse.

•Do not let the sun go down on your anger.

•Encourage your spouse to say what he or she wants.

Do not get discouraged when you have a conflict with your spouse; instead keep talking and listening to each other and look for areas of agreement. Above all else, do not let conflicts build up, deal with them while they are still small.

To learn how to communicate effectively with a spouse, call the Chaplain Family Life Ministries Center at 545-1760.

Post teams prepare for Army Ten-Miler

Pvt. 2 Nicole M. Graham
Bayonet staff writer

Fifteen Fort Benning Soldiers earned a slot to compete in the U.S. Army Ten-Miler competition set for Oct. 11 in Washington D.C.

The Soldiers representing Fort Benning will compete against more than 11,000 other active duty and active guard reserve Soldiers.

In order to compete, the Soldiers participated in two qualifying runs.

Those who qualified were then placed on one of three teams.

Men who ran the 10 miles in 60 minutes or less had a guaranteed spot in the Men's Open Division. Women who completed the run in 80 minutes or less received a spot in the Women's Open Division and Men over age 40 who completed the run in 65 minutes were slotted on the Men's Masters Division.

Five other runners attending the event will also run in support of the post team.

The teams for this years competition have been chosen, and now the Soldiers must physically prepare themselves for the upcoming competition, said coach Capt. Danny McMillian, U.S. Army Physical Fitness School.

In order to help a Soldier ready themselves for the run, McMillian reviews their individual training schedule and advises them on how they may improve their time using different running techniques.

"Incorporating distance runs, track workouts and tempo runs into the Soldiers' weekly training schedule will assist in preparing the Soldiers," McMillian said.

One of the competitors, 2nd Lt. Kerryn Davidson, U.S. Army Medical Activity said she concentrates her training towards distance running.

"I run six miles a day during the week and 10 or 12 miles on the weekend," Davidson said. "I should be working towards speed, but I prefer the long-distance runs."

Davidson competed last year with a time of 71 minutes. She finished the race in the top 10 percent of her age group. She hopes to run the race within 70 minutes this year.

Davidson said although running is very routine for her, she loves the competition.

Along with Davidson, most of the Soldiers who are competing in the race are not strangers to distance competition.

Another competitor, Maj. Kathy Towers, U.S. Army Fitness School, has competed in races such as the New York Marathon, Boston Marathon and the U.S. Army Ten-Miler.

Towers said she became interested in competition because of her husband.

"I saw my husband running in ultra marathons, which are 50 miles. So I felt if my husband could do 50 miles I could do at least 10."

Although a 10-mile run may pose to be a physical challenge, it may also be important to condition their mind to deal with the any mental challenge they may face.

Pvt. 2 Nicole M. Graham

Pfc. Jason Goodard, Pvt. 2 Curtis Garcia and Maj. Curtis Southern practice for the upcoming Ten-Miler.

"If I am running hard and going all out, I may feel as if I want to stop, but I am prepared to go all the way. We train to deal with these situations," said runner, Sgt. 1st Class Stanley Doyle, Company A, 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment.

Receiving support from others is also important to a runner's success, according to Towers.

"So many things go through my mind when I am running, but once I hear the people in the crowd cheering it makes it easier to finish," Towers said.

The Fort Benning team is also receiving support for divisions and organizations around post.

With the support of the Directorate of Community Activities (DCA), the team's living expenses, food and travel expenses are paid for. The Association of the U.S. Army donated new uniforms to the team. The Post exchange donated distinctive T-shirts also.

"It says a lot for a Soldier to come out and run in the competition, so it is great when they have their commanders' support," Towers said.

As the last runner crosses the finish line, all the training and support may show as the individual runners receive their placement. The team also receives a placement, calculated from the top four runner's times.

Last year the Women's Open placed 13th and the Men's Open placed eighth.

"All of the divisions should place within the top ten this year," Towers said. "Our Masters team is really competitive; they should place within the top five."

Although it is too late to qualify for this year's run, anyone who would like to run can easily build up for the next year's race, McMillian said.

"When Soldiers start training, they should first build up their base mileage. They need to be able to run their goal distance with ease," McMillian said. "Then they may start to work on their speed with tempo runs and track workouts."

"Soldiers have a whole year to train before the next race," McMillian said.

YS prepares to kick off fall sports season

Michele E. Hanson
Special to the Bayonet©

As fall approaches, Youth Services (YS) prepares to kickoff the football, soccer and cheerleading season. Children of all ages can soon have the opportunity to participate in their favorite fall sport. YS has obtained enough football and cheerleading coaches but still seek soccer coaches in order to start the season.

"If you are an active duty Soldier with children, a single Soldier or a family member with an interest in coaching soccer, every effort will be made to get useful information about soccer to every coach," said Linda Laine, sports director for YS. "We have handouts, rule books and videos to assist any coach who would like to increase their coaching knowledge on a particular sport."

According to Laine, it is a difficult time of year to find coaches because of all the moves that occur in the summer.

"Newcomers are not familiar with our system and are a bit hesitant about coming in and volunteering," she said.

"Volunteers are needed year round and are always welcome," Laine said. "We will work with the volunteers' schedules and try to make everyone feel at home."

The official football coaches clinic will be held in conjunction with the football draft at 9 a.m. Saturday in the Main Post YS gymnasium.

"The draft is blind and the registration forms are closed to the coaches. The only information available to the coaches is age, height and weight," Laine said.

She went on to say each coach will draw a number and select players according to the number drawn. When all the players are selected, the coaches draw again and swap the entire team to another coach. This keeps the entire selection process honest.

"I like this time of year because football is my favorite sport," said Justin Christy, a youth service football player. "I love to tackle and get tackled, that's what makes playing football so much fun."

Football practice will begin as soon as the coaches contact the players on their team roster. Football and soccer games have a tentative start date of Oct. 14 and the season will run eight weeks. Cheerleaders can expect a call before Oct. 2.

Soccer coaches are needed by this weekend in order to place the majority of the children on a team. Persons who are interested in coaching can stop by the Main Post YS office today, located in Building 1056 or call Linda Laine at 545-3070.

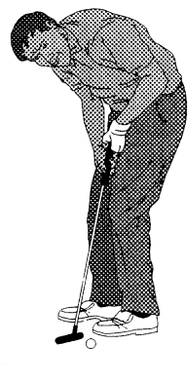
Callaway Gardens sponsors Military Appreciation Day Oct. 2

USAIC Public Affairs Office



Once again, Callaway Gardens and Buick, along with Association of the U.S. Army will sponsor Military Appreciation Day at the Buick Challenge at Callaway Gardens Oct. 2.

On that day, Soldiers, family members, reservists, retirees and Department of Defense civilians can attend who are the premier golf tournaments for free. Those who are not interested in golf spend the day picnicking with their units or touring the gardens and the Sibley Butterfly Center.

For golf aficionados, the Buick Challenge field will have 18 of the top 30 golfers in the world competing for the grand prize.

Vijay Sing, this year's PGA champion, was the latest big name to commit to playing at the Mountain View Course. Davis Love II, who won the PGA last year then came to Callaway to win that championship, will also be on hand.

They will be joined by the top money winner on the tour, David Duval as well as Jim Furyk, Justin Leonard, Glen Day, Scott Hoch, Billy Mayfair, John Cook, Payne Stewart, Scott Verplank, Tom Watson, Bob Estes, Bob Tway, Jeff Maggert, Fred Funk and Andrew Magee.

Other favorites who committed to play are Billy Andrade, Paul Azinger, two locals, Larry Mize and Hugh Royer III.

Since the cutoff is not until Saturday, all golfers should be on hand for Friday's Military Appreciation Day.

Those who wish to attend can either ride in buses which will depart from unit parking lots, or drive. Those who drive will need to pay a $3 parking fee.

AUSA and the Morale Welfare and Recreation Department of the Director of Community Activities will also hold a drawing for prizes, which in the past have included bicycles, televisions and saving bonds.

Golf officials note there are some rules to follow when it comes to watching golf tournaments.

First, no cameras, coolers, pagers or cell phones are allowed on the course, any of which can distract a golfer.

Viewers are also reminded this is not the NFL or NBA where noise is good. On golf courses, silence is golden, although applause is encouraged after a good shot or putt. And of course, jeering and booing a competitor is certainly frowned upon.

Programs are available and free. These are handy because spectators can see when their favorite pro will tee off and link up with his gallery and follow him around the course.

For those not into walking, they can stand at the tee box to watch golfers hit the big boomers, station themselves along the fairway to see how well the pros can negotiate their fairway shots or even find their way out of the tenacious rough. And finally there are the greens that people can stand by to watch the pros make the fabulous twisting putts, or miss the simple two-footers, bring great joy to the average duffer who knows what it's like to miss a tap-in.

Exhibitors will also be on hand and golfers and would-be golfers can try their hands at putting or driving and for OSUT Soldiers, there are banks and banks of telephones and rows of food and drink booths.

According to Chuck Walls, garrison manager, Oct. 2 is a training holiday and Callaway Gardens is an ideal place to spend a day off.

Just another day at CSC.
Nearly four decades of innovation in management consulting, systems integration and outsourcing would make most companies rest on their laurels. Not CSC. Our track record speaks for itself: we're always among the first to challenge preconceived notions, push the boundaries of what people and technology are capable of, and develop total solutions that become standards before long. Across the government and commercial sectors worldwide, CSC's network of 45,000 employees devises strategies as unique as the clients they are designed to assist.
Come visit us in Atlanta, GA on Thursday, October 1st at the Westin Hotel, 4736 Best Rd., Atlanta International Airport, and meet with our Hiring Managers. We are seeking the following professionals for full-time positions at Ft. McPherson, GA:
Software Programmers and Computer Analysts
To qualify, you must have a thorough knowledge of and experience with C++ and ODBC. Knowledge of FoxPro databases is a plus as is experience with SQL for development on an NT platform.
Applicants selected will be subject to a government security investigation and must meet eligibility requirements for access to classified information.
If you are unable to attend our Open House, you can visit our booth at the ACAP Job Fair, Wednesday, October 14th from 9am-2pm, at the Community Club (Building 500), Ft. McPherson.
Your contributions to our industry leadership will be rewarded with excellent compensation, comprehensive benefits, and ongoing opportunities for professional growth and development. Electronic resumes, in ASCII format only, are preferred and may be sent to: federalsector@csc.com, referencing CB-FBB-0925-SNG in the subject line. No file attachments, please. Or you may mail your resume to our scanning facility: CSC Resume Scanning Services, CB-FBB-0925-SNG P.O. Box 3455, Burlington, MA 01803.

"COMMUNITIES THAT CARE"

Ceremony kicks off CFC drive

The annual Combined Federal Campaign (CFC) kicked off Sept. 25 during a ceremony at the Fort Benning Officers' Club. The theme for this year is "Communities That Care."

The drive offers federal employees a chance to contribute to their charity of choice by cash, check or payroll deduction.

According to assistant garrison executive officer, Capt. Erik Berdy, contributors have 84 different agencies to choose from when donating.

Berdy said the addition of a few agencies will help CFC achieve their $500,000 goal.

These agencies, according to retired Maj. Gen. Jerry White, president of the Chattahoochee Valley chapter of the United Way, provide 33,000 services a year for Soldiers and their families and civilians and their families.

"We are focusing on the community and taking a look at what we need to do as a community to improve the quality of life for everyone," White said.

After falling short $20,000 of the goal last year, White feels if the civilian level of contributions can increase by 20 percent, the goal would be achieved.

"The answer to the problem is participation — getting more people involved to meet the needs of the community," White said.

White went on to encourage the civilian community to donate more.

"Remember this, if each member of the civilian work force would give $1 a week, we would exceed what we did last year," White said.

Civilians, however, were not the only group encouraged to contribute.

Commanding General Maj. Gen. Carl F. Ernst made a pledge to appear at any unit formation to persuade Soldiers to give to CFC.

"I believe in (donating to CFC), I think it's important," Ernst said.

"I believe Fort Benning can (achieve this goal) because we set the standard for the Army."

Ernst explained to those in the audience that he had faith in the community to achieve this goal because they had proved themselves in the past.

"I know we will do this well — we have anytime I have asked the community to do something," Ernst said.

The campaign ends Nov. 6.

Easter Seals helps family in time of need

Michele E. Hanson

Life does not always go as expected and at one time or another, special challenges arise that complicate daily lives. When obstacles such as, accident, illness or injury occur unexpectedly, many local organizations are available to provide help.

Beatriz Kercado, a family member who resides at Fort Benning, experienced an unexpected turn for the worst when her pregnancy developed complications causing the premature birth of her son, Ken Kercado Jr.

Easter Seals, one of the nationally listed agencies supported by the Combined Federal Campaign (CFC) drive, provided support to the Kercado family during their time of need.

"I was on active duty during my pregnancy and there were no foreseen complications," Kercado. "Two weeks before Kenny was born, my blood pressure was dangerously high and I was immediately admitted to the Columbus Medical Center (CMC)."

Kercado said she moved to the CMC center because they had a neonatal clinic specializing in premature births and was equipped with a high-risk nursery. Ken Jr. was born Jan. 20, 1997, 27 weeks premature, with serious medical complications. He weighed a little over two pounds and remained at CMC until his discharge on April 19.

"About a month after he was born, I realized that I needed to plan for the future and get prepared to handle his special needs when he was discharged from the hospital," Kercado said. "I had put in the paperwork to get out of the Army, but needed to find daycare for Kenny until I was officially discharged."

According to Kercado, Ken Jr. was discharged from the hospital with prescriptions for 10 different medications, special formula and an Apnea monitor, which monitored his heart and breathing. Along with the normal problems of a premature baby, Ken Jr. had

AUSA: Army association conducts fall membership meeting, fish fry

Pvt. 2 Nicole M. Graham
Bayonet staff writer

The Chattahoochee Valley Chapter of the Association of the U.S. Army (AUSA) held the Annual Fall Membership Meeting and Fish Fry Sept. 23 at the Officers' Club.

More than 350 community members gathered for a dinner of perch, catfish, coleslaw, hushpuppies and fries as committee members and Commanding General Maj. Gen. Carl F. Ernst spoke of the achievements AUSA has accomplished for Soldiers and recognized individuals for their contributions and achievements to Soldiers and the Army.

This year, the Chattahoochee Valley Chapter held a raffle and raised approximately $23,000 so Soldiers could have the opportunity to attend the National Convention in Washington D.C. Oct. 12 to 15.

The raffle, which was started two years ago, is only one of the many ways AUSA contributes to Soldiers and the Army.

"AUSA has worked to increase pay and benefits for Soldiers through Congress as well as working towards adequate housing," said retired Maj. Gen. Jerry White, president, Chattahoochee Valley Chapter AUSA.

During the event, selected attendees were recognized for their contributions and achievements to Soldiers and the Army.

Ben Williams a representative of Columbus Bank and Trust (CB&T) was awarded the Order of Saint Maurice, and the Livingston Award was presented to Eddie Roberts of CB&T. Staff Sgt. Clifford Drysdale, Headquarters Service Company, was presented with a $100 gift certificate to Peachtree Mall.

The highlight of the evening came with the conclusion of the awards ceremony when the 1998 Chevrolet S-10 pick-up truck, courtesy of Bill Heard Chevrolet, was raffled off.

The winner, Pfc. Angela Gogins, U.S. Army Medical Activity, who was not in attendance, was informed over the phone that her ticket had been chosen.

Season tickets to the Springer Opera House, Two VIP packets to the Buick Challenge, a Char-broil grill and sauce kit and other prizes were also raffled.

The Equal Opportunity Office will host a Hispanic Heritage Month luncheon Monday at 11:30 a.m. at the Main NCO Club.

Basic training extends to nine weeks

Jim Caldwell
Army News Service

Army basic combat training expands to nine weeks Oct. 1, but Training and Doctrine Command training centers already instituted one part of the new training plan.

Drill sergeants began teaching new recruits Army values several months ago. When the extra week is added trainees will also receive more human relations and physical fitness training than in the past.

"We have incorporated values-based training since I've been here," said Lt. Col. Joe Lowder, commander, 2nd Battalion, 54th Infantry Regiment, Infantry Training Brigade. Lowder took command of the battalion in June.

"We take a value a week, starting with leadership, and we move through the seven Army values," he said.

The seven Army values are loyalty, duty, respect, selfless service, honor, integrity and personal courage.

"We introduce Soldiers to vignettes that help demonstrate a particular value," Lowder said. "When they go through the training each day of the week, drill sergeants reinforce that."

Lowder said he talks to the soldiers in training during inspections and in personal meetings with several Soldiers in each platoon near the end of the training cycle.

"They all say Army values are important," he said. "I ask them then which Army value they think is most important. As I go through inspections, I'll ask about every tenth Soldier in a platoon of about 55.

"Integrity and honor are the values they talk about the most."

That is good news to the general charged with overseeing the Army's initial entry training programs —BCT, advanced individual training and one-station unit training, which is a combination of BCT and AIT.

"Most of these Soldiers come with a pretty decent set of values already," said Lt. Gen. William Bolt Jr., TRADOC's deputy commanding general for IET.

Values-based training is an outcome of the assessment of the state of human relations in the Army following the sexual misconduct cases at Aberdeen Proving Ground, Md., and at other training locations.

"We started relooking at how we wanted to reinvigorate both the training and the training experience," Bolt said. "We have always been a values-based organization, but at some point in time we stopped talking about it."

Recruits are not the only Soldiers to receive values-based training. It is part of officer training at West Point and in the Reserve Officer Training Corps. Officers will receive more training in their military occupational specialty basic and advanced courses. Army values will also be included in basic, advanced and senior noncommissioned officer courses.

In May values-based training was added to the instruction at all Army drill sergeant schools. Drill sergeants are also taught how to teach Army values to new Soldiers. In addition, more than 30 hours of human relations training were added to drill sergeant schools' programs of instruction.

"Army values give drill sergeants great tools for training and counseling, but it also gives them a great measure by which to judge themselves," Bolt said.

Drill sergeants like the change they see in young Soldiers during BCT.

"Some of them come here undisciplined and without those values," said Sgt. 1st Class Kenneth Holmes, of Company C, 2nd Bn., 54th Inf. Regt.

"At the end of the cycle their parents come up to you and say, 'He's changed 100 percent'. You constantly hear it from the privates, too."

"I think there's nothing but good about that," Bolt said. "These young men and women want to do something with their lives. That's why they're here."

The general, who has been in the Army for 36 years, said that for the most part Soldiers he has served with, led and followed demonstrated Army values over and over again.

"If there's one thing that's stood out through the entire process of my service it's that Soldiers serve their nation selflessly for the most part."

That's why he's surprised when individuals say today's Soldiers aren't as tough as they were in the "good old days."

"This is the most fit Army I've ever been in. This is the most educated Army I've ever been in," Bolt said.

That fact doesn't belittle Soldiers of the past, however, because today's Army values are the same as those that American Soldiers demonstrated throughout history, he said.

"The men and women who served in the Second World War and Korea were values-based. What we have done is to make sure that today's Soldiers know the lineage they have to live up to," Bolt said.

Role models begin at home

Michele E. Hanson
Special to the Bayonet©

In a world where good role models are hard to find, it becomes increasingly important for parents to be positive role models. Role models begin in the home because adult, parent behaviors imprint permanently on our children, for better or worse.

commentary

Remember the construction project on I-185, when all the lanes merged into one. It was a mess, and it managed to frustrate every driver at one time or another. I came to terms with the delays, but never with the rude drivers who always skipped to the front of the line as if the rest of us didn't exist.

Last summer, I was running extremely late for my son's orthodontic appointment and, as luck would have it, I was stuck in traffic. Part of me wanted to join the ranks of the "skippers" to avoid missing his appointment when my eight-year-old son said, "mom, why don't you get in the other lane, they're moving faster?" My answer was swift, as I explained that I was doing the right thing by waiting my turn in line.

Doing the right thing is not always easy in life. In that moment, I set a standard for my son, as a parent and as his role model. This small example demonstrated patience, respect for others and that I would not take the easy way out. It is our reactions, even over the simplest of issues, that are impressed on our children.

The day my husband and I became parents, we realized that we were uneducated to the challenges of raising children. As we encountered new surprises and tackled unique problems with each child, we held fast to the principle of positive role modeling. We knew that in order to instill strong moral character, good ethics and positive attributes in our children, we must live by the same standards that we preached, even when doing the right thing was difficult and an inconvenience.

Educated parents who continually make bad choices in front of their kids are everywhere. It is as if common sense has abandoned them or they never had any to begin with. I am amazed at the lack of guidance given to young children by their parents.

A few days ago, I was looking out my window and happened to see a parent walking down the middle of the street with a dog and two young kids in tow. Both kids were riding their bikes carelessly down the center of the road. Instead of walking and riding on the side of the road for safety purposes, the parent allowed one child, about four years, old to lag behind 70 feet while the other child, around six, raced ahead 50 feet. There was no attempt on the parent's part to set the children straight on the hazards of the road.

If a driver were heading straight for the kids, the parent was not in a position to help them. Was this parent setting a good example for these kids? Of course not, and I wondered what happened to basic rules preached repeatedly when I was a child such as, do not play in the street and if you need to be in the street stay to the side of the road because cars kill.

After 13 years of parenting I know it is a child's nature to do what they have been allowed to do in the past or do exactly what they are not supposed to do and sometimes this leads to tragedy.

I knew a family whose young child was struck by a slow-moving vehicle and killed instantly. I had dreams for months about the terrible accident that ruined many lives. I realized that the issue was not cars, but a parent problem and their willingness to place the blame on drivers using streets meant for driving. Why would any parent allow their most valuable possession to play in the road or ride bikes without following bicycle safety rules?

If we expect our children to grow up respecting others, then we must be respectful. If we want them to be honest and hard working, then we must be also. If we want them to be law-abiding citizens, then we must lead by example as they grow. If we want our children to make good decisions and become positive role models for their children, then we must make good decisions and be a positive inspiration. If we want our children to be faithful, loving and loyal, then we must show them.

I know that the most important job in life is raising our children. As parents, we only get one chance to do the job right with no opportunity to go back and change what we have done. It is up to us to cherish them and build their character so they will be able to live a full and rewarding life. We need to take time out of this busy life and raise our children right, because they are the future and we are all they have.

Combat medic explains meaning of courage

Command Sgt. Maj. Paul Servantez
Heidelberg Medical Activity

The Army value system provides every Soldier with a belief system that serves as a guide in maintaining discipline and order, vital to our military lifestyle. The acronym LDRSHIP stands for the elements in the Army's Value system.

commentary

The "P" in this acronym identifies personal courage, a vital element in the ability to carry out our military duties while enabling our Soldiers to stand up for what is right in the face of competing challenges.

Soldiers demonstrate personal courage in their everyday actions, whether training for peace or wartime missions. Physical and moral courage enables Soldiers to face the fear, danger and adversity inherent to the profession of Soldiering. The leadership and discipline required of every Soldier is dependent on the personal courage they possess.

World events impact on the personal and professional lives of all Soldiers.

We shall never forget the events in the Middle East and more recently in Africa. Soldiers and civilians gave their lives in defense of freedom. They possess the courage to focus on mission accomplishment in the face of fear and ever-present danger.

The courage to maintain discipline and provide leadership in the face of these challenges is a tribute to the value system we adopt. It sustains us in time of crises and assists us in providing leadership for our subordinates. This is the true test of a professional Soldier.

Moral courage is a part of every Soldier's basic belief system. Soldiers must always set the example by doing the "right thing." Demonstrating the ability to do the right thing, encourages other soldiers to carry on the mission with honor and dignity.

Soldiers know, through personal experience and training, the horror of war is possible every day. To remain ready to face this challenge, we are vigilant in sustaining self and professional development. This is a challenge that we meet through the courage to tackle the hard work of every day activities. We work hard and train hard so that we do not let other Soldiers down when they need us the most. The success of the Army depends on every Soldier in it.

Soldiers must be mission ready at all times. When the call to defend freedom is sounded, we must be there. In today's Army, we face multiple deployments that correlate with the hardships our families go through supporting our careers. Yet we as Americans remain true to the defense of freedom wherever it may take us.

Home fires kill, injure thousands

The week of Oct. 4-10 marks this year's Fire Prevention Week. This Year's theme is "Fire Drill: The Great Escape!" Fires in the home kill or injure thousands of people and cause hundreds of millions of dollars in property loss each year. Carelessness when cooking, the misuse of matches and lighters and heating equipment problems cause many of these fires. Smoke detectors and automatic sprinkler systems greatly reduce the risk of dying in the home. The best defense against fire is to stop them before they start.

At 6 p.m. Wednesday, the National Fire Protection Association plans to unify the public in "The Great Escape," the first ever North American fire drill where the U.S. and Canadian fire departments lead families in simultaneously practicing their home fire escape plans.

The Director of Public Safety and the Post Fire Chief invite all post school children and their families to participate in "The Great Escape" contest. Contest participants will submit their home escape plan. Prizes will be awarded locally and the winner will compete in the national program. Details are available at each post school.

Local winners of the contest will receive prizes. First place winner will receive a three-night stay at the Destin, Fla. Recreation Facility and a $200 AAFES gift certificate. Second place will receive a $100 gift certificate and third place will receive a $50 gift certificate. National prize winner will receive a trip for four to Walt Disney World and the submitting fire department will receive $1,000 in fire safety educational materials. Let's make Fire Prevention Week 1998 the very best ever and get those winning escape plans submitted.

Other events scheduled during the week include a fire safety display at Infantry Hall and Open House at all post fire stations.

I encourage all post families to participate in this year's Fire Prevention Week campaign and learn together how to be fire safe!

three ulcers in his stomach and several digestive problems. Kercado needed a home daycare for her son, but no one on Fort Benning had the capacity or experience to take care of a child with his needs so she contacted Easter Seals of West Georgia.

"The Easter Seal Daycare Center provided qualified people who knew how to use his monitor and experienced nurses that administered his medications," Kercado said. "The center had only a handful of kids and was able to pay close attention to each child's needs."

"Easter Seals of West Georgia provides a therapeutic childcare program that serves children and youth with disabilities," said Sharon Borger, executive director at Easter Seals of West Georgia. "Through the implementation of each child's Individual Program Plan, staff, therapists, parents and volunteers work together to improve socialization skills, language skills, balance and confidence."

According to Borger, Easter Seals is part of the United Way and provides services to the entire community, including Fort Benning, whether the person lives in the area short or long term.

"If we help people with needs than we are helping ourselves also," Borger said. "In helping children and adults with disabilities live with equality, dignity, and independence, we make our community a better place to be."

"What is great about baby Kercado is that he is developing independence," Borger said. "When you see a child with so many delays and mountains to climb make great strides, it is such a thrill."

"Kenny's development has been remarkable because of the Easter Seals program which provide a Georgia Grant for his day care, news letters, parent support group and moral support," Kercado said. "When I had nowhere to turn for help, Easter Seals was there. They are like a family to us and we do not know what we would have done without them."

MEDDAC Soldier wins new truck in raffle

Pfc. Amy L. Nyland
Bayonet staff writer

It was what seemed like a typical night for the Gogins family. Sitting around watching television, relaxing after a day's work, not a single clue that the phone call they were about to receive would transform their ordinary evening into a night that will most likely go down in Gogins family history.

"At first I though it was a joke," said Pfc. Angela Gogins, U.S Army Medical Activity. "When I got the phone call I thought somebody was just messing around with me."

Around 9:30 p.m. Sept. 23 during the Association of U.S. Army's (AUSA) Fish Fry, the Chattahoochee Valley Chapter of AUSA's president, Retired Maj. Gen. Jerry White and Commanding General Maj. Gen. Carl F. Ernst, made the unexpected call to the Gogin's residence.

Both White and Ernst had the task of convincing a disbelieving Gogins that she was the winner of the month long raffle held by AUSA and that the next day she would drive away with a '98 Chevy S-10 courtesy of Bill Heard Chevrolet.

"I'm just so excited," Gogins said. "All I can say is thank-you, thank-you so much for the truck."

The twenty year-old Gogins who works as a lab technician at Martin Army Community Hospital, bought two tickets for the raffle, both of which she nearly forgot about until she was reminded by Ernst that she did indeed buy a ticket — and offered her new truck as proof.

"General Ernst asked me about my ticket, and I had almost forgotten I even bought it. He said 'guess what' and and then he told me I won. I couldn't believe it, so I asked him if he was serious and he was."

Gogins said it was odd because she had decided to go home rather than stay in the barracks that night.

"It was so weird because I had this urge to go to my parents house that night and I don't know why," Gogins said. "It was like something was telling me I had to go home. If I had been at the barracks I would have missed the call, and who knows, they may have given the truck to someone else."

Gogins said she doesn't have her license yet, but now that she has the truck it won't be long before she gets one.

She also said her birthday is Oct. 9 and the truck is like an early birthday present.

Gogins father, Staff Sgt. Roosevelt Gogins, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor Regiment, 3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division (Mechanized), said he was just as shocked as Angela when they got the call.

"I couldn't believe it, I mean who wins those raffles," Gogins said? "I've bought those tickets for the last 10 years and never won anything — in fact I've never known anyone who has won."

Gogins said the truck will help them save a tremendous amount of money and put them ahead of the game when it comes to college.

"We have been looking for a car for Angela to get her back and forth from school," Gogins said. "This is just so great because now we don't have to worry about that anymore. All I have to do is put some insurance on the truck and it's good to go."

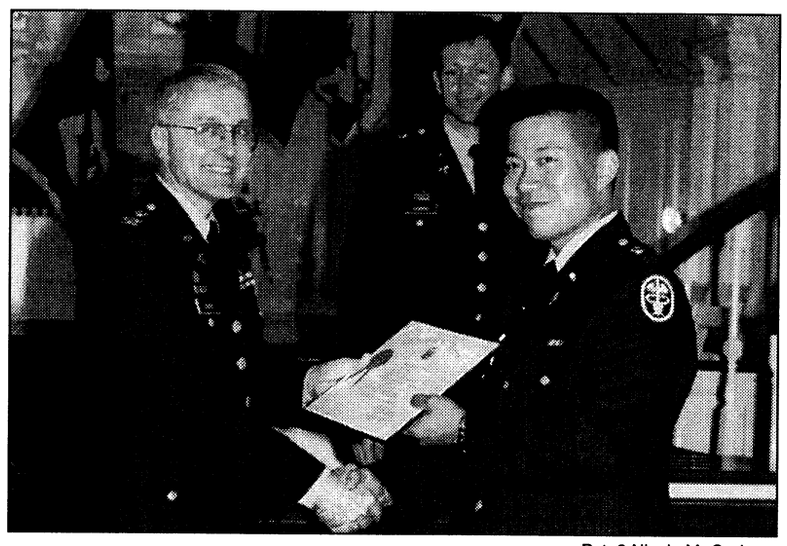
Dental officers complete training

U.S. Army Dental Activity

Eight dental officers received their diplomas certifying successful completion of Fort Benning's advance training program in general dentistry at the Main Post Chapel Monday.

For the past 30 years, the Fort Benning Advanced Education in General Dentistry program trains Soldiers in the one-year post-doctoral general dentistry training program.



According to Col. Marshall Asher, program director, students are selected for training during their final year in dental school. Training begins after graduation and upon completion of the Army Medical Department Officer Basic Course. The residents receive advanced training in each specialty area of dentistry. Demonstration of advanced clinical competency is required for graduation.

"Additional graduation requirements include the preparation and presentation of a professional development lecture, a research paper and a table clinic. The table clinic is presented at the Hinam Dental Convention in Atlanta. The residents are also trained in Advanced Cardiac Life Support and Advanced Trauma Life Support," the program director explained.

Training days are 15 percent class work time and 85 percent clinical patient care. All projects are completed during the resident's off-duty time.

The graduates gained the ability to perform a variety of procedures which are commonly referred to specialists. For this reason, they often receive assignments to positions such as small, remote dental clinics. They assist the command by reducing the workload of the assigned specialists and the Soldier's waiting time for specialty care.

"The one year-residency program has come a long way since its beginnings 30 years ago." Asher said. "At this time, the field of dentistry offers a wide variety of treatment options. A general dentist must be able to select and perform the best treatment option for a particular patient's needs, or direct the patient towards someone capable of delivering the optimal treatment. He must also know how to coordinate and monitor patient treatment when specialty care is required."

Pvt. 2 Nicole M. Graham

Col. Marshall Asher hands a completion certificate to Capt. William K. Lin.

Retired Col. Terry Reese, guest speaker for the graduation ceremony and professor at Baylor College of Dentistry, encouraged the residents to continue studying and reviewing material so they will stay proficient at the skills they have developed.

Reese also gave the residents advice on success.

"Do what is best for the patient. If you do this you will be successful."

Honor Graduate Capt. Mark Necoechea expressed his pleasure with the quality of training he received at Fort Benning.

"I am leaving here with confidence in what the instructors have taught me," Necoechea said.

The 1998 graduates are:
Capt. Eduardo G. Gonzalez
Capt. Terry D. Hopper
Capt. John C. House
Capt. William K. Lin
Capt. Marcos M. Necoechea
Capt. James Gary Nelson, Jr
Capt. Michael A. Putt
Capt. Elton D. Savage

Unit honors employee

2nd Battalion, 11th Infantry Battalion

A retirement ceremony was held Saturday at the Officers' Club for Cheryl French, secretary for Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 2nd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment.

The ceremony opened with dinner followed by a farewell song performed in her honor by Catherine Clay, a close friend to the family.

During the ceremony, Col. Dave Brown, 2nd Bn., 11th Inf. Regt. commander addressed the audience and said a few words on behalf of his former secretary.

"I can't think of any tougher day than when Cheryl came to me to announce her retirement," Brown said. "She's a woman that has everything — friends, family, loved ones and tonight we have the opportunity to thank her for selfless service to her country, to the Army and to the Infantry."

The ceremony continued as French addressed the audience in tears. After thanking her family and church, she said the battalion has been her home away from home.

"I love people. I love my lord. And I love working with lieutenants."

French has been affiliated with HHC for 27 years, serving the last 19 years as secretary for 10 different commanders during that time.

And, she said, she's not quite ready to stop working. She will put her secretarial skills to use as she takes over a position as secretary to senior pastor of the North Highland Assembly of God.

Soldiers should begin transition early

Debbie Henshaw
Army Career and Alumni Program

Separating Soldiers may want to begin their Individual Transition Plan (ITP) early.

The Fort Benning ACAP Center will assist separating Soldiers when completing ACAP during the fall. Soldiers who will separate after the holiday season (November, December) should attend ACAP as soon as possible.

If not prepared with a well-organized transition plan, a person might end up with last minute panic, stress and confusion when attempting to clear the military, according to ACAP counselor, Chick Eagle.

Soldiers may also find it difficult to obtain a good job unless they are well prepared.

"ACAP prepares Soldiers and helps them and their families make successful transitions with dignity and respect," Eagle said.

The ITP should be prepared six months before a separation or retirement date if the date is known. Ninety days before separation or retirement date is the minimum directed by Congress.

If the exact separation date is pending, the ACAP center recommends starting the process as soon as possible to ensure the Soldier has sufficient time to prepare for transition.

The classes are as follows:

Monday through Wednesday for ETS or other, Oct. 19 - 21 for retirement and Oct. 26 - 28 for ETS or other. All sessions begin at 8:30 a.m. in Classroom 30 in Infantry Hall. Dress is civilian casual.

For more information about ACAP pre-separation briefings, workshops and services call the ACAP Center at 545-2308 or 545-2309.

The ACAP Center is located in Soldiers' Plaza, Building 2634.

Formation runs

Ability group PT helps Soldiers progress

Capt. Danny McMillian
U.S. Army Physical Fitness School

Those who drive on most Army posts between 6 and 7 a.m. Monday through Friday may see groups of gray-clad Soldiers pounding the pavement during formation runs.

Formation runs have become such a routine event to Soldiers, daybreak without them may seem unimaginable. But, because running is a routine event, injury may becoming increasingly more visible.

"It is no secret why our Army runs so much. It is the most efficient way to train aerobically," said Col. Steven Cellucci, commandant of the U.S. Army Physical Fitness School (USAPFS). "But in units that emphasize running, the incidence of foot pain, knee pain and shin splints among our Soldiers is often staggering."

"There are various reasons these injuries occur," said Steve Van Camp, instructional systems specialist at the USAPFS. "Soldiers who conduct too much running, too soon into a fitness program or experience too little recovery time between bouts of running may experience injury."

"Similarly, Soldiers who run too hard or too long on a given run may also have physical complications, but all of these problems are fixable at the unit level," Van Camp said.

Although there are more complex reasons for running injuries, such as muscle imbalances and improper shoe selection, use of Master Fitness Trainers and coordination with installation experts including sports medicine physicians, physical therapists and the USAPFS may correct these problems.

"Poor progression of a running program accounts for many of the injuries seen in Army medical clinics, especially in the initial entry training environment," said 1st Lt. John Detro, physicians assistant and captain of the Fort Benning Army Ten-Miler men's team. "Individuals who have been inactive such as profiled Soldiers, should start with a progressive walking program to prepare their legs and feet for the impact of running."

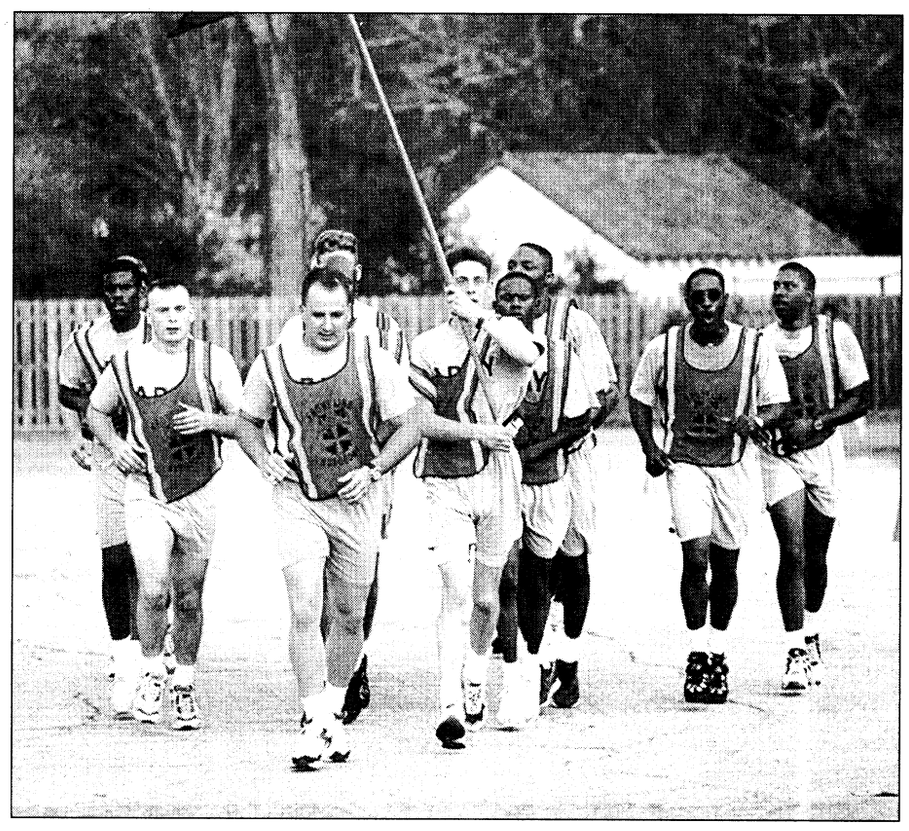
"Progress to running by incorporating a transition phase that involves brief periods of running with progressively shorter walking breaks. Once able to sustain the run, progress the time or distance of the runs no more than 10 percent per week," he said.

It is not only improper progression of runs that can be hazardous — running every day may also cause trouble.

The human body has an ability to adapt to stress, however, this ability to adapt takes time. When a Soldier finishes a challenging run, cellular levels in the body prepare a Soldier for additional physical activity, but if a body becomes stressed again before it is ready, the whole process of adaptation gets short-circuit, leaving the body susceptible to breakdown instead of build up.

"We can avoid this breakdown by simply scheduling easy physical training (PT) events to follow those that are more stressful," said Frank Palkoska, chief of doctrine for the USAPFS. "This principle holds for all types of PT events, from runs to road marches to resistance training circuits. Many units provide recovery from their challenging runs by only running three times per week. The other two days are spent increasing strength, flexibility and battle-focused physical skills."

Palkoska added that some individuals who run every day usually manage to avoid this breakdown by alternating longer or harder runs with easy runs. While this may be fine for individuals, units may want to limit running and concentrate on all components of fitness (such as muscular strength and endurance flexibility), not just cardiorespiratory conditioning.



A relationship between lower extremity injuries and running may also be found through documented research.

One research study had a group run for 30 minutes three times per week at a given intensity (measured by heart rate). Another group also ran three times per week at the same intensity, but ran for 45 minutes. Through several weeks of such training, the group that ran for 30 minutes experienced less than half as many injuries as the group that ran 45 minutes, and yet their their aerobic fitness improved just as much as the longer running group.

"The reason behind these results is no surprise to those who understand exercise physiology," Van Camp said.

"The key to improving aerobic conditioning is intensity. Challenge the body with a pace that stops just short of creating a buildup of lactic acid (the product of intense exercise that makes legs feel like lead and lungs gasp for oxygen) and you don't have to stay on the roads for more than 20-30 minutes."

"This pace, about 85 to 90 percent of maximum heart rate, teaches the body to break down the products of intense exercise before they become lactic acid. Occasionally, running slower is fine, but the aerobic conditioning effect will be less," he continued.

A unit conducts a formation run during physical fitness training.

In addition to sustained runs at a challenging pace, Soldiers may want to routinely do some running on the track at an intensity that teaches the body to run faster than two-mile race pace. Chapter 2 of FM 21-20 gives instruction on how to perform interval training.

"We must organize ourselves so that fast runners are running with other fast runners; slower runners should be running with those of similar abilities," Palkoska said.

This organization, called ability group running (AGR), avoids the problems of unit runs by ensuring that faster runners aren't held back by slower runners, and that slower runners aren't required to run at an unrealistically fast pace which may cause injury.

Ability group runs may work if there are enough group leaders to ensure that each group of runners is relatively equal in ability.

Two-mile run times for group members should be as similar as possible (a range between the fastest and slowest runners of one to two minutes or less is ideal).

"Keeping a large unit together over several miles of running may offer benefits that commanders desire, but we at the U.S. Army Physical Fitness School feel that the benefits of AGRs is such that unit runs should be limited to once or twice a quarter," Palkoska said.

Czech Soldiers observe Benning drill sergeants in action

Nicole Longstreath
Special to the Bayonet©

In an effort to improve the quality of their NCOs, three Soldiers from the Czech Republic were sent to Fort Benning Sept. 17, as part of a foreign exchange-like training program.

While at Fort Benning, the Czech NCOs were assigned to Company C, 2nd Battalion, 19th Infantry Regiment, Infantry Training Brigade, to observe drill sergeants in action.

Sgt. Jan Kolarik, Sgt. Lubos Dejmek and Sgt. Hejdusek Alois are the first from the Czech Army to formally visit the U.S.

They were chosen based on their knowledge of the English language and a certain number of points they accumulated in a competition against other Czech NCOs.

Before they arrived at Fort Benning, the trio was sent to a language institute six months ago in San Antonio to brush up on their English. After San Antonio, the Soldiers were sent to Fort Leonard Wood, Mo. to take part in Primary Leadership Development Course (PLDC).

"These Soldiers were sent here to observe how the U.S. Army trains its NCOs ... with the intent of them going back to the Czech Republic and making recommendations for improvement in their NCO education system," said Lt. Col. Bucky Howle, commander of 2nd Bn., 19th Inf. Regt.

This will be the first time these Soldiers have been in the position to even make recommendations. According to the Soldiers, officers in the Czech Army have most of the authority.

"As an NCO, I can recommend anything, but the officer is in charge," Dejmek said.

Howle said he believes the more authority and responsibility an NCO has, the better he or she will perform.

"The U.S. gives more authority and responsibility to NCOs, which leads to initiative in whatever mission they are assigned and without initiative at every level we lose momentum in," Howle said.

The Soldiers said they look forward to their new-found authority, but are anxious about the responsibility that comes with it.

"I am looking forward to getting home but I know it will be more difficult," Alois said.

Aside from the way NCOs are perceived in the Czech Army, all three Soldiers said training between the two armies was very similar.

One major difference the three noticed was the U.S. Army's view of Soldiers with families.

"At home, if you have a family, that's your problem," Alois said.

Kolarik defended the Czech Army by saying luxuries like family housing probably just didn't fit into the Czech budget.

"The U.S. military takes better care of families, but I think it all depends on money," Kolarik said.

Kolarik, Dejmek and Alois began observing Basis Noncommissioned Officers' Course (BNCOC) and Advanced Noncommissioned Officers' Course (ANCOC) training Wednesday and will head home Oct. 9.

Engineer provide support during Marne Focus

2nd Lt. Heather Andrews
63rd Engineer Company (CSE)

Sixteen Soldiers from the 63rd Engineer Company (Combat Support Equipment), 36th Engineer Group (Construction), recently returned from 19 days in the field as part of Marne Focus, a training exercise conducted by the 3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division (Mechanized).

The 63rd Soldiers comprised what is referred to as the Dig Team, which constructed fighting positions with their D-7 Bulldozers for Abrams tanks and Bradley Fighting Vehicles in addition to other combat vehicles and equipment.

The positions that these Soldiers construct provide protection and concealment for weaponry, which enables frontline Soldiers to accomplish their mission safely and more effectively, said Capt. Robert Carr, 63rd's company commander.

The Dig Team was comprised of both Soldiers with previous experience as well as new operators.

"It was a great opportunity for cross-training," said Pfc. Jason Miner, a crane operator. "I was able to learn how to operate a dozer even though that isn't my MOS."

The field exercise also provided Soldiers a deviation from typical field problems that include road upgrade and culvert construction.

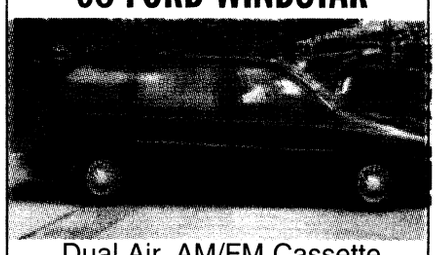
The exercise allowed Soldiers to practice their tactical skills and train to accomplish their mission in light or darkness, sometimes by feel alone.

In total, the Dig Team, in conjuction with two platoons from 3rd Brigade's 317th Engineer Battalion, constructed more than 150 battle positions and 1,000 meters of anti-tank ditch during Marne Focus.

"The better we dig the positions, the longer the Infantry and tankers can survive," said Staff Sgt. David Sindelar, NCOIC of the Dig Team.

"The longer they survive, the more damage they can impose on the enemy."

The Dig Team was also augmented by three knowledgeable mechanics who ensure that all of the equipment necessary for mission was properly maintained.



The Soldier participated in the exercise in preparation for an upcoming rotation through the National Training Center at Fort Irwin, Calif.

Board meets to discuss issues of new year

Erin A. Nash
Special to the Bayonet©

The first school board meeting of the new school year was held Sept. 28.

Many issues were discussed, ranging from language arts to adventure learning to the election of a new school board president.

The meeting started with the introduction of four new school board members by superintendent Dr. Dell McMullen. The new members are Barbara Reeves, who represents Dexter, Col. Jim Stone, who represents Faith, Marsha Spencer, who represents Loyd and Sgt. Robert Reynolds, who represents McBride.

"We are very appreciative of the time that our school board members spend working together to make our schools better for children," McMullen said.

McMullen announced that the Faith yearbook for school year 97-98 received first place in the region and third place at the state competition for yearbook design. Susan Gilbert, yearbook sponsor and Gloria Loar worked with students to design the cover. Gilbert and Loar were honored with compass pins in recognition of their work.

McMullen then introduced Linda Laine of Youth Services for her support of Faith's incentive program for students.

"Mrs. Lane goes beyond the call of duty in her personal interest and concern for students through her work with the Faith student council, her support of reward activities held at the Youth Activities Center for Faith students and her personal support of the eighth-grade dance," McMullen said.

Laine also was given a compass pin in appreciation of her care and concern for the children of Fort Benning.

McMullen then presented a report on the total enrollment in each of the seven schools and the ratio of students to teachers in each grade of each school.

Next, Kathy Einhorn, director of curriculum, provided the results of the Department of Defense Education Activity writing assessment given last school year to fifth- and eighth-graders.

Of the fifth-graders, 81.4 percent of the students were rated proficient in writing and 11.7 rated as distinguished writers. Of the eighth-graders, 39.1 percent rated at proficient and 32.1 rated as distinguished writers. The rest of the eighth-graders were rated as apprentice writers.

"This is very encouraging for the first year of the testing," said Col. Michael Bingham, school board president.

Jerry Christy, director of technology, then told the board about "adventure learning" and his upcoming adventure learning trip.

"Adventure learning is learning that takes place around an exciting event," Christy said.

Christy went on to detail his trip to Antarctica which is set for Nov. 20 to Dec. 3.

"We will sail from South America to the peninsula on Antarctica," Christy said.

The project will include a website in which Christy will post daily e-mail reports, one-day activities, a connection to OnlineClass, lesson plans for teachers and student-to-student exchanges.

Christy will also include daily journal entries and basic information concerning weather, wildlife, navigation and more.

Gail Wilson, director of staff development, then detailed training that support personnel and certified personnel have completed and the opportunities available to them for further training.

McMullen presented the superintendent's report.

"Based on what I have heard from principals, parents and teachers and from what I have observed personally, I believe this is the best school beginning we have had in the past several years," McMullen said. "We are especially grateful to the Officers' Wives Club for their gift of breakfast on the morning of our kickoff."

McMullen also reported an increase in volunteer hours within the schools.

"We saw an increase in volunteer hours during the week that we were in school in August as compared to that same week last school year," McMullen said. "Volunteer hours increased by 94 hours over last year."

To end the meeting, school board members nominated Col. Randy Buck to be the new school board president and 1st Sgt. Wesley Lee as the new vice-president.

Outgoing president Bingham was recognized by McMullen and given a plaque and a picture.

McMullen

Guten tag!

Dr. Dell McMullen, superintendent of Fort Benning schools, may hear that greeting often as she travels to Germany as part of the Advisory Council on Dependents' Education (ACDE) Saturday through Oct. 9.

The ACDE is held annually at different places around the world, like Europe and the Pacific.

McMullen was asked by director Linda Renz, director of the Department of Defense Domestic Dependent Elementary and Secondary Schools (DDESS) to be a member of the ACDE.

"I'm excited about the opportunity. I'm looking forward to making a contribution to the schools and bringing home ideas to improve our own programs. I'm extremely interested in school improvement," McMullen said.

The ACDE will be held in Wiesbaden. There are four teams which consist of five members per team.

The teams will visit the Hessen, Heidelberg and Wuerzberg school districts and McMullen will visit the Kaiserslautern district on Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday.

On the school visits, they will be briefed on the school-home partnership (SHP), priorities for the school year and specific strategies and benchmarks.

"The first part of the mission is to recommend general policies for the operation of the DoD educational system programs," McMullen said. "The second is to advise Dr. Lillian Gonzalez, director of Department of Defense Education Activity (DoDEA), on school improvements to achieve high quality education programs.

"The third is to make recommendations regarding innovative programs and practices.

"But the main focus is to meet with teachers, parents, students and the military leadership to hear their perceptions of the schools. We want to expand on what we're doing with SHP and the technology curriculum," McMullen said.

McMullen is the only stateside superintendent that will attend the ACDE and will be joined by such people at the director of DDESS and the chief of research for DoDEA.

Movie matinee test lacks support

Pvt. 2 Nicole M. Graham
Bayonet staff writer

Due to a lack of viewer response, the G-rated movie matinee held at the WynnSong 10 theater Saturday mornings has ended.

The matinee began when the community requested more family oriented movies. WynnSong began a 10-week test which ran May 16 through July 18.

The G-rated movies, were shown at noon for $3.50 per ticket, generated a total of 25 patrons.

"We received requests from the community for more family entertainment and the concession decided to give it a try," said Army Air Force Exchange Services General Manager Gary Greene.

"We were just reacting to the movement of parents who are sensitive about what their children watch."

The matinee ran second-run movies such as The Smurfs and the Magic Flute and The Adventures of Little Nemo.

The WynnSong 10 has always been receptive to G rated movies, according to Greene.

So at the request of the community, the theater began a test run of the matinee idea.

"We have always monitored our customer requests," Greene said.

"When the community offers us an idea, we need to listen to the customer and respond. That is why we offered this test."

Greene stressed the fact that the test's success depended completely upon the community's response and was conducted in the interest of the community.

There are no future plans to retest the G-rated matinee in the future, according to Greene.

Domestic Violence Awareness Month

Program encourages prevention

Family Advocacy Program

The month of October is Domestic Violence Awareness Month Army wide. The theme for this year is "The Power to Prevent Violence Begins With Me."

According to Family Advocacy Program Manager, Rebecca Welch, the month of October is the launching point for a year-round campaign to end spouse and child abuse and to ensure the protection of victims.

"Our emphasis must be on the prevention of domestic violence and on encouraging family members to seek appropriate supportive and rehabilitative services," Welch said.

According to Welch the first step is to take personal responsibility for the safety and security of ourselves and our loved ones. Everybody is capable of making their own household violence-free, but personal responsibility extends beyond the walls of homes and reaches out to the streets, shopping centers and jobs. In the military, domestic violence undermines the mission of readiness. In society at large, it undermines the fabric of the communities and peoples lives.

Prevention can happen everywhere, not just at home. It can happen in the media, in the workplace and in the neighborhoods, Welch said. "Everybody needs to make the message clear — domestic violence is not tolerated; everyone deserves to be safe and secure."

Couples and individuals need to understand that there are options to violence. In the military, there are long-standing programs that put special emphasis on domestic violence prevention and intervention. Fort Benning services that are available for individuals and couples include Social Work Services and the Chaplains' Family Life Center. To find out about these services and more about the Family Advocacy Program, call Welch at 545-3344.

Throughout the month of October the Family Advocacy Program will sponsor events. The schedule is as follows:

Monday through Oct. 31 — The Family Advocacy Program will host an information display for preventing domestic violence set up at Army Community Service, Building 2624, Soldiers' Plaza. Promotional items and educational material will be available to anyone seeking information.

Oct. 24 — Promotional items and educational materials will be handed out in observance of Domestic Violence Awareness Month at the Retiree Open House in Infantry Hall from 11:30 a.m. to 1 p.m.

Oct. 30 — Family Advocacy and the Exceptional Family Member Program will provide a display of promotional items and educational materials set up at the Main Post Exchange from 9 to 11 a.m.

Doctor offers remedy to common ailment

Dr. Virginia Yates

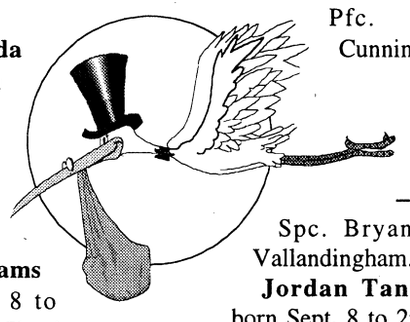
Hay fever is the term commonly used to describe the allergic symptoms in some people.

Examples of allergens in the air include pollen, mold, animal dander and dust. Various pollens occur at different times of the year. For example, high levels of pollen from ragweed and mold occur in the fall of the year.

Symptoms of hay fever include:

- •itchy, watery eyes
- •runny or stuffy nose
- •dark circles under the eyes
- •mucus drainage at the back of the throat
- •itchy throat or nose
- •ear fullness and popping

Rinsing the nasal passages and gargling with a salt water solution can reduce the exposure to these irritating substances. The solution can be scooped up with the hands and snorted through the nose to the throat then spit out. Some hay fever sufferers prefer to use squirt bottles or bulb syringes to clean nasal passages. This cleaning is best done at bedtime to lessen the amount of mucus drainage into the throat which can cause coughing while sleeping. The recipe for this salt water solution is made by mixing:



- •1 quart warm water
- •2 teaspoons plain (not iodized) table salt
- •1 teaspoon baking soda

Nasal steroids are nose sprays that reduce the amount of swelling and mucus that is produced. Antihistamines are drugs that decrease itching, sneezing and runny nose. These medicines can make a person drowsy, although some of the newer prescription antihistamines are less likely to cause tiredness or dry mouth.

Decongestants decrease swelling and relieve a stuffy nose. These come in pill and nose spray forms. The nose spray decongestants can result in increased swelling if used for more than three days.

The best treatment is prevention. Measures which remove dust from floors, rugs, furniture and drapes lessen the risk for developing hay fever.

DPW works to improve efficiency of recycling program

Department of Public Works

Beginning Oct. 19, the "Follow Me" Recycling Program will initiate a policy to increase the efficiency and safety of the Army Family Housing Curbside Recycling Program.

Brown recycling bins containing trash, garbage and non-recyclables (personal items such as tissue, napkins, bandages and diapers) will not be picked up. The collection contractor is not authorized to pick up non-recyclables.

Placing non-recyclables in the recycling bins also decreases program efficiency which results in loss of revenue for Fort Benning.

Residents are asked to place only recyclable items in the brown recycle bins. All plastic containers are accepted. Please remove caps and flatten containers. Aluminum and steel or tin cans are recyclable. Rinse food containers to prevent contamination of other material.

"Most residents of family housing are doing a commendable job recycling and their efforts are paying off in a big way," said Walter Nichols, Solid Waste Program manager for the Department of Public Works. "Since 1993, Fort Benning has reduced what goes into the sanitary landfill from more than 47,000 tons to less than 20,000 tons per year."

According to Nichols, family housing recycling efforts have a positive impact on the community. There is potential for thousands of dollars to be put into Fort Benning's Morale, Welfare and Recreation program form the sale of recyclable items. Natural resources are also saved, which benefit future generations and tax dollars are saved by reducing landfill costs.

Family housing residents are asked to become familiar with recycling requirements to insure the continuing improvement of the curbside recycling program. Placing non-recyclable items in the bins will result in a warning slip. The slip will be placed in the bin and will explain why the bin was not picked up and emptied.

For questions, concerns or comments about family housing curbside recycling, call Walter Nichols at 545-1007 or the recycling hotline at 545-2108.

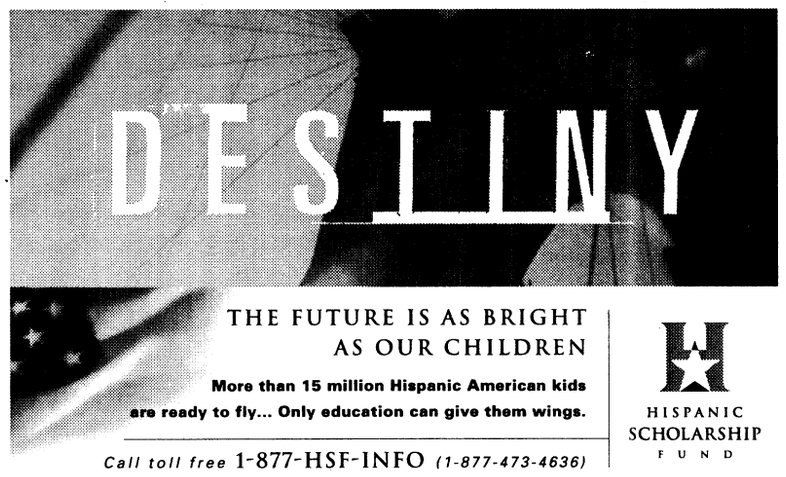
Q: When I joined the Army I took a cut in pay. Since then, I've had a hard time paying off my credit cards because the interest rate is so high. I heard that Soldiers' and Sailors' Civil Relief Act caps interest rates at six percent. When I called the bank, they said that the six percent rate only applies to reservists called to active duty. Is this true?

A: Under the Soldiers' and Sailors' Civil Relief Act (SSCRA), the six percent interest rate applies to everyone who enters active duty and meets the criteria explained in the next paragraph. Some lending institutions might mistakenly believe that the SSCRA only applies to reservists. For Soldiers who cannot convince the lender that the SSCRA applies to them, visit the Legal Assistance Division. The office will write a letter to the creditor, explaining how the SSCRA applies to all active duty servicemembers.

There are certain criteria that must be met before an active duty servicemember qualifies for the six percent interest rate. First, the obligation must have been entered into prior to active duty service. Second, the military service must materially affect the servicemember's ability to pay the debt. Finally, the servicemember currently must be on active duty.



If the above criteria are met, the lender must lower the interest to six percent. This interest rate must be maintained for the entire period of active duty. The cap should include all service charges, renewal charges and fees. The rate is applied to the outstanding balance of the obligation as of the date of entry onto active duty. Any interest charge above this cap must be forgiven entirely, as if it never existed. However, don't forget that once a servicemember leaves active duty, the interest rate protection ceases to exist.

To get this protection, Soldiers should notify the lender in writing and send a copy of their orders showing the date of active duty. The attorneys in the Legal Assistance Division can assist, especially if the creditors refuse to apply the six percent rate interest. Under the SSCRA, the creditor can only refuse to apply the interest rate if a court decides that the military service does not materially affect the ability to pay. The court will look at how much money the servicemember earned before entering the military and how much they earn now. The court may also look at other factors, such as how much the spouse earns or the total value of all assets.

There are other protections under the SSCRA that may apply to the servicemember. For instance, if the transaction was a retail installment contract, the creditor may be prohibited from rescinding the contract or repossessing the property without a court order. If the transaction involved a security interest in the nature of a mortgage on either real or personal property, then a seizure, sale or foreclosure on that property must be approved by a court to be valid. A legal assistance attorney can analyze the details in the situation and determine which protections apply.

For Soldiers who wish to discuss a legal problem involving the SSCRA, an appointment can made to speak with an attorney at the Legal Assistance Division by calling 545-3281.

Sukkot celebrates Jewish exodus

Chaplain (Capt.) Daren Waters Sr.
203rd Forward Support Battalion

Throughout history, humanity has set aside specific days in which to commemorate anniversaries, birthdays, holidays and memorials. Whatever the occasion, that special day or days represents a significant period in the lives of the celebrants. All too often, these moments of observance go unrecognized by the masses because it may not be a part of our heritage or religious formation. Thus, our awareness of these commemorative festivities may be little to none.

reflections

Recognizing religious beliefs other than our own does not mean compromise, rather, it brings a greater sensitivity and respect for different faith groups.

The month of October commemorates a very special season for the Jewish community. On Oct. 5 and 6 Sukkot is celebrated.

Sukkot represents both religious and cultural significance for Jews. This holiday calls for remembering life in the wilderness after the Exodus from Egypt. The people of Israel escaped from Egypt, entered into a covenant with God at Mount Sinai and wandered about the desert, encamped in temporary huts awaiting entrance in Canaan.

Sukkot is the plural form of the Hebrew word sukkah that literally means "covering" or "shelter." It was a place of dwelling by night and disassembled for travel by day. Sukkot is one of two reenactments of the Exodus. Sukkot occurs exactly six months during autumn, focusing on the Israelites' wanderings in the wilderness. Both are celebrated as holidays. In an effort to re-enact this experience, many people today erect homemade decorated sukkot on their balconies.

Although the Exodus is the central event of Jewish faith, it is not a "single completed historical event." The Exodus is an ongoing experience. Initially, it gave Jews a very special ideal and a very special gift — the knowledge that everyday reality is grounded in a divine redemption and promises that it will happen.

Sukkot is celebrated each year as a reminder of the Exodus for the Jewish community. Through recalling and personally experiencing the Exodus, Jews can find the strength to act ethically by its standards and to strive to approach perfection, thereby lifting compromises a higher notch towards the ideal. Further, the Torah conveys that each Jew must relive the Exodus so that everyone will feel that he or she personally came out of Egypt.

Unlike daily reminders on what foods to eat, morning prayers, etc., during Sukkot the Jewish people actually re-enact the drama of the Exodus. The intent is that the people will become so much a part of it and enter into it totally that their lives are changed and renewed by it.

Although Sukkot is celebrated by the Jewish community, the Exodus experience is a well that perhaps all believers can draw from for a reminder that we are no longer in bondage, but we are free. The Exodus allows us to reflect and experience God's supernatural deliverance, salvation and love for humanity. God continues to deliver us from wilderness experiences and as we go through them may Sukkot be a source of encouragement that God is present with us. Indeed, Sukkot is a festival to remember.

Family Life Ministries helps with turmoil

Chaplain (Maj.) Frederick M. Rupel
Chief, Chaplain Family Life Ministries

Years ago a world-famous tightrope walker set out to walk a tightrope stretched across Niagara Falls while pushing a wheelbarrow. The day arrived for this most dangerous feat; one little slip would mean the difference between life and death.

reflections

Just as the performer stepped out onto the tightrope he suddenly turned and asked the crowd, "Do you really think I can do this?"

"Yes!" came the reply from the crowd. The tightrope walker then looked straight into the eyes of one of the more vocal supporters and said, "Then get into the wheelbarrow."

It's all about trust. Life can be very unfair. Bad things happen to good people while the bad seemingly go along their merry way. There is probably no greater act of unfairness then to go through a divorce. The grief one experiences is not only for the loss of a person and the death of dreams for the future, but it is a lot of trust, loss of belief in marriage and often the loss of friends.

Many a divorced person never allows themselves to trust another so intimately as the one to which they were once married. Time does not always bring healing, only choosing to forgive and bless those who have hurt us can bring change.

Maybe you have gone through a divorce and know all about its emotional ups and downs. Instead of sitting around pondering the inequalities of life and bemoaning the unfairness of it all, God may be saying to you, "Get into the wheelbarrow."

If you are divorced or are going through a divorce the Fort Benning Chaplain Family Life Ministries Center is here to provide you assistance in this difficult time.

For more information, call the Center at 545-1760.

Only strong survive during championships

Sgt. Michelle J. Davis
Bayonet assistant editor

Only the strongest survived during Fort Benning's 1998 Powerlifting Championships Saturday at Audie Murphy Fitness Center.

Eleven Soldiers from around post came out to test their strength during the meet, which consisted of the squat, bench press and deadlift.

Although the competitors were divided into weight classes, an overall title was given to the man and woman who lifted the most combined weight.

After three attempts at each event, Douglas Platt of Company B, 1st Battalion, 15th Infantry Regiment, 3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division (Mechanized), captured the overall men's title with a combined weight of 1,603 pounds while Tyronnia White of the 104th Transportation Company, 36th Engineer Group (Construction), took the overall female's title with 635 pounds.

Awards for each event were also given using the Swartz and Malone formulas, which average the competitors' body weight with how much weight was lifted.

Platt received the top award for all three events receiving a score of 286.43 in the squat event, 228.52 in the bench press event and 349.51 in the deadlift.

For the female division, Tyronnia White received first in the squat event with a score of 173.07. Dana Allmond of the 30th Adjutant General (Reception),

11th Regt. Soldier takes aim at national shooting competitions

1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment

Greg Way, a Soldier with the 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment, recently won the high military title and placed seventh overall during the U.S. Limited National Championships Sept. 15-19 in Barry, Ill.

More than 300 top shooters from across the U.S. and several countries participated in the match. The competitors included members of the U.S. Army and Air Force shooting teams as well as major gun manufacturers and law enforcement teams.

The competition tested the shooter's ability to shoot various targets from several positions and distances.

During the four-day tournament, the competitors completed 12 courses of fire, shooting more than 250 rounds. The scores were determined by both speed and accuracy.

According to Way, the Limited Nationals restricts the type of pistols and ammunition used for competition.

"Only stock guns with Iron sights may be used and the caliber of bullet must be at least .40," Way said.

Way's shooting accomplishments this year include winning the Limited Florida Invitational and both Alabama and Tennessee State Championships. Way is also the current Georgia State Limited Champion and placed second during the Area 6 Championship which covered the Southeastern U.S.

Way said his goal for next year is to win the U.S. Nationals.

TSU program celebrates birthday

Ed Thomas
Troy State University – Fort Benning

Fort Benning's unique warrior-based off-duty education physical education degree program celebrates its fifth birthday this month.

Troy State University (TSU) encourages Soldiers and civilians interested in fitness leadership to visit the Department of Kinesiology and Health Promotion in Building 2614, Soldiers' Plaza and learn more about the curriculum.

"Our restorative and martial arts (RAMA) program is unlike any physical education degree in the country," said Program Coordinator Leon Johnson. "We designed it for Soldiers, but the concepts we teach are also relevant to the civilian sector."

The program resembles traditional physical education in its theoretical subjects like tests and measurement, nutrition, anatomy, kinesiology, physiology and wellness, Johnson said. "But we stress physical fitness and martial arts instead of sports, games and dance."

The physical fitness curriculum includes strenuous courses like resistance exercise, climbing and foundations of conditioning.

These are complemented by more subtle studies in posture and relaxation, flexibility training and a variety of other restorative arts. Martial arts courses are divided into close range, medium range and weapons, Johnson said.

"Close range is grappling, medium range is kicking and striking and weapons include numerous skills from sticks and knives to handguns and rifles."

The RAMA curriculum draws heavily from previous Army physical training (PT) doctrine. RAMA students study the history of American PT with emphasis on those systems which have worked in the past, and adapt older principles to current training needs.

"Previous Army PT doctrine, particularly the systems used during and shortly after WWII and the Korean War, is very effective," Johnson said. "We are also very interested in Army PT during the late 1800s and early twentieth century."

The RAMA program was developed through the cooperative efforts of the Directorate of Operations and Training, the U.S. Army Physical Fitness School (USAPFS) and the Army Education Office.

"We began with the obvious fact that off-duty education is an ideal and unpolluted delivery system for innovative physical fitness technology," said USAPFS Instructional Systems Specialist Steve Van Camp.

"Scores of Soldiers over the last four years have taken what they have learned in the RAMA program back to their units and used it to the Army's advantage," Johnson said. "Every year our curriculum improves as our students study and test concepts old and new."

For more information concerning the TSU RAMA program, call Johnson at 685-9555.

Pistol action

Jim Chrissman (left) times Karl Mueller as he practices for the Fort Benning Rifle and Pistol Club's Tactical Pistol Match Oct. 10.

This month's tactical match will be based on the International Defensive Pistol Association's (IDPA) style competition. According to match coordinator Jim Graham, IDPA differs from the club's normal tactical pistol matches in that it uses a different target and scoring system. Graham said the goal of defensive pistol competitions is to create a level playing field for all competitors to test their skill and ability not their equipment or gamesmanship. For more information, call the club at 689-3371.

Fort Benning enters new realm of competition

Pfc. Amy L. Nyland
Bayonet staff writer

For more than six years, Fort Benning proved itself in the military and federal arena by adding excellence award after excellence award under its belt. This year Fort Benning hopes to conquer yet another realm of competition by entering a state quality and excellence award competition.

According to Pat Porter, management analyst for the quality management division, Fort Benning is applying for the Georgia Oglethorpe Award, the highest level of state recognition for performance and excellence that a Georgia organization can receive.

Porter said the Oglethorpe Award is a state of Georgia award process that began last year. It consists of eight categories of competition which include large business, small or medium business, large industry, small or medium industry, education, healthcare, not-for-profit and government. Fort Benning is competing in the government category of the award.

In order to be considered for competition Fort Benning was required to submit a packet consisting of three parts — an intent to apply form, a completed application form and an application report consisting of a business overview and responses to the award criteria.

Porter said the criteria for the competition measures performance and includes seven interdependent categories. The categories evaluate leadership, strategic planning, human resource focus, customer and market focus, information and analysis, process management and business results.

"Fort Benning is continually improving by using the criteria to assess its performance," Porter said.

According to Sara Hodges, management analyst in the quality division, the main reason Fort Benning entered the Oglethorpe award competition was to receive a feedback report from experts in the field summarizing Fort Benning's strengths, opportunities for improvement and overall performance.

Hodges said there is no monetary prize awarded for winning the competition.

She said one thing that sets Fort Benning apart is its focus on the customer.

"Our focus on the customer is phenomenal," Hodges said. "Fort Benning people care about people, from the Soldier to the civilian employee, and that is one factor that's going to help determine how well we do."

Porter said the application process for the state award isn't much different than that of the Army Communities of Excellence process, which Fort Benning has been very successful with. She said that is evident by Fort Benning winning the Chief-of-Staff Army Award six years in a row, the Commander in Chief's Award in 1994, 1995 and 1997 and the Presidential Award for Quality in 1997.

Both processes are based on the Malcolm Baldrige criteria which is used to evaluate and improve customer satisfaction, service quality and productivity.

Porter said one thing that makes the Oglethorpe Award process unique, however, is the fact that Fort Benning does not know who it's competing against.

"It is still a competition, but we have no idea who our competitors are," Porter said. "In all actuality we are evaluating ourselves against the criteria."

Fort Benning submitted its application packet in July and recently learned that evaluators will make a site visit Nov. 16-20. Winners will not be announced until February 1999.

"This is the first state award we applied for," Porter said. "If we win, it will say that Fort Benning is definitely in a continuous improvement mode, and that is exactly where we want to be."

New and improved

Commissary celebrates opening

Pvt. 2 Nicole M. Massie
Bayonet staff writer

The grand opening of the Fort Benning Commissary took place Tuesday after four years of renovations came to an end.

According to Jim Hobbins, commissary officer, the renovations totaled $7 million as everything from the roof to the gas supply connections were overhauled.

Behind the scenes upgrades were also made. All refrigeration compressors and backup equipment are new. Refrigeration equipment, display cases, backups, case lighting, heating, air conditioning and sales floor lighting are controlled by a computer system to provide operating efficiency and help to conserve energy.

The existing warehouse on the west side of the facility was incorporated into 9,000 square feet of extra sales space. The increase in space allows for the health and beauty section to be relocated, the size of the deli department to be doubled and a bakery was added to accommodate customer demand.

In addition to grocery space, the commissary now has a bank located inside and customers may pay for their items with credit and debit cards at the check-out counter.

"We received a lot of positive comments over the past few weeks," Hobbins said. "We believe our customer satisfaction and worker morale improves with the quality of their environment."

Customers noticed specific changes over the past few years that impressed them.

"I like the bakery, it is a very nice touch," said shopper Harriet Jones. "The cookies and muffins are great."

Other shoppers liked the overall atmosphere of the commissary.

"They have great customer service and competitive prices here. They also have a wide variety of items to chose from. The store is also really clean" said customer Sharon Lee.

During the grand opening week, which continues through Saturday, the commissary will offer various perks to shoppers.

Today, free root beer floats will be offered all day.

The first 200 customers to enter the commissary daily will receive a free grab bag. Customers will also be given the opportunity to register for $3,000 in shopping sprees to be awarded in $25 to $100 increments.

Patrons may also register to win one GE washer and one GE dryer, one deep freezer, one television and VCR combination and one of three mountain bikes.

The drawings will take place at 4 p.m. Saturday.

Demonstrations and free samples will be available daily.

There will be coffee served in the morning and soda in the afternoons and evenings.

Cards, tags to serve as reminders

Pvt. 2 Nicole M. Massie
Bayonet staff writer

Fort Benning Soldiers will have a constant reminder of the seven Army values.

More than 22,000 Army values cards and tags are scheduled to be distributed to Soldiers by the end of October.

The card is to be carried with the Soldiers military identification card and the tag is to be worn with the personal ID tags.

The cards and tags will be formally distributed by commanders and first sergeants to their Soldiers during individual unit ceremonies.

"Formally presenting the cards will give a stronger sense of dignity to the concept," said Command Sgt. Maj. Edmond Singleton, garrison sergeant major. "Soldiers may also understand the importance of the values when presented with the cards in this manner."

According to Singleton, the Army Chief of Staff advises all Soldiers to carry these items at all times.

While the seven values are now introduced during basic training, the card and tags will be constant reminders to Soldiers.

"If a Soldier is put in a situation where he must make an ethical decision, this will help remind him of the values he is expected to uphold," said 1st Sgt. Christopher Jenkins, 690th Medical Company (Ground Ambulance) 36th Engineer Group (Construction).

"If anything, they are reminded twice a day when they put their identification tags on, and then when they remove their tags at night."

Others like the sense of equality the cards and tags may give.

"As an enlisted Soldier, I like the fact that Soldiers are held to the same standards regardless of rank through the values," said Spc. Melissa Clark, Company A, 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment.

Now a Soldier who may be in need of moral guidance need not look any further than his own back pocket.

Post celebrates Hispanic Heritage Month

Michele E. Hanson
Special to the Bayonet©

"Hispanics! Challenging the Future" was the theme of the annual Hispanic Heritage Month luncheon held at the Main NCO Club Monday.

"The military and civilian contributions of Hispanic Americans reflect a deep commitment to the principles of freedom and democracy which are the strengths of the United States of America'," said Master Sgt. Jose R. Morales, NCOIC of the equal opportunity office in his opening remarks. "The Hispanic community has given us generals, admirals, philosophers, statesmen and stateswomen, musicians, athletes and Nobel Peace winning scientists who continue to make significant contributions to our society."

Maj. Gen. Alfred A. Valenzuela, deputy commander in chief of the U.S. Southern Command, was the guest speaker. He has served in a variety of command and staff positions.

"General Valenzuela is here as a great Soldier and friend to speak today in recognition of the culture and diversity in our country," said Commanding General Maj. Gen. Carl F. Ernst. "He is a unique Soldier, because of his background and heritage. He has done all the things expected of a Soldier in route to becoming a major general and is an indication of what you can become in this great country, if you have the right integrity, values and work ethic."

Valenzuela spoke to more than 250 luncheon guests about Hispanic contributions and adversities throughout the history of the armed forces.

"Would you believe that 28 percent of the names on the wall of the Vietnam Memorial are Hispanic," said Valenzuela in his opening remarks. "We have fought in every war. The Hispanic legacy goes on and on, bringing credit to themselves."

Valenzuela talked of Hispanic Soldiers and their contributions as generals, NCOs, fighter pilots, Silver Star recipients, doctors and lawyers, as well as their hardships as prisoners and casualties of war.

Just another day off?

Columbus Day inspires courage

Sgt. Michelle J. Davis
Bayonet assistant editor

Any excuse to take the day off from work is good enough for me. Most of the time I don't even take the time to figure out why we have that extra glorious day of rest. It could be "International Hug your Pet Day" and I wouldn't question the day's worthiness.

commentary

As we approach perhaps the most controversial of federal holidays, I thought I'd take a moment to figure out why many buildings and stores will be closed that day, thus hindering my normal weekend shopping frenzy.

So, Monday is Columbus Day — who's he again? Oh, he's the Italian dude with the three ships. In 1492, Columbus sailed the ocean blue — now I remember.

But seriously, some see Columbus as a great explorer, the discoverer of the New World while others see him as the villain of all villains, who couldn't have discovered something that had already been inhabited.

While many arguments have been thrown out for both sides, how do we know things would have turned out better or worse if Columbus decided to live the life of a fisherman and not taken the fateful voyage?

While no one can vouch for Columbus' character since he died nearly five centuries ago, who can say for sure what his intentions were.

Besides, what is the real purpose of Columbus Day? Is it to honor the man himself or what he stood for — take courage for example.

You have to give the man credit. He took one heck of a chance asking another country's king and queen for money and equipment then headed out where no one had traveled before him.

I can't even drive down a darkened highway let alone steer a ship into the unknown and possibly fall off the face of the earth.

Columbus signifies the part of all of us which tells us to throw caution to the wind and do something despite friends telling us we're in for it.

Take joining the Army for instance. If I listened to everyone who thought I shouldn't join the Army, who knows where I'd be today.

It's kind of corny, but we are all explorers in a sense since most of us had no clue what exactly we were getting ourselves into when we signed on the dotted line.

I know I'll never do anything really important like discover a new continent, but we all can't conquer the world.

Retreat establishes, renews friendships

Sgt. Alberto Betancourt
U.S. Army School of the Americas

With the Gulf of Mexico in front of me and my fiancee by my side, I felt alive and filled with joy in my relationship with her and in life itself.

commentary

It was those kinds of emotions and more that stirred within me during the "Duty Day with God" retreat at the Destin Army Recreational Camp in Florida last month.

The event was spearheaded by Chaplain (Maj.) Ruben Colon, U.S. Army School of the Americas (USARSA), as an opportunity to provide Soldiers and their families a relaxed atmosphere where spiritual issues could easily be discussed. In particular, the weekend focused on communications and the family with one objective, to discover something new about their time together.

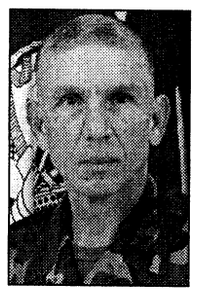
Colon told me that a special emphasis during this retreat was made on family-building techniques and that each family was given the task during the retreat to provide one positive strength they discovered that helped them in the cohesion of their family.

In addition to my fiancee and me, there were 54 other USARSA participants, including U.S. Army and Latin American Soldiers, as well as their family members, who enjoyed the weekend.

Everyone seemed to agree that the retreat helped them bring their families closer together. As a single Soldier preparing to marry next year, the entire weekend was a gratifying reminder of why I love my future wife, Sandra.

In our high-speed — low-drag Army life, we often fail to take time to stop and relax and remember the key ingredients that bring happiness into our lives.

Most of the time, I'm so busy between my job and volunteering with the community, the little quality time I share with Sandra is also rushed.



The retreat helped me find time to cherish the quiet walks, peaceful outings and spiritual bond that brought the two of us together.

Too often, we allow our hectic schedules to become excuses for quality family time. I don't think anyone wants to give up quality time — it's just making time for it that always seems to get in the way.

This retreat made time for the quality we often miss out on. It brought friends and families together who may work together and didn't really know who they were.

It allowed old friendships to rekindle and new ones to flourish.

Columbus Day holiday calls for safety

Columbus Day signals a special need to again alert all personnel to the ever present, real threat of traffic accidents.

An estimated 150 Soldiers will be killed in traffic fatalities this year throughout the Army. Four Fort Benning Soldiers have been killed this fiscal year in privately owned vehicle accidents.

Our goal is for Fort Benning to be accident free. We can only achieve this if everyone, from the military and civilian leadership to the last private and employee, is involved in the prevention effort. I need your help to achieve our goal.

I want you to do the following as you prepare for the long holiday:

- View vehicle operation as a hazardous activity.
- Insist that all occupants wear seat belts.
- Concentrate on alert and sober driving.
- Travel slower when weather of heavy traffic impairs driving.
- Observe all traffic laws, including the posted speed limit.
- Review travel itinerary to avoid driver fatigue.
- Yield to the less proficient driver.

Have an enjoyable, relaxing holiday and a safe return.

—Maj. Gen. Carl F. Ernst

Soldiers, families flock to resort for Military Appreciation Day

Sgt. Michelle J. Davis
Bayonet assistant editor

It was fun, food and lots of golf for military members and their families who flocked to Callaway Gardens for Military Appreciation Day Oct. 2.

More than 3,000 Fort Benning community members including 2,600 Infantry Training Brigade Soldiers, came out to the Pine Mountain, Ga., resort to take part in the festivities, which coincided with the PGA's Buick Challenge golf tournament.

While some chose to browse the various food vendors and display booths, many strolled the fairways to watch 20 of the world's top golfers vie for the $1.5 million purse.

Although many of the visitors were not avid golfers, most found the day's festivities worth while.

"The appreciation day let us get off post and relieve some of the stress," said recent basic combat training graduate Pvt. Travis Humphrey, Company C, 1st Battalion, 19th Infantry Regiment, ITB. "Besides, it let us get away from our drill sergeants for a day."

The appreciation day festivities included a raffle by the Association of the U.S. Army.

The winners and prizes include:

•Gene Deitz won a $200 savings bond.

•Pvt. Jason A. Steenerson of Co. D, 1st Bn., 38th Inf. Regt., ITB, won a Char-Broil gas grill.

•Sgt. Richard Tacia of Co. C, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment, won a three-day, two-night trip to Florida.

•Pvt. 2 Courtney Williams, Co. A, 1st Bn., 19th Inf., ITB, won a stay in a cabin at Uchee Creek for two nights and three days.

•Sgt. Glyne Moses won two nights at the Destin Army Recreation Camp.

•Pvt. Randall Alexander of Co. B, 1st Bn., 38th Inf. Regt., ITB, won three months of greens fee and cart rental at the Follow Me Golf Course.

The sponsors who provided the prizes for the raffle include the Commissary, USPA & IRA, Pioneer Military Loan, Budweiser, Sprint Barracks Phone, Military Benefits Association, Ranger Joe's, Uchee Creek, Destin Army Recreation Camp and Follow Me Golf Course.

Lunch: Honors history

"My father and his five brothers went to World War II, three of them returned highly decorated with a Distinguished Service Cross, a Navy Cross, three Silver Stars, Bronze Stars and several Purple Hearts. All came back in uniform only to be denied service in a restaurant in San Antonio, Texas," Valenzuela said. "We have come a a long way since the mid 1940s. It is one thing to discriminate, but to discriminate against military servicemembers is a disgrace."

"Let discrimination be someone else's problem, not yours. You can compete, because the opportunities are there. All you have to do is go after the opportunities," he said.

"The U.S. Military and Department of Defense are the best Equal Opportunity employers around. The military gives us structure, leadership and expectations," Valenzuela stated. "We are a caring military with recognition, role models and rewards. The military gives you an environment of standards and if the standard's met, you will succeed."

Banner Day

Rangers compete for streamer

It seems even when the Rangers take a day off, there's a bunch of training and muscle-straining involved. This was especially true on Banner Day, the 3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment's way of taking time off for some friendly competition between companies.

The day of sports held Oct.1 featured such events as a Ranger special operations vehicle push, combatives (hand-to-hand fighting) and several other sports that might make the toughest rugby player think twice about joining the team.

The four Ranger companies, A, B, C and Headquarters and Headquarters Company competed for points awarded for their placement in each event. In the end, the team with the most points won.

Perhaps the most physical sport that is unique to the Rangers is Americanball, a sport that looks like a combination of rugby, football, soccer and wrestling. Rangers clad in flak vests do whatever they can to work a soccer ball into a goal. The goal always has two goalies and two offense players battling for possession of the ball in the endzone. It's a rough sport and if the flak vests slowed down a Ranger, a spectator wouldn't notice from the sideline.

1st Lt. Pat Work, a platoon leader with Co. B, said the sport of Americanball greatly reflected the skills and traits a Ranger uses on the battlefield.

"You have to overcome the fear of colliding with another man. At the same time it's a team sport and you're trying to score goals," Work said. His company won the overall Americanball event.

"It's good for team building. We could go downrange together tonight and that would make all of this stuff trivial," Work said. "These guys aren't out here sweating and getting themselves beat up to the lose the game. There's no doubt we're here to win."

The Rangers also played Flickerball, a mix of rugby and football. This sport, played without flak vests, had teams battling to get within range of an elevated goal that was a hole cut into what looked like a basketball backboard. A player scored a goal by passing the ball through the hole.

Cpl. James Gilliland of HHC said teamwork was essential for his team winning the overall flickerball event.

"You have to have good organization and get both a good offense and defense going," Gilliland said, detailing the strategy and skills needed to win. "You have to have good hands for catching. Almost anybody can pass, but not everybody can catch."

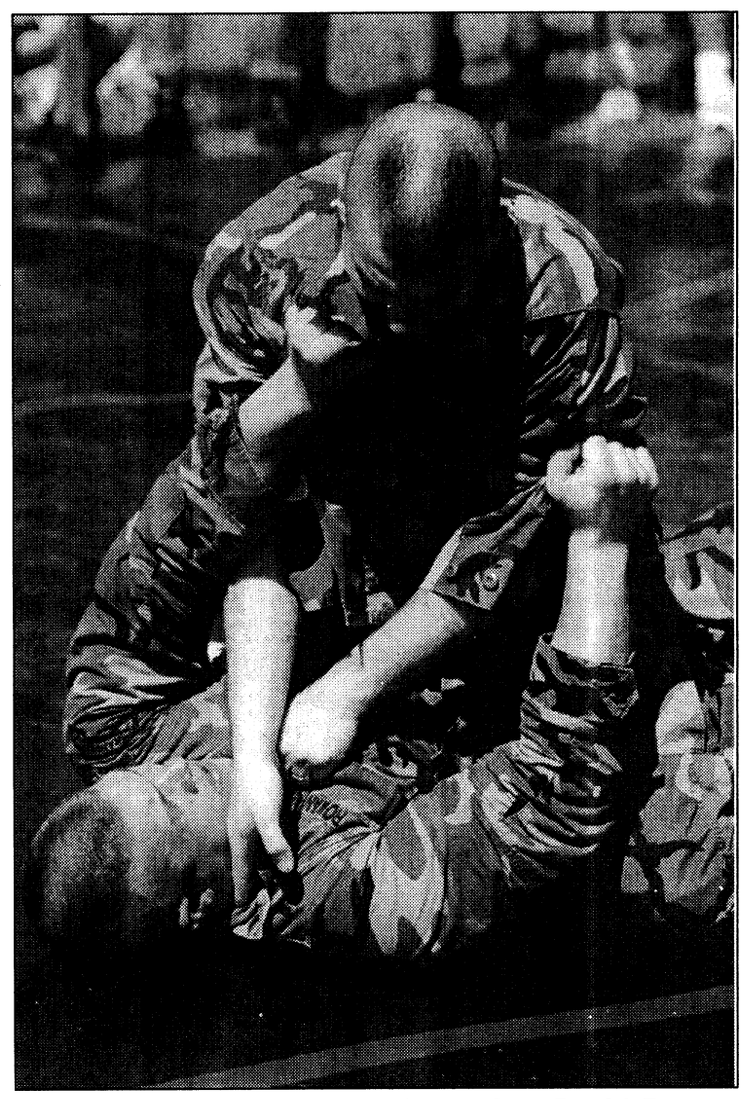
Gilliland said it was important to win the event, but more important was the camaraderie shared on the field that continued off the field.

"You'll see people get a little upset, but you still got to remember that's your brother, that's your Ranger buddy," he said.

In combatives, Rangers in various weight classes competed in hand-to-hand competition.

Spc. Greg Lawrence of Co. C, who competed and won in the 164-185-pound combatives category, said the Banner Day sports may appear physically tough on the outside, but the Rangers' standard training keeps the competitors always ready. His company won the overall combatives title.

"This is not that tough," Lawrence said. "We're all in shape. We all work out hard and train for this."

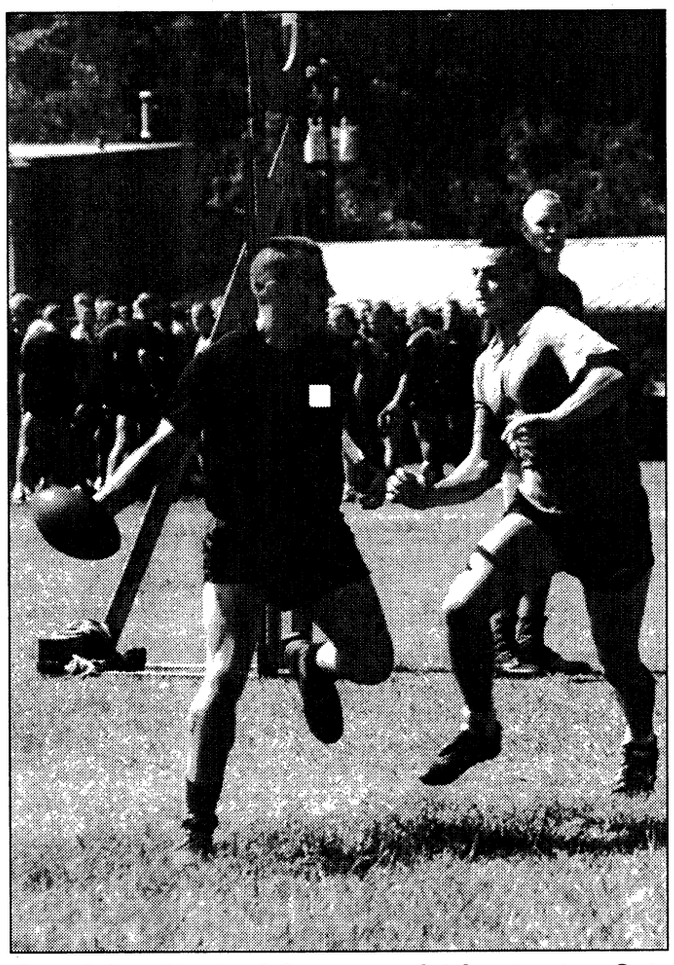


There may be some hard hitting on the field and the combatives may look a little rough, but in the end everyone is on the same team, he said.

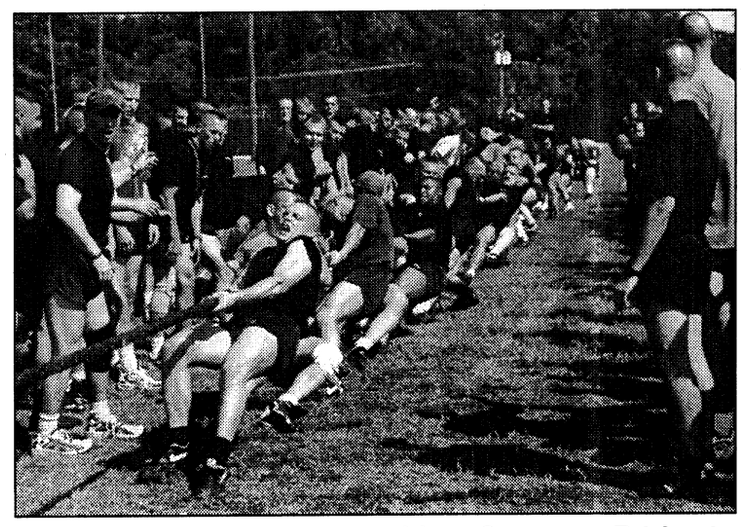
"For all of the Rangers, this is for the pride in their company and good sportsmanship," he said. "When you're on the field, you're trying to win. When you're off the field, they're on your team again."

In other events, HHC won the vehicle push event, Co. A won the basketball competition and Co. B took the tug-of-war contest. HHC won the Banner Day streamer with 17.5 points. Co. A took second place with 15, Co. B earned third with 14.5 points and Co. C had fourth place with 13 points.

"Banner Day offers us the opportunity to practice some of our skills we train on throughout the year," said Battalion Commander Lt. Col. Dan Allyn.



"They are glad to come out here — to compete and win," he said. "The sporting events stress aggressiveness and teamwork. That's the living spirit within all of our Rangers."



Sgt. Gerald Neitenbach (top) and Sgt. David Rowan battle during a combatives match.

Staff Sgt. Lindsay Bunch gives a Ranger participant four points for completing a move during the combatives portion of the competition.

Sgt. Adam Nash of Company C tries to stop Sgt. John T. Newton from completing a pass during a Flickerball game.

During the tug-o-war competition, Company B tries to keep their ground.

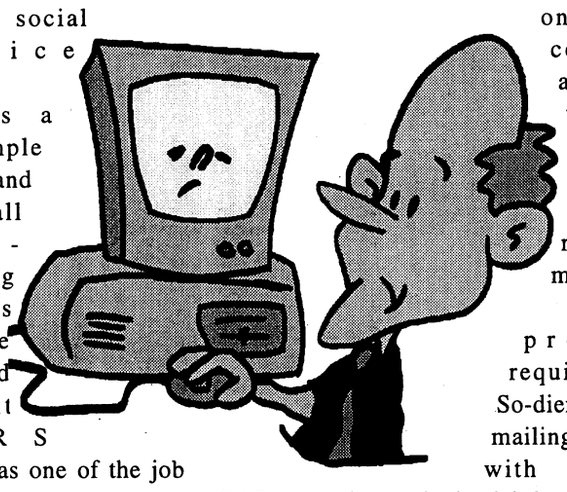
Army Career and Alumni Program

DORS assists transitioning Soldiers in job hunt



Debbie Henshaw
Army Career and Alumni Program

"DORS stands for the Defense Outplacement and Referral System and is a tool that transitioning Soldiers can use to get their names and resumes in front of employers nationwide," said Guy Smith, Fort Benning Army Career and Alumni Program (ACAP) counselor.

Smith said DORS is a computerized on-line referral service used by private sector employers.

By dialing a toll-free number, employers can receive copies of resumes of separating Soldiers who have skills and training which match their needs. The system also supports the public sector or PACS (Public and Community Service) employers.

PACS is an automated job bank database within DORS that departing Soldiers use to get their names in front of nonprofit, public and community service organizations such as schools, hospitals, law enforcement and social service agencies.

"It is a very simple process and almost all transitioning Soldiers prepare and transmit DORS resumes as one of the job assistance services at the ACAP Center," Smith said. "Soldiers get individual training and assistance on how to complete and transmit DORS and PACS resumes."

The process requires the So-dier's name, mailing address with phone numbers, desired job category, work location preferences, summary of job skills and experience and the exact date available to start work.

The system is used continuously by employers who contact Soldiers with employment opportunities and Soldiers have frequently reported that they were contacted by a company or placement firm through the DORS resume.

"DORS and PACS service is available to separating Soldiers, spouses and civil service workers when participating in ACAP and may be submitted as early as 180 days before the separation date," Smith said.

For more information, visit Building 2634 in Soldiers' Plaza or call 545-2308 or 545-2309.

Forum addresses quality of life issues

Michele E. Hanson
Special to the Bayonet©

More than 120 participants attended the annual Army Family Action Plan Symposium (AFAP) held Sept. 29 at the Officers' Club.

The AFAP process allows members of America's Army family a forum to meet, discuss and express their quality-of-life concerns to Army leadership in order to bring about effective change at Fort Benning and Army wide.

"This is an important event for our Army and your role today is to make this a better community for all constituents — Soldiers, civilians and their families, and our retired community," said Commanding General Maj. Gen. Carl F. Ernst. "You need to ensure that our distinguished alumni whose paths we walk, legends we follow and heroes we admire, are taken care of as well."

"Participants were comprised from 30 units, activities and agencies divided into six separate work groups," said Jill Crider, installation volunteer coordinator in charge of this year's AFAP symposium. "Each work group was tasked to discuss and present solutions for one or more of the 18 recommended issues for change, whether it was installation specific or Army wide."

According to Crider 90 to 95 percent of the issues raised will be resolved at the local level with the remaining five to 10 percent sent forward to a higher level. In its 15-year history, AFAP issues have resulted in the passage of 54 pieces of legislation, 121 policy or regulation changes and 118 improved programs and services. Programs like Better Opportunities for Single Soldiers and Family Support Group were issues that came forward out of AFAP.

"No issue is too big," Crider said. "A good idea is a good idea and no matter how big the idea, change can happen."

Michele E. Hanson

Participants assigned to the Medical Support group work together to discuss and solve proposed issues.

"The AFAP process is very important and begins with the annual installation symposium where delegates raise issues and work with community experts to solve them," said Christie DiPietro, AFAP director from the Training and Doctrine Command (TRADOC). "The issues discussed are forwarded to the post commander for resolution or are passed on to TRADOC where every issue is either resolved or deemed unattainable."

"There are many bright folks out here with great ideas and experiences that will add to the AFAP process," Ernst said. "It is a question of prioritization and today you will help the institution of Fort Benning and help me do my job better because we are all part of the same team, the Army family team."

Issues and recommendations from AFAP Symposium

Consumer Services

Lack of awareness of Post facilities, services and events
- Command emphasis and involvement
- Maximize the chain of command, BOSS Program, Newcomers Briefing and Public Affairs

Bagger interaction with commissary patrons
- Inform patrons about bagger functions
- Baggers should ask if their assistance is desired
- Inform patrons how to report bagger problems

AAFES inventory and pricing
- Advertised "market tests" of different lines of inventory
  - — Gives AAFES more "marketing data" for inventory choices
  - — Gives consumers more choices

Family Support Work Group

Lack of effective communication
- Encourage post services to be more aggressive in making information accessible to units and families
- Encourage unit commanders to emphasize FSG
- Provide effective training for FSG leaders and commanders

FSG should not be renamed "Family Readiness Group"
- Retain family "support" which implies mutual supportiveness among families
- Use family "resource" which implies offering needed encouragement and help to families
- "Readiness"
  - — too cold
  - — impersonal
  - — sounds like FRG only for deployable units

Ineffective sponsorship programs
- Hold commanders responsible for implementing effective sponsorship program
- Develop clear standards for the program

Medical Services Support

Access to care
- Increasing the number of personnel to shorten the waiting time to schedule appointments and to be seen
- Improve the accessibility and availability of services
  - — raise Medicare reimbursement rates
  - — expand TRICARE entitlement to retirees over 65
  - — increase the pharmacy hours
  - — make the rescheduling of appointments more convenient
  - — increase the reimbursement rates for family members

Information dissemination for health services
- Recommend the standardization of care Department of Defense (DoD) wide
- Changes in health services should be disseminated through a variety of media, including, but not limited to units, newspapers, television, the DoD internet site or a telephone call-in line
- Until standardized DoD-wide, regional changes can be disseminated in Humane Quarterly newsletter

Increase health benefits
- Increase dental benefits to 75 percent for all procedures for all beneficiaries and make the retiree dental plan equal to active duty
- Create better access to mental health care at a lower cost to beneficiaries

Housing, Relocation and employment

Sponsor unit support of the community life program
- Sponsoring unit commanders, appoint coordinators who reside in the community
- Appoint vouchered special-duty personnel to community life program
- Increase command emphasis and support of the community life program

Lack of quality assurance of service contracts
- Increase quality assurance through closely monitoring all work in progress by phases and evaluation at the completion of the project
- Reduce the number of contracts the quality of assurance people have to monitor
- Better scope contracts — identify in writing the exact specifications of the contract

Availability of company grade quarters for permanent party
- Reduce the number of designated quarters to IOAC students
- Comply with housing regulations when assigning quarters to families with proper ratio of children to bedrooms
- Eliminate the designation of quarters for IOAC students

Youth and Education

Transitioning student needs
- Establish an education liaison office to assist in the transitioning of military children into the local school systems to include post and off-post communities

Secondary school information on Fort Benning
- Establish an education liaison office as previously described
- In the interim, publish an information sheet describing programs for each secondary school and points of contact that will be added to the Welcome Packet and distributed during in-processing

Need for competitive programs in the middle school
- Implement competitive programs at Faith Middle School after conducting a discovery which gathers necessary information from other installations already participating in competitive programs

Force support, entitlements and leadership

Downsizing
- Limit DOD operational tempo and overseas missions
- Designate deployment and field duty
  - — limit days per year to 180 days to improve morale and retention
- Balance contract support against mission and career civil service infrastructure
- Improve quality assurance and inspections of housing

Doctors encourage flu shots for winter

Dr. William Corr
Preventive Medicine, Martin Army Community Hospital

Influenza is the formal name for the flu, a contagious disease that is caused by a virus. It is spread by breathing in flu viruses. When a person with the flu sneezes or talks, the virus is expelled into the air and can be inhaled by anyone close by.

During the colder months, people crowd together indoors to escape the cold and rain. It is the crowding together and not the actual cold temperature which increases one's risk to get the flu and other respiratory diseases.

The flu can also be spread by direct hand contact. The virus can live for hours on doorknobs, phones and surfaces. From the hand, the virus can reach the mouth and be ingested.

The flu vaccine is very effective but it must be given each year to ensure protection. An annual vaccination is important because the viruses that cause the flu change from year to year.

Beneficiaries who are encouraged to receive the vaccine include:

•Adults, age 65 and over

•Adults and children with chronic medical problems such as diabetes, respiratory and heart diseases

•Those who work in hospitals, outpatient clinics or nursing homes

Only those with a severe allergy to eggs or to the flu vaccine itself should not receive the vaccine.

The influenza vaccination is considered safe at any stage of pregnancy.

The 1998-1999 flu season is approaching and flu shots will soon be available at Martin Army Community Hospital's Immunization Clinic as well as at all family practice and troop medical clinics.

•Active duty servicemembers: Coordination will be made through their supporting Troop Medical Clinic.

•Active duty MEDDAC and DENTAC personnel: From 6:30 to 8 a.m. Tuesday through Oct. 16 and Oct. 19, immunizations will be given in the Family Practice Clinic. From 6:30 to 8 a.m. Oct. 26 will be a make-up day. Immunizations are also available at the 9th floor immunization clinic.

•Martin Army Hospital Family Practice Clinic enrollees: Beginning Tuesday, beneficiaries can receive vaccinations from 9 to 11 a.m. and 1 to 3 p.m. Monday through Friday on a walk-in basis. If a beneficiary has an established appointment, they can obtain an immunization at that time.

•Aviation Clinic enrollees: Beneficiaries can receive vaccinations every Tuesday and Thursday from 1 to 3 p.m. on a walk-in basis. If a beneficiary has an established appointment, they can obtain an immunization at that time.

•Winder Clinic enrollees: Beneficiaries can receive vaccinations every Tuesday and Thursday from 8 a.m. to noon and 1 to 4 p.m. on a walk-in basis. Those beneficiaries who already have an established appointment can obtain an immunization at that time. Priority for flu shots will be given to those with established appointments.

•Victory Clinic enrollees: Victory Clinic will offer flu shots on a walk-in basis from 9 a.m. to noon and 1 to 5 p.m. Wednesdays and 1 to 5 and 6 to 8 p.m. Fridays and 9 a.m. to 12:30 p.m. Saturdays. If a beneficiary has an established appointment, they can obtain an immunization at that time.

•Beneficiaries not enrolled in a clinic: Beginning Tuesday, beneficiaries not enrolled in a clinic or Department of the Army civilians can be vaccinated at the hospital's Immunization Clinic, Room 956 (no appointment required).

The hours are from 7:30 to 11:30 a.m. and afternoon hours (except Fridays) are 1 to 3:30 p.m. Department of the Army civilians who keep their occupational health records at Building 2630 (Occupational Health nursing) will pick up their occupational health records prior to reporting to the Immunization Clinic.

Laity spreads God's word

Chaplain (Capt.) James W. Blount
1st Bn., 15th Inf. Regt., 3rd Bde., 3rd Inf. Div. (Mech)

It is important for us to understand that the laity will do the lion's share of spreading the Gospel of Jesus Christ — not the professional ministers.

reflections

If the laity sits back and asks their leaders to do all the visitation, all the witnessing, all the inviting and all the follow up, then I am afraid that many will go to their graves without knowing Jesus Christ as their Lord and Savior.

Fortunately, many church members see that they have the same responsibilities and authority to reach lost souls for Christ, as do the pastor. This church where everyone realizes the need to work together to reach the neighborhood and city for Christ, before he returns, is how the "Body of Christ" should really work.

As we approach the new millennium, we can be absolutely sure of two things. One is that Jesus Christ is coming very soon, and the other is that the reason God hasn't sent him yet is that he wants more people to accept his son as their Lord and Savior. The larger the laity is then the more potential for growth there is. What we as Christians need to do is to make the "Great Commission" our greatest personal responsibility.

Our greatest personal responsibility is to walk in the footprints of Jesus as we seek to do as Jesus speaks. So we see also that just as we expect the minister to live as he speaks, then the laity must also live their lives according to the message they share. Only then, when people really see that we are truly the Body of Christ, will people accept Jesus Christ as their Lord and Savior.

Until then we will be known as hypocrites. We say one thing, but do another thing. A chain is only as strong as its weakest link and many times one person in the church who is not living the Christian lifestyle can corrupt the whole Body of Christ just like an infection.

Finally, I would like to share with you certain chapters in the Bible that pertain directly to the laity that concerns spiritual gifts and the love of Christ. I Corinthians 12 and 13 are chapters which outline how each individual can be of service to the Body of Christ and then how each one should put love above all else. These two chapters define by themselves the Body of Christ.

Romans 12:1-6

I beseech you therefore, brethren, by the mercies of God, that you present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable to God, which is your reasonable service and do not be conformed to this world, but be transformed by the renewing of your mind, that you may prove what is that good and acceptable and perfect will of God. For I say, through the grace given to me, to everyone who is among you, not to think of himself more highly than he ought to think, but to think soberly, as God has dealt to each one a measure of faith. For as we have many members in one body, but all the members do not have the same function, so we, being many, are one body in Christ, and individually members of one another. Having then gifts differing according to the grace that is given to us, let us use them.

Family ministries offer help to parents

Chaplain (Maj.) Frederick M. Rupel
Chief, Chaplain Family Life Ministries

Probably some of my most difficult and heartbreaking counseling sessions have been with parents who have been at odds with teaching and disciplining their children.

reflections

Years of divided spirits have produced despair, anger and even fear.

Young parents could avoid some of this trauma if they would agree from the very beginning to be united in disciplining their children at an early age.

Children are very smart, indeed they soon find out when parents do not agree and they quickly learn how to play one against the other. How much more effective rules and discipline would be if both parents would firmly unite themselves in this area.

Here is a formula that can be put to good use by all parents:

Fairness+Love+Consistency= Effective Discipline.

Take out one part of this formula and the discipline becomes inadequate if not totally ineffective.

You will know that your united front is effective when you begin to see the results happening: mature, self-disciplined children now ready to step out on their own.

Parenting — what a joy — what a task! If you feel you need some help in becoming a more effective parent,. the Chaplain Family Life Ministries can help.

For more information, call 545-1760.

chapel notes

Reconciliation classes begin — Classes to prepare children to celebrate the sacrament of Reconciliation for the first time will begin at 7 p.m. Wednesday at the Custer Terrace Chapel.

Children in second-grade through sixth-grade are eligible to participate, provided they attended CCD or Catholic School last year.

Columbus-Fort Benning Rugby Club

The Georgia Southern University (GSU) Rugby Club came to Columbus looking for a tough match and got it Saturday at the Cruiserdome.

GSU played toe-to-toe as the Columbus-Fort Benning Ruggers spun the ball wide from scrummage and line out possessions to attack the outside center and break the homeside defense.

Despite the Cruisers' field positions and attack opportunities, the match was knotted 5-5 at the half.

In the second half, veteran Cruise-A-Matic flyhalf Tim Butterfield and scrumhalf Dave Fry took the game into their hands and attacked the visitors inside with devastating results.

With the home team's forwards dominating the set piece, Butterfield dummied twice to stroll in untouched and Fry worked an eight-man pick-up as the homers leapt to a 27-5 victory.

The Cruise-A-Matics will travel to Birmingham, Ala., to challenge their deep south rivals at 1 p.m. (CST) Saturday.

For more information on training and matches, call Gary Kent at 324-4924.

Bad Boys beat USARSA for softball championship

Pvt. 2 Nicole M. Massie
Bayonet staff writer

The Bad Boys of 1st Battalion, 30th Infantry Regiment, Infantry Training Brigade, took on the U.S. Army School of Americas (USARSA) during the 1998 Fort Benning Intramural Softball Championships at Knappenberger Field Oct. 1.

The Bad Boys entered the game undefeated in the double elimination tournament and USARSA ran a close second losing only to the Bad Boys in the early stages of the tournament.

The first few innings were close as USARSA led by one run. The score at the end of the second was 4-3.

In the top of the third, USARSA scored an additional two runs with the help of an error at second base. Despite USARSA's efforts, the Bad Boys battled back as they gained eight runs in the inning before collecting their third out by a pop-up.

USARSA fought back during the fourth inning, acquiring two RBIs which closed the Bad Boys' lead to 11-8.

The Bad Boys widened the gap, however, during the fourth as the team belted a three-run homer followed by a base hit which brought the score to 15-8.

USARSA answered back with an in-the-park, two-run homer and a double to centerfield which brought USARSA within four runs.

The lead may have looked shaky for a moment as USARSA scored a three-run homer that tied the game in the seventh. The Bad Boys claimed victory, however, with a single run bringing the final score to 17-16.

The Bad Boys were credited by a member of the opposing team as deserving of the win through their skill.

"I thought we would make a comeback, but they are good," said Jose Fonseca of USARSA. "They are good hitters. They always did real well when they were up to bat."

Although the game came down to a single run, the Bad Boys were confident they had the championship in the bag from the start of the season-ending tournament.

"I knew we were going to win," said Gilbert Dillow, pitcher. "We had only lost once all year and we would have had to lose twice against them to lose the championship."

Shooter wins matches

Paula J. Randall Pagan
U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit

An international rifle shooter with the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit (USAMU) won two of three of the Pan American Games Rifle Selection Matches recently.

Kenneth A. Johnson won the Air Rifle and Three-Position matches at the first of two U.S. Team Selection Matches for the 1999 Pan American Games, hosted by USAMU at Pool Range Sept. 25-30. His wife, Nancy Johnson, a 1996 Olympian, took third place in the Women's Three-Position Match.

The Pan Am Games, which are conducted every four years, is one of four big international matches — along with the Olympics, World Championships and the Campeonato de Tiro de las Americas (CAT Games) — where shooters can win medals and set world records. The 1999 Pan Am Games, to be held next summer in Winnipeg, Canada, is also the last opportunity for nations to win quota slots for the 2000 Olympic Games in Sydney, Australia.

Air rifle world-record holder Jason A. Parker was second and 10-time National Rifle Champion Stephen C. Goff was third in the Air Rifle Match. Olympian David A. Johnson placed second in the Prone Match and third in the Three-Position Match. Olympian Michael E. Anti was second in the Three-Position Match and three-time Olympian Glenn A. Dubis took third in the Prone Match.

Post needs volunteer mayors

Pvt. 2 Nicole M. Massie
Bayonet staff writer

Every community has issues which address the community members and the quality of life in which they live.

The Community Life Mayor's Association is an outlet for members of the Fort Benning military to improve the environment in which they live.

At present, the association is in need of eight volunteers from different areas of post who have time to dedicate to their community and help solve community related issues and improve activities.

"We are in need of volunteers who want to participate in the community in which they live," said Linda Young, president of the Community Life Mayor's Association. "Even though it is a volunteer position, there is more to it then just a title."

"We need volunteers who are able to devote time to community issues and who are motivated self-starters," Young said. "The more involved the volunteers are, the better people feel about the community."

Volunteers are able to improve their community by addressing issues such as speed limit posting around the housing areas, playground clean-up and anything that affects the community as a whole.

One of the more recent improvements one community experienced is new housing signs that post the speed limit.

"McGraw Manor recently received new housing signs because of a speeding issue the community was faced with," said Jennifer Morgan, community life officer. "The speed limit is posted at the bottom so those entering the community are aware of the speed limits before they even enter the housing areas."

"If we are able to get all the volunteer mayor positions filled, there is so much Fort Benning can accomplish," Young said.

Mayors are required to attend monthly meetings with the garrison commander where they can address issues that could not be solved at lower levels. Volunteers may also attend town hall meetings and private organizational meetings for the welfare of each community.

"People around post such as the Department of Public Works, who are concerned about the communities issues attend these meetings," Morgan said. "It is important that the volunteers get involved and attend the meetings so problems may be addressed."

"The more that is put into a community, the more a community can get out of it," Young said. "Yes, this is government housing, but it is still our community. This is where we live and we need to take care of it."

The mayor's program helps foster an atmosphere which shows it is a community that works together, said Morgan.

Not only do volunteers address issues, they also coordinate activities around the community.

Santa's ride around is just one of many activities in which the volunteers help coordinate for the benefit of the community.

"The volunteers ride on a fire truck with Santa Claus through each housing area and throw candy to the children," Young said. "It is a lot of fun."

"Last year, we nearly froze to death, but it was such a hoot," Morgan said.

Some of the activities such as Safety Carnival and the bicycle clinic have had to stop because of the lack of volunteer mayors.

"A lot of people do not know about the program," Young said. "We have lost a lot of volunteers due to transfers."

The East Main Post, West Main Post and Indianhead Terrace are in need of volunteer mayors and vice mayors. McGraw Manor and Custer Terrace housing communities are in need of volunteer vice mayors.

"Volunteers must live in the community in which they volunteer because who better to address issues of the community than someone who lives there," Morgan said.

Perspective volunteers, non-active duty, may receive an application by calling, Linda Young at 689-4594 or Jennifer Morgan at 545-3069.

Applicants will be required to complete a background check.

Elections are held once a year. Volunteer mayors are chosen by members of each community.

LNOs: Foreign national officers provide critical link for Infantry training

USAIC Secretary General Staff

During the mid 1940s, the U.S. Army Infantry Center developed a program to help facilitate the exchange of information and the presentation of various foreign government views on issues of mutual interest.

"This program fostered the development of what we know today as the Allied Liaison Officers (LNOs)," said Secretary General Staff Captain, Jesus Garcia. "There are currently five LNOs who work at Fort Benning. The countries represented are: The United Kingdom, Republic of Korea, Germany, Canada and France."

Each liaison officer strives to develop systems to provide a routine and continuing exchange of ideas and information between foreign nations and the U.S. Infantry community. As a group, the LNOs actively participate in both training and social activities around the installation.

"All five LNOs are here to participate in an ongoing effort to exchange information about our respective Infantry communities, Garcia said. "They each provide a critical link in our mission to provide the nation with the world's best trained Infantry Soldier."

The LNOs provide the expertise and insight needed to best integrate tactics, techniques and doctrinal procedures required to effectively fight in combined operations.

"They give our leaders a unique opportunity by presenting alternatives to various military situations. In addition to providing information on Infantry related matters, these liaison officers also provide a new and interesting perspective into several different cultures," Garcia said. "These new perspectives can help develop a stronger, more lasting relationship that will enrich our entire community."

Korean LNO's dream brings him to Fort Benning

Following his dream to be in the Army, Lt. Col. Hak Soo Shin, local national officer (LNO) for Korea, graduated from the Korean Military Academy in 1980.

Due to the constant threat from their neighbors in North Korea, Shin said Soldiers constantly patrol the streets. Shin aspired to join the Army because, in South Korea, Soldiers are held in high esteem and considered protection from the enemy.

"It was my dream to be a military man," Shin said.

After seeing an advertisement in a Korean defense newspaper for a position as a representative to the U.S., Shin applied and got it.

Shin

One year ago, the two-year assignment as the liaison between Korea and the U.S. brought him to Fort Benning. Shin was sent here to collect information on training that takes place at the Home of the Infantry to pass on to Korea's Infantry School.

So far, Shin said not much is different between Korea and the U.S. when it comes to working with military personnel.

Although Shin said he likes the U.S., he also thinks there are some cultural differences that he is still adjusting to.

Shin said it took some time getting used to the "wide, open spaces" of this country and said he prefers the compactness of his homeland.

"In Korea we could travel anywhere because it is small, here it is very difficult (to travel)," Shin said.

Shin also said he misses the close-knit communities of Korea.

"In Korea, it is much more community-oriented," Shin said.

Keeping with that community-oriented tradition, Shin said his wife, Namkyung Kim, is actively involved in the Officers' Wives'

"Communities that Care"

Soldier makes time to be Big Brother

Michele E. Hanson
Special to the Bayonet©

Thousands of Soldiers and civil service employees will contribute to charitable organizations during the Combined Federal Campaign drive (CFC) that runs through Nov. 6. Contributions under designation 9000, "Communities that Care," benefit local charity organizations such as, Big Brothers and Big Sisters of Columbus.

Sgt. First Class Vincent McNeill, of Company D, 2nd Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment, contributes to several CFC charity organizations each year.

Although McNeill works fulltime as an instructor, attends college and sings in a barbershop quartet on weekends, he makes time to sponsor a local child through the Big Brother program.

"My desire to sponsor a child was inspired by the loss of my sister last year," McNeill said. "My sister had a degree in early childhood development and was working on her bachelor's while raising her five children. Although she was very ill, she still had the heart to work with young children."

McNeill, one of eight children, from a two-parent family with a strong foundation built on respect, discipline and hard work, volunteered as a big brother after hearing a commercial on the radio.

"I wanted to give something back to the community and thought if I could make a difference with one child it would be a worthwhile endeavor," he said.

After placing a call to Big Brothers, McNeill underwent a selection process that included an interview, a home study where they visit the home, an automobile check and verification of insurance, completion of an extensive application and a call to the workplace.

"The Big Brothers have about 50 kids waiting to be matched with a sponsor," McNeill said. "After I was selected, my application was matched, as close as possible, with a child who had similar interests."

McNeill became a big brother to 9-year old Myron Admore of Columbus last April. They go bowling and play basketball and video games together. McNeill visits his school for lunch and takes him out to dinner, but his friendship is an earned privilege, not a right.

"We have a great relationship — Myron, his mother and I. His mom and I talk about how he is doing at school with his behavior and grades and I help keep him focused," McNeill said. "Myron knows if he does not do what his mother says, then he will not get to have our weekly visit. The visits are a privilege he looks forward to, but has to earn through good behavior."

According to McNeill, bringing home good grades, being respectful and making good choices are what he expects from Myron in order to meet weekly.

"Vince McNeill is a very dependable big brother and Myron's mom has seen a definite improvement in his attitude and grades," said Selena Ivory-Brown, case manager for Big Brothers and Big Sisters. "Having a sponsor like him helps children build meaningful relationships outside the family, other than their mother. This relationship improves the child's peer relations, classroom behavior, self motivation and self confidence."

"I hope by spending time with Myron, he will learn about the positive things we can achieve in our society. I am a good role model for him and stress that rewards in life come only with hard work and honesty," McNeill added.

CFC

Drive gives outlet for charitable donations

USAIC Public Affairs Office

Everyone wants to help others. It makes us feel good. One program that allows us to give and see results in our own neighborhood is the Combined Federal Campaign (CFC). CFC is a program that provides federal employees the opportunity to help hundreds of worthy causes. Instead of having to seek out organizations we wish to contribute to, the CFC combines fund raising drives of many human health and welfare charities into a single campaign. CFC makes it easy.

A tradition that began in the early 1960s, CFC is the largest, most successful workplace fundraising campaign in the world. It's also only one of two solicitations of employees in the federal workplace.

So just how can we give? First we can have a simple, easy payroll deduction that doesn't begin until January. This allows us to give substantially by spreading our contributions over an entire year. If we want to give at one time, we can make either a cash or check donation. Of course, there's also an option to be a confidential contributor by placing your pledge form in a sealed envelope.

One voluntary agency close to home that will benefit by your donation is the local United Way. It supports programs like the Boy Scouts, Girls Scouts, Santa's Castle and Battered Women. And more importantly, it supports programs that support Soldiers and their families. All we have to do is check the 9000 block on the CFC pledge form. When we contribute to local United Way programs, we put a vote of confidence in own neighborhood.

By contributing, we lead by example. Any contribution we make should be given freely.

We have just as much right not to donate. But when we think about how much of an effect we can have right here at home and how much others may benefit by our generosity and thoughtfulness, it's not a tough decision.

Editor provides survey results to community

Karen A. Ellis
Bayonet Editor

The survey results are in! The staff of The Bayonet thanks members of the Fort Benning community who participated in the survey. More than 1,200 members of the community responded to the 64-question survey that was randomly mailed to a cross-section of the community.

commentary

The answers are providing the editor of The Bayonet and staff members with a detailed snapshot of how the community views*Tthe Bayonet.*

The following is a list of survey responses and actions the staff of The Bayonet is taking to improve some of the services provided:

One of the questions asked was: To what extent do you find The Bayonet a reliable source of news about what is going on in the Army?

One-hundred fifty four of those who responded to this question felt the coverage was excellent, 503 of those surveyed said the newspaper's coverage was good. One-hundred ninety-one of those polled said The Bayonet's coverage of Department of the Army issues and events was moderate.

To remedy this, we are increasing use of Army News Service, that provides up-to-date news concerning the Soldier and his or her family. Where possible, The Bayonet staff will localize the information by providing post points-of contacts.

Now, let's take a glimpse into what the community says about the newspaper's coverage of Fort Benning, the civilian community and the newspaper overall.

For those who graciously took the time to complete the survey, community members were asked: How do you feel about the amount of coverage in The Bayonet for family programs and services? Seventy-four percent responded: too much, 694 responded about right, 131 responded not enough and 222 responded not applicable.

Staff members of The Bayonet pride themselves on having fingers on the pulse of the community and its many activities and events.

Reporters can be seen on a regular basis scoping out the schools, standing in front of the action at post sporting events, youth activity programs and other activities and events. For those community members who may hear of any activities going on, please call The Bayonet at 545-2201 with details of the activity and publicity of the event can be arranged.

Many surveys suggested that the Bayonet should list civilian job opportunities and more news that pertains to Department of the Army civilian employees.

On a weekly basis, the job listings will appear in the Community section of the newspaper, this week, the listing appears on page B-6.

Members of the community suggested that the newspaper publish death announcements just as we publish birth announcements. We realize that notices of death are important bits of information just as births are, and we stand prepared to publish obituary announcements when they are provided to us.

Several survey responders informed the Bayonet staff that they were not interested in any new or better ways (online version of The Bayonet). One survey recommended that we keep The Bayonet a newspaper: "I don't or won't have time to read it online."

In future issues of The Bayonet, the staff will try and address more of the concerns mentioned on the surveys in order to provide a post newspaper that covers a little something for everyone.

Even though the survey has been tallied, The Bayonet staff appreciates any additional comments and suggestions.

Military Police

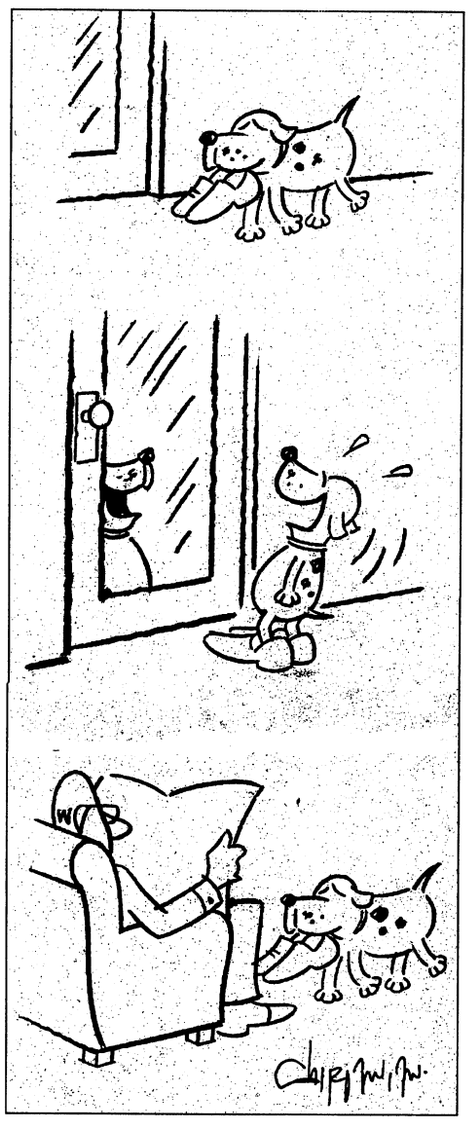
Support eases checkpoint duty

USAIC Pubic Affairs Office

The long days of pulling checkpoint duty for Fort Benning's Military Police were made somewhat shorter by the outpouring of support from private citizens and business, according to Col. Tom Cain, director of public safety.

"The support was phenomenal," he said. "We talk about community support of Fort Benning. Well it was clearly in evidence during the past month," he said.

Commanding General Maj. Gen. Carl F. Ernst sent thank you notes to all the regular contributors.

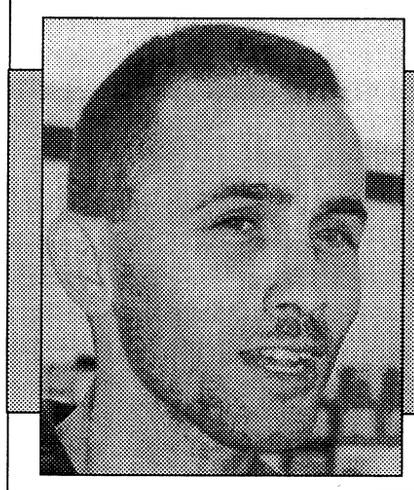


Cain noted that his military police greatly appreciated the generosity of the various businesses, but that they were also touched by individuals who stopped by with baked goods and beverages as well.

"Unfortunately we weren't able to get their names to thank them publicly."

The commanding general's thank you letters went out to Jo Cooper, Sam's Club; Lisa Vaughn, Quaker Oats Corp.; Michael Waksmonski, Defense Commissary Agency; Coreen Taylor, Gatorade; Sharon Ansen, Frito Lay; Cathy Willoughby, Royal Crown Cola; Rick Carpenter, Buffalo Rock Cola; Andy Wately, Coca Cola; Rudy Cook, Tom's Snack Foods; Lamar Whitley, Georgia Mountain Water; Frank Wilks, Vanderberg Corp.; Benny Pilcher, Swift/Eckridge Corp.; Glen Houvinen, Shasta Corp.; and Charles Todd, Mid State Distributors.

Cain said these men and women donated nearly $4,000 in such items as coolers, drinking cups, snack food and beverages.



"It's this kind of support that makes it worthwhile to be a Soldier, to serve one's country. They really showed us we are appreciated even though we may have been inconveniencing them."

LNO: Korean officer adjusts

tradition, Shin said his wife, Namkyung Kim, is actively involved in the Officers' Wives' Club. Kim also is a stay-at-home-mom to their 13-year-old daughter, Yery.

Shin said his family is adjusting to the U.S. and is becoming more proficient in English everyday.

With all the cultural differences Shin deals with, he has found one difference between the U.S. and Korea that may not be so bad – one less work day.

"In Korea we work on Saturday," Shin said.

Just recently, Shin's country observed a national holiday in observance of South Korea's independence from North Korea.

Oct. 1. was the 50th anniversary of Korea's armed forces since they were attacked by North Korea in 1928. Shin said the country celebrated with a ceremony and parade at the Seoul Airport.

Dental hygienist overcomes problem

Alfreta Gibson
Health Promotion Center

If asked, Anita Jackson, a dental hygienist at Love Dental Clinic, would say that she takes her health very seriously. The 42-year-old eats right, exercises regularly and keeps annual appointments for check-ups, but she didn't always think this way.

In 1993, Jackson experienced a life-changing situation that would change her life forever.

"I had completed my annual women's examination and the doctor suggested I get a mammogram at age 35," she said. "I had no significant findings so I decided to wait. After all, breast cancer happens to someone else."

"You can imagine my shock when my husband found a lump in my breast," she said.

Jackson thought that if she had gotten a mammography when suggested, the lump would have been discovered at about the size of a pea.

"I could tell by the look on the doctor's face when he examined me that something was there," she said. "Emotionally, I was scared and feared I had something that could kill me. I feared leaving my family."

Jackson, who received treatment from Martin Army Community Hospital, credits her husband, Jim and 8-year-old son Kyle for helping her recover.

"My son and husband were my inspiration. Somehow I knew there was a higher power taking care of me."

It was also that higher power that helped Jackson and her husband cope with their son's diagnosis of Leukemia. Like his mother, Kyle is presently doing well and his cancer is in remission.

"A lot is expected of women. We're in the workplace, mothers, chauffeurs, cooks and caregivers among other things," she said. "I've changed my way of thinking about life, family and relationships. I don't worry about the "stuff" I can't change. I have surrounded myself with supportive, positive thinking people. I've had a rebirth of priorities."

Jackson is a prime example of the power of education and action.

"I understand the importance of being in tune with my body and feel obligated to promote health awareness to others," she said. "I'm couting my blessings and making my health and my family's health a year-round affair."

The Health Promotion Center of Martin Army Community Hospital, Preventive Medicine Service and Community Health Nursing are conducting the annual Women's Health Fair from 9 a.m. to 2 p.m. Saturday at the Main Post Exchange. The fair will include blood pressure screening, breast exams, stress counseling and information on Diabetes, heart disease, menopause and Osteoporosis.

For more information, call the Health Promotion Center at 545-1987 or 545-2885.

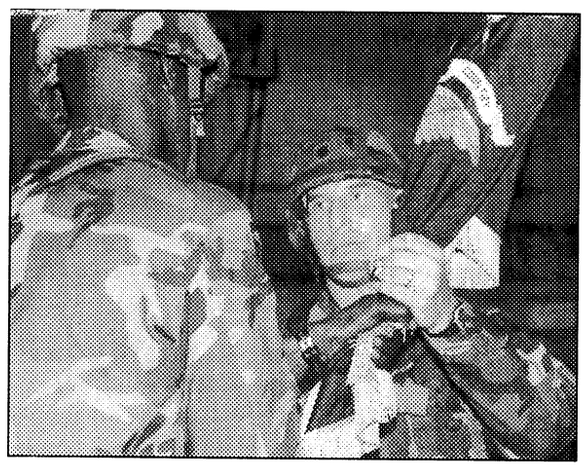
The 2nd Battalion, 58th Infantry Regiment, Infantry Training Brigade, held a change of command ceremony in the Santiago Fitness Center Sept. 30.

The battalion colors were passed to incoming commander Lt. Col. Jay W. Chambers Jr.



According to ITB Commander Col. Abraham Turner, Mayes assumed command of the battalion in October 1996 and produced more than 5,000 quality Infantrymen under his command.

"Lt. Col. Kelly Mayes has always held the leaders of this battalion to the highest standards," Turner said.

Mayes responded to the praise of the command with tearful words.

"Thank you for letting me be a Soldier," Mayes said. "I love the cadre and the Soldiers here. We have not been a team, but a family."

Mayes also had words of encouragement for Chambers as he told him he could not have joined a finer team. Mayes also wished the Soldiers of the battalion luck and thanked them for the memories before turning the floor over to Chambers.

Soldiers from the 10th Mountain Division, Fort Drum, N.Y., test one of the new litter devices during MOUT training.

ACTD experiment

Soldiers test improved equipment

Pfc. Amy L. Nyland
Bayonet staff writer

Soldiers from the 10th Mountain Division, Fort Drum, N.Y., received some realistic training Oct. 1 at Fort Benning's McKenna Military Operations on Urban Terrain (MOUT) site.

From head injuries, gaping wounds and oozing gashes to breaks, fractures and sprains, the Soldiers encountered real-life situations involving some very life-like casualties. The "casualties," played by Soldiers, were the basis of an exercise designed to test new litters and stretchers that one day may be added to the Army inventory.

The exercise required Soldiers to make three test runs through a scenario which involved retrieving casualties from inside buildings within the MOUT site. During each test run, the Soldiers practiced evacuating casualties with a new kind of litter or stretcher.

According to Don Thompson, experiment controller, the experiments allowed the Soldiers to evaluate how well the stretchers turned, maneuvered up and down stairs, around corners and how comfortable it was for the casualty. The exercise also provided an excellent opportunity for training.

Pfc. Beth Brittingham, 598th Maintenance Company, 36th Engineer Group (Construction) played a casualty during the exercise and said the exercise was very realistic which made it much more valuable to the Soldiers.

"Using live people to simulate casualties is much better than training with dummies," Brittingham said. "Dealing with someone who is in pain and injured gives Soldiers a better perspective for real life."

The exercise is the third experiment in the Advanced Concept Technology Demonstration (ACTD) which is being conducted by the Dismounted Battlespace Battle Lab in conjunction with the Marine Corps Warfighting Lab.

According to Maj. Lee Offen, operations officer for the MOUT ACTD, the ACTD focuses on testing technology as well as tactics, techniques and procedures that will be applied to urban operations.

Offen said the purpose of the experiments is to improve the operational capability of Soldiers and Marines in a MOUT environment and speed the process of acquiring new equipment.

"The goal of the experiment is essentially to speed the acquisition of new equipment and get it into the hands of the Soldiers faster than would normally occur under another asquisition cycle," Offen said.

"This experiment is fairly unique because we are not only looking at the equipment, we are also looking at improved ways for Soldiers to use the equipment and actually fight the MOUT battle."

The stretchers are just one example of the types of equipment being tested. Offen said some other equipment that is required to be evaluated include improved protective masks, eye protection, elbow and knee pads and obscurances such as smoke.

Soldiers from the 10th Mtn. Div. were chosen to spend two years testing, evaluating and learning about the new equipment.

Staff Sgt. Robert Clover, Company B, 4th Battalion, 31st Infantry Regiment, 10th Mtn. Div., said it is best for Soldiers to test the equipment because they are the ones who will be using it.

Clover said the Soldier's input will help make a better product.

"We scrutinize every piece of equipment very intently," Clover said. "Our input is going to help produce a better product. Even if it's already good it doesn't mean we don't have a say in how to make it better."

Offen said the ACTD will end with a culminating event in the year 2000 at the Joint Readiness Training Center at Fork Polk, La. Following the culmination demonstration, all the technology that was accepted for participation will enter a two-year residual period.

He said the next ACTD experiment will be held in November. At that time, Soldiers will look at digitized systems that will assist in planning operations and exercises.

1-38 welcomes new commander

Spc. Jamie T. Karl
1st Battalion, 38th Infantry Regiment, ITB

With the arrival of autumn, a change of leadership at 1st Battalion, 38th Infantry Regiment, Infantry Training Brigade (ITB), took place. In less than a week's time, the unit welcomed a new battalion commander as well as a new commander of Company D.

The reins of command were handed to Lt. Col. Kenneth R. Strickland on Sept. 18. Strickland replaced Lt. Col. John R. Lee, who served two years at the battalion's helm and will assume responsibility as Fort Benning's deputy chief of staff.

The change of command ceremony for the battalion was conducted at Weatherby Field, on the outskirts of Sand Hill.

Among the honored guests were Commanding General Maj. Gen. Carl F. Ernst, Assistant Commandant of the U.S. Army Infantry School and Deputy Commanding General Brig. Gen. Russel L. Honore and ITB Commander Col. Abraham J. Turner.

Turner praised Lee for providing the Army with more than 4,000 Infantrymen in his two years of command at 1st Bn., 38th Inf. Regt.

The ITB commander commended Lee and his wife, Judy, for their model involvement within the brigade and the Fort Benning community.

"Units around the world will always be indebted to you," Turner told Lee. "Thank you for your dedication to duty."

Turner then welcomed Strickland to his brigade, adding that Strickland's leadership experience would be an asset to the brigade.

The new commander of 1st Bn. 38th Inf. Regt. said he looked forward to the challenge of training and producing quality Infantrymen for the Army of the next century.

"I am honored to follow a couple like the Lees, who have set such high standards for the Infantry Training Brigade," Strickland said.

A graduate of Officer Candidate School, Columbus State University and General Staff College, Strickland comes to Fort Benning after serving as the regimental executive officer with the 504th Parachute Infantry Regiment, 82nd Airborne Division at Fort Bragg, N.C.

Strickland and his wife Sheri, have a son, Christopher and a daughter, Ashley.

Company D, 1st Bn., 38th Inf. Regt. change of leadership took place Sept. 23, when Capt. Todd V. Mason of Charlotte, N.C. replaced the outgoing Company D commander, Capt. William D. Goss. Goss moves on to serve as an Arkansas National Guard trainer at Fort Chaffee, Ark.

A graduate of the University of North Carolina and of North Carolina Agricultural and Technical State University, Mason comes to Company D, 1st Bn., 38th Inf. Regt. from Fort Stewart, Ga. He most recently served as 3rd Brigade Liaison Officer to 3rd Infantry Division.

Mason and his wife, Tanisha, have a son Cameron.

1st Bn., 38th Inf. Regt., located on Sand Hill, observes its 80th Year of service.

After its proud history in World Wars I and II, and in Korea, 1st Bn., 38th Inf. Regt.. was designated an Infantry training unit in 1987.

1-11 changes leadership during ceremony

Pfc. Amy L. Nyland
Bayonet staff writer

Fort Benning once again witnessed change Oct. 9 as the 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment welcomed a new commander in a change of command ceremony held on on York Field.

Lt. Col. Gary N. Daniel Jr. assumed command from Lt. Col. Robert C. Morris Jr. Daniel took command of the 1st Bn., 11th Inf. Regt. after serving as the executive officer for the 2nd Brigade,. 2nd Armored Division in Germany.

Morris made reference to his time serving as the commander of the 1st Bn., 11th Inf. Regt.

"I thought I'd amaze all of you with some startling analogy of the command experience," Morris said. "But all I could come up with was that commanding the 1st Bn., 11th Inf. Regt., is a little like being struck by lightning — its bright, it's beautiful, it's over very quickly and there are parts of you that will tingle from the experience for the rest of your life, but again there's the occasional second and third degree burns associated with it."

Daniel returns to Fort Benning after serving the post in 1991 as the Small Group Instructor (SGI), Tactics Division, Combined Arms and Tactics Directorate for the Infantry Officer Advanced Course.

"Today is a great day for the Daniel family," Daniel said. "Kim and I and our family are happy to be back home at Fort Benning and we are proud to be reassociated with the historied 11th Regiment. I would just like to thank Gen. Ernst and Col. Barrows for giving me the opportunity to command the great Soldiers assembled on this field today."

Daniels' assignments include serving in Panama as a Rifle Platoon Leader in Company B, 2nd Battalion, 187th Infantry Regiment and Infantry and Brigade Adjutant and Personnel Officer and as the Brigade Adjutant and Personnel Officer, 1st Brigade, 1st Armored Division.

Daniels military career began in 1980 after graduating from Texas Tech University. He attended Officer Candidate School at Fort Benning and was commissioned in the Infantry in 1981.

Daniel also graduated from Infantry Officer Basic and Advanced courses and the Command and General Staff College.

Some of his awards and decorations include the Bronze Star, Meritorious Service Medal with silver oak leaf cluster, Army Commendation Medal, Valor, Army Achievement Medal with four oak leaf clusters, the National Defense Service Medal and the Armed Forces Service Medal.

Daniel and his wife Kimberly have three children, Gary, Tyler and Ashley.

Soldiers from IOBC class 5-98 conduct firing exercises during training Sept. 22 on Bush Hill.

IOBC executes defensive operations

2nd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment

At 6 p.m. Sept. 22, an unidentified motorized rifle battalion attempted to clear a route along Box Springs Road to facilitate the passage of the regimental main effort. Team Alpha, 2nd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment, was assigned to defend the position along Box Springs Road. Their purpose was to prevent the envelopment of the troops from the south.

The purpose of the operation was to introduce the Infantry Officer Basic Course class 5-98 to defensive operations and the Bradley Fighting Vehicle.

The exercise was the culmination of a week of classroom instruction and a tactical exercise without troops (TEWT). While the students formed their own chain of command, they were taught, coached and mentored by their IOBC cadre.

While establishing the defense was physically demanding and allowed for little sleep, most students left Bush Hill with a very positive feeling about the training.

"The opportunity to conduct continuous operations under a student chain of command provided a great deal of training value to all students," said 2nd Lt. Dennis Terry, the initial company commander.

To challenge the students, an opposing force (OPFOR) company was assembled from platoons from IOBC, 29th Infantry Regiment and the 36th Engineer Groups 608th Ordnance Company and 690th Medical Company (Ground Ambulance).

The OPFOR was commanded by Capt. Larry Joose, a recent graduate of the Infantry Officer Advanced Course.

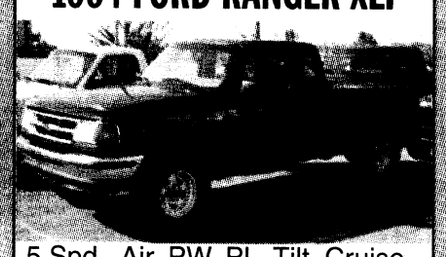
"I was surprised at the tenacity of the defense," Joose said. "These lieutenants receive a high level of training, and I look forward to commanding some of them when I get to the 1st Cav."

Even though not all standards were achieved, students received feedback from their cadre through after action reviews (AAR) to identify areas they could improve.

"The AAR is where the real learning occurs," said Capt. John Elzinga, a senior platoon trainer with Company A. "We stress the importance of the AAR in all our training from defense to the dining-in. I think it's the most important thing we do."

"The defense is my favorite exercise," added Capt. B.D. Landis. "Field exercises provide the students the opportunity to put the plans developed in the classroom into practice in the field. I'm proud to say that the students did an outstanding job throughout the week."

With only four weeks left in the 16-week course, IOBC class 5-98 has only two major field exercises to complete which include a platoon live-fire and company deliberate attack at Ware Range and the Culmination exercise.



"The culmination exercise is the big test," said 2nd Lt. Scott Pyrchalla, a member of the 5th platoon. "We look forward to the challenge of earning his stamp of approval on the road to becoming rifle platoon leaders."

Sayers Library

Funds improve services

Michele E. Hanson
Special to the Bayonet©

Sayers Memorial Library recently received $20,000 in appropriated funds to improve reading materials, expand selections and upgrade available services.

"We are thrilled about the funds that allow us opportunity to provide a service the way we're trained to do," said John Cook, library manager at Fort Benning. "We want the library to be the best and the funds have helped us improve the facility for the people of Fort Benning."

The funds were deposited in a Fedlink account administered by the Library of Congress. The Fedlink account ensures federal libraries the best prices on books, videos, magazines, among other resources.

According to Cook, $7,700 was allocated for magazines, tripling the amount from previous years. The expanded magazine section will offer a variety of topics to include general news, health and fitness, business and many other selections.

"We renewed the library's compact disk (CD) subscriptions which allow patrons working on a library computer access to the 28- CD system called the Local Area Network," Cook said. "Patrons can download information to a disk from magazines and newspaper articles on many subjects, dating as far back as 1984."

Cook added that $6,500 went to the Baker and Taylor account to purchase books, video cassettes and CD's, with over $1,000 in children's books arriving soon. There is a fully funded rental book collection, which allows the library to pay half price for the cost of a book, use the book and then return it to the company.

"If we choose the books carefully, they will be worn out from use and we will be able to return the books for new ones," Cook added. "The library keeps the New York Times best seller list available, with multiple copies of the most popular books."

Sayers Library has recently obtained two computers with Windows 95 and will upgrade the communications with a new telecommunications board. The board will allow each computer to operate independently while on-line. The current catalog system will be upgraded with a customer friendly system by January 1999.

The new books, rental books, magazines and newspapers are starting to arrive and will be on the shelves soon.

"It is always exciting to receive new books, especially children's books," said Barbara Jorden, cataloger at the library. "The new books add a lot to the library every time we get them."

Sayer Library is located in Building 93 on Main Post. The library is open Monday through Thursday, noon to 7:50 p.m. and Saturday, Sunday and holidays 11:00 a.m. to 7:50 p.m. For more information, call 545-4911 or 545-7141.

More than 600 Girl Scouts from Phenix City, Columbus and Fort Benning came together Oct. 3 to participate in the annual Girl Sports Day held at Lakebottom Park in Columbus.

During the event, each girl was able to try her hand at golf, soccer, basketball, volleyball, cheerleading, tennis and aerobics.

Although a sporting event, Girl Sports Day was not designed to foster a competitive nature. In fact, no troops competed against each other for any titles or awards during the event.

"Girl Sports Day is held to get the girls together to be a team and to teach them about team building," said Fort Benning troopleader, Barbara Singleton.

Singleton also said this event helped girls in her troop get acquainted with fellow Girl Scouts from Phenix City and Columbus.

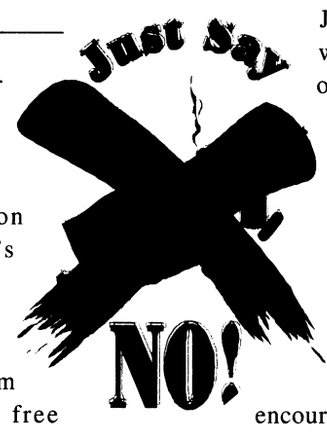
"My troop had a chance to link up with troops from downtown," Singleton said. "Now they are more familiar, we are more like a team."

According to Jean Harper of the Concharty Council of Girls Scouts, this event was held to not only expose girls to various sports.

"We also use this day to help kick off membership," Harper said.

To sign up for Girl Scouts or to volunteer some time, call Barbara Singleton at 689-7627.

Post gears up for Red Ribbon Week



Alcohol and Drug Control Office

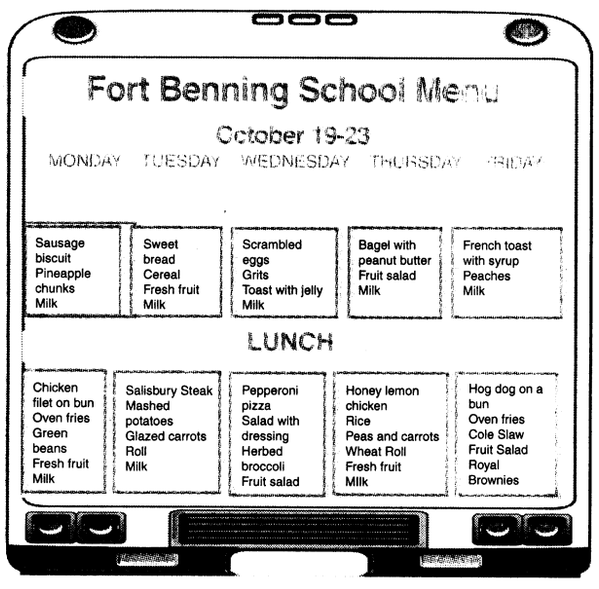
Fort Benning is gearing up for National Red Ribbon Week scheduled for Oct. 23-30.

According to Sgt. 1st Class Darryel Johnson, education coordinator for Fort Benning's Alcohol and Drug Control Office, Red Ribbon Week provides community members with an opportunity to reaffirm their commitment to a drug free military and society.

"Education is a vital part of the Red Ribbon celebration," he said. "The week's activities provide a wonderful opportunity for teaching drug prevention in a positive way."

National Red Ribbon Week allows educators, parents, community groups, students and others to focus on the work being done to stop the spread of drugs in schools, workplaces and communities, Johnson said.

Johnson added that the red ribbons worn during this week are a symbol of unity against the illegal use of drugs.



The Red Ribbon Campaign was established in 1988 after an agent with the Drug Enforcement Administration was murdered.

While the Red Ribbon Campaign's main activities are conducted during one week, Johnson said it is important to encourage drug-free lifestyles 365 days a year.

This year, the Columbus and Phenix City communities will conduct its annual Red Ribbon Celebration at 7:30 a.m. Oct. 26 at the Columbus Convention and Trade Center.

The Fort Benning community can show its involvement by displaying red ribbons on front doors, mailboxes, trees and cars.

For more information on Red Ribbon Week activities, call 545-4993 or 545-1138.

School director heads for arctic

Erin A. Nash
Special to the Bayonet©

Almost everyone has a dream — a goal to reach in life. It may range from learning to play the piano, to getting a college degree, or it may be much larger than that, as is the case of Jerry Christy, Fort Benning Schools' director of technology.

Christy will join about 100 others Nov. 20 through Dec. 3 on the ship M.S. Explorer, which will sail from Miami, on a trip to Antarctica in what is termed "adventure learning."

"Adventure learning is an inspiring event in real time, which involves the Internet. The concept was envisioned and created by Will Steger, an explorer who successfully crossed Antarctica," Christy said. "In that experience, they sent reports out by telephone.

"A lot of curriculum skills were tied in and to me, that's what makes this whole idea of adventure learning attractive. It wasn't just something that was neat, but that it was integrated into the curriculum. As a concept, we knew that it worked."

Christy first became intrigued with Antarctica as an elementary school student through accounts of an expedition in the early 20th century. Since those days, Christy has retained the desire to visit Antarctica.

"I had been around people who had gone and that revived my interest," Christy said.

Christy first learned about this trip through the Land's End catalog in March 1998. A number of factors made Christy feel that this was the right trip, including that it will be guided by Steger and that it will be summer in Antarctica, which, according to Christy, "temperatures could be anywhere from -20 to 20 degrees fahrenheit."

Christy will be joined by eighth-grade teacher Justin Mutrux from Raymondsville, Mo. Christy put out a message for any other teacher or administrator interested in the adventure.

Both Christy and Mutrux have daily journals on the World School-Antarctica website at www.etc.colstate.edu/jchristy.

The website will continue operation until March 1999. The website has features, chat rooms and a link for the trip calendar.

"We can find out what we were expecting and (when we return) what we actually did," Christy said. "It's an opportunity to exchange ideas and questions."

Some of the project highlights will be an on-line interaction with Steger; Junior's Journal, a journal written by a composite student created by the students of two schools in Georgia; a one-day event, a pre-determined day during the trip in which participants will be asked to join in on a one-day event which is designed to allow everyone to contribute to the body of knowledge gained from the project and an affiliation with OnlineClass, Blue Ice: Focus on Antarctica, in which Christy and Mutrux will send reports to members of the OnlineClass.

To join Christy and Mutrux for this on-line learning adventure, students can e-mail them at the above address.

When the project gets underway, Christy and Mutrux will post daily reports from Antarctica which will include challenges for students. They will also respond to student questions and ask some of their own.

As part of the adventure learning, the intended areas of focus are latitude and longitude, water quality for fresh and sea water, wildlife encounters, bird study and weather data.

Steroids damage vital organs

Dr. Virginia Yates
Martin Army Community Hospital

Many military people use supplements in the hopes of building muscle and enhancing physical performance. Instances of athletes using performance enhancing substances have been recorded since 668 B.C. when Charmis, winner of the 200-meter Olympic event, prepared by eating a special diet of dried figs. A 1997 poll of U.S. Olympic athletes found that 50 percent would use a banned substance even if they knew it would kill them so long as it helped them win for five years and they didn't get caught.

The most famous of these substances are the anabolic-androgenic steroids (AAS). These are related to the male hormone testosterone. They are banned in competition and some are illegal. They are generally recognized as providing an unfair advantage in increasing weight and strength. However, they can cause irreversible damage to the liver, the major organ in the body for getting rid of poisons. Because many of these are injected drugs, they are also associated with an increased risk of HIV and hepatitis infection.

Many people have turned to over-the-counter nutritional supplements hoping to obtain similar results with less risk. These supplements include DHEA, creatine, amino acid compounds, protein powders and any variety of products containing the words "andro," "growth factor" and "muscle."

These substances are taken to increase the body's levels of growth hormone or testosterone or increase the amount of protein in the muscle directly. Increasing muscle is an important health issue for the elderly and for those with muscle-wasting illnesses such as AIDS. Because of this, many studies have been done recently regarding these supplements.

A study in the Journal of Clinical Endocrinology found that growth hormone supplements increased muscle mass a statistically insignificant two percent. The Journal of Gerontology cited a study where growth hormone supplements increased muscle mass four percent to a 60 percent increase with exercise. Several studies have shown that although muscle size may increase with some of these supplements, only exercise consistently results in an increase in strength.

While prescription drugs undergo strict inspections for drug purity, many over-the-counter nutrition supplements do not. Because of this, contaminants in these supplements may cause undesirable effects. The long-term effects of even the most pure supplements are still unknown and should be viewed with caution.

TRICARE program's enrollment grows

Douglas J. Gillert
American Forces Press Service

Officials expected about 400,000 military retirees and family members to sign up over five years for the new TRICARE Retiree Dental Program. Their estimate quickly climbed after 100,000 enrolled in February, the plan's first month of operation.

"More than 325,000 are now enrolled in the plan and the number is growing every day," said Dr. Tom McDavid, a marketing executive at Delta Dental of California, which manages the program. He said the enrollment would probably be even higher, except some retirees not eligible for TRICARE medical benefits don't realize they can enroll in the dental plan.

The plan is open to anyone eligible for retired military pay.

"Even military retirees over 65 are eligible to enroll, as are members of the Retired Reserve under age 60 who are entitled to retired pay," he said.

Other eligible persons include:

•Children of enrolled retirees who are either under 21, under 23 and a full-time student or became disabled before age 21 (23 if a full-time student); and •Unremarried surviving spouses or eligible children of deceased members who died on retired status or while on active duty for a period of more than 30 days and whose family members aren't eligible for dental benefits under the family member dental plan.

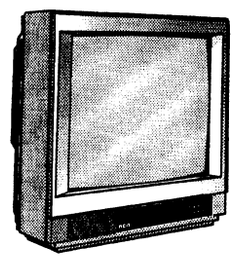
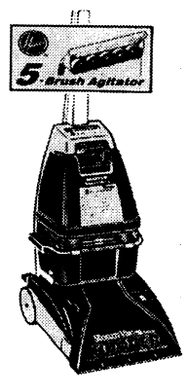
Low premiums and a broad menu of services make the program popular, McDavid said. The plan covers all or part of the cost of diagnostic, preventive, restorative, endodontic and periodontic services; oral surgery, emergency care, drugs and postsurgical care.

Premiums are regionally determined and range from $9.41-15.08 per month for single enrollees; $18.32-29.25 per month for two people and $30.53-48.02 for families. Exact premiums are available by calling (888) 838-8737 toll-free or by entering a zip code on Delta's dedicated retiree dental plan website at www.ddpdelta.org.





The plan levies an annual $50 deductible per person covered. Delta then pays up to $1,000 of allowable charges per enrollee per year. Most diagnostic and preventive procedures aren't subject to the annual deductible and maximum, McDavid said. Enrollees can seek dental care from any dentists licensed in the state where they practice. DeltaSelect USA also maintains a network of dentists. Using a network dentist may lower out-of-pocket costs, McDavid said. In addition, network dentists file patient claims and are paid directly by Delta.

EQUAL HOUSING OPPORTUNITY

Post sets trick or treating hours, guidelines

Directorate of Public Safety

Fort Benning will observe Halloween from 6 to 8 p.m. Oct. 31 (the only day trick or treating is permitted).

Children under 13 years old are allowed to go trick or treating. An older person (14 years or older) must accompany pre-school children.

Limit trick or treating only to the housing area in which the participants reside and approach only residences with lighted entryways.

Children should wear light-colored, fire-resistant costumes short enough to prevent tripping. Costumes can be marked with reflective tape or spray paint so they can pick up auto headlights and other lights.

Observe all basic safety precautions. Use sidewalks and crosswalks; do not cut through yards. Look in all directions before walking across the street.

Wear masks or head coverings that do not restrict vision. Use colorful facial makeup as much as possible.

Ensure pet owners take measures to prevent pets from being a nuisance or a menace to children. Caution children about the wrongs of vandalism and causing damage to the property of others.

Ensure children carry flashlights after dark. If a child carries a pumpkin, it should be lit with a battery device, not a candle.

Never allow children to eat anything until it is inspected. Give children a full meal before he or she goes trick or treating.

Have a safe and happy Halloween.

AFAP develops prevention programs

Army Family Advocacy Program

The Army Family Advocacy Program (AFAP) is a specialized program designed to prevent child and spouse maltreatment.

According to Rebecca Welch, program manager, the main focus of AFAP is to develop prevention programs that contribute to a healthy life for the Soldiers and their families. In order to strengthen the families and prevent the recurrence of abuse, voluntary self-referral through education and awareness programs is encouraged, Welch stated.

The following are programs that are designed to help prevent child and spouse abuse.

•Violence intervention — The AFAP manager may provide crisis intervention to Soldiers and family members in emergency situations. Cases involving family violence intervention, requiring longterm treatment and follow-up, are referred to Social Work Services.

•Parent education — Support programs assist parents to "get off to a good start," to interact more effectively with their children and to create and maintain a safe home environment. The program also teaches parents basic skills in physical care, supervision and psychological nurturing appropriate to a child's age and stage of development. Classes are offered through the Chaplains' Family Life Center. The phone number is 545-1760. Families who need childcare while enrolled in day-time classes can receive free childcare through Family Advocacy.

•Troop education — Classes are mandatory and are provided on an annual basis for all military personnel on the dynamics of spouse and child abuse, availability of treatment services and the Army's policies regarding family violence. Units can schedule briefings by calling the AFAP manager at 545-6969.

•First steps program — The First Steps Program provides emotional support, parenting education, referrals to community resources and follow-up contact to parents with newborns, which helps to develop healthy family relationships to reduce the risk of child abuse and neglect. The AFAP funds the First Steps Program, located at Martin Army Community Hospital.

•Respite childcare — Respite care is temporary childcare for the purpose of relieving parental stress and providing a nurturing and developmentally appropriate environment. Respite Care can be provided for families when both Soldier and spouse attend parenting classes or counseling. Respite Care will not be used in place of foster care of abandoned children. This program is designed to provide childcare relief for families who are stressed because of a family problem and who are participating in treatment programs.

•Safety education for children — The AFAP has developed safety education which offers sensible guidance on personal safety and child sexual abuse prevention for children, their parents and youth and childcare staff. This program emphasizes the important supervisory and protective roles of adults and community members who interact with children.

•Command education program — Commanders are briefed at all levels on the nature of spouse and child abuse and the means to prevent domestic violence. Information is also provided to the commanders on AFAP policies, procedures, available resources, command responsibilities in the areas of identification, reporting, coordination, rehabilitation and administrative or judicial options. Installation commanders receive a briefing within 45 days of assuming command.

•Spouse abuse shelters — The AFAP contracts with the Russell County Shelter and the Columbus Alliance for Battered Women to provide a 24-hour residential facility or temporary accommodations to ensure there is a safe, temporary place to stay, with emotional and material support to victims of spouse abuse and their children. Individuals can contact the shelters directly. The number for the Phenix City shelter is (334) 297-4401 and for the Columbus shelter is 324-3850.

For more information on these services, call Rebecca Welch or Theresa Sanchez at Family Advocacy at 545-3344.

Good things happening in family housing

The renovation contract for 120 "White Elephant" style family units was awarded in September. This contract has been under design for several years and will enhance these units for our families. The "White Elephants" are three-story, four-plex style housing located on Main Post between Lumpkin and 1st Division Roads. It has been some time since any major interior renovations were done to these majestic quarters that were once heralded as models of architecture and efficiency in their heyday.

The contractor starts work on or about Nov. 1, with renovations continuing for the next 24 months until Oct. 31, 2000. The renovations will be accomplished in three phases: Phase I (Nov.-June 1999), Phase II (July 1999-February 2000) and Phase III (March 2000-October 2000).

The scope of the work encompasses interior renovations to include: remodel kitchen, addition of a second bathroom, laundry room in quarters, rewire of interior electric, replace heating an air-conditioning and new appliances (dishwashers included).

Exterior renovations include tot lots, walking paths, sidewalks and patios. While the renovations will extend the waiting time for Company Grade quarters, the quality of life improvements for customers are enthusiastically anticipated.

Coaches motivate, lead

Chaplain (Lt. Col.) Vincent DePaul Burns
USAIC Chaplains Office

The purpose of a coach is to be a motivator as well as a leader. He or she tries to pull out your best. The goal is usually some kind of a championship, to be the best individual in the competition, or the best team in the league or conference.

reflections

Over the runway that leads from the locker room to the stadium at the University of Notre Dame, there is a sign, "First be the best, then you will be first."

With that introduction read now the words of Christ in the ninth chapter of St. Mark, "Whoever wishes to rank first must remain the last one of all and the servant of all."

Is that a contradiction to what a coach would tell you? I don't think so. We live in a world of competition — and that is just magnified by the sports world. Winning and success are presented to us as the only objective of life. These words of Christ tell us about his priorities. They tell us how Christ thinks and operates and how he wants us to think and operate. Christ rates us not by how many championships we've won, or how many times we have come in first place or beaten our competitors.

Christ rates us only by performance, and by how hard we have tried and by whether or not we have done our best. Then he rates us by how we have tried to take care of others. "He must remain the last one of all and the servant of all."

Life isn't about being the best; life is about doing your best. Life isn't about being number one; life is about being all that God created you to be. Life isn't about beating out the competition; life is about being better every time you take the field, or step up to the plate, or take an Army Physical Fitness Test, or every time you do your job, whatever that job happens to be. Life isn't about competing with the rest of the world; life is about competing with yourself — your selfishness, your laziness, your tendency to sin or to do the wrong thing or to feel sorry for yourself.

The Christian dimension that comes from the message of the Gospel is that as participants in this game of life — the challenge is not necessarily to win; the challenge is to put forth your best effort, time after time, day after day, at every moment, no matter what the circumstances, no matter what the personal cost.

And the call is not to be recognized as first or number one or the winner, but the call is to serve; to serve others, to serve your family, your nation, those who need help, your buddy, your fellow Soldier, the financially poor, the people on the street, the refugees.

In the kingdom of Christ, you are the most important when you use every talent and skill and gift that God has given you to enrich the life of someone else. However, you do this for you and God to work out. Be assured that according to the standards of Christ and the principles of the Gospel, greatness is associated only with service. And the only way to fail is not to be all that God created you to be.

Ministries help marriages grow

Chaplain (Maj.) Frederick M. Rupel
Chief, Chaplain Family Life Ministries

We have all heard that there are only two certain facts in life — taxes and death. Let me add two more — growth and change. This is especially true in marriages. I often hear couples complain, "We just aren't the same as when we were first married." After nearly 25 years of marriage, let me say "amen" to that!

Growth and change are a part of marriage. Learning how to help a marriage grow and change in the right way is the real key to keeping a marriage vibrant and long-lasting. Years ago I attended a conference whose principal speaker was the noted theologian Dr. Eldon Trueblood. Someone in the audience asked Trueblood, who was 83 years old at the time, when could one expect the romance to go out of a marriage. I'll never forget Trueblood's reply, "Sometime after the age of 83!"

Do not be surprised by your growth and change either as an individual or as a couple. Growth and change are as inevitable as, forgive me, death and taxes. PCS moves, promotions, children and a host of other events are all part of the growth and change process. They need not be stumbling blocks but opportunities on which to build a stronger marital relationship.

To make a grand success of your marriage continue to grow and change in your mature love, patience, kindness, understanding and open-mindedness for each other.

Need help in your marriage? The Fort Benning Chaplain Family Life Ministries Center can help.

For more information, call the Center at 545-1760.

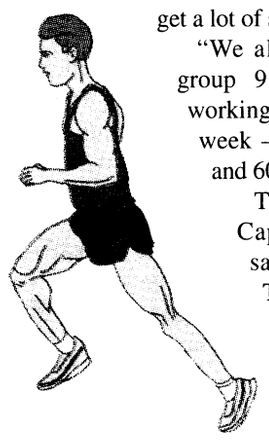
Soldiers win Ten-Miler, team competition

Gerry J. Gilmore
Army News Service



An Army lieutenant took first place in the Army Ten-Miler for the second consecutive year, and Army teams won both the men's and women's military team comptetitions in Washington D.C. Sunday.

A member of the Army's World Class Athlete Program, 2nd Lt. Dan Browne, 23, a Quartermaster Corps officer from Fort Carson, Colo., was again the first runner to cross the finish line with a 48:52 time. Alisa Harvey, 33, of Manassas, Va., was the first woman to cross the finish line with a time of 58:56.

The U.S. Army Europe men's team and Fort Bragg, S.C., women's teams both took first place in their respective military team categories. The USAREUR team also won the Commander's Cup award.

More than 14,000 runners, a record that includes 9,723 men and 4,383 women, signed up for this year's race, with 11,000 runners crossing the finish line, according to race officials. More than 600 teams registered for the race.

"I was confident going into the race ... my training had been going well, so I was pretty much ready to take care of business," said Browne, a Class of '97 West Point-graduate. "I guess it (running) is my gift from God, so I'm just using it to the best of my ability.

Browne has blazed a path in the Ten-Miler — his time of 47:42 last year set a course record. The young officer said he intends to continue down the road of an Army career.

"I joined the Army because I've always believed in serving my country, and it is the right path for me," Browne said.

The Fort Bragg Women's Team captain, 1st Lt. Carol Lowe, 37, noted that her eight-member team also finished first at last year's Ten-Miler.

Experience, work and team spirit have paid off, she said.

"We have a good nucleus of runners who've been at Bragg the last couple of years," said Lowe, who is assigned to the 659th Maintenance Company. "We're able to train during our PT time and we get a lot of support from our units.

"We also have a very dedicated group 9 (of runners). They're hard-working — we practice six-days-a-week — and average between 50- and 60-miles-a-week," she said.

The USAREUR Men's Team Captain, Capt. Liam Collins, said this was his sixth Army Ten-Miler. The 27-year-old Special Forces officer said his eight member men's team "just got lucky," although he noted "we've been working hard."

The Fort Bragg men's team proved to be tough competition said Collins, who noted he ran with Bragg last year.

"We didn't really know if we'd won until the 'chute,'" Collins said. "We had to first see how Fort Bragg's runners finished."

Competing in the Ten-Miler is important for a number of reasons, Lowe said.

"It represents your unit, your post and the Army," she said. "It shows that we are well-rounded Soldiers. Not only can we do our Soldier skills, but we can excel in other areas."

More than 70 Soldiers from Fort Benning traveled to Washington D.C. to compete in the race including teams from the Infantry Training Brigade and 75th Ranger Regiment. Fort Benning also sent three teams, which competed in the Men's Open, Women's Open and Men's Masters Divisions, to represent the post.

Fort Benning's Men's Masters team took fourth place for their division.

Out of the more than 14,000 runners, John Detro of the 3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division (Mechanized) was the 50th runner to finish the race overall and took fifth in his division. Curtis Southern, who also competed in the Men's Open team, finished 110th overall and 13th in his age division.

For more on the race results check out the Army Ten-Miler Web site at www.armytenmiler.com.

Officers' Club Fitness Center offers training programs

Ed Thomas
U.S. Army Physical Fitness School

The fast approaching Thanksgiving and Christmas holiday seasons will soon give way to resolutions for the new year. For many it will be a time to renew their commitment to fitness and a healthy lifestyle. One of the key elements of a successful physical training program is an adequate facility and the Fort Benning Officers' Club Family Fitness Center offers free weights, rowing machines, gravitrons, treadmills and life cycles.

"We also have aerobics and marital arts classes, tanning beds, male and female saunas and a whirlpool," said manager Timothy Cole. Our new swimming pool will be built by spring. Our monthly rate of $12 is a real bargain, and we have an outstanding personal trainer available for those wanting to progress faster and farther."

"A firm commitment is the first step," said personal trainer Alexandra Hudson. "But success depends on a smart program and rational training."

Hudson trains both men and women. "We begin with a thorough assessment," she said. "Our clients have specific needs that depend upon their medical history, current level of activity, diet, goals and state of fitness. Once we establish a client's past and present condition, we normally tailor a complete program including cardiovascular, flexibility, nutrition and muscular strength and endurance to his or her specific needs. If a client wants to focus only on one or more fitness parameters, that can also be arranged."

Hudson is herself a success story. After her second child in 1994, she ballooned to over 185 pounds. Sedentary and unhappy, she began to immerse herself in the theory and application of physical training. By 1995, her efforts paid tremendous dividends. She was highly trim, fit, confident and determined to learn even more about physical training and help others transform themselves. Today she is an experienced personal trainer pursuing a degree in fitness leadership through Troy State University-Fort Benning.

Family member Maureen Battle trained for several years with minimal success before joining the O'Club Family Fitness Center. After only four weeks with a personal trainer, she said her overall fitness level improved well beyond her expectations.

"The facility is great, but a personal trainer made all the difference," she said. "I'm in the best shape of my life and the technical quality of my training is much higher than it has ever been. I am more efficient, the training feels better and the gains seem to come without effort."

"Quality is as important as quantity," Hudson said. "Variety is also critical. Our clients learn the common fitness skills, but we also introduce them to other innovations like flex balls, circular weight lifting and partner stretching."

"If improved health and fitness is your goal, we would like to help you get there," Cole said. "We have a great facility, top-rate equipment and fitness expertise at a very reasonable price and convenient location."

Soldiers step up to bat for Braves game

Spc. Jamie T. Karl
1st Bn., 38th Inf. Regt., ITB

Spc. Jamie T. Karl

Drill sergeants Staff Sgt. Jimmy Russell and Staff Sgt. Shawn Bloomer keep an eye on their soldiers between pitches at Turner Stadium in Atlanta.

On the day the Atlanta Braves set a franchise record for most victories in a regular season and spoiled the New York Mets' playoff hopes, the Soldiers of the 1st Battalion, 38th Infantry Regiment, Infantry Training Brigade, were there to see all the action for themselves.

More than 1,000 Initial Entry Trainees and 40 cadre from the battalion attended the Braves' last regular season game Sept. 25 at Turner Field in Atlanta. The Braves buried the Mets 7-2, allowing Atlanta to finish with a whopping 18-game lead in the National League East.

Sending the soon-to-be Infantrymen to Turner Field was the idea of ITB Commander Col. Abraham J. Turner and was made possible by the brigade's staff.

According to Maj. Michael J. Landers, the battalion's executive officer, the trip provided a morale booster to the trainees.

"The Soldiers of 1st Bn., 38th Inf. Regt., represented the Army well along with providing service, imagewise, for their unit and themselves."

If the game was intended to provide a boost of morale for the battalion's trainees, the Soldiers agreed the mission was 100 percent successful and then some.

"Besides the fact that I'm a Braves fan, I think the idea of allowing us a break ... was very generous and an exceptional idea," said Pvt. Gilbert Marquez of El Paso, Texas. "Honestly, this was the first time I'd ever been able to experience a major league contest in person and I'm thankful for the opportunity."

Many of the trainees were surprised when they received word of the Atlanta trip.

"I thought the military was going to be all work with no time for recreation," said Pvt. Jeramiah Pearson of Chicago. "This experience has taught me early in my Army career that if you work hard and do what is expected, you'll be rewarded. It's true that the Army, even in basic training, has its benefits."

With the win, the 1998 Braves became only the eighth National League team of this century to win more than 105 regular season games. The trainees also witnessed Braves' pitcher Greg Maddux hurl his 18th victory of the year and finish with the National League's lowest earned run average of 2.22.

The trip to Turner Field came not only as a nice break from Sand Hill for the Soldiers, but also allowed many Braves fans their first encounter with Army personnel — especially Infantry Soldiers. Throughout the game, fans could be seen mingling with the Soldiers who donned Class B uniforms.

According to the Soldiers, most civilians simply wanted to know how they were enjoying basic training, along with other details of Infantry life.

"When the public at large sees our Soldiers enjoying themselves and still maintaining self-discipline, it leaves a lasting impression on people," Landers said. "More than 40,000 civilians saw our Soldiers having a good time. That surely helps break some of the stale, negative stereotypes of entering the military.

"In short, events like this are great public relations," Landers continued.

After the game, the Soldiers said they were taking away more than just great memories of the action on the diamond. The time around civilians taught the trainees a little about themselves and the transformation they were undergoing as well.

"Having been away from other civilians for so long, our time at the game made us realize how much we've matured in such a short time," said Pvt. Eric Pehling of Hibbing, Minn. "The Army does indeed instill discipline upon a person, especially an Infantryman."

Russian bishops visit

Nicole Longstreath

Special to the Bayonet©

Members of the Russian Orthodox Church exchanged handshakes and hugs with American chaplains during a visit to Sand Hill Oct. 8, proving the Cold War is long over.

The Russian bishops, ministers and one major general were at Fort Benning to observe the U.S. chaplain system.

"They came to the U.S. to see how we run the chaplain system so they can use our chaplaincy as a model for the Russian Army," said Chaplain (Capt.) Jim McNeely, chaplain for the 2nd Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment.

According to McNeely, members of the American chaplain system had much experience and knowledge to pass on to the Russian bishops.

Although this sharing of knowledge would have been unheard of during the Cold War, McNeely said it was imperative for the Russian bishops to understand the U.S. chaplains' influence on the Soldiers.

"I think they will discover the U.S. chaplaincy is a 'hands-on' chaplaincy," McNeely said. "When the Soldiers go someplace, we go

For the Soldiers of Kelley Hill summer was a non-stop roller coaster of training. From Hammer Focus to gunnery training then straight to Marne Focus, the field became a familiar place for the Soldiers.

But even after spending the bulk of their summer in the field, that "ride" still isn't over.

Approximately 2,500 Soldiers from the 3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division (Mechanized), including elements from the 36th Engineer Group (Construction) will leave today and Saturday to spend four weeks taking part in the "grandfather" of training exercises at the National Training Center (NTC) in Fort Irwin, Calif.

Almost all of the exercises conducted over the summer were aimed at preparing the Soldiers for the annual NTC rotation, said Capt. Larry Miles, 3rd Brigade transportation officer.

Miles said immediately after Marne Focus ended in September, the brigade began preparing for the departure to Fort Irwin. Soldiers spent Oct. 13-15 rail-loading the more than 450 vehicles for transportation to NTC.

"As soon as Marne Focus was over, we jumped into this full swing," Miles said. "I'd say we worked at this about 100 percent of the time for the last three weeks and have it pretty much nailed down."

According to Maj. Tom Desrosier, operations officer, 1st Battalion, 15th Infantry Regiment, 3rd Bde., 3rd Inf. Div. (Mech.), NTC consists of rigorous training exercises that will help prime the brigade to assume its role as the Division Ready Brigade in the upcoming year.

"This is one of the most important exercises we will do," Desrosier said. "The ultimate purpose is to prepare us for any contingency operations we may need to execute in the future."

Desrosier said NTC is a great training experience for Soldiers because they will encounter conditions unlike those at Fort Benning.

"It is going to be hot in the day and cold at night. The weather is going to be adverse," Desrosier said. "Soldiers are going to go without sleep; the environment is harsh and the operational force is hard. But when the Soldiers get through this they are going to have the experience they need to come back alive if they end up going to war."

Sgt. Chris Harris, operations sergeant from Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 1st Battalion, 15th Infantry Regiment, said he's excited to go to NTC because he thinks he will receive a lot of valuable training.

"The training we are going to get is real-world training," Harris said. "NTC is high speed and it is just about the best training we will ever receive to get ourselves ready for combat."

Desrosier said he is confident the Soldiers will do very well especially if everyone keeps a good outlook.

"I'm sure we are going to do well," Desrosier said. "We are going to win some battles and lose some battles. As long as we keep a good sense of humor through the whole thing we will do very well. It's attitude, that's all it is."

He said the final goal isn't just getting through NTC, but for the Soldiers to retain the skills they come away with.

"I think we did an exceptional job of getting ready to go and of keeping our focus on not only NTC but on improvement," Desrosier said. "NTC is not an end state for us because the end state for us means coming back and being able to operate at a higher proficiency level and effectively execute our war-time mission."

Desrosier said the Soldiers are ready to go to NTC and do what they've been training for, but they're especially ready for a little break after training all summer.

"We are anxious to get out there and give it our best so we can come back and rest then move onto other business," Desrosier said. "After we get some rest and recharge our batteries, we will be ready to go."

Soldiers give gift of life with blood

Pvt. 2 Nicole M. Massie

Bayonet staff writer

The local chapter of the American Red Cross had more blood donated this year than in the previous year thanks to one Fort Benning unit.

The 29th Infantry Regiment coordinates efforts with the American Red Cross once a quarter, when Soldiers from the regiment gather at Infantry Hall in support of giving the "gift of life."

"We made a commitment to give blood at least once a quarter because it seemed to be the right thing to do," said Battalion Commander Lt. Col. Jerry Reyes, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment.

The regiment, which currently holds the record on Fort Benning for the most blood donated by a single unit, gave more than 275 pints of blood during the Oct. 1 blood drive.

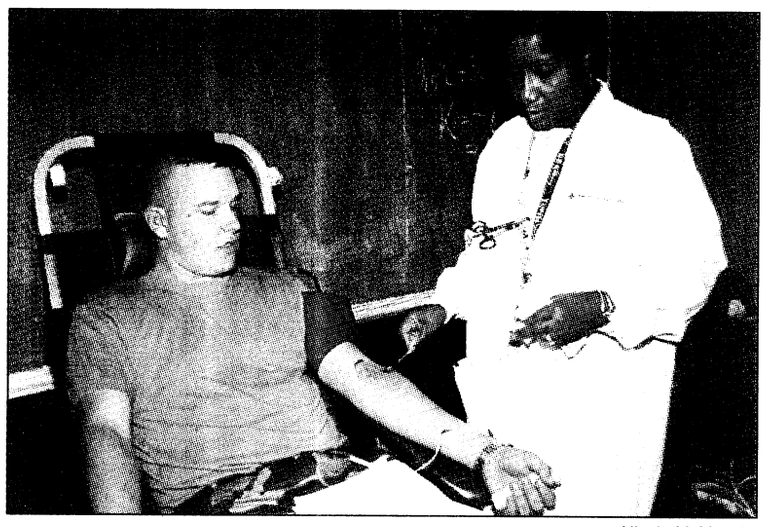
"We had Soldiers donate from 7:30 a.m. until around 5 p.m.," Reyes said.

The American Red Cross planned the blood drive in hopes of reaching 120 total pints, and were overwhelmed by the numbers produced by the unit, said Maj. Pat Nary, regimental operations officer.

"The amount of blood donated this year because of the efforts of the 29th Inf. Regt. increased by leaps and bounds," said Alphonsa Oliver, manager of Fort Benning's American Red Cross station.

The regiment also encouraged Soldiers to bring family members who were willing to donate in hopes of the best turnout possible.

According to Oliver, donating blood is a fairly simple procedure. Soldiers who would like to donate must fill out a routine pre-screen application.



"According to the information received, Soldiers may be disqualified if there is any question about the safety of the blood being donated," Oliver said. "After the pre-screening is complete, it is all just a stick in the arm."

Once donors qualify to donate, they may continue to donate every 56 days. Each donation session lasts about 45 minutes.

At the present time, the American Red Cross is in need of both A and O positive blood.

Because people are willing to take time to give blood, lives of people were saved, such as a few local active duty Soldiers involved in automobile accidents, Oliver said.

"Local hospitals, such as Martin Army Community Hospital, contact the American Red Cross if they are in need of rare blood types also," Oliver said.

Nicole M. Massie

A nurse with the American Red Cross cleans a Soldier's arm before drawing blood during a recent drive.

The American Red Cross saved billions of lives since the civil war because of contributions received, according to the American Red Cross National Center. But, people do not need to wait for blood drives to be held in Infantry Hall to donate. Those who want to give, can donate through the American Red Cross's Columbus Chapter. The office is open for donations three to four times during the week. For more information, call 323-5614.

"For those who never donated before, they should not be afraid," Oliver said. "They should think of the life they may save, whether it may be a stranger or a family member. You never know when you or a loved one may be in need of a blood donation."

The American Red Cross, in coordination with the 29th Inf. Regt. plans to host the next blood drive Feb. 11, 1999 at Infantry Hall.

Both northbound lanes of Benning Blvd. leaving Fort Benning will be closed Saturday from 7 a.m. to noon. All traffic leaving the installation will use South Lumpkin Road or I-185. The closure is necessary to resurface lanes. For more information, call 545-4749

Daylight savings causes stress, disorientation

Pfc. Amy L. Nyland
Bayonet staff writer

commentary

On Sunday morning we will reclaim what is rightfully ours — that extra hour in our day that was taken away from us in the spring when daylight savings began.

Yes, it is once again that time of the year where we play hokey-pokey with our clocks and turn ourselves around. Well, at least me anyway.

I must say that I think the whole daylight savings thing is just a big pain in the rear and I don't know if I will ever get it right.

I'm willing to put money on the fact that despite constant reminders from people and blaring signs that are sure to be posted around the barracks, I will forget

(just like every time) that on Sunday I need to turn my clocks back. I will spend yet another day in utter confusion wandering about like a lost soul, wondering why nothing feels "right." It won't dawn on me that I forgot to set my clocks back until I turn on the television set Sunday night to find my usual list of quality programming in disarray.

It is frustrating, to say the least.

This time, however, I've made up my mind to do something to end my incredible track record of idiocy and actually remember to set my clocks. I think I have a fool-proof plan to accomplish my mission.

My idea is completely dependent upon how many little yellow post-it notes and bags of pixie sticks I can get my hands on. You see, I'm positive that if I plaster thousands of post-it notes all over my room and body and keep myself awake all weekend, I should have no problem remembering to set my clocks.

The only way my plan could possibly fail is if I bleed to death from paper cuts or go into sugar shock from the hundreds of pixie sticks I will have to eat to keep myself awake.

Despite the possibility of death I'm almost positive my new plan will work.

Now that my day will contain an extra hour, I'm having trouble deciding what it is I will do for that hour.

My sensible adult-like side is telling me I need to do something worthwhile, like work on a dissertation for world peace or my inaugural speech for my future term as president.

My irresponsible childish side is screaming; I need to have some fun. Perhaps a nice time injuring myself on Rollerblades or a trip to the mall to drool on all the things I can't afford.

Of course, there's the part of me that wants to use the extra hour for just rest and relaxation. I could improvise a bath by flooding my bathroom floor or I could just lie in my bed and count the stains on my ceiling.

Better yet, I could practice my guitar and try to learn something other than Yankee Doodle.

The possibilities are endless.

I know everyone must be straining themselves as much as I am trying to decide what they are going to do.

My advice is to just take the hour and use it solely on yourself. Do something good to pamper yourself. Reward your mind and body for all of your hard work.

After all, I think everyone deserves it after having to fork over their hour during the last daylight savings time.

Clinton dedicates month to violence awareness

Domestic violence is a leading cause of injury to American women. Teenage girls between the ages of 16 and 19 experience one of the highest rates of such violence.

A woman is battered every 15 seconds in the U.S. and 30 percent of female murder victims are killed by current or former partners. Equally disturbing is the impact of domestic violence on children.

Witnessing such violence has a devastating emotional effect on children, and between 50 and 70 percent of men who abuse their female partners abuse their children as well.

From inner cities to rural communities, domestic violence affects individuals of every age, culture, class, gender, race and religion.

Combatting the violence that threatens many of our nations families is among my highest priorities as president. Through the Violence Against Women Act (VAWA), included in the historic Crime Bill I signed into law, we have more than tripled funding for programs that combat domestic violence and sexual abuse – investing over half a billion dollars since 1994.

The Violence Against Women Office at the Department of Justice, which coordinates the Federal Governments implementation of the Act, is leading a comprehensive national effort to combine tough federal laws with assistance to state and local programs designed to fight domestic violence and aid its victims. With VAWA grants, communities across our country have been able to hire more prosecutors and improve domestic violence training among police officers, prosecutors and health and social service professionals.

Other important legislation also sends the clear message that family violence is a serious crime. The Interstate Stalking Punishment and Prevention Act of 1996 stiffens the penalties against perpetrators who pursue women across state lines to stalk, threaten or abuse them; and an extension of the Brady Law prohibits anyone convicted of a domestic violence offense from owning a firearm. Since 1996, the 24-hour National Domestic Violence Hotline ((800) 799-SAFE) we established has provided immediate crisis intervention, counseling and referrals for those in need, responding to as many as 10,000 calls each month.

In observing the month of October as National Domestic Violence Awareness Month, we also recognize the dedicated efforts of professionals and volunteers who take up this cause every day, offering protection, guidance, encouragement and compassion to the survivors of family violence. We reaffirm our pledge to strengthen our collective national response to crimes of domestic violence.

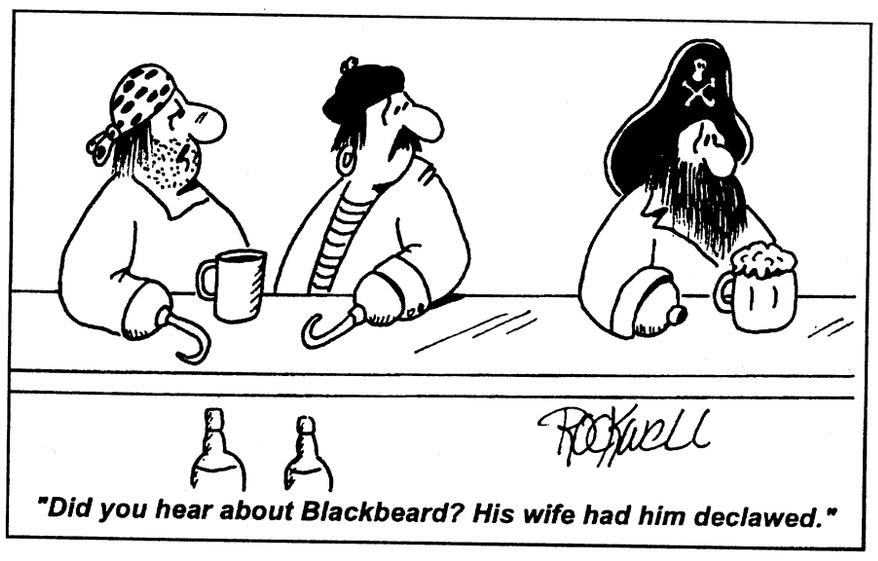
Most important, we strengthen our commitment to raise public awareness of the frequency of domestic violence, recognize the signs of such violence and intervene before it escalates. If we are ever to erase the pain of these heinous crimes, we must help victims become survivors and once and for all, end the scourge of violence in America's homes.

Therefore, I, William J. Clinton, President of the United States of America, by virtue of the authority vested in me by the Constitution and laws of the United States, do hereby proclaim October 1998 as National Domestic Violence Awareness Month. I call upon government officials, law enforcement agencies, health professionals, educators, community leaders and the American people to join together to end the domestic violence that threatens so many of our people.

— William J. Clinton
President of the United States

DCA thanks sponsors for support

On behalf of the Directorate of Community Activities (DCA), I want to thank those companies, organizations and individuals who helped make the Buick Challenge Military Appreciation Day a success.



Many civilians, Soldiers and their family members attended this spectacular annual event.

The Military Appreciation Day, held at Callaway Gardens on Oct. 2, could not have been possible without the support of its sponsors.

I would like to officially thank the Fort Benning Commissary, Sprint Barracks Phone Center, USPA & IRA representatives, Pioneer Military Lending, Anheuser-Busch, Ranger Joes, and Military Benefits Association, as well as Community Recreation Division (Uchee Creek & Destin Recreation Center) and Community Operations Division (Follow Me Golf Course) who generously provided products and giveaways for our military personnel.

Thanks, also, to all the volunteers who gave their time so selflessly to make this event a success. Such dedication truly makes Fort Benning a better place to live, work and play for all our Soldiers and their family members.

with them. When we are there, we enhance their capacity to function."

Unlike the U.S. military, the Russian military has had no chaplaincy system for 70 years and, according to McNeely, a desire for religious values among Russian military personnel is on the rise.

"With the decline of the Soviet Union and the fall of communism, religious life is much more important in Russia," McNeely said. "The Russian Orthodox Church decided they now want to have an influence in the Russian Army."

Although the formalities of the Russian Orthodox religion may be world's apart from the generic, one-size-fits-all religion of the U.S. Army, the bishop for the Russian military said the chaplaincies had much in common.

"Besides the name 'chaplain' (not being in the Russian language), the rest is exactly the same," said Bishop Savva. "(We have) the same ministering, the same goals, the same tasks and the same mission: to care for the Soldier while he is away from home and his family."

USARSA offers four-week demining course

Sgt. Alberto Betancourt
U.S. School of the Americas

It is estimated that more than 110 million active landmines are scattered in 68 countries and every month, more than 2,000 people are killed or maimed by their explosions.

This alarming report issued by the United Nations (UN) Mine Clearance and Policy Unit, Department of Humanitarian Affairs, is one of the reasons 18 students from Peru, Colombia and Argentina, are attending the U.S. Army School of the Americas' (USARSA) Humanitarian Demining Course.

"This four-week course is designed to clear mine fields in a peacetime environment," said Staff Sgt. Patrick Vazquez, course director.

The demining course was first offered by USARSA in 1993, sponsored by the Organization of American States (OAS). At that time, 15 officers from eight different countries attended the course and upon completion were deployed to Nicaragua for eight months. The officers not only trained the Nicaraguan Soldiers on what they had learned at USARSA, but also helped them clear the mines.

"At first, we were only clearing one mine a day," said Maj. Rody Macias, Uruguayan Army, and a graduate of the 1993 course. "As time progressed, we were removing as many as 200 mines a day."

Macias said by the end of the mission, more than 100,000 mines were recovered in Nicaragua.

In 1995, the UN selected Macias as an observer for the UN's demining effort in Angola, Africa.

"There were over 20 million mines left from the Angolan conflict," Macias said. "I spent a year teaching what I learned at USARSA to the different Soldiers involved in the demining efforts in Angola. I estimate that over one million mines were removed during my stay in Angola."

Graduates of the course have also contributed to the OAS-sponsored Central American demining program. Teams have worked in Honduras, Costa Rica and Guatemala to clear mines left over from conflicts of the 1980s.

Besides extensive human rights training, Vazquez said students are trained to recognize and detect types of mines and booby traps that have been employed throughout Latin America. Recognition enables the student to correctly identify U.S., Soviet and other foreign mines, fuses and booby traps as well as methods of initiation that are most prevalent throughout the area. He said detection methods included probing and the use of mine detectors.

"Everyone works at UN standards," said Vazquez. "What we try to do is have all the nations being represented here during the course, work at the same stands and in the same manner."

Like their predecessors, the current students will return to their countries to tackle the infestation of mines.

"A threat to human life so severe like landmines should not exist," said student Sgt. William Zaconet, a Peruvian Soldier. "I feel confident that I can return to my country and help detect and remove mines which have prevented so many people from returning to their towns — to their homes."

Zaconet, along with 17 other students, graduate today. He said he hopes to return home and encourage his leaders to send more Soldiers to this course and eventually have their own in-country training program.

for the record

In last week's issue of The Bayonet, it was stated that Oct. 1 was the 50th anniversary of Korea's armed forces since they were attacked by North Korea in 1928.

The Korean Armed Forces were created in 1948 with the foundation of the Republic of Korea on Aug. 15. Oct. 1 was set as the date for the the armed forces day because Oct. 1, 1950 was the day the Korean Army crossed the 38th parallel line, pushing back the North Korean Army to where they began their attack. The Korean War was initiated June 25, 1950.

Top NCO explains PT standards de

Sgt. 1st Class Connie E. Dickey
Army News Service

Sgt. Maj. of the Army Robert E. Hall explained to senior NCOs Oct. 12 the reason behind delaying implementation of the new physical fitness test standards.

Hall said there was a rumor that the delay was due to new U.S. Army Physical Fitness Test (APFT) score cards not being ready. The new APFT card was not printed in time. That was part of the reason. The rest of it was because "we did not get the feedback from commanders," Hall said. "Only a few commanders came back with feedback in a year, so it came down to a last-second delay."

Hall spoke during an early breakfast before the official beginning of the annual Association of the U.S. Army meeting. His message was clear — it is time to get back to basics, be accountable and keep trusting the Army and leadership.

Hall acknowledged that first priority with the senior leadership of the Army is to improve retirement benefits, with improved pay for Soldiers a close second. But he wanted to know what the senior NCOs' concerns were and addressed topics brought up during the meeting.

While talking about the APFT standards, the sergeant major addressed how the new standards will affect NCO course attendance in the future.

"We have sent this out to each major command's command sergeant major, so we need feedback, but the APFT will be part of the academic requirements for a course. A Soldier will be enrolled in a course and given the test. If they flunk, they will be re-tested later; if they pass, fine. If they fail the second time, they will be removed from the promotion list and get a bullet of being an APFT failure on their 1059 (Service School Academic Evaluation Report). They will also be released from the course.

"I don't see this as a lessening of the standards, but rather holding the Soldiers and their leaders accountable."

Also, Hall said a graduated scale for points will be added to the promotion point worksheet for the APFT and basic rifle qualification. More hits means more points.

"It is important to get back to basics, in everything," Hall said.

He told the group that he's found — during his more than 55 trips to visit Soldiers in the field — that they are concerned with pay, housing, medical care and the state of retirement, but he believes that things will improve.

He said since Army leaders recognize the problems in pay and retirement benefits also recognize how that is affecting retention. "We made our retention goals this year, but we may not next week, and we are beginning to get the folks on Capitol Hill to understand how our system works and that many are leaving because they are dissatisfied with pay and retirement and because of the booming economy."

Hall doesn't believe that the Army is losing its best and brightest Soldiers. "You always lose some of the ones you would like to keep in the military, for a lot of different reasons, but the ones we are keeping are good troops. They are our future leaders, and there is no fluff out there. I've seen it, I've talked to drills, I have visited with basic trainees; there is just no fluff out there."

He said Soldiers want to know three things from their NCOs. "Soldiers want to know if you are concerned about them, and whether your focus is up the chain of command and promotion for yourself down the chain to where they are," he said. "Soldiers want to know if they can trust you, and they can if you do what is right and what is legal, all the time. Soldiers want to be the best they can, so they want a commitment of excellence from you."

Snake attack

Ranger student battles fanged reptile in field

Master Sgt. Austin Stoffel
5th Ranger Training Battalion

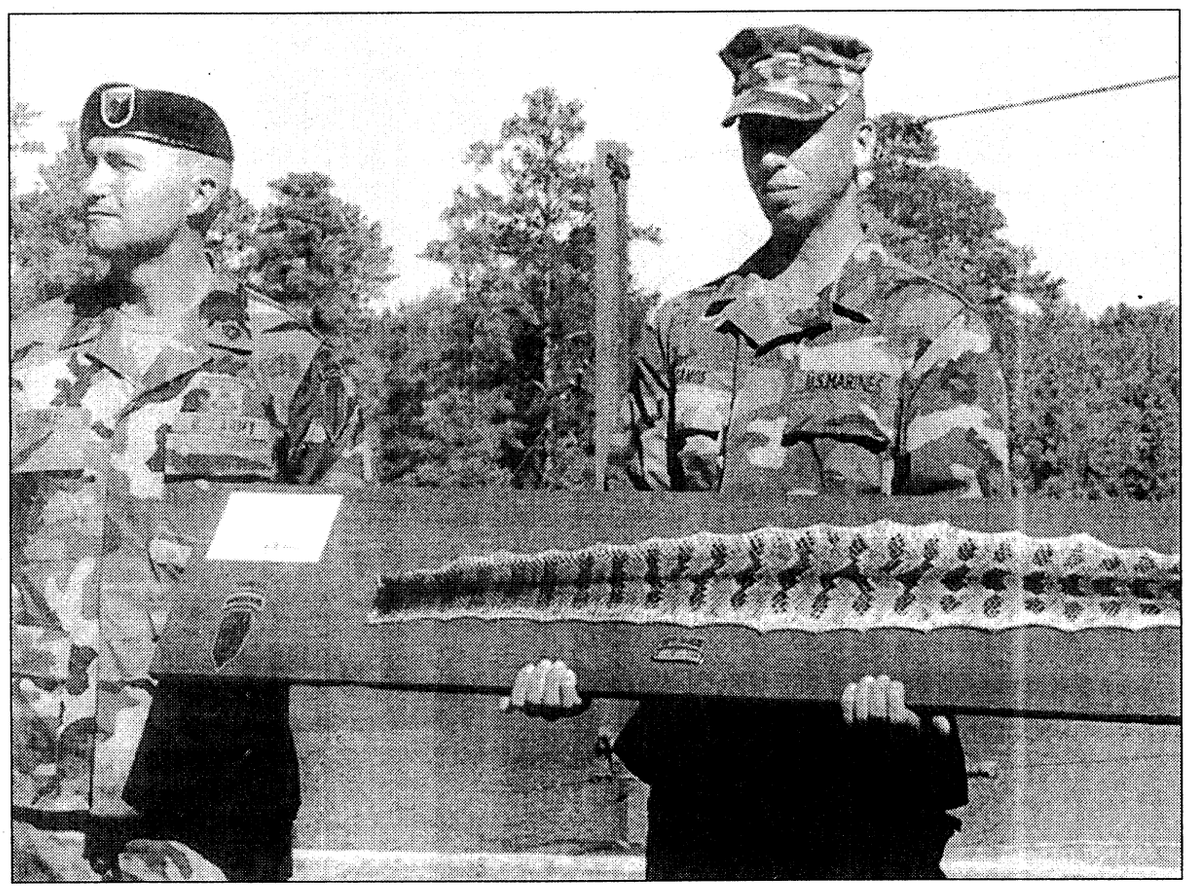
As a Ranger candidate, there are many challenges to meet and obstacles to overcome.

U.S. Marine Corps Sgt. Guillermo J. Ramos discovered that this may include deadly reptiles.

Ramos, a Chicago native and member of 1st Marine Division, Camp Pendleton, Calif., was participating in a routine patrol during Ranger School's Mountain Phase at Camp Frank D. Merrill in Dahlonega, Ga., when a four-foot Timber Rattler (rattlesnake) took a stab at him.

After the snake landed his fangs into Ramos' right thigh, the cadre from Company A, 5th Ranger Training Battalion, Ranger Training Brigade, that were accompanying the patrol sprang into action.

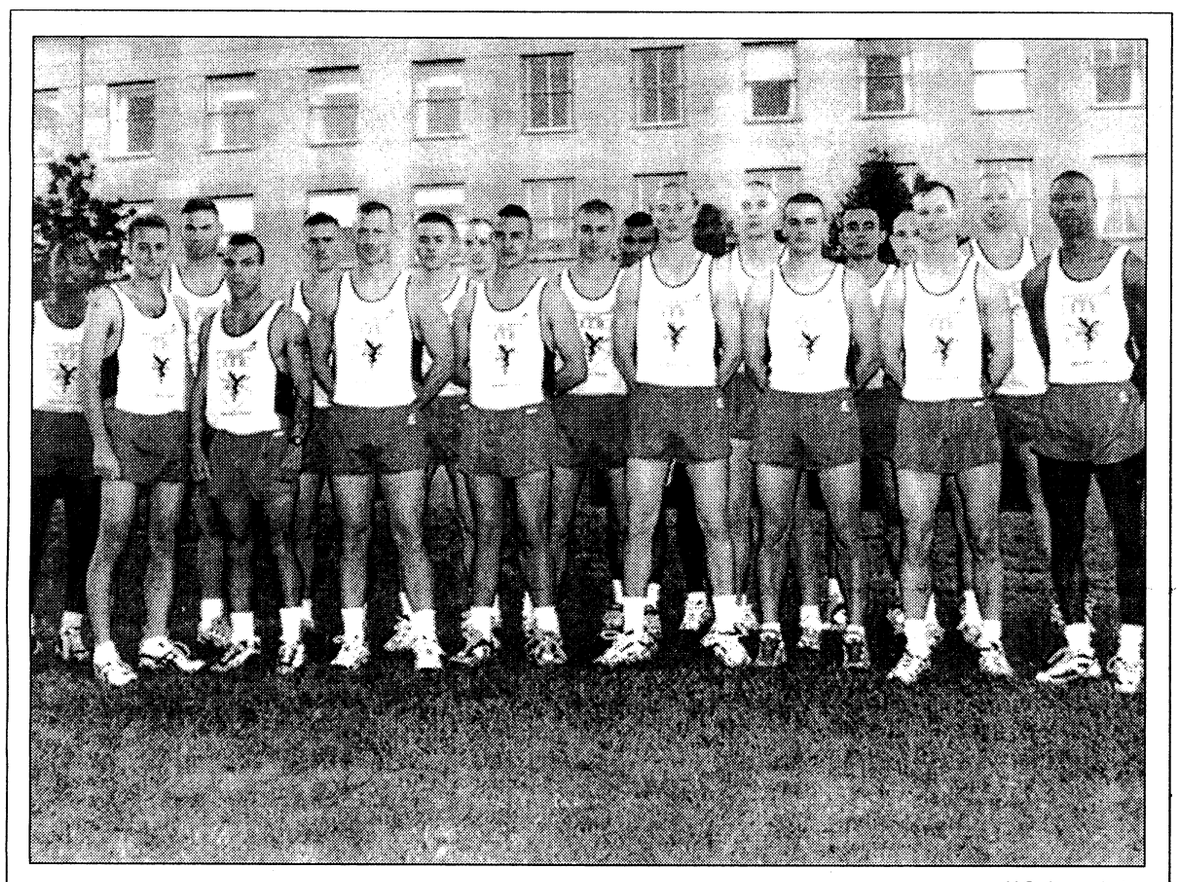
Staff Sgt. Todd W. Barrager, the medic on the ground, immediately began treating the casualty while 1st Sgt. Ricky Hall, Staff Sgt. Scott J. Metayer, Staff Sgt. Kevin L. Dylas and Staff Sgt. John E. Buckley systematically executed a multitude of tasks in preparation for an "urgent" life-threatening medical evacuation (MEDEVAC).



Due to the nature of the wound and area, an aerial MEDEVAC aircraft was deployed, but the height of the trees prevented landing so Ramos was extracted by a hoist mechanism known as the Jungle Penetrator.

The MEDEVAC crew from Fort Benning's 498th Medical Company (Air Ambulance), 36th Engineer Group (Construction), responded within minutes after receiving the initial request.

The casualty was evacuated to the Chestatee Regional Hospital within one hour of the bite. Ramos was treated and released within 36 hours of the incident to return to training.



Lt. Col. Alfred E. Dochnal, 5th RTBn. commander, praised everyone involved with the evacuation including Capt. Alan Deogracias, Co. A commander, who maintained control of the operation from his command post in the field.

Ramos went on to graduate with his original class Oct. 10. During the graduation ceremony, Ramos was presented a plaque decorated with the snake's skin and a message which reads: Marine, your heart, will and desire to succeed in Ranger School, despite this rattlesnake's best efforts to impede your progress will always be remembered. Keep setting the example high for others to follow.

The Soldiers from the Infantry Training Brigade who participated in the 14th annual Army Ten-Miler in Washington D.C. Oct. 11 pose for a photo. The Soldiers from ITB competed against more than 14,000 other runners and ranked 49th overall.

ITB Soldiers take on Ten-Miler

1st Lt. Conrad A. Schupay
Infantry Training Brigade

The Pentagon hosted the 14th annual Army Ten-Miler in Washington D.C. Oct. 11 which attracted more then 14,000 participants including 600 running teams.

Among the hundreds of running teams, two Infantry Training Brigade (ITB) teams — War Eagle I and War Eagle II — stood out in the crowd.

War Eagle 1 came in 20th out of 150 active duty teams and 49th overall out of the more than 600 teams which participated in the event.

Leading the pack for ITB was Eric Tollefson of Company B, 1st Battalion, 19th Infantry Regiment, ITB, who crossed the finish line with a time of 1:00:57. Following Tollefson was Marcus Kremer, Co. B, 1st Bn., 19th Inf. Regt.; Abel Alejandro of Co. B, 1st Battalion, 38th Infantry Regiment; and Jason Barnes of Co. C, 1st Battalion, 50th Infantry Regiment, with official times of 1:01:32, 1:04:00, 1:04:26, respectively.

To prepare for the race, ITB held tryouts in July and developed two teams from the officers, NCOs and and enlisted Soldiers including trainees.

This was the second year in a row that teams represented ITB in Washington D.C. for the Ten-Miler, however, the trip was not completely government -funded.

A number of local sponsors helped with the expenses. The sponsors included Superior Skin Art, Ranger Joe's, U.S. Cavalry, Columbus Bank & Trust and USPA & IRA.

"Without the help of the local sponsors like K & W Tailors and larger companies like Texaco, this trip wouldn't have been feasible," said Capt. Todd Bearden of Co. C, 1st Bn., 50th Inf. Regt.

OFFICER CANDIDATE SCHOOL

Soldiers proceed to next phase

3rd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment

OCS Class 501-98 advanced from the Basic Phase to the Intermediate Phase Oct. 12.

During the Basic Phase, the officer candidates learned basic military skills and technical competence under extremely demanding mental and physical conditions.

The candidates accomplished the Leadership Reaction Course, obstacle and confidence courses in addition to strenuous physical training, land navigation training and hours of classroom instruction on leadership and ethics.

While most candidates are former warrant officers or NCOs, a small number are college option or National Guard.

Basic Phase not only brings all officer candidates up to the relative same level of overall basic military knowledge, but also instills strict discipline for the standards in their personal lives and military bearing for the rest of their careers and lives.

Climbing: Soldiers overcome obstacles, face fears

Staff Sgt. Richard K. Holladay
U.S. Army Physical Fitness School

Soldiers must possess the ability to overcome all types of physical and mental obstacles. The ability to face fears and force the body up and over man-made or natural barriers must be practiced and honed during peacetime for war.

The Directorate of Operations and Training (DOT) and Troy State University (TSU) have the tools to practice this valuable skill.

In 1994, the TSU Department of Kinesiology and Health Promotion built a climbing facility for use in its degree program, aided by support from the Army Continuing Education System, DOT and the U.S. Army Physical Fitness School (USAPFS).

Dr. Ed Thomas, former department head of TSU's program, was there from the beginning and was personally involved in every facet of its development.

"The wall was built by Sgt. Robin Bell of the 75th Ranger Regiment," Thomas said.

Inside Infantry Hall, using funds from TSU and DOT, Bell and others spent weekends and nights building a structure to challenge and assist in developing neglected climbing skills.

"Climbing encompasses all components of physical fitness, with special attention to motor skills," said Steve Van Camp, USAPFS instructional systems specialist.

"All limbs must be used, as opposed to many sports which favor only the dominant side of the body," he said. "Climbing should be an integral part of physical fitness training for a Soldier's readiness."

From the small forearm muscles that allow the fingers to grip minuscule holds to the large muscles of the back and legs that enable pulling and pushing movements of the whole body from position to position, every muscle is utilized in the climbing process.

Flexibility in these muscles is developed through the reaching and bending motions, while the constant tension to maintain steadiness may help in building muscular endurance.

The less visible effects are perhaps more important.

"Climbing enhances long term general fitness," Thomas said. "It is also immediately important for the individual Soldier in fine-tuning motor skills, such as balance and agility and overcoming the fear of heights."

Many Soldiers may share a fear of heights. Climbing the wall may help enable Soldiers to overcome their fear when climbing while secured by a rope, which makes a harmful fall almost impossible.

Many times, new climbers concentrate on the fine motor actions required during ascending, but do not realize how high they have gone until reaching the top. Doing this repeatedly may encourage greater levels of confidence when operating on a vertical plane.

For the advanced climber, there are horizontal rooftops; and all routes are bolted for sport lead climbing, a more difficult (but still safe) technique which may only be attempted under direct supervision of the instructor on site.

"The battlefield is no time to discover our Soldiers can't climb," Thomas continued. "It needs to be a part of our training formula."

The climbing facility consists of several walls connected together totalling 8,000 square feet of climbable face.

The structure of Infantry Hall provides a concrete and steel foundation for the support structure, which is built of wooden 2x4s, 2x6s, and 4x4s.

Attached to this support are the faces. The faces of the wall are created by bolting commercially purchased, hand and foot holds to three-quarter-inch plywood.

The structures are also coated with specially formulated paint that provide a gritty (and gripping) feel.

The faces of the wall are built so climbers of any ability level may be challenged and successful at the same time.

To ensure safety, rope stations are placed at every meter so the climber and belayer (person who ensures the climber does not fall far) are always able to secure themselves.

Due to the safety features, a climber is able to ascend to any area of the wall in a safe manner, even on the most difficult routes.

An instructor who is trained in indoor and outdoor rock climbing is present at all times.

The two instructors have been taught the skills required through both military and civilian sources.

The experience and education the instructors are equip with enable them to answer almost any question, but their main job is to ensure the safety of everybody involved.

During the last four years and through hundreds of users, no one has ever been injured.

The facility is open to all active duty groups. It can serve as an alternative to the three amigos (pushup, sit-up, run) for morning physical training and can accommodate groups of up to 20 Soldiers at a time.

All necessary equipment is supplied and the unit need only bring the uniform determined by their leader.

Use of the room is available to all units and the manager will work with any unit to ensure the facility can be unlocked and supervised at any time (schedules permitting).

Before any unit member is allowed to climb, the instructor will provide a period of instruction on vital knots, proper equipment usage and safe belay technique.

Prior to beginning climbing, each unit member must demonstrate a proficiency in all the tasks they have been instructed to perform.

The USAPFS will initiate a trial period for Soldiers who would like to test the wall.

The climbing facility is located in Classroom 26 in Infantry Hall.

It will be open with an instructor present from 5 to 7 p.m. during the trial period set to begin Monday.

The trial period will be conducted over several weeks and is open to individual, active duty Soldiers.

Soldiers may take advantage and use the facility under direct supervision during these hours for training.

For further information, or to schedule a time, call 545-6333, or e-mail at veloclimb@aol.com.

Those who are interested may also call Van Camp at 545-6336.

ACAP helps prepare Soldiers for separation

Debbie Henshaw
Army Career and Alumni Program

ACAP has two primary functions.

"Our first and primary role is to satisfy public law which mandates that Soldiers receive preseparation counseling to fully understand the benefits they have earned as a result of serving our country," said Harold Ericksen, ACAP Center manager.

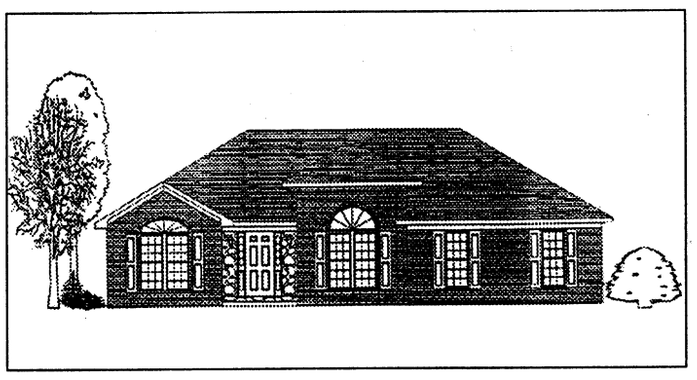
"Both enlisted Soldiers and officers are required to receive preseparation counseling between 90 and 180 days prior to separation from the military, which is offered as part of a three-day briefing," he continued.

"Public law also mandates that Soldiers complete and sign DD Form 2648, the Preseparation Checklist, which outlines how to put together an individual transition plan, the effects of a career change, employment assistance, relocation assistance, education and training, health and life insurance, finances, reserve affiliation and VA disability. The signed checklist must be filled out in Soldiers' permanent files prior to clearing Fort Benning.

"ACAP's secondary role is to assist transitioning service-members in career change. The ACAP Center is a modern job resource center equipped with state-of-the-art computer applications and job banks and is staffed with certified career counselors. According to U.S. Army research studies, Soldiers using ACAP job assistance traditionally acquire jobs at a faster rate and generally receive higher salaries," Ericksen said.

The preseparation program is conducted in Infantry Hall, Classroom 30, each Monday-Wednesday, with the exception of holiday weeks. Soldiers should schedule attendance through their chain of command.

During these three days, Soldiers receive information on benefits, prepare separation checklists and attend job search workshops.



To better understand the transition assistance provided by ACAP, the preseparation briefing dates and DD Form 2648, search the Internet at the Fort Benning ACAP homepage at www.benning.army.mil/fbhome/ACAP/acapweb.html.

Library seeks storytellers

Michele E. Hanson
Special to the Bayonet©

People were telling stories to one another around campfires and water holes long before written language was developed. Stories were a source of entertainment, a source of folk wisdom and a source of history of a people.

Today, story hour extends the range of reading done by boys and girls and improves the quality of reading while sparking an interest in books. Storytellers are a part of the children's program at Sayers Memorial Library during the weekly storytelling hour.

"Past storytellers, professionals, semi-professionals, school teachers, Soldiers and spouses have entertained hundreds of preschool children at our library," said John Cook, library manager. "Storytelling is an ancient artform and stories expressed through storytelling carried history forward from one generation to the next. The library story hour is a continuation of that tradition."

According to Cook, a story is a sharing of experience, real or imagined. It takes two to make a story come alive — a writer and reader or a storyteller and listener. Story time is not just a story, but includes related activities such as crafts, make-believe, games and puppet play for the children to enjoy.

When reading a book to a child, the illustrations are shown, but it is the storyteller who brings the story to life through expression and action.

"Recently we had a storyteller who was an author of children's books. He read to children of various ages and really enjoyed the positive experience. Storytelling helped him visualize his audience a bit better," Cook added.

"I have been coming to story hour at the library for the last six months with my daughter Tatiana and she has really enjoyed herself," said family member Jannesse Delgado. "Participating in story hour helps prepare my daughter socially and introduces her to group participation."

Storytellers are needed for the weekly story hour, held for preschool children every Wednesday around noon. The time is flexible according to the storyteller's schedule.

If interested in becoming a storyteller, call John Cook at 545-4911.

Joint Commission honors MACH

Martin Army Community Hospital

In October of this year, Martin Army Community Hospital (MACH) received its certificate of Accreditation with Commendation from the Joint Commission on Accreditation of Healthcare Organizations. This is the highest level of accreditation awarded by the Joint Commission, which is the nation's oldest and largest healthcare accrediting body.

Formed in 1951, the Joint Commission is dedicated to improving the quality of the nation's health care through voluntary accreditation. The Joint Commission's on-site survey of MACH occurred in April of this year.

"Receiving Accreditation with Commendation is a significant achievement, one that recognizes exemplary performance by MACH," said Dennis S. O'Leary, M.D., president, Joint Commission. "The organization should be commended for its commitment to providing quality care to the people in its community."

"We are extremely pleased to have achieved this designation," said Lt. Col. Joe Butler, the Deputy Commander for Administration at MACH. "Everyone here goes the extra mile on a day-to-day basis to provide the best possible health care to our patients. Receiving Accreditation with Commendation is just official recognition of this outstanding quality of care.

"Furthermore, to our knowledge, MACH is the only MEDDAC in the U.S. Army and possibly the only hospital nationwide to receive Accreditation with Commendation three times in succession."

"But we're not going to rest on our laurels," pointed out Maj. John Fairey, chief, Clinical Support Division. "This is just an incentive to continue to improve our services."

MACH sponsors women's health fair

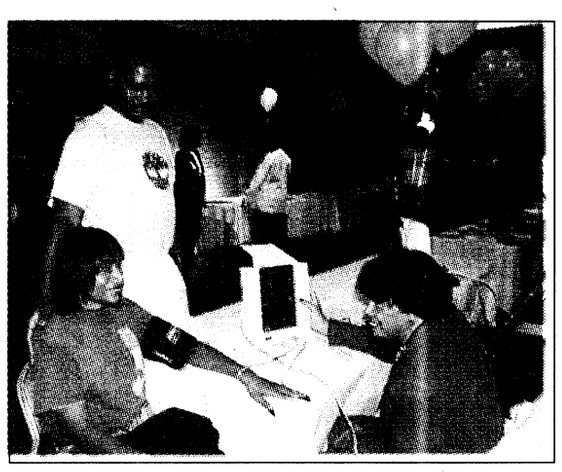
"Women's Health: A year-round affair" was the theme for the annual women's health fair held Saturday at the Main Post Exchange and sponsored by Martin Army Community Hospital (MACH), Preventive Medicine Service, Community Health Nursing and the Health Promotion Center.



More than 200 participants took advantage of 15 separate stations designed to meet the health-education needs on a variety of subjects and increase women's awareness of health related issues.

"This year, we decided to have a women's fair in conjunction with Breast Cancer Awareness month," said Alfreta Gibson, Health Promotion Center supervisor at MACH. "Our overall goal is to develop year-long consciousness of women's health and its importance."

The fair targeted all women regardless of age, nationality or ethnicity and covered topics such as heart disease, diabetes, lupus, stress, nutrition, menopause, natural family planning and osteoporosis. On-site breast examinations were held and mammograms were scheduled for those clients requiring follow-ups.

"We hope to increase the community awareness regarding the three components of breast health which include a clinical breast exam, breast self examination and a mammography if needed," said Kyla Helm, family practice physician at MACH. "The three components are crucial steps in the early detection and prevention of breast cancer."

"We are pleased with the turn out and we hope to do the health fair again next year," Gibson said.

Resistance training builds muscle

Dr. Virginia Yates
Martin Army Community Hospital

Despite the rising popularity of nutritional supplements for muscle building, exercise such as resistance training still proves to be the key factor in muscle and strength building.

To bring about a positive change, an overload must be applied. This involves an increase in work on the body above that normally encountered. Determining the amount of overload to use is often a fine line between improvement and running the risk of injury.

Much research has been done in this area of medicine because loss of muscle and strength occurs in many illnesses and accompanies the natural process of aging. Studies have shown that a person is never too old to become stronger and gain muscle with training exercises.

When a body is immobilized, such as lying in bed when sick with decreased activity, such as after an injury, muscle size and strength are rapidly lost. The result is abnormal movement patterns and clumsiness contributing to increased joint stress and pain.

As muscles become stronger, the nerves that help with balance and positioning also improve. Because of this, a person has a better feel for where the limbs are in space. Some people report the sensation of their limbs being larger in size. When these muscle and nerve changes occur, a person feels less clumsy, is more in control of body movement and is less likely to experience falls.

Although female body builders have larger muscles than untrained females, research has shown that women do not achieve the same magnitude of lean mass as men even when the two groups train with the same intensity for the same period of time. Part of this is related to hormonal factors.

All humans have two general types of muscle fibers called Type I and Type II. People are born with differing proportions of each. The Type I fibers provide longer lasting endurance and the Type II fibers contribute to speed and power for short periods of time. It is the Type II fibers that enlarge most in response to strength training. Men tend to have a greater proportion of these Type II fibers and some men and women have greater proportions of Type II fibers than others. Type I fibers respond to long term aerobic activity such as running, swimming and bicycling.

Regardless of the motivation for building muscle and strength, some universal principles apply.

Strength training programs generally begin with low resistance and high repetitions. This equates to whatever resistance causes muscle fatigue in 10-15 repetitions. Over several weeks of this type training, the resistance is gradually increased while decreasing the number of repetitions. A muscle should be exercised to fatigue within three sets in a session. There are many variations on this theme, especially for those who train for competition. If exercising with high loads, 48 to 72 hours of rest may be necessary before the next workout to avoid injury.

Remember, nutritional supplements alone cannot build muscle strength. Only progressive resistance training can.

— Special thanks to Dr. Mimi Zumwalt, orthopedic surgeon, MACH and competitive body builder, who assisted with this article.

In last week's issue of The Bayonet, the headline of the Martin Army Medical Mentor, Steroids damage vital organs, was misleading. Dr. Yates wishes to clarify that the headline regarding injectable androgen steroids does not apply to patients taking the types of steroids prescribed by the physician.

Domestic abuse affects all classes

Army Family Advocacy Program

According to a report from the Rape and Abuse Crisis Center in Fargo, N.D., in this country a woman is more likely to be assaulted, injured, raped or killed by a male partner than by another type of assailant.

Domestic violence is believed to be the most common yet least reported crime in our nation. According to the crisis center report, an estimated three to four million American women are beaten each year by their husbands or partners.

The U.S. Surgeon General has identified domestic violence as a major health problem to women. Wife-beating results in more injuries that require medical treatment than rape, auto accidents and muggings combined. Each year more than 1,000 women, or about four women per day, are killed by their husbands or partners.

According to the crisis center report, domestic violence occurs among all sectors of society. It happens to people of all racial, economic and religious groups. However, low-income battered women are more likely to seek assistance from public agencies, such as shelters and hospital emergency rooms, because they have fewer private resources than middle and upper income women. They are, therefore, more likely to be counted in official reporting statistics.

In about five percent of reported domestic assaults, the offender is the male victim's wife or female partner. It is known that women generally resort to physical forces in self-defense. It is also known that men who batter deny and minimize their acts of violence.

Moreover, males commit more than 80 percent of violent crimes that occur outside the home. Why would women be so violent in the home, yet generally peaceful outside of it?

No one wants to be emotionally or physically abused by their partner. Staying in the relationship has much more to do with emotional ties, traditional values about marriage and parenthood, fear, money or the lack of it and religion.

Choosing not to leave an abusive partner does not mean that the victim is weak or naive. It does not mean that they are asking for anything, except to have a loving, fulfilling relationship with someone they care about and chose as a partner.

Timber management challenges post

Directorate of Public Works

Fort Benning has approximately 182,000 acres of which 140,000 acres are managed for timber production. This program has a multitude of responsibilities to include forest inventory, timber harvest, reforestation, insect and disease control. Providing optimum training areas is the number one priority, but promoting and sustaining healthy and vigorous forest which benefits endangered species, recreation, wood fiber production, aesthetics, fish and other wildlife is also a high priority.

A forest inventory of all managed forest on the installation has been completed and is being updated continuously on a 10-year cycle. The inventory data provides information used to make sound timber management decisions and available habitat for the endangered red-cockaded woodpecker (RCW). This information is being used to balance training needs and the goal to reach full recovery of the RCW population by the year 2026.

Approximately 5 million board feet of saw-timber and 15,000 cords of pulpwood are marked for commercial harvest each year. Timber marking is completed to meet the long-term forest management objective in each range compartment and is done in compliance with Army regulations and governing laws. The funds derived from the sale of timber on the installation are used to support the forest management program.

Re-establishment of the longleaf pine ecosystem is a major objective of the installation, but can only be accomplished with artificial reforestation. Over the past 40 years, areas that once were predominantly longleaf pine have been reforested with mainly loblolly pine and slash pine seedlings. In 1988, the first attempt to replant longleaf pine seedlings was found to be successful and since then more than 5,600 acres have been artificially reforested with longleaf seedlings.

Managing the installation's timber program is challenging, but our goal is to provide quality training areas balanced with being a good steward of environment.

For more information about the installation's timber management program, call Bob Larimore, Natural Resources Branch, at 544-6206.

Road Closure

Both northbound lanes of Benning Blvd. leaving Fort Benning will be closed Saturday from 7 a.m. to noon. All traffic leaving the installation will use South Lumpkin Road or I-185. The closure is necessary to resurface lanes.

For more information, call 545-4749.

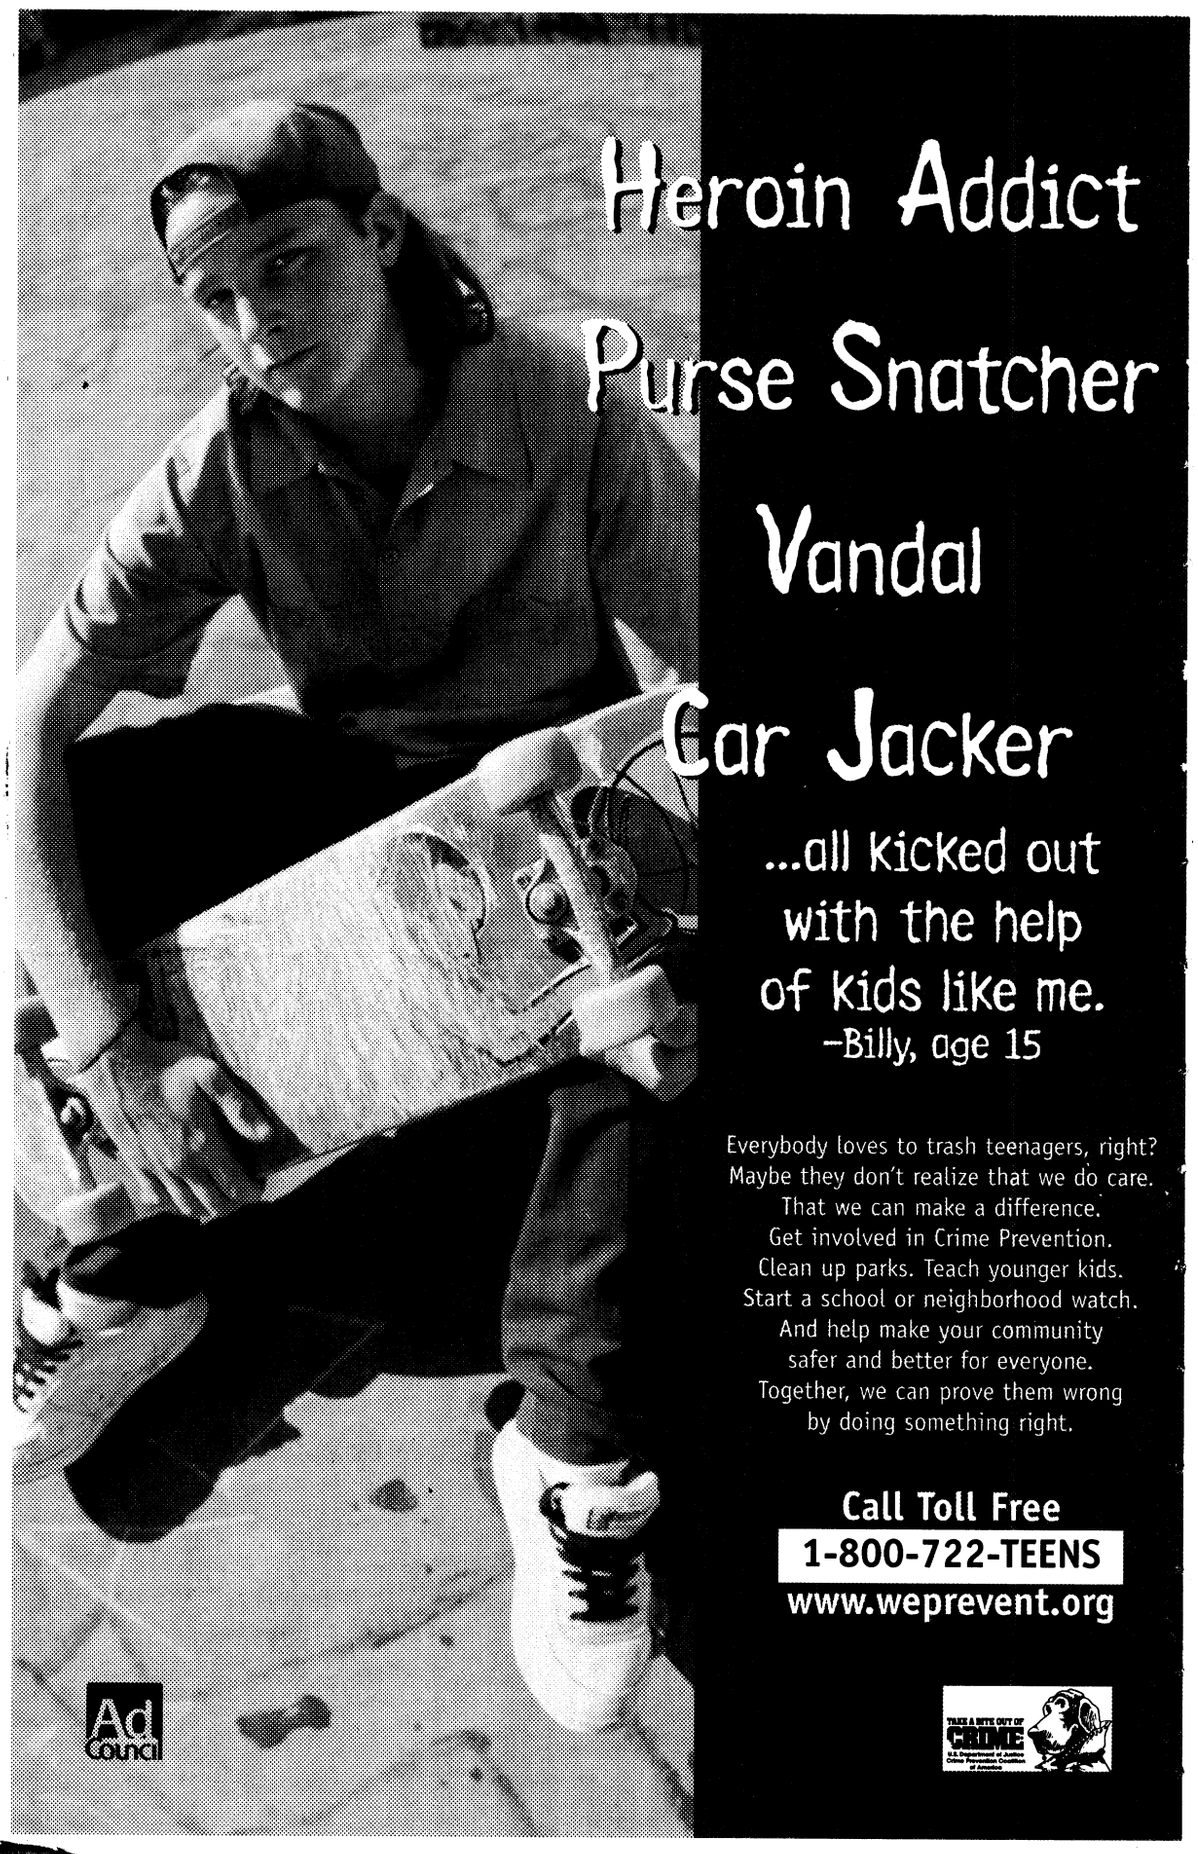
Pediatric clinic undergoes change

Martin Army Community Hospital

Due to the ongoing renovation and Life-Safety Upgrade at Martin Army Community Hospital, the Pediatric Clinic has moved to the 5th Floor, B Wing. Clinic hours and phone numbers will remain the same.

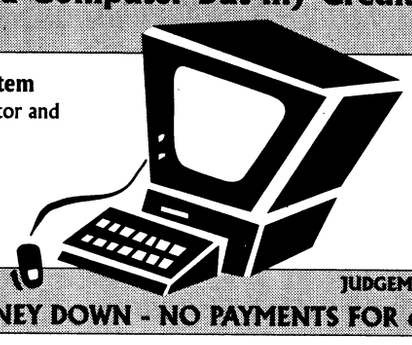
Staffing and resources in the Pediatric Clinic are based on TRICARE Prime enrollment. The clinic is not funded to care for patients who are not enrolled in TRICARE Prime. Due to these limited resources, there are a few appointments available for non-prime patients.

As of Nov. 1, the following changes will be implemented:



- The Pediatric Evening Clinic will be reserved for patients enrolled in Pediatrics TRICARE Prime.
- Patients will be seen by appointment only. The clinic will no longer see patients on a walk-in basis.
- Patients who are not enrolled in TRICARE Prime can call the clinic after 10 a.m. to schedule appointments on a very limited basis during regular clinic hours.
- The priority for care in the Pediatric Clinic is TRICARE Prime enrollees.

Because of limited space available appointments, non-prime patients are strongly encouraged to enroll in TRICARE Prime or find a physician in the civilian community to manage the care of their children.



The goal of these changes is to allow us to provide the best possible care to our patients with the limited resources available.

God creates peace through us

Chaplain (Maj.) Sherman Baker
Martin Army Community Hospital

The Bible has much to say about peace. The word peace occurs some 400 times in the Bible. In fact, the Bible can be regarded as God's testament of peace.

reflections

Much is said about "the peace of God,"(Philippians 4:7), "peace with God," (Romans 5:1) and " peace from God," (II Corinthians 1:2). God the father is the God of peace, who will sanctify the believer (I Thessalonians 5:23). God the son is the prince of peace, on whose shoulders the spiritual government will rest (Isaiah 9:6). At the birth of Jesus, angels praised God by saying, "Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will toward men" (Luke 2:14).

There are many definitions of peace. A modern understanding of peace is an absence of war and trouble. Some philosophers have described peace in terms more negative than positive. They believed that if you found peace, you had to eliminate desire and develop a cultivated detachment from things. Some scholars have suggested that if you were to find peace, you had to avoid personal emotional involvement.

Attaining such peace would require living in isolation from other human beings. Some felt that if you were to find peace, you had to develop self-sufficient independence. Many people seek to insulate themselves against life and dependence upon others. The great Greek philosopher, Epicurus, has been quoted as saying, "Peace is the absence of pain in the body or trouble in the mind."

Whatever the nature of the situation may be. God is the producer of peace. God works within us to help us to establish right relationships in every area of life. God enables us to love the unlovable people in such a way that brings inner peace to us.

All because of the peace of God, we can accept those unlovable people as they are; we can forgive them for their shortcoming; we can endure them when they irritate us. With this peace, we can help them rather than hurt them.

Why not let the promise of God's peace live within you?

Parents receive help from post service

Chaplain (Maj.) Frederick "Bud" Rupel
Chief, Chaplain Family LIfe Ministries Center

Dr. James Dobson, the noted psychologist, has this to say about parental role-modeling, "Attitudes are not taught, they are caught."

Children learn by copying what they see other people do. Children are most influenced by the people who spend the most time with them. Parents, you will be an effective role model for your child if you plan time with your child, encourage your child and spend time talking and listening with your child about things that have meaning for both of you.

George Doub, founder of Family Wellness Associates, talks about "the window of influence" each child experiences. After about age 8, peers become more influential than parents. By age 15 or 16 parents have the least influence and peers have the most.

Doub states, "Between ages 8 and 12, children are developmentally ready to use judgment and learn about values."

So how can parents extend their influence to help their adolescent children make better decisions?

They can spend time (quantity as well as quality) with their children discussing values and beliefs.

But it takes more than just talking; parents must also act accordingly. Talk without action will have the reverse affect. Parental values become real when we act on them and discuss them with our children.

If you feel you need help developing your parenting skills, call the Chaplain Family Life Ministries Center at 545-1760.

JMAC

Army wins competition

Sgt. Michelle J. Davis
Bayonet assistant editor

Candidates from Fort Benning's Officer Candidate School plowed past their Navy and Air Force counterparts during the Joint Military Athletic Competition (JMAC) Saturday at Stewart-Watson Field.

After completing eight events including a three-mile run, stretcher carry and tug-o-war, Fort Benning OCS Class 501-98 came out on top with a total of 21 points while the Navy OCS candidates finished second with 15 points.

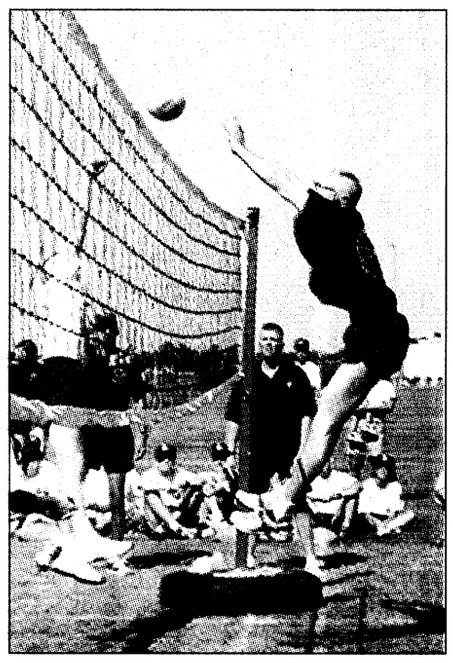
More than 600 officer candidates from the three services came out for the event, which is held twice a year.

This was the second JMAC competition 3rd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment Soldiers have participated in and the second time Fort Benning walked away with the competition's trophy — a "bomb" the winners paint in their choosing and display until the next competition, which is scheduled for next spring at Pensacola Naval Air Station in Florida.

The Army took the lead during the first event as Officer Candidate (OC) Shawn Cross completed the three-mile course in 16:56 while OC Kirsten Swanson finished in 19:59 as the sole, female member of the four-Soldier team.

The teams then headed into the Super Army Physical Fitness Test (APFT) which consisted of the three normal APFT events and a pull-up event. Teams of three completed each event with a one-minute break between each event.

Although the Navy took first in the event, Army OC Ramon Almodovar completed 98 push-ups while OC Tryonne Lastrapes racked up 97 sit-ups.

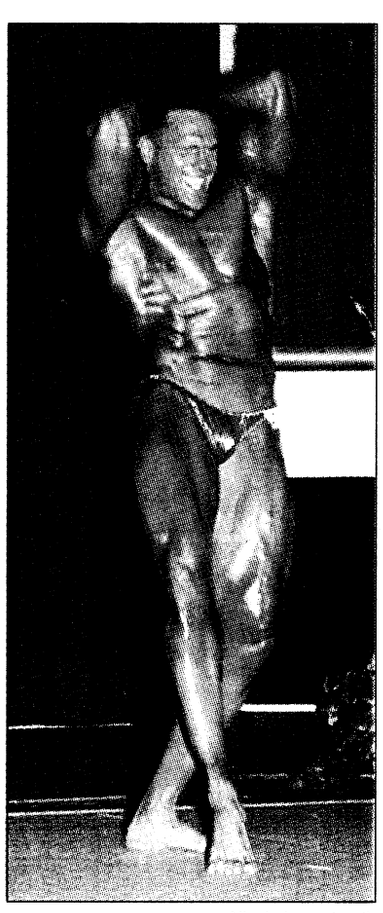


The Army, however, dominated the next two event; the male and female APFT relays, which consisted of the Super APFT events with a different person completing each event.

While the Army team only gained two points in the volleyball event after losing to the Air Force, the team battled back and took first in both the litter carry event and push-up and sit-up relay.

The Navy, however, found their strength for the tug-o-war and beat both the Air Force and Army for first place, but it wasn't enough to beat the Army.

Although the Fort Benning Soldiers were confident of their victory, OC Kevin Burke said winning wasn't the main purpose of the competition.



"The main thing is that we give 100 percent," he said. "Working together with the other services will also help us later on in our careers during joint military operations."

Soldiers battle for bodybuilding title

Nicole Longstreath
Special to the Bayonet©

Twenty-six muscular men and women strutted their stuff to the cheers and screams of an excited audience at the 15th Annual Bodybuilding Championships held at the Main NCO Club Oct. 17.

Beefed-up competitors competed in various categories including Men and Womens' weight divisions and the Mens' Masters for men age 35 and over. Members of the Fort Benning community were allowed to compete for the title of Mr. and Ms. Fort Benning.

Every competitor displayed seven compulsory poses including front double biceps, front lat spread, side chest, back double biceps, back lat spread, triceps and overhead abdominal and thighs.

These poses allowed each judge to see development of every muscle group, including the size, density, definition and hardness of the muscle.

After the poses, the competitors were asked to stand in a relaxed position and make four quarter turns to the right. This allowed the judges to grade symmetry and balanced development.

At the end of each weight division, all contestants of that class were again called to the stage. Each competitor vied for the judges attention as they strived to strike the most creative pose possible.

This creativity and confidence were results of months, even years of intense, physical training. Many competitors at the event had been bodybuilding for several years.

According to Lulu Mitchenor, USAIC Fitness Center manager and coordinator of the event, bodybuilding promotes mental fitness and self-discipline.

Self-discipline, along with a proper diet, Mitchenor said, was the main factor in getting the results the competitors strived for.

"I have seen four or five competitors from the competition at the gym on a regular basis," Mitchenor said. "They have been working out for at least a year."

"Bodybuilding is great and this is the ultimate award," said competitor voted Mr. Fort Benning Roland Huff, master fitness instructor, U.S. Army Physical Fitness School and NCOIC of the Active Duty Bodybuilding Team.

Huff has been bodybuilding for two years and was brought to the sport by a love of fitness, being healthy and looking good.

"When you are fit, you are confident," Mitchenor said. "When you look good, you feel good and bodybuilding gives you a mental advantage."

The winners of each competition are as follows:

Womens' Lightweight (up to 125 lbs) – Patricia Tudor

Womens' Heavyweight (126 lbs and above) – Kim Buck

Womens' Overall – Patricia Tudor

Mens' Lightweight (up to 160 lbs) – Rodney Davis

Mens' Middleweight (161 to 185 lbs) – Carl Butler

Mens' Heavyweight (186 lbs and above) – Robert Sanders

Mens' Overall — Robert Sanders

Mens' Masters (Age 35 and above) — Roland Huff

Mr. Fort Benning — Roland Huff

Ms. Fort Benning — Patricia Tudor

Best Poser — Anthony Bastian

Matadors spike past USARSA faculty

Sgt. Alberto Betancourt
U.S. School of the Americas

Bloody knees and bruised elbows were part of the warrior spirit which helped the Matadors of the U.S. Army School of the Americas' (USARSA) Command and General Staff Officer Course slash past the school's Department of Joint and Combined Operations faculty, 15-7, 15-9 and 15-11 in volleyball action at Audie Murphy Fitness Center Saturday.

The faculty struck first with good serves and strong net for an early 2-0 lead. They continued their immediate on-slaught, extending their lead to 5-1.

The Matadors wouldn't give up though as Matador Jeff Baker, who towered over the net with blocks and spikes, stopped the faculty's momentum and allowed the Matadors to take a 7-6 lead.

As they did in the first game, the faculty opened an early 3-0 lead. They extended the lead to 6-1 before the Matadors finally woke up and closed the gap 6-3.

Both teams volleyed valiantly, but the Matadors scored one by one, tying the game 6-6 and eventually taking an 8-6 lead.

With the crowd chanting for a Matadors' victory, the student warriors increased their lead 10-7.

This time, the faculty was not going down easy. Finding the right set-ups, they tied the game 11-11. With the momentum in their favor and the crowd seemingly quiet, the faculty mustered enough power, winning the second game 15-11.

The third game of the best of five series was a masterpiece of teamwork and sportsmanship by both sides. The wooden floor had been a foe to the player's elbows and knees. Still, the pain did not stop the action as the Matadors jumped ahead 5-0.

The faculty closed in 9-5, but could not stop the Matadors, who won 15-9.

With their backs against the wall, the faculty countered, winning the fourth game 15-3.

In the final game, however, it was the Matadors who stood victorious 15-11, winning the series and 1998 USARSA bragging rights.

Run!

A member of the Columbus-Fort Benning Rugby Club charges downfield during a rugby game Saturday against Montgomery.
The game turned into a practice match after enough Montgomery players failed to show up for the game.
The Cruise-A-Matics, however, still went on to win the scrimmage 31-15.
The club's next game is scheduled for 2 p.m. Saturday against Florida State University.
The rugby grounds are located behind the Dolly Madison factory on Victory Drive.

Air Ambulance

498th provides support to post, community

Pfc. Amy L. Nyland
Bayonet staff writer

When a human life is at stake, often times it is only seconds on the clock which mean the difference between life and death. For the people of Fort Benning and surrounding communities, there should be a sense of security in knowing there is a company that helps make that difference.

Through rain or shine and every possible holiday the 498th Medical Company (Air Ambulance); 56th Medical Evacuation Battalion, 36th Engineer Group (Construction), provides medical evacuation support to Fort Benning and local Georgia and Alabama regions.

Twenty-four hours a day, 365 days a year the company has Soldiers ready and waiting for the call that could possibly save lives.

Recently a call came in that required Soldiers of the 498th to do just that — help save another Soldier's life.

After a routine airborne jump, a Ranger fell into a ravine and suffered what was a possible spinal injury. Because of rough terrain it was nearly impossible to evacuate the Ranger by land. The Soldiers of the 498th made the decision to make an air evacuation by hoisting the 6-foot-2-inch, 220-pound Ranger into the helicopter while it hovered 70 feet overhead.

"I knew we had just one chance to do this right," said Flight Medic Staff Sgt. Frank Perez. "We ended up lifting him straight up through the trees and we did it all using Night Vision goggles under zero moon illumination."

The 498th was required to do the same kind of evacuation just weeks before with a Ranger student who was bitten by a snake at Camp Frank D. Merrill in Dahlonega, Ga.

"It was funny because I was just telling someone that we rarely do live hoist missions," Perez said. "We train for them all the time, but never actually get to do them. Then we end up doing two within weeks of each other."

According to Maj. Vincent C. Carnazza, commander of the 498th Medical Co., the extent to which the 498th's helping hand reaches is immense. Although its primary mission is to the Soldiers and residents of Fort Benning, the company has a local agreement through the Military Assistance Safety and Traffic (MAST) Program to support areas of Georgia and Alabama, which fall into a radius of 100 nautical miles.

Carnazza said the company also shares support of both Ranger camps at Dahlonega and Eglin Air Force Base in Fla. with its sister company out of Fort Bragg, N.C.

BCT brigade to open

Pvt. 2 Nicole M. Massie

Sand Hill will become home to a new basic combat training (BCT) brigade early next year.

In addition to the Infantry Soldiers attending one station unit training (OSUT), Fort Benning will begin training Soldiers of various MOS's in order to meet the training needs of the Army to accommodate the number of Soldiers entering basic training.

One Infantry Training Brigade (ITB) battalion already had experience with BCT Soldiers. The 2nd Battalion, 54th Infantry Regiment trained 1,235 Soldiers of 134 different MOS to help ease the summer rush for other installations earlier this year, said Battalion Commander Lt. Col. Joe Lowder.

"We held six outstanding cycles," Lowder said. "The Soldiers we trained all are proud to have been trained at Fort Benning. They consider themselves very well trained thanks to the professionalism of the drill sergeants."

Now BCT Soldiers will be trained permanently on Sand Hill due to two major factors.

"Fort McClellan, (Ala.) will be closing due to base realignment and Fort Leonard Wood, (Mo.) is downsizing, but the flow of Soldiers has not decreased," said Maj. Ernest Sherrill, executive officer of the new basic training brigade.

Sand Hill was chosen to house the new brigade because there was training and billeting capacity available for the BCT Soldiers.

The new brigade will consist of three battalions and one headquarters service company. One battalion will come from ITB and will begin its transition as its companies complete their current OSUT training cycles.

"The 1st Battalion, 38th Infantry Regiment, Infantry Training Brigade will be the first battalion in the basic training brigade on Sand Hill," said Staff Sgt. David B. Francis, assistant operations NCOIC.

According to Francis, the battalion already has training schedules and is expecting its first cycle to arrive Nov. 23.

The second battalion to stand up will initially be comprised of three additional companies from ITB.

The second battalion will form around these three training companies as the companies complete their second quarter cycles, around April, according to Sherrill.

The brigade will then gain a battalion headquarters and six companies of training structure from Fort Leonard Wood to form the third battalion.

The final organization will be two battalions of five companies and one battalion of four companies.

Although turning civilians into Soldiers in nine weeks may be a change to the OSUT drill sergeants, they are ready to start training, said Francis.

ITB will feel no effect of the transition of the companies, said Lt. Col. Kenneth R. Strickland, battalion commander of 1st Battalion, 38th Infantry Regiment.

"The standards on Sand Hill will remain the same," Francis said. "The rigorous training the OSUT Soldiers receive will be passed down to the new Soldiers."

Post receives award for efforts to employ disabled individuals

Nicole Longstreath
Special to the Bayonet©

For people with disabilities, getting into a building without a ramp and automatic door is difficult enough, but finding a good job and keeping it, is even harder.

For taking an active role in hiring and retaining individuals with targeted disabilities, such as blindness and missing limbs, the Mayor's Committee for Persons with Disabilities awarded Fort Benning Oct. 15 at the Columbus Convention and Trade Center, the 1997-1998 Sustained Recognition Award for its efforts to employ the disabled.

At the ceremony honoring Fort Benning, Georgia's Secretary of State Lewis Massey presented the award to Garrison Commander Col. John M. Mitchell.

This is not the first time Fort Benning was the recipient of awards pertaining to people with disabilities. Every year from 1979 to 1996, Fort Benning received the top award for Large Employer of Individuals with Disabilities.

After 17 years service to the disabled community, Fort Benning took home a Lifetime Recognition Award in 1996 and, according to Gail McKoon, executive director for the mayor's committee, Fort Benning has been reaching out to the disabled community for the past 25 years.

"As long as the committee has existed, Fort Benning has made outstanding efforts to hire and retain people with disabilities," McKoon said.

Not only has Fort Benning made it a priority to recruit disabled employees, accommodating them has also become paramount.

Fort Benning has accommodated some of its 40 disabled employees with equipment such as modified computer hardware and interpreters and telephones for the deaf.

Barbara Pigg, Fort Benning's coordinator for individuals with disabilities, said it is imperative to take care of disabled employees.

"If the community doesn't support the disabled population, they will be overlooked," Pigg said. "As a society, we need to take care of our own people by letting them prove what they are capable of."

This desire to prove one's self is what McKoon believes makes hiring disabled people beneficial to both employers and the disabled employees.

"Hiring the disabled is mutually beneficial because employers get a good employee that tries harder and does a better job."

Fort Benning will observe Halloween from 6 to 8 p.m. Saturday. Parents are reminded to make sure children carry flashlights after dark. For other trick or treating guidelines, see page A2.

Benning students win art contest

Pfc. Amy L. Nyland
Bayonet staff writer

It was a drawing of a typical military family. It had a mom, dad, little brother and dog all standing on a bright green lawn with a yellow sun beating down.

However, what may have been just a typical drawing for Kimberlee Fowler, a fourth-grader at Dexter Elementary, has helped make her a star. Standing in front of television cameras, reporters and flashing photographers, Fowler was honored at Monday's Fort Benning Schools' board meeting for winning the 1998 YMCA Armed Services Military Family Week Poster Contest.

Up against children from throughout the military, the 9-year- old's drawing was chosen to appear on the 1998 YMCA Armed Services Military Family Week Poster which will be distributed to military installations worldwide.

Now, Fowler and her mother, Christina, younger brother Patrick and father, Staff Sgt. Christopher Fowler, Company A, 2nd Battalion, 54th Infantry Regiment, Infantry Training Brigade, will head to Washington D.C. Nov. 7 to be presented with a $5,000 U.S. Savings Bond and a trip to view the Vincent Van Gogh art exhibit at the National Gallery of Art.

"I was shocked," Fowler said. "When I found out, I was just stunned."

"I'm excited to get to go to Washington D.C. because I've never been there before. I want to look around and see some monuments and the White House," she said.

Kimberlee's parents were just as excited about their daughter winning the poster contest.

"It's outstanding," Christopher said. "We are so proud of our daughter. We are so excited and it's still kind of hard to believe."

Christina said they probably won't realize to what extent their daughter's winning means until they get to Washington D.C.

She said it still hasn't hit her that people from all over the world will be able to see Kimberlee's artwork.

"That's what's weird for me," Christina said. "Our friends all the way in Germany are going to see these posters."

In addition to Fowler's winning, one winner from each branch of military service was named. Not only can Fort Benning be proud of the fact that it is home to the overall winner of the contest, but it also houses the individual service winner as well.

James Zadra, a fifth-grader at Wilson Elementary School, will receive a $500 U.S. Savings Bond for his drawing which was chosen out of all the Army installations.

What may make the winnings even more memorable is the fact that both the students have the same art teacher.

Audrey Leanza, art teacher at Dexter and Wilson Elementary Schools, said she was informed about the contest about a week after the children had come back to school and decided it would be a good thing for the children to enter.

The children spent three weeks on the posters and Leanza said she talked to her students about placement and form.

Nine-year-old Kimberlee Fowler poses with her drawing which won an armed forces poster contest.

She said she stressed the fact that there should be no stick people and the drawings should be bigger than their hands.

When Leanza learned that both Fowler and Zadra were winners she said she was tickled.

"It is such a hoot," Leanza said. "Seriously, my words were what a hoot! I mean when you think about it, it is amazing. It's truly amazing."

"We know we have the best schools at Fort Benning and we know we have the best kids, so right then and there that tells the story."

Sweet tooth brings inner child to surface

Sgt. Michelle J. Davis
Bayonet acting editor

Have you ever noticed that people get a tad bit weirder this time of year? Of course, it's got to be pretty hard for some people to get any stranger.

commentary

I'm not sure if it's the spirit of Halloween that brings it out of them or just sheer terror from the onset of winter.

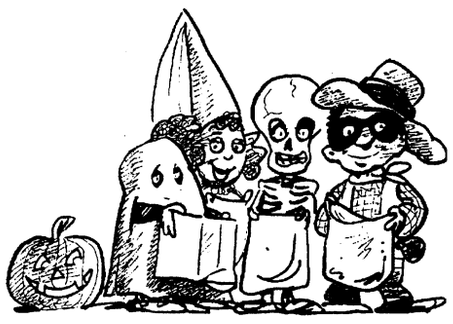
Despite the increase in bizarre and unusual characters, Halloween has always been one of my favorite holidays for many reasons.

Of course, the number one reason is the candy. Sure, you get candy at Easter and Christmas, but they actually make you work for it at Halloween. You may bring home goodies totaling more than 20,000 calories, but at least you'll walk off a whole 50 or so.

Besides the extra exercise, Halloween also provides trick or treaters with their annual lesson in courage.

In every neighborhood, there's always one house your friends fear is haunted. Despite your fear, your parents make you go up to the house, which in reality is inhabited by an old lady with 30 cats. It's sort of funny, but have you ever noticed it's always the people you don't trust who hand out homemade items like fresh-baked cookies or popcorn balls? They look so good and then you end up throwing them out or feeding them to the dog.

Anyway, back to talking about me. Another reason I like Halloween is it makes me appreciate my height — for once. Although I've dreamed of towering over people, my five-foot, two-inch stature allows me to still make my candy rounds. I can trick or treat until I'm 90 and no one would say a thing.



Well, I guess it's the height factor and that I refuse to grow up. I can't help it; I like the idea of pretending to be someone different if only for a day.

When I was in grade school, our teachers always suggested dressing up like someone you wanted to be when you got older. Half of my class still dressed up like up Freddy, Jason or one of the New Kids on the Block. Well, at least I chose more realistic goals like Wonder Woman or in fourth grade I did a smashing imitation of Ed Grimley from Saturday Night Live. It took me weeks to get the gel out of my hair, but I guess you have to pay some price for being a party animal.

Not only was that whole experience a little traumatizing, but it didn't help me out either because I still don't know what I want to be when I grow up. But, I must say that I did have a lot of fun and in the end, I guess that's what really matters — not how many caramel candies or chocolate-covered peanuts you ingest.

Safety guidelines keep "trick or treaters" safe

USAIC Safety Office

Fort Benning will observe Halloween from 6 to 8 p.m. Saturday (the only day trick or treating is permitted). This fun time for children can be tragic if common sense precautions are ignored.

Parents can ensure their child's safety with the following actions:

•Children under 13 years old are allowed to go trick or treating. An older person (14 years or older) must accompany pre-school children.

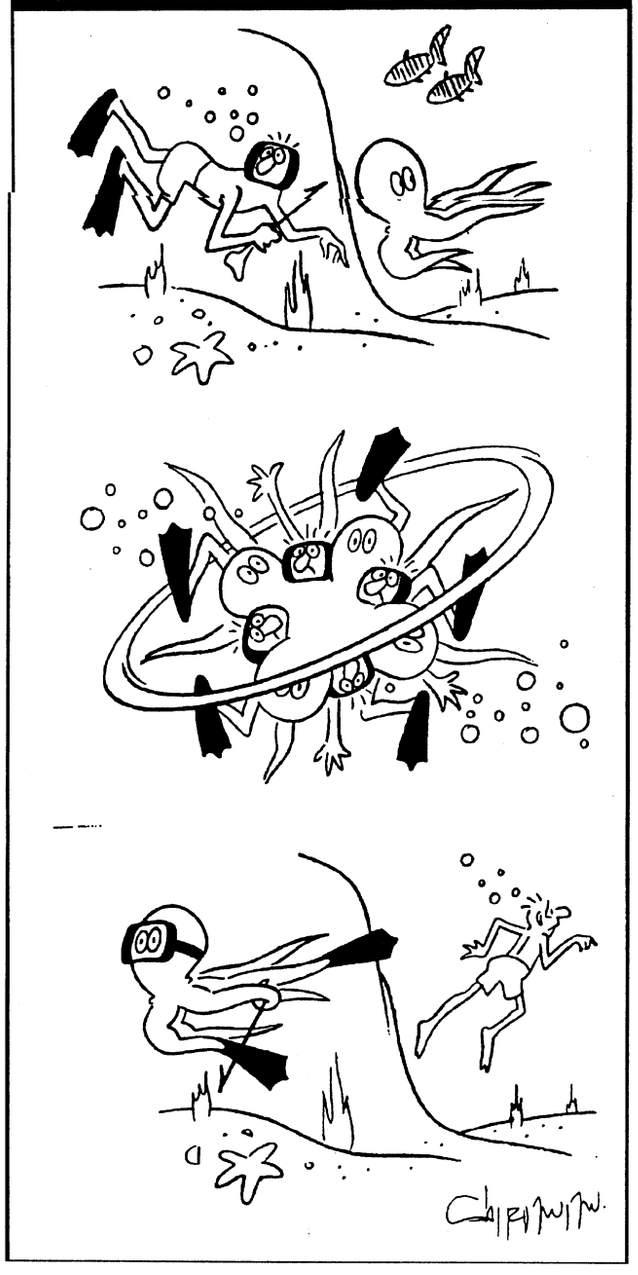
•Limit trick or treating only to the housing area in which the participants reside and approach only residences with lighted entryways.

•Children should wear light-colored, fire-resistant costumes, short enough to prevent tripping. Costumes can be marked with reflective tape or 'glow' spray paint so they can pick up auto headlights and other lights.

•Observe all basic safety precautions. Use sidewalks and crosswalks; don't cut through yards. Look in all directions before walking across the street.

•Wear masks or head coverings that do not restrict vision. Use colorful facial makeup as much as possible.

•Ensure pet owners take measures to prevent pets from being a nuisance or a menace to children. Caution children about the wrongs of vandalism and causing damage to the property of others.



•Ensure children carry flashlights after dark. If a child carries a pumpkin, it should be lit with a battery device, not a candle.

•Never allow children to eat anything until it is inspected. Give children a full meal before they goes trick or treating.

The time it takes to protect our children is insignificant compared to the lifetime of regret a mishap can cause. Enjoy the occasion but make sure your child is well-prepared to avoid accidents and injuries.

Have a safe and happy Halloween!

TALL STORY

Bayonet addresses event coverage, deadlines

Editor's note: Many people call us with questions about how to get their information in the paper or with erroneous information about deadlines, so we have compiled the following for your information.

Our mission

The Bayonet is here to serve you — our audience. Our mission is to provide timely, accurate and truthful information that supports Army goals and directives.

We get a lot of feedback from readers, and we appreciate your letters, story ideas and comments. We appreciate the positive comments and we do our best to address the negative ones.

As Fort Benning's only authorized newspaper, we are dedicated to giving you the most complete coverage possible. In order to do this, we rely on members of our audience to keep us informed about their unit's or directorate's activities.

Coverage of events

The staff of The Bayonet enjoys covering newsworthy events on post that are timely and pertinent to our readers. Some events we cover include brigade-level changes of command, changes in post policies or procedures and other postwide events.

We don't have enough personnel to cover everything on post, so we focus on the events that affect most of the post.

Also due to our limited number of personnel, we prefer that coverage requests be submitted at least two weeks in advance.

Some events we do not send a reporter to cover are parties, dinners, dining events, dances, balls, teas, coffees, club and organization meetings and elections, award presentations, changes of command below the battalion level, check presentations and group photos.

The frequency of such events on post and small number of photojournalists on The Bayonet staff prohibits us from covering these sorts of events.

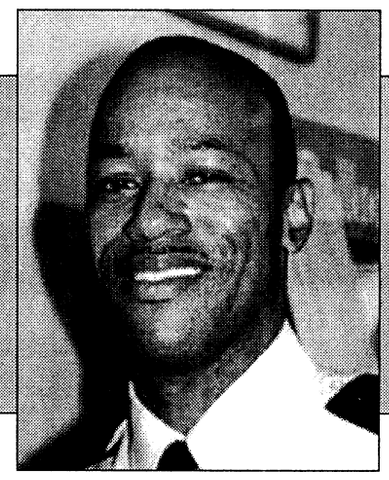
If you need a photographer to record events for official purposes, call the Training and Audiovisual Support Center's photo lab at 545-4417.

Deadlines

Film, photos, stories, letters to the editor and other news items intended for The Bayonet must arrive in our office no later than noon Friday prior to the next week's publication.

The Bayonet's office is located in Room 606 in Infantry Hall.

Give us your story ideas



If you believe you have a good story idea and want to write the story yourself, call us to see if we're interested. We reserve the right to edit all stories for publication and we cannot guarantee if or when submitted stories will appear in the paper. CFC set to wrap up

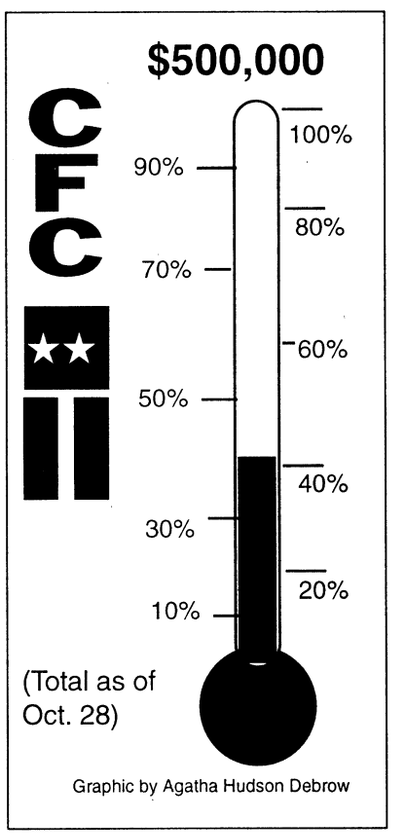
USAIC Public Affairs Office

The 1998 Combined Federal Campaign (CFC) is only a week away from being over. The official close-out date is Nov. 6. Now more than ever, units and activities need to turn in their campaign contributions.

As of Oct. 28, total combined campaign contributions were at $210,000 or 41 percent of the 1998 goal of $500,000.



While many units prefer to turn in their money just as the campaign is coming to a close, this creates a major backlog at the CFC office.

Chuck Walls, garrison manager, said this gives the impression that our campaign may be doing poorly, when in reality, the post is ahead of where they need to be.

"Please get your money to the office now," he said. "It helps us and gives you the credit you deserve before the end of the campaign."

Walls also wanted to remind the community that any contributions for the Fort Benning and Columbus areas can be given through donations to the "Communities that Care" designation 9000.

"We would want to thank everyone for the tremendous amount of hard work and effort on this campaign," Walls said.

Air: Company performs medical evacuations

The 134 people who comprise the three platoons of the 498th Medical Company come from the entire spectrum of MOSs.

Everyone from communications, electricians and mechanics to supply and motorpool personnel are essential to making sure the company is ready to go at a moment's notice, Carnazza said.

He added, everyone works together in a hand and glove operation.

"Often times, the guys on the tip of the spear, the ones that are actually flying the mission get a lot of the accolades and the pats on the backs," Carnazza said. "But what the flight platoon does out there couldn't be done without any of the people behind the scenes."

With a minimum of six Soldiers continually pulling 24-hour duty and at least two of the company's 15 aircraft always ready to go, the Soldiers' mission is continuous.

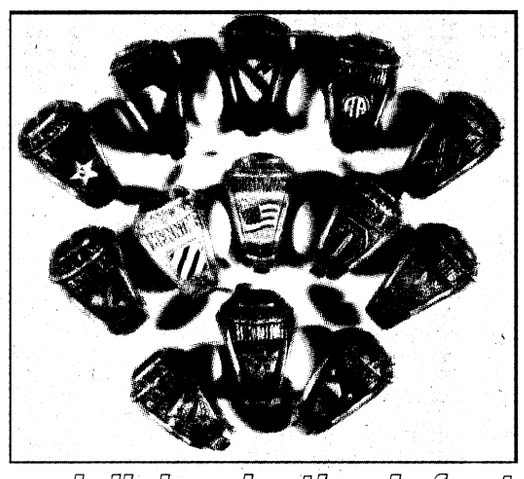
According to Capt. Stephen Barnes, operations officer, 498th Medical Co., serious instances such as those involving the Rangers are pretty rare and most of the routine missions they fly involve common injuries that occur while Soldiers are training around post.

"There are a lot of associated risks with keeping a military trained and ready to fight," Barnes said. "There are a lot of moving pieces and training being done at night, and accidents are bound to happen," he said. "We like going through a night where we don't get a mission because that means nobody has gotten hurt. But when somebody is injured, I'm glad that we are able to respond in a timely manner."

Barnes said with the 498th's MAST mission they encounter a lot of roadside pick-ups from car accidents and other incidents such as seizure and heart attack victims.

He said as somber as it seems, some of the scenes they encounter are comparable to that of war.

"Often times what we see in roadside accidents are probably the closest duplication of what we will see in combat," Barnes said. "But not only are the Soldiers providing a vital medical service, they are also honing their treatment skills which will help them clear the battlefield."



Chief Warrant Officer 3 Rick Davis, pilot in command, said the job is challenging, but well worth it when he is able to help save a life.

"Sometimes you won't get a mission for quite awhile, but when you do get the call and you save a life it makes up for everything," Davis said. "The gratification comes when you get the phone call saying that patient is doing all right."

Barnes said he believes it takes a person who has a strong desire to help their fellow man do the job.

"The days are long, but the rewards are high," Barnes said. "If people could see what the Soldiers of Fort Benning do on a day-to-day basis and the level of responsibility involved they would be very proud of them. Overall the Soldiers of the 498th know that for them, the payback is a lifesaving MEDEVAC."

Volunteers make difference in community

Jill Crider
Installation volunteer coordinator

Have you ever been asked to "register" as a volunteer? How about "recording and reporting" your volunteer hours? Did you do it? Did you wonder why or what it meant? Well, let me explain a little bit about what it means here at Fort Benning.

When Fort Benning volunteers register and report volunteer time, they are promoting a positive community, agency, unit and individual relationship.

Volunteers provide a better understanding of the need for and the importance of the service. Documentation of volunteer service can mean the difference in continuing or eliminating programs and activities that volunteers are directly involved in.

Members of the community who are involved in, or responsible for, providing and maintaining those services can become a most vocal ally and proof that volunteer efforts are important.

Think of every hour of volunteer time as a "little letter of support." These "letters" reflect a remedy to a problem, a change in a policy or a program, a new project or a much needed service. These "letters" advocate support for a worthwhile effort. Remember, if it's worth the time, it might be worth the entire community's time.

Every volunteer and every volunteer hour contributed to an agency increases the level of community support. That positive image can go a long way in acquiring and maintaining services, programs and activities.

Regardless of the type of volunteering that is served, volunteers want it to be meaningful, helpful and effective to those served. If volunteers believe their organization contributes to the good of the community, then they want it to be the best it can be.

These are tough times that we live in, so, now more than ever we need to inspire, motivate and initiate the good in all of us and in our community. The documentation and reporting of volunteer contributions can be the "good news" each month that inspires the best in all of us.

The electronic marquee on Dixie Road and the front gate welcome sign will display the cumulative hours and dollar amount value of the community's volunteer service. The information will be displayed intermittently for the first week of each month. The volunteer profile column will feature the cumulative amounts.

For more information, call or visit the Installation Coordinator's office located in the FUN Center, Building 359, Ingersoll Street or call 545-3016.

ACAP center welcomes counselor

Debbie Henshaw
Army Career and Alumni Program

The Army Career and Alumni Program welcomed a new ACAP counselor who will assist the Soldiers of Fort Benning in a variety of different ways.

"We are pleased to welcome Stacey Vigil to the ACAP Center in Soldiers' Plaza. As an ACAP counselor, she will assist separating Soldiers, spouses and civil service workers with transition planning, understanding benefits and entitlements, how to conduct a successful job search, skills assessment, resume writing and interview preparation," said Harold Ericksen, manager of the Fort Benning ACAP Center.

Vigil has an Industrial Management degree from Georgia Institute of Technology and a Master of Arts degree in Instructional Education from Brenau University. She has extensive experience in the human resources arena with more than 10 years in the employee benefits market. Her most recent experience was as a consultant to a California-based manufacturer of semi-conductors and computer processors.

"I am a Columbus native and find that the Columbus area has experienced tremendous growth during the years that I attended college and began my career," Vigil said. "During my career, I have been an active member of several professional organizations and a volunteer for child advocacy organizations in several of the cities which I have lived."

"Stacey brings to the ACAP Center a unique background and special insights into the corporate hiring process. She adds another dimension to our staff and this will benefit our separating Soldiers as they enter the job search," Ericksen said.

Home schooled students receive benefits

Army News Service

Young men and women who earn their high school diploma through home schooling may receive the same Army benefits as those students who graduate from a traditional high school.

Home schooled students can now participate in the full range of Army benefits if they decide to enlist.

With the popularity of home schooling increasing over the years, it became necessary to offer equal enlistment opportunities to those earning their high school diploma at home.

Home-schooled students now, in addition to the Montgomery GI Bill, can receive full Army College Fund benefits, if qualified.

The Army College Fund provides up to $40,000 for college for those who elect to participate.

Home-schooled young men and women may also qualify for the Armys loan repayment program, which gives students up to $65,000 to repay federally insured student loans.

Another new benefit for the home-schooled student is the enlistment bonus of up to $12,000 for enlistment in certain military occupational specialties.

Previously, home-schooled students did not qualify for the Army College Fund, Loan Repayment Program or for enlistment bonuses.

For more information on Army opportunities, call the local Army recruiter, or call 1-800-USA-ARMY, or visit the recruiting web site at www.goarmy.com.

Pre-Ranger

IOBC offers preparatory course

Capt. Joel Krauss
Infantry Officer Basic Course

As each Infantry Officer Basic Course (IOBC) graduation ceremony comes to a close, there is one thing that each officer is looking forward to with a mixture of anticipation, excitement and not a little apprehension — Ranger School. The IOBC, is, for many officers, the first step in a series of schools preparing them for the challenge of leading Soldiers in war and peace. The next step for the majority of officers is attendance at the U.S. Army Ranger Course. While IOBC prepares the lieutenant for the basics of Infantry leadership, the Ranger Course is the real "proving ground" for Infantrymen. To prepare for this challenge, the 2nd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment (IOBC) has initiated its own Pre-Ranger Course.

The IOBC Pre-Ranger Course is two weeks in length and has a strict philosophy of preparing, teaching and mentoring an officer for success at Ranger School. Contained within this philosophy is the battalion's motto: Train the Leaders. The course focuses on physical and mental toughening as well as detailed planning using combat orders, coordinations and planning considerations as a vehicle to "polish" the IOBC student into a confident and successful Ranger student.

The Pre-Ranger Course is conducted on Garnsey Range at the newly constructed Pre-Ranger site and averages about 17 hours of training a day. The instruction is conducted primarily by Ranger-qualified members of the battalion's Tactical Leadership Branch augmented by Ranger-qualified cadre from the battalion's three line companies. The result is a tough, challenging and intense precursor to the Ranger Course.

Pre-Ranger Class 1-99 was conducted Sept. 23 through Oct. 1 and was a success as some 40 officers and enlisted Soldiers graduated. The course is also open to enlisted Soldiers and officers from all tenant units on Fort Benning. While the primary focus of the battalion's effort is on preparing its lieutenants for successful completion of the Ranger Course, any Soldier with a current physical, letter of release from his unit and the desire to attend can participate (based on projected class fill and successful completion of the Army Physical Fitness Test and Combat Water Survival Test).

For more information on attending the IOBC Pre-Ranger Course, interested Soldiers and officers should contact their school's NCO and make coordination through Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 2nd Bn., 11th Inf. Regt. at 545-5016.

Engineers end construction season

1st Lt. William M. Walker
63rd Engineer Company (CSE)

The 63rd Engineer Company (Combat Support Equipment), 36th Engineer Group (Construction), recently ended its construction season, upon completion of the Boundary Road Sediment Pond Project.

The season began in February and ended in late September. During the season, the 63rd concentrated its efforts on completing projects on Fort Benning such as road and range upgrades.

"The post projects provided excellent training opportunities for the Soldiers of the 63rd, while saving the post more than $340,000," said 1st Lt. Will Brown, 63rd's executive officer.

During September, the 63rd Engineer Company (CSE) took on a project in the northeast corner of the post on Boundary Road. Erosion in a low area along the road caused silt to flow across the road and enter farmland just off post. The post tasked the 63rd to raise the road about five feet in this low area and create a sediment pond to collect the silt, which would prevent it from reaching land off post.

Second Platoon, headed by 1st Lt. Mona Pennister and Sgt. 1st Class Tony Atkins, acted as the lead element in the construction project. The company established a borrow pit to provide fill material for the project site.

The Soldiers excavated more than 6,000 cubic yards of fill to raise the road. After raising the road, the engineers installed a double culvert to provide drainage. Nearly 500 tons of riprap and 400 sandbags were placed at the entrance and exit of the culverts.

In order to meet their deadline, the Soldiers sometimes worked around the clock.

"The company completed the project ahead of schedule due to the teamwork and motivation displayed by our Soldiers," Pennister said.

The 63rd conducted an extensive field exercise in conjunction with this road project in order to train the company in peacekeeping operations. The unit deployed to Mobley Strip, an abandoned airstrip above Hastings Range, and set up a base camp from which the Soldiers could carry out the construction project.

Safety remained the focus of all Soldiers throughout this project and exercise. The company completed the project with no incidents or injuries. Section leaders gave a safety brief prior to beginning each work day and NCOs were strategically placed on the project site to ensure safe operating procedures were followed at all times.

"The Soldiers followed safety guidelines throughout the exercise, which resulted in a quality project completed in a short time with no incidents," Brown said.

The Maintenance Platoon performed in an outstanding manner and maintained an operational readiness rate of over 95 percent, said Capt. Robert H. Carr, company commander. "We are in an excellent maintenance posture due to the hard work and dedication of the mechanics."

The Headquarters Platoon sustained the company during the entire operation and provided command and control throughout the exercise. The operations cell remained in direct communication with the rear detachment via radio at a distance of more than 30 miles.

Due to their efforts, the Soldiers of the 63rd Engineer Company (CSE) completed the project and construction season and gained priceless technical knowledge and aided the post.

Benning Soldier demonstrates Land Warrior Fighting System

TRADOC News Service

Spc. John Petree amazes crowds across the United States and in Europe by shooting targets while he's facing away from the range.

Petree is a good shot, but he's not a phenomenal, clairvoyant marksman. So how does he do it?

Petree's ability lies in the Land Warrior Fighting System that he demonstrates to members of Congress and to military leaders in the United States and overseas.

"If the system does everything it's anticipated it will do, the American Infantry Soldier in the early 21st century will be the most deadly Soldier in the world," he said.

Development of the system is the responsibility of the Training and Doctrine Command Systems Manager - Soldier (TSM-Soldier) at Fort Benning.

"We pretty much work on anything that's worn, carried or consumed by a Soldier in a tactical environment," Petree said. "We're also trying to equip him with digital communications and the very best equipment to improve his survivability and lethality."

While Petree travels to demonstrate the Land Warrior system's capabilities, a group of Soldiers at Fort Bragg, N.C., are going to subject it to field conditions.

"We're going to use a tactical platoon to address fightability and system design issues to see if it does enhance lethality, survivability, mobility, sustainment and command and control for Soldiers in conventional Infantry dismounted forces," Petree said

The Land Warrior system includes an integrated Global Positioning System (GPS) within a Soldier's computer and radio subsystem, still video, night vision capability, infrared targeting and a heads-up display.

The heads-up display and the infrared targeting system let a Soldier hide behind a building or a tree and shoot the M-4 carbine. Only the arms holding the carbine are exposed to enemy fire.

"When I initially started working with the Land Warrior system, I did have a little bit of difficulty engaging the targets," Petree said. "It takes practice to start picking them up."

Since then he has hit targets at distances exceeding 500 meters.

A "white-hot, black-hot" feature helps to differentiate between body heat and surrounding objects, even on hot summer days.

Petree looks through a monocular display to pick out his targets, or just to check out the terrain with the thermal sight. A third generation night vision tube has an adjustable iris that opens in low light, but can also close quickly to protect the eye from sudden bursts of bright light.

"Keep in mind you've only got a monocular display for one eye, so your other eye can adapt quickly even if an illuminating round zeros out the lens," he said.

Soldiers will also have eye protection from lasers and ballistics.

Three different shades of lenses — dark, medium and clear — can stop 17-grain projectiles, roughly the size of shotgun pellets, traveling at up to 850 feet per second. The dark lens is the only one worn for laser protection, however.

Batteries that power the system can operate for 12 hours in combat mode. The thermal sight on the rifle has its own battery pack in case the main batteries die or are severely damaged. A soldier can continue to fight with the rifle-mounted thermal sight.

Soldiers can take single digitized photos through the thermal sight) or a video camera and transmit them to leaders on the battlefield. The video camera is mounted on a side rail on the M-4 carbine. The radio allows Soldiers to communicate by voice or digitally within the fire team, squad or platoon.

The computer and radio subsystem with the integrated GPS are in a backpack that fits over body armor.

Several parts of the system that Petree demonstrates have already been made smaller. The computer and GPS have been combined so the backpack is shorter. Batteries are now located on the Soldier's left hip. Developers expect the miniaturized equipment will be integrated within the overall system in the near future.

Even the familiar canteen may be replaced. A version of a flat tank carried on the back that is popular with cyclists is in the works. A tube extending from the tank will let Soldiers drink in any condition without using their hands.

Petree, who left the Army for one-and-a-half years after a three-year hitch, has been demonstrating the Land Warrior Fighting System since he reentered service in December 1997. He is the fourth Soldier to do the job.

He plans to return to an Infantry unit at the end of his tour. Until then, he will continue to travel. He has already been to Paris, Brussels and Amsterdam, as well as "about every duty station in the Army" in the United States. His sightseeing at all of those places is limited to the travel to and from the airports and ranges where demonstrations are staged.

Whoever replaces him will not be of a rank higher than sergeant.

"We like to have a junior soldier performing the demonstrations," Petree said. "That way we can show that Soldiers who will use the Land Warrior system in the future can be easily trained to operate it."

63rd Eng. Soldiers catch glimpse of prisoners' pain at Andersonville

2nd Lt. Heather Andrews
63rd Engineer Company

Soldiers of the 63rd Engineer Company (CSE) were able to escape from the motorpool and get a glimpse of the past Oct. 16 as they traveled an hour-and-a-half southwest of Fort Benning to the small town of Andersonville.

Andersonville is the location of Camp Sumter, one of the Confederate military prisons established during the Civil War.

Soldiers were taken back in time as they were guided through the 26.5 acres of the Civil War Prisoner Camp. These grounds penned in more than 41,000 Union Soldiers between February of 1864 and April of 1865, over 26,000 of which died.

The history of the Army values was alive at Andersonville. Soldiers witnessed the meaning of selfless service, loyalty, duty and honor to one's country. Often the flag was the only driving force that kept these prisoners alive.

It may be important that Soldiers of today witness how their predecessors suffered and fought in order to appreciate what we have and how Soldiers live today.

Seeing what Soldiers of the past gave up for their country can put a month in the field or a short deployment into perspective. Soldiers of the 63rd Eng. Co. may have been given an appreciation of military history and were educated on how the Army has developed the values.

Soldiers witnessed replicas of the 17-foot-high stockade that barred in the prisoners, and the hasty shelters that prisoners built in the open camp. They heard stories of how the prisoners lived, suffered and died in this small (in area) but large (in occupancy) POW Camp which imprisoned more than 32,000 men.

The Soldiers also saw the many holes dug deep into the earth that the prisoners constructed as futile attempts for escape. Photographs of what some of the men, decreased in body weight by nearly 50 percent, looked like prior to death at Andersonville also were exhibited.

The haunting reality of the hardship that the Andersonville prisoners experienced may have been relived by the Soldiers' walk a quarter mile down the road to the Andersonville National Cemetery. This burial ground was established for prisoners who died at Andersonville and it quickly grew as death rates soared as high as 100 per day in the hot summer months of 1864.

Soldiers saw the 12,848 simple marble headstones that stated name, rank, and home state of the union Soldiers who suffered died and were buried at Andersonville.

According to 1st. Sgt Julio Sanchez, the biggest lesson the Soldiers learned is that freedom is something you take for granted until it is taken from you.

The Soldiers also toured the POW Museum on the grounds which was recently built to honor the over 800,000 of the nation's past.

Soldiers also were given the opportunity to hear testimonies of prisoners who survived and read accounts of those who were not quite as lucky.

PTO hosts party to raise money for students

What do 65 cakes and 38 creatively decorated pumpkins have in common? The donated baked goods and pumpkins were part of the fall festivities held at Dexter Elementary Saturday.

Hundreds of participants attended the annual fundraiser, which was sponsored by the Parent Teacher Organization (PTO) and supported by volunteers.

"The festival is a great deal of fun for everyone involved and the fundraiser generates money for items that benefit the children at Dexter," said Kyle Straits, PTO president. "The teachers provide a wish list to the PTO each year and the money raised goes toward the purchase of needed goods the school cannot provide."

The activities, rides and contests included face painting, a spacewalk, horse rides, arts and crafts, hula-hoop contest, a cake walk, an appearance by McGruff the crime dog, a grungy shoe contest and pumpkin decorating.

"The pumpkin decorating contest was a huge success," Straits said. "The children were asked to submit a decorated pumpkin, designed and created by the child. There were so many great ideas that it was tough choosing the winners."

"The fall festival is a lot of fun, especially the hula-hoop contest," said 10-year-old Lindsay Eidenberg, a fifth grader at Dexter.

The pumpkins winners, pre-kindergarten to second grade were: first place — Joey Saragosa, second — Shelli Bond and third — Tyler Straits. Winners from the third through fifth grade were: first — Madeline Flores, second — Megan McMahon and third — Julian Steinbacher.

Fifth-grader Lindsey Eidenberf participates in a hula-hoop contest during the festival.

FORT BENNING SCHOOLS

Board discusses issues

Erin A. Nash
Special to the Bayonet©

The October meeting of the Fort Benning Schools' school board drew the media, if only for a short time, in recognition of two Fort Benning students. The board also bade farewell to a member, heard an update on adventure learning and also an update on Literacy Place.

The meeting started with the recognition of fourth-grader Kimberlee Fowler, a student at Dexter, and fifth-grader James Zadra, a student at Wilson.

"This is such an exciting day for Fort Benning Schools and the whole post," said Dr. Dell McMullen, superintendent of Fort Benning Schools. "It's absolutely incredible."

McMullen was referring to the fact that Fowler and Zadra were both winners in the Armed Services YMCA poster contest. Fowler won a $5,000 savings bond and Zadra won a $500 savings bond.

Audrey Leanza, art teacher at Dexter and Wilson, was given a compass pin in recognition of her hard work and dedication to art and to her students.

After the media left, it was back to business for the school board.

The school board said goodbye to Staff Sgt. Reba Raymond, representative from Stowers, as she prepares to move off-post. Raymond was given a plaque from McMullen.

The next order of business was an update on Director of Technology Jerry Christy's, upcoming adventure learning trip to Antarctica.

"It's incredible what has transpired," Christy said. "The website has taken off and grown by leaps and bounds."

Christy also had good news regarding the trip.

"We have received the support of Land's End, who will sponsor an on-line chat from the ship," Christy said.

Christy leaves for Antarctica Nov. 20 and will return Dec. 3. Daily journals and all other information can be found at www.etc.colstate.edu/jchristy.

Kathy Einhorn, director of curriculum, and Debra Mabry, principal of Loyd, then gave board members an update on Literacy Place, the new language arts program being used throughout Fort Benning Schools.

"A literacy place room is a room where children learn to love to read," Einhorn said.

They showed a tape of a second-grade classroom where Literacy Place was being utilized.

"The kids are excited about writing and even the shy kids can be more active," Mabry said.

"It is an exemplary program," McMullen said. "We truly have high expectations for it."

McMullen then gave the superintendent's report, which announced the selection of Dr. Thomas Dignan as the new principal of Faith.

"Dr. Dignan is now principal of Baumholder American High School in Baumholder, Germany," McMullen said. "The school is a seven through 12 grade school so his experience with middle school students is strong. We are extremely pleased that Dr. Dignan will become part of the Fort Benning team and expect him in early December."

The next school board meeting will be held on Nov. 23 in the Administration building on Custer Road.

Volunteers lend hand to clean up 'hooch'

Dexter Elementary School

If people look closely, they may see that the stream which runs along the front of Infantry Hall and winds around the one-mile track is a lot cleaner this week. On Oct. 17, 33 students, parents and teachers from Dexter Elementary School collected rakes, work gloves and garbage bags and set out to "Help the Hooch." The annual event is sponsored by the Keep Columbus Beautiful Commission.

Help the Hooch participants from all around Columbus cleaned up along rivers and streams. Each participant then received a free student-designed t-shirt and a hotdog lunch at Golden Park after the event. Many Dexter students entered the designs in the t-shirt designing contest in early October in anticipation of the day. Each of those entries was on display at Golden Park.

The Dexter students are all members of afterschool environmental clubs. The fifth-grade participants are Green Thumbs members, a club sponsored by first-grade teacher Linda Turner. Turner has coordinated this activity for Dexter students for the past four years.

"Helping the Hooch is always a lot of fun and the students feel good about themselves after helping in such a concrete way," Turner said.

The third- and fourth-grade participants are all members of Earth Watchers, a club sponsored by third-grade teacher Terri Bond.

"We believe that caring begins with individual responsibility," Bond said. "That is why our clubs meet each Thursday afternoon to learn about and practice ways an individual can have a positive impact on the earth."

Faith students help keep Columbus beautiful

Angela DeMien
Faith Middle School student

The "Help the Hooch" program, sponsored by the Keep Columbus Beautiful Commission, was an interesting experience for the students of Faith Middle School.

The students, along with staff and parent volunteers, worked in teams to clean the Uchee Creek recreation area at Fort Benning Oct. 17. During the clean-up, students found many objects such as paper, plastic, cigarette ends, tires and wire — objects you might not expect to find at a park.

The students were able to work together, meet new people and participate in a thank-you celebration at Golden Park in Columbus following the clean-up. Lunch, t-shirts, games and fun activities were provided by the Keep Columbus Beautiful Commission.

In addition to contributing to their community, the students were able to earn credit for community service which could be applied toward the Faith Middle School discipline program or their participation in activities such as the Junior Honor Society.

At the conclusion of the day, students were proud of the work they had done.

ask the judge

Office of the Staff Judge Advocate

Q: I signed a contract to buy items from a door-to-door salesman. I received some of the items a couple of weeks later, but it didn't look anything like the pictures in the brochures. The other things that I bought never came at all. When I called to complain, they said that I had to pay because it was past the three-day cancellation period. They also said I could be prosecuted under U.C.M.J. if I didn't pay. Is this true?

A: Many clients at the Legal Assistance Division have had similar experiences. Some door-to-door salespersons may misstate the law to confuse and scare people. If Soldiers know the facts, then these salespersons won't be able to intimidate them. Hopefully, Soldiers will avoid entering such contracts all together.

There is a three-day cancellation law for door-to-door sales and other sales outside the seller's normal place of business. This is a federal law and it's called the "cooling off rule." The law gives persons the right to cancel the contract if the company is notified in writing by the midnight of the third business day following the sale. The contract should contain notice of this right to cancel. Additionally, the salesperson should inform a customer about the right to cancel the contract. Customers should receive two copies of the contract and cancellation form with the seller's name and address. Customers can also write a letter canceling the sale. They should send it return receipt requested, in case they need to prove that they sent it in time.

The "cooling off rule" gives an absolute right to cancel if the requirements are met and you also keep all other agreements under the law. In other words if a customer misses the three-day time period, they can still make other claims. For instance, in this example, the seller may have materially breached the contract or violated express warranties. An attorney needs to evaluate all of the facts in the situation in order to advise a customer on the best course of action.

People should call the Legal Assistance Division at 545-3281 for an appointment. When they arrive for the appointment they need to make sure they have all of their documents, plus the details and dates in writing.

Some door-to-door salespersons will threaten to harm military careers if the contract is not paid. They may even threaten to prosecute under the Uniform Code of Military Justice. Military personnel are good targets for these salespersons because the Army has a regulation on indebtedness. In other words, the Army expects Soldiers to pay their just debts. However, this does not mean that Soldiers must always pay during a bona fide contract dispute. Soldiers need to make sure they check with a legal assistance attorney before they stop paying on a contract. However if there's not a valid dispute they are the one who has breached the contract.

The best policy is to avoid these contracts in the first place. There are certain steps that you can take to avoid bad door-to-door sales contracts.

•Ask to see the salesperson's personal and professional identifications.

•Ask for sales literature and then compare prices with stores that carry similar merchandise.

•Don't be pressured into buying something.

•Watch for warning signs like an offer of a free gift or a deadline that's close at hand.

•Ask the salesperson for the company's policy when consumers aren't satisfied with the products and make sure the policy is in writing.

For any questions about door-to-door sales contracts make sure to call the Legal Assistance Division at 545-3281.

Obstacles trap battered women

Army Family Advocacy Program

Why do battered women feel trapped? Simply, because they often are trapped. That doesn't necessarily mean that there's no way out. However, there are many obstacles to achieving safety or to ending a relationship with a violent partner and the choices women confront are not risk free, according to the New York State Office for the Prevention of Domestic Violence.

The risks of seeking help or deciding to leave are:

Physical violence and psychological harm

•Risk of escalated threats and physical violence, resulting in harm to victim, children, friends or family;

•Risk that batterer will follow through on suicide threats and harm himself;

•Risk of continued harassment, stalking and verbal and emotional attacks, especially if batterer has ongoing contact (such as during court-ordered visitation); and •Risk of serious physical harm and or death.

Children

•Continued risk to children of emotional and physical harm; possibility of increased risks to children if batterer has unsupervised visitation;

•Risk of losing children by parental kidnapping or as the result of a legal custody decision; and

•Risk of negative impact on children as a result of "breaking up the family."

Financial

•Risk of reduced standard of living — possible loss of home, possessions, neighborhood; and

•Risk of losing income or job — may lose partner's income, may have to quit a job in order to relocate or to fulfill the responsibilities of single parenthood, may be prevented from working because of threats and harassment.

Relationship

•Risk of losing partner, losing the relationship;

•Risk of losing help with children, transportation, household; and

•For elderly women or women with disabilities, risk of losing caretaker.

Responses from others

•Risk of not being believed or taken seriously, being blamed, being pressured to do something she's not ready or able to do;

•Risk of being judged as a bad wife, partner or mother;

•Risk of being pressured to maintain the relationship based on religious and or cultural beliefs or because the children "need a father"; and •Risk that actions of "helpers" may increase danger.

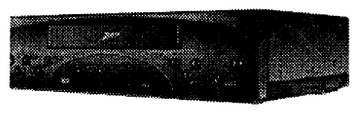
Under the best of circumstances, it is difficult to end a relationship with an intimate partner. Love, family, shared memories and a sense of commitment are bonds that are hard to break. Battered women face the additional risks of physical, emotional and psychological harm. In addition, many battered women want the violence to stop, but they don't want the relationship to end.

Seeking help, getting an order of protection or deciding to leave only makes sense to a woman when, on balance, it reduces the overall risks that she and her children have to deal with.

There are risks attached to every decision a battered woman makes.



Safety planning is the process of evaluating the risks and benefits of different options and identifying ways to reduce the risks.

Pet measures help ensure safety

Dr. Monique Matuskowitz
Family Practice Clinic, Martin Army Community Hospital

Pets can be a very rewarding part of one's life. Benefits of pet ownership are many:

•Simply petting a cat can lower elevated blood pressure.

•Fish tanks have been used for their calming influence in psychiatric settings and in large offices or waiting rooms.

•Pet therapy has been used successfully in long-term care facilities to bring about a positive response in people that are unreachable by other therapies.

•For adults who live alone, regular pet meal times and exercise patterns remind the owners to eat and exercise, as well as prevent feelings of loneliness.

Pets, however, are also a big responsibility. In order to prevent transmission of pet diseases to humans, the owner needs to take some preventative measures.

Before bringing a new pet home, arrange to have it examined by a veterinarian. Usually just one set of shots is not enough — they need a series of shots to be safe from many diseases.

A neuter or spay procedure can also prevent you from having the responsibility of more than one pet. Consider keeping your pet indoors, especially cats, as this reduces their exposure to diseases that can be transmitted to their owners. In particular, toxoplasmosis is a disease that can be transmitted to pregnant women and harm the unborn baby. Pregnant women need to avoid changing litter boxes. Furthermore, cats should only be fed commercial cat food, no raw meat or milk.

In families with small children, remember that Mom and Dad will end up with the added responsibilities of pet care, not to mention the extra cost. Small children need to be closely monitored around pets. Even gentle animals can be provoked to biting or scratching by an aggressive toddler.

Also, some pets may be dangerous when a new baby is brought home. Ferrets, for example, are attracted to milk and have been known to harm babies that have milk around their mouth and clothing.

Despite these drawbacks, pets are still great — they are just a responsibility that owners need to take seriously.

Post works to save energy

Directorate of Public Works

Energy Awareness Month

October is National Energy Awareness Month. Traditionally, this is the month designated by the Department of Energy for all federal agencies to focus on energy conservation. Fort Benning has consistently been a leader in saving energy and meeting our annual energy goals. During the month, we have had a display in Infantry Hall showing energy conservation measures we can use to reduce our energy consumption. Also planned for Nov. 9 is the Army's Energy Awareness Seminar. The goal of the seminar is to provide information about the Army's energy conservation programs and to stress the importance of conserving energy. For more information about the seminar, call Mark Fincher at 545-7928. The following sessions are scheduled for Nov. 9.

•Unit Commanders and Activity's Chiefs — 2:30 p.m. in Infantry Hall, Room 642.

•Building Energy Monitors — 2:45 to 4:45 p.m. in Infantry Hall, Marshall Auditorium.

•DPW Facility Engineers — 2:45 to 4:15 p.m. in Building 385, Self Help Classroom.

Fort Benning partners to cut cost and consumption

Fort Benning is the best and one of the largest Army installations in the world. To assist in providing "world class" services and products for our customers, the status quo or business-as-usual mindset is not acceptable. Therefore, DPW continually looks for ways to reduce consumption and take full advantage of new energy programs designed to save money and reduce energy consumption.

One of these programs is The Energy Savings Performance Contract (ESPC) which provides federal agencies the opportunity to work with a pre-approved ESPC who provides the capital investment, design, construction and maintenance for new energy efficient equipment, products and services. The generated savings is then shared between the agency and the Energy Service Company over a specified period of time to pay for the project.

DukeSolutions is an approved ESPC provider and has worked with Fort Benning on several projects. The scope of the first energy-saving project will retrofit thousands of lighting fixtures with energy efficient lamps and ballast at two of the basic trainee buildings located in the Sand Hill area. Our projected annual saving as a result of this project, expected to be completed early in 1999, is estimated at more than $66,000 per year.

Because the Army lacks money to undertake energy projects, Energy Savings Performance Contracts have become our best tool to obtain energy savings now without having to seek funding through the normal channels. ESPC also provides the installation with additional intangible benefits beyond just energy savings, such as better quality lighting and new low-mercury fluorescent bulbs which make disposal easier. Other projects that are being considered include $7 million of lighting retrofits and HVAC improvements.

DPW first envisioned the use of the contract back in 1996 as an innovative and risk-free way of financing energy improvement projects. ESPC enables the installation to leverage the capital and expertise of an Energy Service Company to accomplish cost cutting projects. Energy Savings Performance Contract will be instrumental in enabling Fort Benning to meet the President's directive to cut energy costs by 30 percent by 2005.

Yard Waste, refuse and recycle collection schedules

There will be no yard waste pick-up Nov. 9. The next scheduled yard waste pick-up will be Nov. 16. There will be no refuse, trash or recycle pick-ups on Nov. 11. The affected areas are Custer Terrace and Upatoi Terrace. Residents in these areas will have their refuse, trash and recyclable items picked up Nov. 9. Other housing areas will have their trash and recyclables picked-up as normally scheduled.

Self Help Center's holiday schedule

The Self Help Center, Loan Equipment Section, venetian blind and shade shop will be closed Nov. 11. It will reopen for business at 8:30 a.m. Nov. 12.

Notice of Closure

DPW Family Housing Branch will close at 1:30 p.m. Nov. 13 for a DPW Townhall meeting. This will include Assignments, Terminations and Inspection Sections in Building 399 and the Community Homefinding Relocation and Referral Services in Building 2621.

Comments and questions

Abuse

Support group offers haven from pain

Family Life Center

She speaks five languages, writes music and is an accomplished artist and career woman. Outgoing and attractive, she would be almost anyone's idea of a healthy, happy person.

But deep inside, there is a scar from the 12-year-old girl, sexually abused by her father.

The child within this accomplished young woman forever struggles in pain, shame and torment.

Janet (not her real name) experiences many symptoms of a sexually abused person.

"When I read a list of possible symptoms of sexually abused victims, I felt as if I had had all of them," Janet said as she remembered her first session of the Survivors of Sexual Abuse, a support group facilitated by the post's Chaplains Office and designed to help victims talk about their problems.

Finally, Janet joined a group which offered support from others who suffered from the same type of hurt.

Chaplain (Lt. Col.) Richard Roggia, chief of the Chaplains' Family Life Training Program, who facilitates the support group, said he tells the members that they can learn to overcome their pain and get rid of it.

"If you want to be cured, you can be," Roggia tells victims during their first sessions.

"I tell group members that I will be able to help them only if they truly want to recover," he said. "The real change must come from within; no one can make the change for them. This gives sexual abuse victims responsibility for their own well being," he said.

"One key factor that brings about success is hope," he continued. "They soon learn that the group setting is a safe, comfortable environment and they are free to leave at any time without explanation."

Meeting as a group teaches that they are not alone in their pain or experiences, Roggia said.

"Members of the group learn how to reconnect with their inner child and they learn to love, comfort and nurture that child," Roggia said. "This begins the healing process."

He says it is common for women in their thirties to begin remembering childhood abuse, sometimes in the form of flashbacks or dreams. He says flashbacks are a normal response to traumatic experiences and are not a sign of mental illness.

Abuse studies show that there are many stages of awareness that childhood sexual abuse victims endure.

Some have no conscious memory of the abuse and deny their symptoms.

Others may suspect abuse and are aware of the symptoms, but simply don't remember.

Still others don't even realize that what has happened to them was in fact abuse.

Moreover, there are those who know they were abused but make no connection between the symptoms they have.

Finally, there are those who know they were abused and are aware that their symptoms are caused by the abuse.

Many victims deny their feelings because family members ignore the problem. They may have low self-esteem and usually have problems in relationships and sexuality. They may have difficulties in expressing their emotions.

Also, some victims may feel ugly inside and have a sense of worthlessness and helplessness.

They have a tendency to sabotage their own success because they often believe they don't deserve good things.

"Some victims find trusting others virtually impossible," said Chaplain (Maj.) Frederick M. Rupel of the Family Life Training Program.

"The hardest problem by far is for victims to break the silence barrier and talk about their abuse experience."

Rupel facilitated support groups at Fort Benning addressing this problem. Groups included incest survivors and adults molested as children.

Ann (not her real name), is another woman who has successfully completed the group sessions.

"I feel like I have freed myself from the guilt and pain of events from my childhood," she said. "I learned that not all men are terrible and that there are two categories: men and abusers."

"I am finally my own person; I have learned how to say no if I want to or yes because that is really how I feel."

Previous group graduates serving as facilitators provide an opportunity for trust, Roggia said, adding that trust is a low commodity among victims.

"They have a sense of isolation and difficulty dealing with authority figures," he said.

"There is no simple cure for the complications, but there is recovery," he said. "The key to recovery is to take the power away from the abuse by bringing the experience out in the open.

"One of the most important things victims need to learn is that the abuse was not their fault," Roggia said. "They did not relinquish their innocence — it was taken from them."

A confidential support group for "Survivors of Sexual Abuse" through the Chaplains' Family Life Center will begin Wednesday.

If you or someone you know could use this safe, confidential source of help, call the Chaplains' Family Life Training Center at 545-1760.

God encourages unity

Chaplain (Capt.) David Baum
Ranger Training Brigade

Humans are quite skilled at organizing ourselves into groups. We divide ourselves by race, political party, lifestyle, nationality and countless other criteria.

reflections

Under these group identities, we then silently disdain or criticize members of other groups as the situation seems to require.

God's Word encourages us to see people as being members of only two groups.

The first group includes all the people who attempt to find purpose and meaning in life from the challenges and rewards this life offers. They aim at greater rank, higher position, more excitement and increased power in the hope that they might find satisfaction in life.

The Bible states that their choice to ignore God is as unwise as the choice to build a home on sand without a foundation in the path of a hurricane.

The second group includes those who believe that the way to find peace and satisfaction in life is to first secure forgiveness for their sins. They trust that Jesus' death and resurrection offers them relief from their guilt and shame before a holy God. They then choose all of life's decisions based on what is pleasing to God who saves them from their sin-inflicted predicament. These are "saints."

The Roman Catholic and Anglican churches recognize Nov. 1 as "All Saints Day" to honor all Christian believers. Although I am not a member of either of those two groups, I think it is important to at least once a year consider how we are doing as "saints." I offer some questions to help us assess how we are doing.

The first of these questions considers our worship. Do we attend our places of worship intending to sincerely and fully express to God our gratefulness and sincere love? When the pastor, chaplain or minister preaches, do we carefully pay attention? Do we ever pray for our preacher during the week so that our preacher might effectively communicate God's Word to us?

The second set of questions addresses our concerns for a lost world. Do we regularly pray that our friends, family and fellow workers might come into a saving knowledge of Jesus Christ? Do we ever seek to direct our conversations with them onto spiritual matters?

The third set of questions concerns our regard for fellow Christians. Do we aggressively seek honest and grace-filled relationships with fellow believers we might grow to be more like Jesus? Do we serve the church with spiritual gifts, abilities and passion God has given us? Are we as much a "minister" as the preacher we hear on Sunday?

If forced to publicly answer these questions myself, there are points at which I fall short. The tragedy with that is that I am a chaplain and therefore really have no excuse since I have the privilege of focusing on and dwelling on these matters every day. My point in these questions is not to scold but to inspire. We answer these questions with our attitudes and choices already. When we think about it, do we like the way we are answering them?

Ministries help with healthy marriages

Chaplain (Maj.) Frederick M. Rupel
Chief, Chaplain Family Life Ministries Center

"I need you" and "I cannot live without you," — ah, true love in full blossom. Such statements are common themes with couples contemplating marriage. However, this type of mind-set is a little more than a form of romantic slavery. Choice is smothered by sentimental compulsion.

A healthy marriage requires two independent and whole people choosing to live their lives together. They can say to each other, "I am content being with me, but life is even better because I'm with you."

One of the primary goals in marriage is to enhance the other spouse's life, even though he or she is fully capable of taking care of himself or herself. An ideal marriage involves commitment not only to each other and to the relationship, but also to the individual growth of each partner. Each must feel free to explore his or her own potential and live his or her own life in ways that are personally satisfying, while respecting and meeting the needs of the other.

Marriage can be a challenge and at times overwhelming. If your marriage is in need of help, call the Chaplain Family Life Ministries Center at 545-1760.

Cruiser Dave Fry chips over the Florida State University line.

Columbus-Fort Benning rugby player Bob McCarthy fends off an opposing player. The Cruise-A-Matics thrashed Florida State University 61-10.

Cruise-A-Matics crush

Columbus-Fort Benning Rugby Club

The Cruise-A-Matics Rugby Club ran their division record to 2-0 with a 61-10 thrashing of Florida State University.

The local ruggers employed aggressive forward play to dominate open play in first and second phases before swinging the ball wide against Florida State's centers to break out to a 10-0 lead.

Florida State answered with its own forward drive and clutch penalty kicking to rally to 10-5 before Columbus-Fort Benning scored three times in a row to go up 23-5 at half.

Winger Rich Thompson had several nice breaks on the outside with two tries.

In the second half, the Cruisers really opened it up outscoring Florida State 38-5. Flyhalf Bob McCarthy attacked the Florida team's backline and moved the ball almost at will to supporting runners from the inside and out to put the game away.

The Columbus-Fort Benning Rugby Club's next home game is set for 2 p.m. Nov. 7 against Atlanta's High Country Rugby Club.

For more information on training and matches, call Jim Muldoon at 327-6544.

USAMU holds 42nd reunion, dedicates range

Paula J. Randall Pagan
U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit

More than 300 members, past and present, of the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit (USAMU), gathered together last weekend to celebrate the USAMU's 42nd reunion.

The reunion, which was held Oct. 16-18, honored the shooters and staff who made the USAMU great and provided an opportunity for the shooters of the past to meet the shooters of the present. The highlights of the reunion included inducting three local former shooters and gunsmiths into the USAMU Hall of Fame and honoring Lt. Gen. Floyd L. Parks by dedicating a new test facility and range in his memory.

Hall of Fame Induction

Inducted into the USAMU Hall of Fame Oct. 17 were retired Master Sgt. William E. Krilling of Midland, Ga., retired Master Sgt. Charles D. Davis of Columbus, Ga., and retired Sgt. 1st Class Jack W. Maple of Smiths, Ala. These three men joined the 11 other former members of the USAMU who are in the Hall of Fame.

Krilling, who has been the USAMU International Rifle Team coach since 1973, was also recently named as the U.S. Olympic Committee (USOC) Shooting Coach of the Year and was one of the five finalists in the USOC National Coach of the Year Competition. The 71-year-old highly decorated war veteran won seven medals in international competition, including being a Pan American Games Silver Medalist and World Championship Bronze Medalist.

A former Navy surgical operating room technician, Davis served in the USAMU for 21 years and competed in Service Rifle, International Rifle and Running Target. He was a National Service Rifle Champion, a three-time National Running Target 50-Meter 30+30 Champion and a two-time National Running Target 50-Meter Mixed Run Champion. He set numerous national and interservice records and won nine medals in international competition.

Maple's accomplishments with accurizing pistols for the USAMU Custom Firearms Shop earned him a spot as the principal pistol gunsmith for the U.S. teams competing in the Pan American and Olympic Games and World Championships. An expert service pistol shooter, Maple earned the Distinguished Pistol Shot Badge before becoming a gunsmith. His 28-year shooting and gunsmithing career, which began in 1958, included developing, building, rebuilding, maintaining, accurizing and customizing the high quality of weapons required by the world-class shooters of the USAMU.

The guest speaker at the Hall of Fame ceremony was Maj. Gordon R. Roberts, the youngest living Medal of Honor recipient and one of only two Medal of Honor recipients on active duty. He is the commander of the 249th Field Hospital at Fort Gordon, Ga. and is a part-time international shooter.

Addressing the crowd gathered at the ceremony, Roberts said, "The Army Marksmanship Unit was formed to take on the monumental task of building competitive marksmanship for this country to a standard that I don't think anyone would have believed possible."

Roberts told the Soldiers of the marksmanship unit that the three Hall of Fame inductees set the example that they should follow. He then addressed the inductees directly.

"I want to tell you three gentlemen how much you mean to me," Roberts said. "Your standard is a high one. It's a standard that I accept and want to live by. I look forward to the day when I can stand on the high ground with you and all the accomplishments that you've done."

USAMU: dedicates range

Parks Range Dedication

Parks was the executive director of the National Rifle Association who recommended to President Dwight D. Eisenhower that the U.S. improve its level of marksmanship, which prompted the establishment of the Advanced Marksmanship Unit at Fort Benning.

Four descendants of the lieutenant general flew in from Chevy Chase, Md., to attend the Parks Range Ceremony at which Post Commanding General Maj. Gen. Carl F. Ernst was the guest speaker.

"The Army Marksmanship Unit demonstrates that individual Soldier skills is what the Army is really all about," Ernst said. "Lieutenant General Parks had a lifelong dedication to marksmanship and caused the unit to be activated at Fort Benning. The Marksmanship Unit continues to lead the Army in competitive shooting; we continually beat everybody else. As the commander of Fort Benning, that makes me very, very proud.

"Since its inception by General Parks, the Army Marksmanship Unit has helped the Army shoot better in all categories of small arms," Ernst continued. "If General Parks was here today, he'd say that he's very proud of what the Army Marksmanship Unit continues to mean for our Army and what it does for our Army and our nation. As long as we have a U.S. Army, we'll need the Army Marksmanship Unit to press the skills needed by Soldiers to survive, fight and win."

After Ernst's speech, Parks' sons, retired Lt. Col. William Parks and Judge Floyd Parks, and their sons, William Parks Jr. and Zachary Parks, unveiled the Parks portrait, painted by Charles R. Pagan, USAMU graphic artist.

"We appreciate all that has been done in remembrance of my father," Parks said. "This is a beautiful building. It's really going to be something that I know my father would really cherish and feel that the Army is continuing his vision of accurate marksmanship by responsible Soldiers."

The Parks family joined Ernst and retired Master Sgt. Folke A. Ahlquist, who served as a civilian weapons tester at Parks Range for 15 years, in cutting the ribbon, officially opening the new Parks Range building. They were joined by Roberts in the range's first-shot ceremony after the ribbon-cutting.

The reunion weekend also included range activities, shooting, an open house and a barbecue Oct. 17.

ITB conducts War Eagle Run

Capt. Brian Larue
Infantry Training Brigade

The Infantry Training Brigade (ITB) conducted its quarterly War Eagle Run Oct. 23 on Sand Hill.

This run is held in order to foster cohesion among the brigade and represents one of the few times the entire brigade can get together in mass to participate in a combined physical training effort.

More than 7,000 Initial Entry Training (IET) Soldiers and cadre were on hand to conduct the three-mile run.

While the run is conducted quarterly, this past event had special meaning. It marks the last opportunity for current ITB Commander Col. Abraham J. Turner to participate in a brigade-wide run with his Soldiers.

Activities such as these "allow Soldiers to see the brigade as a whole," said Turner, who will change command in December. "When Soldiers are out in formation such as this, they feel like they are a part of something special. I believe it also allows the Soldiers to see success in the form of those Soldiers who are ahead of them in their training, thus giving them a goal to reach for."

When asked how he felt about conducting the final fun as the current "War Eagle 6," Turner said it was hard to face the Soldiers knowing it was his last run.

"You become a part of a large effort here at the Infantry Training Brigade and it is tough to leave," he said. "The sight of 7,000 Soldiers standing tall will stay with me forever."

The run, which included Soldiers from all six training battalions and the 30th Adjutant General (Reception) Battalion, was a motivational event for all in attendance.

"The Soldiers feel a strong sense of unit cohesion during events like this," said Staff Sgt. John Gaddy, a drill sergeant with Company D, 1st Battalion, 19th Infantry Regiment.

Although the run was designed to promote cohesion and esprit de corps, there was an emphasis on displaying the discipline that is the hallmark of the IET environment. Soldiers were expected to remain in step with constant cadence. It is during events such as this that the drill sergeants' training of Soldiers can be seen and experienced. Many of the troops in the run were not past their fourth week of training.

"We train the Soldiers to pay attention to detail and have the discipline to remain in step and maintain proper dress and cover," Gaddy said. "It is the crawl, walk, run philosophy as well as tireless effort that produces the Soldiers participating this morning."

At the conclusion of the run, many Soldiers felt a strong sense of accomplishment.

"We feel tremendous pride. Running together like this gives us a feeling we are doing something worthwhile," said Pvt. 1 Michael Walker of Company B, 1st Bn., 19th Inf. Regt. "I feel my platoon is closer now. We kept each other going. The success of the run was due to the exceptional training by our drill sergeants."

Veterans Day ceremonies set for Wednesday

USAIC Public Affairs Office

The 555th Parachute Infantry Association will host the annual Veterans Day observance services in the National Infantry Museum at 11 a.m. Wednesday.

Members of the 555th and their families invite members of the community to attend this tribute to all men and women who have proudly worn the uniform of this nation.

The all-black 555th Parachute Infantry Company or "Triple Nickels" as the unit was known, was formed at Fort Benning in 1944. Later that year, it was re-designated as a battalion due to the large number of volunteers for the unit.

Although the unit never saw action in World War II, it was involved in the war effort on the home front, jumping into forests of the Pacific Northwest and fighting fires allegedly started by Japanese air balloons.

The 555th was attached to the 82nd Airborne Division at Fort Bragg, N.C., following the war and was inactivated in 1947 when President Harry Truman ordered an end to segregated troop units. It then became the 3rd Battalion, 505th Airborne Regiment.

Columbus State University's ROTC program will also conduct a Veterans Day ceremony at 11 a.m. Wednesday. The ceremony will be held at the school's clock tower.

The city of Columbus will also hold a Veterans Day ceremony at 11 a.m. Wednesday at the Government Center on 2nd Ave.

MACH receives commendation

Pfc. Nicole M. Massie

Bayonet staff writer

Martin Army Community Hospital (MACH) recently received an Accreditation with Commendation for the third consecutive year after an inspection by the Joint Commission of Accreditation of Healthcare Organization (JCAHO).

During the May inspection, the commission, which consisted of a group of civilian doctors, inspected everything from patient documentation to patient care over a four-day period. Random patient interviews were also conducted during the inspection.

Each area inspected accumulated points which were tallied, awarding MACH an overall score of 99 out of a possible 100 points.

The hospital's high score places MACH within the top four percent of hospitals nationwide, said Michael Wolfe, MACH's chief of Complete Quality Management Division.

"Of the 10,000 hospitals JCAHO inspects, we are the only hospital nationwide that has received an Accreditation with Commendation three inspections in a row in the past 40 years," said Wolfe.

All military hospitals are required to have this inspection and civilian hospitals must have the inspections in order to continue receiving medicare funding.

Col. Barbara Scherb, deputy commander for nursing, contributes the hospital's success to the staff's hard work.

"The hospital is very patient-oriented," said Col. Barbara Scherb, deputy commander for nursing. "MACH also has a long history of quality."

The staff is now looking towards the next accreditation, as they continue to perform to current and new standards throughout the years to come, according to Scherb.

MACH is also planning some improvements, according to Wolfe.

"We are preparing to make a total renovation of the emergency room," Wolfe said. "This will allow us to handle more trauma patients and facilitate the flow of traffic and reduce the current waiting times patients experience."

Measures prevent misuse of government card

Maria Taylor

Bayonet correspondent

Two Fort Benning Soldiers recently sacrificed their Army careers and their reputations in an attempt to make money off the sale of several thousand dollars' worth of stolen government supplies.

The two NCOs, both E-5s, devised a plan in which one, a supply sergeant, purchased supplies on the company's General Services Administration (GSA) account while the other pawned the property. Both were convicted last summer and each was sentenced to a reduction to the grade of private (E-1), several months' confinement and a bad-conduct discharge.

At the time of the incident, the procedure for those authorized to purchase supplies from GSA involved simply using their unit's GSA password. In January, however, the method changed, requiring use of a credit card to purchase GSA supplies, according to Zana Setser, General Supply Specialist.

Whether the authorized Soldier or civilian uses a password or credit card, though, there are no fail-safe plans for preventing misuse of government funds because an element of trust is involved, said Angela Holloway, program coordinator for the Fort Benning IMPAC (International Merchant Purchase Acceptance Card) credit card program.

However, Holloway said measures can be taken both in the choice of cardholders and in the use of checks and balances to prevent the misuse of government credit cards.

Usually, the training coordinator for a unit or directorate submits the names of persons to be cardholders and approving officials (AOs), who are required to attend one-day mandatory training that includes procedures and ethics training.

But Holloway suggested that the responsibility lies with the commander, director or activity head to choose someone who is trustworthy, dependable and reliable.

Cardholders make the purchases, but all cardholders have an AO in the unit who develops the internal controls to help ensure that funds are being spent properly. Some AOs choose to approve all supplies before they're purchased while others trust their cardholder to make purchases without a pre-check.

The cardholder receives a monthly statement of account that shows only the name of the vendor and the amount of the total purchase. The cardholder then forwards it with receipts to verify each purchase to the AO. Again, if there is a high level of trust, the AO signs the statement and forwards it on to the Paying Office without looking at individual receipts to see what was bought and for what purpose.

Holloway said many AOs supervise several cardholders and reviewing a unit's supply expenditures for a month can be time-consuming. But, she added,

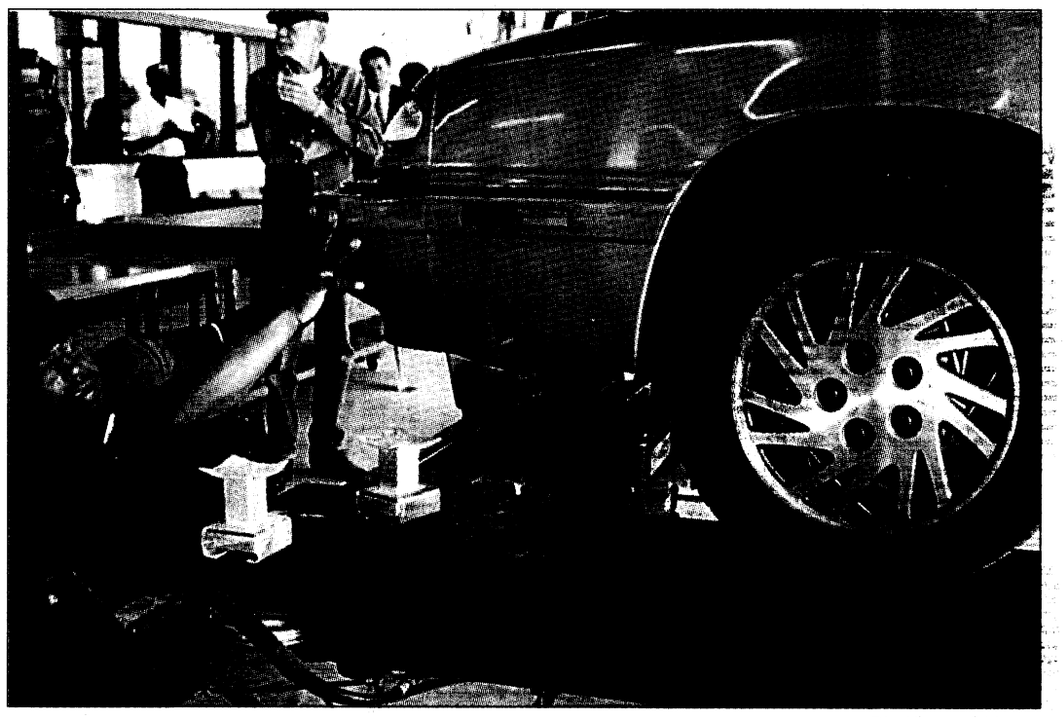
Fort Benning opens automotive skills center

Pfc. Nicole M. Massie

Bayonet staff writer

After five years of planning and construction, the $3,900,000 Fort Benning Automotive Skills Center opened its doors Wednesday.

Residents of Fort Benning can now use this 25,556 square-foot center to repair and maintain their vehicles.



With a capacity to fit 42 vehicles in the center at one time, patrons may complete such services as front-end alignments, quick lubes, air-conditioning repair, tune-ups, computerized tire balance, engine steam-cleaning, antifreeze recycle, computerized engine analysis, tail pipe replacement, general repair and muffler replacement.

Those who may be mechanically inclined can use the facility's Do-It-Yourself area. The Do-It-Yourself area allows customers to make vehicle repairs on their own or with the instruction of certified mechanics.

"Soldiers can save up to 80 percent by using the Do-It-Yourself area because they do not pay for any labor cost," said Bill Player, supervisor, Automotive Skills Center.

The Automotive Skills Center also offers a mechanic-for-hire option which allows others to have their car serviced by one of the certified professionals on staff.

"The mechanic-for-hire option makes this center unique to others on other installations," Player said. "Other centers have only the Do-It-Yourself option."

Pfc. Nicole M. Massie

Michael Guyton, a certified mechanic employed by the Automotive Skills Center, helps a customer position his vehicle on the lift.

The center is open 11 a.m. to 8 p.m. Monday through Friday, and 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. Saturday, Sunday and holidays.

No appointment is necessary for those who may need the center's services.

The Automotive Skills Center is located in Building, 111 Marchant St.

Soldier remembers those lost for freedom

Retired Col. Ralph Puckett
Special to the Bayonet

Veterans Day is observed each year in the U.S. to honor those who have served in the armed forces.

The holiday was originally known as Armistice Day as it marked the end of World War I. On the first anniversary of the truce, President Woodrow Wilson issued a proclamation eulogizing fallen Allied Soldiers and referred to Nov. 11 as Armistice Day. The name was changed in 1954 to Veterans Day to recognize its broadened significance.

commentary

World War I was the "great war," the "war to end all wars." Americans went to France singing "and we won't be back 'til it's over over there!" Victory would make the world "safe for democracy."

I remember the first time I heard about the conflict. I was a young boy about five or six. I was walking with my dad to the drugstore after church to get the Sunday papers. We met a man on crutches; he was an amputee — the first I had seen. He was holding a red paper flower. My dad gave the man some money and took one of the flowers.

When I asked my dad what it was, he explained that it symbolized the poppies in Europe where the war had been fought. The man was a veteran, someone who had been in the war. He had been wounded and had lost his leg. That began to bring home to me the reality of war.

Later in grade school, I remember our principal coming into our classroom to talk a few moments about Armistice Day. He told us what it meant and recounted the coincidence of war ending at the eleventh hour of the eleventh day of the eleventh month in 1918. There would be a moment of silence, then the siren the top of the local water tower would sound in recognition of the significance of the day.

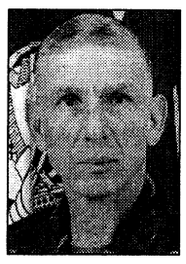
Years later in junior high, we studied John McCrae's sad poem, In Flanders Fields. This famous poem was about the Allied dead buried in Belgium. I remember that it had a great impact on me. The teacher said that the headstones in those cemeteries were almost as numerous as the poppies that grew "between the crosses, row on row."

Many years later, I would tour those battlefields and visit the cemeteries that were the final resting place for thousands and thousands of young men killed in battle. And yes, the crosses seemed almost as numerous as the poppies that I saw along the way.

I remember the memorial services we conducted for our Soldiers in Vietnam. The ceremony was held each time the battalion was withdrawn from the jungle after six or eight weeks. There was a marker for each Soldier — a pair of spit-shined jungle boots, a rifle with fixed bayonet stuck into the ground behind the boots and a helmet on top of the rifle. They were aligned "row on row." The ceremony was brief. The adjutant read the name of each Soldier who was no longer with us, I made a few remarks, riflemen fired a three-round volley and the bugler played taps.

I wondered what was going through the minds of my Soldiers. My thoughts tumbled through my brain. What a great loss! What made it even more sad was that the loss was not appreciated by so many of the people back home.

While I could support any person's right to disagree with the war, I could not accept the disrespect directed at young men who were going through a living hell as they did their country's bidding. My emotions ran the gamut from great sadness to an anger that bordered on fury.



America broke faith with those Soldiers. McCrae's words are so fitting.

To you from failing hands we throw
The torch; be yours to hold it high
If ye break faith with us who die
We shall not sleep, though poppies grow
In Flanders Fields.

We live in peace today. We take for granted the freedom we have, seldom stopping to realize what it has cost. We live free because millions have suffered wounds to win that freedom. We live free because thousands more of America's finest stand ready to be deployed to any trouble spot in the world.

They serve proudly and well. How fortunate we are! The next time you see a Soldier, tell him how much you appreciate what he is doing for all of us!

Nation owes existence to those who served

Our nation owes its very existence to those who served and sacrificed, over a million making the ultimate sacrifice.

This Veterans Day we pause to remember those who served and continue to serve. We have living combat veterans of World War I, World War II, Korea, Vietnam, Grenada, Panama, Desert Shield and Somalia. We have veterans who won the Cold War and guaranteed peace all over the world in places like Korea, Berlin, Lebanon, Sinai, Haiti, Bosnia, Macedonia, Kuwait, Rwanda and scores of other places. We have become the symbol and guarantor of God's peace and freedom throughout the world.

As we pause to remember those who served, our veterans, we should also remember those who are serving on freedom's far-flung frontiers and the families who love and miss them.

Your service is as important today as any time in our past. Your service also repays a debt to these veterans in whose paths we trod. They deserve much but ask only that we remember and that we do as well as they.

I am proud to follow them, I am proud to be one of them and I am very proud of you.

Hooah!

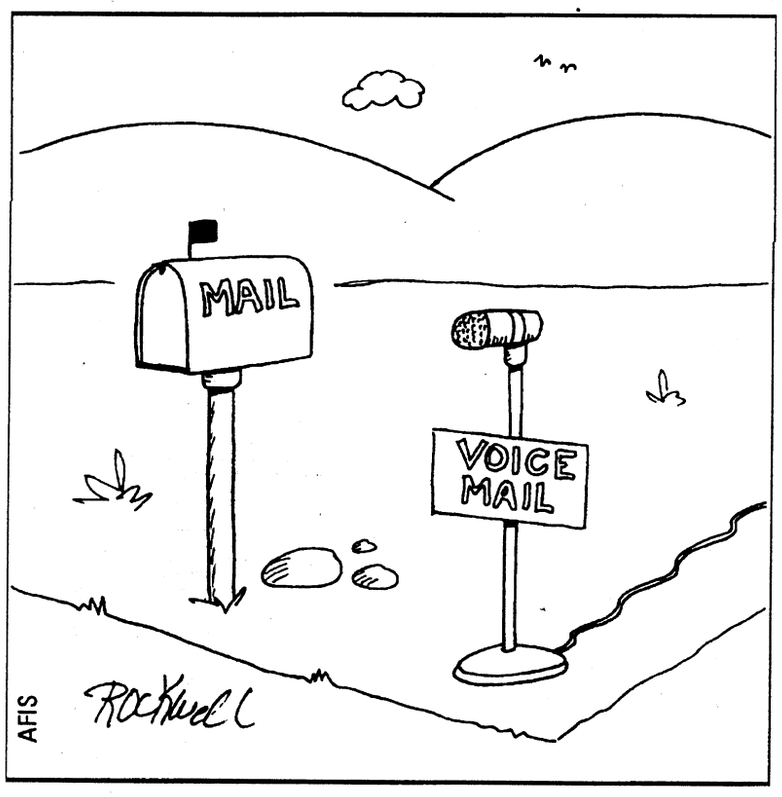
— Maj. Gen. Carl F. Ernst
Commanding General

Soldiers observe liberty's torch

On Veterans Day, we honor all American men and women who served in the armed forces throughout our nation's history. As a full spectrum force, you in today's Army are the best fighting force in the world. You are trained and ready to deploy, fight and win wherever and whenever the need arises.

As the smoke cleared on the Cold Wars shadowy battlefields, America's Army glimpsed the new century over the horizon. For you who serve today, the 21st century is already here. It is a puzzling and vastly different world than what we've known before. Today, when the battlefield can be anywhere and shifts constantly, 54 percent of the total Army is in the U.S. Army Reserve and the Army National Guard. Over the past year, our total Army team of active, Army Reserve, Army National Guard, and civilians has served dutifully and courageously in more than 100 countries. We cannot conduct any large-scale mission without a total Army effort. We need all of you.

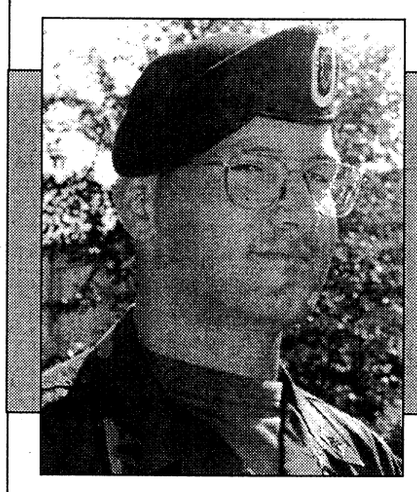
During peacekeeping and humanitarian operations, you are the source of safety and security for many freedom-seeking people around the globe. But for you they would have no hope. When disaster strikes at home, you fight in the fiery furnaces of burning forests and in the flooded streets of hurricane-battered cities.



As a values-based force, your credentials are the Army core values: loyalty, duty, respect, selfless service, honor, integrity and personal courage. Through your continuous, courageous and selfless service to the nation, you preserve liberty's burning torch. You are the nation's protectors at home and you are the standard-bearers and beacons of freedom abroad.

As we confront the new challenges before us, we who follow in the footsteps of Army veterans of past battles owe those brave Soldiers an enormous debt. We can repay it only by our willingness to carry freedom's torch into the new millennium and by continuing to practice the core values our predecessors upheld.

Now, as in the past, our Soldiers truly are our nation's credentials.



— Gen. Dennis J. Reimer
U. S. Army Chief of Staff

— Louis Caldera
Secretary of the Army

Theft: Soldiers misuse card

it's worth the effort for the cardholder and the AO.

Both the cardholder and the AO now have preculminary liability, which means that these persons can be held responsible for repaying the government for any purchases that do not meet IMPAC requirements," Holloway said.

When theft occurs, Holloway added, it affects the integrity of the entire program.

"That is money that goes can be used for additional supplies, or services that unit or activity needs or to pay salaries," Holloway said.

Marilyn Jordan, budget analyst for the U.S. School of the Americas, is the approving official for the school's six cardholders and knows just how much time it takes, but it's a vital part of her job.

"It does not have anything to do with whether or not I trust my cardholders. It is just internal controls. It's just the procedure here," Jordan said. "I am here to help and assess, not to point the finger."

Directorate offers reminders

Directorate of Contracting

To ensure proper use of government credit cards, cardholders and approving officials both receive training through the Directorate of Contracting Business Management Division. Angela Holloway, who conducts the training, gave some helpful reminders in preventing internal theft:

Cardholders should:

•Keep the card on their person or locked in a safe place.

•As much as possible, keep any paperwork with credit card numbers, passwords or codes secured.

•Keep all receipts of purchases to attach to monthly statement of account.

Approving Officials validate that purchases:

* Are correct and fulfill mission requirements.
* Do not exceed spending limits.
* Are not for personal use.

PCSing can be hectic enough, perhaps even more hectic when moving to another country. Besides the countless things to pack and other odds and ends to take care of, some families are faced with getting rid of a car that is no longer needed.

For Soldiers or any ID card holders who need to sell or buy a vehicle, Fort Benning's Lemon Lot may be their answer.

Any Soldier or ID card holder facing a transfer or just wanting to sell a car is entitled to try their hand at used car-salesmanship.

First, the ID cardholder must go by Building 1707, the Outdoor Recreation Center (ODR), to register the vehicle to be put on the lot. Cost of registration is $5 which pays for 30 days on the Lemon Lot. Patrons of the Lemon Lot are also required to provide proof of insurance and ownership.

At the ODR, they obtain a yellow Lemon Lot identification card that is placed on the vehicle. The card tells the prospective buyer the year, make and model of the car, the asking price as well as how many miles are on the car and how to contact the seller.

According to Roger Garrity, ODR manager, Fort Benning's Lemon Lot has saved many Soldiers the hassle of not getting what their car is worth.

"Patrons have a better chance of getting what they ask for their car here at the Lemon Lot rather than trading it in at a dealership," Garrity said.

For the right price, Garrity said, patrons of the lot can usually get rid of their car in about a month.

"If the car lasts more than a month, the price is probably set too high," Garrity said.

Garrity explained that Soldiers who use the Lemon Lot have an advantage over other individuals who just use the classifieds.

"When they put their car out at the Lemon Lot, buyers can come out and actually see the car," Garrity said.

Saturday car-shopper, Pfc. Kimberly Smith, U.S. Army Medical Activity (MEDDAC), said she liked the idea of buying a car from another Soldier because she thought it was safer than buying a car from a dealership in Columbus.

"It is better to buy a car here at the Lemon Lot," Smith said. "Once they (dealers) find out you are a Soldier, they think they can take advantage of you."

Smith pointed out that most cars in the Lemon Lot are not really "lemons," they are only there due to PCSing Soldiers.

"Most of these people are just selling their cars because they are going overseas," Smith said. "There is probably nothing wrong with them."

USARSA contributes to democracy

Sgt. Alberto Betancourt
USARSA Public Affairs Office

Since inception, the U.S. Army School of the Americas (USARSA), has trained almost 60,000 officers, cadets, NCOs and civilians throughout Latin America and the U.S.

The school's mission is to develop and conduct for the armed forces of Latin America the most doctrinally sound, relevant and cost-effective training programs possible; promote military professionalism and human rights; foster cooperation among the multinational military forces; and expand the Latin American armed forces' knowledge of U.S. customs and traditions.

"It would be grievously wrong for our country to disengage from the leadership role in our nation, and not have an institution like the U.S. Army School of the Americas that challenges the militaries of other countries to be even stronger at better democracies than they are today," said Louis Caldera, Secretary of the Army.

With a highly qualified staff of 241 multiservice military and civilian instructors, USARSA presents 32 courses in Spanish, ranging from Humanitarian Demining to Drug Interdiction.

"We are giving them the skills to be successful in stopping narcotrafficking in their country," said Brian Sheridan, principal deputy assistant secretary of defense of the Counter Drug Operations Course. "What they're doing here is critically important. We're giving them the skills they need to help keep drugs off the streets of America."

Originally established in 1946 at Fort Amador, Panama Canal Zone as the Latin American Center for U.S. Training, it was renamed four years later as the U.S. Army Caribbean School. In July, 1963, the school became USARSA, with Spanish as its official language.

In 1984, the school suspended operations to comply with the terms of the 1977 Panama Canal Treaty, and relocated to Fort Benning as a full-fledged member of the U.S. Army Training and Doctrine Command (TRADOC).

USARSA occupies Building 35, a historic edifice which from 1932 to 1964 headquartered the U.S. Army Infantry School. In April 1994, it was dedicated as Ridgway Hall in honor of Gen. Matthew B. Ridge way, whose work in Latin America won him honor and dedication.

Inherent in all of its training and educational programs, USARSA systematically advocates human rights awareness and strives to graduate students whose respect for such values is both enlightened and solidified.

"Human rights is taught to every instructor, every student at the beginning of every course and sets the tone of the overall course," said Capt. Patrick Garcia, judge advocate and human rights instructor. "Human rights issues are continuously discussed and reinforced throughout the course, not only during the Human Rights presentation."

Garcia said that field training exercises contain numerous scenarios where students must react and respond within acceptable parameters of behavior, with emphasis on the sound and rational rules of engagement.

Led by Garcia, in 1997, USARSA participated in a Human Rights Subject Matter Expert Exchange with instructors from the Armed Forces of Paraguay. Last year, USARSA sponsored five separate U.S. Southern Command (SOUTHCOM) events with Paraguay.

As a result of the program, the Paraguayan Armed Forces have committed to incorporating Human Rights education as a permanent part of the curriculum.

Garcia has also been instrumental in bringing many Human Rights agencies to the school, including the International Committee of the Red Cross, which has taught two classes at the school.

In July, USARSA activated the Roy Benavidez Noncommissioned Officer Academy. The academy is the Army's first Spanish-speaking NCOs training institute.

"This academy is unique and different," said Commanding General Maj. Gen. Carl Ernst. "It will have a pivotal role in what a professional Army's role is in democratic sustainment. That's what our NCOs do. They set up standards of discipline and behavior for the training readiness of our Army. We expect this academy to have the same impact on the Armies of Latin America."

Standing side-by-side with the school's Commandant, Col. Glenn R. Weidner, was the Assistant Commandant, Col. Lex Parker from El Salvador. The Assistant Commandant position is held by a Latin American colonel serving a two-year tour. This prestigious post is rotated alphabetically among the participating countries, to afford each an opportunity to share the experiences of senior leaders.

Each year, USARSA personnel contribute significantly to the success of SOUTHCOM programs though participation as observers-controllers and subject matter experts for joint and combined exercises, instructors with Mobile Training Teams, and as exchange instructors at military schools. This pool of highly-trained personnel with practical experience in Latin America is a source of technical and professional expertise as well as military diplomacy.

"Emphasizing cooperation among the militaries of the hemisphere is a key factor in the peace and stability of the Americas," Weidner said. "USARSA is instrumental in accomplishing this objective, in pursuit of the vision of the Inter-American system."

Red Cross opens centers

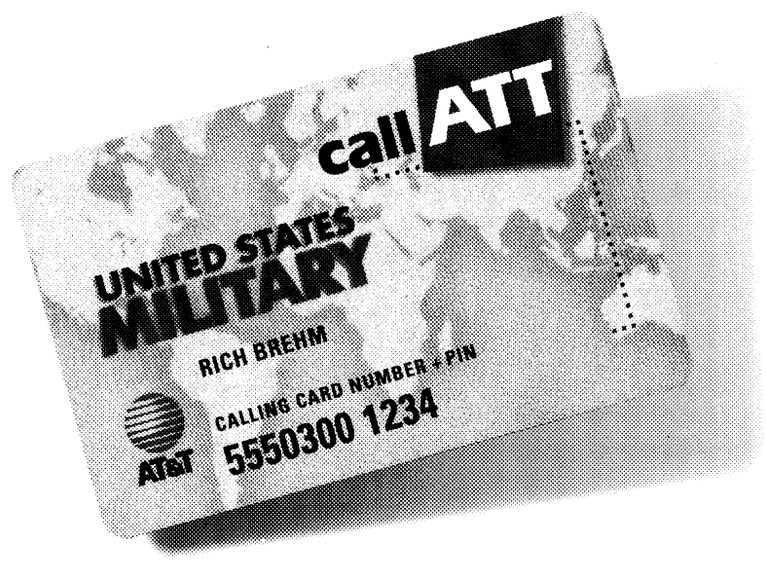
Gerry J. Gilmore
Army News Service

The American Red Cross is using new information technology to modernize its U.S. emergency messaging capability and improve service to military members and their families.

"We're taking the emergency communications work currently provided at 145 CONUS military installations and consolidating it into two Armed Forces Emergency Service Centers," said Sue A. Richter, vice president of the Red Cross Armed Forces Emergency Services. "We're going to be using toll-free numbers, because most of our assistance is provided by phone."

The first center opens Nov. 16 at Red Cross headquarters in Falls Church, Va., Richter said. The second, she said, opens next year at Fort Sill, Okla., in June.

Both centers will use the latest in call-center technology, computers and software to process and document the casework, Richter said. Customers will be quickly connected to trained caseworkers that are available around-the-clock, she said.



"It'll be one consolidated system for military or family members who need to contact the Red Cross," Richter said. "Let's say a service member is deployed to Bosnia, with a wife or husband living in the states on or near a military installation. The spouse with a message would use a toll-free number to call directly into one of the centers to talk to a Red Cross caseworker. The caseworker would gather and verify information provided by the spouse.

"We'd forward messages such as requests for a servicemember to come home on emergency leave, or to notify a servicemember of an emergency situation at home.

"Sometimes, we'll deliver happy news, (such as) the arrival of a new son or daughter," she said.

The Red Cross Board of Governors approved the modernization program in February 1997, said Ben Moore, project coordinator for the modernization program. Moore noted that volunteers and employees at 1,300 Red Cross chapters in the U.S., many adjacent to military installations, would ensure the delivery of all other Red Cross services on the installations. About 45,000 Red Cross volunteers work on U.S. military installations across the globe.

"Our goal is for no one to fall through the cracks," Moore said. "Once we get the service on line, it doesn't matter where in the U.S. the service member or his or her family is. We're looking to implement the system worldwide."

Ceremony honors top Soldiers

The Main NCO Club hosted the 4th Quarter Soldier and NCO of the Quarter awards Oct. 29.

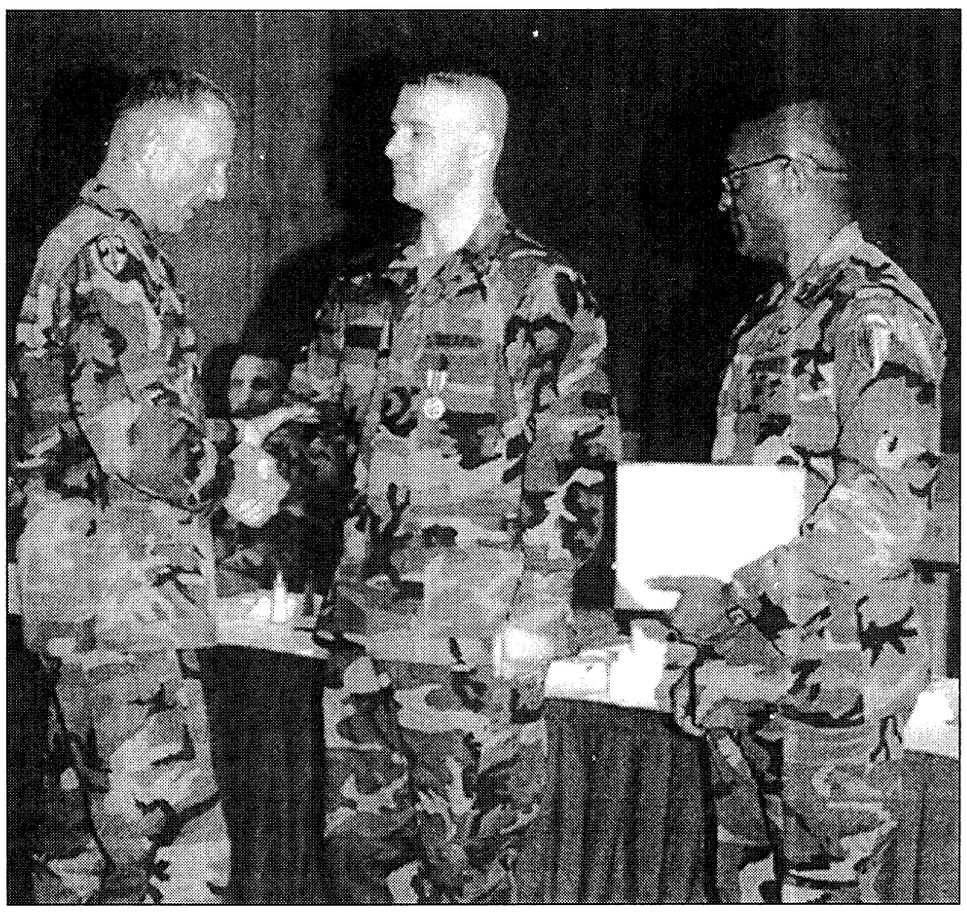
Soldiers from different units around post gathered to honor two Soldiers for their accomplishments.

Spc. Eldon Triggs, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment, took Soldier of the Quarter while Sgt. Ian Kidd took NCO of the Quarter.

Triggs started his career in 1993 as a Soldier in the National Guard. Since that time Triggs has earned the Army Achievement Medal and the Army Commendation Medal.

He has also won competitions within the battalion and an additional quarter award previously.

"It is overwhelming," Triggs said. "It is a privilege to be a representative of Fort Benning and the Infantry school."



Triggs said he can now work toward the next goal and strive for the Soldier of the Year title.

Although Kidd was unable to personally accept the honor while attending the Basic Noncommissioned Officers Course, Kidd's squad leader Staff Sgt. Richard Rodriquez, accepted all awards in his absence.

"Kidd is a dedicated NCO," Rodriquez said. "His main concern goes to his Soldiers and their best interest."

Both Soldiers received an Army Achievement Medal among various other gifts.

The gifts were sponsored by AAFES, AUSA, B&B Beverage, CB&T, Express Boot Repair, First Union Bank, Freeway Ford, GEICO, MBA, McCoy Environment, NCOA, Pioneer Military Lending, Sam's Club, U.S. Cavalry and USPA.

ACAP offers placement service for transitioning Soldiers

Debbie Henshaw
Army Career and Alumni Program

For those who are looking for a career in the civilian job market, help may be available.

The Deputy Director of the Officer Placement Service for the Retired Officer Association (TROA), an expert on transitioning from military to civilian employment, will be at Infantry Hall in Classroom 30 from 9 to 11:30 a.m. Nov. 18.

Jerry Crews will be available to talk with officers, senior noncommissioned officers and spouses on "Marketing Yourself for a Second Career."

"Jerry Crews is an expert on transitioning from military to civilian employment," said Debbie Henshaw, Army Career and Alumni Program counselor.

The two and a half hour presentation will introduce the audience to the realities of the competition in the civilian job market; perceptions civilian employers have of military personnel; a plan for the job search; tips for strengthening the resume; networking plans and preparing for and conducting a successful interview, salary negotiations and benefit packages.

"The lecture is presented annually at over 100 U.S. military bases worldwide. It is up-to-date, hard hitting and sharply focused," said Dwayne Wight, Fort Benning's Transition Services Manager.

Soldiers and their spouses are invited to attend the free lecture. While there, they may ask questions and will also receive a free copy of the publication on "Marketing Yourself for a Second Career."

Those with questions should contact the ACAP Center at 545-2308 or 545-2309.

Soldiers dispatch fleet during NTC

Pfc. Jason Lefevre
50th Public Affairs Detachment

FORT IRWIN, Calif. — There are many different actions that make a rotation at the National Training Center (NTC) here. Getting all the gear packed up, deployment, preparation for "combat" and the actual training.

One of the most important actions is the equipment draw, which consists of vehicle preparation and dispatch.

"The pre-positioned fleet has about 1,350 vehicles available, and we took just over 1,300," said Capt. Joseph Nolan, assistant logistics officer for 3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division (Mechanized) and project officer for the pre-positioned fleet. "Things have been going real well. We are on schedule and may even be a little ahead of schedule."

Planning ahead, according to Nolan, is the key to their success.

"We sent out a group of 50 mechanics in advance to help out the fleet," he said. "They worked extremely hard and put in long hours. The first day of the draw we had 48 tanks pull out of the yard, which is unheard of. The success of our draw is predicated on the hard work of our Soldiers."

The mechanics' job during the draw, and throughout the rotation, is to maintain the vehicles for battle readiness.

"We come out, start the vehicles and find deadlines," said Pfc. Kenneth Scheller, Company B, 1st Battalion, 64th Armor Regiment. "There are a lot of quick-fixes that we have to do to keep the vehicles ready."

Sgt. Kevin Brown, Co. B, 1st Bn., 64th Armor Regt., echoed those sentiments. "Our main purpose is to look for deadline items. We fix the rest of it as we go along. We're checking and re-checking everything, so we're catching a lot of stuff that we might not catch the first time around."

The number of vehicles and the amount of Soldiers in the draw yard make safety a major issue.

"We want to make sure everyone's safe," Nolan said. "We have ground guides for all vehicles. We also have a central lane, marked off with cones, for the vehicles to travel down. The noncommissioned officers are working very hard on the central lane, making sure we have the vehicles going through to the front gate."

Morale is also a big issue. This is the first deployment for many Soldiers, and maintaining a positive outlook is very important during the training, Nolan said.

"We're all excited. We can't wait to get out there and get in some good training," said Pfc. Charlie Jones, 1st Battalion, 15th Infantry Regiment. "Everything is going smoothly, and we're all working as a team."

"Everyone is trying to stay focused and stay positive," added Pvt. Yader Fletes, 1st Bn., 15th Inf. Regt. "The more focused you are, the faster you get out of here."

Along with morale comes enthusiasm, which was prevalent throughout the draw.

Learning the ways of the U.S. Army while the Soldiers train may make it easier for the next NTC rotation.

Spc. Amanda Belle Acosta

A long line of vehicles can be seen waiting to leave the draw yard as Soldiers at the National Training Center dispatch vehicles for the training deployment.

4-H Club

Organization gives children chance to meet people, have fun

Nicòle Longstreath
Special to the Bayonet©

The largest youth organization, 4-H, is coming to Fort Benning and now, kids across the post can no longer say they "have nothing to do."

Coming soon to Fort Benning, children from fourth-grade and up who want to meet new people and participate in projects and exchange programs will soon have that opportunity to get involved.

"We do some really interesting activities," said Deborah Gambles, Muscogee County extension program assistant. "The teachers love it and the parents love it because it encourages the kids to read, do science projects and get involved with other children."

The Fort Benning 4-H will also have an exchange program with 4-H clubs across the country.

"We exchange with 4-H groups all over the country because we all have something to offer," Gambles said.

Although 4-H doesn't have any definite plans yet for community activities, Fort Benning Youth Services youth development director, Quintella Thorn said, "4-H is good because it will give the kids a chance to interact with kids from other places."

Not only do children have the opportunity to meet other members from different areas of the country, they get the chance to go camping, skating, skiing as well as have an opportunity to compete against each other in Project Achievement.

Project Achievement is a competition that enables members to choose a project from 30 categories such as pet care and sports. The competitors research the subject and at the end of the competition present it to their peers and a panel of judges who grade on accuracy and presentation.

Thorn said activities, like Project Achievement, teach children valuable life skills.

"That's what life is about – winning and losing," Thorn said. "We are trying to teach young children to learn to work together."

Helping to build these skills is 4-H's mission, Gambles said.

"As a member, they learn work ethic, social etiquette and leadership," Gambles said. "That is our mission – to build character in children."

Gambles said she is anxious to reach out to military children at Fort Benning.

"We encourage all the Fort Benning children to get involved with 4-H and learn stuff that otherwise they wouldn't learn," Gambles said.

Gambles explained military children don't have to worry about getting involved with 4-H and being anxious about a sponsor's PCS because the club can be found at almost every military installation.

"Sometimes military kids miss out on being involved with something because they move so much," Gambles said. "With 4-H, everywhere they go, it will be in their community."

Prospective members must register through Youth Services and anyone interested in becoming a member of 4H is invited to attend the first club meeting at 3 p.m. Tuesday at the Youth Services Center.

Engineers take day off for fun

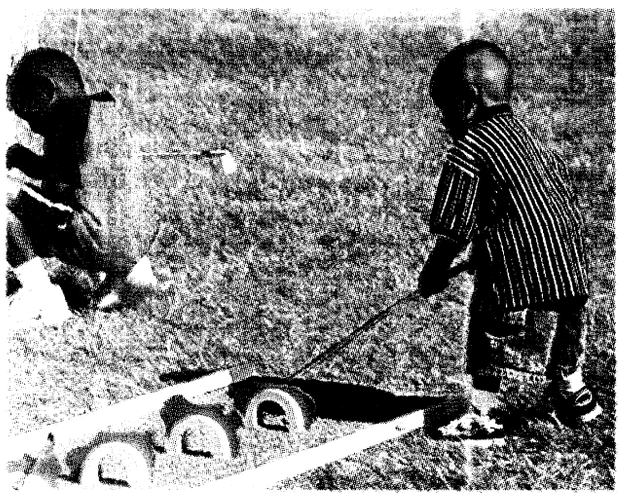
Instead of building roads, Soldiers of the 63rd Engineer Company (Combat Support Equipment), 36th Engineer Group (Construction), completed another important mission on Oct. 30 while attending the annual 63rd Engineers Family Fun Day.

Soldiers, along with family members, participated in a wide variety of festivities that included food, music, races and activities to entertain all ages.



"Today we will take a break from our normal work day and consider what is most important and that is our families," said Capt. Robert Carr, commander of the 63rd Engineer Company. "Family day is set aside to show our appreciation for the support they give us while we are in the field."

The 63rd Eng. Co. is continually in and out of the field. The company has spent the last eight months building roads in and around the Fort Benning area.

"When we are in the field, it is our families and the family support group (FSG) that keep everything together," Carr said. "Supportive families help keep Soldiers focused on the mission and we owe them for all their support."

The FSG sold a variety of foods, from hotdogs to baked goods, during family day as one of their fundraisers.

Participants took part in sack races, pony rides, water balloon games, a cakewalk, moonwalk, dart games, basketball and miniature golf.

Couples can work to fight infertility

Dr. Virginia Yates
Martin Army Community Hospital

Infertility is defined as the failure to conceive after one year of intercourse without contraception. One in six couples in the U.S. will experience difficulty conceiving during the first year and one in 10 will be unable to conceive the second.

Infertility may be due to many factors. Half of the time the cause is from factors in the woman and half the time the cause is from factors in the man. Often the infertility results from the combination of factors in both parents.

For pregnancy to occur, an egg must be released from the ovary. This is known as ovulation and occurs approximately 14 days before the menstrual period. Once the egg is released, it is capable of being fertilized for 24-72 hours. Sperm can live in the woman's reproductive tract for two or three days or longer. The sperm must travel through several canals and tubes to reach the egg for fertilization to occur. Infertility results if there is a problem anywhere in this chain of events.

An infertility workup should involve both partners and can usually begin in your primary care doctor's office. The basic evaluation takes a few menstrual cycles to complete and will often include:

•A semen analysis to assess sperm count and quality.

•Proof of ovulation with temperature charts, ovulation test kits or hormone levels.

•X-ray evaluation of the woman's uterus and tubes for blockages.

•Blood tests for hormones (such as thyroid related hormones).

•Tests for infections (such as sexually transmitted diseases).

•A post coital test to see how the sperm moves through the mucus of the woman's cervix.

Most common causes of infertility can be treated at a facility such as Martin Army Medical Community Hospital. Walter Reed Army Medical Center and Keesler Air Force Medical Center also have more specialized infertility clinics if needed for such services as assisted reproductive technologies. An example of such specialized treatment includes invitro fertilization or "test tube babies." Couples may be placed on a waiting list for these very limited resources.

Couples wishing to pursue an infertility workup have important considerations to discuss. For some couples, the process is time consuming and expensive. For others, the mixture of hopes and disappointments can be emotionally trying. Many couples who are infertile receive advice and pressure from family and friends which adds to the stress of infertility.

For those who are infertile, options besides an infertility workup include adoption or the decision to share life as a couple without children.

Special thanks to Dr. John Payne, Obstetrics and Gynecology Clinic, MACH, for his assistance with this article.

MACH ER moves to new location

Martin Army Community Hospital

The Emergency Department at Martin Army Community Hospital (MACH) will be moving Nov. 18 and 19 to allow for construction of the new updated Emergency Department.

The new temporary location will be the previous OB-GYN clinic.

Given the significant decrease of available space to render emergency care during the renovations there will be extremely limited emergency services available during this period. It is requested that patients seek treatment with their primary care physician during this time with the exception of absolute life threatening emergencies. All non-emergent illnesses or minor illnesses or injuries are asked to see their primary care providers whenever possible.

The completion of the ER renovation has been forecasted to conclude in approximately one year. During that time patients with emergent medical problems will be treated at the new location.

The same high quality of medical care will be given, but limited space and available resources during the renovation may cause longer waiting and treatment times.

MACH asks for the understanding and cooperation of all military medical beneficiaries during this transition period.

Russell C. Thomason, chief of facility management at MACH explained, "The relocation project includes a centralized triage department to properly route non-emergent patients to other departments which will greatly minimize waiting time in the ER."

"The ER will be modernized to improve our service to the community, such as a decontamination room for improved care to victims of chemical spills," Thomason adds.

Directorate of Public Works

Fort Benning is doing a great job of recycling. However, to keep recycling working, everyone should try to buy products that are made with or packaged in recycled-content materials. People can find these products easily when they shop for groceries, hardware, auto parts, office supplies and more.

Celebrate America Recycles Day Nov. 15 by pledging to recycle and shop for recycled products. All pledges will be entered into a random drawing for the "American Green Dream House" — a three-bedroom, two-and-a-half-bath home built with recycled materials. This contest is sponsored by the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency. Here are the ways you can enter:

•On the World Wide Web at www.americarecyclesday.org;or •Hand print your complete name and address on a 3"x5" scrap piece of paper (Entries must be postmarked by Nov. 15) and mail to:

America Recycles Day Contest

Here are some ways to celebrate America Recycles Day:

•Commit to "Buy Recycled" at home and work.

•Think before buying. Reduce-reuse-recycle.

•Support the installation's recycling program at work, school and at home.

•Call the installation Recycling Coordinator at 545-1007 with ideas on better ways to recycle.

•Tell local retailers to stock more products made with recycled materials.

•Encourage the use of recycled content products.

•Leave grass clippings on the lawn as fertilizer.

•Visit the installation Recycling Facility. To set up a tour, call Tom Moore at 544-6142.

•Recycle used motor oil and oil filters at an approved collection center and buy re-refined oil for the next oil change.

•Participate in recycling during the holiday season by helping others with unwanted or outgrown clothing. As colder weather approaches, all of the Valley's charitable organizations need warm clothing, coats and sweaters. This is an excellent opportunity to clean out closets and help those less fortunate.

To know more about ways to help recycle call Walter Nichols at 545-1007. For more information about the contest, call (800) YES-I-CAN. Remember, it is the people who make Fort Benning—First in Training—First in Readiness—First in Quality of Life.

Veterans Day honors past heroes

Chaplain (Maj.) Donald J. Blickhan
Pastor, Main Post Catholic Chapel

Some years ago when I served at Fort Myer, Va., I had the privilege of performing the funerals at Arlington National Cemetery.

reflections

In my two years at Arlington, I officiated at final honors for some 500 Soldiers and family members from the Army community.

I would often walk through the cemetery in the evening to reflect on the day. You could not help but feel the greatness of our nation's past as you walked those hallowed halls. Nearly everywhere you turned, you came across the memorial stones of our nation's heroes and builders.

I remember passing the stones of Maj. John Wesley Powell, explorer of the Grand Canyon, and Gen. Abner Doubleday of Civil War fame. Presidents Taft and Kennedy lie there.

I remember standing beside the memorial stone of Maj. Glenn Miller, famous jazz musician, lost in an air crash during World War II. His stone was in a section devoted to many of our nation's heroes who never came home. Their remains were never found. Parents of these men and women were never able to lay them to rest.

I came to treasure most, however, the memories of those for whom I had performed final honors. They had fought in nearly every conflict from the Spanish American War until the present.

There was the tiny infant daughter of an active duty lieutenant colonel and his wife. This family, in the midst of the pain of loving their precious child, found the strength to reach out to family and friends concerned about them. That celebration focused not on the family's grief, but rather on their gratitude to God for the gift their daughter had been to them. The strength of Army families never fails to amaze me.

I was privileged to bury one of our nation's true heroes, a man named Matt Urban. As a young captain, he distinguished himself with almost supernatural heroism during WWII. He held the Medal of Honor, multiple Silver Stars and numerous other awards. He is believed to be the single most decorated U.S. Soldier in history. After the war, he returned home and lived a quiet life as an ordinary citizen working for the park district in his hometown.

The funeral I remember the most was held on a gray, overcast Good Friday. An old WWII NCO had lovingly crafted a beautiful box for his wife's cremated remains. He chose as her final resting place a shaded spot among the graves of his buddies from the war. He knew that they would look after her until it was his time to join her.

As we approach Veterans Day, I find myself thinking again about these incredible men and women who laid the foundations of this great land of ours. They were giants and we stand today in their shadows. May we never forget them and the debt which we owe them all.

Agencies can help battle depression

Chaplain (Maj.) Frederick M. Rupel
Chief, Chaplain Family Life Ministries

Depression is an illness that even the physically strong cannot always deal with. It is estimated that in any given year, 17.6 million American adults, or 10 percent of the population, suffer from a depressive illness. Depression can cloud a person's ability to think and reality becomes blighted and blurred. Many depressed people feel a sense of purposelessness, powerlessness and hopelessness from which there is no chance of recovery.

Major depression can destroy the life of those suffering from it. It also causes much pain and suffering for those who care for the one in a depressed state. I know this to be a fact as I watched my own mother slip into a state of severe depression. This was my mother — I was crushed. But something good happened along the way. Realizing her state of affairs she submitted herself to some medical treatment recommended by her primary doctor. This treatment coupled with much prayer brought my mother out of her depression.

Most everyone will experience depression and have to learn how to come to terms with it at some point in their life. Fortunately there are agencies here at Fort Benning ready to help those afflicted with depression.

If you know of someone severely depressed, let me offer these suggestions. First, be as supportive as possible. Second, learn to listen to what the depressed person is saying. Third, and most important, if you suspect a person is severely depressed, assist him or her in making an appointment with a qualified professional to receive treatment.

The Chaplain Family Life Ministries can help. If you have questions about depression, call 545-1760.

USAMU Soldier wins national shooting title

Paula J. Randall Pagan
U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit

First he broke two world records and won a World Cup Gold Medal. Then he won a Gold and Silver Medal in two more World Cups, becoming the first American Shooter to win three World Cup Medals in a single season. Now, the Soldier with the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit (USAMU) has won a national shooting title.

USAMU international rifle shooter Jason A. Parker was selected as the 1998 USA Shooting Shooter of the Year. USA Shooting of Colorado Springs, Colo. is the national governing body for Olympic shooting sports in the U.S. After being selected as the USA Shooting Male Rifle Shooter of the Year, Parker was selected as the overall Shooter of the Year out of all the winners in the four Olympic shooting disciplines. USAMU international pistol shooter Darryl L. Szarenski won the USA Shooting Male Pistol Shooter of the Year.

Parker won the Gold Medal in the Air Rifle Match at the World Cup in Buenos Aires, Argentina last month and was selected as one of the 12 best air rifle shooters in the world to compete in the World Cup Final in Zurich, Switzerland this month where he finished fifth. In May he won the Silver Medal from a field of 101 of the world's best marksmen in the Men's Air Rifle March at the 1998 Milan World Cup, only a week after winning a Gold Medal and setting two world records at the Munich, Germany, World Cup, for which he was featured in Sports Illustrated's Faces in the Crowd column in June.

"As the reigning world-record holder, he has an excellent chance of making the 2000 Olympic Team and he has a great military career ahead of him," said USAMU Deputy Commander Robert Aylward.

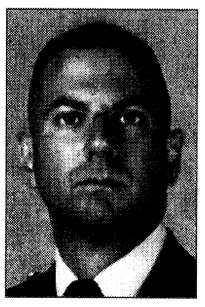
"These days, with the wealth of talented athletes around the world, it's a rare feat to medal in consecutive World Cups like Jason did," said U.S. National Rifle Team Coach Dan Durben. "His accomplishments are a credit to his hard work, preparation and positive attitude.

"I'm excited that I had such a good year; it turned out a lot better than I thought it would," Parker said. "There were a lot of good shooters having success this year, like Sergeant Tamas who won the World Championship and Sergeant Szarenski who shot very well this year, so I was very surprised that I won shooter of the year."

Parker said he owed much of his success to his coach Bill Krilling who was recently named as the U.S. Olympic Committee National Coach of the Year in Shooting.

"Mr. Krilling has really helped me develop my technique," Parker explained. "I also get to practice and compete with the best shooters in the world right here on our team and the unit has the best gunsmiths who make sure the guns are working right. I owe my success to the Marksmanship Unit and to the Army."

"This was his year; he did very well," Krilling said. "He's still on his way up. If he continues to improve at this pace, he'll be favorite for the 2000 Olympic Team. By the time the Olympics are here, he'll be ready to go for the medal."



"I feel like I have a pretty good chance for the Olympics," Parker said. "I'm pretty confident in air rifle and I'm working on my smallbore to bring it up to the same level."

MACH renovates ER

Department temporarily moves to OB-GYN ward

Pfc. Nicole M. Massie
Bayonet staff writer

The emergency room (ER) at Martin Army Community Hospital (MACH) will receive more than $1 million in renovations beginning Nov. 18.

The current ER was built in 1958 and at that time it was considered to be state of the art. After 40 years, MACH will be upgrading to bring the ER into the standards of today, said Chief of Emergency Operations and Management Maj. Joseph Kaplan.

Within the new 200 square feet of working space, the ER will receive a variety of care service stations and beds which will assist in getting patients the proper care in a fraction of the time that it now takes, Kaplan said.

Among new facilities, patients may see such additions as a new acute care clinic, six-bed consultation area, decontamination room, increased patient rooms, triage area, cardiac rooms and trauma rooms. The new additions and patient bed space will assist the medical staff when treating patients.

The design of the ER maximizes efficiency and decreases the waiting time patients may experience, Kaplan said.

While more than 150 patients enter the ER at night, more than half of the patients are only experiencing minor illness or injury, Kaplan said.

The new ER will allow patients to be assisted in an appropriate area for treatment. Non-emergency patients will be sent directly to triage or acute care.

"Patients will have the highest level of quality care possible when they come to Martin Army," Kaplan said. "The new emergency room is going to be great. It will help patients receive better access to the care they need."

The renovations are scheduled to last for about one year. During this time the ER will reside in the Obstetrician-Gynecology (OB-GYN) ward of MACH. While the renovations are being conducted, MACH will open an evening clinic to assist in reducing the flow of patients.

During the night of the move on Nov. 18, the staff of the ER is requesting all non-emergency cases wait and make appointments with their regular clinics. All off-post ambulances which normally transport patients to MACH also will be diverted to other hospitals.

Post prepares for visitors

Maria Taylor
Bayonet correspondent

Whether Fort Benning captures its first state-level award for quality and excellence will depend on what a team of examiners learns when it visits post Sunday through Nov. 20.

Eleven examiners and one representative for the Georgia Oglethorpe Award Process will evaluate Fort Benning in the government category of the Oglethorpe award, the highest level of state recognition for performance and excellence that a Georgia organization can receive, according to Pat Porter, management analyst for the quality management division.

As part of the application process, Fort Benning submitted a packet of information, including responses to criteria in seven categories: leadership, strategic planning, human resource, customer and market, information and analysis, process management and business results.

"The examiners will hold roundtable discussions with Fort Benning leaders and key process team members to verify and clarify the information submitted in the packet," Porter said.

Porter said Fort Benning will receive a feedback report from them in the February timeframe.

Rangers leave for two-week deployment

Pfc. Amy L. Nyland
Bayonet staff writer

Fort Pickett, Va. — More than 400 Rangers from the 3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment packed up and headed to Fort Pickett, Va., Tuesday to spend two weeks conducting some familiar training in a not-so-familiar environment.

While half of the Rangers loaded up for a 12-hour bus ride, Rangers from Companies A and B started the night off with a bang, parachuting straight into Fort Pickett.

According to Maj. Ralph Kauzlarich, commander of Headquarters and Headquarters Company, the Rangers will spend until Nov. 21 working on platoon and individual level training conducting three modules of training. The four companies will rotate through each of the three-day events which consist of platoon-level live fires, marksmanship training and Military Operations on Urban Terrain (MOUT).

"The biggest thing we are working on is collective tasks at the platoon and below level," Kauzlarich said. "The battalion is currently in a build mode and we have a lot of new Rangers and leaders coming in. Working on the basic fundamentals will be the best way to prepare them for special operations."

Even though the deployment to Fort Pickett may not have the Rangers working many new tasks, the change in scenery and terrain will most likely keep them on their toes.

Company A Commander Capt. Kevin Petit said the main reason for choosing Fort Pickett was to train the Rangers in a new environment and experience conditions unlike those at Fort Benning.

"What makes this mission a little more difficult and far more valuable is the fact that it is a new piece of ground we will be training on," Petit said. "Our purpose for coming here rather than anywhere else is realism in training. We are going to walk over terrain we haven't ever set foot on before which is going to help us validate all of our training techniques."

Petit mentioned that Virginia's weather is much colder than Fort Benning's which is another factor that enhances the Rangers' training.

Although the mission at Fort Pickett wasn't geared towards cold weather training, Petit said any change in temperature makes the training much more useful and helps toughen the Soldiers.

He added that getting away from Fort Benning helps eliminate some of the distractions they have to deal with on a day- to-day basis.

"I think one of the highlights of this trip is that we are away from the phones and the e-mail," Petit said. "We are kind of protected from ourselves and other distractions for nine days, which helps us to

Recycling

Where does Benning trash go

Michele E. Hanson
Special to the Bayonet©

Have you ever wondered what happens to the steel cans, aluminum, paper and plastic products placed curbside each week by thousands of Fort Benning residents?

The used materials begin a recycling process that collectively adds thousands of dollars back into Fort Benning's Morale, Welfare and Recreation programs and benefits future generations by reducing the amount of waste placed into landfills each year.

"The recycling goal is to take in more products and utilize better equipment to increase the efficiency of the program, which in turn will increase the profits," said Tom Moore, recycling manager at the Material Recovery Facility (MRF). "To recover more products and make recycling easier, green collection bins are located throughout Fort Benning and a collection drop off point is located adjacent to the Main Post Class Six. However, the Army Family Housing Curbside Recycling Program provides the vast majority of products."

Recycled materials are transported to the MRF where material identifiers and examiners begin to transform huge piles of recyclable products into organized bales of white paper, newspaper, cardboard, steel cans, plastic and aluminum. Once the recyclables are baled, they are ready to be sold. If the market price is unfavorable, then the material can be stored temporarily in the outside storage wing of the facility until the going rate increases.

"In contrast to popular belief, plastic is a small portion of what fills up landfills," said Walter Nichols, solid waste program manager for DPW.

"The biggest waste of material thrown away is cardboard and paper products."

According to Nichols, when harmless paper and cardboard are placed in a landfill they begin to decompose. A liquid is generated from the decomposing material that can contaminate ground water, and methane gas is produced which must be carefully managed. Recycling paper products turns "public enemy number one" into a product that makes a little money while reducing what goes into the landfill, minimizing future maintenance costs.

A unique aspect of the Fort Benning Recycling Program is that if a market cannot be located for a product then Fort Benning becomes the market by finding ways to use the materials.

"We have a concrete crusher on the way which will reduce the tonnage sent to off-post landfills while creating a product that can be used for erosion control. We also have a small wood shredder that turns discarded wood products into mulch that is used around post," said Nichols.

Nichols explained that since 1993 Fort Benning reduced what goes into the landfill from 44,000 tons to less than 20,000 tons and our community is way above the state and national average on the amount of material recovered for recycle.

"Fort Benning's Recycling program grew from virtually nothing, to a viable recycling center that is one of the best in the southeast. The success of the program is directly related to command support, the high participation rate of housing residents and the efforts of Fort Benning Soldiers and employees," said Moore. "I commend the efforts of the Fort Benning community which preserves natural resources, saves money and benefits future generations."

For questions or comments regarding recycling, call Walter Nichols at 545-1007 or 545-2108.

Energy conservation starts at home

Pfc. Nicole M. Massie
Bayonet staff writer

commentary

I will be the first to admit that occasionally I leave lights on and sometimes the bathroom sink will drip for at least an hour before I get around to turning it off. So, I guess I never really gave energy conservation a second thought.

Recently, I became more aware of the term: energy conservation. Why? Well, in conjunction with Energy Awareness Month, I received my very first utility bill.

Although it was not outrageously high, I began to think of the other bills which will start to show up in my mail.

So, I decided to make it my mission to try and find things that will help lower the amount of energy used in my home.

Now I turn the lights off when no one is in the room and I turn the air conditioner off when no one is home, but this just seemed too easy. So, I started looking up ways I could further save on energy and money.

I started my search on the web and as I surfed the net, I started to discover really interesting facts and energy-saving tips.

Did you know that 20 percent of household energy is used just to run major appliances? Now, seeing as most major appliances are necessary, there are steps one may take to keep the amount of energy used to a minimum.

Eighty to 85 percent of the energy used when operating a washing machine is used just to heat the water. This can add about $88 a year to the electric or gas bill (depending on different homes). This amount could be cut in half by just simply using a cooler temperature setting.

Also, a microwave oven takes about $15 to $20 per year to operate, where as an electric stove uses about $50 per year. So, it may be beneficial to follow the microwave oven directions on that box of macaroni and cheese instead of using the stove-top directions. If you're like me, this shouldn't be a problem.

I am happy to announce that a television consumes approximately 10 energy dollars per year, which is relatively low.

Now I must relax in front of the television instead of in the tub, because taking a bath uses an unbelievable 60 gallons of water.

According to a report from Albuquerque, N.M., a person can use between 50 and 200 gallons of water per day. That means about 5,600 gallons of water a month is used by a person.

When you total up the 5,600 gallons of water used with the amount of the additional water being wasted, it blows my mind.

A faucet drip or invisible leak in the toilet can add up to 5,475 gallons of wasted water a year, according to one report.

Replacing the showerhead in a home with an energy saving model can save up to four and one half gallons of water per minute and one can also save three to five gallons of water per minute just by turning off the water while shaving and brushing teeth, according the report.

After reading about all of the wasted resources, I have decided to try and do my part to conserve energy, not because it will be cheaper for me (well I will not go that far), but because one person really can make a difference. Why shouldn't that one person be me?

DPW offers tips to conserve energy

Directorate of Public Works

The Department of Public Works (DPW) offers additional tips on conserving energy in the home and office.

When one is trying to conserve electricity, there are many steps that may be taken to help in the effort.

It is always better to turn off a light when it is not needed, even if it is for a short period of time.

Use outdoor lighting only when it is needed. Timers may assist in this task.

One can also take steps when trying to conserve energy in the workplace.

Another major area of lighting savings comes from proper maintenance of existing lighting.

Lighting fixtures should be kept clean and interior building walls should be clean and painted with light colors to reflect light. Low partitions should be used in offices to help "share" the light in an office environment.

When windows and skylights are clean and clear, sunlight and heat may be able to light and warm a building.

Energy may be also reduced with the help of an energy office.

In storage areas and corridors, replacing existing lighting with smaller wattage or higher efficiency lights may help in this reduction.

Although conserving electricity is a factor in saving energy, the heating and cooling system may be an important addition in ways to conserve energy.

The heating and cooling system may be the largest energy user in a building. There are, however, ways to save energy in this area.

The energy used to heat and cool an unoccupied building to a comfortable level is a waste of energy and money. To save energy, set back the thermostat in the winter and set it up in the summer.

There are a few suggestions which may be helpful in this area.

By shutting off radiators and heating-registers, using thermostats with automatic night setback capabilities and limiting after hours and by dressing warmer during extreme weather may help save on heating and cooling energy.

Domestic hot water consumption can account for up to 10 percent of a buildings energy use; more if a home has a dining room or laundry facility.

One may also consider installing spray-type faucets with an aerator. This may be the most helpful in the shower.

The inspection of the insulation of hot water piping and tanks, leaks and shutting off the hot water pumps when a building is unoccupied may assist in lowering energy cost.

When at home, the use of a shower instead of a bath may help save over 2,000 gallons of hot water every year per person and by installing low-flow showerheads one may also save an additional $24 a year per person.

When trying to conserve energy, whether it be in the home or office, each person may make a difference by following a few energy saving tips.

Award money helps improve Fort Benning

Last year, Fort Benning won $500,000 in excellence award money and over the last six years, we've won more than $5.2 million. Ever wonder what happens to all the money Fort Benning gets for being the "Best Installation in the world?"

We use it to improve the quality of life for Soldiers, their families and our civilian workforce. Over the last six years, we have made significant quality of life improvements we could not have otherwise afforded. Guidance was to spend the money in community projects that would not be funded by Department of the Army and to get community input for ideas.

So where did all the money go last year? Last year's winnings allowed us to do the following.

•Provide $15,000 to the Better Opportunities for Single Soldiers (BOSS) program.

•Buy seven sets of playground equipment for our enlisted housing areas in McGraw Manor and Custer Terrace.

•Buy three computer projectors for use by our Department of Defense post schools to support the education of our children.

•Buy mats and supplies for our School Age Services Program.

•Place new picnic tables and barbecue grills at four post lake recreation sites.

•Clean and paint Doughboy Stadium to restore it as a historic landmark.

•Restore the Follow Me Fitness Trail off Dixie Road as a safe, attractive facility for runners and walkers.

•Build three covered bus stops to protect the children of Soldiers who are assigned in Dahlonega, Ga., with the 5th Ranger Training Battalion.

•Purchase more than $20,000 of additional self-help equipment (lawn mowers, edgers, etc.).

•Upgrade chapel public address systems and paint pews.

•Buy safety training tapes for Fort Benning Safety Office.

•Provide assorted landscaping (primarily replacement of dead trees) around post.

•Support our continuing Army Community of Excellence Program.

•Pay Fort Benning's application fee to participate in the Georgia Oglethorpe Award — another excellence program which will help us continue our history of excellence — and hopefully win more money.

•Maintain and add to our ACOE sign collection on I-185.

These projects are the things you told us you wanted and believed would enhance the quality of life here at Fort Benning. We hope that as you watch these projects unfold over the next several months, you will understand and appreciate all the hard work which goes into making Fort Benning the "Best Installation in the World." Thanks for all the help!

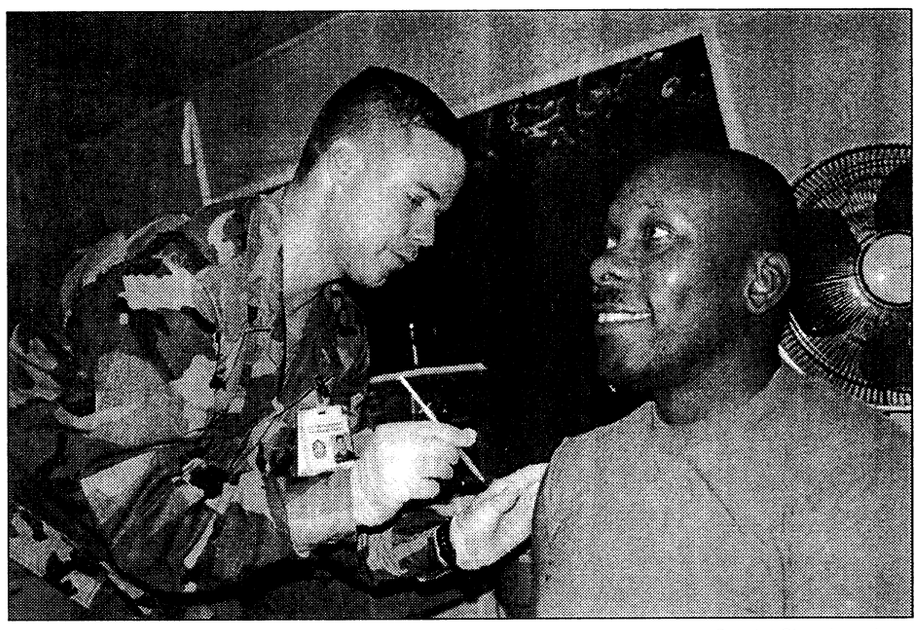
concentrate on training rather than being concerned with so many other little things."

Sgt. 1st Class Henry Montoya, HHC, 3rd Bn., 75th Ranger Regt said the exercises are an opportunity to receive some valuable training by going to different ranges, working with different weapons and using night vision goggles (NVGs) in a new terrain.



Montoya said he's excited to get away and train with the equipment in a new location especially under different weather conditions.

"As an NCO, I'm looking forward to training my section with the equipment," Montoya said. "It will be good training. One of the reasons is the colder climate. We aren't just going to train, we are also going to have to adapt and overcome the cold."

After their experience at Fort Pickett, Kauzlarich said the Rangers are sure to come away with a greater confidence.

He said everyone will be at a higher state of combat readiness and individual teams will be more comfortable working with one another.

"We are looking to produce a quality safe event so that when we leave here we will be better trained, and that's really the bottom line," Kauzlarich said.

Post achieves goal

The Combined Federal Campaign (CFC) was officially extended Friday until Nov. 20. The decision was made with 95 percent of the goal met and the additional 5 percent clearly obtainable. However, as of Monday, the $500,000 goal was successfully achieved.

"We are extremely pleased with the outcome of this years CFC drive," said Chuck Walls, garrison manager. "This is the first time in the past four years that we reached our projected goal of $500,000."

The Infantry Training Brigade (ITB) exceeded their goal of $200,000 set by Col. Abraham J. Turner, ITB commander.

"I am happy with the efforts of everyone involved during the campaign. In particular, I wanted to thank ITB's monstrous effort during the CFC drive. They did an outstanding job in helping the overall success of the campaign," Walls said.

Walls stressed that CFC is held for "all the right reasons" and an area of concern for next year is designation 9000, a fund designed to keep contributions local.

"The remainder of the campaign will be used to finalize with some of the smaller agencies and activities that are still in the process of turning in their donations," Walls said. "The Fort Benning community along with the tremendous effort of everyone involved showed we are a 'community that cares' and that is something we can all be proud of."

OWC holds bazaar

People from all over Fort Benning will be able to get a jump on their Christmas shopping at the annual OWC (Officers' Wives' Club) Craft Bazaar, Saturday from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. at Infantry Hall.

Seventy-five vendors from Columbus and Fort Benning will be on hand to offer countless crafts, artwork and Christmas items.

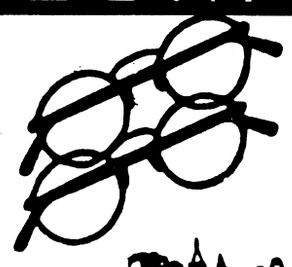
Admission is a $1 donation, which will enter the person in a drawing to win prizes such as a traditional quilt and a 2-night stay in Destin, Fla.

According to bazaar chairwoman, Kelly Krise, shoppers will be able to chose from many Christmas crafts including sleighs, stockings and hand-blown, Italian, glass ornaments which will be available at the Red Cross booth.

"We will have a wide variety to shop from," Krise said, "You name it, we'll have it."

Shoppers will also be able to get a bite to eat while browsing all the vendors have to offer. A Country Store will be selling donated food items and various family support groups will be offering hot dogs, nachos, apple cider and hot chocolate.

According to OWC president, Nancy Howle, shopping at the bazaar isn't just a good way to get a deal on crafts.



"All proceeds go to the OWC Welfare Fund," Howle said. "The funds are distributed to local organizations like Martin Army Community Hospital, Fort Benning schools and the Army Community Service's Food Locker."

"All of the money goes to the community, not just to OWC," Krise said. "We donate to the Girl Scouts, Boy Scouts and the Red Cross."

Not only is this a way for shoppers to help the Fort Benning Community, but, according to Krise, a great time to start Christmas shopping.

"People will be able to find gifts they can't find anywhere else," Krise said.

Programs combat workplace violence

Jim Caldwell
Army News Service

Commanders around the Training and Doctrine Command (TRADOC) were caught by surprise when several incidents of workplace violence occurred five years ago.

But that won't happen again, said the command's Provost Marshal Col. Robert Baldwin.

"Even though workplace violence in the civilian community was frequently making headlines then, I think we in the Army felt that it would not happen to us," Baldwin said.

That sense of security was shattered in 1993 when a civilian employee at Fort Knox, Ky., shot and killed his supervisor at work. Several other incidents at TRADOC installations followed, but all were without fatalities.

TRADOC and the Department of the Army created programs to combat workplace violence, according to Lt. Col. Ross Miller, staff officer in the provost marshal's office.

"TRADOC developed a training program called 'The Respectful Workplace,' Miller said. "Each installation received a training packet to teach supervisors and employees how to identify potential cases of violence."

After initial sessions, training was discontinued at most installations.

However, Army guidance recommends the formation of installation workplace violence prevention teams and they have been used at TRADOC installations in recent years, Miller said.

A prevention team is chaired by the garrison commander and includes representatives from the alcohol and drug control office, provost marshal, criminal investigation command, surgeon, equal employment opportunity, civilian personnel, chaplain, safety, personnel and community activities and legal office.

It has been at least a year since an installation convened a violence prevention team, Miller said.

"Before that there were a few instances where people displayed violent behavior in the workplace, either physical or verbal," he said. "In each case, the prevention team was brought together and was able to resolve the conflict."

In one case, an individual was counseled and returned to work. In another, a worker's behavior led to dismissal.

"We don't want to give the impression that we expect a rampant increase in workplace violence," Miller said. "But the same conditions that can lead to violence still exist. Downsizing of the Army continues and people may react irrationally when their security is threatened."

"The best place to head off potential violence is in the workplace, and that's why training is so important," he added.

"Employees and supervisors must be taught what types of behaviors can be indicators of potential violence," Miller said. "These are repeated behaviors that could start with being rude and uncooperative."

Officers must choose careers under system XX1

Gary Sheftick
Army News Service

Over the next few months, about 5,000 officers must make career choices under the new Officer Personnel Management System XXI.

OPMS XXI packets were sent out in October to lieutenant colonels commissioned in 1980, majors who took their oath in 1986 and captains commissioned in 1989. These officers will be the first ones designated into career fields under OPMS XXI. They must either choose to single-track in their current branch or pick one of 16 functional areas in which they want to serve the rest of their career.

The officers are being asked to make their selection via the Internet, through America's Army Online (also known as the AO2 web page) at www.us.army.mil. The 5,000 who must register now have been provided a user identification and password to sign in and access the OPMS XXI Career Field Designation Knowledge Center. They will fill out the registration form and submit it online. This "paperless" registration process, officials say, will be a "giant step" to "capitalize on technology."

Col. Mike Alvis was the first to sign up for one of the new OPMS functional areas, and he wasn't even required. He wanted to lead the way in registering for Functional Area 59 — Strategic Planning and Policy — one of eight new functional areas under OPMS XXI.

Alvis is currently a senior fellow at Harvard University. Last week he gave two speeches at Harvard on the future of U.S. peacekeeping missions. He also had dinner last week with Khofi Annan, secretary general of the United Nations.

Alvis said officers in his functional area could foreseeably work on a U.N. peacekeeping committee. Or they might serve on a joint staff in the Plans Directorate (J5), represent the Army at the State Department, or work on the Army staff in the Strategy Plans and Policy Directorate.

"When you're with Soldiers, you're touching lives," Alvis said. "When you're in this business (FA 59), you're helping shape the national policy which affects lives."

Alvis said education will be an important qualifier for FA 59, which falls under the Institutional Support Career Field.

OPMS XXI will group functional areas into four different career fields. The first one, "Operations," will include all of the current officer branches — from combat arms to combat service support. Civil affairs and an umbrella logistics functional area will also fall under Operations.

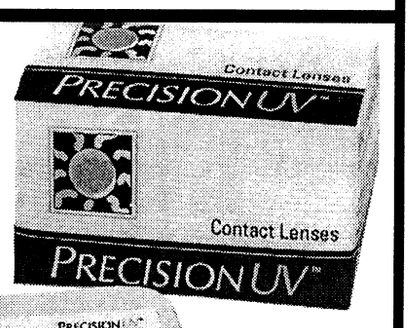
Officers who select the Operations Career Field will be the only ones who have a chance at obtaining battalion command. And that's why many officers, Alvis admitted, are hesitant to sign up for a functional area such as public affairs, comptroller or information systems engineering.

"I think OPMS XXI is a realization that we can't train the whole force to be battalion commanders at the expense of other things," said Alvis, who commanded a battalion in Joint Endeavor. He explained that only 10 to 12 percent of all lieutenant colonels can be selected for battalion command. Given those numbers, he said, it's not realistic or prudent to train all officers for something only about a tenth of them can hope to achieve. And he said a smaller Army can no longer afford not to train officers in specialized fields.

Under the new system, officers will compete for promotion only with others in their career field. Those in Information Operations, Institutional Support or Operational Support will never compete for promotion with a battalion commander. Thus, Alvis believes OPMS XXI will actually provide better promotion opportunities for officers in all career fields.

"I know a two-star general in the Army Acquisition Corps who never commanded a battalion," Alvis said. And out of 11 company commanders Alvis said he rated during the period he was a battalion commander, the two best went on to institutional support jobs — one is now serving in operations research analysis, and the other is in graduate school in the new Functional Area 49, Operations Research Systems Analysis.

"You're got to be happy at what you're doing,"Alvis said. "OPMS XXI will allow you to do the jobs you want to be doing, more often."



For those officers who might still be leary of signing up for a functional area, and passing up battalion command, Alvis said that no matter who takes over in the future, new leadership will never revert to the old ways of thinking.

Soldiers need families for holidays

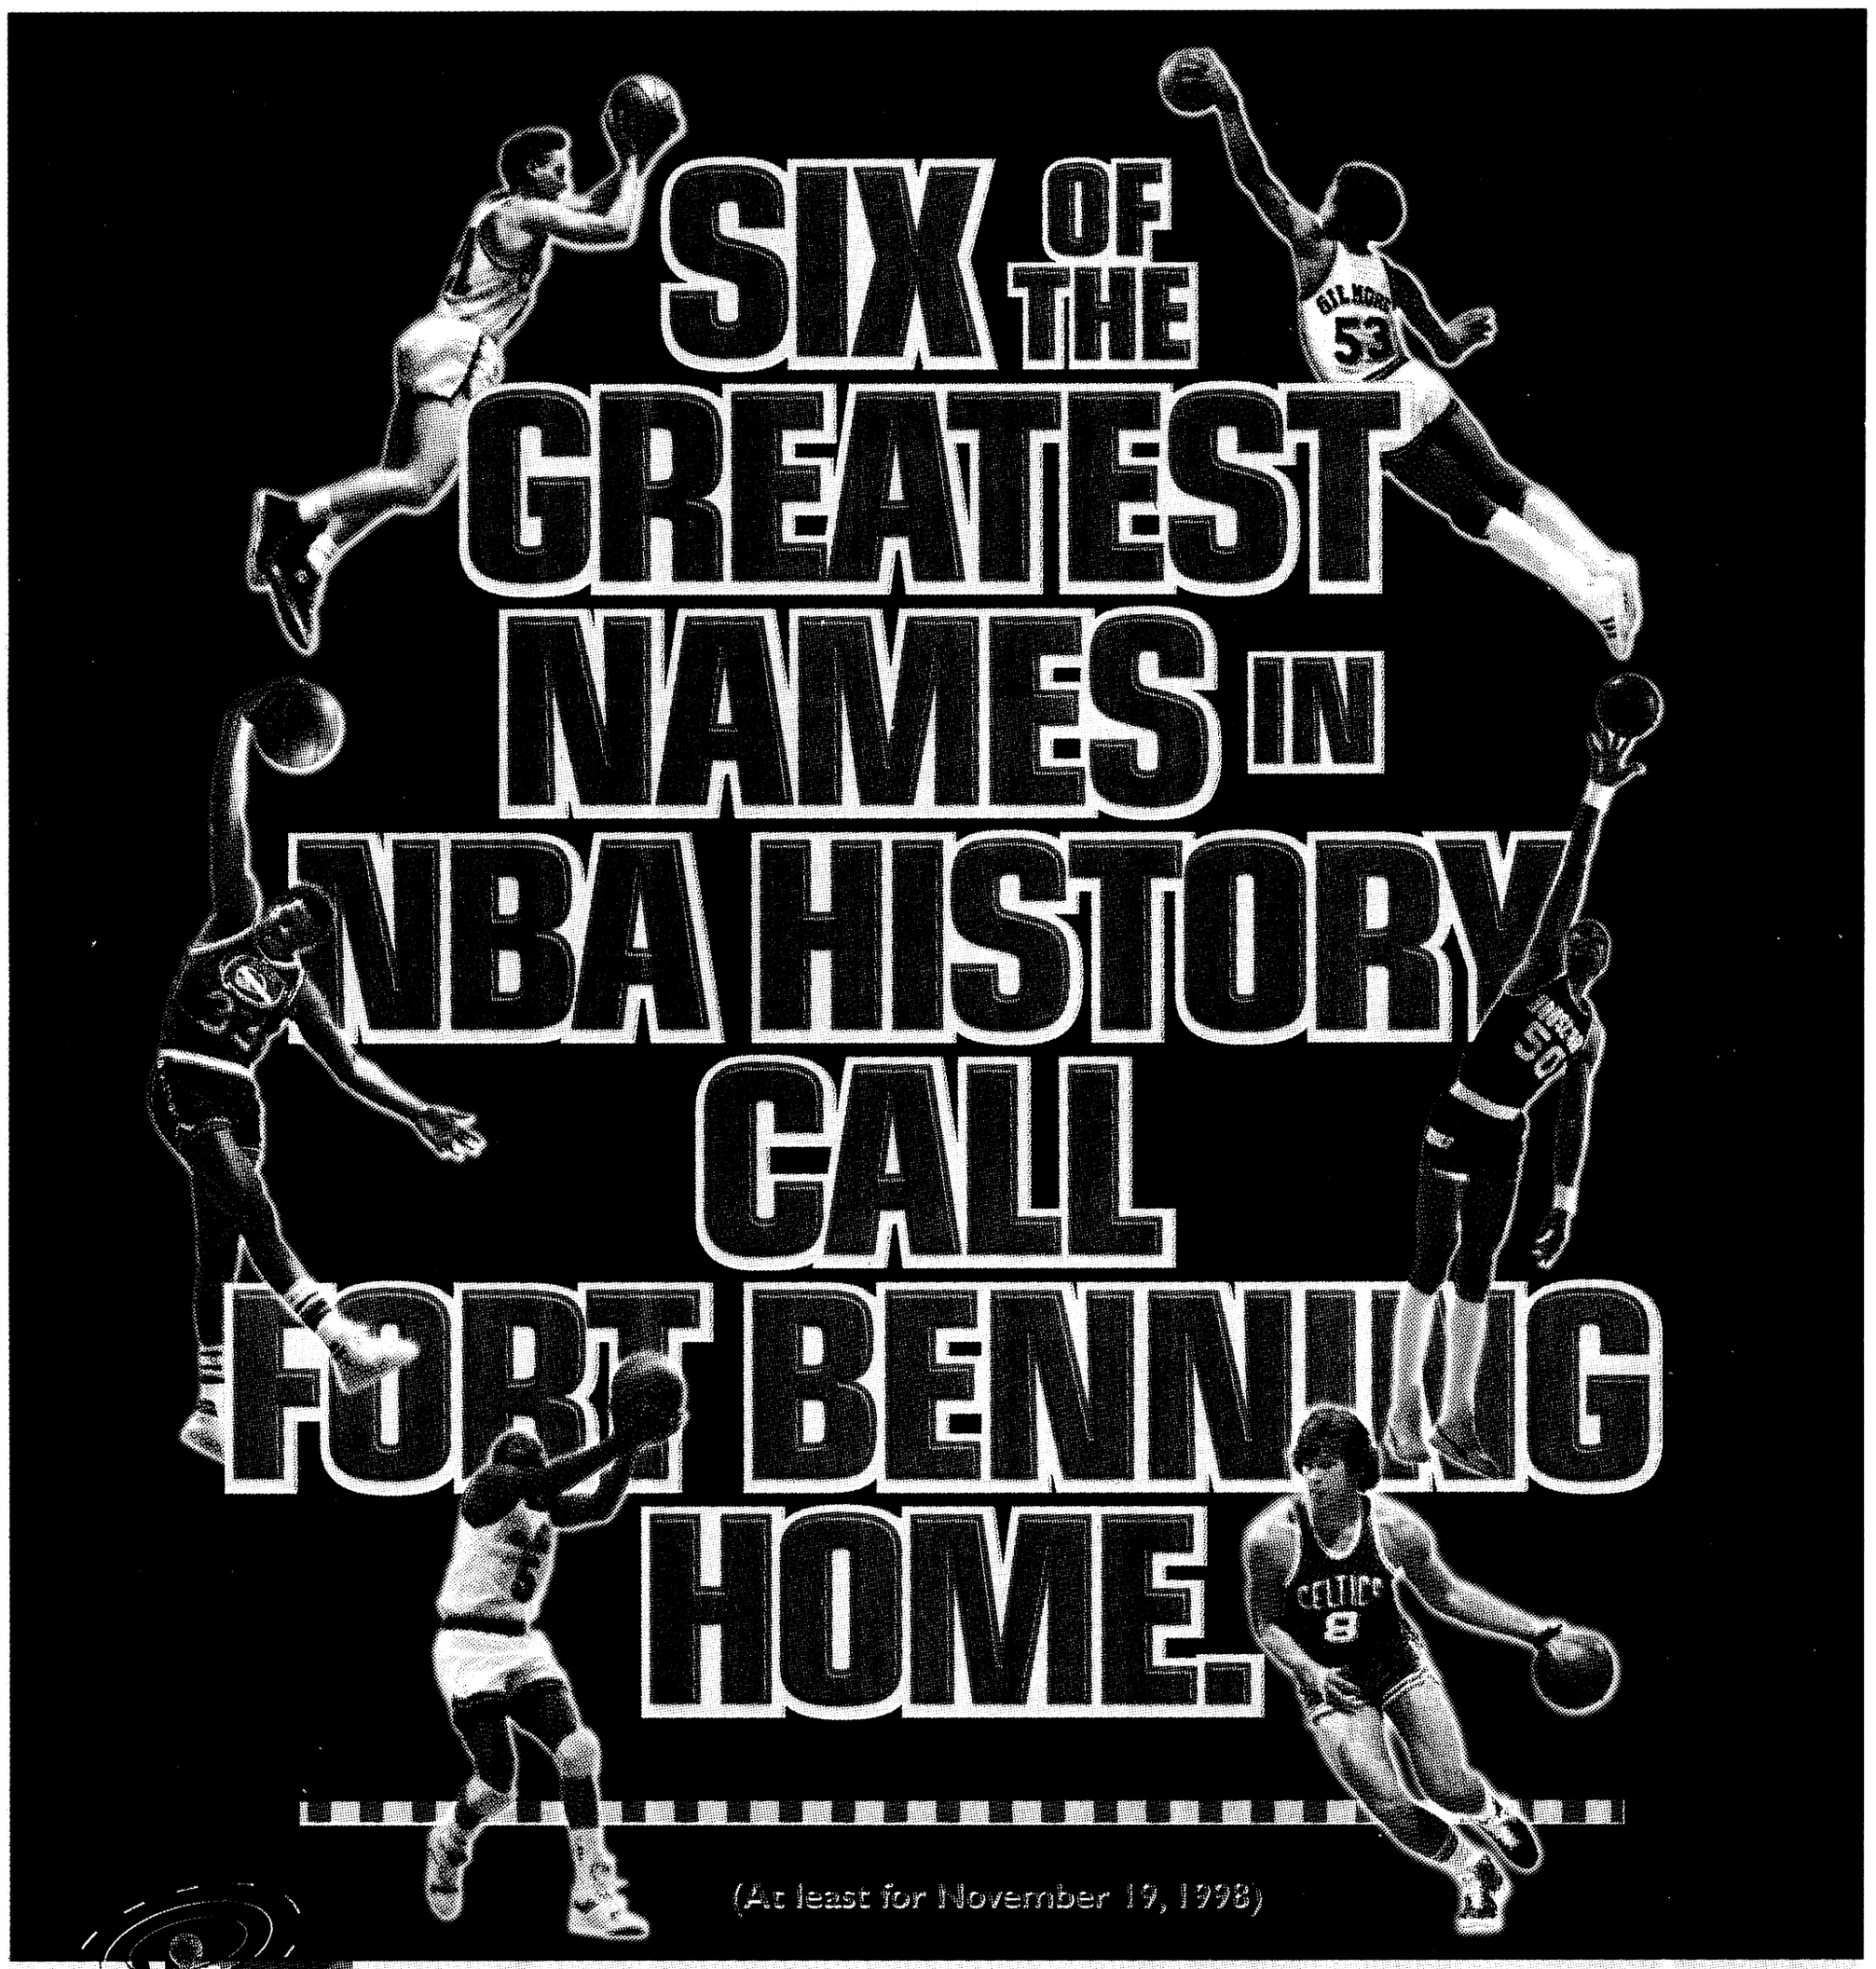
American Forces Press Service

Uncle Sam wants people and organizations near local military installations to help give single servicemembers a good holiday season.

The famous Uncle Sam "I Want You" poster by artist James Montgomery Flagg has been resurrected and changed to promote the Salute to Singles program which encourages local people and organizations to invite young, single servicemembers into their homes for holiday meals and to create special events for single servicemembers.

The program, sponsored by 17 veterans and servicemember aid organizations, runs from Thanksgiving through New Year's Day.

The services have more than 590,000 single members today. "They are far from their hometown friends and families, often for the first time in their lives," said retired Lt. Gen. Don Jones, senior vice president of the American Red Cross and chairman of the Armed Services YMCA. "When local families and organizations demonstrate their appreciation to our young uniformed people, it reinforces their sense of pride and dedication to duty. And getting to know servicemen and women also helps civilian communities better understand the important role of the local military installation."



Local people or local chapters of the 17 organizations should contact installation morale, welfare and recreation directors or singles program coordinators to participate in Salute to Singles.

Going from a mission of winning medals in competitions to teaching Soldiers how to survive in the field would be a difficult task for almost any unit, but one unit executed that mission and proved its Mission Essential Task List (METL) in the process.

The U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit handled such a mission in October when it instructed Rangers from the three different battalions on advanced marksmanship training.

The training was part of the Special Operations Target Interdiction Course (SOTIC).

Rangers from all over the country traveled to Fort Benning for a new test program being implemented into the Ranger battalions. The new idea is to have a platoon to snipers for each battalion, said Sgt. 1st Class Rand D. Bentson, U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit's Service Rifle Team shooter and instructor.

The implementation of the Sniper Platoons into the Ranger battalions started in July said Sgt. 1st Class John Burns, SOTIC NCO.

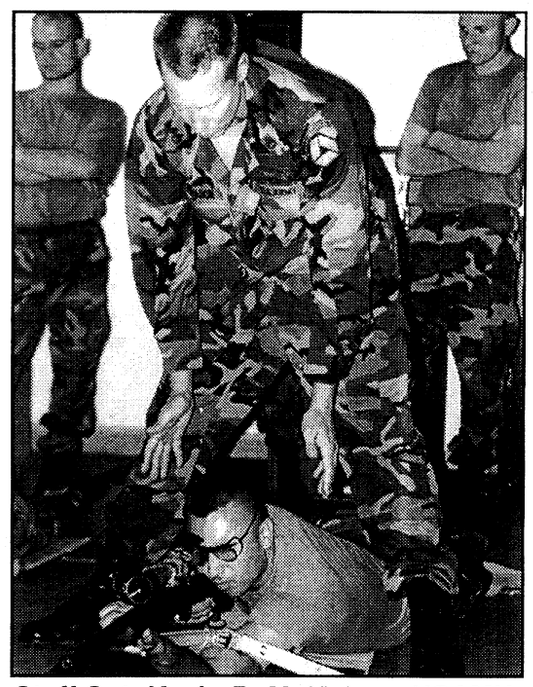
"The Service Rifle Team helped us out with shooting clinics and assisted us at all of our ranges," Burns said.

"We taught the fundamentals of marksmanship and how to get into a good shooting position," Bentson said. "The other part of the training consisted of using the NOPTEL system and shooting their weapons with iron sights at known distances."

The NOPTEL system is an electronic shooting system using lasers and prisms along with computers to tell the shooters how they are holding their rifle, breathing (patterns) and where the shot hit on the target.

"This is the first time many of the snipers had the chance to shoot their weapon without the scopes," Bentson said.

Most of the students were not Sniper School qualified, but that didn't stop them from giving it their all.



"The students did very well," said Spc. Erik A. Burge, Service Rifle shooter and instructor.

"There may have been some times when they didn't get the distance exactly right, but most of them were on target," he continued.

The Service Rifle Team also assisted with the final phase of training, which included an airborne drop onto Fryar Field, then a river crossing finished off by stalking a target without being seen.

"The training that we received from the Service Rifle Team was awesome," Burns said.

"We appreciated all the support we received," He continued.

Servicemembers provide hurricane relief

American Forces Press Service

More than 1,000 U.S. servicemembers are helping rush food, shelter, pure water and medical aid to the Central Americans made homeless by Hurricane Mitch.

Army Secretary Louis Caldera, Defense Secretary William S. Cohen's personal representative, returned Nov. 8 from a trip to Honduras, Nicaragua and Guatemala. He met with U.S. Southern Command Commander Marine Corps Gen. Charles E. Wilhelm and local officials.

Southern Command spokesman Steve Lucas said the aid effort has turned international. In addition to U.S. servicemembers, Japanese engineers and Dutch-Mexican aid workers are helping the area recover. U.S. helicopters are delivering the bulk of the supplies.

"Roads are starting to open up, but airlift is still the only way we can get food, water and medical supplies to some of the hardest hit areas," Lucas said. "Local people are overjoyed to see our helicopters come in, but the amount of aid these people will need is staggering."

Hurricane Mitch destroyed or damaged 60 percent of the infrastructure in the three Central American countries. More than 11,000 people died during the storm and thousands more face death from disease. More than 1 million people are homeless and hundreds of thousands of others cannot return to their homes to assess damage until the floodwaters recede, Caldera said.

As of Nov. 9, U.S. helicopters have flown 221 missions and delivered 376 tons of food and medical supplies. "For some of the people it was the first food they had in a week," Caldera said during a Pentagon news conference.

Relief supplies are entering the country aboard Air Force C-17 transports. The cargo is shifted to C-130 and C-27 aircraft to get to smaller, more remote and rugged airports. At those airports, the cargo is shifted to Black Hawk and Chinook helicopters to reach people cut off by road. After dropping off supplies, the helicopters are evacuating the injured.

"One young Nicaraguan girl came out on one of our helicopters," Caldera said. "She had a broken leg and had no medicine or medical care for a week."

There are 23 Army helicopters in the region now with 16 more helicopters due to arrive in the region from Fort Bragg, N.C., and Fort Stewart, Ga. Sixteen more helicopters have been alerted and a further 16 identified for possible deployment. Caldera is working with state adjutant generals to see if they can provide transportation for some of the thousands of tons of goods Americans have donated.

> Southern Command Spokesman

U.S. Army Corps of Engineers teams arrived in the area Nov. 9 to assess the damage and help local authorities assign priorities to projects, Caldera said. The Navy's Mobile Construction Battalion 7 deployed to the area from Puerto Rico. The Seabees immediately went to work with local authorities to reopen roads and rebuild bridges.

"More than 300 bridges washed out and roads have been undermined by mudslides or covered with earth," Caldera said. "(Recovery) will take a long, long time."

Army reserve component medical teams arrived in the region Nov. 9 to combat an almost inevitable outbreak of disease. "The Honduran capital of Tegucigalpa has 25 percent of the water purification capability it had before the storm," Caldera said. "This is an area with a population of over 1 million."

U.S. National Guardsmen will help with the long-term recovery of the area. More than 3,000 National Guardsmen will rotate through the area beginning in January, Caldera said. They will help restore damaged and destroyed infrastructure.

Caldera said U.S. troops in the area began with lifesaving missions. American troops based at Soto Cano, Honduras, endured the hurricane and then took to the air. The Southern Command servicemembers rescued more than 1,000 people stranded in trees or on roofs of houses.

"We even airlifted the president of Honduras back to the capital when he was cut off due to flooding," Lucas said.

President Clinton earmarked $30 million to Southern Command to finance the rescue work. Caldera said more money will be needed.

IOBC students learn bayonet techniques

2nd Lt. Christian Drew
2nd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment

The energy level was high as Company B, 2nd Battalion 11th Infantry Regiment, Infantry Officer Basic Course (IOBC) set out Oct. 23 for another day of training.

Sgt. 1st Class Edwin Nieves, an IOBC instructor began the block of instruction on bayonet training by yelling, "What makes the grass grow?" The students of Co. B responded by yelling, "Blood and guts makes the grass grow!"

The students went on to practice offensive movements including various butt-strokes and thrusts with their weapons. Defensive drills such as parrying movements were also practiced.

2nd Lt. John Gardner and 2nd Lt. Brandon Teague demonstrated a walk-through of the bayonet assault course which included scaling a wall, jumping over ditches, high crawls and low crawls while engaging the "enemy" with bayonets.

"The course is designed to improve and sharpen individual movement techniques as each student negotiates the course," said 2nd Lt. Timothy Burgess. "The course was indeed physically challenging as we had to employ the skills we were taught."

The pugil stick portion of the training day may have been physically exerting as students paired off and entered an open area designated for combat with the pugil sticks. Strategies and reflexes were employed as students engaged in one-on-one combat.

2nd Lt. Rafael Fernandez said while the competition was fierce, a blanket of camaraderie and friendship fell over the bouts.

"Espirit de corps was promoted as the best pugil stick fighters from each platoon battled in a company-wide tournament," he said

The heavy-weight prize fighter, 2nd Lt. James Downing from 2nd Platoon said, "I was honored to be chosen from among the many gladiators in 2nd Platoon to compete in the company tournament. Instincts, training and the spirit of the bayonet were in the eyes of every competitor."

The pugil stick competition relieved the tension of another week of IOBC training.

"The focus and endurance of the students in Bravo Company are to be admired," said 2nd Lt. Kyle Fox. "The training is enjoyable and acts as a catalyst for leadership development."

Program helps make college financing easier

Debbie Henshaw
Army Career and Alumni Program

Many of the Army Career and Alumni Programs' (ACAP) clients may be interested in college or vocational training after leaving the military. However, college financing may be a hurdle even if the student has the GI Bill. Those without the GI Bill may have even a harder time with financing for college.

Information regarding federal, state and local financing for advanced education may be of benefit for these students.

Fort Benning's ACAP center now offers access to the Department of Education Financial Aid website through the ACAP center's home page.

"We have found this to be a very popular site and of great value to transitioning Soldiers," said Diane Ermi, ACAP counselor.

There are a variety of areas in which students may acquire information off of the web site. Some of these areas are:

•The Student Guide, a publication which describes the federal grant, loan and work-study programs.

•Student aid or FAFSA which can be submitted electronically

•Student eligibility, financial need, dependency status, application procedures and deadlines

•Pell Grant, Direct and FFEL Stafford Loans, PLUS Loans, Consolidation Loans, Federal Supplemental Educational Opportunity Grants, Federal Work-Study and Federal Perkins Loans

•Tax credits and tax ramifications regarding college financing

•Web sites sponsored by colleges, universities, community colleges, trade and technical schools, historically black colleges, government and the higher education community.

"Armed with this information, transitioning Soldiers are in a much better position to make important decisions about continuing their education and training," Ermi said.

For further information concerning educational opportunities and financing, call the ACAP center at 545-2308, or the Education Center at 545-3093.

Soldiers may also obtain the following information concerning the GI Bill at http:/www.perscom.army.mil/tagd/aces/aces/aces.html.

Soldiers may also go on-line with the ACAP home page at www.benning.army.mil/fthome/ACAP/acapweb1.html.

4-H Members Celebrate Child Health Day With Hillary Clinton at The White House

Families and schools play important roles in making sure that children know how to take care of themselves. Healthy habits learned as children create the foundation for life as healthy adults.

Last year, eight 4-H'ers from Arlington County, Virginia, went to the White House to help celebrate Child Health Day with Hilary Clinton over breakfast. They led the group of guests in the 4-H pledge and various stretching exercises. The Arlington County 4-H'ers represented all the 4-H'ers from across the United States. Child Health Day is the first Monday in October.

Spencer team advances to state competition

Pfc. Amy L. Nyland
Bayonet staff writer

The Division 3A Spencer High School Boys Cross Country Running Team proved a little hard work never hurt anyone when they burned up the track at the regional competition and advanced to the state competition which was held Saturday in Carrollton, Ga.

After grazing past Columbus High School, to take gold at the regionals, Spencer went on to tackle the state tournament which had them pitted against a new realm of teams.

With tough competition and an even tougher course, Spencer came away from state ranked 14.

"It wasn't one of our best meets, but we've had a great season and the boys ran very well considering who were they were up against and the difficulty of the course," said Coach Chuck Keating. "Just to get to state and compete against the runners that we did was an honor in itself."

Sophomore Michael Montano, who was the top runner at regionals with a time of 16:27, was able to take the top score for the team at state by coming in 30 out of 138 runners.

Freshman Mike Register who was third at regionals with a time of 16:49 wasn't far behind Montano when he was able to grab the 32 spot.

"It was exciting just to go to state," Montano said. "The course was tough because there were so many hills, but we did all right."

Montano, who returns next year, said his goal is to work hard and go for it all.

"This year was pretty good, but next year is going to be the best."

After taking second to Columbus at the very first competition of the season, the team knew they still had some work ahead of them, Keating said.

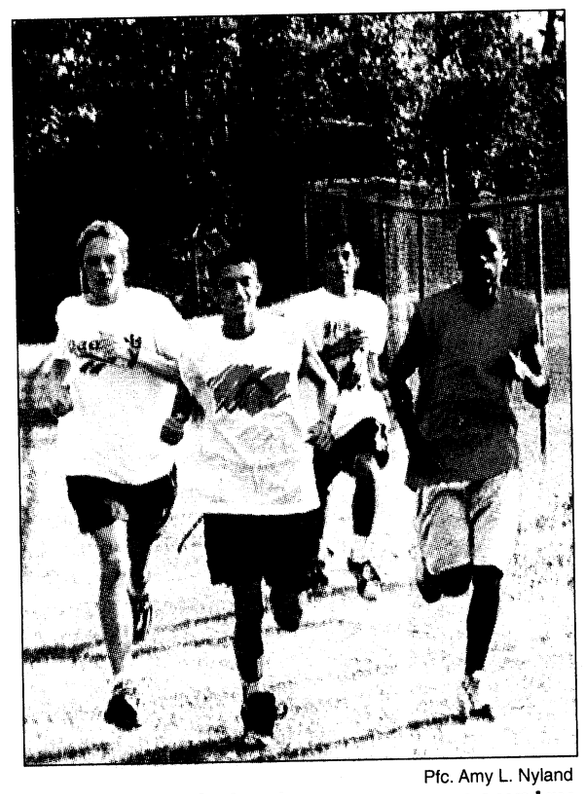
"We've had a rivalry with Columbus for the past three years now," Keating said. "After taking second to them at the first meet, it kind of set the tone for the season. We knew we were going to have to work harder to come out ahead."

Keating said the boys worked hard all season running between four and 10 miles everyday after school. They also did speed work, calisthenics, stretches and hills.

According to Keating, this year's team had around 15 boys, seven of whom were able to compete in the state and regional competitions.

He said that the team is very small compared to many of the other schools which have more than 40 to 50 boys on a team.

"We are not a large team, but we have some very good athletes who train hard, which is why we have been able to do as good as we have," Keating said.



Keating mentioned that next year will be a great year because four of the top five runners will be returning.

"We should be really strong next year," Keating said. "Sometimes it can be tough because we always have kids coming and going. We never know who we are going to loose or pick-up."

Keating also added that the team still could use some more numbers and the more boys who come out the better.

He said anyone can do it as long as they have the drive and dedication.

"All it takes is someone who is willing to work hard, not necessarily the best athlete, but someone who puts forth the extra effort," Keating said. "If they put the time in, basically anyone can do it."

Program encourages reading

Maria Taylor
Bayonet correspondent

Learning to love reading is the goal of the Edward A. White Jr. Elementary School program implemented this year that has many children snatching every free moment to read a book.

Children who participate in the Accelerated Reading (AR) Program choose books from an approved list that look interesting to them. When the children finish a book they are tested. Based on the number of questions they answer correctly, the points are accumulated.

The AR list includes books ranging from kindergarten through 12th-grade levels with longer and more complex books are worth more points. Once a month, students get to visit a "store" where they can purchase items with their points.

But the primary purpose, says third-grade teacher Cynthia Hill, who co-chairs White's program, is not racking up points to buy toys.

"The purpose of the program is to have a reading program that helps children create their own reading program they're interested in, at their level," Hill said.

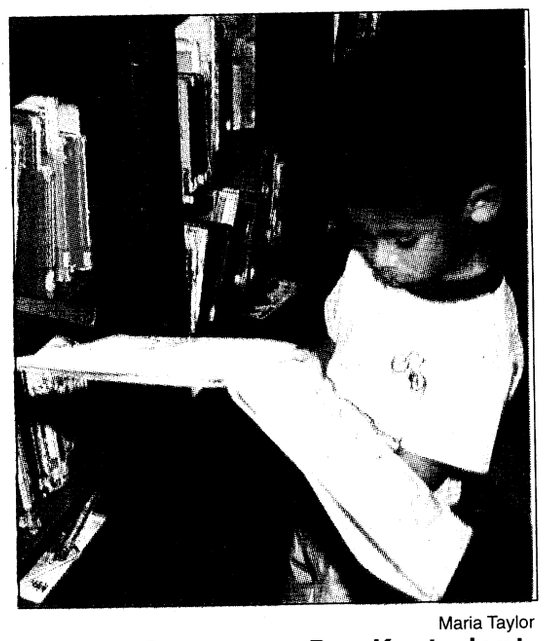
The choice of reading levels on the list, however, gives children the chance to work up to levels above their current ability, says Janie Pride, a Pre-K teacher at White and co-chair of the AR program.

"It's an incentive for children who aren't reading at that level, to help them get there."

Scoring points on the tests accomplishes more than just trips to the store, Pride said. It helps children learn to recall details, assimilate information and learn to take tests.

Paula Sando, a White parent and active volunteer in the AR program, said children also are motivated to read when they see other children score well on a test.

"They take it upon themselves to check out books and read them on their own," Sando said.



Children in grades 3-5 take the AR tests on a computer, using software from Advanced Learning Systems, the company who developed the AR program. For the younger children who aren't reading yet, either a teacher or parent volunteers to read to them in groups and test them verbally.

But children are not required to participate in the program, so what they do with the AR program is their own decision, Pride added.

"There's no pressure that they reach a certain point, so it's inner motivation," Pride said.

Katherine Whitfield, a fourth-grader at White, knows first-hand that the program is a good idea all around. For earning the most points, 168, in the 3rd-5th grade category, she got to be assistant principle for a day, but that's not why she likes the program so much.

"I think it is a good program because it encourages kids to read and rewards them," Whitfield said. "It makes them want to read more."

Red Cross volunteers assist community programs

Pfc. Nicole M. Massie
Bayonet staff writer

People dedicate their spare time to a variety of different things. Some people like to read, while others choose to further their education and some people like to volunteer in their community.

Volunteers have enabled the Fort Benning Chapter of the American Red Cross to conduct services in the interest of post residents such as a shuttle service for disabled residents. The shuttle transports those who can not walk from the Martin Army Community Hospital parking lot to the entrance.

New mothers may take advantage of another service offered. The Firststeps Program is designed to teach new mothers how to care for the new member of the family. The organization is always looking for volunteers.

"The more volunteers we have, the more services the Red Cross is able to provide to the community. We rely on the volunteers to perform the services we already provide," said Wendy Adams, volunteer station manager.

Volunteers have the option to volunteer for a case worker position. Case workers inform military families when an emergencies occurs. There are also administrative positions available as well. Volunteers may work in a reception position, accepting applications during blood drives or even shelving books at the post library, Adams said.

Volunteering for the American Red Cross may be simple as well as rewarding for those who may have extra time to spare during the week. One volunteer has enjoyed the rewards of volunteering for the American Red Cross since 1964.

Jean L. Campbell said she started volunteering for the American Red Cross as a tribute to her mother, who was a volunteer for years. Campbell now volunteers a minimum of 18 hours a week.

During her time as a volunteer, Campbell has dedicated time to such programs as the disaster relief service, health and safety course as an instructor, blood drives and various other programs over the years.

"I have been busy, but I love it," Campbell said. "I can not think of anything extra I would rather do than assist the American Red Cross in helping others."

All volunteers must undergo an orientation class and training by the American Red Cross before entering the volunteer force. The orientation class is held every first Tuesday of each month," said Alphonsa Oliver, station manager of the Fort Benning Chapter of the American Red Cross. "Once a volunteer has completed the orientation and we have trained them, they are free to dedicate their spare time to helping out among the community."

For someone who has the time and would like to give to their community or for more information, call the Fort Benning Chapter of the American Red Cross at 545-5194, Monday through Friday, 8 a.m. to 4:30 p.m.

Mothers-to-be should monitor folate intake

Dr. William Corr
Preventative Medicine, Martin Army Community Hospital

If you plan to have children some day, here's important information for the future mother-to-be: Think folate now.

Increasing one's intake of a type of vitamin B called "folate" before pregnancy and during the first 28 days of pregnancy can greatly reduce the risk of birth defects. These birth defects are called neural tube defects, which affect the brain and spinal cord. They are the most common disabling birth defects, affecting between one and two infants out of every 1,000 births in the U.S.

One type of neural tube defect is called spina bifida. Spina bifida is a defect of the spinal column. The bones of the spinal column surrounding the spinal cord do not close properly during the first 28 days after fertilization. This results in the cord or spinal fluid bulging through, usually in the lower back. With proper medical treatment, 85 to 90 percent of them live to adulthood. However, they have varying degrees of disability ranging from bowel and bladder control problems to paralysis. Many require a series of operations and other treatments. The other type of neural tube defect is called anencephaly.

A numbe: of tests are available to diagnose neural tube defects before a baby is born. On such tests, the maternal serum alpha-fetoprotein (AFP) test, is a blood test for the mother at 16 to 18 weeks into the pregnancy. Abnormally high amounts of AFP may indicate a baby has a neural tube defect. But the test is not perfect. Up to 20 percent of spina bifida cases do not produce high levels of AFP, so the test does not always predict whether the baby is at risk for spina bifida.

Neural tube defects develop very early in pregnancy (18 to 30 days after conception), often before a woman knows she's pregnant. Therefore, women need to take folate throughout their childbearing years. Also, it's a good idea to add folate-rich foods to one's diet.

Also called folic acid or folacin, folate is found in a variety of foods such as orange, pineapple and grapefruit juice; fortified breakfast cereals; beans and lentils; spinach and other green leafy vegetables and liver. Most berries, avocados, asparagus, beets, broccoli, cauliflower, corn, peas, peanuts, sunflower seeds and most over-the-counter multivitamins also contain folate.

Many women between 19 and 50 get only 200 micrograms of folate a day. To reduce the risk of neural tube defects, women capable of becoming pregnant should consume 400 micrograms of folic acid daily from fortified foods (like fortified cereal), vitamin supplements or a combination of the two. This is in addition to the naturally occurring folate they obtain from a varied diet. In fact, anyone who follows the USDA Food Pyramid Guide, which suggests three to five servings of vegetables, two to four of fruits and six to 11 servings of grains daily, can easily get 400 to 500 micrograms of folate each day.

Don't use supplements as a license to skimp on fruits, vegetables and grains. Taking a supplement is not an insurance policy against poor health. A healthy diet is vital to good health. No single pill or single nutrient is going to fix a diet that is overall an unhealthy one. All adults need to maintain a varied and balanced diet to stay healthy. And any supplements should be just that — supplements, not a substitute for a healthy diet.

Since more than half of pregnancies are unplanned, the FDA has taken steps to fortify food so that all women of childbearing age get a daily dose of folic acid. If the move is successful in boosting women up to 400 micrograms of folate daily, it could cut the incidence of neural tube defects in this country by as much as half.

Can you take too much folate? The FDA recommends no more than 1,000 micrograms, or 1 milligram, per day. Too much folate can hide the effects of a disease called pernicious anemia.

Nutrition labels on foods can help people spot foods containing substantial amounts of folate. Some labels may claim that the product is "high in folate or folic acid," which means a serving of the food provides 20 percent or more of the Daily Value for folic acid. Or the label may say the food is a "good source" of folate, which means a serving of the food proves 10 to 19 percent of the Daily Value for folic acid. The exact amount will be given in the label's Nutrition Facts panel.

Everyone, including women of childbearing age, needs to get enough folate on a daily basis. Folate helps prevent a number of health conditions, especially birth defects.

For more information about folate, call Babynet at (800) 552-8195 or talk to your healthcare provider. The full chart of dietary recommendations is available on the World Wide Web at <www.nas.edu>.

Office of the Staff Judge Advocate

Q. My spouse moved out on my daughter and me on May 1, 1998. He has not sent us any money, so I am providing a home and total support for my daughter. But my spouse and I are not legally separated. May I file as head of household, or do I have to file using the "married filing separately" status?

A. You do not have to file using the "married filing separately" status. You may file as head of household, which is actually more advantageous for you.

Generally, the head of household status is for unmarried taxpayers who pay more than half the cost of maintaining a home for a qualified relative during the year. The head of household rates are lower than those for single taxpayers and the standard deduction is higher. Therefore, if they qualify, single taxpayers should use the head of household filing status instead of the single filing status.

However, under certain circumstances, a married person may be considered unmarried for tax purposes and therefore file as head of household. In situations similar to the one in the above question, some married taxpayers may qualify as head of household and do not know it. They think they must use the married filing separately status. The tax rates for someone using the married filing separately status are higher than all other statuses. Therefore, if the married taxpayer qualifies for the head of household status, he or she would definitely benefit by filing as such since it will result in a lower tax liability.

To be considered unmarried for tax purposes and therefore qualify for the head of household filing status, a married taxpayer must meet all of the following requirements:

- The taxpayer must file a separate return from his or her spouse.
- The taxpayer must have provided more than half the cost of maintenance of his or her home during the tax year.

The following is a list of items that are considered part of the cost of maintaining the home:

- Rent
- Mortgage interest
- Property taxes
- Insurance on the home
- Repairs
- Utilities
- Food eaten in the home

The following is a list of expenses that are not included in the cost of maintaining a home:

- Clothing
- Education
- Medical expenses
- Transportation
- Vacations
- Rental value of a home the taxpayer owns

- The taxpayer's spouse must not have lived in the home at any time during the last six months of the year.
- The home must have been the main home of his or her dependent child for more than six months of the tax year, unless one of the following exceptions for divorced or separated parents applies:
  - the taxpayer signed a statement or waiver allowing the noncustodial parent to claim the child as a dependent; or
  - the noncustodial parent provides at least $600 for the dependent's support and can claim the dependent under a pre-1985 divorce or separation agreement.

If you have any questions about the information provided in this article, call Legal Assistance at 545-3281 and make an appointment to speak with an attorney.
